Fifth man chooses execution over life of appeals

RICHMOND, Va. (AP) — Convicted murderer Frank J. Coppola, a former policeman who once studied to be a Roman Catholic priest, went to his death without hesitancy and without defiance, a witness said today.

Copolla, 38, asked a minister to "look after my family," embraced him and strode off coolly and willingly to the electric chair Tuesday night. He was pronounced dead at 11:27 p.m., 61 minutes after the U.S. Supreme Court acceded to his hand-written plea for a speedy execution.

Coppola insisted he was innocent of killing Muriel Hatchell, 45, whose skull was crushed during a robbery at her home in Newport News in 1978. Testimony said he repeatedly pounded her head into the floor because she refused to say where she kept her money. Others involved in the crime said he was the killer.

But Coppola, who said he was ready to die to maintain his dignity and spare his family agony of further appeals, resisted attempts to have his execution stayed.

One of the six witnesses to the execution was state legislator J. Samuel Glasscock of Suffolk.

Coppola, clad in traditional prison garb of blue denim, was led into the narrow chamber by two guards as the witnesses watched from behind a glass partition, Glasscock said.

"There was no hesitancy," he said. "There was no look of defiance on his face."

Glasscock said Coppola, after conversing with guards, was strapped with leather harnesses into the polished oak chair, built by inmates in 1908.

A cap studded with electrodes was placed on his shaved head. A band containing electrodes was placed around his right ankle. Guards placed a leather blindfold over his face.

A corrections department officer pulled the switch, throwing two 55-second charges of 2,500 volts of electricity through Coppola's body.

Restrained by the straps, his body moved forward slightly, Glasscock said. There were no sounds, either from the machinery or from Coppola.

The scene "was sterile but not without its emotion," Glasscock said.

Three hours before he walked to the chair, Coppola told Norfolk Ledger-Star reporter Larry Bonko by telephone, "I'm geared to die at 11 o'clock tonight. I'm at an emotional peak."

Council sets grant funds hearing date

By LANA CUNNINGHAM

Midland City Council set 5 p.m. Aug. 24 as the date for a public hearing on proposed uses of Community Development Block Grant funds in the 1982-83 application during its meeting Tuesday in City Hall Council Chambers.

In other action, the council outlined the areas to be included in the annexation ordinance, set a hearing on the Revenue Sharing funds budget, approved a firm to conduct a land use zoning study, purchased a new fire truck and approved a lease concept for the Soil and Water Conservation Service.

Susan Howell, CD coordinator who is preparing the 1982-83 application, explained that a second public hearing is required on the proposed uses of the $949,000 before the application can be submitted to the Department of Housing and Urban Development.

THE FIRST PUBLIC hearing was held about a month ago to gain input from citizens as to how they wanted to see the money used. These ideas were incorporated into a tentative list and submitted to the council.

In reviewing the list, the council eliminated the county's request for $47,000 to get the day care center at Taylor Park equipped and opened. The council is allowing the county to put the day care center — being built by county CD funds — in the city-owned park. In making the request at the first hearing, representatives from the day care center board said they had only enough money to construct the building, but no funds to furnish and equip it.

In looking at the request, Councilman Tom Sloan said he thought the county wanted only the park land from the city and nothing more. "This will publicly notify the county to live up to their obligations," he said as he struck the request from the list with the approval of the rest of the council.

He also disagreed with the $50,000 listed for administrative costs, saying he thought it was too much money. Councilman Gordon Marcum II disagreed, saying, "That's a very low administrative cost."

"I think that's tragic," Sloan said of the $50,000 figure.

SUPPORTING THE FIGURE was Richard Hennessy, director of planning and community development, who said, "Five percent of the whole fund is an extremely low cost for administration on any federal program."

"That's why you shouldn't let your money get in the hands of any goverment entity — city, county or federal. Their hands are too leaky," Sloan interjected.

The list at the Aug. 24 meeting that will be considered includes $50,000 for clearance and demolition; $150,000, parks improvements; $100,000, code enforcement; $146,000, paving; $250,000, housing rehabilitation; $47,000, community center; $10,000, beautify Midland; $146,000, drainage; $50,000, administration.

The list won't be finalized until after the next public hearing.

The council also set 5 p.m. Aug. 24 as the date for the federal Revenue Sharing budget for 1982-83.

In determining the areas to be included in the annexation ordinance that will be considered on first reading at the Aug. 24 meeting, the council split

Scene of the crime

Police look for clues outside a Fort Worth residence, Tuesday. Detectives investigating the decapitation of a 31-year-old man at his home found four more bodies next door while looking for witnesses concerning the first death. The decapitated man was identified as Rick Lee Bryant, 31, said the Tarrant County Medical Examiner.

Man held in Fort Worth slayings

FORT WORTH, Texas (AP) — Identification papers belonging to some of the five people discovered fatally slashed, stabbed or shot — including a man who was decapitated and sexually mutiliated — were found on a man sleeping in a car in Kansas, and he was taken into custody, police said today.

Fort Worth authorities sent investigators to Wichita, Kan., early today to question the man about the killings of two men, two women and a 9-year-old boy in two secluded lakeside cottages near Lake Worth, said Wichita Police Capt. Rick Easter.

Easter identified the man as Larry Keith Robison. Robison's only police record showed two theft arrests in the mid-1970s, he said.

"After doing some checking, we found he was wanted in Texas," Easter said. "Evidence found by officers indicated that he was connected to one of the victims there." He said officers found a driver's license belonging to Ricky Lee Bryant, 31, the decapitated victim.

Easter said Robison was found asleep in a car behind a church in downtown Wichita, near a highway bypass, by police officer Terri Richter.

Wichita police Lt. Gary Stokes said Robison was taken into custody because of a gun found on the floor of the vehicle. The man offered no resistance and was taken to police headquarters, where the identification papers of several Fort Worth residents were found on him, Stokes said.

Wichita officials checked with Fort Worth authorities and learned the papers belonged to some of the people slain at Lake Worth.

Wichita is some 425 miles from Fort Worth. The killings at Lake Worth brought to four the number of mass slayings to come to light in Texas in less than a week.

One of the victims had been decapitated and sexually mutilated, Fort Worth police said.

Spent .22-caliber cartridges were recovered from the house where the decapitated man was found by his mother Tuesday and from the cottage next door where detectives came upon the other bodies while investigating the man's death, police said.

The throats of the four in the second house, including the child, had been cut, said medical investigator J.L. Kirkpatrick of the Tarrant County medical examiner's office.

Medical Examiner Nizam Peerwani said the victims may have been shot or strangled in addition to being stabbed repeatedly. Autopsies were scheduled for today.

Bryant, 31, had lived at the house for about 10 years and in the lake area for most of his life, said his mother, Junett Bryant.

Investigators said Mrs. Bryant found her son dead and naked, lying beside his bed with his severed head in the crook of his arm. Police said his penis and testicles were found elsewhere in the house.

"I really have no idea who would want to do this," his father, Donald Bryant said. "He's not a wild boy. He's been very close to us. He comes over for dinner just about every night."

Three of the other four victims were tentatively identified as Georgia Reed, in her 30s, her mother, in her early 50s, and the younger woman's son, Scott, about 9, said police detective A.J. Tiroff. The fourth victim was an unidentified man in his 40s.

The boy, wearing white undershorts, and his naked mother were found lying on the floors of separate bedrooms, police said.

Ms. Reed's mother, wearing lavender pajamas, and the unidentified man, wearing jeans and boots, were found lying side by side, with his head beside her feet, in a kitchen alcove. Detectives spotted the two bodies when they peered through glass in the front door after their knock was not answered.

Earlier, Assistant District Attorney J.E. McEntire said authorities knew of a suspect they wanted to question. Tiroff said police had no suspects.

"We don't know where we are," Tiroff said late Tuesday night outside the cottages. "We're still in the asking stages. We're not even positive who we've got in there."

He said officials are investigating whether the female victims were sexually molested.

Tax proposal gets MMH nod

By GAIL BURKE
Staff Writer

Midland Memorial Hospital's board of directors accepted a proposal Tuesday to increase tax revenue while holding the hospital tax rate at seven cents.

The proposal will increase tax revenues from properties on the tax roll in 1981 by 8.41 percent without increasing the tax rate.

The Midland County Tax Appraisal District recommended to MMH a tax rate of .06457 cents per $100 valuation for the 1982 tax roll, which would keep the same revenue coming into the hospital as in 1981.

But because the hospital's indigent care expenditures for the current year should exceed the budgeted amount by $200,000, the MMH finance committee has tentatively budgeted $1.2 million in 1983 for indigent care compared to $600,000 budgeted for 1982.

By increasing the recommended tax rate of .06457 to seven cents per $100 valuation, the hospital will receive additional revenue needed to cover the increase in indigent care. While the tax rate for the hospital district for next year will remain the same as this year, the property owner's tax payment could go up or down depending upon if his property was appraised higher or lower than the 1981-82 tax roll. If the appraisal of his property remains the same, his tax payment to the hospital will be the same amount as last year.

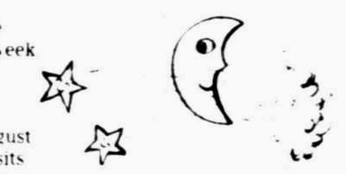

The directors voted to hold a public hearing to consider the tax rate at 4:30 p.m. Aug. 20 in the MMH board room after Roy Campbell, MMH chairman of the board of trustees, presented the proposal from the finance committee to the directors.

"The finance committee has proposed not to raise the tax rate, but to keep it at seven cents per $100 valuation," Campbell said.

"This would mean that a family with a $50,000 valuation home would pay $35 a year or a little under $3 a month," Campbell said.

"By holding the tax rate at seven cents, this would be the first major step in implementing our source of funds policy," Campbell said, referring to the policy which directs the tax dollars to go toward indigent care, the beginning of new projects and other special projects, but not for the operations of the hospital.

Star shower forecast

Staff Artist Jan Drake

Shooting stars will shower the skies this week as one of Mother Nature's annual August shows revisits the Permian Basin.

The phenomenon, known scientifically as the Perseids Shower, will reach its peak late Thursday evening and early Friday morning, according to Robert Luoma, a graduate student at The University of Texas at Austin.

"Usually it is a pretty substantial shower," Luoma told the Reporter-Telegram from the McDonald Observatory in Fort Davis. "It usually occurs from a comet or asteroid that has broken up in the past. The fragments still follow a certain orbit."

According to Luoma, the best time to observe the shooting stars is a little after midnight Thursday.

"But," he added, "they should be pretty visible earlier Thursday night."

TESCO phasing out dangerous devices

By RICHARD ORR
Staff Writer

"We do have the problem here," said Texas Electric Service Co. customer relations representative Sara St. Clair. "It was the nature of the devices."

The devices, now being phased out of existence, are voltage regulating transformers and capacitors that contain toxic substances called PCBs (polychlorinated biphenyls). Banned by the Environmental Protection Agency since 1977, the fire-resistant PCBs were used as insulating material in TESCO's equipment for years.

They also were employed by many other industries in heat transfer equipment, hydraulic systems, gas turbines and vacuum pumps, according to a TESCO PCB fact sheet, which also says:

"PCBs were found to be toxic. They are difficult to break down and tend to accumulate in animal and human tissue. PCBs can be absorbed through inhalation, ingestion or physical contact."

Symptoms of PCB poisoning include skin eruptions, irregular skin coloring, swelling of the eyelids and excessive eye discharge.

"These symptoms occurred in 1,100 people in Japan after they ate a PCB-contaminated rice oil," notes TESCO. "This highly publicized and heavily investigated incident in 1968 brought about a strong call for control of the substance.

"More extensive studies into the effects of PCBs on humans are being made. However, electric utilities have pointed out that after more than 40 years of everyday use, none of their employees has been known to suffer ill effects linked to PCBs."

Animal reproduction is also affected by the PCBs, and they have generated the effects of cancer in laboratory rodents subjected to the estimated maximum tolerated dose during their lifetime.

Statewide, TESCO has some 300 transformers and 33,000 capacitors containing PCBs still in use throughout the areas it serves. There are no known PCB transformers in Midland County, however. But, said Mrs. St. Clair, all transformers are treated as though they do contain PCBs when it comes to disposing of wornout ones.

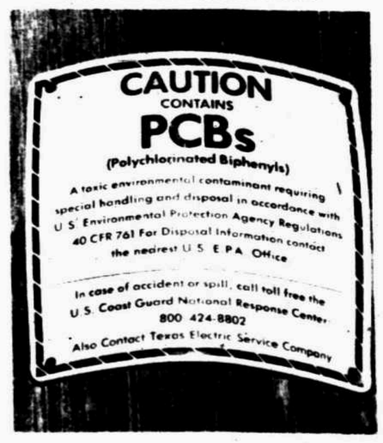

PCB-containing capacitors, several of which are still operating in the county, are regularly inspected for leaks and are replaced by non-PCB capacitors when necessary, according to TESCO.

New capacitors and transformers use alternate substances — such as mineral oil, which is flammable — as insulating material.

As a result of a court decision in May 1981, electric utility companies are conducting inspection programs on their PCB equipment and the court will use

(See TESCO, Page 4A)

Although voltage regulating capacitors, above, containing toxic PCBs are gradually being retired from existence by Texas Electric Service Co., many of them are still in operation in Midland County and elsewhere in Texas. The Environmental Protection Agency has banned the use of PCB equipment but is allowing the contaminant to be phased out. Utility poles on which PCB equipment is used are marked with yellow caution signs, right.

Congressional tax bill debate stalled by disagreement on welfare spending

WASHINGTON (AP) — A Senate-House committee has broken off negotiations on a bill raising taxes by $98.9 billion because it can't agree on a relatively minor change in welfare spending.

"We've reached a temporary impasse," Sen. Bob Dole, R-Kan., chairman of the conference committee, said Tuesday night. "If we are not going to cut spending we aren't going to raise taxes."

Rep. Dan Rostenkowski, D-Ill., who heads the House delegation, questioned whether the impasse could be broken quickly, because "the House is drastically opposed to 50 percent of what is proposed."

Cutting benefits for the sick, poor and elderly while preserving tax breaks for a relative handful of the wealthy "is going to be hard to sell" to voters in an election year, added Rep. Fortney Stark, D-Calif.

Such impasses in Congress seldom outlast a good night's sleep.

Deng's maneuvering assures party approval of his reforms

By VICTORIA GRAHAM

PEKING (AP) — Vice Chairman Deng Xiaoping's skillful maneuvering apparently has assured approval of his political and economic reforms by the Chinese Communist Party's 12th party congress, beginning Sept. 1, foreign diplomatic analysts say.

"This time it seems to have gone pretty smoothly. Deng seems to be holding most of the cards, and the congress is on schedule and not delayed because of major disputes," one foreign analyst reported after the Central Committee's secret meeting to thrash out the decisions the congress will ratify.

The congress will elect a new Central Committee to carry out Deng's program of reforms and modernization. It will approve a new party constitution that will bury the remnants of radicalism so prominent in the current constitution. It will also create a council of elder advisers, including Deng, and make other major changes.

At the last congress in August 1977, Deng had just reappeared after being purged by the radicals, and he played only a peripheral role.

TODAY THE pragmatic reformer is China's undisputed leader and has built a broad consensus. This will be his congress, the analysts say.

The pre-congress maneuvering has touched numerous areas of domestic and foreign affairs.

The domestic list includes such concessions to conservatives as a crackdown on contacts with foreigners, a debate on the open door and on artistic freedom and increased emphasis on political ideology.

The anti-corruption campaign has been heated up, possibly as a threat to Deng's opponents. And recent press reports indicate resumption of trials of radical supporters of the "Gang of Four" in Shanghai and Sichuan as a warning to the leftists.

Internationally, China has taken a harder, more nationalistic line, denouncing both the U.S. and Soviet superpowers and criticizing U.S. foreign policy and American arms sales to Taiwan.

China also has been emphasizing its identity as part of the Third World, and some analysts say the current outrage over the revision of Japanese history textbooks to whitewash Japan's military actions in China in the 1930s may be related to the congress.

DENG CANNOT afford to appear vulnerable to,or tolerant of any infringement upon Chinese sovereignty since he, above all others, is identified with the opening of China to the United States, Japan and their Western allies.

One of Deng's major goals, the analysts say, is the election of a new Central Committee of younger men sympathetic to his goals. To accomplish that, the delegates to the congress also must be sympathetic.

AP News Analysis

To that end, analysts say, Deng and his supporters have gone on the offensive and served notice that opponents had better go along.

The vice minister of the chemical industry, Yang Yibang, recently was disciplined in a corruption scandal that Chinese have been talking about privately for more than two years. He was the highest-ranking official caught in a campaign that previously had netted no big fish.

Some analysts speculate that previously Deng had not felt secure enough to bring the case into the open. But others say it is more likely Deng is warning his critics in the so-called heavy industry or petroleum faction.

THE GROUP, which includes Yang, generally favors emphasis on heavy industry and central planning while Deng and such supporters as economist Chen Yun favor light industry and more flexible planning.

Several months ago Deng successfully used the anti-corruption campaign and the threat of exposure in streamlining the central government and ousting several vice premiers who were part of the heavy industry group.

The party newspaper, the People's Daily, recently warned of the possibility of others being disciplined for economic malfeasance.

Fighting may soon end, administration says

By GENE GRABOWSKI

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Reagan administration, buoyed by news that more Arab countries are ready to take in Palestine Liberation Organization guerrillas, says a diplomatic settlement to end fighting in west Beirut may be at hand.

"We are cautiously optimistic that the remaining issues with regard to west Beirut can be worked out soon, and that we will be able to move rapidly to implementing the agreement," Alan Romberg, the State Department's deputy spokesman, said late Tuesday.

"We welcome this development as an essential element in settling the problem and are encouraged that the momentum of the negotiations continues to build," Romberg said.

Such hopeful statements followed word that Jordan and Iraq had agreed in principle to join Syria and Tunisia in accepting some of the evacuated PLO fighters.

"The Jordanians and Iraqis are lined up solidly," but the numbers they would take had not been determined, said a state department official who asked to remain anonymous.

The Sudan has already signalled its willingness to take some of the guerrillas, but Egypt was reported reluctant to accept any unless an evacuation plan is linked to self-determination for all Palestinian refugees.

Meanwhile, an ad-hoc group of about 15 Arab-Americans staged a sit-in at the Saudi Arabian embassy in Washington today to push for economic sanctions against the United States for supplying weapons to Israel.

"We singled out Saudi Arabia because it has the economic leverage to stop the carnage in Lebanon," said Dr. Hassan Haddad, a leader of the sit-in.

"We are calling on Saudi Arabia to institute an oil embargo against the United States, to withdraw all Saudi funds from American banks, and implement a boycott of American goods," Haddad said in a telephone interview from the embassy.

Embassy personnel said the sit-in was peaceful and no arrests were reported. There was no word on whether the Saudi government was seriously considering the group's recommendations.

Elsewhere, optimism for a negotiated PLO pullout from Lebanon ran high as Presidential envoy Philip Habib flew from Beirut to Israel for talks with Prime Minister Menachem Begin.

Earlier, the Israeli Cabinet agreed in principle to Habib's plan for removing the PLO from the Lebanese capital.

Habib was expected to discuss the total numbers and identities of Palestinians who will be leaving west Beirut, points on which the Israeli Cabinet had sought clarification.

At the White House, Deputy White House press secretary Larry Speakes said: "We are hopeful there can be rapid movement toward the implementation of the full peace plan."

Asked if the United States likely would send troops to help escort PLO guerrillas out of west Beirut, Speakes replied, "I would anticipate that, yes."

He said U.S. troops who take part in a peacekeeping mission to Lebanon would not stay for more than 30 days. Their task will be to assist in the evacuation and give the central government of Lebanon time to take control of the country.

Israeli opposition leader Shimon Peres said after conferring with President Reagan that the chief executive believes "we are very near to solving the Beirut problem," thus opening the way for revival of the Middle East peace process.

Hunt goes on for bandits, hostages

BULAWAYO, Zimbabwe (AP) — Four men killed by security forces in late July may have been among the 12 bandits who kidnapped two Americans and four other foreigners from a trans-Africa safari, sources close to the 18-day-old manhunt said today.

The four men were shot during the first week of the search while trying to slip through the cordon thrown up following the July 23 kidnapping, the sources said.

Meanwhile, they said, the effort to find the bandits and their hostages has not slackened, but the pace of the hunt through western Zimbabwe's rugged bush country has started to wear down men and equipment.

"At this point no one can be sure whether those tourists are alive or dead, but most of the men involved in the operation now seem to be taking it personally. They want to run those blokes to the ground," one source said.

The sources also said that shortly after the tracks of the band were lost on the fifth day of the search, July 28, soldiers found a buried cache of army uniforms, boots and civilian clothes.

"There's no doubt it was the (kidnappers') kit, and some of the civilian clothes found could have belonged to the hostages," a source said.

The tourists — two Americans, two Britons and two Australians — were marched into the bush after their bus was ambushed on the road from Victoria Falls to Bulawayo on the last leg of a London-to-Johannesburg safari.

After the kidnapping, the bandits demanded release from jail of two supporters of ousted opposition Cabinet member Joshua Nkomo and threatened to kill the hostages July 30 if their demands were not met.

The hostages are Americans Brett Baldwin, 23, a Seattle, Wash., student, and Kevin Ellis, a 24-year-old hotel worker in the Seattle suburb of Bellevue; Australians Tony Bajzelj, 25, of Tasmania, and William Butler, 31, of Newcastle; and Britons James Greenwell, 18, a Liverpool student, and Martyn Hodgson, a 35-year-old civil engineer from Peterborough.

Prime Minister Robert Mugabe blamed Nkomo for the kidnappings, which occurred in Matebeleland, home to the tribes that form Nkomo's power base. Nkomo has disavowed the abductions, and has called for release of the hostages.

Villagers loyal to Nkomo have been accused by searchers of giving the rebels provisions, erasing their tracks and providing false leads. Some of the villagers have been arrested, and some say they were beaten by troops.

Ex-Italian premier to form new government

ROME (AP) — President Sandro Pertini today asked Giovanni Spadolini to form a new government to replace the former premier's five-party coalition Cabinet, which fell Saturday after the Socialists withdrew their support in a squabble over tax reforms.

Spadolini told reporters he would begin consultations with political leaders later in the day, but conceded the political crisis posed "aspects of extreme difficulty."

The 57-year-old political leader still faces opposition from the Socialists and political commentators predicted he would have difficulty establishing Italy's 42nd government since World War II.

Spadolini, who resigned after the Socialists withdrew their support because Parliament defeated their oil tax bill, received Pertini's mandate during a two-hour meeting in the Quirinal presidential palace, according to the president's spokesman, Antonio Maccanico.

Pertini, who also met with Liberal and Social Democratic leaders during two days of consultations this week, has promised to do everything possible to end Italy's current political crisis without calling general elections before the ones scheduled for 1984.

Spadolini will try to accomplish this by assembling a parliamentary majority composed of the same five-party coalition that ruled Italy for 14 months before it collapsed — an alliance of Christian Democrats, Socialists, Liberals, Social Democrats and his own Republican Party.

The Republicans, Liberals and Social Democrats called Tuesday for a renewal of the coalition, and the Christian Democrats also have said they backed Spadolini for the new premiership. The Socialists have held back their support, demanding changes in the parliamentary system of secret ballots.

Rino Formica, the Socialist finance minister in Spadolini's collapsed Cabinet, said a reconstituted five-party coalition would be just "warmed over soup."

The Communist Party, Italy's second largest after the Christian Democrats, has not publically stated its choice for a new government, but has called for seats in the new Cabinet.

Report lists pilots' inexperience as one reason for crash

WASHINGTON (AP) — The crash of Air Florida Flight 90 could have been averted if the cockpit crew, inexperienced in flying in severe winter weather, had paid closer attention to keeping ice and snow off the aircraft, federal investigators say.

The National Transportation Safety Board concluded Tuesday that the "probable cause" of the crash was the failure of Capt. Larry Wheaton, 34, and co-pilot Roger Alan Pettit, 31, to follow procedures outlined for snow and icy conditions.

Seventy-eight people, including the two pilots, were killed when the Boeing 737 stalled moments after taking off from National Airport and plowed into the ice-covered Potomac River after clipping a bridge Jan. 13.

Robert P. Silverberg, general counsel for Air Florida in Miami, declined comment on details of the NTSB findings, but told reporters the airlines' own findings point to "a severe and uncontrollable pitch-up immediately after the liftoff...from which recovery was not possible."

THE SAFETY PANEL was to issue a list of recommendations later today as a result of what they learned from the crash, including one urging the Federal Aviation Administration to step up its research on de-icing aircraft.

While acknowleding that Flight 90 was poorly de-iced before taking off, the board said the major responsibility rested with the crew.

The panel said the pilot and co-pilot:

—Failed to ensure that critical surfaces of the aircraft, including the forward edges of the wings, were free of ice and snow.

—Failed to engage the engine de-icers, causing critical sensors to freeze over and give false readings on the amount of power the engines were producing during the takeoff roll.

—Operated the aircraft during a lengthy ground delay in a manner that "increased the aircraft's susceptibility to (ice and snow) contamination."

Another contributing factor, according to the investigators, was the inexperience of the pilot and co-pilot, both of whom had only minimal background in flying during snow and icy conditions.

The investigators said a more experienced pilot might have chosen to abort the flight during the takeoff when the crew was receiving unusual instrument readings showing a higher amount of power than the engines actually were producing.

The faulty readings were blamed by investigators on frozen engine sensors that had been exposed to ice and snow.

AS THE PLANE rolled down the snow-covered runway, Pettit repeatedly expressed concern that "something was not right," the safety board said.

"There was sufficient doubt about the instrument readings early in the takeoff roll to cause the captain to reject the takeoff," the panel concluded. It added that failure to do so was a direct cause of the crash.

The safety panel acknowledged that the Boeing 737 historically has demonstrated an "inherent tendency" for its nose to pitch up if there is an accumulation of ice or snow on the forward edges of the wing.

Boeing last year disclosed having received nearly two dozen reports of such control problems with the 737 and issued an advisory to all operators of the plane on how to deal with the problem.

But the safety board criticized the Seattle-based aircraft manufacturer, saying it should have placed more emphasis on the problem and taken "more positive corrective action." The panel said the pitch-up problem was a contributing factor to the crash.

There was no immediate comment from Boeing.

INVESTIGATORS ALSO SAID tests on simulators at the Boeing Co. showed that the pilot of Flight 90 might have pulled the aircraft out of danger if he had applied full power as it was about to stall.

The safety board said the crew apparently tried feverishly to get the plane's nose down as it was stalling, but that there was no indication that full power was applied. The plane gained an altitude of about 200 feet and then crashed into a bridge crossing the Potomac less than a mile from the runway.

Other factors contributing to the accident were the prolonged delay — about 40 minutes — between when the plane was de-iced and when the crew received permission to take off, causing the plane to be exposed to continual precipitation.

While the report is highly critical of the way Flight 90 was de-iced, it said the crew should not have allowed the aircraft to take off until it had been thoroughly cleaned of hazardous material.

Deicing/anti-icing troubles reportedly behind crash

WASHINGTON (AP) — Here are excerpts from conclusions and findings of the National Transportation Safety Board report issued Thursday in the crash of an Air Florida jetliner at Washington on Jan. 13:

4. The aircraft was deiced by American Airlines personnel. The procedure used on the left wing consisted of a single application of a heated ethylene glycol and water solution. No separate anti-icing overspray was applied. The right side was deiced using hot water and an anti-icing overspray of a heated ethylene glycol and water was applied. The procedures were not consistent with American Airlines own procedures for the existing ambient temperature and were thus deficient.

5. An anti-icing final coat of ethylene glycol deicing solution was applied. The percentage of ethylene glycol in the solution was less than selected or desired by the deicing equipment operator because of a nonstandard nozzle replacement on the equipment.

6. The replacement of the nozzle on the Trump deicing vehicle with a nonstandard part resulted in the application of a less concentrated ethylene glycol solution than intended.

7. There is no information available in regard to the effectiveness of anti-icing procedures in protecting aircraft from icing which relates to time and environmental conditions.

8. Contrary to Air Florida procedures, neither engine inlet plugs nor pitot-static covers were installed during deicing of Flight 90.

9. Neither the Air Florida maintenance representative who should have been responsible for proper accomplishment of the deicing-anti-icing operation, nor the captain of Flight 90, who was responsible for assuring that the aircraft was free from snow or ice at dispatch, verified that the aircraft was free of snow or ice contamination before pushback and taxi.

10. Contrary to flight manual guidance, the flight crew used reverse thrust in an attempt to move the aircraft from the ramp. This resulted in blowing snow which might have adhered to the aircraft.

11. The flight was delayed awaiting clearance about 49 minutes between completion of the deicing-anti-icing operation and initiation of takeoff.

12. The flightcrew did not use engine anti-ice during ground operation or takeoff.

13. The engine inlet pressure probe (pt2) on both engines became blocked with ice before initiation of takeoff.

14. The flight crew was aware of the adherence of snow or ice to the wings while on the ground awaiting takeoff clearance.

15. The crew attempted to deice the aircraft by intentionally positioning the aircraft near the exhaust of the aircraft ahead in line. This was contrary to flight manual guidance and may have contributed to the ahderence of ice on the wing leading edges and to the blocking of the engine's Pt2 probes.

20. Although the first officer expressed concern that something was "not right" to the captain four times during the takeoff, the captain took no action to reject the takeoff.

22. The aircraft's lower-than-normal acceleration rate during takeoff was caused by the lower-than-normal engine thrust settings.

23. Snow and/or ice contamination on the wing leading edges produced a noseup pitching moment as the aircraft was rotated for liftoff.

24. To counter the noseup pitching moment and prevent immediate loss of control, an abnormal forward pressure on the control column was required.

25. The aircraft initially achieved a climb, but failed to accelerate after liftoff.

26. The aircraft's stall warning stickshaker activated almost immediately after liftoff and continued until impact.

Severe weather's role in plane crashes questioned

WASHINGTON (AP) — Three major airline crashes involving bad weather in seven months have raised new concerns about efforts by both airlines and the government to minimize the threat from storms and treacherous winds.

The latest focus is on "wind shear" — a sudden shifts of wind direction and velocity — which is considered by investigators as a likely cause of the crash of a Pan American World Airways jet in a New Orleans suburb July 9. The crash killed 154 people.

In a congressional hearing, the Federal Aviation Administration was to outline its programs today for improving the detection of wind shears and other hazardous weather conditions.

The hearing by two House science and technology subcommittees also is to examine the FAA's procedures for making weather information available to pilots and the role of weather in past aviation accidents.

"Does weather have an institutional priority at the FAA? That's what we're trying to find out," said an aide to Rep. Albert Gore Jr., D-Tenn., chairman of the science and technology investigations subcommittee.

In testimony prepared for the hearing, the Air Line Pilots Association called for the FAA to improve weather dissemination and for the installation of new severe weather detection equipment.

Responsibilities for weather within the FAA "is so fragmented that there does not appear to be any direction to near-term services or a cohesive long-term program," complained Jack Howell, the pilot union's air safety chairman.

In addition to the recent Pan Am accident during a severe thunderstorm, weather also has been cited as a major factor in the snowy crash Jan. 13 of an Air Florida jet in Washington and the incident in which a World Airways DC-10 skidded off a runway into Boston Harbor.

Seventy-eight people were killed in the Air Florida crash and two in the World Airways accident.

The National Transportation Safety Board, in findings made public Tuesday, put much of the blame on the Air Florida crash on the cockpit crew, saying they failed to take adequate precautions to keep ice and snow off the aircraft.

But the investigators also sharply criticized the way the industry in general protects aircraft against accumulations of ice and snow and the way the industry generally complies with winter weather operating procedures.

NTSB investigators say some procedures are clearly outlined in operations and maintenance manuals, but at times they are not followed.

Federal air safety specialists have for some time expressed concern about the distribution of weather information to pilots.

The World Airways accident in Boston revealed that some of the weather reports given to the pilot of the DC-10 as it approached a landing were more than two hours old.

Governors agree to write own plan

AFTON, Okla. (AP) — The National Governors' Association, with its chairman urging President Reagan to become personally involved in negotiations, has politely said it will write its own version of the postponed "new federalism" program.

After Tuesday's closing session of the association's summer meeting, newly elected chairman Gov. Scott Matheson of Utah reassured the White House the group wanted to continue talks aimed at developing an acceptable program to shift some federally funded programs to state and local administration.

But Matheson, a Democrat, said if there was no agreement by next year, the governors may introduce their own "new federalism" bill, instead of waiting for Reagan or going along with an administration plan they cannot accept.

"I would hope that these negotiations would be directly with the president," Matheson said at a news conference. "In my judgment, if the president had been personally involved in our discussions during the last six months, we would have made much more progress."

Administration officials say the program Reagan first promised in his State of the Union speech last January but postponed several times will be ready when Congress convenes in January, and it will be in a form the governors will buy.

"Basically, that's the same time frame of the governors," Matheson said. "What we hope to be able to do is to work very closely together on that kind of legislation. But we have not excluded developing and submitting other proposals in whatever form or manner they should take.

"That certainly could be a bill. It could be an amendment. That process is wide open," he added.

But Richard S. Williamson, Reagan's assistant for intergovernmental affairs, cautioned the only way the issue will be seriously considered by Congress will be if the president backs it.

While debate during the four-day meeting centered on the "new federalism" and balanced-budget propsals, the governors also discussed an administration proposal to boost the federal gasoline tax, a call from Canada aimed at increased U.S. use of Canadian-generated electricity, and state administration issues, including pension plans, technological education programs and prison problems.

For six months, the governors and other state and local officials have been bargaining with the White House and each other about the "new federalism" framework proposed by Reagan. Some of the programs funded by the government would remain so, while others would be transferred to state or local governments.

In a statement, the governors said the association "assumes the responsibility for developing our own federalism reform proposal. When a draft proposal has been approved by the executive committee it shall be presented to the president to seek his approval," it said.

The committee will meet in December. Vermont Gov. Richard Snelling, a Republican and outgoing association chairman, will head the effort.

Chief among the differences yet to be worked out is Reagan's insistance that the states take a major share of welfare programs. The governors refused to budge on their traditional view that the costs of such basic welfare programs as Aid to Families with Dependent Children continue to be carried by the federal government.

The administration says it wants to move its share of funding the AFDC program to state and local governments.

City Council sets hearing date on CD grant funds the issue on the three country clubs.

Marcum had asked that all three country clubs which were listed for inclusion in the annexation ordinance, be deleted. "It doesn't meet any of our criteria for annexation," he said.

"Then I make a motion you delete all the other private clubs in Midland," responded Sloan. "Why should they have to pay taxes and not the country clubs?" he said in referring to other private clubs such as the Racquet Club and the Petroleum Club.

PUSHING THE ISSUE. Sloan contended that annexing the country clubs was more than just taking a golf course into the city. "You're taking in tennis courts and club houses. My first choice is to bring in everything. My second choice is to delete only the golf courses. You can't take in one guy's tennis courts and not another guy's. If you delete the country clubs in toto, you have to go back and delete all other private clubs that are paying city taxes."

"It's disturbed me about discriminating against the rest of the clubs," Marcum admitted. "We took in the Polo Club on the last annexation."

The council decided to delete only the golf courses on the three country clubs, but all other facilities — including club houses and tennis courts — will be included on the annexation ordinance. Each country club must provide the meets and bounds descriptions in time to be included on the Aug. 24 ordinance. If not, said Sloan half jokingly, the golf courses would be included.

The firm of Carter-Burgess was approved to do a study on Midland Regional Airport's land use zoning. Cost estimate presented was in a range from $24,500 to $26,500.

ALTHOUGH THE COUNCIL didn't go for the idea to sell 2.4 acres of Hogan Park land to the Soil and Water Conservation Services, they did agree to pursue a lease agreement.

George Logan, parks superintendent, said the Soil and Water representatives want the land to construct an office next to the Outdoor Learning Center at Hogan Park.

Fred Poe, assistant city manager, said the city has regretted for many years selling land to the Midland Woman's Club in Hogan Park for their clubhouse. Problems arising from that have come with the Woman's Club complaining to the city about "the normal park traffic," Poe said.

Marcum agreed, saying that he couldn't see selling park land for a garden club or rose club. In fact, he added, "we shouldn't have sold the land for the Bridge Club or the Palette Club."

To replace a fire truck which was destroyed recently in an accident, the council approved a bid of $102,069 for a new truck. This figure, said Poe, is 2½ percent above the price paid for the last truck.

The council agreed to hire the accounting firm of Main, Hurdman for the 1981-82 audit and approved a request by HCB Construction Co. for First National Bank to build a construction fence at Eagle Plaza.

DPS identifies two killed in accident

Two men killed in a traffic accident southeast of Midland Tuesday morning have been identified by the Department of Public Safety as 45-year-old Paul Henry Salisbury of Route 1, Midland, and Paul Elworth Bardis, 66, of Odessa.

Injured in the wreck were 20-year-old Paul F. Mathews of Midland, no street address available, and John David Meador, 25, of 3601 Andrews Highway, Midland.

Meador was released following treatment at Midland Memorial Hospital. Mathews underwent surgery Tuesday for abdominal injuries and was listed in fair condition this morning.

The injured men were passengers in a 1981 Chevrolet pickup truck driven by Salisbury. It and an 18-wheel tanker truck driven by Bardis collided at the intersection of FM 1379 and County Road 160 East, south of Greenwood, about 8:30 a.m. Tuesday.

Bardis and Salisbury were pronounced dead at the scene by Justice of the Peace Robert Pine. Their bodies were taken to the Newnie W. Ellis Funeral Home.

