Old-fashioned family picnic

July 4th is a time for getting together with the family and munching down on picnic food under a shady tree. The Hall family, from left, Terry, Natalie and Guy, observe the holiday Saturday in the traditional manner during the celebration on the grounds of the Museum of the Southwest. Arafat's hiding place hemmed in BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Israeli tanks and troops hammered Palestinian artillery batteries near Beirut airport Saturday then moved more armor up after sealing the gates to Yasser Arafat's enclave in an apparent drive to starve the guerrillas out.

But Lebanon's state television quoted Arafat as saying: "If I leave Beirut it will be only to go to Palestine." The radio said he made the declaration after meeting with a mediator conveying Israeli demands for the guerrillas to evacuate to Arab countries far away.

Witnesses said the battle lasted nearly two hours, during which the Israelis used ground forces and artillery against Palestinian emplacements in the Chouaifat neighborhood and on the eastern runway of the airport. It was the fiercest fighting since a U.S.-mediated truce went into effect June 25.

The Palestinians, some in positions near the Bourj el Barajneh refugee camp on the northeastern fringe of the airport, had the Israelis pinned down for a while, virtually silencing all Israeli ground fire, these witnesses said.

"This is what we will see if we go into (west) Beirut," one Israeli lieutenant told reporters at an emplacement north of Chouaifat, on the southern edge of the besieged sector of the capital.

When the gunfire subsided, the Israelis began moving tanks into locations close to the airport, while earth graders were digging entrenchments in the vicinity for tanks.

The Israeli command said in its account of the fighting that its forces returned fire from guerrilla lines in southeast Beirut. Military sources in Tel Aviv said the guerrillas fired bazookas and other light arms at the Israelis and the Israelis responded with tank and light arms fire for about an hour.

It was the heaviest fighting between the Israelis and the guerrillas since the cease-fire went into effect, and came after land mines wounded seven Israelis in Lebanon on Friday and Saturday, the Tel Aviv command said.

Israel acknowledges 270 of its troops killed so far in the invasion. Lebanese officials say more than 15,000 people, mostly civilians, have died.

At least 50,000 Israelis demonstrated Saturday in Tel Aviv against the invasion, the biggest such protest since the onslaught against the guerrillas began June 6.

Israeli magazine publisher Uri Avnery, who advocates recognition of the PLO, met with Arafat for four hours Saturday in west Beirut, Palestine Liberation Organization spokesman Mahmoud Labadi said. He did not elaborate and it was not known if the meeting took place before the fighting erupted.

Witnesses reported artillery and machine gun battles between the guerrillas and Israeli forces dug in on Beirut's southern flank, and Lebanese radio stations said the "raging artillery duels" touched off fires around the closed airport and the Bourj el Barajneh camp.

Associated Press correspondent Alex Efty saw shells exploding among houses just north of the science faculty building of the Lebanese University on the edge of Bourj el Barajneh. The earshattering blasts were interspersed by volleys of machine gunfire.

AP correspondent Terry Anderson, who watched from a hilltop vantage point, said shells were fired from the direction of Israeli lines and were landing on the fringes of Bourj el Barajneh at the rate of one shell every minute, sending up towering columns of smoke.

Traffic across the Green Line to west Beirut came to a standstill shortly after noon when Israeli armored personnel carriers took up positions on the Christian side of the main museum crossing point in the city's center. Only a trickle of traffic from west to east was allowed through.

Israeli troops also were seen closing the main crossing point of Galerie Semaan on Beirut's southern flank with oil drums bearing Hebrew characters and there was no traffic at all on the dual highway. Israeli tanks mounted with loudspeakers warned civilians to flee because "only a few hours are left."

Associated Press correspondent Tom Baldwin counted nine Israeli armored personnel carriers, each with nine to 12 troops, deployed on the Green Line from the mid-city museum crossing point to Galerie Semaan.

Twelve jeeps with troops wearing flak jackets and steel helmets patrolled the Christian side of the Green Line, Baldwin reported.

AP correspondent Aly Mahmoud was told by an Israeli officer at the Galerie Semaan crossing point: "We have sealed the intersection because we want everyone in west Beirut to know that we mean business. People in west Beirut are developing their own false sense of security."

Celebrating the roots of liberty

By WILLIAM RANDOLPH HEARST JR.
Editor-in-Chief, The Hearst Newspapers

NEW YORK — On July 4, 1776, John Hancock, a member of the Massachusetts delegation to the Continental Congress meeting in Philadelphia, signed the Declaration of Independence with a memorable flourish. His name, along with other signatories, gave "John Hancock" a lasting imprint in the English language as a living treasure in the annals of freedom as well as a subsequent synonym for an autograph or signature.

That was 206 years ago, but we must never allow that declaration to be taken for granted. This weekend is a time to remember the sacrifices and celebrate this nation's precious heritage of liberty and the pursuit of happiness.

John Adams told us how to manage. He was another member of the Continental Congress who later became the second president of the United States. At the inception of America's own Magna Carta, Adams wisely remarked:

"I am apt to believe it will be celebrated by succeeding generations as the great anniversary festival. It ought to be commemorated as a day of deliverance, by solemn acts of devotion to God Almighty. It ought to be solemnized with pomp and parade, with shows, games, sports, guns, bells, bonfires and illuminations."

Americans have shown their gratitude in all of these ways. But let us not forget — nor ignore — the price we must pay for keeping our freedom for 206 years. It is, of course, the spirit of independence and dignity of the individual which tyranny like communism totally disdains.

The somber side of this otherwise joyous anniversary is that the heritage of liberty has been too often trampled underfoot. Seeds of despotism have been planted and are sprouting in many regions of the world.

Individual responsibility for the conduct of our elected officials is the small price you and I must pay to preserve our freedoms and way of life. We must appreciate what we have and hold on to it for dear life.

Changes in school transfer policy creating stir

Will more families avoid approval process?

Staff Artist: Jan Drake

By HALLYE JORDAN
Staff Writer

It isn't difficult to enroll your child in the school you want him to attend. All it takes is the address of a friend who lives within the boundaries for that school.

It seems to be relatively easy. And it seems to be more simple than to try for school board approval of a child-care transfer request to another school. Many families already do it. Many more say they probably will, thanks to the school board revision of the child-care transfer policy last February.

The only people that really get hurt are the students, both those attending the now-crowded schools for child care purposes and those who reside in that neighborhood.

IN PAST YEARS, any transfer request made by parents on a child-care basis were administratively approved by the Midland Independent School District.

In Midland, many families are two paycheck or single-parent families. Midland is a town of economics. People work to move ahead or to make ends meet in a community where the cost of living is high — very high.

The single parent may go to work from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. Children of a two paycheck family may watch both of their parents leave for jobs at the same time. In the absence of older siblings in both situations, transportation to and from school and after-school supervision falls on a relative, friend, baby-sitter or day care center.

The costs are high and the situation often is inconvenient.

Many day care centers do not take or pick up children from school. Parents are unable to leave jobs in the middle of the day to pick up their children or take them to a day care center. With the recent elimination of full-day kindergartens in several schools, this becomes a problem.

As a result, day care centers that do provide transportation and those that are within walking distance from a school are greatly desired. And they're now greatly overcrowded — as are the schools they service.

On Feb. 9, the MISD Board of Trustees unanimously voted approval of revisions to the child-care transfer policy.

THE NEW POLICY mandates that transfer requests on the basis of child care will no longer be administratively approved. Instead, they will be administratively denied. Parents who receive denials are allowed to appeal the decisions to the school board. On June 22,

Housing rehabilitation fund application to be accepted

By LANA CUNNINGHAM
Staff Writer

Six months after receiving $1.094 million in federal Community Development Block Grant funds for 1981-82, the city of Midland is ready to take applications for spending $500,000 on housing rehabilitation.

Applications will be taken by the Human Relations Council beginning Tuesday. That process will continue through July 23. The office is located at 218 W. Illinois Ave.

The project is being jointly administered by the city, Human Relations Council and Midland Housing Authority — the same setup that was instituted several years ago before the city quit applying for the money.

Rehabilitation efforts will be targeted to substandard homes in south and east Midland, according to Susan Howell, CD coordinator.

"Owner-occupied houses in targeted areas can receive needed assistance to bring them into compliance with city standards," she said.

To be eligible for the money, persons must own and occupy their house and live within Census Tracts 1, 7, 8, 11, 12, 13, 14 or 15.

When applying, the person must bring proof of ownership, a 1040 income tax form and tax receipts.

In addition, the applicant's income

Shuttle astronauts prepare 'best spacecraft' for landing

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — Columbia's astronauts, brimming with patriotic fervor, buttoned up "the best spacecraft ever flown" Saturday and prepared for their Independence Day landing before President Reagan and 400,000 flag-waving Americans.

Touchdown was scheduled for 9:10 a.m., Pacific time, (11:10 CDT) today, the nation's 206th birthday.

Ken Mattingly and Henry Hartsfield were being directed onto a 15,000-foot stretch of California concrete for the shuttle's first landing on a paved runway. Flights one, two and three ended on desert sand.

Said flight director Harold Draughon: "The two things you can do wrong is run off the side and run off the end. We don't plan to do either."

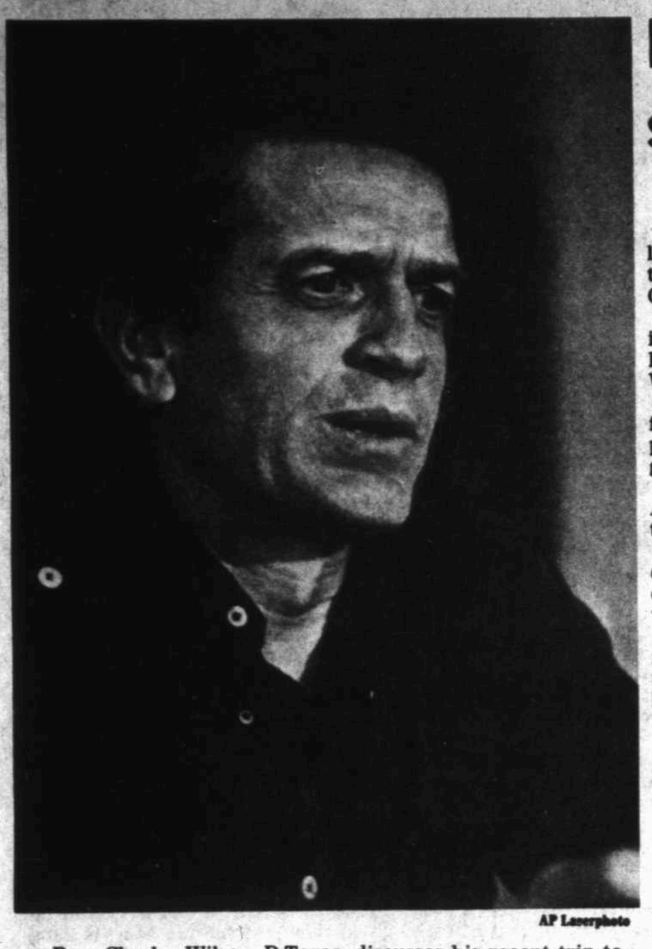

The weather was ideal for landing at Edwards Air Force Base and the spacecraft was in near-perfect shape. "In my opinion, it's been the cleanest flight we've had to date," Draughon said.

After the astronauts had retired for their final night in space, another flight director, Chuck Lewis, said they had completed all of their scientific tasks. Of 63 tests of the shuttle itself, he said 44 had been done and 14 more would be finished by landing.

"Assuming everything is accomplished tomorrow, we will have done 92 percent plus," he said.

Asked if he had any doubt the shuttle should be declared operational, Lewis answered with a succinct: "No."

Rep. Charles Wilson, D-Texas, discusses his recent trip to Lebanon with reporters on Capitol Hill earlier this week in Washington.

Lebanese dislike PLO, says Texas legislator

By CHARLES RICHARDS

WASHINGTON (AP) — Despite heavy destruction and loss of lives, Lebanese residents are ecstatic about Israel's recent invasion that drove out the Palestine Liberation Organization, says Rep. Charles Wilson, D-Texas.

"I think it's important to tell you, to try to convince you, of the intense feeling of relief the Lebanese people have toward the Israeli invasion. And I expected to find exactly the opposite," Wilson said Friday at a news conference.

Wilson is the first member of Congress to visit Lebanon since fighting broke out June 6 between Israel and the PLO. His trip was privately funded by the Leonard Davis Strategic Institute, a strategic study foundation in Jerusalem.

He presented a paper, entitled "Conventional War in a Nuclear Age," and participated in seminars with several ambassadors, military men and academicians.

Israeli officials drove him into and away from the Lebanese residential areas he visited. But Wilson said he made them stay in the car and walked alone several blocks away to talk with Lebanese who did not know the officals were with him.

"Every time, within minutes, 60 or more people gathered around me, and usually one or two young women spoke English. In every instance, their voice was one of appreciation and relief to the Israelis," Wilson said.

"They had horror stories about the PLO," said Wilson.

Wilson, a member of the Foreign Operations and Defense subcommittees of the House Appropriations Committee, told of one young woman whose house was destroyed and whose nephew was killed during the Israeli attack.

Despite the personal tragedy she had suffered, Wilson said, "she said anything was better than the PLO, that they had killed more than the Israelis had."

During his visit, he saw cars jammed bumper to bumper, household belongings strapped on top, headed south to lands the Lebanese hadn't been to in seven years because of the PLO, he added.

Israel has been heavily criticized, throughout the world as well as in the United States, for the attack.

Wilson called press coverage on the conflict "very unfair, partially because it's more sensational to get a picture of dead bodies than of a bumper-to-bumper caravan of cars."

He added, "I do not have a judgment as to the wisdom or morality of the operation. But any fairminded observer will tell you it was good for the Lebanese."

In talking of thousands of dead and hundreds of thousands homeless, newsmen have been using PLO figures, which he said are disputed by the residents he talked to, he said.

Wilson said from what Lebanese residents told him, he feels that the number of Lebanese dead is between 1,000 and 2,000.

"The dead in the tens of thousands are just not there," he said. "And the idea there could be 800,000 homeless is also absurd. There are not that many people there."

