Texaco's Earnings Top List

NEW YORK (AP) — Texaco Inc., the nation's third-largest oil company, today reported its earnings had more than tripled in the third quarter from the same period last year. The increase was the biggest yet announced by one of the oil companies.

Texaco, based in White Plains, N.Y., said earnings had increased 211 percent in the July-September period, from $197.1 million, or 72 cents a share, to $612.2 million, or $2.25 a share. This year's figures included a one-time gain of $103.2 million, or 38 cents a share, from a required tax carry-forward of foreign operating losses and tax credits from previous years.

Texaco's sales in the period were $10.25 billion, up from $7.04 billion in last year's third quarter.

Texaco attributed most of the earnings gain to operations overseas, where a lack of price controls allow oil companies to pass through higher crude oil costs more quickly than they can in the United States.

Exxon, the industry giant, earlier this week reported a 118 percent increase in its third quarter profits and No. 2 Mobil said its earnings surged 131 percent, both largely because of foreign operations.

President Carter Thursday cited surging oil company profits as an argument for Congressional approval of his proposal to tax revenues resulting from the government's decision to deregulate domestic crude oil.

But Charles J. DiBona, the president of the American Petroleum Institute, an oil industry lobbying group, said the large third-quarter profit increases posted by oil companies represent a recovery from previous depressed earnings.

New Price Surge Jolts Consumers

WASHINGTON (AP) — Pushed by higher prices for food, fuel and housing, consumer prices increased 1.1 percent in September as inflation continued above a 13 percent annual rate, the government said today.

At the same time, it reported that the purchasing power of workers' paychecks declined another 0.7 percent during the month and was down by 4.4 percent from a year earlier.

There was nothing in the September price report to indicate any improvement in the nation's highly disturbing rate of inflation. It matched August's 1.1 percent increase and was the ninth month this year that prices have increased by about 1 percent.

Overall food prices, including restaurant meals, climbed 0.9 percent during September, the biggest increase in five months, and grocery store prices were up 1.1 percent. Food prices had shown little or no increase in the previous three monhs.

Fuel prices rose sharply again during the month, with home heating oil up 5.6 percent and gasoline prices advancing 3.1 percent to a national average of 99.8 cents a gallon for all types.

The overall cost of housing rose another 1.2 percent, with home mortgage financing up 1.8 percent, partly the result of government efforts to slow the economy by increasing interest rates.

However, even larger increases in mortgage costs probably lie ahead, because the latest actions by the Federal Reserve Board to push interest rates to record levels will not show up in the Consumer Price Index for another month or two, said Patrick Jackman, a Labor Department analyst.

Jackman said consumer prices have increased at a 13.2 percent annual rate during the first nine months of 1979, meaning that if the same trend continues through December, that would be the total increase for the year.

It would be the highest inflation for any year since 1946, when prices were up 18.2 percent after the government lifted wartime price controls.

The Labor Department said its Consumer Price Index stood in September at 223.4 of the 1967 average of 100, meaning that goods and services priced at $100 in 1967 had risen in cost to $223.40 last month.

Prices had increased 12.1 percent in the 12-month period ending in September.

Jackman said the worsening of food prices again following four months of improvement clouds the outlook for an easing of inflation in coming months.

The Carter administration originally had forecast an easing of consumer prices to below a 10 percent rate by the end of the year.

"It's not a very pleasant forecast ... I don't see us getting worse, but it looks like we'll be staying right around where we are, with the highest rate of inflation since World War II," Jackman said.

The increase in food prices in September resulted largely from a 2.7 percent rise in fruit and vegetable prices and higher prices for beef and eggs. Food prices had been unchanged in August.

The Labor Department said the 5.6 percent increase in fuel oil prices brought the total rise for the 12 months ending in September to 56.1 percent, the result of price increases for crude oil imposed by oil-exporting nations.

The average price of home heating oil was 84.8 cents a gallon in September.

Garbage Strike Closes Schools

HONOLULU (AP) — All public schools in Hawaii were ordered closed starting today and will remain shut until garbage that has piled up during a five-day strike by about 8,000 public workers can be cleaned up, officials said.

School Superintendent Charles Clark announced the shutdown after the state Department of Health ordered the Department of Education to clean up the schools by this afternoon.

"At the present time, I don't know how we are going to be able to do this without the essential custodial help," Clark said.

The shutdown affects about 167,000 students at 230 schools.

The order also followed a protest over unsanitary conditions during which about 1,600 students — who expressed sympathy for the striking state workers — linked arms to prevent 150 teachers from crossing a picket line.

The incident occurred when the teachers tried to enter the campus en masse. They were met by boos, chants and jeers, and retreated across the street when a picket captain refused to guarantee their safety.

Three teachers at McKinley High School here were struck by rocks during the protest, but none was seriously injured. There were no arrests, said police who were called to the school.

Thirty-one schools held only two-hour sessions Thursday because of unsanitary bathrooms and mounting garbage. McKinley was not among them.

The blue-collar workers — including school janitors, garbage collectors, sewage personnel, park keepers and school cafeteria workers — struck the state and its four counties Monday in a dispute over wages.

Garbage piled up and the threat of infection increased at state-run hospitals as the striking workers ignored a court order to provide services the state considers essential to public health and safety.

Circuit Judge Harold Shintaku scheduled a hearing today on the state's request to find the United Public Workers in contempt of court for failing to supply the needed 900 workers.

Meanwhile, at a hospital on the island of Kauai, members of UPW Unit 10 refused to cross picket lines set up by strikers represented by UPW Unit 1. State Health Director George Yuen said 59 elderly persons might have to be evacuated.

Late Thursday, federal mediator Gayle Wineriter announced the two sides had agreed to resume negotiations on Monday.

Wineriter said he had been talking with representatives for both the union and the state and counties for several days. He said he was not optimistic about an early settlement because both sides were far apart.

"I expressed concern that regardless how firm their positions are, they should at least make an effort to resolve the current work stoppage," he said.

The union is seeking a $165 monthly pay raise in each year of a two-year contract. Management has offered a $70 increase for the first nine months and another $100 for the remainder of a two-year agreement. The workers earn an average $84 a month.

Kennedy In Race; Funds Accepted

Under the election law, a candidate who accepts contributions is legally a candidate unless he returns the money.

The Massachusetts Democrat, who has not announced his candidacy but has give concrete indications he will challenge Carter, accepted more than $75,000 in contributions and pledges at a private cocktail party Thursday night at the Manhattan home of his sister, Pat Lawford.

Those agreeing to contribute $1,000 each included actress Lauren Bacall, Manhattan Borough President Andrew Stein and Theodore Sorenson, the speech writer for John and Robert Kennedy.

Under the law, Kennedy must register his political committee within 10 days of accepting contributions. His supporters plan to do that Monday at a news conference at the Kennedy campaign headquarters in downtown Washington, less than a mile from the White House.

New York thus became the first state in which Kennedy qualified for federal campaign aid. To qualify for federal funds, a candidate must raise $5,000 in each of 20 states in contributions of $250 or less.

Although Kennedy has not announced officially, he has been calling a number of Democratic officials around the country in recent days letting them know he will run. His office earlier announced he would form a Kennedy for President committee next week.

Kennedy did not mention the campaign contributions in a speech prepared for delivery today at the Long Island Jewish Hillside Medical Center, but he launched a scathing attack on the administration.

On Thursday night, he joined his sisters, Jean Smith and Pat Lawford, to mingle with New York literary society and celebrate publication of his new book, "Our Day and Generation."

In his speech at the medical center today, Kennedy said Carter's piecemeal approach to national health insurance is "doomed to failure" and is not supported by the American people.

He called his own comprehensive national health insurance program "the last, best chance" to halt the staggering cost of medical care, and lashed out at those who say the nation needs such a program "later" but can't afford it now — a clear reference to Carter.

"They offer the layaway plan — a piecemeal approach which would enact the lowest common denominator of benefits now, and defer the tough, central issues of cost controls and systems reform to another day," Kennedy said.

Kennedy said his health insurance program, when phased in, would cover all Americans.

OSHA Probing Deadly Mishap

A-J News Services

PHILLIPS — Two investigators from the federal Occupational Safety and Health Administration office in Lubbock today are investigating a paralyzing gas or acid leak that killed two refinery workers here Thursday.

Eleven other workers were injured in the accident while trying to repair equipment at the Phillips Petroleum refinery. Of those injured, Ron Baker, 40, of Fritch remained in "very critical" condition today at Northwest Texas Hospital in Amarillo.

The dead were identified as Fran McGahen, 29, and Kim Manning, both of Fritch. Manning was taken with Baker to Northwest Texas Hospital, where he died at 5 p.m. Thursday.

McGahen was pronounced dead at Borger's North Plains Hospital about 1:30 p.m.

Most of the victims overcome by the toxic substance fell about 20 feet from the platform where they were working.

Jerry Bailey of Lubbock's OSHA office said today that two compliance and safety officers were in the process of conducting an investigation at the refinery for violations of OSHA safety standards.

If the refinery is found in violation, Phillips could be issued citations for the offenses and fined.

The two men sent to the scene were a safety specialist and an industrial hygienist, Bailey said, but a final report on the investigation is not expected for at least a week.

Official Urges Teachers To Take Political Role

By LISA PAIKOWSKI

A Tennessee educator urged some 4,000 teachers and school administrators today to utilize persistence and sound judgment to improve education and to work for "kid-oriented" schools.

Carl Ross, national lecturer and principal of a Nashville, Tenn., elementary school noted for outstanding innovations and achievements, addressed educators at the Texas State Teachers Association District XVII convention at Memorial Civic Center.

The educators also heard TSTA president-elect Dora Scott call for political involvement on the part of the association members in order to achieve passage of legislation that would help students and teachers in the state and nation.

Ross, called the "Will Rogers of Education," used humor to emphasize the importance of educators becoming "pacesetters and go-getters" in their jobs.

He told the group to "expect more of yourself than perhaps you should" and "be willing to give it all you've got all the time."

He urged teachers to use sound judgment and told them, "Don't be afraid to be included in doing something neat for kids just because no one else does it."

Ross also preached persistence in achieving educational goals. He told the educators to fight the battles "that really matter" and to resist taking no for an answer "the first time around."

The educational innovator warned against "teacher burnout" however, and told teachers not to bring their problems home. "Turn that stuff off when you get home. Love thyself — you've got to love number one."

Ross also asked the educators if they are "willing to deal with boys and girls and fight for them," urging "kid-oriented education."

He advocated learning that is interesting and "spectacular," noting that the students in his school receive neither

Dry, Sunny Weekend Forecast

A-J News Services

Area football games tonight will be played under ideal temperatures, but significant south winds of 10 to 15 mph could be a factor, weathermen predict.

Despite the expected arrival of a weak cold front in the area Saturday, generally fair skies are forecast for today and tonight and partly cloudy skies Saturday.

Temperatures were expected to be in the mid-80s today, low 50s tonight and high 70s Saturday.

Lubbock's low this morning was 54 degrees after a Thursday afternoon high of 79.

Winds will be southwesterly at 15 to 20 mph and gusting today and southerly at 10 to 15 mph tonight.

Wind warnings are out for area lakes today.

Texas had clear skies for the third night in a row, and pleasant fall weather is forecast over the state today.

The statewide forecast calls for clear skies and afternoon high temperatures in the 80s.

Readings in the Big Bend area of Southwest Texas are expected to be more like summer than fall with highs reaching into the upper 90s.

Forecasts called for the pleasant weather to last at least through Saturday.

Fleeing Hostage Shot By Dallas Officers

DALLAS (AP) — Two policemen on duty where a gunman was holding three persons hostage saw a man running from the scene and ordered him to stop. When the man continued running, the officers, assuming he was the gunman, opened fire.

But the victim, Lee Douglas Page, 39, who collapsed and died of the gunshot wounds, was one of the hostages. He had been running in an attempt to escape the gunman Thursday.

Police Chief Glen King called it a tragic case of mistaken identity and placed the two officers on indefinite leave for their own good.

"The two officers believed him to be the kidnapper. He began to run in a crouch ... to a position north between the houses. They twice called for him to stop. He failed to do so, and from a distance of approximately 75 feet they fired on him," King said.

"Because of the traumatic nature of this, because the innocent person's life was lost in it and because of the effect this likely will have on their mental and emotional conditions, I am placing them on leave ... to be sure everything is in order as far as they are personally concerned," King said.

Police said the gunman, who surrendered 10 minutes after Page was killed, had abducted his wife and a child at gunpoint from his mother-in-law's home about 8 a.m. The mother-in-law called police, who followed the gunman as he marched his family down the street at gunpoint.

Page happened to be getting into his car when the group approached. Police said the gunman pointed his pistol at Page and ordered him to drive them away from the area.

Meanwhile, officers said, other police units arrived. When one officer tried to hide behind a car, the gunman fired at him, then ordered his family and Page into the car.

Page backed the car across the street into a neighbor's front yard and leaped out in a daring escape attempt.

Police said Page had run about 35 feet when he was hit in the head, leg and buttocks by gunfire from officers Randall Jackson, 35, and James Brigdon, 32, who were armed with a 12-gauge shotgun and a .38-caliber revolver.

King said he plans to visit Page's widow and their two sons, aged 13 and 9, to express the police department's sympathy.

"It was a very tragic thing," King said. "We all feel very badly about it."

King said it "was an error on their part" but it "was an error that was not inconsistent with the facts that were there."

He said, "had the hostage been the kidnapper, the shooting would have been justified under state law and the policies of the police department."

Lacrosse Tilt To Benefit MDA

The Texas Tech Lacrosse Club will meet the University Of New Mexico at 2 p.m. Saturday in a benefit game for Lubbock's Muscular Dystrophy Association.

All proceeds from the $1 tickets will go to the local MD group. The game is the second annual benefit competition for the club, which last year won a division championship.

The Red Raiders beat New Mexico 25-6 in Albuquerque when they met for the first time in September.

The game will be played in the R.P. Fuller Track Stadium across from the Municipal Coliseum on the Tech campus.

Other university division teams in the Southwest Lacrosse Association are Texas A&M, SMU, Baylor, Houston, LSU and the University Of Texas. Tech beat the Longhorns 8-5 in last year's benefit game.

Governor Opposes Amendment

AUSTIN (UPI) — Gov. Bill Clements has voiced opposition to one of three proposed constitutional amendments, saying "no responsible chief executive" would support the measure.

The proposal, one of three facing voters in the Nov. 6 special election, would give the legislature authority to delegate to a committee its review power over rules and regulations adopted by state agencies.

The governor said Thursday the amendment is a clear encroachment on the separation of powers principle and would permit the legislature to step into the executive branch of state government.

"No responsible chief executive would approve of this amendment to the state constitution," he said. "If it were adopted, the legislature could delegate its rule-making oversight to a comittee made up of a handful of members."

Clements said the proposal also could make it easier for special interest groups to influence agency rule making, and allow a handful of legislators to interfere with and delay administrative rules necessary for implementing legislative policy.

The governor indicated support for the other two proposals — one revising the manner in which notaries public are licensed, and the other providing state guarantees for payment of loans made by private lending institutions for the purchase of farm and ranch land.

Clements also said he soon would announce his selection of a new member to serve on the Texas Supreme Court.

The Supreme Court vacancy is the highest office Clements has had the chance to fill since becoming the state's first Republican governor this century. He has indicated the nominee probably will be a fellow Republican.

Clements said candidates for the nomination have been narrowed to two, and he expects shortly to name a replacement for Associate Justice Sam D. Johnson.

Johnson resigned to accept appointment to the U.S. 5th Circuit Court of Appeals.

Clements also said he is involved in an effort to recruit qualified GOP candidates for Railroad Commission races in 1980.

Davis Defense Expected To Prepare Final Debate

FORT WORTH (AP) — Cullen Davis' defense team was expected to begin wrapping up its case today in the millionaire industrialist's murder-for-hire trial.

Thursday, a Tarrant County grand jury decided not to investigate a complaint against an unidentified photographer who took pictures of lead prosecutor Jack Strickland and witness Priscilla Davis as they left the criminal courts building one night last week.

Strickland said the man might have been part of a plot to harass Mrs. Davis, the defendant's former wife. He said she had received "numerous threats and abusive letters."

Because District Judge Gordon Gray had a prior commitment Thursday, the trial was recessed for a day.

Davis is accused of plotting the murder of his divorce judge, Joe Eidson. Davis, however, contends he is the object of a plot by Priscilla, state witness David McCrory and others.

On Wednesday, Gray refused to allow the jury to hear testimony from one defense witness, Jerry Jones.

Jones, a onetime business associate of FBI informant McCrory, said he and McCrory were in a bar once when McCrory left to make a phone call.

Jones said he then heard "a real loud scream. The place was real quiet."

On his return, Jones said, McCrory explained the scream by claiming "he could kill a rat just by screaming at it."

Jones said he never saw evidence that this method of killing rats worked.

Earlier, under cross-examination from defense attorney Richard "Racehorse" Haynes, McCrory testified he had never said he could kill a rat by screaming at it.

This brought a laugh from the courtroom, but not from Gray.

"It's beyond my wildest dreams how (this testimony) could be of any possible relevance," Gray said.

But Haynes, attempting to discredit McCrory with the story, said, "I don't think you can just paint with broad strokes without doing injustice to the litigant."

The jury, he said, is "entitled to as much material as they need ... Where the state has joined issue with us, we have resolved those issues."

"This really is pretty key evidence," Haynes said. "The fact that you don't see it now makes me marvel at my own genius."

The South Plains Professional Photographers Association has scheduled a seminar Saturday and Sunday at Lubbock Memorial Civic Center.

The program, scheduled to begin with registration at 1 p.m. Saturday, will be held from 1 to 9 p.m. each day.

Bob and Linda Mintz of Irving, outdoor portrait specialists and school photographers, will be featured on the first day's program.

El Carlson of Meisel Photochrome Corp. will present a special effects program.

Pat Trotzuk, also of Meisel, will speak to the group on the topic, "Designing with Photography," a program dealing with interior design and photo murals.

The seminar, which attracts photographers from throughout the South Plains region, will also feature a print judging program. Photos must be mounted on 16x20 stock, according to Lonnie Adrian of Earth, president of the association.

Robert L. Suddarth of Lubbock, vice president and program chairman, said the prints will be judged by the program speakers.

Cost for the seminar is $5 to members. Annual membership dues are $15.

Clements Orders Probe Of Sexual Bias Charges

AUSTIN (UPI) — A state lawmaker has received numerous complaints of sexual discrimination and harassment of Health Department employees and Gov. Bill Clements has ordered an investigation of "personnel problems out there."

Clements told reporters at his regular weekly news conference Thursday he has asked former Rep. Don Cavness to investigate the allegations of sexual discrimination and harassment at the health department.

A clerk, Nancy Drew, filed a complaint with federal officials alleging her former supervisor made sexual advances toward her, pinched and grabbed her in the office and demoted her to a job in the mailroom when she complained to his supervisor.

"Many times he grabbed me and he grabbed other women in the office because I saw him do it and he just laughed at us for being humiliated," Mrs. Drew, 38, said of her former supervisor.

Mrs. Drew, a divorced mother of three, said nasty remarks, pinches and other advances made conditions at the office "intolerable" for women, but she has continued to work at the health department for nearly four years because, "I cannot afford to lose my job."

Mrs. Drew said she complained without avail to her supervisor's boss and to other officials in the department and was told, "Even if I went to Dr. Moore he would not lift a finger to help me."

Raymond Moore is the state health commissioner and executive director of the 4,600-employee state agency.

Mrs. Drew said she was abruptly demoted and transfered from her position as a clerk-typist and bookkeeper to a job sorting mail in March when she refused to talk to the offensive supervisor about anything other than her office duties.

Clements told reporters "You can be sure we will be looking into the one incident that has come to our attention, and I think that will be the key that will unlock the door to some other personnel problems out there."

Rep. Wilhelmina Delco, D-Austin, said Mrs. Drew's complaint is only one of 42 she has received from constituents about sexual and racial discrimination in the Health Department.

Health Group Says Smallpox Eradicated Forever

NAIROBI, Kenya (AP) — The World Health Organization today declared the world free of smallpox and said the epidemic disease that once killed and scarred millions will not return.

"Smallpox has finally been crushed," said Halfdan Mahler, director general of the health organization, proclaiming victory over "one of the most treacherous diseases ever known."

According to WHO records, the last known smallpox case outside a laboratory was diagnosed exactly two years ago today, when a cook took ill in a town in Somalia.

Since then, 6,000 local health workers have conducted an intensive vaccination and surveillance campaign in Somalia and three neighboring East African countries that share the same nomadic population — Kenya, Ethiopia and Djibouti. No new victims were discovered.

Dr. Jan Kostrzewski, of Poland, told a gathering of health specialists here that health survey teams met in Nairobi this week and certified the four countries free of the disease. They were the last four countries lacking certification, he said.

"For the first time in human history, cooperation that crossed political and cultural barriers has brought to eradication a disease present for thousands of years," Dr. Kostrzewski said. "This is a historic moment for Africa and the world."

He recommended that routine smallpox vaccinations be terminated and that nations no longer require vaccination certificates from foreign travelers. Many countries have already complied with the recommendations, which WHO estimates could save more than $1 billion a year in public health costs.

WHO doctors say there is no chance smallpox will reappear. The only remaining chance of infection would be from virus stocks stored in laboratories.

Two cases of laboratory-acquired smallpox occurred in Birmingham, England in 1978. But because of their origin, WHO did not count them in its figures.

Vaccination had virtually eliminated smallpox from Europe and North America when WHO began its campaign to eliminate the disease in 1967. At the time, smallpox still was a major problem in parts of South America, Africa and Asia. As recently as 1966, smallpox was endemic in 30 nations and afflicted about 2.5 million persons.

The last known case in South America occurred in 1971.

Mailer Admits Taking Risk

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — Norman Mailer says he took a calculated risk in writing about executed killer Gary Gilmore because readers are often sympathetic to central characters — however monstrous.

MAILER

"By the act of writing about somebody, you arouse some sympathy for them," Mailer said. His intention, he said, was not to glorify Gilmore but to inspire "a sense of awe about the complexity of human nature."

Mailer spoke Thursday at the University of Utah, concluding a 10-day tour promoting "The Executioner's Song," a 1,056-page work on the life of Gilmore.

Gilmore was executed Jan. 17, 1977, by a prison firing squad about 20 miles from where Mailer spoke. His was the first execution in the United States in nearly 10 years. There have been two since.

Mailer said he relied on the reader to see Gilmore as representative of all people "because his moral nature is so complex."

"He was a punk, and why pay attention to a punk? Well, he was a punk with a piece of God's substance," Mailer said.

Judge Rules For Lyricist's Wife

NEW YORK (AP) — A little bit of Alan Jay Lerner's Broadway hits belong to the lyricist's fourth wife, a New York judge has ruled.

LERNER

Lerner's personal property was placed in receivership Thursday by a judge who said the writer has failed to make a number of alimony payments to his fourth wife, Micheline.

"This is the ninth occasion that (she) has had to resort to enforcement proceedings in order to obtain support payments due her under a Nevada divorce decree," Justice Hortense Gabel ruled in Manhattan Supreme Court.

Mrs. Lerner, who was named as receiver of all Lerner's personal property in New York State, was seeking $12,499.98 in back alimony from July 1 to September 1.

Her attorney, Raoul Felder, said the ruling would allow Mrs. Lerner to collect Lerner's royalties from such hit shows as "My Fair Lady," "Camelot" and "Brigadoon."

Lerner, 60, also faces contempt charges for not paying $50,000 in back alimony under an earlier court order.

Jackie's Mother Marries

NEWPORT, R.I. (AP) — Jacqueline Kennedy Onassis has a new stepfather — her second.

Janet Lee Auchincloss, Mrs. Onassis' mother, was married Thursday at the family estate in Newport to Bingham Morris, a New York investment banker — a man she has known since childhood.

About two dozen persons attended, including Mrs. Onassis and her two children, Caroline and John F. Kennedy Jr. Lee Radziwill, sister of Mrs. Onassis, said the wedding at Hammersmith Farm was a "happy family gathering that couldn't have been lovelier."

Wedding Rings Can Be Hazardous

PRINCETON, Minn. (AP) — Princeton's newest policeman has learned firsthand how the city responds to emergency calls.

The Lighter Side Of Today's News

Officer Norman Trushenski was entering the house where he has been staying since taking the job a week ago, slipped and jammed the metal handle of the screen door between his wedding ring and his finger.

After struggling unsuccessfully for a while, Trushenski called for help and someone called the fire department.

But because the nature of the emergency wasn't clear, fire officials sent three fire trucks, an ambulance and squads from the police department and the county sheriff's office.

Trushenski's rescuers took the door off its hinges but were no able to cut through either the ring or the door handle. So they put Trushenski's hand and the door handle in cold water. The swelling eventually subsided enough that they could slip the handle out.

France's Role In Executions Of Jews Rehashed In Trial

PARIS (AP) — The trial of three Germans alleged to have organized the extermination of French Jewry has rekindled the painful debate here over what role the French played during the annihilation.

The subject surfaced last spring when the Hollywood television series "Holocaust" was screened here and was born again in a heated debate in the press triggered by the trial in Cologne, West Germany.

On trial for allegedly sending 73,000 French Jews to their death in Auschwitz are Kurt Lischka, 70, the former deputy occupation chief of Paris, and two ex-SS men, Ernst Heinrichsohn, 59, and Herbert Hagen, 66.

Their trial opened shortly after a French court, in an unrelated action, decided in favor of pursuing criminal action against Jean Leguay, a top police official during the Nazi occupation of France.

Leguay, 70, has been indicted for allegedly helping round up 12,884 Paris Jews for deportation to concentration camps.

The arrested Jews were held in an indoor bicycle racing stadium, or velodrome.

The so-called Velodrome Roundup is considered the most notorious manifestation of the infamy Frenchmen would like to forget — collaboration with the Nazis.

Leguay insists he "never had any concern from 1940 to 1944 other than to protect the French from their occupiers," and "I am aware of having succeeded at that, given the limited means at our disposal."

The latest debate blew up in the pages of the respected newspaper Le Monde, with an article by journalist Annie Kriegel calling wartime France "pale, chilly, egoistic, Machiavellian or deafly indifferent to the tragic destiny of the Children of Israel."

Pierre Bourget, author of a book about the Nazi occupation of Paris, was quoted as saying Miss Kriegel's assessment "appears, in general, to be correct." But in an article in Le Monde, he went on to defend his country's behavior, touching off a flurry of letters to the editor.

Supporters, Opponents Of Junta Create Riot

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador AP) — Supportrs and opponents of El Salvador's new junta battled with fists and rocks, sending mobs on a looting and arson spree as the government stood by and continued talks for the release of 300 hostages held by 1,000 leftists in the labor and economics ministries.

The brawl broke out in a downtown plaza Thursday night after Christian Democratic Party leader Jose Napoleon Duarte, a junta supporter, returned from a seven-year exile in Venezuela and urged more than 50,000 followers to "taketo the streets before terrorists dominate them."

About 100 leftists arrived on motorcycles, jeered Duarte, then set fire tothe platform he was speaking from. Duarte fled, fist and rock fights broke out, and backfire from the leftists' motorcycles, mistakenly thought to be gunfire, sent other groups fleeing in panic.

The fleeing mobs were swelled by other Salvadoreans in the streets and the hordes then began looting four department stores, carting off office furniture, typewriters, radios, and kitchen and sports equipment. The mobs also set fire to two buildings.

Police had no reports on casualties and made no effort to intervene during the mayhem, but Red Cross ambulances were standing by just blocks away as people ran in panic through San Salvador's narrow streets.

Street corner agitators encouraged the looting, but mothers of political prisoners, who had set up a tent and occupied the plaza to demand information on the fate of their loved ones, used loudspeakers in an attempt to calm the mobs.

Before the riot erupted, Duarte, an unsuccessful presidential candidate in 1972 whose running mate is now a junta member, told his followers, "I have returned to ask the people of El Salvador to forget fear and take to the streets before terrorists dominate them."

Abortion Trial Delayed For 11 Spanish Women

BILBAO, Spain (AP) — The trial of 11 Spanish women accused of having or performing abortions was suspended indefinitely today following violent demonstrations in Madrid. Two defendants failed to appear in court and their lawyers convinced the judges to avoid further confrontations between the feminists and club-swinging police.

More than 2,000 women demonstrated outside the criminal court building in this Basque capital as three judges called the case and then suspended it. No date was set for resumption of the trial.

The missing defendants were not identified, but defense lawyers said one of the two had been missing for more than four months.

Abortion is illegal in Spain, where Catholicism is the state religion. But a wave of pro-abortion rallies swept the nation Thursday, and feminists, demanding amnesty for the defendants, had promised more protests today and during the weekend.

In a clash Thursday in downtown Madrid, police drove buses at a marching column of 600 feminists, then pursued the fleeing protesters with clubs and smoke grenades. Several demonstrators were injured. It was the second pro-abortion rally there in five days.

Demonstrations by women also were reported Thursday in Valencia, the Canary Islands, the resort island of Majorca and the university town of Santiago de Compostela, where police chased 100 women from a city hall sit-in.

A spokeswoman for a group calling itself the Assembly of Women said she expected hundreds of feminists from around the country to demonstrate today in Bilbao, 200 miles north of Madrid. At least 20 women planned to chain themselves outside the courthouse, she said.

Majority Votes For Home Rule

MADRID, Spain (AP) — Voters in the northern Basque and Catalan regions opted overwhelmingly for restoration of limited home rule but there was no indication Basque separatists were ready to end their guerrilla war for total independence from the Spanish government.

Final official results were expected later today, but the Basque Nationalist Party, a moderate faction that supported the autonomy plan, said 88 percent of those who voted in the three Basque provinces approved home rule.

The Interior Ministry in Madrid confirmed the figure and said approval was running at about 80 percent in the northeastern province of Catalan. A ministry spokesman said their was a near-60 percent turnout in each of the two regions, despite a day-long drizzle.

Both the Basques and the Catalans lost the autonomy they had traditionally enjoyed under the kings of Spain after they opposed fascist dictator Gen. Francisco Franco in the Spanish Civil War. Franco revoked home rule in the Basque provinces after his troops overran them in 1937. He stripped the Catalans of autonomy after winning the war in 1939.

$1750 "Dish" Hiding in Your Home?

NILES, Ill.—A major art exchange here reports that a man who found several "dishes" in his attic was amazed to learn that one was valued at $1750.00.

The exchange says that, while this price is unusually high, exceptional collector's plates have been appreciating quickly.

To aid investors, the exchange offers a free report on what to look for, when to buy, what to pay and much more, including opportunities in promising plates still at low prices.

To get your free report with no obligation, just send your name, address, and zip code before Saturday of next week to: The Bradford Exchange, Dept. 85443, 9301 Milwaukee Avenue, Niles, Illinois 60648. A postcard will do.

Double Dip One Too Many

FLAWS IN the Social Security system which have forced it to serve more purposes than it can handle properly have escalated its cost past the point where the wage earner is able to pay his share of the burden.

J. W. Van Gorkom, a member of the Quadrennial Advisory Council on Social Security, warns in a study published this week by the American Enterprise Institute that without basic changes the SS structure will collapse into "another welfare program."

To correct the current drift, Van Gorkom proposes four changes. They are:

* REMOVE MEDICARE from Social Security because Medicare benefits are unrelated to earnings;
* Eliminate the $122 minimum Social Security benefit because other programs such as food stamps have made it superfluous. "Only double-dippers and others who try to beat the system would be hurt" he says.
* Change the spouse's benefit. Because it is not politically feasible to eliminate it, the author recommends a compromise that would treat married couples as an economic unit, viewing the benefit earned by either as a benefit earned by one-half of each; and
* Provide only a basic minimum income.

Van Gorkom criticizes efforts to make Social Security the primary source of retirement income due to the resulting costs and the deterrent effect on personal savings.

"It is...essential that (Social Security) be viewed as only one part of an overall income replacement system, which should encompass three parts," Van Gorkom writes. These are: voluntary savings, involuntary savings and supplemental systems.

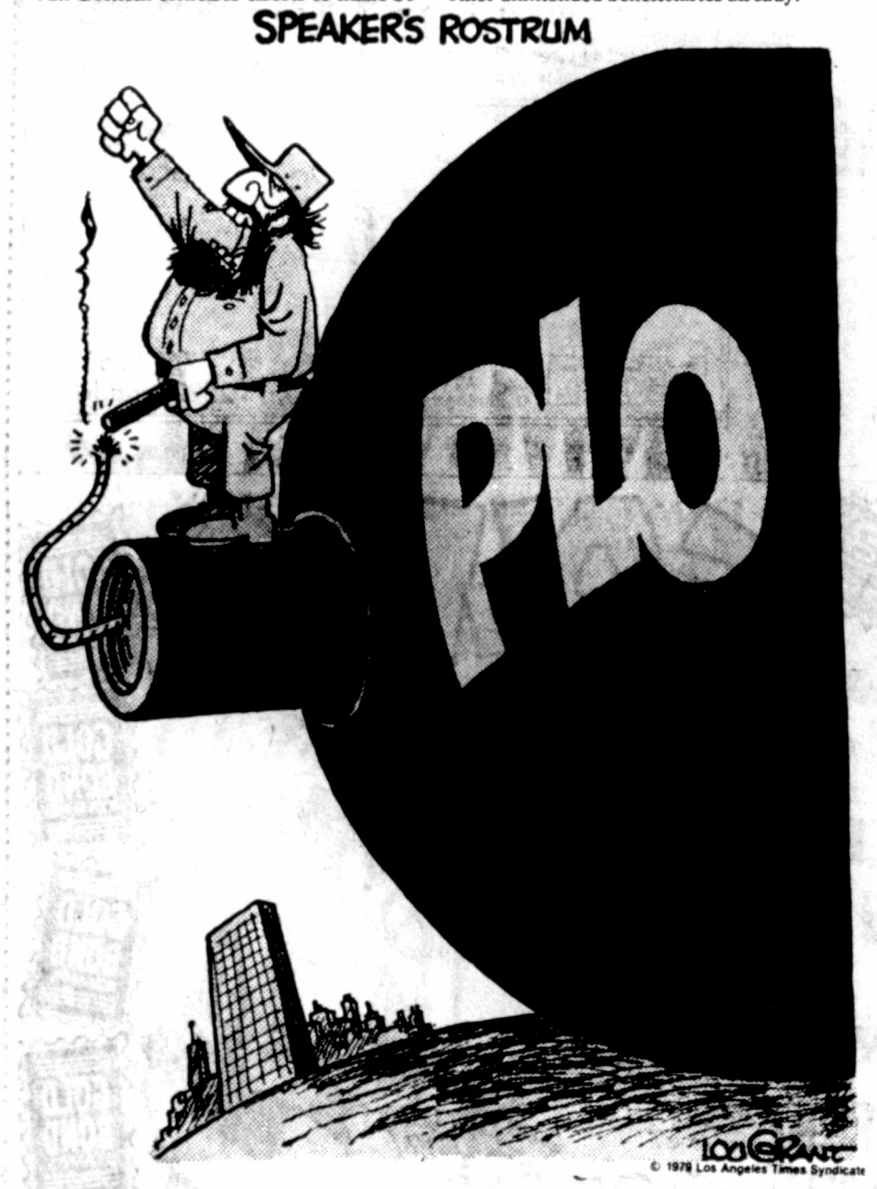

VOLUNTARY SAVINGS are essential to the economy because they are a significant source of the nation's capital.

Second, compulsory saving in the form of payroll taxes, since society has guaranteed a basic minimum income to retirees it has a right to guard itself against those who fail to save voluntarily and become public charges.

Third, supplemental support systems should be provided for those who may earn too little in their life to save voluntarily. They must be helped, but that is the rationale for programs such as food stamps.

Steps to help lower paid workers by tilting the benefit scale farther toward them have instead progressively bent the system toward welfare and incidentally increased the windfall received by double-dippers and other unintended beneficiaries already.

ONE MAN'S OPINION

The Best Teacher

WITH $1.1 BILLION cash on deposit in Lubbock banks and a $1 billion cotton crop in the fields, the South Plains economy is ginning right along.

Add in another billion-dollar farm-level value of grain crops and cattle, take into account deposits in area banks, add in the savings and loan association deposits, and you have a picture of a good business climate for the Christmas season.

Economists estimate that farm-level income multiplies itself by 3 or 3.5 times before it leaves the Lubbock area. On that basis, the rough estimate of $2 billion in farm income this fall means at least $6 billion worth of business activity.

RECENT DRIVES through the countryside confirm the beauty and promise of this year's harvest. It's impossible to put much stock in pessimistic moans and groans about the immediate future while looking out over mile after mile of heavily loaded cotton.

The Lubbock area hardly knew the nation had a 1974 recession, except that it was in all the papers, and the one we're in now likewise appears unlikely to be felt to any real extent here.

It's great to be alive in a region where anybody with get-up-and-go can share in such God-given prosperity.

Remember the good old days when, if a school kid was looking for his pot, it was because he needed some paste?

Delayed by Congressional business in Washington, U.S. Rep. Kent Hance was about to board a 3:40 a.m. flight home when he had a change of mind.

"I got to thinking," he said, "that any pilot stuck with flying at that hour surely might be a rookie or on probation!"

I WONDER HOW many of the region's school teachers who are gathered here today would measure up to my Miss Muriel.

Mi' Murl, as first-graders for a couple of generations called her, was the one who made my venture into formal education so interesting and exciting that I never tired of it.

Cartoonists love to draw kids who see school as a great big drag, but they never had Mi' Murl.

She's on my mind today because I chanced to see her in the old hometown a few days ago.

I had to tell her who I was, but then she threw her arms around me and bragged on me in front of my wife and made me feel, as she had 44 years ago, that I was Somebody Important to her and to myself.

"I REMEMBER the time," she said, "when your mom and dad bought you a new pair of boots. You were just thrilled to death with them, but after staring at the boots a while you looked up at your mother and said, 'but I still love Mi' Murl the best'."

Small wonder. She introduced me to an alphabet that ran clear across the front of the room, jumped around the corner and sped down the side wall almost to the door, where it bumped into 1,2,3,4,5,6,7,8,9,0.

I never did quite understand why 0 came after 9 instead of before 1, but if Mi' Murl wanted it that way it was bound to be right.

Each day in her first grade was an adventure. She whetted our appetites for words and numbers, stories and ideas, and pushed us along at just the right pace, not too fast to discourage us, not too slow to bore us.

SHE MADE A WORLD that had been small and self-centered blossom into an unending bigness that beckoned the best in you to leap out of your shell and learn about other people, places and things.

It was she who made us feel like Teacher's Pet and at the same time like the very wrath of God would descend on us if we misbehaved. This combination of love and discipline, so necessary to a good learning environment, came naturally with her.

I wonder if some of the people who write Guidelines for today's teachers ever were in a classroom where a Born Teacher like Mi' Murl worked her magic on eager minds.

Teaching, the way she did it and the way the best of those gathered here today do it, gave her students the foundation necessary to conquer the bigger challenges ahead.

She didn't do your learning for you; she inspired you to do it for yourself. Inspiration and motivation. That's what sets the best teachers, like Mi' Murl, apart from the rest.

'Welcome To Hispanic America'

WASHINGTON—"Open purse, closed mouth" is how President Carter's Central American policy is described.

In Nicaragua, the linchpin of the tumultuous region that lies between the Panama Canal and the Rio Grande, the President will pour all the money for economic aid that Congress allows him into the revolutionary government of the Sandinistas.

It is a Marxist regime a la Cuba, but Carter will not rebuke it for adopting ordinary revolutionary rites such as confiscation of property and firing squad elimination of opponents.

This is the combination of dollar diplomacy and appeasement which the Carter administration has adopted.

THERE WILL BE no American weapons program. None is needed as the Soviet bloc has saturated the area with small arms, the sort in demand by guerrillas, terrorists and police states.

Using Vice President Mondale as his mouthpiece, Carter has given public assurance to the Marxists of Central America that there will be no intervention. Thus he has announced an executive repeal of the Monroe Doctrine. "Welcome to Hispanic America," is his message to Soviet Russia.

Last summer, as Nicaraguan President Anastasio Somoza unsuccessfully tried to put down the rebels, the Council for Inter-American Security held a Capitol Hill symposium for the education of the Washington press corps.

At that time there were five countries considered as endangered species—Guatemala, El Salvador, Honduras, Nicaragua and Costa Rica, reading north to south.

PANAMA, PRIOR TO Oct. 1, was counted as a U.S. "protectorate," but since the handover of the Canal Zone, Panama makes the sixth member of the group which prefers being known as Hispanic America.

Prof. Roger Fontaine (Georgetown U.) reviewed its history. It was one part of the Captaincy General in the Spanish Empire.

Following liberation from that European monarchy, and with the Monroe Doctrine as a promise that there would be no more colonization, the banana republics tried vainly to form a Federation of Central American States.

Their dictators fought among themselves, and the only stability ever achieved was when the U.S. Marines came ashore. That won't happen again, says Carter, but the vacuum of states incapable of self-government is being filled by the Soviet Union and its Cuban surrogates. Says Prof. Fontaine who has made this region his specialty:

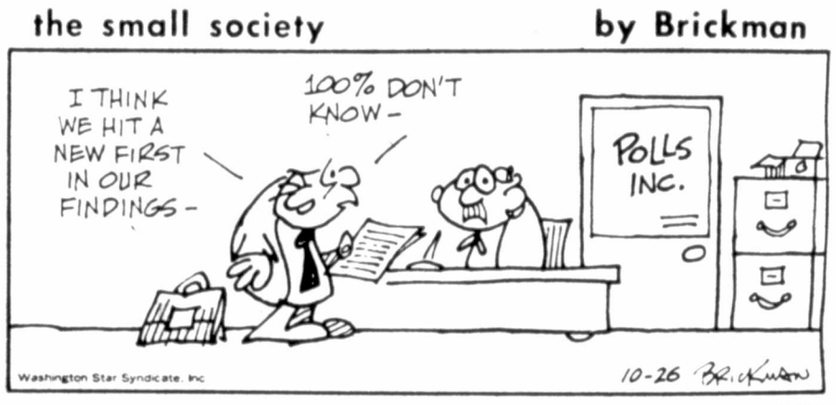

"Our surprise at recent events in Central America is rooted in a peculiarly American optimism...(in which) history is perceived as a linear process...from barbarism to civilization, from conflict to peace, from disorder to order, from poverty to social security and national health insurance..."

Unfortunately, history seldom happens that way. Although the USA and its tripartite Constitution is the model, it seldom becomes a reality elsewhere. Thus the Carter administration—"open purse, closed mouth"—has the familiar option of supporting either a rightwing dictator or a leftwing dictator.

He will send economic aid to the Sandinistas and any other Marxist regime which implants itself in those six states of Hispanic America.

It doesn't seem possible that we would keep on coming to the aid of the Red Revolution, but that's what we're up to in Hispanic America.

Libraries Branch Out To Serve You Better

WASHINGTON—In Washington, D.C. between Nov. 15 and 19, close to 1,000 delegates will convene for the first White House Conference on Library and Information Services.

Before them will be the harsh judgments of a panel of experts on what's wrong with libraries as they exist in most areas today. For instance:

"Libraries have been selling the wrong product for years. They have been emphasizing reading. The product that we have is information..."

"Libraries are really very primitive. They are far from meeting people's total information needs. They should be seen as basic to our system as the public schools..."

"If the people of New York state could have gone to their libraries and found out that wind could have carried radioactivity from Three Mile Island right into their skies, they would have questioned whether that plant should have been built..."

YET, EVEN AS the delegates debate what to do to "modernize" our system of libraries, a modest survey on my own emphasizes that libraries—urban, suburban, rural—have been branching out into precisely the areas of information services so deeply recommended.

In addition to using periodicals and reference books (without which I never could have managed to finish college), and borrowing books, you may use your card to get pictures, tools, films, tapes, records, even games for your children.

In comfortable surroundings (with fireplaces and gardens in some places) you may use copying machines, enjoy paintings and exhibits, catch up on community events, take advantage of day care services while you are there.

YOU MAY BE offered specialized programs ranging from the traditional story-telling hours for your children to teen parties, career counseling, films, in-library concerts, reading classes, courses for credit.

If you are elderly or handicapped, in some areas you may arrange for books to be mailed to you. In other areas, you may reserve rooms for special events put on by your group.

Librarians today are trained to be sufficiently professional and skilled to help you find the information you seek either in person, through inter-library loans or by answering telephone requests, or participating in a bookmobile system.

Traditional services have long since entered the technological age, too. Many libraries are part of a network which uses computer data banks for obtaining specific information you need.

MANY USE MICROGRAPHICS consolidating printed material into small spaces and speedily reproducing the material for you. Telecommunications now permit libraries to broadcast programs via regular or cable TV.

As an illustration, a Columbus, Ohio, library is successfully experimenting with viewer participation. The library broadcasts a book review program to viewers at home and if the viewer's TV set has a home console he or she may contact the program's director.

You may find some of the statistics on libraries in the U.S. today astounding, according to information supplied by Robert Wedgeworth, executive director of the 25,000-member American Library Association, to my assistant, Gloria Hill.

* There are more than 100,000 libraries in our country, breaking down into 14,000 public libraries (main and branches); 75,000 school libraries (media centers in elementary, middle and high schools); 4,000 academic libraries (and special libraries associated with colleges and universities); 10,000 special libraries (medical, law, religious and those maintained by companies and associations devoted to specialized subjects).
* More than 2 billion books are in these libraries, with the size and facilities of each library varying according to geographical location, population and funds.
* Public libraries are funded through gifts, endowments, special drives to raise funds—but primarily from taxes. The ALA in Chicago estimates local taxes account for about 82 percent of public library support; state taxes for about 13 percent; federal government taxes for about 5 percent.
* THE COST TO you, an average citizen, is about $3.50 per year of your tax dollar for public library services—with 70 percent of all public libraries spending less than $50,000 a year and 50 percent spending less than $16,000.

Are you a typical library user? If so, a Gallup study a few years back says you're 18 to 35 years of age, college-educated, living in a household with children in the eastern part of the U.S. And you're more intrigued with using a computer to search out information than in traditional services!

The White House conference is catching up to the libraries and you—not leading you, as its stress on information suggests.

James J. Kilpatrick:

PP&L Casts More Light On Less

PORTLAND, ORE.—It sounds like one of those dizzy theories from the Blue Eagle School of Screwball Economics, but in the Pacific Power & Light Company some hardheaded guys are making it work: They are acquiring energy by not consuming it.

Let me run that by you again. The company is deeply committed to a program predicated upon not selling its own product.

For the record, Pacific Power serves 600,000 customers in the great Northwest.

AT ONE TIME, 15 or 20 years ago, virtually all of its power was hydroelectric power, generated from the rivers that tumble out of the Cascade Mountains on their way to the sea.

As the area has grown, steam plants have taken over 75 percent of the total load. For the foreseeable future new power needs must be met by new coal-burning plants—and new coal-burning plants cost a fortune.

The conventional approach to meeting power needs is to generate more power. The management of Pacific Power had a better idea: Reduce the need.

A year ago the company was approval for an innovative Zero Interest Financing Program in Oregon, Washington, Montana and Idaho. District managers took aim on 100,000 homeowners with all-electric space heating.

Typically, the individual homeowner was consuming 10,000 kilowatt hours a year to heat his house. Could that demand be reduced to 5,500 or 7,500 KWH?

IN OREGON ALONE, company analysts found that 40,000 homes could benefit from floor insulation, 33,000 from ceiling insulation and 48,000 from the installation of storm windows and doors.

Not all those prospects could be sold, of course, but if incentives could be devised to pull even 65 or 70 percent of them into the program, significant savings would result.

Pacific Power began to offer eligible homeowners a deal they could hardly refuse: loans with no interest and no repayment schedule. In the past year, 4,600 loans have been made, averaging $1,354.

They become a lien on the property, to be repaid when the property is sold or inherited. As the program has gained momentum, completions have reached a level of 100 houses every week.

OVER THE NEXT five years the company realistically expects to see 60,000 homes insulated, weather-stripped or storm-windowed.

At that point the company will not be generating and selling 300 million kilowatt hours a year that it otherwise might have sold.

And the company figures it will be much better off. By treating the loans as a resource, the loans become part of the company's rate base; the company is entitled to earn a reasonable return on the investment.

It costs 14 mills to save a kilowatt hour by conservation; it costs 56 mills to generate a kilowatt hour in a new steam plant.

The program isn't of sufficient magnitude to replace an actual plant, but it will postpone the time when new plants must be put on the line. Meanwhile, the participating consumers benefit and the company prospers.

Six other utilities in the Pacific Northwest are now offering similar programs. The Tennessee Valley Authority makes term loans for the same purposes.

AND WHILE THE specific approach won't work everywhere, it makes a certain crazy sense out here in the land of cheap power.

