Nepalese ruler lifting ban on political parties

■ Katmandu residents celebrate king's decision, although he maintains absolute power and hasn't mentioned reforming the National Assembly.

KATMANDU, Nepal (AP) — King Birendra Sunday caved in to demands by pro-democracy leaders, establishing a multiparty system and lifting a 29-year-old ban on political parties following the bloodiest day in Nepal's modern history.

The stunning announcement was carried on government-run television in a special broadcast at 11 p.m. It was preceded by several hours of talks between opposition leaders and the Harvard University-educated monarch.

According to the announcement, the king removed the word "partyless" from the preamble of the constitution and scrapped an act that banned political parties.

Foreign Minister Pashupati Rana said elections for the National Assembly would be held soon, but he gave no date. In an apparent deal, the opposition said it would end its 50-day-old protest movement.

Several residents celebrated by climbing onto rooftops shouting "Victory, victory!" Others switched on all the lights in their houses.

Open street demonstrations were limited due to a 24-hour curfew, which Rana said would remain in effect until Monday.

While an announcer read the proclamation from the royal palace, the television showed scenes of the king meeting leaders of the Nepali Congress Party, outlawed for the last 29 years. The party was a leader of the recent protests.

"We talked with the king for an hour at the royal palace and the talks were very, very cordial," said Kirshna Prasad Bhattrai, a Nepali Congress leader. Pro-democracy leaders had expressed pessimism earlier in the day.

"This will be the advent of human rights and freedom of speech in Nepal," said Sahana Pradhan, a member of the Congress and the only woman opposition leader to meet the king.

"The most important person in the country has made a most important decision," Rana told The Associated Press. "This is not a concession. It is a natural process of answering the will of the people."

Still, many questions remained. Despite the promise of elections, no mention was made of reforming the National Assembly, or Rashtriya Panchayat, a largely rubber stamp body. The king still has almost absolute power. Several hundred political prisoners remain in jail.

The opposition victory came two days after security forces unleashed the bloodiest attack in more than a century. Witnesses said as many as 200 people were killed when police opened fire on a crowd of 200,000 pro-democracy demonstrators, but the government said only 10 people died and 107 were wounded. The government then imposed a curfew Friday night.

Shoes, slippers, glass and rocks still littered the streets Sunday.

The protest occurred during a general strike called by the Nepali Congress and a coalition of leftist parties, who launched the campaign for multiparty democracy seven weeks ago.

Not since 1846 when feuding members of the royal household battled had this peaceful kingdom in the mountains and CINCINNATI (AP) — A federal judge barred police Sunday from confiscating photographs from an exhibition of Robert Mapplethorpe's works that led to an obscenity indictment against an arts center and its director.

Ryan White

Teen-age AIDS victim White dies

■ Ryan White, the 18-year-old who worked for the acceptance of people with AIDS, loses a 5½-year-long battle with the deadly disease.

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — Ryan White, who won a long court battle to attend public school and overcame prejudice against himself and other AIDS victims, lost his 5½-year struggle with the deadly disease Sunday. He was 18.

White died shortly after 7 a.m. EST at Riley Hospital for Children, where he had been hospitalized since March 29 with an AIDS-related respiratory infection. He had been heavily sedated and on a ventilator.

White's mother, Jeanne, and sister, Andrea, 16, had kept a bedside vigil, joined at times by celebrities such as singer Elton John and the Rev. Jesse Jackson.

Dr. Martin B. Kleiman, White's physician throughout his illness, said death followed a slow deterioration that had begun Saturday.

"At the end, his family and a few of the others who loved him were close at his side," Kleiman said. "He never regained consciousness, and I am confident that he suffered no pain at the end."

Carrie Van Dyke, a spokeswoman for Mrs. White, said the family needed "time to be alone, to recover, to grieve."

John, who stayed at the hospital with the Whites nearly a week, dedicated the song "Candle in the Wind" to White during the Farm Aid IV concert Saturday night at the Hoosier Dome, about a mile from the hospital.

Polls open Tuesday for statewide runoffs

■ Democrats will choose gubernatorial candidate in Tuesday's runoff, while neither party's standard bearers face local runoffs.

By Brenda Masengill

Polls will open at 7 a.m. Tuesday for Midland voters participating in the Democrat and Republican runoff elections. Voting will continue until 7 p.m.

Democrats boast the longest runoff ballot with four races at stake, including the battle between gubernatorial hopefuls Ann W. Richards and Jim Mattox. The winner will vie with GOP nominee Clayton Williams of Midland in the November general election.

There are no local Midland County races on the Tuesday ballot, although Ector County boasts two local runoff contests — one for county treasurer on the Republican ballot and one for Precinct 4 county commissioner on the Democratic side, according to Ector County Elections Administrator Sharon Wilson.

Absentee balloting concluded Friday, and the turnout was light in both Midland and Ector counties.

According to Bettye Calvert, Midland County Elections Administrator, if a voter participated in the March 13 primary, he or she must remain with the same political party in the runoff election. However, if a resident did not vote March 13, they may vote in either the Democratic or Republican runoff.

Republican:

Volunteers dialing for runoff votes

DALLAS (AP) — As the Democratic gubernatorial candidates exchange accusations in the final days before Tuesday's runoff, much of the real war is being waged by volunteers on the streets and over the phone lines.

In cramped offices lined with telephones and on doorsteps across the state, the gubernatorial war is being won or lost.

While opponents Ann Richards and Jim Mattox scramble from one appearance to the next — launching verbal volleys at each other — anonymous volunteers are pleading with people to go to the polls.

"It doesn't take a genius to know exactly what we have to do," said Millie Bruner, political director for Mattox. "A runoff is always (decided by) whose voters go back and vote."

Coaxing the 1.4 million primary voters back to the polls requires identifying the candidates' strongest areas and talking to as many voters as possible.

"We're trying to call them all," said Richards field director Kirk Adams. "Last time, we called over a million."

Both campaigns hope to contact each of their supporters three times — once during absentee voting, which ended Friday, over the weekend, and on the day of the runoff.

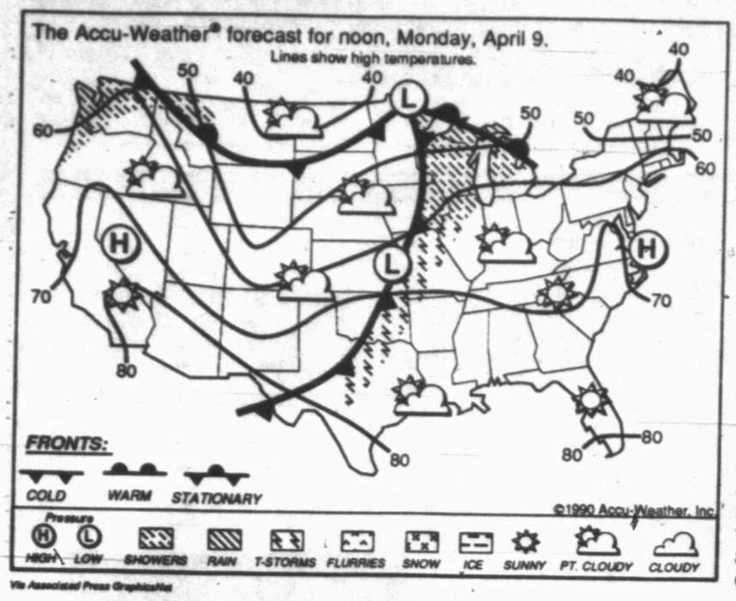

"Some of our phone bankers ask ... 'Won't they get tired of us calling them?' " said Richards Dallas phone bank coordinator Jennifer Jones. "But it's so important for us to call them again. Most understand there's a runoff. But they don't understand they have to physically go out and vote again."

In the March 13 primary, Ms. Richards, the state treasurer, drew 39 percent of the vote to 37 percent for Mattox, the attorney general. Former Gov. Mark White ran a distant third with 19 percent.

"If either can get all their votes back out, they win," said Ed Martin, executive

Quiet teen taught U.S. about AIDS

By STANLEY D. MILLER

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — Ryan White, the pale, gaunt teen-ager who won a lengthy legal battle to attend public school, learned a hard lesson about fear but taught the public a more important lesson about his deadly disease, AIDS.

White, 18, died Sunday in an Indianapolis hospital.

"This kid is unbelievably important to us," Surgeon General Antonia Novello said in a telephone interview last week from Washington.

"He's the kid who was able to communicate with adults as well as children. He's a spokesperson for the whole AIDS crisis," Novello said. "He was able to fight alone the stigmatization of the disease."

White contracted AIDS in 1984 at age 13 from a blood-clotting agent used to treat his hemophilia.

"He's shown us the disease is purely a disease and has no social implications," his physician, Dr. Martin Kleiman, said last week.

White gained national attention in 1985 after he was barred from attending Western Middle School near Kokomo because of his AIDS. His family sued. The case was in and out of courts, other families petitioned to keep White out of school, but White finally won.

"Personally, I would rather have given it up a long time ago," White's mother, Jeanne, said during the court battle. "It would have been a lot easier on me and a lot easier on the rest of the family.

"But, believe it or not, Ryan has always really loved school. (Ryan's sister) Andrea says, 'Boy, I wish it would be me that could stay home.' But this is what Ryan wants to do, and I want what he wants."

Milton Berle, from left, Kareem Abdul Jabbar, Ryan White and Los Angeles Raider Howie Long appear March 26 at a benefit for Athletes & Entertainers For Kids in Los Angeles. It was White's last public appearance before he was hospitalized March 29 with an AIDS-related respiratory infection. He died Sunday after a 5½-year struggle with AIDS.

Mrs. White moved her family to Cicero, about 20 miles from their home, saying they did not want to stay where they were unwanted. White said at the time that he did not want to die in Kokomo or to be buried there. They were welcomed by the new community and the school system.

The battle provided the impetus for the first revision of Indiana's communicable disease law since its original draft in 1948, and gave many Americans a person with AIDS to identify with.

"He's young, white and middle-class," said Eric Engstrom, executive director of the National AIDS Network. "Many people could see themselves in Ryan. Ryan understood that and worked to educate people and raise awareness. He's been an incredible catalyst for acknowledgment of the AIDS crisis."

Dr. Woodrow Myers, state health commissioner during White's battle to attend school and now health commissioner for New York City, said White answered a call for leadership.

"America saw in living color what it's like to be the victim of unnecessary, unwarranted fear," Myers said. "It also saw someone who endured that struggle with bravery and with his head held high and with a spirit of determination that I've found rare."

A national educational and fund-raising program to fight misconceptions about children carrying the AIDS virus was named in White's honor.

"I came face to face with death at 13 years old" but decided "to live a normal life," he testified before the White House AIDS Commission.

He was on the cover of People magazine. His story was dramatized in an ABC television movie, "The Ryan White Story," in which he played a cameo role.

While White was unconscious in his hospital bed last week, thousands of people called the hospital to offer support.

President Bush planted a tree during a ceremony here while visiting the city on a political trip, and dedicated the tree to White, saying, "Let it be Ryan's tree." Singer Elton John kept a vigil with the family and distributed $500 worth of toys to other patients.

Sen. Edward Kennedy, D-Mass., called Mrs. White after a Senate committee unanimously approved his bill providing $600 million in emergency funds for AIDS care. "This one's for you, Ryan," Kennedy said.

Other calls came from Vice President Dan Quayle and entertainers Michael Jackson, Phil Donahue, Carol Burnett and Lionel Richie.

The Centers for Disease Control in Atlanta said 125,000 AIDS cases had been reported through February and 76,031 people had died from complications related to the disease.

The CDC estimated 1 million people in the U.S. carry the virus. What made Ryan White special?

"Through him we learned that education of the public is possible," Novello said. "And for everyone out there who learns to hate, someone out there learns to care because of Ryan."

WHITE: Michael Jackson mourns 'personal friend'

(From 1A)

"This one's for Ryan," John said to the cheers of 45,000 fans at the concert to raise funds for financially troubled farmers.

President Bush, who last week planted a tree in White's honor in downtown Indianapolis, said he and his wife, Barbara, were "deeply saddened" by White's death.

"All Americans are impressed by his courage, strength and his ability to continue fighting," Bush said in a statement. "Ryan's death reaffirms that we as a people must pledge to continue the fight, his fight, against this dreaded disease."

White, born Dec. 16, 1971, in Kokomo, was 13 when he was diagnosed with AIDS in December 1984. He had contracted acquired immune deficiency syndrome through a blood-clotting agent used to treat his hemophilia. It is estimated that more than half of the nation's 20,000 hemophiliacs were infected with the AIDS virus before better blood donation screening procedures were adopted, and 1,200 have developed AIDS.

He became a national spokesman for children with AIDS, appearing at congressional hearings and fund-raisers. He was on the cover of People magazine and made friends with such celebrities as John, Michael Jackson, former President Reagan and Olympic diver Greg Louganis.

Michael Jackson arrived Sunday afternoon by private jet with developer Donald Trump to pay his respects to the family.

"He was a personal friend," said Jackson, who had given White a red Mustang sports car and kept in frequent touch by telephone. White was Jackson's guest at the star's California ranch over the New Year's holiday.

"He was a good friend of mine, and I'm too overcome with grief to talk about it," the reclusive Jackson said in a statement.

Three limousines took Jackson, Trump and their entourages to the Whites' home in Cicero, about 20 miles north of Indianapolis.

I-20 closed 10 hours after tractor-trailer accident

Staff Report

Portions of Interstate 20 in Midland were closed 10½ hours Sunday as highway department crews cleaned up pools of paint that were splattered across the eastbound lane following a mishap involving three tractor trailers.

Department of Public Safety officials said Hugh Riddle, age unknown, of Weaverville, N.C. slammed into two of the trucks while trying to pass them from an inside lane at 1:50 a.m.

According to DPS, Riddle was following the two on the outside lane when he decided to pass from the inside about a quarter mile east of the city limits.

They said when Riddle attempted to pass the middle truck driven by Tom Williams, age unknown, of West Coving, Calif., Riddle slammed into the side of the trailer unleashing its cargo of paint.

DPS said Riddle then swerved around the the middle tractor and slammed into the back end of the lead tractor-trailer driven by Floyd Johnson, age unknown, of Ontario, Calif.

"No one overturned and there were no injuries, but there was a lot of paint dumped," said a DPS spokesman.

It was the second accident in 24 hours on the busy east to west thoroughfare that is used heavily by truckers.

Earlier Saturday, a California couple was killed when the car they were driving hopped a median area about five miles east of the city and ended up underneath a tractor trailer headed in the opposite direction.

DPS identified the dead as Mohamed Uvais, 22, of La Verne, Calif. and Kimberly Roach, 20, of Pomona, Calif.

That accident occurred at about 5:45 p.m. near the U.S. Highway 80 interchange.

In other news, DPS and the Midland County Sheriff's Department were on the scene of a major wreck that occurred along west U.S. Highway 80 at about 9:40 p.m. Injuries were reported, but no other deatils were released.

Before the king's announcement, the U.S. Embassy issued a warning to American tourists in Katmandu, advising them to leave the country. The statement noted that a British citizen was among the dead Friday.

The king's decision came after talks between the new Prime Minister Lokendra Bahadur Chand, a relative moderate, and opposition leaders Saturday and Sunday. Chand was given his job last week after hard-line Prime Minister Marich Man Shrestha resigned.

"The process had been continuing since last evening. There was an agreement on how to go about it today," said Yog Prasad Upadhyaya, a senior Nepali Congress leader. Earlier, he had said the talks were stalemated.

A number of members of the National Assembly made impassioned appeals for a multiparty system. Then Sunday night opposition leaders began to claim victory.

The kingdom's only experiment with Western-style democracy lasted less than two years and was halted in 1961 when Birendra's father, King Mahendra, dismissed the Nepali Congress government, accusing it of corruption and inefficiency.

Since then, political parties have been banned and the king has ruled in conjunction with a legislature called the Rashtriya Panchayat, or National Assembly.

director of the Texas Democratic Party. "Richards, in urban areas, did have a good organization. Mattox, on the whole, had more. It's a crap shoot."

In Corpus Christi and parts of South Texas, State Sen. Carlos Truan reactivated his decade-old network of more than 1,200 "block captains" on Mattox's behalf. This weekend, Truan's troops were dialing neighbors, walking streets, distributing leaflets and campaign brochures.

In Austin, where Ms. Richards took 65 percent of the primary vote, more than 1,000 volunteers are trying to contact everyone in the city, field coordinator Glen Maxey said.

"If there's a Jim Mattox sign in their yard, do we still stop?" asked one nervous Richards volunteer in Austin.

"If you get anything negative, just say, 'Thank you, have a nice day,' " organizer Joe Vela told her. "We're going to run it clean, ya'll."

Both Mattox and Ms. Richards have stepped up their get-out-the-vote efforts in South Texas, where a lively runoff race between state Sen. Hector Uribe and challenger state Rep. Eddie Lucio could boost voter turnout 15 to 20 percent.

Population growth causes problems for Mongolia

ULAN BATOR, Mongolia (AP) — The government says having many children is a woman's patriotic duty, but decades of large families have overloaded the school system and created a serious unemployment threat.

In the 1950s, the communist government set out to increase the population of Mongolia's 930,000 square miles by offering money and special privileges to couples with more than four children.

"In other countries ... the population policy is to keep it at the same level or to keep it low, but Mongolia is different," Navch, head of the government demography department, said in an interview.

"We have a small population," she said. "That's why we have such a policy."

Mongolia's population was 649,300 when it became independent in 1921. It experienced a baby boom in the 1960s and 1970s and the birthrate peaked in 1963 at 43 per thousand people, well over the 1980-1985 world averge of 27.7 births per thousand.

By 1989, government incentives combined with better living conditions and health care had raised the population to 2.09 million.

Yanjinsuren, a 46-year-old herdswoman who lives outside Ulan Bator, the capital, has 10 children ranging in age from 28 to 2.

"I like babies," she said. "I think it's lucky to have many children. I'm a working woman, but still, the Mongolian family and Mongolian traditions are the most important thing."

Mothers with more than four children receive $133 to $1,033 annually for each child under 16, depending on the child's age and the total number of children.

Those with more than five children get a medal and the title "mother of the second degree," and a woman with eight or more children is a "mother of the first degree." The records say 92,600 women received medals and titles in 1988.

Encouraging large families had unforeseen results. Nursery schools can accommodate only one child in six and kindergartens only one in three, the Communist Party newspaper Unen reported.

Three shifts operate at some schools in Ulan Bator, where one-fourth of all Mongolians live, the paper said, and only 21 percent of the nation's doctors are pediatricians.

Unemployment is a major potential problem. About 50 percent of Mongolians are under age 18 and will create a glut when they enter the labor market unless the economy grows more rapidly.

"Now our policy is not just increasing the population, but also to raise the quality of the population," said Gerel, head of the population bureau. "We have to look at the labor force and balance everything."

A new health law that took effect in January gives women the right to decide how many children they will have, and when.

It makes abortions free to all and lengthens maternity leave from nine months to two years. Abortions previously were restricted to women over 35 with four or more children.

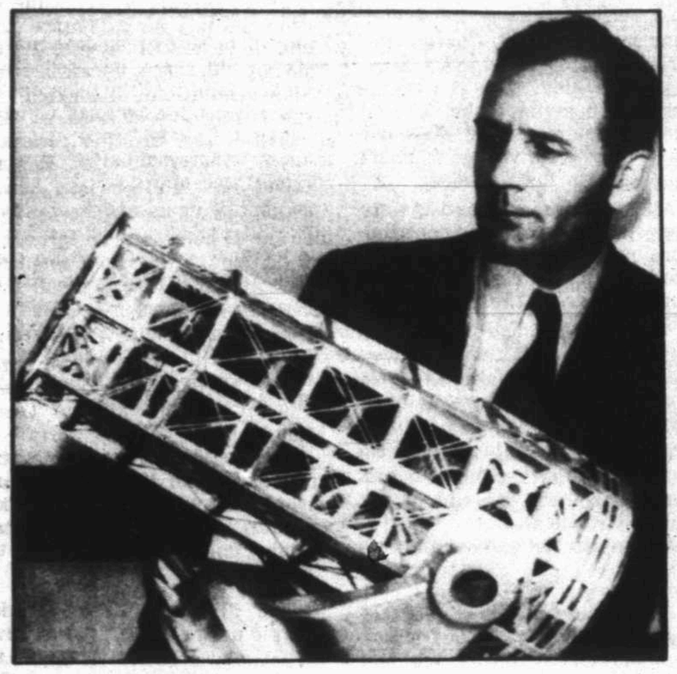

Many younger women balk at raising large families and feel they can show their patriotism in other ways.

Navch, 35, has a 12-year-old daughter and a son of 9. She does not intend to have more.

"That's enough," she said. "After 35, it's too old."

A recent survey found that 57 percent of women questioned thought four was the ideal number of children. Last year, the average number of children per woman of child-bearing age was 4.8, down from seven 20 years ago.

Baasay, 44, a herdswoman with eight children, said a married daughter told her recently she wanted only two.

Hubbles will gather at Cape Canaveral

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — The Hubbles are coming, along with the Hubbells and maybe even a couple of Hubbels, for a family reunion toasting this week's shuttle launch of the Hubble Space Telescope.

They're all relatives of astronomer Edwin Powell Hubble, whose discovery in the 1920s that the universe is expanding gave rise to the Big Bang theory of creation.

And while he may not be the smartest or richest Hubble, Hubbell or Hubbel who ever lived, he certainly will be among the most famous when space shuttle Discovery blasts off with the $1.5 billion observatory that is named for him.

"There's never been a family that's had this kind of cause for a reunion," said Harvey Hubbell IV, 60, a distant relative and retired businessman from North Palm Beach who is organizing the affair.

"What we wanted to do was honor Edwin. Edwin's being honored by NASA, and it gives us an excuse to get together and learn a little more and to pass the heritage on to the next generation," he said.

Nearly 200 descendants of Richard Hubball, a 17th century immigrant from England, are expected to begin to arrive this weekend. It's billed as a "mini-reunion" since the family's official gathering is held every two years and this is an off year.

Edwin Hubble, who died at age 63 in 1953, studied the stars and galaxies during the 1920s from Mount Wilson Observatory in Pasadena, Calif. His survey revealed a much larger universe than anyone imagined. He concluded galaxies were moving away from Earth at velocities proportional to their distances, supporting the concept that the universe originated 15 billion or so years ago in a cosmic explosion known as the Big Bang.

