Democrats attack GOP's reaction toward Hispanics

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — Republicans won't be able in the 1984 presidential election to get away with claims that they care about Hispanics' interests, representatives to two national convention meetings were told.

Charles Manatt, the national Democratic chairman, said President Reagan "is going to have to do more than serve tacos and enchiladas to Queen Elizabeth" — a reference to a menu the president planned during the queen's recent visit to the United States.

Gov. Toney Anaya, D-New Mexico, said Reagan will be judged not by his promises but by "the higher unemployment levels, the cuts in food stamps, the cuts in education funds, the backtracking on 30 years of civil rights progress."

Manatt's criticism of Republicans' concern for Hispanics came during the National Conference of State Legislatures, which began here Monday.

Anaya addressed about 200 Hispanic leaders in San Antonio for a national Hispanic convention.

The Hispanic leaders prepared today for speeches by Vice President George Bush and Sen. Edward Kennedy, D-Mass.

Anaya applauded a move to register a million Hispanic voters by the 1984 presidential election, which would raise the number of registered voters to more than 70 percent.

"The hands that historically have picked the lettuce in this country and the hands that historically have picked the cotton in this country are the hands that can pick the next president of this country," Anaya said.

The added voting clout could swing election results in Texas, California, New Mexico and New York — states with large numbers of Hispanics, the New Mexico governor said.

The support of Hispanics was crucial in the recent victories of Federico Pena as the mayor of Denver and Harold Washington, a black, as mayor of Chicago, Anaya said.

"Politicians of all kinds are courting us. We are the second-largest and fastest-growing minority in America," Anaya added.

"We are sending out the word that Hispanics are not going to be satisfied with a symbolic 'in-house Mexican' and that we're not going to be satisfied with a verbal commitment for a few more dollars for bilingual education," Anaya said.

At the National Conference of State Legislatures, Manatt said Reagan will find Hispanics demanding "that he replace his rhetoric with reality and make major shifts in budget priorities."

Texas Rep. Gonzalo Barrientos, D-Austin, said Reagan's claims of economic recovery ring hollow in Hispanic communities.

"What recovery? Recovery for whom? The rich?" Barrientos asked. He compared the Reagan economic plans to giving the people porridge with the finger, adding "You don't get much to eat that way."

Midlanders say phone service not affected

By GAIL BURKE
Staff Writer

Few Midlanders contend that the recent strike against the American Telephone & Telegraph strike has affected their phone service.

In a random survey of about 50 people outside the Main Post Office Monday, many residents said they didn't notice any difference when making operator assistance calls.

With the Communication Workers Union strike against AT&T Sunday, Southwestern Bell supervisory personnel have been called off their desks to operate switchboards.

Guatemalan general stages coup

GUATEMALA CITY (AP) — Guatemala's new ruler has abolished the secret military courts of ousted President Efrain Rios Montt, but vowed to wipe out leftist rebels and end his predecessor's born-again Christian influence in this mostly Roman Catholic nation.

Gen. Oscar Humberto Mejia Victores, the defense minister and a 35-year military veteran, seized power Monday in a rapidly staged coup that ended Rios Montt's 17-month-old regime after a brief but bloody shootout at the presidential palace.

Mejia Victores' first act as president was to scrap the clandestine courts established by Rios Montt that had sentenced at least 15 people to death for leftist subversion.

The new ruler also vowed to end the "religious fanaticism" he said characterized the regime of Rios Montt, a general who was a minister in a California-based Protestant evangelist sect.

Rios Montt's loyalists at the National Palace had held out briefly during a shootout that Mejia Victores said ended with one soldier killed and three wounded. Local reporters said two soldiers were killed.

The abolition of secret courts was part of a nine-point program signed by the nation's military commanders which largely echoed the goals of Rios Montt's rightist regime. The most substantial difference between the ousted and new president appears to be their religion.

Rios Montt, Mejia Victores profiles, Page 2A

Mejia Victores, a 52-year-old Roman Catholic, promised to respect "the faith and traditions of the people of Guatemala" and to "keep out foreign influences that wound the feelings (of Guatemalans)."

A joint statement by the commanders said: "A fanatic and aggressive religious group, taking advantage of the power of its highest members, have used and abused the government for their benefit, ignoring the fundamental principle of the separation of church and state."

Rios Montt had promoted evangelical Protestantism in Guatemala, which is about 80 percent Catholic. He had appointed two elders from his Church of the Word as top aides. "at the disposition" of the army but refused to elaborate. A political source close to the army said security agents were holding Rios Montt at a house in the capital.

The new president pledged to "combat Marxist-Leninist subversion and the paramilitary group, to protect the people of Guatemala."

Aircraft may play key role in Chad

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan says American aircraft sent to monitor the fighting in Chad will remain in the region only a short time, but officials hinted there could be a key role for the planes if Libya persists in fighting on the rebel side.

Reagan made his statement in a letter formally notifying Congress that he had dispatched two AWACS surveillance planes and eight F-15 fighter escorts to the region along with 550 support personnel.

"These forces will be available to operate in close coordination with the government of Chad and other friendly governments assisting it," Reagan said. He said the mission of the F-15s is to protect the AWACs, if necessary.

"It is not possible at this time to predict the precise duration of this deployment of United States armed forces in the region," Reagan said. "They will remain for only a limited period to meet the urgent requirements posed by the present situation."

Reagan said the purpose of the U.S. aircraft is "to support the objective of helping to preserve the territorial integrity, sovereignty and political independence of Chad."

In addition, Pentagon sources said the United States also sent an RC-135 jet specially equipped with listening devices to the region, presumably to monitor conversations between Libyan pilots and their ground control.

The AWACS remained on the ground in Sudan on Monday pending the next move in the fighting in Chad. U.S. officials, who insisted on anonymity, said the AWACS would be put to use coordinating movements of French jet fighters if the French committed aircraft to counter Libyan aircraft.

However, as of late Monday, the French still had not decided to send in aircraft, and there were indications of U.S. impatience over what appeared to be French foot-dragging.

"It is obvious what decision the French take would be a factor" in deciding whether to use the AWACS, said John Hughes, the State Department spokesman.

"At the moment they are on the ground and are not being used," he said of the planes.

Hughes said it is "appropriate that the French take the lead" in defending the government of its former colony from outside aggression.

But he also said that while Washington has "not sought to be a policeman in Africa," the administration "is disturbed over what is a clear-cut case of Libyan aggression" in Chad.

The AWACS, sophisticated radar aircraft, would be of little help by themselves in combating Libyan aircraft, which have been pounding government forces in the north African nation.

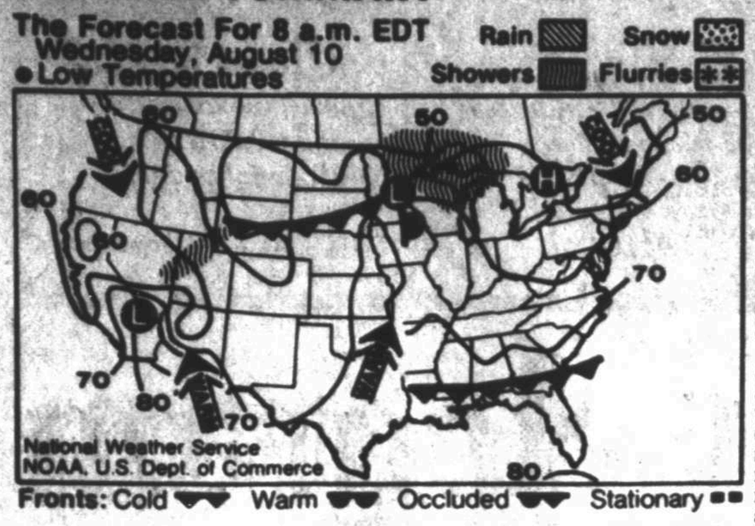
WEATHER SUMMARY



AP Laserphoto Map

The National Weather Service forecasts showers for the upper Great Lakes and coolerweather for the northwest and northeast.

Area rainfall climbs to 2.5 inches

Following Monday's slight and scattered showers, rainfall recorded for the year rose over the 2.5 inch mark. But with only a 20 percent chance of thunderstorms in the forecast through Wednesday, it looks like Mother Nature's gaunt generosity has gone.

According to the National Weather Service at Midland Regional Airport, mild temperatures, however, will continue with a low tonight expected in the upper 60s and a high on Wednesday in the middle 90s.

Tonight's light and variable winds should turn southerly at 5-15 mph Wednesday.

Monday's high of 91 was 13 degrees cooler than the record high of 104, set in 1952. The overnight low of 66 was four degrees warmer than 1976's record low of 62.

Anchorwoman awarded $500,000

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — Anchorwoman Christine Craft, awarded $500,000 in a sex discrimination suit against her former employer, says she's glad she won but has no illusions "that this is going to make a huge difference in TV news."

A federal jury deliberated 8⅛ hours over two days before finding Metromedia Inc. guilty Monday of fraud and awarding Ms. Craft $375,000 in actual damages and $125,000 in punitive damages.

The four-woman, two-man jury also recommended that U.S. District Judge Joseph E. Stevens Jr. find that Metromedia committed sex discrimination. If Stevens accepts that recommendation Ms. Craft could receive further damages, but he is not expected to rule on the issue for at least a week.

The jury found Metromedia innocent of violating equal-pay laws when it paid her less than the television station's male co-anchor.

The $1.2 million suit by the 38-year-old Ms. Craft accused Metromedia, former owner of KMBC-TV in Kansas City, of demoting her in 1981 for being "too old, unattractive and not deferential enough to men."

The suit charged the company with fraud for misrepresenting the job when it hired Ms. Craft as co-anchor in January 1981, with sex discrimination and with violating equal-pay laws.

Jury foreman Kenneth W. Green said the panel made its decision because "we didn't want to see anyone else put through what she went through."

But Ms. Craft seemed less sure of the verdict's effect.

"I have no illusions, shall we say, that this is going to make a huge difference in TV news, but...if it keeps one news director at one station someplace, somewhere, from doing the same thing, I hope it does that," she said.

Ms. Craft said she planned to return to her current anchoring job at KEYT-TV in Santa Barbara. Because KMBC was sold to the Hearst Corp. in May 1982, she called the part of her suit seeking reinstatement to her KMBC post a "moot point."

"I consider today a victory for civil rights in this country, for women's rights, for the rights of men and women journalists," said Ms. Craft in a news conference on the courthouse steps.

"I still know the difference between the American and National leagues and that I will defer to Clare Boothe Luce or Eric Sevareid...but I will not defer to someone just because he or she happens to be better at basic hair spray."

Donald W. Giffin, attorney for Metromedia, declined comment on the verdict, but said an appeal was possible.

Jane Pauley of NBC's "Today" program said it was "awfully go... news."

But Christine Lund, anchorw... man for KABC-TV in Los Angel... said that choosing anchormen a... anchorwomen "will always be a ma... ter of caprice and personal tast... miles away from judging a perso... strictly as a journalist."

The fraud ruling was based on M... Craft's contention that Metromedi... defrauded her by saying she wa... hired solely for her journalisti... skills.

The two-week trial centered o... Ms. Craft's claim that on Aug. 14... 1981, former KMBC news directo... Ridge Shannon said she was being... demoted because she was "too old... unattractive and not deferential... enough to men."

Shannon denied on the witness... stand ever making the comment... and also denied that Ms. Craft's sex... had anything to do with her salary... or her demotion. He declined com... ment on the verdict.

Metromedia said it demoted Ms. Craft because surveys showed audience reaction to her was extremely negative.

But Ms. Craft said she had no negative effect on KMBC's ratings and that the station was No.1 in the ratings during her tenure.

Media consultant Frank Magid said it would be wrong to conclude from the trial that sex and age are the key factors in picking anchors. "We have found that age and sex really play very little role in the popularity a newscaster might have," he said.

General expected to be tough

GUATEMALA CITY (AP) — Brig. Gen. Oscar Humberto Mejia Victores, Guatemala's new military president, is a taciturn paratrooper who favors a tough line in the fight to crush the left-wing insurgency that has troubled this country for decades.

Mejia Victores, 52, who seized the presidency Monday from another general, Efrain Rios Montt, will continue in his previous position as defense minister, the military high command announced.

In his first statement as president, read over radio and television, he vowed to "fight by any means to eradicate Leninist-Communist subversion that threatens Guatemala's liberty and sovereignty."

Veteran observers, speaking on condition they not be named, said they expect a stern administration under Mejia Victores, a strapping soldier who talks little and does not have a wide circle of friends.

Some months ago, Mejia Victores came out strongly in favor of maintaining special secret courts Rios Montt set up a year ago to try major crimes, including those related to guerrilla attacks.

However, he told reporters after taking the oath of office that he was disbanding the special tribunals immediately as part of a program to return the nation to democratic rule.

Fifteen people convicted by those courts have been executed, most for acts of terrorism. The names of the judges — who by law can be either lawyers or military officers — are not made public. The procedure had raised strong protests from human rights groups both here and abroad.

Mejia Victores is one of two "old guard" holdovers from the military-backed government of Gen. Fernando Romeo Lucas Garcia, who was overthrown March 23, 1982, by young officers who then installed Rios Montt as one of a three-man junta.

The officers had accused Lucas Garcia of corruption and claimed that an ally of his, Defense Minister Gen. Angel Anibal Guevara, had been elected president a month earlier through fraud.

Mejia Victores was deputy defense minister under Guevara, and after he became defense minister. The other holdover general from the previous regime was Federico Fuentes, administrator of national disaster relief since an earthquake devastated the country in 1976.

Rios Montt accused of religious fanaticism

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — The religious convictions that helped Efrain Rios Montt become president of Guatemala ultimately were used as an excuse to depose him, says a leader of an evangelical sect to which he belonged.

Rios Montt's removal from power of the Central American nation was announced in broadcasts Monday that accused him of religious fanaticism and failure to maintain a separation of church and state.

The young officers who helped put Montt in power in 1982 hoped his strict moral code would rid the government of corruption, said Joseph Anfuso, a director of Gospel Outreach in a telephone interview from Eureka.

"I think the people who have taken power (in Guatemala) were looking for reasons to add credibility to what they've done," Anfuso said.

"I think there was definitely a separation of church in terms of it being involved in the government," Anfuso said. "In terms of policy, the church itself was never involved in those things (the government)."

Anfuso said Rios Montt, though from a Catholic background, converted in 1978 to the Protestant Church of the Word, a Guatemalan offshoot of the Eureka-based Gospel Outreach.

He quickly became active leading Bible classes and as academic director of the church's day school, but dropped those duties after he became president because he was too busy.

But Rios Montt attempted to infuse his ardent beliefs in his daily life and work as president, Anfuso said.

"I think people felt that he was himself too much into religion," Anfuso said. "He was not an outspoken Catholic in a country that is predominantly Catholic."

"I don't think there was ever in Guatemala a president who was evangelical," Anfuso said. "That added a certain amount of tension."

Anfuso said Gospel Outreach, a Protestant sect founded in 1971, has about 3,000 members, including 350 in Eureka near the Oregon border, and 1,000 in the Church of the Word in Guatemala.

The larger membership in Guatemala probably stems from the work of missionaries the church sent there after a major earthquake in 1976, he said.

General stages coup, takes over Guatemala

At least four leftist guerrilla groups operate in Guatemala. Paramilitary rightist death squads also have flourished and are blamed by human rights groups for hundreds of deaths.

Mejia Victores said he would maintain an electoral tribunal created last month and would "speed up" the electoral process. Rios Montt, who came to power in a March 23, 1982, military coup, had promised elections in July 1984.

The State Department reacted cautiously to the coup, saying it welcomed "any concrete step" to restore Guatemalan democracy. The coup came one day after Mejia Victores met in Honduras with Brig. Gen Frederick Woerner, commander of U.S. forces in Panama, but there was no word whether U.S officials knew about coup plans in advance.

Nicaragua's leftist Sandinista government accused the Reagan administration of plotting the coup as part of what it called a scheme to "launch its aggression against Nicaragua." The Sandinistas claim Mejia Victores, a staunch anti-communist, will be more cooperative with Washington than Rios Montt.

Only one civilian has ruled Guatemala in the 29 years since a CIA-backed coup ousted the leftist government of the late President Jacobo Arbenz. Most of the military presidents were elected, but three coups interrupted the cycle of elections, scheduled to be held every four years.

Rios Montt ousted ultra-rightist President Fernando Romeo Lucas Garcia, led a junta of three officers until June 9, 1982, then took over by himself. He survived as many as 10 coup attempts and last month proclaimed a state of alert that suspended some civil liberties.

Human rights group charge Rios Montt continued Lucas Garcia's brutal anti-guerrilla policies in the countryside where the country's Indian majority live.

He affronted the Catholic hierarchy by rejecting a papal appeal for clemency and executing six guerrillas on the eve of Pope John Paul II's visit to Guatemala in March.

The first inkling of the coup came Monday morning when air force helicopters and attack planes flew over the capital. After the short gunfight at the palace, however, few security forces were evident on the streets.

Midlanders: Phones not affected

And most Midlanders didn't know the difference.

"I haven't had any problems," said Scott Wells, of Northern Natural Gas Co. "I've been using my phone quite a bit this morning (Monday), calling Denver and other places."

Another resident added: "No trouble. In fact, it's working better than it usually has."

But Al Sisk, a communication consultant, said he's had "plenty of trouble." Although most of his complaints were not strike-related, he did say "anytime I call long distance, the operator has to break in because we're on a four-party line phone."

"The only trouble I had was I couldn't get information right away," said geologist Ed Kennedy.

"I've been using the phone all morning (Monday) and haven't had any problems," said Steve Hadorn.