At the same time, destruction from bombing was "absolutely awesome. It looked like West Berlin in 1945."

Wilson visited also with Arab leaders during his visit. They were irate, he said. Egyptian officials felt if they hadn't signed the Camp David accord with Israel, the Israelis wouldn't have had the peace of mind to make the attack.

Other Arab nations also put much of the blame on Egypt, he said.

Wilson said he is "absolutely convinced" the Israeli invasion took the United States by surprise, but he said Arab nations feel otherwise, partially because of the U.S. vetoes of United Nations sanction votes against Israel.

"We are going to have a lot of problems repairing our relations with the Arab world. They feel we've overarmed Israel to the detriment of the rest of the Middle East," Wilson said.

Texas inmate released but not exonerated

PALESTINE, Texas (AP) — Thomas Burton Landreth Jr. has been ordered released from prison after serving 5½ years for a crime another man claims to have committed, but he's angry that he has not been exonerated.

The Texas Court of Criminal Appeals overturned his conviction on a sexual abuse charge, but did so on grounds that the indictment was defective.

"They (court of appeals) did me an injustice by dismissing the indictment," Landreth said at the Texas Department's Coffield Unit. 'It doesn't say I'm innocent. It makes me sick when I see what they did."

And he's angry that he spent 5½ years in prison for a crime that another man took responsibility for after Landreth had been in prison for one year.

Landreth, 33, of Charleston, S.C., said Houston police did not conduct a proper investigation. He said no medical or polygraph tests were administered despite his requests.

Kin of Oswald file libel suit against Enquirer

ROCKWALL, Texas (AP) — The two daughters of Lee Harvey Oswald have filed a libel suit against the National Enquirer, saying the tabloid falsely portrayed them as "social outcasts."

June Porter, 20, and Rachel Porter, 18, filed the state District Court suit Friday, contending the June 22 edition of the Enquirer exposed them to "public hatred, contempt and ridicule."

Attorney Frank Jackson said although the suit does not seek a specific monetary award, he will ask the court to award at least "several million dollars."

The suit said the article accused the young women of being "social outcasts, shunned by the communities of their residence, vilified by their neighbors and subjects of verbal and physical abuse and assault."

The Enquirer knew, or should have known, that the story was false and defamatory, the suit contends.

"The plaintiffs have never been beaten up by schoolmates, have never had their dogs poisoned, have never been terrorized by obscene phone calls or hate mail and have never been driven from any residence by harassment, vandalism or gossip," the suit said.

Iain Calder, president and editor of the Enquirer, said late Friday afternoon that he had not heard about the suit.

"There is nothing I can say until I see it," he said.

Oswald is suspected of being the man who killed President John F. Kennedy in Dallas in 1963. The daughters took the name of their stepfather, Kenneth Porter, after he married Oswald's widow, Marina, in 1965. Porter said neither he nor his wife would comment on the suit.

June is a journalism student at the University of Texas at Austin.

Bentsen pushes bill for Chronicle

WASHINGTON (AP) — Sen. Lloyd Bentsen, D-Texas, won unanimous approval from the Senate Finance Committee for a tax bill amendment to preserve current ownership of the Houston Chronicle.

The amendment would exempt Houston Endowment Inc. from a 1969 federal law preventing non-profit foundations from owning profit-making businesses. Without the exemption, Houston Endowment must sell the Chronicle by 1989.

Bentsen's amendment passed the committee by a 19-0 vote Friday morning, at the end of the committee's 15 hours of work on the huge tax bill. The amendment would let tax-exempt foundations own one newspaper and would let family-owned newspapers be donated to charitable organizations, avoiding estate taxes.

When he initially introduced separate legislation to exempt the Houston Endowment from the tax code in May, Bentsen said Congress should "encourage, rather than discourage, the ownership of independent local newspapers throughout the country."

After Friday's committee vote, legislative aide John Rafaelli said, "Bentsen's concern was trying to keep the Houston papers owned by people who are Houstonians."

Members of the Reagan Administration and Texas Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby — president of the competing Houston Post — opposed the amendment and Bentsen's separate bill.

Hobby had no comment on passage of the amendment. Assistant Treasury Secretary John E. Chapoton said Bentsen's proposal "would be a total reversal of principle" from the 1969 law.

Rep. Bill Archer, R-Houston, introduced a similar bill in the House in April. It is co-sponsored by 11 other Texans and a member of Archer's staff said a tax-bill amendment similar to Bentsen's probably would be offered in the House.

Sounds of military life still haunt frontier Fort Davis

By STEVE BREWER

FORT DAVIS, Texas (AP) — Trumpets sound "Assembly" and visitors to the Fort Davis National Historic Site can hear the ghosts of soldiers trooping onto the parade ground.

Clopping hooves and tramping feet mingle with the orders shouted by the fort adjutant. "Hail Columbia" and "The Star-Spangled Banner," played at martial time by an Army band, echo through the empty buildings of the fort.

Behind the buildings, the Davis Mountains rear stony fingers that dwarf the gravestones of the cemetery below.

The adjutant reads an message from President U.S. Grant, ordering flags at half staff for former President Andrew Johnson, who has died.

It's an eerie flashback into the past, all designed by the National Park Service to give tourists a feel of life at a military post on the American frontier. The sounds wafting across the empty parade field come from speakers concealed in one of the vacant buildings.

"We think the soundtrack adds a touch of realism to the fort," said park Superintendent Douglas McChristian. "It should provide a vivid memory for them."

McChristian sat in his office in the restored white barracks at the fort, watching visitors from across the country strolling past his open doorway.

"Last year, we had about 71,000 visitors," he said. "We're up 15 percent over that so far this year. People are adjusting to the price of gasoline and taking shorter trips.

"We have a lot of folks coming out of Midland-Odessa, Pecos and Fort Stockton. They're people trying to get off those hot plains and come into the cool mountains."

The fort sits in a wide canyon in the rugged mountains, within the city limits of the town of Fort Davis. At first glance, it looks like a village, with houses in neat rows and an American flag flapping in the breeze. But closer inspection finds the age of some of the buildings and the ruins of ones that no longer stand.

Visitors expecting a movie-set fort surrounded by a wooden stockade are disappointed.

"Stockades were fairly uncommon, despite what Hollywood would like us to believe," McChristian said. "That's the value of Fort Davis. It is one of the best of the Southwest forts. We have a generation of people here who have been educated by television and the movies, but the fort shows what it was really like."

Nearly 60 buildings or ruins make up the fort site, ranging from barracks to officers' quarters to bakeries and stables. Best preserved are the officers' quarters and barracks that were erected after the Civil War.

Fort Davis first was established in 1854 to provide protection for travelers on the Lower Road west to El Paso. At the time, area Apaches presented the biggest danger, but there also were bandits and Comanches who traveled south on the Great Comanche War Trail to Mexico.

The first fort began as temporary structures of pine and canvas. Later, a few stone structures were built.

The soldiers at Fort Davis fought Indians and helped protect travelers being drawn by gold to California until 1861, when the troops were sent to join in the Civil War and the fort was abandoned.

The Apaches used the interlude to wreak havoc in the area. When federal troops returned in 1867, the fort had been wrecked and burned by the Indians.

New stone and adobe structures were built and housed soldiers until the fort was closed in 1891.

"It was bypassed by the railroad," explains McChristian, a historian who specializes in frontier military history. "There were no more hostile Indians in the area. There was no reason to keep a post here."

The buildings of the fort remained in use by settlers in the area for another 40 years.

Guadalupe sheriff won't let refrigerator into Joe Chagra's 'home-like' jail cell

SEGUIN, Texas (AP) — Attorney Joe Chagra's attempt to increase the creature comforts in his cell in the Guadalupe County Jail have been thwarted by Sheriff Leslie "Pete" Kallies.

Kallies said he turned away two delivery men last week when they showed up at the jail with a new refigerator that the sheriff said Chagra, 35, ordered by telephone.

"No one bothered to check with me," Kallies said Friday. "And I don't know of anybody else who's got a refrigerator in his cell.

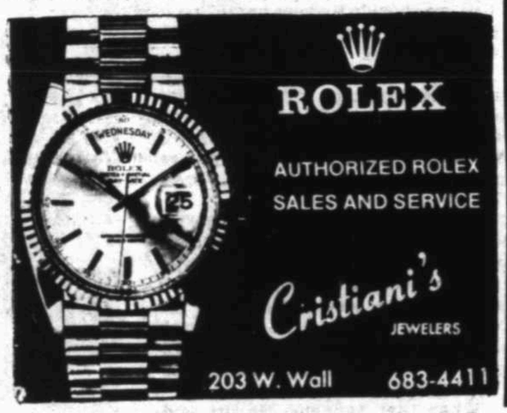

"So I sent it back."

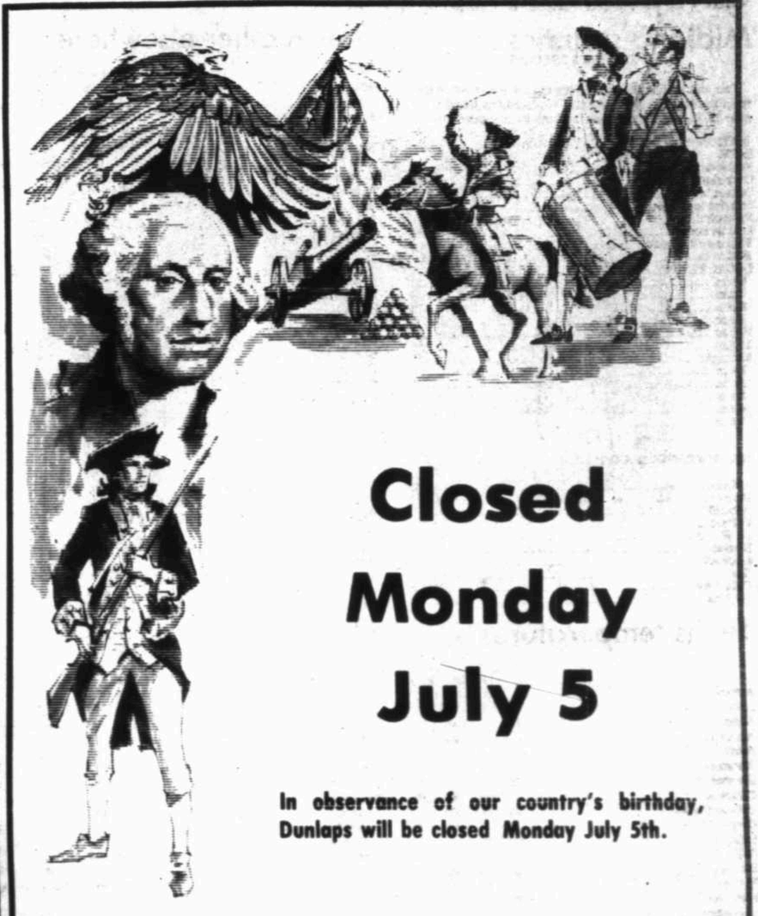

Chagra has been jailed here since he was arrested in El Paso on April 15 and charge with conspiracy to murder U.S. District Judge John H. Wood Jr.

Kallies said it was "just one of those litle-bitty refrigerators," not a big luxury model, that Chagra wanted installed in his cell.

Kallies acquiesced earlier this year when Chagra, jailed in lieu of $1.6 million bond, asked to paint his cell and redecorate it to create a more home-like atmosphere.

The sheriff supplied the paint and Chagra supplied the labor.

CRIME STOPPERS

Auto theft 'Crime of the Month'

One vehicle is stolen every six minutes in Texas. The motives for these thefts vary from joyriding, stripping and reselling the vehicles, to a means of committing additional crimes.

Auto theft rings steal over 80,000 cars annually in our state. Last year alone, 350 million dollars worth of vehicles were reported stolen. Car thieves, like home burglars, generally have an easy time of it. Their thievery is made simple by car owners who obligingly leave doors unlocked, which occurs in four out of five cases of auto theft, or who leave keys in the ignition, which occurs in one out of five cases.

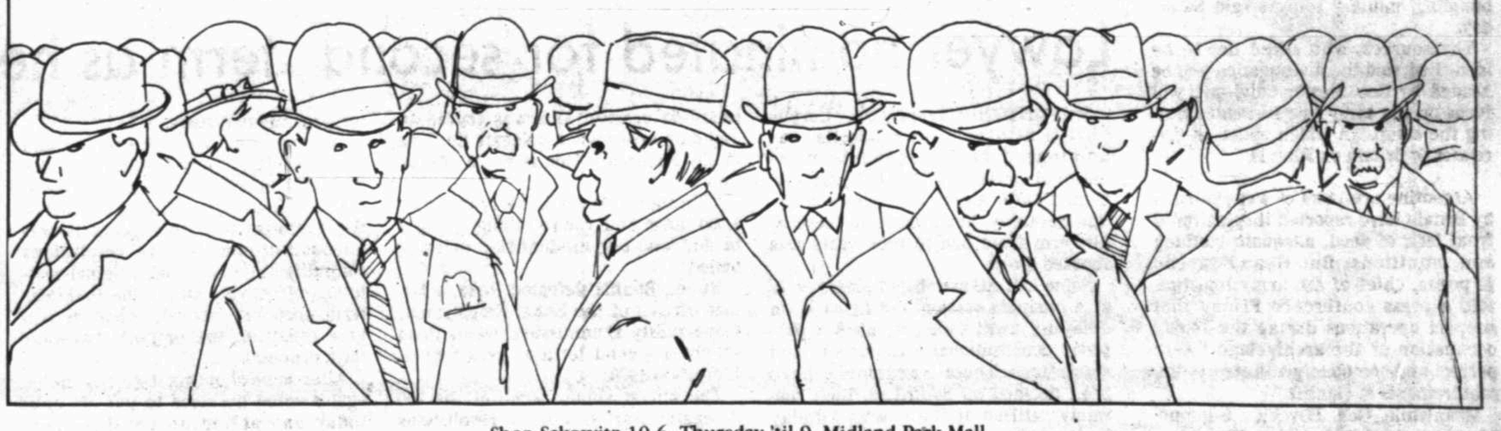

Vehicle theft is a serious crime that affects the entire community and results in higher insurance rates, property damage, injuries and loss of life from accidents. This crime has reached such serious proportions that it can no longer be controlled by law enforcement alone. Every citizen must exercise greater care over their property, thus preventing unnecessary crimes caused by carelessness.

