Governor takes dry run through area

By PATRICK DEAREN
Staff Writer

UPTON-PECOS COUNTIES — He was met at the steps of the jet by a youngster presenting him with a booklet made by school children.

"HELP," it read on the cover.

Inside, Texas Gov. Mark White found a simple letter with a profound plea: "Dear Mr. White: We do not want our cows and sheep to die. Love, Billye Ann."

He walked a few steps farther to the runway gate. Emblazoned on the wire mesh were the words, "Welcome to McCamey, a real dry town."

It was signed, "The Second Grade."

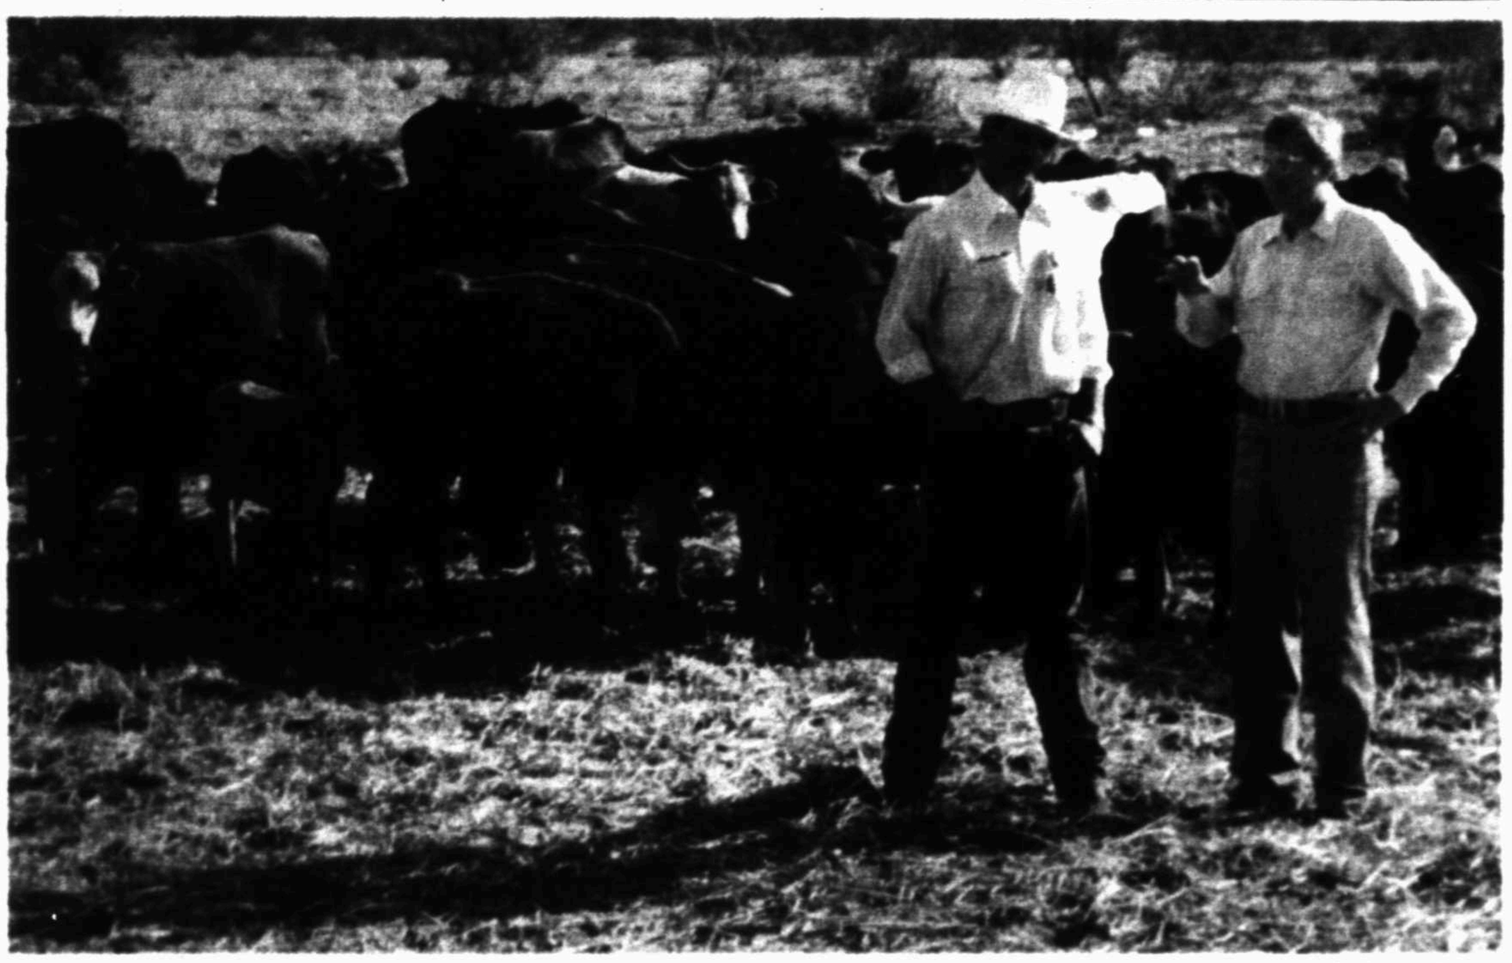

The mouths of babes had set the stage and told the tragic tale White was to see for himself Tuesday — rangeland savaged by drought, boney cattle sustained only by supplement-feed, ranchers faced with near-hopelessness.

"Three weeks ago I was looking at flooded houses in East Texas, and now we're looking at some of the driest land anywhere in the United States," White noted with irony. "We're here to try and help bring this into focus and bring this to the attention of the President...I wouldn't be out here asking for the President's help if it weren't available for him to give."

ALTHOUGH SCATTERED rainshowers were reported in West Texas late Tuesday, the general lack of precipitation this year has left area rangeland virtually barren, as White and other dignitaries saw firsthand on tours of the Ed Hughs Slash-Hook Ranch in Upton and Crane counties and the William Honaker Ranch in Pecos County.

White was accompanied by Texas Agriculture Commissioner Jim Hightower; Congressman Kent Hance of the 19th District; Texas legislators Bill Sims, Larry Don Shaw and Dudley Harrison; and U.S. Sen. Lloyd Bentsen's aide, Mario Ortiz.

Prosecutor says Mattox probe continuing

AUSTIN (AP) — The prosecutor who helped indict Attorney General Jim Mattox on bribery charges says the investigation is continuing with inquiries into an artificial turf contract and state intervention in a private bankruptcy case.

Mattox became the first Texas attorney general in modern history to be indicted while in office Tuesday. He was accused of threatening to ruin a Houston law firm's public bond business unless it stopped trying to interrogate Mattox's sister.

Travis County District Attorney Ronnie Earle mentioned two subjects Tuesday when asked what was "left on the table" as matters still under investigation concerning Mattox.

"Allegations involving Superturf and Shearn Moody," Earle said in referring to two other controversial matters reported in The Dallas Morning News.

The newspaper said Mattox steered a $1.3 million synthetic turf contract at Texas Southern University to a political supporter after it had already been awarded to someone else. It was alleged that the university changed its specifications for the turf after Mattox intervened. Mattox denied any wrongdoing and said he saved the state $50,000.

The paper also has reported that Mattox intervened on behalf of Moody in a private bankruptcy case, and that 10 days later A. Don Crowder, Mattox's former law partner, received a $20,000 payment from Moody, a Galveston millionaire.

Mattox acknowledged Crowder phoned him on behalf of Moody, but denied they discussed the merits of the case. Mattox said the $20,000 was a retainer and paid for Crowder's legal services after Mattox had already intervened.

Mattox, who did not criticize Earle during the 2½-month investigation, said Tuesday after the indictment that he was sorry the district attorney "caved in on this thing. I hope he's got guts enough to come down to the courtroom and try me himself."

State District Judge Mace Thurman set a $5,000 personal bond for Mattox and a warrant was issued for his arrest. Mattox was smiling and talkative when he surrendered at the sheriff's office, where he was fingerprinted and photographed. He predicted he would be found innocent and would emerge a "hero."

The indictment accuses the attorney general of telling attorney Wiley Caldwell of Fulbright & Jaworski that the state would not approve certain bonds handled by the Houston firm, unless that firm would quit trying to take a deposition from Mattox's sister in a suit between the state and Mobil Oil Corp., the firm's client.

The indictment was returned by a Travis County grand jury that has been investigating Mattox's campaign finances and allegations against the attorney general since June 29. Earle said the investigation into Mattox's campaign finance report was finished.

Commercial bribery is a third-degree felony punishable by two to 10 years in prison and a maximum $5,000 fine.

Gov. Mark White, who like Mattox is a Democrat, issued a brief written statement calling for a swift and fair trial.

Common Cause, a lobby group which sees itself as a government watchdog, called for Mattox to take a "leave of absence" until the matter is resolved in court.

Other statewide elected officials indicted while in office within the past 10 years include former Treasurer Warren G. Harding and former State Supreme Court Justice Don Yarbrough. Yarbrough resigned, and Harding withdrew from a re-election bid.

Mattox, 40, said he had no intention of resigning. He accused Mobil of causing his problems to get out of paying the state's claimed share in a lawsuit over disputed oil leases, money that would be used for public education.

"I'm going to follow my aggressive actions toward Mobil Oil and these other oil companies to collect the money that is owed to the school children of the state," Mattox vowed.

In New York, a spokesman for Mobil Oil Corp. had no comment.

Other state officials have had trouble with law

AUSTIN (AP) — Texas public officials in trouble with the law often settle their problems without going to trial — or jail. Attorney General Jim Mattox, on the other hand, has dared the district attorney to prosecute him.

Mattox was indicted by the Travis County grand jury Tuesday on a charge of commercial bribery, which carries a prison term of two to 10 years and a $5,000 fine.

Mattox said of District Attorney Ronnie Earle, "I hope he's got guts enough to come down to the courtroom and try me himself."

Earle said the charge against Mattox is based on a "long and involved" definition of wrongdoing that some might have trouble understanding.

Other officials' legal problems have not been so difficult to understand.

In 1983 alone, House Speaker Gib Lewis; former Texas Supreme Court Justice Don Yarbrough; state Rep. Joe Gamez, D-San Antonio; former Rep. David London, D-Bonham; and Earle himself have faced the bar of justice.

Lewis pleaded "no contest" to a misdemeanor charge that he failed to file financial disclosure statements and was fined $800.

Yarbrough was assessed a seven-year prison term on July 29 for jumping bail and fleeing to a Caribbean island while appealing a 1978 sentence of five years for lying to a grand jury. He is now in prison at Huntsville.

Gamez on June 1 was fined and got two years' probation after missing five court appearances stemming from a driving while intoxicated charge.

London pleaded no contest Aug. 29 to cattle rustling, and in a plea bargain with Travis County authorities was given a two-year sentence that will run concurrently with a 10-year term for stealing cattle in Hopkins County.

Earle, who is in charge of a Public Integrity Unit that investigates state officials, filed a criminal complaint against himself on March 14 for failing to file two years of required campaign expense reports. Earle confessed he had failed to file reports for 1981 and 1982, a misdemeanor carrying a maximum fine of $200.

Perhaps with such problems in mind, the 1983 Legislature approved a bill that created a new commission to advise state officials, legislators and state employees whether their campaign tactics are ethical.

The bill, which went into effect Sept. 1, also bans the personal use of campaign contributions.

Lebanon turns back attacking Druse militia

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — The Lebanese army said today its 8th Brigade defeated a three-pronged attack mounted overnight by Syrian-backed Druse militiamen to seize a mountaintop town overlooking the U.S. Marine base in Beirut.

An army communique said the attackers suffered heavy losses during nightlong fighting around the strategic town of Souk el-Gharb, nine miles southeast of the Lebanese capital.

The battle for the town has become the focal point of an 11-day civil war pitting Druse militiamen of leftist opposition leader Walid Jumblatt's Progressive Socialist Party against the Lebanese army and rightist Christian militias of the Phalange Party.

Seizure of the town would put the Druse and their anti-government allies within easy firing range of the Marine base at Beirut's international airport as well as the presidential palace and the U.S. ambassador's residence in suburbs east of the capital.

President Reagan's decision Tuesday to allow air and naval artillery support to curb threats against the multinational peacekeeping force was seen by Western observers here as partly designed to prevent the fall of Souk el-Gharb.

Two British Buccaneer fighter-bombers flew a rooftop sweep over Beirut on Tuesday in a show of force for the multinational troops. They thundered in from the island of Cyprus, flying over U.S. and other ships off Beirut.

The Western warships were shadowed by a Soviet missile frigate and a Soviet radio intercept ship, which were spotted about two miles away from the U.S. aircraft carrier Dwight D. Eisenhower.

The 1,200 Marines on shore are backed by 2,000 Marines who arrived Monday on ships posted off the Lebanese coast. A memorial service was held Tuesday for two of the four Marines killed since Aug. 29.

In Damascus, Syrian's state minister for foreign affairs, Farouk Chareh, told a news conference: "The Americans opted for military escalation and we see this as a dangerous development. This is exactly how the American involvement started in Vietnam."

"We shall defend our stand with all means available to us," he said. "And we shall help the Lebanese nationalist (opposition) forces since this is vital to our security."

In Moscow, the official Tass news agency said Reagan's decision on air strikes would allow the Marines to "unleash a new war beginning with a direct seizure of Lebanon and military provocations against Syria."

Syrian forces have been in Lebanon since snuffing out the 1975-76 Moslem-Christian civil war and they refuse to withdraw. Israel, which invaded Lebanon 15 months ago to crush the Palestine Liberation Organization, has agreed to withdraw only if the Syians do. In the interim, however, the Israelis have pulled back from the central mountains in hopes of reducing their casualties.

Officials in Beirut said the government objects to any limitations on the Lebanese army's role in the mountains, where war erupted between Druse and Christian militiamen upon the Israeli army's withdrawal Sept. 4.

Late Tuesday, U.S. special envoy Robert C.McFarlane returned to Beirut from Saudi Arabia and conferred with Lebanese Foreign Minister Elie Salem and national security adviser Wadi Haddad on his talks with Saudi officials about a possible ceasefire in Lebanon, Beirut radio reported. It gave no details about the two-hour meeting.

In Israel, Former Defense Minister Ariel Sharon called for joint U.S.-Israeli action to prevent the "massacre" of Lebanese Christians trapped by Druse militias in the Chouf mountains.

Interviewed Tuesday on Israel Radio, Sharon said there was a danger that about 40,000 Christians besieged in the town of Deir al-Kamar could be slaughtered.

He indicated Israel should act alone if Washington refused to commit any of the Marines in the peacekeeping force to such a mission.

Chance for thunderstorms fading

As today's 20 percent chance of thunderstorms fades into partly cloudy skies tonight, Midlanders can take a small amount of comfort from Tuesday's scattered showers — which at least broke the three inch mark for yearly precipitation.

According to the National Weather Service at Midland Regional Airport, the .22 of an inch recorded overnight brought the yearly rainfall to 3.01 inches. No more precipitation is expected for awhile although skies will remain partly cloudy through Thursday.

Temperatures should drop into the middle 60s tonight with a high on Thursday expected near 90.

Southerly winds will breeze at 10-15 mph through Thursday.

Tuesday's high of 92 was 10 degrees cooler than the record high of 102, set in 1930. The overnight low of 64 missed the record low of 52, set in 1949, by 12 degrees.

White tours drought area

With less than an inch of rain having fallen on the Slash-Hook through Tuesday morning, owner James Edwin Hughs has been forced to reduce his cattle herd from 600 cows with calves to only 80 — and some of those are but yearlings.

"We're keeping them penned up," said Hughs, standing before the bovines moments after telling his plight to the governor. "We felt like we had to get them in where we could feed 'em so they could build up. We're feeding this 80 head about $55 worth of feed a day. But the big loss is the cattle are just not doing any good and they're not going to until we get them on grass."

FOR HUGHS, it's the culmination of three years of tough luck.

"'81 was just barely a get-by year," he noted. "It looked like about the time we ran out of rain, we'd get one. But on Sept. 3, 1981, we got .3 of an inch and since that time we've had 6.2 inches in this area. Our area gets about 13 inches a year on the average."

Upton County rancher Bud Poage's situation is just as desperate. He normally runs 2,000 ewes and 300 cows on his 30 sections, but drought has forced him to cut back to 400 ewes and 25 cows — his basic breeding stock.

"It's the worst it's been since the '50s," he said. "We're down to where we're eating up the root stock on the grass...The dry weather's hurting, but so is the market situation. In 1979 my lambs brought over $50 (a head), in 1980 they brought $44, in 1981 they brought $40, in 1982 they brought $36, and this year they're going to bring around $22 to $24."

Poage noted that the "worst rainfall we had during the drought of the '50s was 47 percent of our normal annual rainfall, and this year's been less than that." On University of Texas land he leases, he said, rain has amounted only to .7 inch in 1983.

The dignitaries were unanimous in their declaration that range conditions were the most devastating they had witnessed.

"IT'S THE WORST drought in our recorded history," said Hightower. "We're talking mesquite bushes dying. It's hard to kill a mesquite. There's no grass on rangeland that we've been across this morning. There's nothing there for the cattle to eat...We're talking about a whole ecology dying and herds having to be liquidated and land blowing away. This is a historic drought here, and serious problems can't be treated just like another little hot-spot in the country."

White and Hightower both expressed disappointment that Secretary of Agriculture John Block declined to accompany them on the tour.

"We certainly did invite him, by formal letter, hand-delivered to him under the governor's signature," said Hightower. "We asked for him, or we asked for his top assistant or we asked for any little flunky he wanted to send. And they were all too busy. It's hard to imagine. I read in the paper today him saying that he was sad to see such a drought sweeping the country. Well, it's sadder yet, it seems to me, to be out here in this country with these hard-working people who are paying taxes to a government that won't even respond."

Hightower said thus far the federal government has only approved loans for drought-plagued ranchers.

"GIVING A RANCHER a loan these days is about like throwing a bucket of water to a drowning man," he said. "It's not really going to help. They're going under because of their debt in the first place. In the second place, the loans that they qualify for they can get better interest rates at the bank right now."

The agriculture commissioner noted that "with the flick of his Bic" Block could implement three programs which would immediately address the needs of farmers and ranchers: an emergency feed grain program, a disaster payment program and a corn-feeding program.

"We've got 17.5 million bushels of corn stored up in the Panhandle right up the road that's government," he said. "It's not fit for human consumption. It's costing us $5 million a year to store it. If we could release that corn down here, they could feed that corn to sheep just directly. It's hard for cattle to pick it up, so you'd have to mix it with hay."

Hightower said that he believed congressional pressure eventually would force Block to take action.

Hance explained the corn stored in the Panhandle and South Plains amounts to 56 million bushels, 42 million bushels of which were brought in from Iowa due to the grain embargo. Included, he added, are low-quality types "that are not going to be used for any other thing. It could be utilized in an emergency feed program. This is costing us 50-65 cents per bushel per year to store."

HANCE SAID HE and others hoped to meet with White House officials and Block next week.

"I know the argument they've been using — well, if we open (the emergency feed program) up in this area, we're going to have to open it up in other areas," he said. "I would say this: If other areas have been devastated like this area, it should be opened up."

Ranchers were cautiously optimistic that the interest generated by Tuesday's tour would bring pressure on federal authorities.

"I think it'll do some good," said Upton County rancher Tommy Owens, who recently accompanied Hightower to Washington, D.C. in an effort to secure aid for ranchers. "(But) I was real disappointed in Block. I thought he could show the courtesy of sending an aide down today."

"I think probably (Block) is not familiar with the severity of our situation," said Hughs. "He's more familiar with his area (Illinois). Their drought to him is bad, and they don't realize what our situation is."

Owens, who normally grazes 140 cows and 2,500-3,000 sheep, has been forced to cut back to only 17 cows and 1,200 sheep. He has begun supplement-feeding alfalfa hay to his sheep to better their breeding chances.

"WE FELT LIKE if we didn't give them something, we might not get any lambs," he said. "And if it did rain and we went on and we didn't get a lamb crop, we'd be further in a bind. So we're feeding a lot of hay right now."

The Honaker Ranch in Pecos County, meanwhile, has reduced its cattle herd 70 percent as rainfall has amounted only to 2 inches this year. The cost of supplement-feeding the livestock has averaged $4,019 per month.

Both Poage and Owens concurred that a good rainfall several weeks before the first frost would assist in supplying forage for sheep.

"Within the next two weeks, it's got to rain," said Poage.

"Our country," said Owens, "is very good weed country. We feel like if we could get some rains and bring some good weeds, we'll have winter weeds. It might carry us over to the point where we could almost go to spring."

And if the rains or federal assistance don't come?

"It'll mean liquidating for a lot of people," said Poage. "Personally, I've got 400 mother ewes that I'm going to feed for another year before I give them up, because I've spent since 1963 building a genetic pool for my sheep. Our situation's different here. We can't just go out and get the genetic structure we need for this area somewhere else in the sheep business. Our sheep are more drought tolerant and they're more productive in this area."

REGARDLESS OF drought or flood, most area ranchers say they'll try their best to stay in the ranching industry.

"I'll be here; I'll be in business when it's all over," said Poage, who has had his own sheep flock since he was 15. "I may have to do a lot of different things, but I'll be here. The people in this area are going to stay. Their roots are here and it's a way of life with us. We'll do whatever it takes to stay."

"It's tough," noted Owens, sighing deeply. "It sure is. But West Texas people are tough."

Switzerland stalls Moscow flights

LONDON (AP) — Neutral Switzerland today joined other European countries in suspending air links with Moscow to protest the downing of the South Korean jumbo jet, and a Soviet official insisted his country would pay no compensation for the 269 victims of the attack.

Off the northern Japanese coast, a fourth mutilated body believed to be from the plane was found today and ships began using huge fishing nets to search the sea floor for more bodies and debris. Two more U.S. Navy salvage vessels were dispatched to join the hunt.

In Tokyo, Japanese officials tried to present to Soviet Ambassador Vladimir Pavlov a written demand for compensation for Japanese passengers killed in the attack, but they said Pavlov refused to accept the note.

In Moscow, First Deputy Foreign Minister Georgi M. Kornienko said at a news conference today that global criticism of the airliner attack would not affect U.S.-Soviet talks on limiting medium-range nuclear missiles.

He told foreign and Soviet reporters: "There is no connection and there cannot be any connection between" the airliner and the Geneva talks. He also ruled out compensation for relatives of the airliner victims, saying it should be borne by "those that made it (the airliner) an instrument of their dirty policies."

The Soviets have said the airliner was on a U.S.-initiated spying mission when it was downed by a Soviet jet fighter on Sept. 1.

Swiss officials said they would suspend landing rights of the Soviet airline Aeroflot for two weeks and allow the national carrier Swissair to join the boycott of flights to Moscow.

The boycott, requested by Swissair pilots and endorsed by the airline, followed announcements of boycotts by Belgium, Britain, Denmark, Finland, Italy, Luxembourg, the Netherlands, Norway, Portugal, Sweden, and West Germany. As a result, air travel betweeen the West and the Soviet Union has been disrupted and travelers were scrambling today to make flight arrangements.

The boycott accelerated Tuesday when the 17-nation European Organization of Airline Pilots' Associations announced it is backing last week's decision by the International Federation of Air Line Pilots Associations to ban all commercial flights to the Soviet capital for 60 days.

But French and Austrian lines were still flying several flights a week to and from the Soviet capital; Paris, Vienna, Helsinki, Athens and airports in Turkey were to remain open to the Soviet airline Aeroflot, and travelers could also fly via other Soviet bloc countries and transfer to and from Western airlines.

Travelers also could use the Finnish state railway, which added passenger cars to trains traveling back and forth to Leningrad.

In Moscow, the U.S. Embassy said 400 to 500 Americans were believed in the Soviet Union and it advised U.S. travelers to make alternative arrangements to beat the boycott. Airline offices there have been besieged by passengers with unusable return tickets for airlines affected by the ban.

There was no indication anyone was stranded, but Americans in Moscow said the ban was making routes back to the United States highly complicated. There have been no direct flights between the Soviet Union and the United States for two years, and the customary route home via Montreal is not available because Canada has temporarily barred Moscow-Montreal flights.

The U.S. Defense Department on Tuesday night reported sending two more Navy salvage vessels to the Sea of Japan to hunt for wreckage of the Korean Air Lines jet shot.

American officials said searchers hope to find evidence such as the jetliner's "black box," which contains in-flight recordings, that might provide more clues to the plane's fate.

South Korean navy officers were to join the search by boarding U.S. ships already in international waters off the southwest tip of the Soviet island of Sakhalin, officials in Seoul said today.

They also said South Korean frogmen would begin a search of the area Saturday.

At South Korea's request, the International Civil Aviation Organization will meet Thursday in Montreal to discuss Western demands for an investigation of the incident. Western delegates say there is a good chance a resolution condemning the Soviet Union for the attack will result because only a simple majority is required for passage.

A resolution deploring the attack failed to get through the U.N. Security Council because of a Soviet veto Monday.

Because of the East-West air link ban, business travelers and big European tour operators tried to arrange other routes, although the choice of alternate airlines was dwindling.

The dates and provisions of the bans vary from country to country, playing havoc with European timetables. Denmark, for example, will begin a two-week ban starting Thursday.

Other countries, like Portugal, have announced a 30-day ban on air traffic by Aeroflot. A government statement issued in Lisbon said the order would take effect as soon as the Foreign Ministry officially notified the local Aeroflot office. Aeroflot has a weekly stop in Lisbon on a flight to and from Cuba.

The Irish government Tuesday banned Aeroflot from picking up or dropping off passengers at Shannon airport for 60 days but said Aeroflot planes will be able to refuel there.

Senators urging Reagan to order specific sanctions

WASHINGTON (AP) — Senate conservatives are trying to nudge President Reagan into ordering specific sanctions against the Soviet Union beyond his strong rhetorical attacks against the destruction of South Korean Flight 007.

"The president is missing a golden opportunity if he doesn't nail the Soviet hide to the wall," said Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C. "I want him to go beyond the rhetoric and do something substantive."

The Reagan administration, meanwhile, announced today that Federal Aviation Administrator J. Lynn Helms would go to Montreal on Thursday to ask an emergency session of the International Civil Aviation Organization to conduct an international inquiry into the downing of the KAL plane.

The FAA head, at the White House to meet with Reagan before leaving, said he expects the Soviets to participate in the meeting and to participate in such an inquiry because to do otherwise would constitute an acknowledgement that they are not interested in the safety of international civil aviation.

"I would think the Russians would not dare to refuse," the FAA administrator said.

Senate leaders of both parties had agreed on a resolution — to be voted on today — which would harshly condemn the Soviet Union for shooting down the civilian airliner carrying 269 people, including 61 Americans, on Sept. 1.

The Soviets, the resolution says, are guilty of a "cold-blooded attack on a commercial airliner ... which will rank among one of the most infamous and reprehensible acts of aviation history."

It has the support of the White House, and almost all congressional leaders.

But the resolution, written by Majority Leader Howard H. Baker Jr., R-Tenn., and Minority Leader Robert C. Byrd, D-W.Va., recommends few specific actions against the Soviets, except for reparations to survivors and U.S. support for joint actions with other nations.

Helms and a group of about 10 conservatives have agreed on much tougher wording which would urge Reagan to recall the U.S. ambassador to Moscow for urgent consultations, to sharply reduce the number of Soviet diplomats in the United States and to link strategic arms negotiations with the plane incident.

Helms said he wants Reagan to use the shooting down of the plane as a reason for a broad re-examination of U.S.-Soviet relations, including "willingness of the Soviet Union to abide by international law as a responsible member of the community of nations."

Reagan, the resolution says, should "conduct a comprehensive reappraisal of the complete spectrum of U.S.-Soviet relations, including arms control, human rights, East-West trade, and regional issues."

The senator said he sent copies of the resolution to the White House on Tuesday and believes Reagan may eventually accept some of its provisions.

Helms has previously used filibusters to tie up the Senate for weeks while he has pushed various conservative causes.

While he will pursue votes on his version of the Korean plane resolution, Helms said he would not filibuster this time.

Majority leader Baker has said he opposes any additions to his version of the resolution, but would not block votes or debate on alternatives.

Among other senators supporting the Helms' resolution are Republicans William Armstrong of Colorado and Steven Symms of Idaho.

The resolution would push Reagan to challenge Soviet aid to Central American nations like Nicaragua as inconsistent with the Monroe Doctrine.

Woman reports rape; Several burglaries probed

A South Main Street woman reported she was raped at her home early this morning.

The woman, 23, came to the police station and told officers she was awakened about 3:50 a.m. by a nude man touching her breasts. She said he wore only a cloth over his face and apparently entered the house through a bedroom window.

He was described as black, in his 20s, weighing 200 lbs and standing about 5 feet, 9 inches tall. Police are investigating.

Thirsty burglars apparently unable to wait for the store to open broke into McLoyd's Spirits at 1120 N. Big Spring early today and made off with 47 bottles of scotch valued at $1,657. Police responding to a burglar alarm at 3:39 a.m. found that a plate glass window had been broken to gain entry.

Police Roundup

In another burglary complaint, Pilcher's Laundromat at 912 S. Garfield was entered and $120 in cash was reported stolen.

Ken Locke of Alpine told officers someone broke into a residence at 1601 Manor Court in the past three or four days and took a TV set and refrigerator worth a total of $1,004. In addition, $50 damage was reported to the kitchen floor and a rear door when the refrigerator was dragged outside.

And Ed Pope of the Kingsway Motel, 3801 W. Wall, said $400 worth clothing and a garment bag were stolen from his room Tuesday. There was no sign of forced entry, according to police.

White says grant will finance Texas Victim's Clearinghouse

AUSTIN — Gov. Mark White has announced that a recent $109,000 criminal justice grant will be used to finance the Texas Victim's Clearinghouse, which is operating as a new division in the governor's office.

The clearinghouse will identify and coordinate crime victim assistance programs operating in the state and will concentrate on crimes against women.

Clearinghouse project coordinator Suzanne McDaniel Willms said the grant will fund one year's operation through August 1984.

In addition to providing training manuals and materials for agencies offering services to crime victims, Willms said the clearinghouse will publish a directory of such services and update the list in a quarterly newsletter.

The clearinghouse staff will hold regional workshops on the needs of crime victims for interested law enforcement agencies, prosecutors' offices and community service organizations.

The clearinghouse hopes to have a toll-free number in operation by October to refer crime victims to available assistance programs. More information can be obtained by calling (512) 475-3021.

Former credit, savings employees plead guilty to embezzlement

The former president of a credit union and an ex-employee of a savings association pleaded guilty Tuesday in federal court to embezzlement.

Convicted were Arthur Leroy Hix, 51, of Odessa, former president of THD-6 Credit Union in Odessa, and Socorro Miller Wells, 22, formerly of the Andrews Highway Branch of Home Savings Association in Midland.

Hix admitted to U.S. District Judge Lucius D. Bunton that he embezzled $622.52 on Dec. 17 and $627.66 on Oct. 1.

"I can't answer why I did it, but I did it," Hix told Bunton. "I don't even touch alcohol."

Mrs. Wells, who was charged with embezzling $1,034 from the savings assocation by misapplying two note payments, pleaded guilty to taking $517 from the assocation on March 24. The second charge of her stealing another $517 is to be dismissed by the government in a plea-bargain agreement.

Both defendants are to make restitution.

Mrs. Wells, who could be imprisoned up to five years and fined $5,000, is be sentenced by Bunton at 12:22 p.m. Oct. 5 in the courtroom of the George Mahon Federal Building.

Hix, who could be imprisoned up to 10 years on the two counts and fined $10,000, is to be sentenced at 12:37 p.m. Oct. 5.

The cases were investigated by the Federal Bureau of Investigation.

Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — A "typical" Midland County motorist will pay an average 9.2 percent more for car insurance if an industry-proposed rate hike request is approved by the State Board of Insurance.

The industry, represented by the Texas Automobile Insurance Service Office, is seeking a statewide average increase of 11.4 percent. TAISCO's request, and recommendations by the SBI, will be taken under consideration at a hearing to be held Sept. 27 in Austin.

Automobile insurance rates vary considerably, according to factors such as age and sex of the driver, type and age of vehicle insured, type of coverage and geographic location.

TAISCO's "typical" motorist owns a 1983, low-to-medium-priced car that is not used in business, but is driven to and from work — with no male driver under 25 and no female driver under 21.

Part of the reason for the proposed rate hike, according to TAISCO, is that mandatory liability coverage for Texas drivers is to be increased from $10,000 bodily injury per person to $15,000, and the $5,000 now required for property damage is to go to $15,000, effective Jan. 1.

In addition, the current minimum liability coverage of $20,000 per accident will be raised to $30,000.

A comparison of rates now in effect with the proposed new ones (in parentheses) shows the following increase the "typical" Midland County driver can expect to pay if the request is granted:

Bodily injury and property damage — $116 ($162).

Personal injury protection — $30 ($34).

Comprehensive coverage — $158 ($164).

Collision coverage — $280 ($278).

Total — $584 ($638).

Dollar difference — $54.

Percent difference — 9.2.

Dollar change due to increased liability limits — $14.

Study: Moderate recovery needed to help debtor nations

WASHINGTON (AP) — A moderate rebound in the world's economy is necessary to substantially alleviate the serious problems of developing nations that are struggling to repay massive foreign loans, a new study said today.

The study by William R. Cline, a senior fellow at the Institute for International Economics, found that the economies of the industrialized nations need to grow about an average of 3 percent annually in 1984-86 to bolster the poorer nations.

"If this growth rate can be achieved, the debt problems of the developing countries should be manageable and should show considerable improvement," he said.

As a result, he argues that "the achievement of faster growth and lower interest rates is crucial to resolving the debt problems."

He, like many other economists, recommends a reduction in the enormous deficits projected for the U.S. budget to help ease the upward pressure on interest rates. Analysts say the pressure comes when the government goes into the credit markets to finance the borrowing, competing with consumers and private businesses for credit.

Cline expects the growth pace for the industrialized economies to be about 1.5 percent to 2 percent this year. The U.S. economy, spurting ahead at a faster pace than most economists expected, is projected to grow at about 5.5 percent this year, according to Reagan administration projections.

In his study, Cline contends the debt crisis affecting the poorer nations is a problem of cash shortage, not "fundamental insolvency."

