Murderous rage

First there was a 13-year-old girl, beaten and stabbed to death. Steven Pfiel's parents supported him, bailed him out, moved the family away from the glare of publicity. And then one day they returned home to find that their elder son had been stabbed to death and a young female relative raped — not by an intruder, police said, but by Steven. Page 11A

U.S., Japan autos

WASHINGTON — The Clinton administration must be feeling lonely in its high-stakes showdown with Japan over autos and auto parts. Instead of support, it has received almost universal condemnation from the international community for what many believe is a "sentence first, trial later" brand of high-handed American justice. Page 8A

Eagles dispute

PHOENIX — Each spring, members of the Hopi tribe climb desert cliffs, looking for 20 or so baby golden eagles and red-tailed hawks to be used in religious ceremonies later in the summer.And each spring, neighboring Navajos accuse the Hopis of trespassing on their reservation and depleting eagle and hawk populations./12A

CANCER TAKES AN Angel

2-year-old loses 10-month battle with rare tumor

Just off the kitchen, a sign still hangs on the bedroom door that proudly proclaims, "Mallory and Kelsey's Room."

Studio pictures and hundreds of snapshots will forever adorn the home's living room, hallways and family scrapbooks — pictures in memory of the spirit of a 2-year-old girl who, just a few short months ago, danced and laughed and played, and had not a care in the world.

Today, the dancing, the laughing and the playing has been replaced by silence, an intrusive silence that came with little warning and has stayed an unwelcomed guest.

It's been just over two weeks since Kelsey Ann Logan lost her 10-month struggle with a rare form of cancer known as primitive neural ectodermal tumor. Kelsey was, according to her mother, "a little girl who touched people who didn't even know her."

On May 11, Kelsey died in a Tijuana, Mexico, hospital where her parents, Pam and Brad Logan, had taken her after having exhausted all other forms of conventional treatment.

The PNET first attacked Kelsey's spinal cord and later metastasized. The day Kelsey died, four tumors in each of her 2-year-old lungs either suffocated her or caused her lungs to simply shut down.

Doctors in Lubbock and Mexico, who told the Logans the PNET was doubling in size every 10 days, referred to the tumor as Grade 4, the angriest form of cancer Kelsey's parents simply refer to it as "evil."

Her parents, brothers and sister suffer greatly today, but all realize that their hurt pales compared to what Kelsey went through in her final 10 months.

"It's hard to get up in the morning," Mrs. Logan said. "You feel like, 'Why wash clothes? Why get dressed?' We ask why this had to happen, but we won't know why it happened until we meet God and ask him face to face."

Mrs. Logan said Kelsey was literally OK one day and very sick the next. One hot July night several hours after she had received a DPT booster shot, Kelsey woke suddenly.

"She was not crying," Mrs. Logan recalled. "She was screaming. And she ■ Assailant slashes throat, kills resident out for routine morning walk.

By Ed Todd

Midland resident Carolyn Kolas, out for her routine walk, was attacked and killed early Saturday morning. Her throat had been slashed, police said.

Apparently there were no witnesses to the homicide, although neighbors reported they heard a scream at about 4 a.m.

The death of Mrs. Kolas, a 42-year-old wife, mother and nurse's-aide student, brings to four the number of homicides in Midland since the first of the year. The earlier slayings were by firearm and strangulation.

A motorist traveling on Powell Street between the 3000 blocks of Ohio and Michigan avenues in southwest Midland discovered Mrs. Kolas' partially clothed body in the alley about 50 feet from Powell Street.

"Mrs. Kolas had a habit of taking early walks and Powell Street was one of her usual routes," said Midland police Sgt. David Garcia.

Her body was discovered 5 1/2 blocks north of her slate-blue frame house in the 3100 block of Mariana Avenue.

Police said the woman, unclothed from the waist down except for a pair of white socks, was wearing a pullover shirt. Her white walking shoes, walking shorts and protective pepper spray were missing.

Missing, too, Garcia said, is

Most in flood-prone Midwest risk waters, remain uninsured

By Sharon Cohen
Associated Press

When Deborah Pavia's home in Missouri was swamped by floodwaters in 1993, she was wiped out. Two years later, as the rivers rise again, she fears she'll face the same dilemma: huge losses and no insurance.

She never expected this predicament. "They said it happens once in a hundred years," she said of the Great Flood of 1993. "I thought, well, in another hundred years I won't be around to worry about it."

But the swollen Mississippi and Missouri rivers are swallowing up fields and engulfing homes. And though water has just trickled into her West Alton, Mo., basement, Ms. Pavia knows it could get worse before it gets better.

She has no flood insurance, she said, because she still hasn't rebounded financially from 1993, when her home was submerged in 41 inches of water. She recently considered buying a policy — and still plans to — but instead had to spend money on a used car to get to her job at a pharmaceutical plant.

"It's been a struggle trying to get back to where I was," said Ms. Pavia, a 38-year-old single mother of three. "It takes money out of your pocket every day. I don't think people realize the little things that are never replaced. We never caught up with doctor bills and hospital

Tensions with Serbs soar; peacekeepers battle back

SARAJEVO, Bosnia-Herzegovina (AP) — The new U.N. tactic of confronting the Bosnian Serbs escalated into a deadly gunbattle Saturday between Serbs and French peacekeepers for control of a U.N. observation post near the center of Sarajevo.

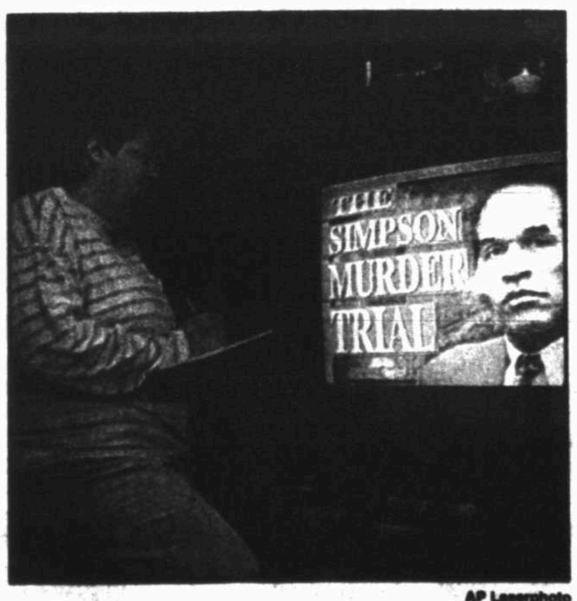

Two French peacekeepers and four Serbs were killed in fighting that followed NATO airstrikes and the Serbs' detention of more than 200 U.N. soldiers. Some of the soldiers were chained to likely NATO targets as human shields.

World leaders were faced with the choice of getting tougher or backing off — and possibly backing out of Bosnia. NATO said it supported a stronger U.N. mission. The U.N. Security Council said it would "not yield to blackmail" by the Serbs.

Early Saturday, Serb soldiers disguised as French peacekeepers — complete with U.N. blue helmets and flak jackets — infiltrated and took command of the U.N. observation post, located at both ends of a bridge over the Miljacka River.

Hours later, French troops backed by six light tanks and armored personnel carriers recaptured one end of the 50-yard-long bridge.

PARIS, Ill. — Before O.J., there was an emptiness in Jeri Williamson's life out here on the edge of the prairie.

Chronic pain in her arms and legs had ended her career as an emergency medical technician and curtailed her needlepoint and antique stripping; her daughter had gone off to college; her husband worked nights and slept days, leaving her alone much of the time.

The World in brief

■ Oil workers to continue 25-day strike

RIO DE JANEIRO, Brazil — Brazilians formed lines a half-mile long to buy cooking gas Saturday as state oil workers defied a court order to stop their 25-day strike.

The Oil Workers Federation said most of the 21 state unions voted Saturday to continue the strike, already the longest in the 32-year history of Petrobras, the state oil monopoly.

On Friday, the Supreme Labor Tribunal reaffirmed an earlier decision declaring the strike "illegal and abusive" and ordered the estimated 45,300 strikers back to work.

The strike began May 3. The government claims many workers have returned to the job, especially since Wednesday when President Fernando Henrique Cardoso sent army troops to occupy four refineries.

But clearly many workers remain committed to the cause.

Many gasoline stations in Brazil's largest cities have closed; others predict they will run out of reserves within days even though Petrobras says it has been importing oil to make up shortages.

Workers want a 28 percent pay raise as well as an end to the government plans to privatize Petrobras, which has failed to make Brazil self-sufficient in oil production since its creation in 1953.

■ Golan leaders hold emergency meeting

JERUSALEM — Leaders of the Golan Heights settler movement met Saturday in a border outpost they fear will be the first to be dismantled under a brewing land-for-peace deal with Syria.

Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin told Israel TV Friday that the government was considering dismantling one Golan settlement during the first stage of a peace treaty.

Settler leaders met for several hours Saturday evening in Kibbutz El-Rom, which is widely believed to the settlement Rabin had been mind.

Located less than a mile from the current border with Syria in the northeastern Golan, El-Rom is separated from other Jewish settlements by several Druse villages. The 24-year-old communal farm is home to about 300 Israelis.

The settlers agreed to urge Rabin to hold a referendum on any withdrawal, even a partial one.

Israel's housing minister said he believed a declaration of principles for a peace treaty with Syria was possible by early next year. Binyamin Ben-Eliezer hinted that Israel was ready to meet Syria's demand for a complete withdrawal from the Golan.

■ Kohl allies ask him to run for re-election

BONN, Germany — Chancellor Helmut Kohl's top allies have asked him to seek re-election in 1998 as the only way to keep conservatives in power and exclude a left-wing coalition including the radical Greens.

Kohl's centrist coalition partners, the Free Democrats, have dropped out of most state legislatures and fallen below 5 percent in opinion polls. If the Free Democrats miss that threshold in 1998 elections, Kohl's Christian Democrats will have to win half the popular vote to retain power.

There's only one way that can happen, party strategists believe.

"Helmut Kohl should run again in 1998," Wolfgang Schaeuble, parliamentary leader for Kohl's Christian Democratic Union, said in an interview with Focus magazine released Saturday. "He's in a better position than anyone else to do the best for us."

Mexico's ruling party struggles to hold power

■ Economic hardship, rampant cynicism about government corruption is making National Action Party serious threat nationwide.

Associated Press

GUANAJUATO, Mexico — The party that never used to lose suddenly is struggling to break even.

The ruling Institutional Revolutionary Party appeared unlikely to win back the governorship of central Guanajuato state in Sunday's elections and was fighting to hold onto the post in the southeastern state of Yucatan.

The ruling party, known as the PRI, held every governorship in Mexico for 60 years until 1989. But economic hardship and rampant cynicism about government corruption is making the conservative National Action Party a serious threat nationwide.

The opposition party, known as the PAN, already has the governors in four of Mexico's 31 states.

Vicente Fox, a charismatic businessman and PAN's gubernatorial candidate in Guanajuato, spoke of winning Sunday "by a knockout." He carried a 2-1 lead in the polls over PRI candidate Ignacio Vazquez Torres.

National Action trounced the governing party last February in neighboring Jalisco state and its capital of Guadalajara, Mexico's second-most populous city. The opposition party now claims that one in four Mexicans live in a city or state it governs.

Fox is a former Coca Cola Co. executive who gained national fame in the 1991 gubernatorial race in Guanajuato that was so tainted the federal government forced the supposed PRI winner to resign. The government bullied local legislators to replace him with a PAN politician — but ruled out the pugnacious Fox.

The PAN also has the governorships of Chihuahua and Baja California.

The PRI, with a block-by-block, farm-by-farm network across Guanajuato state, seemed to be on the rebound last year. It dominated congressional and mayoral races in August and September. Voters said they were tired of squabbling between the PAN governor and the PRI legislature.

But then the Mexican economy disintegrated in December. Tens of thousands of people lost their jobs in the shoe and leather factories here. Soaring prices and interest rates hammered almost everyone, everywhere in Mexico.

Here, as elsewhere in Mexico, frustration has risen with hard times.

"Many times I don't make more than I need to return home," said Felipe Aguilar, complaining about rising bus fares and food prices as he twisted a knife to scrape spines from the edible cactus leaves he sells along a cobblestone street.

At a bakery in Merida, the capital of Yucatan state, a middle-aged woman complained about rising prices for cooking oil, eggs and gasoline.

"We are old, we can tolerate eating just a couple of tortillas, but the little ones? Ay, no!" she said, waving her hands to the bakery owner. "It's always the same, the PRI, the PRI, the PRI!"

State and local elections were also held Sunday in the Yucatan, where PRI candidate Victor Cervera Pacheco holds a slight lead in most polls over the PAN's Luis Correa Mena, the mayor of Merida. Cervera has a strong rural base.

Independent citizens' groups complain that the PRI in Yucatan uses old-fashioned methods — buying and bullying voters — that seem to have been eliminated by a new election law in Guanajuato.

Follower doesn't lose faith in Japanese cult

By Mari Yamaguchi
Associated Press

TOKYO — As a doctoral candidate at Japan's top university, Shinnosuke Sakamoto is in the country's mainstream of diligence and accomplishment. As a member of Aum Shinri Kyo, he wades in a creek deep in the psychological wilds.

Sakamoto

Sakamoto has watched along with the rest of the nation as the drama has unfolded since the cult was implicated in the nerve-gas attack on the Tokyo subway two months ago. Police in gas masks and riot gear raided sect compounds. The group's elusive guru was cornered by police in his sealed, coffin-like chamber. Top cult leaders have made sensational jailhouse confessions.

Reports say the sect planned to shower Tokyo with nerve gas; that it tried to steal military secrets; that it plotted biological warfare, perhaps even with the deadly Ebola virus; that it planned terror assaults that would dwarf the subway attack, which killed 12 people and sickened more than 5,500.

Sakamoto has heard it all. But his trust in the cult and its leader, Shoko Asahara, is unshaken.

"I believe they are innocent," he says simply.

Sakamoto, 31, attended a highly competitive high school and his efforts there were rewarded with the highest prize: a place at Tokyo University, a prime recruiting ground for government ministries and blue-chip companies.

He began his studies in 1982, majoring in sports science. Then he landed a job at a major trading firm, at a time when Japan's economy was booming. The money was good, and at first the pace was heady.

But after less than two years, he quit.

Feeling adrift, he decided to go back to school for an anthropology degree. But he was dissatisfied with the way a thesis turned out. He felt his confidence slipping.

Then he attended a seminar by Aum Shinri Kyo, or Supreme Truth. He was given a book on meditation and breathing written by Asahara.

One day, alone in his dorm room, he tried the techniques.

"I felt this bursting sensation from inside. It was amazing," he recalled. He felt sexually energized. His chronic sinus problems cleared up.

But studies still came first and he didn't pursue his newfound Aum connection.

Not yet.

Sakamoto's academic credentials are not unusual for an Aum disciple. Many of the cult's top leaders are products of Japan's best schools.

To some observers, that's no surprise: Cults everywhere often claim bright, well-educated young people as disciples. But others argue that Japan's strict educational system and social mores render the nation's young particularly vulnerable.

The cult's ability to attract promising young technicians and scientists has also caused unease in Japan's scientific community. Those recruits were responsible for building Aum's arsenal of chemical weapons.

It was Sakamoto's scholarly bent that led him back to Aum — he thought the cult would make a good subject for his doctoral dissertation. The idea was "dangerously interesting," he said, smiling faintly.

Sakamoto's involvement quickly became more than academic. He attended a cult training center. He listened to Asahara's tapes and his respect for the leader increased.

"I admire the supreme master ... because he tells us things nobody else could explain so clearly and logically," he said.

Two years ago, he joined up.

Even once he was a member, Sakamoto says he did not fully grasp Aum's teachings until he made a pilgrimage to the cult's compound at the foot of Mount Fuji for a 10-day training session.

He says it changed his life.

If the cult commune still exists when he finishes his studies, he says he'll go and live there for a few years. His ultimate goal is to become a monk and achieve enlightenment.

For now, he is tranquil. No matter what he hears about Aum, Sakamoto says he will keep the faith.

Label dispute may be sticking point in nuclear accord

By Paul Alexander
Associated Press

■ News analysis

SEOUL, South Korea — U.S. and North Korean negotiators might not agree that a rose by any other name would smell as sweet.

In fact, a name may be all that's holding up settlement of a major dispute on implementing a landmark accord aimed at dismantling the hard-line communist North's nuclear program, suspected of weapons development.

The simple words "Made in South Korea" reflect a diplomatic tangle so dense that three rounds of U.S.-North Korea negotiations — one involving high-level diplomats — failed to cut through it.

Now it appears to have become the crux of the latest set of talks in Malaysia that North Korea has called the key to whether it will abide by the 7-month-old deal.

The agreement calls for the North to get two light-water reactors to replace its mothballed models, which produce much more weapons-grade plutonium.

The United States says although the agreement didn't specify the source of the new reactors, it was made clear that they would have to come from South Korea, the only country willing to pick up most of the $4 billion tab.

But for decades, North Korea has belittled anything from the South as inferior. It would be hard for a country that boasts a system of communist-style self-reliance to accept help from its despised capitalist rival.

Officials at the Malaysia talks are saying little publicly. But in the first hints of North Korea's willingness to compromise, news reports Saturday quoted a South Korean official as saying the North has offered to let Washington and Seoul jointly design and manufacture the new reactors.

The hangup apparently is the label, which North Korea wants to read "Made in the U.S.A."

The North already has been swallowing a lot of pride lately, thanks to a deteriorating economy that experts say is only about one-sixteenth the size of South Korea's and shrinking fast.

On Friday, the North went begging to longtime enemy Japan for rice to ease a food shortage that defectors claim is becoming increasingly acute. It said it would accept food from South Korea if no conditions were attached.

It also has asked the United States to provide 100,000 tons of fuel oil, another incentive offered under the nuclear pact, earlier than the scheduled October delivery. The North's energy crisis reportedly is so bad that perhaps half of its factories have been idled.

One of the problems about providing such aid would be to ensure it wouldn't all go to the North's huge military. Continued intransigence on the nuclear issue certainly would be seen as a bad-faith stance.

Washington also says a resumption of the North's existing nuclear program would result in international sanctions that even Pyongyang's best friend China has indicated it wouldn't block.

Still, despite being increasingly forced into a corner by the growing financial crisis, the North continues to show its fangs as part of its long-standing tradition of brinksmanship as a negotiating tactic.

On Saturday, its official news agency KCNA issued two separate statements — one blunt, the other veiled — to the effect that the threat of nuclear war isn't over.

First, in turning up its rhetoric, the North accused Washington of preparing to provoke a nuclear war and said it was ready to fight the United States again on the heavily armed Korean peninsula.

The second statement was a coyly worded reference to thousands of fuel rods that were removed from the North's lone operating nuclear plant when it was frozen. They were placed in a cooling pond, where they are inspected regularly by international observers.

Rain chances cloud horizon

Staff Report

Rain or shine? Possibly rain.

Odds are against it, but the weatherman at the National Weather Service at Midland International Airport is calling for a 20 percent chance of rainfall well into tonight or early into Monday morning.

Otherwise, today's sky is to be partly cloudy, the temperature to peak in the mid-80s, and the winds are to be northeasterly at 5 to 15 mph.

For Monday, on the observation of Memorial Day, the sky is to be mostly cloudy. There is to be a 30 percent chance of showers or thunderstorms. The high temperature is to be into the upper 70s.

Saturday's high temperature was 83 degrees, and the overnight low was 59 degrees.

The record high temperature for May 27 is 101 degrees in 1985. The record low temperature for the date is 48 degrees in 1947.

STATE

Many parts of Texas could see showers or thunderstorms today.

In North Texas, today will be partly cloudy with highs in the 80s. Sunday night will see increasing cloudiness with a chance of rain late in the south. Highs will be in the upper 70s to mid-80s. Lows will be in the 60s.

South Texas will be partly cloudy today with widely scattered thunderstorms. Highs will be in the 80s along the coast and 90s elsewhere. Lows will be in 60s in the Hill Country and in the 70s elsewhere.

West Texas will be partly cloudy today. The region will see increasing clouds Sunday night with a slight chance of rain most areas east of the mountains. Lows Sunday night will be in the 50s and 60s. Highs Sunday will be in the 70s north and 80s and 90s elsewhere, except along the Rio Grande, where temperatures will be in the 100s.

Skies were mostly fair across North Texas, with temperatures climbing in the afternoon and thunderstorms developing in some areas. High were in the mid- to upper 80s.

In West Texas, skies across western portions of the Hill Country and Edwards Plateau were clear to partly cloudy, while to the east skies remained mostly cloudy. Widely scattered showers and thunderstorms extended from east of Cotulla to Lockhart to east of Austin. Mid-afternoon temperatures ranged from mid-80s to low 90s.

NATION

Scattered rain fell Saturday in the Midwest, where the Missouri, Mississippi and Illinois rivers still sprawled beyond their banks.

Rain fell from South Dakota into Nebraska, Iowa, Kansas, Texas, Illinois and Missouri, where wind gusted to 55 mph in Joplin.

Numerous swollen streams and creeks caused localized flooding. Upstream from St. Louis, near the confluence of the Missouri and Mississippi rivers, parts of St. Charles County remained under water. Crews filled sandbags in case of more flooding.

Illinois Gov. Jim Edgar ordered 160 members of the National Guard to join the flood-fighting effort.

'Kelsey's beautiful blonde hair began to fall out'

A mother describes her daughter's 10-month struggle

During the final months of Kelsey Logan's life, her mother, Pam, kept a daily journal of her daughter's struggle with primitive neural ectodermal tumor, a rare form of cancer. The following are selected entries from that journal, in Mrs. Logan's words:

— July 15, 1994 — Kelsey went to her pediatrician for a well-baby check-up and round of immunization shots. She was fine — muscular, smart, strong. But small as always. That night, she woke up four times screaming — not crying, but screaming and acting as though her tummy hurt. This persisted for a week. Fine in the daytime, but up screaming and crying several times at night.

— July 25 — The pediatrician admitted her into hospital. Several spinal taps were attempted with no success — blood was drained out instead of spinal fluid. CT scans and MRIs performed. Kelsey getting worse by the hour.

— July 26 — The last time Kelsey ever walked. Midland Memorial could not diagnose Kelsey and sent her to Lubbock Methodist Children's Hospital to see a pediatric neurologist on July 27.

— Aug. 6 — Diagnosed with tumor on her spinal cord — the lumbar spine.

— Aug. 10 — Kelsey went in for a biopsy/surgery. They took a piece of it but decided not to remove the tumor for these reasons: 1. It was a malignant glioma — very aggressive — and would come right back and soon take her life so we should do heroic chemotherapy and intense radiation and maybe remove it after treatments if still some tumor left. But the biopsy caused tremendous swelling and paralyzed Kelsey from the waist down. The pediatric neurosurgeon recommended going back in the very next day to try to remove what he could — reverse the paralysis — and give her some quality of life.

— Aug. 11 — Kelsey endured a six-hour surgery. The doctor removed about 95 percent of the tumor without touching the spinal cord. We were told Kelsey had a PNET — a more treatable tumor than a glioma. Paralysis remained.

— Aug. 15 — Kelsey began to feel better — danced with arms and sang.

— Aug. 18 — Kelsey began an intensive chemotherapy protocol. She was to receive five of the treatments every 21 days, each one lasting four days.

— Aug. 30 — Kelsey's beautiful blond hair began to fall out.

— Sept. 2 — Kelsey began to pull herself around house with her arms and thin legs (w/disappearing muscles) dragging behind. A heart-wrenching site for her family, but she was not bothered. Kelsey was amazing — if we felt sad she quickly changed that. She laughed, clapped and sang — with the sweetest voice we ever heard and remarkable big, blue eyes we felt good too.

— Mid-September — Kelsey began having feeling down to upper thighs and bladder began to function again. Appetite diminished greatly.

— Oct. 10-14 — 3rd round of chemo — made her even sicker, very scary and she would NOT eat.

— Oct. 17 — Kelsey checked into hospital with infection and too much weight loss. We were taught how to tube feed Kelsey and we did this every night.

— October — Kelsey by this time had completed capturing hearts of the nurses — even the few who tried not to get close to patients. They began to argue over who got Kelsey as a patient.

— Oct. 31 — Kelsey dressed up like Minnie Mouse and we pulled her around in wagon to trick-or-treat the offices at the hospital along with about 15 other little children with cancer. She held open her bag and said "tank-oo" to everyone.

— Nov. 15-21 — In hospital with dangerously low counts and urinary tract infection. She received her 6th, 7th, 8th and 9th blood transfusions in three days and one platelet transfusion.

— Nov. 28-Dec. 1 — 5th and final induction chemotherapy. The worst one yet.

— Dec. 21 — Kelsey's second birthday. She was feeling good. We had a big birthday party. Santa Claus even came. She loved blowing out candles and made us light them and sing happy birthday over and over and over.

— Dec. 25 — She had a wonderful Christmas. We were thankful. She was getting better and crawling better.

— January 1995 — Kelsey began to feel below knees and crawl perfectly. We took her for a trip on airplane — she loved everything, especially the planes. Stopped tube-feeding — appetite back!

— Feb. 9 — We received news the tumor was back.

— Feb. 10 — To hospital for MRI of brain — brain OK. Meeting w/doctor — suggests radiation of brain and spine.

— Feb. 15 — Four-hour surgery — partial removal of tumor — difficult surgery — lots of bleeding.

— Feb. 23 — I began seeking alternative medicines and clinics. There are a lot of other treatments we never knew existed.

— March — Kelsey lost appetite again — had to tube feed again.

— March 31 — CT scan revealed cancer had metastasized to lungs — four tumors on each lung.

— April — Kelsey feeling good, very playful. We went on lots of walks to parks, to grocery store (she loved to go to Albertsons and get cookies and see people). We put hat on her and strangers did not even know she was sick. They just commented on what an angel she was. Without speaking, Kelsey got attention. She WAS special.

— April 21 — Kelsey to hospital — her left lung needed to be drained. It had 250 CC of pure blood in it. She no longer felt well at all.

— April 26 — We left on chartered jet with Kelsey to Oasis of Hope Hospital in Tijuana, Mexico.

— April 28 — Right lung drained again of 450 CC pure blood. Kelsey was critical but once again came through and got better. She amazed more doctors and nurses with her character. Some of them did not even speak English but were flocking to be near her.

— April 28-May 11 — Kelsey did not feel well in Mexico. She watched a lot of movies and talked to her mommy and daddy. We went for a few walks. We prayed a lot — for a miracle. May 9 and 10 Kelsey suffered. It was unimaginable. She died in our arms at 5:30 a.m., May 11. We all ask 'Why?' These events — especially with a child — are impossible to understand.

The world is a better place because of her. She belonged to everyone. She changed us and changed or touched the lives of numerous people. Unfortunately Kelsey is not alone. Roughly 7,500 children a year are diagnosed with cancer in the U.S. Many don't suffer as greatly as Kelsey did but some do — some even worse. A fund in Kelsey's name will help these children. She will always touch people.

had never screamed that way before."

Soon after the screaming began, Mrs. Logan recalled how Kelsey's body began to contort. A few days later she walked with her neck bent back, her head pointing skyward. Doctors immediately thought Kelsey had contracted spinal meningitis, since children would often seek relief from the pain of the disease by bending their necks backward in such a manner.

After eight spinal taps in Midland, meningitis was ruled out and Kelsey was sent to Methodist Children's Hospital in Lubbock where the diagnosis of PNET was made on Aug. 6.

Kelsey was transferred from Methodist Hospital's Hodges Cancer Center to University Medical Center in Lubbock where doctors removed the tumor during a six-hour surgery on Aug. 11.

A biopsy resulted in massive swelling and paralysis below her waist, a condition that would slowly improve over the coming months. One month before her death, she had regained feeling all the way to her toes.

Chemotherapy inductions began, and from August of last year until the day she died, Kelsey was in almost constant pain, either from the treatments or from the cancer. Perhaps the most phenomenal aspect of this little girl was that even though the pain and the cancer broke Kelsey Logan physically, it could not break her spirit. This tiny child simply refused to allow the cancer to barge right in and take everything from her.

Doctors and nurses marveled at Kelsey's disposition; her spirit in the face of such pain moved one Lubbock anesthesiologist to tears. Medical professionals, despite their need to remain emotionally unattached from their patients, were touched by Kelsey — her inner strength and unending happiness.

"It was quite remarkable," Logan said. "She would smile and laugh and play through all of the pain she was in. People were so amazed that she continued to wake up with bright eyes and a smile. We really feel Kelsey was an angel sent to us. Being her parents was more a privilege than a responsibility."

After seven months of treatment and hope, the Logans were informed on March 31 that the cancer had spread to her lungs.

With all traditional forms of treatment ineffective at halting the monstrous spread of the tumor, the Logans began searching for alternative therapies, including herbs and shark cartilage — thought by some specialists to slow the growth of tumors. Between April 21-28, Kelsey's left lung was drained twice. Doctors in Lubbock and at the Oasis of Hope Hospital in Tijuana extracted more than 700 CCs — equivalent to 23 ounces — of pure blood from the lung.

"Kelsey did not feel well in Mexico," Mrs. Logan wrote in a journal she kept during Kelsey's final months. "She watched movies and talked to her Mommy and Daddy. We went for a few walks and prayed a lot — for a miracle.

"May 9 & 10 Kelsey suffered. It was unimaginable. She died in our arms at 5:30 a.m., May 11.

"We all ask why. These events, especially with a child, are impossible to understand."

She was eulogized by her father during a May 13 memorial service at St. Ann's Catholic Church.

"Kelsey loved all of God's creations no matter how small or insignificant they were," Brad Logan read. "One afternoon, while she was sitting on the back patio following a very difficult round of chemotherapy, a fly landed on her little bald head. It took off again and buzzed around her face and then landed on her forehead, right between her eyes. She watched all of the fly's activities with amazement and with what appeared to be joy. When the fly landed the second time on her forehead and sat there contentedly, she laughed out loud and yelled, 'Daddy, look!' Most people might become annoyed at that particular creation of God's. Not Kelsey. It was alive, it was God's, and it needed a place to land."

A widely held Christian philosophy is that when God closes one door, he opens another. Hope for the future is often born from tragedy.

During one of their many round-trips to Lubbock for Kelsey's radiation treatments, the Logans began to think of the many families who have children stricken with malignancies.

Out of that thought has come the development of the "Kelsey Logan Angel Fund: Love Gifts For Children."

The Logans — who on Friday received approval from the secretary of state's office to operate as a non-profit organization — have formed the fund in hopes of improving the quality of life for children who are seriously ill and hospitalized with malignant tumors.

The fund will go not for medical expenses, but, according to Logan, "to help children be more comfortable during their stay in a hospital.

"If a child wants to listen to music but does not have a tape recorder, it will go for that. If a child wants to see a movie, but the hospital doesn't have that movie, it will go for that. If Dad has a job but can't afford to leave and drive 200 miles to be with his child, the fund will go toward a plane ticket; or if Grandma can't afford to fly out. The fund is not for research, it goes directly to the family."

Logan added, "We thought it would be nice, whether Kelsey made it or not, to help these kids with tumors. The Make-A-Wish Foundation is great, but Kelsey never got to go to Disney World. We want to fill the gap between Disney World and the hospital room."

In the three weeks since Kelsey's death, the fund has grown to $5,000. An anonymous Midland business has pledged to match up to $25,000 a year for the fund; thus, the fund is now at $10,000.

In the beginning, the Logans will dedicate the fund to families of children with malignancies in the Permian Basin and Lubbock. As the fund grows, the Logans hope to help children with other diseases. Ultimately, they would like to see children throughout the country benefit from the Kelsey Logan Angel Fund.

Applications for those in need can be made through Hospice of Midland; Texas Oncology and the Allison Cancer Center; the West Texas Cancer Center in Odessa, and the Hodges Cancer Center at Methodist Hospital in Lubbock.

Donations to the fund should be directed to the Kelsey Logan Angel Fund, P.O. Box 5072, Midland, 79704, or sent to the attention of Bill Milner at Midland American Bank, 401 W. Texas, Midland 79701.

TENSION: New U.N. tactic escalates into a deadly gunbattle

(From 1A)

Serbs fired on the French from nearby buildings, and held on to the other side of the bridge, putting them a step closer to the heart of the government-controlled city.

Serb military spokesman Lt. Col. Milovan Milutinovic said the Serbs attacked because they believed the Bosnian army was planning to take over the position.

One French soldier was killed and 10 were wounded fighting for the observation post. One Serb was killed. Another French peacekeeper was killed by a sniper at a nearby post, bringing to 39 the number killed in the former Yugoslavia.

French President Jacques Chirac demanded a tougher mandate for U.N. peacekeepers and instructed French troops to resist Serb aggression on them "by any means."

France sent warships Saturday to the Adriatic coast, where the U.S. aircraft carrier Theodore Roosevelt was earlier dispatched.

In Washington, President Clinton spoke by telephone with Chirac and British Prime Minister John Major about Bosnia, including ways to strengthen the peacekeeping mission, said spokesman Calvin Mitchell.

Specific measures were to be discussed Monday night at a NATO foreign ministers' meeting in the Netherlands, Mitchell said. The meeting was moved up from Tuesday.

At the United Nations, Security Council President Jean-Bernard Merimee said council members expressed "their determination not to yield to blackmail and they appreciated the robust action taken by some elements of the French contingent."

Merimee, the French ambassador, said the council also discussed options for restructuring the peacekeeping mission and pointed to the gunbattle as one way the United Nations could get tough.

U.S. Defense Secretary William Perry met in Naples, Italy, with the NATO admiral who coordinated repeated airstrikes Thursday and Friday on ammunition depots near Bosnian Serb headquarters outside Sarajevo.

After meeting later in London with his British and German counterparts, Perry said he would ask Russia to intercede with the Serbs, their traditional allies, to convince them their actions are "counterproductive."

Russian Prime Minister Viktor Chernomyrdin said in Moscow that Russia would try to facilitate negotiations with the Serbs. But he criticized the NATO bombing.

"It is no good when they try to solve a problem of armed conflict in Bosnia-Herzegovina by just the same military means, delivering powerful airstrikes," he said.

BODY: Attacker kills resident on routine walk

the "bladed weapon" that the attacker or attackers used to cut her throat.

Her panties were found beneath her body, which was lying on the grassy part of the alley away from ruts made by tire marks.

"This was a horrendous crime," Midland police Chief Richard Czech said Saturday night. "The Midland Police Department is taking all of its resources to (solve the crime). We are going to find the fellow or persons that did it; we are pulling all the stops."

Czech asked that nearby residents report to police anything suspicious or any piece of evidence that might help them solve the slaying.

"We think the streets of Midland are very safe," Czech said. "When a crime like this happens, we are going to do everything under our power to see to it that the perpetrator is apprehended. ... Detectives are working on this ... around the clock."

Garcia said police don't want to panic the community. "But we want to raise the awareness that whoever committed this vicious crime is still at large. And we have key pieces of evidence missing (the weapon, walking shorts and shoes, pepper spray)."

Mrs. Kolas's husband, Daniel, a maintenance engineer for the Midland public school system, told police his wife sometimes took her walks "real early" and that it was not unusual for her to be into her outside exercise when he awoke.

"Her time varied," Garcia said. "It could be as early as 4 (a.m.)."

Police said that after Kolas woke on Saturday morning and found that his wife was not at home, he assumed she was out walking. Since he had some work to do at school, he took their two children — Jonathan, 10, and Emily, 1 1/2 — to work with him, and returned to find that his wife was still not home. Accompanied by his children, Kolas drove his wife's walking route, and soon came upon police officers at about 8:30 a.m. or 8:45 a.m.

"Walking every day was something she always did, and she walked to live, but it ultimately killed her," said her sister-in-law, Kathy Kolas.

Kathy Kolas said that Carolyn Kolas, who at one time was seriously overweight, had taken her doctor's advice and had been walking faithfully to reduce her weight. She would "sometimes walk two and three times a day.

"It's scary, because I go walking," Kathy Kolas said.

Carolyn Kolas, who also suffered from high-blood pressure, was studying at Odessa College to become a certified nurse's aide.

"She was the most determined woman I have ever known," Mrs. Kolas said. She said her sister-in-law's doctor told her that if "she didn't lose weight, she was going to die. She told me she didn't want to die from that."

She already had lost more than a 100 pounds.

"She was very determined. She had quit smoking. You know, when she said she was going to do something, she did it. She was bound and determined that she was going get out there and go to work and do something she enjoyed."

Mrs. Kolas said her sister-in-law "wasn't a passive person. She would have fought rather than give into something like (sexual assault)."

On the morning of Mrs. Kolas's death, Les Snider, 43, said that his dog, a catahoula used in hunting and herding cattle, "started barking right at 4 o'clock. She can hear a pin drop."

Snider, who lives in the 3000 block of Michigan Avenue, said he then heard what he thought was the sound of stray cats "making whoopee or fighting" and wondered why his dog was "going crazy."

After police had arrived to investigate the death, Snider said Kolas, who was out searching for his wife, walked up to police, who "pulled the sheet back (that covered the body) and he started shaking. Bless his heart."

Johnny Gonzalez, 31, who on Saturday was moving out of his duplex directly across from where Mrs. Kolas's body was found, said that "every morning we have a bunch of people who walk" in the neighborhood. "Most of the people who walk through here walk singly," he said.

Gonzalez, who feared the attacker or attackers had been "scoping the lady" said, "you hear about it (stabbings) happening on the other side of town, but not next to me. How do you protect yourself?"

Gonzalez said he keeps a "loaded pistol" and sawed-off baseball bat in his house to protect his wife, Isabel, and their children.

"This has always been a nice, quiet, laid-back neighborhood. Nothing happens."

After hearing of the death, Patti Girrens, 37, rushed over to the neighborhood because her mother lives there.

"She's afraid to go home," Ms. Girrens said. "When I found out what happened to that lady, it scared me to death."

Ms. Girrens said her mother had spent Friday night with her (her mother's) sister, since there had been tornado warnings. The family's house had been destroyed in the 1970 Lubbock tornado.

Jeremy Hohn, a 23-year-old postal worker who lives next door to the Kolases said, "You always think something (tragic) is going to happen to somebody else in another town. Life can just slip by.'

O.J.: Satellite dish binds together the obsessed

(From 1A)

Then she discovered the O.J. Simpson murder trial, and her life acquired a certain zest.

Now she watches the trial on television from gavel to gavel, and videotapes it if she has to go out. When the day is over she sits down at her computer to discuss the case on-line or download trial transcripts.

She's engrossed by the melting ice cream and the splattered blood and the burning candles. She wants to know what happened to a missing .05 milliliters of O.J.'s blood, and wonders if the doctor who performed the autopsy will crack on the stand.

With its high-priced advocacy and high-tech forensic analysis, its brew of celebrity, money, sex and race, the Simpson trial is everything life here is not.

"It serves the same purpose as a soap ... you can immerse yourself totally," says Jeri, who is 52. "It's like sticking your head in the sand."

But it is far from solitary. Although Jeri lives at the outskirts of Paris, pop. 9,600, she's also a resident of O.J. Nation, whose population is measured in the tens of millions.

O.J. NATION is bound together by the satellite dish, the fax, the personal computer and the talk show. It assembles not so much in public places, like the town square or the corner barbershop, as on the air and over the lines.

In O.J. Nation, people who never had learned how to use a VCR now run low on blank cassettes. A discussion of Kato Kaelin's hair draws three times more responses on a Prodigy computer discussion session than one about Newt Gingrich. (He's the man polls have shown less recognizable than Lance Ito.)

In O.J. Nation, hundreds of people have paid $13 for membership to the Kato Fan Club. They have bought more than 75,000 copies of an O.J. comic book and close to 100,000 copies of a home viewers' trial guide. The satiric "O.J.'s Legal Pad," purportedly featuring the defendant's jottings and musings, had a first printing of 175,000.

Meet a few of Jeri's fellow citizens:

■ Sheila Scott of Los Angeles, a retired character actress, celebrated her 63rd birthday watching the trial. A frustrated lawyer, she has assembled voluminous files and, having somehow obtained her number, faxes legal advice to her hero, Marcia Clark.

If only the trial would end, she could attend to her own legal affairs, clean her house and lose weight. Because of nervous nibbling in front of the tube, she's up a dress size or two.

■ Robert Butterworth, a psychologist, created a 10-question test for "O.J. obsession" after he noticed that HE was getting hooked. "O.J. obsessives are over the line. Their work and their relationships are suffering. They don't have a life anymore."

■ Teddy Artemiou, who installed small television monitors on the pumps in his gas station in Coconut Creek, Fla., and finds that people pump a bit more Shell to watch a bit more O.J.

Interest in the trial ebbs and flows — up when Kato's on the stand, down after Oklahoma City. But the trial's descent into complex, technical evidence has separated fans from fanatics. The utterly mass phenomenon of February has become something of narrower yet deeper interest.

"IT'S HARD TO TALK about the case now if you don't know what 'polymerase chain reaction' and 'restriction fragment length polymorphism' means," says Jeri.

Kathleen Sullivan, who anchors E! Entertainment Network's spirited trial coverage, sees a rift between steady viewers and everyone else.

"They feel isolated. They're watching so much that can't be translated to their husband when he gets home, or capsulated on the evening news. They see a different trial than non-viewers do."

At 9 a.m. Jeri Williamson drives a visitor through the vast, empty parking lot of Honey Creek Square mall, just over the Indiana line in Terre Haute. On April Fool's Day, this was the scene of O.J. Nation's grandest spectacle — Kato's first public appearance.

People began arriving at sunrise, and Jeri herself was en route when she heard a traffic report — the mall was gridlocked.

"I aborted the mission," she says.

By the time Kato arrived, the crowd had swelled to around 5,000, including old ladies in wheelchairs and teen-agers who chanted "KA-TO! KA-TO!" Someone unfurled a banner: "WE LOVE YOU, KATO."

At 10:27 a.m., Jeri is back in her living room, using a remote control to rotate the big black satellite dish out on the front lawn into position for Court TV.

Jeri rocks back on a recliner, watching the pre-trial show on her 32-inch RCA set. She sips coffee in between drags on a menthol cigarette.

When California v. Simpson comes to order, she focuses more intently, occasionally calling out a question a lawyer hasn't asked, or grousing about a ruling.

"The NEW Judge Ito," she grunts as defense lawyer Barry Scheck's objection is dismissed. "Save your breath, Barry."

While everyone else capable of focusing on a television picture seems to hold a strong opinion on O.J. Simpson's guilt or innocence, Jeri's keeping an open mind. But she's skeptical about the prosecution's theory: "Such neat, neat evidence for such a messy, messy crime."

The trial is taking its toll. Her garden is overgrown, her front porch cluttered, her antique collection stagnant. Until she switched phone companies, on-line charges had inflated her monthly bill to $192.

Her living room carpet, however, is immaculate — she vacuums during recesses — and she's lost seven pounds. "Nervous energy," she explains.

At 11:30, Jeri's husband, Daryll, wanders sleepily into the living room after a few hours' shut-eye.

HE GLANCES AT the set. "Oh, it's the O.J. trial," he drawls, in mock surprise.