There were other noted family members.

Harvey Hubbell's grandfather, Harvey Hubbell, invented the pull-chain electric socket and the conventional duplex wall socket. The factory he started in 1888 in Connecticut has grown into Hubbell Inc., a Fortune 500 company.

There was Carl Owen Hubbell, the Hall of Fame pitcher who played for the New York Giants from 1928 through 1943. There also was John Lorenzo Hubbell, who established his first trading post on the Navajo reservation in northeastern Arizona in 1876. The one in Ganado, Ariz., is now operated by the National Park Service.

"Our family reunions have tended to be retirees and the older generations. This is catching the interest in the younger generation," said Robert L. Hubbell, who is taking two grandchildren to the reunion from Falls Church, Va.

Robert Hubbell, a 71-year-old retired Foreign Service officer, is president of the Hubbell Family Historical Society, which boasts nearly 400 members

In addition to all the Hubbells coming, some relatives from Edwin Hubble's mother's side plan to attend.

Lena James Jump, 75, a third cousin on his mother's side, will be there with her three sisters.

"It's going to be wonderful," said Mrs. Jump, a retired schoolteacher from Marshfield, Mo., the astronomer's birthplace. "I say if I die, I'll die happy."

National Aeronautics and Space Administration representatives will meet with the family Monday. The next morning, chartered buses will take the group to a special viewing area at Kennedy Space Center, provided the launch is on time.

A pool party is planned for Tuesday afternoon, followed by a tour of the space center on Wednesday and a luncheon at nearby Patrick Air Force Base on Thursday.

If the mission is delayed beyond Thursday, "we'll have a prelaunch party just to celebrate having all of us together and to wish them Godspeed," Harvey Hubbell said.

It will be the first time most of the family has witnessed a shuttle launch, but the astronomer's closest living relatives — two sisters — aren't coming.

Helen Hubble Lane, 91, and Betsy Hubble, 85, are in ill health and will be watching televised coverage from their homes in El Paso, Texas.

"We've been interested all along. We're very excited," Betsy Hubble said.

The astronomer's wife, Grace, died in 1974, and the couple had no children. Three other sisters and two brothers are dead.

Betsy Hubble said Edwin went farther than any of the siblings. "Edwin knew exactly what he wanted. That was his main thing in life."

Judge prohibits photos' seizure

CINCINNATI (AP) — A federal judge barred police Sunday from confiscating photographs from an exhibition of Robert Mapplethorpe's works that led to an obscenity indictment against an arts center and its director.

U.S. District Judge Carl Rubin also ordered county and city authorities not to interfere in any way with the exhibition while the obscenity charges are tried in state court.

The Contemporary Arts Center hailed the protective order, which will let the 175-photo exhibit proceed unchanged until a jury can decide whether its seven sexually explicit photos are obscene.

"We got everything we wanted out of this hearing," said arts center lawyer H. Louis Sirkin.

The exhibit opened to the public Saturday morning, attracting a crowd of thousands, including nine grand jury members. It was closed for an hour in the afternoon when the arts center and its director, Dennis Barrie, were indicted on state obscenity charges.

Patrons were told to leave the center while police videotaped the display under a search warrant. The exhibit then reopened.

Hamilton County Prosecutor Arthur Ney Jr. asked the center Saturday to voluntarily remove seven photographs that grand jurors found objectionable, but center officials refused.

Ney made a veiled threat of more action if the photographs remained in place this week, and wouldn't rule out confiscation.

Last June, the Corcoran Gallery of Art in Washington, D.C., canceled the exhibit. The Washington exhibit prompted Congress to limit funds for the arts after Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C., declared the photographs obscene.

The judge agreed to the unusual emergency hearing Sunday morning requested by the arts center, which won an order prohibiting further police interference with the show. At the outset of the hearing, Rubin said that seizing the photos would make the argument about displaying them moot before it is even decided.

Rubin ordered the arts center to give prosecutors a copy of each photograph for use at trial. He also said there was no reason for authorities to interfere with the exhibition, which runs through May 26 and moves to Boston in August.

"I'm also going to enjoin each of the defendants, their agents, their employees and anyone under their control from interfering or terminating the current exhibit without further order of the court," Rubin said.

"You may not recover any photos, you may not close the exhibit to the public, you may not take any action that could be intimidating in nature to prevent the public from seeing the exhibit," the judge said.

Rubin said he would file his written opinion today.

Police had an obligation to maintain order at the exhibit, which drew more than 3,000 people on opening day Saturday, "but that may not be used as an excuse to shut down this exhibit," Rubin said.

Both sides agreed to the order, which will remain in effect while they prepare for trial in Hamilton County Common Pleas Court.

The next step is Barrie's arraignment Friday, at which he is expected to plead innocent to charges of pandering obscenity and illegal use of a minor in nudity-oriented material.

The question of whether the seven photos are obscene will be left to an eight-member jury. A trial date is expected to be set Friday.

Nine grand jurors were among the crowd Saturday morning that viewed the exhibit.

Spirits rise as telescope installed

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — An upbeat mood settled over this launch center Sunday when crews finished installing the $1.5 billion Hubble Space Telescope in the space shuttle Discovery and said they were on track for a Tuesday morning liftoff.

"This is a very important day for us," said William Taylor, the telescope's chief engineer. "Some of us who have been on the project for a while wondered if we would ever see this day, or the days to follow."

Closing of the cargo bay, which holds the 43-foot-long telescope, was a milestone in the countdown for a launch at 8:47 a.m. EDT Tuesday. The telescope is the most expensive and complicated payload to be carried aboard the shuttle in 35 flights. It is being launched seven years later than originally planned.

The weather predictions were good.

There was only one hitch in the countdown: a short in a heater cable in a strut that connects the shuttle to its huge fuel tank. The heater prevents ice from forming on the strut when the tank is filled with supercold liquid oxygen and liquid hydrogen.

"Technicians are checking to make sure that the short has not influenced any other systems," shuttle program director Robert L. Crippen said. "The heater is not involved for launch and is not a constraint to launch."

Discovery's commander Loren Shriver and pilot Charles F. Bolden Jr., practiced emergency landings on the Kennedy Space Center runway Sunday, while mission specialists Bruce McCandless, Steven A. Hawley and Kathryn D. Sullivan went through final equipment fit tests.

Mission Commander Loren Shriver

All studied last-minute changes in their thick flight plans, then had the afternoon off to spend in the hazy sun.

Clearly the star of the show was the shiny telescope, named after famed astronomer Edwin Hubble, which is expected to look backward in time to nearly the formation of the universe some 15 billion years ago.

"This instrument has been built to the limits of what technology can provide," said Charles Pellerin, director of NASA's astrophysics division. "This is a voyage very much perhaps like the voyages of Columbus and Magellan, except that it's a voyage of man's intellect into the universe."

Asked if perhaps scientists were overselling the expected contributions of the telescope, Pellerin replied no, that it was "the biggest single advance in the history since Galileo."

He likened it to giving astronomers 20-20 vision of the universe after centuries of viewing it through 20-200 eyes.

Astronauts McCandless and Sullivan will be ready to make a space walk should there be problems, such as a failure of the telescope's electricity-producing solar panels to extend. The telescope can remain on its internal battery power for only five hours.

The telescope's release is scheduled for 29 hours after liftoff and will be seen by television beamed to the ground. Discovery will fly escort at a distance of 46 miles for nearly two days until a 10-foot-diameter cover is successfully opened to expose the telescope's instruments to space.

The telescope is expected to be in operation for at least 15 years, with periodic servicing by visiting astronauts. Some 50 parts are designed to be swapped out during periodic maintenance in orbit.

Networks plan shuttle coverage

NEW YORK (AP) — ABC, CBS, NBC and CNN plan to televise the scheduled launch of the shuttle Discovery live Tuesday morning.

The spacecraft is scheduled to lift off at 8:47 a.m. EDT from the Kennedy Space Center at Cape Canaveral, Fla.

During the five-day trip into space, five astronauts will put into orbit the Hubble Space Telescope, which will give scientists a look at stars and galaxies light years away.

CNN plans to begin coverage from the space center at 5:30 a.m. EDT Tuesday, according to a statement issued by CNN.

ABC's coverage will begin during "Good Morning America," and then go to a special report, according to Arnot Walker, an ABC spokesman.

CBS will carry the liftoff live as part of its "CBS This Morning" news show, said Tina Wynn, a spokeswoman for CBS.

NBC will air the launch on the "Today" morning news show, said NBC spokeswoman Katherine McQuay.

AP Laserphoto

Singer Elton John performs "Goodby, Norma Jean" at the Farm Aid IV Concert in Indianapolis Saturday night. John, who had been at the bedside of AIDS patient Ryan White, was a surprise guest at the concert. Elton dedicated the song to White, who died early Sunday morning.

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — Rock star John Mellencamp says Farm Aid's work for the American family farmer remains unfinished 5½ years after its inception and has distinguished itself from other benefits that come and quickly pass.

"The thing about Farm Aid is, we're still here," Mellencamp said. Other charitable endeavors by musicians, such as the Live Aid concert in 1985 to raise money for famine relief in Africa, have disappeared from public view, though.

"I'm not bad-mouthing nobody. I don't know, but I think people are still starving in Africa, too," the Indiana singer said at the fourth Farm Aid concert to raise money to help ease the financial plight of family farmers.

More than 60 musicians including Elton John, Bonnie Raitt, Lyle Lovett and Crosby, Stills and Nash performed at Saturday's Hoosier Dome show that lasted nearly 14 hours. It was the first such concert in 2½ years, and organizers made it clear the main reason they staged the show was to generate money and raise awareness.

Linda Lewi, a Farm Aid spokeswoman, said Sunday that figures on how much money the concert had raised would not be released until today because donations are still being counted. She said that by late Saturday the concert had raised about $1.3 million.

Until Saturday, the organization had raised more than $12 million and distributed some $9 million to more than 100 farm groups, service agencies, churches and emergency hotlines in 41 states.

Farm Aid IV was staged at a time it could influence the new federal farm bill Congress is considering and while negotiators work on a new international General Agreement on Trade and Tariffs that would regulate agriculture policy.

Mellencamp, Farm Aid President Willie Nelson and Neil Young, the musician organizers for the benefit since the first show in Champaign, Ill., in 1985, have indicated their disappointment that their efforts until now have not influenced federal farm policy as much as they had hoped, nor has the problem gone away.

"Farm Aid has not accomplished its task because we have not affected the government to its fullest extent," Mellencamp said in an interview before going on stage Saturday night. Asked if the organization would attain more influence, he replied, "I don't know."

He suggested federal farm policy during the Reagan years sacrificed the welfare of the independent farmer to promote corporate agriculture concerns, and that the media were at fault for accepting government policy statements and statistics without challenge.

"I'm not giving up. The face of this nation changes by the men that we admire, right, and I think that we haven't felt the backlash of the last eight years yet. I think the '90s will reflect that," Mellencamp said.

The concert also came two weeks before that nation observes the 20th anniversary of Earth Day.

Woman charged in ax attack goes on trial

MILWAUKEE (AP) — A woman who allegedly claims she is the mother of Jack the Ripper goes on trial today accused of plotting to kill a man with a hatchet in a ritual she believed would resurrect the British serial killer.

The 26-year-old man, who has not been identified by court officials, said in a complaint that he was lured to an apartment and attacked by an ax-wielding woman hiding in the shower. He said he needed 50 stitches for a forehead wound.

Kazuck

Jury selection begins today in the trial of Deborah Kazuck, 26, who is accused of plotting the May 29 attack with two other Milwaukee women. Catherine Lipsham, 23, and Ramona Barry, 27, pleaded guilty Friday to the same charge of attempted first-degree murder and agreed to testify against Ms. Kazuck.

The victim, who also is expected to testify, said he was invited to an apartment on Milwaukee's south side by Ms. Barry. He had met the women in a park a few weeks before the attack and said they appeared "perfectly normal."

He said he went to the bathroom, heard something move in the shower and pushed the curtain aside to reveal Ms. Kazuck holding a hatchet with a two-handed grip.

Police said Ms. Kazuck planned to dismember the victim's body, drain his blood and eat his kidneys in a ritual she believed would bring Jack the Ripper back to life.

At least five prostitutes fell prey to the Ripper's knife in the seamy East End of London in the autumn of 1888. Most were disemboweled and mutilated. The crimes were never solved.

Ms. Kazuck will have a two-phase trial because she has pleaded both innocent and innocent by reason of mental disease or defect. In the first phase, the jury must decide whether she committed the crime. In the second, they will decide if she was insane at the time.

Pretrial publicity prompted the judge to order jury selection in Madison, 90 miles away, but the trial will be held in Milwaukee.

Vietnamese explore return of U.S. military

WASHINGTON (AP) — Vietnamese officials privately suggested allowing the U.S. military to return to Cam Ranh Bay if relations between the countries continue to warm, says a congressman who recently met with them.

Rep. Thomas Ridge, R-Pa., said the extraordinary possibility was raised informally at a foundation-sponsored forum in Bali, Indonesia attended by several congressmen and a group of top-ranking officials of Vietnam's communist government.

A congressional delegation headed by the chairwoman of the House subcommittee responsible for overseeing U.S. military bases hopes to visit Cam Ranh Bay this week as part of a 10-day trip to Vietnam, Guam, Singapore and Indonesia.

The mission's purpose is to explore alternatives to U.S. military bases in the Philippines. Leases on six U.S. installations in the Philippines expire in 1991 and American officials anticipate difficult negotiations for continued base rights there.

The Soviet Union moved into the U.S.-built base at Cam Ranh Bay at the conclusion of the Vietnam War in 1975, but Pentagon officials said in January that the Soviets had withdrawn some fighter planes and bombers.

The possibility of the Soviets withdrawing completely from the base and Americans returning to it was one of the subjects at the Indonesia forum sponsored by the Henry R. Luce Foundation, Ridge said.

"One of the ranking Vietnamese officials said, 'I can see the day when American ships are docked in Cam Ranh Bay,' " Ridge said, adding that the official later specified that he meant warships.

"We said, 'Do you mean just for refueling?' and they said, 'No, for repairs,' " Ridge said.

Ridge said conditions of the forum prevented him from identifying the Vietnamese official.

Rep. Chester Atkins, D-Mass., who also was at the meeting, said returning to Cam Ranh Bay "would require some major changes in the relationship between the United States and Vietnam."

But Atkins, who declined to discuss specifics of the meeting, also said: "I think the Vietnamese are desperate. Their economy is in a state of continued deterioration. I think they're willing to look at or think about anything that doesn't endanger their national security that would allow them to rejoin the economic community and modernize."

NATION IN BRIEF

Violent crime rises

WASHINGTON (AP) — Violent crime in the United States rose 5 percent last year while so-called serious property crimes such as burglary and theft were up only 2 percent, according to figures released Sunday by FBI Director William S. Sessions.

Overall, the 3 percent increase in serious crimes from 1988 to 1989 was the same as the previous year, and compares with a 2 percent rise in 1987, a 6 percent jump in 1986 and a 5 percent rise in 1985, the FBI said.

Cities with populations over 50,000 — places where approximately 80.9 million people live — showed a 3 percent increase in serious crimes.

Suburban and rural areas as well as cities outside metropolitan areas — places where some 132.2 million people live — had a slightly smaller 2 percent increase.

2 more bodies found

MIAMI BEACH, Fla. (AP) — Searchers using dogs and heavy equipment found two more bodies and looked for others Sunday in the charred hulk of the Fontana Hotel.

The death toll from the furious, fast-moving fire that swept through the 39-year-old, 102-room hotel Friday rose to six with the two discoveries, which officials said apparently lowered to eight the number of tenants unaccounted-for.

More than a score of searchers, representing federal, state, city and county agencies, meticulously began their Sunday search at the top and along the sides of blackened rubble left as the fire gutted the building.

Shriver quits NBC show

NEW YORK (AP) — Maria Shriver returned Sunday to co-anchor NBC's "Sunday Today" only to say she's leaving. She cited travel and motherhood as reasons.

Shriver, who is married to actor Arnold Schwarzenegger, gave birth to their first child, a daughter, in December.

The Implant Alternative.
If you've been disappointed in conventional solutions to your missing teeth, you should know about an important new alternative: dental implants.
A dental implant is a tiny cylinder which is surgically implanted in your jaw to replace the root of the tooth. Once in place, your natural jawbone bonds to the implant, making it a stable foundation for replacement teeth, a permanent bridge, or anchored, removable dentures. Dental implants are fixed so securely, in fact, they can actually restore the feeling you had with your own natural teeth. As well as your ability to eat just about anything you want — confidently.

Dental implant, actual size.
Call to learn more about dental implants. They'll help restore the feeling, and the freedom of your own natural teeth.

New energy plan wise Bush move

While the final scope and direction of the Bush administration's energy policy won't be known for some time yet, the president's interest in reviving conservation options and the quest for new sources of energy is a wise move that should result in a more secure future for the nation.

During the eight years of the Ronald Reagan presidency, policies promoting conservation and alternate sources of energy fell by the wayside as Reagan attempted to shift more responsibility for the energy future to those in the marketplace.

Although Permian Basin oilmen typically have adhered to a conservative philosophy in relation to government regulation and interference in the oil industry, many have contended for years — even dating back to the early years of the Jimmy Carter administration — that the nation needs to utilize all its sources of energy to meet the growing demand.

With the complexity of today's energy picture, it's doubtful that the necessary supply can be assured without the government's involvement to some extent. Balancing domestic energy supplies against the unavoidable requirement for importation of some energy appears to assure at least minimal government involvement.

Yet neither is heavy government "mother-henning" of the energy industry the answer. Strict regulation already has resulted in unnecessarily longterm delays in the opening of some nuclear-power plants and disruptions and lost business at oil firms and other energy concerns.

Useless regulation only adds costs to the oilman's operation, and cuts into profits available for further exploration and development of reserves. That doesn't make more oil or new sources of energy available to the American public.

Developing those alternate energy sources is important to the United States' future because petroleum is not a renewable resource, yet it's no more important than keeping the domestic oil industry strong and working.

Giving oilmen the ability to acquire investors, produce oil and to make a reasonable profit will let them compete in a energy world that is growing ever more inhospitable.

'Butcher of Evin' praises U.N. report

WASHINGTON — When someone called "The Butcher of Evin" praises a United Nations human rights report, something is rotten at the U.N.

Evin is an Iranian prison, and the man known as the "butcher" is Assadollah Lajevardi, who served for a time as its cruel warden. He is one of the few people lauding the report of a U.N. human rights observer who went to Iran in January. The observer, Reynaldo Galindo Pohl, issued his report in February and gave Iran a cleaner bill of health than it deserved.

Anderson

We have already reported that Pohl may have gone gently on Iran as part of a plan to convince Iran to negotiate for the release of Western hostages in Lebanon.

Four days before Pohl's report was issued, an editorial in the government-controlled Teheran Times for the first time called for the release of the hostages. The next day, an Iranian-backed Shiite cleric in Lebanon also said it was time to let the hostages go.

Now, sources in the Central Intelligence Agency and elsewhere tell us that those were the only positive signs from Iran. And almost from the day that Iran got what it wanted — a positive report from the U.N. — only hostile pronouncements have come from Iran about the hostages.

If there is still any doubt about the accuracy of the U.N. report, consider who has praised it and who has condemned it in recent weeks.

In early March, the "butcher" Lajevardi sent a telegram to the Iranian foreign minister thanking him for being so persuasive with Pohl. "For long years, the shining humanitarian efforts of the Islamic Revolution's brave children responsible for administrating the prisons have made them the targets of the slings and arrows of unchivalrous accusations and allegations from the internal and external counter-revolutionaries and their simple-minded supporters," Lajevardi wrote.

He said it was high time the people who run the Iranian prisons got a pat on the back.

Lajevardi was responsible for the despicable torture and execution of thousands of prisoners while he ran Evin Prison. He packed 60 prisoners to a cell and invented new kinds of torture. Iranian exiles claim Lajevardi and prison guards raped female prisoners, robbing them of their virginity and thus making them ineligible for the Iranian version of heaven. Lajevardi also drained the blood of prisoners on death row for use at the front in the war with Iraq. But he didn't drain so much blood that the prisoner was unconscious or too weak to appreciate execution.

This is the same Lajevardi who once called Josef Stalin a "godless idiot who killed 60 million in the service of his stupid socialism." Then he added, "Isn't Islam worthy of a similar tribute to its grandeur?"

Praise from this man should be read as a resounding condemnation. Other top Iranian officials and clerics have lauded the U.N. report as a vindication of Iran.

On the other side is Amnesty International, which is unhappy with the report. Amnesty had previously exposed a wide range of human rights abuses in Iran that were not verified during Pohl's trip — a trip carefully choreographed by the Iranian government.

The United States is none too pleased either. Ambassador Armando Valladares, the U.S. representative to the U.N. Human Rights Commission, publicly protested the report the day after it was issued. And the recent State Department human rights report accused Iran of political executions, torture and other violations of human and civil rights.

Ban needed on 'assault' lighters, gasoline, jugs

Well, there's no doubt about it. Congress needs to ban assault lighters, assault plastic jugs, and assault gasoline. After all, these things killed 87 people in one swoop in a New York City club.

Imagine, people can buy gasoline without a license and background check. Lighters and matches are unregistered and freely available to anybody. And gasoline retail stores are everywhere.

Charley Reese

If Congress follows the same logic that it used when one deranged individual killed five children with a semiautomatic rifle, then bills will be immediately introduced to ban matches, lighters, gasoline, and jugs.

After all, just think about it — 87 people killed in a matter of minutes by one individual. Naturally, in minds infected with the discredited concept of social determinism, the individual killers are not to be blamed. What's left? The inanimate objects they use.

Therefore, if Congress fails to get as hysterical about assault lighters, assault jugs and assault gasoline, as it did about assault rifles, we will have a clear case of discrimination against certain inanimate objects. Perhaps, of course, Congress is afraid of the powerful lighter and jug lobby.

Hopefully, Time magazine will devote a special issue to victims of lighters and jugs. We ought to be able to read the life histories of each of the 87 victims, followed by the admonition they were victimized by the assault lighter and assault jug.

For sure, Sen. Howard Metzenbaum, the Ohio gun-grabber, will want to ban these dangerous objects or, at the very least, require a seven day-waiting period before anyone can purchase a jug of gasoline. After all, gasoline vapor will not only burn, it will explode and it's toxic to boot.

