Hobby supports state income tax

AUSTIN (AP) — Lawmakers owe it to future generations of Texans to consider establishment of a state income tax, Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby said in touting the politically unpopular levy as the answer to school finance problems.

"If the idea of an income tax is not put fairly and accurately into the debate of this state's future, we are letting our children and grandchildren down," Hobby told the Texas Association of Taxpayers on Thursday.

"It would, I suggest to you, be a considerable improvement for the education system, the business community and the tax system of this state," he said.

An income tax would address a Texas Supreme Court ruling that the current school finance system, with its funding inequities among school districts, is unconstitutional, Hobby said. The school funding system relies on a combination of local property taxes and state money.

Legislators face a May 1 deadline to come up with a solution for the funding inequities among school districts.

"A personal income tax of 4 percent on a broad measure of income, even with generous exemptions and deductions, would raise enough money to replace every dollar of school property taxes, and add almost another $1 billion per year to fund education," he said.

A state income tax should be coupled with relief from other taxes that unfairly burden the poor and discourage business investment, Hobby said.

"If I'm the father of the Texas income tax, can I also be the guy who abolished the franchise tax, lowered property taxes and lowered the sales tax?" he asked after his speech to the business-based association.

Hobby, a Democrat who is not seeking election after heading the state Senate since 1973, acknowledged that the proposed levy is a political hot potato in Texas, which has neither a personal nor corporate income tax.

Tax a 'wolf at the door,' says Hance

AUSTIN (AP) — Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby may be feeling like the political equivalent of the lonely appliance repairman today.

Hobby's call Thursday for a state income tax brought widespread and bipartisan opposition.

"I said from the beginning that this campaign would come down to a choice between an income tax and a lottery," said Democrat Jim Mattox, who is promoting a lottery to raise money for schools.

"The wolf — a state income tax — is at the door," said Republican Kent Hance, who favors a constitutional ban on income taxes.

"I oppose an income tax. I respect Bill Hobby. I've disagreed with him before and I disagree with him in this instance," said state Treasurer Ann Richards, another Democratic hopeful.

Republican Gov. Bill Clements also rejected Hobby's idea. "The governor respectfully disagrees with the lieutenant governor," said press secretary Rossanna Salazar.

Texas has neither a personal nor corporate income tax, and the idea has been so unpopular around the Legislature that many lawmakers refer to it only as "the I-word."

Hobby, a Democrat, isn't seeking re-election for the first time since 1973.

He proposed the income tax as a way to raise additional money for public schools — while lowering other taxes.

U.S. will leave 'options open,' on aid to Contras, Bush says

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Bush is sending mixed signals about seeking military aid for the Nicaraguan Contras, seeming to revive that option after his spokesman ruled it out a day earlier.

"We will leave our options open," Bush said Thursday after visiting El Salvador's ailing former president, Jose Napoleon Duarte, at Walter Reed Army Medical Center.

Wednesday, after Nicaraguan President Daniel Ortega called off a 19-month cease-fire, Bush spokesman Marlin Fitzwater said, regarding the possibility of seeking military aid for the rebels, "We don't want to go that route. We want to get free elections."

Bush had appeared Tuesday to leave the door to military aid open when he specifically declined during a news conference to rule it out.

After his visit to Duarte, who is thought to be near death from stomach cancer, Bush also accused Nicaragua of "armed subversion" of its neighbors.

"It's not clear how far Ortega intends to take his military and intimidation campaign. Accordingly, we must and we will leave our options open," he said.

Pressed to elaborate, Bush said only that he would let his statement stand for itself. Congress cut off military aid to the Contras in February 1988 but has approved humanitarian aid for the rebels through February, when Nicaragua is scheduled to hold national elections.

Bush said it was hypocritical for Ortega to expect the Contras to disband and return home voluntarily "while sending in vast armed forces to attack them."

The administration issued different assessments of Ortega's offer to hold talks between Sandinista officials and the Contras next week at the United Nations.

Presidential spokesman Marlin Fitzwater called the U.N. talks "a positive sign, something we've called for all along."

Bosco Matamoros, a rebel spokesman in Washington, had said Thursday that the rebel leaders in Honduras had accepted Ortega's offer. The State Department called the move a propaganda ploy because it came on the heels of Ortega's cancellation of the cease-fire.

Massacre unmasks 'fascist dictatorship'

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador (AP) — A rebel commander said today the guerrillas canceled peace talks because the government left no alternative but armed struggle after a union hall bombing killed 10 people.

"With the massacre ... the fascist dictatorship has been unmasked. The only way being left open is the immediate taking up of arms," said rebel commander Eduardo Sancho on rebel Radio Venceremos.

The Farabundo Marti National Liberation Front said Thursday it had "suspended our participation" in peace talks. Rebel and government representatives were to meet Nov. 20 in Caracas, Venezuela, in a third round of talks that began in Mexico in September.

The talks had produced virtually no progress toward ending a 10-year-old civil war that has killed an estimated 70,000 people. Each side accused the other of bad faith.

The government had no comment early today on the suspension of the talks.

Sancho said Tuesday's bombing of the National Federation of Salvadoran Workers was "the principal reason" for suspension of the talks. He said the bombing "marks a new line, a new political moment" similar to the early 1980s, when rampant political violence was claiming up to 800 lives a month.

Thursday, thousands of unionists buried their slain comrades and vowed revenge.

"Because the color of blood is never forgotten, our slain companions will be avenged!" the unionists shouted as they marched through downtown.

Many carried wreaths and banners denouncing President Alfredo Cristiani's rightist government.

The rebels said they had evidence the bombing was the decision of military chief of staff Col. Rene Ponce, was authorized by Christiani and executed by Col. Elena Fuentes, commander of the San Salvador-based 1st Army Brigade.

Local religious leaders join against pari-mutuel option

By JULIE HILLRICHS
Staff Writer

A coalition of religious leaders Thursday challenged pari-mutuel wagering proponents to explain why they've "misled" voters on the economic benefits a horse racetrack.

The Rev. Jim Denison, pastor of the First Baptist Church of Midland, has galvanized religious leaders into Midlanders Who Care. The group has pledged to spend $2,500 fighting the horse racing issue at the polls Nov. 7.

"Our purpose today as area ministers is to stand together against gambling for our citizens," said Denison at a news conference Thursday.

The local-option election was allowed after a Midland service station owner gathered enough signatures on a petition to put the issue on the ballot.

Ada Thorne, owner of Thorne Service Center, believes legalized gambling would eventually bring in $30 million in revenue annually.

That disturbs the Rev. Russell Parchman, senior pastor of First United Methodist Church, who said he can't find any economic, moral or social reason for supporting the pari-mutuel issue.

"Midland does not need this," Parchman said.

Under the law, 5 percent of the pari-mutuel handle would go to the state, 5 percent to the horsemen in the form of purse money and 8 percent to the local racetrack.

The county would collect 15 cents from each admission fee and an additional 15 cents would divided among the municipalities within the county, according to population.

But the religious leaders complain that the gambling industry will only foster crime.

The Rev. Rex M. Horne Jr., pastor of Crestview Baptist Church, worries that pari-mutuel betting would not enhance the work ethic that has made Midland famous.

"While we hear the economic benefits that gambling affords, we have not heard of the social costs that will be exacted from our county. When we consider the cost to families and our county, gambling is not seen as a boon but a burden," Horne said.

DOE panel to tour Pantex during 2 days of hearings

WASHINGTON (AP) — An Energy Department advisory committee will tour Pantex, the final assembly site for nuclear weapons, as part of two days of hearings and meetings later this month on safety and environmental issues facing the Amarillo plant.

The 13-member Advisory Committee on Nuclear Facility Safety will meet Nov. 13 and 14 in Amarillo for its first hearing on the Pantex plant, said Wallace R. Kornack, the panel's executive director.

Witnesses expected to testify include representatives of the local office of the Department of Energy and of the contracting firm, Mason & Hanger-Silas Mason Company Inc., which operates the plant.

"This is the first time we've visited Pantex and that's one reason we don't have any considered opinions or views yet — that's something that will develop when we get out there," Kornack said Thursday.

The public will be allowed to comment during a two-hour period during the night of Monday, Nov. 13. The panel is expected to also tour the plant, he said.

"Our goal is to air out the truth, ferret out the facts of any issue that is before us," Kornack said. "The group is well qualified to determine what is fact from fancy. I think there is no reason why a contractor would try to hide the facts from the committee. The committee would rapidly see through fabrications of one sort or another."

The Energy Department in January estimated that it would cost $1.7 billion over the next two decades to preserve and modernize the aging plant 17 miles northeast of Amarillo.

The World War II-era plant sits atop the Ogallala aquifer, practically the only source of usable quality water for the state's largest irrigated farming region, the Texas High Plains.

Plant officials have said there is gas and industrial solvent contamination of the ground beneath the plant, but that there is no immediate danger of the contaminants seeping into the region's drinking water supplies.

The so-called "tiger team" of federal inspectors from the Energy Department and Occupational Safety and Health Administration just spent about two weeks at Pantex.

Clear skies in forecast

From Staff and Wire Reports

The autumn chill set a second consecutive record low temperature this morning, but three in a row is not expected, according to forecasters at the National Weather Service.

The overnight low of 27 broke the previous standard of 29 set on Nov. 3, 1951.

Clear skies and slightly warmer temperatures are in the forecast for tonight, according to the NWS at Midland International Airport. The low will be in the middle 30s and winds will be from the southwest at 5-10 mph.

Saturday is expected to be fair with the high in the middle 70s and winds from the west at 10-20 mph.

Thursday's high of 56 was 29 degrees cooler than the record high of 85 set for that date in 1946.

STATE

Pleasant weather appeared to be in store for most of Texas for the weekend as a warming trend was expected to begin tonight.

Forecasts are calling for clear skies over all of the state except for the Lower Rio Grande Valley where skies were to be mostly cloudy.

Lows tonight will be mostly in the 40s, ranging from the 30s in West Texas to the 50s in South Texas.

Highs Saturday will be mostly in the 60s, ranging upward into the low to mid-70s across the eastern half of the state.

Clear skies kept temperatures on the cold side early today, but a trough of low pressure in the Rocky Mountains was shifting the wind in the western half of the state to the south. That trend was expected to move across the state by tonight.

NATION

Snow blanketed parts of the Midwest early today, while rain dampened the East.

Scattered snow showers were expected today in the Upper Peninsula of Michigan, where snow plowing crews in some areas were busy Thursday clearing away up to 36 inches of snow that has fallen since Tuesday. The Hurley area of northwestern Wisconsin has received 35 inches of snow since Wednesday.

Temperatures dipped to the teens in Minneapolis early today, while snow fell in North Dakota. Rain dampened Pennsylvania and parts of New York.

Thursday, showers were scattered across the Southeast and the middle Atlantic Coast states. Thunderstorms rumbled over eastern South Carolina and along the east coast of Florida.

The nation's high temperature Thursday was 90 degrees at Fort Lauderdale, Fla.

Jim Bakker transferred to Minnesota prison

TALLADEGA, Ala. (AP) — Jim Bakker today received his expected transfer from a federal prison in Alabama to one in Minnesota to serve his time for defrauding followers of his PTL television ministry, officials said.

Dana Newell of the information office at the Federal Correctional Institution at Talladega said Bakker was being transferred to the Federal Medical Center in Rochester, Minn., but she would not say when he left or when he was to arrive.

Bakker, 49, arrived at Talladega the night of Oct. 24, several hours after he was sentenced by a federal judge in Charlotte, N.C., to 45 years in prison and fined $500,000.

The Talladega facility often is the first stop for prisoners in the Southeast before they are sent to more permanent lodgings.

While in Talladega, Bakker was visited by his wife, Tammy Faye, and his brother, Norm.

The Bakkers, before their 1961 marriage, dated while students at North Central Bible College in Minneapolis.

There have been no direct contacts between Sandinista and Contra officials for more than a year.

But Fitzwater reacted differently today.

"What we'd like to see is for these positive steps to lead to a reinstatement of the cease-fire and to get President Ortega to create a climate in Nicaragua for democracy and repatriation," Fitzwater said.

Fitzwater spoke to reporters while traveling with Bush aboard Air Force One to Richmond, Va.

Sentiment on Capitol Hill appears to be strongly opposed to restoring military aid to the rebels, although the House, often a bastion of anti-Contra sentiment, blamed the Sandinistas Thursday for the escalation in fighting in Nicaragua.

The State Department said two military operations launched by the Sandinistas were "large-scale" and involved the use of artillery and attack helicopters.

The House resolution called on Ortega to "cease his reckless rhetoric" and said Nicaragua's leaders must fulfill commitments to "end their aggression in the region, end their tyranny over their own people and permit the establishment of democracy inside Nicaragua."

Meanwhile, Ortega and the U.S. State Department offered sharply conflicting versions of the reasons behind a recent re-infiltration of an estimated 2,000 Contras into Nicaragua from base camps in Honduras.

The State Department said the rebels' intentions were peaceful but Ortega forcefully disagreed.

State Department spokesman Richard Boucher, citing reports from Contra leaders, said about 2,000 rebels have re-infiltrated into Nicaragua in recent weeks. A Pentagon estimate said about 4,000 Contras are now in Nicaragua and 10,000 others remain in Honduras.

Boucher said one purpose for the re-infiltration was to encourage Contra supporters to register to vote. Other officials, insisting on anonymity, said a number of Contras, worried about a Central American plan to demobilize them, decided to return on their own because they feared they might be forced back against their will later without arms to protect them.

In a column in Thursday's New York Times, Ortega contended the Contras were trying to subvert the electoral process because "they are as convinced as I am ... that the Nicaraguan people will give the Sandinistas a landslide victory" in the elections.

He said that during October, Contra units closed more than 50 voter registration centers, preventing thousands of citizens from registering.

"They targeted for assassination known Sandinista supporters — prominent community leaders, party activists and candidates for municipal offices — and slit their throats," Ortega wrote.

But Boucher said there was no basis for that version.

"I think the important thing is ... that there's no reason to believe that they are engaged in any offensive operations," he said.

U.S. nun kidnapped in Guatemala

GUATEMALA CITY (AP) — An American nun who disappeared from a retreat house after receiving a series of threatening letters was probably kidnapped, the city's Roman Catholic archbishop said.

Archbishop Prospero Penados del Barrio said in an interview late Thursday that Sister Diana Ortiz, 31, of the Ursuline order had gone into the garden of the Belene Sisters Retreat House, a former convent in the town of Antigua, Thursday and "she did not return at lunch time."

The archbishop said the nun probably had been watched and then was kidnapped from the courtyard without anyone noticing. She had been attending classes at the house, he said.

Since mid-July, Guatemala has been suffering from a resurgence of the assassinations, disappearances and other violence that claimed tens of thousands of lives in the late 1970s and early 1980s. A leading Christian Democratic politician, a prominent banker and students have been among its victims.

The extreme right, with traditional links to the military, is being blamed by some observers for the most of the violence.

Ortiz had been threatened several times while teaching kindergarten for more than a year in San Miguel Acatan, in Huehuetenango province, 225 miles northwest of Guatemala City, the archbishop said.

A native of Grants, N.M., she had taught school in Owensboro and Hawesville, Ky., before going to Guatemala two years ago.

National police in Antigua, 28 miles west of Guatemala City, would not comment on the case. The national police office in Guatemala City said it had no information.

In Louisville, Ky., The Courier-Journal quoted Sister Mary Elizabeth Dallard, who worked with Ortiz, as saying Ortiz had received at least seven letters since January warning her to leave the country.

After an incident in Guatemala City in mid-July, she did leave for a time, said the sister, of the Mount St. Joseph Ursuline Sisters of Maple Mount, Ky.

"A man she didn't know called her by name, took her arm and sort of forced her to walk with him while he talked," The Courier-Journal quoted Dallard as saying. "He knew where she worked and told her to leave."

Mourners march through the streets of San Salvador, El Salvador, Thursday carrying coffins of six of the 10 people killed in a union hall bombing Tuesday. Salvadoran guerrillas withdrew from peace talks with the government as a result of the bombing.

REBELS

The rebels did not describe the nature of their evidence.

El Salvador observed the Day of the Dead holiday Thursday, and no government spokesman was available to respond to the accusation. The two-day holiday honors the deceased.

Cristiani, in an address Tuesday night, condemned the bombing as terrorism and pledged an investigation.

"Death to D'Aubuisson!" chanted the marchers Thursday, referring to Roberto D'Aubuisson, founder and honorary president of Cristiani's Republican Nationalist Alliance, or Arena.

Human rights advocates consider D'Aubuisson the mastermind of rightist death squads that killed thousands of suspected leftists in the early 1980s.

The marchers, some of whom wore bandanas covering their faces and carried nail-studded wooden staves, plastered walls downtown with red-bordered posters emblazoned with the initials of the guerrilla front.

"For the future of our children, everyone against Arena!" said the poster.

Soldiers and police generally stayed well away from the march route. The only incident occurred when a truckload of army troops approached the rear of the march.

Marchers taunted the troops with shouts, and a soldier tossed a tear-gas grenade that left a few dozen demonstrators crying and coughing.

Two rocket-equipped air force helicopters flew over the march in rapid succession as it approached the Bermeja Cemetery on the city's southern edge. The marchers shook their fists and sticks at the aircraft.

The victims were buried without incident. Guerrilla priest Miguel Ventura, who had come secretly from the rebel-controlled northeastern mountains, officiated at the burial.

President Bush Thursday condemned recent violence "from extremists from both the left and the right" but said Cristiani's government "continues in the democratic path" of former Salvadoran president Jose Napoleon Duarte.

Bush spoke at a ceremony honoring Duarte at Walter Reed Medical Center in Washington, where the former Salvadoran leader is hospitalized with terminal cancer.

In March, voters elected Cristiani over the candidate of the then-governing Christian Democratic Party. Cristiani replaced Duarte, who by law could not run for re-election.

White cedar used to plank ships

ATLANTA (AP) — White cedar trees always have accumulated knots, but not just the kind that grow on trunks.

Wood from white cedars once was used to plank ships because of the wood's light weight and resistance to water decay, says Georgia-Pacific Corp., a forest products firm.

Today, the wood is used to build posts for boat docks, fences and piling. Native to the Atlantic seaboard, white cedars usually grow along small streams and near freshwater swamps.

TAX

Republican gubernatorial candidate Kent Hance launched his campaign for the 1990 GOP nomination by pledging to prohibit an income tax. Democratic gubernatorial hopeful Jim Mattox is pushing a lottery for school funding, calling it the only alternative to an income tax.

"Most statewide candidates will be forced to oppose it," Hobby said, but he called current taxes less fair.

The property tax hits poor taxpayers harder than the wealthy, and it has been an unreliable funding source as property values have fallen this decade, he said.

The sales tax also is regressive, affects investment and weighs too heavily on business, Hobby said, while the franchise tax imposes a levy on investments and is unfair.

The income tax is more just, he said, but "has been the subject of the worst smear campaign since Joe McCarthy."

Texas, the most populous state that doesn't levy its own personal income tax, is tied for the third highest state sales tax in the nation, at 6 cents per dollar.

Although Hobby said he would like to see a state income tax considered right away, he predicted it will not be examined again until lawmakers meet in regular session in 1991.

The Legislature meets in special session beginning Nov. 14 on workers' compensation, and again next spring to address school finance, but special session agendas are controlled by the governor.

Republican Gov. Bill Clements' press secretary, Rossanna Salazar, dismissed the idea of a state income tax.

"Gov. Clements is opposed to an income tax," she said. "And, as far as the school ruling is concerned, the governor believes that before we start discussing more money — a thorough review of the efficiency and effectiveness of the system must be conducted."

House Speaker Gib Lewis said a state income tax is something lawmakers should continue to examine.

"I'm like everyone else," he said. "I'm opposed to a personal income tax, but at the same time, I realize we have to deal with realities, and eventually that might be the only way we can approach the needs of this state as far as fair and equitable tax structure."

HOBBY

The Legislature faces a May 1 state Supreme Court deadline for overhauling the school finance system.

Hance, whose proposal for a constitutional income tax ban is a cornerstone of his campaign for the GOP nomination, said Hobby's call proves him right about the threat of such a tax.

"Make no mistake. When the leading Democrat in the Legislature and the leader of the Texas Senate calls for an income tax there is a clear and present danger," Hance said.

Mattox says a lottery game could raise $600 million a year, beginning almost immediately.

"I am the only candidate in the race who is unequivocally opposed to new taxes and in favor of a lottery. With our fragile economy and the trouble we're having attracting jobs, Texas sure doesn't need an income tax," Mattox said.

Republican candidate Jack Rains said he wasn't surprised. "We know that liberal Democrats favor an income tax," he said.

Rains said that instead of hunting for more money, officials instead should look for ways to improve an educational system "that has sopped up a 50 percent increase in funding in the last 5 years."

A spokesman for GOP candidate Clayton Williams, Bill Kenyon, said Williams opposes the idea, too.

Richard Ford, president of Texans Against State Income Taxes, also attacked Hobby.

"We want to tell Lt. Gov. Hobby that Halloween is over. Lt. Gov. Hobby should quit pretending to be Little Red Riding Hood's grandma when he's really the Big Bad Wolf," Ford said.

BETTING

Denison agreed, citing forthcoming cutbacks in the number of racing days and the purses at G. Rollie White Downs at Brady as proof that pari-mutuel gambling is not the answer to the economic needs of Midland County.

In addition, he observed that:

- Horse and dog racing constitutes less than 1 percent of any state's revenue;
- Twenty-one of the 27 active racing states have reduced their state's share of the betting pool in the last 10 years;
- Nebraska, Massachusetts, Illinois and Oklahoma are being asked to lower the state's pool of profits; and
- Illinois spends $3 million a year attempting to police the horseracing industry; 25 percent of New Mexico's gambling tax revenue goes to administrative expenses.

Denison said the ministers are concerned as well about the moral and legal issues associated with horse and dog racing.

Citing a study prepared by the state of Delaware, he pointed out that at least 40 percent of all white collar crimes are committed by gambling addicts.

Similarly, at least 10 percent of all new gamblers will become gambling addicts, responsible for 17 percent of all wife abuse and 13 percent of child abuse cases, he said.

Denison said Midlanders Who Care are not opposed to horse racing, but to gambling.

"The state or county government can benefit from pari-mutuel gambling only when its citizens lose at the track," he said. "We do not feel that any county which makes money at the expense of its own citizens is acting responsibly."