"Like watchin' grass grow," he grouses, picking up a copy of Newsweek. "Don't see how anyone can watch it."

Like most Parisians, he would rather discuss anything but O.J., including the weather and the ban on burning trash after 5 p.m. Jeri knows of no one else, save the pharmacist at Wal-Mart — whom she occasionally phones with updates — who shares her interest. Her mother won't even discuss the case with her.

Paris isn't the only place to have O.D.'d on O.J. National cable ratings are only three times above normal, instead of 10. In Carrollton, Ga., the Times-Georgian has vowed not to print any trial news until it's over.

Last year, Philadelphia management consultant Leslie Cree was so sick of hearing her office mate blab about O.J. that she hung a sign designating their common space "an OJ free zone." But now the sign is down.

"Nobody talks about it anymore," says Cree. "They got burned out."

But not Jeri, or her fellow fanatics. When the court breaks for lunch, she logs on her computer in a cluttered alcove off the living room. In 12 hours, she's received 26 messages.

She has about 70 regular discussion partners who follow the trial as avidly as she does. Or more so. One drew some of his own blood so he could authentically duplicate the trial's blood-splatter tests. Another records each day's session and catalogs the videotapes.

"We focus on things we pull from cracks in the testimony," Jeri says. "Sometimes I prefer the debate about the trial to the trial itself. It's not personal to us — it's a game we're playing with their forensic evidence."

RISK: Many in flood areas stay uninsured

bills."

Two years after the record-breaking disaster that buried many Midwest river towns, Ms. Pavia is among the large majority of people living in these high-risk flood zones who don't have flood insurance.

The reasons vary. Some can't afford it; the average premium, the government says, is $300 a year. Others feel history won't repeat itself or bought policies after 1993, then let them lapse after a year.

Of some 9.5 million households in flood-prone areas, slightly more than 2 million — or about 21 percent — have federally backed flood insurance, according to the Federal Emergency Management Agency.

Nearly half the policies are in Florida, the agency said; the National Flood Insurance Program covers flood-related damage connected to hurricanes.

Thousands of flood-ravaged residents of the Midwest took out flood insurance policies and thousands more accepted government buyouts of their homes after devastating losses in 1993, but they still are the minority.

Less than 10 percent of more than 400,000 structures in high-hazard flood zones in Missouri and Illinois are covered by national flood insurance, according to a recent op-ed piece in the St. Louis Post-Dispatch written by Al Moore of Aetna Life & Casualty in Connecticut.

"I don't understand what it is that keeps people from protecting themselves," Moore said in a telephone interview. "People can't have forgotten."

He noted many river communities aren't affluent, but also speculated some people believe the government will ride to the rescue again if there's another huge flood.

"The thinking prevails that if there is a big problem, the federal government is going to come in and make us whole again," said Moore, who coordinates flood insurance for his agency. "That simply is not true."

In fact, a measure signed into law last year imposed new restrictions on flood insurance. It requires residents of high-risk areas who received a FEMA grant after the 1993 disaster to buy coverage if they want to be eligible for certain kinds of aid if they are flooded again.

It also established a 30-day waiting period before flood insurance takes effect, instead of the previous five days.

Charles Higgenbotham, Ms. Pavia's father and next-door neighbor, bought flood insurance on Tuesday. He knows if his house — which he rebuilt with his life savings after the summer of 1993 — is damaged within the next month, he will not be covered.

He said he hadn't acted sooner because he couldn't afford the $445 annual policy. "I'm stupid for waiting," he said. "They told me the water was coming. I had to find a person I could borrow money from."

The Nation in brief

■ Police arrest 25 at abortion protest

LOS ANGELES — About 400 protesters on both sides of the abortion battle staged a noisy standoff at a clinic Saturday, drawing police in riot gear and ending with 25 arrests.

Abortion foes trying to block the doors of The Women's Medical Clinic came up against a larger group of pro-choice demonstrators who kept the doors open.

A city ordinance that took effect last week makes it illegal to interfere with the operation of a clinic.

At least 60 police officers, some in riot gear and some on horses, kept order during the two-hour demonstration.

About 300 abortion rights advocates arrived first and some stood guard at the entrance so patients could enter safely. Soon after, about 100 members of the anti-abortion group Operation Rescue arrived and tried to block the doors.

The two sides shouted at each other. In the end, 23 abortion opponents and two counter-demonstrators were arrested for investigation of misdemeanors, including failure to disperse and disorderly conduct.

■ Allegation may claim another O.J. juror

LOS ANGELES — Allegations of note-passing among jurors at the O.J. Simpson trial may claim another member of the panel, the Los Angeles Times reported Saturday.

Francine Florio-Bunten was dismissed from the jury Thursday after denying she had been working on a book or had received a note from another juror. Now, the juror who allegedly passed the note may be dismissed when the trial resumes Tuesday, the newspaper said, citing unidentified sources.

The juror, a 28-year-old Hispanic woman, is under investigation for misconduct, the Times reported. The note, which was retrieved, warned Florio-Bunten that she may be questioned about "the book."

Both women denied knowing anything about the note when confronted by Superior Court Judge Lance Ito, the newspaper said.

"I guess he felt that I had seen the note and wasn't forthcoming," Florio-Bunten told reporters Friday.

She was the eighth juror removed, leaving four alternates in the murder trial. Simpson is charged with killing ex-wife Nicole Brown Simpson and her friend, Ronald Goldman, on June 12.

Florio-Bunten said Ito called her into his chambers on Thursday afternoon and read her excerpts from a letter accusing her of having a book deal.

■ Injured Secret Service officer goes home

WASHINGTON (AP) — A Secret Service officer shot during a struggle with a man who scaled the White House fence left the hospital Saturday.

Scott Giambattista, 35, who was hit in the arm, "will recuperate at home and will need some physical therapy," said Merle Goldberg, spokeswoman at George Washington University Medical Center.

Leland William Modjeski, 37, of nearby Falls Church, Va., the man accused of climbing the White House fence Tuesday night carrying an unloaded gun, remained hospitalized in good condition, Goldberg said.

Modjeski, who has a history of mental problems, has been charged with assaulting Secret Service officers and carrying a firearm across state lines with the intent to commit a felony. Each crime carries a maximum penalty of 10 years imprisonment.

Modjeski remained under guard in a hospital room. He has a court hearing scheduled for Tuesday, but Goldberg refused to say when he would be released.

Giambattista and Modjeski were wounded by the same bullet, fired by another Secret Service agent as the two grappled on the White House grounds, authorities said.

Midwest expects flood-soaked holiday weekend

Associated Press

Rain fell in the Midwest on Saturday as volunteers filled more sandbags in case of renewed flooding along the swollen Missouri, Mississippi and Illinois rivers.

With thunderstorms scattered across Illinois, Gov. Jim Edgar ordered 160 members of the National Guard to join the flood-fighting effort.

The Baptist Church was about the only dry spot in Commerce, Mo., said Connie Thompson, whose husband is pastor of the hilltop church in the town 110 miles south of St. Louis.

"It's worse than '93," Thompson said. "The water this year has gotten places it has never gotten before."

About 90 percent of the 150 residents had been forced from their homes by the flooding, she said.

"For the most part, the people have pretty much banded together. Here in town, whoever needs help the worst, we go there."

Edina, in far northeastern Missouri, got 2 inches of rain in less than 30 minutes. Strong thunderstorms were reported around Bowling Green, about 70 miles north of St. Louis, and near Branson in southwestern Missouri. By late afternoon, thundershowers began rolling through St. Louis.

Upstream from St. Louis, near the confluence of the Missouri and Mississippi rivers, parts of St. Charles County remained under water. Crews spent the day filling sandbags for people living along streams and creeks that might rise again.

Farther upstream in the Missouri River's watershed, heavy rain fell overnight in south-central Nebraska, with 3.4 inches at Kenesaw.

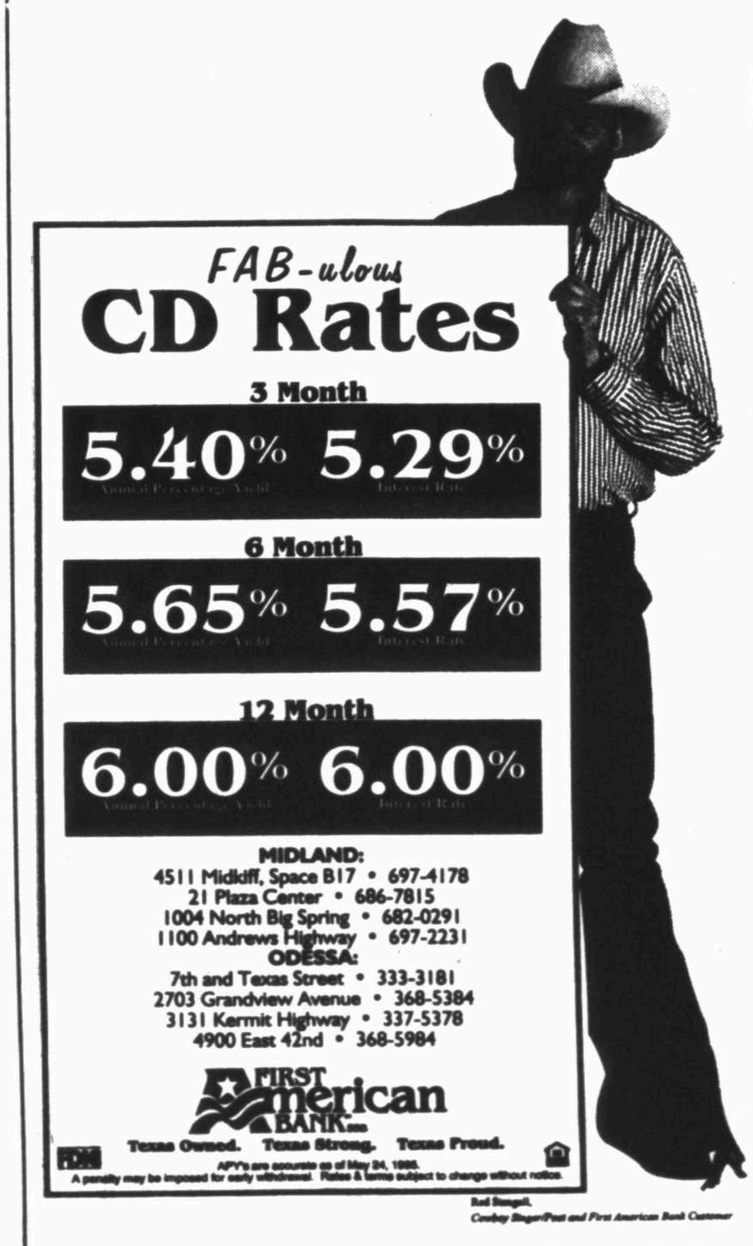

Along the eastern side of the Mississippi Valley, volunteers and inmates filled sandbags along the rising Illinois River in Illinois' Morgan and Scott counties, where the guard members were activated.

"The work is going fast and feverish," said Sheila Dusterhaus, a village trustee in the Illinois River town of Meredosia.

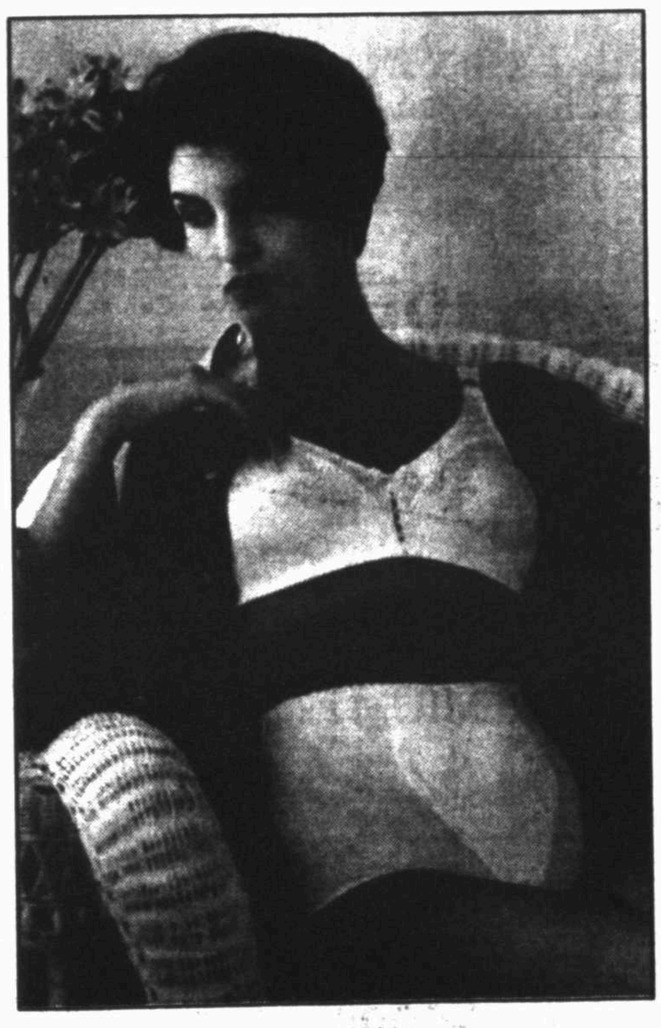

Dusterhaus said the river was about 2 feet from the top of a levee near one neighborhood on the north side of town, and about 10 families had already been evacuated.

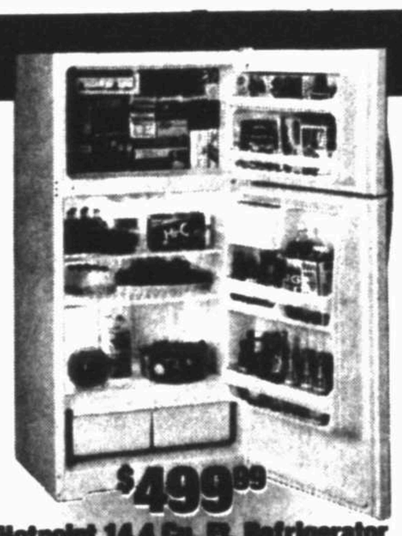

The town held its annual Riverfest despite the flooding.

"It's not exactly one of our better ones," she said.

International support lags for U.S. stance on Japan, auto trade

■ World community almost universally condemns what many believe is 'sentence first, trial later' style of high-handed American justice.

By Martin Crutsinger
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The Clinton administration must be feeling lonely in its high-stakes showdown with Japan over autos and auto parts.

Instead of support, it has received almost universal condemnation from the international community for what many believe is a "sentence first, trial later" style of high-handed American justice.

Critics have accused the administration of flouting the new global trade rules it played such a big part in writing by threatening to impose punitive tariffs on $5.9 billion worth of Japanese luxury cars unless a deal is reached to expand American sales opportunities in Japan.

At the 25-nation meeting of the Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development meeting last week in Paris, not one country sided with the U.S. position.

Critics such as German Economics Minister Gunter Rexrodt accused the administration of resorting to "prehistoric behavior," beating his chest like a cave man to illustrate his point.

At issue is America's unilateral declaration that 100 percent tariffs on 13 models of Japanese luxury cars will take effect on June 28 if no agreement is reached.

The critics argue that is a clear violation of the rules of the new World Trade Organization, which allows imposition of trade sanctions only if a country wins its case before a WTO panel.

The administration says the United States has every right to impose sanctions because the Japanese trade barriers it is fighting fall outside WTO rules.

The United States agreed Friday to hold "consultations" with Japan, the first step in a WTO case, but rejected a request to start talks immediately. In a maneuver designed to increase pressure on Japan, the United States picked June 20 to begin discussions — one week before the sanctions take effect.

Critics contend that the U.S. position sets a terrible precedent for the fledgling WTO, which came into existence this January to succeed the old General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade.

The new WTO was given more power to act as a "supreme court" of world trade compared to the generally toothless GATT. What kind of message does it send, critics wonder, if the United States, the world's largest economy, chooses to act outside of the WTO rules?

"I don't favor the use of threats and the implementation of threats that are contrary to world trade rules," complained Sir Leon Brittan, the 15-nation European Union's top trade official.

■ News analysis

Japan is hoping that this international condemnation, coupled with grass roots pressure from the more than 2,000 American dealers who handle the targeted cars, will stave off the sanctions.

Many supporters of free trade in the United States have been critical of the U.S. threats. Former Rep. Jack Kemp, head of Empower America, a conservative political advocacy group, termed the administration's demands a "desperate strategy that shows no faith in the concept of free trade."

Despite the criticism, the administration is showing no signs of backing down. It does have strong support from U.S. automakers and their unions, a point critics have used against the administration, seeing the tough rhetoric as an attempt to win blue collar votes in next year's presidential race in key states such as Michigan and Ohio.

The administration says America's nearly $66 billion trade deficit with Japan, nearly 60 percent in autos and parts, leaves no choice but to attack what it terms a pernicious system of barriers to the sale of U.S. products.

"I find it totally hypocritical for the Japanese to accuse us of rigging our economy (to favor domestic producers) when they have perfected the art," said Commerce Undersecretary Jeffrey Garten, one of the lead negotiators in the auto talks.

Even with all the tough talk on both sides, trade analysts believe the odds favor an 11th-hour compromise before the sanctions take effect on June 28.

"In these types of disputes the rhetoric often gets very hot right before both sides find a way to get a deal," said Greg Mastel, trade specialist at the Economic Strategy Institute, a Washington think tank. "In 25 years of trade disputes with Japan, we have only imposed sanctions once."

NAACP to cut staff to reduce spending

BALTIMORE (AP) — Faced with a $3.8 million deficit and an order to rein in spending by 40 percent, the NAACP will cut staff and may close some of its offices.

"It has become clear that the first priority for our new leadership must be to put our financial house in order," new chairwoman Myrlie B. Evers-Williams said Friday.

Cuts to the 74-member core staff will be substantial, and some of the seven regional offices will probably be consolidated, said acting executive director Earl T. Shinhoster.

Officials were to meet Tuesday with staff members, most of whom spent two months in the fall on unpaid furlough, and will set up a schedule to pay off creditors, treasurer Francisco L. Borges said.

Clinton urges Congress to OK his proposals to fight terrorism

■ Critics maintain that president's measures go too far, could erode constitutional protections.

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Turning up pressure for his anti-terrorism package, President Clinton accused congressional critics Saturday of trying to deny police expanded wiretap authority and other tools they need for a fight "we have to be able to win."

"I want the police to stop those people cold," Clinton said in his weekly radio address. "The restrictive view taken by some people in Congress would handicap our ability to track terrorists down, follow them when they move and prevent their attacks on innocent people."

Congressional critics maintain that Clinton's proposals go too far, and could erode constitutional protections and infringe on civil liberties.

At issue are Clinton proposals to:

■ Expand wiretap authority. Clinton wants police to be able to move their wiretaps without getting a new court order each time terrorists move to evade surveillance.

"We shouldn't force law enforcement to lose valuable time by making them get a court to agree that a terrorist is trying to knowingly evade us," Clinton argued.

The Senate voted 52-28 on Friday to block a Democratic attempt to expand the government's wiretapping authority. Republicans expressed concern that the provision could infringe on the civil liberties of domestic political groups.

■ Expand the role of the military in fighting terrorism. Clinton wants to involve the military when terrorists are contemplating the use of biological or chemical weapons. Currently, the military can join in criminal investigations only when they involve nuclear weapons.

"There's simply no reason why we should use anything less than the very best we have to fight and stop the extraordinary threat now posed by chemical and biological terrorism all around the world," Clinton said.

Critics are wary of giving the military a greater role in domestic law enforcement, warning of potential government abuse of individual rights.

■ Place traceable materials in chemicals that can be used to make bombs. Clinton wants to include tiny plastic tracers known as "taggants" in certain explosive materials so that bombs can be tracked to their source.

"Every day that goes by without a law like this a terrorist can walk into a store and buy material that is virtually untraceable," Clinton said.

The idea of explosive tracers has been around for years, drawing opposition from the explosives industry and the National Rifle Association, which cited safety concerns. Critics also argue tagging would push up the price of explosives and gunpowder, and could put miners and others who work with them at risk.

Clinton rejected suggestions that any of the three proposals was over-reaching, saying that the battle against terrorism was "a fight we have to be able to win."

"Constitutional protections and legal restrictions are not being repealed," he said. "We are simply giving law enforcement agencies who are committed to fighting terrorists for us the tools they need to succeed in the modern world."

Clinton unveiled his $1.5 billion anti-terrorism package one week after the April 19 bombing in Oklahoma City. Congressional leaders supported many of its provisions and pledged to complete work by Memorial Day.

However, work on the legislation was delayed while legislators focused on the federal budget and amid partisan finger-pointing over the best way to get tough with terrorists.

Pistol in executed man's cell planted, prison officials say

RICHMOND, Va. (NYT) — Virginia prison officials said Saturday that a loaded pistol may have been planted in a typewriter in the cell of a man who was executed Thursday, and that they had concluded his lawyer's report about the weapon must be part of a hoax.

In a three-page statement, officials said that no fingerprints were found on the gun and that the lawyer had improperly taken the typewriter that was said to contain the gun.

The man who was executed, Willie Lloyd Turner, became one of Virginia's best-known prisoners on death row as he repeatedly demonstrated his talent for fashioning keys, swords and bombs from goods as mundane as soap.

"Much has been said about that fact that this was Willie Lloyd Turner's last attempt to embarrass the Department of Corrections," said the corrections director, Ronald J. Angelone. "People that knew Turner have indicated that they believe that he would have wanted to leave his signature on that gun in the form of fingerprints."

Angelone added, "There is no reason why inmate Turner would have wrapped the fingerprints clean before placing the gun in the typewriter."

Turner's lawyer, Walter J. Walvick of Washington, had said he discovered the .32-caliber Smith & Wesson and 18 rounds of ammunition when he followed his client's instructions to open the typewriter he had left behind.

Gov. George F. Allen, a Republican, said on statewide radio Friday that the incident might be "just a stunt by a defense attorney."

In an interview Saturday, Walvick strongly denied he had faked the incident. "All I can say is, the governor must be embarrassed," said Walvick, 52. "He's under great pressure. They're going to try to bury this thing."

Walvick said he had pried open the machine in the presence of two newspaper reporters, but Corrections Department officials said that they found the circumstances suspicious.

"By removing the typewriter from the institution without an inspection, Walvick broke the department's chain of custody of the evidence that would have proven that the gun really was in the facility at that time," said the report today.

"Turner's attorney declined to go over that inventory and immediately had the property transferred to his car."

"Mr. Walvick is quoted as saying that the reporters were coming to the room for a drink, not as witnesses, but he waited until they were there to open the typewriter," the statement added.

The report pointed to "the possibility of an elaborate hoax," and said the investigation was closed.

Attorneys bring contrasting styles to defense of bombing suspect

By Paul Queary
Associated Press

OKLAHOMA CITY — Bombing suspect Terry Nichols' defense lawyers are a study in contrasts — a fiery law professor who quotes scripture in court teamed with a former prosecutor who specializes in defending white-collar cases.

Austin law professor Michael Tigar, 54, heads the defense team for Nichols, who along with Timothy McVeigh is charged in the April 19 bombing that claimed 167 lives and wounded hundreds more.

Joining Tigar is Ron Woods, 57, who was appointed U.S. Attorney for the Houston area in November 1990 by former President Bush. He resigned in January 1993, shortly after President Clinton's election.

'Being appointed to a case of this kind is a serious disruption. But I didn't think it was right for me to try to wiggle out.'

— Michael Tigar, Austin law professor

"Tigar is a brilliant legal strategist. He thinks in grand schemes and really thinks in unconventional ways," said Dick DeGuerin, a Houston lawyer who has worked with both Tigar and Woods.

"He's also a true persuader. He's got a magnetic personality, he's attractive, he's funny."

While their styles contrast, Woods will complement Tigar as the case progresses, DeGuerin said.

"His forte is in knowing federal and state investigations from the inside and in being able to marshal minutia and recall specifically many complex facts," DeGuerin said.

The case against Nichols promises to be complex. A search of his Herington, Kan., house turned up detonator cord, ammonium nitrate and fuel oil, ingredients like those the FBI believe were used to construct the 4,800-pound bomb used in Oklahoma City. Tigar maintains the materials seized in the search could be used for peaceful purposes such as stump removal.

FBI agents have admitted that some evidence indicates that Nichols may not have been in Oklahoma on the day of the bombing, and Tigar maintains that witnesses will refute the government's contention that his client helped McVeigh build the bomb.

Tigar, Woods and DeGuerin worked together to successfully defend Sen. Kay Bailey Hutchison against criminal ethics charges. The Texas Republican had been accused of abusing her former office as state treasurer.

Tigar's client list includes controversial figures such as John Demjanjuk, radical Angela Davis and the Chicago Seven anti-war protesters, who were tried for conspiracy to incite riots at the 1968 Democratic National Convention.

Demjanjuk, a Cleveland auto worker who had been sentenced to die for being Nazi death camp guard "Ivan the Terrible," was freed after Tigar argued his case before Israel's Supreme Court.

"He's a giant among midgets in our profession," said Gerry Goldstein, a San Antonio attorney who is president of the National Association of Criminal Defense Lawyers.

Both men have said they accepted the Nichols case out of a sense of professional responsibility, not a desire for publicity.

"Being appointed to a case of this kind is a serious disruption. But I didn't think it was right for me to try to wiggle out," Tigar said.

Tigar would not discuss the Nichols case in detail, declining even to say whether he would seek to have the case moved away from the emotional atmosphere of Oklahoma City.

"In a case like this, I don't think anyone's interest is served by me trying my case in the press," Tigar said.

When Tigar first appeared on Nichols' behalf at a preliminary hearing on May 18, he did so with flair and not a little showmanship, quoting law and the Bible and badgering the federal authorities who accused his client. His rhetoric sparked a heated response from Merrick Garland, the Justice Department official who argued for the government at the hearing.

"He did a first-rate piece of defense work, it's a pleasure to watch him," said Stephen Jones, the lead attorney for McVeigh. "You don't find many crocodiles this far inland, do you?" Jones remarked to a reporter after the hearing.

An expert in death penalty defense, Tigar helped found the Texas Resource Center in Austin, which represents death row inmates in post-conviction appeals.

Tigar has been a professor at the University of Texas for 11 years, but plans to take at least a half-time leave of absence this coming year. The university normally pays him $147,572 per year. He and Woods will each be paid $125 per hour to defend Nichols, substantially less than they charge clients who can afford to pay the market rate.

One family's nightmare: They stood by one son but lost another

By Sarah Nordgren
Associated Press

CRETE, Ill. — On St. Patrick's Day, Roger and Gayle Pfiel relaxed at a party — a respite from their waking nightmare, the murder accusation against their youngest son that had hung over their family for more than a year.

They returned home to find a cataclysm.

Six squad cars and two ambulances lined the pothole-scarred rural road that separated their large and isolated Tudor home from a fallow cornfield.

Inside, their elder son lay dead, beaten with a baseball bat, his throat slashed with a meat cleaver. A young family member, the one whose hysterical telephone call had summoned help, had been raped.

For a family that already had too much grief to bear, there was one more terrible blow in store.

Police told them it was not an intruder who was responsible for the violence, but Steven — the baby-faced, 18-year-old son who had been charged with killing a young girl 20 months before.

> 'It's a tremendous loss. There are no magic words that make this go away.'
> — Raymond Pijon, Pfiels' attorney

The son for whom they posted a $100,000 bond and moved the family to the rural home when the taunts and glares of neighbors became too much. The son who, days later, penned a note to his parents from a jail cell.

"Mom and dad," Steven Pfiel wrote, "now I've killed two people."

"WOULDN'T IT BE cool," Pfiel once told his friend Ed Prasauskas, "to stab someone in the head with this?"

In his hands he held a knife. He had pulled it from under the car seat, Prasauskas told the Chicago Tribune.

After the murders, those who knew Steven Pfiel searched their memories for indications of murderous rage in a boy who was raised under comfortable circumstances, in a ranch house under towering oaks.

Prasauskas, 18, remembered seeing his friend smash his stereo speakers with a pool cue; others recalled that he had been arrested once for smoking marijuana and drinking alcohol outside of his home.

Pfiel reveled in shooting pool, riding in fast cars and cranking up the volume when he listened to metal bands. He ran with a fast crowd at Stagg High School, where his record was unremarkable.

"There was nothing in his activities in school that would indicate anything like this would happen," said Jim Sibley, school community relations coordinator.

PFIEL KNEW HILLARY Norskog, though they were just acquaintances. Hillary was 13, about to enter high school. Eighth-grade graduation had come and gone; her Size 2 shocking pink-and-black graduation minidress had been dry-cleaned and tucked safely back in her closet.

She was just starting to spend evenings away from the watchful eyes of her single mother. On July 14, 1993, she kissed her mom goodbye; she would likely party with friends, she said, and spend the night with a girlfriend.

Hillary and her friends headed to Hidden Pond Woods in a nearby forest preserve. The teens sat at picnic tables, laughed, drank a couple beers. At some point, Hillary apparently decided against spending the night at her girlfriend's. She left the forest preserve in time to meet her 10:30 curfew.

Friends say that Steven Pfiel, just turned 17, offered her a ride home.

Three days later, two people walking behind a subdivision of million dollar homes not far from Hidden Pond found Hillary's 80-pound body in a field of weeds. Beaten, stabbed and too decomposed to immediately identify, investigators recognized the Jurassic Park T-shirt her mother had described.

"She was so tiny," Norskog said. "She never had a chance."

STEVEN WAS ARRESTED July 20 outside of his family's Palos Park home, a short car ride from Hillary's condominium. He told police the blood red stains that covered the seats of his 1988 Chevrolet were Kool-Aid.

He remained behind bars until Oct. 3, when his parents posted $100,000 of a $1 million bond.

From the moment of her daughter's death, Marsha Norskog was determined to ensure that Hillary was not forgotten. She appeared on "Oprah," tipped reporters to forthcoming events, orchestrated an elaborate memorial service for her daughter and kept in constant touch with the prosecutor.

The petite, well-manicured brunette also took her share of criticism, mostly from those who felt she should have alerted police sooner than midday on Saturday — when she realized Hillary was not at a girlfriend's house — that her daughter was missing.

Although Norskog kept intense pressure on prosecutors and police, the case against Steven was delayed again and again as attorneys wrangled over DNA evidence and its admissibility.

The trial has been put off once again, until June 21. Pfiel has been found fit to stand trial, but prosecutors and defense attorneys say they are working on plea agreements in both the Norskog case and the murder and rape case.

The Pfiels, meanwhile, sat behind their youngest son at every court hearing and continued to back him publicly.

Media scrutiny had become excruciating, and the Pfiels decided to move. The family settled in rural Crete, more than 30 miles from Palos Park.

Other than a rowdy teen party late last summer, neighbors say they kept to themselves, the Pfiels kept to themselves.

By several accounts, Steven remained tight with his brother Roger, older by one year. Roger defended his sibling against those who believed him guilty.

"They were really close," said friend Shawn Baker.

"He was his only friend out there," another friend, John Grigus, told the Tribune.

ON THE NIGHT of March 17, Roger and Gayle Pfiel left home for the 50-mile drive to Chicago and the St. Patrick's Day party. In the hours after they left, the Pfiel home became a slaughterhouse.

How it came to pass, police do not know. But at 7:13 a.m. on Saturday, they received a frantic call from a young female family member, asking for help.

By the time police arrived, Roger Pfiel, was dead in a bedroom. Police say he had been bludgeoned and slashed. The young woman who alerted police had been raped. Steven Pfiel had fled the home, taking with him his father's shotgun and two rifles, said Will County Deputy Chief John Moss.

Several hours later, Mayor Michael Einhorn heard a knock at the front door of Crete's tiny Village Hall.

"I need to talk to somebody," said a young man wearing a black Metallica T-shirt. "I think I'm in some trouble."

The mayor called police, who arrested Steven Pfiel. Sheriff's police say Steven made a full confession to his brother's death but gave no motive.

Pfiel's parents have not visited their son since the day they returned home to find their lives undone.

"It's a tremendous loss," said their attorney, Raymond Pijon. "I don't think there's any way to assess it. There are no magic words that make this go away."

Phone company, unions make progress, avert strike

■ AT&T Corp. officials praise decision to continue talks past midnight deadline.

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The nation's largest long-distance telephone company and two unions made progress late Saturday toward resolving a key conflict over retirees' health care costs, averting the threat of a midnight strike.

"Progress has been made on the retiree health care issue, and we're hopeful we can continue to make progress," said Anne Marklin, a spokeswoman for the Communications Workers of America. "We see no immediate threat of a strike at midnight."

AT&T Corp. officials praised the unions' decision to continue talks past the midnight deadline.

"We are encouraged by the progress of these negotiations, and we are particularly encouraged by the unions' decision to avoid a strike (at midnight), as both sides had wanted," said AT&T spokesman Herb Linnen.

Neither side would detail the progress on the company's original proposal to shift health costs to some retirees.

Linnen would say only that there were "very constructive discussions" concerning "in what manner this escalating retiree health care issue can be resolved."

In the event of an eventual strike, the company plans to continue its national and worldwide service uninterrupted, using managers as telephone operators, Linnen said.

He also said efforts will be made to keep open AT&T's manufacturing plants in 17 states even though it probably would not be possible to run assembly lines at peak efficiency in all of them.

The two unions, the communications workers and the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, represent 101,000 of the company's workers. Of those, about 80,000 are CWA members and the remainder, IBEW members.

Workers in both unions had authorized a strike if agreement could not be reached on a new three-year contract by midnight, but union officials also had authority to extend talks if progress was made. Negotiations began April 3.

The clock also was stopped in 1992 to permit more time to reach agreement on the current contract.

Both sides said other unresolved issues included wages and pensions, employment security and union access to jobs in AT&T units currently outside its jurisdiction.

The issue of retiree health costs is a major concern for AT&T, its officials have stressed, noting that health benefits for union and management retirees cost the company $622 million in 1994 alone.

The company had proposed capping its contributions for health care to 22,000 union workers who have retired since March 1990. About 66,000 employees who retired before then would not be affected.

Linnen said the company has offered to expand and improve employee health care, to enhance employees' savings and life insurance plans and to improve job security.

"And we have made a wage offer of about a 7 percent increase over three years, plus bonuses," he said.

Use of eagles, hawks in rites sparks tension between tribes

By William F. Rawson
Associated Press

PHOENIX — Each spring, members of the Hopi tribe climb across high desert cliffs in northern Arizona, looking for 20 or so baby golden eagles and red-tailed hawks to be used in religious ceremonies later in the summer.

And each spring, neighboring Navajos accuse the Hopis of trespassing on their reservation land and depleting eagle and hawk populations.

The birds are central to the religious traditions of both tribes.

The Hopis value them so much their young men endure arduous, dangerous work to collect the nestlings on rugged, imposing cliffs.

The Navajos have reluctantly permitted the bird-gathering in past years but dug in their heels this year under the administration of a new president.

It took the threat of a court injunction for the Hopis to secure permission to look for eagles and hawks on Navajo land, said Hopi spokeswoman Kim Secakuku.

Both sides speak defiantly of protecting their religious freedoms. But there is more than religion at stake in the dispute.

Navajo President Albert Hale agreed to allow Hopi eagle-gatherers access to nesting sites on Navajo land this year and meetings will be held to work out a compromise that will ensure access in future years, Ms. Secakuku said.

"We were in the process (of filing for an injunction) when our attorneys were able to get hold of Hale," she said. "He was on the line before we got it filed."

Hale suggested a meeting of "medicine people" from both tribes to work out an agreement both can live with.

But Farrell Secakuku, chairman of the Hopi tribe, said that won't work because "Hopi medicine people generally do not take part in eagle pilgrimages."

Both sides speak defiantly of protecting their religious freedoms. But there is more than religion at stake in the dispute.

The Hopis and Navajos are old enemies. The reservation of the mesa-dwelling Hopis, who number about 10,000, is surrounded by the Navajo Nation, which has a population of more than 150,000.

Hopis have lived in fear for generations that they would be swallowed up by the Navajos, relative newcomers to a region where Hopis have lived in established villages for nearly 1,000 years.

The U.S. government designated more than two million acres as a joint use area. The tribes continued arguing and Congress partitioned the land between them in 1974.

Tribal members caught on the wrong side of the new boundaries were ordered to relocate. As many as 1,000 Navajos remain on Hopi land, however, and negotiations for their removal are bogged down.

Secakuku hinted at the linkage between the religious and land issues in a statement directed at Hale:

"This type of action by the Navajo Nation is unacceptable and it will not support our ongoing and sincere efforts to reach an agreement with your people that will accommodate their living on Hopi land."

Neither species of bird is considered endangered or threatened. John Cross, acting regional director for the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service in Albuquerque, N.M., said his agency has been trying to get the tribes together to conduct a survey of golden eagle and red-tailed hawk populations on the two reservations.

Bike patrol protects mall customers

By Katherine Poteet
Staff Writer

A little extra cash and the donation of a bicycle has resulted in a new program to keep Midland Park Mall better in touch with its customers.

A security officer will be riding a bike patrol through the parking lot on weekends — not particularly watching for crime, but looking out for the customers.

"Our job is the customers," said Bill Gilstrap, loss prevention supervisor for the mall. "The security officers are here for the customers. This was chance to be better in touch with them."

Gilstrap said the bike patrol was not budgeted for this year, but a monetary donation from Sears and a bike donated by Peyton's Bikes allowed the program to be put in place. The patrol began rolling April 13.

"We are test driving it right now," Gilstrap said. "If it is something that will work out for us, then we will budget for another bike next year."

If the program is continued next year, the addition of another bike will allow officers to continue the bike patrol throughout the week.

The mall's six security officers rotate working the patrol on the weekends. The other officers use the patrol vehicles.

"The vehicles put up such a barrier between us and the public," he said. "This way, we can better help our customers. We are closer to them, in a literal way."

Gilstrap said the Midland Police Department's bike patrol was an influence on the mall to establish a similar program.

"They (the police) work a bike patrol at the mall during the Christmas holidays," Gilstrap said. "We had an eight-hour seminar from the police on how to establish and work a bike patrol.

Many cities and malls are going to bike patrols because it is more visible and very mobile," he said. "We don't have a major crime problem at the mall, but we do need to do what's best for our customers."

Police charge youth suspected in bombing hoax

■ Peter Koh,18, allegedly phoned in a bomb threat May 16, causing evacuation of the Fort Worth public schools' administration building.

Associated Press

GREENVILLE — Luck ran out for an elusive 18-year-old honor student accused of masterminding an elaborate bomb hoax when an alert service station employee recognized the fugitive Saturday and called police.

Peter Koh, who was traveling in a van with three teen-agers, was arrested early Saturday shortly after he stopped at a gas station along Interstate 30 and was recognized by an employee, police said.

If convicted of the federal charge of making a telephone bomb threat, Koh could face up to five years in prison and a $5,000 fine.

"When he looked up at me, he looked a lot like the guy on the TV the FBI was looking for on the fake bombing in Fort Worth," said store clerk Jason Banditt.

Alerted, Greenville officers stopped the van a few minutes later, found a prohibited weapon in the van and arrested Koh and his traveling companions, dispatcher Angie Meyer said.

Koh was taken to the FBI office in Fort Worth, then to the Federal Detention Center in suburban Mansfield. He was arraigned before U.S. Magistrate Alex McGlinchey on Saturday.

Charged with a state prohibited weapon count were Koh; his 17-year-old brother, Michael Koh; and Steven Pedro, 18. The younger Koh and Pedro remained at the Hunt County Jail in Greenville. All are Paschal High School students.

An unidentified male juvenile was also taken into custody on a similar charge. He was being held in the Hunt County Juvenile Detention Facility, police said.

The weapon was described as a short-barreled shotgun, said Greenville police Lt. James Fortenberry. Two other guns, reportedly a pistol and an assault rifle, also were found. With proper permits, both are legal weapons.

FBI spokeswoman Marjorie Poche said Saturday that only the elder Koh was charged on the federal count. However, the bureau is still investigating his brother and their companions, she said.

The FBI announced Thursday that Peter Koh was their lead suspect in the Western Heritage celebration spotlights ranching, cowboys

Real honest-to-goodness working cowboys and cowgirls and cowboy poets, storytellers, and singers will be rolling and galloping into town in early June to help Midlanders celebrate their "Western Heritage."

The event is the eighth annual Midland Ranch Rodeo Association's Western Heritage Celebration, including the Ranch Rodeo, set for June 4 through June 11.

The celebration "brings history back from the 1880s to present-day Midland," said J.P. "Pat" McDaniel, a Midland businessman, who is president of the Midland Ranch Rodeo Association. His background and heritage are in ranching.

The traditional centerpiece of the event is the Ranch Rodeo's five traditional events: wild-cow milking, double mugging, team roping, team sorting and calf-branding.

The rodeo events and other cowboy chores, such as chuckwagon cooking, and cowboy and cowgirl singing and poetry-reading all blend together to illustrate that "hard work can be fun," The cowboys and cowgirls are role models for the youngsters, McDaniel said.

The celebration makes for a "fun thing" for the cowboys and cowgirls who "come to town and participate in this rodeo," McDaniel said.

"They do it everyday for a living, but it's fun to come to town and do this and be with each other. It's become sort of a reunion for the agricultural community."

The plains, mountains, and plateaus of West Texas are steeped in a "strong ranching heritage that goes way back into the 1880s," said rancher Candi Cowden, who with Ralph Powell and the late Charlie Welch founded and launched the Ranch Rodeo in 1988. "It (ranching) is my ancestry. It is my livelihood, but I enjoy it, too."

The Ranch Rodeo was founded "to reflect the true cowboy spirit."

Recent health reports have turned world upside down

Ott

OK, let me see if I have this straight.

In just the past few days, I have read, both in this newspaper as well as other publications, that (1) eating eggs is not necessarily all that bad for you; (2) just because you have quit smoking for 20 years doesn't mean you won't eventually get lung cancer; and (3) too much exercise can kill you.

All of this, by the way, comes on the heels of earlier reports that noted it is no longer considered fashionable for men to be overly sensitive to a woman's "inner feelings" — at least not in the mode of a 1970s version of Alan Alda — that driving a BMW is no guarantee that you will automatically be viewed a financial success by your peers, and that eating quiche just because some wimpy California magazine writer tells you to is REALLY stupid, especially if the main ingredient is spinach.

In other words, the world has turned topsy-turvy.

What used to be in, is now out.

What was once considered crude behavior is now socially acceptable.

As a result, those of us who like to view ourselves as living on the cutting edge of social trends are at a loss.

How are we supposed to act?

What do we eat? Wear? Talk about?

These are just a few of the hundreds of questions that need to be answered. I mean, we're halfway through the '90s and we don't even have a catch phrase for the decade. The '80s were the pits, as anyone with a sense of history recalls, but at least we knew we were supposed to be greedy and selfish.

Not so with the '90s. Instead, we have an entire generation of potential "hip" people, or at least those who want to be, walking around in a daze, with no clue as to which direction to turn. They are aimless. Like sheep, they need someone to lead them, to tell them how to behave, to provide an identity with which to relate.

Well, hold on a second. We just might have an answer.