Never mind the inconvenience to the millions of Americans who buy small containers of gasoline for their lawn mowers. After all, the object is to stamp out crime by punishing inanimate objects. Metzenbaum might even sneeringly suggest that really decent Americans would turn in their gasoline-powered motors for electric or push models.

After all, any law-abiding citizen who really wants to buy a jug of gasoline surely wouldn't mind waiting seven days and being subjected to a police background check. And certainly police officers these days have so much idle time on their hands, they wouldn't mind the additional task.

If politicians and many journalists are going to act nutty and hysterical every time a firearm is misused, then common fairness demand that they act equally nutty and hysterical when other inanimate objects are misused.

Otherwise, an ordinary American might assume they have some secret agenda — like being elitists who want to disarm the common folk, especially blacks and Hispanics, or worse, latent totalitarians who, as James Madison once said of European governments, "...are afraid to trust the people with arms."

It is strange indeed to suppose that people can be trusted with self-government but not with firearms. Or to say that a government of the people, by the people and for the people is afraid of the people. If you can't trust a man with a gun, why trust him with a vote or a free press?

And the answer is that people who don't trust the man with a gun, really don't trust the people to use their other freedoms either. They just are more circumspect in attacking those freedoms, lest their victims become alerted and try to defend themselves. The sequence in destroying freedom is always get the guns first.

So wait and see if a huge political-media campaign is mounted against the assault lighter and the assault jug.

If it is not, you are warned as to the true motives of those who want to ban guns. Freedom on the screen of history is a mere blip, and there is no guarantee whatsoever Americans will remain free if they are too sleepy or too timid to protec it.

All people have right to recovery

Alcohol and drug recovery programs teach you that you can put your past behind you. That to live a healthy life you must not dwell on the past or problems that were created by a chemical dependency.

As a recovering alcoholic Ann Richards expected the barrage of questions about illegal drug use. She realized that her response would never satisfy reporters, political analysts and some of her supporters. How is she supposed to answer these personal inquiries: do you say nothing, or do you answer two questions and not the third? She has assured the media that she hasn't had a mood-altering chemical in ten years and has agreed publicly to engage in drug testing. But, the questions never stop.

By continuing to raise this issue we are sending a sad message to many people who see that if they seek treatment, they will always carry the stigma of their addiction. Belaboring the point with someone as successful as Richards sends the wrong message to addicts everywhere. Ann deliberately refuses to set a double standard in treatment acceptability. She is not going to say "I'm OK because my dependency was on alcohol." That says the wrong thing to drug addicts. That Richards is a public figure, a person asking Texans to elect her governor doesn't change the principle that everyone has the right to recovery. Chemically dependent people fear they will never be accepted again — the attacks on Ann Richards reinforce that notion.

Maddox professes to understand the complexities of alcohol and drug treatment and claims to have empathy for chemically dependent people who are seeking to improve their lives. If this is true, his continued attacks on Ann can only be viewed as a ploy to avoid his stand on pertinent issues that need to be addressed in the gubernatorial race. It is obvious that Ann Richards has not taken an easy road politically. But, there is a point at which you have to put principle above politics.

Cities benefit by working together

Within the last few days, visitors from Austin came to the Permian Basin, gubernatorial candidate Ann Richards and Dr. Hans Mark, Chancellor of the University System. Both made important comments on a matter critical to the ongoing development of the Permian Basin. This was in regard to the importance of upgrading the UTPB to a four-year school. However, both visitors pointed out the importance of presenting a "united front" to the state legislature if we want four-year status for the University of Texas of the Permian Basin. It was conveyed to Dr. Mark that the UTPB Center for Energy and Economic Diversification, which is under construction on Scharbauer Ranch land, is a joint effort of the people of the Permian Basin. No reference was made as to how this was achieved, i.e., which sources, Midland or Odessa, contributed what amount. The center is under construction because of a "united front" with both cities working together on the project without any obstructions being interjected into this joint effort by Gary Watkins. Great things can be accomplished by working together when neither side is looking for reasons for not doing anything constructive because a project may benefit both cities.

The State Education Committee and civic leaders from Midland and Odessa have attempted to convey this to Gary Watkins, who refuses to look at the benefit that could be achieved by working together. I believe that Watkins does not know the meaning of compromise, i.e., Webster... "a settlement of differences in which each side makes concessions, working together." I fault the stance that Watkins takes in his so-called compromise, such as his attitude that you must do it my way or you will not do it at all. This must be explained by the people of Odessa to Gary Watkins in order to present a "united front" to the legislature. Watkins' plan is his attempt to force the people of Midland to convert a vacant building to classrooms instead of building a useable structure on the campus of Midland College. Many unforeseen problems are encountered when one attempts to short-cut a well-conceived plan that will benefit both communities. Watkins is the stumbling block in presenting this united front for UTPB and obtaining the support of both cities. Everyone can see this except Watkins. He marches to a different drummer, "everybody is out of step except me." He needs to work for the progress of the entire area.

Readers' views on: Williams' remark

Williams didn't mean offense

Regarding Clayton Williams' remark concerning rape versus inclement weather:

1. This is a colorful guy with a real Texas flavor in everything he says. Texans have a lot of colorful and off-color expressions to be found nowhere else. Anyone who has lived here more than a week knows no offense is meant; therefore none should be taken.

2. Everyone on earth has, at one time or another, abruptly blurted out some inappropriate remark which, upon further reflection, would never have been uttered; we all make mistakes. Williams did not make a serious mistake and he did apologize. Let's keep things in perspective here. I think politicians who call for a state income tax or a lottery are saying things that are really offensive.

3. Ann Richards and Jim Mattox are obviously jealous of Clayton Williams' style and success, and are justifiably worried Williams will be overwhelmingly elected Texas' next governor. Richards and Mattox are stirring up a tempest in a teapot over his remark because it appears they have no more effective weapons in their political arsenals with which to fend off the inevitable Williams victory.

Richards and Mattox sound to me like petty, nitpicking, sniveling losers. Williams sounds and acts like a winner — just what Texas needs in Austin.

It's time to give Williams a break

He is a product of the 50's "Good Ole Boy Syndrome. Clayton Williams is a grinning Joe College who captivates people with down home, provencial one-liners and stories that have, until now, come across as good, clean fun. Every born and bred male Texan over 40 seems to have the same innate urge to be charming (meaning humorous?). In his attempt he repeated a tired, old remark that coincidentally puts down women. His Big Mistake!

Heavy stones are being cast by women around the nation. But in the most extreme libber's heart she knows Williams is not mean-spirited enough to be taken in any literal sense. Women's rights advocates are focusing their anger on a new whipping boy. Let them vent some anger on the porn kings or fathers skipping out on child support, and show some tolerance to a moral man who has profusely apologized.

The Republican candidate was a gentleman when he suggested everyone ease up on Richards about past drug usage. It's time to give him a break and let him be entitled to a few human frailties.

New Democracy party leads in Greek election

ATHENS, Greece (AP) — The conservative New Democracy party Sunday won the most seats in Greek's third parliamentary election in 10 months and appeared close to the outright majority needed to break the country's political deadlock, according to partial results.

National elections last June and in November denied any party the parliamentary majority needed to govern the country, and opinion polls had indicated Sunday's balloting could also be inconclusive.

However, caretaker Interior Minister Theodore Katrivanos told reporters early Monday that New Democracy was close to an outright majority in the 300-member single-house Parliament.

"New Democracy has 150 seats with the possibility of gaining more," said Katrivanos.

Two major independent Athens television stations set off an orgy of horn honking and wild celebrations in the streets of the capital early Monday when they declared New Democracy the winner.

Katrivanos said his projections were based on returns from 10,457 of 16,584 polling stations that showed New Democracy with 47.8 percent of the vote, the Panhellenic Socialist Movement (PASOK) with 38.1 percent, the Communist-led alliance of leftist parties with 9.7 percent and small parties and independents with 4.4 percent.

The Best Tires In The World Have Goodyear Written All Over Them

AKRON, Ohio – Quality is a word that is too often overused, but quality, at The Goodyear Tire & Rubber Company however, is more than a word; quality is a rallying cry, a necessity, a requirement that every tire produced by this world giant has to meet.

Quality is the cornerstone of Goodyear – the largest tire company that is American-owned. Quality at Goodyear begins at the Technical Center in Akron, Ohio, home of Goodyear's impressive World Headquarters. The "Tech" Center is the tire industry's largest research and development operation in the world. It is also where the all-season tire was introduced to the world, and where the first radial was developed for America. Goodyear Technical Center engineers are proud of their development of the Goodyear Eagle line of high performance tires. These tires have created a string of victories in national and international racing, untouched in recent years by any other competitor in the world. The knowledge learned from these wins has been translated into the development of a complete family of Goodyear Eagle passenger tires, part of the full line of Goodyear passenger and light truck tires, largest in the world.

Goodyear Quality. You'll find it in the tires produced by Goodyear, and in everyone who works for Goodyear, including your neighbors at your nearby Goodyear Auto Service Center or independent Goodyear dealer.

DENTAL IMPLANTS
FOR BETTER LIVING!

When natural teeth are lost, the bone structure designed to support your teeth starts to shrink. This is due to lack of use and pressure from the overlying denture. It is now possible to replace teeth with strong, durable titanium or surgical stainless implants, which support natural looking teeth. These implants also return function to the bone; help retain bone density; and help prevent the premature loss of remaining teeth. The result is improved oral health, and improved chewing. Proper chewing is the first stage in digestion.

You can be freed from the pain and aggravation often caused by partial and full dentures or from missing teeth. Many are able to eat corn-on-the-cob, nuts and apples again–and even smile at the world with more confidence!

Why should you consider dental implants? To feel better. To eat what you want. To enjoy life...with a wide, happy smile!

We use a variety of implant types and are not restricted to the limitations of just one type of implant system. Therefore, if you have been told your bone is inadequate to support an implant, please call us for a second opinion.

FERRY DISASTERS:

Burmese boat sank during gale winds

RANGOON, Burma (AP) — One of only 25 survivors rescued from a ferry that sank with about 240 people aboard said the boat went down minutes after being hit by gale-force winds, an official newspaper reported Sunday.

At least 30 people drowned and as many as 180 others were missing and feared dead after the double-decker ferry Sein San Pya overturned Friday afternoon in the southern Gyaing River, official radio reports said.

The latest radio report said 25 people had been rescued.

The government-owned Working People's Daily quoted survivor Aung Mya Tint, a police inspector, as saying the vessel went down minutes after being struck by strong wind.

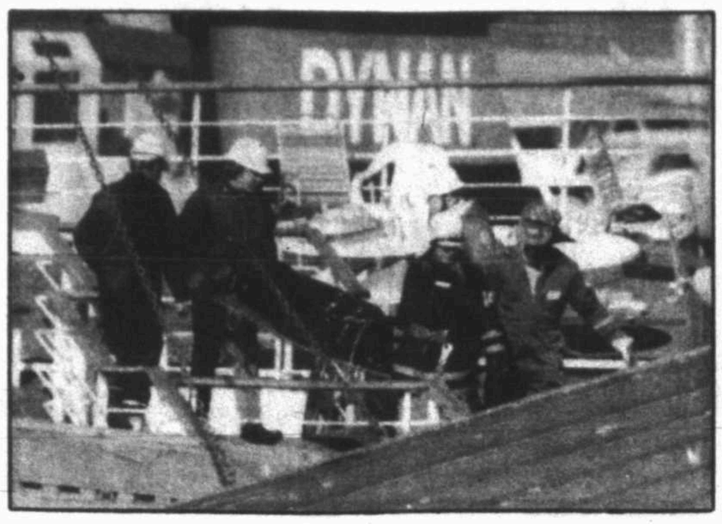

The newspaper said the accident was due to natural forces rather than overloading. There are frequent ferry boat accidents in Burma due to overloading of passengers and cargo.

The newspaper said the vessel could carry 280 passengers and up to 40 tons of cargo, noting the ferry that sank carried about 240 passengers and 19 tons of cargo.

The ferry was making a regular run on the Gyaing River from the town of Moulmein eastward to the town of Kyondo in the southern province of Tenasserim, Radio Rangoon said. Moulmein is 100 miles southeast of Rangoon.

In May 1987, a old vessel with 400 people aboard overturned and sank in the Rangoon River. Reports at the time said 283 passengers were rescued but no official death toll was given.

American musician believed killed on North Sea vessel

LYSEKIL, Sweden (AP) — Exhausted firefighters braved metal-melting heat and poisonous smoke from a two-day-old fire Sunday to begin removing bodies of about 150 victims from the Scandinavian Star ferry.

Firemen struggled to reach cabins where victims burned to death or suffocated in the suspicious blaze. It began before dawn Saturday while the ship was in the North Sea carrying about 500 tourists and crewmembers on an overnight trip from Norway to Demark.

In Oslo, police said six Americans of a seven-member entertainment troupe performing on the Scandanavian Star were were among the rescued. A seventh member, Ruth Rome, 27, of East Lansing, Mich., was missing and presumed dead, said Rick Qualls, another member of the group, from his Oslo hotel room.

The heat was so intense Sunday that it melted aluminum aboard the bridge of the Danish-owned ship. Firefighters in masks and breathing equipment fought through one corridor "until their gear started to burn," said fire consultant Olle Wennstrom. One firefighter was slightly injured, he said.

Firemen were seen leaving the ship in tears during the night. Each firefighting team underwent psychological care after being relieved.

The fire spread early Sunday from the gutted middle section to the captain's bridge a few hours after the blackened ship was towed into port. The blaze, which finally was extinguished late Sunday, sent plumes of smoke over Lysekil, on Sweden's southwest coast 250 miles southwest of Stockholm, the capital on the east coast.

Tugboats doused the ship with water. Holes were blasted into the side of the 10,500-ton ship to allow the water to drain out, for fear that the badly listing ship would topple onto the concrete dock.

Officials with VR-DANO Line, the company in Copenhagen that owns and operates the Bahamian-flagged ship, say the blaze was caused by arson, citing two fires that broke out at a short interval on two different decks.

Sale of supercomputer to India pending

WASHINGTON (AP) — After months of delay, the United States has decided in principle to sell a supercomputer to India, sources say, despite warnings that it could be used to make nuclear weapons or ballistic missiles.

But granting an export license for the sophisticated Cray computer depends on India's willingness to adopt measures restricting its use to peaceful research and preventing the transfer of its data to unauthorized parties.

The sources, discussing the prospective deal on condition of anonymity, said Indian was balking at the conditions, noting that a supercomputer bought in 1987 was being used only to forecast monsoons.

Indian officials also are pointing out that the country signed a 1984 agreement promising not to transfer high-tech equipment to other nations, the sources added.

The decision to approve the sale in principle reflects the U.S. government's ambivalence about exporting state-of-the-art computers to countries with nuclear capabilities.

Decisions about the sale of similar computers to Israel and Brazil have been stalled for as long as two years, with the Department of Energy and the Arms Control and Disarmament Agency lobbying against the deals, said one source.

Cowboy HALL of fame

BELOW: A youthful cowboy looks at the Larry Mahan display in the portion of the Hall dedicated to rodeo cowboys. Mahan was "World's Grand Champion Cowboy" three times.

OKLAHOMA CITY — Atop Persimmon Hill, Buffalo Bill Cody hoists high his rifle and surveys the rolling prairie of his domain, recalling the glory of an earlier day when gritty-faced cowboys pushed herds of bawling long-horned, cattle across these plains on the way to the Kansas City stockyards.

They were days bathed in the romanticism of the "new" West, when the cowboy was king, the Indian an ever-present danger and the land, in all its rugged beauty, streched on in seemingly endless abundance.

This was the day of the frontiersman, the cowboy who drove herds of cattle to unspoiled stretches of rangeland, in search of a better life. But the idyllic setting was not to last and by the end of the 19th century, it was clear that the life the cowboy had known and lived was doomed, to be replaced, in large measure, during the early 20th century by an image on the silver screen.

He was the "Hollywood cowboy," the essence of the brave and proud character who blazed trails to settle the West. The values he possessed molded the society in the region and endeared this persona to Americans in all parts of the nation and others around the world.

The cowboy was captured for all time by the actors who immortalized frontier values on the screen and the writers whose works detailed the life of these modern day horsemen.

Today, a 33-foot statue of Cody, mounted on his horse, Brigham,, welcomes visitors to the monument to the cowboy — the National Cowboy Hall of Fame and Western Heritage Center in this Oklahoma capital city.

Cody's selection was not irrelevant. The Iowa native who became a rugged frontiersman, buffalo hunter, Indian scout and "Wild West" showman, was the first honoree in the Hall of Fame and "represents the West in all its heroic glory and legend," exclaims the plaque on the base of the statue.

He's not alone today, however. Numerous writers, rodeo performers, movie stars, cattlemen and others are memorialized in the Hall of Fame, including 14 Texans.

In fact, on March 17th two Texans were inducted into the Hall of Great Westerners — J. Evetts Haley of Midland, noted rancher, historian and author, and Watt Matthews of Albany, whose Lambshead Ranch is a model operation. Both men have been active in preserving Western heritage in different ways.

Haley's historical works — including "Charles Goodnight: Cowman & Plainsman," "Jeff Milton: A Good Man with a Gun," "George W. Littlefield: Texan," and some 20 others — were instrumental to his selection for the Hall as were his lifetime ranching interests.

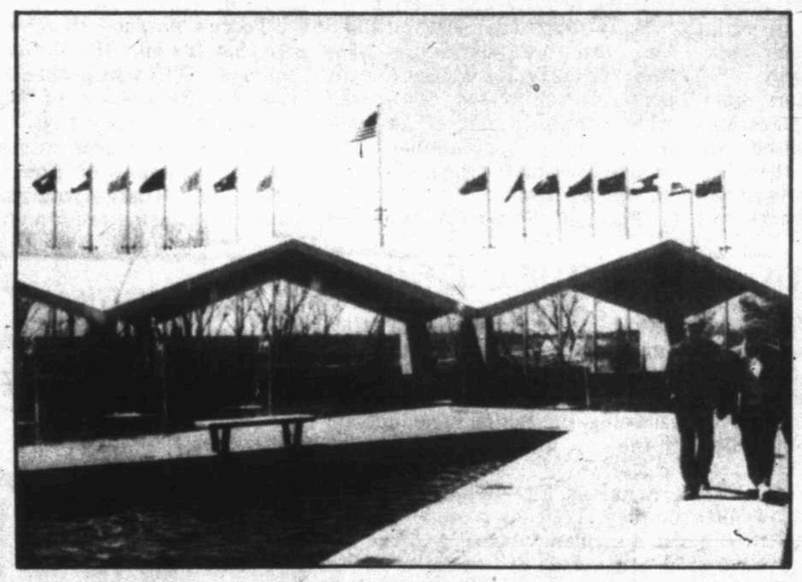

Typically modest, although one of only 14 Texas residents ever inducted into the Cowboy Hall of Fame, Haley called the March 17th event "a very satisfying experience. I was very grateful and humbled."

He went on to praise the Hall for the strides it has made in the collection of Western works of art over the years and added, "We appreciate being a part of it."

The other 12 Texans previously honored include Sallie R. Matthews, mother of the Albany rancher; Gene Autry, Western singer and movie star; H. Ross Perot, Dallas businessman; Sam Houston, early-day Texas governor and president of the Republic of Texas; Stephen F. Austin, who brought colonies to Texas while it was still controlled by the government of Mexico in the 1800's; and traildrivers and ranchers Oliver Loving and Charles Goodnight.

Also recognized in the hall are Samuel Burk Burnett, Capt. John T. Lytle, Charles Schreiner, Capt. Richard King, and Daniel Waggoner, all of Texas.

COWBOY: Hall home to West's best

(From 1B)

Calling Haley an ideal candidate for the Hall of Great Westerners, Cowboy Hall of Fame executive director B. Byron Price noted, "This is the Hall's highest honor in recognition of a lifetime of achievement in preserving and reflecting the best western traditions."

And it is those traditions that the Hall attempts to reflect and preserve. While numerous Western paintings and sculptures are on display — by such noteworthy artists as Fredrick Remington, Leonard McMurry and Louis B. Kerchner — a separate building is devoted almost entirely to one statue by James Earle Fraser.

It depicts an Indian riding a horse in a pose that illustrates the ultimate defeat of the Indians by the white man. The work was done in 1915 by Fraser, the artist who also designed the Indian head nickel.

Separate sections in the Hall of Fame also are devoted to rodeo performers and movie stars, including three-time grand champion cowboy Larry Mahan and Hollywood performers Jimmy Stewart, Barbara Stanwick, Rex Allen, Smiley Burnette, Robert Taylor, Walter Brennan, Glenn Ford, Dennis Weaver, Autry, and, of course, four performers from the television western, "Gunsmoke" — James Arness, Amanda Blake, Milburn Stone, and Ken Curtis.

The four were the leading characters on the television series that ran for more than two decades — Matt Dillon, Miss Kitty, Doc and Festus. They became a mainstay of the television "diet" for many Americans more than two decades ago, and further enhanced the love affair of the American public with the cowboy and the West.

Yet, clearly the most popular of the Hall of Fame's attractions was a room containing memorabilia from actor John Wayne's movie career. The articles include his saddle, the Winchester rifle he used in all his Western movies and his private collection of books on Western heritage.

One of those books was "Charles Goodnight: Cowman & Plainsman" by J. Evetts Haley, now one of those who like "the Duke" is honored in the Hall of Fame.

The Hall, the dream of the late Chester A. Reynolds of Kansas City who envisioned it as a monument to the men and women who pioneered the West, opened on June 26, 1965, and was proclaimed a National Memorial by an act of Congress in 1957.

Sitting on a 37-acre site at Persimmon Hill, a high point in Oklahoma City, the Hall of Fame overlooks a segment of the famous old Chisholm Trail over which thousands of cattle were driven to stockyards.

The building design was chosen from a national architectural competition and suggests a pioneer's tent or circle of wagons around a campfire. Beautiful landscaping, fountains and pools lend to the enjoyment for visitors and stress the importance of water to the pioneers.

Although the West of yesteryear is no longer, it spawned a heritage that lives on today in the work of great westerners — the cattlemen, writers, artists, and others who hold high the values of the cowboy, memorialized on the top of Persimmon Hill.

Fundamentals of 'energy engineering' learned early on, Dallas author believes

By Bob Porter

DALLAS (AP) — Do you arrive home from work too pooped to think of anything but turning yourself into a couch potato?