For the month of July, 1982, the Crime Stoppers Advisory Council is focusing its statewide "Crime of the Month" on auto theft. Any citizen having information about auto theft rings is encouraged to call the anti-crime hotline at 1-800-252-TIPS. Cash rewards are available for information leading to the arrest and indictment of these criminals.

Help meet this problem head on by locking your car and pocketing the key. This can greatly reduce your chances of losing your vehicle to these thieves. Call 1-800-252-TIPS today and put an end to this activity in Texas.

(CRIME STOPPERS IS PRESENTED ONCE EACH MONTH IN COOPERATION WITH THE GOVERNOR'S OFFICE, CRIMINAL JUSTICE DIVISION.)

Bill has grab bag of small tax increases

By JIM LUTHER

WASHINGTON (AP) — When the Senate Finance Committee began to mold a bill calling for major tax increases last week, it faced an almost endless list of possible levies. And for each possibility there was at least one lobbyist.

"I can't believe the unemployment rate didn't drop with all the lobbyists here in these corridors," the committee chairman, Sen. Bob Dole, R-Kan., joked after his panel finished its work early Friday morning.

At least 300 lobbyists, lawyers and others with special interest in the tax laws had gathered while the Republican-controlled committee was writing and approving the bill. The measure will raise taxes by $98.6 billion over the next three years, representing one of the largest tax increases since World War II.

"It's clearly one of the largest single-year tax increases since the war and depending on how you calculate it, it may be the largest," said Roderick DeArment, the committee's deputy chief counsel.

With all the lobbying activity on the new bill, there was some concern that the committee — nine of whose 20 members are campaigning for re-election — would be unable to produce a bill. But doubters were surprised, not only by the panel's speed but by what went into the bill.

One person who closely follows the tax-writing process in the Democratic-controlled House Ways and Means said "Finance has sent us something we can work with. We didn't believe they could do that." He asked not to be identified.

THE BILL contains a grab bag of small tax increases rather than a series of major levies that would be likely to launch a taxpayer march on Washington.

At one point, Republicans who control the committee discussed one of those big taxes — a $5-per-barrel levy on oil — instead of a couple dozen smaller provisions. That proposal died and Republicans then considered a 5 cent increase in the gasoline tax.

President Reagan protested that an increase in the gasoline tax would place the burden on the working class. So that, too, fell by the wayside, along with proposed surtaxes on corporations and upper-income taxpayers.

Because of Reagan's adamant opposition, Republicans never seriously considered one of the biggest single revenue raisers of all: delaying the 1983 installment of the individual tax cut.

Hundreds of lobbyists lined up every day outside the committee room to act as representives of major oil companies, airlines, banks, insurance companies, utilities and labor interests, hoping to influence any committee staffer or member.

Despite their numbers, the lobbyists can claim only partial victories in the bill. Overall, the package takes away considerably more from corporations and high-earning individuals than it does from lower- and middle-income groups.

The committee's plan to reduce the tax deduction for unreimbursed medical expenses will mean higher taxes for millions but, committee aides say, there will be relatively few cases in which the increase will be a big one. A large portion of the 20 million couples who take a medical deduction only claim up to $150 of the cost of medical insurance — and that provision won't be changed.

DOUBLING THE cigarette tax to 16 cents a pack will raise a lot of hackles but it's unlikely to force many people to stop smoking. And tripling the tax on telephone services to three cents will cost a typical family perhaps 50 cents a month.

In some cases, a 10 percent withholding on interest and dividends will result in a slight reduction in earnings from compounding, but there will be exemptions for low-income and elderly taxpayers. Financial institutions are unhappy, but the committee met some of the objections by exempting some smaller banks, credit unions and savings and loan associations.

In any case, withholding is not a tax increase — it's simply ensuring that the government gets a share that it already is entitled to by law. After all, backers note, 11 percent of interest and 15 percent of dividends are never reported as income.

Perhaps most surprising about the action of the traditionally business-oriented committee was its willingness to make deep cuts in the big tax increase voted corporations last year.

Statue of Liberty falling apart

NEW YORK (AP) — On the 206th birthday of the nation she represents, the 95-year-old lady of the harbor — the Statue of Liberty — is "literally falling apart," according to the monument's superintendent.

And while a new commission appointed by President Reagan has raised hopes that France's gift to the United States will be restored, there is a chance that the statue may be shut down within five years, said David L. Moffitt.

"We've found portions of the statue out in the harbor," he said. Pieces from the hand and torch have washed up on a nearby beach.

"I don't want to be an alarmist, because I don't want people to think, 'Gee, we shouldn't go out to the Statue of Liberty because we might get killed,'" he said.

But he said a time may be approaching when the statue will be unsafe for visitors, and he will not wait for an accident before he closes it: "When I say approaching, I mean within five years we may have very serious problems."

Designed by French sculptor Frederic Auguste Bartholdi, the statue is made of more than 300 individually molded sheets of thin copper attached by iron bands to a frame. While the copper exterior and the framework are, for the most part, in good condition, the iron bands are rusting, causing the copper to shift.

When that happens, Moffitt said, seams open, rain pours in and the deterioration of the statue is hastened.

"Another extremely serious situation is the condition of the torch and the hand that holds the torch," said Moffitt.

Here, the problem is twofold: "It's not only that the iron which holds the copper together has deteriorated, the copper has oxidized in some places to a degree that there's no more copper left."

Moffitt said it appears the hand and torch will have to be replaced.

For nearly a century, the 151-foot-tall statue has stood in New York Harbor, buffeted by high winds, assaulted by salt air and washed by acid rain.

In addition, the statue shows effects of "the normal wear and tear" of about 1.8 million visitors a year, many of whom stand in line for hours to climb the 168 steps to Liberty's crown.

Last May, Reagan appointed a commission to raise money to restore the statue and nearby Ellis Island, which opened in 1892 and for many years served as a processing point for immigrants.

Headed by Chrysler Corp. Chairman Lee Iacocca, the goal of the Statue of Liberty-Ellis Island Centennial Commission is to raise as much as $200 million from private sources for repairs.

While most of the money raised by Iacocca's commission would go to Ellis Island, Iacocca said as much as $25 million would be set aside for work on the statue and its museums and other facilities. Engineers have estimated repairs alone could cost as much as $14 million.

The statue, dedicated by President Grover Cleveland, will be 100 years old in 1986. By then, Moffitt and commission members hope to have the money raised and the restoration completed.

"The Statue of Liberty itself is 200 tons of copper and steel and a fair piece of artwork," said Moffitt. "But the symbolism of the Statue of Liberty is important to every person in this country, and probably the world."

When the two occupants of this helicopter decided they were hungry Saturday morning, they "dropped in" behind the Kettle Restaurant on West Highway 80 shortly after 10:30 and went in for breakfast. Police, however, were baffled as to how they should treat the illegal maneuver, not knowing if they should ticket the pilot for illegal parking or some other violation. The matter was turned over to the Federal Aviation Administration.

Housing rehabilitation fund application to be accepted must fall below a level established by the Department of Housing and Urban Development. For a one-person family unit, the top limit is $13,000. For two persons, $14,900; three, $16,750; four persons, $18,600; five persons, $19,750.

According to HUD, total family income means all income from any source whatsoever before deductions and exemptions which all persons may be expected to receive during the 12 month period following application. This figure shall include all compensation for personal services such as commissions, fee, tips or bonuses.

Not included in that category are amounts received specifically for medical care or educational scholarships, lump sum insurance payments, casual gifts, reasonable amounts paid for care of children or aged family members or predictable costs of medical care for family members with a continuing illness.

Under this program, the homeowner's house must be capable of being repaired so as to meet minimum housing standards. And the cost of that repair must not exceed 65 percent of the market value of the house. No single grant for rehabilitation shall exceed $10,000 without prior approval of the City Council.

Work on the homes is expected to begin in August. The Housing Authority is hiring a consultant to coordinate the work, according to Ms. Howell.

In selecting qualified applicants, preference will be given to homeowners 62 years and older or handicapped or to servicemen or veterans with an honorable discharge and families of servicemen or veterans.

Further information about the applications may be obtained by telephoning the Human Relations Council, 684-5866. For answers to questions related to the project call the city of Midland at 683-4281, extension 206.

Argentine army's role to be investigated

BUENOS AIRES, Argentina (AP) — The army has established a commission to investigate its role in Argentina's defeat in the Falkland Islands, including soldiers' allegations of logistical bungling, military sources said Saturday.

The sources, who asked not to be identified, said the investigation will be headed by Gen. Nestor Calvi and will focus on the army's performance during the campaign which ended in surrender to Britain on June 14.

Argentine prisoners of war returned by Britain have reported they suffered from lack of food, adequate clothing and munitions. But Gen. Eduardo Exposito, chief of 4th army logistics, told a press conference Friday that support operations during the 74-day occupation of the archipelago "were perfect and completely adjusted to the requirements of combat."

Meanwhile, Gen. Reynaldo Bignone, who assumed the presidency Thursday, met in Government House with Economy Minister Jose Dagnino Pastore.

The new president promised in a nationwide address Thursday night to alter the economic policies followed by Argentina's military rulers since the coup d'etat which seized power from civilians in 1976.

Franklin wrote Declaration, couple says

By SCOTT KRAFT

NEW YORK (AP) — On his tombstone, Thomas Jefferson described himself as the "author of the Declaration of American Independence." But two self-styled historians say Benjamin Franklin — not Jefferson — deserves the title.

The declaration — 206 years old today— was really written by Franklin, say Maurice and Mollie Freedman, who analyzed the handwriting on an early draft copy of the famed document.

Jefferson and Franklin scholars call the theory "hogwash," "fishy" and "ludicrous," but they say no historians have attempted to study the Freedmans' theory closely.

The Freedmans, of New York City, say that "at every turn" they have found evidence supporting their hypothesis.

Franklin has become the Freedmans' passion.

Maurice, a retired archivist and systems analyst for the Royal Canadian Navy, and Mollie, who has taught handwriting analysis and document examination at Cooper Union in New York City, have trekked from library to library for 12 years, studying everything about Franklin and the declaration.

Their conclusions have been dismissed by most historians, but the Freedmans say Jefferson and Franklin experts have "merely rubber-stamped each other's theories."

Several years ago, the Freedmans claimed the parchment declaration was written in Franklin's hand in Paris and that Franklin signed all 56 names.

But they stopped short of saying publicly that Franklin wrote the original draft. The document historians say is Jefferson's original is in the Library of Congress.

Now the Freedmans say they have studied a nine-page document identified by scholars as a copy of Jefferson's first declaration draft. Mrs. Freedman says she found several hundred points of similarity between the handwriting on the document and that on other Franklin works, among them: m's and n's rounded at the top and double f's finished with a tie that retreats across the letters.

Freedman says the document is "replete with Franklin's literary style" and that it's only natural that the founding fathers would pick Franklin, who had the most writing experience of them all, as the principal author.

The Freedmans challenge historians to examine their evidence. "We will take the FBI as the final source on handwriting analysis," Freedman says. The FBI has not volunteered to analyze the documents.

The Virginia Historical Society, which holds the alleged Franklin-authored first draft, has assumed the document was a copy of Jefferson's original first draft. The late Julian Boyd, editor of the Jefferson Papers project at Princeton, wrote that the Virginia document was "perhaps the earliest copy made of Thomas Jefferson's...draft of declaration."

Francis Barclay is thought to have made the copy; his name is signed to the letter that accompanies it. But in a written analysis of the document, the historical society asked: "Who is Francis Barclay?" The question is not answered.

Barclay is a pseudonym Franklin used to hide his authorship, the Freedmans say.

"Franklin was a far-sighted person who was thinking of drawing up the Constitution of the United States," Freedman says. "He needed the support of the delegates and he wasn't out to wreck his relationship with them."

Lawyer nominated for second term as head of LULAC

SAN ANTONIO, Texas (AP) — Corpus Christi attorney Tony Bonilla was nominated for a second term as national president at the League of United Latin America Citizens convention Saturday, but a move to increase his term from one to four years was shouted down.

Some LULAC members became surly at a business session and insisted on delaying until today a vote on proposed constitutional amendments and resolutions. Those traditionally have been decided on Saturdays, then routinely ratified at the closing Sunday meeting of the convention.

Bonilla's brother, Ruben, who served two one-year terms as president before Tony's election 1981, presided at the business session and was trying to maintain order when delegate Ed Pena loudly shouted: "This is not a plantation."

"We came down here from Iowa 1,000 miles and you're telling us what to do," another unidentified delegate yelled.

Ruben Bonilla defeated Pena, a former official of the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission, when Pena sought a second term as president of LULAC in 1979.

The unrest among some of the 700 delegates started when a resolutions committee proposed a four-year term for the national president, although an original resolution sent to state LULAC chairmen proposed increasing the term to only two years.

"We can stay here all evening and trade insults," Tony Bonilla told the gathering in trying to quiet the dissent.

Ruben Bonilla, as national counsel of the organization, ruled that it was unconstitutional for the resolutions committee to change the original resolution, effectively killing the four-year term proposal. Instead, delegates will vote today on the original two-year term proposal.

After some shouting, convention delegates voted by voice to put off until today any action on constitutional amendments and resolutions, including a Bonilla-backed resolution for LULAC to set up the first national Hispanic political action committee to endorse and financially back candidates.

Tony Bonilla said later the disruption was caused by "old guard" LULAC members who were resisting a more active economic and political role for the nation's oldest and largest Hispanic organization. The group claims 100,000 members in 43 states.

Tony Bonilla said he hoped to win approval today for the PAC and two-year term proposals.

"I don't expect any strong opposition (to the PAC)," he said. "The national board unanimously endorsed it. But considering the mood of the delegates, I'm not sure. Some of the old guard that Ruben defeated seems to be emerging to oppose anything presented.

Curtis Mathes to close Athens plant

DALLAS (AP) — Dallas-based Curtis Mathes Corp. has announced plans to get out of the television manufacturing business, close its East Texas plant and lay off about 850 employees there.