He said that while defaulting on the debts might seem to be a way out of their problems, debtor countries fear such actions would cut them off from any future lending and could lead to legal and economic reprisals by countries holding their loans. Such fears, he said, should continue to keep the debtor countries from going back on their debts.

He underscores the seriousness of the debt problem and makes a pitch for congressional approval of an $8.4 billion increase in the U.S. contribution to the International Monetary Fund, which has been working out rescue packages for debtor nations.

At the end of 1982, the total debt of the developing countries stood at about $745 billion, according to study.

Much of the debt is owed to private banks in industrialized countries.

States have bottle bills

From Wire Reports

Returnable container laws have saved local governments money, created jobs and reduced the number of beverage cans and bottles that pepper highways and parks. Proponents hope the same will occur in New York, where a new bottle bill takes effect Monday.

"We've been fighting for bottle laws for 10 years and we've been gaining," said Sandie Nelson of Environmental Action Inc., a Washington, D.C.-based lobbying group that has led the fight for bottle laws.

"It's been a hard-won fight in all states. They're not going to give up and they're just going to keep at it."

The eight other states with bills requiring 5-cent deposits on beverage cans, bottles or plastic containers report that litter has been cut as much as 85 percent, with considerable savings in cleanup costs. In Michigan alone, municipalities have saved $18 million a year.

At the same time, bottle bills have created jobs, contrary to what industry opponents had argued. But consumers in deposit states — Oregon, Maine, Vermont, Massachusetts, Michigan, Iowa, Delaware and Connecticut — have also been hit with higher prices for beer and soda.

The effort also has spawned at least one new device for dealing with the cleanup. Environmental Products Co. of McLean, Va., is making a machine that takes an empty can, crushes it and gives the customer back a nickel.

Iowa's law, which took effect in 1979, is typical of most bottle bills. It imposes a 5-cent deposit on each bottle or container of carbonated beverage or beer. Retailers pay the deposit when they buy beverages from distributors.

When bottles and cans are returned, customer get their deposit back. The retailer then bills the distributors for reimbursement, plus a 1-cent handling fee.

Nationwide, the deposit concerns the distributor, not the manufacturer. So bottles once full of Kirin or Watney's or Carlsberg beer don't go back to Japan or Britain or Denmark — the distributor takes care of them.

Capturing New York — which sells an estimated 7 billion containers each year, according to the Can Manufacturers Institute — was the peak of the container law movement.

"New York will be very significant because of its size and population but also New York City is a fantastic testing ground to implement a law in a densely populated area," Ms. Nelson said.

It also could encourage passage of similar laws in New Jersey and Rhode Island, which currently have bills before their legislatures, and in Florida, South Carolina, Maryland, Virginia and Washington, D.C., which plan to introduce legislation in January.

In addition, Arkansas, Oklahoma, Texas, Kansas, Minnesota, Wisconsin and New Mexico are considering laws, according to Environmental Action.

Four Western states — California, Colorado, Arizona and Washington — tossed out bottle-bill initiatives last November, crushing one of the broadest efforts by environmental groups to boost the roster of mandatory deposit states.

Muslim colony growing in hills of New Mexico

ABIQUIU, N.M. (AP) — The 2,260-square-foot adobe mosque is hidden among the juniper trees and scrub bushes that dot the rolling hills of northern New Mexico.

But for the 20 familes living north of this 300-year-old Spanish village, the mosque, with its self-supporting domed roofs, vaults and arches, is the focal point of their small colony and is the only rural Muslim mosque in the United States, supporters say.

"We're not building a community. We're not trying to change what is already here," said Nuridin Durkee, explaining what he and his non-profit educational and religious organization, Dar al-Islam, are hoping to accomplish. "We're not a commune. We're not remnants of the '60s or '70s."

So far, reaction from the residents of this area northwest of Santa Fe has been cautious but favorable.

"They (the Muslims) have been no problem," said one woman, who asked not be identified. "When they first bought the land, we didn't know what to think. But they have made every effort to be nice and stay to themselves. I don't think anyone here cares."

"We're not building a community. We're not trying to change what is already here. We're not a commune. We're not remnants of the '60s or 70s."

— Nuridin Durkee, head of Dar al-Islam

The mosque, built out of clay, mud, straw and adode bricks, was dedicated in June 1981.

"The bricks are smaller than those conventionally used," said Durkee, a New York native who converted to Islam from Catholicism about 17 years ago. "They were laid by hand in a way to support each other. It's the way it was done almost 1,000 years ago, and it's a much cheaper way to build."

Wooden doors, hand-made by Dar al-Islam members, open into the mosque, which is barren except for a colorful Mexican-tiled foot wash on the side and a row of wooden boxes similar to mail slots where shoes are placed before worshipers can enter various praying rooms.

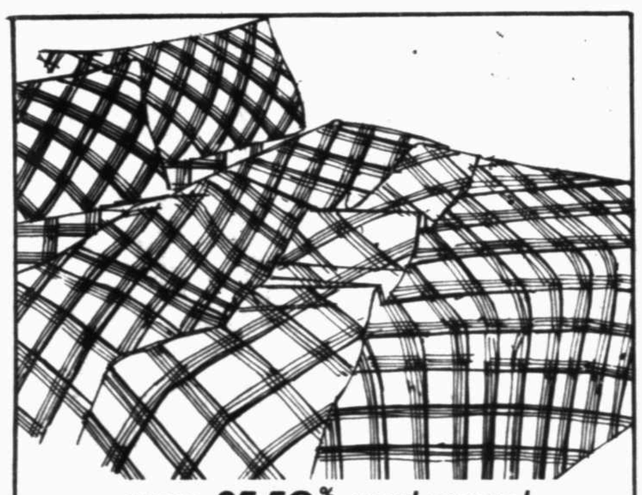

Other plans for the 1,200 acres of land Dar al-Islam purchased for $1.3 million include a school and library, a medical center, several small houses and "one day, hopefully, a hotel-motel complex and restaurant," Durkee said.

The complex is expected to take 10 years to complete.

Government discovers corruption

WINDHOEK, South-West Africa (AP) — A government commission says this South African territory's multilayered system of racial and ethnic governments has resulted in widespread mismanagement, inefficiency and corruption.

The report of the Thirion Commission, appointed by the South African government, was depressing news for residents who have grown increasingly cynical about the prospects of early independence for the territory (also known as Namibia) and whose economy is suffering its worst depression in decades.

The report blames the South African-designed system to keep tribes and racial and ethnic groups apart and that means, for example, 11 separate education and health departments.

The territory's Master Builder's Association complained that "it is farcical in a country of 1 million inhabitants to have 14 government departments" governing building regulations.

THE THIRION Commission zeroed in on the separate "representative authorities" that govern each group, part of an effort to protect the rights of the white minority of 75,000. Each of the 10 black and mixed-race tribes has its own regional authority.

The system, fully implemented in 1979, often has been described as a blueprint for solving South Africa's own problem of granting political power to non-whites without jeopardizing the power and privileges of whites.

But the commission cites dozens of cases of nepotism, corruption, mismanagement, missing funds, missing or forged reports, incompetence and abuse of privilege by these "representative authorities." Several officials were ordered to repay money improperly used and disciplinary action was recommended against other officials.

Pastor Peter Kalangula, chairman of the Owamboland Authority and at one time considered the only man with a chance of defeating the South-West Africa People's Organization (SWAPO) in an election, was ordered to repay the equivalent of $30,000 for building materials supplied to him in an "irregular manner."

CRITICS of the system said there would have been more irregularities uncovered if the commission had not been restricted to examining just two tribal authorities, the Owambos and the Damaras. Owambos, the founding base of SWAPO, make up the biggest tribe with roughly 500,000 people while the Damaras total 85,000.

A report prepared for the territory's administrator-general, leaked to the news media, said, "The present constitutional dispensation, whereby representative authorities are allowed to live like parasites on the fruits of the land without any control or supervision and without delivering a corresponding level of results, is rapidly leading to the downfall of the entire country."

Eric Lang, a local businessman, said, "We have pawned our economic future during an orgy of politically motivated spending, which has created a government monster that swallows up nearly 70 percent of our gross domestic product."

Mattox predicts he will 'end up a hero'

AUSTIN (AP) — Attorney General Jim Mattox says his indictment or a charge of commercial bribery was "a pretty well staged play," mostly by Mobil Oil Corp., and he predicts he will end up a hero.

"When all this is over, the people of this state will realize what has taken place," Mattox said Tuesday after he was fingerprinted, photographed and released on $5,000 bond.

"I just suspect I'll come out more a hero than anything else," he told reporters.

Mattox, beginning to thicken around the middle at 40, appeared cool in a light tan suit. He smiled constantly.

"It's a pretty trumped-up charge," he said, repeatedly blaming Mobil Oil for his indictment.

Mattox represents the state in a $1.7 billion lawsuit with South Texas rancher Clinton Manges against Mobil over oil leases on Manges' land.

"It has taken the most contorted legal capabilities in the world to get from that statute that I have done anything wrong," Mattox said.

He said he would not be surprised if the Houston law firm of Fulbright & Jaworski, Mobil's attorneys in the suit, had not "drafted this indictment. I'm sure they did the legal research for it."

"This all surrounds Mobil Oil," Mattox said. "It comes from the Mobil Oil suit.

"If they're going to get me for this, they're going to have a lot more things to get me for by the time I get through being attorney general, because I intend to collect the people's money and if you can indict the attorney general for trying to make the people of the state deal with honesty and integrity then so be it."

A spokesman for Mobil headquarters in New York said company officials did not think it appropriate to respond to Mattox's comments.

When asked if he planned to remain in office, Mattox replied, "Of course."

He said he was disappointed that Travis County District Attorney Ronnie Earle "caved in on this thing."

"I hope he's got guts enough to come down to the courtroom and try me himself," Mattox said.

Mattox said use of the commercial bribery law as a basis for the indictment was "the most ridiculous thing anybody every thought of. In the end, we will win this suit and we will win the suit against Mobil Oil. It's just a matter of getting to it."

When asked if the impending court action would affect his actions as attorney general, he replied:

"I'll probably just get that much tougher and that much harder to deal with. I always have been and I'm not going to cave in to Mobil Oil or anybody else."

Mattox said investigators "looked for two months and they had to come up with something. It's obvious they came up with something that doesn't even apply to me, and in the end the court will obviously throw it out."

He said that "in the last election there was a major change in the power of this state. For the first time, these big companies, the oil companies, these big insurance companies, the big oil firms can't just walk in and control the Supreme Court any more."

Mattox has thrived on controversy

AUSTIN (AP) — Attorney General Jim Mattox has a reputation of never backing away from a battle. Some would say he even seeks them out.

In politics, a business where many "go along to get along," Mattox has thrived on controversy. But none of the battles is as serious as Tuesday's commercial bribery indictment, a charge that carries a maximum 10-year prison sentence.

"I have not done one single thing wrong in his entire matter," Mattox has said on a 2½-month investigation into his campaign finances and other allegations against him.

State Rep. Bob Bush, D-Sherman, said Tuesday that Mattox's approach to life is part of the attorney general's legal problems.

"He has a pugnacious personality. He's not the friendliest man I've ever met by any means," said Bush, chairman of the House Judiciary Committee.

Mattox is "unusually pugnacious for a public official," according to Bush, and that image "makes it easy for (people) to have prejudice against him."

Mattox, single and 40, is the feisty son of a broken home. When he was 12, his father left home, and his mother raised the three Mattox children by waiting tables at an Italian restaurant in Dallas.

"A number of the guys I grew up with ended up in prison," he once said, referring to his childhood East Dallas friends as "a tough crowd."

He's only lost one political contest, a three-vote defeat in a 1966 precinct chairman race. It's a race long forgotten by most, but Mattox remembers it as one in which he was branded as a candidate with "socialistic tendencies."

In 1963, he was elected student body president of the business school at Baylor. Characteristically, he ran against the power structure.

"I ran an anti-fraternity campaign," he recalled.

Friends say backing down is not Mattox's style.

"I don't think retreat is in his vocabulary. He's more tenacious than a bulldog. I believe you have to kill him to get him loose," said Joe Gunn, secretary-treasurer of the Texas AFL-CIO, which supported him in his successful race for attorney general last year.

In 1972 and 1974, Mattox was elected to the Texas House, where he was a maverick who led opposition to Speaker Billy Clayton. Nevertheless, in 1973 his colleagues voted him outstanding House freshman.

In 1976, 1978 and 1980 Mattox won races for the U.S. House. As a freshman congressman, he tangled with Speaker Thomas O'Neill. The topic — the House dress code. A presidential order had turned up the thermostats on the House floor. It was warm, and Mattox showed up on the House floor in shirt sleeves, a violation of the dress code.

Jim Mattox

For his three days of national publicity, Mattox got six years of cold shoulders from O'Neill.

In the race for attorney general, Mattox toted a "People's Lawyer" sign around the state. He beat former U.S. Attorney John Hannah of Tyler, state Sen. Jack Ogg of Houston and former state Sen. Max Sherman of Amarillo to win the Democratic nomination.

He took his sign and his campaign into a bitter general election fight with Republican Bill Meier, a state senator from Euless.

Mattox took office in January, succeeding Mark White, who became governor. As legal questions swirled around his conduct in office, Mattox fought the Dallas Morning News, which broke several stories that included allegations of misdeeds, and he fought Mobil, which he blamed for planting the stories.

Mobil and Mattox are opponents in a $1.7 billion lawsuit involving the state.

He called the allegations "trivial."

On Aug. 29, he summoned reporters to the Capitol for what his office billed as an "important" announcement. The news was that it was his 40th birthday, and he had coffee and cake for all.

State Sen. Oscar Mauzy, D-Dallas and a longtime Mattox friend summed up the Mattox style of attack.

"Jimmy's got a low boiling point. Sometimes he talks before he thinks," said Mauzy.

But he added, "If there's one thing Jimmy Mattox is, it's a survivor. If the Titanic were going down, he'd be out there in a lifeboat."

Sister: Mattox will continue fight against Mobil

DALLAS (AP) — Attorney Janice L. Mattox says the indictment of her brother, Texas Attorney General Jim Mattox, on charges he tried to block attorneys for Mobil Oil Co. from interrogating her in a lawsuit will not stop him from continuing the legal battle against the oil company.

"Jim is a fighter and that is how he was elected," Ms. Mattox said Tuesday. "He was elected to be a fighter, and he will go ahead and defend the state, and he will not be intimidated into letting Mobil Oil off of what they owe the state of Texas."

A Travis County grand jury indicted the attorney general earlier Tuesday on charges of commercial bribery. He was accused of telling a Houston lawyer he would not approve certain bonds handled by the lawyer's firm unless that firm stopped trying to take a deposition from Ms. Mattox in a suit involving Mobil Oil Corp.

The lawsuit was filed by South Texas rancher Clinton Manges, who had contributed $50,000 to Mattox' campaign for attorney general, against Mobil Producing Texas and New Mexico, Inc.

"They apparently owe the state of Texas millions of dollars and it is his job to get that money back," Ms. Mattox said. "It is his job, and if Jim is making those people mad, he must be doing his job."

Mattox told Houston lawyer Wiley Caldwell he would not approve the bonds unless Caldwell required one of his partners in the firm of Fulbright & Jaworski — started by the late Watergate prosecutor Leon Jaworski — to stop trying to question Mattox's sister, the indictment read.

Attorneys for Mobil had stopped trying to question her in the $1.67 billion suit over disputed oil and gas leases, in which her brother is involved for the state. But she said the judge in the case halted the attempts, said Ms. Mattox.

"The Mobil Oil attorneys did discontinue their desire to question me," said Ms. Mattox, 36. "They discontinued their attempted questioning at the end of July, at the end of a hearing in the Mobil Oil case, in which the judge that was sitting for that hearing said that my brother, Jim, would not have to answer any questions about financial dealings with me or with Seattle-First (Bank), if any, and there were some other protective orders given."

Mattox is accused in the indictment of making the threat in a June 17 telephone conversation with Caldwell, a Fulbright & Jaworski partner. Mattox ordered Caldwell to tell another partner, Thomas McDade, to stop trying to subpoena Ms. Mattox, according to the indictment.

"My understanding from the very beginning is that Jim was told in some form that somehow his family would be brought into the matter if he did not agree to recuse this judge," Ms. Mattox said.

Attempts to question her "had something to do with my finances," she said, but would not elaborate.

Ms. Mattox said that Mobil attorneys had announced in July they would take her deposition on Aug. 29.

"After the judge issued his order in the Mobil case, the Mobil attorneys discontinued their efforts to question me, because they had the impression that if I were before the court, the judge would not allow them to question me," Ms. Mattox said. "And that is true. They would have been embarrassed, and they sought to avoid that embarrassment."

Ms. Mattox said that her brother's indictment is an attempt by the oil company to put a smokescreen over its liability to the state.

Jury views videotapes of 'sting' operation

DALLAS (AP) — A federal judge has allowed a jury to view videotapes of men secretly filmed while apparently agreeing to sell weaponry to "an unfriendly country — like Libya."

U.S. District Judge Robert Hill ignored defense objections and allowed prosecutors to show the videotapes of the "sting" operation as the trial began Tuesday.

The five are charged with conspiring to export firearms, explosives, munitions and infrared equipment from the United States to Libya without a license from the State Department. The group also is charged with attempting to export the items without a license.

U.S. Customs agent Bonnie Goldblatt testified she was part of the government operation last May, in which government agents set up cameras in an adjacent room to one in which a government informant was meeting with defendants.

The indictment names Hugh Briscoe, the owner of H&K Oil Co. of Dallas; his former employee Ed Fraser; Houston helicopter pilot Greg Zwarycz; and two former Harris County deputy constables, Tom Johnson and Mike Deans.

Johnson also is charged with using a Browning semi-automatic pistol and a combat knife in the course of the conspiracy.

The group was arrested in June after a raid at Dallas' Love Field, where prosecutors claim the shipment was being loaded.

Ms. Goldblatt told U.S. Assistant Attorney General Mike Heiskel that a government informant, known as Mohammed, contacted the men and claimed he was from the Middle East.

The first tape was filmed on May 13 at the Hyatt Regency in Dallas, she said. Three other agents, including one from the U.S. Drug Enforcement Agency, were in one of the hotel's rooms while negotiations between Mohammed and the men were being conducted, Ms. Goldblatt testified.

She said they made the tapes from an adjacent room so they "could be a witness to what was occurring at the time."

Under questioning from defense attorney Vincent Perini, Ms. Goldblatt said she had conducted an security check on Mohammed, but said she did not know who he was.

"Was there plea bargaining?" Perini asked. "Is he a criminal? Was he paid?"

"I'm not sure who he is," Ms. Golblatt replied.

Woman awarded $6 million

HOUSTON (AP) — A Houston woman and her 5-year-old son have $6 million coming to them from a group of chemical and engineering companies following the settlement of a five-year court battle over her husband's death from burns received in a chemical plant explosion.

Patricia Ann Hogan, 28, signed the settlement agreement Monday for herself and her son, Kevin. It had been approved earlier by State District Judge Ruby Sondock.

Mrs. Hogan's negligence lawsuit stemmed from a Nov. 1978 explosion at Denka Chemical Plant in east Houston.

Council wants Soviet tour cancelled

FORT WORTH (AP) — The Fort Worth City Council has passed a resolution urging the National League of Cities to call off a tour of the Soviet Union later this year.

The resolution Tuesday called the recent downing of a South Korean airliner "a callous disregard for human rights."

The league should refrain from promoting any other such tours "until the government of the Soviet Union complies fully with the demands of the president of the United States in regard to the atrocity committed against the people of South Korea and the world," the council said.

It may take year to remove debris

HOUSTON (AP) — It would take a year and $40 million to remove the debris left by Hurricane Alicia at the pickup rate specified by the city's cleanup contracts, a city official says.

The storm left about 8 million cubic yards of debris , said Solid Waste Department director Charles Ware. He said the city has agreed to pay private contractors $4 to $5 a cubic yard to dispose of the waste. At that rate, the removal of 8 million cubic yards of debris would cost up to $40 million.

Ware said 750 trucks to 2,000 trucks are hauling the debris.

Hospital has new cancer treatment

HOUSTON (AP) — About 20 patients with cancers normally resistant to traditional treatment such as X-rays and cobalt are expected to use the nation's first hospital-based medical cyclotron at a Houston hospital, officials say.

A cyclotron is a machine that accelerates charged sub-atomic particles to extremely high energies. The heart of the specialized cyclotron at the University of Texas M.D. Anderson Hospital and Tumor Institute is capable of producing up to 42 million volts of energy.

The cyclotron allows the neutron beam to penetrate a tumor at various angles very quickly, thereby sparing damage to adjacent healthy tissues.

Onassis won't attend JFK memorial

DALLAS (AP) — Jacqueline Kennedy Onassis, widow of President John F. Kennedy, has declined to attend a memorial observance in Dallas on Nov. 22 marking Kennedy's assassination 20 years ago, Democratic Party officials said.

Frank Hernandez, chairman of the Kennedy Observance Committee, said Tuesday that he learned of the decision through an aide to Mrs. Onassis.

Kennedy's only surviving brother, Sen. Edward Kennedy, D-Mass., earlier declined an invitation to attend the observance.

House OKs alien education subsidy

Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON — The House, giving vital relief to Texas school districts, approved legislation Tuesday to subsidize the costs of educating alien children.

The amendment, sponsored by House Majority Leader Jim Wright and Rep. Kiki de la Garza, was added to a $4 billion bill that continued authorization for vocational rehabilitation programs through 1988.

The Wright amendment provides school districts with $500 per year for each alien student through 1985. The number of illegal aliens in Texas schools has been estimated at more than 29,000, and the cost of educating each one is about $2,600 a year.

Schools on bases to get funds

Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON — All schools impacted by military installations stand to benefit through the addition of about $100 million in the Defense Authorizations Act adopted by the Senate Tuesday, according to Sen. John Tower, chairman of the Senate Armed Services committee and floor manager of the bill.

This was a compromise version of the $187.4 billion bill, which has yet to pass the House. The impact aid program was budgeted earlier this year at $475 million for 1984, but Tower, and other senators from states with large military bases, increased the total authorization for the program to $585 million.

Schools on three vbases in San Antonio should receive funds, according to Tower and Rep. Abraham Kazen, D-Laredo, but the amount they will depends on a formula to be worked out and the amount of funding voted by Congress. The aid is paid by the government in lieu of taxes that cannot be collected from land used by the military or from non-tax paying citizens.

Authorities break up ring with arrest of five people

FORT WORTH (AP) — The arrest of five people, including one man who allegedly was carrying $500,000 worth of heroin in a sock, has broken up a major narcotics supply ring, federal agents say.

The five were arrested on charges related to a heroin distribution operation that operated between Mexico and Fort Worth, authorities said Tuesday.

U.S. Magistrate Alex McGlinchey on Tuesday set bonds totaling more than $1.5 million for the five defendants, including four men and a woman, following their arrests Monday afternoon by U.S. Drug Enforcement Administration agents and Fort Worth police.

The five were charged in a complaint with conspiring to possess heroin with the intent to distribute and with distributing the drug.

Six ounces of unprocessed heroin with an estimated street value of $500,000, three vehicles, jewelry worth "several thousand dollars" and about $41,000 in cash were seized, Assistant U.S. Attorney Michael Sheehan said.

The heroin was discoyered in a plastic bag, wrapped with tape, that was in a sock that defendant Albert Tolliver, of Fort Worth, was wearing when arrested, according to an affidavit filed with the complaint.

Tolliver, 33, was ordered jailed in lieu of $500,000 bond.

Also arrested Monday were Jose Antonio Perrett-Guerra, 26, and Amalio Galvan-Venegas, 29, both Mexican nationals who have Brownsville addresses; and Willie Ernest Scott, 53, and Angela Faye Onick, 30, both of Fort Worth.

Gramm forms finance committee

WASHINGTON (AP) — Rep. Phil Gramm, R-Texas, edging toward what seems an almost certain bid for a U.S. Senate seat, has announced establishment of a high-powered "exploratory finance committee" to begin raising money for the effort.

Gramm said Tuesday that the main purpose of the 37-member committee was to beging "lining up commitments" for financial support if he announces for the seat being vacated with the retirement of Republican Sen. John Tower.

"Some of them are beginning the process of accepting the checks," Gramm said.

However, Gramm said he still had not made a final decision on whether to seek the seat. He said he would likely announce his intentions late next week.

Phil Gramm

His "exploratory committee" contains some of the most well-known figures of the Texas business establishment, among them Fort Worth oilman Eddie Chiles, Dallas businessman H.R. (Bum) Bright, Dallas oilman Ray Hunt, San Antonio construction magnate H.B. Zachry, and Amarillo oilman Boone Pickens.

Gramm was first elected to Congress in 1978 as a Democrat. He angered the House Democratic leadership with his vocal support of President Reagan's budget cuts in 1981, and resigned from Congress early this year after Democrats stripped him of his seat on the powerful Budget Committee.

Gramm turned Republican and was re-elected in a special election in February.

Gramm has been highly successful at raising campaign funds in the past.

He raised more than $766,000 in 1981 and 1982 for his re-election bid last year, far above the average for the Texas congressional delegation, according to campaign finance reports on file with the Federal Election Commission.

Then he raised another $942,000 for the special election in February, the reports show.

He had more than $337,000 in his campaign war chest as of the end of June, according to the reports.

In putting together his Senate exploratory committee, Gramm has tapped some of the most influential figures in the Texas business community.

Zachry, Bright, and Pickens were voted among the 15 most powerful people in Texas in an Associated Press survey last year of newspaper editors and publishers and of other prominent Texas figures.

Tower, first elected in 1961 to take the seat vacated by Lyndon B. Johnson when he became vice president, recently announced he would not seek re-election next year, saying he want to pursue other endeavors.

Rep. Ron Paul, R-Texas, has already announced his candidacy for the seat. On the Democratic side, Rep. Kent Hance of Lubbock, state Sen. Lloyd Dogget of Austin and former U.S. Rep. Bob Krueger of New Braunfels have all announced their intention to run in the Senate primary.

Key figure in trial has apartment ransacked

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — Police say Teresa Starr, a key figure in the investigation into the slaying of a federal judge, apparently is safe — despite her ransacked condominium and an anonymous tip that the woman "feared for her life."

Ms. Starr is the stepdaughter of Charles V. Harrelson, convicted of being the triggerman in the 1979 assassination of U.S. District Judge John H. Wood Jr.

Investigators had searched for Ms. Starr most of the day, but a relative informed them late Tuesday afternoon that the 26-year-old woman was "out of town" and "fine," said intelligence Sgt. Frank Castillon.

"We have not personally talked to her, but we have been told she is all right," Castillon said.

He would not disclose her whereabouts or any other information, but did say she was with her roommate, Fernando Leal.

Ms. Starr was a key witness against Harrelson, her mother — Jo Ann Starr Harrelson — and Elizabeth Chagra, all of whom were convicted of charges stemming from Wood's May 29, 1979, murder.

Ms. Starr testified that she picked up a $250,000 payoff for the slaying in Las Vegas, Nev., and delivered it to Harrelson and her mother in Corpus Christi.

Burglary Sgt. Mike Akeroyd confirmed reports Ms. Starr and Leal might have been afraid because of a drug deal, but stressed that was "only one possibility."

"We won't know until we talk to them," he said. "Everything now is speculation."

Investigators would disclose little information about the anonymous call concerning Ms. Starr, except to say it was logged shortly before 4 a.m. Tuesday.

"The caller said she (Ms. Starr) feared for her life, but that's all I can say," Akeroyd said.

The intruders gained entrance to the North Side residence by breaking down the front door, he said.

"The whole place was ransacked. It was a mess," he said. "Nothing is missing that we can determine, not even a television set and some other expensive stuff."

Ms. Starr was called to appear before the federal grand jury investigating Wood's slaying, but spent several days in jail for contempt of court before finally agreeing to testify.

Harrelson, who is serving consecutive life sentences, asked for a new trial last week, contending one of the people who testified against him was too sick with syphilis to be a credible witness.

Mrs. Harrelson was convicted of conspiracy to obstruct justice, perjury and using a false name to purchase a firearm. Prosecutors contended the rifle in question was the murder weapon.

Mayor William Donald Schaefer won a landslide victory Tuesday in the Democratic mayoral primary. Schaefer won the primary with an overwhelming 72 percent of the vote and is almost assured of a fourth four-year term.

Baltimore mayor wins landslide victory in Democratic primary

BALTIMORE (AP) — Saying "I'm a proud man tonight," three-term Mayor William Donald Schaefer accepted a landslide victory in a Democratic mayoral primary that attracted the heaviest voter turnout in this revitalized port city in more than a decade.

The 61-year-old Schaefer defeated his main challenger in Tuesday's primary, former Circuit Judge William H. Murphy Jr., who had sought to become Baltimore's first black mayor.

The victory virtually assures Schaefer an unprecedented fourth term as mayor of the nation's 10th-largest city, where Democrats outnumber Republicans 10-1 and no Republican currently holds elective office. The general election is Nov. 8.

Unofficial returns from 444 precincts showed Schaefer with 162,809 or 72 percent of the vote to 59,748 or 26 percent for Murphy. About 2 percent of the vote went to two minor candidates.

Schaefer, who was endorsed by most of the city's black leaders, won considerable support among the city's blacks — who account for 60 percent of the population.

The election followed a big voter registration drive among blacks. Murphy, 40, a member of one of the city's prominent black families, had campaigned with a heavy emphasis on the black vote.

He also had endorsements from many nationally known black politicians and entertainers — including the Rev. Jesse Jackson, Georgia state Sen. Julian Bond, Atlanta Mayor Andrew Young, Martin Luther King III, activist-comedian Dick Gregory and singer Roberta Flack.

City Council President Clarence Burns, the first black to hold that post, easily won the Democratic primary. Burns was named to the position last year when then-City Council President Walter Orlinsky was convicted of extortion.

In the only other major race in the city, veteran Comptroller Hyman Pressman won the Democratic primary. Both Burns and Pressman are close Schaefer associates.

Schaefer, who has played a central role in efforts to renovate Baltimore, made an emotional acceptance speech before a standing-room-only crowd at the Lyric Opera House.

"There are so many people I want to thank. God is good to me," Schaefer said. "I'm a proud man tonight, proud to be mayor of a city which has made such progress in 12 years."

Murphy, in a low-key concession speech, told his supporters: "Always remember that the dreamer may stumble, the dreamer may fall, but the dream of equality and equal opportunity for all Baltimoreans will never die."

Voting was the heaviest in more than a decade, with a turnout of 227,714 out of more than 424,000 registered voters. More than 60 percent of the registered Democrats voted.

The campaign centered on Schaefer's well-publicized efforts to revitalize the city. Supporters credit him with leading the drive, but opponents charged that Schaefer's administration ignores the poor and the neighborhoods and focuses on downtown redevelopment.

In addition to facing a strong incumbent, Murphy had a number of personal problems crop up during the race. The most serious came when the Internal Revenue Service filed tax liens against him only 21 days before the primary, claiming he owed the government more than $242,000. The state also seeks $15,000 in taxes from Murphy.

Discrimination against handicapped still serious problem, commission says

WASHINGTON (AP) — Discrimination against the handicapped continues to be a serious social problem despite progress in the last two decades, the U.S. Commission on Civil Rights said today.

The 173-page report said that despite almost 30 federal laws and numerous state and local laws, discrimination continues in education, employment, architectural barriers, institutions, transportation and medical care.

Unemployment among the handicapped is estimated at between 50 percent and 75 percent, up from 45 percent before the recent recession. "Furthermore, studies indicate that only in a tiny percentage of cases is inability to perform a regular, full-time job the reason a handicapped person is not employed," said the report, titled "Accommodating the Spectrum of Individual Abilities."

Nearly a decade after a federal law designed to assure "all handicapped children the right to a free appropriate public education," many handicapped children are still excluded from the public schools or placed in inappropriate programs, the commission said.

House Democrats confront Reagan over spending

WASHINGTON (AP) — Launching their fall budget offensive, House Democrats have set up a head-to-head confrontation with the Reagan administration over $1.6 billion in additional spending for nearly a dozen domestic programs.

The 283-124 vote to puncture a two-year-old spending ceiling on the programs came on Congress' second day back at work after a five-week summer break and served notice that Democrats intend to use their solid majority to back President Reagan and the Republican-controlled Senate into a political corner over domestic spending.

Most of the 10 programs involve education one way or another and Democrats portrayed the issue as a challenge to Reagan to make good on his promise to restore excellence in education.

"This particular vote is the best test we're likely to have about whether we're truly serious about responding the the president's commission on education," said Majority Leader Jim Wright of Texas. "The president has embraced the commission in rhetoric but his deeds belie his words."

Using a play on words to rib the president, Wright said he, like Reagan, would like to see prayer restored to public schools.

"But we must not only pray for education, we must pay for education," he said. "This is the test of whether we're willing to pay for education or not."

The additional spending — added to a non-controversial rehabilitation bill — sets up a conflict between two measures already passed by Congress.

One is the binding Gramm-Latta act of 1981, which set budget ceilings four years in advance, and the other is the non-binding budget resolution adopted earlier this year which lays out the spending blueprint for the fiscal year starting Oct. 1.

The total $11 billion in spending for the 10 programs approved Tuesday is about 16 percent higher than the total amount allowed by Gramm-Latta, but is within the budget blueprint adopted by both the House and Senate this year.

House Republicans said there was certain to be a long and bitter conference fight with the Senate — which did not include any other programs in its version of the rehabilitation bill.

And they predicted certain presidential veto in the event the Senate goes along with attaching higher spending for other programs to the popular rehabilitation bill.

Rep. Steve Bartlett, R-Texas, author of the failed amendment to delete the additions, accused Democrats of playing politics by trying to hold the rehabilitation bill hostage to force approval for boosted spending for the 10 other programs.

Amounts for the 10 in the House version approved Tuesday range from $3.8 billion for compensatory education for the disadvantaged, to $10.8 million for museum services.

Other totals: $2.2 billion for low income energy assistance, $1.5 billion for handicapped education, $1.4 billion in nutrition aid for women, infants and children, $825 million for vocational education, $505 million in impact aid for local governments where federal facilities are located, $398 million for community service grants, $274 million for arts and humanities, and $112 million for adult education.