A few critics have voiced reservations. Non-participating customers are hard put to understand how the company's $1,300 loan to a neighbor could be part of a system-wide rate base.

California and Wyoming commissions have refused to go along. Even though company engineers check completed jobs before payment is made to the insulation contractors, complaints have been heard of shoddy workmanship.

On the whole, however, the program has gone modestly but well. For those who have been skeptical about "energy conservation," the Northwestern companies are providing a profitable answer: It works.

A woman feels the same way about choosing a husband as she does about buying an old house. Half the fun is in the remodeling.

Widower Finds Difficulty In Moving From Home

By SAUL PETT

PORT WASHINGTON, N.Y. (AP) — You will not, he told himself at the start, act like a character in an old Marquand novel. There will be no flashbacks. You will not be delayed by sentiment. The movers are coming.

You will be ruthlessly efficient. You will simply pack up 37 years of marriage and family, 30 in houses, and you will squeeze, alone, through the wrong end of the telescope from eight rooms in the suburbs to three in a city apartment.

You are not the first this has happened to and you will not be sorry for yourself, he told himself, and suddenly he was laughing. He couldn't find his drink.

All those parties they had given and passing among their guests he was always losing his drink. Now alone in the dismantled living room, the couches and chairs grotesquely askew, the books and the records off the shelves and in boxes, he had managed in his ruthless efficiency to misplace another drink. Twenty minutes later he found it, under the lid of a half-closed box, standing stupidly among those little Modern Library books that betrayed his age. He had packed his drink.

Onward and upward with the mobile society, he told himself like a bugler rousing the regiment, and fell to his task with renewed vigor. And there in a cabinet drawer, under a stack of her sketches and girlhood scrapbooks of her favorite poets, he found what he had never seen before, his college diploma.

It was 39 years old and still pristine white. He had graduated a half-year before her, in mid-winter, and in June she had collected his diploma along with hers. A few months after they were married, he thought to ask about his diploma and she said she had packed it with her linens and silverware but they could never find it.

For years he kidded her about the diploma and each time they moved, from the first one-room apartment with the Pullman kitchen and the Murphy bed, from the larger apartments and the succession of larger houses, she insisted they would find it but they never did. And now he was 61 and she was gone and the kids were pursuing their lives elsewhere but he had his college diploma.

Mercifully, a honking horn interrupted his immersion in irony and he went outside. There at the curb, where he had placed a mountain of stuff for the trash man, was neighbor Ralph (they were neighbors in an upper middle class area) asking if he could take the old broken down bookcase. He could.

Moments later, another car screeched to a halt and it was neighbor Bill ($38,000 a year and eight kids) asking if there were any more bookcases. There weren't. Neighbor Bill settled for some old, half-filled cans of paint.

Walking back to the house, he thought this was the kind of impersonal irony he could deal with, the circumstance of inflation making scavengers out of two-car families.

He made a note to call neighbors about the old kitchen chairs, the ones long since discarded in the basement, the unpretty but functional chrome and plastic chairs they had moved from basement to basement.

Each time they moved they went to a larger place and so the perennial question of what to do with the discards and the has-beens could always be postponed. But now he had fun out of basements. He was going from an eight-room house to a three-room apartment. He must be ruthlessly efficient.

After the kids had gotten what they wanted (it was amazing how, despite disparate tastes, they all wanted the old Victorian chest and mirror, the blue cabinet and the big round dining table), he was left with a ton of stuff to dispose of. He had rejected the idea of a garage sale, repelled by the vision of five lives spread down the driveway.

So he gave many things to a charity agency but the agency turned down the old kitchen chairs because they needed new seat cushions. Poor people, he was told, could not be asked to get new cushions. The trundle bed also was rejected because the mattresses were worn and if you gave someone a perfectly usable bed without acceptable mattresses they would have the burden of finding mattresses. Only in America, he thought, of the reasoning that eluded him.

Back in the living room, he discoveed that he had run out of boxes, imperative ordnance in the battle of moving. He remembered that early the morning before, when almost nothing and nobody was stirring in his suburb, he had gone unshaven and unkempt behind the supermarkets to look for boxes and the cops rode up wanting to know what this dirty man was doing. This time he would not look suspicious in his search for boxes. He shaved first.

And finally, two days later, it was all done. He watched the moving van pull away with his shrunken store of furniture, kitchenware, lamps, and boxes of letters, pictures, books, records, artifacts and lovable junk he couldn't make up his mind about. He then got into his car and drove off and he didn't look back.

Three days later, he was still unpacking in his new apartment in the city and hard as he tried among the drawers and the boxes he could not find his college diploma. He smiled and it was his first real gut smile in weeks and months. He knew, this master of ruthless efficiency did, that beyond all peradventure of a doubt, she would have loved that.

Production Of Crude Shows Slight Drop

WASHINGTON (AP) — Total crude oil runs to still averaged 14,373,000 barrels daily during the week ended Oct.12, the American Petroleum Institute reported last week. This compared with 14,456,000 barrels daily in the previous week and 14,962,000 barrels daily a year ago.

Crude runs east of California averaged 11,947,000 barrels daily compared with 12,061,000 the previous week and 12,598,000 a year ago.

Motor gasoline production for the latest week amounted to 6,414,000 barrels a day, compared with 6,636,000 barrels a day in the previous week and 7,024,000 a day a year ago.

East of California motor gasoline production was 5,381,000 a day compared with 5,621,000 a day last week and 6,034,000 a day a year ago.

Motor gasoline stocks at the end of the latest week were 223,429,000 barrels, versus 225,055,000 a week earlier and 216,948,000 a year ago.

East of California motor gasoline stocks totaled 197,337,000 barrels, compared with 199,714,000 in the previous week and 190,916,000 barrels last year.

Daily average gross crude oil and lease condensate production for the week ended Friday was 8,614,000 barrels compared with 8,806,000 last year.

Crude oil stocks totaled 333,526,000 barrels at the close of last week against 328,183,000 a week previous and 323,740,000 a year ago.

East of California crude stocks amounted to 273,849,000 barrels, compared with 269,749,000 a week earlier.

Daily imports east of California for the week ended last week were crude oil, 5,700,000 barrels, residual fuel oil, 800,000, distillate fuel oil, 100,000 and others 335,000, a total of 6,935,000 barrels.

California imports were: crude oil 429,000 barrels, and products 86,000, a total of 515,000 barrels.

For the four weeks, daily imports east of California were: crude oil 6,018,000 barrels, residual fuel oil 477,000, distillate fuel oil 80,000, and others 193,000, for a total of 6,768,000 barrels.

For the four weeks, California daily imports averaged for crude oil 548,000 barrels, products 101,000, a total of 649,000 barrels, for a grand total of 7,417,000 barrels.

BRITISH LINER

The Queen Mary, the first British liner to exceed 1,000 feet in length, was launched after a royal christening in Glasgow, Scotland, in 1934. The 81,235-ton ship won the Atlantic Blue Riband from the French vessel Normandie four years later, crossing the Atlantic in 4½ days, at an average speed of 31.59 knots. In 1952, the American liner United States captured the Blue Riband, making the crossing at 35.59 knots in 3 days, 10 hours and 40 minutes.

FBI Agents Battle Tree Rustlers

ZIGZAG, Ore. (AP) — There's a new kind of rustler abroad in these woods, and a new kind of posse on their trail.

The rustlers are after expensive fir trees and centuries-old cedar in the Mount Hood National Forest. The agents of the FBI and the U.S. Forest Service are out to stop them.

On this particular day, Bob Mitchell and John McCormick arrive in their four-wheel drive vehicle just as the rain is ending. Mitchell, a product of the FBI's national academy, and forester McCormick pick their way over rotting logs and slippery underbrush.

There they find the stumps of at least six trees. It appeared the crime had occurred almost a month before. The rain had washed away any possible fingerprints.

The FBI and U.S. Forest Service estimate that timber thieves have stolen millions of dollars worth of logs from federal land. The old growth fir and coveted cedar of the Pacific Northwest have made Oregon's forests the Fort Knox of timber rustling.

"Trees are beautiful things and I hate to see them destroyed," says McCormick. "I realize some have to be harvested, but the aesthetic effect of theft on some of these big groves of cedar trees is literally like butchery.

"The thieves take the older ones that were left there to seed the young. So they also destroy the young and that's a resource people in the future won't have," he adds.

The looting of cedar increased in the 1970s as the pungent red wood became widely used in the housing industry for roofing. The trees, often 600-700 years old, are considered a non-renewable resource.

The FBI became involved in timber theft investigations about four years ago when the need for action was dramatized by the theft of six ancient cedar trees from the scenic Bull Run watershed.

"It was a crime against nature," says FBI agent Bill Williams. He says the FBI, U.S. Forest Service, Bureau of Land Management and state officials began to work together to control the plundering of public land. Part of the problem was convincing residents of Oregon's small logging communities that timber theft was the same as robbing someone's home.

"In logging, they didn't think of it as theft," says Williams. "The forest was out there and their father and grandfather had taken what they wanted. We had a great effort to publicize the problem."

Williams says the efforts to stop cedar theft have begun to show success, due in part to the gumshoe work of McCormick and Mitchell.

McCormick usually spots the timber theft first and, after a preliminary investigation, calls in Mitchell.

Near Trillium Lake in northwestern Oregon, McCormick noticed that a prime fir tree had been sawed off and taken from the forest. When he brought Mitchell back with him to inspect the site, they discovered more stumps of fir and cedar.

Mitchell says the FBI has adopted standard investigative techniques to help unravel timber thefts. Tools can be matched to what is teft of the trees in the same way burglary tools are matched to a jimmied door. A cross section of a stump will be a perfect fit with the butt of the log removed from it. And a tree's rings are as individual as fingerprints.

"You look around for what's obvious and you may get lucky," says Mitchell, who learned about forestry on the job. "But you have to discover the timber theft first. It's not like a bank where the alarm goes off and we're there within minutes."

Thieves who logged 1,600 Douglas firs on BLM land near ZigZag, about 40 miles southeast of Portland, left a screen of standing timber to hide the looting from public view.

A BLM resource manager discovered the theft during a routine review of aerial photos in 1978. Evidence indicated the crime was about a year old.

At the time, the haul was worth about $51,000. Mitchell and McCormick say that amount of timber would be worth twice as much today.

"As the price goes up, it increases the incentive to steal," says Max Peterson, chief of the U.S. Forest Service. "It's a problem throughout the country. In the East, an individual walnut tree worth $10,000 was stolen."

Peterson says the Forest Service has reviewed its log accountability system to tighten control on removal of logs from some 180 million acres of national forest, of which 24.5 million acres are in the Northwest region.

Federal law prohibits removing anything from national forests or BLM land without a permit. The Forest Service requires each log from a sale site to be imprinted with a registered brand. Domestic logs must be marked on one end with yellow paint. Logs destined for export must have the sale brand and a Forest Service exempt brand on them.

The Forest Service says there were 181 unsolved timber thefts in 1978 in this region, while the thieves were caught in 50 cases. In addition, 81 petty citations were issued to first-time offenders.

Oregon passed a law two years ago to help track down cedar thieves by requiring cedar shake mills to write down the license plate number of delivery trucks and to keep receipts on all purchases.

Mitchell says the new law and successful prosecution of more thieves has reduced the amount of cedar theft.

"You know, some guys are sitting in a tavern and drinking and one says, 'Let's get us some cedar.' But the the other says, 'Hey, wait, that's why old Joe's at McNeil (federal prison),'" says Mitchell.

Vaccinations Effective Against Cough

BOSTON (AP) — Whooping cough would be 71 times more prevalent in the United States and take many more lives if doctors stopped giving routine vaccinations to infants, a federal study shows.

The shots have been criticized, especially in Great Britain, because they sometimes have dangerous side effects, including encephalitis, an inflammation of the brain.

However, the latest study, conducted by doctors at Harvard University and the national Center for Disease Control, concludes "that the benefits of vaccination outweigh the risks and that the savings outweigh the costs." But it added that there is a need for "development of a less toxic vaccine."

Until about 30 years ago, whooping cough was a leading killer of children in the United States, and it still is a major cause of death in developing countries.

The report found that if vaccinations were stopped, almost four times as many children would die from whooping cough than die from complications of the vaccine itself.

Infants now routinely receive a series of shots that immunize them against whooping cough, tetanus and diphtheria.

In England, many parents have stopped allowing their children to be immunized, and there has been more than a tenfold increase in whooping cough.

The latest study, directed by Dr. Jeffrey P. Koplan of the federal center in Atlanta, was published in this week's New England Journal of Medicine.

"Immunization hasn't really erupted as a major controversy here," Koplan said in an interview. "In part, we wanted to clear the air before it did."

Major side effects of the vaccine, though relatively rare, include convulsions, prolonged screaming, meningitis and encephalitis. In a Swedish study, the odds of developing encephalitis after vaccination were one in 170,000.

The American doctors calculated that the cost of vaccinating one million children and treating their side effects is $720,862. If the same number of tots were not vaccinated, it would cost $1.9 million to treat their whooping cough.

Panel Approves Weakened Windfall-Profits Tax

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate Finance Committee closed out its work on President Carter's "windfall-profits" tax in the same way it began: voting on an effort to weaken the tax.

But this time, oil-state senators fell short. The committee, which earlier agreed to five major exemptions that cut the tax in half, rejected an attempt by Sen. Bob Dole, R-Kan., to slash an additional $1.6 billion.

However, before voting Thursday to send the bill to the full Senate for debate, the panel accepted a Dole amendment exempting from the tax any oil owned by nonprofit schools and medical facilities. As a result of gifts, some of the nation's most prestigious institutions receive royalties from oil fields. Aides were unable to estimate how much revenue the Dole amendment would cost.

Despite renewed pleas from Carter and reports of soaring oil-industry profits during the last quarter, the committee made no effort to toughen the tax, which would apply to price increases starting next year.

Speaking at the White House to a citizens' group supporting a strong windfall tax, Carter said that unless the final tax is strong enough, "we'll move toward additional proposals to the Congress which could be quite punitive to the oil industry."

Carter was not specific. But aides have said repeatedly that if the final tax is too weak, the president probably would re-impose federal price controls on the oil industry. He could take such action without congressional approval.

Major elements of the Finance Committee bill would:

—Impose a tax of 50 percent to 75 percent, depending on the age and location of the oil field, on future increases in domestic crude oil prices. Economists predict prices will rise to world levels — currently about $22 a barrel — because of Carter's decision to phase out federal price controls on oil.

—Set aside money to pay for an $11 billion freeze in Social Security taxes in 1981. This does not ensure such a tax cut; it means simply that if Congress votes a Social Security tax reduction, the money would be available from oil industry taxes to pay for it.

—Earmark half the bill's revenue — or about $70 billion over the next decade — for helping Americans earning under $22,000 a year cope with higher fuel costs. Welfare recipients would receive fuel assistance of $120 to $767 a year. Higher amounts would go to those in the coldest states. The Senate and House have approved a different formula for helping the poor through this winter. Thus, the plan proposed by the Finance Committee probably would apply only to future years.

DOE Cites Overcharging By U.S. Refiners

WASHINGTON (AP) — The government says the nation's 15 largest refiners have overcharged customers $5.2 billion since the Arab oil boycott of 1973 — the equivalent of five cents a gallon for all the gasoline sold in this country in a year.

That total was announced as the Department of Energy brought new charges against Texaco and the Atlantic Richfield Co., claiming pricing irregularities of about $200 million.

Both firms denied the charges.

"These notices are yet another effort of the Department of Energy to once again attempt to improperly apply ambiguous regulations retroactively," Texaco said.

Arco said the dispute involved "technical aspects of the Department of Energy's complex pricing formula."

The new allegations come at a time when many refiners have reported big surges in their profits, the House of Representatives has reversed an earlier decision to relax controls on gasoline prices and President Carter says he will advance proposals "which could be quite punitive to the oil industry" if Congress fails to give him the "windfall profits" tax he seeks on oil company gains resulting from deregulation of crude oil prices.

The Energy Department is seeking to force oil companies accused of pricing violations to make restitution. But the firms have disputed the charges and, while appeals are being made, refunds of only $150 million have been made, according to Paul L. Bloom, the lawyer in charge of a special Energy Department audit of the pricing actions of the country's 15 largest refiners.

Even if full restitution is finally ordered, most of the money would go to large companies like utilities and airlines. Wholesalers and retailers receiving rebates would not necessarily be required to pass the payments on to consumers in the form of refunds or temporary price reductions.

Bloom said Thursday he expected that by the end of the year, when the audits are to be finished, "scores of additional actions" will be brought against the oil firms and "additional billions will be added to the total" of alleged pricing irregularities uncovered by his office.

In Thursday's actions, Texaco was charged with four "probable violations" of more than $132 million. This brought to nearly $1.3 billion the total of violations charged to Texaco. One of the charges against Texaco involved the way the company treated $119 million in its books.

In limiting the amounts oil companies may charge, government price controls take into account companies' costs. Arco was accused of attributing to gasoline costs what should have been attributed to light fuel oils.

The charges against Texaco included overstating costs that could be recovered from consumers, incorrectly determining its base prices, overcharging propane purchasers from 1973 to 1976.

Oil Profits Revealed Amid Carter Threats

By United Press International

Shell Oil Co., Phillips Petroleum and two other oil firms announced large but not dramatic third-quarter profits the same day President Carter threatened punitive legislation unless Congress passes an acceptable windfall-profits tax.

Shell Oil, the nation's eighth largest refiner, announced a 17.8 percent rise in earnings Thursday. Phillips Petroleum Co., the 11th largest, reported profits up 62.4 percent, and Union Oil of California, the 13th largest, said earnings were up 14.4 percent.

Getty Oil Co. of Los Angeles Thursday reported its third-quarter profits climbed 81.1 percent to $174.1 million, or $2.11 a share, from $96.1 million, or $1.17 a share, a year earlier. Getty, ranked 19th in the U.S. oil industry, had a 42.4 percent rise in revenues to $1.32 billion from $926.4 million.

The Shell, Phillips, Union Oil and Getty earnings gains were lower than the dramatic profit increases reported by some of the other big oil companies.

In Washington, Charles DiBona, president of the American Petroleum Institute, an industry trade group, defended this year's profits as reasonable when compared to other industries and what he called poor profits in the first nine months of last year.

He said price increases hitting Americans this year are principally due to OPEC actions — not U.S. oil company profits.

Earlier this week Exxon Corp., the world's largest oil company, posted a 118 percent rise in the third quarter. Mobil Corp., the No. 2 refiner, had a 130 percent surge in earnings, and Standard Oil of Ohio, ranked 14th in the U.S. oil industry, reported a 191 percent profit increase.

The oil companies said most of their profits were made overseas, not in the United States.

President Carter Thursday threatened the oil industry with punitive legislation unless Congress passes an acceptable tax on windfall profits earned by the oil companies under gradual decontrol of domestic crude oil prices.

A Senate committee Thursday approved a $142 billion windfall-profits tax — far below what Carter had asked.

An economist at Texas A&M University at College Station, said the oil companies are not making excessive profits. "In many ways, they don't do any better than the average Fortune 500 companies and a lot worse than some," he said.

Shell had third-qarter profits of $293.3 million, or $1.90 a share, up from $248.9 million, or $1.66 a share, in the same period last year. Revenues rose 31.9 percent to $3.76 billion from $2.85 billion.

Auto Industry Reports Drop In Earnings

DETROIT (UPI) — General Motors Corp. and Ford Motor Co., feeling the impact of the auto industry's seven-month sales slump, have reported dramatic declines in profits in the third quarter of this year.

Ford reported an actual loss in its U.S. automotive operations, but was kept in the black overall by stronger overseas sales and a one-time tax write-off in Great Britain.

GM said its third-quarter profits fell to $22 million, down 96 percent from earnings of $528 million in the same period last year.

Ford reported profits of $103 million, down 66 percent from $301 million in the third quarter of 1978.

Both companies have suffered from the big car sales slump that began in April with scattered gasoline shortages and well-publicized gas lines. The crisis was followed by a weakening in the U.S. economy.

In dramatic evidence of the impact of that shortage, Ford said its U.S. automotive operations lost $299 million in the third quarter, compared with a profit of $58 million last year.

It was the first time since the 1975 recession that Ford showed a loss from its U.S. car and truck sales.

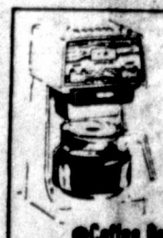

"The high rate of inflation and the weakening economy, together with high rates of capital spending, will continue to put our U.S. returns under pressure," said Ford President Philip Caldwell.

GM, which introduced its hot-selling compact X-cars in April, suffered much less in the U.S. market than Ford and Chrysler Corp.

Ford listed sales of $9 billion in the third quarter, down $658 million from the same period last year. GM's sales of $13.3 billion in the period compared with $13.5 billion in the same period last year.

GM Chairman Thomas A. Murphy and President Elliott M. Estes said despite the relatively poor showing, they are confident about the future of the company and the economy.

Part of that confidence stems from GM's reaching a new three-year contract with the United Auto Workers union without a strike.

UAW Gives Chrysler Concessions

HIGHLAND PARK, Mich. (AP) — The United Auto Workers union has given financially sick Chrysler Corp. a break at the bargaining table and its president is headed for the company's board room in return.

The UAW, in an unprecedented contract agreement, will defer raises and corporate pension payments and give up paid holidays to aid the company with a package of concessions worth $403 million, the union said Thursday.

In return, Chrysler said it would nominate UAW president Douglas A. Fraser for a seat on the board of directors and give the union a voice in pension fund decisions.

"We did break with 42 years of tradition and history," Fraser said in announcing the pact with the nation's No. 3 carmaker. Bargaining lasted more than 25 hours and more than three hours past a noon deadline, set up to speed negotiations.

The company's chief negotiator, William O'Brien, said he was "very pleased" with the contract.

Chrysler is seeking $750 million in federal loan guarantees. It estimates it will lose $1 billion in 1980, and will use the union concessions as a selling point to convince Congresss it needs help.

In the tentative contract, the union agreed to defer $203 million in wages and benefits and, as announced previously, to defer for one year $200 million of this year's payment to the pension fund. Union members will get no paid days off other than vacation in the first year, compared with eight days for GM and Ford workers.

Fraser said Chrysler workers would return to parity with their counterparts at General Motors Corp. and Ford Motors Co. in the third year of the pact, which must be ratified over the next two weeks.

The union already has reached agreements with Ford and GM.

The pact also gives the union two long-sought social goals: the right to recommend investment policy for part of the pension fund, and the right to recommend investment sanctions against some companies it may designate for their South Africa policies.

In the most radical break with tradition, though not part of the contract, the company said in a statement that Chairman Lee A. Iacocca will submit Fraser's name to the board's nominating committee. Approval seemed assured at the May shareholder's meeting.

Organized labor has never taken a directorship in a major U.S. corporation, though it is required by law in some European countries.

Asked if he saw any conflict of interest in representing shareholders as well as workers, Fraser replied, "None at all. I'm going to represent the autoworkers on that board."

He called such arrangements "absolutely inevitable" and a "tremendous step forward in industrial relations in the United States," insuring that worker concerns about such matters as plant closings are heard in the executive suite.

It is such a break with tradition, in fact, that the preamble to the UAW constitution still says, "The worker does not seek to usurp management's functions or ask for a place on the board of directors of concerns where organized."

O'Brien, Chrysler's vice president for industrial relations, said the company was "delighted" about Fraser's directorship. He did not mention the company's stiff opposition to such an idea in the past.

The union also won the right to recommend to the trustees of the $850 million pension fund five companies each year whose securities would be banned from investment of new money coming into the fund.

Many union members oppose investing in countries doing business with South Africa, because of that country's policy of apartheid.

But the trustees would be free to reject the union recommendations and a top union staff member instrumental in drafting the proposal conceded the provision was purely symbolic.

Chrysler's 110,000 production workers in the United States and Canada work under a single contract, which has been extended since the original Sept. 14 expiration.

Wright To Push For Approval Of Loans To Ailing Carmaker

WASHINGTON (AP) — House Democratic Leader Jim Wright of Texas said today he will push for congressional approval this year of government loans or loan guarantees to the financially hard-pressed Chrysler Corp.

"We have got to put something together to salvage this company," Wright told reporters after testifying at a House Banking subcommittee hearing in support of a bill authorizing an undetermined amount of federal assistance to Chrysler.

"All we are waiting for is a recommendation from the administration," he said. "I am a little surprised their recommendation has not come forward sooner."

Rep. James J. Blanchard, D-Mich., sponsor of the House bill to aid Chrysler, said he expects the Carter administration to announce its support for some kind of assistance next week.

Chrysler, which suffered record second-quarter losses of $207.1 million this year, asked for $1.2 billion in federal loan guarantees but scaled this down to $750 million at the request of the Treasury Department.

United Auto Workers president Douglas Fraser announced Wednesday, after meeting with U.S. officials, that the administration had abandoned the $750 million ceiling.

Although Chrysler has said it is not seeking direct government loans, both Blanchard's bill and Wright's testimony left the door open for loans as a possible alternative to government guarantees.

Wright said afterward he preferred loan guarantees, but would support loans if necessary.

He and other congressional witnesses praised the new UAW-Chrysler contract agreed to in negotiations in Highland, Park., Mich., on Thursday.

In the tentative contract, the union agreed to defer $203 million in wages and benefits and, as announced previously, to defer for one year $200 million of this year's payment to the pension fund. Union members will get no paid days off other than vacation in the first year, compared with eight days for General Motors and Ford workers.

"If they (the union members) feel that strongly about it, it behooves us in Congress and the government to do the things that are necessary," Wright said.

Rep. Elwood H. Hillis, R-Ind., a cosponsor of the Blanchard bill, said the agreement to give Fraser a seat on Chrysler's board of directors as part of the contract settlement is "an experiment that deserves a chance."

Organized labor has never taken a directorship in a major U.S. corporation, although it is required by law in some European countries.

Navy Security Guard Sentenced For Leaking Pentagon Papers

ALEXANDRIA, Va. (AP) — Lee Eugene Madsen, a Navy security guard who walked out of the Pentagon with top-secret documents stuffed in his trousers, was sentenced to eight years in prison today for espionage.

In statements read to the court by his attorney, Madsen acknowledged giving documents to an FBI informant but said he thought he was doing it to trap a criminal.

"I wanted to be a hero," Madsen was quoted as saying. "I wanted to prove to myself I could be a man and still be gay."

U.S. District Judge Albert V. Bryan sentenced Madsen, 24, to the federal penitentiary at Lexington, Ky. He said he thought the Navy enlisted man had already been shown leniency merely by being allowed to plead guilty.

"His offense is an extremely serious one," Bryan said.

Because of the severity of the charge against Madsen, legal sources said, he is expected to serve at least six years of the term before being considered for parole.

J. Frederick Sinclair, Madsen's court-appointed lawyer, said Madsen gave entirely different reasons than the government for his actions and had passed a lie-detector test to support his version.

But Sinclair told the court that Madsen is "a very naive individual" and had shown "a great deal of emotional immaturity."

Sinclair told reporters after the brief sentencing procedure that Madsen claimed he had been threatened by the FBI informant, Richard Grant Noble, and that he would be "in big trouble" if he did not hand over classified documents.

Sinclair said Madsen acknowledged he had no authority to give Noble the classified papers but said he did it because he thought Noble was a criminal or an enemy agent and hoped to lure him into the Pentagon where he could be arrested.

Madsen, dressed in civilian clothing, stood quietly with hands clasped and made no statements in his own defense as his sentence was passed.

The court session and Sinclair's comments afterward provided the first public explanation of why Madsen, who was a special security officer at the Pentagon, spirited documents out of the building and turned them over to Noble.

Although Madsen was charged on several counts, he was allowed to plead guilty Sept. 25 to one count of possessing classified defense documents and passing them to Noble, a Madsen associate who had earlier alerted the FBI to an alleged spy scheme.

The documents which Madsen passed included satellite photos of tank movements and defense facilities in an unnamed communist country, the government charged. At the government's request, Bryan had dismissed 10 other counts in the indictment during the pleading last month.

Madsen had worked as a special security officer for the Strategic Warning Staff, a Pentagon office managed jointly by the military services, the Defense Intelligence Agency and the CIA.

Pair Held In Connection With Murder

Fort Worth police Thursday took into custody a 51-year-old Lubbock woman and a Fort Worth man in connection with the March 17 murder of Lubbock resident Robert Lee Johnson.

Grace James of 2730 Erskine St., who has been indicted in Johnson's murder, and Nathaniel Wallace, who has been placed under an attachment order as a murder witness, were in custody in the Tarrant County jail Thursday night, but were expected to be transferred to Lubbock late today. Mrs. James and Wallace both have been placed under $50,000 bond.

A grand jury returned a murder indictment against Mrs. James on April 12. State District Judge Robert C. Wright issued the attachment order for Wallace on Oct. 19. The order allows law officers to arrest Wallace for questioning in Johnson's death. Officials stressed that the order does not indicate necessarily that Wallace is considered a suspect in the case.

Lubbock police last week received information that the pair was living in the Dallas-Fort Worth area and requested assistance in locating them from that area's law enforcement officials. Mrs. James and Wallace were booked into the Tarrant County jail at 11:47 a.m. Thursday and Lubbock officials were notified about 2 p.m.

Police reports indicate that Johnson, 57, of 3305 E. Baylor St. was shot March 17 during an apparent argument at a clubhouse near an abandoned service station at 2816 Clovis Road.

Teachers Stage March To Protest Money Woes

CINCINNATI (AP) — More than 2,000 chanting teachers and their supporters marched in downtown Cincinnati during this morning's rush hour to demonstrate concern over the schools' money problems.

Hundreds of cars, with horns blaring, were locked for a time in traffic jams caused by the line of demonstrators that stretched for several blocks from city hall.

Classes were canceled today because of the march, which Superintendent James Jacobs said was intended to dramatize the poor financial condition of the schools.

The Board of Education has voted to shut down the schools for three weeks, from Nov. 12 through Dec. 2, after rejecting the state's offer of a loan that carried conditions calling for the layoff of more than 400 school employees and the closing of 10 schools.

The 56,000-pupil school system faces a projected $7.7 million deficit this year. Voters have twice rejected a $6.9-million operating levy.

An unrelated strike by professors at the University of Cincinnati forced the closing of the school Monday, delaying midterm examinations for some of the 38,000 students.

The public school teachers, chanting such slogans as "no raises in 1,000 days," were grouped by school and were acompanied by children, some carrying their pets, several displaying school banners.

The demonstration lasted about two hours and ended with a rally at the Board of Education building.

"We're here to let the public know we can't continue without raises," Cincinnati Federation of Teachers President Tom Mooney said. He said the teachers have not had raises in 2½ years.

Registration Begun For Adult Classes

Registration has begun at Maxey Community Center, 30th Street and Oxford Avenue, for adult classes in silk flower art and divorce with dignity.

Divorce with dignity, a group experience, will meet on five Thursdays from 7:30 to 9 p.m. beginning Nov. 1.

The classes in silk flower art meet on four Fridays from 9:30 to 11:30 a.m. starting Nov. 2.

For more information, call 762-6411, Ext. 2696.

TVA Denies Indians' Plea To Stop Dam

KNOXVILLE, Tenn. (UPI) — Tennessee Valley Authority attorneys today denied the Tellico Dam project would infringe on the religious freedom of the Cherokee Indians by flooding sacred burial grounds in east Tennessee and western North Carolina.

TVA chief counsel Herb Sanger told a federal court hearing Congress has mandated completion of the project, and all facts have been debated in at least nine other suits challenging completion of the multi-million-dollar dam.

The Cherokees filed suit charging the project, located near Lenoir City, Tenn., would infringe on their constitutional privilege of freedom of religion. The Indians said water from the 16,000-acre reservoir would cover the graves of their ancestors and bar them from practicing their religion in the area.

The dam would impound the Little Tennessee River with the resulting reservior flooding the graves and the former Cherokee capital of Chota.

The Cherokees told District Judge Robert Taylor today there was "no compelling reason" for completion of the TVA project if it violated the Indians' rights.

Judge Taylor, following the morning hearing, took the case under advisement, saying he would probably rule early next week whether to allow further proceedings.

The Indians asked for an injunction stopping the project until a trial can be held. TVA petitioned the court for dismissal.

"The basic issues are simple. The plaintiffs are challenging an act of Congress," Sanger said.

Congress recently approved the project by exempting it from the Endangered Species Act, and any other statute that would stop completion. The project had been blocked for two years by the snail darter, a small perch on the endangered species list.

But in pleading the Indians' case, attorney Ben Bridgers said, "When Congress settled the question, it went too far."

Lawyers for the Cherokee filed the class action lawsuit Oct. 12 on behalf of three members of the tribe, including a relative of the legendary Indian Sequoyah. The Cherokee were joined in the suit by representatives of the Oklahoma branch of their tribe.

The Tennessee Valley Authority, which is building the dam, contends it is needed to spur the local economy and provide recreational benefits. They insist the tribe has no property rights in the area, does not practice religion there and has waited too long to challenge construction of the dam.

The Indians want U.S. District Judge Robert Taylor to issue a temporary injunction stopping work until a trial on the lawsuit is held. TVA is seeking dismissal of the lawsuit.

The project has been plagued by legal trouble since construction began in the late 1960s. TVA lawyers said it will be at least the ninth time the legality of the project has been questioned in the courts.

It was recently given the go-ahead despite a more than 2-year fight by environmentalists who said the snail darter, a minuscule fish indigenous only to the Little Tennessee River, would become extinct if the dam is completed.

Congress cleared the way for completion of the project by exempting it from the Endangered Species Act.

TVA officials have not said when the floodgates on the dam will be closed, but indicate the action could be taken within weeks.

City Man Jailed For Burglary

A Lubbock man's rather conspicuous choice of transportation apparently has led to his arrest for the burglary of a 64th Street residence.

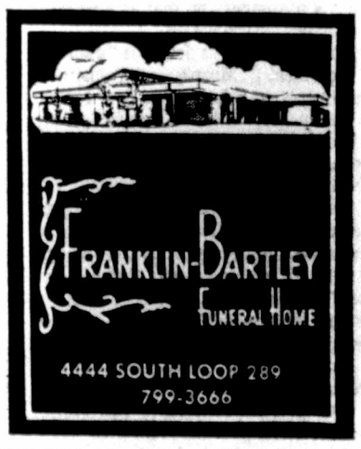

The suspect called for a cab after allegedly looting Andy D. Smith's 4718 64th Street house of more than $3,500 in property and instructed the driver to take him to a local pawn shop, where the items were hocked.

Police said that after talking to the driver and employees at the pawn shop, they arrested James Ray Evans, 24, at his Clovis Road home Thursday.

Evans was charged this morning with burglary and was being held in lieu of $15,000 bond set by Justice of the Peace Charles Smith.

The take in the Wednesday afternoon break-in included television sets, shotguns, stereo equipment, a guitar, cameras, hunting knife and a BB pistol. All the property, which was stuffed in the cab, has been recovered, according to police.

Zombie Turns Out To Be Friend

By SHARI LEWIS

Imagine this! It's your Halloween party, and in the corner of the room you have a Zany Zombie. This freaky figure is sitting in the corner of a room on a blanket. It has a strange face that peers out from under a hat, and it keeps another blanket tightly pulled around its body.

You explain that the Zany Zombie is a human that lived for 200 years, and although it has been dead for the last 12, tonight it's going to come to life. And to prove it, your Zany Zombie shocks everyone by suddenly turning into another one of your pals.

Here's how you make the zombie: Your pal lies down on the floor with his or her head in a corner and feet pointing toward the center of the room. A blanket is spead loosely over the head and body down to the waist. Now that person lifts both legs straight up in the air, and then someone else fastens a mask around the ankles.

A large hat goes over the feet and another blanket (or an old coast) is wrapped around the leg.

And to change into a living person, the zombie simply drops the legs straight down and sits up at the same time.

It's a real surprise, and you should be prepared for at least a half-dozen screams.

General Not Advocate Of Change In Policy

WASHINGTON (AP) — The chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff says he would not object if Congress lifted its ban on women serving in combat zones.

But Gen. David C. Jones said this week he still does not personally "advocate a change in policy regarding women in combat positions."

Without the ban, which prohibits women on ships or planes considered to have a combat role, he said, "the services could decide which missions women will perform in accordance with the needs of each service."

Jones made his position known at a private meeting with the Congresswomen's Caucus. An account of his remarks, cleared with the Pentagon, was released by Rep. Pat Schroeder, D-Colo.

Rep. Schroeder said the congresswomen also were told that steps are being taken to bar topless dancers from officers' and enlisted men's clubs.

She contended that in his statement on women in combat, Jones was playing what has become a "game" because she said he knows Congress does not have the votes to lift the combat ban.

She said she and other members of Congress feel the public does not favor sending women to the firing lines.

She also noted that Congress has not acted on the Pentagon's request last year to do away with the prohibition.

Some of the congresswomen told Jones that combat service should be eliminated as a bar to women's promotion in the military services.

"The issue of whether women would be allowed into the upper echelons of the military has been unclear because of the prohibitions on women serving in leading combat positions," Rep. Schroeder said.

But opponents of that argument say the Air Force's chief of staff, Gen. Lew Allen Jr., reached his top rank without serving in combat.

Secretary of the Army Clifford Alexander has revised Army policy so that women are allowed in such support roles as ferrying helicopters and other equipment to combat zones but are still prohibited from fighting.

The Navy allows women on support ships at sea but not combat ships, and the Air Force permits them to operate some missiles and cargo planes but not to participate directly in combat.

Rep. Schroeder said she was "happy to hear that the services are moving in the direction of banning topless dancers from the officers' and enlisted clubs."

"If women officers are going to be respected, we can't provide a climate on the bases which demeans them," she added.

The congresswoman, a member of the House Armed Services Committee, said its military personnel subcommittee will hold hearings to investigate the role of women in the military. No dates have been set.

GM Chief Criticizes Agency

TROY, Mich. (AP) — The National Highway Traffic Safety Administration is paying too much attention to automobile designs and not enough to the real problem — the nation's drivers, says the chairman of General Motors Corp.

Thomas Murphy criticized the NHTSA this week for concentrating on coming up with methods and plans to make the automobile totally safe.

Instead, he said, the federal agency should focus on the driver, who he said is the true cause of highway accidents and deaths. He singled out vehicle safety standards ranging from seat belts to air bags as evidence of the government's "subjective approach" to highway safety.

"The traffic safety agency determined that, regardless of cost, it must create a physical environment in the automobile that would make it all but impossible for the driver to injure himself and his passengers no matter how hard he may try," Murphy said.

The government's action is "politically expedient," Murphy said, claiming that it only transferred the cost burden to automakers "whose unenviable duty it became to pass the burden along to the consumer in the form of higher vehicle costs."

He said the government has "perceived" inflatable air bag restraints in new models to be wondrous even though tests by carmakers indicate that conventional shoulder harness-type restraining systems are as good if not superior when used properly and consistently.

Murphy spoke at the 13th Annual Greater Detroit-Michigan State University Management Conference this week, where he addressed the role that "self-serving partisanship" plays in American society.

Special interest groups that are subjective in their approach ultimately lead "not to national progress but to national inaction and confusion," he said.

Murphy said objective discussion of issues from automobile safety to nuclear power is hampered by "single-issue zealots" who emphasize slogans over facts.

"The most complex of public issues ... are all reduced by the zealot to three or four words, emblazoned on a placard," he said. "All too often, little attempt is made at rational analysis of major issues."

Ban On Milk Casein Imports Criticized

WASHINGTON (AP) — A dispute is shaping up again over imports of milk casein and how they might affect the U.S. dairy industry.

Milk producers successfully headed off a federal attempt two years ago to permit substitution of sodium caseinate for non-fat dry milk in ice cream and now are trying to put a lid on imports of casein used in some other food products.

But an industry spokesman said this week a total ban on imports of protein-rich casein for food use would jeopardize the health of more than 1 million infants and adults who depend on the ingredient to survive or lead normal lives.

Casein is derived from milk and is used to enrich special food products and animal feed.

Dr. Jerry Moore told a House Agriculture subcommittee that casein is the main ingredient of a number of products "used by patients who cannot digest food normally, by infants with severe food allergies" and others who are unable to chew or swallow ordinary food.

"The importance of these products lies not in their use by large numbers of consumers, but in the number of patients who cannot survive or live reasonable lives without products such as the ones described here," he said.

Moore is vice president of nutritional research and development for Mead Johnson and Co. of Evansville, Ind., a subsidiary of Bristol-Myers. The company makes some of the products that use imported casein.

Casein for food use is not produced domestically, he said. New Zealand and Australia are the major casein exporters.

Imported casein also is used to make cholestrol-free egg substitutes, liquid and dry coffee whiteners and dessert toppings, Moore said.

The National Milk Producers Federation supports a "zero quota" on casein imports to help protect the U.S. market for non-fat dried milk, said spokeswoman Doni Dondero.

Miss Dondero said the federation has "no problem" with casein imported for industrial uses, including the manufacture of paper coatings and adhesives.

In the 1960s, she said, casein imports were about 100 million pounds a year or so. They increased to 144.2 million pounds in 1977 and dropped back to 137.1 million in 1978. So far this year, the imports are running at an annual rate of more than 150 million pounds, she said.

In May 1977, the Food and Drug Administration proposed a new regulation that would have let sodium caseinate be used in ice cream, displacing millions of pounds of non-fat dry milk produced domestically from milk sold by American dairy farmers.

The FDA, under pressure from dairy interests and milk-state members of Congress, withdrew the proposal later that year.

Milk producer groups contended the proposal would have added at least $300 million to the government's cost of supporting dairy prices. Advocates, on the other hand, said sodium caseinate could reduce the cost of ice cream in retail stores by 5 cents a gallon.

Strategists To Attack Kennedy Hiring Record

By MICHAEL J. SNIFFEN

WASHINGTON (AP) — Strategists in the Carter presidential campaign are ready to mount an attack on Sen. Edward M. Kennedy's record for hiring minority workers.

Sources close to the Carter campaign believe the president's record is so superior to Kennedy's that this issue could decide which man gets the traditional black vote that both camps consider crucial to winning the 1980 Democratic presidential nomination.

But while there are opportunities, there are also pitfalls for the Carter camp in such a strategy, since blacks are hard to find among Carter's closest advisers.

Further, Kennedy's aides dispute the case.

"You'd think that they could come up with better points to make," says Kennedy spokesman Tom Southwick. "I don't think anyone has a stronger civil rights record over the past 17 years than Kennedy."

But one black Democrat, a state party official allied with Carter, argues that hiring records "will be a big issue in the black community."

In his view, Carter and Kennedy are so close on issues of concern to blacks that black Democrats might decide between the two on the basis of hiring records.

"Carter has a record on black appointments in top administration jobs that goes beyond rhetoric," says the Carter partisan, who declined to be identified. "Kennedy starts strong with blacks because of his family and the 1960s, but once the campaign begins, he's going to have to justify his horrible record on this over 17 years in the Senate."

Another source, familiar with the thinking of Carter campaign strategists, said, "Kennedy has spoken all the right words, but he's never had a black in a position of any policy responsibility or among his brain trust of informal advisers."

Southwick, Kennedy's spokesman, demurs.

Of informal advisers, he said: "The senator is very close to Vernon Jordan of the Urban League. And right now, he's meeting with Mrs. (Coretta Scott) King and 'Daddy' King on legislation the senator is sponsoring that concerns them: the District of Columbia voting rights amendment, a measure to make Martin Luther King's birthday a national holiday and human services legislation."

The day before, Dr. Martin Luther King Sr., father of the slain civil rights leader, had endorsed Carter.

The Carter campaign plans to wave Kennedy's hiring record in the senator's face. "Kennedy controls over 100 jobs in the Senate among various committees, and he keeps one token black around, Peter Parham," said a source close to Carter strategists, who also asked not to be named.

"Parham walks around with Kennedy in the black community, but you never hear his name on any substantive issues."

Southwick said there are 11 blacks among roughly 100 jobs controlled by Kennedy and "they absolutely are key advisers." He says Parham is a senior legislative assistant who handles education, elderly and nutrition issues. And Southwick notes that John Minor, a black counsel on Kennedy's Judiciary Committee, just drew up nuclear radiation legislation the senator introduced.

Analysis

Several sources said an assault on Kennedy's hiring record was discussed at Carter's meeting in the White House family quarters with eight veteran Democratic political leaders last week. They said the record would be pointed out by prominent black Carter supporters, like former U.N. Ambassador Andrew Young and mayors Coleman Young of Detroit and Tom Bradley of Los Angeles.

They will work from pamphlets prepared by Louis Martin, Carter's liaison with black groups. The pamphlets say Carter has appointed more blacks to judgeships and to regulatory commissions than any previous president, and has named almost half the black Army generals and Navy admirals.

"Blacks work for several key White House advisers, and Louis Martin has a staff in the White House," says the state party official in making the Carter case. "That's very important."

But there is where the strategy turns back on the Carter camp. There are no blacks among the Georgians in Carter's White House inner circle. And in the symbolism of proximity to the president, so important in this city, Carter recently took a step backwards.

As part of a White House staff reorganization, all presidential assistants were given offices in the West Wing near the Oval Office. Special assistants were relocated in the less prestigious East Wing.

As a result, Martin, Carter's senior black adviser, lost his West Wing office to a white male.

Ford Device May Save Energy

CLEVELAND (AP) — Ever think how much gasoline you might save if your car engine wasn't idling at every red light or in gas station lines?

Engineers at Ford Motor Co. thought about it and came up with a silent, mechanical device that stores energy for quick restarts.

City driving usually involves frequent stops for traffic signals or stop signs, and the report by the team of four Ford engineers says a "significant savings in energy can be achieved" if the car engine is turned off at such stops.

"To implement such a strategy, a means of restarting the engine in a rapid and quiet manner is needed," according to the report prepared for this week's meeting of the American Chemical Society's Rubber Division

"A device has been designed which uses an elastomer (natural rubber) to store the required energy," said P.C. Killgoar, a member of the Ford team. "When the driver of the car steps on the accelerator, the stored energy is released and the engine restarted."

Killgoar said a prototype starter installed in a test vehicle has been running "for a considerable amount of time with no indications of failure."

However, a Ford spokesman in Dearborn, Mich. said the device was still several years away from production.

The report says the restarter uses a "spring" formed by a series of individual rings formed of rubber and coupled together.

One end of the device is connected to a conventional electric starter, which winds the spring.

The other end is connected to the engine, and a brake is used "to prevent the spring from unwinding except when required to start the engine."

The Ford engineers say only a small amount of energy is needed to wind the spring while the car is running.

Students To Collect Census Information

WASHINGTON (AP) — College students around the nation will be paid $4 an hour and get class credit for helping with next year's national census.

The Census Bureau says it is turning to colleges to help fill the 270,000 census-taker jobs available for the nation's 20th head count. Students who take part in collecting information for the survey will get — in addition to money — college credit for the knowledge they gain of population and housing statistics and urban problems.

Inflation May Result In Upheavals, Professor Says

By United Press International

In the 1960s, the Vietnam War and racism brought social tensions to the flash point. Though there is some disagreement among sociologists, a professor says the same sort of upheavals might occur in the '80s as the result of economic traumas.

"If we don't resolve some of the more pressing economic problems, we may witness a resurgence of the attitudes of the '60s," said Dr. J. Steven Picou, a Texas A&M University associate professor of sociology.

"Although we are more aware today of our social problems and we know that change comes slowly, we still have problems that can't be ignored. America has experienced some unique upheavals such as Vietnam and Watergate, but now the oil crisis and inflation have replaced these concerns with issues of another kind," he said.

Social tensions may be about to boil over again, warned Picou, but said education may be the key to prevent chaos.

"Social change was promoted by conscientious students, minorities and women," he said. "Change came about primarily because these groups did the work."

Much of today's frustration, he said, could be alleviated through innovative educational programs designed to meet the contemporary needs of the same people.

"Americans are more conscious of economics today," said Picou. "If the economic situation of working Americans continues to deteriorate we will see collective responses from groups such as blacks, browns and women who again will begin to speak up about their plights."

There is dispute over whether the exact combination of conditions exists for another polarization of American society as occurred in the 1960s.

In Dallas, Dr. Peter J. Leahy, Director of Urban Studies in the Sociology Department at Southern Methodist University, said the '60s "were characterized by rising expectations and rising social promises — promises made by such things as the War on Poverty and the civil rights movement.

"All these things fused to heighten the expectations of what could be done by the public sector and what people could demand from it. Now, people have to justify what they get. There's a real cost-benefit ratio applied to everything."

Conditions today are definitely worse, said Leahy.

"There's still a lot of absolute deprivation and a tremendous amount of exploitation. That goes for blacks and other minorities. It's still unclear whether there's enough to trigger violence. I don't know — but my personal feeling is 'no' even though there is much more unemployment. The ambience isn't right for it — things aren't organized yet," he said.

Young white professionals, he said, flocked to the suburbs in the '60s but today, East Dallas restoration projects illuminate a key difference.