Curtis Mathes President Ludwig A. Huck said Friday the firm will continue to operate about 650 franchised dealerships, selling televison sets made by manufacturers under the Curtis Mathes brand name.

Huck said the move was prompted by a combination of increased costs and reduced productivity.

About 150 employees at the company's Athens plant will be laid off immediately, with 700 more layoffs spread over an indefinite period, said spokesman Jeff Lightburn.

Lightburn said the company would "conduct a worldwide search" for a manufacturer that can build televisions to Curtis Mathes' specifications. The company advertises its sets as "the most expensive in America and worth it."

The Athens plant is the company's only manufacturing site.

Man dies from pet rattlesnake's bite

DALLAS (AP) — A 30-year-old Dallas man, hospitalized a month ago after being bitten by his pet rattlesnake, died after being bitten by the snake a second time, authorities said.

Stephen Harris died early Friday after being bitten on the left thumb by the 3-foot-long snake, according to a spokesman at Doctors Hospital.

The Dallas County medical examiners office has not ruled on the cause of death, pending results of toxicology reports.

Harris, a surveyor for a Dallas engineering firm, was bitten June 5 and hospitalized for two days.

His father, Richard Harris, said he believed his son was bitten late Thursday night while trying to feed the snake.

Animal control workers took the snake to the Dallas Zoo.

Bodies found in trunk of car in river

DALLAS (AP) — Sheriff's investigators were trying to identify the decomposed bodies of a man and woman who were shot several times in the head and put in the trunk of a car, which was found partly submerged in the Trinity River.

The car apparently was registered under a fictitious name, said Sgt. Larry Williams of the Dallas County Sheriff's Department.

An autopsy Friday showed both people died of multiple gunshot wounds to the head, according to the Dallas County Medical Examiners office.

The bodies were discovered Thursday night by two Dallas men traveling a river levee road in a pickup, who noticed a stench and reported the car to sheriff's deputies.

Investigators believe that whoever killed the couple hoped to sink the car until the rear of the sedan became hung up on the river bank, said sheriff's spokesman Jim Ewell. They probably were killed about a week ago, investigators said.

National Supply lays off 198 employees

GAINESVILLE, Texas (AP) — Cooke County's largest employer, National Supply, is laying off an additional 198 employees, bringing to 380 the number of employees the company has laid off this year.

Rick Williams, superintendent of industrial relations at the plant, said Friday's layoff notices are the result of a downturn in the oilfield equipment market, high interest rates and a drop in oil prices at the well.

Hurst man attempts to steal helicopter

FORT WORTH, Texas (AP) — A Hurst man has been indicted on a charge of trying to steal a $2 million helicopter.

Harmon Sumner Pilcher, 33, was arrested April 28 as he sat in a burning helicopter whose two engines had caught fire during an aborted takeoff at a Bell Helicopter Textron plant, authorities said. He was not injured.

Mediation alternative to trial

DALLAS (AP) — The dispute seemed bound for the backlogged Dallas County court system, either a drawn-out civil suit or — since there had been death threats — a criminal trial.

The dispute began last fall when the buyer and seller of a used car argued over a $200 down payment the seller refused to return when the buyer refused to complete the deal.

Their disagreement boiled into death threats.

The buyer went to the district attorney's office, wanting to file criminal charges. The district attorney's office referred him to Dallas' new Dispute Mediation Center. The dispute became DMS's first case in what supporters say has been a highly successful first year.

Richard Evarts, mediation center director, talked to both men — whom he declined to identify — and arranged a meeting between them where he moderated a discussion of their differences.

Three and a half hours later, having signed a settlement they both liked, the men shook hands and drove away.

Neither side lost nor won, Evarts said. But both left satisfied, a speedily reached, mutually acceptable agreement in hand.

And neither man was out a dime in legal fees.

TDWR issues report on revisions to Texas Water Plan

By BILL KIDD
Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — The Department of Water Resources has issued a draft report on comments received at public hearings earlier this year on revisions to the Texas Water Plan — revisions which apparently won't be completed until late this fall.

DWR Deputy Director Charles Nemir, speaking to a committee of the Governor's Task Force on Water Resource Use and Conservation, said the revised plan — which was to be ready for public comment in September — probably won't be ready for public review until "maybe November."

"I would suppose," Nemir said, "we're about two months behind schedule."

The revised plan is to go to the Legislature in January.

Nemir also reported some 260 rural water supply corporations and 240 city officials have responded to DWR's request for comments on the plan revisions.

The draft report on the public hearings, conducted throughout the state, notes that "a wide range of opinion, sentiment and expertise" was represented at the hearings — and that there is disagreement on a number of matters.

But DWR feels there was a "consensus of opinion" as follows:

—Water Conservation. Here, DWR says, there was agreement that "conservation goals and practices should be an integral part" of the plan.

This could be accomplished by "use of pricing policies that reflect the true costs of water projects and discourage increasing water use;" developing a state program of education (in schools and for the public) on water conservation; tax incentives or tax credits to businesses and industries practicing conservation; and metering water for agricultural use and applying water pricing policies "to discourage waste."

—Population/Economic Growth. "It was largely agreed," DWR says, "that water resource policy should be neutral with respect to growth and accommodate projected increases in state growth and water needs."

—Water Laws. The majority felt "some regulation" on groundwater is needed to "prevent waste and ensure supplies."

"It was largely agreed," the report says, "the state should assist in the creation of underground water conservation districts where none exist for the purpose of regulating groundwater and regulate groundwater in those areas where none is formed."

—Water Quality Management. Support for continuing programs of water quality management, including construction assistance, was widespread, with most participants favoring state loans or loan guarantees — while opposing loans, except in hardship cases.

"In addition, many thought the protection of groundwater from contamination and pollution should be considered..."

—State Financial Assistance. The consensus was that state aid will be essential, "given the anticipated costs of future water projects and the reduction of federal funds."

Most recommendations for state assistance were for low-interest loans or loan guarantees, or legislative appropriations for programs other than wastewater facilities.

—Bays and Estuaries. "Although it was widely acknowledged," the report comments, "that provisions for the maintenance of bays and estuaries should be incorporated into a state water plan, there was no concensus concerning the payment of costs for requisite freshwater inflows."

Furthermore, the report says, while provisions for instream flows and fish and wildlife habitats were generally recommended, there was no agreement on who should pay the cost.

—Research/New Technology. There was general support for additional state efforts to fund research and development efforts "in order to increase or extend water supplies in all parts of the state."

—Water Importation. "Although there was substantial criticism of any state importation plan, a large number...felt importation should be considered as an alternative..."

—Flood Protection. Where most agreed local governments have the principal responsibility for flood protection, there was a feeling the state should provide "some assistance" and "encourage the use of primarily non-structural measures to flood control."

"Most felt governments at all levels should discourage the development of flood plains and flood prone areas," the report notes.

Company unveils new F-16 fighter

FORT WORTH, Texas (AP) — General Dynamics Corp. has unveiled its newest version of the F-16 fighter-bomber, saying the latest edition can carry a weapons load 55 percent farther with the same amount of fuel.

The plane, called the F-16XL, will be sent to Edwards Air Force Base in California for flight testing, General Dynamics said Friday.

If accepted by the Air Force, it could be ready for full production next year.

The F-16XL has a new swept-wing design, with a wing span about 2 feet longer than the previous versions and a fuselage 4½ feet longer.

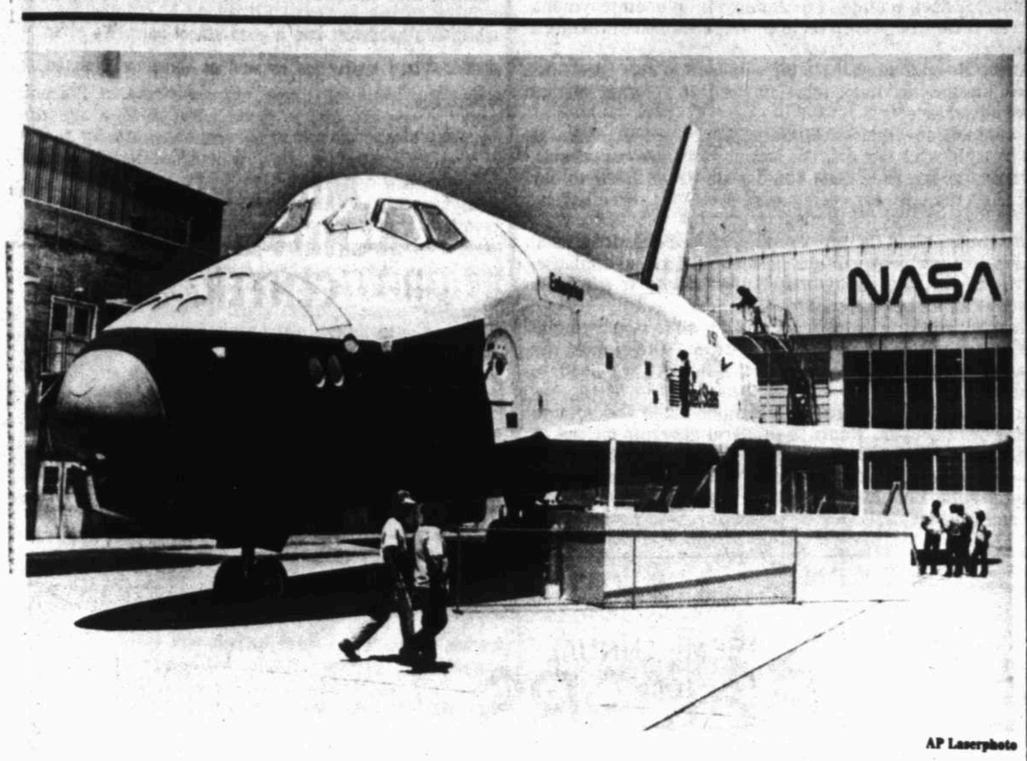

The new craft will have the same maximum speed — twice the speed of sound — and also will carry sidewinder air-to-air missiles and a variety of bombs.

About 80 percent of the components of the new version of the plane are taken from the old.

Workers at the NASA facility at Edwards Air Force Base, Calif., clean up the Space Shuttle Enterprise Saturday in anticipation of the arrival of President Reagan. The president will attend the landing of the Space Shuttle Columbia today and will speak from the platform erected next to the Enterprise.

Reagan won't endorse space station

SANTA BARBARA, Calif. (AP) — President Reagan's Independence Day greeting to Columbia's returning astronauts won't include an endorsement of the fifth shuttle orbiter or permanent space station sought by the space agency, a White House spokesman said Saturday.

Although the National Aeronautics and Space Administration had hoped for a presidential pledge to go ahead with the projects, deputy White House press secretary Larry Speakes said Reagan did not intend to make any specific announcements Sunday that would commit money to the future space program.

Reagan and his wife, Nancy, plan to fly by helicopter from their ranch near here to Edwards Air Force Base, Calif., to witness the July Fourth return of the space shuttle Columbia from its fourth and final test flight.

Speakes said the president will deliver general remarks reaffirming "the American dedication to continued presence in space."

Reagan also will stress "the importance of the space program to the American economy" because of the number of jobs it provides and pay tribute to "the technological advances as a result of space exploration that have made our lives better," Speakes said.

In a draft of the speech, the president says, "The conquest of new frontiers is a crucial part of our national character."

White House officials say Reagan won't make a decision on a fifth shuttle, estimated to cost $1 billion, and a permanent space station, with a total estimated price tag of $9 billion, until he begins developing a fiscal 1984 budget in November.

Currently, four shuttles are planned through 1987.

Reagan, though generally supportive of space initiatives, also has made a priority of cutting the federal budget and the growing federal deficit.

Reagan will lead perhaps 30,000 VIP well-wishers when he personally greets astronaut Thomas K. Mattingly and Henry W. Hartsfield as they descend from the spacecraft after landing, scheduled for 11:10 a.m. CDT Sunday.

In his remarks, the president will formally authorize the second shuttle craft, the Challenger, to take off atop a modified Boeing 747 for the trip to Cape Canaveral, Fla., where it is to be prepared for its first flight early next year.

Reagan second president to see landing

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — Only once before in 35 manned flights has an American president watched astronauts return from space and that same president — Richard M. Nixon — remains the only one to have seen a launch.

Ronald Reagan has been president during all four space shuttle flights, has talked to orbiting astronauts from Mission Control, and has invited shuttle crews to the White House. But he's never seen them leave for space or land before.

Nixon was aboard the carrier Hornet in the South Pacific when astronauts Neil Armstrong, Edwin "Buzz" Aldrin, and Michael Collins returned on July 24, 1969, from man's first landing on the moon. He watched them splash down and said afterward, "This is the greatest week in the history of the world since creation."

The president returned four months later to watch the launching of Apollo 12 in a driving rainstorm. He and Mrs. Nixon visited the launch control "firing room" afterward and the president promised, "We are going forward. America is first in space. We're proud to be first in space."

Vice presidents are chairmen of the National Aeronautics and Space Council by virtue of their office, but Spiro Agnew — in Nixon's first four years — took his job most seriously.

He was in the firing room for the launch of Apollos 9 through 17, missing only Apollo 15.

NEA head says Reagan policy threatens schools

By CHRISTOPHER CONNELL

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Public schools are "threatened as never before" by attacks from the Reagan administration and right-wing critics, the head of the National Education Association said Saturday.

Willard H. McGuire, president of the 1.6 million-member teachers' union, said the solution to the schools' woes lies in the ballot box "because teachers recognize there can be no educational excellence without political power."

McGuire, speaking with reporters prior to the first full meeting of the nearly 7,000 delegates to the NEA's 120th annual meeting, said his union would wage an all-out political drive in 1982 and 1984 to oust the Reagan administration and its supporters.

Although money woes seemed foremost on their minds, the delegates also were expected to take stands on issues ranging from backing a nuclear weapons freeze to banning Pac-Man and other commercial video games from the schools.

While the NEA meets here through Tuesday, its rival union, the smaller American Federation of Teachers, is holding its annual session in New York through Wednesday.

AFT delegates voted overwhelmingly Saturday to hold biennial, instead of the current annual meetings as a money-saving step, beginning 1984. Opponents, however, had charged that biennial meetings would make the union leadership less accountable.