And, it comes from a most unlikely source, some gentleman from Tennessee, as a matter of fact, who, when asked to describe the current decade, came up with this classic: "The Whiny Nineties."

I love it. And it is such a perfect fit.

Think about it.

HOAX: Police arrest 18-year-old in connection with bomb threat

(From 1B)

May 16 hoax at the Fort Worth public schools' administration building.

The building was evacuated after a rented truck was found parked in front of the building, then someone phoned saying there was a bomb inside the building.

Authorities found the truck loaded with sacks of concrete mix doused in diesel fuel. Officials traced the truck to a Fort Worth rental agency, where the vehicle allegedly was rented for $150 cash by a man who used an Oklahoma driver's license and a fake Fort Worth address.

The hoax was reminiscent of the April 19 bombing of the Alfred P. Murrah Federal Building in Oklahoma City. More than 167 people were killed after a combination of fertilizer and fuel oil was detonated in a rented truck parked in front of the building.

"For the sake of these two young boys, it's springtime and they're high school kids — I hope you keep this in perspective," said the brothers' attorney, Tim Evans. "I don't want to belittle it in any way, but I don't want to blow it out of proportion either."

Koh, who had not been seen since May 18, had misplaced his study materials for the calculus exam taking place inside the building and had been distraught over the loss, his father, Sukjung Gerald Koh, told the Fort Worth Star-Telegram in a phone interview from Huntington, W.Va.

Sukjung Koh said Peter, a National Merit Scholarship finalist, had planned to attend the University of Texas at Austin this fall and pursue a career in investment banking.

The brothers had been left in the home alone to finish out the school year, the father said.

"We've lost our boy. It's so painful," said the father, a former president of the Korean American Association of Greater Fort Worth and Tarrant County. "I get upset and angry at my son but we'll have to pick up the pieces and carry on. I tried to raise my family in a responsible way. I thought they would be OK. ... I should've been there to supervise."

Greenville is about 80 miles northeast of Fort Worth.

Rio Grande Valley's museum memorializes WWII soldiers

By John Flores
The Monitor (McAllen)

EDINBURG — May 11, 1945. Just four days after Germany's surrender.

Less than two weeks after Hitler's suicide on April 30 in a Berlin bunker.

On that day a soldier from the Rio Grande Valley found himself in Hitler's mountaintop Berchtesgaden hideaway, known as the Eagle's Nest.

Among the first GIs to reach the Eagle's Nest, infantry Sgt. Albert Cattaruzza sat down in the dead Nazi leader's office to write a letter to the folks back home.

Grabbing a sheet of the Fuhrer's own letterhead, Cattaruzza typed a sarcastic note above the Nazi symbols and Adolf Hitler's name: "I still don't think he's dead. Do you?'

Cattarruza, a ski trooper attached to the U.S. 86th Infantry Division, included the quintessential soldier's notation: "I found a quart of cognac in (Field Marshal Hermann) Goering's house. At least I can say I got drunk on him."

Cattarruza, a McAllen businessman, was one of hundreds of soldiers from Texas' Rio Grande Valley who fought in the European Theater of Operations during World War II. Many American GIs now in their 70s and 80s mark the 50th anniversary of Germany's surrender to the Allies, signed May 7, 1945, by German Col. Gen. Alfred Jodl.

V-E Day was declared on May 8, officially ending the European phase of World War II.

Born and raised in Italy, Cattaruzza had lived in the United States. In Houston, a scant year before enlisting in the Army and shipped back to Europe to fight. He settled in the Valley after the war.

He managed to grab a few other items while exploring Hitler's vaunted Bavarian compound.

On display at the Hidalgo County Historical Museum in Edinburg, along with Cattaruzza-'s original letter, are a chrome cold-water faucet knob taken from Hitler's bathroom, a map of Hitler's Berchtesgaden compound, a publicity photo of Hermann Goering and family, a medallion with Hitler's profile and Nazi lapel pins.

The letter display, part of the museum's World War II exhibit, includes an album filled with photos of smiling GIs standing, sitting and smiling proudly before the site of the bombed-out Nazi headquarters.

Also displayed are old Nazi weapons, uniforms and medallions. Included in the exhibit is an original Nazi SS officer's uniform, an eerie death-camp reminder complete with skull and haunting red eyes on the front of the cap.

Cattaruzza's letter is a potent reminder of the terror of Hitler's reign. He writes with an air of incredibility, a macabre elation born of sudden relief following months of grinding horror in the field of battle.

In a nearby display case at the museum, a deadly German MG-34 machine gun rests near a long, ornately decorated Nazi dagger, one of the legendary P-38 automatic pistols and a Nazi flag.

Linda Cattaruzza, who still lives in the Valley, said her father, who died in 1993, took her back to Europe two decades ago. Battle scars were still visible 30 years after the war, others were hidden.

"(At Eagle's Nest), I could still see the huge craters left by the (British) bombs. ... You got a weird feeling," she said.

"My father got a picture off a German soldier, a prisoner of war, of a woman whose arms were bound, and she was looking toward the camera," Linda Cattaruzza said. "There was terror in her eyes. She was about to be killed by the Nazi soldiers ... Why would anyone carry a picture like that around with them?"

Edinburg lawyer E.G. Henrichson was a U.S. infantry officer fighting in Germany when his company was suddenly surrounded by Germans. He spent many months as a prisoner of war.

"I was damned glad to hear (of Hitler's death)," Henrichson said. "But I can't remember now where I was when he was killed. I remember where I was when Roosevelt died, and that was a blow to me. I was in prison."

Henrichson said no normal man would do the things Hitler did.

"He was a fringe idiot, over the edge," Henrichson said. "He was normal in some respects, but a complete egocentric. He thought he was God's gift to the Germans. He thought he knew it all.

"The feeling at the time was the we had only one real enemy," Henrichson said. "It wasn't the German people, it was Hitler."

Corwin Connell, an Edinburg lawyer and World War II historian, said Hitler's death was insignificant compared to the impending Allied victory in Europe.

"The viewpoint of the people then was that it didn't really matter, because Germany was kaput anyway," he said.

Connell recalled Graf Von Kalkart, a fellow law student in 1951 at Southern Methodist University. Von Kalkart, from Prussia, served in the German army. His father, a member of the German congress in Berlin, owned thousands of acres. One night in 1930, the father threw a party.

"Kalkart (the son) listened to this proponent of the obscure splinter group called the National Socialist party," Connell recalled. "He noticed this guy, Hitler, was kind of dominating the conversation. Very persuasive and wouldn't take no for an answer.

"But then Kalkart saw some pretty girls across the room and decided to find more interesting company," Connell said. "He told us he wouldn't have dreamed that the same insistent little man he'd seen at that party, representing a small, insignificant splinter group, would have become the Fuhrer."

Edinburg resident, Guadalupe Davila, now 75, is one World War II veteran who still can fit into the Army uniform, he wore 50 years ago. He was in the 3rd Infantry Division for three years, fighting in campaigns in North Africa, Sicily and the European mainland. He was in the Black Forest when he heard the news of Hitler's death.

"He was a brilliant man, there's no doubt about it, but a half-lunatic," Davila said. "I think he always thought for himself and not for anybody else. he wouldn't even blink an eye to kill any one of his officers or soldiers," he said.

Davila recounted an incident that gave him more insight into Hitler's mind.

"We were beating the Germans at Anzio Beach," he said. "Hitler summoned his officers. He told them he had his best divisions there and would not accept anything less than victory. He told the officers that the Americans would be defeated within three days.

"If anyone disagreed, he said, he'd shoot them on the spot."

On the home front, Hitler's death was an absolute harbinger of Allied victory.

Edinburg resident Barbara Albrecht was going to school in St. Paul, Minn., when she heard the news of Hitler's death.

"Everybody ran (into the street) ... People just went nuts. There were so many people, it closed the street down for about eight hours," Albrecht recalled. "People were hugging, screaming, happy. We were all saying that our boyfriends and husbands were finally coming home.

"Hitler's death meant the war had to end, and we knew that."

Politicians demand return to get-tough prison policies

Associated Press

DALLAS — Prisons: Squalid cells, black-and-white uniforms, tasteless gruel. Cable television, pool tables and New York steak.

Politicians are peddling a new image of justice in America, and an outraged public is eating it up. With it, they are demanding a return to the get-tough policies of the past. And increasingly, they are getting it.

In recent years prisoners have been denied cigarettes in California, coffee in Texas and the right to wear their hair long in South Carolina.

Elsewhere, movements are afoot to deny convicts conjugal visits, TV and weightlifting.

"I don't see why prisoners should eat better than our military troops and enjoy in-cell TV, cable TV and gourmet foods," said Rep. Dick Zimmer, R-N.J., a leader of the attack on prisoners' rights.

"In many ways, the function of prisons has been lost."

In February, the congressman offered an amendment to the crime bill that would limit amenities to the minimums required by law. The House approved the measure without Zimmer's "No Frills Prison Act," but he vows to continue his campaign.

The United States has 81 federal prisons, 1,424 state prisons and in 1993 county and city jails numbered 3,304. Together, they hold about 1.5 million people.

Until the early 1900s, prisons had few amenities. Cells had only a small, narrow opening for light and air. Buckets used for human waste were not emptied for weeks. Many prisoners went hungry and illness went untreated.

Conditions began improving during the early 1900s, when many states introduced education, job-training and recreation programs. Reforms increased in the 1960s after prisoners in New York's Attica prison rioted over race and inhumane treatment.

Now prisoners' advocates are fighting to keep what they won.

"People say, 'Let's take away the privileges,' but aren't putting anything in their place," said Charlie Sullivan, executive director of a prisoners' rights group in Washington, D.C. "You're going to have even more idleness, which I think will plant seeds for more disturbances."

Two recent uprisings, one in South Carolina and one in Texas, give strength to Sullivan's warnings.

In April, prisoners in Columbia, S.C. stabbed five guards and held two more hostage for 11 hours to protest a new short-hair and uniform policy.

In Huntsville in March, a racial brawl left one man in a local hospital and caused $65,000 in damage. Six days earlier, prison officials had banned smoking.

Sullivan heads Citizens United for the Rehabilitation of Errants, a national organization of 10,000 people that he grew out of a small San Antonio group fighting the death penalty in 1972.

Now, a lawmaker from the same city is proposing legislation that would ban weightlifting in Texas prisons. The bill is pending in the state Senate.

"A lot of us wish that we had the time to work out," said State Sen. Jeff Wentworth.

The Republican senator says he doesn't want to take away an inmates' right to exercise. Convicts, he says, would still have basketball, jogging and calisthenics.

Some prisoners say the deprivations are the tip of the iceberg as politicians realize that an easy way to maintain political power in the '90s is to propose pro-prison and anti-prisoner measures.

So inmates are fighting the latest proposals, even ones they don't see as personally important.

"The truth is such measures tend to affect a small minority of prisoners," said Larry J. Ross in a letter from the Gatesville prison in Texas, where he is serving a life sentence for murder.

Tissue-freezing program attempts to preserve near-extinct species

By Mike Drago
Associated Press

COLLEGE STATION — The Hunter's Hartebeest is lingering near the abyss of extinction.

The last one known to exist, a tawny, 5-year-old female that weighs 130 pounds and measures about six feet from hoof to gently curving horn, lives at the Gladys Porter Zoo in Brownsville, Texas. When she dies, an entire species of the antelope once abundant in eastern Africa will go with her.

Duane Kraemer probably can't stop that from happening, but his work at Texas A&M University could help put herds of Hunter's Hartebeest back on dusty African plains.

Kraemer is the modern-day Noah behind Project Noah's Ark, a fledgling effort to establish facilities around the world to gather and preserve the semen, eggs and embryos of endangered species.

Cryopreservation is a $10 word for the practice of freezing tissue at temperatures low enough to stop metabolism. Animal genomes are stored in thin plastic straws that usually are kept in liquid nitrogen at minus 196 degrees Celsius.

Kraemer and other researchers want to use cryopreservation to spur animal populations where current technology permits.

Where scientific methods don't yet exist, the goal is to preserve genetic material so extinct species can be re-established by implanting embryos in host animals.

Preserved sperm and eggs from the Hunter's Hartebeest, for example, could be implanted in another antelope species once researchers find one that is compatible.

While more conventional preservation methods, such as habitat protection and captive breeding, remain top priorities, Kraemer says a safety net is desperately needed. An estimated 2,000 animals species will vanish in the next century if current trends continue.

"In some cases, the endangered species is going to win. In other cases, the (human) development is going to win," said Kraemer, an associate dean at Texas A&M's College of Veterinary Medicine.

"We can't predict which. But we ought to be in there getting that genetic material preserved. ... If we don't do it, we're going to wish we had."

Researchers around the world have long used cryogenic methods to preserve genetic materials. The cattle industry uses an embryo transfer process in breeding, and zoos swap embryos to avoid inbreeding among their animal populations.

In the United States, the largest so-called frozen zoos are kept at the Cincinnati Zoo, the Henry Doorly Zoo in Omaha, Neb., the San Diego Zoo and the National Zoo in Washington, D.C.

In a nondescript, one-story building at Texas A&M, veterinary physiologist Mark Westhusin oversees a lab that keeps thousands of specimens in 10 liquid-nitrogen tanks about the size of a beer keg.

Westhusin and others at A&M are working to breed a hybrid of Armenian red sheep and desert big horn sheep that might carry embryos from the endangered Armenian to term.

In Cincinnati, in-vitro fertilization techniques have resulted in endangered Indian desert cats born to domestic cats, and the first test-tube tigers were born at the Omaha zoo.

What's lacking, according to Kraemer, is a coordinated network that helps frozen zoos work together to avoid overlapping efforts and an organization that sets out the species most in need of attention.

The various frozen zoos around the country collaborate from time to time, but cooperation is limited because of rivalries linked to their competition for funding.

Kraemer said existing facilities are focused primarily on "targets of opportunity" rather than a systematic search for animals in grave danger.

That's the dream for Project Noah's Ark, which Kraemer hopes to kick off officially this year with a fund-raising drive.

The project would be centered at Texas A&M, with three or four satellite facilities around the country and, ideally, mobile units traveling the world to collect genetic material.

It's a mammoth undertaking that Kraemer and one of his students, a woman who now works with the Omaha frozen zoo, first pitched in 1989 while applying for a $22 million National Science Foundation grant.

The request was rejected, but foundation officials acknowledged that Kraemer's idea should be pursued.

Kraemer, who almost resembles the biblical Noah if not for his white laboratory jacket and cowboy boots, decided to set up the non-profit Project Noah's Ark Foundation to solicit private donations.

The effort to obtain seed funding has been slow, but Kraemer said he decided he didn't want to rely on public funding in an era of slash-and-burn budget cutting.

"The main driving factor is long-term stability," he said. "If we put embryos, sperm, DNA into liquid nitrogen and someone says, 'We can't fund that anymore,' the effort will have been wasted.

"It doesn't cut out the possibility of us using public funds, but I clearly don't want to become dependent on it. That's the reason for this structure. Whether it will fly is yet to be determined."

Kraemer estimates it will cost at least $7.2 million to collect, preserve and study genomes of 15 top-priority species he has identified, including the snow leopard, spectacled bear, Amazon parrot and the Atwater's prairie chicken.

Naida Loskutoff, the Omaha zoo researcher who studied under Kraemer and helped him develop the idea, said she supports her mentor's work.

"We can talk about conservation and all that, but we're losing it," said Loskutoff, who recently found out that sperm preserved from a gorilla in her zoo had impregnated a gorilla at the Cincinnati zoo.

OTT: Keep your problem to yourself

when there were so many "It's not my fault" babies walking around? They are everywhere ... at work, in the family, on television, in the movies. You name a place, they are there.

What's particularly grating about these individuals, however, is that they not only constantly whine about their lot in life, but they insist on sharing those dreadful thoughts with others, namely us.

Indeed, the Tennessee man summed it up best. He said: "There used to be a general rule: Don't tell people your problems. Now everyone does."

And, making matters worse, they do it with a whiny voice, as if it were somehow alll our fault.

Well I have had it. I don't want to hear about how unfair life has been to you. We all have our crosses to bear.

So keep your problems to yourself.

But if you absolutely MUST share them with someone, call Geraldo, not me.

Aviator to retrace final route of flight pioneer Amelia Earhart

By Kelley Shannon
Associated Press

SAN ANTONIO — When the old Lockheed Electra 10-E arrived at her hangar, Linda Finch admits feeling a little strange standing beside the same type aircraft Amelia Earhart flew.

"I got a real funny, eerie feeling," Ms. Finch said. "It was almost like it was her plane or something."

In many ways it will become Earhart's plane.

An accomplished pilot, Ms. Finch is restoring the rare twin-engine aircraft for an around-the-globe journey in March 1997 tracing the famous female aviator's final ill-fated flight. Earhart vanished in the Pacific Ocean during that 1937 journey, never to be found.

"It doesn't scare me. I'm very sure and confident. We have a lot of advantages she didn't have," said Ms. Finch, who will take along modern-day navigation equipment.

Ms. Finch wants her "World Flight 1997" to emphasize Earhart's aviation accomplishments, not her disappearance.

Earhart set a women's flying altitude record of 14,000 feet in 1922, was the first woman to complete a transcontinental flight in 1928, was the first woman and only the second person to successfully fly solo across the Atlantic Ocean in 1932 and was the first person to fly solo across the Pacific Ocean, from Honolulu to Oakland, Calif., in 1935.

Earhart also was known for encouraging college students to pursue their career dreams.

When Earhart set out on her last flight, she was attempting to become the first pilot to fly around the world at the equator. After two-thirds of their journey, Earhart and navigator Fred Noonan disappeared between Lae, New Guinea, and Howland Island.

Ms. Finch, who will fly over Howland Island, said she believes Earhart was close to her intended path, but a slightly inaccurate island chart and the sunrise effect on the plane's navigation tools led her off course and to her ocean death.

The 1997 reenactment will coincide with the 60th anniversary of Earhart's flight and the 100th anniversary of her birth year. American Airlines pilot Gianfranco "Denny" Ghiringhelli will be the navigator.

Ms. Finch, 44, who lives in Denton and the San Antonio area, is an aviation pioneer of sorts herself with more than 20 years of experience acquiring, restoring and flying historic aircraft.

Among the aircraft she flies is the Confederate Air Force's vintage P-47 Thunderbolt. She also races in airshows in an AT-6 Texan World War II trainer, a rarity for a woman.

"I always wanted to fly an airplane, just always," she said.

Aviation remains a predominantly male field, and Ms. Finch laughs when she explains that when she pilots a plane into some airports, some maintenance workers begin talking with a man riding with her as though he is the pilot.

To prepare for "World Flight 1997," Ms. Finch researched Earhart's life and flights at the National Smithsonian Air and Space Museum.

"The more I got to know her," Ms. Finch said, "the more excited I got about the project."

The Lockheed Electra will be restored in the next 18 months to the condition of Earhart's plane, complete with a replica of its navigation table and with extra fuel tanks.

"We really will need to do everything she did so it will go those distances," said Ms. Finch, who is not the first woman to reenact Earhart's trip but is believed to be the first in same type aircraft.

Beginning in Oakland, Ms. Finch will fly to the west through New Guinea, Singapore, Pakistan, Ethiopia and other countries on five continents.

At one point, she will land on a 3,000-foot grass runway. Sometimes she will have no radio communication. But the most challenging aspects of the journey, she said, will be taking off with a heavy load and landing in overcast weather at airports where little English is spoken.

Annual Tall City bridge tournament scheduled

From Staff Reports

The annual Tall City Sectional Duplicate Bridge Tournament will get under way Friday, June 2, at the Holiday Inn Convention Center, and approximately 200 people from Dallas, Fort Worth, Abilene, San Angelo, Lubbock, Lamesa and surrounding communities will participate in the three-day event.

The tournament is hosted by the Permian Bridge Club and is sanctioned by the American Contract Bridge League (ACBL). Any bridge player is eligible to play and no prior duplicate experience is necessary. Participants do not have to be members of the ACBL and games will be available for novice players.

Play begins at 1:30 p.m. Friday with the Stratified Open Pairs. Friday evening at 7:30 p.m. will be master and non-master pairs. Classification in this event is determined by having more or less than 200 masterpoints. Saturday at 1:30 p.m. and 7:30 p.m. is a playthrough of Stratified Open Pairs although it is permissable to play in only one of those events.

The final game will be the Swiss Team two-session event, which begins at 11 a.m. on Sunday, June 4. In that event, teams of 4, 5 and 6 players will compete.

Events are stratified according to ACBL masterpoints: A (750+), B (300-750), and C (0-300). There will also be events for 0-100 points if attendance warrants. Prizes will be awarded to winners of all events on Friday and Saturday, and to the first place team on Sunday.

Sandwiches will be served after play on Saturday evening, donuts and juice will be served prior to play on Sunday, and lunch will be served between sessions on Sunday.

Tom Whitesides, an ACBL director, will be in charge of play. Tommie Stract and Wyoma Whitlow are co-chairmen of the tournament. For additional information, call 683-4759 or 683-9345.

Hurricane preparation means nothing if instructions aren't followed, official says

By Mike Drago
Associated Press

HOUSTON — Thomas Ryan has spent much of the past decade and a half planning for the worst — a major hurricane that would hammer the Gulf coast near Houston.

He believes the densely-populated region is ready.

Elaborate evacuation maps have been drawn; hundreds of shelters have been designated; sophisticated storm-forecasting computer equipment is in place.

But Ryan, the state emergency management officer in charge of the region, says all those preparations will add up to nothing if people don't follow instructions when a menacing storm enters the Gulf of Mexico.

"We think that we are as prepared as our resources and governmental authority allow us to be," says Ryan.

"If people follow the plan that we recommend, yes, we'll be fine. If not, no. If people wait until the last minute and a Hurricane Gilbert hits Houston, you're going to have thousands of people drown."

Some 4.5 million people live in the region stretching north from Freeport to Baytown. The towns in between include Angleton, Galveston, Texas City and Pasadena, not to mention greater Houston, at least 40 miles inland but still endangered by coastal storms.

Hurricane season opens June 1 and lasts through November. Experts predict more Atlantic hurricane activity than in the past five years, with six storms expected — two of which could be deadly.

Timely evacuations are really the only hurricane defense, and that's where emergency managers have concentrated most of their efforts.

During the last major hurricane along the upper Texas coast — Alicia in August 1983 — damages were estimated at $1.2 billion and 21 people were killed. None of them drowned in tidal surges.

Officials say their hurricane contingency plans proved sound during Alicia and have since been improved with better communications and weather radar. They only hope enough people remember Alicia and will take future warnings seriously.

"Primarily we have people in the Houston area who are a whole generation removed from a hurricane," said Jo Schweikhard Moss, a spokesman for the Texas Division of Emergency Management.

"We can work real hard to be prepared ... but you have to worry about when it's time whether they'll follow instructions. We still don't know for sure how the public's going to react, and it's not something you can test."

The vast network of roads and highways in the Houston-Galveston area is expected to be sufficient to support evacuations, but Ryan said timing and a quick public response are especially critical.

The region is unique, he said, because nearly 1 million evacuees from south of Houston would pass through the nation's fourth-largest city on their way north. A glut of late evacuees could mean life-threatening traffic jams that keep people from getting out of flood-prone areas.

'We can work real hard to be prepared...but you have to worry about when it's time whether they'll follow instructions. We still don't know for sure how the public's going to react, and it's not something you can test.'

— Jo Schweikhard Moss, spokesman for the Texas Division of Emergency Management

Once coastal residents are evacuated, there should be plenty of shelter space available for them, said Ray Beall, manager of emergency services for the Houston-area Red Cross.

Beall said the agency, which has designated 459 hurricane shelters with a capacity of 120,000, has an advantage because the region has so many natural disasters. Just last October, floods triggered by several days of torrential rain storms killed nearly two dozen people and forced thousands to evacuate their homes in southeast Texas.

"We are pretty well set," Beall said. "In a sense, we don't have a choice because we get so much practice.

"I hope we don't have to eat our words, but compared to what we perceive of other cities that are vulnerable (to hurricanes), we're in pretty good shape."

Ron Stagno, spokesman for the Houston office of emergency management and a former National Weather Service hurricane specialist, said his emphasis this year is on the wind damage that can affect inland areas such as Houston.

New weather service data, culled from recent devastating East Coast hurricanes Andrew and Hugo, shows that inland hurricane winds are much higher than previously thought.

For a Category 3 storm, with winds up to 130 mph, inland wind speeds were previously thought to decrease by about half. Now meteorologists believe the wind decreases by only a fourth or less.

"So a storm with 140 mph winds along the coast could generate sustained winds of 100 to 110 mph (inland)," Stagno said. "At this point in time I do not believe that the average Houston citizen knows that."

Stagno said southeast Texas residents must be alert to hurricane forecasts and be ready to act when necessary.

"They must understand that their lives are in their own hands," he said.

Fiery White House reporter is still strong after 51 years of coverage

By Michelle Mittelstadt
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — She's been the bane of 11 presidents — and more than a few White House reporters — who bristle at the often parochial questions she bellows in a foghorn voice that cuts through the press room cacophony.

But veteran Texas journalist Sarah McClendon, who has covered more presidents than any other reporter, is still going strong after 51 years on the White House beat.

The first president she covered, Franklin Roosevelt, was the only one who escaped her pointed questions. But she more than made up for her initial shyness, grilling subsequent presidents relentlessly about often obscure government workings.

She so riled President Lyndon B. Johnson that he used his Texas ties to get three Texas newspapers to cancel their contracts with tiny McClendon News Service.

Increasingly frail as she approaches her 85th birthday, the feisty reporter with rouged cheeks and frizzy, reddish hair has outlasted most of her critics.

"They listen to me now," she said during an interview this week, on the eve of a roast thrown in her honor by the American News Women's Club. "They do a lot more listening to me than they used to."

To her press corps detractors, who lament her unrelenting focus on issues that they see as piddling in nature, McClendon offers no apologies. "We get on one subject here and forget about all the others," she said.

"There are so many other problems in the country."

It was McClendon's persistent questioning over delayed checks for veterans that prompted President Nixon to shake up management of the Veterans Administration.

She also embarrassed then-presidential candidate Nixon when she asked President Eisenhower if he could think of any policy decisions his vice president had played a role in. "No," Eisenhower replied, later adding: "Give me a week and I'll think of something."

And, she relentlessly badgered the Pentagon about the treatment of women veterans — of which she is one, having served in the Women's Army Corps during World War II.

"As Washington's White House press corps maverick, she has been the nemesis and the conscience of the 11 presidents she has covered since 1944," said former Texas Gov. Ann Richards, who emceed McClendon's largely gentle roast.

The Tyler native's pit-bull style — which prompted admiration some 30 years ago from a local television reporter named Sam Donaldson — made her famous far beyond the circulation of her newspaper articles and radio spots. She's made numerous television appearances, spanning everything from "Meet The Press" to "Late Night with David Letterman."

Jokes about McClendon's legendary badgering were the recurring theme of the roast, televised live by C-Span.

"President Bush called her a squeaky wheel," UPI White House correspondent Helen Thomas told the hundreds who turned out to fete McClendon. "Granted, her style might be called assertive, one might even say raucous. ... But no one can say she hasn't gotten the attention of the powers that be in the White House."

Joked former White House press secretary Marlin Fitzwater: "She's like a gall bladder operation — the longer you wait the more painful it gets."

McClendon says the drive that keeps her going after 64 years in the business is her thirst to keep the government honest.

"I'm a citizen journalist," she explained. "It means I am trying to do my journalism with the idea in mind I am seeking to give more information to the people of this country for their own good."

She still musters righteous indignation at the thought of mistreatment of women, official misconduct or government secrecy. "They're keeping too many secrets from all of us," she said.

McClendon, who turns 85 in July, has no plans to retire. In fact, she excitedly discusses plans to expand distribution of her weekly column and bi-weekly newsletter. Recently, she signed a contract with an 1,110-station radio network.

"I want to be more efficient," she said of her expansion push. "The news is needed by the people."

EDUCATION IN BRIEF

TAAS booklets and answer keys for the 1994-95 testing year will be available for review beginning Tuesaday at each school campus and at the Midland Independent School District Administration Building.

The campuses will be open until June 27; after that all requests should be directed through the central office. Parents who wish to view booklets at Emerson, Jones, and Long elementary schools are advised to call before visiting the school to confirm access to those campuses due to planned closures for maintenance.

Each campus will have a set of booklets which is representative of the TAAS level administered at that campus. A full set of the booklets reflecting all levels and all subjects will be available in the Computer and Pupil Services department on the third floor of the administration building.

There is no charge to review the booklets on the premises. Copies may be obtained for a charge of 10 cents a page; the booklets average 25 pages in length. To place an order for copies, call the campus or the Pupil Services Department, 689-1950.

Susan Webb assumed the post of communications specialist for Midland Independent School District May 15.

She is a native Midlander and attended Midland public schools. She holds a BBA in marketing from Texas Christian University. She will oversee the MISD communications department and coordinate public relations efforts for the school district.

"We are pleased to add Ms. Webb to our staff. Her professional experience, her knowledge of the community, and her enthusiasm in promoting MISD throughout the private and business sectors of Midland will be among our greatest assets." said Superintendent Joseph Baressi Jr.

"The communications department at MISD has been without a person in this position for two years, and we look forward to being well represented by Ms. Webb," he said.

"Our school district has much about which to be proud, and we have a good story to tell," Ms. Webb said. "It is my goal to share the positive aspects of Midland's public education system with our community."

Police chief bans department employees from NRA events

FORT WORTH (AP) — Police Chief Thomas Windham has banned department employees from any official participation in National Rifle Association-sponsored events in the wake of a controversial fund-raising letter.

The fallout is the latest spawned by an NRA letter describing federal agents as "jack-booted government thugs." The anti-government rhetoric in that missive, sent several months ago, moved former President Bush to resign his NRA life membership in protest early this month.

Windham, who called on police chiefs from every major city to follow his lead, said he felt "absolute disgust" when he heard of the letter and began thinking then of sanctions.

Last week, he issued a directive to all Fort Worth Police Department employees outlining the ban.

"It is difficult for me to believe any self-respecting law enforcement officer would want to become or continue to be a member of the NRA after their hateful attack upon our brother and sister officers at the federal level," Windham wrote in the order.

The order does not affect personal membership or association in the NRA, but Windham warned Friday that might change if the association continues its "fringe group activities."

An NRA spokeswoman noted the organization's longtime support of rank-and-file police and said all references in the letter were to the U.S. Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms and abuses there.

"There have been abuses of mismanagement from the top down and it is unfortunate that the police chief is basing his decision on media representation of that letter," said NRA spokeswoman Mary Sue Faulkner.

Windham said he has seen the NRA become more extreme in its ideology and that the fund-raising letter was the proverbial last straw.

A spokeswoman for the International Association of Chiefs of Police in Alexandria, Va., said Windham's actions are believed to be the first in the state, if not the nation, by a police chief as a result of the controversy.

Input on Medicare needed this week

Congressman Larry Combest will be in the Midland-Odessa area this week conducting public meetings on an issue of vital concern: The impending bankruptcy of the Medicare Trust Fund.

In a memorandum mailed to constituents throughout his 19th Congressional District, Combest noted that without reforms "Medicare will be going broke beginning next year." The repercussions of that prediction literally touch every American family, and for that reason the meetings Combest has scheduled this week in Midland, Odessa, Lubbock and Canyon are open to all individuals regardless of whether or not they reside in the 19th Congressional District.

Because of the importance of these meetings, we encourage our readers to attend one of them. The series of meetings will begin Tuesday in Lubbock, then continue Wednesday in Midland, Thursday in Odessa and Friday in Canyon.

The gravity of the situation involving the Medicare Trust Fund was indicated in the Medicare Trustees Report on April 3, which stated, "The Medicare program is clearly unsustainable in its present form. The Trust Fund continues to be severely out of financial balance and is projected to be exhausted in about 7 years."

Medicare's dilemma is further indicated by the fact that the current rate of spending on Medicare — $440 million a day — is expected to triple to more than $1 billion by the year 2003 — only eight years from now.

According to Combest, the choices that Americans face include 1) the end of Medicare, 2) huge increases in both taxes and premiums, 3) government takeover of all health care, or 4) protection and improvement of Medicare.

"I want to hear from you," Combest said in a message to constituents. "If you can, please come to one of these meetings to learn more and to talk about the many options for saving and improving Medicare. ..."

The future of Medicare demands that those in the 19th Congressional District and other Permian Basin residents attend one of these important meetings.

JACK ANDERSON
Agency head could earn outlaw reputation

WASHINGTON — The head of the federal agency charged with enforcing U.S. trade embargoes against outlaw nations is in danger of earning an outlaw reputation himself.

Anderson

Until recently, Richard R. Newcomb, director of the Treasury Department's Office of Foreign Assets Control (OFAC), had received only praise for his efforts to freeze the assets of foreign dictators and punish embargo-busters. But now the career government executive is fighting allegations leveled by his own staff and other officials that he has compromised probes of major American companies suspected of embargo violations.

The most sensational allegations involve OFAC's 1992 probe of Texaco. The Associated Press first reported how Newcomb allegedly ignored the recommendations of his staff to fine Texaco's Caribbean subsidiary $1.6 million for selling fuel to Haiti's military junta in apparent violation of the 1991 U.S. embargo. To date, OFAC has taken no action against Texaco or its subsidiary.

Newcomb declined to comment on his handling of the case, which outraged his employees and has prompted an investigation by District of Columbia U.S. Attorney Eric Holder. Texaco has denied it violated any law and will challenge any OFAC attempt to impose fines.

Texaco hardly appears to be an isolated incident. Newcomb's conduct during three Vietnam embargo cases is also under scrutiny by Treasury's inspector general. Documents obtained by our associate Dean Boyd indicate that Newcomb's actions during a short-lived probe into Mobil Oil Corp. are among the topics under investigation.

In a 1994 affidavit, Newcomb's then-assistant chief of enforcement claims that he launched a probe into Mobil in 1992 after receiving reports that a pallet of the company's resin had been seen at a Vietnamese plastics factory. At the time, a U.S. embargo barred trade between American companies and Vietnam.

After consulting with Newcomb, the agent began drafting a summons for Mobil's documents. But as he put the finishing touches on the order, the agent states that he was called by Mobil's lawyers who said they already knew about the probe and were armed with an explanation for the resin. The agent, who was stunned by the apparent security breach, asked Mobil officials how they became aware of the probe. Mobil's lawyers said Newcomb had "told them about the allegations," the affidavit reads.

Angered by what he considered was "nothing less than a tip-off," the agent vigorously complained to superiors. According to the affidavit, Newcomb later acknowledged that he had mentioned the probe to a Mobil official who had called him on an unrelated matter.

Mobil spokesman John Lord confirms that before receiving the summons, Mobil had phoned Newcomb on a totally unrelated issue.

Both Newcomb and the author of the affidavit declined to be interviewed on the affair. But another official familiar with the probe says Mobil responded to the order with a "perfect" explanation that agents could neither prove nor disprove. With no evidence indicating Mobil committed any wrongdoing, OFAC closed the case.

Unfortunately, questions about Newcomb lingered on. As investigators delve into a host of allegations, OFAC's entire enforcement staff has been transferred to the U.S. Customs Service, which will now be charged with enforcing OFAC statutes.

GEORGE WILL
Congress still needs to tidy up loose ends

WASHINGTON — Ten-point political "contracts," noble promises with pretty titles, are in fashion. Nevertheless, some of the nation's needs are being neglected. So, here is the Contract to Tidy Up Loose Ends.

Will

The Young American Male Beautification Act. The government has shoved billboards back from some highways and fenced off junkyards but has done nothing about the worst eyesores. Therefore Congress shall impose a tax of $1,000 per pair of earrings sold to young men. Revenues shall fund research on the use of electroshock treatment to cure the wearing of baseball caps backwards.

The Captains Of Industry "Ask Not What Your Country Can Do For You" Compensation Act. Any leader of any industry benefiting from a government subsidy — for example, low interest loans, export assistance, a tariff on competitive foreign products - shall have the status of, and shall not be eligible to receive compensation higher than, a federal bureaucrat. The heads of Ford, Chrysler and General Motors will not be lonely toiling in this condition; many of their friends from Fortune 500 corporations will be there, too.

The Two For The Price Of One, Don't Mess With This Tough Country Security Act. This closes Pennsylvania Avenue in front of the White House, but only to Japanese luxury cars.

The We Don't Need Term Limits — And We Can Sure Find Out Quickly Who Is In Congress For The Right Reasons — Congressional Pension Reform. Any senator retiring after two terms or any representative retiring after six terms shall receive a lifetime pension of $1 million a year tax-free, and any legislator serving longer shall receive upon retirement $10,000 a year taxed at the highest rate the legislator ever voted for.

The "Hey, If We Are Really Serious About Democracy Let's Get On With It" Pizza Voter Act. The namby-pamby Motor Voter Act requires only that states provide for registering voters at offices where driver's licenses and welfare and other government benefits are issued. This new act will require that the kid who delivers your pizza be prepared to register you, the better to improve the thoughtfulness of the electorate by making it bigger.

The San Diego Tank Demonstration Project Block Grant For Better Rush Hour Traffic. Every community large enough to have morning and evening rush hours shall receive a grant to purchase tanks which shall roll down the curb lanes during hours when parking is banned in those lanes, smushing parked cars. Tanks also shall be used to make an impression on drivers who do not signal a left turn until they are sitting in the middle of the intersection.

The Sauce For The Gander Corporation For Public Newspapers Act. Most American households are wired for cable and so have scores of choices in television programming. Most American communities have at most one newspaper. Yet we have a Corporation for Public Broadcasting to subsidize yet another television offering, but no Corporation for Public Newspapers. A CPN would provide the "diversity" so heartily praised by newspaper editorials in support of the CPB. Establishing a CPN should be a slam dunk, considering all the editorial support that idea can be expected to receive from the nation's newspapers.

The Lump Them Together And Let Liberals Sort It Out, Zero-Sum Game Appropriation Consolidation. All monies for the National Endowment for the Arts and National Endowment for the Humanities shall be put into one big pot with all monies for AIDS research and Head Start and infant nutrition. A dollar spent on the NEA and NEH shall be subtracted from the dollars available for AIDS and children. Have a nice day and enjoy the opera.

The Omnibus Sports Improvement Act. NBA referees who do not call traveling and baseball umpires who do not call the full strike zone are sentenced (if this punishment does not violate the Eighth Amendment) to attend arena football games. And baseball's anti-trust exemption shall be repealed if ever again, as recently happened, an arena football game draws a bigger crowd than the Brewers draw in Milwaukee, the home of he who is smilingly known as the commissioner of what is anachronistically called the national pastime.

The 1995 Crime Control Act To Prevent Violence Against the American Language. It shall be a crime, punishable by having "The Bridges of Madison County" read aloud to an offender, to use "anxious" and "eager" as synonyms, or "disinterested" and "uninterested" as synonyms. People will be eager to comply with this law because they will be anxious about the possibility of their case being heard by an uninterested judge.

There. Ten items. We contract writers, like God, know when to stop rather than risk overburdening humanity.

OSHA reform could inject common sense

Almost any reform of the bureaucratic Occupational Safety and Health Administration — OSHA — would be welcome. President Clinton's proposals ... would put some needed common sense into the process.

In his best-selling book, "The Death of Common Sense: How Law Is Suffocating America," Philip K. Howard notes that although OSHA has written 4,000 detailed regulations, put over 600,000 substances and products (including command sand) on a list of possibly toxic substances, forced industry to spend several hundred billion dollars to comply with its rules, and hired about 2,000 inspectors, "safety in the American workplace is about the same as it was" when it was established in 1970.

The Clinton administration acknowledges that OSHA inspectors are rewarded for the number of citations they write, not the number of injuries they prevent, the AP reports. The president's proposed reforms would change this.

Under Vice President Al Gore's "reinventing government" initiative, OSHA offices nationwide will adopt a pilot program, started in the Maine office in 1993, that focuses on firms with the worst safety records, giving them a choice: set up safety teams to identify and eliminate hazards, or face intensified OSHA inspection and enforcement. ...

This is a welcome reform, even if it won't satisfy those critics who think OSHA has gone much too far in its minutely detailed regulation of the workplace.

Prose, testosterone do not go well together

The testosterone fad seems to be over among writers of overwrought prose. I began tracking it back in 1991 when it looked as if testosterone might become the biggest thing in writers' workshops since electrification of audiences, a feat so commonplace that I have done it many times myself without shame or remorse.

Baker

A couple of years back my collection of museum-quality specimens of out-of-control prose contained so many audience electrifications that I quit adding new ones.

Reading a pretty good history book one day, I stumbled across what should have been the astonishing fact that Stokely Carmichael, the civil-rights warrior, had once "electrified his audience" by inducing them to demand "black power."

Carmichael's audience may have been electrified, but I wasn't even shocked. It was obviously time to quit collecting audience electrifications and just live with them.

By then the testosterone fad had already hit the trendier newspapers, aka The New York Times and The Washington Post.

"What a macho night," began a Post report on a White House correspondents' dinner. "The testosterone was so thick you could slice it with a sword."

This was occasioned by the presence of two generals (Norman Schwarzkopf and Colin Powell) and a White House man's "manhandling of an unsuspecting female reporter." The story didn't say what the female reporter did not suspect, but reported she was "not amused."

I hadn't previously thought of testosterone as something so dense it might resist anything flimsier than a sword. Now, however, I thought of those old newsreel shots of graduating West Pointers' brides slicing wedding cakes with their new husbands' swords.

The New York Times, always quick to compete with The Washington Post, promptly disagreed. In a sports-page attack on that sweaty athletic institution the locker room, the Times writer denounced it not only as "the last pathetic bastion of American working-class manhood," but also as "that caldron of testosterone."

Say "caldron" to me, and I do not think of wedding cake. I think of three crones dumping eye of newt, toe of frog, wool of bat and tongue of dog into a steamy bubbling vat. In short, liquid, and nasty liquid too.

This illustrates one difficulty of overwrought prose, which commonly results when a first-class news writer realizes he might have been a fine real writer if he hadn't settled for getting paid every Friday.

This encourages attempts to compete with Shelley and Shakespeare. As a result, the reader is forced not only to worry about a musty laboratory word like "testosterone," but also to worry about whether it is solid or liquid when he would probably prefer not even to think about it, much less worry, especially if he is a he.

After a year or so during which testosterone kept creeping into these and other newspapers, American editors must have got together and discreetly issued threats to subject all future testosterone poets to sword or caldron.

Whatever the reason, once again testosterone is rarely found anymore outside the medical news.

While researching this piece in my collection, I wandered into the Overwrought Blurb Prose division, where it is always a pleasure to browse. Why? Since book blurbs are commonly written by some of our best writers, they illustrate how badly even a fine writer can write when straining to pump out advertising copy for another writer's book.

The overwrought adverb piled onto the overwrought adjective is everywhere in these monuments of blather. "Exquisitely sensitive and perceptive," one desperate blurber says of the book he's pitching. And then, as if he knows his insincerity is grinning out through this gushy enthusiasm, he makes it worse by adding, "stunningly incisive and memorable."