"There are many white professionals who are attracted to urban living now," he said, "who don't feel the pressure to get out. They like the older houses, the sidewalks, the (integrated) people. I don't think they're going to be willing to run anymore.

"If a tense situation develops, these people could act as negotiating agents. In the '60s, there just weren't any. If it's going to happen, I think it will happen in places such as Chicago, Detroit, Newark, St. Louis."

At Texas Christian University in Fort Worth, the campus minister, Rev. John Butler, said in the 60s "there were social issues for which someone could see a clearcut alternative and that involved a personal action to be taken — one could put a stop to racism or not register for the draft.

"But now, issues are so complex and international in scope that it's very hard to see that what you do makes any difference. Students are more aware of the economic realities of their future than they have been in years."

Butler said "Stress is caused by the economic pressures caused by the assessment of the future that is increasingly bleak in terms of energy, inflation, the lack of leadership on a national and international scale."

But people are reacting more privately, said Butler — some are drinking, some are immersed in hobbies, others find religion or become involved in ecological movements or community organizations.

"For some people, a minority, these tensions will boil over. But it may be as much a personal boilover than one that is corporate with a social impact," he said. "I don't see it boiling over like we've seen it in the past — where people get together and politicize their colleagues to the point there is a corporate response."

Study Shows Gas May Be Harmful

DALLAS (AP) — Dentists and dental workers who chronically sniff laughing gas as they use it in their work could develop liver, kidney or neurological problems, a study released by the American Dental Association claims.

The study says dental patients are not endangered, because infrequent doses of laughing gas — nitrous oxide — are not harmful.

"The report offered evidence suggesting an increase of specific health problems in male and female dental personnel exposed to trace inhalation anesthetic-sedatives, compared to those who were not," said Dr. William Greenfield of New York City, who did the research.

"Significant increases among heavily exposed dentists and female assisting personnel were noted relative to liver, kidney and general neurologic diseases."

The study showed that nitrous oxide was used as a sole inhalation anesthetic in 81 percent of dental administrations, and that the health problems could be associated with its use by itself in dental operations.

The study addressed nitrous oxide specifically.

Greenfield said the study showed no statistically significant increases in cancer incidence.

The problems extended to the families of the dentists and assistants, Greenfield said.

"Presence of a reproductive hazard was indicated by an increase of spontaneous abortion in wives of heavily exposed dentists as well as female dental assisting personnel," Greenfield said. "The latter group (female assistants) also showed an increase in congenital abnormalities of their children. No such increase in congenital abnormalities was recorded in the children of wives of ... exposed dentists."

Greenfield cautioned that final analysis of date from the survey has not been completed.

The survey was sponsored jointly by the ADA and the Stanford University Medical School, and was supported by the National Institute of Occupational Safety and Health.

The survey was based on questionnaires answered by 64,209 dentists and dental auxiliaries.

Report Shows Egg Production Higher

WASHINGTON (AP) — An estimated 5.55 billion eggs were produced last month, a 1 percent increase over September 1978 figures, the Agriculture Department says.

The latest USDA report shows that by the end of last month, there were 1 percent more hens in laying flocks or some 287 million birds.

The rate of lay by hens as of Oct. 1 was 64.9 eggs per 100 birds, about the same as the rate of 65 eggs a year earlier, the report said.

Confrontation May Be Renewed

By WILLIAM J. HOLSTEIN

HONG KONG (UPI) — The pathetic stream of starving Cambodians limping into Thailand heralds the opening of Act II in a contest of wills between China and Vietnam that could lead to renewed confrontation.

The month-long war between China and Vietnam earlier this year resolved nothing. The major issues are still Hanoi's occupation of Cambodia and its alliance with the Soviet Union.

Now that the wet season is ending in Asia, Vietnam has stepped up attacks on the remnants of the pro-Chinese Pol Pot government that it pushed from Phnom Penh last January, sparking a flood of more than 100,000 sick and starving refugees into Thailand.

Chinese and Western intelligence sources agree Vietnam has about 200,000 troops in Cambodia, at least 56,000 of them now deployed near the Thai border to stamp out forces loyal to former Premier Pol Pot.

An estimated 10,000 troops loyal to Pol Pot are holed up in caves and on heavily jungled mountains near the Thai border, vastly outnumbered and outgunned by the regular Vietnamese troops.

With roads now drying out, the Vietnamese hope to bring in heavy armor against the rebels.

There is little doubt among Western diplomatic analysts that the Vietnamese are on the verge of finally removing the Pol Pot thorn from their side, thereby handing the Chinese a military and diplomatic setback.

The question is how China will respond.

China apparently feels it cannot allow Vietnam to consolidate control over Cambodia, and Chinese Premier Hua Guofeng has been emphasizing this on his tour of Western Europe.

The trip is reminiscent of Chinese Vice Premier Deng Xiaoping's tour of the United States and Japan earlier this year during which he announced China would "punish" Vietnam for its transgressions.

Analysis

The "defensive counterattack" started within days of his remark.

Hua has declared that a "political solution" to the Cambodian situation "is not realistic." The obvious implication is China will seek a military solution.

Vietnamese officials say Chinese troops and planes are pouring into areas along the Vietnamese and Laotian borders, although Western diplomats have not yet reported a major buildup.

Doan Van Loi, Vietnam's charge d'affaires in Jakarta, said Hanoi expects China to attack Vietnamese-controlled Laos rather than Vietnam itself.

"I cannot say when ... but we have good reasons to think China intends to teach a second lesson to Vietnam," Loi said. "China likes to teach, but we Vietnamese are not good schoolchildren."

Some skeptical Western diplomats doubt China will mount a full-scale military action like the Feb. 15 invasion.

"Last time they had 600,000 men and they got 25 miles, but that didn't really prove anything to the world," one Western analyst said. "Whatever they would do now would have to be bigger and better than that."

The analyst added that such a move is bound to force the Soviet Union's hand.

During the February border war the Soviets contented themselves with stepping up their naval presence in the South China Sea, increasing forces along the Sino-Soviet border and supplying the Vietnamese. If the Chinese now mount a larger offensive, the Soviets presumably would have to do more also to demonstrate their support of Hanoi.

CONVICTION AFFIRMED

AUSTIN (AP) — The Texas Court of Criminal Appeals affirmed the conviction Wednesday of an official at a Central Texas delinquent boys ranch where a youth lost an eye, hand and wrist in a dynamite accident. The 5-4 decision came on a conviction the appeals court had previously reversed.

Step-Families Face Special Household Problems

By KAY BARTLETT

BRONXVILLE, N.Y. (AP) — Kit was 23 and Bill was 37 when they met and fell in love. He was divorced and had custody of his three children, aged 9, 8 and 5. That didn't bother a starry-eyed Kit at all.

"I was going to make Bill terrifically happy," Kit now recounts, 12 years and many heartaches later. "I was coming in as the great crusader. I was going to make everyone happy. The children would adore me and Bill would love me. Together, we would erase all the unhappy experiences the children had."

The night of the wedding, the three little ones were packed into a limousine when the bride and groom came out to say goodnight. The eldest, 9-year-old Debbie, looked up and asked: "Now can we call you Mommy?"

"I was ecstatic," says Kit. "It helped solidify the myth."

The trouble was that Kit and Bill were not entering a fairy tale where everybody lives happily ever after. They were entering into the harsh reality of a step-family, a type of family that is commonplace in America today.

Researchers estimate that some 25 million adults are stepparents and that one out of every sixth child is a stepchild. As divorce and remarriage rates climb, these figures are apt to go even higher.

Such a family has its special problems, problems that society is just starting to deal with. They are compounded as individuals and even mental health professionals try to impose solutions that work for the "intact" or traditional family, but may not work for a family with a different set of relationships, a different history.

Kit and others with experience in step-families say that to make matters even worse, it's something of a closet problem. Kit, now a natural mother of two daughters, sometimes wears a T-shirt emblazoned "Stepmother" to the grocery store.

"I see people stare at me in strange ways," says Kit, now 35.

People in Bronxville shy away from discussing step family problems, Kit says.

"Kids here belong to Al-Anon. You get the feeling it's better to have an alcoholic parent than a stepparent."

Kit and Bill Moseley made perhaps the most common mistake stepparents make when they remarry. They set up false expectations. At first, the idyll survived.

"The children would race home from school to see who could get to me first. And I remember after the first week, sitting at the dinner table thinking that I had fed this family, kept it alive for one week," Kit says.

Then came trouble.

The daughter took to stealing household items and selling them. The elder of the two boys became withdrawn and passive, reacting neither to punishment nor reward; the younger, a hyperactive child to start with, broke all the toys before Christmas Day was over. Things got so serious that for nine-and-a-half years of their 12-year marriage, at least one member of the family was in analysis or therapy.

"The professionals for the most part did not pick up on the step-family situation," says Kit. She felt like an outsider.

"I had a cat and even that cat took an incredible amouunt of abuse. I had to try to convince them I was not a new player in the old game. This was a brand new game."

Like many children in a step-family, the Moseley youngsters consciously or unconsciously wished things could go back to the way they were before the divorce. They seemed to feel that if it weren't for Kit, that would happen.

When Kit and Bill had their first child nine years ago, there was the predictable jealousy as well as a new threat of stability for this family.

Bill, a stepchild himself, says he totally underestimated the conflicts as well as the emotional scars his children bore from the last chaotic years of his first marriage, the divorce, their role as displaced persons.

Kit and Bill decided to get a divorce. They were angry at themselves, each other, the kids.

As a last shot, they went to a marriage counselor. "For two years, it was nip-and-tuck," says Bill. Kit adds: "We finally realized we had a completely child-centered relationship. We had no relationship for ourselves.

"We had to grow up and let go of the problems of the kids."

In the course of this trauma, Kit read a book by Jeannette Lofas and Ruth Roosevelt called "Living In Step: A Remarriage Manual for Parents and Children." She also went to The Step-Family Foundation of New York City. Run by Mrs. Lofas, it is one of the few organizations in the country that gives specialized help to people like the Moseleys.

Mrs. Lofas became an expert by necessity. A stepchild herself, Mrs. Lofas became the stepmother of four daughters, aged 7 to 17, when she married a second time. She was already the mother of one son.

The four girls, who had confided in her, giggled with her, seemed genuinely fond of Daddy's tall and strikingly beautiful companion. Suddenly they quit talking to her when she became Daddy's wife, their stepmother

She could do nothing right.

A former television journalist, she plunged into research on the subject — to no avail. Experts hadn't considered the problem.

"I still hear psychologists asking a little boy, 'How do you like your new Daddy?' Never say that to a kid. He's not the new Daddy. He never will be. That's like asking how do you like your new God."

Mrs. Lofas incorporated the foundation in 1975 and survives on a few grants, fees and volunteers. She runs workshops and will even do telephone consultations for a dollar a minute.

The charts she draws for each client attest to the complexity a step-family can attain. Mrs. X with four children who marries a Mr. Y with three children. That's one household of nine persons. Now suppose both former spouses not only remarry, but remarry someone with children. That's two more households for visitations and vacations.

The emotional complexity is not so easy to chart.

A seemingly simple and adorable thing like Debbie's request to call Kit "Mommy" may have cost a lot. Did she think she was betraying her mother? Was she angry and rejecting her mother? Or was it a sense of survival — a way to be loved by this new adult?

Dr. Emily Visher, a clinical psychologist in Palo Alto, Calif., and her psychiatrist husband, Dr. John Visher, recently published their book: "Step-Families: A Guide to Working with Stepparents & Stepchildren." They wrote from their clinical experience as well as their personal vantage point. They were both divorced, and the parents of four children each when they married 20 years ago.

Their book is filled with practical advice, case histories, statistics and the etymology of the word step, which doesn't fit today. It's from the old English prefix "steop," meaning bereaved or orphaned.

Emily Visher is also president of the Step-Family Foundation of California, an organization of some 200 families. Self-help groups, survival courses, crisis hot lines and professional workshops are among the services the group provides. Dr. Visher is also setting up a national organization, Step-Family Association of America, but it's still in its infancy.

"You get the feeling it's better to have an alcoholic parent than a stepparent."

People think a second marriage is going to be the same as the first.

"There are obvious differences that tend to get overlooked," says Dr. Visher. "One is that the parent-child relationship is the older, better-established one." That, she says, can be potentially dangerous. "In most relationships, the couple relationships must be the primary one if the step-family is to succeed."

The parents must remain united despite childrens' efforts to separate them. Says Mrs. Lofas: "A kid's full-time occupation is working over the parents."

Alan Williams, father of an 8-year-old daughter, and his new wife, Helayne, mother of boys aged 11 and 7, fell right into that trap as the kids predictably got into fights.

"I would rush right in and not be aware of it," says Alan, a school teacher in San Jose, Calif. "I wasn't aware how defensive I would become. Helayne would sit back, but we would both take sides and argue about it later. The kids were using it, of course."

They signed up for a survival course sponsored by Dr. Visher's group and they were first relieved when they found others were having the same problem.

Williams says his second great relief came when he was told he didn't have to love his stepsons.

"I don't even have to like them, but it's part and parcel of the package. "But," he adds, "I do feel close to them. They're neat kids a lot of the time. And there are times when they aren't so neat."

Alan and Helayne Williams also encountered the problem of the little things, which at times take on enormous proportions. Alan and Helayne had been brought up differently and had different expectations about things like discipline and table manners.

Alan Williams, for instance, would not accept the temper tantrums of one of Helayne's sons at the table.

"I took him and put him in his room and told him when he behaved himself he could come back to the table."

Williams also had different ideas of bedtime (earlier) and television (not as much).

It wasn't easy. Sometimes he would walk into the living room and say hello and they would look the other way or get out of the room.

"They were hoping I would just get out of their lives."

Mrs. Lofas believes in giving out very practical assignments to those who come to her.

Stepmothers whose children won't get close might plan to be in the kitchen alone for one hour every night before dinner. That way, the stepchildren know where she is when they want to start some closeness.

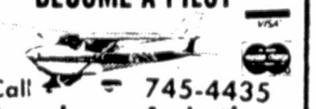

Dr. Visher also gives practical advice.

Some samples: Move into a new house, even if it seems impossible. The old house is already territorially claimed, it has its histories and memories of something that no longer is.

If you are the stepparent who sees the children on visitations or weekends, make sure the child has some space of his very own, even if it's only a drawer.

Don't expect or demand instant love, loyalty and affection. Give it time.

WHY RECORD CARE ?... HI FIDELITY HAS THE ANSWER.

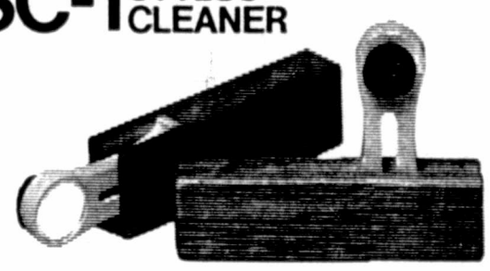

You buy a record because you like the sound and you enjoy putting it on your turntable ... leaning back in your favorite chair relaxing and listening to every instrument or voice. You would be very upset if anyone destroyed your record collection, and yet ... if you are not practicing good "record care", you are virtually destroying your record collection. HI FIDELITY offers a few "record care" suggestions and they are also standing by at 747-4507 ready to answer any other question you may have concerning your records, tapes, turntable, receiver, amplifier or any other stereo equipment.

Discwasher System

HI FIDELITY feels the Discwasher System is the finest record cleaning instrument available today for home use. It will last for years and the fluid is available separately. HI FIDELITY will refill your 1 oz. bottle for $1.25 (a saving of $1.00)
Discwasher System

SC-1 STYLUS CLEANER

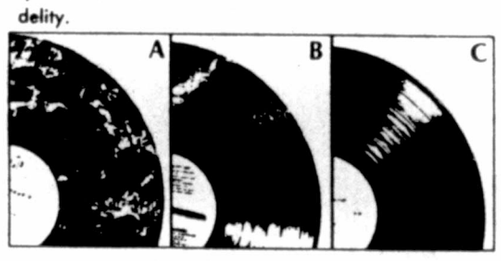

One of the most neglected areas of record care is the stylus. HI FIDELITY inspects styluses under the Wild Heerbrugg microscope and has yet to find a clean one. In fact in each case the stylus must be cleaned before it can be inspected. The Discwasher Stylus Cleaner SC-1 is a very effective instrument for cleaning your stylus and is easy to use.

Permostat – the answer to the static problem.

HI FIDELITY
Priced $15.00

Permostat is a unique and specially formulated fluid, which when applied to a record totally and permanently eliminates static for the normal considered record life expectancy, without any detectable change in sound quality, surface noise, frequency response or fidelity.

Hi Fidelity
Price-$19.95

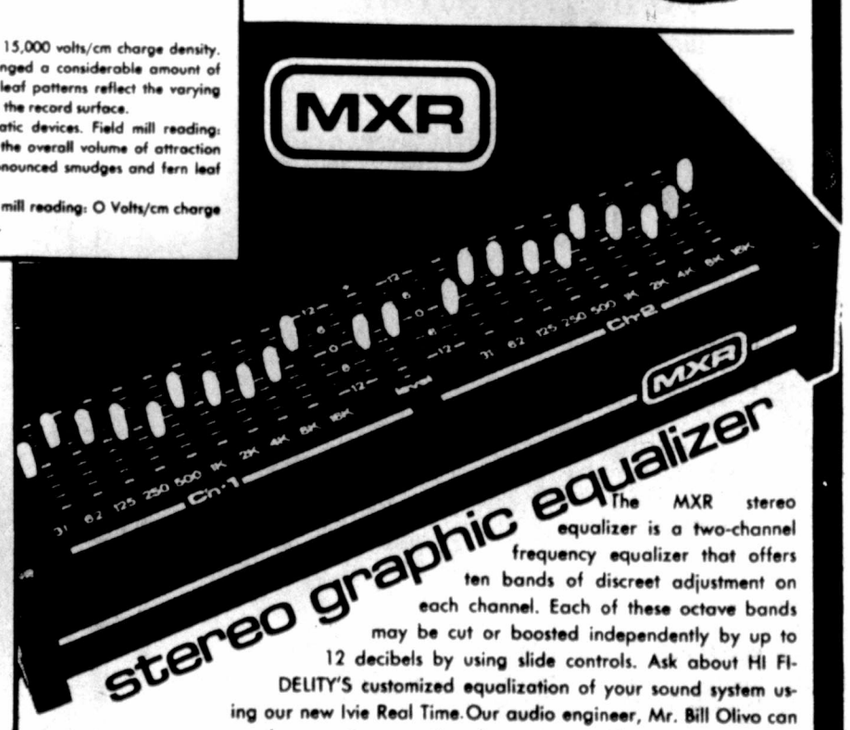

A) Untreated record. Field mill reading: 15,000 volts/cm charge density. The record readily attracted and scavenged a considerable amount of dust. The intense and pronounced fern leaf patterns reflect the varying and uneven high static charge present on the record surface.
B) Record treated with claimed anti-static devices. Field mill reading: 300 volts/cm charge density. Although the overall volume of attraction and scavenging had been reduced, pronounced smudges and fern leaf patterns, are still most apparent.
C) Record treated with Permostat. Field mill reading: O Volts/cm charge denisty. No Visible evidence dust pick-up.

Now you can protect the sound of your records with Sound Guard* record preservative. Sound Guard preservative puts on a microscopically thin, dry film to help the stylus track smoothly in the grooves — instead of eroding them away
$7.95

*Sound Guard is Ball Corporation's trademark for its record preservative.

The MXR stereo equalizer is a two-channel frequency equalizer that offers ten bands of discreet adjustment on each channel. Each of these octave bands may be cut or boosted independently by up to 12 decibels by using slide controls. Ask about HI FIDELITY'S customized equalization of your sound system using our new Ivie Real Time. Our audio engineer, Mr. Bill Olivo can measure the acoustic properties of your room and equalize it for optimum frequency balance. Select from any other equalizer products by MXR, and McIntosh.

Two State Troopers Seek Transfers After Hassle

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — Two state troopers, the focus of a bitter dispute between Atascosa County officials and the Department of Public Safety, are seeking transfers for purely personal reasons. But a DPS official indicates there will be no immediate transfers.

DPS Capt. Randol Gilmore said here Thursday that patrolmen Earl Conaway, 32, and Albert Rodriguez, 26, filed their transfer requests before county officials demanded that the DPS transfer them or move its entire six-man operation out of the county-owned command post.

The DPS vacated the building and suspended routine traffic patrols in the rural South Texas county on Oct. 1 rather than yield to the demands.

The six troopers, working out of their homes, are answering only emergency calls in Atascosa County and confining their routine traffic patrols to adjoining counties.

The two troopers had spearheaded a drunken driving crackdown that Gilmore credited with cutting the county's traffic death rate in half. But it also resulted in drunken driving charges against sons of two prominent local politicians, including the county commissioner who sponsored the eviction resolution.

DPS officials feel the eviction order stemmed from those arrests. That allegation is denied by county officials, who claim Rodriguez and Conaway "harassed and abused" residents.

Gilmore said both troopers had personal reasons for requesting transfers.

"It's an internal matter," he said. "Conaway's family lives in San Antonio and he lives in Pleasanton. He wants transferred to San Antonio. The Rodriguez situation is similar. He wants to move to Austin.

"They wanted transferred before the Atascosa County officials tried to get them transferred out of the county," Gilmore added. "There are policies and procedures to be followed. Also, they're supposed to be in an area for a year before they can be transferred."

Rodriguez began working in Atascosa County last April and Conaway was stationed in the county last May.

County officials collected numerous statement from residents with complaints against the two troopers and turned them over to DPS Director Col. Wilson Speir.

But an DPS internal investigation turned up no serious violations against the two troopers, the DPS announced Tuesday in Austin.

Speir has said Conaway and Rodriguez would be left in Atascosa County while DPS and county officials attempt to resolve the situation.

Gilmore and County Judge O.B. Gates said there have been no recent negotiations. Gates said the results of the internal investigation "were about what we expected."

Gates and county officials deny that the eviction order stemmed from the drunken driving arrests of Plez William Hall, son of Pleasanton Mayor Travis Hall, and Thomas J. Tausch, son of Commissioner Smith Tausch.

The six troopers also felt racism aggravated the problem, since Conaway is black and Rodriguez is Mexican-American. Officials in the rural South Texas county also denied that charge.

South Africa Raps Report Of N-Blast

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — South Africa today denied U.S. intelligence suggestions that it set off a nuclear device, calling the report total nonsense verging on science fiction.

And in Washington, a senior American defense official appeared to step back from those suggestions by saying "there is no independent evidence that would link a particular country" with the suspected explosion more than a month ago.

Dr. J. Wynand de Villiers, president of South Africa's Atomic Energy Board, said the report indicating South Africa might be on the brink of joining only six other nations in the world's known atomic arms club was "complete nonsense."

"I have no knowledge at all of such an explosion," he said. "If there was anything of the sort, my first reaction would be that some other powers might have undertaken a test, but it was definitely not South Africa."

Foreign Minister Roelof F. Botha declared, "I know absolutely nothing about this matter, whatsoever.

"Why don't you ask the Russians or the Chinese, or even the Americans," Botha asked sarcastically. "South Africa is not Antarctica. We might even be talking about Australia or New Zealand.

"It is a particularly vast area in which the phenomenon is supposed to have taken place. If the Americans don't know what is going on, I suggest they first make sure of their facts before they run away with the idea.

"It might even have been the rebirth of Venus. I suggest that the Americans ask Neptune for a report..."

Botha said the United States, "as leaders of the Western world...should not panic so easily..."

U.S. officials told reporters in Washington Thursday night they had evidence South Africa may have exploded a nuclear device in the atmosphere last month.

The officials said the indicators were picked up by a reconnaissance satellite, and were not conclusive. But they said their evidence indicated a "low-yield nuclear explosion occurred on Sept. 22 in an area of the Indian ocean and South Atlantic, including portions of the Antarctic continent and the southern part of Africa."

But the U.S. defense official, briefing reporters in Washington today, sought to back away from the earlier intelligence reports that targeted South Africa as the likely source of the suspected explosion.

And this official, who spoke under ground rules barring use of his name, said the blast may remain a mystery.

A second knowledgeable U.S. government source also told The Associated Press "there is no reason whatsoever to implicate South Africa in this." Asked exactly what had occurred, this source replied: "No one really knows."

Elsewhere in Washington, meanwhile, Rep. Stephen J. Solarz, D-N.Y., chairman of the House subcommittee on Africa, termed the reports "deeply disturbing" and said his panel will conduct a hearing on the matter next Monday.

Solarz said he was told the evidence of a nuclear explosion "is pretty strong" and said one purpose of the hearing will be to find out how conclusive it is.

He said he understands that while one satellite picked up indications of the nuclear explosion, other detectors have not corroborated it.

"Unless one assumes a malfunction in the system or that it detected some unexplained natural phenomenon, it was consistent with an explosion," Solarz said.

House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill said the State Department notified him Thursday night of evidence of an explosion. He declined to elaborate.

Sporadic reports in recent years that South Africa has or is capable of producing a nuclear weapon have always been denied by the South African government, which insists its nuclear program is dedicated solely to peaceful uses of nuclear energy.

grades nor textbooks. "But the kids at Dodson (his school) are 15-21 percent higher than the national average" in achievement scores, he said.

Ross told the teachers and administrators to be dedicated to their "boys and girls, the system and the superintendent." He also urged administrators to praise their teachers and recognize their achievements in the classroom.

Speaker Dora Scott, president-elect of TSTA, also appealed to the educators for dedication, particularly through the political process.

"Everything in education goes through the political process," said Mrs. Scott.

She asked for financial donations to push through legislation favorable to teachers and students, noting that financial aid on the national level "paid off" in the formation of the new Department of Education.

She chastised other teacher groups for not assisting teachers in gaining fair salaries and benefits, and said that TSTA, by working together could solve the problems in Texas education.

In other business, District XVII president Frank Mullican presented longtime civic and education supporter James H. Whiteside with a plaque in recognition of his service to Texas students.

Whiteside was a previous Lubbock public school trustee and currently serves on the State Board of Education.

Gold Skids In Europe

LONDON (UPI) — Gold plunged sharply in London and Zurich today and the dollar showed signs of modest recovery on major money markets.

Gold dropped $17.50 an ounce in Zurich, opening at $374.50 against $392.000 at Thursday's close. It fell by $16.50 an ounce in London, starting at $375.50 compared to $392.00, but rose to $377.80 in early trading before the morning fix.

Zurich dealers said the overnight U.S. announcement of an anti-speculator gold auction of up to 1.25 million ounces Nov. 1 was the reason.

"The market reacted immediately to the announcement of the new U.S. auction. The speculators apparently believe the demand for gold may be declining," one Zurich dealer said.

It also reflected the signs of a slightly stronger dollar.

"The dollar looks a little firmer in the wake of the informal agreement between the Fed and West German and Swiss central banks that the Europeans will not sell dollars as a means of controlling the growth of money supply," said a London dealer for Barclay's Bank International.

The dollar opened fractionally higher almost everywhere. It started at 1.8040 deutschemarks in Frankfurt, up from Thursday's 1.8014, and in Zurich was 1.6667 Swiss francs against 1.6568.

It also firmed against sterling in London, $2.1120 to the pound compared with 2.1130. In Paris it opened at 4.2275 francs, up from 4.22375, and was higher in Amsterdam, 2.0030 guilders against 2.0015. It was 830.35 lire in Milan, up from 829.30, and closed moderately higher in Tokyo, 234.70 yen against Thursday's close of 233.80.

DEMONSTRATE AGAINST SHAH — Chanting, shouting demonstrators carry placards denouncing the Shah of Iran as they parade across the street from New York Hospital-Cornell Medical Center, where the shah is being treated for cancer and the removal of his gallbladder. Shah's Treatment May Require Year In U.S.

NEW YORK (UPI) — The ailing Shah of Iran will return to his mansion in Mexico following an indefinite period — possibly as long as a year — of outpatient chemotherapy treatment for his spreading cancer, a spokesman for the exiled monarch said today.

Robert Armao, the American spokesman for Shah Mohammed Reza Pahlavi, said "his majesty has hopes to return to Mexico. He and the empress are very happy in Cuernavaca. The president and people of Mexico welcome him there like it is his home."

The shah was granted a one-year visa by the State Department and his spokesmen said the shah's doctors expected their prescribed intensive chemotherapy to last that long.

Armao, a former aide to Nelson Rockefeller, said the shah would celebrate his 60th birthday in his hospital room today with his wife, Empress Farah, his children, Prince Ali Reza, 13, and Princess Leila, 9, and his two sisters, Princess Shams and Princess Ashraf.

"We'll just celebrate with a cake very quietly," Armao said before entering the hospital where the shah has been treated for a type of cancer known as lymphoma and also had his gall bladder removed to correct a jaundice condition.

Biopsy tests have shown the shah's large cell lymphoma spread from neck lymph nodes to the spleen. His doctors believe he has a good chance of recovery after at least a year of rigorous chemotherapy.

Armao said he spoke with the shah about the treatments Thursday and "he is in good spirits."

Armao said he anticipated the shah would remain in the hospital for at least seven weeks.

As Armao stepped away from reporters, a middle-aged woman shouted at him: "How does it feel to work for a murderer?"

Anti-shah demonstrators have been appearing outside the New York Hospital-Cornell Medical Center, where the shah is undergoing treatment.

Doctors Thursday said they expect the deposed monarch's cancer can be cured if he stays in New York for at least six months of intensive chemotherapy.

Dr. Morton Coleman, in charge of chemotherapy programs at the hospital, said doctors "assume" the shah's lymphoma has spread.

Lymphoma is cancer of the spleen and lymph nodes, the body's disease-fighting network. Once cancer afflicts the system, it normally spreads quickly throughout the body.

But Coleman added, "This is a cancer we can make a real impact on. We have the potential to cure him." He said patients with the shah's type of lymphoma have a "60 to 70 percent long-range survival rate."

But Coleman cautioned that patients often face complications from chemotherapy such as infection, loss of hair and internal bleeding. He added, "The possibility exists that the shah will die from chemotherapy."

However, Coleman said he was optimistic about the shah's chances of recovery because he responded well to the past treatment.

In Iran, the Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini, who sent the shah into exile, blamed "enemies of Islam and Moslems" for admitting the shah into the United States.

OSHA Investigating Refinery Accident

most of the West Texas area in handling health and safety standard violation cases.

Plant officials at Phillips say they do not know what toxic substance caused the accident or where it originated. There has been some speculation, however, that the disabling fumes were from hydrogen sulfide gas that dissipated quickly, but others said the substance may have been hydrofluoric acid.

One worker said the gas smelled like rotten eggs, the typical odor of hydrogen sulfide.

"We're not sure," said Phillips spokesman Norman Berkley. "The pipe the men were working on was not used for hydrogen sulfide, and it should not have been in there."

He said the accident occurred as maintenance workers were trying to start a refinery unit that had been down for repairs for 10 days.

That unit has been a source of "almost constant problems" at the refinery, said one plant worker who declined to give his name. He said several incidents, including one in 1973 that injured three persons "very seriously," had plagued the unit.

"I guess this (danger of poison) is just part of the game," the worker said. "But I shudder clear down to my boots every time I even think about it."

Berkley said the pipeline should have been empty. "No one was even wearing breathing equipment," he said.

The leakage drifted over a platform crowded with workers just after 1 p.m., said Jim Ormsby, director of human resources for Phillips.

The Panhandle refinery, which employs about 750 persons, is located two miles northeast of Borger.

Ambulance driver Randy Strickland, who helped ferry some of the less seriously injured workers to North Plains Hospital, said one man was dead and two Phillips employees were critically injured when he arrived.

"We responded to the call at 1:09 p.m. Phillips officials didn't tell us until we had gotten there what had happened. They just said they had some people down," said Strickland.

Ormsby said the situation had been brought under control and work at the plant had not been interrupted.

A Northwest Texas Hospital spokeswoman said Baker was being maintained on a ventilator, which in effect breathes for him.

Other employees injured but in good condition at North Plains Hospital in Borger were identified as Mark Holland, Stacy Jones, Tom Paulson, R.J. Edmiaston and H.A. Devore Sr., all of Borger, and Ed Adamson, Don Gibbs, Danny Betterman and Greg Stout, whose hometowns were not available.

"Unit 22 at the refinery was undergoing routine maintenance when the accident occurred," explained C.W. Forman, the manager of the largest Phillips refinery in the Southwest.

"The gas apparently leaked from a pipe that the workers disconnected, thinking it was empty of gas.

"Thirteen men were overcome by fumes and some did lose consciousness," Forman said.

"Others were overcome during rescue attempts. The leak was stopped when workers wearing proper breathing apparatus were able to close off the pipe."

About 80 workers were performing the maintenance chores on the unit when the gas escaped, said Berkley. The dead and injured fell from a platform near the pipe about 20 feet to the ground.

Unit 22 is one of several tall cylindrical towers in which gas and oil pass through during alkylation, one of the steps involved in processing the crude oil brought into the refinery from all over West Texas, Berkley said.

Cotton Farmers Preparing For Harvest

COLLEGE STATION (UPI) — Harvest operations continue at full speed in West Texas and the Plains, but are winding down over much of the state, according to the Texas Agricultural Extension Service weekly report.

Cotton harvesting is underway in the South Plains, the state's premier cotton growing area, as well as in far west and west central Texas. Although some early cotton has been harvested in the Rolling Plains, most farmers are awaiting a killing frost to prepare for crop harvest. About 20 percent of the cotton crop remains to be harvested in the Central Texas Blacklands, according to the extension service.

Sorghum harvesting is also active in the Panhandle and South Plains along with harvesting of soybeans and sunflowers. A good soybean crop is being harvested in East Texas and along the Upper Coast, and harvesting will start in the Coastal Bend next week.

Harvesting of a bumper pecan crop is underway over most of Texas. Pecans are excellent quality this year and should be reasonably priced at the market, the extension service said.

Harvesting of fall vegetables and citrus fruits is increasing in the Rio Grande Valley and Winter Garden, and sugar cane harvesting is gaining momentum in the valley.

While the fall weather has been excellent for harvesting, it has also brought a decline in pasture and range conditions and stock water supplies. Consequently, many farmers have started culling herds and moving large numbers of cattle to market, especially in the western and southern areas of the state. Some supplemental feeding also has started in parts of far west, west central and southwest Texas.

The dry weather is also causing moisture stress in early planted small grains, and many farmers are still waiting on rain to plant wheat, oats and barley.

Female Speaking Habits Studied

EAST LANSING, Mich. (UPI) — A Michigan State University researcher says women's speech patterns are hurting their credibility in the classroom.

Barrie Thorne, a member of the MSU sociology department, said men who speak in an assertive, impersonal and competitive manner are often regarded as intelligent and authoritative.

Because of social patterns, however, women teachers and students speak in higher, softer ways and use many "empty" modifiers and qualifiers such as "fantastic" and "you know," she said.

She said this manner of speech puts women at a verbal disadvantage and makes it difficult for them to establish credibility in classroom settings.

Escaped Hogs Run Loose On Highway

SANGER (AP) — About 100 hogs were killed and some 200 others were rounded up after an accident involving two trucks, one of which was carrying 298 pigs to a slaughtering house.

"We spent about three hours running hogs up and down the highway" before the escapees, weighing up to 300 pounds, were caught this week, said Jerry Ashcraft, a Future Farmers of American sponsor.

"Hogs can't be herded like cattle. They're more stubborn," he said.

Moose Becomes Window Peeper

DETOUR, Mich. (UPI) — A peeping tom is on the loose in this community on the eastern tip of Michigan's Upper Peninsula, but authorities probably won't be able to press charges once they track down the suspect.

The state Department of Natural Resources said this week several local residents have complained of a moose peeking into the windows of their homes after dark each night.

DNR Conservation Officer Elton Carlson has been assigned to chase the moose out of town.

Worker Dies Trying To Rescue Victim

ST. JOHN, Mo. (AP) — One worker was killed trying to rescue another who had fallen into a vat of degreasing solvent, and about a dozen others were injured when they were overcome by fumes in a factory, authorities said.

Paul Dumas, 28, was killed trying to rescue Willard Blue, who was listed in critical condition at a hospital this week, officials said.

The solvent was identified as Chlorotene VG.

Carter Aides Believe Political Star Climbing

By HELEN THOMAS

WASHINGTON (UPI) — After hitting rock bottom, President Carter's aides believe his political star is climbing.

They are feeling more confident about the powers of the incumbency and their ability to overcome the challenge of Sen. Edward Kennedy.

Carter says he believes he was "underestimated" and that the Florida caucuses show he still attracts the trditional constituencies of the Democratic Party. Recent polls have shown a slight upswing in political support for Carter, although some observers say he had only one way to go — up.

Washington Window

Carter's upbeat mood was best reflected on the flight aboard the presidential jet as he winged his way back to Washington from the dedication of the John F. Kennedy library. He went to the plane's press area to chat — something he has not done in a year.

At the dedication, with almost the entire Kennedy clan on the platform, Carter paid tribute to the late president. He twitted Senator Kennedy about his presidential ambitions, and stressed that times have changed since 1960.

Carter later told reporters he believes he is closer to President Kennedy in political philosophy than his brother is, describing the senator as a more liberal bigger spender for social needs.

The White House line of attack on Kennedy is beginning to take shape. Kennedy is being portrayed as a politician who, as Carter put it, "is much more inclined toward the old philosophy of pouring out new programs and new money to meet a social need." Carter also says he is "in favor of much stronger defense commitments than his (Sen. Kennedy's) record shows."

Press secretary Jody Powell followed up the president's criticism of his probable opponent for the Democratic presidential nomination by telling reporters that Kennedy had "quietly" voted for a 3 percent real increase in defense spending while not supporting Pentagon hikes in the past.

As for the bounty of federal monies Carter gets to pass out at major political stops to keep the local Democratic politicians happy, Powell says the administration had been criticized in the past for not using the powers of the incumbency to its own advantage.

But he indicates that it is all going to be different now, and millions of dollars in grants and assistance are going to be sprung more quickly to areas where it counts politically.

Powell also says there is no "survey" under way to flush out Kennedy supporters in the administration, but he makes it clear that Carter's political appointees must be loyal to him and if they cannot serve the president they should quit.

The idea, as he points out, is not new with presidents. Teamwork and loyalty are the main criteria when the political chips are down as the past has demonstrated.

Carter also has a Cabinet filled with surrogates ready to hit the campaign trail for him and many already are planning heavy speechmaking schedules early next year. Vice President Walter Mondale also will step up an already heavy travel schedule.

The president also has a big head start over Kennedy in terms of organization. The Carter-Mondale Presidential Committee has been in business for months, holding fundraisers and lining up the faithful.

Carter told interviewers in Boston last Saturday that "the press is preoccupied" with the presidential race, but there is nothing to indicate that the White House has not put reelection at the top of the president's priority list.

Museum Collection Reported Stolen

BOSTON (AP) — Gold objects and coins valued at more than $100,000 were stolen from the Asiatic collection at the Museum of Fine Arts, officials said.

The 50 gold objects, including jewelry and decorative pieces, and the coins were discovered missing during a routine check of a storage locker Wednesday.

Council Designates Historic Landmarks

By SYLVIA TEAGUE
Avalanche-Journal Staff

The Lubbock City Council designated seven Overton South structures as historic landmarks Thursday, but, at the request of the neighborhood association, did not make the entire area a Design-Historic district.

Although two houses owned by the First Baptist Church are on the list of landmarks, which still must be approved on second reading, the council did not include Thompson Junior High School or Lubbock High School in the group.

Councilman Alan Henry, a deacon at First Baptist Church, abstained from the deliberations and vote because of the conflict of interest.

During a nearly five-hour hearing on the district and landmarks, Overton South Neighborhood Association Chairman Roger Loter asked the council not to consider an overall district for the neighborhood.

The boundaries of that district, particularly where the line should be drawn on the east near Avenue Q, has prompted the most opposition to the case.

"I'm convinced all the opposition comes from persons who are uninformed about what a district is," Loter said, "or how district standards might or might not affect" their property.

He said he hoped, by amending the district application, to have time to resolve some of the conflict and misunderstanding among business owners on the perimeter of Overton South and the residents of the neighborhood.

The council voted 3-1 not to heed Loter's suggestion that no comments be taken on the issue of Overton South as a district, although it did take no action on the district designation.

Loter especially had harsh words for Lubbock school officials who asked that Thompson Junior High and Lubbock High not be made landmarks.

Although Loter admitted such a designation would be only symbolic, he called the school board's decision "a major blow to the revitalization of central Lubbock" and "asinine and without foundation."

"The school board gets an F in positive community relations and future planning," Loter said, adding, "There's not a doubt in anyone's mind that Lubbock High is an architectural masterpiece."

School board president Monte Hasie said the trustees would like the schools to receive historic markers, but said the school board opposed any design restriction on the schools because it would be unconstitutional for the board to relinquish its responsibilities.

School trustee Brad Crawford said he was disappointed by the comments about school officials, adding the board might incur liability for using tax funds to preserve the two schools.

"We can't raise tax funds for historic preservation," he said. "Who is going to maintain Thompson 75 years from now if we are not using it as a school?"

"We have no intention of tearing down Lubbock High School, but we can't speak for future school boards," Crawford said.

Much discussion also centered on the two houses in the 2200 block of 13th Street owned by the First Baptist Church.

The church purchased the houses and a house in between to use the property as parking, then began moving the houses off the lots.

Urban Design Commission Chairman Beverly Stribling issued a moratorium on dismantling two of the houses, pending a decision on whether the structures should be made landmarks.

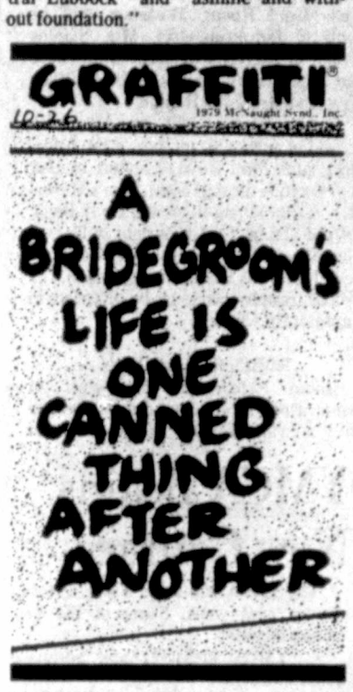

When the church sought the necessary Zoning Board of Adjustment approval to use the lots for parking, the board refused the request.

Arnold Maeker, who has represented the church in negotiations with the Overton South association, said the Loan Move's Impact Downplayed

By ESTHER LONGORIA
Avalanche-Journal Staff

Lubbock lenders say the government's action Thursday to pump billions of dollars of potential mortgage money into the nation's hard-pressed housing market will have little or no effect on the amount of money available for home loans locally.

The Federal Home Loan Bank Board announced steps Thursday to allow savings and loans to reduce the amount of liquid assets they hold from 6 to 5.5 percent to free up more money for mortgage lending, and to liberalize the policy governing outside borrowing by the lending institutions.

But reducing liquid assets only will help large savings and loan associations, says one local lender, and allowing more outside borrowing will have no effect in states like Texas where usury laws place a ceiling on interest rates, say others.

"Basically these two steps will have little effect on the amount of money available for home loans here in Lubbock," said Derrell Jones, president of Briercroft Savings and Loan Association.

"With the reduction in the liquidity rate, all they're doing is freeing up one-half of one percent of a firm's present deposits. And with institutions the size of those in Lubbock, the reduction won't be enough to help us. But the reduction could free lots of money in the billion dollar savings and loan associations," Jones said.

Jack Gaulding, president of Sentry Savings Association, is more optimistic. He believes the liquidity reduction will help the current home loan situation here.

"Our institution has about $25 million in deposits, and the liquidity reduction could free up about $125,000 from our association — enough for three home loans," Gaulding said.

Burl D. Greaves, president of State Savings and Loan Association, says normally a reduction in the liquidity requirement will free a small amount in each association.

"But with interest rates where they are now, it isn't so," Greaves said.

Lubbock lenders agree that the action liberalizing outside borrowing by savings and loan associations would have no effect on the money available for home loans in Texas because the current state usury law limits mortgage rates to under 12 percent.

Texas' usury ceiling is based on recent interest rates on 10-year U.S. treasury bonds. The rate is 11 percent and will increase to 11.25 percent on Nov. 1.

"As far as allowing us to borrow more money, it's not feasible when the prime interest rate is 15 percent. We can't borrow money at 15 percent and then make a loan with the maximum rate at 11 percent," Jones said.

"Liberalizing outside borrowing will free money in states that can charge an interest rate at least as much or higher than what they paid for it, but not in Texas," said Charley Pope, executive vice president of First Federal Savings and Loan Association. "In Texas, home loans should be allowed to float with the marketplace.

"The federal action doesn't mean anything when the cost of the money to the lending institution exceeds what you can charge on a loan," he added.

"The action gives us a little bit of breathing room...that's all," Greaves said.

The Federal Home Loan Bank Board oversees 4,200 savings and loan associations.

Board Chairman Jay Janis said Thursday's actions "recognize the need to provide funds for savings and loan associations and savings banks to offset

City Considered For Industry

By BOB CAMPBELL
Avalanche-Journal Staff

Lubbock is being considered for a reported $100-million industry to begin operations here within the next two years, the Avalanche-Journal learned Thursday.

The industry — as yet not publicly identified — apparently would be located northeast of the city near Lubbock International Airport.

In a Thursday afternoon meeting, Lubbock County commissioners approved spending up to $50,000 for strip paving Kent Street from Quirt Avenue To Guava Avenue.

The paving would cover 1.6 miles of Kent, they said, and the paving project is contingent on its being needed for an industrial access road.

Commissioners were told the paving would not be needed until 1982.

County Judge Rodrick Shaw said he had not been told the name of the industry.

The paving commitment was made at the request of Lubbock Chamber of Commerce Assistant Manager Grey Lewis, who has headed negotiations with the interested corporation.

Lewis declined to identify the corporation or give any details about it except to say it is not a company already located in Lubbock and considering an expansion.

He has been talking with industry representatives "off and on for a few weeks," he said, adding that the willingness of the county to improve the road "was one of their questions.

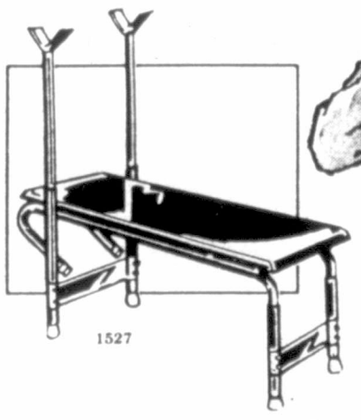

"We are so preliminary that there's really nothing there," Lewis said. "They are looking at other cities in addition to Lubbock.

"I'm not free to talk about it. They want to remain anonymous. I'm very hopeful there'll be developments in the very foreseeable future."

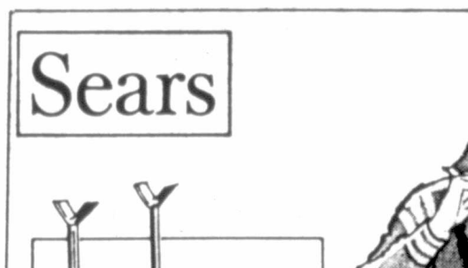

Lewis, who was chamber industrial development manager before being appointed assistant manager early this year, added that there "is no commitment on anybody" at this point in the negotiations.

The couple plans to be married in Highland Baptist Church.

At Wit's End...

By ERMA BOMBECK

We were eating in a Spanish restaurant the other night when my friend and I excused ourselves and went to the restroom.

Since both of us are farsighted, she arrived at the first door, pressed her nose two inches from it, and with her hands traced the outline of what she thought to be a hooped skirt.

It turned out to be the cape of a bullfighter and we found ourselves in the men's room. The two of us hid in a booth until it was prudent to come out.

Naturally, we do not consider ourselves authorities on men's rooms, but since few women have visited the last bastion of male dominance, we made some observations on the subject.

Men go to the restroom alone. I don't know why they do this, but I have yet to see a man stand up in a room, announce where he is going and ask if any other man at the table would like to go with him. With women it's a social outing...something you share. My husband calls it the Ark connection, where women go into the restroom two by two and come out the same way.

Men whistle. Without fail, every man who came into the restroom whistled and didn't stop until he left. Women, on the other hand, never whistle. They talk. There is everything to talk about. Why there are no towels. Why there is no soap. Why the hand blower doesn't work. Why there is a toll charge for using the bathroom. I have established more meaningful relationships from holding the door of a pay booth open than you can imagine. In fact, a lot of us still correspond.

Men return from the facilities and seem embarrassed to discuss where they've been. They never hear any gossip. Never see any celebrities. Never find out if the fish on the menu is frozen or that the blonde waitress is married to the drummer who is jealous.