Before final passage, amendments were approved to provide $500 per pupil to school districts faced with educating large numbers of immigrants and to rewrite the formula under which low-income energy assistance is allocated to provide more money for states where natural gas is the prime home heating fuel.

Was McGovern ahead of his time?

Former South Dakota senator decides to find out

BY DONALD M. ROTHBERG
AP Political Writer

WASHINGTON — Looking back on his 1972 campaign disaster, George McGovern likes to recall that "they said I was 10 years ahead of my time." Now, he's making another try for the White House with an echo of his earlier themes and a hope that this time his timing will be better.

It was 11 in the morning on Jan. 19, 1971, when McGovern stood in the Senate Caucus Room and declared he was a candidate for the 1972 Democratic presidential nomination.

"Thoughtful Americans understand that the highest patriotism is not a blind acceptance of official policy, but a love of one's country deep enough to call her to a higher standard," said the South Dakota senator. To millions of Americans the "official policy" they could not accept was continued involvement in Vietnam.

Eighteen months later, McGovern had beaten the odds and accepted the Democratic nomination with a speech in which he condemned "a terrible war...charted behind closed doors. I want those doors opened and I want that war closed."

More than 12 years after his entry into the 1972 campaign, at 11 in the morning in an auditorium at George Washington University, McGovern renewed his bid for the White House.

Once again, he wanted to take on a Republican president. No longer a senator, McGovern made his announcement across town from Capitol Hill. And the U.S. military involvement that concerned him this time was half a world away from Vietnam.

"I WOULD CEASE forthwith the so-called 'covert war' against Nicaragua and end all United States military involvement in Central America," he said. Like his rivals for the nomination, McGovern also attacked the Reagan economic program and budget deficits.

"If I had said in 1972 that $200 billion annual deficit was acceptable, I wouldn't even have carried Massachusetts," he said.

The response to McGovern's announcement was skeptical, about as skeptical as it had been 12 years earlier.

Back then he was asked how he could hope to overcome Sen. Edmund S. Muskie's lead in the race for the nomination and whether he would suffer from being tagged as a one-issue candidate, the issue being his opposition to U.S. involvement in Vietnam.

A young lawyer from Denver named Gary Hart was McGovern's campaign manager.

In a book he later wrote about the campaign, Hart recalled that the odds being quoted on McGovern's chance to win the nomination were 500 to 1.

"IF I HAD possessed foresight and ready cash, I could have made a great deal of money that day laying bets on a McGovern nomination," wrote Hart, now a senator and a candidate for the 1984 Democratic presidential nomination.

It turned out that McGovern sensed something stirring within the Democratic Party in 1971. His opposition to the Vietnam War motivated an effective army of youthful workers who gave him an edge in the nomination fight.

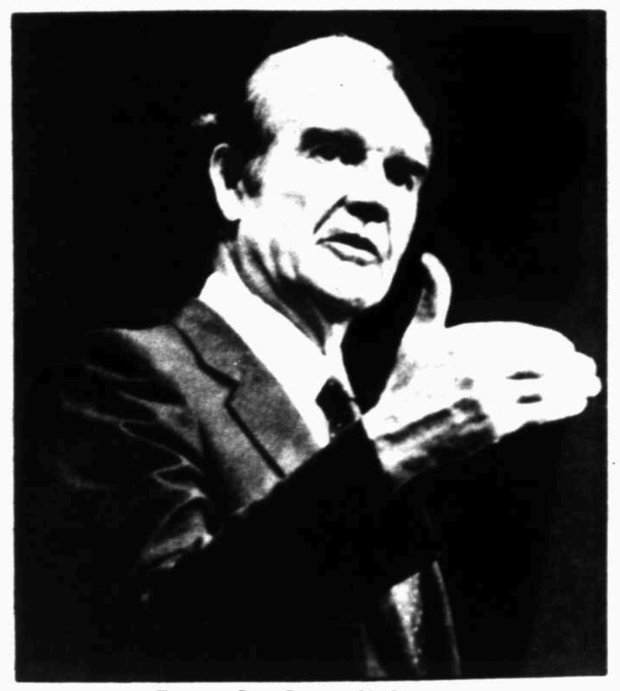

But the country at large wasn't receptive to the McGovern message.

President Richard M. Nixon was opening contact with the communist regime in China and pursuing detente with the Soviet Union and talking about winding down direct U.S. involvement in Vietnam.

America went with Nixon by a landslide. The Republican president carried 49 states. Only Massachusetts and the District of Columbia voted for McGovern.

Then came Watergate and bumper stickers that read: "Don't Blame Me, I'm from Massachusetts."

And McGovern is back on the stump for another longshot candidacy, while Nixon spends his days a political exile shunned by his own party.

Former Sen. George McGovern

Microcomputers adapted for dolphin research

GRASSY KEY, Fla. (AP) — Dolphins who have already shown they can respond to a simple language may one day be able to talk back to humans by inputting replies into a specially adapted microcomputer.

"What we're trying to do is develop a code, and through a rigorous experimental program train the dolphins to behave in a language-like manner," said Ron Reisman of the Delphinid Research Institute.

The 29-year-old associate director of research said scientists hoped to build a two-way device dolphins could use to interact with the computer.

Researchers here and at the Kewalo Basin Marine Mammal Laboratory in Hawaii have shown that the Atlantic bottle-nosed dolphin, familiar to viewers of the TV series "Flipper," can respond to simple language-like commands.

Nat, an 8-year-old, 300-pound dolphin who was born in captivity and shares a pool with 35-year-old Gipper, is one of only three dolphins Reisman and others consider to have shown this ability.

Now, Reisman wants Nat and other dolphins to be able to answer back with their own computer terminal — but it won't bear any resemblance to standard terminals with typewriter-style keyboards and video screens.

For one thing, Reisman said, dolphins do not "reason" well with visual images, unlike humans who are primarily visual-oriented.

"The flaw up 'til now is that we've been trying to design a computer terminal a primate would use," he said. "Such terminals can only be used with the help of hands and depend on visual information."

Dolphins can locate objects underwater not with their eyes but by sending out a complicated series of sounds, which bounce off the objects. The reflected echo tells the dolphin where the object is.

The dolphin can perceive sounds as high as 175,000 cycles per second — 10 times higher in pitch than the range of the human ear.

The echo-location system is similar to sonar, used by the Navy to find submarines.

The special computer terminal would work by actually changing its acoustic properties so that the dolphins recognized words by their distinctive sonar echoes, Reisman said.

"The dolphins then could respond by pressing input devices with their snouts," he said.

For five years, researchers tried a variety of other methods in an effort to make dolphins show language-like behavior.

Famed train station being turned into museum

PARIS (AP) — After 22 years of bureaucratic bungling and academic indecision, the transformation of the Orsay train station and hotel complex in central Paris into a museum of the 19th century is finally under way.

A miniature model of the giant project has gone on display at the museum site overlooking the Seine across from the Louvre, ending the fears of those who have long seen the project as the "biggest boondoggle of the century."

The museum, which government officials describe as the "indispensable missing link in the great chain of French museums," was supposed to open at the end of this year. But Jacques Rigaud, administrator of the project, said recently it would not be ready until early 1987.

The creation of a museum in the giant iron-ribbed station where Orson Welles filmed "The Trial" and where Charles de Gaulle gave the impassioned 1958 press conference that brought him back to power, was the brainchild of former French president Georges Pompidou and his successor, Valery Giscard d'Estaing. It is the first industrial building in France to be used as a museum.

The new center, which will house French art executed between 1848 and 1914 beginning with Eugene Delacroix and ending with Henri Matisse, will feature the entire contents of the Jeu de Paume and the Orangerie museums, two of the city's most popular tourist attractions.

Government officials say the museum will display for the first time countless paintings long tucked in storage rooms or hung in dark, crowded corners of the Louvre, thus clinching Paris as the museum capital of the world. While many have been critical of the costly project — the franc equivalent of $135.65 million — Pierre Colboc, one of the three building architects in charge of the ambitious recycling project, cited unforeseen technical problems, and not lack of funds, as causing the four-year delay.

"Turning a monumental train station into a home for priceless art works is no easy task," said the 43-year old Colboc.

'Doctor' allegedly caused patient's brain death

NEWARK, N.J. (AP) — A man who allegedly impersonated a licensed doctor at an Army hospital improperly administered anesthesia during surgery, causing a patient to become "brain dead," federal authorities say.

The U.S. attorney's office in Newark charged Tuesday that Abraham V.K. Asante had failed licensing exams seven times but stated on his employment application at the Walson U.S. Army Hospital at Fort Dix that he was licensed in the two states.

Asante was hired as an anesthesiologist at the hospital on July 21, but it was not until Sept. 7, two weeks after the operation, that U.S. Army officials learned he had failed licensing examinations five times in Connecticut and twice in Indiana, the complaint said.

Asante, 45, was arrested Tuesday at Fort Dix by FBI agents and charged in federal court in Trenton with two counts of filing false statements with the government and one count of aggravated assault, said U.S. Attorney W. Hunt Dumont.

U.S. Magistrate John W. Devine ordered Asante held in lieu of $10,000 bail and scheduled a Sept. 25 preliminary hearing. Asante, a Bordentown resident, faces a maximum sentence of 20 years in prison and a $20,000 fine if convicted, authorities said.

The charge of aggravated assault arose from the administration of anesthesia by Asante to a 46-year-old patient at the hospital during an Aug. 25 operation to remove a tumor from the patient's bladder, according to the complaint.

Because Asante improperly administered anesthesia, complications arose during the surgery, the complaint alleged.

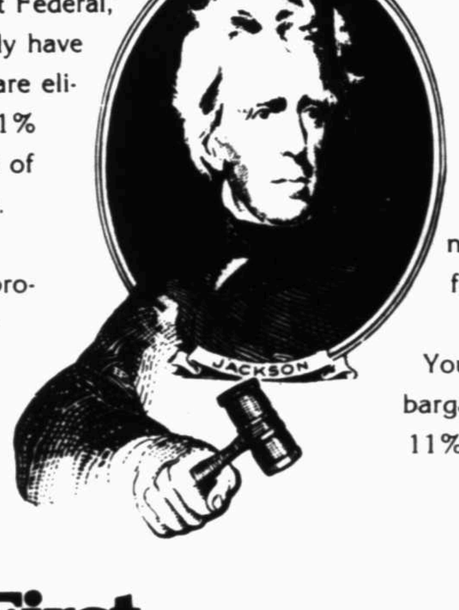

As a result, the patient, who was identified only by the last name of Branda, experienced cardiac arrest and went into a coma, said the complaint.

"At the present time (Branda) is believed to be clinically brain dead," said the complaint.

THE BETTER HALF

"I can't remember what day her birthday is, so I'm sending a card every day until I hit it right!"

Your horoscope

By JEANE DIXON

Thursday, Sept. 15, 1983

YOUR BIRTHDAY TODAY: U.S. President William Howard Taft, English mystery writer Agatha Christie, auto manufacturer Ettore Bugatti and humorist Robert Benchley were born on this date. Also sharing your birthday: actor-director Jackie Cooper, country star Roy Acuff and pianist Bobby Short. You can afford to take some chances in the year ahead. Be bold and strike while the iron is hot! Romance is a source of much happiness. Let mate know how much you appreciate his or her support. Someone who has been by your side for a long time may decide to call it quits. Try to persuade him to change his mind.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): You are the one who can make things happen today. Give people a chance to invest in your ideas. Turn to an old friend for advice. Get involved in civic affairs.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Take a tough stance in financial negotiations. You have a good chance of winning! Tax matters should be handled by experts. A romance with a co-worker could cause problems.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Outside interests will make you more valuable to the boss and more attractive to your romantic partner. You score gains by moving into a new field. Secret resentment is upsetting family relationships.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): You need exercise. Do not put off until after the weekend what you should do now. Romantic partner wants to tie the knot. A good day to begin a diet.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): The demands come fast and heavy today. Be prepared. Alternative work hours are possible if you have a legitimate reason. Member of opposite sex finds you irresistible. Use diplomacy.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Your workload could be heavy the next few days. Lunch with a friend. Travel plans may have to be changed. Although romance is somewhat bumpy right now, happy days lie ahead.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Achievement is the result of hard work and dedication. A new assignment gives you the power you have wanted. The only solution to family money woes is two wage-earners.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): A trip or move lies just ahead. Luck, love and money are all tied together. Let others take the initiative for a change. Better organization is the key to increasing profits.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Deadlines must be met. Get help in cutting through the red tape that is holding up progress. Couples deserve some time together, away from their children. Ask a relative's assistance.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Start fresh at work and things will quickly fall into place. Self-discipline and dedication are your strongest allies. A dear friend's encouragement sends your spirits soaring. Show your gratitude.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): A common interest brings you and member of opposite sex together. Do not let touchy subjects come between you and another family member. You could be selected to receive a special honor.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Group activities enjoy highly favorable influences. Attend parties and you meet someone who can help you with a job search. New financial solutions arise from a meeting with experts.

Viewers preferred reruns

NEW YORK (AP) — The noble off-season experiment of providing new programs this summer failed.

Viewers preferred reruns to the networks' original programs. Only two of the eight original series performed better than repeats of the old reliables.

Part of the failure is that the programs were mostly old formats in new packages. Little of what was new was novel. "Many of the shows put on this summer were not different enough, so there was no urgency to watch them," says Brandon Tartikoff, president of NBC Entertainment.

Dave Poltrack, CBS vice president for research, says only ABC's "Two Marriages" and NBC's "Buffalo Bill" performed better than the network's average prime-time rating this summer. "Two Marriages" had a 13.5 rating (the percent of all TV homes watching) and "Buffalo Bill" drew a 12.4. The three-network average from June through August was a 12.3.

Incidentally, "Buffalo Bill" and "Two Marriages" also received the most critical praise. "I guess we learned that ultimately if a show isn't any good it won't be held up by reruns or soft competition," says Tartikoff.

"Buffalo Bill" and "The News Is the News," were NBC's first-run series. "Buffalo Bill" was renewed; the only summer original definitely given a second life. "The News Is the News," a parody of the news, was so bad that NBC canceled it after two weeks of its scheduled four-week run.

ABC had five new entertainment series: "Two Marriages," "The Hamptons," "Eye on Hollywood," "The 1/2 Hour Comedy Hour" and "Reggie."

"Two Marriages" may have been unique because it was a warm-hearted program about two families NOT bickering, cheating or killing each other.

ABC's other originals were formats seen too many times before. "The Hamptons" was a wooden love-and-lust soap. "Eye on Hollywood" was another glitzy insider's look into show biz and "Reggie" was another juvenile program about a man obsessed with sex.

John Severino, president of ABC Television, says the experiment was a worthwhile, though expensive, endeavor. Although only "Two Marriages" has a possible future, ABC found two talented comedians in Thom Sharp and Alsetio Hall of "The 1/2 Hour Comedy Hour."

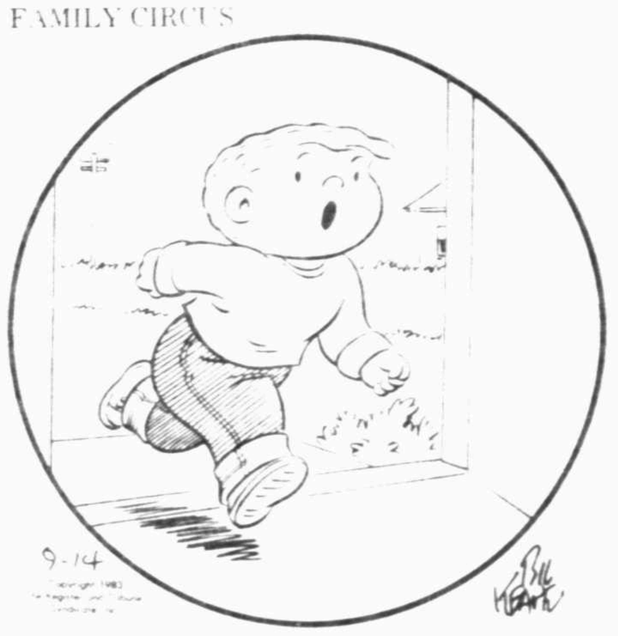

"We also proved to Hollywood's production community that shows could be done at a price considerably less than normal network programs," Severino says.

The bidding:

South	West	North	East
1 ♠	2 ♣	4 ♠	6 ♠
Pass	Pass	6 ♠	Dble
Pass	Pass	Pass

Opening lead: King of ♣.

It is not enough to have two fast tricks to defeat a slam. You also have to have a way to cash them.

After an innocuous opening bid and overcall, the auction soon reached into the stratosphere. No one was sure whose hand it was. East elected to make an advance sacrifice and North decided that he would as soon play it safe by bidding on rather than doubling. East's double was to prevent partner from bidding on.

West led the king of clubs, and the defenders were given no second chance. Declarer ruffed in dummy, and he realized that his main chance was to hope that the diamond suit would furnish him with three heart discards.

He crossed to the king of diamonds, entered dummy with a trump and ruffed a diamond high. Back to the table with a trump to cash the ace of diamonds for one heart pitch, but the queen didn't drop. Declarer now had to fall back on his second chance — to find one defender with either the singleton king or ace of hearts.

Declarer ruffed a diamond in hand and a club on the board to complete a strip of the minor suits, then led a heart. The defenders could not counter. If West was allowed to win his king, he would have to lead a club and allow declarer to ruff in dummy while discarding his penultimate heart from hand. Dummy's high diamond would then take care of declarer's last heart.

It would not help East to rise with the ace of hearts. That would catch partner's king, and declarer's queen of hearts would then be the fulfilling trick.

On banning books

It's incomprehensible that there are towns and cities in this great nation that find books such as "The Grapes of Wrath" or "Diary of Anne Frank" objectionable. But those two books and countless others — more classics — have been banned and the banning trend is growing.

Some people may find certain books or parts of certain books objectionable. They may choose to not read those books or parts or not to recommend those books to others. But the movement to ban books is an extremely dangerous one that should be recognized as such. This is Banned Books Week and public libraries want to show you what the censors are trying to take away from you.

Why is banning books so dangerous? Because when you talk of banning books you should embrace what you are addressing. When censors ban books, frequently they ban the bad in someone's opinion, but also ban the good. It might interest you to know that in addition to the two books already cited as examples of those on the "no, no" list in certain communities, other books that have been brushed aside by the censors in particular communities include two books commonly found in homes — the Merriam-Webster Collegiate Dictionary and the Bible.

There will be those who will ask, "If you are opposed to banning books, why do you oppose pornography?" Simple. When the founders of this nation established the basis for the laws our society operates under today, they did so in the understanding that the people of today would let common sense and prudence guide their actions. Pornography has little — if any — social redeeming value. But is the value of "Diary of Anne Frank" diminished because of its sexual passages?

Those who take in their hands the decision to ban books assume a vast responsibility: The responsibility for mankind's future. Said Aldous Huxley, author of the satirical novel Brave New World and other noteworthy literary works, "Every man who knows how to read has it in his power to magnify himself, to multiply the ways in which he exists, to make his life full, significant and interesting."

Should we assume that in our decision to ban books we could accomplish as much?

Upgrading schools

If anyone should write a 1983 history of American education, a place of prominence will have to be given to the National Commission on Excellence in Education.

At the suggestion of President Reagan its members were appointed by Education Secretary T.H. Bell, and its recent report has stirred citizens into action in every state of the union.

One of the commission's concerns was the quality of training in the colleges and universities that send teachers forth to teach. It asked the National Center for Education Statistics to make a survey. The center reported two encouraging trends.

First, 74 percent of the teacher-training institutions have toughened their admissions standards in the past five years.

Second, 85 percent have upgraded their curriculum requirements in this period.

This proves that where there is a will, there are ways to upgrade our public schools. The National Commission on Excellence in Education has performed a notable contribution first by reporting on the "mediocrity" in our schools, and then by informing us about some of the brighter spots. Thanks to the commission, there will be more such spots in the future.

Another View:

Spell out policy

The new Marine casualties in Lebanon may strain still further the public's confidence in administration policy in Lebanon.

There is in the United States a special warmth for this small, much-abused, Western-oriented place, but there is not an unlimited readiness to see American lives lost in the obscure, grinding conflict there. The need grows for President Reagan to make clear what diplomatic strategy the Marine presence is intended to serve.

Americans tend to forget that Israel's invasion merely interrupted a long and painful civil war. With the Israeli decision to pull back to the Awali River, a new chapter in it opened. Which Lebanese would take power in the evacuated area?

The Druze, traditionally dominant in the Chouf mountain region, feared the Israelis were handing it off to a Christian Phalange militia working hand in glove with the Lebanese army.

The Shia Moslem militia expressed similar fears of what would follow Israeli withdrawal from suburbs of East Beirut. Both Druze and Shia saw the Marines as patrons of the Christian establishment. That's a considerable part of the reason why the latest shooting began.

For years the United States has described its policy in Lebanon as trying to counter community splits and external intervention by building a strong central Lebanese government with a reliable national army at its command. Like its predecessors, however, the Gemayel government is seen by major social groups as tipped to favor an upper-class and-or Christian minority. The more that government is built up, the greater the distrust expressed — with guns as well as words — by other groups.

American diplomats have spurred on the tentative steps President Gemayel has taken to open what he calls a dialogue of national reconciliation. But more must be done.

Gemayel's government is suspended between its national duties and its Phalangist roots. Revising the Lebanese system to reflect the demographic and political changes since the country's basic power-sharing terms were laid down 40 years ago would be a tall order if the country were unoccupied, prosperous and at peace. It is, of course, none of these things.

With their separate agendas, Israel and Syria may yet frustrate efforts by national-minded Lebanese to restore and reform their system. But certainly it is too early for the United States to conclude that no progress can be made and to pull out the Marines.

WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND

Soviets use Aeroflot to spy

WASHINGTON — Evidence locked in secret CIA files suggests that the Soviets knew exactly what they were doing when they shot down an unarmed civilian airliner that had strayed off course into Soviet airspace.

Jack Anderson

The bitter irony is that Russian airliners are probably guilty of the aerial espionage that the Soviets wrongly thought the doomed South Korean airliner was engaged in.

A CIA report, stamped "Secret" and barred from foreign distribution, claims that Aeroflot, the Soviet airline, "is a significant instrument of Soviet intelligence collection."

The report cites "a prolonged employment of Aeroflot by the Soviets for both counterintelligence and foreign collection purposes." The Soviets are suspected, for example, "of using Aeroflot for signal intelligence collection operations."

Once, the Soviets rescheduled an Aeroflot flight "to permit coverage of a U.S. command post exercise." Another time, an Aeroflot airliner, flying over the United States, "was viewed as having a collection mission since signal intelligence intercept gear was observed on the aircraft."

Yet there has never been the slightest suggestion that Aeroflot planes should be shot down when they intrude into U.S. airspace with their espionage gear.

Just about every Aeroflot flight, suggests the CIA, has an ominous passenger on board — a KGB officer. "On domestic flights over the U.S.S.R.," reports the CIA, "the KGB officer probably acts in a security capacity to inform on the activities of foreigners or to block attempts by them to gather intelligence.

"On overseas flights, the function of the KGB officer would be to maintain control over the flight crew and prevent any possible defections. The use of Aeroflot for cover, coupled with the KGB presence on most flights and the inherent collection capability of the aircraft, corroborates the threat that this airline constitutes...." concludes the secret CIA report.

The Soviets probably attributed to the fateful South Korean airliner what their own commercial planes would do over someone else's territory. The airliner strayed dangerously close to the Kuril Islands, which are loaded with Soviet military installations.

The islands contain early warning radar sites, surface-to-air missile sites, military airstrips, a maritime base and a geophysical seismographic observatory which, according to a secret Defense Intelligence Agency report, "is involved in anti-submarine warfare-related projects in the northern Kurils."

Earlier this year, 20 MiG-23s were moved onto the biggest airstrip, which is located on the Kuril Island of Iturup. Oddly, tanks are also stationed on the tiny island where they would seem to have no place to go.

Concludes the CIA report: "The military significance of the four islands is considerable."

The South Korean airliner passed north of the Kurils over the Sea of Okhotsk. The Soviets are extremely sensitive about this area, according to classified papers obtained by my associate Dale Van Atta.

The United States takes the position, states a top-secret CIA report, "that the Sea of Okhotsk is an international body of water." Yet any U.S. penetration into the area invariably draws a Soviet response. "Such operations usually provoke reconnaissance and surveillance by Soviet naval aircraft and ships," notes the report.

Intelligence sources insist the Soviets couldn't possibly have been confused about the identity of the South Korean airliner. They deliberately, cold-bloodedly shot it down, these sources say, probably in the belief it was engaged as an Aeroflot airliner would be in extracurricular spying. "The Soviets were just being tough b——s," one source commented.

How can U.S. intelligence be so sure this wasn't a case of mistaken identity? The United States operates a top-secret intelligence post, the 6920th Electronic Security Group, on Japan's northernmost island, Hokkaido. It monitored the entire tragedy from close range.

Footnote: There was positively no surveillance equipment aboard the downed South Korean airliner. The United States has sophisticated equipment that doesn't require the use of commercial airliners.

TROUBLE IN PARADISE: When the tropical island of Ceylon (now Sri Lanka, "the resplendent land") won independence from Britain in 1948, the United States held out high hopes for its success. It also held out huge quantities of aid. Sri Lanka now gets more U.S. aid per capita than any other Asian country.

But the snake in paradise, as the CIA predicted, was the ethnic rivalry between the Buddhist Sinhalese majority and the Hindu Tamils, which recently boiled over.

The CIA sees no easy solution to the longstanding hostility and recurring bloodshed. Even if the Tamils are given a bigger voice in the government — which is unlikely — that would be no guarantee of future peace.

HEMISPHERE REPORT

U.S. facing 'revolution' alone

WASHINGTON — President Reagan may have sounded overly dramatic when he spoke of "our sacred responsibility" to keep Central America from becoming "a string of anti-American, Marxist dictatorships."

William Giandoni

But, by now, it appears that no other hemisphere country is both willing and able to try to halt the Sandinistas' "revolution without frontiers" that Cuba and the Soviet Union are masterminding through Nicaragua.

The Contadora Group — Panama, Venezuela, Colombia and Mexico — have been pressing the United States to get out of Central America since last January when their foreign ministers first met on Contadora, a resort island in the Gulf of Panama, to take up the Central American case. At last report they were trying to reconcile the differences among three plans — their own, Nicaragua's and that of the other four nations threatened by the Sandinistas — Costa Rica, Honduras, Guatemala and El Salvador.

Most Central American governments believe the Contadora four to be in sympathy with the Sandinistas.

Or consider the Organization of American States, the hemisphere group that embraces all the American republics. OAS members show no interest in getting involved. Secretary-General Alejandro Orfila has explained that, unlike the United Nations, the OAS cannot take the initiative on any matter, unless a sufficient number of its members favors action. Honduras, Nicaragua's neighbor to the northwest, started trying to bring the conflictive situation in Central America to the organization's attention in March 1982, almost a year and a half ago. But, before anything could be accomplished, hostilities between Argentina and the United Kingdom over the Malvinas-Falkland Islands not only diverted attention from the Central American threat, but left the OAS divided and resentful. The Reagan administration's decision to abandon its efforts to mediate between the two allies, and to side with the British, disappointed the United States' friends and gave ammunition to its critics and enemies in Latin America.

In brief, as the thoughtful Argentine commentator Mariano Grondona wrote recently, the belief is generalized in Latin America that "the Malvinas experience has demonstrated that the Inter-American Treaty of Reciprocal Assistance is a mechanism created exclusively to preserve the security of the United States."

The Rio Treaty, as it is better known, was assumed in that case to have obliged all hemisphere nations, the United States included, to go to the aid of Argentina after it was attacked from abroad.

Most Latin American observers seemed to have felt that the United States, at the very least, would remain neutral in the South Atlantic conflict, particularly after it became known that Argentina had been actively engaged in helping Honduras and El Salvador bolster their defenses against the Sandinista threat.

By now it is obvious that the OAS is not of a mind to pull the U.S. chestnuts out of the fire.

In truth, there was not much more than moral support that the United States could have hoped for in its struggle to contain the spread of Marxist revolution in Central America.

None of the South American countries have fighting men or equipment to spare to help Central America, and Mexico two years ago pronounced itself in favor of the Salvadoran guerrilla movement, calling it a representative political force in that country.

At last count, only Chile and Paraguay, both run by staunchly anti-communist generals, were even voicing support for the U.S. effort. Argentina felt it had to excuse itself because, a year ago, both Cuba and Nicaragua had backed the Argentine cause in the United Nations and in Third World forums.

What that means is that the United States is, for all practical purposes, faced with the prospect of going it alone in Central America.

President Reagan seemed to recognize that when he touched on the subject during a reception for Rep. Robert Lagomarsino in Santa Barbara, Calif., recently.

"We will stick by our friends, helping them develop their democratic institutions and to strengthen their economies, while at the same time provide what they need to defend themselves," the president said. "We don't intend to let Soviet-supported Marxists shoot their way into power in those countries of the Americas. To do that would be to gamble with our country's security and with our children's future," he declared.

ART BUCHWALD

Managing to manage without love

As if we didn't have enough trouble in American business, Eliza Collins has just written in the Harvard Business Review that more and more love affairs are taking place in the executive echelons of our nation's corporations.

Art Buchwald

In the past these affairs have been between the male boss and his secretary, but as more females climb up the management ladder, they are now taking place between high-level executives of both sexes.

According to Ms. Collins these affairs are playing havoc with other employees, because they don't know if a management couple, in love, is making decisions for the good of the company or for each other.

The organizational and emotional turmoil pervades everyone from underlings to superiors, and the normal double-crossing atmosphere in the corporation is replaced by distrust, jealousy and back-biting.

Ms. Collins offers a tough solution to the problem. Companies must regard love affairs between their executives as conflicts of interest, and she proposes that the person who is least essential to the firm be asked to leave. She writes that in the male corporate world this is likely to be the woman. But, she adds, if both parties are of equal value, it is the man who should be canned to avoid a sex discrimination suit against the company.

Bosses, Ms. Collins says, must take a strong stand, because the company always comes first.

Yet there is another solution that Ms. Collins doesn't suggest, which could save both jobs.

Let me give you a scenario.

The chief executive of Kiss & Tell calls in two vice presidents.

"Miss Smart, Mr. Duff, rumor has it that the two of you are very much in love."

"Where did you get that idea, J.T.?" Duff asks.

"Well, for one thing Miss Smart is running her hand through your hair while I'm talking to you."

Miss Smart says, "It's true, J.T., Arthur and I are crazy about each other. But we don't fool around on company time."

"That's not the point," J.T. says. "The entire conglomerate knows about it and it's causing a real morale problem. Even our Singapore office thinks you two are plotting against them."

Duff says, "That's ridiculous. Our division has never been in better shape since we've fallen in love. We're the only executives in the company who game plan corporate strategy in bed."

"Nevertheless, Duff, I must take a strong stand on this issue. According to management policy the least essential of the two of you must go."

"You can't do that to Arthur," Miss Smart yells.

"What do you mean me?" Duff cries. "I'm more essential than you are. I was responsible for the takeover of the Brett Pine Tar Company."

"After I showed you how you could do it, by selling off our Mt. Saint Helen's Real Estate subsidiary."

"Are you trying to tell me your job means more to you than our love?" Duff says.

"I can always fall in love," Miss Smart says. "But I worked too hard to get where I am in this company to throw it away now."

"I should have known you were a ruthless broad when you closed down Scranton, Pennsylvania. You can move out of the apartment tonight."

"It will be my pleasure, and from now on you can write your own reports. Let's see how long you last with the company on your own."

J.T. says, "From this conversation can I assume the love affair between the two of you is over, and you will both start behaving like grown-up dog-eat-dog executives?"

"You bet your sweet life, J.T.," Duff says.

"Then the problem is solved and the two of you can stay. I'm proud of both of you. When push came to shove you chose the company over your hearts. That's the kind of managers I want playing on my team."

TODAY IN HISTORY

Ten years ago: The United Auto Workers went on strike against Chrysler Corp. when negotiators failed to reach agreement on a new contract.

Today's birthdays: Former U.S. Sen. Dick Clark of Iowa is 54 years old. Australian actress Zoe Caldwell is 50.

Thought for today: "Men reject their prophets and slay them, but they love their martyrs and honor those whom they have slain." — Feodor Dostoyevski, Russian author (1821-1881).

Wells Fargo guard takes $7 million

WEST HARTFORD, Conn. (AP) — A Wells Fargo guard accused of drugging two fellow workers to pull off a $7 million heist, the second-biggest in U.S. history, was a former star athlete who worked hard at his $5-an-hour job, family and friends said.

The FBI issued a nationwide alert Tuesday for Victor Gerena, the 25-year-old Wells Fargo Armored Services Corp. part-time guard who police say escaped with the money after overpowering a fellow guard and a manager at a suburban West Hartford depot.

Authorities pored over the rented get-away car found Tuesday near a Hartford airfield in an effort to pick up Gerena's trail. The robber may have had an accomplice in the inside job Monday, police said.

"We don't rule anything out at all," West Hartford police Chief Francis Reynolds said. "We're not certain."

The theft was the largest since $11.1 million cash was taken from a Sentry Armored Car warehouse in New York City nine months ago in the largest cash robbery in U.S. history.

Wells Fargo offered a $250,000 reward for recovery of the stolen cash and a $100,000 reward for information leading to the arrest and conviction of those responsible.

Attorney Michael J. Graham, representing Gerena's family, said the family "doesn't propose to tell Victor what to do, but if Victor chooses to surrender, he should call my office and we will arrange to have him turn himself in in the most safe way possible so that no one gets hurt and under the most favorable conditions we can negotiate.

"The police have assured us that they want it this way."

In 1976, Gerena won a $1,000 scholarship for school and community achievement, character and financial need. While at Bulkeley High School he played varsity football, was captain of the wrestling team and was a member of the Student Council.

State Rep. Felix J. Karsky, who taught Gerena in two classes, remembered him as "a good student and hard worker."

Gerena was divorced, but last week he applied for a marriage license, a family member said.

Graham said Gerena's fiancee, Ann Elizabeth Soto, 20, is "totally shocked" by the robbery.

"I asked her if Victor had any problems with gambling, drugs or anything else, and she said he had none," he said. "The family is dumbfounded and at a total loss to explain this, except to think, here's a guy who handles millions of dollars and maybe someone breaks."