No, I will not reveal names. I too have written blurbs as silly as these. So nothing can make me reveal the author of "vividly evocative," or "fiercely intelligent," or "startlingly original," or "profoundly moving," etc.

New York cops don't tell the world which ones slid down the hotel bannister in his bare hide. Writers don't tell the world which colleague wrote that asinine book blurb.

Are we talking testosterone here, or what?

Priorities of MISD don't include student safety

Has the MISD superintendent and board of trustees done anything to prevent a recurrence of the shooting incident at Lee?

No! Metal detectors could have prevented this incident. "Too expensive," according to trustee Dianne Anderson, (Isn't our childrens' safety worth the expense?), yet a committee appointed by the board is working on an upcoming $94 million-plus bond election that includes a football stadium costing $6.5 million and $31 million for sports facilities at individual campuses. Anderson chastised fellow trustees recently, saying that she was ashamed they took no action at their retreat on school violence, yet failed to take any action herself.

Why did 10 percent of the 1995 class fail the TAAS, an exit-level test requiring only a 10th-grade education, during their senior year?

Are teachers pressured or forced by administration to pass failing students and/or is our curriculum watered-down? CNN reported that Texas is one of four states that send college-bound graduates to college unprepared. According to CNN, 55 percent of Texas graduates arrive unprepared for college-level work. Some Midland parents report spending as much on tutoring and remediation as they spend on tuition.

With the critical issues our superintendent should be working on, how is it possible that he has the time to draft a letter to the Texas Legislature stating that MISD is against vouchers for school choice, recall board members by voters and remind legislators of the importance of maintaining the separation of church and state?

It's obvious wherein lie the priorities of MISD and it is not the safety and education of the students it is supposed to serve. Is the focus of the superintendent and the board to simply save their jobs and keep middle-income and poor people from attending the school of their choice? Ms. Anderson was the only trustee refusing to sign the letter stating she was not against school vouchers. Is the board majority that signed this letter accurately representing the majority of Midlanders that elected them?

Are Midlanders getting their money's worth paying a superintendent in excess of $100,000 a year plus perks to hide behind the cloak of federal bureaucracy instead of trying to solve the safety and educational issues that plague us all?

Best of wishes, luck to graduating seniors

Here it is, time for the students to graduate.

Words need to be expressed to these young people.

They have worked hard to achieve their goals and I wanted to wish every student in the area the best of luck and good wishes. May their dreams come true. Always remember to get where you are going, you have to drive carefully for the roads of life have a lot of curves, but keep both hands on the wheel and you will be alright. May God bless everyone and keep you safe from harm. Take care and congratulations, seniors '95.

Band director ends 33 years of teaching

At the end of this month, Clyde Wilson will complete his 33rd year in the teaching profession. Wilson served 21 years as the band director of Midland High School and six years as the director at Robert E. Lee Freshman High School. Before moving to Midland Wilson served six years as the band director in Hereford and Tulia. Wilson has touched the lives of thousands of students in our community and will leave behind a tradition of superior excellence.

As a band director, Wilson expects and demands the very best of those participating in the program. At times that meant Wilson could be difficult but all his students would agree that difficulty was the trade-off for producing the superior level of musical excellence. As a direct result, Wilson desired to produce the very best possible band program for the high school students in our community. His last class honored him in earning a Division I in Marching, Concert and Sight Reading and a Division I and Best in Class at the Big "D" Classic Music Festival earlier this month in Dallas.

In Wilson's 21 years of direction at Midland High School, the band program was honored in being selected to represent the Southwest in two Tournament of Roses Parades.

Last Thursday evening, Mayor Bobby Burns proclaimed Sunday, May 21 as "Clyde Wilson Day" in honor of his service, loyalty and dedication to the young people in Midland. The Texas Music Educators Association proclaimed "Clyde Wilson Day" May 18.

The parents of Lee Freshman High School and the Booster Club of Robert E. Lee High School Band wish Wilson and his lovely wife Barbara well in their retirement to Colorado. The musical legacy that he leaves at Lee High School will continue to challenge music lovers for years to come.

Fund-raising claims deserve response

In response to letters written against me regarding my viewpoint on the cost of fund-raising attempts using MPD Blue Thunder, please allow me to respond with facts, not claims brought by others:

Claim: Me being referred to as narrow-minded, immature and wanting my money back for the game tickets. Fact: In my April 9 letter I stated "I commended the Midland guys for donating their time and bodies in support." I purchased tickets for my family to the D.A.R.E./D-FY-IT game because I believe these to be very important programs for our students, programs which make a difference, and funding for the programs should be considered from within the system. I don't want my money back and will be glad to make additional donations.

Claim: That I think the officers should be told what to do on their time. Fact: Give me a break, this is America, I don't care what you do on your own time. But if you're doing something for charity, there has got to be a better way than spending a possible $10 for every dollar raised.

Claim: Injuries are paid by insurance, not the taxpayers. In Mr. Heinemann's letter dated April 16, referring to the charity football games, he states: "Their total cost in city tax dollars was absolutely zero." Fact: City Hall states: "The city of Midland's group health plan is a self-funded plan. Funds are obtained from employee contributions (about 35 percent of total cost) and contributions from the budgets of every municipal fund to which employees are assigned (about 65 percent of total cost). This includes the general fund, and therefore, tax dollars do fund a portion of the cost of our group health plan." In the physical year of 1994, taxpayers paid $1,447,838.83 in medical claims above premiums received from employees.

Solution: Maybe we can get our heads together and come up with a better way for the Blue Thunder to get what they want with tax dollars staying out of the emergency room, while most importantly, the D.A.R.E. and D-FY-IT programs receive maximum financial benefit from everyone's combined efforts. After all, keeping kids off drugs is the goal. I'm willing to help, how about everyone else?

Pursuit of happiness is threatened by cuts

Voters recently expressed their unhappiness with elected officials by giving the Republicans the majority power in Washington. The intent of the voters was to steer the government toward more responsible representation in the House, the Senate and the Executive Branch.

It is unquestionable that Americans have a constitutional right to the pursuit of happiness. This pursuit is not possible without a national climate where the population can have an availability of good jobs, good business, economic opportunities, and a chance to prosper.

Headlines such as "NASA to cut 28,500 jobs at Johnson, other sites" including some 500 civil service and 2,750 contractor jobs certainly does not show the betterment of our national interests and is in fact a giant leap backwards for mankind!

Further, the impending threat to Texas to shift much of Houston Space Center responsibilities to Alabama, the NASA test facilities at White Sands to Mississippi, and other major shifts seems costly and unwise.

The recent elections did not give our government a license to destroy the infrastructure of the United States that it has taken generations and major wars and great sacrifice to build to the point where we are today. The license of the election was in fact to demand good judgment, good management and to exercise fiscal and moral responsibility. The mandate of the last election was not to destroy Medicare, social security, NASA, and other good fiber of national infrastructure. If you destroy the right of Americans to the climate for pursuit of happiness, a good job during working years and security in old age, you destroy America.

Republicans, please take notice! We, the voters, helped get you the majority. We pray that you exercise your office with the wisdom of Solomon so that we will not have to vote you out when it is time to vote again!

Kill tax legislation before it is approved

Among the hundreds of bills before the current session of the Legislature, I am not surprised that you have given no publicity to HJR 20, which the Texas House of Representatives passed on May 12. This legislation is a constitutional amendment to cap the corporate franchise tax at the present rate of 4.5 percent. While this may be beneficial to corporate franchise tax payers, how many of your readers pay corporate franchise taxes?

If HJR 20 is approved by Senator John Montford's finance committee, it will likely be on the ballot next November for the uninformed public to approve a limit on taxes. Once this is a part of the Texas Constitution, the Legislature would be required to meet any future revenue need by taxing individuals' income, purchases or property, leaving corporations free of such tax increases.

Call your state senator to kill this ill-conceived legislation now in Austin.

Taxpayers to pay for new airport

The controversy over the proposed new Midland Air Terminal has brought to mind a visit I had three or four years ago with a Southwest Airlines junior executive on a flight from Midland to Dallas. Somehow our conversation reverted to travel and air terminals in general. At that time the then Stapleton Airport in Denver was much in the news. It was proposed that it be replaced. The lady said if this proposal goes through it will be necessary for Southwest Airlines to discontinue service into Denver as we will be unable to pay the new fees that will accompany the new terminal. With our low fares we will be unable to pay the fees and maintain our competitive low ticket prices. The new airport was built and Southwest Airlines no longer services Denver.

Some of the city fathers have tried to delude us into believing this will not cost us — the residents in Midland — federal taxes will pay the difference.

Where do the federal taxes come from?

Where do state and local taxes come from?

I would like for all or any of the proponents of this plan to please address the taxpayers and consumers on this subject and explain to us how it will all work out. I would surely hate for Southwest to move out.

Then I suppose our city fathers would have us subsidize American Airlines to bring jet service as the people in Amarillo are doing. The taxpayers in Amarillo not only have to pay for a newer terminal but have to pay the carriers to service their town.

What a deal for the taxpayers. We had better wake up!

Professional clowns apologize for one

At the recent international clown convention in Houston, Permian Basin clowns placed seventh and 15th in make-up and costume competition. The Oops Alley Parade Skit placed fifth. The professional level of our local clowns is known throughout the United States.

Recently, a new clown came into our area. Claiming to be a professional, having worked for major circus operations, he lacked knowledge of proper make-up and costuming. As he began working the area, he asked many customers to pay half his fee up front. After booking several events, he left our area without fulfilling his obligations.

As professional clowns, we want to assure the public that this is not the way established clowns do business in the Midland/Odessa area. If you need a clown for your special event, check with your friends for referrals, check the yellow pages under clowns, check with the chambers of commerce, ask the clown if he/she is a member of the Texas Clown Association, Clowns of America International Inc., or the World Clown Association. None of our local clowns have been employed with Ringling Bros. Circus but, many have attended professional clown schools including Clown Camp at LaCrosse, Wisc. Be aware that professional clowns do not ask for half their money up front for birthday parties and usually ask for a contract for other special events.

The professional clowns of our area wish to apologize to the citizens of Midland/Odessa for the actions of this so-called "clown." Please don't judge all of us by his actions.

Economic logic of tax article makes no sense

In reference to the article in the Sunday Reporter-Telegram on property taxes and their "prospective" increase. I don't think I understand the economic logic. In the article, a 170 percent increase was cited from 1993 to 1994 in new construction (in the city). Shouldn't the result be an increase in tax revenue (i.e., if the valuations remain unchanged and the rates remain unchanged, there will still be a significant percentage in increase of tax revenues). Therefore, we can deduce that if the tax base has increased and the tax revenues have increased and the appraised values are going to go up, reason or not, then why not lower the rates. The continued new construction will more than compensate a modest rate decrease and the governing entities can simply live within their means, (i.e. curbing their lust for other people's money). If we were to receive a dollar in service for a dollar in taxes, there would be plenty to go around.

County-wide, the values increased approximately 7 percent. If the tax revenues increased in direct proportion, then the tax revenues are increasing four to five times faster than the rate of inflation - that's too fast and too much.

Now a question of ethics. I noted that only one person out of nine on the Midland Central Appraisal District's Appraisal Review Board is not directly connected with real estate. That reduces to the fact that eight members who pass judgment on the value of a given property directly or indirectly benefit from that same property valuation. That sounds like something the Clinton administration would attempt. Perhaps it should be dubbed "Effluent-Watergate."

An added thought is how Midland has been touting the city as a great place to retire. Property taxes most affect people on fixed or limited incomes. Is all the "ideal retirement city" just more "Clinton-like" bombast?

Midlanders' school taxes pay for many things

Michael Clinton says he shouldn't have to pay school taxes because his only child graduated last year.

Midlanders spent years getting ready for the Clintons: building schools, equipping them, staffing them with excellent teachers. They also built streets, parks, recreation areas, provided sanitation water, drainage (we're still working on that one), employed police and fire fighters.

My family arrived in Midland 27 years ago and our children used the Midland school system just five years. We're happy Midlanders had schools ready for our children when we arrived. We cheered the addition of an excellent community college, plus other improvements made over the years...many of them paid for with taxes. Over the years, we paid school taxes that are now being used to help educate our grandchildren.

Clinton's letter indicated he thought the city set his school taxes. They are set by the trustees of the Midland Independent School District. He should attend their meetings to find out first-hand how they determine the tax rate and how they plan to spend monies received.

My wife and I just returned from a short visit to New Mexico. While there, we willingly paid their state sales taxes. This helps them improve their highways, stock their streams and lakes, and take care of other needs in case the Clintons or other Texans decide they would like to visit that state to ski, fish, camp, hunt, or just enjoy their scenery.

We pay our U.S. taxes to help finance other needs that extend beyond state borders. As retirees we continue to pay taxes, even pay on pension and Social Security incomes.

Clinton, every area requires school taxes. You said you preferred to stay in Midland, we hope you will. If you do, give thanks for those who spent more than a century preparing for the needs of your family. Be grateful you prosper here. We invite you to join those of us who pay our share in taxes, then offer our time, money, and talents to those entities that help make Midland unique. We'd welcome your assistance.

WILLIAM SAFIRE
Voters' double standard benefits Dole, not Clinton

LOS ANGELES — The voters' trust, goes the truism, is the most valuable asset any politician can possess. Image-makers strive to create it; candidates ache to make voters' trust the touchstone of their candidacies.

Safire

When a political figure has earned that trust, we are told, the public will forgive him diplomatic gaffes, policy blunders, even bad luck. An Ike-like "trust me" from the pol with trust's heavenly mandate carries the day.

Forget all that; recast your thinking to fit the campaign of 1996. Sen. Bob Dole is proving that voter distrust can be divine; indeed, it is the secret weapon of his candidacy.

Let this counterintuition, sighed privately by a presidential aide, illuminate your political landscape: "When people don't believe Clinton, it hurts Clinton; but when they don't believe Dole, it helps Dole."

That's worth deconstructing.

After last year's election defeat, when Clinton rushed to call for a tax cut, everybody knew his heart wasn't in it. His middle-class bribe was seen as a ploy to pre-empt the incoming Republicans; liberals heaped obloquy on his head for selling out, and centrist Democrats knew he was insincere. Result: distrust, derision, Democratic despair.

When the president took a different tack last week, professing that he, too, wanted to balance the budget someday — despite the forever-unbalanced budget he submitted — Republicans hooted at this poll-induced conversion, and Democrats cringed inwardly at this confirmation of slick-williness.

Now look at Dole. He asserts unequivocally that he's pro-life, suggesting curtailment of federal support of abortion.

Liberals and moderates do not believe him. They know him to be a man of legislative compromise, not an adamant pro-lifer. They figure Dole has to say anti-choice things to ingratiate himself with the right wing in a Republican primary, but forgive him because they know if elected, he would move back to the sensible center where most people are.

Curiously, the pro-lifers and the Christian Coalition secretly assume that reversion, too. But they're not high on Phil Gramm and know that Pat Buchanan can't win, and judge Dole better for their cause than Clinton.

Most important, they like the way Dole shows their position great respect, saying encouraging things, though not making unkeepable promises.

Thus, neither pro-choicers nor pro-lifers trust what Dole says about abortion — which is a great advantage to him because it alienates nobody.

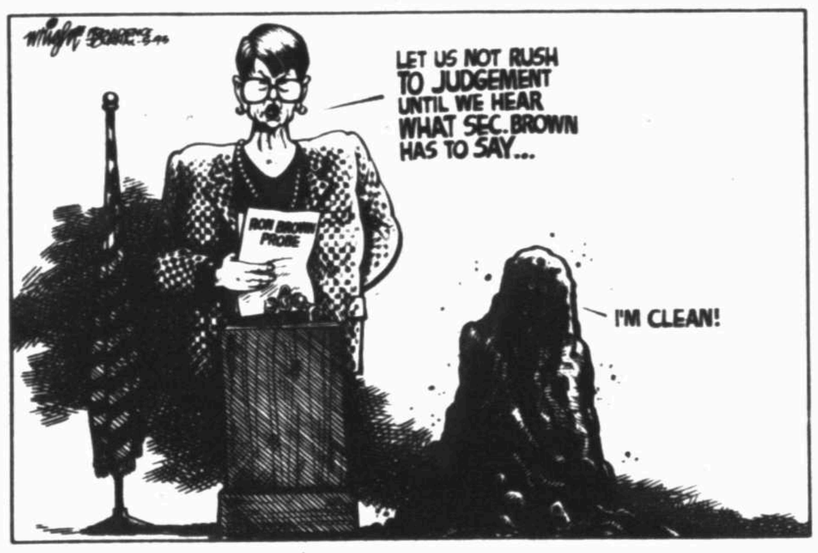

Same thing with another switcher issue, gun control. The anti-gun crowd listens to Dole's modified limited support of the NRA and doesn't believe it. They're sure, once the primaries are over, ol' Bob will be back in the middle, and they forgive him his pro-gun noises.

The gun lobby doesn't trust his pre-primary support, either. But he does not join in the furious zapping of them, and makes the right obeisances, which they need now. So they pretend to believe his pretense of support; again, distrust helps him both ways.

Jews, too. The old Dole was for cutting aid to Israel before it was popular; the new Dole aligns himself with Likudniks in Israel who want the U.S. embassy moved to Jerusalem, where it belongs, to help insure the indivisibility of Israel's capital.

Jewish liberals are confident he'll revert to a previous mindset.

- Only one letter per month per writer can be published.
- Letters will be edited for length, taste and legal reasons and are accepted only on that basis. Letters which are difficult to reduce in length will be returned to the writer to be edited before being re-submitted.

Coalition calls for investigation of university's alleged misuse of funds

ARLINGTON (AP) — A coalition of black groups alleging misuse of funds by University of Texas at Arlington deans and faculty has asked the Tarrant County District Attorney's office to investigate.

The coalition also has asked several federal agencies to look into complaints of discrimination in hiring, promotion and termination practices in the University of Texas System. Complaints were filed this week with the departments of Labor, Justice and Education.

The complaints come on the heels of Monday's removal of UTA Provost Dalmas Taylor from his post, which followed a four-month audit critical of Taylor and former university President Ryan Amacher.

Amacher resigned under pressure in March and was responsible in 1993 for hiring Taylor, the highest-ranking black administrator in UTA history.

The complaint to the district attorney cites a December 1994 internal audit in alleging that some faculty members were paid in violation of federal rules, said Darren Reagan, representing the Coalition of African-American Community Based Organizations of the Dallas-Fort Worth Metropolitan Area.

Economic crime investigators with the district attorney's office will determine whether any statute has been violated. If so, the matter will be forwarded to a grand jury, said section chief Charlie Brandenberg.

Besides registering complaints, the coalition called for the resignation of UT System Chancellor William H. Cunningham, who ordered the audit, and asked newly appointed UTA interim Provost George C. Wright to stay in North Carolina.

The coalition contends Wright, a black vice provost at Duke and a former UT-Austin administrator and faculty member, helped remove a black executive from his job.

Maske defends title

DORTMUND, Germany — In a fight expected to draw the highest television ratings ever in boxing-crazy Germany, Henry Maske won a unanimous but hard decision over Graciano Rocchigiani on Saturday night in the sixth defense of his IBF light heavyweight title.

The man known as "Gentleman Henry" was almost stopped in the ninth round by Rocchigiani and was staggered by a left again in the 12th and final round.

"He was on his way out three times, but I let my concentration down. He survived each time," said Rocchigiani, a former IBF super middleweight champion.

Pacers refuse to believe in Magic

■ Orlando loses its touch on the road in a 105-100 loss to Indianapolis in the Eastern Conference Finals.

By Wendy E. Lane
AP Basketball Writer

INDIANAPOLIS — Everything that made Orlando seem so magical at home was nowhere to be found once Shaquille O'Neal and his buddies stepped into noisy Market Square Arena.

O'Neal got in foul trouble and scored just 18 points. The dead-eye perimeter shooting of Dennis Scott and Nick Anderson failed them. Even the composure that helped them win the first two close games of the Eastern Conference finals deserted them in Saturday's 105-100 loss, rattled loose by the Indiana Pacers' relentless defense.

The Pacers shut down the Magic in the fourth quarter and can tie the best-of-7 series with another win Monday at Market Square Arena, where the Magic have lost seven straight.

"Any time Shaquille is on the floor for 30 minutes, we're in trouble," Magic coach Brian Hill said.

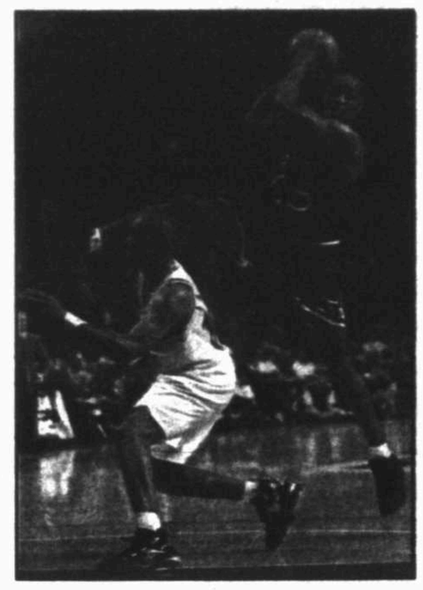

After dominating the Pacers in the first two games with great shooting and strong performances from O'Neal, the Magic could rely on neither aspect of their game. Indiana defended the post and the perimeter better, as well as controlling the boards, 38-26.

"We were playing their style in Game 1 and Game 2," said Reggie Miller, who led the Pacers with 26 points. "We did a good job in the second half of getting to their shooters and keeping Shaq from getting down low."

After scoring 71 points on 70 percent shooting in the first two games, O'Neal was 8-for-15 from the field. More important, he picked up his fourth foul early in the third and spent a lot more time on the bench than he's used to.

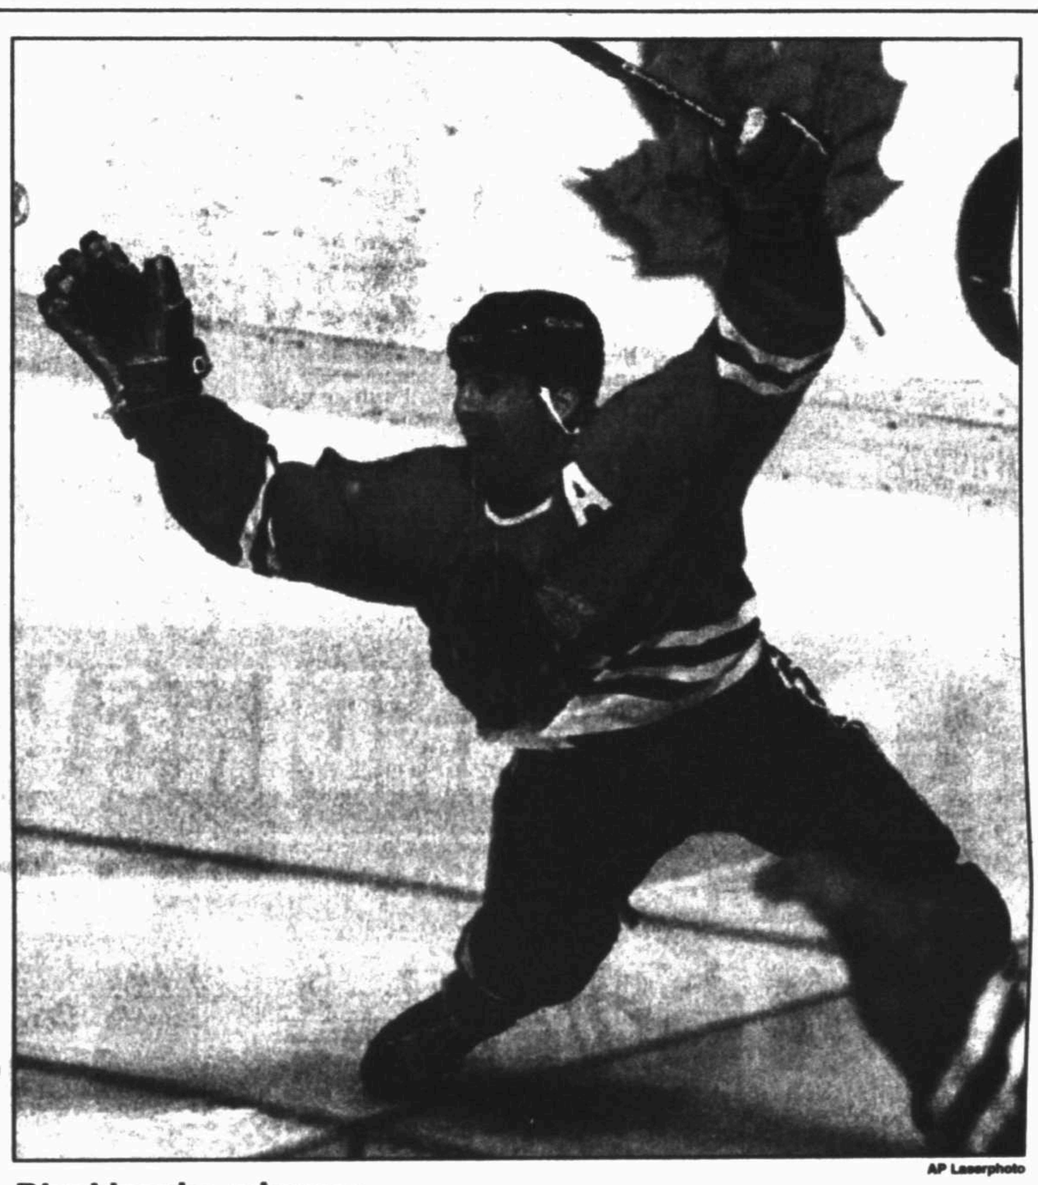

"I didn't even break a sweat," he said.

"We bothered him a little more," said forward Dale Davis, who along with Antonio Davis assumed the bulk of defensive duty when Rik Smits

Changes mark 79th Indy 500

■ Without Team Penske and several familiar drivers, this year's Indianapolis 500 won't be the same.

INDIANAPOLIS — The sights and sounds will be the same.

About 400,000 people will be wedged into the Indianapolis Motor Speedway on Sunday, as usual.

Jim Nabors will croon "Back Home Again in Indiana," as usual.

And, as usual, the 11 rows of three race cars each will roar to life as Indianapolis matriarch Mary Fendrich Hulman delivers the command, "Gentlemen and lady, start your engines!"

But this is no ordinary Indy 500.

There's speed all right. The fastest field in history — and one of the most inexperienced.

Mario Andretti isn't here. Neither are A.J. Foyt, Johnny Rutherford, Al Unser Sr. or Rick Mears.

How can this be an Indy 500 without those guys?

Duo help Rebels trade big numbers for wins

How do you top the 1994 season for the Midland Lee Rebels? A year ago the senior-laden Lee team advanced to the regional quarterfinals before losing two of three games to Lubbock Monterey.

The Rebels graduated four of the top six hitters in the league, including two all-district players that started for three seasons.

However, two of the veterans who returned from that team, senior second baseman Kevin Jordan and right fielder Britt Harper, have led a retooled Lee team one step further to the Region I semifinals where they will face Grapevine, 19-9-1 and District 5-5A runner-up, 2 p.m. Monday at Crutcher-Scott Field on the campus of Abilene Christian University in a one-game, winner take all contest to the region finals where Lubbock Coronado awaits, a 12-2

Greenwood nips Eastland for area title

■ The Rangers ninth-inning win puts them in the region round against Aledo.

By Stewart Doreen
Sports writer

ABILENE— If there was a question of who wanted to win the area playoff game between Greenwood and Eastland, the Rangers answered it.

Bucky Smith scored on a bunt single by Josh Jones in the top of the ninth inning to defeat Eastland 4-3 at Hunter Field here Saturday night.

Greenwood, 18-10-1 and runners up in District 8-3A, followed up the win over Alpine last week and advanced to the regional semifinal where they will play Aledo (18-7-1). The game may take place Tuesday night in Abilene. Aledo won its area playoff, defeating Sanford-Fritch 6-5 earlier Saturday at Hunter Field. Eastland finished the season at 17-5.

"My objective during the year has been to push for positiveness and make believers out of the team," said Greenwood coach Tony Pallanez. "They are fighters and that is what team ball is all about."

Smith, who went 4-4 with a walk and three runs scored, began the ninth inning dramatics with an infield single. He moved to third on Andy Watzl's single off the glove off the Eastland's third baseman Brad Arrington. After Greenwood's Rusty Purser was intentionally walk, Ranger starting pitcher Josh Jones drove in his second run of the night with a squeeze single down the first base line

Angels sweep Arkansas for fourth straight win

By Terry Williamson
Sports Editor

The Midland Angels had their finest day of the 1995 Texas League season at Christensen Stadium Saturday night with a doubleheader sweep of the Arkansas Travelers.

Not only did the Angels win two games, but Midland climbed above the .500 mark (25-24) for the first time this season and moved to within one game of league leading El Paso for the Western Division lead. The Angels caught San Antonio for second place.

And it didn't happen without some dramatic play. The Angels won the opener, 12-11, when shortstop Tim Harkrider hit a two-out, two-run game winner in the bottom of the seventh inning, capping a four-run uprising.

The home run heroics lately have been centered around Angels Todd Greene and George Arias with both of them locked in a duel for the Texas League home run lead. But for Harkrider it was only his second homer of the season, but it couldn't have come at a better time.

Meanwhile, Greene kept his home run boots on with a solo shot in Game 1 to climb to a league lead-

Tors eliminate Andrews, 9-1

LUBBOCK— Alvin Cantu dominated the Andrews Mustangs with his left arm and his bat as the Lamesa Golden Tors rolled to a 9-1 victory over Mustangs in a Class 4A region semifinal at Lubbock Christeian University here Saturday.

Lamesa (20-8 overall) advances to the region finals for the second time in four years where they will meet Fort Worth Arlington Heights, a 13-4 victor over Big Spring, in a one-game playoff at 7:30 p.m. Thursday at Hunter Field in Abilene. Andrews, the winnerof District 3-4A, finished the year 22-8.

Cantu allowed six hits and struck out 19 batters in the win. The senior left-hander, who now has 206 strikeouts on the year, worked out of a two-on, no-out jam in the fourth inning and a two-on, one-out jam in the sixth when he caught a bunt attempt by Mustangs' pinch hitter William Swan and tossed it to first base to force out Chris Harris to end the inning.

"I talked with our guys when we got on the bus after graduation this afternoon," said Lamesa coach Tony Greigo. "I told them Andrews was nobody unless you make them somebody. We played well and we got another great job from Alvin. The kids responded to the pressure."

Lamesa shortstop Tony Barrera went 2-for-3 with two singles and an RBI and leadoff hitter Ernie Morales went 3-for-5 with two singles and a double.

Cantu hit a triple to drive in two runs as every Tor collected a hit in the 14-hit attack.

Corey Martin (9-3), who entered the game with a 1.20 ERA, took the loss after allowing three runs off seven hits in two innings. Martin scored Andrews only run of the game.

Johnson overlooked journeyman who controls Spurs

By Bob Baum
AP Sports Writer

HOUSTON — David Robinson gets the MVP trophy. Dennis Rodman gets the attention.

Often overlooked in the San Antonio Spurs' success is the point guard who runs the show. Avery Johnson is an NBA journeyman who is at the controls of one of the league's best teams.

And if he isn't appreciated around the league, he is by the Houston Rockets, who give him a big share of the credit for San Antonio's crucial 107-102 victory Friday night in Game 3 of the Western Conference finals.

Despite a sore right ankle that, he said, limited him to about 80 percent effectiveness, Johnson had 20 points, 13 assists and no turnovers. He made five of six free throws in the final 45.5 seconds as San Antonio cut Houston's lead in the best-of-7 series to 2-1.

Spurs at Rockets, 2 p.m., NBC

"He's what makes the engine go on that team," Houston's Mario Elie said. "He's very underrated. I think he's one of the most underrated players in the league."

While the classic Hakeem Olajuwon vs. Robinson matchup will continue to draw the spotlight in Sunday's Game 4, Johnson will be a major target of the Rockets.

"We're going to try to find a way to get the ball out of his hands and slow him down," Elie said.

Johnson was not drafted and has played with six teams in seven NBA seasons, including three stops at San Antonio. He played for Houston for a half-season in 1992.

"He's found his niche and he's worked so hard," Houston coach Rudy Tomjanovich said. "Even though he's the enemy, I admire the guy."

Johnson has no illusions about getting much credit for the Spurs' success.

"I probably never will," he said. "If we're fortunate this year to win the championship, the people who say we couldn't win it with our backcourt, they'll probably say we can't do it again.

"I just know there are a lot of point guards who get a lot more attention than me who wish they were in my shoes."

San Antonio coach Bob Hill said Johnson's success is the result of hard work combined with a system that makes the most of his abilities.

MAGIC: Orlando sputters in fourth

(From 1C)

got into foul trouble. "We got him off the block some. That made it a little tougher on him, and we tried to double on him more."

The Magic still hit 13 3-pointers, giving them 36 for the series, but their shooters sputtered in the fourth when Orlando missed 15 of 22 field goal attempts.

The Pacers were clinging to a two-point lead with little over a minute left when Orlando was called for an illegal defense, its third of the game. Miller hit the technical, and Derrick McKey, who had 14 of his 22 points in the second half, added an 18-footer from the baseline with 54 seconds left.

Until Anfernee Hardaway, who had 29 points, hit a 3-pointer with 12 seconds left, the Magic had scored just 15 points in the final period. That shot cut Indiana's lead to 102-98, and Hardaway and Scott both put up air balls from behind the arc in the waning seconds.

Scott missed 10 of his 15 shots but still had 15 points, and Anderson was 4-of-10 for 10 points.

"We held them to one shot down the stretch and that was a big difference," Pacers coach Larry Brown said. "Our post defense was better today, and therefore our perimeter defense was better."

Meanwhile, the Pacers hit seven of eight free throws in the last 30 seconds to seal the victory. Indiana had 33 free throw attempts, making 19.

"That's a big stat in a close basketball game," said Hill, whose team was 13-of-26 from the foul line.

Even Horace Grant, the Magic's veteran forward who had been so steady throughout the playoffs, was off, getting just two rebounds.

Forcing the Magic into more of a halfcourt game helped the Pacers, and that's how Miller wants to see his team play the rest of the series.

"We can't play their tempo and beat them," he said. "We can't get caught up in fast-break basketball. Defense is going to allow us to win this series."

The Pacers led by two entering the final period and increased their lead to six on McKey's 3-pointer with 9:04 to play before Orlando answered with a basket by O'Neal and a 3-pointer by Scott. That was the last field goal for the Magic for five minutes.

During that drought, O'Neal missed two inside shots.

"We were missing baskets at the wrong time," Hardaway said. "We were missing open shots. It was the breaks we didn't get, and the breaks they did get."

Smits ended up in foul trouble like O'Neal, sitting out more than 6 1/2 minutes of the final period. Smits finished with 19 points in 29 minutes.

The Magic played the last 8:03 of the third quarter without O'Neal, on the bench with four fouls. In his absence, Hardaway had 12 points, including a layup with 4:29 left in the period to put Orlando up 75-72, its last lead of the game.

O'Neal played just 15 minutes in the first half, scoring 11 points, and was replaced in the lineup by Jeff Turner, whose 10 points helped give Orlando a one-point halftime lead.

Griffey breaks wrist, to miss three months

SEATTLE (AP) — Ken Griffey Jr., the best player in the history of the Seattle Mariners, won't be making any magical plays in the field or getting any clutch hits for at least three months.

The only action Griffey will get with the Mariners over that time will be in the trainer's room, rehabilitating a fractured left wrist suffered in Friday night's 8-3 win over Baltimore.

Other than rehabilitation, the only activities that team doctors will authorize Griffey to participate in at the ballpark are watching and cheering — — but definitely not clapping.

"I'll just cheer the guys on as much as possible," Griffey said. "I'll cheer from the bench if they'll have me."

Griffey

For the fans, Griffey provides a pleasant diversion. However, for his teammates, Griffey is both the best offensive and defensive player on the team and the only superstar in franchise history.

As a cheering section, Griffey won't make nearly as much impact as the five-time All-Star did on the field.

"When you lose a player the caliber of Junior it's not easy," Seattle manager Lou Piniella said. "We don't underestimate that. But at the same time, it can be done and we can't sit around and lament the fact."

Griffey made his major league debut as a 19-year-old in 1989. Since then, he has collected 998 hits (he was on the verge of becoming the third player in Mariners history to record 1,000 hits for a career), 179 home runs and 558 RBIs.

"For so long, our organization has relied on him in the clutch," right fielder Jay Buhner said. "This will probably be the most challenging time that we as a team have ever been through."

Doctors predict, but can not guarantee, that Griffey will make a full recovery.

"We don't expect that there will be a permanent effect, but that's always a concern when it is the prominent wrist of a professional athlete," Mariners orthopedic surgeon Dr. Larry Pedegana said.

"My only concern is how well he is when he comes back," Piniella said.

Rogers extends scoreless streak to 33 innings

The Associated Press

MINNEAPOLIS — Kenny Rogers extended his scoreless innings streak to 33, lowered his ERA to a major-league leading 1.42 and won his fifth straight game as the Texas Rangers beat Minnesota 3-1 Saturday night.

Benji Gil had a two-run single and Dean Palmer had two hits and a run for the Rangers, who have won three straight and nine of their last 11.

Rogers (5-2) struck out five, walked one, allowed only one runner past second base and moved within three innings of Charlie Hough's club record of 36 consecutive scoreless innings set in 1983.

White Sox 1, Tigers 0

DETROIT — Jason Bere pitched eight innings for his first win of the season and Ron Karkovice homered as the Chicago White Sox beat the Detroit Tigers.

Bere (1-3) cruised after getting out of a first-inning jam. Although he gave up six walks, two of them intentional, he allowed just three hits.

Roberto Hernandez pitched the ninth for his seventh save.

Blue Jays 3, Indians 0

TORONTO — Lance Parish broke a scoreless tie with his first home run of the season, a three-run shot, and Al Leiter pitched 7 2-3 scoreless innings as the Toronto Blue Jays defeated the Cleveland Indians.

After Bud Black had pitched six scoreless innings for Cleveland, Joe Carter and John Olerud hit consecutive singles off Eric Plunk to start the seventh.

After Plunk got two outs, Parrish hit a 1-2 pitch into the second deck in left field for his 309th career home run, third among catchers behind Carlton Fisk (376) and Johnny Bench (327).

Athletics 3, Yankees 0

OAKLAND, Calif. — Steve Ontiveros threw a one-hitter, allowing only a sixth-inning single that barely eluded his try at a bare-handed stop as the Oakland Athletics beat the New York Yankees.

Ontiveros (5-1) had thrown a pair of two-hitters, one of which came against the Yankees last July 20. He struck out seven and walked two in his fourth straight win and second career shutout.

The Yankees, losers of a season-high five straight, had only four baserunners. Luis Polonia ended the no-hit bid by singling with two outs in the sixth.

Extra-inning homer breaks Astros' four-game loss streak

The Associated Press

■ NL Roundup

HOUSTON — James Mouton hit a solo homer in the bottom of the 10th inning Saturday night, giving the Houston Astros a come-from-behind 3-2 victory over the Atlanta Braves that snapped a four-game losing streak.

Mouton homered to left, his second of the season, on an 0-1 pitch from reliever Mike Stanton (1-1). It made a winner of John Hudek (2-0), who pitched a perfect 10th for Houston.

Atlanta starter John Smoltz struck out 11 and took a 2-1 lead into the eighth inning, but the Astros tied the game. After John Cangelosi ended his string of three straight hits with a groundout, Luis Gonzalez walked, went to second on Derek Bell's single and scored on Jeff Bagwell's fielder's choice grounder.

Expos 2, Dodgers 1

MONTREAL — Carlos Perez pitched seven shutout innings for his fourth straight victory and Rondell White homered, leading the Montreal Expos past the Los Angeles Dodgers.

Perez (4-0) gave up eight hits, struck out six and came out after issuing his only walk, to Raul Mondesi leading off the eighth. Perez lowered his earned-run average from 2.14 to 1.93.

Mets 6, Giants 3

NEW YORK — Bret Saberhagen pitched the first complete game of the season for the New York Mets, who snapped a six-game losing streak with a victory over the San Francisco Giants.

Saberhagen (1-1), showing no signs of the shoulder stiffness that forced him to leave his previous game May 19, gave up seven hits, struck out five and walked one.

Cubs 3, Marlins 1

CHICAGO — Howard Johnson, the first batter after a two-hour rain delay, hit a go-ahead sacrifice fly in the seventh inning as the Chicago Cubs beat the Florida Marlins.

Reds 5, Cardinals 2

ST. LOUIS — Jose Rijo pitched shutout ball for seven innings and the Cincinnati Reds extended their winning streak to six games with a victory over the St. Louis Cardinals.

Phillies 5, Padres 4, 10 innings

PHILADELPHIA — Charlie Hayes singled over a drawn-in outfield in the bottom of the 10th inning, driving in the winning run from third as the Philadelphia Phillies defeated the San Diego Padres 5-4 Saturday night.

Pirates 9, Rockies 4

PITTSBURGH — Denny Neagle won his fourth consecutive start as the Pittsburgh Pirates scored eight runs in the third inning and beat the Colorado Rockies.

LEE: Offensive numbers down slightly winner over Denton Ryan.

While the offensive numbers are slightly down for both players this season, the two have improved defensively and provided the leadership early in the season while a load of back-up players and junior varsity players from 1994 got their feet wet in the world of District 4-5A play.

"When you have the kind of caliber of ball players of Kevin and Britt, you always expect them to come in and lead you in the playoffs," said Midland Lee coach Jesse Benavidez, who has led the Rebels to the region semifinals for the first time since 1978. "They were two of the top six hitters we had last year but struggled early in this year. Right now is when you want them to step up with their experience and so far they have. I think they will do well in Monday's game just like they have in the last two playoffs games."

In Monterey's 2-1 win over Lubbock Monterey last week, Jordan stroked a double down the left field line to score Raymond Martinez to tie the game at 1-1. He later scored the game-winning run on Chad Crow's single to left.

In the Rebels area playoff game against El Paso Hanks. Harper was one of the big guns, going 2-for-3 with two runs scored and one RBI in an 8-1 victory.

"Everybody is coming on and I think we will start hitting," said Harper, who was named first-team all-district as a designated hitter as a sophomore in 1994. "(Lubbock Monterey's Monty) Ward shut us down, but we hit well against El Paso Hanks, so I think we will turn it on."

Overall, the offense has been down from 1994. Jordan's average is a healthy .337, down from an eye-popping .476 as a junior. Harper has raised his averaged steadily this season. Batting .293 at one point in the year, the junior has elevated his average to .322. Lee is averaging seven runs per game compared to last season when the Maroon and Gray were scoring almost 10 runs per game. But the trade off is a pair of pitchers that have shutdown most opponents—senior Lance Watters and junior Mark Holly. The pitching depth has allowed Benavidez to use a more sacrifice oriented offense, playing percentage baseball by moving runners in scoring position and setting up the table for Jordan and Harper. The move has paid off. Jordan leads the team in runs batted in with 29 and runs scored with 35. Harper, batting in the fourth spot all season, has 23 runs batted in, slightly down from last year's 25.

