Inaugural events are political potpourri

By MICHAEL PUTZEL

WASHINGTON — On the last day of his first term, President Reagan helped his grandchildren build a snowman in the White House Rose Garden as thousands of old-line conservatives and young Republicans gathered in the nation's capital to celebrate the beginning of four more years.

On the eve of his swearing-in to a second term, Reagan and his wife Nancy planned to join Vice President George Bush, his wife Barbara and 6,000 invited, paying guests at a star-studded black-tie gala produced by Frank Sinatra, a personal friend of the Reagans.

The president's younger supporters, many of whom attended a Republican "leadership forum" Saturday morning, were invited to a pre-inaugural concert of their own, across town from the gala at Washington's new Convention Center.

The event featured Kool and the Gang, Jerry Lee Lewis and Johnny Lee, but organizers didn't bill it as an ordinary rock concert. "Coat and tie is recommended," the invitations said.

It was part of the inaugural committee's effort during the four days of inaugural festivities to cement young peoples' allegiance to future GOP candidates.

The 73-year-old Reagan, whose appearance on a college campus at the outset of his poltical career in the 1960s could start a student riot, carried 60 percent of voters between 18 and 30 years old in last fall's election.

In an unannounced and apparently unplanned moment Saturday morning, the nation's oldest president was photographed taking advantage of a gap in his schedule and a recent snowfall to help his son Michael's family make a snowman outside the Oval Office.

The relaxed and happy atmosphere stood in stark contrast to inauguration eve four years ago, when Jimmy Carter spent his last night as president not dancing with his wife and closest friends as he had planned but on a sofa in the Oval Office waiting anxiously for the outcome of the climactic negotiations in Algeria that led the next day to the release of 53 American hostages held for 444 days in Tehran.

Bush has word for oilmen

By PEGGY ROBERSON
Hearst Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON — Vice President George Bush Saturday told Texas reporters the oil industry should "hold its fire" on proposals for tax simplification that would end certain tax breaks because "no presidential decision has been made."

"I would remind you the people have a craving for tax simplification, throughout Texas and every other state," he said. "We need to work out a balance between national security and tax simplification."

Bush agreed with the theory of building "a level playing field" for U.S. business, one in which tax avoidance was not the overriding concern in investment decisions. But, he said, the country must maintain a strong oil and gas industry for national security.

For his part, Bush said he has not taken a position on the tax simplification proposal advocated by the Treasury Department.

Asked about an Energy Department decision to study a site in Deaf Smith County as a high-level nuclear waste repository, Bush said, "As a Texan, I was sensitive to it. But," he said, "there has to be a way to protect people and this (nuclear) industry in a safe way. We have to be sure nothing is done to hurt a community."

The answer to calming the controversy is "much more education."

The vice president said he has dispatched a trusted friend to collect ideas on his political future so he can decide, perhaps two years from now, whether to run for president.

The friend, Nicholas Brady, is a wealthy New Jersey financier who served briefly as a U.S. senator.

"We're not frantically gearing up for politics," said Bush, who will be inaugurated Monday for a second term with President Reagan.

State prison parole, 'good time' policy questioned

By HALLYE JORDAN
Staff Writer

The story of the convicted felon who blew the head off another man in Midland two weeks after he was paroled from a life sentence is only one of several circulated by groups opposed to the early release of prisoners.

"They damn near are back on the street before the ink on the report gets dry," said Lt. Jim Colburn of the Midland Police Department.

The number of prisoners out on parole has attracted the attention of citizens' groups worried about public safety, politicians who hope to emphasize the law-and-order theme and law-enforcement officers tired of arresting and re-arresting habitual offenders.

Midland County District Attorney Al Schorre said six felons sentenced in Midland County courts have been paroled from the Texas Department of Corrections just since he took office Jan. 1.

But while the parole system is frustrating to law enforcement officers, alarming to citizens on the street and frightening to the victims and their families, it's one way in which the prison system can regulate the prison population.

According to Mike Roach, public informations officer for the Texas Board of Pardons and Paroles, the figures of parolees committing other crimes are not that high.

In a year-long study taken of 2,072 prisoners paroled in summer 1983, only 12.7 percent returned to prison. Almost 9 percent went back on a non-assaultive offense, 3 percent returned on an assaultive offense, and 1 percent returned on technical violations.

Of the 445 sentenced for violent crimes who were released, only 54 were convicted of murder, he said. Of the 54, two absconded supervision, 10 had parole reprimands which were light enough to keep them out of prison and 42 successfully returned to normal lives.

The rate of recidivism, he admitted, increases to 25 percent after three years, which is similar to the national average.

"It seems to level off at about that point," Roach said.

Using the premise that a prisoner serving a two-year sentence becomes a trusty at the TDC and earns "good" time, the prisoner could be released as early as three months and seven days, according to information furnished by the Dallas County District Attorney's Office.

When they're eligible

These figures are based on the premise that a prisoner earns "good time" while incarcerated. Parole eligibility falls within the exclusive powers of the governor of Texas, acting through the Board of Pardons and Paroles. Neither the judge nor the jury has the power to determine when the prisoner is released from the Texas Department of Corrections.

Trial's verdict often hinges on jury selection process

By LAWRENCE BUDD
Staff Writer

ODESSA — It all comes down to the collective opinion of 12 people.

In trial after trial, lawyers summon their legal knowledge, experience and gift for the spoken word.

Defense attorneys extol the virtues of the defendants — rarely admitting guilt and going to great lengths to prove the opposite.

Prosecutors refer to the same defendants as if they were already guilty — rarely admitting that those on trial are anything but the worst brand of felon.

But when all is said, 12 people are left with the task of deciding the legal fate of the person or persons on trial.

Jury selection, known by those in the legal community as "voir dire," is the process which leads to the selection of the 12-person panel.

The result of many trials hinges on the make-up of this panel — left to sort through the law, emotions and rhetoric that go into a trial and reach a verdict.

This is where E.V. Rogers comes in.

Rogers, a counselor with a bachelor's degree in psychology, has been working with defense attorneys in Midland and Odessa for the past five months.

City Council races already shaping up

By LANA CUNNINGHAM

■ School, hospital boards have 'openings' — Page 2B

Two of the three Midland City Council members whose places are up for election this spring have decided to seek another two-year term, and two other residents already have announced their intentions to file. But the filing period doesn't begin until Feb. 1, indicating there may be a stronger than usual interest in the election this year.

The increased interest may stem from a single-member district plan the city would be using for the first time since it was approved in December 1984 by U.S. District Judge Lucius D. Bunton of Midland. It was forwarded to the U.S. Justice Department for final approval, which has yet to come.

Whether or not the plan is OK'ed in time for the April 6 election, city officials are planning to follow the single-member district guidelines, according to City Attorney Joe Nuessle. Meanwhile, city staff people are looking at the voting precinct lines and trying to come up with a plan which conforms with the county's and in which some residents wouldn't have to vote at two places the same day.

Record low temperature likely in Basin today

From Staff and Wire Reports

Record high temperatures on Saturday may be followed by record lows today with the arrival Saturday evenings of a fast-moving cold front.

The front, with gusty winds whipping up dust, blew into Midland around 6:15 p.m. Saturday with cold arctic air rapidly lowering the warm temperatures Midlanders had been enjoying.

"The record low was 13 degrees in 1963," said a spokesman for the National Weather Service. "That will probably be broken tomorrow."

Saturday had record-breaking temperatures as well. But warm ones.

"A record high of 74 degrees on Saturday tied for the same date in 1951," said the spokesman.

Temperatures for today and Monday are expected to be very cold. A high of 20 degrees is predicted today with a low of 10 degrees tonight.

Cloudy skies and winds from the north and northeast are predicted for today.

More clouds and a high in the mid-20s are expected Monday.

Austin voters favor transit authority but split on moving airport

AUSTIN (AP) — Area voters were leaning toward adopting a city transit authority but were evenly split on whether to move the city's airport in early election returns Saturday night.

With 33 out of 136 precincts reporting shortly before midnight, 60 percent of voters favored a transit authority, but the vote was 50-50 on an airport move, officials said.

"We're looking extremely well, but it's still early," said Alan C. Wulkan, executive director of Capital Metro. "The city of Austin is critical, but other areas are also important."

City officials were still optimistic about a record voter turnout on 20 propositions after some precincts stayed open past 7 p.m. to accommodate the long line of voters.

"There were long lines around the airport and long lines all day," said Karen Strong, city spokeswoman. And deputy city clerk Betty Brown said precinct judges called all day asking for more ballots and voting machines.

Officials said they were expecting a 30 percent voter turnout.

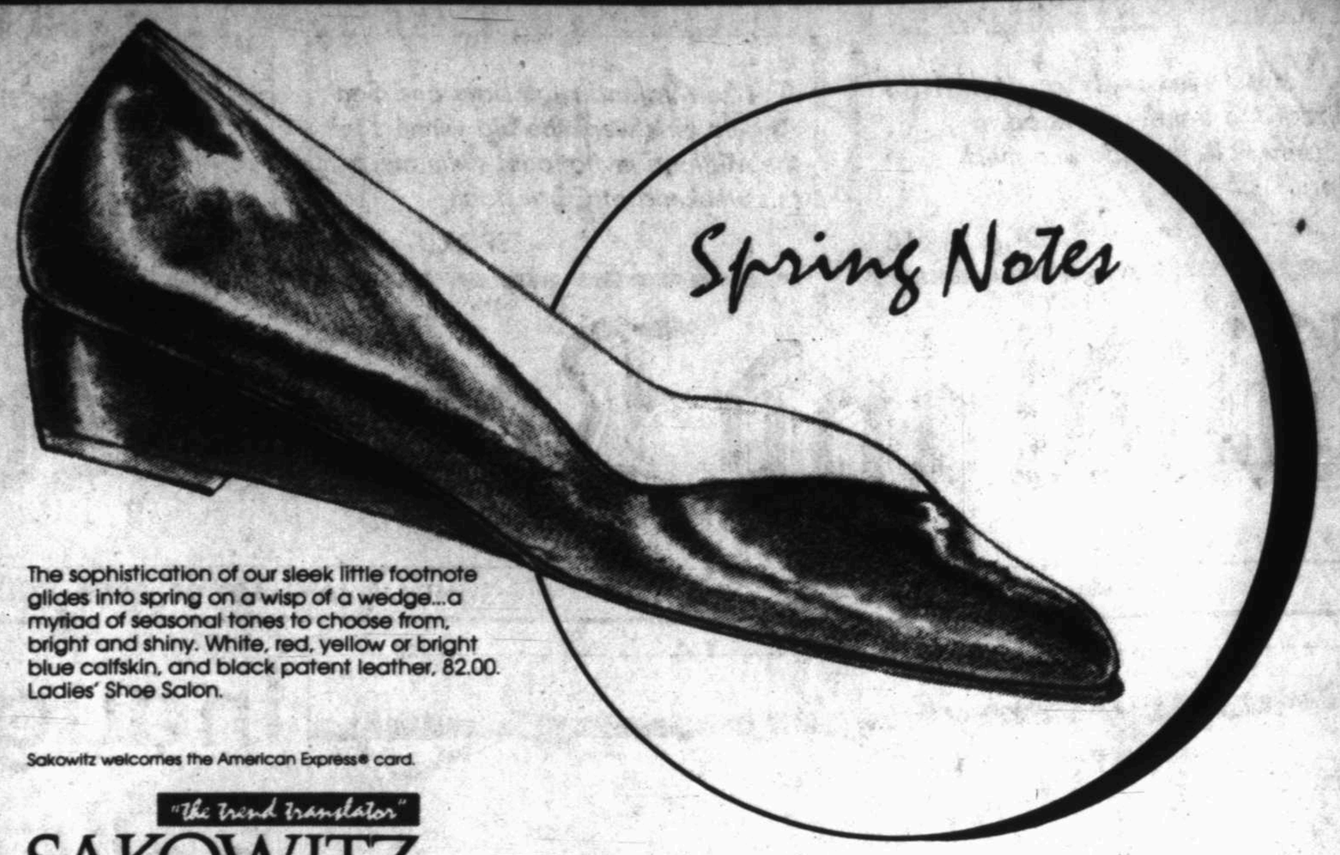

A proposition on whether to move Austin's Robert Mueller Municipal Airport stirred the most controversy of the 20 propositions on Saturday's ballot.

Proponents of the airport move said the current airport is not equipped to handle Austin's booming population and increased airport use.

An airport task force recommended the airport be moved and a new airport be built at an unspecified location probably outside the city.

The plan called for the city to purchase 5,300 acres of land for a new airport and also have land use controls of another 10,000 acres surrounding the site.

The task force projected the new airport to cost $353 million. The present airport is expected to sell for $200 million.

Five women's murders chill Fort Worth

"The grisly discoveries of the remains of three murdered young women and the unexplained disappearance of two others suggest that there exist one or more extremely sick persons...consumed by a passion for killing, particularly for killing attractive young women"

— A newspaper editorial.

FORT WORTH (AP) — Later, after the fire, neighbors would recall hearing loud voices that night and the sounds of a car speeding from the garage apartment on the city's southwest side.

It was Sept. 30, a Sunday. A pivotal date.

Firefighters attributed the blaze to a burning cigarette dropped on a mattress, but found no sign of the apartment's occupant, Catherine Davis, 23, a country club employee.

Friends later described the missing young woman as friendly and outgoing with dark hair and the face and figure of a model, which she once aspired to be.

Police were concerned. But hardly alarmed.

A week before Halloween, Cindy Heller, 23, a 1983 graduate of Texas Christian University, stopped at a traffic light on the southwest side to help a stranded motorist, Kazumi Gillespie.

Though they had never met, the two young women spent the next two hours together at a restaurant-bar while Ms. Gillespie telephoned male friends for assistance.

Unable to reach her friends, Ms. Gillespie asked Miss Heller to leave a note about her car problems at the friends' nearby apartment. They separated at 11:20 p.m.

THE FRIENDS said later they returned after midnight to find the note pinned on the door. The next day, Oct. 23, Miss Heller's car was found nearby, its interior scorched by fire and a door handle smudged with blood.

Those who knew Cindy Heller described the second missing woman as beautiful and vivacious and a friendly competitor in the Miss Fort Worth beauty pageants of 1981 and 1982.

Police concern mounted.

Angela Ewert, 21, an employee of Arlington radio station KEGL, left her home on Dec. 10 to go with her fiance to have a new engagement ring sized. She did not live on the southwest side, but her fiance's parents did.

It was not yet midnight when she left their Wedgwood home that Monday and stopped to buy gasoline at a 7-Eleven store a few blocks away.

Then she vanished. Her 1984 Mercury was located the next day several miles from the Wedgwood area on Loop 820. The doors were locked and a flat tire had been changed.

A broken knife was found near the car.

Investigators soon learned that Angela Ewert was no less attractive than the other missing women and that she occasionally modeled clothing at the Dallas Apparel Mart and competed in high school and college beauty and talent contests.

"We got a problem," said police homicide Sgt. Jim Rutledge.

AT THIS point, the Fort Worth Star-Telegram printed a chilling front page story that chronicled the deaths and disappearances of nearly a dozen local women, all unsolved.

On Dec. 30, a Sunday, Sarah Kashka, 15, came to Fort Worth from her home in Denton to attend a party that apparently had been canceled.

She and her date went to a fast-food restaurant and back to the home of a friend where Sarah was staying. The friend was not yet home.

At Sarah's request, her date told police, he took her to a Wedgwood apartment complex so that she could visit another friend. He said he dropped her off and drove away.

The apartment was near the 7-Eleven store where Angela Ewert had stopped to buy gas less than three weeks earlier.

Residents of the apartment said they were not at home when Sarah arrived, and police believe she walked toward a Dairy Queen just minutes away.

She never made it.

Her body was found Jan. 1 in the marsh area near Mountain Creek in southwest Dallas. She had been stabbed to death.

Fort Worth police Detective Capt. Ben Dumas said there was "substantial" evidence that Sarah was killed at the Mountain Creek site and that her slaying probably was not linked to the disappearances of the three Fort Worth women.

AT ANOTHER point, Dumas noted that "We can't establish any thread, because we only have one girl found."

That would soon change.

On Jan. 5, children playing along a creek that feeds a small lake on the TCU campus stumbled onto the partial remains of a young female.

Senator won't back water plan unless Stacy built

AUSTIN (AP) — A veteran West Texas senator says he cannot support a statewide water plan unless the building of the controversial and long-delayed Stacy Dam is in sight.

"Why bother? If we can't build Stacy or other upstream projects, I don't see what's in it for West Texas," said Sen. Grant Jones, D-Abilene, on Friday.

Observers say recent Texas Supreme Court decisions have thrown out the traditional method of allocating water in state rivers and have lessened the chances for construction of the Stacy project on the upper Colorado River.

The project was planned to supply a major part of West Texas with water into the 21st century.

Negotiations have started between the Lower Colorado River Authority in Austin — which opposes the plan — and the Colorado River Municipal Water District in Big Spring — a key backer of the dam.

The Texas Water Commission has delayed a final review of water rights in the lower Colorado River while the two river districts complete negotiations.

Sources close to the commission said it will wait on the two district's negotiations, hoping they clear the way for West Texas' support of the water legislation.

The commission, however, is expected to reduce the Austin river authority's water rights.

Formal deliberations on a major bill, which would provide $600 million for construction of water and sewer projects and conservation measures, begin Tuesday in the House Natural Resources Committee.

The Supreme Court ruled that because all the water in the Colorado River has been allocated — much of it to the Lower Colorado River Authority — no water is left for the Stacy reservoir.

Since much of the water that the LCRA has rights to goes unused, the two districts are negotiating over a possible transfer of some of those rights.

Agreement sought on budget cuts

By CLIFF HAAS
AP Economic Writer

WASHINGTON — Reagan administration officials said Saturday they hope to reach agreement by the end of next month with Senate Republicans on a compromise package of about $50 billion in federal spending cuts that will be necessary to hold the budget deficit to about $180 billion next year.

The officials also indicated that the political pressures building for the 1986 congressional elections leave the administration and GOP senators little choice but to agree on such a package, including less Pentagon spending than President Reagan wants and more than the senators want.

The comments about the budget Reagan will submit to Congress on Feb. 4 were made on condition that their source not be identified.

Administration officials last week estimated the value of proposed spending cuts they will propose to Congress at about $50 billion, leaving a $180 billion deficit in the 1986 fiscal year beginning Oct. 1.

On Saturday, officials indicated that $50 billion has become a benchmark for the cuts they hope to see Congress enact this year and the president's opposition to any tax increases this year to trim deficits was reiterated.

"There can't be any taxes in it," an administration official said of the planned deficit-reduction package. And $50 billion in spending cuts for next year "is the minimum acceptable target for the package."

The president had set a goal of reducing deficits to less than $100 billion by 1988 — a level roughly equal to 2 percent of the gross national product. But administration officials previously acknowledged that the budget the president sends to Congress will fall short of that target.

Senate Republicans, with the cooperation of the White House, are trying to draft a plan that will reach the $100 million goal. White House budget director David A. Stockman has estimated that without action, deficits will be $225 billion to $240 billion in each of the next three years.

But now, it appears that the administration is focusing on achieving the $50 billion in cuts for next year.

The officials emphasized that doing that will take quick action.

"Everybody realizes there's a window of opportunity that doesn't last very long," he said, adding that after about six months action may not be possible.

"Clearly the lead and the initiative has to start on the Senate side," where Republicans control the chamber, the official said.

In addition, Democratic leaders who control the House have said they want to see the Senate Republicans act first this year.

Administration officials want to move quickly, and agree on a package by the end of Congress' recess next month for the Washington-Lincoln birthdays.

"I think there's a decent chance that sometime in the period between when the budget goes up (to Congress on Feb. 4) and the end of the recess (in late February,) we should come to a consensus in the Senate and ... an agreement with the administration that would allow the Senate then to bring a major deficit-reduction package to the floor," the official said.

Senate action, administration officials reason, would put enormous pressure on the House.

"The House will be in a very difficult position if we can get agreement on this package and pass it in the Senate. ... Then it will be clear that the administration and the Senate could move forward effectively, decisively on the fiscal problems ... and now is the House simply going to use its (Democratic) majority to block final implementation?" the official said.

However, the officials concede that even getting agreement between the administration and GOP senators will be difficult considering that the president is pressing for freezing, cutting or eliminating a broad range of domestic spending programs.

But the administration is counting on thoughts about the 1986 congressional elections to spur quick action by the GOP Senate this year.

The pressure facing the GOP senators is "there's 22 of them up (for re-election) in '86, and ... all the rest of them are up in '86 in terms of their powers and prerogatives as committee chairmen" if Republicans lose their majority in the chamber and Democrats take over, the official said.

"They're scared to death of it (deficits) in terms of where the economy might be in November of 1986," he said.

Perhaps the largest single obstacle to the senators and the White House reaching an agreement on a deficit-reduction package will be the issue of Pentagon spending.

The president will recommend only about a $9 billion reduction in planned military outlays for next year, while some in the Senate have indicated they will seek a greater slowdown in the Pentagon buildup.

Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger has said he always is reluctant to specify an initial Pentagon spending figure to Congress because legislators cut his recommendation every year and there must be negotiations. Thus, there is no secret that the president likely will have to accept a lower Pentagon spending figure than he proposes and the Senate Republicans will have to accept higher spending than they want.

STATE

An Arctic cold front packing the coldest weather of the season lashed across Texas Saturday, plunging temperatures 30 degrees within a few hours and toppling power lines and trees with wind gusts up to 65 mph.

High wind warnings were posted for North Texas Saturday night as the cold front charged across the state, and wind chills of minus 25 degrees were expected.

Frigid blasts following the front will bring the coldest weather of the winter to Texas through at least Monday, the National Weather Service predicted.

In Wichita Falls, the temperature fell 30 degrees in three hours Saturday afternoon. Winds gusting up to 65 mph felled power lines and trees, police said.

"We have two or three different reports of power outages, and several poles and trees blown down across roadways," Wichita Falls police officer Mark Tomaselli said. No injuries were reported.

At Dallas-Fort Worth International Airport, the mercury plummeted 21 degrees in five minutes as the front swept through about 6:45 p.m.

Its nasty edge was expected to reach the Houston area by midnight.

"The front has resulted in the coldest temperatures in Oklahoma, Kansas and Nebraska" for the season, said Bill Alexander, a weather service forecaster in Fort Worth.

And "there's nothing between us and Kansas but a few barbed wire fences," he added.

"It will be a bitterly cold Sunday morning, and we won't see anything above freezing before Tuesday," Alexander said.

RACES

The lawsuit was filed in May 1984 by the League of United Latin American Citizens and Midland's Black Advisory Council against the Midland City Council. The plan calls for a council with four members elected by districts, two at-large and a mayor at-large. Currently, the five-member council is elected at-large — three in odd-numbered years; two council members and the mayor in even-numbered years.

Up for re-election this year are Jesse Hatfield, place 1; Gordon Marcum II, place 2; and David Godfrey, place 3. Under the new plan, Districts 1 and 2 each will elect a councilman and two others will be elected at-large by all registered voters.

District 1 encompasses northwest Midland and includes Green Tree Country Club. It is bounded by Loop 250 on the west; Wadley Avenue, Neely Avenue, Scharbauer Drive and Golf Course Road on the south; Big Spring Street on the east; and the city limits to the north.

District 2 takes in the area east of Big Spring Street and includes the Midland Country Club, Hogan Park and Ranchland Hills Country Club. It runs south of the Missouri Pacific Railroad tracks, along Taylor Park, east to Francis Avenue and south along Rankin Highway.

Hatfield, who has served two terms, and Godfrey, who is completing his first, live in District 1, and Godfrey said he plans to seek re-election as the District 1 councilman. Hatfield said he hadn't made up his mind yet.

Marcum, who lives in District 3, said he has no choice but to run at-large. "I think it extremely important to have some continuity on the council in changing from an at-large system to the single member districts. We need someone who knows where we're coming from and where we're going. I believe this single-member district plan can work."

Nuessle said he was hoping to get the final approval on the plan by the end of last week. "A woman in the Justice Department has wanted additional information and we've been getting it to her. She told one person she had the case ready to go to the Review Committee."

If the plan is rejected, Nuessle said the case might go back to Bunton or it would have to be appealed. "But I'm confident we'll hold the election on the court order signed by Bunton."

The additional information requested included racial percentages in each of the four districts and the "racial distribution in areas outside the city limits. I never understood what that had to do with the voting strength inside the city limits," Nuessle said.

While waiting on the Justice Department, the city has been working on the voting precinct lines with these new districts, he said. "We've had to conform our voting precinct lines to conform to the single member-district lines. It's possible someone may have to vote two different places on election day. But we try to work with the school district so they won't have to go to two different places."

Also to be elected April 6 are Midland Independent School District trustees and Midland Memorial Hospital directors. In the past, the entities have joined forces with all races put on one ballot and the voting precinct lines identical.

The boundary lines for the single member districts cross county voting precinct lines in six instances, according to Nuessle. "We need to get with the county and have them redraw the lines.

"A state statute says cities will establish voting precinct lines, but they can't put parts of the county precinct in two or more city precincts," he said.

PAROLE

A felon serving a 10-year-sentence with good time could be eligible for parole in a year, four months and six days. One serving a 60-year or life term would be eligible for parole in eight years and 10 days.

"It used to be for each day you were in the penitentiary and gave blood, went to chapel, worked hard, you got extra days credit for good behavior each day," Schorre said. "It used to work out where you could get out in one-fifth the time you were supposed to serve. Lately, due to all the overcrowding in the prisons, some are getting out in one-ninth of the time."

The Texas District Attorneys Association, the Department of Public Safety and the citizen group Associated Texans Against Crime are only a few of the organizations fighting to change the court system banning juries from discussions of possible parole when assessing sentences.

"At our regional ATAC hearings we learned that 196 life offenders were paroled in 1983 and that the average inmate in TDC only serves 24 months," State Sen. J.E. "Buster" Brown, ATAC chairman, said in a news release.

"In West Texas, we heard about a brutal murderer who received a life sentence and therefore was not supposed to be up for parole until he had served one-third of his sentence," Brown said. "But the district attorney received a letter saying the convicted murderer was up for parole after only six years."

The parole law, which states a person is eligible for parole after serving one-third of the sentence or 20 years, whichever is less, also imposes stipulations for more aggressive crimes, Schorre said. If a deadly weapon was used, for example, then the prisoner must serve at least two years. That statute overrides others, he said.

"The sheriff, the district attorney and the judge are notified by the Board of Pardons and Paroles when a felon is up for parole," Schorre said. "We have a chance to object to his release but you've got to have reasons."

In Midland County, the policy is to oppose each possible parole, he said.

Proponents of allowing jurors to discuss parole possibilties argue that jurors have a right to understand how soon the defendant could be released from prison. Present law prohibits jurors from discussing the possibility and violations could result in case reversals, Schorre said.

Because the court, during jury charges, tells the jury to not discuss parole during deliberations, prosecuting attorneys can only attempt to nurture the thought in each individual juror's mind.

"Since you can't even mention parole, they get up there and ask them to give the guy six years, 11 months and seven days," Schorre said. "You come out with a wild number hoping they'll snap on it and remember the parole possibilities individually. It's a travesty. It's the prosecutors playing games."

Schorre said he thinks the law has a good chance of being passed. "I think people are fed up with (the numbers paroled)," he said. "We've got the right people pushing it and now we've got a lot of citizen groups involved."

But others disagree.

"Parole is not a 'give me' situation," said Midland attorney Edward Garza. "The prisoner has to do certain things to receive it. If we didn't have a parole system, the mental state of those people would be almost impossible to control. This gives them something to work toward, a goal, the light at the end of the tunnel.

"The problem," he said, "is it's speculation as to when a prisoner is going to be allowed to be released from prison. There is no sound basis on which they can assess his time. The juror might think why not give him two-thirds more time if he might be released in one-third of his sentence."

"If people knew what the parole was they'd up the sentence to get the guy to serve what they really want him to serve," Schorre agreed.

But not all prisoners are released on parole and not all prisoners earn "good" time, he said.

Despite the horror expressed from the public when a convicted murderer is released on parole, Jack R. Swan, U.S. Probation Officer for the Western District of Texas, noted the Board of Pardons and Paroles would rather have a murderer let out on parole where he will be supervised than for him to hit the street and disappear.

Garza pointed out proper supervision, quick parole revocations without a trial or a chance to post bond and submitting to random urine samples as only a few of the restrictions parolees face.

"It's very stringent," he said. "It's a trauma to be out in circulation again and while the parole officer can be an enemy, he can also be a friend" in the adjustment to the real world.

JURY

What started when a Midland attorney hired Rogers' wife to help prepare a client for testifying at a trial has grown into a business.

"There was no one doing it," said Rogers of the decision to market his expertise among the legal community.

"There's not any deep, dark secrets," he said. Using information on the human personality, Rogers looks for prejudices and personality traits contrary to those he feels would be found in effective jurors.

"I try to eliminate people that we feel would be prejudiced against the defendant," he said. "I try to get 12 men and women that can objectively listen to the proceedings."

Rogers said authoritative people are the worst kind to have on juries from the defense standpoint. They may try to manipulate other jurors and are "guilty prone," he said.

Authoritarians can be picked out by their occupation, which they list on jury questionnaires, or by their actions during questioning by the attorneys, said Rogers.

"Some people, because of their religious affiliation, are guilty prone," Rogers said.

And the opposite of authoritarians — people with weak personalities — make poor jurors, he said.

"We don't want anyone on that jury that is a very weak person," he said, explaining that they are more likely to be manipulated by authoritative jurors included in the final dozen.

In some cases, Rogers will set a desired age range. Historically, ethnic groups lean more toward the defense, but the prosecution usually eliminates them from the final group.

Determinations based on these factors depend on the case the jury will be hearing. A certain age group might be more receptive to the defendant or defense witnesses, or more likely to vote for the defense.

"Sometimes, you want the motherly type figure there, sometimes you don't," said Rogers.

In a rape case, women are more likely to be prejudiced against the defendant, but it is unlikely all can be eliminated by the defense under the system set up for jury selection.

So Rogers sets an age limit for the women he wants to be included on the jury.

"People under 45 were raised under a different set of values," he said, suggesting that older jurors are more likely to cling to a more conservative set of values.

"What it amounts to is a lot of common sense," Rogers said.

"I don't even want to know the legal aspects of what is going on," he said.

As far as the possibility of helping a guilty man go free, Rogers said, "There are some things I do not do."

"I have never been asked by an attorney to stack a jury or teach a defendant to lie," he said. "I am not going to do that."

Even when he is not involved in a case, Rogers can often be found wandering about the Ector County Courthouse or listening to trial proceedings.

"I have never been involved in anything that is as exciting as what I do," he said. "It's just like a kid with a new tool — I love what I do."

BUSH

"For four years, I have kept politics totally out of my staff," Bush said. "But now there may be things I need to do to protect a prudent decision."

Joining the vice president were Mrs. Bush, three of the couple's children with their spouses, including George and Laura Bush of Midland, Texas. The wide-ranging press conference was conducted in the Treaty Room of the old Executive Office Building, a part of the White House complex.

The Bush family then visited "off the record" with approximately 25 Texas reporters and photographers at a coffee-and-doughnuts brunch in the vice president's office. At that session, Midlander George Bush told reporters he was in the oil business and said "somebody in this family has to try to make a buck."

He joked that it was a jolt to read his father's financial disclosures and learn he was not going to inherit much.

At a Saturday night "black tie and boots ball" honoring the Bushes, the Texas State Society in Washington presented the former Texans with a seven-year-old longhorn steer from San Antonio named "Mr. V.P."

The steer was escorted into the ballroom of the Washington Hilton to greet more than 4,000 partying Texans.

Mr. and Mrs. Gene Canavan and Mr. and Mrs. A. Wayne Wright, partners in Dominion Cattle Co., donated the steer. It will be sold at auction in San Antonio May 11-12 and the proceeds used to benefit M.D. Anderson Hospital's Department of Hematology and Oncology, specializing in the treatment of leukemia. The hospital is in Houston.

Canavan, in a preview presentation Saturday afternoon at the Bush residence, said he expects the mottled red-and-white animal with a six-foot horn span to bring $100,000.

A descendent of longhorns in the "preservation herd" in the Wichita Wildlife Refuge, Mr. V.P. was chauffered non-stop to Washington by Grady Grabbs and his son Michael of Winona. Next week, they will make the return trip to Texas.

"Mr. V.P. is enjoying his visit," Canavan joked with reporters, who were cautioned not to shout or raise their voices to risk a stampede. "He said he always wanted to see Washington."

Rep. Tom Loeffler, R-Hunt, ball chairman, told the Bushes the unusual gift was intended "to remind them of home."

"We appreciate the whole spirit you all bring up here," he told the Texans.

The Houston hospital "touched our lives years ago," Bush said, referring to the treatment received at M.D. Anderson by a young daughter who died from leukemia.

The youngest Bush grandson, Sam LaBlond, wrapped in a quilt against biting cold and brisk winds, was brought out to see his "Gramby's" longhorn steer.

Houston votes down gay rights proposals

HOUSTON (AP) — Two anti-discrimination proposals, which together are dubbed Houston's "gay rights ordinance," were defeated overwhelmingly Saturday in heavy voting.

The measures both lost by more than 4-1 margins.

With 100 percent of the vote reported, the first proposal was rejected 198,563-44,706, or 82 percent to 18 percent. The second issue fell 197,763-43,303, also 82 percent to 18 percent.

The vote totals represented 29 percent of Houston's registered voters.

Mayor Kathryn J. Whitmire, who backed the proposals, said she was disappointed and surprised.

"Quite frankly, I still don't believe the majority of Houstonians support discrimination," she said. "We probably did not do a good enough job of educating that this did not provide special privileges for anyone."

"I expected a heavier than normal turnout," said Councilman John Goodner, a leader of the anti-gay forces. "I am almost astonished at the turnout.

"I think they're saying the issue never should have come up."

Rev. Bill Oliver, of Citizens for United Houston, the major organization backing the proposals, said the outcome did not mean Houstonians "are committed to hate.

"It means a lot of people got taken by a great deal of the misrepresentation," he said.

Neither ballot issue mentioned the words "homosexual" or "gay," but residents were asked to decide whether sexual preference should be barred as a consideration in hiring, firing and promoting city employees.

Opponents insisted that approval would grant legal status to homosexuals in the nation's fourth-largest city. Backers argued that the proposals would merely extend anti-discrimination protection.

Turnout was reported heavy at many polling places across the city, with 25 to 30 percent of registered voters casting ballots, officials said. In Montrose, an area considered the heart of Houston's gay community, turnout ranged from 50 to 60 percent.

One survey had forecast a turnout of more than 30 percent of the city's 725,000 registered voters.

Proposition A would bar the city from discriminating on the basis of "sexual orientation" in its hiring, promoting or firing of employees.

Proposition B would allow the city to continue to monitor the hiring of women, blacks and Hispanics but would block such record-keeping according to sexual orientation.

AUSTIN NOTEBOOK

Legislative rumor mill zeroes in on education

By BILL KIDD
Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Many tougued-rumor, that ancient sower of discord and confusion, continues practicing her wicked arts in the Texas Legislature. And higher education seems a particular target of her malice.

University officials around the state felt twinges — even spasms — of fear recently as reports circulated of plans to shut down schools as cost-saving measures, in view of the Legislature's need for funds.

Like all the best products of rumor, there's a basis of truth in the misinformation which has been circulating.

Universities are understandably nervous, as are all state agencies, because of budget cuts which will be necessary if the 1985 Legislature is to adopt a budget for 1986-87 without increasing taxes. And legislators have indicated that they'll do virtually anything to avoid having to pass a tax hike.

Members of the Legislative Budget Board, who were in the midst of their budget preparation efforts when Comptroller Bob Bullock took another chunk out of the projected revenues for the new biennium, brought their recommendations within expected revenues by funding higher education at an average of 74 percent of the level for the current biennium.

Those cuts would amount to $281.7 million for the University of Texas and Texas A&M systems, with other schools losing $302 million (and junior colleges $92.4 million and medical and health care schools $63.9 million).

Those cuts had university officials using terms like "shock," "disaster," and "catastrophe."

UT lobbyist Gerald Hill, a former legislator, said the Legislative Budget Board had indeed "cut through the fat," through the red meat "and into the bone."

And Larry Temple, chairman of the Coordinating Board, Texas College and University System, said higher education can't be given the kind of decrease being proposed, and still be asked to provide the quality of education Texans say they want.

Whether the cuts will stay at the levels proposed is another question, of course; LBB members noted, in making their recommendation, that they're required to present the Legislature with a balanced budget, but it's then up to members to decide how they may want to shift the cuts around.

Conventional wisdom is that the cuts will be redistributed, although doing so is not going to be an easy task. But given that background, it's easy to see why the idea that universities may be targeted for closing has caused such concern.

What set off the rumor mill was a remark, more or less in passing, by Speaker Gib Lewis to reporters at a pre-session briefing that some members had suggested the possibility of closing or consolidating some schools.

Merging North Texas State University and Texas Woman's University at Denton, and merging or eliminating Sul Ross State University at Alpine and UT-Permian Basin had been mentioned, Lewis indicated.

Some reports on the meeting indicated the talk about closings and mergers was a definite plan, although Lewis subsequently denied that any such plan was made. He also declined to identify the members who were raising those possibilities.

And members with schools which would be affected indicated they hadn't heard of anything — other than what everyone else had heard — regarding such plans.

But the rumors continued to spread, multiply and diversify, with Higher Education Commissioner Kenneth Ashworth being brought into the game, when he was asked about the possiblity of universities being closed.

Ashworth told reporters he thought that if schools were to be closed, that the branch campuses of some schools (such as the Victoria branch of the University of Houston or Texarkana branch of East Texas State University) might be the first targets.

But that wasn't, Ashworth said, following reports and reinterpretations of what he'd said, to nominate any schools for closing (and he went on to say that he thinks the schools that are in existence are needed.)

In fact, Ashworth says, Texas needs to be paying more, not less, attention to higher education needs, if it intends to follow the goal of making the state a high-tech center.

Gov. Mark White has said he agrees with that and that he doesn't think the Legislature will be closing any schools (and that he certainly doesn't think that's a good idea).

Drama student who killed himself 'a deep kind of guy'

ARLINGTON (AP) — A high school drama student who climbed onto a classroom stage and killed himself with a sawed-off shotgun as a teacher and four classmates watched was "a real deep kind of guy," a classmate says.

James Austin Stailey's death Friday afternoon led the cancellation of two performances of a school play — a murder mystery called "The Real Inspector Hound" — in which the 17-year-old senior played a lead role.

After confirming Stailey's death by an announcement over a public address system, Arlington High School officials sent students home early.

Police spokesman Jim Willett said Stailey walked into the school drama room about 1 p.m. Friday, sat on a stool on the small stage, and began asking students and teacher Carla Posey "heavy philosophical questions" about the meaning of life.

Stailey then pulled a sawed-off, .410-gauge shotgun from a brown briefcase, placed it against his right temple and pulled the trigger, Willett said.

"It happened before anyone could react," Willett said.

Stailey was pronounced dead at the scene. The Tarrant County medical examiner's office said it would perform an autopsy.

Right of parents to teach son at home challenged

EL PASO (AP) — The right of two fundamentalist Christian parents to educate their son at home through correspondence courses is being challenged by the El Paso Independent School District.

Richard and Kay Wells are appealing a 1984 ruling in which they were fined $200 each plus court costs for refusing to enroll their son Frank, now 14, in school.

Their case was argued in El Paso on Friday before a three-judge panel of a state appeals court. No ruling was handed down.

Lawyers for both sides said it was the first time that a challenge to the state's compulsory school attendance laws ever reached an appeals court in Texas.

At issue is whether the home correspondence course, provided by the American Christian Academy of Colleyville, Texas, fits within the state's definition of a school.

Montford wants bonds added to water legislation

Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — A proposed water plan for the state should be strengthened through the addition of $200 million in state bonds to provide financial assistance for flood control projects, say members of the Texas Water Development Board.

The board, which authorizes bond packages for local communities seeking improvements to water systems, passed a resolution supporting a recently-filed bill outlining a statewide water plan and recommending ways to strengthen it. The bill is to be considered by the 1985 Legislature.

The bill, filed by Sen. John Montford, D-Lubbock, and Rep. Tom Craddick, R-Midland, calls for issuance of $600 million in state bonds for such projects as reservoir construction and sewage treatment plants.

Montford has said he wants to see the bond provision expanded by $250 million to fund agricultural loans for farmers in need of assistance.

The resolution unanimously approved by the water development board Thursday also calls for providing "state regulation of groundwater in critical areas...where legal underground water conservation districts are not created pursuant to the provisions of the proposed legislation."

The resolution, which was approved without discussion, also notes the board strongly supports passage of the water legislation "in order to continue development, protection and management of the state's water resources."

The legislation is similar to a series of water bills which died at the end of the last session two years ago.

DEATHS

The body was headless and decomposed.

Four days later, after the skull had been recovered from the lake, medical experts identified the body as that of Cindy Heller, whose car had been found less than three miles away.

They attributed death to strangulation and indicated she had been tortured.

At this point, the public outcry became a howl. Mayor Bob Bolen's office was besieged by phone calls, and reward money in the cases approached $60,000, including $50,000 offered by Cindy's parents, Mark and Peggy Heller of Glencoe, Ill.

MEANWHILE POLICE officials quietly assembled a 40-member task force to deal with the rising number of deaths and disappearances.

Even as word of the task force leaked out, a fifth name was added to its investigtive list.

Lisa Griffin, 20, a pretty and popular waitress at a west side club called Bustin' Loose, was found shot to death the night of Jan. 9.

Her body, fully clothed, was found along railroad tracks in southwest Fort Worth but not in the Wedgwood area.

Four days later, sheriff's deputies, acting on a tip and without the knowledge of the newly created task force, arrested and charged a former mental patient with the slaying of Lisa Griffin.

The arrest was based on a fingerprint, but after police checks, officials acknowledged there were questions about the validity of the evidence and authorities ordered him released.

Contract approved for MARC services

Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — A $150,000 contract has been approved for the Mexican American Research Center (MARC) to provide economic and job development services to Lubbock, Garza, El Paso and Presidio counties, Gov. Mark White announced Thursday.

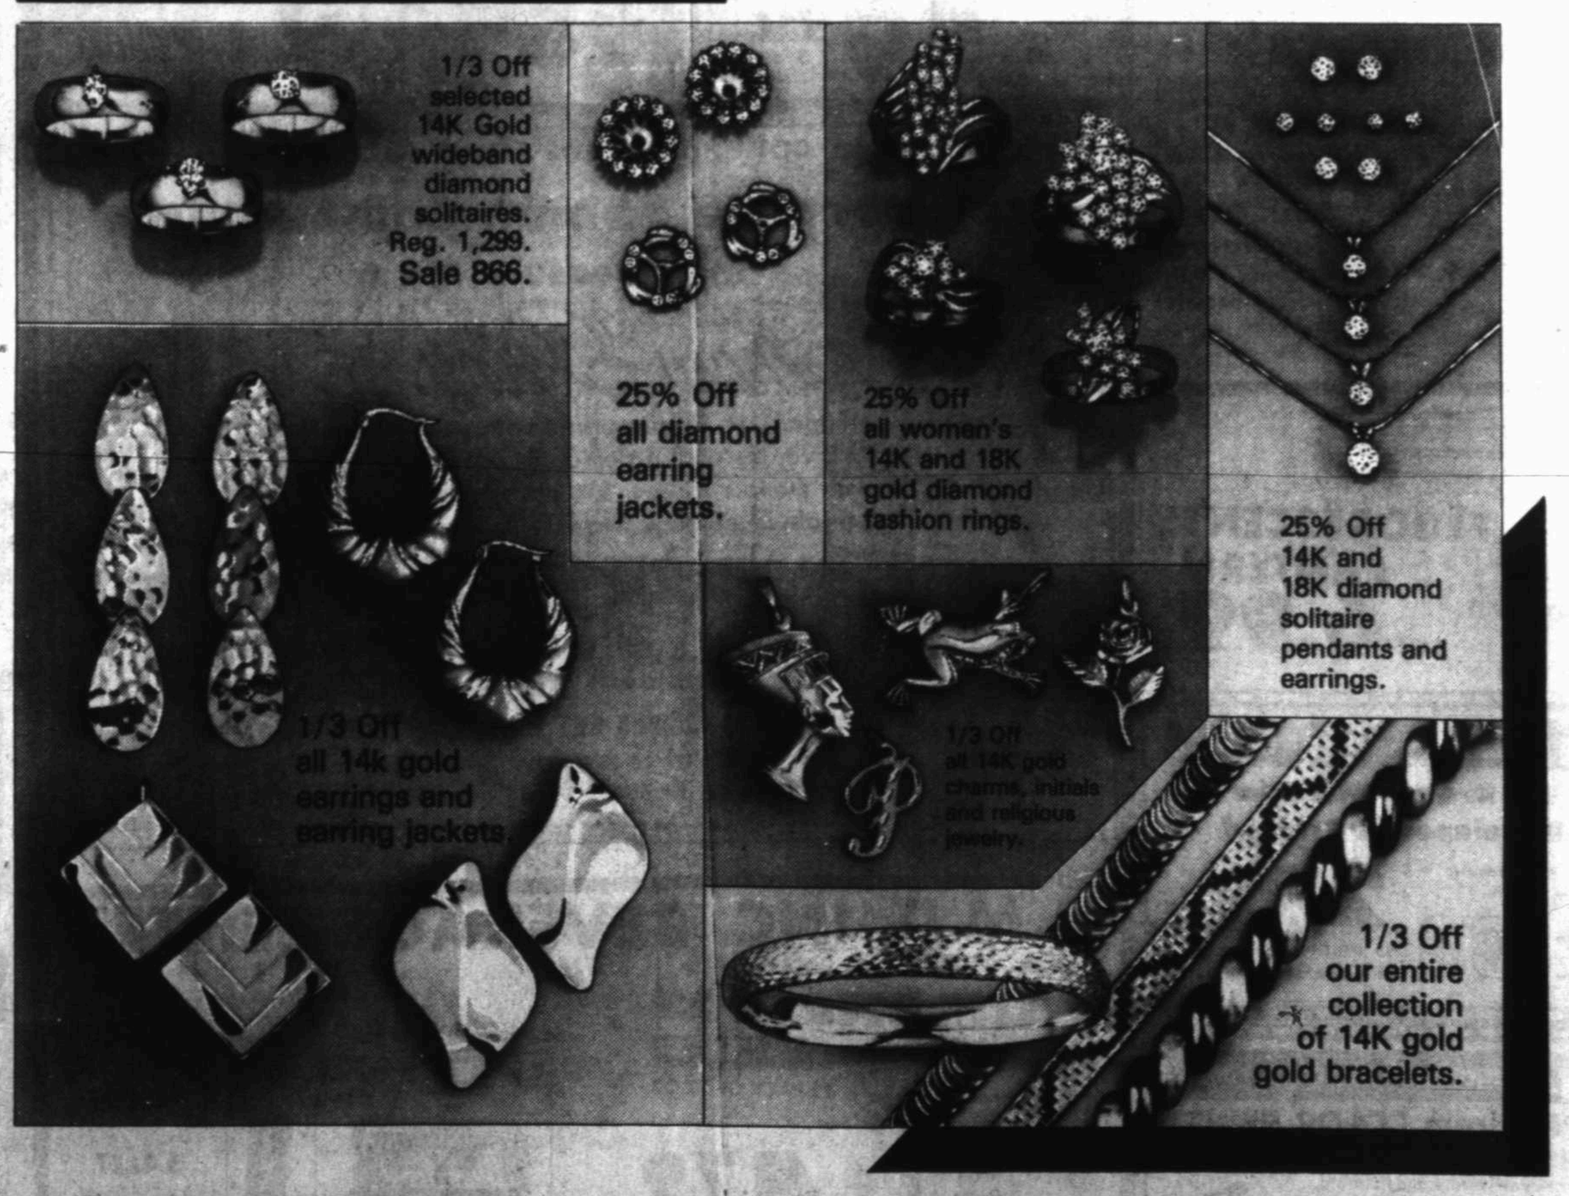

Austin-based MARC will work with local community groups in expanding existing businesses and creating new jobs, and providing job training and employment assistance, Texas Department of Community Affairs reports.

Enrique Barrera, TDCA, says "the idea is to help people in local areas using local resources."

MARC will determine which community groups will be used and will report on its plans to TDCA, Barrera says.

The $150,000 contract is for 12 months.

Reduction in Pentagon budget will cut Navy's purchase of F-14s

WASHINGTON (AP) — A reduction in the Pentagon's fiscal 1986 budget already approved by President Reagan will force the Navy to chop its purchase of F-14 fighters by 25 percent, according to a high-ranking official.

Instead of proceeding with a plan to acquire 24 of the front-line jets during the year starting next Oct. 1, Navy Secretary John Lehman and Defense Secretary Caspar W. Weinberger have decided to submit a budget that calls for the purchase of 18 of the aircraft, even though the change will ultimately prove more expensive, said the source.

The cut, to be formally unveiled when the president's budget is submitted to Congress on Feb. 4, will save about "one-third of a billion dollars in fiscal 1986, but it will drive up the unit cost by $3 million per plane and in the long term, end up costing more for the taxpayer," said the source, who agreed to discuss the matter only if not identified.

The source, who has participated in the Pentagon's budget deliberations, declined to discuss what cutbacks were being made by the Army and Air Force to fulfill a commitment by Weinberger to reduce the department's overall 1986 spending plan by $8.7 billion.

Indeed, the source made it clear he was discussing the planned cutback on purchases of the F-14 only because "it's the best example of harm to the progress we've been making" in controlling weapons cost.

He did say, however, the Navy is also planning to change its acquisition plans for the C-12 — a small, twin-engine cargo plane. He did not elaborate.

Last month, Weinberger announced that President Reagan had approved a fiscal 1986 budget that would allow actual spending, or outlays, of $277.5 billion. To reach that figure, Weinberger added, he had agreed to slash $8.7 billion from his original spending plan, including $2.5 billion in unspecified "program reductions."

Both the White House and Pentagon have come under a drumbeat of criticism from Congress ever since, with complaints rising that more cuts must be made in 1986 as well as in 1987 and 1988.

Ever since his Dec. 18 announcement, Weinberger and other Pentagon officials have steadfastly refused to discuss how they were dividing the $2.5 billion worth of cuts already promised the president between the various services or what programs would be affected. The disclosure about the F-14s broke that silence.

The F-14, which is made by the Grumman Aerospace Corp., is a twin-engine, supersonic jet that serves as the Navy's premier air-to-air fighter. Known as the Tomcat, "it is the only long-range plane (on a carrier) that can go after a Soviet Backfire (bomber)," the source said.

Kampelman has low public profile, but experience with negotiations

By LEE BYRD
Associated Press Writer

Kampelman

WASHINGTON — Although a man of limited experience in arms control and little public exposure, Max M. Kampelman is no stranger to protracted and testy encounters with Soviet negotiators.

His last government role, which ran nearly three years, was as U.S. representative to the European Security Conference and he repeatedly locked horns with his Soviet counterpart there.

On one occasion he said the Soviet Union's human rights policies "violate the rules of civilized behavior."

But despite an occasional flourish, that tour in Madrid did not elevate Kampelman's name to the household word status he may achieve as the result of his designation Friday by President Reagan as chief of the U.S. team in nuclear arms talks with the Soviet Union.

Even though it was President Carter who gave him his first high-level assignment for negotiating with Moscow, Kampelman is an insider who has long since found favor with the White House and Reagan's conservative supporters.

A onetime confidant of Hubert H. Humphrey, the 64-year-old Washington attorney recently pronounced past arms agreements of "only limited benefit" and criticized the SALT I pact as a failure which allowed the Soviets to greater threaten the world.

He said Moscow's leaders are paranoid, fearing neighbors, strangers and one another, but "We have to patiently, persistently, confidently keep talking to them. Negotiations, per se, are of incalculable value."

At the same time, Kampelman has implored the United States and its allies to never forget that "signatures on a document do not necessarily produce compliance."

The 34-month-long Madrid conference that ended in September 1983 was designed to review compliance with, and broaden the conditions of, the 1975 Helsinki accords on human rights. But it produced only marginal result amid disputes over martial law in Poland, the Soviet incursion into Afghanistan and, at the end, the Soviet destruction of a South Korean airliner.

In July of 1983, Kampelman told delegates to the 35-nation conference that the United States could not permit "a limited negotiating success...to make us forget...that signatures on a document do not necessarily produce compliance with its provisions."

Kampelman returned from Madrid to resume his law practice with the firm of Fried, Frank, Harris, Shriver & Kampelman.

SCLC head says blacks must be active in GOP

ATLANTA (AP) — Blacks must become more active in the Republican Party if they are to achieve their political ends, the Rev. Joseph Lowery told a gathering of black Democrats from 11 Southern states on Saturday.

Lowery, president of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference, said blacks should be less concerned with Democratic party politics, and should give their votes to the party that best addresses the issues.

"The majority of blacks ought to have no permanent political party, only permanent political principles," Lowery told the conference of about 100 people. "Our allegiance should be to the party that addresses our concerns."

The conference was called to reassess the role of blacks in the Democratic party following President Reagan's landslide re-election, which he won despite widespread black support for Democrat Walter Mondale.

The five candidates for chairman of the Democratic National Committee also appeared at the conference, making brief speeches and seeking black support in the upcoming election for chairman.

Analyst awarded back pay

NEW YORK (AP) — New York City must give back pay and a promotion to a computer analyst who was a victim of sex discrimination, a federal judge has ruled.

Evelyn West was hired as a computer programmer trainee in 1968 and within eight years had redesigned the city's system for classifying computer workers. But she was paid less than men who performed similar work, was denied promotion opportunities that were available to men and was penalized when she filed a discrimination complaint, U.S. District Judge Mary Johnson Lowe ruled Friday.

However, the judge rejected Ms. West's claims that city officials intentionally inflicted "emotional distress" on her.

New tumors found in girl

KNOXVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Doctors have found new tumors on the lungs and the back of a 14-year-old cancer patient whose preacher-father fought court-ordered chemotherapy on religious grounds, a hospital spokeswoman says.

The tumors were discovered when Pamela Hamiliton underwent tests this week at East Tennessee Children's Hospital here to check her progress, hospital spokeswoman Pat Kelly said Friday.

Miss Hamilton was discharged from the hospital last September when doctors said her Ewing's Sarcoma, a rare bone cancer found in her leg, was in remission.

"Test results indicate new sites of tumors in the back and lungs have appeared since completion of chemotherapy treatments in September," Ms. Kelly said.

Dr. Frank Haraf, Miss Hamilton's physician, hasn't indicated how advanced the tumors are or how serious her condition is, Ms. Kelly said. The new tumors appear to be the same type of cancer, she said.

'Blasted' rocks injure eight

SALEM, Mass. (AP) — Rocks hurtling from a construction blast slightly injured eight people and damaged automobiles and buildings up to a quarter-mile away, authorities said.

"Lots of people could have been killed," said Fire Chief Robert Crowley after the Friday morning blast. "Imagine what that rock could have done if anyone got in the way of it."

Officials said the explosion was set off by workmen from Danbury Explosives Inc., of Brookfield, Conn.City inspector Norman LaPointe said the company had a permit for the work. Eight rubber safety mats covered the blast area to prevent flying rocks, but stores across Highland Avenue and a house 1,000 feet away were hit by debris, officials said.

Pro-choice, anti-abortion groups stage rallies

By CYNTHIA GREEN
Associated Press Writer

Abortion rights supporters stood watch at clinics across the nation this weekend, lighting candles and forming human chains to protest increasing violence, while opponents organized parades and rallies to mark the 12th anniversary of the U.S. Supreme Court decision legalizing abortion.

The round-the-clock vigils sponsored by the National Organization for Women at 25 family planning centers and abortion clinics in 18 states were intended to counter anti-abortion protests that will culminate Tuesday, the anniversary of the Supreme Court's landmark 1973 ruling, with the 12th March for Life in Washington, D.C.

Demonstrations on both sides of the issue were scheduled just hours apart in some cities, and police and clinics were on the alert for potential clashes although no incidents had been reported Saturday. In Birmingham, Ala., for example, a three-mile march and rally by anti-abortion activists Saturday afternoon was to be followed three hours later by a pro-choice rally.

In Philadelphia, more than 250 supporters and opponents lined up outside the Planned Parenthood clinic Saturday and shouted slogans at each other from opposite sides of the street.

"Not the church, not the state, women must decide their fate," chanted Planned Parenthod and NOW members as they marched behind police barricades. "Pro-choice is pro-death," rejoined abortion opponents from a coalition of groups, who outnumbered the supporters 2-to-1.

About a dozen pickets marched peacefully outside the MacArthur Planned Parenthood Center in Oakland, Calif., one of three San Francisco-area clinics that received bomb threats on Friday afternoon, said program supervisor Patrice Villars. The facilities were evacuated and searched, but no bombs were found, she said.

In downtown Los Angeles on Saturday, about 300 people attended an anti-abortion rally sponsored by the Right To Life League, and a similar rally was held nearby by Pro-Life of Orange County and seven other anti-abortion groups. Meanwhile, in the Hollywood section of Los Angeles, more than 300 people continued a vigil that began Friday at the Feminist Women's Health Center.

Some 600 abortion opponents gathered at the Indiana War Memorial in Indianapolis for "a peaceful remembrance of the children that have been slain in the past 12 years," said Carmen D. Nevitt, legislative vice president of Indiana Right To Life Inc.

In Syracuse, N.Y., about 500 anti-abortion demonstrators, more than expected, rallied at the Onondaga County Courthouse. "I think it's evidence that the protest movement is growing," said Roman Catholic Auxiliary Bishop Thomas J. Costello.

About 200 marchers slogged through snow past the New Hampshire Feminist Health Center in Concord, N.H., to "bear public witness to our belief in the sanctity of life," said Russell Pond, director of the Pro Life Council. However, Pond asked the protesters not to picket the clinic, and Peg Dobbie of the National Abortion Rights Action League, which was holding a vigil there, said she appreciated the "peaceful" demonstration.

Floodlights and about 70 homemade candles illuminated the Women's Health Organization in Fargo, N.D., Friday night as pro-choice activists began a 60-hour vigil, playing board games and watching movies to pass the time. About 15 participants came to the clinic Saturday despite a biting wind that made overnight temperatures feel like 85 below zero.

"We've seen a frightening escalation of violent activites against abortion facilities in the past year by individuals who call themselves pro-life," said Lynn Wilson, president of Citizens for a Real Choice in Fargo. "And it's not terrorism against buildings, it's terrorism against women."

"This is a vigil of support" for the right of women to have legal abortions without fear of harassment or violence, said Janice Kohl of NOW's Norfolk, Va., chapter, which on Saturday began a two-day vigil at the Hillcrest Clinic.

GOP mayors considering pullout from national group

WASHINGTON (AP) — Some Republican mayors, upset with the Democratic leadership of the U.S. Conference of Mayors, said Saturday they are considering a pullout from the organization.

William Althaus, mayor of York, Pa., a leader of the dissidents, told reporters, "There is not a mass pullout at this point. There is an exploration of some alternatives."

The conference's executive committee earlier on Saturday appointed Charleston, S.C., Mayor Joseph Riley Jr. vice president and named East Orange, N.J., Mayor Thomas Cooke Jr. chairman of its advisory committee.

They, like new president Ernest Morial of New Orleans, are Democrats. Under the conference's normal rules of succession, the moves mean a Democrat will be in charge of the organization at least through mid-1988.

Morial assumed the presidency Friday, replacing Hernan Padilla of San Juan, a Republican who left office as mayor Jan. 14 after losing a race for governor of Puerto Rico. The conference, which conducts research and lobbies on behalf of cities, has had only two Republican presidents since 1966.

In another matter, the conference's executive committee adopted a resolution offered by Boston Mayor Raymond L. Flynn encouraging cities to remove any public funds now invested in institutions that do business with South Africa. They also adopted a second resolution calling on the nation and the international community to provide food for famine relief in Africa.

Morial, at a news conference closing the mayors' three-day mid-winter meeting, said the mayors must try to help solve the federal deficit."

Will 'Subway Vigilante' be next year's 'Death Wish'?

NEW YORK (AP) — One month after he captured the American imagination by allegedly shooting four youths who harassed him on a subway train, everyone wants a piece of Bernhard Goetz.

He is hero to some, villain to others, but known to almost all.

Each day dozens of new offers pour in for movies, books, interviews, endorsements, "for many sorts of projects...anything and everything you could mention," his lawyer, Joseph Kelner, said Friday.

"Every one of them have been declined," Kelner said. "He has no interest in money. He's interested in the outcome of his case and the other peripheral benefits he hopes will come to the public from it in the area of crime."

Kelner refused to discuss the offers in detail, but said many involved "very large sums of money."

The fact that a porter in Goetz's building says he was offered $500 to obtain one photograph from Goetz's apartment suggests the enormity of the sums being offered directly to Goetz for his story.

Meanwhile, the 37-year-old electronics expert's reputation spreads.