Duchess of York visits space center, opera performance

HOUSTON (AP) — Sarah Ferguson, the Duchess of York better known as "Fergie," is scheduled to visit the Johnson Space Center and attend an evening opera performance today as part of her five-day Texas visit.

Sarah

Fergie, who arrived on a British Airways commercial flight Thursday afternoon, came to Houston on the invitation of the Houston Grand Opera, which is having a British Opera Festival and premiering "Mikado" tonight and "New Year" on Sunday night at the new Wortham Theater Center.

Fergie, dressed in a bright yellow and white print dress with white gloves and shoes, toured the Houston High School for Performing and Visual Arts after her arrival.

She walked in on a dress rehearsal of the school's production of "Julius Caesar," set in contemporary times in a street gang environment.

"Cut, cut," yelled director Robert Singleton when Fergie walked into the school's auditorium.

"You looked very good," she told the actors when she walked on stage.

On stage, Singleton said Fergie asked the students about their goals and if they had the opening night jitters.

"She's absolutely delightful, not nearly as formal as we expected," Singleton said.

Fergie also saw a dance and jazz group rehearsal.

When she arrived at the school, student Mitch Kostner gave her a bouquet of red roses.

"She said, 'Are those for me?'" said Kostner, 16, a junior in the theatrical department of the school. "And I told her, of course they are.

"Then she said, 'They're lovely, lovely flowers.' She said lovely twice. Then she thanked me and shook my hand. It was just wonderful," Kostner said.

"I wanted to ask her to marry me, but I didn't think that was protocol," he added.

Fergie, who is pregnant with her second child by Britain's Prince Andrew, is the guest of the family of Oscar Wyatt, chairman of Coastal Corp., a Houston energy firm. Wyatt's wife, Lynn, vice chairman of the Houston Grand Opera, invited the British royal family to participate in the opera's salute this season to 300 years of British opera.

It's not the duchess' first visit to the fourth-largest U.S. city. Before her 1986 marriage, she visited the city as an ordinary tourist.

This week's visit, however, is intended to be red carpet, although her husband will not be accompanying her.

The duchess is scheduled to attend ceremonies at Houston City Hall with Mayor Kathy Whitmire this morning, before visiting NASA for tours of models of the space station and the space shuttle, plus a session with controllers at Mission Control.

On Saturday, the duchess is scheduled to visit the Texas Medical Center's Institute for Rehabilitation and Research and the Baylor College of Medicine's Amyothropic Lateral Sclerosis Center.

Also on the agenda were a Saturday night stay at the Wyatts' ranch near Hebbronville in South Texas and a visit to Blackshear Elementary to be briefed on anti-drug programs Monday.

Drug deal rings wrong number

DALLAS (AP) — A woman trying to arrange a drug deal got what more than she bargained for after she unknowingly called a pager number belonging to a Richardson police officer.

Richardson police say they arrested the woman and three others after the quartet bought two ounces of amphetamine from an undercover officer.

It was almost two months ago when Lt. Morris McGowan of the criminal investigation division answered a page on his digital beeper. He didn't recognize the number but he didn't identify himself when a woman answered and told him, "I need to get a QP."

"He didn't know exactly what it (a QP) was, but he knew he was onto something," said Lt. Mike Corley of the narcotics division. "He told her, 'I'll have someone call you back,' and he came down to narcotics."

Narcotics officers then set up a meeting with the woman at a North Dallas restaurant and began negotiating a deal for her to pay $3,100 for a quarter-pound of amphetamine, Corley said.

The undercover officer and the woman met at a motel Friday night to make the exchange. But when he arrived, she told him she would have to get more money to complete the deal.

Corley said a man and a woman arrived on a motorcycle and another man, who police said was her "money man," took money from the cyclists and gave it to the woman.

The woman, Sherie Beth Williams Powell, 41, and James Earl McGraw, 30, were both being held Tuesday in Richardson City Jail in lieu of $25,000. Both were being held on a charge of aggravated unlawful manufacture and delivery of a controlled substance.

Police also arrested the man and woman on the motorcycle, but later released them.

Alabama judge hands down novel sentence

MONTGOMERY, Ala. (AP) — When two brothers pleaded guilty to drug charges, the judge didn't throw the book at them — he just told them to read 10 books.

Circuit Judge John E. Rochester ordered Henry McQueen, 31, and Isaac McQueen, 30, of Montgomery to read five novels each, write reports on them and keep a weekly diary on what each is doing with his life and what he's learned from his experience in the judicial system.

Henry McQueen was ordered to read "The Grapes of Wrath" by John Steinbeck, "Lie Down in Darkness" by William Styron, "Animal Farm" by George Orwell, "Bonfire of the Vanities" by Tom Wolfe and "The Reivers" by William Faulkner.

Isaac McQueen was ordered to read "Lord of the Flies" by William Golding, "Crime and Punishment" by Feodor Dostoevski, "The Trial" by Franz Kafka, "Confessions of Nat Turner" by Styron, and "East of Eden" by Steinbeck.

The McQueens, who pleaded guilty to cocaine possession, were given a suspended sentence of one year and a day, in addition to five years supervised probation, which the judge said could be revoked if they failed to do their book reports or keep their diaries.

He also said the sentences would remain suspended so long as they hold jobs and obey the law.

Rochester, a Clay County jurist serving in the Montgomery circuit as a visiting judge, said he has been imposing book-reading sentences for about nine months to a year in his rural circuit.

He said generally he sentences defendants to read books or keep diaries "for the educational value. I don't think corrections is doing enough."

The judge startled the courtroom when he imposed the novel sentence.

"As the sentence was being read, I looked around the courtroom and people's eyes were getting big," said David Belser, the assistant district attorney who handled the case. "People were nodding in the affirmative, 'That's great.'"

Given the normal course of criminal justice system proceedings, he said, the sentence was "a breath of fresh air."

But Elna Reese, defense attorney for Henry McQueen, said the judge would be asked to reconsider.

LSC lawyers don't only assist poor

The U.S. Legal Services Corporation goes back to the time when the late President Lyndon Johnson began spending billions of dollars on the so-called "Great Society," the catch-phrase for many of his domestic programs.

The federally funded agency was founded to provide legal assistance to the poor. It aimed to reduce bigotry and poverty and to build, both economically and socially, a better America.

Billions of dollars and many more promises later, the LSC is still playing the same old song. And many Americans are wondering about those noble pledges and where all the money went.

The country's liberals claim there are more poor today than 25 years ago. They argue that the increase provides all the more reason for continued federal funding of the LSC. However, if the LSC were doing its job, how come the number of impoverished has increased?

The fact is that the young attorneys of LSC — too many lawyers are graduating these days and need jobs — are often much less interested in assisting the poor than in promoting their own agenda. Instead of helping poor couples being evicted by relentless landlords, they are filing class-action lawsuits to regulate corporate America and change countless government policies which have nothing to do with the poor.

For example, they have used federal funds to overturn a U.S. ban on exporting motor vehicles to Nicaragua, and they have sued to delay a special congressional election in Texas. Such cases are the normal work of private attorneys and interest groups outside the government.

When he was president, Ronald Reagan tried to abolish the agency, but Democrats in Congress stopped the move. Nevertheless, Reagan appointed a conservative majority to the LSC's 11-member board. It has tried to limit the use of LSC funds to helping the poor, but the lawyers continue to battle against that.

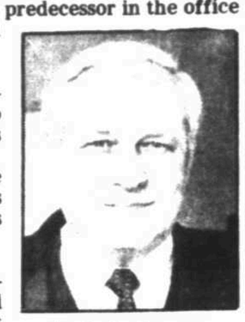
Many hope to move up to a big outside organization by establishing a reputation on a major project — not merely helping a poor family. Professional ambition is a fine thing, but not when the taxpayers are footing the bill.

The current LSC budget is $308 million. That money could go a long way in the war on drugs or in job training for the poor. Too bad it will go to the LSC. The nation needs fewer lawyers and social engineers, and more economic producers.

JACK ANDERSON

Administration can work around gun laws

WASHINGTON — The new director of the U.S. Information Agency, Bruce Gelb, found a little gift left behind by his predecessor in the office safe — a gun.



Jack Anderson

"What am I supposed to do with this damn gun?" he asked his aides as they rushed around trying to find out why it was there.

The USIA refused to tell us anything about the mysterious weapon, claiming it was a "security matter." We pieced the story together from other sources, including the former occupant of the director's office, Charles Wick.

Wick was USIA director through the administration of his good friend, Ronald Reagan. Wick told us he ordered the gun — he can't remember if it was a .357 Magnum or a .45 — for his personal security. He believed he was in the line of fire for those who would take aim at President Reagan, particularly the Soviets.

Wick and his wife, Mary Jane, have known the Reagans since the 1960s in Bel Air, Calif., when their children attended the same private school. Mrs. Wick is one of Nancy Reagan's best friends. The Wicks were the Reagans traveling companions on a recent Japanese tour.

"There was a lot of publicity about Reagan's friends," recalled Gilbert Robinson, Wick's No. 2 man at USIA. He remembered telephone threats against Wick and his family. The attempted assassination of Reagan by John Hinckley in 1981 only heightened their fears.

One former colleague told us that Wick was "obsessed with security," and spent $32,000 making his home more secure.

Wick and Robinson talked about the possibility of a gunman making it to Wick's office, and decided that Wick needed a gun. So Robinson was put on the job. He wrote to the Justice Department for advice and was told that hand guns were illegal in Washington, D.C. Wick could only keep a gun if he was sworn in as a special deputy U.S. marshal.

Wick liked the idea, and so did Robinson. They both got guns and were made special marshals. They had at least two practice sessions on the firing range.

Wick makes no excuses for his actions. He told us that the Soviets were "hot and heavy about me then," lambasting him on Radio Moscow as "a latter-day Goebbels." It was not unreasonable, at the time, to think that they might try to kill him, he said. After all, he added, the Soviets have been linked to an assassination plot against the pope during the same period.

The State Department, of which the USIA is a part, apparently agreed with Wick, or at least was smart enough to accommodate a friend of the first family. Wick took four State Department security guards whenever he traveled abroad. He wore a bullet-proof overcoat that was so heavy that it once dragged him down to the curb when he stepped out of a car on a European trip.

After Mikhail Gorbachev came to power, Wick felt safer. A staunch anti-communist in the Reagan mold, Wick switched from Soviet target to Soviet friend. Wick struck up working relationships with some Soviet leaders and was instrumental in negotiating a "disinformation pact" with them in which the Soviets agreed to stop jamming Voice of America broadcasts and stop spreading bizarre lies about the United States.

But the guns remained in Wick's and Robinson's offices, virtually forgotten and gathering dust, until Gelb came along.

The USIA refused to tell us where the guns are now, but unless Gelb is made a deputy marshal, it is against the law for him to keep them.

Second referendum needed

In the last several days the debate over pay raises for our police and firefighters has risen to a fever pitch. City management and some city council members have desperately resorted to scare tactics, innuendos, and outright lies to turn the public tide against these pay hikes. They have told the public that taxes will be raised higher than they actually should be, and that other city services would have to be cut. A certain city councilman has been telling employees in other city departments that they would lose their jobs if they voted for the pay raise.

Our City Manager stated that he did not like the idea of a referendum because it was too much like collective bargaining. Don't they realize that their actions and attitudes are the very actions that have led to collective bargaining in other cities in the past? I have lived in many other cities across the nation and I have seen it happen many times. You can only push someone into a corner just so many times before he will either leave for a better job or stand up and fight for what he deserves. Our police and firefighters could unionize or they could have a "blue flu" epidemic. I'm not saying that this will or should happen, but you can only slap a lion so many times without being bitten.

Should the police and fire referendum pass on November 7, I propose that we put another referendum on the ballot at the next election to cut the salaries of the deputy, assistant, and city managers by 15 percent. I realize that this will not cover the pay raise for our police and firefighters, but it will sure help! If they don't like it and decide to seek positions elsewhere, so be it. I strongly question the integrity of men who use tactics such as they have. It's high time that they bit the bullet instead of the men and women to whom we have entrusted our very lives and property. I seriously doubt that Mr. Fred Poe and his associates would strap on a gun and climb into a patrol car or walk into a dark, smoke-filled burning building for the average annual salary of $23,000 that our police and firefighters receive.

Barry L. Brooks
Midland

Police officers babied enough

I am not against the police or fire departments, but I am against raising taxes.

What I believe "Support the Blue" vote yes, really means is vote yes to raise your taxes. I am a resident and an employee of the City of Midland and have seen wage increases denied because there was no money available. I have seen requests for needed care and trucks likewise denied because there was no money available, without a sizeable tax increase.

It seems we have pampered the men and women in blue long enough. Let's count up all the high cost requests they have been given recently. (1) A state-of-the-art radio system, $2 or 3 million, (2) the latest in computer technology, more millions of dollars, (3) a luxurious office building, four or five million, (4) $750,000 bond money originally voted for garage improvements; plus uniform allowances, training allowances, twenty or thirty new take-home cars every year, just to name a few.

A recent ranking of most dangerous jobs in city employment proves very interesting. It lists police as ninth most dangerous, and fire fighters as nineteenth. Sewer construction is over two and a half times as dangerous as police. The person picking up the garage is nearly twice as likely to be injured on the job as people in P.D. I'm sure being a person in blue is no picnic, but it is a much safer job than what the public is led to believe. I know there are dangers, my son is a police officer and I have ridden with him.

If the referendum passes, what is to prevent them from coming back next year for even a larger pay increase? A success here would make them feel invincible.

Let's put a stop to more taxes. Mine are high enough. I'm voting no on the blue referendum. It does not mean I'm against the police, it's just that I am against more taxes.

I don't agree with everything that happens in the city. Maybe some of the mistakes pointed out by the FOP will be noticed by the council and corrective action taken but passing a pay raise referendum is not the solution. Do vote, and ask your friend and neighbors to do so too.

MARIANNE MEANS

Will the Washington Monument be bought next?

WASHINGTON — Despite former President Reagan's lavish $1-million-a-day romp through Tokyo, we don't really blame him for the fact the Japanese are buying up our most important cultural and commercial symbols at a breathtaking rate. But we should.

Marianne Means

The news that a Japanese company will now control Rockefeller Center in Manhattan is a stunning blow to our pride and our holiday traditions. Will Christmas in New York have the same old sentimental appeal if the giant lighted tree overlooking the center's famous skating rink is a big bonsai?

This shocker follows on the heels of a Japanese invasion of the Hollywood movie industry and massive Japanese investments in Tiffany and Bloomingdale's, two legendary purveyors of retail goods that represent the best in American taste. Japanese companies own 60 percent of the commercial real estate in downtown Los Angeles, 33 percent in Houston, 25 percent in New York City — and lots more elsewhere.

One shudders to think what other chunks of our heritage will go next. The Metropolitan Museum? The Washington Monument?

The wholesale snapping up of America got rolling in earnest on Reagan's watch, stimulated by two major developments for which the former president was directly responsible. No wonder the Japanese were happy to thank Reagan by tossing a 7-day party that paid him a $2 million fee for a handful of public appearances and cost an additional $5 million to make him feel at home.

They have taken advantage of Reagan's laissez faire ideology, which promoted an unfettered American marketplace open to the world in spite of the fact other governments refused to reciprocate with similarly generous policies.

Most other nations, including Japan, put up legal barriers to prevent foreign individuals and companies from randomly swallowing up major real estate properties and crucial industries, but we don't. We don't care who owns us, so long as they bring money. We aren't even interested in knowing who they are.

"We are the only free marketeers who actually practice what we preach; everybody else only pays it lip service," says Susan Tolchin of George Washington University, co-author of "Buying Into America," an authoritative study of foreign investment in the U.S.

"This attitude is not working in our national interest," she warns. "We are in danger of becoming minor players in the world economy."

Other favors from Reagan were our skyrocketing federal deficits and our decline from a creditor to a debtor nation, which have made us dependent upon foreign capital to finance our heavy borrowing.

This need for foreign investment has driven us to practically throw ourselves at the Japanese, who are extraordinarily wealthy and eager to take advantage of an exchange rate that favors the yen over the dollar. At last count, 42 states and many major cities had set up offices in Japan for the sole purpose of persuading Japanese businesses to buy property or set up industries in local communities.

But we have no idea how much of our heritage the Japanese and other wealthy foreigners actually own these days. The Commerce Department reports that Japanese purchases made up 15 percent of the total foreign investment of $1.7 trillion last year, making that nation the third-largest investor. But trade experts believe that the government's figures are woefully inadequate.

In truth, there is no accurate information on foreign purchases in this country because there is no law that requires their public disclosure. Not even the Pentagon keeps full records on most of its non-classified business deals with foreign nationals.

There was a push in Congress last year for legislation that would require full disclosure of foreign investment. It would not impose any restrictions on such purchases, mind you, only call for records to be kept that would accurately show the public what is going on.

But the bill was derailed by pressure from powerful multi-national corporations, which would just as soon keep all of us in the dark about their spreading influence.

Sen. Tom Harkin, D-Iowa., testified before a House committee that a large multinational corporation had threatened to close down its plant in his state, resulting in widespread constituent unemployment, if he voted in favor of the disclosure bill.

So the buying binge goes on unchecked, and nobody knows where it will lead.

ITEM: A lot of silly things have been said during the heated political battle over President Bush's plan to cut the capital gains tax. A good candidate for the most preposterous, however, was the White House claim that the Democrats were resorting to "extraordinary" parliamentary tricks to block the bill.

Presidential spokesman Marlin Fitzwater contended that the Senate Democratic leadership was unfair to demand a supermajority for approval rather than a simple majority vote.

Shocking, shocking. This recalls the piano player in the bar who was terribly surprised to discover all his nice female customers were regularly entertaining men in the bedrooms upstairs.

What Majority Leader George Mitchell did was to threaten a filibuster, a time-honored and much-used Senate stalling device that can be broken only if 60 members vote to do so. It was through the filibuster that a Senate minority was able to block civil rights legislation until the mid-1960s.

Similar supermajorities are also required to amend the Constitution, override a veto, and raise a budget point of order.

No less than 34 times in the past two years Republican Senators have found supermajority requirements useful to block measures sought by Democrats. This has included a great deal of major legislation, including campaign contribution limitations and financing reform, a minimum wage increase, trade and competitiveness programs and the FSX fighter agreement.

LEWIS GRIZZARD

Jimmy Bakker better watch his head in prison

The Lewis Grizzard Fantasy Column. Fantasies about obnoxious people in the news: Clunk!

The cell door slams shut.

"Well, hi there, my name is Jimmy Bakker and I'm your new roommate — I mean, cellmate."

Lewis Grizzard

No response.

"Maybe you didn't hear me, I said, 'Well, hi there, my name is Jimmy Bakker and I'm your new cellmate.'"

"They call me Mad Dog."

"What an interesting name. Why do they call you that?"

"Because I bite the heads off cats."

"Very interesting. Is that why you're in prison?"

"You writin' a book?"

"No. It's just that if we're going to have to share this small space for the next 45 years, I thought it might be nice if we knew something about each other."

"What you in for?"

"They say I defrauded some people out of some money."

"You're a thief."

"Well, not in the strictest sense. You see, I was a televangelist and ..."

"A what?"

"A televangelist. I preached on television and people sent me a lot of money to help me with the Lord's work."

"Like I said, you're a thief."

"Wait a minute, Mad Dog. It was just that my wife has expensive tastes and you take a few million here and a few million there and, pretty soon, you're talking about a lot of money."

"Last cellmate I had was a thief. I hate thieves."

"And what happened to your last cellmate.?"

"I bit his head off."

"I see. Well, do you want me to take the upper bunk or the lower?"

"Lower's mine."

"Fine, then I'll take the upper."

"Upper's mine, too."

"OK. Then I just get over here in the corner in the fetal position. I hope you don't mind some light whimpering."

"You got a funny face."

"I beg your pardon."

"I said, 'You got a funny face.' My brother had a funny face."

"What a coincidence. And what happened to your brother?"

"I bit his head off. He looked like a cat. You look like a cat, too."

"Mad Dog, please. We're going to be in this cell together for a long time, and we're simply not getting off on the right foot. I think it's important that we develop some sort of relationship."

"You gettin' fresh with me?"

"Of course not."

"Had another cellmate got fresh one time."

"Let me guess. You bit his head off."

"No. I cut his throat in the exercise yard."

"Well, I can assure you I won't attempt to get fresh with you."

"Why not? Don't like my looks?"

"It's not that, Mad Dog. It's just that I don't want to offend you in anyway."

"You think I'm ugly, don't you?"

"I never said that, Mad Dog. You're quite attractive. As a matter of fact, you remind me a lot of my wife."

"You sayin' I look like a woman?"

"No. I'm saying my wife has hair all over her back, too."

"Hand me that box over there, preacher man."

"What's in it?"

"My mascara."

California lawmakers propose tax hike

SACRAMENTO, Calif. (AP) — California lawmakers opening a special session on aid to earthquake-stricken areas questioned relief plans but barely debated the proposed source of funds: a sales tax increase local officials deem inadequate.

Marilyn Quayle, meanwhile, began visiting farm towns south of San Francisco left devastated by the Oct. 17 quake measuring 7.1 on the Richter scale.

"You've got me behind you," the wife of Vice President Dan Quayle told the owner of one damaged building on Thursday.

Also, Jack Kemp, U.S. secretary of housing and urban development, said at a San Francisco news conference that the federal government likely would be sending an additional $165 million to the Bay area to provide and repair rental housing.

Congress last week approved $3.45 billion in quake relief. The state is required to come up with $855 million more, said state Finance Director Jesse Huff.

To raise $786 million of that money, Gov. George Deukmejian and legislative leaders this week agreed to propose boosting the sales tax from 6 percent to 6.25 percent for 13 months starting Dec. 1 — encompassing two Christmas shopping periods.

The state Assembly and Senate opened a special session Thursday on quake relief. Several legislators closely questioned Huff on whether the highway funds included strengthening bridges.

"Before I can vote for a tax increase, I want to make sure some of the money is coming down to Southern California" to fix vulnerable highways, said Assemblywoman Marian La Follette.

Huff said the relief plan plan includes $300 million — $60 million of it in state funds — for retrofitting bridges.

Oakland Mayor Lionel Wilson and officials from the counties shaken worst said they would ask for a sales tax increase to 7 percent for one year to raise about $2.5 billion for repairs.