Lawyers still waffling on ethics

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — For the second time in two years, the American Bar Association has postponed an attempt to revamp its code of ethics for the nation's lawyers.

After five years of planning and haggling, including four hours of debate Tuesday, the ABA's House of Delegates voted to put off further consideration of the proposed 121 pages of new rules until it meets in New Orleans in February.

The House of Delegates sets policy for the national organization of lawyers, with 280,000 members. Consideration of a new ethics code had been postponed once last August.

Many delegates in this week's debate clearly were troubled by new rules expanding exceptions to the confidentiality of the lawyer-client relationship. But it was unexpectedly lengthy debate over what ethical rules should apply to lawyer fees that led to the postponement.

"The whole world is watching (and) we have spent two hours debating lawyer fees," said Robert Meserve, a Boston lawyer who served on the commission that in 1977 was asked to update the 1969 code of ethics.

Delegate Stanley Brown of Manchester, N.H., said that whether or not opponents had intended to sabotage a final vote, the delay was caused "by pretty-close-to-frivolous parliamentary debate."

If adopted, the new rules would serve as a non-binding model for state rules regulating lawyers. The ABA's current code of ethics has the effect of law in most states.

Most of the controversy surrounding the new rules centered on provisions that would allow lawyers to prevent clients from committing a crime or fraud likely to cause "substantial injury" to someone's financial interests or property.

Current ethics rules say lawyers should expose a client's intent to kill or physically injure someone, or expose an intent to commit some type of violent crime.

Urging rejection of the new disclosure rules, lawyer John Elam of Columbus, Ohio, told the delegates, "This will create a destructive situation. As soon as clients learn that their confidences are not safe with their lawyer, that lawyer is not going to have much information to disclose."

In other action Tuesday, the delegates adopted a policy which allows ABA accreditation for religiously affiliated law schools that, in employment and student admissions, give preference to people who subscribe to the school's religious views. Such law schools must not exclude others, however, the delegates said.

ABA accreditation can be vital because almost all states refuse to license lawyers who have not graduated from ABA-approved law schools.

Attorney General William French Smith told delegates at the American Bar Association convention in San Francisco Tuesday that "the criminal justice system has tilted too decidedly in favor of the rights of the criminal and against the rights of society." One provision of a new code of ethics under consideration by the ABA would allow lawyers to prevent clients from committing a crime or fraud likely to cause "substantial injury" to someone's financial interests or property.

Handicapped rules rejected in Congress

WASHINGTON (AP) — Congress has rejected decisively the Education Department's efforts to revise rules for handicapped students.

The Senate voted 93-4 Tuesday to endorse a "sense of Congress" resolution to delay proposed changes in federal regulations that would shift more responsibility for educating handicapped students to the states.

Sen. Robert T. Stafford, R-Vt., said the proposals "would seriously erode the rights and protections afforded handicapped children and their families."

At a hearing of the Senate Committee on Labor and Human Resources, Stafford and other critics said the regulations would put too much of the education burden on state governments.

But they claimed states have shirked the responsibility in the past, and thus handicapped children could again find their opportunities limited.

Sen. Dan Quayle, R-Ind., said: "Under the present regulations, parents take part in evaluations of their handicapped children, but under the proposed changes, parental consent would not be necessary before a school evaluates or places a child in an education program."

Meanwhile, the House, by a 363-0 vote, rejected final regulations for implementing parts of the Education Consolidation and Improvement Act.

Reagan defends tax proposals in Montana

BILLINGS, Mont. (AP) — President Reagan, defending an embattled $98.9 billion tax increase bill, said today the measure pending in Congress would have very little effect on the taxes of most Americans.

In his first major speech on the bill, Reagan argued the legislation was essential to his economic recovery program. If Congress refuses to pass the bill, the nation faces bigger budget deficits, higher interest rates and growing unemployment, he said.

Despite the bill's provisions to increase taxes on cigarettes, telephone services and airline tickets, the president insisted, "It will have very little effect on the majority of individual taxpayers."

Reagan flew to Big Sky country to help Billings celebrate its 100th birthday and raise money for the Senate campaign of Republican Larry Williams, who is trying to unseat Sen. John Melcher, D-Mont. White House officials estimated the events would raise $122,500.

TESCO phasing out transformers, capacitors containing toxic chemical that data to determine if more stringent regulations are required.

"Current regulations," says TESCO, "state that any sudden, accidental or episodic releases of over 10 pounds of PCBs require an immediate telephone notification to the National Response Center in Washington, D.C.

"A spillage of (that) amount could happen, for instance, when a capacitor ruptures. The spill must be cleaned up and the area decontaminated using EPA-approved procedures."

Incineration, chemical breakdown and — under certain conditions — disposal of PCBs in regulated landfills are among the methods used or under study to dispose of the substance.

TESCO stores discarded PCBs and contaminated equipment at special EPA-approved locations and is currently negotiating with a toxic waste management compnay to test-burn some of its PCBs on a ship in the Gulf of Mexico.

A phase-out of the contaminant is being employed, says TESCO, because immediate replacement of all its PCB equipment would not only be "immensely costly, but manufacturers could not supply replacement equipment in the quantity necessary in a reasonable length of time."

Shooting victim's condition better

A man shot at an eastside bar Sunday night is now listed in satisfactory condition at Midland Memorial Hospital, where he was treated for gunshot wounds to the hand and abdomen.

Ricardo Baeza, 23, of 705 N. Lincoln, was shot with a .25-caliber handgun in the Mie Cantario Lounge at 200 E. Kentucky about 9:30 p.m. Sunday and had been in critical condition. Police said the shooting stemmed from a two-week argument over a woman.

Reagan's Caribbean Basin initiative hangs on in Congress

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan's Caribbean Basin initiative has survived a series of challenges on the Senate floor as legislators move toward completing work on a nearly $14 billion spending bill.

Republicans used their majority to defeat Democratic moves Tuesday to delete $355 million from the overall plan, which consists of economic aid, trade concessions and tax incentives to bolster the economies of more than 20 Central American and Caribbean nations.

Despite the inclusion of the Caribbean money the president wants, there still was the possibility that Reagan would veto the bill because of administration objections to other portions of it.

Meanwhile, the Senate refused Tuesday night by a 65-30 vote to table — in effect kill — a "sense of Congress" resolution by Sen. Steven D. Symms, R-Idaho, that the United States would use force, if necessary, to combat Soviet aggression or subversion in the Western Hemisphere.

Sen. Charles H. Percy, R-Ill., chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee, opposed Symms, saying such a resolution amounts to telling the president he can "use troops without prior consultation with Congress."

Midlander has faith in 'pyramid'-style company

By VINCE GIORGI
Staff Writer

The Texas attorney general's office filed a civil suit Monday against a Salt Lake City-based company, Nova's Inc., alleging that the firm violated several provisions of the state's Deceptive Trade Practices Act, including the section which prohibits selling rights of participation in a multi-level distributorship.

Named as co-defendant in the suit is Jim Anderson, the Nova's Inc. representative who introduced the company's operations to Texas.

Zoleta Courtney, assistant attorney general, said such distributorships, sometimes referred to as "pyramid" schemes, often ensnare unsuspecting consumers in what appears outwardly to be a sure-fire, get-rich-quick operation, but in reality is just as likely to be a financially-risky fling at realizing "the American Dream."

But a Midland man, 25-year-old Dan McBride, 4611 Graceland Drive, said Tuesday that regardless of the sometimes "shady" reputation of other multi-level sales companies, he believes Nova's Inc. is a solid, reputable organization.

McBRIDE BECAME a member of Nova's Inc., also referred to as Nova's General Store, about a month ago. The company, which opened Texas operations approximately six weeks ago in Amarillo, offers for purchase a variety of merchandise — from cigarettes to trampolines — at 3 percent more than dealer cost. For a $35 membership and $15 monthly dues, McBride and others can not only avail themselves of the bargain buying, but recruit other members and receive commission for their efforts.

"They provide a service as well as a possible income to anyone wishing to join," said McBride, who was first attracted to the company by the savings he could realize on his monthly grocery bill.

McBride explained that the company seeks to buy products as near the manufacturer as possible, eliminating the price mark-ups imposed by retailing middlemen. Nova's Inc. also limits advertising costs by employing a "personal referral" marketing strategy, he said.

"Nova's doesn't eliminate any quality, they eliminate marketing cost," he said. "All Nova's has done is eliminate some of the overhead of selling that good."

McBride compared local grocery prices with those in the company's catalogue and estimated savings of 21 percent by buying through Nova's Inc. He said he has yet to order any merchandise because a "drop point" for delivery of the goods from the company's Utah headquarters has yet to be established in Midland.

COMPANY GUIDELINES require that a city have at least 150 members before a "drop point" is established. Until that time, Midland members may order goods and pay freight from the nearest "drop point" in Amarillo, where the company reportedly has about 16,000 members. Nova's Inc. also has approximately 25,000 members in the Dallas area and has held meetings in several other cities, including Lubbock, Odessa, Midland and Austin.

The state attorney general's office obtained a temporary restraining order from Travis County court judge Jerry Dellana Tuesday, prohibiting the company from operating in Texas until it obtains a certificate of authority from the secretary of state, mandated for all out-of-state companies operating in Texas.

Ms. Courtney said the restraining order expires after 10 days. Both sides may present their arguments at an Aug. 19 temporary injunction hearing, at which the judge could replace the restraining order with an injunction that would remain in effect until the lawsuit is resolved.

She said the illegalities alleged in Monday's lawsuit stem from violations of the Deceptive Trade Practices Act, including article 20 of section 17.46 which prohibits "selling or offering to sell, either directly or associated with the sale of goods or services, a right of participation in a multi-level distributorship."

THE ACT defines a multi-level distributorship as "a sales plan for the distribution of goods or services in which promises of rebate or payment are made to individuals recommending or securing additional individuals to assume positions in the sales operation, and where the rebate or payment is not exclusively conditioned on or in relation to proceeds from the retail sales of goods."

An informational pamphlet distributed at a July 22 "opportunity meeting" in an Odessa private home described the Nova's Inc. plan, billing it as "a totally unique and universally needed and desired purchasing and marketing system with a Ground Floor Business Opportunity for those wishing to build increased financial security."

Through the plan, members receive 10 percent of the $15 monthly dues paid by people they recruit along with a one-time, 10 percent payment of the $35 membership fees paid by the recruited members. Members also receive a percentage of the dues paid by their recruits' recruits, and so on, producing a "pyramiding" geometric progression of income as new members create revenue for their predecessors in the company.

"The primary emphasis when you are contacted is that you can make a lot of money," according to Linda Truitt, president of the Permian Basin office of the Better Business Bureau (BBB), who attended the Odessa meeting. Ms. Truitt said company representatives were "very vague" about their ability to supply and distribute merchandise.

MS. TRUITT said some Texans are gambling they can interest hundreds of people and are purchasing large quantities of the company catalogs in advance at a considerable personal investment.

Ms. Courtney said that "the problem with any pyramid is that you reach a saturation point." She explained that while early participants in the process may make money, later recruits will find that the supply of people wishing to become members dwindles rapidly as the membership grows.

But McBride said that "Nova's is designed where you're going to get paid exactly what you put out." The only risk members incur, he said, is the amount of time they choose to spend attempting to interest other members.

He said he has attempted to interest others in Nova's Inc. and could begin receiving any commission due him in about a month.

"The investment is strictly yourself," he said. "Nova's does not require that you spend three hours a day representing this company." Endeavoring to make money is "strictly up to the individual," he said. "The savings that's in black and white."

McBRIDE, WHO works in the purchasing department of a local oil company, said the Nova's system of distributing goods offers the best possible combination of price and efficiency of buying. He said he and his wife experimented with sales and coupons, "the whole bit," trying to save money on groceries. "We saw a savings," he said, "but what did it cost us?" in terms of time and effort.

McBride said some consumers, like himself, can no longer afford the waste and inefficiency of the traditional retail marketplace. "That non-productivity is costing the consumer." He said members who buy through Nova's Inc. are "able to reap any benefits Nova's has by performing their business in the most efficient way they can."

He said he was skeptical of the company after being involved in other multi-level distributorships that were "not very reputable, and perhaps illegal." But upon investigation of Nova's Inc., including attendance at meetings in Odessa, Dallas and "a ton of phone calls," McBride said he was convinced Nova's Inc. is "not a fly-by-night."

"They've been in business long enough where it's not the type of situation they're going to get your $35 and run with it," he said. Nova's Inc. has been in business since November 1981.

The lawsuit against Nova's Inc. also alleges that the company led consumers to believe that it was operating with the approval of the state, violating articles two and five of the Deceptive Trade Practices Act. The company's representatives also allegedly failed to provide consumers with cancellation forms as required by the Home Solicitations Transactions Act. The form would allow anyone solicited in their home to cancel any agreement by mail within three days.

McBride said the company has a 30-day guarantee allowing members to cancel and receive their membership refund, and that members can withdraw at any time. McBride stressed that he speaks not as a company representative but only as a dues-paying member, and he expressed confidence that the matter would be resolved and Nova's Inc. vindicated at the Aug. 19 hearing.

But Ms. Truitt said that consumers interested in joining a multi-level distributorhip should be wary of companies that place greater emphasis on the recruitment of new members than the sale of goods and services.

Israel continues attacks on west Beirut

By The Associated Press

Israeli jets and tanks hammered guerrilla-held west Beirut again today and Prime Minister Menachem Begin met in Jerusalem with U.S. presidential envoy Philip C. Habib to examine U.S. proposals for evacuating the PLO from Lebanon.

Begin was quoted by the Israeli newspaper Yedioth Ahronoth as saying in an interview, "If all goes well, the evacuation will get under way next week."

A major breakthrough in the negotiations came late Tuesday when Syria reversed its earlier stand and said it would take in all Palestine Liberation Organization fighters the PLO wished to evacuate from Beirut.

The Tel Aviv command said the new air strikes followed cease-fire breaches by the guerrillas that wounded three Israeli soldiers.

The jets swooped down in rapid dive-bombing sorties, setting fires and sending clouds of smoke spiraling over the Chatilla and Bourjel-Barajneh refugee camps — the PLO nerve center in the Fakhani area.

Guerrillas fired ground-to-air missiles but none was seen hitting the jets, making their third series of strikes in three days.

Israeli tanks and bazooka-firing guerrillas also clashed at the National Museum checkpoint on the Green Line dividing Beirut into Moslem west and Christian east.

The city has been under siege since the week after Israel invaded Lebanon June 6 to rout the PLO.

The Begin-Habib meeting in Jerusalem ended with no statement and another session was set for later today.

Defense Minister Ariel Sharon and Foreign Minister Yitzhak Shamir also attended the meeting at which Habib was reported to have presented a list of Arab countries willing to take in the guerrillas.

Israel has accepted Habib's proposals in principle but has asked for a series of amendments centering primarily on the Arab countries which will take in the guerrillas and the multinational force that is to secure their withdrawal.

A senior Israeli official disclosed that 9,000 guerrillas and 3,500-4,000 Syrian soldiers were being counted into the group to be evacuated.

This was considerably more than the 7,000-8,000 guerrillas and 1,000-1,500 Syrians mentioned so far.

The Israeli newspaper Maariv reported earlier that Syria would take 5,000 guerrillas, Jordan 1,000 and Iraq the rest.

Yedioth Ahronoth, in another development, quoted Begin as saying he planned to retire in two years.

A major hurdle in Habib's efforts to reach an agreement on the evacuation of the trapped PLO guerrillas was removed late Tuesday when Syria reversed its position and announced it would take as many Palestinian guerrillas as the PLO wants.

Jordan, Iraq, Sudan, Tunisia and North Yemen had earlier announced their readiness to provide refuge to part of the PLO fighters.

In Washington, President Reagan's spokesman, Larry Speakes, said, "We are hopeful there can be rapid movement toward the implementation of the full peace plan."

But Israel said it would not consider giving final approval to the proposed 15-day evacuation until it has a list of all guerrilla evacuees and their intended destinations. It added that it still objects to deployment of a multinational peacekeeping force in Beirut before most of the guerrillas are evacuated.

Habib shuttled from Beirut to Israel Tuesday night, and Lebanese intermediary Saeb Salam said he took Begin lists of guerrillas and the countries they would go to.

Syria's ruling Baath Party, in a major policy shift Tuesday, said in a communique that "in light of the available circumstances now, (Syria) has decided to receive all fighters the PLO leadership wishes to evacuate from Beirut."

Syria, which stationed more than 20,000 troops in Lebanon after the 1975-76 civil war, is expected to be a staging point for guerrillas going to other countries and to give asylum to Saiqa, the PLO faction that the Syrian government controls.

Reflecting on the dive into the icy Potomac River that made him a national celebrity is Lenny Skutnik, a Capitol Hill office service assistant. He was one of several "heroes" in last January's Air Florida crash.

Bridge serves as reminder

By TIM AHERN

WASHINGTON (AP) — Every day when Lenny Skutnik drives to work over the 14th Street Bridge, he is reminded of the heroic act that made him an overnight celebrity last winter.

"We go over the bridge right past the spot and I think about it," Skutnik said Tuesday. "Sometimes those planes come in awfully low."

The 28-year-old Skutnik was going home last Jan. 13 when one of those planes, Air Florida's Flight 90, came in too low after taking off from National Airport, hit the bridge, and slammed into the icy Potomac River.

As Skutnik watched, rescuers tried to pull a passenger, Priscilla Tirado, from the ice-clogged water.

When she lost her grip on a life-ring, Skutnik dove into the water and pulled her to shore.

His impulsive act, captured by a television crew, made him a hero. He was interviewed and lauded. And he was even given a standing ovation by Congress when he sat in the first family's box and was praised by President Reagan before the State of the Union speech.

"At first, it was just incredible, it was like more than I thought I could handle," said Skutnik, interviewed at the Congressional Budget Office, where he still works as an office service assistant.

"The phone was ringing off the hook" and the mail poured in — more than 2,000 letters.

"They all say about the same thing, that it's restored their faith in humanity," said Skutnik, who believes his act "reflected everyone's feelings. They say they were watching it on the television, saying to themselves, 'why doesn't somebody do something?' Then they saw me jump in."

He discussed the tragedy on the day the National Transportation Safety Board placed much of the blame for the crash on the flight crew, for failing to assure the plane was free of ice and for not aborting the takeoff while there was still time.

Skutnik has received more than 30 awards and plaques and more are coming. He has been given trips and other gifts and one Virginia realtor offered him the choice of a car or two years' free rent for his Lorton townhouse. He chose the townhouse.

Surgeons giving woman smile lost in brain tumor surgery

PITTSBURGH (AP) — Maureen McVicker's paralyzed face has been "something that's like a plaque on the wall" for seven years, but modern medicine is returning something precious to her — her smile.

Mrs. McVicker has been physically unable to smile since the left side of her face was paralyzed during removal of a brain tumor.

But she underwent a 3½-hour operation Tuesday to have her face re-animated. A muscle that controls chewing was grafted from the temporal region to an area under her left cheekbone. Mrs. McVicker, recuperating at Pittsburgh's Eye and Ear Hospital, was listed in good condition early today.

"Instead of having a sagging face, her face will be lifted up into a pleasant smile. We're going to substitute the chewing muscle to serve as the muscle of expression," said Dr. Mark May, an ear, nose and throat specialist who performed the operation.

"We're going to make her smile. We're going to give her personality back to her. We're going to change her face from something that's like a plaque on the wall to something that's alive," he said in an interview prior to the surgery.

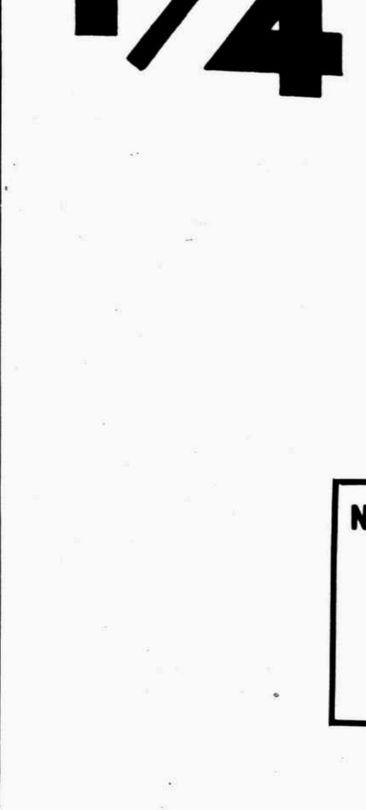

Afterward, he said the operation went "very well," although Mrs. McVicker's face will be bandaged for two days. There will be swelling for 10 days to three weeks, but she should see results in six weeks.

"To be able to smile, I think that would be nice. I think smiling's a good way to put a face to the world," said Mrs. McVicker, 34, a former bank teller from Jefferson Borough near Pittsburgh.

"I just love to smile. If a person has a nice smile, I'd say they're a nice person," she added in a hospital interview on the eve of her surgery.

May, who has performed 95 facial operations since 1974, said the surgery cannot help everyone who has facial paralysis.

Missing woman has town worried

ELGIN, Ohio (AP) — Drivers in this tiny town slow down as they pass the Elgin Post Office and glance in curiosity. Clusters of people picking apples shake their heads as they talk about the kidnapping of Betty Jane Mottinger, postmistress here since 1978.

Since Monday, people in the community of 100 — a wide spot on Ohio Route 81 — have been shaking their heads a lot.

Police say Mrs. Mottinger, 48, was abducted about 8:20 a.m. Monday from the post office.

There are few clues, other than a brown-and-tan car that several people noticed because it hadn't been seen in town before.

"We don't even have a witness who saw her get into the car," Van Wert County Police Detective Ralph Eversole said Tuesday. "All we have right now is the one witness who saw a man sitting in the brown-and-tan car, which was believed to be a Monte Carlo."

On Monday morning, when police arrived at the metal-frame building housing Mrs. Mottinger's office, 40 small mail boxes and a bulletin board, they found an open safe, an empty cash drawer and the contents of her purse spread on a counter.

"We had about a dozen people or more around her. One or two said they saw a car they didn't recognize, but that was about it," said David Smith, 27, whose parents own the Elgin Grain Co. elevators and the ground the post office is built on.

"Nothing like this has ever happened in Elgin. If this town were any slower, it would stop," he said. "It's a nice, quiet, peaceful community, the kind of place where you think you don't have to lock your doors or your car.

"A few guys saw some people they didn't know, but that's about it. It's a shame. She was a nice lady, always talking," he said. "That's what's a shock about it."

About 50 yards from the post office, Mrs. Mottinger's assistant, Amy Baker, would have been getting ready for work Monday in her frame home when her boss disappeared. But Mrs. Baker's father-in-law had died and she took the day off.

After Mrs. Mottinger vanished, Mrs. Baker was shaken.

"She was afraid to walk over there by herself today," said her 15-year-old daughter, Brenda. "My daddy was going to take her over, but two deputies came by to escort her."

Mrs. Mottinger's husband, Clarence, an autoworker in Lima, about 18 miles away, is taking the abduction "real hard," Eversole said.

"He has a very, very bad heart condition," he added. "We're trying to keep him calmed down because of it, but you can tell this has him all torn up inside."

The couple's three children are in their late teens or early 20s.

"She (Mrs. Mottinger) was the sweetest thing you'd ever want to know," said Daniel Taylor, a 25-year-old grain elevator worker from nearby Van Wert. "I guess I shouldn't say 'was.' I've still got some hopes she'll be found alive."

But Eversole said police and federal agents are debating whether to continue searching the rolling farmlands for Mrs. Mottinger.

Meanwhile, back on the post office window, a government notice offers a $5,000 reward for information concerning Mrs. Mottinger's disappearance.

Second fireworks plant blast in week kills two

SEABROOK, N.H. (AP) — Three people remained in critical condition today from a series of blasts at a fireworks factory that killed two workers, ignited a fire and bombarded houses with streaking rockets, authorities said.

"The whole building shook," said Kathleen Wheeler, an employee in a market across from the Rockingham Firework, Manufacturers and Display Inc. factory, site of the Tuesday afternoon explosions.

"It sounded similar to gunfire and then, boom. The window shattered, and I...saw sparks, thick black smoke and a big, black mushroom cloud," she said.

It was the nation's second fatal fireworks factory explosion in less than a week. On Friday, three people were killed in an explosion at a fireworks plant in Chesterville, Ohio.

Seabrook Fire Chief Ernest Sanborn said three structures and three trucks were destroyed by Tuesday's explosions, which he said may have been touched off by an electrical problem. Officials from the state fire marshal's office and the federal Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms were conducting an investigation.

Display rockets ignited by the fire struck nearby houses. Sanborn said windows were broken, but no other damage was reported.

Edward Hoban, a group supervisor for the alcohol, tobacco and firearms bureau in New Hampshire, said eight workers were mixing Class B fireworks in the factory yard. One of the workers, standing about 50 feet from the initial explosion, was hurled over an eight-foot fence that surrounds the yard, he said.

Officials said they did not know if the first explosion took place in the yard or a building in the factory complex. The initial blast was followed by several smaller ones, police said.

"We saw two people come out with no clothes on, bloody and burned," said Pete Hussey, who works across the street in a gasoline station convenience store. "There was just a crater over there and a bunch of debris burning up," he said.

Another witness, gas station attendant Charles Bagley, said: "I saw pieces of building going up in the air. It's just a crater now."

Of the eight people in the yard, only three escaped death or serious injury, police said.

Todd Obey, in his early 20s, was pronounced dead at the scene. Flora Prior, 64, of Seabrook, was dead on arrival at Massachusetts General Hospital in Boston, authorities said.

Three injured employees were rushed to local hospitals and later transferred to special burn units at two Boston hospitals.

Officials said Todd Thone, 17, of Epping, was in critical condition with severe burns early today at Massachusetts General.

The other two were taken to Brigham and Women's Hospital in Boston. David Souther of Seabrook and Keith Obey of Seabrook both were in critical condition. Police did not know if Keith Obey and Todd Obey were related.

Drowned teen-ager described as 'inexperienced swimmer'

ORLANDO, Fla. (AP) — A North Dakota teen-ager who drowned in a Walt Disney World water attraction packed with swimmers was described by his father as an "inexperienced swimmer."

Howard A. Pueppke, 14, of Erie, N.D., was pulled from the water at the River Country Cove about five minutes after the youth slid down a 60-foot slide into five feet of water, said Rod Madden, a Disney World spokesman.

The accident occurred Monday night with 13 on-duty lifeguards watching about 500 swimmers in the cove, Madden said Tuesday.

A sign posted near the slide reads: "Rapid Water — Strong Swimmers Only," Madden said.

He said there are two 60-foot-high slides with lifeguards posted at the top of each and one guard below both to make sure swimmers get safely down the slide and resurface.

"We feel one guard at the bottom is enough and in the past has been adequate to handle the recreational area," Madden said. He said there were no plans to add another guard as a result of the drowning.

Glenn Pueppke, father of the drowned youth, said in a telephone interview with The Orlando Sentinel on Tuesday that his son "was an inexperienced swimmer."

"I don't think he would have gone down the slide if he had known how deep the water was. He didn't know how to swim," said the elder Pueppke, who learned of the accident late Monday.

Pueppke was in a group of 50 midwestern teen-agers who had stopped at Disney World on their way back from Miami Beach, where they had attended a three-day Church of God national convention.

Carolyn Parkhouse of Dallas lies quietly waiting for an ambulance following Tuesday's crash of a Trailways bus in Yampa, Colo. in which a 3-month-boy was killed and all 41 passengers sustained injuries of some kind. Terry Viers of Vancouver, Wash. stands next to Ms. Parkhouse. Viers was treated for minor injuries at a nearby hospital and released.

Infant dies in Colorado bus crash

YAMPA, Colo. (AP) — Investigators say a Trailways bus sailed through the air for 87 feet in a crash that left an infant passenger dead and 11 others aboard hospitalized.

The early Tuesday morning accident in northwestern Colorado was under investigation by a team from the Colorado State Patrol, authorities said.

Undersheriff Russ Stone said all 41 passengers aboard the bus, en route to Salt Lake City from Denver, were injured in the crash. "I guess at one time everybody in the bus had been flying through the air," Stone said.

Three-month-old Chad Adams of Indiana, Pa., was killed, said Routt County Sheriff Larry Chamberlain. The baby's mother, Lisa Adams, was treated for minor injuries and released.

Deputies first on the scene Tuesday said several passengers were lying on the ground outside the bus, luggage was strewn about and the bus's floor was covered with blood and debris.

Trooper Mike Meyer, heading the state patrol investigation, said the bus had just come out of a turn on Colorado 131 one-half mile south of here when it went out of control.

Meyer said the bus went off the right side of the road for 336 feet, hit an access road, then flew through the air for 87 feet. It then plowed through another 550 feet of rolling sage brush before crossing back across the highway. It then continued another 550 feet before stopping on its wheels in a ditch.

It may be days before the cause of the crash is known, he said.

A woman named Penny Roulett, 23, no hometown available, was listed in critical condition at Denver's St. Anthony's Hospital after undergoing several hours of emergency surgery Tuesday for abdominal injuries at Routt County Memorial Hospital in Steamboat Springs.

The bus driver, Robert Davis, 29, of Denver, was listed in fair condition at the Routt hospital, a spokeswoman said.

Eight of the most severely injured were hospitalized at the Steamboat Springs hospital, 25 miles to the north. Three were later airlifted to St. Anthony's in Denver.

Two others were airlifted from the crash scene to Kremmling, some 45 miles east of Yampa. One was later released and one was transferred to a hospital in Salt Lake City.

Plane, passengers safe after unscheduled fire stop

LITTLE ROCK (AP) — An American Airlines 727 flight from Dallas to Philadelphia made a safe unscheduled landing in Arkansas while a crew put out a small fire behind the cockpit.

The landing at Little Rock Municipal Airport on Tuesday was smooth, and there were no injuries to the 110 passengers and seven crew members aboard, airline spokesman Del Parker said.

The plane left Dallas at 8:30 a.m. CDT and the pilot radioed the airport control tower at 9:39 a.m. that he needed to land at Little Rock. The plane touched down 16 minutes later.

Pumper tucks and crash crews from the Little Rock Fire Department followed it to the gate and returned to the station after the crew put out the fire in the engineer's compartment with a carbon dioxide extinguisher.

Passengers waited in the terminal until a second plane arrived from Chicago to resume the flight to Philadelphia.

Parker said repairs were made to two switches in the cockpit.

Flight attendants were serving breakfast to passengers when the plane suddenly banked left and began to lose altitude, passenger Jerry Foree of Austin, Texas, said. The attendants gathered serving trays and told passengers there was an electrical problem, he said.

Foree and Ken Derry, a passenger from College Station, Texas, said the plane quickly dropped altitude.

Ancient ship scuttled by pirates?

ATHENS, Greece (AP) — After several years studying the 2,300-year-old wreck of Greek merchant vessel, an American underwater archaeologist has pieced together evidence of piracy and plunder in the ancient Mediterranean.

Michael Katzev, 43, an adjunct professor at the Institute of Nautical Archaelogy at Texas A&M University, directed an international marine excavation team which spent six seasons exploring and conserving the 4th century B.C. shipwreck. The vessel went down near the port of Kyrenia, now in the Turkish-occupied sector of Cyprus.

"At the time of the excavation, we thought the ship foundered in the the kind of sudden storm you get off northern Cyprus in the fall," Katzev said in an interview. "But work on the finds in the past five years suggests it didn't sink accidentally."

Buried in sand and silt at a depth of nearly 100 feet, most of the ship's wooden hull was salvaged by the archaeologists in 1969 and gradually reassembled. Now on display in Kyrenia's medieval castle, it is a unique museum piece: the oldest ship ever raised from the seabed and exhibited.

On its last voyage, the 48-foot vessel was loaded with clay jars of wine from the island of Rhodes. It also carried millstones as ballast and "perhaps sackfuls of fresh almonds," Katzev said.

Probably a typical coastal trader during the time of Alexander the Great, the vessel had a single square sail and carried a small crew who ate and slept on top of the cargo.

"We found four sets of domestic pottery — bowls, pitchers, drinking cups — and fragments of four wooden spoons," Katzev said. "A captain and three sailors would be right for handling a ship of that size."

Beneath a small deck at the stern were stowed piles of iron ingots and the larder — remains of figs, grapes, dried herbs, olives and beans were found. A few bronze coins helped date the wreck to around 300 B.C.

"But we didn't find any of the crew's personal belongings, no silver money for trading, and no indication of the cargo stored beneath the forward deck to balance the vessel," Katzev said.

Carbon-14 dating on the ship's timbers showed they were felled about 388 B.C. The hull had been repaired and finally sheathed in lead to keep the aging planks seaworthy, suggesting it could have yielded to wave stress in a storm.

THC to hold open hearing for hospital

Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — The Texas Health Facilities Commission will hold a public hearing Oct. 18 on an application by Crane Memorial Hospital to construct a new building.

Crane Memorial is seeking to build a 22,000 square-foot replacement hospital to be located adjacent to the existing facility.

The new facility would continue to offer medical/surgical, obstretrical, emergency, nursery, labor and delivery, radiology, laboratory , administrative and support services.

The licensed and operational capacity of the hospital would remain at 28 beds, including 25 medical/surgical beds and three obstetrical beds.

The new facility also would include the addition of one surgery recovery room, one labor room and replacement of diagnostic unit.

Persons wishing to protest the application must do so prior to Sept. 20. If no protests are received, the hearing may be cancelled and the application referred to a THFC voting session without a hearing.

Businesses fearful of spying

Hearst Feature Service

LOS ANGELES — Spies, phonetaps and hidden microphones may seem the soul of cheap paperback novels, but tough economic times are causing more businessmen to worry that competitors may be using underhanded tactics to steal company secrets.

Corporate espionage came to the public's attention last month when the federal government charged Hitachi Ltd., the Mitsubishi Electric Corp. and 21 individuals with conspiring to ship secrets stolen from International Business Machines to Japan.

"Industrial espionage is considered to be a pretty big concern these days," said Shari Gallery, who publishes a monthly magazine for the American Society of Industrial Security in Washington. "Company secrets and technological know-how is what is keeping a lot of companies in business, so it's a critical thing."

Norman Perle agrees. For the past 10 years, the Los Angeles private investigator has specialized in "privacy protection" — the use of sophisticated equipment to detect or defeat electronic surveillance.

"There are still a lot of firms that think that it can never happen to them," Perle said. "But a major part of corporate losses can come from competitive espionage."

Because of current litigation, IBM officials are reluctant to talk about corporate spying. One company spokesman did say that IBM has built an extensive internal security system aimed at preventing infiltraion by both foreign and domestic competitors. A spokeswoman for the Atlantic Richfield Co. said her company also recognizes industrial espionage as a threat and has taken steps to prevent it.

U.S. hospital to treat children injured in war

PITTSBURGH (AP) — Children injured by the fighting in Lebanon and unable to receive proper care in an overcrowded Beirut hospital will be treated at a Pennsylvania facility as soon as flights can be arranged, officials said.

Most of the 50 children are amputees and some were recently orphaned during the fighting between Israelis and Palestinians.

"Hopefully, we'll get these children here by the end of the month," said Dr. William Monsour, medical director of Monsour Medical Center in nearby Jeannette, which offered to tend to the children now at the American University of Beirut Hospital.

Doctors in the Lebanese capital, confronted with a steady stream of new patients, cannot give the children the attention they need, he said.

"We felt that we immediately should be receiving the injured in this country," said Monsour, an American of Arab descent.

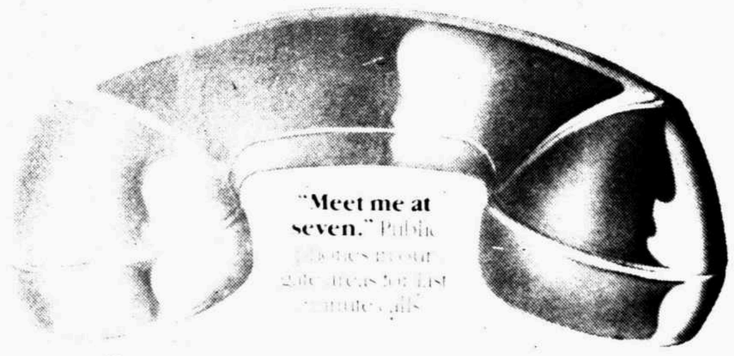

Arranging to get the children out of Beirut has been difficult, Monsour said. "If you can't get food, water and baby food into Beirut, how do you get them out?" he asked.

The plan, drawn up in cooperation with the Washington-based American-Arab Anti-Discrimination Committee, calls eventually for up to 4,000 children to be brought to hospitals in the United States.

Officials of Beirut hospital's pediatrics department will decide which children will be flown overseas, Monsour said.

Nine U.S. hospitals have expressed interest in the plan, but Monsour is the only facility to have made a definite commitment, said James Zogby, the committee's executive director.

The leading French bridge magazine is "Le Bridgeur," edited and published in Paris by French internationalist Jean Paul Meyer. This lesson in technique, which appeared in "Le Bridgeur," was contributed by Robert Berthe.

The contract of four hearts is normal. After West leads a low diamond, obviously there is no problem if trumps break 2-1. Declarer, at worst, will lose two club tricks and a spade.

How should declarer tackle trumps? West is the danger hand, and he should be kept off lead if possible. Therefore, declarer should play the ace of hearts from hand. If trumps break or if West has all three trumps, the contract is home. But what if East turns up with three trumps?

It seems as if declarer will have to rely on finding the ace of clubs with West. If he could strip out spades and diamonds while keeping West off lead, he could assure the contract by first stripping the hand and then giving East his trump trick, forcing either a ruff and sluff or a lead up to the king of clubs. But is it possible to achieve that position?