"So far, good as gold," another resident said.

"We tried to get an operator Sunday and couldn't reach anybody," Brenda Haney said.

And Eddie Johnson, of Kwik Kopy Printing added: "Everytime someone calls, it disconnects. But we've called the operator and they said someone will come out."

Only a dozen or so out of the 50 surveyed complained that they had to let the phone ring a few more times before reaching the operator. Most praised Southwestern Bell management and said they'd be patient.

Democrats attack GOP reaction

Reagan was in San Antonio in May for a Mexican-American celebration. Bush was on the agenda for the Hispanic conference today, and Reagan has scheduled trips to El Paso and Tampa, Fla.

"The Hispanic community won't be fooled by the Reagan administration's cynical attempt to win their votes with a public relations blitz, while ignoring the pressing needs of 20 million Americans," Manatt said.

"Hungry Hispanic children can't eat White House press releases," Manatt added.

Democrats plan to spend $4.5 million to register up to five million new voters, including one million Hispanics, Manatt said. The party plans to capture up to 80 percent of that vote, he said.

Brinks' robbery defendants stomp out of courtroom

GOSHEN, N.Y. (AP) — Raising clenched fists and shouting political slogans, three defendants in the $1.6 million Brinks' robbery and murder trial stomped out of court when a judge cut off one defendant's rambling opening statement.

The action Monday came shortly after the prosecution's statement to the jury on the Oct. 20, 1981, holdup of a Brink's truck at a suburban shopping mall which was followed by a shootout at a police roadblock in Nyack.

The defendants, who call themselves "freedom fighters" and do not recognize the legitimacy of the court, contend the state has no right to try them for what they have called a political act against imperialism.

Kenneth Gribetz, the district attorney, stayed away from politics as he presented his opening statement.

Gribetz said he would rely on hair, glass, fingerprint and ballistics evidence plus the testimony of "police officers who watched as their colleagues were gunned down" to convict Kuwasi Balagoon, Judith Clark and David Gilbert. They are charged with 13 counts of murder, robbery, assault and grand larceny.

Balagoon, 36, spent about a half-hour reading an opening statement about racism, slavery and genocide to the all-white jury before Orange County Judge David Ritter stopped him.

"Obviously I have no business in this courtroom!" Balagoon said, as he and Ms. Clark, 33, and Gilbert, 36, saluted their supporters and walked out surrounded by sheriff's deputies.

"Death to the Klan! Free the Land!" shouted a dozen or so supporters inside the courtroom, some of whom had demonstrated earlier outside the courthouse to denounce what they called a racist judicial system.

U.S. aircraft may play key role in Chad

The French clearly were not eager to commit their combat aircraft, although a U.S. official said if the crisis worsened with Libyan involvement, then Paris still might move. Another official said the aircraft could provide a useful surveillance function on movements of Libyan aircraft even if the French did not intervene.

Hughes indicated the Libyans themselves may determine the next move for the United States and France. He said the Libyans have up to 2,000 troops besieging Faya-Largeau, a key oasis outpost in northern Chad, along with Libyan-backed rebels. He said they are equipped with artillery and armored vehicles.

Hughes said Libya is "in no doubt" about U.S. concerns about the fighting but that there has not been any direct contact between Washington and the government of Libyan leader Moammar Khadafy.

Hughes indicated he expects France, which also has provided extensive military aid, to take additional steps of its own if the crisis worsens. He said news reports over the weekend that France had decided against intervening directly on the side of President Hissene Habre's forces apparently were incorrect.

"If there is a major ground assault, I think that we and the French would treat that very seriously," Hughes said.

"Libyan success in this particular country (Chad) obviously raises consequenses for other countries in Africa," Hughes said. "I don't think we've seen Libyan activity on this scale before," he added.

Union machinists sign new pact

HOUSTON (AP) — Union machinists at Cameron Iron Works Inc., already hard hit this year by layoffs, agreed to wage cuts and other concessions in a new three-year contract.

Ken Tuck, president of International Association of Machinists and Aerospace Workers Local 15, said 1,600 Cameron union members approved the new pact Sunday, the day the old contract expired.

In approving the agreement, employees accepted a $1.14 an hour pay reduction through August 1984.

The reduction drops the average worker's salary to about $10.45 an hour. Wages will rise an average $1.29 an hour in 1985 and $1.20 in 1986, making the net increase of $1.35 during the contract, Tuck said.

Employees also lost one week of vacation and the new contract contains revisions in work rules.

He said members agreed to the pay cut, hoping Cameron would remain competitive in the oilfield manufacturing business and eventually rehire workers.

Nativity scene allowed in buildings

HOUSTON (AP) — Houston will legally be able to continue its 20-year tradition of setting up the nativity scene in public buildings during the Christmas holiday, a federal judge ruled.

U.S. District Judge George Cire on Monday denied a request by the American Civil Liberties Union for a permanent injunction to stop the county from erecting the displays at Family Law Building and the Criminal Court Building.

The ACLU filed a lawsuit in December, claiming the county had violated the constitutional separation of church and state and "associated itself with a particular faith — Christianity."

However, Cire noted in his ruling that four similar lawsuits in other states had upheld the tradition.

Cire said a 1982 ruling by U.S. District Judge Levin Campbell of the 1st U.S. Circuit Court "best expresses" the opinion of "the majority of the courts and of this court."

"I think we should accept what seems obvious — that for historical reasons — Christmas is a constitutionally valid part of our national life.

Court battles over Nativity scenes have also been fought in Denver, Providence, R.I., West Miami, Fla., and Pierre, S.D.

Walker County to keep inmate

HUNTSVILLE (AP) — Walker County commissioners have sent a letter to Galveston County officials, saying there will be enough money to pay for the keep of a Texas prison inmate accused in the 1981 shooting death of a prison farm manager.

Galveston officials had wanted to send inmate Eroy Edward Brown back to the Texas Department of Corrections here because his trial was not immediately forthcoming and because they could not afford to keep the inmate without reimbursement.

But Walker County commissioners said Monday that the Criminal Justice Division of the governor's office has agreed to pay Brown's room and board until the end of the year.

Brown, 31, was acuqitted by a Galveston jury in November in the April 4, 1981, drowning of Ellis Unit Warden Wallace M. Pack. Brown still faces trial on a charge of capital murder in the shooting death of prison farm manager Billy Max Moore, who was slain minutes before Pack.

No fire sprinkler 'inconceivable'

AUSTIN (AP) — A spokesman for the fire sprinkler industry said Monday it would be "inconceivable" not to include an automatic fire sprinkler system in the $4 million restoration of the east wing of the Capitol.

Last week, in announcing restoration plans for the fire-damaged area behind the Senate chamber, Joe Lackey, an architect assigned to the project, said there would be no fire sprinkler system added.

Lackey said he believed "a sprinkler system in a historical building like this would do almost as much damage as a fire itself."

Joe Johnson Jr., chairman of Regional Committee 5 of the National Fire Sprinkler Association, said Monday in a statement that water damage from fire sprinklers "is negligible compared to fighting the same fire with fire hoses. One fire hose can deliver as much water as 20 sprinklers with most of the water never reaching the fire."

Jail's first escapee recaptured

ODESSA (AP) — Authorities say a tip led to the recapture of a man whose weekend escape was the first from the new third-floor addition to the Ector County Jail.

Two women were arrested on charges of hindering his arrest, officials said.

Charles Patrick Freezer, a 21-year-old trusty serving a criminal trespass sentence, unlocked a door leading to the jail roof and walked through a boiler room late Saturday, according to Ector County Sheriff Department reports.

Food programs to be ready

AUSTIN (AP) — Gov. Mark White says while President Reagan claims he is concerned about needy people who are hungry, his policies are creating "inexcusable human and financial burdens."

White on Monday blamed a 70 percent cutback in federal butter and cheese allocations for the cancellation of more than 3,000 contracts in Texas to distribute food to the needy.

He said, however, the Texas Department of Human Resources plans to be ready by October to distribute surplus food to the needy if Reagan makes food available.

Burnett introduced as possible killer

SAN ANTONIO, Texas (AP) — The admissibility of a statement given to police five years ago by Linda May Burnett, on trial in the slaying of an Oklahoma woman, has been challenged by defense attorneys.

State District Judge Larry Gist scheduled a hearing for today, outside the presence of the jury, on a motion by defense attorney Charles Carver that the statement be ruled inadmissible.

Carver said his client did not admit to the killing in the July 10, 1978 statement, but does admit that she was with Joe Dugas "at certain inappropriate times."

The defense attorney said the statement should not be used because an affidavit of probable cause, attached to her arrest warrant, was faulty.

In testimony Monday, Charles Neel, a Port Arthur commercial painter, testified that Dugas introduced Ms. Burnett to him on May 29, 1978 as "the girl who's going to help me kill my in-laws."

However, Neel said he left that meeting in Beaumont convinced "she was not going along" with Dugas' plans to kill the Bishop Phillips family in Winnie, a community 25 miles southwest of Beaumont.

Neel testified that he told police about the conversation when he heard five weeks later about the slayings of the Phillips, along with their son, daughter-in-law and grandson, who were visiting from Woodward, Okla.

Ms. Burnett and Dugas were convicted for the July 1978 murder of Jason Phillips, 3, the son of Elmer and Martha Phillips of Woodward, Okla., who were visiting Elmer's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Bishop Phillips, at Winnie, Texas, a community 25 miles southwest of Beaumont.

Both were sentenced to death, but Dugas was shot to death two months ago during an apparent escape attempt, and an appeals court overturned her conviction because a tape-recorded conversation between Ms. Burnett and a hypnotist was used against her.

She is being tried now for the slaying of Martha Phillips. The capital murder trial was moved here on a change of venue.

White: Block could give relief by 'nod of head'

By GARTH JONES

AUSTIN (AP) — Gov. Mark White says U.S. Secretary of Agriculture John Block could give West Texas farmers and ranchers drought relief with just "a nod of his head."

White commented shortly after he asked Block to reconsider his denial of federal drought relief for West Texas counties.

"Anybody who has witnessed the devastation in that area should recognize very quickly that this is a matter of grave concern, not only to those people there but to our nation," White said.

"Secretary Block could have by the nod of his head given some large measure of relief to those farmers and ranchers who are impacted so heavily by this drought," he said.

White told Block in a letter that the drought-stricken area — "which is not a great deal smaller than your home state of Illinois" — would normally have received 6.26 inches of rain in the last six months. However, Van Horn has had less than an inch, Fort Stockton only 1.26 inches, Pecos, 1.48 inches and Presidio only 1.3 inches.

White later told reporters that Block's farm in northwest Illinois has had more than 16 inches of rain this year, including two inches in June and another two inches in July.

"His farm has had more rain each month in the summer than our drought area has had all year," White said.

"It was an arbitrary decision on his part and it's one that he can change," the governor said.

White noted that Block and his family recently make a much-publicized effort to live on the average food stamp allotment.

"We have just seen him survive on $58 of food this past week, but we don't know that he could survive on the one inch rain that those farmers and ranchers in West Texas have received this year," White said.

"He would be a pretty dry secretary."

He said West Texas ranchers have been forced to buy expensive feed and, in some cases, even haul in water when cattle tanks dried up. "Now, ranchers are being forced to sell herds ahead of schedule, which will have a devastating effect on the economy of West Texas as well as a significant impact on the nation's consumers of beef," White said.

White suggested some relief might come from "the large stockpiles of corn stored by the USDA in the Texas Panhandle since the grain embargo of 1980.

"Much of of that corn, I am told, is beginning to deteriorate and while it may not be appropriate for human consumption, it would be ideal feed for our West Texas livestock."

Brother identified as killer

HOUSTON (AP) — A man who went to court to testify in his brother's murder trial ended up behind bars himself after two witnesses identified him as the killer.

Leopoldo Robledo, 33, of Pasadena, was to have gone on trial Monday for the May 14, 1981, shooting of Juan Anzaldua Jr., 23.

His brother, Isais Robledo, 26, earlier had told police his brother did the shooting, which allegedly took place during an argument over a pool game. He had been subpoenaed to testify in the trial.

But before the day was over, Isais was under arrest and Leopoldo was on his way home.

Phone company cannot increase rates this year

By JAMES R. KING

AUSTIN (AP) — Regardless of the final outcome of Southwestern Bell's record-breaking rate hike request, the telephone company will not be able to charge higher rates at least until sometime next year, a utility commission examiner says.

The phone company wanted to raise the basic home service charge in Texas by 60 to 82 percent beginning Oct. 31 — and much more later on.

But hearing examiner Jacqueline Holmes said no in a four-page ruling handed down Monday.

She rejected a request by Bell that the utility commission consider for now only $497 million of the phone company's record $1.7 billion rate hike request it filed in June.

Ms. Holmes said she would keep the phone company's case intact, and hear the entire $1.7 billion case it on its merits Oct. 11, as scheduled. She said if Southwestern Bell can meet its anticipated filing schedule it "will probably be able to bond rates (put higher rates into effect under bond) by late January."

She also said the commission could authorize interim rates Jan. 1 — a rare move in which higher rates are allowed temporarily, on an emergency basis, for companies that would otherwise operate at a cash loss.

Bonded and interim rates have to be partially refunded to customers if the final rates approved by the commission turn out to be less.

Bell spokesman Dale Johnson said his company's lawyers would decide by the end of the week whether to appeal Ms. Holmes' ruling to the full three-member commission.

The problem for Bell is that most of its rate case is related to a court order that it break away from its parent corporation, AT&T, on Jan. 1, giving up most long distance revenues.

But Southwestern Bell has not been able to back up its request for divestiture-related expenses to the satisfaction of PUC examiners.

So the phone company had tried to get the commission to rule only on $497 million of the request for the time being — money not related to divestiture — in hopes of at least being able to put those higher rates into effect under bond beginning Oct. 31.

Quality television on CEL

NEW YORK (AP) — "Animal Express," produced for the now defunct Entertainment Channel pay-TV network, might have been the best show of its kind ever done. "Creativity," on public television, was in a class by itself.

Upcoming on the Public Broadcasting Service in January, from the same people, is "A Walk Through the 20th Century with Bill Moyers," and a sampling of the series of 20, hour-long programs suggests that it will be as extraordinary as its two predecessors.

"Each new thing is a plateau," says Sanford H. Fisher, president of the Corporation for Entertainment & Learning, Inc., (CEL) which produced the three series and several others similarly acclaimed.

"When we were doing 'Mario and the Magic Movie Machine,' everyone called us a kids' show producer. When we did 'Sports Probe' for the USA Cable network, we were a sports producer," he says.

"There isn't anything in particular that we look for," says Fisher, who helped develop "The Muppet Show" and "Dinah" for CBS' owned stations in the mid-'70s. "We don't consider ourselves documentary producers, or sports producers, or children's. We do it all. What we look for is quality."

It's been that way, it seems, for two decades now, ever since Mert Koplin, now CEL's chairman, and Charles Grinker, today the vice chairman, joined forces to produce feature inserts for CBS Sports, and build CEL's extensive Videotape News Library, which includes footage dating back to 1893.

Later, they produced programs and series like "The Presidents: 80 Years on Camera," syndicated in 1980, and the "Better World" and "Great Ladies" series. Koplin and Grinker shared an Emmy for Moyer's "Creativity."

Fisher, an attorney, began his TV career in 1970 in CBS' law department, and was named director of program development and business affairs for the network's owned stations in 1973. He left CBS in 1977 to form Fish Communications, Inc., and joined Koplin and Grinker at CEL a year later.

"Marlo," at the time CEL's most widely distributed series, was created by Koplin and Grinker, along with Fisher, who was at CBS at the time. The program for children was syndicated in this country and in 15 other countries from 1976 through '79.

Opening lead: Queen of ♣.

There is often more than one line of play that declarer can adopt to make his contract. Winners at the table are those who can spot the lines and then find a way to test all or most of them.

North's raise to five no trump requests his partner to bid six no trump if he has a minimum two no trump opener, seven if he is maximum. South was minimum and settled in the small slam.

West led the top of his club sequence, and declarer could count only 11 tricks because of the wasted values in the major suits. A 12th trick could be established if either minor suit split 3-3; however, the chances for an even club split could be discounted because of the opening lead.

Declarer won the opening lead and tried three rounds of diamonds, ending in dummy. When West failed to follow to the last of these, it seemed that declarer was in trouble. Fortunately, he spotted that his club holding offered hope of an end play.

To strip West of his exit cards, declarer cashed his major suit winners. Then he led the nine of clubs from the table and, when East sluffed a spade on this trick, the contract could not be defeated. Declarer simply played a low club from hand and West won the trick with the ten of clubs.

Now declarer's groundwork paid off. West was down to nothing but clubs, and he was forced to lead away from his Q-6 of clubs into declarer's A-8 tenace, and so give declarer his fulfilling trick.

Tilt toward Taiwan

Taiwan's friends in the American Congress have long argued that the United States could maintain a two-China policy: Selling the nationalist government the arms it needs to defend the island even as Washington sustains a cooperative relationship with Peking as a hedge against Soviet expansion in Asia. State Department types tended to doubt the feasibility of this arrangement, favoring instead an accelerating tilt toward Peking.

The Reagan administration, after 18 months of indecision, seemed to opt for the latter view last summer. The State Department then announced agreement with Peking calling for a gradual reduction and eventual halt to arms sales to Taiwan. Now, the administration seems to be tilting back toward Taiwan. And the milder-than-expected protests from Peking suggest that Taiwan's allies in Congress were right all along.

The Pentagon has announced the sale of $530 million in military equipment to Taiwan, the largest annual sale since 1979 and the third largest ever to Taiwan. The equipment, all defensive in nature, includes anti-aircraft and anti-ship missiles, spare parts for Taiwan's U.S.-made fighter planes, and modernization kits for Taiwan's obsolete tanks.