"I think they put a lot of pressure on themselves early because they felt there were a lot of persons with high expectations when the year started. When scouts are looking at Kevin as closely as they are, that's a lot of pressure to put on a young person. He's pressing, trying to show things to people that are watching. But they have learned to tune it out and that's probably why they are doing a little bit better right now."

Jordan, a first-team all-state pick by the Texas Sportswriters Association a year ago, admits that the glaring eyes of professional scouts have made the season a challenge.

"Definitely, there has been quiet a bit of pressure," said Jordan, who could be drafted in the amateur draft coming up in early June. "You've got to perform for the team, for the scouts and yourself. You always want to have that terrific year. You just do the best you can to try and get it. I worked on my defense with (former Midland Lee player and current New York Yankee) Randy Velarde and he taught me a lot. He taught me about getting the position on the ball before the ball gets to you and to get your legs into the throw. It has made a big difference.

"The draft is a big factor right now. If I'm drafted high enough and money is worth my while I'll give it a shot. If the money is not right I'll consider college," said Jordan, who is pondering offers from numerous schools including Blinn Junior College, Odessa College, Howard College, Texas Tech, Texas A&M and Arkansas. If Jordan doesn't choose the professional rout, the junior college path is one that most players take since the major league clubs can draft a player each year while the players are in junior college. But they must wait if a player enters a four-year school.

For Jordan, baseball has been as natural as turning your hips through a home run over left field.

"Baseball began for me when I was six years old as a bat boy on my dad's softball team. Of course we would go all over the place to watch my brother (former Lee, Texas Tech and Lubbock Christian standout Danny). I grew to love the game, my dad taught me the fundamentals and now I'm trying to make it to the next level."

Jordan and Harper hope they can take the Rebels to the next level — the region finals against Lubbock Coronado and the school's third state tournament appearance.

Andretti has inherited the role of favorite for today's Indianapolis 500

By Jim Litke
AP Sports Writer

INDIANAPOLIS — All right. So Michael Andretti's name is not on the lips of absolutely everyone who knows the way things go around here.

When Roger Penske and his beaten legion of doom slinked out of Gasoline Alley last weekend, someone stopped the master to ask who should inherit the role of favorite for Sunday's Indianapolis 500.

■ Sports Analysis

He barely stopped moving long enough to answer. "I haven't thought about that," Penske said.

He might be the only one. The Las Vegas sportsbooks installed Andretti atop the charts at 5-1 to start the week and only grew fonder about his chances as time went on. He was down to 7-2 on the eve of the race to do what his father had done only once in 29 tries on the most unforgiving oval in auto racing: Avoid curses, crashes and the failure of $2 auto parts to win the race.

Mention the name, and racing afficionados immediately think of all the reasons why an Andretti won't win here. As the joke goes, the four most famous words at the speedway are not "Gentlemen, start your engines," but instead, "Mario is slowing down."

Mario, however, is retired. Now, Michael is the best driver in this year's field, one of the two or three best in the game. He's got a top-flight team behind him and the most reliable car in the field. And most important, he's due.

Anyone who thinks otherwise should keep in mind where Penske and his tough-as-nails driving duo of Al Unser Jr. and Emerson Fittipaldi will be spending Sunday. Michael was careful what he said about this topic. And the least superstitious member of the Andretti clan was also reluctant to say much about luck.

But he was willing to say this just 48 hours before the green flag dropped: "If it's meant to be, if the guy upstairs says it's your turn, then it's going to be your turn. That's all you can do."

And here are a few highlights from how he'll do it, exorcising some of the Andretti ghosts along the way:

Starting on the inside of the second row, Michael avoids the first-lap pileup caused by pole-sitter Scott Brayton that, similar to Kevin "Crash" Cogan's 1982 foulup, knocks five cars out of the race.

When this happened to Mario, ending his chances yet one more time, racing people recall never seeing him half as steamed. This time, watching from the Newman-Haas pit as Michael steers clear of the trouble, Mario merely smiles.

Besides Brayton, among the early departures is Teo Fabi, one of only a half-dozen serious contenders. Michael, meanwhile, settles in comfortably behind early leader Scott Goodyear and waits for the race to come to him.

Going into the first turn on lap 120, it does. Michael tries to pass Danny Sullivan too low and his car does a 360-degree spin. Ten years earlier, Sullivan did the same to Mario in the same place, spun out, recovered beautifully and went on to claim his now-famous "spin-to-win" victory. About this time, fans begin to sense fate might actually be hanging out in the Andretti pit.

On lap 187, just one lap after Jacques Villenueve's daring pass of Andretti on the first turn gives him the lead, Michael returns the favor with the exact same maneuver.

Fans with good memories recall this is only the second time in Indy history that such a risky move has been tried. The first time was 1991, when four-time winner Rick Mears did Michael after Michael had done him. Now it is the Canadian Villeneuve who watches the Andretti tailpipe zoom away with admiration. That leaves one car to catch.

After leading for 160 of the 200 laps, just as Michael had in 1992, Arie Luyendyk acquires a piece of the Andretti bad luck: A plastic fitting in his fuel system pops loose and shuts down the Dutchman's car with 11 laps to go.

This leaves Goodyear trailing Michael for the first sip of milk. In 1992, after Michael's breakdown, Little Al Unser held off Goodyear by less than the length of a car. This time, it is Michael holding off Goodyear by less than the length of the tire of the same name.

But that's not the end of it.

The Andretti party is cut short Sunday night when the celebrants learn track officials have assessed a one-lap penalty against Michael for passing under a yellow flag and declared Goodyear the winner.

In the 1981 race, it was Mario who finished behind Bobby Unser, wound up being placed ahead of him after a protest, then was moved back to second after another official inquiry that October.

This time, however, the original order is allowed to stand and an Andretti is on top and stays there. The party resumes.

RHCC: Early tee time helps leaders

(From 1C)

try Club Stampede.

Jacobs and partner Matt Clements continued to lead the Stampede's Championship Flight after carding a four-under-par round of 66 to stay one-stroke ahead of Chris Brown and Don Pyle and two-strokes in front of a charging Steve Hammel and Doyce Haney.

The Jacobs-Clements group took advantage of an early tee off time Saturday to turn the four-under round.

"The winds picked up around the 13th hole of our round," said Clements, a former Midland Lee golfer who played at Western Texas College this spring. "We played all right. We didn't have a bogey, but we weren't able to make any putts today. Josh played real well, I just tagged along today."

Jacobs barely made Saturday's 8:15 start time. "My mom woke me up at 7:45 and I got out here in time to hit four or five practice balls and I didn't have time to putt. We started out slow today, but we went three-under on the back nine."

The flight's best round was turned in by Steve Hammel and Doyce Haney. They fired a one-under 34 on the front nine, but birdied Nos. 1, 3, 7, and 8 on the back side to pull within two shots of Jacobs and Clements.

"We played bad yesterday and we just wanted to make up some ground before Sunday," said Haney. "Getting that early tee time really helped. It is going to be tough with the wind blowing (Saturday) afternoon."

The Hammel and Haney duo, like Clements-Jacobs, also went without a bogey during the round.

The team of Chris Brown and Don Pyle are one-shot back of the leaders after a three-under round of 67.

With three groups bunched within two shots, the golfers expect the tees to be moved back for the final round today. "They will probably move the tees back and that makes this a totally different golf course," said Haney.

Championship Flight tee times are scheduled for around 2 p.m. today.

Former bank teller one-stroke off lead

The Associated Press

FORT WORTH — Woody Austin, a 31-year-old rookie on the PGA Tour who was working as a bank teller as recently as last November, had seven birdies in the best round of a difficult day to find himself one shot off the lead in the Colonial National Invitation.

Austin finished with two birdies in a 4-under-par 66 in a stop-and-start wind Saturday and was behind only Craig Parry with one round to play.

■ Golf Roundup

"I may not win, but I'll be playing my skinny little butt off," Austin said.

Parry, a stocky, 5-foot-6 Australian, birdied the final hole to complete a round of par 70 for a 9-under 201 total.

Winds gusted to 35 mph — then abruptly subsided — harassing most of the field but playing to Austin's advantage.

"The tough conditions are good for me. It calms me down when I know that par is a good score. The more difficult the course is, the better I like it," said Austin, a graduate of the Nike tour who worked for five years a bank teller in Tampa, Fla.

Corning Classic

CORNING, N.Y. — Alison Nicholas found herself in one of those indescribable grooves while cruising through the $550,000 Corning Classic.

Every ball Nicholas struck over the final seven holes seemed to land exactly were she intended. Each putt seemed a little easier than the one previous. Saturday's 6-under-par 66 appeared so simple.

"I just sort of zoned in," Nicholas said. "Everything was flying at the stick. It's difficult to express. You just feel calm, totally concentrated and confident."

Nicholas made seven birdies in taking a two-stoke lead over Pat Bradley after three rounds. Four came in the last seven holes, when Nicholas took control.

Quicksilver Classic

MIDWAY, Pa. — George Archer rode a hot putter and capitalized on mistakes by Buddy Allin, Isao Aoki and Larry Gilbert on Saturday to take a two-stroke lead heading into the final round of the $1.1 million Quicksilver Classic.

Archer, who won the Cadillac NFL Golf Classic two weeks ago and took a week off from the Senior PGA Tour to fish, shot a 4-under-par 68 and was at 7-under 137. He made four birdie putts of 18 feet or longer on the back nine at the Quicksilver Golf Club.

ANGELS: Harkrider key to Midland sweep ing 17 for the season. Arias was quiet this night, hitless in six at-bats to remain at 15.

But Harkrider was the key to the sweep. Arkansas had scored three runs in the top of the seventh inning in the opener to take an 11-8 lead. With one out in the bottom of the frame, however, Emmitt Cohick and pinch hitter Steve Hosey set the table with back-to-back doubles and Orlando Munoz delivered a sacrifice fly to pull to within 11-10.

Still, there were two outs. Jovino Carvajal then singled off of Arakansas pen ace Steve Montgomery, who was going for his 14th save of the season. Harkrider, batting from the left side for the first time in the game, then delivered his game winner to right.

The sweep was then in motion as the Angels scored six runs in the first three innings of the nightcap for a 6-4 victory.

It was Leon Glenn doing the major damage this time with two doubles that plated three runs. Greene, who drove in four runs on the night, also had an RBI and Hosey had his second of the night.

Midland reliever Mike Schooler had a huge night. He got a victory in the first game, thanks to Harkrider, and came back with his third save in the second game. Jeff Schmidt (3-1) got the win in Game 2, going 6 1/3 innings before giving way to Schooler. Schmidt was hurt by two Arkansas homers, a one-out shot by Jose Velez in the second and a two-out homer by Tony Diggs in the fourth. He also gave up a two-out run in the sixth.

In the first game, the two teams scored 14 runs in the first two innings of play for a wild start to a doubleheader that was headed for just as wild a finish.

The Angels have now won four games in a row, matching another season high, and they can go for the five-game sweep against Arkansas when they face the Travelers at 6 p.m. today in a game that will end a 10-game homestand.

AREA: Rangers score four on 11 hits to give Greenwood the area title in the program's fourth year of existance.

"Some of us were a little nervous, because we had never been to an area game," Jones said. "This time I depended more on my teamates and that took the pressure off me. We played our best and know we can come out on top if we believe."

Greenwood, which scored four runs on 11 hits, looked as though they had things wrapped up earlier in the game. In the bottom of the fifth, Jones helped his own cause for the first time with the bases loaded with Rangers and one out. Jones took the first offering from Eastland pitcher Todd Hatton, 9-3, and drove it to center field driving in Smith and giving the Rangers a 2-1 lead. That lead looked as though it may last when Jones got out of trouble in the top of the sixth.

Jones, 6-1, had runners on second and third with no one out. He struck out Mikey Kidd, walked David Ovalle to load the bases, and got Glenn Thomas out on a soft liner.

INDY: Anything likely after bizzare month

(From 1C)

Mears, with 16 Indy wins among them from 1961 through 1991, have retired from driving.

It's been a strange month of May at the Speedway, and it could get even stranger in the 79th running of the Memorial Day weekend classic.

What next? Lyn St. James becoming the first woman to win the world's richest and most prestigious race? Bryan Herta becoming the first winner from the last starting spot? How about Japan's Hideshi Matsuda, who used to be a Buddhist monk?

Hey, why not. Anybody's likely to come out on top after this bizarre month.

Maybe favorite Michael Andretti will finally manage a win for the family that has been shut out at Indy since his father Mario took the checkered flag in 1969.

"Everything seems so different this year," Michael Andretti said. "Maybe that means I'll win. Or maybe it just means something new will keep me from winning. It should be one of the best races in years because so many guys could win it."

In the front row are three drivers who don't even have regular rides in the Indy-car series.

Pole-winner Scott Brayton leads everyone in the lineup with 13 previous Indy starts and never has finished better than sixth in the race.

Arie Luyendyk, who won the fastest Indy 500 in history at 185.981 mph in 1990 and has three top-5 finishes in the past five years, generally is overlooked when favorites are chosen.

Both are on the front row thanks in great part to their affiliation with team owner John Menard, who took a chance — and spent a lot of money — developing a stock block V6 turbocharged engine that has given them a horsepower advantage over the rest of the field.

Each qualified at better than 231 mph to be part of the fastest racing field ever, an average of 226.912 mph. The big question is: Will either finish the race? The reliability of the Menard engine is one of the biggest question marks of the race.

Menard, whose budget is about $6.5 million for the only race his team runs, points out that several drivers have finished this race in cars powered by the V6 powerplant, including the elder Unser, who was third in 1992.

"Is it as reliable as a (Ford) Cosworth or an (Mercedes) Ilmor? Probably not," Menard said. "Is it better than it was a year ago? Yeah. Is it better than it was three years ago? Probably. So we'll just have to wait until race day and see. We're real hopeful."

Another question mark is Scott Goodyear, who finished second to Unser Jr. in 1992 in the closest Indy finish ever — a difference of .043 seconds. Goodyear made it onto the outside of the front row with a car rolling on unproven Firestone tires — how's that for bizarre? — and powered by a new Honda engine untested over 500 miles.

Inspected, Checked And Ready!

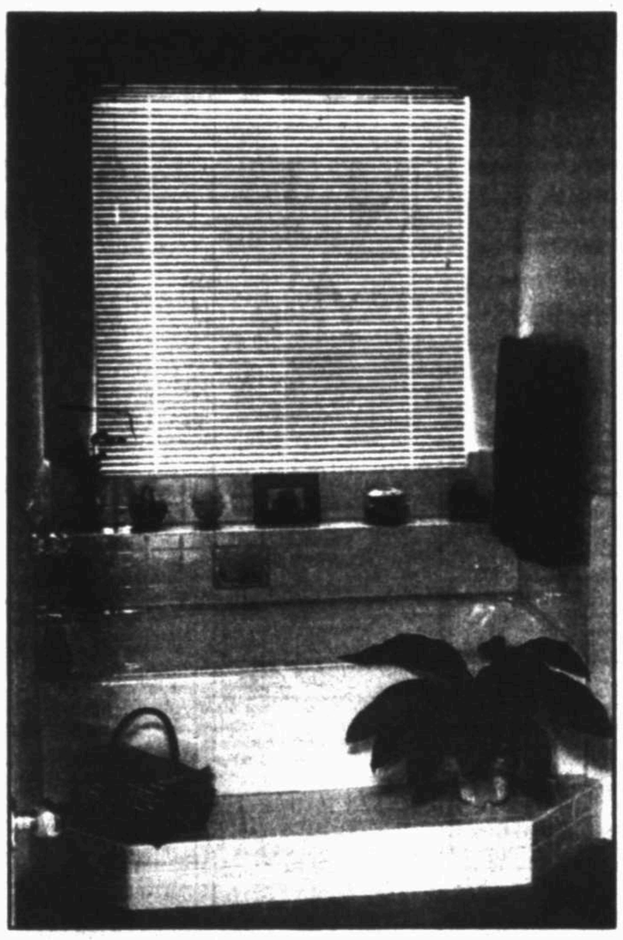

Built just two years ago by one of Midland finest custom home builders, this charming property at 5718 Crowley -- in Grassland Estates -- is an absolute must see.

Set in pretty, grounds that are awash with flowers and trees, the home is conveniently located just a short walk from Scharbauer Elementary school making it ideal for a young family. With four bedrooms and three bathrooms, there is certainly enough space for both children and adults.

The theme in this house is definitely light. All through the house there are huge windows, and these, coupled with the open plan design and pale decor, take full advantage of all the natural light to produce an atmosphere of tranquility. Nowhere in the home is this more obvious than in the combination dining and living room. The room's clean lines are enhanced by the combination of tiles, faux Georgian mouldings, high ceilings and the centerpiece of the room, which is a very attractive fireplace.

The kitchen has been designed and decorated to complement the light, bright feel of the family room. It combines pale wood cabinetry with white, built-in appliances that are of the very best quality. A breakfast area, set into a bay window, provides an unusual place in which to share family time. There is a nice blend of the practical and elegant in this family orientated kitchen. For example there has been as much attention placed on the accent trim as there has been on providing a large pantry and utility room.

The master suite is another charming set of rooms which is also characterized by a pleasant blend of practicality and style. Flanked by closets, the step-up tub with its glass brick backing offers the ultimate in luxury whilst the large shower with built-in seat adds a practical touch to one's morning. Double lavatories, ceiling treatments and accent trims all contribute to the room's dramatic effect.

Listed for $119,900 by Kay Pederson, GRI, of Chaparral Realtors, this is a magnificent property has much to offer. For more information, or to arrange an appointment to view, call the Chaparral offices at 686-7000.

Decorative techniques

Kay Sutton, Kay Sutton Realtors

Decorative paint treatments can add style and panache to any room. Paint is the easiest and most inexpensive way to enhance your home. A few of the more popular techniques are sponging, wood graining, color washing and rag rolling.

Sponging is ideal for amateur painters. This treatment creates a mottled cloud like effect. First, a base coat is applied and allowed to dry. Secondly, a different color of paint is then dabbed (using a sponge) over the base coat. Effects vary with the amount of pressure used, spacing and the type of sponge used.

Woodgrain produces a surface which simulates wood. This is achieved by covering the surface with a pale colored base coat, then applying a second, darker coat of paint or stain over it. A brush with intermittently spaced bristles is then dragged across the wet paint to create the wood grain effect.

Color washing produces a soft, antiquated and unique surface. Enamel paint is thinned by 50 percent with mineral spirits, mixed well and brushed over the surface. The paint is allowed to stand for a few minutes then most of it is rubbed off with a clean, lint-free rag.

Rag rolling is an easier technique that creates a luxurious, textured finish resembling crumpled fabric. The technique can be used to create various patterns, depending on the type of cloth used and the way the cloth is applied. In rag rolling, a large section of a wall is painted. While the paint is still wet, dab a wadded cloth across it. Crinkled fabric may also be rolled across the wet paint.

Remember the following tips for achieving the look you want in your home's interior.

- Always start with a clean surface. Fill holes and cracks with patching plaster or spackling compound and sand smooth.
- If you plan to paint over a previously unpainted surface, always apply a primer coat.
- Test your techniques and color combinations by first applying them to a sample board.

Contact your local realtor for comments and suggestions for the color scheme in your house.

Contract or offer? What's the difference?

Peggy Strong CRS, GRI Chaparral Realtors

The distinction between "contract" and "offer" is not difficult but is one of the most misunderstood terms in real estate transactions. Simply put, an offer becomes a contract if and only if all parties have signed, initialed every change and delivery has been received by all principle parties.

Delivery...the magic word in determining if an offer is to become a valid, executed contract. Does a faxed copy of an offer constitute delivery? This is a gray area and caution should be taken when relying on the legalities of faxed documents. Faxing is a convenience, and at best, should be immediately followed with hard copies. It has been suggested that parties faxing signatures should also disclose permission to consider such as delivery.

Does delivery to the buyer's agent or seller constitute delivery? Maybe. If the agent is operating as a representative of the principle, by virtue of either; a signed listing agreement or, a buyer's representation agreement, then delivery to that agent would validate delivery. If the agent is a sub-agent of the seller's agent, then the buyer is not tied legally (or with a fiduciary relationship) to the agent and delivery must be to that buyer personally.

Let's explore a couple of true situations for a clear picture.

A buyer is willing to offer the full price on a listing through his agent A, who is working as a sub-agent of the seller's agent B. The offer is submitted and presented to the seller who immediately signs. The seller's agent B prepares to deliver to agent A. Upon leaving the property, agent C knocks on the door with buyer B and wants to show the property. Seller's agent B discloses that an offer has just been accepted. Agent C, who is also a sub-agent of the seller's agent, states that perhaps the best interest of the seller would be to delay delivery until after this showing. Result? Agent C shows the property and writes an offer exceeding full price on the premises. All parties sign, delivery is immediate, and a contract exists.

Or

A seller and a buyer have agreed on all terms and the offer has been signed, first by the buyer and then by the seller, who signed and made the smallest of changes on the offer --requiring the buyer's initials. The buyer's agent obtains the buyer's initials on the changes and prepares to deliver it to the seller's agent. But: the seller has received a call from his employer canceling the proposed transfer. Hence there is no need to move. The seller calls his agent and instructs him not to accept delivery. The buyer's agent attempts delivery but it is denied. The result is no contract.

Signed, sealed and delivered. Until then what do you have? Nothing but an offer.

Are verbal agreements involving real estate over $1,000 binding? Absolutely not, or only until the next better written offer comes along.

The Grill of Success

THE TEXAS BEEF COUNCIL

'Tis the season — well, it may be too early in the year for that song, but as the Good Book says "For everything there is a season," and this is the beginning of the season for outdoor cooking.

All over town this weekend, barbecue pits will be fired up and friends and relatives will gather for the first official backyard barbecues of the 1995 summer season (any outdoor cooking done before this weekend counts as preseason grilling).

But before you rush out and throw another T-bone steak on the barbie, there are a few safety tips you should know.

Marian Farr, Midland County Extension agent for home economics, and the other fine folk out at the Extension office provided the following safety tips for safe outdoor cooking, from the Texas Agricultural Extension Service (Texas Aggies, all):

■ First things first. The best results in grilling are directly related to the best quality food on the grill. Choose fresh meats, poultry or seafood whenever you cook outside. Then, while these quality foods are waiting for the grill, store them safely to minimize danger of bacterial growth. Food-borne illnesses that might be caused by these bacteria are not fun, especially when summer is just starting. Recommended refrigeration temperature is 40 degrees or colder. Frozen meats should be thawed in the refrigerator, not on the kitchen counter or in the sink.

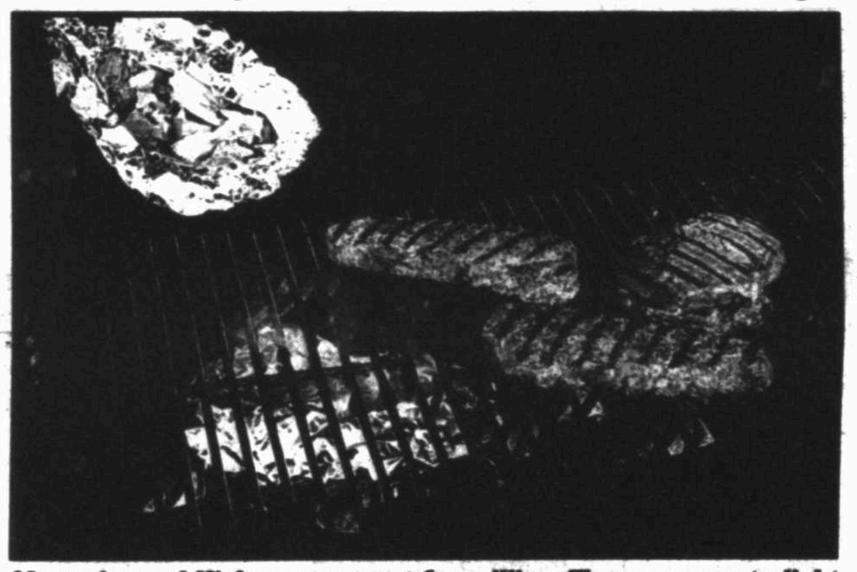

■ Some cooks like to marinate their foods before grilling. Marinating should be done in the refrigerator, not on the counter, and leftover marinade should not be used as a sauce for cooked meat, since any bacteria that may have been lurking in the meat when it was uncooked will still be lurking in the marinade. Toss it instead, and start fresh if necessary.

■ Hands, cooking utensils and work surfaces, such as cutting boards, should be washed thoroughly before, after and during the preparing and cooking process. Like your mother always said, "A little soap and water never hurt anybody." Keep that in mind.

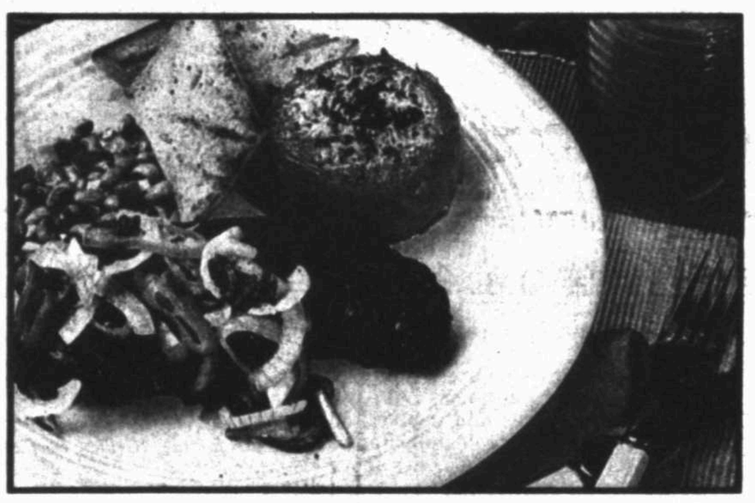

■ Use different cutting boards for different foods — one for meats, one for fruits and vegetables, etc. That way you won't risk the possibility of spreading bacteria from one dish to the other.

■ When cooking chicken, pork, turkey and/or ground meats, make sure the internal temperature of the food is at least 170 degrees and the juices run clear. As a general rule, rare steaks are not a problem for healthy people, but they can be for those who "have been ill, are recovering from surgery or have compromised immune systems," according to TAES information. A better, more healthy idea might be to cook all meats thoroughly to be sure you are killing all bacteria that might cause problems later.

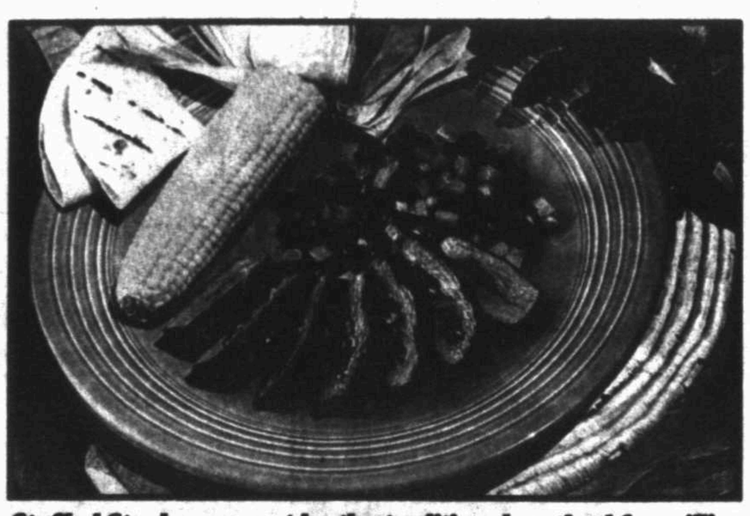

■ After all the cooking is done, serving time needs to be no more than two hours (which should be plenty of time to really pig out), and leftovers should be refrigerated — again, at 40 degrees temperature or below — immediately. That way they will be safe for you to enjoy again, as soon as you are through digesting.

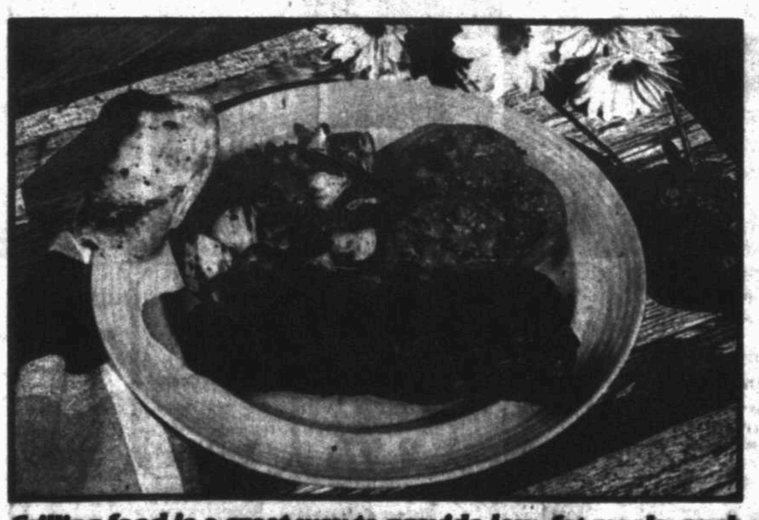

Mesquite and Hickory are great for grilling. They are easy to light and ready to grill in as little as 20 minutes. Mesquite provides a sweet, delicate flavor that complements beef. Hickory wood imparts a smokey, bacon-like flavor often associated with Southern-style cooking.

When it comes to outdoor cooking, there is nothing more traditional than a strip loin or ribeye steak grilled over mesquite or hickory coals and served with Texas green, purple and white onions.

Stuffed Steaks may not be the traditional method for grilling steaks, but the spicy, flavorful stuffing of green chiles, olive oil, minced garlic, dried oregano leaves, black pepper and cilantro is guaranteed to tempt your tastebuds.

Grilling food is a great way to provide low-fat meals, such as this lean strip loin steak grilled with a mixture of Worcestershire sauce, garlic and black pepper. Top off the meal with Grilled Potato Salad.

AFTER YOU get the food preparation going, it's time to think about getting the fire going as well. Since safety is a key factor in having a successful cookout, it's important to keep that in mind when firing up an outdoor grill.

Jane Nelson and the other barbecue experts at Weber Grill-Line (1-800-474-5568) are on hand 8 a.m.-6 p.m. Central time, Monday through Friday, to help with any questions you may have about outdoor cooking.

Using charcoal and charcoal lighter fluid safely is important when building an outdoor grill fire, Ms. Nelson said. "The fluid can be dangerous." If the fire is not allowed to burn down properly, not only can the fluid smell bad and leave a lingering taste in the food, but it can set the whole grill on fire — including the

Dallas actress delights her audience during MCCLA's luncheon

By Marilyn McKnight-Harrison

Mary Ann Smith, a well-known Dallas actress, delighted her audience at the Midland Country Club Ladies Association's May luncheon meeting with a dramatic presentation. She reviewed the Broadway play, "A Romantic Comedy" by Bernard Slate.

McKnight-Harrison

Ms. Smith has a distiguished background in the realms of drama, music and civic activities in Dallas. She has performed leading roles with University Summer Stock Players, the former Courtyard Playhouse and the Dallas Little Theater. In addition, she has made numerous television and feature film appearances and has hosted a radio program, "Reverie."

Ms. Smith is a founder and partner in Texas Star productions. The first of several films, "Stand Alone," starring Academy Award winner Charles Durning, is now in release.

The luncheon featured Red Snapper Ponchatrain served with a seasoned fettucini and for dessert, Strawberry Crepes. Hostesses for the social hour beforehand were Lorraine (Mrs. Charles) Coffman, Marianne (Mrs. Will) Green and Altie (Mrs. William) Russell.

Seen in the audience were Betty (Mrs. Don) Ewan, Fredda (Mrs. Randall) Lundy, Norma (Mrs. Jack) Sherman, Charlene Waddill, and Cathey (Mrs. Harry) Graham.

ON A BEAUTIFUL recent Thursday afternoon, friends of Cindi (Mrs. Mark) Mladenka gathered for lunch at her home in celebration of her birthday.

Iced tea and wine were served prior to a delicious salad luncheon. Virginia (Mrs. Phil) Huchton, a member of the Midland-Odessa Symphony Orchestra, provided background violin music as guests visited and lunched in the Mladenkas' lovely garden.

Cindi's six-year-old daughter, Madison, a kindergartener at The Hillander School, was on hand to assist with the party. Among others attending were Cindi's mother, Jackie (Mrs. Andra) Cary, and her sister, Brenda (Mrs. Chris) Brown; Patty (Mrs. David) Cooper, co-publisher with Cindi of M Magazine, and their staff, Donna (Mrs. Lee) Bruno and Mary Anne (Mrs. Greg) Benton.

Also spotted in the crowd were Cheryl (Mrs. David) Cotner, Kay (Mrs. Manny) Sirgo, Deborah (Mrs. Gary) Baily, Karen (Mrs. Dean) Rucker, Andrea (Mrs. Richard) Catania, Lora (Mrs. Lee) Jones and Kerry (Mrs. Matt) Faudree.

The daughter of Jackie and Andra Cary, Cindi is a graduate of Lee High School and Columbia College in Columbia, Mo.

"ANGIE LEA is changing colors from Maroon and White to Orange and White. So let' salute her." Thus began the colorful invitations to a Mexican Fiesta on the grounds of the Museum of the Southwest.

Hosting the event were Betty Jane and Alan Norwood, Bonnie and George Van Husen and the honoree's grandparents, Anne (Mrs. Ralph) Lea, and Eleanor and Zay Kimberlin.

The daughter of Kathy and Luke Lea, Angie is a graduate of Lee High School. She plans to attend the University of Texas at Austin, where she has been accepted into its Plan II Honors program.

This summer, Angie will be a counselor at Camp Grady Spruce on Possum Kingdom Lake. She also will compete in the national tournament of the National Forensic League in Fort Lauderdale, Fla.

JALISA LANE was honored with a "Graduation Ole" patio party recently at Rosa's newest location on North Midland Drive.

Guests were treated to a Mexican buffet amidst multi-colored balloons and somberos. A memorabilia table featured some of JaLisa's many accomlishments, including Miss Lee High School, Homecoming Queen, Class President for four consecutive years, Dixie Dolls, Texas Scholar, Who's Who Among American High Schcol Students, a four-year recipient of the Optimist Club Award, PAL (Peer Assistance Leadership) program, and numberous community service projects.

Hostesses for the event were Vickey (Mrs. Mannig) Banks, Melinda (Mrs. Clark) Lea, Betany (Mrs. Dan) LeRoy, Patricia Livingston and Judy Swails.

The daughter of Nelda and Royce Lane, JaLisa plans to attend Midland College and pursue a career in the medical field.

KAREN MALONE COLE was honored with a graduation luncheon Friday at the Plaza Club. The hostesses were Cindy (Mrs. Tommy) Gentry and Ms. Debbie Bishop.

The party was a three-generation affair. Attending were Karen's mother, Julie (Mrs. Bob) Cole, and her grandmothers, Malone (Mrs. Curtis) Reese of Shreveport, La., and Janice (Mrs. Bob) Cole of El Paso; Cindy's daughter, Jennifer Gentry, and her mother, Peggy (Mrs. Ivan) Owens of Wayne, Okla., and Debbie's daughter, Amy Bishop and her mother, Joyce (Mrs. Gordon) Leach.

A graduate of Midland High School, Karen will be attending the University of Missouri at Columbia and majoring in journalism.

GRILL: Emphasize safety in outdoor cooking

cook — if not handled in a safe manner.

Never pour more fluid on an already-burning fire, Ms. Nelson cautioned. The whole shebang can go — well, shebang.

To eliminate that problem entirely, she suggested using alternatives to charcoal lighter fluid. One is a device called a chimney starter, which is similar to a tube with a handle on it. The cook fills the chimney started with wadded-up newspaper and charcoal (the newspaper on the bottom), then lights the paper, which in turn lights the charcoal. When the charcoal is burning well, the chimney starter can be lifted off of the coals.

The other charcoal-lighting device is a cube of starter that looks like it's made out of candle wax, but isn't. This cube is placed in the bottom of the grill with the charcoal and then lit. As it burns, it causes the charcoal to burn — which is its goal, after all.

These products can be found at most hardware stores and some department and discount stores, she said.

Another option outdoor cooks might want to consider is installing a gas grill. "Gas grilling is very safe," Ms. Nelson said. "You have to use a little common sense there too, and follow the directions that came with the grill. You have to make sure all the valves are open that are supposed to be open, and closed if they are supposed to be closed.

"Women like the gas grills better — you just turn then on, do your cooking and turn them off," she said. "Men like that ritual of the charcoal grill."

OTHER SAFETY hints, courtesy of Ms. Nelson and Weber:

■ Always follow the specific instructions that the manufacturer included with your particular grill. People have been known to be severely injured or even killed for ignoring this simple suggestion.

■ Keep children and pets away from a hot grill.

■ Neither charcoal nor gas grills were designed to be used indoors or in closed areas, such as a garage or enclosed patio. To do so is very, very dangerous.

■ Gasoline and other highly volatile fluids were never designed to be used as fire starters either. Using them as starters can cause explosions.

■ When using your outdoor grill, be sure it is on a nonflammable surface and not anywhere near trees, bushes, wooden railings or other items that might catch on fire. And make sure the grill is standing level. You don't want the grill tipping over and spilling hot coals everywhere.

OK, NOW that you know how to safely prepare your food and your fire, it's time to discuss the actual grilling. After all, the best, tastiest, most bacteria-free food in the world grilled on the safest cooking unit will not be any good if you burn the meat. The charcoal is supposed to be in the grill, not on the plates.

Information from Ms. Farr and the Extension Service suggests some grilling safety tips too:

■ Smoke and flare-ups can be eliminated, or at least reduced, by limiting the amount of fat on the grill. For example, cook low-fat meats, trim any excess fat off the meat before putting it on the grill, and don't marinate or baste with sauces that contain a lot of fat. Consider covering the grill with aluminum foil and poking holes in the foil to let the juice drip through.

■ Food such as fish or vegetables can be wrapped in foil before grilling. Does anything taste better than potatoes or corn on the cob, wrapped in foil and cooked on the grill?

■ Grilling time can be reduced by partially cooking the food in the kitchen first, and then immediately transferring it to the grill (transfer it fast to avoid the risk of bacteria taking up residence in your food). Of course if you do this, you're going to mess up the kitchen too...

■ If any of the food does get a little too done — OK, charred — cut off the charred part and throw it away.

Whichever kind of grill you use, and whatever food you choose to grill, remember that safety is a necessary ingredient in any outdoor cooking recipe. Weber's Ms. Nelson put it this way: "Grilling is fun, and it makes for more fun if you do it safely."

ONCE YOU have the grill fires burning, you will need some recipe to cook out. The following are suggestions from the Texas Beef Council:

GRILLED STEAKS TOPPED WITH TEXAS ONIONS

4 beef strip loin or ribeye steaks, cut 1 inch thick
1 small white onion, coarsely chopped
1 small purple onion, coarsely chopped
3 green onions, chopped
2 jalapenos, seeded and chopped
2 tablespoons oil
¼ cup sugar
2 tablespoons cider vinegar
1 teaspoon Worcestershire sauce
¼ teaspoon each salt and pepper
Dash of ground cloves

Chop onions and jalapeno. Saute in oil in a large saucepan over medium-low heat 10 minutes or until tender, stirring occasionally.

Stir in sugar and next 5 ingredients to sauteed onions. Cook onions 20 minutes over low heat, stirring occasionally.

Season steaks with pepper and place on grill over medium coals. Cook 9 to 12 minutes total, turn once. Remove steaks from grill. To serve, spoon onion mixture over each steak.

VARIATION: Serve this recipe as a steak sandwich. Grill ½ inch thick strip loin steaks, place on toasted, oblong, French sourdough rolls. Top with warm onions.

GRILLED CHILE STUFFED STEAKS

4 beef strip loin steaks or 1 pound top sirloin steak, cut 1 inch thick
STUFFING:
2 4-ounce cans diced green chilies
1 tablespoons olive oil
4 medium cloves garlic, minced
½ teaspoons dried oregano leaves
¼ teaspoon black pepper
4 teaspoons fresh cilantro, minced
RUB:
1 teaspoon black pepper
1 teaspoon garlic salt
¼ teaspoon cayenne pepper (optional)

Cut a horizontal pocket in each steak to prepare for stuffing.

To make chile stuffing, heat oil in non-stick skillet over medium heat. Add chilies, garlic, oregano and pepper. Cook, stirring, 4 minutes. Remove from heat and add cilantro.

Stuff each strip steak with ¼ chile mixture. Lightly season steaks with rub mixture. Grill steaks 4 to 6 inches from medium coals for 12 minutes total, turn once. Steaks may be broiled if desired.

Serving suggestions: Corn-on-the-cob, Black Bean Salad and grilled tortillas.

Chicken is great on grill too

Linda Anderson
Staff Writer

Contrary to the popular West Texas belief, red meat is not the only food that's fit for the grill. Chicken, fish, pork and even vegetables can be and are successfully grilled outdoors every day.

Marian Farr and the Texas Agricultural Extension Service offer the following recipe for grilling:

CHICKEN FAJITAS

1 tablespoon oil or liquid margarine
1 chicken breast or thigh filet
½ bell pepper, cut in julienne strips
½ onion, cut in julienne strips
Fajita seasoning (dry mix in shaker bottle)

Sprinkle fajita seasoning liberally on both sides of chicken. Allow chicken to marinate while slicing vegetables. (To prepare fajitas in the kitchen, heat 1 tablespoon of oil or liquid margarine in skillet or saute pan and add chicken filet and cook, using medium-high heat.)

For outdoor grilling, place chicken over white-hot coals. Allow about 4 minutes per side for chicken to cook. The key is to cook as rapidly as possible to retain the moist and juicy nature of the chicken filet. The chicken is completely done when the meat is white throughout the filet.

A couple of minutes before the chicken is done, place vegetables in skillet over the grill. Add oil and saute onions and peppers until they are tender-crisp and not over-cooked. Pour sauted onions and peppers onto platter. Remove cooked chicken and cut into strips about ½ x 2-inches. (Although cooking the chicken filet before cutting into strips results in a more tender and juicy product, cutting into strips before cooking will shorten cooking time, if desired.)

Serve on heated flour tortillas with guacamole, sour cream and pico de gallo.

Everything you always wanted to know about grilling but were afraid to ask is available by calling the Weber Grill Line, 1-800-474-5568, 8 a.m.-6 p.m. Central time, Monday through Friday, through Labor Day (this year, Sept. 4).

Just by calling the Grill Line, you can also ask for a copy of the booklet, "More Backyard Barbecue Basics," which is full of information about outdoor cooking and recipes for the grill.

Or, you can order the video "Great Chefs Grill-Out New Orleans," by calling the same number. This video features four New Orleans chefs — Susan Spicer of Bayona, Jamie Shannon of Commander's Palace, Emeril Lagasse of Emeril's and Michael Uddo of G&E Courtyard Grill — demonstrating the grilling techniques that make them famous. The video costs a small fee for shipping and handling.