He has been the subject of a question at a presidential news conference, where Ronald Reagan sympathized with crime victims and opposed vigilantes, and the topic of a congressional hearing in Washington, where he was described by Kelner as "a compassionate, shy person (who) wouldn't hurt a fly."

His face has appeared on the cover of Time magazine as "The Vigilante" who "touched a national nerve."

"New York's Subway Vigilante: 'Right or Wrong?' " asked People magazine on its cover.

"Power to the Vigilante," was the answer spray-painted on a wall on East River Drive. "New York Loves Ya."

Reporters have staked out Goetz's apartment house and other places he is thought to frequent. He has been "interviewed" at the counter of a luncheonette.

On Chicago's South Side, people call gunman hero

CHICAGO (AP) — On the mean streets of the South Side, where life grinds hard on the poor and the helpless, a man who turned the tables and a gun on would-be robbers is a hero to some who think his action will make criminals "think twice."

"You've got to carry a gun around here, man," said Willie Young, a customer at an auto parts store a block from the shooting site. "They'll stick you up. It's dangerous."

But Phyllis Wallace, whose son Detrick was killed in the shooting, said: "I feel the man didn't have to shoot my son to kill him. He could have wounded him in the leg.

"I have a lot of grief, but no anger at the man," she said. "I'm just hurt that my son is gone. I was just thinking about how nice my son was, how good my child was."

The man who fired the fatal shot Thursday apparently had bought groceries at Tony Pecho's store and was heading home when two youths stopped him at knifepoint and tried to take his groceries, police said.

Instead, the man, described as 55 to 60 years old, pulled out a gun and shot one youth, while the other escaped, police said. Wallace, 18, of Chicago, died Friday of a gunshot wound to the head, authorities said.

"They (the suspected robbers) got what they deserved," Young said. "If they wouldn't bother the old man, they wouldn't have got shot.

"He should have shot them both in the head," Young said.

"It's great," said Pecho, owner of Tony's Super Market. "How else are you going to stop this stuff?"

Pecho said he expected the shooting to deter criminals in the area.

"They'll think twice," he said.

Bevy of conservatives boast that 'Reagan revolution' has just begun

WASHINGTON (AP) — A bevy of conservative stars pushed, pulled and preened their way Saturday through festivities marking the inauguration of their favorite president, but professed all the way that the "Reagan revolution" has only just begun.

More than 700 supporters of the president gathered elbow-to-elbow at the Capitol Hill offices of two favorite conservative groups — the Heritage Foundation and Citizens for America — to toast two of the hardest of the hardliners, U.N. Ambassador Jeane Kirkpatrick and presidential counselor Edwin Meese III.

But the guests, who came from across the country, were also treated to appearances by other administration boosters as Defense Secretary Casper Weinberger, Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C., and Conservative Caucus Chairman Howard Phillips.

And true to Inaugural Weekend party form, there were twice as many people as expected, more and varied furs than seen in many a furrier's vault and enough good spirits despite the bone-chilling cold to inspire predictions that conservatives will inaugurate another of their group in 1988.

"Is this the last hurrah? I think not," said Sen. Charles E. Grassley, R-Iowa. "The Reagan victory was a personal triumph, but it was also a triumph for the conservative cause."

Conservatives such as himself point to the growing strength of newly-registered Republicans, Grassley said, and are looking toward capturing the House of Representatives.

Helms said the conservative cause is one that now appeals to mainstream America and its popularity will remain.

"The people of America woke up and they smell the coffee," said Helms. "They know that the least government is the best."

"The conservatives have only begun to arrive," predicted Phillips. He said conservatives are keenly aware that much still needs to be done for their agenda in the second term.

"For example, we hope to convince the president to continue to build America's defenses and convince him not to aide Marxists puppet governments in Angola and Mozambique," Phillips said.

Host Lewis E. Lehrman, national chairman of Citizens for America, said conservatives now "have one total vision — to make the Reagan revolution a permanent one."

"The president has made a start, but now it is up to us to carry it across the country, be it in the Congress or the state legislators. We are here to carry his message into the next century," Lehrman said.

Inauguration not all 'private airplanes and limousines'

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Rev. Jesse Jackson, saying the inaugural is "not all private airplanes and limousines," held his own parade Saturday and said his Rainbow Coalition would press its demands "until jobs, peace and justice rule this land."

"It's time to march. It's time to act. It's time to move. It's time for a change," Jackson told a racially-mixed noontime crowd of some 750 at Farragut Square, several blocks from the White House.

"Our appeal may not get through to the president...but we shall fight until justice is done and all of God's children have a house and an education and health care and a chance to live in peace and justice and self-respect," said Jackson, an unsuccessful candidate for the Democratic presidential nomination.

Jackson was joined by Gary, Ind., Mayor Richard Hatcher, who said the administration's policies are in part responsible for his city's prolonged double-digit unemployment rate.

"If you don't stand for something, you'll fall for anything," said Hatcher. "And we don't intend to fall for what's happening in this country today."

Jackson's brief speech in the morning kicked off a march by chanting, sign-waving demonstrators past the White House and bleacher-lined Pennsylvania Avenue as they headed for the Washington Monument grounds.

With the White House in the background, Rev. Jesse Jackson, Gary, Ind., Mayor Richard Hatcher and other Rainbow Coalition members kneeel during their march in Washington Saturday.

"You hear about people coming from across the country to have a big party at the inauguration," said demonstrator Grady Crosby, 18, a student at Howard University in Washington. "But we want people to know there are others here who aren't so fortuante, blacks, Hispanics and the handicapped."

Reagan helps grandchildren build snowman

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan helped his grandchildren build a four-foot snowman in the Rose Garden Saturday and posed for pictures with son Michael, who recently patched up his feud with Nancy Reagan.

Photographers were summoned from the White House press room to take pictures of Reagan in the snow-covered garden with Michael, his wife, Colleen, and their two children, Cameron, 6, and Ashley, 22 months.

The first lady was not present. The puppy she gave Reagan last month, Lucky, jumped up and down on a leash in front of the snowman.

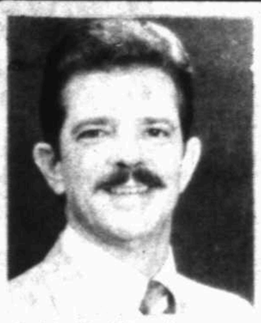

The president and Cameron rolled a ball of snow across the lawn to build the snowman's head. Reagan lifted it onto the body, and then helped the children insert two pieces of coal for eyes, a carrot for the nose and two twigs for arms. Reagan added a straw hat and scarf.

Michael and his wife both took pictures of the scene.

Michael, 39, the president's adopted son from his first marriage, had complained repeatedly that Reagan and his wife had never seen their youngest grandchild, Ashley. Nancy Reagan told an interviewer in November, "There is an estrangement and has been for three years."

Michael shot back, "I think it's not an estrangement as much as a jealousy Nancy might have toward me and my family — you know, being the son of another marriage."

A truce was called over the Christmas holidays when they all got together in a Los Angeles hotel. Mrs. Reagan, in a statement, said then, "All is resolved. Everybody loves each other."

Top Gandhi aide resigns in wake of spy ring probe

By TINA CHOU
Associated Press Writer

NEW DELHI, India (AP) — A top aide to Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi resigned following the arrest of his personal secretary in connection with an alleged spy ring, government sources said Saturday. Four more suspected spies were detained, bring the number of arrests to 11, they said.

Press reports and government sources said the arrests were part of the biggest crackdown on espionage since India gained independence from Great Britain in 1947.

Among those charged under India's Official Secrets Act were three men working in the prime minister's office, an employee in President Zail Singh's press relations department and five Defense Ministry officials, said the senior government sources, who spoke on condition they not be identified.

Two businessmen were also taken into police custody and interrogated in New Delhi by Indian intelligence officials, said the sources.

The sources said some of the arrested officials had the rank of deputy secretary and under secretary, including one they identified as T.N. Kher, a personal secretary of Gandhi's closest aide, P.C. Alexander.

Gandhi on Saturday accepted Alexander's resignation, which was submitted Friday when news of the arrests broke, they said.

The suspects allegedly passed information intended for Gandhi about India's defense and security arrangements to unidentified foreign operatives. There was no immediate indication about which foreign country was allegedly involved.

In London, the Sunday Times reported in its early editions that a Western country, "conceivably the United States," may be implicated in the spy ring. It did not attribute its report from New Delhi.

However, the Observer newspaper quoted unidentified sources in New Delhi as saying those under arrest "are believed to have been working for the (Communist) Warsaw Pact."

The government sources said the three Defense Ministry officials were suspected of leaking highly classified information about India's arms negotiations and deals with the Soviet Union.

India has contracted to buy top-of-the-line MiG-29 jet fighters, sophisticated missiles and other weapons systems from the Soviet Union, which is India's major arms supplier. It also is negotiating with Moscow to buy submarines, army hardware and an electronic naval surveillance system.

Two Indian delegations visited Moscow in September and October of last year to negotiate the arms deals, which are expected to total billions of dollars.

On Friday, the prime minister told Parliament in a special statement: "I wish to take the house into confidence on a important development. It came to the government's notice that certain employees in sensitive positions were suspected to be indulging in activities detrimental to the national interest.

"Some arrests have been made in the course of investigations, which are still proceeding," Gandhi said. "I am confident that honorable members would not press me to say anything more at this stage as it might hamper these investigations."

Sources said intelligence officials kept a two-month tab on all officials in the prime minister's secretariat and the arms purchase department of the Defense Ministry before making the arrests.

Press reports said police recovered photocopies of highly classified military documents in raids on homes of some of the arrested men.

The independent Indian Express newspaper said the two businessmen, who it did not identify, set up foreign contacts for the government officials.

After succeeding his slain mother, Indira Gandhi, last Oct. 31, the prime minister ordered a review of India's intelligence apparatus and checks on people holding sensitive positions.

"It was during this exercise that it was discovered that several officials had been betraying the country," said one government source who requested anonymity.

The crackdown was expected to lead to major changes in the bureaucracy. Press accounts and government officials called it the biggest espionage case reported since India was granted independence by Britain in 1947.

Separatists march out of convention hall

MONTREAL (AP) — Hard-line separatists stormed out of a Parti Quebecois convention today, just before the delegates were to vote on Premier Rene Levesque's proposal to abandon, at least for now, the goal of a sovereign Quebec nation.

Several hundred delegates, after losing on a key procedural question by a 921-495 margin, marched out of the convention hall in protest.

After the walkout, the final vote was postponed until the convention's afternoon session.

The proposed new wording in the party's official program retains sovereignty as the Parti Quebecois' "fundamental objective," but that fell far short of satisfying the hard-liners.

During a two-hour debate before the walkout, Cabinet ministers and rank-and-file members lined up at microphones to speak for and against Levesque's proposal.

Camille Laurin, one of seven Cabinet ministers who resigned when Levesque announced his change of heart, told the convention delegates they were not just putting the "option" of Quebec independence aside, "but putting it to death."

Justice Minister Pierre-Marc Johnson, a leader of the "revisionists," responded that waging an election on a platform of independence, and facing certain defeat, would "weaken our option and be a weakening of the Quebec people itself."

The bitter fight threatens to split Levesque's party and could bring down his government if enough disillusioned Parti Quebecois members resign their seats in the provincial legislature.

Despite a rash of resignations in November, the Parti Quebecois still has 65 seats in the 122-member legislature. There are six independents — all former Parti Quebecois members — and 49 Liberals. Two seats are vacant.

Ethiopians escape to Sudan from resettlement camp

By ROBERT H. REID
Associated Press Writer

DAMAZIN, Sudan (AP) — Nearly 1,000 Ethiopians have fled to Sudan from a camp where they were taken at gunpoint under what their government claims is a voluntary resettlement program for drought victims, refugees and relief workers say.

The refugees, who have been crossing the border since early January, weak and barely clothed, said they escaped from the Asosa camp in Ethiopia at night and walked to the Sudanese border town of Kurmuk, some 70 miles away.

From Kurmuk, the healthiest of the refugees are ferried by truck to a makeshift camp in a grove of trees at the edge of Damazin, a town of mud walls and grass huts about 286 miles southeast of Khartoum.

During the arduous journey from Ethiopia, many of the refugees were separated from their families, and they have no idea what has become of their husbands, wives or children. Several of them said Ethiopian guards shot at them or set fire to high grass near the camp to block their escape.

Relief workers said in interviews this week that most of the refugees come from Tigre, a province of Ethiopia widely affected by drought and famine and largely controlled by the rebel Tigre Peoples Liberation Front.

The refugees, mostly farmers, drifted into government-controlled towns in Tigre or Eritrea in search of food, relief workers said. Instead of receiving food, the refugees claim they were tricked by Ethiopian officials and herded by plane and truck to the Asosa resettlement camp far from their homes.

"I tried to find food for my family in Mendeffara (Eritrea)," said Girmay Berh, 53, speaking through an interpreter. "The Dergue (Ethiopian government officials) announced they would give us food. When we entered a building for food, the guards locked the doors and troops surrounded the building. The soldiers forced us into a plane. We flew to Asmara and then to Addis Ababa."

"We shouted 'We won't go!' but they put us into trucks and drove us to Asosa. For three days, we had no food," he said.

An old man named Kidanu Mariam said he and a group of villagers were abducted after they went to the Ethiopian town of Adua to complain about the conduct of Ethiopian soldiers in their area. He said an Ethiopian official summoned troops, who forced him and the others into trucks which took them to a camp at Makelle and later to Asosa.

"Our families are back in Tigre," he said. "They don't know what has happened to us. We want to go back."

In November, the Ethiopian government announced a voluntary program to resettle 2.5 million drought victims to more fertile areas in the south. The rebels, who have been battling the Ethiopian government since 1975, have charged the resettlement program is an attempt to depopulate rebellious provinces through removing people to "concentration camps."

In Khartoum, Yemane Kijane, a spokesman for the Tigre rebel group, claimed the resettlement program was a form of "systematic genocide" uprooting thousands of farmers from their homes.

"You have to understand the peasant mentality," Kidane said. "For the peasant, his land, his home, is his whole world. If they (the Ethiopian government) want to feed the people, let them do it in their homes."

In the Sudanese camp, the refugees have no shelter and few blankets. During a visit by a Western reporter, one man who appeared to be in his early 40s died of a heart attack as a young paramedic frantically massaged his chest in a futile effort to revive him. There is no doctor in the camp.

"It is better to live here than in the camp of the Dergue," said Waldu, a 45-year-old farmer. As he spoke, his 2-year-old daughter, naked except for a thin blanket, sobbed and coughed from bronchitis, too weak even to brush the flies from her face.

Waldu said he arrived Monday with three daughters and a son. But his wife and two other daughters vanished during the escape from Ethiopia, he said.

Mitterand predicts dispute over independence will end

By BARRY RENFREW
Associated Press Writer

NOUMEA, New Caledonia — French President Francois Mitterrand on Saturday wound up a whirlwind visit to this troubled French territory in the South Pacific and predicted the dispute over independence would be resolved within months.

However, both sides in the controversy appeared to remain far apart.

Independence leader Yeiwene Yeiwene, said his group's meeting with Mitterrand had been friendly, and that the French president backed independence.

Yeiwene is a senior official of the Kanak Socialist National Liberation Front, which claims to represent almost all of the native Melanesian population, who are known as Kanaks. "The president recognizes completely the right of the Kanak people to have independence," he said.

Leaders of the anti-independence movement, which represents most of the European, Polynesian and Asian settlers, said after their meeting with Mitterrand that France must continue its 131-year rule.

"We must remain French," said Dick Ukeiwe, president of the territorial assembly.

Mitterrand flew to New Caledonia after a surprise announcement on Wednesday, in an effort to revive peaceful efforts to decide New Caledonia's future. A wave of violence has claimed 19 lives since November.

French President François Mitterand and special envoy Edgar Pisani stand at attention as they listen to the French national anthem moments after Mitterand's arrival in Noumea, New Caledonia, Saturday.

AP Laserphoto

At the end of his 14-hour visit, he told reporters: "As a result of these meetings, it is fair to say that the string that we feared might be broken has been mended and the dialogue continues."

He said the government would go ahead with a plan calling for independence under which France would retain control of defense and internal security. The Melanesian minority would be given control of traditional tribal lands. The plan must be approved in a referendum scheduled for July.

Lebanese, Israelis resume withdrawal talks

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Prime Minister Rashid Karami said Saturday that Lebanese and Israeli negotiators would resume this week their suspended talks on "the program and timetable for an Israeli withdrawal" from southern Lebanon.

Karami made the announcement of the new session, scheduled for Tuesday, after he and President Amin Gemayel met with U.N. Undersecretary General Brian Urquhart in Beirut. Urquhart has shuttled to Israel, Syria and Lebanon in the past week to get the U.N.-sponsored negotiations started again.

The talks, which began Nov. 8 in the border town of Naquora, were suspended Jan. 7 in a disagreement over where to station U.N. soldiers in southern Lebanon after the Israeli army withdraws.

Urquhart, questioned by reporters, refused to reveal the substance of his discussions with officials, saying only that they included "very helpful elements."

"I believe that there are some very considerable possibilities which are now moving forward," he said. "I just hope we can grasp these possibilities and pin them down."

Since the last round of talks, the Israeli Cabinet has agreed to a staged withdrawal of Israeli forces from Lebanon. Israel had refused to schedule further meetings, but later told Urquhart it was ready to return to the negotiating table.

In his remarks, Karami made no reference to the dispute that caused the talks to stall, but he indicated Israel at least partially had met Lebanon's demand for a withdrawal timetable.

Israel has said the first part of its three-stage withdrawal would be completed in mid-February.

"We know that the date for the first stage has been set," he said. "As for the other two stages, the second one could be in April."

"For the third stage," he said, "there is no specific time yet, but we hope that all these dates will be fixed in the official talks in Naqoura."

Talks will be held Tuesday "because this is the day that we consider suitable to resume," Karami said in on Beirut radio. "On Tuesday, we will discuss the program and the timetable for the withdrawal."

At the meeting the Lebanese delegation will present "a positive stand regarding arrangements which should be undertaken in the best interest of Lebanon," he said.

After his meeting with Lebanese officials, Urquhart flew to Amman, Jordan, where he was expected to continue his discussions on Israel's pullout plans. He had told reporters he would then travel to London to report to U.N. Secretary General Javier Perez de Cuellar.

Meanwhile, Nabih Berri, a Shiite Moslem leader and the Lebanese minister primarily responsible for occupied southern Lebanon, bitterly attacked the Israeli withdrawal plan.

Four men 'repent,' renounce dead leader

KHARTOUM, Sudan (AP) — Four men sentenced to death for opposing Sudan's Islamic law were released Saturday after they "repented" and renounced their leader who was hanged the day before, Sudanese radio said.

The radio said the four — Tajuddin Abul-Razik, Khalid Babikir Hamza, Mohammed Salam Baashar and Abdul-Latif Omar Hassaballa — were released by a court in Omdurman after publicly reading their recantations.

On Jan. 8, the same court had sentenced the four and their leader, Mohamoud Mohammed Taha, 76, to death for "heresy" and distributing leaflets opposing President Gaafar Nimeiri's 1983 decision to impose Islamic law, or Sharia, nationwide.

The four watched as Taha, a widely known Islamic scholar and founder of the Republican Brothers group, was hanged publicly Friday in Kober Prison.

Taha's organization, which is allowed to operate legally only at Khartoum University, has opposed strict application of Islamic law, claiming the message of the Prophet Mohammed should be updated to meet modern social conditions.

Nicaraguan priests lose clerical duties

MANAGUA, Nicaragua (AP) — In further defiance of the Vatican, four Roman Catholic priests say they will keep their high government posts despite being stripped of their clerical duties and titles.

The sanctions were announced Friday by Monsignor Pablo Antonio Vega, president of the Episcopal Conference of Nicaragua's 12 Catholic bishops.

The four are Foreign Minister Miguel D'Escoto; Culture Minister Ernesto Cardenal; his brother, Education Minister Fernando Cardenal, and Edgard Parrales, ambassador to the Organization of American States in Washington.

Vega said they had been ordered not "to exercise their priestly ministries or to participate in sacred functions," including officiating at Mass, listening to confessions and offering communion. They also were stripped of their religious titles, such as priest and father.

The four were not defrocked, however, and two can continue as members of their church orders.

Fernardo Cardenal was dismissed Dec. 10 from the Society of Jesus but he, like the others, remains technically a priest. D'Escoto belongs to the Maryknoll order, Ernesto Cardenal is a Trappist and Parrales is a diocesan priest.

The Vatican told the four last summer to resign their government posts by Aug. 31 or face sanctions under a papal pronouncement known as Canon 285, which prohbits clerics from holding public office.

They refused, and since then none has participated in official church functions. The sanctions announced Friday merely formalize that arrangement.

The sanctions came at a time when the Catholic church here and the leftist Sandinista government are discussing their differences.Relations between the church hierarchy and the government began to deteriorate shortly after the Sandinistas came to power in 1979, ousting the right-wing government of the late President Anastasio Somoza.

Sandinista leaders have accused the church of trying to undermine government policies and refusing to support them in their fight against U.S.-backed rebels.

The Nicaraguan bishops, led by Vega and Archbishop Miguel Obando y Bravo of Managua, have in turn accused the Sandinistas of harassing priests and trying to subordinate the church.

A low point in relations came in March 1983 when the pope was interrupted by chanting pro-Sandinista demonstrators as he was offering a Mass in Managua.

Vega said the four Sandinista officials could regain their clerical functions and titles by renouncing their government jobs.

But Ernesto Cardenal said he and the others "have decided to continue in the Sandinista government because we have a commitment to the people, and the revolution is the cause of the people and we will betray it."

Meanwhile, rebels blew up two utility towers near Somotillo, 100 miles west of Managua, the Foreign Ministry said Saturday.

Reagan security adviser visits Central America

By MICHAEL PUTZEL
AP White House Correspondent

WASHINGTON — President Reagan's national security adviser, Robert C. McFarlane, made a secret five-nation tour of Central America just before Reagan was to be sworn in for a second term, a White House spokesman disclosed Saturday night.

Deputy White House press secretary Robert Sims told reporters at a pre-inaugural gala that McFarlane made the trip to talk to the heads of state of the five nations and reaffirm "the president's policy for the coming months" as the second term begins.

Sims said McFarlane spoke to officials in Costa Rica, El Salvador, Honduras, Panama and Guatemala.

But the spokesman refused to disclose any specifics of what was discussed and said he was not at liberty to say whether any military aid or assistance to the contras in Nicaragua was a topic of the talks. The Reagan administration backs rebels trying to overthrow the leftist government of that nation.

Asked why McFarlane's trip, made at the request of Reagan and Secretary of State George Shultz, was kept secret, Sims said, "We never discuss his travels."

Asked if the national security adviser had made other trips like the one to Central America, Sims said, "none that we've commented on." Sims said McFarlane's trip was not directly connected to the U.S. suspension of diplomatic relations with Nicaragua or the U.S. decision to boycott future proceedings of the World Court on a Nicaraguan complaint that the United States has violated international law by mining that nation's harbors. Both were announced Friday.

Sims said McFarlane left Washington Thursday and returned early Saturday in time to have lunch with Reagan at a party marking the last day of the president's first term. But the spokesman said he did not know whether McFarlane was able to report on his visit.

"The purpose of his visit was to review with heads of state and other officials progress made in the past four years," Sims said. "He reaffirmed the president's policy for the coming months and invited their counsel on how together we can best achieve our common purposes."

WORLD in brief

Cubana Airlines plane crashes, killing 40 people

MEXICO CITY (AP) — A Cubana Airlines plane crashed shortly after takeoff Saturday from Havana, Cuba, killing all 40 people aboard, including one American, the Cuban news agency Prensa Latina said.

The report, monitored in Mexico City, quoted "official Cuban sources" as confirming that the plane's 32 passengers and eight crew members perished in the crash.

A later dispatch said those killed were 25 Cubans, including the crew, 10 Nicaraguans and one person each from the Untied States, Argentina, Guatemala, Costa Rica and Mexico.

It gave a list of the names of the victims, but did not provide their nationalities or say where they were from.

Israel honors diplomat

TOKYO (AP) — A Japanese diplomat who defied his government's orders in 1940 and issued transit visas from Lithuania for nearly 6,000 Jews fleeing Nazi persecution has been honored with one of Israel's highest awards.

Sempo Sugihara, now 85, was granted the Yad Vashem Medal and an honorary certificate at a ceremony at Israeli Ambassador Amnon Benyohanan's residence in Tokyo, Israeli Embassy spokesman Eitan Margalit said Saturday.

Now bedridden, Sugihara was represented at the Friday ceremony by his wife.

Sugihara, Japanese consul in Kovno, now Kaunas in Soviet Lithuania, issued the visas even though his superiors in Tokyo told him not to, Margalit said.

"Even on Sept. 1, 1940, when Mr. Sugihara was ordered by the Russians to leave Kovno and when he was on his way to the railway station with his family, he continued to stamp the precious transit visas, on the street and at the station, even through the window of the train car, until the train actually began to pull away from the platform," he said.

Building collapse kills three

HANOVER, West Germany (AP) — One side of a four-story apartment building collapsed Saturday, killing two women and a girl and injuring five other people, the Hanover fire department reported.

Police initially said a gas explosion caused the collapse, but the fire department issued a statement later saying "the likelihood of a blast was great. However, it is not certain that a gas explosion was to blame." It said an investigation was continuing.

West Texas

EDITOR'S NOTE: In 1984, West Texas was host to a record drought. As 1985 begins, it is a reluctant finalist in the federal government's search for the nation's first nuclear waste dump. West Texas shrugged off the drought, but it won't accept the dump without a battle. For non-Texans, West Texas is cows, cowboys, coyotes and cactus — the Texas of record, the Old West. Indeed, it is not the Texas of Houston and Dallas, two megacities that put the state on the international map of the 1980s. West Texas is mountains, canyons, rivers and lakes as well as prairie. It is woods, farms and fields as well as desert. It is also "A Personal Country," as one writer put it. This is a personal account.

By MIKE COCHRAN
Associated Press Writer

West Texas is a sunrise in the Palo Duro Canyon, a Sunday at Lake Meredith and a sunset in the Chisos Mountains of Big Bend National Park.

It's St. Patrick's Day in Shamrock, the Fourth of July at the Texas Cowboy Reunion in Stamford and Christmas stranded in a Panhandle snowstorm.

It's a monument to a mule at Muleshoe, a jackrabbit statue at Odessa and an 11-foot tall roadrunner named Paisano Pete at Fort Stockton.

West Texas is oil boom and oil bust and thousands of oil pumps nodding like metal insects in a prairie ritual.

It's an Amarillo blizzard, a Sanderson flood, a Wichita Falls tornado, a South Plains duster, a High Plains hail storm and everywhere a target for killer heat waves and dry spells.

It's a beer bust on the Concho River and a drug bust on the Rio Grande. It's Longhorns and longnecks, Friday night football and Saturday night fever.

It's Ace Reid's cowboy cartoons and Stanley Marsh's buried Cadillacs and an abandoned shell of a drive-in theater whose crumbling marquee once read: "Gone With the Wind."

It's the tree at Notrees and the impact of Impact, the tiny shadow town that brought liquor to Abilene, a city of churches and church schools, the buckle on the Bible Belt.

It's singing "America the Beautiful" at a Rotary luncheon in Childress and thanking the Lord for bringing the rain and praising the senior citizens for preparing the food.

It's a chili cookoff in Terlingua and a Lamblast in San Angelo.

It's chicken fried steak in Quanah, calf fries in Big Spring, Tex-Mex in Midland and barbecue from Dalhart to Del Rio and El Paso to Fort Worth.

And then there's steak.

Joe Allen's in Abilene and the 50 Yard Line in Lubbock do with the ribeye what Picasso did with the paint brush.

In Amarillo, the Big Texan offers a 72-ounce sirloin free to anyone who eats the monster before it eats him.

An oilfield roughneck did it once, and we miss him.

In San Angelo, there's a restored whorehouse called Miss Hattie's but the river city's greater claim to fame is its steakhouses, surely the most and best of any town its size.

Zenter's Daughter didn't invent the garlic-flavored KC sirloin, but she perfected it.

West Texas is big cars and bank failures, fast horses and fat cows, wheat and corn, cotton and cantaloupe, windmills and sandhills and wildflowers and wildcatters.

It's armadillos, prairie dogs and prairie fires, not enough rain, too many tornadoes and just the right amount of twang and drawl and economy of speech to drive a carpetbagger crazy.

It's leaving a mountain trout stream and stumbling into the shifting, wind-sculptured sand dunes called the Texas Sahara but in fact is the Monahans Sandhills State Park.

It's Fort Davis, Fort Concho, Fort Stockton, Fort Phantom Hill and any number of fortresses from which troops protected settlers from Mexican bandits and Indian raiding parties.

West Texas is hardscrabble terrain, mountains, canyons, mesas, breaks, hills, valleys, deserts and some of the flattest and most fertile farmlands to be found east of Eden.

MISD expecting challenge of election call

By JULIE HILLRICHS
Staff Writer

Midland School trustees Tuesday are planning to call an election for April 6 to decide the fate of three expired school board seats. But some trustees fear the election will be challenged in court by groups seeking single-members districts.

Trustee Joe Golding said Friday he believes the League of United Latin American Citizens (LULAC) and the Black Advisory Council will seek a court injunction to stop the election after filing suit to force MISD to switch from the at-large system of electing board trustees to the single-member district system.

"I don't think we're gonna have an election on April 6," said Golding, one of three members up for re-election to the board. "I don't know how we can settle and get approval from the Justice Department before the scheduled election date. But I'm most definitely going to run again."

LULAC and the Black Advisory Council Jan. 3 filed a class action suit against MISD in federal court in Midland. The organizations claim the at-large system of electing the seven trustees violates their civil rights.

LULAC President Isabel Jiminez could not be reached for comment on whether the groups would seek a court injunction to stop the April 6 election.

MISD Superintendent Dr. Joseph Baressi said Friday that the district is examining a combination of at-large and single-member districts. He suggested four trustees could be elected in single-member districts and three could be elected at-large.

LULAC and the Black Advisory Council, however, reportedly support electing five trustees to single-member districts and two to at-large seats rather than Baressi's four-three proposal.

Baressi said the district possibly would allow trustees holding unexpired seats in 1985 to choose which district they wish to represent and call an election for the remaining seats. He added that at least one seat would be available for a minority candidate.

Besides Golding, seats occupied by trustee President Parker Humes and Joyce Sherrod (the only woman trustee) also are up for election. Humes and Ms. Sherrod have not indicated whether they will seek re-election to another three-year term.

Filing dates have been set for Feb. 4 through March 6. Absentee voting supposedly is scheduled to take place between March 18 and April 2.

Greenwood Independent School District also will hold elections April 6 to fill three board seats.

Up for election are at-large seats held by Patsy Herrington, Place Six; J.D. Hanson, Place Seven; and a one-year unexpired term, Place Two. Neither board member has indicated whether they will seek re-election.

Midland College will not hold elections to its board of directors in 1985. Elections to six-year terms on the Midland College board are held in even-numbered years only.

Three hospital district board terms ending

By RON GILMORE
Staff Writer

Three seats will be coming up for re-election April 6 on the Board of Directors for the Midland County Hospital District.

Persons interested in running for the seats currently held by board members, Wanda K. Mohr, Frank Kell Cahoon and Dr. Walter S. Parks Jr., may file their intent starting Feb. 1.

Of those three, Cahoon and Parks have stated that they will seek re-election. Ms. Mohr could not be reached for a comment.

"I feel that it's very important that Midland Memorial Hospital be a facility that can not only serve Midland but the surrounding communities as well," said Cahoon, a former member of the Texas Legislature and former city council member.

Cahoon hopes to pursue his pet project — Allison Cancer Center — if re-elected to the board.

"I want to see Allison turned into a multiple county facility," he said. "It should be a regional center, not just a Midland center."

Parks' reasons are "essentially the same as the first time I ran," the gynecologist said.

"I want to see that we continue to have a good medical center in Midland," said Parks. "And the fact that the MMH board of directors has the responsibility of administering tax funds to their best usage — well, I felt that there should be a doctor on the board.

"I talked to other people on the board about it and decided to toss my hat in the ring once again," he said.

Parks has been a physician since 1942 and has practiced obstetrics and gynecology at MMH since 1951. He has been active in the community, served on most committes of the hospital and was president of the medical staff. When running for the seat two years ago, Parks listed three areas he hoped to address — financing a 77-bed expansion of MMH, planning how the district would handle new decreases in government payments (Medicare, Medicaid) and maintaining quality patient care.

Cahoon, who graduated from the University of Texas in 1957, served as a member of the Health Committee in the Texas Legislature from 1964 to 1968. He also advocated "planned growth" in his statement of two years ago.

Ms. Mohr, of The Center for Behavioral Medicine, also listed expansion and the quality of patient care as top priorities two years ago.

Trustees to finalize policies

From Staff Reports

During a regularly scheduled meeting, the Midland Independent School District Board of Trustees Tuesday will finalize policy for extracurricular activities and, in addition, change boundary and cluster assignments to accomodate a new elementary school scheduled to open in September.

To conform to new state guidelines, the board approved on first reading revisions in board policy concerning extracurricular activities at its Jan. 8 meeting.

By state law, "students may not be absent from any class more than ten times during the 175-day school year if they wish to participate in extracurricular activities."

Also, "students must not be absent from any class in order to participate in school activities if he or she does not have a passing grade average of at least 70."

The law also specifies, "students may not practice or perform more than eight hours per school week for any single activity; while students involved in a combination of activities must limit practice outside the school day to a total of 20 hours per week." Performance in extracurricular activities, including travel time, will be counted against the alloted practice time as well.

Trustees also will consider revisions to adopt changes in academic eligibility requirements, which, by state law, states:

— In order to participate or practice in extracurricular activities, a student must be passing all subjects with an average of 70 or more.

— A student who fails any class during a six-weeks' reporting period will be suspended from participating or practicing in any activity for the next six weeks' reporting period.

Records of each pupil's progress in school shall be maintained and reported to parents six times each year following the close of each six-weeks' period, according to the proposed revisions.

Secondary teachers also will send progress reports at the end of three weeks to all sponsors of extracurricular activities if any student who participates compiles a grade average lower than 70.

In other action, trustees are expected to take final action regarding boundary and cluster assignments for the new elementary school scheduled to open in September — as well as consider names for the new school as presented by a committee of students, faculty and parents.

An estimated 50 parents representing West, Quanah Parker and Santa Rita Elementary schools publicly opposed the board's redistricting plan Thursday during a hearing at Sam Houston Elementary School.

Nursing home selection needn't be mystery

Ombudsman ready to help patient, family with decision

By RON GILMORE
Staff writer

No one likes to think he might someday have to place his parent, sibling or even himself in a nursing home. But for many people it is a necessary decision and one that is often full of fear and ignorance of just what it is they should look for when "shopping for a suitable facility."

"I would look for smiles on the people living there, laughter and a pleasant smell," said Dolores Torres, the nursing home ombudsman for the Permian Basin Area Agency on Aging. "Also look for good lighting, plants and a willingness on the part of the administrator to talk with you."

Administrators should have no secrets to hide, said Ms. Torres.

"If I want to look into a particular room and they don't want me to, I wonder why," she said. "Of course, I'm not talking about walking into someone's private room."

The ombudsmen program consists of volunteers trained and certified by the Texas Department on Aging. Ms. Torres supervises 15 volunteers in a 17-county area. There are 22 nursing homes in the region — five of them in Midland.

Ms. Torres admits there are some problems with local nursing homes.

"I have been to 15 of them in the region and I would say that around one-third have problems," she said. "In Midland there are three that have had some problems, but I am pleased to say that they have been resolved."

Ms. Torres encourages current residents of nursing homes and persons looking for one to contact the ombudsman office for information and help.

"They should come to us with anything that they don't feel comfortable with," she said. "We serve as an advocate for the senior citizens. We get 'down in the trenches' and really get involved."

The ombudsman program is an outgrowth from the Older Americans Act in the 1960s, under the War on Poverty. A revision in the 1970s included the ombudsman program.

Knowing when to place a loved one in a nursing facility can be a confusing and emotional decision.

"Basically, it is time when they can no longer take care of themself," said Sheryl Nichols, director of Westwind Care Center, an intermediate care facility that operates with state subsidies. "If they are forgetful, fall down quite often or if they are sick, it is often a good idea to place them in a nursing home.

"They must have an order from a doctor though," she added. "Even so, a lot of them do not want to be here. They have always been independent and they may have always had their own home."

Family members are usually the ones who know best when the "time is right" said Ms. Nichols.

"The family knows them. They see the change."

GARY OTT

Don't forget, fans, THIS is Super Bowl Sunday

Welcome, sports fans, to Super Bowl Sunday, the one day of the year when all other happenings, short of World War III, diminish in importance.

Forget your scandals, bombings, terrorist attacks and first family squabbles. Today's main course is professional football.

Television's bigwigs certainly see it that way. That's why they will spend a huge sum of money bombarding us with what is affectionately known as pre-game hype. The kickoff itself is scheduled for 5:17 p.m. (don't ask me why they chose that precise moment) but network coverage gets under way a full two hours earlier.

I say "coverage," but that word really doesn't do justice to what we will be getting later today.

No, dear reader, what ABC has in store for us is an unending array of interviews and in-depth player profiles. This, quite obviously, will be in addition to the two weeks of interviews and in-depth player profiles to which we have already been subjected. Now, tell me the truth, do you really care that Dan Marino had a stomach ache Wednesday? Unless you are gambling degenerate or a National Enquirer reader, I can't imagine why.

Still, this is THE Super Bowl, a once-a-year phenomoneon, and I suppose we should forgive Roone Arledge and his gang at ABC for exploiting the event for all it is worth.

You hard-core fans, no doubt, already know what to expect. But as a public service I will offer the rest of you a preview of what's coming.

As mentioned earlier, there will be a ton of interviews, including several with defensive linemen who majored in physical education (with a minor in basket weaving) during their undergraduate days. A typical response will go something like this, "It's going to be, uh, a big game, you know, because, uh, you know, they've got some real, uh, good players, you know...."

There will be endless comparisons between the opposing quaterbacks, Marino and Joe Montana. Both are Italians and that fact alone should be good for a wholesome five-minute spot on their early years of eating ravioli and playing stick ball in city streets.

The "experts" will show you a lot of diagrams and charts concerning pass routes and defensive coverage. They will use phrases like "nickel backs," "a crease in the coverage" and "the linebackers will show blitz before dropping into zone coverage." The key here is to ignore the fancy words. They mean nothing. All you need to remember is that the team that scores the most points wins.

Both coaches, Don Shula and Bill Walsh, will be called brilliant on at least 15 occasions. In addition, there is an excellent chance Shula will be labeled "the greatest coach of all time" and Walsh will be termed "an offensive genius." Don't believe it. If they were truly brilliant they would find a cure for cancer instead of coaching a child's game played by grown men on steroids.

O.J. Simpson, who will be doing interviews before and after the game, will butcher the English language at least twice. But that's OK because he won the Heisman Trophy while at USC and Heisman Trophy winners from USC get to talk anyway they want.

The halftime show will center around a patriotic theme, complete with lots of American flags and red, white and blue balloons. The Spirit of America singers will perform — in red, white and blue costumes — a thundering rendition of "The Battle Hymn of the Republic." Hopefully, the network will have some compassion and not show the extravaganza.

Tom Landry, of Dallas Cowboy fame, has been recruited to be an analyst. He will begin his remarks by encouraging all viewers to vote a straight Republican ticket. He will also be "sincerely touched" by the halftime show.

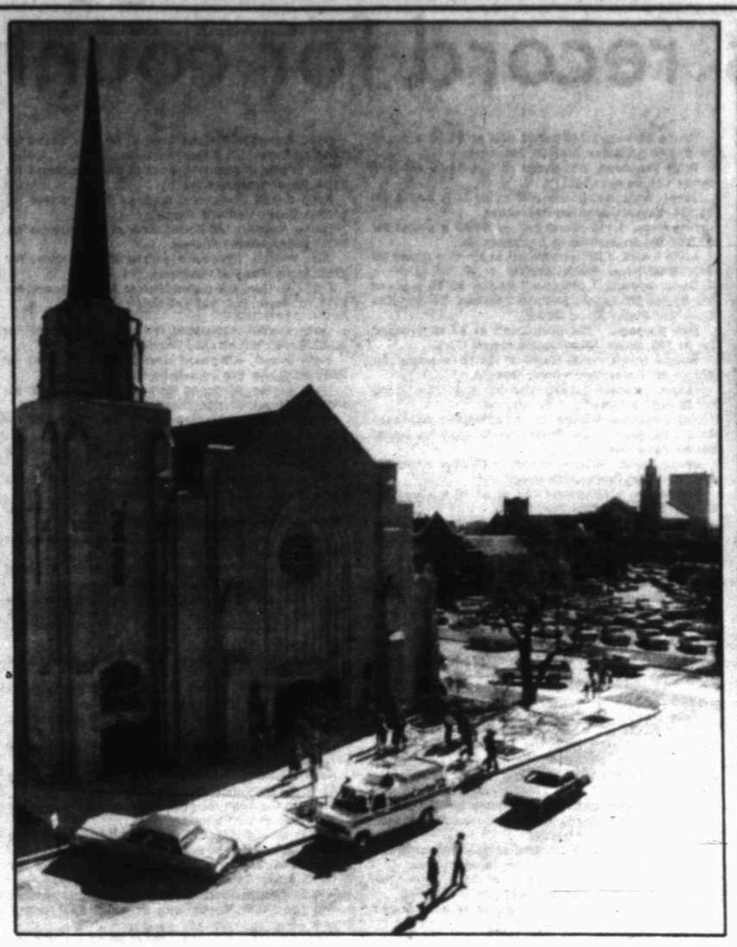

At some point a cornerback will intercept a pass and moments later a camera will focus in on him while he is sitting on the sidelines. He will mug the camera, show off his white teeth and scream, "Hi, Mom. We're Number 1!"

Steroids, I'm told, make grown men act like that.

West Texas: Colorful region includes 132 counties

Christopher Carpenter of Charlotte, N.C., a student at Snyder's Western Texas College, was astonished when he first glimpsed the flatness of the Scurry County landscape. Said he:

"Why, in Snyder, you can stand on a tuna fish can and see another 100 miles."

WEST TEXAS IS the XIT, the SMS, the 6666, the Waggoner and any number of other great ranches and ranch myths, legends and stories, some of them true.

It's the Amon Carter Museum in Fort Worth and the Permian Basin Petroleum Museum at Midland. It's the West of the Pecos Museum at Pecos and the Cowboy Artists of America Museum at Kerrville.

It's the magnificent Ranching Heritage Center at Lubbock, the quaint little Lake Meredith Aquatic & Wildlife Museum at Fritch and 155 other artistic, historical and scientific exhibits scattered across the hills, plains and mountains.

West Texas is hunting deer and turkey in the Hill Country, javelina near Comstock, dove and quail at Brownwood, pronghorn antelope and mule deer at Alpine, pheasant on the High Plains and rattlesnakes in Sweetwater.

WEST TEXANS slip over to the Gulf Coast occasionally to fish, but pursuing the walleye at Lake Meredith near Borger or the wily bass at Amistad Reservoir near Del Rio is no less sporting.

Better yet, the view from atop Amistad Dam, between the eagles of America and Mexico, is breathtaking and is in itself worth the trip.

West Texas is Billie Sol Estes and Billy Bob's Texas, Billy Clyde Puckett and T. Boone Pickens. It's Larry King and Larry McMurtry, Candy Barr and the best bar, the Kentucky Club, which is not in Texas really but in Juarez, hardly more than a stone's throw across the river from El Paso.

It's often John Birch conservative and always John Wayne tough and at least as independent as Gary Cooper in "High Noon" or Alan Ladd in "Shane."

It's a 14-year-old Stanton cheerleader whose prize steers won grand championships at Denver, Fort Worth, Houston and San Antonio, a stock show Grand Slam of sorts worth a quarter million dollars.

IT'S THROCKMORTON, where Bob Lilly grew up, and Rotan, where Sammy Baugh ranches. Or even Lubbock, where Bobby Layne moved because he liked its wide streets.

It's crossing the Pecos River bridge, the state's tallest, on a sizzling summer morning en route to Langtry, the town named for English actress Lillie Langtry and made famous by Judge Roy Bean and his "Law West of the Pecos."

The judge's saloon, courtroom and billiard hall still stand, but you can't buy a beer anymore in the Jersey Lilly. The judge's erstwhile domain is now a state visitor's center.

West Texas is nightfall in the Franklin Mountains, overlooking the low-rise sprawl of El Paso, a city of charm and style, and the neon allure of Juarez, whose rugged features blur and soften once the sun is gone.

Combine the population of those desert twins and you have a city larger than Dallas and second only to Houston.

WEST TEXAS IS feedlots, grain bins, pivot irrigators and, at two Lubbock country clubs, oil well pumps saluting golfers along the fairways.

It's a springtime forage for arrowheads around the Alibates National Monument near Amarillo and a fall cluster of shimmering golden cottonwoods along the banks of the Canadian River near Cal Farley's Boys Ranch.

It's driving 60 miles to buy a beer and speeding 90 miles an hour around Big Lake, Rankin and Sterling City as a passenger in search of a coyote story.

It's memories of the now-shuttered Baker Hotel in Mineral Wells and the Inn of the Golden West in Odessa, for years prime gathering places for the weary and the revelous.

Ranchers, lawyers, oilmen, politicians and journalists assembled nightly in the Golden West's Rooster Club to sip bourbon, swap stories and entertain the young ladies who appeared like fireflies at sundown. The bands and banter in the Golden Rooster muffled the intermittent sounds of rattling dice and casino-style gambling on the floor below.

WEST TEXAS IS a "traveling rapist" striking in Fort Worth, Abilene, Lubbock, Amarillo and Wichita Falls and a chilling manhunt near Stephenville for three escaped Colorado convicts.

The rapist eluded police. The convicts did not, and one died trying.

West Texas is the Abilene courtroom drama of Sharpstown bribery defendant Gus Mutscher, a speaker of the Texas House, and the five-month Amarillo trial of Fort Worth industrialist Cullen Davis, the richest man ever tried for murder in America.

Mutscher was convicted. Davis was not.

West Texas is the mystery surrounding the life and death of a wealthy and well-connected Midland attorney whose body was found under the wheels of a freight train near Shallowater.

It's a Potter County scandal called Pottergate, not as far-reaching as Watergate but for the people in Amarillo at least twice as convoluted.

It's visiting the "Children of God" encamped near the ghost town of Thurber and infiltrating a tent revival at Bangs with the followers of the mysterious Brother Terrell.

It's chasing Billie Sol through the mountains above El Paso and tracing the invisible footsteps of John Hinckley across the Texas Tech campus at Lubbock while a president lay wounded in Washington, D.C.

IT'S FARMERS and ranchers talking of heat, hail, water, drought, cows, crops, high costs and low prices and, like their friends in the oil patch, cursing and condemning U.S. congressmen, who they suspect are uninformed and convinced are liberal, which is worse.

It's the wind-driven dirt blinding motorists along Interstate 20 near Big Spring and the waitress at a Dairy Queen in Paducah who says things are bad but could be worse: "If you worry about not having shoes, you'll find somebody without feet."

It's South Plains farmlands thick with cotton, wheat, corn and onions and nourished by a bountiful underground water supply called the Ogallala Aquifer that is not rechargable and some day will be gone.

West Texas is descending from the Caprock near Post at sundown as the shadows engulf the craggy hills, the scrub oak and the sagebrush, and the lights atop the oil rigs flicker on across the plains.

It's seeing Wichita Falls darkened and devastated by a killer tornado, and recalling a similar episode 10 years earlier in Lubbock.

IN SUM, West Texas is a blend of western fact and fiction, the Old West and the New West, a vast and diverse and wide open land, sometimes very private and almost always very personal.

It is raw and wonderous, the good and bad that one comes to expect in a large and lusty state with a history of violence and a legacy of crude oil and crude people. People purportedly with too much money and too much power and too little patience and only an occasional trace of humility.

All of which makes West Texas mean and marvelous and totally splendid misery.

* * *

Defining the essence of West Texas is no more difficult than pinpointing its eastern boundary, which is impossible. All agree, however, that Dallas and its sophisticated glitter are not included.

AP Laserphoto Map

Despite a geographical imbalance, it's been argued for years that Fort Worth is the "city where the West begins." That argument overlooks the fact that Fort Worth lies roughly 200 miles from the Louisiana border to the east but a distant 600 miles from El Paso to the far west.

Not to worry.

THE WEST TEXAS Chamber of Commerce draws its line from Gainesville south to Fort Worth and Waco to just west of Austin and San Antonio and into Del Rio on the Mexican border.

"All of these towns are eastern extremities," says Adolph Janca, executive vice president, who grew up in Alice and once thought "everything north of San Antonio was Yankee Country."

Janca insists it is the diverse geography, culture and economy that makes West Texas unique. Illinois native Glen Churchill, president of West Texas Utilities, believes it is the people.

Whatever West Texas is and wherever it begins, the chamber manifesto serves our purposes nicely since the folks there have collected some useful facts and figures on the region.

More importantly, they cleverly annexed Kerrville and much of the Hill Country into West Texas.

That's not the same as Nevada grabbing up San Francisco or New Jersey laying claim to Boston, but it's close.

IF ABILENE IS the buckle on the Bible Belt, Kerrville is the gemstone on the Sun Belt.

Caressed by the Colorado River and crowned by the Highland Lakes, the Hill Country is a special place, the springtime showcase for the bluebonnet and the birthplace of Lyndon Johnson.

Once Commanche territory, the region derives its name from the wooded and rolling limestone hills that extend west of Austin and north of San Antonio and overflow with deer and turkey and other manner of wildlife.

Cold artesian water flows through spring-fed rivers and streams and among the hills and valleys timbered with juniper, cedar and cypress that grudgingly give way to mesquite on the northern flatlands.

Towns with names such as Fredericksburg, Boerne and Luckenbach reflect the German heritage, and it is that Germanic influence that gives the Hill Country some of its present-day charm.

To put West Texas in some sort of perspective, and using the broad stroke of the chamber as a yardstick, the area has a population of 4 million and includes 132 of the state's 254 counties.

IN ENCOMPASSES 159,601 square miles.

That's three times the size of New York and larger than New Mexico, New Jersey and New Hampshire combined, with Rhode Island and Delaware thrown in for the heck of it.

Texline, in the northwestern corner of the Panhandle, is closer to the capitals of Kansas, Wyoming, Oklahoma, New Mexico and Colorado than to its own statehouse in Austin.

West Texas lays claim to the most gorgeous sunsets in America, and its case is persuasive when viewed from within Big Bend or the Palo Duro Canyon or atop the Guadalupe Mountains, the tallest east of the Rockies.

A German artist named Ludwig Bemelmans once visited far West Texas, exploring its forbidding but majestic mountains and barren desert, and afterwards said:

"It is what Beethoven reached for in music. It will make you breathe deeply whenever you think of it, for you have inhaled eternity."

HEADING WEST from Fort Worth, modern-day writer A.C. Greene found solitude to be the overwhelming sense and warned that one could begin to feel naked and defenseless moving across so much openness.

"But," he added, "there is beauty here, the beauty of space and of freedom, and the beauty of the wind feeling its way along the brown, grassy swells and ruffling the yellow ridges."

Less eloquent but just as accurate was the person who described West Texas as "miles and miles of miles and miles."

West Texas has three distinct regions, four if one counts that great curve in the Rio Grande known as the Big Bend.

The Hill Country fades into the plains to the north and the semi-arid Trans-Pecos to the west.

The latter, it is said, is so dry the trees chase the dogs and so volatile that even the law of gravity is subject to violation. They say the wind once blew so hard it knocked Roy Rogers off his horse at a drive-in movie screen.

Exaggerations all.

But it is a fact that a tumbleweed blizzard occurred several years ago in Hereford.

And once an ill-fated rock festival near Lubbock was silenced by a rainstorm, a windstorm, a dust storm and a brutal ice storm. All in the same day.

THE STATE'S HIGHEST and lowest temperatures were recorded in West Texas: 120 degrees at Seymour in 1936 and minus 23 at Tulia in 1899 and Seminole in 1933.

One would have suspected that the record high would have been set in Presidio, which is invoked regularly by television weathermen reporting on the daily high temperatures around the state and country.

Truth be known, there's not much else to say about Presidio except that it's out there on the Mexican border and is the kickoff point for El Camino Del Rio, "The River Road."

The road hugs the Rio Grande for about 50 rollercoaster miles from Presidio to Lajitas, more a movie set than a town and home of the Badlands Hotel and Badlands Bar on the western edge of Big Bend National Park.

Anchored by the Chisos — the Ghost Mountains — the Big Bend National Park is no less remote and rugged and untamed than its northern cousin, the Guadalupe, and only during holidays is it overrun with visitors.

"Only a very small percentage of the people know Texas has a national park of this magnitude," said concessions manager Ron Houchin.

Despite its reputation as an impregnable stone fortress, and as cruel as the desert enviornment may seem, much of the land within Big Bend is quite fragile.

A cactus six inches tall may have required 50 years to reach that size. The mountain goats of the Big Bend could forage the slopes of Hell, others insist.

Jerry Flemmons, in his book "Texas," said: "It can be argued that the Big Bend still has not been settled."

HISTORICAL SCIENTISTS say the Big Bend was an ocean 100 million years ago and 35 million years later the home of dinosaurs and other prehistoric animals, including a flying reptile with a wing span of 51 feet.

Today there are black bears and panthers and bobcats in the forests and, in the early spring, red deer and flowers in the meadows.

Elsewhere in the far western regions is the highest point in Texas, 8,750 feet, atop Guadalupe Peak in the Guadalupe Mountains National Park.

Established as a national park in 1972, the Guadalupe is one of the most remote and least-visited of America's preserves, a place one seldom happens on by chance.

Apaches once hid within the mountains and ambushed passing wagon trains and stagecoaches. Now deer and elk, wild turkey, mountain lions, black bear and razorback hogs find refuge amid the stern peaks and bouldered canyons.

To the west is El Paso. To the East is Loving County, the most sparsely populated in America.

Many of Loving's 70 or so residents work in the oil patch or the gas fields or for the government and live in Mentone, the home once, and perhaps still, of a surly old sheriff whose disaffection for bearded writers is local legend.

FURTHER EAST is Pecos, widely known for its tasty cantaloupes and widely identified with Bible-toting Billie Sol Estes, who built an empire in phantom fertlizer tanks and emerged the No. 1 con man in a state ripe with wheeler-dealers.

Now out of jail for the second time, Estes is living in Abilene where he claims he is broke and repentant and seated once more at the right hand of God.

Despite what some say, West Texans produce more than cows and con artists.

Two years ago, they helped the state produce more than a fourth of the nation's oil, a third of its natural gas, a fourth of its cotton, most of its sheep and goats and a fifth of its marketed feed cattle.

About that same time Odessa, as rowdy and robust as any good oil town, got itself branded statistically as the murder capital of the country.

Still, it is a city with a sense of humor. Odessans once flirted with, but never embraced, a slogan alluding to the area's link to the oil industry.

"Odessa is Crude," they suggested.

DOWN THE ROAD 20 miles is Midland, a city known for its skyscrapers and its millionaires and a fun-loving Texas Aggie named Clayton Williams who flies A&M flags atop his buildings and his oil rigs.

Always the finest of rivals, Midland and Odessa watched Dallas and Fort Worth camouflage the hatchet a few years ago and decided it would be in their best economic interest to do the same.

Full moons and oil slumps do strange things to West Texans.

So does football, which some consider second only to water in importance. Tiny six-man teams and remote high schools often travel great distances for Friday night games.

That could run afoul of a proposed new eight-hour weekly limit on extracurricular activities in Texas schools. Grumbled Ballinger School Superintendent Doug Cox:

"Wext Texas was not taken into consideration."

A school such as McCamey could use its eight hours just getting to El Paso, with no time left for the return trip.

It is not uncommon for 45,000 people to show up at Lubbock's Jones Stadium on crisp autumn Saturdays to watch Texas Tech get beat.

A LIVING LEGEND there named R.J. "Warbucks" Walker, having conferred at length with his favorite spirit, once declared:

"Hell, we can get a crowd of 40,000 out to watch the Red Raiders scrimmage."

If the people of West Texas are a colorful lot, they likewise chose names for their towns that indicate an imaginative spirit.

There's a Happy, a Hereford, a Quail and a Quanah. There's a Buffalo and a Buffalo Gap and a Buffalo Springs. An Earth, an Energy and an Era.

A Big Lake and a Big Spring and a Sweetwater.

There's a Tell, a Telegraph, a Twitty and, best of all, a Turkey.

Don't laugh. Bob Wills grew up in Turkey and a monument to the "King of Western Swing" stands there today.

West Texans do not soon forget their favorite sons, nor they them.

In "A Personal Country," A.C. Greene's remembrance of his homeland, there is this observation:

"People who do not like West Texas frequently cannot like West Texans. The land is too powerful in them and it is an excessive land."

Believe him.

Auction sets sales record for county 4-H, FFA youth

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

The auction of 120 calves, swine and lambs in the recent 36th annual Midland County Livestock Show set a record $105,571.68 in sales for Midland County 4-H Club and Future Farmers of America (FFA) youngsters exhibiting livestock in the show.

The 20 steers in the auction totaled $42,817.50 in sales and averaged $1.87 per pound and $2,145 a head. The 52-swine sale totaled $32,732.10 and averaged $2.97 per pound and $629 a head. The 48 lambs totaled $30,022.08 in sales and averaged $6.04 per pound and $626 a head. The floor — market — price of animals not in the auction of premium livestock was set at 70 cents per pound for steers, 62 cents for lambs and 48 cents for hogs.

The Midland County Livestock Association sponsors the annual show.

The 1984 auction, which also set a record in sales, benefited the youthful 4-H and FFA exhibitors by $96,680.15. The 1983 sale totaled $72,000, and 1982's auction reached $94,000.

The grand champion steer brought a record $5.25 a pound.

The grand champion hog was sold for $5.55 a pound, and the three champion lambs were auctioned off for $8.75, $7.50 and $7.48 a pound.

The grand champion steer, a 1,225-pound Chianina-cross exhibited by Stephanie Smith, a 15-year-old Greenwood 4-H'er, grossed $6,431.25 under the auctioneering of Tommy Marricle.

The 1985 grand champion steer out-priced the show's 1984 grand champion, a 1,240-pound Chianina-cross steer, which brought more than $3,500 at $2.85 a pound, and the 1983 grand champion, a Maine-Anjou steer, which sold for $3.05 a pound. The 1983 and 1984 grand champions were exhibited by another Greenwood 4-H Club member, Mark Graham.

The show's reserve grand champion steer, a black Angus exhibited by Midland High School FFA member Chris White, 16, was auctioned off at $2.75 a pound for a total bid of $3,135.

Sixteen-year-old Annette Beier's grand champion hog, a 214-pound Hampshire, was auctioned off at $5.55 pound. The 260-pound reserve grand champion hog, a Hampshire, exhibited by Pam Adams, 15, of Midland, sold for $3 a pound. Bid price was $780.

Last year, the grand champion hog sold for $5.75 a pound, and the runner-up swine brought $3.35 a pound.

The 120-pound champion medium-wool lamb, exhibited by Julie Driver, 12, of Greenwood, sold for $7.50 a pound for a total bid of $900. The 1984 champion was auctioned for $5.35 a pound.

Michelle Driver, 17, of Greenwood, showed the champion cross-bred lamb, a 101-pound lightweight animal, which sold for $7.48 a pound for a total bid of $755.48. Last year's champion sold for $5.75 a pound.

Nine-year-old Clay Garner exhibited the champion fine-wool lamb, a 111-pound heavyweight creature, which sold for $8.75 a pound for a total bid of $971.25.

Mexican goes free after jury deadlocks

BROWNWOOD, Texas (AP) — A hopelessly deadlocked jury has forced the dismissal of manslaughter charges against a Mexican citizen accused of axing his cousin to death, officials said.

District Attorney Steve Ellis filed the motion to dismiss charges of voluntary manslaughter against Zacharias Morales Bernal, 26, after the jury said Friday it could not reach a unanimous verdict.

The final count stood at 10-2 in favor of acquittal, which came as a surprise to attorneys and spectators who had heard the jury announce only 30 minutes earlier that it was deadlocked at 6-6.

On Thursday, Ellis had dropped a murder charge against Bernal and opted for voluntary manslaughter before resting the state's case.

After the jury reported its 6-6 vote, visiting District Judge Royal Hart decided that if the jury couldn't reach a verdict, Bernal would be set free.

MISD

The school — scheduled to be named by trustees Tuesday — is located west of Holiday Hill Road on Loop 250. The residents say the they oppose the district's efforts to restructure boundary and cluster assignments because children in their respective neighborhoods have been "bounced around from pilar to post."

District officials contend, however, that the area has been rezoned only "once" in recent history.

A committee of students, faculty and parents also will present recommendations for consideration by trustees as possibile names for the school. The top three recommendations are Lyndon Baines Johnson, Ruth Cowden Scharbauer or Naomi Lancaster Elementary schools.