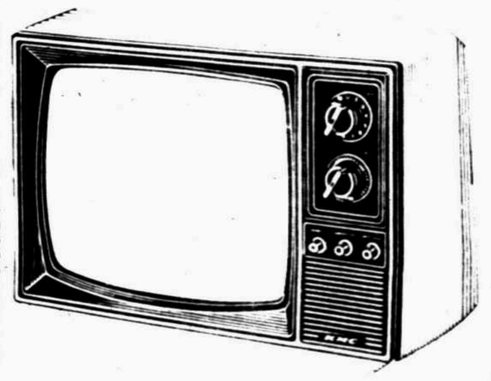

Yes, it is! Follow with the eight of diamonds from dummy at trick one and, when East plays the jack, allow him to win the trick!

Best defense is to shift to a spade. Win the king, cash the ace-king of trumps and the ace-king of diamonds, discarding a spade from dummy. Now cash the ace of spades and ruff your last spade in dummy, and you are home. If East can overruff, he is end played. If he does not ruff, you simply present him with his trump trick, and he will not enjoy being on lead. Whichever route he chooses, one of your club losers will disappear, and you will make the contract since you will lose only one trump trick, one diamond and one club.

Nashville minister Joe Engle arrives at the Virginia State Penitentiary in Richmond Tuesday with Frank Coppola's ex-wife, Alice Brydges, for a visit with Coppola prior to his execution. Ingle, who has counseled more than 100 death row inmates, sought to change Coppola's mind about refusing the appeal process and thus allowing his execution.

More than 1,000 occupy 'death row'

By LEE MITGANG
Associated Press Writer

America's death row population has swollen to 1,005 men and 13 women, with more than 800 of them concentrated in 10 Southern and Western states.

A survey by The Associated Press found that Florida leads the nation with 188 men under death sentence.

Texas ranks second with 163 men and two women, followed by California with 109 men, Georgia with 94 men and four women, Alabama with 49 men and one women, Arizona with 46 men, Illinois with 42 men, Oklahoma with 38 men and one woman, Mississippi with 35 men, and Tennessee with 30 men.

The U.S. Supreme Court paved the way for the reintroduction of the death penalty in 1976 after a pause of nearly 10 years. Because the appeals process can often take years, the death row population has grown rapidly ever since. No one faces imminent execution, however.

In 1977, when Gary Gilmore was shot by a Utah firing squad, the count stood at 398. By March 9, 1981 when Steven A. Judy became the fourth man executed in recent years, there were 739 death row inmates.

Convicted murderer Frank Coppola became the fifth on Tuesday night when he died in Virginia's electric chair.

Thirty-five states have the death penalty — including New Jersey where Gov. Tom Kean signed a death penalty bill into law Friday.

But in three of the 15 states that do not have the death penalty, the issue remains hot.

Massachusetts voters will decide in November whether to adopt a state constitutional amendment which could pave the way for death penalty legislation.

Death penalty proponents in Oregon failed earlier this year to get enough signatures to put a similar measure before voters in November.

New York technically has a statute applying the death penalty to people under life sentence who kill prison guards. But it's generally agreed that new statutes would have to be passed before the death penalty could be invoked in that state. Outgoing Gov. Hugh L. Carey has repeatedly vetoed such attempts.

Besides those three states, the District of Columbia, Iowa, West Virginia, Alaska, Maine, Kansas, Rhode Island, Michigan, Vermont, Wisconsin, Minnesota, North Dakota and Hawaii do not have the death penalty.

Among other states with capital punishment, Arkansas and South Carolina each have 23 men under death sentences, North Carolina has 22 men and one woman, Missouri has 18 men, Virginia has 17 men, Nevada has 13 men and one woman, Indiana and Nebraska have 13 men each, Kentucky has 12 men and one woman, Pennsylvania has 12 men, Maryland has 10 men and two women, Louisiana has nine men, Idaho and New Mexico have five men each, Delaware has four men, Montana and Utah each have three men, Colorado and Washington have two men each, and Wyoming and Ohio each have one man.

Four states have death penalty statutes but no inmates on death row: New Jersey, Connecticut, South Dakota and New Hampshire.

The method of execution in 16 states is electrocution. Nine states use lethal gas, three use hanging, and one uses the firing squad. Four states — Texas, Oklahoma, New Mexico and Idaho, use lethal injections. Washington allows a choice of hanging or injection. New Jersey has not chosen its method, but Kean is said to favor injection.

Only a handful of death row inmates have execution dates, and all are in the midst of appeals that will take months or years.

In Texas, Henry M. Porter, convicted of the 1975 shooting death of a Fort Worth policeman, was scheduled for execution on Thursday, but a federal court Tuesday granted him a stay.

In Indiana, William Minnick, convicted of murder, rape and robbery, has an Aug. 27 execution date, but an appeal is considered certain.

In May, the Missouri Supreme Court rejected a request by death row inmate Gerald Smith to be executed immediately. His final appeal, ordered by the court over Smith's protest, is set for September. He was convicted of the beating death of his girlfriend.

Coppola execution revives debate over death penalty

By ESTES THOMPSON
Associated Press Writer

Virginia's ACLU director termed it an "irresponsible" act of revenge, while the state attorney general called it "society's last resort" as the execution of Frank J. Coppola revived debate over the death penalty.

"I think the state definitely wanted revenge," said Chan Kendrick of the American Civil Liberties Union's Virginia chapter, which had worked behind the scenes Tuesday in a futile legal bid to stop the nation's fifth execution since 1976.

"I think (Gov.) Chuck Robb was totally irresponsible in his post," Kendrick added. "Obviously, politics came before himan life."

Coppola, a 38-year-old ex-policeman, was electrocuted at the Virginia State Penitentiary shortly before 11:30 p.m. for the 1978 murder of the wife of a wealthy Newport News used car dealer.

Like three others who have died since the Supreme Court revived the death penalty in 1976, Coppola had abandoned all appeals and fought attempts by others to intervene.

There are now 1,005 men and 13 women on death row in the United States, an Associated Press survey found.

Four of five suspended appeals

By RICHARD T. PIENCIAK
Associated Press Writer

With the electrocution of Frank J. Coppola in Virginia, five men have been executed in the United States since the Supreme Court revived the death penalty in 1976.

Four of those put to death in the past 15 years, Coppola included, suspended all legal appeals. Only John Spenkelink, electrocuted in Florida on May 25, 1979, was executed against his will.

Gary Gilmore was the first person to be executed in the United States in nearly a decade when he went before a Utah firing squad on Jan. 17, 1977.

Gilmore, whose story was told in Norman Mailer's Pulitzer Prize-winning best-seller "Executioner's Song," had spent 13 of his 36 years in prison for crimes ranging from reckless driving to murder. He had once bragged of stabbing someone 57 times while in jail.

Gilmore refused appeals after being convicted of fatally shooting a hotel clerk and a gasoline station attendant. He went on a hunger strike and twice tried to kill himself before being taken to his death. His final words were "Let's do it."

Spenkelink was the next to die, in Florida's old oak electric chair. He went to his death insisting that the man he had shot twice and beat over the head with a hatchet had forced him at gunpoint to engage in a homosexual act.

The execution ended a six-year legal battle on behalf of the 30-year-old Spenkelink, whose life of crime began at the age of 13.

Spenkelink once sent his mother a drawing from jail of an electric chair painted red, white and blue. He called it "The Spirit of '76."

Jesse Bishop died in the Nevada gas chamber on Oct. 22, 1979. He considered his fate "winning by dying." Bishop had been convicted in the 1977 Las Vegas murder of 22-year-old David Ballard, a newlywed.

Before going to his death, Bishop, 46, put 35 cents in his pocket, and told his family he'd call them "when he got to wherever he was going."

Bishop made no effort to appeal or stop the execution. His family said he didn't want to die but that he realized he had no other viable choice.

It was 17 months before Steven Judy's life ended in Indiana's freshly varnished black oak electric chair on March 9, 1981. Like Gilmore and Bishop, he had resisted efforts to stop the execution.

"I don't hold no grudges. This is my doing. Sorry it happened," he said before walking calmly and unassisted to the chair.

The 24-year-old Judy, convicted of raping and strangling a young mother and drowning her three small children, was given a 2,300-volt charge for 10 seconds and a 500-volt followup charge for 20 seconds.

Destruction of forests threatens primates, scientists say

By PAUL RAEBURN

ATLANTA (AP) — The forces that are destroying the muriqui, perhaps the most endangered primate in the world, could destroy all apes and monkeys on Earth by the turn of the century, scientists say.

For the muriqui, it may already be too late. Only 100 of them are left in the jungles of Brazil.

At a symposium on conservation held Tuesday during a meeting of the International Primatological Society, researchers said the destruction of tropical forests by farmers and loggers is the greatest threat to nonhuman primates such as gorillas and chimpanzees.

They said primates also are being squeezed out of existence by hunters who seek them as a source of food and by the international primate trade.

Many of the tropical forests are being destroyed by farmers who cut trees in a small area, burn the remaining underbrush, and farm the area for two or three years. When the soil becomes depleted, they move on, cutting more trees and repeating the process.

The destruction of forests by loggers also wipes out primates, but selective cutting can allow some to survive, said Michele Aquino of the Sabah Foundation in East Malaysia.

"It would be unwise to suggest that all species in general are resilient animals," he said. Many would survive selective cutting, he said.

The international trade in primates "is not a threat to their survival ... is the business," said Michael Kavanagh of the International Union for Conservation of Nature and Natural Resources in England.

"A single chimpanzee can be worth a million dollars," Kavanagh said.

Trade has declined during the last seven or eight years since its peak in the 1950s when monkeys were used to test polio vaccine, he said.

At the time, the United States was importing as many as 200,000 rhesus monkeys a year from India, Kavanagh said, but now it imports only between 10,000 and 20,000 a year.

Ardith Eudey, a primatologist from the University of Nevada, said that as many as half the primates captured for international trade may die by the time they reach their destinations or shortly thereafter.

One animal dealer in Indonesia estimated that 70 percent died, she said.

Defeat of the freeze

The nuclear freeze movement includes lots of thoughtful people sincerely convinced that a Soviet-American freeze offers the best chance of avoiding nuclear war. The freeze argument was given a fair hearing in the House of Representatives recently.

Its defeat — albeit by a paper-thin 204-202 margin — preserves the prospects for negotiating a less dangerous arms agreement with the Soviets. Had the House vote gone the other way, the Reagan administration's efforts to achieve actual arms reductions would have been seriously undercut. And the Soviets would have been encouraged to hold out for the "freeze" they too profess to desire.

Indeed, the 202 House members who voted for an immediate freeze ought to reflect on why the Soviets are pushing the same proposal. Maybe it's because the Reagan administration is dead right when it contends that the Soviets now hold a significant margin of superiority in strategic nuclear weaponry. Or maybe it's because a freeze would be inherently unverifiable, and thus would permit the Soviets multiple opportunities to cheat just as they are now cheating on existing arms control agreements.

The Reagan alternative — reduction to equal, and lesser, numbers of nuclear weapons on both sides — won a solid 273-125 endorsement by the House following rejection of the freeze-now resolution. The administration's formula might at least diminish the first-strike threat posed by the Soviet Union's current monopoly in heavy, land-based missiles.

The freeze movement would, however unknowingly, make that ominous monopoly permanent. And that would amount to making nuclear war, or nuclear blackmail, more rather than less likely.

Notwithstanding its defeat in the House, and the certainty of a similar fate in the Senate, the call for a nuclear freeze will continue to attract adherents. Its seeming simplicity will continue to suggest an easy way out of a nuclear arms race that no one likes.

But the arduous task of avoiding nuclear war or nuclear blackmail requires something more than good intentions. Keeping the peace requires above all that the Reagan administration proceed with rebuilding an adequate nuclear deterrent — an option the freeze would foreclose.

Multiplication table

It took somewhere between 2 million and 5 million years for the world's population to reach the first billion souls. The second billion arrived after 130 years. The upcoming billion mark — the fifth — will be reached in 1987, and it will be accomplished in a time span of 12 years.

Most of the growth is taking place in Third World nations, where food, housing, sanitation and economic opportunity are lacking. It may be the year 2040 before zero growth is reached. In the meantime, the world will be hard put to avoid widespread famine and disease.

Populations are exploding at an awesome rate. By the year 2000, the population of Latin America will have jumped 45 percent, Africa 70 percent, and the world, now populated with 4.6 billion people, will contain more than 6 billion.

Mexico City is expected to grow from its present 15 million to a supercity of 31 million in the next 18 years. Other supercities will include Sao Paulo, 25.8 million; Shanghai, 23.7 million; Tokyo-Yokohama, 23.7 million; and New York-New Jersey, 22.4 million.

By the end of the century, more than half the world's population will be living in large cities, a situation that brings on social and political pressures, leading to racial, class and regional unrest.

All these figures point to one conclusion. There's got to be some control over the birth rate and the sooner it's obtained, the less painful it will be. The crowding of the globe will become so apparent within a few years that there will be few who will argue against birth control.

The world has to work out a solution before it's too late.

Another View:

Rose colored glasses

Although Ronald Reagan has been in office fewer than 19 months and his first budget and programs won't be a year old until Oct. 1, hysterical cries to jettison his economic policies are being heard across the land.

This irrational verbal onslaught has been intensified by the announcement that the nationwide unemployment rate, which remained at 9.5 percent in May and June, had climbed to 9.8 percent in July.

In July, the jobless rate was the highest in 41 years. Back then Franklin D. Roosevelt had been president for more than eight years and despite all that time in the White House, he was able to bring the unemployment level to barely one-tenth of 1 percent below double-digit figures.

That was during World War II before the Pearl Harbor attack, when the United States was in the process of expanding defense production to supply munitions and arms to its European Allies at war with Germany.

Recovery from an economic setback is not an easy task. This was illustrated during FDR's long years at the helm. He failed to bring unemployment to a reasonably low level; it took World War II to finally restore a healthy economy. Even as late as 1940, the U.S. jobless rate still was mired in double-digits at 14.6 percent.

Lane Kirkland, AFL-CIO president, is among the leaders aiming wild verbal blasts at Mr. Reagan and pressing Congress to take immediate steps to reverse the "discredited" economic policies of the Reagan administration. The truth of the matter is that Kirkland and others, including congressional Democrats, have turned the economy into a political football and a cruel hoax on the jobless.

This strategy has been prompted by the jolt union leaders received in the 1980 election as 44 percent of the union families went to the polls and cast their vote for Mr. Reagan.

Union officials have other reasons for fear. Membership in organized labor has been declining for years. The U.S. Department of Labor, in a directory published this year, reports that union membership decreased by 652,000 from 1978 to 1980. Information provided by unions shows that their membership had declined during the Carter administration from 22,880,000 workers in 1978 to 22,228,000 in 1980. Union members also are in decline as a percentage of the work force that totaled 99.7 million in July.

The current recession is a worldwide dilemma with Canada, Britain and other industrial nations plagued with higher joblessness, greater inflation and steeper interest rates than those existing in the United States. The problem should be viewed from that perspective, not through Kirkland's twisted lack of reasoning.

WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND

Nepotism rules in New Mexico laboratory

WASHINGTON — "It's not what you know but who you know" is an old, if ungrammatical, rule of thumb in government career building. It seems to be the operating edict at Los Alamos National Laboratory, the remote, super-secret weapons research facility in New Mexico.

Jack Anderson

While 45 workers were laid off last April in an economy-dictated reduction-in-force, the director's wife was put on the payroll in an unadvertised position. Relatives of other top officials have also been appointed to lucrative, unadvertised positions.

Here are some of the more outrageous examples of Los Alamos "all-in-the-family" system:

— Alison Kerr, wife of the facility's director, Donald Kerr, was hired as an $1,800-a-month librarian during the RIF last spring. The job was not advertised. It was given to Mrs. Kerr after she had worked in the same position as a part-time consultant for almost two years.

— Susan Gilmore, stepdaughter of Rosemary Harris, the laboratory's associate director for administration, was first hired last year as a $1,500-a-month management trainee. She left last March, but later returned to her job, which was still vacant. Disgruntled employees said she was picked over more qualified candidates.

"The position was closed for applications," one source told my associate John Dillon. "Many people were turned down. Harris directed that we approve that hire."

Harris denied pulling strings to get her stepdaughter hired, but acknowledged that "the personnel division reports to me and the personnel division handles all of our hiring."

— Nancy Zachariasen, wife of division leader Frederick Zachariasen, was hired to run the laboratory's archives program last November — in the middle of a hiring freeze. An internal Los Alamos document shows that officials knew the waiver might raise some eyebrows. "I realize we have been admonished by the director's office to take seriously the hiring freeze," wrote personnel officer Gilbert Ortiz. "I believe my dilemma is different because we have been negotiating to hire Mrs. Zachariasen for the last six to seven months."

— Patricia Loree, wife of deputy division leader Edward Sitzberger, was hired in February 1981 as an interior decorator. Later she assumed a three-day-a-week position that pays almost $25,000 a year. Though she began as a consultant before she was married, Loree was put on the regular payroll after her marriage to Sitzberger.

Loree's official title now is "assistant to the director." A Los Alamos spokesman insisted that she is more than just an interior decorator. Her duties, he said, include "aesthetic long-range planning, interfacing with building designers, organization and coordination and exhibition of laboratory art displays and expediting administrative actions for the director." In other words, she also hangs pictures.

Despite officials' protestations of innocence, another internal document shows that, at least in the case of the associate administrator's stepdaughter, there was a clear realization that charge of nepotism might arise. On a memo requesting approval to hire Gilmore, an official added this notation: "Well, I guess we can live with this OK. There certainly is no need for intervention in an official capacity. (Director) Kerr should, however, be aware in the event that someone chooses to make an issue out of this."

Footnote: Approximately 840 married couples work at Los Alamos — nearly one-fourth of the facility's 7,000 work force. Officials explain that this is because the laboratory is the main employer in a small, remote community.

KIM'S FEVER CHART — Here's an update on the CIA's health report on North Korea's 70-year-old president, Kim Il-sung.

Of Kim's known medical problems by far the most serious are those relating to his cardiovascular system. For over 20 years there have been reports that he has a 'heart ailment' or a 'weak heart,' and for nearly that long he has been reported to have high blood pressure."

The dictator's circulatory problems are aggravated by obesity and a "long history of smoking." The CIA report notes that there are unconfirmed reports of various heart-related ailments over the years, but that "it is impossible to state with certainty whether Kim has had a true myocardial infarction," or heart attack.

The health profile said it does seem certain that Kim has "a significant heart disease" and predicts that "he will have additional, potentially fatal cardiovascular or cerebrovascular episodes, e.g., a heart attack or a stroke."

The CIA also lists a number of other ailments that have reportedly dogged Kim for decades. They include syphilis, laryngitis, hoarseness, coughing, arthritis, failing eyesight and a recurring sinus problem. Potentially the most serious is an old kidney stone ailment, which reportedly required surgery in the early 1960s.

PUBLISH AND PERISH: This may be the worst year for book publishers since the invention of movable type, according to industry insiders. One and possibly two renowned publishing houses are expected to fold or go into merger arrangements within a year. One ex-publisher, a victim of the hard times, predicted that only Simon & Schuster, Random House and Doubleday are sure bets to be in business five years from now.

The big problems are that hardback prices have soared out of sight, paperbacks aren't taking up the slack, and television continues to erode readership.

A CHANGING WORLD

Reagan offers no pipeline alternative

BERGEN, Norway — Norwegian, English and American oil and gas men who do their coffee and liquor drinking in this port city are amazed that President Reagan got himself into such a mess with European allies over the 3,600-mile Soviet gas pipeline from Siberia to Western Europe.

John Pinkerman

North Sea and Norwegian Sea gas always has been a possible alternative to the Siberian project that will do much for the Soviet economy. What is more, West Germany and other North Atlantic Treaty Organization friends long have asked for a Reagan "better plan" but the U.S. president has not offered one. Instead, he has only stuck to a stubborn and completely negative attitude on what Bonn, Paris and other governments feel is a genuine need.

This is unfortunate because details on a possible "Norwegian alternative" have been somewhere in the White House bureaucracy since April. It is doubly unfortunate because the president's adamant opposition and threats concerning the deal with the Russians are getting nowhere and other factors are putting America more in the light of "sinner" than the Europeans.

Oil-gas experts here note that the Soviets will reap about $10.7 billion in gas income from Western Europe annually and will buy about $15 billion in equipment and technology from the West. And, in almost the same breath, they wonder why Mr. Reagan has not pushed a Heritage Foundation suggestion that this whole deal be made with Norway rather than with a political and military enemy.

Norway has enormous reserves — proved sources of 4.3 billion barrels of oil and 12.2 trillion cubic feet of gas (and much gas is being flared — wasted — today). Estimated recoverable reserves come to 6.03 billion barrels of oil and 95.9 trillion cubic feet of gas. North Sea source production has been tremendous.

There are problems concerned with getting some of the vast supplies of gas and oil to Western Europe but they are not insurmountable. One oil man pointed out that there already is a small pipeline reaching to Denmark.

Another noted equally obvious advantages of a Norway role, if Mr. Reagan would urge such on the Oslo government, presently cautious in avoiding a boom or bust oil-gas situation. The biggest advantage, aside from ready availability of the gas and oil is the fact that Norway is a NATO member, not an adversary and possible enemy who could turn off the source at any time.

The cost of moving gas from Norway, so close to the "customers," would be much less than that involved in the 3,600-mile haul from Siberia. And, inasmuch as all construction would be in Western Europe, the thousands of jobs created would benefit friends rather than an enemy.

Even though Norway has been careful not to push oil and gas exploitation too rapidly, the conservative government elected in 1981 has indicated a willingness to allow much more energy development than in the past, at the same time giving attention to environmental considerations.

It may be too late for the White House to suggest the Norwegian alternative and if it is that is a pity. Someone in the Reagan entourage has been asleep at the switch.

The net result is that the president has achieved the direct opposite of what he sought through his sanctions against using U.S.-origin materials and technology. Instead of imposing real economic costs on the Soviet Union and sending a signal of Western determination, he has blown a large hole in NATO's unity.

As the London Times says, "The Russians must be absolutely delighted. They will get their pipeline and the earnings from it. . . . And the whole farce makes nonsense of Washington's attempt to contrast American virtues in opposing the pipeline with European sin in making a deal with Moscow in the absense of a Reagan alternative."

THE BIBLE
CAN YOU QUOTE IT?

By ELIZABETH ROSS WIERSEMA

1. The word "Selah" used many times at the end of sentences in Psalms and used three times in Habakkuk, is a Hebrew word believed by authorities to be a pause in musical direction, probably when psalms were sung, as a silent salutation. What is known as "the Feast of Weeks"? Deuteronomy 16.

ART BUCHWALD

Old joke used to tell of new law

This may be the last column I write about the CIA. A law signed by the president makes it a criminal offense to name names "in the course of a pattern of activities intended to expose covert agents, if the government has reason to believe that such activities would impair or impede the foreign intelligence of the United States."

Art Buchwald

On paper it sounds good, but the law is so broad that none of us knows exactly what it means in terms of reporting the news.

In addressing the CIA at Langley when he signed the bill, President Reagan opened up his talk by telling an old joke. It used to be told about Moskowitz, but the president switched it to Murphy.

The story was that there was an agent named Murphy overseas who couldn't be contacted. So they sent another CIA agent over to locate Murphy. The code phrase to make contact was, "'Tis a fair day and it will be lovelier this evening."

The agent went to a pub in a little town in Ireland and asked the bartender, "How would I get in touch with Murphy?"

The bartender replied, "Well, if it's Murphy the farmer you want, it's two miles down the road, and it's the house on the left. If it's Murphy the bootmaker, he's on the second floor of the building across the street." And the bartender added, "My name is Murphy, too."

The agent picked up his drink and said, "Well, 'tis a fair day, but it will be lovelier this evening."

"Oh," said the bartender, "it's Murphy the spy you're looking for."

Everyone in the audience laughed except the reporters. The reason they didn't is they were not sure under the new law if they could print the story or not.

It was obvious the bartender had violated the Intelligence Identities Protection Act by revealing the name of Murphy as a covert agent and the poor man could be sentenced to three years in prison and fined $15,000 for the indiscretion.

But worse still, if the bartender was charged with the crime, a newspaperman could not tell about it without blowing Murphy's cover.

Even the president of the United States would be liable for arrest for revealing how the agent found out which Murphy was working for the CIA. Since Mr. Reagan is a government employee, his carelessness could cost him 10 years in prison and a $50,000 fine. Not only did Mr. Reagan name an agent, but he also gave away a CIA code phrase which gravely harmed Murphy's intelligence activities, and probably compromised an entire covert operation in Ireland.

It wouldn't surprise me if, at this very moment, the Irish counter-intelligence people are checking out every Murphy in the boondocks.

Some people might say that I've taken an extreme case, and the president would not have mentioned Murphy in his joke unless the agent had already left the country.

But it does dramatize the problems the new law presents for those of us in and out of the government.

Now you know why this may be my last column about the CIA. I'm not going to do three years in the slammer the next time Ronald Reagan tells his old joke about Murphy. (Besides, his name is really Moskowitz.)

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Wednesday, Aug. 11, the 223rd day of 1982. There are 142 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

On Aug. 11, 1941, the Atlantic Charter was signed by President Roosevelt and British Prime Minister Winston Churchill aboard a warship in the western Atlantic.

On this date:

In 1860, the nation's first successful silver mill began operation in Virginia City, Nev.

In 1935, Nazi storm troopers staged mass demonstrations against Jews in Germany.

In 1975, the United States vetoed the proposed admission of North and South Vietnam to United Nations.

In 1980, the renomination of President Carter was assured when Sen. Edward Kennedy, D-Mass., withdrew his bid on the first night of the Democratic National Convention.

Ten years ago: North Vietnamese forces shelled and carried out sniper attacks on South Vietnam's capital of Saigon.

Five years ago: Sen. Frank Church, D-Idaho, concluded three days of talks in Cuba with President Fidel Castro.

One year ago: Secretary of State Alexander Haig said the United States would seek "fair and balanced" agreements on arms control with the Soviet Union.

Germans investing in U.S.

The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

LOS ANGELES — The Germans are still coming — to invest in American real estate, that is.

Latest to join the realty brigade marching into Southern California is Angermann Inc., which has established an office in the Los Angeles World Trade Center.

Its parent firm is Horst F.G. Angermann, with offices in Hamburg. In its 28th year of business, the company is West Germany's largest commercial and industrial real estate brokerage firm, according to Robert W. Malcolm, Angermann Inc. vice president and general manager.

Malcolm, an American real estate broker and certified public accountant who has spent nearly 10 years in Germany and England in management positions with American companies, was hired in March to run the Los Angeles office, which opened in May.

Recently, he and Joachim Velte, executive vice president and general manager of the Angermann company in Hamburg and executive vice president and director of Angermann Inc. in Los Angeles, discussed why the firm, which has more than $60 million in exclusive listings and last year reported a sales volume slightly in excess of $36 million, opened its first overseas office in Los Angeles.

"We want to duplicate our activities in Hamburg within three to five years," Velte said.

Besides handling the sales of commercial and industrial real estate, the company serves in Germany as a merger and acquisition broker. "In this area," Malcolm said, "they are also a leader with a 1981 transaction volume exceeding DM (deutsche marks) 250 million." By today's exchange, that would amount to $101 million.

The company in Germany also has divisions specializing in appraisals, auctioneering, and the sale of manufacturing plants and equipment. A separate firm under the Angermann umbrella provides management consulting services.

Angermann Inc. will be responsible for all operations of the Angermann organization within the United States.

ITT grant provides services

TEMPE, Ariz. (AP) — A program to help Tempe's young, the elderly and the disadvantaged has been inaugurated here, thanks to a $25,000 grant from a business organization.

The Tempe Community Action Agency was awarded the money as part of the "Best Civic Idea" project started last year to elicit suggestions for community improvement in U.S. cities.

The program's benefactor, the International Telephone and Telegraph Corp., is seeking to encourage more community initiative and broader corporate support of U.S. cities in the wake of federal aid cutbacks.

The money is being used in Tempe to provide employment for 30 teenagers in a six-week summer program to aid senior citizens, the handicapped single-parent households and non-profit organizations.

The tasks for the youngsters include yard work, odd jobs, light housekeeping and babysitting. Those non-profit organizations operating with a skeleton crew because of federal funding cutbacks also benefit from the program by employing teens in clerical and custodial capacities.

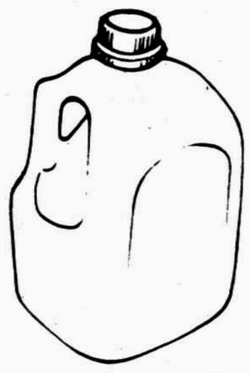

The youth employment program was recommended as a means of decreasing juvenile delinquency, which has been singled out as one of Tempe's major problems.

Hill County officials dig into a well near Blum recently looking for bodies. The remains of four persons were recovered and Henry Burton Merrill has been charged with murder in the case.

Positive indentification expected for skeleton found near Hillsboro

HILLSBORO, Texas (AP) — Sheriff's officers say that positive identifications of two skeletons thought to be that of a White Settlement man and the brother of a Cleburne attorney could be made by the end of the week.

Hill County Sheriff Brent Button said Tuesday that dental and medical records of the two men had been sent to the Dallas County medical examiner's office, along with skeletal remains found in an abandoned well near Lake Whitney.

"We were hoping that we would have already had positive identification from the medical examiner," Button said.

A 52-year-old recluse who Button said befriended the men remained in Hill County jail in lieu of $150,000 bond on three murder counts filed after parts of three skeletons were found in the well.

Button said relatives of both men had supplied missing persons data to authorities. He said the White Settlement man, whose name he withheld pending notification of relatives, had been missing for almost two years.

The Cleburne man, who Button identified as Tommy Rogers, had been reported missing 1½ years ago. Rogers, in his 40s, worked in the used car business, he said.

The White Settlement man, also in his 40s, was a construction worker, Button said.

The first skeleton was found late Saturday at the well near Lake Whitney after sheriff's officers received anonymous tips. Henry Burton Merrill was arrested minutes later at his Nolan River campsite about 200 feet from the well.

Other remains were discovered later in the weekend. Parts of three skeletons were being analyzed by pathologists, said Tony Badger of the medical examiner's office.

"Both of them (the missing men) were known to be associates of his, or friends," Button said. "They kind of hung around together. They were both known to visit the suspect at his campsite down there."

Button on Tuesday called a halt to further excavations near the well at the small community of Blum near Lake Whitney. Instead, he ordered investigators to concentrate on making identifications.

"We don't think there are any more skeletons out there," he said. "There is a lot of rumors and talk going on, but we have to deal with facts, and we have no strong leads."

Neighbors described Merrill as "a real mountain man" and a "hermit" living at the campsite six miles northwest of tiny Blum.

They said the victims were believed to be occasional fishing and drinking buddies of Merrill.

"The idea scares me to death," said Delbert Pool, who often went fishing with Merrill. "I couldn't picture him killing anybody."

A second man was questioned by Cleburne police in connection with the discovery of the skeletons, but Button said that it was unlikely that charges would be filed against him. The man was given a lie detector test Tuesday but the results were not released, the sheriff said.

Merrill was known around Hill and Johnson counties for his unconventional life style, said District Attorney Dan Dent.

"He's got a mattress," said Peace Justice R.F. "Skinner" Wallace, who set Merrill's bond Monday, "and in the summer he'll just lay it under a tree by the river and stay there. In the winter, he goes back up to his 'chicken house.' That's what people up there call it, anyway. He was known as a real mountain man."

Deputies seized three loaded rifles near Merrill's campsite late Monday. Merrill was to be tried Sept. 7 on a charge that he stole $10,000 worth of furs in Brown County.

Man leads police to unmarked graves

HOUSTON (AP) — A bus mechanic who "believes women are evil" and who may have killed 22 women at random in the last 10 years has led police to two unmarked graves while bargaining for a 60-year jail term, authorities said.

Police dug up the remains of a 25-year-old woman on Monday and unearthed a second woman's body, found wearing panties and a bra, in another shallow grave Tuesday.

"He just does not like women — he believes women are evil," said State District Judge Doug Shaver, after he read a psyciatric report on Coral Eugene Watts, 28. "There's never an indication of sexual molestation or theft, robbery — anything."

Watts, who moved to Texas from Michigan in 1981, agreed Tuesday to help solve the murders in exchange for a 60-year prison term on an unrelated May 23 burglary charge.

Shaver said he would agree to the plea bargain when Watts is sentenced next week, but with a recommendation from the court that Watts never be paroled.

Prosecutors and police said two bodies found this week were among nine women Watts has admitted strangling in Houston in the last 18 months. The bodies of the seven other victims have already been found and were listed as unsolved murders.

Police said Watts also is suspected of stalking and killing women in the Texas cities of Austin and Galveston, the Michigan cities of Detroit, Ann Arbor and Kalamazoo; and Windsor, Ontario.

Prosecutors said the victims, all apparently chosen at random, were stabbed to death or strangled.

"He'd be driving down the street and see a woman and think 'that's an evil woman and she must die.' He'd follow her until he could get her into an isolated situation and he'd kill her," Shaver said.

"He didn't rape them. He didn't steal from them," said District Attorney John B. Holmes. Watts knew enough about the deaths to convince officers he was involved, he said.

Prosecutors said Watts agreed to lead police to other graves and help solve other crimes outside Houston, but only if authorities in the other jurisdictions give him immunity from prosecution.

Holmes said he had to settle for a 60-year sentence against Watts because of lack of evidence in the slayings. He said because Watts committed his crimes alone and chose his victims at random, there was "not a stitch of evidence to go on."

"This was the best we could do. We figured that at least this way we'd get the bodies and the life sentence," he said.

"I have been told the number we're talking about is as many as 22" victims, all young women, Shaver said.

The body found Monday was of Suzanne Searles, 25, last seen May 4.

Suspects sought in bludgeoning of Uvalde County sheriff's deputy

UVALDE, Texas (AP) — Authorities today continued their manhunt for four of five suspects in the bludgeoning death of a sheriff's deputy south of here, after the arrest of a 30-year-old man.

Armando Espinosa was in Uvalde County jail in lieu of $250,000 bond, said County Judge Jerry White. Espinoza was jailed Monday in connection with the bludgeoning of deputy Clyde Hobbs, 34, and originally charged with attempted capital murder.

White said capital murder charges would be substituted today in the wake of Hobbs' death at 10 a.m. Tuesday. Four murder warrants were also issued after Hobbs' death, he said.

Roadblocks were set up throughout Uvalde County as Texas Rangers, city police and Department of Public Safety and sheriff's officers combed the terrain south of Uvalde for the suspects.

"We are looking from San Antonio to Mexico City, and a lot of other places," said county sheriff Kenneth Kelley.

Sheriff's reserve officer Tommy Walker said that Espinosa was arrested at his Uvalde home at 11:30 p.m. Monday.

Harrelson testimony to continue

SAN ANTONIO, Texas (AP) — The man charged with firing the shot that killed U.S. District Judge John H. Wood Jr. took the stand in a federal pretrial hearing to bolster his claim that his rights were violated by government electronic eavesdropping.

Charles V. Harrelson was to resume his testimony today, the eighth day of the hearing, after spending about 30 minutes late Tuesday testifying before U.S. District Judge William S. Sessions.

Harrelson, 44, described earlier by the convict who taped his conversations at the Harris County Jail as "a pretty hairy character," was called to the stand by his own attorney, Thomas G. Sharpe Jr.

Sharpe was attempting to prove that Harrelson and co-defendant Jo Ann Starr Harrelson were legally married and that their husband-wife privilege was violated by FBI electronic eavesdropping at the Harris County Jail in 1980 and 1981. Sharpe also contends Harrelson's attorney-client privilege with El Paso lawyer Joseph Chagra was violated.

Last week, the government filed a brief alleging the marriages of the Harrelsons, and of co-defendants Jimmy and Elizabeth Chagra, were bigamous and therefore not qualified for husband-wife privilege.

Jimmy Chagra is charged with paying Harrelson $250,000 to shoot Wood here on May 29, 1979. The two wives were indicted as co-conspirators, along with Joseph Chagra, who claims to have represented both his brother and Harrelson in the Wood investigation.

The government contends that Harrelson had not dissolved a 1968 common-law union with Sandra Sue Attaway.

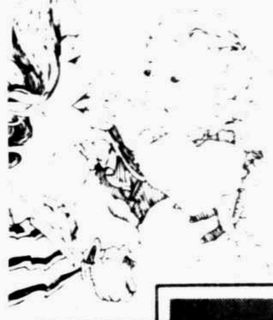

Despite Harrelson's contention at four murder trials in the early 1970s that Ms. Attaway was his common-law wife, four judges ruled that she could testify against him.

Jury debates punishment in trial on child killing

SAN BERNARDINO (AP) — A jury's guilty verdict against child killer Brett "Panama Red" Pensinger was based largely on circumstantial evidence, Pensinger's attorney argued as he urged a jury not to sentence his client to death.

"You found him guilty, but I can't see how you did it without doubt," said defense attorney Donald Feld in closing arguments Tuesday. "To convict someone where there is so much doubt on the evidence is one thing, but to kill a person is totally another matter."

Chicken recipes adapted for microwave cooking

By DESIREE VIVEA
Copley News Service

By 1962 farmers were raising more than 1,500,000,000 meat chickens per year, to feed the average American eating more than 24 pounds a year. Over the past 20 years the figures have climbed, obviously.

It is easy to see why chicken is such a popular dish, providing a substantial, hearty meal at a price lower than most meats, with the added advantage of containing less cholesterol than red meats.