The sale will be good news on Taiwan, where nationalist officials and citizens alike have feared they were being sacrificed in the interests of a cozier American relationship with Peking. Likewise, conservatives on Capitol Hill should be encouraged at this tangible sign that the administration is honoring both a moral commitment to the 18 million Chinese on Taiwan plus the explicit provisions of the 1980 Taiwan Relations Act.

Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger is expected to visit Peking later this year to discuss the possible sale of military technology to mainland China. Reports that Washington and Peking have already agreed to significant transfers of such technology may help explain China's comparatively muted protests over the latest arms sale to Taiwan.

In any case, it has always been obvious that U.S.-Sino rapprochement was a marriage of convenience occasioned by the Soviet threat and by China's need for Western technology. Accordingly, there never was much danger that Peking would allow this relationship to collapse over Washington's discreet dalliance with its longtime ally, Taiwan. The latest arms sale to the nationalist government suggests that the White House has now recognized as much.

The G invasion

First there was the G-string. Then the G-force. And now the G-spot. Why the letter G? Does G know something we don't? Perhaps the infiltration of Gs into our language is a conspiracy. Let's name a commission to study the G. Appoint G-men to staff it. Or would that be a conflict of interest?

Another View:

Hunger's on the rise

President Reagan is "perplexed" at reports that Americans are going hungry and has ordered the creation of a task force to find out what is going on and what, if anything, to do about it.

Why does the president need a task force to tell him what his own administration has been doing? Ever since coming to Washington, the Reagan administration has been chopping away at food programs. In his first budget, Mr. Reagan demanded and got reduced subsidies for school lunches, cutting the number of children participating by 3.2 million, with more than 2,700 schools dropping out of the program.

No need for a task force to learn that. The figures come from his own Agriculture Department.

The administration has taken a meat ax to the food stamp program, with the result that about 1 million people are no longer eligible for assistance, and many of those still eligible have to pay more. Moreover, in its current budget, it has called for yet another billion dollars in cuts, which, according to the Congressional Budget Office, would cause nearly 5 million more Americans to lose some benefits.

As infant mortality rises, the administration keeps the lid on the women-infant-children program that helps pregnant women and nursing mothers and their babies, while it calls for further cuts in school breakfasts, already cut by 20 percent.

As surplus cheese and milk and butter overflow government warehouses, the Department of Agriculture cuts back distribution to the poor because of adverse commercial effects (then changes its mind when it belatedly notices the adverse political effect). The administration is still opposed, however, to a bill, approved 389-18 by the House, to increase the distribution of those surpluses.

"I want the task force to bring me a no-holds-barred study," Mr. Reagan declared in his memo creating the group. "If the food assistance programs are being mismanaged, I want to know that. If certain aspects of our food assistant programs require more funding, I want to know that, too."

The task force can undoubtedly find mismanagement. It can find it in the U.S. Department of Agriculture, which is more interested in protecting commercial sales than in feeding the hungry.

There is no reason, however, that hungry people have to wait until the task force turns in its report, whenever that might be. "People don't eat in the long run," President Franklin D. Roosevelt's aide Harry Hopkins once snapped. "They eat every day." And right now — thanks to federal cutbacks combined with recession — hunger, which had virtually vanished in this nation until recently, is on the rise.

WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND

Jody Powell carries on 'war'

WASHINGTON — I have come to the sorrowful conclusion that Jimmy Carter doesn't like me.

Jack Anderson

Our relationship started off in the clouds but lost altitude rapidly. There was one bright moment in the White House when he said that I was a careful and conscientious reporter "who always checks his facts."

But sometime before his mournful departure from Washington, Carter had a change of heart. He dumped on me three times on national television; little brother Billy assaulted me with barnyard epithets; and their mama, Miss Lillian, wrote me a hate letter.

Now that Jimmy is back among the peanuts, his faithful surrogate, Jody Powell, is carrying on the attacks. He admitted recently on a radio talk show that he still often speaks for Carter. He has assailed me on a succession of TV talk shows. And lately, he has made me the subject of a couple of discomforting columns.

Jody has a gift for straightforward deviousness; he can make semi-facts and half-truths sound plausible and wrap political vilification in a press agent's smile.

He does not deny his role as a political guerrilla fighter. During one confessional, he admitted that he had spread scurrilous falsehoods against Sen. Charles Percy, R-Ill. And the other day, he pleaded nolo to a history of lies and deceit in behalf of the Carter cause.

For those of us hampered by the inconvenience of reporting facts, Jody's accusatory technique is difficult to cope with. He unlooses grand accusations, stretching the thin fabric of fact to fit his exaggerations and distortions.

He falsely and flagrantly accused me, for example, of publishing "disinformation," based on "forged intelligence documents" and leaks from "operatives inside the government." He returned this astounding indictment without offering any evidence whatsoever.

When I pointed this out, his ingenuous response was: "I must admit, he has me there." Proof? Jody has none. It was up to me, he argued, to disprove his allegations. Forged documents? He cannot cite a single one. Mysterious operatives? He has no idea who they are. Incredibly, he wants me to supply the forgeries and identify the falsifiers for him.

Then he wants the National News Council to step in. Fine. He made the accusations; he should prove them. That's an elementary principle of American justice. Let him present his evidence to any jury of editors. I await the verdict with bemusement.

A lesser impresario than Jody Powell, having unloosed accusations that he cannot possibly back up, would have retreated into silence. But Jody merely turned up the steam in his calliope.

In a subsequent grand accusation, he seized upon a single sentence buried deep in a November 1980 column of mine and announced that this, too, was "disinformation." It was taken, he declared triumphantly, from still another "forged document." And this time, he wouldn't have to depend on me to produce the forgery. "I'll make a copy of the forged document available...," Jody boasted.

The incriminating sentence he cited mentioned a CIA estimate that 60 percent of the hostages would die in Jimmy Carter's attempt to rescue them from Ayatollah Khomeini.

Jody shrewdly deleted the first five words of the sentence, because these words made it clear that the information didn't come from any document, forged or otherwise. The words Jody left out described the CIA estimate as informal, and the next sentence added that other CIA analysts disagreed with the estimate.

As it happened, eight Americans died in the Iranian desert before the rescue attempt got off the ground. No one really can be sure how many would have died if the mission had not been aborted.

But this much is now known: The hostages were held in two places in the center of Teheran — the U.S. Embassy and the foreign ministry. The commandos were supposed to be transported by vehicles through the teeming city and were then supposed to strike both places concurrently.

The guards were supposed to be overpowered and the hostages removed to a nearby stadium. Then U.S. helicopters would lift the surviving hostages and commandos to an airport near Teheran, which hopefully would have been seized, meanwhile, by other American troops. Yes, the CIA anticipated heavy casualties.

Jody Powell's attempt three years later to explain away reality is like trying to change the weather by tampering with the barometer.

WATCH ON MIDEAST: On Dec. 22, I warned that President Reagan's advisers were wrong in their assessment that Jordan's bantam King Hussein would support the Reagan peace plan. The following April 29, I warned that the president's advisers were wrong again in their expectation that Syria's President Hafez Assad would pull his troops out of Lebanon. Now these same advisers are predicting that Assad will still bow to the political pressure and financial strain of keeping 40,000 troops in Lebanon and that time is on the side of the peace process. Once more, I'm afraid they're wrong.

— The U.S. Embassy in Damascus has assessed the danger of war between Syria and Israel. In a cable stamped "Secret" and marked for limited distribution, the embassy suggests that Assad "probably believes that a conflict with Israel will inevitably erupt during 1983."

INSIDE REPORT:

Economy keeping Mondale wary

PORTLAND, Maine — The surprising self-confidence about their own political affairs displayed by Democratic governors here did not extend to front-running presidential candidate Walter F. Mondale or to next year's election, viewed monolithically with pessimism and trepidation.

Rowland Evans

Robert Novak

Gov. James B. Hunt Jr. of North Carolina, whose party leadership goes well beyond the South, exposed a taproot of that trepidation. "President Reagan has been a lot less threatening than he appeared to be when he took office," he told us. "He has throttled the most extreme of his advisers."

The more fundamental reason is an economic growth rate that ran close to 9 percent in the last quarter. Although the Democratic governors agreed to a man that recovery from the recession will fall short of what is needed, most worried that it could last long enough to tip Reagan into a second term. But the worry expressed by the Democrats at the 75th annual governors conference here had one other source, endowed with sorrow more than anger and only privately expressed: Fritz Mondale and his liberal activism.

Mondale is well-beloved by these party leaders whose role in the presidential nomination process was sharply elevated by the Hunt Commission. His stock as potential party standard-bearer, however, has fallen sharply under hammerblows of public opinion polls and rising prospects of the more moderate Sen. John Glenn.

Even the new breed of progressive Democratic governors elected last year say privately that his intense public courtship of special-interest constituencies makes him particularly vulnerable to a Ronald Reagan who will claim to be the champion of all citizens, not just politically-potent interest groups.

When Mondale attacked Reagan here Saturday for presiding over "indisputably the most anti-education administration in history" and said that he himself would be "the best president American education ever had," no governor joined in criticizing Reagan. With some pride, the governors perceive themselves, not the president, as the primary political agents for ending the crisis in education. They are making heroic efforts to do so. They privately rebuke Mondale's extravagant promises to teacher lobbies such as the National Education Association (NEA).

Likewise, Mondale was quietly criticized by several Democratic governors for implying to the National Women's Political Caucus in San Antonio last month that he would use his presidential powers to coerce states that refused to ratify the Equal Rights Amendment. "I sent word through his staff, 'Fritz, you should not have said that,'" we were told by one governor not unfriendly to Mondale but laments his wooing special-interest groups with special promises.

The decline in Mondale's stock, temporary or not, was directly linked here to the higher value now being universally placed on Ronald Reagan's. Gov. James Blanchard told us that "alienated voters" in recession-torn Michigan — including blue-collar autoworkers — "tend to like Reagan for a strange reason. Reagan has made government the scapegoat and that's being accepted."

That defines the task of big-government Democrats in turning out of office the president who has tried to shape a smaller government with lower taxes and less intrusion into citizen affairs. Every Democratic governor we talked to here agreed that major portions of the Reagan "revolution" were here to stay and that his appeal would grow along with expansion of the economy. That would make him progressively less vulnerable to any Democrat. But it would especially insulate him from a Democrat like Mondale whose coddling of special interests is viewed by the governors to mean new special-interest programs and laws. It would mean, in other words, more federal government when voters want less.

That explains why Democrats here agree with political polls that more and more are showing Glenn running ahead of Mondale when both are paired against Ronald Reagan.

"I don't think all these interest groups have much capacity to deliver votes," Gov. Bob Graham of Florida told us. We did not find a Democratic governor who disagreed.

CHARLEY REESE

Congress: Bad system, bad results

Washington, D.C., despite being the seat of both American government and American history, seems more like an imperial city rather than the democratic capital of a republic.

Charley Reese

The distinction between the high and mighty and the rest of the people is pretty sharply drawn. People seem to be unusually status conscious, jealous of prerogatives and privileges and very much susceptible to peer pressure.

It is not surprising to me that a politician who spends a lot of time in Washington will lose touch with the people back home, unless, of course, he's from a place like New York City or Los Angeles which are not all that different.

The privileged are really fussed over and are pretty much immune to having to get too close to the common folk who are excluded from areas, herded about by tour guides and kept away from the big shots by rent-a-cops and secretaries.

I can see, too, why ambitious people who end up in the Congress or the Senate can easily get addicted to a job that pays extremely well both in cash and perks. I can see, too, why they are so protective of each other despite party and philosophical differences. They all know what a good deal they have and they don't want to spoil it. It is a very clubby atmosphere. They have more in common with each other than they do with the people who elected them.

Our federal legislators are among the highest paid in the world, maybe the highest if you capitalized all of their benefits. They stay busy, but if you try to divide their activity between the people's business and their own political business, you would find out that they are not so over-worked as they would have you believe.

The Congress is officially in session from Jan. 3 to Oct. 28, but they take a lot of holidays — so many, in fact, that it got to be embarrassing so they now call their holidays "district work periods." These are scheduled from Jan. 8-24; Feb. 11-13; Feb. 18-21; Mar. 25-April 4; May 27-31; July 1-10; Aug. 6-Sept. 11; Sept. 16-18; and Oct. 12-16.

Senator Barry Goldwater has described the Senate as a "Tuesday through Thursday" outfit and that is normally true of the House as well. They almost never get their work done on time yet they all complain about being over-worked. As I said, they are mostly over-worked by their personal affairs rather than the public's.

One reason for their hectic schedules, of course, is that the federal government has assumed so many duties and tasks that our forefathers never intended it to assume. With the jillion and one things the Congress undertakes to stick its nose into, it is impossible for them to know actually what it is they are passing most of the time.

Recently I watched the House debate an $8.4 billion bill. Only about 50 out of the 435 were in the chambers and many of these were not paying any attention. When the vote comes, most of them will cast their votes but I would guess a good two-thirds will have never read the bill and not have the foggiest notion of what it actually contains. What they do is divide up the work and rely on party leaders to tell them how to vote on many issues which they don't have time to study.

General Lewis Walt, one of our greatest Marines, recalled that he approached a famous senator once about some military matter and was brushed off. "I don't know anything about defense matters," the senator said. "Take that up with so and so."

It's a bad system and it produces bad results.

Workers examine a large section of steel-reinforced concrete ceiling blocks, several escalators and stairways at the PATH commuter train center in Jersey City, N.J. Two people were killed and eight others injured when the structure fell at the end of Monday morning's rush hour.

Officials begin investigation of station's ceiling collapse

JERSEY CITY, N.J. (AP) — Officials pledged to look "at every angle" to learn why a commuter train station ceiling collapsed and killed two people, including whether the weight of workmen assigned to fix the sagging structure caused the accident.

Port Authority officials knew of problems with the 50-ton ceiling but thought added supports could be installed without closing the station off to commuter traffic, said Francis Gorman, general manager of PATH, the commuter railroad.

Three workers were preparing to reinforce the concrete-and-steel ceiling at the Journal Square Transportation Center's main concourse when it gave way shortly after morning rush hour Monday.

"I heard a loud cracking sound and then this ceiling started falling, one piece after another," said Lucille Crook, a Jersey City resident who was at a concourse shop when the ceiling fell. "I just ran out...and looked back and I saw people screaming and yelling."

Two people were killed, one pinned in the rubble and the second from a heart attack, and eight others were injured.

Gorman said a worker from the Port Authority of New York and New Jersey apparently climbed into the space between the ceiling and the floor above minutes before the collapse.

"We do not know if the weight of the workmen brought the ceiling down," said Gorman. "That is part of the investigation."

An April inspection of the ceiling showed a "sag" but "no danger of imminent failure," Gorman said.

"We're looking at everything, every possible angle," said John Hughes, a spokesman for the Port Authority, which runs the center. "We'll go from the architect's drawings to the engineer's drawings to the engineering of the ceiling."

The structure, described as a "square doughnut" — 200 feet long and 1½ inches thick — was suspended by wires, and installed at the 10-year-old, $85-million center primarily for aesthetic purposes.

The 10,600-square-foot section peeled away from its supports just after rush-hour traffic ebbed on the Port Authority Trans-Hudson rail line between Newark to New York.

Migrant farmworkers end 560-mile trek

CAMDEN, N.J. (AP) — Migrant farmworkers who urged a boycott of Campbell Soup Co. in a fight for better working conditions and "a decent living wage" ended a 560-mile trek to the firm's headquarters with a rally but no assurance that conditions will improve.

The group on Monday presented flowers and three handwritten petitions to Frank Moore, Campbell's manager of community relations, but Moore made no comment after the gesture. The workers were to head back to Ohio today after the month-long march.

"At the end of it all, I had a great sadness," said the Rev. Michael J. Doyle, a Roman Catholic priest who gave the 100 marchers two nights' lodging at his Holy Name Parish School. He said they "were asking for no more than a decent living wage."

The workers said they are trying to convince the firm to take part in negotiations between the migrant workers and the independent farmers who sell their tomato crops to Campbell.

But Campbell officials said it would be illegal and unethical to interfere in labor relations on the farms.

Moore said Campbell president R. Gordon McGovern would receive the petitions on his return from a foreign business trip.

The giant soup company buys 10 percent of its tomatoes for soup and V-8 juice from 90 farms in northwestern Ohio, where the two-month picking season is about to begin.

The Ohio-based Farm Labor Organizing Committee has tried to promote a Campbell boycott for four years, but the action has had "no effect whatsoever" on the company, said James H. Moran, Campbell's manager of public relations.

The workers maintain Campbell could negotiate with farmers to raise their wages and improve working conditions, including reducing their exposure to pesticides.

Moran said Campbell already pays $83 per ton for Ohio tomatoes, $20 more than the $63-dollar rate the company pays for California tomatoes, which are grown on more highly mechanized farms.

White House against taxing fringe benefits

NEW YORK (AP) — The White House has told the Treasury Department not to support a bill that would tax some employee fringe benefits, because the people who would affected are the Reagan administration's constituents, The New York Times reported today.

The Times quoted a top treasury official as saying that taxing benefits such as free airline tickets and free use of company cars may be good tax policy but it is bad pre-election-year politics.

"We're going to shuffle and waffle on this one," the treasury official, whom the Times did not identify, said of the decision not to support the bill that for the first time would tax fringe benefits as income. The bill is in the House of Representatives Ways and Means Committee.

"The people who get these fringe benefits are our constituents, the middle class," the Times quoted the official to explain the Reagan administration's reasoning.