But some Republican lawmakers questioned whether any tax increase was needed. Assemblyman Tom McClintock proposed a freeze in state spending to save the $800 million during the start of the 1990-91 fiscal year.

McClintock's plan would delay by 12 weeks the normal inflation increases due July 1 for programs from schools to welfare.

After hearing testimony and discussing quake relief needs, lawmakers broke into committees to consider specific legislation. Floor votes on bills were possible this afternoon. The session was expected to last at least until Saturday.

Any tax increase must be approved by two-thirds of each legislative house. While the state sales tax is 6 percent, the total sales tax charged in some counties is higher because of locally levied sales taxes.

"I'm glad I came here and will certainly go back to Washington and tell the president of the problems here now and the hardships that will be faced in the months to come," Mrs. Quayle said in Watsonville.

Scramble on for rights to Helm's story

Hearst News Service

SAN FRANCISCO — Producers, agents, talk-show hosts and journalists worldwide have inundated the family of Buck Helm, seeking the exclusive story of the gritty longshoreman's 89-hour ordeal in the rubble of a collapsed freeway.

No contracts are being negotiated, but they are not being discouraged and Helm, when he is fully recovered, will decide if and how he may cooperate in the production of his own story, Bill Choulos, a San Francisco lawyer who was retained by the Helm family, said Wednesday.

The family of the longshoreman planned a news conference Thursday night in Okland.

There have been only extremely brief medical condition reports for Helm — he continues to be in serious but stable condition — and does not converse with his physicians or family members because he remains on a respirator.

Choulos said it is possible he will file a claim against the state and the transportation department on behalf of Helm. He said a lawsuit seeking damages might follow if the claim is denied.

The lawyer, who in 35 years of practice has filed many claims alleging unsafe highway conditions, said he will petition California's governor and legislators to create a fund to compensate Helm and other victims of the collapse of more than a mile of Interstate-880 and a section of the San Francisco Bay Bridge during the Oct. 17 temblor. Rescuers found Helm in his car Oct. 21.

A claim against the state must be filed within six months of an incident, and several have been filed on behalf of others injured in the freeway collapse.

Colombian court workers on strike indefinitely

BOGOTA, Colombia (AP) — Judges and other court workers shut down the nation's justice system today and said they would not return to work unless the government gives them more protection from drug traffickers.

Espinoza

Medellin judges, who began a strike a day earlier, handed in their resignations today, reported the Colombian radio network RCN. The resignations are viewed as largely symbolic gestures that are not likely to be carried out.

Drug thugs who have waged a bloody campaign since a government crackdown began 11 weeks ago were blamed for a car bomb explosion Thursday night in the capital of Bogota. Three members of a family and a soldier were killed and two people were injured.

Three other small bombs exploded in the capital and one was deactivated, the police said in a communique.

The strike by 17,000 members of the National Association of Court Workers began Thursday and was to last through Wednesday. It was sparked by the slaying of a federal judge in Medellin Wednesday, the third federal judge killed by drug traffickers in the last three months.

But this morning, union leader Helmut Romero told the Caracol radio network that the strike will go on indefinitely until the government gives protection to the courts.

The judges want bullet-resistant cars and vests, bodyguards, guns, weapons training and metal detectors at entrances to their offices.

This is the third strike by judges in the last three months, but this is the first one where the courts have been closed down indefinitely.

The Medellin judges' resignations are symbolic to emphasize their demands. Judges have resigned in the past to bring attention to their problems and the resignations are not effective unless accepted by the Supreme Court.

Federal Judge Mariela Espinoza was killed Wednesday by submachine-gun fire from two speeding cars as she arrived at her Medellin home with two guards on motorcycles. One of the bodyguards and a bystander were wounded.

In the past, the resignations have been rejected and the judges have gone back to work after meeting with government officials. Representatives of the Medellin judges were flying to Bogota today to try to meet with President Virgilio Barco, El Tiempo said.

El Tiempo also reported today that two court employees, both union members, were kidnapped in Cali last Saturday, tortured and then shot to death. A woman answering the telephone at the Cali police department said the report was true but refused to give other details.

More than 180 bombings have rocked Colombia since the government declared a crackdown on drug traffickers Aug. 19, the day after a leading presidential candidate was assassinated. The terrorist campaign has left 25 people dead and another 224 injured.

Authorities here assume the drug traffickers are using the bombings to try to force the government to abandon its policy of extraditing drug suspects to the United States. Five suspects have been extradited since the crackdown began.

In the last eight years 222 court workers, including 43 judges, have been killed, most of them by drug traffickers.

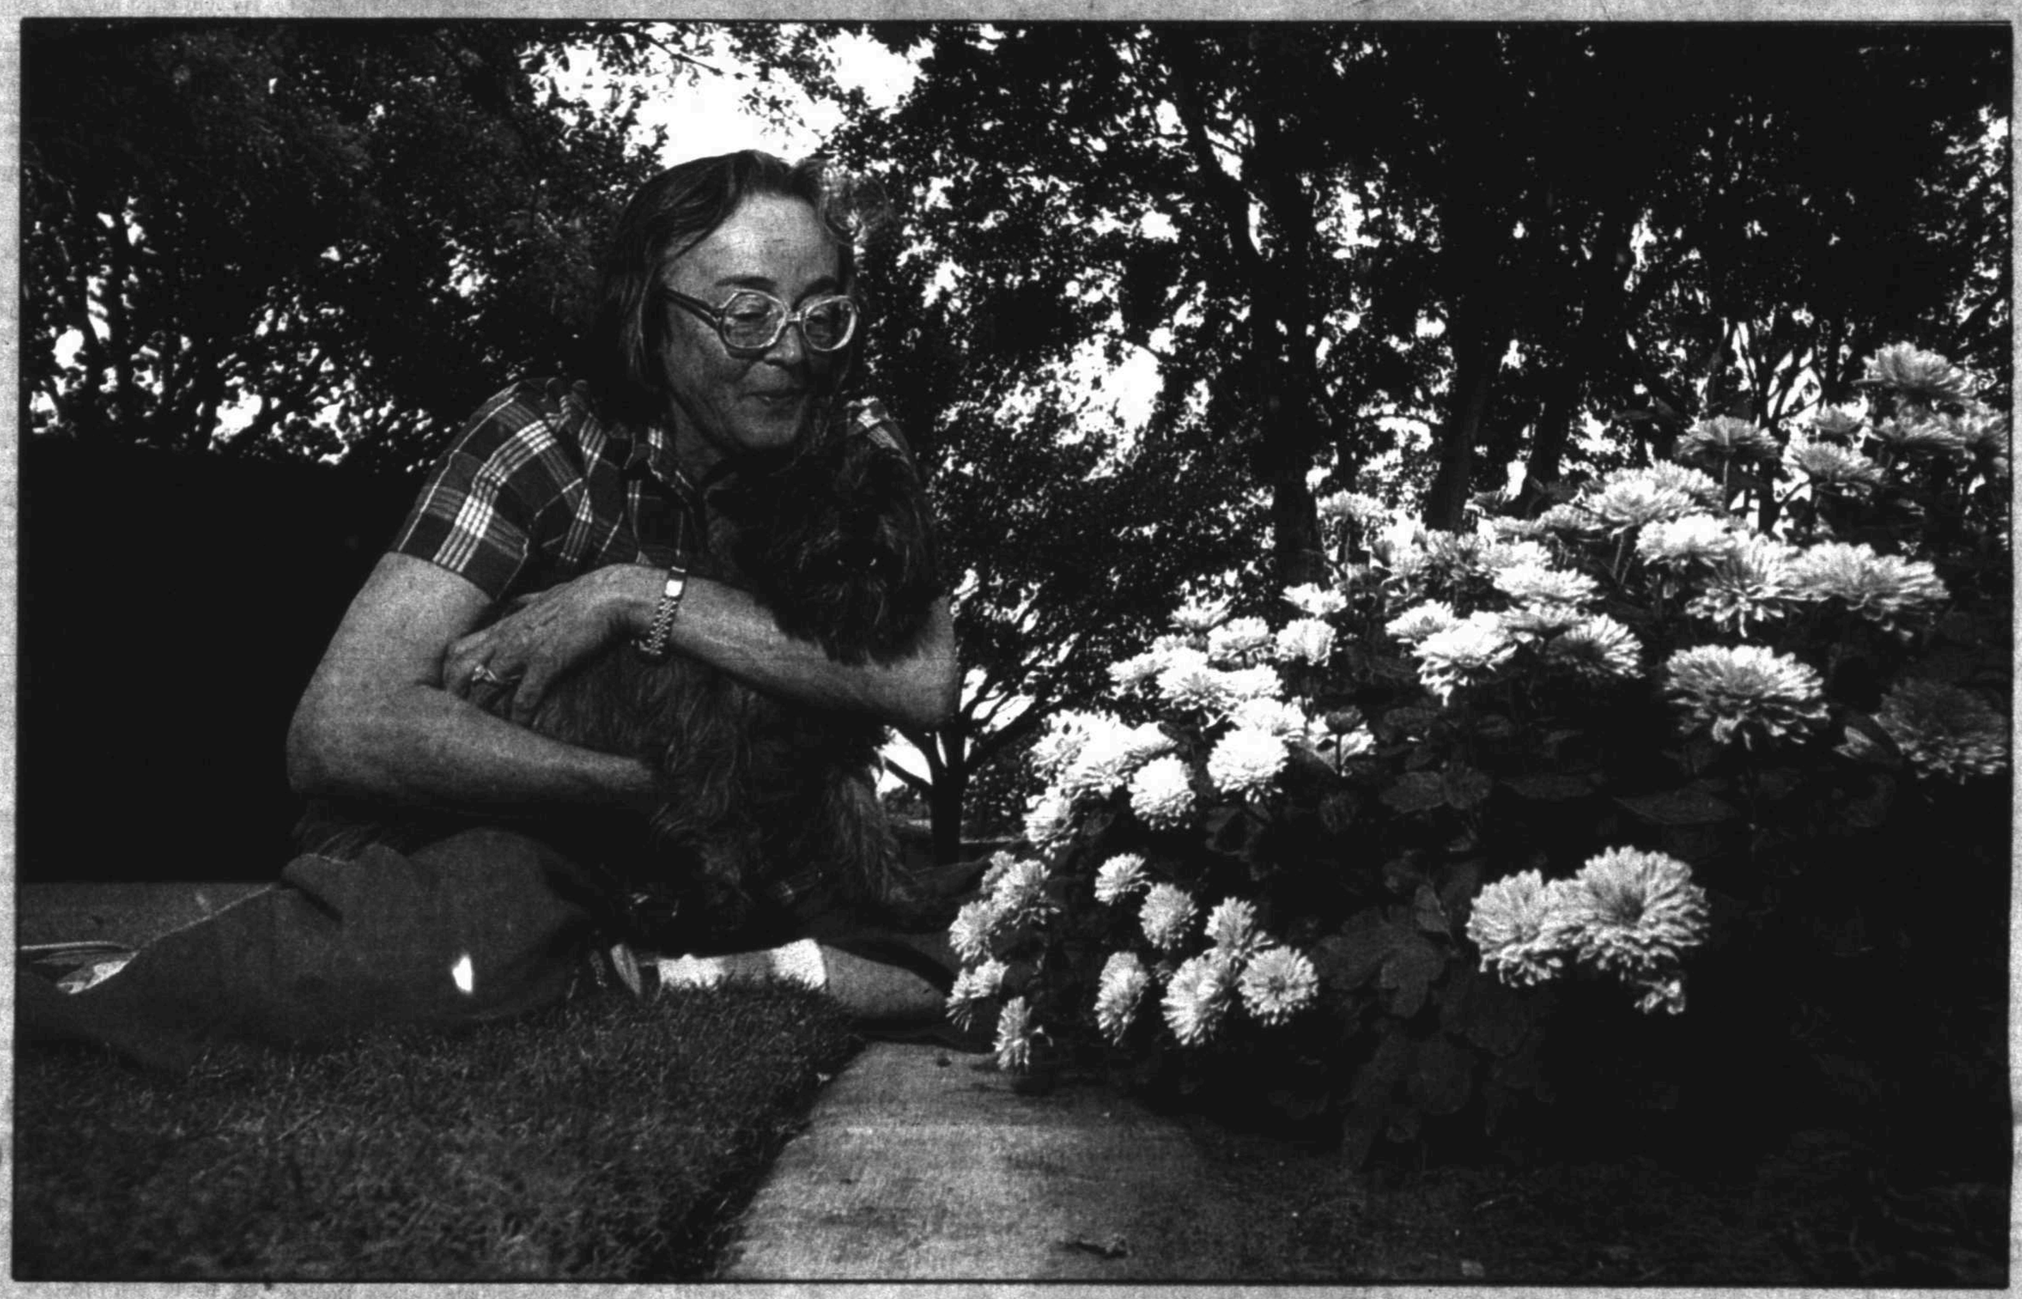
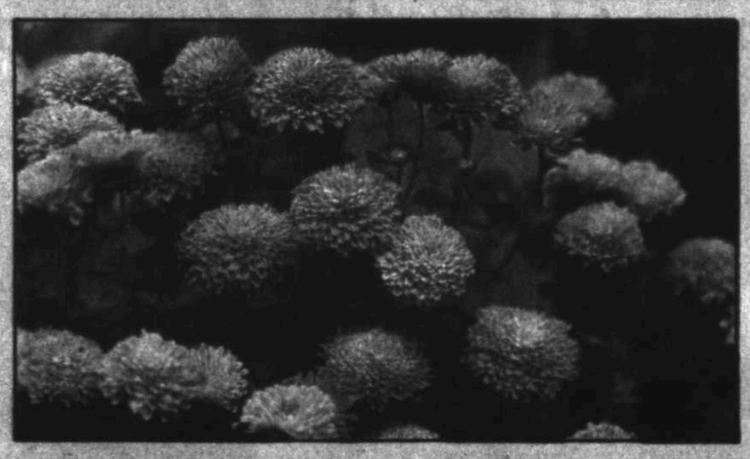
Autumn COLORS





ABOVE: Nancy Aikman and her Cairn terrier 'Punkie', sit beside a patch of chrysanthemums she planted this fall at her residence on Winfield Rd. LEFT: A close-up of purple chrysanthemums.

The chrysanthemum, long associated with the fall season and a popular perennial plant that thrives in West Texas, has come a long way since it was primarily seen in the bright, bold colors of autumn.

Yellow, bronze and red "mums" are now joined by many softer colors including lavendar, pink and rose.

Styles include elegant starburst and daisy forms as well as the traditionals and all come in a wide range of colors and flower and plant sizes.

Chrysanthemums orginated in the East Asian countries where their cultivation dates back more than 2,000 years and their development has become almost an art form.

In the year 797, the ruler of Japan, the Mikado, made the "mum" his personal emblem and decreed that the flower could only be used by royalty.

Each year the Japanese still celebrate the Feast of Chrysanthemums.

Agriculture officials defend bills

AUSTIN (AP) — Texas Department of Agriculture officials defended the billing of thousands of dollars for meals and hotel tabs to a crop inspection program, while Republicans stepped up criticism of Agriculture Commissioner Jim Hightower, a Democrat.

Jesse Oliver, general counsel of the TDA, said the expenditures and a vehicle used by Hightower are allowed under the Texas-Federal Inspection Service, a program operated by state and federal officials to provide crop inspections.

He described the flap over the expenses as "a political hatchet job."

Hightower, who was campaigning in East Texas for passage of Proposition 3 in Tuesday's election, said the controversy was a political attack by Texas Gov. Bill Clements and Republican farm officials.

"Clearly, what we have here is yet another attempt by the Republicans — both in Washington and Texas — to create political hay," said Hightower.

Clements called for Hightower's impeachment after reports by The Dallas Morning News that Hightower and his top deputy, Mike Moeller, spent approximately $7,000 on expensive meals and hotel bills and charged it to the Texas-Federal Inspection Service, which is supported by fees paid by growers.

A subsequent report said the son-in-law of the state's top labor leader, a Hightower supporter, received a $10,000 contract last year from the program to produce a study of questionable value.

And Oliver revealed that Hightower has the use of a 1988 Chevrolet Blazer through the program.

The state auditor's office, at the request of the U.S. Department of Agriculture, is looking into the program's finances and is expected to release its report soon.

Oliver defended the expenses, saying they were related to the Agriculture Department's administrative duties and were allowed under the agreement between the state and federal officials.

"These — and all other charges on TFIS (Texas-Federal Inspection Service) credit cards — are legitimate expenses which fall well within the guidelines of the TFIS cooperative," Oliver said.

"None of the charges were for personal entertainment," he said, adding that all the expenditures were approved by the USDA supervisor in Texas.

Oliver said that as part of the program agreement, Hightower has the use of a vehicle. He said that was the standard agreement before Hightower became agriculture commissioner.

Federal officials were satisfied with the 12-page, $10,000 report by Will Rogers, son-in-law of Texas AFL-CIO President Joe Gunn, Oliver said.

Tractor-trailer wreck

A Midland man suffered serious injuries late Thursday when this car rammed a tractor-trailer rig from behind, the Department of Public Safety said. John Edward Bradley, 25, was driving the car and suffered internal injuries. Early today he was being treated in the critical care unit of Midland Memorial Hospital, a spokeswoman said. He was injured about 9 p.m. near the intersection of County Road 1290 and U.S. Highway 80, the DPS said. The driver of the Peterbilt was not injured.

Task force files three more cases

By PATRICK CRIMMINS
Staff Writer

The Permian Basin Drug Task Force filed more than three narcotics cases a day during October, not including a flurry of cases in Odessa including Thursday's arrest of an alleged major heroin dealer.

"We have filed right at 100 cases in the Permian Basin in October," said Tom Finley, task force commander. "Those are cases that can go to a grand jury, all good cases.'

Odessa has been the most recent target of task force activity, but warrants were also issued Thursday in Howard and Ward counties, Finley said.

"We got a tip yesterday about a lady in Odessa who was smuggling in and dealing lots of heroin," said Tom Finley, commander of the task force. "We executed a search warrant about 6 p.m., and got over two ounces of heroin packaged for sale, nearly an ounce of cocaine, and $1,500 cash."

Elba Marquez, 1006 Dwayne St., was charged today with aggravated possession of heroin and possession of cocaine with intent to distribute. She was being held today at the Ector County Jail in lieu of bonds totaling $100,000, according to jail records.

The arrest was made without incident, according to Finley.

"The reason we are so busy and so successful in Odessa is because we just get tremendous cooperation from the sheriff's office there, and the district attorney's office," he said.

Book chain to host 'Book Lover's Day'

From Staff Reports

Waldenbooks at Midland Park Mall and at Odessa's Permian Mall are sponsoring a "Book Lover's Day" Saturday.

This event is designed for the public to meet area authors. The authors will discuss a variety of topics and anxwer questions from 12 to 2 p.m. in Odessa and from 3 to 5 p.m. in Midland.

The authors scheduled to participate are Elmer Kelton, Stan Williams, Wayne Barton, Kim Gooden and Patrick Dearen. Books will be sold for autographing, and refreshments will be served.

Timing is important part of life to pilots, frogs

It's in the timing. Maybe not all — but mostly.

World War II's ace of aces, Erich Hartmann of Germany's Luftwaffe, bore that out in his 352 kills — victories — in 825 aerial combats over the Eastern Front in his legendary Messerschmitt 109 fighter.

Todd

Timing. Some folks figure their timing on Earth is a bit off by years — many years. Better to have been born in an earlier time — a time when things were different: outhouses instead of indoor plumbing, horses to saddle up rather than a car to crank up, ink and pen to write with instead of a word processor over which to ruminate, days of traveling on trails instead of flights by air, days of news by mail and town crier instead of "instant" news over radio and television, days of moments to spare instead of moments of immediacy.

Those old-fashioned things can still be had, but out of context with the time.

Time — the here and the now — ought to be prized, as West Texas federal judge Lucius D. Bunton, is acutely aware:

"Time wasted is time lost. And we don't have very much of it that God gives us. And we ought to take advantage of it." — LDB

Certainly, there is nothing new, nothing novel, about the absolutely crucial role of timing.

Maybe it is all.

After all preparations have been made, goals defined and strategies laid out, what is left but the timing?

Even in wildcatting, where, as one might expect, drilling location is paramount, timing, too, is vital: when to pull out, how not to be too hasty in fishing and possibly ruining a well, how to weigh probabilities of a strike without having to scurry to beat the lease deadline.

Timing. For sports fans and players, there is the "sweet spot": that center of mass of a bat, club or racquet that, when instrument timely meets object, a power hit is scored. It is uplifting.

Timing. It is crucial to photographer, hunter, sports car racer, pylon flier, gymnast.

It is vital, not just in landing an airplane or piloting a ship but in driving in traffic in downtown Midland and uptown Stanton and Rankin.

In their high-flight mating and spectacular plummet toward earth, eagles rely on timing. They bank their lives and the lives of their species on it.

Timing is all important at home, school, work, play, study: when to admonish, when to praise, when to be quiet, when to speak, when to do, when, when, when.

Out on the pond, timing is of some importance to the bullfrog who would escape the fangs of the gig.

The archerfish is a master at "shooting" his airborne prey with a bullet of water. Swallows depend on speed and timing for food in flight.

Timing.

It is no commodity. Rather, it is a quality — a higher art form understood by artist, poet, and musician who delve into the valleys and high into the mountains.

The superb aviator, the quiet and unassuming Erich Hartmann, was unlike many notorious but honored fighter pilots, particularly the aces. He wasn't flamboyant. Hartmann set aside World War I's "thrust-and-parry" tactics of dogfighting, say aviation researchers, and developed his close-up surprise strike.

His timing, which served him well beyond the war, took him right up to that life-death point in pursuit of the enemy. The flying captain bore in close, at point-blank range, fired and timely "broke away" before both airplanes — the pursued and the pursuer — would have collided in flight and in flames.

Hartmann's timing in the aerial battlefield was remarkably uncanny, almost eerie, and effective.

Timing. It is something one just knows when to act or doesn't know or knows but doesn't.

It is some sort of gift, some discernment, Ace.

Lawmaker proposes $60 million plan for water in colonias

WASHINGTON (AP) — Rep. Kika de la Garza is asking Congress to authorize a plan to provide $60 million for water and sewage systems in border colonias where residents face significant health threats because of unsanitary conditions.