A restroom to women is an adventure. Where men instinctively check out the location before they sit down, women buzz around asking the bartender, the cashier, the maitre d' and end up wandering around the kitchen, going through doors that lead to the parking lot, and giggling in a dark corridor about whether or not a unicorn is male or female.

I don't know how to explain any of this. Maybe women just don't get out a lot.

SURE CURE

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Sneezing can cure hiccups, says the Health Insurance Institute, a trade association, quoting Plato, the fourth century B.C. philosopher: "Hold your breath, and if you do so for some time and the hiccup is no better, then gargle with a little water; and if it still continues tickle your nose with something and sneeze; and if you sneeze once or twice, even the most violent hiccup is sure to go."

The bidding:

South	West	North	East

3 ♡	Pass	4 ♡	Pass
Pass	Pass

Opening lead: Queen of ♠.

Here's a chance to test whether your play is up to championship calibre. When Sweden's Sven-Olov Flodqvist held this hand in the recent European Championships, he spent little time in rattling off ten tricks. Cover the East-West hands with your thumbs and see how you would fare in four hearts after the defenders start with three rounds of clubs.

The auction was straightforward. Despite the fact that there was no club stopper, two no trump was the most descriptive opening bid available to South. North checked for a major fit, and East doubled to show a club suit. South bid his hearts and North went on to game. Note that a five club sacrifice by East-West would have been a cheap save.

If you are one of those optimists who imagine that everything will break well, you ruffed the club and drew two rounds of trumps, hoping to draw trumps and then run diamonds. East's discard on the second round of trumps would have left you with no way to recover once diamonds also failed to break.

To Flodqvist the hand presented no problem. He did not even consider drawing trumps. After ruffing the third club in dummy, he ducked a spade! This simple maneuver spiked the defenders' guns.

West shifted to a diamond which was won with the king. Declarer cashed the ace of spades and ruffed a spade with the ten of trumps. Now he could draw trumps and gather in ten tricks safely — the ace of spades and a ruff, three diamonds, a club ruff and four trump tricks.

HEARTY LUNCH

Dear Abby,

DEAR ABBY: I recently became engaged to a wonderful young man who lives in another city. I was very happy until he informed me that he had decided to share an apartment with a woman co-worker until we get married next year!

He assured me that the arrangement is strictly a financial one — that he prefers to live with a woman that he already knows is honest and reliable than to advertise for an unknown male.

Although I want to trust him, I can't help feeling resentful.

He tells me that when I come to visit, I will be convinced that there is no romantic involvement, but I don't know if I can reserve judgment until then.

I am debating between giving him an ultimatum and trusting him implicitly.

Abby, do you think it's possible to share living quarters with one of the opposite sex and have a platonic relationship? And what should I do?

FUMING

DEAR FUMING: Yes. But stop fuming and start rooming with a male friend and see how your fiance takes it.

DEAR ABBY: Yesterday I spent two hours scrubbing our tile shower with a toothbrush, detergent and bleach. It sparkled. My husband's only comment: "You missed a spot by the door."

This is typical of his reaction to nearly everything I do. He is the most critical person in the world, from the way I dress to the side of the sink I wash the dishes in. No matter how hard I try, he always finds something to criticize. When I mentioned this to him, he told me that the trouble with me is that I have never learned how to take criticism.

Abby, my mother is the "West Coast Distributor for Criticism," and I have had plenty of it, so I think I know how to handle it, but the way my husband finds a flaw in everything I do is driving me up the wall!

We've been married only a year, and I can't see myself taking 20 to 30 more years of his petty faultfinding.

He never misses your column. I hope you print this and he sees it before it's too late, and my self-worth is completely destroyed.

HURT IN LONG BEACH

DEAR HURT: Don't rely on a few lines in my column to communicate the hurt, anger and frustration you feel. Choose the proper time to vent your feelings, and encourage your husband to vent his. "Every animal revenges his pains upon those who happen to be near" (Samuel Johnson). Chances are that your critical husband is hurting, too.

DEAR ABBY: My son has been married for two years now and, would you believe, I have never seen my daughter-in-law in a dress. Never!

She wears jeans in the daytime, and when she gets dressed up, she wears pants suits. She's a nice-looking girl and I think she would look so much more feminine in a dress, but I swear to goodness, I don't think she owns one.

She's not sloppy; she just likes pants, I guess. I mentioned to my son once that I had never seen his wife's legs, and he just laughed and said she had two like everybody else, and that was the end of it.

Should I say something to her about it? I wouldn't be mean. I would just tell her she would look so much prettier in a dress. She's a motherless child and needs someone to teach her how to dress.

W.VA. MOM-IN-LAW

DEAR MOM: Your daughter-in-law has the right to wear what she wants, and she obviously prefers pants. You've mentioned your preference to your son; that's enough. Unasked-for advice is seldom appreciated.

New Diabetic Cookbook Offered

By JEANNE LIVELY
Family News Staff

Because of the many people who have written requesting recipes for diabetics, the Texas Department of Agriculture (TDA) has recently published a booklet called "Cooking with the Diabetic in Mind." Because of its excellence, nutritionists across the State are predicting a "sell-out" (but the booklet happens to be free).

Janie Sieberg, M.A., R.D., a dietary consultant and an instructor of Foods and Nutrition at the University of Texas at Austin, wrote the booklet. Her credentials are impressive: a co-chairman of the Nutrition Task Force of the American Heart Association and a member of the American Diabetes Association, the American Dietetic Association, the Texas Dietetic Association and the Texas State Nutrition Council.

Acting as consultant was Carolyn Grubb, M.A., R.D., a clinical dietitian at Seton Medical Center in Austin and secretary of the South Texas Affiliate Board of the American Diabetes Association.

Starting with recipes gleaned from the files in the TDA kitchen, MissSieberg says she used some "as is," modified others and added some new ones of her own. But no matter the origin, because this nutritionist makes diabetic cookery seem almost easy and fun!

Throughout the booklet, Miss Sieberg emphasizes that cooking for a diabetic does not require separate meal plans. She believes also that a diabetic's daily menu is simply well-planned nutritional meals; people's diets actually would improve by eating what diabetics eat.

To name just a few of the intriguing recipes included in the booklet (and as mentioned before these recipes are for the diabetic as well as anyone else interested in low calorie, well-balanced nutritional foods)! "Orange Yogurt Whip," "Stuffed Peaches," "Turkey Salad with Cantaloupe," "Lemon-Baked Chicken," and, surprisingly, "Crepes."

Interested persons can write the Texas Department of Agriculture, P.O. Box 12847, Austin, Tx. 78711, for a copy of "Cooking with the Diabetic in Mind." There is no charge.

Rose Potpourri Helps Preserve Flowery Fragrance In Winter

With the winter months looming long and cold ahead, now's the time to plan crafty ways to "summerize" your winter home.

Nothing brings to mind the sun-filled days of summer more readily than a fresh bouquet of flowers. But for most parts of the country, fresh flowers are hard — and expensive — to come by during the winter season. Still you can preserve the sunny fragrance of flowers and fresh air with the old-fashioned art of making a rose potpourri.

In a bowl, combine three cups dried rosebuds, 1/2 teaspoon dry mint leaves, 1/2 teaspoon coarse ground cloves, 1/2 teaspoon coarse ground cinnamon, and 1/2 deaspoon coarse ground allspice. Mix in 1½ teaspoon ground orris root powder and three drops oil of roses. Seal tight, and set to cure in a warm, dry dark place for six weeks. Shake gently every day.

Transfer your potpourri to small attractive glass containers or to a single large bowl with a lid. Remember no potpourri will retain its fragrance if constantly exposed to air. Keep your potpourri covered always and remove the lid and stir the contents just before you want to scent a room.

For a pretty way to "summer-up" a wall, try stitching a series of small floral needlepoint pictures.

The butterfly quilt pictured at left is like a springtime tonic for any winter-weary bedroom. Butterflies and blossoms unlike any you've ever seen frolic across this applique quilt. And you can make it with full-size patterns in single bed size. The butterfly quilt pattern also includes easy to follow instructions for enclarging the quilt to fit the bed size of your choice.

For Butterfly quilt pattern, order Kit No. 01012 for $8.59 plus $1.45 postage and handling. Creative Home Crafts is required to collect and pay sales tax in Texas.

Couple Compiles Comprehensive Guide To Refuges

By SANDY COLTON
Associated Press Writer

If you're interested in photographing birds or wild animals, Laura and William Riley have compiled a comprehensive guide to America's almost 400 wildlife refuges.

In "Guide to National Wildlife Refuges," you'll find where the refuges are located, how to get there, what to see and do, where to camp or stay, the best times to visit, how to dress and what equipment to take. You'll also find a number of color photos of wildlife, excellent examples of what you might be able to photograph.

I asked Mrs. Riley if she would share some of her expertise with you through this column. The first part of her two-part report follows:

Wildlife photography has its own special rules. You must either love it or leave it alone. This means you should really love to watch wild creatures and find their lives and activities so engrossing you can sit and watch them almost endlessly.

Most wild things don't like to have their picture taken. You'll notice this when they either try to leave or, at best, show no interest whatever in posing.

Getting good pictures of any wild creature, be it a beautiful butterfly or bird or massive antlered elk, can require much time and patience. You may have to wait for hours in a cramped position in suffocating heat or freezing cold.

If you don't really like it, you won't last. If you do, you'll hardly notice.

If you can observe as intently as this, you will learn to spot in an instant (all the time you'll often have) what makes an arresting shot, and take it.

Beyond that, most successful wildlife photography has these three ingredients:

2: The subject is in razor-sharp focus — more so than almost any other kind of photography. An occasional special effect can be blurred — but this is the exception.

3: The subject, whether lowly beetle or lordly bald eagle, is shown doing something — preferably at some climactic point of activity or at least appearing intensely alert and alive.

This can be done in several ways.

First, get close. You can sometimes sneak up on your subject by being very quiet. Otherwise, you use a telephoto lens. Don't be deceived into thinking that this is a magic route to the results you want. It's a trade-off. If you do use a telephoto, use a lens of the shortest focal length possible in order to get the greatest speed and depth of field and therefore clarity.

Nothing takes the place of getting in close. You can do this, with or without your telephoto, by concealing your presence. Try building a blind. You can do this, as I did, with metal tubing covered with a fabric such as burlap and with openings for your camera lens.

My favorite way is also the simplest. Buy nine yards of camouflage cloth netting (cotton is best) at a surplus store. Cut it into thirds and stitch or staple it into a large square with openings. Then, simply throw it over yourself and sit and wait in a strategic spot. It's light, it's portable and I've had birds come too close to photograph while sitting under it, because they'd landed on my head!

As for film, there is no magic answer. Use the slowest film you can for fine grain and clarity. I use ASA 64 color film more than anything else but ASA 25 film is even better if conditions permit.

To get that razor-sharp image, focus on the smallest detail you can see — an eyelash, for example. And to get the moment of climactic activity, study the creature, for each is different.

Practice on robins in your back yard, or in the local park, or with wildlife at your local zoo.

Once you've achieved a degree of competence close to home you can venture further afield to that whole wonderful world of wildlife out there. Some of the best you'll find at U.S. national wildlife refuges. There are almost 400 of them located in almost every state.

Most are set up to make it easy for visitors, and some even have photographic blinds in plane or will let you use your own if you call ahead to make arrangements.

("Guide to National Wildlife Refuges" is published by Anchor Press-Doubleday.)

Handmade Christmas Tree Saves Money

Create a real old fashioned Christmas when you make your own inexpensive tree and table decorations. You'll have the whole family in the act as they trace these full-size patterns onto cardboard or plywood. Cut them out and watch the kids have a ball painting them. All designs in this 26-page booklet, Design Hang-Ups, no. HD8, are approximately 4½ inches high. For extra fun, glue fake fur onto Santa's beard and trim the Angel's halo with gold foil. Moveable eyes from a craft store will bring the Snowman to life. This detailed instruction and pattern booklet has more than 17 Christmas hang-up designs, as well as many others suitable for year-round holidays.

Or make our Christmas Bread Dough Ornaments, Pattern no. 590. Our recipe calls for flour, salt and water. Mix, bake in your kitchen oven, and paint. Patterns included are Three Wise Men, Reindeer and Santa, Rocking Horse, Jack-in-the-Box, Teddy Bear and Gingerbread Boy & Girl. Scores of pictures and step-by-step instructions help the amateur baker or artist.

Design Hang-Ups, Booklet no. HD8, is $2.25. Christmas Bread Dough Ornaments, Pattern no. 590, is $2.75. Prices include first class postage and handling. Send check or money order to:

Senators Introduce Conflicting Bills

WASHINGTON (AP) — Two measures dealing with the Gun Control Act of 1968 have been offered in the Senate. One would strengthen the 11-year-old law and one would repeal it.

Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., introduced legislation this week that would ban all commerce in so-called Saturday night specials, impose mandatory prison terms for gun-use during commission of a federal felony, and require states to impose six-month terms on those carrying unlicensed handguns outside homes or businesses. Sen. James A. McClure, R-Idaho, followed with a proposal to eliminate the Kennedy bill and repeal the 1968 act.

Humidity Can Damage Art

CHICAGO (AP) — Humidity must be maintained at proper levels if valuable art works are to be protected from mold, staining and becoming brittle, says the Humidifier Institute.

A Rembrandt etching or a Toulouse-Lautrec lithograph can be irreparably damaged if the humidity level — in homes or museums — is not maintained in a constant percentage range.

According to the institute, museum curators recommend that in the proper environment for fine prints and paintings, the lowest relative humidity should be about 50 percent and the highest about 65 percent.

"If the humidity descends below this level for a short period of time, the art work will survive," said a spokesman. "But if the humidity continues at 45 percent or lower, damage will result."

This is likely to lead to slackening of the canvas, embrittlement and framing warpage, it was pointed out.

On the other hand, if humidity higher than 65 percent is maintained, there is a danger of mold growth, weakening of the adhesives, staining of the paper, blurring of the ink, waviness of the paper and encouragement of fungi and bacteria.

Officials Seek Temporary Nuclear Waste Sites

WASHINGTON (AP) — Officials in many of the states that produce large amounts of low-level nuclear wastes are studying the possibility of creating temporary storage sites close at home. But none is eager to take on the waste problem.

The Nuclear Regulatory Commission and the Energy Department are urging governors to develop the temporary sites as a way to head off a storage crunch caused by the recent closing of two commercial dumps in Nevada and Washington state.

"We can't order them to do it," said NRC spokesman Frank Ingram. He added the agency will try to convince the governors to establish storage capacity "to the extent that we can." NRC officials said the agency was ready to provide whatever assistance it could to develop the sites.

Govs. Dixy Lee Ray of Washington and Robert List of Nevada brought the issue of low-level nuclear waste storage to a head during the past three weeks by ordering dumps in their states closed. The governor of South Carolina followed by prohibiting any of the wastes from being diverted into his state.

The three dumps are the only burial grounds for low-level wastes in the country. About 60 percent of the wastes come from commercial nuclear power reactors and the rest from pharmaceuticals or from hospitals or research laboratories.

Spokesmen for the medical industry told federal officials at a hastily called meeting this week that by early December hospitals and research facilities could be faced with severe storage problems because they will have no place to ship their radioactive wastes.

NRC and Energy Department officials said the government is trying to convince governors of states that produce most of the wastes to store them temporarily within their own state boundaries.

A spokesman for the National Governors Association, which had a representative at the meeting, said the issue is expected to attract controversy. "We recognize the wastes have to be stored somewhere, but you can't leave it up to the 50 governors," said Joe McLaughlin.

A dozen states produce nearly 70 percent of the nation's low level wastes.

Officials in five of the 12 states — New York, Illinois, Alabama, North Carolina and Massachusetts — said Thursday they were studying the matter of low-level waste storage, indicating they might go along with the federal proposal.

Commission Mulled Moratorium On N-Plants

WASHINGTON (AP) — The presidential commission investigating the Three Mile Island accident was extremely close to calling for a moratorium on building new nuclear power plants, according to transcripts of the panel's meetings.

The transcripts, copies of which were obtained Thursday by The Associated Press, indicated the 12-member commission failed to approve such an industry-wide moratorium by only the smallest margin.

Commission members supporting a moratorium argued it was needed to put "a sense of urgency" behind the panel's recommendations.

The transcripts were made of the panel's final closed meetings last weekend.

The commission, appointed to investigate the March accident at the Three Mile Island nuclear power plant in central Pennsylvania, officially turns over its report Tuesday to President Carter.

Firms' Executives Spot Attractive Investment

By PHILIP GREER
And MYRON KANDEL

The rich certainly are different from the rest of us. Aside from having more money, they also have more connections and sometimes they can band together to pick up a piece of this and that — maybe a pretty large piece — and make some more on the side.

A few weeks ago, for instance, a group of investors brought 9.7 percent of the stock of Pneumo Corp., a Boston-based company that owns supermarkets, produces aircraft components, makes heating devices and turns out other electronic products.

This wasn't any ordinary group of investors. Its 18 members — who put upabout $7.3 million — include the chairman and two directors of International Telephone & Telegraph Corp., as well as the Dreyfus Corp., one of the best-known mutual fund operators in the company. Dreyfus currently manages nearly $6 billion of other people's money.

n the surface, Pneumo doesn't show much. For the first nine months of its fiscal year, the company reported an increase in profits, but it barely outstripped the rate of inflation. The highest price its stock has ever seen was $35.75 a share, way back in 1969.

Still, the members of the group, which also includes three foreign banks and private U.S. investors, saw enough in the company to plunk down $7.3 million of their own cash. In official filings with the Securities and Exchange Commisssion, they said they were just making an investment, although they added that they might be giving advice to Pneumo's management from time to time.

So far nothing out of line — except for one thing. The three directors of ITT are elected by the stockholders to look out for the company's interests. And Dreyfus Corp. obviously is supposed to be tending the business of all those fund shareholders, first and foremost. So if Pneumo is good enough for more than $7 million of their own money, why wasn't it good enough for ITT and the Dreyfus managed funds?

Harold Geneen, chairman of ITT — and one of the Pnuemo buyers — couldn't be reached to answer questions. A company spokesman said, though, that Geneen asked ITT's corporate development department, which analyzes potential takeovers, if it had any interest in Pneumo. The planners said no, so Geneen and the two other directors decided to go ahead.

The ITT board of directors, which has the ultimate responsibility for takeover decisions, wasn't asked at all, even though three of its members were in the buying group (one of them, investment banker Alvin E. Friedman, put the deal together and presented it to the other buyers.)

At Dreyfus Corp., which is an investment advisor and may have an even more direct obligation to its fund shareholders than a corporation does, chairman Howard Stein told us that he didn't think any of the funds could legally buy Penumo's stock. "When we went to that meeting (to discuss the package), we became insiders, so the funds would have been buying on inside information."

(Asked about that explanation, a senior SEC staff member said simply, "Baloney. Who told him to go to the meeting?")

According to Stein's reasoning, if he and his co-buyers are right about Pneumo's outlook, the Dreyfus fund can never buy the stock because, as he explained, "the corporation will always be an insider."

Stein said the Dreyfus Corp. board of directors sees no harm in making stock market investments.

Coalition Seeks Changes In County Precinct Lines

AUSTIN (AP) — A coalition of organizations, calling Texas "the most gerrymandered state in the Southwest," is asking federal courts to order 11 counties to redraw precinct lines.

William Velasquez, director of the Southwest Voter Registration Education Project, said Thursday the counties have intentionally drawn precinct lines that dilute Mexican-American voting strength.

Velasquez sat in front of a map showing 97 Texas counties in which he said Mexican-Americans are underrepresented on commissioners courts.

The counties named in the federal suits Thursday were Atascosa, Medina, Refugio, Uvalde, Cochran, Edwards, Lynn, Dawson, Crosby, Victoria and Castro.

Of the 11 counties named in the suits, Uvalde County is the only one with a Spanish-surnamed county commissioner.

Velasquez was joined at the news conference by officials from the Mexican-American Legal Defense and Educational Fund, the League of United Latin-American Citizens and the American GI Forum. Texas Rural Legal Aid, Inc., also helped prepare the litigation, he said.

The suits are the result of a two-year study of county government in Texas, the officials said. Velasquez said the first 66 counties checked were gerrymandered — "some to an outrageous degree."

The suits charge the county precinct lines violate the one-man, one-vote doctrine. Federal law says the most populous precinct in a county should not be more than 10 percent larger than the least populous precinct.

Statistics gathered by the organizations showed all 11 counties are violating that law. In Edwards County, the largest precinct is 180 percent larger than the "ideal precinct" (based on the 1970 census).

The smallest precinct is 80 percent smaller than the ideal precinct, according to the figures.

Rolando Rios, director of litigation for SVREP, said staff members were "told to get out of the county by sundown" when they tried to look at voter registration figures in the Southwest Texas county.

Velasquez said more suits may follow.

"We intend to remedy this problem even if it takes us suing all the counties," Velasquez said. He said the organizations have the funds to pursue the matter, but he added he hoped the counties would agree to negotiate new precinct lines.

Rios said reapportionment of the 97 counties would mean Mexican-Americans would be in the majority in 104 precincts. He said there are now only 17 Mexican-Americans on commissioners courts in the 97 counties.

El Paso Rep. Paul Moreno, chairman of the Mexican-American Legislative Caucus, voiced his support for the legal action.

savings withdrawals in the present high interest rate climate and to help finance mortgage loan commitments."

The board acted against a backdrop of severe problems within the savings and loan industry following the Federal Reserve Board's Oct. 6 anti-inflation action to make loans more expensive and harder to obtain.

Seven City Structures Receive Historic Landmark Designation

church offered to sell the houses to the association for what the church paid for them or to give them the White House at 2219 13th St. if it would be moved.

However, conditions placed on the sale prompted the association to reject the offer, he said.

"As a church, we have no objection to the houses being designated," he said. But he asked, "If no one wants to own the houses where they are or somewhere else, we ask that the church be allowed to use the property."

In approving the landmarks, the council specified negotiations between the church and the association were to continue and asked for a report on their progress before second reading on the landmarks.

Maeker said he would prefer the houses were owned by someone other than the church if the houses finally become landmarks, saying the church couldn't "take the offerings of the church and get into an historic preservation project."

Since the controversy over the houses, Maeker said the parking needs of the church have been reassessed and it was determined the 13th Street lots were "desirable but not critical."

City Attorney John Ross questioned whether the public improvements in the neighborhood, such as fire hydrants, street lights and brick streets, could be designated landmarks and the council asked him to report his opinion on the matter before second reading.

In a related matter, council members unanimously voted second reading, and therefore final approval on changing 15th and 16th Streets between Avenue Q and University Avenue from one-way to two-way.

This week, a group of downtown businessmen voted to oppose that change, saying they feared it would hinder the flow of traffic from southwest Lubbock into downtown.

Bill Collins, speaking for Downtown Lubbock, Inc., told the council that changing the streets to two-way would be a step backwards for the city.

However, residents of Overton South said they are unable to obtain financing for homes on the two streets because they are one-way and said they create traffic and noise hazards.

Mayor Dirk West said, "I personally don't think it will deter anyone from coming downtown because the streets are changed to two-way."

Referring to the recommendations in a recently completed traffic survey that the streets be changed, West said, "I feel obligated to give the recommendations a chance to work."

The traffic study recommendations were based on a decreasing volume of traffic on the two streets, and increased use of Broadway and 19th Streets as alternatives.

The council discussed amending the urban design ordinance, but agreed to make no changes until hearing from the Urban Design Commission.

Madden Given 30 Years For Aggravated Robbery

By KAY BELL
Avalanche-Journal Staff

Michael Madden Thursday afternoon was sentenced to 30 years in the Texas Department of Corrections for his role in the Aug. 16 aggravated robbery of an elderly Lubbock businessman.

The 237th District Court jury deliberated for almost three hours before returning with the punishment verdict, after earlier finding Madden guilty.

The panel could not have returned a probated sentence for the 18-year-old Madden, who was convicted of felony theft Dec. 18, 1978, in Parmer County, but could have handed the defendant a prison term ranging from five to 99 years or life.

Assistant Criminal District Attorney Clint Averitte emphasized Madden's prior conviction, for which he received a five-year probated sentence, during punishment arguments.

"It was a calculated, planned aggravated robbery while his probation still was in effect," Averitte said. "He was given a second chance and chose not to take advantage of it.

"How dare (Madden) place a citizen of this county in fear for his life for a moment?" an emotional Averitte asked the panel.

The prosecutor also stressed Madden's statement given to police after his arrest Aug. 20 at his 2616-B Ave. K residence that he had used a butcher knife during the robbery of 77-year-old C.O. Bain that netted Madden and a companion $175 cash.

Winn Praises Churches' Involvement In Society

By CONNIE CHAPMAN
A-J Religion Writer

VERNON — The greatest challenge the church faces in the 1980's is to strike a balance between inner spirituality and social activism. Dr. Albert C. Winn, present moderator (presiding officer) of the Presbyterian Church in the U. S., made that statement this week in an interview given to the A-J during the meeting of Palo Duro Union Presbytery here.

Winn, pastor of Second Presbyterian Church of Richmond, Va., said that it is an encouraging sign that churches which have been known in the past for their emphasis on the spiritual now also are expressing concern for the great social issues of the day and, likewise, that those best known for their social concerns have put increased importance on the life of prayer and inner spirituality.

The church, he said, "is ready to move forward....and the world is looking for the church to raise some banners."

As moderator, Winn had declared last Sunday as a day of prayer for peace and especially for the deliberations in the U.S. Senate on the SALT II treaty. The declaration was the implementation of instructions from the denomination's General Assembly which met in Kansas City this summer, he explained. Winn emphasized that the request for prayerful concern for the current debate did not tell Presbyterians what to think about the treaty, but was a request for the churches to pray for God's guidance on the deliberations.

Speaking as an individual, and not for his denomination, Winn said that he feels passage of the treaty is tantamount to the maintenance of peeace. "To pass SALT II leaves the way open to a possible SALT III," he said. He added that he feels the consequences of the Senate's failing to pass the present treaty would be "very serious" and a situation which would destablize many situations in the world.

The U.S. Presbyterians are one of many church bodies which have supported the boycott of Nestle Company products because of the company 's aggressive marketing and advertising tactics of infant formula in Third World countries. At the 1979 General Assembly, the denomination again voiced its support for the punitive action. Winn stated that the World Health Organization (WHO) this month was taking another look at the sale and promotion of formula and would then evaluate changes which the target corporation has said it has made since coming under criticism.

Although Winn said he did not have an opportunity to meet Pope John Paul II during the recent papal visit to the U.S., the Presbyterian called the trip "a major event for our country." He termed the pope "a skillful ambassador for his church." Characteristic of Winn's sense of humor was his telling of a story by a midwesterner, whom, Winn reported, said, "This pope knows how to 'pope.'"

On the subject of prayer in the public schools, a current topic of attention in Lubbock, Winn said he agrees with the Supreme Court decision because "the state is in the business of education, and not in the business of conducting worship services." However, he feels that much of the rich heritage of our country is lost when the facts and influence of religion are not taught.

Among present issues facing churchmen, Winn singled out the need to return to a simple life and to get away from the American emphasis on acquiring material goods.

The Presbyterian Church in the U.S., of which Winn is the moderator and the United Presbyterian Church in the U.S.A. are now engaged in many cooperative endeavors and have 11 union presbyteries .

Board Urges Survey On Hunger

ATLANTA (Special) — Directors of the Southern Baptist Home Mission Board have urged Congress to fund and implement a national survey on hunger.

A resolution, presented by Nell Bowen of Forsyth, Ga., was one of two actions on domestic hunger taken by directors at their fall meeting.

The other action urges the 13 million Southern Baptists in 35,400 churches across the nation to join the action by writing letters to senators and congressmen urging a survey to determine the extent, nature, numbers and location of hunger in the United States.

The resolution notes that other groups in the U.S. are also pressing for a national survey on domestic hunger. One such group is Bread for the World, a Christian citizens group, which has called for a national "offering of letters" to influence Congress to improve the nation's response to hunger at home. Bread for the World says some 25 million Americans are below the poverty line.

"The Home Mission Board is joining other groups in asking for the hunger survey," said William G. Tanner, executive director-treasurer of the board. "The directors have gone on record in favor of urging Congress to take action."

"We feel it is appropriate for the Home Mission Board to take the lead in this effort among Southern Baptists," added Mrs. Bowen. "The Home Mission Board is indeed a channel for administering funds and personnel to help relieve domestic hunger because we have the programs, people and concerns to do so."

Mrs. Bowen said most Americans are aware of the problems of hunger abroad, but generally are unaware of the tragic nature of the problem in America. "There are hungry and undernourished people in the United States, but Americans generally are unaware of how extensive the problem is," she added. "We hope Southern Baptist will join in this effort. Hunger is very real in many homes in our nation."

The twin resolutions were prepared by a committee on hunger appointed by Robert L. Deneen of Darlington, S.C., president of the Home Mission Board, and chaired by Mrs. Bowen.

The resolution to be sent to Congress urges the national legislators to "fund and implement a national survey to discover the extent and nature of domestic hunger with the aim of developing remedial programs and legislation to deal with this pressing life-and-death issue."

In the resolution to be communicated to churches and Southern Baptists, directors noted that an "inward change brought about by Jesus Christ is accompanied by an outward expression in life," and added that "ministering to the hungry among us at home is a responsibility of Christians."

Christian Life Panelist Claims Church Best Help For Families

NASHVILLE (Special) — After listening to two days of testimony in a regional hearing of the White House Conference on Families, Harry N. Hollis Jr. is more convinced than ever that "the church is the best friend families have" and is doing more than any other institution to ease "the intense and often invisible suffering" felt by families today.

On the other hand, the Southern Baptist Convention Christian Life Commission staff member said he heard "far too much rhetoric about family" in the hearing, and, unfortunately some of it came from representatives of the religious community.

"If the church is going to make a difference in strengthening family life, then we must move past rhetoric to service, past cliches to genuine compassion," he said.

Hollis, who has directed the Christian Life Commission's family life emphasis for the past 10 years, was a panelist at back-to-back hearings in Nahsville and Memphis. He is the only Southern Baptist representative on the 40-member National Advisory Committee appointed by President Jimmy Carter to give direction to the 1980 White House conference. In an effort to "take the conference to the people," the committee is sponsoring hearings in seven different regions of the country.

The mid-South hearing included testimony from nearly 300 persons representing a wide spectrum of families and social services, private and religious organizations.

Hollis said the testimonies emphasized the "great diversity in the structure of families in society" and underscored the need for the church to "minister to all families, not just the traditional family."

A dominant theme in the hearing, he said, was family suffering created by such factors as discrimination, child and spouse abuse, chronic illness, perpetual poverty, and lack of communication. He said he was particularly distressed by the "devastating impact" inflation has on families.

Hollis stressed that the church can be an advocate for families through social action as well as ministry. "If the church doesn't stand up for some of these people, then who will?" he said.

Baptist State Official To Preach Here Sunday

Dr. James H. Landes, executive secretary of the Executive Board of the Baptist General Convention of Texas, will preach at the 10:45 a.m. worship service at First Baptist Church Sunday.

Landes is a former president of Hardin-Simmons University in Abilene.

In addition to earned degrees from Southern State University, Rice Institute, Ouachita College, University of Arkansas, Illiff School of Theology and Southwestern Baptist Theological Seminary, Landes has received honorary doctorates from Howard Payne University, Baylor University, Midwestern University and Hardin-Simmons.

He was president of the Baptist General Convention of Texas from 1960 to 1962 and served as chairman of the Executive Board of the BGCT between 1958 and 1960.

Landes has been listed since 1959 in "Who's Who in tn The South and Southwest," and has also been listed in "Who's Who Among American Presidents and Deans," and "Who's Who in the Protestant Clergy." In 1965 he was the recipient of the Distinguished Graduate Award given by Southwsestern Seminary.

Dr. Jimmy Allen, pastor of First Baptist Church of San Antonio, will preach at the 7 p.m. service at First Baptist Sunday. Allen is the past president of the Southern Baptist Convnetion.

Both Landes and Allen will be in Lubbock to attend sessions of the Baptist General Convention of Texas which begin here Tuesday.

Family Counseling Seminar Scheduled

The Rev. Burtis Williams of Abilene will be the guest speaker for a Family Counseling Seminar today through Sunday at Southwest Baptist Church, 4601 82nd St.

The program begins at 7 p.m. with a general session on Christian family life for all ages. Saturday between 9 a.m. and 4 p.m. individuals or families may schedule a counseling session with Williams. Saturday from 6-7 p.m. there will be a meeting with parents of children through pre-school ages and from 7-8 p.m. with parents of children in first through sixth grades and from 8-9 p.m. with parents of teenagers.

Williams will speak Sunday at 9:30 and 10:40 a.m.

Williams was graduated from East Central State University and received a master's degee in counseling from Texas Tech University. He is the minister of family education at the Elmcrest Baptist Church in Abilene.

Seminary Official To Speak

Dr. Lloyd Elder, executive vice president of Southwestern Baptist Theological Seminary, will be the pulpit guest at Second Baptist Church, 5300 Elgin Ave., Sunday.

Elder was graduated from Howard Payne University and received his master's and doctorate from Southwestern.

He has served the Baptist General Convention of Texas in many offices including that of assistant to the executive director of the Executive Board and as chairman of the Family Life Task Force. He has also served on various committees of the Home Mission Board of the Southern Baptist Convention. In 1975, he was listed in "Who's Who in Religion."

Elder will speak at both 8:30 and 10:45 a.m. worship services at Second Baptist Sunday.

Church Marks Anniversary

Saturday and Sunday Christ Lutheran Church will celebrate its 25th anniversary.

A special communion service at 4 p.m. Saturday will mark the beginning of the celebration.

During the 10 a.m. Sunday service there will be a groundbreaking ceremony for the new addition to the church building. Participants in this service will be Dr. Oliver R. Harmes, immediate past president of the Lutheran Church Missouri Synod; Dr. Carl A. Heckman, immediate past president of the Texas District LCMS; and the Rev. Arthur A. Priesinger, pastor of the University Lutheran Church of Lubbock.

Mission Festival Slated

The Rev. Hugh Beck, campus pastor at Texas A&M University, will be the guest speaker for the mission festival which will be held Sunday at Redeemer Lutheran Church, 22nd Street and Avenue W.

Beck will speak at the 10:30 a.m. service and also for the adult Bible class at 9:15 a.m.

The guest speaker, a graduate of Concordia Seminary in St. Louis, has been a campus pastor at Texas A&M for 12 years. His writings include "Why Can't the Church Be Like This?" "The Way of God and the Ways of Man," and "Fantasies for Fantastic Christians."

Conference Set Saturday

A Conference on Covenant Life will be held Saturday at 7:30 p.m.in the Bronze Room of the South Park Inn. The meeting is sponsored by the Lubbock Covenant Church.

Glen Roachell of Dallas, conference leader, will be discussing such topics as loyalty, commitment, faithfulness and integrity.

Dalai Lama Displays Keen Political Mind

By JILL MacNEICE
United Press International Writer

He is the exiled leader of Tibet. He is the head of the Lamaist monks. He is the 14th incarnation of Gedundrub. He is the Dalai Lama and he has been touring the United States.

But there is much more to the Dalai Lama than the exotic appeal of Tibet. Beneath his scarlet robes the Buddhist monk is a polite but savvy politician who speaks with a disarming mixture of oriental wisdom, political acumen and humor.

Since he fled Lhasa, the capital of Tibet in 1959 under pressure from Chinese Communists, the Dalai Lama has been living in Dharmsala, India, with a community of 65,000 exiled Tibetans.

During the two decades of his exile, he has tried to help his people, tugging discreetly at the strings of world conscience.

Anxious to return to Tibet, but concerned about the welfare of his people, the Dalai Lama has made cautious contact with China, contact about which he politely declines to comment.

"It is absolutely your right to put any question. Equally, I have the right to say, 'no answer'," he told reporters in New York when asked about relations with China.

The exiled "Ocean of Wisdom" has been in the United Sates since Sept. 3, smiling patiently, shaking hands and wooing audiences as he visited Buddhist centers and univerisities from New England to California.

The "Wish-Fufilling Gem" as he is called, speaks of "compassion," "patience" and "love for others" with the assurance of one who has mastered the intricacies of Buddhist philosophy and metaphysics.

The Dalai Lama even speaks of his enemy with polite respect.

"The enemy can teach you tolerance, so your enemy is valuable to you and always gives you a chance to improve yourself. Thus," he said breaking into laughter, "the enemy is your best friend."

He says the nature of his visit is nonpolitical, but when pressed the Dalai Lama talks politics readily enough. His political statements, however, tempered by the lessons of his exile, are always circumspect.

He does not mince words, however, when speaking of the plight of 6 million Tibetans. There is "a slight improvement ... but still the situation is grave. "Our people — not at all happy," he told reporters in Washington.

He cited a standing army in Tibet and restrictions on emmigration as indications of the poor situation under Chinese rule.

But he said he saw no need for uprisings such as the ones in 1959 and 1960 in which he estimates over 200,000 Tibetans were killed.

"Violence — not nice," he said in English at a congressional reception. "Cannot gain much ... it is something like suicide."

He sees improved U.S.-China relations as a boon and when asked whether he thought establishment of U.S.-Chinese diplomatic ties complicated his position with China, he replied: "No. Cold War attitudes are becoming more moderate ... that will help, I hope."

The Dalai Lama wants most of all to return to Tibet. "When they (the Tibetan people) are truly happy, than I will return. Then there is no question."

An ancient prediction says that there will be only 14 Dalai Lamas, but the current and 14th Dalai Lama is not worried.

"I will not necessarily return as the chief monk," he said.

Pens of Power

"Wow . . . what a story." "Now, there's a real article." So go our reactions to writing that stimulates. But, before a word is written, a good writer must first have something to say and know how best to say it.

Poe, Shakespeare and Margaret Mitchell . . . they had something in common . . . pens of power. They had the rare gift of being able to transport readers into another world of beauty, drama, or history itself. Passing years cannot dim the luster of their immortal works.

Yet, long before the days of these great authors, four other writers spoke to a needy world through their pens. They wrote about a man from Nazareth whose life changed the world. Divinely inspired, Matthew, Mark, Luke and John still testify today to the truth of the risen Savior.

Share the experience of the Holy Word of God this Sunday.

Break-In Grounds Jet Carrying First Lady

PORTLAND, Maine (UPI) — A small jet carrying Rosalynn Carter on a campaign swing through New England was grounded Thursday because it had been broken into and "tampered with."

The break-in was spotted shortly before Mrs. Carter was to board the 42-seat McDonnell-Douglas plane at Boston's Logan International Airport for a flight to Pease Air Force Base in New Hampshire late Thursday morning.

She was driven 70 miles to her next campaign stop in Somersworth, N.H., and then went by car to Pease AFB where another jet was waiting to fly her to Portland. She addressed a $500-per-couple fund-raising dinner Thursday night before returning to Washington.

The break-in was not disclosed until Mrs. Carter was in Maine.

A Secret Service official said Air Force investigators were called in to inspect the plane in Boston. The spokesman declined to comment further on the incident late Thursday, except to say the plane had been flown to Andrews Air Force Base near Washington.

A Secret Service spokesman in Washington said the agency had not learned what the Air Force found in its check of the plane.

Mrs. Carter had spent Wednesday night in Boston after a day-long tour of western New Hampshire.

"Mrs. Carter was to fly out of Logan to Pease Air Force Base for a meeting in Somersworth, N.H., at 11 a.m. (EDT)," said Mary Hoyt, Mrs. Carter's press secretary.

"Just before boarding time we got word we would be held up because the plane had been broken into so we drove to Somersworth and another plane was dispatched from Andrews Air Force Base to Pease. That was the one we took to Portland."

Mrs. Hoyt said the passenger compartment of the abandoned plane was sealed but the "electronics compartment and the baggage compartment had been broken into ... and were tampered with ... by unidentified persons."

She said the jet has never been guarded except on "overseas trips when there have been some reasons to guard it because of questions of intelligence."

The Maine trip came a week after Gov. Joseph E. Brennan said he supports Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., for the party's 1980 presidential nomination.

Brennan is the first governor in the nation to officially abandon Carter in favor of Kennedy, who is expected to formally declare his candidacy next month.

At an airport news conference, Mrs. Carter played down Brennan's endorsement.

"We have some wonderful friends here, of course we would like to have evryone support us," she said. "But we'll do well here. We learned a long time ago that you don't worry about these things. We do the best we can and we have wonderful support here in Maine."

At the fund-raising dinner she asked the 200 guests to hold parties in their homes Dec. 4, the day Carter has said he will formally announce his bid for re-election.

BROWN HIT BY THROWN PIE — California Gov. Jerry Brown bore the remains of a lemon-coconut pie on his face Thursday after he entered Cooper Union, an arts and science college in New York. Brown, who was to deliver an address to the student body, was hit with the pie by Yippie Aron Kay. In his speech before the student body, the presidential hopeful observed wryly that "campaigning is not a piece of cake." (AP Laserphoto)

Bush Expecting To Spoil Reagan's Bid

WASHINGTON (UPI) — George Bush says if Ronald Reagan hopes to gain the Republican presidential nomination he must not only win, but crush his GOP opposition in the early primaries and party caucuses.

In an interview Thursday with the UPI Editorial Board, Bush said Reagan is "way out in front today," but could lose the prize to one of the lesser-known GOP hopefuls if he fails to "blow everybody out of the water early."

If the former California governor does as well as political experts forecast in the first tests in Iowa and New England, Bush said, "he could lock it up pretty early."

But the 55-year-old Texan doesn't expect that to happen, and he sees himself as the spoiler.

"I'm convinced that I will do well enough so he will do less well than people today expect him to do. Finishing first is not enough for a person who is expected to sweep," Bush said.

He said if Reagan wins the January Iowa caucuses with 29 percent but Bush polls 28 percent, "people would be saying, 'This is amazing. Here's a man 2-1 ahead in the polls, and a person who is not known is within one percentage point.'"

Later, in a speech to the Washington Press Club, Bush said: "I know I'm going to win this nomination. You just watch. There's great evidence that it's (his prospects) getting better. You had no reason at all to take me seriously a year ago."

Asked by UPI whether he is setting Reagan up for a fall by contending a Reagan win is a victory only if he swamps his challengers, Bush replied, "Absolutely."

"All I am doing is highlighting the expectation, and the expectation in the polls and among his own people is that he's going to blow everybody out of the water early," Bush said.

"If he fails to do it, even though he might win numerically, people are going to say ..., 'This guy's going backwards.'"

Bush has been CIA director, congressman, GOP national chairman, U.S. ambassador to the United Nations and U.S. envoy to China — but still is little known to most voters.

He recently won a series of straw polls among party faithful in Iowa. Bush says, "That doesn't mean people in Iowa know who I am, but it measures organization."

"You can't judge winning or losing, the expectation of it, just on organization. It's got to also be name recognition, and I know I lack that still," said Bush.

"But if I could win Iowa, then I think the momentum would be so significant and so clear that I would go right on and do very, very well in New Hampshire and the earlier states."

Politicians Deny Endorsing Carter

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Carter-Mondale Presidential Committee has irked at least five Pennsylvania politicians by incorrectly identifying them as supporters of the president's re-election bid.

The officials, who include three congressmen insist they told committee and White House staffers they are uncommitted to the president's cause.

The Carter-Mondale list included about 500 Democrats who attended a "Support President Carter" dinner Wednesday night and others "wishing to indicate their support," but who didn't attend.

Of 11 Pennsylvania officials named, five said Thursday they have not endorsed the president, who is likely to be challenged by Sen. Edward Kennedy, D-Mass., for the Democratic presidential nomination. Five said they were correctly listed and one could not be reached.

Three of those incorrectly listed are Pennsylvania congressmen, who blamed the mixup on White House congressional liason Frank Moore, whose staff handled invitations to the dinner.

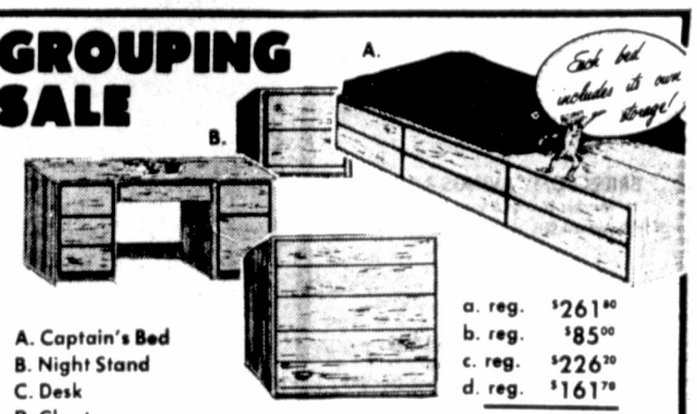

"Terry Straub (of Moore's staff) called me and told me that if I agreed to go to the dinner, I would be endorsing Carter," said Rep. Robert Edgar. "I said I wasn't coming under those conditions. Straub knew very clearly my position when he talked to me. Frank Moore had some convoluted story about White House records and committee records being mixed up."

W. Wilson Goode, chairman of Pennsylvania's Public Utility Commission, said he was invited to the affair under false pretenses.

"I was told the president wanted a number of business people to come down and talk about issues and I agreed to attend on that basis," Goode said in a telephone interview from his Harrisburg, Pa., office.

Spokesmen for Reps. Austin Murphy and Don Bailey said both declined telephone invitations although they were listed as attending the dinner.

Report Shows Refineries High Cancer-Risk Sites

BEAUMONT (UPI) — Preliminary esults of a study by the National Cancer nstitute indicate that oil refinery em- loyees stand a much greater than nor- nal chance of dying of cancer.

The researchers checked 3,105 death ertificates in Texas dated between 1947 nd 1977. Researcher Terry Thomas said he findings were that "observed num- bers of deaths are significantly greater than expected for cancers of the diges- tive and respiratory systems, skin and brain."

The report, issued this week, said fa- cilities operated by Texaco Inc., Mobil Oil Corp. and Gulf Oil Corp. in the Beaumont-Port Arthur area were possi- ble high cancer-risk sites.

At the 2,200-worker Mobil refinery, for instance, researchers went over 198 death certificates and found five cases of cancer of the brain and central nervous system, about three times the nation- wide rate, and 22 lung cancer deaths, about double the normal rate.

Don Maroldy, Mobil's labor relations manager in New York, said, "We cer- tainly want to know if there is a prob- lem. The study was termed a tentative hypothesis and seems to lead to the ne- cessity for further study."

Although Mobil officials said the sur- vey covered a small sample, Maroldy said: "We view the findings as a sign- post saying maybe something is at the end of the road. We'd like to know if anything, in fact, is there."

Researchers emphasized that the re- sults are only preliminary and a final de- termination probably will not be made for years.

Maroldy said he expected Mobil to supply cancer institute researchers with detailed health records and other data needed to determine actual dangers.

Information Report Emphasizes Importance Of Fringe Benefits

By MARY TOBIN

NEW YORK (UPI) — The extras falling in the category of "fringe benefits" now account for about 35 percent of company payroll costs and knowing how to make the most of them is as good as money in your pocket.

Bank of America, in a consumer information report, said sizing up these extras and knowing what they actually are worth can help you plan your finances.

Fringe benefits, defined as money, goods or services an employee receives in addition to salary, have become more important with high taxes and inflation making ever deeper inroads into income, according to Thomas Taggert, vice president for personnel at the San Francisco-based bank.

"The word fringe is in fact a misnomer," Taggert said. "Employees no longer consider many 'fringes' as such — they're accepted as one's due."

Most firms now have life insurance and medical insurance and some sort of pension plan, but benefits vary widely and can add a substantial amount to one's earnings, either directly or in money saved.

Some companies pay all insurance premiums for example, while others pick up part of the cost. The difference can be several hundred dollars a year in premiums and, in terms of coverage, thousands of dollars if a major illness should strike.

"Medical costs are soaring," Taggert said, "and this is one area which probably will become more important as a fringe."

Various other fringes may be important to an individual such as personal days off and extra vacation time.

Expense accounts, once a "perk" for top executives, in "these days of the dual income that is hit by high taxes" increasingly are being offered to or demanded by middle-level executives in lieu of salary, Taggert said.

Inflation also has made pension plans important. Some are company paid, others are contributory. Some have "cost-of-living escalators" for the retiree.

Even free parking can be a substantial fringe, and indeed, Taggert said, with the rising cost of gasoline transportation to and from work may become a fringe benefit.

Taggert, in a telephone interview, said however intangible benefits can be just as important to a worker as those which carry a cash value.

One example is the fringe of working for a big, well-known company.

"Working for a prestigious firm is very important to some people. It makes a statement about their level of professional competence. Some employees will stay with such a firm for a lower salary than they could get elsewhere."

Another "intangible" is pleasant work surroundings, which some companies go to great lengths to provide in order to attract and keep top people.

"Some companies encourage individuality in their employees," Taggert said. "This is very important to a person who would be miserable working for a highly-structured firm."