Other possible names include Centennial, Sam Rayburn, Audie Leon Murphy, Battle of Goliad, Francisco Coronado, "Big Foot" Wallace, John R. Baylor or Miriam Ferguson Elementary schools.

Trustees also will hear a comparitive study of Midland and Lee High schools.

People of our community who make a difference.

Mrs. Cecil Aycock

"You take what you get and do the best you can with it," says "Puff" Aycock. As a professional volunteer Mrs. Aycock has certainly taken her experiences and talents and put them to work in community service. When Mrs. Aycock completed a bachelors degree in psychology at Southwestern University in Georgetown, she had no inkling that she would spend years as a volunteer helping disabled individuals become productive citizens in the mainstream of our community.

The Aycock's two disabled children turned this loving volunteer's attention to the needs of many disabled Midlanders. As she watched her daughters grow she knew that they and other disabled individuals could be productive citizens. After all, being mentally retarded or physically handicapped does not changes one's desires to give, to be independent, to love, to be loved.

For 20 years Mrs. Aycock has worked with many retarded individuals through the Midland Association for Retarded Citizens. For four of those years she was on the board and for two more she served as secretary. This year she is working as president of MARC. Continual commitment such as this is why Mrs. Aycock was awarded the 1984 Texas' Individual Volunteer Appreciation Award.

This volunteer is also past president of the Children's Service League. At the Cerebral Palsy Center Mrs. Aycock has served as a teacher's aide and has helped with the physcial and occupational therapy sessions. For years she was in the Midland Memorial Hospital Auxiliary, and one year this Midlander was co-chairman of the Midland County Mother's March of Dimes. In addition, PTA organizations and the Permian Basin Mental Health and Mental Retardation Center have claimed much of Mrs. Aycock's time and effort in the past.

Mrs. Aycock says that working with disabled children gives her a feeling of fulfillment and that, hopefully, it helps the children, too.

Making the public aware of the needs and capabilities of disabled citizens is probably the toughest part says Mrs. Aycock. She admonishes others to, "accept the retarded people as individuals. Don't just look on them as a group of people who are retarded." She feels like MARC's apartment living project, which gives retarded individuals the opportunity to live fairly independently, will help to bring Midland's 3,000 to 4,000 retarded citizens back into the mainstream of the community.

Commitment, love, and action are why Mrs. Aycock makes a difference in Midland.

STOP HACKING AROUND

Some cough syrups have an ingredient called "dextromethorphan", which is a cough suppresent that is sometimes effective in stopping a hacking, aggravating cough. However, this ingredient can cause drowsiness and an upset stomach. Another ingredient sometimes found in cough syrups is "quiafenesin". It does not actually stop the cough reflex. It is most useful for congestion in the chest from thick mucus. This is because it breaks up the mucus and allows one to bring it up when coughing. If one has both a hacking cough and congestion, however, choose a medication with both ingredients. In any case, if a cough persists more than three days, consult a doctor.

Bold leadership

In a private ceremony today, Ronald Wilson Reagan will be sworn into his second term as President of the United States. In that capacity, he possesses a golden opportunity to solidify the changes in attitudes toward the federal government that began four years ago when he took the oath of office for the first time.

It's ironic that the accomplishments during the first term of Reagan's presidency, if anything, were less than what his critics and opponents had feared, for there was a horror in some quarters that President Reagan and Company would instigate such tight-fisted money-management policies that all forms of social improvement programs would be thrown by the wayside. Little thought was given by liberal spenders in Congress and elsewhere to the consideration that, perhaps, there was wanton waste and mismanagement in many federal programs or that certain entitlement programs could not be cut regardless of who was president.

Of course public spending was slashed, but not drastically; according to various sources, only the rate of the increase in federal spending has been reduced, as illustrated by the staggering growth in the deficit in Reagan's first four years.

From a defense standpoint, the President did initiate a massive effort to rebuild the nation's defenses — the benefits of which can now be seen in a renewed willingness on the part of Soviet Union's leaders to negotiate arms control agreements.

Domestically, the economy — mired in the grip of high inflation and double-digit interest rates in 1980 — is dramatically improved in a number of respects, such as inflation and interest rates, but in others such as the unemployment rate and business activity, the effort is undeniably lagging behind.

On all these fronts and others, as one might guess, there undoubtedly will be pressures for the administration to lay back and plod along methodically in the second term. There's a danger inherent in such a strategy, a danger that infects all too many institutions throughout the country today. It's the danger of accepting mediocrity as the norm.

Certainly President Reagan could plod along safe and secure in the knowledge that his administration has been successful in restoring to Americans some of the security they need and deserve. He could relish in the glow of the fact that it was during his presidency that the fire of patriotism was rekindled among the American people.

That isn't enough, though. President Reagan stands on the threshold of a golden opportunity to lead the American people boldly into a resurgence of world leadership and peace, and toward a realization worldwide of human rights and, in this country, domestic tranquility like none heretofore witnessed. He has the opportunity to garner support for programs designed to make the United States — the world — a better, safer place in which to live.

To accept mediocrity when bold leadership is possible would be a tragedy beyond imagination.

Another View:

Merge departments

Why is it that President Reagan, who vowed in 1980 to eliminate the Energy Department, now approaches the subject with the trepidation of an elephant hunter stalking his quarry with a BB gun?

The president set the stage for merging the Energy Department into the Interior Department by announcing he will nominate Energy Secretary Donald P. Hodel to head the Interior Department. But after that Reagan, through a White House spokesman, said only that he had instructed Hodel and John S. Herrington, who was named to head the Energy Department, to "commence a study" on the "advisability" of merging the two departments after they were confirmed by the Senate.

Rather than listen to the critics of the proposed merger in Washington, most of whom are out of step with the rest of the country, President Reagan should have no hesitation about moving quickly on a proposal for merging the costly Energy Department ($10 billion budget in fiscal 1985) into the Interior Department ($4.4 billion for fiscal 1985).

The Energy Department is a department that never should have been created. Its forerunner, the Federal Energy Office, created by President Richard Nixon in 1973, started a long dismal record of federal energy agencies discouraging oil production by enforcing unrealistic price controls voted by Congress. The congressional price ceilings were set at levels far below open market prices, thereby bringing about the dual disaster of lower U.S. oil production and increased domestic consumption.

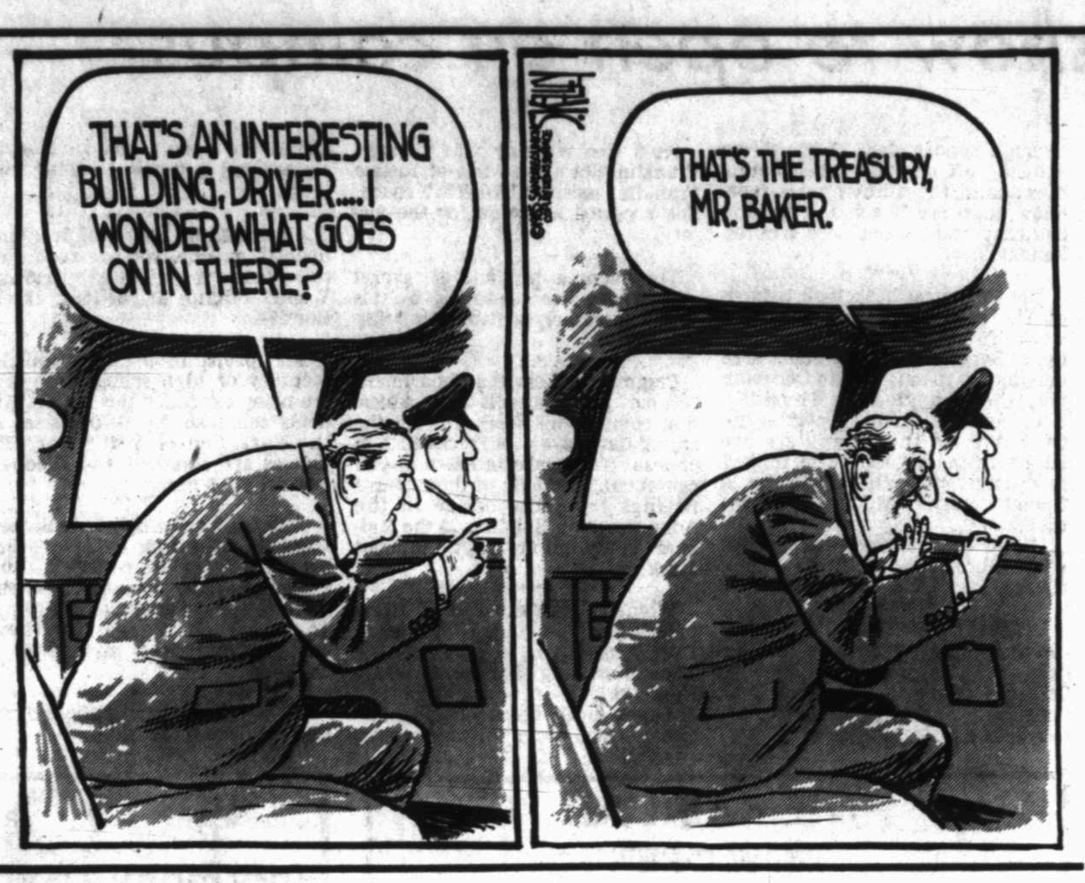

Energy production was further discouraged by the invention of thousands of regulations, most of them unnecessary, that were imposed on the oil industry. One of the more "brilliant" schemes was an "entitlement" program which had the effect of subsidizing the OPEC oil monopoly to the tune of about $7 billion.

Despite this record, Congress in 1977 created the Department of Energy, with the hearty approval of President Jimmy Carter, who vowed to wage the Moral Equivalent of War on Energy. The nation needed a Department of Energy about as much as it needed the Arab oil embargo in October 1973. The Energy Department's principal "achievement" was to intensify the energy discouragement program its smaller predecessors had begun.

Much of the so-called "energy crisis" can be laid at the door of these federal government policies that discouraged energy production at a time when Washington should have been encouraging all-out energy production. The crisis began to fade away when President Carter belatedly discovered the damage being done by price controls and began decontrolling oil prices. President Reagan quickly ordered total decontrol after entering the White House in 1981, and oil prices have been going down ever since.

President Reagan could set the tone for a real attack on the federal deficit by calling for an immediate merger of the unneeded Energy Department into the Interior Department. There are few things certain in this life, but one thing is certain — a disbanded Energy Department would never be missed.

JACK ANDERSON

Americans on both sides in war

WASHINGTON — The guerrilla war against the Sandinista regime in Nicaragua is being fought by a shifting motley group of opponents from all sides of the political triangle, including a flood of disillusioned Sandinistas and a wave of American adventurers.

Jack Anderson

The defectors include such heroes of the Sandinista revolution as Eden Pastora, Arturo Cruz and Pedro Joaquin Chamorro, who were driven from power by a hard-core, tightly disciplined communist minority.

This relentless minority, led by Nicaragua's newly installed President Daniel Ortega, seized power from the disorganized, non-communist majority in the familiar communist way — by slogans, intrigues, alliances with irreconcilable interests, demagoguery to hold the many, terrorism and blackmail to intimidate the few.

Now the Ortega regime is remorselessly destroying the middle class — the same merchants, lawyers and editors, ironically, who forced the late dictator Anastasio Somoza's downfall and brought the Sandinistas to power. Ortega's purpose, quite obviously, is to wipe out the democratic center and establish a Leninist dictatorship in the heart of Central America.

In the process, many disenchanted Sandinistas have headed for the hills and joined the contras. This has put them in uncomfortable embrace with the Somocistas, who supported the late dictator. They are also joined by the Miskito Indian guerrillas who formerly fought against the Somocistas but are now battling the Sandinistas.

Add to this combustible mix a surge of adventurers from the United States. An increasing number of American volunteers, uncontrolled by the CIA or any other U.S. authority, are turning up in the Nicaraguan jungles.

Who are these individual Americans who have made the Nicaraguan revolution a matter of personal commitment? My reporter in Latin America, Jon Lee Anderson, has run across several of these expatriate Americans in his travels on both sides of the battle lines.

They are, he reports, a varied lot: dedicated political ideologues, cynical mercenaries, naive young tenderfoots and combat-hardened Vietnam veterans. Some are seeking adventure, others fulfillment, others relief from boredom.

A host of Americans have taken sides with the Sandinistas; they live and work in Nicaragua. A few have actually fought alongside government troops against the contras, but most help the Sandinistas by working as planners, writers, economists and translators. Like their European and Latin American counterparts, they are white-collar revolutionaries. "Internationalists," some call themselves.

On the contra side, the volunteers have plunged with equal zest into the political intrigues, alley scuffles and jungle ambushes that characterize the counterrevolution against the Sandinistas.

As a random example, 25-year-old George Davis of Great Falls, Mont., was in full combat gear, blazing away at an entrenched Sandinista unit inside Nicaragua, when my reporter encountered him. They spent seven hours together hunkered down behind a large tree with rebels of Eden Pastora's guerrilla group.

Sandinista bullets zinged by overhead, killing two men behind smaller trees. Davis is a tall, blond, rangy kid who had been in the Marines briefly. He said he had come to Nicaragua to "fight communism." After hanging around for three months in a jungle training camp, Davis led the first charge against the Sandinista lines that day. His Nicaraguan companions agreed he had shown great bravery.

But he got an overdose of fun and adventure for one day, and when my reporter headed back to civilization and suggested he come along, Davis went willingly. He later found work on an American's farm in Costa Rica and earned enough money for his airfare back to the United States.

"John Cattle" is an adventurer of a different stripe. When my associate met him at a Miskito Indian contra camp in the Honduran boondocks, Cattle claimed to be on a "humanitarian fact-finding mission" from a Florida-based foundation.

The purpose of his trip was to see what the Miskito refugees needed in the way of supplies, he said. But other contra sources confided that Cattle and his two sidekicks had spent two weeks in the Indian camp teaching the rebels such deadly arts as knife fighting, hand-to-hand combat and setting booby traps.

A chance encounter with the stocky, unshaven Cattle on the street in the Honduran capital of Tegucigalpa several days later brought out the truth. He admitted that Cattle wasn't his real name and said he headed an advance party of mercenaries from an organization incorporated in the Cayman Islands.

These soldiers of fortune had come to Central America "on spec," he said, to see if there was any money to be made instructing the primitive Indian tribesmen in the use of sophisticated weapons.

GEORGE F. WILL

'Death' of a Soviet leader

Konstantin Chernenko's strength is reportedly ebbing, and not surprisingly: Building the New Soviet Man and a workers' paradise worthy of him involves long hours and heavy lifting. So, just to be ready, here is a generic news story to be run whenever a Soviet "leader" (an odd term for the head of a nation where people have no choice but to follow) dies:

WASHINGTON — The death of the Soviet leader is viewed here as a promising "opening" in U.S.-Soviet relations. His successor, Ivan X, is considered a "moderate."

George F. Will

State Department officials warn that it would be "superficial" to draw "premature" conclusions based on the "mere facts" of his life, which "on the surface" follows the traditional career path of the Soviet elite. "True," a U.S. official says, "Mr. X has spent 27 years arresting people, but he probably has got all that out of his system."

As evidence of Mr. X's moderation, State Department analysts note that although no one has actually seen him jog, the consensus in the diplomatic community is that he jogs in New Balance shoes, which are made in Massachusetts. Also, he is said to use a Walkman, on which he listens to Bruce Springsteen tapes.

"He is a high tech, 'new ideas,' Gary Hart-type appealing to Soviet yuppies," said a Yale Kremlinologist. A Harvard professor of Detente Studies, noting that Springsteen's current hit is "Born in the U.S.A.," infers that Mr. X may wish to "normalize" relations with Afghanistan.

It is common knowledge that Mr. X snacks on Twinkies delivered by diplomatic pouch. "Clearly," says a State Department Soviet expert, "he is cosmopolitan, breaking the mold of insularity."

The State Department acknowledges some gaps in its knowledge of Mr. X. For example, equal numbers of experts are certain that he does and that he does not speak English.

Although Mr. X has published many articles, the State Department says little is known about what he "really" thinks. "Did 'Mein Kampf' tell us Hitler's mind?" cautions an official. Mr. X's writings include attacks on freedom of expression, a defense of the "export of socialist fraternity to Afghanistan," and "Against Bourgeois Sentimentalism: A War-Winning Strategy for Nuclear Weapons."

A State Department official explains, "True, a literal reading of his writings might suggest he is occasionally somewhat muted in his enthusiasm for the spirits of detente, Geneva, Helsinki and San Clemente. But sophisticated Western observers understand that obeisance to traditional rhetorical modes is required for advancement in a society as 'conservative' as the Soviet Union, which is utterly unlike our society.

"Furthermore, Americans must understand that in the Soviet system, just as in ours, the role of personality is paramount." Asked how U.S. optimism could rest on the assumption that Soviet society is radically unlike and essentially similar to ours, the official said: "Nevertheless."

The official notes that "seasoned observers" believe Mr. X opposed the Soviet suppression of East Germany, Hungary, Czechoslovakia and Poland, favors "liberalization" of concentration camps, and is a middle-of-the-roader regarding the psychiatric "hospitals." The State Department considers it "encouraging" that Mr. X has risen to power while privately opposing every significant Soviet policy in his lifetime.

At a recent Moscow reception for the American peace group, Clergy and Faculty Mightily Concerned, a Soviet official confided that Mr. X, 69, is a "Young Turk" who wants arms control so that Soviet living standards can rise. The Soviet official said Mr. X is "a pragmatist — sort of a Soviet Howard Baker," but is threatened by "hawks" in the Politburo.

State Department officials concur that Mr. X and other "doves in the Kremlin closets" need a sign from the United States that it "means no harm." U.S. diplomats are formulating "new approaches" that will show U.S. "flexibility" in arms-control negotiations. "The Soviets made a concession by returning to the talks they had broken off," a U.S. official observes, "so a U.S. concession would be symmetrical." The Commerce Department is organizing a trade delegation committed to "prophylactic unilateralism," meaning credits to underwrite Soviet purchases of U.S. goods.

A White House official, paraphrasing Churchill, explains that all U.S. policy rests on the principle, "Jaw-jaw is better than even prime rib."

At the State Department, a reporter recalled that optimism about the "moderate" Khrushchev died with the Hungarian invasion, the Berlin Wall and the Cuban missile crisis, and optimism about the "moderate" Brezhnev died in Prague, Afghanistan, Yemen, Angola, Ethiopia and Poland. A State Department official replied: "Yes, but."

ART BUCHWALD

Worse switches do exist!

The President was adjusting quite well to all the musical chairs in the White House, but even he wasn't prepared for the big one.

Art Buchwald

One night last week Nancy Reagan said to him, "I'd like to swap jobs with Secretary of Health and Human Services, Margaret Heckler."

"How can you do that? You're the best First Lady a President ever had."

"I'm burned out, Ronnie. After giving all those luncheons and dinners for heads of state, and making all those official appearances, I feel I need a new challenge. At least as a Cabinet officer I won't have to smile all the time. Ronnie, my cheekbones hurt."

"But," the President protested, "I'm losing Deaver, Baker and Meese. You're the only one left from the old gang. With them gone, who can I confide in?"

"Margaret Heckler is well qualified to be the First Lady. She knows the inner workings of government and she's a quick study. Besides, Ronnie, it's not as if I'm leaving Washington. I'll only be a few blocks away, and I'll come over any time you want to talk."

"Gee whiz, Nancy, I just don't think it would work. If you leave me now, with all the other staff changes the American people will get upset. They sleep better knowing that you're in the White House."

"I was afraid you'd try to talk me out of it. But I have to think of my own career. There is no future in being a lame duck First Lady. As Secretary of HHS I'll have a high profile, and I won't have to deal with all the power plays in the White House any more. I'm sick and tired of everyone coming to me and asking me to put in a good word with you for all the silly ideas they have."

"You don't understand, Nancy. I can afford to lose Deaver, Baker and Meese, but who is going to look adoringly at me when I make a speech?"

"I'm sure Margaret Heckler can do that. We've talked it over and I explained what the duties of First Lady entail, and she said as far as she was concerned there wasn't one she couldn't handle."

"You mean you talked it over with her before you talked it over with me?" the President said.

"I knew if I asked you first you might raise an objection. I got the idea when Donald Regan asked Jim Baker if he wanted to swap jobs. If Regan had gone to you first he could have been turned down."

"Suppose I put you on the National Security Council? Would you stay then?"

"I'd rather be in charge of Health and Human Services. I've proved myself as First Lady, and after four years there are no surprises."

"I can't believe anyone who has the ear of the President of the United States would want to throw it all away for a Cabinet position. Do you realize you're the first person who sees me in the morning and the last person who sees me at night?"

"I know that, Ronnie. But as First Lady, I'm still perceived as nothing more than your wife. As a liberated woman, I want to be appreciated for myself."

"But you promised if I were reelected you'd remain on board as First Lady of the country for the next four years. You're indispensable to me."

"No one is indispensable to the President of the United States. And you can prove that by letting me switch with Margaret Heckler."

"I'm going to have to sleep on this one," the President said.

"Why don't you do that? And while you're at it, remember, it could be worse."

"How's that?"

"I could have offered to swap with Jeane Kirkpatrick."

SPEAKING OUT

Neighbors band together against burglaries, drugs

By NEAL MEARES

Neal Meares, a resident of Midland for 20 years, is one of a group of victims who became involved in trying to do something about the burglary and drug problem. He is a life insurance agent.

Neighbors Against Burglaries and Drugs had its beginning when a small group of citizens became alarmed over the increased number of burglaries of homes in a particular section of Midland, where there had been hundreds of thousands of dollars in property losses from theft, and as many as four homes burgalrized in the same block.

This group met and formed an organization to combat this type of criminal activity in this particular area, and formally circulate a letter to those who had been victims and to their neighbors. The first meeting called to discuss this problem, even though not publicly announced, drew an attendance of approximately 250 people.

Following this first meeting, the group moved to become more formally organized to form a nonprofit corporation with officers, directors, and legal status set up to accept donations and to act as a body particularly concerned at that stage with residential burglaries. There followed a meeting in the fall of 1983 and a name was adopted for this organization. NAB'D is short for Neighbors Against Burglaries and Drugs.

The group learned that most burglaries are motivated by drug users to finance their habit. There followed a meeting before the City Council in January 1984, in which the group expressed their concern about the problem of residential burglaries. The council was asked to increase the number of patrolmen and to develop an Intelligence Unit to help combat the problem.

In the meeting before the council, Mayor Thane Akins suggested that there needed to be citizen involvement and suggested that Neighborhood Watch programs should be set up by the citizens of the community. The Mayor went on to advise that he did not believe throwing money at the problem by adding additional officers and equipment to combat this growing problem was the answer. His suggestion was followed and the Neighborhood Watch Program has mushroomed to 115 units since that time.

Installation of individual burglar alarm systems has proliferated and thousands of dollars per month have been spent for private patrol services, however, the number of home burglaries has continued to increase. In 1981, there were 577 residential burglaries — one in every 61 homes; in 1982 — 744 burglaries, one in every 47 homes; in 1983 — 1031 burgalaries, one in every 34; and in 1984 — 1053 burglaries, one for every 33 homes.

Police representatives informed NAB'D that burglaries are nearly always related to drugs, and that drug problems are deeply rooted in all economic levels of our citizens in Midland. As a result, NAB'D determined that its concern with burglaries should be expanded to include a concern with the problem of drugs. NAB'D representatives met with the School Board and Officials and recommended an increase in the use of "Sniffer Dogs" and harsher penalties for drug use and possession, particularly drug sale or distribution.

NAB'D has set up meetings between law enforcement agencies includeing federal, state, county and city in order to foster closer cooperation and coordination in the fight against burglaries and drug problems. NAB'D has also encouraged and promoted the formation of Court Watch Programs by civic groups for the purpose of having observers in court rooms, checking on the manner in which drug and burglary cases are presented and prosecuted, then disposed of by juries and judges. Although some progress has been made, reaction from city officials, members of the police department, judges, and school board members and officials, has largely been defensive.

The attitude toward NAB'D has been that it is a group of discontented fault-finders trying to place the blame on public officials for failure to control Midland's epidemic of burglary- and drug-related crimes, and acusing them of not doing their job, rather than an organization of concerned citizens trying to solve a major problem. The fact is that Midland is declining in the rates of safety to person and property. Personal losses from home burglaries are increasing. Midland apparently is "easy pickings" for imported, homegrown and professional criminals.

NAB'D has recommended:

1. Increased patrolling of areas in which major burglaries are continuing to occur.

2. More diligent and speedy prosecution of criminals who are drug dealers or burglars, once they are caught. At present, prosecution is slow and the legal process is cumbersome and inefficient.

3. Harsher punishment for drug dealers and users in the public schools including mandatory expulsion of drug dealers or distribution, first offense or not. Segregation and isolation of drug users into special schools or classes in circumstances where they are not suspended or expelled.

4. Election of judges and prosecutors who are tough on criminals.

5. Expansion of jail facilities to eliminate overcrowding and to reduce the number of criminals on probation or suspended sentence.

6. Public exposure and dissemination of information regarding criminal activity in Midland through publications and newspapers and by circulating of private bulletins. Publication of trial dates so that interested citizens can attend.

7. Financial assistance to worthwhile projects such as purchase of equipment to be used by law enforcement agencies and funds to reward witnesses and informers.

8. Political support of officials who are particularly meritorious or diligent in apprehension, prosecution and in punishment of criminals.

9. Permanent reinstatemet of federal narcotic agents in Midland.

NAB'D has requested another hearing with the City Council in 1985. NAB'D is asking Midland citizens to attend this hearing to express their concerns about home burglaries either by addressing the council or by showing of numbers. If victims of these crimes and their neighbors will be present at this hearing, perhaps the city administration will be moved to take emergency action to stop rampant and wanton violation of home and private property. The date and time of this hearing will published in the Midland Reporter-Telegram in time for you to make plans to attend.

NAB'D believes that it can be more effective if it concentrates its efforts on one area of criminal activity that is related to burglary and drugs than if it attacks wholesale the problem of crime in Midland in general. The group is new. The group is steadfast and resolved to help make Midland a safer, more secure city to live, work and raise our families.

We challenge the citizens of Midland to beocme more aware, more involved, and more concerned about ther own as well as their friends' and neighbors' property and welfare. We are fortunate to live in a great city such as Midland. Let's make it even better in the future.

BILL MODISETT

It feels like a seasonal change

Bill Modisett

Any "born and bred" Texan will tell you there's an even better reason for living in the Lone Star State than chili cookoffs, western dances and armadillo races. It's — you guessed it — the traditionally mild Texas winters.

At least they used to be mild.

Now, I'm not a meteorologist and don't claim to have any uncanny and extraordinary knack for predicting the weather. I leave that up to the folks on the 6 and 10 o' clock news and the Farmer's Almanack.

But three and a half decades of watching the weather on the Western side of Texas has convinced me that the winters aren't getting any milder. In fact, they seem to be doing just the opposite — more snow, more ice, more below-zero days.

There'll probably be more than a few who will disagree with my assessment and that's OK. They'll back up what they say with all sorts of scientific data accumulated from textbooks and so forth to show that various factors are making winters grow milder here in West Texas.

That's fine; they'll find no scientific argument from me. The only "data" I base my conclusion on is personal experiences gleaned from years of watching winters come and go. Snow falls in some of them — more frequently now — and ice in others, such as last year's when an unusually severe and long-lasting icy spell burst pipes and killed outdoor flora up and down the state. Texas has received numerous snowfalls in the past few years, but lately it seems the snows are deeper and cold temperatures keep them on the ground for longer periods, like the one that began falling in the Permian Basin late last week and, in shaded locations, was still on the ground in some spots late this week. Now that's unusual any way you cut it.

What does it all mean? Well, I'm not naive enough to predict an Ice Age just around the corner. Neither are the editors of the Farmer's Almanack.

I do believe it's part of a subtle change in weather patterns that will continue over the next several decades — bringing some warmer winters and some colder, but gradually growing more extreme with the emphasis on cold with snow and ice.

For a lot of long-time Texans that's depressing. Why? Because for decades it's been said the only thing the beautiful state of Colorado has that Texas doesn't is mountains, and the only thing Texas has that Colorado doesn't is mild winters. Now, with winters growing more severe here, that isn't even accurate.

And Texas is still cheated. It still doesn't have ski slopes!

City's spending, coverage questioned

Instead of buying an old worn out office building, the city could buy a big tank to store brine water, to pour on the streets instead of making mud pies with sand and ice.

If they buy the building they will tear it down and put in a pretty little rose garden that will take two hours of stopping at red lights to get close enough to see what we spent our taxes on or park three blocks across the tracks and walk to see it.

While I'm at it why is the local section covered with what the city council in Odessa is doing? Why do we have to buy an Odessa paper to find out what's going on in Midland? You could have covered the whole page on a dear lady who was killed in an accident last week. I'm talking about Miss Golliday. She wasn't only a teacher; she was a legend. Most of us felt like we had lost a dear friend.

Other equipment can remove snow

For the past few weeks I have been listening to and viewing messages about snow removal. On Sunday, Jan. 13, on the 10 p.m. news, Channel 7, Cable 8, I viewed trucks running up and down the Air Terminal's runway. It was the laugh of the day.

Has it ever occurred to our mayor and city engineers that we already have the basic snow removal equipment. The City of Midland utilized graders and dump trucks with spreading devices to spread sand. With very little adaptation they can be made to remove snow and prevent its build up with rock salt. With very little expense a special edge can be placed on the grader's blade. What are we paying our city engineers for, just summer work?

Other larger cities utilize graders and trucks spreading salt, with a longer snow season than ours. After all how much time are we talking about to remove the snow from the terminal, six hours?

Let's utilize what we have instead of sitting back and thinking of ways to spend our tax dollars. I sincerely hope there are others as concerned as I am.

Purchase of building needs more scrutiny

The contemplated purchase of the TESCO building should be given more public scrutiny. The City Council has indicated that if it can't find a suitable tenant then the property may not be bought. Whether the city can find a tenant or whether it is a good investment is wholly immaterial. What is material is that it indicates that the city has no need for the property to carry out its functions. That makes the matter purely speculative.

The city has no right to use the public funds for speculative ventures. Public officials whose responsibility it is to allocate and disburse, or who are in charge of, the public funds hold those funds in a sort of public trust. Those funds should be disbursed only for police and fire protection, to pay the public debts, provide for streets and their maintenance, educational facilities and such other obligations and expenditures for the public weal, common good, and necessities as from time to time be required. The above, of course, is not by way of limitation, but most assuredly the City Council has no right nor authority to engage in real estate speculative ventures. It is, or should be, ethically prohibitive.

A more proper use of such money as the city might have for this venture might best be used for purchase of airport snow removal equipment, about which the City Council has been woefully lacking in gumption.

I'd rather not deal with 'gender bender'

Regarding Mary Toller's letter, I am going to have to disagree with her. I think I would rather take some of the violence and sexual lyrics than to see a guy dress as a woman.

Now to think that Mary really thinks that I believe kids will mix up their daddy's sex with a Boy George Snoopy doll is ridiculous. I was only using this example to exemplify how a phenomenon like Boy George can stoop so low as to promote his junk on the masses with this character which once symbolized "innocence!"

Now to say that my attitude is one to start World War III is really ignorant. For who would have to fight that war? It would probably be me since I am a male, of age, and give a damn about my country. I will have to admit that if it would have been left up to me I would have given General Patton more tanks at the end of World War II to finish off the Russians.

To say that Boy George is a good ol' boy, I will have to disagree with her there, too. If only Boy George would save some of this money he is giving away to charities and use if for a sex-change for himself.

In one of Boy George's songs where he sings about being a chameleon, I guess this is a nice name for what you can call a man dressing like a woman.

Well, I am getting tired of writing so I guess I will get back to throwing darts at my Boy George poster.

Neighbors grateful for snow removal

The man of the hour in our block on Sunday, Jan. 13, was F. Joe Stokes of 610 Watson Street. Stokes was seen cheerfully and industriously using a borrowed snow shovel to clear paths to doors and snow from cars — most of them owned by elderly widows.

As one who believes in giving thanks where it is due, we are grateful to you, Joe Stokes.

'Taxes' Legislature already at work

Well, the State of Texas Legislature is in full session again and Bob Bullock, Comptroller, has forecast a $1 billion shortfall due mainly to the depressed oil revenue. Speaker Gib Lewis has made public the bounty of his thoughts on the matter announcing that UTPB and UTEP is "under consideration" to be closed to help save money! There has been no real committee work done on this matter so the old tried and true method of government operation of raising taxes to cover shortfalls is again at our doorstep.

Now, everyone in West Texas knows about the depressed oil business and there has been time for the "Taxes" Legislature to take some hard looks at cutting services that are inefficient or unneeded. If you have renewed your auto license tags recently, you were introduced to the initial spirit of the new session of the "Taxes" Legislature.

On the local home front, our houses were revaluated for tax purposes and taxes raised on market values adjusted up when real estate in Midland is at an all-time low. But, that is neither here nor there to the "Taxes" Legislature, because the standard operation procedure is: 1. "Mumble publicly about cutting a service or program" (so public attention will focus AWAY from taxes) then, 2. Actively seek ways to raise taxes! There are two areas that the Texas Tax Man has never trod over, horse racing and state income tax.

If the "Taxes" Legislature needs $1 billion, I don't think that horse racing can raise that kind of money quick enough to bail out the boys in Austin, so, the shortest route between the government and your pocketbook is ... (if you answered "B" you win and lose!)

Texas is still the greatest place to live, but as time goes by it won't be any different than any of the other states which attack the paycheck and ask questions later!

President Reagan to take second oath of office

By WILLIAM RANDOLPH HEARST JR.
Editor-in-Chief, The Hearst Newspapers

Hearst

NEW YORK — President Reagan will take his second oath of office twice; today in a private gathering at the White House and again Monday in a public, televised ceremony. The Sunday ceremony, which conforms to the Constitutional decree that a new presidential term begin at noon on Jan. 20, will mark the third time this century that a President has been sworn in on the Sabbath. Presidents Wilson and Eisenhower, both of whom also were re-elected, were inducted in private Sabbath ceremonies with public arrangements the next day.

While the Sunday festivities mark the actual re-inaugural of the president's second term, his election triumph and the Soviets' grudging decision to negotiate arms talks with us emphasized the sweep of President Reagan's appeal at home and abroad. The president stayed with his own economic game plan even as key advisers urged retreat. The result? A sound, strong dollar and a resurgent economy that has more Americans employed than ever in our history.

Every time the economy hiccoughs, critics rush out to sound the alarm that the U.S. is heading for a recession or worse. Thereupon, the economy again picks up steam and goes forward.

Sure, the deficit is big, but President Reagan inherited massive indebtedness from previous administrations. So instructive has the Reagan economic scene become that welfare states in Europe and from our neighbors in Latin America, saddled with gargantuan debt, have regularly sent teams here to study the Reagan system. They go home wondering at what he wrought.

President Reagan at the outset of his first term promised to make the American defense forces strong again after years of neglect. That pledge he fulfilled with the result that the U.S.S.R. is plenty worried about our defensive capabilities, particularly in space. The Soviets want the upper hand in every military sector, including space. That's one of the main reasons, it seems to me, that Soviet Foreign Minister Andrei Gromyko went on public TV in Moscow to tell his tame audience that the U.S. must sharply alter its stand on the Strategic Defense Initiative (SDI), which critics call "Star Wars." President Reagan told our Secretary of State Shultz that research on SDI will be pressed ahead. British Prime Minister Mrs. Margaret Thatcher endorsed the plan.

The Soviet Union, having failed abysmally to frighten Western allies from emplacing up-to-date U.S. made intermediate missiles on their soil (by parliamentary vote in all cases), wants to invoke the SDI scare. They suggest that they might break off arms negotiations if we don't abandon SDI.

But the NATO allies have so far stood firm overall against direct threats from the U.S.S.R. They also have had the benefit of warnings from the People's Republic of China which negotiated at a snail's pace with Moscow. The Chinese tell West Europeans that the Soviet aim is to swallow up nations piecemeal, not to make an overt strike against any but the most exposed.

That's also why the Soviets use proxies to wage what they call "revolution" — conspiracies in armed subversion. On a massive front, Fidel Castro has dispatched legions to fight for the Soviet Union in Africa, the Middle East and our own backyard, the Caribbean. His forces train and supply the military junta in Nicaragua which, in turn, provides active assistance to left-wing guerrillas in El Salvador.

• • •

Pursuing quiet and persistent diplomacy mixed with needful economic assistance, President Reagan helped a giant South American neighbor and ally elect its first civilian government in 21 years. Brazil chose a 74-year-old centrist, Tancredo Neves, as its president. He had been the opposition leader for years but his record for good government was solid and the Brazilian electoral college selected him overwhelmingly. President-elect Neves, who faces monumental economic problems, has pledged direct elections by the people in 1988.

This is in complete contrast to communist-run countries, where some usually promise pluralism. Once their party is installed and backed by guns, the communists either jailed the opposition or forced their opponents to flee the country. Nicaragua, the other day, was just such a case.

Now that civilian rule is being restored to Portuguese-speaking Brazil, it will make the seventh South American nation to resume democratic practices, all achieved since President Reagan assumed office in 1981. Others are Argentina, Ecuador, Uruguay, Peru, Bolivia and Colombia. We all know that in Central America embattled El Salvador freely elected President Jose Napoleon Duarte despite guerrilla efforts to frighten the voters.

Brazil, nearly as large geographically as the U.S., has huge, untapped mineral resources. It also has an outsized debt and a big slice of its 131 million population clamoring for additional state aid, or nationalized takeovers. The Reagan administration has constantly encouraged self-help projects.

In World War II, Brazil meant what it said as an ally. It rushed troops to our side and fought with us in Italy. Most people here forget the Brazilian role which was most gallant.

Now that civilian rule has returned to Brazil, we must make every effort possible to see that stable conditions follow and good government comes to the time President-elect Neves hopes to have direct elections. Up until the other day, Brazil was called "The Sleeping Giant of Latin America." It has awakened and the military wisely chose to respect civilian administration.

Banners in Brazil broke out the day after the election, reading "Good Morning Democracy." It was a splendid signal for our side and one in which President Reagan can take quiet satisfaction as he prepares for his second inaugural.

DON'T FORGET CLOSING COSTS

You have saved $20,000 and now want to buy a home or condominum in the $100,000 range because you hear that you'll need a 20% down payment. If that is the last penny of your savings, you had better set your sights a little lower. You do not want to get into a financial bind due to closing costs. You should know exactly what they will be BEFORE you commit all of your savings for the down payment.

Closing Costs, which include but are not limited to a title policy, prepayment of taxes and interest, attorney's fees, surveys and documentation preparation, will vary from sale to sale.

Lenders are required to provide you with a good faith estimate of closing costs within three days of your application. Then you'll have a good idea of what the additional expenses will be before passing title.

Although closing expenses cannot be pinpointed to the penny until the actual passing, an experienced Realtor can provide you with a reasonable estimate of such costs for an anticipated purchase at any time.

Super Bowl XIX: No. 1 vs. No. 1

By DAVE GOLDBERG
AP Sports Writer

STANFORD, Calif. — This is the way it was supposed to be from the start, No. 1 vs. No. 1.

The San Francisco 49ers, tops in the NFC at 15-1, and the Miami Dolphins, best in the AFC at 14-2, play Sunday for the National Football League championship in Super Bowl XIX, a game heavy in hyperbole and boasting two quarterbacks who may be ready to support every word of it.

It is a different Super Bowl in at least one way even before President Reagan conducts a televised coast-to-coast coin flip to determine who kicks off.

Played just 35 miles south of San Francisco, it marks only the second time in 19 Super Bowls that the game has been played in the home area of one of the participants. The other time was in 1979, when the Los Angeles Rams lost to the Pittsburgh Steelers in a game played in Pasadena, Calif.

It also features the two coaches who, try as they might, cannot shake off the label of "genius."

IT'S DON SHULA of the Dolphins, whose winning percentage is the best ever among NFL coaches, vs. Bill Walsh, who turned the 49ers from the league's worst team into a Super Bowl winner in three years and whose complex offenses have forced defensive strategists to the limits.

And it matches defenses that, if not the most glamorous in the league, certainly are among the best.

More than anything, though, the spotlight that two weeks of buildup and 2,000 news media members brings to the NFL's annual exercise in excess has focused on the two quarterbacks, and has shone most brightly on one man — Miami's Dan Marino.

In just his second profesional year, Marino shattered the NFL records for touchdown passes with 48 and yards with 5,804. His impact is such that he has made San Francisco's quarterback, Joe Montana, merely mortal despite a completion percentage of 64.6, 3,630 yards and 28 touchdowns — All-Pro figures in any other year. Despite Marino's numbers, the 49ers are a three-point favorite.

By all normal signs, then, it should at last be a super Super Bowl, worthy of the $1,000-a-ticket prices being charged by scalpers and the $1 million-a-minute fees charged by ABC for the privilege of advertising on its first-ever NFL championship game, with kickoff scheduled for %:15 p.m.

If that happens — if the forecast of favorable weather holds and the game is competitive, relatively error-free and close — it will be a godsend for the NFL following two years of declining television ratings, escalating salaries, wandering franchises and lawsuits.

If it doesn't happen — if it rains, if the game ends 10-6 or 42-3, if there are too many turnovers — it may be taken as another sign of the NFL's decline.

But a dull game would be a surprise, maybe even a shock. For this one has all the ingredients.

START WITH the quarterbacks and start there with Marino, who suffered a brief dizzy spell before practice Thursday but is reported in fine shape for the game.

His poise, his quick release — he's been sacked only 13 times in 18 games — and his rocket-like arm bring raves.

"He throws balls that allow receivers that keep running, not balls that make them slow up to catch them," Walsh said.

But even more important is his ability to produce touchdowns in bunches — three, for example, in 3 minutes and 18 seconds in the AFC title-game win over the Pittsburgh Steelers that turned a 14-10 deficit into a 31-14 lead. That ability, in turn, gives the Miami offense confidence that it's unstoppable and the defense the knowledge that if it surrenders a score, Marino will get it right back.

"Boom, boom, two scores in five minutes," Ed Newman, Miami's right guard, said. "It's late in the game and you're down six or eight points. You're dead tired. You pull in your belt as tight as you can and you're wondering if you can make it through this drive. The answer is, you have to. You're expecting 12 plays, old-day Miami Dolphin style.

"But no, it's a pass to Mark Clayton for 45 yards, and a touchdown pass to Bruce Hardy or Joe Rose. There are three or four plays in the drive. It's a big lift."

Montana is a different type of quarterback, but just as effective in an offense balanced between Montana and 1,262-yard rusher Wendell Tyler.

"If we'd played a different offense, if we'd thrown 100 more passes, I think he might have had Marino's numbers," Walsh said of his quarterback.

Montana is a controlled scrambler who makes life simple for his offensive line, much quicker afoot than Marino, who is a classic pocket passer with a stronger arm.

"You should have seen me against Lee Roy Selmon (of Tampa Bay)," 49er left tackle Bubba Paris said. "He got no sacks, right? Well, I didn't block him that much. But I'd miss him and Joe would just run right around him like he wasn't there."

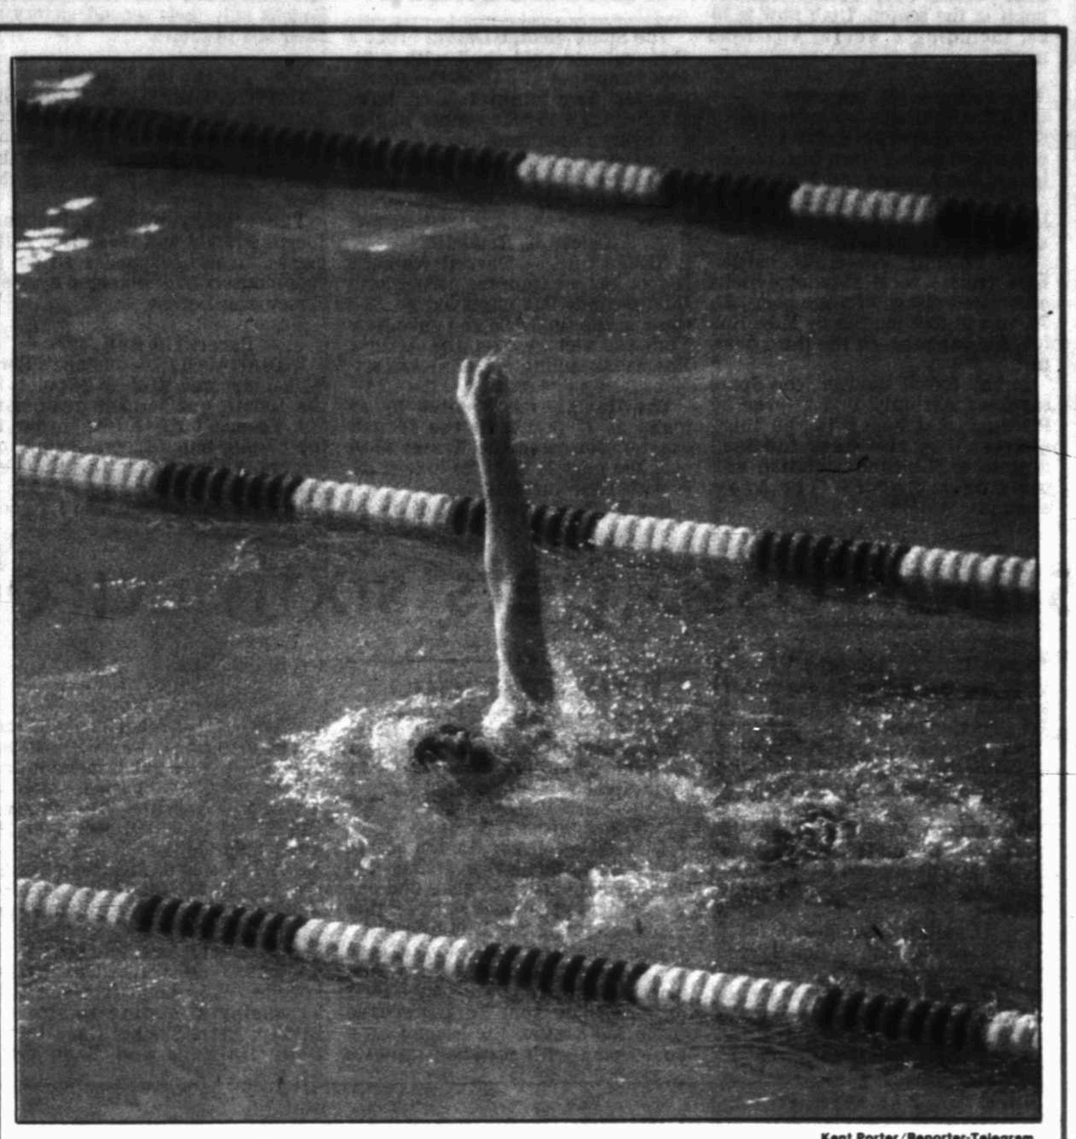

But there's more to both teams than quarterbacks.

The San Francisco defense, a basically nameless aggregation that shuffles three and four players on nearly every down, allowed just 247 points in the regular season, fewest in the NFL, and has allowed no touchdowns in two playoff games. The only postseason TD against the 49ers came on an interception return by the New York Giants' Harry Carson.

Its Miami counterpart — nicknamed the "Killer B's" because nine of its starters have names beginning with B — hasn't been as effective, in part because of injuries. Its ability to stop the San Francisco running game, with Tyler and fullback Roger Craig, may be one of the keys to the game.

MIAMI DOESN'T run much, but its running can be effective as a counterpoint to Marino's passing. Tony Nathan averaged 4.7 yards per carry and fullback Woody Bennett, an erstwhile short-yardage specialist who took over for an injured Andra Franklin and led the team with 606 yards, averaged 4.2.

Midland High's Andrew Jordan goes through warm-ups for the 50 freestyle and goes on to claim a victory in the event, one of three in the Midland Invitational swim meet.

'Dogs, 'Cats take titles

Jordan, Perry win three for MHS

By TERRY WILLIAMSON
Assistant Sports Editor

Swimming

If Saturday afternoon's finals in the Midland Invitational swim meet at the COM pool are any indication of how things are going to turn out next month in the District 4-5A swim meet, Midland High and San Angelo could walk away with team crowns.

The MHS boys and the San Angelo girls took titles Saturday with little trouble. Midland High posted an awesome 485 points, some 151 points ahead of second place Odessa Permian. San Angelo's girls outdistanced Abilene Cooper by a 353-282 margin in a meet that featured all of the 4-5A swim teams.

However, overall depth will play a greater role in the 4-5A meet, Feb. 15-16, at Odessa Permian. This meet also had teams from Pampa, Amarillo, Hobbs and Andrews entered, making it a meet where strength counted most.

STILL, THIS was a good showing by the Bulldogs and the margin of victory surprised even Jesse Marsh, MHS swimming coach.

"We had an idea we might win the meet, but I didn't expect it to be as lop-sided as it was," said Marsh. "There are a lot of reasons why it turned out this way. Some of the teams were missing good swimmers to flu and other activities. We didn't swim well in the preliminaries Friday, but got into the finals where we needed to be and that gave us an opportunity to do well in the finals."

Bulldogs Andrew Jordan and Sam Perry were both three-event winners. Jordan won the 50-meter freestyle (22.97), the 100 breaststroke (1:05.47) and swam a leg on the winning medley relay team. Still, it wasn't a showing up to par for the MHS star.

"Andrew didn't swim well. He's sick and tired. We've been swimming a lot of laps and the whole team is tired at this point in the season," said Marsh. "Still, he won his races and Sam Perry did well. And the divers really performed well. We took the top three places in diving."

Perry won the 200 individual medley (2:07.88) and the 100 backstroke (1:05.47). He also was on the medley relay. Doc White won the diving and was followed by Gene Dockal and Nate Neatherlin for the MHS sweep.

Jay Green won the 500 freestyle (5:18.58) and placed second in the 200 freestyle to give the Bulldogs added punch.

In all, MHS won seven of 11 events in the boy's division.

IN THE girl's division, MHS placed fourth overall behind San Angelo, Cooper and Permian. Becky Simpson's 2:05.56 in the 200 freestyle and 5:36.34 in the 500 freestyle were the only Bulldog victories.

Even though San Angelo won the girl's title easily, Abilene Cooper won four events to San Angelo's three. Cooper's Linda Moore was a two-event winner as was San Angelo's Cindy McClure to tie Simpson for that honor.

Cooper also pulled a 1-2-3 sweep in the 50 freestyle, but San Angelo won the meet with superior depth.

Midland Lee swimmers were playing with a short deck in this meet since several key swimmers were off to Washington D.C. with the Lee band, which is taking part in President Reagan's inauguration activities.

Marsh plans to take some of his swimmers who have qualified to the TISCA meet in Austin next weekend and he feels that will be important since that is the site of this year's state meet.

The TISCA competition will be the last before the 4-5A teams gather in Odessa.

Koncak saves Ponies from Frog threat

SWC

DALLAS — Jon Koncak saved third-ranked Southern Methodist from a Southwest Conference upset by the gritty Texas Christian Horned Frogs on Saturday — but all was not bliss in the Mustang dressing room following the win.

In fact, SMU Coach Dave Bliss was steaming because star guard Carl Wright left the bench area for the dressing room with a minute to play in the Mustangs' hard-earned 74-70 victory.

Koncak hit 10 field goals, 9 of 10 free throws, and collected 13 rebounds. He also blocked two shots and hit four free throws in the final 20 seconds to seal the victory in Moody Coliseum.

"It was two hours of teeth-pulling," said Bliss, who yanked Wright out of the game for a wild play while the Mustangs were trying to use up the clock.

"There's been a lot of talk about us being the No. 2 team in the nation, but although that may be nice you had better play hard when you come into a game like this against a good team like TCU," Bliss said.

Bliss said Wright was yanked out of the game because he "didn't run things the way I wanted it run. All he had to do was keep the ball outside and he wouldn't do it.

"The clock was our only enemy. I'll have to have a talk with him. He's probably the most impatient competitor I've ever known," Bliss said.

Wright said he left the bench because "my leg was bothering me."

TCU Coach Jim Killingsworth said, "We played pretty good but SMU just has so many good athletes they cause a lot of trouble. I think SMU is playing better than Georgetown right now."

SMU increased its overall record to 15-1 — the best start in the school's history. The Mustangs are 5-0 in league play.

The Horned Frogs, who got a season-high 28 points from guard Dennis Nutt, dropped to 9-8 and 1-5.

The Mustangs received help from an unexpected source — reserve sophomore guard Johnny Fuller who scored 11 points and made two key steals during a 10-point run midway in the second half.

Wright added 15 points and 10 assists to the well-balanced SMU attack, while Larry Davis chipped in 13 points.

Carven Holcombe added 17 points for the Horned Frogs and Marc Houston scored 10.

TCU (70): Holcombe 8-15 1-2 17, Washington 0-2 1-2 1, Houston 3-5 4-6 10, Nutt 14-23 0-0 28, Mitchell 2-5 2-3 6, Mortimer 0-2 0-0 0, Grissom 3-5 2-2 8. Totals 30-57 10-15 70.

SMU (74): Davis 5-8 3-4 13, Johnson 1-1 0-0 2, Koncak 10-14 9-10 29, Wright 7-15 1-2 15, Moore 0-2 0-0 0, Lewis 0-2 0-0 0, Williams 1-1 2-2 4, Fuller 5-6 1-3 11. Totals 29-49 16-21 74.

Halftime: SMU 31, TCU 29. Fouled out—Washington. Rebounds—TCU 25 (Holcombe 7), SMU 30 (Koncak 13). Assists—TCU 17 (Holcombe, Mitchell, Houston 4), SMU 16 (Wright 10). Total fouls—TCU 20, SMU 16. A—7,325.

Texas Tech 92, Baylor 71

WACO — Guard Bubba Jennings scored 26 points and forward Quentin Anderson added 24 as Texas Tech blasted Baylor.

Tech led throughout the game, pulling ahead by as much as 25 late in the second half. It upped its record to 11-4 for the season and 4-1 in SWC play.

Someday they'll stop Marino

STANFORD, Calif. (AP) — Someday they'll figure out how to stop the kid with the atomic arm. It's been done before. Dozens of times. It's always just a matter of time.

Dan Marino is only the latest incarnation of The Perfect Quarterback, throwing 70 percent of the time and going long at the slightest provocation.

It's nothing new. The American Football League made a living with it two decades ago.

It might better have been called the American Airball League, for all of the running it did.

"It was fun in the AFL — almost like sandlot," said Len Dawson, a Super Bowl-winning quarterback with the Kansas City Chiefs and now a sportscaster with HBO. "We had to show the people something different than what they'd seen from the NFL. That definitely was part of it.

"The other part was that defensively the early AFL teams weren't of the same caliber as the NFL teams. Passing was the easiest way to go."

The NFL, of course, has had great quarterbacks, too. Sid Luckman helped George Halas and Clark Shaughnessy develop the T-formation as quarterback with the Chicago Bears in the 1930s. About the same time, Sammy Baugh was putting the ball up for the Washington Redskins.

Norm Van Brocklin never had any qualms about throwing for the Los Angeles Rams or, later, the Philadelphia Eagles. Neither did John Unitas, "Mr. Quarterback" for the Baltimore Colts in the 1950s and '60s. The pass was the name of their game.

About the time the NFL and AFL merged in 1970, Joe Namath was going long for the New York Jets and John Hadl was commanding an air attack in San Diego. Up the California coast, John Brodie quarterbacked a pass-conscious San Francisco team.

But recent rules changes intended to produce more offense — through more passing — have given quarterbacks like Miami's Marino and his Super Bowl foe, Joe Montana of San Francisco, new areas to explore.

"Defenses in early stages of something new simply are incapable of handling anything that's really new and innovative. It takes time to catch up," Dawson said. "I think you're finding that now with NFL teams like Miami and San Francisco. ... They come out throwing that football 40 times a game and the defenses just can't stop 'em."

Marino, with his quick release and mighty arm, is often compared with Namath, but the former Jet star personally prefers Montana as a quarterback.

"He's the best today," Namath said. If I were going into battle, I'd want him first. He has the experience. His expertise has been proven in Super Bowl play.

"But a chunk of the future will belong to Dan Marino."

Virtually everywhere in the NFL these days, passes predominate. Where the Don Shula-coached Super Bowl Dolphins of the early '70s rarely threw a dozen times a game, today's Miami squad with the same coach averaged almost 36 passes a game and scored 49 of its 70 touchdowns through the air.

"Ten years ago, the best teams were the ones that could grind it out and keep the mistakes to a minimum," said Darryl Lamonica, a quarterback in the AFL and now an insurance agent in Fresno, Calif. "Take the Dolphins back then. Griese, Csonka, Kiick. Ball-control. Don't turn it over. Don't make a mistake. Now it's 'Don't worry about it. We make a mistake, we can get it back.'"

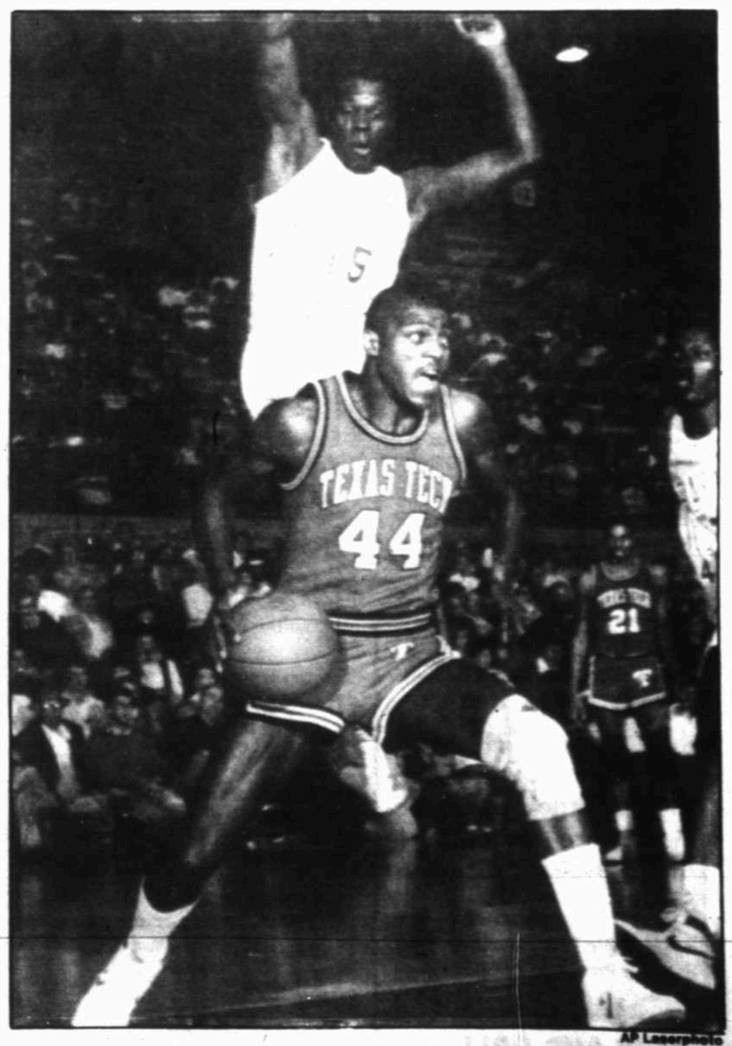

In 1976, only two of 28 NFL teams passed more frequently than they ran. This season, 16 teams had pass-heavy attacks.

"It's all cyclical. It always has been, always will be," Dawson said. "Here's what happens: The offenses get ahead of the defenses, then the defenses catch up and go ahead, then the offenses catch up ...

"Example: go back to the odd-man alignment, the 3-4 defense. When that came in, coaches said to themselves, 'Gee, we can't run on that.' And the defenses were doing all kids of stunts (movements) and the offenses hadn't caught up with it yet. They were keeping backs in to block the linemen and linebackers and it wasn't working. Then the NFL changed the rules on blocking and the offenses were able to handle it."

It also changed the rules to eliminate contact with receivers more than five yards downfield — or, as Dawson put it: "When he comes across the middle, don't be tearin' his head off. There are a lot of receivers in the NFL today that wouldn't be playing 15 years ago."

With the possible exception of eliminating the head slap, instituted not so much to reduce the offense as to reduce concussions and deafness, every rule change in the recent past has helped the offense. The defense always has to do it on its own.

Olajuwon sets pace as Rockets rout Jazz, 120-95

Associated Press

HOUSTON — Akeem Olajuwon scored 34 points and Ralph Sampson added 23 as the Houston Rockets downed the Utah Jazz 120-95 in a National Basketball Association game Saturday night.

Sampson reeled off seven straight points in the first quarter, helping the Rockets build a 20-7 margin. But it was Olajuwon, with 21 points and 10 rebounds in the first half, who paced Houston's commanding 64-41 halftime lead.

The Rockets kept the momentum in the second half with Mitchell Wiggins chipping in with 20 points and Lewis Lloyd adding 11 in the final quarter. All 12 Houston players figured in the scoring.

Darryl Griffith led Utah with 23 and Thurl Bailey added 18.

Houston held Adrian Dantley, the third-leading scorer in the league, to 16 points, almost 12 below his average.