CHICKENS, BELONGING TO THE FAMILY Phasianidae, descended from a variety of wildfowl living in the jungles of Southeast Asia. Man first tamed and raised the birds 3,000 to 5,000 years ago. Since then, this versatile fowl has made its appearance as guest of honor at the dinner tables of many countries, in a variety of preparations.

Chicken is sold in several forms. Roasters are usually male birds. Broilers and fryers are young chickens of both sexes, 6 to 13 weeks old. These constitute two-thirds of fowl raised for meat. Stewing chickens are hens past their egg-laying prime. Castrated male chickens, their reproductive organs removed surgically, are called capons, and caponettes are males injected with hormones to cause sterility.

MICROWAVE-COOKED CHICKEN is a juicy and tender entree for lunch or dinner. Quick cooking retains moistness, yet fails to brown the skin. But don't let that stop you; color your bird with gravy, paprika or vegetable dye. An alternative is to cook the chicken halfway through, then brown it in a standard oven till done.

The age of the chicken, not the size, determines how it should be cooked. Covering for the first half of cooking time and uncovering to finish is a good method to follow; breast side down at first, then breast side up. Elevate the bird while cooking, on a non-metallic base or rack to keep it from sitting in the juices. With a cut-up fryer, arrange the pieces in a single layer on a shallow baking dish. Place the meatiest pieces at the edges of the pan, with smaller pieces, such as wings and drumsticks, in the center.

CURRIED CHICKEN IN AVOCADO HALVES

cup chopped, pared apple
¼ cup chopped onion
¼ cup chopped celery
Dash garlic powder
1½ tsps. curry powder
2 tbsps. all-purpose flour
1 cup chicken broth
½ tsp. salt
Dash pepper
1½ cups cooked, diced chicken
2 large avocados
2 cups cooked rice

Measure apple, onion, celery, garlic powder, curry powder and flour into 1-quart dish. Mix well. Gradually stir in broth. Blend in salt and pepper. Cook 4 to 4½ minutes until thickened. Stir every minute. Stir in chicken. Cook 1½ minutes. Halve and peel avocados. Arrange avocado halves on cooked rice in shallow baking dish. Heat 1½ to 2 minutes, or until rice and avocados are hot. Spoon hot curried chicken over avocado halves. This entree may be served with a choice of condiments: chopped hard-cooked egg, crumbled cooked bacon, sweet mixed pickle, coconut, raisins, chutney, preserved ginger, chopped peanuts. Serves 4.

CHICKEN CORDON BLEU

6 boned chicken breasts, with skin
6 thinly sliced pieces cooked ham
6 thin slices Muenster or Monterey jack cheese
2 tbsps. flour
¼ cup butter
¼ lb. grated Mozzarella cheese
¼ cup milk
8 medium sliced mushrooms
¼ cup dry white wine
Parsley flakes

Flatten chicken breasts until thin. Place rolled ham and cheese slice on each chicken breast (cheese tucked inside) and pin edges together with a toothpick (pinning skin w[illegible] possible). Dust with flour on each side. In a 10-inch glass skillet, melt butter [illegible] onds. Coat chicken sides with butter and arrange with large sides toward the outside of the dish. Cover with wax paper and cook 6 to 8 minutes. Turn chicken over with large sides toward the outside of the dish, rotate dish one-quarter turn, cover and cook 8 to 10 minutes. Rest 10 minutes. Remove chicken from dish; add cheese and milk, blending well. Cook 1 to 1½ minutes stirring often until mixture boils. Add mushrooms and wine, blending until smooth. Pour over chicken. Serves 4 to 6.

Sherried London Broil turns a summertime cook-out into a festive occasion for a party of eight.

Come to a summer cookout!

As the weather gets warmer, any excuse is a good reason to have a barbecue. Whether you are inviting just a couple of friends, or the whole gang, a summertime cookout is a festive occasion.

The word "barbecue" probably derives from the Spanish "barbacoa", which is a framework of wood or branches set over a fire and used as a support for cooking meat, usually beef. The tradition of cooking meat, or fish, over an open fire appears to be international. North Africans have their "mechoui" of whole lamb spitted and roasted over live coals. The Greeks prefer an outdoor feast of tender young goats, while Canadian Indians like to grill salmon on a wooden frame. Southern Americans bury a whole pig in a pit lined with red hot coals, the result of burning a wood fire for many hours.

It is in the southwestern United States, however, that barbecues have reached the pinnacle of perfection. Pits are dug, lined with hot rocks, live coals or burning wood, depending on local tradition. Secret sauces are concocted, some so hot they seem to explode in your mouth. And anything that can be basted and roasted is added: spareribs, beef quarters, chicken, sausages, it all goes in. Several hours later everyone digs in to smoky slabs of succulent meat.

At home you can have all the fun without the crowds. The selection of barbecue equipment today ranges from an inexpensive three-legged brazier to a fancy gas grill. Decide how much and how often you cook out as well as how many you generally feed. There is no sense in buying an expensive gas grill if you only cook a couple of steaks two or three times a season. Whatever you choose, make good use of your charcoal. Generously pile it up to start the coals. When there is no more visible black on the hot charcoal, spread it out evenly and begin cooking. It will usually take 30 to 45 minutes to have a good bed of coals, so plan ahead and start the fire in plenty of time.

SHERRIED LONDON BROIL

2 pound London broil
1 can (6 fl. oz.) V-8 cocktail vegetable juice
1/3 cup dry sherry
1/4 cup sliced green onions
2 tablespoons soy sauce
1 large clove garlic, minced
1/2 teaspoon dry mustard
1/4 teaspoon ground ginger

Score steak; place in shallow dish. To make marinade, combine remaining ingredients; pour over steak. Marinate several hours or overnight, turning steak occasionally. Remove steak from marinade; place on broiler pan. Broil four inches from heat 25 minutes or until desired doneness, turning and brushing with marinade every 10 minutes. Makes eight servings.

Tasting new dishes is fun on vacation

By MERLE ELLIS

It was the vacation of a lifetime for my wife and me. We spent 11 wonderfully relaxing days on a 75-foot ketch sailing from island to island in the Greek Cyclades, and eating. We had an exquisitely grilled rock cod that I bought from a fisherman on Kea. A beautiful lady — at least 80 years young — cooked it for us in the local taverna and joined in to help us eat it, and toast it and the occasion with lots of retzina. It's amazing what a universal language food is!

WE HAD LOTS OF GOOD FOOD both aboard ship and in the sidewalk cafes and restaurants that line seawalls from Pireaus to Santorini and back. But our favorites by far were Souvlakia (barbecued meat cubes) and Gyros (meat-stuffed pocketbread sandwiches). Both were served from sidewalk stands along the docks and in almost every village square. No two versions were ever the same. We had Souvlakia made from cubed lamb, from cubed beef and from cubed pork. We even had a version that was made of mixed ground lamb and beef. They all were delicious.

GYROS, TOO, CAME IN A VARIETY of forms in Greece. The meat is roasted on a spit, then sliced off thinly and served in pocket breads along with a dressing of chopped tomatoes and tzatziki (a blend of yogurt, diced cucumber and garlic). The meat in one town may be beef and at the next port of call, roast pig or lamb. We tried them all.

The recipe for Gyros is particularly appropriate for this time of year because it calls for a barbecue.

GYROS
(Meat-stuffed pocketbreads)

Slice a 3- to 5-pound bottom round or boneless shoulder roast (cross-rib) across the grain into 1/2-inch slices. Arrange the slices in a glass baking dish and pour over a marinade made of 1/4-cup each, olive oil and dry white wine, 3 tablespoons lime or lemon juice, 1/4 teaspoon each, oregano leaves, crushed bay leaves and freshly-ground black pepper, 2 cloves of garlic minced and two tablespoons finely-chopped fresh parsley. Cover and refrigerate overnight.

The next day, reassemble the slices so that they assume the shape of the original roast. Tie securely with string and put on the spit of a barbecue rotisserie. Cook over coals for 1-1/2 to 2 hours, or until a meat thermometer registers the desired degree of doneness.

To serve, remove the spit fork from one side of the meat and slide the roast down to the end of the spit. Remove the strings and carve the roast so that it falls in thin, narrow strips. Pile some strips into pocket breads or on buns, top with Greek Cucumber-Tomato Salad (recipe follows), add a dollop of lime yogurt and enjoy.

GREEK CUCUMBER-TOMATO SALAD

6 large tomatoes, peeled, seeded
2 large cucumbers, peeled, seeded
1/2 cup olive or salad oil
1/4 cup white wine vinegar
1 tsp. each, oregano, pepper
2 tsp. finely-chopped parsley

Cut vegetables into 1/2-inch cubes. Mix together oil, vinegar, oregano and parsley. Pour over vegetables and refrigerate, covered, overnight or until ready to serve.

SOUVLAKÌA
(Barbecued meat cubes)

1 leg of lamb
1 cup olive oil
1 tsp. ground cumin
1 tsp. dried oregano
2 bay leaves, crushed
Salt, pepper
1 cup chopped green peppers
2 onions, chopped
4 oz. tomato puree
1/4 cup port wine
1/4 cup vinegar
1/4 cup fresh lemon juice

Cut lamb into 1-inch cubes. Combine olive oil, cumin, oregano, bay leaves, salt and pepper to make a marinade. Add lamb cubes and marinate overnight in the refrigerator. The next day, add green peppers, onions and tomato puree to the marinade. Marinate for several hours or overnight. Add port, vinegar and lemon juice to the marinade and refrigerate for several hours or overnight. (The longer the lamb is allowed to marinate, the better it will be.)

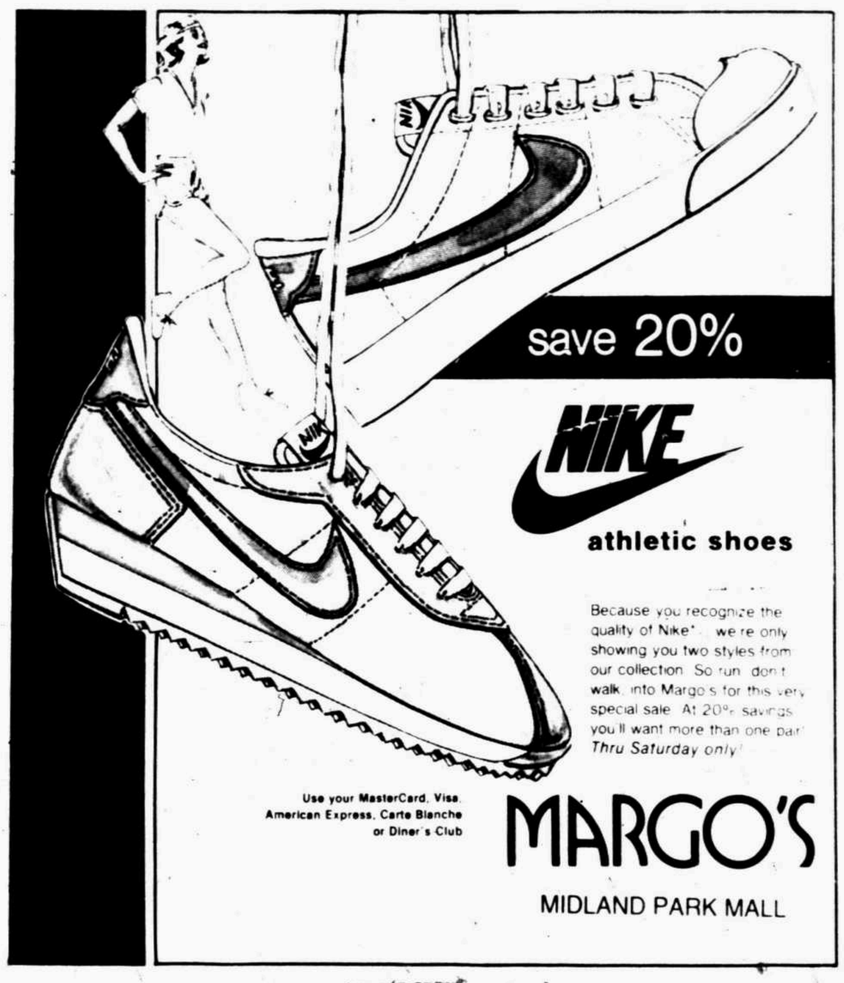

When ready to serve, thread the meat on small 5- or 6-inch wooden skewers and grill quickly over hot coals. Or, bake in a 375-degree oven for 12 to 15 minutes until browned. Serve on the skewers as an appetizer or on a bed of rice pilaf as a main course.

Makes about 2 dozen skewers. (Copyright Chronicle Publishing Co. 1982)

Freeze fresh peaches now and relive the warmth of summer next winter in every icy bite.

Freeze peaches now, enjoy later

Experience summer in December: freeze fresh peaches now while they're in season.

Freezing is one of the easiest preserving methods and peaches adapt easily to freezing. First they should be fully ripened although not soft. Spread them in a single layer out of the hot sun and leave them at room temperature for a day or two. Watch that they don't overripen.

To remove skins easily, dip in boiling water for 10 to 15 seconds, then in cold water. Cut peaches in half, twist slightly to loosen pits, then strip off skins. Slice or quarter peaches, as desired. Halves tend to lose their shape on thawing. Small peaches are best for freezing halves.

TO PREVENT DARKENING, one of the following treatments should be used:

1. When preparing large amounts of fruit for freezing at one time, place the peeled fruit into a solution of two tablespoons each salt and vinegar to one gallon cold water. Drain and rinse fruit treated this way before freezing.

2. Ascorbic acid (vitamin C) is an effective antioxident. Dissolve 1/4 teaspoon pure ascorbic acid crystals in one tablespoon cold water, our over one quart prepared peaches and toss gently using rubber spatula. (Although lemon juice contains ascorbic acid, it requires seven tablespoons to equal the ascorbic acid of 1/4 teaspoon crystals and this amount would make the peaches too sour.)

3. Toss one quart prepared peaches with one to 1-1/2 tablespoons commercial ascorbic acid mixture (such as Fruit Fresh) using rubber spatula. (If sugar is to be added, stir the ascorbic acid mixture with the sugar to be used, two to four tablespoons per quart of fruit, or more if desired).

FREEZING PEACHES in dry pack is more economical of space than in syrup. Plastic freezer bags, which can be heat-sealed, are much less expensive than jars and after they are frozen, they can be stacked to occupy much less space in the freezer. (Always place bags in single layer in freezer until fruit is frozen, then stack).

When you're ready to use your frozen peaches, unfreeze in the refrigerator for a more uniform thaw resulting in less change in the texture of the fruits. In an emergency, try thawing at room temperature in front of an electric fan or in cold water. Do note that fruit packed without sweetener thaws more slowly.

Should you plan to cook with your icy peaches, only thaw them long enough to searate the pieces. Too, remember that frozen fruits have more juice than called for in baked products and you may have to add a little extra thickening.

Flatfish clan offers varied dining pleasures

By TOM HOGE
AP Wine and Food Writer

One of the biggest contributors to the seafood that graces American tables is that varied clan known as the flatfish family.

Some of its members are familiar to almost every household, but others are less known. And, since these fish are as popular in Europe and Asia as they are in America, there are foreign types most Americans have never seen.

Flatfish common in this country include the flounder and its cousin, the English sole, the fluke, turbot and the giant of the family, the halibut.

SOME CONFUSION exists over which fish is which. The sole featured on many restaurant menus is actually flounder, and summer flounder and fluke are the same fish.

American menus that feature "fresh" Dover sole are open to question. This fish, which is costly in America, must be imported from England, Belgium, the Netherlands and Denmark, so it is almost always frozen.

Flatfish are usually sold in the market as fillets, but they can be bought whole, and some people prefer the whole fish, cleaned, stuffed and baked.

Halibut features some females weighing more than a hundred pounds, but these monsters are not too edible, since the flesh tends to be coarse. The finest for eating is the "chicken" halibut weighing from 5 to 10 pounds.

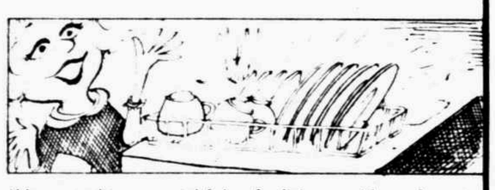

HALIBUT, with its firm, white flaky texture, is a cousin of the European turbot. It is good poached or served cold in a salad.

In their "Fish-lovers' Cookbook" (Rodale Press, Emmaus, Pa.) authors Sheryl and Mel London give this recipe for Halibut Casserole.

1½ pounds halibut fillets
1½ cups milk
1 bay leaf
4 tablespoons butter
3 tablespoons whole wheat flour
1 teaspoon black pepper
½ teaspoon paprika
1 small onion, grated
½ pound cooked asparagus spears
2-3rds cup fine, dry whole grain bread crumbs
½ cup grated Parmesan cheese
2 tablespoons butter, melted
2 tablespoons lemon juice

Place fish in boiling milk with bay leaf. Lower heat, cover and simmer for 8 minutes, till fish turns opaque.

Lift fish out, drain and cool. Remove bay leaf, from milk and reserve liquid. Break fillets of fish into small chunks and place in buttered casserole. Melt butter in saucepan and stir in flour, pepper and paprika. Add reserved hot milk and stir with whisk. Add grated onion and simmer 5 minutes. Pour sauce over fish in casserole, arranging asparagus on top. Sprinkle with bread crumbs, Parmesan cheese, melted butter and lemon juice. Bake in preheated 400-degree oven 10 minutes or till heated.

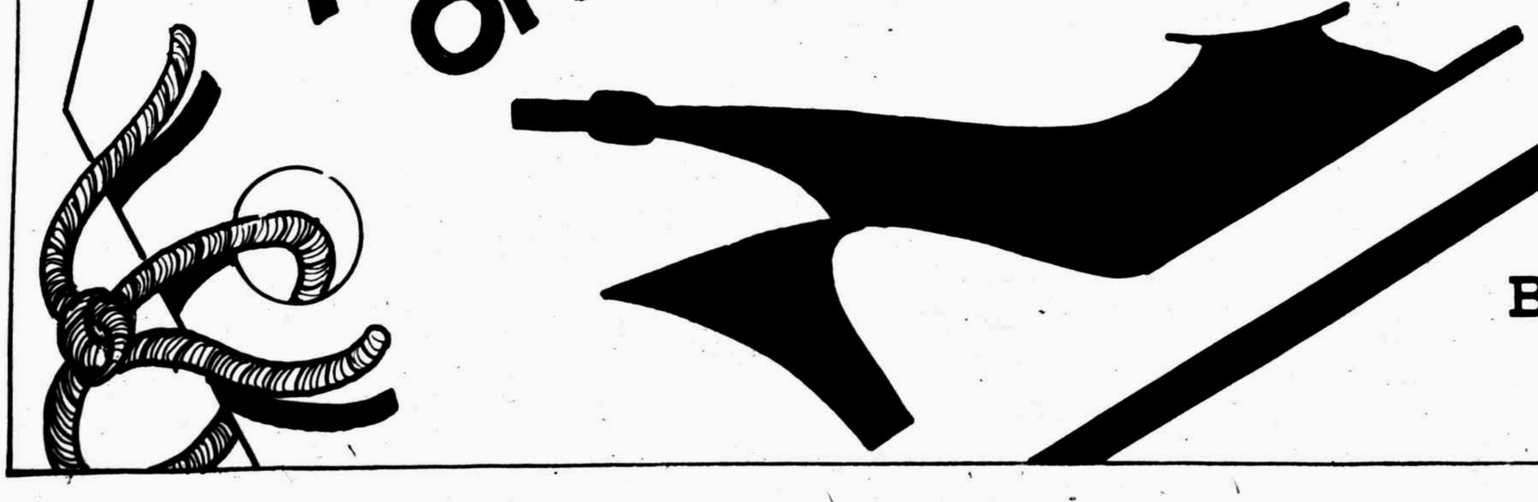

When washing a sinkful of dishes, add a few tablespoons of vinegar to the water along with detergent. Dishes will be grease-free and sparkling.

Italian dinner night at-home fun

Everyone, it would seem, loves to eat Italian. From spaghetti to pizza and everywhere in between, if it as an Italian accent, it will be sure to please. As Americans continue to consume a growing tonnage of pasta each year, they have made eating Italian the most popular type of ethnic food in dining rooms around the country. According to a 1981 Gallup poll, 56 percent of all U.S. households rated Italian food a family favorite.

Why wait to go out to eat Italian fare? Why not have Italian night right at home? Turn your dining room into your favorite Italian trattoria. Red and white checked table cloth and napkins are easy. Buy the paper kind or get two or three yards of bistro checked material. Bread sticks, candles in a wine bottle or two, and the stage is set. If the weather permits, move the whole show outside and make it sidewalk cafe. Get the kids to help, they'll love it.

HONEY ONIONS

Susan McQuillan calls this delicious invention a hot relish.

1 pound (3 large) onions
2 tablespoons butter
1/4 cup honey

Thinly slice onions; separate into rings — there should be about 6 cups not packed down. In a 10-inch skillet melt butter; add onion; cover and cook over low heat, stirring occasionally, until softened and translucent — about 15 minutes. Stir in honey; over fairly brisk heat, stir constantly, until liquid is reduced as much as you like. Serve at once or reheat, covered, before serving. Makes 1 generous cupful — 4 to 6 servings.

DEAR ABBY
Right to death with dignity

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: About 10 years ago you advertised the Living Will in your column, saying readers could send for it by sending a few dollars to the non-profit organization called Concern for Dying, 250 West 57th St., New York, N.Y. 10019.

Recently you advertised the Living Will and told readers they could get copies by writing to the Society for the Right to Die, 250 West 57th St., New York, N.Y. 10019.

Did the Concern for Dying organization change its name? — CURIOUS IN DELAWARE

DEAR CURIOUS: No. Concern for Dying and the Society for the Right to Die are two separate organizations. They were formerly affiliated, but due to some internal differences they parted company. They both distribute the Living Will and are equally legitimate, but are constantly confused because they both maintain offices in the same building.

The only fundamental difference is that the Society for the Right to Die extends its function to trying to get the various state legislators to make "the right to die with dignity" part of the state law. It has been successful in many states.

DEAR ABBY: I am a 52-year-old divorced male who has dated "T," a 44-year-old divorcee for the last 12 months. We became intimate during that time and planned to be married this summer.

Recently I contracted gonorrhea. I have not been intimate with anyone else since I have known "T." Thus, I was sure I contracted it from her. (We have, of course, both been treated.)

My faith and trust in "T" has been badly shaken, though she emphatically denies having been intimate with anyone but me since she left her husband 15 months ago!

Her attending physician has reportedly stated that while the situation is very rare, it is not impossible for her to have been infected by her former husband — a proven adulterer — and the disease may have lain dormant until becoming "active" recently.

What do your medical consultants say? The information I have received has been limited and confusing. I have spoken with my own physician, the local county public health authorities and the national VD hotline, but for some reason none of these so-called knowledgeable sources has given me a straight answer. Will you? — NAME WITHHELD ON REQUEST

DEAR NAME: My consultants say that because it is possible that your fiancee is telling you the truth, you would do her a terrible disservice to call her a liar. How does she score in matters of truth and integrity otherwise? That should tell you something.

I say, as long as there is the slightest possibility of truth in her favor, give her the benefit of the doubt.

DEAR ABBY: My son is getting married, and his bride has asked me to be her matron of honor. I am, of course, honored and flattered, but I have never heard of a bride asking her future mother-in-law to serve in that capacity. Is it appropriate and socially acceptable? — NO NAME IN NEW MEXICO

DEAR NO NAME: The bride customarily selects for her matron of honor a "close friend." To be regarded as such by your son's bride is indeed an honor. If you consider her a close friend, it is both appropriate and acceptable.

DEAR ABBY: I met a very attractive young woman at a wedding. Since we were both unattached and seemed to have a lot in common, you might say we hit it off well from the moment we met. I invited her to dinner at the best restaurant in town for the following night, and she accepted on the spot.

Well, she spent the whole evening talking about her boyfriend — what a great guy he is and how much she missed him because he traveled for a living and was gone for two and three weeks at a time.

Every time I started to talk about something else, she would bring the conversation back to her boyfriend, quoting him and raving about his good points.

What I would like to know is this, Abby, if this boyfriend of hers is so terrific, why did she accept a dinner date with me? — WONDERING

DEAR WONDERING: Maybe she was hungry.

Won't have stale marshmallows if you store them in the freezer. To prevent sticking together, freeze individually until firm and then wrap tightly in plastic.

Grocery shopping difficult job

By SHARON A. HILLIS
Midland County Extension Agent
Home Economics

Shopping for food to assure a well-nourished family is a challenge for any homemaker. It is especially so for the homemaker with limited food dollars. Shopping is a management job with you as the top executive. Understanding food standards and grades can help you determine good values in terms of quality, cost variations and your family's health protection, as well as providing meals with the greatest appetite appeal.

In shopping for food, consider family preferences, habits, the season of the year, your income and the storage and preparation facilities available to you, as well as the amount of time and energy you have for meal perparation.

The purchase of protein, one of the four major food groups, will need careful consideration, since it is one of the most costly. From the bread and cereals group there is a wide selection, but you will need to carefully consider your family's preferences in selecting foods from this group, which will give you the most value for your dollar.

For a "super-successful" food budget, watch the cost of protein, since buying it can create a major void — in your nutrition level or in your pocketbook. Buy high-value protein at low cost.

HOW TO BUY

How to buy goes hand-in-hand with what to buy, and how to buy starts with a quick lesson in "amounts."

First, notice "cost per unit" when you buy — such as cost per pound or cost per ounce. But that's only the start.

Next, look at cost per serving. Remember, you get four servings from a pound of ground meat, but you get only one or two servings from a pound of ribs. Ask yourself, "How much does each serving of my family's special favorite cost?". Now look at the protein value. It's no bargain if the protein value is low, and it's not a bargain if the price is high.

WHAT TO BUY

So what is high protein at low cost? Poultry and eggs are high-protein foods, and when they have reasonable prices, they are high protein at low cost. In Texas this summer, prices are very reasonable. Pork loin and ham currently are high protein, low cost items. So are beef liver, hamburger, chuck cuts, rump roast and sirloin, because they have high protein, and with their little waste, the cost per serving is reasonable.

BREADS AND CEREALS

Are you a whole-grain lover or do you and your family prefer enriched bread, flour or cereal? You will want to consider which is the best source of nutrients, especially trace minerals, and which supplies maximum roughage.

Whole-grain products — those made by grinding the entire kernel of wheat or other grains including the sprout or germ, white inner endosperm and brown outer layer or bran — are probably more nutritious than enriched ones. Minerals and vitamins are higher in content in germ and bran than in the endosperm of whole-grain foods. However, the high content of bran and phytate in whole-grain products may interfere with some absorption of minerals. And the high oil content of the germ could also become rancid and attract insects if stored incorrectly.

ENRICHED PRODUCTS

White enriched bread, flour and cereal have had fiber content and the outer layers of bran and germ removed in the milling process. However, enriched flour, such as all-purpose, has been enriched with iron and B vitamins (thiamin, riboflavin and niacin) within federal standard limits.

White enriched bread may also contain less of the trace minerals, such as magnesium, chromium, zinc, copper and nickel, than does whole-grain bread.

The choice simply depends on personal preference, since both enriched and whole-grain products supply the body with carbohydrates, protein, B vitamins and iron. Whichever of the two you choose, remember to serve the family four or more servings daily from this necessary food group.

STORAGE

To store breads or cereals, place them in a cool, dry area. And if air is warm and humid, keep bread in its original wraper in the refrigerator to prevent mold.

Foreign dishes enter U.S. menus, meals, language

NEW YORK (AP) — Contrary to the title of a current best seller, real men DO eat quiche. And so do a lot of other people.

Fifteen years ago few Americans even knew what quiche was, but a survey of today's restaurant menus, food magazines, cookbooks and the latest edition of "Webster's New World Dictionary" shows that the versatile French pie, and an increasing variety of other imported delicacies, are daily passing across our palate and into our language.

IN MODERN parlance a loaf of bread and a jug of wine have become a baguette and a bottle of chenin blanc, though a slightly more chic dejeuner might include a bowl of bourride, a creamy fish soup, or perhaps a salad nicoise, a seafood, greens, and vinaigrette salad prepared as in the coastal town of Nice.

FRENCH — traditionally the main ingredient in the vocabulary of American recipes — continues to garnish our table talk. In the idiom of cooking, several French words have been Americanized by adding the suffix -ed to indicate that certain foods have been prepared in a certain way.

For instance, julienned vegetables are vegetables cut into strips to be cooked or else served raw in salads, while gratineed indicates that a dish is prepared au gratin — with a lightly browned crust of bread crumbs or grated cheese.

Many other French dishes now popular in American restaurants and homes are served with their foreign names intact. Among the newer delights from France are cornichon, a small, sour pickle; daube, a stew, usually beef in wine; bordelaise, a brown sauce that originated in Bordeaux and goes well with broiled meats; and crudites, haute cuisine's latest hors d'oeuvre.

BUT NOT everyone's taste runs to French cooking, and new foods and food words originally from other countries are at least as numerous as the nationalities that make up the American public. Up-to-date gastronomical terms reflect the mixture of heritages.

From Italy, there is cannoli, a crisp tube of pastry filled with whipped cream and ricotta cheese; saltimboca, which is literally translated as "jump into the mouth" and is a dish of thin slices of veal and ham flavored with sage, rolled, and sauteed in butter; such red wines as Barbera, Bardolino, and Barolo, and such drinks as Campari (bitters) or Cinzano (vermouth) with soda before dinner and Galliano or Strega (sweet liqueurs) after dinner.

FROM GREECE comes phyllo or filo, a thin pastry dough used to make desserts, and dolma, a grape leaf stuffed with rice or ground meat.

Hungary? Try dobos torte, a rich cake confected with thin layers of creamy filling and a caramel glaze topping.

OR, YOU MIGHT prefer Chicken Kiev, a boned chicken breast stuffed with cold butter, breaded, fried in butter, and named for the Ukranian city of Kiev.

Emmenthaler, the original Swiss cheese; Danish havarti, a butter cheese with tiny holes; Jarlsberg, a Norwegian cheese with large holes; and Norwegian lutefisk, cod soaked in lye, then boiled, are now found on many American smorgasbords. And ceviche, raw fish or shellfish marinated in various sauces and lime juice, is a noteworthy Spanish appetizer.

AT PEACE about little else, Arabs and Israelis, both here and abroad, will agree on the satisfying simplicity of falafel, a small croquette or patty of ground chick peas, deep fried, and often used with lettuce and tomato to fill pita bread shells, which are then topped with a sesame sauce called tahini.

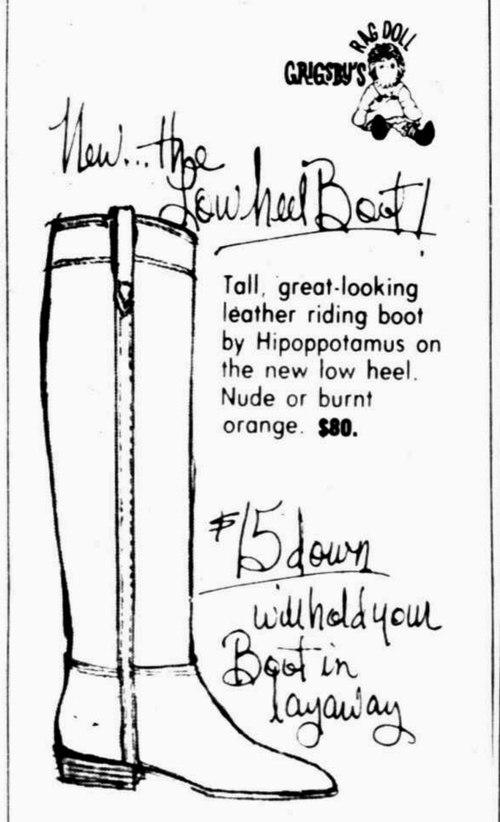

From the Orient, Americans are eating a kind of Chinese cabbage known as bok choy; dim sum (pronounced dim tsoom), also Chinese, a small casing of dough filled with minced meat, vegetables, etc., and then steamed; snow peas, which are small flat seeds in tender green pods; and bancha, a Japanese tea.

THE LARGE NUMBER of city street vendors now hawking tempura, gyoza, shish-kebab, and other Eastern foods rather than the traditional hamburgers, beans and franks is further evidence of the growing popularity of international cooking.

But perhaps you remain one of the people who orders cold cuts instead of charcuterie and who thinks that the waiter you asked about the funny looking vegetables replied "What's it to you?" when he really said "ratatouille."

IF SO, you'll be glad to learn that David Guralnik, editor-in-chief of "Webster's New World Dictionary," reports that the dictionary's new word citation files contain words descriptive of regular American fare, such as bell peppers, cottage fries, and Delmonico steak (named for the intensely masculine restaurant that popularized it).

The dictionary files also include words that describe foods that look and sound foreign but are actually American. Chili dogs, egg rolls, pizza and chop suey are all authentic American foods.

Menu for Mexican barbecue not traditional

By BARBARA HANSEN
Los Angeles Times — Washington Post News Service

Here is a menu for a Mexican barbecue — not the traditional barbecue featuring meat cooked in a pit in the ground, but a meal designed around marinated beef cubes grilled on skewers and wrapped in soft, hot, flour tortillas.

Onion wedges and chunks of green pepper are threaded on the skewers with the meat, which has been marinated in a tomato-chile sauce. The tortillas provides a handy way to grip the hot foods and pull them off the skewer. They can then be folded in the tortilla and eaten taco style along with additional sauce.

MEXICAN BARBECUE

Fresh Peach Margaritas
Grilled Beef in Tortillas
Guacamole Ring
Refried Beans
Fresh Fruit or Ice Cream

Limeade or ice tea with lemon are refreshing beverages for an outdoor party.

FRESH PEACH MARGARITAS

Cut lime
Sugar
9 Frozen Peach Cubes
3 ounces tequila
3 ounces orange-flavored liqueur
1 ounce lime juice
2 tablespoons sugar
10 ice cubes
Peach slices
Lime slices

Rub rims of stemmed glasses with a cut lime, then dip in granulated sugar. Set aside. Place peach cubes in blender container. Add tequila, liqueur, lime juice and 2 tablespoons sugar. Blend until smooth. Add ice cubes one at a time, blending until smooth. Pour into prepared glasses. Garnish with peach and lime slices. Makes 4 servings.

FROZEN PEACH CUBES

1 pound peaches, unpeeled
1 tablespoon lemon juice

Halve and pit unpeeled peaches. Slice into blender container. Add lemon juice and puree. Pour into ice cube tray and freeze until solid. Remove from tray and store in freezer container until needed. Makes 18 cubes.

GRILLED BEEF IN TORTILLAS

2 pounds tomatoes
1-4 cup diced green chiles
2 cloves garlic, crushed
1 teaspoon salt
1-2 teaspoon oregano
1-4 teaspoon ground cumin
1-4 teaspoon marjoram
1 pound lean beef, cut in 1-inch cubes
1 large green pepper, cut in chunks
2 onions, cut in wedges
8 (8-inch) flour tortillas

Cut tomatoes in half. Arrange in single layer in shallow baking dish. Broil 10 to 15 minutes, until tomatoes are hot and skin is blistered, turning as needed to prevent burning. Combine broiled tomatoes, chiles, garlic, salt, oregano, cumin and marjoram in blender. Blend coarsely. Reserve half the sauce. Marinate beef 1 hour in remaining sauce. Thread meat, green pepper and onion on 8 skewers, dividing equally. Grill over hot coals to desired doneness, or broil in oven 2 to 3 inches from heat. Warm tortillas on grill over hot coals or wrap in foil and heat in oven. Wrap 1 tortilla around each skewer of beef and vegetables. Accompany with reserved sauce to spoon over. Makes 4 servings.

GUACAMOLE RING

2 envelopes unflavored gelatin
1 cup water
2 tablespoons lemon juice
1 teaspoon salt
1-2 teaspoon garlic powder
1-2 teaspoon hot pepper sauce
4 medium avocados, peeled
1-4 cup finely chopped onion

Sprinkle gelatin over water in medium saucepan. Let stand 1 minute. Stir over low heat until gelatin is dissolved, about 5 minutes. Stir in lemon juice, salt, garlic powder and hot pepper sauce. Mash avocados in large bowl. Add gelatin mixture and blend with wire whip or rotary beater. Stir in onion. Pour into 5-cup ring mold or individual molds and chill until firm. Makes 4 to 6 servings.

Mexicans again talk of unemployment, starvation, violence

By DIANE LINDQUIST
Copley News Service

Talk of people being without is occurring again in Mexico. In restaurants, in offices, in neighborhoods and on the streets there is talk that many will lose their jobs and homes, that there will be starvation — even that there will be violence and possibly revolution.

Only a little more than a year ago, after a few years of growth, such conversations were not so usual. Then, because of oil discoveries, the country was enjoying a burst of riches and it appeared almost everyone would have a share.

But a decline in oil prices led to the realization that the economy was overextended. Drastic measures, it was decided, must be taken to pull the country out of the crisis.

Already the peso has been devalued twice, the subsidies on such basics as gasoline, diesel fuel, electricity, tortillas, bread and home cooking gas have been cut drastically and government building projects have been stopped or slowed.

Experts on both sides of the border expect even more austerity measures after Miguel de la Madrid, who easily won election as president July 4, takes office Dec. 1. However, they predict that over the next two years these actions, which they view as harsh but necessary, will readjust the economy and it will rebound in 1984.

"I THINK THINGS will move fast," said Jesus Tamayo, an economist with the Mexico City-based Center for Research and Teaching in Economics (CIDE). "De la Madrid will move to the right in his economic policies and he will institute tradeoffs to try to deal with the problems that arise as a result of his economic tactics."