The Almanac
TODAY IN HISTORY

By United Press International

Today is Friday, Oct. 26, the 299th day of 1979 with 66 to follow.

The moon is approaching its first quarter.

The morning stars are Mars, Jupiter and Saturn.

The evening stars are Mercury and Venus.

Those born on this date are under the sign of Scorpio.

American gospel singer Mahalia Jackson was born Oct. 26, 1912.

On this day in history:

In 1825, the Erie Canal, America's first man-made waterway, was opened for traffic between Buffalo and Albany, N.Y.

In 1920, the lord mayor of Cork — Terence McSwiney — died after fasting 75 days in a British prison cell, demanding independence for Ireland.

In 1942, the American aircraft carrier "Hornet" was sunk by Japanese warships in a fierce naval engagement off the Solomon Islands in the Pacific Theater of World War II.

In 1974, President Ford agreed to meet Russian leader Leonid Brezhnev Nov. 23 and 24 in the Vladivostok area of the Soviet Union.

A thought for the day:

Irish poet Thomas Moore said: "...There's nothing half so sweet in life as love's young dream."

The secret behind making good crepes is to season the pan well and keep it hot enough to sizzle a drop of water.

Carter Decides To Form Car-Pooling Task Force

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Carter, announcing new government initiatives to save energy through car-pooling, says making better use of existing automobiles is "just as valuable as drilling a new well to find more oil."

"So far, about 20 percent of all the commuters share a ride or ride on public transportation," he said. "If we could just change that 1 percent ... it would save about 175 million gallons of gas per year."

Noting that half the nation's oil is spent on transportation, Carter said Thursday he is creating a National Task Force on Ride Sharing to be headed by Los Angeles Mayor Tom Bradley.

The announcement came Thursday at a White House-sponsored energy conservation seminar in New Brunswick, N.J.

To encourage car-pooling, Carter said, the government would extend the 10 percent tax investment credit to van pools; guarantee gasoline to carpools during a gas shortage; and prod insurance companies to make it attractive for persons to own vans and station wagons that are shared by other commuters.

In addition, Carter said he anticipated "granting interest-free loans for the purchase of vans." He did not elaborate.

Before his brief appearance at the seminar, Carter stood in his open-top limousine to wave to thousands of people who lined his motorcade route into the city.

"The reception that I received is exhilerating and very gratifying to me," he told the panel that awaited him inside the Middlesex County Courthouse.

After the brief appearance, which one White House aide described as "long enough to get the job done," Carter took a helicopter to Meadowlands Sports Complex in East Rutherford for a $150-a-plate fundraiser for 83 Democratic candidates for the New Jersey Legislature.

Difficulty was reported in selling the tickets and some were given away.

Gov. Brendon Byrne, who rode Air Force One to New Jersey and is considered a Carter supporter, introduced the president as his friend. "He has consistently, as president of the United States, fully justified that friendship," Byrne said.

Carter, who lost the state's primary and general election in 1976, noted the state's Democratic governor and Democratic-dominated state legislature and joked, "You know the proper role for the Republicans to play — that is a minority role, and we want to keep it that way."

Carter's speech had been inadvertently left on Air Force One and a state trooper was sent back to the plane at Newark International Airport to fetch it. But the president decided to speak off the cuff anyway.

During his pep talk on behalf of the Democratic Party, a man in the audience yelled out, "Don't whip Teddy's ass," a reference to Carter's previous declaration how he intended to handle Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, a potential rival for the Democratic presidential nomination.

It was not clear whether Carter heard the remark and he did not pause in his speech.

In New Brunswick, the president continued his now-routine practice of arriving with gifts from the taxpayers. He announced a $500,000 grant to help the state assume management of bus lines and a $250,000 grant for a four-county, ride-sharing project.

The president returned to the White House Thursday night and planned to depart this afternoon for Camp David, Md., where he will spend the weekend.

Administration Moves To Ease Shortage Of Mortgage Money

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Carter administration has moved on several fronts to ease the nationwide mortgage money crunch, but at the expense of further boosting record high interest rates.

A federal official who requested anonymity said Thursday's steps will make money available for a while, "especially so lenders can make good on commitments. But who is going to borrow at the rates they'll have to charge?"

The supply of mortgage money is expected to grow as a result of revised Federal Home Loan Bank Board regulations which:

—Lower the minimum amount of money thrift institutions must keep in reserve, thereby freeing up to $2.4 billion that can be made available for mortgages.

—Give savings and loan associations permission to greatly expand their borrowing from "outside sources," starting in 60 days. Those sources could include such things as commercial banks and mortgage-backed bonds.

In a related move, the maximum allowable interest on single-family home mortgages insured by the Federal Housing Administration was raised a full point to a record 11.5 percent. For multi-family dwellings, the ceiling was raised from 10 percent to 11 percent.

Ceilings on Veterans Administration loans also rose 1 percent to 11.5 percent.

It was the second time interest ceilings on federally insured mortgages have been raised in the last month by the Department of Housing and Urban Development.

High interest rates on non-federally insured mortgages, now at 14 percent in some states, may increase before turning around, said several housing analysts.

After the first of the year, one said, "I think we will start seeing interest rates coming down."

The actions by HUD and the bank board, which regulates the nation's 4,000 federal savings and loan associations, came as mortgage money has all but dried up.

Savings and loans are losing deposits, which they use to make mortgages, to other institutions and investments offering better returns, such as money-market mutual funds.

In addition, mortgage bankers, who write most government-backed mortgages, have had trouble finding investors for mortgages carrying interest rates lower than other available investments.

Some housing experts said the FHA ceiling increase should make it somewhat easier for mortgage bankers to sell mortgages to their investors.

Although the actions are designed to increase mortgage money availability, they will not do so in all cases.

One expert said mortgage lending will not pick up in the 20 or so states with mortage interest ceilings, which are set at 12 percent or less.

And, even if mortgage money is available, many people will find it out of their reach at the higher interest rates. The monthly payment on a $50,000 mortgage with a 30-year term carrying a 10.5 percent interest rate was $458. That payment on the same loan with an interest rate of 11.5 percent interest goes to $496.

Senate Leader Wary Of Treaty Opponents

WASHINGTON (AP) — Senate Democratic leader Robert C. Byrd says he will do everything he can to keep the SALT II treaty from getting caught up in "the political silly season."

Specifically, he said he hopes Republican presidential contenders won't make the matter a partisan issue.

Announcing his full support for the treaty Thursday, Byrd said he has become convinced it is in the national interest and added that he believes senators will vote across party lines to ratify it.

But he added that he is concerned about "the positions taken by the Republican presidential contenders against the treaty. It makes it appear that those positions are forming along party lines."

Senate Republican leader Howard H. Baker, who will announce his candidacy for the GOP presidential nomination Nov. 1, has been a leading critic of the treaty and a leader of the attempt to force new arms control negotiations with the Russians by adding one or more "killer amendments" to the pact.

"I don't want to see this go into the campaign season," Byrd said. "Party considerations could very well have a bearing."

Byrd said he expects a final vote on ratification before the end of the year, even if the outcome remains in doubt. "Some senators have told me they won't reach a decision before the roll call," he said. "I'm inclined to go ... win or lose."

He predicted the treaty will be ratified because two-thirds or more of the Senate will recognize it represents "an opportunity to help diminish the potential for nuclear destruction, to help make the world a more secure and safer place."

White House officials praised Byrd's endorsement of SALT, saying in a statement that no member of the Senate has shown "a greater and more thoughtful concern for our nation's security than Senator Byrd."

Cambodian Aid Bill Gets Quick Action

WASHINGTON (AP) — Approval of a $30 million U.S. contribution to help save hundreds of thousands of Cambodians from starving to death is zipping through Congress.

The authorization cleared the House quickly Thursday by a 362-10 vote and was sent to the Senate where similarly speedy approval was expected.

"While we're talking, people in Cambodia are dying, so I think we should pass this with a minimum of discussion," said Rep. Stephen J. Solarz, D-N.Y.

"We ought to supply food to hungry human beings regardless of who they support," added Rep. C.W. (Bill) Young, R-Fla., a leading opponent of U.S. aid to Cambodia and other communist governments.

All of those who spoke on the matter in the House urged approval of the cash contribution.

In addition to the authorization bill, Congress must act separately to actually appropriate the $30 million and arrangements have been made to do that quickly.

Rep. Clarence D. Long, D-Md., chairman of the House foreign operations appropriations subcommittee, has agreed to ask House approval of suspending usual procedures and adding the $30 million directly to a foreign aid appropriation bill that is in the final steps of approval by Congress.

The money is part of $69 million President Carter pledged Wednesday for an international effort to distribute food and medicine inside Cambodia.

Organizations conducting the international famine relief effort appealed last week for $111 million from participating countries over the next six months. The food and medicine is being distributed by UNICEF and the International Committee of the Red Cross.

The $69 million contribution pledged by Carter includes the $30 million cash, $20 million in U.S. Food For Peace commodities, $9 million in refugee assistance for Cambodian refugees in Thailand and $3 million for refugees in Cambodia. Carter had pledged the other $7 million two weeks ago.

Pan American To Cut Back Operations

WASHINGTON (AP) — Pan American World Airways has joined the growing ranks of U.S. airlines forced to trim operations and lay off workers because of soaring jet fuel prices and a soft economy.

The Civil Aeronautics Board was expected to provide some relief later today by approving a 3.7 percent raise in basic domestic fares. But that increase would not apply to the overseas routes flown by Pan Am and other U.S. international carriers.

Pan Am president Don Colussy told a House aviation subcommittee Thursday that the carrier will abandon several routes plus all of its charter operations this winter. A significant number of workers may be laid off, he said.

Colussy blamed the "unprecedented, explosive" increase in fuel costs, a falloff in travel, and federal regulations which he said restrict U.S. international carriers from competing effectively with foreign airlines subsidized by their governments.

Colussy testified for proposed legislation that would reduce regulation of U.S.-flag overseas carriers, giving them more freedom to price and market services and schedule flights.

Pan Am will suspend all service to Johannesburg, South Africa; Papeete; and American Samoa; as well as all-cargo flights to the Far East. It also will drop its morning New York-London flight and service between San Juan, Puerto Rico, and Europe.

"We have dropped our earlier plans to expand our worldwide services by 10 percent in 1980," Colussy said.

Frenzied Students Raid School

MIAMI (AP) — Police say it was hysteria brought on by a hypnosis demonstration. Some students say it was demons. A school official calls it a political dirty trick.

Whatever it was, police say something sent students and teachers rampaging through a military school in Miami's Little Havana section Thursday, smashing windows, ripping a door from its frame and screaming they were possessed by spirits.

"The whole school went berserk," police officer Harry Cunnill said. "Teachers and students were running around tearing things up."

Fire Department spokesman Dan LeMay said a number of students collapsed from hysteria and "flaked out all over the place."

Police called to restore order at the school found "people yelling and screaming they were possessed," Cunnill said. He said the events followed a 10th grade science demonstration of hypnosis, and students told firemen there had been a recent class on the supernatural.

LeMay said rescuers were dispatched to the school after the fire department received a report of an unconscious child. "Some other kids said something supernatural had possessed him," he said.

"I saw three girls. They had fainted," said one young student. "There was some screaming about 'bloody Mary' and more screaming."

Authorities say none of the 300 students at Miami Aerospace Academy, some of them from South America, was seriously hurt. LeMay said one frenzied youngster was treated for cuts suffered when he shattered a window.

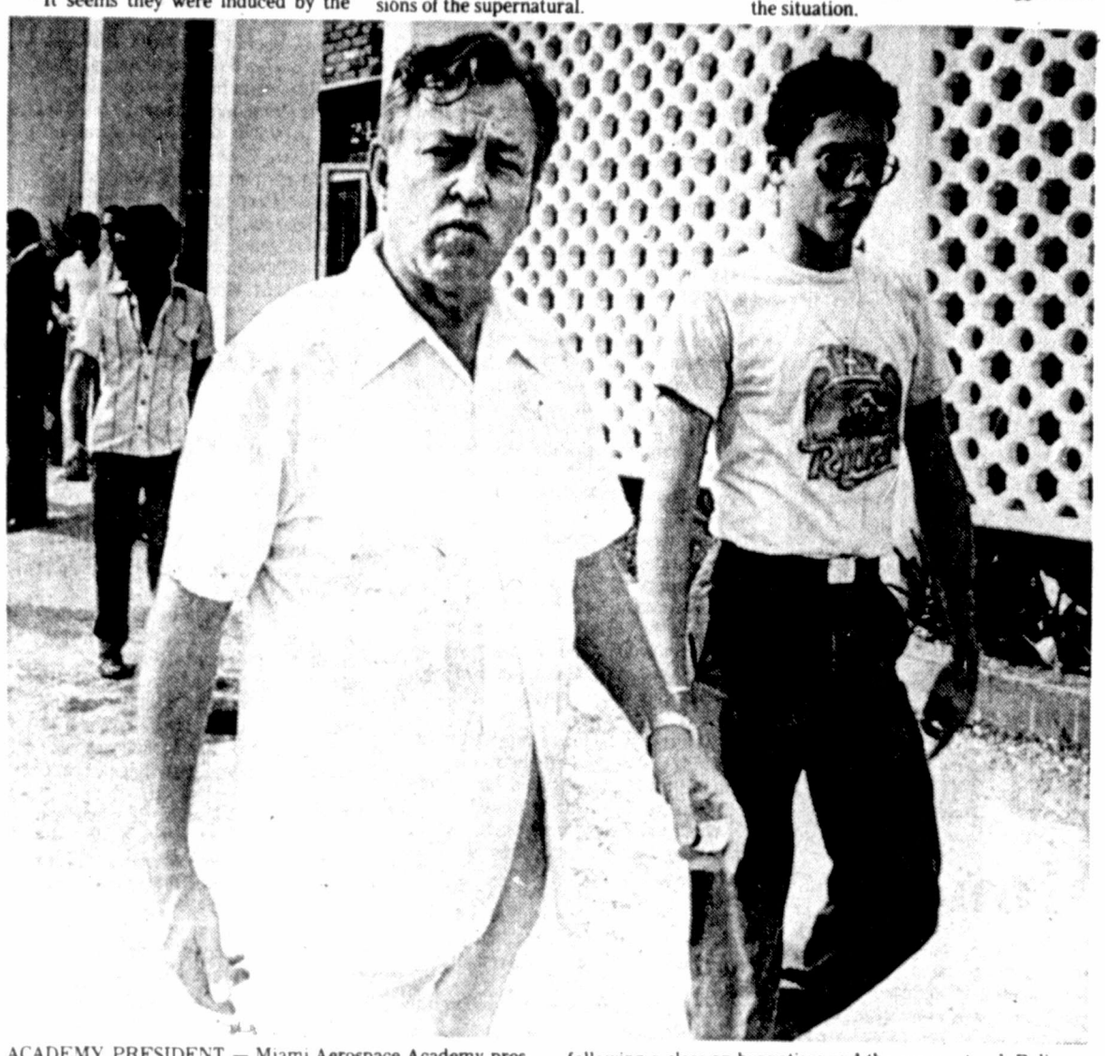

"It seems they were induced by the sight of others who became hysterical — it was like a domino effect," he said.

Academy owner and President Evaristo Marina, who is campaigning for a city council seat, said the incident was intended to embarrass his campaign.

Marina vigorously denied police reports that the incident was sparked by a demonstration of hypnotism and discussions of the supernatural.

"We don't teach those things here," he said. "Somebody put the kids up to it. One week before the election and everybody is trying to get me."

Marina refused to allow reporters inside the pink Spanish-style school, where fire inspectors said they found several safety violations. He said the influx of reporters and city authorities aggravated the situation.

Man Pleads Innocent To Charges

PURCELL, Okla. (AP) — Roger Dale Stafford — already convicted of murdering six steakhouse workers and sentenced to die — will face a preliminary hearing Dec. 18 on three new first-degree murder charges.

The 27-year-old Alabama drifter pleaded innocent Thursday to charges of murdering Air Force Sgt. Melvin Lorenz, 38, his wife Linda, 31, and son Richard, 12. The members of the San Antonio family were gunned down and robbed near here while driving to a funeral in North Dakota.

Stafford, chained hand and foot, wore a white prison uniform as he was led into Associate District Judge J. Kenneth Love's courtroom for his arraignment. His mustache was shaved and his hair was cut short.

Stafford is currently confined in a prison in nearby Lexington. He will be transferred to Death Row at the state prison at McAlester to await his preliminary hearing

District Attorney Kay Huff will seek three new death sentences against Stafford in the June 22, 1978 killings of the Lorenz family.

Mrs. Huff said she filed the new charges against Stafford to be sure he would not be freed in the event his steakhouse murder conviction is reversed on appeal.

Stafford received six death sentences Tuesday for the murders of six Oklahoma City Sirloin Stockade workers during a $1,300 robbery on July 16, 1978.

The father of three was sentenced to be put to death on Jan. 17 by drug injection for the steakhouse massacre. However, lengthy appeals will make it impossible for the execution to be carried out on schedule.

According to an Oklahoma State Bureau of Investigation report, a revolver used in the Lorenz killings was also used in the steakhouse murders. In addition, the OSBI claims that a revolver stolen from Lorenz was used in the Sirloin Stockade bloodbath.

Defense attorney J. Malone Brewer said he will make many of the same motions in the Lorenz case that he made in the steakhouse murder case.

The key motion will seek to bar testimony by Stafford's estranged wife, Verna, 26.

Suspect Held In 'Subway Slashings'

CHICAGO (AP) — A man on probation for a 1977 subway robbery has been charged with six of the robberies that left a dozen people — their throats cut — bleeding on city subway platforms, police say.

The man was arrested early Thursday after one of the 12 slashing victims died. Police Sgt. Larry Williams said James E. Ford, 24, was charged with six counts of armed robbery but was not charged in the slaying.

Police apprehended Ford several hours after Joseph Ardell, 64, was found dying on a subway platform. Police said Ford, who remained in custody Thursday night, was carrying a fold-up knife with a 4-inch blade, a wristwatch and cash, all blood-stained, and his clothing was splattered with blood.

Ardell's throat was slit while he was waiting for a subway late Wednesday in the latest of a dozen attacks in three weeks.

A transit ticket agent said two couples carrying suitcases and believed to be from out of town told her Ardell was lying bleeding on the platform. The couples left before police arrived.

Police said Ardell was the first to die from an assault by what some are calling the "Subway Slashers," but homicide detectives refused to comment on whether there is more than one suspect or if they believe the attacks are related.

The victims were stabbed in robbery attempts during late-evening or early-morning hours in the subway tunnels. All the attacks were in the Loop area or Near North Side. Police have stepped up their patrols of the subways and have begun using dogs.

All the victims' throats were cut, and some were robbed of cash and other items. Two of the victims, men in their 40s, were left in serious condition.

David Kennedy Released After Heart Treatment

BOSTON (UPI) — David Kennedy, the 24-year-old son of the late Sen. Robert F. Kennedy, has been discharged from Massachusetts General Hospital where he underwent nearly seven weeks of treatment for a serious heart disorder.

Kennedy was admitted to the hospital in serious condition Sept. 9, three days after he was robbed in a New York City hotel known as a drug dealers' haven.

The illness, bacterial endocarditis, is a bacterial infection of the heart lining common among drug addicts who often develop infections from using dirty hypodermic needles.

The illness is also often seen among patients with a history of heart disease. Kennedy had been previously hospitalized for cardiac problems.

Kennedy was told by doctors before being discharged Thursday to "continue to take oral antibiotics to complete his course of treatment," a hospital spokesman said.

Spokesman Martin Bander said the infection had gradually responded to antibiotic treatment, and Kennedy's discharge "came in the anticipated six-plus weeks after his admission."

Bander said he did not know where Kennedy went when he left the hospital.

Kennedy was mugged and robbed Sept. 6 at the Shelton Plaza Hotel in Harlem. He told police that while driving through the area in his $15,000 BMW sports coupe, he was lured into the hotel by two men waving at him. He said a third man joined the two others, who took only $30 of the $200 he was carrying.

Aviation Experts Find Faults With FAA's Role

By JANE SEE WHITE
Associated Press Writer

An engine wrenches off a DC-10 during takeoff at Chicago. Chunks of wing tear away from a soaring Boeing 707 liner. The tail cone rips away from a DC-9 25,000 feet above the Atlantic Ocean.

Aviation experts trot out a host of explanations when they're asked why airplanes are breaking apart in the skies. They cite "inevitable metal fatigue." They call it "a rash of unconnected incidents."

But, in the end, many experts raise a familiar complaint. The problem, they say, is the Federal Aviation Administration, an agency charged with two duties: to insure air travel safety and to promote and encourage civil aviation.

Critics of the FAA say it is impossible for the agency to both police and promote an industry. FAA Administrator Longhorne Bond sees no conflict. The way to foster aviation, he says, is to promote safety.

But critics say the FAA fails to achieve its dual mission. They say the price of failure is exacted — too often, in blood — from air travelers. Among their complaints:

—"The conflict in the FAA's mandate is the key. An agency can be captured by the industry it's supposed to be regulating. Certain segments of the industry never let the FAA forget that promotion is what it's all about," says Cornish Hitchcock of Ralph Nader's Aviation Consumer Action Project.

—"The problem is most definitely with the FAA. There's too much rubber stamping. They have to police the industry," says an Air Line Pilots Association official who asks that his name not be used.

—"A lot of questionable (aircraft) design items get past the FAA," says Jim Sparling of the Aircraft Mechanics' Fraternal Association. "If the FAA was doing its job, I think a lot of these defects wouldn't get to the stage they do."

Sparling was talking about the stage where people are killed, the stage where emergency action is needed to prevent more deaths.

Such as the 37-day grounding of the nation's DC-10s ordered by the FAA after 273 people died when an engine wrenched from a DC-10 and the plane crashed on takeoff in Chicago on May 25.

Or like the emergency inspections of DC-9s the FAA ordered last week after the rear bulkhead of an Air Canada DC-9 broke away and took with it the plane's tail cone. The plane made an emergency landing; four persons were injured.

The tail cone loss was not so inconceivable as it may appear.

In 1976, Texas International Airlines mechanics found cracks in a DC-9's rear wall, or bulkhead. In reaction, McDonnell Douglas, the jet's manufacturer, sent airlines flying DC-9s a "service bulletin."

The bulletin urged air carriers to add a reinforcing layer of metal skin to the rear bulkhead of their DC-9s. Meanwhile, it said, inspections should be stepped up.

The FAA did not issue an "Airworthiness Directive," or AD, requiring the airlines to take action.

As a result, many airlines — Air Canada among them — chose to step up inspections rather than reinforce the bulkhead.

Cornish Hitchcock and Jim Sparling say recent DC-9 events raise unsettling memories of events surrounding a defective DC-10 cargo door — the door that caused the world's worst air disaster.

It began during DC-10 ground tests in 1970: A cargo door blew out. Then, in 1972, a cargo door popped out of an American Airlines DC-10 over Windsor, Ontario; decompression caused part of the cabin floor to collapse, but the pilot made a successful emergency landing.

McDonnell Douglas issued a service bulletin urging air carriers to modify DC-10 cargo doors. The FAA did not issue an AD.

In March 1974, when a Turkish Airlines DC-10 popped a cargo door near Paris, the collapse of the cabin floor cut the control cables. The plane crashed, killing all 346 persons aboard.

Hitchcock says the FAA's decisions not to issue ADs in both cases indicates the agency's been "captured" by the aviation industry. His boss, Ralph Nader, agrees.

Nader told a congressional inquiry last summer that the FAA "has been an agency heavily indentured to the airlines and the manufacturers, an agency which is ... incapable of swift and effective action to remedy dangerous conditions."

"The DC-10 cargo door was a service bulletin situation, like the DC-9 cracks," says Sparling. "The FAA didn't issue an AD until after the Paris crash. You can see their tremendous hesitancy to issue an AD. We have to get the FAA out of the promotion business."

Asked if the FAA is reluctant to issue ADs, spokesman Fred Farrar says: "You ought to come down and look at this book full of ADs. We issue ADs almost every day. There are literally hundreds of them."

Indeed, among the ADs published recently were to unrelated directives affecting DC-9s: one modified earlier orders for inspecting a door handle crank; the other ordered inspections of a metal spar supporting the tail section.

Farrar says an AD wasn't issued in 1976 on the DC-9 bulkhead cracks because "we checked the fleet and found four small cracks. We felt there was no real need for an AD after the McDonnell Douglas service bulletin. Now, all these airplanes are three years older and this problem is associated with age."

The problem — cracks in an airplane's metal skin or parts caused by metal fatigue or stress — is inevitable, Farrar says. "It's nothing new. It's a known phenomenon. It's taken into account when a plane's designed and in our inspection procedures."

Despite the recent accidents, Farrar says the FAA system is good:

"It's a three-way thing. You design a plane so it has systems that take up slack from parts that break; then you have maintenance procedures so you can find problems; then when you find something like a crack the AD process, if necessary, comes into play.

"You can tell how well the system works by noting that U.S. aircraft manufacturers sell more airplanes than anybody else in the world," he adds.

Critics of the FAA say it is impossible for the agency to both police and promote an industry.

Safety statistics tend to support Farrar's view. Flying is about 20 times safer than travel by automobile, according to the National Transportation Safety Board.

But the critics say the FAA could do better. They are especially critical of FAA procdures for insuring that new aircraft designs are safe. The spokesman for the Air Line Pilots Association calls the procedure "rubber-stamping," adding:

"Right now the process for certifying new aircraft is between the FAA and the manufacturer. We want to open the process to designated interested parties with expertise" — pilots' and aviation groups.

The system works this way:

When an authorized manufacturer is ready to produce a new plane, an application is filed for an FAA "type" certificate. The FAA studies the plan to see if it meets FAA minimum standards. If so, an authorization to test the design is issued. The manufacturer and the FAA conduct separate tests.

Eventually — the process usually takes several months of testing — the FAA hands test data to a certification board which studies the data and, if all goes well, the new aircraft is certified as airworthy.

Then each of the new airplanes must earn an airworthiness certificate. The brunt of this work, Farrar says, is done by "Designated Manufacturing Representatives" — workers on the manufacturer's payroll who are appointed by the FAA to monitor the plane-building process.

Hitchock is unimpressed with the FAA's standards, saying, "You could build a plane that meets FAA minimum standards and you wouldn't fly in it if you knew what you were doing."

Further, critics say, the "manufacturing reps" are in a tight spot. According to the mechanics' association's Sparling, "There's a conflict of interest there. I think they would stop something that was really hazardous. But a lot of questionable things get by."

Sparling is also critical of FAA maintenance procedures: "The airlines have FAA-approved maintenance programs and it's airline supervision that enforces these."

The FAA employs 266 inspectors to spot check the airlines to see that they're following FAA maintenance guidelines. Sparling says that's not enough.

He adds that when a mechanic finds something wrong with an airplane, he "has no authority to ground an airplane. If he finds something wrong that's a big economic item, unless it's clearly an immediate hazard, we're just not going to get anything done. If an engine falls off, then something's done."

On the heels of the Chicago crash in which an engine wrenched from an American Airlines DC-10, Farrar says, "We're looking at it to see if we have enough inspectors, to see whether our oversight procedures are adequate. We want to know, was it some breakdown in our method that allowed American ... to be using this fork lift method."

Investigators believe the DC-10's engine wrenched off because American mechanics used a fork lift to reattach the engine assembly during routine maintenance, a procedure that was not approved by the FAA.

"Some parts on that DC-10 were damaged because of the manner in which they were moving the engine and other parts snapped in the sequence of events because they couldn't stand the stress," says the National Transportation Safety Board spokesman Bob Buckhorn.

The safety board's experts have begun a study of DC-9s in search of a cause for the Air Canada incident, a search that Buckhorn says will include design, certification, manufacturing procedures.

And a safety board team is still investigating the causes of the Chicago crash. The board's chairman, James King, commented:

"Our investigations will have to look at certification and design procedures, past maintenance and, in the final analysis, the FAA's role."

Public Radio To Broadcast Vienna Opera Performance

WASHINGTON (AP) — National Public Radio will broadcast Saturday night the opening performance of Beethoven's "Fidelio," Mozart's "Le Nozze di Figaro," and Richard Strauss's "Ariadne auf Naxos."

The world-renowned Vienna State Opera makes its American debut Saturday at the Kennedy Center here, and the opera will be carried live to its affilate stations by NPR.

The broadcast network also will carry subsequent performances on Oct. 30 and Nov. 6, officials said. The performances will be under the baton of Leonard Bernstein and Karl Bohm and will feature international casts led by Gwyneth Jones, Jess Thomas, Lucia Popp, Walter Berry, Edita Gruberova and Gundula Janowitz.

Group Requires Pollsters To Disclose Information

By MALCOLM N. CARTER
Associated Press Writer

Pollsters agree that no poll should be taken at face value, and the standards of their professional organizations require them to disclose information that can help the public evaluate any poll.

"Ultimately, it's the polling fraternity that is the final arbiter of accountability," remarks Harvard professor Gary Orren. "I wish there were something more formal."

The 1,000 members of the American Association for Public Opinion Research, for example, agree to "cooperate with legally authorized representatives of the public by describing the methods used in our studies."

The group further pledges not to conduct research to "yield a desired conclusion," or to interpret results "which are inconsistent with the data available."

Founded in 1969 by a group of survey research organizations, the National Council on Public Polls sets its own standards.

It specifies that pollsters should give the poll sponsor, dates of interviewing, method of obtaining the interviews, wording of the questions, the population that was surveyed, the size of the sample and the size and description of the subsample if results are based on less than the total sample.

A public attuned to information like that may be the best check on a bad poll. It's a matter of knowing what to doubt.

Perhaps the most important question to ask is the source of the poll.

Was it conducted by a reputable organization? Was it done privately for an individual or a group with an ax to grind?

Polls "leaked" during political campaigns, for instance, are notoriously suspect.

Candidates have been known to guard against releasing embarrassing numbers — "I just lie," one presidential campaign manager confides — or do fake results in the hope of encouraging donors.

Only the state of New York, however, has acted against leaks of false or misleading poll data in a campaign. It requires disclosure of all pertinent details if any of a candidate's private poll becomes public.

Another important consideration is where the poll results appear. Is the source reporting the results credibly?

When it blundered last year on three top statewide races, the Minneapolis Tribune — which conducts the Minnesota Poll — sought to preserve its credibility. It commissioned — and published — a lengthy critique of its failures, which were based on faulty sampling. It also plans to spend twice as much money on polling now.

"We'll be trying to do it a little more vigorously," editor Charles W. Bailey says.

Another question to be asked is when the poll was conducted.

Sometimes the pressure to be first with the news — and a poll is news — can affect the results. During his recent tenure as polling manager of NBC News, says Sheldon Gawiser, he often had to write questions too quickly and to measure opinion even before the public had a chance to form it.

"We have seen differences between a Monday night and a Tuesday night," Gawiser relates.

For readers or listeners trying to understand the poll's findings, this means that they should be aware of when the poll was taken and read it as a measure of opinion at that point.

"Is it a public at the very early stages of resolving its feelings about an issue or

Last In A Series

a candidate," pollster Daniel Yankelovich wrote recently, "or is it a picture of a public that has 'decided'?

"Public opinion poll percentages by themselves do not reveal whether the public is at the beginning, in the middle or at the end of this working-through process."

How does the poll compare with others?

No two recent polls have given the same figure for the president's popularity. No two polls agree on the amount of support for the Strategic Arms Limitation Treaty.

But all the polls show that Carter's popularity is sliding. And all the polls that ask respondents whether they want the Senate to ratify the SALT treaty show less than 50 percent support for it.

"The situation is such these days that there are so many public opinion polls that if all of these single questions or pairs of questions are asked, you feel fairly confident that opinion isn't soft or fuzzy on a given issue," says Andrew Kohut, president of the Gallup Organization.

The problem is being able to compare questions. Some pollsters wonder whether the proliferation of the news media's polls doesn't make it hard to do so.

"Can the news media both generate the news and report the news?" asks Albert H. Cantril, president of the National Council on Public Polls. "I don't know the answer — I really don't."

A.M. Rosenthal, executive editor of the New York Times, minimizes the issue. Calling polls just another in a range of journalistic tools, he says news organizations like his are justified in emphasizing their own polls.

"We devise the questions, we know what the results are and we take responsibility for them," Rosenthal explains.

There is little agreement whether the news media should publish all the information necessary to evaluate a poll or whether the public should simply trust in the reporter.

"The average consumer can't tell the difference between a poll that is on the money or one that isn't any good," remarks Peter Hart, who polls for a score of U.S. senators.

"In television, you can't put up any nubers that have to be explained," CBS's Mitofsky allows. "You can't expect people to remember the caveats. No matter how well you qualify it, the qualifications get lost."

To Mitofsky, who concedes "there's a lot of room for something better" in the reporting of polls, the public must judge a poll by its source.

"When you hear something on ABC, CBS or NBC," he says, "you assume it has credibility."

But you don't take it as gospel, according to Raymond Stokes, head of consumer studies for the federal Bureau of Foods.

Government Efforts Have Failed To Stop Illegal Drug Trade

WASHINGTON (AP) — The 10-year, 5 billion federal war against illegal rugs has slowed but not halted the lurative drug trade in the United States, ongressional investigators said this eek.

A study by the General Accounting ffice reported success in the governent's efforts to disrupt some drug supy lines but added that greater commitent and cooperation are needed from overnment agencies.

"Federal agencies have fought hard o reduce the adverse impact of illegal rugs on American society," the GAO said, noting a drop in drug-related injuries and deaths.

But the agency added: "The drug trade continues to flourish and the problem persists for reasons tied to the enormous supply of and demand for drugs."

In its report, the GAO called for increased cooperation among government officials and a stronger drive to apprehend and prosecute major drug traffickers.

The report complained that the war against the drug trade lacked a comprehensive border patrol plan, suffered from uneven prosecuting efforts and was hampered by the failure of judges to consistently mete out stiff sentences to drug traffickers.

The GAO report was released today at the start of hearings on the drug trade being held by a Senate Appropriations subcommittee on justice, chaired by Sen. Dennis DeConcini D-Ariz. The GAO is the investigative arm of Congress.

Despite its criticisms, the GAO praised "notable successes" achieved by the federal campaign against drug smuggling.

The congressional investigators said heroin supplies have been sharply reduced because of the interruption of smuggling routes from Turkey and Mexico and the cooperation of those countries in reducing production.

"Current indicators suggest that there is a major shortage of heroin in the United States, a significant accomplishment against the nation's No. 1 drug enforcement priority," the GAO said.

"However, this and other hard-won successes are short-lived," the GAO said. "Growing areas, shipment routes, trafficking organizations and even the types of drugs abused all readily change and adapt to new conditions.

"Today's concern is that as Mexican heroin availability declines, heroin from Southeast Asia and the Middle East will fill the gap. Some also fear that use of dangerous synthetic drugs will continue to increase."

The GAO said efforts to stem the flow of illegal drugs were also hampered by the tremendous demand for drugs from millions of Americans. The government estimates that Americans spend $13 billion to $21 billion a year for marijuana alone.

"The enormous profits of drug trafficking attract an ample number of entrepreneurs who are opportunistic and far outweigh those offered by legitimate businesses," the GAO said.

The congressional agency added that the lucrative drug trade attracts dealers from all walks of life, including doctors, lawyers, accountants, businessmen and entertainers.

Nicknames Can Mean More Votes

BATON ROUGE, La. (UPI) — William Shakespeare could have learned a thing or two about what's in a name from None of the Above or Dr. X. He also would have learned a lot about Louisiana politics.

None of the Above is a candidate for governor. Haywood "Dr. X" Fair is seeking a third term on the Madison Parish police jury.

Louisiana candidates know bizarre names and nicknames translate to instant recognition and familiarity that can add up to extra votes.

That is why hundreds of politicians put their nicknames on election ballots — whether they're as common and obvious as "Eddie" or as bizarre as "Fly-Ro." The roster for this Saturday's statewide election has its share of strange names.

Aside from the commonplace short forms of given names, the nicknames on Saturday's ballots suggest occupations, describe physical characteristics, and often are humorous, such as "Te Bagin," "Bumbo," "Tubby," and "Poodle."

Many nicknames simply are bizarre, such as:

—Stanley "Lolly Pop" Bazile, a candidate for constable in St. James Parish.

—Doyle "Popcorn" Scaife, of Many, who is seeking the Louisiana House seat of H.M. "Mutt" Fowler of Coushatta.

—Leslie "Fly-Ro" Jarreau, a candidate for constable in Point Coupee Parish, home of constables Nolan "Chuck" Jarreau and Robert "Cow" Jarreau.

—Harry J. "Soup" Kember Jr. of White Castle, a candidate for the House, is taking full advantage of his nickname. His TV ads always show a can of "Kember" soup with the familiar red and white label of a national brand.

Although None of the Above is not a nickname, it is the ultimate example of the name game in Louisiana politics. He was an unknown minor candidate for governor when he qualified for governor as Luther Devine "L.D." Knox.

But when he legally changed his name to promote his campaign theme of putting a "None of the Above" slot on election ballots, he gained instant national recognition and thousands of dollars worth of publicity he never could have bought.

The name change came too late to go on the ballot, and the courts ruled it was deceptive, but None of the Above got his message across.

Haywood Fair, has been elected twice to the Madison Parish Police Jury without a nickname. But two years ago he took the CB "handle" of "Dr. X." Now many people know him better as Dr. X, so he is listed on the ballot as Haywood "Dr. X" Fair.

Ron Weber, a member of the Louisiana State University political science faculty, said the use of nicknames on ballots appeared to be more widespread in Louisiana than in the north. He said most states forbid use of nicknames on ballots.

"I think, frankly, they are useful to help candidates differentiate themselves from other candidates, and I think most voters are more likely to recognize the candidates by their nicknames," he said.

"I've heard people comment in states where you must use given names say, 'Oh, that's so and-so,' when they see the full name on the ballot — 'I didn't know that's what his name was.'"

IRA Denies Report Of Murder Plot

LONDON (AP) — The Provisional wing of the Irish Republican Army on Wednesday denied a published report that it planned to assassinate Princess Margaret during her visit to California, Press Association reported.

The British domestic news agency said "senior Provisional sources scoffed" at a report in the Los Angeles Times that an IRA man planned to kill the princess as she dedicated a Culver City, Calif., Rolls-Royce facility last Friday.

Press Association quoted the sources as saying they regarded the princess, sister of Queen Elizabeth II, as a "legitimate target," but that such an operation would not be carried out on American soil for political reasons.

API Reports Decline Of Fuel Inventories

NEW YORK (AP) — Heating oil and gasoline supplies fell slightly last week but remained substantially ahead of inventories at this time last year, the American Petroleum Institute, an industry group, said.

For the week ending Oct. 9, heating oil supplies declined to 239.1 million barrels from 239.6 million the previous week, probably due to the start of winter deliveries, API said. Last year's supplies were 214.9 million barrels at this time.

Man Upset Over Loan Refusal Robs Bank

HARPER (UPI) — A man angered by his bank's tight money policies found his own solution to the recession — a pistol and big pockets.

Authorities said the man walked into the small rural bank this week and asked for a loan. He was interviewed, but was told he didn't qualify.

Police said the man then drew a pistol and herded the bank's two employees, the only people in the bank, into the vault and told them to stay there.

THE BABBLING BROOK is all that's missing from this sylvan scene. Graceful trees embrace the covered patio of this older home nestled in a quiet and restful neighborhood. Priced under $47,000, this MUST SEE property offers 3 bedrooms, 2 baths, formal living, family room with fireplace and country kitchen. Call Earlene Hall for your own private showing. 795-7519 or 795-5506.

LIGHT AND BRIGHT describes this exceptional new listing in Farrar Estates. The den/living area adjacent to the outstanding homemaker kitchen invites easy entertaining or just easy living for the growing family. Mom and Dad will enjoy the large isolated master suite while the kids and house guests languish in the spacious remaining 3 bedrooms. Sound just right for you? Then call Kent Rabon, 795-8592 or 795-5506.

"I NEED A NEW FAMILY." I'm just minutes from Lubbock and you can offer your family the quiet unhurried pace of almost country living. My owners are offering me for sale on FHA terms — and ohyes, my 3 bedrooms, 2 baths, and easy flow floor plan just love the sounds of happy children. Won't you come see me? Call Genie Gould today, 745-7974 or 795-5506.

NEED SOME HELP? Then rent out the other side of this beautiful Raintree duplex. Enjoy the luxury of patios, gas grill, electric door opener, and much, much more. Investment plus home. Currently owner occupied with the other side rented. Your cup of tea? Call Elizabeth Bigness, 795-2328 or 795-5506.

A REAL DOLL HOUSE just South of Tech. Completely remodeled and just beautiful, this squeaky clean new office exclusive listing won't last. Excellent area, new plumbing, central heating and air conditioning make this 2 bedroom ideal for — you? Call Nita Kiesling now. 799-5928 or 795-5506.

LIGHT AND BRIGHT describes this exceptional new listing in Farrar Estates. The den/living area adjacent to the outstanding homemaker kitchen invites easy entertaining or just easy living for the growing family. Mom and Dad will enjoy the large isolated master suite while the kids and house guests languish in the spacious remaining 3 bedrooms. Sound just right for you? Then call Kent Rabon, 795-8592 or 795-5506.

"I NEED A NEW FAMILY." I'm just minutes from Lubbock and you can offer your family the quiet unhurried pace of almost country living. My owners are offering me for sale on FHA terms — and others, my 3 bedrooms, 2 baths, and easy flow floor plan just love the sounds of happy children. Won't you come see me? Call Genie Gould today, 745-7974 or 795-5506.

NEED SOME HELP? Then rent out the other side of this beautiful Raintree duplex. Enjoy the luxury of patios, gas grill, electric door opener, and much, much more. Investment plus home. Currently owner occupied with the other side rented. Your cup of tea? Call Elizabeth Bigness, 795-2328 or 795-5506.

A REAL DOLL HOUSE just South of Tech. Completely remodeled and just beautiful, this squeaky clean new office exclusive listing won't last. Excellent area, new plumbing, central heating and air conditioning make this 2 bedroom ideal for — you? Call Nita Kiesling now. 799-5928 or 795-5506.

Interest rates are going through the roof, but today at University Dodge, you can buy a New 1979 Dodge and pay

Not 20% ... Not 15% ... Not Even 10%

Just 9.28 APR*

*THAT'S 5% ADD-ON INTEREST!

You haven't seen interest rates this low since the 1960's!

Because our 1980 models are arriving everyday, we have cut the prices on our remaining '79's to the bone. So, you win two ways: a new car at a great close-out price. And a 9.28 APR!

Magnum XE

With bucket seats, fuel-efficient V-8, automatic transmission, power steering, power brakes, and more!

$139.88/month

Because of special arrangements, we can only make this offer available through October 31.

Local Man Attacked In Garage

A 22-year-old Lubbock man was treated and released from Methodist Hospital after he was struck in the head when he stepped into his garage shortly before midnight Thursday.

Danny Flores of 1915-A 27th St. was found by police sitting in his living room, dazed and covered with blood. Flores, who suffered a cut over an eye, said he heard noise in back of his house and walked out the door to see what it was when he was hit with an unknown object.

Help was dispatched after a neighbor of the victim called police and said three boys had tapped on his bedroom window and told him a man had been hurt in his back yard.

The youths, named as suspects in the incident, were said to be between 14 and 15 years old. Two of the boys reportedly were anglos and the third was described as a Mexican-American.

In other activity, a 41-year-old Lubbock man was arrested about 1 a.m. today at a restaurant in the 3000-block of Avenue A after he allegedly held a customer at knifepoint.

Kenneth M. McWilliams of Route 6, Box 246-A, Lubbock, told police he and his son were sitting at a booth when the man confronted him and pressed a knife to his rib cage. The armed man told McWilliams to mind his own business or he would be hurt, according to reports.

Police were told the man then walked into the kitchen and sharpened the blade of his weapon. The man was taken to the county jail on suspicion of aggravated assault and public intoxication.

A 21-year-old Lubbock woman said a man who had bothered her at a Lubbock club early this morning followed her to a drive-in restaurant in the 300-block of University Avenue, slashed her car tires and shattered her windshield.

She said she walked out of the restaurant and found her car damaged and the man sitting in his vehicle in the parking lot. Police said they ordered the man out of his car and discovered a .22-caliber pistol on the front seat.

The 20-year-old suspect was arrested on suspicion of public intoxication and unlawful carrying of a weapon.

A man was in the county jail early today after he allegedly caused a ruckus about 9 p.m. Thursday at a club in the 800-block of North University Avenue.

Police said the 38-year-old Lubbock man tried to hit one of his arresting officers, made numerous threats and attempted to kick the prisoner shield out of a patrol car while en route to jail.

The suspect also broke glasses and chairs at the club, causing an estimated $300 damage, reports state. He was in jail on suspicion of criminal mischief, criminal trespassing, disorderly conduct, making terroristic threats and public intoxication.

An Artesia, N.M., man was caught with his pants down about 4:40 p.m. Thursday in the South Plains Mall parking lot and subsequently arrested on suspicion of indecent exposure.

Police apprehended the partially unclad suspect after he allegedly exposed himself to a 27-year-old woman in the parking lot at 6002 Slide Road.

A 42-year-old Lubbock woman said a former boyfriend threatened her with a knife and assaulted her 16-year-old daughter after she told him they were through dating.

Reports indicate that after the man displayed the knife at the woman's residence, the girl pleaded with the suspect not to hurt her mother. The man allegedly chased the girl down and struck her several times, causing her to vomit. He fled the scene before police arrived.

LCHD Board Passes EMS Rate Schedule

By KIM COBB
Avalanche-Journal Staff

After a committee recommendation earlier in the day, county hospital district board members voted Thursday afternoon to raise Emergency Medical Services rates on a graduated basis — the fee depending on the level of service administered.

And board members continued their contract negotiations with Brookwood Management Services, but reached no agreement.

The EMS rate schedule was approved, going into effect Nov. 1, altering an earlier decision to raise rates across the board. Rather than charging $100 for all EMS runs, the board voted to charge the high fee only for those calls labeled "Code Three."

Code Three runs, marked by both flashing lights and siren, are made when the patient's condition is serious enough to justify a high speed return to a hospital. A call judged serious enough to qualify for Code Three treatment usually requires more care from attending EMTs and paramedics.

The $100 fee will also be applied where two ambulances answer a call, as in cardiac emergencies.

The charge for less serious emergencies, labeled "Code One" (no lights, no sirens), will be $80. And the charge for simple transfers will be $65 in order to remain competitive with area private ambulance services.

No real progress was made in the contract negotiations between the hospital district and Brookwood representatives. Hospital district officials are still asking for more financial information before signing a two-year contract with the Birmingham, Ala., company which has been running the hospital since Aug. 1.

Finance committee chairman Wayne Smith has asked for a month-by-month income statement and balance sheet as compared to the current budget.

Hospital district legal counsel Charles Galey is drawing up a contract with the hospital's terms. The negotiations will continue on the basis of the financial statements, and the two proposed contracts.

Psychology Department Receives NSF Funding

A quarter of a million dollar National Science Foundation grant to Texas Tech University's department of psychology, mostly for computer equipment, will be used to enhance laboratory instruction for undergraduates in the department.

Dr. Douglas C. Chatfield, project director, is principal investigator and writer of the proposal for the grant. The funding will enable the psychology department to set up a program that will provide more laboratory experience for undergraduate students, he said.

Most of the money is being used to buy a computer system with 20 terminals. Students will receive laboratory instruction in learning, social and physiological psychology through computer programs.

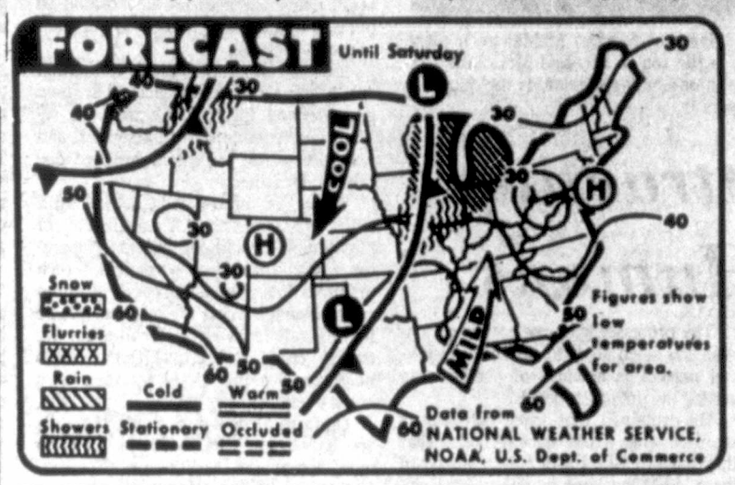

The labs will consist mainly of instructional simulation models of human behavior programmed into the computer. "Simpeos" (simulated people) will behave in models that psychologists have proposed.