Reynolds said the robbery occurred after an armored truck — driven by Timothy R. Girard, 21, with Gerena as guard — returned from a route that began in Springfield, Mass.

After the truck was unloaded, police said Gerena pulled a gun on Wells Fargo security manager James McKeon, 25, and threatened to "blow McKeon's head off."

Senate OKs defense bill, sends it to House

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Pentagon's main authorization bill for the fiscal year starting Oct. 1 is headed for its last hurdle in Congress where a pro-military mood has been fostered by the Soviets' destruction of a South Korean airliner.

After about 90 minutes of discussion that alluded to the Sept. 1 incident, the Senate gave 83-8 approval to the compromise, $187.5 billion measure Tuesday and sent it to the House. Final congressional approval by that chamber is expected Thursday.

Sen. John Tower, R-Texas, the Armed Services Committee chairman, said the shooting down of the Korean Air Lines jumbo jet in Soviet airspace, the killing of four Marines in Lebanon and other events during Congress' just-ended five-week recess showed the need for a strong American military.

"I can think of no comparable period in the recent past" which made that point clearer, he said.

One of the most controversial parts of the bill earmarks $114.6 million for the first U.S. production of nerve gas weapons since 1969. A leading opponent of this program, Sen. David Pryor, D-Ark., said "we're embarking on some programs that might not have survived" without the events that intervened.

He said he hoped the decision to go ahead with the chemical weapons program "will not be our monument to the 269 people" killed when the plane crashed in the Sea of Japan.

Pryor ended up voting for the bill but said he would try to keep money for the nerve-gas weapons out of the defense appropriations bill that Congress will take up later this fall.

Those voting against the bill were Sens. Ernest Hollings, D-S.C.; Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass.; Patrick Leahy, D-Vt.; Carl Levin, D-Mich.; Howard Metzenbaum, D-Ohio; Claiborne Pell, D-R.I.; William Proxmire, D-Wis.; and Paul Tsongas, D-Mass.

Besides the international incidents, the Senate acted in the shadow of the recent death of Sen. Henry M. Jackson, D-Wash., for three decades one of the the chamber's staunchest supporters of a strong military and ranking minority member of Tower's committee.

Tower said the bill that emerged from the Senate-House conference "is in significant measure" the product of Jackson's work.

The measure is $10.5 billion smaller than President Reagan had requested for the budget year starting Oct. 1 and provides half the 10 percent after-inflation growth in spending authority that he had sought for the Pentagon.

Helms to Reagan: Nail Soviet hide to the wall

WASHINGTON (AP) — Senate conservatives are trying to nudge President Reagan into ordering specific sanctions against the Soviet Union beyond his strong rhetorical attacks against the destruction of South Korean Flight 007.

"The president is missing a golden opportunity if he doesn't nail the Soviet hide to the wall," said Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C. "I want him to go beyond the rhetoric and do something substantive."

Senate leaders of both parties had agreed on a resolution — to be voted on today — which would harshly condemn the Soviet Union for shooting down the civilian airliner carrying 269 people, including 61 Americans, on Sept. 1.

The Soviets, the resolution says, are guilty of a "cold-blooded attack on a commercial airliner...which will rank among one of the most infamous and reprehensible acts of aviation history."

It has the support of the White House, and almost all congressional leaders.

But the resolution, written by Majority Leader Howard H. Baker Jr., R-Tenn., and Minority Leader Robert C. Byrd, D-W.Va., recommends few specific actions against the Soviets, except for reparations to survivors and U.S. support for joint actions with other nations.

Helms and a group of about 10 conservatives have agreed on much tougher wording which would urge Reagan to recall the U.S. ambassador to Moscow for urgent consultations, to sharply reduce the number of Soviet diplomats in the United States and to link strategic arms negotiations with the plane incident.

Helms said he wants Reagan to use the shooting down of the plane as a reason for a broad re-examination of U.S.-Soviet relations, including "willingness of the Soviet Union to abide by international law as a responsible member of the community of nations."

Reagan, the resolution says, should "conduct a comprehensive reappraisal of the complete spectrum of U.S.-Soviet relations, including arms control, human rights, East-West trade, and regional issues."

The senator said he sent copies of the resolution to the White House on Tuesday and believes Reagan may eventually accept some of its provisions.

Helms has previously used filibusters to tie up the Senate for weeks while he has pushed various conservative causes.

While he will pursue votes on his version of the Korean plane resolution, Helms said he would not filibuster this time.

Majority leader Baker has said he opposes any additions to his version of the resolution, but would not block votes or debate on alternatives.

Among other senators supporting the Helms' resolution are Republicans William Armstrong of Colorado and Steven Symms of Idaho.

Tugboat looks for 'black box'

WASHINGTON (AP) — A Navy tugboat specially equipped with a device to pluck small objects from the ocean floor will search for the black box of the Korean jetliner shot down by the Soviet Union, the Defense Department says.

The USNS Narragansett was scheduled early today to join three other U.S. ships searching international waters southwest of Sakhalin Island for the wreckage of the Korean jetliner, said Lt. John Carman, a U.S. military spokesman in Honolulu.

The searchers hope to find the aircraft's so-called black box, which contains in-flight recordings that could provide more information about the final hours of Korean Air Lines Flight 007.

The jumbo jet carrying 269 people was shot down Sept. 1 by a Soviet air-to-air missile 2½ hours after it strayed into Soviet airspace.

"The black box is our primary focus of interest," Carman said in a telephone interview. The black box emits a pinging signal that can be detected by a special electronic device aboard the Narragansett.

The so-called pinger locater will be used "to find the signal that should be coming out of the black box," Carman said. If a signal is detected, a deep-drone device will be sent to the ocean bottom to search for the black box, he said. The unmanned device operated by remote control can find and recover small objects in deep water.

Another pinger locater will be placed aboard the USS Conserver, a Navy salvage vessel that is en route to the search area from a Navy base at Subic Bay in the Philippines, Carman said.

Justice Department may probe suspicious death of black farmer

CHARLESTON, S.C. (AP) — The U.S. Justice Department is considering a full investigation into the death of a 29-year-old black farmer who died while being arrested by four white police officers.

The family of Larry W. Gurley of Florence County has agreed to have his body exhumed for a second autopsy. The first autopsy concluded that the 350-pound Gurley died of "cardiac insufficiency" during his arrest Aug. 5. But a Horry County coroner, saying he found signs of strangulation, last week ruled the death a felonious homicide.

The Justice Department's Civil Rights Division will conduct a preliminary probe and will decide "maybe in two weeks" whether to launch a formal inquiry, spokesman John V. Wilson said Monday.

Southland Corp. to fight charges

NEW YORK (AP) — Despite an executive's admission of guilt in the case, the parent company of 7-Eleven convenience stores says it will mount a vigorous defense against charges it tried to bribe a state tax official.

Eugene DeFalco, a vice president of Southland Corp., pleaded guilty Tuesday to conspiring with people inside and outside the firm to bribe an official to resolve sales tax matters in the firm's favor.

A federal indictment returned in May charged Dallas-based Southland with paying $96,500 intended for bribes to then-New York City Councilman Eugene Mastropieri, who was also indicted in the case.

Company spokesman John Singleton said the company had no comment on the plea but that it "intends...to defend itself vigorously."

Man may have killed five women

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A 21-year-old man suspected of fatally shooting an elderly man and then setting his house on fire may also have slain five women whose homes were torched, police say.

The suspect, Lance Williams, had burns on his body when he was arrested Tuesday for investigation of killing the Venice-area man, whose identity was withheld while relatives were contacted, police said. The victim had been shot, police said.

Five Hollywood-area women aged 57 to 72 have died in similar circumstances since June 1982. Lt. Tim McBride said Williams, who "passed himself off as the hero" when firefighters arrived at Tuesday's fire, was also under investigation in those deaths.

Man eludes deputies in swamp

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — A bearded man who lives in huts in a dense cypress swamp "just slipped away" from deputies who searched the swamp in boats and airplanes seeking to question him in a fisherman's slaying, police said.

More than two dozen deputies combed the swamp Tuesday for Charles T. Hall, 42, a former mental patient who left his home several months ago. Hall "knows these swamps like the back of his hand," said detective Sgt. Paul Oubre of St. John Parish.

Salvadoran troops find rebel graves

By The Associated Press

Government troops in El Salvador have discovered shallow graves filled with dozens of rebels killed in recent fighting, according to a military spokesman. He also reported new battles which left 33 guerrillas and five army soldiers dead.

The spokesman said the fighting took place around Jucuaran, 84 miles southeast of San Salvador. The armed forces issued a communique Tuesday saying, "The town returned to tranquility and is being protected by soldiers of the Atlacatl Battallion."

In other developments in the region, a rebel radio station reported that El Salvador's largest and most radical guerrilla group shuffled its leadership and Nicaragua told the U.N. Security Council that the United States played a role in last week's air attacks on its territory.

The Salvadoran military spokesman, who declined to be identified, said Tuesday that 10 graves containing the bodies of 60 dead guerrillas were found in the Agua Zarca region, about 92 miles northeast of San Salvador, in San Miguel province.

The guerrillas were killed during a recent counterinsurgency sweep of the area, he said.

Seven other common graves containing the bodies of dead rebels, killed in recent fighting near Jucuaran, were also discovered. It was not known how many bodies were in those graves, the spokesman said.

Salvadoran leftist Radio Farabundo Marti said in a communique that the radical rebel group, the Popular Liberation Forces (FPL), named

Victor Hugo Tinoco

Leonel Gonzalez as commander in chief and Dimas Rodriguez as second in command.

Little is known of either of the men. The radio said they were "chosen for such a high responsiblity on the basis of their trials in popular combat."

The communique said the move indicated growing unity among the five rebel organizations battling the U.S.-backed Salvadoran government. The FPL agreed to increase its attacks and strive for greater unity with the other groups, it said.

In the U.N. Security Council session Tuesday on last week's air raids on his country, Nicaraguan Deputy Foreign Minister Victor Hugo Tinoco claimed one of the pilots was a Miami-based member of "mercenary forces trained and financed" by the Reagan administration.

Tinoco was the only person to address the council and the meeting lasted less than a half hour. He did not submit a resolution and no further debate was scheduled.

Tinoco displayed a portfolio containing Social Security, resident alien and credit cards and a U.S. immigration permit in the name of Agustin Roman, 39, of Miami, described as a stateless person born in Nicaragua.

He said the documents were found on the body of one of two pilots killed last Thursday when their Cessna 404 airplane was downed by anti-aircraft fire after dropping two U.S.-made 500-pound bombs on the Managua airport. One customs worker was killed and three air force personnel were wounded in the raid, Tinoco said.

In other developments Tuesday;

—Police in Honduras said they captured suspects in two weekend bombings that shook San Pedro Sula, the second largest city in the country. A police official blamed the bombings of the offices of Pan American Airways and a Costa Rican airliner on leftists trying to "frighten the people and destabilize the government."

Jackson retracts comments on queen's stand

AMSTERDAM, Netherlands (AP) — The Rev. Jesse Jackson, worried about breaching protocol, backed off his comment that Queen Beatrix said deployment of nuclear missiles in Europe should be delayed even if U.S.-Soviet arms talks stall.

Jackson, the civil rights leader who is expected to seek the Democratic presidential nomination, met with the queen privately for 70 minutes Tuesday at the royal residence at The Hague. He is scheduled to travel to West Germany today as he continues a nine-day tour of Western Europe.

Shortly after his audience, Jackson told The Associated Press in an interview that the queen said she wanted the arms reduction talks in Geneva "to either succeed or (the deployment) to be delayed."

"There is a feeling of helplessness, that she is left at the mercy of the superpowers" if the arms talks fail, Jackson said.

But Hans van der Voet, head of the government information service, denied Jackson's account of the conversation, saying: "Not a word in this direction was spoken during the meeting."

Kyle Burns, 13, looks over his offensive formation at Northwest High in Justin. Burns, a straight-A student, is repeating the seventh grade for athletics to improve his college scholarship chances. He will be 19 when he graduates.

Athlete to repeat seventh grade

Justin's Kyle Burns plays for college scholarship

JUSTIN, Texas (AP) — Kyle Burns, a 13-year-old straight-A student, is repeating the seventh grade — but his parents won't know for five years if the second time around will benefit the youth.

Kyle, a tight end, is being held back so that when he becomes a senior in high school he will be older and stronger than the other players he faces.

Physically, he's off to a good start. At 5 feet, 11½ inches tall and 155 pounds, he's already as big as most of the varsity players at Northwest High, a Class AAA school halfway between Fort Worth and Denton.

THE IDEA is that Kyle will help Northwest win more football games — and that he will be better able to get a college scholarship.

"That's why I'm holding back — for athletic reasons," he told The Dallas Morning News. "I'm hoping I can mature a little. I think it will help me be better."

Kyle, whose birthday is Sept. 25, will be 19 when he graduates from high school in 1989. His father, Clay Burns, expects he will be bigger and stronger than his contemporaries.

"I looked around, and the consensus was that if a boy can be held back, he will have a better chance," Burns said.

But Kyle's mother, Linda Burns, who lives apart from the family, worries about the move.

"I can see the wrong in it," she said. "If he gets hurt, or something goes wrong, it's been a wasted year. It's academic suicide."

The practice of holding back a student athlete, commonly known as red-shirting, was barred in Texas high schools in 1952. A rule passed by the University Interscholastic League provides for only five consecutive years of eligibility once a student enters the eighth grade.

BUT BILL Farney, UIL athletic director, told the News that there is very little the organization can do in cases like Kyle's where an athlete repeats the seventh grade.

"We can't keep moving the rule back farther, because you would eventually get to the point where you would require a person to complete their schooling in 12 years, and the Texas Education Agency wouldn't like that very much," Farney said.

The only way the UIL can intervene is if it has evidence that the high school coach requested the red-shirting — a case that often is hard to prove, Farney said.

"Although, we did have a case once where the school sent out a letter encouraging red-shirting," Farney said. "And if the parents are holding back on their own, there is nothing we can do."

Burns, a former All-District running back at Northwest, said he and his son carefully considered the move.

"We sat down and put the pluses and minuses down on paper and decided this would be best," he said. "We didn't force this on Kyle. He wants to play for Texas A&M, and I want to give him every chance possible."

Burns said there are many things that could happen to his son.

"We've got a few years to go before we know if this is worth it," Burns said. "If he doesn't get a chance at a school like A&M, he might get a scholarship at a place like Sam Houston or Angelo State.

"When you consider the cost of a four-year college, I think it is worth it," he said.

Kyle's mother told the News that she approved of the idea at first, but since has changed her mind.

"Last year, after Northwest's first game, we were at a party at a neighbor's house and several of the coaches were there," she said. "We were approached about the red-shirt program. They said that a kid like Kyle with super ability, if he were to follow a red-shirt program, by the time he graduated, he would reach his full growth. This would ensure his getting a scholarship."

Rebs rise to No. 8

By The Associated Press

Three District 4-5A football teams continued to rise in The Associated Press Schoolboy Football Poll this week with Odessa Permian moving into the No. 3 ranking, San Angelo into fourth and Midland Lee from 10th to eighth.

No other district in the state could boast of three teams in the Top 10 rankings.

Converse Judson, after a short wait in second place, took advantage of Houston Memorial's loss and moved into the No. 1 position.

Brazoswood shocked Memorial 31-13 and earned a 10th place tie with Memorial in the latest balloting of Texas sports writers and sportscasters.

The other top ranked teams from last week held their No. 1 spots including Fort Bend Willowridge in 4A, Littlefield in 3A, Panhandle in 2A and Bremond in A.

Irving Nimitz, a No. 3 preseason pick in 5A lost its second straight game and dropped from the list. Galveston Ball, 2-0, returned to the top 10 in the No. 9 spot following a 14-6 victory over Fort Worth Dunbar.

Willowridge, the defending 4A state champion, continued its domination of the division by receiving all 21 first place votes cast in this week's voting with New Braunfels remaining a distant No. 2 by a 210-169 point total.

Port Isabel, ranked No. 4 in 3A last week, was the lone loser in that classification last week and dropped out of the top 10 while Littlefield held onto its first place position by the slimest of margins, 185-184 over runnerup Navasota.

Littlefield gained 15 first place votes to only five for Navasota.

Fourth-ranked Pilot Point, No. 5 Grand Saline and No. 8 Marfa were losers in the 2A ranks and only Pilot Point remained in the top 10 as the No. 10 ranked team.

East Bernard, 2-0, and Boyd, 2-0, moved into the eighth and ninth spots. Boyd shut out Chico 41-0 and East Bernard beat Edna 21-6 in last week's games.

Fourth-ranked Anton was the lone loser among the A ranks last week and was replaced in the No. 10 position by Knox City, which returned to the rankings after a one-week absence. Knox City drilled Seymour 19-7 last week after a season opening loss to Albany.

Bremond received 17 of the 21 first place votes in A for a solid 199-187 lead over second place Wink.

Todd lives with boo-birds

NEW YORK (AP) — Richard Todd spent the off-season working in a Wall Street brokerage house, mixing it up with other commuters instead of National Football League defenses.

"I rode the subways. That was a blast," the New York Jets' quarterback said with some pride. "I had fun watching everybody. Boy, there are some looney birds in New York."

Todd already was familiar with another kind of New York bird — the boo-birds in Shea Stadium. For much of his career, they have been on his case. It is only in the last two years that Todd has appeased them somewhat with winning seasons. But he still has not given them what they want — a Super Bowl victory.

"This is the toughest town in the NFL," Todd said. "As a young man, you've never been exposed to such negatives as there are in New York. That's the way it works. It's bigger, there's more media here and the people out there believe everything they read. But it just makes you stronger in the long run."

If anything, Todd's career in New York could be called character-building. He arrived in the city in 1976, and the next season replaced a golden name in New York sports — Joe Namath.

There were the inevitable comparisons. Like his predecessor, Todd came from the University of Alabama, was drafted No. 1 by the Jets and painted just as cocky and free-spirited as Namath by the press.

"The media created that situation," Todd says. "They had me as a playboy. Heck, I liked girls before I met Joe.

"I didn't come in here to be a Namath. He was one of the best, but that doesn't mean I can't be as effective a quarterback. Joe had the great arm, but there's more things I can do that he couldn't do."

Popular as Namath was, he had an overall record of 60-63-4 in his 12 years as a New York demigod. Only three of his seasons were winning ones. Todd already has two winning seasons in his six.

"But," Todd said, stressing the obvious, "he WON the Super Bowl. That's what matters."

Not only did Namath lead the Jets to a surprising Super Bowl victory over the Baltimore Colts in 1969, he guaranteed it. That long shadow has followed Todd ever since.

The early years in New York were nerve-wracking for Todd. He says he didn't mind the reaction from the fans and the press as much as the results he was getting on the field.

"It was hard losing," he says, "but I've always had fun playing the game of football here, except the year I was hurt (1978). That wasn't much fun."

That was the season of the Two-Quarterback Controversy, when Todd broke his collarbone and gave way to Matt Robinson, who stepped in and tossed a fan-pleasing 11 touchdowns in 11 games.

When the 1979 season opened, Robinson was the Jets' starting quarterback and Todd was an unhappy bench-sitter. The following week, Todd got his starting job back, but there were many fans who felt that Robinson should have been there. They let Todd know it, too, showering him with verbal abuse and garbage.

"Fans are unreasonable everywhere," Todd said.

Lee, MHS sweep district openers

By ROBERT BRUNDAGE
Sports Writer

Midland Lee opened the 1983 District 4-5A volleyball season with an impressive 15-5, 15-12 victory over Odessa High Tuesday night at Lee Gym.

The defending champion Midland High Bulldogs also opened their district season Tuesday with a 15-13, 15-12 victory over Odessa Permian.

In the opening game of the match, the Rebels were never really contested, running up 7-0 and 11-1 leads before Odessa High was able to come up with any offense at all. The closest the Broncos came was 11-5 before the Rebels put the game away.

Lesa Barnett served the final two points of the game with Felicia Farias dinking a shot over the net for a point and Megan Pace spiking the winner.

OHS looked like it would give Lee a run in the second game, building up leads of 3-0 and 6-2, but couldn's substain the pace. Lee tied the game at 7-7, 8-8 and 9-9 before pulling into a lead which the Rebels never relinquished.

Odessa High didn't want to give up the go ahead point in the second game. The Bronchos and Rebels fought back and forth, each making strong defensive plays, before Farias spiked the ball. Barnett then followed with a serve the Bronchos knocked into the net for an 11-9 Lee advantage.

OHS kept the game close, pulling to within 12-11 and 13-12 before Barnett spiked a 14-12 winner followed by a service ace by Pat Sanchez for the match.

"They've come back all year long," said Lee coach Janice Baulch about the second-game deficit. "One thing I don't have to worry about with this group is their desire to win. They don't ever give up. As far as they are concerned, nothing is impossible.

"We played a typical first game of the district season," said Baulch. "The girls were ready to win. In the second game we let down a bit. When you beat a team as bad as we did the first game, there's usually a let down."

MHS coach Linda Jolly got a good team effort to down Permian. "I think our girls were thinking about being the defending champions and just played a super game," Jolly said. "Permian has a really good team this year and I thought it was good to go to their gym and beat them two in a row. No one really stood out for us because it was such a team effort."

In other Lee action, the Rebel junior varsity came from behind to defeat OHS 13-15, 15-11 and 15-13. The sophomores suffered a 15-5, 15-13 defeat.

The MHS JV won a 14-16, 18-16, 15-11 decision over Odessa Permian.

On Thursday, Lee travels to last year's runner-up in the league, San Angelo, for varsity and junior varsity games beginning at 6 p.m. While Lee is on the road, Midland High will host Big Spring in sophomore, JV and varsity games beginning at 5 p.m. at MHS.

Junk Yard Dawgs must look back at 1982

After a 30-7 upset over Lubbock Monterey in Week 1 of the high school football season, the Midland High Bulldogs looked like the complete football team. MHS fans were riding on Cloud Nine and loving every minute of it.

Suddenly the potent Bulldogs blew a defensive wheel in Andrews last Friday in a 25-20 loss to the Class 4A Mustangs. "Hey, what's wrong?" was suddenly the cry.

Maybe it should have been expected. The thought here is that MHS possesses the makings of a very good football team. But it is still one that needs some seasoning, especially on defense. Coach Pat Culpepper knew that all along.

"No one was happier than I was at the way we dominated Monterey," says Culpepper. "But before the season ever began, I knew the first four weeks were going to be crucial to this team.

"The fact is that we open the season with four teams who were in the playoffs a year ago. I knew that we would not enter a game during that period when we would have a chance to out-personnel anybody."

Culpepper would like to see a tremendous amount of improvement on the defensive side of the ball. The offensive weapons seem to be in gear and can only improve as the season goes along. The defense now needs to learn a lesson from last year's edition of the "Junk Yard Dawgs."

"We literally have a brand new defensive team. We have five juniors on defense and the seniors, except Terry Hannon, haven't played that much. In fact, Hannon is playing a different position.

"We never got a handle on Andrews defensively. We looked disorganized and made horrible defensive adjustments — just like you would expect for a young defense. The 'Want to' is there, but the 'How to' isn't yet," Culpepper said. "We've had an attitude adjustment defensively this week and I hope it pays dividends."

But if anyone is ready to hang-up the season for MHS as a lost cause, 1982 should be a quick reminder. MHS had a horrible game against Lubbock Estacado, which happens to be Thursday's rematch. They came on to be the No. 2 rated defense in the league.

And the Bulldogs did that with no offensive attack to speak of. That is the difference this year and where high hopes should still abound.

"I'm really pleased with the way our offense has moved the ball. We will continue to throw and we will get even better with each passing game. I don't think we've even scratched the surface of what it can be," notes Culpepper, but adds, "However, I don't want to become a catchup team. It is very important that our defense plays well early in a game because it takes a little while for our coaches in the press box to watch the coverages and decide what we can do best with the pass. We entered the Andrews game with nine running plays and 24 pass plays.

"Andrews scored 10 points on us very quickly and we just can't allow that to happen to our offense.

"Still, our offense got us back in the lead. Our defense didn't respond well in that situation and we still thought we could win the game after scoring with 2:44 left in the game. But the defense didn't get the ball back," said Culpepper.

Quarterback James Welborn is something special. He threw for 311 yards on a 17 for 34 night against Andrews. It was still a losing effort. Receivers Todd Shiplet and Allan Foret are special also. Never have I seen two high school receivers who know how to go and get the football. Every pass to them is a jump ball at center court.

If the defense can return to the consistent effort put forth a year ago, expect MHS to gain its share of victories. These non-conference games should be a season of learning anyway. Now is time to work on weaknesses and highlight strengths.

A loss can always prove to be a positive in the context of non-conference games. MHS learned that lesson last year against Estacado and can again with Andrews.

Estacado will by flying in here Thursday with two wins over 5A schools (Plainview and Big Spring), and ranked No. 5 in the state.

But now MHS has an offense to compete with most any team on an even basis. The tide will turn Purple if, and when, the Bulldog defense rises to the top. This is a young defense and you can bet they will improve.

WEST TEXAS SPORTS
USTA Zone tourney arrives

The United States Tennis Association Major Zone tournament comes to Midland College Friday for a three-day stand and brings with it some of the state's top-ranked players as well as some with national rankings.

"This tournament should be a good one for spectators, since it includes some high school champions, a lot of collegiate players, and some of the top players in the state...all competing together," said Joe Williams, Midland College tennis coach and tournament director.

Lubbock's Doug Davis, ranked No. 6 in Texas, is the No. 1 seed in the men's singles while Lamar Morris, Houston, who reached the finals of the Houston Open, is No. 2. Morris played on Tyler JC's national champions.

Texas Wesleyan Coach Glenn Williams is the third seed and ranks 14th in Texas while Jon Brotherton, Wichita Falls, is the fourth seed, two spots ahead of doubles partner, Dean Barrett, who won the Highway 80 tourney in Midland.

Others seeds are: Scott McKay, UT-Austin, fifth; John McCauley, MC freshman from Conroe, seventh; and Odessa College's David Leatherwood, No. 8.

Davis and Menard, Texas Tech's No. 1 singles, will team in the doubles. Morris and Tomasco, Rice, is seeded third and the MC pair of McCauley and Sean Strickling is fourth.

Susan Torrance of Corpus Christi is the state's No. 1 ranked woman and Lynn Davis McWilliams, Fort Worth, is No. 2.

Diana Dopson, a high schooler from Austin, gets the third seed, based on her 5A state championship. Libbe Brende, another prepster from Richardson who won the 1982 Cotton Bowl tournament, is No. 4.

Others seeds are: Brenda Niemeyer, UT-San Antonio, fifth; Liz Burris, MC freshman and state 4A champion from Friendswood, is sixth; Elizabeth Pierre, Angelo State, seventh; and Michelle Dodier, San Antonio, eighth.

Rosie Garza, Odessa, and Roberts, are the top women's seed in doubles.

Matches begin at 8:30 a.m. Friday and finals are scheduled for Sunday afternoon, singles at 1 p.m. and doubles at 3:30 p.m.

Swift gains scholarship

Former Midland College golfer Wendy Swift is one of two persons to receive a $3,000 Canadian Golf Foundation academic scholarship award for 1983.

She is attending the United States International University in San Diego, and is a senior, majoring in business administration.

She attended Midland College for two years (1980-82) on a golf scholarship and was on the Chaparrals' 1982 National Junior College Athletic Association national championship team. During that time, she earned a perfect 4.0 grade point average three semesters, won the female academic award for athletes and was named to Who's Who Among Students in Junior Colleges in America.

As a junior at USIU, she won on intercollegiate tournament, finished second twice and posted a third and seventh. In her last tournament of the spring season, she injured her wrist, which necessitated surgery during the summer.

UT fans call party

University of Texas graduates are starting a weekly get-together beginning Saturday. The Texas-Exes are meeting at The Bar at 11 a.m. Saturday in preparation for the Texas at Auburn game. In addition, game films will be shown every Monday beginning Sep. 19 with Coach Dabbs at 11:30 a.m.

Polo set for Sunday

A six-goal polo tournament, featuring local players, will be held Sunday at 2 p.m. at the Midland Polo Field, located on North Garfield Street.

Admission is $2.50 per person or $5 per car load.

Bryant, Gipp keep reaching

By HERSCHEL NISSENSON
AP Sports Writer

Two painted red arrows are the only sign that someone special is buried there.

To get to Bear Bryant's grave in Birmingham's Elmwood Cemetery, you follow a checkered red line to block 30 and circle around until you come to the arrows on the pavement.

They point to a small headstone engraved simply, "Paul William Bryant, Sr. Sept. 11, 1913-Jan. 26, 1983."

The winningest coach in college football history is buried there, not far from Legion Field, where his teams went 68-15-5 in his 25 seasons as head coach of the Alabama Crimson Tide.

On Saturday, Georgia Tech fumbled on the game's third play, setting up an Alabama touchdown. It reminded one of a Notre Dame-Michigan State game when every bounce seemed to be going Notre Dame's way.

"It's as though George Gipp is reaching up from below and directing the football," a frustrated Spartan complained to Coach Duffy Daugherty.

"Don't be sacrilegious," replied the impish Daugherty. "You mean Gipp is reaching down from above."

JACK BICKNELL, Boston College's center, weighs 254 pounds, but his parents were a bit worried last week when he was scheduled to go eyeball-to-eyeball with William Perry, Clemson's 320-pound nose guard, who is known as "The Refrigerator."

Parents alway worry about their sons getting hurt, but this was rather unusual because young Jack's father, also named Jack Bicknell, is BC's head coach.

"I was afraid to talk to him last week. I didn't to make him any more nervous than he was," Coach Bicknell said. "I'm sure he knew about Perry. And I'm sure my wife almost had a heart attack during the game."

Lois Bicknell said she was "pretty uptight" all week thinking "a million different things.

"I don't think I worry too much about his getting hurt," she said. "I worry more that he might goof up. I was wondering whether he could handle that big kid and, if he couldn't, what would happen to (quarterback) Doug Flutie."

The Eagles usually rank third in Boston sports behind the Red Sox and Patriots when September rolls around. But they are kings of the hill this fall with the Red Sox out of the pennant race and the Patriots still rebuilding. Boston College is sold out for almost every home game.

PENN STATE Coach Joe Paterno may have been upset following Saturday's 14-3 upset by Cincinnati, but he did not refuse to do his postgame radio show, as reported in some quarters.

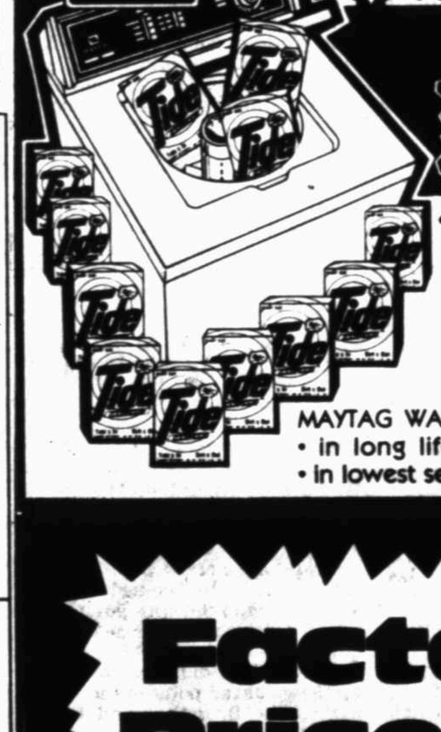

Paterno did the show, as usual, from the Penn State locker room, surrounded by members of the media. But someone on the Penn State Radio Network forgot to throw the switch that was supposed to pipe his remarks to the press box, where someone assumed that he just hadn't shown up.

If you have any doubt that football is king at Nebraska, just phone the athletic department. When they put you on hold, there's no recorded music while you wait, but rather the play-by-play broadcast of a Cornhusker game.

Ever hear of the Palm Festival? It was the forerunner of the Orange Bowl, and there were two of them. On Jan. 1, 1933, the University of Miami upset Manhattan College 7-0. The following year, Miami lost to Duquesne 33-7. And on Jan. 1, 1935, the Hurricanes lost to Bucknell 26-0 in the first Orange Bowl.

TO COMMEMORATE the 50th Orange Bowl next Jan 1., the Orange Bowl Committee will honor the nine surviving members of the 1932 Manhattan team Saturday when the Jaspers — now reduced to club status — open their season against Siena at a high school field in New York.

Midland is well represented at Texas Tech football games this year with five players from the two cities. They are, front row from left, junior defensive end Anthony Johnson of Midland Lee, sophomore fullback Jerry Zachery of Midland High and senior defensive end Jeff McCowan of Midland Lee. Back Row: senior tight end Rufus Johnson of Midland High and freshman linebacker Calvin Riggs of Midland Lee.

Anderson tops in SWC

By The Associated Press

Mix three quarterbacks with a new offense and normally you would have a recipe for disaster.

However, the Baylor Bears acted as if they had been running the I Formation with a troika of signal callers all their careers Saturday night, particularly senior tailback Alfred Anderson.

Anderson scored two touchdowns and rushed for career-high 144 yards to spur the Bears to a 40-34 victory over Brigham Young University.

HIS ACHIEVEMENTS earned him The Associated Press Southwest Conference Offensive Player of the Week award while Texas Christian strong safety Byron Linwood won the accolade as Defensive Player of the Week in the Horned Frogs' 16-all tie with Kansas.

"I love it (the I-Formation)," said Anderson. "It gives me a better opportunity to run in any direction. I can bounce outside or split up the middle."

Anderson now has the Baylor career touchdown record of 28, two more than Walter Abercrombie, who plays for the Pittsburgh Steelers.

"It felt great to take the record," Anderson said. "Abercrombie will read about it in the paper and may be surprised."

Asked if he were interested in joining Abercrombie and former Baylor stars Frank Pollard and Greg Hawthorne at Pittsburgh, Anderson said he might decline.

"I WOULDN'T mind going to Pittsburgh," said Anderson. "I've heard they are looking at me hard.

"But I'd like go somewhere else because I don't want to play behind Walter again. I've already done that.

He added, "I love Miami and Dallas would be my second choice."

Anderson said he wasn't certain if he would be happy with the three quarterback system which employs Tom Muecke, Cody Carlson, and Allan Rice.

"I wanted to know what Coach (Grant) Teaff was doing at first," Anderson said. "I needed to get acquainted with the quarterbacks' cadence and I didn't know how good it would work.