However, the anticipated austerity program, described by one student of the situation as "more Reaganomics than Reaganomics," is likely to mean fewer resources will trickle down the economic ladder, with the poorest receiving the least.

But it is those on the middle rungs, whose ranks and expectations were rising as rapidly as the price and new discoveries of oil during the late 1970s and early '80s, who are considered the key to whether the adjustment measures will succeed or whether Mexico will experience social unrest.

The economy's growth expanded the numbers of middle class and gave them more jobs, education and money. As a result, they are in a better position to object if the austerity measures squeeze them too tightly.

"THERE OBVIOUSLY are going to be pressures," Guillermo Ortiz, an official at Banco de Mexico, the country's central bank, said recently. "But...we have been through bad times before. I think things were never so good as people believed they were and things are not so bad as people think they are now."

The burden of charting a course through these many uncertainties falls on de la Madrid, who inherits possibly the world's largest foreign trade debt, estimated to be more than $70 billion, a peso devaluation of 60 percent and inflation expected to reach 60 to 65 percent by the year's end.

These dire statistics are the result of decisions since 1977, when the government abandoned its restraint in exploiting its abundant oil resources and the public and private sectors borrowed heavily abroad to expand industry, manufacturing, commerce and social, medical and educational programs.

The economy quickly overheated, but little was done to control the growth or erase many of the resulting distortions and bottlenecks. The peso was held at an overvalued rate.

When, in 1981, the price of oil dropped, the country — with the reduced ability to pay off its debts — was forced to recognize that its economy had become skewed.

EARLY THIS YEAR, in what might have been one of the most anticipated devaluations in the history of the country, but two days after President Jose Lopez Portillo denied it would happen, the value of the peso was allowed to drop.

Bubble trouble

Special from Reader's Digest

When I was a veterinary assistant, I received a phone call from a distraught dog owner who pleaded for an immediate appointment. He explained that his dog had a large growth or swelling near the corner of its mouth, so I told him to bring the animal right over.

When the man came in with his pet, the vet examined the dog as the man stood by, anxiously waiting. At last the doctor turned to him and asked, "Do you have any children?"

"Oh, good grief, is it contagious?" the man gasped.

"No," the doctor answered. "It's bubble gum."

Customers always complain about plumbers' charges, but we heard the other side from our landlord, who has a plumbing business. He completed an extensive job for a longtime customer, a teacher. After two months with no payment, the plumber phoned. "Look," he said, "you don't have to pay the whole bill, but at least pay part of it."

"I was just waiting to make sure you had done a good job that would last," the teacher explained.

"I'll bet you're glad they don't pay schoolteachers that way," the plumber replied.

There was a burst of laughter, and the next day the teacher paid the bill in full.

In search of fuel-saving equipment, the freight line I drive for added a new kind of truck. The vehicle was equipped with just a low horsepower, six-cylinder engine and a six-speed transmission.

A fellow driver was at the wheel of this new rig one day, inching up a hill. He was pulled over by a state trooper, who asked him, "Can't you get up this grade any faster?"

"Certainly," replied the driver. "However, company policy requires me to remain with the truck."

My husband and I run a small wholesale business. He was out of town when some rush orders made it necessary for me to pack and tie several heavy cartons. One box gave me special trouble, causing me to add rope and make many extra knots. 'Psycho' has delayed sequel— 22 years later

HOLLYWOOD (AP) — Watch out! Norman Bates is out of the looney bin after 22 years and living again in that deadly old house.

The latest evidence of Hollywood's sequel syndrome is "Psycho II," perhaps the most delayed sequel of all. It was 22 years ago that Alfred Hitchcock terrified movie audiences with "Psycho," the scariest of his 52 films. Purist critics complained that he aimed for cheap thrills, but Hitchcock merely chuckled as "Psycho " became his biggest box-office hit.

Now Universal Pictures is producing the delayed follow-up, with Anthony Perkins and Vera Miles back as Norman Bates and Lila Crane. Longtime Hitchcock aide Hilton Green is producing, and a devout student of the master, Australian Hilton Green ("Road Games"), is the director.

The script by Tom Holland is a secret, but Tony Perkins gave some hints during an interview. He described the beginning: Norman is pronounced cured at the sanitarium, gets a job in a diner, returns to the old motel and finds it operating as a sin city. He fires the manager after a fierce argument and returns to his old house in a driving rainstorm. He has invited a girl from the diner to lodge there.

Perkins wouldn't say what happens in the house, but his costume provided evidence: His shirt was torn and bloody. Does Norman get what Janet Leigh got in the shower? You'll have to see the movie to find out.

"It's not 'The Return of Norman Bates' or 'Bates Motel Revisited,' but 'Psycho II,'" Perkins says. "The same elements have been retained: a modest shooting schedule — though this time the film is in color — a small, self-contained plot, Vera and myself, some members of the same crew, the same house (a major attraction of the Universal Studio Tour), the same motel."

Perkins admitted that he was hesitant to return to his old haunts.

"I didn't want to do an exploitation picture that simply used the old props: the motel, the house, the mother, the crazy grown-up kid," he said. "I wasn't sure that a story that took place 22 years later could be viable. But when I read Tom's script, I was convinced.

"'Psycho' both plagued me and kept me lively during my career," he said. "When I was younger, it used to worry me that I was so identified as Norman. But as I grew older, I became more relaxed and realized the film was more of a blessing than a drawback.

"Think of my contemporaries of that time — I won't name names. Most of them are out of focus now; their image becomes a blur. But if you have made one or two films that are memorable to everyone, you are remembered. Oddly enough, the other film that I am identified with was entirely different: 'Friendly Persuasion.'"

Eye doctor performs for patient's family

Hearst Feature Service

NEW YORK — A group of people recently had their eyes opened emotionally and intellectually while staring at a TV screen in the waiting room at New York's Bradford Medical Center as they watched their relatives simultaneously undergo cataract removal surgery in the next room.

Renowned ophthalmologist Dr. Herbert Gould is the first surgeon in New York to televise his surgery for his patients and their relatives. Gould has been videotaping his operations for the past five years so that they could be viewed by the patient and family later, but was prompted to use live TV when one of his patients asked why the procedure couldn't be shown as it happened.

"I've got confidence in what I'm doing," Gould said, "because if they're watching me and I screw up, I'm in trouble. But if there is a complication, the family ought to know about it and know what the challenge is."

Lucille Goode, head of patient relations at Bradford, said, "This is not a replay, where you can take out a word or not show it if something bad happens. The doctor is saying that he's confident enough to have relatives watch and that he's not afraid, so everyone can relax. I can see the difference in the patients. They seem more relaxed and confident that their loved ones are sharing the experience with them."

One cataract removed that day was among the largest Gould has removed. "This was a difficult case," he said, "but we got a beautiful result." Many of the advanced techniques he uses are those he developed and has been perfecting over the years.

Gould said that Bradford Medical Center seeks to avoid unnecessary medications, which he said are the most common cause of complications. "We used to use general anesthesia, but there were people who were groggy for months. Now we use local anesthesia, and you can see how calm they are."

The families appeared to be quite interested and concerned about what was going on, but there were no signs of fear or worry.

Chyrsler Corporation Chairman Lee Iacocca waves to newsmen as he enters a car outside the White House Tuesday after meeting with President Reagan on his tax bill. Iacocca said, parading his own TV commercials "it's said you know, if somebody can find a better tax bill, grab it ...I think we'd all better get together and rally around the president's program and Congress should do likewise and get something passed, because I think the alternative is doing nothing and that would be chaos."

Saudi output said to be up

By The Associated Press

Oil traders greeted with skepticism unconfirmed reports that Saudi Arabia, the world's largest oil exporter, had increased its daily production by nearly 30 percent above OPEC quotas.

The reports, which surfaced Tuesday in oil industry circles in the Persian Gulf, helped the dollar stage a late rally against major foreign currencies, according to foreign exchange dealers in New York.

But traders and oil industry sources at home and abroad said they doubted Saudi Arabia would raise production at a time when demand for oil remains weak. And Platt's Oilgram News, a trade publication, quoted industry sources in London in reporting Saudi production had declined.

The initial reports said Saudi Arabia had increased its daily production by 2 million barrels from its quota of 7 million barrels.

As is routine, the Saudi Arabian oil ministry declined to comment.

Diplomatic sources in the Libyan capital of Tripoli said Libya had increased its daily oil exports to 1.3 million barrels, nearly double the quota allocated the North African nation under the market-sharing plan reached at a March meeting of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries.

One Saudi Arabian source close to Arabian American Oil Co., known as Aramco and the main buyer of Saudi oil, said he knew Saudi officials were unhappy about Libya's decision to increase its oil production, but that current market conditions "simply do not allow any increase."

Bill Todd, a spokesman for Aramco in Washington, said he could neither confirm nor deny the reports.

The reports, and earlier rumors of price and production shakeups that have been sweeping through the oil industry, highlight the uncertainties that have grown out of a worldwide oversupply of oil and efforts by OPEC to deal with the glut.

Saudi Arabia committed itself to the daily limit at the March meeting, which set a total 17.5 million-barrel ceiling for OPEC's 13 member states.

But the agreement collapsed at last month's emergency OPEC ministerial meeting, with Saudi Arabia, Iran and Libya at the center of a bitter debate over market shares.

The quota system was intended to absorb the world oil glut and maintain OPEC's benchmark price of $34 dollars a barrel. It succeeded for a time, but friction grew over individual quotas and overall production exceeded the agreement's ceiling.

On Tuesday, Arabian light crude oil was quoted at $31 a 42-gallon barrel on the open market, while Iranian light crude was quoted at $30 a barrel.

Market sources estimated current crude oil oversupplies at 1 million barrels of oil daily.

Six nations' steelmakers charged with dumping

By JANE SEABERRY
Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

WASHINGTON — The Reagan administration, having failed in its efforts to end one of the worst U.S.-European trade crises in recent history, Tuesday charged steel makers from five Common Market countries and Romania with selling steel here at unfairly low prices.

The preliminary decision is the second blow to the European Economic Community's steel makers in the past two months. It requires the importers of the offending steel products to post bonds with the government as high as 41 percent of the product's value.

The Commerce Department already had ruled against seven European countries in another case last June, accusing them of receiving unfair subsidies from their governments and undercutting their U.S. competitors.

In addition, Commerce said appropriate duties will be levied retroactively to May 10 on imports of certain steel products from two French and one Belgian firm because Commerce found "there had been a surge of shipments apparently intended to beat the statutory deadlines for imposition of anti-dumping duties." Those firms are Sacilor and Usinor of France and Cockerill-Sambre of Belgium.

Dumping means selling steel here at prices below what it cost to produce it.

The countries accused in the new decision are Romania, Belgium, France, Italy, West Germany and the United Kingdom, the same ones charged in the last round of decisions. Complaints filed by seven of the nation's largest steel makers against Luxembourg and the Netherlands, which were also included in the last ruling, were omitted because dumping margins for those products were less than 1 percent, Commerce said.

There was no immediate response from the EEC to the decisions.

In a related development, U.S. steel makers were reported to be considering filing antitrust lawsuits in a federal court against the European steel makers in an effort to cut back European steel exports. Armco Inc. and Inland Steel Co. said they don't plan to participate in any antitrust action.

A spokesman for Bethlehem Steel Corp. said it would not be appropriate to comment on any future legal remedy it might pursue and that Bethlehem Steel has generally always reviewed all available remedies to protect its rights. The company neither admitted nor denied that it intended to file an antitrust action.

U.S. Steel Corp. had no comment on the report.

Commerce's decisions came after tense negotiations between high level officials of the Reagan administration and the EEC last week in an attempt to head off not only Tuesday's action but any subsequent rulings against European steel makers that would result in added duties. The negotiations culminated in a negotiated arrangement to limit exports of steel products from the EEC.

However, three of the nation's largest steel makers and the U.S. specialty steel industry immediately rejected the proposal as inadequate, virtually killing the long-sought arrangement. The Commerce Department said it would lie low before deciding what step to take next in attempts to negotiate a peaceful settlement.

The tentative agreement would have limited European steel exports in 11 categories between October and the end of 1985.

The agreement also would have set up an export licensing arrangement that would have the effect of reducing exports from Europe next year to 5.754 percent of the U.S. market, compared with the 6.4 percent penetration now. The agreement, however, didn't include limits for shipments of foreign pipe and tube products for the oil industry, the most troublesome issue in the dispute. That issue would have been decided later under the proposal.

Assistant Commerce Secretary Gary Horlick said a lot of the dumping decisions were based on information provided by the U.S. industry or other sources because the European firms wouldn't provide needed data. When a final determination is made, those preliminary dumping margins could change substantially based on better information, Horlick said.

Horlick also said changes in exchange rates could influence the final dumping duties.

In Tuesday's dumping decision, Commerce said steel from 16 companies in six countries had been priced here at unfairly low levels.

Western Union splices into overseas markets

WASHINGTON (AP) — Western Union Telegraph Co. has been granted permission to compete in international telex and telegraph services for the first time in 39 years.

The Federal Communications Commission Tuesday said it found no reason to reject the company's rate schedule or tariff for the proposed service. The action had been expected since last week, when the commission formally authorized Western Union to re-enter the international field subject to approval of its tariff.

Western Union has been restricted by law to providing service only within the United States since 1943, when Congress allowed it to take over its major domestic competitor.

The FCC, citing its desire to promote competition among Western Union and the five firms that have specialized in overseas communication, tried in 1980 to free the firm from its domestic restrictions. But it was not until Congress amended the Communications Act late last year that the way was finally cleared for commission approval.

Exports create many new jobs

NEW YORK (AP) — Almost 70 percent of all new manufacturing jobs created in the United States between 1977 and 1980 were linked to exports, the Conference Board says in a new report.

The analysis, released Tuesday, said the U.S. manufacturing industry is becoming increasingly dependent on exports for its growth.

It said 4.2 million American jobs were related to the export of manufactured goods in 1980.

More than 50 percent of the manufacturing jobs in 11 states — Arizona, California, Illinois, Maine, Connecticut, Massachusetts, Michigan, Ohio, Rhode Island, Washington and West Virginia — are related to exports, the board said.

The analysis by the business-sponsored research group was based primarily on Commerce Department data.

Sanction repeal bill OKed

WASHINGTON (AP) — Despite a last-minute appeal by Secretary of State George P. Shultz, the House Foreign Affairs Committee has approved a bill that would repeal sanctions imposed by President Reagan on companies that provide equipment for the Soviet natural gas pipeline.

Seven Republicans joined 15 Democrats on the 22-12 vote Tuesday. The legislation now goes to the full House.

Reagan announced an initial round of export restrictions last December following the Soviet-backed martial law crackdown in Poland, and then — in a move that prompted angry reactions from several NATO allies — broadened the sanctions in June to cover equipment made under U.S. license in Western Europe.

In a letter to Rep. William S. Broomfield, R-Mich., the House panel's ranking Republican, Shultz asserted that the repeal bill "would severely cripple the president's ability to pursue one of his major foreign policy goals and limit his flexibility and authority to deal with a crisis of major importance to the West."

Federal Express de-jetting

MEMPHIS, Tenn. (AP) — Federal Express Corp. is trying to sell the 32 converted executive jets that helped build the airline into the nation's largest small-package air express service.

Ronald K. Anderson, Federal Express' director of aircraft acquistions and sales, said the Dassault Falcon 20 jets have served their purpose. The airline is standardizing its fleet with Boeing 727 and McDonnell-Douglas DC-10 aircraft, Anderson said.

Federal Express began operations with a single converted Falcon April 12, 1973. The seats in the French-built twin-jet plane were removed and a cargo door was cut in the left side of the fuselage.

When Federal Express won its Federal Aviation Administration certification as a scheduled air carrier, the company began replacing the Falcons with the three-engined Boeings on flights serving large cities.

Florida S&L sale arranged

MIAMI (AP) — Biscayne Federal Savings and Loan Association has agreed to sell eight of its 34 branch offices in Florida to California Federal Savings and Loan Association, the country's largest mutual savings and loan.

Biscayne Federal Chairman E. Albert Pallot said Tuesday the deal supercedes an agreement in principle Biscayne Federal had entered to sell six of its branch offices to City Federal Savings and Loan Association of Elizabeth, N.J.

The agreement between Biscayne Federal and California Federal, headquartered in Los Angeles, still is subject to final approval from regulatory authorities and the board of directors of both associations. It would bring the Florida institution a profit of about $56 million.

Cities, Allied stock trading halted Tuesday

NEW YORK (AP) — Trading was halted briefly Tuesday in stock of Cities Service Co. and Allied Corp. after Allied said it had no interest in acquiring the oil company. Meanwhile, two more lawsuits were filed against Gulf Oil Co. for calling off a $4.8 billion merger with Cities Service.

Allied, a Morris Township, N.J., chemical company that obtains much of its profit from oil, said it had completed an examination of Cities Service and was not interested in buying the Tulsa, Okla., firm. Allied stock fell $1.625 a share to $32 in trading on the New York Stock Exchange.

Cities Service has been looking for a merger partner since Gulf called off a union Friday, sending Cities Service stock prices tumbling. The stock gained $1.75 a share Tuesday to $32.125 after shedding $7 Monday. Gulf had promised to pay $63 a share for the outstanding Cities Service common.

The 20th largest oil company said if it doesn't find a partner, it might have to liquidate assets to raise money to buy back as many as 20 million of its own shares in order to safeguard shareholders from a low price.

Meanwhile, a class action suit was filed in Tulsa state and federal courts against Gulf on behalf of stockholder James Zerillo, who owns 480 Cities Service shares. The suit asks the courts to force Gulf to either pay each stockholder $30 a share to compensate for the amount lost when Gulf pulled out of its merger deal or to order Gulf to make good on its original $63 a share offer.

Also sued were Gulf officers James E. Lee and Edward B. Walker and GOC Acquisition Corp., formed by Gulf to merge with Cities.

In U.S. District Court in New York, stockholder Henry Herbst of Fort Lauderdale, Fla., filed suit charging that Gulf misled investors by concealing information about the original offer for Cities Service stock. The suit requested that all who purchased Cities Service stock between July 28 and Aug. 6 be allowed to join as plaintiffs and asked that Gulf be ordered to reimburse plaintiffs for any loss.

Susan Breon, speaking for Gulf at its Pittsburgh headquarters, said the company had no comment on the suit, which said the company issued misleading press releases.

U.S. Chamber of Commerce divided over administration tax increase plans

By OWEN ULLMANN
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The U.S. Chamber of Commerce fell into deep division Tuesday over raising taxes, with some officials lining up behind President Reagan's personal campaign for a tax increase while others reaffirming their all-out opposition.

Meanwhile, business support from other quarters solidified behind the president as a coalition of 16 trade groups announced their support for the tax bill now before Congress. The measure would raise $99 billion in additional individual and business taxes over the next three years.

The rare split within the ranks of the 260,000-member Chamber emerged after the organization's chairman, Paul Thayer, met with Reagan and then announced that the group would drop its opposition to the tax bill.

Thayer's statement to reporters outside the White House prompted a denial from his predecessor, Donald Kendall, who remains chairman of the Chamber's policy-setting executive committee.

"Our executive committee, by a sizeable majority, today reaffirmed positions made earlier ... of all-out opposition to the tax bill," Kendall, chairman of Pepsico, said in a statement issued by the Chamber.

"We are convinced that opposition to the tax bill reflects the views of the vast majority of the U.S. Chamber's members, who believe that Americans are already overtaxed, that Congress has failed to make adequate budget cuts and that increasing taxes at this time would only serve to slow down what is already a weak economic recovery," Kendall said.

Last year, the Chamber, one of the nation's most powerful business lobbying groups, was at the forefront of Reagan's successful campaign for the largest tax cut in history. This year, it has been a stalwart opponent of president's pursuit of a tax increase to help narrow the giant deficits facing him.

The group's executive committee voted 8-4 last month to oppose the bill. The Chamber's 65-member board of directors had adopted the same position in June.

Thayer, who had been on the losing side of the executive committee vote, said he had reassured the president at their Oval Office meeting that the board of directors would "be behind him in his efforts to get the bill passed."

Thayer, chairman of LTV Corp., a major aerospace company, said he personally polled board members and found two-thirds to three-quarters of them "for the president." He said he intended to call a meeting next week to formalize the change in position.

Thayer said the group would support a tax increase now despite aits vehement opposition in the past because it now agrees with the president that support for the tax bill is the only way to win deeper spending cuts from Congress, and thus lower the bbudget deficit and encourage interest rates to come down.

"I think most businessmen are convinced that unless we do increase taxes along the lines he (Reagan) and the Senate have suggested, we will not be able to look forward to reducing expenditures either late this year or sometime next year," Thayer said.

The coalition of business groups supporting the tax bill said their backing is contingent on Congress also approving spending cuts to reduce the deficit.

Members in the coalition include representatives of the insurance industry, electronics companies, apartment owners, home builders, Realtors, timber companies, retail merchants, oil ajobbers, small businesses and the semiconductor industry.

Auto price hike expected

By ANN JOB WOOLLEY
Associated Press Writer

DETROIT (AP) — Consumers looking for good buys in new domestic cars might want to visit dealerships now rather than wait until the 1983 model year begins when prices could increase 6 percent, analysts say.

"This is the time to get a bargain," Arvid Jouppi, analyst at Colin Hochstin Co. said Tuesday. "Bargain hunters always buy at the end of the model year."

Jouppi and John Hammond, analyst at Data Resources Inc. in Lexington, Mass., said the estimated 5 percent to 6 percent increase is due to many 1982 model prices being reduced about 3 percentage points through dealer incentives and other offers. An average 2 percent price increase on 1983 models is expected, they said.

The automakers also may make some standard equipment optional next year and add in their costs to comply with federal emissions and fuel economy regulations, Hammond said.

There also could be fewer — or no — sales promotions.

"Carmakers would like to end all their sales campaigns," Hammond said.

"They were hoping they wouldn't have had this one," he said, referring to the current round of incentives slated to end with the 1982 model year this fall.

General Motors Corp. and Ford Motor Co. are offering dealer incentives, Chrysler Corp. has a five-year, 50,000-mile warranty program, and American Motors Corp. and Volkswagen of America Inc. have reduced prices.

Incentives have been on all through the 1982 calendar year.

Officials at the carmakers refused to comment on future sales promotions but have called incentives only a stopgap technique to help boost sales that have dropped 11.6 percent in 1982 from a year ago.

They also won't comment on retail prices this fall, which have not been announced yet. However, earlier this summer, the Big Three sent dealers guidelines on selling 1983 models to fleet owners who order early.

The guidelines said base prices for 1983 models would be held to 2 percent, down from the 6 percent boost in 1982.

Analysts say while that signals a moderation in 1983 prices, it does not include equipment changes, regulations compliance and, perhaps, a price increase during the model year.

William R. Pochiluk Jr., vice president of automotive forecasting services of Chase Econometrics in Bala Cynwyd, Pa., predicted there could be "substantial price adjustments" in new car prices next spring if a sales recovery begins before then.

He said he expected a maximum 4 percent price increase this fall for the new models.

Shamrock strikes in Oklahoma

AMARILLO (SWN) — Diamond Shamrock Corporation has reported the completion of a natural gas discovery in Roger Mills County, Oklahoma.

The wildcat well, designated the Gwartney 1-30, flowed 8.031 million cubic feet of natural gas per day through a 14/64-inch choke with flowing tubing pressure of 7,110 pounds per square inch. Absolute open flow for the well was calculated at 18 million cubic feet of gas per day.

Drilled to a depth of 13,100 feet, the well was perforated for testing of the Red Fork formation between 12,554 and 12,578 feet. The gas discovery is located approximately five miles northeast of Cheyenne, Oklahoma, in the Anadarko Basin. This discovery is 2.5 miles south of the North Strong City field, a Red Fork and Springer gas sands area.

Diamond Shamrock is the operator and holds 87.56 percent interest in the well with Pioneer Production Corporation, a subsidiary of Pioneer Corporation, holding the remaining 12.44 percent interest.

Peso devaluation punishing business both sides of border

By STEVE BREWER
Associated Press Writer

EL PASO, Texas (AP) — Bankers and businessmen say that companies on both sides of the Rio Grande are being punished for the latest devaluation of the feeble Mexican peso and may fail because of the currency's poor showing on international exchanges.

"Following the last devaluation, the downtown businesses reported (sales) drops of 30 to 70 percent, depending on their location and type of business," said Mark T. Miles, director of the El Paso Chamber of Commerce. "Since then, it's remained off by about 30 percent. They can only ride this thing out so long. I think we'll see a lot of them failing."

Officials say that most Mexicans cannot purchase U.S. goods on either side of the border because it took as many as 90 pesos to buy one dollar at some spots along the Texas-Mexico boundary Tuesday.

"I'm finding that many people in Mexico are very apathetic," said Don Shuffstall, international banking officer for El Paso's State National Bank.

"They've thrown up their hands. They're saying, 'Forget it. It's crazy.' That's a strange reaction to something that obviously hurts."

The second devaluation of the peso this year came Thursday night when the administration of lame-duck president Jose Lopez Portillo announced it could no longer support the monetary unit in international trading.

Mexican businessmen said the foreign currency reserves which Lopez Portillo said he would use to support the peso after the February devaluation were insufficient to meet that pledge.

Prices were raised on gasoline, electricity and such price-controlled essentials as bread and tortillas 10 days before the announcement, officials said.

"The people got scared and began to buy dollars throughout the country," said a Ciudad Juarez businessman who asked that his name not be used. "The run was so big and the reserves were not enough to support it, so the Bank of Mexico's reserves were used up.

"The people who bought dollars are in good shape now, but they are a minimum part of the population," he said. "The poorer people are taking a hell of a beating and I think that's probably 95 percent of the population."

Prices on imported goods were marked up Friday to reflect the new rates as many businesses in Juarez closed Friday. The prices on Mexican goods are controlled by the government, but those prices reportedly also have increased.

The result is that poor Mexicans who could not afford to convert their pesos to dollars find their buying power nearly cut in half. The flow of Mexican consumers across the border has slowed to a trickle.

Orlando Roland Berain, a restaurant owner in Ciudad Acuna, said he already is seeing a decrease in the number of Mexicans coming from the interior to shop along the border — a change that will affect businesses on both sides.

Miles said the hardest-hit businesses are those in downtown areas near the border, where poor Mexicans can shop with pesos.

Louis Kern, owner of an El Paso used clothing store, called the devaluation a "calamitous blow" for border-area business.

"You could almost fire a cannonball down the street and not hit anybody," he said. "So far this year, I've earned a third of what I made last year. Now it will be worse."

Miles said U.S. businesses along the border may benefit from the devaluation in the long run because more Mexicans may invest in the United States to hedge against further peso declines and U.S. industries may be able to hire Mexican labor cheaper than before.

"But in the short term, it's going to be a depression," he said.

Tough economic times causing worry about spies, bugs

By DAVID WHARTON
Hearst Feature Service

LOS ANGELES — Spies, phonetaps and hidden microphones may seem the soul of cheap paperback novels, but tough economic times are causing more businessmen to worry that competitors may be using underhanded tactics to steal company secrets.

Corporate espionage came to the public's attention last month when the federal government charged Hitachi Ltd., the Mitsubishi Electric Corp. and 21 individuals with conspiring to ship secrets stolen from International Business Machines to Japan.

"Industrial espionage is considered to be a pretty big concern these days," said Shari Gallery, who publishes a monthly magazine for the American Society of Industrial Security in Washington. "Company secrets and technological know-how is what is keeping a lot of companies in business, so it's a critical thing."

Norman Perle agrees. For the past 10 years, the Los Angeles private investigator has specialized in "privacy protection" — the use of sophisticated equipment to detect or defeat electronic surveillance.

"There are still a lot of firms that think that it can never happen to them," Perle said. "But a major part of corporate losses can come from competitive espionage."

Because of current litigation, IBM officials are reluctant to talk about corporate spying. One company spokesman did say that IBM has built an extensive internal security system aimed at preventing infiltraion by both foreign and domestic competitors. A spokeswoman for the Atlantic Richfield Co. said her company also recognizes industrial espionage as a threat and has taken steps to prevent it.

Perle, a state-licensed private investigator, insists that the fear of espionage — which he thinks has increased during the recession — is not limited to giant corporations. He said he conducts "sweeps" for all types of businesses — from Fortune 500 companies to a local butcher who worries about competitors finding out about his meat prices. Perle added that much of his business comes from business and trial lawyers.

Arthur Stanley Katz, an international business lawyer in Los Angeles for over 30 years, explained why attorneys worry about spying. Information about upcoming patents and trade marks, the focus of a business lawyer's practice, could be useful to a company's competitors, he said.

Katz has asked Pacific Telephone to check his phones several times. "A lot of trial lawyers are paranoid, and I don't blame them," he said.

Local law enforcement officials acknowledge that the concern about industrial espionage has grown recently, but said the most common form is infiltration of computer systems. Nevertheless, Perle insists that wiretapping and hidden microphones represent an equal threat to a company's security.

"Phone closets that aren't locked, exposed phone terminals in bathrooms that are always open and private lines are an invitation to get eavesdropped on," Perle said.

The private investigator opened a briefcase and pulled out an assortment of wire taps and phone bugs he said he had discovered during recent sweeps. The technology for wiretapping is so common now that operable phone taps — with instruction books — are available in Radio Shack stores, Perle said.

Using a variety of electronic equipment, Perle can check a company's phone lines and offices for electronic bugs. He does most of his work at night, usually accompanied by one of the four technicians he employs.

Some of Perle's clients request monthly sweeps; others hire him to test and analyze their security systems. Perle declined to name any of his clients, saying that his working relationship with them is confidential.

RRC creates commercial zone, reports petroluem facts

AUSTIN — The Railroad Commission has established a commerical zone in Corpus Christi area.

All motor common carriers (trucking companies), except specialized motor carriers, can operate without a Railroad Commission certificate or permit in Commission-designated commercial zones. Specialized carriers transport commodities that require the use of specialized equipment for transportation or handling because of their physical characteristics.

Also, in a commercial zone the Commission does not set rates to be charged by carriers.

The new zone, made up of parts of Nueces and San Patricio counties, includes Corpus Christi, Robstown, Banquete, Aqua Dulce, San Patricio, Mathis, Edroy, Odem, Stinton, Taft, Gregory, Portland, Arkansas Pass, Port Arkansas, and Ingleside. These areas were determined by the Commission to be adjacent to and commerically a part of Corpus Christi.

City Delivery Services of Corpus Christi applied for creation of the zone, and was supported by all the city and county governments in the area as well as by 31 shippers and receivers.

The Commission has announced that Texas operators reported 141 gas and 51 oil discoveries in July 1982.

One year ago, 123 gas and 51 oil discoveries were filed with the state's energy regulatory agency.

Gas discoveries in the seventh month of the year include 42 in deep South Texas, 25 in the Refugio area, 22 in West Central Texas, 20 in Southeast Texas, nine in East Texas, seven in North Texas, four each in the Panhandle and the San Angelo area, three each in the San Antonio and Midland area, and two in East Central Texas.

Oil discoveries included 13 in West Central Texas and North Texas, four each in Southeast Texas, deep South Texas, and the San Angelo and Midland areas, three in East Texas, two each in the San Antonio and Lubbock areas, and one each in the Refugio area and the Panhandle.

Dodger Blue again waves proudly in NL West

America's Team continues torrid slide

AP Laserphoto

Los Angeles Dodger pitcher Fernando Valenzuela hits the dirt, legs flying, after being brushed back by pitcher Tom Seaver Tuesday night. Dodger batters can expect more of this now that they have taken over first place in the National League West.

By The Associated Press

Here come the Los Angeles Dodgers — oops, there go the Atlanta Braves.

"I could feel the momentum building in Atlanta," said Los Angeles first baseman Steve Garvey, whose Dodgers capped an incredible comeback Tuesday night by taking over first place in the National League West over the fading Braves.

That development was made possible when the Dodgers drilled the Cincinnati Reds 11-3 while the Braves lost a 3-2 decision to the San Francisco Giants. The Braves, who led the Dodgers by 10½ games as late as July 29, lost for the eighth straight game and for the 12th time in the last 13.

THEY GOT off to a record 13-0 start and held first in the NL West virtually the entire season before their recent spin, dropping to second only once on Epril 27, percentage points behind the San Diego Padres. The Braves have been billed as America's Team since their rise has been recorded on Ted Turner's superstation WTBS from Atlanta.

The Dodgers, meanwhile, were part of Atlanta's nosedive, having beaten the Braves nine straight times, including a four-game sweep in Atlanta at the end of July and another four-game sweep in Los Angeles this past weekend.

"From a dream to a reality" was the way Garvey described the Dodgers' dramatic and sudden ascent to first place.

"As defending world champions, we have something to prove," said Garvey, who hit a two-run homer in the seventh inning Tuesday night, one of two Dodger homers.

"We can't forget San Diego, we can't forget San Francisco, and we certainly can't forget Atlanta," he continued. "But I like our team. I like its chemistry.

"I knew we couldn't let down and now that we are in first place, it's up to us to stay there. We had a lot of adversity early in the season, but now we're playing like the team that people expected."

Rick Monday also homered to back the six-hit pitching of Fernando Valenzuela as the Dodgers, in their incredible run toward the top, gained their 11th game in the standings in the last 12 days.

Giants 3, Braves 2

Milt May lined a home run off Al Hrabosky in the seventh inning to give the hot Giants their ninth straight victory. May's homer gave the Giants their 31st come-from-behind victory of the season and they moved to within five games of first place.

Bill Laskey, 11-8, shut out Atlanta over the final eight innings after Dale Murphy hit his 29th homer of the season with Larry Whisenton on base in the first.

The last time the Giants won as many as nine in a row was April of 1971, the year they won the NL West.

Cubs 5, Expos 3

Randy Martz scattered six hits over the first seven innings and Junior Kennedy drove in two runs as Chicago beat Montreal to stretch its winning streak to six games. The Cubs have won eight of their last nine, their most successful streak since July, 1979.

Martz, 6-7, coming off a career-best, two-hit performance against New York last Thursday, gave way to Willie Hernandez after Chris Speier opened the eighth with his third home run of the season and pinch-hitter Brad Mills followed with the first of his major league career.

Hernandez needed relief help himself from Dick Tidrow after giving up the Expos' third run on Al Oliver's groundout.

"We have a good ballclub," said Martz. "It's a matter of us getting a few breaks here and there, and that's what's been happening. We're playing free and loose because we've got nothing to lose, while the Expos have everything to lose."

Cardinals 7, Mets 2

Steve Mura hurled a six-hitter for his fifth straight victory as St. Louis whipped New York. Mura, 10-7, struck out four and walked four in pitching his sixth complete game of the season. His last loss was June 28, when he dropped a 1-0 decision to Philadelphia.

The Cardinals scored all the runs they needed in the first inning as Dave Green's two-run single keyed a four-run rally off Mets left-hander Randy Jones, 7-9. Jones retired only one batter before he was removed from the game.

"Mura's major problem has been wildness," said Cardinal Manager Whitey Herzog. "But he has the ability to be my ace, along with Bob Forsch."

Astros 4, Padres 1

Vern Ruhle scattered eight hits in 8⅔ innings and Phil Garner clouted a three-run homer as Houston defeated San Diego in Bob Lillis' debut as the Astros' manager.

Earlier in the day, the Astros fired Manager Bill Virdon, who had guided the club since 1975, and named third base coach Lillis as the interim manager. Houston had struggled to a 49-62 record under Virdon and has lost six games in a row before snapping the streak Monday night against the Padres.

Ruhle, 6-8, didn't walk a batter and struck out two before getting last-out relief help from Randy Moffitt, who gained his second save.

Pirates 9-5, Phillies 6-9

Garry Maddox's three-run homer and two-run shots by Mike Schmidt and Pete Rose carried Philadelphia over Pittsburgh.

Before the regularly-scheduled game, Mike Easler's home run, single and four RBI triggered the Pirates' 9-6 win in the completion of Monday night's suspended game between the two clubs.

Marty Bystrom, 4-4, who has suffered from various arm problems this season, was the winner in the night's second game, scattering nine hits in seven innings. Reliever Sid Monge worked the final two innings.

The Phillies took a 5-0 lead off Manny Sarmiento, 5-2, in the first two innings with Maddox's blast keying a four-run second.

Illinois shakes probation

CHICAGO (AP) — The three-year probation imposed against the University of Illinois football program by the Big Ten may have hastened the action that brought the school back into the conference's good graces, a university official says.

The probation was brought to an early end Tuesday by Big Ten faculty representatives, who said they took the action because the school took steps to guarantee "clear-cut faculty control" of athletics.

In a statement issued through the office of Big Ten Commissioner Wayne Duke, the representatives said Illinois' consolidation of two governing bodies of athletics at the school into a single unit that allowed "clear-cut faculty control" of intercollegiate programs was behind its move to lift the sanctions.

Ironically, a study suggesting that the university's Athletic Association Board of Directors and Faculty-Senate Committee on Athletics be merged already was in the works before controversy erupted over the eligibility of former quarterback Dave Wilson.

"That might have been one of the benefits of the probationary period," said University President Stanley O. Ikenberry. "It's fair to say that the change was brought about more rapidly than might have been the case."

Under terms of the original three-year probation announced in April 1981, Illinois was banned from post-season play in addition to being denied its share of revenue generated by regular and post-season league telecasts.

The university was slapped with probation after a protracted fight between Wilson and the conference wound up in the courts. The Big Ten maintained that Illinois supported Wilson, one of a host of junior college transfers brought in by then-rookie Coach Mike White, in seeking to overturn its authority.

In the resulting controversy, some university officials proposed leaving the conference. About two weeks after the sanctions were announced, the university won from the conference the promise to review the situation with an eye toward lifting the ban.

Also in response to the outcry, the conference removed all but the Illinois football program from probationary status.