"One of the myths about energy is that many people think that when they wake up in the morning they start with a full tank of energy and by the end of the work day the tank is getting low. That's not true," says Ann McGee-Cooper.

The truth, in Ms. McGee-Cooper's view, is that most people simply don't make efficient use of an easily renewable resource. It is also a resource, she believes, that the children among us instinctively manage more wisely than adults. Geniuses excepted.

Ms. McGee-Cooper, a Dallas-based writer, lecturer and teacher in the realm of creativity and personal energy development, is the author — with colleagues Duane Trammell and Barbara Lau — of a new book, "You Don't Have To Go Home From Work Exhausted!: The Energy Engineering Approach." The book, her third, is a tip-filled energy-recovery guidebook designed to help busy readers maximize and draw upon energy resources they may not realize they possess.

The seeds for "Energy Engineering," the 54-year-old author recalls, go back to her childhood when she began to observe the energy patterns taking place in her home. Her father, a businessman, arrived home each day exhausted, dropping into a chair by the radio and going to sleep while her mother remained full of energy.

It was years later before other key elements fell into place and Ms. McGee-Cooper finalized her "energy engineering" theories. One of those occurred at Southern Methodist University, where she taught and established an experimental arts program.

"One day, when we had been working very hard all day long, I thought to myself that I should be exhausted, but I wasn't," she explains.

"That was a breakthrough for me. It made me realize there must be a relationship there (between creative activity and energy)."

Many adults have lost the child-like capacity to have fun at what they are doing, Ms. McGee-Cooper points out, in many cases even when they are engaged in what they consider a recreational activity, like heading for the golf course on the weekend.

"Play golf to have fun, not to get too involved in why you didn't do better," she advises. "Too many people attack golf like it was a problem at the office. You should be there to enjoy yourself."

When it comes to arriving at a pattern for renewing one's energy, however, it varies from individual to individual. It is not simply a matter of having fun in a game of golf.

"There's no such thing as one size that fits all," Ms. McGee-Cooper says. "Different people should approach the problem (of flagging energy) in different ways."

Her book contains numerous tips and strategies on how to, in effect, quick-charge your energy bank by releasing tension and fatigue, even by something as simple as standing up and stretching at your desk, or taking a few minutes' break to read the comic pages.

It also delves into such subjects as the relationship between the left and right sides of the brain, and the personality characteristics associated with each of those hemispheres, with suggestions on how to integrate the two for maximum benefit.

"We are such a left-brain society," Ms. McGee-Cooper laments, referring to the emphasis placed in most businesses on a logical, structured, organized mode of operation. Right-brain people display creativity, flexibility and enjoy taking on new challenges.

Houston lawmakers say HISD needs to be divided

HOUSTON (AP) — A diverse coalition of Houston legislators has outlined two different plans to revamp the Houston Independent School District, which some leaders believe has grown out of touch with parents and taxpayers.

One proposal involves dividing HISD into smaller, more manageable districts. The other idea includes the creation of parent councils with extensive policy-making powers.

"The bottom line is, the system is broken," said Rep. Ron Wilson, a Houston Democrat.

"We can't accept the way it is," said Rep. Roman Martinez, also a Houston Democrat.

"We just feel like it's time to make a change," said Republican Rep. Brad Wright.

The legislators see HISD as a huge, unwieldly district that cannot be managed effectively by one person. They say the system, the fifth largest in the nation, has grown out of touch with parents and taxpayers. This year, HISD has 233 schools and 191,000 students, mostly minority and poor.

Martinez even goes so far as to blame Superintendent Joan Raymond for an authoritarian management style that stifles true decentralization, which means shifting power to the schools, the teachers and the parents.

"In my work with HISD, they thrive on closeness," Martinez said. "It's to the point of intimidation, where Joan Raymond puts out the word and it scares everybody into not wanting to do anything because they are worried about her coming down and buckling down."

Ms. Raymond said she invites the legislators to sit down with her and discuss their concerns, which she believes are perceptions not based on reality.

In her 3½ years in the district, she said, she has been transferring more and more power to school principals and to district superintendents who oversee 14 geographical areas in the 312-square-mile system.

The criticism that the school district is closed and uncaring comes as nothing new to HISD trustees.

"We clearly hear that message, and you have people on the board who are dedicated to addressing it," said new trustee Rod Paige.

Paige heads the task force that has begun work to restructure HISD to make it more accountable and open. Ms. Raymond said she heartily supports the move.

Rep. Paul Colbert, vice chairman of the House Public Education Committee, said he sympathizes with his colleagues' frustrations but doesn't think the issues they raise are matters to be handled legislatively.

Colbert, D-Houston, said he does not believe breaking up the district will solve the problem since the resulting smaller districts would still be relatively large.

He also said a mandate to form parent councils could create the same problems for HISD that exist in Chicago, where many of the councils have turned into "little political fiefdoms."

Man at dumpster piques police

ARLINGTON, Texas (AP) — Police searching for a suspect in a series of overnight fires Sunday arrested a man they saw with his head in a trash bin where a fire broke out moments later.

The man, identified only as a 26-year-old from Arlington, was jailed on a charge of public intoxication, but was being questioned in connection with more than a dozen other fires in the city, including those in five post offices, between 3:30 a.m. and 6 a.m.

Lt. Gary Pipes, spokesman for the Arlington Fire Department, said postal officials wanted to question the man about his possible involvement not only in Sunday's fires but in a similar outbreak of fires last Dec. 17.

"The case matches a string of fires at Arlington post offices last year," Pipes said. "The method of setting the fires was somewhat dissimilar, but the fact that they were the same post offices leads us to believe that this could be a solid suspect in the case."

No major damage was reported in any of Sunday's fires, Pipes said.

"There was very minor damage to the trash cans or the mail chute. There were some burned areas of rug at the Ramada Inn. The most extensive damage was to a truck in front of a restaurant."

Leading Hispanic educator urges institutional turnabout

DALLAS (AP) — One of the nation's leading Hispanic educators has called on educators to lead the fight against institutionalized racism, saying dramatic changes must occur in the educational work force.

"We now live in the most demographically diverse nation in the world. Yet, by and large, we (minorities) are perceived as uni-dimensional and are regarded accordingly," said Arturo Madrid.

The president of the Tomas Rivera Center, a California think tank in Claremont, Madrid's comments were made over the weekend to about 200 educators attending the National Education Association conference in Dallas.

'In the teaching profession, there is no incentive, there are no rewards for growing and developing.'

— Arturo Madrid, President, Tomas Rivera Center

While de facto segregation is not as prevalent as in the past, Madrid said female and minority educators still are viewed as "spare plants whose roots do not grow deep."

Madrid also called for greater freedom for teachers to design their own educational policies.

"In the teaching profession, there is no incentive, there are no rewards for growing and developing," he said. "There are rewards for meeting some requirements ... but not for being different or innovative or experimental."

Wichita Falls daily still looking for endorsee

WICHITA FALLS, Texas (AP) — Editors of the Wichita Falls Times Record News refused to endorse Jim Mattox or Ann Richards in the Democratic runoff, calling instead for Texans to write in former San Antonio mayor Henry Cisneros for governor.

The newspaper in Sunday's editorial also rejected GOP gubernatorial nominee Clayton Williams, saying Texas has had enough "government-by-buffoons."

"Cisneros built bridges in San Antonio, bridges between peoples," the newspaper said.

"If Henry Cisneros could apply his visionary thinking to the problems confronting Texas along with a spirit of unity rather than ... the two warring political parties, then we would all be better served," the paper said.

"Write in Cisneros. Then watch Texas go."

Cisneros' wife, Mary Alice, told of the endorsement, said, "Wow." She added the former mayor was in El Paso on Sunday, campaigning for Ms. Richards for the entire day.

The first Hispanic mayor of San Antonio, Cisneros served from 1981 to 1989. He decided not to run again in 1988, citing personal problems.

McCartney gig 'bittersweet'

DALLAS (AP) — A sellout crowd of 56,000 turned out to hear ex-Beatle Paul McCartney reprise some of his greatest hits from the Beatles era and post-breakup.

Judging by the fans' reaction, the Beatles tunes were the biggest hits of the concert at Texas Stadium Saturday night. Most seemed to agree that they liked McCartney's solo work, but what made the concert truly fab was the rare opportunity to hear a former Beatle performing Beatle songs live.

"I'm here for the history of the music," said 55-year-old Harry Gaffney of Dallas.

"Coming to this concert is bittersweet for a lot of us in our 40s," said Blair Cunyngham, who flew in from Edmond, Okla. "We were all teenagers when the Beatles first came out."

Beatles' mania extended to those who weren't even around in the Beatles heyday.

Twelve-year-old Andy Hale and his younger brother Tray said their favorite song is "Yellow Submarine." They said they learned about the Beatles from their father.

Hunt gets stuck with stingy 'rig'

DALLAS (AP) — Never let it be said members of Texas' Hunt family don't pay attention to detail — especially when it concerns the appearance of wealth.

At least Margaret Hunt Hill was quick to make an adjustment to a rich-tasting dessert in a recent tasting session at the Lowes Anatole hotel in Dallas.

She and sister Caroline Rose Hunt were checking out a pink mousse shaped like Texas and a white chocolate oil derrick, and catering director Nick Lim explained that brown chocolate sauce under the derrick was supposed to represent oil spouting from the rig.

According to the Dallas Times Herald, Ms. Hill quickly replied: "It's a small pool of oil, don't you think? I'd like a little more oil down there."

Liquid diet most often leads to disappointment

N.Y. Times News Service

NEW YORK — Joy Segal's desk on the second floor of Zabar's was a fortress of envelopes full of chocolate-flavored formula diet powder.

The aroma of bread and pastries rose from the store below, but Mrs. Segal was immune to its temptation.

"I've lost 135 pounds," said Mrs. Segal, 39, the assistant controller of the Manhattan food store. "I haven't weighed this little since fourth grade."

She has been on her liquid formula diet since May 11, 1989, and now, 20 pounds past her goal, she can chase her two children and she can fasten an airliner's seat belt.

But she is terrified to eat solid food again. "I could be like a junkie and not stop," she said.

Mrs. Segal is not alone.

It has been 16 months since Oprah Winfrey rapidly dropped 67 pounds on a liquid formula diet and contributed to a nationwide renaissance of the weight-loss method.

And nearly a million Americans are trying to establish normal eating habits after the fast, health professionals estimate.

(Ms. Winfrey has regained 17 pounds, but refuses to comment on the aftereffects of the diet.)

Some people, such as Mrs. Segal, develop a fear of food and become dependent on formula diets.

OTHERS BINGE and suffer humiliating weight gains.

A five-year study by Dr. Thomas Wadden at the University of Pennsylvania showed 98 percent of all dieters regain their weight within five years.

The liquid diet industry, the medical profession, entrepreneurs, major pharmaceutical companies and individual dieters are all hungry for a sliver of success.

But interviews over two months with 31 patients after fasting and recent medical studies suggest the nature of the formula diets could lead to psychological and physiological burdens that limit the diets' long-term effectiveness.

"Last year, everybody knew somebody who'd lost 100 pounds on a fast," says Barry Adler, president of Diet Fast, a formula diet program. "Now everybody knows somebody who lost 100 pounds and gained back 120."

Across the country, dozens of obesity specialists have noticed an increase in patients on the fast-and-binge roller coaster over the past three years.

Recently, at a conference of the American Federation of the American Societies for Experimental Biology in Washington, Dr. Adam Drenowski, director of human nutrition at the University of Michigan, is to present findings that yo-yo dieting, cycles of rapid weight loss and gain frequently associated with liquid formula diets, creates a craving for calorie-dense mixtures of sugar and fat.

Dr. Theodore VanItallie, a consultant to the United Weight Control Corp., a formula weight-loss program based in Englewood Cliffs, N.J., has concluded rapid weight loss can be sustained only by long-term psychological support and nutritional education.

HE HAS BEEN in the vanguard of obesity study for 27 years.

In the past 10 years, the medical profession lent credence to the liquid diets by developing safe liquid formulas and more effective monitoring of their physiological consequences.

But science has succeeded primarily in teaching people how to live without food.

Living with food, on the other hand, while maintaining weight loss requires a new psychology toward eating.

Acknowledging the potent psychological area between feast and famine, the premier liquid formula diets, like Optifast and United Weight Control Corp., are using behavior modification training.

"We have shifted from acute intervention to the long-term reality of keeping the weight off," said Jim Parsons, a vice president of Optifast Programs, "but if there are 100 chapters in the maintenance program to be written, we're only on Chapter One."

In an effort to treat the morbidly obese, those with at least 100 pounds or even half their body weight to lose, Dr. Saul Genuth and Dr. Victor Vertes developed the 320-calorie milkshake-like formula derived from milk and egg protein that eventually became Optifast.

A spate of copycat formulas followed, some made from inferior protein with limited nutritional value.

BILL GREGG, a spokesman for the Food and Drug Administration, noted that in 1978, the Public Health Service attributed 17 deaths to an over-the-counter liquid protein powder and the FDA issued a warning about such products.

It still recommends a doctor's supervision for any severely restricted weight-loss diet, he said.

But for patients with weight-related, life-threatening medical conditions the low-calorie formulas provided the quickest way to lose weight.

They contain more protein, fiber and calories than earlier formulas and trace elements that had been inadequate in earlier formulas.

Still, the formulas, which range from 400 to 800 calories a day, severely restrict caloric intake and cause rapid slimming that can lead to physiological changes like loss of body protein and fluids, losses that can affect the liver and heart.

In the early 1980s, medical professionals developed monitoring programs for these potential side effects, and the programs became lucrative.

A week's supply of formula diet typically costs $15 to make and is sold to patients for $35 to $50. In addition, medical supervision can amount to about $80 a week per patient.

Weight loss became a tidy source of profit for some hospitals and private physicians, but there is a limited market of "morbidly obese" Americans: five million.

But 65 million Americans are slightly overweight.

"The money isn't in people who are medically at risk," says Dr. Marvin W. Leifer, of St. Vincent's Hospital in Westchester.

AIMING AT that audience, the formula diet industry maintained an air of medical legitimacy, but the air got thinner as popular demand soared.

Actual medical monitoring gave way to an image of supervision by a doctor; in weight loss clinics, some salespeople even donned doctor's white jackets.

Entrepreneurs such as Adler of Diet-Fast began producing diet formulas and private doctors' offices.

"After Oprah, it was like the hula-hoop craze," said Adler. Liquid formula diets, from a trickle, became a mass market tidal wave.

The day Ms. Winfrey broadcast her success with Optifast, the formula diet company says, it received one million telephone calls.

By 1988, according to Marketdata Enterprises, a research group in Lynbrook, N.Y., diet clinics were a $10-billion-a-year industry and hospital-sponsored programs generated $5.5 billion more.

Liquid formula diets are now the fastest-growing segment of the country's weight-loss industry, MarketData has reported.

In the House of Representatives, the Small Business Subcommittee on Regulation, Business Opportunities and Energy plans major hearings over the next six months.

"We are very concerned about the false promises, lack of efficacy, high-cost and astounding failure rate of liquid diets," said Rep. Ron Wyden, D-Oregon, subcommittee chairman.

FORMULA DIET advertising typically invokes "clinical studies" and offers happy statistics.

To date, none are based on long-term, independent studies.

"In no other field of medicine can people who know so little claim to do so much," said VanItallie.

"A drug addict stands a better chance of recovery than a dieter," says Dr. Phillip M. Sinaikin, director of the adult substance abuse treatment program at Fair Oaks Hospital in Summit, N.J.

In his book "After The Fast," published by Doubleday in February, Sinaikin outlines a nine-week plan for steady rapid weight loss.

He advocates nutritional education, behavior modification and exercise.

Many obesity experts say such a coolly measured prescription is doomed.

"If these patients were capable of being rational about food, they wouldn't have the problem in the first place," said Dr. Stephen Gullo, a Manhattan obesity expert.

"Abstaining from food doesn't teach people how to live with food."

ABSTINENCE MAY even activate the physiological and psychological demons that haunt fasters like the shadows of their former selves.

Drenowski is to present evidence soon that repeated crash diets change food preferences.

Following up animal studies done at Yale, he found humans who dieted severely often developed cravings for fat and sugar.

Other experts in the field said they could not comment on Drenowski's paper before it is published.

Of 31 formula diet patients interviewed for this article over two months, 23 said their food preferences changed during the fast.

To many, the unfamiliar urges became uncontrollable and ultimately humiliating. Most of the dieters asked to remain anonymous.

Jay A., 44, a real estate developer in Los Angeles, has been nearly 200 pounds overweight most of his adult life.

In 1981 he undertook a medically monitored formula diet for 10 months and two days, and lost 194 pounds.

"I felt great, but I had these fantasies of eating steak," he said. "I'd never been much of a meat eater, but suddenly I had these non-stop steak fantasies."

He said he gained the weight back in 12 months, lost it again, then regained 220 pounds.

Mr. A. has an appointment to begin the liquid diet again.

After 11 months on a liquid formula diet, Mrs. Segal has similar urges at Zabar's.

On a recent Saturday, a delivery boy entered her office with his own lunch — a fried egg and bacon sandwich — and she ordered him out.

"I don't know what it is about that smell, but once it's in here all I can think of is that greasy sandwich," she said.

Spring a season of sneezes, wheezes

N.Y. Times News Service

Spring is here, the season of birds and bees, flowers and trees and wheeze and sneeze for millions of Americans with seasonal allergies.

When the runny nose and itchy eyes become sufficiently annoying, most will reach for one of the dozens of over-the-counter or prescription drugs that promise relief from allergy symptoms.

But which drug should you take or give to your allergic child? Some medications once available only by prescription are now sold over the counter.

The consumer, perhaps in consultation with a pharmacist but without the guidance of a physician, may now have to select an appropriate treatment and to learn how to use it properly.

To add to the confusion, the choices of treatments, both prescription and non-prescription therapies, have multiplied greatly in recent years.

Many of the newer medications are no more effective than the old standbys but are much less likely to produce unpleasant and possibly hazardous side effects.

But the new drugs are also a lot more expensive, especially for those whose symptoms begin with release of tree and grass pollen in March and don't end until the ragweed dies with the first fall frost.

■ ANTIHISTAMINES: OLD AND NEW — For most people with life-disrupting allergies, antihistamines have long offered relief.

Antihistamines are drugs that prevent allergy symptoms by blocking the action of histamine, the natural body substance released in response to substances that trigger an allergic reaction.

Histamine, in turn, musters the release of a cascade of irritating body chemicals that directly cause the symptoms of allergy.

Antihistamines have been around for a long time and drugs like Benadryl (diphenhydramine) and Chlor-Trimeton (chlorpheniramine maleate), which are sold over the counter, are all too familiar to middle-aged adults with allergies.

Though these drugs can be highly effective against allergic symptoms, they also have other actions that may result in a number of unwanted effects.

They can produce excessive dryness of the mouth and other mucus-secreting tissues and result in difficulty breathing and urinating.

But most important, the old antihistamines readily enter the brain, producing drowsiness in most people and excitation in some, especially small children.

Either way, the drugs can interfere with school performance. Reaction time, judgment and coordination may all be impaired, which can make it unsafe to operate a motor vehicle or other machinery.

Although all such medications warn of these risks on the package label, a 1989 Gallup poll revealed that 61 percent of people who take the drugs ignore the warning and drive while under the influence of the medication.

Studies have shown that impairment persists for several hours after taking the medication, but people are unaware that they are not functioning normally. Thus, sedating antihistamines are best taken only at bedtime.

The new generation of antihistamines, led by Seldane (terfenadine), now the most frequently prescribed antihistamine, is free of brain effects because the drugs do not enter the brain. Competing with Seldane is Hismanal (astemizole), and several other related nonsedating antihistamines are in final stages of testing and may soon be marketed here.

According to Dr. Philip Norman, a leading allergist at The Johns Hopkins University School of Medicine, the new drugs are at least as effective in squelching allergy symptoms as the old ones, and the new drugs have an "excellent safety record."

Still, he said in an interview, "No antihistamine works for everyone. Different drugs are more or less effective in different people and they produce different side effects."

Thus, finding the right antihistamine for you may require some trial-and-error testing. And unless your drug prsecriptions are covered by insurance, you may have to consider economics in your choice, since all the nonsedating antihistamines are twice as expensive as the old ones.

Dr. Michael Sly, pediatric allergist at the Children's National Medical Center in Washington, D.C., noted too that the nonsedating antihistamines are effective and safe for use in children.

■ INTRANASAL MEDICATIONS — "Antihistamines are not the whole answer to seasonal allergies," Dr. Norman said. At least two types of medications that are administered through the nose have proved helpful and safe: steroids and cromolyn sodium.

Steroids can be applied into the nose through a freon-propelled aerosol or a pump-activated water-based spray.

When used locally, the drugs have few if any side effects and little risk of a steroid overdose, even when used steadily for weeks at a time.

However, the steroids slowly reduce swelling of tissues and it may take a day or two to experience the benefits of intranasal steroids.

Cromolyn sodium (marketed as Nasalcrom) also has a delayed effect because its action is preventive, not curative. It also has an excellent safety record, and can be used as often as five times a day without untoward effects. An inhaled form of cromolyn has revolutionized the treatment of asthma by blocking the effects of allergic triggers.

■ DECONGESTANTS — These are marketed separately (for example, Sudafed or pseudoephedrine) or in combination with antihistamines (Actifed, Sinutab, Drixoral, Dimetapp and Sudafed Plus, among others).

Dr. Douglas Johnstone, pediatric allergist at the University of Rochester School of Medicine and Dentistry, noted that some people experience a rebound reaction from too frequent use of decongestants, similar to the rebound experienced when ordinary nasal sprays are overused.

Rather than relieving upper respiratory congestion, overuse of the drug can make it worse and lead to dependence upon evermore frequent use of the medication.

The drugs can also raise blood pressure and are not recommended for people being treated for high blood pressure.

NON-DRUG REMEDIES — The ideal approach to allergies is to avoid the allergens, or substances to which you are allergic.

This can be quite a challenge for people with seasonal allergies to substances that blow around in the air. However, a few simple measures can help reduce symptoms and limit your dependence on medications.

■ Maintain a regular exercise program. Physical activity can reduce respiratory congestion.

■ Try to limit outdoor activities early in the day, when pollen and mold counts are highest. If you exercise outside, do it in the late afternoon or early evening.

■ On dry, windy days keep your time outdoors to a minimum.

