Perot study assaulted less-abled

DALLAS (AP) - Ross Perot wrote in 1983 that schools spend a "disproportionate amount of time" on learning-disabled students and not enough on "future taxpayers," a newspaper has reported.

A copy of the six-page article, sent anonymously to The Dallas Morning News, included a cover sheet under Perot's signature. The newspaper said in a copyright story in Saturday editions that it found other copies of the article in a state lawmaker's office.

On the cover sheet, Perot said he wrote "First Impressions" after studying public issues in Texas.

Excerpts of a similar version of the article appeared Sept. 11, 1983, on the Viewpoints page of The Dallas Morning News. But that version did not mention Perot's concerns about a disproportionate focus on learning-disabled students.

The Texas billionaire, expected to run an independent campaign for the presidency, wrote that schools focus too much on "problem students, students with learning disabilities and students who cannot learn at all." He said schools should concentrate on

Reading tutors proud of successful program

By GEORGIA TYLER
Staff Writer

To quote a character on a popular television show, picture this:

A customer (either a man or a woman) makes a selection in a store, hands a checkbook to a clerk and asks, "Would you fill out the check for me, please? I've misplaced my glasses."

It's a scenario written many ways but with the same bottom line. The customer cannot read or write well enough to fill out a check.

In Hereford, as in other towns and cities across the United States, there are men and women who, for one reason or another, can write nothing more than their names, if that.

A concerted effort to deal with the menace of functional illiteracy is being staged in public and private sectors.

In the Hereford school district, adult education classes are offered. For those for whom a classroom setting is not appropriate, individual tutoring is offered through the Deaf Smith County Library.

The one-on-one tutoring relies on volunteers who spend an hour to an hour and a half per session, one or more days per week.

The library obtained a $15,000 grant three years ago from the Texas State Library to implement the tutoring project, said Rebecca Walls, Deaf Smith County librarian.

"It requires a commitment," said Norma Hendon, who has worked in the program for three years.

Hendon is one of 20 active tutors now working with 22 students.

The materials used by the tutors and students are in the Laubach series, known nationally as a viable method of instruction. Besides the books for persons whose language is English, there are materials for those whose native tongue is another language.

Hendon's first student was an adult who had dropped out of school in the eighth grade. He was convinced that he "couldn't learn," said the tutor.

"It took me six months to make him realize that he could learn," she explained. "I just refused to let him quit."

Hendon, who had no prior teaching experience, participated in a training session which ordinarily is required of tutors in the Laubach method.

When she and her first student met, she said there was some question about which one was more nervous.

Another tutor is a retired school-teacher who, in her mid-80s, wanted "something to take my mind off myself."

Gladys Setliff began her career in the classroom in 1924 and brought it to an end in 1972. She will be 88 years old in August.

After finishing the Laubach training, she was assigned an Hispanic woman who wanted a tutor who didn't speak Spanish.

"She had almost finished high school in Mexico," Setliff said about the student. "She can read in Spanish but wants to learn to read and write in English."

The librarian reported that approximately 80 percent of the men and women seeking help through the local program speak a language other than English.

Another retired teacher, Mary Dzuik, began her volunteer service three years ago, with a 51-year-old woman whose formal education ended in the second grade.

"We met every day that the library was open," said Dzuik about the project.

A tutor and student will spend about two years on the Laubach initial series of four books. Determination of the student and the time allotted weekly either speeds up or slows down the process.

Ordinarily, tutors and students meet at the library, a neutral site. Setliff said she once had her student come to her home for a practical lesson.

"We were talking about things in the kitchen... we had all the pots and pans and everything else out," laughed the retired teacher.

Students have a variety of attitudes about their problem but Hendon believes that all functionally illiterate persons have learned to get along, in their own way.

New poll feature will begin Monday

How do you feel?

We'll find out beginning Monday.

The Hereford Brand, in conjunction with Allstates Opinion Research Group, will begin the new service Monday through the use of special 900 telephone numbers.

"We want to give all of our readers a chance to be heard on topics of local, state and national importance," said John Brooks, managing editor of the Brand. "One topic each week will be a national issue, and the other will be on local, regional or state issues. We will run reminders of the issues and numbers in every issue of the Brand."

Each question will be worded so you may answer yes or no by pushing a button on your touchtone phone or saying "one" or "two" if you have a rotary phone. Each call is 99 cents and will be charged to your phone bill. "There's no restriction on the number of times you call, but the poll would better reflect feelings in the community if persons called just once on a given issue," said Brooks. "Plus, all children under 18 must have parental permission before calling."

This week's national topic:

Do you feel the federal government is justified in bringing civil rights charges against officer Lawrence Powell in the Rodney King case?

To cast your vote, call the NATIONAL number:

1-900-407-8550, Extension 13

This week's local topic:

If the election were today, would you vote for Ross Perot?

To cast your vote, call the LOCAL number:

1-900-407-9550, Extension 13

Don't forget, each call is 99 cents. The results will be published in an upcoming issue of the Brand.

Crimestoppers gives rewards

Deaf Smith County Crimestoppers has awarded $250 in reward money to callers for tips that led to arrests in several cases.

A $150 reward was paid to a caller who gave the identity of a suspect in a stolen vehicle case. An 18-year-old was charged as a result of the tip.

Rewards of $50 each were given to two callers who gave the identity of three juveniles in a recent church burglary. Charges are pending against the three juveniles.

Tips on the Clue Line were also responsible for clearing up the burglary of a storage building and a house burglary. The callers in both cases refused a reward.

TUTORS

"I wouldn't want to say they are con artists, but they have learned how to deceive others," she said. "They are very sharp about it."

The $15,000 grant has allowed the library to sponsor the Laubach tutoring without charge to students.

"I was able to buy enough materials to keep us going for a while," said Walls. A special area in the library also is devoted to adult basic reading and education.

Students don't exactly come in off the streets to the library seeking help, but enough appear from referrals that there usually are more prospective students than tutors.

"The school district sends some to us, usually those who for some reason don't function well in a classroom with others," said Walls. "The Texas Employment Commission also refers many to us."

In most cases, the students have the support of their families. In the rare instance, though, that is not so.

At least one woman who became involved in the tutoring program was adamant that no one know, especially her husband.

A student tutored by Mary Dzuik was introduced to the Laubach books by a daughter who later signed up her mother in the library program.

"When she finished Book 4, her family had a party for her," reported the tutor.

Figures compiled a few years ago are frightening -- about 23 million, roughly one in five, or 20 percent, of Americans are functionally illiterate.

Texas follows the national percentages with an estimated 3.3 million illiterate in a population of 16.5 million.

Reasons for an individual's situation are a varied lot. In the case of Norma Hendon's first student, there seems to be evidence that a learning disability was not detected and as a youth, the man slipped further and further behind his peers, eventually dropping out of school in the eighth grade.

Mary Dzuik has tutored a woman whose parents were migrant workers and as a child, the family never settled long enough in a place for her to become a real student.

The reasons for an individual to seek help are as diverse as the reasons they can't read or write.

Often, they realize they cannot obtain employment or if they do work, there is no opportunity for advancement. Some want to be able to help their own children so they won't have the same handicap.

Some students are impatient, too. "The woman I'm tutoring now wants everything 'now' and is discouraged at times," said Norma Hendon.

Adults know what they want to learn, though, said the Deaf Smith County librarian. "They bring their desires and needs and most importantly, they bring life experiences to their study," she said.

The tutors, as Gladys Setliff said, "worry over" their students.

They also share the joy when the students achieve their goals, said Hendon.

magazine and Ham's kachinas. Saturday night will feature the Challenge Awards, a ranch supper and music by Charlie Phillips and the Sugartimers.

Charmayne James-Rodman

At the age of twenty-one she's already appeared twice in the Guinness Book of World Records, and the books are by no means closed on Charmayne James-Rodman.

Texas-born in Amarillo, the blonde beauty grew up in tiny Clayton, New Mexico, and has been "horse crazy" since she could toddle. By the time she was six she was winning in horse shows and rodeos, and at age eleven she was winning enough in the sport to pay all her own fees. At fourteen she turned to the professional circuit. Riding a six-year-old feedlot reject named Gills Bay Boy, Charmayne won not only the prestigious "Rookie of the Year" recognition for the top money-winning, first-year WPRA member, but also clocked the fastest time at the '84 National Finals Rodeo, won the barrel racing average there and picked up the coveted gold buckle designating her World Champion Barrel Racer. On top of that she set a new money-earning record in the event. Meanwhile, back in Clayton she maintained honor-student status and played on the school basketball and track teams.

The 1984 gold buckle fit Charmayne's belt so well she decided to collect them. Last December she added number eight. Needless to say, no barrel racer has a collection anything like it -- successfully defining the world title for eight consecutive years.

Charmayne calls her horse "Scamper" and her competitors call him "fast." When the James family bought him he was being called other, less complimentary things. Scamper had a bent for devilment and was culled from a feedlot remuda because he like to buck. Charmayne took him in hand and he's helped her rewrite the barrel racing record books and amasses his own collection of special awards for Super Horse, Horse with the Most Heart and AQHA Horse of the Year.

As a girl in her mid-teens with six-figure earnings, Charmayne was prudent. She first invested in a pickup, horse trailer and rodeo equipment, then set aside savings for college expenses and adopted two children through a foreign-relief service, saying, "I'm a very lucky girl and I want to help those who have not been as fortunate."

In spite of Scamper being fourteen years old in 1991, Charmayne affirmed, "I'd say we're as ready as ever for the Finals." They were and they won, totaling out at more than $92,400.00 for the year plus that unprecedented eight world title. Only two rodeo cowboys have ever earned that many world titles and Charmayne is the first woman to enter that elite category. Now she's being enshrined in the National Cowgirl Hall of Fame and Western Heritage Center. The record books hold a lot more blank pages, and there's no doubt some of them will be written and signed by the record breaker, Charmayne James-Rodman.

Nellie Snyder Yost Lydic

"To tell these stories is an obligation. I must tell the story, or else it dies." -Nellie Snyder Yost

Born in 1905 in a sod house on the Nebraska prairie, Nellie Snyder made her first horseback trip at the age of two weeks. She grew up with the kinds of deprivations and hardships which provided the perfect background and preparation for one who would someday record so much priceless history of her land and its people.

"They are our future taxpayers," he said. "It is important that they be extremely productive. They will bear the responsibility for caring for those in our society who cannot support themselves."

He also cited a "maze" of federal and state laws and court decisions that "require attention for these groups with learning disabilities." Aide Tom Luce said Friday the comments about learning-disabled students don't reflect Perot's view.

But the remarks, which originally attracted little attention, drew a stinging rebuke Friday from advocates for the learning-disabled and the head of the state's largest teacher organization.

"If you don't pay attention to these kids now, you will pay a lot more down the line," said Ollie Besteiro, president of the Texas State Teachers Association.

The TSTA and its national affiliate, the National Education Association, have endorsed Democrat Bill Clinton for president.

Mainly home-educated by her mother, Nellie received only a couple of years of public elementary education. Nevertheless, in 1923 she graduated as Maxwell High School valedictorian.

Nellie's father A.S.B. Snyder and his stories inspired her to begin writing. Snyder's reminiscences were chock-full of the hardships, humor and heartbreaks of cowboying and ranching in the early years, tales that held family and friends spell-bound in the telling. Everyone said Nellie should write them down, telling her, "They'd make a good book."

Her response was, "I didn't know anything about writing of any kind." Even so, when the Yosts' son Toe was big enough to go to school and she had a little more time, Nellie began to commit those wonderful stories to paper. That first book was titled Pinnacle Jake published in 1951. Nellie read and studied everything she could about writing, joined writer's groups and clubs, and subscribed to writing journals. And she dove right into the job of writing a book about her mother. Long before Nellie finished it she was commended by an old Texas Cowman, John Leakey, for the purpose of writing his life's story. Ironically he was buried on the day the first positive reviews of his story, The West That Was: From Texas to Montana, were published in Texas newspapers.

Nellie learned to research and to love it while compiling The Call of the Range: Story of the Nebraska Stock Growers Association written on commission by the Nebraska Cattleman's Association and published in 1966. "I drove thousand of miles interviewing cattlemen," she later recalled.

With her first four books Nellie established a reputation, and her writing style came into demand within the genre. The university of Nebraska Press sought Nellie out to organize and edit the historic recollections of South Dakota cowboy Ed Lemon, resulting in Boss Cowman: The Recollections of Ed Lemmon, 1857-1946.

Sheila Graves Kirkpatrick

To be a custom-hatter for cowboys must be a tedious and exacting vocation, but one also steeped in pride and integrity, rich in satisfaction. Sheila Graves Kirkpatrick who plies the hatter's trade in Montana's remote Big Hole basin would be the first to tell you that.

The daughter of South Dakota rodeo announcer Lyle Graves, Sheila grew up amid cowboy hats and the people who wear them, acquiring very early a feel for the importance of a hat's appearance. At age eleven Sheila decided the hat her dad had bought her didn't reflect quite the right touch of her personality. Using the trial-and-error system, Sheila overhauled it, unaware that she was discovering skills and learning techniques she'd someday use in her vocation. Others soon discovered her knack for getting a hat "just right" and asked her to shape theirs. "I worked with hats so long, I just kept getting better," she noted. "I don't think I was doing anything special. It took me a long time to realize it's an art."

As a young mother and single-parent, Sheila's skill and reputation in hat-making landed her a job at Rand's Custom Hatters of Billings. "they hired me to sell custom-made hats," Sheila explained, "but I wanted to make the hats. The owner told me it took a man's strength to pull those hats down over the forms and shape them. That just made me more determined to make a hat. I kept bugging them until they let me try it." But the pay wasn't good, so she hired out digging ditches, then worked pens at a sale barn where she met her husband.

Knowing his wife had skill and experience as a hatter, Buzz Kirkpatrick encouraged her to go into business. Kirkpatrick Custom Hatters, founded in 1983, was for a time located in an old barber shop in downtown Wisdom but was relocated to the Kirkpatrick home on the ranch a ways north of town. According to Sheila, hats are cleaned and blocked for "bread and butter" but custom hats are created for "love."

All Sheila's equipment is antique, specially-made for use by hatter is an era when beaver hats were an essential attire. "We make hats the way they used to - every piece of work we do is by hand," she proudly insists. A Western woman dedicated to perpetuating her cowboy heritage, Sheila is practicing and popularizing a nearly vanished art form, not only through her business but also through hat displays, programs and seminars. Sheila is raising her kids in a tiny, remote rural community. As she observe and help with procedures at Kirkpatrick Custom Hatters they learn by their mother's precept and example old-fashioned work ethic like quality first, pride of workmanship, punctuality, perseverance and honesty.