Wilson left the school in last summer's supplementary draft and now plays for the New Orleans Saints of the National Football League. A lawsuit in the case remains in the courts.

ACC becomes football force

ATLANTA (AP) — Coach Danny Ford of Clemson knows it's difficult to successfully defend college football's national championship.

"It took us from the time this program was born until 1981 to win it, but, I can't say it is impossible," said Ford. "Everyone thought it was impossible for us to win it a first time, but we did."

Repeating as national champs has been done only only eight times in 46 years, and few expect the Tigers to turn the trick. But the Atlantic Coast Conference will offer a legitimate contender — Coach Dick Crum's North Carolina Tar Heels, featuring one of the nation's top running backs, Kelvin Bryant.

North Carolina and Clemson are solidly entrenched as the top two teams in the ACC, and loom as the league's only threats to crack the Top 20 rankings.

The Southeastern Conference, which claimed three national titles in succession before Clemson rose to the top, may be geared for another Alabama-Georgia title fight, but several others loom as challengers — primarily Florida, and possibly Auburn and Mississippi State.

The battle for supremacy among the South's 10 Division I-A independents should feature Miami of Florida, which faces a tough schedule, and Southern Mississippi, led by Reggie Collier, the only quarterback in NCAA history to gain 1,000 yards both rushing and passing in the same season.

The most decorated individuals in southern football return to build on impressive records — two-time All-America running back Herschel Walker of Georgia and Alabama's Paul "Bear" Bryant, who completed the 1981 season at the top of the all-time list of coaching victories, 315, one more than Amos Alonzo Stagg.

Walker, the 222-pound junior, already holds the NCAA rushing records for a freshman and a sophomore, having amassed 3,507 yards in two seasons. He holds 15 school, eight SEC and six NCAA records. Walker finished third in the Heisman Trophy voting after his freshman season and second last year.

Since going to the wishbone offense, Bryant has steered Alabama to eight SEC titles in the last 11 years, tying Georgia for the title last year. The Crimson Tide will add a new wrinkle to the offense this year, going to the I and double wing to take advantage of quarterback Walter Lewis' passing to wide receivers Jesse Bendross and Joey Jones. The move also is expected to help running back Linnie Patrick.

"I know that it sounds a little crazy to abandon something that has been as good to us as the wishbone has, but that's not really the case," Bryant said. "What we're doing is adding the I, not abandoning the wishbone."

At Georgia, Walker will be operating behind a veteran line, but the question for the Bulldogs is how gifted but inexperienced quarterback John Lastinger performs.

Florida, which has never won the SEC title, returns 20 starters from last year's team, including quarterback1 wayne Peace working behind an intact starting line.

Mississippi State, an awesome defensive machine last year, will have to rely more on its offense after losing All-America linebacker Johnie Cooks and All-SEC tackle Glen Collins. Junior John Bond will start at quarterback for the third year, and split end Glen Young and tailback Michael Haddix give the Bulldogs two solid threats.

Coach Pat Dye begins his second season at Auburn, expecting another strong defensive team and facing a schedule in which the Tigers leave the state only twice.

Most of the other teams in the SEC expect to show some improvement, especially Louisiana State, but don't figure to challenge for an upper first-division berth. Jerry Claiborne is the only new coach in the SEC, taking over at Kentucky.

Despite a knee injury that forced him to miss four games, North Carolina's Bryant scored 18 touchdowns and rushed for 1,015 yards. The Tar Heels also have an excellent quarterback in Rod Elkins, who passed for 994 yards last year, most of that before being slowed by a mid-season ankle injury.

Ford must make wholesale changes in a depleted offensive line, but the Clemson defense should be strong again and Homer Jordan gives stability at quarterback, returning for his third season as a starter.

Bobby Ross replaced Claiborne as the coach at Maryland, which is expected to battle North Carolina State for third in the ACC.

Bill Virdon, who was fired Tuesday morning from his job as manager of the Houston Astros, wipes down after finishing a hand ball match Tuesday in San Diego where the Astros are playing the Padres.

New Astro boss still has hope for title

SAN D'EGO (AP) — Longtime Houston coach Bob Lillis, handed his first managerial assignment at age 52, believes the struggling Astros have the talent "to make it interesting" in the newly tightened National League West race.

"We still have the talent, we just have to put it together," said Lillis, who was elevated Tuesday after the fifth-place Astros fired Bill Virdon. The Astros made his debut a successful one with a 4-1 victory over the San Diego Padres.

"After what happened to Atlanta last week, anything can happen," added Lillis, referring to the start of an ongoing slump in which the Braves have lost 12 of 13 games and fallen to second place behind the Los Angeles Dodgers.

With the firing, Virdon became the sixth major league manager to lose his job this season.

Manager of the Astros since 1975 — the longest stint in Houston's history — Virdon was relieved Tuesday morning, a day after the Astros lost five games in a row at San Francisco.

Virdon said he plans to return to his Houston home for some relaxation before making any decisions about his future.

The firing caught him by surprise, he said.

"I wasn't expecting it," said Virdon, whose job was reportedly in jeopardy after the Astros were unable to shake off a slow start and an injury siege.

"I'm disappointed, but injuries are part of the business. We lost (relief ace) Joe Sambito two weeks into the season. It wasn't just one thing. We didn't play well early and later on we started having injury problems. You have to weather those storms, but we couldn't seem to work it out."

Virdon had said in spring training that the Astros had "the best team I ever had in Houston."

John J. McMullen, chairman of the board, said, "We made the decision that the Houston Astros were going to need a new manager next year and in the interest in both the ballclub and Bill Virdon, this seemed to be the appropriate time."

Virdon had helped mold the Astros into contenders after taking over a last-place club that finished 43½ games behind in 1975. Houston finished second in 1979, won the NL West in 1980 in a one-game playoff against Los Angeles and finished first in the second half of last year's strike-caused split season before losing a three-game playoff to the Dodgers.

Virdon, interviewed at a San Diego handball court, said he accepted the firing as "part of the business. He (McMullen) called about 9 a.m. and said he was going to make a change. He gave no specifics."

Low-key and non-controversial, Virdon has a career mark of 544-522 during stints with the Pittsburgh Pirates (72-73), New York Yankees (74-75) and Houston, where he became the club's winningest manager.

In two separate games against Philadelphia in the memorable 1980 National League championships, the Astros were within one out of reaching the World Series.

Until his firing, he had the most seniority at the same job of any National League manager. That distinction is now shared by Tom Lasorda of Los Angeles and Chuck Tanner of Pittsburgh, both in their sixth seasons.

Virdon said injuries decimated the club's bullpen and "we couldn't close out anyone. The seventh, eight and ninth innings have been misery."

He praised Lillis, a 21-year member of the Astros' organization, as "one of the best people I know and without a doubt the best coach anyone could have."

Lillis was among the original players selected by the Houston Colt .45s, the club's initial name, in the 1961 expansion draft.

Reached by telephone, Lillis said he "surprised" by the managerial change. "I'm still trying to recover. I have deep feelings for Bill. He's a gentleman and a pro."

Cubs survive Amarillo, 8-7

AMARILLO — The Midland Cubs came up with only eight hits here Tuesday night, but survived a two-run uprising by the Amarillo Gold Sox in the ninth inning for an 8-7 Texas League victory.

The Cubs were leading by an 8-5 margin heading into the bottom of the ninth, but barely came out of the inning alive. Pat Casey greeted winner Jon Perlman (11-6) with a leadoff single and a run scoring double by pinch hitter Jimmy Thomas.

That chased Perlman, who won his third game in a row despite giving up 12 hits, seven earned runs and a walk, but Mike Thompson came in to nail down the decision. Thompson did balk with Thomas on third base, but he struckout Mark Giallaspie and Kevin McReynolds to end the game and pick up his second save of the year.

MIDLAND TOOK a 2-0 lead in the first without a base hit as Amarillo threw the ball around and struck for four runs in the third for a 6-0 lead on key doubles by Henry Cotto and Carmelo Martinez. Javier Fierro, the only Cub to get two hits on the night, singled twice in the game and drove in two runs and Fritz Connally brought home another run with a sacrifice fly.

Perlman struggled throughout the contest. He pitched shutout ball for the first three innings before giving up two runs in the fourth and three in the fifth as the Sox pulled to within 6-5. The Cubs, however, came back with single runs in the seventh and eighth on a single by Fierro and the fly ball by Connally.

The series is now tied at 2-2 and the two teams meet here again tonight. The Cubs have won only five of their last 12 games, but are still only 3½ games out of first place. They will face league leading El Paso in a big series beginning Friday at Cubs Stadium.

The Cubs are now 20-25 in the second half race, but are surprisingly still in the thick of the race since the Western Division teams in the Texas League have been struggling.

Hough bewildered as Brewers connect

By The Associated Press

Texas Ranger pitcher Charlie Hough could only shake his head in bewilderment after Ben Oglivie and Cecil Cooper slammed key hits to help power the Milwaukee Brewers to victory.

"Cooper hit a ball that was on the ground," Hough said after his record dropped to 11-9. "It was a wild pitch if he doesn't hit it. Oglivie hit a pitch six inches low and six inches outside. He just went out and got it.

"When a club is hot like that, everything they swing at is a hit."

Milwaukee's 11-3 romp over the Rangers Tuesday night, coupled with Toronto's 4-0 victory over Boston, boosted the Brewers' American League East lead to 4½ games.

Oglivie's three-run homer off a Hough knuckleball sparked a four-run Milwaukez first inning. The outfielder, who had only seven hits in his last 60 times at bat, added an RBI single, Gorman Thomas belted a two-run homer and Cooper knocked in three runs with a single and a double.

"I felt all right and my knuckler was breaking, but with that kind of lineup you have to throw well," said Hough. "Three minutes into the game and it was 4-0."

Thomas, who leads the American League with 28 homers, agreed with that assessment.

"I thought Hough had a good knuckler tonight," Thomas said. "There's no explanation for it.

"There's no guessing, like trying to sit on a fast ball or a breaking ball," he said. "You know he's going to throw a knuckler, and either you get him or he gets you. You just swing hard and throw up your head."

Blue Jays 4, Red Sox 0

Dave Stieb limited Boston to a single to center by Carney Lansford in the second inning and an infield single by Gary Allenson in the third as Toronto blanked the Red Sox.

"It was my best game in the majors," admitted Stieb, who is now 12-11. It was his fourth shutout and 12th pomplete game of the season, tying him for the league lead in both categories.

Rance Mulliniks hit an opposite-field, two-run double in the third for the only runs Stieb needed.

White Sox 9, Orioles 4

A check-swing, three-run double by Greg Luzinski and a five-run outburst in the fifth inning gave Chicago its victory over Baltimore. The triumph was the 10th in 12 games for the White Sox and their second straight over the Orioles.

Britt Burns, 13-4, had a three-hit shutout before giving up an unearned run in the sixth inning. In the eighth, Gary Roenicke blasted a three-run homer.

Tigers 10, Yankees 1

Lou Whitaker slammed two homers and knocked in five runs to back the four-hit pitching of rookie Jerry Ujdur as Detroit crushed New York.

Ujdur, 6-5, gave up a leadoff homer to Graig Nettles in the second inning, but later retired 16 Yankees in a row before giving up a two-out infield hit in the ninth. Ujdur has won five of his last seven starts without a loss since being called back to the major leagues June 6.

Twins 5, Angels 2

A solo home run by Gary Ward with two outs in the sixth inning, his 20th of the year, snapped a 2-2 tie and led Minnesota to its victory over California.

Pete Redfern, 5-9, the third Minnesota pitcher, picked up the victory, while Ken Forsch, 10-8, took the loss.

Don Baylor slammed his 17th homer of the season, a solo shot, for California.

Royals 5, Indians 1

John Wathan returned to the Kansas City lineup with two hits, two runs batted in and a stolen base to lead the Royals to a rain-delayed victory over Cleveland.

Wathan had been sidelined with a fractured ankle. In his first game back, he singled home two runs in the second inning and stole his 27th base of the season in the eighth.

He also led off the fifth with a single, went to third on Willie Wilson's single and scored on George Brett's sacrifice fly.

The game was halted for 46 minutes by rain in the first inning, then delayed for more than an hour in the fourth.

Mariners 4, A's 2

A two-out, two-run double by Richie Zisk in the seventh inning sparked Seattle over Oakland. Zisk snapped a 2-2 tie when he ripped the first pitch from Oakland right-hander Steve McCatty, 6-2, over the head of center fielder Dwayne Murphy and off the wall to score Julio Cruz and pinch runner Dave Henderson.

Jeff Burroughs had a two-run homer for Oakland.

NFL loses 1982 battle with Raiders

By The Associated Press

The National Football League apparently has lost its battle to keep the Raiders in Oakland, at least for the 1982 season.

The 9th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals rejected the NFL request for a stay of a lower court ruling earlier this year that allowed the Raiders to right to move from Oakland to Los Angeles.

"The NFL has reached the end of its rope as far as the courts are concerned," said attorney Joseph Alioto, who represented the Raiders in the two-year legal battle.

Jim Heffernan, the NFL's director of public relations, conceded the Raiders will now begin the 1982 season in Los Angeles at the L.A. Coliseum. However, he added the league would continue to appeal the lower court's ruling.

"The NFL, of course, does not agree that the Raiders should leave Oakland pending ultimate determination of the club's location. We will work within the legal process to correct the injustices being done to the Oakland community and the NFL under the currently applicable court ruling."

The NFL's appeal is expected to be heard next spring. The Raiders also face an eminent domain suit by the city of Oakland.

Raiders owner Al Davis was jubilant over the ruling.

"We just hope the Raiders play well in 1982," he said. "We realize the harassment, bad faith and unfair dealings on the part of the NFL will continue."

The Raiders won the right to move to Los Angeles May 7 when a federal jury ruled the the league's bylaw requiring a three-fourths vote of the clubs owners to approve a franchise move, was in violation of antitrust laws.

Tuesday's ruling comes just two days before the opening of the NFL's first full week of peaseason games.

Fourteen games are on tap this week with New Orleans visiting Houston on Thursday, while Cincinnati is at Kansas City and St Louis will be at Seattle Friday.

On Saturday, it's Buffalo at Dallas, Cleveland at Detroit, Denver at Los Angeles, Minnesota at Atlanta, the New York Jets at Green Bay, the New York Giants at Baltimore, the Raiders at San Francisco, Philadelphia at Tampa Bay, Pittsburgh vs. New England at Knoxville, Tenn., and Washington at Miami. San Diego will be at Chicago Sunday.

In other news, veteran strong safety Bill Thompson of Denver announced his retirement after 13 seasons with the Broncos. He ends his career with a string of 142 consecutive starts.

The Raiders waived 12-year veteran defensive lineman Cedric Hardman, who failed to report to camp, and seven others, including veteran linebacker Don Goode, who was recently acquired from Cleveland.

Miami cornerback Don McNeal will be sidelined about three weeks with a fractured rib he apparently suffered last week in a Dolphin scrimmage, while Green Bay Coach Bart Starr announced that women reporters will be allowed in the Packers post-game dressing room starting this Saturday.

Berbick too sick to face Snipes

CLEVELAND (AP) — Canadian heavyweight champion Trevor Berbick says he is too sick to go through with his nationally televised boxing match with Renaldo Snipes this weekend, but the chief publicist for Don King Promotions says he doubts Berbick's story.

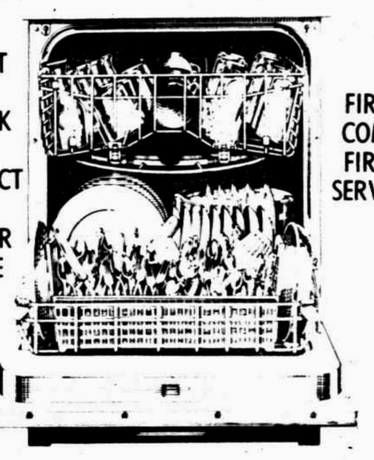

The bout hasn't been officially canceled, promoters said.

Contacted Tuesday night by the Halifax Chronicle-Herald at promoter Don King's training facilities in Orwell, Ohio, Berbick said he's down with the flu.

THOUSAND OAKS, Calif. (AP) — Three veterans and a number of rookies will be conspicuously absent from the Dallas Cowboys' pre-season opener with the Buffalo Bills in Texas Stadium Saturday night, team officials said.

Veterans out with injuries are center Robert Shaw (knee), linebacker Anthony Dickerson (groin) and guard Norm Wells (knee). Listed as doubtful are safety Dextor Clinkscale, tight end George Thompson (ankle), running back Dwight Sullivan (heel), fullback Mark Sanford (groin) and tackle Mike Mason (ankle).

Linebacker Al Strandberg (foot) and linebacker Scott McLean (knee) are listed as questionable.

Probables are wide receiver Doug Donley (hip), safety Mike Downs (hamstring), tight end Bill Joe DuPree (thigh), guard Herb Scott (hamstring), tackle Jim Cooper (ankle), defensive end Bruce Thornton (groin), tackle Phil Ponderac (back) and safety Bobby Johnson (groin).

Texas Tech's Oglesby lands track haul

LUBBOCK, Texas (AP) — Texas Tech signed three athletes to track scholarships Tuesday, including an Arizona junior college runner who is a native of Nassau, Bahamas.

Tech track coach Corky Oglesby said Steven Wright had a best time of 1:52 in the 800 meters while running for Central Arizona.

He also signed brothers Delmon and Greg Lyons of Odessa. Delmon, who ran for Odessa Ector and then Odessa College, has posted times of 47.2 seconds in the quarter mile and 46.6 for one leg of the mile relay. Greg, also an Odessa Ector product, has run 1:55 in the 800 meters and a 48.8 leg on the mile relay.

Rick Mears shoots for Pocono pole

LONG POND, Pa. (AP) — Rick Mears has produced speed in abundance just about everywhere he's gone this season.

The defending CART-PPG Indy-Car World Series champion has set qualifying records at four different tracks this season. And, now, the record at Pocono International Raceway is in definite jeopardy going into today's opening round of qualifying for the Domino's Pizza Pocono 500.

Mears far outshone 24 other competitors who made it onto the tough 2.5-mile trioval during Tuesday's practice sessions. The 30-year-old driver from Bakersfield, Calif., driving the Ford-powered Penske PC-10 in which he has set records at Indianapolis, Phoenix, Atlanta and Milwaukee, unofficially bettered the old Pocono record by nearly 6 mph.

HIS BEST lap under the electric eye timer was an average speed of 197.027 mph.

Records are set only in official time trials, but Mears' practice lap was well above the official track mark of 191.367 mph, set by the late Peter Revson in 1973.

The pole position for Sunday's race will be determined today, with with time trials Friday. A 33-car field expected to take the green flag for the third and last race in the Indy-car Triple Crown.

"That's about all there is," Mears said Tuesday after his final practice lap of the day. "I really didn't expect it, but the car just felt great out there.

"The car was capable of going anywhere I wanted it to out there, and that made it easy to get through all three turns."

Mears had several laps timed at over 195 mph Tuesday.

Mario Andretti was next at 191.730 mph in a Wildcat 8B-Cosworth, followed by Johnny Rutherford at 191.730 in a March-Cosworth, Indy 500 and Michigan 500 winner Gordon Johncock at 191.481 in a Wildcat-Cosworth, Kevin Cogan in a Penske PC-10-Ford at 191.229, and Mike Mosley in a March-Cosworth at 190.832.

There were two crashes early in the day, with one driver suffering a broken heel.

Chet Fillip suffered the broken heel and also received severe bruises to both legs and ankles when his Eagle-Ford crashed in turn one.

Spike Gehlhausen, a former Indy 500 rookie of the year, escaped injury when he lost a wheel off his Eagle-Cosworth and hit the concrete wall in turn two. The car cannot be repaired, however, and Gehlhausen is expected to drive Bill Alsup's backup Penske racer in qualifying.

A.J. Foyt, the only man to win four races at either Pocono or Indy, got back onto the track Tuesday for the first time since suffering a puncture wound to his left leg and some bumps and bruises in a spectacular crash three weeks ago in the Michigan 500.

Abilene ace highlights Junior tourney

Abilene's Todd Moore and Crane's Mike Haught have a sub-par battle going at Green Tree Country Club following first round action Tuesday in the PGA Junior Tour Championship golf tournament.

Battling in the 14-15 age group, Moore produced a two-under par round of 69 to lead Haught by one stroke. All players in this tournament are qualifiers from previous Junior Tour competitions.

The other leaders in the 14-15 division are Steve Alexander, San Angelo, 75; Mike Campbell, Andrews, 75; Joel Gallimore, Odessa, 76; and Phil Beherns, Canyon, 76.

Rick Houston of Morton leads the 16-18 division with a two-over round of 73, a one stroke lead over Mark Ledbetter of Lubbock. Standing at 75 are Pampa's Paul McIntire, Borger's Andy Anderson and Andrews' Brad Boynton. Abilene's Jim Batjer and Monahans' Kevin Sitz are at 76.

In the 12-13 division, Andrews' Larry Bryan leads the way with a 79, three strokes over Canyon's Jimmy Dawson. Hereford's Bobby Baker, San Angelo's Memo Valdez Jr., Denver City's Mike Sanders and Rankin's Shot Nicholson all own 84s. Clint Johnson of Childress has an 85.

Tournament play was scheduled to end by noon today with the final 18 holes.

National League may show Kuhn exit

By WILL GRIMSLEY
AP Special Correspondent

Whether he's pushed or departs gracefully, all signs point to the exit door for Baseball Commissioner Bowie Kuhn.

The 6-foot-6 former National League attorney, who has theoretically governed the game for a dozen years, will get the bad news a week from today in San Diego, where club owners of both leagues gather to determine his fate.

A cursory telephone poll shows that as of today the votes are stacked heavily against him — the main anti-Kuhn sentiment prevailing in the National League — and only a last-minute miracle can bail him out.

"IT'S SET in concrete," one National League executive said. "Unless there is a compromise or he agress to accept a lesser role, Bowie is out."

"You can't say positively," another NL executive said. "We thought — and some of us hoped — that he might see the writing on the wall and make a decision not to continue.

"But he is a tough, headstgong guy and he's carrying on a vigorous campaign to survive."

Actually, lobbying on the issue is as intense and frenetic as in some of liveliest political campigns.

At the moment, three National League teams are apparently unalterably opposed to retaining Kuhn — the New York Mets, Houston Astros and St Louis Cardinals — and two others, the Cincinnati Reds and Atlanta Braves, are leaning heavily toward the firing squad.

Under baseball rules, the commissioner needs three-fourths of the votes in each league to have his contract renewed. That means that four votes in the NL or five in the American could trip the trigger.

While the commissioner has his detractors in the American League, principally George Steinbrenner of the New York Yankees and Eddie Chiles of the Texas Rangers, the younger circuit has not shown the same organized movement on the issue as has the National.

This is ironic, since Kuhn, a law graduate of the University of Virginia, served for years as attorney for the National League and it was his adroit handling of delicate situations — such as the transfer of the Braves' franchise from Milwaukee to Atlanta — that got him his present job.

IN FACT, it was a then vice-president of the Cardinals, Dick Meyer, who joined the late Walter O'Malley of the Los Angeles Dodgers in leading the sponsorship of Kuhn for the commissioner's office.

Now Peter O'Malley, who succeeded his father as president of the Dodgers, is one of the commissioner's biggest supporters. He is said to be using all his charm and clout in an attempt to turn what appears to be an irreversible tide.

Also, Ballard Smith, who pulls all the strings for hamburger king Ray Kroc's San Diego Padres, is said to be burning up the wires in attempting to twist some arms in Kuhn's favor.

In the American League, Steinbrenner is regarded as wishy-washy, having at the All-Star game in 1975 joined a hard-nosed core in a "Dump Bowie" plot, only to switch at the last minute. Edward Bennett Williams, now principal owner of the Baltimore Orioles, reportedly has changed his stance from anti-Kuhn to pro-Kuhn and is doing considerable lobbyig on the commissioner's behalf.

What is the beef against Bowie Kuhn?

"I don't like his policy of revenue-sharing in baseball," says Nelson Doubleday, board chairman of the Mets. "I have told him so. I have told him that he should not be commissioner."

ANOTHER INFLUENTIAL NL executive said he thought baseball needed a man to solidify the game, bring the two leagues closer together and improve the rapport between the players and owners.

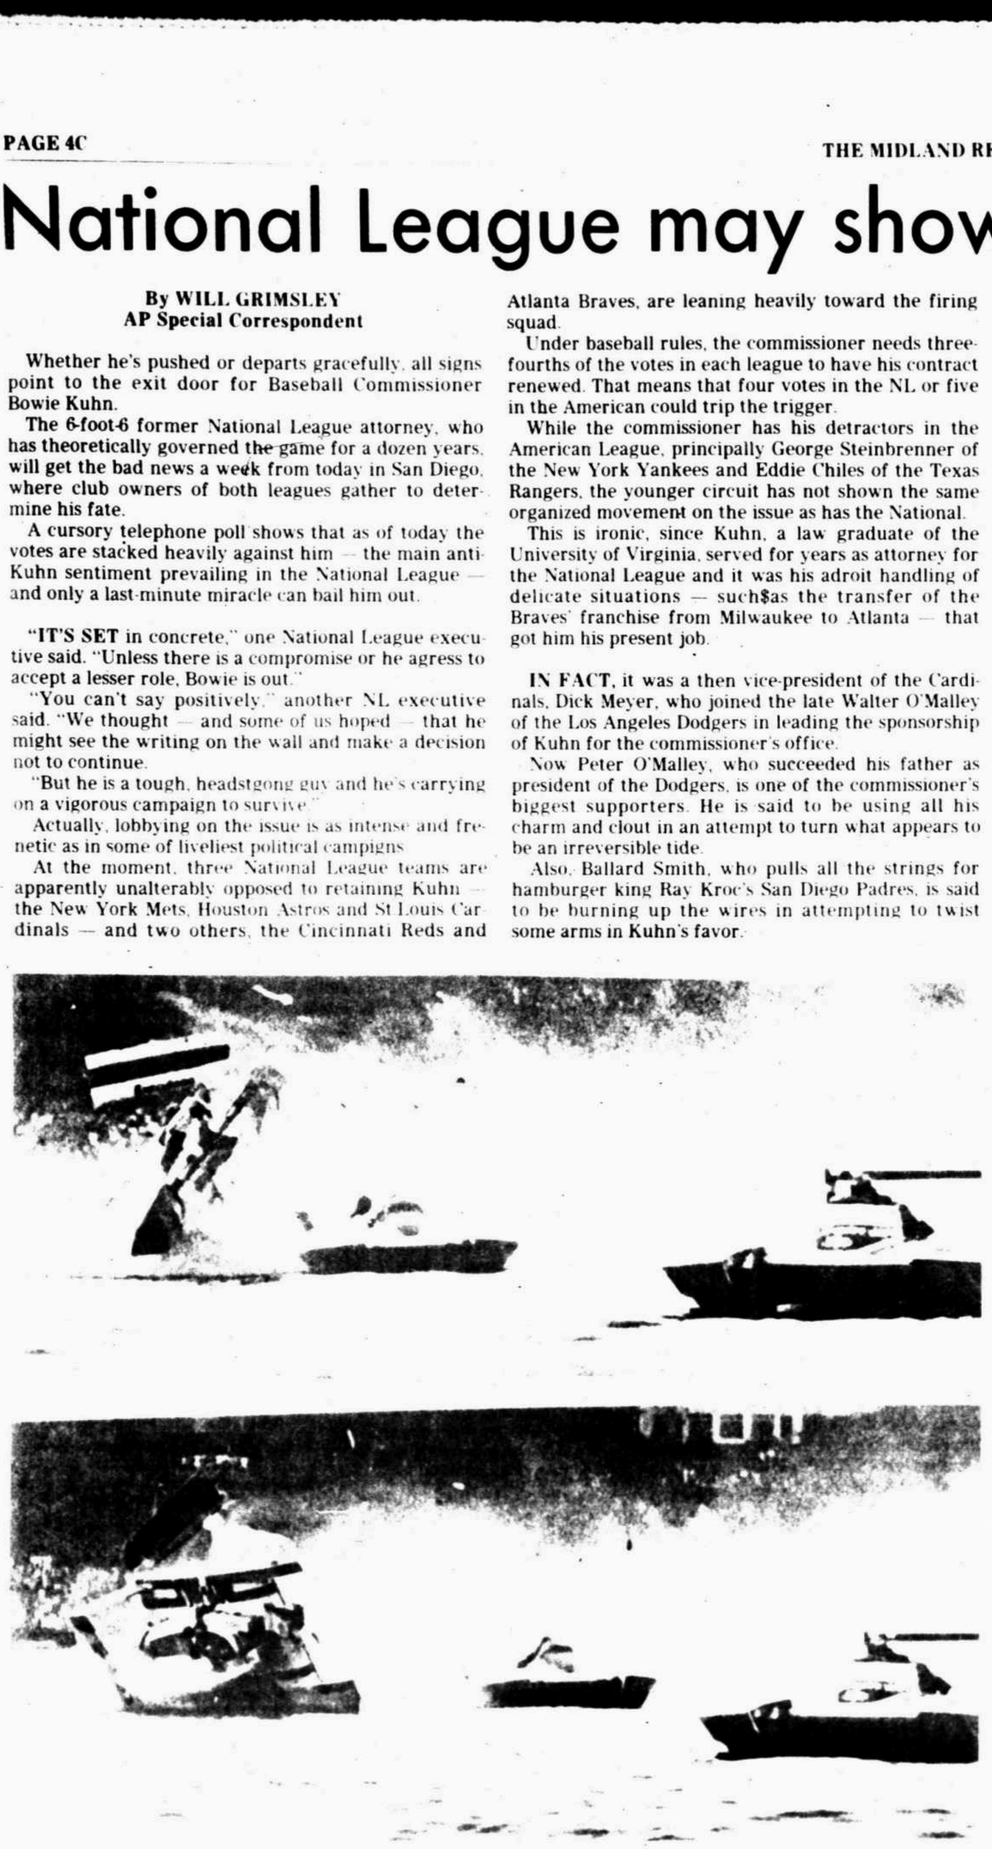

"Some of us felt in the strike last year that Bowie did wrong in meeting always with the Players Relations Committee and never sitting in with the players so he could get a balanced view of what was going on," he said.

One hangup is that the baseball brass hasn't got a man in the wings. The most talked-of possible successor is Tal Smith, very successful as a representative for the owners in salary arbitrations since being fired by Houston's John McMullen. McMullen is one of Kuhn's severest critics.

Houston rewards Hayes with contract

HOUSTON (AP) — Houston Rockets forward Elvin Hayes failed to live up to some observers' expectations last season. He didn't slow down.

Instead of returning home to semi-retirement to play out the end of a spectacular 14-year career, Hayes was the only Rocket to play in all 82 regular season games and averaged 37 minutes per game.

The former University of Houston All-America was rewarded Tuesday with a two-year contract that he says "probably will take me to the stables."

"I'm very fortunate in that I've never been injured and I've always worked hard in the off season to take care of myself," he said.

Hayes, who complemented NBA leading scorer Moses Malone last season after a slow start, said he still is able to play effectively at his age because of his career long conditioning effort.

But he admits it's getting harder.

"I have to be more disciplined now than earlier in my career," he said. "I play a lot more during the summer now than I used to. But I've always been a clean liver. I figure if I take care of my body, it will take care of me."

Hayes, 37, started slowly last season and overcame an early season flare-up with Coach Del Harris, which he says was not serious.

"In the middle of the floor, he (Harris) asked me something about how many playoffs I'd been in," Hayes said. "I told him the Washington Bullets probably had been in more playoffs than any team. It was just a little thing like that, about how many playoffs we had been in.

"That was it. There is nothing else that anyone could bring up that we disagreed about," he said.

Hayes averaged 16.1 points and 9.1 rebounds last season after returning to the Rockets for his second tour of duty. The Rockets drafted Hayes in 1968. 1969 season when he led the league as a rookie. Hayes was traded to Washington after three seasons and spent the next nine years with the Bullets.

Tullis switches to cornerback

SAN ANGELO, Texas (AP) — Willie Tullis attracted the Houston Oilers coaches' attention early last season as a rookie longshot — he returned a kickoff 95 yards for a winning touchdown in his first game.

Tullis, a ninth-round draft choice last season, starred on the specialty teams last year and the Oilers hope Tullis will attract attention again now that he's been shifted to cornerback.

Tullis will see backup duty Thursday night when the Oilers open their 1982 exhibition season in the Astrodome against the New Orleans Saints.

Oilers coaches already have been surprised that Tullis has adjusted so quickly.

"It didn't surprise me," Tullis said. "I knew I had the speed to adjust. I run the 40 in 4.5. The corner gets a lot of work. I've been learning everything I can. By the time the season starts, I'll have it down."

Tullis is no immediate threat to starting cornerbacks Greg Stemrick and J.C. Wilson until he gets game experience.

"I like to play aggressive defense," Tullis said. "I'm a physical player. If we're in a man-to-man defense, I'll get up in the receiver's face and bump him around.

"I'll try to indimidate the receiver because you have to make them respect you. If they don't, they'll throw everything in the book at you although I consider myself a physical-type player, I think I can use finesse too. All I want is a chance to show what I can do."

Jeff Rutledge fights for life with Rams

By RICH ROBERTS
Los Angeles Times
Washington Post News Service

ANAHEIM, Calif. — After Jeff Rutledge threw a 47-yard touchdown pass to George Farmer, the first Rams teammate to greet Farmer in the end zone was ... Rutledge.

It was only a scrimmage with the San Diego Chargers, but that didn't diminish Rutledge's enthusiasm.

"I get excited," he said. "I'm fighting for my life."

Actually, what he's fighting for is to be Bert Jones' backup. This year it's clear that the starting quarterback is Jones, but competition is as intense as ever — one reason being that No. 2 with the Rams is almost as good as No. 1 anywhere else. You just have to be a little patient.

In only one season, since John Hadl directed the Rams' offense in 1973 has the quarterback who opened the season remained at the controls to the finish. That was Pat Haden in '78.

Hadl was traded five games into the 1974 season, and this year he's back as offensive coordinator. He lists the quarterbacks as Jones No. 1, Rutledge No. 2, Vince Ferragamo No. 3 and Jeff Kemp No. 4.

Jones was given the job the day the Rams got him from the Baltimore Colts. Ferragamo, No. 1 when he defected to Canada after the '80 season, returned virtually to the end of the line.

As one might guess, Ray Malavasi, the head coach, has this explanation for that apparent inconsistency. Jeff Rutledge Is Trying Hard to Stay No. 2.

"One guy was away and the other guy is a veteran quarterback with years of experience. We made the trade with that idea. We needed that kind of guy to be No. 1."

Where that leaves Rutledge is anyone's guess, but he has the arithmetic all figured out. The Rams have four quarterbacks, they plan to keep only three.

That probably means a trade, and it won't be Jones or Kemp, a second-year free agent from Dartmouth who has little market value.

Rutledge: "You'd think they wouldn't keep me and Vince, but you don't know. The bottom line is what you do in a scrimmage situation and a game situation."

That's where Rutledge has sparkled this summer. He has performed like what the pros call a "gamer," a player who is more impressive in action than in practice.

"That was a lot of my history at Alabama," Rutledge said. "I'm not the flashy, strong-armed type that's really going to catch your eye in practice. I think all three of the other guys probably have stronger arms."

But in two scrimmages with the Chargers and one with the Dallas Cowboys' rookies, Rutledge has played consistently well enough to be noticed by the eyes that count.

"It's not that anybody's looking bad," Malavasi said. "He's just looking good."

In the scrimmage against the Chargers last weekend, Rutledge completed all five of his throws for 117 yards, including the bomb to Farmer. Jones was 3 for 7 for 21 yards and Ferragamo 4 for 8 for 77, with an interception.

Against the Cowboys a week earlier, Rutledge hit Farmer for a 75-yard touchdown.

The competition for No. 2 should get more intense starting Saturday night when the Rams open their practice season against the Denver Broncos in the 37th Los Angeles Times Charity Game at Anaheim Stadium here.

As of Monday, Malavasi and Hadl hadn't decided on their preseason pitching rotation, but from the start of training camp it's been Jones, followed by Rutledge, Kemp and Ferragamo.

"I don't think that means anything," Rutledge said. "That's just the way we've done it. It's pretty much understood that Bert's No. 1, but after that it's going to be Ray's decision when the time comes."

Rutledge, a fourth-year pro at 25, was asked if being No. 2 would be so bad.

"I love living out here," he said. "If I was traded anywhere I'd go. I'd have to beat out somebody else and learn a whole new system. I just want what's best for my career.

"I need to play. After awhile I'm going to be labeled that I've been in the league five or six years and haven't played. I don't want that to happen."

Hrbek is tearing up American League

Rookie is rather blase about rousing debut with Minnesota

By JOHN WEYLER
The Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

Kent Hrbek, 22, is the fourth-best hitter in baseball (.318 batting average), has 18 homers and 67 RBIs and is a cinch to be Rookie of the Year but he does not seem excited about it.

Hrbek, it appears, does a lot because he does not expect much.

Many skilled young men make it to the majors, only to find they hyperventilate in Yankee Stadium or have trouble standing erect in the batter's box.

HRBEK, ON the other hand, seems rather blase about his rousing debut with the Minnesota Twins. His knees did not shake. He did not ask other players for their autographs. And in his first game in the majors, he hit a game-winning, 12th-inning homer in Yankee Stadium.

"Most of my buddies are unemployed," he said, trying to explain why he is pleased to be a big leaguer. "If I wasn't doing this, I don't know what I'd be doing."