■ Avoid irritants, like the chlorine in pools and chemical sprays, that can increase your sensitivity to inhaled allergens. When you swim in a chlorinated pool, wear leak-proof goggles, nose clips and ear plugs.

■ Use an air-conditioner indoors rather than opening the window.

■ Rinsing the nasal passages with ordinary salt water can be very soothing. You can buy commercial saline or make your own by mixing 1/4 teaspoon salt in one cup of warm water. Then squirt the solution into the nose with a syringe.

■ If, despite such measures, seasonal allergies seriously interfere with your life, look into the possibility of immunotherapy.

Consumers say pork not 'the other white meat'

WASHINGTON (AP) — In a town where the pork barrel is considered a treasured commodity, one consumer group says producers and advertisers of ham, bacon and sausage are going too far.

The Center for Science in the Public Interest said it wants the federal government to halt advertising by the National Pork Producers Council it says is "deceptive and dangerously misleading."

A petition will be filed with the Federal Trade Commission challenging various ad claims that pork is low in fat, low in cholesterol and low in calories. The center said the industry's 3-year-old campaign touting pork as "the other white meat" is misleading because it claims pork "is as nutritious as chicken, turkey and fish."

To that, Barry Pfouts, director of marketing for the council, replied: "We're confident that our advertising is accurate and can be backed up by substantial scientific evidence. All we have said all along is that our products ... are nutritionally comparable to other accepted white meats.".

Bruce Silverglade, legal director for the science center, said, "The pork industry is trying to dupe consumers into thinking that pork is as healthful as chicken, turkey and fish. However, government data show that almost all cuts of pork are considerably higher in fat, saturated fat and calories."

The amount of cholesterol in a four-ounce serving of cooked pork is virtually the same for similar servings of chicken and turkey, Charles Mitchell, a spokesman for the consumer group, said. But Mitchell said the amount and percentage of fat and the number of calories is substantially higher for pork.

He said four ounces of pork, trimmed of all visible fat, averaged 14.8 grams or 13 percent fat, while an identical serving of skinless chicken averages 8.4 grams or 7.4 percent fat. Turkey weighed in at 2.9 grams or 2.6 percent fat per serving, according to Mitchell. Similar servings of pork, chicken and turkey contain 264 calories, 215 calories and 171 calories, respectively, said Mitchell. The science center said the ads also violate Agriculture Department requirements that average servings of "low-fat" foods must be 10 percent or less fat to make the claim.

Pfouts, of the pork producers council, said the average three-ounce serving of tenderloin, the best cut of pork, has about the same 140 calories as a similar serving of skinless white-meat chicken.

And Mike Simpson, executive vice president of the National Pork Board, said nutritional assessments of pork are based on 10-year-old data that don't take into account recent research and improvements.

The consumer group said it also will ask Congress to pressure the industry to increase its spending on research to reduce fat in pork.

Money for the pork advertising comes primarily from the approximately $25 million collected annually from producers under the 1987 Pork Promotion and Research Act. The science center contended that 70 percent of the money is spent on advertising and other promotional activities, and just 10 percent is spent on research that could lead to "safe, low-fat and good-tasting products."

Simpson responded that in the early years of the program the council may have spent that much on promotion. But in the 1990 budget of $26 million, promotion takes up 55 percent, research is 19 percent and consumer information is 26 percent, he said.

DEAR ABBY

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: I can top both Danny and Patricia, the college dropouts who in their middle years went back to college, picked up where they left off and finally graduated:

Van Buren

At age 60, determined to graduate from college, I went to school evenings and during the summer. Shortly before my 65th birthday, I received my college degree and teaching credentials. (I had six grandchildren at the time. Now I have nine.)

I taught kindergarten until I was forced to retire because of age requirements. I immediately went to work as a medical insurance clerk. I will be 80 on my next birthday and I'm already looking for places to work as a volunteer when I retire.

Last fall I took a course in sign language at our local university because I would very much enjoy working with hearing-impaired persons.

Abby, please continue to encourage older people to keep on learning. It's never too late. — MARGARET M. HILL, VICTORIA, TEXAS

DEAR MARGARET: With your energy, ambition and charitable attitude, you will never be "over the hill." (Sorry, I couldn't resist it.) Congratulations, Margaret. Better to wear out than rust out.

DEAR ABBY: Although I missed the letter that inspired all the others concerning tall women and their attitude toward shorter men, I have read many letters since then and can't understand the animosity some tall women and short men feel toward each other.

I am an average-sized man and, at one time or another, I've been outrun, outlifted, outswum, outtalked and outsmarted by a member of the opposite sex. I'll admit that at the time, I was humiliated, but as I grew older and wiser, I became fascinated by what remarkable creatures women are, and I finally had to recognize that women should be treated as equals. I must admit that my relationships with women have vastly improved since I came to this realization.

I have always been physically attracted to women who were stronger, faster, smarter or taller than I. My most memorable sexual experience occurred after my wife beat me in a long-distance foot race! Please let exceptionally tall women know that there are small and average-height men who would be honored to be in their company. — 5 FOOT 9 IN N.Y.

DEAR 5-9: Thanks for the reaffirmation. I recently had a letter from a 5-foot-7 man who had a crush on a 5-foot-11 co-worker, but he was reluctant to ask her out because he felt sure she would turn him down. Well, she asked him out, and it was instant shooting stars, Roman candles and love in bloom!

DEAR ABBY: I am making a scrapbook for my son. I have a box full of newspaper clippings and pictures from his high school days.

He and his wife were divorced eight years ago, and I am wondering if it would be proper to include the clippings and pictures of his wedding, honeymoon, etc.

He doesn't have anything to do with his ex-wife now, except dealings concerning their daughter. — WONDERING

DEAR WONDERING: How wise and considerate you are to "wonder." I suggest you ask your son how he feels about it.

DEAR ABBY: I couldn't feel very sorry for "Nobody's Valentine," the woman who complained because in the three years they've been married, her husband had never given her anything for St. Valentine's Day.

I wonder what she gave him? Nothing, probably.

As a veteran wife of six years, I can give lessons on how a wife can get what she wants. It's just like making love: Do to him what you want him to do to you. — SOMEBODY'S VALENTINE

Don't put off writing thank-you notes, letters of sympathy, etc., because you don't know what to say. Get Abby's booklet, "How to Write Letters for All Occasions." Sugar paste makes sweet Easter baskets

By Kelle Banks Barfield
Copley News Service

Anyone who has ever enjoyed creating objects from modeling clay will truly enjoy a more elegant version of this craft.

A sugar paste dyed with delicate colors can be pinched, rolled and shaped into dainty baskets to fill with candies this Easter. Round or square, with or without handles, these baskets are fun to create, then decorate with sugar paste flowers and beads.

To make the basic paste, add 1½ teaspoons unflavored gelatin to ¼ cup cold water and let stand for a few minutes. Stir until gelatin is dissolved. (Hint: To help gelatin dissolve, set the bowl in a pan of hot water while you stir.) Stir 2 cups confectioners' sugar into the gelatin mixture, then gradually add the remainder of a 16-ounce bag of sugar.

Knead the paste to a claylike consistency on a board that has been covered with sifted cornstarch. Once prepared, always keep the paste moist by wrapping in plastic wrap all but the portion you are shaping. If the paste does begin to dry out, add a few drops of water and re-knead to soften it.

Again, working only with as much paste as you need at a time, color the paste by dropping food coloring onto it and kneading it to even out the coloring. Begin with only a few drops of any color, then add more to deepen the color. If the color becomes too dark or the paste gets sticky from too much moisture being added, knead in small amount of plain paste to adjust.

Plan to use half of your dough for the basket base, the remaining half for decoration. Dye the paste for the base and shape it as you would modeling clay, forming a round or square bottom then building up the sides of the basket.

Flat sides will work fine if you plan to embellish the basket with petals, leaves and other decorations, but another style basket that is easy to shape is a coiled basket. Working with small amounts of colored paste at a time, roll the paste on your work surface. Join these ropes of paste as you form them by pinching the ends together.

Lightly brush water around the edges of your basket bottom as you stick a coil around the perimeter, then begin building up the sides of the basket by continuing to shape and join pieces of coil around and around on top of each other. Water brushed on the coils as you stack them acts as a glue.

Next form a handle for the basket, and working quickly while the paste is moist, press the ends of the handle to the inside of the basket, using water as glue if necessary. Some ideas for handle designs: stick several coils that are the same length side by side or braid several coils of sugar paste together; flatten a length of paste into an inch-wide handle to cover with flowers; flatten the paste then pinch it together every inch or so for a scalloped handle.

Finally, decorate the dried basket with small pieces of shaped paste. Color and shape flower petals, leaves, beads, diamonds, buttons and other objects of your choice. Allow each of the embellishments to dry before attaching them to the basket with white glue. White glue also can be used to mend any shaped pieces that break.

Few practice eggcup collecting

By Linda Rosenkrantz
Copley News Service

In these days of cautious cholesterol counts, the egg is not many people's favorite subject. But with Easter just around the corner, it seems a timely subject.

The negative space created by the egg is the focus of a relatively small group of practitioners of Pocillovy — the hobby of collecting the cups that have been made over the years to cradle boiled eggs.

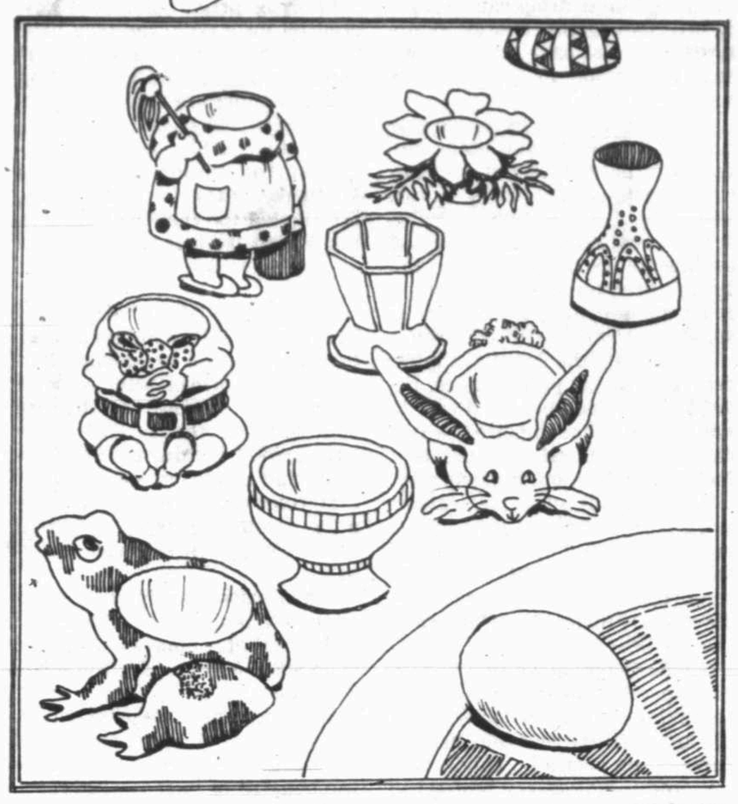

The origins of the eggcup are somewhat controversial. British expert Winnie Freeman points to eggcups and stands found in the ruins of Pompeii. Others claim that they date back no further than the 17th century.

In any case, since the eggcup first appeared in a time of more robust appetites (or less restrained ones) early examples usually were made to accommodate multiple ovum.

Among the first (although not, strictly speaking, cups) were silver frames with slots for up to a dozen eggs. These were followed by the egg cruet, which held four to six eggcups with matching spoons, and other more elaborate setups, incorporating toast racks, butter and jam dishes.

The basic eggcup, of course, consists of a bowl, a stem and a base — the simple type made by most of the major British potteries of the 19th century.

Beyond that, the form has been the vehicle for the craftsman's most fanciful imagination. There are round bases and square bases, some with matching saucers and others with saucer attached.

CNS Graphic

There are eggcups not only of pottery, porcelain and silver but also of pewter, pressed glass, alabaster, brass, animal horn, papier-mache and wood.

The Victorian era saw a wide range of sizes as well, made to accommodate everything from small bantam eggs to giant goose, turkey and swans' eggs, as well as the normal hen's egg.

There have been many commemorative and souvenir eggcups produced, not to mention a wide array of children's cups, featuring characters from Peter Rabbit to Kermit the Frog.

For the general market, too, there has erupted a riot of novelty items from Santa Clauses to kitschy cups with human feet. Animals abound, as do plump, wasp-waisted ladies (the eggcup bearing a family resemblance to the hourglass shape.)

Eggcup collecting has long been a popular hobby in England, but now more and more Americans are beginning to realize that they can be Pocillovists, too.

- Blue Willow double eggcup, Japan — $18.
- Clambroth glass eggcup, cover, Diamond Point — $950.
- Cobalt blue glass eggcup, octagonal, scalloped rim, four raised ribs, flint — $195.
- Fiesta eggcup, chartreuse — $38-$55.
- Harker Pottery Co. double eggcup, Chesterton, gray with white trim — $12.
- Harlequin eggcup, red — $18.
- Milk glass eggcup, chick, Westmoreland — $15.
- Minton eggcup, paisley border, 1910 — $35.
- Noritake eggcup, Azalea — $45 - $50.
- Pennsbury Pottery eggcup, black rooster — $18.
- Phoenix Bird eggcup, blue and white — $20.
- Quimper eggcup, attached plate, boy and girl — $50.
- Redware eggcup, yellow slip design in clock pattern, 3 inches — $18.50.
- Rosenthal porcelain eggcup, Moss Rose, sterling saucer base — $45.

DIET: Fasters fear eating food

(From 4B)

"That's one reason why I am sticking with this," she said, taking a spoonful of her liquid-formula chocolate mousse.

Many people concede, after their fasting period, they have intense psychological pressure.

"I see it all the time," said Gullo. "These patients know they've only learned not to eat. Why wouldn't they be terrified to eat again?"

Jacques L., 47, a Manhattan lawyer, has religiously taken a liquid formula diet since last June and has lost 143 pounds. In December, he started dreaming of food.

One Friday in early March, L. closed his office door, drew up an itinerary and hired a car and driver for the next day. From noon to 7:30 p.m. that Saturday, he sat in the back seat eating.

His calm "I-deserve-this" air overshadowed the bizarre 22-stop adventure. Wrappers and carry-out food containers cluttered the car. About 7,000 calories later, L. told a reporter, "I am going back on formula tomorrow."

He had gained 21 pounds in 13 days. Like many fasters, he had been in control of not eating.

"You move people from one end of their addiction, which is eating too much, to the other, which is eating too little," said Leifer.

Adler, who has closed 19 of his 30 Diet-Fast Centers in the New York area, estimated that of his 10,000 patients, "maybe 900" have kept off the weight.

At United Weight Control on Manhattan's East Side, Cathy Nonas, the director of program development, helps patients toward the middle ground between binging and fasting.

Like elementary school students, the patients sit at a small table with a nutritionist who uses teaching aids like a plastic mound of broccoli, a rubber slab of flank steak and rubber berries to demonstrate proper serving portions.

"To me, the patient who is afraid of food is better off," said Ms. Nonas. "It's like a baby who doesn't want to give up formula. This time around I can say: 'Fine, we are going to take this slowly. Mommy's here: I'll hold you; I'll wean you to food. You can do it.' "

Easter bunnies, chicks belong in barn yard, not Easter basket

Associated Press

NEW YORK — Live bunnies, chicks and ducklings belong in the barn yard, not the Easter basket.

"Bunnies, chicks or ducklings may brighten a family household on Easter Sunday, but their ultimate fate sends the wrong message to children," says Dr. Stephen Zawistowski of the American Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals.

"Before the end of spring, the majority of these 'living gifts' end up in an animal shelter, because people are unaware that what looks adorable in a pet shop window may be difficult to care for at home."

Especially when that cute, fuzzy yellow chick grows into a crowing rooster.

The American Animal Hospital Association, based in Denver, warns that baby ducks and chicks require at least two to three hours of basic daily care to become domesticated and once tamed cannot return to the flock.

In addition, all such farm yard animals require clean shelters safe from predators, including other pets.

Since there are no routine vaccinations for these animals as there are for dogs and cats, clean cages and a close watch for changes in behavior are important, says the AAHA.

Rabbits can be carriers of distemper and rabies, and ducks and chickens are carriers of salmonellosis and can transfer the disease to humans through their feces.

Astros open

The Cincinnati Reds, who traditionally open the National League season at home, will instead visit the Houston Astros tonight where another tradition will be celebrated — the Astrodome's 25th anniversary.

The Astros were supposed to start the season April 2 in Cincinnati, where the Reds have missed only two home openers since they became charter members of the National League in 1876.

Carl Lewis vs. Ben Johnson?

A published report says six-time Olympic champion Carl Lewis is considering a multi-million dollar sprint against banned Ben Johnson, who won the gold medal in the 100-meter dash at Seoul but was later stripped of it for drug use.

The tabloid Mail reported Sunday said Lewis would decide within the next few weeks whether they would race.

Lewis who replaced Johnson as Olympic champion at Seoul after the Canadian was stripped of his medal and later banned from international competition for using anabolic steroids.

"If I decide to run then, in the long term, I think it will be better for the sport than if I decide not to," Lewis was quoted as saying.

"There's not an athlete running today who would have turned down a million dollars for this race and I've been offered three times that amount."

■ Pitchers are light on spring training, so don't expect many complete games early.

By Jim Donaghy
AP Baseball Writer

In many ways, opening day 1990 will be much like any other year.

There will be big brassy bands playing the national anthem, dignitaries tossing out the ceremonial first ball and red, white and blue buntings adorning the stadium railings.

When the games begin, however, the difference may start to show.

Only a month ago, it seemed likely that opening day would coincide with Memorial Day. The players and owners were stalled on a contract and the spring training camps were locked. But a settlement was reached March 18 and the players were given about 2½ weeks to get ready.

Most starting pitchers didn't make it past five innings during the abbreviated exhibition season and there won't be many complete games during April.

There's a lot of sore arms and the disabled list is growing rapidly. To help everyone get ready, the players and owners finally agreed to expand the rosters to 27 for April.

"Nobody is sure what will happen once things get serious," new Cincinnati manager Lou Piniella said. "We've never had such a short time to get ready."

But ready or not, the first pitch of the 1990 season is scheduled to be thrown at about 12:05 p.m. CDT at Boston's Fenway Park where the Red Sox play the Detroit Tigers.

The season was supposed to open April 2, but was pushed back a week because of the lockout.

All 162 games are scheduled to be played as open dates were filled and the season extended to make up the lost games.

But the traditional National League opener at Cincinnati already has been lost and opening day at Wrigley Field on Monday is a night game of all things.

Fans and players alike seem to be trying to get a handle on the reality that the season is indeed at hand. Starting Monday, the effects of the lockout and the statistics will really mean something.

The season opens with five games in the National League and six in the American League.

Opening Day Lineup:

American League

Detroit at Boston (12:05 p.m.)

Boston's Roger Clemens (17-11) appears ready for the start of the season. Last Wednesday against Kansas City, he pitched seven shutout innings and allowed three hits. Jack Morris (6-14) starts for the Tigers, who are trying to rebound from a 53-109 record in 1989. The Red Sox are without right fielder Dwight Evans, who is on the disabled list with a back injury.

Milwaukee at Chicago (1:35 p.m.)

It will be a great day for baseball fans in Chicago, as the White Sox open at Comiskey Park a few hours before the Cubs start at Wrigley Field. The Brewers are hurting, with Paul Molitor and Jim Gantner on the disabled list. Chris Bosio (15-10) pitches for Milwaukee against Melido Perez (11-14). Chicago first baseman Greg Walker is 10-for-18 lifetime against Bosio with two homers.

Baltimore at Kansas City (1:35 p.m.)

If Bret Saberhagen (23-6) was superstitious, he might be getting nervous. Saberhagen, the 1989 AL Cy Young winner, is 31-39 in even years and 61-22 in odd years. Just in case, NL Cy Young winner Mark Davis now is in the Royals' bullpen to help, along with starter Storm Davis. Bob Milacki (14-12) starts for the Orioles.

Seattle at California (8 p.m.)

Bert Blyleven, 39, starts for the Angels against Brian Holman, 25. The Mariners have added first baseman Pete O'Brien, with an unhappy Alvin Davis moving to DH.

Minnesota at Oakland (3:05 p.m.)

The A's begin their quest to become the first team since the 1977-78 New York Yankees to repeat as World Series champions. Dave Stewart (21-9), the World Series MVP, opposes Allan Anderson (17-10). Oakland first baseman Mark McGwire is 1-for-16 (.063) lifetime against Anderson. Stewart is trying for his fourth straight 20-win season.

National League

Pittsburgh at New York (12:35 p.m.)

The Mets have won five straight opening day games and 14 of 15. Two of the past four years, they beat Pittsburgh in the opener. Dwight Gooden (9-4) makes his first start in a regular-season game since tearing a muscle in his right shoulder last July 1. Doug Drabek (14-12) starts for the Pirates.

San Diego at Los Angeles (3:35 p.m.)

Joe Carter and Fred Lynn make their debuts for the Padres and will face Orel Hershiser (15-15). Dodgers third baseman Jeff Hamilton was 0-for-14 against Padres starter Bruce Hurst (15-11) last season with five strikeouts. The Dodgers have added outfielders Juan Samuel and Hubie Brooks.

Philadelphia at Chicago (7:05 p.m.)

The Cubs have not repeated as champions since 1906-1908. Greg Maddux (10-12) starts for Chicago against Ken Howell (12-12). Maddux is 21-12 lifetime at night and 24-26 in day games. Howell's shutout of the Cubs last season was his only complete game in 32 starts in 1989.

Montreal at St. Louis (7:35 p.m.)

The Expos are counting on rookies Marquis Grissom and Delino DeShields to keep them in contention. The Cardinals have the favorite for NL Rookie of the Year in catcher Todd Zeile. Dennis Martinez (16-7) pitches for Montreal against Joe Magrane (18-9, 2.91 ERA). The Cards are without injured ace reliever Todd Worrell.

Rangers' Ryan starts No. 300 quest

■ Nolan Ryan needs 11 victories for his 300th career win and he starts against the Blue Jays tonight.

By Denne H. Freeman
AP Sports Writer

ARLINGTON — Nolan Ryan, holder of 42 major league records, insists he never goes into a season thinking about numbers.

Then again, he's never entered a season just 11 victories shy of 300.