Houston, 23-18, now has its second-best record ever at the midway point in the season. Utah now is 18-24, including a woeful 4-17 road mark.

Spurs 106, Suns 100

SAN ANTONIO — Center Artis Gilmore scored a game-high 26 points and pulled down 16 rebounds to lead San Antonio past Phoenix.

San Antonio, now 19-20, held the lead throughout the game and was ahead 67-55 at the half.

But Phoenix, now 21-21, battled back from several 15-point deficits and closed the gap to one point, 71-70, on a 21-foot jumper by Mike Holton midway through the third quarter.

In the fourth quarter, the Spurs survived not only a 17-4 spree by Phoenix that began in the third quarter, but also kept the lead despite a 24-second violation and missing six of 13 freethrow attempts.

NBA Roundup

The Spurs' George Gervin broke a three-minute cold spell with a 21-foot jump shot at 9:13 in the fourth quarter. Two minutes later, Mike Mitchell hit a 15-foot jumper to give the Spurs a 93-87 lead.

The closest Phoenix managed to get to the Spurs was four points in the final quarter.

Knicks 88, Hawks 86

NEW YORK — Darrell Walker's 20-foot jumper from the corner with four seconds left climaxed an 18-4 spurt in the final 6:08 and gave New York the victory over the Atlanta Hawks, snapping the Knicks' six-game losing streak.

The Hawks, who trailed by as many as 17 points in the second quarter, outscored the Knicks 63-34 over the next 24 minutes to lead 82-70 with 6:08 remaining.

But Walker scored eight of his 16 points the rest of the way to spark the New York rally that gave the Knicks only their second victory in their last 14 games.

Pistons 109, Nets 107

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. — Bill Laimbeer scored on the rebound of a missed last-second desparation shot by Isiah Thomas to lead the Detroit Pistons to a victory over the New Jersey Nets.

The victory was the Pistons' fourth straight and seventh in eight games. It also snapped a streak of four consecutive victories by New Jersey over Detroit.

Pacers 110, Bulls 107

INDIANAPOLIS — Indiana's Herb Williams scored 10 of his 24 points in the fourth quarter and teammate Jim Thomas hit five free throws in the closing minutes, preserving the Pacers' victory over the Chicago Bulls.

The Pacers took the lead for good at 97-95 on the first of back-to-back baskets by the 6-foot-11 Williams and stretched the margin to six points before Michael Jordan started the Bulls' final rally.

Jordan, who led all scorers with 38 points and pulled down 12 rebounds, got 15 points in the final period. His free throw pulled the Bulls within three points, 105-102, before Thomas started his string at the foul line.

SuperSonics 106, Cavaliers 105

RICHFIELD, Ohio — Jack Sikma, who scored a game-high 31 points, hit a 15-foot jump shot with seven seconds remaining to give the Seattle SuperSonics a victory over the Cleveland Cavaliers on.

Seattle, 19-23, trailed 105-102 after Cleveland's Roy Hinson made a 15-footer with 1:37 to go.

The Sonics' Tom Chambers, who scored 25 points, then missed a jump shot, but the Cavaliers' World B. Free turned the ball over with a pass out of bounds.

Chambers pulled the Sonics within a point when he made a short hook shot with 47 seconds left, and Gerald Henderson set up the winning possession by stealing the ball with 24 seconds remaining. Sikma sank the game-winner from the right side of the lane, before Hinson missed Cleveland's final shot, a six-footer inside the lane.

Kings 103, Bullets 98

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Eddie Johnson tossed in 27 points as the Kansas City Kings snapped a six-game losing streak with a win over the Washington Bullets.

The Kings led by 10-and 11-point margins after the second period and held an 81-67 advantage at the beginning of the fourth quarter before the Bullets put together surges of eight and six unanswered points.

Buffalo's Barrasso gets sixth career shutout, 2-0

Associated Press

HARTFORD, Conn. — Buffalo goalie Tom Barrasso posted his sixth career shutout Saturday night as the Sabres zipped Hartford 2-0 in National Hockey League action.

Barrasso stopped 14 shots and lowered his league-leading goals against average to 2.56. The Sabres goaltender has four shutouts in the last 13 games.

Defenseman Jerry Korab scored the winning goal with 4:56 left in the second period and Gilles Hamel added an insurance goal with 1:05 to play.

Buffalo, 13-2-6 in its last 21 games, continues to play solid defense and has allowed just 45 goals during the recent streak. Hartford has now gone winless in five games and the shutout was the fifth against the Whalers this season.

Korab broke the scoreless tie at 15:06 of the second period with a well-placed shot. Brent Peterson beat Greg Malone on a faceoff deep in the Hartford end and moved the puck back to the left point, where Korab slapped a quick riser that beat Greg Millen.

Capitals 7, Rangers 1

LANDOVER, Md. — Bob Carpenter and defenseman Larry Murphy scored two goals apiece as the streaking Washington Capitals whipped the New York Rangers.

The Caps, leaders of the Patrick Division, have won nine of the last 10 home games and are 22-4-2 in their last 28 games overall.

Oilers 7, Canucks 5

EDMONTON, Alberta — Defenseman Kevin Lowe, whose major penalty could have put Edmonton in a hole in the second period, scored on a power play in the third to spark the Oilers to a triumph over the Vancouver Canucks.

Lowe blasted a long, screened shot that caught the top of the net after Vancouver had pulled to within one goal.

Canadiens 4, Devils 4

MONTREAL — Right wing John MacLean scored his second goal of the game, deflecting in a blue-line blast by Phil Russell with 1:58 to play, enabling the New Jersey Devils to tie the Montreal Canadiens.

Montreal's Chris Nilan, known more for his fists than his scoring touch, blocked a shot by Dave Lewis at the Montreal blue line. He managed to outrace Lewis the rest of the way, and just as Lewis was about to bring him to the ice, Nilan unleashed a shot while falling, a few feet in front of Devils goaltender Ron Low to give the Canadiens a 4-3 lead at 16:55 of the second period.

Penguins 5, Black Hawks 4

PITTSBURGH — Troy Loney scored to cap a five-goal second period and goalie Roberto Romano stopped 19 shots in two periods of shutout relief as the Pittsburgh Penguins beat the Chicago Black Hawks.

Maple Leafs 6, Blues 1

Dallas' Springs released on $5,000 bond

DALLAS (AP) — Dallas Cowboys' fullback Ron Springs was free on bond Saturday following a disturbance at a topless bar in north Dallas where two police officers were assaulted, authorities said.

According to a police report, Springs attacked the officers when they entered the bar to answer a call that he was creating a ruckus.

Springs, 28, was arrested about 5:30 p.m. Friday at the Million Dollar Saloon, police Sgt. J.J. Degan said.

When police arrived at the club, Springs "became belligerent and assaulted the two officers," Degan said. Officers Vanessa Pitz and James Hughes suffered minor cuts and bruises, Degan said.

Degan said police were called to the nightclub after Springs had been asked and refused to leave after "trying to grab at one of the dancers on the floor."

"He's a regular customer of mine, and he's never caused any trouble before," said Ronny Jared, general manager of the Million Dollar Saloon.

Springs was charged Friday night with assault of a police officer — a felony — and misdemeanor counts of criminal trespass and assault. He was released on bond of $5,000 posted late Friday.

Attempts to reach Springs for comment Saturday were unsuccessful. His home telephone number is unlisted.

Police said Pitz told Springs that if he did not leave the club, he would be arrested on a charge of criminal trespass. It was at that point that he became belligerent, the officers said.

When the officers tried to handcuff the former Ohio State University standout, he "told arresting officers they better not touch him," and pushed them away, police reports said.

Police said Springs then punched Pitz in the face and placed Hughes in a headlock. When Pitz tried to pull Springs away from Hughes, he "bodyslammed" her against the bar, tossed her across some bar stools, and kicked her in the shin, police reports said.

However, Jay Paskero, the bar's night manager, said it appeared to him that the blow to Pitz was inadvertant as Springs moved his arms to avoid being handcuffed.

Cowboys' President Tex Schramm, in Oakland for Sunday's Super Bowl, said that he was aware of the incident but wanted to talk to police and to Springs before commenting publicly.

"It would be inappropriate for the Dallas Cowboys to have further comment at this time until we can investigate what happened," Schramm said.

Detroit wants Seattle's Knox

TACOMA (AP) — Seattle Seahawks Coach Chuck Knox has been offered $700,000 a year and partial ownership to take the reins of the Detroit Lions, a newspaper reported Saturday, but he has not been contacted directly.

"I've been beseiged by phone calls and questions about this," Knox said Friday, "but I don't know where it's all coming from.

"I have not been directly contacted by anyone with the Lions, and I really don't have any plans to go anywhere."

A report that Knox was on the verge of going to the Lions was published Saturday by the Tacoma News Tribune, based on interviews in San Francisco.

The newspaper said the Lions were offering a $700,000-a-year salary and an equity position of 2 percent to 5 percent ownership for Knox to become head coach, plus a first-round draft choice for the Seahawks as compens

After suffering through its eighth consecutive loss and 13th straight regular season conference loss, Baylor fell to 7-9 and 0-5.

Tobin Doda's 15-footer gave the Raiders a 43-21 lead four minutes before intermission, and Tech ended up ahead by 17, 51-34, at halftime.

Baylor went four minutes without scoring early in the contest as Tech reeled off a 13-0 run. Anderson dominated play on the inside with 18 first-half points and Jennings added 13.

Michael Williams led Baylor with 21.

Texas Tech coach Gerald Myers was pleased with the victory.

"It's always good when you can win on the road. In the first half we came out with good intensity, and played hard," Myers said.

"We didn't show any signs of flatness from the Arkansas game and I think the reason for that was the leadership of our seniors. Baylor is a young team and they came out and played hard," he added.

Baylor coach Jim Haller was impressed by Texas Tech.

"Well, I can certainly see now why Tech was able to beat a good team like Arkansas by 16 points. I was tremendously impressed with Texas Tech," Haller said.

" We tried every kind of defense we know how to run against them and nothing worked. I was most disappointed with our rebounding. We out rebounded SMU and Texas A&M and nearly out rebounded the conference leader, Texas. But we didn't do a good job on the boards tonight," Haller added.

Houston 78, Arkansas 73

HOUSTON — Houston guard Alvin Franklin scored 25 points, including two pressure free throws with 35 seconds to play to lead the Cougars to a 78-73 victory over the Arkansas Razorbacks.

Franklin had left the game with 2:55 remaining when he was injured while driving for a layup. But he returned moments later to lead the Cougars' closing surge.

Arkansas' Joe Kleine, who led all scorers with 28 points, sank two free throws with 38 seconds to play that cut Houston's margin to a 72-71 lead. That's when Franklin stepped to the line with 35 seconds to play and hit two free throws.

Rickie Winslow, who scored 23 points, stepped to the line with 22 seconds to play for two more free throws and center Greg Anderson hit two more free shots with 13 seconds left to ice the victory.

The win improved Houston's record to 12-4 for the season and 4-1 in conference games. Arkansas fell to 12-6 and 3-3.

Charles Balentine added 23 points for Arkansas.

After leading by as many as 10 points in the first half, it took a 45-foot jumper at the buzzer by Eric Dickens for the Cougars to lead 39-38.

"I was thinking all the way I would take it if I got a good shot," said Dickens, who finished with 14 points. "I knew I could make it."

Houston, which has outrebounded only six of 16 opponents this season, fought to a 26-26 deadlock with Kleine and the Razorbacks.

"Coach told us we had to hit the boards and we knew we had to stop Kleine," Winslow said.

The Cougars, often weak at the free throw line, made seven of their last nine points from the foul line.

"We've been concentrating on our free throws and that's got to continue if we want to win the conference," Winslow said.

It was Arkansas' second straight Southwest Conference defeat, coming on the heels of a 64-48 loss to Texas Tech.

"This week we really ran into a buzzsaw at Texas Tech and Houston," Arkansas coach Eddie Sutton said. "Tech shot the lights out and Houston did the same thing. Alvin Franklin looked like an All American tonight."

Both teams shot well from the field. Houston finished by hitting 56 percent of its shots and the Hogs hit 59 percent.

USMPA loses Army support for training

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — The Army has notified the U.S. Modern Pentathlon Association it will no longer support the training of Olympic athletes in the sport.

Army Secretary John Marsh Jr., notified USMPA President Danny Steinman of the decision in a letter last month. Also notified was William Simon, president of the U.S. Olympic Committee.

Marsh gave no reason for the decision in his letter.

The Army has supported modern pentathlon since it became an Olympic sport in 1912. The five-sport event originally began as a competition for military athletes.

The Army's decision puts in question the future of the U.S. Modern Pentathlon Training Center at Fort Sam Houston, where pentathletes have trained since 1955.

USMPA officials said the Army has offered to lease the Fort Sam Houston training center to the association.

"I'm sure something will be worked out," Steinman said. "How it will be defined will be up to the legal experts."

The Army, which indicated it would cease support of the training center by June, has picked up the tab for staffing the facility, hiring coaches, and upkeep of the center.

The Army also has allowed athletes to join the military, be stationed at Fort Sam Houston and train year around.

Lt. Col. Robert McDonald, public information officer at the post, said exact figures on how much the Army spends at the center each year were not available.However, Steinman said the USMPA budgets about $500,000 for each Olympic quadrennium.

Also, the USMPA will receive a share of profits made at the Los Angeles games. That share will total about $1 million, he said.

Steinman said he has asked the Army to delay its withdrawal until September at the close of the current fiscal year.

The modern pentathlon includes competition in swimming, marksmanship, horsemanship, foil fencing and running.

Phoenix Open

PHOENIX, Ariz. (AP) — With Calvin Peete falling victim to a rash of bogeys and an apparent allergy attack, Doug Tewell found the round he was looking for.

Tewell came from six shots back and moved into the third-round lead Saturday in the $450,000 Phoenix Open Golf Tournament.

"All I thought about was shooting that low round I felt I had in me," said Tewell, who bounced back from a late double-bogey and compiled a third-round 65, six under par.

A birdie-birdie-birdie finish gave the 35-year-old journeyman pro a 202 total for three trips over the 6,726-yard Phoenix Country Club and a two-shot advantage going into Sunday's final round of the chase for an $81,000 first prize.

"I feel confident," said Tewell, whose only two tour triumphs came in the 1980 season. "I feel like I've got an even lower round in me. I'd like to see myself go out and shoot that low, perfect round."

Peete, a run-away leader through the first two rounds, simply would like to be able to see.

The 1984 Vardon Trophy winner for the tour's low stroke average, Peete had missed only one fairway over the first two rounds. But, with tears streaming down his face and stopping occasionally to wipe his eyes, his tee shots began to stray. He fell victim to four bogeys — his first of the tournament — and had to work hard for a round of one-over-par 72 that left him in a tie for second at 202 with Morris Hatalsky.

Hatalsky, playing in the same group with Tewell, salvaged a 66 with a scrambling back nine.

Peete, who told tournament officials he was having difficulty with his contact lenses, wiped his eyes repeatedly during the round, declined to be interviewed afterwards and sought the services of an optometrist.

Isao Aoki of Japan moved up with a 67 in the warm sunshine and was only three back at 203. Ed Fiori was next at 65-205.

The group at 206 included Johnny Miller, Chip Beck, T.C. Chen, Corey Pavin, George Burns, Bob Eastwood and Tim Norris. Chen had a third-round 66. Miller, Beck and Pavin shot 67s. Burns had 68. Eastwood and Norris matched rounds of par-71.

Peete, a run-away leader through the first two rounds, made his first two bogeys of the tournament on the third and fourth holes, but bounced back with a string of three consecutive birdies.

That rally enabled him to retain two strokes of his lead at the turn in the face of Tewell's challenging 32.

They matched birdies on the 10th.

Peete, playing one hole behind Tewell, appeared to have a little breathing room when Doug made a double-bogey on the 15th, hitting into the water.

"I stepped back from the shot," he said. "I couldn't pick out the pin against the gallery. When I finally located it, I just made a totally bad swing."

But Peete, his eys tearing, three-putted for bogey on the same hole moments later, then drove into trouble, hit into a bunker and bogeyed the 16th.

At the same time, Tewell reeled off a decisive string of three consecutive birdies. The first two, on the 16th and 17th, came on 15-foot putts. The last one, after the national television cameras had ended their coverage for the day, came on a little pitch and a 3-foot putt.

Camacho's return to ring ends with TKO victory

ATLANTIC CITY, N.J. (AP) — Unbeaten Hector "Macho" Camacho returned from an eight-month layoff Saturday and needed 15 minutes to pound Louie Burke into submission.

The former World Boxing Council super featherweight champion knocked Burke down in the second round, forced him to take a standing eight count in the fifth, ripped a cut on his nose and pounded his left eye to a slit before referee Larry Hazzard signaled the fight was over after the bell had sounded ending the fifth round.

It was the 25th victory and 15th knockout for the 22-year-old showboater from New York's Spanish Harlem.

Camacho entered the ring wearing a fur coat, although it was anything but cool inside a ballroom at the Trump Plaza. Underneath the fur coat, he had on what looked like a leopard skin robe, leopard skin trunks and leopard skin boxing boots.

Once the opening bell sounded, the quick-as-a-cat Camacho was in charge. But Burke, losing for the second time against 19 victories, kept coming and seemed to have the better of the third round with his aggressiveness and body punching.

The left-handed Camacho, who weighed 136 pounds, knocked down Burke in the opening seconds of the second round with a short right hook and left to the head. The 23-year-old Burke, 135¾, of Las Cruces, N.M., got up at the count of four and did well for the rest of the round, until Camacho shook him with a flashy combination to the head 30 seconds before the bell.

With about 20 seconds left in the fifth round, Camacho unleashed a barrage of about 15 punches to the head that had Burke reeling. Hazzard jumped in and gave Burke a standing eight count, and when he motioned for action to continue, the bell rang. A commission doctor entered the ring to look at Burke, and a few seconds later, Hazzard went to Camacho's corner and raised his hand in victory.

It was Camacho's second fight as a lightweight — actually, he was one pound over the class limit — since giving up the super featherweight title in July, 1983 because of difficulty in making the 130-pound weight limit.

In his first fight after giving up the title, he knocked out Rafael Williams in the seventh round May 20, 1984.

The nationally televised fight was the first for Camacho under new trainer Jimmy Montoya, who's also serving as an advisor. Camacho still is under management control of Billy Giles, who had been his trainer, but the two no longer work together.

Curry defends title

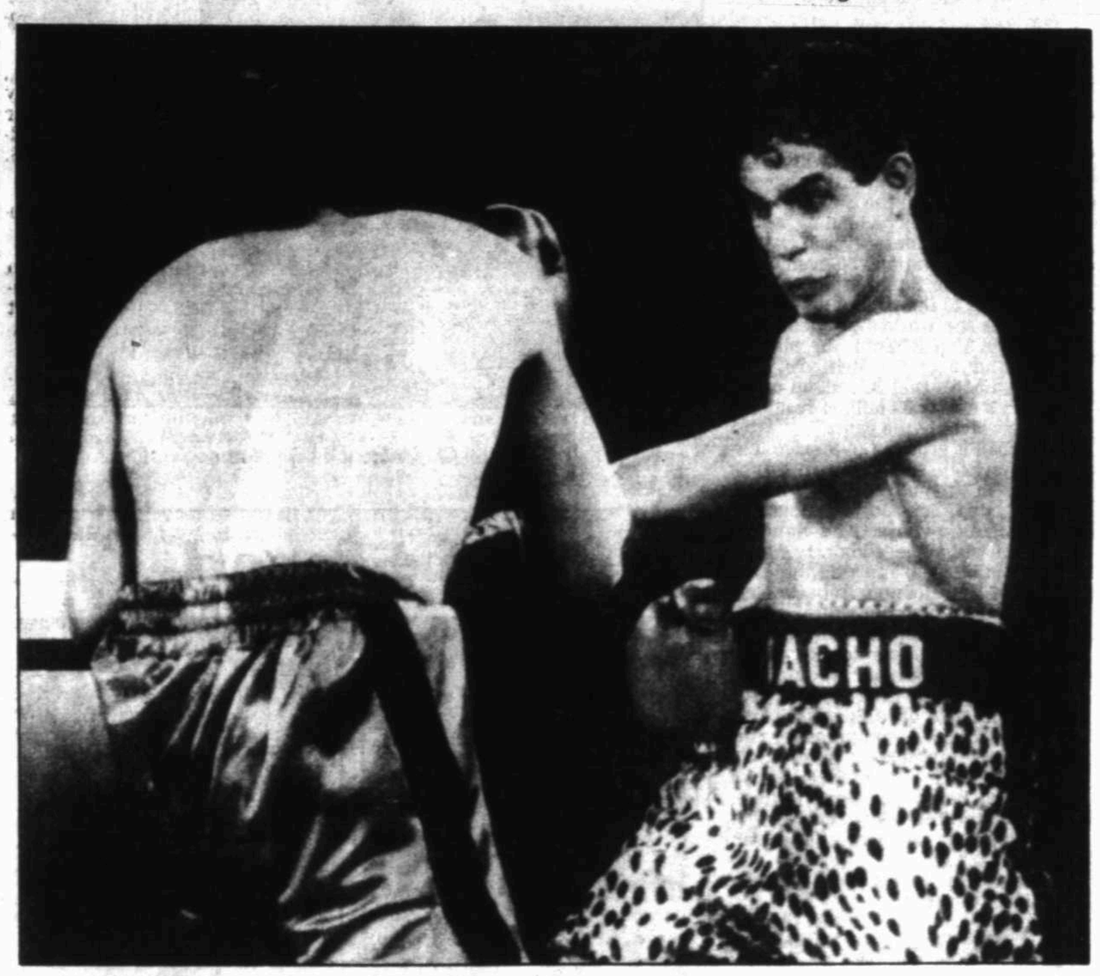

BIRMINGHAM, England (AP) — Donald Curry of the United States retained his World Boxing Association welterweight crown Saturday night when he stopped challenger Colin Jones of Britain 36 seconds into the fourth round.

Jones, who was making his third attempt to win a world title, received a bad cut on the bridge of the nose towards the end of the third round and the fight was halted early in the fourth after a quick inspection by the ringside doctor.

It was the first time in his career that the 25-year-old Welshman had been stopped.

A weeping Jones, who had previously twice fought Milton McCrory for the World Boxing Council version of the welterweight crown, said had just gotten into his stride when the fight was halted.

"I feel so ashamed, I'm not even tired, just very frustrated and disappointed. I've got so much fight left in me," said Jones.

Football Hall of Fame finalists cut from 15 to seven

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — The list of finalists for the Pro Football Hall of Fame was reduced from 15 to seven Saturday.

The seven include quarterbacks Fran Tarkenton, Joe Namath and Roger Staubach, running backs O.J. Simpson and Paul Hornung, center Frank Gatski and National Football League Commissoner Pete Rozelle.

Pro Football Hall of Fame selection rules call for at least four but no more than seven new members each year.

The 1985 class will be announced Tuesday night. The actual vote by the Hall's 29-member Selection Board was taken Saturday but will not be announced until Tuesday.

For election, a nominee must receive approval from 24 of the 29 voters.

Of the seven finalists, six are modern-era candidates whose careers were between 1960 and 1979. The seventh, Gatski, is the Old-Timers' candidate whose career ended before 1960. He played with the Cleveland Browns and Detroit Lions.

Can Super Bowl XIX live up to its billing?

It shapes up as the best of all Super Bowl match ups.

It probably will suffer the same fate as its undistinguished predecessors, which is why they try to hold these things outside where the wind can perform its function.

But this one could be something special. It's one one of those rare meetings in professional sports these days, a matchup of the two best for the championship. San Francisco and Miami, two teams that left no doubt about their superiority during the year.

SOMEONE SAID, it looks every bit as good as last year's Washington-Oakland Super Bowl, the meeting of everybody's blackguards. With the Raiders the hate is universal. With the Redskins, it helps if you are a Cowboy fan.

So what went wrong last year can go wrong again this year. And when you look at it, it's a wonder it can be any other way.

Bowl games are the toughest to pick. Teams have been idle for weeks at a time and are out of their regular season rhythm.

It's the same with the pros and the Super Bowl. Look at the 49ers and Dolphins. They've been without gainful competition since the end of the regular season, no apologies to playoff opponents excepted, which translates into a month of idleness.

These aren't the same teams that went 15-1 and 14-2 during the regular season.

SOMEHOW, it's a defensive turnover that starts turning things sour. A quick touchdown, maybe another quickly cashed in turnover and all at once a team is playing catchup.

All of the best-laid plans of the last two weeks are wadding for the fire place. And when things go bad, they only get worse. Panic is a terrible thing.

College teams seem to have the capability of overcoming disaster, turning things around and you wind up with games like Miami-Boston College. With the pros, and all that money on the line, it creates a Las Vegas-type desperation when the dice start rolling the wrong way. How many times does a pro team come back, once things started going bad, at least, in a Super Bowl?

STILL, there's always the hope.

In today's game, in the 49ers' Joe Montana and the Dolphins' Dan Marino, there are two quarterbacks capable of rallying a team in the face of adversity.

I'll never forget Montana in that 1980 Cotton Bowl game against Houston, frozen blue at halftime and behind 34-13 going into the fourth quarter. One thing about it, the weather at Stanford Stadium can't be as bad, even if it rains. It won't be the factor the weather was in that Cotton Bowl game.

Now, if the San Andreas Fault shakes up the stadium a little bit, I refuse to take responsibility. That's another factor entirely.

It's a game so close that the safest out would be to take the points and run. That would mean Miami and three.

But if you had to pick an out-and-out winner, Miami has Marino, the NFL's most prolific passer. However, the 49ers have a better running game, so they say, and more consistency off the tee. If it's as close as everyone seems to think it will be, here's a vote for Ray Wersching.

Expect NFL finale to last long time

In some places, game won't end until Monday

By GEORGE VECSEY
N.Y. Times News Service

SAN FRANCISCO — Stock up on ice cubes, doctor, it's going to be a long one. The National Football League did not go through logistics rivaling the Normandy landing to let us off lightly.

Not only are there beer and pickup trucks to be pushed on television and radio all through the evening, but two of the throwingest quarterbacks in history are likely to send this Super Bowl lurching toward Monday in parts of the country.

It will already be Monday in some places where Super Bowl XIX will be watched and heard. The Armed Forces Television Network and Radio Network will send the game to more than 30 countries and more than 200 ships at sea, to let them know that the American way of life is still worth defending.

In Italy, the game will be presented on radio live well into Monday morning, but the television showing will be mercifully delayed via tape until Italy's own version of "Monday Night Football."

Italian fans may want to follow the special-teams adventures of Milt McColl, No. 53 on the 49ers, the soft-spoken medical student from Stanford who spent a few months last winter helping to coach the Bologna Doves in the Italian League. They also have a Super Bowl in Italy, but they wait until the end of spring.

LAST YEAR at this time, the Super Bowl show was extended a few extra minutes by a character actor who called the Oaklands in the locker room and made weird missile jokes. It isn't clear if his wife will let him near a phone this year, but if she does, the program will be even longer and stranger.

In any event, load up on the onion dip — and know that you've got company in West Germany, in Italy, in Japan.

The Super Bowl will also take over Mexico, where the knowledgeable crew from Televisa will be describing the esquineros and the profundos trying to defend against the bombas of Joe Montana and Dan Marino.

Wherever people congregate in front of their television sets, it's going to be a long afternoon-evening-night-morning because the official game clock will stop more often than an old Spiro T. Agnew wristwatch.

There is no John Riggins lumbering through the line, the clock still ticking while bodies are unstacked. There is no neo-Nagurski Chicago Bears offense — give it to Sweetness — to bring football back to a comfortable, one-lavatory-visitper-game era. Sunday have Montana. Sunday we have Marino. Sunday we have marathon.

DURING THE season, Marino was not merely the most efficient passer in the American Football Conference. He also threw the ball 564 times, the most in the league.

Montana led the National Conference in efficiency, although his 432 passing attempts were merely the fifth-highest total in his peer group. These two teams did not get where they are through conservatism.

Anyone who has ever smelled dinner burning, had deadlines approaching or saw flight-time vanishing knows that passes prolong football games. The ball gets away, receivers flit out of bounds, the first-down markers are moved, and time stands still. It's kickoff time: Do you know where your kielbasas are?

We will need all the nourishment we can find in the pantry Sunday, because the league is not going to show mercy. Sunday is Christmas and Hanukkah for the 28 brothers and sisters who own the store. They have hired a man with a luminescent band on his sleeve who is empowered to blow a whistle and point his finger at the officials and the players and say, "I don't care if you've got momentum. We've got some gasoline to sell." That's when the world runs to the icebox.

Unlike D-Day, the Super Bowl happens once a year. Teams are airlifted in, followed by swarms of technicians, publicists, broadcasters and writers. This year's logistics have been complicated by a few extra matters like San Francisco Bay and its bridges.

The Super Bowl is at Stanford University, at the bottom of the bay. The Dolphins have been staying in Oakland, to the east of the bay. The 49ers practice and conduct press conferences in scattered locations, none of them reachable by cable car.

One could whine about this spread-out Super Bowl week except that going anywhere and doing anything — even football — is enjoyable in the Bay Area. The Super Bowl, it may be recalled, was once held on a barren tundra, so there will be no grumbling from this word processor, not Sunday, not in the Bay Area.

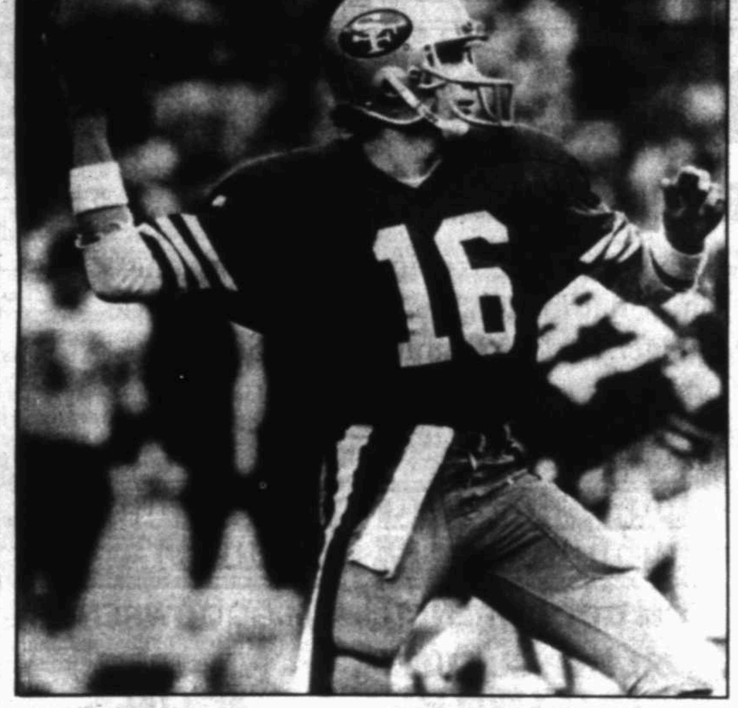

In Mexico, they're loading up on real nachos in Monterey and Oaxaca and Mazatlan and maybe even Quintana Roo. The Super Bowl doesn't just belong to the United States anymore. It's the world's problem now. Fernando Von Rossum, the play-by-play announcer for Mexico's Televisa, estimates that 30 million of his country's nearly 80 million residents will be watching the game.

Football is growing in Mexico. Little boys play the game in youth leagues in Chapultapec Park in the capital city. Fans sport the logos of the Dallas Cowboys. And Sunday, families will stage elaborate house parties in Mexico, enjoying the comments of Von Rossum, Roberto Keoseyan and Antonio de Valdes.

"We try to keep it funny during the season, when we do two games every Sunday from our studio," said Von Rossum, who is on the scene for this game. "We have Spanish words for everything — esquineros for cornerbacks, profundos for safeties. We come up with nicknames: Barba Roja, Red Beard, for Doug Betters; El Imposter for Vince Ferragamo when he had a bad game; Superman for Marino."

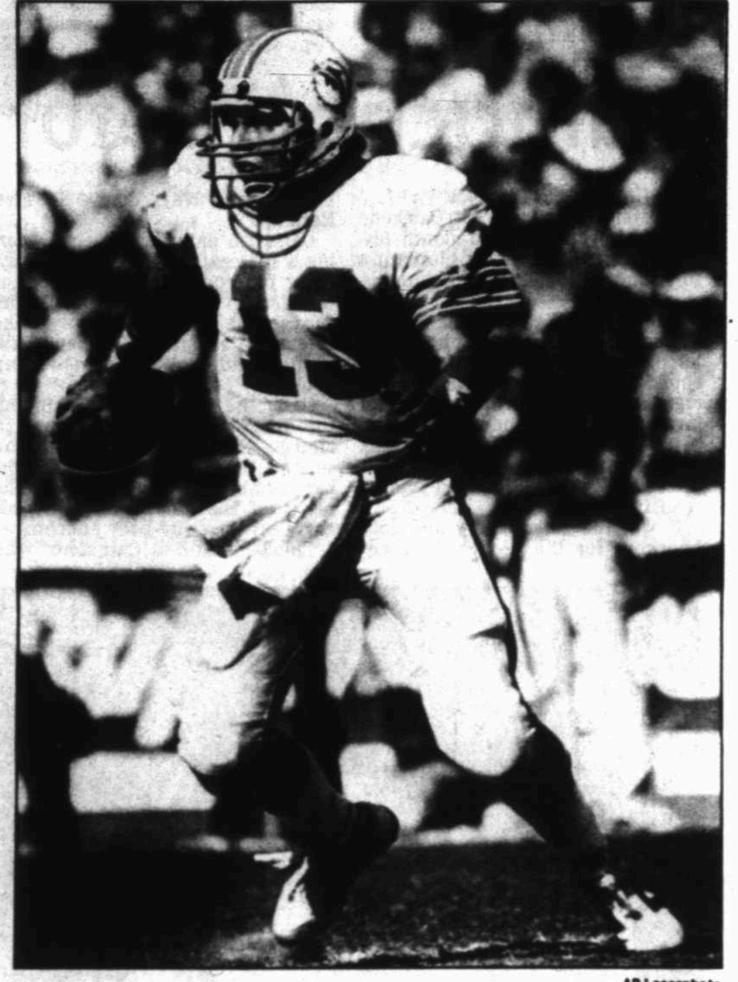

"But for the Super Bowl we keep the levity down."

No levity Sunday. This is the big one, the Big Tamale, the Big Quiche, the Big Onion Dip. Eat up, world; Monday it's carrot sticks and cottage cheese.

Average NFL player made $157,810 in '84

N.Y. Times News Service

SAN FRANCISCO — The National Football League Players Association said Thursday that the average salary for more than 1,600 players in 1984 was $157,810, which represented a 25 percent increase over the average for 1983.

That figure, the union said, takes into account a player's base salary and various bonuses, minus deferred payments.

The union also said that, by its accounting, the league grossed between $700 million and $750 million this season, an average of $26.4 million per club, and spent 51 percent of that, about $377 million league-wide or $13.5 million per club, on player costs.

"We have come a long way since 1982," said Gene Upshaw, the executive director of the union, referring to when the union and the owners signed their last five-year collective bargaining agreement. "The players have progressed a lot faster than any of us anticipated. But I'd sure like to get it up to 55 percent."

Upshaw said that the $13 million that each club spent on nonplayer costs "is what concerns us."

The union's information, Tom Condon, the president, said, came from estimated attendance figures, luxury box data, NFL Management Council television contract reports and local television and radio averages.

When negotiations that led to the last agreement began, the players were asking the owners for 55 percent of the gross revenues, a demand they later dropped.

The union also released figures that indicated base salaries had increased by 22 percent over 1983, to an average of $135,590 from $111,800.

The union also issued a preliminary injury report, based on the first half of the 1984 season, which indicated increases over the like period in 1983 in the average number of injuries per week and the average number of injuries per team.

Weekly injuries, the report said, were up to 113, from 96. Injuries per team for the eight-game span were up to 32 from 27.

The report also indicated that injuries on grass fields had decreased slightly, but injuries on artificial surfaces were up.

"We would like to raise the level of consciousness about the much greater rate of injury on artificial surfaces," Condon said. "We would like to call for a moratorium on installing artificial surfaces, and that whenever one wears out it should be replaced with grass."

Still, the Dolphins' main offensive weapons are Marino and his receivers, led by the two Marks, Clayton and Duper, both with exceptional speed.

Clayton caught 73 passes, including an NFL-record 18 touchdowns; Duper had 71 catches. They also opened up defenses for Nathan, who caught 61 passes, as well as tight ends Rose, Hardy and Dan Johnson.

Craig, with 71 catches, was the leading receiver for San Francisco, which emphasizes a short- and medium-range attack. Freddie Solomon and Dwight Clark are the other primary targets with world-record holding hurdler Renaldo Nehemiah used as an occasional deep threat.

Game Report

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Dan Johnson, the Miami's starting tight end, practiced Saturday and was pronounced fit to play by the Dolphins in the Super Bowl Sunday.

Johnson had missed Friday's practice after complaining of stomach pains. At first it was feared he had appendicitis.

However, tests proved inconclusive and he was cleared to play after spending a restful night and his blood count was down from previous levels.

Miami Coach Don Shula said Bruce Hardy would start in the Super Bowl against the San Francisco 49ers, but that Johnson would play.

JOHN FRANK, the rookie tight end of the San Francisco 49ers who suffered a dislocated elbow two weeks ago, will remain on the roster for the Super game, the team said Saturday.

Frank probably will wear an adjustable cast that protects both sides of his elbow joint and which he has worn all week in practice.

Other 49ers with injuries all worked out during a 30-minute final practice session Saturday. They were wide receiver Dwight Clark (hamstring), tight end Russ Francis (hamstring), and defensive end Dwaine Board (shoulder).

The 49ers meet the Miami Dolphins Sunday in Super Bowl XIX at Stanford Stadium.

Despite a front that could deliver light showers to the San Francisco Bay area by early Sunday, forecasters stood by their prediction of cool, cloudy and dry conditions for the Super Bowl.

"At game time Sunday, skies will be partly cloudy. The temperature will be 55 for the kickoff, cooling to a prophetic 49 for the final gun," Ron Wagner, National Weather Service lead forecaster, said Saturday.

The forecast is good news for the more than 80,000 fans arriving at Stanford Stadium for the contest between the San Francisco 49ers and the Miami Dolphins. The National Football League has banned umbrellas from the stands.

Wagner said a very weak weather front moving off the north Pacific late Saturday could bring sprinkles or light showers to the Bay area, ending early Sunday.

The chance of rainfall during the game remains less than 10 percent, he said. Winds will be from the northwest at 5-7 mph.

Oklahoma defeats No. 9 Kansas

Associated Press

NORMAN, Okla. — Oklahoma forward Darryl Kennedy scored a career-high 34 points to offset a career-low six-point performance by All-America teammate Wayman Tisdale, and No. 13 Oklahoma defeated ninth-ranked Kansas 87-76 in a Big Eight college basketball game Saturday.

The six points by Tisdale marked the first time in his career the two-time All-American did not score in double figures. The 6-foot-9 junior failed to score in the second half, when the Sooners twice overcame three-point deficits and pulled away down the stretch.

Kennedy, a sophomore, scored 26 in the second half as the Jayhawks left him open in their defense of Tisdale. Kennedy was 15 of 19 from the field and 4-for-4 from the free throw line.

Kansas trailed 35-29 at halftime, but a pair of free throws by Kansas' Ron Kellogg at 13:34 in the second half gave the Jayhawks a 45-44 lead. Kellogg led the Jayhawks with 24 points.

Kansas' biggest lead stretched to three points twice before Kennedy scored 10 points in a 14-4 Oklahoma run and the Sooners built a 62-55 margin with 7:25 remaining.

Oklahoma, which hit only three of eight throws in the first half, connected on its last six tries, to protect the lead. The Sooners hit 14 of 18 free throws in the second half.

Oklahoma's Anthony Bowie had 21 points and Tim McCalister 18.For Kansas, Greg Dreiling scored 20 points, Calvin Thompson 14 and Danny Manning had 12. Oklahoma improved to 13-4 overall and 2-0 in the conference. Kansas is now 13-3 and 1-1.

Tulsa 69, Bradley 56

PEORIA, Ill. — All-American senior guard Steve Harris scored 30 points to lead 20th-ranked Tulsa to a 69-56 Missouri Valley Conference win over Bradley.

Tulsa remains in first place in the conference with a 5-0 record, 14-2 overall. Bradley's record fell to 3-3 in the conference, 10-6 overall.

Tulsa led throughout most of the first half behind Harris' 15 points in the session. Bradley cut the lead to 27-24 at the 1:40 mark, but Harris' jumper and a goaltending call against Bradley allowed Tulsa to pull away and take a 31-26 lead into the locker room.

Bradley cut the Tulsa lead to 41-39 at the 13:57 mark of the second half, but could not get any closer. Bradley only shot 35 per cent in the second half as Tulsa outscored the Braves 15-8 in the final eight minutes. Bradley shot just 40 percent from the field for the game.

Bradley was led by senior forward Voise Winters, who had 17 points and by junior center Mike Williams and junior guard Jim Les, who had six rebounds apiece.

Former Midland High star Herbert Johnson led the Golden Hurricanes with 17 rebounds.

Minnesota 81, Michigan St. 75

EAST LANSING, Mich. — Guard Tommy Davis' 18 second-half points cut short a Michigan State rally as Minnesota took a Big Ten victory from the 19th-ranked Spartans.

Davis, who scored 23 points in the game, also sank two crucial free throws with 21 seconds remaining to give the Gophers a 6-point lead, 77-71.

Davis' performance outshined a valiant second-half effort by the Spartans' backcourt duo of Scott Skiles and Sam Vincent. Skiles scored 21 of his game-high 25 points in the second half and Vincent scored 16 of his 20 after the intermission.

Minnesota, 3-2 in the Big Ten and 10-5 overall, led all the way and was ahead by as much as 14 points, 42-28, early in the second half. The Spartans, 3-3 in the conference and 12-4 overall, pulled to within 3 points, 68-65, on a long jumper by Skiles with 2:35 remaining. However, clutch free throws by freshman Todd Alexander — who hit six out of seven in the final 1:10 — and the two by Davis kept the Gophers out of reach.

Ohio State 86, Indiana 84

COLUMBUS, Ohio — Ewe Blab missed a short hook shot with two seconds left for eighth-ranked Indiana, helping Ohio State spring a Big Ten victory over the Hoosiers.

Blab, who scored a game-high 31 points, took a pass from Stew Robinson, wheeled and fired. His shot bounced off the rim and time expired before Indiana could get off another attempt.

Troy Taylor missed the front end of a bonus free throw situation to give the Hoosiers a shot at forcing overtime. Instead, Indiana dropped to 11-4 overall and 3-2 in the Big Ten.

Dave Jones, a reserve guard, came off the bench to sink eight of 10 shots from the floor and score a team-leading 19 points for Ohio State, 11-3 overall and 3-2 in the conference.

Illinois 55, Northwestern 43

EVANSTON, Ill. — Anthony Welch scored 16 points and Efrem Winters added 14 to lead 11th-ranked Illinois to a Big Ten victory over Nothwestern.

The win was the fourth straight for the Illini as they increased their record to 15-4 overall and 4-2 in the league. Northwestern lost its fifth straight and fell to 4-11 overall and 0-5.

Blue Devils dump Tar Heels, 93-77

Associated Press

CHAPEL HILL, N.C. — Johnny Dawkins scored a season-high 34 points and Mark Alarie added 19 to lead No. 2 Duke to a 93-77 Atlantic Coast Conference basketball victory over sixth-ranked North Carolina.

Dawkins moved into 11th place in Duke scoring with 1,444, replacing all-America Mike Lewis, who compiled 1,416.

Duke, after a see-saw first half that ended tied 39-39, never trailed in the final period. The Blue Devils got 10 points from Dawkins as they outscored the Tar Heels 29-14, at one point holding North Carolina scoreless for more than seven minutes.

Duke slowed the pace and North Carolina crept to within 72-64 on a Kenny Smith steal and dunk but could pull no closer. Good free-throw shooting down the stretch helped Duke move to an 18-point advantage in the waning seconds as four Tar Heel players fouled out.

Jay Bilas added 17 points for Duke, coming off two consecutive ACC losses, and David Henderson added 10.

Memphis State 69, Louisville 66

LOUISVILLE, Ky. — Keith Lee, hindered most of the game by foul trouble and a collapsing defense, slammed home a dunk and sank a free throw with 1:38 left to key No. 5 Memphis State's 69-66 Metro Conference college basketball victory over Louisville Saturday.

The victory, Memphis State's first over Louisville in Freedom Hall since 1976, lifted the Tigers to 13-1 overall and 3-1 in the conference. Louisville fell to 9-6 and 2-2.

Freshman guards Vincent Askew and Dwight Boyd keyed Memphis State with 16 and 11 points, respectively, as they made up for a lack of production from Memphis State's big men.

Lee, who had been averaging 22 points a game, finished with 11, and seven-foot center William Bedford, who got all six of his points in the first minutes of the first half.

Lee's three-point play broke a 64-64 deadlock and provided the needed cushion for victory, although Louisville failed on several chances to catch up in the last minute.

Louisville guard Chris West hit a five-footer with 53 seconds left to pull Louisville to within 67-66 and the Cardinals immediately fouled Askew. He missed the front end of a bonus situation, but Louisville's Billy Thompson turned the ball over with 17 seconds left.

Louisville immediately fouled again, this time picking on guard Andre Turner. Turner again missed the first free throw and Louisville rebounded.

The Cardinals called a timeout to set up a final shot, with Jeff Hall taking a 20 footer with about 10 seconds left. Hall missed and freshman forward Herbert Crook rebounded the errant shot and was fouled as he shot.

Crook missed both free throws with six seconds left and Baskerville Holmes, who finished with 16 points, hit two free throws with four seconds left to clinch the victory.

Hall led Louisville with 21 points. Mark McSwain added 17.

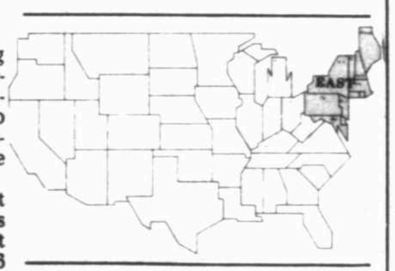

S Florida 60, Va Commonwealth 58

RICHMOND, Va. — Tommy Tonelli hit two free throws with 14 seconds left to give South Florida's Bulls a Sun Belt Conference victory over the 16th-ranked Rams of Virginia Commonwealth.

The loss snapped an 11-game win streak for Virginia Commonwealth, which dropped to 12-2 and 3-1 in the conference.

No. 1 Hoyas roll Panthers, 65-53

Associated Press

PITTSBURGH — Patrick Ewing scored 18 points and ignited a second-half surge that carried top-ranked and unbeaten Georgetown to a 65-53 basketball victory over Pittsburgh in a Big East Conference game Saturday.

The 7-foot Ewing was a dominant force at both ends of the court as the Hoyas, who were tied with Pitt 24-24 at the half and trailed 28-26 early in the second half, ran off a 12-2 spurt to grab a 40-30 lead with 12:10 remaining.

The Hoyas, 17-0 and winners of 28 consecutive games over two seasons, never led by fewer than six points after that in raising their Big East record to 6-0.

Ewing hit a twisting jumper in the lane with 15:47 to play to give Georgetown the lead for good at 30-28. Reggie Williams then connected on a long jumper to give the Hoyas their first four-point lead.

After a Joey David basket for Pitt, the Hoyas ran off eight straight points started by a 15-foot Michael Jackson jumper and a Bill Martin layup on a long outlet pass from Jackson.

Ewing, who constantly intimidated the smaller Panthers into forcing off-balance shots, then blocked a Charlie Smith shot that set up Wingate's driving layup and an eight-point Georgetown lead.

Connecticut 70, Syracuse 68

SYRACUSE, N.Y. — Connecticut guard Earl Kelley connected on six free throws in the game's final 31 seconds as the Huskies stunned seventh-ranked Syracuse in Big East Conference action.

The victory boosted Connecticut to 2-3 in the conference and 6-7 overall, while the Orangemen lost their second of five conference games and dropped to 11-2.

Eddie Williams of the Huskies scored 12 points — all in the second half — to fuel the comeback from a 34-32 halftime deficit, and teammate Tim Coles had 13 points and Ray Broxton 12.

Kelley, the Huskies' high scorer with 21 points, drove from midcourt for a layup to give the Huskies the lead for good at 58-57 with 3:23 remaining — 26 seconds after Syracuse point guard Dwayne Washington fouled out. Washington had been guarding Kelley in a man-to-man defense.

St. John's 66, Boston College 59

BOSTON — Guard Chris Mullin hit the 20-point mark for the 50th time in his intercollegiate career and fourth-ranked St. John's rallied in the final six minutes for a Big East victory over 15th-ranked Boston College.

Mullin, an All-American guard and 1984 U.S. Olympic star, scored 24 points, including 16 in the second half, when St. John's overcame a 10-point deficit and went onto its 13th victory and eighth in a row since an upset by Niagara.

Boston College, which had won 12 games in a row at Boston Garden since Jan. 27, 1977, ran out of steam down the stretch.

The small but quick Eagles, who play home games away from the campus only occasionally, shook off the loss of their tallest player, 6-foot-9 center Trevor Gordon, just before game time. Gordon was declared ineligible until he completes first-semester work on one subject.

St. John's, 5-0 in the Big East, jumped to a 14-7 lead, but BC ran off 10 unanswered points to go in front. The Redmen managed to pull into a 22-22 tie before BC grabbed a 28-24 lead at halftime.

Army 72, St. Peter's 70 (OT)

WEST POINT, N.Y. — Randy Cozzens, Mike Yeager and Kevin Houston each converted crucial free throws in overtime as Army rallied from a 12-point deficit midway through the second half to defeat St. Peter's in Metro Atlantic Athletic Conference play.

Norman Luckett's basket with five seconds remaining in regulation snapped a 60-60 tie and gave St. Peter's what appeared to be the game-winner. But Houston connected on a desperation 30-footer at the buzzer to force the extra period.

A three-point play by Cozzens lifted the Cadets to a 65-64 lead with 3:43 remaining, but Daren Rowe made good on two free throws to put St. Peter's back on top at 66-65 only 11 seconds later.
1,522 points.

Villanova 86, Seton Hall 74

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. — Dwayne McClain scored 23 points to lift 18th-ranked Villanova to a Big East Conference victory over Seton Hall, handing the Pirates their sixth straight loss.

The Wildcats blew the game open early in the second half, running off a 14-4 spurt to expand a 44-33 halftime edge to 58-37. Villanova led by as many as 21 points and the Pirates only gained ground in the closing minutes.

Answer Line

682-5311

By Franchelle Moore P.O. Box 1650, Midland 79702

My father, who lives in Illinois is over 65, retired and living on a very limited income. He has a problem in that he is hard of hearing in both ears. He needs a hearing aid for each ear, but cannot afford the high cost of purchasing them due to a lack of income and other medical obligations.

Since his hearing loss is hard on him as well as my mother, I was wondering if there are any national or local organizations that might pay all or a substantial part of the cost in obtaining a hearing aid for each ear? Your help will be appreciated. — John W. Crum

ANSWER: Dick Campbell with the Beltone Hearing Aid Center in Midland offers the following suggestions, depending on the circumstances:

In some cases, the Beltone center in Midland will offer rebuilt hearing aids at a reduced cost.

If your father is on Medicaid, and there is enough hearing loss, Medicaid will provide one hearing aid at no cost. In Midland, the Downtown Lions Club assists in such situations, and possibly there are organizations in the city in which your father lives which could provide assistance. One way to check this would be for your father to contact a Chamber of Commerce.

Campbell also recommends he contact his nearest Beltone agent, who can tell him what his agency can do and make suggestions.

NOTE TO CITY STREET JOGGERS: Several months ago an answer was directed to Answer Line concerning the problem of joggers using city streets, causing problems for motorists who have to watch not only traffic, but joggers as well.

AL was advised at that time that there is no city ordinance and no violation according to the police, if the joggers observe the same rules which apply to walkers.

An AL reader recently sent in a newspaper clipping pointing attention to arrests being made by Dallas police of joggers using city streets. According to the article, there is a state law, Section 81 of 6701D Vernon's Annotated Texas Statutes.

The law states: Where SIDEWALKS ARE PROVIDED, it shall be unlawful for any pedestrian to walk along or upon an adjacent roadway. It continues, where sidewalks are not provided, any pedestrian walking along or upon a highway shall, when possible, walk only on the left side of the roadway or its shoulder facing traffic, which may approach from the opposite direction.

The article also says there is a $46.50 fine for violating this law.

I'm considering starting an individual retirement account (IRA) offered by a life insurance company. The interest rate is good, and I understand the tax advantages. But what if I need the money before I am 59½ years old? Is there any way I can withdraw this investment without paying a penalty? — G.F.

ANSWER: There is only one way an IRA investment can be withdrawn before age 59½ without incurring a stiff financial penalty — that is if you have become permanently disabled, according to The American Council of Life Insurance.

Otherwise, the Internal Revenue Service will levy a 10 percent penalty on the funds you withdraw — in addition to the income tax you will have to pay on this money at your regular Federal tax rate.

Is it legal for bill collectors to call you at work on a daily basis? Is there any way to stop this from happening? — J.J.

ANSWER: A spokesman with the Accounts Management Corp. says that the Fair Debt Collection Practices Act states that it is not illegal for a collector to call a person at his place of employment, unless the collector is aware that the person's employer does not allow personal telephone calls or if the person's job is in jeopardy from receiving the calls.

The practice can be stopped if the person informs the collector of his or her situation. This request may be honored by the collection agency verbally or a written request may be required.

The act is designed to prevent abusive, deceptive and unfair debt collection practices by a debt collection agency.

Doctors' office break-ins reported over weekend

From Staff Reports

Two doctors offices were entered over the weekend leaving the owners with damage but no reported loss to theft, according to the Midland Police Department.

The break-ins, at the office of Dr. Herman Cerkovic, 2114 W. Michigan, and Drs. Nick Schroff and T. June Melton, 2115 W. Michigan, were reported to police Saturday morning just minutes apart.

The burglar gained entry to Cerkovic's office by removing the outside window screen to a restroom. Reports say the window may have been unlocked. All rooms of the office had been ransacked with the contents of file cabinets, desks, drawers and containers scattered around.

Pry marks were found on an office door in the rear, possibly made with a tire iron. No estimate of damage or loss has been released and the investigation of a possible suspect continues.

A similar scene was reported at Melton's and Schroff's office next door to Cerkovic's.

Entry was gained by breaking a window and damage was done to doors, locks, file cabinets and a wooden desk drawer. Damage was estimated at $540.

The burglar scattered contents around the office, but apparantly did not take anything.

The electricity to both buildings had been shut off by the burglar

A motorcycle was reported stolen to the MPD early Saturday morning.

Chris Flores, 516 N. Loop 250, reported that his 1983 Suzuki, valued at $3,750, had been stolen. The theft occurred sometime after 11 p.m. Friday evening, said police. No other details were available.

Man indicted for second murder

ROCKWALL (AP) — A man convicted of killing his stepfather by planting a bomb in a newspaper rack has been indicted on a murder charge in the strangulation of a Rockwall woman.

Marshall Dewayne "Dodie" Williams was indicted Friday by a Rockwall County grand jury in the death of Beverly Fawn Miranda.

Ms. Miranda was found strangled in a Rockwall condominium two days before Williams' stepfather, Ward S. Keeton, was killed by a pipe bomb that exploded when Keeton opened a newspaper rack outside his north Dallas apartment complex on Jan. 27, 1984.

A Dallas federal jury convicted Williams Oct. 18 of building and detonating the bomb.

MIDLAND IS NOW 100 YEARS OLD. Historians tell us that a few years prior to 1880, Lum Medlin, a lone hunter, made what was later to become Midland his home. Researchers studying this area tell us that Lum was one of the first white men to settle in this area. Early in 1880, R. N. Garrett arrived here with a flock of sheep being driven to market. Like many of those who followed, Garrett took an immediate liking to the surroundings and settled here permanently. Shortly thereafter, his California family joined him.

In those early days the railroad people dropped off a box car to service the growing community as depot, post office and general store. On February 2, 1885 Midland County was established; 26 days later Midland was designated a city.

The old, middle-aged and young enterprises of Midland have contributed immeasurably to the progress, pride and prosperity of our city. You will be interested in reading this list of leading firms and organizations whose names have been arranged by the number of years they have served Midlanders and other West Texas residents.

MODERN MOBILE HOMES

The basic human needs of food, clothing and shelter are becoming more costly every day — and the price of shelter leads the list.

For many families, finding a home of their own is really the impossible dream.

Manufactured housing can provide an alternative for these families. Less expensive than many single-family site-built dwellings, the average new mobile home is equipped with major kitchen appliances such as a stove, oven, refrigerator and dishwasher; and some pieces of new furniture.

More luxurious models include two baths, one complete with tub and shower; walk-in closets; a wood-burning fireplace; plush carpeting throughout the house and a built-in stereo/intercom system.

While many families prefer traditional housing, some choose mobile home living for the price, availability or convenience of paying for house and furniture in one payment.

Although the reputation of manufactured housing in the past dismissed these "trailers" as "tin-foil boxes with cardboard walls," federal regulations implemented in the past decade have done much to improve the construction practices of mobile home manufacturers, if not the homes' reputation.

Mobile homes built in the last eight to 10 years are better-constructed than those built earlier. The mobile housing industry has been regulated by the federal government since 1974, according to Larry R. Hellums, advertising manager for A-1 Mobile Homes in Midland. The regulations specify the type of materials used to build the homes and the methods used in the building, he said.

Because of different climate in regions of the country, federal regulations governing the manufacture of mobile homes divide the country into zones, each with varying specifications, said Terry Mobley, sales manager with Mobile America Sales Corporation in Midland.

The standards have also required mobile homes to be much safer than they were in the past. Hellums said such housing is "more fire resistant. More site-built homes burn in a year. All mobile homes since 1974 have copper wiring. They are insulated the same as site-built."

While site-built homes are constructed to the specifications of local building codes, Hellums said, mobile homes are produced under federal regulations, resulting in manufactured housing which is "equal to and sometimes superior to site-built in construction," he said.

Mobile homes are "as well if not better built than site-built," agreed Kelly Preston, owner of Oasis Mobile Homes of Midland and K.J. Factory Discount Housing in Midland. And many new manufactured houses are designed to resemble conventional houses. "The mobile home industry is trying to get away from the box look in double-wides," he added.

Floor plans, wallpaper, carpet, furniture, appliances and other options vary from manufacturer to manufacturer.

Most new mobile homes have masonite siding, and many have composition roofs. "Metal-side houses are a thing of the past," Preston said.

Size of living space may be a factor choosing a mobile home. While mobile homes are no longer considered "crackerboxes," many have living areas which are smaller than those of conventional houses. An average single-wide mobile home is 14 by 70 feet, said Preston, but double-wides average about 28-by-60 and are available as large as 32-by-80. The maximum width of single-wide mobile homes is 16 feet, said Mobley, but 18-foot-wide mobile homes will soon be available.

Becky McAdams and her family moved into their new 14-by-76 mobile home in December, the third one she and her husband have lived in since their marriage. A major advantage of mobile home living is its affordability, she said. "They can usually get your payments down to where you can afford it and still have a nice home."

The McAdams' new home came equipped with dishwasher, refrigerator, stove, living room furniture, garden tub in the master bath and walk-in closet, Mrs. McAdams said. It also is equipped with central heat and air conditioning. Their utility bills, they said, are comparable to those of a similar-sized conventional house.

According to Hellums, the median price of new site-built homes nationwide is $80,000; the median price of an average 1200-square foot mobile home is about $20,000, Preston said.

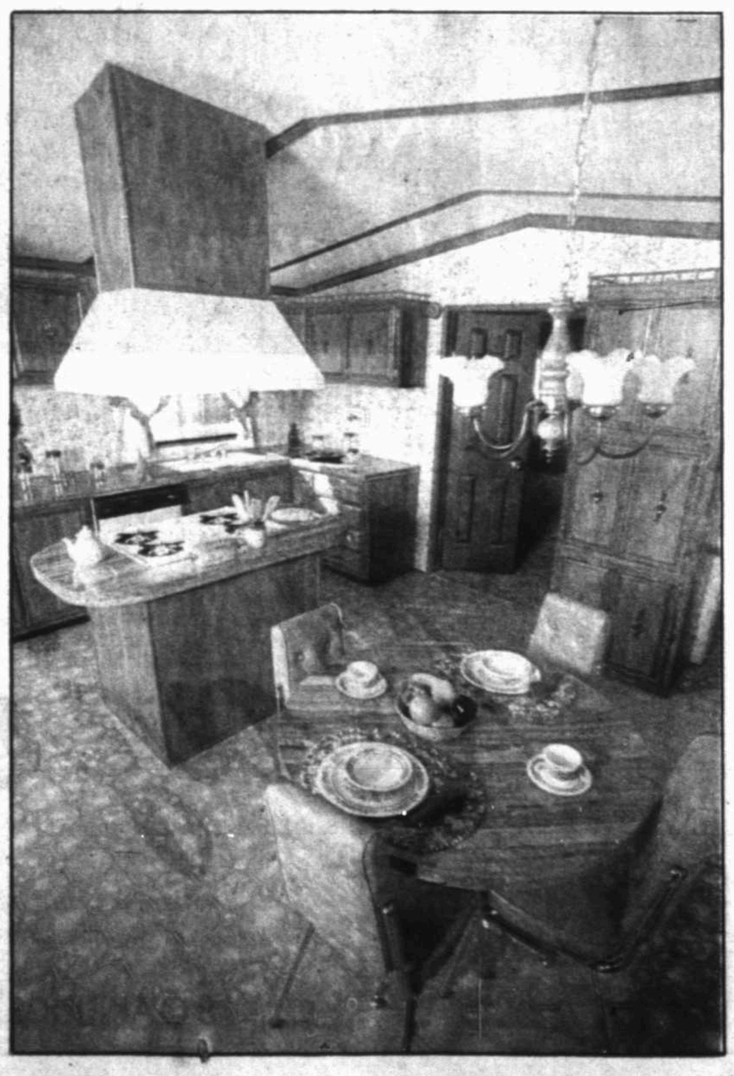

Current interest rate on the purchase of a mobile home is higher than conventional housing interest, said Mobley, but because financing is set for a 15-year period instead of 30, mobile homes are paid in half the time.