Hrbek grew up with the lights of the Twins' old park shining through his bedroom window in Bloomington. But don't get the idea that this is a story about a hometown boy making his boyhood fantasies a reality.

"Actually, I never really thought about it," he said. "I wasn't the kind of kid who was going to lose any sleep if I didn't become a ballplayer."

In fact, Hrbek didn't consider playing baseball ("I liked hockey better as a kid") until his junior year in high school, when a scout showed some interest. Hrbek attended tryout camps with the Reds and Dodgers before the Twins finally drafted him in the 17th round in 1978.

NOW, THE 6-4, 215-pound first baseman is a rookie sensation. And the fact that he cannot quite comprehend what all the fuss is about may be the main reason he is creating such a stir with his bat.

"You've gotta have a deep-rooted confidence in yourself to have the kind of rookie year Kent's having," Twins third base coach Karl Kuehl said. "He's got a strong personality. Lots of talented kids come up here, but they can't handle the distractions. They're in awe. And then they disappear."

Hrbek's only disappearing acts so far have been making baseballs vanish over the fences. He says he has always been able to swing the bat, and Twins owner Calvin Griffith, one not given to hyperbole (especially if it concerns someone on his payroll), has even said Hrbek has a "great stroke."

But Hrbek realizes much of his success has to do with his attitude — not just quick hands, sharp eyes, strong wrists, etc.

"Coming up to the majors is more of a mental jump than anything else," said Hrbek, who tore up the California League with Visalia last year. "It really works on your head more than anything else.

"You have to try and concentrate more. You have to be able to handle it upstairs. There's lots of guys in the minors with as much talent as I've got."

THERE ARE about 26 owners out there who would be glad to know who those guys are, because hitters like Kent Hrbek are rare.

"He's got unlimited potential," Twins Manager Billy Gardner said. "And he's got a great head on his shoulders. All this publicity hasn't affected him. He's really adjusted well."

Gardner only wishes the Twins had the start Hrbek had. They were 18-55 at one point this season and although they have begun to turn it around, the only hope left is a finish out of the American League West cellar.

"This is a young club (12 rookies on the 25-man roster)," Gardner said, "and they seem to have handled our terrible start pretty well. You'd think that Kent would be feeling the pressure ... trying to carry the team. But I don't think the kid knows what pressure is."

If anyone ever had a reason to succumb to outside distractions, it was Hrbek. Last year, it was discovered that his father, Ed, was dying of amyotrophic lateral sclerosis (Lou Gehrig's disease).

"He's not gonna get any better," Hrbek said quietly. "We're resolved to that. I guess I'm just lucky I got to play as soon as I did so he could see me."

Hrbek's father still makes it out to almost every home game, despite his weakened condition, as do his mother and 14-year-old sister, Kerry, who waged a one-girl All-Star write-in campaign on her brother's behalf.

Hrbek is more than a hitter, Gardner: "He is one of the best first basemen in both leagues. The way he's hitting, some players might let down in the field, but he's fielding great. He's got a tender ankle and sore wrist now, but he wants to stay in there every day.

"He's very agile for such a big guy, too. That big stretch takes away some hits. He plays the bunt well, he's knowledgeable for a young guy, and he's got great instincts. And he doesn't make mental mistakes."

Hrbek has begun to have a few problems at the plate. "The better the team does, the worse I do," he said. But his difficulties could be described as a "mini-slump" even for the best of hitters. He went 6 for 17 with 4 RBIs at Anaheim Stadium in California last week and said he was struggling.

He considers himself a "spray hitter," although the left-handed slugger has shown a lot of power to right. The Twins' new Hubert H. Humphrey Metrodome has a 365-foot power alley in right field that is one of the shortest in baseball.

THE ONLY problem Hrbek can find with being a major leaguer having a great first year is the fact that he becomes a target. And not only as a bull's-eye for pitchers.

Murphy sweet-as apple pie

The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

It's been 50 years now since anyone whose name began with an "O-apostrophe" won a Major League batting championship. It's been even longer since anyone with a certifiable Hibernian surname won a Triple Crown in the Majors, or even an RBI title. If a guy has an "O" or an "M" with a small "c" in his name nowadays, chances are he was born in Puerto Rico or Venezuela.

It wasn't always this way. If you look down a Major League roster of 1890 or so, you will find lineups full of Delahantys, Quinns, O'Rourkes, Ryans, Tiernans, Farrells, Duffys, Gleasons, McGraws, McGuires and O'Tooles. Surely, you remember "Beauty" McGowan? "Peach Pie" O'Connor and "Orator Jim" O'Rourke?

There were Duffys and Eagons, McMahons, O'Dowdes and O'Connells. There were Kellys by the dozen, from "High Pockets" to "Low Down," with an "e" and without. There were Callahans and Hallahans, Hallagans and Culligans, Doyles and O'Briens. There were Murphys from Danny to "Dummy," Doyles from "Dirty Jack" to "Clean Gene." There were Caseys at the bat, and Caseys on the mound.

But, as George Jessel used to say, all that is yesterday's roses, all that is klabbiosh in the tunnel. All that is aw long gone as the Polo Grounds, the open trolley, the straw hat, the surrey with the fringe on top. The shamrock is no longer the symbol of baseball, the canebrake is.

So, you can imagine with what ripples of excitement the members of the Ancient Order of Hibernians greeted the news that the list of the grand old game showed the man at the top in home runs was — a Murphy! How the cast of "O's" and "Micks" rolled those syllables lovingly on the tongue! How it rolled the clock back to the days when Casey was at the bat and Boggy Muldoon in the on-deck circle.

I put on my green tie and hustled out to Dodger Stadium the other night to see this reincarnation of the Gael. Dale Bryan Murphy is a sight to behold, enough to gladden the heart of any Celt. A fine broth of a lad, 6-5 in his stocking feet, 215 pounds and not an ounce of fat, eyes of blue and a song in his heart. Twenty-eight home runs, 76 runs batted in, more than 200 total bases, a deer in centerfield. You looked at him and you could hear the Kerry pipers, the rustle of a trout stream, the women in the meadows making hay.

You figured this would be a throwback, a tobacco-chomping, blade-bearded, growling champion of old, scornful of the opposition, pride of all the blood that's in him and divil a word a man can say against him. I was counting on a John L. Sullivan "I-can-lick-any-man-in-the-house" approach. The stage Irishman. The combatant competitor. The Cagney snarling at the warden.

Were the Murphys from County Cork, I wanted to know? "Dad was from Nebraska, mother was from Oklahoma," Dale Bryan Murphy explained. "They met at Washington State University."

Well, then, how did he get to the big leagues, mashing the opposition with that big bat? "I was a catcher, signed as a catcher," Murphy explained. Ah, a veritable Gabby Hartnett, per chance? Murphy shook his head. "I was lousy," he said. "I couldn't throw anybody out." How many a game? "Well," he admitted, "it depended on how many guys got on. If nine guys got on, nine guys would steal. I couldn't stop them."

So, they put him in centerfield to take advantage of his height, his range, his eyes? Murphy shakes his head. "They put me in centerfield because there's not much defensive requirement there." His interviewer shot up in his chair. "What?! Centerfield! Why, that's the position of Joe DiMaggio, Tris Speaker, Willie Mays, Mickey Mantle and Duke Snider! It's a KEY position! The pennant line!"

Murphy smiled. "First of all, you can see the ball coming there, you don't need special skills. The batter is right in front of you. So is the play. It's not like rightfield or leftfield, where the ball comes out hooking or slicing. How many times you see a leftfielder or rightfielder run in, and stop, then freeze? You don't get that kind of thing in centerfield. Those others are much tougher positions."

Does this mean Murph was put out there because it's the place he can do the least harm? "I didn't say it was the 'easiest' position," he qualified. "On the other hand, if you take the degree of difficulty in baseball, I would make pitching No. 10. Catching would be No. 9. The infield would be Nos. 3, 4, 5 and 6. Left field and right field would be 7 and 8."

Well, what would that leave as easier – bull pen catcher? Third base coach? "I'm not saying it isn't important," says Murphy, "just that it isn't difficult."

Ah, but home run hitting. That comes naturally, surely? Murphy shakes his head. "I didn't really start to hit home runs till I got to Atlanta. You know, the ball really pops out there. Yeah, I do think it's the altitude – 1,100 feet or so."

Well, are his home runs prodigious, then — tape-measure jobs? Murphy smiles. "No, I don't hit those home runs like (teammate Bob) Horner does. Mine just go over the fence, not over downtown."

How about his hitting? Murphy shrugs. "I've got a lot to learn. I learn something every day. Big league pitchers don't give you much." So, they fool him, do they? Murphy smiles. "Oh, my, yes. I already hold the all-time Atlanta strikeout record. I led the league twice. I've struck out 84 times this year."

Gordon Johncock after Indy car's triple crown

By MIKE HARRIS
AP Motorsports Writer

All sports tend to glorify their most prestigious events with special names.

Pro football's championship is the Super Bowl, baseball's is the World Series, pro golf has a Grand Slam of major championships and horse racing its Triple Crown.

Indy-car racing also has its Triple Crown, although the Indy-car's trio of 500-mile races still is not widely known outside of the circle of racing enthusiasts.

Gordon Johncock has a chance to change that this week at Pocono International Raceway.

Johncock, who already has captured the attention and admiration of many new racing fans by winning one of the most dramatic Indianapolis 500-mile races ever, then following it up with a triumph in the Michigan 500, can take the final jewel in Indy-car racing's Triple Crown Sunday in the Pocono 500.

The third, and last, of this year's 500-mile races actually completes a brand new series — one changed by the wrecking ball.

First there was the Indy 500, an institution in auto racing since 1911 and standing alone as a 500-mile Indy-car event until the Ontario Motor Speedway — built as a copy of the Indianapolis Motor Speedway — opened in 1970.

Pocono opened its gates in 1971, completing the first Triple Crown, a combination of grueling races on three demanding tracks.

That's the way it stayed until 1981, when the Ontario, Calif., track was sold and razed to make room for an industrial park. It was immediately replaced in the Triple Crown by a 500-mile event at Michigan International Speedway.

In the 10 years in which the Triple Crown was contested at Indianapolis, Pocono and Ontario, only Al Unser in 1978, while driving for Midland's Jim Hall, was able to capture all three races in the same year.

That was difficult enough, even with the Ontario track virtually identical to Indy's 2.5-mile, flat-ended oval. But now, with the newest 500-miler run on Michigan's high-banked two-mile oval and Pocono's 2.5-mile trioval still confounding mechanics and drivers with its three completely different turns, winning all three in the same year will be an even more difficult feat.

"Things have gone so well for us this year that I have to believe we can do it," said Johncock. "It would be a real honor to win the Triple Crown and I might be the only one with a chance at it for a long time.

Grid ticket sales for general public opens on Monday

Season tickets for Midland High and Midland Lee home football games will go on sale to the general public Monday. All tickets, including unrenewed options, will be sold on a first-come first-serve basis.

The price for the five MHS games will be $15.00. Lee also has five games for $15.00 but that price does not include the MHS contest since Lee is the visiting team for the second consecutive year. For Lee ticket buyers the MHS game will be an additional $4.00.

Tickets will be on sale from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. at the ticket office at the northeast corner of Midland Memorial Stadium. Deadline for option holders is Friday.

White flag has become sign for casualties to end

By RONN LEVINE
The Washington Post-Los Angeles Times News Service

WASHINGTON — Four months ago, the waving of a white flag in auto racing conjured up the image of one lap to go. Now, it would seem to be a plea for the casualties to end.

Four months ago, drivers such as Mario Andretti could talk about a relatively accident-free decade in their sport. But, says Andretti, "When everything is quiet, I get really nervous."

With good reason.

In the past three months, there have been six major accidents and four deaths in auto racing. Two weeks ago, Jim Hickman, Indianapolis 500 rookie of the year, was killed in an accident in Wisconsin. This past weekend, Didier Pironi, the leading Formula 1 driver this year, was involved in an accident during practice for the German Grand Prix that left his career in doubt.

The two major questions are why now and what now. Everyone seems to have different answers.

Roger McCluskey, a veteran of 19 Indianapolis 500s, says, "The machine is now ahead of the man."

Andretti says there are "limits to human reaction."

Former driver Wally Dallenbach, now chief steward for Championship Auto Racing Teams (CART), says it's "a dangerous sport and it will never change."

Rick Mears, who finished second in this year's Indianapolis 500, says, "The odds are that accidents are going to happen. People expect high speeds now and you can't go back. They would lose interest."

Auto racing's flair for the dramatic cannot be denied. Anyone who saw Mears duel Gordon Johncock down Indianapolis' final stretch will attest to that.

But, suddenly, it is a flair for the tragic that has put auto racing in the headlines. Most sports — save the major ones — set up promotions to attract attention; auto racing must now try to escape it.

Many in the sport say one way to do that is by limiting the speed at which a car enters a turn. Others say qualifying tires, used exclusively in Formula 1 racing, must be eliminated. Some say ground effect and qualifying and starting procedures have contributed to problems on the track. Each new accident brings new debate.

Nine years ago, Andretti qualified for the Indianapolis 500 at 195 mph. The day before, driver Art Pollard was killed in a qualifying attempt. Two weeks later, driver Swede Savage was killed in the race.

At the time, Andretti said: "At 150 miles an hour, we had maybe seven seconds to react to something. Now we have eight-tenths of a second. It could be critical soon."

Mears qualified for Indy at more than 207 mph this year.

"Soon" may be now.

No Dye for Crimson Tide?

Pat says his first and last job is at Auburn

AUBURN, Ala. (AP) — Pat Dye's first coaching job was at Alabama as an assistant under Bear Bryant. His final one, he says, is the one he holds now — head coach at Auburn in direct competition with the Bear and the Crimson Tide of Alabama.

At one time, Dye was rumored as a possible successor to Bryant, if and when the Bear packed it in. Two years ago, when Auburn was looking for a new coach, the grapevine said it would be Georgia's Vince Dooley, an Auburn alumnus, with Dye, a Georgia grad, taking over at his alma mater.

When Dooley was also given the athletic directorship, he decided to stay at Georgia. So Auburn went after Dye — who had a 54-23-1 head coaching record in six years at East Carolina and one at Wyoming — and gave him both jobs, as well.

As a result, everyone is happy.

"With my background, the best place for me is Auburn," Dye says. "I grew up on a farm in Georgia, I have a conservative background, and Auburn is a conservative school.

"Sure, I sometimes used to think about being head coach at Alabama. There's no question it's a great coaching job, but I certainly don't envy the guy who takes Coach Bryant's place. When I came to Auburn, the (Shug) Jordan era was over and no one compared me to Coach Jordan. And my goal is to be at Auburn until I retire or get out of coaching."

Dye's first campaign at Auburn produced a 5-6 mark, only his third losing season since he began playing football 29 years ago. With a solid defense and eight home games, including the first six, a winning record is a strong possibility for 1982.

Dye's background at Alabama — he was there from 1975-63 — rankles some rabid Auburn followers. But it won't make one iota of difference if Dye can produce winners with anything near the regularity that Bryant does.

"He and I have always been very close," Dye says, "and we've become much closer since I left Alabama because when I was there, he was the boss and I was an assistant and he maintained that position. Once I left Alabama we became closer friends.

"I talked to Coach Bryant before I had my interview at Auburn. He understands coaching and my ambitions as a college football coach. He knew that with my being at Auburn and him at Alabama, we'd be competitive against each other. Our relationship is such that I don't think he wanted to compete against me and I'm not in it to compete against Coach Bryant.

"But there's a lot to be learned from competing against him. I watch the things he does very closely — how he handles situations, players, coaching changes. I think Coach Bryant would be the first one to tell you he learned an awful lot from competing against great coaches.

"A great deal of what I learned at Alabama has rubbed off as far as organization, general preparation, all of that. At Alabama, I developed my philosophy as far as the importance of the kicking game and running the football. I've still got a lot of schemes we ran at Alabama. But I'm certainly not trying to use Coach Bryant's personality. I'm not smart enough to do that, or maybe I'm too dumb to try."

Dye has heard all the stale old "Aggie" jokes that Alabama fans love to tell at Auburn's expense. And from his years in Tuscaloosa, he knows the country-cousin feeling Alabama people have where Auburn is concerned.

He remembers "a certain amount of that when I was at Alabama. But that goes with individuals. Individuals create things that make a rivalry more intense.

"Alabama probably would like to feel that it's superior. But there was a time when Auburn had the same feeling about Alabama. In the years before Coach Bryant came back, Auburn dominated football in the state.

"Certainly the state university (Alabama) is a powerful institution. It has powerful alumni — doctors, lawyers, influential people in the community. But Auburn has a lot more doctors and lawyers than you'd think among its alumni. And Auburn has a larger enrollment than Alabama; it's the largest school in the state.

"I think there's a real difference in the situations because of people. Auburn had one great coach who built a tradition (Jordan). Alabama had Wallace Wade and Frank Thomas behind him. Coach Bryant is the third dominant figure in Alabama's football history, and that's where tradition comes from.

"By and large, there are more Alabama fans in the state, and naturally so because of what they've done. People enjoy following a winner. But we've got as good fans as there are in America as far as being loyal to Auburn. Alabama's got more of the people who had no loyalty to either school. That comes from winning and playing several games every year in Birmingham, the state's largest city."

If Dye has his way, the tide — you should pardon the expression — might be turning before too long.

Murphy gains respect in strike threat

CARLISLE, Pa. (AP) — Washington Redskins safety Mark Murphy, a member of the National Football League Players Association's negotiating team, has gained respect from both sides of the bargaining table.

"He is the only sincere guy on that side of the table," says Vince Lombardi Jr. of the NFL Management Council and the son of former Green Bay Packers Coach Vince Lombardi Sr.

"Mark is a reasonable man who understands and can communicate the issues," said NLFPA executive director Ed Garvey.

Murphy says he tries to stay in the middle, describing himself as a "moderate not in favor of adversary relationships."

"There is so much money involved both sides can come out ahead," Murphy said of the players' collective bargaining dispute with the league. "We must be cool, level-headed. There is never productive bargaining unless there is reason."

Labor negotiations and football come naturally to Murphy.

His father, Hugh Murhpy, was a tackle at St Bonaventure in the late 1940s and later served as director for labor relations for Robien Steel in Buffalo, N.Y. Today, the elder Murphy owns his own labor relations firm.

"I learned from Dad that you must work with a union, not against it. You must be open and expect trust to conduct successful negotiations," Murhpy said. "Unfortunately, there is no trust during these talks. That is the essence of the problem."

Earning a spot on the team, let alone being player representative, wasn't easy for Murphy.

A graduate of Cornell, he was passed over in the college drzft. The Redskins signed him as a free agent in 1977.

One of two rookies on the roster when the team broke summer camp that year, Murphy endeared himself to Coach George Allen by blocking a punt in his first game against Dallas in Texas Stadium, giving the Redskins the ball on the Cowboy 1-yard line.

Murphy became a starter in 1979 when the Redskins moved safety Jake Scott out of the lineup.

Since then, he has led the team in tackles each year, averaging 11 a game, intercepted 16 passes and recovered six fumbles.

Responsible for calling his team's defensive signals, he led the team last year in interceptions (seven) and fumble recoveries (three) and anchored a defensive secondary that held opponents to under 50 percent completion percentage.

His record aside, though, Murphy says being a player representative may jeopardize his future with the Redskins.

"In 1974 (the year of the last players' walkout), 20 player reps lost their jobs. It can happen to me. I can only hope they would take the position that I was elected to do a job and it is my responsibility," he said. "I wouldn't want to be traded. I would hate to leave."

If he is forced from the game, he said, "I think I am prepared to go into labor negotiations, and I could work on either side, for a union or management."

ABC, Turner go to court

ATLANTA (AP) — ABC and the owners of an Atlanta television station went to court here Wednesday in their effort to black out locally 19 college football games scheduled to be televised over cable this fall by Ted Turner's WTBS.

Also in jeopardy in the court case could be Turner's contract with the National Collegiate Athletic Association, the sanctioning body to whom Turner has agreed to pay $7,408,000 in 1982 and $10,288,000 in 1983 for the right to televise 19 games each season.

American Broadcasting Co., ABC-TV Sports and Cox Broadcasting Co., owner of ABC's Atlanta affiliate, WSB-TV, filed sujt July6 against the NCAA and Turner Broadcasting Co., which owns WTBS. The case is to be heard before Superior Court Judge Frank M. Eldridge.

The suit contends that in an ABC-NCAA agreement signed in July 1981, the NCAA was prohibited from granting others the right to live, free, on-the-air broadcasts of football games which the NCAA already had sold to ABC for more than $130 million.

Paterno to make drastic change in style

One of a Series
By RALPH BERNSTEIN
AP Sports Writer

Penn State Coach Joe Paterno says his 1982 squad is nowhere near as solid as last season's third-ranked team, and that he's making a drastic change in style to try to compete with the nation's best.

"We are going to have to be big-play oriented. I don't think we have the consistency to ram the ball down anybody's throat. We don't have the big fullback or the power blockers up front," Paterno said.

Paterno does say he has a "solid nucleus" with most of his skill people back: The quarterback, running backs, wide receivers and one tight end.

"My outlook for the season has to be described as cautious," he said. "There are a number of positions where we're going to just have to wait and see what develops."

PATERNO HAS 32 lettermen, including 11 starters returning from last year's 10-2 team that won the Fiesta Bowl against Southern California. His major problem, Paterno said, is rebuilding the offensive line.

"We lost so many good football players that I'm not sure how good we can be," said the coach. "We made progress in the spring, but I'm not sure how much."

Guards Sean Farrell and Mike Munchak were both taken on the first round of the National Football League draft. Penn State also lost center Jim Romano and tight end Vyto Kab. They, too, went to the NFL.

Paterno is counting upon senior tackles Bill Contz and Pete Spero to anchor his 1982 offensive line. Mark Battaglia starts at center, with Dick Maginnis and either senior Mike Dunlay or junior Scott Carraher at guards.

Paterno usually goes with an offense aimed at wearing teams down early and wiping them out in the fourth quarter with long drives.

"Now we're going to have to score with big plays," he said. "We have those kind of athletes. But I'm not comfortable with that kind of game. I'm going to have to find out if I can coach that style."

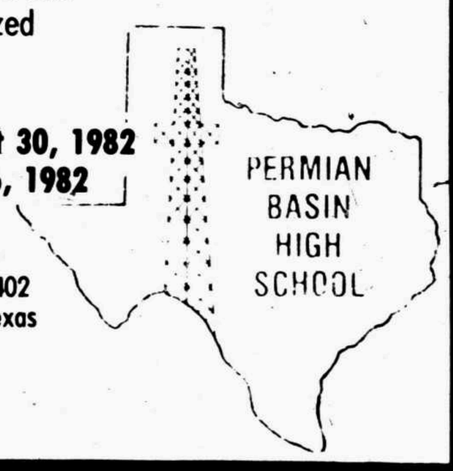

Paterno describes tailback Curt Warner as the best back he has had at Penn State. That includes Franco Harris, John Cappelletti, Lydell Mitchell and Lenny Moore.

The coach is going to try and get Warner (1,082 yards last year) and Jon Williams (607 yards) in the same backfield.

He's also high on quarterback Todd Blackledge, a junior, who was inconsistent as a sophomore but still completed 50.2 percent of his passes for 1,557 yards and 12 touchdowns. Blackledge is a fine long passer, but he has to work on the short patterns.

Ever wonder what goes on at press briefings?

WASHINGTON (AP) — It's August, it's Washington and even the White House is not immune from the sweaty tempers of summer. Take, for example, the regular mid-morning press briefing where a presidential pronouncement was called dribble, and necrophilia became a line of inquiry.

It got so bad Tuesday that deputy press secretary Larry Speakes, fencing with a roomful of querulous reporters, said, "I challenge any news organization here to reprint this briefing in full for their newspaper."

So here it is. Not the full course, just a small bite that captures the flavor.

First, there was the matter of the tax bill. Congressional leaders had been in to see President Reagan earlier and Speakes was eager to tell what the president said. Ever so slowly, he dictated a direct quote from Reagan forecasting lowered interest rates and deficit, increased employment and help for real estate and the auto and construction industries if the bill passes.

Reporter: "If you really want us to take this dribble down, you've got to go slower."

Speakes continued to read the long, involved quotation when reporter Sarah McClendon tried to interrupt. "I've got some more, Sarah," Speakes said and went on.

Miss McClendon, prominent for her fearless jousting with presidents at press conferences, tried again a moment later.

"Choke it down, Sarah; I've got a little bit more," said Speakes.

"What?" asked another reporter.

"She keeps bubbling up back there," the press secretary said.

Finally, Miss McClendon got her question in. How does the president know that passage of the tax hike means great things for the economy and the country?

"Can the president document this?" she asked. "Can you provide us with any proof that this would happen?"

Speakes: "Sarah, I'm not a prophet, nor is he."

When Miss McClendon persisted, Speakes said he'd be glad to provide information about supply-side economics.

"That label means nothing to anybody," said Miss McClendon. "Would you please give us the documentary proof that he has."

Speakes: "Look, Sarah. Look, look, look. I'm not the president. You can't sit here and badger me like you did him."

Other reporters jumped to her defense. "She has a right..." one began.

Speakes: "She has a right to the question and I have a right to refuse to answer the question. I didn't."

More argument. Speakes: "This is not a debating society. If you want the facts, I'll be glad to give them to you. If you want to debate, I'll bring on a debater."

A few minutes later, Speakes commented, "this is a foolish briefing."

It got worse.

Reporter Lester Kinsolving of the Globe Syndicate, citing a report that the State Department hires people regardless of sexual preference, wanted to know, "Does President Reagan believe that the United States should be represented overseas by all of the many kinds of announced sexual preferences or not?"

Speakes: "I haven't heard him advocate a quota system of sexual preferences for government employees."

Kinsolving: "I understand that. Does he believe that you should hire all kinds of sexual preferences? I mean, there is a wide variety."

Voice from the press corps: "How many kinds are there, Lester?"

Speakes: "Tell us about them Lester."

Kinsolving: "Well, there is necrophilia, bestiality, sodomy...I just want to know, where does the president stand on this?"

Voice from the press corps: "It was a dead classified document."

Another: "Let me ask about the necrophiliacs in Lagos."

Kinsolving: "What is the answer to this, Larry? What is the president's policy?"

Speakes: "I don't know the president's view on it."

And finally, the press secretary posed a question of his own:

"Is there a serious question anywhere here?" he asked plaintively.

Housing program wrinkles smoothed out

By LANA CUNNINGHAM
Staff Writer

Differences of opinion on who should handle various aspects of the housing rehabilitation program under the city's Community Development Block Grant funds were ironed out Tuesday afternoon during a monthly session of the Housing Authority.

Meeting in the City Hall conference room, CD Coordinator Susan Howell said 139 applications had been received. She and Fred Kester, secretary of the Housing Authority, had reviewed some of the applications and approved 29 — all of them elderly.

Horace Berry, inspector for the program, has looked at some of the houses, said Ms. Howell, but "there is a misunderstanding on when the Human Relations Council lets people know they are eligible for the program."

The program was set up with the HRC taking the applications and Ms. Howell and Kester reviewing them to determine which ones were eligible.

Gene Abbott, board chairman, said, "We need Berry's inspection first to see if we can bring it (the house) up to city code. When people apply, they must be told there will be an inspector to look at the house."

Berry, who has been able to inspect only six houses because the applicants aren't at home, said, "A few of the houses are pretty rough. I've decided we should fix them if we can because we're out trying to help them."

He cited the example of one house where if $40,000 was put into it, the house still wouldn't be in good condition. But the elderly woman who owns it needs the help, and Berry said that the $10,000 maximum would make the house livable.

Marion Clee, director of HRC, said she had received several calls from applicants wanting to know when they will be notified that they are eligible for the program.

Part of the conversation focused on whether Berry should make two inspections of the house — one to determine if it was eligible and the second to write up the list of repairs to be done. But he pointed out he has a difficult time getting people at home to let him inspect the houses. He favored one inspection, saying that he makes up a list of repair work at that time. If the house won't qualify under the program, he writes that on the work sheet, he said.

The Housing Authority board decided to go with the one inspection with the HRC to notify the persons after the inspection if the house qualified.

Berry also pointed out that firms wanting to do the repair work should contact him and he will include them on the list of bidders.

In other action, the board approved a maintenance contract with General Electric for 58 GE air conditioners at Hillcrest Manor, and adopted a procurement policy, standards of conduct and code of ethics for employees and members of the Housing Authority.

Judge: Attorney's complaints behind his quitting murder trial

HUNTSVILLE, Texas (AP) — A state district judge who stepped down from the trial of a convict charged with killing a prison warden says he did so because the defendant's attorney has complained about him to a judicial board.

State District Judge Wallace C. Moore said he did not want the dispute with state Rep. Craig Washington over an unrelated 1980 case to delay the second capital murder trial of Eroy Edward Brown.

Washington said he was happy with Moore's decision, adding, "I don't have any confidence with Judge Moore's ability to try the case."

State District Judge Darrell B. Hester of Brownsville has been named to hear the case of Brown, accused in the April 4, 1981, slaying of Ellis Unit Warden Wallace Pack.

Brown, 31, has claimed he killed Pack in self-defense and his first trial ended in a mistrial in March. The inmate also is charged with the shooting death of Ellis Farm Unit Manager Billy Max Moore.

These are not the best of times for the Mafia, as internal FBI documents indicate that 1982 will be a banner year for those waging war against members of the traditional syndicate families. Among those indicted on major federal crimes or convicted in the past 18 months are Santo Trafficante Jr., right, Florida's "Boss of Bosses," indicted in a labor union kickback scheme; Carlos Marcello, center, boss of the New Orleans family, convicted in the Brilab scandal; and "Little Nicky" Scarfo, left, Philadelphia's new chieftain. A Senate subcommittee has been investigating Scarfo's role in the Hotel Employees International Union in Atlantic City, N.J.

FBI's war against Mafia nets record number arrests

By RICHARD T. PIENCIAK

NEW YORK (AP) — The mob is under the gun. Mafia dons are being sent to jail in record numbers, while syndicate underlings are killing each other in unrelenting warfare over the criminal spoils of Atlantic City casinos.

Now, a trusted compadre of the Bonanno crime family has unmasked himself in court as an undercover FBI agent, recounting conversations about mob rubouts, family rivalries and other goings-on during his five-year assignment.

Agent Joseph D. Pistone's disclosures last week came just days after two gunmen tried to kill the son of a slain crime boss in Philadelphia, where nearly 20 mob figures have been assassinated since 1980.

Prosecutors say Pistone's put-on was the FBI's deepest infiltration of La Cosa Nostra to date, and before a gag order was issued, FBI officials said it reflected the bureau's dedication to putting unrelentingly pressure on the kingpins of organized crime.

INTERNAL FBI documents show 1982 will be a banner year in the agency's war against the nation's 25 traditional syndicate families and their estimated 2,000 "made members."

One hundred and sixty-five mob members or their close associates were convicted in the first six months of fiscal 1982 of crimes including labor racketeering, corruption, infiltration of legitimate businesses, loansharking, arson, narcotics and murder, according to the FBI documents. That compared with 82 convictions in all fiscal 1981.

An internal FBI report states that as a result of recent efforts, "the majority of the 'bosses' and hierarchy of the major organized crime families across the United States were indicted and-or convicted."

Among those convicted were the reputed crime bosses for Cleveland, Kansas City, Milwaukee, New Orleans, Florida, New England, northeastern Pennsylvania, and two of the five family leaders in New York City.

"We're continuing to direct our efforts on the people who are in control," FBI Deputy Assistant Director Floyd Clarke said in an interview. "We're very satisified with the progress that we're making, but we still have an awful lot of work ahead of us."

> "We would not only be impacting the organized crime problem by prosecution but also by directing our efforts to identify the assets that are derived from that enterprise, and seizing them."

AS PART of its expanded attack, Clarke said the bureau plans to make wider use of civil forfeiture provisions of the racketeering statutes, which permit the government to seize property gained as a result of illegal activity.

"We would not only be impacting the organized crime problem by prosecution but also by directing our efforts to identify the assets that are derived from that enterprise, and seizing them," said Clarke, who heads the FBI's organized crime program.

While not claiming the agency has crushed the mob, Clarke added wryly that the hoodlums "are aware of our investigative interests."

Clarke said bosses indicted or convicted since last year include:

— Carlos Marcello, of the New Orleans family, convicted in the Brilab scandal and of conspiracy to bribe a federal judge.

— SANTO Trafficante Jr., Florida's "boss of bosses," indicted in a labor union kickback scheme.

— Raymond L.S. Patriarca, of the New England mob, still fighting on health reasons a labor racketeering charge in the Trafficante case and allegations in Rhode Island and Massachusetts that he ordered rivals killed.

— Russell Bufalino, of the northeastern Pennsylvania mob, convicted of civil rights violations and of influencing a federal witness.

— Nick Civella, of Kansas City, indicted separately on bribery charges, then with the entire local hierarchy following a five-year casino skimming probe in Las Vegas, Chicago and Kansas City.

— Alphonse Persico, of the New York Colombo family, convicted of extortion.

— FRANK "Funzi" Tieri, of the New York Genovese crime family, convicted of racketeering before dying of natural causes.

— Frank P. Balistrieri, of Milwaukee, his two sons, and local underboss Steve Di Salvo, indicted on racketeering, fraud and gambling in a plot to extort from a vending machine business.

— James "Jack White" Licavoli, of the Cleveland family, his capo, Anthony Liberatore, and four others convicted of racketeering for a series of crimes including the bombing death of a rival.

The latest prosecution involves five members of the Bonanno family, who are charged in a racketeering conspiracy that included the assassination of three mob rivals.

Courtroom replays of secret wiretaps and Pistone's chilling testimony have provided behind-the-scenes details of how the mob operates, including a Mafia family tree, plans to bug a fellow hood's phone as well as discussions about the slayings.

FOR EXAMPLE, Pistone recalled defendant Nicholas Santora's graphic description of the murder of Dominick "Big Trin" Trinchera, one of three Bonanno captains who disappeared in May 1981: "Nicky said, 'You should have seen when they shot him — 50 pounds of his stomach went flying.'"

A secret, internal FBI document says Pistone's ability to get as close as he did to "high ranking members of La Cosa Nostra" has "resulted in severe embarrassment to some, if not all 'bosses' and 'members' of the mob."

But recently the mob has had to endure other embarrassing troubles.

Nearly 20 organized crime figures have been killed in the Philadelphia mob's gang war over Atlantic City since boss Angelo Bruno was shotgunned outside his home March 21, 1980.

At least 20 other underworld figures have been murdered in New Jersey, New York and other surrounding states, according to the FBI.

Last week two reputed mobsters were accused of attempting to kill Salvatore Testa, the son of Bruno's since-slain successor. Young Testa was hit eight times with shotgun fire, while hanging out in South Philadelphia's Italian Market.

THE TWO were released after posting 10 percent of their $50,000 bail, then failed to appear for a hearing on a request to raise their bail to $10 million each. They reappeared Friday, surrendering at a hotel.

Testa remains hospitalized but is expected to recover. His father, Philip "Chicken Man" Testa, died March 15, 1981, when a nail-filled bomb blasted a 30-inch hole in his home's concrete porch as he grabbed for the front door.

Meanwhile, a Senate subcommittee has been holding hearings in Washington on mob-influenced labor unions. It has turned up an allegation from Charles Allen, an admitted underworld enforcer, that organized crime, notably new Philadelphia chieftain Nicodemo "Little Nicky" Scarfo, controls the Hotel Employees and Restaurant Employees International Union in Atlantic City.

The New Jersey division of gaming enforcement has been trying to prevent the union from representing the 8,000 waiters, waitresses, maids, kitchen help and bartenders who work in the city's casino hotels because of Scarfo's purported control.

A federal grand jury in Camden, N.J., is probing the union's local too.

SCARFO — who rose from head of the mob's Atlantic City chapter to the job once held by Bruno, then Testa — took the Fifth Amendment against self-incrimination 26 times before the Senate's Permament Subcommittee on Investigations.

Federal authorities claim to have deciphered a coded list in Scarfo's handwriting that details his connections to members of the Bruno, Genovese, Colombo and Gambino crime families in New York, New Jersey and Pennsylvania. The FBI says it has photos of Scarfo meeting in Philadelphia with other major organized crime figures of the Northeast before and after both the Bruno and Testa slayings.

The subject of Bruno's death and Atlantic City was raised at the trial last week when Pistone recalled that defendant Benjamin "Lefty" Ruggiero had once told him Bruno was killed because "he wanted to keep all of Atlantic City to himself and didn't want to share it with anyone."

Indictments like list of mob's Who's Who

By The Associated Press

The FBI's list of indictments and convictions of reputed Mafia figures during the past year is a virtual Who's Who of the American mob:

— Carlos Marcello, boss of the New Orleans family, was convicted in the Brilab insurance scandal, then found guilty in a California case involving a conspiracy to bribe a federal judge.

— Santo Trafficante Jr., Florida's "boss of bosses," is awaiting trial on charges he participated in a trust fund kickback scheme involving the Laborers International Union of North America.

— Raymond L.S. Patriarca, head of the New England mob, says he's sick and so far has successfully avoided standing trial on a labor racketeering charge stemming from the Trafficante case. Patriarca also faces two state allegations that he ordered rivals killed in Rhode Island and Massachusetts.

— Russell Bufalino, chieftain of the northeastern Pennsylvania mob, was convicted of civil rights violations and of influencing a federal witness.

— Nick Civella, head of the mob's Kansas City chapter, was charged with the entire local hierarchy following a five-year casino skimming investigation in Las Vegas, Chicago and Kansas City. Civella had already been convicted on a separate charge of bribing a public official.