De la Garza, the chairman of the House Agriculture Committee, has proposed setting aside $30 million for grants and $30 million for loans to help colonias — unincorporated communities along the Southwest border — build water and sewage systems and to connect individual homes.

His plan is part of comprehensive rural development bill sponsored by Rep. Glenn English, D-Okla.

Under de la Garza's proposal, grants and loans could be made to rural water supply corporations and public entities to build water or waste disposal facilities in communities whose residents face significant health risks from the lack of running water or sewage connections.

To qualify, communities would have to have a per capita income of less than 70 percent of the national average and an unemployment rate of at least 125 percent of the national average.

Individuals in those communities would also be eligible for grants and loans to finance connections.

Although not all the money would be spent in de la Garza's border district in the Rio Grande Valley, he said it would be enough to "take care of every last one that is hanging fire now."

"This is the amount that we felt we could reasonably move here," the Mission Democrat said of the plan's chances of being approved by Congress.

After authorizing the grants and loans, Congress would still have to agree to fund the program.

If approved, the plan would supplement a host of recent efforts to help colonias residents.

Agriculture Secretary Clayton Yeutter announced in August that the Farmers Home Administration was making $5.5 million available for funding water projects in colonias. Legislation is also awaiting the president's signature that would allow the governor of Texas to establish a $15 million revolving loan fund for colonias improvements.

In a statewide referendum Tuesday, voters in Texas will decide whether to approve a constitutional amendment allowing for the sale of $100 million in bonds, which would be used to fund the construction of water and sewer systems in Texas colonias.

"The task of providing adequate housing, clean water and effective sewage collection and treatment systems in Texas is a daunting one," de la Garza told the House recently. "The elimination of the health problems in the colonias will require a concerted effort on behalf of federal, state and local governments."

In an interview Thursday, de la Garza said lawmakers keep "adding to the menu of options that they (colonias) would have. The main thing is to stop the proliferation of the colonia; that the developer be forced to provide water, sewers, electricity, power and gas. Once you force the developer to do this, from there you correct the existing deficiencies, and hopefully you're on a positive track after that."

STATE in brief

Voters expected to reject raise

AUSTIN (AP) — A proposed constitutional amendment that would raise Texas lawmakers' annual salary to about $23,000 will be doing well to get 40 percent of the vote on election day, said House Speaker Gib Lewis.

"I think it's dead," Lewis said after a Thursday speech to the Texas Association of Taxpayers.

Proposition 1 on Tuesday's ballot, which would raise lawmakers' annual pay from $7,200 by linking it to the governor's salary, didn't receive enough backing from the news media to pass muster with voters, Lewis argued.

"I'm not blaming the media. I'm just saying it did not receive the support from the media that it would have taken to pass a pay raise," he said.

Nineteen House members have indicated they will leave the Legislature, a higher-than-usual number, Lewis said.

"If you want to know why we're losing good people, I'll tell you why. We just can't afford to keep them in state government," he said.

One consumer group, Public Citizen of Texas, has advocated tying a pay raise to ethics reform, after news reports detailed large lobbyist expenditures on lawmakers and legislators' use of contributions for personal expenses.

"I'll assure you, there's no one being overpaid. There's no one that has received any fringe benefits that would compensate for the time that they take away from their jobs and from their families and from their businesses," Lewis said.

Woman receives stay

ATHENS (AP) — The first woman scheduled to be put to death in Texas since 1963 received a stay of execution one week before she was to receive a lethal injection.

Betty Beets, who was convicted of killing her fifth husband, Jimmy Don Beets, was granted the stay Wednesday by state District Judge Jack Holland, who upheld the execution date in August.

Mrs. Beets' attorney, Eden Harrington, claimed during a hearing last month that a deal had been struck with the district attorney and two witnesses who testified against Mrs. Beets in her 1985 trial.

The district attorney has 15 days to respond to the stay and Holland will have 20 days after that to issue a final ruling.

A jury convicted Mrs. Beets four years ago of capital murder and she was sentenced to die for the Aug. 5, 1983 slaying of her husband, a Dallas Fire Department captain. She also was indicted but was never tried for the slaying of her fourth husband, Doyle Wayne Barker.

The bodies of the men were found in June 1985, buried in the yard of Mrs. Beets' mobile home at Cedar Creek Lake, west of Athens. Both men had been shot in the back of the head with a .38-caliber pistol.

Prison guard testifies

HUNTSVILLE (AP) — A Texas Department of Corrections guard has testified that a prison inmate threatened to kill him by spitting in his face and giving him AIDS.

Inmate Curtis Weeks, 28, is being tried on a charge of attempted murder in an incident in which he allegedly spit in the face of Ron Alford, 25, a guard at the Diagnostic Unit.

The incident occurred June 7, 1988, when guards were transporting Weeks from the Coffield Unit in Anderson County to the Ramsey III Unit, where inmates with AIDS are treated.

District Judge Allen Stilley Thursday granted Weeks permission to assist defense lawyer John Wright in the cross-examination of witnesses.

Both Wright and the judge opposed the move, warning the defendant that he might say something that would allow the prosecution to introduce additional evidence against him.

The ruling from Stilley allowing Weeks to do some of the cross-examination led to a confrontation between Alford and the defendant.

"Your intention was to kill me," said Alford "You told everybody you had AIDS and you were going to take out a number of people."

Workers recover body

PASADENA (AP) — Rescue workers found another body in the rubble of the Phillips Petroleum Co. plastics plant, bringing the confirmed death toll to 19.

Searchers, including high-rise experts and rappellers called in this week, continued looking today for four workers missing and presumed dead since the Oct. 23 explosion.

Meanwhile, the refinery's K-Resin plant is expected to start operations today, Phillips spokesman Greg Derrick said.

Gabriel Rivera of Kingwood holds the hand of his one-month-old baby, Samantha Venable, at St. Mary's Hospital in Grand Junction, Colo., shortly after doctors said she would live through her near fatal accident.

Doctor says month-old baby will survive near-drowning

GRAND JUNCTION, Colo. (AP) — A month-old baby from Texas who was immersed nearly an hour in an icy mountain river in a car accident that killed her mother and great-grandparents will survive, a doctor said Thursday.

"We feel she no longer is in any threat of dying," said Dr. Tom Harris, a neonatologist at St. Mary's Hospital.

Samantha Venable remained on a respirator but is being weaned gradually from oxygen and other life-support systems, said Debbie Scroggins, head nurse in the intensive care nursery.

"She's better. You can communicate with her," Scroggins said. "If you rub her back, she opens her eyes. She is starting to respond to physical stimuli."

Harris said there is no way to tell what long-term brain damage the baby might have suffered, but he said brain-wave scans show a high level of activity.

"We wouldn't be seeing that nor would she be having these seizures if there were no brain activity," Harris said. "This is a definition of what the human body can withstand."

The cold water of the Roaring Fork River helped Samantha's survival considerably, Harris said.

"It brings the body temperature down to extremely low levels, and body functions dependent on oxygen slow down and even turn off," he said. "Since the need for oxygen is greatly reduced, tissues don't die.

"This is a potentially good sign for her brain tissue, although we won't know, neurologically, for quite some time," Harris said. "However, previous cases have show near-complete recovery of those functions after immersion in extremely cold water."

The baby's 19-year-old father, Gabriel Rivera III of Kingwood, Texas, and his mother, Yolanda Rivera, appeared relieved and smiled throughout a news conference Thursday afternoon.

"She's doing a lot better," Rivera said of his nine-pound daughter. "She's moving around and seems to be reacting."

Rivera was preparing to fly to Dallas Friday to attend the funeral Saturday of his fiancee, Kay Venable, 19, the baby's mother, who died Sunday in the crash on Independence Pass east of Aspen.

Also killed were Kay's grandparents, Omard Harrison, 64, and his wife, Marjorie, 61, of Houston. Two Aspen teen-agers with whom the Texas family had hitched a ride after their van slid into a snowbank farther up the pass escaped with minor injuries, climbed a 60-foot cliff and reached help.

"I'm just thankful she's alive," Mrs. Rivera said. "Every time she moves she's a joy to us. When we kiss her or she hears Gabriel's voice, she'll react to it. She'll move or stretch, and she's showing signs of being a baby, not just laying there."

Doctors at Aspen Valley Hospital worked feverishly for four hours Sunday to revive the infant, who was blue in color, stiff and not breathing when she arrived in the emergency room.

"It certainly was surprising she was still alive," Harris said. "A great deal of credit goes to Dr. Bill Mitchell in Aspen, because once we got her, the problems we faced weren't any different than a badly asphyxiated newborn.

"The fact she was submerged so long — that's where the miracle lies," Harris said.

Ex-Lamar executive pleads guilty

AUSTIN (AP) — Federal prosecutors say Merrick Leler, a senior vice president at Lamar Savings during the thrift's free-wheeling days in 1985, has pleaded guilty to conspiring to defraud S&L regulators and will cooperate in a continuing investigation.

Leler's plea was part of an agreement with federal prosecutors who are looking into illegal actions at the defunct S&L, which has been accused of making rapid-fire bogus loan transactions to shore up its financial statement.

In addition, the 37-year-old former vice president for commercial lending has agreed to testify against other former Lamar executives.

In return for Leler's cooperation and guilty plea, prosecutors agreed not to bring other bank fraud-related charges against him.

In a separate case Wednesday, George C. Walker, the former president of First National Bank of Luling, pleaded guilty to defrauding his board of directors by submitting a false monthly report on overdrafts in the bank's customer accounts.

Both Leler and Walker face as much as five years in prison and fines of up to $250,000.

After his appearance before U.S. District Judge James Nowlin on Wednesday, Leler said he didn't realize he was committing a crime when he arranged in 1985 for Lamar to make a sham loan of $11.6 million to Sidney Terry.

The loan was used by Terry to buy an apartment complex in Houston from Lamar, a deal that allowed the S&L to remove the project from its list of foreclosed assets.

Leler said he lacked sufficient training and experience in the savings industry to realize that Lamar's loan transactions were illegal.

"There are a lot of businesses where you dress up the financial statement prior to the end of a reporting period. That is common practice in other industries. In the regulated savings industry, I now realize it's an illegal practice," he said.

Cisneros takes on education problems

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — In his role on an education finance task force, former Mayor Henry Cisneros says he will advocate looking for new state money to solve the Texas school funding dilemma.

Cisneros, appointed to the Governor's Task Force on School Finance, expressed the Democratic Party view that more money will be needed to equalize school funding and reform the education system.

All forms of revenue, including a proposed state lottery, must be studied, he said Wednesday.

The former mayor also has been appointed to the state Educational Economic Policy Committee and was recently elected chairman of the National Civic League, a government reform group.

A special legislative session this spring will deal with the state's school finance system, which the Texas Supreme Court ruled unconstitutional.

An "underutilized and hostile underclass" will emerge if Texas does not address education for minorities, Cisneros said.

He said he supports making local school principals, parents and teachers accountable for the performance of students, a theme widely endorsed by Republican Party candidates for statewide office.

"Yes, there needs to be accountability — that's very key," Cisneros said. "And as much as possible, it needs to be quantifiable, on the basis of numbers, performance, goals and evaluations. But a lot of that accountability is best handled right down at the school level."

Cisneros, who left office in June, said he is comfortable balancing public service with business life and said he has no plans to seek elected office again any time soon.

But he declined to rule out that possibility for the future.

"But I will tell you this: I feel very free to address the deep-seated long-term problems that confront our state and our country without the need to keep an eye on the next election," Cisneros said.

He now runs Cisneros Asset Management Co.

Pro-abortion groups plan Capitol rally

AUSTIN (AP) — Although Gov. Bill Clements says the abortion issue won't be included in any special legislative session he calls during the rest of his term, pro-abortion activists say they're taking no chances.

A coalition of 20 pro-choice groups Thursday announced a Nov. 12 rally at the state Capitol designed to show that Texans who support abortion rights are "no longer a silent majority."

Kathryn Grant, executive director of the newly formed Texans for Choice, said they hope the rally will be the largest gathering of pro-choice supporters ever.

The gathering "will draw people from all walks of life from all over the state to send a resounding message to our lawmakers: we are the majority, we are pro-choice and we are united in our belief that politicians should not interfere in such personal decisions as the right to choose abortion," she said.

The rally is a response to the U.S. Supreme Court ruling earlier this year that gave states broader powers to regulate and restrict abortions.

Ms. Grant said legislators and abortion opponents need to know where the rest of society stands on the issue.

"By who we are and who we represent, pro-choice citizens no longer need fear standing up and being counted," she said. "Legislators need no longer fear intimidation from the extreme and vocal minority whose goal is to make abortion and contraception illegal."

Clements, who describes himself as opposed to abortion in most cases, disappointed anti-abortion activists last month by saying he would refuse to include abortion on the agenda of a special legislative session Nov. 14 or any other session he calls before leaving office in 1991.

Ms. Grant said that despite Clements' decision, her group wants to get their message out before next year's elections. "We now know we must elect pro-choice public officials to protect this right," she said.

Ms. Grant said speakers at the Nov. 12 rally should include actresses Morgan Fairchild, Cybill Shepherd and Anne Archer, and Faye Wattleton, executive director of the Planned Parenthood Federation of America.

Senate approves easing aid restrictions on lost crops

WASHINGTON (AP) — Farmers who planted crops to replace those damaged or destroyed by drought this year would get increased federal disaster aid under legislation approved by the Senate.

The bill represents a boon to farmers who say Agriculture Department restrictions are too stringent and fail to take into account the expense involved in producing replacement crops this year.

It goes to the House after winning Senate approval on a voice vote Wednesday.

The Agriculture Department imposed the restrictions with an eye to preventing farmers from collecting disaster payments for crop damage and then keeping the entire amount while producing a new crop on the same acreage in the same growing season.

The idea is that the disaster payments are designed to offset losses and should not go to farmers whose losses were reduced or even erased through production of a second crop.

But the Senate has been more sympathetic to growers, who say the department's restrictions were unrealistically tight-fisted.

"This should more accurately reflect the expenses and income of the farmer," Sen. Lloyd Bentsen, D-Texas, said in a statement.

"In addition, it will protect the many farmers who are making little if any profit on that second crop from losing the disaster payments which they were expecting on the first crop."

The bill earlier was one of many provisions for special interests included in a major deficit-reduction measure. But it became a casualty when lawmakers removed all such features from the deficit reduction plan.

The Agriculture Department has been planning to deduct 75 percent of the gross value of any replacement crop from such a farmer's disaster aid check.

The bill would modify the system considerably.

In figuring the value of the replacement crop, the department would first deduct 50 percent of the county average yield for the second crop.

The initial plan would require even farmers who had replanted only a few acres to wait until harvesting their second crop before obtaining disaster benefits for damage to the first crop.

That would be canceled under the legislation.

Meanwhile, the Senate also approved on a voice vote and sent to the House a bill that would allow the Agriculture Department to allow oat producers to plant their entire base acreage and still remain in the farm program.

The department requires them as a condition of being in the program to refrain from planting on a portion of the historical acreage base they use for oats.

The provision was contained in a bill with features designed to aid an array of farm interests.

The measure also would earmark $14 million this fiscal year, $9.3 million next year and $4.6 million the year after to boost U.S. beef exports. The payments would be in cash or commodities under the Export Enhancement Program, a major sources of subsidies to stimulate overseas shipments over the last five years.

The measure also contained technical changes in programs operated by the department for egg producers, peanut growers and research into new commercial products derived from plant materials.

Evergreen plants suffer from lack of moisture

With winter beginning to creep up on us, completing the items on a garden check list will help winterize your garden and plants.

Kiker

- Evergreen plants frequently suffer from lack of moisture during winter dry periods that occur in Texas. Also adequate soil moisture provides the best protection you can give your plants against winter cold injury.
- Don't get in a hurry to prune woody plants. Late December through February is usually the best time to prune them.
- Reduce or stop completely the fertilization of indoor plants from late October to mid-March. An exception would be plants in an atrium or a well-lighted window.
- Drain power sprayers to prevent freeze damage to pump and nozzle.
- November through February is a good time to plant trees and shrubs.
- Clean, repair and oil garden tools and equipment. A coat of linseed oil on wooden handles will help preserve the wood.
- Drain the gasoline from power tools and run the engine until fuel in the carburetor is used.
- Drain and store garden hoses and watering equipment in a readily accessible location. The lawn and plants need watering during the winter.

Off-farm earnings set record, report says

WASHINGTON (AP) — Jobs in town for years have been vital for thousands of farm families whose paychecks often exceed what they earn from the land.

The Agriculture Department says off-farm earnings in 1988 were a record $51.7 billion, up from the previous high of $46.8 billion in 1987. Total U.S. net cash income from farming last year was also a record — $59.9 billion, up from $57.7 billion in 1987.

Last year's off-farm income, which includes that of all family members as well as the farm operator, exceeded net cash income from farming in all years prior to 1986, according to department analysts.

In some years, most recently 1984, off-farm earnings were more than net farm cash income, which is the difference between annual cash expenses and gross cash income from farming operations.

State-by-state income, off-farm earnings and other data were reported by USDA this week in a new 240-page report, part of an annual financial series about the agricultural sector.

Robert P. Williams of the department's Economic Research Service said Wednesday no attempt was made to rank the states according to off-farm income. But he did compile at the request of The Associated Press the top 10 off-farm earners in 1988.

Farm income surpassed off-farm income last year in only three states of the top 10 — California, Illinois and Iowa. Off-farm earnings exceeded farm income in the remaining seven: Texas, Ohio, Missouri, Indiana, Kentucky, Tennessee and Oklahoma.

Texas, which leads the nation in the number of farms — an estimated 188,000 last year — also led in 1988 off-farm earnings with more than $5 billion. That was well above the state's net cash farm income last year of less than $3.9 billion.

Others in the top 10 in 1988 off-farm income, in order, included:

- California, $2.66 billion off the farm and a net cash farm income of $6.54 billion; the state was reported to have an estimated 84,000 farms.
- Ohio, $2.36 billion in off-farm income and a net cash farm income of $1.44 billion; an estimated 85,000 farms.
- Missouri, $2.22 billion in off-farm income and $1.48 billion net cash farm income; an estimated 110,000 farms.
- Indiana, $2.12 billion in off-farm income and $1.48 billion net cash farm income; an estimated 74,000 farms.
- Kentucky, $2.1 billion in off-farm income and $1.09 billion net cash farm income; an estimated 97,000 farms.
- Tennessee, $2 billion in off-farm income and $818.1 million net cash farm income; an estimated 91,000 farms.
- Illinois, $1.95 billion in off-farm income and $2.63 billion net cash farm income; an estimated 88,000 farms.
- Oklahoma, $1.84 billion in off-farm income and $1.23 billion net cash farm income; an estimated 70,000 farms.
- Iowa, $1.81 billion in off-farm income and $3.44 billion net cash farm income; an estimated 107,000 farms.

WASHINGTON (AP) — A mechanical digester is being developed to safely dispose of waste water after farm sprayers are flushed to rid them of pesticides, says the Agriculture Department.

The department's Agricultural Research Service said Wednesday that the portable treatment uses ozone gas and soil microorganisms to break down unused pesticides before disposal.

Cathleen J. Somich, a chemist at the agency's Beltsville, Md., research facility, said the goal is to turn unused pesticides into innocuous carbon dioxide instead of converting them into other toxic compounds that are disposed of by burning.

"We don't want to take the risk of substituting air pollution for water pollution," she said in an agency report.

Ciba-Geigy Corp. of Greensboro, N.C., has entered into a cooperative agreement with the agency to continue with the development of the procedure and the device to see if it can handle larger volumes of pesticide, officials said.

The treatment was originated at Beltsville. Somich and agency colleagues a year ago tested the original apparatus with seed money from Ciba-Geigy, using it on 150 gallons of "typical pesticide soup" consisting of detergent and water used to clean corn herbicides from spray tanks.

Within three days, the treatment destroyed between 46 percent and 96 percent of the chemicals used in the sprayer by subjecting them to a digestion process aided by the ozone gas.

Farmers use recycled newspaper as beds for cows

ADDISON, Vt. (AP) — Dick and Beth Pratt's dairy cows always go to bed with the morning newspaper: They sleep on it.

The Pratt farm, tucked along the shores of Lake Champlain about 30 miles south of Burlington, is one of at least a dozen in the state where dairy cows are snoozing on recycled, shredded newspapers.

The papers are replacing typical bedding materials like sawdust, straw, hay, crushed corn stalks and sand.

"It's a spectacular market for rural recycling," said Jerry Powell, editor of Resource Recycling magazine.

Shredded newspapers also are comforting cows in Illinois, Iowa, Michigan, Minnesota, New York, Ohio, Pennsylvania and Wisconsin.

Experts say the trend could be a boon to recyclers, who are stuck with excess newspapers, and farmers, who pay high prices for traditional bedding materials.

"It's been an obvious way to combine two problems," said Will Gehr, a waste management specialist with the Vermont Department of Environmental Conservation. "Old newspaper is typically the highest amount of materials collected at recycling centers."

Vermont recently started a campaign to match dairy farmers with recycled newspapers. Gehr said the potential demand by Vermont's 2,400 farmers is almost three times greater than the number of newspapers distributed in the state.

Farmers say a cow will use between 2 and 5 pounds of bedding daily. A typical newspaper weighs about a pound.

The Pratts started with recycled newspapers five years ago at the suggestion of an agricultural extension agent.

"It's just fantastic," Beth Pratt said. "It's far more absorbent than anything we've ever used. It keeps the animals cleaner and it makes them feel good."

Dairy farmers now use just a fraction of the newspapers recycled in the United States. Powell said of the 4.54 million tons collected in 1988, only 100,000 tons were used by dairy farmers.

But as other bedding prices continue to rise, farmers are eyeing newspapers as a cheap substitute.

In Vermont, recycled newspapers are free; sawdust and straw sell for between $60 and $100 a ton. That's $2,000 a year in savings for the Pratts.

The newspapers also may have health benefits for the cows.

Several studies say the highly-absorbing newspapers lower the rate of mastitis among dairy cows, said Robert Appleman, a dairy animal scientist with the University of Minnesota. Mastitis is a potentially-fatal bacterial infection of the cow's udders.

Welder bends horsehoes into art

PLAINVIEW (AP) — After M.O. Stapleton retired last year from his job as a welder and steel building contractor, he says he had to find something to do with his hands other than lift a coffee cup.

He had a porch in back of his house for work space and a welder in a storage shed. With a little imagination, he went to work.