The AFT's human rights luncheon honored Rev. Ernest R. Gibson, who led a successful fight last year to defeat a local tuition tax credit measure in Washington. AFT president Albert Shanker attacked the NEA for inviting Jane Fonda to address its human rights luncheon held last week, charging it was a publicity move.

He incorrectly stated the NEA had given Ms. Fonda a civil rights award, and drew surprised gasps from the audience. The NEA's civil rights award will be given Sunday to Arthur Flemming, whom Reagan fired in February as head of the U.S. Civil Rights Commission.

Tuition tax credits are " a multibillion (dollar) rip-off and swindle unmatched in modern legislative history."

The two unions plan to ratify an unusual joint resolution on Tuesday blasting Reagan's bill to provide tuition tax credits of up to $500 to parents of children in private schools.

McGuire, in remarks prepared for his opening address to the convention, derided tuition tax credits as "a multibillion (dollar) rip-off and swindle unmatched in modern legislative history."

The president has said the tax credits for families of 4.5 million private school students would cost the Treasury up to $1.5 billion a year and are a matter of "fairness" to parents who are taxed to pay for public schools but don't use them.

McGuire told a news conference, "It is my unpleasant task to report that the quality of America's schools is threatened as never before. A deep economic recession, rising unemployment, high interest rates, and record federal budget cuts are creating a fiscal crunch..."

He said the Reagan administration's education cuts "are forcing critical slashes in vital education programs, larger classes and thousands of layoffs."

In his convention address, McGuire portrayed teachers as besieged by right-wing critics. "The attackers assault our schools, they burn our books, they deny funding and even loans to our students, they defame our system and attack us directly," he said.

McGuire also belittled the president's proposed constititutional amendment to allow prayer in public schools. To loud applause, he said, "we barely have enough time and resources to teach the children. We cannot be expected to raise them also."

"We must tell all these people once and for all to stop trying to legislate or intimidate a confusion between the home, the church and the school. Just give us the support we need to teach," he said.

McGuire told reporters, "President Reagan, aided and abetted by a vociferous far right, wants the federal government out of public education ... the president tells us he isn't anti-public education. Yet (he) has set the nation on a course that would end federal support for public education and starve public schools at the state and local levels."

Donovan ready to get back to work

By MERRILL HARTSON

WASHINGTON (AP) — Labor Secretary Raymond J. Donovan says his battle to survive in President Reagan's Cabinet has been "most grueling" but that he can cope with lingering congressional questions about his fitness for the job.

Donovan says that during the course of a six-month grand jury investigation of allegations linking him to organized crime, "I've only allowed myself five minutes a day to feel sorry for myself."

"Am I angry, yes," Donovan told The Associated Press in his first wide-ranging interview since a special prosecutor declared last week that there was "insufficient credible evidence" to prosecute him.

Two days after the special prosecutor's report, President Reagan gave the labor secretary a fresh vote of confidence.

Donovan would not talk about allegations that had been made — that, as a New Jersey businessman, he once had business and social ties to organized crime figures, was involved in highway bid-rigging schemes and witnessed an illegal payoff by executives of Schiavone Construction Co. to a New York union leader.

"I am realistic to know that my reputation has been besmirched," he said in the interview late last week. "But at the same time, my character, I believe, has been strengthened. So my wife and family and I continue to look to the future rather than to the ugly past."

Donovan's spacious office provides a panoramic view of the U.S. Capitol, where members of the Senate Labor Committee promise new hearings examining the role of the FBI and the White House in his confirmation process.

The combative secretary winced when asked about the prospect of facing fresh questions despite Reagan's unqualified support. But Donovan indicated he's braced to confront the problem — and determined to stay put.

Reagan, he said, has "once and for all made it clear that I am his secretary of labor. I intend to serve in that post for as long as he and I feel that I am productive. And that could mean six-and-a-half more years."

The bespectacled Donovan, 51, reminded a reporter of Reagan's declaration that the "case is closed."

"A special prosecutor in a thousand-page report stated unequivocally that none of the allegations made against me were true," he said. "I knew that all along. If they (members of Congress) feel their duty is not done, that's their judgment to make."

Any new wave of Senate hearings likely would focus on the question of why the FBI did not forward to the committee all of the allegations against Donovan when the panel was considering his nomination.

Nonetheless, Donovan made no secret of his wish that the committee would move on to other business.

"My feelings at this moment are more for the country and our system than it is for me or my family," he said. "If I can use the word 'tragedy' here, it may well be that through the sensationalism that this investigation had taken on, an unauditable amount of people — good, talented Americans — may hesitate when called upon to serve this country."

Donovan said he bristles at suggestions by some that his ordeal "comes with the turf" of being a Cabinet officer.

"The fearful thing is that it is a phrase that seems to be a philosophy that is accepted in this city, which should be a shining city on a hill for all the world to see ...," he said. "Someone suggested the other day — and this really is the ultimate in comments — for those who are pushed to the extreme, that city should have a moat around it, inside the walls. Now that's a very cynical remark."

He said he views "with some resentment" assertions by his detractors that, aside from the allegations of one-time ties to organized crime, the labor secretary has been inept in running his department.

"I am proud of the job I have done and prouder of my people," Donovan said.

Donovan said, for instance, that his agency made a heavy contribution to Reagan's budget-slashing initiative, ushered through the Senate a new manpower plan that scraps basic elements of the old Comprehensive Employment and Training Act and revamped job safety and affirmative action programs.

Donovan insisted that "I have never felt insecure" despite demands by all 46 Senate Democrats that he step aside — and non-stop criticism of his performance in office by much of the big labor establishment.

But, he quickly added, "The president's words, nevertheless, were extremely encouraging to me and my family."

Leon Silverman, the New York lawyer who was appointed special prosecutor to investigate the allegations against Donovan, refused last week to characterize his findings as exonerating the labor secretary.

Baby albino wallaby just 'all feet now'

JACKSON, Miss. (AP) — The first albino wallaby born in captivity in the United States emerged from its mother's pouch looking like "a big white rabbit with ungodly feet and legs," a zoo official says.

"He's just all feet now," Lynn Swigert, director of the Jackson Zoo, said Saturday.

The baby wallaby, called a joey, resembles a small kangaroo, and indeed the two animals are related.

The joey has a younger albino half-brother — or half-sister. Zoo officials can't be sure about the second joey's sex because it hasn't yet emerged from its mother's pouch. It was born about two months ago, and has only peeked out into the world.

Swigert said the older joey, nicknamed "Snowflake" until a proper name can be found, is a male and was born about three months ago to a different mother. Snowflake emerged from the pouch last week.

Both animals, native to Australia, were born to normal mothers, Swigert said. Their father, Blizzard II, is a British-born albino.

The zoo's herd of 14 wallabies, including the first Blizzard, also an albino and born in England, was wiped out three years ago when a pack of wild dogs climbed the fence one night and killed them.

Public donations helped rebuild the herd.

Swigert is hoping that the younger albino joey is female so the zoo can begin an albino breeding program.

Bathers banned from beaches

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Lifeguards ordered bathers to keep out of the Pacific Ocean at nearby beaches on Saturday after fishermen saw three great white sharks 60 feet offshore, officials said.

"I talked to one skipper ... He said two were 10 to 13 feet long," said Scott Tye, chief lifeguard at Stinson Beach, about 15 miles north of San Francisco. "They also said one was fairly large. It could have matched the one yesterday (Friday), about 16 to 18 feet long."

The National Park Service employee was referring to a report Friday by fishermen who described a great white shark killing a sea lion about 150 yards offshore.

Earlier last week, fishermen told authorities a great white shark decapitated a harbor seal, and, a few days before that, another sea lion fell victim to sharks.

The sharks seen Saturday morning were "within 60 feet of shore ... very close," the closest they had been spotted in recent days, Tye said.

After Saturday's sighting, lifeguards banned swimming along Stinson Beach, a 2.7-mile stretch of shore with a backdrop of Mount Tamalpais.

Lifeguards and rangers posted signs whose red letters read: "Caution, sharks."

Jaycees finally elect president

PHOENIX, Ariz. (AP) — It took 42 ballots, but a 32-year-old construction company executive from Bossier City, La., was finally chosen as next year's president of the U.S. Jaycees.

Don E. Jones was elected Friday at the 62nd annual convention of the community service organization here. The voting started Wednesday.

Election officials said Jones got 3,365 of 4,999 votes while Robert Schultz, 34, of Yorktown, Va., came in second and Wayne Brushett, 35, of Moorpark, Calif., was third.

Through 41 ballots, none of the three had received the 2,500 votes needed to win. Election officials suggested the voting took so long because the nominees were considered so evenly matched.

The U.S. Jaycees has 275,000 members in 7,000 chapters throughout the nation. The organization was founded in St. Louis, Mo., in 1950.

Senate candidate goes to court

DETROIT (AP) — Republican U.S. Senate candidate Philip Ruppe, who lost a spot in next month's primary because of an election filing error, is going to court in a bid to get his name on the ballot.

Ruppe has asked the state Court of Appeals to overturn the Board of State Canvassers' decision not to certify his candidacy. And a campaign aide said an identical appeal will be filed Tuesday with the state Supreme Court.

Ruppe, a former U.S. representative who is one of three Republicans seeking the seat held by Democrat Donald Riegle, Jr., was disqualified because he did not sign a filing document.

It was signed by his campaign manager, Steve Mitchell, who thought he had the autthorization to do so, Ruppe said. Mitchell resigned his post Friday.

The primary is August 10.

Garbage clogs tunnel creating traffic jam

BOSTON (AP) — Eighty feet of garbage spilled by an overturned truck clogged a major highway tunnel and created a traffic jam about 10 miles long that lasted nearly six hours, authorities said.

No injuries were reported in the accident, but a woman apparently suffered a fatal heart attack in a car that was backed up in the traffic just before the tunnel, Metropolitan District Commission police officer Joseph Martin said.

"The tunnel stank and the officers said it nearly made them sick," Martin said.

The spill occurred when a tractor-trailer filled with garbage overturned around 6:40 a.m. in the northbound lane of the Southeast Expressway, which runs underneath Dewey Square.

Traffic was rerouted, prompting a nearly 10-mile backup while the tunnel was closed. It reopened at 12:30 p.m. after Department of Public Works employees hauled the trash away in five dump trucks, and washed and swept the garbage-slicked highway, department spokesman William Pizzano said.

During the traffic tie-up a passenger in one car, Mary Louise Donahue, 61, of Carver, Mass., suffered a heart attack. She was pronounced dead at the New England Medical Center.

The truck driver, John Bernard, 26, of Nashua, N.H., was cited for speeding and operating to endanger, Patrolman Thomas Cloonan said.

"A passenger said the driver was on a trial run with the load and that the operator was not familiar with it (the truck) yet," Cloonan said, quoting the passenger, Paul H. Drouin, 39, of Westford, Mass., in a police report. Cloonan said a court date was yet to be set.

The truck had picked up a load at a transfer station in the city's Roxbury section and was heading to an unidentified location north of Boston.

Cloonan said the driver had told police that "he heard a bang and realized the trailer unit went over."

The tractor was lodged against the left side of the tunnel wall, and the trailer was on its side across two traffic lanes and garbage spread between 70 and 80 feet to the rear, Cloonan said. There were 300-foot-long skid marks that extended 300 feet beyond the rear of the vehicle.

The truck was carrying 30 cubic feet of compacted garbage that expanded to 90 cubic feet when it spilled and loosened, Patrolman James Duffy said.

Bush: Health of economy only issue

Hearst Feature Service

WASHINGTON — Vice President George Bush regards the health of the national economy as the "only" issue before the American electorate this year and concedes that unless this improves by early fall the Republicans "definitely" will suffer losses.

In an interview, Bush predicted that the outcome of November balloting across the nation will be determined by the answer to a single question: "Does the guy going in to vote think he's better or worse off?"

Bush believes the answer will be positive for the Republicans.

He contends that the new 10 percent tax cut, which went into effect Thursday, will "stimulate the recovery that is already under way," although he is reluctant to predict when interest rates will "take a quantum jump down."

The vice president said that opinion polls he has seen show that even "people who are hurting" are blaming, not President Reagan, but his predecessors "for the mess we are in."

While conceding that unemployment and interest rates "won't be where we'd like to see them" by November, he suggested that voters "are going to be saying, "Hey, things are getting better and we know how we got into this mess in the first place."

But if the economy remains in the "doldrums," said the vice president, the GOP will be unable to "avert losses."

Bush also vehemently denied allegations that American foreign policy is "in disarray" and suggested that no one look "for any drastic changes" or "dramatic shifts" in policy as a result of Secretary of State Alexander Haig's impending replacement by George Shultz.

He said that a change in office does not imply a change in foreign policy because it is the president and not the secretary of state who "makes foreign policy decisions."

The vice president said he is confident the OPEC oil cartel will not try to impose another crippling embargo on the West and held out hope for improved relations between the United States and the Peoples' Republic of China.

Sitting in his office, a couple of doors down the hall from Reagan's Oval Office in the West Wing of the White House, the tall, 58-year-old vice president also said that the U.S. would be "very flexible" and offer "some relief" to Poland once the communist authorities lift martial law, release labor leader Lech Walesa and resume negotiations with the Solidarity labor union.

Bush said that although voters are concerned about the nuclear freeze issue and disarmament "the American people understand that if the freeze benefits the Soviets, they don't want it."

The vice president also said he does not believe the Equal Rights Amendment, which died three states short of ratification last Wedneday, will be a campaign issue since it "doesn't show up as a major determinant of how somebody is going to vote."

Bush said he will campaign extensively this fall for congressmen, senators and governors, with decisions on where he will travel and for whom he will campaign to be determined by his staff and the White House political office.

But the vice president insisted he intends to stay clear of primary battles, including a fight in Connecticut for the Republican U.S. Senate nomination between his brother, Prescott Bush, and incumbent Lowell Weicker.

Bush said he likes his job, has an exceptionally warm and close personal relationship with Reagan and expects the president to seek re-election in 1984.

The vice president also went to great length to deny allegations by Haig's associates that he was part of a White House team which had leaked derogatory information about Haig's conduct.