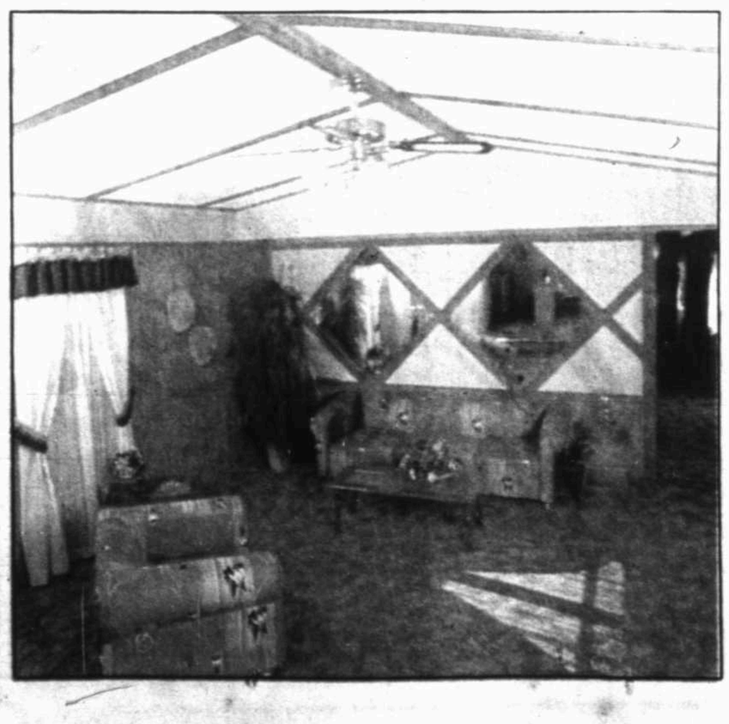

Lori Thompson and her mother Beverly said they are pleased with the mobile home their family has lived in for nearly two years. It was "easier to buy than a house in town," Lori said.

Finding a site for their home wasn't difficult. "It wasn't hard to find land to park it on," Lori said. "All you have to do is look in the paper...."

One surprising aspect to many new mobile homes is the size of the kitchen areas. This home at Mobile America features a large kitchen complete with a cooking "island" and plenty of cabinet space.

Mobile homes molded to fit today's lifestyles

By LINDA ANDERSON

Families who want to buy homes but can't afford new houses have alternatives. The mobile home industry, putting horror stories of yesteryear behind it, is molding its product to suit the needs of today's consumers' lifestyles.

The Texas Manufactured Housing Association has published a brochure, "The Truth About Manufactured Housing," which answers questions and dispells common myths about mobile housing.

After World War II, manufactured housing was regarded as a form of temporary housing. Today, according the mobile home industry, new homes are designed for permanent occupation and are constructed under federally-mandated building code.

Methods of building mobile homes, which in the past were considered by some to be of poor quality, are now governed by federal regulations of the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development. Aside from improvements in basic construction, mobile homes must also withstand stresses of being transported.

Mobile homes were once classified as motor vehicles and depreciated in value. According to TMHA, mobile homes now increase in value from 5 percent to 10 percent each year.

Poor insulation in the past gave mobile homes a reputation of being expensive to heat and cool, but energy standards governed by HUD now enable mobile homes to have utility costs comparable those of site-built homes.

New mobile homes are built to be more fire-proof than in its history. A study conducted in 1983 by independent researcher Howard Gates concluded that the risk of fire-related death in mobile housing is almost 50 percent less than in one- and two-family site-built homes.

Manufactured housing accounts for about one-third of all new single-family houses sold each year. And, according to TMHA, more than 10 millions American, including 1 million Texans, live in mobile homes. The statistics include people of all ages, occupations and incomes levels.

New manufactured housing safety standards tougher than before

By LINDA ANDERSON

Mobile home dwelling may solve the problems of finding quality housing at a lower cost, but it is not without its drawbacks.

Traditionally, manufactured housing has the reputation of being a "fire trap," and while the picture is not totally correct, neither is it totally incorrect, according to Jerry Petree, fire marshall with the City of Midland Fire Department.

"They have started making improvements in mobile homes," he said. "They have started using sheet rock inside the water heater closets to keep fires from spreading. Sheet rock is more fire resistant than just wood walls."

And the interiors of many mobile homes are being manufactured with "sheet rock on inside walls instead of just paneling. The better finish on the interiors keeps fire from spreading."

As important as these factors are in helping to prevent fire damage to mobile homes, it is not all that is required.

Many mobile homes have gas water heaters housed in closets which have floors made of press board, Petree said. "Check the water heater closet to be sure the floor is not sagging and the heater sets straight." If the water heaters leak, the floors may sag or weaken which may alter the alignment of pipes and bring the water heater's flames in closer contact with flammable surfaces.

A piece of flat steel plate under the water heater may help prevent this situation, Petree said, but water heaters should never be built up with pieces of wood or any other flammable material.

Another common cause of mobile home fires is the use of propane in a home equipped to burn natural gas, Petree said. The fuels cannot be used interchangeably. Propane entering through a natural gas jet produces a larger flame and "too much fuel for the appliance to handle," resulting in an "unsafe situation," he said. If home is designed to use propane, "you can't use propane without changing the jet. And vice versa. Neither situation is safe."

In a fire, mobile homes are more likely to be total losses than conventional houses, he said, because "the interiors seem to have more wood exposed" instead of the sheet rock walls found in most site-built homes, and "in quite a few cases mobile homes are in the country" resulting in more travel time for fire units responding to emergency calls.

Petree said fire prevention and safety is important to any homeowner, not just mobile home dwellers.

He also stressed the importance of smoke detectors. "I encourage people to use smoke detectors and to be sure they work," he said. "the law requires mobile homes to have smoke detectors."

Petree said he had "seen more serious fires resulting in more damage" in mobile homes, but "mobile homes are just as safe as the people who are living in them."

August Koenning, regional liaison officer with Midland's Department of Public Safety, agreed a mobile home can be as safe as its owners' safety standards and practices, but because of structural design, they are "more vulnerable to a storm.

"They're built up off the ground ... A strong wind blowing under has the tendency to lift them up," Koenning said.

Texas law requires mobile homes to be tied down, or securely fastened to the ground, he said. And the new "hurricane straps" provide additional protection, he said "if it's done right ... in the country they should really be tied down but a lot of people don't do it."

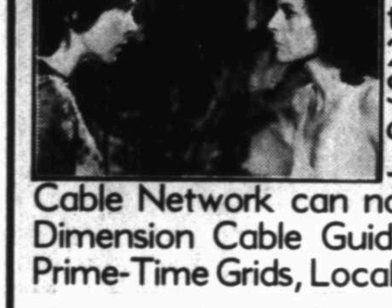

Although mobile homes are especially vulnerable to major storms and persons in them should seek more adequate shelter from severe weather and winds, tornadoes are a threat to life and property of all kinds, Koenning said. "You can't build a building to be totally safe ... but some are safer than others. If something hits without warning you're going to be hurt no matter where you are."

Have you heard...?

By MARILYN McKNIGHT HARRISON

The magic of Christmas is over, but the memories linger on. For many, it meant time spent with family and friends, while others took advantage of the holidays to travel near and far.

Cecelia and Bob Davis enjoyed a trip with their children, Khris, a senior at Texas A&M, and Wes, a sophomore at Angelo State University, to Cancan, Mexico. Leaving the snow behind in Houston, they were anticipating sunny climes in Cancun, which averages more than 240 days of sunshine a year, but their arrival was greeted by windy and rainy weather. However, they awakened to glorious sunshine their last day in the resort city and made use of their time prior to departure enjoying the beautiful powder white beaches and gorgeous crystal clear turquoise water.

Bob particularly enjoyed a trip to Chichen Itza, where the Mayan ruins and pyramids are located. Other highlights of their stay were the shopping, snorkeling and a sailboat cruise to the nearby Isla Mujeres. One of their favorite dining spots was the city's well-known restaurant, "1900."

Cecelia tells us that Cancun was a small fishing village with less than 500 people 10 years ago and has grown since that time to become one of Mexico and the Caribbean's most popular resorts, with a population nearing the 100,000 mark. What many people don't realize is that Cancun is a master planned city, selected as a result of an extensive search with the assistance of a computer to develop an ideal resort in Mexico.

WE'LL WAGER THE chances are less than one in a million that three generations of one family would share the same birthdate, but that is exactly what happened when little Ashley Nicole Scott made her appearance at Midland Memorial Hospital on Jan. 13. Her mother, Shelly (Mrs. Randy) Scott, and her grandmother, Judy Hubbard, also were born on that date.

Weighing in at 6 pounds 14 ounces, the baby has a big brother, two-year-old Drew. Their father, Randy, is a self-employed insurance agent here.

LAST WEEKEND'S SNOWSTORM inspired Dottie and Jack Fox to invite friends to a soup tasting party at their home on Saturday. The guests contributed to the party by bringing pots of soup, and there were nine varieties served along with homemade Sangria, French bread, tossed salad and two scrumptious cakes for dessert.

The group enjoyed a cozy afternoon of good conversation and delicious food and drink around the fireplace, thus warding of the winter weather blues.

The guests were Cissy and Ken Colston, Cindy and John Michael Warburton, Jean and Bob Leonard, Anna Marie and Ed Vogler, Frank Petty, Dan O'Grady, Ann Shaunessy, Jo Stroker and Ginny and John Ketter.

TO CELEBRATE THEIR 44th wedding anniversary, Ruby and Len Killough traveled to Arizona and California for a week after Christmas. The journey brought back many memories for the couple, as they visited the places where Len was stationed during World War II, including the air force bases at Yuma, Ariz., and Indio and Blythe in the California desert.

An additional highlight occurred at Long Beach, where they toured both the Queen Mary, which was used as a troop transport ship during the war and which Len sailed on to and from Europe, and Howard Hughes' famous plane, the Spruce Goose. In addition, Ruby was delighted to have the opportunity to visit Evangelist Robert Schuller's Crystal Cathedral at Garden Grove, Calif., before heading home.

A TRIP TO NEW ORLEANS over the New Year's holidays was a treat for Jo and Mike Cristiani and their children, Carole and John.

Staying at the Royal Sonesta hotel on Bourbon Street, the foursome enjoyed tours of the city and the Mississippi River and were especially charmed by the beautiful old homes on St. Charles Avenue. They also enjoyed the shopping, particularly on Canal Street and Jackson Square, and of course, the jazz, as well as an excellent Cancan Revue at their hotel. It also was fun for the family to "people watch" the LSU and Nebraska fans, who were in town for the Sugar Bowl and enjoying some pre-game celebrating.

AFTER AN EARLY Christmas celebration in Oklahoma City with loved ones, Marjorie and Dan Kozak headed for New Mexico to spend their 15th skiing holiday in the Taos-Santa Fe area.

Their Christmas Eve was special, beginning with an impressive Indian ceremony, the "Lighting of the Christmas Fires," at dusk at the Taos Pueblo, followed by a 45-mile drive through the snow to the village of Chimayo for dinner, and ending with Midnight Mass at Ranchos de Taos. At the Chimayo restaurant where they dined, the Kozaks enjoyed entertainment by Marjorie's siter, singer-guitarist Jacki (Mrs. John) McCarty, who performs there on a regular basis. The couple then skied Christmas Day in the Taos Valley.

After Christmas, the Kozaks participated in some exciting events in Santa Fe as guests of the McCartys. They were present for the New Mexico Repertory Theatre's Grand Opening, which Jacki and John co-chaired and which featured "The Last Meeting of the Knights of the White Magnolia" by the late Texas playwright Preston Jones. Preston's widow, Mary Sue Jones of Dallas, was among the special guests at the gala event, which included champagne and dinner before the eight o'clock curtain.

The Kozaks also attended a glamorous, black tie New Year's Eve party at a home high in the Santa Fe hills. The party began at 10 p.m. and concluded with a midnight dinner featuring roast suckling pig. Luminarias surrounding the house and a fire in the courtyard fireplace contributed to the evening's holiday air.

Deer, Pennsylvania state animal

ALLENTOWN, Pa. (AP) — People thrill at the sight of a deer. It is the No. 1 big game animal in America and a challenge to hunters everywhere.

So, when Pennsylvania named the whitetail deer as its official state animal 25 years ago it was a popular choice, a choice made by the Lehighton Sportsmen's Association.

It was the late Clair Sorber, who was secretary of the association, who prepared the resolution designating the whitetail deer as the official state animal in Pennsylvania. That was in 1957. The proposal was approved by the Carbon County Sportsmen's Association and was brought before the state convention of Federation of Sportsmen's Clubs in Harrisburg for its adoption.

Two years later, on Oct. 2, 1959, Gov. David Lawrence affixed his signature to the bill that had been passed by the state House of Representatives and Senate in Harrisburg. The text of the official proclamation was as follows:

"Whereas: Many Pennsylvania Indians, colonists and pioneers depended upon the prized whitetail deer for survival, resulting in a more rapid growth of our great State and ...

"Whereas: Today the numerous whitetails still win the admiration of thousands of Pennsylvanians, especially for intelligence, endurance and character, and ...

"Whereas: No other state has declared this noble animal as their state animal, and before another state proudly chooses the whitetail, therefore, be it resolved: that the General Assembly of Pennsylvania declare the whitetail deer the official animal of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania."

James Remaley of Lehighton, who was president of the Lehighton Sportsmen's Association when the idea first surfaced, still remembers how it all came about.

"We used to talk about the state not having an official animal while other states had them and we all knew how popular whitetail deer were throughout the state so when Clair explained his proposal we were all in favor of it," recalls Remaley.

According to the longtime conservationist, "The people of Carbon County, particularly those in the Lehighton area, should be proud of the fact that the proclamation to make the whitetail deer the official state animal of Pennsylvania originated here in Lehighton."

Remaley is the recipient of the 1971 Carbon County Soil and Water Conservation District Conservation Educator Award, in recognition of his work as a special education teacher in the county.

'Media room' becomes star attraction

Associated Press

Kitchens, bathrooms, family rooms and master bedroom suites have each in turn been the fashionable room to remodel or add in American homes.

Now the media room has been added to the list. The media room in which television, audio equipment and sometimes a home computer are arranged for maximum user convenience is being ushered in on a wave of increased sales of videocassette recorders, home computers and video games.

Another new development that also supports the growth of the media room is the improvement in television sound. For years, the picture on the television screen got better while the sound remained the same. But now there are signs that the time has come for sound to improve.

Television stations in most of the country's major metropolitan areas have already instituted or are planning stero television broadcasts, according to a survey of stations conducted by a trade publication.

A "Television Digest" survey found that more than 100 stations expect to be broadcasting in stereo by the end of 1985. Some stations are already producing stereo programs, according to the publication.

Stereo sound is an advance in television technology that should bring viewers the same quality of sound they already enjoy on FM radio broadcasts, according to Gerald M. McCarthy, a Zenith Electronics Corp. executive.

As stations prepare to broadcast in stereo, most manufacturers of television sets are introducing new models with built-in stereo sound. They are also providing adaptors that can be used to improve the sound in existing sets. In addition, some television sets can be connected to separate stereo speakers to take advantage of the quality speakers an individual may already have.

With so many improvements on the horizon, this is a good time to upgrade the listening and viewing environment into a media room. According to Philip Mazzurco, media rooms require close attention to lighting, seating, wiring and placement of equipment for acoustic performance as well as visual attractiveness. To illustrate the ways components can be arranged in a media room, Mazzurco wrote "The Media Design Book," which provides ideas for integrating components into home and office media rooms.

Lighting is crucial to such a room, Mazzurco said. The general principles established when television first came into home use in the 1950s remain essential. "Never watch in total darkness. Never allow anything to shine onto the screen or obstruct a view of the screen. Place the light source behind the viewer's head where diffused lighting will not reflect onto the screen," he suggests.

A room with nonreflective surfaces offers the best viewing environment.

Foundation preserves puns

Copley News Service

Some people say the urge to pun and engage in word play is as impossible to stop as the flu bug that's going around and that's no bed of neuroses.

Even William F. Buckley Jr. himself is an incurable punster. Buckley would never stoop to telling about the two rug dealers who made a Persian-to-Persian call. Nor would he tell about Molly Jones, the woman credited with inventing the stainless sink which quickly became known as "The Unbrownable Molly Sink."

But in his spy novel, "The Story of Henri Tod," Buckley did employ a pun to the occasion. His yarn is set in the 1950s and in it Khrushchev is presiding over a meeting of his Communist colleagues at the Kremlin.

Khrushchev (as Buckley writes) tells a joke as follows: "The couple is sitting in Gorky Park and the boy says to the girl, 'It's raining.' And she replies. 'No, Rudolf, it's snowing.' And he says to her, 'Sonya, Rudolf the Red knows rain, dear!'"

And as Buckley writes: "Khrushchev laughed uproariously, as did everyone within earshot."

ALL OF which leads to the annual communique from the International Save the Pun Foundation. You're not sure you want puns to be saved? Well, this is what the great lexicographer-grammarian, H.W. Fowler, had to say in his book, "A Dictionary of Modern Usage":

"The assumption that puns are per se contemptible, betrayed by the habit of describing every pun not as a pun, but as a bad pun or a feeble pun, is a sign at once of sheepish docility and a desire to seem superior. Puns are good, bad and indifferent, and only those who lack the wit to make them are unaware of the fact."

Let's hear it for Fowler!

The International Save the Pun Foundation, by the way, is located in Toronto where in the wintertime many are cold but few are frozen.

And here are a few of the winners, to wit:

A big game hunter in Africa agreed to teach a young American his trade. After a long trek, they were abandoned by their trek driver, who protested, "I don't like to go safari from home!" However, the two veldt better when they managed to reach the edge of the Twopenny Plain on foot.

Nonetheless, the young man hesitated as they paused atop the last, small hill. "Come on," the hunter urged. "This is no place for a knoll coward!"

He pointed toward a nearby bush under which a large lion lay fast asleep.

"Stay here and watch closely," he whispered as he whisked a razor-sharp machete from his pack and crept toward the bush. When he reached the sleeping lion, he bent down and slashed all the hair from the lion's neck and then ran back.

"Why did you do that?" the young man said.

"That, son," said the hunter, "is the mane of the game!"

AND IT so happens that in a European village for centuries one family had made all the bells for the churches. Finally, the mayor was the only member left in the family.

Threatened by competition, he decreed that no wedding bells be rung in his village unless he manufactured them. He enforced this rule so strictly that he became known as the wedding bell czar.

Then a young couple decided to marry without using the czar's bells. Instead they chose an ancient gong that belonged to a friend.

Soon after the ceremony, a loud crashing sound was heard from the house of the gong-owner. The newly married couple rushed to investigate.

"What does that noise mean?" the bride cried.

In great distress, their friend replied: "The wedding-bell czar's breaking up that old gong of mine!"

AND THERE was this man who stood before the bathroom mirror, flossing his teeth. Every so often, as the floss did its work, he would sigh: "Ah."

His wife stomped into the bathroom and gave him a swift kick.

Bewildered, the man said: "What was that for?"

The wife replied: "I don't believe in sighing flossers!"

In the French village of Dannette, the shopkeepers were often robbed of their afternoon receipts after the bank closed at noon. Finally, they decided to have LeBlanc, the baker, hold everyone's money until the bank opened in the morning.

Late one day, LeBanc was accosted by a desperate man — a laborer who was on strike.

LeBlanc ran from his shop. The robber took out a gun and began shooting. Fortunately for LeBlanc, he was unhurt. But the village's medical examiner happened to step into a bullet's path and he was mortally wounded.

And that, soccer fans, was the first time that the striker fired a shot past the gold keeper into the coroner of Dannette!

Town scented with cognac

Hearst News Service

In the town of Cognac, in the Charente region of southwest France, one doesn't have to drink the namesake brandy. One can simply inhale it.

As the liquor ages in oak casks, it evaporates through the porous wood, releasing a heady perfume.

The people call the 3-to-5-percent evaporation loss "the angel's share" and attribute their long lives and general good health to it. But they also have forbidden the construction of a train station in the town, fearing flying sparks might set off an explosion.

In recent years, the United States has become the No. 1 importer of Cognac, France's leading export product.

Industry spokesman Jean-Marie Beulque-Schaub of the Bureau National du Cognac says this is due in part to an aggressive advertising campaign and in part to a burgeoning yuppie hunger for anything rich, rare and costly.

But despite our purchase of close to 28 million bottles of cognac last year, we Americans don't hold a snifter to the Chinese of Hong Kong. Last year, that crown colony of 6 million people consumed 8.5 million bottles of cognac, one assumes with the help of the tourist population.

Beulque-Schaub explained that cognac is a status symbol in Hong Kong. No self-respecting family would think of skimping on the cognac at a daughter's wedding, for instance.

STATISTICS ASIDE, however, Americans still drink relatively little cognac. The average person may encounter this gentle spirit once or twice in a lifetime. And it's more likely to come in a flambeed dessert at an exclusive restaurant than in an after-dinner snifter.

We still know little about it.

Cognac is the silver lining in a cloud over the Charente region. Until the 15th century, that area was known strictly for its wines — wines so dry and acidic they were barely drinkable.

In those days, Charente was frequently visited by hardy seafarers — Britons, Scandinavians and Dutchmen. The vintners decided to try distilling their wine — heating it and allowing it to condense — which would reduce its volume and therefore save cargo space.

Using onion-shaped pot stills called alembics, which had been used variously to distill perfume and in abortive attempts to turn less precious metals into gold, the vintners made a crystal clear liquor of such potency that it was named "eau de vie" or water of life. It sold well and everyone was happy.

Then, in 1574, a somewhat eccentric knight decided to try distilling his eau de vie twice. He must not have liked the result because he left it lying around for five years.

But when he rediscovered the casks, he found that the tannin in the wood had tinted the brandy and the aging had transformed the flavor. Cognac had been born.

BEULQUE-SCHAUB stressed that there are several critical factors in creating true cognac.

First comes the soil, the climate and the grape varieties used in the region. Only brandy produced in the 235,900-acre "delimited area" around Cognac can bear that name.

Next comes double distillation in the onion-shaped alembics.

Aging follows in casks made only from the local oak, hand-fashioned without nails or glue. This process, which goes on for a minimum of two years, lowers the alcohol content from 70 to 40 percent.

The loss contributes much to cognac's sophistication, and also to its price. "We need an average of seven liters of wine to produce one liter of cognac," Beulque-Schaub said. "For very old cognac, it might take 10 liters."

Finally, the various types and years of aged cognac are blended to produce the characteristic flavors of the various brands and classifications.

THE BLENDED brandies are bottled and labeled according to class: VS (very superior) for brandy aged from five to nine years; VSOP (very superior old pale) or Reserve, aged 12 to 20 years; X.O., Napoleon, VVSP, Grand Reserve, Royal and Vieux, aged 20 to 40 years, and Fine Champagne, which means the grapes came entirely from the Cognac region's top vineyards.

Beulque-Schaub said many consumers don't realize that cognac ceases to age as soon as it is bottled. If you buy a 20-year-old cognac and hold it for five years, it's still 20 years old in flavor and complexity, he said.

The proper way to serve cognac is in balloon-shaped, narrow-mouthed snifters. Beulque-Schaub is skeptical of oversized glasses and those tilted candle affairs designed to warm the wine. Too large a glass allows too much of the aroma to escape the nose, and the candle can warm the liquor so much that the alcohol begins to burn off, he said.

Instead, cradle the wine in both hands, swirling it gently and sniffing frequently. Finally, sip gently, allowing the cognac to flow over the tongue.

Some ideas for using cognac:

— With meats, as a marinade or tenderizer.

— In homemade pate for a nutlike flavor.

— With fruit. Allow the whole, peeled or sliced fruit to stand in the cognac for several hours before serving.

Engagements, weddings, anniversaries and club notices must be submitted in writing. All materials should include the name and telephone number of the person submitting them. These items appear in the Sunday paper only.

The Reporter-Telegram has forms for announcements of engagements, weddings and anniversaries.

We cannot mail pictures or forms to persons living within Midland. Pictures must be picked up in the Lifestyle office within one month after publication.

Portraits of the future bride and bridegroom in one photograph may be submitted with engagement announcements. Wedding photographs should be of the bride only.

Pictures should be black and white, preferably glossy finish, studio portraits. Studio color pictures may be submitted, but they may reproduce poorly. Good reproduction cannot be assured when color prints are used. In general, snapshots are not acceptable.

There is no charge for publication of photographs and stories.

Artist works to help others

NISSWA, Minn. (AP) — Ellen Mueller, a Nisswa painter, sculptor, poet, fabric artist, photographer, instrumentalist, singer and dancer, doesn't use her gifts for her own profit.

Her only goal is making people happy, she says.

"My art is minor," she said in a recent interview at her home overlooking Gull Lake. "The greatest art is the art of loving people."

Right now, she's sending most of the proceeds from her art work to a country pastor who lives in the mountains of Haiti in the Caribbean. Ms. Mueller lived in that oppressed country for nearly two years herself, helping Nobel Peace Prize winner Mother Teresa care for starving families.

A therapist on a medical leave from her job, Ms. Mueller spends most of her waking hours painting outdoor scenes on antique farm implements — especially saws, gaining the nickname "Sawlady."

She also does her acrylic paint designs on such unlikely items as skis, shoes, frypans, washboards, bedpans, canoe paddles and bowling balls. On commission, of course.

Her fees are nominal. "I don't believe in charging much for my work," she said. "I like to help the people who ordinarily wouldn't be able to buy expensive art."

The most unusual item she's ever painted, Ms. Mueller said, was a radiator frame from a 1929 Buick. That now hangs in an auto dealership in the Minneapolis-St. Paul area.

"I enjoy doing antiques, things you see at rummage sales or lying around in the weeds," she said.

DINING/SITTING ROOM COMBINATIONS

A dining room can be combined with a sitting room by adding a sofa and chairs that blend with the style of the dining room furniture. There are several reasons for considering this arrangement. If the main seating area in the living room also contains the TV set, or is next to the children's play area, it is nice to create a peaceful haven that is purely for adults. By adding a seating area to the dining room, more comfortable places for guests to perch during a buffet dinner are created. A dining room/sitting room can also serve as a good place for a cocktail before dinner or for coffee afterward. A convertible sofa, selected as part of the sitting room grouping, can be used to accommodate an overnight guest.

Our staff will help you create a room for your particular needs at WINDOW DECOR, 30 W. Industrial Loop, 685-0875. NEIL SOLOMON, M.D.

Liquid dish soap can induce vomiting

Dear Dr. Solomon: I received a pamphlet that told parents to keep poisons away from the reach of children. It also said that families in which there are young children should keep syrup of ipecac on hand. Apparently, this is used to cause a child to vomit when the child has accidentally swallowed a poison. I mentioned what the pamphlet said to many of my friends and relatives, and not a single one said that they had ever kept syrup of ipecac in their homes. In fact, most of them never even heard of it. If someone does not have syrup of ipecac but a child swallows some poison, is there anything else that may be given? — Mrs. D.M., South Bend, Ind.

Dear Mrs. M.: Dr. George C. Rodges Jr., of the Univesity of Louisville School of Medicine, says that any liquid dish soap can be used to induce vomiting when a child has swallowed a poison. The results of one study showed that the dish soap produced good results with no significant side effects.

Dear Dr. Solomon: I know of two people who have had hip replacement operations, and they are more or less satisfied with the results. But I recently met a person who had a shoulder joint replaced and he was not very happy about the way it turned out. Was he just unlucky, or are shoulder joints harder to replace than the hip? — Otto, St. Paul, Minn.

Dear Otto: The shoulder is a complex joint, and the results of shoulder joint replacement generally do not match those obtained with hip replacement. Dr. Frederic C. McDuffie, of the Arthritis Foundation notes that better fitting implants may improve the outcome of shoulder replacements, but this is still to be proven. Surgeons are working on computer-designed implants, and there is at least some hope that these will work better than those previously used.

VDTs linked to heart pain

MONTEREY, Calif. (AP) — Nearly 20 percent of female telephone company workers in North Carolina suffered angina after putting in more than four hours at video display terminals, about 10 times the normal rate, a researcher says.

VDT users also suffered more eye, back and neck strain, headaches, fatigue and tension than non-users, said Suzanne G. Haynes, chief of medical statistics for the National Center for Health Statistics in Hyattsville, Md.

Ms. Haynes, who studied North Carolina telephone operators and service representatives between late 1983 and August 1984, found that 19.1 percent of 278 VDT users reported angina symptoms after more than four hours of work. Only 10.1 percent of 218 non-users complained of the heart pains.

Angina is chest pain caused by an inadequate supply of oxygen to the heart, often related to constriction of the coronary arteries, and is treated with nitroglycerin, which opens arteries to allow better blood flow.

The condition may have occurred because workers who use the television screen-and-keyboard setup used for word processing and computers often are under pressure to increase productivity through long hours without adequate breaks, in close quarters and with little human contact, Ms. Haynes said at an American Heart Association forum for science writers.

She said that while there is a connection between VDT use and angina among telephone workers, she could not prove that their use caused the pains. "More research needs to be done on the use of VDTs. No one epidemiological study can identify something as being cause and effect," she said.

An AHA spokesman said there are no good figures for the prevalence of angina in the general population, but Ms. Haynes said she believes about 2 percent to 3 percent of Americans suffer the ailment.

Officials of Southern Bell and AT&T Communications said they had not heard of the study, which Ms. Haynes conducted with the help of the Communications Workers of America while she was an epidemiologist at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill.

"Until we had an opportunity to see the study and examine the details, there would be no way we could appropriately comment on it," Southern Bell spokesman Ladd Baucom said from Charlotte, N.C.

"Thus far, we have no evidence of any medical effects of video display terminals, but of course anything concerning our employees' health is of concern to us," said AT&T Communications spokeswoman Nina Wood from Bedminster, N.J.

About two years ago, similar effects among VDT users were noted by the National Institute of Occupational Safety and Health, but the agency concluded the devices posed no serious, long-term health effects.

"They say 'no big deal,'" Ms. Haynes said, adding she believes eyestrain and the other problems are important.

Last November, the Bureau of National Affairs, a private, Washington-based publisher of newsletters, issued a 112-page report, "VDTs in the Workplace," that minimized the potential health problems of using VDTs.

The report said that while numerous studies indicate using VDTs can lead to body strain, vision and stress problems, employers are spending large amounts of money adapting VDTs to worksites to minimize these problems.

Vitamin C's role debated

BOSTON (AP) — Nobel laureate Linus Pauling should not have recommended that cancer victims take vitamin C until more studies were performed, said a researcher whose report concludes the vitamin treatment is worthless.

But Pauling, a winner of the Nobel Peace Prize and the Nobel prize for chemistry, countered in an interview that vitamin C is harmless and said that an increasing number of doctors believe massive doses of the vitamin are beneficial.

Pauling based his recommendation on research which, according to the latest study, was flawed because patients who took vitamin C were not compared with similarly ill cancer victims who did not take large doses of the vitamin.

Mayo Clinic doctors undertook the study to test the assertion, and repeated it because Pauling claimed their research was flawed. The new study, published in the New England Journal of Medicine, tested vitamin C on 100 people with incurable colon cancer.

"Our previous study and this one have demonstrated to my satisfaction that vitamin C is worthless in the treatment of advanced and metastatic (spreading) cancer," said Dr. Charles G. Moertel.

The controversy began with studies conducted in the 1970s by Pauling and Dr. Ewan Cameron at the Vale of Leven Hospital at Loch Lomonside, Scotland. They reported that cancer patients taking the vitamin survived an average of 293 days, while those who didn't lived 38 days.

As a comparison group, however, they used "historical controls," the records of patients who had been treated earlier at the hospital and didn't take the vitamin.

In 1979, the Mayo Clinic team tested the vitamin C theory on two carefully matched groups of cancer patients. One group took vitamin C and the other took dummy sugar pills. Neither the doctors nor the patients knew until the study was finished which patients had gotten the vitamin.

There was no difference in the survival of the two groups. But Pauling objected that the cancer patients had already been treated with chemotherapy, and this might have interferred with vitamin C's powers.

The Mayo Clinic group did the study again, this time using 100 cancer patients who had never received chemotherapy. As before, vitamin C did not shrink their tumors or make them live longer.

They theorized that the Scottish study got positive results because of differences in the comparison groups. The patients taking vitamin C were probably not as sick when the therapy started as those who received conventional treatment.

Moertel said that carefully controlled studies using similar comparison groups are the only way to determine whether a medical treatment really works.

"We have been horribly confused so often by relying on these retrospective comparisons. My wish would have been that Dr. Pauling would have withheld public advocacy of vitamin C until such studies were performed," he said.

To which Pauling responded: "Why not? I hear from patients who say their doctor said, 'If you want to take vitamin C, go ahead and do it. It won't harm you, and it may do you some good.' More and more physicians are getting convinced about the value of large doses of vitamin C."

Device helps dry mouths

Copley News Service

Sufferers of a dysfunction marked by extreme dry mouth soon may be salivating like Pavlov dogs again. Thanks to Biosonics Inc. of Philadephia, patients with xerostomia will get their salivary glands in working order.

Dr. Henry Brenman has designed a new microelectronic stimulation device that fits in the mouths of patients and stimulates the salivary glands. And that's good news for patients with the uncomfortable disorder.

Brenman says people with xerostomia can't talk for more than a minute or two without having to drink water. In fact, he says, they must carry a water bottle with them at all times.

Upon approval of the Food and Drug Administration, the salivary device may be marketed sometime in 1985.

Scientists find AIDS 'blueprint'

WASHINGTON (AP) — Scientists have uncovered the genetic blueprints for the virus that causes AIDS in a major finding expected to further studies of the deadly disease as well as efforts at detection, prevention and treatment, the Washington Post recently reported.

"Now we see the face of the enemy," Dr. William Haseltine of Harvard University's Dana Farber Cancer Institute was quoted by the Post as saying. "We have the complete blueprint for the modus operandi of the virus."

The finding came in separate research projects by American and French scientists, the newspaper reported. It said results of a collaborative project by the National Cancer Institute with Harvard medicalk School and two commercial laboratories will appear in the Jan. 24 issue of the British journal Nature.

A spokesman for the American journal Cell said the January issue to be published next week will contain a study of the genetic sequence of the AIDS virus.

Haseltine cautioned, however, that it was impossible to say "how fast this information will find its way into use."

SAVING KNOCKED-OUT TOOTH

QUESTION: As a mother of five active children, I dread the day when one of my sons comes home with one of his teeth in his hands. If a tooth gets knocked out can it be saved?

ANSWER: Yes - but you have to act fast; you have to be lucky; and you have to know what to do ahead of time. The sooner you get to the dentist, the better the chances of a successful replantation. Step one is to place the tooth back into the socket and hold it in place while you get to your dentist's office immediately. By keeping the tooth in the socket (or under the tongue) the tissues have the best chance of remaining vital until the tooth can be replanted.

DR. KURIANSKY

Woman worried by partner's sexual preference

By Dr. JUDITH KURIANSKY

Q. I'm 34 and my boyfriend is 26. We've been living together two years. Last year he left for five days, and when he returned he was depressed and suicidal. He said he had spent the time with another man and that he's afraid he's bisexual. He cries and says he does not want to live with these feelings. He claims he hasn't seen another man since then and that he loves me and wants to marry me.

But he's afraid he'll wake up one day and be homosexual. He said he has no sexual drive now. He holds me and feels comfortable about that, but we have not had sex in two months. Last year we went for four months without it. I try to be patient and understanding but I feel frustrated and helpless.

We love each other and are both afraid to be alone someday. Also, I want to have a child. We think we can fight this thing together. We have the love. Isn't that the best thing to have on our side?

A. Indeed, when a couple have love on their side they can move mountains together and overcome many disagreements and differences. But when one partner is unsure about his fidelity, and on top of that, his psychosexual identity, love is not enough.

Whatever you do, don't blame yourself or think that you can make him change. He has to want to be with you, and even more important, with women. His choice of a male partner is not a reflection of his love for you or an insult to your desirability. It is his own effort to deal with his needs.

This is a time of great confusion for both of you. Be aware of the feelings of disappointment, anger and guilt you both feel. Talk about your feelings often.

Some men and women may have an acute attack of depression and suicidal feelings upon having a sexual experience with someone of the same sex. This is called "homosexual panic." They are terrified they will have to change their entire lifestyle and lose loved ones. This is not necessarily true. A few homosexual experiences doth not a homosexual nor even a bisexual make.

CONSIDER THE studies of researcher Alfred Kinsey and his associates in 1948. They found that 37 percent of men had at least one homosexual experience in their past.

Kinsey also devised a rating scale continuum of sexual partner choices, from exclusively heterosexual to exclusively homosexual.

The stages in between included: predominantly heterosexual but incidentally homosexual, predominantly heterosexual and more than incidentally homosexual, equally heterosexual and homosexual, predominantly homosexual but more than incidentally heterosexual, and predominantly homosexual and incidentally heterosexual. There were men and women in each of these categories.

Bisexuals fall anywhere in those in-between categories.

You need to talk with your boyfriend and he needs to do some soul-searching to find out where on this continuum he is. That will determine what future you have as a monogamous couple — with a child.

Also it is possible he will change. Only time will tell how able he is to commit to you alone.

SOME EXPERTS would claim that men like your boyfriend are really straight, and just dabbling in the gay world. If that's true, you might explore what is motivating him.

Is he curious? Is he attracted to a type of person, or is it men in particular? What do men offer that you — or women — can't? Is he seeking some mirror image of himself at this point in life, perhaps to overcompensate for a part of him that is unfulfilled? If these needs are satisfied in another way, perhaps he will be satisfied with you.

Other experts would speculate that your boyfriend, and "bisexual" men like him who are attracted sexually to other men while dating or married to a woman, are really homosexuals who are afraid to accept that role. In that case, over time he may become more and more secure about expressing himself in that way.

SUCH A person, who evolves from heterosexual to homosexual liaisons over time, is called a "transitional" bisexual, according to California psychiatrist Fred Klein.

Another type of bisexual outlined by Dr. Klein in his book "The Bisexual Option" is the sequential bisexual. This person has a relationship with a person of one sex and when that ends, may choose a partner of another sex. The commitment to the relationship is equivalent.

A third type, the historical bisexual, is essentially homosexual or heterosexual but at some point in life has the alternative experience.

How do people develop their sexual partner choices? There is no conclusive answer. Some evidence suggests it's an effect of hormones. Another theory maintains people can relate to anyone but choose one sex or the other depending on how they are socialized or what they learn.

OTHERS CLAIM bisexuals have arrested emotional development. They "sit on the fence" because they are unable to make a commitment. Or because they are trying to be equally attached to a mother and a father figure.

Bisexuals may be gravitating toward a partner of the same sex from which they got the most warmth and comfort when they were growing up. Or they could try to repair old hurts by being accepted by a person of the same sex as the parent who once rejected them.

The timing of an affair with someone of the same sex can be revealing in understanding why it is happening. Is the man feeling particularly frightened because he is getting close to making a commitment to a woman now? Does that reawaken fears of being suffocated by his mother when he was a child?

IS HE feeling vulnerable because of stress at work, and therefore seeking to strengthen his masculinity by merging with a strong male figure? Having sex then becomes a way to solidify that merger and thereby strengthen his own ego.

Will your boyfriend eventually want just you? Time and self-examination will tell. He could be discovering something that feels "more right" to him even though it is painful now. In this case he may duck out of your relationship, or hold on until he works through his ambivalence.

Or he could be going through a stage, possibly even of experimentation — and just needs not to worry or feel guilty about it.

Can he ever change? Possibly. A few programs across the country (including at the Masters and Johnson Institute in St. Louis and the Payne Whitney Human Sexuality Program in New York) offer specialized programs which have been successful in helping some men who are greatly motivated to refocus their romantic and sexual attentions from men to women.

THERE ARE no rules on how you as an innocent bystander should react. You will have to decide whether you can tolerate his sexual confusion.

One group of partners — probably the least in numbers but the most relieved to know they are not alone — outwardly protest but inwardly condone that their partner likes both sexes. It makes them feel different or "modern." They might even get vicarious satisfaction about being desired by both men and women (or in Freudian terms, by both mother and father).

Some people find their spouse's bisexual leanings totally unacceptable and upsetting to their religious or moral values.

Others feel threatened personally, as if their partner's affair with someone of the same sex is the ultimate insult to their own attractiveness. They feel even more powerless than in the face of a heterosexual affair because they cannot possibly compete.

Take, for example, the dilemma of this woman who wrote to me from Missouri:

Q. "I'm 26 and very depressed. I recently got off work early and discovered my husband having sex in my own home — with another man. I have not talked about it with him because I do not know how to handle the situation. I am disgusted by the whole thing and his sick behavior.

"I'm a beautiful woman with a lovely figure, but how do I fight off a man? We've been having sexual problems for a long while. He wanted lovemaking to be short and in a certain position I didn't like. And he hasn't been able to finish the act while inside me."

A. You are entitled to your upset. It has been a double shock: first, that your husband is sleeping with someone else; second, that it's someone of the same sex.

It is crucial that you do not ignore this but rather talk together about the needs and fantasies that led him to his choice. Figure out where he is on the sexual identity continuum so you know where you stand in your marriage now and for the future.

Realize that your attractiveness has nothing to do with it. You did not cause it and you cannot stop it.

Your sexual problems together were a clue of his other interests and desires. It's important to heed these signs.

Some couples can preserve their relationship even when it goes as far as in your case. They may share acting out fantasies about being different sexes.

BE CAREFUL not to condemn him. He may already feel guilt and self-hate. But do talk about your anger, disappointment and fear of losing one another.

Seek specialized marital counseling. Your husband could use professional help to clarify his lifestyle choice. His withdrawal from sex can mean he is withdrawing from women. In this case, little can be done unless he wants to change it. Or it can be the result of his guilt and distance from you. In that case, more sharing, new trust and sex therapy techniques can help.

Confront whether or not you are willing to lead an alternative lifestyle or a non-traditional marriage. Recognize the realistic difficulties you may encounter in society.

If you cannot accept your partner's struggle, if it does not serve you in any way, and if you want more commitment, consider why you would stay in this relationship.

IF YOU are willing to be with your man regardless of where he may ultimately go, accept him unconditionally. Offer continued reassurance of your loyalty. That makes it more likely he will stay with you — if he stays with any woman.

— Discuss how you both feel about infidelity, regardless of which sex person it is with. Make new agreements about your relationship.

— Spend time together enjoying each other sensually. Explore and share fantasies you may have kept hidden, or feared, before.

— Whatever you do, don't insist on meeting his lovers, ignore his conflict or expect him to exclusively want you to prove his love.

It is possible that your partner can choose you, but only if he accepts himself first.

Observers differ over extent, effects of sex in advertising

Copley News Service

The Lancome skin creme advertisement shows a beautiful woman in bed, seemingly in the throes of sexual ecstasy.

A Calvin Klein ad pictures a couple in the grips of torrid, passionate lovemaking.

A woman in a Canadian Club whiskey ad looks calculatingly seductive. "Be a part of it," reads the ad's catch line.

The subject is sex in advertising and, while two observers of the advertising industry differ on the extent to which explicit sexual images of women are used to sell everything from tires to toilet tissue, they both agree that the problem is slowly improving.

Advertising agencies are beginning to realize that "women don't respond to advertisements that go from the romantic, sexy and erotic over the line into what is really pornographic," said Patricia Carbine, publisher and editor in chief of Ms. magazine.

"I've always believed that advertising that people like and respond to positively is going to sell better than advertising that offends or insults their intelligence — including advertising that exploits the bodies of both men and women," added John O'Toole, chairman of Foote, Cone and Belding Communications Inc., whose clients include Levi's, Chlorox, Arco and Mazda.

WHILE CRITICIZING some print advertisements — most from the fashion industry — that use female images "to embrace sexual violence and pseudoviolence," Carbine singled out Calvin Klein jean ads as the "most deeply disturbing and distressing."

"The models in these ads are usually extremely young girls. The implicit message is that if you can't exploit older women, the next thing to turn into sex objects are teens," she said. "It's irresponsible."

FDA may ban 'aphrodisiacs'

WASHINGTON (AP) — There's no such thing as a love potion, the Food and Drug Administration says — at least not one that's safe, effective and available without a prescription.

So the agency is proposing a ban on over-the-counter aphrodisiacs.

The FDA issued a formal notice this week that it is tentatively adopting the conclusions of an advisory board that has been studying non-prescription drugs that claim to arouse sexual desire.

That move was a preparatory step to issuing a regulation banning such drugs.

The ban would not take effect until six months after a final regulation is published. But presuming that the final regulation also confirms that aphrodisiacs are ineffective and misbranded, non-prescription drugs claiming to arouse desire would be regarded as unapproved new drugs, the FDA said.

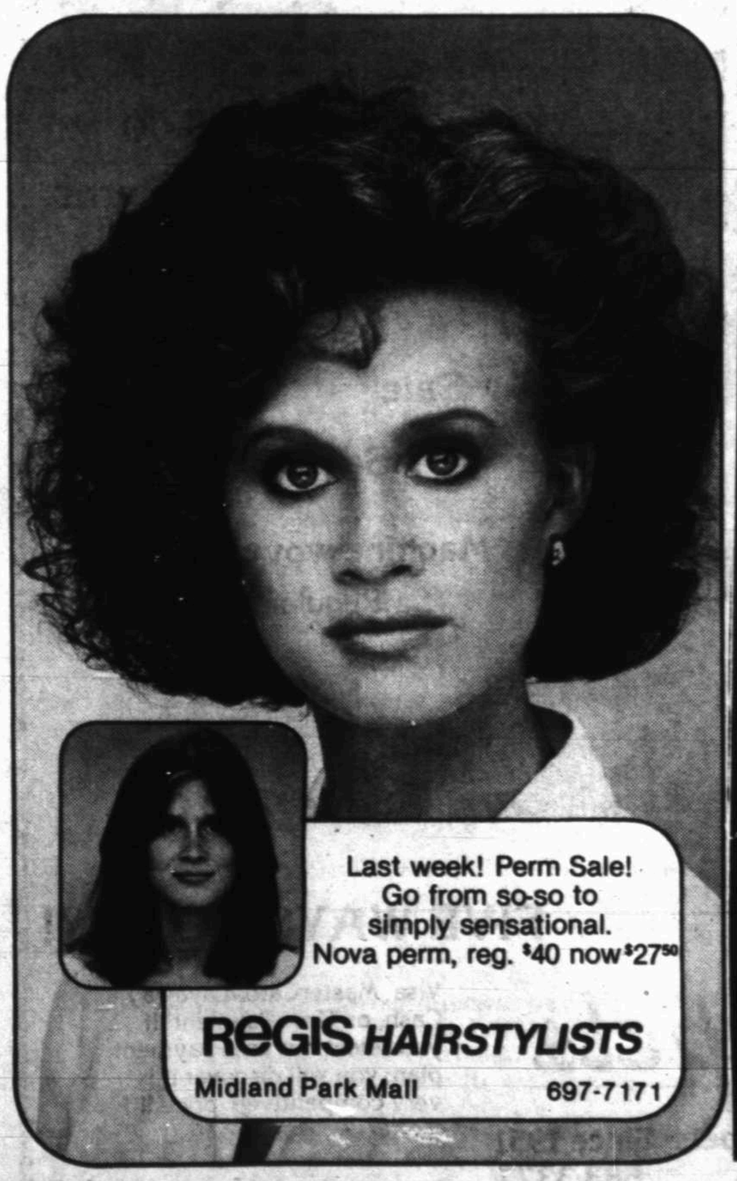

Of the non-prescription drugs available, the panel said, there is no conclusive scientific evidence that any are safe or effective, even among products that have been used historically as aphrodisiacs.

The agency said its advisory committee concluded that people experiencing sexual problems should seek professional help, not attempt to medicate themselves.

In addition, the panel said, serious health risks are associated with some substances, such as "Spanish fly," a drug called a cantharide which is prepared from ground-up beetles.

Male sex hormones do have a proven influence on sexual arousal and performance, the committee said, but they also have potentially serious side effects and must be used under a doctor's supervision.

The FDA noted that the panel's conclusions dealt only with drugs, not with vitamins and minerals that claim to have aphrodisiac qualities.

Sex experts disagree with survey results

CHICAGO (AP) — Ann Landers' sampling of American women that showed most would forgo sex for a tender touch is misleading and threatens to take us "back into the Victorian age," some sex experts say.

"Indeed, women are interested in sex and they have sexual desires," said Jim Petersen, who writes the Playboy Advisor for Chicago-based Playboy magazine.

Petersen's remarks came in response to Miss Landers' Tuesday column that said 72 percent of more than 90,000 women said they would be content to be held and cuddled and skip sexual intercourse. Of those, 40 percent were under 40 years of age.

These results, Petersen said, "don't say anything. What is going to be dangerous is that's going to give (people) permission to be boring, and just roll over in bed and go to sleep.

"That's unfortunate. Lust is an honorable condition. Sex is a wonderful pastime."

Dr. Ruth Westheimer, a New York sex therapist, said Tuesday that the implications of this sampling could "get us back into the Victorian age."

"It's dangerous to say a high percentage of women do not expect sexual activity but expect only caressing," she said in a telephone interview from New York. "Caressing has to be a part of the sexual experience."

Miss Landers' syndicated column came several weeks after she asked her 70 million readers worldwide to respond to one question: "Would you be content to be held close and treated tenderly, and forget about 'the act?' Answer YES or NO and please add one sentence: I am over (or under) 40 years of age."

More than 90,000 responded — the second-highest volume of response Miss Landers said she has received to a column.

While the majority said yes, of those who responded no, many "said they needed the sexual climax to relieve physical tension," Miss Landers said in her column. "Almost as many said they wanted the ultimate in gratification — that anything less would make them feel exploited and used."

Although some sex experts said they weren't surprised by the findings, they were critical of the question, saying it presents an either-or situation and does not establish any time context.

"I think the question is phrased badly," Ms. Westheimer said. "What does it mean? Sometimes? Ever?

Toni Grant, a nationally syndicated radio psychologist based in Los Angeles, also said the problem with Miss Landers' findings is one of "specificity."

"I seriously doubt that 72 percent of all women would be happy without sex, which is somehow what this concludes," she said.

Study: Sexual preferences vary

NEW YORK (AP) — There is no such thing as "normal" sex, just different preferences, according to researchers who conducted a national survey showing American men and women fall into eight sexual behavior styles.

"The questions that cross everybody's minds are 'Am I normal?' and 'How do I measure up to everybody else?'" said Dr. Carol Flax, a sex researcher with Columbia and New York universities who designed the survey questions.

The study, conducted for Parade magazine by Mark Clements Research Inc., was based on questionnaires completed by 1,222 randomly selected married, single and divorced men and women between 18 and 60 years old.

"If you're looking for a central normalcy, it doesn't exist," Earl Ubell, Parade's health editor, said Wednesday. "Although they are often treated as a different species sexually, there are more similarities than differences between women and men."

The researchers said eroticism — enjoyment of fantasy, pornography, oral sex, masturbation and certain other sexual practices — was an area where women and men differed most. Sixty-eight percent of the men were rated high in eroticism, compared with 44 percent of the women.

Eighty-six percent of the women and 59 percent of the men said they found it difficult to have sex with a partner they did not love.

Based on their answers to questions about how satisfied they were with their lives, what sensual behavior — "petting" and other touching — aroused them and eroticism, the participants were divided into eight categories:

—"The pansexual," ranked high in life satisfaction, sensuality and eroticism; 19.8 percent of the population.

—"The satisfied erotic," high in life satisfaction and eroticism but low in sensuality; 11.7 percent.

—"The unsatisfied erotic," high in sensuality and eroticism but low in life satisfaction; 12.7 percent.

—"The lonely erotic," high in eroticism but low in life satisfaction and sensuality; 12.1 percent.

—"The satisfied sensualist," ranked high in life satisfaction and sensuality but low in eroticism; 10.9 percent.

—"The unsatisfied sensualist," ranked high in sensuality but low in life satisfaction; 8.5 percent.

—"The sexually conservative," high in life satisfaction but low in sensuality and eroticism; 11.1 percent.

—"The nonsexual," low in all three categories; 18.2 percent.

Planting roots

Text by David Lee Forrest

While Arbor Day — the third Friday in January — was first celebrated in 1872 and only became official in Texas in 1949, its roots extend deep into the past.

"In ancient times, the people of Palestine celebrated Tu B'Shebat by planting a cedar sapling for a male child born in that year, and a cypress sapling for a girl child," according to the World Book encyclopedia.

Tu B'Shebat, the New Year Festival of the Trees, is the 15th day of the Hebrew month of Shebat — falling on Feb. 6 this year — and is still celebrated by Israeli children, who plant trees on the holiday.

The Aztec Indians of ancient Mexico also planted a tree following the birth of a child and named it after the infant, according to "All About American Holidays" by Maymie R. Krythe.

Arbor Day in America was linked to the birth of a state. The day was founded by J. Sterling Morton, who moved to a treeless section of the Nebraska Territory in 1854.

In that same year, Morton founded Nebraska's first newspaper, the Nebraska Palladium and Platte River Advocate, and wrote articles promoting forestry and conservation.

After Nebraska became a state, Morton became a state commissioner of agriculture and persuaded the state legislature to proclaim April 10, 1872, the first Arbor Day. More than a million trees were planted in Nebraska on that one day, according to "Celebrations" by Robert J. Meyers.

When settlement first began in Nebraska, according to the World Book Encyclopedia, only 3 percent of its land was covered with trees — primarily just along river banks — and there were no real forests. The state now has two completely man-made national forests.

Morton went on to become Secretary of Agriculture under President Grover Cleveland where he promoted Arbor Day on a nationwide basis, saying in 1894, "So every man, woman and child, who plants trees shall be able to say ... 'If you seek my monument, look around you!'"

The first Texas Arbor Day celebration was in Temple in 1889, but the legislature didn't designate the third Friday in January as Texas Arbor Day until 1949, resolving that the day "be devoted to the planting and cultivation of forest, shade and ornamental trees throughout the state and that it should be observed for that purpose in the manner deemed best by the people of each community," according to the Texas Agricultural Extension Service.

In the spirit of Arbor Day, the Midland Chamber of Commerce Visual Improvement Project has sponsored several events in recent years.

Some VIP projects have included low-cost tree sales and planting trees along Wall Street, Scharbauer Drive, LaForce Boulevard at Midland Regional Air Terminal and in Hogan Park.

"It's improved the appearance of those thoroughfares considerably," said Grant Billingsley, chamber executive vice president. "It's been a good program over the years but its relatively inactive right now."

...so lovely as a tree...

"Trees are as important to Texans as football and homemade ice cream." — Neil Sperry, Texas gardening expert and author.

The trees man has planted in the Permian Basin in the last century have not only given the naturally barren area attractive greenery but also may have made the local climate milder.

"Trees sometimes are referred to as nature's air conditioners," William C. Welch, landscape horticulturalist with Texas A&M University said in a telephone interview with the Reporter-Telegram. "They moderate the climate by protecting from extremes in wind, heat, cold and drought."

Handling root system critical when planting trees

The traditional way of celebrating Arbor Day is to plant a tree. These tree planting guidelines are compiled from publications of the Texas Agricultural Extension Service:

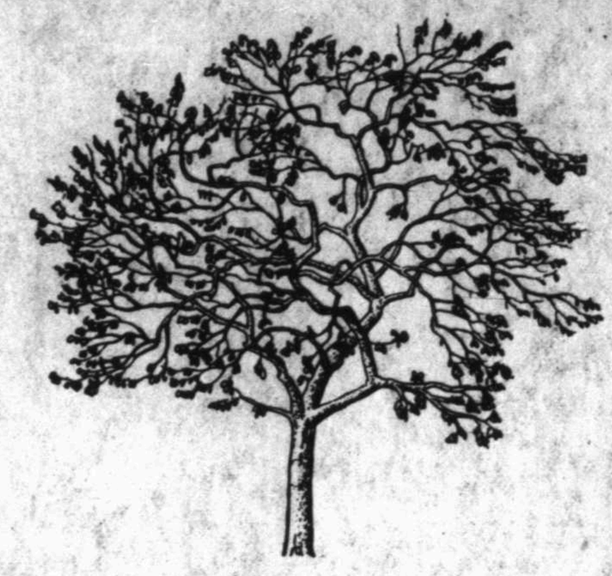

— Trees grown in containers are preferable to transplanted trees because container plants have intact, undisturbed root systems.

— The hole should be twice as wide as the root ball and the tree should be planted no deeper than the depth in which it was grown.

— If a container plant is root bound, the root ball should be soaked thoroughly and the roots should be loosened or even cut. Damaged roots should be trimmed.

— Topsoil taken from the hole should be mixed with an equal amount of organic matter. The tree should be carefully placed in the the hole, roots should be arranged to a natural position and the hole should be refilled with soil mixture. The tree's top should be pruned to compensate for damaged roots.

— The tree should be thoroughly watered immediately after planting to settle soil and keep roots moist. A root stimulator or starter should be applied. Frequent watering is important until the tree is well-established.

TREES

"Trees do raise humidity, lower air temperature and have a frictional effect on (slowing down) the wind," said Jim Yates, meteorologist in charge of National Weather Service at Midland Regional Air Terminal.

"I'm sure that it does have an effect inside the city," he said, "but only very locally. Outside of the city, if there's any effect at all, it would be minimal."

According to "Have You Thanked a Tree Today?" in the Midland County Agricultural Extension Service's "Horticultural Review," trees can affect the local environment in these ways:

— Trees' hairy leaf surfaces can trap and filter out dust particles in the air.

— Trees can lower air temperatures by using the sun's energy to evaporate water from the surface of their leaves.

— Trees increase humidity by releasing moisture from their stems, branches and leaves.

— Trees slow down forceful winds.

— Tree leaves break the onslaught of pelting raindrops on the ground and give the soil a chance to soak up as much water as possible.

— Trees provide food and shelter for birds and other animals.

— Trees help keep the air fresh by absorbing the carbon dioxide we exhale and industries create and then converting it into the oxygen we breathe.

— Each acre of young trees produces enough oxygen to keep 18 people alive.

January prime time for tree care chores

For the fortunate Midlanders who already have trees providing cool shade to lounge in during the hot summer months, cool January is the best time of the year for a number of tree care chores that may help ensure that shade will be around for many summers to come.

This list of tree care tips is from the Midland County Agricultural Extension Service's "Garden Checklist for January:"

— This is an excellent time to transplant established trees and shrubs because they are dormant. The later into the year that moving is delayed, the less time the plants' roots will have to become established again before hot weather.

— The top growth of established trees and shrubs should be pruned back before moving.

— This is a good time to shape and train deciduous trees, because one can easily see any damaged limbs, rubbing limbs or other problems while the trees are leafless.

— Fruit trees should be pruned this month. Apples should be thinned of all weak, non-productive growth. Peaches should be pruned to a fairly open center to allow sunlight to reach ripening fruit.

Two former Esquires, Kyle Trent Brooks, son of Mr. and Mrs. Floyd Brooks and currently a student at Texas Tech University, and Danny Caldwell, son of Mr. and Mrs. R.D. Pages for the event were Billy Merrit, son of Mr. and Mrs. William Merritt, and Lamont Hall, son of Iris Hall. Both are students at Anson-Jones Elementary School.

Chapter president Delores Mitchell greeted parents and guests. Christen Dillworth was responsible for the decorations and Betty Merritt was Esquire Ball chairperson.

Children often unsure about fire safety

According to Family Circle magazine, reseachers have found that when preschool children are caught in a fire, they know they are in danger but don't know what to do.

Some run under a bed or into a closet, trying, unsuccessfully, to escape.

Preschoolers especially process safety information in unpredictable ways and therefore must be warned of dangers in ways that are easy to understand but not frightening.

Parents must know how, as well as what, to teach children.

Suggestions include:

— First, teach children what fire means. Before he can understand "fire," a child must understand "hot," and that all hot things can burn or hurt. Repeat the word "hot" while pointing to boiling water, an iron, the stove and an actual fire. Use "if, then" sentences to explain the relationship: "If you touch this iron, then you will burn your hand." Keep sentences and language simple to avoid confusion.