"There's some records I don't care that much about, but I do want to win 300 games," said the 43-year-old Ryan, who takes the mound at 7:35 p.m. Sunday against the Toronto Blue Jays.

"It's probably the only time I've ever gone into a season shooting at a statistic," Ryan said.

Ryan won 16 games for the Rangers last year and recorded his 5,000th strikeout when he cut down Rickey Henderson of the Oakland A's.

He became the first AL pitcher to fan 300 batters in a season since he did it in 1977. The only thing he missed was another no-hitter, coming within a few outs twice.

The Rangers will have a new center fielder when they take the field in Arlington Stadium against the Jays.

Gary Pettis, a Gold Glove outfielder from the Detroit Tigers, signed as a free agent for $1 million by the Rangers, will replace Cecil Espy, who was inconsistent at bat and in the field last year. Pettis hit .257 for the Tigers with one homer.

"Gary will run down a lot of balls that got through for hits in the alleys last year," Rangers manager Bobby Valentine said. "He's got great speed on the base paths, too."

The Rangers finished four games over .500 last year but finished 16 games behind eventual world champion Oakland in the American League West.

The A's look strong again.

"It looks tough on paper," General Manager Tom Grieve said. "Fortunately, we get to play the games on the field. The A's will be hard to beat."

Sierra, 24, was runnerup in AL MVP balloting, although he led the league with 119 RBIs. He also hit .309 with 29 home runs.

"It just makes me work harder because I didn't get the MVP award," Sierra said. "I want to have a big, big year."

Sierra worked hard in the weight room in the offseason to improve his upper body strength.

"Ruben looks great," Valentine said. "I believe this will be his best year ever. He has motivation because he didn't get the MVP. It should drive him to an excellent season."

Nick Faldo celebrates; Raymond Floyd loses

Faldo repeats sudden death

■ Nick Faldo now has back-to-back victories in the Masters, leaving broken hearts for Scott Hoch and Ray Floyd.

By BOB GREEN
AP Golf Writer

AUGUSTA, Ga. — No less a master than Jack Nicklaus has said the Masters more often is lost on Sunday than it is won.

Nick Faldo has proven that axiom for two straight years, equalling Nicklaus' feat and breaking the hearts of Scott Hoch and Ray Floyd.

Faldo's patience and perserverance paid off Sunday in a sudden-death victory over Floyd for his second consecutive Masters win. Only Nicklaus, in 1965-66, had done that.

The Englishman duplicated his performance of 1989, when he beat Hoch on the 11th hole, the second of the playoff. This time, the victim was Floyd, at 47 seeking to become the oldest Masters winner.

"I made history today," Faldo said.

In doing so, he rallied from a double bogey on the first hole, came back from three strokes behind with four holes left and survived on the 10th when Floyd missed a makeable birdie putt.

Faldo then shattered Floyd's dream at No. 11, with plenty of help from the 1976 Masters champion, who put his second shot into the water.

"The shot on the 11th was in the water the moment it left my club," Floyd said. "It's the most devastating thing that has happened to me in golf."

For Faldo, it was a third major title — he also won the 1987 British Open. And he lost a playoff to Curtis Strange for the 1988 U.S. Open crown.

Astros, Astrodome celebrate 25th anniversary

HOUSTON (AP) — The Cincinnati Reds, who traditionally open the National League season at home, will instead visit the Houston Astros Monday night where another tradition will be celebrated — the Astrodome's 25th anniversary.

The Astros were supposed to start the season April 2 in Cincinnati, where the Reds have missed only two home openers since they became charter members of the National League in 1876.

Weather caused Cincinnati to miss scheduled home openers in 1876 and 1966 and the 32-day labor dispute killed the 1990 opener.

Tom Browning, 15-12 with a 3.39 earned run average last season, will be the opening day pitcher for new Reds manager Lou Piniella.

Mike Scott, 20-10, who became the Astros' fourth 20-game winner last season, will start for the Astros.

Not being able to open the season in Riverfront Stadium takes some of the thrill out of being the Opening Day pitcher, Browning said.

"We're not going to be at home, so it's not going to be as big a deal," Browning said. "The crowd's not going to be part of the hoopla."

Cincinnati opened its season on the road in 1877 because its opener was rained out. In 1966, the opening series th the Mets was rained out and the Reds started the season in Philadelphia.

Cincinnati has a 52-53 record in NL openers.

The Astros will celebrate the 25th birthday of their indoor arena with an oldtimers' game between former New York Yankees and Houston players.

The two teams played the first official event in the Astrodome on April 9, 1965 with Mickey Mantle christening the new facility with a home run off Turk Farrell.

The Reds, who in 1989 finished in fifth place, 17 games behind champion San Francisco, hope for fewer injuries this season.

"There was no continuity on our team last year," rightfielder Paul O'Neill said., "Every day there was a different lineup. Somebody else was out. That's why we struggled as a team."

He was part of an injury list that included every position starter at some point in the year with the exception of first baseman Todd Benzinger.

The Astros are continuing a youth infusion into their lineup by placing power-hitting, strikeout-prone Eric Anthony in left field.

Half of the Astros' starting eight has less than six years combined major league experience.

Anthony (49 days in the majors) will join centerfielder Gerald Young (2 years, 89 days), catcher Craig Biggio (1 year, 99 days) and third baseman Ken Caminiti (1 year, 137 days).

"There are areas where experience is more important," Astros general manager Bill Wood said.

"But all things being equal, the young player is better. He'll be more enthusiastic. He hasn't reached the stage where security kicks in. He still has a lot to prove."

Houston finished third in the NL West last year, six games behind the champion San Francisco Giants.

The Astros also are depending on starters Jim Clancy and Bill Gullickson to perform well.

Clancy, 7-14, had an off-season in 1989 and Gullickson has pitched in Japan the past two seasons.

Monaghan ends 6-year LPGA skid

POWAY, Calif. (AP) — Kris Monaghan shot a 4-under-par 67 Sunday for a two-stroke victory in the $300,000 Red Robin Kyocera Inamori Classic, her first victory in six years on the LPGA Tour.

Monaghan, whose round included six birdies and two bogeys, posted scores of 72-67-70-67 and finished at 8-under 276 over the 6,024-yard StoneRidge Country Club course. She earned $45,000.

Cathy Gerring finished second at 278 and collected $27,750. Tied for third at 279 were two-time champion Ayako Okamoto of Japan and Rosie Jones. Next at 280 were defending champion Patti Rizzo and Kris Tschetter.

Third-round leader Nancy Brown duplicated her final-day collapse in this tournament last year with a 76, finishing tied for seventh at 281. Last year, Brown took a two-shot lead into the final round but shot 78 to finish in a 17th-place tie.

Monaghan, whose best previous finish was fourth in the 1986 Safeco Classic, started the day four shots out of the lead. But she birdied the fifth, sixth, eighth and ninth holes to take a three-shot lead at the turn.

A birdie at the 385-yard 11th was negated by a bogey two holes later, but Monaghan regained her momentum by making a six-foot putt for par at No. 14, then sinking a bunker shot from about 50 feet for birdie on the par-4 15th.

She three-putted No. 18, a 173-yard par-3, but the rest of the field was too far back by then.

Gerring, a six-year tour veteran who started the day tied with Monaghan four shots back, birdied the 14th and 15th en route to a 2-under 69, matching her career best finish. She also finished in second at the 1987 Women's Kemper Open.

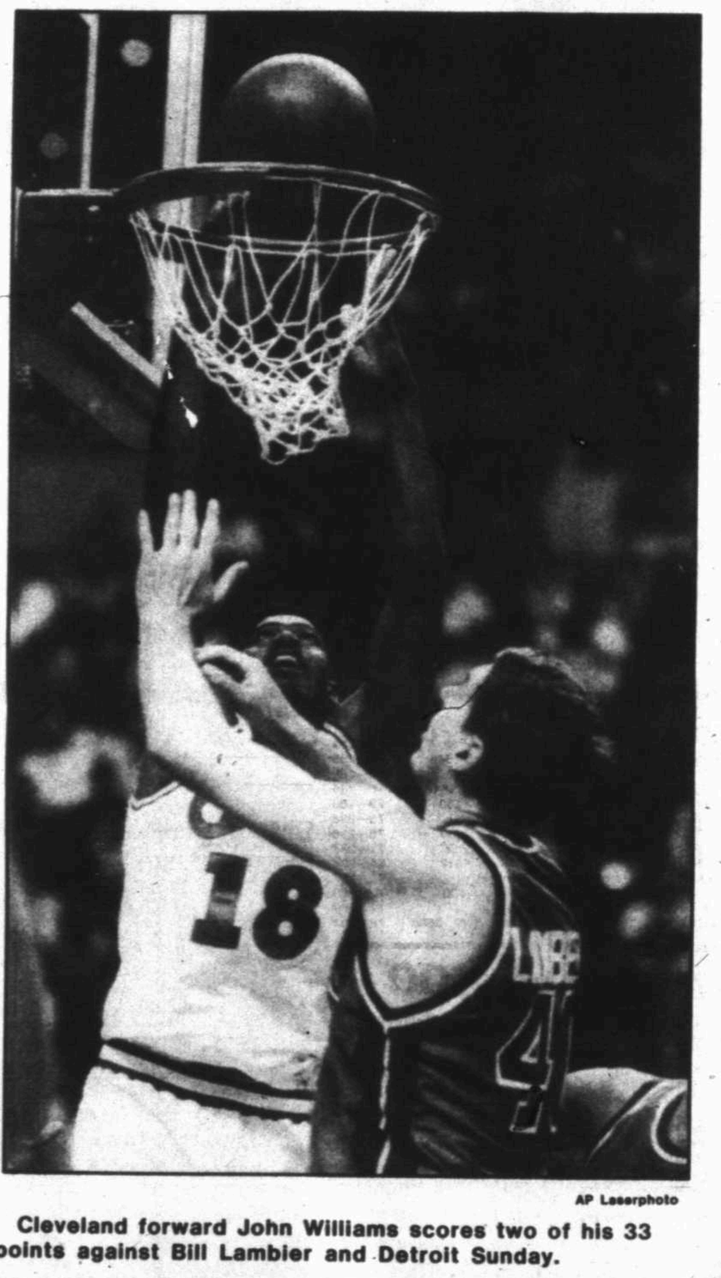

Okamoto birdied the first seven holes then birdied the par-4 eighth and ninth holes to make the turn at 5-under, three strokes behind Monaghan.

She never got any closer, however, making bogey at the par-4 11th and a birdie at the par-5 17th.

NBA ROUNDUP

Rockets blast Magic

Associated Press

AP Laserphoto

Cleveland forward John Williams scores two of his 33 points against Bill Lambier and Detroit Sunday.

Sleepy Floyd scored a season-high 32 points Sunday and Houston scorched the NBA's worst defense for 78 first-half points en route to a 146-123 victory over the Orlando Magic.

The victory pulled the Rockets within one game of Seattle in the race for the final playoff berth in the Western Conference.

The Magic, which trailed by 36 points before rallying against Houston reserves in the fourth quarter, has lost nine straight games and 25 of its last 27.

Orlando, yielding a league-high 119 points per game, was led by Nick Anderson's 21 points. Terry Catledge had 18 points for the expansion Magic.

Floyd, who had 13 assists, scored 25 points in the first half when Houston built a 78-58 halftime lead on 65 percent shooting from the field. The Rockets tacked on 41 points in the third quarter and led 128-92 when Coach Don Chaney emptied the bench.

Otis Thorpe finished with 23 points and Akeem Olajuwon had 20 points and 12 rebounds for Houston, which took the lead for good with a 10-0 spurt to go ahead 20-10.

Cavaliers 100, Pistons 97

John Williams scored a career-high 33 points and Mark Price sank two free throws with 12.3 seconds left as Cleveland beat Detroit, keeping Cavaliers in sole possession of the final Eastern Conference playoff berth.

The victory was the Cavaliers' first in the last eight games against Detroit, which has lost six of its last nine overall and five of six on the road. Cleveland leads Atlanta by one game for the eighth playoff berth.

Pacers 99, Knicks 97

The Pacers, who solidified their hold on seventh place in the Eastern Conference playoff berth, built substantial leads three times in the game. Each time, the Knicks rallied behind Patrick Ewing, who had 30 points, 12 rebounds and four blocked shots.

Hornets 110, Warriors 109

Charlotte has won eight of its last 13 games and no longer has the worst record in the NBA. The current winning streak began with a road victory at Denver, then a win Friday night at home over Minnesota.

The loss dropped the Warriors 2½ games behind Seattle for the final playoff spot in the Western Conference. Golden State, 10th in the conference, is 1½ behind ninth-place Houston.

Nets 102, Heat 101

Sam Bowie scored 12 of 15 points in the fourth quarter, including the go-ahead basket, and New Jersey held off a late Miami rally in a battle of frontrunners for the NBA's worst team.

The win snapped a four-game losing streak for the Nets (17-58) and was their second in 17 games. The loss was the fifth straight for Miami (17-59), which now has the worst record in the league heading into the final two weeks of the season.

Lakers 116, Nuggets 109

A.C. Green had 26 points and 18 rebounds and Magic Johnson scored five of his 19 points during a 19-3 fourth-period run that lifted the Los Ageles Lakers over Denver.

It was the sixth straight victory for the Lakers, who now have a four-game lead over Detroit in the race for the best record in the NBA and a homecourt advantage in the playoffs.

Los Angeles trailed 94-87 before the decisive 19-3 run, which ended with the Lakers ahead 106-97 after a tip-in by Green with 3:42 remaining.

Denver pulled within six on a three-point play by Fat Lever, who led Denver with 31 points and 11 rebounds, but the Nuggets didn't threaten further.

N.C. State begins search for cage coach

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — Jim Valvano cleaned his office Sunday, marking the end of his coaching tenure with North Carolina State and paving the way for the school to find a successor for the embattled basketball program.

Supporters and officials echoed the optimism Valvano displayed Saturday after he agreed to leave and not sue the school in exchange for $238,000. Valvano also stands to be paid $375,000 by the university's booster club, one of Valvano's attorneys said.

"It's just the passing of a baton," Charlie Bryant, executive director of the Wolfpack Club booster organization, said Sunday.

"Losing Jim is a big loss. However, we have a lot of tradition here. It might have a temporary setback, but ... we will continue to have a tremendous program."

The school faces not only the task of hiring a new coach, but must first choose an athletic director — a position Valvano gave up in August after the program first came under fire.

"This is a very critical and difficult time for us," said William Burns Jr., co-vice chairman of the N.C. State Board of Trustees. "But I think the university is strong enough. I don't see any problem getting good people to fill these positions."

"I would hope that the new coach would be a man of high principle, one who believes in working with young men and encouraging their development, and at the same time winning some games."

Valvano had been under pressure to resign since reports in February that former players had accepted cash and shaved points. Valvano never was implicated in the allegations. Former player Charles Shackleford admitted accepting $60,000 while playing for the Wolfpack, but denied an ABC-TV report that he had shaved points.

The program is under a two-year probation imposed in December by the NCAA. The NCAA found that players had sold sneakers and complimentary tickets.

Valvano was not available for comment Sunday, said Woody Webb, a Raleigh attorney who represented the coach in negotiations with the university. Webb said Valvano went to his office at 7 a.m. to remove his belongings. There was no sign of Valvano at his office Sunday afternoon.

Webb said Valvano had given him no indication of his plans other than what he revealed in his news conference Saturday. Valvano joked then that his first priority was improving his golf game.

Interim university chancellor Larry Monteith said Saturday that Valvano would receive his regular salary payments — totaling $26,509.24 — through May 15, the end of the academic year. Then within 30 days, Valvano would get an additional $212,000 from the school.

George Worsley, N.C. State's finance officer, said Sunday that the money would come from athletic department reserves generated by ticket sales, concerts and television appearances.

He said no taxpayer money was involved and that a state revenue shortfall that has caused budget cuts at North Carolina's 16 public universities did not affect athletic department reserves.

"The athletic department does not receive general tax funds to support it," Worsley said. "It's a self-sustaining department. The budget adjustments made by North Carolina State University as a result of the state's budget crisis does not affect the athletic department."

Allison went ahead for the first time on lap 392 when he opted to stay on the track while the leaders made a pit stop. He fought off a challenge from Darrell Waltrip before barely holding off Martin's finishing charge.

In the final lap, Martin ducked low in the fourth turn and pulled abreast of Allison as the two Ford Thunderbirds roared toward the finish line just 175 yards away.

"We had a great run. Boy, we got close," Martin said. "We were in a position to do what we could, but there just wasn't enough race track out there to get by Davey. We just came up six inches short, I guess."

"I knew if I stayed in my line it would be tough for him to pass," said Allison, who averaged 87.257 mph. "He got a real good run off the four corner and I didn't. I think I was trying to protect my line more than get to the checkered flag.

"I almost let him get by me. But I did what I had to do. I didn't cut him off. I gave him racing room and we beat him."

It was Allison's first Winston Cup victory since the Pepsi 400 at Daytona last season and was worth $50,100. Martin finished second for the second consecutive week, followed by Ricky Rudd, Terry Labonte and Rick Wilson.

PHOENIX (AP) — Rick Mears started 1990 the way he ended 1989 — in the winner's circle.

Mears, who ended last year by winning the final race on the CART-PPG circuit at Laguna Seca, Calif., averaged 126.291 mph in his Chevrolet-powered Penske 90 and earned $77,000.

Al Unser Jr., Rahal's teammate on the Galles-Kraco Racing team, was third. Rahal's average speed was 126.130 mph, and Unser averaged 126.090 mph.

GOREN BRIDGE

ANSWERS TO WEEKLY BRIDGE QUIZ

Q.1—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠72 ♡A86 ◇AJ1093 ♣732
The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
2 ♡*	Dbl	?

* — weak
A.—It's simply a question of whether you want to continue the preempt by raising hearts or whether you would like to do something more constructive. Since it looks as if partner is going to be on lead, we would bid three diamonds as a lead-director.

Q.2—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠AQ ♡KJ8742 ◇KJ6 ♣AK
What is your opening bid?
A.—An awkward hand. Your six-card major is moth-eaten, so the hand is not quite good enough for a demand bid. However, if you open one heart you will be faced with enormous rebid problems and could end up playing the hand from the wrong side. We would make the value bid of two no trump.

Q.3—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠6 ♡AKQ10984 ◇J952 ♣7
What is your opening bid?
A.—Your hand has eight playing tricks—seven in hearts and one in diamonds. According to the Rule of 2 & 3, that makes it worth an opening bid of four hearts, and that's the action we endorse.

Q.4—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠Q652 ♡74 ◇83 ♣AJ652
Partner opens the bidding with one club. What do you respond?
A.—It is rarely wise to bypass a four-card major which you can show at the one-level in favor of raising partner's minor-suit opening bid. That could result in losing a 4-4 fit and, possibly, game. Therefore, we would respond one spade.

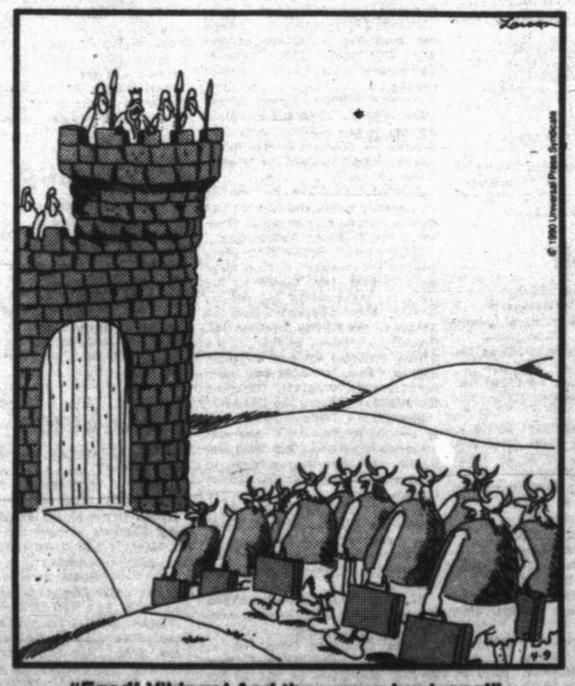

Q.5—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠Q652 ♡74 ◇83 ♣AJ652
The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
Pass	Pass	?

What action do you take?
A.—Although partner's pass shows a minimum opening bid, the fact that he did not support spades makes it highly likely he has at least four clubs. Under the circumstances, we would compete with three clubs.

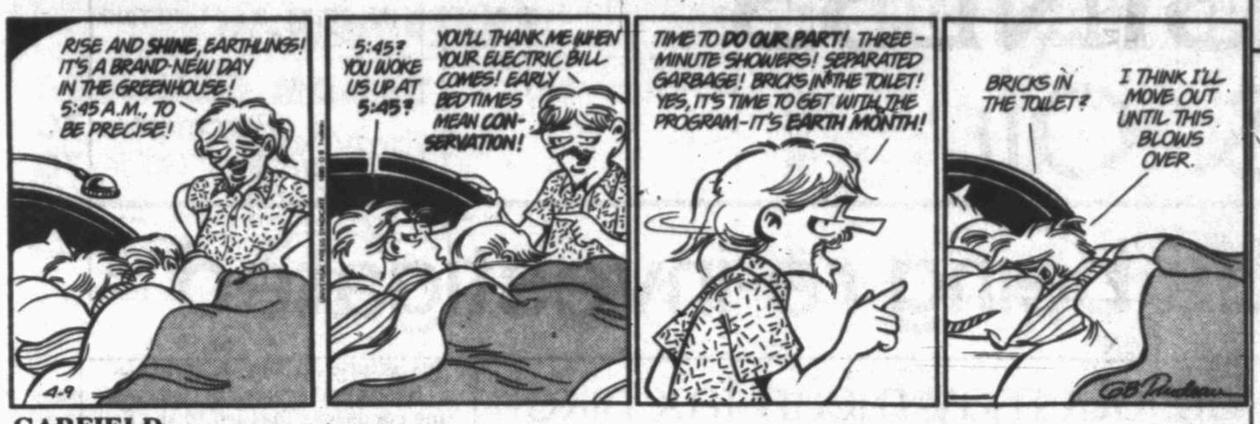

Q.6—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠A765 ♡9 ◇QJ762 ♣J73
Partner opens the bidding with one spade. What do you respond?
A.—You have a hand of limited defensive potential, but good trick-taking possibilities with spades as trumps. Jump to four spades, a two-way action. You might make it or, if you don't, you could be shutting out an opposing game or partial.