"About March of this year I got to tinkering around with my welder and I started making things out of horseshoes," said Stapleton, 75. "I made statues of cowboys doing various chores like riding a bull, roping a calf and using an anvil."

The horseshoes, heated and bent to their proper shape, are used for the bodies and arms of the cowboys. Each cowboy has a hat. The blackened figures sit on a picnic table on his back porch.

"I started cutting pictures out of a Western calendar and fitting them in the horseshoes," Stapleton said. "I thought it would be nice to have something to represent our pheasant hunting here."

Stapleton uses pictures of pheasants taken in open fields with a simple 35mm camera. "I just frame the pictures with horseshoes."

The frames have a silver chain welded to the horseshoe to allow for hanging.

"I imagine I'll give them away at Christmas," he said. "My son brought me a bucket full of horseshoes and I've picked up discarded horseshoes at places where horses are shod."

Stapleton is no stranger to horses and horseshoes, having moved from Hunt County to Jones County in a 5-wagon train pulled by the stout animals during the early part of this century. In 1925, he moved to Petersburg and in 1945 he and his wife, Iris, moved to Plainview.

Stapleton said he's also made a pelican by welding the forks of a bicycle for its legs, a round-pointed shovel for the body, tail and neck and a combine sickle guard for the head and bill.

FAMILY MATTERS

Personal choice governs behavior

By JIM MAY, Ph.D.

May

DEAR FAMILY: I am a 24-year-old single mother with two children. Men and women tell me that I am very attractive. I have been divorced for almost six months and have started going out. I am a Christian woman and will not go to bed with the men that are dating me. Some men that I have dated insist that "everyone does it." I don't want to do it and so far I haven't. What I wanted to know is, is this the way it is now? I got married when I graduated from high school and it wasn't that way then. — DON'T KNOW

DEAR DON'T KNOW: In some men-women relationships sex does occur on the first date or soon thereafter, but the important issue is whether you believe that it is appropriate for you or not.

I believe a sexual relationship is one of God's gifts to us and must be treasured and nourished as such.

Continue to live your Christian values. In your heart, you know what you should and should not do.

DEAR FAMILY: I have been attending Adult Children of Alcoholics meetings on a weekly basis for almost a year now. At first, I really felt like I was getting a lot out of the meetings. I still get something out of the meetings but I feel like I have stopped growing. Is there something else that I could do to help me feel better about myself? STUCK

DEAR STUCK: Recovery is a process, not a single event, and it is time for you to take the next step in the process. Recovery is more that attending meetings — we must actively work the 12 steps.

In the ACOA group, there are several people who have worked the 12 steps — the cornerstone of recovery — at least once. Ask one of them to be your sponsor and help you work your 12 steps.

The 12-step journey can be the most important trip of your life. Good luck!

DEAR FAMILY: My son is very close to being tossed out of his day care for biting. He just turned 20 months and has always been very outgoing and friendly. I think that he learned to bite at the day care, but they say that he is the one who bites the other children. They have told me that I must stop him from biting or that he will have to go to another day care. I really do like the day care that he is in and don't want to change. How can I stop his biting? BITTEN

DEAR BITTEN: Biting is a form of communication; socially unacceptable, but nevertheless, communication. Biting is usually the result of a child's anger or frustration. Sometimes biting is a form of protection, but it sounds like your son is the aggressor.

Most experts agree that it is inappropriate for the parent to bite the child back. If the child is biting in anger, biting him back only adds to his anger. He needs to learn another way of communicating.

Tell the child in no uncertain terms that biting is unacceptable behavior. He should then be placed in the time-out chair for a short time. When it is time for him to get up, make him tell you why he is in the chair. Discuss this approach with the day care personnel. Tell them that this is what you are going to be doing and ask them to do the same thing.

You may want to investigate the circumstances of his biting. Does it seem to occur at about the same time of day (perhaps a nap is in order), with the same child (keep them separated) or during group activities (take him out of the group)? The idea is to help the child by removing him from the situation.

Biting is usually a temporary problem. As your son becomes more verbal, the biting should disappear. In the meantime, work with the day care personnel to consistently discipline him every time he bites someone, and remove him from obvious problem situations.

Self-help books different

Copley News Service

UNS Graphic

Feeling lonely? Out of touch with your fellow man? Despite all the technological marvels that modern civilization has to offer, do you still feel as if your soul is so riddled with longing and self-doubt that it resembles Swiss cheese?

If you're like most Americans, when you feel that way you go out and buy something. And now — just in time for the Christmas rush — there are two books on the market that should help you feel like a complete, integrated human being.

Both are follow-ups to massively popular self-help books. "Who Needs God," is the fifth book by Harold Kushner, who wrote "When Bad Things Happen to Good People."

"It Was on Fire When I Lay Down on It," by Robert Fulghum, is the sequel to "All I Really Need to Know I Learned in Kindergarten" and is already at the top of the best-seller lists.

Of the two, Fulghum's book is more user-friendly. It's not a tough book to read. The chapters last four or five pages. Each tells a story or two and ends with a wise and heartwarming tale.

In fact, if the adjective "heartwarming" didn't exist, then it would have to be invented to describe the good-all-over feeling Fulghum conveys when he sums up a tale.

THESE GLIMPSES of human foibles include stories about why people should dance, tales from three weddings, a Christmas pageant that goes haywire, the joy of tree-climbing, a Zen Buddhist with hemorrhoids and a Greek wise man who explains the meaning of life.

Fulghum packs plenty into this thin volume with a style so effortless that reading it is like selecting chocolates from a box of fine candies. And like those confections, one is never sure what surprise the center will hold, but you can be sure it will be gooey and sweet and just barely satisfying.

The fact that both Kushner and Fulghum are ministers unites these books with a common purpose: to deliver sermons.

However, Fulghum is a Unitarian, and his homilies are gentle, humanistic and all-inclusive. In a recent appearance on "Good Morning, America," he stated, "I don't want to be a guru. I don't want to tell people how to run their lives."

Although it's doubtful Kushner would like to be considered a guru — he is, after all, a Conservative rabbi — he surely intends to tell people how to run their lives.

You will notice the lack of a question mark at the end of the title, "Who Needs God." This is the first clue that Kushner isn't going to tolerate much difference of opinion.

According to his precepts, the fact that everybody needs God is not negotiable and the only path to happiness begins and ends with the Supreme Being.

Essentially, Kushner is pushing conservatism in the guise of a self-help book — a format he ridicules for offering simplistic answers, yet he adheres to the formula with a joyless intensity.

"Who Needs God" is aimed at baby boomers who are feeling disaffected, who have sampled religions like guests grazing at a buffet and who are now ripe for a dose of good old-time religion.

HE HAS a ready audience because the post-war generation is just reaching the arc in life where they have young children, feel disappointed by what they perceive as a lack of personal fulfillment and are returning to families, whether they be relatives, networks of friends or churches, for the comfort and services they provide.

Like an aggrieved father, Kushner welcomes back his prodigal children warmly but mixes in a dose of I-told-you-so-but-you-wouldn't-listen guilt.

If you already agree with Kushner's teachings, then this book is an affirmation of your beliefs. However, if you disagree, then reading "Who Needs God" is an alienating experience.

Although Kushner is ecumenical, embracing no particular religion over any other, he is essentially a fundamentalist. His tirades about secular humanism and the Big Bang Theory speak more of a political agenda than a sharing of religious experience.

Although he has harsh words for TV evangelists, Kushner isn't above using their manipulative techniques. First he points out how empty modern life is and how things are not as good as they used to be. When you're feeling vulnerable, then he provides an answer — his answer — which is a return to fundamental values.

That is not to say that Kushner doesn't provide anything of value to the casual reader. He offers the kind of common-sense wisdom regarding the need for personal fulfillment through community that is not dissimilar from Joseph Campbell's call to "find your own bliss."

HOWEVER, UNLIKE Campbell, Kushner is not afraid to define right or wrong, seeing morality as an inner gyroscope that is always true despite circumstance or culture.

Yet, despite the religious credentials of both ministers, it is not hard to guess that both of these men have political agendas and that they serve to balance each other in the self-help market.

One of the main reasons why many of us feel alienated from worship is because of the politicization that has occurred to American religious institutions. If you don't agree with your religion's political stands on abortion or Central America, then you feel disenfranchised in the very place you should feel included.

What these two authors do is offer a salve for those feelings, but from opposite ends of the political spectrum.

The danger is that these homilies are quick remedies — they treat the symptoms and not the injury.

You can't expect much more. Difficult questions aren't the forte of this genre. Easy answers are what you expect from a self-help book.

Most-asked questions answered

N.Y. Times News Service

NEW YORK — The weight of authority, in the case of The New York Public Library Desk Reference, is 4 pounds 8 ounces, and since its 836 pages are not likely to be adapted to portable pocket-size service, the consumer may well have to buy a desk to put it on.

"We estimate that it has a million facts in it," said Paul Fargis, the president of Stonesong Press, which developed and executed the new volume.

The facts the book contains are the answers to the most common questions put by the public to reference librarians and other researchers.

The New York Public Library alone responds to almost four million telephone calls a year from those who need quick fill-ins on what is the earth's diameter (7,920 miles), who invented the pop-up toaster (Charles Strite), what is the meaning of the acronym Cobol (common business-oriented language), what can you get from eating buttercups (digestive system injury), how many horses have won the Triple Crown (11) and the etiquette of what a bridesmaid should pay for (dress and accessories, transportation to and from town of wedding, gift to the couple and a contribution to the bridesmaids' gift to the bride).

Obviously a catchall of information, the volume is not to be confused with an almanac, Fargis said.

"From what I've seen of almanacs, most have no medical, scientific and homemaking material as we do," he said. "The range is much wider. You would have to own 50 reference books to get what's in this one book. And it's user-friendly; no four-point type."

The parties involved in producing the book reflect the diffuse overlap in present-day publishing.

Fargis, who described Stonesong's function as "book developer," ran into Richard Newman, the manager of publications at the library, at a social gathering several years ago and was asked if he had any thoughts about how to harness the library's virtually infinite resources to a publishing venture.

Fargis did and the book, created in cooperation with the library, has been published by Webster's New World, an imprint of Prentice Hall Reference, which is a division of Simon & Schuster, the company that is distributing it. Its retail price is $29.95.

The book is divided into 26 basic subjects with headings like Time and Dates, Weights and Measures, the Animal World, the Arts, Words (common crossword puzzle words, frequently used foreign words and phrases, the 86 acceptable two-letter Scrabble words, etc.), Personal Finances, Forms of Address, Etiquette, and Religions.

The questions put to librarians are bewilderingly diverse.

"I was a reference librarian some 30 years ago," said Richard De Gennaro, the director of the New York Public Library and a project sponsor. "We had every kind of question, some serious and some trivial, asked to settle barroom arguments. What is the gestation period of the elephant? Some were seasonal: the names of Santa Claus's reindeer or the names of the seven dwarfs.

"Our policy was that an answer must be found within three minutes or the question must go unanswered. When I worked up in Room 315, in 42d Street, we had 30 trays of cards and kept records of the most difficult answers to find. On the cards we had the answer and its source."

De Gennaro said that in addition to the calls from all over the world there was mail to be answered.

"When we asked people why they were calling us from San Francisco instead of asking the San Francisco libraries," he said, "they would say that they knew we would come up with the answers. We consider our research libraries as national and world-class institutions."

Fargis's pursuit of the all-embracing is being continued in the form of two other volumes planned with the New York Public Library:

- The New York Public Library Book on Where and How to Look It Up, which refers the reader to information sources including books, data banks, special collections and halls of fame, is contemplated for 1991 publication.
- The New York Public Library Encyclopedia of Chronologies, which is planned for next autumn, will include such subjects as surgery, arms and law and will detail their development.

"That is already a manuscript 16 inches high, laid out flat," Fargis said.

Researchers find proof of 'hard writing' in brain

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Scientists at the University of Southern California and the University of Illinois say they have confirmed the theory that the mind stores memories by "hard wiring" new connections between brain cells.

The findings were to be released today at a meeting of the Society for Neuroscience in Phoenix, the Los Angeles Times reported today.

Psychobiologists Richard F. Thompson of USC and William Greenough of Illinois worked jointly to prove that the brain circuitry — the network of links between cells — goes through actual physical changes when a task is learned.

The so-called "hard wiring" memory theory is used to explain why some learned activities, such as riding a bicycle, are never forgotten.

Thompson and Greenough based their findings on a study of 15 rabbits that were conditioned to behave in certain ways. Thompson rang a bell and blew a small puff of air into one eye of each rabbit, causing the animals to blink. Soon, the rabbits would blink every time the bell sounded, without the puff of air.

Thompson discovered through electrodes planted in the rabbits' brains that there was increased activity in a group of cells called Purkinje cells, located in the cerebellum.

Greenough then studied the rabbits and discovered a greater number of intercellular connections in the side of the cerebellum that had learned the blinking than in the side that had not.

In the 15 rabbits studied over a two-year period, "the differences were statistically reliable and clearly visible," Greenough said. "We really have isolated a case where, in brain cells that are clearly involved in the performance of a task, we have crystal-clear structural change that indicates a change in anatomical circuitry."

DEAR ABBY

Father-in-law's insults weigh on woman's nerves

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: My father-in-law is my problem. I have been 15 to 20 pounds overweight most of my life and am self-conscious about it. Whenever I am around my father-in-law, he comments on how much and what I eat, and calls me insulting names such as "Fats," "Hippo," etc.

At first I just let it pass, but after a while it got on my nerves, so I told him how much this hurt me and asked him to please stop. He said, "Well, you'll just have to get used to it."

My attitude toward my father-in-law is at the point now where I can no longer tolerate his insulting behavior, and I don't enjoy being in his company.

My husband is an only child and family ties are important to him. We have one child and are expecting another. I'd ask my husband to speak to his father about this, but I'm afraid my father-in-law would resent my coming between him and his son.

What's your advice, Abby? I honestly don't know how to handle this. — HAD ENOUGH

DEAR HAD ENOUGH: Obviously, you are either unable or unwilling to stand up for yourself, so I suggest you deliver the following message to your husband:

"I have asked your father to please stop his insulting comments about my weight, and he told me that I would just have to get used to it. Well, I'm not willing to 'get used to it,' so I am asking you to please tell your father how I feel because I have had enough, and no longer enjoy being in his company."

I hope your husband is man enough to speak to his father in your defense.

DEAR ABBY: I need to know how much I'm worth. My husband and I differ about the value of a housewife/mother. We have two teen-agers (our son is 17 and our daughter is 15).

I do all the marketing, cooking, cleaning, laundry, yard work and chauffeuring our daughter. (Our son has had his own car for nearly a year.)

My husband has a great job that nets him $70,000 a year, but he wants me to go back to working a full-time job outside the home.

When I did work outside the home, I was totally stressed out trying to hold down an office job — then coming home to all the domestic chores. I was an emotional wreck.

My husband works hard all day, then he comes home to do absolutely nothing. He fixes himself a drink, sits in an easy chair and reads the paper while I prepare dinner. Don't suggest that he help with the housework — he flatly refuses.

I have an article from 1972 stating that the dollar-and-cents value of a homemaker was approximately $17,351.88 per year.

What am I worth today? — M.G. IN SEATTLE

DEAR M.G.: Since the cost of living has tripled since 1972, tell your husband you're worth approximately $52,000 a year.

(P.S. If you're a virtuous woman, the good book says, your price is above rubies.)

DEAR ABBY: This is for "Lucky Linda," who kept putting her purse on top of her car, then forgetfully driving off, losing her purse.

I learned long ago to place my purse, the bag of groceries or anything else I had in my hands on the hood of the car, right in front of the windshield. It's just about as handy as the roof, and you will definitely not drive off with them still there. — ELOISE JOPPA, STEPHENS CITY, VA.

DEAR ABBY: All the "how-to" sex books in the world could not have explained a woman's emotional needs better than the letter from "Doing All Right," who wrote: "A woman needs to hear that she is needed, wanted and loved. (Every good lover is aware of this.)"

Abby, you reaffirmed it with your comment: "Words are a powerful aphrodisiac."

Most men claim they do not understand women. If they only knew that words can make or break a relationship, they would be well on their way to having their needs fulfilled.

It's interesting to note that "Doing All Right" is a man. Abby, you should run that letter at least twice a year. — IMPRESSED IN OTTAWA, CANADA

DEAR IMPRESSED: That train runs both ways. Men also need to hear that they are needed, wanted and loved, which is something all artful female lovers know.

DEAR ABBY: We are members of Resolve Inc., 5 Water St., Dept. A, Arlington, Mass. 02174, a group that offers accurate information and support to infertile couples. When writing, please enclose a long, stamped, self-addressed envelope.

Jan Short, also a member, listed the 10 worst things to say to an infertile couple. Please print this list. The public needs to be educated. — ELLIE AND JACK

DEAR ELLIE AND JACK: The list is well worth printing.

DON'T SAY:

1. "Relax." Tops in the blame-the-victim category.
2. "No children? Then you must have a big career." What about aging baby boomers with no big careers or children?
3. "I know two women who adopted and then got pregnant." The rate at which adoptive parents spontaneously conceive is about 5 percent, the same as for infertile couples who have not adopted.
4. "You're not taking drugs, are you?" Chances are she is and, of course, she's concerned about multiple births.
5. "Maybe you've created it." Another tacky version of blame-the-victim.
6. "Well, you must be having fun trying." Not with regimented sex dominated by thermometers, charts, medical tests and the clock.
7. "You want kids? Take mine." You don't really mean this, and we don't want your kids anyway.
8. "It's better not to bring a baby into this world anyway." Age-old advice that has been considered and discarded for life affirmation.
9. "I have the opposite problem. He looks at me and I'm pregnant." You do not have a problem and you know it.
10. "Your work is your contribution to society." We feel robbed when we hear this and resigned to childlessness.

Latchkey children need help in coping with hours spent alone

Associated Press

According to an article in Redbook, 2.1 million "latchkey" children between the ages of 5 and 13 must take care of themselves after school while their parents are still at work.

Being a latchkey kid doesn't have to be a negative experience. Studies show that children who are well-prepared to stay home alone and whose parents monitor their activities, even if by phone, fare just as well as children who are left in the care of another adult.

What counts most, the studies indicate, is the psychological connection between parent and child. Parents can foster that all-important connection with these suggestions:

■ Establish clear rules and routines, including rules about homework and chores, whether friends are allowed inside the house, and time spent on the phone or watching television.

■ Be realistic when setting time limits. Children feel more secure if they know parents will enforce the rules, but rules should be within reason. Parents should also realize that kids occasionally break rules — and many kids can't resist snooping in their personal belongings, so keep private things locked up.

■ Help your child to feel "connected" to you. Make arrangements for your child to visit you at work so she can visualize where you are when you're not at home. The telephone is a vital link for working parents and children. Children also should be taught to handle incoming calls and not reveal that they are alone.

■ Identify helpful neighbors. Find suitable backup people to whom your child can turn in an emergency. Think about who in the neighborhood is usually home in the afternoon. Make sure your child knows he is welcome to call on the backup people for help.

■ Review safety rules, but not in a way that will scare the child. "Role-play" emergency situations by acting out responses.

■ Teach your child to be wary of strangers. A stranger who approaches a child is always to be regarded with suspicion, but keep warnings in perspective. There are times when a child may need help. She should be encouraged to choose the right stranger to approach — a person in uniform, a shopkeeper, a mom with kids.

■ Teach fire safety. You should have at least one smoke detector on each floor of the house. Make sure your child knows what they sound like. Have monthly fire drills. Children should know two evacuation routes from each room and apartment house children should be instructed to use the stairs — never the elevator — in case of fire.

■ Keep your promises. Always be home when you say you will. If you must be late, make every effort to telephone about your change in schedule. When a child is waiting for the sound of his mother's key in the door, Ann Banks wrote in Redbook, even 15 minutes can seem like an eternity.

Lee, Permian skirmish for title; MHS, OHS for pride

D-Day, cameras finally arrive for Rebs, Mojo

By TERRY WILLIAMSON
Sports Editor

The highly respected Odessa Permian-Midland Lee football series will add to its legend at 7 p.m. today at Memorial Stadium regardless of the story on the scoreboard as two cable outlets present the rivalry to Texas and the nation.

It's almost incidental that the game will be played before a capacity crowd for the seventh consecutive year, considering that over nine million homes nationwide can view the contest tonight over SportsChannel America and again Sunday night on Texas' Home Sports Entertainment.

In the overall scheme of things, this game has no bearing on state playoff entry in two weeks, but the outcome has significance that is woven into the very social fabric of West Texas.

The winner will carry the crown of District 4-5A champion. Both Lee and Permian, along with Midland High, shared the 4-5A title a year ago, but only one will survive that repeat test after tonight.

Midland Lee coach Earl Miller has never lost to Permian as he goes for a fourth consecutive victory over Mojo. Lee has a three-game winning streak going and can join San Angelo (1961-1964) as the only teams that have beaten Permian four consecutive times.

Also, tonight's winner will step into the playoffs as the district's No. 1 seed and will play District 3-5A's No. 2 team in two weeks during the bi-district round of the state playoffs. Amarillo Palo Duro, 8-0 on the year and state ranked, is expected to win the 3-5A title. Not having to meet the Dons would be the major coup of a win today.

It's a fact that the annual Lee-Permian game always carries with it a role of significance, but you can't escape the fact that national TV exposure is the apple dangling over this 31st meeting between the two teams. Is the very fact that national TV is here have a bearing on this contest?

"I hope the TV thing isn't too big of a distraction," says Permian coach Gary Gaines. "It hasn't been so far. Both of these teams have been on TV before, so it's not like we are breaking new ground. I still think that the desire to be the district champion and the No. 1 playoff seed is the drawing card. You can bet both teams want to win this game for pure football reasons."

Lee's Miller, however, says, "TV is somewhat of a distraction. They poke those things in your face before the game and want interviews. We've got a game to play and we can't worry about TV."

Even with the presence of TV, Miller says it's hard to imagine that this game is bigger than last year's contest, one which Lee won 22-21 after being tabbed as a 21-point underdog.

"I don't see how any game can be bigger than the one last year," said Miller. "After all, we had to win that one just to have a chance at the playoffs. Now that's a big game. This one won't put anyone into the playoffs or keep anyone out.

"However, any time you play Permian, it's a big game. You always know you are going to have to go through them if you want that district title. We have the greatest respect for them.