The student's job will be to use the "simpeos" and other studies on how people behave to discover which behavior model is represented in his or her program.

"The advantage to this lab is that a student can run 40 to 50 studies a semester, whereas with real people they would only be able to run two," said David Coons, systems manager. "Students will be able to do the equivalent of years of research in one semester."

A minor part of the computer system will be used for tutoring bilingual students in either Spanish or English.

The department will convert a basement classroom in the psychology building into a set of rooms that will accommodate the computer and terminals. Working with a three-year grant, the psychology department started the program in September and expects it to be in full operation by 1981.

University Administrator Appointed To Second Post

The announcement was made by Dr. Robert H. Ewalt, vice president for Student Affairs. He said that Baier will replace Dr. Moses A. Turner in the deanship post. Turner has resigned to accept the vice presidency for Student Affairs at Michigan State University.

As part of the reorganization, several departments of Student Affairs will report directly to Baier. These include Upward Bound and Special Services, which are two federally funded projects designed to assist disadvantaged students, the Student Life areas, the Student Legal Counsel and a research unit.

The term "Office of Student Life" will be replaced on the Texas Tech campus by the designation "Office of Dean of Students," Ewalt said.

Included in Student Affairs, in addition to departments mentioned above, are the Tech Bookstore, Housing and Food Service, University Center, Student Publications, Women's Athletics, Recreational Sports, Admissions and Records, Career Planning and Placement, Counseling Center, International Student Programs and Student Financial Aids.

Baier joined the Texas Tech administrative staff two years ago when he came to Lubbock from the University of Nebraska.

SKEPTICAL SPOOK — This young witch appears slightly hesitant about entering the spookhouse at the St. Elizabeth-St. John Neumann Halloween carnival, but the goblins and ghouls inside are strictly for fun. The less courageous can still take part in a host of other activities, however, at the carnival set for 5 p.m. to 10 p.m. today at the school.

School To Host Halloween Fete

Youngsters and the not-so-young who still delight in the excitement of Halloween will be treated to fun and food at the St. Elizabeth-St. John Neumann School Halloween carnival today from 5 p.m to 10 p.m.

Those brave enough to catch a peek at goblins and ghouls can tour the spookhouse set up in the school while the faint of heart can try their hand at some of the tamer games and sample treats found at the cake walk and country store.

Hot dogs, hamburgers, soft drinks and french fries will be available for those who need a break from the activities.

Proceeds from the carnival will go to the school.

St. Elizabeth's-St. John Neumann's is located at 22nd Street and Frankfurt Avenue.

NOTICE OF PENDENCY OF CLASS ACTION TO:
(1)All those voters in the City of Lubbock who signed a petition for an election to be called on the proposed amendments to the Charter of the City of Lubbock.
(2)All those voters in the City of Lubbock who did not sign the described petition.
NO. 95,710
CITY OF LUBBOCK, PLAINTIFF
VS.
ROBERT D. GREEN, CARROLL F. GARNER, DANIEL J. FAULKNER, AND STEPHEN M. SWINT, INDIVIDUALLY AND AS REPRESENTATIVES OF THE SIGNERS OF PETITIONS FOR CHARTER AMENDMENTS, DEFENDANTS

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF LUBBOCK COUNTY, TEXAS
140TH JUDICIAL DISTRICT
NOTICE OF PENDENCY OF CLASS ACTION

You are hereby notified that the District Court of Lubbock County, Texas, 140th Judicial District, has ordered that the above-captioned action proceed as a class action consisting of two separate and distinct classes as follows;

(a) Primary class — All those voters in the City of Lubbock who signed a petition for an election to be called on the following proposed Charter Amendments:

1. The annual ad valorem taxes levied by the governing authority of the City government shall not exceed the rate of $1.12 per $100.00 valuation of taxable property.
YES NO
2. The annual ad valorem taxes levied by the governing authority of the City government shall not exceed 60% of the fair market value of the property as the assessed valuation of property subject to tax.
YES NO
3. The annual ad valorem taxes levied by the governing authority of the City government shall not be increased on the basis of an increase in the rate of evaluation of taxable property nor on the assessed valuation of property subject to tax, from the preceding tax year, without first securing approval of said increase at an election submitting said proposed increase to the voters of the City of Lubbock. Said increase, if any, requiring a majority vote for its approval.
YES NO

which petitions were presented to the City Council on July 12, 1979.

(b) Secondary class — All those voters in the City of Lubbock, Texas who did not sign the petitions described in paragraph (a) above.

The City of Lubbock, a home rule municipal corporation, has commenced this legal action in this Court seeking a Declaratory Judgment. In this action the Court shall determine questions of construction involving art. 8 sec. 21 of the Constitution of this State, art. 11 sec. 5 of the Constitution of this State, art. 7244c, Vernon's Annotated Civil Statutes of Texas, art. 1165, Vernon's Annotated Civil Statutes of Texas, art. 689a-15, Vernon's Annotated Civil Statutes of Texas, art. 1170, Vernon's Annotated Civil Statutes of Texas, and Senate Bill 621 (Property Tax Code) in order to ascertain the City of Lubbock's duties under the petitions presented to call an election on the proposed Charter Amendments.

THE COURT HAS NOT EXPRESSED ANY OPINION ON THE MERITS OF THE ACTION AND THE SENDING OF THIS NOTICE IS NOT TO BE CONSTRUED AS AN EXPRESSION OF ANY OPINION BY THE COURT.

The purpose of this notice is simply to advise the members of both of the classes above-described that the action has been brought and the rights of each member of both classes with respect thereto as follows;

1. You will be included in the primary class if you have signed the aforementioned petitions for an election on three proposed amendments to the Lubbock City Charter and any judgment will be binding on you.
2. If the Court deems it appropriate to assess court costs against such primary class you may be liable to share, proportionately in the court costs so assessed.
3. You will be included in the secondary class of voters in the City of Lubbock who have not signed the petitions aforementioned if you choose to enter your appearance in this cause and can show
(a) a justiciable interest and
(b) a justiciable controversy
in the pending litigation. If you choose to enter this litigation as members of the secondary class, you are advised that any judgment entered by the Court will be binding upon you.
4. If the Court deems it appropriate to assess court costs against such secondary class you may be liable to share proportionately in any court costs as assessed.
5. The attorney representing the primary class as described above is E. Warren Goss, 1607 Broadway, Lubbock, Texas 79401.
6. The attorney ad litem representing the secondary class as described herein is Leota Alexander, 1107 Main, Lubbock, Texas 79401.
7. The attorneys representing the Plaintiff, City of Lubbock, are Mr. John C. Ross, Jr., City Attorney, and Mr. W.M. (Mick) McKamie, Assistant City Attorney, P.O. Box 2000, Lubbock, Texas 79457.
8. Members of both the primary class and the secondary class are advised that they have the right to retain an attorney of their own choosing to represent them in this law suit. If members of either class choose to hire their own attorney they are advised that he must enter his appearance on your behalf by December 14, 1979.

Home-Grown Fuel Luring Farmers

By JIM STEIERT
A—J Correspondent

HEREFORD — The idea of planting seed and producing a renewable supply of fuel has grown increasingly attractive to America's farmers over the past year.

Hard-pressed by rising production costs and fed-up with the incessant oil price gouging of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries (OPEC) nations, farmers view production of agriculturally-derived alcohol fuels as an opportunity to assert some of that independence and self-reliance with which they have long been credited.

And what farmer wouldn't love to assert his independence by receiving his own price for home-grown fuel and thumbing his nose at OPEC and big oil?

The mere thought of pulling off such a heady stunt has made gasohol, a blend of 10 percent anhydrous alcohol and 90 percent non-leaded gasoline, a hot item in recent months.

Farmers in many areas of the nation are gearing up to produce their own grain-derived fuels in the wake of relaxed laws governing such activities, and with the arrival of custom-designed distillation facilities.

Where, in former days, setting up a still and running off a batch of "lightening" would net the brassy operator a visit from the "revenuers," such practices today, under properly licensed circumstances, bring the operator praise for his individual effort to alleviate the energy crisis and visits from curious neighbors looking to set up their own home energy stills as well.

On-farm alcohol fuel producing stills are hailed as "OPEC Killers," and in many areas the rush is on to create farmer-owned plants and cooperatives to fund construction of large-scale alcohol production facilities.

Individuals promoting the construction of large-scale plants emphasize that production of fuel-grade alcohol is one manner in which farmers can assure themselves of improved prices for their feedgrains.

But beneath all the rosy talk of stretching domestic energy, improving markets for grain and telling OPEC "where to get off" are the hard facts that on-farm production of alcohol is indeed prossible, but not without sub stantial or even staggering investments, trial and error experimentation, and no small degree of risk coupled with the ever-present red tape that goes with mollifying government agencies.

Even the most stalwart proponents of alcohol production in the local area admit such an enterprise is no sure bet, and some local individuals have recently voiced doubts over the actual marketability of gasohol which might be produced by large-scale plants in the local area.

"I'd say the current feeling is that we're going to have to develop a little more confidence in the actuality of this whole gasohol thing before we can think of constructing a large farmer-owned type plant in the local area," commented Jerome Friemel of Hereford, one of the top supporters of a program which would lead to the construction of 20-million gallon per year alcohol production plant here.

"Grain and petroleum had a certain relationship for many years, with the value of a bushel of wheat equal to that of a barrel of oil. Then, oil skyrocketed in price while grain didn't, and today it takes five or six bushels of wheat to buy a barrel of oil. With the grain-to-oil situation in this position, there's no question that it's economically feasible to make fuel from grain right now. But, were world consumption to change and cause grain to do what oil did, we'd have a situation where production of fuel from grain wouldn't be very practical." stated Friemel.

"Whenever anyone looks at something new like this, they are naturally skeptical. There's reason for the farmers to be skeptical of this thing at this point in time, particularly since some of them got burned on an investment in a corn starch plant a few years ago," he continued.

"At this point in time, I think what should be done is to get a corporation together to put up something more on the order of a two million gallon plant, rather than a 20 million gallon facility. This is a high-risk, high-reward situation with fuel alcohol right now, and it might take a lot of high-risk private money to ever get a plant going here," Friemel added.

The Hereford farmer claimed that the introduction of a medium capacity alcohol production plant here will probably be the key to the growth of alcohol production in the immediate Hereford area.

He added, however, that caution remains a watchword here alcohol production is concerned, and there is "no big rush" by area producers to get into the alcohol business on a large scale.

"Cautious" would also best describe the attitude of many of the farmer cooperatives which seemed a prime target for promoters of large alcohol production plants.

Farmland Industries, which includes 2,300 member associations, has opted not to enter into the alcohol production picture, at least for the time present, according to George Statham, vice president of petroleum sales and service for Farmland Industries in Kansas City, Mo., who discussed the alcohol production picture in a telephone interview.

"Our concern is that the farmers not invest in a long-term thing that won't pay off," stated Statham.

"We shared all the research we had gathered with our managers from the western areas following feasibility studies on alcohol distilleries. It was our conclusion that without subsidies, both state and federal, none of the plants would make a satisfactory return. Our advice, momentarily, was not to invest several million dollars in a distillery. Our gasohol committee is still intact and we still consider all of the reports we receive," the Farmland official commented.

"If, and when alcohol distilleries become financially feasible and are something in which we can invest the farmer's money with assurance of a reasonable return, our management and board will look upon such a proposal with favor. We're not against gasohol, but want to make sure that what we do is right and is beneficial to our members and patrons," Statham related.

The Amstar Corporation's Dimmitt plant is currently involved in a study concerning the inclusion of alcohol production facilities at that firm's plant in neighboring Castro County, but according to Doug Lapins, manager at the Dimmitt Amstar plant, "nobody is jumping off deep end."

Lapins pointed out that Amstar has commissioned an engineering study on such a plant and is also investigating marketing.

"We are moving ahead cautiously. There's a lot of publicity around about alcohol plants but whether it is public-held, cooperatives or investment companies, nobody is jumping off deep end about this alcohol thing. Some of the numbers being floated around to farmers and co-ops at various meetings are bum numbers, though. You can go back and check and find that out," claimed Lapins.

The Dimmitt-Amstar plant became involved in checking into alcohol production at an earlier stage than in many communities, but Lapins pointed out that alcohol production could work into procedures at the Dimmitt facility with less difficulty than building a new plant from scratch in other areas.

"We have a corn wet milling plant and produce starch and corn syrup. Our alcohol plant, should we decide to build one, would be just an adjunct to the existing plant. We have a little different program than somebody building a grassroots plant from scratch," he claimed.

"There is room for more than one plant in the Panhandle, in fact, more than one plant would probably make buyers feel more at ease about the reliability of alcohol supplies. The government can make or break this alcohol business, though. I do think there will be some plants built here in the Panhandle, and I think the alcohol will be marketed as an additive for gasoline. It's essential to have a reasonably large distribution system to cope with the supplies of alcohol, however. Someone with a really well-run system who is cautious could probably make some money in alcohol production here," Lapins opined.

Carl King, president of the Dimmitt-headquartered Texas Corn Growers Association, which played a key role in obtaining legislation to permit the production of fuel alcohol in Texas, is concerned about the large number of promoters currently hawking large-scale alcohol production plans in the Panhandle and on the South Plains.

"There are a lot of promoters running around the country and some of them should really be checked out before any effort is made toward setting up alcohol production facilities," stated King.

"It's in the farmer's own interest to make sure that these are ethical operators.

King pointed out that there are some 60 bills relating to synthetic or alternate fuels pending before Congress and 32 of them have a direct bearing to alcohol production.

"What we want here is alcohol produced from whole grains. With a seven billion bushel corn crop and with the grain reserves that have been set up, we know we have plenty of grain, even with record exports. Rail tie-ups and other problems will mean that farmers will be allocated elevator space in the midwest and corn will be put on the ground, and we need something to channel some of this surplus grain into," King maintained.

"I think we will have on-farm and large-scale stills. I firmly believe we'll have industrial plants, with maybe two or three in this area and several on-farm facilities as well. It needs to be realized that the feasibility of distilling alcohol is becoming better every day as the price of fossil alcohol rises. This is a market that needs to be explored, but in a sensible and cautious manner," claimed King.

Friemel explained that grain sorghum may be the predominant raw material for any pioneer plant in the local area, because a small plant will not provide all of the marketable by-products obtained from a large operation.

"Corn has more value as a livestock feed right now, so sorghum would be the more logical choice. We need to look at sweet sorghums, which would probably produce more fuel per acre than our fall grains will," stated Friemel.

Other factors also merit close examination in the consideration of building a large alcohol plant locally.

In recent weeks, a plant as large as 20 million gallons in annual production capacity has been discussed for the Hereford area.

Such a plant would cost a whoppping $30 million, and would consume 7 million bushels of grain annually.

In the event corn were the major raw material, that compsumption would represent the greater part of the Deaf Smith County corn crop, which totalled 7,776,800 bushels in an off production year in 1978.

A large-scale alcohol production plant would also prove to be a water intensive industry, with from 25-35 gallons of water required for every gallon of alcohol produced.

The rugged individualist attitude of the American farmer may have to be extended to any agriculture-derived fuel process in the coming years for immediate benefits without prohibitive cost.

On-farm production of fuel-grade alcohol by individual farmers offers some promise as an economical source of fuel extenders for those individuals with the desire to set up their own stills.

On-farm facilities, although producing lower volumes of alcohol, which would be used primarily on individual farms, are currently showing possibly the greatest practicality with the least risk.

Individual operators can obtain fuel extenders for their needs and utilize the by-products of their distilling processes for livestock feed without the major outlay of capital that will be required of farmers interested in the large scale plants.

"On-farm is a very practical approach right now," Friemel admitted.

"We need a pioneer plant on stream here to show that this thing will work before the interest will really peak in medium or large-sized plants. I have a feeling that we'll be seeing some smaller on-farm units springing up in the local area real soon, however," he concluded.

Refined Cottonseed Attracting Interest As Food For Humans

DALLAS (AP) — The humble cottonseed, long known to scientists as a high source of protein, has started coming into its own as a food source for humans.

It has reached the point now that a Dallas-Fort Worth bakery has already started distribution of a loaf of bread containing cottonseed. An Albuquerque, N.M., bakery distributed cottonseed bread several years ago on a limited basis.

The crunchy little seeds have a nutty, mild flavor, and can be used in many dishes, a Texas A&M home economist said.

Dr. Ed Lusas said that cottonseed has been used mainly as a cattle feed until recently because it contained gossypol, poisonous to humans in its original form.

Lusas said scientists have bred a strain of cotton that does not contain gossypol, and also have developed a method of extracting the gossypol.

Lusas said scientists developed the strain without gossypol about 20 years ago, but researchers at the Texas A&M Food, Protein and Oil Center of the Engineering Experiment Station, as well as other scientists, have been studying and developing the strain for 16 years.

"Cottonseed is higher in protein than sirloin steak. It contains 35 to 38 percent protein and steak has 17 to 19 percent," Lusas said.

The A&M professor predicts that cottonseed will have a widespread commercial market in about a year. He says the edible seeds were marketed commercially about two years ago.

"We are interested in developing applications for cottonseeds in food," said Rhonda Simmons, a Texas A&M home economist.

Miss Simmons said her department is developing a cottonseed cookbook for the consumer. It will be out during the first part of 1980, she said.

"The roasted kernels can be used as nut replacements, appetizers, in salads, as main dishes, desserts, breads, and many other things," said Miss Simmons. She said the university has contracts with private organizations to process cottonseed as well as other types of seed for food products.

Lusas said a high-protein flour has been developed from cotton kernels. He said he expects to see it on the market soon.

The professor said one reason cottonseed has been slow to hit the commercial market is because of problems in getting the lint off the seeds.

He explained that when cottonseeds are extracted from cotton bolls, that they have quite a bit of fiber clinging to them. A&M has been working with a private seed company to develop a simple method of getting the lint off the seeds.

"The Rogers Delinted Seed Co. has specialized in ways of getting the fuzz off. We helped him develop it, and we work very closely with him. He buys fuzzy seed from cotton gins, de-fuzzes it then sells it," Lusas said.

He said that several private companies are selling the edible seeds to confectionary companies, bakeries, and other commercial producers.

Mrs. Baird's Bakery has already started distributing its product in Waco, Temple, Bryan, Belton and Killeen and plan to go into other Texas markets soon.

Japanese Beetles Die At Airports

WASHINGTON (AP) — Government bug sleuths said recently that millions of "crawling, chewing Japanese beetles" a day were trapped or killed at eight airports this summer when they tried to ride flights to uninfested Western states.

No accurate body count was available, but the Agriculture Department said about 150 pounds of beetles a day were trapped at Dulles International Airport in suburban Virginia near here.

Officials said it takes about 2,500 beetles to make a pound, meaning that the 1,400 traps at Dulles caught around 375,000 of the insects a day.

Japanese beetles infest 24 states east of the Mississippi River and St. Louis, Mo. They attack nearly 300 kinds of plants, including farmers' crops.

Adult beetles are usually less than one-half inch in length and have metallic-green bodies and bronze-colored wing covers.

The department's annual war against airport beetles began last June and continued through the summer to keep them from boarding aircraft bound for seven western states — Arizona, California, Idaho, Nevada, Oregon, Utah and Washington — and overseas destinations in Britain, Denmark, West Germany and France.

Domestic Corn Use Shows Sharp Gain

WASHINGTON (AP) — Domestic use of corn and other feed grains was up 13 percent in 1978-79 because of "a sharp expansion" in pork and poultry production.

The Agriculture Department said corn use, which accounted for most of the increase, totaled 4.76 billion bushels in the marketing year that ended Sept. 30.

15 Area Farmers Head For Capital

About 15 High Plains farmers will be in Washington, D. C. Sunday through Wednesday to discuss the situation of agriculture with top government officials.

Cotton set-asides will be the major emphasis of the sessions that have been scheduled with legislators, congressional committees and top U. S. Department of Agriculture officials, trip sponsors said.

The four-day trip is being sponsored by the Texas Farmers Union.

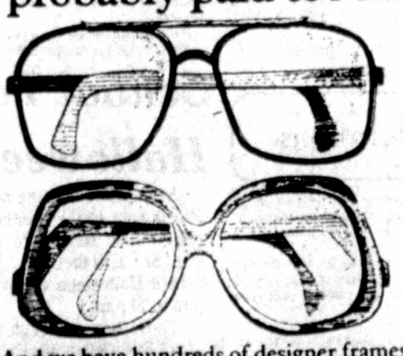

Can NICK NOLTE Fill The Duke's Boots?

Hollywood has had a long line of macho heroes, and the last great one was the late John Wayne. Now Nick Nolte is stepping forward to fill those seven-league boots of tough, yet lovable qualities — a man like Wayne who is very much his own man. Nolte, who now is starring in North Dallas Forty, is a well-seasoned actor who has come late to public notice. His training was in the legitimate theater, and it shows in his finesse in acting. He is a volatile man, roughhewn and unpredictable. That kind of personality (The Duke all over) singles out one actor among many, and in this week's FAMILY WEEKLY you'll learn the causes why.

Cattle Mart Contracts Rebound

By Reuters

CHICAGO — Cattle futures closed 70 to 150 points higher in active trade of 29,755 cars Thursday on the Chicago Mercantile Exchange. Most contracts posted the limit level advance.

The market turned around from limit losses Wednesday on aggressive local short covering and other buying. Traders were impressed by steady to firmer tone to beef although prices were unchanged.

There have been 2,037 deliveries thus far. Wholesale beef was unchanged at 95¼ to 96¼ cents a pound, f.o.b. river points. Cash cattle were off 50 cents to $1 with the best top $66 per hundredweight at Illinois Direct. Slaughter was 120,000 head. About 6,600 head are expected today at the major markets.

Feeder cattle futures closed 60 to 145 higher paced by March. Most contracts were at the day's highs. Sales totaled 2,563 lots.

Some early selling spilled over from Wednesday's limit losses but was readily absorbed as live cattle futures went up the limit. Buying was mostly local and followed firmer beef which offset mixed trend to cash feeders.

There have been 178 delivereis thus far. Cash feeder cattle were off $4 to up $3 with the best top $101.50 per hundredweigh at Dodge City. Receipts at the major markets today are expected to total 5,325 head.

Hog futures closed 70 to 127 higher with June leading. Sales totaled 6,459 contracts. The market was steady to higher from the start and gained 130 for a time.

Prices rebounded from limit declines Wednesday as support uncovered on light hog runs and mostly higher prices The sharp discount under cattle also prompted buying and carried the market to the highest in over three weeks. Continued heavy pace of kill and weakness in pork products.

There have been 6 deliveries thus far. Wholesale hams were unchanged to off 1 at 69 to 75 cents a pound, f.o.b. river. Cash hogs were up 50 cents to weak with the best top $34.50 per hundredweight. Kill was 354,000 head. The major terminals are expecting about 27,000 head today.

Pork belly (bacon) futures closed 170 to 185 higher on 4,878 lots. Prices were up from the start and ended at the day's highs.

Much of the recovery from Wednesday was traced to short covering which in turn was linked to the rebound in cattle futures. Cash bellies remain unsettled and while slaughter was moderating, it was still heavy.

However, hog runs were down and prices mostly up.

Wholesale bacon was up ½ to off ½ at 29 to 35½ cents a pound, f.o.b. river.

Grain Futures

CHICAGO (AP) — Grain futures fell and soybeans were mostly higher Thursday on the Chicago Board of Trade.

The progressing record corn harvest weighed heavily on corn futures. Some commercial hedge-type selling to offset purchases on the cash market and commission house selling led to declines of 5¼ to 6¼ cents a bushel.

PLAINS AGRICULTURE

By DUANE HOWELL

"I WANT TO RAISE CAIN," the Hockley County farmer declared.

The Levelland farmer was unhappy about being ruled ineligible for a Small Business Administration disaster loan. He, as did others, lost a crop to hail in August. It was a total loss and he has since plowed the cotton ground.

But the farmer had crop insurance and this, aside from a disaster payment under the federal farm program, made him ineligible for the SBA loan.

"Insurance income shouldn't be included in the eligibility rules," he said, since it is "private business" and doesn't involve the government. He added that he had no objection to inclusion of the federal disaster payment.

The farmer said he had talked with the office of Rep. Kent Hance of Lubbock and was told nothing could be done now to change the situation.

"I personally think there shouldn't be a subsidized farm loan program, not even for disasters," the farmer asserted. "But so long as such a program is available, it should be equitable and should be open to those who have private insurance but who otherwise can qualify."

THE BLUNT-TALKING COTTON GROWER said he "wouldn't farm in this country without crop insurance — it's just a sound business practice.

"But now I'm being penalized for exercising what I consider to be good business judgment, and those who didn't take out crop insurance are being rewarded. This reduces the incentive to have crop insurance and encourages farmers to rely instead more on subsidized loans and government disaster payments.

"I pay taxes to support those programs like everybody else, and I think it's not fair to exclude a guy from those low-interest loans just because he had the good sense to buy crop insurance and pay for it out of his own pocket.

"There shouldn't be a government-sponsored program of that kind anyhow. If a guy can't make it on his own, if he overextends his credit and buys land or equipment that he could have done without or is guilty of mismanagement, he should be allowed to go broke."

The farmer said the ruling on crop insurance income is new. He said it wasn't in the program last year.

Supporters of the farm loan programs and the disaster payment system say without this help many farmers, especially younger ones, would be forced out of business in today's high-cost, high-risk farming era as a result of conditions over which they have no control.

MEANWHILE, THE SBA HAS ANNOUNCED that farmers and ranchers in 13 additional West Texas counties may apply for the long-term, low-interest disaster loans.

These counties are King, Cottle, Hardeman, Hall, Childress, Motley, Dickens, Kent, Stonewall, Haskell, Knox, Foard and Wilbarger. The damages were caused by sandstorms, high winds, heavy rain and hail in July.

Mercurio Martinez Jr., SBA regional administrator, urged farmers and ranchers to contact the agency's Texas Agricultural Disaster Office in Lubbock to make application before the March 3 deadline. Agricultural related businesses which suffered economic injury due to the disasters must file by June 2.

Martinez said this was another in a long series of disasters which have plagued Texas and neighboring states the past few years.

"You can see the extent of it when you consider that in disasters last year we handled a total dollar volume of more than $962 million," he said. "Of that, 62 percent was for agricultural disasters."

LOANS OBTAINED UNDER THIS DISASTER declaration may be used to pay outstanding obligations, including "reasonable" operating and living expenses.

At least 50 percent of the loan must be held for production costs in the next crop year. A loan cannot exceed the "actual loss" based on this formula: acres planted times established normal yield times percentage of loss times market price minus recovery equals loss.

The loan cannot duplicate insurance, Agricultural Stabilization and Conservation Service payments, Farmers Home Administration aid or other financial assistance the applicant may have received. This, SBA officials say, is "to put the money where it will do the most good."

Martinez said the interest rates are 5 percent for applicants who cannot obtain financing elsewhere and 7 3/8 percent on loans which in SBA's judgment are obtainable non-federal credit sources.

Disaster loan applications may be obtained from the SBA office at 720 Texas Avenue, Lubbock, Texas 79401. Loan officers are available Monday through Friday to answer questions and explain the disaster program. The telephone number is (806) 762-7480.

LATE-SESSION PROFIT TAKING EDGED cotton futures off the highs Thursday but the market closed firm with the three front months finishing 54 to 25 points higher.

Floor brokers said earlier trade buying interest helped to lift spot December to a gain of 54 points on a close of 65.55 cents, while March closed up 29 points at 65.97 and May ended 25 points higher at 67.15.

Prices eased early in the session but trade buying supported the market at higher levels after it took off on commission house buying in light volume, brokers said. Concern over near-term cotton supplies may have contributed to the strength, they added.

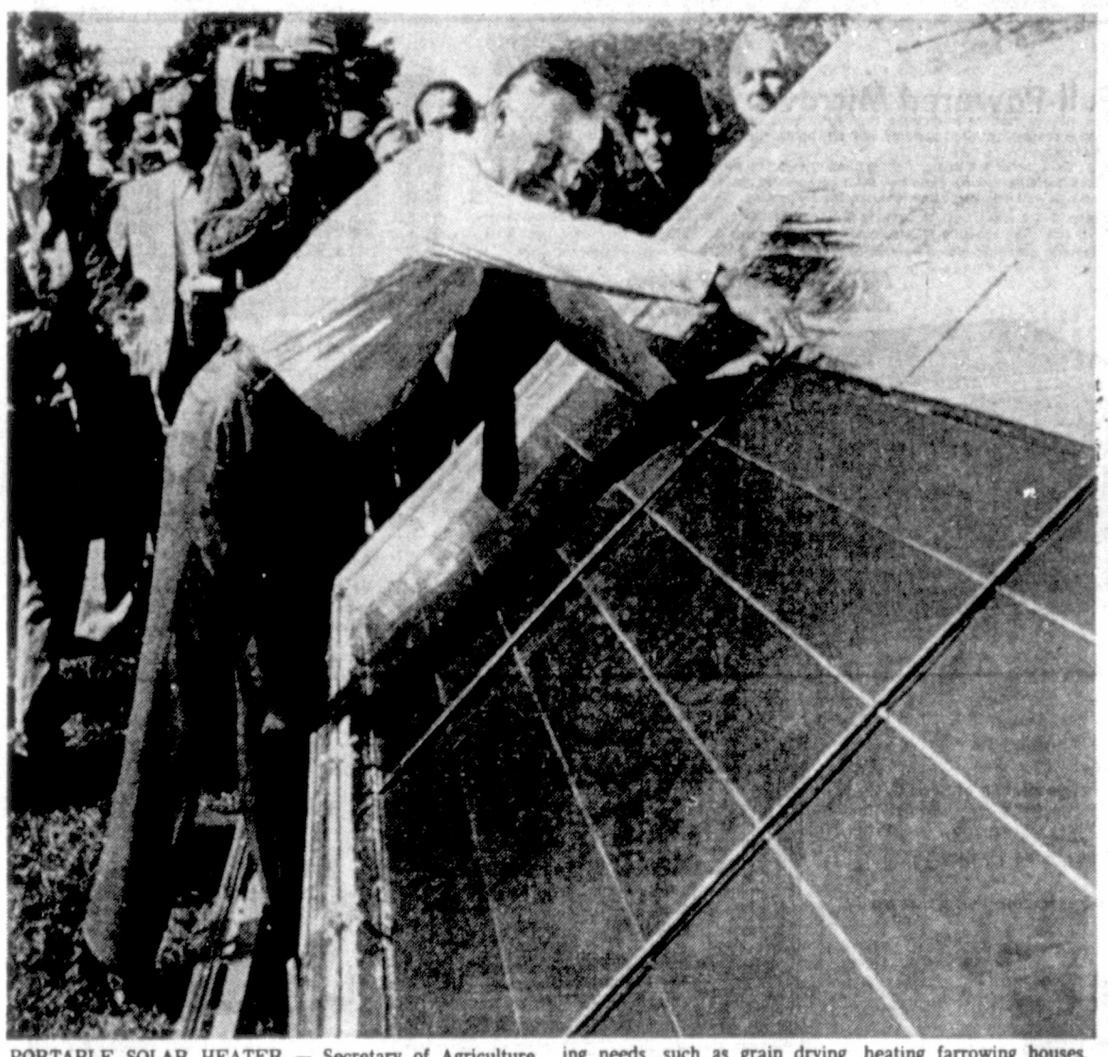

Estimated volume was 5,150 lots.

EXPORT SALES TOTALED A WHOPPING 385,300 running bales in the week ended Oct. 14, the USDA reported after the close. This was the largest volume since the week ended April 24, 1977, when the weekly sales total was 434,000 bales.

China booked 212,500 running bales, and this doesn't include purchases which may have been made last week. Other major buyers were Hong Kong, Japan, Indonesia, South Korea, Taiwan, Romania and Hungary.

Shipments dropped to 96,100 running bales, with 12 percent to Europe and 79 percent to Asia. The export commitment for the 1979-80 marketing yuear reached a bulging 5,367,900 running bales, including shipments of 1,074,700 bales plus undelivered sales.

Food Preferences Of Livestock Categorized

Texas Tech University has established a laboratory that can be used to identify and rank by preference the various plant species consumed by livestock, all without killing a single research animal.

The Food Habits Analysis Laboratory in the department of range and wildlife management relies on plant and fecal samples to provide the detailed information on animal diets.

Private land owners can use the laboratory service at a minimal cost. Results can help in improving rangeland management.

Rumen, or stomach contents from dead or butchered animals can also be analyzed to determine plants consumed by livestock.

The laboratory is headed by Dr. C. David Simpson, associate professor of range and wildlife management. Leslie J. Krysl is his research associate.

Simpson said that several federal and state agencies have already awarded contracts to the laboratory.

Livestock operators wanting to evaluate forage use on their rangelands can use the laboratory service and compare results provided by Texas Tech with range surveys to improve management.

Dried plant material from rangelands and fecal smaples are processed in the laboratory for preparing slides. High resolution microscopes with camera attachments can then compare reference plant slides and animal dropping slides to reveal "how much of what" is consumed.

"We are building a comprehensive reference slide collection of plant material. Once we have all major plants identified and catalogued, the cost of the service will be less than what it is now because we can use the reference slides instead of making new ones," Simpson said.

In addition, one of the finest range plant collections in the nation is housed in the department of range and wildlife mangement. The Texas Tech library is also used to develop a listing of food habits of animal species.

For more information on the laboratory, or any part of its service, write Dr. C. David Simpson, Food Habitsd Analysis Laboratory, Department of Range and Wildlife Management, Texas Tech University, Lubbock, Texas 79409, or call (806) 742-2842.

Counseling Offered To Gamblers

PIKESVILLE, Md. (AP) — Patients likely will be bright, aggressive, and talented — and distraught, defeated and perhaps suicidal, the experts say, when Maryland's new compulsive-gambling counseling center opens for business.

The center, billed as the first of its kind in the nation, was hailed at a dedication ceremony Wednesday as a pioneering effort that will set the standard for other states to follow.

There are an estimated 40,000 compulsive gamblers in Maryland, and until now they had no place to go for full-time, professional help.

But by next week the center, operated by Johns Hopkins University, will be ready to start accepting up to 45 patients whose lives have been shattered by uncontrollable gambling. The pilot program will cost nearly $100,000 for the first year.

The dedication, in a red brick house set among the trees at the Mount Wilson Center, attracted several persons active in the national movement to aid compulsive gamblers, including Dr. Robert L. Custer, a Veterans Administration psychiatrist.

Custer, who set up a VA counseling center for gamblers, said there is a remarkably consistent pattern among compulsive gamblers.

"They are bright, expressive, competitive, athletic, hardworking," he said. "They are good gamblers at the beginning. They win, and it mkes them optimistic."

Then they inevitably begin to lose, he said. As the debts mount, they use up their savings, exhaust their credit, borrow from friends and family and even, in some cases, resort to crime to get the money they must have.

Custer said a compulsive gambler who reaches the stage of seeking professional help is usually in a desperate condition.

"I've never seen people so defeated. They are really beaten," he said. "Their thinking is confused. They have marital problems. They have financial problems, legal problems. They aren't eating well or sleeping well. They are often thinking of suicide."

The center will offer group and individual counseling for patients and help for their families. It also will maintain a 24-hour crisis hotline.

The counselors say they will use standard psychological treatment to get the gamblers to better understand their gambling problem and to gain enough self-confidence to cope with the problem.

Since the treatment is new, the group will be trying to determine what type of counseling works best.

Three Gamblers Anonymous chapters in Maryland will contribute outside support for compulsive gamblers and their families.

Robert M. Politzer, director of the center, said it already has a list of about 20 persons who have called asking for help.

Psychic Sought To Talk With Jesse James

LIBERTY, Mo. (AP) — "WANTED: Gifted Psychic to contact Jesse James. Seasoned pros only. Apply Clay County Parks Department, Liberty, Mo."

Parks Director Stephen Davis asserts he's serious about his plan to use a psychic to ferret out information from the county's most infamous son.

"It just might be a stupid thing to do but, then again, who knows what we might learn," Davis says.

Davis admits it will take a real pro in the psychic business, since the famous outlaw has been dead 97 years.

He's looking for someone with extraordinary mental abilities who might be able to contact James through a visit to the county-owned cabin near Kearney, Mo., where James was born in 1847.

His psychic search has been less than successful, so he released word this week that he's on the lookout for someone in the contact business.

It marks the most unusual research project attempted by his department since it took over as James historians 19 months ago. It was then that the county bought the outlaw's birthplace and 36 acres of land east of Kearney for a historical park.

Since then Milton Perry, curator for the historical site, has employed a variety of research methods — poring over books, talking to elderly residents, even digging up the outlaw's original grave in an effort to separate fact from trivia.

"I'm not sure what we could come up with that would have any credibility, but we thought it would be fun to get a group of people (with psychic powers) out at the farm and see what they could come up with," Perry said.

The psychic idea was inspired by a phone call to Jack Wymore, owner of the Jesse James Bank Museum in Liberty, from a California woman last January. She told Wymore she'd received a message from Frank and Jesse James.

"I don't hang this thing up with a pooh-pooh because there's too damned much we don't understand," Wymore said. "It's hard to understand the special powers that some people have. It's a gift."

The Frieze Organ in Hill Auditorium at the University of Michigan is one of the largest organs in the nation. The university bought it in 1894 after it was played at the Chicago World's Fair in 1893 by some of the most famous organists in the world.

Monterey, Lubbock Battle For Spurs

By JIM FERGUSON
Avalanche-Journal Sports Staff

Army Salinas has got something James Odom wants — and it's not the Lubbock Westerners' won-loss record, wise-guy.

Nope, something a little better.

Currently in Salinas' possession are the coverted "Silver Spurs". And Odom would like very much to return the prize to the Monterey trophy case. But, according to the Lubbock High head coach, the Westeners aren't about to give them up without a rumble.

"Realistically there's not many people that think we can beat them (Monterey)," commented Salinas, "but there's 30 football players and a bunch of assistant coaches at Lubbock High that know we can (win). And that's very, very important."

Tonight's 7:30 contest at Lowrey Field will be the 23rd meeting between two city rivals. Back in 1956, the LHS student council purchased the spurs for $30 and since then the winner of the high school contest not only put a scratch under the W column but also the spurs in the trophy case.

The reason Lubbock currently lays claim to the trophy for the time being is because of the 10-7 win over Monterey last year.

The Plainsmen, currently tied with Coronado for the lead in District 4-AAAA with an 1-0 loop record, sports a 6-1 mark for the year, after scoring a 17-7 win over Plainview eight days ago. Despite playing what Odom called "very solid football the past few weeks" Lubbock owns a 2-5 overall mark and a 0-1 record in conference wars.

"I've told our kids — and I keep telling them — that Lubbock can beat anybody including us if we don't take them serious enough," commented Odom. "You have to realize that you can get beat by any team on any given Friday night. Lubbock doesn't have a bad football team, I don't care what its record is."

Salinas agreed with Odom.

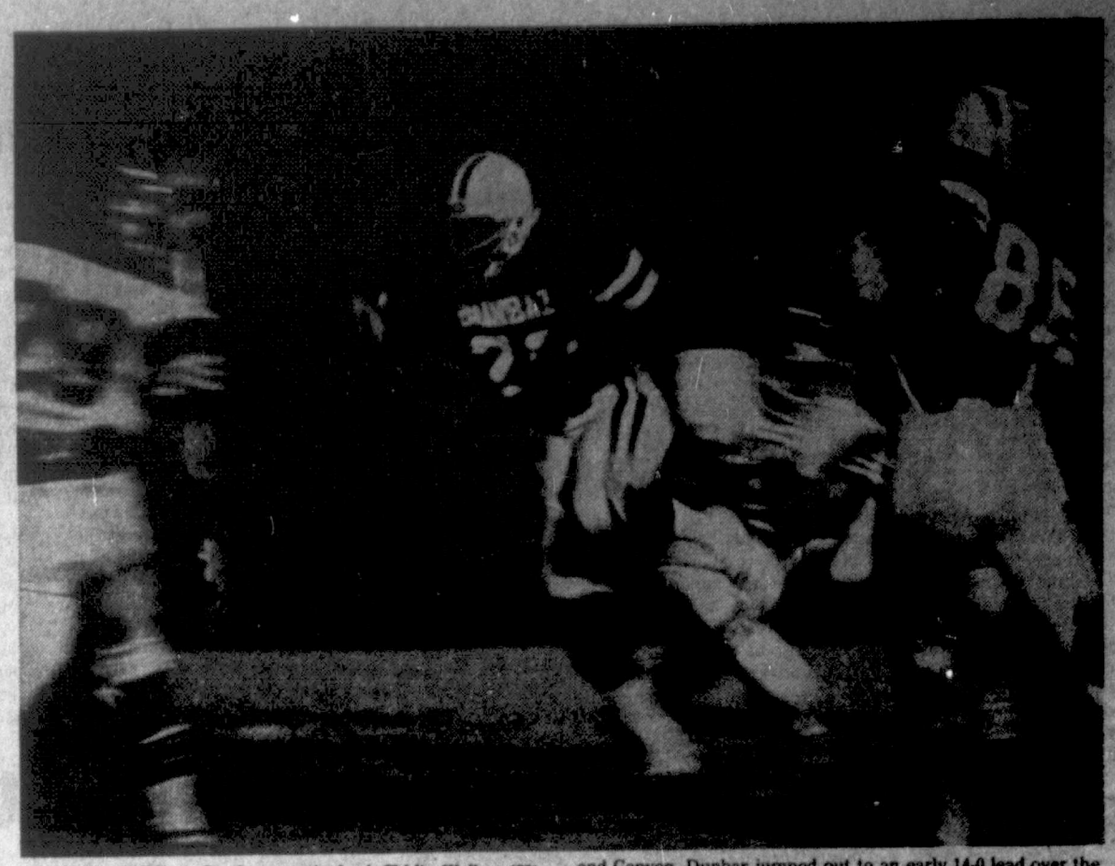

"We keep getting better and better every week," said Salinas. "We keep making the strides, but now we're running out of time."

After tonight's contest, both Lubbock and Monterey have only two games left this season.

But neither Odom nor Salinas is looking too far down the lane. A win tonight by the Westerners would put them back into the district race, a loss would mean the rest of the games are for fun. Monterey faces a little different situation, however. Should the Plainsmen defeat Lubbock, then they would face a key showdown the next week against Coronado.

"We've got a double incentive (going into the game)," said Odom. "They (the Westerners) have got the Silver Spurs and we want them back. Plus it's a district game...one that we need to win."

Salinas feels the same way: "I see them (the Spurs) every day in the trophy case and I'd like to keep them for another year."

Martin Question Still Unsolved

BLOOMINGTON, Minn. (AP) — The question of whether New York Yankees Manager Billy Martin did or did not slug an Illinois man during an argument in a Bloomington hotel lobby remains unanswered today.

Martin says he didn't. And, while there are a number of people who figure he did, none of them is saying so outright.

The man best qualified to answer the question — Joseph Cooper, 52, of Lincolnshire, Ill. — was keeping his mouth, split lip and all, shut.

It matters because Yankees owner George Steinbrenner has warned Martin that he must refrain from fighting and be on his best behavior if he wants to keep his job.

Cooper, police, hospital and hotel officials all acknowledge that Cooper received 15 to 20 stitches in his lip following an incident in the lobby of L'Hotel de France about midnight Tuesday. At issue is whether he fell — as Martin contends — or if he was struck by Martin.

Cooper did not press charges so Bloomington police called to the hotel did not conduct an investigation. Their report said, however, that "complainant was struck following an argument."

Martin's statement that Cooper fell hasn't been refuted directly by anyone, although a hotel security guard who filed a report on the incident — but did not witness it — said he didn't believe Cooper could have sustained his injury in a fall.

The only known eyewitness, bellhop Steve Holland, has refused to comment.

Steinbrenner told reporters he hasn't had a chance to determine the facts.

"There certainly are two conflicting stories," he said, "or, actually, only one story — Billy's — and nobody has refuted that," Steinbrenner said. "Nobody else has said anything concrete to the contrary, have they? I've had his word he'd stay out of fights and I believe him until he proves me different."

Asked what effect the incident would have on Martin's job security if the allegations are true, Steinbrenner said, "I can't speak on that right now."

BILLY MARTIN

In his statement, Martin said he and a friend entered the hotel bar Tuesday night after he checked in at the hotel. Two men, one of whom was Cooper, came over and struck up a conversation.

"I listened to this one guy (Cooper) for a while talking baseball," Martin said. "Then I decided I didn't want to talk baseball anymore and left."

Estacado at Borger

The Estacado Matadors are caught somewhere between a rock and a hard place.

Unqestionably they are the class team of District 1-AAA but the Mats have also been plagued by nagging injuries all year long. And everyone in the district is building their season around the Estacado game.

Tonight it will be the Borger Bulldogs who try to knock off the state's No.6 ranked Class AAA Matadors. The trip will mark the first time Louis Kelley has taken a team to Borger — and the Estacado boss is somewhat less than thrilled about the prospect.

"Everybody's going to play us tough," he said Wednesday at the weekly coaches press conference at the 50-Yard Line.

"This is the first time I've taken a team to Borger," he added. "They are the type of team that is outstanding one week and then off the next. All I know is that they played us an awfully tough ballgame last year."

It was a tough ballgame indeed. The Mats took a 20-14 victory from the Bulldogs in a contest that saw Borger dominate every statistic but the final score.

Rangers Hold Onto Top Spot After Thrashing Picadors 33-6

By NORVAL POLLARD
Executive Sports Editor

Ranger Junior College maintained its No. 1 ranking in the junior college football ranks Thursday night with a 33-6 decision over the Texas Tech Picadors at Jones Stadium.

The undefeated Rangers rallied behind the explosive offensive exploits of running backs Jerome Lanier and Cleo Lewis to post their eighth victory of the 1979 season.

Thursday night's contest closed out the year for Tech's junior varsity squad. The Picadors finished their brief season at 1-2, the lone win coming against New Mexico's junior varsity.

Lanier, a 6-foot, 230-pound sophomore, rushed for 99 yards — 70 of them in the first half — and a pair of touchdowns and Lewis added 82 yards rushing and a 52-yard scoring pass to Leslie Butler as the Rangers raced to a 21-6 halftime lead.

A 19-yard field goal by David Myer midway through the third quarter gave Ranger a 24-6 lead.

The Purple-and-White closed out their scoring in the fourth quarter when defensive back Tracy Bullard tackled Tech's Blake Feltd in the end zone for a safety and minutes later scored a touchdown on substitute running back Willie Drew's two-yard plunge.

Tech freshman running back Fred Brietbarth led all rushers with 111 yards on 17 carries. Ranger Junior College picked up 355 yards total offense compared with Tech's 173.

A 20-yard pass from quarterback David Worsham to tight end Larry Edmondson and a 36-yard off-tackle run by Lewis were the two big plays in Ranger's first scoring drive.

Lanier crashed over from one-yard out with 1:38 remaining in the first period to give the Rangers a 6-0 lead. David Meyer added the extra point to make it 7-0.

Butler took the pass in stride at the Tech 15 and sprinted into the end zone for six. Meyer booted the PAT to give the Rangers a 14-0 lead with 11:29 left in the first half.

Jesse Garcia put the Picadors on the scoreboard with a 35-yard field goal at the 7:00 mark of the second quarter. Tech's first score was set up by Sam Dancy's recovery of a fumbled punt at the Rangers' 28-yard line.

Curtain Closes On Chaps

By DON HENRY
Avalanche-Journal Sports Staff

It all began on a sunny afternoon the first day of September. And it will end Saturday in Stephenville.

Lubbock Christian College launched a football program on Sept. 1, against McMurry, and that initial season comes to a close against Tarleton State.

And, LCC coaches and the Chaparrals know about Tarleton. The Texans drifted into Lubbock earlier this year and handed LCC a 47-0 defeat.

Now, the Chaparrals will return the match, at a time they are sporting a 1-7 record. Only a 47-0 win over Regio-MOntana of Monterrey, Mexico, has severed the string of losses.

The Chaparrals will enter the game with several large patches on their lineup.

It starts at quarterback, where Curtis Dean will step in to replace Kent Allison, who sustained a deep shoulder bruise in last week's 41-14 loss to Panhandle State of Oklahoma.

Offensive lineman Glen Rochester went out of the same game with a broken collarbone, and another lineman, Wade Welch sustained a shoulder separation.

Dean played almost three quarters in the Panhandle game, and he threw the school's first touchdown pass in the season opener against McMurry.

He will be throwing this week, with one of his receivers being Joe Green. It was Green who scored that first touchdown, and it is Green who will be the lone senior in the lineup Saturday. He has caught 17 passes this season, easily best on the LCC team.

Coach Jerry Don Sanders will again look to Pat Worthey for rushing yardage. The former Estacado runner broke for 133 yards and two touchdowns against Panhandle, and "he's just now getting in shape," said Sanders.