Jimmie Gibbs-Munroe

When Jimmie Gibbs-Munroe was honored in 1990 Coca-Cola WPRA Woman of the Year, fans were told, "Jimmie Gibbs-Munroe is exactly what untold numbers of aspiring barrel racers want to be" - in other words, the perfect role model.

Rodeo has been the center of Jimmie's life, infused in her blood through preceding generations. Her maternal grandfather was Colonel Zack Miller who owned the 101 Ranch near Ponca City, Oklahoma, and founded the fabulous 101 Ranch Wild West Show, a forerunner to rodeo as we know it today. That inheritance, coupled with being reared around horses and livestock, gave the native Texas a heard-star in the rodeo arena which she entered at an early age.

From 1974 until 1986 Jimmie followed the professional circuit as a full-time barrel racer. When she first went pro, the woman's organization was known as the Girls Rodeo association (GRA). That name has changed to the Women's Professional Rodeo Association (WPRA) and Jimmie Gibbs-Munroe has been instrumental in its growth and success. She was elected to serve on the GRA Board of Directors as Rodeo Director in 1976 and served again as the Texhoma Director in 1977. Since 1978 Jimmie has effectively served as president of the earlier GRA and today the WPRA. Rodeo journalist Kenneth Springer said, "No modern-day cowgirl has contributed more than Jimmie Gibbs-Munroe to the advancement of the sport of barrel racing. Under her leadership the WPRA has made advances for its membership never thought possible. Barrel racers now compete for equal prize money as the cowboys. Electric timers have taken the place of flag men." In addition to tending her wisdom, expertise and charisma to the growth and management of the WPRA, Jimmie has been one of the association's top competitors, qualifying for a remarkable total of eleven National finals Rodeos.

A WPRA newsletter highlighting Jimmie's honor as Woman of the Year describes her this way: "The inspiring phenomenon about the real Jimmie Gibbs-Munroe is that through all the world championships, NFR qualifications and honors that have come her way she still wonders what all the fuss is about when it comes to recognizing her, and looks around her searching for someone else to whom she can give all the credit for her successes."

Always friendly...always smiling...always willing to help someone else...that's Jimmie Gibbs-Munroe. Humble and unassuming...that's Jimmie Gibbs-Munroe. Totally dedicated and committed to the improvement of women's barrel racing and rodeo...that's Jimmie Gibbs-Munroe. What better cowgirl role model could you find?

Hallie Crawford Stillwell

In the huge state of Texas it takes quite a woman to be known as "one of the states most charming, enthusiastic and impressive citizens" - especially when that woman is ninety-four years old. Texas Highways magazine claims Hallie Crawford Stillwell of the Big Bend country "epitomizes Western women of wit and grit."

Growing up on the family ranch in the Lajitas area, Hallie began to learn the business she'd pursue the rest of her life. In 1916, the year she graduated, a teaching position open in Persidio, just across the Rio Grande from revolution-torn Mexico. Hallie said she'd take it. When her occurred father sputtered that she was "taking off on a wild goose chase" she politely answered, "then I'll go gather my geese."

The following year Hallie taught in Marathon. On a blind date she met rancher Roy Stillwell and married him a few months later. Roy's three ranch cowboys were skeptical of his judgement when he brought "that school teacher" home to their one-room headquarters. While moving their bedrolls to the barn they were heard to mutter, "She won't last six months." They found out just how wrong they were. Hallie acquired enough cowboy skills and knowledge that her husband preferred her help to that of anyone else.

In 1948 Hallie was unexpectedly widowed. She drew of the grit she'd accumulated and continued to operate the ranch. "When Roy died the banker told me he'd feed my cattle but not my family, so I went out and found other jobs." In 1956 she began a career in journalism and worked as manager of a restaurant until 1964 when she became a justice of the peace. She authored two books and became a speaker and lecturer of much stature. After retiring Hallie opened the Stilwell Store and recreational vehicle park. Last year she formally opened Hallie's Hall of Fame and Stillwell ranch Museum, housing family mementos and items found on her ranch.

Through all her hardships Hallie maintained a dignity and femininity which earned her the title, "Queen of the Big Bend." Miss Hallie emphasized, "There's something about ranch life that you don't give up. Everything I ever did was for the ranch. I can't imagine life without it...I've been so hot I could have died. I've been so cold I thought I'd freeze. I've been so tired I thought I'd drop. But you just go on...I don't know that I have accomplished great things, but I haven't been a failure."

Mabel Strickland Woodward

In 1925 Mabel answered a reporter's query with, "I know you think I'm a paradox. But I belong in the saddle for I've been there since I was three. I love the open, dogs, horses, a gun, the trees, flowers. Rain on the roof or any weather is like music to me. still, I love dresses and everything that goes with them."

Mabel was born into the De Long family in Walla Walla, Washington, in 1897 and grew up in the area living in nearby Lowden. Her inspirations for entering the world of rodeo and Wild West showing were the famous Drubheller family whom she grew up with and adored. Bill Donovan from who she sought instruction. Mabel entered her first arena contests at the age of sixteen in 1913. Her father objected to her traveling rodeo road unchaperoned, so George Drubheller hired a female chaperon for her. She traveled coast to coast hitting all the big rodeos.

Tutored by her husband Hugh in the rough and exacting sport of steer roping, Mabel excelled against mostly male competitors, even to position record times in the event. She was also successful in matched steer roping competition. Hugh once told a friend, "Mabel beat some awful good steer ropers, men whose names are synonymous with world championship ratings." He said one top steer roper encouraged him to pull her out of regular competition and have her rope steers only as a paid exhibition actor in matched contests, complaining, "We fellas got to stick together. We don't come off too good in the public's eye with a woman beating the whey out of us steer roping."

At 5'4" and 112 pounds Mabel created a sensation with arena fans by tying a huge steer or riding a stout bronco. She also made a perfect jockey. In addition to riding and winning the popular but difficult flying-change relay races, she rode flat races successfully at places like Tijuana, Mexico. She also trick rode and Roman raced. Mabel ventured into Hollywood doing stunt work for several movies with famed rodeo cowboy Yakima Canutt and appearing with Bing Crosby in the movie "Rhythm of the Range."

In 1927 she told a reporter, "I don't want her (Mabel's daughter April) to follow my game. It's too hard of a woman, and then maybe when she is old enough there won't be any contests."

In 1972 Mabel became the first woman to be honored in Pendleton's Round-Up Hall of Fame. Almost a decade later she was inducted into the Rodeo Hall of Fame at the National Cowboy Hall of Fame. Another decade has passed and it seems only fitting that in 1992 she's been chosen for induction into the National Cowgirl Hall of Fame and Western Heritage Center.

Perot's reforms haven't shown big results

AUSTIN (AP) - When Dallas billionaire Ross Perot was given the challenge of changing Texas education, he took it up with a vengeance.

Traveling the state and using his resources to hire education consultants and lobbyists, he was a driving force behind a 1984 law meant to spur academic achievement.

That measure, which has yet to be followed by dramatic overall results in standardized test scores, was the Legislature's last major effort to inject wholesale change into the classroom.

It also was a notable foray into public policy by Perot, now an undeclared independent presidential candidate.

Lt. Gov. Bob Bullock, who when state comptroller worked on the education reform committee Perot headed, said the panel's recommendations wouldn't have gone far without the businessman's work.

"Without his input, it (the committee report) would be laying on the shelf ... with dust on top of it," Bullock said.

Perot - appointed chairman by Democratic then-Gov. Mark White - largely financed a 10-month study by the committee, which had public hearings; touted its proposals in a personal statewide campaign; and hired top lobbyists to push reforms in the Legislature. He estimated spending $1 million on the effort.

Perot's work on education shows what he would do as president, said Dallas lawyer Tom Luce, tapped by Perot to direct the education effort and now chairman of his budding presidential campaign.

"What Washington does is compromise everything down to the lowest common denominator to the point where nothing really gets done," Luce said. "The difference is Ross builds a consensus to do fundamental changes. He knows when to compromise, but he knows when to draw the line and fight for real change."

But others say Perot shouldn't expect the same success in Washington as he had in the state's capital.

"Congress is a different animal," said Senate Education Committee Chairman Carl Parker, a Port Arthur Democrat who sponsored the education law. "It's harder to steer."

In Texas, lawmakers put limits on early-grade class sizes; required students to sit out six weeks of extracurricular activities if they fail a class; and established a pre-kindergarten program for disadvantaged children.

They mandated a competency test for teachers, gave them a pay raise and created a merit-pay system; established a new student testing program; and set up a system for giving more state money to poor schools.

The law, with a first-year pricetag of $872 million, was accompanied by the first general state tax increase in 13 years. But some say the state hasn't put sufficient money into the reforms.

Class-size restrictions and the no-pass, no-play rule are most often cited as valuable by education groups, although some add the state hasn't provided enough for the cost of smaller classes. A Harvard professor's study of Texas school districts found that smaller elementary classes were linked to better scores on the state basic skills test.

But the merit-pay system is frequently criticized as inadequately funded; some say the law was too rigid; and there was teacher resentment over the competency test passed by 99 percent of the 200,000-plus teachers who took it.

Perot also suffered a defeat in the reform battle.

After winning a temporary switch from an elected to an appointed State Board of Education in 1984, he lost an effort to make the change permanent. He'd blamed the previous elected board for many education problems, saying that some of its members "think the earth is flat."

That wasn't the only sharp comment in Perot's arsenal; his style still sparks debate.

Perot often told the story of a student who missed more than 30 days of school showing a chicken in vocational agriculture contests. One lobbyist later said there aren't that many contests.

He criticized teacher education: "The dumbest students in the state are studying to be teachers."

He bristled over the emphasis on athletics: "It's a long, hard walk between academic booster clubs in this state."

And he took on the revered high school football programs: "We in Texas have to decide: Do we want our kids to entertain us on Friday nights, or do we want them to be winners for the rest of their lives?"

Former Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby said that Perot "has the greatest ability to dramatize an issue of anybody I've ever seen."

But Rep. Ernestine Glossbrenner - a former teacher who heads the House Public Education Committee and believes the law had an overall positive impact - said Perot's partly to blame for a tendency to make schools "whipping boys."

"He's a hell of a good salesman, and the chicken story is a great story, but it doesn't reflect what was going on in the public schools," said Ms. Glossbrenner, D-Alice.

Some say education groups and others didn't have enough input. Others argue that Perot gave a fair hearing and was able to compromise.

When the law passed, Perot said it gave Texas the potential for a world-class public school system.

But some measures show Texas still has a long way to go.

Texas students' performance on the SAT college entrance exam remains below the national average, although there's been improvement on the mathematics section.

Comparing 1984 to last year, the average SAT math score in Texas rose from 453 to 463, of a possible 800. On the SAT's verbal exam, the average Texas score fell from 413 to 411.

On the reform law's reading, writing and mathematics test, student performance improved between 1985-86 and 1989-90. But passing rates fell when a more challenging version of the exam was instituted the following year.

And the Texas Education Agency has estimated that 27 percent of a typical class of 7th-graders will drop out before their scheduled graduation, based on 1989-90 figures, said TEA spokesman Joey Lozano.

That's down from an estimated 34 percent in 1987-88, the first year data was collected. But much of the change may be due to better reporting procedures and tracking of students changing schools, Lozano said.

Former Gov. White - ousted in part by teachers and coaches angry over some reforms - said it's difficult to judge the law based on today's graduates because important reforms were directed at young children.

And Ms. Glossbrenner said that if in subsequent years Perot "had been there to fight as hard to keep funding the program properly, maybe things would have worked a little better."

But John Cole of the Texas Federation of Teachers, alone among the state's four major teacher groups in endorsing the bill in 1984, questioned whether that was Perot's responsibility. "This man was not elected to be the education savior of Texas," he said.

"If I were going to try to accomplish something, I would love to have on my side, and I would hate to have him on the other side," Cole said.

YOUR EYES

STRABISMUS

Years ago, when a child's eyes did not point in the same direction, the child often was teased by friends; and parents may have accepted the condition as natural. Today, we know that this condition can be corrected -- and should be before it affects vision. Most cases of "crossed eyes" are now corrected in early childhood, before the youngster is six years old.

Most often it is the parents or grandparents who notice that one eye is turning out or turning in. Because strabismus is not usually outgrown, the child should have a complete eye examination right away and treatment started immediately. If the "crossed eyes" are not corrected, the child will suppress vision in one eye to avoid seeing double images and in time, that eye will be largely unused. But if the correction is made while the child is young, it is usually permanent. Vision training is often effective to teach the patient to coordinate eye muscles. Glasses are sometimes used, and only rarely is surgery required.

Several activities will keep a lot of folks busy in Hereford this week. And, the three big events should provide something of interest for everyone. The Rhinestone Roundup is being sponsored by the National Cowgirl Hall of Fame and Western Heritage with events scheduled Friday and Saturday for the public.

The Hereford Lions Club annual Carnival starts Tuesday and continues through Saturday, with proceeds benefitting worthwhile community projects of the club. And, the King's Manor Founder's Association barbecue dinner is Saturday night.

It seems a shame, at least to us, that residents of Deaf Smith County turned down a half-cent sales tax for industrial development last year, but gambled away $72,000 in the first week of the Texas Lottery.

Each individual sets his own priorities, of course, and we understand that many people have a strong aversion to voting a tax on themselves. And the chance of winning a million bucks is a lot more exciting than paying another half-cent on the city sales tax.

But it seems to us that the average local citizen would have much more to gain from contributing to an industrial development fund than taking a longshot on the lottery. New industry means more jobs, a larger tax base, more retail stores, more dollars generated in the local economy.

There are probably a number of reasons the half-cent sales tax for industrial development failed last year. The depressed economy, coupled with the dreaded word "tax," and a lack of education could have been the main reasons. A better informed public might have had more trust in the funds being spent to the advantage of the entire community.

We'll have to admit that, like a lottery, trying to land a new industry is sometimes a longshot too. And you very seldom become an "instant" winner. Many citizens do not understand that industrial development is very competitive, and you don't usually lose a prospect for the lack of effort--only the lack of money or incentives.

Meanwhile, the quest for more industry goes on in Hereford. It goes on with volunteers, because there is little money and no fulltime paid executive to do the work. It's been a while since we've had a winner in this field, but we are getting more citizens interested in industrial development and I think we will have our successes!