— Be positive. Telling a child "Do not play with matches" presents two problems: The word "play" suggests something he might want to do, and the words "do not" arouse his curiosity. Instead use a positive approach: "Give any matches or lighters to Mommy or Daddy."

— Know when to yell. Although most parents tell children to "be quiet," youngsters must know when and how to scream in case of fire. Have them practice yelling "FIRE" and advise them to shout that word if they think there's an emergency.

— Use smoke alarms and teach children to react accordingly to their sounds.

— Reassure children that firefighters are friendly.

Emergency phone use taught to toddlers

Hearst News Service

Susan Ames, a home consultant for AT&T, says you can teach a child as young as 3 how to use a telephone in an emergency.

Ames says you begin by teaching the child to feel comfortable with the telephone, talking with daddy, grandma or friends. Then, taping down the switch hooks on the phone so you don't interrupt your service, teach the child how to dial "O" for operator and say "I need help."

The most important part of the lesson is to teach the child to stay on the phone, Ames says.

"Children are inclined to hang up immediately. You have to teach them to stay on the line. Operators are trained to deal with emergencies and will keep the child on the phone and try to calm them."

She says new technology allows the operator to see the calling number when a call is made. Knowing the number, the operator can find the address in a reverse directory and then alert the police or the fire department.

If the child is very young and does not know his ABC's, you can put a red dot or a piece of red masking tape beside the "O" for operator to help the child dial the right number or push the right button.

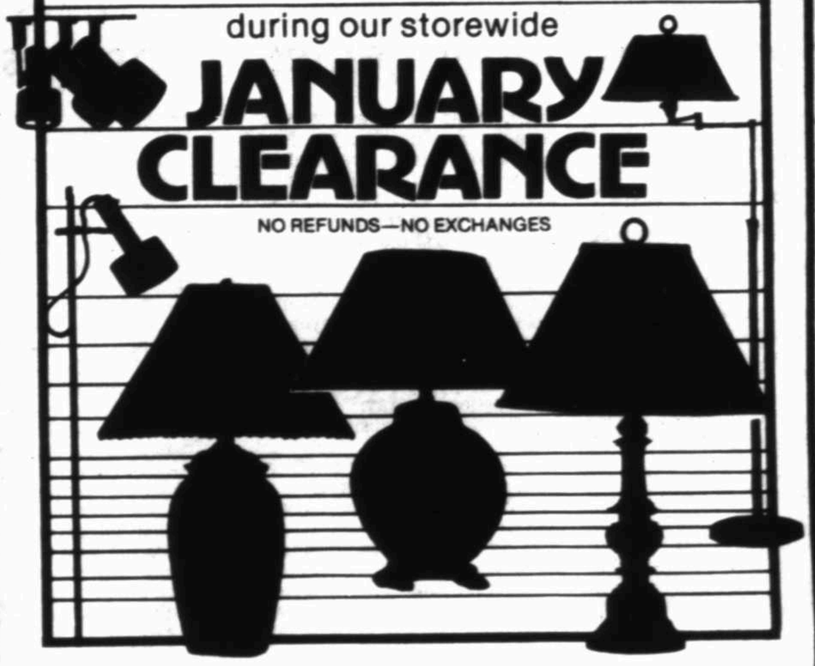

Once the child is old enough, you can teach him to use emergency numbers you have placed next to the phone. The red dot, however, is a good backup in case the child becomes flustered during the emergency.

She says you should reinforce the lesson every six months. Moreover, older children should be trained not to volunteer information such as "nobody's home but me" if someone calls.

"Tell them to say instead, 'Mother or Father can't come to the phone right now,'" she advises.

Other telephone tips she offers included always leaving word with babysitters where you can be reached and making certain before you leave that the sitter knows the location of all phones in the house as well as where your emergency numbers list is kept.

To cover children's emergencies away from home, make certain your child knows the home phone number. Tape it in coats, jackets, school lunch boxes and on an article your child is apt to have most of the time.

Dancer should take stock of job

By ADELE SCHEELE, Ph.D.

Q. A recent column of yours prompted me to write. I am currently a stockbroker and a professional jazz dancer with a company. I like doing both, but the dancing is beginning to interfere with my job, though the broker part of my day pays the bills.

I have always preferred dancing, choreographing and teaching. I have discussed this with the dance group's owner, who would love to have a fully salaried company in the next three years.

She asked me to become the company's business manager. I feel capable, but how do I learn to be an agent?

A. You have a great chance to learn how to marry your financial skill with your passion for the dance. Use your stockbroker's hat to find out.

Ask other brokers about their familiarity with management in the arts. Read the dance trade magazines. Talk to other dance companies and supporters for ideas. Also ask who acts as agents for them.

After you have a few names, interview each one. Work with and learn from them as you go. Learn how to make dance profitable. In the process you'll find answers to whether (1) it can work, (2) you can be involved solely in a manager's role. It's a search that will transform your separate halves.

Q. I am an environmental specialist in the U.S. Department of the Interior. Our jobs have been cut back by Reagan and will, no doubt, continue to be cut. I'm one of your "Sustainers" and I am frankly afraid to go for the private sector. What shall I do?

A. Become an established specialist in your profession. Create a task force or study of non-profit and for-profit environmental organizations and get to know everyone.

Attend advanced institutes or seminars in management. Consider starting a focus group of colleagues to discuss this very issue. Who knows — maybe you'll form a new business.

Q. I am 28 years old with a B.S. in chemistry. I am working for a non-technical company as a materials engineer and am also working on a M.S. in management.

How can I advance using my technical background with my present company?

A. First, are there technical positions in your non-technical company? And, is your company paying your tuition? If the answer is yes, then fine. If not, you must eventually find another company.

Use the opportunity that exists in graduate school. Establish good relationships with professors who often serve as consultants to industry and therefore have good contacts and leads. Use real case studies from existing technical companies to learn more about them.

You must demonstrate your new management skills also by talking about what you have done, what you are learning, and what you want to do. Nobody can tell just by looking!

Q. I am 50 years old and I have been in public relations for 13 years. I tried starting my own firm and had a lot of referrals but couldn't seem to obtain clients to sustain a business. So now I am working for someone else and I'm not very happy.

The owner goes out and signs business, and I'm the one who is servicing the clients and handling all the day-to-day emergencies. Why can I handle it all for someone else and can't seem to do it on my own?

A. Being No. 2 is not bad. Maybe you should re-think the value of getting clients versus serving them, and appreciate your work.

Or, get a copy of Henry Rogers' new book, "Rogers' Rules for Success." He's the No. 1 public relations expert, the founder of Rogers and Cowan, and his rise to the top may validate what you already do and don't want to do. Or it might well motivate you to start hustling.

He started with little money, not much experience, and a bad stammer; and now he represents Paul Newman, Sylvester Stallone, David Bowie, Paul McCartney, the Bee Gees, Ford Motor Co., Arco Petroleum, Texas Instruments and North American Philips — among others. You can learn a lot from him.

DEAR ABBY

'Thank-you' loses ground

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: What do you think of the enclosed thank-you note we just received for a wedding gift we sent to a couple?

As you can see, not only is it a form letter, it was made on a copy machine. The senders had left blanks in which they filled in the names of the givers and the kind of gift they had sent.

If we had not received this, we never would have believed that anyone would send such a "thank-you."

Please don't use any real names. — APPALLED

"Dear (Marty and Mary),

"Just a personal note to let you know how much we enjoyed your presence at our wedding and reception. You were who we most hoped would attend. We decided that your gift of (a pewter ashtray) was our favorite. What a coincidence that we were discussing just before the wedding how much we needed (a pewter ashtray).

"Sincerely, (Bride and Groom)

"P.S. Please don't show this note to anybody else."

DEAR APPALLED: I, too, am appalled. However, I doubt that this type of acknowledgment will ever catch on.

DEAR ABBY: Several months ago I mailed a birthday card with a generous check to my granddaughter. I heard nothing from her, but when she visited me at Christmas, I asked her in a nice, polite way if she had received my card and check. She said she had. Then I said, also in a nice, polite way, that I had half expected her to let me know that it had been received.

Then she said, "Oh, that's not done anymore! That old custom has faded away" — or words along that line.

I was flabbergasted. She is a smart girl, Phi Beta Kappa and a last-year medical student.

I am an old man, but I still have all my marbles (I think), and I cannot believe that the common courtesy of acknowledging a gift has "faded away" — at least not in our Western civilization. Or am I mistaken?

Also, what do you think my attitude should be regarding future gifts to this granddaughter? — GRANDPA

DEAR GRANDPA: Nothing has faded away — except perhaps your granddaughter's good manners. As for future gifts: When the resentment over an unacknowledged gift exceeds the pleasure of having given it, it's time to quit giving, Grandpa.

Author: Stress management improves work

Hearst News Service

Ronald G. Nathan, director of medical psychology at the Louisiana State University Medical School, is fond of quoting a Nebraska cardiologist's two rules of stress management: "Rule one is don't sweat the small stuff. Rule two is it's all small stuff."

With Edward A. Charlesworth, Nathan has written a book on the subject: "Stress Management: A Comprehensive Guide to Wellness." He also conducts stress management workshops for homemakers, police officers, nurses, lawyers, secretaries and dentists.

"We have worked with people who chronically complain about their jobs, constant interruptions and a feeling of always being behind," he said. "It is true that some jobs involve coping with many interruptions and putting out fires. We certainly don't recommend such a situation, but if your job entails dealing with constant interruptions, it is easier to deal with them if you consciously chose the job.

"One clear way to add stress to an already stressful job is to adopt the 'I have to' attitude. I remember one fellow who told me, 'If I don't look worried and walk fast, I'll lose my job.' But rushed thinking makes for errors and rigid thought."

Commonly, people muddle along in a job without knowing whether they're doing what they want and feel that their jobs are beyond their control, Nathan said. For people who frequently feel this way, he advised stepping back and assessing the situation this way:

— Write out a realistic job description.

— Become aware of your authority and responsibility.

— Write down all the duties you take on.

"Don't be surprised if the job is not what you originally contracted for," Nathan said. "Many people find they are actually doing the wrong tasks, tasks that are unimportant or not even part of their jobs."

With an accurate job description and list of duties, Nathan said, you are in a better position to decide if your job is really the one you want.

"If you choose your present job situation, use the job stress as an opportunity for self-improvement," he said.

Beyond relaxation exercises, a key to stress management is setting goals. Here, from his book, is Nathan's advice:

— Put your goals in writing.

— Goals must be better than your very best, but they must be believable. If you do not jog and set a goal to run a marathon in two weeks, you would not believe you could do it, and you would probably become frustrated and stop trying.

— Set short-term goals. It is very rewarding to have reached a goal. If you set only long-term goals, you will become discouraged.

— Goals should be set for all areas of your life. Set business and professional goals, but also goals related to family, physical health and spiritual growth.

— Set long-term goals and personal accomplishments. You should know what you want to be and what you want.

Talking to child not too enlightening

By ERMA BOMBECK

The more science breakthroughs I read about, the more depressed I get.

I don't know if you're ready for this one, but now they've discovered "baby talk" is more than babbling. Babies are really telling you something. The study said that some mothers not only inhibit their baby's attempts to communicate by talking to them in the wrong way, but they dominate the conversation.

This could explain why my kids only speak six words a year . . . none of them to me.

I was never good at baby talk. To cover my self-consciousness, I would bend over the baby and not only fire questions, but answer them as well. "So, whatya wanta do today? Wanta go bye-bye in the car? Well, don't we all, bunkie, but the battery is as dead as a doornail and your daddy took the car that runs and we're in for the laundry experience. How does that grab you?"

Like most mothers in the survey, I never shut up. I "held the floor too long" and didn't give my children time to respond, so they eventually gave up.

Had I waited, according to the study, I might have heard the child coo, smile or say Mama and Dada. You cannot imagine how rotten this makes me feel. Just look at all the magic moments I missed by talking too much. Why couldn't I have listened occasionally?

Is it too late? It's never too late.

I stopped by the bathroom door where my son was entombed and decided to make up for my past sins.

"I'm sorry," I said, "for all the times I've talked when I should have listened, but I never realized that in silence there is communication. If there's something you'd like to say, I'll be quiet.

"That's the trouble with people. They're afraid of silence. Me? I've learned to live with it. Heaven knows I've had a lot of practice living with your father. That man wouldn't say mush if he had a mouthful of it. Anytime you want to respond, just know I'm listening here on the other side of the door.

"We've so much catching up to do. I want to know how you feel about life, the tax structure, broccoli. Is Mary Lou Retton overexposed? Has the Mafia taken over aerobics classes? Is MTV life-threatening? Mother is listening.

"It's funny, but in all these years we've had such a bond. I always seem to know what you're thinking . . . and I forgive you for it. You don't have to say anything and I know what is going on in your mind. That's the way it is with mother and child . . . .

"I'm going to be quiet now and not say a single word until you tell me what is on your mind."

After what seemed like hours, a voice emerged. "Are we out of toilet tissue?"

It's funny. At that moment, I had a feeling I hadn't missed a thing in all those years.

All-male lodges faced with declining membership

Hearst News Service

If The Honeymooners' Ralph Cramden were driving his bus today, he'd probably find fewer brothers down at the Racoon Lodge after work.

The fall from favor of all-male clubs is eroding membership in a number of real-life fraternal groups. Some sons are reluctant to follow their fathers into such groups as the Masons, Shrine, Odd Fellows, Elks, Moose and Eagles.

As a result, the good old boys fraternizing at the lodge hall are growing older. And unless they can attract younger members, some of the groups are in danger of closing their doors.

National lodge leaders point to several reasons for their thinning ranks. Among them:

— Lax of recruitment efforts.

— The coming of age of a generation of non-joiners.

— A troubled economy.

— The decline of downtown areas where many of the clubs are located.

Membership in the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks peaked in 1980 at 1,650,000. Since then, membership has slumped by some 36,000 Elks, to 1,613,647 today.

"We're not panicking as far as losses are conerned, but nevertheless, they are losses," said BPOE Grand Secretary Stanley F. Kocur from Elkdom's national headquarters in Chicago.

Kocur believes part of the reason for the decline was the until-recently slumping economy.

"The economic situation wasn't the greatest. We feel that when the crunch is on, such matters as lodge dues will go first."

But the Elks' shrinking ranks also may be a sign of the times and changing interests among younger men.

Membership in the Loyal Order of Moose also has declined, from a peak of 1,356,232 in 1981 to 1,311,915 in 1983.

"We showed rapid growth for 19 years through 1981. Then we had some decline in 1982 and 1983. Now we feel we're headed in the right direction," said Supreme Secretary Donald Ross.

Ireland: Wonderland of beauty, history, tradition

Ancient Irish family plans summer reunion for all its members, with all its different spellings

By MORRIS D. ROSENBERG
Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

WASHINGTON — The O'Dochartaighs are planning a family reunion in the Republic of Ireland and Northern Ireland next summer.

They expect it to be one of the biggest clan gatherings ever held on the "old sod," with official ceremonies, pageants, music, dancing, family visits and sightseeing in history-filled cities and the surrounding countryside.

There are hundreds of thousands of Dochartachs (and their relatives) around the world, so the sponsors of the celebration hope that upwards of 5,000 will attend between June 16 and July 10.

A majority of the visitors will come from the United States, where the largest group of Daughertys — perhaps 200,000 strong — now resides. About 17,000 of the clan remain in Ireland, and 7,300 live in Scotland.

For the Daughartys, O'Dougherties, Dockertys and Doritys — there are about 110 different spellings of the name, which means "people of the oak houses" — it will be almost like having two St. Patrick's Day celebrations in the same year.

Tourist boards of both Irelands are helping out with the planning; tour packages range from independent travel with only air transportation and reunion registration included to a fully escorted 10-day tour.

The 1985 O'Dochartaigh International Reunion is the brainchild of Jack Dougherty, a business executive in New Castle, Del., and reunion director; Patrick Dougherty, president of the O'Dochartaigh Family Research Association in Attica, Mich.; and Patrick L. Doherty, director of Inter-City Development in Londonderry, Northern Ireland.

Planning for the project began five years ago. Reunion director Dougherty says that he's optimistic about the turnout, noting that a few hundred Irish in Australia and New Zealand have already chartered a 747 for the trip, and that an inquiry was even received from China:

"I'm sure, as our forebears took their last look at those green shores, they left a big part of the soul in Ireland. Now is our time to return to Donegal and claim our roots and our heritage. ..."

Londonderry city officials have purchased a bank of computers and are setting up a genealogical research facility to assist clan members who want to look up their family trees. There will be no charge to reunion registrants (although success in tracing ancestors often depends on preliminary research and how much detailed information is fed into the computers).

McShea Travel of Gaithersburg and Rockville, Md., is the official tour packager-operator and the exclusive retailer for the reunion in the United States.

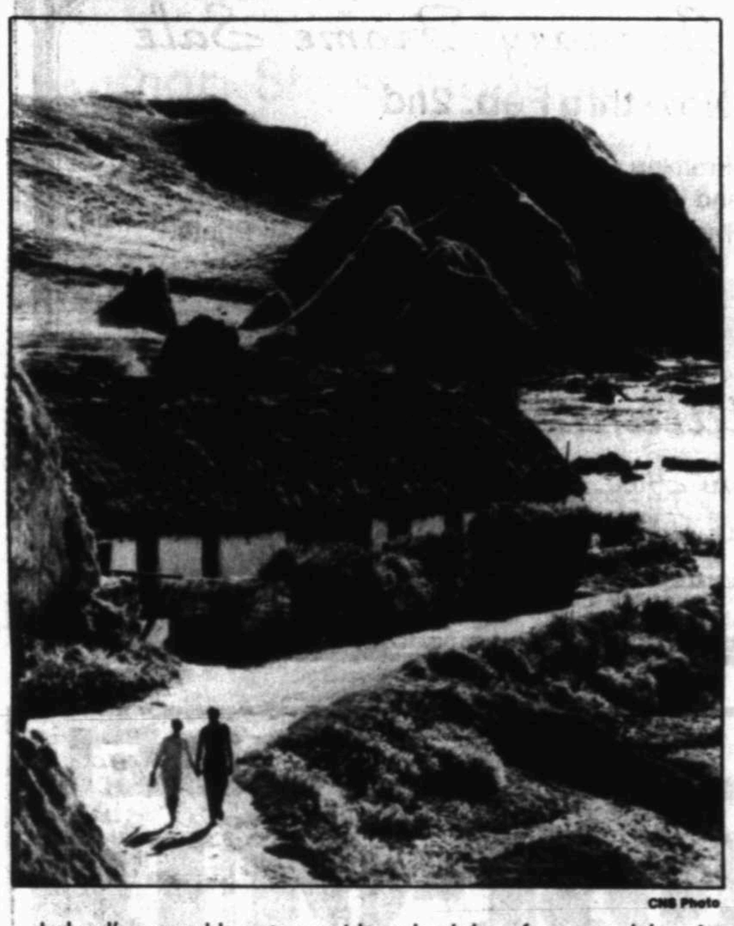

The agency offers four tours (all include round-trip air transportation from New York or Boston to Dublin, pre-planned reunion activities and registration).

'Untours' take vacationers away from it all

By JERRY HULSE
Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

About this time each year I can expect a telephone call from Hal Taussig, the ex-university professor turned tour operator.

Since he gave up the classroom in Pennsylvania his life has taken on new dimensions. Taussig packages what he describes as the Untour to Europe and Britain, a vacation that is a combination of counseling by Taussig and the do-it-yourself approach to travel.

The idea is to ensconce oneself in a chalet or apartment on the Continent or Britain and enjoy two or three weeks of leisurely travel without the constant frustration of packing and unpacking, moving on to a new destination every day or so. None of that business of bags outside the door by dawn and barely time to slurp down a cup of coffee before boarding a bus for another long, and often exhausting, day of touring.

Instead, Taussig's approach involves using one's chalet or apartment as a base, traveling by day (by rail, car or bus) and returning each evening.

THE LATEST NEWS from Taussig is that the whole scheme has taken off like the Concorde. Originally, he intended to keep the Untour small and intimate. But the word got around and from six travelers 10 years ago the idea spread to more than 1,300 travelers last year.

What's more, the prospects for '85 appear even greater. This concerns Taussig. He never wished to get rich. He intended to live the simple life. Do some traveling himself and bring joy to others. Now he is more intent than ever that the Untour program will retain the original premise of travel without all the usual fuss and hang-up.

Taussig contends that Americans don't really want to be herded about like sheep or cattle. Not those who seek his services, at any rate. They are searching for vacations that are relaxing, and this is exactly what he delivers.

The countries he has chosen are Switzerland, Germany, Austria and Britain. It was in Switzerland that he lined up half a dozen inexpensive chalets 10 years ago between Lucerne and Interlaken. These were rock-bottom rentals that have grown to number 75 today.

WHAT'S MORE, for the fifth consecutive year Taussig has lowered his prices. Accused of being a trifle soft in the head, he argues that money has little meaning to him. He enjoys counseling Americans who have lost track of the art of relaxing while traveling. Nothing more. His finest chalet in Switzerland figures out to roughly $14.50 per person per day, double occupancy. And if a family of six or seven shares the shelter the rate shrinks appreciably.

The Swiss chalets are hidden in Alpine settings that can be described only as picture-postcard perfect. One package offered this year ranges from $1,191 during the low season to a summer high of $1,399 and includes the round-trip air fare from Los Angeles, the chalet, a Swiss rail card, free trip advice and newsletters (tips on shopping, sightseeing and touring).

What's more, upon arrival in Zurich the travelers are met by Taussig or one of his representatives and sent off by rail to the village of their choice. From these home bases, vacationers can reach nearly every corner of the little country in a single day — and be at home in time for dinner.

IN THE BEGINNING Taussig concentrated on the villages of Hergiswil, Sarnen, Sachseln, Giswil, Lungern, Goldern, Meiringen, Reuti, Wasswerwendi and Hohfluh in the German-speaking area of Switzerland that takes in the Bernese Oberland. The program this year has been extended to French- and Italian-speaking cantons.

In one Swiss-Italian village four apartments are available on Lake Maggiore, a lifetime removed from the jet-set settlement of Locarno on the opposite shore. Taussig describes the village on the lake — apartments have their own private beach — as "totally untouristy."

From here Taussig's flock travels aboard a bus that makes more than 100 hairpin turns en route to a remote village that's described as a relic from the Middle Ages. Goats cling to the hillsides while shepherds who have never been off their mountain wave to visitors and the sky is such a smoldering blue it appears one can see forever.

Taussig or his representatives also greet travelers at airports in London, Frankfurt and Salzburg. During orientation sessions vacationers are taught to use the public transportation systems and are given maps and newsletters describing day trips. Also, for the meek, someone is available by telephone throughout their stay.

In Germany, vacationers settle in villages along the Rhine. One apartment built in the 1500s features a timbered facade and is crowded with antiques. Castles appear nearby and vineyards unfold for miles along the river. Rentals lie between Bingen-am-Rhein and Koblenz, providing easy access to excursion boats and castle country along the Rhine.

A DOZEN APARTMENTS are up for grabs in Austria, the cheapest figuring out to $280 per person (double occupancy) for three weeks. The Austrian villages lie in the Salzach River Valley barely 30 minutes by rail from Salzburg. Apartments on the Continent all feature kitchens, private baths, linens and laundry facilities and are totally separated from quarters occupied by the owners.

In Switzerland I spent a couple of memorable days in a chalet whose occupants lived one floor below. A stream flowed by the door, and there was a meadow with cows and a view of Alpine peaks, a glacier and magnificent waterfalls. It is a scene that remains etched in my memory to this very day.

Besides apartments, Taussig arranges for economical flights between the United States and Europe, using Swissair, Lufthansa, British Airways and Balair, a subsidiary of Swissair. In addition, the Untour people prepare the paper work for car rentals and rail passes.

From their bases in Switzerland, vacationers make excursions to a cheese-making village and folk festivals, and there are dinners with yodeling, folk dancing and an oompah band complete with an alpenhorn.

Train rides memorable

Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

If the idea of an old-fashioned train ride is appealing, several trips are on the books. Coming up is a six-day swing with Pacific Railroad Society to Colorado.

The train departs from Los Angeles' Union Station Feb. 15 and travels to Flagstaff and the Red Rock Indian country of Arizona and on into the southern Rocky Mountain range to Trinidad, Pueblo, Colorado Springs and Denver.

It returns via Salt Lake City, Reno, Oakland. The rate per person (double occupancy) is $480. Contact Pacific Railroad Society, P.O. Box 2858, Riverside, Calif. 92516-2858, or telephone (714) 684-7458.

Other rail buffs will be heading for New Orleans and the Mardis Gras from California aboard a coach built in 1927 for New York Central Railroad's 20th Century Ltd. It was previously used by New York Central's board of directors and sleeps eight.

This is an eight-day tour, $1,045 (includes rail travel, meals on the train, three nights at the Hyatt Regency in New Orleans). Details from Golden Spike Rail Tours, P.O. Box 3429, Fullerton, Calif. 92634, or telephone (714) 680-5090.

In Britain the world's oldest dining car has been elegantly restored for the Royal Scotsman luxury train. It features lavish buffets, six-course dinners, choice wines, 21-year-old Scotch, live music and waiters in kilts.

The dining car (circa 1891) will join an observation car built in 1892 and a day car that went into service in 1912, plus four other coaches.

A sightseeing motor coach accompanies the train for excursions to stately homes, castles, gardens. Contact your travel agent or Auto-Venture, 920 Logan Building, Seattle, Wash. 98101. Other details from Abercrombie & Kent, 1000 Oak Brook Road, Oak Brook, Ill. 60521.

On March 15, Classic Rail will sponsor a "jazz train" from Los Angeles to San Francisco with privately owned rail cars, a Dixieland band and fine dining with bone china, linen, fresh flowers. In San Francisco passengers transfer to the Holiday Inn at Fisherman's Wharf. Day tours of the Bay Area, including Alcatraz Island, are included in the price of $329. Contact Classic Rail, P.O. Box 2541, Orange, Calif. 92669, or telephone (714) 532-1380 or (714) 870-8641.

Disabled travelers advised to use advance planning

Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

"There's so many people in wheelchairs who think they've got to stay home," said Frances Barish, a paraplegic who has worked hard to let them know they don't.

"A wheelchair's got wheels on it, and it's meant to go places," said Barish, who wrote "A Guide for the Disabled Traveler (Frommer-Pasmantier Publishers, $10.95).

Today more and more disabled people are traveling as transportation, hotels and tourist attractions become more accessible to people in wheelchairs. The secret, say the most seasoned disabled travelers, is to start planning early for long trips and to arrange everything from airline tickets to sight-seeing well in advance.

The benefits are "tremendous," said Don Dryer, the director of the Nassau County, N.Y., Office for the Physically Disabled. "There's a tremendous feeling of liberation that you get if you're a disabled person who has not had an opportunity to travel," explained Dryer, who has a bone disorder that confines him to a wheelchair. "You gain a sense of self-confidence. I can roll up to that bar just like anybody else does, I can learn to dance in my wheelchair or play table tennis."

EXPERTS ADVISE disabled people who want to travel to find out everything they can about their destination before they go. How accessible are the hotels or motels? Is there accessible public transportation? Can people in wheelchairs get into tourist attractions?

Cities like Washington, D.C., Honolulu and Toronto are known to be well equipped for people in wheelchairs. Bermuda, on the other hand, is difficult, said Barish, because you have to climb down to the beaches. Efforts are being made to make old cities like London and Paris accessible to the handicapped, she said, but many of the old buildings have narrow entrances or steep stairs, which can make travel difficult.

This doesn't mean that disabled travelers should avoid these cities, but they should be aware of the problems before they leave. Barish advises travelers "not to expect everything to be perfect. I'm thinking of tourist sites that perhaps you won't be able to go into," she said. In Paris, for example, "You can go up the Eiffel Tower, but you won't be able to go up the Arc de Triomphe. You can go on river boats on the Seine, but you won't be able to go up to Napoleon's Tomb, which has 18 steps."

If a disabled traveler is planning a long trip, consulting a travel agent could save a lot of time and trouble, experts advise. Some travel agencies offer special services for disabled people. When working with a travel agent who does not specialize, travelers should be sure to give the agency very specific information about their disability and special needs.

A NUMBER OF resources are available to disabled travelers who are planning their own trips. The International Directory of Access Guides, which is available free from Rehabilitation International USA Inc., 20 W. 40th St. New York, N.Y. 10018, lists access guides for destinations all over the world. The Travel Information Center at Moss Rehabilitation Hospital, 12th Street and Tabor Road, Philadelphia, Pa. 19141, (215) 329-5715, provides information about accessible transportation, hotels and tourist attractions either over the phone or by mail.

One of the most important considerations in planning a trip is how to get there, which depends, in part, on the needs of the traveler. It's possible for handicapped people to use every means of transportation available, from cars to cruise ships.

Travel by car is a convenient way for the disabled person to travel, because it eliminates the need to rely on public transportation. Hertz, National and Avis all have available in many locations cars equipped with hand controls. However, it's necessary to order the cars 24 hours in advance at Avis and National and five days ahead at Hertz to ensure getting one in time for the trip.

AIRPLANE TRAVEL is fast and easy, but there are inconveniences. On most planes, disabled people will need help getting into their seats, not to mention getting to the bathroom. The new Boeing 767, currently being used on some routes by United, TWA and American, is one of the few planes that solve some of these problems. The plane is equipped with an on-board wheelchair, along with seats that have movable armrests and two bathrooms that can be made wheelchair-accessible.

When disabled people plan to travel by air, it's essential that reservations and arrangements be made in advance with airlines, says Barish. This will avoid last-minute problems regarding policies of airlines, some of which will not carry disabled people who are unaccompanied. Airlines will generally want to know the nature of the disability and whether the traveler has traveled alone before. Barish said she once encountered this problem on a flight to London and had to convince the airline that she was an independent, experienced traveler before they would let her on board.

Disabled travelers advised to use advance planning

Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

"There's so many people in wheelchairs who think they've got to stay home," said Frances Barish, a paraplegic who has worked hard to let them know they don't.

"A wheelchair's got wheels on it, and it's meant to go places," said Barish, who wrote "A Guide for the Disabled Traveler (Frommer-Pasmantier Publishers, $10.95).

Today more and more disabled people are traveling as transportation, hotels and tourist attractions become more accessible to people in wheelchairs. The secret, say the most seasoned disabled travelers, is to start planning early for long trips and to arrange everything from airline tickets to sight-seeing well in advance.

The benefits are "tremendous," said Don Dryer, the director of the Nassau County, N.Y., Office for the Physically Disabled. "There's a tremendous feeling of liberation that you get if you're a disabled person who has not had an opportunity to travel," explained Dryer, who has a bone disorder that confines him to a wheelchair. "You gain a sense of self-confidence. I can roll up to that bar just like anybody else does, I can learn to dance in my wheelchair or play table tennis."

EXPERTS ADVISE disabled people who want to travel to find out everything they can about their destination before they go. How accessible are the hotels or motels? Is there accessible public transportation? Can people in wheelchairs get into tourist attractions?

Cities like Washington, D.C., Honolulu and Toronto are known to be well equipped for people in wheelchairs. Bermuda, on the other hand, is difficult, said Barish, because you have to climb down to the beaches. Efforts are being made to make old cities like London and Paris accessible to the handicapped, she said, but many of the old buildings have narrow entrances or steep stairs, which can make travel difficult.

This doesn't mean that disabled travelers should avoid these cities, but they should be aware of the problems before they leave. Barish advises travelers "not to expect everything to be perfect. I'm thinking of tourist sites that perhaps you won't be able to go into," she said. In Paris, for example, "You can go up the Eiffel Tower, but you won't be able to go up the Arc de Triomphe. You can go on river boats on the Seine, but you won't be able to go up to Napoleon's Tomb, which has 18 steps."

If a disabled traveler is planning a long trip, consulting a travel agent could save a lot of time and trouble, experts advise. Some travel agencies offer special services for disabled people. When working with a travel agent who does not specialize, travelers should be sure to give the agency very specific information about their disability and special needs.

A NUMBER OF resources are available to disabled travelers who are planning their own trips. The International Directory of Access Guides, which is available free from Rehabilitation International USA Inc., 20 W. 40th St. New York, N.Y. 10018, lists access guides for destinations all over the world. The Travel Information Center at Moss Rehabilitation Hospital, 12th Street and Tabor Road, Philadelphia, Pa. 19141, (215) 329-5715, provides information about accessible transportation, hotels and tourist attractions either over the phone or by mail.

One of the most important considerations in planning a trip is how to get there, which depends, in part, on the needs of the traveler. It's possible for handicapped people to use every means of transportation available, from cars to cruise ships.

Travel by car is a convenient way for the disabled person to travel, because it eliminates the need to rely on public transportation. Hertz, National and Avis all have available in many locations cars equipped with hand controls. However, it's necessary to order the cars 24 hours in advance at Avis and National and five days ahead at Hertz to ensure getting one in time for the trip.

AIRPLANE TRAVEL is fast and easy, but there are inconveniences. On most planes, disabled people will need help getting into their seats, not to mention getting to the bathroom. The new Boeing 767, currently being used on some routes by United, TWA and American, is one of the few planes that solve some of these problems. The plane is equipped with an on-board wheelchair, along with seats that have movable armrests and two bathrooms that can be made wheelchair-accessible.

When disabled people plan to travel by air, it's essential that reservations and arrangements be made in advance with airlines, says Barish. This will avoid last-minute problems regarding policies of airlines, some of which will not carry disabled people who are unaccompanied. Airlines will generally want to know the nature of the disability and whether the traveler has traveled alone before. Barish said she once encountered this problem on a flight to London and had to convince the airline that she was an independent, experienced traveler before they would let her on board.

Scuba divers, snorkelers enjoy new underwater park

Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

One of the Caribbean's newer tourist attractions, Curacao Underwater Park, has completed its first year of operation.

Extending for about 12 miles along the Dutch island's south coast, it has been popular both with scuba divers and other visitors, who can view coral-reef life by snorkeling or from glass-bottom boats.

Curacao, largest of the Netherlands Antilles, lies 35 miles off the coast of Venezuela. The 1,500-acre park, funded in part by the World Wildlife Fund, was planned to protect the reef's ecology while making it more available to the public.

The park begins just beyond the Princess Beach Hotel on the outskirts of the capital, Willemstad, with an underwater nature trail that uses concrete markers on the shallow ocean floor to guide snorkelers and identify the different types of coral, plant life and fish. The trail runs 975 feet.

Each Saturday from Feb. 2 until May 25, the Travel Committee, a local tour operator, will offer one-week charter packages to the island, including hotel accommodations and round-trip non-stop flights on ALM Airlines from Baltimore International Airport. Prices start at $369 (plus 15 percent for service charges and tax) and vary according to travel dates and hotel selection.

ELBA

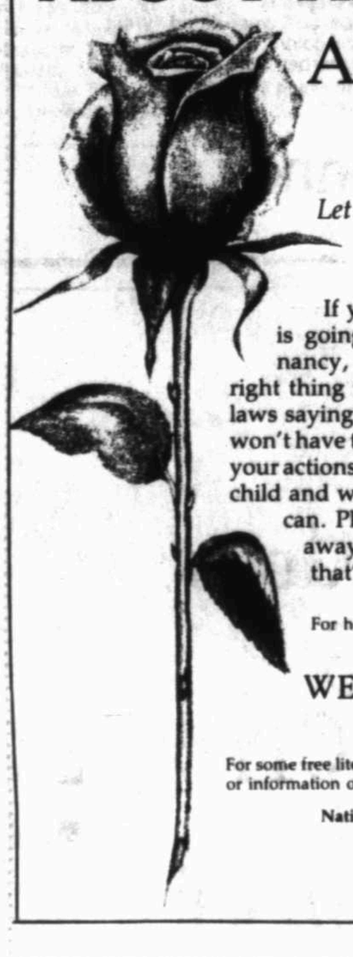

Virgil called Elba "the generous island." It was Napolean's home prior to his famous "100 days". For travelers in search of tranquility rather than frenzy, it has replaced Capri as the island of choice. Simple, primitive and unspoiled, Elba is an island of glorious mountains, shimmering olive-toned landscape and breathtaking beaches. It also has but eight small towns, a dozen small villages and a scattering of hamlets on this 30 mile home of 37,000 people. Health addicts can partake of the therapeutic mud baths at the Terme of San Giovanni. For the panorama of a lifetime, take the rope-railway ("cabinovia") from Marciana to the 3400 foot peak of Monte Capanne.

With a little planning every vacation can be a "healthy and relaxing" experience. The assistance of a professional travel agent allows you to do even less planning than usual. Tax laws take free ride from company automobile

By JAMES STERNGOLD
N.Y. Times News Service

NEW YORK — The company car is no longer a free ride. Since the beginning of the year, new tax laws have severely crimped both the large deductions that companies customarily claimed for their cars and the liberal personal use employees made of them. All this has spurred a wave of grumbling.

"I know a lot of people who are just hoping there will be an uprising so this will change; it is just terrible," said Wheeler Chapman, a partner in Medical Business Consultants Inc. of Wheeling, Ill., which advises doctors on taxes.

The changes could particularly affect professionals and sole proprietors of a business. Before, they often took deductions on part of the cost of a personal car as a business expense. But the new laws issued by the Internal Revenue Service two weeks ago will make these deductions far more difficult to justify.

The new laws maintain old requirements that personal use of company-owned cars be counted as compensation and taxed, or that the employee pay for this use. Now, there are strict guidelines on determining this value. Under the new laws, commuting with a company car is now considered a personal rather than business use, and valued at $4 a day.

The changes restrict the previously unlimited investment tax credits and depreciation that the companies can claim each year, making it significantly more expensive to own luxury cars. And unless more than 50 percent of the car's use is for qualified business purposes, many benefits are lost.

But the new rule that strikes many as particularly onerous is a record-keeping requirement. Each business use of the vehicle must be meticulously documented, noting time, distance of the trip and purpose — and the records must be contemporaneous. Tax preparers are not allowed to sign a tax return unless they receive written confirmation that such records have been kept.

Some express concern that in its zeal to end abuses, Congress may have harmed legitimate users of company cars.

"I think it's an infringement on my constitutional freedoms," fumed Robert L. McKeever 3d, a contractor in Gaithersburg, Md. His company, which installs underground utility cables, owns four pickup trucks that operate like mobile warehouses, packed with equipment and supplies.

Employees drive them home at night and to the job in the morning, but rarely drive them otherwise. With the new rule calling commuting personal use, McKeever said his company was in jeopardy of losing many of its tax benefits.

But what really irks McKeever, and many others, is the thought that they have to account for their movements in the company vehicle if they are to qualify for any benefits.

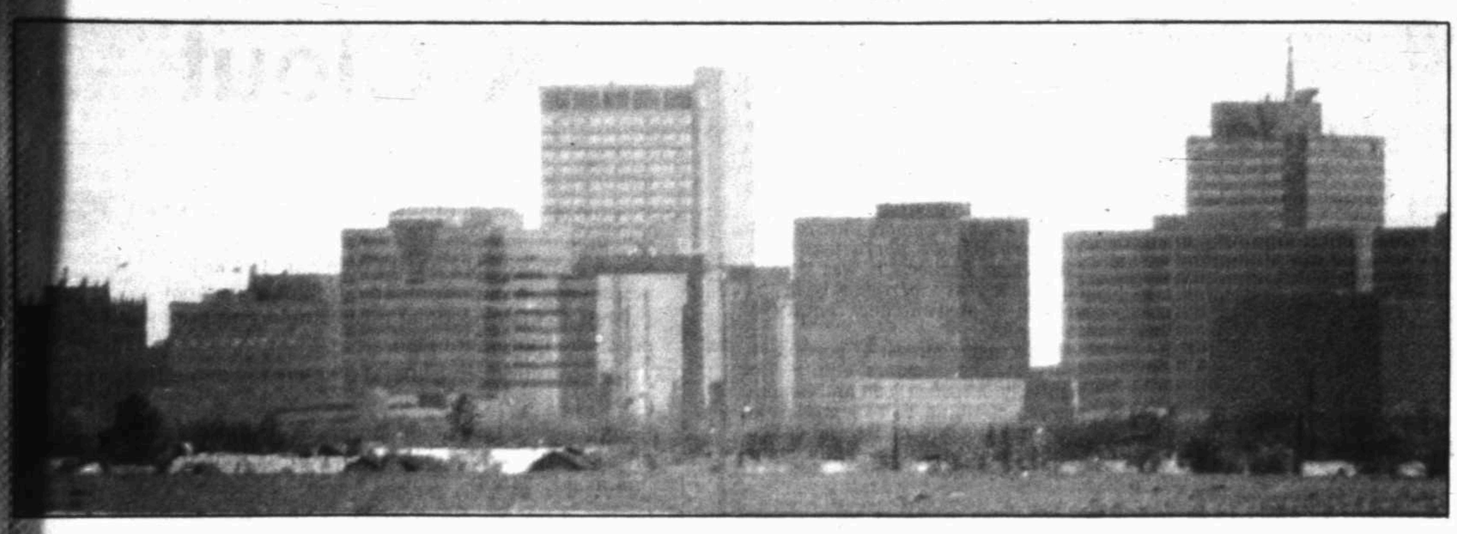

"It's a terrible thing to say, but this is a Big Brother move," he said.

"It's just another burden that the paper shufflers in Washington have placed on us," complained James Hubbard, proprietor of Hubbard Enterprises of Southwest Virgina Inc., a coal dealer in Wise, Va., which owns three cars.

Many large corporations have yet to adjust to the new rules. The American Telephone and Telegraph Co., whose Information Systems unit alone owns 22,000 vehicles, is still considering how it will respond, according to Richard Gray, a spokesman.

"In point of fact, many of the rules have always been in existence," said Howard J. Sample, a partner with Price Waterhouse, the accounting firm. "But in the real world, people rarely kept adequate records. It's a whole new ball game now.

"This is the law. People better get used to it."

As the Midland skyline expands so does the population and Midland's resistance to radical economic shifts.

New population levels plays role in smoother economic recovery

By JOHN PAUL PITTS
Business-Oil Editor

As a one industry town, Midland has been prone to some radical peaks and valleys in its economical history, but a new population level may be changing that.

One indication of that could be the rapid recovery of the Midland economy, which is coming on the heels of a boom period followed by a radical downturn, and without too much help from outside factors.

According to latest Chamber of Commerce indicators the Midland economy is on the upside in all categories except construction, which is still taking a beating as the result of overbuilding during the boom.

The picture is far from bright for construction. Chamber indicators reflect that new commercial permits and new commercial valuations were down about 67 percent, new residential permits and valuations were down over 40 percent. New residential permits were 409 at the end of November as compared to 684 at the same time last year, while new commercial permits stood at 66 in 1984 and 201 in 1983.

BUT SOME comfort can be taken even in the overbuilt condition. History shows that Midland has experienced exceptional growth in previous years, simply because the space was there when it was needed. An economic survey and forecast of Midland in 1982 reported that an abundance of existing office space may well have been the factor that made Midland the financial and administrative center for the Permian Basin oil industry in its initial development.

But aside from the negative showings of the construction industry, other indicators are up. Postal receipts are up almost 5 percent; airline boardings up over 7 percent, and bank deposits over 2 percent. The labor force is up almost 9 percent, with 11 percent more people employed this year than last, while the unemployment rolls have been slashed 35 percent. Telephone, utility and water connections were also up.

A Reporter-Telegram survey of retailers in December indicated that retail sales was also up among major retailers on an average of 15 percent. While there is still an overbuilt condition in single family homes, commercial and apartments, many apartment managers are reporting a higher percentage of occupancy.

ALL IN ALL, the indicators are showing a strong recovery for Midland's economy which now ranks asthe third fastest growing market area in the nation.
nation, according to Sales & Marketing Management magazine.

Postal receipts and airline boardings are indicaive of a higher degree of activity within the business community, while bank deposits and retail sales generally reflect confidence in an economy.

Why the strong recovery? Certainly the temporary stabilization of oil prices, increased activity prompted by lower drilling and completion costs, and the development of several massive enhanced oil recovery projects has played a dominant role in the recovery, but another theory that seems to merit acknowledgement is the Critical Mass theory. According to Midland Chamber of Commerce Executive Vice-President, Grant Billingsley, once a city reaches a critical mass of about 100,000 population, it is able to stimulate some internal growth and feed on itself without benefit of outside investment. This does not eliminate the, ups and downs in a city's economy but it does have a tendency to level out the peaks and valleys of an area economy.

Williams Co. to scale back on exploration

Clayton W. Williams Jr., owner and chief executive officer of Midland-based Williams Company, an oil and gas exploration and production company, has announced he is scaling back the exploration department of that company because of continuing softness in oil and gas prices.

Williams said layoffs in the company's Midland, San Antonio, Jackson, Miss.,Tulsa, Okla., and Denver offices would affect approximately 30 employees. Fivepeople were laid off in Midland. Williams said the layoffs were confined to Williams Company's exploration department and would have no affect on other companies owned by Williams such as Clajon Gas Co., the ClayDesta companies and Williams' ranching operations.

Williams said the layoff involved only 4 percent of the 800-plus people employed throughout his companies. As a result of the scale back, Williams Co. will have reduced its staff to 145 employees.

Williams is also considering the sale of some Williams Co. oil and gas production in an effort to continue his current diversification strategy.

Williams explained that many of the affected employees are being transferred to his expanding long distance communications company, Claydests Communications, which has grown to employ 110 people and is continuing to expandwith the construction of its new digital microwave network.

Let IRS help with taxes

EDITOR'S NOTE: This last article in a series of five on preparing 1984 income tax returns gives information on calculations and credits.

By JIM LUTHER
AP Tax Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — If you don't trust yourself to figure out how much tax you owe, let the Internal Revenue Service do it.

The IRS will do just that — if you complete the preliminary work and your income after adjustments is $50,000 or less. If you had too much tax withheld in 1984, the IRS will send you a refund; if you still owe, the agency will send you a bill and charge no interest or penalty if it is paid within 30 days or by April 15, whichever is later.

The agency will not do the calculation if you itemize deductions or use income averaging. In addition, all your income must have been from wages, tips, interest, dividends or pensions. And the return must be filed by the April 15 deadline.

Filers of Form 1040A who want the IRS to figure the bottom line must first fill in any of Lines 1 through 19, 21a, 21b and 24a that apply and Schedule 1 if that is used. Filers of the long Form 1040 must fill in any applicable Lines 1 through 37 and 41 through 64 and any separate forms or schedules.

Oil industry gathers fodder for tax fight

Opposition to a tax proposal that would eliminate percentage depletion and intangible drilling costs continues to grow, as the oil industry braces for another major fight, not unlike the days of Jimmy Carter.

Locally the Permian Basin Petroleum Association has availed itself of the services of John Guffy Advertising of Odessa to launch a campaign pointing out the importance of tax incentives to the independent oilman and the Permian Basin economy.

A choice bit of ammunition the association hopes to use is a direct quote from the Treasury Department Report to the President. The quote which recognizes the possibility of increased dependence on foreign oil and decreased domestic drilling and higher energy prices reads: "While these effects may occur and might be burdensome in the short run, the proposed reforms would be beneficial in the long run because the capital and labor released from the energy and minerals sector as a result of a more neutral tax policy would be employed more productively in other industries."

WHILE THE PLAN to drop intangibles and depletion have been termed a "proposal", PBPA has no intention of treating it as anything but a bill. The concensus was that all plugs and strings would have to be pulled to make sure the industry did not loose intangibles or depletions, including solicitation of other interest groups such as bankers, realtors, cattlemen and others to help in the fight against the tax proposal.

The cause was aided perhaps some this week when the chairman of the board of a major oil company took strong exception to the proposal. Robert O. Anderson, ARCO chairman, called the proposal "insane."

We also have it on good authority that Texas Governor, Mark White, plans to lead a "white" horse charge to Washington, against the tax proposal. The governor is expected to be joined in that protest charge by Oklahoma Governor, George Nigh.

Meanwhile, the Oklahoma-based National Association of Royalty Owners (NARO) has added to their ammunition fodder with a study, commissioned bythe organization and executed by the Ram Group of Oklahoma City. The study has shown that the tax proposal would have severe consequences on royalty owners throughout the nation and particularly to the 600,000 royalty owners in Texas. The study reports that tax increases of up to 200 percent could hit the rovalty owners, if the proposal is adapted.

THE PROBLEM IS that most Texas royalty owners would be unable to shift to the proposed cost depletion basis to compute taxes, since much land in the state has been held by family farm and ranch groups for several generations and has no determinable and computable cost basis.

"The proposal, which has yet to be endorsed by President Reagan, would cost royalty owners nationwide $112 million yearly, says the study. In Texas the loss of royalty income, primarly in rural areas, would amount to a bare-bone minimum of $30 million.

Additional anti-tax proposal ammunition in the report conducted by Mary Badgett, a Lubbock CPA, indicates that contrary Administration projections, the so-called Reagan proposal would increase taxes on minimal income royalty owners the hardest and afford only a small percentage of relief for royalty owners in the $100,000 yearly income.

Computed on stripper production of 10 barrels a day and a price of $28.50 per barrel, and comparing existing tax status with the proposed Reagan tax senario the study was able to produce the following examples:

A MARRIED COUPLE, both over 65 years of age, with $15,000 of oil royalty income would have a tax increase of 181.09 percent under the Treasury tax proposal.

The same couple with $25,000 in royalty income would have a tax increase of 68.78 percent, while $50,000 would give them a 20.25 percent increase. However, if they had $100,000 royalty income they would see a decrease of 4.21 percent in their taxes.

The bite would be even worse for natural gas royalty owners who would pay up to a 204 percent increase, since that commodity is not subject to the windfall profits tax.

From all appearances, most quarters of the industry are gearing for a major fight and rightly so. From most accounts the proposal would devastate nearly every independent oilman in the business who had to go out of house for drilling funds. Also, according to one source Reagan is expected to embrace the tax proposal in during his State of the Union address later this month.

The acquisition, which was effective Dec. 31, 1984, also includes the Exploration Graphics' trade name and isometric logo. The existing management and personnel will remain responsible for maintaining high quality standards in each data base area.

Nuke plant goes on hold

DALLAS (AP) — Federal regulators have handed the owners of Comanche Peak a "practical denial of a license," the strongest action they could take against a nuclear power plant under construction.

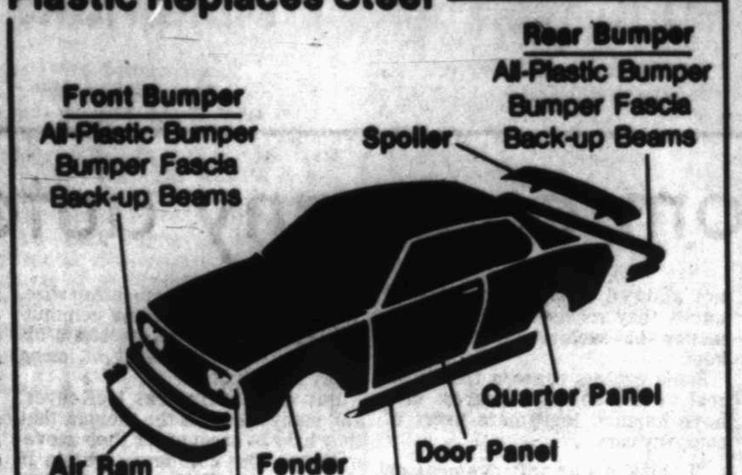

The move, made Thursday in Bethesda, Md., amounts to a multimillion-dollar penalty against the utility by delaying licensing of the plant for an indefinite period, officials said.

"What you have seen here today is the practical denial of a license," said Bob Martin, administrator of the Nuclear Regulatory Commission's Arlington office, which oversees Comanche Peak.

Martin said the finding of a special NRC task force investigation was the strongest action the agency could take against a nuclear power plant under construction.

Mike Spence, president of Texas Utilities Generating Co., pledged that the company would do everything it could to satisfy NRC concerns about the soundness of the plant and the firm's ability to manage it.

EPA to appeal standards

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Environmental Protection Agency, bowing to a court order, has adopted standards governing radioactive air pollution.

But the EPA said it still hopes to convince higher courts that the standards issued late Thursday aren't needed. Environmentalists, meanwhile, complained that they don't go far enough.

The action followed by about an hour the refusal of Supreme Court Justice William Rehnquist to interfere with the action of a San Francisco federal judge who in November cited the agency and its administrator for contempt of court.

Mexico conglomerate to begin interest payments

MONTERREY, Mexico (AP) — Alfa, Mexico's largest privately held company, has agreed to begin making interest payments for the first time in nearly three years on its $880 million foreign debt, the ailing industrial group announced Thursday.

Ernesto Canales, Alfa corporate attorney, said in a news release that company officials met in New York Wednesday with representatives of more than 60 banks and lending institutions to present terms for restructuring the holding company's debt.

The Alfa holding company and its subsidiaries — including the major steel company Hylsa, five petrochemical firms, the Titan paper and packaging company and the Casolar real estate and tourism company — owe a total of nearly $2.5 billion to foreign lenders, the majority in the United States.

Efforts to renegotiate the debt began in April 1982 when Alfa plunged into a severe economic crisis along with the rest of the country.

The crisis, brought on in part by falling oil prices in the world, high interest rates and a then-overvalued peso currency, has forced Mexico and many of its major corporations to seek debt restructuring.

Mexico's total private and public foreign debt is about $96 billion, the second largest in the developing world after Brazil's.

Alfa, which stopped paying interest on its foreign debt in April 1982, also owes about $280 million within Mexico.

TAE declares cash dividend

Texas American Energy Corp. has declared its regular quarterly cash dividend on the Company's $2.575 Cumulative Convertible Exchangeable Preferred Stock. The dividend will be paid February 1, 1985, to shareholders of record as of January 22, 1985. The payment will be $.64375 per share, according to William F. Judd, president of the energy-related company.

As previously reported, the conversion price for the Preferred Stock is $9.52 and each share of Preferred Stock is therefore exchangeable for 2.1 shares of Common Stock.

Western Bank reports record high income

Western Bank reported record-high net income of $1.49 million or $2.31 per share for the year ended December 31, 1984. The earnings represent returns of 1.69 percent on average assets, and 32.20 percent on average equity. Announcing the result was Bill Parker, President and Chief Executive Officer.

"We are extremely pleased with Western Bank's performance in 1984," said Parker. "It was truly a landmark year - particularly in the growth of shareholders' equity in the Bank."

Increasing almost 47 percent on the year, shareholders' equity substantially outpaced loan and deposit growth climbing to $4.6 million at year end. Deposits on December 31st totaled $88.7 million, while loans were 70.6 million.

TAX

In either case, if you are filing a joint return, indicate in the margin of the form under "adjustments to income" how much of the income listed is yours and how much is your spouse's. Attach a copy of Form W-2 and sign your return.

The IRS is willing to do these calculations because so many taxpayers copy down the wrong figure when they use the tax tables to see how much they owe.

The agency will also calculate two special tax breaks: the newly revised credit for the elderly and the permanently and totally disabled, and the earned-income credit for low-income working families with children.

If at the end of 1984 you were 65 or over or you were under 65 and retired as permanently and totally disabled, you may be able to avoid tax on part of your income. You will have to file Form 1040 plus a Schedule R to get the credit.

The earned-income credit can be worth as much as $500, even if you pay no taxes. The credit, aimed at keeping low-income families off the welfare rolls, is for those whose incomes are under $10,000. It may be claimed on either Form 1040 or 1040A.

You will have to do the calculations, but the child-care credit can provide a tax reduction of up to $1,440 to help offset the expense of having someone care for your children or a disabled adult while you work. The credit declines as income rises; the maximum is for those with incomes up to $10,000; income above $28,000 qualifies for a credit of up to $960.

To see if you qualify, get IRS Form 2441. Publication 503 gives full details on how to claim the credit and will also explain whether you have to pay Social Security taxes on the wages you pay someone for caring for your child.

WHEN GERMAN DRIVERS PICKED THE WORLD'S BEST CARS, THEY PREFERRED SWEDEN'S SAAB TO PORSCHE, BMW AND AUDI.

To tell you the truth, the Germans surprised us this year.

The readers of Auto Motor und Sport, Germany's leading auto magazine, vote for their favorite cars in several categories every year. This year again, they named the Saab Turbo as the "best imported car under 2.5 liters."

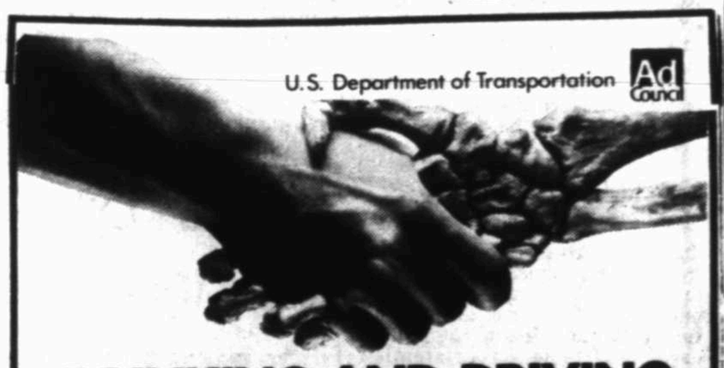

That didn't surprise us. We've now won that category for each of the last four years. We are pleased to have won again. We're honored by their choice. But we're not surprised.

What did surprise us was the voting for the best cars regardless of category. In that tally, German drivers preferred the Saab Turbo to such famous German performance cars as the Porsche 911, the BMW 318i and the Audi Turbo.

You know, maybe there really is some truth to those television commercials we've seen about how knowledgeable German drivers are. They sure seem to know our car. SAAB

BUSINESS NOTEBOOK

Board proposes that fire marshal be altered if insufficient funds

AUSTIN — State Board of Insurance, in its report to the 1985 Legislature, says the duties of the State Fire Marshal's office should be altered if there's not sufficient funding for the office to carry out those duties.

Among the duties assigned the office is the investigation of suspected arson cases unincorporated areas, and providing assistance in arson investigations tp volunteer and municipal firefighters.

But SBI notes the fire marshal has only 10 investigators to carry out those duties

The office also has primary responsibility for fire and safety inspections of buildings in unincorporated areas, a total of 106,986, according to SBI's most recent count.

That total, SBI notes, doesn't include 1,000 cities and towns which don't hae inspection personnel, nor other counties and cities which request assistance from the office's 11 inspectors.

The fire marshal also is required to make some 65,000 investigations and inspections to enforce various licensing statutes, including fire extinguisher companies, sprinkler companies and fire alarm companies.

And there also are inspections for fireworks distributors, manufacturers and jobbers--including more than 4,000 retail outlets.

SBI notes there's a dispartity between the duties set out and the personnel provided, and suggests that one or the other be changed.

Rep. Pete Patterson, D-Brookston, has introduced legislation providing for issuance of general obligation bonds to provide financing assistance for farm and ranch land purchases.

The program, which would require a constitutional amendment, would be administered by the Veterans Land Board.

HJR 19 and HB 196 would allow the Legislature to provide for issuance of the bonds, which would be limited to $500 million outstanding at any time, for the "Farm and Ranch Finance Program."

The proposed constitutional amendment is proposed to be voted on Nov. 5.

HB 196 sets out provisions for the program, including that land purchases be at least 50 acres, and that participants be U.S. citizens, Texas residents for at least five years, and members "of a household for not less than three years in which not less than 25 per cent of the household's gross income for the preceding year was derived from a farm or ranch."

Other provisions deal with appointment by a county judge of a local committee, made up of two "resident agricultural producers" and an officer of a financial institution, to pass on applicants' eligibility.

If the purchase price of the land is $100,000, the purchaser is to pay at least 5 percent of the purchase price

If the price is over $100,000, the purchaser is to pay the difference between the purchase price and $100,000, and 5 percent of $100,000.

Sen. John Leedom, R-Dallas, has introduced legislation expanding authority of the State Depository Board and State Treasury for investment of State funds.

The State board authorizes investments in "direct security repurchase agreements," and in "reverse security repurchase agreements," and expands authority of the board and Treasury to other investments permitted State boards and agencies.

Current statutory provisions provide for investment by the Treasury in the U.S. Treasury bills of up to 10 percent of the average balance of all State funds, but the bill would delete that restriction–and sets out provisions for investment in various Federal agencies, such as the Federal National Mortgage Association and Federal Home Loan Banks.

State Board of Insurance is continuing its crackdown on companies and agents who fail to file reports or otherwise don't comply with SBI regulations and orders.

Commissioner of Insurance Tom Bond reports that $246,205 in monetary penalties were assessed in 1984, of which $146,300 was for disciplinary action, eeile 99,905 was for late filing of reports.

SBI also revoked the licenses of 13 agents (while 25 were assessed a total $48,500 for alleged violations).

In 1983, SBI assessed $134,810 in penalties.

Agency officials say there has been sme increase in enforcement actions, but that it appears that agents and companies are beginning to move to comply voluntarily–and that that's what SBI is seeking.

AUSTIN–State Board of Insurance officials are expressing concern over what they see as damage–or at least potential damage –to Texas' system of regulated insurance rated due to the growth of Lloyd's companies rate deviations.