"I just haven't played that game and I just wouldn't do it," Bush said. "Reagan's too decent a man to be served in that fashion. I just wouldn't be a part of that and I haven't been."

Army Secretary will probe soldier's death

COLUMBUS, Ga. (AP) — The secretary of the Army will investigate Fort Benning's handling of the disappearance of a soldier found dead more than two months after she vanished, authorities say.

The body of Pfc. Renee D. Blackmore, 21, was found last Sunday six miles south of Cusseta. Agents of the Georgia Bureau of Investigation said the cause of her death may never be known because of advanced decomposition.

The Army listed Miss Blackmore as absent without leave following her disappearance on April 29.

Miss Blackmore's parents, now divorced and remarried, sent letters and made telephone calls to congressmen and to Secretary of the Army John O. Marsh Jr., asking for an inquiry and complaining about the way their daughter's disappearance was handled.

The parents and stepparents — Frank and Paula Blackmore and Donna and Joe Reitman, all of Phoenix, Ariz. — said they were not notified by post authorities that the young woman was missing.

However, Fort Benning public information officer Lt. Col. Wayne Andrews said records show the family was told or knew of Miss Blackmore's status on May 5. He added that her disappearance had been investigated from the first day.

Lawn-chair pilot has no regrets

By ROBERT JABLON

LOS ANGELES (AP) — All Larry Walters has as a memento of his 3-mile-high flight in a balloon-propelled lawn chair is an empty plastic soda bottle.

"I'm going to hold onto it. I'm going to have it bronzed," said the 33-year-old truck driver.

But it will be a long time before he forgets taking off Friday morning from the back yard of his fiancee's home in San Pedro, lashed to an aluminum lawn chair buoyed by 45 weather balloons and weighted with jugs of spring water for ballast.

During the 45-minute flight, he soared to 16,000 feet, was spotted by pilots of two jetliners, got so cold he became numb and had to shoot out some of the balloons with a BB gun to make his flying chair descend.

His journey ended unceremoniously with his contraption wrapped around a power line in Long Beach, about 20 miles from where he started.

"My mother thought I should be institutionalized and probably still does, but she's proud of me," Walters said Saturday, adding that he'd dreamed of soaring into the sky on a weather balloon since he was 13 years old.

He was surprised at the widespread publicity his antics generated.

"I knew it would bring a little attention, but I thought they would have the space shuttle on the front page," he said. "The phone wouldn't stop ringing. We finally had to unplug it."

He added with a grin, "My sister wants me to get an agent."

As for the trusty lawn chair, Walters gave it away to some youngsters who helped pull his contraption off the power lines — police had turned off the electricity when they saw where he was heading. He also gave the kids autographed pieces of the 6-foot balloons.

"I would have junked it, to be honest," he said of the chair. "It served its purpose."

He took along the soda for refreshment.

The Federal Aviation Administration said Walters had been spotted at 16,000 feet by pilots for Delta Air Lines and Trans World Airlines, and FAA regional safety inspector Neal Savoy said Friday, "We know he broke some part of the Federal Aviation Act, and as soon as we decide which part it is, some type of charge will be filed."

On Saturday, FAA officials were still scratching their heads.

"It's all new to everybody around here. We're just trying to get the facts together," said an FAA duty officer who refused to give his name. The officer said some sort of charges probably would be filed this week.

But Walters said he has no second thoughts about the adventure.

"God, no," he said. "The more I look at it, the more I'm glad I did it. It's something for when I'm an old man. So many people have dreams and they never follow through on them."

Bus hijacker shot by police, then wife

JASPER, Ark. (AP) — A self-proclaimed Messiah and his wife commandeered a bus and held 14 hostages for 2½ hours Saturday, then were shot and wounded by police, officials said. The man then was killed by his wife, who also fatally wounded herself.

State Police Sgt. Jim Thomas said the couple, Keith Haigler, and his wife, Kate, got off the bus at the end of the 4½-hour ordeal, knelt on the bridge and opened fire with pistols in the direction of officers at a barricade 60 yards away.

Thomas said the officers returned fire, hitting each suspect in the shoulder, and Mrs. Haigler then shot her husband in the face and turned her pistol on herself.

Mrs. Haigler was taken to Boone County Hospital in Harrison, 15 miles away, where she died, Boone County Coroner Henry Kirby said.

State police, sheriff's officers and witnesses gave the following account of the incident:

The Haiglers commandeered the Continental Trailways bus about 12:30 p.m., stopping it on a bridge over the Little Buffalo River. At that time there were 18 people on the bus, including the suspects.

The driver was immediately released to relay to police the Haiglers' demand that they be granted an interview with Jim Caldwell, news director of KYTV in Springfield, Mo., or they would shoot a hostage every half-hour. An unidentified woman later fainted and also was allowed off the bus, leaving the Haiglers with 14 hostages.

The bus blocked holiday traffic in the scenic outdoor recreational area 125 miles north of Little Rock.

Flares from Israeli jets light up the early morning skies over West Beirut Saturday where nearly 8,000 Palestinian guerrillas have been trapped by encircling Israeli forces. The mock air raids are seen as part of a war of nerves being waged against the guerrillas in an effort to force them to disarm and leave.

Beirut war may come down to street fighting

By JOHN HARRIS
Hearst Feature Service

WASHINGTON — An Israeli attack on West Beirut, if it comes, is likely to involve costly, bloody street fighting in a 4,000-year-old city, much of it already in ruins as a result of Christian-Moslem warfare that has killed more than 100,000 people.

The Israelis are reported to have concentrated a crack infantry brigade, trained in house-to-house fighting, on the southern fringes of West Beirut and on the Christian side of the "green line," a desolate, sinister no man's land that separates the Moslem and Christian areas of the city.

The Israelis' foe, an estimated 5,000 to 7,000 guerrillas of the Palestine Liberation Organization (PLO), has reinforced existing barricades of overturned buses, barbed wire, mounds of rubble and minefields throughout the sector, once the tourist and commercial center of Beirut, a city founded by the Phoenicians about 2,000 B.C.

The PLO forces, furthermore, are interspersed (some say deliberately) among the area's civilian population, estimated at more than 750,000. The PLO's headquarters, located in a cellar complex three stories underground, is in the midst of a particularly densely-populated area of high-rise apartment houses and shops.

"Street fighting is costly and complicated," Israel's Maj. Gen. Aharon Yariv, a former chief of military intelligence, observed here with a shrug last week, in response to speculation that the Israeli army was poised to attack West Beirut.

American officers here said street fighting — officially termed "combat in built-up areas" — such as that experienced by U.S. forces in Hue during the Viet Nam war, in Seoul in the Korean War, and in countless cities in France and Germany in World War II, was rendered complex by problems of locating enemies amid hiding-places afforded by buildings and cellars.

"You've got to watch all around you all the time," one officer said. "Snipers can be everywhere, firing from inside rooms and from behind every vehicle. You've got to go into every house, every building, every room, with hand grenades and submachine-guns, to root the enemy out. It's slow, tough, dangerous work."

One street fighting technique, the officer explained, entails moving along a street from inside its buildings. To do this troops have to smash their way through walls from one building to another, often without knowledge of enemy strength or armament in each succeeding structure.

Some of the worst casualty tolls of World War II were suffered by Soviet and German forces in the battle for the Russian city of Stalingrad, a conflict that involved savage street fighting by entire infantry divisions, supported by heavy artillery and aircraft.

In Beirut's Christian-Moslem strife, which erupted with particular ferocity in 1975 and 1976, heavy fighting swept through the city's tourist center. In what became known as the "battle of the hotels," some of the world's most elegant hostelries were reduced to blackened ruins.

The hotels, located on a strategic waterfront area of the city, are now PLO fortresses, according to authoritative sources, and the task of dislodging guerrillas from them would undoubtedly involve the use of tanks and perhaps aircraft.

One hotel, the Commodore, located several blocks from the waterfront, might create particular news headlines if it becomes involved in street fighting. The Commodore houses Beirut's "press center," and is the residence of several hundred correspondents from throughout the world, assigned to cover the Lebanese war.

In addition to recent, brutal Moslem-Christian warfare, which cost an estimated 100,000 lives and often involved the use of heavy artillery against apartment houses, and more recent Israeli bombing and shelling, the ancient streets of Beirut have long been witness to death and destruction.

Beirut — which featured a famed school of law in the 3rd Century A.D., during its Roman era — saw cruel fighting when it was conquered by the Arabs in 635 A.D. Crusaders under Baldwin I took Beirut in 1110, and the city was besieged by Saladin in 1182.

In the 19th Century the streets of Beirut saw more bloodshed, during a revolt against the Turks. Egypt's Ibrahim Pasha captured Beirut from the Turks in 1830. But in 1840 the city was shelled by British and French ships, to enable the Turks to return. Ironically, France attacked Beirut again in World War I, and captured it from the Turks, this time for good.

Returning journalists tell about war

LONDON (AP) — A journalist who was with the Falkland Islands task force reported Saturday that he saw a British medic kill a badly wounded Argentine in what he called an act "of some kindness from one soldier to another."

Another correspondent told of unconfirmed reports that Argentines shot British prisoners during the 74-day undeclared war in the South Atlantic.

The returning journalists, who now are free to write about the Falklands campaign without military censorship, also claimed there were strategic errors and security leaks that cost the lives of British soldiers who recaptured Britain's island colony from Argentina on June 14.

"There were unconfirmed reports of British soldiers killing wounded Argentines, more out of compassion than brutality, and of British prisoners being shot by their captors," wrote John Witherow in Saturday editions of The Times of London.

He said without elaboration that "none of these has been verified by independent witnesses."

BUT CORRESPONDENTS Bob McGowan and Tom Smith said in a story in the Daily Express that they witnessed such an incident involving an Argentine whose stomach was blown away while he cleared mines around Goose Green under orders from British paratroopers who captured the town May 28-29.

"Still staggering, his entrails poured out over his shirt. He was on fire," the story said. "Humanely, a paramedic took out his pistol and put a round through his head. It was not a savage act, but one of some kindness from one soldier to another."

British military authorities have refused to comment on the reports pending an inquiry ordered by Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher into the Falklands conflict and the events leading up to it.

The Times and Daily Express reporters said British paratroopers operating in the hills at night fired on each other on at least two occasions.

Robert Fox of the British Broadcasting Corp., writing in the Financial Times, said commanders on the islands were horrified by press reports that British forces were "poised to attack Darwin" before the assault began on the town west of Stanley, the Falklands capital.

"HOW THIS came to be given out will be a matter of endless debate," he wrote, adding that during the night the Argentines reinforced the Darwin-Goose Green area "with three companies by helicopter... (and) Brig. (Julian) Thompson nearly canceled the whole thing."

British officials have said 17 British and 250 Argentine soldiers were killed in the battle.

Gareth Parry of The Guardian said British correspondents in the battle zone were "very happy" not to mention that Argentine bombs failed to explode because of faulty fusing. But "to our horror," the failures were given wide publicity in London and "the day after, the Argentines got their fusing right," Parry said.

McGowan and Fox also reported that Welsh Guardsmen aboard the troop landing ship Sir Galahad arrived at Bluff Cove on June 8 prior to the final assault on Stanley, and for five hours no effort was made to unload Rapier anti-aircraft missiles to protect the ship.

During that time, the guardsmen sat on the ship watching films, and when Argentine jets attacked, said McGowan, "it was like a turkey shoot."

He and Fox contended the deaths of 50 guardsmen in the attack on the Sir Galahad, the worst single-day toll for the British, could have been avoided.

The British have said they lost 256 men, while Argentina reported 645 of its soldiers killed or missing in the battle for the Falklands.

American jazz musicians perform in U.S.S.R.

By DAVID MINTHORN

MOSCOW (AP) — American jazz briefly warmed the cool relations between the United States and the Soviet Union Saturday, as 700 Russians in a packed auditorium cheered and clapped through an impromptu East-West jam session.

Keyboard virtuoso Chick Corea and vibraharpist Gary Burton, the best-known American jazz musicians to visit the Soviet Union since 1975, invited the Soviet musicians to sit in after both sides had presented separate performances.

The crowd responded with ovations.

"These people seem to know a lot about us and our music," remarked Corea. "We try to communicate ideas and concepts that are international and universal."

COREA AND BURTON played a melodic program that stressed lyrical improvisations on old standards, such as "All the Things You Are."

Then they vacated the stage to hear Soviet jazzmen show their stuff with big band sounds, piano and guitar solos and progressive rock.

"They have a tendency to pattern themselves after famous American groups, but I was quite impressed with several of them — a drummer, a trumpet player, a pianist and the alto sax player in the rock band," Burton said.

The two Americans invited four Soviet musicians to sit in with them for a jam session on a stage strewn with cords, wires, microphones, amplifiers, and high banks of powerful speakers.

"We have to keep the group pretty small or it gets unmanageable," Burton remarked, as a Soviet drummer, pianist, saxophonist and bass guitarist sat down to jam.

After two swinging standards, greeted with ovations, the drummer vacated his seat for a colleague who also wanted to have the experience of playing alongside the Americans.

COREA AND BURTON, who won a 1979 Grammy award for their album "Duet," were invited to the Soviet Union by U.S. ambassador Arthur Hartman as part of a series of events to expose Soviet audiences to American music and other contemporary art.

They gave concerts for small, invited audiences Thursday at the U.S. consulate in Leningrad and Friday at Hartman's residence in Moscow. Saturday's show, arranged by the Moscow Jazz Club, was their only Soviet-sponsored appearance. They will perform again on Monday at Hartman's Fourth of July reception.

Saturday's concert was also an invitation-only affair. About 50 frustrated Soviets stood outside, vainly seeking admission to the packed auditorium.

American jazz musicians have traditionally been well-received in the Soviet Union. Greats like Duke Ellington, Earl Hines and Benny Goodman have played here. But the last well-known group to play in the Soviet Union was the New York Jazz Repertory Co. in 1975.

A few Western jazz recordings and tapes are offered from time to time in Soviet shops, but the main source of such music is shortwave broadcasts beamed from abroad.

One indication of jazz's popularity in the Soviet Union was the reception accorded Willis Conover, a disc jockey who has broadcast jazz into the Soviet Union since 1955 for the Voice of America.