Budget options

BY JAMES ROBERTS
Andrews County News

Soy you're fed up to here with that Washington bunch? You're ready to flush the whole bunch down the drain?

You've heard politicians promise to balance the budget in every election since Roosevelt and nothing happens, the national debt keeps soaring, the deficit is greater each year, and you're ready for a drastic change.

You want a balanced budget amendment passed, term limitations, and you want new faces from the courthouse to the halls of Congress. Right?

Well, a dash of cold water in the face, along with a few facts, might make you want to haul up, take a deep breath, and utter the proverbial "now hold on just a dag-gum minute..."

The chairman of the House Budget Committee presented three options for Congress to balance the budget by 1997 and all three involve something more than rooting out waste, fraud, and mismanagement--they involve pain, pain, pain for every citizen.

Option No. 1 would arrive at the balanced budget by cutting spending. No new taxes--just spending. And Congressman Leon Panetta is telling it like it is.

The option would require reductions in Medicare of $114 billion over five years by reducing benefits for the rich, increasing co-payments for beneficiaries, reducing payments to hospitals and fees to doctors, as well as taxing the insurance value of Medicare.

Option No. 1 would include $98 billion in savings from reduced cost-of-living adjustments for social security and other retirement programs. And if the COLA is not reduced, then all social security taxes would be subject to income taxation. That would lead to $112 billion in spending reductions. Ouch!

The option assumes $128 billion in further military reductions, along with cancellations of such programs as the super collider, new infrastructure projects, and aid to Israel and Egypt.

In other words, the spending cuts in Option No. 1 would hit the most sacred cows in Congress--Medicare, social security, and foreign aid.

Option No. 2 for congress would rely on two-thirds spending cuts coupled with one-third coming from an increase in taxes.

The tax increases? Limiting itemized deductions, a 20-cent increase in the gasoline tax, an increase in personal and corporate income taxes, a new sales tax or value-added tax, and a cap on annual mortgage interest deductions. Double ouch!!

Option No. 3 would be a 50-50 deal--half coming from spending cuts and half coming from increases in taxes.

The three options presented by a veteran of the budget wars in Washington show that balancing the federal budget is going to be a painful, costly and clamorous project.

It's not going to be achieved by slick campaign slogans, promises, two-minute tv news bites, and wordy proclamations from the steps of Congress.

The stark reality of the situation is that not only must the president and Congressmen bite the bullet over a balanced budget, but every American must temper his demands on the federal treasury.

It's gonna hurt...all of us!

Perot preempts presidential process

By WALTER R. MEARS
AP Special Correspondent

WASHINGTON (AP) - When the Democrats overhauled their system for picking presidential nominees, the aim was to air out smoke-filled rooms, take power away from professional politicians and give it to the voters.

Twenty years later, a good many voters seem irked that politicians are running, let alone king making.

From inside the major parties looking out at independent Ross Perot, the nominating process seems to be punishing success.

Bill Clinton won 29 primaries to capture the delegates for the Democratic nomination, and now says:

"The American people are so disgusted with both political parties - and I don't blame them - that anybody who's gone through this primary process winds up weaker coming out than they went in, because you become like a politician."

He offered that judgment in an appearance on CNN's "Larry King Live" interview program, the stage on which Perot declared himself available for the White House less than four months ago. So far, the TV talk shows have been a persuasive forum for Perot, while the primary campaigns have advertised the weak spots of their winners, Clinton and President Bush.

Perot now boasts that he's pulling the others into his talk show arena.

"Remember when they thought it was obscene that I would go on a talk show and talk about these issues?" he told a rally in Las Vegas last Thursday.

He also taunted Clinton and Bush as big spenders for the cost of their primary campaigns, saying that he's economized. That neglects the fact that they have been running all year - and that he's said he's willing to spend $100 million or more of his own money on the campaign.

"Let's look at the facts, which people rarely do in politics," Perot said. "The Democrats have spent over $17 million, the Republicans have spent over $17 million, and all of us put together, including me, have spent $1.4 million."

"We used brains, wit and ingenuity as a substitute for massive spending," he said.

Since a petition drive to get on general election ballots substitutes for a far costlier primary election campaign, Perot hasn't needed massive spending yet.

"He hasn't faced one voter in one election yet," Democratic National Chairman Ronald H. Brown said on ABC-TV, noting that Perot's strength in voter surveys may wane as the months go on.

"It's one thing to ask a voter in May or June what would you do if the election was held today," Brown said.

"There's a big difference between the polls, exit polls and the like in June, and what people say in November in the voting booth," added Fred Malek, campaign manager for Bush.

Prognosticator Richard M. Nixon says Perot will be the strongest third candidate at least since Theodore Roosevelt in 1912, and not only because he has a lot of money to spend. "It's because he is a non-politician," said the former president.

"It's a big advantage in this day and age when the parties are both unpopular if you can just say, 'I'm running, and here's my direct communication with the American people,'" Clinton lamented.

The irony is that the system itself was changed, initially by Democratic reformers, to put would-be nominees in direct contact with the voters. The objective was to broaden participation in nominating campaigns, and the result was the proliferation of

Paperwork hurts U.S. productivity

BY JIM HUDSON

The Perryton Herald

Much has been written and broadcast recently about a high Japanese official's remarks that American workers are lazy. Many have said that it is a true indictment of the labor force in this country.

Statistics speak otherwise. Workers in this country are spending more time than ever on the job. Each year the average American spends about nine more hours working than he did the year before. Since 1969, the equivalent of an extra month has been added to the work year.

As a result, free time has fallen proportionately. Since 1973, leisure time has dropped from 26 hours per week to 17 hours this year--a 40 percent decline.

Never in the history of this country has leisure time reached such a low point. Europeans work nearly two months less per year than Americans.

Such hard work has propelled the United States economy to the most productive in the world. Even the industrious Japanese do not have the productivity rates of this country.

With the continuing climb in the work week, why is this nation becoming less competitive in world markets? There is a difference between efficient work and effective work. You can be very efficient digging a hole, but if it is in the wrong place, it is not very effective.

Such may be the case with the United States work force--efficient but not effective. Much of the work that is done in American offices and factories is to comply with government regulation. Forms are filled out, paperwork shuffled, payroll taxes collected, protective files filled and a number of other activities that are designed to either comply with a government rule or to defend against legal action.

If the government and the courts could be taken out of the American business equation, untold manhours would be freed to produce products or deliver services. That would be both an effective and efficient use of our labor force.

Thomas Jefferson's writings cover 1,256 subjects.

THE VOICE OF BUSINESS

THEY STILL DON'T GET IT

by Dr. Richard L. Leshar, President
U.S. Chamber of Commerce

WASHINGTON -- Despite the rising tide of voter frustration with Washington, and a growing consensus that the big government policies of the past were a mistake, many members of Congress still don't get it.

Two prime examples are Sen. Ted Kennedy, D-Mass., and Rep. Henry Waxman, D-Cal., who are determined to expand the regulatory powers of the Food and Drug Administration. I would be hard pressed to name anything our country needs less right now than the expansion of federal regulation. We are struggling to shake off one of the most stubborn recessions in memory, and to restore investor confidence in the nation's economic future. Everyone from the president on down to the workers on the shop floor knows that excessive federal regulation is second only to taxes as an impediment to prosperity.

Yet Kennedy and Waxman remain committed to their Big Government agenda. Their "Federal Food, Drug, Cosmetic and Device Enforcement Amendments," would transform our sensible and reliable Food and Drug Administration into a regulatory ogre. Among other things, the proposed amendments would:

o Empower FDA to probe and copy, without warrant, any business records that the bureaucrats get a notion to look at. Any pretext would be sufficient, even for minor technical violations or perceived violations. This, in effect, would give FDA bureaucrats unlimited authority to go on "fishing expeditions" in sensitive corporate records.

o Empower FDA officers or inspectors on their own initiative to recall and embargo shipments of food, drugs or medical-veterinary devices, even when there is no public health danger. This is a blatant invitation to mischief, particularly where perishable products are concerned. Also the lack of judicial review means the basic right of due process is tossed out the window.

o Subject businesses to steep fines, as high as $1 million, for potentially minor infractions that involve no health or safety violation. Again, the potential for abuse is almost unlimited.

The FDA already has some of the toughest enforcement powers among federal agencies. The agency can and does pursue both civil and criminal prosecutions of alleged violations of laws under its jurisdiction. Indeed, the FDA can force business to do its bidding by merely threatening to go public with its concerns about the safety of a product, with all the attendant bad publicity that results. The simple fact that food and drugs in the United States are the safest in the world is itself profound testimony to the effectiveness of the FDA, and the sufficiency of its powers.

There is no groundswell of public support for this bill because there is no problem that requires solving.

Avoid dishpan hands

For the 58 million Americans with sensitive skin, even simple household chores, like doing the dishes, can be irritating.

Hot water and harsh dish-washing liquids can combine to make hands red, dry and itchy.

Here are some tips to avoid "dishpan hands":

-Remove jewelry. Soap and water can become trapped under rings, bracelets and watches, causing irritation.

-Use warm water to rinse dishes and a rubber scraper or plastic brush to remove loose food scraps and excess grease.

Bulls blow by Blazers

By BILL BARNARD
AP Basketball Writer
PORTLAND, Ore. (AP) - Michael Jordan and the Chicago Bulls, again playing their best when the stakes are highest, regained control of the NBA Finals on Friday night.

Jordan scored 46 points and Scottie Pippen had 24 points, 11 rebounds and 9 assists in the Bulls' 119-106 victory that gave them a 3-2 lead over Portland in the NBA championship series.

Clyde Drexler scored 30 points for the Trail Blazers, gunning for their first NBA title since 1977.

Chicago can become the NBA's third repeat champion in six years with another victory in Game 6 at home on Sunday or in Game 7 at Chicago Stadium on Wednesday.

Unlike last season, when the Bulls breezed to a 15-2 postseason record on the way to their first NBA title, they have struggled for consistency in the 1992 playoffs, losing seven games along the way.

By taking a 19-point lead in the first half and then staying safely in front Friday night, Chicago won again when the outcome of a best-of-7 series was in the balance.

Three times - against New York, Cleveland and Portland - the Bulls have split the first two games at home, won Game 3, then were tied 2-2 by losing Game 4. On all three occasions, they have come back to take the fifth game.

An overtime loss in Game 2 and a poor performance in the fourth quarter in the fourth game had the Bulls in a sour mood, and they took it out on the Trail Blazers in the first half, hitting 61.5 percent of their shots.

Leading 66-54 at halftime, the Bulls hit the first three baskets of the third period on jumpers by Jordan and John Paxson and a fastbreak dunk by Pippen.

A layup and two free throws by Jordan with 6:26 left in the quarter put Chicago ahead 82-62.

Portland closed to 92-78 as the Bulls' only real problem all night - foul trouble - resurfaced late in the period. But Cliff Levingston's rebound basket with 1.0 seconds left enabled the Bulls to take a 16-point lead into the final 12 minutes.

Jordan's two free throws gave the Bulls a 99-81 lead with 9:37 left. He was called for his fifth foul just 44 seconds later and was removed from the game. Jordan came back to match Rolando Blackman's career playoff record of 43 points against Portland with a jumper at the 5:22 mark, giving the Bulls a 109-91 advantage.

Blankenship's single nips Rangers in 14th

By DENNIS GEORGATOS
AP Sports Writer

OAKLAND, Calif. (AP) - Leadoff hitters are taking the lead in bringing the Oakland Athletics' extra-inning games to an end.

Lance Blankenship, subbing for the injured Rickey Henderson, hit a two-out single in the 14th to drive in the winning run in Oakland's 6-5 victory over the Texas Rangers. The game began Friday night and ended early Saturday morning.

Henderson, who has missed the past 13 games because of a strained left hamstring, homered April 8 to end a 13-inning affair against Kansas City and had a run-scoring single in the 10th three days later to beat the Chicago White Sox.

"I'm just glad it's over," Blankenship said. "The most important thing is we won the game. You've got to try to win it somehow (because) the worst part is playing a game that long and losing."

Oakland starter Mike Moore could not get out of the third and Texas' Nolan Ryan got his eighth no-decision in 10 starts.

The teams combined to use 15 pitchers during the 5-hour, eight-minute game, the longest of the year for both clubs.

Ryan left with a 5-4 lead, but once again was let down, this time by left fielder Kevin Reimer's error in the sixth that allowed the A's to tie the score. Reimer dropped Harold Baines' routine fly for a two-base error, allowing Carney Lansford to score from first.

Ryan, making his first appearance in Oakland since pitching a no-hitter against the A's on June 11, 1990, allowed four runs in five innings, struck out six and walked five.

Floyd Bannister (1-1) walked Willie Wilson with one out in the 14th. Wilson took third one out later on Walt Weiss' single and scored on Blankenship's single to left-center field.

"I was up 3-1 so I figured he was going to throw something right there," Blankenship said. "I just put a nice swing on it and hit a nice line drive. That's what I was trying to do."

Jim Corsi (1-0), the A's eighth pitcher, pitched the final two innings of the game as Oakland improved to 5-1 this season in extra innings.

"It was a long game with a lot of good at-bats early and poor at-bats late," Texas Rangers manager Bobby Valentine said. "The bullpen did their job. It was a tough spot for Bannister."

Rafael Palmeiro's sacrifice fly and Ruben Sierra's RBI single gave Texas a 2-0 lead in the first, but Oakland tied it in the second on RBI singles by Weiss and Blankenship.

Texas took a 5-2 lead in the third on Juan Gonzalez's sacrifice fly after Moore had loaded the bases, and Al Newman's two-out, two-run single off reliever Jeff Parrett.

Baines hit a two-run homer in the third, his fifth home run this season, to cut the lead to 5-4.

"Being in there is part of the game," the Rangers' Geno Petralli said. "Their guys were out there just as long as we were. You have to give the pitchers credit. They did a great job with the middle of the lineup. When you have two clubs that hit as well as we do, you have to tip you cap to the pitchers."

In other games, Seattle beat Milwaukee 4-1; California beat Kansas City 5-0; Cleveland beat New York 3-0; Boston beat Toronto 5-0; Baltimore beat Detroit 6-0; and Minnesota beat Chicago 5-1.

TCU switches to grass; SWC won't follow

By MICHAEL A. LUTZ
AP Sports Writer

Texas Christian's Horned Frogs will return to their roots this fall by playing home games on natural grass, just as they did in the days of Davey O'Brien, Dutch Meyer and Sammy Baugh.