— Alphonse Persico, of the New York Colombo family, was convicted of extortion. His acting successor, Carmine "The Snake" Persico, was convicted of parole violations.

— Frank "Funzi" Tieri, of the New York Genovese crime family, was convicted of racketeering, sentenced to 20 years, then died of natural causes.

— Frank P. Balistrieri, of Milwaukee, his two sons, and local underboss Steve Di Salvo, were indicted on racketeering, fraud and gambling in a plot to extort from a vending machine business.

— James "Jack White" Licavoli, of the Cleveland family, his captain, Anthony Liberatore, and four others were convicted of racketeering in a series of crimes including the bombing death of a rival and extortion.

— Robert DiBernardo, reputed member of the Gambino family, was sentenced in December to five years in prison as part of the FBI's Miporn probe of transportation of obscene films run out of Miami. Miporn netted 44 arrests, several with alleged Mafia ties.

— In Los Angeles, top family member Sam Sciortino and Kansas City colleague Phil Rizzuto were convicted along with New Orleans' Marcello in the judge bribery case.

— John Russo, a Genovese family member, was convicted of extortion.

— Raymond Martorano, a capo in Philadelphia's old Bruno family, was convicted on federal narcotics violations.

Also, 10 reputed associates of the Philadelphia mob have been convicted on racketeering charges stemming from gambling and loansharking enterprises while 40, including several of those charged in the gambling indictment, have been indicted on charges stemming from a joint FBI-Drug Enforcement Administration narcotics racketeering investigation.

MOST UNFORGETTABLE CHARACTER

McCormick loved by legislators

By The Hon. Thomas P. O'Neill, Jr.,
Speaker of the House,
as told to Mary McSherry
Special from Reader's Digest

On Thanksgiving Day, 1980, newspapers all over America praised John W. McCormack, my friend of more than 30 years. John had just died, at age 88, and editors were trying to sum him up in lists of accomplishments: Democratic Congressman from Massachusetts for 42 years, Majority Leader for 16, Speaker of the House for 9, and a moving force behind Medicare, the Civil Rights Act, the space program, the anti-poverty program.

John McCormack wasn't just a big chapter of American history. That tall spare man with the shock of white hair, the perennial dark suit, white shirt and old-fashioned rimless glasses, was the kindest, fairest, most compassionate man I ever met. It has been said that some Speakers got legislation through the House because members feared them. John McCormack got legislation through — like the 1964 civil-rights bill — because they loved him.

He took the term "public servant" literally, but this did not mean that anyone pushed him around. I heard him silence a critic once with, "I try always to be kind. But do not mistake kindness for weakness."

I remember the Poor People's March on Washington in 1968.

The Rev. Ralph Abernathy and about 50 marchers came to John's office. He listened intently, then suddenly said, "You're talking down your noses at me. Let me tell you: I was poor when poor was poor." He told them what his young years had been like in Boston, when there was no public assistance or free medical care. When he finished, Abernathy said John was right — they had been talking down at him. They were good friends after that.

John always fought fair. "We can disagree," he liked to say, "without being disagreeable."

This was a side of him that made a difference in my life. In 1948, John was House Majority Leader with 20 years' service as a Congressman. As Roosevelt's right-hand man, he had almost single-handedly pushed through the pre-Pearl Harbor Selective Service Act that was credited with saving America's defense. I was minority leader in the Massachusetts legislature and had joined some other young mavericks to oppose delegates that John favored for the Democratic convention. To nobody's surprise but our own, we lost.

Many important older men might have squelched me then and there. Instead, John complimented me on a good fight. He offered to help get more Democrats elected to the state legislature so that I could have a chance of being speaker of the Massachusetts House. And he was as good as his word.

John's championship of the underdog is legendary, and it derived from his own boyhood. He was born in 1891 near Andrew Square in South Boston. "We paid $1.25 a week for rent," he used to reminisce. "We couldn't afford a dollar and a half, and we couldn't find anything for a dollar." When John was 13, his father died. He quit school and got a $3-a-week job as a paperboy to support his mother and two younger brothers. Later, he brought in $3.50 as delivery boy. Then a lawyer offered to hire him as office boy at $4.

You could become an attorney then without going to law school, and John's boss let him use the books in the office for his studies. At 21, he passed the bar examination — the youngest lawyer in Massachusetts.

John's life with his wife, Harriette, is testimony to his unwavering quality. Not blessed with children, they were no less of a family for being only two. It is legend in Washington that they never once missed having dinner together.

Harriette became ill in 1970 and John, at 79, was getting up several times a night. He was losing weight, looking terrible. He had been like a father to me, and I felt I had to say something.

"Mr. Speaker," I told him, "you're killing yourself. You should put Harriette in a nursing home so..."

He stopped me cold. "You're talking about my wife. I'll never do that. As well as we know each other, Tom, don't ever mention it again."

Eventually John saw that he couldn't take care of Harriette and do his job, so he announced he would not run for re-election. He was going to retire. He moved Harriette to Providence Hospital in Washington, had a door cut through to the room adjoining hers, and lived there for the final year of her life.

After Harriette's death in 1971, John once more played a part in politics, but wearing only what he called "the highest temporal title this world can bestow: Citizen of the United States." Every weekday for nine years, you could find him at his office in the Boston post-office building named after him. Former constituents, prelates of the church, reporters, political hopefuls, foreign visitors — they all sought his counsel and help. He gave it, as always, with wisdom and kindness and courtesy.

"Don't ever say things aren't as good as they used to be," he admonished. "Don't say the young don't have the quality they used to have. Old fogeys have been saying that forever — and they were always wrong."

Dead soldiers' families wonder if war worth it

By MARCUS ELIASON

AP News Special

JERUSALEM (AP) — Yuval Harel loved rock — the Eagles, Moody Blues, Deep Purple.

"They really got him going," says his father.

But the curly-haired 19-year-old's dream of pioneering musical videodiscs died with him in the flames of his tank in a Palestinian refugee camp on the third day of Israel's invasion of Lebanon.

The Gai family of Kibbutz Nir Banim lost their son Erez. They phoned their friends Bob and Shelley Wolf in Hollywood Beach, Fla., whose son Zvi lived at Nir Banim and was fighting in the war.

Zvi is fine, the Gais told the Wolfs. A few days later Zvi was killed, too.

More than 320 Israeli soldiers have died in this war. Their black-bordered death notices fill newspaper pages, and their names are read in somber tones on radio and television. Uniformed men go from door to door delivering the news.

They came to the Harel apartment in Jerusalem on Friday, June 11 at 6:10 a.m.

Yuval's father, Yehezkel, answered the ring. He knew the moment he saw the uniforms. His anguished "No" boomed through the stairwell. One of the uniformed men nodded. Neither said a word.

But fate toyed cruelly with the Harels, for another Yuval Harel from Jerusalem had been killed in a tank on the same day. Each family hoped the dead soldier was the other's son. After two days, they learned that both Yuval Harels were dead.

Yehezkel's wife Miriam recalls that her Yuval studied the violin for nine years. He got hooked on rock in Philadelphia, where his father worked with the Jewish community from 1977 to 1980.

The family moved back to Israel so the son could do his three-year army stint. Yuval carried a big tape recorder wherever he went, even to his army base.

The Harels are typical Israelis — raised on a kibbutz and taught the old Zionist socialist ethic of helping others. Yehezkel oversees Jewish Agency programs for Jews abroad. Miriam is a teacher. Yuval for three years was a companion to a child paralyzed by muscular disease. There are also two daughters, younger than Yuval.

Their grief is compounded by doubts about whether the war in Lebanon was justified, and about the military strategy that led to so many deaths.

The Harels visited the Ein Hilwa refugee camp several weeks after Yuval died there in one of the first tanks that tried to pierce heavily defended guerrilla positions.

Yehezkel was stunned by the devastation. The hundreds of homeless Palestinian children depressed him. So did the explanations he got of how the battle was fought.

He believes the army underestimated its enemy.

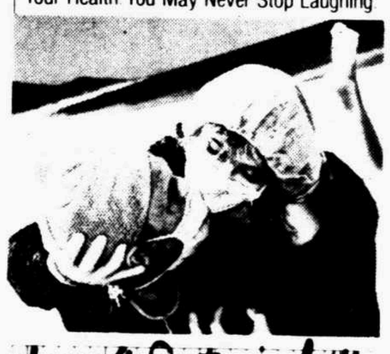

"They thought that one armored column would make the terrorists surrender," he said. "They didn't want to bomb the place, but when they saw no other way they bombed.

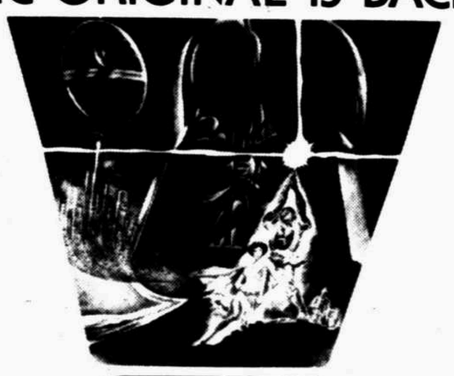

"They wanted to be humane, and in the end it was inhumane, and in between Yuval got killed."

"It is a terrible injustice to take away a son," said Miriam angrily.

Yehezkel said he is reserving judgment. If the war destroys the PLO and brings about peace with Lebanon, "that will be some consolation. If it doesn't, our tragedy will be doubled because the sacrifice will have been in vain.

This is the nation's weather outlook over the next month, according to the National Weather Service.

Students graduate by tending farm

By ELISSA McCRARY

SWANNANOA, N.C. (AP) — For Debbie Paton of Philadelphia, going to college means getting up with the sun to slop the hogs or carry hay to the cattle.

Ms. Paton is one of 40 students in charge of farm chores at Warren Wilson College, where a 1,000-acre farm is part of the campus. Between classes, students plow fields, raise vegetables and care for livestock.

At Warren Wilson, every body works to pay for room and board. No matter how rich the student, 15 hours of work every week is the only payment accepted for living expenses.

"The work program is the reason I came here," said Ms. Paton, 22, a senior history major. "It not only helps with costs, it makes you a more responsible person. It prepares you for life."

Warren Wilson, located in the Blue Ridge Mountains near Asheville, was founded in 1894 as the Asheville Farm School for mountain boys. The school became a four-year, coeducational college in 1942. It is a private school affiliated with the Presbyterian Church.

The school is small, with 525 students from 30 states and 25 foreign countries. Tuition is about $3,500 a year although the work program reduces total costs to about half that of the average private four-year college.

Work mixed with academics has been a tradition at Warren Wilson since its farm-school days. The college uses student labor exclusively for chores ranging from keeping up the grounds to typing letters and washing dishes in the dining hall.

Students are also in charge of the campus power supply. Warren Wilson buys raw power and distributes it through a transformer station on campus. A crew of student electricians operates the substation and maintains electrical lines.

In all, there are 70 work crews with 12 professional supervisors — so many that the school appointed a dean of work three years ago.

"Work is the name of the game here," said Reuben A. Holden, college president and a former Yale University administrator. "We mix a strong academic program with a strong work program, and we like to think it teaches the students to budget their time."

Holden lives in a house built by students more than 30 years ago.

While all types of labor are vital to the operation of the campus, the farm is the still the mainstay of the work program. The farm crew is also the most popular among entering students, who fill out a form specifying what type of work they would like to do.

The 40-member farm crew is divided into specialties, according to Ernst Laursen, farm supervisor who came to the school as an infant with his parents. His father preceded him as farm supervisor.

"We have four girls who take care of the cattle and another group of girls who take care of the pigs," Laursen said. "This is a seven-day-a-week job, with feeding, doctoring, testing and record-keeping. Taking care of the livestock is a big responsibility but it never gets slurked.

"A lot of these kids had never really worked until they came here," he added. "But once they get here and find out what it's all about, they take to it. You can trust 'em with anything."

The farm has 100 beef cattle and 35 sows. The cattle and pigs are sold to livestock dealers.

Some members of the farm crew, like freshman Ruth Roberts, never know what their day's farm chore will be. They do what needs to be done.

"Some days I come in and I'm told to grind feed or do repair work on the buildings," said Ms. Roberts, of Louisville, Ky., stacking lumber in a shed. "Or I may work at the sawmill or put up fence posts."

Spring is a busy time for the farm workers, when fields have to be plowed and vegetable crops must be planted. Most of the vegetables — lettuce, tomatoes, okra and corn — end up on Warren Wilson's dining hall tables.

When students finish their tasks on campus, they still have one more work requirement to fill before they can graduate. Students must contribute 60 hours of community service, either on campus, in the area or in the student's home community.

"What we do at Warren Wilson sometimes isn't very efficient because we have students who have never done a type of work before," Holden said. "But we feel that what the students get out of their work and study experience with us is invaluable. It teaches them the responsibility and satisfaction that comes from a job well done."

AGRICULTURE

Cattle inventory decreased from last year

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Agriculture Department says the nation's cattle inventory has "apparently ceased" to expand, blaming weather and a financial crunch which forced many farmers and ranchers to sell livestock to pay bills.

"A harsh winter, financial difficulties and poor forage conditions through late winter in the Southeast contributed to a 1 percent decline in the inventory, compared with a year earlier," the department's Economic Research Service said Tuesday.

Only six months earlier it appeared the expansion stage of the cattle cycle might continue for a while longer. On Jan. 1, the inventory was up 1 percent from a year earlier.

But the mid-year inventory, which was issued on July 26, showed a total of 123.7 million cattle, compared to 124.8 million and 122.8 million, respectively, in 1981 and 1980.

"Total cow numbers declined 3 percent," the latest analysis said. "The beef cow inventory dropped 4 percent while dairy cow numbers rose 1 percent. Replacement heifers followed a similar pattern, with the number of beef replacements declining 2 percent and dairy replacements rising 3 percent."

Moreover, the report noted, this year's calf crop is estimated at 43.6 million head, down 1.1 million from 1981.

Further, cow slaughter in the first half of 1982 was up 11 percent from the year-earlier level, the report said.

"The reduced cow herd and smaller calf crop may be indicative of a larger number of cows and heifers sold because of reduced calving rates, and cows sold to generate improved cash flow and to augment non-livestock sources of income in areas with mixed crop-livestock enterprises," it said.

Ironically, the report noted that cattle and hog feeding operations "saw sustainable profits during late winter and early spring" for the first time since mid-1979.

"Production cutbacks of 9 percent for pork and 2 percent for beef in first half 1982 resulted in higher livestock prices, contributing to greater profits," officials said.

Total red meat and poultry supplies are expected to remain below year-earlier levels through the first half of 1983.

"Pork production will continue below a year earlier for the remainder of 1982 because of a smaller pig crop in the first half of the year," the report said.

"Despite sizably profits in recent months, pork producers apparently haven't started to expand because they may be trying to improve their cash flow and pay off debts."

Market price forecast figures were mostly unchanged from earlier projections, with slaughter hogs expected to average $56 to $60 per hundredweight through next winter.

"Choice fed steer prices may average near $70 per hundredweight this fall and winter, after averaging $65 to $67 this summer," the report said.

Congress will be asked for legislation giving the Agriculture Department authority to sell "carefully selected" tracts of public land now held by the Forest Service.

Agriculture Secretary John R. Block said Tuesday that only about 60,000 acres of the agency's 191 million acres qualify for sale under existing authority. The expansion will be sought as part of the department's 1983 legislative program.

The Forest Service's land will be placed in one of three categories as part of the administration's federal assets management program aimed at selling off excess federal property.

Categories will include: Land to be retained under federal ownership, lands meeting criteria for sale, and lands requiring further study before deciding whether to retain or sell them.

The first category initially consists of about 34 million acres which will be retained as public property.

Soybean loan rate same

WASHINGTON (AP) — The soybean price support loan rate for 1982-crop soybeans will be $5.02 per bushel, unchanged from last year and the lowest permitted by law, says the Agriculture Department.

Officials said the 1982 rate is preliminary, however, and that a final determination will be announced no later than Oct. 1.

The support rate is the level at which producers can obtain federal loans by using their crop as collateral.

Soybean market prices at the farm, comparatively, averaged $6.05 per bushel in mid-July according to preliminary figures issued by the department.

Everett Rank, administrator of the Agricultural Stabilization and Conservation Service, said the soybean loan rate is prescribed by law at 75 percent of the average price received by farmers during the past five years, excluding the highest and lowest years.

The law also requires the agency to issue a preliminary loan and purchase rate for new-crop soybeans no earlier than 30 days before Sept. 1, the beginning of the soybean marketing year.

Rank said all 1982 soybean producers will be eligible for the supports since they are not being required to participate in production adjustment programs as a condition of eligibility.

DR. NEIL SOLOMON

Aspirin, Reyes syndrome in kids possibly connected

Dear Dr. Solomon: One of my children had a little fever recently and the doctor said she had the flu. Usually I would have given her some aspirin, but the doctor said I'd better not. Isn't aspirin recommended for fever in children any more? — Mrs. K.F., Louisville, Ky.

Dear Mrs. F.: There has been some suggestion that the use of aspirin in children with chickenpox or influenza may be associated with the development of Reye's syndrome. The American Academy of Pediatricians is therefore advising physicians to be cautious in treating fever in these children. If the fever has to be treated, the Academy recommends that a product other than aspirin be used.

I should emphasize that the question of an association between Reye's syndrome and aspirin is still a controversial one, and that not all doctors are in agreement that such an association in fact exists.

Dear Dr. Solomon: Is there any reason why a woman who has ulcerative colitis should not become pregnant? What I mean is whether the baby will be affected. — Mrs. A.S., York, Pa.

Dear Mrs. S.: According to a study by Dr. N. Levy, of the Rothschild University Hospital in Haifa, Israel, ulcerative colitis in a woman does not affect her pregnancy. Moreover, the pregnancy does not appear to have an adverse effect on the ulcerative colitis.

All 51 children born to mothers with ulcerative colitis who were studied were normal at birth and developed normally. The ulcerative colitis improved in 12 of the women during their pregnancies, worsened in 11, and remained the same in 37.

Dear Dr. Solomon: Both my parents are on medication for high blood pressure. Although they go to different doctors, both my mother and father were started on a water pill. Why don't doctors treat people with the real high blood pressure drugs instead of piddling around with these water pills? — Jack, Portland, Maine

Dear Jack: Why use a big gun when it is not necessary? Diuretics are effective, inexpensive and have relatively few side effects. If other drugs are needed, they can always be added later; but if the diuretic does the job, why bother with a more powerful drug?

Many of my patients are able to keep their blood pressure under control with the use of diuretics, and are thus able to avoid the potential side effects of the more potent agents.

Dear Dr. Solomon: Would a drink at night before I go to bed help me sleep better? — Gus, Omaha, Neb.

Dear Gus: There is some indication that consuming alcohol before going to bed may disturb an individual's breathing patterns. A study involving 20 healthy volunteers that was carried out at the University of South Florida in Gainesville showed a significant increase in the number of apneic events — that is, cessation of breathing for at least 10 seconds — when they were given alcohol before sleep.

If you are having a problem sleeping, it is important that the underlying cause be determined. Instead of trying to treat yourself, why not check with your physician? I have been successful in helping some of my patients get a better night's sleep through a simple change in their diets.

Dear Dr. Solomon: A college classmate of mine was hospitalized over the weekend after going on a diet where she ate practically nothing. I should add that she was not under a doctor's supervision. But if dieting is so dangerous, wouldn't she have been better off keeping the extra weight and staying out of the hospital? — Diane, Casper, Wyo.

Dear Diane: You overlook the fact that obesity itself poses a threat to health. The question then becomes: What is the risk to the patient of remaining obese versus the risk and benefits of undertaking a program of weight reduction?

You note that your classmate was engaged in what appears to have been an extreme do-it-yourself diet, without medical supervision; this is never a good idea. But no procedure — whether dieting, fasting, drug therapy or surgery — can be said to be completely risk-free. However, where the obesity poses a serious risk, some risk in treating the patient appears warranted.

Dear Dr. Solomon: I need to lose some weight, but I don't know where to begin. I don't want to go on a diet if I have to count calories. Do you have any suggestions? — Sandy, La Grande, Oregon

Dear Sandy: For many of us, it is not so much the quantity of food we eat, but how we prepare it that adds pounds. Baking or broiling fish, chicken, and meat instead of frying reduces calories while not reducing the amount of food. Limit your use of creams, sauces and gravies. Try steaming your green vegetables instead of boiling them and adding marjarine; besides tasting delicious, they will retain more vitamins. Instead of potato chips, french fries or even mashed potatoes, eat a baked potato with dinner. Have a salad with oil and vinegar instead of a sour cream dressing. Skip the cake for dessert; substitute a baked apple instead.

A good way to begin any diet is to eat wholesome, nutritious foods from all of the food groups: milk, vegetables, fruits, breads, fats and meat, chicken, or fish.

For Ms. D.A. (Detroit): Vitamins are a group of complex substances (other than proteins, fats, minerals, and carbohydrates) that are necessary in small amounts for normal metabolism, growth and development. The fat-soluble vitamins are A,D,E and K; the water-soluble ones are vitamin C (ascorbic acid) and the B vitamins (thiamin, riboflavin, niacin, B-6, B-12, folacin, pantothenic acid and biotin).

For B.P. (San Louis): My stop-smoking treatment only takes one day. Over 50 percent of the patients who received my stop-smoking treatment and completed and returned my questionnaire have stopped smoking and have been cigarette-free for at least three years. My special diet that cleanses your body of nicotine and instruction in behavioral modification are also important aspects of the program.

(If you have a medical question, write to Neil Solomon, M.D., 1726 Reisterstown Road, Baltimore, Md. 21208. Dr Solomon cannot give personal replies but will answer as many qustions as possible in his column.)

Wendy wants her toy

CARMEL, Ind. (AP) — Nine-year-old Wendy Potasnik takes her Cracker Jack so seriously that she's suing the manufacturer for allegedly forgetting to put a prize inside her box of candy-coated popcorn and peanuts.

She filed suit in the small claims division of Hamilton County Court on Friday, asking that the Cracker Jack Divison of Borden, Inc. be made to pay court costs and furnish a toy.

"They advertise a free toy in each box. However, there was none in mine. I feel since I bought their product because of their claim, they broke a contract with me," Wendy wrote in her complaint.

"I was really mad when it happened but I was a little nervous when I went to court," said the brown-haired girl, who enters the fourth grade this fall.

"It's not my favorite candy, but sometimes I eat it. I've always gotten a toy before," she said.

A hearing in the case has been scheduled for Aug. 30.

Wendy says she will call her father and her 6-year-old sister, Robin, as witnesses.

Telephone calls Monday night to Borden Inc. corporate offices in Columbus, Ohio, and New York were not answered. The home number for Maurice O'Reilly, a company spokesman, was disconnected, according to a telephone company recording. No new telephone number was listed.

Rose Potasnik said that when she bought both her daughters boxes of Cracker Jack last month, Robin got a toy, but Wendy didn't. "At the time it was very upsetting to her," Mrs. Potasnik said. "She was so sad-faced."

Wendy's father, Alan J. Potasnik, said he urged his daughter to sue several weeks after she mailed a complaint to the manufacturer and received no reply.

"One night Wendy was asking me what a lawyer does. I had a hard time explaining it," Potasnik, who is not a lawyer, said. "So when this came up I said, 'Let's go to court and file suit.'

"I took her to the courthouse Friday and had her pick up the forms, fill them out and gave her a tour of the room where the trial might be held," he said.

Employees in the county clerk's office said the youngster could barely see over the counter when she filed the documents.

"She's to the point now where she's pretty interested in how the system works," Potasnik said. "It's a little course in the jurisprudence system."

Wendy said she hopes "next time they'll have toys in the Cracker Jacks." In the meantime, she's sticking to her guns.

"I'm not buying any more until this is settled," she said.

'New' GI bill having its troubles getting through Congress

Copley News Service

WASHINGTON — Almost exactly two years ago, candidate Ronald Reagan told a major veterans group that the nation needed a new GI Bill to attract more and higher quality recruits into the armed services.

He was to repeat that statement later in his campaign and again after becoming president.

Rep. G.V. "Sonny" Montgomery, D-Miss., the new chairman of the House Veterans Affairs Committee, said he took the president at his word and early last year introduced a bill that would establish the same kind of college education assistance for future veterans that was enjoyed by three previous generations of service personnel.

"This is his bill," Montgomery said.

BUT THE WHITE House press office says Mr. Reagan now considers a new GI Bill "too costly" and "neither necessary nor desirable." His opposition is expected to stall the push by Montgomery and others in the House to enact a new package of education benefits for veterans.

Montgomery and his allies, including Rep. Bill Nichols, D-Ala., chairman of the Personnel and Compensation subcommittee of the House Armed Services Committee, and Rep. Duncan Hunter, R-Calif., have vowed to push the GI Bill legislation through the House within the next two weeks. But because of the president's opposition, the Senate Veterans' Affairs Committee chairman, Sen. Alan K. Simpson, R-Wyo., has decided that no such legislation will pass his committee this session.

The enthusiasm for a new GI Bill was chilled by the military's success in meeting all recent recruitment quotas, by the Reagan administration's efforts to curb government spending and by tne reluctance of the military chiefs to divert money from a massive weapons procurement drive into a program they think might actually hurt efforts to retain high quality personnel.

Two years ago, however, the momentum behind a new GI Bill was tremendous as history, political tides and national security needs all were working in its favor. History and nostalgia still are on the side of Montgomery and his allies, but most of the other factors have changed.

The first GI Bill was enacted during the heights of World War II as a way to help veterans readjust to civilian life after the war and to reward them for their service to the nation. It allowed millions of returning servicemen to move from the blue-collar jobs that otherwise would have been their fate into business and the professions. It provided a vast leap in America's educational level and helped spark an economic and technological boom that repaid the taxpayers' investment many times over.

SIMILAR PROGRAMS were enacted for the Korean War and Vietnam War veterans, with the latter program still operating on an extension.

The 18 million veterans who have benefited from the other GI Bills created a massive lobby for the new measure, particularly since many members of Congress were among those beneficiaries.

Montgomery recalled that one of his colleagues noted during a discussion of his bill that "if it weren't for the GI Bill, I'd be down there selling used cars for my daddy."

A new package of educational benefits also was supported by the heads of the armed services, who were complaining that they were not able to enlist enough recruits with the educational skills necessary to handle increasingly complex weapons systems.

And candidate Reagan, rolling toward his victory over then-President Jimmy Carter, told the American Legion convention in Boston: "We should take immediate steps to restore the GI Bill, one of the most effective, equitable and socially important programs ever devised."

"He told me that several times since he's been president," Montgomery said in an interview. "So I took his advice, introduced a good bill. But I'm not getting good vibes from the president now."

Montgomery's bill, HR1400, picked up some additional elements during its hearings before his committee and in Nichols' Armed Services subcommittee. Among those contributing to it was Hunter, who used his GI Bill benefits to get a law degree after returning from combat service in Vietnam.

But to the surprise of Hunter, Montgomery and other supporters of the new GI Bill, both the Veterans Administration and the Defense Department opposed HR1400.

"THE DEPUTY SECRETARY of Defense for Manpower, Lawrence Korb, appeared and said the Department of Defense had decided the new GI Bill was not in the best interest of the services," Hunter recalled.

All of the service chiefs had supported the bill earlier, Hunter said, "but DOD gave them an ultimatum and said they would have to pay for a GI Bill out of their defense budgets if they wanted it. Before it had been paid for by VA."

"Nothing works as fast to deflate the enthusiasm of the services as to tell them they have to pay for something," Hunter said.

The supporters said the Defense Department lost its interest for a new GI Bill when they were able to meet or exceed their recruiting goals for the last two years.

Montgomery and others said that attitude was shortsighted since they attribute a large part of the recruiting success to the recession, which is driving a lot of young people into the services when they fail to find civilian jobs. That will change when the economy improves, they said.

When HR1400 came out of the Veterans' Affairs Committee it provided for a basic grant of $300 a month for up to three years, paid by VA. The services would have been able to add to the basic grant for recruits signing up for hard-to-fill positions, such as ground combat units.

The grant would be increased for personnel serving beyond the minimum three-year enlistment and personnel serving for more than 10 years would have been able to transfer their educational benefit to either their spouses or their children.

Hunter and others consider the transferabilty element an important factor in keeping trained personnel in the services since they might otherwise be motivated to get out to take advantage of the educational assistance.

Because of opposition by the administration and differences between Montgomery and Nichols, the bill was "watered down" in the Armed Services Committee. Under the revised bill the basic monthly grant would be $200 for 36 months, paid by VA, with a bonus of up to $400 a month available to the services if they want to entice recruits into particular fields.

THE BENEFITS WOULD increase to a possible maximum combined grant of $1,000 a month for persons serving more than eight years.

Student receives award

CANYON — Celia Hobbs, daughter of L.J. Hobbs of 3312 Fannin, is the recipient of a $200 Don and Sybil Harrington Honor Scholarship to attend West Texas State University for the 1982-83 academic year.

Miss Hobbs, a graduate of Robert E. Lee High School, is one of more than 350 students designated as Don and Sybil Harrington Honor Scholars who will enter WTSU as freshmen this fall.

The scholarship program has grown since 1979, with five gifts each of $200,000. The Don and Sybil Harrington Foundation of Amarillo added the fifth gift in June to bring the scholarship fund total to $1 million.

Of the 328 Don and Sybil Harrington Honor Scholars in 1981-82, 87 percent will return for this year and 51 percent of those will have maintained a 3.0 grade point average to be eligible for the scholarship a second year, Keith Winter, director of development, said. The latest gift expanded the program for students to be eligible for a third year.

MC early enrollment going well

Pre-registration for the 1982 fall semester at Midland College is off to a successful start. During the first four days of pre-registration, more than 1,067 students signed up for credit courses compared to 846 students during the same period last year.

"We are very pleased with the number of persons who have come out to pre-enroll," noted registrar Dee Windsor. "All our publicity about the importance of pre-registration is paying off, we feel, and we encourage other people to pre-register as quickly as possible."

Pre-registration activities continue this week on MC's summer schedule. Beginning Monday, however, registration will begin during the regular hours of 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. Monday through Friday.

Official registration will be from 10 a.m. until 1 p.m. and from 4:30 until 8 p.m. in the P.E. Building Aug. 25-26.

Students who complete pre-registration are issued time permits, which assign them specific times to report for registration.

School prayer law use barred

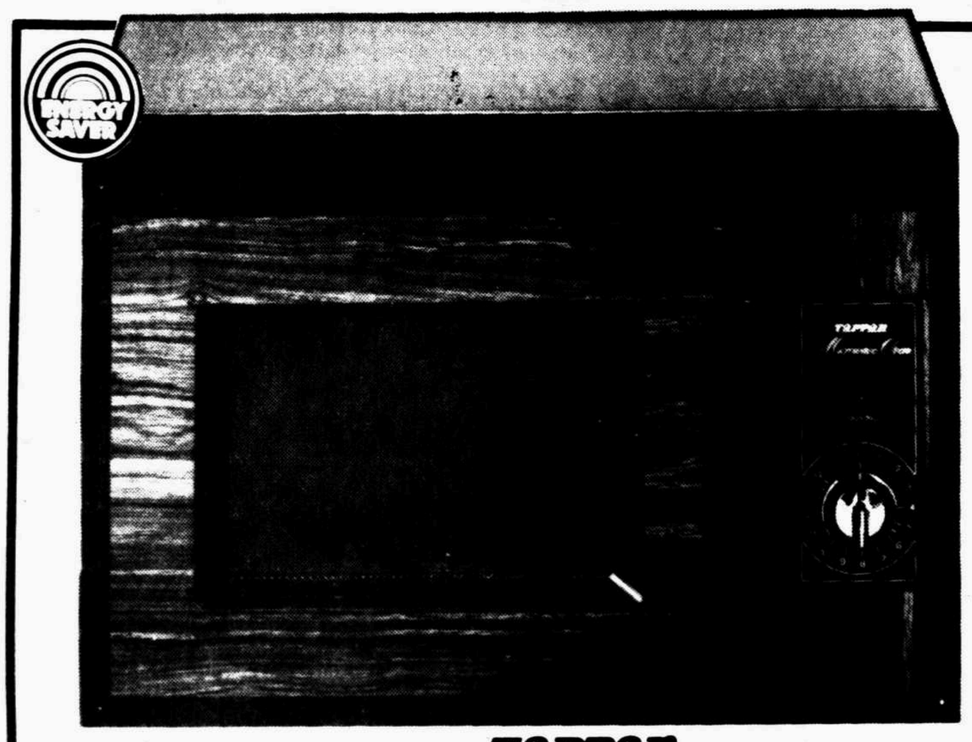

MOBILE, Ala. (AP) — Just three weeks before the fall term, a federal judge has temporarily barred the use of the state's new school prayer law until a constitutional challenge of the measure is decided.

The law, passed by the Legislature last month, says teachers may lead "willing" students in prayer, and replaces an earlier statute.

How did missile land in lake?

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — Police and military officials are trying to determine how 15 missiles and two "warheads" wound up in the murky water of Lake Travis near a popular county park.

Austin police divers plucked the white missiles and green, bullet-shaped warheads from the water Tuesday. Police Capt. Gilbert Miller speculated the undetonated missiles were tossed into the lake from cliffs at Paleface Park.

Miller said one missile — about two feet long and two inches in diameter — and warhead was found on the lake bottom Monday by a salvage diver looking for sunken cars. The diver brought the "suspicious-looking device" to the Bergstrom Air Force Base recreational area within the park, Miller said.

"Several people here told him it was a live round," he said, adding that the diver took the missile back into the lake and dumped it about 150 feet from shore.

After recovering the other missiles and both warheads Tuesday, police divers searched for the missile dumped by the salvage diver.

Army Capt. Jeff Eisenbeis of Fort Hood speculated the equipment was dumped by thieves.

"Somebody obviously stole them and decided they didn't want them," he said. Eisenbeis said the missiles "could be Air Force, could be Army, could be anybody's."

Maj. Bobby Masters of Bergstrom said that as of June the air base had not lost any missiles.

Fort Hood spokesman Maj. Tony Geishauser said the rockets retrieved from the lake are used on Army helicopers.

Although Miller said the missiles were "relatively powerful," authorities made no effort to clear the area. Eisenbeis said the unlocated missile "is not going to hurt anyone at the depth it's at."

Miller said, "The one we are looking for has an impact point...meaning it's intended to be detonated on impact."

The Army captain said the missiles looked "just like they came from the factory."

Divers also brought to the surface a bucket of an unidentified "chemical substance," said Miller. The bucket was connected to "detonating wires," he said.

Conflict of interest questioned in sesquicentennial planning

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — The Texas 1986 Sesquicentennial Commission has delayed a decision on whether to allow two commercial ventures to use its logotype because a commission member might profit from both projects.

Some members said Tuesday that Dr. Archie McDonald, professor at Stephen F. Austin University in Nacogdoches, had a potential conflict of interest.

Commission member Wayne Gallagher of Dallas, said, however, "The situation with Archie, it's not his fault."

McDonald, who missed the Tuesday meeting of the commission, was named as the "primary author" of a proposed one-volume history book proposed by Windsor Publications, Inc., Woodland Hills, Calif.

Windsor asked the commission for permission to use the sesquicentennial logo on the Texas book, which would be published in the fall of 1985.

Frank Hildebrand, chairman of the commission's marketing committee, said McDonald would write three-fourths of the book and the other one-fourth would include "business biographies" of major Texas companies and institutions.

McDonald himself asked the commission to permit the Texas Heritage Group to use the logo to promote the sale of bronze castings that would commemorate the sesquicentennial. The proposal identifies McDonald, western artist William Bond Jr., Kerrville, and advertising executive Alfred Gibbons, Dallas, as partners in Texas Heritage.

The partners said they would contribute 25 percent of the sales proceeds to the commission.

"We're troubled, quite frankly, by the ethical aspects of this," said Hildebrand. "Legally," he said, "there's nothing wrong."

"I think it will taint the action of the commission, as a whole, to the public in general," said Nancy Canion of League City.

"The average individual sees the logo, and it has the ring of truth and honesty about it" as being approved by the commission, Hildebrand said.

Commission chairman Chris Semos said, "I hope we don't stifle the art community" by denying the use of the logo.

Executive director Randy Lee said the commission plans to endorse a limited number of official commemoratives.

"The problem we have here is that a fellow commission member could profit from a project we're endorsing. We can't do that," said commission member S.L. Abbott, El Paso.

"Every huckster in the United States will have a replica of the Alamo and make a profit during the sesquicentennial," said Mrs. Canion, "but we shouldn't lend our name."

Rep. Semos, D-Dallas, set aside the applications without a vote and named a subcommittee comprised of Gallagher, Hildebrand, Mrs. Canion and William Griggs, Canyon, to recommend what the commission should do about the commercial use of the logo, including the applications involving McDonald.

Publishers today will hear DAR assessment of textbooks

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — Textbook publishers caught in the middle of a tug-of-war between conservatives and feminists will see the pendulum swing back to the right today with testimony from the Daughters of the American Revolution.

The State Textbook Committee stopped early Tuesday, the second of five days of non-stop testimony, when representatives from the National Organization for Women showed up too late to testify.

"Well, we all work," Donna York explained to reporters. "We just were not here early enough and will have no opportunity to make any statement to the commmittee."

The Austin and Dallas chapters of NOW lost their turn for good, at least until November when they can again protest any books they don't like that are listed for possible adoption in schools.

Two other state chapters of NOW are scheduled to testify Friday, the last day of the week long hearing.

The 15-member committee of classroom teachers and school administrators from around the state changes membership for each yearly meeting and makes a preliminary selection of books public schools can buy.

Because approval can mean several years' business in the nation's second-biggest state market, the Texas textbook hearings draw national attention and represent big dollars to publishers.