"It turned out well. I just had to tell Tom to speak up louder."

"My goal was to get 150 but it was a good start anyway," he said.

Linwood, of Pittsburg, Texas, made nine tackles, six of them unassisted, collected three quarterback sacks for 29 yards in losses, and intercepted a pass.

The 6-foot-3, 195-pound pre-med major played an "unbelievable" game according to secondary coach Jim Dawson.

Rice wants to break slide

HOUSTON (AP) — Rice Coach Ray Alborn was on Al Conover's staff when the former Rice head coach threw a chair through a dressing room window — a move that was credited with inspiring the Owls to an upset of the Arkansas Razorbacks.

Alborn also laughed as Conover rolled a hearse onto the Rice Stadium field after a loss to Texas, so the Owls could "bury their mistakes."

If Alborn, whose team is in the midst of a 14-game losing streak, believed gimmicks won games, there would be strange goings on daily at Rice this week as the Owls prepare for Saturday's game against heavily favored Louisiana State.

Alborn is old fashioned, however. He thinks victories still have to be won on the field.

"Blocking, tackling, execution and concentration, that's what wins games," Alborn said. "I'm sure not going out and bite a tiger's head off."

The Owls lost their opener to Houston 45-14 and were within minutes of breaking their losing string last week before Minnesota rallied to a 21-17 victory.

MINNESOTA'S Alan Reid broke four tackles en route to the winning touchdown and the caliber increases Saturday when the Owl defense faces LSU's one-two punch of tailbacks Dalton Hilliard and Garry James.

"Hilliard had a great game against us last year but they are both very good backs and what frightens me is their fullback is faster than the tailbacks," Alborn said.

"I think they should have a two for one night and let us play 22 players against them."

Alborn will continue to start Phillip Money at quarterback ahead of Doug Johnson.

"Based on performance, Phillip is our starter," Alborn said. "In the Houston game, Doug made some mistakes trying to make something happen. That's an admirable position to take, but when you start free lancing, things can go wrong."

The return of the Tigers to Rice Stadium reminded Alborn of another Conover gimmick prior to an LSU game in Houston when Charlie McClendon was the coach.

"Al had a trainer with some firecrackers in the bathroom of the old dressing room," Alborn said. "At Al's signal, (hitting his fist on the blackboard), the trainer set off the fireworks but because of poor ventillation, the smoke poured out of the locker room.

"The players went running onto the field trailing smoke. Charlie Mac (McClendon) didn't know if we were that fired up or if there was just a fire in the dressing room."

But Conover's fireworks backfired. LSU won the game.

Yeoman praises Cougar defense

HOUSTON (AP) — University of Houston linebacker Eugene Lockhart patrols the Cougar defensive unit like a mother hen, protecting and correcting his flock when needed.

Nose guard Eddie Gilmore felt Lockhart's paternal wrath with a tongue-lashing in Saturday's 29-7 loss to Miami after Gilmore was penalized at a crucial point in the game.

Although his body language on the field Saturday didn't match his explanation Tuesday, Lockhart said he told Gilmore that "we can't afford those stupid mistakes. We just can't have penalties like that. That's basically what I told him."

Lockhart's emergence as a defensive leader is one reason head coach Bill Yeoman is praising the defense despite its loss.

"That's why I can hardly wait to get to practice because if we can get things worked out and they keep busting their fannies they are going to shut the door on some people," Yeoman said.

The Cougar defense forced Miami to settle for a 9-7 halftime lead on three field goals by Jeff Davis.

The UH defense kept Miami scoreless after six plays inside the Cougar 10 on successive drives and Lockhart considers it his duty as team captain to never let the defense forget what it did.

"If we get into trouble again against another team, it's something that we can recall and know that we can do it again," Lockhart said. "It should help get us enthused.

"It was a plus on our part to have the character to go out and stop them twice," Lockhart said. "It's something that we can build a defense around.

The Cougars have non-conference games Saturday against Lamar University and Sept. 24 against Oregon before jumpin into Southwest Conference play against Baylor.

"We can't afford to have a drop off against Lamar," Lockhart said. "We've got to pick up the pieces from last week. We are trying to build a decent club and a drop off against Lamar won't help us accomplish that goal."

While the defense is headed in the right direction, the offense once again sputtered with quarterback Lionel Wilson throwing four interceptions and losing one fumble, accounting for 10 Miami points.

"Our execution at the quarterback position wasn't what it has to be but I'm sure it will come," Yeoman said.

Yeoman said he hoped to get some playing time for sophomore back up Quince Harris against the Cardinals.

Freshman Greg Landry, who led Beaumont West Brook to the state Class 5A title last year, will be given the option of red-shirting this season, Yeoman said.

Wilson has thrown five interceptions and lost one fumble in Houston's two games. Last season, Wilson tossed 13 interceptions and contributed to a major portion of UH's 17 lost fumbles.

Wilson drove the Cougars 80 yards to a touchdown with the opening kickoff but it was Houston's only sustained drive of the game. Houston finished with 207 yards in total offense, compared to 464 yards against Rice.

Garrett wants apology

WASHINGTON (AP) — Washington wide receiver Alvin Garrett, who said he was not offended by a remark made by Howard Cosell, said he would like the sportscaster to apologize to him on camera the next time the Redskins play on Monday night.

However, Garrett, who noted that he did not interpret Cosell calling him "that little monkey" as derogatory, said Tuesday an apology from Cosell to the Rev. Joseph Lowery of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference was not enough.

"What will clean up all of this would be for Howard Cosell, on (the Redskins') next Monday night game to just apologize to me in front of all those people," Garrett said. "I'd like him to say it to me in person, on camera. That would end it for both of us."

The Redskins play Green Bay on Monday, Oct. 17.

During the Sept. 5 ABC broadcast of the Redskins-Cowboys game, Cosell referred to Garrett as "that little monkey." Lowery called on the sportscaster to apologize because some people interpreted the remark as a racial slur.

Cosell, who initially denied the remark, later said that he used the term affectionately and that no slur was intended. He then called Lowery to apologize.

Garrett, however, said others have reacted in jest to the controversial description of the wide receiver.

"Bananas are the big prank. Almost every day there's bananas," said Garrett. "I come back (to the locker room) to put my pants on and there's a banana in my pocket. One day, somebody taped five or six bananas up in my locker. They're putting them everywhere."

Ray Mancini puts title on line

NEW YORK (AP) — Ray "Boom Boom" Mancini opens what he hopes will be a busy boxing schedule when he fights Orlando Romero of Peru Thursday night in his first defense of the World Boxing Association lightweight title in 10 months and his first fight in seven.

If he gets past Romero, as expected, Mancini will sign for a defense against Bobby Chacon, the former World Boxing Council featherweight and super featherweight champion.

"I'm going to stay active," said the 22-year-old Mancini. "I want to get in there again in November."

Dave Wolf, Mancini's manager said that fight would be held in November or December and mentioned as possible sites Houston, Boston, Syracuse, N.Y., and Reno, Nev.

"We like the possiblity of Syracuse because of its accessibility for his Ohio fans." Mancini lives in Youngstown.

Wolf also said that Bob Arum, who is promoting the Garden show, has made a good offer for Mancini to fight South African Aladdin Stevens in South Africa in February.

"We've put in so much time in South Africa selling Mancini, it seems we should go back and take advantage of it."

Mancini, who last defended the title against Duk Koo Kim Nov. 13, 1982, was scheduled to defend against Kenny Bogner in South Africa May 27, but he broke his collarbone while sparring.

"I felt it when I threw a punch," Mancini said of the injury. "I still don't know when I got hit on it."

But Mancini, who scored as 10-round non-title decision over George Feeney Feb. 6, appears in top physical condition.

While training at Grossinger's in the Catskills, Mancini on four separate occasions spent about an hour carrying a 90-pound bag of sand or pushing a large log up a 45-degree incline.

Trainer Murphy Griffith said the exercise was a mental as well as a physical one. "It shows you how it feels in the late rounds where you are tired but have to keep going," he said.

"It teaches you to handle stress," said Maninci.

The champion said he has overcome the stress brought on by the Kim fight. The Korean was injured fatally when he was knocked out in the 14th round.

Mancini and Wolfe's master plan calls for at least two big-money fights in the spring and fall of 1984 against Aaron Pryor, the WBA junior welterweight champion; lightweight Howard Davis, and Hector Camacho, the WBC super featherweight champion.

So, Mancini considers his scheduled 15-rounder against the unbeaten 23-year-old Romero "the most important fight of my career" because it launches an ambitious and what can be a very lucrative campaign. He has a 30-0-1 record, with 12 knockouts, and is No. 1-ranked by the WBA.

Vermaak advances

SALT LAKE CITY, Utah (AP) — Top-seeded Yvonne Vermaak faces Debbie Robb of Salt Lake City today in the second round of the $50,000 Ginny of Utah tennis tournament.

Vermaak, a 1983 Wimbleton semifinalist, struggled to beat former UCLA All-American Kathy O'Brien 7-5, 6-3 Tuesday night in the final match of the first round.

The competition, part of the Virginia Slims World Championship series, continues at the Canyon Racquet Club through Saturday.

The 5-foot-1 South African had to scramble against the aggressive serve-and-volley style of O'Brien.

In the first set, Vermaak got the service break she needed in the 11th game, coming from 40-15 to do it.

Cowboys kicked in kicking game

DALLAS (AP) — The Dallas Cowboys are getting kicked in their kicking game — and Coach Tom Landry doesn't like it.

Landry has taken personal charge of the specialty units to emphasize his displeasure in preparation for Sunday's National Football League game in Texas Stadium against the New York Giants.

"We will start practice with it (the specialty teams) this week," Landry said. "I think it will pickup."

He added, "We've got to start concentrating on our kicking game. Sometimes it gets lost in the shuffle."

Landry isn't all that displeased with rookie punter John Warren.

"John has handled himself well but he has been much more inconsistent than he was in camp," Landry said.

His specialty teams are being outhustled, outblocked, and tackling poorly.

Dallas gives away about five yards every time it punts and some eight yards on each kickoff return. It's been one of the few dark spots in a 2-0 start by the Cowboys.

On another matter, Landry is putting his players in the same hotel the night before a home game starting with this Saturday. It's the first time in a decade for the team to do this.

"I just like seeing the guys," quipped Landry, who has instituted a get-tough policy with his team which has lost in the National Conference title game the past three seasons.

"We're going to do things differently this year," Landry said at his weekly press luncheon. "Concentration the last 12 hours or so before a game is very important. The mental aspect is important."

Landry was disturbed by reports that some players broke curfew before the NFC title loss to the Washington Redskins last January.

"It's a good time to change," Landry said.

Landry said there will be an 11 p.m. or midnight curfew depending on the starting time of the Sunday home game.

The New York Giant game Sunday is at 3 p.m. and the curfew will likely be 12 midnight at a yet to be disclosed hotel.

Landry said the Giants presented a tough challenge.

"We didn't play New York last year because of the strike but they are still the same basic team, rough and they play hard," Landry said. "They have as good a defense as we will face."

The Cowboys were early eight-point favorites over the Giants.

The American yacht Liberty (US-40) and Australia II (KA-6) jog for position to start Tuesday's America's Cup race, but a lack of wind postponed the race.

America's Cup could take trip

By WILL GRIMSLEY
AP Special Correspondent

NEWPORT, R.I. — Every three years or so, we reach down and pull out a page of the Gilded Age in our history — the unimaginable period of untold wealth, high society, million-dollar mansions and high-masted yachts — and then, suddenly, the Australians pop up and bring us back to reality.

There is nothing stuffy and high falutin' about these tough, tanned invaders from Down Under bent on seizing the America's Cup, the funny-shaped old hunk of silver that represents yacht-racing supremacy — a trophy which America won 132 years ago and stubbornly has refused to give up.

It's the oldest international trophy in existence and the only one never lost.

Now the Aussies have mounted a challenge that has the staid New York Yacht Club in a tizzy. Alan Bond, a self-made millionaire from far-off Perth with beer, real estate and mining interests, after spending 10 years and $16 million in quest of the grail, has a boat with a controversial, wing-tipped keel that slides over the water like a fish.

THE SCHEDULED opening race Tuesday was foiled by tricky wind conditions which prompted the Race Committee to mandate a 24-hour postponement.

In the second of two aborted starts, the Australian craft, Australia II, appeared to get to a clean lead over the American defender, Liberty. The postponement, apparently not explained to the Aussies' full satisfaction, was a source of deep disappointment.

So what did the Aussies do?

They did what they do every night — win, lose or draw. They went down to the docks, ordered a few rounds of suds, stood on table tops while singing their favorite song, "Waltzing Matilda," and waited for the sun to come up on another day.

Their favorite watering hole is Christie's, just about the spot where George Washington and the Marquis de Lafayette stood to greet Comte de Rochambeau and 6,000 French troops who had boated over to help the Yankees finish wiping up the British in the Revolutionary War.

While the modern-day version of society's Four Hundred dined and danced at soirees along fashionable Bellevue Avenue and Ocean Drive, the Aussies were having Aussie-style fun.

A man in a koala bear costume wandered through the festive crowd. He called himself Ken Koala. Another decked out as a full-sized kangaroo with a small toy koala and an Australian flag in his pouch was being led by an Aussie "digger," a man with a turned up brim hat and khaki shorts of a soldier.

The strains of "Tie Me Kangaroo Down, Sport" rang through the rafters.

THEN GROUPS swung into verses of Waltzing Matilda, with the plaintive ballad of "a jolly swagman camped by a billabong under the shade of coolabah tree ... and he sang as he waited 'til his billy boiled, you'll come a' waltzin', Matilda with me."

Bond, the head of the syndicate, skips most of the fancy parties and drives to the dock party on a moped.

The Aussies are a rare breed. They come from a country renowned for its broad, white-sand beaches, tennis champions, Olympic medalists in swimming track and field. Per capita, there is no country more sports oriented.

They love their beer and have a mania for horsing and gambling. They are fonder of Americans than the English who colonized them. Yet they would love nothing better than to take the old silver cup from its secured resting place in the trophy room of the New York Yacht Club.

Despite nationalism, there are many Americans who would not mourn an Australian victory. They admire the Aussies' earthy, unpretentious lifestyle. They think the New York Yacht Club has become arrogant and autocratic in its efforts to hang on to the trophy and have had it long enough.

It's the underdog instinct at work.

Yacht racing represents another era. Most Americans — even the thousands who assemble in a flotilla of hundreds of big and small boats to watch the races through binoculars a great distance away — don't have the faintest idea what is going on.

Neither do the bulk of newsmen, more than 900 of them from throughout the world, who are headquartered in an 89-year-old armory with Spanish American War plumbing.

They bone up on the vernacular of the sport to show some knowledge of the sport, but the nuances escape them.

"They are baseball writers in sneakers," Damon Runyan (or was it Ring Lardner?) once commented when Harold Vanderbilt and Sir Thomas Lipton were racing giant J boats before World War II.

"Yacht racing is as interesting as watching grass grow. The only way they could make it exciting would be to hold the start just above Niagara Falls."

Aussies put Cup hopes on hold

NEWPORT, R.I. (AP) — Alan Bond has spent the past decade and millions of dollars pining in vain for the America's Cup. He figures he can wait one more day.

The long-anticipated showdown between Australia II, whose syndicate Bond heads, and U.S. defender Liberty was postponed Tuesday until today because of shifting winds on Rhode Island Sound.

The delay in the best-of-seven series followed two aborted attempts to start the 24.3-mile race.

IN THE first, Liberty crossed the starting line with a two-second edge when the race was abandoned. In the second, Australia II skipper John Bertrand controlled starting maneuvers, but the battle was postponed before the yachts reached the starting line.

"We were doing OK," said Bond, making his fourth Cup bid. "We'll just go out there and do the same tomorrow."

"We were just looking forward to beating them in their conditions so we were very disappointed" by the postponement, Liberty skipper Dennis Conner, the 1980 Cup winner aboard Freedom, said with a laugh. But he called the decision "prudent."

Although the boats' crews had little time to size each other up Tuesday, "we got a rough idea of some of their abilities to turn and what to look for," Conner said. "But as far as the relative strengths upwind, there was no indication of that today."

IN COMPILING a 48-6 record in winning the foreign trials against six boats, the Aussie entry with the radical winged keel gained a reputation as one of the strongest threats to America's unbroken grip on the Cup. It was at its best on the three upwind legs of the six-legged, triangular course.

"It really wasn't enough to gauge anything," Bond said of Tuesday's activity. "We felt we had some maneuverability and speed."

The decision to call off Tuesday's races was made by the America's Cup Race Committee. It is composed of members of the New York Yacht Club, which holds the Cup and picked the American boat to defend it.

"We obviously were in a very comfortable position" when the second race attempt was scrubbed, said Bond, who figures his Cup campaigns have cost $16 million. "We race under the discretion of the race committee and we're bound by their decisions, so it seems that's all that can be said about it."

In the 18 minutes between the time the races were set up and when they were postponed, the winds shifted 40 degrees from northeast to east for the first attempt and 35 degrees from east to southeast in the second.

America's Cup rules provide that races can start only between 12:10 p.m. and 2:10 p.m. The second race was postponed at 2:08 p.m. Races have a time limit of five hours, 15 minutes.

After the postponement, Bertrand spent the rest of the afternoon on the water testing mainsails and spinnakers.

CONNER SAID he was impressed with Australia II.

"In watching Australia (II) maneuver both today and in the video (tape) I think that anyone who is a student of the 12-meter game would have to be impressed by their ability to turn on a small radius and their ability to tack," Conner said.

Warren Jones, executive director of the Australia II syndicate, said, "Dennis looked as though he was in good shape" on the first start.

"It's too early to tell yet," Bond said when asked what he learned about Liberty, "but we don't think he (Conner) has anything special."

Hearing is set for Ayala

SAN ANTONIO, Texas (AP) — Boxer Tony Ayala Jr. spent the night in the Bexar County jail after being returned here to face a hearing over whether he violated terms of his 10-year probated sentence, assessed for a 1978 assault.

Ayala, 20, currently is serving a 35-year prison sentence for a New Jersey rape conviction.

He arrived at the San Antonio International Airport early Tuesday, escorted by a single sheriff's deputy, and immediately was taken to the jail.

State District Judge Mike Machado handed Ayala 10 years probation after the boxer pleaded guilty to the aggravated assault of a woman in a San Antonio drive-in movie restroom.

His attorneys said he would admit violating the probation in exchange for a promise from the district attorney's office not to press charges stemming from a burglary last summer.

A hearing is scheduled Thursday morning in Machado's court.

District Attorney Sam Millsap moved to have Ayala's probation revoked after the boxer was arrested in connection with the Jan. 1 rape of a West Paterson, N.J., woman.

Ayala was convicted April 13 of six counts stemming from that rape.

Under terms of the New Jersey sentence, Ayala must serve at least 15 years before he becomes eligible for parole.

Ayala had been in New Jersey to train for a World Boxing Association title fight against Davey Moore, then the junior middleweight champion.

Three earlier attempts to bring Ayala back to San Antonio had fallen through because of faulty paperwork, Millsap said.

Fairbanks denies sale of Generals

NEWARK, N.J. (AP) — Chuck Fairbanks acknowledges there have been negotiations to sell the New Jersey Generals.

But Fairbanks, the Generals' president and head coach, denies a claim by a New York attorney that the club has been sold.

The attorney, Lonn Berney, said Tuesday he and two partners have reached a tentative agreement to purchase the Generals for about $9 million and plan to move the United States Football League club across the Hudson River to New York.

He added that he expects the sale to become final once several "little things that can get in the way" are resolved.

"We have tentatively agreed about the major portions of the contract," Berney said in a telephone interview from his New York office.

But Fairbanks said Tuesday in a statement: "At this time, the club has not been sold. We have not reached an agreement, tentative or not."

"We've been negotiating with a group, which I prefer not to identify at this time, for over a month," Fairbanks added. "It's still too early to say anything has been concluded. There is still a lot more to talk about. And I do not see anything happening soon."

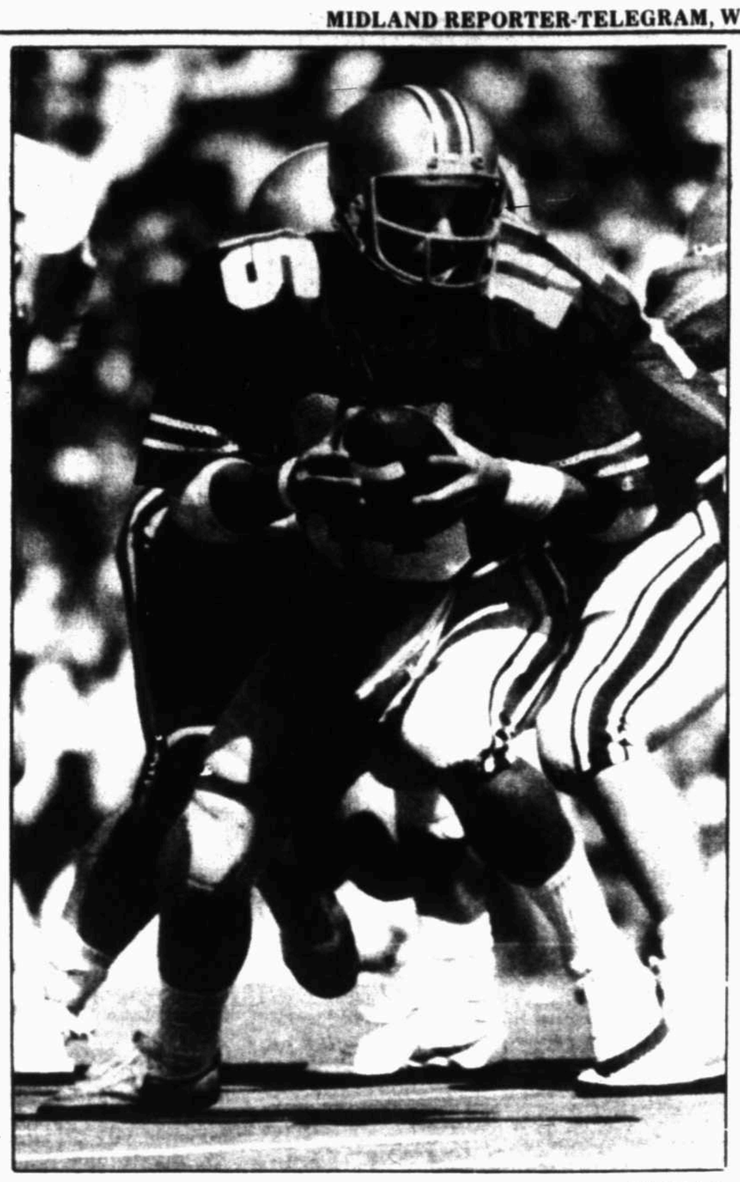

Berney said he expected all issues to be finalized "within the next 24 to 72 hours."

The issues blocking a formal sale included what role the present management would have and whether the current ownership would retain any rights to the club, Berney said.

J. Walter Duncan, an Oklahoma City oilman, owns 90 percent of the Generals, while Fairbanks owns 10 percent of the club. Duncan was instrumental in luring Heisman Trophy winner Herschel Walker out of the University of Georgia after he had completed his junior season. Walker signed a contract for a reported $3.6 million to play for the team.

Berney said he and other investors he identified as industrialist Milton Gilbert and real estate developer Nathan Kalikow plan to move the team to Brooklyn along with a major league baseball team they expect to buy. He said the group was looking into the possibility of purchasing the Cleveland Indians, the Cincinnati Reds or the Minnesota Twins.

Berney said he has talked to state and local officials in New York to discuss whether government funding is available to build a sports complex in Brooklyn.

Ohio State quarterback Mike Tomczak faces a big test against Oklahoma Saturday after completing 21 passes for 273 yards and four TDs against Oregon last week in a 31-6 victory.

Big Ten faces test

CHICAGO (AP) — Football supremacy? The Big Ten has its chance this week against three of the top four teams in the nation.

Pity Minnesota, which has to go up against No. 1 Nebraska. Watch out for Ohio State, which takes on No. 2 Oklahoma. And keep an eye on Michigan State, which tests No. 4 Notre Dame.

"The game was scheduled 10 years ago," said Minnesota Coach Joe Salem. "If you had a choice today, you wouldn't do it."

Salem's Gophers are coming off a 21-17 victory over Rice. Considering that the Owls have lost 14 straight, it wasn't much of an accomplishment and the Gophers do not appear to be a match for the powerful Cornhuskers.

"NEBRASKA SHOULD be No. 1," said Salem. "Their offense is awesome. Their line is big and physical. Nobody stops them. They run things at will. They have scored 100 points and gained 1,200 yards in two games. They can dominate anyone they play."

The game will be played in the Metrodome in Minneapolis, which eliminates any chance of poor weather aiding in an upset.

Although Salem likes playing in the Metrodome, he'd much rather have this game played outdoors where weather could be a factor.

"No question about it," said Salem, "but we have to play in the Dome."

While Salem harbors little hope of a victory, such is not the case with Ohio State Coach Earle Bruce.

The Buckeyes are ranked sixth and are expected to give the Sooners a battle in the nationally televised contest.

"It's a tremendous challenge," said Bruce. "They have the complete offense in running the ball and average 400 yards a game. You have to score a lot to beat them."

Still, Bruce said it doesn't necessarily have to be a high-scoring game because "both teams have pretty good defenses."

Bruce wouldn't say any one factor would "be the key. It'll be good, hard, rock-and-sock football. The fourth quarter could be the key. You have to stay close and don't make a mistake in the kicking game.

"One or two fumbles usually do not make a big difference, but if one team turns the ball over a lot, well?"

BRUCE LIKES the idea of being the underdog.

"It's always interesting," said Bruce whose teams usually play the role of favorite. "It's different than being a 20-point favorite. You can do different things on offense and defense, play it wide open."

Bruce called Oklahoma running star Marcus Dupree "the complete runner. Nobody in the Big Ten compares to him. Nationally? I don't know of anybody."

"Awesome" also is the word Michigan State Coach George Perles used in describing Notre Dame. "Their offensive line is huge. We can't match up with them."

NASL upholds Manic's Monday win

NEWARK, N.J. (AP) — The Montreal Manic's 1-0 shootout victory over the Cosmos no longer is tainted.

The North American Soccer League on Tuesday upheld the Manic's victory over the Cosmos, who had disputed the decisive goal that eliminated them from the playoffs.

The Cosmos filed a formal protest after Monday night's game, contending the goal was scored after the five-second clock ran out.

But NASL President Howard Samuels said league officials decided to deny the protest after reviewing films of Dragan Vujovic's goal on the sixth round of the shootout.

"It was (scored) somewhere between 4.9 and 5.2 seconds," Samuels said in a telephone interview from the league's New York offices. "When you start to get to tenths of a second...that's really a judgment call. There's no way we would overrule the referee and linesmen."

Samuels added that the decision by Referee Peter Johnson to allow the goal was "so obvious to be a judgment call within reason there's no logic to carry it any further."

Samuels also said there is no precedent in international or national soccer for overruling a referee's judgment. In a 1981 NASL game between Minnesota and Chicago, a referee "obviously made a mistake" when he disallowed a Chicago goal but the outcome of the game was upheld, Samuels said.

The decision to uphold Montreal's victory was made after Acting Commissioner Ted Howard and Director of Officials Harry Baldwin reviewed films, using a stopwatch to time the goal.

"It certainly was not so outrageous (over the five second limit). It wasn't seven or eight seconds," Samuels said.

The Cosmos, who captured the Soccer Bowl last season, lost the first game of the best-of-three quarterfinal series 4-2 to Montreal Sept. 6.

Cosmos General Manager Tom Werblin said in a statement that the team wanted to "emphasize that we have no one but ourselves to blame for being put at the mercy of" inconsistencies.

WEST TEXAS OUTDOORS

TPWD adopts regulations

BY RODNEY RIEHLE

Hunting and fishing regulations for 66 counties adopted by the Texas Parks and Wildlife Dept., will offer expanded opportunity for hunters.

The TPWD commission was given authority for managing wildlife resources in all counties by the Wildlife Conservation Act of 1983 passed by the Texas Legislature. New regulations will become effective Oct. 1.

Complete information on hunting and fishing regulations in these counties will be contained in a free supplement to the TPWD's regulations guides. The supplement will be available at TPWD offices and license outlets Oct. 1.

Deer and turkey hunters will benefit from special Oct. deer and turkey archery seasons and spring turkey gobbler seasons in some counties where such seasons were not permitted before. Officials said anterless deer permits may be issued in some counties and spike bucks will not be protected from legal harvest in any county having a deer season. This was already in effect in regulatory counties resulting from TPWD studies showing the spike bucks are inferior deer...

INTEREST IN bow hunting for deer on two of the TPWD's wildlife managment areas more than doubled over last year. At Engeling WMA, 150 hunters from 845 applications were selected and 125 of 969 from Walter Buck WMA were picked.....Applications for public deer hunts on 11 WMAs are now available. The public drawing is Oct. 5 and deadline for submitting applications is 5 p.m. Sept. 26. Applications are available at TPWD regional offices. Perhaps the most popular will be the 40 mule deer permits for the Sierra Diablo WMA, 32 miles northwest of Van Horn. Last year 2,384 applied for 40 permits. Hunters harvested 32 mule deer for a success ratio of 84.2 percent...

The TPWD commission set a three-segment split duck season for the central and eastern portions of the state, giving hunters the opportunity to hunt early-arriving pintails, teal, gadwalls, and widgeon. The duck season dates are Nov. 5-11, Nov. 19-27 and Dec. 10-Jan.22. The High Plains Mallard Management Unit duck season will be from Nov. 1-Jan.22...

Duck seasons changed

AUSTIN (AP) — The Texas Parks and Wildlife Commission decided recently on a three-segment split duck season for central and eastern portions of the state for the 1983-84 hunting season.

The duck season dates are: Nov. 5-11, Nov. 19-27 and Dec. 10-Jan. 22.

IN THE WILD

Ducks aren't so smart

By JIM PETERSON

NEW YORK (AP) — Are ducks smart birds? Not necessarily, according to Flip Pallot, an expert hunter and angler who knows his mallards.

"I think ducks are just out there making a living, eating and sleeping and traveling south and flying north again," he said.

Pallot can be seen this year in several episodes of "Outdoor Life," a popular syndicated television series.

It's his belief that, dumb or not, a duck's keen eyesight makes him something to reckon with in the field.

That's why Pallot thinks camouflage is especially important for hunting waterfowl.

"Ducks are very attuned to movement," he said. "So you have to be very well camouflaged ... face ... hands ... anything on you that might reflect light."

PALLOT said ducks also have very acute hearing. "They're gregarious and they talk and chatter back and forth," he said.

"Too many duck hunters call ducks at the wrong time or the wrong way," he said. But "the single biggest mistake they make is to move too much, scaring the ducks away."

Pallot, 40, is a former Miami banker who left his career a few years ago to open a sporting goods store in southwest Miami. He takes sporting expeditions to the Eastern Shore of Maryland to hunt geese, to Texas for whitetail deer and to Alaska to fish for salmon.

He said the importance of using a duck call remains the subject of much debate. "For certain species, a duck call can be very effective," he said. Pallot contends a call will cause teal, mallards, black ducks and Florida ducks to turn toward the sound from whatever direction they're headed.

"I've found a canvasback pretty susceptible to a call, if it sees a stool of decoys that's properly set," he said.

FOR SPECIES that are less easily fooled, Pallot makes sure to use the call of a duck that is in his stool of decoys.

"If I make a mallard call, for instance, and the ducks look at the stool of decoys and see a mallard decoy, it adds another dimension to the realism," he said. "It's my theory that my call doesn't actully call the ducks; it just gives them a little more comfort."

Pallot said setting decoys properly depends on wind direction.

"Ducks aren't particularly aerodynamic critters," he said. "They like to land into the wind."

He recommends placing the decoys in a way that will accommodate a duck's penchant for landing into the wind. He also advises that you create "landing zones" by leaving enough space among the decoys to entice more ducks to come in.

Glasses halt fish hooks

BOSTON (AP) — Fishermen should wear glasses — not so they can see their catch, but to protect their eyes from flying fish hooks, a doctor says.

In the New England Journal of Medicine, Dr. Leighton Alvin Raynor of Gainesville, Fla., recounted two cases of fishermen's eyes being punctured by errant lures.

He recommended that fishermen wear corrective lenses or sunglasses made of plastic or polycarbonate, not ordinary glass.

John Elway admits that start in NFL has been tough

NEW YORK (AP) — Even for a college player of John Elway's caliber, the transition to the National Football League has been tough.

"A lot tougher than I thought it would be," the Denver Broncos' rookie quarterback says.

Although Denver is 2-0, Elway has struggled in his initiation, needing help in both games this season from veteran Steve DeBerg to bail the Broncos out of trouble.

Against Pittsburgh, Elway was blitzed and bewildered, sitting out the second half with a bruised right elbow while DeBerg led the Broncos to a 14-10 victory. Last Sunday at Baltimore, the team that originally drafted Elway, he was beset by the boo-birds, finally yielding in the fourth quarter to DeBerg, who passed Denver to a 14-10 win.

Elway said he expected the boos from fans in Baltimore. The Colts had drafted Elway as their savior, but the Stanford All-American said he would not play for Baltimore and would rather play baseball in the Yankees' organization, forcing the Colts to trade his NFL rights to Denver, with whom he promptly signed.

"The people in Baltimore took it personal," Elway said Tuesday at a news conference to announce his signing of an endorsement contract with Japanese sporting goods manufacturer Mizuno and the company's American importer, Curley-Bates.

"But it was nothing personal," he insisted.

Elway said the boos that resulted from the misunderstanding unnerved him and made it difficult for him to call plays in the huddle. Add to that the fact that he already was gun-shy from the shellacking he took in Pittsburgh, and Elway said he knew he had some adjustments to make.

"I'm still learning the offense," he said. "I mean I know it, but right now I'm at the thinking stage. I'm not at the reaction stage. There's so much to learn. I take films home with me every night."

Elway said he had learned from the films that he was throwing off his back foot — probably a result of being sacked four times against the Steelers — so his passes were sailing high.