STRIP LOIN STEAKS AND GRILLED POTATO SALAD

4 beef strip loin steaks, cut 1 inch thick or 1 pound boneless beef top sirloin steak
¼ cup Worcestershire Sauce
2 cloves garlic, crushed
1 teaspoon black pepper

GRILLED POTATO SALAD:
8 small red new potatoes, cut in half if larger than 2 inches in diameter
2 red or green peppers, cut into 2 inch chunks
¼ cup extra-virgin olive oil divided
2 teaspoon Dijon mustard
2 tablespoons white wine vinegar
¼ teaspoon salt
¼ teaspoon freshly ground pepper
3 green onions, sliced
2 tablespoons finely chopped parsley (optional)

Combine Worcestershire, garlic and pepper. Coat both sides of steaks with mixture. Marinate 15 minutes.

In bowl, toss potatoes and peppers with 2 tablespoons olive oil. Thread potatoes and peppers on skewers. Place steak and potatoes skewers on grill, 4 to 6 inches above medium coals. Cook strip loin steak 12 to 15 minutes total; turn once. Cook potatoes, turning occasionally until lightly browned and just tender, about 15 to 20 minutes.

In small bowl, mix together Dijon mustard, vinegar, salt and pepper, gradually whisk in remaining olive oil until well blended to make dressing.

Remove steak from grill and let stand until potatoes finish cooking.

Remove potatoes from skewers, halve or quarter. Toss potatoes and peppers in dressing. Add green onions and parsley. Serve with steaks.

To serve this recipe as a main dish salad: Slice top sirloin steak diagonally across the grain into 2-inch long strips. Toss steak strips with potatoes, peppers and dressing. Arrange tossed mixture over 6 cups washed and torn romaine lettuce.

Serving suggestions: Marinated sliced tomatoes or steamed green beans and grilled garlic herb bread.

For more grilling ideas, call the Texas Beef Council toll-free at 1-800-284-BEEF and ask for the "Grilled Beef" recipe brochure.

Quick-cook a Mole, Ole!

By Nancy Byal
Associated Press

The microwave oven may not be the time-honored way of making the classic Mexican dish called mole, but it gets the job done at lightning speed, without sacrificing the traditional flavor. The most famous Mexican mole (MO lay) usually contains tomatoes, chili peppers, spices and a surprising hint of chocolate in a sauce usually served with chicken.

For this shortcut version, you stir fast-cooking chicken strips and peppers into the spicy tomato sauce. Plan on spending about 15 minutes cooking dinner, from start to finish.

QUICK CHICKEN MOLE

2 teaspoons unsweetened cocoa powder
1½ teaspoons chili powder
½ teaspoon ground cumin
½ teaspoon dried oregano, crushed
½ teaspoon salt
8-ounce can tomato sauce
½ cup finely chopped onion
3 cloves garlic, minced
1 pound skinless, boneless chicken breast halves, cut into bite-size strips
4-ounce can diced green chili peppers, drained
Flour tortillas or hot cooked rice
Shredded lettuce (optional)
Sliced avocado (optional)
Chopped tomato (optional)
Toasted sliced almonds (optional)

In a 1½ quart microwave-safe casserole combine cocoa powder, chili powder, cumin, oregano and salt. Stir in tomato sauce, onion and garlic. Cook, covered, on 100 percent power (high) for 2 to 3 minutes or until mixture is bubbly around edges, stirring once.

Stir in chicken and chili peppers. Cover; cook on high for 8 to 10 minutes or until chicken is tender and no longer pink, stirring every 3 minutes. Serve with warm tortillas or hot cooked rice. If desired, garnish with lettuce, avocado, tomato and almonds. Makes 4 main-dish servings.

Gardeners' 'pesty' questions answered

By Deborah A. Benge-Frost

Yuck! It's big, green, six-legged and ugly. Quick, get the sprayer. If this is how you or someone you know reacts to bugs, bear in mind, not all bugs as pests and not all pests do significant damage to your landscape. Proper identification, evaluation of the situation and consideration of all control alternatives is very important before any spraying, dusting, sprinkling or pouring takes place. And besides that, if you're like me, the last thing you want to be bothered with is mixing up a pesticide. Spend that time on planting and enjoy rather than spraying.Some pests truly are problems and need to be addressed accordingly, or you'll burying the target plant or plants. But then, some pests can simply be monitored and possibly dealt with without a pesticide. Each situation deserves careful consideration. These are just a smattering of typical pest questions we've received this time of the year.

Benge-Frost

Q: I recently purchased a new rose bush, a special varied I hadn't been able to locate. When I did find it, it was the only, and looked a little rough, from being in a container and getting late in the season, but I purchased it anyway. After only a few days, and still not planted, it continues to have lower leaves turn yellow, brown and drop. The leaves also look very dusty and dry. Do I have a problem or just a plant needing some attention?

A: I think you have a plant that needs planting attention, but your description sounds a little like spider mites. Yellowing lower leaves, dusty leaves with debris spells spider mites. Shake a limb smarty over a white piece of paper, watch for several minutes for movement. Small red, brown, or pale green moving dots are mites. Mites do spin a minute web so plants do get and feel dusty and gritty.

Spray leaves (especially underneath) with strong sprays of water or soapy water. Do this a couple of times and it should take care of the problem. If it doesn't, try a summer weight insecticidal oil, a systemic insecticide or a miticide.

Meanwhile find a sunny site, improve the soil with lots of compost or peat, plant, mulch and water your new rose properly.

Q: Last year my Vinca ground cover seemed to disintegrate by late summer. Individual leaves or stems would turn brown until there was nothing left except a few dry, brown leaves. Before the summer was over, there was nothing left. It has come out well this spring, but I don't want it to happen again. What causes this and what can I do?

A: The culprit is a worm, a type of web worm, but not the same as those that get on mulberry and pecan, building big webs. This is a sneaky, green worm that begins feeding on the vinca, probably much earlier than we notice. I think it goes unnoticed for quite some time until the damage is very apparent. By that time there are so many in the ground cover that it goes downhill in a hurry.

Keep a sharp eye out for green caterpillars that blend with the vinca and make leaf homes by pulling leaves over themselves. You may be able to see tacks of white webbing used to partially pull leaves or leaf edges together, making a hidden shelter for the web worm. The worm stays hidden in the leaves, feeding, growing and moving on to greener territory after all the good stuff is eaten out of those leaves. Many times all that can be found is evidence of where the worm has been feeding.

At the first sign of infestation, dust or spray the leaves with Bt, or Bacillus thuringiensis, a bacterial disease organism that has been formulated into a number of insecticides that will kill worms and caterpillars only. It won't hurt plants, people, animals or other insects. The disadvantage to Bt is that it breaks down quickly in the sunlight and may need to be reapplied frequently to control the pest.

One more note: It seems as though the tough and beautiful vinca ground cover usually recovers from this type of insect damage. Damage becomes very apparent by later summer and fall, with ground cover appearing dead by fall. By the next spring it normally comes out without hesitation and looks great.

Q: While planting petunias at the base of a red oak, I saw some curious-looking bugs skittering around the trunk. They looked almost like a yellow jacket but they weren't. Every day I check the tree and see these same insects. Are they doing any harm? The tree is a large multi-trunked red oak planted last spring. It hasn't had a full crop of leaves since it was planted and some dead wood has even shown up. I would hate for anything to happen to it.

A: The insect sounds like the adult form of the red-headed ash borer. They are long and slender with a reddish-brown and yellow chevron patterned down their backs. The last pair of legs is rather long, sort of grasshopper-like. They have long antennae with the same reddish-brown head and thorax, about one-half to three-quarters inches long and one-eighth inch wide. When approached, they quickly move to the opposite side of the tree trunk.

Large, newly transplanted trees often go through a stressful period for about three years. Stressed trees are prime targets for borer infestation, and this includes the red-headed ash borer. Proper care during this period is very important. Make sure the tree is watered properly, which amounts to about one good irrigation a week. Leaving a slow-running water hose on the base of new trees for hours or days at a time, or watering daily is a mistake. Wet, saturated soils are as harmful as dry soils. Roots must have oxygen. Keeping turf grass (this includes petunias and other color plants) from growing around the tree in a four- to five-foot diameter for the first three years can give your tree a little edge, since turf is extremely competitive. Fill this circle around the tree with four inches of mulch, but avoid stacking mulch up on the trunk. If the tree is showing signs of stress, don't fertilize, or if you do, use a water soluble fertilizer in the spring.

To protect vulnerable trees from borers, spray the lower limbs and trunk with a recommended insecticide, such as dursban, lindane or ethylene dichloride.

Q: I have a pine tree that appears to have borers. There are holes about one-quarter inch wide and equally deep. There are several of these holes in lines. It looks bad; what can I do?

A: If the holes seem to be made by a highly organized, neat borer, side by side in straight lines, it could be bird rather than insect damage. Holes will be very evident, shallow in depth and wider at the outside than the inside and mostly in rows. This is clearly the feeding of a woodpecker called (this isn't a joke!) a yellow-bellied sap sucker.

They are migratory birds that will seem to pick out just one tree and make a series of holes which they will come back to several times a day, feeding on the accumulated sap. They feed on pecan, pine, elm and other trees. The damage is minimal and shouldn't be a problem. If you should catch the damage very early, you can use a series of scare tactics to discourage the bird.

Q: I am hearing more and more about oak wilt fungus. I have several live and red oaks and would hate to lose any of them. Should I worry or is there anything I can do to protect them?

A: There are a few identified oak wilt disease centers in Midland, and they should be a concern, but if you are not located near one of them, I wouldn't worry too much. Some of the major disease centers are evident, but there are surely small ones that have gone undiagnosed and are not clearly evident at this time. This is not a sure test, but look around your neighborhood in a three- to five-block area and see what the general conditions of live and red oaks trees are. If they look pretty good for the most part, you are doubtfully in a disease center.

Things you can do to reduce incidence of the disease include:

- Don't bring in oak firewood from areas with the disease. If you aren't sure of the origin or condition, stack it in full sunlight and cover with clear plastic. The heat trapped inside will kill the fungus and any sap-feeding beetles that carry the disease.
- Prune trees when the disease-carrying beetles are at their lowest activity, in the hottest part of summer or coldest part of winter.
- Seal pruning cuts or injuries with a pruning paint sealer or latex paint. This will protect the area from the sap-feeding beetles. This is most necessary during months when the beetles are active, such as spring, early summer, fall and other mild weather periods.

Q: While sitting outside at night, I see small, light green insects with large lacy wings that make a big nuisance of themselves by flying into our faces. They don't bite but they do have a bad odor when you brush them off faces and arms. There are lots of them. What ar these and do I need to spray?

A: They sound like lacewings and they are absolutely one of the best beneficial insects we've got going for controlling aphids. The adults are attractive, pale green, slender insects about one-half inch long. They have large clear wings, highly veined. The compound eyes are large and in certain species appear golden.

You may have seen the eggs at some time as they are quite distinctive and unlike any other. They look like slender, white, miniature Q-tips with only one cotton end standing straight up in the air. The other end is firmly attached to a leaf, bud or stem. These eggs are stalked like this because siblings are cannibalistic and will eat each other as they emerge from the eggs. Being hatched up in the air gives them a fighting chance.

It makes sense that there would be lots of lacewings this year because we had a tremendous aphid population during the winter and early spring in live oaks. The lacewings' immature form is an aphid lover, gobbling up lots of the little juicy aphids as well as other small, soft-bodied critters. Immature forms looks nothing like the adult and is sometimes called an ant lion due to its appetite and vicious-looking hooked jaws.

These are just sampling of some of the plant pest questions that have come into the extension office this spring. If you have a pest problem, bring samples by the county extension office for positive identification and recommendations. It is unwise to spray insecticides when you don't have the whole picture.

New diet plan: Remodeling kitchen

By Linda Weltner
N.Y. Times News Service

I've had a brilliant moneymaking scheme in the back of my mind for a long time now, just waiting to be implemented. It's foolproof, effortless and a great way to get rich quick.

I have to write a diet cookbook.

The only reason I haven't already done it is that I've been looking for a theme that will lift my diet book head and shoulders above all the rest, something with universal appeal for those who have tried every other diet and failed. I thought I hit pay dirt back in 1986, after my husband lost 15 pounds in three weeks. I was ready to rush my manuscript of "The Salem Hospital IV Diet Book" into print when Jack pointed out the difficulty in figuring out how dieters could get their IV poles into their cars.

Then I toyed with the idea of a Migraine Diet Book, which included a weekly half-day fast while lying in a dark room with an icepack on one's forehead. Unfortunately, it was too painful. Then, having dropped 5 pounds in a single week after drinking the water in Mexico, I got excited about the possibility of marketing what I called the Tourista Diet.

Finally, after 10 years of false starts, I've come up with a revolutionary concept. My new diet is a departure from my past efforts since you don't have to be physically ill to benefit from it. The fact is that ever since the carpenters began tearing my kitchen apart four weeks ago, I've been dropping a pound a week without any effort at all.

I'm calling my diet book, "The Kitchen Remodeling Diet." Here's how it works.

The workmen pull out your stove and take it to the dump. They disconnect the water and throw away your sink. They put your refrigerator in the dining room, making sure the door is partially blocked by a woodstove. Then you store your canned goods in cartons and distribute them randomly in your living room. You pack away your spices. You misplace your mixing bowls. You arrange for your microwave oven to blow the bedroom fuse every time you use it.

Unbelievable as it may seem, I've unearthed nine remarkable insights, the exact details of which will hit the best-seller list as soon as some publisher offers me a sizeable sum of money. It turns out that missing appliances actually create a molecular feedback process in one's primal matrix, with the following results.

- Foods eaten while standing up have no calories.
- Paper plates suck all the fat calories out of food.
- Being brought into the house by a plumber or electrician removes all the fat from doughnuts.
- Every unit of energy burned up by the men working in your house is subtracted from your daily calorie intake.
- The number of dollars you are paying each workman per hour is deducted from your daily calorie intake.
- If you eat a Twinkie while your carpenter has a diet soda, they cancel each other out.
- Junk food consumed because the workmen haven't shown up is considered medication.
- Pizza consumed on the day the building inspector condemns your old wiring is considered a tranquilizer.
- The calories you ingest when invited over to friends for dinner do not count since eating dessert out of politeness causes the calories to remain in the house where they are eaten.

I swear this diet works, with only one insignificant side effect. All I have left to do is figure out why all the weight I've lost has reappeared on the dog.

Memorial Day barbecue is perfect time to grill burgers

HYDE PARK, N.Y. (AP) — What better way to welcome the warm summer season than a Memorial Day barbecue? Serve your favorite grilled burgers with traditional red-skin potato salad, pasta salad, vegetable or fruit salad. Prepare as much as you can advance so you can enjoy the day with family and friends. The following is chef Carlyn Berghoff's recipe for Chicago Beer Burger with Beer-Braised Onions and Mushroom Ketchup, which appears in "The Burger Meisters" cookbook published by Simon and Schuster.

CHICAGO BEER BURGER

1½ pounds ground beef chuck
2 tablespoons beer
¼ teaspoon hot-pepper sauce
¼ teaspoon Worcestershire sauce
Salt and pepper, to season
4 ¼ ounce slices brick cheese, or your favorite sharp cheese
4 hamburger buns, cut in half
1 recipe Beer-Braised Onions (recipe below)
1 recipe Mushroom Beer Ketchup (recipe below)

In a 5-quart stainless bowl, gently mix all burger ingredients except cheese. Form into 4 patties, cover with plastic wrap and refrigerate until needed.

Grill over medium grill or charcoal fire. Cook 3 to 4 minutes on each side for rare, 5 to 6 minutes for medium and 8 to 9 minutes for well-done.

Top each burger with some of the beer-braised onions and the cheese; cover for a few moments until the cheese melts. Serve with the mushroom beer ketchup. Makes 4 servings.

BEER-BRAISED ONIONS

1 tablespoon unsalted butter
1 large onion, sliced thin
1 cup beer
1 teaspoon granulated sugar
¼ teaspoon salt

Melt the butter in a 3-quart saucepan over medium-high heat. Add sliced onion and saute, stirring frequently. Add ¾ cup of the beer, the sugar and salt. Cook until all the beer has been absorbed and the onion begins to brown slightly, about 16 to 18 minutes. Add remaining ¼ cup beer; bring to simmer. Cool. Refrigerate until needed.

MUSHROOM BEER KETCHUP

1 small onion, diced
1 tablespoon unsalted butter
¼ pound mushrooms, stems trimmed, sliced
3 ounces beer, hot
¼ cup ketchup
1 tablespoon distilled white vinegar
¼ teaspoon granulated sugar
¼ teaspoon salt

Saute onion in butter until tender. Add mushrooms, saute for another 3 to 4 minutes. Remove pan from heat; add remaining ingredients. Puree the ingredients with a hand blender or food processor until smooth. Return the saucepan to medium heat and bring to a boil, then reduce heat and allow to simmer until slightly thickened. This recipe can be cooled and refrigerated for several days.

Big fried onion is a bloomin' favorite for Texans' feasts

By Beverly Bundy
NY Times News Service

A couple of weeks ago, I began getting calls for "awesome blossom" and "bloomin' onion" recipes that had run in the Star-Telegram's trivia column of all places. The recipe was from a 1992 edition of "Restaurant Hospitality" magazine. Served at both Chili's Bar & Grill and the Outback Steakhouse, this little baby has become the buffalo wings of the 1990s.

I can already tell this is going to be one of those "Please run it again" recipes, so I'm warning you guys now, cut it out — the recipe, I mean.

ONION CHRYSANTHEMUMS

6 onions, at least 4 or more inches diameter
Vegetable oil, for deep frying
SEASONED FLOUR:
2 cups all-purpose flour
4 teaspoons paprika
2 teaspoons garlic powder
½ teaspoon black pepper
½ teaspoon cayenne pepper
BATTER:
3 cups cornstarch
1½ cups all-purpose flour
2 teaspoons garlic salt
2 teaspoons paprika
1 teaspoon salt
1 teaspoon pepper
24 ounces beer
DIPPING SAUCE:
2 cups mayonnaise
2 cups sour cream
½ cup chili sauce
½ teaspoon cayenne pepper

Combine seasoned flour ingredients in a bowl. In another bowl, combine batter ingredients, stirring frequently.

Cut about ¼ inch from the top of each onion, then cut onions into 12 to 16 vertical wedges, but don't cut through the root end. Dip the cut onion in seasoned flour and shake to remove excess flour.

Separate petals and coat well with batter. Deep fry in vegetable oil at 375 to 400 degrees for 1½ minutes, turn over and fry 1½ minutes longer, or until golden brown all over. Serve in shallow bowl, with center onion core removed.

Combine the sauce ingredients and slowly warm over low heat, stirring with a whisk. Serve dipping sauce with the onions.

Serves 12.

Nutritional analysis for 1 tablespoon sauce: 59 calories, 6 grams fat, 7 milligrams cholesterol, 39 milligrams sodium, 97 percent calories from fat.

"I went because they were affordable. I stayed because they're wonderful."

I first went to Planned Parenthood because I really couldn't afford a gynecologist. I was young. And nervous. And didn't know what to expect. But now I can afford to go anywhere. And you know what? I still go to Planned Parenthood.

From my very first visit, I felt they sincerely cared about me. They took the time to know me and answered all my questions in plain talk. Every time I go, they're as kind and understanding as ever.

I also feel their medical staff is professional, knowledgeable and very up to date. They're extremely sensitive to a woman's special medical concerns, and everything is kept confidential. I'm glad they offer such a wide range of services. As far as I'm concerned, Planned Parenthood is like family and will always be an important part of my health care.

DEAR ABBY

Abuser in relationship isn't always the male half of the couple

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: Your column about the warning signs of an abuser was very interesting, but is an abuser always a male?

My daughter-in-law fits many of those abuser signs —and more! — F.H. IN FLORIDA

Van Buren

DEAR F.H.: The abuser is NOT always a male. The number of men who have been battered by women would shock most people. This crime is underreported because most men are too embarrassed to admit that they have been battered by a woman. Read on for an interesting letter published in my column in 1989:

DEAR ABBY: I am getting tired of reading all the letters about "battered women." Yes, I know it must be a terrible experience for a woman, but nobody ever mentions the battered men. It's even worse for them because they are so embarrassed and ashamed, they never tell anybody.

I know. I was raised never to hit a woman — even in self-defense. Many times my ex-wife would throw things at me, and come at me with her fingernails, drawing blood from the scratches she would inflict on my face and neck. She even broke my arm and ribs when she threw a heavy chair at me. I always made up some kind of lie when I had to go to the emergency room of the hospital after she beat me up.

I stayed in this terrible marriage as long as I could for the sake of our child. When I finally couldn't take it any longer, I divorced her. She fought the divorce, but I was firm and made the break.

She retaliated by filing charges against me, stating that I had sexually abused our child! I had to endure some humiliating questioning, and it cost me nearly $10,000 in legal fees to prove my innocence. It's a long and very ugly story, but my ex-wife was finally found to be clinically psychotic and paranoid, with multiple personality disorders. Meanwhile, the accusations were devastating.

I'll be surprised if you print this because you usually favor women. But every word I have written is true. — NO NAME OR LOCATION, PLEASE

DEAR NO NAME: Surprise! From the mail I received, your case is not unusual. Thanks for writing.

DEAR ABBY: The inspiring letter from Janet Bode about wearing a hat instead of a wig after chemotherapy treatments prompted me to write.

We lost our father, and you lost a big fan, last March after his gallant five-year battle with cancer. One thing that kept Daddy going so long was his sense of humor. Like Ms. Bode, he did not allow the disease to run his life. The medical community can work wonders, but a positive attitude and strong faith can add years of life.

I remember, as a child, our parents reading "Dear Abby" to us during breakfast, and I also remember that laughter often followed. Families don't gather around the table like they used to. I believe many social ills could be cured by families doing things together.

Thank you for the years of joy, encouragement, wisdom and memories that you brought to our family. I'd be willing to bet that "Dear Abby" is read daily in heaven! — BILL HARRISON, RICHMOND, VA.

DEAR BILL: Please accept my condolences on the loss of your beloved father.

I appreciate your sharing the childhood memories of your parents reading my column to you and your siblings around the breakfast table. Thank you — your letter made my day!

DEAR ABBY: Should I allow my father to bring his girlfriend to my wedding, knowing how painful it would be for my mother to meet "Sally" for the first time?

The divorce is still fresh and very bitter. Also, if Dad brings Sally, would it be appropriate to seat them at a separate table at the reception rather than at the head table with the other parents?

And would it be OK to ask Sally not to attend the rehearsal dinner? —CALIFORNIA QUANDARY

DEAR QUANDARY: You should not be forced to take sides. Your parents divorced each other (you divorced neither); they should put aside their differences for a few hours and give you the gift of happiness on your wedding day.

If your father's girlfriend is wise, she will volunteer to have "other plans" on your wedding day. But if your parents work this out, and she does attend, it would be appropriate to seat Sally and your father at another table, as far from your mother as possible.

DEAR ABBY: Last year my son, who was 25 years old, passed away unexpectedly of natural causes. I am getting counseling to help me get through it. My problem is how to respond to the question, "How many children do you have?"

Until last year, I had two living sons. Now I have one living son, and the memories of the one I lost.

I mention the death of my older son not to get sympathy, but I feel if I did not mention him, it would be a betrayal of his memory.

How should I handle this? — MOURNING IN FRESNO

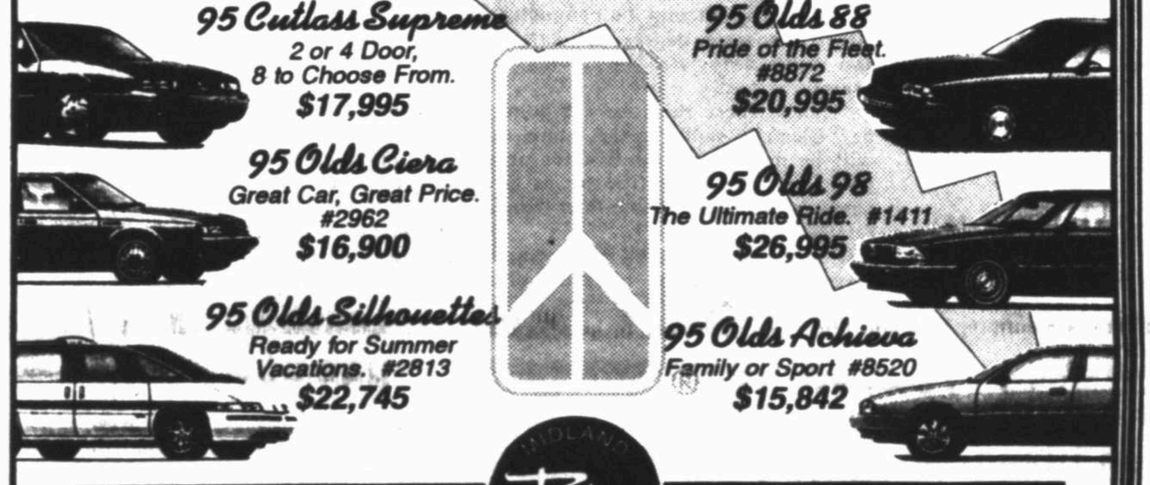

DEAR MOURNING: Obviously, only those who do not know you very well would ask you how many children you have.

Neglecting to mention the child or children lost in death would in no way diminish their importance. Unless you are prepared to answer the inevitable follow-up questions about your tragic loss, count only your living son.

MC Student Support Services team provides help for "special population"

By Renell Moore

They are battered women attempting a new start in life. They are single parents and jobless homemakers grappling to live on low-wage jobs and government assistance. They are Spanish-speaking people hobbled in an English-speaking society, and they are the disabled seeking their distinct niche in life.

Ultimately, they are called a "special population" by Midland College.

Some of these people are using MC's combined support service/vocational program to improve their economic circumstance.

They can enroll in any one of MC's 25 vocational career majors to overcome what some political reformers are describing as a population needing "to get down out of the welfare wagon to help the rest of society pull it."

To qualify for support services, the student must have a copy of approval for need-based financial aid such as Pell Grants, food stamps, Housing and Urban Development (HUD), Job Training Partnership Act (JTPA) or other financial-based need. These support services are administered by MC staff members who lend a hand to this diverse special population.

"There are six of us. We are the Carl D. Perkins team," said Shelia Leggett, support service coordinator.

The Perkins label refers to the federal Carl D. Perkins grant that is administered through The Texas Higher Education Coordinating Board to fund the services for the special population. The Perkins team also includes Camal Dakil, vice president of Student Services, who serves as a liaison with the state; Rita Nell Diffie, director of special populations; Eva Jaso, her secretary, Terry Clemmer, vocational career counselor; Kay Rankin-Williams, vocational career center clerk and Michael LaPlante, job placement coordinator.

The team accommodates students in approximately 20 areas ranging from parenting education and child care assistance to time management, study skills and interviewing techniques.

"When we work with our students, we see their situation in total," Diffie said. "School is not a separate thing from their families and from their work. All three of these aspects of their lives have to balance. We offer them information that will make them more successful in school, with their families and in the work force."

Tuition is not included with the support services. Students are referred to financial aid or given Pell grants to help with their tuition. Deaf and legally blind students get automatic tuition exemption in Texas.

The support services funded by the Perkins grant pay for academic tutoring, special equipment and tutoring for the disabled, child care assistance, book loans and transportation stipends for students from surrounding areas in the Permian Basin.

Since fall 1992, the team has assisted 3,100 students with some type of support service. Seven of these students were selected for the 1995 edition of Who's Who Among Students in American Junior Colleges for their campus leadership and potential for future achievement.

One student selected for Who's Who is Donna Klein, computer information systems management major, who graduated from Midland College this May. Klein has five children, two of who needed full-time child care when she first came to MC. She said she could not have attended school without the team.

"They (Diffie and Leggett) were really helpful to me right at the beginning because I was so scared," Klein said. "There was a lot of hand holding at first. I'd been home for 20 years with my kids. It was traumatic for me to go back to school."

The general purpose of the MC support services for vocational students is to assist students with young children to re-enter the job market as soon as possible, according to Leggett. At MC, students have a choice of enrolling in 16 programs that may be completed by either associate degree or certificate and nine associate-degree-only programs.

"That's where the jobs are going to be," Clemmer said. "In the future, there will be more opportunities for people with associates or certificates as far as numbers of jobs available than there are for four-year degrees."

Clemmer said that all of the support services are geared toward helping people get employment by offering whatever is necessary to help students concentrate on school.

"That could be community services such as the Salvation Army or the housing program," Clemmer said. The HUD group will give priority on their general housing list to students because they are working toward financial independence."This is part of a program titled Project Self Sufficiency that may also help students with utility bills.

Diffie said her team has a monthly meeting with approximately 30 different community service providers with a common goal. This group, the Midland Introspective Network for Employment, was created through the United Way. Group members interact in a joint effort to assist special population people.

Once a student enters MC's support services program, Clemmer said they monitor the student and attempt to intervene if they perceive the student is floundering.

"It's a little bit like offering service after the sale," Clemmer said. "We try to get with the student and ask what help they need to get back on track.

Disabled students may need help to stay on track. So, MC's support services include providing sign language interpreters, tutors and special equipment to accommodate students with visual, hearing, learning and physical disabilities.

Legget provides aid to students in three other areas.

"I assist single women and displaced homemakers. I primarily assist them with child care, book loans and transportation assistance," she said.

This semester the team is assisting 40 parents with child care, 33 students with book loans and three students from Big Spring, Stanton and Odessa with transportation.

LaPlante works with the team to assist graduating students find jobs. He enlists employers to cooperate in the yearly career fair, attended by both current and former students.

"In 1995 there were 58 employers who set up booths and talked to students about what training they would need to work for them. Some employers took names for later interviews," Diffie said.

La Plante also works to get more cooperative work experience courses where the student earns college credit for time spent on a specific job. The job experience benefits both employers and students.

So, each year as the support services team watches a new group of graduates receive their diplomas they know it will be time to let go of one student's hand and take that of another.

Renell Moore is a journalism major at Midland College who has been editor of the Chaparral and Tableau magazines.

Terry Clemmer, Vocational Career Counselor and Rita Nell Diffie, Director of Special Populations, discuss career and educational opportunities with student Debbie Hampton.

"They (Diffie and Leggett) were really helpful to me right at the beginning because I was so scared. There was a lot of hand holding at first. I'd been home for 20 years with my kids. It was traumatic for me to go back to school."

Country's eastern half offers a large variety of vacation values

Associated Press

Swim enthusiasts will learn more about their sport at the International Swimming Hall of Fame in Ft. Lauderdale, Fla.

This not-for-profit educational organization has one mission — to be the world-wide focal point of swimming and its many disciplines.

The museum complex, which stresses the benefits of swimming, diving, water polo and all water-related activities, is open all year.

For information, call 1 (305) 462-6536.

Manhattan Transfer

One of the best ways to see New York City is from the deck of a Circle Line ship.

The Circle Line, celebrating its 50th birthday this year, offers a leisurely and informative boat ride around the island of Manhattan. The 35-mile cruise starts off from the Hudson River piers at the foot of West 42nd Street and circumnavigates the island via the East, Harlem and Hudson Rivers, passing dramatic skyline and historic sites before returning to its starting point.

For schedule information, call (212) 563-3200. No reservations are necessary.

Pennsylvania Puffers

The history and technology of the railroad industry from the earliest steam locomotives to the mid 20th century are preserved at the Railroad Museum of Pennsylvania in Lancaster.

One popular attraction is the Steinman Station, a re-creation of a times-past train station. You can enter the cab of a steam locomotive, see the stateroom of a private car and the interior of a Pullman sleeper.

The exhibits may inspire yearnings for a "real" train ride, so visitors can walk across the road to board the Strasburg Rail Road, one of America's oldest steam trains, for a journey through the peaceful Amish farmlands.

For information about other attractions in Pennsylvania Dutch Country, call 1 (800) 723-8824.

Oldest County Fair

The folks in Brooklyn, Conn., say theirs is the granddaddy of all agricultural county fairs. The Brooklyn Fair opens its 144th year Aug. 24 and runs for four days, offering the largest agricultural display of any fair in southern New England.

Situated only a few miles from the Massachusetts and Rhode Island borders, the fair attracts a number of exhibitors from its neighboring states.

Entertainments range from bluegrass to Irish Balladeers to barbershop and old-time fiddlers.

Attention Couch Potatoes

If you're even a part-time couch potato, you'll be intrigued by seeing a couch just like yours getting ripped apart, then put back together again during a visit to one of the most offbeat museums in the country.

Interactive displays that show how fine furniture is designed, assembled, upholstered and finished are featured at the Furniture Discovery Center in High Point, N.C.

Besides enjoying a hands-on experience, you'll learn things that can make you a smarter shopper when buying furniture for your home.

For more information call (910) 887-3876.

Victorian Cape May

Cape May, a seaside community on the coast of New Jersey, is something like a Victorian time capsule, with the Emlen Physick Estate Museum at the center of the picturesque town.

Victorian architecture and vibrant colors that are characteristic of the period can be seen in the many bed and breakfast inns and guesthouses that line the historic streets of this National Landmark City. Guided tours provide an overview of the Historic District.

One popular tour is the moonlight trolley ride through the gaslit streets of Victorian Cape May.

For information call the Mid-Atlantic Center for the Arts, (609) 884-5404.

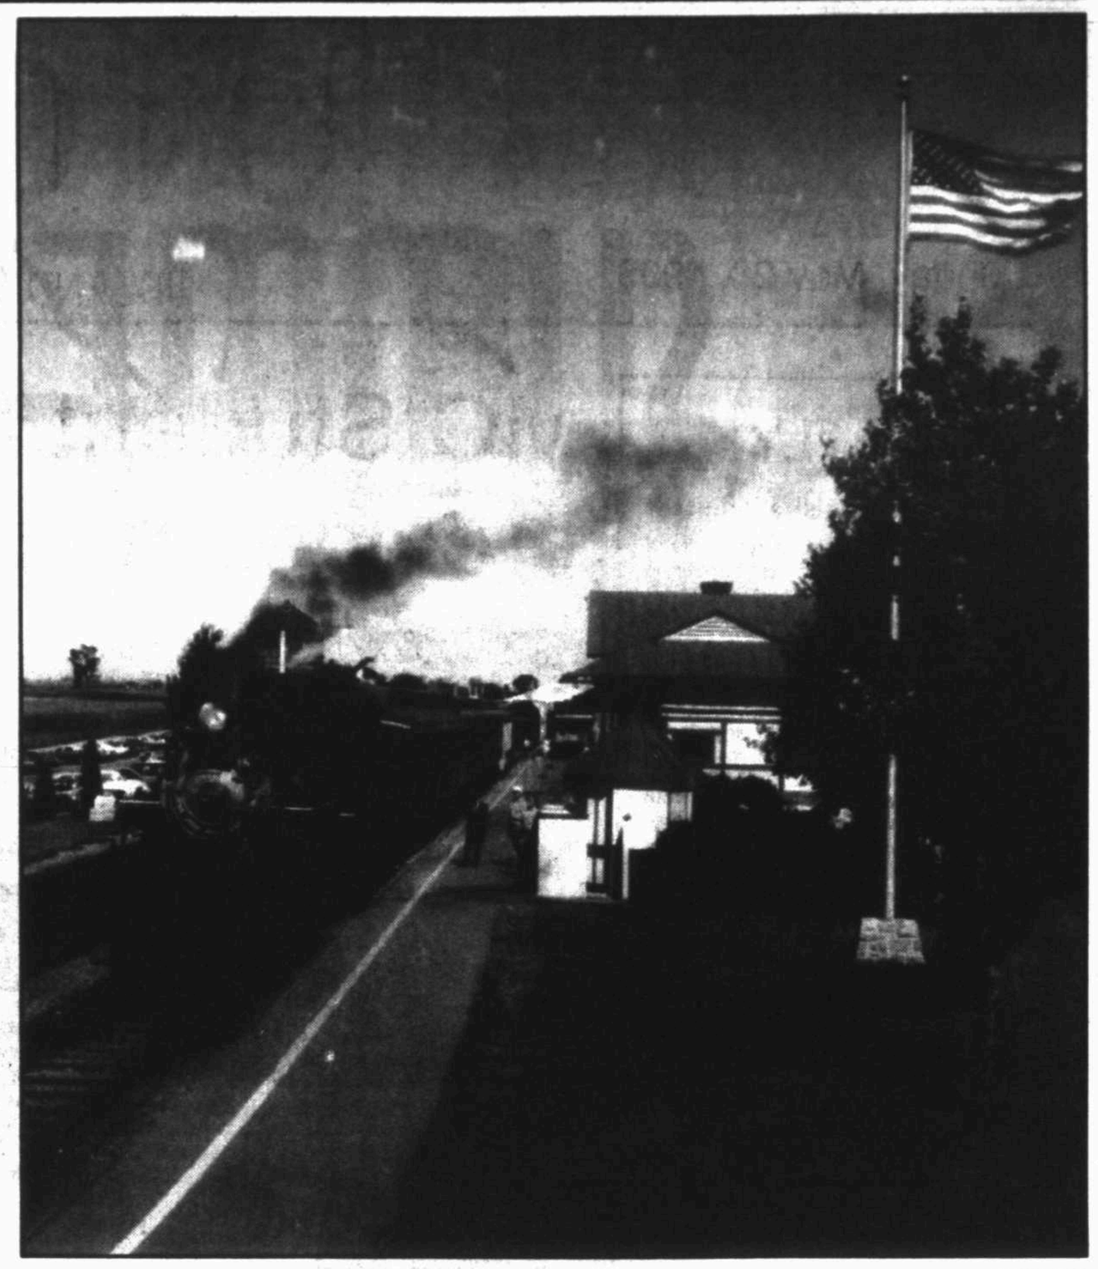

Pick of the Peaches

Georgia, home of many famous historical landmarks, political figures and southern traditions, is also home to the peach.

Georgia peach orchards are quickly and easily accessible from highways reaching through the state. The best of these are listed in "The Great Pit Stops of Georgia," a brochure from the Georgia Peach Commission.

Visitors can stop to tour the orchards and packing houses and learn about the peach industry. Then they can take home a bushel of fresh peaches.

For the brochure, send a self-addressed stamped envelope to the Georgia Peach Commission, Box 38146, Atlanta, Ga. 30334.

Medical breakthroughs don't include hospital gowns

By Erma Bombeck

The problem in this country is that we keep finding new problems, but we never solve the old ones.

Bombeck

We chew around about dress codes for our children and how to keep Spandex from riding up to our necks and choking us to death. Yet how many years have we been trying to come up with a decent design for a hospital gown?

I did a column on this about seven or eight years ago, and received a dozen or so packages of prototypes from designers who thought they had solved the problem. Some were patterned, others had longer sleeves and ties, and a few featured a little Velcro here and there. But they still required hands to clutch in either the front or the back.

Last week I picked up a magazine, and one of the features was a sampling of how top designers would interpret a hospital gown.

The results were what you might expect. One gown resembled a Halloween pumpkin that hung like a cloud from the neckline. If the patient ever fell out of bed wearing it, it could serve as an air bag.

There was the empire design made out of something shiny that wrapped around to the side and tied just under the built-in bra. If there is any advantage to being at death's door and paying $500 a day to watch O.J. Simpson's prosecutor's witness drone on about DNA, it's not having to wear a bra.

One very severe, straight gown needed something — a large brimmed hat, perhaps. The only way I could wear that form-hugging garment was to be hospitalized for a supervised weight loss of 75 pounds. As a person who asks for seconds on her IVs, I don't see that happening.

I know the whole story was tongue-in-cheek, but it depressed me to think that we have given up the battle for a dress code for sick people.

If anyone wants a suggestion, I would feel comfortable in pajamas with feet in them, long sleeves and a Peter Pan collar. Over this, I want a silk sheet that zips up on three sides. How the doctor or nurses have access to the patient is their problem. I can't solve everything. The fabric would be a small pattern with hands imprinted all over it. (A little wry humor there.)

Nothing will happen from all this. Instead, we will pursue a no-fat enchilada, Federal Express planes that will start carrying people, and divorce by fax.

I can even see the next Bob Hope golf classic being held on the moon.

I pray no one gets sick.

Erma Bombeck's column is distributed by Universal Press Syndicate.

Idaho Rivers

Travelers with an urge to "shoot the rapids" can find some of the country's best whitewater in Idaho.

With more than 3,100 whitewater river miles, no other state can claim as many diverse recreational rivers. Licensed outfitters offer guided trips ranging from scenic family excursions to advanced whitewater adventure.

■ The Salmon River floats through the second deepest canyon in North America and ends 79 miles later near Riggins. Shorter trips are available.

■ The Snake River in Hells Canyon is big. Everything is big: big waves, big views, big cliffs, and the canyon is several thousand feet deeper than the Grand Canyon.

■ The Owyhee River may be Idaho's most secluded river. Hidden among thousands of square miles of canyons and sagebrush desert where Idaho, Nevada and Oregon meet, the river offers five different stretches of whitewater.

■ The Payette River is just an hour's drive from Boise but it still manages to leave civilization behind. Travelers float a clean mountain river with forested banks and hawks and osprey flying overhead.

For information, call the Idaho Department of Commerce at 1 (800) 635-7820.

Oregon Waterfalls

There are thousands of waterfalls in Oregon, each offering its unique and scenic combination of power, grace and beauty.

The most abundant waterfall area is the region around the Columbia River Gorge, which showcases hundreds of waterfalls created by feeder streams tumbling over, around and through the exposed basaltic walls of the Gorge.

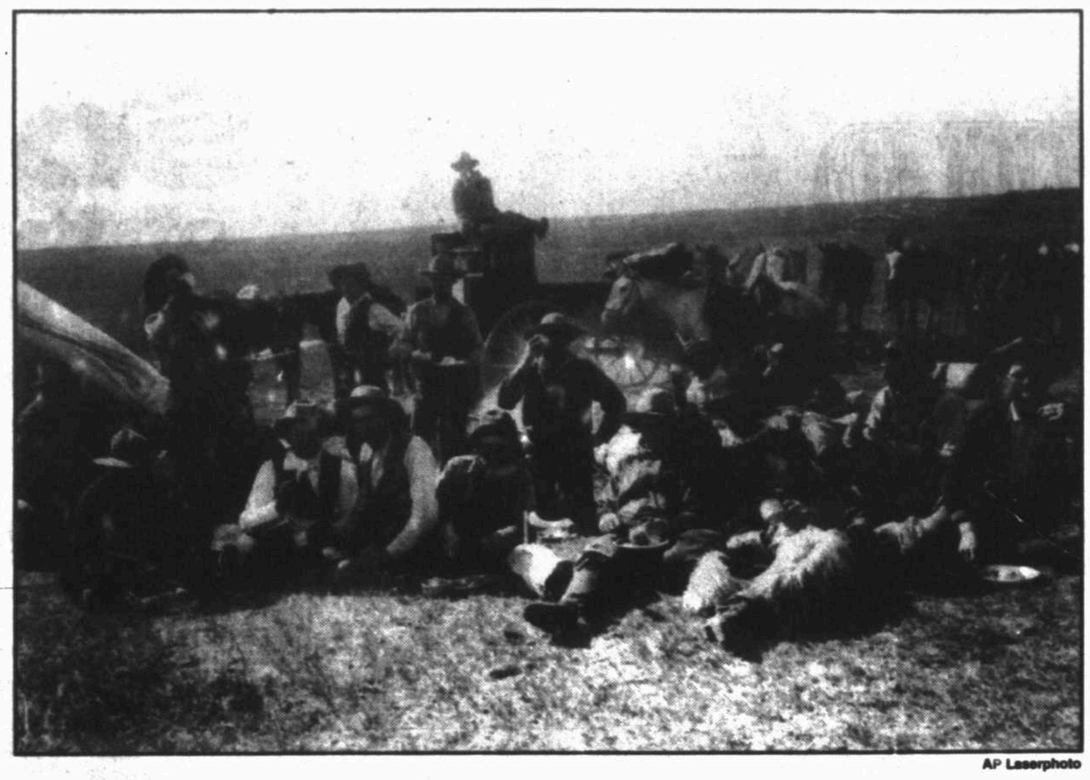

Among the most spectacular falls that can be viewed from the old Columbia River Highway which parallels Interstate I-84:

■ Multnomah Falls, the state's highest waterfall at 620 feet.