The bill under consideration would keep untaxed fringe benefits that do not impose an additional cost on the employer; benefits that allow an employee to purchase his company's product for up to 20 percent discount, those that are used for business purposes 85 percent of the time or more, and things that have minimal cost such as office parties, holiday gifts and having a secretary type a personal letter.

The White House decision not to try to tax the fringe benefits was made last week, the Times reported.

War games become real for California residents

BISHOP, Calif. (AP) — Residents fumed while Army investigators tried to figure out how a dozen civilian campers got tear-gassed during war games intended to pit the Green Berets against mock Soviet forces.

"I don't know that it was my people involved," said Maj. Robert South, commander of the manuevers Saturday.

"It's pretty farfetched to imagine someone would dress up like the Army in fatigues and then get some M-16s to carry just to fire tear gas and make it look like the Army did it," said Mike Baker of Bishop who was staying at Parcher's Rainbow Village near Coyote Ridge and was caught by the gas.

Others who witnessed it were ready to declare war.

"This is the U.S. Army fighting for our lives, and yet they're throwing tear gas at us!" said Jennifer Shaw, whose family owns a cafe at the village.

The maneuvers, dubbed Operation Volcanic Ash, were based on a fictitious Soviet takeover of the town of Bishop, about 225 miles north of Los Angeles in the Owens Valley east of the Sierra Nevada.

Ms. Shaw, 19, said a man walked into her family's cafe and summoned two scruffily dressed comrades outside, saying, "It's now or never."

Myron Tucker, a maintenance man, said he went outside "to see if I could stop the shooting" and saw men in green fatigues and camouflage-painted faces, carrying rifles.

Suddenly, tear gas engulfed Tucker and about a dozen other people from 10 lakeside cabins, including a woman and her asthmatic 8-year-old son who had to be treated with oxygen, he said.

Northern Irish rioters attack police

BELFAST, Northern Ireland (AP) — Rioters set fires and attacked police with Molotov cocktails, rocks and bottles in Northern Ireland today on the 12th anniversary of Britain's former internment-without-trial policy, police said.

Police said at least 50 people were arrested — 39 of them in Belfast — in connection with widespread rioting late Monday and early today.

A police spokesman said firebombers set fire to two stores and a furniture warehouse in central Londonderry, the province's second-largest city, causing damage estimated in the hundreds of thousands of dollars.

Roman Catholic youths pelted police guarding firefighters with 40 Molotov cocktails and a barrage of rocks and bottles, the spokesman said. He said two policemen were injured when a door was dropped on them from an apartment house.

Elsewhere in Londonderry, a bomb exploded near an occupied police vehicle, setting it on fire but causing no injuries.

Bonfires raged in Catholic neighborhoods to recall bitter memories of the British policy — introduced on Aug. 9, 1971 — of interning suspected guerrillas without trial. The policy was abandoned in 1976, but militants among Northern Ireland's half-million Catholic minority engage in sporadic violence on the date each year.

In the Catholic Bogside quarter of Londonderry, youths set up barricades across streets and hurled gasoline bombs at police officers.

At Coalisland, 30 miles west of Belfast, a gang of 25 masked men hurled gasoline bombs at a police station. The building was reported undamaged but a bus was set on fire.

In Catholic West Belfast, masked youths hijacked a bus and set it on fire, the press officer said.

Irish informers face death sentences

BELFAST, Northern Ireland (AP) — Christopher Black sent 22 of his former IRA comrades to prison for sentences ranging from three years to life rather than go back behind bars himself.

He is one of 31 guerrillas — 20 Roman Catholics and 11 Protestants — who have become police informers and fingered nearly 300 suspects in the past 18 months. Their betrayals have punched big holes in the mainly Roman Catholic Irish Republican Army's Provisional wing, the Marxist Irish National Liberation Army and the Protestant Ulster Volunteer Force.

Black faces a different kind of sentence now — a lifetime of looking over his shoulder for IRA assassins who have vowed to kill him.

In the last 15 months, the IRA and INLA have "executed" eight alleged defectors. Four other informers have retracted their evidence, two following threats to their families, but 13 are either testifying or waiting under police guard in hideouts in England to talk in court.

Guerrilla violence has fallen off in the last 18 months while the factions regroup to weed out suspected informers.

Informed sources said every IRA member picked up by police for questioning is interrogated by guerrillas after his release to determine if he let anything slip.

"Anyone who so much as comments on the weather to interrogators faces disciplinary action," one source said.

The guerrilla groups have developed a new tactic to try to silence the collaborators — kidnapping their relatives.

The INLA last week snatched the stepfather and 13-year-old sister of informer Harry Kirkpatrick, the group's one-time operations director. They seized his wife Elizabeth, 24, in May.

The organization warned that if he testified against 18 accused guerrillas, "it will result in the immediate execution of all these captives." But police sources said Kirkpatrick, 25, has not retracted his testimony.

"We are engaged in a war of liberation against the Crown forces," said the INLA. "Those who inform betray this struggle and those who fight for freedom.

U.S. reserves judgment toward new Guatemalan government

WASHINGTON (AP) — The United States is taking a wait-and-see attitude toward Guatemala's new government, with Vice President George Bush saying he hopes the coup will lead to economic and democratic reforms.

At a news conference in Albuquerque, N.M., on Monday, Bush said the coup will not affect U.S. policies in Central America.

"Things are in a state of change right now" in Guatemala, Bush said. "But I don't think that it will have any effect on our policies down there."

Bush said it was too early to assess the new Guatemalan government.

"We understand they are talking about elections and that, of course, is good. We would hope for economic and democratic reforms," he said.

Gen. Oscar Humberto Mejia Victores on Monday seized the presidency of Guatemala from Efrain Rios Montt in a military coup.

The State Department refrained from any official comment on the nature of the relations the United States may have with the new regime. But it issued a statement saying the usual practice for a new government is to pledge respect for its international commitments and to show a desire for friendly relations with the United States.

The department indicated that there would be no interruption in normal diplomatic relations between the two countries.

"We understand that Gen. Mejia has pledged to continue the process of democratization and pluralism," the statement said. "We would welcome any concrete step to set up an orderly process for a return to democratic rule."

U.S. troops arrive in Honduras to inspect sites for war games

TEGUCIGALPA, Honduras (AP) — Several hundred U.S. troops arrive in Honduras this week to inspect jungle bivouac sites for war games that will involve up to 11,000 soldiers from both countries, an American military spokesman says.

The spokesman, who asked not to be identified, said Monday that the U.S. advance troops also will attend to other groundwork to prepare for the exercises, described by the U.S. Embassy as "the most comprehensive carried out until now by the United States in Central America."

Small groups totaling less than 100 servicemen started to arrive by plane over the weekend carrying some of the materials needed for three camps to serve as bases for the maneuvers, the spokesman said. Hundreds more will arrive by the weekend, he said.

In Washington, the Pentagon announced Friday that "Big Pine II," as the exercises are called, officially had begun. Up to 5,000 U.S. troopers and 6,000 Honduran soldiers are to participate in the maneuvers that will last into January or February.

Actual ground maneuvers by U.S. forces are not due to begin until September, with a Marine amphibious landing scheduled for mid-November.

Cubs edge Gators, 2-1;

Brooks, Banks provide heroics

By TED BATTLES
Sports Editor

The way he has been going lately, Trey Brooks probably was the last guy you wanted to see at the plate for your team in a 1-0 game and the tying run on second and one out in the last of the ninth.

All he did was drive a two-ball pitch into the night to give the slumping Midland Cubs a 2-1 win over the Beaumont Golden Gators and Darryl Banks the win in a taut pitching duel at Cubs Stadium.

In the process, Midland handed Ray Hayward, whom Midland Manager Tom Harmon described before the game as "the best young lefthander I've seen in years", his first Texas League loss in three decisions.

Hayward, a first round June draft pick out of the University of Oklahoma, had blanked Midland on eight hits, whiffing 10, through eight innings and the way he was going, Pat Casey's solo homer in the seventh looked like money in the bank, but not Darryl's bank.

HAYWARD WALKED Tom Lombarski to open the ninth and Mike Anicich sacrificed the runner to second. Up came the struggling Brooks, who had grounded out to short, popped to short and looked at a third strike as his string of frustration stretched to four hits in the last 41 trips.

"He struck me out the time before with a fastball over the inside corner," said Brooks, "and he tried to sneak one by me again this time."

Trey responded with his ninth homer of the season.

Although Trey wasn't the guy you'd most like to see at the plate in this situation, it hasn't always been thus. Before suffering a knee injury in June, he was the guy you'd most like to see at the plate in the clutch.

"Tonight was the first time I've been able to play without the knee brace," he explained. "My swing still doesn't feel natural, but not having a brace makes a difference."

IF IT WAS a big night for Brooks, it was also a big one for Banks, who was 6-2 early in the season, but took a 10-9 record into Tuesday's game. He whiffed seven and walked only two in pitching a six-hitter for his 11th win.

However, it didn't start out like a vintage performance. He walked Steve Garcia to open the game and then plucked the runner off first before surrendering a single to Jeff Ronk. John Kruk then doubled to left, but Bill Hatcher's throw to catcher Don Hyman nailed Ronk trying to score from second.

"He had his good fast ball tonight for the first time in a couple of starts and he was getting his slider and change over the plate for strikes," said Hyman of Banks. "Casey's homer came on a slider that stayed up. That was the only mistake he made all night."

"A gutty job," appraised Harmon, "he pitched out of jams in the first and eighth. In fact, that was the best pitched game on both sides I've seen in this league this year."

The jam in the eighth came when Steve Johnson led off with a single, Garcia reached on an error, but then Banks got Ronk on a pop, picked off Garcia and got Kruk on a grounder to second.

Listening to the Cubs praise southpaw Hayward, the game probably ranks with any pitching classic in Cubs Stadium annals...right along with that game in 1973. The El Paso lefthander had twisted Midland batters in knots all season, but in a late-season game at Cubs Stadium, the Cubs finally beat him, 1-0, in 10 innings. That was back when Frank Tanana could still bring it. Hey, any time you can go 16-6 with a 2.71 ERA out of El Paso....

Midland had a few threats off Hayward before Brooks' game-winner. Jeff Rutledge tripled with two out in the third. In the fourth, Lombarski's bunt single, a walk to Anicich set the table and Carlos Lezcano delivered a single to left, but James Steels' on-the-money throw cut down Lombarski at the plate.

CUB PRINTS—Jim Wright, 5-3, missed his last turn with the shoulder trouble that plagued him last season, but is scheduled to go in tonight's 7:30 p.m. game at Cubs Stadium...Lombarski made the defensive play of the night with a diving stop across the line on Casey's "two-bagger" and threw out Pat at first in the ninth...Midland inched ahead of the Gators 9-8 on the season's series...Banks' last win came over Jackson July 23, 6-4...Hyman says not only does Hayward have all the pitches and the speeds, "but his fast ball sometimes tails in on you and other times it tails away."...

Hank new commissioner?

Aaron favors interleague play

By The Associated Press

ATLANTA (AP) — Hank Aaron, the only announced candidate to replace Bowie Kuhn as commissioner of major league baseball, says he has some ideas that will help the game.

"A major one is interleague play," Aaron said Monday. "We are denying fans of both leagues the opportunity to see outstanding players and teams.

"Except in cities with teams from both leagues, I think you would be amazed how little, say Atlanta fans, know about American League teams and players.

"The designated hitter rule wouldn't be a problem," he added. "The solution is uniformity, either install it in the National or do away with it in the American."

Aaron, owner of baseball's career home run record, said he also would like to see the National League add two teams "so that it would have 14 members just as the American has.

"People talk about what a surprise it was that the American finally won an All-Star game this year. It was no surprise to me," he said in an interview with The Atlanta Journal. "Remember that the American, with two more teams, has 50 more players from which to choose its squad."

Aaron, currently the Atlanta Braves' director of player development, said he is not anti-player, but he supports placing a salary cap on teams' payrolls.

"We have to be fair to the Calvin Griffiths, too," he said, referring to the Minnesota owner who has been unable to compete for high-salaried free agents because his sole source of income is his baseball team.

"With Calvin unable to pay the big bucks and keep his star players, the fans in the Minneapolis area can't have a good opinion of baseball."

Aaron said he hopes he will get "a fair opportunity" to present his credentials for the commissioner's job. He said he has talked with Milwaukee owner Bud Selig, head of the search committee charged with finding a replacement for Kuhn, who resigned last week.

"I haven't heard from anyone yet, but Bud promised me a chance to talk to the committee," said Aaron. "Even if I don't get the job, I want to be heard. Now I just hope Bud is a fair man and lives up to his word."

But Aaron noted that he has not heard his name mentioned in speculation about who would replace Kuhn.

"But I don't put any meaning into that," Aaron said. "I guess it's because I'm the only one who has applied (publicly) for the job."

He added that he was not surprised when Kuhn resigned last week before the owners voted on whether to keep him in the job.

"I think Bowie saw the handwriting on the wall," Aaron said. "I was surprised he couldn't get the necessary vote, and I had thought he would wait until after the vote, until he saw how things were lined up. But I guess he was convinced he didn't have enough support."

Yankees sweep Toronto twinbill; Winfield kills Blue Jays in N.Y.

By The Associated Press

Ken Griffey walloped a grand slam home run in the first inning and Don Baylor followed with a solo shot, powering the New York Yankees to an 11-3 victory and a sweep of Monday's twi-night doubleheader with the faltering Toronto Blue Jays.

Oscar Gamble drove in three runs, two with his seventh homer, and Dave Winfield and Butch Wynegar each had two RBI as the Yankees won the opener 8-3 behind Ron Guidry's eight-hitter.

Bob Shirley, 4-6, who had pitched only five innings in three appearances since July 1, hurled six strong innings in the nightcap as the Blue Jays toppled to their sixth loss in a row. Until this streak, they were the only team in the majors which hadn't lost more than three games in a row.

It was the first meeting between the Yankees and Blue Jays since the game in Toronto last Thursday night in which a throw by Winfield between innings struck and killed a seagull.

There were no incidents Monday night and between games Paul Godfrey, chairman of Toronto Metro, apologized to the Yankee outfielder for his arrest following that game on a charge of cruelty to animals. The charge was dropped.

Elsewhere in the League, Tom Paciorek belted a three-run homer to lead cxicago to a 5-4 victory over the Detroit in the first game of a doubleheader. Larry Herndon's three-run homer backed the five-hit pitching of Jack Morris as the Tigers beat the Sox 7-2 in the second game.

Broderick Perkins and George Vukovich drove in two runs apiece as Cleveland scored six runs in the third inning and defeated Baltimore 9-4.

Pete O'Brien's single broke a 7-7 tie in a five-run ninth in which Boston Manager Ralph Houk and pitcher Bob Stanley were ejected as Texas rallied for a 12-7 victory over the Red Sox.

U.L. Washington singled home Willie Wilson with the go-ahead run in the seventh inning to lead Kansas City to a come-from-behind 5-4 victory over Milwaukee in the opener of a doubleheader.

Roy Howell collected four hits to pace a 16-hit attack that carried the Brewers to an 8-5 victory in the nightcap.

In the National League, Darryl Strawberry tripled with one out in the 10th inning and came home as reliever Jeff Reardon threw wildly on a pickoff attempt to first, enabling the New York Mets to defeat Montreal 6-5.

Mike Schmidt hit two home runs and drove in five as the Philadelphia Phillies beat the Pittsburgh Pirates 14-5, snapping left-hander John Candelaria's eight-game winning streak.

In late AL action on the West Coast, third baseman Gary Gaetti, who initiated a triple play in the fourth inning, and Tom Brunansky led off the the fifth inning with homers to spark the Minnesota Twins to a 4-2 win over the California Angels.

Dwayne Murphy and Garry Hancock homered in the fourth inning off Seattle's Jim Beattie to give the Oakland A's a 2-1 victory over the Mariners.

UH must cut errors, QB Wilson the key

HOUSTON (AP) — Bill Yeoman recognizes Lionel Wilson as a gifted quarterback but adds his senior field general must stop making gifts of the football.

The Cougars suffered through a disappointing 5-5-1 season in 1982, hampered by 34 turnovers — 17 fumbles and 17 interceptions.

Wilson threw 13 interceptions last season and 11 the year before.

That's got to change, Yeoman said.

"At the quarterback spot, and this doesn't come as a shock, we're going to have to get more careful play," Yeoman said. "We can't have the fumbles and the interceptions that we've had the last couple of years and still expect to play the way we should."

Wilson has established 12 UH records and has accounted for 3,766 total yards in the last two seasons, the second highest total in UH history. But fumbles and interceptions have checkered his performance.

"Lionel Wilson is a very gifted athlete but he has to be more careful with the football to play," Yeoman said.

The Cougars face a major rebuilding problem with only one returning starter in the offensive line, guard Scott Marshall, who has started every UH game for the past two years.

Filling the gaps will be Ray Rogers, a junior from Orange, at left tackle; highly recruited Todd Schoppe, a sophomore from LaPorte, at center; Duane Losack a senior from East Bernard, at right tackle and Earl Jones, a 300-pound senior from Houston, at right guard.

Now that Audrey McMillian has moved to free safety, Wilson is the lone returning letterman at quarterback. Wilson's early fall practice will be critical because he missed spring drills because of arthroscopic knee surgery.

"Lionel definitely could have used the work in the spring," Yeoman said.

"He really needed to work on his timing with the receivers."

The Cougars will operate more out of the I formation this season with senior Dwayne Love a solid starter at fullback and Donald Jordan, returning from a knee operation, the likely tailback.

Houston returns a strong receiving corps including split end Larry Shepherd, flanker David Roberson and tight end Carl Hilton.