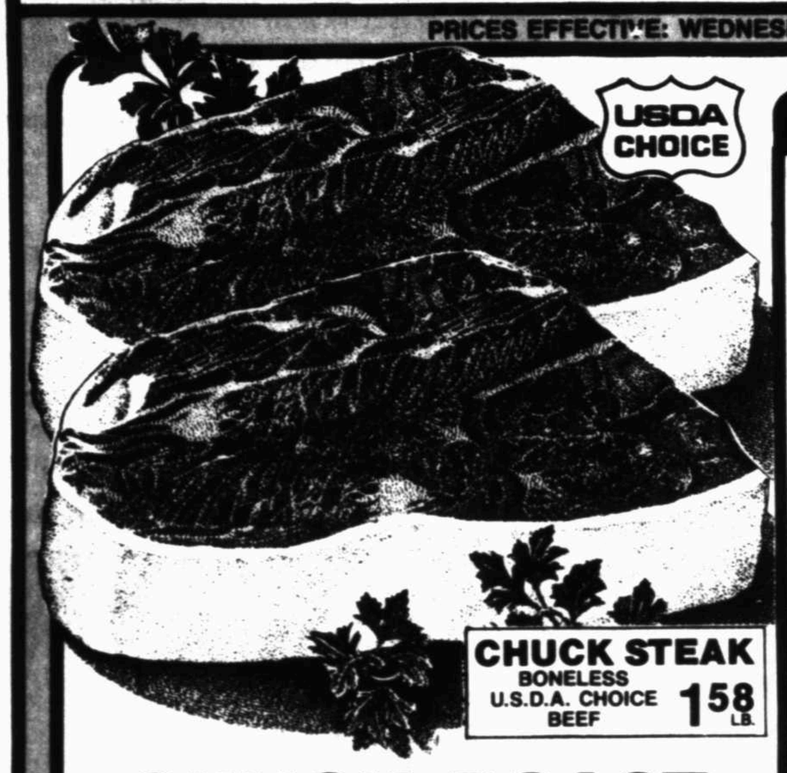

Besides earning the respect of his teammates and learning a new system, Elway said there were other major problems in making the switch from Stanford, where he set five NCAA records with a 62 percent completion rate and 77 touchdown passes, to the Broncos.

"The defenses do a lot more things," he said.

"There are a lot of things you can get away with in college that you can't get away with in the pros. In college, if I got out of the pocket, I had a lot more time to throw. Now, I have to throw on the run because they get to you real quick.

Hotel, convention bookings down for Olympic year

The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

LOS ANGELES — Advance bookings for hotels and conventions in 1984 — both in the months preceding and following the Olympics — are considerably below normal, leading to fears that the tourist business will drop off here overall in the Olympic year, according to the executive vice president of the Greater Los Angeles Visitors and Convention Bureau.

James W. Hurst said in an interview that the bureau is taking a comprehensive survey of public attitudes toward visiting Los Angeles next year. But based on information it has already received, the bureau is concerned that an idea is spreading across the country that the city will be overcrowded, high priced and a less than desirable destination in 1984.

"Some hotels are projecting occupancy rates as low as 40 percent beginning as early as this December," Hurst reported.

To counteract a trend that could see tourism in 1984 slip back to the 1980 level, Hurst said the bureau will launch an advertising campaign offering special package tours to the city during the time of the Olympic cultural festival, which is to run in the weeks before the Games.

And, he said, immediately after the Games, the Visitors and Convention Bureau will initiate an advertising campaign to try to capitalize on the publicity the city will have received from the Olympics. He said it plans to put up $500,000 in seed money for this campaign and hopes local business will put in another $2 million.

"We will try to say, 'L.A.'s the place; the Olympics have been here,'" Hurst declared.

But he expressed some concern that the tourism picture here next year is being complicated by the unwillingness of the private Los Angeles Olympic Organizing Committee to assist the general public in making arrangements to come to the city for the Games. And he also noted that the committee has not yet been able to provide a schedule for its cultural events, thus delaying the bureau's plans to push tours to the festival.

At the Olympic committee, a spokeswoman quoted Robert Fitzpatrick, the festival director, as saying the Visitors and Convention Bureau had never requested such information, nor had it even contacted him. She said Fitzpatrick would be "delighted" to work with the bureau on its cultural advertising campaign.

But the spokeswoman confirmed that no final schedule is yet available, and indicated that it will not be until cultural event tickets go on sale around the first of the year.

Hurst said other cities that have held major events or expositions, such as Montreal during the 1976 Olympics, have also experienced declines in tourism engendered by widespread reports of difficult, costly, crowded conditions.

A story in today's Dallas Morning News saying RepublicBank Corp. is considering the purchase of The First National Bank of Midland is essentially not true, FNB President Thomas J. Wageman said.

"I don't know where the hell they get their stories, but not so."

Wageman, interviewed early this morning, said at the time he had not yet seen the Morning News story, but based on what he was told about it by the Reporter-Telegram, the story is not true.

The Morning News report says Wageman met with Charles Pistor, RepublicBank Dallas' Chairman, during a reception in Midland Aug. 17. RepublicBank officials were indeed at the Midland Petroleum Club that evening for a press conference and reception to publicize opening a new energy lending unit at the bank holding company's Midland location.

During the week of August 15-19 FNB conducted a number of receptions, during which Wageman, who became president of FNB Aug. 1, was introduced to bank customers and spoke about the future of the institution.

One of the FNB receptions was held in the bank's lobby at the same time as the RepublicBank event, during the evening of Aug. 17.

"I saw over 1,500 people, and I don't believe anybody from Republic was here," Wageman said. "No one from Republic was here the 17th.

"I did meet with Charlie Pistor, but didn't meet with him at our reception."

Wageman said all Texas banks have been friendly and supportive and have extended their good wishes. "I've met with lots of them."

The Morning News story quotes an unnamed source at FNB as saying that RepublicBank officials suggested looking at FNB's books, that they did so, and that nothing further has transpired.

Spokesmen for both banks declined comment on the matter.

RepublicBank Corporation acquired Midland's Texas National Bank in April. It announced in August it was bringing some of its energy lending staff to Midland to move more aggressively into the Permian Basin's energy loan market.

Rumors that RepublicBank, or some other Texas bank holding company, might re-locate its local member bank in Midland's downtown business district and try to compete head-on with FNB have circulated for months in Midland.

FNB spokesman Guy R. McCrary said, separately, that a rumor a Dutch holding company was considering buying First National were false.

That rumor could be attributed to the fact that Wageman came to Midland from LaSalle National Bank in Chicago, an affiliate of Algemene Bank Nederland N.V., a Dutch holding company.

Canadian firm won't change Permian

By JIM PRESNELL
Business-Energy Writer

Officials of First City Financial Corporation, Vancouver, Canada, a financial services company with assets of more than $2.4 billion, confirmed this morning that they plan to make no changes in the staff or operations of The Permian Corporation.

The sale of Permian to First City from Occidental Petroleum for $325 million in cash and notes was announced Monday.

Cathy Baird of Burston-Marsteller, First City's press agent, said the company "affirmed that it won't change" the Permian Corp. At press time, Ms. Baird was making efforts to get First City president Daniel Pekarsky to come forth with an additional statement on Permian and how it will fit into the First City Financial Corp. structure.

First City Financial is making its first U.S. energy invesment — it already owns production in Calgary, Canada. The major stockholder in the company is the wealthy Belzberg family.

A spokesman for First City Financial said: "As a result of this acquisition, we will have a very strong position in the United States; Permian is one of the nation's leading independent marketers and transporters of crude oil.

"We are pleased, too," he said, "that along with Permian's property, plant and equipment, crude oil inventory, and capital and equipment leases, First City Financial gains the benefit of Permian's dedicated staff — which has made Permian the success it is."

The First City spokesman said the closing date of the $325 million deal is expected to be November 1.

Dr. Armand Hammer, chairman and chief executive of Occidental Petroleum, the Los Angeles firm that bought Cities Service Co. for $4 billion recently, made a comment as well: "I am extremely pleased with the agreement reached between Occidental and First City Financial."

"With this sale," he said, "Occidental continues to run well ahead of schedule in our plan to reduce the debt Oxy incurred from acquiring Cities Service. Permian is a top-notch company, but we felt it didn't fit our long-term strategy and Oxy's concentration on oil and gas exploration and production, coal, agribusiness, and selected chemicals."

W.D. Kleine, who heads Permian Corp., reached in Houston Tuesday afternoon, said he had few additional comments, other than the fact all 200 Midland-area employees of Permian and its subsidiary oil transport and pipeline companies still have their jobs.

"It started 30 years ago in Midland," he said. "Midland has always been important to the Permian Corporation."

The company had $5.2 billion in sales during 1981. Kleine said there is no magic involved in Permian's success during an industry slump: "There is no 'inside information.' We worked hard, and we are still in business and making a profit."

Administration behind tax credit

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Reagan administration, worried about the rising cost of a mortgage-bond subsidy, is supporting a proposed tax credit for up to half the interest charged first-time homebuyers.

It's not that the administration is eager to launch a new tax break at a time of record federal deficits. Rather, the administration is determined to reduce the tax losses caused by the mortgage bonds — a cost that would total another $15 billion if authority to issue the bonds were extended another three years.

The tax-exempt bond program is so popular with state, city and county officials that Congress is certain to renew it when it expires on Dec. 31; three-quarters of the members of Congress have signed an extension.

Extension is assured even though the General Accounting Office says in a disputed report that up to 87 percent of the money from the bonds goes to lawyers, wealthy investors and other middlemen, leaving only 13 percent to aid homebuyers.

At a hearing before the Senate Finance Committee Tuesday, John E. Chapoton, an assistant secretary of the treasury, repeated the administration's adamant opposition to renewal of the bonds program. But if the program is extended, he added, it should be coupled with the proposed tax credit.

The tax-credit bill, sponsored chiefly by Sens. Robert J. Dole, R-Kan., and Russell B. Long, D-La., chairman and senior Democrat, respectively, on the committee, assumes the bonds program will be extended. But it encourages local governments to give up some of the authority they have to issue the bonds and, instead, to issue certificates qualifying homebuyers for the federal tax credit. States generally are limited to about $200 million worth of these bonds a year.

The credit would be set by the local government at between 10 percent and 50 percent of mortgage interest paid.

The credit would be subtracted from any federal tax deduction claimed for mortgage interest. For instance, assume a person paid $3,000 interest in a year and qualified for a 30 percent tax credit. That would result in a $900 credit — which reduces taxes dollar for dollar — and a $2,100 deduction, which cuts income subject to taxes.

Chapoton noted a $50,000 30-year mortgage subsidized with tax-exempt bonds could be obtained today for about 11 percent and a $476 monthly payment. The total after-tax cost during the first year for a person in the 20 percent tax bracket who itemizes deductions would be $4,616.

That same mortgage, without the bond subsidy, would command a 13 percent interest rate and a monthly payment of $572. The first-year after-tax cost, assuming a 14.3 percent mortgage credit, would be $4,594.

Although the annual costs to the homebuyer are fairly close, it would cost the treasury $1,614 the first year to subsidize the mortgage but only $746 to do it with the tax credit, Chapoton said.

That saving would come from elimination of the middlemen involved in the bond transactions.

Under the mortgage-bond program, state and local governments issue tax-exempt bonds to subsidize mortgages.

Panhandle hearings to resume Thursday

AUSTIN (AP) — Hearings on an effort by Phillips Oil Co. prohibit the use of separators on wells in the Panhandle gas fields resumes Thursday in Amarillo.

Opening statements were taken Tuesday in Austin.

Hearing examiners said the hearing will move to Amarillo Thursday and Friday, and return to Austin on Sept. 20 for several days of testimony and cross examination.

About 10 predominantly gas fields in the Panhandle are involved.

Phillips asked to amend rules for those fields to prohibit producers from using separators at the well head to separate natural gas liquids from the gas stream and call the liquids crude oil.

Phillips said under present rules a gas well is allowed for each 640 acres. If a well is classified as an oil well, the rules say there may be one for every 10 acres.

Phillips has mostly gas wells on 640-acre spacing.

The company claimed in its opening statement that some independent operators in the Panhandle are using separators to separate enough liquids to classify as an oil well, and obtain 10-acre spacing.

All of the wells produce some gas and some liquids.

Phillips is supported by Pioneer and two of its subsidiaries, Energas and Westar, all of which supply natural gas to Amarillo and the surrounding area.

Phillips said it was concerned because gas in the fields is being depleted rapidly under the present situation.

Ford raising auto prices

DEARBORN, Mich. (AP) — Ford Motor Co., following the lead of General Motors Corp., says it is boosting car prices an average of 2.3 percent or $254 for the new model year.

In a statement Tuesday, the No.2 domestic automaker said the increase, spread over all models, encompasses price cuts on 17 models and increases on 40 models, mostly large and luxury cars.

Prices for options will climb 1.9 percent, while delivery and destination charges will remain unchanged.

Last month, No.1 GM announced its prices would rise about 2 percent, or an average $281 from 1983 levels.

Chrysler Corp. has not announced pricing for the new model year, which begins later this month.

Ford's Escort will start at $5,629, a $10 drop from 1983, while its sister subcompact Mercury Lynx will start at $5,758, up $7 from 1983, the company said.

Dollar gains

LONDON (AP) — The dollar gained for the second straight day against key currencies in early trading today, apparently stoked by speculation that U.S. interest rates will rise to make the U.S. currency more attractive. Gold prices eased.

Dealers in Frankfurt reported there was uncertainty about the way interest rates will go as Eurodollar deposit rates softened slightly.

But the speculation of higher levels mounted after Albert M. Wojnilower, chief economist for the First Boston Corp. predicted Tuesday that interest rates will continue to rise until the next recession.

Expectations were fueled by predictions that the U.S. money supply will increase significantly after four weeks of decline. A rise in the money supply is often seen as a sign that U.S. interest rates will go up.

Williams completes Austin Chalk wells

Clayton W. Williams Jr. has announced completion of a pair of prolific oil producers in the Giddings (Austin Chalk 3) Field in Burleson County.

The two development wells are part of an overall plan to drill about 20 wells in the field, with eight to 10 being completed by the end of 1983, a company spokesman said. Williams has 55 wells in the field already.

Williams finaled the No. 1 Frank Machann for a 24-hour flowing potential of 380 barrels of oil and 820,000 cubic feet of gas. The flow was through a 1/4-inch choke and perforations from 8,426 to 8,556 feet. Flowing tubing pressure was 1,100 pounds.

The well site is in the William P. Huff Survey, abstract 31, six miles north of Lyons.

The other new development well is the Williams No. 1 Jeffa Marie Lehde. On a 24-hour potential test it flowed 368 barrels of oil and 506,000 cubic feet og gas. The flow was gauged through a 24/64-inch choke and was from pay behind perforations at 6,801-7,920 feet. Flowing tubing pressure was 300 pounds.

The well site is 4 3/4 miles southeast of Caldwell in Alex Blair survey, abstract 6.

Authorities say tilt no problem

HOUSTON (AP) — A slight tilt in a reactor at the South Texas Nuclear Project does not appear to be a safety problem, authorities said.

The tilt — undetectable by the human eye — was discovered last month in the steel reactor vessel inside the Unit 1 containment building and dreported to the Nuclear Regulatory Commission in Arlington, said Don Beeth, director of nuclear information for Houston Lighting & Power.

County official says he needs sense of humor

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

Herb Sorley has what every farmer and rancher needs in these days of drought.

Humor.

He looks at himself and chuckles. What he lacks in stature he makes up in girth.

"They just slammed my head on the floor and wouldn't let me grow up," he says and smiles.

He and his petite sister were the "runts" in the family. "She's just a little bitty ol' thing. I'm wide; they didn't give me anything to grow tall with." She's 5-foot-1. He's 5-foot-10 and weighs about 210 pounds. One brother is 6-foot-5 and is quite hefty. The other is 6-foot-2. His father is 6-foot-4 and his mother is as tall as her son Herb.

"They should have given me something to stretch me out with."

He then views the barren land, sighs, and says, well, he's seen the sand blow before, and it'll probably blow again. Like the farmers and ranchers, he's hoping for better days.

Sorley, at 39, is the new county executive director of the U.S. Department of Agriculture's Agricultural Stabilization and Conservation Service (ASCS) for Midland County.

He succeeds Minter McReynolds who retired last year after holding the post since 1961. His "boss" is the three-member ASCS committee made up of Louie Koonce, Vernon Chandler and Raymond Teinert.

Sorley, who has 18 years in ASCS work, just shifted his expertise over one county from Martin County. He still makes his home in Stanton.

"WE MOVED HERE (to Stanton) right in the middle of the drought (in 1956)," he recalls. "The wind and sand was blowing so hard you couldn't see the outside of the (window) glass. I thought it was the end of the world."

He's here to stay.

"Heck," he says, "I wouldn't move now. It would take a heck of a deal to get me out of West Texas." He was born and reared in Comanche County — peanut-growing country — in Central Texas.

"(In West Texas), you're a long ways from the rivers, you're a long ways from the mountains," he smiles and looks skyward, "and you're a long ways from the Good Lord...You've got to have a sense of humor to get along."

He takes after his father, Floyd, who coached and taught school. His mother, Bonnie Faye, was a schoolteacher, too.

"He was a math teacher," Sorley notes, "and I can't add two and two and get four. Isn't it ironic?"

Herb Sorley

He says his father is an "easy-going guy. It takes a heck of a lot to get him stirred."

While his father taught and coached, Sorley in his after-ASCS work hours often officiated schoolboy football and basketball.

"You better know something about kids," he suggests, "'cause they'll drive you up a tree. You don't have to know a thing about football (to be a good coach), but if you know how to get a point over, they'll go to the ground with you. They'll figure out how (to play). Kids are a helluva lot smarter than you or me."

In fact, he figures youngsters will solve their own differences without adult interference.

"One doesn't want to hit the other any more than one wants to get hit. They'll work things out."

SORLEY GRADUATED from Stanton High School in 1962 and attended Howard Payne University for a couple of years before he selected the ASCS as a career.

He especially enjoys dealing with the country folks. Their honesty, frankness, industry and sense of humor intrigue him.

"I guess that's what I like about this silly job — the farmers and ranchers. They're rural people, and they'll speak honestly. They'll spill their guts....

"They're going to treat you right as long as you treat them right."

Sorley's ASCS role is to administer federal programs — such as payment-in-kind (PIK), any disaster relief, commodity programs pertaining to cotton, feed grains, wheat — which the USDA might allow. "Oh, my gosh," he says of PIK. "There's a tub full of paperwork....

Auto mishap

Although there wasn't any ice, Leu Goud had a chilling experience when her week-old car was forced off Interstate I-20 after a truck from Scooter's Plumbing, Inc., swung through the intersection of Midkiff Road, lost an inloader it was pulling and smashed into Ms. Goud's car. A truck from Specialty Research, containing a non-flammable corrosive, also was hit, according to the driver of the Scooter's Plumbing truck. There were no injuries during the three-car mishap, which occurred at about 1 p.m. Tuesday.

Cancer patients need communication

By HALLYE JORDAN
Staff Writer

"The things that are important to me today weren't important a few years ago. And the things that were important a few years ago have passed by the wayside."
— A relative of a cancer patient.

Jim Huggins said he enjoys talking with cancer patients: "I get caught up in that positive attitude."

But many times cancer patients, their friends and family are hurt when something they don't understand happens to them or someone they love.

Jim Huggins

Many tend to withdraw, according to Huggins, the speaker Tuesday night for the second session of a seven-part series on cancer sponsored by I CAN COPE.

Communication is an innate need of all people, Huggins told 50 people in attendance at the Allison Permian Basin Cancer Center. Because everyone is unique, they have a different perspective on life. Somewhere, there is someone that will richly benefit from another person's experiences.

"There is somebody walking around this planet that needs something you have to say," Huggins said. "Somebody needs to be built up by what we can give them. Nobody can give the world what you can communicate."

Cancer patients, more than people not facing a traumatic disease or situation, can offer more than just experience to others. They can offer insight into what is important in life — not the mundane, trivial things such as keeping up with the neighbors, Huggins said.

"You can smell the roses when you know that's important."

Four major barriers often are thrown up by cancer victims, according to Huggins:

— Nobody understands. "When you use that barrier, nobody can get through." Maybe the reason they don't understand is you haven't let them, Huggins said. Sometimes patients are so involved in themselves and their disease they think they are different and special. "You're not — you're not different. People will understand if you're willing for them to."

— I don't even understand my feelings. "But you can communicate those feelings," Huggins said. "It's not important what you call those feelings — it's only important that you can communicate them."

— I don't want to hurt anyone else so I'm not going to tell them about my disease. "You're playing God," Huggins said. "All of a sudden, you've decided you know better than anyone else — 'I will protect them.' We can handle reality a lot better than what our imaginations can dream up."

— I don't want them to reject me. "This is a biggie," he said, adding when people stop communicating, they are encouraging others to reject them. "If your life centers around dying or centers around your disease, you're going to be rejected."

According to Huggins, if someone calls him and asks him to help them prepare to die, he won't.

"I refuse to help anybody get ready to die but I will help anybody live until they die," he said.

Midlander found guilty of interfering with IRS

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

The 60-year-old Midland taxpayer who claimed the U.S. Internal Revenue Service had hassled him was found guilty Tuesday by a federal jury of interfering with the IRS, threatening an IRS supervisor and assaulting an IRS inspector in mid-July.

Convicted by the eight-man, four-woman jury was James E. "Jim" Winter, who was charged by indictment with threatening Katherine Lewis, an IRS supervisor, over the telephone on July 12 and 13 and assaulting IRS Inspector Dick Sherwood who, along with three other IRS agents, had driven to Winter's 4104 Harlowe Drive home July 14 to arrest him.

Winter, who faces up to eight years in prison, is to be sentenced by U.S. District Judge Lucius D. Bunton at 12:45 p.m. on Oct. 5.

United Way of Midland has reached 15 percent of its goal from early returns for the 1984 campaign, it was announced today at the kick-off rally at the Midland Center.

According to United Way Campaign Chairman Dan Mendell III, of Mid-Continent, early-bird pledges from employees totalled $200,115, which along with other early returns, reaches $250,512 of the $1,712,000 goal. There are 36 days remaining in the campaign, Mendell said.

Contributions included in the pilot campaign were: Exxon, $66,662, an average of $100 per employee and up 30 percent from 1983; Reporter-Telegram, $8,610 up 45 percent; City of Midland, $10,000 up 25 percent; Price Waterhouse, $4,127 an average of $140 per employee; ARCO, $16,122 up 17 percent even though their employment is down 5 percent; and HBF Corporation, $2,257 up 18 percent.

Also included in the pilot program were employees of Elcor, GeoSearch, Gulf, Halliburton, LEAMCO, Magnatex, Midland Memorial Hospital, O'Neill Properties, Ortloff Corporation, Petroplex Savings, Schlumberger Well Service, Stubbeman, McRae, Sealy, Laughlin and Browder, Texas Electric Service Company and Texas American Bank.

Mendell praised the generosity of the employees of the pilot campaigns, adding "If the example set by these employee groups is followed throughout the campaign, we will certainly raise the 17 percent new money required to meet the needs in Midland in 1984."

MISD board reports 20 percent of positions filled by minorities

By RHONDA RIGENHAGEN
Staff Writer

In addition to approving several routine items, Midland school trustees heard an analysis of current student enrollment and a report on minority hiring within the school district during a relatively short board meeting Tuesday. In an executive session following the meeting, trustees suspended a Midland Freshman High School student for the remainder of the semester for fighting and striking a teacher.

In March the personnel office began recruiting minorities for positions within the district. Of 104 teaching and administrative positions open this year, 20 percent were filled by minorities, reported Ron Whitemore, director of Human Resource Services.

"In terms of percentages I'm not satisfied in some areas," he said, "but on the whole the district has been successful in attracting minority teachers. I think there are some things we can do in the coming year to attract even more."

Hispanics were hired to fill 13.3 percent of the jobs, and blacks filled 6.6 percent of the positions.

Whitemore also reported 31.4 percent of those hired were formerly employed with the district.

Trustees learned current student enrollment is slightly above last year's figures, and very close to projections. The district is anticipating a 1 percent increase over 1982-83 attendance.

According to statistics, 16,852 students attended classes the first day, 221 more than the first day last year. Enrollment stood at 17,599 Sept. 6, and the projected peak for the year is 17,929 — 202 more than in 1982.

"I thought we'd be in deep trouble," trustee Ron Britton said. "I'm pleased that we made our projections."

In other action trustees approved the recommendation of the architecture committee concerning expansion of Rusk Elementary School and accepted the office renovation at Midland High School.

The board was told damage at Fannin Elementary School following a break-in last week has been estimated at $1,500. Trustees were also advised of new security operations in effect at Fannin and other schools.

The Textbook Adoption Committee for 1983-84 was approved. It will be chaired by Superintendent Dr. Joe Baressi and also consists of 14 instructors.

The Budget Development Schedule for 1984-85 was approved. The first deadline calls for a study of school, departmental, staff, facilities, materials and equipment needs to be completed by Nov. 15. Projected enrollments for 1984-85 must be received by Jan. 16 and campus and departmental preliminary budgets must be submitted to the business manager by March 1. A proposed salary schedule is to be brought before the board by May 8, and a week later preliminary revenue estimates should be received.

The 1984-85 salary schedule should be adopted by May 22, campus and departmental budgets finalized by June 1 and a rough draft of the budget sent to the board by June 12. Calculation and publication of the effective tax rate should be July 16, and by Aug. 28 the tax rate is to be set and the new budget adopted.

New facilities to be dedicated in conjuction with PTA meetings are Santa Rita Elementary School Oct. 11, Carver Occupational Development Lab Oct. 20, Parker Elementary School Oct. 24 and Travis Elementary School Dec. 13. The addition to Midland Freshman High School will be dedicated during an open house Oct. 3.

Additionally, the board accepted bids for band and orchestra instruments. Members were told of a computer literacy workshop provided for them Sept. 26-29 and of the National School Board Convention to take place in New Orleans in November.

Trial begins on alleged wildlife law violation

He told the six-man, six-woman jury at the onset of the trial that Todd, who allegedly made contacts with hunters in the Midland-Odessa area for aerial hunts, had paid Short $24,000 in "upfront money" in late 1981, "so he could carry out his activities."

"The helicopter will give chase and pin it (wildlife) in one area" and the airborne hunters would shoot the fleeing game with a firearm, cut off its head and take the head to a taxidermist for mounting.

Two of the men's former co-defendants have pleaded guilty to violating the U.S. Airborne Hunting Act. The taxidermist, Karl Douglas Brosig, 26, of Midland, pleaded guilty to performing taxidermy work on several game animals killed in violation of the airborne act. He was placed on probation for two years and was fined $500 by U.S. Magistrate Darrell F. Smith.

The other, Midland farmer Lee Milton Bell, 29, pleaded guilty Monday before U.S. District Judge Lucius D. Bunton of killing an eagle, a mule deer and a javelina on Jan. 21, 1982, from an airborne aircraft. He could be sentenced up to one year in prison and fined.

In another case, Mike Nickell, 23, of Midland pleaded guilty to violating the airborne hunting act. And in July, Midland bear killers Steven Dudley Quain, 40, and Frankie Keller, 30, were sentenced to 179 days in jail and fined $6,000 by Bunton. A jury had convicted them of violating U.S. Customs laws by smuggling from Mexico to Texas bears they had killed in airborne hunts from a helicopter allegedly flown by Short.

On Tuesday, in the first day of the Short-Todd trial, Odessa real estate agent Brooks Harman Jr., the government's first witness, testified that Todd in late 1981 had offered him and mobile-home dealer Don Love airborne hunts for $2,000.

Harman said Todd told him a helicopter would pick up the hunters at a roadside park and fly them to south of Fort Stockton. There, they could hunt white tail deer, mule deer and big horn sheep. He said Todd could also arrange flights into Mexico for hunting cougars — mountain lions.

Harman said he was aware that the airborne hunting of game was illegal, but Todd, he said, responded: "They can't prove anything."

Later, after he was approached by federal and state wildlife investigators, Harman said he gave a statement and told Todd about it.

"I'm not going to jail for you or anyone else," Harman said he told his friend, Todd.

Harman said he was contacted by Jim Stinebaugh, who headed up an investigation by the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service, and by Gary Mitchell, a game warden for the Texas Department of Parks and Wildlife.

Love, who was subpoenaed as a government witness, said Todd did mention trophy hunts by helicopter. But under cross-examination by defense attorneys Walter Wilson and Bill Alexander, he said that hunters could have given the wildlife "fair chase" after the aircraft had landed.

Bruce Young, a Midland businessman-hunter who was the government's third witness, said Todd told him he had spent $100,000 in "setting up the hunting package." Todd would furnish the shotgun or semi-automatic rifle used in the airborne hunting of elk, mule deer and antelopes. Or the helicopter would run the game animal to exhaustion and the hunter would drop to the ground and slit the animal's throat, the witness testified.

Young said hunts were priced at $2,000 for mule deer, $3,000 to $5,000 for elk and $1,000 for antelopes. To finance the hunt, Todd told Young he could put "just cash in an envelope" and leave it in his office and "he'd take care of the rest," Young testified.

Another witness, Bruce Breckenridge, a 31-year-old former Odessa sheriff's deputy and former Stanton police officer, took the Fifth Amendment four times in declining to answer questions, including if he had been on illegal hunts or had he sold hunting-safety cards for $50 each. He said he didn't want to incriminate himself.

Nickell testified that Short had taken him and Bell on an airborne hunt south of Fort Stockton in January 1982. He said he paid Short $600 and that the pilot furnished the shotgun.

Nickell said he shot a Barbados sheep from the air and that Bell shot a mule deer, an eagle and a javelina. Nickell said after Short landed the helicopter, he cut off the heads of the animals. He said Bell cut the feet off the eagle.

Man guilty of interfering with IRS

In the meantime, Winter asked the judge if he might go to the Amazon for two weeks.

The judge indicated he would not give Winter such of a leave.

"I've got some place I could put you," said Bunton, who continued Winter on bond instead of ordering him to jail.

The jury had deliberated three hours before returning the guilty verdict against Winter.

WHILE THE TRIAL was in a brief recess, Winter approached Ms. Lewis in the courtroom's spectators gallery and apologized to her. "It was not you; it was the IRS" with which he was angry, he said. "I see," said a solemn Ms. Lewis.

Winter's July incident with the IRS apparently began after the IRS had requested an audit of Winter's income and taxes at the IRS office in Midland. But Winter apparently already was upset with the IRS for not sending him a $5,000 refund in 1981.

In a July 12 telephone interview with her, Winter allegedly told Ms. Lewis "I'm not coming to your office" for the audit, because "I'll whip somebody's ass...You people have been harassing me for years. If you come to my house, I'll be waiting with a shotgun."

Winter said he doesn't even own a shotgun.

"I was threatening the IRS — not Ms. Lewis," Winter said under cross-examination by the federal prosecutor, Assistant U.S. Attorney Jim Bock of San Antonio.

Aside from the IRS, Winter, an electrician, had been perturbed with a California stockbroker, noted Bock.

"He damaged me for $32,000," Winter said. "He stole $2,600."

Winter, who said he "started reading about the IRS" in 1953, said The Wall Street Journal reported that the IRS has "2,700 men in tax enforcement, armed men...hit men."

Bock noted that the term "hit men" connotes assassins and murderers and refered to Winter's earlier statement that the IRS had 2,700 "hit men" in Midland alone.

"You tend to exaggerate a tad?" asked Bock.

"I probably do," said Winter.

IN TESTIFYING about the July 14 assault, Winter said he was unaware that the 36-year-old Sherwood was an IRS agent.

"The man could have come with nothing, and we could have the audit," Winter said.

"Did Sherwood threaten you?" Bock asked Winter.

He indicated no.

"You could tell they had guns under their coats," said Winter.

Sherwood testified that he had displayed his badge to Winter at the front door, said "U.S. Treasury," and told Winter he had a warrant for his arrest. The agent said when he reached for Winter's arm to handcuff him, Winter struck him once with his fist, Winter retreated, and the agents pursued him. A 15-minute scuffle between Winter and Sherwood and another IRS agent ensued before Winter was subdued in his house.

"I didn't see the badge," Winter testified, and I didn't see the warrant. I didn't hear him say he's a federal officer...He (Sherwood) said 'We don't have to show you anything.'"

Winter, who claims he suffers from an hearing impairment, said Sherwood was "moving in a threatening manner" when he struck him. Winter said he was unaware Sherwood and the others were federal agents until the IRS officers that day had taken him to the Deputy U.S. Marshal's Office in Midland. He was jailed.

Bock contended Winter was aware all along what Sherwood and the others represented.

"You wanted them to come out to your house and give you curb service," said Bock.

IN ARGUING for a conviction, Bock said Winter's threats against the IRS and the assault were based on "unpleasant experiences" Winter had had with the tax-collection agency.

"He did it because he had unpleasant experiences with the IRS, and he didn't want another audit."

In defending Winter, defense attorney Eddie Garza said Winter meant no harm by the alleged threats.

"He said he had a shotgun. He was going to kill somebody. He's going to whip somebody's ass," Garza said.

Garza offered his interpretation of Winter's alleged telephone comments to the IRS supervisor: "If you have a gun, I have a gun. If you don't have a gun, I don't have a gun...My neighbors have guns; everybody has a gun."

"Is he going to jump through the phone and kill somebody?" Garza asked the jurors.

Prior to IRS agents' arrival at Winter's house, Sherwood had made a background check on Winter and found no criminal record.

"He knew this man had never been arrested before...and had an exemplary life. He told the jurors that "each and everyone of you" feels some "animosity" toward the IRS.

After Sherwood had reached for Winter's arm, and Winter reacted by striking the inspector, Winter "ran back (in the house) to use the phone to call the police," Garza said.

Argued Bock: "He (Winter) was in a state of mind he didn't want to believe what was happening," and wouldn't have believed it if the IRS agents "were wearing red, white and blue underwear."

Communication important for patients

Huggins encouraged cancer patients and their families to pay attention to non-verbal communications such as tone of voice, gestures and eye contact. He also emphasized the importance of listening.

"Only when we get so wrapped up in ourselves, so wrapped up in our disease, so wrapped up in our problems do we begin to pull the barriers up around us and begin to die," he said. "You begin to take from our world, rather than give.

"Be a slave to life," he urged. "Let life be the most important thing to you. If you begin to make every little moment in life the most important thing, you've let each moment become vibrant.

"If you're a cancer patient, they will forget it. All they'll see is you have a zest for living."