■ Elowah Falls on McCord Creek, a 289-foot waterfall that offers a magnificent water spectacle.

■ Along the Eagle Creek Trail, four to eight waterfalls can be seen, depending on how far you want to get off the six-mile trail. Tunnel Falls, near the end of the trail, is especially interesting because the trail goes through a tunnel behind the falls itself.

For information, call the Columbia Gorge National Scenic Area at (503) 386-2333.

This 1898 photo, one of those on display at the Wyoming State Museum in Cheyenne, shows cowboys at grub time. The museum has archives of more than 250,000 photos, many on view for the first time this year.

Mountain Spectaculars

If you're a sucker for breathtaking views, you'll love central Oregon.

Strike out on a magnificent 87-mile loop that leads past Mt. Bachelor and the alpine lakes of Oregon, with spectacular panoramas and inviting stops all along the way.

The drive was designated a National Scenic Byway by the U.S. Forest Service and is open all summer.

Wild West Wyoming

Ever wanted to be a cowboy?

This is your chance.

When cattle are herded to the high ground in Wyoming, several ranchers are willing to share the experience with visitors. So all "City Slickers" are welcome to join. Most of the cattle drives last one week.

And Wyoming has more than 70 guest ranches scattered across the state, with accommodations which vary from the very rustic to the very upscale. Visitors can ride horses while soaking up the scenery.

The Wyoming State Museum in Cheyenne, celebrating its centennial this year, is showcasing many collections previously kept in storage, including historical photographs from archives of more than 250,000 pictures.

For more information, call Wyoming Division of Tourism at 1 (800) 225-5996. For guest ranch information call the Wyoming Dude Ranchers Association at (307) 455-2584.

LA Getaways

The scenic Santa Monica Mountains near Los Angeles offer many ways to get away from it all and experience the great outdoors. But this National Recreation Area offers even more.

Paramount Ranch offers a chance to explore Hollywood history. The area served as the backdrop for many early films. Later, the elaborate Western Town was developed.

It continues to draw film crews; it currently serves as home of CBS Television's "Dr. Quinn Medicine Woman."

Visitors to the ranch can view the restored Western Town, use the many hiking trails and sometimes see film crews in action.

Don't leave home without what?

By Susanne Hopkins
N.Y. Times News Service

"I never travel without my diary. One should always have something sensational to read on the train."
—Oscar Wilde

There are some things one simply cannot leave home without. For Oscar Wilde, it was a sensational diary; for the more pedestrian types among us, it could be a Swiss army knife, a lucky charm or a blankie.

Whatever, every traveler has something he or she always packs, whether it be for security, safety or simply because it might not be available in Outer Mongolia or Sioux City, Iowa.

Believing that our readers would have some worthy tips on what is essential, we asked them to share their travel musts (aside, of course, from clothes, tickets and toothbrush). And, boy, did we get some surprises!

Did people write to us about the benefits of water purifiers or the virtues of bombproof eyeglass cases or crushable hats? Hardly. Most people, it seems, have more basic needs. We heard a lot about portable coffee pots, night lights, neck pillows and that favorite teddy bear. Several people also said they carry spiritual books, such as the Bible, and inspirational tapes.

Here's what else readers told us they could not leave home without:

■ "The one thing that's always in my suitcase is a corkscrew — don't leave home without it," says Dave Johnston of Simi Valley.

■ "I always carry a small jar of peanut butter in my suitcase," says Jean Russell of Tujunga. "No matter where you travel in the world, you can always get crackers or bread, but in foreign travel, you will not find peanut butter."

■ And also on the snack side, "Small bags of Fritos," writes Jayne Barnhart of North Hollywood. "I learned many years ago that not only are they good for munching on in foreign countries, but they can become breakfast, lunch or dinner. ... Once, when I was on a bus tour of Greece, we had an early morn trip to the Acropolis and I had missed breakfast, so grabbed some of my handy-dandy bags of Fritos and ate them on the way."

■ And in the sports category, "I never leave home without ...my rugby boots!" writes Nolan Day of Los Angeles. "I've been able to pick up matches in 28 countries to date and have met the most interesting people of my life this way."

■ Carolyn Noble of North Hollywood says she always takes "my trusty yellow foam earplugs. ... Getting a good night's sleep makes all the difference in having the energy ... to see all the sights."

■ Nancy Mandelbaum always carries her bathing suit — in her purse. "One time, many years ago, I went to Nassau in the Bahamas, but my luggage went to the island of Eleuthera. I was in my New York City clothes for a day — hot and grumpy. A woman just can't go and buy a bathing suit on a moment's notice. It takes a long time to find the perfect one."

■ And then there's T. Brett Lindsey of Reseda and his travel essential. "The thing that I absolutely must have when traveling is my Gumby doll. ... Gumby has been to more exotic places than any other cloth doll in history (arguably, of course). He's been held up in an in elderly Italian nun's arms for a photo opportunity. He's fallen off the Leaning Tower of Pisa, seen the ruins of many ancient lands. ... On the last Mardi Gras trip (his fourth), he lost an arm after being trampled by the hordes on Bourbon Street (New Orleans). ... Without Gumby, the magic of traveling just isn't as special."

Orchids bloom in Cuban sanctuary

By Anne-Marie O'Connor
N.Y. Times News Service

SOROA, Cuba — It was a labor of love and loss, a tribute to a spirited but delicate young woman who died giving birth.

Her father, a wealthy Spanish lawyer, spent the next 10 years of his life carving a sanctuary into a jungle-covered slope of the Guaniguanico Mountains for the fragile but majestic flowers that had once captivated his beloved Pilar: orchids.

The grief-inspired obsession of Don Tomas Felipe Camacho was not in vain.

Fifty years later, more than a thousand species of orchids from Asia, Africa and the Americas bloom along a labyrinth of winding pathways and vine-laden walls that climb hundreds of feet up the steep, humid mountainside.

"It was an extraordinary calling, a great contribution to botany," Jose Antonio Diaz Duque, vice rector of scientific research at the University of Pinar del Rio, which has administered the sanctuary since 1978. "This is the most important orchid preserve in Cuba, and I have seen nothing to rival it in the region."

FOR LOVERS of the flamboyant, sensual blooms of the world's most diverse family of flowering plants, the 25,000 orchids at the Soroa Orquideario constitute a botanical marvel that stretches the definition of lushness.

Fifteen feet above the path, a six-foot spray of amethyst Schomburgkia, native to the tropical Americas, hangs suspended from tentacle-like roots that cling to a 200-year-old Alga Robo tree with canopy so dense it reduces the scorching tropical sunlight to a warm, hazy caress.

Those who draw close to the cream and mauve lip of the Encyclia phoeniceum, an orchid unique to the mountains of Cuba, may be surprised by the tantalizing aroma it emits of another irresistible New World delicacy — chocolate.

The waxy yellow blooms of the Central American lockhartia are no larger than spring peas, and they rest on equally exquisite miniature foliage that look like some divine artist has braided living ribbons into one succulent strand.

The wine-hued markings of South American spider orchids resemble leopard spots.

No less alluring are the trees, like the mighty native ceibon, whose robust roots eschew soil but twist vigorously into the sharp crevices of limestone bluffs. The African Kigelia pignata, or "sausage tree," has plum-colored blooms the size and shape of pancakes in addition to the long round fruit that earn its nickname.

BIRD WATCHERS might be able to identify the dozens of wild finches, parrots and mynas whose cacophony provides the soundtrack of the 105,000-square-foot villa. The only other sound is the wind in the trees.

The variety of flowers and foliage among the Soroa orchids, even among the 200 Cuban natives represented, bears witness to the exceptional adaptability of a family of close to 30,000 species that thrive in every climate in the world except Antarctica and the Sahara.

Botanists believe orchids have had considerable time to evolve to such climatic contrasts.

The vanilla orchid, a subtropical staple whose fragrant beans flavor cookies and cake, is believed by some to have emerged before the separation of the continental plates 120 million years ago.

The legendary eroticism of the blooms is also ancient.

The family name itself comes from the Greek word for testicle, orkhis, a comparison drawn in a record of Mediterranean orchids by a Greek naturalist, Theophrastus, 300 years before the birth of Christ.

The Soroa orchid garden became something of a forgotten paradise after the 1959 Revolution of Fidel Castro and the subsequent departure of its creator for his native Canary Islands. Camacho died there of a heart attack in 1961.

THE STATE preserved the sanctuary, though not its name, Rancho Pilila, taken from Camacho's affectionate pet term for his daughter.

In 1978, it was made a research extension of the provincial university. Since then, botanists have devoted themselves to the still unfinished task of assembling the 302 orchid species endemic to Cuba.

Those who have visited Soroa since the growth of international tourism in the early 1990s generally have the retreat to themselves, except for a few Cuban botanists.

Soroa is only 36 miles west of Havana, but the highway is deserted, thanks to post-Soviet gasoline shortages, and travelers meet only a handful of Cubans at a nearby mountain waterfall surrounded by limestone cliff faces laden with tumbling vines and wild orchids.

"It sounds like it would be a fascinating place for the study of botany and orchids," said Bruce Ide, the information services manager of the American Orchid Society of West Palm Beach, Fla.

BECAUSE OF the U.S. embargo and travel ban against Castro, Ide said, "Cuba is still on the no-no list for Americans, meaning people can't just jump on an airplane and go see this. But that could change."

German Carnevali, an orchidologist at the Missouri Botanical Garden in St. Louis, said he has heard of the Soroa collection from Latin American botanists but red tape involved in getting U.S. permission to visit has dissuaded most American specialists from seeing it.

"Cuba has always been closed to us," Carnevali said. "It would be very beneficial to science if a large collection of Cuban orchids was made widely available to researchers."

Orchids require special care

N.Y. Times News Service

The Orchid family has a somewhat undeserved reputation as the prima donna of the flower world. In reality, orchids are highly evolved plants with simple but very specific needs. If these are satisfied, they grow like weeds. If not, they quickly perish, an event that has intimidated many a potential cultivator. The best way to succeed is to buy healthy plants from a reputable nursery and closely follow their instructions for potting, light, fertilizer and watering.

EXPERTS: The American Orchid Society 407-585-8666.

VACATIONS: Call Erin Boyer at International Expeditions, 800-633-4734. Groups of about 15 travel to observe orchids in wilderness areas of Kenya, Costa Rica, Ecuador, Venezuela, South Africa and China, fully guided by naturalists and experts.

SUPPLIERS: One specializing in fragrant orchids is Palestine Orchids, (304) 275-4781, a Mom and Pop operation in West Virginia that carries about 70 varieties with raspberry, orange, grape and floral fragrances. They ship.

World War II-era bombers on flying tour of country

By Don Driver
Associated Press

SAN ANTONIO — Jets are for kids.

That was the message on a small sign stuck on the World War II-era B-24 Liberator bomber "All American" when it landed at San Antonio International Airport.

"It brings back a lot of memories, I guarantee you," said onlooker Jim Frederick, 72, a former B-24 pilot who chalked up 40 bombing missions. "You have a warm spot in your heart for a machine that takes you out there 40 times and brings you back."

Frederick and other onlookers craned their necks recently when the bomber, the only fully restored and operational B-24 in the world, touched down for a two-day stopover in honor of the 50th anniversary of V-E Day.

"I had some friends who didn't come back," recalled Frederick, who is volunteering to assist in the aircraft's visit. "But I was lucky. I only had a couple of holes from flak in my aircraft."

The All American was to be joined by a restored B-17 Flying Fortress bomber as part of a "Salute to Veterans '95 Tour."

The two planes, dubbed a "flying museum," are open to the beneral public during their stopovers. "It's great it's a piece of history," said pilot John Rising, 31, after he climbed out of the Liberator's cockpit. "Since it's the only flying and restored B-24, every time we fly it we know we're the only ones in the country doing what we do."

The All American and the B-17 were recovered and restored by the non-profit Collings Foundation. The eight-month, 100-city tour is being sponsored by Schlitz beer.

More than 18,000 Liberators, in various versions, were flown during World War II. The aircraft was considered a workhorse, although the B-17 got most of the publicity.

The Liberator could carry a load of 8,800 pounds of bombs up to 3,000 miles at a speed of more than 200 mph and an altitude of 28,000 feet.

John Carrigan, 74, a Houston lawyer and former B-24 pilot who flew 39 missions in the Pacific, came along for the ride.

"I got up there and flew it a little bit," he said. "It flies just like it used to but this time, nobody was shooting at me and there was no flak."

The bomber has a wingspan of 110 feet, a length of more than 67 feet and a height of 18 feet. It's maximum weight is 65,000 pounds and it carried a crew of 10.

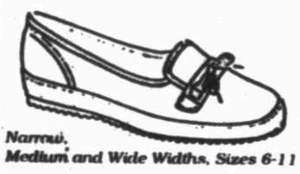

The aircraft on display was named "All American" after a B-24 that participated in a July 25, 1944, raid on tank works at Linz, Austria. The 19-plane squadron was attacked by more than 100 German fighters. The crew of the "All American" shot down 14 enemy planes and was one of only two B-24s to return to base.

The specific B-24 on display served for the United States until October 1944, when it was transferred to the British, who used it for patrol and bombing missions in the Pacific.

After the war, the aircraft was abandoned by the Royal Air Force in a bomber graveyard in Khanpur, India, until it was restored to active duty in 1948 by the Indian Air Force.

It enjoyed another 20 years in the air until it finally was retired in 1968. It was bought in 1981 by a British aircraft collector and resold three years later to the Collings Foundation.

ODESSA—Jugglers, acrobats, dancers and sword fighters provide the backdrop for the Globe of the Great Southwest's Olde English Madrigal Feast June 9 and 10.

"It's a complete evening of feasting and theater-in-the-round," said Carlene Wadley, director of the Madrigal Feast, which is being held as a benefit for the Odessa theater.

Gates open at 6 p.m. Those who have not arrived by 7 p.m. will not be admitted.

"If somebody is late, too bad," Ms. Wadley said. "The reason for that is the mobility of the cast. The madrigal singers stroll around singing. Jugglers run around juggling for different tables. The jester is running around.

There's a procession. There's so much movement, which is why we don't recommend children under 5 coming. We're just really concerned about somebody being tripped — either a participant or a guest."

Although the evening seems spontaneous, every movement made by the 75-member cast is choreographed, Ms. Wadley said. "We try to be as authentic as we can."

During the fullcourse dinner, "The Hollow Crown" by Paul Mastrangelo, will be presented from the stage.

"It's partially Shakespeare and partially authentic letters written between members of the gentry in England during the time of King Henry VIII and before," said Ms. Wadley, who has staged Christmas Madrigal feasts throughout the country.

Midlanders participating in the outdoor event include trumpeter Charles Poisall, his wife, Joyce, and their daughter, Beca; Reagan and Courtney Mabee; juggler Ted Penn; Robin Salors and her mother, Kathy Salors, who is a costumer.

Reservations must be made and paid for by June 5.

"People have thought they can come at the last minute," Ms. Wadley said. "They can't. It's a very specialized meal. The chef has to know far in advance to order things."

Tickets are $17 for the general public and $13 for patrons of the Globe. To make reservations call the Globe, located at Odessa College, at 1-915-332-1586.

Dreams and sighs, wishes and tears, will enchant Midlanders when the Globe of the Great Southwest presents a cutting from "Midsummer Night's Dream" during Summer in the City's free "Downtown Renaissance" June 1. "It's just very, very funny," Madrigal Feast director Carlene Wadley said of the cutting, which is entitled "Bottom's Dream." "One of the things that (former director) Lynn (Schofield) did was change some of the language," Ms. Wadley said.

"If there was a word that was terribly archaic, she changed it to something current," Ms. Wadley said. "It helped a lot. Shakespearean purists were really upset because Shakespeare is written to a meter. A different meter for different works. But as far as the general public is concerned, they like that because they understand it all."

The Renaissance theme for the opening event carried its own appeal for the planners of the Summer in the City series.

"Since Midland's downtown is undergoing a renaissance or rebirth, we decided it would be fun to start with that topic," said Linda Bond, executive director for Texas Best, the nonprofit group that organizes and presents the free, weekly series.

This year marks the second season for Summer in the City.

"Last summer, a bunch of us decided it would be really fun to have some entertainment going on downtown," Ms. Bond said. "The more we talked about it, the more we got excited about it. We decided that each week we would have a performer or performing group, an artist doing a demonstration, and something else. All of it would be local talent, and all of it would be free to the audience."

Although it was hard to count how many attended each event last summer, Ms. Bond found the crowds enthusiastic.

"It was wonderful," she said. "It was such a success that this summer we incorporated as a nonprofit, added an extra month and a children's area."

A Renaissance parade is set for Thursday at downtown Midland and an Olde English Renaissance Feast is set for June 9 and June 10 at the Globe Theatre in Odessa. In Renaissance attire are, from left, Tim Wadley, Carlene Wadley, Jerri Sullivan, seated, Nancy Lovett and Gene Collins.

The first event begins with a parade that starts at 6 p.m. from the parking lot across from Southwestern Bell at Big Spring Street and Missouri Avenue and winds through downtown. Mayor Bobby Burns and Reporter-Telegram publisher Charles Spence will lead the parade on motorcycles.

All area residents, particularly "actors, artists, cloggers, clowns and jokers, comedians, cowboys and cowgirls, creative anachronists, dancers, designers ... fortune tellers, funny-car drivers, hopeless romantics, riders, impersonators, in-line skaters, jugglers, low riders, magicians, mayors, models, motorcyclists, musicians, newspaper publishers, poets, singers, story tellers, tambourinists, tumblers, twirlers, unicyclists, whistlers and yodelers" are invited to participate in the parade, said Steven Porterfield, president of the board of Texas Best.

Those interested in participating are to meet in the parking lot at Big Spring and Missouri at 5 p.m. to line up.

Following the parade, Loraine and Texas streets will be closed off for free skating from 7 to 9 p.m.

"One thing that was real successful last summer was closing off the streets downtown for roller blading," Ms. Bond said. "We're going to do that again this year."

In-line skates can be rented for $1 an hour in Centennial Plaza during Summer in the City. Skaters must wear pads to participate in the parade. Volunteer coordinators of the skaters are Scott Ragan and Dr. Billy Cook.

"Bottom's Dream" will be presented outdoors at Centennial Plaza at 7:30 p.m. This performance will be followed by Tom Laney and the Tudor Consort providing music as lords and

Big new attraction puts polar bears in theme park jungle

ORLANDO, Fla. (AP) — Polar bears, beluga whales and a walrus named Garfield are the stars of a Wild Arctic interactive experience that opened Wednesday deep in Florida's semitropical theme park jungle.

Visitors to Sea World's big new attraction are whisked from blinding sunshine and 90-degree temperature to a remote Arctic research station where they can "explore" a bleak, ice-covered landscape and come nose-to-nose with the animals.

"It is cooool," said 12-year-old Jonathan Whyte of Chicago about the attraction — the largest addition ever made to any of the nine theme parks owned by Anheuser-Busch, the St. Louis-based beer company.

The gregarious Garfield and the other walruses, the carnivorous bears, white whales and harbor seals swim, forage and show off for humans in their own multi-level ecosystems behind special 2 1/2-inch glass.

Wild Arctic is a multimedia attraction featuring a motion-simulated helicopter trip into the Arctic wastes. Video depicts beautiful scenery and wildlife until the helicopter gets caught in a blizzard, turning the trip into a scream-filled adventure.

Reaching their destination, the travelers leave the simulator and come upon the shipwrecked remains of a British exploration of the 1840s, which scientists have turned into a modern-day research station.

Visitors then walk through the ship's hull and around 28 educational worksites that offer a chance to participate in actual ongoing research by animal behavioral experts.

Sea World acquired two snow-white polar bears, a 10-foot male and a smaller female, from the Detroit Zoo. They spend much of the time swimming in 50-degree sea water in their glacier-like home.

"They are exceptionally dangerous animals, and we don't interact with them like we do with performing animals," said Frank Murru, Sea World's vice president and general curator, strolling through the attraction with a guest. "But we spend a lot of time keeping them from becoming bored."

Workers feed the giant bears at different times, hide food and objects for them within the caverns, inject food into the pool — "We're always doing something different, motivating them, encouraging them to new activity," Murru says.

"We're still learning about all these animals, always conducting research, and we've set it up so that our guests can help us."

Visitors use computers at observation stations to record the activities of the various animals they are looking at over a 2-minute period: scratching, sleeping, eating, resting, foraging, swimming, walking. Every week or so, Sea World researchers will compile the data and look for trends so they can alter the animals' activities or environments, if necessary.

"This attraction brings together what Sea World is all about — a blend of entertainment, education, research and conservation," said Bill Davis, Sea World executive vice president and general manager.

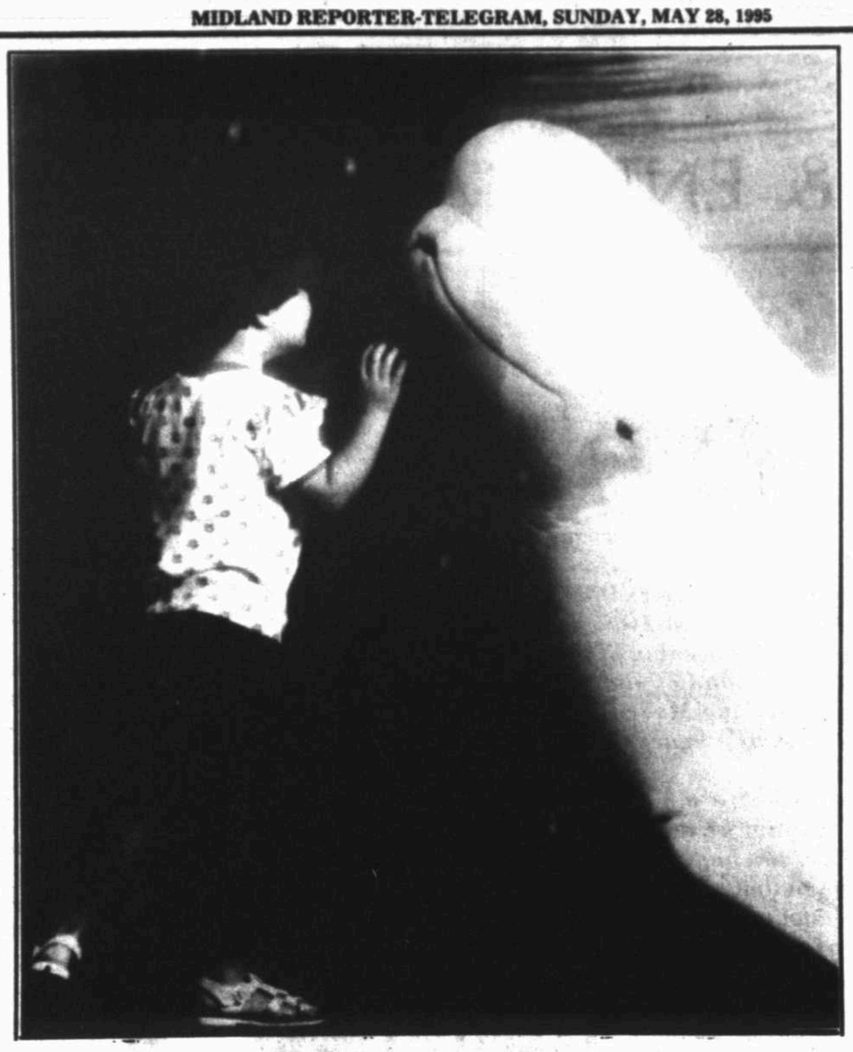

Davis would not say how much the expansion project cost, or even what Sea World of Florida's total investment is. But the addition is the largest ever made by Anheuser-Busch at any of its parks, Davis said.

Sea World also has parks in San Diego, Calif. and San Antonio, Texas.

Attendance figures are not publicized except as part of an overall yearly figure for all the parks, which was about 20 million in 1994. Industry sources estimated last year's attendance at the Orlando park at 5 million.

Sea World of Florida had record first-quarter earnings this year, Davis said, adding that international visitors were on the increase.

"The world is coming back to Florida" after a short decline due to widespread publicity about crimes against tourists, Davis said. "We're going to have a great year this year."

"Kids" of all ages, from toddlers to grandparents, delight in the opportunity to discover marine life close up at Sea World of Texas in San Antonio, the world's largest marine life park. In this instance, a young Sea world guest meets a beluga, or white whale at the "Symphony of the Sea" show. The belugas and Pacific white-sided dolphins orchestrate a memorable presentation that contrasts the whales' underwater grace with the dolphins' thrilling acrobatics.

ladies, jesters and jokers in Renaissance attire visiting Centennial Plaza. Members of the local Society for Creative Anachronism will stage jousts throughout the evening. Coordinator of the entertainment is Judy Craig.

Food will be available at Sonny's in the Park.

Also on the agenda, will be artist Ann McCoy demonstrating her watercolor technique; a children's area with Elizabethan crafts for youngsters coordinated by artist Jack Hickman and featuring wooden toys made by Jim Biffle and a group of area Boy Scouts; golf-cart races on a parking lot near the Midland County Library; and a tour of Midland's first downtown penthouse apartment, located in the Executone Building.

This free community event is sponsored by Southwestern Bell Telephone, SmithBarney, Permian Basin Waste Management and The Davis Co. Sponsors for the Summer in the City series include the Reporter-Telegram, Executone, Arts Assembly of Midland and Marathon Oil Co. Children's area sponsors are TuElectric and Pages & Prints Inc.

HOROSCOPE

SUNDAY, MAY 28, 1995

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: It is up to you how far you go. Act on your dreams! Golden business opportunities await those who search them out. A confident manner will persuade less-adventurous allies to follow where you lead. Although romance has its highs and lows, it remains rewarding. Spiritual studies reveal the deeper meaning of life.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: singer Gladys Knight, actress Sondra Locke, basketball Hall of Famer Jerry West, "James Bond" creator Ian Fleming.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Relatives can be both a blessing and a nuisance today. Spend more time getting to know younger family members. A move to another neighborhood could bring satisfying new friendships.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Curb a tendency to make snap judgments. Get to know the object of your affections before rushing into a relationship. Friends share an important secret that could benefit you financially.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): A fickle member of the opposite sex could play havoc with your emotions. Protect yourself in the clinches. Travel will introduce you to new friends and important contacts.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Be willing to gamble on yourself. Self-improvement projects can enhance your image and boost your earning power. Stay flexible. A small child is a source of delight.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Something you have enjoyed may be coming to an end. Seek an alternative. Be prepared to settle for a bit less if job- or apartment-hunting. Romance is best postponed. Spend quiet time reading.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Romance, creative endeavors and distant developments prompt excitement today. Cultivate the good will you will need to attain your goals. New financial backers appear at the critical moment. A change of lifestyle could mean greater happiness.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): A new friend could prove more helpful than an old pal when an emergency arises. Steer clear of people who are negative or critical. A budding romance looks very promising. Keep spending within reasonable limits.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): The rich and famous could touch you indirectly or directly today. Keep a promise or your role as a leader could be damaged. Guests are impressed by your good taste. A hilarious story cheers you.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Put work aside to focus on sports or the great outdoors. Less athletic types may prefer to try a new restaurant or see a play. In any event, spend the day with a pleasant companion.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): The person who handles the money today will likely hold the power. Something you want very much turns out to be surprisingly affordable. A sumptuous buffet could interfere with a diet plan. Dine elsewhere

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): A decision you make today proves to be right on. A clearly-outlined plan of action will win someone's full cooperation. An imaginative approach enhances romance. The time is right for renovating your home.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): The pick of the season is yours. Eat the kind of nutritional fare that keeps you feeling fit and vigorous. Exercise regularly. Romance comes out from under a cloud; two hearts beat as one.

In the early days of bridge, the difference between a takeout double and a direct cue-bid of opener's suit was largely a matter of strength. The cue-bid was used to show a powerful hand, strong enough for game on its own, with first- or second-round control of the enemy suit and support for all the unbid suits.

DOUBLE OR CUE-BID?

Some experts endorsed a cue-bid with a slam-oriented one-suiter.

The problem was that one rarely picked up the type of hand meeting those requirements for the cue-bid. Indeed, many players went through a lifetime of bridge without ever making a cue-bid in the enemy suit!

Over the years the cue-bid evolved into a weapon to describe a specific type of hand which cropped up quite often and was difficult to bid in normal methods. It was used to advertise specifically a two-suited hand. Obviously, the higher the level at which the bid was employed, the stronger the hand. The North hand here is a classic example of the modern cue-bid.

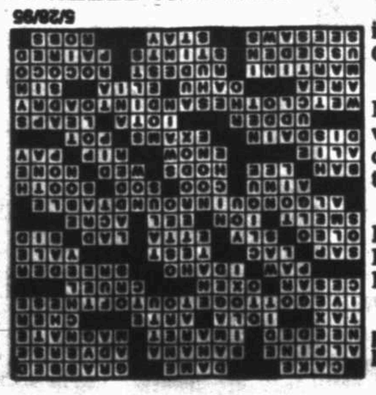

When this hand was dealt in the qualifying rounds of the World Team Olympiad some years ago, one North simply bid four hearts over West's weak two-spade opening bid and played there doubled, just making. The other North-South struggled to get to five diamonds.

Above is a straightforward sequence leading to the diamond grand slam using the two-suited cue-bid. Note that South did not jump in diamonds since there was no guarantee that diamonds were one of North's suits. When North raised, South cue-bid spades to show first-round control and interest in a grand slam. North was happy to oblige.

There was nothing to the play, despite the 5-2 heart split. Declarer ruffed the opening lead, drew trumps in two rounds ending on the table, discarded two spades on the high hearts and set up a long heart by ruffing two hearts. In all, South collected four hearts, six ruffs, two trumps and the ace of spades to round out 13 tricks.

Checking out the Libraries

By Sandra Wegner

Summertime and the reading is easy. Just direct your young readers to the Children's Department of the downtown library and to Centennial Branch Library at Midland Park Mall.

The KICKOFF BASH for the Children's Summer Program is 2:30 p.m. Friday, downtown, 301 W. Missouri Ave. Party goers can sample Little Ceasar's pizza, meet Sprinkles the Clown and watch balloons being made into animal shapes. The party will be in the library meeting room on the second floor.

Beginning Tuesday, children may register and pick up reading logs. Those who read or listen tot least 10 books or more during June and July will receive certificates and prizes.

Those who only listen to books will be joining the Read-To-Me Club.

The rest of June and July, the Children's Department will feature an event every Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday and Saturday at the downtown library.

It might be Ritzie Williford turning trash into art or Annalon Gilbreath spinning Texas Stories.

Steve Schmidt, director of the Marian Blakemore Planetarium, will give two workshops: one for children under 6 and another for those older than 6.

Other programs will be given by Linda Newkumet, Kit Smelser, Phyllis Price and the West Texas Mutual UFO Network.

To make your summer plans, please pick up a schedule at the library.

As always if any child needs special assistance when attending the programs, the library needs 24 hour notice.

The library appreciates the businesses and individuals who will assist in making this year's summer reading program the best ever.

Take in an Angels baseball game and your children under 12 get in free. All the child needs is a current Midland County Public Library card. A library card is the best bargain in town for any age.

As the old saying goes, you can lead a horse to water but you can't make him drink. You can also lead a patron to a computer but can't always make him "compute." For this reason, the library has acquired an electric typewriter for the public use computer room. For some time, the library has had an old manual typewriter for the person who needed to address an envelope or fill out a form. Some determined folks refused to tackle a computer, no matter how simple the word-processing program. They would preserve on the old manual for longer documents. The struggle is over, we gave in and got a better typewriter for their use.

The library got its first CD-ROM work station five years ago. It contained an index to periodicals and it was an immediate success.

Almost always the first choice of patrons looking for information in journal or magazine articles, the computer stayed busy while the old faithful Readers Guide sat idle or was second choice.

It was obvious that the library needed a second work station with the same information. Thanks to the Friends of the Library, the downtown periodical's area now has a second computer magazine index.

When many students have reports due, we will still need to limit time at the computer, but this will be a great help.

It's time for the worms to come home. Children who have been watching their bookworms grow during the school year should bring them into the Children's Department. Every worm earns a prize. Every visit to the library earned a segment to add to the worm.

Hours of operation for the downtown library will change this week. The hours of the Branch in Midland Park Mall will not change.

The summer hours for the downtown library are 9 a.m. to 9 p.m. on Mondays and 9 a.m. to 6 p.m. Tuesday through Saturday. The library will resume the winter schedule August 21.

Monday is Memorial Day Holiday and both libraries are closed.

Sandra Wegner is director of Midland County Library.

FORT STOCKTON — Country Music singer Collin Raye performs 9 p.m. Friday at the Pecos County Coliseum.

Opening the show will be Ram Herrera.

"We have great facilities to host major concerts and after such a success in bringing Rick Trevino last November, the chamber realizes that we simply have not taken advantage of these facilities and the fact that we are the hub to many communities," said Steve McCollum, owner of Western Outfitters and chairman of the event.

Raye's hits include "That's My Story," "Man of My Word," "Little Rock," "In This Life" and "Love, Me."

Concerts sponsors are Coors Light, the Fort Stockton Chamber of Commerce, KMRK Tejano 96.1, KGEE 100 and Newswest 9. The chamber is offering a separate seating area that will be sectioned off for reserved tables.

For those wanting to come early, doors open at 7:30 p.m. Concession stand will sell barbecue sandwiches and nachos.

Remain silent

Perfect Stranger will perform June 16 at San Angelo's Fiesta Del Concho. Show time is 9 p.m. on the river stage. The band's current single, "You Have the Right to Remain Silent," has elicited enough radio play and praise that Curb Records signed the group and has plans for a Perfect Stranger album in the stores by June 13.

Photography displayed

The outdoor photography of Thom Evans of San Antonio will be on display at the Nita Stewart Haley Memorial Library, 1805 W. Indiana Ave., during Western Heritage Week beginning Thursday.

Reception set

ODESSA — The Art Institute for the Permian Basin will host a reception at 3 p.m. June 4 for three of the artists whose work is currently on display.

Midlander Warren Taylor, and Wichita Falls residents Elizabeth Yarosz and Richard Martin Ash III will speak briefly about their work.

Ms. Yarosz and Taylor's works include watercolor paintings. Ms. Yarosz uses a high key color palette, while Taylor uses rich jewel colors and earth tones.

Ash's graphic work includes dramatic as well as more muted tones. His work includes subjects found in his studio and outside his window.

Ms. Yarosz and Ash are members of the art department faculty at Midwestern University, Wichita Falls. Taylor is a member of the Midland College art department faculty.

Cast members include Shane Bybee, Sara Spector, Jane Burgess, Cindy Burger and Coby Archa. Sherry Engstrom, who earned her master of fine arts in acting and directing from the University of Houston, is the director.

Will Coombes is the stage manager. Lights, sound and dramatic effects are by Edward W. Taylor. Paul Fiorella designed the gothic sets. Costumes are by Mae Dawson.

Tickets are $10 for Friday and Saturday performances and $8 for Sunday and Thursday shows. Reservations may be made by calling 682-4111.

Exhibit on display

ALPINE — The Museum of the Big Bend's latest exhibit is Janice Hirmon's "Transfers from Around the Bend."

Her images of the Big Bend are presented through Polaroid transfer images.

"Polaroid transfer imagery allows me to magically combine my love of photography with a desire to express artistic emotion through my work," Ms. Hirmon said.

Her method consists of a 35mm slide transparency projected through a color filtered enlarger onto Polaroid film. The emulsion side of the film is then pressed onto a wet paper surface. She uses water-color paper.

After the image dries, she enhances it with paints and pastel media. This technique has only been around for about 10 years, and Ms. Hirmon is considered a pioneer in this process, said a release from the Museum of the Big Bend.

The artist lives in north Texas with her husband, David. The exhibit will remain through June 26 in the museum located on the campus of Sul Ross State University.

Artists need sponsors

AUSTIN — Austin Visual Arts Association is inviting Texas nonprofit arts organizations to sponsor two of their artists in "The State of Texas Art 1995," a fall invitational exhibit at St. Edward's Moody Hall.

A "Leading Visions Seminar — Sharing Non-profit Visions: How can Non-profits Work Together?" is planned in conjunction with the exhibition opening. Exhibition dates are Oct. 6-26. For more information call Ms. Ronsonette, 1-512-454-3077.

Midlander receives summer scholarship

Midlander Regina Gonzales, daughter of Phyllis and Frank Gonzales, has been accepted by the Joffrey Ballet on a two-month summer scholarship.

Joffrey Ballet of New York representatives saw her at a dance festival in Norfolk, Va., where she has been attending Virginia School of the Arts.

In June, she graduates from Virginia School of the Arts. The April issue of Dance Magazine featured five students, including Miss Gonzales, from VSA in an article on dance schools.

She had been offered a scholarship with Colorado Ballet, but accepted a position with Ballet Austin for the 1995-96 season.

His family story is among the work that also includes the trail herd, the stampede, prohibition and the meaning of being a neighbor. His work pieces together a history of West Texas ranch life.

"His drawings express a cultural idea," said Angie Way, curator. "They are a form of storytelling about the history of this area. That's why we wanted to display them."

OIL REPORT

SUNDAY, MAY 28, 1995 SERVING 54 COUNTIES IN WEST TEXAS AND NEW MEXICO

BRIEFING

Empty brides await another day at the wellhead.

Oil prices retreat

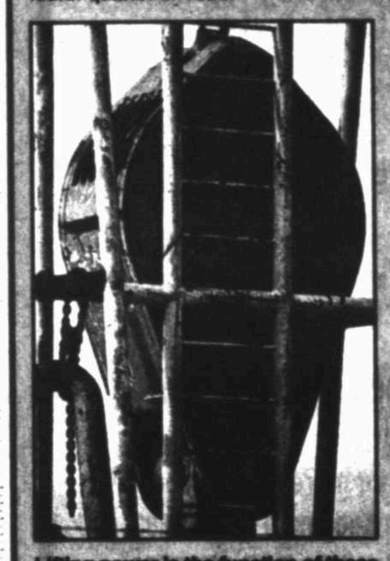

Energy futures retreated this past week as traders took profits on reports of growing stocks and a possible end to the Brazilian oil strike.

West Texas Intermediate for July delivery closed at $19.26 a barrel late in the week. The posted price settled at $17.50 a barrel.

Rigs purchased

SNYDER, Texas --Patterson Energy Inc. has acquired three additional land drilling rigs from an undisclosed party. The purchase price was made up of $367,500 in cash, 97,500 shares of Patterson Energy common stock and a warrant to purchase 75,000 shares of Patterson Energy common stock at a price of $9.00 per share.

Acquired in the transaction were a Gardner-Denver 1500E, an electric rig with 2,000 horsepower drawworks; a Gardner-Denver 1100M, a 1,500 horsepower mechanical rig; and a Mid-Continent U36A, a 600 horsepower mechanical rig. All three rigs were built in 1982 and were in service for less than a year. Since then, they were stored in a yard and were well maintained. The rigs are being moved to Patterson's yard in Snyder, Texas for refurbishing and are expected to be in service by the fourth quarter of 1995.

Lifting power is the function of these well strung cables.

Drilling declines

Drilling activity slumped in mid-May, according to Baker Hughes Inc.

In the Permian Basin, the rig count inched down one rig, to 120, for the week after holding at 121 for several weeks. A year ago the count was 92.

The national rig count gave up recent gains, dropping 16 rigs to 673 for the week. A year ago the count was 697.

Among major producing states, Texas and Michigan posted the sharpest drop,six rigs each. Colorado and New Mexico posted the biggest gain, one rig each.

Key-Orbitron talks

NEW BRUNSWICK, N.J.--Key Energy Group Inc. has entered into a Letter of intent to provide funding for a plan of reorganization for Orbitron Capital Corp. and its subsidiaries Orbitron Oil & Gas Corp. and Orbitron Operating Corp.

Under the terms of the agreement, creditors would be paid in full and Key would acquire a 58 percent interest in Orbitron on a fully diluted basis. It is presently contemplated that Key would make a $5 million investment in Orbitron funded with a $1 million equity contribution and a $4 million loan bearing interest at the prime rate and a term of 5 years. The Orbitron subsidiaries are debtors in Chapter 11 cases pending before the United States Bankruptcy Court for the Western District of Texas (Midland/Odessa Division).

Legislature enacts energy incentives

■ Railroad Commission chief applauds legislation, undoing of coastal management plan.

By John Paul Pitts
Oil Editor

Texas Railroad Commission Chairman, Barry Williamson is singing the praises of the Texas Legislature for its role in enacting new energy incentives and undoing the controversial Coastal Management Plan.

"The legislature is on a roll, and we are proud of them," said Williamson. He said a new Coastal Management Plan, which would eliminate a new bureaucracy, was a victory for the people of Texas. He said it would protect the environment, without creating regulatory quicksand.

He said the new plan, which would have subjected oil and gas operators, to a long review process would protect the coastal areas without "looking for problems that do not exist."

Williamson also noted that the Coastal Management Plan would have given Land Commissioner more authority than was intended.

"I think the legislature, took a second look at the plan and realized that it gave the Land Commissioner too much authority, and decided to go back to the drawing board with it." Under the new aspects of the Coastal Management Plan, the Coastal Coordinating Council, which would have assumed a large role in permitting construction and oil and gas exploration, will be disbanded in 1999.

The CMP came under fire earlier this year, when critics like Williamson, charged that the Legislature hadn't been given time to review the plan, prior to its being submitted by then Governor Ann Richards.

"I applaud the governor and the legislature for their thoughtful review of this plan," said Williamson, who also noted that the legislature had done a commendable job of passing new energy incentives.

Three of the five bills, known as the Texas Incentive Package, passed the Senate this week and two remain under consideration.