The Texans are coming off a squeaker, as they nipped Sul Ross 18-14 last Saturday, getting a second chance at the winning field goal with only seconds remaining. Sul Ross had a lineman offsides on an un-

Houston, Arkansas Leaders Voice Opinions

No sooner do the Arkansas Razorbacks take the top spot in one shootout, than they head to another. This time the defending Southwest Conference champion Houston Cougars come to call. For the second straight week, the Southwest Conference lead is at stake in a battle of undefeated and untied nationally-ranked teams when Houston visits Fayetteville for a nationally-televised game with Arkansas. Houston's Delrick Brown and Arkansas' Kevin Scanlon have game experience and both know that the Saturday stakes could be the conference championship. Scanlon, a senior from Beaver Falls, Pa., is the SWC leader in pass completion percentage (63.8), yardage per pass attempt (9.6), and passing efficiency with 149.8 rating points. Brown was Houston's starting quarterback in 1977 after Danny Davis was injured. The Lufkin senior threw for 13 touchdowns and nearly 1,000 yards as a sophomore. Brown is completing 50.8 per cent of his passes this season and ranks third in SWC passing efficiency with 120.2 rating points. Brown was the quarterback the last time the Cougars visited Arkansas. That was in Little Rock in 1977 when the Razorbacks whipped Houston, 34-0. Last season in Houston, the Cougars held Arkansas to its lowest point production in Hogs' last 31 games and won, 20-9. Houston and Arkansas take 6-0 season and 3-0 conference records into Saturday's game in Fayetteville. Delrick Brown and Kevin Scanlon are looking forward to it.

Q — Any problems preparing for this game?

Scanlon— We know Houston is a fine football team and because of that, we've sort of come down before they do but the players and the coaches realize how important this game is. On Sunday the coaches talked to us and said, hey, Texas was a big game but this one's even a bigger one because of the win over Texas. Because of that, this one is more important. Mainly, it's the most important game because it's the next one. Also, it's two weeks in a row on TV so we really have been able to come down from the excitement of the Texas game.

Brown— No, I think everybody realizes that this will be the first big test for us. Everyone's getting up for this one a lot better than in the past. We haven't really been up for a game like we should. But I think we are as up today as we usually are late in the week for some other games. We've been doing allright once we get to the playing field, but we know we are going to have to be at our very best Saturday if we are going to stay with Arkansas.

Q — What is the main reason your team is 6-0?

Scanlon— The main reason is the closeness and attitude of this football team, with the players and the coaches. Going into last season, we were ranked. Sports Illustrated picked us No. 1 and we were picked in the top three by just about everyone . And we kind of had just a little bit of a cocky attitude. We were coming off the Orange Bowl win and we had some players who were more concerned with individual honors rather than winning. We'd win a game and it wasn't big enough. Our fans kind of got that way. We sat down and would say, well we might have trouble with Texas and Houston but other than that we'll swamp through everybody. But we had trouble beating Tulsa and we had trouble beating Oklahoma State. Those were the games we should have won handily. This year we were picked sixth in the conference. People knocked us, said we don't have anybody, we have a lousy senior class. But we really got close and decided just to take it week by week. Let's win this one then go on to the next one and look at it that way rather than playing the full season for the rankings and things like that. I remember coming back from playing Oklahoma State and we felt like we hadn't won big enough so we'd probably drop a couple of places. But a win is a win and that's the way we are looking at it this year. We don't have the real superstar this year. We're just a bunch of guys out there playing ball and doing what we can to win.

Brown— We feel like we have a pretty strong team. Up the middle we play pretty good every Saturday. We hold on to the ball pretty well and if we keep doing that and not help out the other team, we are going to come out ahead most of the time. We have a strong offensive line and we feel we can control the line of scrimmage against most of the good defenses. We have the kind of line where we'll play it pretty even for a while but eventually we'll wear them down and we'll win.

Q — How about your own performance this year?

Scanlon— The one thing I wanted this year is help contribute to our winning and I feel like I'm doing that. All the games that we have won, I've made some type of contribution. I don't have the ball to help us win. Last year, Ron Calcagni needed to have the ball. He ran it a lot and threw some flashy passes and that type of thing. I can do some things where I don't need the ball. I can throw some passes here and there and I can run the ball a few times when we need it for short yards, or if they take away the pitch I can cut up. But if I can just handle the check-offs and handle the leadership and read the option, then I can help us win. That's what I feel like I'm doing this year.

Brown— I've been trying to take the role as the leader more this year. I'm not as aggressive as I was last year. I'm not playing with the intensity that I did in 1977. I feel like I can and should be more aggressive because I feel comfortable in the job of quarterback. As far as the mechanics, like throwing and running, I feel I'm doing allright. But right now I'm working on the mental attitude more. I have a lot of good talent around me and sometimes they make me look good. Our offensive line is pretty easy to play behind. They are experienced and know what they're doing.

Substitute Plays Important Role In Bucks' Plans

SAN DIEGO (AP) — Off to a division-leading 7-1 start, the Milwaukee Bucks say their catalyst is on the bench when the game starts.

"He's the best sixth man in the league," said Coach Don Nelson, referring to 6-foot-5 guard Junior Bridgeman.

Trailing 61-53 at the half, the Bucks, behind Bridgeman's fourth quarter explosion, overtook the San Diego Clippers 118-115 for their seventh consecutive National Basketball Association victory Thursday night.

In Thursday night's only other NBA game, Pete Maravich scored 21 of his 31 points in the third quarter, including a pair of three-point goals, leading the Utah Jazz to a 113-105 victory over the Chicago Bulls.

Bridgeman scored 18 of his 22 points in Milwaukee's 39-point final quarter as the Bucks choked off high-scoring Lloyd Free down the stretch.

"We were having trouble putting points in early," said Bridgeman. "I didn't have a feel for the game until the fourth quarter. We got the momentum then and that was the difference."

"We played Free super," added Nelson. Free, who leads the NBA in scoring, led all scorers with 30 points, but only had four in the final period.

"We had him scouted pretty good," said Nelson. "If they were going to beat us, it would not be with Free."

Milwaukee went ahead 97-95 with 7:36 remaining in the fourth quarter and, after an exchange of two-pointers, took the lead for good at 4:48 on a basket by Brian Winters.

"Our problem was team defense. If we score 115 points, we should win," said Clippers Coach Gene Shue. "There were too many individual breakdowns."

Winters led the Bucks with 23 points as Milwaukee registered its fourth victory on the road.

"We're good, and we'll win our division," predicted Nelson. Last year, Milwaukee finished in a tie for third place in the Midwest Division with a 38-44 record, 10 games behind the Kansas City Kings.

JAZZ 113, BULLS 105

Adrian Dantley led Utah with 35 points, but it was Maravich's third-period outburst which broke the game open.

The Jazz led 52-51 at halftime, but the 6-foot-5 guard scored 14 points in the first five minutes of the third period to put Utah in command. The Jazz led 91-79 going into the fourth quarter, and although the Bulls rallied to within six at 111-105 with 1:15 to go, they could not score after that.

Private Schools Face Key Showdowns

By ERIC GALE
Avalanche-Journal Sports STaff

"This is a culmination," said Jim Durham, football coach at Christ the King High School, of his team's impending tussle with private school rival Lubbock Christian at 7:30 p.m. Friday at Fitzgerald Field.

"This game means everything to CTK and everything to LCHS," Durham continued. "There's a lot of meaning. We'll be playing for the city championship of the private schools."

In addition, the two teams will be competing for the traditional CAT (Christian Athletes Trophy), while on a broader level, the Eagles require a victory to improve their 4-2 record and remain in contention for a Texas Association of Private Schools post-season playoff berth. Last year, LCHS' 9-3 season ended at the state quarterfinals.

"Jim and I have always been good frinds," said LCHS coach George Harper, of the Trojans' Durham. "And their kids and our players are friends or, at least, acquaintances. There will be no trouble getting anybody up for this one."

Christ the King's offense is built around running backs Steve David and Brian Wheatley. Wheatley, however, has been sidelined by a separated shoulder for four weeks, and his status for the LCHS game is uncertain.

David, though, is enough trouble to defense, according to Harper, who raved about CTK's 170-pound junior.

"David could start for any AAAA team in America," Harper said. "You hit him once — three times — you're not going to bring him down.

"He and Wheatley are incredibly fast. They are breakaway backs who run behind a good line. In fact, they are the best running back tandem in this area. Ask anybody who's played them."

The Trojans are 2-4 and have lost their last two games. Beyond that, they were overpowered 26-0 by LCHS last year.

This year will be different, Durham predicts.

"Our players are up for it," he said. "They want to do it. I really don't anticipate the kind of game we had last year.

"In the past, we've always played LCHS at the start of the year, and it can be traumatic to meet a team that good so early in the year. Now, we're prepared. That should make a difference."

Harper will answer the CTK ground game with the passing of junior quarterback Brian Manis and all-state receiver Shawn Williams.

The Eagles already have accumulated 993 yards through the air. Harper intends to add to that against the Trojans.

"We'll have to throw the ball," he said. "We've lived on the pass all year. We have three excellent receivers in Shawn Williams, Randy Stumbo and Tim Williams. We want to spread out the CTK defense."

While the excitement builds for both LCHS and CTK, the Western Hills Baptist Academy six-man football team had its season draw to a close on an upbeat note Saturday.

Western Hills, which had lost its first six games by an average margin of 40 points per game, turned the tables on Bethel Christian (N.M.) 66-21.

"We finally got everything to work like it should," said Jim Briggs, Western Hills coach. "The boys decided not to end the year without winning a ball game. We showed what we can do."

Western Hills had revamped its schedule this season to include public school powers from District 3-B. In the past, Western Hills had played a relatively weaker parochial schedule.

Briggs & Co. paid their dues.

"We went from some weak competition to some of the best in the state," he said. "We met Cotton Center, Loop, Whitharral, Three Way ... there's not a weak one in the bunch. That district went 29-2 against outside competition. That's what kind of district it is."

The last-game victory and learning experience will help in future seasons, Briggs feels.

"Our players are already looking forward to next season," he said. "If you're going to improve, you have to play stiff competition. And we did!"

MHS, CHS SWIMMERS VIE

The 1979 swim season for Lubbock High Schools will get underway on Saturday when Monterey and Coronado meet at the YWCA Pool located at 36th and Flint. There is no admission charge for the festivities which begin at 2 p.m. Monterey holds a 5-0 series lead in the competition.

TWINKLE TWINKLE LITTLE CAR...

How would you like to have a car that stayed shiny and repelled dirt? A car that looked like it just sailed out of the showroom, month after month. A car that required no work from you, other than the occasional wash. Sound good? Call Tidy Car. if your car is brand new, we'll keep it looking that way. If it's showing its years, we'll clean and shine the years away.

NEVER WAX YOUR CAR AGAIN.
Tidy Car's Preserv-A-Shine can do just that — give your car a showroom shine and preserve it for the life of the car. Preserv-A-Shine is not a wax. It's an exclusive formula that's actually buffed into the surface of the car to give a protective glass-like shine that seals out the harmful effects of oxidation, salt, snow and sun. The Preserv-A-Shine process includes initial treatment and an annual cleaning and resealant job. And it means you'll never have to wax your car again.

THE INSIDE STORY.
Tidy Car will also shampoo everything inside your car from the floor mats up. And we can give the seats and carpets a special treatment to water and stain-proof them.

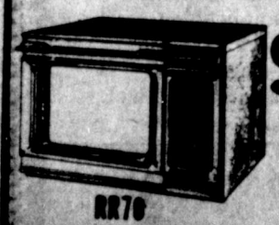

NOBODY TOPS OUR TOPS.
If your vinyl roof is dingy, Tidy Car will clean it and restore the original lustre. We'll also apply a special dressing to seal and protect the vinyl for months, making it virtually impossible for dust and dirt to stick. How much do these professional services cost? Less than you'd expect, because Tidy Car operators have little overhead. Call Tidy Car for a quote, today.

Raiders Blast Chargers

OAKLAND (AP) — The last time the San Diego Chargers beat the Oakland Raiders twice in a season was in 1965. It's liable to be a while longer if Thursday night's game is any indication.

The Chargers came into the Oakland Coliseum leading the National Football League's American Conference West. After a nationally televised 45-22 rout, they are still leading, but not by very much.

"You can't beat the Raiders in Oakland," said defensive back Lester Hayes, who picked off a crucial first-half interception and generally made life miserable for San Diego quarterback Dan Fouts.

The Chargers would no doubt agree. Although Fouts threw for a record fourthstraight 300 yards passing, his team trailed almost from the outset and on only two occasions seemed on the verge of getting back in the game.

The first time, with Oakland ahead 14-0, Fouts tossed the ball up for grabs in the end zone and Hayes picked it off. Oakland went on to raise its lead to 21-0 before San Diego could score.

"(John) Matuszak was sitting in Dan's face and he didn't see me," Hayes said of the first-quarter interception. "Dan just threw it and I was there."

Fouts did connect with John Jefferson for a 57-yard touchdown in the second quarter, but the Chargers still trailed 24-6 at halftime. They cut that to 24-15 early in the third quarter on a field goal and TD after an onside kick, but then came Ira Matthews.

The rookie from Wisconsin appeared to have made a mistake when he took a kickoff four yards deep in his own end zone. But he came roaring up the right sideline, cut back against the grain and scored the longest kickoff return in team history.

"I haven't felt this good since college," Matthews admitted. "The first thing I did when I got to the end zone was look back to see if there were any flags. It was set up as a right return and it happened to pop over."

The runback took the steam out of the Chargers and even though Fouts threw for more than 300 yards again, he was outplayed by Oakland's Ken Stabler.

"Kenny called his game," Oakland's Gene Upshaw said. "He didn't get into a passing duel with Fouts."

Stabler was 13 of 17 for 212 yards, one touchdown and no interceptions. Fouts was 21 of 37 for 303 with two intereceptions and the same number of TDs.

Ironically, in two of the four games in which Fouts has thrown for more than 300 yards, his team has lost.

"Indiviual records like that don't mean very much," the quarterback said after the loss. "It probably should say, 'The San Diego Chargers threw for 300 yards four games in a row.' It's a team game and I'm just disappointed we lost the game."

ASU President Seeks Probe

PHOENIX, Ariz. (AP) — The NCAA was asked Thursday by the president of Arizona State to investigate the school's football program, "in an attempt to bring to light all potential violations...as expeditiously as possible."

The request by Dr. John Schwada was announced after it was made public tha he had received sworn staements alleging a conspiracy against ousted football coach Frank Kush.

The Arizona Republic, in a copyrighted story appearing in today's ediions, said the NCAA began its probe before it was requested by Schwada. It said the investigation concerns allegations of possible recruitment and financial misconduct by Arizona State officials and boosters.

The statements given to Schwada came from four current ASU players and one former player. The Associaed Press obtained copies of notarized, sworn statements from quarterback Steve Bratkowski, tight end Marshall Edwards, running back Arthur "Turtle" Lane and former defensive back Darrell Gill.

John Mistler, a split end, also provided Schwada with a sworn satement although a copy was not immediately available.

The statements called for Kush's reinstaement and demanded "reasonably quick" action.

In his statement, Lane said he was offered a bribe for damaging testimony against Kush and threatened with "bodily harm" if he continued o support the ex-coach.

Mistler told the Phoenix Gazette that Bob Owens, former ASU defensive coordinator and now head coach, was an informant for local drag strip operator Rick Lynch. Lynch has been accused by Kush of "orchestrating" a conspiracy that led to his dismissal.

"I categorically deny that," Owens said. "I haven't seen any of he statements. This is the first indication I've heard of these staements.

"So many people are talking to the kids, I have no idea where something like that would come from. It's obvious to me that somebody is purposely trying to destroy the total football program."

Neither Lynch nor Kush could be reached for comment.

Each player was interviewed by Kush's attorney, Harding Cure, in front of the former coach's private investigator, Howard Sauter. The documents were signed by a notary public but not by the players.

Stargell Receives Honor

NEW YORK (AP) — They filled a ballroom at the plush Waldorf Astoria with 25 years of World Series thrills and memories.

From 1955, there was Johnny Podres, who pitched the seventh-game victory over the New York Yankees and delivered "next year" at last to the Brooklyn Dodgers.

From 1968, there was Mickey Lolich, who emerged from a season in the shadows to pitch three victories for Detroit over St. Louis.

From 1970, there was Brooks Robinson, whose magic glove at third base demoralized Cincinnati and helped Baltimore to a World Championship.

And from 1979, there was Willie Stargell, the latest member of this exclusive club. To join, you have to be the Most Valuable Player in the World Series.

Stargell earned his way in by hitting .400 with three home runs, seven runs batted in and 25 total bases as Fittsburgh came off the deck to defeat Baltimore in seven games.

"It was a satisfying, exhilarating experience," said Stargell.

Stargell's Series started in weather more suited for football than baseball, but the guiding spirit of Pittsburgh's "Family" hardly noticed the climatic conditions.

"Hey, I'd tread water in the Pacific for nine innings to play in the World Series," he said.

Stargell had played in the Series before. He was Pittsburgh's left fielder in 1971 when the Pirates beat Baltimore in another seven-game Series that served as a showcase for the many talents of Roberto Clemente. That year, Stargell batted .208 — a far cry from his 1979 production.

Clemente dazzled in the 1971 Series — hitting, fielding, running and throwing with a reckless abandon that stamped him as the MVP. He died tragically 14 months later when his mercy airlift plane, bound for flood victims in Nicaragua, crashed off the coast of Puerto Rico.

The memory of Clemente was with the Pirates as they faced the Orioles in the 1979 Series.

WILLIE STARGELL

"Roberto is a part of me, my outlook and my approach to the game," said Stargell.

Many of the current Pirates feel the same about Stargell, the man they call "Pops." He relishes his role as leader of their family.

Clemente's widow, Vera, represented her late husband Thursday at the 25th anniversary Series MVP banquet sponsored by Sport Magazine and major league baseball. She posed happily with Stargell.

"That was a different team," said Stargell when asked to compare the 1971 champions with this year's Pirate club. "This is a new group of individuals which had the same determination and desire and put it together. I'm proud to be able to have been a part of two different World Series champions."

Stargell thought the Pirates had proven something important with their victory.

"We were very unique, guys from all over the world and the States — blacks, whites, non-blacks and non-whites, showing we could come together as men for a common goal," he said.

Long Shots Lead Disney

LAKE BUENA VISTA, Fla. (AP) — Forrest Fezler and Larry Ziegler, a couple of long shots leading the $250,000 National Team Golf Classic by a single stroke, believe they've got the key to success.

"Drive straight and hit a lot of putts — that's our strategy," said Ziegler after he and his partner combined their talents for 11 birdies and an 11-under-par 61 over Disney's 7,197-yard Magnolia course Thursday.

That was good for the first-round lead in the best-ball event, but Fezler and Ziegler had little breathing room, with three two-men teams a stroke behind and another four duos another stroke back in the quest for the $45,000 first prize in the last PGA event of the year. Eleven teams were at 8-under 64.

"It's easy for me when Larry hits the ball so well," said Fezler, who won only $11,427 for the year and is just getting over a bout with mononucleosis. Ziegler has done a bit better on the PGA tour, standing 98th with official winnings of $38,546.

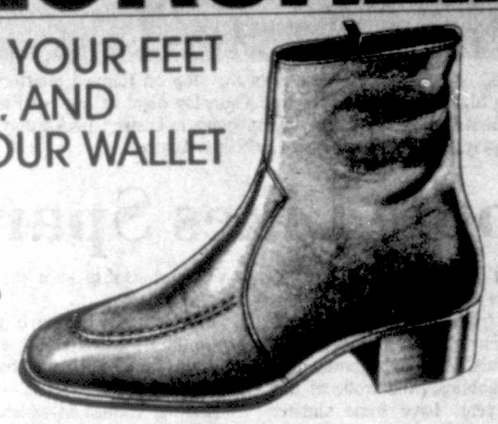

Fezler made six birdies and Ziegler five enroute to their sparkling score in a tournament that features 104 teams and usually has been won by a pair of tour rabbits or unknowns.

Dunbar Bows To Canyon 33-14

By CHUCK McDONALD
Avalanche-Journal Sports Staff

Dunbar coach Van Jefferson couldn't be at Lowrey Field Thursday night to see his Panthers go against the powerful Canyon Eagles — but if he would've been there, Jefferson would have been mighty proud of his troops.

The Panthers threw a scare into the Eagles taking an early 14-0 lead before Canyon battled back for a 33-14 win over out-manned Dunbar.

With the victory, Canyon moves to 2-0 in District 1-AAA play and 4-3 overall. The Panthers fell to 0-2 and 1-6.

Jefferson was forced to miss the contest because he was at his wife's side at Methodist Hospital. Mrs. Jefferson is in the intensive care unit at the hospital where she has been suffering a serious illness.

Canyon overcame two early fumbles that led to both Panther scores and exploded with three second quarter touchdowns to take the game away from Dunbar.

And although the Panthers came up on the short end of the score, Dunbar assistant coach Darrel Phillips voiced only optimism after the contest.

"I was exceptionally pleased with the way the kids played," said Phillips. "The kids came out fighting and they played hard.

"We played better than we did last week, or all year, but we just didn't play well enough to win."

Trailing 20-14, the Panthers nearly got back into the contest when they took the second half kickoff and drove from their own 38 down to the Eagle 15.

Then faced with a fourth-and-seven, the Panthers lined up for a field goal attempt. But instead, holder Kenneth Idom picked up the ball and attempted to throw — but was quickly swarmed by a pack of Canyon defenders. The Panthers never really threatened again.

"It was one of those things," explained Phillips. "If it would've worked, we'd have looked great, but it didn't.

"We felt like we needed six points to get back in the ballgame," he added. "It was a golden opportunity for us."

But as it was, the Eagles scored twice more in the final period to put the game away. Those scores came on a 26-yard run by fullback Barry Watson and a 24-yard jaunt by quarterback David Harbin.

And actually, the Eagles dominated the contest. Canyon piled up 328 yards of offense to only 140 for Dunbar. But the Panthers had their moment early in the game to throw a scare into the visitors.

After falling behind though, the Eagles unleashed an awesome passing attack and stormed back with three second period touchdowns to go ahead 20-14 at the intermission.

The Panthers took advantage of two CHS miscues to take their short-lived lead. The first Dunbar score came after Blayne White dropped a Panther punt back on the CHS 22. Herman Harris burst off-tackle from the 11-yard line for the touchdown and when the PAT kick failed the Panthers had a 6-0 lead with only five minutes gone in the game.

Then, early in the second quarter, Greg Bybee coughed up the ball at the CHS seven. It took the Panthers only one play to score as quarterback Barry Pillow snuck in from the seven. Harris ran for a two-point conversion and the Panthers led 14-0.

But that's when the Canyon aerial show began.

The Eagles moved 71 yards in only eight plays for their first TD in only two minutes. The big plays were a 32-yard screen pass from Harbin to fullback Watson and a bomb to Gary Fletcher. On first-and-10 at the DHS 34, Harbin found Fletcher all alone in the end zone and connected for the TD to make it 14-7 after the PAT.

Three Quit Chap Team

Three defensive starters quit the Lubbock Christian College football team Thursday rather than accept a disciplinary action.

The three, defensive end Tim Howell and brothers David and Robert Brock, a linebacker and defensive back, respectively, were ejected from Saturday's game with Panhandle State after a fight broke out on the field.

When coach Chaparral coach Jerry Don Sanders told them they would have to take part in special "grass drills" as punishment for their ejection, the three quit the team.

Howell is a freshman from Lubbock Christian High. David Brock is a sophomore and Robert Brock a junior. Both are from Alvin.

IAAF Imposes Bans

LONDON (AP) — Seven East European woman track and field athletes have been banned until further notice from international athletic competition for taking drugs.

The action was announced Thursday by the International Amateur Athletics Federation (IAAF).

The athletes included Totka Petrova of Bulgaria, the Europa Cup and and World Cup champion at 1,500 meters; Natalia Marasescu, the women's world record-holder in the mile, Daniela Teneva of Bulgaria and Rumania's Santa Vlad. They were alleged to have taken the drugs during the Balkan Games in Athens, Greece, last August.

IAFF sources also said that three other East European athletes have been banned by sports authorities for taking drugs during track meets in Poland. Those athletes were not named officially, but the New York Times said in today's editions that they were middle distance runner Ileana Silai of Romania, and discus throwers Yelena Kovaleva and Nadezhda Kudryavtseva of the Soviet Union.

The federation said the athletes from the Balkan Games gave "positive results to doping controls." The IAFF said the suspensions could be reduced to 18 months if the athletes can prove mitigating circumstances.

The federation noted in a statement: "These four athletes automatically become ineligible for international competition from the date of the Balkan Games."

That means the athletes will miss next summer's Olympic Games in Moscow.

Hoople Likes Spartans Over Buckeyes

By MAJ. AMOS B. HOOPLE
Sage of the Sidelines

Egad, my friends, here we are nigh onto Halloween. A look at the Hoople appraisal of this Saturday's games indicates the hobgoblins, who frolic at this time of the year, have some sinister pranks in store for some high-rated teams.

Yas, dear friends, you can expect to see the mischievous goblins splashing the upset bucket willy-nilly over the beautiful autumnal landscape. Umkumph!

The most amazing result forecast by our computers will — kaff-kaff — come at Columbus, Ohio, where the homefield Ohio State Buckeyes will fall before the determined onslaught of the invading Michigan State Spartans.

Darryl Rogers' Spartans view this game as a chance to live up to their preseason promise and to move up in the Big 10 standings as well as in the national rankings. In a very interesting afternoon of football, your sage of the sidelines predicts a Michigan State victory 24-21. Har-rumph!

To further confound the experts and to complicate matters in the powerful Southwestern loop, look for the Arkansas Razorbacks to stun the high-riding Houston Cougars.

Playing under the eye of the TV camera in the friendly confines of Razorback Stadium, Lou Holtz's well-balanced club will edge the Cougars 23-18 — hak-kaff!

Another contest in which the winner figures to move up the national ladder pits the undefeated Florida State Seminoles (6-0) against the Louisiana State Tigers. The Seminoles will find that playing the Tigers in Baton Rouge, La., is a horrifying experience — as they suffer their first loss of the year. We see it LSU 22, Florida State 7.

In some other important games, here's how the Hoople System calls 'em:

Alabama 36, Virginia Tech 12, as the Crimson Tide runs its record to 10-0 against the Cobblers; high-scoring Brigham Young, with Marc Wilson at the controls, will defeat the New Mexico Lobos 35-13 in an important Western Athletic Conference clash; and Southern California will "trump" — heh-heh — California's ace passer Rich Campbell as they dump the Golden Bears 42-14 in their 67th confrontation.

Oklahoma and Nebraska will keep rolling along in the Big 8 with victories — over, respectively, Iowa State and Colorado. Make it Oklahoma 49, Iowa State 20; Nebraska 42, Colorado 18.

UCLA will give visiting Washington a rough afternoon. But it doesn't have enough guns to hold off the bruising Huskies. The final score: Washington 42, UCLA 28. The Pitt Panthers and Navy are both having good years. And the HoopleHunch is the tenacious Middies will hang onto win 24-21 in an extremely well-played contest.

Some other matchups look like this: Texas 35, SMU 10; Notre Dame 31, South Carolina 21; Michigan 28, Indiana 14; Mississippi State 34, Southern Mississippi 24; North Carolina 28, East Carolina 7; Missouri 37, Kansas State 12; and Clemson 21, North Carolina State 20.

Now go on with my forecast:

Arizona St. 33, Utah St. 20; Army 17, Boston College 14; Auburn 38, Wake Forest 22; Ball State 19, Bowling Green 13; Baylor 24, TCU 14; Brown 27, Holy Cross 7; Bucknell 31, Lehigh 21; Central Michigan 35, Kent St 7; Cincinnati 14, Richmond 7; Colgate 7, Columbia 6; Colorado St. 28, Air Force 19; Cornell 20, Dartmouth 14; Delaware 23, William & Mary 12.

Also Florida 26, Tulsa 7; Florida A&M 39, Tuskegee 16; Georgia 22, Kentucky 20; Grambling 17, Texas Southern 13; Hawaii 34, UTEP 22; Indiana St. 38, Illinois St. 28; Maryland 30, Duke 17; Miami (O) 28, Toledo 7; Miami (F.) 26, Syracuse 21; Minnesota 30, Illinois 21.

Mississippi 32, Vanderbilt 13; Ohio U. 17, Western Michigan 14; Oklahoma St. 19 Kansas 14; Oregon 31, Washington St. 6; Penn St. 37, West Virginia 20; Princeton 14, Harvard 8; Purdue 32, Northwestern 21; San Diego St. 24, Utah 14; San Jose St. 17, Long Beach St. 14; Stanford 32, Oregon St. 6; Texas A&M 21, Rice 7; Tulane 21, Georgia Tech 14; VMI 25, Furman 8; Yale 21, Penn 14.

Tarleton Hosts LCC

successful field goal try. But, with the penalty, Tarleton got another chance, kicked it for a 15-14 lead, then got a safety on the kickoff, for the final count.

"We were pleased to come out with that one," said TSU coach Buddy Fornes. "We're a little crippled now, but they're the aggravating kind of injuries, just enough tokeep you from being 100 percent.

"We're pretty good except at receiver, where we have two tight ends out and our wide receiver has been hurt."

Tarleton will lean on the rushing of freshman Ricky Bush, who "has carried a big load for us this year."

Tarleton will be trying to salvage some good from the season, as it was defending league champion and rated fourth in the nation in NAIA Div. II. However, it is third in the Texas Intercollegiate Athletic Association behind McMurry and Austin College.

"We're looking toward next year right now," said LCC coach Sanders. "We will be using the players who can help us on down the line."

Mules, Cats Eye Key Grid Bouts

By RUSS PARSONS
Avalanche-Journal Sports Staff

After tonight, the rest of the football season could be rather anti-climactic for a lot of area high school teams.

While there is no way a team could actually clinch a district title this early, three weeks still remain in the season, there are six games on the South Plains that will push the winners very close to that goal.

In District 3-AA, the two teams acknowledged to be the favorites, Muleshoe and Littlefield, meet in Littlefield. In 4-AA, Floydada visits Idalou. Although the winner must still deal with Abernathy, a loss would push a team to the brink of extinction.

In Class A, Kress and Vega collide in what has to be considered the District 3-A title game. In victory would assure pretty clear sailing for New Deal. A Petersburg win throws the district into a probable three-way tie with Hale Center.

Two of the strongest teams in Class B on the South Plains meet their toughest district rivals tonight also.

Amherst, rated No. 2, hosts No. 4 Lazbuddie for the 2-B North Zone crown while No. 1 Klondike travels to Wilson, a victor over No. 5 Meadow last week. That should go a long way towards deciding 3-B West.

Last year was Muleshoe's turn to win district 3-AA. In clinching the district, the Mules took a 21-7 win over Littlefield, a game the Wildcats would like to avenge.

They've certainly got the talent.

Ranked No. 2 on the South Plains, Littlefield is led by quarterback Eddie Gregory, an all-South Plains pick at that position in his freshman year.

This year Gregory is still improving. He leads the area in passing with 50 completions. Those came in 94 attempts and cover about 120 yards a game.

That's only 120 out of almost 360 yards the 'Cats are averaging a game. Seems Littlefield has a healthy ground attack too, led primarily by back Rex Freeman. So far this year that running game has accounted for 1,411 yards, as opposed to 736 for the passers.

The Wildcats will be facing last year's all-South Plains quarterback, Muleshoe's Mike Northcutt. Last weekend against Friona Northcutt completed four of six passes for 128 yards and rushed for 81 more as the Mules took a 36-23 win.

He's the guiding force behind the MHS offense that is averaging about 290 yards a game. Defensively, the Mules are allowing only about 190.

Both teams have beaten Floydada, Muleshoe only by 9-7 and Idalou by 31-21.

Those Whirlwinds will have another tough test tonight. They travel to Idalou to take on the No. 4 Wildcats.

Idalou is a team with various talents. The Wildcats can run either Alan Emery or Ruben Reyes at you or throw with quarterback Brad DeBusk. That's why their offense is averaging 360 yards a game.

Reyes is getting just under 100 of those while DeBusk claims an average of about 75 (on 33 completions out of 65 attempts). As you can tell, there's a lot of yards left to be spread around.

Defensively, the Wildcats are allowing about 200 yards a game. Floydada allows a little more, about 215. Offensively, the Whirlwinds gain a little less, an average of about 280. But they do have probably the best back in the game, Mac Collins.

Collins is getting about 125 a game. Last week was a typical week, 33 carries and 129 yards — but but he also scored three touchdowns.

It seems like every year District 3-A boils down to a dogfight. A dogfight between Vega and Kress that is. Everybody else is pretty much stage scenery.

This year is not much different as the two teams are far and away the quality of the loop.

Kress, ranked No. 3 on the South Plains, has running back Eddy Johnson and quarterback Glenn Earl Terrell to point to. That combination accounts for about 230 of the 375 yards the Kangaroos are getting each game.

Johnson gets about 135 yards a game while Terrell adds some depth with about 95 yards a game passing. He has completed 24 of 50 passes so far.

Vega, on the other hand, counters with back Fred Fangman and a tough defense. The Longhorns are getting about 285 yards a game total offense with Fangman grabbing just over 100 yards a game. Defensively, Vega allows about 170.

The question in District 4-A is can anybody stop New Deal? The Lions rolled up a 41-6 rout over Hale Center last week. This week they take on Petersburg, a 15-6 loser to the Owls week before last.

New Deal is another one of those balanced teams. The Lions are getting about 285 yards a game, but with no single outstanding rusher. Martin Adams and Tony Howell handle most of the rushing chores.

They don't have to rack up that many yards. The Lions are allowing only about 140 a game defensively. That's why they're ranked No. 2 in the area.

Other common foes show that the game will probably be closer than the Hale Center comparision might indicate. Both teams lost to Idalou, New Deal by 37-14 and Petersburg by 19-0. They both also beat Ralls easily, Idalou by 49-0 and the Buffaloes by 38-0.

Petersburg's big gun is back Mike Phillips. He averages about 140 yards and 25 carries a game. Overall, the Buffs are clipping along at 325 yards a game.

There should be a classic matchup at Amherst tonight. The Bulldogs host Lazbuddie.

Amherst has one of the strongest offensive teams around, averaging 350 yards a game. Lazbuddie, on the other hand, is allowing only 130.

With that aspect a draw, the key could be Lazbuddie's offense against the Amherst defense. The Longhorns are getting 315 yards a game, most of it coming from backs Andy Rogers (125 a game) and Russell Windham (110).

The Amherst defense however, is also stingy, allowing 150 yards a game.

In the end, the difference may turn out to be one player, Ronald Johnson. Johnson, a running back for Amherst, is averaging an incredible 190 yards a game and has scored 76 points. Lazbuddie's defense will be sorely tested.

Comparative scores confirm the game's closeness. Amherst beat Happy 28-6 and Sundown 20-6. Lazbuddie defeated Happy 14-0 and Sundown 35-0. If history has anything to do with it, Lazbuddie won last year, 7-0.

The Cougars don't seem to have a weakness. On offense, they can throw quarterback Todd Airhart at you (35 completions out of 64 attempts for about 75 yards a game) or run Lonnie Ferguson (a 110 average).

Coupon Clipper's Newsletter Helps Others Fight Inflation

COUPON SAVER — Jan Leasure, a Junior High School English teacher from Waukegan, Ill., handed coupons she has saved to a cashier while doing her grocery shopping in a Waukegan store this week. Mrs. Leasure says she has saved about $1,400 in the past year by being an "aware consumer." (AP Laserphoto)

CHICAGO (AP) — Jan Leasure figures she has 3,000 money-saving coupons around her house, more than she can ever use.

So the 30-year-old English teacher, who estimates she has saved $1,400 in the last year by battling inflation with coupons and refunds, attaches some to each copy of her monthly newsletter, "Refunders Against Inflation" — a publication with its own refund offer.

"I have 500 coupon-clipping subscribers in 28 states and the circulation is growing," the Waukegan junior high school teacher said Wednesday. "A year's subscription is $10. A person can save that much by just going to her medicine cabinet and reading some of the refunds available on certain items."

Mrs. Leasure said she became coupon-conscious two years ago.

"My husband also is a teacher and we just couldn't seem to keep up a lifestyle we wanted on our two salaries. Then, too, we had a daughter 17 months ago," she said.

"I started looking for coupons and refunds during my regular shopping," she said. "Now I spend about four hours a week making the rounds of hardware stores, drug stores and supermarkets in Lake County."

There's a big difference between coupons and refund forms, said Mrs. Leasure. Coupons are cash-off deals on many items, while refund forms can be sent in for cash returns. Most forms are on the packaged product or displayed nearby.

"I make the rounds of stores, take notes on refund offers I find and list them in my newsletter," said Mrs. Leasure. "Usually about 200 offers are listed every month — most of them are new, but some are holdovers with a 60-to 90-day expiration date.

"I buy only the regular items my family uses and get my refund forms that way — dog food, baby food, pop and so forth," she said. "You certainly wouldn't buy something you didn't need just to get a form. In the first 18 days this month, I've gotten $29.50 in refunds. In the last year it amounted to $360 in cash. Savings by using coupons for the same time were $1,040."

Mrs. Leasure said that during a year, 80 percent to 90 percent of grocery items use coupon come-ons. A particularly big coupon coup comes when she finds an appealing bargain and buys in bulk. "I've gotten as much as $130 worth of groceries for $30 cash," she said.

She started her newsletter in September after a brief advertising campaign. Readers get $1 for every new subscriber they recruit.

Airline Cuts Fare To Pennies

CHICAGO (UPI) — For the person thinking of making a telephone call to Kansas City, Cleveland or Detroit — it might be wiser to save the money and fly there instead.

Midway Airlines, which begins operation Nov. 1 from Chicago's Midway aiport, is converting all dollar prices to pennies for the weekend of Nov. 3 and 4.

A one-way flight from Chicago to Detroit will be reduced from $28 to 28 cents. The Chicago to Cleveland flight will drop from $33 to 33 cents and the Chicago to Kansas Cty trip will be reduced from $37 to 37 cents.

Midway Airlines special "pocket change fares" were announced this week.

Kenneth Carlson, the airline's vice president of marketing, said the program is "our way of thanking the cities that help support our initial service."

The pocket change fares will also be in effect on Midway flights heading to Chicago from Detroit, Cleveland and Kansas City.

The plan still is pending Civil Aeronautics Board approval.

Agency Continues To Process Loans

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Farmers Home Administration, criticized for authorizing multimillion-dollar loans for millionaire farmers, is processing another eight loan applications totaling more than $40 million, Sen. Thomas Eagleton, D-Mo., said Wednesday.

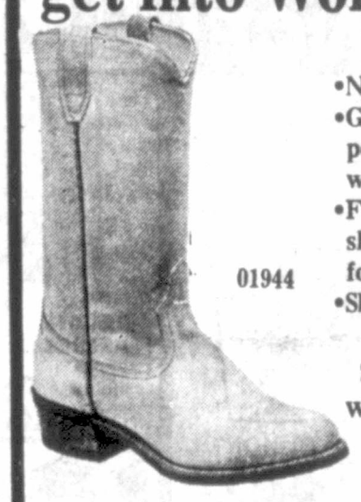

"These loans ought to at least go on the top shelf if they don't reject them outright," said Eagleton, whose Senate subcommittee on agriculture has been looking into FmHA emergency farm loans.

H. Allan Brock, deputy FmHA administrator, said the loan applications are being scrutinized closely to ensure that they meet the program's current eligibility requirements.

"They will all go through in some shape or fashion unless they pass a law today or tomorrow or sometime prohibiting them," he said.

Steel Foundry Workers Plan To Buy Company

McKEESPORT, Pa. (AP) — Steel foundry workers in this western Pennsylvania mill town say their "power to the people" plan is really capitalism for all.

Against the advice of their union officials, the workers are banding together to form a company. They plan to buy the valve foundry their eight-month strike forced to close — throwing them all out of jobs.

Government officials and investors are hoping the strategy will boost the economy of McKeesport, where unemployment is currently 6.3 percent.

"Our philosophy is that capitalism has to be spread out among everyone," said Bill Cochenour, a consultant helping the workers set up an employee-owned company. "It's not communism. In our plan, everybody's a capitalist."

The powerful United Steelworkers of America initially balked at the workers' leap into factory ownership. The USW wanted to make sure the workers didn't follow their former employer — Fort Pitt Steel Casting — down the drain.

Potential backers of the plan, such as banks and local officials, worried that the labor troubles that closed the plant might flare anew.

But Larry Weigand, a federal Economic Development Administration financial analyst, noted, "The shutdown was based to a large extent on a lack of ability to negotiate a contract. In this particular case, (a worker-owned company) lends a lot more credibility than a new private owner, because it avoids the basic labor-management problem."

In the new foundry, workers would be both labor and management.

Contract negotiations probably would also be smoother.

"Workers are not as interested in wages, because what they don't get in wages, they get in dividends," said Ron Garmey, head of the Allegheny County economic development division.

The workers' plan is to buy the 73-year-old plant from its owner, Condec Inc. of Old Greenwich, Conn., for $8.5 million, set up an employee-owned company — called McKeesport Steel Casting Co.— and rejoin the USW.

They are waiting to hear from the federal Economic Development Administration, which is reviewing an application for a $2 million loan guarantee. As equity, the group was promised $300,000 from city and county sources.

Plans are to employ about 70 workers at the outset, building up to more than 200. Former employees will be given priority, followed by McKeesport residents.

"I'll be elated to get back to work and to get back to a normal standard of living," said Bernard Curran, a former USW local president and 36-year employee who heads the 16-member reopening committee.

"A lot of us suffered hardship. We were making $7.50 an hour average. Some of us had to drop down to minimum wage."

Of the total 400 people thrown out of work when Condec closed the plant last November, about 200 support the move to buy, said Cochenour, who is vice president of Kelso & Co., a San Francisco company which helped pioneer the 20-year-old Employee Stock Ownership Plan (ESOP).

Worker ownership has been tried at plants around the country, with particular success at South Bend Lathe Co., an Indiana machine-tool maker, said Cochenour.

In its four years under employee ownership, South Bend Lathe reported a 54 percent increase in sales and a 50 percent boost in wages. But the USW sued the company because it did not assume the pension liabilities of the former owner, thus endangering retirement benefits for workers. The suit is still pending in federal court.

More recently, employees and community leaders tried to take over ownership of the Youngstown Sheet and Tube Co. in Campbell, Ohio, after Lykes Corp. decided to close the old steel mill in 1977.

That shutdown threw 4,100 workers out of jobs. But the take-over plan is apparently dead for lack of government financial support. The organizers had sought federal loan guarantees of about $500 million.

Under the stock ownership plan, 25 percent of workers' salaries go into a trust, which borrows money to buy the corporation's stock. Loans are repaid with future earnings. The stock is transferred to a retirement fund in the name of each employee, who can draw full proceeds after 10 years. In addition, payments into the trust are tax deductible.

Cochenour insists there's no financial risk to the employees, but USW officials initially balked at organizing a union local with the flegling company because retirement benefits must be postponed until debts are paid.

Paul Lewis, USW district chairman, said the union will negotiate with the new company because it is concerned about jobs in the area.

"Our only objection is that it does bar in the first years a pension program because there's no money in the bank," Lewis said.

The committee is optimistic about the financial success of their foundry. Condec has pledged $3 million per year in orders for the product, pressure valves, during the first seven years, and economic indications are that the market for the valves is strong.

"Customers are calling in daily," said Curran.

Domestic Use Of Grain Up

WASHINGTON (AP) — Domestic use of corn and other feed grains in 1978-79 was up 13 percent from the previous year because of "a sharp expansion" in pork and poultry production, the Agriculture Department reports.

Corn use, which accounted for most of the increase, totaled 4.76 billion bushels in the marketing year that ended Sept. 30. That compares with about 4.26 billion bushels in 1977-78.

Feed use of corn accounted for 4.19 billion bushels of the total, compared with 3.79 billion the previous year.

The figures were included in a new report released this week on the supply and demand for grain.

Corn held in reserve as of Sept. 30 totaled nearly 1.29 billion bushels, up from 1.1 billion a year ago.

Exports last season were a record of 2.14 billion bushels, up from about 1.95 billion in 1977-78, the report noted.

Domestic and export use of corn is expected to increase further this year. That could mean a decline in the corn carried over as of Sept. 30, 1980, to about 1.24 billion bushels, the report added.

News Agency Cites Unrest In Boston

MOSCOW (AP) — The official Soviet news agency Tass reported this week that Boston police are taking an "indifferent attitude" toward violent tactics used by "white hoodlums" opposed to school desegregation in the Massachusetts capital.

Tass said that in the recent Boston unrest, "crowds of rampaging hoodlums stone school buses carrying dark-skinned children, stage fights and brawls and hold clamorous racist demonstrations." But "the police take an indifferent attitude, allowing white hoodlums to stage unrest with impunity."

By contrast, "the police immediately launch reprisals against black-skinned teen-agers at the very first signs of protest on their part," Tass said.

MARMADUKE by Brad Anderson

"Sorry, Marmaduke! You've already had two ice cream cones!"

Collector Believes Art Should Be Seen

HOUSTON (UPI) — Armand Hammer, the 81-year-old international millionaire, stood in front of Rembrandt van Rijn's three-century-old painting "Juno" and with youthful energy explained the philosophy that governs his art collection.

"I believe in having as many people as possible see and enjoy the pictures. I don't believe they should be cooped up in one man's home," Hammer said.

His collection of 123 paintings, water colors and drawings, entitled "The Armand Hammer Collection: Four Centuries of Masterpieces," begin a three-month free public exhibition at The Museum of Fine Arts this week.

Valued at tens of millions of dollars, the collection includes two recent additions on display as part of Hammer's collection for the first time. Sir John Everett Millais' 19th Century portrait of a young female herring monger entitled "Caller Herrin" and Rembrandt's "Portrait of a Man Holding a Black Hat" were purchased last spring.

There also are works by the famous artists Van Gogh, Rubens, Goya, Monet, Cezanne, Degas, Renoir, Gaugin, Sargent, Wyeth and others.

Hammer toured the exhibit with reporters, clasping his hands behind him and pausing thoughtfully before several works before pronouncing the local display "very nicely done."

"It feels like seeing my children after a long time," Hammer said. "It travels so much that the only time I get to see it is at an opening."

"If someone is curious what art is all about, here in the space of a football field, one can go from one end to the other and see a 400-year survey of the best," said Dennis Gould, director of the Armand Hammer Foundation.

The Hammer foundation's 5,100 pieces of art are part of four different collections on display in various places. This particular collection is 10 years old and has been viewed by three million persons, Hammer said.

Hammer said the paintings in his own home are mostly copies of his favorites, many of the copies having been made by his wife Frances, who is in her 70s and paints. She accompanied him to Houston for the opening.

The local exhibition, which ends Jan. 20, is being sponsored by the museum, Occidental Petroleum Corp. and the Hooker Chemical Co., a subsidiary of Occidental, of which Hammer is board chairman.

Hammer, a medical doctor who began building his fortune as a[illegible] concessionaire for the Russians in the 1920s, was asked if and when he would retire.

"I hope I keep going," replied the white-haired but lucky and robust[illegible] ing Hammer. "I've enjoyed every minute. People say I'm lucky, but I get lucky working seven days a week, 14 hours a day."

Appeals Court Ready To Permit Enforcement Of Exposure Rules

WASHINGTON (AP) — An appeals court says it's ready to permit enforcement of government regulations that limit worker exposure to cotton dust.

The U.S. Court of Appeals upheld the regulations this week, but did not immediately lift an order preventing their enforcement.

The court said enforcement could begin in 20 days unless those who challenged the rules could convince the circuit judges to keep the order in effect.

The order barring enforcement was issued originally to maintain the status quo while the case was under appeal.

The exposure limits were challenged by the textile and related industries, who argued the limits were too costly and not feasible. The AFL-CIO and member unions also appealed the rules, saying some were too lax.

In a 3-0 opinion written by Senior Circuit Judge David L. Bazelon, a court panel concluded:

"Congress ... has made it clear that OSHA (the Occupational Health and Safety Administration) must protect every worker from ... material health impairment due to occupational exposure to hazardous materials. OSHA is constrained only by the requirement that its standards be technologically and economically feasible for the regulated industry. In sum, our review leads us to uphold the standard."

The court made one exception, refusing to immediately uphold the exposure limit for the cottonseed oil industry. The court said OSHA did not adequately address that industry's argument that the cost of meeting the standards would force 62 of the 83 cottonseed oil mills to close.

The court cited studies that 250,000 to 800,000 workers are exposed daily to cotton dust. The Senate report on the Occupational Safety and Health Act states that up to 100,000 active or retired workers suffered in 1970 from byssinosis, a respiratory ailment caused by cotton dust exposure.