Lloyd's companies, based on the model of the famous London underwriters, aren't regulated by SBI–and use of deviated rates permits rate-regulated companies to modify the standard rates by the agency.

Some legislative concern has been expressed, including during last year's special session, that some insurers were using deviated rates when they shouldn't–charging lower premiums in order to maintain cash flow, and creating a risk possible future financial difficulties.

SBI officials hae reviewed the use of deviations–and board memberss hae indicated they aren't wholly satisfied with some industry practices.

This fall, William P. Daves, speaking to an industry group, reported that in 1983, some 19 to 20 per cent of the total property and casualty premiums in Texas were unregulated.

Nearly half of the commercial multi-peril and 11 per cent of the property and easualty premium was written by Lloyds, reciprocal and county mutual companies--which aren't under SBI rate regulation.

The number of Lloyd's companies has been increasing in recent years, with 76 "domestic" companies licensed at the end of 1984–and 25 firms having applications for licensing.

In August, SBI refused an application by F and G Lloyd's of Texas, San Antonio, the Texas offshoot of an out-of-state insurer.

Commissioner Tom Bond, in denying the application, ruled that the applicants were attempting to use the Lloyd's compamy to, in effect, circumvent insurance code provisions.

Bond's decision is being appealed to the three board members.

Daves says that "consumers and agents are shopping the Lloyds for low-rate coverage," with the Lloyd's companies "quoting rates in line with what their parent company reinsurers conclude they can lie with."

Rig counts drop lower this week

Rig counts for both the Perian Basin and the nation continued to decline this week.

Locally, Andrews County added fpur rigs to the county total, putting 24 rigs to work this week. Lea County, New Mexico, the most active county in the region, also added four rigs, making a total of 38 rigs at work in county lines.

Big losers this week were Eddy County, New Mexico, which dropped seven rigs from the count, bringing the total to 18 for the week. Martin County lost six rigs, lowering the count to 15 this week. Ector County dropped three rigs, making the count seven. Midland County lost one rig, lowering the count to nine for the wekk.

The Basin rig count this week is 342. A week ago it was 358. A year ago the count stood at 334.

Nationaly, Texas lost 26 rigs this week, lowering the state's count to 862 rigs. Oklahoma dropped one rig, making the count 298 for the wekk. Eight rigs moved out of New Mexico this week, lowering the count to 76. Louisiana gained two rigs, raising the state's total to 356.

Canada added 61 rigs to their count, raising the total to 368 rigs for the week. Alaska also added two rigs, raising the state's total to 23 rigs at work.

The national rig count for the week is 2,453. A week ago it was 2,556. A year ago the count was 2,675.

RRC approves pipelines' contract changes

AUSTIN–The Railroad Commission has approved both temporary and permanent natural gas contract changes sought by three pipeline companies which will save Houston Pipe Line Co., Intratex Gas Co. , and their gas customers more than $10.3 million a year.

Further analysis of most of the rates proposed by Delhi Gas Pipeline Corp. , HPI Transmission, Inc., and Producer's Gas Co. is needed before permanent Commission approval is given. However, Chairman Mack Wallace and Commissioners Buddy Temple and James E. (Jim) Nugent approved the rates on a temporary basis during the study period because of the savings to be realized by utility customers.

HPL and Intratex customers will benefit from lower gas costs under the contract changes since the companies must pass the reduced costs along to their customers using previously approed automatic adjustment clauses.

The Commission got permanent approval to a gas contract amendment proposed by ePI Transmission, Inc. that reduces rates charged to HPL from $3.57 per MMBTu to $3.15 per MMBTu. The new rates, which go into effect on Dec. 19, will save HPL and its customers an estimated $872,400 annually.

Temporary approval was given Delhi to lower rates under six contracts with HPL. The current rate, $3.80 per MMBTu, would decrease to $3.25 per MMBTu under the proposed rates. Annual savings to HPL and its customers are estimated at $6,296,565, with the new rates being effective for bills rendered on and after Nov. 6.

Another HPL gas contract change gien temporary approval involved rates charged by Producer's Gas Co. under four contracts. Current rates of $3.25 per MMBtu would drop to $3.15 per MMBtu in two of the contracts and to $2.85 per MMBtu in the other two contracts. Annual savings to HPL and its customers are estimated at $118,000. The lower rates are effective Dec. 1.

Intratex Gas Co. will save over $3 million under contract amendments with Producer's Gas Co. and Delhi Gas Pipeline Corp.

Temporary Commission approval of a rate reduction from $3.80 per MMBtu to $3.25 per MMBtu in a contract between Intratex and Delhi will save Intratex and its customers about $2.9 million over the one-year life of the contract. The proposed rates would be in effect from Aug. 1, 1984 to July 31, 1985.

Amendments to six contracts between Producer's and Intratex also won temporary Commission approval. Rates would be lowered from $3.25 per MMBtu to $3.15 per MMBtu in each contract. Intratex an its customers are expected to save $158,300 annually. The new rates are effective for bills rendered on and after Dec. 1.

Treasury tax simplification plan threatens to end capital boom

By GARY KLOTT
N.Y. Times News Service

NEW YORK — To America's entrepreneurs, the Treasury's tax simplification plan threatens to bring to an end the venture capital boom that has kept their cash-hungry businesses well nourished in the last several years.

The fear in northern California's high-tech Silicon Valley region — and in garages and basements across the country where upstart companies are born — is that if the Treasury plan were accepted without modification, capital gains tax rates would rise. Venture capitalists contend that a low capital gains rate has been pivotal in attracting investors to what are inherently risky ventures.

The Treasury plan received a boost when administration officials said President Reagan would endorse a modified version of it. Even so, venture capitalists may receive a reprieve because one of the modifications under serious discussion is the continued preferential treatment of capital gains.

Entrepreneurs, who represent the Apple Computers and the Federal Expresses of tomorrow, are lobbying to keep capital gains rates from going up. To them, the Treasury proposal to raise these rates evokes memories of the 1970's, when financial backers were nowhere to be found in the face of high capital gains taxes.

"We call the '70's the Death Valley days for money going into the venture capital funding process," said Daniel T. Kingsley, executive director of the National Venture Capital Association, a Washington trade group.

Venture capital — the lifeblood of these formative enterprises — virtually dried up after Congress raised the top capital gains tax rate in 1969 to 49 percent, from 25 percent.

Not until the capital gains rate was cut in 1978 to 28 percent did venture capital start flowing again. After the 1981 Reagan tax cuts brought the rate down to 20 percent, the flow turned into a virtual flood.

At present, 60 percent of the appreciated value of an investment held longer than six months can be excluded from taxes, which translates into a maximum tax rate of 20 percent on long-term capital gains.

Under the Treasury plan, capital gains would no longer receive preferential tax treatment, but would be taxed the same as wages, at rates of up to 35 percent.

"The effect on venture capital would be extremely adverse," said Oscar S. Pollock, a partner at Ingalls & Snyder, a Wall Street securities firm.

In the speculative world of venture capital, investors tend to invest in a number of companies, hoping that one or two will become big successes over the course of seven to ten years and more than offset the losses on the rest.

As a result of the Treasury proposals, the venture capital community has once again been thrust to the forefront of the familiar debate, reignited by the Treasury plan, over whether special tax treatment of capital gains provides merely a windfall to wealthy investors, or a vital stimulus to investment.

"One can say other factors were also involved, but the correlation between the capital gains rate reduction and the increase in commitments of venture capital money is unmistakable," Kingsley, the Washington trade group official, said.

When the capital gains rate was raised in 1969, new private capital committed to venture capital companies plunged. It went from $171 million in 1969 to $97 million in 1970, to a scant $10 million in 1975, according to Venture Economics Inc., a research group. When the capital gains rate was cut in 1978, commitments jumped to $570 million, from $39 million in 1977. And after the 1981 Reagan cuts, committments surged to $1.8 billion in 1982 and $4.5 billion in 1983.

Venture capitalists contend these figures demonstrate how critical the tax incentive is.

"We were 36 hours away from bankruptcy in 1974," said Representative Edwin V.W. Zschau, a Republican from California who founded System Industries in 1968 and built the company into a $120 million-a-year computer data storage equipment manufacturer. "It took me six months in 1974 to raise $750,000, and that was a drop in the bucket, but that was the way things were then."

He added: "In the early 1970's when my company was first getting off the ground, venture capital sources had pretty much dried up. What I did — and what so many other companies had to do — was to seek capital from foreign companies. But in order to get the money, we had to sell licenses or technology or go into joint ventures. Unfortunately, we sold a lot of our good stuff off."

Stanley E. Pratt, publisher of Venture Capital Journal, a trade publication, said preferential capital gains rates were essential to induce talented individuals to become entrepreneurs — as incentive for an employee to give up a guaranteed salary.

Treasury officials argue, however, that a 35 percent tax rate on capital gains that have been adjusted for inflation will produce "effective rates that are not substantially above" the rates in effect during the venture capital booms that occurred after 1978 and in the 1960's.

But Pollock maintains that, at present levels of inflation, the Treasury plan is far less generous than under current law. He said the 35 percent Treasury rate ignored the impact of state and local taxes on capital gains. Those taxes become effectively higher under the Treasury plan, because they would no longer be deductible on federal tax returns under the plan.

Phillips money-raising efforts going fine

N.Y. Times News Service

NEW YORK — Efforts by the Phillips Petroleum Co. to raise more than $1 billion through private placements with insurers and pension funds are "going fine," according to Wall Street sources.

The money, being raised by Morgan Stanley & Co. and the First Boston Corp., would be used in a recapitalization plan to be submitted to stockholders for approval in February or March.

The plan, which is part of a takeover settlement with T. Boone Pickens, the Texas oilman, calls for the company to buy back Phillips stock from his investment group, giving it an $89 million profit, and for Phillips to buy back 38 percent of the shares from each remaining stockholder, paying $60 worth of bonds per share. The employees, who already own about 7 percent of the remaining 107 million shares, would be sold an additional 30 percent. Phillips would then spend about $1 billion to buy back stock at no more than $50 a share.

Corporate Financing Week said Wall Street sources indicated that the company's bond rating, now listed by Moody's as Aa3, could be downgraded to Baa3 as a result of the financing plan.

FAA seeking fine against airline for training violations

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Federal Aviation Administration has proposed a $600,775 civil penalty against Alaska Airlines for violating regulations requiring flight crew members to undergo regular training on handling of ground procedures, emergencies and hazardous materials, an FAA spokesman said Tuesday.

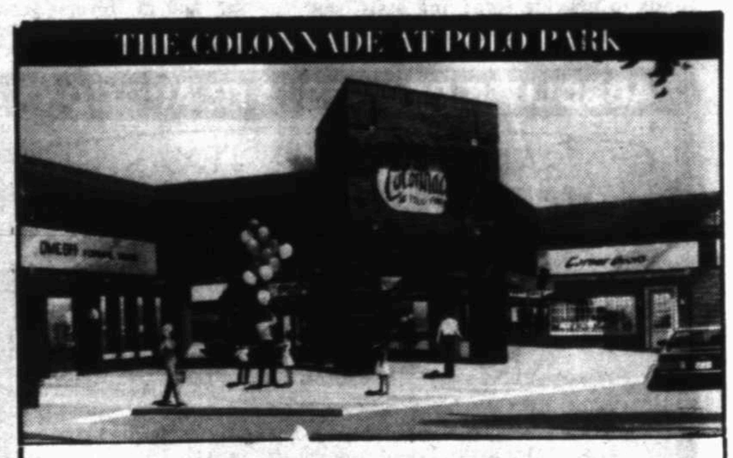

The spokesman, Fred Farrar, stressed that the penalty was only a proposed action and that the airline "has full rights of appeal." Also, he said that since the problems were spotted early last year, "the deficiencies have been corrected."

At the same time, Farrar said, "we consider it serious. We have definite regulations for the training of flight crew members — and to the extent they're not followed, we think it is serious."

The fine is one of the largest civil penalties the FAA has ever proposed, although usually the agency settles for less than the amount proposed.

Alaska Airlines, the nation's 21st largest carrier, serves 50 cities in Alaska and connects them with Seattle; Portland, Ore., and airports in the San Francisco and Los Angeles area.

IRS says 299 'taxpayers' earned over $200,000 but paid no taxes

By JIM LUTHER
AP Tax Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Two hundred ninety-nine couples and individuals with incomes over $200,000 used deductions and tax credits to avoid paying a penny of federal income tax in 1982.

Their income totaled $149 million.

The number of untaxed upper-income Americans was down slightly from the 304 who escaped the tax net in 1981 but considerably higher than the 114 recorded by the Internal Revenue Service in 1979.

However, since the number of returns with incomes over $200,000 a year more than doubled from 1979 to 1982, the IRS says, "a high-income return was 55 percent more likely to be non-taxable in 1982 than it was in 1979."

In 1979, about 9 of every 10,000 people above the $200,000 level paid no tax; by 1982 the portion had grown to more than 14 per 10,000.

The IRS is required by Congress to report annually on the tax status of Americans with incomes above $200,000. The report is based on the unaudited returns filed by these people, and the IRS declared that almost any change caused by an audit would add the 299 couples and individuals to the roll of taxpayers.

The latest report is for income earned in 1982 and reported on returns filed in 1983. The IRS said 207,291 couples and individuals reported incomes above $200,000 in 1982, up 18 percent from 1981 and up 70 percent from 1979.

The report is understated in one respect. A favorite legal way of avoiding taxes is to invest in tax-free state and local bonds, whose interest is not even reported to the IRS. An uncounted number of Americans are pushed above the $200,000 threshold by their tax-exempt interest.

The biggest single means used by the 299 non-taxpaying returns to avoid any liability was the foreign tax credit, which allows a $1 reduction in U.S. taxes for each $1 paid to a foreign government. The IRS said the credit was the largest offset on 139 of the returns.

On the other hand, 153 of the high earners paid no income tax to either the United States or any other country.

The deduction for casualty and theft losses was the largest tax-saving item on 64 of the high-income returns that paid no U.S. income tax. In fact, one of every 10 high-income returns reported a casualty or theft loss, an average of $4,366 per return. That trend prompted Congress in 1982 to severely restrict future deductions for such losses.

The report showed the deduction for interest paid was the No. 1 item on 33 of the high-income returns. The investment tax credit, under which the federal government pays 10 percent of the cost of buying business equipment, was the bigest tax-saving device on 25 returns. The deduction for state and local taxes paid was tops on 20 returns.

The IRS has been tracking the taxes of high-income Americans since 1976. Congress approved a major tax law that, among other things, cracked down on the ability of the wealthy to use accounting gimmicks and tax shelters to avoid taxes and toughened a provision, known as the minimum tax, designed to ensure that most people pay some tax regardless of how many big deductions they have.

After that law was passed, the number of over-$200,000 people who paid no tax dropped from 215 in 1975 to 53 in 1976.

About one of every five people over the $200,000 mark who filed returns paid the minimum tax in 1982 but the 299 obviously did not. Tax laws enacted in 1982 and 1984 further restricted the ability of upper-income people to avoid all federal taxes.

How tax burdens are reduced

WASHINGTON (AP) — Here is how the 207,291 couples and individuals with incomes above $200,000 a year made their money and reduced their tax burden when they filed their returns in 1983.

Xerox to close disk drive unit

NEW YORK — The Xerox Corp. said Wednesday that it would close its once-promising Shugart disk drive unit and reduce its after-tax earnings for the fourth quarter by about $85 million in write-offs and operating losses.

Company officials would not say whether Xerox would post a loss for the fourth quarter as a result of the move, which comes at a time of intense competition and consolidation in the computer peripherals business. Nor would the officials provide financial details about Shugart until the company's year-end earnings are announced Jan. 30.

In a statement, Xerox said that it had decided the Shugart unit, which it bought for $41 million in stock in late 1977, was "not strategically important to the corporation's long-range plans."

Bubble has burst for bubble memory

By DAVID E. SANGER
N.Y. Times News Service

NEW YORK — Four years ago, the bubble burst for bubble memory.

Once viewed as one of the most promising ways to store and retrieve computer information — preserving it even when the plug was pulled and the display screen went dark — magnetic bubbles turned out to be too slow and too expensive to be competitive, company after company concluded.

In 1981, after investing millions of dollars, Texas Instruments, the National Semiconductor Corp. and Rockwell International all closed their bubble operations and turned back to more traditional means of storing information: memory chips and magnetic disks.

Now, however, there are indications that magnetic bubbles may make a comeback. At Carnegie-Mellon University, where a new Magnetics Technology Center has already become a hotbed of new research in data storage techniques, researchers have for the first time put semiconductor devices on bubble memory material. The development promises to make bubble memories much smaller and much faster, combining the durability of bubbles with the speed of semiconductor chips.

"It's a very promising step," said Lane Mason, a senior industry analysts for Dataquest, which follows the memory market. "With bubble prices so high, a big enough market just hasn't developed to give you that warm and fuzzy feeling that bubbles are here to stay." The worldwide market last year was about $140 million, or "about equal to about two weeks of 64K RAM production," the most common memory chips, Mason said.

Bubble memories differ greatly from semiconductors, however. They are best envisioned as tiny, permanent magnets on the surface of a chip made of garnet, the same material used in gemstones. The position of the bubbles — each of which represents a single bit of information, is changed by two sets of coils wound around the garnet.

"All these bubbles are marching around like a band on a football field, and each one has to march out to be read," said Mark Kryder, a former researcher at the International Business Machines Corp.'s T.J. Watson Research Laboratory who worked with David Greve and Paul Rasky on the Carnegie Mellon effort. The data from each member of the band are then translated through a handful of "support" chips surrounding each bubble device, and sent to the computer's processor.

The benefits are tremendous. In a desktop computer, data might be stored — at least temporarily — in random-access-memory, or RAM, chips, but in the industry such chips are known as "volatile." That means that when the power disappears, so do the data, instantly and irrevocably. More often, data are written onto a magnetic disk, where things are more permanent. But disk drives are heavy and cannot take much bouncing around.

Because they are solid state devices, bubble memories can take all sorts of abuse. And because the data are stored magnetically, a constant stream of power is not necessary. Thus, they are particularly attractive in portable computers, and companies like the Teleram Corp. have used them in their models for some years. (However, for reasons of economy other portables, like Tandy's popular Model 100 portable, use RAM's supplied with power by battery packs.)

"Bubbles work for years and years, which makes them particularly attractive to the military, and anyone who needs memory in a miserable environment," Kryder said. As a result, bubble memories have been incorporated ?in robotics equipment on the factory floor and in weapons systems. In addition, some aircraft manufacturers are using them in flight recorders, the "black boxes" recovered after a plane crash.

The problems have been cost and speed. As the price of semiconductors has plummeted 90 percent in the last five years, bubble memories simply could not keep up: silicon is a lot cheaper than garnet. Moreover, the bubbles themselves take a while to get sorted and "detected" by a probe on the surface of the chip that sends the signals to the support chips.

The effort by researchers, both at Carnegie-Mellon and the Intel Corp., the sole U.S. manufacturer with a very active bubble memory program, has been to pack bubbles more densely and eliminate those support chips.

The technique used at Carnegie-Mellon has involved bombarding the garnet with hydrogen, helium and neon ions, a "doping" process similar to that used to put impurities with special characteristics for conducting electricity in semiconductors. "That forms a pattern in the garnet wafer, not just on the surface," Kryder explained, making it possible to fill the device with 16 times more bubbles than on a conventional device.

The second step involved controlling those bubbles, however, and that was more complicated. By using lasers, the Carnegie-Mellon team was able, for the first time, to put a silicon wafer on the garnet.

Commission grants 6 permits to operate new Texas pipelines

AUSTIN--Railroad Commission Chairman Mack Wallace has announced that six permits to operate new pipelines in Texas were granted by the RRC in November. In October, the Commission approved 15 permits, while 22 were issued in November 1983.

Five of the new permits were for gathering pipelines, while one was for a trunk transmission line. Gathering lines bring oil and gas from production leases, while a trunk transmission line is a larger diameter line into which smaller lines connect.

In November, two permits were granted to operate pipelines in deep South Texas (District 4), two in East Texas (District 6), and one each in the San Angelo area (District 7C) and North Texas (District 9).

New IRS rule on tax records bringing flood of complaints

WASHINGTON (AP) — Envisioning stacks of paperwork as high as an elephant's eye, farmers, shop owners, moonlighters and major corporations are demanding the Internal Revenue Service weaken new regulations that require detailed recordkeeping on business use of motor vehicles.

The regulations, imposed on orders of Congress, are designed to keep people from claiming a business-related tax deduction for a purely personal expense, such as a pleasure trip in a business vehicle.

"I invite you to ride in a one-ton pickup all day and see how much pleasure you derive from it," Adkins Farms Inc. of Chandlerville, Ill., said in a letter to the IRS.

But business deductions have never been allowed for personal expenditures. What is upsetting taxpayers now is the requirement that they keep "adequate contemporaneous records" of every business use of a vehicle — including boats, planes and motorcycles — and of personal computers for which some business deduction is claimed.

The rules also demand contemporaneous records for deductions for business use of a home computer. In essence, the owner will have to keep a log of all computer use and claim a deduction only for the business portion.

Another new law prohibits an employee from deducting a home computer unless the equipment is used for the employer's convenience and is required as a condition of employment. Deductions are limited for self-employed people whose home computers are used less than half the time for business.

In the past, a person whose expense records were incomplete could use other evidence to support deductions. But no more. If you claim a deduction that is not supported by contemporaneous records you lose the deduction and face a 5-percent negligence penalty as well. A 50-percent fraud penalty is possible.

The regulations do not define "contemporaneous" except to say that an entry "shall be made at or near to the time the listed property is actually used." But clearly, they prohibit creation of a log a month after expenses are incurred.

Some people have their own ideas of "contemporaneous."

"If my cattle were in the neighbor's field, he would not appreciate me taking five minutes to file a record of the trip while the cattle destroy some of his crops," wrote James Langley, president of the Malheur, Ore., County Farm Bureau. "If I'm doing some field burning and it threatens my neighbor's property, I must stop, get my record book, write down the date, time, mileage and the reason for the trip while the destruction continues."

From R.O. Mayes & Son Wholesale Grain Co., Petersburg, Va.: "Of all the bookkeeping we have to do for the federal goverment, this is the most ridiculous."

The rules were published in the Federal Register last Oct. 24 and became effective on Jan. 1. The IRS announced them in the instructions accompanying the tax forms that were mailed out over the December holidays. But apparently many taxpayers have not heard the message.

"There are a lot of people are there now taking business trips and they are losing deductions because they don't know about the new recordkeeping requirements," said Steven Woolf of the Laventhol & Horwath accounting firm in Washington.

The regulations are only temporary. The IRS is reading a stack of mail and awaiting a Feb. 5 public hearing before determining how the final rules should read.

In the meantime, Congress is feeling the heat. "My constituents are being forced to keep a log for a trip to church on Sunday in a pickup truck and for a trip to the local coffee shop," Sen. James Abdnor, R-S.D., said as he introduced a bill to repeal the new rules.

However, the regulations say that if the overall annual use of a piece of equipment can be determined, only business use — not personal use — need be logged. The overall use of a farm truck, for example, can be determined easily by checking the odometer so logging personal trips is not necessary.

Many of the complaints say Congress never intended to require such detailed records for vehicles used solely for business. Southwestern Bell Corp. told the IRS it has 11,000 light trucks and 5,000 cars that are used 100 percent for business, and wondered what would be gained by logging all those business miles.

Economists predicting recession in the first half of 1985

Hearst News Service

When economist Paul Samuelson was asked how far ahead could his peers in the dismal science forecast, he snapped: "Last month, if they're good." Nevertheless, estimates by the hundreds have flooded out for 1985 and beyond. What is seen, in consensus, is another pretty good year for America's pocketbook.

There are, however, a few respected voices who forecast recession in the first half, following the two-year boom.

"That's what I see, due to high real interest rates," says New York economic consultant Shilling. "But I know I'm pretty well alone." Shilling says several "shields" from high interest rates are wearing through.

Other economists say we'll be going through merely a slow-down in the recovery -- a pause that refreshes. We will be booming again by the second half.

One matter seems certain. Inflation will continue in a holding pattern. Your pocketbook will be artificially swelled by less than 4 percent. The remarkable aspect of the recovery has been its lack of inflation (up 3.9 percent in 1982 and 3.8 percent in 1983), and we could see a disinflationary trend throughout the decade. It is a money thief who seems to have lost his powers.

Here are some areas that will be particular bargains for you, says Standard & Poor's chief economist David Blitzer: Food and beverages, air travel, clothing, autos, natural gas. All will advance in price in 1985, but below price increases in general. However, electricity and medical costs will continue to outstrip the rate of inflation.

"Generally, I think we're off on good long-term growth for several years," Blitzer adds. "I don't see a danger zone for another recession until late 1986."

Deborah Allen Olivier, president of the Claremont Economics Insitute, puts it out even further.

"The first chance for a good recession will be around 1988," she says. "It looks very good for the long run."

That doesn't mean there are no problems - and some of the problems could affect your wallet. The big federal budget deficit might force spending cuts, which would cost jobs; also, your federal taxes could be raised, perhaps in the guise of tax reform or simplification.

We may reach a $4 trillion economy in 1985, with some $1 trillion of it federal spending $200 billion of that in deficit. It could be the year we begin to pay back for the long debt binge. Another unknown but possibly negative factor is how the debt will affect interest rates. Most economists see rates going back up in the last half.

Here is what you can expect for the year, if the consensus is correct:

JOBS - Bank of America's forecast is about typical: Unemployment will average about 7.3 percent of the labor force, compared with 7.5 percent in 1983 and 9.4 percent in 1982. According to Roth Young Personnel Services of New York, hiring in the nation's four most labor-intensive industries (food, retailing, hospitality and health care) will rise 6.7 percent and salary increases will range from 9 to 12 percent. The single category with the biggest demand is for anesthesiologists, who will be making $168,800 a year.

Terry calls real estate challenging

By GENE SCHROEDER
AP Newsfeatures Writer

Want a career that involves multi-million-dollar deals, where the work is challenging and the income lucrative? Try commercial-investment real estate.

"If you have brains, curiosity and motivation, you don't even have to go to college," says Priscilla Terry, a former Kentucky coal mine operator who now works as a real estate agent in Columbus, Miss.

Mrs. Terry, who has a graduate degree from North Carolina State University, recommends specializing in the commercial-investment field, which she describes as wide open for those seeking to embark on a career, or switch to a new one.

Commercial real estate — as opposed to residential — involves office buildings, shopping centers, hotels, apartment buildings, vacant land and the like.

"If I were just starting out, I would pursue commercial real estate exclusively," Mrs. Terry says. "It's more challenging, more technical, more lucrative and more diversified than residential."

Women who enter the field, she adds, will find much less pay discrimination than they might encounter in other occupations.

"Women will find their salaries can be equal to that of men, because there is a fair structure in pay scales," explains Mrs. Terry.

Her advice was echoed by Vee Krupnik, assistant sales vice president of a Chicago commercial-investment corporate group.

"There's no limit to the amount of compensation you can generate," Miss Krupnik says. "It all has to do with ability to put a transaction together and have it close. The more you can do, the more money you can make. There's no lid on it."

Both women are classified as experts in the commercial-investment field by virtue of a "CCIM" designation after their names. CCIM stands for Certified Commercial Investment Member, a title gained by licensed real estate agents who have completed a course of study and fulfilled experience and sales requirements. It takes an average three-and-a-half years to earn the designation.

Mrs. Terry's biggest deal concerned a $2.5 million office building, while Miss Krupnik is working on a $43 million project involving an apartment complex in the Chicago area.

ECONOMY

David Jones, president ClayDesta National Bank, agreed that Midland is probably seeing some critical mass phenomenon: "The phenomenon starts at about 100,000 to 150,000 and compounds after that," said Jones. "It is dramatic for an economy to reach that population level, because of the ups and downs in a local economy."

ANOTHER PLUS to achieving the critical mass level is the ability to attract certain businesses.

"There are a lot of people that became interested in Midland when it reached 100,000 in population, that were not interested in it when it was 75,000," said Billingsley.

He cited the addition of Red Lobster, Walmart, Albertson's, Harrigan's, Bennigan's, Wendy's, the return of Kentucky Fried Chicken and expansion of McDonalds and Burger King as examples of retail expansion into Midland as a result of the city having achieved critical mass.

"In a period when oil prices were stable and we weren't getting much help from the outside, we were having expansion in the retail sector," said Billingsley who speculated that the expansion might have occured as service and trade endeavored to match critical mass.

LOCAL EMPLOYMENT numbers seem to confirm this. While jobs in the oil profession were increased by only 1,000 in 1984, manufacturing managed to gain 200 jobs and finance added 300 job, the trade sector which includes retail and wholesale sales was up 1,600 jobs and services or the professional services such as doctors, lawyers and other porfessional needed to support a population increased, also, by 1,600.

"I think we are definitely affected some by critical mass at this time," said Paul Adams, analyst for the Texas Employment Commission in Midland, "and will probably be more so affected in the future as the population grows." Adams said we were seeing only the beginning effects of critical mass on the Midland economy.

Demand spurs auto price increases

Los Angeles Times
Washington Post News Service

U.S. and foreign auto makers are using a strong sellers' market to boost prices on many 1985 cars.

The price increases on individual models range from less than 1 percent to as much as 10 percent over comparably equipped 1984 cars.

That means overall 1985 car prices could wind up 5 percent higher than those charged for last year's models, some industry analysts say.

"New-car prices for 1985 probably will be up 5 percent or more over 1984 levels. But that won't really cause sticker shock, because most of the increases are concentrated at the high end of the market," said David Healy, an analyst with New York-based Drexel Burnham Lambert Inc.

Still, that forecast is different from the one Healy and other analysts offered last Oct. 1 at the beginning of the 1985-model year.

They said then that increases in 1985-model prices would match or fall below the average 4 percent rise in the Consumer Price Index — a measurement of changes in prices of goods and services purchased by moderate-income families.

But those early price predictions were set awry by continued strong demand — especially for mid-size, sports, luxury and big cars — and by new, multibillion-dollar labor agreements at General Motors Corp. and Ford Motor Co. Other price-boosting factors include strikes last year against GM facilities in the United States and Canada, the continuation of quotas on Japanese auto imports, and the year-round introduction of new products, industry analysts say.

"Our studies show that production costs usually are the main reasons for new-car price increases. But the current increases seem to be driven more by consumer demand," said George Hoffer, an economist and auto industry analyst at Virginia Commonwealth University in Richmond.

For example, production costs for U.S. manufacturers have risen 1.26 percent since last September. But that increase is more than offset by current pricing activity, Hoffer said. On the other hand, consumer demand is still riding high, he said.

U.S. customers bought 14.6 million domestic and foreign cars and trucks in 1984-about 4 million more than they purchased in 1982, the low point of the last recession. All auto makers doing business in the United States will sell about 15 million cars and trucks this year, according to Detroit-based Ward's Auto World, an industry trade publication.

The nation's auto makers traditionally have raised prices in boom periods, particularly on their best-selling lines, Hoffer said. Prices tend to come down when sales slow, he said.

"I'm not being critical of the auto companies. We all tend to take whatever the market will bear, both in salaries and in profits," Hoffer said. "There's nothing wrong with that."

Auto makers are raising prices on their best-selling models. GM, the nation's largest car company, is an example. GM put in two price boosts so far this model year, raising its average new-car price by about 4.6 percent, or roughly $588 a car.

"Average" prices include the lowest-priced product and the highest, and they are affected by myriad circumstances, including the business of mandating as standard equipment those things once sold as optional accessories.

GM's Chevrolet Cavalier subcompact was the best-selling passenger car in the United States last year at a manufacturer's suggested retail price of $6,469 for a base 2-door coupe. GM has raised that price by 6.2 percent, to $6,872 for the 1985 model. But company officials argue that the percentage increase should be lower because the new price includes $111 in "new" standard (formerly optional) equipment.

GM's Chevrolet Corvette is up 6.6 percent with a 1985 base manufacturer's suggested retail price of $24,891, compared with $23,346 charged last year.

Ford Motor Co., Chrysler Corp. and American Motors Corp., GM's three home-grown competitors, all have put into effect relatively moderate average price increases. Ford's prices are up 1.3 percent, or about $153 a car. Chrysler is up 1.2 percent, or about $125 a car; and AMC has raised the prices on its popular Jeeps by 1.2 percent, or $200 a unit. AMC earlier had boosted its Alliance and Encore compact car prices by 2.3 percent, but the company has backed away from that hike because of slow sales in those lines.

Chrysler is holding the line on prices of its small cars, such as the Plymouth Horizon, Turismo and Reliant models; and Ford is rolling back prices on some of its comparable models. But both Ford and Chrysler are raising prices on their hot-selling products. Ford, for example, is boosting the price of its Thunderbird by 5.3 percent, from a 1984 closing price of $9,736 to a 1985 introductory price of $10,249.

Hog farmers resist jet sorties over livestock

By KEITH B. RICHBURG
The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — Concerns about national security are on a midair collision course with the public's right to peace and quiet in a southern community that calls itself "the hog basket of the world."

The place is Clinton, in south-central North Carolina, where hog and turkey farmers live in not-so-peaceful coexistence with the U.S. Air Force.

The residents of Clinton normally might be expected to support the U.S. military, particularly because the region is home to neighboring Seymour Johnson Air Force Base, Camp Lejeune and Fort Bragg. But when the Air Force announced late last year that it was going to send fighter-bombers and other jets from Seymour Johnson on low-level sorties over the town, that was too much for local residents.

"They want to take in more and more of Sampson County for their low-flying jets," said Clinton Mayor Aaron Kennedy Jr., who also chairs the joint city-county airport authority. "We feel they are taking too much of Sampson County."

The problem is the community's self-described status as the nation's leading producer of pigs and poultry. "According to what we could find out," Kennedy said, "the noise could stampede turkeys and cause them to kill themselves. Hogs could run and pile up and smother themselves."

Kennedy said he will fight the proposal before the Federal Aviation Administration, which must approve any change that would further restrict Sampson County's airspace for military use. The plan's opponents have enlisted the aid of the area's congressman, Democratic Rep. Charles O. Whitley.

The Air Force, which is required to submit an environmental impact statement to North Carolina officials in the Clinton case, has studied the impact of jet noise on animals in other places, including mink in Alaska. Master Sgt. Benjamin Atkins, a spokesman at Seymour Johnson, said that according to the studies, any noise impact on animals is "very little. It could scare some chickens, but normally it doesn't affect them."

Some farmers agree, revealing a split in the community over the issue.

The issue itself is as muddied as a pigpen. Citizens have been allowed to sue the government and collect damages since the Supreme Court decided in 1946 that "if a landowner is to have full enjoyment of the land, he must have exclusive control of the immediate reaches of the enveloping atmosphere."

But when six Georgia residents sued the government in 1983 to stop F-15 jets from swooping over their subdivision, a federal judge dismissed the case. The reason: The flights were not "sufficiently frequent or sufficiently noisy."

But Clinton Mayor Kennedy insists he'll fight to the last hog. "We're not against the Air Force and what they're trying to do," he said, "but we have to protect the local population here, too."

Automobile production up from last year

DETROIT (AP) — U.S. automakers scheduled the assembly of 181,401 cars in U.S. factories this week, down from 184,146 built last week, but up from 161,902 in the comparable week a year ago, an industry journal says.

U.S. truck schedules came to 63,902 for the week, compared with 65,722 built last week and 60,427 in the comparable week a year ago, Ward's Automotive Reports said Thursday.

Canadian car production for the week was 20,446 vs. 23,068 last week and 23,732 in the comparable 1984 week.

Get 15 percent discount on storm windows this month at Lewellen's

Bill Lewellen of Lewellen Construction and Home Improvement Center points out that with the ever increasing cost of heating a home it is important to know that you are getting the most out of your energy dollar. Diamond storm windows from Lewellen's will help you lock the cold air out and the warm air inside. Through the month of January, Bill is offering a 15 percent discount on storm windows, so there's no better time to take action against high heating bills than now!

Government studies have shown that both storm windows and doors can save tremendous amounts of heat energy. That's why you may qualify for a tax credit if you install storm windows in 1985. In order to qualify for a credit of 15 percent up to $300 (15 percent of $2000) your home must have been substantially completed by April 20th of 1977.

According to Bill, the law which grants this tax credit is only scheduled to be in effect through 1985. Though the time period may be extended, why wait and take a chance on missing this tax savings opportunity?

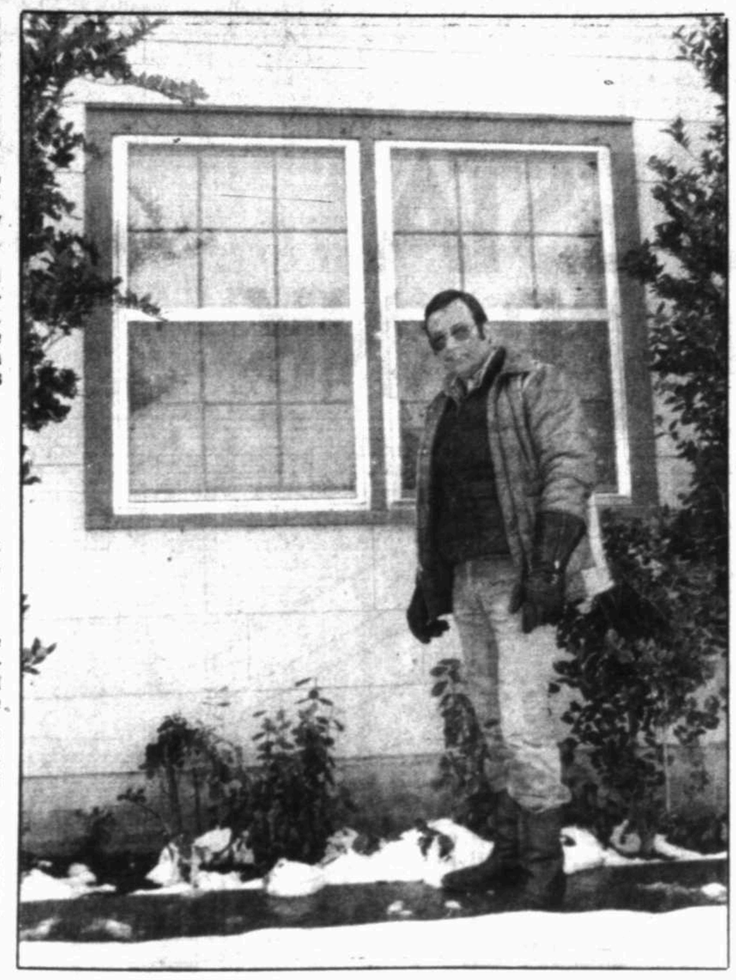

Moreover, you can have confidence in Diamond storm windows which have a 15 year non-prorated limited warranty against defects in material and workmanship. Just think if you have storm windows installed now you won't have to fight all the dust in the spring.

Storm windows can also eliminate nearly all sweating from inside windows if certain rules are followed and ideal conditions prevail in the house and its construction. Windows sweat when air comes in contact with the window surface which is below the dew-point temperature.

The air is chilled and condensation takes place. A residue of water is left on the surface of the glass. The installation of storm windows usually raises the temperature of the inside window above the dew-point, thereby relieving the steaming sweating, or frosting of the INSIDE window. In the winter when an excessively high inside humidity is created it causes a vapor pressure because relative humidity outside is comparatively low. Moisture vapor will tend to equalize. Therefore, the inside humidity will leak through cracks around the inside sash, into the air space between the primary and storm sash and condense on the inner surface of the cold storm sash instead of on the inside of the primary window.

It is important to have your storm windows installed by a qualified company. a If the windows are installed incorrectly they won't be as effective. Lewellen Construction is a local company which is well known for quality work not only with windows, but also with siding and patio covers.

Bob Hawk and Associates offers a new service to Midlanders

Bob Hawk and Associates is now the West Texas and Eastern New Mexico distributor for ProtecTar, a special coal tar emulsion sealer for pavement. Bob is proud to be able to offer this high quality, money saving product and the necessary applicating tools to contractors and do-it-yourselfers.

Bob Hawk and Associates are blacktop specialists, having been in the business since 1946. Thus, Bob explains that asphalt is a porous substance which is susceptible to damage by rain, freeze-thaw cycles and chemicals when left unprotected. ProtecTar covers the asphalt with a coal tar skin that resists the elements, giving you low maintenance cost, reduced pavement wear and added years on your surface life. It protects not only against gasoline and oil spills which soften asphalt, but also against moisture penetration and raveling. By extending the life of your parking lot or driveway, ProtecTar saves you money.

That's not all that ProtecTar has to offer. Because the emulsion fills in the surface pores, snow and ice can be removed more easily. Moreover, ProtecTar dries to a charcoal black color, enhancing the appearance of the pavement.

ProtecTar coal tar sealer consists of highly refined ceramic clay slurries that are milled with coal tar pitch and selected emulsifying agents. This exclusive milling process is far superior to batch methods as it completely homogenizes the finished product, eliminating sag, flow, blistering, and color variation.

The coal tar pitch emulsion driveway sealer manufactured under process rights as licensed by Engineering Industries, Inc. conforms to ASTM specification D3320 (ready-to-use) and U.S. Air Force and Federal R-P-355d GSA-FSS specification (concentrate) or as specified by the customer.

The manufacturers warrant these materials to be of merchantable quality, when stored, used, and applied in accordace with the instructions thereon.

You can choose to purchase ProtecTar in drums owned by Bob Hawk and Associates or you can get it in your own container. All you need to do is give Bob a call at 694-6572 or go by 5508 W. Industrial. If you don't want to do the job yourself, Bob will be glad to recommend a qualified contractor.

As always, Bob Hawk and Associates are the experts to call for asphalt paving. Whether you need a driveway for your home or a parking lot for an office building or school, Bob Hawk can take care of it.

Bob Hawk and Associates, located at 5508 W. Industrial, is now the ProtecTar dealer for West Texas and Eastern New Mexico. Call 694-6572 to find out how to protect your asphalt surfaces. As always Bob Hawk and Associates offers quality asphalt paving.

ITT continues restructuring by selling $1.7 billion in assets

By ERIC N. BERG
N.Y. Times News Service

NEW YORK — The ITT Corp., continuing its sweeping restructuring, said Wednesday that it would sell assets worth an estimated $1.7 billion to reduce the company's huge debt and to finance its push into high technology.

Rand V. Araskog, the chairman of ITT, said from the company's New York headquarters that the move was aimed at accelerating a corporate overhaul to provide "the strongest growth orientation, in sales and profits, for the company's future." He said the sales would take place "as quickly as practicable." The restructuring of ITT, which began in 1979, has already resulted in the disposal of about 65 businesses with assets worth $1.2 billion.

As of last Sept. 30, the book value of ITT's assets totaled $14.1 billion.

Wall Street analysts, whose reaction to the announcement was generally positive, said most of the ITT properties would be disposed of this year. The company's shares rose 87.5 cents, closing at $32.25, in Wednesday's trading on the New York Stock Exchange. The volume of 1.5 million shares made ITT the Big Board's fourth-most-active issue.

"We think it's a constructive move that should be reflected in price appreciation of the stock," said Paul D. Bordwell, an analyst at the Argus Research Corp.

ITT's sale of assets reflects "disinvestment," a widening trend among conglomerates. Under increased scrutiny from investors, managers of such companies are finding they can achieve a higher return by selling unproductive assets and returning the proceeds to the investors or by plowing the cash into a narrower group of growth businesses.

Analysts cite the examples of Avco Inc., which last year sold its laser, farm equipment and real estate development businesses, and Gulf and Western Industries, which has sold its sugar businesses and investment portfolio as part of a long-term refocusing effort.

In ITT's announcement Wednesday, the company did not provide a complete list of which assets would be sold. Nor did it give a precise picture of how the sale would affect ITT's earnings, which have been depressed recently because of foreign-exchange losses, problems in its insurance business and severe competition in telecommunications equipment.

ITT did say, however, that it would sell the remaining portions of its Eason Oil Co. subsidiary as well as other resource-based operations in its natural resources and food products sector. Faced with slumping prices in the oil industry, ITT has already sold Eason's gas-processing operations.

In its industrial technology sector, ITT said it would sell about 12 companies but did not specify them. And it said it would make "selected divestitures" in its overseas insurance ventures, its publishing business and its vocational training operation — all part of the diversified services sector.

Also within this sector, ITT said it would keep its Hartford Insurance Group subsidiary, which has been reeling from slumping premium prices and a run-up in claims. Although the company said it had no plans to sell its Sheraton Corp. hotel subsidiary, ITT said it was considering "substantial co-investors" in Sheraton, with ITT maintaining management control. ITT will also offer minority stakes in its telecommunications companies abroad.

Since last July, when ITT slashed its dividend to 25 cents a share from 69 cents, driving the stock down almost $10, the company's management has been under pressure to produce improved financial results.

nn

Some shareholders, reportedly including the financiers Jay Pritzker and Irwin L. Jacobs, have argued for the liquidation of ITT. Wednesday, however, ITT officials denied that the latest asset sale was aimed at pacifying investors.

"I don't feel the management has been under pressure to liquidate the company," said M. Cabell Woodward Jr., ITT's chief financial officer.

But some analysts disagreed. "This is the winter of ITT shareholder discontent," said Herbert E. Goodfriend, a Prudential-Bache Securities analyst. "Management had become increasingly sensitive to the unhappy nature of its constituency. This clearly played into their decision."

Speculating on which businesses are likely to be sold, analysts said that, in view of slumping lumber and pulp prices, ITT's Rayonier Inc. forest-products concern is a likely candidate, although ITT indicated it might not be sold until later. Analysts said ITT would also likely sell its O.M. Scott & Sons Co. garden products unit, where growth is said to be slow.

Other businesses likely to be severed, analysts said, include ITT's pipe, valve and wire-making operations; "Who's Who," the biographical reference book, and some of ITT's vocational training centers. In any case, the sale of the assets would leave ITT with scores of businesses, mostly in high technology.

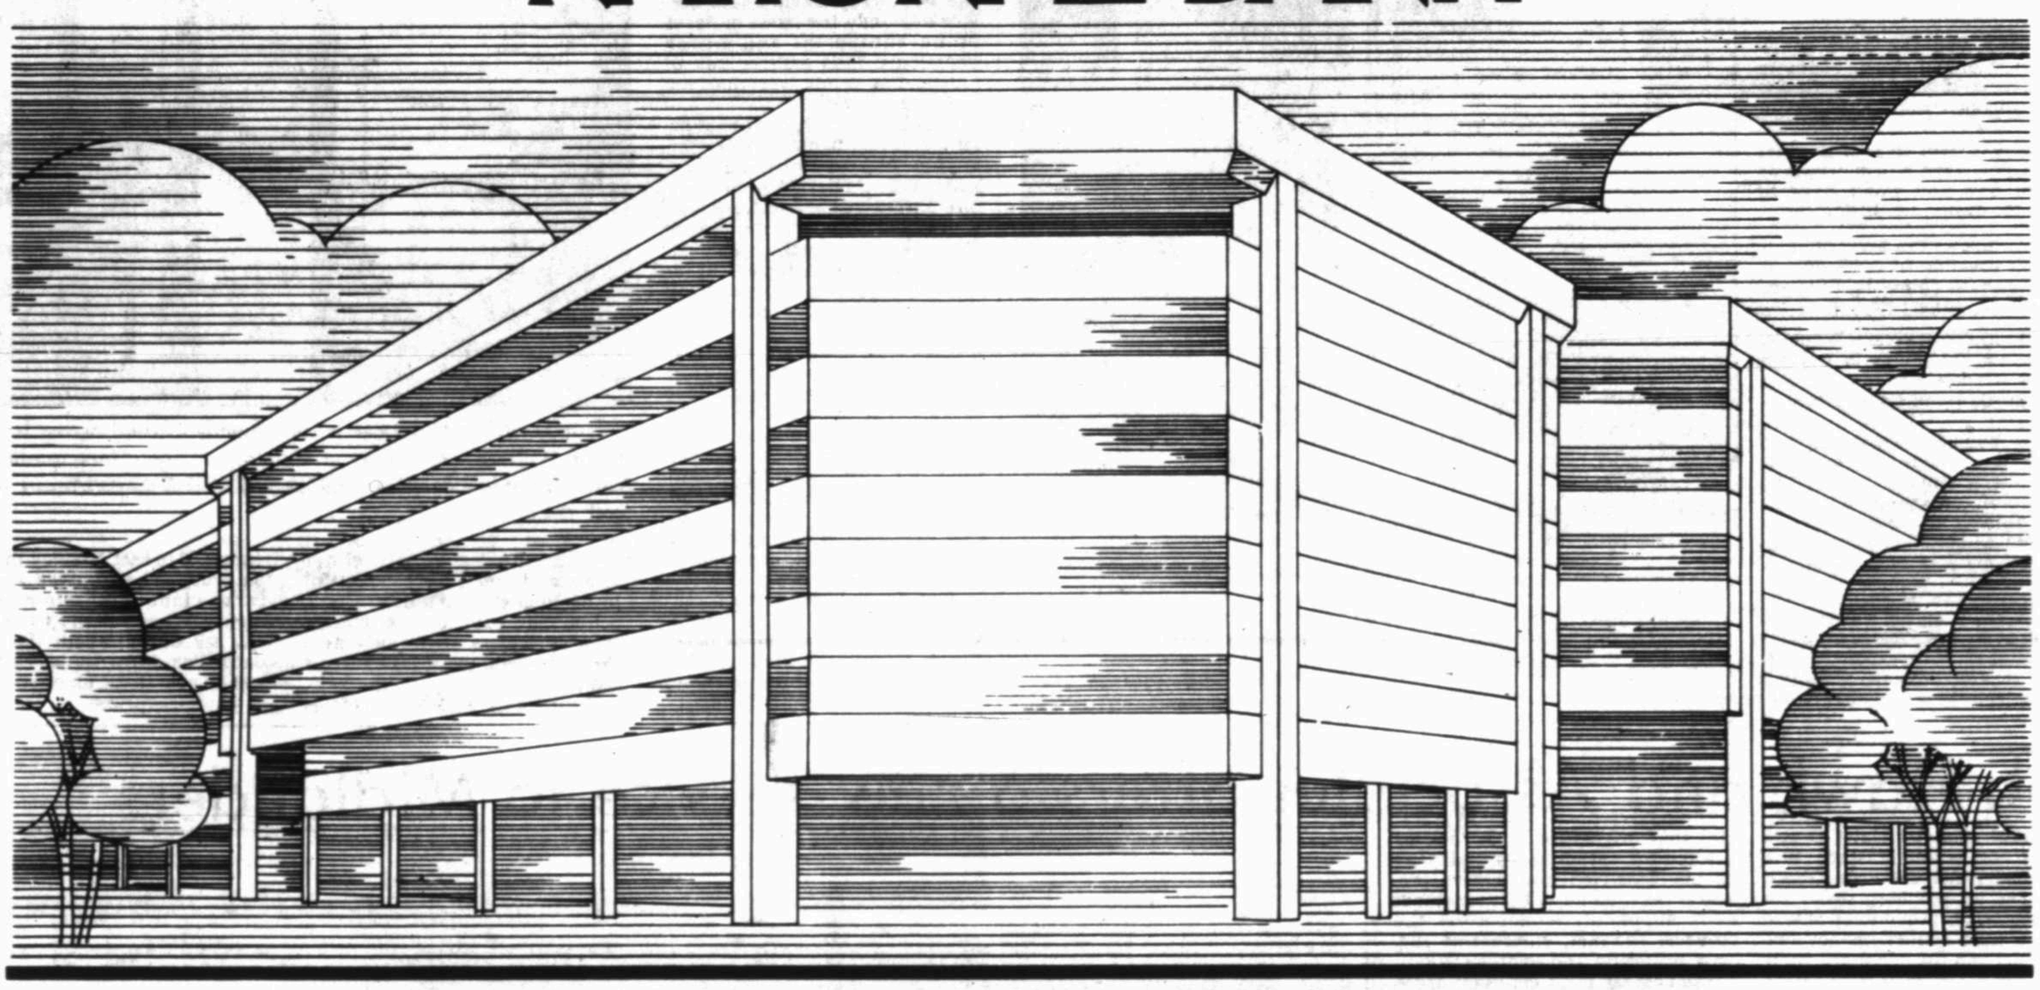

Whether the sale of the assets would actually command a $1.7 billion price is unclear. The figure is an ITT estimate based on the advice of the company's investment bankers, Goldman, Sachs & Co. and Lazard Freres & Coy.

Goodfriend of Prudential-Bache predicted that to reach the $1.7 billion goal ITT would end up selling Sheraton for $1 billion, Rayonier for $400 million, the rest of Eason Oil for $200 million and other businesses for about $100 million combined.

In general, though, analysts agreed that the sale would stengthen ITT's balance sheet by ridding it of poorly performing assets and providing the company with cash for research and development in telecommunications and other growing areas. The cash will also help ITT pay down some of its debt, which amounted to about $8 billion at Sept. 30. Last year, interest expense was $618 million.

"Telecommunications and high technology require a lot of cash, and that's just what they're trying to get," said Phua K. Young, an analyst at Shearson Lehman-American Express.

Singer Kenny Rogers is on campaign against world hunger.

Kenny Rogers

By KATHY LARKIN
King Features Syndicate

Kenny Rogers is in a business huddle with his manager, sprawled at ease in a comfortable armchair while he discusses long-range tour dates, and the night's special appearance. He's playing the United Nations to benefit the world's hungry — without singing a note.

The man who rises to shake hands looms tall in a neat business suit, comfortable well-polished shoes and a blue tie pulled loose from his collar. His skin is clear, scarcely lined between the black-streaked gray hair and beard that have become world famous on album covers and concert posters around the world. In person, he seems younger than his photos. But then, Kenny Rogers, born in Houston on August 21, 1938, is only 46.

In one room of the hotel suite, a standard rectangle of beige walls and gold couches, still another image of Kenny Rogers appears. He is on screen in a video tape singing with Dolly Parton.

They work well together, he says, "Our backgrounds are so similar, it's almost funny to watch how 'country' we get around each other, trading local jargon and slang we were raised with as kids. Besides, I always did think I sing better when I sing with someone else, not just me."

It is a good combination, one that has produced TV specials, record albums (including the just-out "Kenny and Dolly: Once Upon a Christmas." And starting this month, a 42-stop tour that will trace a network of concert dates across the United States.

She, after all, is the voluptuous Queen of country; he, the King who has sold some $300,000,000 worth of records since 1977, collects music awards like popcorn and last year inked a record-making five-year pact with RCA Records. That was for $20,000,000 — a stratospheric sum.

This year, Rogers — one of eight children born to a practical nurse and a warm-hearted but alcoholic father who worked as carpenter, watchman and shipyard worker — was once again voted, by Gallup poll, top male musical performer in the "People's Choice Awards."

ALL THE BETTER to maintain his favorite home, a 1,200-acre Georgia breeding farm for Arabian horses and cattle; rent a home in California;fund a cluster of office buildings on Los Angeles' Sunset Strip to be dubbed "The Rogers Entertainment Center;" maintain his own recording studio, "Lion's Share," in L.A.; own a piece of the Houston Gamblers in the new U.S. Football League and sign pay checks for over 200 employees who keep empire running smoothly.

That's money and power beyond most men. It is a reality that the Rogers of 10 years ago — broke after a career with jazz, folk and rock groups including the New Christy Minstrels and the First Edition — would never have expected.

And it is a reality that an even younger Rogers, that Jefferson High School kid who netted $13 when his first band, "The Scholars," rocked the local rooftops, would never have dreamed.

"I'm energetic. I like anything that is creative, that I feel I have a talent for...when I get into it.... What I have to offer is consistency. I am what I present. I don't do drug-related songs one day and religious songs the next day. And let you pick and choose what I am. I'm not a comedian. I sing songs that represent what I feel or at least that are not offensive to me."

And it lets him, sometimes, implement the dreams of others. It is no accident that his hotel suite windows frame a view of the U.N.

Within the next few hours, he and his attractive wife, Marianne, a former model and now "Hee-Haw" singer, will be hosting their third annual World Hunger Media Awards at the U.N., donating $100,000 to writers and photographers and novelists who have drawn in words and pictures the ultimate boundary line between living and dying.

The winners are professionals such as author William Shawcross, cartoonist Herbert Block (Herblock) and Pulitzer prize-winning Anthony Suau, who trapped, forever, the image of hunger in the photo of a skeletal Ethiopian baby, all bones and anguish cuddling against a barren breast.

Now Rogers says that one of his March concerts with Ms. Parton will benefit the famine victims of Ethiopia. Not a surprise. Early in 1984, Rogers launched a concert tour with a plea to his audiences to bring cans of food to be given directly to the hungry poor. So they did. By January 1985, he had collected close to 2 million pounds of food.

For Rogers, Ethiopia is one stop on the road.

There is hunger in these United States too. And he shrugs off White House counselor Edwin Meese's statement that a state of national hunger can not be documented. Says Rogers: "I'd venture to say all those people in the White House eat well."

MANY AMERICANS, he adds, are too proud to admit to hunger. Still others are eating, but what? And how?

Touring around this country, Rogers has met a bag lady who once catered for 1,500 people; another man, once solvent, who lives in a lean-to behind a Los Angeles church.

And he has the personal memory of friend Harry Chapin — the singer/composer who died in the twisted wreckage of a July 16, 1981, auto accident. It was Chapin who first involved Rogers in his own attempts to feed the hungry. It was for Chapin, in a sense, that Marianne and Kenny ultimately launched the World Hunger Media Awards.

Recalls Rogers, "Harry asked me to participate in one food-raising concert with him. I did. Then," he chuckles, "Harry wanted me to do another 150 concerts."

He adds: "Harry was absolutely obsessed with this world hunger situation. He felt he — Harry Chapin, himself — could make a difference. And I think that's the key. I once said to Harry, 'Suppose, hypothetically, I just give you a million dollars cash. Would that get you off my back? And would it solve anything?' "

Chapin's answer: "No."

Explains Rogers: "Harry thought hunger is a bureaucratic problem too. That nations can stockpile foods while people starve — because of politics. And because you need to motivate people, even American people, to care."

After Chapin's death, Rogers made a 10-year commitment to help the hungry people of this world. "This is our third year with World Hunger Media Awards and the idea is to salute people who tackle really a very unpopular, unglamorous necessary subject: hunger."

Rogers, a practical, well-organized man who also supports other charities such as the Kenny Rogers Cerebral Palsy Hospital in Sexton, Mo., prefers a hands-on approach. No donating to an organized charity where "four percent goes to the people and 96 percent to operating expenses. I like to see my money get right down and work."

HIS OWN background may have predisposed him to help. "I can never remember not having some food to eat; I can remember many times not having as much as I would have liked."

His mother, Lucille — the 1977 Grammy-winning record named for her made him an overnight sensation — is a religious woman, a survivor with guts. And she follows her son from concert to concert. Recovering from a recent brain operation, her first words picked up her son's bedside promise for her own tour bus with driver and nurse.

BETWEEN THE LINES

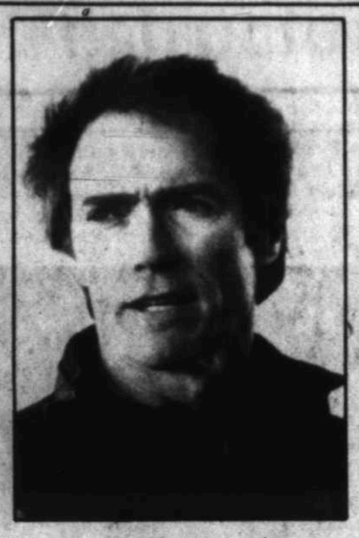

Q. I would like to know if Clint Eastwood lives in California, when he was born, what movies he'll do next... actually, everything about him. He is a hunk!

Donna Smith
Pamona, Calif.

A. Indeed he is, and at the age of 54 too. Specifically, Clinton Eastwood Jr. was born May 31, 1930 in San Francisco. After high school, he became a lumberjack, then drifted into the Army (where he taught swimming). After his discharge, he moved to Los Angeles where he worked as a gas station attendant, among other jobs.

In 1955, though, he became an actor when Universal signed him as a contract player and put him in such dubious films as "Tarantula" and "Revenge of the Creature."

Two years later, he was cast in the series "Rawhide" which launched him, but he didn't achieve the major international stardom that he enjoys now until he left for Italy 20 years ago to make a spaghetti western called

Clint Eastwood

"A Fistful of Dollars."

The producers had originally wanted James Coburn but couldn't afford him so they took Eastwood; his tough, laconic, nameless character clicked immediately, spawning very successful follow-up films and making him a star.

Now, he's on view in "City Heat," with Burt Reynolds, a fellow contract player at Universal, and he has a new one, "Pale Rider," his first western in eight years, currently in production. (He's starring and directing. "When I get too old to be a leading man, I'll direct full-time," he explains.)

He does live in California, in Carmel, several hundred miles north of Los Angeles. He owns a restaurant there, The Hog's Breath Inn, and is generally left alone, which is the way he likes it — he is known to be a very reserved, private person.