Defensively, Houston must replace all four members of the defensive secondary. Yeoman has installed McMillian at free safety and Greg Purcell at strong safety. The cornerbacks will be Dewayne Bowden and Orsby Crenshaw.

The Cougars open the season Sept. 1 at Rice Stadium against the Owls and close out Nov. 26 against Southern Methodist in the Mirage Bowl in Tokyo.

Ashford injury dims U.S. glory

HELSINKI, Finland (AP) — Evelyn Ashford, the world record holder in the women's 100-meter dash, crumpled to the track, grabbing her right hamstring and writhing in pain.

She was the latest victim in a series of injuries that have robbed the inaugural World Track and Field Championships of some of their expected heroes and heroines.

With only two days of competition completed in the meet that ends Sunday, the growing injury list already contains some impressive names.

Ashford, who had reached a peak in her brilliant career last month by taking the world record (10.79 seconds) from her heated rival, Marlies Gohr of East Germany, broke down Monday in the 100-meter final.

"I'm very disappointed, but I will be back next year," Ashford promised after learning that she had suffered a torn hamstring muscle and her recovery period would be 8-10 weeks.

"I have a few scores to settle," she added.

One of the scores will be against Gohr. The former world record holder, capitalizing on Ashford's frightening fall, won the 100 in 10.97, leading a 1-2 East German sweep.

She was not very sympathetic after capturing the gold medal.

"That is her problem, not mine, that she couldn't make it," Gohr said about Ashford's injury.

"I know how to beat Ashford now," she added. "I let Ashford win yesterday (in Sunday's second-round heats)."

The injury to Ashford overshadowed a 1-2-3 American sweep in the men's 100, led by Carl Lewis, and a surprising victory by Zdzislaw Hoffman of Poland in the triple jump.

Lewis, after a slow start, zipped past Calvin Smith near the 60-meter mark and went on to win in 10.07 seconds.

Smith, the world record holder, was second in 10.21 and Emmit King was third in 10.24, just ahead of 1980 Olympic champion Allan Wells of Scotland (10.27).

The little-known Hoffman equalled the eighth best jump in history, soaring 17.42 meters (57 feet, 2 inches). Willie Banks of the United States and Ajayi Agbebaku of Nigeria tied for second at 17.18 (56-4½), but the popular American was awarded the silver medal on the basis of a better second jump.

Marita Koch of East Germany and Diane Williams of the United States won the day's other medals, placing second and third respectively, in the women's 100 in 11.02 and 11.06.

Afterward, Williams put the meet in perspective.

"This World Championship has been a very sad one," she said, reflecting on the injuries.

Ashford's breakdown followed by one day injuries to Cuba's Alberto Juantorena and Italy's Sara Simeoni, both Olympic gold medalists and former world record holders.

Juantorena, winner of the 400 and 800 meters in the 1976 Summer Games, underwent surgery Monday after suffering torn ligaments and a broken bone in his right foot as he fell while crossing the finish line in an 800 heat.

Simeoni, the 1980 Olympic champion in the women's high jump, suffered a pulled leg muscle during Monday's qualifying and had to be carried off on a stretcher.

Britain's Keith Connor, the heavy favorite for the triple jump gold medal, also failed to get through the qualifying because of a heel injury.

Also Monday, Udo Beyer of East Germany, the world record holder in the men's shot put, wound up only sixth in the final after competing with a thigh bruise, and Julie Brown of the United States withdrew from the women's marathon about five miles from the finish Sunday after severely injuring her right Achilles' tendon. At the time, Brown was just behind the eventual winner, Grete Waitz of Norway.

U.S. record holder Evelyn Ashford is helped from Helsinki's Olympic Stadium after suffering a leg injury Monday.

In addition, Britain's Sebastian Coe, the 1980 Olympic 1,500-meter champion and world record holder in the 800 and 1,000 meters, is out of the World Championships with a glandular ailment; Pam Spencer, former American record holder in the women's high jump, withdrew after suffering a torn Achilles' tendon, and American sprinter Chandra Cheeseborough pulled out of the women's 100 and 200 because of a groin injury.

Another ailing star is Alberto Salazar of the United States. Salazar, the fastest marathoner in history, has been slowed by a severe case of bronchitis and barely survived the heats of the 10,000 meters, earning the last place in the final.

Hu Na at the Virginia Slims.

Hu Na makes U.S. debut

MANHATTAN BEACH, Calif. (AP) — Hu Na, whose defection last year created tension between China and the United States, hopes someday to be known more for her tennis.

"In the beginning, everyone was paying more attention to my circumstances, but now I hope they start paying attention to my tennis," Hu, formerly China's top-ranked woman player, said Monday night after her American pro debut.

She lost 6-4, 6-3 to Barbara Hallquist in the $150,000 Virginia Slims of Los Angeles as the tournament's opening matches also included Kate Latham's 3-6, 7-6, 6-3 upset of fourth-seeded Sylvia Hanika of West Germany.

Hu, 20, appeared to play tentatively against Hallquist, the world's 75th-ranked woman player.

"This is my first match as a professional and my opponent was very tough," Hu, speaking through an interpreter, said after the night match played before a sparse crowd of some 1,700 at Manhattan Country Club.

"I was nervous before the start; I've got to play more tournaments to overcome that."

Hu defected from her national team that was visiting the United States for the Federation Cup matches in Santa Clara, Calif., last July. After she was granted asylum, China's government protested strongly and cut back some cultural exchanges with the United States.

Hallquist, a former women's collegiate champion at Southern Cal, knew Hu before she defected.

"I met her when the Chinese Federation cup team was practicing in Claremont (Calif.) last year," Hallquist said. "She was very outgoing in comparison to the other Chinese girls who were there.

"She is a good athlete. It was not an easy match."

Following their match, Latham battled back from match point for the victory over Hanika, who is ranked sixth internationally. Latham, rated 108th in the world, fell behind 6-3 in the second-set tiebreaker but then scored five consecutive points to win it. In the third set, she took command when she broke Hanika's service in the sixth game for a 4-2 lead.

Martina Navratilova is the tournament's top seed and Chris Evert Lloyd is seeded second. Both were scheduled to begin play today.

Twins make triple play

ANAHEIM, Calif. (AP) — The Minnesota Twins pulled off a triple play in their game with the California Angels Monday night.

Bobby Grich and Reggie Jackson led off the California fourth with walks and took off on a hit-and-run play as Ron Jackson smashed a liner into third baseman Gary Gaetti's waiting glove.

With Grich and Jackson more than 60 feet off their respective bases, Gaetti's throw to second baseman John Castino and his relay to first baseman Kent Hrbek easily completed the triple play.

It was Minnesota's fifth triple play in their history.

Oakland A's looking at Blue

OAKLAND, Calif. (AP) — The Oakland A's, whose pitching staff has been plagued by injuries all season, are considering signing recently-released pitcher Vida Blue, who had his greatest years in baseball with the A's.

"We're talking about it," Manager Steve Boros said after the team came back from a road trip to open a homestand Monday night. "We definitely need another pitcher, maybe two."

But Boros said the club will also consider pitchers from its minor league system if help is needed.

Mike Norris and Bill Krueger are the latest Oakland pitchers to experience arm problems. Boros and the team's front office are waiting status reports on the pitchers, both scheduled to be examined by doctors this week.

Blue was released last week by the Kansas City Royals. The left-hander began his career with the A's, and in 1971 won the American League Cy Young and Most Valuable Player awards. He still lives in Oakland.

Brenham leads LL tourney

WACO, Texas (AP) — Jon Peters pitched a no-hitter and slugged a three-run home run to lead Brenham to a 22-0 victory over Childress in the first round of the Texas State Little League baseball tournament Monday night.

Peters struck out 17 and allowed only one base runner, Tim Melton, who was hit by a pitch with one out in the fifth inning. Jimmy Kasprowicz contributed three hits.

Brenham now faces Texas City, which defeated Laredo American 6-0 Monday night. In other first round games Monday, Victoria Zone 1 edged Weatherford 6-5 and Houston Sagemont Beverly Hills defeated Corpus Christi Padre 4-1.

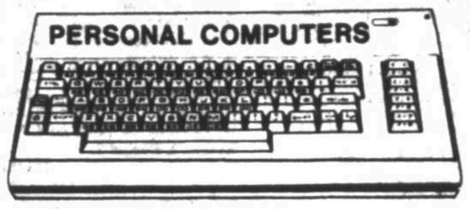
Computer companies: Who's hot now?

By The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service



It is a tale that has already entered the lore of the computer business: A tiny company confounds the experts by manufacturing a compact, slightly ungainly personal computer that is offered at a price that makes it a best buy.

Last year it was the Osborne story. This year it is the Kaypro story.

Kaypro Corp., a tiny Solana Beach, Calif., company, has come out of nowhere to challenge Osborne Computer Corp., based in Hayward, Calif., for dominance in the transportable personal-computer market that Osborne created.

Using Osborne's strategy, the family-owned company has suddenly become profitable after at least five years of losses, and this month plans to go public. Osborne, meanwhile, has shelved plans for its first stock offering after the bungled introduction of a new model and reorganization of top management. It has also recently announced the closure of its New Jersey manufacturing facility and the layoff of 203 workers at its California manufacturing plant.

In short, it is a horse race. Each company holds a 40 percent share of the $400 million market for transportable computers worth between $1,000 and $3,000, according to InfoCorp, a Cupertino, Calif.-based market-research company. Some analysts believe Kaypro's market-share gains have come at Osborne's expense.

Each company faces a challenging future as well. Transportable personal computers are about the size of a portable sewing machine and have carrying handles. Some analysts believe that computers of that design will be squeezed out of the market within a few years by competition from notebook-sized machines and more powerful desk-top models.

Kaypro plunged in during June 1982, with the Kaypro II. Its suggested retail price was $1,795 until last April, when it dropped to $1,595. The computer weighs 26 pounds, has a 9-inch diagonal screen (compared to 5 inches for the Osborne 1) and a bundle of software.

Shut out of most retail chains that carried Osborne, Kaypro signed up other dealers, most of them with smaller sales volume.

As with the no-frills Osborne 1, the computer's appearance may not be foremost in customers' minds, says Los Angeles computer writer Peter A. McWilliams, author of "The Personal Computer Book." "It's a Volkswagen of a personal computer," he said. If some find its metal-box case homely, he adds, "it's got personality."

To make the game interesting, Osborne last month dropped the price of the Osborne 1 to $1,295 — making it the lowest-price transportable on the market. Kaypro plans to drop the price of the Kaypro II to $1,395.

Kaypro sold 41,500 machines between June 1982, and June 1983, 15,500 of them in the last three months of that period, the company's preliminary stock prospectus shows. InfoCorp forecasts that Kaypro will ship 80,000 units this year, compared to expected Osborne shipments of 75,000.

Prime rate shock waves hit

Prime Rate
Up to 11 percent

By The Associated Press

Analysts predicted the cost of borrowing could go even higher after banks raised the prime interest rate for the first time in 18 months, sending a shudder through Wall Street and the dollar soaring against other currencies.

The nation's banks announced Monday they have increased the prime rate, the short-term interest rates for preferred corporate customers, to 11 percent from 10.5 percent.

Although the boost had been widely anticipated, it still forced bond prices down and the dollar up to record heights on foreign exchange markets in Europe before retreating in U.S. trading.

The jump in the prime came the same day that industry publications reported healthy gains in car and home sales, but economists have expressed concern that rising interest rates could put a squeeze on the recovery.

Thomas Thomson, an economist at Crocker National Bank in San Francisco, suggested the prime rate may rise higher to keep pace with increases in other interest rates.

But White House spokesman Larry Speakes said, "We would be hopeful that this does not indicate a trend, that interest rates once again will begin to go down. We have forecast that they will by the end of the year and there's no change from that forecast."

"I like the way (the banks) wait until Congress goes off to the beaches" before announcing the higher rate, said George Salem, bank specialist at A.G. Becker Paribas Inc.

Salem said he expected incremental increases in the prime, saying the banks kept Monday's boost to half a percentage point because "the shock value of a larger change would be too great"

The higher cost of credit is due to the Federal Reserve's tightened monetary control, a possible increase in the public's inflationary expectations and an emerging clash between public and private demand for credit in the nation's expanding economy.

The industrywide increase in the prime rate was the first rise since February 1982, when it was at 17 percent. It had dropped to 10.5 percent by February of this year, the lowest level since 1978.

The prime is a benchmark used by commercial banks to calculate interest charges on short-term loans to corporations. Some companies pay more than the prime rate, and others pay less, depending on such things as their credit standing.

Consumer loans, which tend to average four years, are not directly affected by changes in the prime. However, the prime rate's level is an indicator of an overall interest rate climate.

The rise in the prime came the same day the government announced an increase in the average rate of long-term, fixed-rate home mortgages.

Treasury bill yields rise again

Treasury Bills
Discount rate 9.57 percent Monday

WASHINGTON (AP) — Yields on short-term Treasury bills rose for the second straight week as the discount rates for three and six-month securities neared their highest levels in almost a year, officials say.

About $6.2 billion in new three-month T-bills were sold at an average discount rate of 9.57 percent Monday, up from 9.36 percent last week. Another $6.2 billion in new six-month bills were sold at an average rate of 9.7 percent, up from 9.56 percent.

The discount rate for three-month bills has increased in 10 of the last 14 weeks and yields are at their highest level since the 10.025 percent of last Aug. 9. Rates for six-month bills, also rising in 10 of the past 14 weeks, are at their highest level since the 9.704 percent of last Sept. 13.

Monday's new discount rates understate the actual return to investors — 9.97 percent for three-month bills and 10.37 percent for six-month bills.

Beginning today, in private accounts linked to T-bill rates:

—Savings and loan associations and commercial banks may pay as much as 9.95 percent interest on six-month money market certificates compared with the 9.81 percent of the past week.

Stock market loses

NEW YORK (AP) — Stock prices were mostly lower in morning trading today as the market struggled to rally from its steep slide of the previous session.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials, having tumbled 20.23 points Monday to a four-month low, recovered 2.71 points to 1,165.77 after the first two hours of trading. It had been up more than four points shortly after the opening bell.

The Dow Jones utility average rose a fraction, but its transportation measure edged lower.

Overall, declines held a 7-5 lead over advances on the New York Stock Exchange, yet the NYSE's composite index inched up 0.03 to 92.22.

Big Board volume totaled 35.48 million shares at noon EDT, compared with 29.80 million at that hour Monday.

Stocks nosedived Monday after major U.S. banks raised their prime lending rates to 11 percent from 10.5 percent — the first industrywide increase in 18 months.

Among the rebounding blue chips were American Telephone & Telegraph 1 to 64⅝, General Motors 1 to 67, General Electric ⅛ to 47⅜ and American Express ⅞ to 63¾.

At the American Stock Exchange, the market value index slipped 0.65 to 226.89.

Saving slumps as consumers spend more

By CHET CURRIER

NEW YORK (AP) — If any rainy days lie ahead for the economy, American consumers apparently aren't saving for them.

Just a few months out of a long recession, they are spending far more and saving much less than most economists expected.

The savings rate, as calculated by the Commerce Department, fell in the second quarter of this year to its lowest level in more than 30 years. At the same time, personal consumption increased sharply.

Whether you view this behavior as heartening or worrisome depends on your point of view. It is, some say, an impressive sign of confidence in the future, as well as a welcome stimulus to the economy. But it also raises some troubling questions.

What has become of efforts to increase the savings rate in this country, in order to marshal funds for capital investment, research and development, improvements in productivity and future growth?

President Reagan's economic programs have stressed this objective. It was thought that extending eligibility for Individual Retirement Accounts to all working people in this country would be a major step in that direction.

It may yet prove to be. But a recent survey of more than 1,000 adults by R.H. Bruskin Associates, a New Brunswick, N.J., market research firm, found that just 15 percent had opened IRAs for 1982. That leaves a large proportion of the population who shrugged off a powerful tax incentive to saving.

Deposits into IRAs of up to $2,000 a year per individual can be deducted on current tax returns. Thus, for someone in the 33 percent tax bracket, the government is effectively chipping in $1 for every $2 the individual saves.

And dividends or interest earned on IRAs accumulate tax free until the account-holder withdraws money, typically after retirement.

A second nagging question: How long can consumers keep their spending up? At the recently depressed level of the savings rate, "it seems unlikely the consumer will dip further into savings to support spending," says Carol Brock Kenney, chief economist at the investment firm of Shearson-American Express.

"If the savings rate stabilizes or rises, then the recovery in consumer spending will be completely dependent on the outlook for disposable income," observes Edward Yardeni at Prudential-Bache Securities. "We think that consumer sentiment has peaked for a while and that the savings rate is more likely to rise than fall. We expect a less robust consumer recovery in the second half of the year."

A case can be made that the economy needs some extra saving, rather than spending, right now to help sustain the recovery. The money is needed in the bond markets, the reasoning goes, to help meet the heavy borrowing demands of the government to cover its budget deficit.

If the money is not there, interest rates would presumably have to keep rising until they reach levels high enough to attract it. High rates, in return, could slow or even reverse the economy's recent progress toward health.

A few years back, there was a handy explanation for consumers' penchant for spending. They were well aware of rapid inflation, and knew that it made sense to buy before the next price increase.

Inflation is down now, however, and many of the experts say they are confident it has been subdued. That brings us to one more question about consumer spending — do consumers, by continuing the spending pattern of recent inflationary times, know or sense something about future inflation trends that the experts have missed?