But they won't likely be trendsetters and it has nothing to do with nostalgia.

With the possible exception of Rice, no other Southwest Conference school has plans to return to the good old days of mud-in-your-face football.

Rice coach Fred Goldsmith would like to have bermuda grass sprouting in Rice Stadium by the 1993 season but no other SWC school is considering a move to natural turf.

Grass-stained uniforms haven't been a part of TCU football since artificial turf was installed at Amon Carter Stadium in 1972. The decision to install a type of bermuda called Tiff 419 was purely economic.

The school has spent more than $1 million trying to repair the sub-surface below the artificial turf. That's in addition to the installation of new artificial turf two years ago.

Many football coaches contend natural turf is easier on the players' legs.

Others prefer the convenience of being able to work out regardless of the weather.

TCU had no problems with the artificial surface. Their problems went deeper.

"It's like a little San Andreas Fault underneath the surface," said Bruce Smith, TCU's associate athletic director for facilities. "There are cracks and sink holes. It was terrible."

"It was no fault of the artificial surface. We'd still be on artificial turf if we could have solved the sub-surface problems."

Texas Christian coach Pat Sullivan hopes he's seeing the first step in the greening of Southwest Conference football fields.

"I'm excited about getting to play on a grass surface," Sullivan said. "I think the injury risk is a lot greater on AstroTurf than it is on grass so I think that's the No. 1 thing all around the country."

"Look at Michigan and Ohio State. They went to grass last year. I hope that's the trend but I'm just coaching the football team and I'm glad I'll be coaching it on grass."

Rice Stadium, built in 1950, went to artificial turf in 1970 but Goldsmith has made preliminary plans for resodding the stadium and building grass practice fields.

"Right now we're formulating plans to do that after the football season," Goldsmith said. "They aren't definite plans but we've gotten some bids on it and we're very seriously considering going to grass."

"We've gotten bids based on proper drainage for about the same price, if not less, of putting in AstroTurf. In Houston, bermuda does so well, and you don't have to replace it."

Goldsmith says the college game has changed and that has resulted in fewer injuries on artificial surfaces.

"The game now is so much more throwing and less of the blocking from the old option days that was so hazardous," Goldsmith said. "But it's hard to get good concrete evidence either way. The grass people say one thing and the turf people say another."

"I just know that our players' legs are fresher when they're not on turf all the time."

Texas Tech coach Spike Dykes, a former high school coach in West Texas, prefers the artificial turf of Jones Stadium.

"We played the first game at Ohio State with their new grass ... worst field I ever played on," Dykes said. "When I was coaching Class A ball, we played on a lot of fields better than that one."

"Aw, they're proud of it and it cost a $1 million. Everytime there was a time out, there were 14 guys out there patting it down, the ruts. It wasn't what we wanted."

Dykes said the Raiders get more injuries on grass.

"We practiced for awhile on natural grass but the injury factor was so great," Dykes said. "AstroTurf is so much improved over what it was 10 years ago or even five years ago."

"We just don't have injuries like we did on natural turf. If I've got a vote it's 100 percent (for artificial turf)."

The Astrodome, home of the Houston Cougars, is the least likely to change to natural turf. It was the first to use AstroTurf in 1966 after attempts to grow grass indoors failed.

Texas A&M coach R.C. Slocum said he could not justify a switch to natural turf.

"I'd have a hard time justifying shutting down Kyle Field six days a week and using it only for games on Saturday," Slocum said. "Our band practices on the field, we have p.e. classes there. I'm glad our students get a chance to use it too."

Courses outnumber horses in Southwest

By PETE HERRERA
AP Sports Writer

Two weeks ago, the Gillespie County Fair near Fredericksburg, Texas, canceled its Memorial Day horse racing meet.

At Sunland Park in southern New Mexico, officials eliminated one racing card near the end of that meet last month.

And in Ruidoso come Labor Day, the world's richest quarter horse race won't be quite as rich.

The message is that in the horse racing-happy Southwest, there are now more courses than horses to go around.

The advent of pari-mutuel wagering tracks in Texas and Oklahoma in recent years and the return of horse racing to Colorado has intensified the competition for racing stables.

Horsemen who would annually travel the New Mexico circuit from Santa Fe to Albuquerque to Sunland Park and Ruidoso now are heading for more lucrative purses in the neighboring states.

"It's going to be the big story in racing over the next few years," says Pete Drypolcher, executive vice president and general manager of The Downs at Albuquerque and The Downs at Santa Fe.

The problem in the Southwest began with the oil bust of the mid 1980s. Texans and Oklahomans who had fed their addiction to horse racing with lucrative wells were forced out of the sport.

"The breeding programs have hurt," says Tammy Strathman, nominations secretary at Ruidoso Downs, which traditionally has attracted most of its quarter horses from Oklahoma and Texas. "We started seeing it at the sales in 1988. A lot of the breeders just bowed out."

Sales of yearlings also have diminished in recent years. In 1982, when the oil industry was still on solid footing, 1,060 horses went through the auction block at the sales in Ruidoso preceding the All American Futurity, the world's richest quarter horse race. Last year, the number of horses up for sale had dropped to 375.

When yearling sales are down, the number of nominations to Ruidoso's three biggest races for 2-year-olds - The Kansas, Rainbow and All American Futurities - also drop.

And since the purses are determined by how many horses are nominated as yearlings and remain eligible until they're of racing age, the pot money has been thinned.

The purse of the All American Futurity spiraled annually through the 1970s and reached $2.5 million in 1982. It was capped at that total and has remained there until this year.

This year's purse is estimated at $2,330,000, although the winning horse in the futurity will still earn $1 million.

There were 2,914 horses nominated as yearlings for the All American in 1982. By comparison, the initial nominations for this year's All American totaled 1,554.

Strathman says the total purse may be boosted if some horses not initially nominated are supplemented into the All American trials for a late payment fee of $50,000.

The Kansas Futurity, which topped out at $608,000 in 1981, had a total purse of $254,000 this year. And that was down more than $200,000 from the 1991 purse of $462,416.

The largest carrot to any horse owner is purse money. With the exception of the rich quarter horses races at Ruidoso, the average race horse can earn a little more by winning at Remington Park in Oklahoma City, Trinity Meadows in the Dallas-Fort Worth area and the newly opened Arapahoe Park outside Denver.

Remington Park, which runs a thoroughbred meet from mid-September to early December and a quarter horse meet from mid-May through mid-July, has a minimum purse of $3,500 for thoroughbreds and $2,000 for quarter horses.

The lowest purse at Trinity Meadows is $3,500 for both breeds. At Arapahoe Park, where more than 11,000 fans turned out on opening day over the Memorial Day weekend, the minimum purse is $2,200.

The minimum purse at Ruidoso Downs is $2,300. The Downs at Santa Fe's lowest purses are $1,800, and $2,300 during The Downs at Albuquerque meet. San Juan Downs in Farmington, which is operated by the county and has struggled financially since its opening, has an $800 minimum for quarter horses and a $900 minimum purse for thoroughbreds.

Track owners in New Mexico, however, contend there is no cause for alarm.

"New Mexico racing is still strong," says Ruidoso Downs racing secretary Norm Amundson. "We're not on death row, and Albuquerque, Santa Fe and Ruidoso are not hurting. But we are having to make adjustments to compete with these other states."

Amundson says that with many Texas and Oklahoma horse owners choosing to race in their own back yards, more New Mexicans with one or two horses are getting into the business.

"The breeding industry in New Mexico is still very healthy," he says.

Writer, Indians' pitcher were childhood friends

EDITOR'S NOTE: Associated Press sports writer Arnie Stapleton and right-hander pitcher Rod Nichols, who has spent eight years in the Cleveland organization, grew up together in Albuquerque, N.M. They caught up with each other recently at Arlington Stadium, three weeks before Nichols was optioned from Cleveland to Colorado Springs.

By ARNIE STAPLETON
AP Sports Writer

ARLINGTON (AP) - They grew up together, the pitcher and his pal. They were born on the same night 27 years ago, and they spent their summers chasing after autographs and foul balls at the same minor league ballpark.

The pitcher started out as a batboy for the Albuquerque Dukes, where, for two seasons, he got inside tips from players like Ivan DeJesus and Dave Stewart.

His friend kept score on makeshift scorecards on nights he snuck into the stadium. For day games, he snuck transistor radios to school, where they tuned out the teachers and tuned in the broadcasts.

They went to the same high school, made the same friends, attended the same dances and fancied the same dreams. They told the girls they were brothers, and some believed them.

They were good students, but baseball was their real professor, and the diamond was their schism.

This was the pitcher's playground, on the high, gorge-filled mound or at shortstop, where the splotchy zoysia grass met the clumpy, red clay infield.

His friend charted his pitches from the dugout while making his own pitch: trying to talk his way into the game as a pinch-hitter or late-inning defensive replacement.

But mostly, he was left to analyze what the numbers meant, if anything, position the fielders and steal the signs. He hoarded the bubble gum, planted the pranks and collected the anecdotes.

Like the time the pitcher missed his warmups because he'd dozed off in the dugout before the nightcap of a double-header, then came within an out of throwing a no-hitter. Or the time he tried to flush his glove down the toilet after a bad outing.

The pitcher's fate was his friend's fodder.

That was 10 years ago, and Rod Nichols is still making them cheer; his friend still searching for laughs.

"You know, you've got the best job in the world," Nichols was saying the other day as they reminisced in the visitor's clubhouse at Arlington Stadium, where they saw each other for the first time since college.

Nichols' new sunglasses, the kind with that shiny blue plastic that juts out toward the cheekbones, rode atop the red brim of his Cleveland Indians hat.

Isn't life funny? Here's a big league pitcher making $250,000 telling his friend that he envies his job.

"No, really, you get to see all these sports, you get to travel. You get to do these great stories, meet fascinating people," Nichols debated. "And you don't have any pressure."

He said it's hell trying to stay strong and sharp so that another trip to the disabled list or the minors isn't necessary.

Getting booed isn't easy. Whoever said "but words will never hurt me" never lost a lead in the ninth inning.

The equipment man walks past and wants to know when Nichols will trade in his worn cap for a fresh one. "When you find one this lucky, tell me," Nichols responds.

For all his big-league stuff, Nichols never had a big-league ego. He signs autographs for free. Sports could use more athletes like Rod Nichols, who acknowledges his baseball cards are "only worth a nickel."

"Fifteen cents," his friend insisted, drawing chuckles from Sandy Alomar Jr. doing calisthenics nearby.

The old friends talked about schoolmates they'd lost track of. They recalled their days as teen-agers when they played opposite each other in the summer semipro leagues, where, for the bribe of a six-pack, one could buy a chest-high fastball just like in batting practice.

They remembered the day they discovered Nichols was telegraphing his pitches because he was sticking out his tongue a little bit farther when throwing curves.

Nichols talked about what it was like playing at Yankee Stadium and Fenway Park. It was, he said, better than they had ever imagined.

They talked about how their jobs had taken them to remarkable worlds so different from the modest neighborhood they grew up in.

Nichols played winter ball in Puerto Rico and the Dominican Republic. His friend went to Havana once, where Fidel Castro took his box seat while he was interviewing some Cuban players about their friend who had defected.

"Really? Gosh, I'll trade you jobs," joked Nichols.

Then, he jarred the laughs away.

"I'm probably not going to be here much longer," he said. Something about a transaction. Something about waivers, about getting sent down to Colorado Springs again. Or traded, after eight years with the organization. Maybe he needed a fresh start, maybe a new team ...

Maybe somebody looking for a fifth starter or a middle innings man would snatch him off waivers and he wouldn't have to see another minor league ballpark.

"So, there's your scoop," he said. It was the first scoop his friend wished he'd never heard.

"I'll be around," Nichols assured. Long relievers are few, and they can't be wasted at Triple A.

It was getting close to game time, and Nichols trotted to the outfield to warm up and find a spot on the bullpen bench. His friend retreated to the cheap seats. A stiff wind blew in from right field.

The Rangers got to starter Dennis Cook early that night. He didn't last past the second inning, and No. 54 replaced him.

Nichols snuffed that rally, then retired 11 of 12, capping each inning with a big strikeout, starting with Ivan Rodriguez and a nasty curve in the third.

A sharp slider got Juan Gonzalez swinging away to end the fourth, and Nichols sent three high, zipping fastballs right past Dean Palmer in the fifth - the Rangers could use a pitcher like this.

The unseasonable wind got to Nichols before the Rangers did, and by the time he finally went to the showers in the sixth, the Indians had grabbed the lead.

Nichols got dressed and watched on the clubhouse television as Steve Olin forced Brian Downing to pop out and end the game with the tying run at third.

Nichols had his eighth career major league victory.

They promised to get together for lunch the next time he came through town. Nichols hurried off to the airport with his teammates for a red-eye to Minnesota.

Three weeks later he was optioned to Colorado Springs.

HORSES

"What I think is going to happen is you'll see more and more young horses infiltrating the market."

Drypolcher, who says The Downs at Santa Fe meet has lost some horses to Colorado and Texas this summer, says competition for horses has created a musical chairs scenario.

"If Ruidoso loses horses, they take from us, then we have to take from somewhere else," he says. "We're a little nervous because every time somebody loses horses, they will look our way. In the past, we'd have 1,400 stalls and 3,000 applications. That's not the case anymore."

Carbon dioxide effect is examined Cotton research indicates no more water used

TEMPLE--Higher carbon dioxide levels in the atmosphere may increase growth in some cotton but does not change the amount of water used, a Texas A&M University agricultural meteorologist has reported.

Some people concerned with the possible effects of global warming and increased greenhouse gases, including carbon dioxide, feared it might increase plant water use, but many scientists expected it to decrease plant water use.

Neither was the case in an experiment in Arizona, said Dr. Bill Dugas of the Blackland Research Center in Temple, a part of the Texas Agricultural Experiment Station.

Dugas was one of dozens of researchers taking part in FACE--the Free-Air Carbon Dioxide Enrichment program sponsored by the U.S. departments of energy and agriculture. Field-grown cotton near Phoenix was exposed to higher levels of carbon dioxide for an entire growing season.