CONOVER APPEARED on stage to introduce Corea and Burton and the audience applauded in recognition as soon as they heard his voice. Later, he was surrounded by autograph seekers.

Mubarak thanks U.S. efforts

CAIRO, Egypt (AP) — President Hosni Mubarak thanked the United States today for its "constructive efforts" on behalf of Middle East peace, and said he hoped for American help in resolving the Lebanese crisis.

In a message marking U.S. Independence Day, Mubarak said he hoped the "friendly relations" between Egypt and the United States would continue "for the service of international peace and security."

"On this occasion, I want to express my appreciation for the constructive efforts by the United States to achieve peace in the Middle East, hoping for a positive American attitude to impede the deterioration of the painful situation in Lebanon, to safeguard its unity and preserve the legal rights of the Palestinian nation," Mubarak said.

English police hunt suspected triple killer

MALTON, England (AP) — Police armed with rifles and shotguns today tightened a ring around a Yorkshire woods where a suspected triple killer was believed to have been cornered after a two-week manhunt.

Police converged on the woods surrounding the tiny village of Hutton Ambo, about three miles from here, after a social worker spotted a man near her home who fit the description of the fugitive, identified as Barry Prudom, 37.

Tracking expert Eddie "Tonto" McGee, accompanied by police marksmen and tracker dogs, picked up the trail close to the woman's home and followed it to the densely wooded area, where police believe Prudom is hiding, cold and wet.

A North Yorkshire police spokesman said officers searched homes and buildings in the area and staked out positions around the village Friday.

Police urged would-be spectators to keep out of the area, warning that the fugitive might try to shoot his way out.

"He has shown that he's prepared to kill to avoid arrest," said a senior police source who asked not to be identified. "We have no reason to believe that he'll surrender quietly if we run him down."

McGee, a 45-year-old ex-paratrooper and author of several books on survival, was brought into the search last week after a 1,000-man police dragnet failed to capture the gunmen accused of killing two policemen and an electrician. Police have given no motives for the shootings.

Police sources said Prudom is believed to have slipped through the earlier dragnet twice using disguises and bluffs.

Kate Wood, the social worker who tipped police Friday, told officers she saw a man fitting Prudom's description near a thicket about 60 yards from her home.

Mrs. Wood told police the man, wearing an army-type jacket and a blue woolen hat, moved cautiously from the thicket and crouch low when a car passed on the road.

Police said they believe Prudom, said to have learned survival techniques from McGee's books, has been lying low for the past few days.

The area around Hutton Ambo offers ample cover, with dense woods, tall grass and a river that could break a scent being followed by tracker dogs. A railway station is nearby.

McGee, who learned his craft from native trackers while serving with the military in remote parts of the world, was nicknamed "Tonto," after the fictional Lone Ranger's Indian companion, because of the tracking skills he showed during his army days.

Arabs visit world capitals

KUWAIT (AP) — High-ranking Arab emissaries will visit Moscow and other major capitals, seeking to intensify pressure on Israel to withdraw its troops from Lebanon, Kuwaiti sources said Saturday.

The foreign ministers of Morocco and Kuwait, along with a representative of the Palestine Liberation Organization, will go to Moscow today, the sources said. Other groups will visit the capitals of the other four permanent representatives on the United Nations Security Council.

The decision to launch a diplomatic offensive was made Friday in Taif, Saudi Arabia, where representatives of several Arab countries met to discuss the Lebanese situation.

Haig resigned over power struggle, says Chinese Communist Party paper

PEKING (AP) — China's leading newspaper said Saturday a power struggle at high levels of the U.S. government and disputes over policy toward the Soviet Union and Europe led to Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig Jr.'s resignation.

"Aside from differences and disputes over political views, the struggle for power and influence within the Reagan administration was quite prominent," said the Communist Party newspaper People's Daily.

It said there was a power struggle between the State Department and the president's National Security Council, and that Haig had been in several arguments over who should be the administration's principal foreign policy spokesman.

Commenting on political differences, the People's Daily said President Reagan's decision to expand the embargo on natural gas pipeline equipment for the Soviet Union may have been the fuse that touched off Haig's resignation, but that there were long-standing differences.

Netherlands expells Soviet diplomats

AMSTERDAM, Netherlands (AP) — The Netherlands has expelled two Soviet diplomats accused of spying on Dutch and NATO military facilities, the Amsterdam daily De Telegraaf reported Saturday.

The diplomats were not identified by name, but the newspaper said they were members of Soviet military intelligence, attached to a Soviet trade mission. Dutch intelligence services kept the pair under observation for some time and they were expelled after "rockhard" evidence of espionage activities was assembled, De Telegraaf said.

Foreign ministry spokesman Jan-Willem Bertens said the government would neither confirm nor deny the report.

Gunmen kill paramiltary policeman

MARANO, Italy (AP) — Masked gunmen shot and killed a 20-year-old paramilitary police officer on vacation in his hometown near Naples, officials said Saturday.

They said the Friday night shooting appeared to be the latest incident in a bloody gang war that has killed more than 130 people this year.

Police identified the victim as Salvatore Nuvoletta, an officer stationed in Casal di Principe, also near Naples.

They said it was possible that the young officer was killed because of a personal vendetta. But police said it was more likely that Nuvoletta was murdered as a warning to the police, who have been cracking down recently on Naples crime gangs.

Marcos authorizes copper subsidy

MANILA, Philippines (AP) — President Ferdinand Marcos has authorized the state-owned National Development Co. to purchase all of the country's cooper production at 15 cents per pound above the prevailing world price, the presidential palace said Saturday.

The subsidy will continue for six months to prevent a shutdown of the copper mines, which have been severely hurt by low world prices. The current world price for copper is about 60 cents per pound. The announcement said 75 cents per pound was the break-even price for the Philippine mines.

Rare, old Chinese books to be published

HONG KONG (AP) — China plans to compile, catalog and publish rare, old Chinese books, some written as long as 2,800 years ago, a Peking magazine reports.

China Reconstructs, seen here Saturday, said top priority in the new program will be given to publishing China's first dictionary. It was compiled by Xu Shen, who lived during the Eastern Han dynasty, which lasted from A.D. 58-147.

China hopes to publish about 2,600 old books by 1990, the article said.

SDP leader wants to oust Thatcher

LONDON (AP) — The newly elected leader of Britain's Social Democratic Party, Roy Jenkins, said Saturday his election would provide the momentum for ousting Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher in the next general election.

A jubilant Jenkins, 61, speaking at a news conference the day after capturing the party leadership, said the centrist SDP and its Liberal partners intended to "elbow" the opposition Labor Party out of the way and capture electoral support from Mrs. Thatcher's Conservative Party.

Jenkins said "the Falklands factor" which has boosted Mrs. Thatcher popularity would soon fade, and the SDP-Liberal alliance would break the 60-year hold of the Tories and Laborites on British politics.

"British voters now deserve a fresh choice between the hopelessness of Conservative mass unemployment and the extremism of the Labor Party," said Jenkins, a one-time deputy leader of the Labor Party.

Egypt's ambassador: U.S. prestige in Arab world suffers

WASHINGTON (AP) — Egyptian Ambassador Ashraf Ghorbal said Saturday that American prestige in the Arab world has suffered a severe setback as a result of what he described as the permissive U.S. attitude toward Israel in its military campaign in Lebanon.

"Your perception in the area has sunk very hard," Ghorbal said. "I say that as a friend. I don't tell you to go banging Israel but to call Israel to the rule of law and reason."

Ghorbal, who has served here since the United States and Egypt resumed diplomatic relations eight years ago, was interviewed on the Cable News Network's "Newsmaker Saturday" program.

He contrasted the American role in defusing Middle East crises in 1956 and 1973 with the more passive attitude of the Reagan administration toward the Lebanese crisis. But his most critical comments were directed at Israel.

He accused the Jewish state of resorting to "genocide" in Lebanon and said its attempts to destroy the Palestine Liberation Organization will not advance its objectives.

Ghorbal said the Israeli assault has been "devastating," not only to Lebanon but to all of those who have worked for peace in the Middle East.

"All of a sudden, 100,000 Israeli soldiers go into Lebanon and the roof fell in on the whole process," he said, referring to the Palestinian autonomy talks.

Asked whether the ambassador replied: "We say first things first. We have to tend to the mess we have on our hands as a result of the Israeli invasion. Israel has to withdraw not only from Beirut but from all of Lebanon."

While it is not possible to talk about Palestinian autonomy negotiations while Israeli forces remain in Lebanon, "we don't want to close the book on Camp David," he said.

Asked whether Egypt will find Shultz more amenable than it did Haig, Ghorbal said Shultz can count on Egypt's support but that "it is not simply the secretary of state's point of view but the president's point of view" that counts.

Low turnout may cloud Mexican election

By PETER EISNER

MEXICO CITY (AP) — Although government candidate Miguel de la Madrid Hurtada is expected to win the presidency in Mexico's elections today, the victory may be clouded by low turnout or votes for opposition politicians appearing on the ballot for the first time.

More than 31 million Mexicans are eligible to vote for six opposition candidates or de la Madrid, as well as for 64 senators and 400 members of the House of Representatives.

The ruling Institutional Revolutionary Party (PRI) tapped de la Madrid, a 47-year-old Harvard graduate, as successor to President Jose Lopez Portillo, whose six-year term ends Dec. 1.

Official results in the elections will not be announced until counting is complete, which will take several days. But the government party was expected to monitor results during the day, providing voter estimates and other statistics.

There was little doubt that de la Madrid — who benefits from the party's massive national organization — would win by a handsome margin. No PRI candidate has lost any major election since the party was founded in 1929.

BUT A HIGH abstention rate could embarrass the government party, which faces the blame for economic problems here that include 60 percent inflation, a weakened currency and chronic unemployment.

Although aides to de la Madrid were hoping for a voter turnout as high as 75 percent, only slightly more than half of those eligible voted in 1978 congressional elections. In some parts of the country, voter cynicism has been blamed for a turnout as low as 10 percent.

Today's election also marks the first time that parties other than the PRI have been allowed to have their presidential candidates and party emblems — critical in this largely illiterate nation — printed on the ballot. Prior to this, in the 1976 presidential election, voters had to write in the name of opposition candidates.

But a 1978 reform decree gave government funding, increased access to the media and other aid to opposition parties in presidential elections and guaranteed increased participation — but never majority control — in the lower house of Congress, where the PRI holds 300 seats. It controls all 64 Senate seats.

The other presidential candidates are Pablo Emilio Madero of the rightist National Action Party, Arnoldo Martinez Verdugo, of the Communist-led United Socialist Party coalition; Candido Diaz Cerecedo, of the Socialist Workers Party; Rosario Ibarra de Piedra, of the Revolutionary Workers Party; Manuel Moreno Sanchez, of the Social Democratic Party; and Ignacio Gonzalez Gollaz, of the Mexican Democratic Party.

De la Madrid, who received a masters degree in Public Administration from Harvard in 1965, traveled 60,000 miles in a nine-month national campaign "to understand our problems in greater detail." A media blitz and poster campaign brought the affable economist from relative obscurity as Lopez Portillo's budget and planning minister to easy recognition throughout the nation.

HE EMPHASIZED an end to institutionalized corruption in this country of 70 million in a call for "moral renewal." He stressed tight fiscal management and said Mexico would maintain its foreign policy of balancing its relations with the United States and continued contacts with Cuba.

The government took extensive steps to enhance the possibilities of a high turnout in the voting, and to limit charges of election fraud. The federal election commission said it issued 31.6 million computerized voter registration cards, which resemble credit cards.

The cards identify voters and also indicate an assigned polling place. The cards are punched once a voter casts his ballot and poll workers also are expected to mark voters' fingers with ink visible only under ultraviolet light to guard against double balloting.

Mitterrand criticizes U.S. policy

BUDAPEST, Hungary (AP) — French President Francois Mitterrand criticized the United States for its trade sanctions against the Soviet Union but also expressed concern about Soviet missile superiority in a recent interview, the official Communist Party newspaper said Saturday.

In an interview with the newspaper Nepszabadsag preceding his official visit to Hungary July 7-9, Mitterrand said, "I am against an embargo, any kind of blockade" in trade with the Soviets.

"In my view this is a bad method...Any kind of economic blockade raises tensions that could lead to military-type tensions," he said in reference to a U.S. embargo on American know-how and components for a Soviet natural gas pipeline to Western Europe.

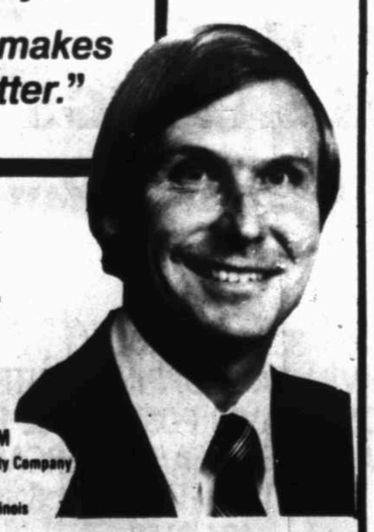

"I am very cautious about this, even though I can see that in tense periods there might be restrictions with regard to products that could be qualified as being of strategic value," he said.

Mitterrand also said, "I feel concerned when the Soviet Union deploys large numbers of SS-20 missiles in Europe, and I take care that this danger should be counterbalanced by appropriate armaments."

Hijacker spends part of ransom

MANIK DeSILVA

COLOMBO, Sri Lanka (AP) — The hijacker who extorted $300,000 from an Italian airline has spent part of the money on posh parties and a shirt that reads "I am a genius. Follow me," Sri Lankan newspapers said today.

Despite his insistence that he cannot be taken into custody, police are still trailing 33-year-old Sri Lankan Sepala Ekanayaka, and high-ranking officials said he will be arrested shortly. Italy asked for his extradition Friday.

Ekanayaka hijacked an Alitalia Boeing 747 jet and threatened to dynamite it in Bangkok unless he got $300,000 and was reunited with his estranged Italian wife and 3½-year-old son.

After 32 hours he released the final group of 100 hostages Thursday when Italian authorites granted his demands. Guaranteed safe passage, Ekanayaka took his wife and son to Colombo, where the hijacker became an instant celebrity. Thai officials later discovered he used dummy sticks of dynamite to commandeer the plane.