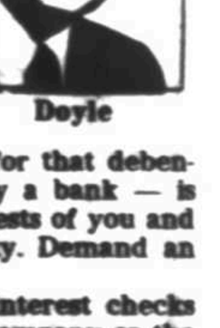
Bank or company may be profiting from late payment

By BILL DOYLE

Q. I own $30,000 of convertible debentures, which pay 12 percent annual interest by check. According to the certificate, the interest is payable on the last day of each month. However, I never receive the check until near the end of the following month.

Is the company that issued the debentures within its rights to be consistently tardy in this matter? What should I do to make sure interest payments are made closer to the specified dates?



Doyle

A. The company is not within its rights in paying interest late. A debenture, like a bond, is a debt security. The issuer pledges to pay interest at the agreed upon rate on the specific dates. Technically, when a company doesn't meet its debt obligations, it can be put into bankruptcy. Charging default, however, would involve time, effort and expense.

The natural move for you would be to contact the trustee for that debenture issue. The trustee — usually a bank — is supposed to look out for the interests of you and other owners of the debt security. Demand an explanation of what's going on.

The delay in sending out the interest checks might be the fault of either the company or the bank acting as interest paying agent. Naturally, the paying agent can't mail those checks until the company has deposited the money with it for that purpose.

Short delays, of a few days or so, in delivery of interest and dividend checks are unfortunate, but not unusual. When it gets to be close to a month, that's ridiculous.

ARC Expanding To Meet Your Needs

When a business is so successful that it has to expand to over 10,000 sq. ft. in only four years, the people in it have to be doing something right. And that's what's happening at ARC Truck and Auto Body. Why don't you come on down and let your car or truck see exactly why owner Allen Frasier is being forced to expand.

ARC is the largest inependent body shop in town. They give special attention to details during the repair process to insure you of the best job possible. The craftsmen are highly skilled, and they pride themselves in doing the highest quality repairs possible. From frame straightening to fitting decorative trim, every operation must meet the high standards.

Painting a car is also a specialty at ARC. Here again, highly skilled craftsmen take the painstaking steps to make sure that your car comes out looking at least as good as it did when it left the factory. Customizing and pinstriping is no problem at ARC. Gary Friss is a professional dedicated to giving you the best pinstriping and lettering possible. ARC has a large enough paint room to accommodate even a diesel rig.

Besides the expert body work and painting, Allen Frasier also operates a 24 hour wrecker service. If you have the unfortunate occasion to meet another car fender-to-fender, let ARC tow your car in and begin expert repair work immediately. ARC does handle insurance work, and they give free estimates as well.

Now you can see why ARC Truck and Auto Body has been forced to expand. They offer the highest quality workmanship available, but not the highest prices.

Throw that paintbrush away, says Lewellen

Court agrees to build jail, but undecided about cost

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

A new Midland County jail may be on the eastern horizon if the Midland County Commissioners' Court follows through with its latest proposal for a jail.

The court on Monday agreed to build a jail for 200 to 250 inmates and quarters for the sheriff on 6.95 acres adjacent to the Midland County Exhibit Building off U.S. Highway 80 East.

But the commissioners have yet to settle on how much of the taxpayers' money they want to spend on the project; they suggested $4 million. But Architect Walter Pate implied that such a cost might be unrealistic for a first-class jail.

Commissioner C. Wallace "Wally" Craig, who proposed the site, said he did not foresee any serious protestations coming out of the site choice.

"Number one," he said, "this is a full-fledged, full-security jail as opposed to a stockade."

Last year, Midlanders objected to proposed sites for a fenced-in stockade. Among other complaints, the protesters alleged the stockade would drive down property values, would be unsightly and might proposed a hazard to the safety of those living near the stockade site.

Craig cited his reasons for proposing the site:

—It allows easy accessibility to the downtown Midland County Courthouse.

—The county already owns the land. The county purchased the acreage for $1,000 an acre in 1974. "We could foresee the possibility of some future use," said Commissioner Durward Wright. Comparable land today might cost $10,000 an acre.

—There's a natural barrier — Scharbaurer Draw -- east and north of the site. The highway is to the south, "and the county is its own buffer to the west side," said Craig.

Craig said the cost of the jail would be "substantially less" than the proposed $11.69 million for expanding the courthouse and building a jail on the downtown square. That proposal was defeated by a 4-to-1 vote in a countywide bond election April 23.

Previously, the commissioners have proposed raising the revenue for a jail via certificates of obligation. By that route, they could bypass the electorate and increase the tax rate to pay off the indebtedness unless the voters petitioned for an election on the issue.

Craig alluded to Sheriff Dallas Smith putting skilled and semi-skilled inmates on work details, such as building offices and other carpentry and related work.

"I don't think it would be proper for the inmates to build their own jail," he said.

Wright suggested that the commissioners consider a relatively economical metal building to house the jail's cells and other facilities. He cited the county's metal Tax Office Building which was constructed for about $22 a square foot.

"We can't come up with any $6 million to build a jail."

The arthitect seemed wary of the "lasting quality" of a metal building and said that brick buildings have "been around for 200 years."

The sheriff, who is willing to use prisoner labor on projects, said he had dreamed of something beyond metal and brick and mortar for a jail building.

"I really had considered granite and marble with a big tower," Smith said.

"With a restaurant on top?" asked an amused Wright.

East Texas banks file federal lawsuit against FNB of Midland

Two East Texas banks which purchased more than $4.5 million in loans from The First National Bank (FNB) of Midland have filed a $10 million lawsuit against FNB-Midland after it allegedly "guaranteed to repurchase" the loans but "failed and refused to."

"...Many of the loans have defaulted," the plaintiffs, First National Bank in Clarksville and the First National Bank in Bells, contend in their petition filed Monday in federal court in Midland. The complaining banks say that FNB-Midland was aware that the loans were "not...of good quality" prior to the assignment.

The Clarksville and Bells bank allege that FNB-Midland had "promised and guaranteed" to service the loans but "failed to service, collect and attempt collection of the delinquent loans in accordance with good banking practices."

Further, the banks contend that the FNB-Midland represented that it was "in solvent financial condition and could and would repurchase each such participation loan upon the demand" of the banks.

"...In fact, the defendant was in poor and deteriorating financial condition," the petition alleges.

The Clarkville and Bells banks began purchasing the loans in September 1981 and in February 1983 demanded that the FNB-Midland repurchase the loans.

The two East Texas banks are charging FNB-Midland with fraud and racketeering.

They allege that Charles D. Fraser, former president of FNB-Midland, and fellow bankers Olen M. Brock, Mike Irons and Harold Wills "conducted the affairs of such enterprise (the bank) through a pattern of racketeering activity which affected Interstate Commerce."

The East Texas banks say they are entitled to treble damages, since FNB-Midland allegedly violated the Racketeering Influenced and Corrupt Organization Act.

Exhibits attached to the petition indicate that the two banks still hold 44 outstanding loans. The unpaid balance on the original $4.5 million in loans was $2,404,441.98 as of last July 25, says the petition. In addition to seeking treble damages, the Clarksville and Bells banks are asking for $2.5 million in punitive damages and $250 per day lost as the result of the loss of use of the funds in making direct loans after March 1, 1983.

Attorneys for the plaintiffs are Jim D. Lovett of Clarksville and Jerry P. Childs of Odessa.

Counties studied for disposal

PATRICK DEAREN
Staff Writer

AUSTIN — Howard, Borden, Mitchell and Scurry counties are among 15 counties still under state consideration in the search for a radioactive waste disposal site.

Texas Low-Level Radioactive Waste Disposal Authority had hoped to have the search narrowed to five potential sites by early August, spokesman Tom Blackburn said Monday.

"What we have done is narrowed it down from the 73 counties we had previously to 15 counties," he explained, adding that those counties include approximately 40 potential sites.

Created by the 67th Legislature in 1981, the Authority is charged with determining the best location for a disposal site to handle low-level radiation originating in Texas. Wastes would include that from hospitals, universities, industries such as oil and gas, and certain low-level radioactive wastes from nuclear power plants.

Already, considerable opposition has arisen in several of the areas under consideration.

"We've received numerous petitions, resolutions, letters from private citizens and public officials — a little smattering from just about everything so far," said Blackburn. "But we've also had some positive feedback from certain areas — individuals and companies offering land to sell us — but unfortunately it hasn't been in the right location."

Certain communities — also outside the preferred areas — also have expressed interest because of the economic impact the plant might have, he added.

The areas under consideration originally had included counties in the Trans-Pecos, but those are "completely out now," said Blackburn.

Among other considerations, the Authority is taking into account an area's average rainfall, soil acidity and percentage of alkaline clay. The actual plant would consist of 10-50 acres and be surrounded by a buffer zone of 300-400 acres. Radioactive waste in 55-gallon steel drums would be stack-buried in trenches 40 feet deep, 50 feet wide and 100 yards long.

Blackburn said the Authority hopes to narrow the potential sites down to 5 by the end of August or first part of September, and that a final decision on a potential site should be forthcoming "probably sometime in November."

A public hearing and meetings with local officials will follow. If that site is given the okay, a one-year on-location study and another public hearing will be held prior to initiation of plant operations.

Blackburn was optimistic the delay in the determination of a site wouldn't affect the timetable. "We think there's enough slack," he said, "to keep the first part of 1988 as an operational date."

The Authority already has completed a study of radioactive wastes generated in the state. Produced in 1982 were approximately 30,000 cubic feet of low-level radiactive wastes, more than 80 percent of which came from hospitals, universities and medical research facilities. The remainder was produced by industries.

In addition, approximately 135,000 cubic feet of low-level waste will be produced by four nuclear power plants expected to be in operation by the end of the decade.

Past days...exhausting, fulfilling for Bell management employees

By GAIL BURKE
Staff Writer

Midland Southwestern Bell personnel continued to connect calls today, while communication union members got a busy signal during the third day of a strike against American Telephone & Telegraph Co.

But if Monday was any indication of how business calls will be handled, Midland telephone customers shouldn't be drastically affected by the strike, according to Jay Allen, Southwestern Bell public relations manager.

"It was exhausting and fulfilling," Allen said, referring to the past two days he and other management employees have been working the phone lines.

"I picked it (the board) up pretty good Sunday," Allen said. "It's not easy. You've got a bunch of different buttons and lights that all mean different things.

"We're all doing well and in some areas, we'll get better and will be more confident."

Although there were some delays in operator assistance calls, most residents got through to their parties with the help of 175 Southwestern Bell management employees.

While 600 Midland Communication Workers Union members at Southwest Bell continued their strike against AT&T Monday, management staffers were manning the phone lines and will continue until negotiations arise.

The CWA, along with two smaller unions — the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers and the Telecommunications International Union — opted to strike against AT&T Sunday after failing to successfully negotiate a three year contract. The unions turned down a 3.5 percent a year pay raise for each of the next three years.

"I'm really impressed with the way the people — both management and union — have reacted to the strike," Allen said Monday after completing a 13-hour day as an operator and public relations manager.

"There was no complaining by management whatsoever. They did what it took to do the job," Allen said, adding that Southwestern Bell's management staff will continue to work 12 hours a day, six days a week until the strike ends.

He said Southwestern Bell is providing free lunch and dinner to all the staff who work through the strike period. About 90 percent of the 30 long distance and directory assitance operator positions are manned by the staff.

Allen said telephone customers were patient and understanding Monday.

"Operators have a lot of contact with the public," Allen said. "I talked to someone every four to five seconds on that board, and very few people complained.

"We are recommending that customers do as much work as possible on their own. If the customers would call direct — instead of going through the long distance operator — and use the phone book — instead of the directory assistance operator — it will make it a lot easier for everyone," he added.

While residents can continue dialing without too much inconvenience, getting repairs and installation will be more difficult.

"No phones will be put in," Allen said, explaining that if the strike ended by the close of the week, there would be a significant backlog of orders.

Allen added that although rain "would not automatically be bad, if it were to downpour, it would cause problems."

Commissioners may have to reconsider tax rate hike

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

Midland County commissioners went through the motions of levying a new tax rate Monday, decided to get on an austerity campaign and to freeze wages.

There will be no blanket raises or cost-of-living increases for the 300 county employees in 1984 unless there's an upward turn in the economy, the commissioners indicated.

The commissioners voted to levy an 18.23-cent tax rate per $100 valuation to satisfy 1984's $11.2 million budget requirement.

But they may have to re-consider their vote. Texas law requires that "all members" of the five-member Commissioners' Court be present when taxes are levied.

"I forgot about that," County Judge Bill Ahders said afterward.

Commissioner Win Brown, who is ailing, was not present for the vote.

Midland County Attorney J. Scott Henderson, who had a rift with the commissioners over their no-wage-increase stance, said the commissioners "didn't bother to check the statutes before setting the tax rate."

Henderson, county attorney since late 1981, seemed miffed over the court's salary freeze.

"I WAS PROMISED a considerable sum to take this job," he seethed after he rushed into courtroom following the vote, "and I haven't got up there."

Henderson said he was instructing his staff attorneys and clerks to restrict their work-week to 40 hours, since apparently they were not not going to be rewarded for their industry and dedication to the job.

"If I was that unhappy," Commissioner C. Wallace "Wally" Craig told the court after Henderson exited the courtroom, "I think I'd quit."

Henderson was appointed county attorney in October 1981 and succeeded Robert Rendall, who resigned the post to enter private practice. His 1983 salary is pegged at $38,620, which is about $4,000 more than many other elected officials get. Ahders is salaried at $44,184.

Later, Henderson said the no-raise stance is "insulting my people" by effectively cutting their pay. He said the cost-of-living expenses would continue to rise. "I'm certainly not going to let them work more than 40 hours a week."

He said he would continue to "do whatever is expected of me as county attorney" and would advise the commissioners in writing on legal matters. "But I am not going to follow them around. We will continue to do our duty and will continue to advise them in writing."

IN SETTLING on a new tax rate, the commissioners opted not to raise taxes and decided to stay with the status quo. However, the 18.23-cent proposed rate would be a slight increase over the the current 18.03-cent rate. The increase was added in to take care of the county's debt service from the courthouse renovation and expansion of the early 1970s.

The 1983 tax base used to generate 1984 operating funds is about $4.048 billion, while the 1982 tax base is $3.65 billion. The difference represents new developments and any increases in property values.

The county expects to generate more than $7 million in tax revenue for its 1984 budget. Additional funds to round out the budget would come from fees, fines and other sources, said France Shuffield, Midland County tax assessor-collector.

Before going through the motions of setting the tax rate, the commissioners discussed the upcoming budget.

"We may have to go to an attrition budget," said Commissioner C. DeWayne Davis. "It doesn't look very good."

The commissioners are to go into budget study at 8 a.m. Friday.

AHDERS HAD suggested that the court award a blanket 4 percent pay raise to the county's 300 employees in 1984 "as long as we don't have to increase the staff."

"I've trying to dig up some more money," said Davis.

County Auditor Johnnie Thompson noted that at the current spending rate, the county would end 1983 with a $685,000 balance in the general fund.

"That's the lowest it's been in a long time," said Davis.

The commissioners suggested that county employees be frugal and "not make that (long-distance) phone call, not make that trip."

"The pinch is on," Davis said. "It's hit us, and now it's come home to roost."

To avert a tax increase, county spending would have to be "cut to the bare bones," Davis allowed.

"There's a lot of waste in government," he said, "and we all know that."

Thereupon, Craig suggested that the county's employees be participants in the austerity program by foregoing wage increases.

"Each of us has got to say, 'I've got a problem,'" he said, and to be willing to "side-step" wage increases in 1984 and to say, "Gee, I'm happy to have a job...I'm tickled to death to work for the county...I'm tickled to death not to take a wage increase." Each commissioner is salaried at about $23,000 per year.

"This is a serious problem," Craig said of the county's budget.

Commented Davis: "We're all glad to (be able to) pay our bills, because we've got our jobs."

"I would like to have enough money to pay my bills," a county employee said after the commissioners had recessed.

Commissioner Durward Wright noted that "everyone will receive a raise during the course of the year if it's just a small amount." He referred to the the county's longevity pay — $5 added bonus per month for each year an employee has worked for the county — and any promotions.

Wright noted that the Commissioners' Court could grant a pay raise sometime next year if the economy substantially improves. "We can and have done that in the past."

Of the county's estimated $10 million budget in 1983, about $5.64 million is going toward the payroll. The average salary would be about $18,800.

Former teacher judges educational progress

LUFKIN, Texas (AP) — Louis Killingsworth, who now works in a wholesale plant nursery, said he knew his 16-year teaching career was over shortly after one of his female students was badly beaten just outside of his classroom.

Killingsworth, who taught science, said the February incident was for him the culmination of a months-long process of teacher "burn-out."

He now criticizes what he said is a lack of discipline inside and outside the classroom, and a general unwillingness of the community to get involved in the educational process.

"In the last six years, teaching has definitely changed," he said, adding, "the classroom is a war zone now."

The 40-year-old teacher left Lufkin High School shortly after the February incident and went into a hospital for several days. For five months, he struggled against uncontrollable crying and deep depression.

Seven months later, Killingsworth says he has regained control of his emotions, but he still can't return to his former profession.

"I resent what happened to me, resent the fact that society allowed it to happen by letting the educational system get in the shape it's in," Killingsworth told the Lufkin Daily News.

The incident began when two students began fighting over some books that had been knocked off a desk onto the floor.

It ended with the female involved going to the hospital for plastic surgery and the male who fought her sentenced to prison.

The violence put Killingsworth in shock.

"I had just been teaching the girl, and when I looked down at her, I had to ask another student who she was," he said.

Killingsworth said he wishes he had recognized what was happening to him before the Feb. 1 incident. He wishes he had paid more attention to the warning signs that had been developing for six months — loss of memory and periodic shaking.

Teacher burnout is an emotional and mental condition that recently has gained the attention of medical and school authorities throughout the country. It is brought on by prolonged periods of stress and leaves the teacher helpless to cope with normal classroom situations.