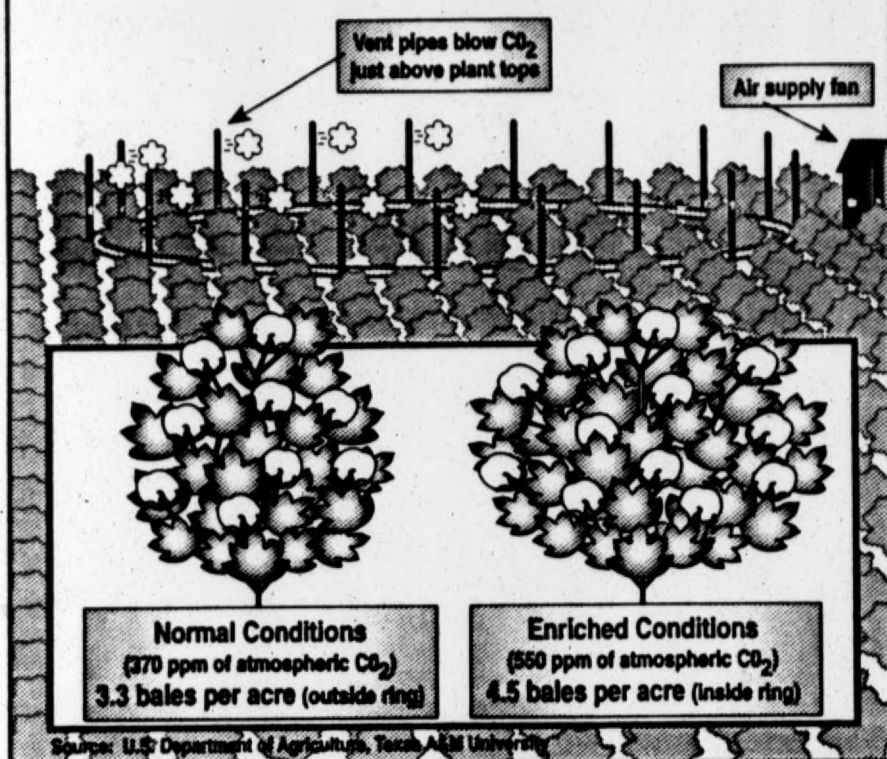

The cotton was exposed by means of a system of vertical ventpipes surrounding circular plots within a larger cotton field. The ring of pipes was connected to an air supply fan, which moved the carbon dioxide-enriched air through the pipes.

Atmospheric carbon dioxide has increased in the industrial age, prompting concern about its environmental impact. FACE was begun in 1986 to help predict some of the effects.

The FACE system allowed scientists to compare cotton grown within the circles to that grown outside the circles under normal atmospheric

How more carbon dioxide in the air affects cotton

Atmospheric carbon dioxide has increased steadily during the industrial age. An experiment to gauge effects of higher carbon dioxide levels increased cotton yields 40 percent, but did not cause an increase in water use.

conditions. Various researchers collected data for a number of experiments, including leaf area, root measurements and yield in addition to water use.

Dugas was concerned primarily with water use. He used stem flow gauges, a technology popularized and refined by Texas A&M scientists, to directly measure water flow rates in cotton plants.

Dugas said he had actually expected to see water use go down when he measured the impact of increased carbon dioxide. While that didn't happen, an increased crop yield indicates that cotton could thrive in higher concentrations of carbon dioxide.

Data were collected over 1990 and 1991 growing seasons and presented in preliminary reports in mid-May. Measurements were made at 370 parts carbon dioxide per million (the current atmospheric level) and at 550 parts per million--approximately a 50 percent increase over current levels.

"For those plants growing in that environment, which is very hot and dry, there was no effect of carbon dioxide concentration on transpiration, but for these plants, under these conditions, that was not the case."

Transpiration is passage of water from the soil through a plant. Stem flow measurements have been found to be equivalent to transpiration, Dugas said.

Dugas cautioned that the results cannot be generalized to other types of plants or even cotton in other locations.

"The good news is that the plants yielded 40 percent more lint," he said. "If water use had been 30 percent less, that would have been two pluses, so the story is positive, but not as good as it could have been."

Still, other plants could use less water. Cotton has relatively poor control of its stomates, or holes on its leaves through which it loses water. Plants with better control of stomates could have reduced water use as well as higher yields in conditions of greater atmospheric carbon dioxide, Dugas said.

That means further research is needed on other plants, he said.

New jobs being created by health food interests

WASHINGTON (AP) - National interest in the health effects of foods has created job opportunities for people educated in food science.

And as the government gets closer to finishing its rules for nutrition labels on nearly every package in the grocery store, the job outlook promises to be even brighter.

There are about 50 food science programs across the country.

One is at Purdue University where food educator Connie Weaver says she gets regular calls from officials in the food industry who say they are expanding their food science departments.

The new federal regulations will require more detailed information about ingredients and the amount of fat, sodium and cholesterol in each food. They are scheduled to go into effect in May 1993, although the food industry is pushing for an extension.

Foods that never have carried this information will be required to do so.

Waste oil must not be poured on land

Producers on the Texas High Plains who utilize internal combustion engines to power their irrigation pumps should note that it is now illegal to discard used motor oil from these engines onto the land surface.

According to the Texas Water Commission (TWC), it is estimated that about 18 million gallons of used motor oil is dumped on the ground or into storm sewers or discarded with household garbage within the state.

New regulations passed by the 72nd Texas Legislature took effect April 1, 1992, requiring that used motor oil must be taken to a waste oil collection center, such as a quick lube operation, service station or retailer, for disposal. The Texas Legislature charged the Texas Water Commission with the responsibility of enforcing these regulations.

Anyone who continues to drain used oil upon the land surface can face fines of up to $2,000 per violation.

"If an irrigator has 12 wells on his property and continues to drain the oil from these internal combustion engines onto the land surface, the potential fines for this violation could easily reach $24,000. Most producers could not afford this expensive fine, so it is a good idea to carry the oil to a local reclamation center," said A. Wayne

Wyatt, High Plains Underground Water conservation District manager.

Many rural communities on the Texas High Plains do not have public waste oil collection centers. In this case, the Texas Water Commission recommends accumulating used oil until it is feasible to transport it to a recycling center.

"The used motor oil may be accumulated for a short period of time in plastic gallon jugs. If the farmer is going to be accumulating the waste oil for an extended period, then a more substantial container like a metal drum is recommended," said D.E. Balusek of the TWC's Recycling and Waste

Minimization Section.

The Texas Water Commission now registers all collectors, transporters, marketers and recyclers of used motor oil. These collectors must report annually on the amount of oil they receive from the public. They also must use registered transporters to remove collected oil.

For more information about the used motor oil disposal regulations, contact the Texas Water Commission's Recycling and Waste Minimization Section at (512) 834-6682 or write the Commission at P.O. Box 13087, Austin, Texas 78711-3087.

Pesticide monitoring yields good results

SAN ANTONIO (AP) - A state-federal pesticide monitoring program is yielding results in Texas and will help ensure the safety of produce, Texas Agriculture Commissioner Rick Perry says.

Texas and five other states are joining the federal government in the pesticide project that inspects fruits and vegetables for safety before the food reaches consumers.

The Pesticide Data Program has been in effect two years, but results in Texas just now are becoming available because equipment and other parts of the program now are in place, Perry said in a Thursday news conference.

Of more than 700 inspections so far, Perry said, all have determined pesticide residue levels are safe. The Texas Department of Agriculture collects 90 samples a month from 23 distribution sites.

Apples, bananas, celery, grapes, grapefruit, green beans, lettuce, oranges, peaches and potatoes are being screened for a variety of chemicals. Seventeen percent of the national program's samples come from Texas.

Perry said Texas is the nation's second-largest agricultural producer. Also participating in the pesticide program are California, Washington, Michigan, New York and Florida.

Texas has received $2.4 million for fiscal years 1991 and 1992.

Question/Answer

Q. - I will be redoing my floors and will have to take up carpet sponge pads, tiles and linoleum that have all been installed with adhesive. This looks like a sticky job at best. What do you suggest as the best way to go about tackling this kind of project?

A. - The first thing I'd look into is a rental machine that uses a horizontal cutting knife to cut the old floorcovering loose. If your problem is vinyl, tile or linoleum over wood floor, you can leave the old floorcovering in place and apply a layer of 3/16-inch-thick luan plywood over it. This is much easier than tearing up the old floorcovering and fighting to remove the old adhesive. Laying new plywood over the old floor is especially recommended if the old floorcovering might contain asbestos.

If you remove the old adhesive or rubber carpet backing, use a scraper with a razor edge, such as Red Devil's wallcovering scraper. The sharp blade will cut through most old adhesives, and we've used it on old latex and other adhesives as well as scraping up the old carpet backing.

To soften adhesives for removal, or for cleaning adhesives off tiles or floorcovering, use a commercial adhesive remover such as Soft-Off Adhesive Remover from Tilepro. These products can be brushed on to loosen adhesives from plastic, ceramic tile or any all-purpose latex adhesive application, including foam-backed carpet. Let the remover set a few minutes and scrape the adhesive away with a putty knife or paint scraper. Soft-Off does contain methylene chloride and should be used with adequate ventilation. Check with your home-center dealer as to the specific adhesive remover you need, depending on your own problem.

A Dream Made Possible With Your Help!

KING'S MANOR FOUNDERS
 400 RANGER DRIVE P.O. BOX 1999
 HEREFORD, TEXAS 79045-1999
 PH. 364-0661

Dear Friends of King's Manor:

Everyone of us has had the experience of coming away from the doctor's office with a prescription designed to make us well. What the doctor has written down on that piece of paper is for the most part a mystery to us. But we can rest assured that the pharmacists filling that prescription knows what it is all about. He knows the medicine involved and understands the doctor's abbreviations.

For example: q.d. is every day
 p.r.n. means as needed

At King's Manor the prescription for wellness and wholeness is no mystery. Residents, staff, volunteers, and families work together to create a climate conducive to healthy living. Faith and fellowship, good friends and food, theology and therapy, sharing and caring, worship and worry-free environment are all part of the adventure of living at King's Manor. Human resources and financial resources combine to make it possible for King's Manor to be home for our wonderful residents.

We look to our many friends like you to help furnish the human and financial resources p.r.n. (as needed) to fulfill our mission to the Aging. Volunteers, staff devotion to duty and generous gifts keeps us going q.d. (every day).

As the time for our Fourteenth Annual Barbeque draws near we thought you would want to know that the continuing need for gifts is substantial. Over the years the number of persons living at King's Manor without sufficient funds has grown, and as always, we willingly assume the obligation to care for them. We hope and pray that we will always be able to assume this Christian responsibility.

The answer of our hopes and prayers is your generous support of the Founder's Barbeque to be held on the campus of King's Manor June 20, 1992 from 5:00 p.m. to 7:30 p.m. Please remember that quality care for the elderly does not just happen. It becomes reality through the commitment your friendship represents.

Thank you and God bless you!

MR. AND MRS. JIMMY DAVIS

Rogers, Davis vows spoken in Stamford

Kelly Rogers of Hereford and Jimmy Davis of Stamford were united in marriage Saturday evening, May 30, during a backyard wedding ceremony held at the home of the groom's parents who reside in Stamford.

The Rev. Jesse Morton officiated. The bride is the daughter of Jeanette Rogers of Hereford and the bridegroom is the son of Truman and Mary Davis of Stamford.

The main focal point of the backyard decorations was an archway which was intertwined with greenery. It was flanked by two white floral arrangements of mums.

Serving her sister as maid of honor was Kami Rogers, and Mike Polk was best man.

The groom's daughter, Jessica Davis, was flower girl.

Taped musical selections included "The Wedding March."

Presented in marriage by her uncle, Kenneth Walterscheid, the bride was attired in a two-piece white taffeta street-length dress created by her grandmother, Liz Walterscheid. The dress was fashioned with a sweetheart neckline, puffed sleeves and a peplum which enhanced the fitted waistline. The cut-a-way back featured strands of pearl-like beads.

She wore a decorative headband of white flowers and carried a bouquet of roses, carnations and baby's breath in her chosen colors of teal and white.

The maid of honor wore a white blouse and teal wrap-around skirt also made by Liz Walterscheid.

Wedding guests were invited to the reception held at the home.

Mindy Barnett served the bride's cake and the groom's niece, Krista Davis, served the groom's cake. They also poured punch and coffee.

The bride's two-tiered white cake iced with white icing was garnished with teal and white silk flowers and topped with a western-style figurine. The groom's German chocolate cake set amid a western motif.

The couple resides in Abilene.

The bride is a 1990 honors graduate of Stamford High School. She attended Texas A&M University for two years and plans to complete her college education at McMurry University in Abilene.

The groom, a 1983 graduate of Stamford High School, is currently employed by Salta Pipe Company in Abilene.

Out of town guests included Liz Walterscheid and Ken and Regina Walterscheid, all of Hereford, and Bob and Doris Welch and family of Amarillo.

BRANDED WOMEN

By Sandy Stagner

I'm not being apathetic or insensitive to the chaotic world situation, but at this moment, I have more urgent concerns.

I'm almost sure I'm a victim of Lyme Disease. I haven't seen a physician but that doesn't matter.

I recently read an article about the ailment. It's pretty scary. After you have been bitten by a nasty tick that transmits the disease, you develop flu-like symptoms. Then there can be the onset of serious heart problems, arthritis, deep depressions and neurological disorders.

My husband, John, hasn't been sympathetic at all about my plight. He told me, "Your flu-like symptoms developed when you actually used your arm and leg muscles taking out the trash last week. Gee, isn't the dumpster located at a whole 50 yards from the house?"

"Okay, wise guy," I glared. "What about the heart palpitations, huh?"

"You have thyroid problems. The irregular heartbeat isn't something that has just sprung up out of the blue. You've had it for 12 years!" he said smugly.

Putting up his hand to stop me from interrupting, he continued, "And as for as arthritic symptoms -the aching joints -that's caused from being 25 lbs. overweight."

"Your so-called 'deep depression' stems from the fact I put you on another budget. Nothing more, nothing less. Now about those neurological disorders your talking about...how can you possibly tell? You've never dealt with a full deck. You don't have both paddles in the water."

Sensing I was seething, he quickly added, "I'm not trying to hurt your feelings. It's just a simple fact, you are not a normal person. But that's one of the reasons I married you."

What a dope! Did he actually think that last statement would pacify me? I know a con job when I hear one.

Now this Lyme Disease worry didn't just pop up out of nowhere. My concern started two years ago when I watched a Discovery Channel program on the subject. I wasn't extremely worried because the narrator repeated that the disease comes from deer ticks. I have a lot of animals at my house, but I don't have a herd of deer grazing in my backyard and I haven't encountered a deer in Hereford. I put my fears aside until a couple of weeks ago.