"It's a new day in Texas for the hard-working men and women in our energy industry, and I thank the legislature for agreeing with me on the steps necessary to spur the energy industry back into high-gear," Williamson said.

He noted that the incentives to return old wells to active duty in the oilpatch would put Texans back to work and recapture the pride the state has long had for its oil and gas industry.

The two remaining measures to be passed are the chit bill which would allow operators to transfer new well credits to marginal production and a severance tax exemption for enhanced oil recovery projects.

Williamson said he feared for these two measures, because they were running out of time. Incentives approved by the Senate include: an expansion of the highly successful three year inactive well credit to include wells that have been inactive for two years. Creation of the Texas Experimental Research and Recovery Activity (TERRA) which allows operators to transfer mechanically sound wells to Texas Railroad Commission for use in research and development of new technology. the bill will be the foundation for the state's first "laboratory" for experimental oil and gas research.

"For $50 an operator will be able to use one of the wells in this program to run his tests to test his products," said Williamson.

Also passed by the Legislature was a 10 year exemption from severance taxes for gas wells that require costly recovery techniques.

Williamson said all three measures would provide a fine rate of return on the severance tax dollars, and create jobs.

Coiled jet tubing pump unveiled

By John Paul Pitts
Oil Editor

A new, ultra-slim, high-volume jet pump developed by Trico Industries could help produce horizontal laterals and put an end to costly workovers in some situations, according to Trico.

The new 1 1/4 in. Coiled Tubing Jet Pump can be run in existing 2 3/8 in. or 2 7/8 in. tubing, making it ideal for such applications as: crude oil production, dewatering gas wells, replacing gas lift installations and producing new horizontal wells.

Despite its small size, the powerful pump has large volume capacities. It is able to pump up to 1,000 bpd in 2 7/8 tubing, and utilizes a wide range of nozzles and throats for a variety of production applications.

"Fluid is pumped down the coiled tubing, causing a venturi effect and putting a suction on the formation," said Don Kempert, a Trico representative. "It can be used either as a temporary application to get a well flowing or as a permanent installation to keep wells flowing."

Kempert says the technique should have great application in producing horizontal laterals. "If the tubing can go down the hole, we can put the pump down the tubing." He also sees the pump as an expensive means of bringing inactive wells back on production.

API reports rise in U.S. oil production

■ Domestic production inches up while imports were mixed.

Staff Reports

Domestic crude oil production continued to inch upward in April, according t o the American Petroleum Institute.

The API, in its Monthly Statistical Report, said production of 6,565,000 barrels a day in April was up 0.3 percent, but is the first instance since 1991 of a year-to-year increase and contrasts with declines of 3.5 to 4.5 percent annually in recent prior years.

New deep-water offshore production in the Gulf of Mexico and at Santa Ynez in California on the West Coast, along with capital projects such as implementation of the GHX-II gas-handling project in Prudhoe Bay to slow the decline in Alaska's production, has contributed to the production increase, according to the API.

Still, production in the lower 48 states has fallen about 11 percent and Alaskan production is down nearly 17 percent as domestic production is nearly a million barrels a day lower than in 1991, from 7.5 to 6.6 million barrels a day for the first four months of the year.

A key measure of demand, total domestic petroleum products supplies to the market rose .9 percent to 17,582,000 barrels a day compared to April 1994. Gasoline deliveries, rose 2.6 percent in April compared to the year before. Deliveries were 7,725,000 barrels a day.

For the first four months of the year,

It brings together three divisions in a synergistic and cooperative approach to oilfield development The fully equipped rig at left will allow the facility to test products and concepts on the site. The campus concept and cooperative engineering, borrowed from other industries is expected to become the standard for oilfield research and development.

A campus designed for R&D

By John Paul Pitts
Oil Editor

A new concept that could set standard for oilpatch research and development was introduced earlier this month when Schlumberger officially dedicated its Houston Products Center and 200-acre, Sugar Land campus.

The "campus" intended to create a synergy within its operations, will be home to three Schlumberger companies — Anadrill, Dowell and Schlumberger Wireline & Testing — and 1,100 employees. Beside a technological synergy the oilfield service giant with 48,000 employees, hopes the campus atmosphere and open work environment will encourage a sharing of facilities and ideas and discourage bureaucracy.

"It will allow us to practice concurrent engineering in the development of new products," said Linda Silinsky, a spokesman for Schlumberger. "That means product engineers will be working hand in hand with manufacturing engineers to make sure that we don't have to keep going back to the drawing board." Within a synergy, Dowell chemist may advise Wireline & Testing on materials, or a working rig on site, which can actually simulate downhole temperatures, and is owned by Anadrill, may provide valuable test data for all products.

She said that so far the practice of concurrent engineering, which integrates engineering, manufacturing, purchasing and marketing into a single team on a single campus was saving the company about 30 percent on new product development and testing.

Schlumberger Chairman Euan Baird has called the Houston Product Center the foremost center for oilfield product development in North America.

"As far as I know this is the first campus concept like this, and I predict other oil service companies will follow," said Silinsky. "Some companies have what they

Tom Brown income up sharply

Tom Brown Inc. reported net income of $4,530,000 or 28 cents per share for the first quarter of 1995 compared to net income of $574,000 or 4 cents per share for the first quarter of 1994.

Net income for the first quarter of 1995 was significantly impacted by nonrecurring accounting adjustments related to recognition of a deferred tax asset relating to tax benefits that can now reasonably be expected to be realized in the future and a writedown of proved property costs relating to the company's non-strategic areas of operations.

For the first time, the company recognized in the first quarter of 1995 a net deferred tax asset in the amount of $13,967,000 and corresponding credit to deferred income tax expense. Deferred tax assets related primarily to the company's net operating loss and investment tax credit carryforwards were initially recorded in 1993, but these tax assets had been reserved entirely by a valuation allowance up until 1995. Based on recent additions to the company's oil and gas reserves and the resulting increases in anticipated future income, the company now expects to realize a major portion of the future benefit of its net operating loss carryfowards prior to their expiration. Accordingly, that portion of the valuation allowance was reversed in the first quarter. A valuation allowance of approximately $10 million will be retained against the company's deferred tax assets, primarily because of the company's investment tax credit carryforwards are still not expected to be realized in future periods. The deferred tax assets and related valuation allowance will be monitored for potential adjustments as future events so indicate, although management does not expect such adjustments to be significant in the near term.

Also in this quarter, the company recorded a charge against earnings in the amount of $8,368,000 due to the early adoption of Statement of Financial Accounting Standards No. 121, "accounting for the Impairment of Long-Lived Assets," which generally requires a separate assessment for potential impairment of each of the company's producing property cost centers, in contrast to the company's prior policy of evaluating the producing property accounts for impairment in total. The $8.3 million pre-tax charge reduced the carrying value of a portion of the company's non-core properties to their estimated fair values.

The company recorded revenues from operations of $9,428,000 for the quarter compared to $9,536,000 for the comparable period in 1994. Donald Evans, chairman and chief executive officer, noted continued success in the company's major areas of operation, with production from the Val Verde Basin increasing the company's overall net production to approximately 2.5 billion cubic feet and 94,000 barrels for the first quarter of 1995, an increase of 43 percent and 34 percent respectively over the fourth quarter of 1994. He also added that the Alex Mitchell No. 2-1R in the Val Verde Basin began production in April at rates of 10 Mmcfd and 500 bopd. The company has a 50 percent interest in this well.

The company continued to voluntarily curtail 40 percent of its gas production in the Wind River Basin of Wyoming during the first quarter of 1995 due to the lower than expected gas prices.

Evans stated that he anticipates increased production throughout 1995, but the level of increase will relate to gas prices especially Rocky Mountain prices.

The company also announced that the Fina-operated Donald F. Faust No. 1 well in Medina County, Texas had reached total depth and tested non-commercial. The company recorded this charge of approximately $1.3 million in this quarter. Evans stated that the company's limited exposure of 11 percent in this well was worth the opportunity for the extraordinary reserve potential of this exploratory project.

Gas producers, business group team up on federal legislation

BOCA RATON, Fla. —America's independent natural gas producers have joined forces with the National Cooperative Business Association (NCBA) in support of proposed federal legislation that would permit producers to aggregate their gas, cut out the middlemen and market directly to consumers.

If passed, the legislation could ultimately reduce residential gas bills and guarantee long-term supplies of this cleanest of fossil fuels, according to Apache Corp. (NYSE: APA) Chairman Raymond Plank and NCBA President Russell C. Notar.

Plank and Notar spoke here today before the mid-year meeting of the Independent Petroleum Association of America (IPAA), Plank is a leader in the natural gas industry's cooperative effort, while Notar heads the 80-year-old trade association which represents a cross-section of the nation's 47,000 cooperative businesses and their 100 million members.

The natural gas producer cooperatives effort was adopted as an IPAA legislative priority after a 93 percent favorable vote by the association's Natural Gas Committee earlier this month, said Committee Chairman Jerry Jordan. "This endorsement renews the effort started in the early versions of the Energy Policy Act of 1992," he said.

Plank said the necessary legislation has been drafted and will be introduced "in a matter of days with bipartisan sponsorship." He predicted the co-op legislation would face smooth sailing, "because co-ops could actually help generate revenues from severance taxes and royalty payments collected on additional gas production likely to result from a more efficient market."

"That equation is very salable in Washington in the current environment," Notar agreed. "NCBA's involvement expands your base of support, provides new linkages to legislators throughout the United States and reinforces the tie to consumers of natural gas," he said.

"America's present natural gas marketing system is seriously flawed," said Plank. "It's hurting producers and consumers alike, because it encourages cost add-ons between the wellhead and the burner tip, while undermining the development of long-term natural gas supplies."

He said consumers should be "curious and concerned about the fact that natural gas gets marked up four-and-a-half times from the point it leaves the well to when it reaches the American homeowner, versus only double for crude oil.

"Producer realizations have plummeted in recent years, while residential gas bills have been on the rise," Plank said. "That should be unacceptable to everyone."

Pipeline projects shift to extensions

Washington, D.C. – Wrapping up a five-year period of major network expansion, pipeline construction projects totaling more than $6.1 billion were proposed, underway or completed in 1994, with the industry focus now shifting to lateral extensions, looping and added compression, according to an annual A.G.A. survey.

"The nature of pipeline construction during the second half of this decade is likely to take a very different form from that of the first half," A.G.A. President and CEO Michael Baly said in a statement. "The construction of new long-line systems is less likely in the near term because of the increasing integration of the interstate pipeline network. The result will be decreasing construction expenditures, reflecting the industry's commitment to be more efficient and cost-competitive."

"New pipeline construction will increasingly encompass projects such as mainline extensions and lateral facilities to access specific customers," Baly said. "The additional capacity needed to keep pace with continuing increases in natural gas demand will come from the construction of pipeline looping, increased compression and the addition of storage facilities."

According to the A.G.A. report, New Pipeline and Storage Construction: Status Report 1994-1995, this shift in focus will lead to further decreases in pipeline construction expenditures through at least 1996. Actual expenditures are projected to be $3.4 billion in 1994, $2.9 billion in 1995 and $1.2 billion in 1996.

The projects identified by the 1994 survey encompass an estimated 6,992 miles of additional pipeline and additional capacity totaling about 13.8 billion cubic feet per day (Bcfd). A.G.A. also identified 18 new storage projects that were placed into service during 1994, representing 130 Bcf of additional working gas capacity.

API: Crude imports rise but product imports sink

gasoline deliveries are 2.8 percent ahead of last year, which the API attributes to the improved economy, good driving conditions this winter and the impact of slightly lower fuel efficiency of reformulated gasoline, which may have added 0.5 to 1 percent to the total demand for gasoline.

Imports were mixed, with crude imports rising and product imports falling. Total imports continued to rise in April to nearly 8.6 million barrels a day but were down 3.7 percent compared year-to-year.

Crude imports were up roughly 700,000 barrels a day from January's 6.5 million barrels day but, at 7.2 million barrels a day are below the all-time nigh of nearly 7.9 million barrels a day reached in July 1994.

Product imports fell 650,000 barrels a day or 33 percent compared to a year ago, with imports of finished gasoline and residual fuel imports down sharply. Also falling sharply were distillate imports and kerosine jet fuel.

In other highlights of the April Statistics:

Refineries operated at 92.6 percent of operable capacity.

Total inventories of all petroleum products stood at 1,000,700,000 barrels at the end of April, down 14 million barrels or 1.3 percent, from the end of March.

Distillate - home heating oil and diesel fuel - deliveries averaged 3,313,000 barrels a day, an increase of 6.1 percent. Cooler temperatures in April and continued strong transportation demand led to the sharp increase.

Kerosine jet fuel deliveries amounted to 1,354,000 barrels a day, down 7.7 percent and a drop that is inconsistent with the indicators of demand for jet fuel.

Residual fuel oil deliveries averaged 785,000 barrels a day, a decrease of 25.7 percent. Demand decreased because substitute natural gas costs less, and bunker fuel sales fell.

PUMP: Could end costly workovers

(From 1G)

$500-$700,000 for a complete workover, we were able to get wells producing for about $150,000. Of course. the economics will be different for onshore wells."

The entire bottom hole assembly is designed to be attached to 1 1/4 in. or 1 1/2 in. coiled (or conventional) tubing and run as a unit. The Jet Pump is a free pump that can be circulated in, set, operated and retrieved hydraulically without a wireline.

Surface equipment to operate the downhole pump can be configured to meet almost all conditions, and includes a triplex or multiplex pump and well head arrangement, plus a tank for separating the liquids. Kempert points out that one surface facility can be used to produce several wells.

Fluid pumped down the coiled tubing can be either produced fluid or water. To unseat the Jet Pump it is only necessary to pump in the opposite direction — from the below the pump, instead of on top of the pump.

Kempert said development of the pump began in 1993 and aggressive marketing in 1994. To date the application has been tried with success in approximately six wells.

He sees extensive application for the technology in the Permian Basin in short radius horizontal wells and inactive wells.

CAMPUS: Schlumberger expands campus concept

call integrated services, but this HPC is the first to bring it all together on a single campus."

She said that Schlumberger would also have the technical assistance of 1,000 other employees at Schlumberger's GeoQuest and Geco Prakla headquarters in nearby Houston.

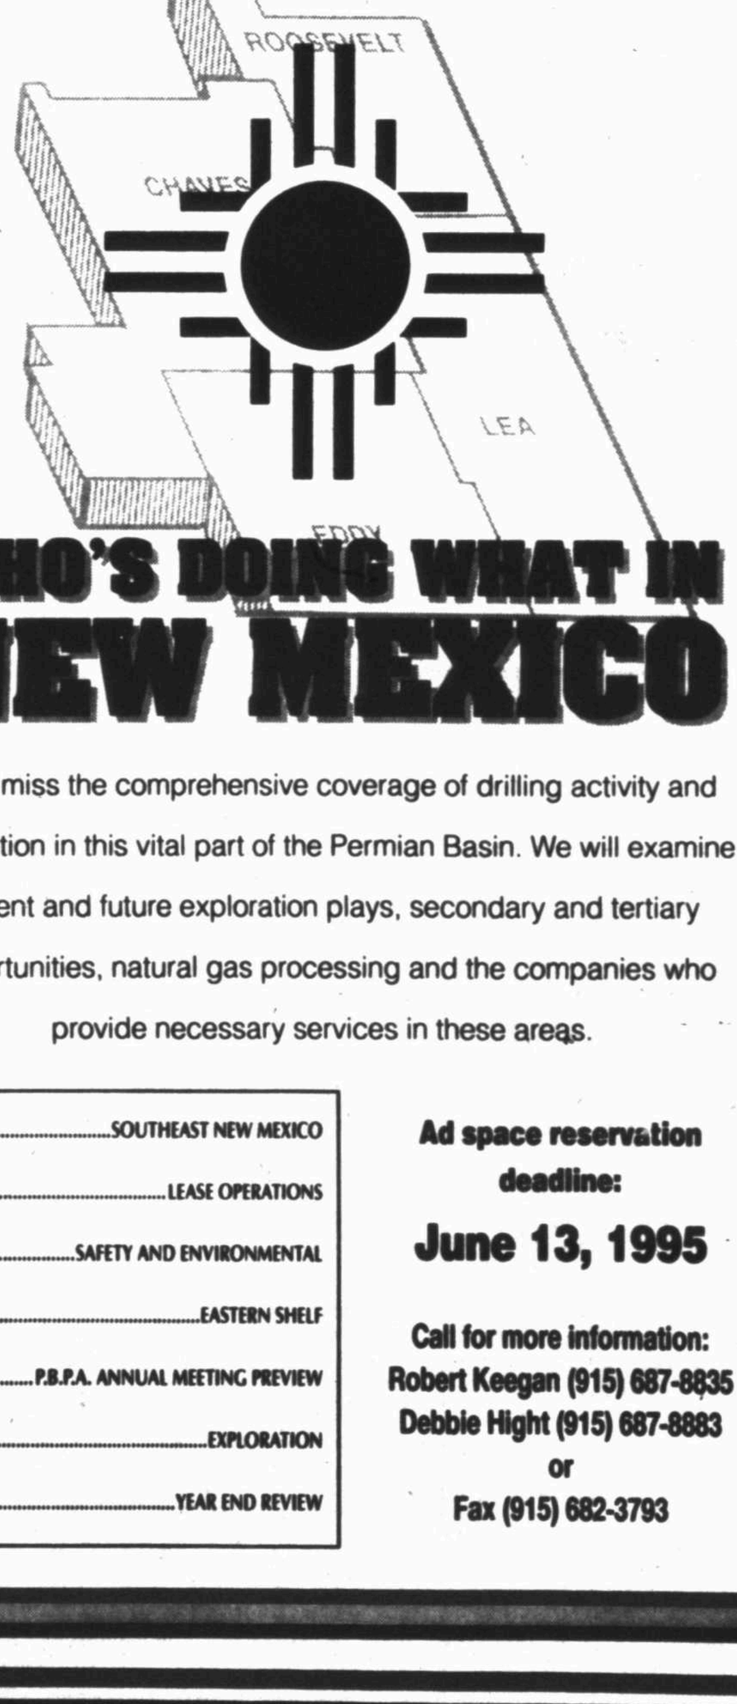

"I wish I could say we invented this concept," said Silinsky, "but we didn't. It has been around in other industries for some time. In fact, we mirror a lot of the concepts, developed by Saturn Corp."

In addition to sharing knowledge and expertise, Silinsky said the three companies at HPC also shared a common personnel, legal, accounting, and administration to affect savings. "The beauty of this concept is that all companies remain separate and maintain their own identity, but are able to participated in shared resources."

Also shared are recreational facilities which include a training center with a full time trainer, tennis and basketball courts. The entire campus is under the direction of Bruce McCann, vice president of Houston Product Center.

The campus, which was started in 1990, has plenty of room for expansion in the event Schlumberger decides to bring other subsidiaries of the company to the campus. GeoQuest and Geco Prakla could eventually end up at the campus, although there are no present plans to move them there. Dowell headquarters was located there from Tulsa, as was the Paris office of Dowell.

With the campus concept, Schlumberger which outsources 90 percent of its manufacturing and focuses on design and development, says it is easier to work with outside manufacturers and customers.

Kaiser-Francis purchase Meridian interests

TULSA - Kaiser-Francis Oil Co. has purchased from Meridian Oil Inc. and its affiliates their interest in 96 producing oil and gas properties in Oklahoma and Texas. Acquired were reserves estimated to be 120,000 barrels of oil and 6.9 Bcf of gas for a purchase price of $7.2 million. Kaiser-Francis has assumed operation of 16 wells formerly operated by Meridian.

Additionally, Kaiser Energy Ltd., a Canadian affiliate, has agreements in principal totaling $10 million on two unrelated reserve acquisitions in Alberta. Both of these transactions should close soon.

Exxon to participate in Imperial oil repurchase

IRVING, Texas—Exxon Corp. said that it will participate in the share repurchase program announced by Imperial Oil in Toronto.

On days when Imperial purchases shares, Exxon will sell to Imperial the number of shares required to maintain Exxon's 69.6 percent interest in Imperial. The price Exxon receives for its Imperial shares will be the closing price for the shares on the day of each transaction.

Exxon has advised Imperial that it will review its participation in Imperial's share purchase program from time to time and inform Imperial of any changes in its intentions.

IADC protests higher fee to transport fuel tanks

A proposed fee to increase from $300 to as much as $5,050 to register drilling contractors to haul essentially empty portable fuel tanks is disproportionate to the threat posed, International Association of Drilling Contractors officials protested to the U.S. Department of Transportation recently.

The DOT's Research and Special Programs Administration during March proposed changes that could inflate by as much as 1,600 percent a fee originally imposed in 1992 under the Hazardous Materials Transportation Act. The purpose of the fee is to fund a national emergency response training and planning grant program.

Marathon reports successful North Sea reentry

HOUSTON—Marathon Oil U.K., Ltd., has re-entered and deepened the 1985 U.K. North Sea Braemar gas condensate discovery well 16/3b-8z, encountering a deeper hydrocarbon interval within the Upper Jurassic Brae formation.

A drillstem test of the original discovery from a perforated interval of 248 feet flowed 40 million cubic feet per day (mmcfd) of gas plus 2,900 barrels per day (b/d) of condensate through a 56/64-inch choke, at a flowing tubing pressure of 3,190 pounds per square inch. The deeper zone, comprising 142 feet of perforated interval, flowed 9 mmcfd of gas and 530 b/d of condensate through a 32/64-inch choke at a flowing tubing pressure of 1,816 pounds per square inch. The well will be suspended for possible future use as a development well.

The well is located in the UK sector of the Central North Sea, some 170 miles northeast of Aberdeen, Scotland.

BLM proposes cutting heavy oil royalties

A recent U.S. Bureau of Land Management proposal to cut royalties for heavy-oil production will substantially increase revenue for both states and the federal government, the agency said.

The BLM proposed changing the heavy-oil royalty structure to prevent the loss of jobs and reserves and "to take advantage of new technologies being developed by the Department of Energy."

Many provisions of the proposed heavy-oil rule, published in the March 30 Federal Register, are similar to existing regulations for stripper wells.

However, the agency also said the reduced royalties will "minimize the necessity of drilling new wells with their additional environmental impacts."

Santa Fe Energy announces block trade

HOUSTON—Santa Fe Energy Resources announced that 13,071,992 shares of its common stock owned by Itel Corporation and Zell/Chilmark Fund L.P., had been sold in a distribution to institutional and individual investors handled by Goldman, Sachs & Co..

The transaction is scheduled to close on May 31, 1995.

Santa Fe Energy Resources is an independent oil and gas exploration and production company with headquarters in Houston, Texas. It has production in the United States, Argentina and Indonesia with additional exploration activities in several other regions of the world. Its common stock is traded on the New York Stock Exchange under the symbol SFR.

IADC well control schools get accreditation

International Drilling Schools, headquartered in Plano, and Houston-based Reading & Bates Corp. are the first schools to receive 90-day provisional accreditation under the IADC Well Control Accreditation Program. In addition, four other schools have accreditation pending:

Arab Drilling and Workover, Sliema, Malta;
Parker Drilling Co., Odessa
Safety Consultancy Services, Singapore; and WCS Well Control School, Kenner, La.

Pride Petroleum cancels Reeled Tubing purchase

HOUSTON—Pride Petroleum Services, Inc. announced that it does not intend to proceed with the acquisition of the assets of Reeled Tubing, Inc.

Said Ray H. Tolson, chairman and CEO of Pride, "We have not been able to develop terms of a mutually acceptable transaction. We remain highly interested in the coiled tubing business. Our coiled tubing units in California have performed well and we will continue to review alternatives for expanding our coiled tubing operations."

Pride Petroleum Services, Inc. headquartered in Houston, is one of the world's largest well servicing contractors. Of the company's 517 rigs, 432 are located on land in the United States, 22 are offshore in the Gulf of Mexico and 63 are in Argentina, Venezuela and Russia. Pride also provides contract drilling services in the international markets it serves.

IRS says fuel-dying system raises tax collection

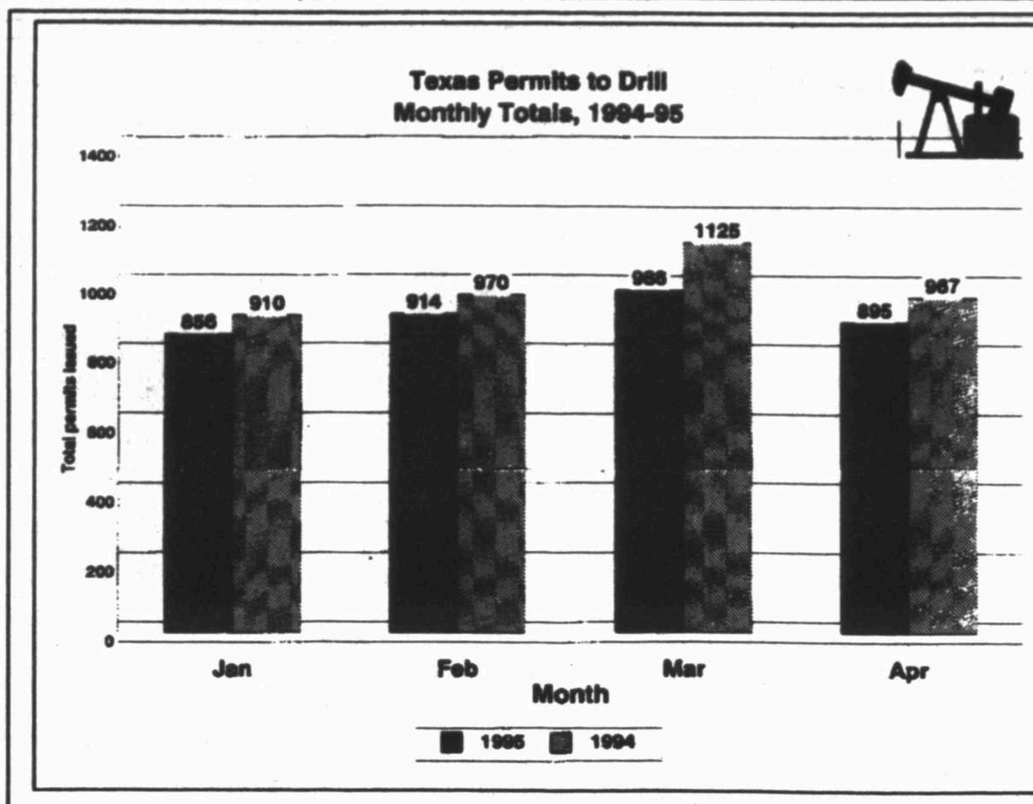

The fuel-dying system adopted in 1994 for diesel has slashed fraud, thereby significantly contributing a 40 percent increase in excise-tax collection, according to the Internal Revenue Service. The new system also avoids burdening drilling contractors, farmers and other users of off-road diesel fuel with paying the tax and later filing for a refund, a wrong-headed notion IADC and its allies battled against for several years.

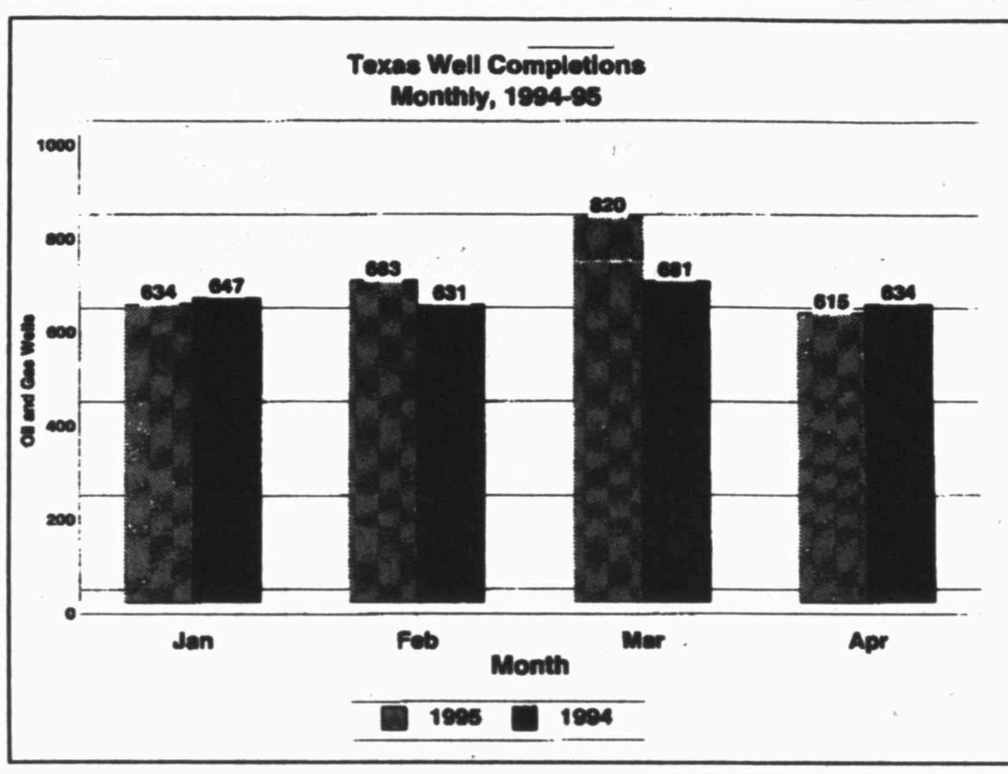

The IRS said that diesel-excise tax collections rose by more than $1 billion during 1994.

IADC holds international conference in June

"Facing New Well Control Challenges in Frontier Areas" is the theme of the 1995 IADC Well Control Conference for Europe, sponsored by Agip and Saipem. The meeting will be held June 7-9 at the Agip Conference Centre and the Forte Crest Hotel in Milan, Italy.

The conference includes a program comprising 16 technical papers and a panel discussion focusing on the meeting theme.

Texas Activity

The Texas Railroad Commission issued a total of 895 original drilling permits in April, compared to 967 in April 1994. The April total included 644 permits to drill new oil and gas tests, 32 to reenter existing well bores and 219 for recompletions. There were 100 new permits issued in the Midland district, 49 in the Lubbock district. To date in 1995, the commission has issued 3,651 permits, a 6 percent increase from 3,418 issued in the first four months of 1994. Operators reported 263 gas, 323 oil and 29 injection and other completions in April, compared to 279 gas, 331 oil and 24 injection and other completions in the same month last year. There were 77 oil and 11 gas completions in the Midland district, 66 oil and two gas completions in the Lubbock district. For the first four months of 1995, there have been a total of 2,752 well completions, up six percent from 2,593 in the same period a year ago.

Clayton Williams announces improved results

MIDLAND--Clayton Williams Energy Inc. has reported a first quarter 1995 net loss of $694,000, or $0.12 per share, on revenues of $11.4 million, compared to a net loss of $1,877,000, or $.33 per share, on revenues of $11.7 million, for the same period in 1994.

The principal factors contributing to the improvement over the 1994 first quarter were a $1,081,000 (85 percent) decrease in exploration costs and a $942,000 (51 percent) reduction in general and administrative expenses. The savings in general and administrative expenses can be attributed to cost reduction measures implemented by the company within the last year. These expense reductions were offset, in part, by a $567,000 (64 percent) increase in interest expense, attributable mainly to higher interest rates.

Despite a 10 percent decline in oil and gas production, oil and gas sales declined only 2 percent from the 1994 quarter due to a significant improvement in oil prices. The average oil price was up 27 percent for the quarter at $17.34 per barrel compared to $13.62 for the first quarter of 1994. In contrast, the average gas price was $1.65 per MCF compared to $2.10 in 1994, down 21 percent.

The company also announced that Clayton W. Williams Jr. and L. Paul Latham were both re-elected to the board of directors for three year terms at the annual meeting of shareholders on May 10, 1995. In addition, the shareholders approved two propositions which provide for certain executive officers and the outside directors of the company to be compensated in common stock in lieu of cash.

Clayton Williams Energy Inc. is an independent energy company located in Midland.

Frontier joins venture to explore along Gulf Coast

OKLAHOMA CITY—Frontier Natural Gas Corp. announced that it has entered into a joint venture agreement with Polaris Energy Corp. of Houston to explore for oil and gas on prospects located in Plaquemines, Jefferson, LaFourche, and Terrebonne Parishes in South Louisiana and in Districts 1 through 6 located along the Gulf Coast in Texas. Polaris will provide the geological prospects and oil and gas lease acquisition services. Prospects applicable to the venture will be those with reserve potential of 20-200 billion cubic feet of natural gas each. Most of the prospects will require three-dimensional (3-D) seismic in order to confirm the prospect. Frontier will be responsible for all geophysical services necessary for the modeling, design, supervision of 3-D seismic field data acquisition, and the processing and interpretation of the 3-D seismic data. In addition, Frontier will provide accounting and land administration services and will be primarily responsible for obtaining capital for the joint venture.

Frontier has also announced that it has entered into an agreement with Weisser, Johnson & Co. Capital Corp., as financial advisers whereby Weisser, Johnson will utilize its best efforts to arrange for up to $10,000,000 of capital for the Polaris/Frontier Joint Venture. Weisser, Johnson, with offices in New York City and Houston, provides private investment banking services primarily to companies in the natural gas business.

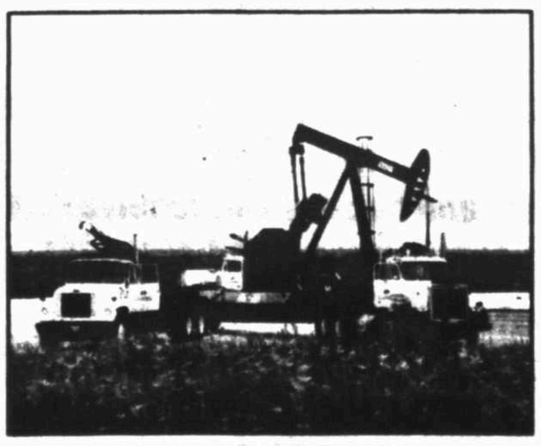

Frontier also announced that it has acquired an initial leasehold position on the first prospect of the joint venture. This first prospect is a multiple well development and exploratory opportunity in Terrebonne Parish, La. Leasehold currently controlled by the Polaris/Frontier Joint Venture includes acreage that the company believes contains substantial proved undeveloped natural gas reserves.

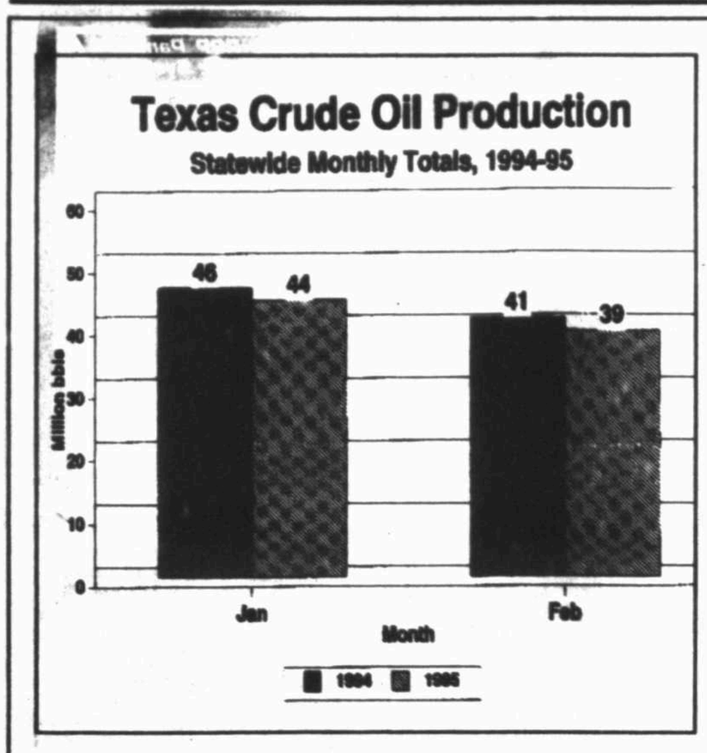

Frontier Natural Gas Corp.'s primary business is exploring for oil and natural gas utilizing 3-D seismic and other computer aided exploration (CAEX) tools, as well as the acquisition of exploitable, producing natural gas and oil properties. The company produces and markets quantities of its natural gas directly to end-users. Polaris Energy Corp. is a privately owned company.

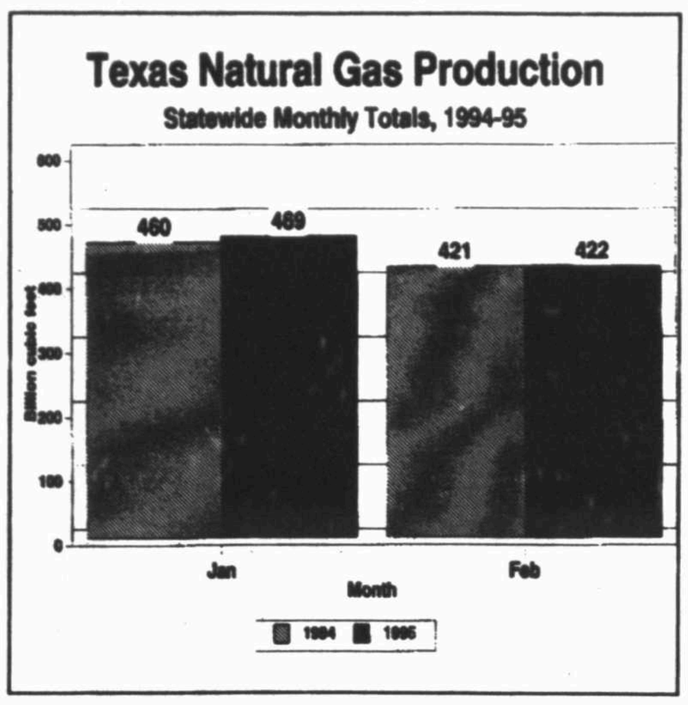

Frontier's stock is listed by Nasdaq under the Small Cap Issues with symbols FNGC for its common stock, FNGCP for its convertible preferred stock and FNGCW for its warrants.

Texas Production

Texas preliminary crude production for February averaged 1,414,678 barrels daily, down from 1,495,493 averaged in February 1994. Preliminary Texas oil production for February is 39,610,977 barrels, down from 41,873,796 barrels in February last year. Texas oil and gas wells produced 422,035,409 Mcf in February, down 2.3 percent compared to February 1994's gas production total of 431,954,330 Mcf.

Unocal discovers gas offseting Peciko field

SUGAR LAND, Texas—Unocal Corp. said that two exploration wells drilled by its Unocal Indonesia Company subsidiary in the Mahakam Delta area offshore East Kalimantan adjacent to the giant Peciko field, tested significant quantities of natural gas and condensate.

The company also reported significant extensions of two other producing fields in East Kalimantan. The redrill of an existing well in the Sepinggan field found oil in a new fault block, extending the field to the east. A step-out well also extended the Serang field more than a mile-and-a-half (2 kilometers) to the north from existing production.

"The Mahakam Delta and other areas offshore East Kalimantan are a strategic trend in our exploration and development program," said John F. Imle Jr., Unocal president. "Our success is due not only to our long experience with the geology, but also to improved 3-D seismic techniques that give us a clearer picture of the subsurface and reduce our exploration risk."

Imle added that the company's successful exploration and development program in Indonesia last year raised the company's gross production to the highest level since 1981.

"There has always been a strong export market for crude oil production and liquefied natural gas," he said. "As the Indonesian economy expands, though, we are beginning to see growing demand for natural gas for domestic consumption as well as for exported LNG."

The successful Peciko West No. 1 well was drilled about 1-1/2 miles (2 kilometers) west of the Peciko field, which was discovered in 1991 by another company. The Unocal well was drilled to a total vertical depth of 11,644 feet (12,762 feet total depth). Three drill stem tests yielded a cumulative rate of 14.7 million cubic feet per day (mmcfd) of gas and 167 barrels per day (bpd) of condensate.

The Peciko West No. 2, a sidetrack well from the No. 1 surface location, was drilled approximately 10,600 feet to the north of the No. 1 well bottom hole location and 1,100 feet deeper stratigraphically. The well logs indicate pay in several zones, and one drill stem test was conducted from an interval between 14,830 feet and 14,850 feet. The well tested 12.4 mmcfd of gas and 872 bpd of condensate on a 56/64-inch choke with 1,035 psi flowing tubing pressure.

The company said that the No. 2 well is now being deepened, and additional wells will be considered before development plans are finalized. The wells are located in approximately 140 feet of water.

The Sepinggan S-1 well was redrilled after producing for 20 years. The well was drilled to a total vertical depth of 11,238 feet (12,293 feet total depth) to test the east flank of the field, which was originally discovered in 1973. The redrill encountered oil downdip of known completions and is currently producing 1,925 bpd of oil and 2.7 mmcfd of gas. The Sepinggan field is located in approximately 150 feet of water.

The Serang North No. 1 was drilled more than two miles (3.5 kilometers) north of the Serang SA platform. The well encountered 170 net feet of gas pay and 16 net feet of oil pay in the shallow deltaic sands. The productive zones were confirmed by repeat formation tests. No drill stem tests were deemed necessary.

The Serang well significantly extends the known gas reservoirs and opens up the potential for additional oil production. The company will conduct additional delineation drilling from the Serang SA platform. The well is located in approximately 330 feet of water.

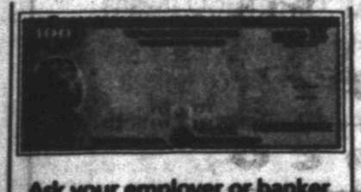

Additional oil and gas reserve determinations in the Peciko, Sepinggan and Serang areas are under way.

Unocal Indonesia Company, under a production sharing contract with Pertamina, the Indonesian national oil company, operates six fields offshore East Kalimantan. Unocal holds a 100 percent interest in five of these fields — Serang, Sepinggan, Melahin, Kerindingan and Yakin —and a 50 percent interest in the supergiant Attaka field. Unocal holds a 100 percent interest in the Peciko West No. 1 and 2 wells.

Gulf Canada to buy properties

CALGARY, Alberta (Dow Jones News) — Gulf Canada Resources Ltd. said it has an agreement to buy certain oil and gas properties in southeastern Alberta from Archer Resources Ltd. for 53 million Canadian dollars ($39.1 million U.S.).

The Calgary, Alberta, oil and natural gas producer is buying about 102,000 net acres of developed land and 135,000 net acres of undeveloped land, with current daily production of about 25 million cubic feet of gas and 550 barrels of oil and natural gas liquids.

The acquisition includes nine Archer-operated gas plants.

The company also will pay $3 million (Canadian) for a 50-percent interest in an adjacent 52,000 net acres of undeveloped land in the Coreal, Deer and Heathdale properties in the Richdale area of Alberta. Through a joint operating agreement, Gulf Canada will operate these properties and can earn an additional 15 percent by spending $2.5 million (Canadian) to develop the properties by April 1, 1996.

Archer, also an oil and gas company, will use proceeds from the sales to pay down bank debt. The transaction won't materially affect Archer's net asset value.

Archer said it is considering "further strategic alternatives." It did not elaborate.