Killingsworth said he thinks many parents do not care about their children's education, and do not discipline them enough.

He stopped calling the parents of children who were not doing well in his classes because most of them just didn't care, he said.

"There is too large a percentage of parents who don't care, too large a percentage of kids who don't care, and the kids are given too much," Killingsworth said. "There were kids going around with more spending money than I had as a teacher, and they were driving new cars."

Killingsworth said he is optimistic about his future. But he isn't so sure about the future of the educational system.

"I've gotten back on my feet again, and I know with my education, background and drive I'll come out all right," he said.

"But the community has got to become involved in education. The parents have got to get involved in what the kids are doing, what they're taking in school, and what the school board is doing.

"I would like to see the school board become more concerned about the educational system," Killingsworth said. It seems like they think they are up there to manage the money, and what they're really managing is the future of this community."

Texan studies worms

PITTSBURG, Texas (AP) — East Texans are a hodge-podge of experts on topics ranging from possumology to waterwitching.

Bud Steger, for instance, is a student of worms.

But Steger's crawlers aren't the plain-vanilla brand.

His are plucked from trees.

"I guess a conservative estimate might be that we have almost 5,000 catalpa trees out there," said Steger, resident Pittsburg catalpa expert.

"In the 20 years they've been out there, I suppose we've had more than 100,000 worms," he said.

STEGER, A JOCULAR man with a little boyish gleam in his eyes, will have you believe he knows very little about the green and black worms inhabiting his grove.

And that's typical of most East Texas experts, who really know what they are talking about.

What began as a hobby has turned into a semi-scientific study of the worms, their growth patterns, production of the trees and their life cycles.

AND, ANY fisherman who knows the difference between a bucket-mouth and a crappie will tell you that catalpa worms are considered gourmet fish food.

"I've seen the catalpa moth several times, but I've never seen one lay eggs," Steger said.

"A friend once said we ought to apply for one of those half-million dollar grants to study the life cycle of catalpa worms," he said, laughing. "You know, with what all the government gives out for studies, we just might get one."

Steger, who loves fishing almost as much as quail hunting, started out with a few trees planted along a small creek running across his property.

THEN, AS TREES were pruned, more were planted and pretty soon, a grove got started.

By accident, though, Steger discovered how to really make his grove come up to snuff.

"One day, I was out looking at the top of one of the trees which was several feet above my head," Steger said. "Well, I couldn't figure out whether to get the worms out of the top or just lose them."

"So, I grabbed ahold of the tree and bent it over and the tree, as I bent it, twisted," he said. "I just laid it over against the limb of another tree and left it there."

"Well, sir, about a week or so later, I looked out there and saw a whole bunch of new sprouts had sprung out of the bent-over limb," he said. "I started doing that to all the trees and that's how they got so thick. It kind of looks like a vineyard in there."

CATALPA MOTHS lay eggs on the underside of catalpa tree leaves, the eggs hatch into worms, which gorge and grow on the leaves and later fall off and burrow into the ground, emerge a short time later as moths and repeat the process.

"I've spent hours down there watching the worms, and nature has a way of protecting them and helping them along," he said. "We might have thousands of worms, but in all these years, I've only seen maybe a half-dozen moths."

"I've got a sneakin' feeling that nature determines ahead of time which of the worms will become moths and I've noticed that every now and then some of the worms are colored differently," he said. "I've always wondered whether that had anything to do with it."

STEGER ISN'T real keen about selling his worms, mainly because of the weird hours most fishermen keep.

Giveaway U.S. cheese, butter in Juarez Store

EL PASO, Texas (AP) — Cases of butter and cheese filling a 7-foot-high cooler in the rear of a Juarez store all bore the same markings: "Donated by the United States Department of Agriculture for food help programs."

Stamped in capital letters, the cases and individual packages read: "MAY NOT BE SOLD OR EXCHANGED."

But the American butter and cheese was for sale Monday at Super Henry, a small convenience store just across the Paso del Norte bridge, the El Paso Times reported.

The bargain butter was selling for 30 cents a pound — about 15 cents cheaper than Mexican butter, which often is hard to find, and about one-fifth the price of butter in the United States, the newspaper said.

Word that USDA products were on sale in Juarez surprised officials involved with the distribution of surplus commodities, a USDA program administered by the Texas Department of Human Resources.

"I have no idea how they got them," James R. Chilton, DHR's commodity distributor for West Texas, said Monday from his office in Lubbock.

The store manager at Super Henry offered no help.

"I can't give you any information," he said nervously after ushering a reporter and photographer away from his cooler.

When asked his identity, he said "I have no name."

Moments earlier, a cash register clerk said the products were bought in Juarez from an individual he did not know.

Chilton said even if the seller were known to authorities, little could be done about it now. But that will change, he promised.

"All we can do now is turn it over to fraud and investigate, but we don't know of any state law against the sale, and USDA doesn't know of any federal law," he said. "But under the new program, it is against the law."

Chilton and other officials were unaware when the new law governing the Emergency Food Assistance Program takes effect or of the penalties for selling commodities that are supposed to be free to the poor.

Super Henry's cooler contained at least two 32-pound cases of butter, eight 30-pound cases of American processed cheese and 27 blocks of cheese weighing 5 pounds each, the Times reported.

The butter was selling for about 30 cents, and the cheese blocks were priced at about $3. USDA values the butter at $1.52 a pound and the cheese blocks at $7.35 each, the newspaper said.

Vandalism reported as Bell strike continues

DALLAS (AP) — Southwestern Bell officials say that vandals cut two telephone cables here and destroyed a phone connector box as a nationwide strike against the American Telephone & Telegraph Co. continued.

But Bell spokesman Jim Lydon said that at least one of the acts of vandalism was not related to the strike, and authorities do not have motives for the others.

The company offered a $5,000 reward for information leading to the arrest and indictment of those responsible for the damage.

The cables were apparently cut with an axe or saw in separate incidences Monday, said Lydon. One of the incidences was probably not related to the strike, he said.

A telephone connector box serving an apartment complex was destroyed Sunday. Company officials said the box has since been restored to service.

About 200 customers lost service temporarily because of the vandalism, he said.

"The integrity of the telephone network is critically important and so is the safety of our employees," said Lydon. "The system has to function reliably all the time to handle emergency messages as well as routine conversations."

Elsewhere in the nation, five strikers were arrested — three in New York in a melee that left three policemen injured and two in Florida who allegedly pulled wires from a connection box.

Death-row inmate lobbies for reforms to death penalty

HUNTSVILLE, Texas (AP) — A death-row inmate has registered as a lobbyist and sent letters to all 181 state legislators to push for alternatives to the death penalty.

Billy George Hughes, condemned to death for the 1976 murder of state trooper Mark Frederick, said he became a lobbyist because prisoners condemned to death "suffered a real bad PR (public relations) problem.

"Everyone thought we were just a bunch of dangerous murderers who would be better off put to sleep," said Hughes, 31, who has spent seven years on death row at the Texas Department of Corrections Ellis Unit near here.

Hughes said about 30 legislators wrote back to him. Many said he influenced their opinion on the death penalty, he added.

State Sen. Ted Lyon, D-Mesquite, said Hughes' letter "made me think seriously for the first time about alternatives to the death penalty." Lyon is a former policeman and death penalty advocate.

Top 10 U.S. beauties share beauty secrets

NEW YORK (AP) — America's 10 "most beautiful" women — tall, short, teen-age, middle-age, brainy, brawny, and, of course, gorgeous — share their beauty secrets and give the inside — and outside — stories about their looks in the August issue of Harper's Bazaar.

"When I feel good, I look good, and have so much more for everyone, for everything I do. It's really that simple," said Victoria Principal, the star of the "Dallas" television series who appears on the cover.

But the 33-year-old actress said, "There comes a moment when gravity and time win out. Then you call a plastic surgeon."

The others on the magazine's 10-most-beautiful list also had comments about their best features.

Actress-model Jaclyn Smith said she liked her glossy chestnut hair, now layered for versatility.

Dancer-model Twiggy, tipping the scales at 112 pounds rather than the 91 pounds she weighed during her super-skinny days during the '60s, said she feels prettier now and keeps in shape with dancing. "My legs are the best part of my body," she said.

Shari Belafonte-Harper, the husky-voiced actress in Calvin Klein commercials and the daughter of singer Harry Belafonte, said she is proud of her skin, "which is a unique color — neither black nor white."

Karen Allen, who starred in the film "Raiders of the Lost Ark," plays up her expressive eyes with lots of eyeliner: "It makes them seem huge!"

Joan Collins, a 50-year-old actress in the TV series "Dynasty," and the oldest of the 10, said: "There's no such thing as too much makeup if you wear it with elan!"

But Jennifer Beals, the 19-year-old star of the movie "Flashdance," took a more casual view of her beauty and her finely textured skin: "I know I should be more conscientious about it. I guess it's just not a priority right now"

Rachel Ward of the television mini series "The Thorn Birds," said her beauty "comes from inside." While she had no beauty secrets, she advised that "smiling is the most important thing you can do."

Country singer Crystal Gayle said caring for her long tresses is not "as time consuming as you'd think." And, she said, "I'm sure I'll cut it some day, when I really feel the need of a change."

Actress Jane Seymour said her green eyes are her best asset. "They're an expression of inner beauty. They're where the acting comes through."

Treatments save damaged hair

By COLETTE BOUCHEZ
Copley News Service

Since hot summer weather, combined with overexposure to salty and chlorine water can zap the life right out of your hair, you may find that by September your tresses are drier and harder to manage than you remember them being last spring.

If this is the case, try to cut down on the use of your blow drying and when possible use a curling iron instead of hot rollers because the iron generally tends to do less damage to the hair.

But if your find your locks are still not up to par, try this "Hair Re-conditioner" recipe from the labs of Tina Cassaday, one of the nations foremost authorities of hair care.

Begin by washing hair with a mild shampoo, being sure to remove all traces of soap. Then, combine ½ mashed banana with a teaspoon each of sesame oil and wheat germ oil. Leave on hair for a half hour and remove with a rinse consisting of 1 part cider vinegar to 8 parts water. Reapply weekly as needed.

If split ends are your problem, then try Tina's all-natural solution that not only gives you healthy hair but saves you money as well!

Into a blender place ¼ avocado, ⅛ pint of plain yogurt, 1 tablespoon of condensed milk and 1 capful of wheat germ oil. Blend until the mixture becomes a liquid consistency, and apply to ends of hair only. Leave on for 30 minutes. Follow with normal shampooing process with the product of your choice, and then an ice water rinse. Do not use any other conditioners until your next shampoo.

Sweatshirts, jeans made at home

By ELLEN APPEL
Copley News Service

Why spend more for cropped sweatshirts, overdyed jeans and stone-washed denims when you can make your own with scissors and supermarket dyes.

Cropped sweatshirts are simply regular sweatshirts minus the arms, necklines and midriff. You can cut a V-neck, scoop neck, cap sleeve, short sleeve or bare midriff with ease and then wear it alone or over a T-shirt.

Stone-washed jeans get their soft, faded look from industrial washing machines and pumice stones. You can duplicate the look, however, with a special fading product from the supermarket.

Overdyed jeans, on the other hand, are basically bright-colored denims. They can be made at home with heavy concentrations of supermarket dye.

Here are directions for making fashionable new looks:

SWEATSHIRT: Materials: Scissors, white chalk.

DIRECTIONS: 1. Decide how you want to cut your sweatshirt. 2. Draw your cutting lines with chalk. 3. Try on sweatshirt and adjust cutting lines, if necessary. 4. Cut sweatshirt along the chalk lines. 5. Wear cropped sweatshirt alone or over a contrasting T-shirt.

SHAPING: 1. For short sleeves: Cut halfway between elbow and shoulder. If desired, roll up sleeves. 2. For capped sleeves: Cut sleeves just past the shoulder. 3. For a crew neck: Cut away 1½ inches all around the neckline. 4. For a low neckline: Cut a V-neck or scoop neck, as desired. Be careful not to cut neckline too low or sweatshirt will slide off your shoulders. 5. For a cropped midriff: Cut sweatshirt to navel.

OVERDYED DENIMS: Materials: You'll need supermarket dyes and old denim jackets, skirts or jeans. Suggested colors are Rit brand Fuschia or Purple.

DIRECTIONS: 1. Follow directions on the dye package, but make the following changes: 2. Use very hot water. 3. Use twice the concentration of dye indicated. 3. Soak the clothes for at least 30 minutes. 4. For a matching top, drop a 100 percent cotton T-shirt in the dye bath.

STONE-WASHED DENIMS: Materials: You'll need "Fast Fade" by Rit, available in the dye department of most supermarkets.

DIRECTIONS: 1. Follow manufacturer's directions for fading denims. 2. For a '50s look, cut jeans off at the ankle. Then slit jeans a few inches up the sides.

Shaving cream has varied uses

Hearst Feature Service

Brushless shaving cream in a tube, available in most drug and grocery stores, has many uses for the camper, hiker and outdoorsman, reports the August issue of Sports Afield.

It is good for chapped hands, dry skin on elbows and knees, and for water-soaked and cracked fingers. It is also great to rub on your feet when prolonged wetness causes discomfort. The oil in the shave cream protects your feet in the dry season too. You can stop small leaks in tents or shelter halves by rubbing on a coat of the cream.

"In fact," cracks Sports Afield, "we've seen this cream used for almost everything. Once in awhile someone will even shave with it."

Make-up hints help beat heat

The heat is on. It's time to face hot weather beauty problems like melting makeup.

Keep all meltable items such as lip-stick and cream blusher in the fridge.

Hot leg hand-me-downs

Your old knee socks make great legwarmers for small children. A tip in a recent Family Circle article suggests cutting the feet off the socks, folding in the cuffs and stitching them. And voila! Legwarmers.

Lately, I have been having a lot of fun with scarves. Tied — not around the neck — but around the waist.

One evening, in search of a touch of color to add to a rather bland outfit, I came across a scarf I hadn't used in ages. It was perfect in color, but didn't look right at all around the neck, so I folded it corner to corner, then folded and folded until I had a bias band about 2 inches wide. I wrapped it around the waist and tied it in back. It worked great. By adding bangle bracelets in two of the colors from the scarf, I had a whole new outfit.

Since then I have used scarves as belts for a full, long tunic top, a dress and a skirt and blouse. The scarves seem to go with everything.

A long, rectangular scarf can be wrapped several times around the waist, ends tucked in, for that "scrunched-up" look.

To think, I almost threw all those old scarves out when I cleaned drawers this spring!

A couple of other instant-belt ideas:

Two, three or more lengths of cording, either all one color or mix-and-match.

Fold-over braid — tie a knot near each cut end; fray ends. Wrap around the waist and tie in double knot.

You may have to do a little more tramping about and looking, but now is the time to search out those end-of-season, make-room-for-winter sale items. Some will be marked down as much as 50 percent. Fabric, trims and accessories all are seasonal and, when seasons change, so does the merchandise.

Basic rule: When buying an item on sale — no matter how great the savings — it isn't a good buy unless it is something you will be able to use next year. Stay away from trendy items.

Tiegs said she was "ugly duckling"

Cheryl Tiegs may be one of the best known fashion personalities in the country today, but she claims she was an "ugly duckling" throughout most of her high school life, in an interview in the August issue of Seventeen.

Tiegs, who first appeared on the magazine cover15 years ago, remembers when nobody would even ask her to dance. "I had to beg someone to take me to the Junior Prom," she said. "But then over the summer, things changed, and the next year, I was chosen Senior Prom Princess."

Being able to adjust to change, Tiegs says, has been an important factor in her exceptionally long and successful modeling career. Still, she says, there are times when even she is surprised by all of the changes.

Looking at her picture on the August 1968 Seventeen cover, which shows her in tight braids and starched ruffles, Tiegs shrieked, "Was I twenty here? I look as if I were just out of diapers. Nobody twenty years old should look like that!"

However, recalling the appearance of that cover, Tiegs adds, "I was as proud of it as of few other things I've done in my life."

DEAR ABBY

Couple argue over who foots bill

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: I am an elderly widower in good financial circumstances, as is my ladyfriend. I take her out to a fine restaurant once a week, and in turn she invites me to her home for dinner. We both enjoy our relationship, but we have one serious problem. If I suggest going on a trip together, she insists that I should pay her expenses, even though she has ample funds.

I try not to be smallish, but I resent having to pay for her company. The amount would not be insignificant if we went to Hawaii, for example. The money saved this way will eventually go to her children and grandchildren, who are not in need of it.

We are both stubborn and cannot find a compromise. For my part, it is not the money, it's the principle of the thing. I should like to learn your opinion. – NAMELESS, PLEASE

DEAR NAMELESS: When someone says, "It's not the money, it's the principle of the thing," it's usually the money. Since you suggested the trip, it should be your treat. (If she suggested it, it should be her treat.) Because you are both stubborn, you are letting life pass you by without enjoying many of the pleasures you can well afford. The one thing you cannot buy is time. Make the most of your lives while you have the health to enjoy them.

DEAR ABBY: My wife's parents invited us to accompany them on a trip to visit some relatives who live in another state. It was a nice drive, but far enough away so we had to stop at a motel overnight.

As we were checking into the motel, it became evident that her parents expected us to share a room with them to save expenses. The room was large, with two double beds to accommodate four people, but I didn't feel comfortable with this kind of arrangement so I told my in-laws in a very nice way that I preferred a room of our own, which I would gladly pay for. (I did.)

My wife didn't say anything until we were in our room. Then she said she was very disappointed in me for not going along with her parents' wishes. And for me to insist on having my own way was "disrespectful" and I owe her parents an apology.