A cancer patient agreed:

"Actually, we're lucky in a really good way," he said. "We've been given the opportunity to take life and understand it for what it's really supposed to be. Others run by life — or are run over by it. We've been forewarned."

Official needs sense of humor

"We try to follow the rules from Washington, D.C. They say 'It's got to be done this away.'" His helpmates in his office in the George Mahon Federal Building here are Laura Falk, chief program assistant, and Theresa Goode and Barbara Roper."

Due to the drought and to farmers' participating in the PIK program, the cotton yield will be about one-tenth of normal, Sorley figures. But instead of just moaning, the farmers and rancher are hoping that next year will afford a bumper crop and lush pastures. They're counting on rain to make their wishes turn to reality.

"Farmers in Midland County right now are hoping like thunder they'll get moisture in September, October and November (in readying for next year's planting.) Planting rains come in April as a rule. They've got to have moisture under the ground to make things grow...If we had had any good rains in April or May, we would be in good shape."

"These cowboys are in tough shape right now," Sorley says of the ranchers. "I've heard some old-timers say that it's as hot and dry now as it was in the '30s." The ranchers' forage hay is "zilch," he adds.

A good three- to four-inch soaking rain might not "help matters" this year," says Sorley, but "It would put them in a good frame of mind."

Farmers and ranches "have a hard enough time" to make a "go of it" even in good rainy years "because of the wind and sand conditions that we've got in this country."

During his years in stomping in and around the cotton fields in Martin County, Sorley got to know the people and the land well.

"I could take you to any crack, crevice and corner of Martin County with my eyes shut."

Since Martin and Midland are adjoining counties, he's well acquainted with many of the Midland farmers. Some farm in both counties.

His intent is to know the Midland farmers and ranchers and their land as well as he knows the folks and the lay of their land in Martin County.

"The people I know here are super good. They're very, very congenial...We just want to work for the people of Midland County — the farmers and ranchers...If they can put up with me, I know I can put up with them."

Harrelsons getting divorced

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — Jo Ann Starr Harrelson says she is in the process of getting a divorce from Charles V. Harrelson, the man convicted in the slaying of a federal judge.

Mrs. Harrelson is serving 30 years in a West Virginia prison after being convicted of conspiring to obstruct justice, perjury and using a false name to purchase a firearm — all charges stemming from the May 29, 1979, assassination of U.S. District Judge John H. Wood Jr.

Chef helps bring Chinese ambassador's house to life

By The Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

WASHINGTON — Meringue lovebirds float in the soup. A tray of nut-filled dumplings, carved and tinted to look like peacocks, ducks and lotus plants is ready for its final steaming. In glass-fronted cabinets, bowls three centuries old wait to be filled with rice.

Marble-paneled mahogany chairs, from Peking's Palace Museum in the Forbidden City, stand ready to receive honored guests. Outside, carpenters and masons, also from China, are renovating the terrace and bringing the tennis court up to snuff.

Fully furnished 11 years ago but never occupied, the ambassador's residence of the People's Republic of China is being brought to diplomatic life.

The first two ambassadors of the People's Republic wanted to live in the embassy with "the people," explained Yao Renliu, the embassy's First Secretary. Former guerrilla fighters, they didn't feel at ease in a 10-room house away from the nearby dormitory where the rest of the embassy staff lived.

BUT AMBASSADOR Zhang Wen-jin, though once a revolutionary, is a long-time cosmopolitan diplomat, who was posted for three years in Canada and in his youth studied in Berlin. Last March he moved to the residence, had marigolds planted at the front entrance even before the front door was painted, and brought in one of the eight resident embassy chefs, Yao Chenlin, who had prepared banquets in China for President Carter and Prince Sihanouk and was thus considered a particularly good choice for Washington diplomatic entertaining.

The frequency of parties at the residence has increased slowly since the repairs got underway last spring. One or two dinners a week have been served to perhaps a half-dozen guests at a time, and the largest party by midsummer had been for a women's group of 40. After all, the parlor had not yet been opened on to the terrace and, although the garden was filled with roses, mountains of debris from the renovation still were piled at the rear of the mansion.

Chinese Embassy parties traditionally have been large, more than 200 people, said Le Amei, the ambassador's appointments secretary. The embassy's staff, who number 150, all live on the premises and are fed from its kitchens. The "more cozy" residence gives the ambassador's wife a setting to decorate for her own parties. Decorate? Hardly the image of a People's Republic diplomat. "Oh, yes, she loves it," said Le Amei.

PROBABLY NO professional kitchen in Washington has simpler equipment than chef Yao's. An enormous pantry yawns emptily. Its cabinets reach to the high ceiling, but contain only a few bottles and boxes. The expansive kitchen has three refrigerator-freezers and a separate freezer, but they, too, are half empty. One refrigerator is stuffed with lush-looking fresh vegetables and a dozen eggs. Another holds only two partly filled bottles of wine. The repertoire of seasonings is simple: on the counter are open containers of sugar, msg, salt, cornstarch and oil. There is no ginger or garlic to be seen.

The expanses of white formica counter are bare except for an electric teakettle. A large marble-topped island must have once been relished for rolling out puff pastry and pie crusts, but now is used for platters pausing on their way to the dining room. The drawers hold only a few cleavers and knives — Yao brought his own from China, having grown used to them over 15 years — and whisks, spatulas and large spoons. The six-burner electric stove haslittle use in Chinese cooking. It will be replaced by high-intensity gas jets for woks, which now are heated on two three-legged black iron gas stoves made in Reading, Pa. A few bamboo steamers, a silver bowl of flowers and a large empty Hunt's Tomato Sauce can complete the visible kitchen equipment. No Cuisinart. No KitchenAid. Chef Yao beats egg whites with a whisk in a stainless bowl. Le Amei says that a good Chinese chef uses very few tools besides his hands.

LAT Photo

Chef Yao Chenlin works in the Chinese ambassador's residence in Washington, D.C.

YAO HEATS THE WOKS and shows their versatility. They steam the egg whites for the chicken velvet's meringue snow and the meringue ducks for the soup. They stir-fry the vegetable garnish for chicken velvet and deep-fry the lantern shrimp. Differences in method are slight but crucial. For deep-frying he ladles in more oil; for stir-frying, less. For steaming or simmering, he ladles in water or broth instead of oil. Yao's large spoon dips into canisters of sugar, msg (these days it is made from sweet potatoes rather than chemicals, says Le Amei), salt and a Chinese equivalent of cornstarch, for just the right amounts to season or thicken a dish. It is all rapid-fire and seemingly effortless. Pour, stir, dip, sprinkle, swish, and a dish is done, each with its own particular color, flavor, texture and seasoning.

Chef Yao is from Suzhou, where, as in most southern cities, the cooking is lighter, less salty and less greasy — as well as sweeter — than in the north. Suzhou also is famous for gardens — real ones, as well as pastry gardens: sweet rice dumplings carved into a water garden scene.

ALTHOUGH HE LOOKS hardly more than four decades old, Yao has been a chef for 40 years, since he was 14. In those early years he apprenticed in cooking British food — steak, cream of asparagus soup, oxtail soup, he recalls — then worked his way up to the Nanling Guest House in Suzhou, where as one chef among 60 he eventually specialized in pastries, and where now the youngest of his four grown children is an apprentice. He still makes some dishes he considers Western — wine-marinated fish, fish with cheese slices.

With the residence entertaining schedule so light, most of Yao's cooking so far has been for its staff. Le Amei and her husband, who is the ambassador's secretary; one waiter, one driver, one gardener, and the chef. While the menu is similar to that of the embassy, the staff agrees that the food is better, particularly since it is cooked in smaller quantities.

Even so, Yao is sufficiently busy that he has little time off. On a weekend he might prepare food for the staff to reheat themselves and thus be free for a brief excursion. But since he knows little English — he quit studying the language after finding it frustratingly difficult the first few days of classes — he seldom goes out. Still, an interpreter is nearly superfluous as his hands tell the story of his preparation of a "live" fish at Prince Sihanouk's request — filling a fish with live eels, and pouring hot sauce over the fish at the table so the eels would squirm and make the fish jump as if it were alive.

WHAT HE HAS LEARNED about Washington is that the seafood is not as fresh as China's; in China even if fish or shrimp are not being cooked live, they typically are plucked from the restaurant's own pond. Yao has tried an American hamburger, but found it only so-so, nothing to compare to the hamburgers he used to make in China, (not with ground meat but with whole steaks, served on homemade bread with tomatoes). What really impresses him is the convenience of American biscuit mix.

Like many chefs in China, Yao is modernizing his Suzhou-style cooking, using less oil, and in pastries replacing lard with oil to cut the cholesterol. The residence staff prefer modern-day light cooking, and fitness is important to them. The ambassador, who is quite slim, swims daily in the pool next to his house, and in winter expects to jog instead.

THE ART OF a Chinese chef, like a Chinese painter, concentrates on copying perfectly the classic works of art, not on innovation. Rather than consciously inventing new dishes, a Chinese chef works at improving the standard dishes, either by lightening them or by decorating them in new ways. Thus, although chef Yao recently created a new dish, Crystal Cake, of almond gelatin topped with a meringue layer and cut into diamond shapes for serving, he did not think of it as his invention until that was pointed out to him. And certainly he would not consider putting his name to it and never dream of keeping it a secret. For a meal he made to be photographed, he designed a dish in honor of the photographer which played with the idea of light and named it Palace Lantern Shrimp. It is shrimp in a light veil of egg white batter arranged inside a carrot and egg lantern.

Chef Yao explains that in the new lighter mode of cooking he blanches vegetables in water and then adds a touch of oil for shine afterwards rather than stir-frying them, which would cause them to absorb more oil. Even so, he uses a five-gallon tin of corn oil every 15 to 20 days.

FOR VEGETABLES, he demonstrates, the faintest distinctions in method make surprising differences in the finish. Zucchini slices and green pepper wedges (painstakingly sliced horizontally to make them thinner) are meant to retain their clear color, so they are simmered in water for a minute or less and then tossed with msg, salt and hot oil to make them shine. Button mushrooms are simmered briefly and then glazed by a quick heating with a starch such as cornstarch or water chestnut powder. Black mushrooms can be seasoned with soy since they are already dark, then glazed with sugar and starch and given a final shine with a dash of oil.

He arranges the vegetables either in groups around a carved turnip — in this case an elaborate bird on a pedestal — or if the occasion is really special, he places each vegetable carefully in concentric circles on a platter. He decorates the platter with roses carved of turnips, and with ducks made with carved vegetables for wings, tail and head inserted in hard-cooked eggs. Cooked egg yolks may be molded into baby chicks.

Chinese Pork Salad

Cut left-over roast pork into strips. Toss with sliced celery, green onions and well-drained cling peaches packed in syrup (reserve syrup).

Blend mayonnaise, soy sauce, garlic salt and ground ginger with a little reserved syrup. Fold into pork mixture and serve on greens.

Dishes made by Yao Chenlin

Here are a few typical dishes prepared by Yao Chenlin, chef with the Chinese ambassador's residence in Washington, D.C.

CHICKEN SLICES WITH SNOW
(4 to 6 servings)

9 egg whites
Decorations of choice: blanched scallions, strips of red bell pepper, omelet, fresh herbs
2 julienned chicken breasts
3 tablespoons cornstarch
½ teaspoon salt
Oil for deep frying plus 1 tablespoon for marinade
2 teaspoons sugar
4 tablespoons water
½ cup chicken broth
½ cup each ham, snow peas, red bell pepper cut in diamond shapes

Beat 3 egg whites until stiff. Smooth onto a 5-inch diameter china plate. Decorate top with flowers using strips of blanched scallion for leaves, julienned red bell pepper, fresh herbs and omelet cut into flower and leaf shapes. Put in bamboo steamer and steam 1 minute. Remove and with a small knife loosen the egg white from the plate. Set aside.

Marinate julienned chicken with 1 tablespoon cornstarch, 1 egg white, 1-2 teaspoon salt, 1 tablespoon oil. In a large bowl stir 5 egg whites with 1 teaspoon sugar and 1 tablespoon cornstarch mixed with 2 tablespoons water. Add chicken mixture and beat with chopsticks. Heat 2 inches oil in wok and add mixture. Deep-fry, stirring, for 1 minute until egg whites puff.

Drain and set aside chicken. Drain oil and put in wok 1-2 cup chicken broth, 1-2 cup each ham, snow peas, red bell pepper cut in diamond shapes.

Stir-fry 1 minute. Add 1 tablespoon cornstarch and 1 teaspoon sugar dissolved in 2 tablespoons water. Stir in chicken mixture and heat. Spread on platter.

Spread chicken velvet on serving platter. Slip decorated egg white-the snow-on top. Salt to taste and serve.

1 tablespoon cornstarch, approximately
2 tablespoons water
14½-ounce can button mushrooms
1 tomato, halved and thinly sliced

Blanch zucchini 1 minute. Toss with salt, pinch of sugar and 1 teaspoon oil. Set aside. Repeat process with carrots, green pepper and radishes. Heat Chinese mushrooms in boiling water, until water evaporates, then toss with soy sauce, 1 teaspoon sugar, 1 tablespoon cornstarch mixed with 2 tablespoons water and 1 tablespoon oil. Cook a minute or two until glazed and set aside.

Blanch button mushrooms and toss in hot wok with 1 teaspoon oil and a pinch of each: sugar, salt, cornstarch. Stir and set aside.

Pour hot gelatin mixture into egg whites, then pour into shallow pan. Refrigerate until gelatin is firm, decorate top with minced cherries. Cut into diamond shapes and serve cold.

Ginger cookies spicy desserts

GINGER COOKIES

2 cups sifted unbleached all-purpose flour
1 teaspoon baking soda
1½ teaspoons ground ginger
½ teaspoon ground cinnamon
½ teaspoon ground nutmeg
½ teaspoon ground cloves
⅔ cup butter
⅔ cup sugar
¼ cup molasses

On wax paper sift together flour, soda, ginger, cinnamon, nutmeg and cloves. In the bowl of an electric mixer cream butter and sugar; beat in molasses until blended — mixture may look curdly. Add flour mixture; on low speed, beat until blended. Cover tightly and chill until firm enough to shape. Roll level tablespoons of the dough into balls; place a few inches apart on a lightly buttered cookie sheet. With a fork, flatten balls very slightly — about ½ inch thick. Bake in a preheated 375-degree oven until edges are slightly browned — 10 to 12 minutes. With a wide metal spatula remove to wire racks to cool completely. Makes 32. —(AP)

Tastings new party trend

Hearst Feature Service

Don't be surprised if the next party you go to begins with a tasting of (pick one) mustards, olive oils, wine vinegars or even chocolate chip cookies.

Sometimes it seems as if half the world is staging tastings for one thing or another. The other half of the world looks askance and cannot understand why anyone would want to spend time at a social occasion concentrating on what food tastes like.

Actually, holding an informal tasting is a fairly good way to break the ice — at least, that's what some hosts have been finding as they set up samplings of jams, jellies, beers, or even those old standbys, wines and cheeses. As opinions are expressed, conversation can turn lively, and isn't that what a party is all about?

A tasting can be as simple as opening up a few jars, offering some spoons or toothpics and letting everyone sample and compare. If you want to go into it a bit more formally, you might want everyone to jot down some comments and perhaps come up with a rating. Then you can total the scores and see how well everyone agrees — or doesn't.

TO BE AS scrupulous as possible, any tasting should be done blind, meaning that any labels should be covered and each product given a code letter or number. This keeps everyone honest. It also prevents the more susceptible — which is to say, virtually all of us — from being influenced by preconceived notions.

What to taste? Any product that is made by several producers, or by the same producer in several different forms, is a candidate. Mustards have been popular choices. Every mustard maker, from French's to Maille, seems to make a Dijon mustard these days. Here is how to proceed with a tasting party of mustards.

Choose a half dozen to a dozen of them. Line up a like number of bowls and label the bowls A, B, C, etc. Shortly before the guests arrive, spoon some of each mustard into the appropriate bowl and set out something to convey tastes to one's mouth. Flat toothpicks are fine. Small spoons are also possible. Pretzel sticks are not a bad idea. Bread sticks function well, too.

It's a good idea to avoid strong-flavored meats, sausages, pates, hot dogs and such at this point. Athough they are appropriate to consume with mustard, you don't want anything to interfere with the taste of the mustard when you're tasting it critically.

LATER — after everyone has had a chance to taste the mustards and form opinions — comes the food. A spread of cold cuts, sausages and pates with crusty rolls, rye and pumpernickel would be appropriate. So would hot dogs and Polish sausage with buns. Then you can slather on your favorite mustard, pour a glass of wine or beer or whatever's appropriate, and enjoy.

As a by-product, you discover which mustard you really like, and don't waste your money on something that's not as pleasing.

Here are some possibilities:

—Breads. French breads, croissants and bread sticks from bakeries and packaged breads from various groceries are all possibilities. Complete the party with cheeses and wine to go with the breads, coffee to go with the croissants.

—Bagels. From bagelries or even supermarkets, what's the best source of Sunday morning nourishment? Lox and cream cheese would complete the scene.

—Barbecue sauces. There are so many different ones cluttering the shelves, including some expensive ones, that a blind sampling of a dozen or so should be enlightening. Taste with a spoon, then have some ribs or chicken to douse with your favorite.

—Salami (or any other dry or cooked sausage). Have some bread or rolls and plenty of mustard ready to make sandwiches.

—Chocolate. Milk chocolates, bittersweet chocolates, chocolate truffles — all sorts of chocolate confections are possible. For this one, coffee may be the most appropriate beverage, although some of us like a rich Cabernet Sauvignon or Zinfandel wine with chocolate.

—Jams, Jellies. In the mood or a quest for the best strawberry jam? Peach preserves? Spread a few on toast and sample them.

—Cookies. So many chocolate chip cookie bakers are dotting the landcape that a comparison may be in order for a dessert-type gathering. Milk is the proper beverage, but sparkling water cleanses the palate better.

—Olive oils. A confusing array of virgin and extra virgin olive oils from Italy, Spain, France and California needs sorting out. Buy a few and taste for the best.

Salade Nicoise is a traditional main course salad, featuring chunks of tuna and potato, fresh green beans and olives, marinated in a zesty vinaigrette dressing.

Salade Nicoise traditional main course marinated salad

SALADE NICOISE

¾ cup oil (may use half olive oil)
⅓ cup white wine vinegar
1 tablespoon Dijon mustard
1 tablespoon lemon juice
1 teaspoon salt
½ teaspoon basil leaves
¼ teaspoon pepper
1½ pounds potatoes, peeled, cooked, and sliced (4 to 5 cups)
¾ cup sliced celery
2 cans (7 oz.) each solid pack tuna, broken into large chunks
lettuce leaves
½ pound fresh green beans, cooked and chilled
½ cup roasted red peppers or pimientos, cut into strips
3 hardcooked eggs, quartered
½ cup pitted ripe olives

Combine oil, vinegar, mustard, lemon juice, salt, basil and pepper in container with tight fitting lid; shake until well mixed. Lightly stir together potatoes, celery and ⅓ cup dressing; combine tuna with ⅓ cup dressing. Cover and refrigerate potatoes and tuna several hours or overnight.

To serve, line platter with lettuce. Spoon potato salad over lettuce. Toss beans with small amount of remaining dressing. Arrange tuna, green beans, peppers, eggs, and olives on top of potato salad. Drizzle remaining dressing over top. Makes 6 to 8 servings.

PATIO SALAD

Friends of mine often serve this salad because it is delicious and easy to put together for a varying number of guests.

Line a shallow bowl or platter with a single layer of salad greens.

Cut out stem ends from medium or large very ripe tomatoes and halve; cut each half into 4 or 6 wedges; arrange on greens with ripe olives.

Slice feta cheese about ½ inch thick and cut into about 1-inch squares — some edges may crumble. Arrange feta over tomatoes.

Chop fresh basil fine and add it to a dressing of olive oil, red wine vinegar, Dijon mustard, salt and freshly ground pepper in the proportions you like.

Arkansas quail prove brother right

By MERLE ELLIS

My brother Gary is something of a kook. He also was a conch in the Florida Keys for several years, but he always has been a kook. We always have been close, even though we have, for most of our adult lives, lived thousands of miles apart. We would both be rich if we had the money we have spent on telephone calls over the years.

Both of us enjoy the out-of-doors and hunting and fishing. As a matter of fact, for most of his adult life, Gary was a fishing guide — a very good one — in the Keys. But last year he discovered Arkansas.

"It's a sportsman's paradise," he said not long ago as we discussed The Holly Mountain Hunt Club, his new and exciting venture.

"There are quail all over the place," he exclaimed with the same enthusiasm we shared 30 years ago talking hunting in Nebraska. "You've got to get down here and see it! It's not that far. You could be here in three hours," he pleaded. "What's the time difference between California and Arkansas?"

Almost before the words had left my lips, I knew that I shouldn't have said what I did. "I think it's about a hundred years!"

There was a pause on the other end of the line – enough of a pause, knowing my brother, to know that he was more than a little bit offended at my comment.

"Turkey!" he said. "You think we're not sophisticated? Get down here! You'll love it."

When I stepped off the plane in Little Rock's very modern 20th-century airport, there was the whole gang from the Holly Mountain Hunt Club in 19th-century hillbilly costume. They looked like the cast of Hee Haw. My brother and all of the guys on his staff were in ragged bib overalls with straws hanging out of their hats and each with a jug in his hand. In unison came the greeting, in well rehearsed country slang, "Welcome ta-Arkansas, Turkey!"

Gary was right, I do, indeed, love Arkansas. We had a marvelous three days there.

Quail make good meals as well as good hunting.

Hunting season was over, but I'll be back next year. There were quail everywhere, including a good-size covey in the freezer at the lodge. I am now the official food-consultant-cook-and-clean-up-boy at Holly Mountain Hunt Club.

You don't have to go to Holly Mountain, however, to enjoy quail. You don't even have to wait for hunting season. Frozen quail are available in supermarkets all over the country. They are delicious almost any way you cook them. Here are a few of the recipes we cooked at the club.

BARBECUED QUAIL

Allow two quail per person. Split down the back and flatten slightly with the palm of your hand so they will lie flat on the grill. Brush lightly with vegetable oil or melted butter, and grill over hot coals, turning frequently to prevent burning. They should take no more than 6 or 8 minutes to cook. Serve with wild rice, grits or simply on warm toast garnished with a couple slices of fried bacon.

SMOTHERED QUAIL

8 quail
Salt and pepper
6 tablespoons flour
2 scallions (with tops), minced
1 tablespoon minced celery leaves
2½ cups canned chicken broth
Pinch thyme
½ bay leaf
1 tablespoon chopped parsley

Saute bacon in a heavy skillet over medium heat until cooked the way you like it. Remove from the skillet. Season quail with salt and pepper and saute in bacon drippings until nicely browned. Remove and set aside with bacon cubes. Add flour to pan drippings and cook, stirring, until you have a nice brown roux. Add all other ingredients and cook, stirring, until the sauce thickens. Return bacon and quail to the pan, cover, and simmer over low heat for 15 to 20 minutes. Serve with rice, wild rice or grits, beans or peas, biscuits or cornbread and fried tomatoes. That's down-home cookin'. Serves 4.

POTTED QUAIL

8 quail
Salt, pepper, flour
¼ cup butter
6 large mushrooms, sliced
Chicken stock
2 tablespoons chopped parsley
Buttered toast

Dust quail inside and out with seasoned flour. Brown in butter in a heavy skillet over medium heat. Add mushrooms and continue cooking until the mushrooms begin to soften. Add chicken stock, cover, and cook for 10 minutes over low heat. Add parsley and adjust seasoning. Arrange quail on buttered toast, spoon sauce over quail. Serves 4.

Mustard has long, spicy history

By TOM HOGE
AP Wine and Food Writer

As long as I can remember, my favorite seasoning has been mustard. All kinds, from the searing stuff served in Chinese restaurants to the tangy Dijon blends of France.

Mustard is unique among spices. Unlike other aromatics, powdered mustard is no more redolent than cornstarch as long as it is dry. But mix it with cold water, and it makes your senses tingle.

A wise cook makes only as much as he needs, if he is using the powdered variety. After about 15 minutes, the mustard flavor fades with exposure to air and room temperature.

Mustard can be brown, yellow or white. The seeds are used to make various forms of mustard seasonings, and the leaves are popular as a vegetable known as mustard greens.

Mustard has a long, colorful history, both as a food aid and medicine. Pliny the Elder, first-century Roman writer, said it was effective in curing hysteria. And by the Middle Ages, it was being used as a cold cure, a therapy still popular in rural areas. I recall my mother applying a mustard plaster to my chest for the sniffles.

The Chinese used mustard for thousands of years, and the volcanic mixture we gingerly dab on egg rolls today is actually brown Oriental mustard combined with cold water and stirred to a paste.

A 17th-century Englishman, John Evelyn, wrote in a treatise on salads that mustard was incomparable for its effect on "strengthening the memory, expelling heaviness and preventing vertiginous palsy."

The French have probably done more for mustard than any other people, since medieval days when King Philip VI entertained the Duke of Burgundy and 100 gallons of mustard are said to have been consumed.

The most famous French mustard comes from Dijon, the old capital city of Burgundy, where it has been popular since Roman times. This blending of ground mustard, white wine, vinegar and spices produces a satin-smooth condiment that is world-famous. There are a number of brands.

Dijon mustards, with their subtle nuances, add a new dimension to scores of dishes, from hors d'oeuvres to entrees and salads. Here's a recipe showing what they can do for fish.

DEAR ABBY

Ex-wife doing man's laundry

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: I've been dating a very attractive gentleman for about a year. We were getting along famously, to the point where I thought something permanent might develop.

Then I found out that his ex-wife is still doing his laundry! They've been divorced for eight years, but every week he goes back and forth to her house, drops off his soiled laundry and picks it up clean. I think this is sick, Abby.

He has had several relationships since his divorce, but none has lasted very long. The most enduring one he's ever had has been with his ex-wife to whom he is "tied" through his laundry.

What are the psychological implications of this strange bonding? Can there be an apron-string syndrome here? (A "mother-son" relationship?) And what about her accepting his soiled garments? (Symbolic of taking his "dirt" and returning everything spotless and renewed again? Total forgiveness, weekly — and weakly?)

And what of the starch she puts in his collars? Does she also stiffen his spine? I could go on and on.

Please analyze this relationship and tell me if I should continue seeing him. I do not want to be hurt. — SUSPICIOUS

DEAR SUSPICIOUS: To quote Freud: "Sometimes a cigar is just a cigar." Ask him to come clean and tell you if he and his "ex" are washed up or not.

DEAR ABBY: What are people supposed to do when they mail out 112 invitations with RSVP on them and the date (wedding) is drawing near and more than half the people haven't responded? Do they assume that those who did not respond are planning to attend? Or do they assume they aren't coming?

It is one big job to telephone invited guests to find out whether they're coming or not.

The catering service charges so much per plate, and if fewer guests show up, there is no refund. I am ready to tear my hair out, Abby.

We even enclosed envelopes, addressed and stamped for their convenience, but it didn't help much. I can't call up all these people. Now what? — NERVOUS WRECK IN SKOKIE, ILL.

DEAR WRECK: Ask two or three of your good friends to telephone the non-respondents. I know it's infuriating, but you can't assume that silence implies yea or nay.

(Problems? What's bugging you? Unload on Abby, P.O. Box 38923, Hollywood, Calif. 90038. For a personal reply, please enclose a stamped, self-addressed envelope.)

Hospitals growing

WASHINGTON (AP) — The nation's hospitals will need to spend $130 billion through 1990 to replace obsolete facilities and to meet public demands for their services, according to a survey by the Associated General Contractors of America. This represents a 50 percent yearly increase over last year's spending levels, the study added.

Every day, our bartender throws a two-hour cocktail party for all our adult guests.
We won't give you a check because there's no charge.
We won't accept a tip because it's not allowed.
And if that doesn't astound you, consider this:
Every guest enjoying this daily, two-hour, totally free cocktail party also gets a two-room suite. Because suites are all we have.
For about the price of an ordinary room, every suite has a private bedroom with its own tv. A separate living room with its own tv and a queen-size hide-a-bed. Plus a kitchen/wet bar and other surprises.
Like our cook who works for nothing, too. Because, every morning, we serve you a free breakfast, cooked to your order. Eggs, bacon, hash browns and toast. Hotcakes and sausage. Fresh fruits, cereals, sweet rolls, juice, coffee, tea and milk.
Any of it or all of it. With no charge and, of course, no tipping.
Sure, it all sounds impossible.

Teens do one hour chores daily

By SHARON A. HILLIS

When teenagers were out of school for the summer, many were looking for ways to keep busy — but not by doing more household chores! While most teenagers contribute some time to household work, the amount is likely to be small.

A recent study published in the journal "Adolescence," shows that teenagers average about an hour of housework per day as compared to about 6½ hours for mothers and two hours for fathers.

Teenagers' contributions seem to increase when mothers work full-time, but decrease when mothers work only pat-time. Also, adolescent girls tend to spend more time doing household work than boys.

But for teenagers there is more to doing household chores than just getting the job done. Household responsibilities also teach basic life skills.

Parents who give teenagers experience with home responsiblities set a direction for their future. Youngsters who have no responsibilities are headed for difficulty when they leave home for camp, college or a place of their home.

Oddly enough, many teens agree that they should have household duties — although they don't necessarily fulfill them. Heading their list of reasonable chores are "keeping their room clean" and "taking out the trash." Further down the list are tasks such as doing the dishes, yard work, household cleaning, car washing and baby-sitting.

As teens get older, a gender difference emerges in the chores they are willing to do. But accepting (or rejecting) tasks because they are "women's work" or a "man's job," makes it difficult for teenagers when they have to depend on themselves or when the situation requires a balance of tasks regardless of sex.

No one way to handle household responsibilities works for every family with teenagers. But here are some ideas a family:

— As a family, review the major chores to be done, their frequency and how much time each takes. That will help in making a fair distribution of jobs.

— Try a rotation system so that family members of both sexes gain experience with various kinds of chores. For example, let the boys do the dishes and the girls mow the lawn for a period of time and then switch.

— Find ways of making household tasks fun and challenging. Work together as a family "team" when possible. For example, helping to get meals on the table can be a cooperative learning experience.

— Show appreciation to each other for getting jobs done.

Sharing chores strengthens family relationships. In addition, teenagers can gain valuable experience and skills to help them with their own families and employment in the future.

BETTER BUSINESS

Health spas: Exercise your rights

By LINDA TRUITT

Looking for a way to get in shape? Since exercising at home is often unsuccessful many people decide to join health spas.

Health spas, or modern physical fitness centers, provide programs of supervised, active exercise in permanent facilities. Many provide additional services such as swimming pools, whirlpools, and health bars.

While most health spas offer a useful service and are very reputable, the watchword before joining a spa is "Investigate Before You Invest."

In an effort to cash in on the public's desire to be physically fit, a few unscrupulous operators make all types of promises when selling pre-opening memberships and then never open.

The Better Business Bureau has also seen health spas offer extremely low prices on pre-opening contracts only to sell out within a few months, leaving the members faced with paying higher fees.

Or, if the spa does exist, high pressure sales tactics are used to convince members to join, and, possibly, even the facilities and services are misrepresented. Disappointment can avoided , however, if the spa's fees, contractural requirements, and facilities are investigated first.

INVESTIGATE BEFORE JOINING

The Association of Physical Fitness Centers suggests using the following checklist before signing any contracts:

— Ask for a tour of the spa and a trial workout. It is also suggested to talk to the members while visiting the spa. The members will give a candid viewpoint of the pros and cons of the facilities and services.

— Visit the center during the hours planned for an exercise program.

— Determine if the physical fitness center has a full range of equipment for body and cardiovascular development.

— Determine if the physical fitness center has facilities for post exercise benefits such as whirlpools and steam rooms.

— Ask to see available nutrition programs.

— Ask the personnel about an exercise program that meets personal requirements.

— Check the hours of operation and the cost of services. Read the membership contract carefully.

— Ask about the instructors' qualifications.

CONSIDER CONTRACTS CAREFULLY

Some spas ask prospective members to join right away. Special time-limited rates may be offered as incentive, but a wiser decision may be made after taking a few days to decide. The contract should be taken home and read carefully. Before it is signed, these questions should be answered:

— Is everything the salesperson promised written in the contract? If a problem arises after joining, the contract will probably govern the dispute. So if it is not written in the contract, don't rely on it.

— Is there a "cooling-off" period? Some spas allow several days to reconsider after the decision has been made to join after you have signed the contract.

— Are fees refunded if members cancel? If members move, become disabled or just want to stop using the spa, is a refund available or is the contract void? This is especially important if a long-term membership is chosen.

— Are payments affordable? Finance charges and annual percentage rates should be taken into consideration when the total cost of membership is figured. In the past, a few spas have not included finance charges even though they are required by law.

Avoid an offer "too good to be true," such as a lifetime contract that promises many years of membership for a low sum of money.

PRE-OPENING CONTRACTS

What about "pre-opening" contracts offered for facilities that are planned but not yet built?

This can be a legitimate sales method and offers a chance to save a considerable amount on membership contract. But consider such offers carefully. The contract should spell out members' rights if the facility and promised services are not available within the time specified in the membership contract.

A perfect barbecue revolves around flank steak bathed in rousingly delicious Pepper Cola Marinade, and accompanied by the best ratatouille ever

Savory flank steak grilled outdoors

When the late summer sun starts to bake, it's time for the chef to use survival cooking tactics. Savory dishes that can be grilled outdoors or cooked in the cool of the morning and refrigerated until serving time are key parts of the summer chef's campaign.

Flank steak bathed in Pepper Cola Marinade is an excellent way to handle this lean but less tender cut of meat. Flank steak, good for slicing because its muscle fibers run lengthwise, takes well to marinating and its tenderizing action.

The marinade gives an extra boost to the process as it contains cola, which is essentially acidic so that is aids in breaking down the meat's muscle fibers. The sweetness of the cola and catsup is perfectly juxtaposed by the lively taste of Tabasco pepper sauce and garlic.

When grilling the steak outdoors, set the grate several inches over the embers. The variables of outdoor cooking, like wind, mean that the usual time-per-side formulas are unreliable.

Test for doneness, instead, by turning the steak as soon as the first dots of blood begin to appear on top. Then flip the meat and grill the second side for half as long as you did the first. In a small, flameproof saucepan, heat the extra marinade on the barbecue rack so it can be used as a dipping sauce.