"Our secret is that we haven't been afraid to play with them. I've seen other teams just fold their tents when those black uniforms come on the field. Our kids have always played their best game of the year against Permian. And that's what it takes because they are very good.

'Other' game features offense in Dog-Bronc tilt

By BILL PRICE
Sports Writer

In tonight's "other" high school football matchup between Midland and Odessa, the key factor may be pride.

Because that is about all that will be riding on the outcome of the District 4-5A game between Midland High and Odessa High at 8 p.m. in Odessa's Ratliff Stadium.

MHS, coming off its second win of the year with a 14-9 homecoming victory over San Angelo last Friday, is 1-4 in loop play, 2-6 overall and grasping for a little respect. OHS, on the other hand, has only suffered district losses to league-leading Odessa Permian (ranked No.2 in the state) and Midland Lee (No. 13).

Yet the Bronchos, based on their 5-3 slate and 3-2 district record, will find themselves sitting at home when postseason play arrives because of those two losses. A victory in this, their season-closing game, could solidify a strong Broncho season.

OHS' only other loss of the year was a 31-7 non-district defeat at the hands of seventh-ranked Amarillo Palo Duro the opening week of the season. The Bronchos boast a stable of speedy backs who rank near the top the 4-5A statistics. Quarterback Kevin Skinner, a 160-pound senior, ranks third in the district in total offense with 580 yards rushing and 521 passing.

Skinner ran for 119 yards, scored three touchdowns and 20 of the Broncs' 21 points in a shutout of Abilene High last week. That win guaranteed OHS a winning record for the first time since 1985.

Tailback Patrick Brown, also a 160-pound senior, is second among 4-5A rushers behind Lee's Farris Strambler. Brown has rushed for 848 yards in 94 carries for a whopping average of nine yards per carry. James Villalobos has 11 interceptions

Changes made for MRT-YMCA Run and Relay

By BILL GRIMES
Sports Writer

There's going to be something different about the MRT-YMCA Run and Relay this Saturday. Several things, really.

First, no out-of-town hotshots will be brought in to speak at a pre-race spaghetti supper.

Second, there will be no pre-race spaghetti supper.

Also, age-groups will be split in half from previous years, meaning that twice as many awards will be presented.

Finally, the race will not be the official Road Runners of American state championship half-marathon.

But some things about the annual event will remain the same.

The course is still a certified 13.1 miles, and the runners (and relay teams) will still move from the Colonnade Shopping Center to the Green Tree subdivision and back.

Race director Doss Rogers said the changes are designed to make the race more palatable for the local runner.

Rogers, an outstanding runner in his own right, said the spaghetti supper suffered from a lack of atten-

Chaps chafed in opener

By JIMMY PATTERSON
Assistant Sports Editor

The Midland College Chaparrals made history Thursday night. Of course, General Custer is in the history books, but he'd probably just as soon forget about it, too.

Never in the 14 year history of MC basketball has the team opened the season with a loss — until Wilson Optical, an Amateur Athletic Union team from El Paso, defeated the Chaps 97-92 Thursday in first-round action of the 12th annual Chap Classic.

And the rare feats achieved by the Chaps can be taken one step further — only one other time has the team ever had a sub-.500 record (12-13 in 1977-78) at any point in the season.

The Chaps were not the only team upset Thursday. South Plains, ranked No. 5 nationally fell to unranked Garden City, Kan., 73-67. In other first-day games, Dodge City defeated Murray State, 62-57, and Jacksonville College downed Cisco, 92-77.

The Chaps, ranked No. 14 in JUCO preseason polls, were set to take on Murray State in losers' bracket action at 2 p.m. Friday.

In the second half, Wilson Optical changed its defense and the Chaps came out of the halftime locker room with a bit too much confidence, two factors which played a huge role in the five point MC defeat.

"We're just going to have to keep our intensity up from beginning to end," said Fred Campbell, the Chaps' wing. "We weren't patient and just took too many quick shots."

Wilson switched from a simple zone to a match-up zone style of defense in the second half. The Chaps' freshman point guard, Ron Johnson, was effectively boxed in by Wilson in the second half. Johnson scored 13 of his 16 points in the first twenty minutes.

The Chaps, who held a sizeable 59-44 halftime lead, were outscored 27-10 in the first seven minutes of the second half. Wilson took a 73-71 lead with 12:19 to play and never fell behind again.

After being dominated for much of the first half, Wilson turned the tide and went so far as to dominate the Chaps in the second, at one point jumping out to a 91-81 lead.

MC did mount a serious late challenge when, with 29 seconds left, the Chaps came back to within one, 93-92.

Wilson pumped another two in for a 95-92 lead and, with just seven seconds left, Campbell tried from long range, bouncing a three-pointer off the rim, taking with it the Chaps' chances at the win.

Fred Reynolds (27 points), Wayne Campbell (23) and Willie Joseph (20) combined for 70 of Wilson's points.

MC was led by Campbell's 22 and Johnson's 16.

CHAP NOTES: The Chaps had to play from a deficit after almost half the team didn't make a scheduled 8 p.m. practice last Sunday. Chap coach Reggie Franklin issued one-game suspensions to sophomores Darryl King and Randy Williams, and freshmen Charlie Craine, Shaun Edwards, Gerald Woods and Kiki Stanley.

"They all had their excuses (on why they missed Sunday's practice)," Franklin said. "They violated a team rule and they've been disciplined. We'll be a better team the rest of the year for it. I can always ask them 'Remember what happened against the AAU team.' " ...

... Should Midland College defeat Murray State today and should South Plains down Cisco, the WJCAC rivals will meet Saturday at 2 p.m. to decide fifth place. If Midland loses to Murray, the Chaps will play at noon Saturday.

FRIDAY'S SCHEDULE: Midland College vs. Murray State, 2 p.m.; South Plains vs. Cisco, 4 p.m.; Dodge City vs. Wilson Optical, 7 p.m.; Jacksonville vs. Garden City, 9 p.m.

Miller would like to add to streak

At least for Midlanders, Midland Lee's three-game winning streak over Odessa Permian and the possibility of running that streak to four in a row is reason enough to find a seat at cramped and antiquated Memorial Stadium tonight.

Williamson

That streak probably rests on the shoulders of one who won't even be wearing a helmet or uniform tonight. Lee head coach Earl Miller has the distinction of being the only District 4-5A coach in history who has never lost at least once to Permian. The streak is his.

It's a streak that's shaky at best. You just don't beat a Permian team forever. Still, few realize what Miller has done for the Lee program in his short 3½ years.

Despite the fine team of 1983 that went to the state finals under Spike Dykes, who is now the head coach at Texas Tech, and the quarterfinal team of 1984 under Jack Tayrein, who is now Midland athletic director, a district championship didn't come to Lee in its glory years until 1986 when Miller was in his first year as head coach. That ended a 10-year absence from the District 4-5A throne room.

And Miller hasn't lost that touch yet. The Rebels have won or tied for the 4-5A crown in all three of his complete seasons. He has a chance to rack up another title tonight. Of course, all those strings could come to an end with a Lee loss tonight.

It's been a story book ride for Miller and he has savored the special moments of the last three years.

"It's been like a fantasy or dream for this to have happened to me and my coaching staff," said Miller this week. "You know that if you coach long enough, you're going to lose at some point in time because Permian is a great football team year in and year out.

"We have to play a near perfect game to beat them every year and that never changes. But our kids have responded to that challenge. It would be great to be part of four in a row. When I got this job, I don't think anyone could imagine in their wildest dreams that this would have happened.

"In fact, I was next in line to get this job after Dykes and Tayrien left and I think some of the school board members thought I'd fail and mess up the program and they could fire me quickly. I know there are a lot of people who are looking at how things have gone over the last three years in total disbelief.

"And I can't take too much credit for any of it. I have the finest coaching staff anywhere as far as high school staffs are concerned. I couldn't, and the team couldn't, have done any of this without their hard work and dedication.

"It's been one of the most rewarding experiences I've ever had working with the staff I have. We may lose to Permian, but it won't be because of lack of work."

Lee has actually won five of the last eight outings against Permian and that in itself is amazing since Permian has lost only once to another District 4-5A team (San Angelo in 1986) in this decade.

YOU'VE BEEN constantly hounding me all week for a prediction even though you know I want say anything until this space rolls around on Fridays. Now I have to put up and shut-up. Here's how District 4-5A will turn out tonight.

Odessa Permian 28, Midland Lee 18: I never get this game right anyway, so why do you keep badgering me for a score? Yes, Lee was a 21-point underdog last year and won. Yes, Permian was No. 2 last year and lost. But, yes, Lee lost 13-7 the last time these two teams were on TV at Memorial Stadium — the perfect omen you didn't want to hear.

Odessa High 34, Midland High 21: The Bronchos end their season tonight at Ratliff Stadium. The hoped for playoff berth eluded them, but a rare winning season didn't. Unfortunately, this ends MHS' one-game winning streak, but wait until next weekend.

San Angelo 3, Abilene High 0: Score, score, who can score? Both teams are having trouble finding the goal line, but they should be murder in soccer.

NBA Today...

STARTING OVER

Three-time MVP Larry Bird of Boston, who missed all but six games last season after foot surgery, and four-time All-Star Marques Johnson, who last played for the San Diego Clippers during the 1986-87 season, are back.

SECOND CHANCES

Former NBA guards Lewis Lloyd and Mitchell Wiggins are back with the Houston Rockets, having been readmitted to the league after two-year bans for drugs. They join John Lucas, a two-time offender of the league drug policy and a free agent signee, in the Houston backcourt.

NBA set for season start today

Associated Press

Larry Bird's season as a cheerleader is over. His return as one of the NBA's top players begins tonight.

The Boston Celtics, who didn't clinch the last spot in the playoffs until the final game of the season, were 7-1 in exhibitions as Bird returned after missing all but six games in 1988-89 because of foot and back injuries. Bird struggled, however, leaving question marks about his future as the team prepared for the season opener against Milwaukee.

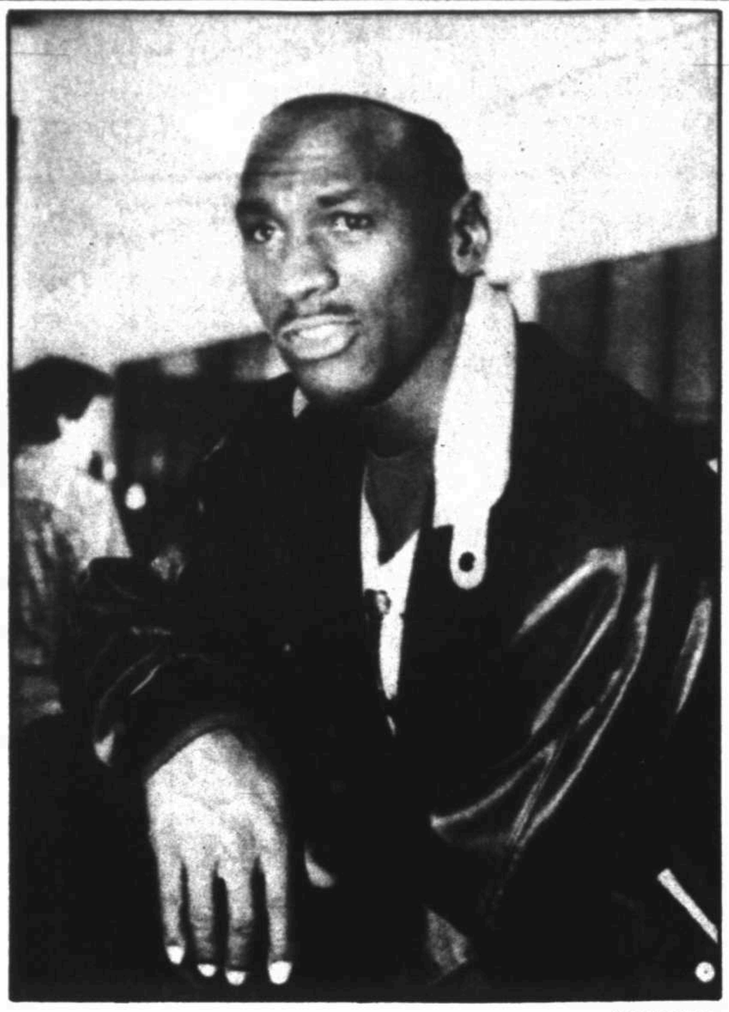
"I haven't played as much as I'd like," Bird said. "I get going and I come out of the game and I get going again and I come out. I've struggled a lot more in this preseason than I have in any preseason I can remember.

"I'm not getting the minutes I used to get. So it's something I have to adjust to."

The Celtics, who have won their last 10 home openers, meet a Milwaukee team top-heavy with backcourt strength and problems up front. Forward Terry Cummings was traded to San Antonio and forwards Greg Anderson and Larry Krystkowiak are injured, but the Bucks have guards Alvin Robertson, Rickey Pierce and Jay Humphries, while Paul Pressey moves from guard to forward.

Other season openers tonight include New York at Detroit, Washington at Charlotte, New Jersey at Miami, the Los Angeles Lakers at Dallas, Indiana at Atlanta, Cleveland at Chicago, Denver at Utah, Minnesota at Seattle, Golden State at Phoenix, Houston at the Los Angeles Clippers and Sacramento at Portland.

Bird, who practices as diligently as anyone, could be hurt more from loss of timing than the average player.



AP Laserphoto

Michael Jordan relaxes after a Chicago Bull practice Thursday.

"Things flash through my mind that I think's going to happen, and they don't happen," Bird said. "I always said basketball's a reaction game. If I start thinking about how a guy's going to play me, or what they're supposed to do, and they don't do it, it really screws me up. I'm a reaction player."

The Bucks were a surprise last season, winning 49 games in the NBA's toughest division.

The loss of Cummings, who was traded to San Antonio in exchange for Robertson and Anderson, could be the hardest to overcome.

Steers, Ponies in rematch of last season's blowout

By BILL GRIMES

Area Football

The top two offenses in District 4-4A meet tonight.

The only difference is, Big Spring has been able to parlay its district-leading 343 yards a game into a 5-2 overall mark and 4-0 district record, while Andrews' 325-yard per game attack has settled into the middle of the district pack at 3-4 overall and 2-2 in district.

In other area action tonight, Lamesa hosts Slaton; Greenwood invades Kermit; Stanton hosts Iraan; McCamey entertains Presidio; Rankin hosts Sterling City and Garden City vies with Water Valley.

Big Spring coach David Thompson hasn't forgotten the 49-0 dumping Andrews administered to his Steers last year.

"It's not hard, not when they run a reverse to score their next-to-last touchdown," Thompson said.

Andrews mentor W.T. Stapler wouldn't comment on charges of running up the score in last year's game, but did say the proverbial shoe might be on the other foot tonight.

"We're going to show up," Stapler said. "We know what's waiting for us."

What's waiting for the Mustangs is the leading scorer in the district (Neal Mayfield); the leading passer (Rance Thompson); the second and third leading rushers (Mayfield and Otis Riffey, respectively); and the second and fifth leading receivers (Mayfield and Joe Downey).

The Mustangs will counter with a balanced running attack that fullback Kelly Cornejo and quarterback Robert Morris spearhead. Cornejo has rushed for 413 yards and one touchdown on 67 carries, while Morris has rushed for 394 yards and seven touchdowns on 80 carries.

Left halfback Matt Carroll provides the only real speed for the Mustangs with 268 yards and three TD's on only 39 trips. Carroll also scored on a 94-yard kickoff return in his first game back from a broken leg that sidelined him for the first half of the season.

Stapler said the ability of his offense to control the ball will be crucial.

"If we don't control the football, Big Spring can score in a hurry," he said. "Their statistics tell the story. Mayfield gets a first down every time he runs with the football."

dance in previous years. Instead, race organizers will offer a variety of goodies at a post-race blowout, including fajitas, soft drinks, beer and fruit.

"It ought to be a little more fun after the race than in the past," Rogers said.

Also, the race will finally make money by not bringing in an outside speaker. Rogers said the YMCA will finally be able to funnel race proceeds to Y programs as a result.

"The purpose of the race has always been to raise money for the Y and its programs," Rogers said. "So instead of spending money for a speaker, we can finally make some money."

Past speakers have included RRCA president Henley Gibble and world-class trackster Keith Brantly.

Rogers added that the state championship designation was inappropriate for a half-marathon in the Permian Basin.

"It was a crock," he said. "There's no way that people from Dallas and Houston are going to come out here for a half-marathon."

The race will include a "big man" division for runners weighing over 200 pounds.

Runners can compete on an individual basis or as members of four-person relay teams — each runner traveling 3.4 miles.

The race is again co-sponsored by The Midland Reporter-Telegram and the Midland YMCA. Other sponsors include Texas Instruments, Rogers Ford-Volkswagen-Volvo, KMID-TV, the Courtyard Midland Park, Texas Refreshments, Tampico Spanish Inn, KNFM Radio, Bill Williams Tire Center, Holiday inn, Rainbow Water Co. and American Airlines.

American will give two free plane tickets to Orlando, Fla., in a post-race drawing.

from his defensive safety position, and has caught eight passes for 197 yards as a wingback.

On the other side of the coin, the Bulldogs have only been badly beaten in games with Odessa Permian (51-0) and Lubbock Monterey (33-7). MHS has been close in every other game, has shown a prowessed passing game and spread the glory around in the backfield with a handful of running backs totaling more than 1,000 for the season.

We have to have an almost perfect game to beat them. Usually, whether you win or lose, it comes down to who makes the big plays and we've made some the last three years."

Gaines, too, expects his Panther troops to be ready for the game.

"I hope our kids are looking forward to the game. I don't know of any reason why they wouldn't," said Gaines. "The last several years the district championship has been at stake. Who wouldn't want to be in position to play for something like that?"

Both teams are healthy and like where they stand going into tonight's game. Miller sees some positives for his Rebels and some negatives.

"I think us having the open week has really helped us," said Miller. "This is the fourth year in a row that we've had an open date before playing Permian. Some coaches see that as a disadvantage, but we know how to handle it after four years. We know the routine that has worked for us in the past and the things that didn't work out.

"Also, I think it is to our advantage to be playing at home on the grass. It takes more adjustment to get used to playing on grass than on the turf at Ratliff.

"On the other hand, Permian hardly has any weaknesses. They throw if they can't run and run if they can't pass. They are really balanced. No one has scored many points on them all year, so they have to have a good defensive team. They've got great running backs in Chris Comer and Arvey Villa and Stoney Case is a solid quarterback, who just doesn't make many mistakes. Lloyd Hill is probably one of the best receivers in the state."

Gaines says of his Panthers, "Offensively, our running backs don't have the numbers like Lee's (Farris) Strambler, but they have good numbers when they play. Both Villa and Comer have missed some action. We've worked more receivers, other than Hill, into our offense and I think that has helped. We feel offensively that we may be to where we were at this point last year.

"However, I don't think we are as good as a year ago on defense. A lot of people think we are an awesome defensive team with all the shutouts we've had this year, but comparing to the past, I don't feel we are there yet. I'm not bad-mouthing our kids on defense. They've improved every week, but I can't compare them yet to some of the defenses we've had in the past.

"Lee obviously has an outstanding running game and they've got us size-wise. Strambler is probably the best running back this district has seen in years. I wish he was the only one we had to worry about stopping. However, I think the quarterback (Vince) Henderson makes the offense go. Lee will lull you to sleep with the run and then hit a big, big pass play from Henderson.

"(Arthur) Donnelly also gives Lee a dimension that we don't have in the kicking game. He's a three-year starter and can kick with anyone. He's been a big factor in some other games we've played in the past."

Naturally, when No. 2 in the state meets No. 13, you would expect to have some statistical leaders from District 4-5A to be in the game. You won't be disappointed there, either.

Lee's Strambler, the school's all-time leading rusher, has 1,507 yards in only seven games and is the second leading rusher in the state. He has also scored 108 points to lead loop scorers.

Permian, however, ranks No. 1 in both total offense and defense, gaining 432.1 yards per game while giving up only 191.6. Lee is second in both categories with 389.3 offensive yards per game while allowing 219 to opponents.

Permian's Case is the league's top passer, completing 57 of 83 passes for 1,033 yards and 14 TDs while receiver Hill has 35 catches for 788 yards and nine touchdowns.

DISD appeals Carter ruling

DALLAS (AP) - A ruling to bar Dallas Carter from the 1989 high school football playoffs for using an ineligible player will be appealed by the Dallas Independent School District, officials say.

DISD Athletic Director John Kincaide said the University Interscholastic League will be notified today of the decision to appeal the ruling by the District 11-5A executive committee.

"We have decided to go with the appeal," Kincaide said. "We feel the punishment assessed for the infraction is excessive."

The committee voted to take the action against Carter because the school used the ineligible player at a time when they were on probation for an earlier violating involving an ineligible player.

Kincaid announced that the district would appeal only hours after the UIL gave the school a Monday deadline to file the appeal.

SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 4, 1989

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: You need to develop your gifts more fully. You are fond of learning but often hurry through studies. Buckle down to work. A job offer in January will depend on your reputation for reliability. Do not miss out on a golden opportunity. An unexpected windfall or legacy in March will improve financial security. A long-term friendship could turn romantic. Resist a friend's advice to invest in a get-rich-quick scheme. A likeable wolf could try to fleece you. Look beyond the surface charm.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: humorist Will Rogers, actors Art Carney and Martin Balsam, newscaster Walter Cronkite, "M*A*S*H*" actress Loretta Swit.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): An excellent weekend to renew old acquaintances and contact former associates. Your organizational ability gives you the edge over the competition. Make best possible use of your talents. Assist a charity.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Try not to wear emotions on your sleeve today. A difficult relative may try to provoke a quarrel. Evening is best time for a romantic interlude. Show tenderness.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): If you doubt your abilities, it will be harder to get results. Self-assurance can be a priceless asset. Make an effort to keep friends and associates on your side.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): A platonic relationship may be more rewarding than a romantic alliance. If you must work, discourage interruptions. Make priorities clear to your loved ones. Children follow their parents' example.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): An ideal weekend to socialize with those who share your interests. New financial information is available. Let reason guide choice of business associates. Join forces with someone whose talents compliment yours.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Do not allow others to impose on you. Relax at home if you prefer. Someone influential is anxious to back your pet project. Get promises in writing.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): A joyous heart spreads cheer. Share good fortune with those in need of encouragement. Creative projects add zest to life. A family reunion could be the highlight of your weekend.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Tidings from afar could make this a special day. Choose friends with greater care. Someone who covets your mate or home may not prove loyal. Get together less frequently.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Take care of errands and chores first thing this morning. Something you worry about will never happen. Put more fun into family gatherings. A telephone call will brighten your evening.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): The unexpected happens. Those who have resisted marriage up until now may finally say yes. Hide disappointment if a loved one lets you down. You may not have all the facts.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): The emphasis today is domestic; think about what you can do to enhance your surroundings. Keep the family united. A tendency to sound rash or overly emotional could antagonize loved ones.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): A happy message or announcement brightens the morning. Share news with those who will be pleased for you. Romantic partner shows new understanding. Get together with old friends and neighbors tonight.