"The permanent lung damage caused by byssinosis makes every breath painful and difficult," the court said. "The excess strain these breathing difficulties place on the heart often leads to these workers' early death from heart failure."

The standards would take four years to carry out. Exposure limits would be 200 micrograms per cubic meter for lint-free cotton dust in yarn manufacturing, 750 micrograms for slashing and weaving operations in the cotton industry and 500 micrograms for all other processes in the cotton industry and for all non-textile industries.

Industry representatives had told the appeals court that workers could be protected by a higher exposure level coupled with a medical surveillance program.

The industry plan also would have required workers to wear respirators or accept transfers to work areas with less cotton dust if they began suffering from byssinosis.

Ethiopia To Open Doors To Tourists

MUNICH, West Germany (AP) — Ethiopia, virtually closed to visitors during the violent years following the 1974 overthrow of Emperor Haile Selassie, plans to reopen its borders to tourists "sometime in April 1980."

"Ethiopia will invest $3 million in tourism expansion projects this year, money we hope to receive from the European Economic Commuity," the East African country's representative to a meeting of the American Society of Travel Agents said Tuesday.

Since 1974 the country has been torn by bloody coups and secessionist fighting. There have been reports of numerous atrocities by the regime in Addis Ababa. About 15,000 Americans toured Ethiopia annually before 1974.

Soviet Union Begins Teaching Sex Education

MOSCOW (AP) — In the conservative aura of modern Russia, sex is still in the closet — or at least restricted to the privacy of the bedroom.

Which is why the current project of Moscow school superintendent Georgi L. Aseyev is so daring. He is teaching sex education in schools.

From ages 7 to 17, pupils are listening to lectures on love, marriage and biological mechanics. The new program marked its first anniversary in September.

Why? Aseyev told The Associated Press that Soviet children were getting "distorted" sexual knowledge in the streets.

"Sooner or later, whether we like it or not, our young people will learn about sex," says Aseyev, a 63-year-old grandfather. "This is a problem we shouldn't pass by. It is very easy to hurt our students, especially in the period of first love."

It was one student's first love that got Aseyev involved with the problem. A young boy named Oleg was infatuated with a blonde across the street and one day took her to the movies. In his callowness, he kissed her and she ridiculed him as a sloppy kisser. Oleg began cutting classes, and Aseyev called the boy in and offered some gentle advice. But, unfortunately, he also told Oleg's mother, who attacked the boy with her fists. He dropped out of school, and Aseyev, to this day, regrets his offense.

But it could have been expected in a society where nudity in films is taboo, a sexy novel is the scourge of censors and homosexuality is a criminal offense.

A recent survey of 300 Moscow school students, aged 15-17, found that only a small number — 21 percent — first learned about sex from family or school.

The vast majority of teen-agers were learning about sex from cheap novels, from peers and older friends.

Sociologist Valentina Alekseyeva concludes:

"Either we do everything we can to see that young people obtain sound, scientific advice on how to conduct themselves in this most complex area of human life, or we throw them on their own, risking a situation in which people who are hostile to Communist morality will take advantage of this vacuum."

Indeed, the black market in magazines like "Playboy" and "Hustler" is thriving in the Soviet Union. And nearby Scandinavia remains a reliable source for X-rated movies smuggled into Moscow.

Because of an absence of official information about sex published by Medgiz, the state publishing house for medical literature, some Russians are growing up surprisingly ignorant about it.

One 26-year-old doctor says that at least once a week he has to explain the details of sexual intercourse and birth control to adult men and women, many of them married.

It was only in 1974 that the country's first known sex manual was released. Discreetly titled, "Female Sexual Problems," it was a run-away best-seller here but an object of ridicule among the intelligentsia for its naivety and even misinformation.

Recent studies show that sexual morality among the Russians, long known as an earthy lot, is at a low level these days.

Some 400,000 illegitimate children — 10 percent of all recorded births — are born annually. Abortion, legalized in 1955, is a major form of contraception widely used by Soviet women.

So what's to be done?

According to Aseyev, Soviet officials must begin to realize that only a new frankness about sex will strengthen and not destroy socialist society, especially now that marriage and morals are under siege. Hope lies with the younger generations.

The sex education programs in Moscow schools are aimed, Aseyev says, at helping children understand that sex, love and marriage go hand-in-hand.

In three schools with enrollments totaling 4,000 students, sex education has been taken out of biology class and geared to the age and maturity levels of all classes aged 7 through 17.

This year, almost all Moscow schools will join in doing this.

Teachers, many of whom had no training in child psychology or developmental physiology, have gone back to school for special sex education seminars. And even parents can go to classes to learn how to handle their offspring's bewildering problems of puberty.

In the second part of the program, students aged 16 and 17 are being taught sex education classes by family counselors from the "Knowledge Society" here.

These classes, sometimes segregated, include discussions on: "Friendship and Comradeship," "Female Honor and Male Dignity," "First Step in Love," "The Art of Interpersonal Relations," "Personal Hygiene," "Let's Talk about Fashion and Cosmetics."

But it is strictly 20th century to students here.

Aseyev expected a storm of protest from families who might resent that schools were taking sex education out of their hands.

But it soon became apparent that parents were pleased, even relieved.

"It turns out that the forbidden fruits of sex can be told in a beautiful and simple language," wrote a 17-year-old girl explaining why she liked the program. "Only nasty talk is born in the streets and in cheap movies. We would like more of these discussions because they would diminish the authority of street talk."

Said a 16-year-old boy: "I watched contemporary movies about love, but they were not about me or about my feelings. But here, I can hear about myself."

Germans Disobey Speed Limit Signs

BONN, West Germany (UPI) — American and European drivers crawling along West Germany's autobahns usually react with disbelief to occasional signs suggesting — only suggesting — that drivers hold their speed to 130 kph, the equivalent of 80 mph.

Astonishment and sometimes envy often is joined by fear when the foreigners notice that about one in 20 drivers flashes past as fast as his car will go — at between 100 mph and 125 mph.

Most West German drivers believe the constitutional guarantee of "the right to the free development of personality" specifically includes the right to drive on autobahns with no speed limit at all.

Only West Germany still allows unlimited speed on superhighways.

Any politician proposing to change that situation risks his future, as Chancellor Helmut Schmidt must have tried to explain in Tokyo last June when his American, British, French, Canadian, Italian and Japanese colleagues urged him to follow their energy-saving lead and impose speed limits on all roads.

As Schmidt could have pointed out, most Germans treat the question of autobahn speed limits not as one of energy conservation but as one of political philosophy.

"Autobahn speed limits would be a considerable restriction on personal freedom," says Dionys Jobst, a railroader by profession, a member of Franz Josef Strauss's Christian Democratic party and of the parliamentary committee on transportation.

Some of Strauss' followers have even been heard to express the conviction that "anyone who would impose a speed limit on the autobahns also would nationalize the banks."

Germans probably react so strongly to talk of autobahn speed limits because Adolf Hitler first ordered them. Their removal after the Nazi dictator's defeat and suicide in World War II thus came to symbolize liberty itself.

Furthermore, as Gerold Lingnau pointed out in the Frankfurer Allgemeine Zeitung newspaper, the network of 4,500 miles of autobahn "is a means of production created at great expense, and to use it inefficiently would cost the economy dearly.

"Vacation trips that last 20 percent longer might make no difference to private drivers, but would require completely new planning by those moving goods, perhaps in the direction of air freight which, of course, would get the trucks off the roads but use a lot more energy."

As for equating speed with danger, European Ford Executive Robert Lutz has said "it is not speed, but the sudden stop that kills." Only 6.5 percent of all traffic deaths in Germany occur on autobahns, and the number of traffic deaths is down although the number of cars on roads is up.

Moderate Tremor Hits California

EUREKA, Calif. (AP) — A wide area of coastal Humboldt County, about 200 miles north of San Francisco, was shaken by a moderate earthquake, but there were no reports of damage or injuries.

The quake this week had a magnitude of 4.3 on the Richter Scale, according to Dr. Robert Uhrhammer, a research seismologist at the University of California at Berkeley. Earthquakes with a magnitude of 4 on the Richter scale, a measure of ground motion as recorded on seismographs, are capable of moderate damage.

DR. LAMB

Treating Cataracts

By LAWRENCE LAMB, M.D.

DEAR DR. LAMB — Will a drop of honey in each eye every night for three weeks clear a cataract? I have heard over the radio that honey will cure arthritis and it is good for cataracts. I had cataract surgery on both eyes but my sister has to have cataract surgery in the near future.

DEAR READER — No, honey will not cure or prevent cataracts.

A cataract involves changes of the lens inside the eye. If you look at the eye closely and note the pupil, the lens is situated some distance behind the pupil itself. It's a globular, jelly-like structure that in your youth is very flexible. It has a circle of muscles around it which contract and relax, thereby compressing the lens as needed or allowing it to expand. This change in the jelly-like lens is how it's focused automatically so you can look near or far.

When the lens is clear, it transmits clear light rays and you should be able to see clearly and distinctly if all of the rest of the eye is normal, too. That, by the way, is important because you can have other problems besides cataracts that can cause poor vision. When the lens gets cloudy and has trouble transmitting light, then the things you look at begin to look blurred. This is what a cataract really is.

I'm sending you The Health Letter number 13-6, Your Cataracts Are Coming. Other readers who want this issue can send 75 cents with a long, stamped, self-addressed envelope for it. Send your request to me, in care of The Avalanche-Journal, P.O. Box 151, Radio City Station, New York, NY 10019.

As The Health Letter I'm sending you explains, the lens of the eye has certain tissue similarities to that of your skin. It constantly forms new cells. In the case of your skin, the old cells are simply shed from the surface. There isn't any place for old cells to go in the lens of your eye. The new cells form at the outside and the old cells are pushed to the interior part of the lens itself. These are damaged cells and cause the cloudy changes in the lens. That's why age is the most common cause of cataracts.

There are a number of other things that can contribute to the early development of cataracts but age still is the most important factor.

Not everyone who has cataracts needs surgery. Many people have these opacities in the lens of the eye and can still see rather well, particularly with the aid of glasses. If that's the case, it's too early to do surgery. These small areas of opacifiction in the lens are sometimes referred to as immature cataracts.

Still other patients have additional disease in the eye that affects the vision to the point that doing cataract surgery won't help a great deal. That's why the decision as to whether surgery should be done or not has to be based on a careful eye examination by your ophthalmologist.

As you will see from The Health Letter I'm sending you, there are a lot of important considerations about cataracts, including what kind of glasses or contact lenses you might have after surgery. In general, if the cataract is the only significant eye pathology, surgery combined with contact lenses after surgery provides very suitable vision.

Topical Fluoride Applications May Retard Disease In Gums

By PATRICIA McCORMACK

NEW YORK (UPI) — A dividend seems to developing from the application of fluoride solution to control and prevent dental disease.

Dr. Leonard L. Zeldow, of Binghamton, N. Y., told the annual meeting of the American Dental Association that it appears topical fluoride solutions also retard development of periodential or gum disease.

Fluoridation's value in decreasing dental decay has been documented for over three decades. The new studies showing its role against gum disease were described by Zeldow.

He said the solutions can inhibit types of organisms and their by-products found in the mouth. By altering the tooth structure and decreasing metabolic activity of plaque bacteria that invade teeth and gum tissues, Zeldow said they guarantee a large measure of protection for the gums.

Zeldow said 90 percent of periodential breakdown is attributed to bacteria. He claims topical fluoride therapy treatments aimed at knocking out the bacterial causes of periodontal disease in many cases make surgical corrective treatment either unnecessary or secondary.

Dentists were told the preferred method of intensive fluoride therapy is by self-medication at home, using a tray-like gadget called a toplicator. This is custom made to fit tightly over teeth. Patient receives instruction on use from dentist.

The tight fit helps avoid diluting effect of saliva. It also keeps the appliance where it belongs without the need to keep one's mouth closed.

As Zeldow described the process, the fluoride is dropped in gel form in the tray. The patient is supposed to self-administer treatment once daily until recalled to dental office.

Later, applications go down to several a week.

The treatment also is supposed to benefit those suffering tooth root decay, frequent in older persons. Zeldow also recommended the therapy as a preventive measure for cavity-prone teenagers and for patients with braces.

Also on the fluoridation scene, Dr. Gary M. Whitford of the Medical College of Georgia told fellow dentists about half the United States population now is receiving anti-cavity benefits of fluoridation.

But he said there still are major areas that need immediate and careful attention. He called for an "increased and expanded drive."

Science Today

Whitford said part of the problem is about one-quarter of the population lives in areas with no central water supply.

"Special methods must be used to deliver fluoride to these persons," he said, calling attention to the effectiveness of school water flouoridation programs.

Kids drinking fluoridated water in school have about 30 percent fewer cavities than those whose drinking water is mostly free of fluoride.

"But we should not be content with this single alternative," he said.

"Dental caries do not stop at age 18 and we need fluoride delivery systems which reach adults as well as children."

He cited the effectiveness of fluoridation of household salt in other countries and studies on fluoridation of milk and chewing gum as possible alternatives.

Whitford also prescribed ongoing education and training for waterworks operators.

"Several studies have indicated that up to 30 percent of the water systems equipped to fluoridate are doing so at asuboptimal level," he said.

Scientists Say Alcoholism Not Understood

BOSTON (UPI) — The latest studies show that children of alcoholics are more likely than others to become alcoholics themselves, but it is still unclear whether the disease can be considered hereditary, two scientists reported this week.

In fact, Drs. Jack H. Mendelson and Nancy K. Mello of Harvard University's Alcohol and Drug Abuse Research Center said that despite extensive research, knowledge about alcoholism and its effects on human behavior it is still very limited.

Their review of articles published in the past 10 years, in this week's issue of the New England Journal of Medicine, focused on one study by a team of Danish doctors that found alcoholism four times more common in offspring of alcoholics but not in children raised by alcoholics.

Thus, they concluded, simply being raised by an alcoholic parent does not significantly increase the risk of alcoholism.

The results indicated alcoholism in biological children was four times higher than in the adopted children, suggesting that heredity plays a larger role in their alcholism than upbringing.

"Alcoholism in the biological parent appears to be a more reliable predictor of alcoholism in the children than any other environmental factor examined," Mendelson and Mello wrote.

But they emphasized that more research must be done before it can be said definitely that alcoholism is hereditary.

HY GARDNER HAS THE ANSWER:

Glad You Asked That!

Q: Humphrey Bogart, it seems to me, seldom survived in those gangster movies he made now seen on TV. Anybody got a box score on my theory? — J. Jarmen, New Orleans.

A: Bogey once said about his first 14 films: "I was shot in 12, electrocuted or hanged in eight and was a jailbird in nine. I played more scenes writhing around on the floor," he smiled, "than I did standing up!"

Q: I was just a 13-year-old girl in Quebec when I first heard a kid, now a superstar named Paul Anka, entertain with a group. If you run into him will you ask him if he can recall the name of the act? — Mrs. Ellen D.B., Alberta, Canada.

A: "I called the group 'The Bobby Soxers,'" Paul told us, "and we were making $15 a night working out of Ottawa in Ontario and Quebec nightclubs which were allowed to stay open late. I was about 15 at the time and now I remember the club which was our favorite — The Shoddy Air Rose Room. They didn't bother checking your age. I guess it was on the outskirts in a little town called Hull, Quebec, which probably no one knows. The first really big stars I met personally were Tony Bennett, Marty Allen and Steve Rossi, and two popular groups, The Four Aces and The Four Lads. Tony helped me along quite a bit, singing, giving me advice, introducing me to his tailor. I was just starting to shave then, only once a day," Paul chuckled. "Before that I used to pull the hairs out ... but that's a painful memory!"

Quickies: "Superman II" is in the works with Christopher Reeves resuming the role ... And Joe Namath is encouraged by the reception of audiences and critics to his performance (live) in "Picnic" in the role that helped make Paul Newman a superstar ... Suzanne Somers making her movie debut in "Nothing Personal." Her Hollywood manager is Jay Bernstein who pulled similar strings for Farrah Fawcett. He's readying a Vegas act for Somers and has her compiling a cookbook ... Eye-stopping signs: in a Hollywood deli: "If It Smells Good We've Got It." In a roadside eatery: "Our Hamburgers Are Made — Not Accumulated." At a kid's stand in front of his family's Beverly Hills mansion: "Lemonade — all flavors 50 cents; sour, 25 cents."

Q: Isn't violence in the NBA (National Basketball Association) racially motivated? — Tom Speare, Pittsburgh.

A: Not according to NBA commissioner Lawrence O'Brien. In a sports magazine article, he said, "Over 75 percent of the NBA players are black. And while we've had incidents involving only white players — or only black players, each time a black-white incident occurs, some writers tend to suggest its racial. It may be an easy conclusion to reach," admits Mr. O'Brien, "but it's not true. Perhaps it just makes for titillating reading."

Send your questions to Hy Gardner, "Glad You Asked That," care of The Lubbock Avalanche-Journal, P.O. Box 19620, Irvine, Calif. 92714. Marilyn and Hy Gardner will answer as many questions as they can in their column, but the volume of mail makes personal replies impossible.

Columbus Strikers To Vote On Pact

COLUMBUS, Ohio (AP) — A tentative agreement has been reached in a week-long strike by 1,200 blue-collar and office workers that disrupted garbage pickups in Ohio's second largest city.

Details of the pact reached this week were not released pending a ratification vote by members of the American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees, which represents 4,000 workers.

Officials said they hoped services in the city of 500,000 would be back to normal in a few days. A plan to set up a three-member "arbitration advisory panel" to hear union grievances apparently freed the stalemated talks.

Judd Hirsch Stars As Dracula In Early Halloween Program

By JOAN HANAUER

NEW YORK (UPI) — Count Dracula can't die — but he certainly can switch personalities.

The latest to impersonate the Transylvanian terror is Judd Hirsch of "Taxi," who offers a comic count on "The Halloween That Almost Wasn't" on ABC Oct. 28, 6:30-7 p.m., Central time.

The show offers a delightful relief from animation, giving a group of really talented actors a chance to have some fun and prove to the small people on the other side of the generation gap that live actors are better than talking cartoons.

The cast has a ball. Hirsch, as a Dracula who barks a lot but doesn't bite, has called a meeting of the monsters to read them the riot act. There's John Schuck as Frankenstein's monster, learning to tap dance. Jack Riley as the Wolfman has shaved his body hair for a razor commercial. Igor (Henry Gibson) keeps forgetting to leave the windows open, so when Dracula tries to fly in as a bat — bang! The Mummy keeps tripping over his wrappings.

Worst of all, Mariette Hartley — with traces of loveliness peeking out from beneath her heavy witch's makeup — refuses to fly over the moon. If her flight is canceled, so is Halloween. But she wants her rights, including equal billing with Dracula on Transylvanian T-shirts.

How it all ends doesn't matter nearly so much as the fun along the way. This is one of those shows that are particularly delightful to watch with kids — their faces add to the fun — and Kenner Toys should be commended for developing as well as sponsoring the show. Maybe more advertisers should get into the production act.

Judd Hirsch got into the act because, he said in an interview, "I've always wanted to play that guy, although not necessarily seriously."

"Dracula was always kind of a sex symbol," Hirsch said. "If you go back to the original book, he wasn't simply a horror man. He was someone to pity because he couldn't die. Being a vampire wasn't his fault.

"Then Hollywood decided to take a big left turn with horror movies, and the monsters became dastardly, disgusting things. Dracula wasn't like that. He was totally sophisticated. He dresses nice. He should never be played in white face except maybe when he gets up in the evening."

As for Dracula as sex symbol, Hirsch said:

"I think he always was a sex symbol. The feminist movement has changed a lot of things, but Dracula supplies something that females were always inhibited about. I can't talk for women, but Dracula's victims were taken over, were synonymous with surrender. He was a grand, grand figure of power.

"What I did was to try to make him as believable as possible. I couldn't help but be funny in this absurd story. One reason I wanted to play this part was because I think kids deserve to see those monsters in a comedy version of Halloween."

David Janssen Shuns Producer, Director Labels

By VERNON SCOTT

HOLLYWOOD (UPI) — David Janssen is a throwback to the journeyman actors of the past, a performer who works steadily — five TV movies and a feature film this year — without aspirations to produce or direct.

He just acts.

In an era of Newmans, McQueens, Redfords and Beattys, who make one picture a year or less while producing and-or directing, Janssen goes from one job to the next playing a variety of roles, unconcerned about top billing.

Janssen brings to mind the old pre-television contract players — Gable, Cooper, Taylor and Bogart. They stuck to their trade, accumulating lengthy credits, large bank accounts and uncounted fans.

Janssen estimates he's made more than 100 movies, including the TV variety, in a career which goes back some 25 years to a contract at Universal where he turned out 32 pictures.

In 1957 he starred in the "Richard Diamond" TV series and followed it with three more — "The Fugitive," "Harry O" and "O'Hara, U.S. Treasury Agent" — starring in movies in between.

"In retrospect," Janssen said, "I haven't worried much about where my next job was coming from. I've always felt I was qualified to play any part in a script.

"I've never felt the fear of not working but I can understand the anxiety of actors who think that not getting top billing is the end of their careers. Like the English, I believe any part is worth playing if it makes a contribution.

"Billing isn't important. I've never argued about it. I've even asked to have my name put last on the credits, reading 'and David Janssen.'

"Some leading men think it's a step down the ladder if they don't get the girl at the end of the picture. That's never made the slightest bit of difference to me. I just try to be an asset rather than a liability in a picture.

"There haven't been a lot of peaks and valleys in my career. I'm grateful for that. I can't say I've reached the superstar category like Steve McQueen, Clint Eastwood or Robert Redford. They earn six times as much money as I do, but I'm not suffering monetarily."

Janssen has escaped being typed. He's played leading men, character roles and heavies with equal aplomb and professionalism. His movies vary from love stories, to detective films, drama, comedy and mystery.

He's also worked at all the major studios, a few minor ones, and on all three TV networks.

Among his projects this year he's played John Jacob Astor in "S.O.S. Titanic," and a variety of characters in "Fear In The City," "High Ice" and "The Golden Gate Murders."

In the feature film, "Inchon," he plays an Army officer disenchanted with Laurence Olivier in the role of Douglas MacArthur.

This year's activities have taken him to Korea, Rome, London, the Irish Sea, the Isle of Man, San Francisco and the state of Washington. His title role in "Father Damien," the priest who devoted his life to the leper colony at Molokai, his fifth TV movie of the year, will be played in Hawaii.

"I don't work in Hollywood very often," he said. "But when a good role in a worthwhile project comes along, you pack your bags and go.

"There are a lot of elements to be considered in a movie. In some cases your costars help make your decision. The main reason I agreed to do 'Inchon' was to work with Olivier. There's an actor who never worries about billing either.

"I'd like to work with Jane Fonda, Glenda Jackson, Anne Bancroft, Shirley MacLaine and a lot of others. They'd be definite factors in doing a film.

"And it makes no difference to me whether a movie is made for television or theaters. The barrier between TV and movies no longer exists although there are some actors who refuse to do television.

"I'm just about convinced that intimate stories can be told better on the tube than they can on the big screen. The script and content of a story, as well as the part, affect my decision as well as the other members of the cast."

Neither does Janssen fret about overexposure.

"Hell, I like to work," he said, grinning. "I wouldn't know how to take off a year or two. I have a lovely house at Malibu where I jog on the beach and relax in the sun. But after a couple of weeks I get restless.

"The thing that pleases me most about my career is that the quality of the projects I've done has been getting better. As for my longevity, I suppose it's because I know my business.

"I'm 47 years old, and since I turned 40 there seems to be more roles for me to play. Novels and screenplays deal with mature men and story lines as they did in the '40s and '50s rather than young love."

Janssen shrugs off the possibility of returning to a television series. He's too busy making movies for TV and the big screen to undertake the grind of a weekly show.

KISS FOR HIS CO-STAR — Comedian Chevy Chase got a kiss on his ear from co-star Benji during a press conference in Los Angeles recently at which Chase announced the start of filming for their up-coming movie "Oh Heavenly Dog." The film will be shot on location in London, Berlin and Paris. (AP Laserphoto)

Critic Says Sweet 'Shirley' Not So Bad

By PETER J. BOYER

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Tonight, America can sample the fruit of Fred Silverman's sponsor-as-supplier idea, a notion he's been pushing since he took over the game at NBC last year.

In the course of his many speeches outlining the Silverman view of things, NBC's president has often invited major TV advertisers to get involved in the supplying end of the business, as was once the rule. He asked and asked, but so far, only Procter and Gamble (TV's biggest advertiser) has jumped in. The result is "Shirley," an hour of sweetness and light with a laugh track.

For its little project, P&G said it wanted Shirley Jones in a family show, and I imagine the rest sort of took care of itself. Sweet Shirley Jones plays sweet Shirley Miller, New York widow who follows her late husband's wish for a simpler life by moving her family (two teen-agers and two younger darlings) to Lake Tahoe, Nev.

Not surprisingly, some problems arise when the happy group arrives West. Shirley's new house is kind of run down, and needs fumigating. So, Mom and the kids have to pitch a tent on the lakefront (this family can afford a five-bedroom, two-story Victorian house on expensive Lake Tahoe but can't afford a motel for three days).

Anyway, a crusty old guy (who, we learn, is really sweet on the inside, thereby qualifying himself for this show), claims they've camped on his lot and demands $50 a day rent. His better nature surfaces, though, and that problem is solved.

There are others. Shirley learns that a full-time teaching job she was promised is not available, so she has to settle for a part-time substitute gig. The moving van loaded with their furniture breaks down in Texas, and when it finally arrives, it's carrying the wrong furniture.

Let's see ... it seems there were some other prolems. Oh yes, the kids start getting a little cranky. The 16-year-old girl, Debra (Rosanna Arquette, Cliff Arquette's granddaughter), is upset about leaving New York and her boyfriend back in New York. She is really upset when her boyfriend writes her a "Dear Debra" letter.

The eldest boy, Bill (Peter Barton), is just generally upset. He's Shirley's stepson, and is troubled because Shirley treats him like a kid.

Everything is about to fly apart, when Shirley thinks of a sweet way to save the day.

Adolescent angst and push-button solutions abound, as I expect that's the course this show will follow. Next week, Shirley has to take a job as a paymaster on a construction job and is resented by the men. Fill in the ending and moral.

"Shirley" is rather shallow going, and that is a disappointment. Silverman says he's got this nifty idea about advertisers supplying programs, and, out comes a cross between "The Partridge Family" and "Eight is Enough."

But there is something to be said for a family show that doesn't give Mom a weekly sleepmate and relies not at all on the standard prime-time sleaze. Better a saccharine overdose with "Shirley" than a toilet joke marathon with "The Ropers."

If enough families feel that way, "Shirley" may be around long enough to improve. Besides, sweet isn't really so bad.

Canadian women gained their first limited federal franchise in 1917 with the passing of the Wartime Elections Act. The act gave the vote to women who had close relatives in the armed services.

Jury Might Reopen Chemical Inquiry

CHICAGO (AP) — A grand jury may reopen its probe of allegations that Velsicol Chemical Corp. concealed evidence that two of its pesticides, heptachlor and chlordane, may cause cancer, a federal judge ruled.

U.S. District Judge George N. Leighton rejected on Wednesday a request by company attorneys to prevent the government from reopening the case. Six months ago, Leighton had dismissed an indictment against Velsicol and six of its present and former officers.

Complaint Answered By Attorney General

WASHINGTON (AP) — A hole in the wall of a detention room at a local immigration office is going to be repaired following a public and personal complaint to Attorney General Benjamin R. Civiletti.

An Immigration and Naturalization Service deportation officer complained to Civiletti this week that the hole had gone unrepaired despite the open invitation for escape.

Drug Business Booms In China

By HUGH A. MULLIGAN

PEKING (AP) — The state-run pharmaceutical houses in the People's Republic of China are fast catching up to our pill-popping Western society in packaging the ancient herbal remedies as patent medicines available in capsule and liquid form.

Mulligan's Stew

A modern and always crowded drug counter in the lobby of the capacious Peking Hotel does a bustling business dispensing ginseng antler pills, swallow pear nest syrup, dog skin plaster, tiger bone liquor and similar tonics and emulsions that have brought relief to billions since the Ming dynasty.

In the downtown business district a much larger and far more lavish People's Drug Store, unrelated to the Washington chain of the same name, carries a full line of aphrodisiacs, emetics, expectorants, "mind refreshers" and something called "Purple Gold Cubes," which according to the label is good for "sore throat, toothache, abdominal flatulence, food and drink poisoning and diarrhea."

The downtown drug emporium is always jammed with middle-aged Peking citizens who worry constantly about heart palpitations and flatulence the way the French go on about their livers and the Americans count calories.

The lobby drug store, restricted to foreigners like the hotel itself, caters in constant chaos to the hypochondria of the overseas Chinese, mostly from Hawaii, Hong Kong and Singapore and the various Chinatowns from London and New York to Augusta, Ga., and San Francisco who can outscore the home team when it comes to worrying about intestinal gas and a fluctuating pulse rate.

The Chinese medicine men have learned to pander to the fevers and chills of their large pill-purchasing population with catchy slogans and portentous prose that seem to owe a lot to aspirin in commercials on American TV.

"At the first sign of a cold or abdominal flatulence take anti-pestilence Kan Mao Tao," advises an ad for an ancient herbal remedy in a slick patent medicine catalogue.

Though all the nostrums are government-produced by the National Native Produce and Animals By-Products Corp., China apparently has a pure food and drug law requiring full disclosure of the ingredients on the label.

The Tiger Bone liquor, for instance, which retails for 18.6 yuan ($12) a fifth, discloses in the small print that it is "refined by infusing tiger bones and various kinds of precious Chinese medical herbs in top grade mellow sorghum wine. Ingredients: Kaquang wine 77.1 per cent, sugar 10.4 per cent, tiger bone extract 12.5 per cent."

Our Chinese guides were unable to ascertain how many tiger herds had to be boiled up annually to promote blood circulation and abate flatulency in a nation of 900 million.

Among the Hawaiian guests at our hotel, Peking Royal Jelly — "Good for loss of appetite, neurasthenia and premature senility" — seemed to be the most popular palliative at 3.2 yuan ($2) a jar. "Royal Jelly," advised the literature curled around the bottle, "is produced from a secretion by worker bee salivary glands termented (sic) with honey, pollen, etc. to be specially used as victuals for queen bees. As a result a queen bee is able to survive over 5 years, on the other hand the life of the worker bee is only 2 to 4 months because of the lack of such feed. At the height of the laying season, a single queen bee is in good ability to lay 2500 to 3000 ova within 24 hours, which in total weight is much heavier than her own body. All of this tells again that the royal jelly is a sort of miraculous medicine in terms of its remarkable potent power in nutrition."

Another intriguing item on sale was "Deluxe Ass Glue," made from 91 percent asses skins in a soluble solution of sugar, water, aromatic oils and radix angelicae.

Based on his definitive work, Communist pill pushers can now offer the party faithful such nostrums as gensing antler pills ("a personal tonic to brace the whole system"), anti-neurasthenia pills ("compounded of pig semen"), swallow pear nest syrup ("made from autumn pear and nest of sea swallow, for coughing and wheezing, an expectorant good for throat") and "mind refreshers" ("for old people troubled with vertigo and poor memory and what worries them more, apoplexy, faint, coma aphasia, squint eyes and twisted mouth."

By MARY CAMPBELL

NEW YORK (AP) — Ella Fitzgerald, whose career started after she was "discovered" at the Apollo Theater in Harlem, had star billing this week a few blocks away at dedication ceremonies of a new performing arts center.

Miss Fitzgerald sang for an hour to conclude the program, part of the time with the American Symphony, which was on stage with her, and sometimes with her trio. She was in fine form singing songs by Gershwin, who attended CCNY, scatting a bossa nova, making a pledge of "Ain't Misbehavin'," an anthem of "St. Louis Blues" and somethng sweet and low of "Smoke Gets In Your Eyes."

She was called back by the enthusiastic invited audience for three encores.

Ballet superstar Mikhail Baryshnikov danced in the first half of the evening as did three stars of the New York City Ballet, Patricia McBride, Suzanne Farrell and Peter Martins. Actor Keith David recited a Dylan Thomas poem.

Former CCNY president, Robert E. Marshak, said the hall will be used for student training and performing, as a cultural resource for the neighborhood and to enrich the life of all New Yorkers.

The student program is called the Leonard Davis Center for the Performing Arts, started in 1971 and named for the alumnus who endowed it with $2.5 million. The hall is named for his father.

TODAY'S STOCK PRICES

Stock Mart Fades After Broad Gains

NEW YORK (AP) — The stock market staged a broad advance in early trading today, but most of the gains had evaporated by noontime.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials, up almost 6 points in early trading, showed a .60 gain at 806.60 by noon.

Gainers held a 2-1 edge on losers among New York Stock Exchange-listed issues, after leading by as much as 4 to 1 earlier.

Late Thursday the Federal Reserve announced a $3.7 billion downward revision in the estimates of the money supply it had reported for the first two weeks of this month.

The Fed said the original data, which had touched off sharp declines a week ago in the stock and bond markets, had been overstated as a result of a reporting error by an unidentified major bank.

Stock prices rallied strongly at the opening on that word. But then they settled back as the market absorbed news of continuing two-digit inflation rates last month and Citibank's decision to raise its prime lending rate to a record 15¼ percent.

The Citibank move topped an increase to 15 percent by many other leading banks on Tuesday and Wednesday.

The biggest loser on the active list was Data General, down 9 at 50¼ following the company's report Thursday of lower quarterly earnings.

The NYSE's composite common-stock index rose .17 to 56.78. On the American Stock Exchange, the market value index climbed 2.24 to 198.84.

Volume on the Big Board totaled 14.45 million shares after the first two hours, against 11.32 million at the same point Thursday.

Strike Closes GE Jet Plant

LYNN, Mass. (AP) — A growing strike over the job classification of 29 employees has shut down production at General Electric's River Works plant of jet engines for Air Force and Navy fighters.

Some 2,500 workers walked off the job Thursday, joining another 1,000 strikers in the dispute that began Oct. 1.

A General Electric spokesman said the strike effectively stopped production of engines used in the Navy's new F-18 fighter and the Air Force F-5 Freedom Fighter, an all-purpose tactical fighter used by many allied nations.

Also affected are powerplants for helicopters used by all branches of the U.S. military.

The spokesman, who asked not to be identified, refused to speculate on the length of the strike or its impact on military deliveries, but both sides in the dispute have agreed to a meeting with a federal mediator on Tuesday.

Six Youths Arrested For Murder

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — Six Holmes High School students have been arrested on murder warrants in connection with the death Monday of a classmate from a rival faction, who was killed when a congenitally weak artery burst allegedly as he was being beaten.

Officers made the arrests Thursday afternoon at the 3,100-student surburban high school — about the time other Holmes students were attending the funeral for 15-year-old Billy Barnett, a sophomore member of the school's Rodeo Club.

Five juveniles were charged with delinquent conduct on warrants alleging murder and confined today in the juvenile dentention center.

The sixth student, 18-year-old David Reyes, was charged with murder and held Thursday night in the Bexar County Jail in lieu of $25,000 bond set by Justice of the Peace Rudy Esquivel.

A hearing was set this afternoon to determine whether the juveniles can be released to their parents or guardians. Three are 16 years old and two are 15.

Police said the six assailants followed Barnett off a school bus Monday afternoon near his home. The beating, police said, came after recent tensions between two Holmes factions.

Bexar County Medical Examiner Dr. Ruben Santos ruled that Barnett died from "natural causes," not from the blows. Santos said Barnett had only four "minor" abrasions and bruises on his body, one on his face and one behind an ear.

"If not for the ruptured artery, this boy would have walked away from this," said Santos, who has gotten numerous angry calls on his ruling.

First Assistant District Attorney Charles Conaway, publically at odds with Santos on the case, said prosecutors allege that the youths beat and kicked Barnett in the head, thereby causing his death.

Conaway said he felt the murder warrants are supported by the evidence gathered thus far. Five eyewitnesses told police Barnett was kicked and beaten by the youths before he died.

The murder charge, however, could be reduced to involuntary manslaughter or aggravated assault, Conaway added.

"After it's all over, maybe no one will be prosecuted. But we're not going to drop it at the ruling of Dr. Santos that it was a natural death," he said.

Police said the beating stemmed from tenion between 'kickers,' those students who belong to the Rodeo Club and dress in country-western attire, and "pot heads," students with long hair who allegedly smoke marijuana.

School administrators, who said they were not aware of any such serious tension, have taken steps to calm the situation.

Airline Forced To Close After FAA Hearings

SAN JUAN, Puerto Rico (UPI) — The Federal Aviation Agency finished hearings on the causes of a Prinair crash that killed eight people by deciding to suspend all operations of the Puerto Rican-based airline until it meets agency-ordered safety measures.

Testimony at the three-day hearings on the July 24 crash in St. Croix disclosed that the plane left San Juan for Santa Cruz 1,060 pounds overweight with uneven cargo distribution, which contributed to the accident.

The victims included seven Baptists from Texas who were enroute to a missionary conference.

FAA Eastern Caribbean Regional Manager Michael Fenn said Thursday the airline had 10 days to appeal the decision and the suspension would stay in effect until safety steps ordered by the FAA were taken.

The FAA said the deficiencies involved the company's failure to comply with proper loading of the aircraft.

The FAA had already imposed $176,000 in fines on the airline for more than 169 alleged rule violations in Prinair's overall operations.

Juror's Emergency Delays Dugas Trial

CORPUS CHRISTI (AP) — Testimony in the capital murder trial of Ovide Joe Dugas Jr. has been postponed for a week because of a juror's "emergency at work."

District Judge Larry Gist scheduled the start of testimony for 9 a.m. Thursday.

Dugas, 33, is accused of slaying five persons near Winnie. He is being tried, however, specifically for the death of 3-year-old Jason Phillips. The boy, his parents and his grandparents were shot to death July 1, 1978, and buried in a common grave in southeast Texas.

Linda May Burnett, accused of being with Dugas when the family was killed, was convicted of the child's death last spring and given the death sentence. She is the only woman on Texas' Death Row.

Drug Business Booms In China

By HUGH A. MULLIGAN

PEKING (AP) — The state-run pharmaceutical houses in the People's Republic of China are fast catching up to our pill-popping Western society in packaging the ancient herbal remedies as patent medicines available in capsule and liquid form.

Mulligan's Stew

A modern and always crowded drug counter in the lobby of the capacious Peking Hotel does a bustling business dispensing ginseng antler pills, swallow pear nest syrup, dog skin plaster, tiger bone liquor and similar tonics and emulsions that have brought relief to billions since the Ming dynasty.

In the downtown business district a much larger and far more lavish People's Drug Store, unrelated to the Washington chain of the same name, carries a full line of aphrodisiacs, emetics, expectorants, "mind refreshers" and something called "Purple Gold Cubes," which according to the label is good for "sore throat, toothache, abdominal flatulence, food and drink poisoning and diarrhea."

The downtown drug emporium is always jammed with middle-aged Peking citizens who worry constantly about heart palpitations and flatulence the way the French go on about their livers and the Americans count calories.

The lobby drug store, restricted to foreigners like the hotel itself, caters in constant chaos to the hypochondria of the overseas Chinese, mostly from Hawaii, Hong Kong and Singapore and the various Chinatowns from London and New York to Augusta, Ga., and San Francisco who can outscore the home team when it comes to worrying about intestinal gas and a fluctuating pulse rate.

The Chinese medicine men have learned to pander to the fevers and chills of their large pill-purchasing population with catchy slogans and portentous prose that seem to owe a lot to aspirin in commercials on American TV.

"At the first sign of a cold or abdominal flatulence take anti-pestilence Kan Mao Tao," advises an ad for an ancient herbal remedy in a slick patent medicine catalogue.

Though all the nostrums are government-produced by the National Native Produce and Animals By-Products Corp., China apparently has a pure food and drug law requiring full disclosure of the ingredients on the label.

The Tiger Bone liquor, for instance, which retails for 18.6 yuan ($12) a fifth, discloses in the small print that it is "refined by infusing tiger bones and various kinds of precious Chinese medical herbs in top grade mellow sorghum wine. Ingredients: Kaquang wine 77.1 per cent, sugar 10.4 per cent, tiger bone extract 12.5 per cent."

Our Chinese guides were unable to ascertain how many tiger herds had to be boiled up annually to promote blood circulation and abate flatulency in a nation of 900 million.

Among the Hawaiian guests at our hotel, Peking Royal Jelly — "Good for loss of appetite, neurasthenia and premature senility" — seemed to be the most popular palliative at 3.2 yuan ($2) a jar. "Royal Jelly," advised the literature curled around the bottle, "is produced from a secretion by worker bee salivary glands termented (sic) with honey, pollen, etc. to be specially used as victuals for queen bees. As a result a queen bee is able to survive over 5 years, on the other hand the life of the worker bee is only 3 to 4 months because of the lack of such feed. At the height of the laying season, a single queen bee is in good ability to lay 2500 to 3000 ova within 24 hours, which in total weight is much heavier than her own body. All of this tells again that the royal jelly is a sort of miraculous medicine in terms of its remarkable potent power in nutrition."

Another intriguing item on sale was "Deluxe Ass Glue," made from 91 percent asses skins in a soluble solution of sugar, water, aromatic oils and radix angelicae.

Based on his definitive work, Communist pill pushers can now offer the party faithful such nostrums as gensing antler pills ("a personal tonic to brace the whole system"), anti-neurasthenia pills ("compounded of pig semen"), swallow pear nest syrup ("made from autumn pear and nest of sea swallow, for coughing and wheezing, an expectorant good for throat") and "mind refreshers" ("for old people troubled with vertigo and poor memory and what worries them more, apoplexy, faint, coma aphasia, squint eyes and twisted mouth."

By MARY CAMPBELL

NEW YORK (AP) — Ella Fitzgerald, whose career started after she was "discovered" at the Apollo Theater in Harlem, had star billing this week a few blocks away at dedication ceremonies of a new performing arts center.

The $7.9 million center, Aaron Davis Hall, at the City College of New York, has a 750-seat theater, a 308-seat experimental theater and a 75-seat workshop theater.

Miss Fitzgerald sang for an hour to conclude the program, part of the time with the American Symphony, which was on stage with her, and sometimes with her trio. She was in fine form singing songs by Gershwin, who attended CCNY, scatting a bossa nova, making a pledge of "Ain't Misbehavin'," an anthem of "St. Louis Blues" and something sweet and low of "Smoke Gets In Your Eyes."

She was called back by the enthusiastic invited audience for three encores.

Ballet superstar Mikhail Baryshnikov danced in the first half of the evening as did three stars of the New York City Ballet, Patricia McBride, Suzanne Farrell and Peter Martins. Actor Keith David recited a Dylan Thomas poem.

Former CCNY president, Robert E. Marshak, said the hall will be used for student training and performing, as a cultural resource for the neighborhood and to enrich the life of all New Yorkers.

The student program is called the Leonard Davis Center for the Performing Arts, started in 1971 and named for the alumnus who endowed it with $2.5 million. The hall is named for his father.

When one looks at the brick walls and block-lined orchestra pit in the 750-seat theater, one is surprised that the acoustics are as good as they sounded at this dedication.

Stock Mart Fades After Broad Gains

NEW YORK (AP) — The stock market staged a broad advance in early trading today, but most of the gains had evaporated by noontime.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials, up almost 6 points in early trading, showed a .60 gain at 806.60 by noon.

Gainers held a 2-1 edge on losers among New York Stock Exchange-listed issues, after leading by as much as 4 to 1 earlier.

Late Thursday the Federal Reserve announced a $3.7 billion downward revision in the estimates of the money supply it had reported for the first two weeks of this month.

The Fed said the original data, which had touched off sharp declines a week ago in the stock and bond markets, had been overstated as a result of a reporting error by an unidentified major bank.

Stock prices rallied strongly at the opening on that word. But then they settled back as the market absorbed news of continuing two-digit inflation rates last month and Citibank's decision to raise its prime lending rate to a record 15¼ percent.

The Citibank move topped an increase to 15 percent by many other leading banks on Tuesday and Wednesday.

The biggest loser on the active list was Data General, down 9 at 50¼ following the company's report Thursday of lower quarterly earnings.

The NYSE's composite common-stock index rose .17 to 56.78. On the American Stock Exchange, the market value index climbed 2.24 to 198.84.

Volume on the Big Board totaled 14.45 million shares after the first two hours, against 11.32 million at the same point Thursday.

Strike Closes GE Jet Plant

LYNN, Mass. (AP) — A growing strike over the job classification of 29 employees has shut down production at General Electric's River Works plant of jet engines for Air Force and Navy fighters.

Some 2,500 workers walked off the job Thursday, joining another 1,000 strikers in the dispute that began Oct. 1.

A General Electric spokesman said the strike effectively stopped production of engines used in the Navy's new F-18 fighter and the Air Force F-5 Freedom Fighter, an all-purpose tactical fighter used by many allied nations.

Also affected are powerplants for helicopters used by all branches of the U.S. military.

The spokesman, who asked not to be identified, refused to speculate on the length of the strike or its impact on military deliveries, but both sides in the dispute have agreed to a meeting with a federal mediator on Tuesday.

Six Youths Arrested For Murder

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — Six Holmes High School students have been arrested on murder warrants in connection with the death Monday of a classmate from a rival faction, who was killed when a congenitally weak artery burst allegedly as he was being beaten.

Officers made the arrests Thursday afternoon at the 3,100-student surburban high school — about the time other Holmes students were attending the funeral for 15-year-old Billy Barnett, a sophomore member of the school's Rodeo Club.

Five juveniles were charged with delinquent conduct on warrants alleging murder and confined today in the juvenile dentention center.

The sixth student, 18-year-old David Reyes, was charged with murder and held Thursday night in the Bexar County Jail in lieu of $25,000 bond set by Justice of the Peace Rudy Esquivel.

A hearing was set this afternoon to determine whether the juveniles can be released to their parents or guardians. Three are 16 years old and two are 15.

Police said the six assailants followed Barnett off a school bus Monday afternoon near his home. The beating, police said, came after recent tensions between two Holmes factions.

Bexar County Medical Examiner Dr. Ruben Santos ruled that Barnett died from "natural causes," not from the blows. Santos said Barnett had only four "minor" abrasions and bruises on his body, one on his face and one behind an ear.

"If not for the ruptured artery, this boy would have walked away from this," said Santos, who has gotten numerous angry calls on his ruling.

First Assistant District Attorney Charles Conaway, publically at odds with Santos on the case, said prosecutors allege that the youths beat and kicked Barnett in the head, thereby causing his death.

"His (Santos') ruling is just an expression of an opinion," said Conaway. "Opinions are like noses. Everyone's got one."

Conaway said he felt the murder warrants are supported by the evidence gathered thus far. Five eyewitnesses told police Barnett was kicked and beaten by the youths before he died.

The murder charge, however, could be reduced to involuntary manslaughter or aggravated assault, Conaway added.

"After it's all over, maybe no one will be prosecuted. But we're not going to drop it at the ruling of Dr. Santos that it was a natural death," he said.

Police said the beating stemmed from tenion between 'kickers,' those students who belong to the Rodeo Club and dress in country-western attire, and "pot heads," students with long hair who allegedly smoke marijuana.

School administrators, who said they were not aware of any such serious tension, have taken steps to calm the situation.

Airline Forced To Close After FAA Hearings

SAN JUAN, Puerto Rico (UPI) — The Federal Aviation Agency finished hearings on the causes of a Prinair crash that killed eight people by deciding to suspend all operations of the Puerto Rican-based airline until it meets agency-ordered safety measures.

Testimony at the three-day hearings on the July 24 crash in St. Croix disclosed that the plane left San Juan for Santa Cruz 1,060 pounds overweight with uneven cargo distribution, which contributed to the accident.

The victims included seven Baptists from Texas who were enroute to a missionary conference.

FAA Eastern Caribbean Regional Manager Michael Fenn said Thursday the airline had 10 days to appeal the decision and the suspension would stay in effect until safety steps ordered by the FAA were taken.

The FAA said the deficiencies involved the company's failure to comply with proper loading of the aircraft.

The FAA had already imposed $176,000 in fines on the airline for more than 169 alleged rule violations in Prinair's overall operations.

Juror's Emergency Delays Dugas Trial

CORPUS CHRISTI (AP) — Testimony in the capital murder trial of Ovide Joe Dugas Jr. has been postponed for a week because of a juror's "emergency at work."

District Judge Larry Gist scheduled the start of testimony for 9 a.m. Thursday.

Dugas, 33, is accused of slaying five persons near Winnie. He is being tried, however, specifically for the death of 3-year-old Jason Phillips. The boy, his parents and his grandparents were shot to death July 1, 1978, and buried in a common grave in southeast Texas.

Linda May Burnett, accused of being with Dugas when the family was killed, was convicted of the child's death last spring and given the death sentence. She is the only woman on Texas' Death Row.