Abby, I just couldn't imagine my wife and I sleeping in the same room with my in-laws. (We'll be married a year next month.)

Was I "disrespectful?" And do I owe them an apology? – LIKES PRIVACY

DEAR LIKES: Disrespectful? No way. And no apologies are necessary.

DEAR ABBY: "Had it" wrote that her husband informed her that "he was not happy working at any job, and since he has the right to be 'happy,' he intends to stay home."

That caused me to recall the words of Leo Rosten:

"The purpose of life is not to be happy. The purpose of life is to matter, to be productive, to have it make some difference that you live at all. Happiness, in the ancient, noble verse, means self-fulfillment and is given to those who use to the fullest whatever talents God or luck or fate bestowed upon them." – ARTHUR H. PRINCE

(If you hate to write letters because you don't know what to say, send for Abby's complete booklet on letter-writing. Send $2 and a long, stamped (37 cents), self-addressed envelope to Abby, Letter Booklet, P.O. Box 38923, Hollywood, Calif. 90038.)

Great hairstyles need proper hair dryer

Building a great hairstyle first requires a precision hair cut designed for you. But to keep that hairstyle looking its professional best every day, says the August issue of Seventeen, you need an understanding of the various tools of the hair trade.

The key to making hair appliances and products work their best for you, is sharpening your knowledge about your hair's particular personality, says Catherine Sabino, beauty editor.

"Having hair that looks beautiful and works for your school and sports schedule is simply a matter of knowing what your hair will and will not do," she says.

Selecting the correct appliances for your hair style depends a great deal on your hair's texture — coarse, medium or fine.

To construct a great hairstyle, it's important to choose a blow dryer which will work with your hair texture. If your hair is fine, use a blow dryer with only 500 to 600 watts. An appliance with 800 to 1,000 watts is correct for medium-textured hair and only hair that is coarse can tolerate a blow dryer with 1,200 watts of drying power.

Strking copper worker Reynaldo Merno shakes hands with an unidentified Arizona Department of Public Safety officer in Morenci, Ariz., Monday, outside the Phelps Dodge Corp. plant. Tensions have eased since the company agreed to a 24-hour shutdown, averting possibly serious bloodshed.

Strike against copper firm scarring community's children

TUCSON, Ariz. (AP) — The 3-year-old daughter of a non-striking copper worker lies in a hospital, shot in the brain. Other children vandalize property or stand at picket lines jeering anyone who crosses.

The strike against Phelps Dodge Corp. has grown increasingly tense since the copper mining company began trying for the first time to get union members to cross picket lines, and children are being entangled in the violence and bitterness.

"What's going to happen when school starts Aug. 29?" asked striking copper miner Raul Rios, who is part of a group that has begun counseling children of strikers and non-strikers alike.

"What's going to be the effect on the kids that were on the picket lines toward the children of the people who crossed the picket lines?"

Strikes have hit Arizona's copper mining communities every three years since 1959, but in all past strikes, Phelps Dodge had shut down, said Rios, who works at the Morenci mining operation. This time the company has continued to operate and hundreds of union-represented workers in Ajo, Bisbee, Douglas and Morenci are crossing the picket lines that went up July 1.

"What it's done is divide the community right in half," Rios said in a telephone interview.

He and others fear the strike by unions representing 2,400 employees at mines, smelters and processing facilities in the four communities will leave emotional scars on the children.

"I'M CONCERNED that there are going to be effects," said the Rev. J.B. Bardon of the Sacred Heart Catholic Church in Clifton, a town neighboring Morenci. "My suspicion is that we probably won't see their full effects until the kids are in school and forced to associate with one another."

Because of concern for the children's problems, Shirley J. O'Brien, a human development specialist with the University of Arizona extension service in Tucson, has begun writing articles on the issue for weekly newspapers circulated in the area around the Morenci mine and smelter.

"Any time you have children who feel a climate of high, intense emotional outpouring," she said, "there are feelings of fear, uncertainty, anxiety, and depending on the kid, they can be long-lasting."

She said children who jeer workers as they cross picket lines need special attention, as do children of the non-strikers.

There has been no violence on the picket lines, but on July 27, Chandra Tallant was wounded by gunfire sprayed through the walls of her family's home in Ajo as she slept. Her father, Keith, 24, was among the first workers at the Phelps Dodge mine in Ajo to cross picket lines.

The slug pierced the child's brain and doctors didn't try to remove it. The child was in stable condition at St. Joseph's Hospital in Phoenix, conscious and able to speak, but doctors said it was unclear how much damage had been done.

NO ONE HAS been arrested in the shooting, despite a $100,000 reward offered by Phelps Dodge. Conrad Florez, president of the Ajo Unity Council, a coalition of striking unions, pledged to cooperate with investigators.

Wage cuts and cost-of-living adjustment reductions asked by the company are the key issues in the strike. Annual wages for the company's unionized workers range from $23,000 to $28,275.

The company has said that with copper prices low, it couldn't afford to shut down entirely while negotiators struggled to reach agreement on a new contract. About 680 union-represented workers were crossing picket lines last week, and the company was operating at about 75 percent of normal productions, Phelps Dodge said.

Rios and about 14 other people in Morenci — strikers and non-strikers — have formed the bilingual Community Development Committee, which last week began providing counseling services to about 20 children between the ages of 5 and 15. Some came in voluntarily; others were brought in by their parents to discuss strike-related problems.

The committee found "a lot of confusion," Rios said. "Questions about 'What is a picket? What is a scab? Why are people making obscene gestures, why is everyone so loud?' A lot of confusion. And a lot of blank stares."

The children hear their parents hurl insults at non-strikers, and "haven't been able to ventilate what's going on," he said.

"A lot of the vandalism has been caused not by strikers but by kids with nothing to do, and it's their way to show their support."

Mrs. O'Brien said children on both sides of the picket lines must be helped to understand that the kind of behavior that is used in confrontations at mine gates is unacceptable in the school yards.

Frequently, parents are in highly emotional states with their own patience worn thin, and teen-agers "may take on adult anger without the experience or ability to handle it."

THC may help reduce tremors in MS patients

Dear Dr. Solomon: One of my college roommates says that marijuana has been shown to be useful in the treatment of patients with multiple sclerosis. Ordinarily I would believe what he told me because he usually makes sense. However, he's into marijuana pretty heavily and I get the feeling that he tries to see something good in it even where it doesn't exist. Is there anything to what he says about the value of marijuana for multiple sclerosis? — Jamie, Gettysburg, Pa.

Dear Jamie: According to Dr. David B. Clifford, of the Washington University School of Medicine in St. Louis, there is some evidence that the active ingredient in marijuana (Tetrahydrocannabinol of THC) may help reduce tremors and the lack of coordination in some patients with multiple sclerosis. It should be pointed out, however, the Dr. Clifford's study involved only eight patients with multiple sclerosis, too few on which to base a firm conclusion about the benefits of any form of treatment.

As for your roommate, I would only hope that college will teach him not to equate the value of medication in the treatment of a disease with its value when taken by a healthy individual.

Dear Dr. Solomon: Since my father died, my mother has had one illness after another. Is this usual? How can a person's emotions affect the body so directly and in so short a time? — Grace, San Francisco, Calif.

Dear Grace: Dr. Jeffrey L. Houpt, chief of psychosomatic medicine at the Duke University Medical Center in Durham, N.C., says that emotion may affect the biological system that protects the body from disease. In some laboratory studies, scientists have been able to change the immune response of animals by destroying the part of the brain that controls emotions.

The effect of emotion on health can truly be striking. A patient who remains depressed three months after suffering a heart attack may be at greater risk of another heart attack.

Dear Dr. Solomon: Every year about the same time I get the usual hay fever symptoms. But I never get a fever and I don't know of anyone who does. Is this generally true of all hay fever sufferers? — Henry, Morganton, N.C.

Dear Henry: The term "hay fever" is highly inaccurate. Only rarely, if ever, is fever involved, and the condition has nothing to do with hay.

Hay fever refers to an allergic reaction which as you well know, is characterized by sneezing, a runny nose and itchy and tearing eyes. And these symptoms may occur even if you've never seen a load of hay.

For Stacey, Hartford, Conn.: The fact that patients who have had ulcerative colitis for an extended period of time may have an increased risk of cancer of the colon does not mean that the cancer will actually develop. What it does mean is that these patients should follow their physicians' recommendations for followup care so that treatment can be instituted at the earliest sign that something is amiss.

(If you have a medical question, write to Neil Solomon, M.D., 1726 Reisterstown Road, Baltimore, Md 21208. Dr. Solomon cannot give personal replies but will answer as many questions as possible in his column).

Barry Manilow says he's popular because of non-threatening image

LONDON (AP) — Pop singer Barry Manilow thinks it's more than his voice and songwriting ability that makes him so popular.

Manilow

It's his looks and manner, Manilow told a London-based magazine in an interview published today.

Women are impressed with his non-threatening image and unsexy clothes, the 37-year-old singer told Woman magazine. They know that "if I took them out to dinner, it would be a glass of wine in front of the fireplace afterwards," he said.

Manilow, who had such hits as "Mandy" and "I Write The Songs," said he doesn't consider himself a very good singer or a terrific performer. He attributes his wide British following largely to luck. He noted that he rarely drinks and views himself "the opposite of the rough show business type."

"There seems to be space for these simple little songs that people are relating to," he said.

NEW YORK (AP) — Astronaut Sally Ride is one of few people who can accurately compare a Big Apple cab ride to a ride in space, and she says a space trip is smoother.

Ride

"A space shuttle is nothing compared to a New York taxicab," said America's first woman in space.

Ms. Ride and her four crewmates on the flight of the space shuttle Challenger were honored Monday by Mayor Edward Koch.

Ms. Ride, pilot Rick Hauck, Col. John Fabian and Dr. Norman Thagard got keys to the city from the mayor. Their crew captain, Robert L. Crippen, was given a "cluster" instead, because he'd received a key to the city following his 1981 shuttle flight.

Midler

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Singer Bette Midler, returning to the concert stage after an unscheduled nine-day rest, dryly told appreciative fans, "Yeah, I showed up."

The Divine Miss M appeared Friday and Saturday nights in Denver and had a Monday night show in Salt Lake City.

Miss Midler had canceled appearances in Minneapolis, St. Louis and Kansas City after collapsing offstage during a performance in Detroit on July 26.

The raucous singer known for her campy sense of humor spent two days in a Detroit hospital for "exhaustion and a gastro-intestinal disorder," a spokesman said.

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Carlo Maria Giulini will be tough to replace as conductor of the Los Angeles Philharmonic, the Philharmonic's executive director acknowledges. But he won't be organizing a search committee to find someone to wave the baton.

"After (Zubin) Mehta and Giulini, there are at most a dozen, properly half a dozen, whom one could consider really of that stature and quality," says executive director Ernest Fleischmann.

South's women may determine 1984 election

WASHINGTON (AP) — The South was almost solid for President Reagan in the 1980 election, but surging political activity by women and blacks in the region casts doubt on whether he would get the same response in 1984.

"You look at the numbers and then you look at the margins of victory in various races and you begin to be concerned," said Republican consultant Susan Bryant, who co-authored a newly released report on registration and voting by women. "There could well be trouble for Republican candidates in 1984."

The electoral impact of women — as measured by registration, voting and share of total electorate — has soared in the South since 1965. The study by Ms. Bryant and Vincent Breglio, said North Carolina, Georgia, Kentucky, Alabama, and Tennessee have felt it the most.

They found a similar pattern, if not quite so dramatic, in Virginia, Louisiana, Florida, and Texas.

Data from the same Census Bureau surveys used by the two consultants showed earlier this year that blacks also are registering and voting in record numbers, particularly in the South. Black leaders, including potential Democratic presidential hopeful Jesse Jackson, are behind a major drive across the South to sign up even more blacks to vote in 1984.

IN EIGHT states — including Kentucky, Louisiana, South Carolina and Tennessee — blacks turned out to vote at a higher rate than whites in the 1982 elections. In seven other states — including Mississippi, Texas and Virginia — blacks and whites voted at roughly equal rates last year.

Reagan won the electoral votes from every Southern state but Georgia in 1980. If he decides to run again, he must do well in the South to counter expected Democratic strength in the East and Midwest.

Wooing the South becomes even more important this time because of population increases which gave it eight additional electoral votes for 1984.

Blacks voted against Reagan by a 90-7 margin in 1980 and can be expected to do so again, if current polls are an indicator.

The increased voting by women is not bad for the GOP in itself, but since the 1980 election, women have demonstrated a more negative attitude toward Reagan and other Republicans than men have. Their attitudes showed in their 1980 voting and in state-level elections in 1982.

FOR EXAMPLE in 1980, The Associated Press-NBC News poll of voters said Southern men voted for Reagan over Carter by a 60-35 margin, while women backed Reagan by a narrower 51-45 edge.

But Ms. Bryant emphasizes that the so-called gender gap and the increased women's vote are not an impossible obstacle for GOP candidates.

"It is solvable. We saw that (in some 1982 races). The key in solving the problem is that the candidate has to accept that women know as much about issues as men and that you can't pander to them...What you have to do is exhibit compassion and feeling."

Breglio and Ms. Bryant work for the GOP through their firm, Research Strategy Management Inc. Breglio has worked for Reagan in past elections.

Throughout the South, women are growing in electoral strength, making up 52.9 percent of the voters in 1980. While the number of Southern men voting in 1980 increased 938,000 over 1976, the number of Southern women jumped 1,297,000, census figures say.

THE GOP consultants found the same pattern at the state level.

In North Carolina in 1976, women voters outnumbered men by 86,000. But by 1980, the gap was 124,000.

In Georgia, men outnumbered women by 2,000 in the 1978 off-year balloting, but women outnumbered men in 1982 by 103,000.

Looking at the numbers another way, women in Alabama made up only 49.8 percent of the voters in 1978, but they cast 55.9 percent of the ballots in 1982.

In voter registration in Tennessee, women led men by 52,000 in 1978. That gap bulged to 126,000 in 1982.

In Kentucky, only 46.5 percent of the women who were registered cast ballots in 1978, but 55.5 percent voted in 1982. Men's turnout edged up from 50.1 percent to 52.5 percent.

DACOWITS wants panel on status of women in Army appointed now

Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON — The Defense Advisory Committee on Women in the Services seems likely to have its request for a special "blue ribbon" panel to oversee a complete re-appraisal of the Army's 1982 review of policy governing women in the Army.

The DACOWITS' executive committee, meeting in public session at the Pentagon Monday, was slightly upset to learn that the panel they had recommended in April and specifically requested in a letter to the Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger in June had not been appointed.

Meanwhile, the Army had ordered its own review of a 1982 decision to remove approximately 1200 women out of jobs deemed by some advisors as too close to combat. In some of the military jobs, women were removed on grounds the work involved too much weight-lifting or was unsuitable for women.

The Army has nearly finished its review. Some officers predicted Monday that women would be restored to some jobs not in combat areas, but still carrying heavy responsiblity, and requiring skills the Army needs for full readiness.

But, because the blue ribbon panel was expected to work along with the Army in the reassessment, it was learned after the DACOWITS meeting that the Army will be forced to postpone its final decision until the panel can be appointed and start its work.

Dr. Mary Evelyn Blagg Huey of Denton, DACOWITS chair and author of the letter to Weinberger, recently was promised cooperation from the Defense Secretary.

Dr. Huey did not criticize the Defense Department for not having named the panel. "I think they had until October to produce results," she said. But the situation is complicated by the fact the Army was close to acting on results of its own re-assessment.

Lt. Gen. Dean Tice, military advisor to the Defense Department on women, said "If it means a delay, it will not be but for 30 to 60 days and that will be well worth it to get it done right."

Anchorwoman Craft's victory draws mixed reactions from news media

By The Associated Press

The $500,000 jury award to Christine Craft, the former Kansas City anchorwoman who claimed she was demoted because of her age, her looks and her sex, drew cries of "Bravo!" from female newscasters — and worried comments from TV executives.

"Bravo to the jury and to Ms. Craft for having the guts to have her image dissected and defended,' said Carol Martin of WCBS-TV in New York City. "It is a consciousness-raising decision for viewers, for TV management and for women behind and in front of the camera."

But ABC News president Roone Arledge said the national spotlight on Ms. Craft's trial is bad news for the business.

"The thing that really troubles me is that it is a condemnation of our industry, that people have to be judged by standards other than pure journalism," Arledge said.

"It is a fact of life that exists," he said. "The criteria are different in television, as long as your face is out there as your byline and you are judged by all the cosmetic things that go with that."

Reuven Frank, president of NBC News, said: "I think what will happen is that the legal departments will instruct news executives on what to say. They will have little seminars all over the country. That will be the chief result."

Ms. Craft, former anchorwoman for KMBC-TV in Kansas City, was awarded $375,000 in compensation and $125,000 in punitive damages by federal jurors who found the station's former owner, Metromedia Inc., guilty of fraud because they told Ms. Craft she was hired solely for her journalistic skills.

The jury also recommended that a judge find Metromedia sexually discriminated against the 38-year-old Ms. Craft, but ruled Metromedia did not violate equal-pay laws when it paid her less than her male co-anchor at the station.

Metromedia lawyers said Ms. Craft was demoted after studies showed she drew a negative reaction from viewers. She claimed she was ousted because management felt she was "too old, too unattractive and not deferential enough to men."

"A station must have the right to let somebody go," said Robert Bennett, president of Metromedia Broadcasting and Production. "Now we may have to make decisions in a different way, but we all still have to decide, based on the reaction these people have to the viewers."

Anchorwomen generally applauded the verdict, but some were cynical about its possible effect on their jobs.