While playing with one of my puppies, I discovered an ugly gray thing buried behind my dog's ear. I had never seen a tick before in my life so I just assumed it must be a mutated flea or something. No problem, I'd dust the dog with flea powder. But on closer examination, I knew the "bug" was something else, but what?

After speaking to several fellow employees about my pest, I took a couple of "samples" from my puppy and placed them in a sealed envelope. The next day I took my bugs to the office (kind of like show 'n' tell time) and had everyone give me their opinion. My suspicions were confirmed--I had ticks. Now, my fears of Lyme Disease had escalated to a feverish pitch.

I ran to the ladies room, stripped down to my undies and examined by body. My gosh, there were two red dots on my arm! Could it be tick bites?

The moment I got off work I went and bought flea and tick collars for the two dogs and two cats, some "fogger" for the house, a bottle of liquid stuff to dip the animals in and some chemicals to spray the yard.

I can safely say that my pets, my house and its surroundings are now

"clean." Unfortunately, I'm still worried that I was bitten and will get more bites. What if I didn't get all the blood suckers killed? I lie awake at night wondering if the pinhead-sized nymphs are crawling around on my body looking for a succulent place to take a nibble. I toss, I turn, I scratch. It's driving John to distraction. Last night, he yelled, "If you don't be still so I can get some sleep, I'm going to put a flea and tick collar on you! Comprene?"

I just know I have the first case of Lyme Disease ever transmitted by puppy ticks. I mean, just this morning, I scratched a red spot on my leg. Of course, the spot may have been part of the red fingernail polish that I put on my pantyhose runner but I doubt it.

To insure that I don't get bit in the future, I'm going to dip myself in diluted carbaryl insecticide. I wonder if the solution comes in a scented bubble bath form?

Red Cross Update

BY BETTY HENSON

Special thanks goes to the Elks Lodge for the donation for disaster relief. Although the American Red Cross receives no direct government funds, it is mandated by the United States Congress to respond to disasters. The money donated for disaster relief goes directly to help thousands of people whose lives are devastated by disasters each year. The costs of disaster relief are kept down by using trained volunteers to do most of the assistance.

The local chapter needs volunteers to help in our area and in other areas. Volunteers must take several classes to learn how to help with various areas during and after a disaster. Volunteers for national disasters must be able to give two weeks to an assignment. Call the Red Cross office for further information.

Special thanks is also given to Mike Manchec, Dalene Burns and Laura Carter for teaching classes for the chapter.

The Deaf Smith County Chapter of the American Red Cross is a United Way Agency.

Rosson, Narrell wed in Hereford June 5

Beneath a heart-shaped arch of lighted tapers, Daphne Carol Rosson became the bride of Britt Lawrence Narrell of Amarillo, Saturday, June 5, during a twilight ceremony in the sanctuary of First Baptist Church.

Dr. Ron Cook, pastor, officiated. The bride is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Tommy C. Rosson of 111 Fir and the bridegroom is the son of Mr. and Mrs. William L. Narrell of Amarillo.

The chancel was filled with green arrangements of huckleberry, salal, leather leaf fern and gypsophila. Fresh greenery and votive lights lined the railing where Suzie Paul offered organ music. The stained-glass windows were illuminated by hurricane lights, nestled amongst greenery, baby's breath and votive candles. Alternating pews were enhanced by large bows of candlelight illusion and bouquets of white larkspur and fresh greenery.

LeGay Carlson attended the bride as maid of honor and Eric Narrell of Denton served his brother as best man.

Other bridal attendants were Diana Hoover of Twenty-Nine Palms, Calif.; Christie Spring of Canyon, the bride's cousin; Heide Wright of Kansas City, Mo.; and Teresa Isch of Lubbock.

Groomsmen were Brad Narrell of Irving and Jeff Miller of Houston, cousins of the groom, and Jason Dippel and Matt Coburn, both of Amarillo.

Guests were ushered by Bart Boxwell and Todd Espe, both of Amarillo.

Kylie Wade, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Gordon Wade of Silverton, was flower girl. Holding the same pillow carried by the groom as a child in a friend's wedding, Jared Hutchins served as ring bearer. He is the son of Mr. and Mrs. David C. Hutchins of Amarillo.

Lighting candles were Sheila Wiseman, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Kevin Wiseman of Petersburg, and Landon Wiseman, son of Mr. and Mrs. Mitch Wiseman of Friona.

A duet version of "Because" was sung in remembrance of the bride's parents' wedding. Vocalists were Kevin and Carolyn Wiseman, who also sang "Parents' Prayer," "There Is Love" and "Cherish the Treasurer."

As the traditional bridal march was played, the bride was presented in marriage by her father. She was attired in formal wedding dress of candlelight regal satin. The gown was fashioned with a Victorian neckline designed with a sheer inset attached to a collar of satin, lace and teardrop pearls. Pearls and jewels encrusted the fitted bodice and the natural waistline was adorned with pearls. The Edwardian sleeves ended in a lace-edged points over the bride's hands. The skirt was full and flowing satin. At the back, the gown featured a plunging neckline, centered with a designer bow. The chapel-length satin train, which was edged in lace scallops, was accented with European lace cutouts, jeweled with sequins and pearls.

The waist-length candlelight tulle veil, handmade by the groom's mother, was attached to the back of a cap of regal satin and lace with iridescent and seed pearl accents.

The bride carried a silk cascade of roses, orchids, stephanotis and English ivy. Her pearl earrings were given to her by the bridegroom. Her bridal ensemble included two heirloom pieces, her paternal grandmother's wedding ring and her maternal great-grandmother's linen handkerchief.

Bridal attendants wore teal and candlelight floor-length dinner suits of moire taffeta. The two-piece dresses were styled with pleated portrait necklines and peplums. Each carried a cascading bouquet of long-stemmed ivory roses and greenery with teal accents.

The flower girl and candlelighter wore long gowns designed with portrait necklines, basque bodices and short, puff sleeves.

A wedding reception was held in the church fellowship hall where Leslie Spell invited guests to sign the registry. Decorating the serving area were fresh and silk plants and latticework swagged with fresh salal greenery. The bridal bouquet was displayed on a stand draped with tulle and satin.

Bride and groom porcelain figurines topped the four-tiered wedding cake which was iced with teal colored roses and twining filigree hearts. The double-layer chocolate groom's cake was decorated with his monogram and icing roses of darker chocolate. Punch, coffee and hand-formed white chocolate mints were served with silver appointments.

The serving tables were draped with candlelight lace over matching organza. A brass candelabra embellished with greenery and votive lights decorated the registry table, which was covered in candlelight organza overlaid with point d'esprit. Individual round tables, covered with a double-layer of open-weave fabric, featured bridal light centerpieces of candles on mirror tiles with fresh greenery and baby's breath. Large white taffeta bows decorated the back of white covered chairs.

Hosesses at the reception were Dana Gary of Tyler, and Marty Geist, Karen Robertson, Dawn Greer, Laurie O'Neal and Carrie Brown, all of Amarillo.

Leaving for a cruise in the Bahamas, the bride wore a nautical-theme suit made by the groom's mother. The navy blue linen dress was fashioned with an off-white sailor's collar.

The couple will reside in Amarillo.

The bride is a Hereford High School graduate and earned her degree from Amarillo College. She is a physical therapy assistant for Methodist Plainview.

The groom is a senior at West Texas State University and plans to receive a degree in education in December. He is employed by Payless Cashways, Inc.

Special guests at the wedding were the couple's grandparents, Mrs. Willie Burford of Hereford, W.A. Turner of Friona, Mrs. Edith Miller of Jacksboro and E.A. Narrell of Loraine. Guests also represented St. Louis, Mo., Houston, Tyler, Midland, Lubbock, Early, Irving, Austin, Abilene, Huntsville, Petersburg, Canyon and Levelland.

Chapter holds final meeting of club year

Members of the Alpha Iota Mu Chapter of Beta Sigma Phi Sorority met for the chapter's end of the year birthday party June 4 at Jaime Brorman's country home.

Second chance given

Large numbers of those once incarcerated in correction centers fail when they attempt to re-establish themselves in their communities.

Those alone, without any family, friends or church support, are particularly at risk. Many who could have been helped return to the correction system again and again, labeled as failures.

The Salvation Army's Adult Rehabilitation Centers, located in most major cities throughout the country, offer eligible parolees a chance to succeed.

Residential programs allow participants to work for room and board while they receive free training to improve self-esteem, build job skills, competently deal with job applications or interviews, and increase spiritual awareness and healing.

The programs have a long-standing record of success in addressing the very specific needs of the homeless, the former drug addict or alcoholic, and those who struggle in the aftermath of personal tragedy or trauma.

Hamburgers with all the trimmings were served by members of the social committee with chapter members assisting.

During the business meeting with President Glenna Calaway presiding, Danell Culp of Xi Epsilon Alpha Chapter was introduced. She will become a member of AIM Chapter during the new club year.

Members heard correspondence about the Northwest Texas Area Convention to be held in November in Wichita Falls. Also, it was noted that Jill Alexander Savoini recently married.

Treasurer MaryBeth Messer announced that profits from the recent candy sale went toward a gift for the chapter's little sister, Kallie Hopping. Several gifts will be purchased for children receiving cancer treatments and a $200 donation was made to the Leukemia Society.

The chapter presented outgoing President Calaway a gift for her hard work during the last year. In return, Calaway presented each of her officers with a small gift for assistance and support she received during her term as president.

Members revealed secret sisters and drew names for the coming year.

Those attending included Danell Culp, Janice Betzen, Jaime Brorman, Glenna Calaway, Patty Frerich, Teresa Hopping, Wanda Huseman, Marrie Leverett, Jane Meiwes, MaryBeth Messer, Mary Bob Ward, Donna Weaver, Jill Savoini, Carmen Gonzales and Pattie Urbanczyk.

Plans made for Hospice Volunteer Orientation

The Crown of Texas Hospice Volunteers met Monday evening at the Hereford Community Center.

A calling committee of Ann Meyer and Jamie Brorman was appointed as was the treasurer, Loretta Urbanczyk. Also, plans for the next Hospice Volunteer Orientation Program were completed. It will be held in the Blue Room of the Hereford Senior Citizens Center on July 9 and July 16 from 8:30 a.m. until 4 p.m. each day.

Crim, Wenck married Saturday afternoon

Marie Hamby Crim of Hereford became the bride of Joseph David Wenck of Amarillo during a mid-afternoon wedding ceremony Saturday in First Baptist Church of Canyon. Rev. Gayle Bowen of the church officiated.

The bride is the daughter of Mary R. Hamby of 328 Ave. E. and the bridegroom is the son of Richard and Reba Wenck of West Virginia.

The front church altar was decorated by two brass spiral candelabra and a unity candle. Pews were marked by peach bows.

Irene Blevins served her sister as matron of honor and Randy Boyette of Amarillo was best man.

Judy Kleman of Nazareth served her sister as bridesmaid and Tony Fouse of Colorado was groomsman.

Guests were ushered by Kent McKinney of Colorado and Russ Adams of Amarillo.

The bride's niece, Krisha Blevins, daughter of Gary and Irene Blevins, and Michelle McIntosh, daughter of the bride, were flower girls, and Craig Brucker II, son of Craig and Molly Brucker, was ring bearer.

The church organist played traditional wedding selections and Tim Matthews sang "Lady" by Kenny Rogers.

Given in marriage by her brother, James David Hamby of Amarillo, the bride wore a French styled antique satin designer's gown. A renaisance of the 17th Queen Anne period, the gown was enhanced with a Queen Anne neckline outlined with satin ruffles which stood high on her neck. The sleeves were French pouffed in the style of Marie Antoinette and decorated with pearls and imported European hand-embroidered lace. The delicate sleeves were tightened to a point and were highlighted with a runner of pearls.

The sweetheart bodice was encrusted with pearls and embroidered motifs and the fitted waist was crystal pleated and cinched to a point and gathered with pearls and starburst motifs. The seven-foot cathedral-length train was scattered with satin scallops which were edged in re-embroidered European lace. Embroidered satin roses were arranged on the train which was edged with European lace crocheted on the underside.

The bride's Juliet cap was adorned with pearls, sequins and jewels as well as sprays of pearls and ivory in candlelight colors. The three-dimensional candlelight bridal illusion veil featured scalloped edges of alencon lace of flowers and rose petals and trailed down the back of the gown.

The bride carried a cascading bouquet of peach and ivory satin roses entwined with matching pearls accented with peach and ivory ribbons and streams and baby's breath.

For something borrowed, she wore a strand of antique pearls belonging to her mother; something new, pearl earrings; and something blue, the traditional blue garter.

Attendants were attired in flowing tea-length ivory and peach satin dresses fashioned with lace collars and hemlines. They carried bouquets of ivory, peach roses accented with antique lace and ivory, peach ribbon strands.

Kim Hamby of Amarillo invited guests to register at the reception held in the home of Craig and Molly Brucker of Amarillo.

Michelle Carlson of Hereford served cake, and punch and coffee were poured by Ann Sweat of Amarillo.

The bride's table was covered with a lace cloth and peach underlay. The cake, designed with three-heart-shaped tiers, was decorated with peach carnations. The groom's cake was decorated with chocolate roses.

Leaving for a wedding trip to the Virgin Islands, the bride wore an ivory dress accented with lace and pearls.

The bride and groom are both self-employed investors and open-water scuba divers.

Are your 'feet set?

Whether you play tennis or not, there's four in five chance you will be bothered by athlete's foot at some point.

Consider: There are more sweat glands in your feet than any other part of your body. If you are a tennis enthusiast, here's advice from the experts that won't dampen your enthusiasm or your feet.

- Choose properly fitting shoes.
- Wear clean, dry, well-fitting socks preferably of cotton. Heavy wool socks increase perspiration and socks made of synthetic materials don't breathe well.

- Make sure your feet are clean-washing feet regularly with an antibacterial soap can cut down on the possibility of infection.
- Dry your feet thoroughly after washing them, especially between the toes.

- Remove damp socks and shoes as soon as possible following a sports activity and wash and dry your feet soon thereafter.
- Keeping thong sandals handy for post-athletic workouts is a great way to keep your feet healthy and happy by airing them out and keeping the clean and dry.

By JOE WEAVER

Over three hundred kids showed up at the library last Tuesday morning for a big kick-off to the Summer Reading program. Nearly five hundred kids have signed up to participate. If you think it's too late to get your kids (or grandkids) enrolled, it's not. Bring 'em in!