Barbecue Ratatouille works well as a side dish for flank steak and the gutsy taste of this do-ahead dish develops as it's refrigerated. The result is zesty vegetables — tomatoes, eggplant, zucchini and green pepper — laced with a rousing combination of onion, tabasco pepper sauce and herbs, which will bring cool compliments to an even cooler cook.

PEPPER COLA MARINADE

½ cup cola drink
3 large garlic cloves, chopped
¾ teaspoon pepper sauce
2 pounds flank steak

In large bowl or plastic bag combine catsup, cola drink, garlic and sauce; mix well. Place steak in marinade. Refrigerate at least 5 hours or overnight, turning steak often to marinate evenly.

Place steak on barbecue grill over medium-hot coals; brush with marinade; cook 10-12 minutes. Turn, baste and cook 6 minutes longer or until steak is done as desired. Heat remaining marinade and serve with steak slices. Makes 6 to 8 servings.

BARBECUE RATATOUILLE

2 tablespoons olive oil
1 large onion, chopped (1 cup)
2 cloves garlic, chopped
1 small eggplant, unpared, cubed (3 cups)
1 can (16 ounces) tomatoes, undrained
1 teaspoon dried leaf oregano, crumbled
½ teaspoon dried marjoram, crumbled
1 bay leaf
½ teaspoon salt
½ teaspoon pepper sauce
2 small zucchini, sliced (2 cups)
1 medium-size green pepper, seeded and cut in thin strips (1 cup)

In large skillet heat oil; saute onion and garlic until tender. Add eggplant, tomatoes, bay leaf, oregano, marjoram, salt and sauce; mix well. Cover. Cook 10 to 15 minutes, stirring occasionally to prevent mixture from sticking. Add zucchini and green peppers. Cover. Simmer 10 minutes longer. Remove bay leaf. Serve hot or cold. Serve with additional sauce, if desired.

Makes 4 to 6 servings.

Chicken Paprika economical dish

CHICKEN PAPRIKA

4-pound roasting chicken, cut up
3 tablespoons butter
2 medium onions, finely diced
1 large green pepper, finely diced
1 teaspoon salt
1 tablespoon paprika
1 tablespoon flour
¼ cup clear fat-free chicken broth
1 cup sour cream

In 12-inch skillet brown chicken on both sides in hot butter, remove chicken and pour off fat. To the skillet add onion and green pepper, cook gently, stirring often to get up drippings, until wilted. Add chicken, skin side up, sprinkle with salt and paprika. Cook gently, covered, until tender — 30 to 40 minutes. Remove chicken and keep warm. Blend flour and broth, whisk in sour cream, add to skillet. Cook gently, stirring constantly, until boiling; pour over chicken. Makes 4 large servings.

She's remembered with grace, sadness

By CAROLYN LESH
Associated Press Writer

MONTE CARLO, Monaco — One year after the death of Princess Grace, the tiny Mediterranean principality of Monaco flourishes — if sadly.

Her prince and three children will mark the first anniversary of Grace's death Wednesday by attending a memorial Mass in the cathedral where she was married and laid to rest.

It was on Sept. 14, 1982, that the former American movie star Grace Kelly died at the age of 52. Her car ran off a hairpin turn on a twisting, Riviera mountain road and plunged 120 feet into a vegetable garden, but doctors said the cause of death — 36 hours after the accident — was a stroke.

Within months, there was speculation that real estate prices would plunge, conventions would cancel, tourism would decline and economic troubles would reign without the drawing power of Princess Grace.

The predictions have not come true.

Monaco's commercial turnover last year was a record high $1.5 billion, bank deposits set a new mark at $1.9 billion, and hotel occupancy rose to 67 percent from 50 percent 10 years ago. The results for 1983 are expected to be at least as rosy.

There still is no personal income tax in Monaco, no national debt and virtually no unemployment. Of the principality's 28,000 residents, only about 100 are listed as unemployed — a jobless rate of 0.3 percent.

Although there has been a slight drop in real estate prices, it has been far less than that experienced in other resort areas, and its cause has been the general world recession rather than the death of Grace.

The linking of Monaco's economic health to Grace's death has shocked her husband Prince Rainier III. The portly, 60-year-old prince, whose Grimaldi family has ruled since the 13th century, has denied such a link in the few interviews he has given since her death.

"She did a lot for the glamour and prestige of the principality, but I don't think her disappearance means that people are not going to come," Rainier told Life magazine earlier this year. "Monaco has existed for 800 years. It can go on for a long time."

The public's fascination with Grace, the daughter of a Philadelphia brick-layer turned millionaire, also goes on.

One year after her death, photographs of Grace still grace the covers of magazines. Postcards of the Academy Award-winning actress and souvenirs with her likeness continue to sell in tourist shops across from the rocktop, sand-colored Grimaldi palace. The palace has received more than 25,000 letters of condolence.

The curious still stop and gawk at the treacherous turn where her car ran off the road. Almost daily, mourners pass by her tomb.

For the Grimaldis, the year since Grace's death has brought increased attention.

"Since the death of Princess Grace, the number of articles on the family has tripled," said Nadia Lacoste, the official spokeswoman for the family.

When the three-month mourning period ended Dec. 15, the royal family emerged to resume their official duties and begin filling the gap left by Grace's death.

In recent months Rainier has devoted himself to grooming Crown Prince Albert, 25, to take over the duties of running the principality that is about the size of New York's Central Park. Rainier often has said he plans to abdicate in favor of Albert, although no date has ever been given.

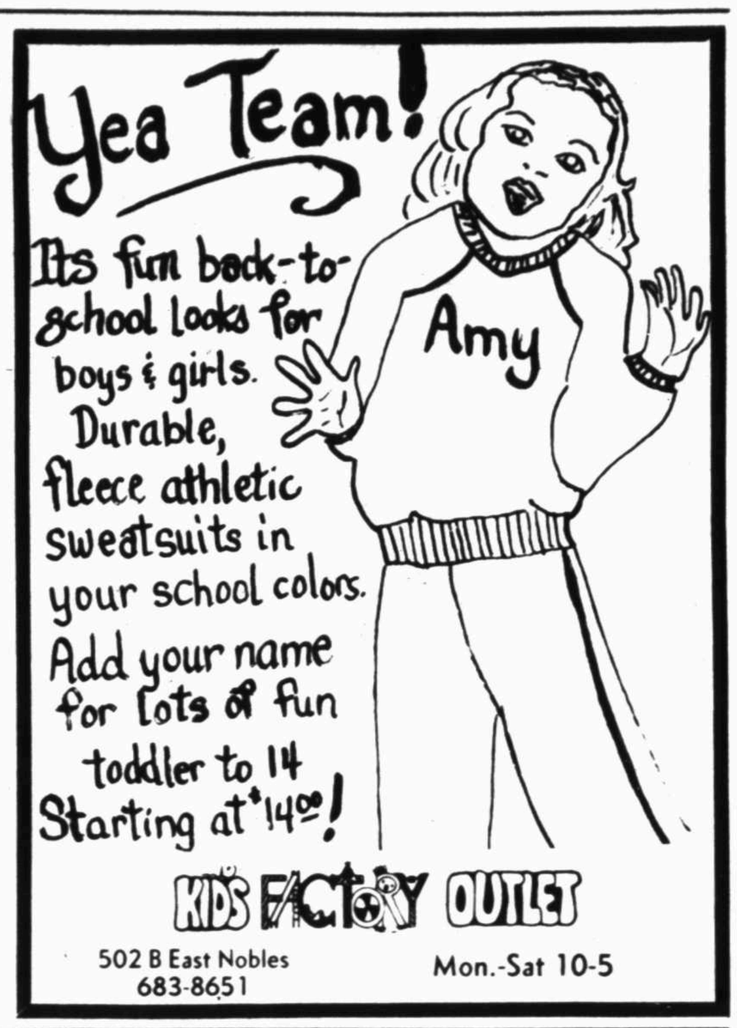

The handsome, athletic young prince, who received a political science and economics degree from Amherst College in Amherst, Mass., finished a six-month banking internship in June with Morgan Guaranty Trust in New York.

Albert recently has been linked romantically to Lady Helen Windsor, the 18-year-old daughter of the Duke of Kent and a cousin of Queen Elizabeth II of Britain. But Albert, like Britain's Prince Charles before him, has said he has no plans to marry before the age of 30.

Princess Caroline, 26, once the most rambunctious of the three children, has lived a more subdued life since her 1980 divorce from French playboy Philippe Junot. Vatican officials currently are examining a request to annul Caroline's marriage, which would allow her to remarry in the church.

Caroline now spends her time with childhood friend Robertino Rossellini, son of the late actress Ingrid Bergman.

Much of the recent press attention has centered on Princess Stephanie, 18, who has captivated the public by her romance with Paul Belmondo, 20, the car-racing son of French film star Jean-Paul Belmondo.

Tuna talks 'futile'

MEXICO CITY (AP) — Talks with the United States about lifting the tuna embargo are futile now because the Mexican tuna catch has plunged 43 percent this year, an industry official said.

Arturo Zepeda Vazquez, a leader of the National Fishing Industry Chamber, said the location of the "Nino," a warm current in the Pacific, has forced Mexican fishermen to go beyond the country's 200 miles of territorial waters to find tuna.

The United States has boycotted Mexican tuna to pressure the country to sign a regional tuna fishing agreement.

"We are in a good negotiating position now in contrast to two years ago because now our fleet has greater capacity," Zepeda Vazquez said.

Death threats questioned

MANILA, Philippines (AP) — A U.S. Embassy spokesman said today he is not aware of any death threats against President Reagan, and Philippine officials say Reagan's safety will be "fully secured" during his November visit.

Members of the political opposition have said Reagan should "think twice' before visiting Manila after the assassination Aug. 21 of opposition leader Benigno Aquino.

Aquino was shot dead while under military guard as he arrived from three years of self-imposed exile in the United States. Security officers immediately killed Aquino's alleged assassin.

The opposition has asked how the government could assure Reagan's security when it could not protect Aquino.

Is Reagan's trip 'unwise?'

WASHINGTON (AP) — Rep. Stephen J. Solarz, D-N.Y., says he questions the wisdom of President Reagan traveling to the Philippines in November because of alleged death threats made against him to the U.S. Embassy in Manila.

The congressman, chairman of the House Foreign Affairs subcommittee on Asian and Pacific Affairs, said Tuesday that questions surrounding the Aug. 21 assassination of Philippines opposition leader Benigno Aquino Jr. should be cleared up, for both political and security reasons, before the president embarks for Manila.

Reagan is to visit the Philippines as part of an Asian tour.

Radio Marti plan forwarded

WASHINGTON (AP) — A compromise Senate package that would put the proposed Radio Marti news broadcasts to Cuba under the tight, balanced-coverage requirements of the Voice of America is on its way to the House.

Sen. Paula Hawkins, R-Fla., Senate sponsor of the bill and a key participant in the compromise negotiations that led to Tuesday's unanimous voice vote passage, calls Radio Marti "a beacon of news and information" on the shores of Florida beaming news of Cuba to Cuba.

Barbara Burris, press assistant to Rep. Dante Fascell, D-Fla., who was House sponsor of the Reagan administration proposal, said the compromise language meets many earlier objections to the original plan.

Pope deplores KAL downing

ROME (AP) — Pope John Paul II says he shared a sense of loss with "the whole world" when he first heard of the Soviets' downing of a South Korean airliner with 269 people on board.

The pontiff discussed the incident with reporters Tuesday night aboard a jetliner as he returned from a four-day visit to Austria.

"It was the common reaction, the reaction of the whole world — loss, loss," John Paul said when asked about the Sept. 1 attack on the Korean Air Lines plane.

Zimbabwe takes rights stand

WASHINGTON (AP) — Prime Minister Robert Mugabe of Zimbabwe has told President Reagan that his Southern Africa country remains committed to protecting human rights and eliminating racism.

Mugabe, who met with Reagan for nearly two hours on Tuesday, was winding up a two-day working visit to Washington today after breakfast on Capitol Hill with U.S. representatives and senators.

Peking restaurateur executed

PEKING (AP) — The assistant manager of a Shanghai restaurant has been executed for luring young women into the restaurant with free food and drink and then raping them, the Guangming Daily reported today.

The national newspaper said Tan Guochang, 36, was shot on Tuesday.

Tan and another man reportedly organized a gang at least 10 members based at the Datong Restaurant. The paper saidTan had raped 10 women.

The execution was among dozens reported recently in a crackdown on crime in China.

American fleet gathers off coast of Lebanon

By ROBERT H. REID
Associated Press Writer

ABOARD THE USS EISENHOWER — An American fleet bristling with warplanes, missiles and cannons is assembling just off the Lebanese coast in case U.S. Marines in Beirut call for help.

The White House announced Tuesday that President Reagan has authorized commanders of the 1,200-man Marine force in the Lebanese capital to ask the Navy for air strikes if necessary to defend the multinational peacekeeping force.

The force, composed of U.S., French, Italian and British troops, has come under artillery fire from Druse and Shiite Moslem militias in the latest round of fighting in Lebanon. Four Marines have been killed.

If Marine commander Col. Timothy J. Geraghty asks for help, the Navy ships off shore will be able to supply air strikes or bombardments within minutes.

As the fighting in Lebanon has escalated in recent weeks, the U.S. Navy has amassed about a dozen warships off the coast, including the aircraft carrier USS Eisenhower with more than 90 warplanes.

The Marines also are backed up by sea-based Cobra helicopter gunships and six Marine Harrier jets on the USS Tarawa, an amphibious assault ship which arrived Monday from the Indian Ocean as part of a task force with another 2,000 Marines who will remain with the fleet.

The French, whose 2,000-man contingent has suffered more casualties than any of the other three nations, have 40 planes on the aircraft carrier Foch. Super Etendard fighters from the Foch have flown over Beirut and the central mountains.

Italy keeps two frigates within sight of Beirut's beaches. The British dispatched six Buccaneer fighter-bombers to Cyprus — only 10 minutes by air from Beirut.

The fleet has gone into action only once so far. The frigate USS Bowen fired four rounds from her five-inch guns into the hills east of Beirut on Thursday.

Navy jets stage show of force

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan, expanding U.S. air defenses in Beirut, is allowing Navy jets to support Lebanese army forces trying to hold off Syrian-backed Druse militiamen.

While the Marines did not immediately call in the fighters based on the aircraft carrier Dwight D. Eisenhower, two British Buccaneer fighter-bombers flew a rooftop sweep over Beirut in a show of force for the multinational peacekeeping force.

With Congress paying increasing attention to the use of the troops in Beirut, the commandant of the Marine Corps, Gen. Paul X. Kelley, told the Senate Foreign Relations Committee on Tuesday that there is "not a significant danger at this time in terms of imminent hostilities to our Marines."

"There is no evidence that any of the rocket or artillery fire has been specifically directed against Marines," Kelley testified.

The president's decision to allow local Marine commanders to call in air strikes was described as a new policy intended to protect the Marines, who have come under fire from the Druse militiamen attacking Lebanese positions.

It was reported in Beirut by the privately-owned Central News Agency that Reagan had pledged air and naval artillery support for the Lebanese army. The agency, with access to President Amin Gemayel's inner circle, said "If any of the Lebanese army's current front lines in the mountain are penetrated, the Lebanese government can count on U.S. Navy air and artillery intervention."

A White House official, speaking on condition that he not be identified by name, pointed out that the Lebanese army units were under attack at Suq al Gharb. Threats to this position could eventually hurt Marine positions nearby at the Beirut International Airport.

Thus, he said, some of the A-6 attack aircraft and F-14s based on the Eisenhower, and the Harrier vertical takeoff jets aboard other ships could be used to support the Lebanese.

Similarly, the aircraft could be used to support Lebanese forces defending Baabda, the Beirut suburb in which the presidential palace and the U.S. ambassador's residence are situated.

Larry Speakes, deputy White House press secretary, said that the airpower could be called in to defend not only U.S. Marines but other members of the multinational peacekeeping force and U.S. diplomats.

Bentsen wants war act invoked

Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON — Senator Lloyd Bentsen, D-Texas, is one of a group of senators who will seek to have the War Powers Act invoked in Congress.

Once this is done, then Congress would have to give its permission for the U. S. Marines to be kept in Lebanon under conditions defined as "combat." It would still be 60 days to 90 days under this law before Marines could be ordered home.

Bentsen is working on the problem with two other senators whom he declined to identify. He may be working with other senators. Bentsen has thought for some time that the War Powers Act should be invoked.

At the White House, Deputy Press Secretary Larry Speakes said that while the Reagan administration has notified Congress of its intention to comply with the law, at the same time President Reagan does not wish to have his "hands tied" by complying with that section that defines what is a combat situation.

The White House still insists that the Marines are in Lebanon on a peacekeeping mission, not combat.

Stress part of job

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP) — The stress is the hardest part of his job, says Mark Williamson, an emergency medical technician. He talks of consoling relatives of dead people and of making ambulance runs, not knowing what to expect.

An EMT since 1981, Williamson, 27, is also business manager for Medic-Vac Ambulance in Little Rock. "You never know what you're going to get, and you don't know when you're going to get it," he said during a recent telephone interview. "This is a non-routine job. You're presented with new and different circumstances each time you get into a vehicle."

At the state Health Department, Mike Hampton, director of the department's Office of Emergency Services, said one must complete a training course of at least 120 hours to be an EMT. Most often, such courses are taught in vocational-technical schools. Additionally, an EMT must be certified in cardiopulmonary resuscitation.

EMT COURSES cover topics like spinal immobilization — how to handle an injured person — and automobile extrication — "Instead of just taking a patient out of the car, you remove the car from around the patient."

According to Hampton, employee stress is one reason for labor problems confronting some ambulance services in Arkansas.

He said that, unlike many police officers and firefighters, EMTs aren't given psychological help. "It's just one body after another after another after another," he said. "After a while ... it starts playing on their minds."

STRESS, according to Williamson, is not knowing what to expect at an accident. "No matter what amount of training, when we're called on the radio, we don't get all the information we'd like to have. So, we prepare for the worst."

Arkansas EMTs are underpaid, Hampton said. They usually start at minimum wages — $3.35 an hour. "With longevity, they may get a little bit more. ... You've got the teachers wanting money, you've got the firemen wanting more money, you've got the police wanting more money. Well, the EMTs aren't any different. ... Police may endanger their own lives," but EMTs can say, "'We've got your life in our hands.'"

The average yearly pay for EMTs nationally is $15,000, Williamson said. If an Arkansas EMT worked 40 hours a week at minimum wages, his annual pay would be $6,968.

"One of the problems," Hampton said, "is the emergency ambulance service business is just a bad operation because it's a losing proposition. The ambulance must respond to every request for emergency assistance, and the collection rate is terrible. You've got somebody that has a bad health condition, yet they don't have any way to pay. ... You transport them to the hospital with paramedics on board. It costs you $200, and you don't get anything back on it."

Additionally, ambulance services have tremendous overhead. Hampton said a box-type ambulance might cost $28,000 to $30,000. "By the time you get finished equipping that one vehicle, you got about $50,000 tied up in it," he said. "Then you got to get your paramedics and a driver."

BECAUSE of illness and days off, a service needs five paramedics and five drivers to operate one vehicle seven days a week. Paramedics make more money than EMTs — an average of about $3.85 an hour in Arkansas, Hampton said.

Shark lips may be clue to evolution

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Lips may be the best clue to understanding "Jaws," say experts who believe a sluggish shark with a 4-foot-wide mouth, tiny teeth and huge, blubbery lips is an important clue in understanding evolution.

Dubbed Megamouth, this slow-moving shark uses its gills to filter food from the water the way many whales do — in sharp contrast with the speed, aggression and razor-sharp teeth most sharks use to feed.

John McCosker, director of the Steinhart Aquarium and an expert on sharks, calls the chance capture of the newly classified Megachasma pelagios near Hawaii one of the oddest ocean finds ever.

"It's a demonstration of the remarkable plasticity of evolution," McCosker said. "A lot of different animals in the ocean have learned how to get a square meal when they need it, even if they can't swim fast enough to catch moving prey."

The scientists who discovered the beast called it Megamouth because of its giant, rubbery lips which cover 236 rows of tiny, non-menacing teeth.

The discovery and likely lifestyle of the fish are described in the most recent journal of the California Academy of Sciences. The report was written by Leighton R. Taylor of the Waikiki Aquarium, Leonard Compagno of San Francisco State University and Paul J. Struhsaker, a Hawaii shark specialist.

McCosker said in an interview that Megamouth offers insights into the evolution of modern sharks.

Deductions might be missed

From Wire Reports

Mixing business with pleasure can bring the added bonus of a tax deduction if you follow a few simple rules, time your entertaining carefully and keep detailed records.

Researchers at Prentice-Hall of Englewood Cliffs, N.J., which publishes tax information, say there are lots of legitimate deductions for business entertainment.

In general, if you have a substantial and bona fide business discussion before or after something like a theater or dinner party, a night club outing or a sports event, the full cost is deductible by you or your company, depending on who pays the bills.

THE EXPENSE must be associated with the active conduct of business and the entertainment usually has to take place on the same day as the business discussion unless the customer comes from out of town or there are other unusual circumstances.

There are some exceptions to the rule. You may, for example, deduct the cost of lunch or dinner with a business associate even if you don't actually talk about business, as long as the atmosphere is conducive to such a discussion. There must be no distracting influences.

You must keep accurate records. List each expense in a diary at or near the time the expense occurs and get receipts for each expense of $25 or more. Your diary listings should include the cost of the entertainment, the date, who was entertained and what the business relationship is; the time, place, length and nature of the business discussion and who attended it.

Prentice-Hall put together a hypothetical week of business entertaining to show how the deductions work.

SUPPOSE ONE of your customers and his or her spouse come to town on Sunday. You and your spouse take them to a tennis match. Your company pays for the tickets.

You and the customer spend Monday morning talking about business. You take the customer and spouse to lunch — the company pays the bill again — and the out-of-towners go home Monday afternoon.

The company gets to deduct the cost of the tickets to the tennis match and the lunch. (If the customer hadn't come from out of town, the cost of the tennis tickets probably wouldn't be deductible.) The costs for the spouses are deductible as long as the entertainment itself is deductible. The company-paid lunch does not count as taxable income for you.

NOW IT'S Tuesday. A prospective local customer comes to your office for business discussions. That night, you and your spouse take him and his wife to dinner. You pay the bill. The expenses — for all four of you — are deductible since the event is associated with the active conduct of business.

Judge rules Bill Cosby routine not beyond decency's bounds

Cosby

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Comedian Bill Cosby's "Poppy Whitehead" routine does not extend beyond the bounds of decency, a federal judge ruled as he dismissed a suit filed by two brothers who didn't find it funny.

They claimed they were defamed when Cosby, 46, performed the monologue on "The Tonight Show."

In the routine, Cosby described how he and "Poppy," as 7-year-olds, spied on the amorous activities of Poppy's older brother.

Eugene "Poppy" Whitehead, watching the show from his home in Philadelphia in 1980, was not amused. Nor was Walter Whitehead, his brother.

But Judge John P. Fullam said Tuesday that the monologue was "incapable of a defamatory meaning" and "by no stretch of the imagination" beyond the bounds of decency.

Zappa

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Rock star Frank Zappa, best known recently for "Valley Girl," the oddball hit he recorded with his teen-age daughter Moon, is suing Warner Bros. Records Inc. for $6 million, his lawyer says.

Attorney Christina Jacobs says the suit filed Monday in Superior Court charges that Warner Bros. failed to account properly for sales under the 42-year-old entertainer's two record labels, Bizarre Records Inc. and Discreet Records Inc., and seeks $3 million in compensatory damages and another $3 million in punitive damages.

"The complaint also alleges that Warner Brothers had a position of trust and confidence with Mr. Zappa, and that Warner Brothers breached that trust and confidence," Ms. Jacobs said.

Phones calls to the Warner Bros. West Coast legal and press offices were unanswered Tuesday evening.

Mailer

BOSTON (AP) — Pulitzer Prize-winning author Norman Mailer is being asked for more money by one of his ex-wives, but his lawyer says that's nothing new.

"If I bothered him every time they filed an action, he'd never write a word," said the attorney, Monroe Inker.

Mailer was not in state Supreme Court on Tuesday when arguments were heard in his fourth wife's appeal of the divorce decree she won three years ago from the author, whose works include "The Naked and the Dead."

A lawyer for Beverly Rentz Bentley Mailer, Gerald Nissenbaum, told the five justices that at the time of the trial Mailer, now 60, was working on two books, "The Executioner's Song" and "Ancient Evenings," and had been given an acting role.

Because none of these money-making ventures came out in original testimony, Nissenbaum asked for a new trial in Probate Court.

Inker said that despite his client's productivity and high earnings, "his entire estate has been dissipated by having to support seven children and three other wives."

Carson

NEW YORK (AP) — Entertainer Johnny Carson has obtained a temporary court order barring a New York producer from publicly stating that he is associated with a movie about model agency head Eileen Ford.

The host of NBC's "Tonight Show" filed a $5 million lawsuit in state Supreme Court in Manhattan against producer John King. He said King has been issuing press releases saying Carson would play Mrs. Ford's husband, Jerry, in a proposed film, "The Eileen Ford Story."

King described the case as one of "breach of contract" by the 57-year-old Carson. The producer said he and the talk show host had a "verbal agreement" that Carson would appear in the movie.

"He's suing me for $5 million. I'm in shock," said King, "I'll have to sue him for $10 million."

A temporary restraining order was granted Tuesday by Justice Thomas Hughes.

KNOXVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Entertainer T.G. Sheppard made a surprise appearance at St. Mary's Medical Center to visit a 15-year-old fan who couldn't attend his concert at the Tennessee Valley Fair.

The 39-year-old country music singer, whose hits have included "I Loved 'Em Everyone" and "You Feel Good All Over," spent a half hour Monday night with James "Chucky" Weeden of Knoxville.

The teen-ager has had lung infections for more than a year and has been hooked up to a mechanical respirator in the hospital's intensive care unit since Sept. 3.

"He prayed with my son," said Grace Weeden, the boy's mother. "You should have seen the tender loving look he gave my son. He said he would continue to pray for him."

"I've never seen such a differnce in a little boy," hospital spokeswoman Mary Sharpe said after Sheppard's visit. "He really was happy this morning."

DR. NEIL SOLOMON

Solid food won't lead to asthma

Dear Dr. Solomon: Does giving solid food to a baby at an early age cause asthma? My sister-in-law says she has read this, but I've never heard my doctor say anything about it. — Mrs. G.O., Minneapolis, Minn.

Dear Mrs. O.: A study conducted in New Zealand failed to show an association between the early introduction of solid foods and the development of asthma. More than a thousand children were involved in the study.

Dear Dr. Solomon: My son once read about a baseball pitcher who always had pancakes for breakfast, and he is following along with this. He says it makes him a much better ballplayer. Is there something in pancakes that would help a youngster do better as an athlete? — Mrs. A.G. Atlanta

Dear Mrs. G.: If your son really believes that a particular food will cause him to perform better, eating that food may give him a psychological boost that may in fact help him improve his performance.

Dear Dr. Solomon: I've been reading in your column about how eating a lot of fat can cause problems, and I am trying to cut down on the amount of fat I have in my diet. But I can't find a recipe book that doesn't tell you to use butter or margarine or something like that to prepare food. How can I cut down on fat if I have to use fat to prepare the food in the first place? — Mrs. Y.B. Birmingham, Ala.

Dear Mrs. B.: Very often recipes call for the use of butter or margarine or oil simply to keep the food from sticking to the pan. You can avoid the use of fat for this purpose by using a Teflon-coated pan or a spray that is designed to prevent foods from sticking.

Dear Dr. Solomon: I would like to lose about eight pounds as quickly as possible, but I don't want to go on a crash diet. Could you recommend a fat-free diet that I could follow? — Denise, Silver Spring, Md.

Dear Denise: A sensible program of weight control does not require the complete elimination of fat; some fat is desirable even when a person is dieting. It not only makes food taste better but, since it moves slowly through the digestive system, prevents feelings of hunger from recurring soon after a meal.

You should be able to lose the eight pounds by selecting a balanced diet from each of the four food groups while cutting back on the number of calories you consume.

Dear Dr. Solomon: I appreciated your explanation of the difference between simple and complex carbohydrates. Another way to explain them: simple carbohydrates are considered simple because they have already been broken down by the refining process instead of our body having to do this job. They are found in white flours and sugars so prevalent in most diets. Complex carbohydrates are found in whole grains, legumes, fruits and vegetables and must be broken down by the body to be utilized. The complex carbohydrate is so much better for people because the un-refined food also contains fiber. — Adria, Medford, Oregon

Academics discuss Tolkien's magic works

MILWAUKEE (AP) — Frodo and Sam would probably prefer a convivial evening singing by a hearth, but scholarly fans of J.R.R. Tolkien's works chose to study the author's literary import at an academic conference on his original manuscripts.

Tolkien, the British fantasy writer of "The Hobbit" and the trilogy "The Lord of the Rings," is the focus this week of a conference at Marquette University.

But instead of the pointed hats and furry feet of Tolkien's mythic Middle Earth that might grace other Tolkien fans' fetes, this meeting will have a distinctly academic tone.

"Part of the reason for originating this conference is we felt he was a literary figure and not just a fantasy writer," said program coordinator Terry Margherita, who is also the curator of the university's collection of Tolkien manuscripts.

Marquette's archives include the handwritten manuscripts for "The Lord of the Rings" and "The Hobbit" as well as unpublished drawings by Tolkien. The conference is the first to focus on the manuscripts, which arrived at Marquette 25 years ago, Ms. Margherita said. It also marks the 10th anniversary of the writer's death.

Speakers at the three-day gathering, which starts Thursday, will include English professor Joseph McClatchey and professor emeritus Clyde S. Kilby, both of Wheaton College in Illinois. Kilby is the former curator of the Marion E. Wade Collection at Wheaton, which includes many of Tolkien's letters and the papers of six other writers.

McClatchey stressed that Tolkien's work should be ranked among literature of the highest order.

"Tolkien didn't just sit down and dream up a story and call it 'The Lord of the Rings,'" McClatchey said. "Its depths are as deep as English literature and the English language. The difference between Tolkien's work and any other fantasy or romance is like day and night. Tolkien's work is deep and intricate. To me, it is without peer in its literary genre."

The Tolkien fans' intensity about the quest of the elves, wizard and the furry-footed hobbits — Frodo and Sam among them — in the professor's mythic tale, may dampen Tolkien's literary reputation in some eyes, but McClatchey said he is glad Tolkien is popular.

"I think the popular interest in Tolkien as well as the scholarly interest shows us the peculiar power of his writings," he said.

Kilby said he noticied the trend at a recent convention of the Mythopeic Society at Scripps College in Claremont, Calif.

"Fourteen years ago it was strictly a fan event. Now it's changed to almost an academic sort of thing. You had teachers and Ph.D.s, but on the other hand you still had a number of people going around in costume. You still have both elements," he said.

Kilby said although he is an academic, he has as a great appreciation for the attraction of "The Lord of the Rings."

"The Lord of the Rings is about the souls of people, their lives. There's evil to be overcome — evil as great and profound and wide as any evil could be...There are deep things in our consciousness and somehow they're brought out by this work," he said.

'Bloom County' cartoonist satisfied with new contract

ROCHESTER, N.Y. (AP) — Cartoonist Berke Breathed, who had threatened to stop drawing his popular "Bloom County" comic strip says he is satisfied with his new contract offer.

Breathed said Tuesday that the Washington Post Writers Group had been "very responsive" to his requests regarding copyright and final say over any merchandising or outside exportation of "Bloom County" or its characters.

"There are still some things to work out...but I certainly don't anticipate any problems, and I certainly don't anticipate the ending of the strip," he said.

Breathed had told a University of Rochester audience Sunday that there was a "good chance" he would stop drawing the cartoon strip.

The Washington Post Writers Group then said that another cartoonist would be found to draw the strip if Breathed quit. "Bloom County" is syndicated to an estimated 500 newspapers nationwide.

Breathed, 26, of Iowa City, was seeking to renegotiate his current five-year contract to gain all rights over commercial use of the comic strip and its characters. His contract expires in 1985.

But because the syndicate owns the comic strip, it could hire someone else to produce it if Breathed quit, said Al Leeds, special projects manager for the syndicate.

"We're giving him a new contract which provides for him receiving more money and other rights," Leeds said Monday.

Matchmaking service must reimburse client

HOLLYWOOD, Fla. (AP) — A matchmaking service must reimburse a woman who said the company failed in its promise to introduce her to three "knowledgeable, considerate, understanding" bachelors in one year, a judge has ruled.

"She wanted a very rare type of eligible gentleman," Paula Jacobson, president of Jewish Introductions Inc., said of Mildred Rosenstein. "We told her to be patient...We don't know if the man will walk in in one month or three months.

"We told her we would not send her a man for the sake of a man," Ms. Jacobson added.

Broward County Judge Morton L. Abram ruled Monday the firm had violated its contract with Ms. Rosenstein, 59, of Lake Worth, and ordered it to reimburse her court costs as well as the $250 fee she paid in April 1982.

"She might be an extremely difficult person to please. What she's looking for might be impossible to satisfy, but you did agree to the contract," the judge said. "The contract just wasn't performed."

Ms. Rosenstein was pleased with the judge's order.

"I think he was very fair and wise," she said. "I don't think people should go into a contract and not honor it."

According to testimony, the firm promised, in return for the non-refundable fee, to match Ms. Rosenstein with at least three men meeting her qualifications during one year.

The contract also required Ms. Rosenstein to pay an additional $250 if she married as a result of a match, Ms. Jacobson said.

Ms. Rosenstein said she asked for a man who was "knowledgeable, considerate, understanding and cultured...I told her how I was living and wanted to meet someone on a similar economic level who could afford to keep me on the same level I was living."

Ms. Jacobson said her client also specified that her match should be a non-smoker between the ages of 60 and 70.

"Because we're so totally ethical and wouldn't send her just anybody, she sued us," Ms. Jacobson said. "We only send people right for each other. We could have sent her six men."

Ms. Jacobson did send one man, but after two or three dates, Ms. Rosenstein said the man was too heavy.

"It wasn't exactly love at first sight," she told Ms. Jacobson.