The bidding:

South	West	North	East

3 ♡	Pass	4 ♠	Pass
Pass	Pass

Opening lead: Queen of ♠

The expert technician at the card table actually has an edge over the prestidigitator. The magician only appears to make things disappear. The expert declarer actually performs the act!

Note South's game try of three hearts. It is the suit in which he needs help, and has the added advantage that it might discourage the lead of that suit. North's acceptance of the game try is clear cut.

After a heart lead it is obvious that, as the cards lie, declarer will have to lose three heart tricks and a trump. At the table, however, West made the normal lead of the queen of clubs. Even so, it still seemed that declarer would have to surrender four tricks. But then declarer began to work his wonders.

South won the ace of clubs and immediately ruffed a club. Next, the ace and king of trumps were cashed to reveal a trump loser but, since it was West who held the winning trump, declarer was in control. After cashing the ace and king of diamonds, he continued with a low diamond. If West ruffed with the master trump, one of dummy's heart losers would go and a heart would eventually be ruffed on the board, so West discarded a club and the table ruffed.

Declarer returned to hand with a club ruff and led his remaining diamond, and West was fixed. If that defender parted with his last club, he would set up a club in dummy, and ruffing would still allow one of the board's hearts to be discarded. West was forced to pitch a heart, and declarer was able to take two more tricks by ruffing the diamond in dummy and the club in hand for a total of ten tricks.

Larry L. King says he's focusing on different kind of playhouse

NEW YORK (AP) — Playwright Larry L. King, who wrote "The Best Little Whorehouse in Texas," says his focus these days is more on his children than his work.

"I do not want them to remember their father as one who was so preoccupied with his own creations that he had little time for those he helped to create," King said in Sunday's Parade Magazine.

King

"I did not realize the importance of such things in an earlier time," said King, father of 7-year-old Blaine and 10-year-old Lindsay. "Sometimes, in the swirl and crossfire of modern life, it is easy to forget them even now."

NEW YORK (AP) — A group of soap opera stars joined Molly Yard, president of the National Organization for Women, and some Brooklyn high school students at a news conference calling for the protection of abortion rights.

Margaret Reed, who plays Shannon McKechnie on "As the World Turns," was joined at a news conference by co-star Sherry Ramsey, Rena Sofer from "Loving," and Michelle Forbes, Patrick O'Connell, Gil Rogers and Vince Williams from "Guiding Light."

The actors are members of Daytime for Choice, which includes about 300 soap stars.

"We're a group of actors on daytime television who feel compelled to speak out in defense of our constitutional right to privacy and reproductive choice, which includes the right to choose whether or not to terminate a pregnancy," Reed said.

She said many in the group plan to attend a rally in Washington, D.C., on Nov. 12.

Reed said she did not fear a backlash from viewers because "we know from all the polls that the majority of Americans feels this way."

NEW YORK (AP) — George Burns is 93, but not too old to play God for a fourth time.

He hopes to begin filming "Oh, God! Book IV" as soon as he finds a script he likes, but meanwhile he's been promoting a new show-biz memoir, "All My Best Friends," and a new comedy video, "George Burns: His Wit and Wisdom."

Burns

Daily chores are made more difficult by arthritis, astigmatism and hearing loss, and he had a bypass operation at age 79, but Burns says he is looking toward the future.

He has so many projects ahead of him that he "can't afford to die."

One of them is a two-week appearance at the London Palladium in January 1996, when the comedian will celebrate his 100th birthday.

"I don't think I'm going to die for a long time because I'm too busy," Burns told USA Weekend in its Nov. 3-5 issue.

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Mayor W. Wilson Goode entered a hospital Thursday for the second time in two weeks after a monitor picked up an irregular heartbeat.

"We believe it is an innocent type of heart irregularity which can be seen in individuals with normal hearts," his physician, Edward S. Cooper, said in a statement.

The irregular heart beat lasted a minute or two about midnight Wednesday, the statement said.

Goode was admitted to the Hospital of the University of Pennsylvania early Thursday. His doctor said he was "feeling fine" and out of bed reading newspapers and watching television.

Cooper said the mayor was expected to stay in the hospital until Saturday.

"We are using this time in the hospital for further heart monitoring in the event that the episode recurs, and also we will be obtaining other miscellaneous studies in order to detect the underlying triggering process," according to the doctor's statement.

Goode first was taken to the hospital Oct. 20 after complaining of head and neck pain.

After tests, Dr. Arthur Whereat said Goode had a "perfectly normal heart" and attributed his symptoms to sinus problems. Goode was discharged from the hospital the next day.

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Hollywood star No. 1,902 went to Tom and Dick Smothers, and a sandwich was created in their name at a delicatessen on Hollywood Boulevard.

More than 300 family, friends and fans cheered the famous siblings as they unveiled the star Thursday in front of the Hollywood Deli, which dedicated a sandwich in their honor called "The Smothers Brothers Better Half Sandwich."

Half the sandwich features "Tommy's favorite: Pas'Trommy dip grilled on sourdough served with au jus gravy, and half of Dick's favorite: A healthful combination of fresh sliced turkey on whole wheat."

The Hollywood Chamber of Commerce recently voted to honor the comic stars of the old TV variety show "The Smothers Brothers Comedy Hour." The pair's publicists, Rogers & Cowan, sponsored the sidewalk star at a cost of $3,500.

BOSTON (AP) — Art imitated life and the art of politics when Mayor Raymond Flynn made a cameo performance playing himself on "Cheers," the situation comedy set in a tavern in Boston's Beacon Hill section.

On a program that aired Thursday, Flynn, plaque in hand and a television news crew in tow, strode into the bar festooned with balloons and jammed with people celebrating the watering hole's 100th anniversary.

The crowd on the show includes a barbershop quartet that sings too much, a doctor going into labor and a 106-year-old man who pinches young women.

The mayor, who in real life instituted a pothole hot line, listens patiently as someone complains about potholes and promises to look into them. But when he discovers the postman on the show is the man who writes him weekly missives suggesting how to run the city, he has the postman arrested.

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Sadie Tanner Mosell Alexander, a lawyer and civil rights advocate who achieved many firsts as a black woman, died of pneumonia Wednesday at age 91.

Mrs. Alexander was the first black woman to earn a doctorate at the University of Pennsylvania — and the first nationwide to earn a doctorate in economics. She was the first black woman to graduate from Penn's Law School, and then the first admitted to legal practice in Pennsylvania.

Throughout the 1930s, Mrs. Alexander and her husband, Raymond Pace Alexander, initiated legal fights that began to open up restaurants, hotels and movie theaters to blacks in Philadelphia.

NYSE curbs computerized trading

By KURT EICHENWALD
N.Y. Times News Service

NEW YORK — In an effort to reduce wild price swings that have unsettled the financial markets in recent weeks, the New York Stock Exchange on Thursday announced strict limits on the computerized trading of stocks.

"We need to take short-term action to prove that the markets are not becoming pools of speculation," John J. Phelan Jr., the chairman of the exchange, said at a news conference. "We have declared war on excess volatility."

The board of the exchange approved a five-part program that would ask brokers and institutional investors to refrain from certain trades that "destabilize" the market, reduce the use of a computerized order system when prices were falling, and make it possible for individual investors to get their orders executed more rapidly than institutional orders.

The exchange also announced that it would form a commission of corporate executives, securities industry officials and others to study the causes of volatility in the markets.

That commission, to be headed by a corporate executive who has not yet been named, will submit proposals for changing the markets within the next three to six months.

In addition, the Big Board will release more information on program trading.

The proposals that are not voluntary will be submitted to the Securities and Exchange Commission for approval.

A spokeswoman for the exchange said Thursday that the commission could not comment on the proposals, but planned to study them closely.

New York Stock Exchange members have generally complied with other voluntary restrictions suggested by the Big Board, and Wall Street executives and exchange officials expect many of the rules to take effect immediately.

The moves by the exchange come after weeks of turmoil on Wall Street about computerized stock trading techniques.

Over the last week, virtually every large Wall Street investment firm has revised its policies regarding the best-known form of computerized trading, index arbitrage.

In this form of trading, traders try to profit from price differences between the stock market and the futures markets by simultaneously buying and selling stock-index futures contracts and the underlying stocks that make up the index.

Index arbitrage has increasingly been criticized as a primary source of market volatility, especially after stocks collapsed on Oct. 13, sending the Dow Jones industrial average down a stunning 190.58 points.

Nevertheless, there is little statistical evidence to support the criticism.

Exchange officials said the new rules would place limits on all forms of computerized program trading.

The exchange defines program trading as any order for the simultaneous sale or purchase of 15 or more stocks.

The rules are likely to deter many kinds of program trading, particularly index arbitrage.

In such trading techniques, seconds and minutes matter, meaning that a 15-miniute delay, while seemingly short, could make a program trade too risky for an institutional investor to undertake.

Although the exchange is acting to slow program trading while prices are falling, Phelan repeatedly emphasized that computerized stock trading was not the sole cause of the market's volatility and that deeper and more far reaching changes would be necessary.

Ford buys Jaguar

By STEVEN PROKESCH
N.Y. Times News Service

LONDON — In a deal that reflects the continuing consolidation of the world auto industry and the eagerness of big car makers to acquire prestigious brands, Ford Motor Co. has announced that it plans to buy Jaguar PLC for a total of nearly $2.38 billion.

The friendly takeover, announced Thursday, ends several weeks of jockeying to link up with the British luxury car maker between Detroit's two largest producers, Ford and General Motors Corp.

GM had been negotiating to buy a large stake in Jaguar, an option the British company's chairman, Sir John Egan, a former GM executive in Europe, preferred because the proposed purchase stopped short of a takeover and thus would have insured Jaguar's independence.

Jaguar and GM had been discussing a linkup for roughly nine months.

But the British car maker's independence seemed doomed when the British government, in keeping with its free-market leanings, declared last Tuesday that it was willing to lift a state restriction that could be used to bar another company from own-

Oil futures end session lower

From Staff and Wire Reports

Oil futures prices ended at midmorning down five cents at $19.96 per barrel.

On Thursday, prices were also lower, unable to sustain a brief midday technical rally.

The December contract for West Texas Intermediate, the U.S. benchmark grade of crude oil, ended at $20.01 a 42-gallon barrel on the New York Mercantile Exchange, down 6 cents from the previous session. January crude fell 7 cents to $19.71 a barrel.

Refined products traded on the exchange also declined. Wholesale unleaded gasoline for December delivery lost 0.69 cent to end at 52.20 cents a gallon, while the January contract declined 0.25 cent to 52.46 cents a gallon.

December heating oil finished 0.37 cent lower at 59.99 cents a gallon and the January contract lost 0.30 cent to 59.65 cents.

Energy brokers said crude oil prices rallied earlier in the day on technical factors but stopped short of piercing the $20.40-a-barrel level.

"I haven't seen anything that would have caused the rally," said Brian Tagler, a trader with Drexel Burnham Lambert Inc.

Analysts said the rally fizzled in afternoon trading as investors began liquidating and taking profits.

Dollar steadies in quiet trading

LONDON (AP) — The dollar was steady today in quiet European trading against most major foreign currencies.

Gold prices were higher following after Thursday's surprise rally that ended in New York with the precious metal $6 higher.

With Tokyo markets closed for a national holiday, dealers said European foreign exchange trading had come to a near standstill ahead of this afternoon's release of U.S. unemployment figures for September.

"Nothing has happened since yesterday, and I can't imagine that much will move until the figures," said one dealer at a European bank in Frankfurt.

In Tokyo, markets were closed for Culture Day. In London, the yen was quoted at $143.40, down 0.35 yen from Thursday's Tokyo close.

In London, the dollar fell against the British pound. It cost $1.5705 to buy one pound, compared with $1.5660 late Thursday.

Gold opened in London at a bid price of $379.15 a troy ounce, compared with late Thursday's $375.25. At midmorning, the city's five major bullion dealers fixed a recommended price of $378.85.

In Zurich, the bid price was $379 compared with $375 late Thursday.

Earlier, in Hong Kong, gold rose $4.67 to close at a bid $378.71.

Silver was quoted in London at a bid price of $5.24 a troy ounce, up from Thursday's $5.17.

Earnings prospects depress stocks

NEW YORK (AP) — Technology issues suffered some of the biggest losses as worries about corporate earnings prospects dragged down the stock market Thursday.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials dropped 14.34 points to 2,631.56.

Declining issues outnumbered advances by about 5 to 3 in nationwide trading of New York Stock Exchange-listed stocks, with 565 up, 928 down and 504 unchanged.

The Labor Department is due to report Friday morning on the employment situation for October.

Advance estimates call for the figures to show a relatively modest increase in nonfarm payroll employment, reinforcing recent evidence of slowing economic growth. That would presumably give the Federal Reserve extra leeway to relax its credit policy soon, encouraging interest rates to fall.

But brokers said investors were still worried about unexpectedly weak earnings reports issued by many companies for the third quarter.

Many Wall Streeters believe profits and dividends may suffer further this winter.

Jobless rate stable

By JOHN KING
AP Labor Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Unemployment held steady at 5.3 percent last month as the economy added 233,000 jobs, the government said today in a report that showed continued troubles in the industrial sector.

The Labor Department said all of the non-farm payroll growth for October came in the service-producing sector, with most of that coming as schools and local governments added jobs for the school year.

The department revised September payroll growth downward to 201,000 from the previously reported 209,000.

The manufacturing sector, which lost a revised 88,000 jobs in September, lost an additional 13,000 in October to post its fourth consecutive monthly decline.

Underscoring the weakness in that sector was new data showing the average manufacturing work week fell from 41.8 hours to 40.8 hours and overtime was virtually non-existent after averaging just under four hours a week for several months. The automobile manufacturing industry continued to struggle, losing 14,000 jobs last month.

The 233,000 jobs added to non-farm payrolls was more than most analysts had predicted and likely will give pause to Federal Reserve policymakers who had been seen as leaning toward a further easing of credit, which in turn would lower interest rates.

Heading into the report, analysts said a high jobs total likely would cause the central bank to hold off any decision to ease further until it had additional data on how the economy began the fourth quarter. The Fed policymakers meet Nov. 11 to discuss monetary policy.

The Labor Department determines unemployment through a household survey and its job-growth totals through a separate business survey. The two surveys often give conflicting data on employment growth and today the department said it had determined why — more Americans are holding two or more jobs.

Last Herald is sellout

N.Y. Times News Service

LOS ANGELES — The Herald Examiner was a sellout on the last day of its existence.

As some of the Herald's 800 employees watched, more than 380,000 copies rolled off the newspaper's downtown presses in the early morning hours Thursday. Its finale, largely consisting of farewell staff columns, was such a hit that the presses were started again in the afternoon to print 10,000 more copies, according to Bernee Strom, director of circulation.

Herald history, ■ Page 3D

"We had reports of sellouts as early as 7 a.m.," said Strom. "The phone is ringing off the hook with people wanting copies."

Meanwhile, other area papers were looking to pick up the Herald's resources, advertisers and readers.

The Los Angeles Times purchased the Herald's subscription lists and the 10,000 news boxes it owned, Herald and Times officials said Thursday. The Times also was negotiating to purchase the 6,000 Herald boxes owned by independent dealers, Strom said.

Jeffrey S. Klein, assistant to Times publisher David Laventhol, said the newspaper was expanding its staff and page count in its View and Sports sections to accommodate employees and features from the Herald.

In addition, the Times hired Bob Mieszerski, the Herald's horse race handicapper, and Allan Malamud, a sports columnist who recently left the Herald for The National, a yet-to-be published national sports daily.

"It would be a mistake not to take a look at all these talented journalists and other employees," Klein said.

N. Christian Anderson, editor and vice president of the Orange County Register, said his newspaper had not been allowed by King Features to bid for the Herald's comics.

"I believe they did not act in the best interests of their creators in terms of finance and exposure," Anderson said.

The Register is interviewing Herald employees for existing openings and has proposed a staff expansion that has not yet been approved, Anderson said.

Retailers reporting fair sales

By The Associated Press

The nation's large retailers reported modest-to-good October sales, with apparel stores doing better than general merchandise chains that heavily depend on sales of expensive durable goods.

But even apparel stores suffered in some parts of the country, where unusually mild weather discouraged shopping for heavy clothes. On a positive note, analysts said consumers probably postponed purchases of winter things last month, which should help sales during the crucial Christmas season.

The reports were released Thursday.

Panel warns against offshore exploration

WASHINGTON (AP) — A panel of the National Academy of Sciences warned today against proceeding with oil exploration off the California and Florida coasts, saying there is not enough reliable technical information on potential damage to the environment.

The scientific panel also was critical of past environmental studies of the lease sites by the Interior Department, saying that in some cases potentially adverse economic and social problems from oil development were ignored.

At each of the three sites, the panel said it found inadequate and unreliable technical and scientific data to warrant going ahead with lease sales.

The conclusions were presented to a presidential task force that is reviewing whether to issue oil and gas exploratory leases for the three offshore sites. The task force is scheduled to make a recommendation to the White House by the end of the year.

The sites off northern and southern California and in the Gulf of Mexico near the Florida Everglades are among the most controversial government leases sought by the oil industry because of strong opposition from environmentalists and residents in nearby coastal areas.

Last February, President Bush put a hold on issuing the leases and directed a special task force headed by Interior Secretary Manuel Lujan to examine the environmental concerns. He also directed the Academy's National Research Council to examine the technical and scientific issues involved and make a report to the task force.

In its report, the scientific panel concluded that the available technical and scientific data from each of the three lease sites "is currently inadequate for decisions (to be made) about development and production" of oil and gas resources.

BUSINESS IN BRIEF

Chrysler workers reject four-day week

DETROIT — Hourly workers at the Chrysler Corp. mini-van plant in St. Louis overwhelmingly rejected an unusual company-sponsored proposal for a four-day workweek intended to increase production by 20 percent.

The rejection is a blow to Chrysler, which wants to raise production of its successful mini-van without bearing the expense of opening an additional plant.

Larry Robertson, vice president of the United Automobile Workers local 110, said he saw two significant reasons for the rejection.

One was that workers were not willing to work more than eight hours at a time without time-and-a-half pay, and second, they have been earning a great deal of overtime since 1983 and did not want to give that up.

The vote rejecting Chrysler's proposal was 2,340-300.

Under Chrysler's plan, the plant would have operated with two shifts of 10 hours, six days a week.

Three work crews would have been on the job, each working four days a week, 10 hours a day.

Robertson said Chrysler had proposed paying overtime for any hours beyond 40 hours a week and for any hours worked beyond four days in any six-day period, with double time on Sunday.

The union insisted on overtime pay for anything more than eight hours a day.

Mesa reports net loss of $21.5 million

AMARILLO (SWN) — Mesa reported revenues from production of oil, natural gas and natural gas liquids of $71.4 million, operating income of $19.9 million and a net loss of $21.5 million for the third quarter of 1989, compared with oil, natural gas and natural gas liquids revenues of $57.8 million, operating income of $32.7 million and net income of $9.8 million a year earlier.

The third quarter loss primarily resulted from low gas prices coupled with higher interest and depreciation charges associated with the acquisition of properties in December 1988 from Tenneco Inc. Results for the third quarter of 1989 include net gains of $15.8 million associated with sales of oil and gas properties. The third quarter results in 1988 included $13.3 million of net gains from property sales (net of impairments on properties expected to be sold) and $19.6 million in revenues from settlements of gas sales contracts.

PANEL

The panel, which included experts in marine science, oceanography and environmental science, did not specifically recommend against future development of the three sites, but concluded no such decision should be made without further studies.

The leases involve potential oil and gas drilling on 1.1 million acres of ocean off Southern California, another 6.7 million acres off Northern California, and 14 million acres in the Gulf of Mexico near the Florida Everglades.

Environmentalists have long argued that the three areas should be closed to oil drilling because a spill could cause serious harm to sensitive ecosystems nearby. Residents along nearby coastal areas also have strongly opposed the leases, saying oil development could harm the scenery and affect tourism.

Among the findings of the scientific panel were these:

— An oil spill in the Florida lease site likely would result in oil reaching the Florida coastline within hours and polluting some of the state's beaches.

— More information is needed to assess the effect of oil development on corals, seagrasses and other elements of the coastal ecosystems near the Florida site. Although better information is available at the two California sites, further studies on potential ecosystem damage is needed there as well.

— Data from Interior Department studies on the effect of oil development on nearby communities was found to be unreliable and "not adequate to making a leasing decision." The panel said in some cases information was out of date and at other times "significant ... social and economic impacts (to communities) have been ignored."

FORD

ing more than 15 percent of Jaguar until the end of 1990.

Thus the favored car of British executives and Cabinet ministers, including Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher, was all but certain to fall into foreign hands.

The Ford-Jaguar linkup is the most significant of a handful of purchases and stake holdings in European luxury and sports-car makers by Detroit producers.

Smaller moves during the past few years include GM linking up with Group Lotus, Ford buying 75 percent of Aston Martin Lagonda, and Chrysler picking up Maserati and Lamborghini.

Increased competition from the Japanese moving into the luxury-car sector, the high cost of developing new models, and a downturn in the crucial U.S. market have made it increasingly difficult for smaller car makers like Jaguar to go it alone.

Thomas J. Wafer Jr., general manager of Copley Los Angeles Newspapers, said the papers plan to increase their sports and entertainment coverage and the sales penetration in their own markets.

Copley operates the Outlook in Santa Monica, the Daily Breeze in Torrance and the San Pedro News Pilot.

At the Los Angeles Daily News, publisher David J. Auger said the newspaper had acquired a minimal number of Herald news boxes and would attempt to get a share of its circulation and national advertising.