Last week I mentioned that we have new displays, and told you about one. The other is our own Rebecca Walls, Library Director. In keeping with our Summer Reading theme, Becky is displaying items from around the world. Stop in and look.

Summertime is vacation time, but before you head out of town, check the library to see how you can make your getaway better. A good book is an obvious choice for anyone taking a trip (and a "must" if it rains), but we've got lots more than that to make your vacation special...

Guides...to attractions (free and otherwise), campgrounds (free and otherwise), hotel/motel accommodations (always otherwise)...and more!

A "Talking Book" (book on tape) can make a long drive a lot shorter, as several of our gadabout patrons can testify.

And, if you just can't get away, check out a descriptive and well-illustrated travelogue and rev up the old armchair. "In the comfort of your home" you can experience natural wonders, see impressive architecture, enjoy great works of art, and visit historic sites. For an added touch, try a recipe from an ethnic cookbook to give your stay-at-home vacation some exotic authenticity.

I have run across a few folks around the area who are enthralled with the Santa Fe Trail, America's greatest commercial "highway" of the nineteenth century. For those whose fascination leads them to locate wagon ruts and trail landmarks, we have acquired Marc Simmons' Following The Santa Fe Trail. Quoting from the preface, "the text briefly describes the chief points of interest...and gives precise directions for finding them." Serious "trail junkies" will want to obtain their own copy, but ours is available for now.

In a related vein, if you planning on travelling west, you'll want to check out The Roadside History of New Mexico. Rather than give a chronological account, authors Francis and Roberta Fugate approach the past from the viewpoint of present accessibility along current roads. This makes sites much easier to locate, and cuts down on wasted time.

If your interests lie north, try The Illustrated History of Canada. You might expect a lot of similarities between us and our northern neighbors, but the differences make for a varied and interesting narrative. The illustrations alone make this book worth a look-see.

Fiction cuts a wide swath this week...from West Virginia to Africa to Witch World.

The Unquiet Earth, set in Justice County WV, is the story of principled, passionate Dillon Freeman and his more conventional cousin, Rachel Honaker. Disappointed in love, they survive World War II to take on the American Coal Company's destruction of their community, passing the torch of worker's rights to the next generation. If all this sounds a little high-minded, don't be deceived. The book is intended for entertainment, not social comment.

After World War I, thousands of veterans drew lots for virgin land in Kenya. Winners included farmers, gamblers, gold seekers, adventurers of all sorts, subjects for Bartle Bull's saga White Rhino Hotel—a story of love and revenge, of greed and loyalty, and of pioneers struggling for a new life amidst the beauty and wildness of the African bush. The hotel of the title is the spot where the paths of these adventurers cross, where fortunes can be won or lost.

I am the only brother to three sisters...the only man in a family of four...surrounded by six or seven female co-workers...just some random thoughts when I noticed the setting for Songsmith is "Witch World". (Now I'm in trouble with everybody!) Kidding aside, I am not a sci-fi or fantasy fan, so it's hard for me to tell whether a book of that type is good or bad. Andre Norton and A.C. Crispin carry high credentials in those circles, so suffice it to say that they have combined their talents to produce what the publisher calls "the novel that Witch World fans have been waiting for". In a nutshell, Erdyth travels the length and breadth of Witch World to save her father Jervon, and discovers that the truest magic must come from the heart.

The library lost a friend this week. We extend our sympathy to the family and friends of Juanita Perrin. She will be missed.

Low-fat ground beef holds promise for beef industry

The beef industry expects its new low-fat ground beef products to bring back American consumers who currently don't eat beef or eat it infrequently. Their demand for the new low-fat products could generate profits through all segments of the industry.

That's the conclusion of a recent report on the economic impact of low-fat ground beef by Cattle-Fax, the beef industry's economic analysis service. The study looked at how low-fat ground beef demand would impact the industry based on three consumer responses, Cattle-Fax economist Tom Brink said.

"If low-fat ground beef generates new demand for beef without reducing current sales, the impact will clearly be positive," Brink said. "This could occur through regaining lost market share from poultry and/or through penetrating new markets where beef has not had a significant representation."

On the other hand, an appreciable switch of regular beef eaters to low-fat products without an accompanying new demand for the new products could cost the industry.

That's because the new low-fat products have less than half the fat of regular ground beef. The removed fat is replaced by additional lean, water and, usually a natural agent to hold moisture.

Every pound of low-fat ground beef sold to longtime buyers of regular ground beef displaces the fat that otherwise would mix with lean to make regular 80 percent lean 20 percent fat ground beef. This fat must be sold as edible tallow which brings $1 per pound less than the price of 80 percent lean boneless manufacturing beef. With 6.75 million pounds of ground beef sold annually, the displaced fat would reduce the positive impact generated by demand for the new lean beef.

Brink said it is highly unlikely that no new demand for the new low-fat products will occur. Those consumers who were concerned about fat in their diets asked the beef industry to develop low-fat products. The industry responded in 1987 by investing $373,000 with universities and private research laboratories to develop low-fat ground beef technology. This research has resulted in the new low-fat ground beef products now available through various foodservice outlets, 8,500 retail supermarkets and the school lunch program.

Brink said the most realistic scenario lies between the two extremes. Some regular beef eaters will switch to low-fat ground beef, but the products will also generate new sales from consumers who had dropped beef or cut back on its consumption. This situation will profit the beef industry if new demand results in 1 pound of low-fat ground beef sold for every 10 pounds of regular ground beef lost when present beef eaters switch to low-fat products.

A 1978 earthquake in northeastern Iran killed more than 25,000 people.

MINDING YOUR OWN BUSINESS

Don Taylor

SELF-FULFILLING PROMISE

A woman named Mary moved to a small town from the city. Mary hadn't found very much to her liking and she was especially unimpressed with the service at a local store.

One day while visiting with a new neighbor, Mary complained about the poor service at the store. She grumbled about the unfriendly attitude and how long it took to be waited on. She hoped the neighbor would pass the complaint along to the store owner.

A few days later when Mary entered the store again, the owner greeted her with a big smile. He called her by name and told her how happy he was to see her again. He served her with gusto and in no time at all, filled her order.

As he totaled her purchases, he expressed his pleasure that she had moved to the community. He was so pleasant and friendly that the difference in his attitude amazed Mary.

Later as Mary visited with her neighbor, she reported the miraculous improvement. "Did you tell him what I said about his poor service?" she asked.

"Not exactly," replied the neighbor. "What I told him was that you found his store unique, thought his prices were wonderful and had found him charming. I expect my dear, that the improvement came from him trying to live up to your expectations."

Psychology of motivation

I don't know much about psychology, but I do know that we all prefer pleasure to pain. If Mary's friend had passed along her bitter complaints, I'm sure that store owner would have reacted negatively. Her complaints would have hurt. That pain would have caused the business man to resent her presence in his store.

However, he believed that Mary found him charming, his store unique and the service terrific. Her praise motivated him to live up to those high expectations. It became a self-fulfilling promise. The praise brought pleasure.

There is an interesting moral dilemma here. Mary's friend really didn't tell the truth. I am not advocating that anyone lie to make someone to feel better. Instead, it would have been better if Mary's friend had tried to find something that Mary liked about the store and passed that long. If we look hard enough, we can always find something nice to say.

I remember a young lady whose mother had always told her to find something nice to say about everyone. Over and over her mother had conditioned her to look for something to praise.

One evening at a dance she found herself paired with a very undesirable partner. He was homely, grossly overweight, poorly dressed and an awful dancer. All through their dance she tried to think of something nice to say. Finally, as the music was about to stop she received inspiration. "You don't sweat much for a fat person," she said.

The value of praise

Mark Twain once said that he could live for two months on a good compliment. I understand exactly how he felt. Nothing makes this column easier to write every week than just one person making a pleasant comment about last week's column.

Psychologist William James said that the deepest ingrained principle of human nature is the craving to be appreciated. We all need positive reinforcement to maintain a high level of motivation.

I wonder what might happen if the coming days if we all began to praise good work. How would our relationships with fellow workers, bosses, friends and families improve if we accentuated the positive.

I challenge each of you this week to look for good work to praise. Be sincere, but make someone feel really appreciated. It may become a self-fulfilling promise.

LOS ANGELES (AP) - Elizabeth Taylor donated $150,000 to fight the resurgence of tuberculosis, which poses a special danger to people with AIDS.

"After many years, TB is back, and deadlier than ever," Miss Taylor said in a statement Thursday. "What's not yet back is the same government response we saw decades ago."

The American Foundation for AIDS Research, which Miss Taylor founded, next week plans to unveil a campaign to raise money to fight TB. It announced her donation Thursday.

TB, which can be fatal, was virtually wiped out decades ago.

Extension News

By BEVERLY HARDER County Extension Agent-HE READING TO YOUR CHILD

The summer is an excellent season to spend quality time with your child by spending some hours each day in reading. The skills learned in school will be kept current with summer reading and the 'special' time spent with a parent or other person will help the child build self esteem and a bond with an older person.

Whether we are a parent, a teacher, or a significant other doesn't matter. Children love to be read to. It is a special time for children when they climb up into a loved-one's lap and listen and watch wonderful stories unfold.

Reading to young children provides a head start for them when they start school. Children who have been read to understand what will be possible when they learn to read. Children's understanding of new words and experiences increase as they as "What's that?" and "Why did that happen?" and their reader stops to explain.

It is never too soon or too late to read to children. Here are some suggestions to get you started:

*Start before the child is a year old using simple picture books of animals, familiar things, Mother Goose rhymes and songs.

*Read a variety of books--traditional tales, modern fantasies, poetry and riddles. Get into the role by exaggerating facial and vocal expressions.

*Pause periodically and ask your child, "What do you think will happen next?" and "What would you do?" Similarly, take time out to answer your child's questions.

*Establish a special time to read. Just before bedtime provides a delightful way to end a busy day.

*Set aside 15 minutes a day to read to your children. With older children, you can take turns reading.

*Let your children get close to you when you read to them. HOLD the book so they can see it.

*Ask your children to read to each other without you. This will encourage a quite and pleasant sharing event.

So, sit down and read to your children, not only to make them better readers, but also to share an adventure, to discover new lands, to tickle your fancy, and to share the laughter.

Educational programs conducted by the Texas Agricultural Extension Service serve people of all ages regardless of socioeconomic level, race, color, sex, religion, handicap or national origin.

Chocolate alert

There's good news for budget-conscious consumers who, in these tight economic times, still want to give themselves and their loved ones high-quality chocolate.

Recently, 15 of the nation's leading food editors rated creme-filled chocolates at a blind tasting held at New York's famed Waldorf Astoria hotel.

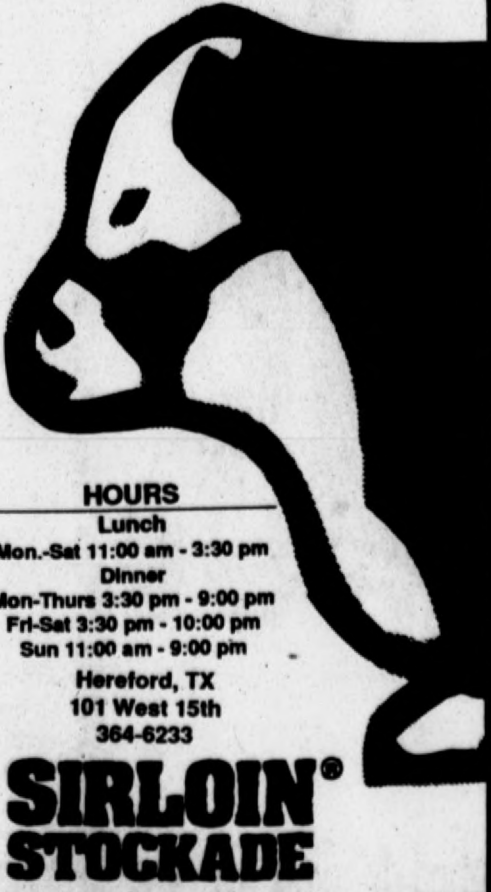

The chocolates included European-style manufacturers Godiva and Lindt, and American companies Whitman, Russell Stover, and Brown & Haley.

European quality scored highest among the food experts with Godiva and Lindt garnering the highest scores. However, Tacoma, WA confectioner Brown & Haley outscored the other American companies and was rated close in overall quality to the European chocolates which cost up to three times the price.

Crucible of conflict: HBO's 'A Private Matter'

Aidan Quinn and Sissy Spacek star in A Private Matter, premiering Saturday on HBO. Directed by Joan Micklin Silver, the two-hour film dramatizes the true story of Sherri Chesson Finkbine, who, in 1962, struggled to get an abortion for medical reasons. Academy Award winner Estelle Parsons also appears in the film.

Spacek, Quinn excel; Parsons wasted

By Steven Alan McGaw

In the early '60s, Americans reacted with sympathy and astonishment to tragic stories coming from Europe about the drug Thalidomide. Prescribed as a sedative, the drug had horrific side effects in pregnant women, producing babies missing some or all of their limbs. Most of the Thalidomide births occurred in Europe, particularly West Germany.

In 1962, Sherri Chesson Finkbine lived in Scottsdale, Ariz. The working mother of four, sleep came at a premium for Sherri and she took, on several occasions, one of the sleeping pills her husband had brought back from overseas. When she read newspaper stories about Thalidomide, the drug she had taken, she called her doctor. He confirmed her fears that the baby now in her womb would, in all likelihood, be deformed.

The aftermath of the physician's grim report is the subject of the aptly titled A Private Matter, debuting Saturday, June 20, on HBO. Directed by Joan Micklin Silver, the film chronicles the young woman's eventual public struggle and inner torment, as well as the devastating effect on her husband and children. Sherri knew she and her husband could not bear the emotional or financial toll such a child would exact. When the doctor pulled her husband aside and raised the subject of "termination," Sherri resented being treated like a child. Still, after much soul-searching, Sherri and Bob agreed to an abortion, which their doctor said he could perform. Although illegal, the physician said the matter would be handled quietly and with discretion.

The quiet ended when Sherri, hoping to prevent other cases like hers, granted an anonymous interview to The Arizona Republic. The story exploded in the public consciousness and was carried across the nation. The hospital, fearful of negative backlash, requested a court ruling before performing the abortion and Sherri's name entered the public record. For Sherri, and the nation, nothing would ever be the same again.