Motley Crue drummer injured during concert

NEW HAVEN, Conn. (AP) — Tommy Lee, a drummer with the flamboyant heavy metal rock group Motley Crue, suffered a mild concussion when he fell during a concert at the New Haven Coliseum, authorities said Sunday.

Lee, 26, fell to the floor Saturday while swinging down a rope from on-stage scaffolding, and was in good condition at Yale-New Haven Hospital, said hospital spokesman Tom Urtz.

"He is alert, awake and in good spirits," Urtz said.

Urtz said Sunday morning that he did not know how Lee fell except that the rappelling stunt "was part of the routine."

And, returning to Meridian this year, Charley Pride will not only perform on the Temple Theater stage but serve as host of the First Jimmie Rodgers Celebrity Golf Tournament.

Pride

Set for May 23 at the Briarwood Country Club, the tournament will be a new event for the annual festival week. The festival, honoring the father of country music, is slated for May 20-26.

Pride, an avid golfer, will be joined on the course by notables from the fields of music and sports, said Ken Rainey, foundation show producer.

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Flutist James Galway's eyes sparkle at the mention of his operatic debut in the title role of Rossini's "The Thieving Magpie" in its first U.S. performance in this century.

"I didn't study birds for years to do this. I studied music," said Galway, 50, who is basing his stage movements on his observation of the chattering, black and white bird.

Rossini wrote the opera using an actor as the magpie who stole the silver spoon and caused a young servant girl to be sentenced to death, but the Opera Company of Philadelphia revised the role for a musician.

The rolling notes Galway plays as he flits about the stage were borrowed from passages Rossini wrote for the violin and flute as parts of the orchestra down in the pit.

Galway, who turned 50 last year, plays opening night, April 16, and his wife and fellow performer, Jeanne, plays the magpie in the second and final performance.

RICHMOND, Va. (AP) — Marvin Bush, youngest son of President Bush, has been named finance chairman of the Republican Party of Virginia while it recovers from a financial embarrassment.

Last year, the state GOP cut staff and expenses after officials discovered a former bookkeeper had failed to pay withholding taxes for about 16 months. The party had to borrow to repay taxes of about $150,000 and a $74,000 fine.

"One of my objectives is to make sure that things run as cleanly as possible," said Bush, who also will oversee the state party's fund-raising operations.

Bush worked for his father's presidential campaign in Virginia in 1988. He works in Alexandria for John Stewart Darrell and Co., a financial planning firm and acknowledges that his name won't hurt in GOP fund-raising.

"Being George Bush's son, there are some up sides to it," he said.

Turner

The Flying D earlier sold about 11,000 cattle and began cutting back on growing hay at higher elevations to make room for the 3,000 to 4,000 buffalo that Turner wants to let roam, said ranch manager Bud Griffith.

Last summer, the owner of WTBS in Atlanta — who also owns professional sports teams and has other extensive business interests — bought the Shelton Ranches, which include the Flying D, for a reported $20 million-plus.

The holdings encompass 110,000 deeded acres and 20,000 leased acres between the Madison and Gallatin rivers. Turner put 107,000 acres under permanent conservancy to protect the land from development.

Oil prices fall

Gasoline futures posted the sharpest declines on the New York Mercantile Exchange as they did on Thursday. But wholesale home heating oil bucked the trend and regained some ground.

The May contract for West Texas Intermediate, the benchmark grade of U.S. crude oil, settled at $19.15 per 42-gallon barrel, down 28 cents.

Lower savings

Americans often are blamed for having lost the old Yankee love of thrift, but the International Monetary Fund has found that people in some other developed countries are saving even less.

It predicted the trend will continue as the world's population ages.

Wall Streeters convicted

A federal jury convicted two Wall Street arbitragers of insider trading, fraud and other and counts linked to the so-called "Yuppie Five" scandal, capping a 12-week trial.

Sale of S&Ls being re-investigated

■ Congressional investigators are re-examining accusations bidders were favored in the sale of thrifts under the Southwest Plan.

Associated Press

DALLAS — Re-examining the sale of thrifts under the so-called Southwest Plan, congressional investigators are focusing on accusations that federal regulators favored certain bidders and conducted a sloppy auction.

The Southwest Plan sold 87 troubled Texas thrifts in 15 transactions in 1988, at an estimated cost to taxpayers of about $25 billion.

The plan and related documents in the hands of congressional investigators could add to questions about how the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corp. sold ailing thrifts.

The Southwest Plan, which outlined 25 anticipated transactions, in each case named another Southwest thrift institution as the likely buyer. Obtained by The Dallas Morning News, the plan was written two months before regulators officially opened bidding.

First transactions under the plan were completed only a month after bids were submitted and closely resemble those planned before the public was invited to bid.

The newspaper reported that four of the first five deals announced under the Southwest Plan nearly matched the secret plans made months earlier.

"They knew who they wanted to win the deals, and there was no getting in the door for the rest of us," said Dean Hoover, a North Dallas lawyer who failed in his efforts to buy a franchise.

Hearings this week in Dallas will examine conditions that led to the Southwest Plan, especially the misdeeds of savings and loan operators in the mid-1980s and the inability of regulators to detect them.

Rep. Henry B. Gonzalez, the San Antonio Democrat who is chairman of the powerful House Banking Committee, has launched hearings to study the deals completed by the FSLIC in 1988.

Accusing FSLIC officials of favoritism and undue secrecy in its conduct, Gonzalez also has promised an inquiry into the Southwest Plan process.

Regulators elsewhere in 1988 sold or closed 228 institutions nationally in complex transactions, many modeled after the Southwest Plan, at a cost of about $40 billion.

Criticism about the agreements helped prompt Congress to dismantle the FSLIC last year and replace it with the Resolution Trust Corp., the agency now charged with selling failed thrifts and their assets.

Bailout may mean tax hike

WASHINGTON (AP) — A tax increase will be needed at some point to pay for escalating losses among a third of the nation's savings and loan institutions, Comptroller General Charles A. Bowsher said Sunday.

Bowsher this past week raised the estimated pricetag for the government's S&L bailout from $257 billion to $325 billion with a warning that it could rise to $500 billion.

"This is one of the great financial disasters that we've ever had in this country and its going to have to be added onto all the other problems we have in the federal budget," he said on NBC-TV's "Meet the Press."

"When you get done making the cuts that you hope you can make in defense and some of the other areas ... you're still going to have to look at the revenue side of the budget," the head of the congressional General Accounting Office said.

Bowsher blamed the Bush administration's desire to meet deficit reduction targets without a tax increase for underestimating the size of the S&L problem.

"Last year they had unrealistic interests rates in their forecast," he said. "They insisted on using a deposit assumption that ... gave you a 7 percent deposit growth — where we knew that deposits were leaving. We told them at the time we'd probably be back, and that's where we are today."

L. William Seidman, chairman of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. and the Resolution Trust Corp., responsible for handling the bailout, said the government "simply didn't know in what bad condition these S&Ls were."

"We found that there were more of them and in worse shape than we thought," Seidman said on the same show.

Dealings with oil firm tells Drexel story

■ A report for Drexel Burnham's first "junk bond" client indicates a darker Drexel determined to make money at its clients expense.

By Stefan Fatsis

NEW YORK (AP) — In 1977, a second-tier Wall Street firm named Drexel Burnham Lambert Inc. issued $30 million in curious IOUs called high-yield bonds to help finance the growth of an oil company, Texas International Co.

The deal marked the start of the Drexel era — a corporate cattle rush that raised billions of dollars for American businesses through risky paper that earned the nickname "junk." Investigators say Drexel's brash behavior also helped spawn criminal dealings that sullied Wall Street in the 1980s.

Thirteen years after the tiny junk-bond deal, Drexel is going out of business. Texas International emerges from bankruptcy court Monday after plunging to a disaster fueled by heavy debts and an oil bust.

The relationship between the giant New York investment house and the Oklahoma City oil driller in many ways tells Drexel's story. Drexel provided the means to grow, temporarily saved the company when times soured and now is accused of ripping it off along the way.

A report in federal bankruptcy court alleges that Drexel sapped Texas International by trading on inside information, secretly "parking" bonds with a scandalous thrift and charging $3 million to create a tax shelter for its own holdings.

The 53-page report by a lawyer for Texas International's stockholders committee, unsealed following a request by The Associated Press, portrays Drexel as hellbent to make as much money as possible at its client's expense while serving as financial adviser from 1985 to 1987.

While Drexel legitimately raised capital for scores of companies seeking to grow — many of whom still sing Drexel's praises — the Texas International report supports a darker view of the investment firm's legacy to the takeover-frenzied '80s.

"There will be the continuing perception that in the pursuit of a brilliant idea Drexel went too far," said Samuel L. Hayes III, an investment banking professor at Harvard Business School.

"They were street-smart people," he said. "They smelled an opportunity and moved very aggressively to exploit it. ... They may have carried it to the nth degree, but that's certainly not out of character for an investment bank."

Drexel last year admitted to running an illicit trading network prosecutors say was directed by junk-bond innovator Michael Milken. The firm pleaded guilty to six felonies and agreed to pay $650 million in fines and restitution. Milken, who says he's innocent, has been indicted but no trial date is set.

Drexel was accused of lawbreaking in about 20 deals. Texas International was not one of them, and federal law enforcers decline to say whether they even investigated it.

The report unsealed by the bankruptcy court nevertheless alleges a variety of improprieties and blames Drexel for making Texas International's problems worse. Seeking to invalidate Drexel's $14 million claim as a creditor, the shareholders committee says Drexel deliberately structured deals to fail so it could generate more business.

From 1978 to 1983, Drexel issued about $150 million in high-yield bonds for Texas International, which used the money to expand operations by drilling for deep natural gas in Texas and Louisiana.

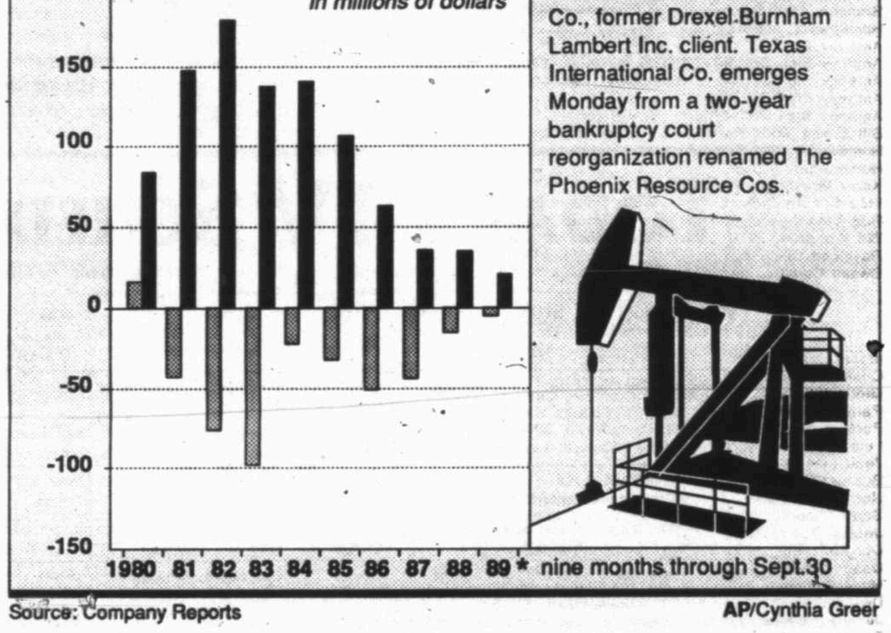

In taking on the debt, which wasn't limited to financing by Drexel, the company counted on rising oil prices, but they collapsed in 1986. Texas International's stock fell from $27 to $1.

On the brink of default, the company hired Drexel to restructure its debt by lowering payments, delaying due dates and substituting stock for some of its bonds.

In three deals, Drexel refinanced $389 million of Texas International debt. The investment firm pioneered so-called debt exchange offers, and Texas International acknowledges the arrangements staved off a bankruptcy filing.

But only temporarily. Crushed by the burden, Texas International in 1987 sold key oil fields in Texas, Louisiana and Oklahomafor $120 million to make interest payments, laying off hundreds of workers.

Texas International plans to pursue Drexel claims

■ Texas International, which emerges from bankruptcy today, may use a lawyer's investigation of Drexel's dealings to pursue claims against the company.

By Stefan Fatsis

NEW YORK (AP) — Texas International Co., which emerges from bankruptcy reorganization Monday, is expected to pursue claims that Drexel Burnham Lambert Inc. peddled fraud along with junk bonds during an 11-year relationship.

Drexel, the collapsed Wall Street firm, says it is entitled to about $14 million in new Texas International securities under terms of the oil company's plan honoring obligations to creditors.

While other creditors will receive bonds and stock as part of the reorganization, Drexel's claim is held up pending a decision by the company's board later this month on what to do about allegations of wrongdoing by Drexel.

At issue is a report by a lawyer for Texas International stockholders alleging Drexel was guilty of fiscal irresponsibility and lawbreaking when it was the company's financial adviser.

Drexel in 1977 issued its first corporate high-yield bonds for Texas International. In 1985-87 Drexel restructured $389 million of the company's long-term debt to help it survive a severe oil industry slowdown.

Texas International entered Chapter 11 bankruptcy proceedings in April 1988. With its reorganization plan approved by a federal judge, the Oklahoma City-based company with holdings in Egypt, Malaysia, Australia and the United States emerges with a new name — The Phoenix Resource Cos. — on Monday.

In an attempt to challenge Drexel's claim, a lawyer for the company's equity securities holders committee investigated the firm's behavior last year with approval of the bankruptcy court.

Electronic bulletin boards have lots to offer

By Paul H. Pause'

Pause'

Electronic Bulletin Board Systems (EBBS or usually just BBS for short) are some of the most popular applications of online telecommunications.

A BBS is a mini-online service offering communications between users, technical information and help, files to exchange, and online entertainment. A typical system is simply someone's PC with a BIG hard drive running special software that is set up to automatically receive calls. The owner of the system is called the sysop (sis-op), short for "system operator." There are more than 14,000 free BBSs around the country.

The character of the board is determined by the sysop and his interests. There are special interest boards, for example, that specialize in various topics: National Genealogical BBS, Dallas Law BBS, the Catholic Information Network, and even the Hay Locator to, yes, provide a database of hay and straw buyers and sellers.

There are nationally known general-interest boards that have tens of thousands of files available for downloading. The Exec-PC (414-789-4210) is the country's largest BBS. It has over 100 phone lines handling 3000 calls every day. The collection includes over 90,000 (!) public domain and shareware programs. Some boards, like Exec-PC, have a fee for "full access." Exec-PC costs $60/year.

The best way to get your feet wet with a BBS is to check out the local BBS scene. The biggest advantage in using local boards is that there are no long-distance phone charges so you don't have to be afraid of experimenting with several different systems or worried about making mistakes while the meter's running. You can "meet" local folks and develop personal friendships.

There are eight local boards currently operating in Midland: Phantom Mesa, 682-6420; Lucid Dimensions, 697-8543; ApacheLand, 699-0916; Information Exchange, 697-8824; Pandemonium (7:30 a.m. to 7:30 p.m. only), 697-9515; Telegraph Road, 561-5115; LB's Terminal, 563-4216; and a new one, Inner Circle, 687-4946.

Use 8-N-1 as your modem settings. All the boards support 2400 bps and all, with the exception of Pandemonium, are available 24 hours a day. Two boards, Pandemonium and Telegraph Road, request a small fee for full access, the others are free.

Each board has similarities, but each also has a different "personality" determined by the BBS software that's being used and the sysop running the board. Some are very graphics-oriented with colorful screens and menus. Others provide a simple text listing of options available to the caller.

When you log on, the first thing that happens is that the system asks your name. It compares you with its list of users, and if you're new it leads you

Safety train prepares for spills

DEER PARK, Texas (AP) — Calvin Tobias' office is the inside of a railroad tank car that once contained hundreds of gallons of lethal sulfuric acid.

"I think the reason I got the job is because I spent four years in the submarine service," Tobias jokes, his voice echoing amid the valves and pipes that line the inside of the tanker.

Tobias is in on inaugural cross-continent tour of petrochemical plants operated by Philadelphia-based Rohm and Haas Co., teaching industrial emergency crews and municipal fire and public safety officers how to respond to tanker accidents.

"If the hose should break and he should have a fire, how does he shut off that valve?" says Tobias, explaining the basic role of his instruction.

According to the Chemical Manufacturers Association, some 1,000 rail tanker incidents were handled in 1988, the latest year for which figures are available. Ninety percent of the incidents involved substances released from valves, and were not caused by tanker accidents.

"Most of our emergency responses on rail cars are due to human error," says Tobias. "They do not put the plugs in wrench-tight. These things vibrate like the devil as they go down the tracks. And these valves tend to jiggle open. If this is wrench tight, it shouldn't leak."

Calvin Tobias teaches industrial safety to Rohm and Haas Co. emergency crews, municipal fire and public safety officers in "safety train," a railroad tank car that serves as a classroom.

Tobias has been with Rohm and Haas for 35 years, starting in a chemistry lab and moving through the ranks to chief fire marshal, health and safety director and then emergency response manager for 11 years.

His mobile office literally is a refurbished tanker car, purchased from DuPont and fitted with an estimated $40,000 worth of valves and mechanisms that emergency safety crews would be likely to come upon at the scene of an accident.

The valves operate with the same force and direction as those on a working tanker. Some of the lines shoot out air to simulate vapor and spew water to simulate liquid chemicals.

His tanker car, which has a door cut out of the end and is lit inside with fluorescent lamps, is meant to take away some of the mystery of the inside of a tanker.

His car inside is sparkling white, with displays of valves, drain and fill pipes and illustrations of the different thicknesses of a tanker's skin. There's even a crack in the tanker so authorities responding to a leak can learn how to deal with it.

"Look at these valves," Tobias says. "It's not like a watch. They can withstand a lot of abuse and a lot of service. If we shut all our valves off and tight and put all the plugs in the valves wrench-tight and button up that car before it leaves our facility, you could literally take this tank and roll it off the tracks and it shouldn't leak."

His instruction includes tips such as the fact that liquid valves always are lined up along the length of the car and vapor valves across the car. Or that high-pressure cars have simple round assemblies at the top while general purpose tankers have a number of valves at the center on top. He also gives a primer on how to read a tanker label.

"If you look at a rail car, it's a dead giveaway usually what kind of car that is and what's inside that car," he says.

INVESTORS' GUIDE

There is no state tax for savings bonds

By Bill Doyle

Doyle

Q. It is my understanding that tax on Series E and EE, U.S. Savings Bonds, interest may either be paid annually or deferred until the bonds are redeemed or reach final maturity. How is the election made to report the interest annually?

A. The vast majority of people who own E and EE bonds, as well as U.S. Savings Notes, wait until they cash the bonds before reporting the interest and paying the federal income tax due. There is no state or local income tax on U.S. Savings Bonds.

If you prefer to report that interest each year as it accumulates on your bonds, that's an easy thing to do. Simply show it as interest income on Schedule B of your Form 1040 federal income tax return. List "U.S. Treasury (Savings Bonds)" as the payer. You can do this if you are a "cash basis" taxpayer, as most people are.

You can start reporting and paying tax on accrued savings bond interest in any year. When you do that, you must report the accrued interest on all the savings bonds you own — even those purchased in previous years. There's no special form needed for that.

However, if you want to switch from reporting that interest annually to the far more popular method of deferring the interest, you must fill out and attach Internal Revenue Service Form 3115 to the income tax return you file for the year of the change.

Write "Filed under Rev. Proc. 89-14" on the top of Form 3115. Attach a statement that you have reported all accrued savings bond interest and agree to report all future accrued savings bond interest. Permission to make the change will be automatically granted.

Q. If I start reporting and paying federal income tax annually on U.S. Savings Bond interest as it accrues, won't the IRS come after me when I finally redeem an E or EE bond and report only the interest for that final year?

A. Yes, because the bank or other paying agent at which you cash a savings bond with $10 or more of accrued interest issues a Form 1099-INT to you and sends a copy in "machine readable form" to the IRS, where it is fed into computers.

When the computer "matching" shows you did not report all the accrued interest from a savings bond on the income tax return you file for the year the bond was redeemed, you will hear from the revenooers.

But you will be able to square things away, if you have kept careful records — copies of every income tax return on which you have reported savings bond interest as it accrued. Yes, that is a bother and a complication that goes with reporting savings bond interest annually.

Q. We plan to buy EE bonds as an education fund for our newborn daughter. We know that by having the bonds registered in beneficiary form — in her name, payable on death to me or my husband, the bonds will belong to our daughter, as will the income tax obligation. Our plan is to report her EE bond interest annually, so she will not be hit with a large tax bill when she cashes the bonds for college expenses.

But does this mean our daughter (us doing it for her) will have to file a federal income tax return each and every year, in order to report the little bit of interest building up on her EE bonds?

A. No. Using your method, which is a good one, you file an income tax return in the child's name for the year in which the first bonds were purchased and report that year's accrued interest.

That first year filing establishes intent to report the accrued savings bond interest annually. No other return needs to be filed until her annual interest and other so-called "unearned income" reaches $500.

Q. How can I determine the interest building up on each of my E and EE bonds each year?

A. By obtaining "Tables of Redemption Values" booklets from the Superintendent of Documents, U.S. Government Printing Office, Washington, DC 20402. The E bond booklet costs $2.25, the EE bond version $1. Phone orders can be placed by calling 1-202-783-3238.

NOTES: Experiment with local bulletin boards first through some questions about how you want your screen and system to be set up, asks for some ID information (which is kept confidential), and then asks you to enter a password for future access.

Generally, the first time you call you're limited to the amount of time you can spend on-line and/or the number of files you can download. After the sysop checks your "registration" info, you get upgraded to full user status.

Doug Adams offers this helpful tip: "The first thing a new user should do is try to contact the sysop and see what his goals are for the board." You can either page the sysop to join you while you're on line or leave a message for him to read later. Tommy Chau likes BBSs because "...there aren't many things you can do over and over again and every time it is different."

Next, you're presented with the main menu. A typical offering may consist of "Messages and Conferences," "File Transfer Area," "Information Center," "Comment to Sysop," "Doors," and "Bulletins."

You can tell the system that you want it to automatically check for new "mail" every time you call — i.e., messages that have been left since the last time you logged on. Message-exchanging is one of the most popular features of any BBS. Cliff Mcgee, Inner Circle sysop, says "People are not afraid to say what they mean because they don't have to look you in the face or feel intimidated."