INVESTOR'S GUIDE

Minor must be given stock at age of majority

By BILL DOYLE

Q. When I was very young, my aunt purchased some stock and placed it in a custodial account in her name for me. She wisely placed the stock under the dividend reinvestment plan and, later, put the dividends under 20 percent federal income tax withholding.

I reached my majority about a year ago. I submitted to the company whose stock is involved a certified copy of my birth certificate and requested the stock certificates. The company said it can not do that until my aunt, as custodian of the account, delivers the properly endorsed certificate for the shares originally purchased. My aunt, who is quite elderly, refuses to do that.

An attorney advises I can sue my aunt, which I do not intend to do. Do you have any thoughts on how I can force the company to deliver the certificates to me?

Doyle

A. No. Your problem isn't with that company. It's with your aunt. There's no way the company — actually, the company's transfer agent — can issue certificates in your name for that stock until your aunt surrenders the old stock certificate, properly endorsed.

That means she should write in the assignment form on the back of the certificate: "(her name) as custodian for (your name) under the (name of state) gift to minors act." That endorsement should then be guaranteed by a brokerage firm, commercial bank or trust company.

My thoughts are that you should sit down with your aunt for a friendly, but firm, talk. Explain to her that securities and/or other assets placed in a gift to minors account belong to the minor — not the adult custodian. Also the gift is irrevocable. Your aunt made that gift the minute the stock was purchased in gift to minors act form. She can't take it back.

Nor can she legitimately delay delivery of the stock to you, now that you are an adult. The gift to minors acts of all 50 states and the District of Columbia require the custodian to transfer custodial property to the former minor's name upon attaining the age of majority — 18 in most states, 21 in some.

Explain to your aunt that she's fracturing the law. That might shake her up and get her to comply. If she's adamant, mention the lawyer's suggestion to sue.

Assuming you don't want to sue, you can wait until she leaves this vale of tears, then have a successor custodian transfer the stock to you.

It would be interesting to know how the income tax on your dividends is being handled. That tax obligation is yours and your Social Security number should be used in reporting the dividends to the Internal Revenue Service.

Q. Isn't it true that the adult custodian is the legal owner of stock in a gift to minors account and the minor is simply the beneficiary?

A. Absolutely not! Your statement is dead wrong. Securities registered in gift to minors act form belong to the minor — no ifs, ands or buts.

The adult custodian acts for the child and handles the custodial property. The custodian is required to follow what is called "The Prudent Man" rule: "To invest the custodial property as would a prudent man of discretion and intelligence who is seeking a reasonable income and the preservation of his capital."

Q. My wife and I want to buy stock for our two young children. Our broker tells us that both children's names cannot be on the same account. Why?

A. Because the gift to minors laws specify there be only one minor and one custodian on each account. That keeps things from getting more complicated.

You have no big problem. Just open two gift to minors accounts and buy equal amounts of stock for each kid.

Thousands of supporters of the late President Ferdinand Marcos are cheered by other Marcos loyalists as they enter Manilla, Philippines, today on the final day of their "March for Justice" to demand the return of Marcos' body for burial inside the Philippines. It was the largest anti-government protest since President Corazon Aquino took power three years ago.

Thousands rally, seek return of Marcos' body

MANILA, Philippines (AP) — Thousands of people pushed past police barricades today and rallied outside a military post, demanding that the body of former President Ferdinand Marcos be buried on Philippine soil.

A crowd estimated by police at about 25,000 gathered to denounce President Corazon Aquino for blocking the return of Marcos' body. It was the largest show of support for the former president in years and came on the eve of Mrs. Aquino's trip to Canada and the United States, where she hopes to convince business leaders that her country is stable for investment.

Among those participating were Vice President Salvador Laurel, opposition Sen. Juan Ponce Enrile and other former officials of the Marcos administration.

Protesters defied police orders and marched to Camp Crame, headquarters of the Philippine Constabulary military police force, and nearby Camp Aguinaldo, the armed forces headquarters.

Police blocked the road about a mile from the camps, but the protesters pushed through, and several thousand reached the gate of Camp Crame.

Brig. Gen. Rodolfo Biazon, a senior military commander, agreed to let them rally at the gate because he said the crowd was too big to disperse. Later, the military said the rally must end but it made no move toward the protesters.

Armed troops stood guard. Several firetrucks were brought into the garrison, apparently to disperse protesters if they tried to storm the camp.

Riot police on one truck flashed the "V-for-Victory" sign, associated here with the Marcos movement. Marcos supporters chanted "Thank you, Thank you!"

Marcos died Sept. 28 in Honolulu, where he had lived since being ousted in a 1986 civilian-military uprising.

In a statement broadcast by pro-Marcos radio station DZEC, the late president's son, Ferdinand Jr., said the demonstration was a reaction to the "arrogance" of the Aquino administration."

"I congratulate the marchers for their steadfast and courageous actions," the statement said. "You show to the world, although we are a moderate, patient people, we Filipinos will not compromise principles."

The rally in suburban Quezon City climaxed an 11-day march from Marcos' home province, Ilocos Norte, to demand that Mrs. Aquino allow Marcos' body to be buried here.

The crowd cheered wildly as Laurel asked: "Do you agree that Marcos' body must be allowed home?"

"It is now very clear what the people want," Laurel said. "You are a very powerful force. The government must follow the peoples' will. If not, you know what to do."

He described the ban on the return of Marcos' body as "the worst mistake" Mrs. Aquino had made in office.

East Germans again jam embassy in Prague

PRAGUE, Czechoslovakia (AP) — About 4,000 East Germans were jammed into the West German Embassy in Prague today with new arrivals pouring in each hour, all eager to emigrate West despite promises of reform from their Communist leaders.

"It's just the same hardheaded idiots as before," said a bricklayer from Karl-Marx-Stadt. "What's going to change? The corrupted socialism in our country is just getting new clothes, that's all."

"I don't believe that anything will change there," said another young man. "The reforms are only for the outside world."

Red Cross workers and refugees unloaded tents and bedding trucked in from West Germany.

East Germany has agreed to let its citizens here renounce their citizenship and then go to West Germany, where they are automatically granted citizenship.

But with East German diplomats processing only about 100 applications a day, it was feared the embassy and its gardens, which have a capacity of about 5,500 people, would be overflowing by the weekend when a rush of new arrivals was expected.

Embassy sources, who put the number of East Germans at about 4,000 just before noon, said negotiations were under way with Czechoslovak authorities for more space.

Some people arriving today said the roads to Prague were crammed with East German cars.

The wave began Wednesday after East Germany's new leader, Egon Krenz, lifted a month-old travel ban to Czechoslovakia, the only country East Germans can visit freely. Krenz's predecessor, Erich Honecker, had imposed the ban to stop an earlier exodus of East Germans to the West German Embassy in Prague.

The exodus has mainly involved skilled workers in their early 20s and 30s. At least 200 to 300 children played inside the embassy grounds.

Those who have left East Germany include at least 1,100 doctors and nurses, and this has severely strained health services in the Communist country, an East German health officials said today.

Dr. Geerd Dellas, the health administrator for the city of East Berlin, said doctors and nurses from exclusive clinics serving high-ranking Communist officials have been drafted to work in ordinary hospitals. Nurses still in school who were near graduation have also been employed, Dellas said.

East Germans were swift to take advantage of the lifting of the travel ban. Eight thousand crossed into Czechoslovakia in the first 24 hours, and the number in the West German Embassy swelled from 2,100 Thursday night to some 4,000 by noon today.

Most refugees simply walked in through the giant wooden doors of the Palais Lobkowicz, the elegant Baroque palace that houses the West German Embassy in Prague's ancient Mala Strana district.

WORLD IN BRIEF

Officials question Beijing students

BEIJING (AP) — Authorities investigating the crushed pro-democracy movement have begun questioning Beijing University students on campus about their activities at the time of the protests, university sources said today.

In Hong Kong, an independent newspaper reported that Chinese authorities have complied a new wanted list of dissidents. It reportedly includes Chai Ling, a key figure in the protests, as well as other students and intellectuals.

At Beijing University, students were told at several officially sponsored rallies this week that they should cooperate with investigators who would come to question them, said the sources, who spoke on condition of anonymity.

An official of the university's Foreign Affairs Office today denied that any such rallies had taken place or that investigators had come onto campus.

Sanctions have cost billions

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — Foreign sanctions imposed on South Africa have cost the country 500,000 jobs and billions of dollars since 1985, a leading economist says.

The study released Thursday by Chris van Wyk, chief executive of the Bankorp banking group, also said foreign investment and trade bans have hurt blacks the most.

"The harshest burden of sanctions has fallen on them," he said, adding that 80 percent of new job-seekers are black.

"A continuation of existing trade and financial sanctions throughout the 1990s would render a million more black people jobless and 2 million more financially destitute," said van Wyk, whose study was described by financial writers as the most definitive attempt yet to quantify the impact of sanctions.

Chapman songs banned

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — Two new songs by Tracy Chapman, including one about imprisoned black nationalist leader Nelson Mandela, have been banned from the airwaves of the state-run broadcasting company.

Roelf Jacobs, chairman of the records committee of the South African Broadcasting Corp., said this week that the two songs from Chapman's new album, "Crossroads," had been ruled undesirable for use by the SABC.

The songs are "Freedom Now," which is dedicated to Mandela, and "Material World."

IT'S YOUR LIFE

Life's changes often unsettling

By STEVE EDWARDS

Edwards

Once upon a time, a retired man wanted to help his wife with the housework, but he did not know if it would be better to dust first and then vacuum, or vice versa. He made such an issue of the dust-or-vacuum-first problem that his wife made him get a part-time job — just to get him out of the house!

Change can be unsettling, especially for older people. And changes in the life of an older parent may cause changes in the lives of his adult children.

As a result, many adult children face changes in their parents' lives with mixed emotions. Their careers are settled, their children nearly grown, they have more quality time to spend with loved ones, and they may not want to accept the responsibilities of caring for elderly parents.

For the families that are already care-takers, additional responsibilities may be too much to carry.

Few people prepare for unexpected life-changing situations. Certain events, such as the first job, marriage and the birth of children, are accepted and anticipated during life's changes.

Aging is a process that places demands on both the older person and his family. Some preparation is possible and recommended, yet usually not done.

Try to anticipate change; investigate services and alternatives and have some options prepared for new situations.

Adult children and their parents should discuss, if possible, how certain situations will be handled. Should a widowed parents live with one of the children? What other living arrangements should be made if a parent becomes ill?

Discuss the possibility of these circumstances long before being confronted with them. Know what options are available, so rational decisions can be made in a crisis. Get a head start, even though you may never have to run the race!

Steve Edwards is executive director of Community and Senior Services and the Visiting Nurse Service of Midland.

Anxiety study planned for older people

From Staff Reports

Anxiety is not all bad. When you're young, it gets your motor going. But not so with older people, said Myron Weiner, M.D., geriatric psychiatrist at The University of Texas Southwestern Medical Center at Dallas.

Weiner and his associates are looking for older volunteers who are experiencing some of these symptoms to participate in studies with BuSpar (buspirone), an anti-anxiety drug now on the market. The study will look at how effective BuSpar is in cases of nervous disorders in people from 60 to 90 years of age. Nursing home patients are eligible for the study as well as older persons leading active lives, he said.

For further information about the study, contact Diane Richardson at (214) 688-6739.

Congress, Bush near budget deal as capital gains tax cut dropped

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Bush's offer to halt his drive for a capital gains tax cut this year could end a bitter congressional deadlock over must-pass fiscal legislation, a minimum wage bill and other measures.

Bush and Senate Republicans offered Thursday to stop trying to add the capital gains provision to debt-limit legislation that must be approved by next week.

"I deeply regret the tone of partisanship that has entered the economic policy debate," Bush said in a written statement. "Now, the stalemate must be broken."

Democratic House and Senate leaders said they liked much of the president's proposal and indicated a deal breaking the legislative logjam might come soon.

"We are heartened by the statement made by the president today, including his apparent decision to terminate his effort with regard to capital gains," Senate Majority Leader George Mitchell, D-Maine, told reporters.

"My view is we're very, very close," said Senate Budget Committee Chairman James Sasser, D-Tenn.

But while extending an olive branch on capital gains — one of his top legislative priorities — the president left a threat dangling over Congress.

He promised that if lawmakers failed to send him legislation cutting at least $14 billion from the deficit — and containing no unrelated provisions — he would leave $16.1 billion in cuts in most federal programs, made under the Gramm-Rudman law, in effect all year.

"Clearly this approach would not be a first choice for any of us," Bush said. "It is, however, a necessary discipline in the absence of more satisfactory action."

The president's threat to leave the Gramm-Rudman cuts in effect sparked hot retorts from Democrats, who said the slashes would devastate education, environment, anti-drug and other programs Bush has said are his priorities.

"Make no mistake about it, when you ... agree that these across-the-board cuts are going to take place, it is really a coward's approach to deficit reduction," said House Budget Committee Chairman Leon Panetta, D-Calif.

The president's insistence on a deficit-reduction measure minus unrelated issues was an effort to strip a number of Democratic-backed programs from the House version of the bill. These proposals include an expensive broadening of federal child care efforts.

Bush said he would continue seeking a capital gains reduction this year. But by offering to keep the proposal off the debt-limit and deficit-reduction bills, he essentially abandoned his best chance for success.

For weeks, Republicans have been trying to find a way to ensure passage of their proposal to cut the tax on capital gains, which are profits from sales of property, stocks and other holdings.

Because they are short of the 60 votes they need for passage under special Senate procedures, GOP lawmakers have tried attaching the proposal to several bills that have better prospects for passage.

Cheers and songs ring out as the candles on a huge birthday cake were lit Thursday to celebrate North Dakota's 100th birthday. It is also South Dakota's centennial.

Dakotas celebrate centennial

BISMARCK, N.D. (AP) — The Dakotas celebrated their 100th birthdays with vows to make the first years of the second century bright ones despite declining economic fortunes in recent years.

About 6,000 second-graders scheduled to graduate in the year 2000 packed the Bismarck Civic Center on Thursday and counted down to 3:40 p.m., the time on Nov. 2, 1889, when North Dakota and South Dakota were admitted to the union.

Hundreds of balloons floated from the ceiling and a 28-square-foot cake glowed with 100 sparklers as the arena erupted into a boisterous "Happy Birthday."

In South Dakota, state officials braved freezing temperatures and a stiff wind for re-enactment of the swearing-in ceremony of the state's first governor, Arthur C. Mellette.

Mellette's hometown, Watertown, was declared "Capital for a Day."

Pony Express riders carrying messages between the two states "ran flat out" trying to emulate the riding of their predecessors, said one rider, Ken Tichmak.

North Dakota Gov. George Sinner read a letter of congratulations from President Bush and chided the gloomy predictions of skeptics who question the states' future after years plagued with drought and depressed oil prices.

"Those people don't understand at all what we have here," Sinner said. "But we know all this, and we know our heritage."

Earlier, Sinner kidded his South Dakota counterpart, Gov. George Mickelson, after Mickelson arrived late for a morning radio show in which the governors exchanged birthday greetings.

"I thought it was appropriate that you got in a minute or two late," Sinner told Mickelson. "We did some research, and it turns out that North Dakota was actually the first of these states to become states, and so that minute or two was just exactly right."

Officials said not even President Benjamin Harrison, who signed the Nov. 2 proclamation that created both states from the Dakota Territory, knew which one came first.

"President Harrison really did kind of a wonderful thing when he shuffled those papers and didn't let anybody know who was first," said Jim Sawyer, assistant director of the South Dakota Centennial Commission.

"The president covered the papers up and then he said 'They were born together, they are one, and I shall make them twins.' Then he shuffled them again and signed them. Even he doesn't know which one came first."

North Dakota was admitted as the 39th state and South Dakota as the 40th.

Hearst wanted brash town for Examiner

Hearst News Service

LOS ANGELES — When William Randolph Hearst was looking for a city to open a new newspaper in at the turn of the century, he wanted a brash, forward-looking town ready for his special brand of journalism.

Boston was in the running for a while, but when Hearst came to Los Angeles, he knew this was the place. He opened the Examiner on Dec. 12, 1903.

By 1915, the Examiner had outgrown its quarters at Fifth Street and Broadway and soon moved to a new building on what was then the outskirts of town at 11th Street and Broadway.

It was there that Hearst commissioned Julia Morgan to design the distinctive Spanish Renaissance building that became home to the Examiner for the next 74 years. It also provided the model for Morgan's later work on Hearst Castle in San Simeon, Calif.

In 1922 Hearst bought the Morning Herald, followed nine years later with the acquisition of the Express. Hearst then combined the two newspapers into the evening Herald Express while the Examiner continued to publish in the morning.

The Herald Express and the Examiner were combined into the evening Herald Examiner on Jan. 8, 1962, a move many say contributed to its demise as television took over the evening news market.

Bill Ryan, a former news editor who began his 43-year career with the Los Angeles Hearst papers in 1937, recalled the period of 1947 to 1967 as the glory years for the papers.

"We put out about 1 million papers a day with 12 editions," Ryan said. "We were just running all the time."

Noting it was a time before television and its instant news, Ryan said the newspapers saw it as their job to get the news out to the public as quickly as possible.

"We tried to print stories as they happened," Ryan said. "I used to say we could have an edition out in 20 minutes if something happened."

It was the time when the paper became especially known for its crime stories and probably best remembered for stories on the Black Dahlia murder and mobster Mickey Cohen.

However, in December 1967 the unionized Herald Examiner employees went on strike. It was a long, bitter walkout, dragging out 10 years before it finally was settled.

Although the newspaper continued publishing during those years, the strike had a serious impact on circulation, which was cut in half from its 700,000 pre-strike level.

The newspaper continued to try to boost circulation, including a 1981 effort in which the Hearst Corp. purchased a chain of 28 Los Angeles County weeklies and two small dailies to augment circulation in the suburban areas.

Along the way, the paper became known for its colorful graphics, eye-grabbing headlines and hard-hitting investigative stories that brought it national, state and local awards and honors.

None of the efforts, however, seemed to stop the slide in circulation, which leveled out at about 240,000 daily.

Senate OKs reinstating Oliver North's pension

WASHINGTON (AP) — The House must decide whether to go along with a Senate vote to reinstate Oliver North's $23,000 annual pension, revoked after he was sentenced for illegally shredding documents in the Iran-Contra scandal.

"Let the vendetta end," said Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C., whose bill to restore North's pension was approved by the Senate late Thursday on a 78-17 vote. "Ollie North has been punished enough."

But despite that plea, the debate over whether to give North back his retirement pay dredged up bitter partisan feelings stemming from President Reagan's efforts — with North in a key role — to evade congressional restrictions and fund the Contra war in Nicaragua.

"We are asked to bend the law for someone who broke the law," said Sen. Tom Harkin, D-Iowa. "North's defense was that he was just following orders. But we settled that issue at Nuremberg," a reference to trials of Nazis involved in World War II atrocities.

The issue now goes to the House, where similar legislation has been introduced but not yet acted on.

Senate Judiciary Committee Chairman Joseph Biden, D-Del., said he would vote to put North in jail if he could. But he dropped his opposition to the retirement-pay measure after Helms modified it to apply not just to North, but to any military officer who may later be convicted of shredding documents.

"Even a felon deserves equal treatment under the law," Biden said. "I might want Ollie North protecting me in a foxhole, but I wouldn't want Ollie North teaching my son or daughter ethics."

Senators ignored warnings from colleagues like Sen. Paul Simon, D-Ill., who said the move would set a bad precedent and invite future congressional tampering with criminal cases.

"We should not on this floor change that sentence anymore than we should for Zsa Zsa Gabor," Simon argued.

North, a Marine lieutenant colonel, lost his retirement pay after he was sentenced July 5 to 1,200 hours of community service and a $150,000 fine on three felony counts. He is appealing the convictions.

One of the counts, shredding government documents, stipulates that anyone convicted "forfeit his office" with the U.S. government.

NATION IN BRIEF

Davis' friends remember actress

BURBANK, Calif. (AP) — Hollywood friends of Bette Davis gathered at a movie studio to reminisce about the actress and pay tribute to what Angela Lansbury called her "astonishing legacy" of films.

More than 500 people attended the memorial service on a Warner Bros. sound stage Thursday night. Miss Davis was associated with Warner Bros. for 18 years, though she often feuded with founder Jack Warner.

Miss Davis would fight for the roles she wanted in a time when actresses usually behaved — since studio chiefs considered them replaceable if they didn't, actor James Woods said.

"Bette Davis put herself on the line when she just didn't have to," in standing up for women's rights, Woods said.

Miss Davis died of cancer Oct. 6 in Paris at age 81.

"Thank God she worked as hard as she did in her prime," said Lansbury, star of the television series "Murder She Wrote."

"She has bequeathed to us all an astonishing legacy ... bravura acting of the first order."

Woods, who worked with Miss Davis in the film "The Disappearance of Amy," said his viewing of her 1940s melodrama "Now, Voyager" inspired him in his own career.

One missing in accident

MIAMI (AP) — Rescuers searched by sea and air today for a U.S. Customs Service employee missing after a helicopter crashed off the Florida coast while chasing a suspected drug boat, authorities said.

At sunrise, crews from the Coast Guard, Customs and Air Force doubled the search area to 500 square miles around the site where the Customs helicopter went down about 9:30 p.m. Thursday, said Customs spokesman Michael Sheehan.

The craft crashed in the Cay Sal Bank area.

Senate moves to impeach

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate today voted 89-8 to remove U.S. District Judge Walter L. Nixon of Mississippi from the federal bench in an impeachment case stemming from his perjury conviction.

He was the second federal judge removed from office in the last two weeks by impeachment.

Nixon's fate was sealed as soon as the Senate approved the first of three impeachment articles against him by more than the required two-thirds majority of those voting.

Senators then began the roll call on the second of three impeachment articles.

The 61-year-old Nixon was convicted of perjury in 1986 for lying to a grand jury about his unofficial talk with a prosecutor in a marijuana-smuggling case. He served more than a year in prison and in recent weeks was moved to a New Orleans halfway house.

He has been collecting his 89,500 salary and saying he would like to return to the bench to preside over trials.

Nixon was charged in the first impeachment article with lying to a federal grand jury in 1984 by saying that then-District Attorney Paul Holmes of Forrest County, Miss., never discussed a drug-smuggling case with him.

He was accused in the second article of lying to the grand jury by saying he was never involved in the marijuana-smuggling case.