Oscar winner Sissy Spacek stars as Sherri, and her performance deftly depicts the warring impulses the young mother and TV personality (Sherri hosted the local edition of Romper Room) had to contend with in making her difficult decision. Aidan Quinn gives his best performance since 1985's An Early Frost as Sherri's husband, a man simply overwhelmed by what surrounds him. Sadly, the talents of Oscar winner Estelle Parsons are wasted in the two-dimensional (and slightly irritating) role of Sherri's mother.

Presumably, HBO is prepared for the controversy A Private Matter is likely to generate. Executive producer Bill Pace stresses, "we were not looking for an abortion story ... it has to do with the characters and the crucible of conflict they go through, the arc of their own growth."

Still, his partner, Ronnie D. Clemmer admits the Finkbine case was "the first publicly debated abortion in America."

Abortion, of course, is still hotly debated, and Pace says the film is an important reminder of life before Roe v. Wade. "Sometimes," he says, "through the prism of time, you get a clearer image of the present."

STAR NOTES

'Aloha' flashbacks: Elvis remembered

By Steven Alan McGaw

Marty Pasetta's career dates back to the early days of television and he credits his experience in live broadcasting with preparing him for the many big events and specials he's produced over the years. Pasetta helmed 17 Oscar telecasts, as well as several American Film Institute tributes, the People's Choice Awards and specials featuring George Burns, Carol Burnett and Alabama. He also was responsible for Elvis Presley's Aloha from Hawaii special in 1973, a landmark, live-by-satellite concert that reached an international audience.

Pasetta recalls approaching the Presley show with some trepidation, especially in his first meeting with the reclusive star.

"We met in Las Vegas," Pasetta says. "I went up to his hotel room and he had three bodyguards. When Elvis came in, they all sat down and took out their guns and laid them on the table." Shaken, Pasetta decided to go ahead with what he'd planned to say.

"I took a breath and said 'Elvis, I went to your show in Long Beach. You just stood there. You're fat, you're slow and you're boring.'"

Pasetta and Presley eyed each other silently. "Then he took off his glasses," Pasetta recalls, "leaned back in his chair and started laughing. Elvis said, 'Not many people are ever honest with me like that.' We became friends from that moment on."

TIME OUT

Special probes racism in sports

By Steve Paschal

Since 1946, when Jackie Robinson joined the Brooklyn Dodgers and became the first athlete to break the racial barrier in professional sports, athletics have been viewed as America's great integrator. That notion is challenged in The Other Side of Victory: The Challenge of the Black Athlete, a documentary currently airing in syndication.

Thirty-one years after Robinson's history-making achievement, Los Angeles Dodgers assistant general manager Al Campanis questioned on national TV the ability of blacks to perform managerial jobs. Campanis was promptly fired, but his bigoted remarks caused many to consider the role discrimination continues to play in sports.

The Other Side of Victory goes beyond the mere identification of racism in sports and looks into such related issues as unethical recruiting and substance abuse. Close examination suggests an ongoing pattern of discrimination that exploits the black athlete and gives little in return. By contrast, the special profiles blacks who are breaking new ground in sports such as swimming and tennis.

ESPN's Robin Roberts and James Brown of CBS Sports, both black, are hosts of the two-hour special. They were highly recruited prep school all-Americans who have distinguished themselves in and out of the arena.

Dream picks for Daytime Emmys

By Candace Havens

Many daytime actors and actresses begin to feel a touch of anxiety around this time every year. It's Daytime Emmy time. And while many of the nominees say things like, "It's an honor just to be nominated," most are praying feverishly that this will be their time in the limelight.

There were some outstanding performances by daytime actors and actresses this year, which is amazing considering the terrible story lines the writers provided.

The award for Outstanding Younger Actress is one of the most difficult choices. Cady McClain (Dixie, All My Children) and Alla Korot (Jenna, Another World) each gave wonderful performances, but McClain steadily gives her best to the role and deserves to win.

Outstanding Younger Actor should go to Patrick Stuart for his portrayal of wicked Will Cortlandt on AMC. His performances rated far above others in this category.

Charles Keating is up for Outstanding Supporting Actor and should win for his portrayal of evil Carl Hutchins, but the award will likely go to Bernard Barrow (Louie, Loving).

This is one year when the Outstanding Supporting Actress category boasts better performances than its counterpart for leading ladies. Linda Dano (Felicia, AW), Darlene Conley (Sally, The Bold and the Beautiful), Lynn Herring (Lucy, General Hospital), Maureen Garret (Holly, Guiding Light) and Maeve Kinkead (Vanessa, GL) were all nominated for supporting roles. Each actress has more than proven herself, but Herring stands out. She didn't have the best material to work with, but she consistently gave excellent performances.

Jessica Tuck should win the Outstanding Lead Actress award for her portrayal of Megan Gordon on One Life to Live. Of course, it would be terrific if Susan Lucci won just this once, so she could lose the stigma of being a loser 12 years in a row.

I feel certain David Canary will pick up the Outstanding Lead Actor award for his portrayal of Adam and Stuart Chandler on AMC, but I'd really like to see Peter Bergman (Jack, The Young and the Restless) win. He's one of those actors who gives his all to every performance.

Romance in Paris; news in Moscow

She's on the rebound for trouble. In the NBC movie Masquerade due to air next season, Connie Sellecca plays a Park Avenue socialite who goes to Paris for a visit with friends and to escape the husband she is divorcing. There she is chased by shady characters who claim she has something they want and will kill to get it. She is also being followed by the mysterious, trench-coat-clad Ed Marinaro, but it's love that he wants; well, that's his story. David Hemmings (Running Scared) is directing the production in Paris and Budapest.

First The Cartoon Network, now this. Media mover and shaker R.E. "Ted" Turner has pulled the switch to start a new Russian broadcast station airing in Moscow. Programming scheduled includes two hours of CNN International translated into Russian daily. According to Stuart Loory, the CNN veeep who completed the deal, "We feel that with simultaneous transmission of our 24-hour English service and the excerpted Russian version of CNN, we will do much to provide a good international report to residents of Moscow."

Gavril Popov, Mayor of Moscow, is also pleased. "I think this is a very important development for democracy in Russia," he says.

The Discovery Channel, widely regarded as the premier venue for insightful documentaries focusing on science and nature, seems to be wading in the shallow waters of network reality-based programming. New additions to the TDC fall schedule include Justice Files, the reconstruction of real-life crime stories reported on ABC's 20/20; and Heart of Courage, in which host Alex Trebek shares true stories of "normal everyday folks who become heroes when they are thrust into crisis situations." Let's just hope they stop short of Forest Ranger: Emergency Call of the Wild.

If you have more fresh or leftover vegetables than your family can use before they go bad, puree them with a little water or broth and freeze the result in ice cube trays. You can use a cube in soups, stews and sauces.

Shooting this eagle no golfer's dream

By Dan Rice

Kamisquagwog is a Chippewa Indian phrase meaning "eagle come home." It is also the name of a lake in Minnesota, part of a wilderness area where the bald eagle, now classified as an endangered species, survives relatively unthreatened. On Thursday, June 18, A&E's Nature's Kingdom looks at the work of conservationists to save America's mascot in Eagle Come Home.

"We are such stuff as dreams are made on." A&E Stage presents The Tempest, Shakespeare's last play, on Tuesday, June 16. The 1963 production stars Maurice Evans as Prospero, Lee Remick as Miranda, Roddy McDowell as Ariel and Richard Burton as Caliban.

East meets West in the true story Iron & Silk, premiering Friday, June 19, on The Disney Channel. Mark Saltzman wrote and stars in the film adapted from a memoir of his experiences in China as an English teacher and student of the martial arts.

The cutting edge of cinema is honed by independent filmmakers, who are celebrated this month by Bravo with a festival of works beginning Saturday, June 20. Also on Saturday, the cable channel airs Champlin on Film: American Directors — The Next Wave, a roundtable discussion with directors including Martha Plimpton (Rambling Rose) and Joseph B. Vasquez (Hangin' With the Homeboys).

What's that Dame's name?; Tandy's dandy but no nurse

By Taylor Michaels

Q: Can you please tell me a little about the show Dame Edna's Hollywood? We love to watch this and would love to know who this is, what this is and if this is for real or what. We also would like to know about her gal friend; she calls her "Bridesmaid" or something. There are big name stars on the show, which is great. Will we see more of her in the future? —Dondi McHenry, Vancouver, Wash.

A: The "person" in question is Australia's very own Barry Humphries, who, as Dame Edna Everage, has been parlaying England's fascination with men in drag into phenomenal comic success for many years. Humphries is said rarely to step out of character, even in private, which must account for Dame Edna's convincing mannerisms.

NBC aired two Dame Edna specials, set in her "palatial and deceptively posh" (and totally fake) Bel Air mansion, during the 1991-92 season. A third special has already been taped for next season. As for Bridesmaid, or Madge Allsop, to whom Dame Edna refers to "Vivian Vance to my Lucille Ball," she is but another part of the divine mystery of Dame Edna, just the fictional member of the wedding party who wouldn't leave.

Q: I should very much like to know if (actress) Jessica Tandy ever trained for a nursing career at the Royal Victoria Hospital in Montreal, Canada, in the late '30s. I trained there, and one of my friends was named Jessica Tandy. It's not a common name. —Eileen Cunningham, Atascadero, Calif.

A: While you and your friend Jessica Tandy were studying blood counts and prescribed medicines in Quebec, the star of such recent hits as Driving Miss Daisy and Fried Green Tomatoes was probably preparing for the film Murder in the Family, released in the U.K. in 1938. She was well on her way to a professional stage career by 1925, so it is doubtful that the two Tandy's are one and the same.

Q: My roommate and I have had a dispute over the actors who've played Tarzan. I said Buster Crabbe was the first Tarzan, but he said "No way!" I could be wrong. Who is right?

—Charlotte Betz, San Luis Obispo, Calif.

A: You are wrong, Charlotte, but only a Tarzan purist would be likely to know this arcane bit of trivia. Tarzan of the Apes (1918) was the first filmed version of the Greystoke tale and starred an aged and bloated actor named Elmo Lincoln, a far cry from the athletic leads who were to follow. Buster Crabbe's only appearance as Tarzan was 1933's Tarzan the Fearless, a fairly forgettable outing for the King of the Jungle.

Q: I am trying to find information on an old MGM musical. The act was called "Triplets" or "Twins." Nanette Fabray was in the middle, with a gentleman on either side. They were big baby bonnets, and part of the song lyrics they sang was "... we look alike, we talk alike ..."

I live in a retirement community and we put on little shows for our own amusement. We would love to do the skit. —Jeanette Ball, Paso Robles, Calif.

A: If you are interested in performing this number, you need to rent the 1953 musical The Band Wagon and study the number "Triplets," taken from the stage show "Between the Devil," starring Nanette Fabray, Fred Astaire and Jack Buchanan. Most any video store worth its salt will have The Band Wagon on tape. Good luck with the show!

FAMILY FARE

'When a Tree Falls' calls for ears to hear

By Chris Carpenter

For a child watching the world go by from a leafy backyard perch, picturing his strong, silent friend as a ream of paper is unimaginable. For others, it's business as usual.

When a Tree Falls, a special airing this month on many PBS stations, takes an honest, even-handed look at the issues surrounding timber harvesting. It's must viewing for families even remotely interested in preserving a legacy of forestlands for posterity.

In the backwoods of coastal South Carolina, timber has historically lost in the race for progress. Pointing no fingers and assessing no blame, this program features instead the growing pockets of resistance — including a grade-school teacher supporting Project Learning Tree and the Wildlife Action group — whose messages are taking root. Trees are one of our few renewable resources, they stress, and we're selling out future generations by not putting back what we take.

When a Tree Falls delivers an effective, eloquent message in simple stories from ordinary people.

"We feel we are the experts in our own backyards," says one Wildlife Action volunteer.

When a Tree Falls offers a sharply focused view of a bigger issue in microcosm, begging in a small way for discerning ears to listen for every branch that falls.

his family. Harrison Ford may just be the best actor in films today. His every emotion shows in his astoundingly expressive face, and Anne Archer can make even the most bromidic character seem warm and real. Rated R for extreme violence - the body count is awesome. See it. This is good filmmaking and excellent story telling.

NEW VIDEO RELEASES

FATHER OF THE BRIDE: (1991) Starring Steve Martin and Diane Keaton.

Vincente Minnelli's original film had Spencer Tracy as the solid patriarch in old-line suburbia, but that was in 1950. In Charles Shyer's remake, set in the 90's southern California, Steve Martin falls into a swimming pool, throws a fit in a grocery store and carries on in ways more attuned to his style and talent.

Annie Banks (Kimberly Williams) is getting married, and her dad (Steve Martin), little brother and bridegroom are at their posts as they were in the first film, only now they shoot hoops in the driveway. Still, memorable moments are preserved, refurbished with new jokes and attitudes, in a remake that represents recycling at its best. Rated PG.

MY GIRL: (1991) Starring Macaulay Culkin and Anna Chlumsky.

Howard Zieff's film takes Hollywood's hottest child star and not only puts him in a secondary role but also kills off his character in the process. As Thomas J. Sennett, Macaulay Culkin hangs around as a sort of playmate-in-waiting to Vada Sultenfuss (Anna Chlumsky), a charming child constantly in danger of having her scenes stolen by Thomas J. whenever he is allowed in them, until various subplots lead up to the boy's demise by bee sting. this in case you think My Girl is for your little ones too.)

While the story line between the two young friends is sweet and moves along nicely, the family's story, built around Anna's mortician father, presents a clumsy morbid streak. An ok adult film for the small screen, but not for the small ones. Rated PG.

EXCELLENT GOOD FAIR POOR DON'T WASTE MONEY

PATRIOT GAMES: Starring Harrison Ford and Anne Archer. Patriot Games is a very good action-drama for several important reasons. The screenwriters have taken what many consider Tom Clancy's poorest Jack Ryan novel and turned it into a tense, fast-moving story, and the story is blessed with topnotch performances by Harrison Ford, Anne Archer and a respectable group of colorful assembly-line actors: Thora Birch, Patrick Bergin, Richard Harris and James Earl Jones. (How could any director with this cast go wrong?)

Jack Ryan's family is on vacation in England when Ryan becomes entangled in a lethal terrorist attack on members of the Royal family by a radical terrorist group. Because he successfully thwarts the incident Ryan, and his family, become the next target. The action scenes are quick, exciting and cogent. The story-line flows smoothly. The bad guys all wear black hats, and good triumphs over evil. Why not? There's something intensely heroic about a man who will do everything in his power to protect what is most sacred to him.