George Sitton feels BBSs are "... the last bastion of free speech and free press that isn't controlled exclusively by commercial interests. Thus, we're almost an underground communications system unto ourselves!"

On some systems you can use a "handle," much like in CB-land, to remain totally incognito. You can chat with Yankee, Midnight, Killer, or Turbo. On Telegraph Road, Lusty Lady conducts an online "advice" column.

The Phantom, sysop of Phantom Mesa, offers "Several help files for the new user, and there are always those on the BBS that can answer most of the new user's questions concerning equipment and software." Phantom Mesa also publishes a monthly newsletter which is distributed at Software Etc. and Radio Shack in the mall.

If you enter the message section, you'll find another menu. Your choices now might include "Read a Message," "Enter a Message," "Text Search", "Change Message Area," etc. On some systems, you may have a "command line" with a bunch of single-letter options instead of a menu. Usually, until you're more familiar with the system, you can bring up a menu by typing a "?" at the prompt.

Phantom Mesa, Telegraph Road, and L.B.'s Terminal seem to have the most active and interesting ongoing conversations.

In the files area, you can choose to "Download a File" (receive one), "Upload a File" (send them one), "Change File Area," "List Files," "Search for a File," etc. Different file areas will contain related files for a specific topic. ApacheLand supports a large number of various computers, for example, by offering 16 file areas such as "Commodore 64 Applications," "Commodore 128 Games," "MS-DOS Business Applications," and "Amiga Utilities," for example.

On-line games are usually available through "doors." You can sometimes even find someone online to play chess interactively. If you're into games, give Pandemonium a call. According to co-sysop Joe Ewbank, "We offer the most doors in town, and basically rely on the doors to "snare" our users ..." It can be addictive.

BBSs are so popular, there's even a monthly publication devoted to BBS-related topics: Boardwatch Magazine, 5970 South Vivian St., Littleton, Co. 80127. Subsciption is $28 a year.

Meditation mecca fuels small-town boom

By Sharon Cohen

FAIRFIELD, Iowa (AP) — In the quiet of the morning, when the sun peeks over the rolling farm fields, the trek to the golden dome begins. One by one, businessmen arrive, ready to start their day — by sitting in silence.

There are oil brokers and engineers. A toymaker, too. All are successful entrepreneurs. And all are meditators.

Thousands of souls have flocked to this meditation mecca, home of Maharishi International University, to study, share a lifestyle and build their own businesses — a trend that has spawned prosperity and growth in an isolated patch of America's heartland.

"It is a remarkable community," says Daniel Dittemore, head of the Iowa Product Development Corporation, a state-sponsored seed capital investment program. "They have an uncommon appetite and knack for entrepreneurship."

In the last several years, scores of transcendental meditators have moved their companies to Fairfield or begun new ones here. There's an ice cream maker who markets to stores in New York, Chicago and other cities, a chimney sweep supplier with thousands of customers, a studio that photographs many of the country's top marathons, and a toymaker who produces the Zube Tube, a hot-selling cylinder touted as the "ultimate cosmic sound machine."

Others are engineers, attorneys, insurance agents or computer experts. By one estimate, there are about 20 computer companies, thus the nickname "Silicorn Valley."

"There's a remarkable population of technologically oriented companies out of all proportion of what you'd expect to find in a community that size," said Dittemore.

Iowa Gov. Terry Branstad has dubbed Fairfield, a town of 11,000, one of the state's economic "superstars."

The local business chamber doesn't track the number of companies run or owned by meditators, but some in the community claim such firms employ about 1,000 people and more than 50 do business nationally or overseas.

Fairfield, Iowa Mayor Bob Rasmussen poses recently in front of the Golden Domes of Pure Knowledge on the Maharishi International University campus. Thousands of people have flocked to this meditation mecca to study and to build their own businesses.

"We've put a lot of energy into this town, a lot of money, a lot of talent and a lot of job opportunities," said John Narducci, president of Chappell Studio-Marathon Foto, which photographs marathons and nearly a quarter-million graduates annually.

"Any small town in the Midwest would like to have 2,500 people," said Jerry Leahy, a meditator who is board chairman of Overland Outfitters, a family-owned outerwear firm with 11 stores nationwide. "It just isn't often you have them come in and bring their own jobs and bring their own payroll."

Though meditators contribute to Fairfield's success, they're not the prime movers, said Mike Brouwer, executive vice president of the Chamber of Commerce, which has about 400 members.

"I'm not willing to slight 22 major manufacturers in this community — some have been here over 100 years," he said.

But he credits the meditators with creating innovative ways to support themselves.

Some come because of the university, others because "the benefits seem to grow when you're meditating with other people," said Patty Schneider, public affairs chief at the college, founded by the Maharishi Mahesh Yogi, the Indian guru who once dazzled the Beatles and other celebrities.

Transcendental meditators believe if they gather in large numbers, they create the "Maharishi Effect" — a positive influence on events ranging from global conflicts to the rate of traffic deaths. More than 7,000 meditators gathered here in 1983 for the "Taste of Utopia."

Each morning and afternoon, meditators practice their technique in the Golden Domes of Pure Knowledge — one for ladies, one for gents, to avoid distractions.

Estimates of meditators range from 2,000 to 3,000; many attend or work at the university, which moved from California in 1974 into the campus of defunct Parsons College and has a full-time enrollment of 799. Meditators also run their own school for elementary and high school students.

The strait-laced appearance fits in well with mid-America, and meditators work side-by-side with non-meditators in businesses and the City Council.

But "there's still the dividing line between those people and some people in the community," said Royse Huff, president of the Fairfield Economic Development Association.

Some things remain destined to stay separate, such as the yogic flying competitions, which prompted one enterprising company years ago to sell cushions to soften levitation landings.

Yogic flying, according to Vedic tradition, has three stages: hopping (usually cross-legged on a padded course), hovering and flying. "We have been in the first stage quite a number of years," Mrs. Schneider says.

Such happenings trigger jokes and the nickname "the flying university."

Brouwer doesn't mind. "I have such a thick skin over it over the years that it doesn't bother me because there are so many good things that come out of the relationship between MIU and Fairfield," he said.

"We don't have a lot of empty buildings, valuation of houses has increased substantially," he said. "They can make all the fun they want. We're doing just fine, and thank you."

The town, he added, is not about to lose its identity. "I'm a strong believer we have enough of a solid base ... it's not going to be a matter of them taking over the city," he said.

But the mayor also noted attitudes have changed since the early days when some townsfolk wondered if the meditators were a cult or a religion.

"There's certainly a stronger acceptance ... (and) less divisiveness," he said. "They've integrated much better ... We respect each other and get along."

"Iowans have a work ethic and a sense of clean living that we fit very well with as a group," said Rob Glazier, a meditator whose engineering firm has grown from four employees to 75 in three years.

Some say acceptance just took time.

"People in a town like this have been here three or four generations," said Bob Daniels, a meditator with a chimney sweep supply company. "They may want to take 10 years checking you out. That's not bad."

Indeed, Huff praises the meditators for demonstrating "how business can be done internationally." Others say they've added a cosmopolitan flavor to Fairfield.

"We're not quite as utopian," the mayor responds. "When they say this is heaven, I like Fairfield, but I like Naples, Fla., too."

No one wants to be in this 'Who's Who'

NEWARK, N.J. (AP) — City Council is publishing its own newspaper, a "Who's Who" of names and addresses of alleged prostitutes and their customers in an effort to use shame to cut down on their business.

"We can't print enough copies. There's a great demand for these things. People are looking for their husbands, for their neighbors," Council president Henry Martinez said of The Newark City Council Monitor News Supplement.

The quarterly newspaper, which recently published its third issue, is mailed to voters and has a circulation of 60,000. It also lists people arrested for drug offenses.

But an American Civil Liberties Union official says the paper should be discontinued.

Deborah Ellis, legal director of the ACLU in Newark, said printing the names of arrested people treats them as though they have been convicted.

"I would feel differently if they publicized the names if people are convicted," Ms. Ellis said. "Under our system of justice, you're not guilty until you're convicted, not when you're arrested."

Martinez said the publication follows the same practice as most newspapers. A council survey found that 90 percent of New Jersey newspapers publish the names of people who are arrested.

The Star-Ledger of Newark, however, does not publish the names of those arrested for prostitution-related charges. City officials asked the newspaper to include the arrests, but it refused, Martinez said.

Rick Everett, assistant city editor at the Star-Ledger, said the newspaper decided not to run the names because they were disorderly person offenses, and deemed not newsworthy.

He said statistics show that 40 percent of the prostitutes arrested in Newark are men dressed as women. While a small percentage of the customers seek transvestites, others think they are picking up a woman and the result is often robbery, Martinez.

California governor's race gets rougher for Feinstein

By George Raine
Hearst News Service

SAN FRANCISCO – In choosing the Democratic nominee for governor this year, Californians will find, beyond hyperbole and glib political theater, one compelling question: Did Dianne Feinstein mismanage San Francisco's budget?

In hardball political advertising that aired last week, Attorney General John Van de Kamp, her opponent in the suddenly acrid race, asserted Feinstein is unfit to manage a state budget of $53 billion. He was incredulous that she denies leaving San Francisco in deficit.

In a reply that was rapid and as sharp, Feinstein characterized Van de Kamp's advertising as Nixonian and held herself as taking the higher political road.

It is not possible in 30 seconds of speeding television images to detail the rise and fall of a city's $2 billion budget or to trace the spending of a $152 million surplus that developed early in Feinstein's nine-year tenure as mayor of San Francisco. But this is one of the most important issues in the race.

Feinstein did not leave a deficit, as cities cannot by law operate under a deficit, and fiscal managers have extraordinary powers to balance budgets, Budget Analyst Harvey Rose explained.

At issue is the projected revenue shortfall of $172.4 million that was forecast in February 1988 for the following fiscal year, after Feinstein left office, and which has dogged her political life since.

The shortfall, Richie Ross, Van de Kamp's manager, has long held, is a devastating blow from which she cannot recover.

"That's baloney," says Feinstein.

This is what happened: When Feinstein became mayor in 1978, she was greeted with a $130 projected deficit. In June 1980, she proposed to the Board of Supervisors what she called the "fair share plan" to increase revenues, and this included a boost in the business tax from 1.1 percent to 1.5 percent.

The legality of the board's ability to raise the tax was challenged by a lawsuit, under the provisions of Proposition 13, and the state Supreme Court ultimately ruled in the board's favor.

By that time $152 million had been collected, money Feinstein stresses was for the funding of city services in the first place. And it is here the story slips over the gray political horizon.

Within three years most of the money was gone. Half was spent on infrastructure – on road repair, on buses and on other capital improvements – and the remainder on one-time, year-to-year and emergency expenditures. In that time, San Francisco spent $35 million on AIDS care and programming, $10 million each on housing and care for the homeless and several million for medical care for indigents.

But a pattern was developing, says Van de Kamp, of drawing too rapidly on the surplus while creating continuing expenses. This included the hiring of 1,600 city employees, including 300 additional police officers (who Feinstein says helped reduce the crime rate by 20 percent).

Then, in 1985, Supervisor Richard Hongisto, with the support of budget analyst Rose, warned that if spending continued apace San Francisco would encounter a projected deficit of $95 million by 1988.

Hongisto to this day has a newspaper headline carrying the prediction taped to his office door, and he winces at the memory of what Feinstein said at the time, that he "must be smoking something."

As her years in office drew to a close, budget analysts told Feinstein that there would be a projected shortfall of $77 million for the 1988-89 fiscal year, beginning in July, six months into Mayor Agnos' term. On Dec. 9, 1987, she handed the supervisors a plan for coping, including a hiring freeze.

But the city controller and budget analyst in early 1988 quickly projected a much greater deficit, $172.4 million, which Agnos said was "so high that we ourselves could not believe it," and which Feinstein said was not her doing.

Agnos, a Van de Kamp ally, said Feinstein over nine years "spent more than she earned ... and because we have a balanced-budget requirement she made up the difference between her spending and her earnings by going to the savings account, which was called the surplus."

He added, "The facts indicate a financial weakness of management because we were spending more than we were taking in and living off the bank account."

Agnos and Feinstein were never allied closely, but the split came when Feinstein backed her Board of Supervisors colleague, John Molinari, as her successor in the mayoral race. The chill was evident in Agnos' voice one day last month when he endorsed Van de Kamp in the Democratic primary.

Finally, Hongisto spreads the blame far and wide: "We can show that Feinstein didn't conduct her budget in what I would consider an ideal fashion, but who the hell has?"

Courtesy urged when using video camera

ROCHESTER, N.Y. (AP) — Ann Landers is annoyed at how impolite people become when they use video cameras and appealed to Eastman Kodak Co. to help out by printing a brochure on photography etiquette.

Ann Landers' column published a letter from a reader complaining about video camera enthusiasts who elbow their way to the best seats at public events.

"We have nothing to do with camcorders," said Eastman Kodak spokeswoman Darlene Aiken.

The columnist replied, "I wish the film companies would come out with a brochure on photography etiquette and stick it in with the film. There's a real need for this sort of thing, as your letter clearly indicates. How about it, Eastman Kodak?"

Novelist leads Peruvian election

Mario Vargas Llosa not enough ahead to avoid presidential runoff

LIMA, Peru (AP) — Celebrated novelist Mario Vargas Llosa won the first round of presidential elections Sunday, but he fell far short of the majority needed to avoid a runoff, according to unofficial projections.

Rebels trying to sabotage the elections attacked some polling stations in Lima with dynamite Sunday, but no one was reported injured. The attacks followed a day of guerrilla assaults in Lima and two other cities that killed at least two people and wounded 30, authorities said.

The Maoist Shining Path has assassinated six congressional candidates and killed or wounded dozens of other people in recent weeks, aiming to disrupt the election.

Vargas Llosa, 54, of the center-right Democratic Front coalition, has run on a free-market ticket. He said the results showed voters had rejected leftist policies and the governing left-of-center Aprista Party for its "catastrophic five years in government."

"The country's political panorama has changed profoundly with this election," he said.

APOYO said Alberto Fujimori, the son of Japanese immigrants, was in second place in its projections with 26.7 percent. Fujimori is a political independent who was virtually unknown to Peruvian voters as recently as a month ago.

Peruvian Public Opinion projected 33.1 percent as Vargas Llosa's final tally and 26.2 percent for Fujimori.

APOYO, one of Peru's most respected polling firms, said its results were based on the initial 54 percent of its total interviews done nationwide. It said that was a big enough sample to project a final vote.

The market research firm also said Aprista Party candidate Luis Alva Castro had 13.2 percent of the votes in its projections. It said Henry Pease, candidate of the United Left, had 7 percent while Alfonso Barrantes, candidate of the Socialist Left, 4 percent.

The rest of the votes were spread among four minor party candidates and blank or nullified votes, according to APOYO. Officials returns are not expected for weeks.

At a news conference, Vargas Llosa proposed that he and Fujimori meet to discuss ways to avoid a second election, saving Peru from the turmoil of two more months of campaigning.

Fujimori arrived minutes later at the news conference and congratulated Vargas Llosa. But at a later news conference, he rejected any possibility of stepping aside to avoid a runoff.

"I believe a second round is necessary to debate our proposals," he said. "The verdict should be the public's."

During the campaign, Vargas Llosa has sharply attacked the Aprista Party and the two leftist alliances. He is unlikely to have their support in the runoff.

In contrast, Fujimori has run a conciliatory campaign without attacks. He is believed to have support within the Aprista Party.

"The left is not going to support the Democratic Front because of the polarization that has been generated in the country," Fujimori said in a news conference after polls closed at 5 p.m.

The campaign has brought a surge in popularity for Fujimori. Last week, Fukimori, 51, rose into second place in voter surveys, displacing Alva Castro, 48.

The Peruvian Public Opionion projections of the final vote also indicated the Democratic Front would win only 23 seats in the 60-seat senate and 63 seats in the 180-seat chamber of deputies.

That would make it very difficult for Vargas Llosa, 54, to impose the severe austerity measures he has pledged if he wins. He says radical economic reforms are needed to revive Peru's moribund economy and turn Peru into a "modern nation" free of the socialist policies he says have stiffled growth for two decades. Inflation is running at more than 2,000 percent annually.

Voters are choosing a president to replace populist Alan Garcia, whose five-year term ends July 28. He is legally ineligible to serve a consecutive term.

Hungarian conservatives gain big victory

BUDAPEST, Hungary (AP) — Voters choosing Hungary's first freely elected government in 43 years gave an overwhelming victory Sunday to Hungary's main conservative party, according to final unofficial results.

It was the second conservative sweep in Eastern Europe in as many free elections. East Germans gave conservatives a clear victory in elections on March 18, relegating the Communists to an opposition role.

In Hungary, Democratic Forum President Jozsef Antall declared, "I am completely certain that we won the elections.

"But it is not we, but the Hungarian people who have won these elections," he said to jubilant supporters crowding party headquarters six hours after polls closed.

Final official results for the 261 parliamentary seats at stake in runoff elections Sunday were not expected before Tuesday. The results were combined with elections held March 25 for a total of 386 seats in the 394-member parliament. Eights seats will be allocated based on minority representation.

The national vote counting center reporting unofficial results show the conservative Hungarian Democratic Forum winning 42.7 percent of the vote. That gave the party 165 seats after both rounds.

Their closest rivals, the liberal Alliance of Free Democrats, won 23.8 percent of the vote, or a total of 92 seats.

The agrarian-based Smallholders party won 43 districts with 11.1 percent of the vote, while reform Communists grouped in the Socialist Party had won 33 with 8.55 percent.

The Federation of Young Democrats and the Christian Democrats won 21 seats with 5.4 percent of the vote each.

The other 11 seats were divided among six independents, four candidates supported by several parties, and a candidate of the splinter Agrarian Federation.

WORLD IN BRIEF

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — The Palestinian guerrilla group of terrorist mastermind Abu Nidal on Saturday appealed for the release of two Swiss Red Cross hostages kidnapped in Lebanon.

Police have said Abu Nidal's own group was the prime suspect in the abduction of the two Swiss workers in Sidon on Oct. 6, but the group has denied any responsibility.

On Friday, the Council said preparations were under way to free at least three French and Belgian hostages it holds in response to an appeal from Libya leader Col. Moammar Gadhafi.

Saturday's statement signed by Fatah-Revolutionary Council spokesman Mansour Hamdan said: "In these moments when arrangements are under way to release some hostages and captives, I issue this brotherly appeal to the side that kidnapped Elio Erriquez and Emmanuel Christen, the two Swiss workers for one of the International Red Cross centers in Lebanon, ... to solve this problem."

The typewritten Arabic-language statement said the group was ready "to provide all the guarantees demanded by the kidnappers to solve this tragedy."

Prison riots continue

LONDON (AP) — Riots broke out in seven prisons in England and Wales on Sunday, and one government official said the uprisings were inspired by the 8-day-old rebellion at Strangeways Prison. One inmate was found dead in his cell.

The government said it was too dangerous to forcibly end the siege at Strangeways in the north-central city of Manchester because of the condition of the largely demolished prison buildings.

Only 22 of the hundreds of Strangeways inmates who rioted on April 1 remain on the loose, authorities said. The overcrowded prison was heavily damaged when inmates set fires and hurled roof tiles at guards and firefighters.

In Dartmoor prison in southwest England inmates hurled chunks of roofing into the prison courtyard and set fires in their cells, prison governor John May said.

Almost 100 prisoners barricades themselves into one wing of the prison, but all but one had given up by Sunday night.

Urban workforce down

BEIJING (AP) — China's urban workforce declined by 1.5 million in the first two months of 1990, with smaller collective firms showing the largest loss of workers, an official daily said Sunday.

The drop in working people continued a yearlong slump in the labor market caused by government austerity measures that have curbed inflation but brought economic growth to a standstill.

Millions of factories around the country have closed down or are operating at a reduced pace because of a lack of raw materials and operating funds.

DOHA, Qatar (AP) — The emir of Qatar, Sheik Khalifa bin Hamad al-Thani, on Sunday ordered that 57 prisoners be freed to mark the holy month of Ramadan, the official Qatar News Agency reported.

It is customary for leaders of Islamic countries to release prisoners in honor of Moslem holidays.

The world's 1 billion Moslems fast from dawn to dusk during Ramadan. The three-day Eid al-Fitr feast that marks the end of the holiday is expected to fall this year around April 26, depending when the new moon is sighted.

Earlier this month, 364 prisoners were freed in the United Arab Emirates to mark Ramadan.

Slovenia holds election

LJUBLJANA, Yugoslavia (AP) — Slovenians voted Sunday in the first free elections in Yugoslavia since World War II, ending 45 years of Communist monopoly on power in the republic.

The 1.5 million registered voters will choose Slovenia's new president, four members of the ruling collective presidency and 240 members of the new multiparty Parliament.

PART-TIME $$$$$ AVAILABLE
April 2 the Midland Reporter-Telegram became a morning newspaper instead of an afternoon newspaper. As a result we have several routes which need to be re-filled with qualified, responsible individuals. Due to this one-time large number of routes available, now is the best time ever to obtain a route in your area!

Often asked questions:

Is it worthwhile for adults also?
Yes! Our current carrier force is already 60% adult and 40% youth. Morning newspaper routes are attractive for:
- ADULTS who have full-time jobs, yet want to supplement their income with a steady part-time job.
- MOTHERS who can't justify a part time job and daycare, because as a carrier, you do not need daycare!
- COLLEGE STUDENTS needing a part-time job which will work with classes!
- YOUTHS who are involved in afternoon school functions, but want to work!
- SENIOR CITIZENS wanting regular exercise, added income, or just want to work with people, neighbors, and friends!

Depending on the size of the route(s), from $150 to $500 monthly! Some motor routes make even more, although currently none are expected to be available. Depending on your service record, you may qualify to move up to a motor route later!

The actual delivery takes 1-2 hours Monday - Saturday, and 2-3 hours on Sunday, again depending on the size of the route(s). Also, a few hours a month are needed to collect from subscribers. Many carriers choose to handle some of this by putting envelopes in subscribers' papers. Some collecting in person will be necessary though.

When do the papers have to be delivered by?
6:00 am Monday - Friday, and 7:00 am Saturday and Sunday.

Do I ever get a day off?
The job requires a 7-day a week commitment. However, carriers do take days off by finding a friend or family member to substitute for them!