Not far away are ex-wife Maggie (who received a much-publicized, $25 million divorce settlement) and their two children, Kyle and Alison, who have appeared, respectively, in his films "Honky Tonk Man" and "Tightrope." Also close is girlfriend and frequent co-star Sondra Locke.

Q. Please tell me more about Don Johnson from "Miami Vice." He's gorgeous!

Connie Nolles
Las Vegas, Nev.
Elvira Axiak
Ceres, Calif.

A. He's 34, from Flat Creek, Mo. Until this series boosted his visibility, he was more infamous, as he admits, for his extracurricular activities — drugs, alcohol and womanizing — than for his acting. He has had steady credits, though — in TV series such as "Police Story" and the movies "The Magic Garden of Stanley Sweetheart" and "A Boy and His Dog."

He's been married three times, the last time to Melanie Griffith (of "Body Double"), who moved in with him when she was 14, a very precocious 14, as he explains. They met when he costarred with her mother, Tippi Hedren, in the film "The Harrad Experiment" in 1972, broke up in 1975, married in 1976 and later divorced.

He's now living with actress Patti D'Arbanville, they have a 2-year-old son, Jesse, and he credits the two of them with forcing him to straighten out his lifestyle and give up drinking and drugs. And concentrate on work.

Now: "The series takes up so much of his time that he won't have a moment to breathe or consider doing anything until March," explains an associate. "In the meantime, he's loving every minute of this."

Q. I love Marie Osmond. Could you tell me what she's been up to?

Trojan
Summit, Ill.

A. As we go to press, she is attempting to work things out with husband Steve Craig, from who she separated recently. He's at their home in Los Angeles; she, with their son, Steve Jr., in Provo, Utah.

She's also, according to an associate, keeping busy. Some rumors even suggested that her numerous business activities were partly responsible for the strain on her marriage, but she prefers not to confirm anything publicly.

She just returned from a two-week concert tour in the Midwest with brother Donny and recorded a solo album for Capitol in Nashville. She also recently taped a special, "The Velveteen Rabbit," for the Disney Channel. In between, she's been making numerous appearances in children's hospitals around the country as part of the work of the Osmond Foundation.

Q. What has happened to Michael Nouri of "Flashdance?" Is he going to be in anything else?

Mrs. S.
Bettendorf, Iowa

A. After "Flashdance," he did a short-lived series called "Bay City Blues" on NBC. Currently, he's making a movie called "The Imagemaker" in Washington, D.C., his birthplace.

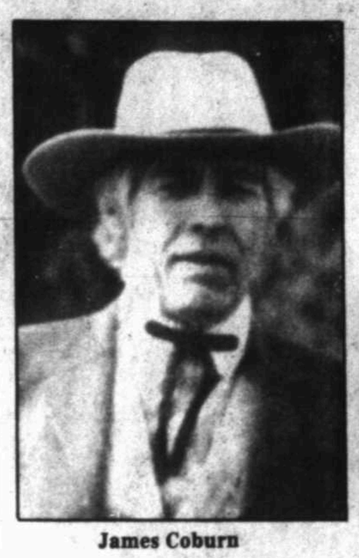

Anne Murray

A. I must be Anne Murray's top fan. Please tell me where she lives, what she's doing now and what she likes to do when she's not working.

Angela E.
Marcola, Ore.

A. She lives in Canada with her husband and two children and has been busy lately with her CBS special, taped in London and due to air this month. She is planning a few concert dates to follow the release of her newest album, "Heart Over Mind," but they haven't been set as yet.

In her off-hours, "she's very athletic," according to an associate, and likes to swim, play tennis and golf.

James Coburn

Q. Rumor has it that James Coburn and Lee Marvin are brothers. Is it true?

Mrs. A. Herman
Margate City, N.J.

A. Not likely. Coburn was his parents' only child, was born in

Lee Marvin

Nebraska and raised in California. His father was a mechanic. Marvin was born and raised in New York and his father was an advertising executive. Their closest association, therefore, seems to be their hair color.

KENNY

There was the father who worked, but at so many jobs; who was sometimes irritable and impatient, traits that Rogers says he notices in himself at times. But a gentle man.

In one job, as a watchman, the elder Rogers had to carry a gun. "My father hated that," says Rogers. "He was scared to death of guns and bullets. And we teased him, all eight of us, hanging out the windows when he went off to work because he had his gun in his holster and his bullets in his pocket."

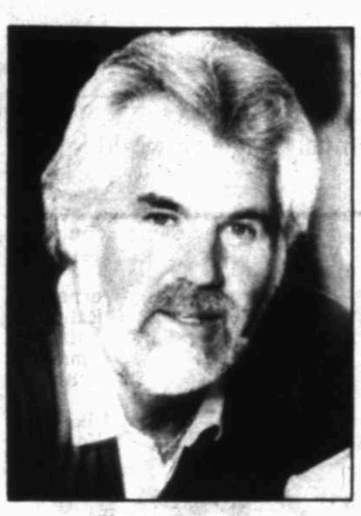

He adds: "And my father would always say: "Well, by God, at least I'm working. That was the only thing he had. That he had a job."

Rogers has a strong sense of family, this world-famous performer. He speaks with obvious affection and pleasure of his grandparents. He says his grandmother "was two-thirds Cherokee and the sweetest old lady. I'm telling you. We would drive up to Apple Springs, Texas, where they lived, get in at two a.m. and my grandmother would get up, start the stove and whip up biscuits, real biscuits puffed up three and four inches high. I always loved going up there."

For Rogers, married three times and until recently separated from his two grown children, Kenneth Jr. and Carol Lynne, lasting family happiness seems to have finally come — with Marianne and their son, Christopher Cody Rogers, 3.

He met Marianne at a low ebb in his fortune. The First Edition had broken up, leaving him with a $65,000 debt that took him two years to pay off. They were introduced in a coffee shop by some of the other people on "Hee-Haw."

"I SAID: 'You're the girl from Athens, Ga.' — just to make conversation. And Marianne thought that was my hometown too. It was three days before she found out I was from Houston. But she was so bubbly, she never gave me a chance to explain. And I ended up marrying the woman."

She has been there, Rogers says, through the bad times a well as the good ones. And he cherishes the memories of the bad times as proof of love. Marianne, he says, was there when he was broke. "That's important to me. Actually, I had to borrow money from her to pay child support. Now, that was pretty brutal. But I always paid her back."

They are alike — and unalike. "The important thing is we like doing for other people."

His private life these days is good for Rogers. He may tour two weeks of every month, but he usually manages to fly home at night to Marianne and Christopher and their Georgia home.

"I'm raising Arabian horses." he says. They're so beautiful. And I do thoroughly enjoy them so."

He is an amateur photographer and may do a book called "Lady," named after one of his songs. "I'm energetic. I like anything that is creative, that I feel I have a talent for... when I get into it."

There is his own music and a durable place on the charts.

"What I have to offer is consistency. I am what I present," he explains. "I don't do drug-related songs one day and religious songs the next day. And let you pick and choose what I am. I'm not a comedian. I sing songs that represent what I feel or at least that are not offensive to me."

SO HE DOES not drink, nor take drugs — nor celebrate excesses in his music.

"My father was an alcoholic, but I think that has little bearing. My mother never drank. None of my family drinks. I think for a period of about three months, when I was doing nightclubs, I would order a vodka gimlet." Eventually he stopped. As for drugs..."I tried some grass when I was younger, but all it did was make me sleepy. So why bother?"

These days Rogers is reconciled with his older children: Carole, 24, who lives in Houston and hopes to be a singer; Kenneth Jr., 21, who lives in Los Angeles and has what his father calls a real talent for guitar playing and song writing. "I'm impressed."

As for Christopher, the child of his father's heart, a bright, articulate sandy-haired little boy, Rogers knows just what he wants him to be.

"Happy. It's like what Marianne said to me once. She amazes me sometimes with her intuition. She's 40 years old, never had a kid before in her life and she just has such a good feel about what kids are all about. She said, 'The problems with most American mothers is that they would rather have an unhappy doctor than a happy truck driver.'"

Adds Rogers: "So it's whatever he wants to do...I think he is one of the happiest kids I've ever seen. When he laughs, he laughs from his gut."

Academy Awards may be prestigious, not without flaws

By MIKE HENDERSON
Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

Cliff Robertson ("Charly," 1968) once proffered that the Oscar couldn't mean much unless it was bestowed after careful scrutiny of five guys vying in the same role.

Dustin Hoffman ("Kramer vs. Kramer," 1979) accepted the plaudit but pointed out that an Oscar didn't mean that one actor had "beaten" the other nominees out of anything.

George C. Scott ("Patton," 1970) thought the whole notion of offering awards for movie-acting performances was so silly that he declined to accept that which the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences had so masochistically given him.

Sillier still, Marlon Brando ("On the Waterfront," 1954; "The Godfather," 1972) refused to pick up his second (and presumably last) statuette because of the way American Indians are treated.

Objections, qualifications, refusals, denials and social non sequiturs: That's part of the history of the Academy Awards. The awards are utterly imprecise, thoroughly subjective and often fraught with political considerations. Nevertheless, the Academy Awards presentation remains the most prestigious of the many annual celeb immortalizers — this despite the flaws that accompany the ordeal.

Perhaps the most irritating shortcoming is the fact that pictures released early in a year often are effectively forgotten when nomination time rolls around. Next month, for example, when the academy announces its nominations, will anyone remember the late Ralph Richardson (let alone Ian Holm) from last spring's "Greystoke"? Or Wilford Brimley from "The Natural"?

Will Albert Finney's extraordinary work in "Under the Volcano" be ignored in order to tap, say, Jack Lemmon for the latter's year-end release, "Mass Appeal"?

Even more annoying where Oscar nominations are concerned is the tendency to lump dissimilar performances into the same category. In 1965, for example, Richard Burton ("The Spy Who Came in from the Cold"), Laurence Olivier ("Othello"), Rod Steiger ("The Pawnbroker") and Oskar Werner ("Ship of Fools") gave what may have been the best dramatic performances of their screen careers. That year, however, the statuette went to Lee Marvin, as a comic buffoon in "Cat Ballou."

Apples and oranges? This year's best-actor nominees may well turn out to be a case of comparing apples with a banana in the ear.

For, in light of Steve Martin's having copped "best actor" in the recent New York Film Critics' Circle poll, it's pretty much certain his slap-happily manic performance in "All of Me" will pull an Oscar nomination. It may well be a case of academy voters deciding who was "better": Martin as a walking sight gag; Finney as dipsomaniacal diplomat; Sam Waterston ("The Killing Fields") as a foreign correspondent; Jeff Bridges ("Starman") as a space alien, or any of a dozen other actors (maybe even Eddie Murphy) in the fifth spot.

That's why, despite their subordinate status, the Golden Globe awards to be distributed Jan. 26 are more logically structured than the Oscars.

The Globes, filmland fixtures since 1940, are the googahs passed about by the Hollywood Foreign Press Association. The group consists of non-American journalists who are based in Los Angeles so that they can send their constituents all the deathless news of show biz.

The awards, which many feel are a precursor of the Oscar nominatons, are not without their shortcomings. The foreign press, for example, finds room for only one writing award, whereas Oscars are given for original as well as adapted screenplays.

Worse still, past Globe ceremonies often have seemed like fan-club conventions, what with awards for "most promising newcomer" or "best acting debut" or "best new star of the year" — filmdoms' consolation-prize equivalent of baseball's rookie-of-the-year award, presumably. There's also a distinctive commercial aspect to the Globes, what with the bestowing of "world-film-favorite" designations.

But the Globes make perfect sense in one way: They contain separate acting categories for dramatic roles and for comic or musical performances.

Indeed, without assigning any value to one or the other, it seems eminently practical to group Martin, Murphy ("Beverly Hills Cop"), Dudley Moore ("Micki and Maude"), Bill Murray ("Ghostbusters") and Robin Williams ("Moscow on the Hudson") apart from Finney, Bridges, Waterston, etc.

It could be argued that there is something less elite about being included in a set of 10 rather than five. But even the honoring of 10 performances inevitably ignores dozens of others.

'Tuff Turf' tough film to take

By DAVID LEE FORREST

Forrest

Jette Rinck (actually a pseudonym for a first-time screenwriter named Ina May), who wrote the screenplay for "Tuff Turf," told the Los Angeles Times that the low-budget New World Pictures movie was written in three and a half weeks and filmed in only four weeks.

Even though that's really a phenomenonally short time in which to make a feature film, while sitting in the theater watching "Tuff Turf" it still feels like it was wasted time.

In "Tuff Turf" James Spader plays the new kid in town, a blond-haired misunderstood teenager from Connecticut whose family moves to California. He immediately runs afoul of a vicious gang during his first day of school there.

Lawson High School, by the way, is the sort of California high school seen in most recent teenage exploitation flicks; all the girls are over-sexed and all the guys dress like extras from a Billy Idol rock music video.

For some inexplicable reason, Spader immediately falls head-over-heels in love with the gang leader's dumb, cruel bimbo of a girlfriend, played by Kim Richards, thus dooming himself to spending most of the movie getting beaten to a bloody pulp by the gang.

Most of the time, "Tuff Turf" is really nothing more than a post-punk "High School Confidential," with violence substituted for that quinessential 1950's bad youth film's hoked-up drug plot. As such, "Tuff Turf" at least has some sort of overblown camp value.

One scene in which Miss Richards ends up dancing on top of a nightclub's tables and doing cartwheels down the aisle is as ludicrious as even the silliest scene in "High School Confidential."

Toward the end, however, "Tuff Turf" starts to get mean-spirited and even more violent, turning into a mutated teenybopper version of "Deathwish."

The overall film is so bad that it's hard to tell for sure whether any of the young performers in the film can act; they're never really given much of a chance to try.

Spader spends most of his time just looking misunderstood. Miss Richards, whose character does at least become minimally more likeable as the film progresses, is quite pretty. The dark-haired villain, played by Paul Thayers, acts appropriately psychotic.

The only actor who really stands out at all is Spader's comic relief side-kick, an amiable space cadet played by Robert Downey. He milks a lot of humor out of his terribly bad lines. In one scene, he flicks open a new switchblade knife and, impressed, says, "Whoa, state of the art," and manages to make it sound like a genuinely funny line.

This is director Fritz Kiersch's second film. His first was the rather lame screen version of Stephen King's "Children of the Corn." In all fairness, he does show some occasional flashes of talent.

The film has one hysterically funny satiric scene in which Spader and his punkoid companions briefly invade a snobbish country club masquerading as card-carrying preppies.

Despite its low budget, "Tuff Turf" also does have a fairly stylish look, although Kiersch depends too heavily on such visual cliches as rain-slick streets and flashing neon lights. Some, although by no means all, of the music in the film's loud rock soundtrack is quite good too.

Despite having a few — a very few — good scenes, on the whole, "Tuff Turf" is so bad a movie that most people will probably find it tough to sit all the way through.

"Tuff Turf," rated R for considerable violence, some sexual content and brief nudity, is now showing at the UA Cine IV.

Peabo Bryson's smooth voice natural for duets

Associated Press

Peabo Bryson, taking the romantic approach in the songs he writes and the smooth way he sings them, is a natural for duets. And he has sung with some ladies. Roberta Flack comes first to mind.

However, he says, he never went hunting for a duet partner. They've all come about naturally.

Natalie Cole was first. Bryson says, "I toured with Natalie in the early part of my career. I opened her show and I would come back during her program and we'd sing 'Wish That I Could Touch Your Lonely Heart.' I think she ended up doing that song as a solo. I did an album with her; I don't think that song was on it."

The album was "We're the Best of Friends," on Capitol, in 1979.

Bryson and Miss Flack met when she came backstage after he gave a concert in Lincoln Center. He had a new album out titled "Paradise." She had made a duet album with Donny Hathaway, who recently had died.

He says, "She was needing somebody to fill that bill. We liked each other right off the bat. She said to me, 'Let's just try it and see if it works.' She sat at my piano and played.

"You can't tell if you'll blend with somebody until you sing with her or him."

Miss Flack and Bryson had the same manager and toured together. Their 1980 album, on Atlantic, was "Live and More," a double album, with some songs by her, some by him and some duets. He says, "The response was so great and positive when we played live, we knew it was the right thing to do."

They made another duet album, in a studio, "Born To Love," in 1983, for Capitol. It became his fifth gold album.

Bryson also made one duet with Melissa Manchester. He hadn't met her when she said one day at a recording session that she'd written a song she'd like to sing with Peabo Bryson. Somebody working with her, who had worked with Bryson, called him and told him.

He says, "I said I'd be honored.

"I listened to it and liked it." The song was "Lovers after She," and the duet went on her next Arista album.

In 1984, Jennifer Holiday toured with Bryson for nine weeks. "She really leaves the stage hot," the singer says. "She has tremendous force. To follow her on stage is not for the faint of heart."

Bryson's latest album, "Straight from the Heart," is a solo album, his first for Elektra Records.

Bryson was born in Greenville, S.C., April 13, 1951, oldest of four children. His father gave him a French West Indian name, Pepo. "There are conflicting reports about what it means," Bryson says. "I think it means a small elephant." When Bryson joined his first band, led by Moses Dillard, Dillard changed Pepo to Peabo. That band toured widely, in America and abroad.

Bill Cosby has hit show for NBC

By WARREN BERRY
Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

Cosby

Bill Cosby and his show, which premiered last fall, have proven to be the perfect antidote for the holiday season — for any holiday season.

In fact, Bill Cosby may be the only thing that gets a lot of us through the entire winter. "The Cosby Show" may be the only thing that gets us through our children's entire adolescence.

Remember what it was like at your house last Christmas vacation? The children all nestled around the tree — picking at it (and then each other). Your scratchy old 78 with all the old sacred songs on it drowned out by a small cult of devil-worshippers who live in the next bedroom with the robot servant they call Stereo.

Well, Cosby faces all that and more each week on NBC as he and his lively television wife labor to bring up their four kids in a style to which they're not accustomed; in other words, decently.

Your own kids may chuckle (more likely snort their approval) at the lifelike situations and language and wardrobes. You, the parent, will nod knowingly, and laugh with relief the way you did the first time you looked up leprosy in Dr. Spock and found out that your kid really had heat rash.

Things are not as bad as they seem, especially when you find you're not alone.

Just remember how the passengers on the Titanic were calmed when they could still hear the ship's string quartet playing up there on the poop deck.

The beauty of "The Cosby Show" (Thursday nights) is that it's non-stop action, yet the half-hour tale rarely leaves the house. That's real life.

In one recent 5-minute segment, Cosby, who plays a hard-working obstetrician, comes home from a tough delivery day at the hospital and, before he has a chance to put down his little black bag, must move from room to room putting out one brushfire after another like a volunteer fireman without a hose.

The realities and humor of modern middle-class life are all around us as we watch this sophisticated couple attempt to teach their daughters (ages 16, 9 and 4) and their 13-year-old son that it is possible to live together peacably on the same planet.

Living together in the same New York brownstone may be a bit more difficult. Perhaps Cosby and his wife and witty writers should have forwarded a script to the recent SALT-talk negotiators.

The fact that life is full of irony and contradictions is brought home nicely.

Some favorite examples:

—Two of the kids do what any loving siblings do, poke, pinch and pick on each other for no apparent reason. In exasperation, their educated father blurts out:

"You two will have to learn to play together — now get away from each other!"

—The mother, a stunning lady played by Phylicia Ayer-Allen, reluctantly takes her son to the latest horror flick in which parts of the human body are strewn about with all the abandon of an auto-wrecking yard. How did the kids in the audience react?, Cosby wants to know. Oh, they left laughing, she reports. As for her own kid: "It wasn't realistic enough."

Like any good parent, Cosby attempts to inform his son of the merits of older, less-explicit adventure films, including the Westerns of his childhood hero, Colt Kirby. He and his teen-ager are soon arguing until the wife has to cut in with, "Children, please!"

"Well, he started it," pouts the father. And in a final putdown of his son's favorite horror hero, the distinguished dad says something like, "Well, Colt Kirby would kick your guy's butt."

—As the poet wrote, or should have, a young girl about to become a woman is a fine thing to behold — and one big pain in the angina. Cosby, who's made a career out of looking at life wide-eyed, even bug-eyed, is at his amazed best in dealing with the development of his oldest daughter's (Lisa Bonet's) budding sex life.

In one episode, her newest beau is an older-looking dropout who's giving up the merchant-seaman life to re-enter high school. Won't that be tough at his age? Cosby asks delicately. "Not after you've been in a Turkish prison," responds the kid.

—After years of Tom-Sawyer-Huck-Finn-Andy-Hardy-Leave-It-To-Beaver spinoffs, it's refreshing to come across a teen-age boy who acts like a real 20th-century kid.

With a report card full of Ds, he's aiming for a career as a gas-station pump jockey or a long-distance truck driver. As he explains to his father, he's proud of his doctor dad and lawyer mom, "but maybe I was born to be a regular person and have a regular life."

In a stirring address the young actor (Malcolm-Jamal Warner) describes the nobility of the Regular Person's life. "And you still could love me," he says in summation. The audience is poised for applause. Cosby is moved, so moved that he says firmly: "That's the dumbest thing I ever heard."

—Since contrast is what makes shows click, even though it doesn't do the same for families, there are the two younger daughters. Rudy at 4 (Keshia Knight Pulliam) is something that's found in many families with a wide age spread, the tuned-in tot. And Vanessa, 9 (Tempestt Bledsoe), is so smart and does so many things right that, naturally, the others regard her as the "snitch."

Like many a sharp young kid, she often finds that the best defense is an offense. For instance, she insists that the family should have a dog. When her older brother attacks the idea, she responds sweetly, "All I wanted was an animal whose name starts with the same letter of the alphabet as all the grades in your report card."

The intriguing thing about this is that, while it's good, solid entertainment, it works for all involved.

NBC finally has a hit. (ABC could have had but turned down the idea).

The show rescued one of the nation's most talented monologuists and comic actors from a sea of Jell-O and assorted other commercial endeavors.

Like NBC, Cosby finally has a hit, too. And really, it's his own. Despite a couple of series that didn't last, Cosby hasn't been with us regularly since — would you believe it? — the '60s, when he and Robert Culp made the campy spy series "I Spy."

Behind it all are two producers who tried for years to get Cosby back on television regularly. One is Marcy Carsey (a sitcom name in itself), who rose from NBC tour guide and Johnny Carson's gofer to the prestigious post of senior vice president for prime-time series at ABC.

Her partner, Tom Werner, is the man who succeeded her in that job. Together they claim credit for many of ABC's better shows of the past: "Taxi," "Mork and Mindy," "Dynasty."

Together as Carsey-Werner Co. they've produced the critically well received "Oh Madeline," starring Madeline Kahn, and the prime-time special "Single Bars, Single Women."

The two Hollywood folks have done something that New York's big talkers haven't been able to pull off for years: they've brought a big-time TV show, a hit, back to the city where network television began.

"The Cosby Show" is produced in a dusty old hangar of an NBC studio in, of all places, Brooklyn, where a tough bunch of neighborhood critics lines up each week for the final tapings.

They're not there to see the Brady Bunch.

'Dust Bowl' photographs on exhibit at Petroleum Museum

The Petroleum Museum has on display through Feb. 28 a photographic exhibition called "Of Dust Bowl Descent: Forty Years on the Great Plains."

This exhibit represents five years of work by contemporary photographer Bill Ganzel. Ganzel began with a collection of pictures shot by Farm Securities Administration photographers during the Dust Bowl years on the Great Plains.

He has located the same people, places and situations in these early photographs, photographed them again and collected oral histories from the people that describe the dramatic changes that have taken place in middle America over the past 40 years. The exhibit includes the old and new photographs side by side, accompanied by brief transcriptions from Ganzel's oral history interviews.

Produced through the cooperation of the Center for Great Plains Studies and the Nebraska State Historical Society with funding from the Nebraska Committee for the Humanities, the exhibit is being shown throughout the region by Mid-America Arts Alliance.

Mid-America Arts Alliance is a five-state partnership of the Arkansas Arts Council, the Kansas Arts Commission, the Missouri Arts Council, the Nebraska Arts Council and the State Arts Council of Oklahoma. The Alliance's activities are made possible by funding from these state arts agencies, support from private citizens and corporations and grants from the National Endowment for the Arts.

Hours at the Petroleum Museum are 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. Monday through Saturday and 2 to 5 p.m. Sunday. There is an admission charge.

Photographs of William Huravitch, Williston, N.D., 1939, and again in 1979, show life on the Great Plains. Both are part of the exhibit "Of Dust Bowl Descent: Forty Years on the Great Plains," on display at the Petroleum Museum, 1500 I-20 West.

Networks to extensively cover inauguration

NEW YORK (AP) — The Geneva Club, the group of unchained anchormen who covered the recent arms-control talks in Switzerland for the major U.S. television networks, will have a reunion of sorts in Washington for President Reagan's swearing-in ceremonies today and Monday.

CBS' Dan Rather, NBC's Tom Brokaw and ABC's Peter Jennings will oversee network coverage, beginning with the official swearing-in ceremony sometime before 11 a.m. today continuing with the public swearing-in and inaugural parade Monday.

David Brinkley, who has covered every televised inauguration since the first one in 1949 will join Jennings as co-anchor. Another notable reporter on the ABC team will be 75-year-old Bob Trout, who has attended every inauguration since 1917 and covered them all since 1933, mostly for CBS News. This time, Trout will be working for ABC Radio.

NBC's coverage Monday begins at 9 a.m. CST, while ABC, CBS and the Cable News Network begin continuous live reporting at 10. ABC, CBS and NBC plan to continue their coverage until 4 p.m., while CNN returns to regular programming at 5.

The networks' morning news shows will also have a large presence in Washington on Monday. The "CBS Morning News" will send co-anchor Phyllis George and weatherman Steve Baskerville. NBC's "Today" show reporters on the scene will include co-host Bryant Gumbel and weatherman Willard Scott.

ABC's "Good Morning America" is not scheduled to send its weatherman to Washington, but will have fashion expert Pat George available, along with co-hosts David Hartman and Joan Lunden.

CHECKING OUT THE LIBRARY

'New York Times Book Review' picks outstanding books

By JOHN W. DEATS

Every year, the editors of "The New York Times Book Review" choose from the many outstanding books published, both fiction and non-fiction. Of the six works of fiction, three were written by Americans, the others by a South African, a Peruvian, and a Czechoslovak emigre who lives in Paris. The non-fiction category includes four biographies, two histories, two books on international affairs by journalists, and a two-volume set on Japanese literature.

In a fascinating probe into the sex lives of 19th century Victorians, Peter Gay attempts to present "history informed by psychoanalysis." THE BOURGEOIS EXPERIENCE: VICTORIA TO FREUD is promised to encompass five volumes, the first of which is entitled THE EDUCATION OF THE SENSES. The author has employed court records, diaries, medical logs, letters, and books to help dispel certain illusions we may have regarding Victorian morals and sexual practices.

John Edgar Wideman is a teacher of literature and author of six novels. His book, BROTHERS AND KEEPERS, is an illuminating portrayal of the differences which led his younger brother, Robert to a life of crime, and who now serves a life sentence for murder. The Widemans shared the same environment, a poor black neighborhood, and the author seeks clues in their common past for their differences. Surprisingly, John discovers his own self doubts and uncertainties as he realizes what a perceptive man his younger brother has become.

DEADLY GAMBITS is a sharply critical assult on the way arms control negotiators of the Reagan Administration are approaching their vital task. Author Strobe Talbott gives an account of infighting between the State and Defense departments which makes them appear to set presidential preference ahead of the avowed goal of nuclear arms reduction.

Nobel Prize winner Saul Bellow has come closest to autobiography in his present collection, HIM WITH HIS FOOT IN HIS MOUTH AND OTHER STORIES, than in any of his past works. His fictional characters were inspired by friends and relatives of the author over a venerable lifetime, and Bellow's voice rings out loud and clear.

British journalist William Shawcross writes, vividly about the war between the Khmer Rouge and their former allies, the North Vietnamese, in THE QUALITY OF MERCY: CAMBODIA, HOLOCAUST, AND MODERN CONSCIENCE. The author looks at how various international agencies responded to the crisis of starving Cambodia, and many appear self-aggrandizing or inept in this moving account.

WITH A DAUGHTER'S EYE is a fascinating protrayal of Margaret Mead and her husband, Gregory Bateson, both noted anthropologists. Their daughter grew up to follow in her parents' footsteps, but the chief interest of the book is how Mary Catherine Bateson became such a strong and steady person in a family of eccentrics.

Mario Vargas Llosa's intriguing novel is based on a real life rebellion in Northern Brazil during the 19th century. THE WAR OF THE END OF THE WORLD is a tale of adventure peopled with often horrifying characters. A revolutionary sect which seeks freedom for its people grows into an enemy of order and the church and, ultimately, consumes itself.

E.L. Doctorow, author of RAGTIME and other popular works, offers a more subtle book in LIVES OF THE POETS: SIX STORIES AND A NOVELLA. The writing is full of irony, laughter, outrage, and a wealth of emotions which reflect the plight of modern man.

Other outstanding books chosen by the New York Times are DAWN TO THE WEST: JAPANESE LITERATURE IN THE MODERN ERA, by Donald Keene; IN HER OWN RIGHT, by Elizabeth Griffith; LIFE AND TIMES OF MICHAEL K, by J.M. Coetzee; MACHINE DREAMS, by Jayne Anne Phillips; THE MEMORY PLACE OF MATTEO RICCI, by Jonathan Spence; THE UNBEARABLE LIGHTNESS OF BEING, by Milan Kundera; and WALT WHITMAN: THE MAKING OF THE POET.

Narrator gets in the way in 'Sundog'

"Sundog," By Jim Harrison, Dutton-Seymour Lawrence, 241 pp., $15.95.

A Review

By DAN CRYER
Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

"Sundog" is a feisty, passionate novel, if something of a tease. It promises the intriguing story of Robert Corvus Strang, a man who has made a career of building dams and irrigation projects all over the world, but Jim Harrison indulges in a lot of authorial huffing and puffing before settling down to examine this mystery man.

All the while, the novel keeps boring in, coming at you sideways, exploring little eddies outside the main narrative flow until finally — and perhaps too late — the reader is effectively engaged. It's a kind of intellectual detective story in which the unnamed narrator, a writer like Harrison himself, tries to comprehend a man who deals in more tangible realities than words on a page.

Despite their different worlds, writer and construction foreman are very close to being alter egoes. They experienced boyhoods of fishing and hunting in the wilds of Michigan's Upper Peninsula; they're both now in their mid-40s, divorced and much traveled; they share a delight in frisky women and hearty food and drink; they seek out challenges; they abhor convention and want to be "free of the bondage of the appropriate."

As the novel opens, the writer-narrator is in a locker room at a fancy club in Palm Beach, Fla. Tired of hackneyed subjects, he wants to write about people "who do the actual work of the world but are never written about." So a tycoon puts him onto his ex-son-in-law, who's recuperating at a cabin on the Upper Peninsula.

When the narrator reaches Strang, he finds a pathetic figure being nursed by a beautiful young Costa Rican woman, Eulia, supposedly his stepdaughter. Over the years Strang's health has been undercut by epilepsy and tropical diseases, and recently his legs were injured in a fall suffered while inspecting a Brazilian dam. His physical therapy includes several hours of crawling each day.

If Strang's body has been humiliated, his spirits remain high. He's a bouyant, vigorous, self-educated man comfortable with his lot in life. His work has been his play, and he intends to return to it as soon as possible.

For five months the narrator interviews Strang (we are told much of his life story in his own words) and observes him as he goes about his daily routine. Meanwhile, the narrator becomes quite certain that this lovely dancer is not Strang's stepdaughter at all and that he must have her for his own. So two stories are going on at once, Strang's and the volatile relationships of a woman and the two men who adore her.

When Harrison gets to it, Strang's story is well told and fairly interesting. It's a tale that begins with poor country folk and simple pleasures. His early life is bounded by fundamentalist religion (his father is a jackleg preacher), the splendor of the outdoors, the love of a kindly older sister, Violet, and the worldliwise instruction of older brother Karl.

After marriage at 16 and two kids soon after, Strang leaves his family behind for construction work in Kenya. (His generous gifts of money will continue long after the divorce.) Before long his growing expertise and enthusiasm have made him a valued foreman wherever western technology is being called on to rescue the Third World. If Brazil and India benefit from dams and irrigation, Strang achieves a sophistication and integrity that would have eluded him on the Upper Peninsula.

By contrast, the narrator presents himself as a kind of burnt-out case, purposeless, inherently lower on a moral scale. Their lives are curiously parallel, yet Strang has achieved a quiet distinction denied the man who makes sentences out of the air. But here "Sundog" contradicts itself, for in summing-up such a man as Strang, isn't the writer doing the very work he was made for?

Harrison is intent on celebrating the kind of man, like Strang, usually neglected by novelists. "Writers by experience are overtrained in cynicism," the narrator thinks, "and cynicism along with irony is a device, a set of blinders, to keep the world in its place...I am reminded again that once you get truly out of the circle of your acquaintances, and away from those who bear your professional likeness, you perceive again the mystery of personality."

This is a valid and important perception. I only wish Harrison had adhered more strictly to this esthetic creed in this book. Awe before the glories of mysterious lives told simply and eloquently is what made his earlier works such as "Farmer" and "Legends of the Fall" such strikingly good fiction.

I wish the writer-narrator in "Sundog" hadn't messed about so often in Robert Strang's story. I wish he had been somewhere else when we learn the secret that breaks Strang's heart.

I wish novelists would write their stories and then obey the signs that read "Keep Out. Violators Will Be Prosecuted." I'm tired of signs reading "Beware. Anguished Writer at Work."

Book cornucopia of MOMA information

"The Museum of Modern Art New York with an introduction by Sam Hunter"; Harry N. Abrams; in association with the Museum of Modern Art; 1,070 illustrations; 608 pages; $65.

A Review

By RICHARD REILLY
Copley News Service

This exceptional, thorough work, which appropriately comes along just months after New York's Museum of Modern Art substantially expanded its gallery spaces, is a monumental effort and as much a cause for celebration as the museum itself. The first major book to be published on the museum in 30 years, it offers a comprehensive view of MOMA's collections, donors and dedicated staff.

Included are essays and photographs on MOMA's six departments: painting and sculpture, drawings, prints and illustrated books, architecture and design, photography and film. There is a brief preface by Richard Oldenburg, museum director, and an easily read, informative introduction by Sam Hunter, professor in the department of art and archaeology at Princeton University. Hunter offers an enjoyable, readable history from MOMA's founding on Nov. 7, 1929, to its recent expansion.

One of Hunter's informative tidbits is that "the Museum came into being because three influential collectors were prepared to challenge the conservative policies of traditional museums and to establish an institution devoted exclusively to modern art." Not surprisingly they were all women: Lillie P. Bliss, Mrs. Cornelius J. (Mary Quinn) Sullivan and Mrs. John D. (Abby Aldrich) Rockefeller Jr.

Undoubtedly, Ms. Bliss's experience after persuading the Metropolitan Museum of Art in 1921 to hold its first exhibition of modern art was decisive in the founding of MOMA. The Metropolitan Museum display covered the period from the impressionists through Picasso's pre-cubist work. "Hostile press reactions to even that carefully delimited exhibition discouraged the Metropolitan in further experiments of the kind." Sound familiar?

Hunter gives us glimpses of Katherine Dreier's avant-garde Societe Anonyme; Alfred Barr, MOMA's first director; Mrs. Simon Guggenheim and her numerous major bequests; Rene d'Harnoncourt; Edward Steichen; founding trustee Paul J. Sachs; Picasso's "Les Demoiselles d'Avignon"; most of the Rockefellers. And among other interesting facts: that MOMA has its own publishing house, movie house and department of film and video; that everything for sale in its gift shop must pass the museum's standard of design.

Some of the art objects in the collections will amaze, amuse or astound you: a self-aligning ball bearing, stereo turntables, a Pinin Farina Cisitalia GT car (1946) with an aluminum body, Hector Guimard's inventive entrance arch for Paris subway stations, Gunnard Andersen's polyurethane armchair and Charles Eames' molded-plywood leg splint, as well as household appliances, office equipment, tableware, tools and textiles.

Other topics touched on are the fire in May 1958, which destroyed a large and important work, "Water Lilies," by Monet; a denouncement by a group of artists in a manifesto which asked, "What is this, a three-ring circus?"; and the tragic death of Jackson Pollock just months before his exhibition opened.

The various chapters, written by each department's director, cover every area of the collections and are supplemented by excellent photographic reproductions (319 color plates, 751 halftones). Containing information from Aalto Alvar and Ansel Adams to Marco Zanuso and Piet Zwart, this work is a cornucopia of riches. Yes, the price, $65, is stiff, but it's the only book you will ever need on modern art.

lacocca's autobiography rated best book for '84

NEW YORK (AP) — Lee Iacocca's biography was far and away the best-selling hard-cover book in the United States for 1984, a New York Times survey indicates.

"Iacocca" easily outdistanced "Loving Each Other" by Leo Buscaglia in the hard-cover non-fiction category, the newspaper said today.

In the hard-cover fiction section, Robert Ludlum's thriller "The Aquitaine Progression," which spent nine months on the Times' best-seller list, edged out "The Talisman" by Stephen King and Peter Straub.

Book weighed down by sadness

A Review

"Hostages to Fortune," by William Humphrey, Delacorte, 227 Pages. $15.95.

By PHIL THOMAS
Associated Press

"Hostages to Fortune" is a novel of such terrible sadness that it will depress even the most optimistic of readers.

Its subject is death, and the chill of death so permeates its pages that even William Humphrey's considerable writing gifts fail to bring a spark of life to his somber text.

At age 48, Benjamin Curtis had a full and happy life with his wife, Cathy, his talented son, Anthony, and a successful writing career. He also had a good friend, Tony Thayer, whom he had known since college.

At age 50, Curtis had none of these. His son committed suicide; his friend was dead, a possible suicide, and his wife had left him. Unable to cope, Curtis tries to take his own life, but fails.

The novel concerns what happened to him and how he painfully made his way back to the land of the living after living for so long in the shadow of death.

As Curtis struggles to return to life, he tells through sometimes confusing flashbacks what his previous life had been and how it had been destroyed.

Much of this account is interesting, but it is also weighed down by a crushing load of sadness.

Jazz guitarists' lives chronicled

A Review

Fans and students of jazz guitar may find Stan Britt's "The Jazz Guitarists" (Blandford: $7.95; illustrated) of interest for brief, encyclopedia-style biographical portraits of nearly 80 masters. It's a fairly complete gallery, from Eddie Condon to Ralph Towner, Lonnie Johnson to James "Blood" Ulmer. (No Oscar Aleman, though; no Johnny St. Cyr.) Purists may quibble at some of Britt's "Top 12" choices; is George Benson really one of the dozen best jazz guitar players of all time? A portion of a solo by each of these 12 is transcribed (a mere eight bars, on the average). Each entry is supplemented by a discography; it's sound enough but based on LPs available in England, where this book was originally published.

DEAR READERS: We have had many requests over the years for those hands we consider to be our favorites. That makes quite a list. Opening lead: Ten of ♣.

The Two of Diamonds was resplendent in his scarlet coat. "It's the award for the best defense at the recent Biarritz tournament," he boasted proudly to anyone who remarked on his attire. As witnesses of the event, we can testify that the coat in all its glory matched the quality of the play.

It was in the final of the team event, and both sides ended in four spades. "I hardly thought I would feature in the play," remarked the Two, "I was part of such a drab collection.

"At both tables the lead was the ten of clubs, and dummy's jack was allowed to win. But the defense soon parted ways. In one room, declarer led a diamond to the queen, and West won the king. It made no difference what West returned. In practice, he chose a heart. Declarer won on the table, discarding a club from hand, and led the nine of diamonds. When the jack appeared, the diamond suit was high, so declarer won the ace and led the ace, king and another spade. The defenders got two trump tricks in addition to the diamond, but that was that. The contract was home.

"In my room I was in the possession of one of the world's great players. Here, too, a diamond was finessed at the second trick, but my expert smoothly played me to the trick! It all looked so easy to declarer.

"He continued with the ace of diamonds and a diamond ruff in dummy, fully expecting East to produce the king. But East over ruffed and returned a club for my owner to ruff. Another diamond ruff by East provided the entry for another club lead, and our ruff was the fourth and setting trick for the defense.

"A curious case. Where the defenders scored a diamond trick, the contract was made. Where they did not, it was defeated."

Filmmaker Fellini to be honored

NEW YORK (AP) — Italian filmmaker Federico Fellini, whose visual imagination has made him a legend in cinema, will be honored June 10 at the annual Tribute of the Film Society of Lincoln Center.

"Fellini's films are singular in their bold imagery and their artful fusion of reality and fantasy. We are extremely happy to be honoriing this outstanding film artist," said Alfred Stern, president of the Film Society.

Excerpts from such Fellini treasures as "La Dolce Vita" and "8½" will be shown at the Avery Fisher Hall tribute.

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Remember "The Jetsons"? The Hanna-Barbera animated series about a futuristic family is making a comeback, and so is its popular theme song.

Hanna-Barbera is producing 41 new episodes about parents George and Jane Jetson, kids Judy and Elroy and the family dog, Astro. The new shows will be combined with original shows in a syndication package to debut next September.

Meanwhile, the series' theme song was recently re-recorded in stereo, both to go with the new shows and to satisfy requests from FM radio stations that have been making do with the existing monaural version. Participating in the re-recording were the original conductor, Hoyt Curtin, and many of the original players including Pete Candoli.

Hints on how to prevent attack of 'blue fuzzies'

By JANET LORIMER
King Features Syndicate

I was pondering porcupines in the supermarket the other day. Not the animal kind, the cabbage kind. My recipe calls for several large cabbage leaves and what, I asked myself, should I do with the leftover cabbage? If I don't do something with the leftover ingredients, I'll be inviting an attack of the Blue Fuzzies!

Blue fuzzies are a constant problem when you have leftovers. Inevitably, you put that half a cup of leftover sour cream or tablespoon of leftover lemon juice or half a head of leftover cabbage into a container and push it into the depths of the refrigerator where it is promptly forgotten. Two weeks later, when you suddenly remember it, you discover that — gasp! — you've been attacked by the Blue Fuzzies.

You scoop the sad remains into the garbage can, lamenting the waste, and vow that next time you'll find a way to use the leftover before it falls victim to the Blue Fuzzies.

Here, then, is a chain of recipes, each somewhat linked to the next by virtue of its "leftover" ingredient.

• • •

PORCUPINES
8 large cabbage leaves
½ pound lean ground beef
1 egg
2 tablespoons chopped onion
1 cup cooked brown rice
Salt and pepper
1 (8-ounce) can tomatoes
Dash basil or thyme
1½ tablespoon minced parsley

In skillet, crumble, brown and drain beef. Set aside to cool. Steam cabbage leaves for a minute or two to remove their crispness and make them easier to handle. Set aside. In bowl, mix cooked meat, 1 egg (beaten), onion, rice, salt and pepper.

Open up each cabbage leaf and carefully spoon about ⅛ of the meat mixture into the middle. Wrap edges of leaves around meat mixture and secure with toothpicks to form cabbage rolls.

In large skillet, mix tomatoes (with their juice), thyme or basil and parsley. Bring mixture to a simmer. Carefully place cabbage rolls in sauce. Cover skillet and simmer for about 30 minutes. Makes 8 "porcupines."

Note: To avoid having leftover ground beef conquered by the Blue Fuzzies, precook the entire package, drain, cool and store in plastic containers in your freezer. Then, when you need ground beef, it's right there, all ready to add to the cooking pot. This also saves you a step.

Leftover parsley may be added to tossed green salads, used as a garnish or chopped and stored in the freezer.

At this point you probably have some leftover cabbage and onion. Use them in:

CABBAGE-ORANGE SLAW
Leftover cabbage
2 oranges
1 tablespoon chopped onion

Shred cabbage and add 1½ oranges; cut into bite-sized chunks. Add chopped onion and toss well.

Toss with Curry Dressing: ½ cup plain yogurt, ½ teaspoon curry powder, (or to taste), 2 tablespoon salad oil, juice from ½ orange, honey, to taste (optional). Combine all ingredients and mix well. Pour over slaw and let stand, covered, in refrigerator for about 15 minutes before serving.

Note: Without honey, this dressing is quite tart. If you prefer a sweeter dressing, add honey gradually to taste.

At this point you may still have some leftover onion. Onion is very prone to being conquered by the Blue Fuzzies.

Of course, if you're really smart, you chop several onions, bag the chopped onion in plastic bags and freeze. That way you avoid those leftovers. If the chopped onion is very juicy, freeze onion and juice in ice cube trays or drain off the juice before freezing. Otherwise, you end with a solid clump of frozen onion.

We now may have ½ cup leftover yogurt to deal with. You could just eat it for lunch with fresh fruit or you can use it in this recipe:

MAGIC MASHED POTATOES
3 to 4 large potatoes
½ cup yogurt
1 cup Cheddar cheese
1 teaspoon onion, chopped
1 tablespoon butter

Boil potatoes in their jackets. In small pan, melt butter and saute onion until tender. Mash the cooked potatoes without peeling them. Add butter and onion to potatoes, stirring well. Add yogurt and cheese. Mix well.

Spoon potato mixture into baking dish, cover and bake at 350F for about 10 minutes or until cheese is melted. Casserole can be uncovered and placed under broiler for a few seconds to brown the top. Garnish with parsley and serve.

You can turn your potato side dish into a main dish very easily with:

LAZY DAISY CASSEROLE
2 to 3 cups Magic Mashed Potatoes
1 egg, beaten
1 package hot dogs
½ cup grated Cheddar cheese

Mix egg into mashed potato mixture and spoon this into the bottom of a 9-inch pie pan, smoothing it evenly. Cut hot dogs in half lengthwise and arrange them on the potato mixture like the spokes of a wagon wheel or the petals of a daisy.

Sprinkle cheese over the top of everything. Bake at 350F for about 10-15 minutes or until cheese is melted and casserole is heated through.

Makes 4-6 servings.

When you have some Magic Mashed Potatoes left over, try these potato puffs for breakfast.

BREAKFAST PUFFS
Leftover Magic Mashed Potatoes
1 or more eggs
Salt and pepper, to taste
2 (or more) tablespoons butter

Mix potatoes, beaten egg and seasoning. Melt butter in large skillet. Gently place scoops of potato mixture (about ¼ cup per scoop) in melted butter and cook over medium heat as you would cook pancakes.

When puffs are golden brown on one side, turn them very carefully with a pancake turner and cook till second side is golden brown. These are delicious served with a cheese omelette or a thin slice of warm ham.

Guacamole Tacos and Beanie Burritos

There are those nit-pickers who maintain there's no such thing as leftover cheese. Although you can easily use up cheese in a variety of recipes, the fact remains that if you don't, you're inviting an attack of the Blue Fuzzies. Although you can scrape the Blue Fuzz off and eat the cheese that's left, something has still been wasted.

A good way to avoid the entire problem is to grate the cheese you plan to use for cooking purposes and store it in the freezer. On the off-chance that you'd like another recipe to use up grated cheese, here is one for:

GUACAMOLE TACOS
1 batch guacamole
6 tortillas
Lettuce, shredded
Cheddar cheese, grated
Green chile salsa (optional)
Sour cream (optional)

Warm tortillas on stove briefly. (To heat tortillas place them on an ungreased griddle or in an ungreased skillet over medium heat for about 20 to 30 seconds on each side. Store the warmed tortillas immediately in a covered container in a warm oven to prevent them from drying out.)

In the middle of each warm tortilla, place about ½ cup guacamole. Cover that with some shredded lettuce and grated cheese. You may also add a dollop of salsa and/or sour cream. Fold the edges over and serve. Makes 6 tacos.

Guacamole: 2 to 3 large ripe avocados
2 to 3 tablespoons grated onion
Juice from 1 lemon
⅛ to ¼ cup mayonnaise
1 clove minced garlic

Mash avocado. Add onion, lemon juice, mayonnaise and garlic. Mix well. Allow to stand, covered, for about half an hour before serving. Hint: Sprinkle a tad of lemon juice over the finished guacamole to prevent it from browning. Makes about 3 cups.

Lemon juice is another item that can be frozen, thus thwarting the Blue Fuzzies.

Now you find yourself saddled with some leftover tortillas which can also be frozen or used in the next recipe.

BEANIE BURRITOS
6 tortillas
2 cups refried beans
½ pound lean ground beef (leftover from porcupines)
½ jar green chile salsa (leftover from tacos)
1 to 2 cups Jack cheese, grated

Tortillas should be at room temperature for easier handling. In medium saucepan, heat refried beans and salsa. If you plan to use meat, crumble and brown and drain off fat. Add meat to bean mixture.

Spoon about ¼ to ⅓ cup of bean filling onto each tortilla. Add a good large dollop of grated cheese (about ¼ cup per burrito).

Roll up or fold over the flaps, including the ends and lay the filled, rolled tortillas in a shallow baking dish. More cheese may be sprinkled over the top if you have it handy. Cover baking dish and bake in 300 degree oven briefly till heated thoroughly and cheese is melted. May be served as is or with an additional topping of green chile salsa.

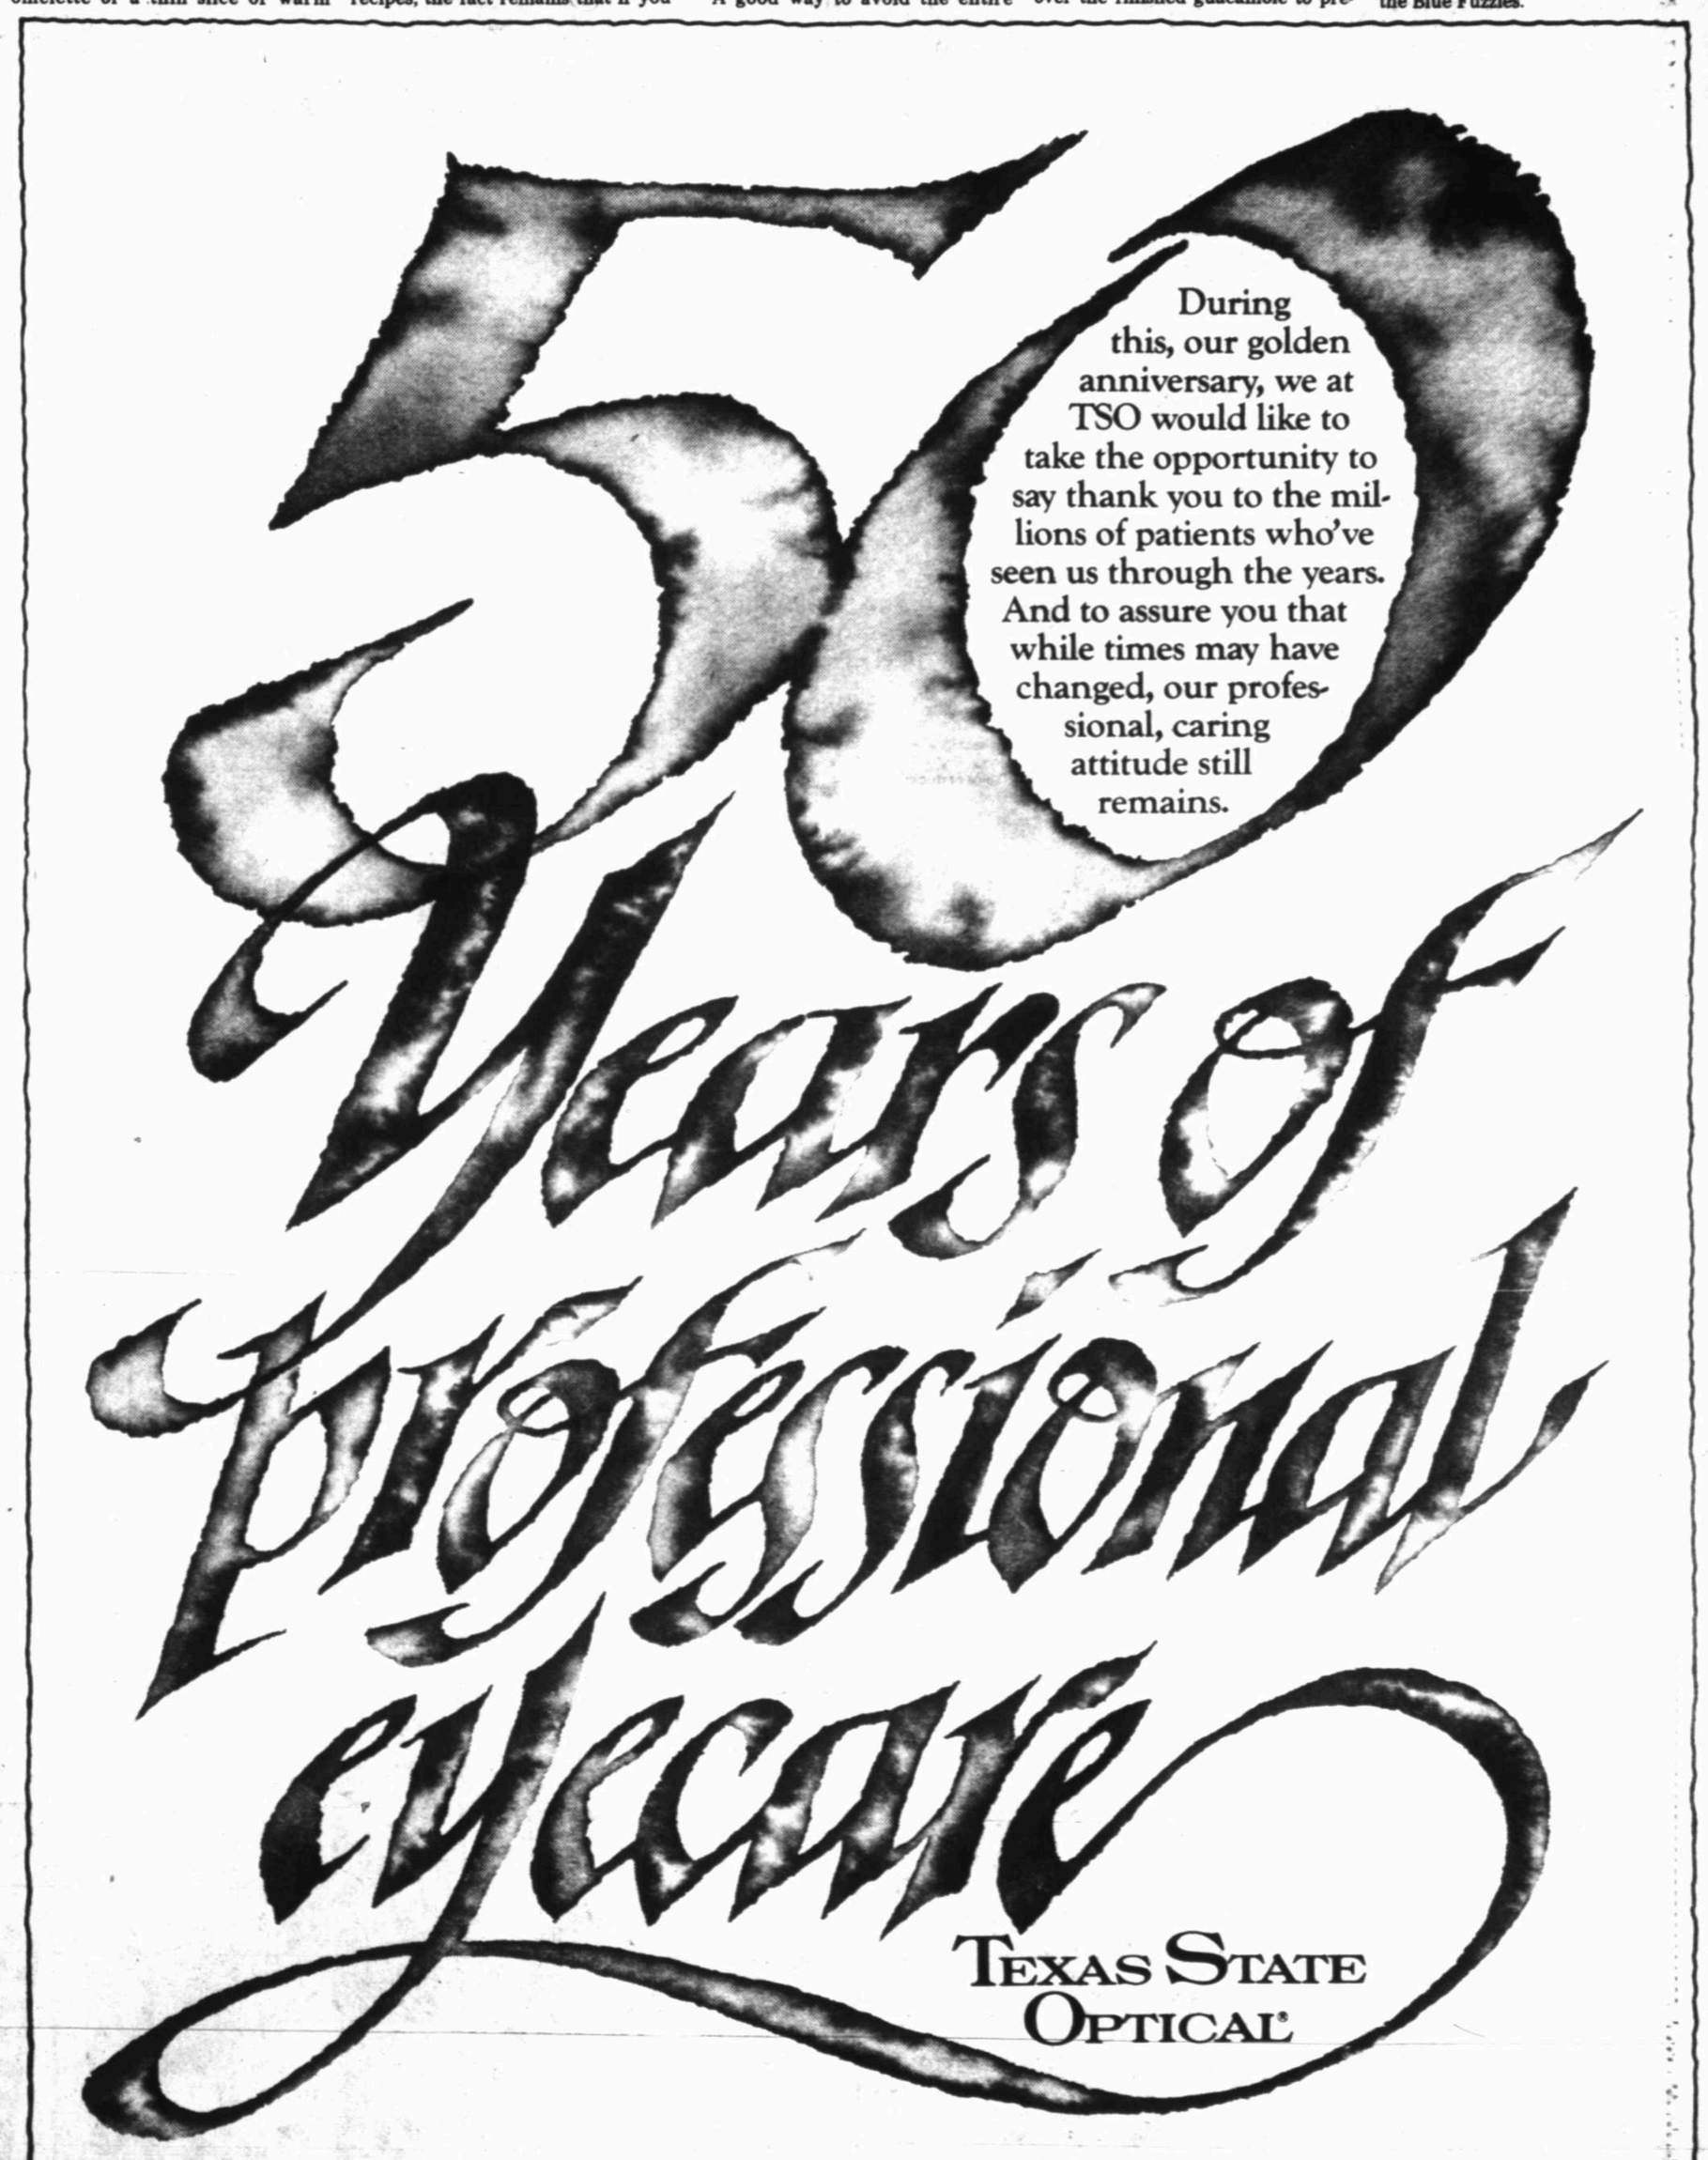

It's such a nice feeling when you know you haven't had to waste anything — that you have conquered the Blue Fuzzies.

Old hotel gets new lease on life

TOLEDO, Ohio (AP) — The Hillcrest Hotel was the pride of the city when it opened 55 years ago, but old age made it a laughingstock of the local industry. Now, its manager is counting on that age to give it new life.

The Hillcrest spans a full city block, a work of 1929 elegance that redecorators have largely hidden behind a modern decor. Solid mahogany doors have been painted, intricate brass door fixtures are dulled, and plastic potted palms share the lobby with modular furniture that seems out of place.

Manager Lois Boerst says the days of trying to make the Hillcrest look young are over, and its recent 55th birthday began a celebration of its age.