"If the government attempts any action against me, my wife, my child or my friends, I have the means to deal with such a threat," Ekanayaka told reporters today. "I will safeguard my interests either by good or by bad means." He did not elaborate.

The state-owned Bank of Ceylon accepted a deposit of $280,000 of the ransom money from Ekanayaka and placed it in a "suspended account," holding it temporarily. The action implied the government may hold the money pending his arrest, officials said.

Ceylon is the former name for Sri Lanka, an island at the southern tip of India.

The Sri Lankan press has criticized Ekanayaka's instant fame and lavish spending habits with the ransom, including posh parties for his friends. One government-owned newspaper, the Ceylon Daily Mirror, said in a front-page article that "a lawbreaker is no hero."

The story sharply criticized the hundreds of admirers who mobbed the hijacker on his triumphant return home with a bag crammed full of $100 bills. Many of his fans considered him a poor underdog who outwitted big governments and an airline.

The privately-owned newspaper, the Sun, reported that while staying at the luxurious Intercontinental Hotel with his wife and son, Ekanayaka bought a shirt emblazoned with the slogan, "I am a genius. Follow me."

Ekanayaka checked out of the hotel early today, paying about $300. His wife, son and several friends left in an entourage of three taxis for an undisclosed destination, witnesses said.

British rail engineers vow to walk off jobs

LONDON (AP) — Britain appeared headed Saturday for its second nationwide rail strike in less than a week as engineers vowed to walk off the job unless management scrapped plans to increase productivity through flexible scheduling.

British Rail cut back nearly one-quarter of its train routes to avoid stranding passengers.

Spokesman Ken Loughland said the railroad would attempt to operate limited service today "if we're lucky enough" to have sufficient staff report for work.

Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher urged rail workers to defy the strike call.

"Today we appeal to every train driver to put his family, his comrades and his country first by continuing to work," she told a Tory rally in Cheltenham, Gloucestershire. "That is the true solidarity, which can save jobs and which stands in the proud tradition of British railwaymen."

But Ray Buckton, leader of the 25,000-member Associated Society of Locomotive Engineers and Firemen, said the engineers would not call off their strike until management suspended plans to implement new schedules.

Railroad management wants the ability to schedule engineers for seven- or nine-hour days. The engineers insist on retaining the eight-hour day, which has been the standard since 1919.

The railroad has withdrawn its offer of a 5 percent pay raise until the union agrees to abide by the productivity improvements. But the engineers refused to budge.

Changes in school transfer policy creating stir

98 percent of the requests for child-care transfers were denied during a board meeting.

Children entering the second, third, fifth and sixth grades are exempted from the policy, due to a three-year "phase out" plan. According to Dr. Joseph P. Baressi Jr., MISD superintendent of schools as of Thursday, transfer requests for students entering those grades, who were granted transfers last year, will continue to be administratively approved.

"Students who are requesting transfers for next year's grades two, three, five and six will be allowed to stay in the clusters and finish out the terms, so to speak," Baressi explained. "The following year (1983-84), it will just be grades three and six and the following year (1984-85), there won't be anybody.

"So really what the board decided was to allow (those students) to stay with their classmates in that cluster, even though it is out of their normal attendance area, for the peer relation aspect of it.

"But for those kids just entering a cluster or just entering school, (the policy states) that we wouldn't allow them to have that hardship transfer."

LAST YEAR, 406 transfers were requested. This year there were 372, 126 of which were denied, Baressi said. He added that roughly a third of the child-care transfers would be phased out this year, another third next year and all of them the following year.

Phase out or not, many of the parents who attended the first of two school board meetings designated for transfer appeals are angry. "I think they handled it pretty poorly," said Patsy Allen, whose transfer request for her first grader was denied. "I had to find another nursery at my expense. My child was upset because he'll have to find new friends after three years at one school. This has put us in the position where we have to change everything, our whole lifestyle, again."

"I realize that the school systems are overcrowded," Beverly Hall said. "But I can't see that basically as the reason. Me being a single parent, I have to work. And I need that peace of mind knowing my kids are being taken care of and they like where they are. I need to be able to keep my thoughts on what I'm supposed to be doing at work. But they just flat denied it."

"I don't like it at all," Jan Watson agreed. "I don't think it is for the welfare of the children and I thought that was what the school board was for. And after the attitude of some persons on the board...I thought they were really hard-hearted, not so much to us, but there were more that were even more desperate."

"I THINK THAT anyone who is sitting in the audience should realize how much agony the board members were going through because in the past we have recognized how hard it is to be either a single parent or have both parents have to work because we have had this liberal child care policy," Ann Page, board trustee, said. "As long as we were able to, we wanted to do that.

"And the fact that we did the phase out back in February shows more compassion," she continued. "The administration came to us wanting us to have everybody just go where they were supposed to go and not grant any. And we didn't do that."

Although several board members rejected an administrative recommendation to deny all child-care transfers with no right to appeal, Humes said, "they didn't exactly say that. They sort of put the proposition up to the board and said, 'OK, here. You can do several things. You cannot grant to anybody, or you can make exceptions, or here's what you can do.' "

Despite denials of the recommendation by other administrators, Baressi admitted, "The original recommendation by Dr. (James) Mailey, (past superintendent), concerning child-care hardship was that they all be denied. But the board decided to phase out and let all the children in grades one, two, four and five stay with their classmates."

Mailey was out of town and could not be reached for comment.

"I am very hopeful that when Quanah Parker (Elementary School) gets open and then when Bluebird gets open, its going to alleviate a lot of these problems. If the school bond issue had been passed the first time it had been put before the city, we wouldn't be having the problem we are now," Trustee Joe Golding added, referring to the bond issue which was defeated in Spring 1980.

"Midland is not a town to pass things on expectations or predictions," Golding continued. "Once there is a need, Midland will do anything."

HAVING TO CHOOSE another day care center is a hardship on the parents and on their children, many of the working parents contended. But to add to that adjustment is the fact that many of the day care centers are full and the waiting lists are long.

"If somebody wants to make some money right now, all they've got to do is go build a day care center out by Rusk somewhere," Golding said.

Lillian Ivy manages The Gingham Day Care Center, which, located near Sam Houston Elementary School, caters only to Houston students. Of the 20 child care hardship cases heard during the board meeting June 22, eight were requests to attend Houston. All were denied.

"It's about to tear the mothers apart," Ms. Ivy said.

"I've got mothers who are divorced and can't afford to pay some of the prices charged around town. If a mom comes to pick up her child and has had a hard day and wants to talk, I'll listen. Those parents are so important. And some are going through a lot of hardships, especially these single mothers."

"I don't think they've thought it through completely to realize that there are going to be a number of 5-year-olds and 6-year-olds standing around waiting unsupervised until someone can pick them up at school," Marsha Bonnell said.

Ms. Bonnell, one of about 35 parents scheduled to appeal transfer denials at the designated school board meeting Aug. 3, said she didn't think the elimination of the child-care transfers would alleviate the problem of overcrowding in the schools.

"If they have to deny transfers, I really think the older children are where they should start. I don't understand why the day care is the problem or why they have decided that is their criteria."

"Those schools that are located near the day care centers are absolutely full.And it's not particularly fair to the parents that live in that particular neighborhood to send their children and have all these transfer requests come in there and then that school have an over-exaggerated pupil load," Parker Humes, board president, explained. "We're trying to be fair and the way to be fair is to be consistent."

Waiting until August to find out if her request will be approved or denied, Ms. Bonnell said she is worried about being able to make other arrangements for child care at such a late notice.

"IT WOULD HELP to have the hearings earlier in the spring. This late date creates something of an emergency situation to find somebody that will pick my child up in the afternoon," she continued. "It's really quite frustrating to me because we're simply a group of parents that really don't need any more problems."

"A lot of people aren't going to be able to make other arrangements," Gary Watson agreed. "I'll have to make other arrangements but I'm worried about those people who cannot.

"Granted, it's not the problem of the school district, but it is a problem they should be aware of and try to help with," he continued.

According to Baressi, the policy pertaining to child care transfers is not the only step that has been made to alleviate overcrowding in certain schools. Baressi pointed out that 23 additional classrooms presently are being constructed, including 10 more portable buildings, the GEM program was moved to Carver to open up more classrooms, and some special education classrooms have been consolidated into half rooms.

Although several parents asked why more portable buildings could not be established at the more crowded schools, Baressi responded, "The assumption being that the following year, with two new schools on line and the equivalent of 50 classrooms, that our need for temporary buildings is just temporary."

And although some parents questioned if school boundary lines had been drawn, Humes assured that they had, even those of Quanah Parker school for the 1983-84 year.

"The lines are drawn but it looks like a major city thoroughfare."

MANY PARENTS QUESTIONED if school board members were able to identify with the two-paycheck or the single parent family.

"If they can put themselves in other peoples' shoes, fine. But from the example I say yesterday (June 22), they are not capable of doing that," Watson said.

"I do not believe that the school board is unaware of the single-parent family's problems," Trustee Joyce Sherrod said. "If we had the room, as history indicates, we are very sympathetic to their needs."

Bill Jackson, trustee, agreed. "My wife works. My wife has a business of her own. My lord, I do (understand that situation). I work eight days a week trying to make a living."

"It's not a callous attitude as saying, 'we don't care what your situation is, we're not going to grant any more transfers,' " Humes said. "It's a situation of saying this school is full. If we take one more, there are going to be 25 more that are going to get it and we don't have room for any of them.

"We're living in unusual times right now, and Midland happens to go through those stages," Humes continued. "Eight years ago they were talking about they may have to close some of them (schools) because of declining enrollment."

Two of the first appeals heard by the board June 22 were made by school personnel. Although they both received the transfers, another teacher did not. Board members said they approved the two, not because they were employed by MISD, but rather because they were requesting transfers from crowded schools to less crowded schools. Approvals withstanding, one of the women said she disagrees with the new child-care transfer policy and sympathized with the others who were denied their requests.

"Some of them that were denied I felt should have been approved," Mae Jackson, an employee at Bunche Early Childhood Center, said. "This whole child-care situation I don't agree with. I think they should have just been approved administratively. To appear before the board to appeal our case is uncalled for."

Cheba Bianchi, a teacher at San Jacinto Junior High School, said she understood what the board was going through, but, nonetheless, was relieved that hers was approved.

"I KNOW WHY they did it (revised the policy)," she continued. "I've taught in crowded schools. I know what's behind their thinking. Of course, every mother is going to come up and say 'Can't you put in just one more?' And of course it's easy to say, 'Sure.'

"They can put just one more child anywhere. But when 120 of them ask...

"So I wouldn't say the policy is unfair," she continued. "I think they (board members) were caught over a barrel. I don't think they liked doing it. I don't think it was a popular decision in the least. But I think they thought they did the best thing that they could."

"I don't know," Watson sighed. "We tried, we lost, no problem. We worked within the system but I just don't think the system is fair.

"It's going to breed a lot of people lying about their addresses," he added.

"It's really not that hard," admitted one parent, who used the address of a friend when enrolling her child in another junior high school. "Although he had been in the right school for three or four weeks, we took him out and walked into the other school like we had just moved into town. But the next day, when my husband took him to school, he was walking with my son and a member of the staff. A reading resource teacher from the first school recognized my son in the hall and said, 'Oh, hi, are you transferring over here?' No one batted an eye, no one said a word."

While most board members said they were aware that some people lied about addresses, they also felt it wasn't their duty to find out who was illegally enrolled.

"I don't feel like it's the board's responsibility to be watchdogs and to be looking to see who's lying and who isn't," Mrs. Page said. "I really think that's an administrative job."

Jackson agreed: "We don't go on a witch hunt. We'll assume that everybody is telling the truth."

According to Garland Chapman, assistant superintendant for administrative services, the responsibility is that of the principals of each campus. Chapman said addresses are audited to make sure all students enrolled in that school do reside in that area.

"But if we find someone that lied to us, who has given us an erroneous address, we'll cause them to move during the year," Baressi said.

"If we wanted to, we could've lied about it," Watson said. "But we chose to stand up there and tell the truth. It kinda makes you think telling the truth is not the way to go."

'They didn't consider people's lives'

By HALLYE JORDAN
Staff Writer

Sharon Byars' child-care transfer request, appealed at the Midland Independent School District Board of Trustees meeting June 22, was denied.

She's upset — for herself and for her child. Entering kindergarten for the first time, Christopher will have to adjust to a recent divorce, a new school and a new day care center within a year.

Ms. Byars doesn't agree with the revised child-care transfer policy, approved unanimously by board members Feb. 22.

And she looks at it from the point of view of a concerned parent — and of a concerned teacher.

"They made the mistake in February when they changed the rule," Ms. Byars said. "They did it without thinking. It sounded, just like a lot of other things, it sounded good. It sounded like an easy way to solve the problem.

"They made a decision that sounded good on paper and everything else until you get into the humanistic side of it.

"THEY DIDN'T take into consideration peoples' lives. And that's what teaching is all about. It's not the statistics, or anything else. We should be dealing with children's lives."

A teacher with MISD for 12 years, Ms. Byars said she understands the problems of overcrowding in schools. She can look at the times when there were more than 30 children in her classroom at Burnet. But during her years of teaching, she said she has seen many parents who were indifferent about their child's education. And when a parent did show concern, she made a strong effort to work with that parent.

"MISD has been good to me," she said. "We probably individualize better than any other school district. But as a parent, I want to fight. I was brought up to believe that if there is a law that you don't like, you fight to change it but you don't disobey it.

Although she said she couldn't have lied about her address to enroll Christopher in a more convenient school, she realizes that many do.

"But I won't simply because I'm in the system and I can't. I just can't and feel right about it. My daddy used to always say that what makes a general is a person who can issue orders that can be followed. They've issued a policy that cannot be followed.

"THROUGH THE PROPER channels, things can be changed. I've gone through the proper channel, and I know the wrong way but I can't do it. If you are going to teach your child to stand up for what he believes in, then you've got to."

Although there has never been a written policy granting automatic administrative approval of teacher transfer requests, Dr. Joseph P. Baressi, MISD superintendent, said administrators were, up to four years ago, "apparently granting those transfers as a professional courtesy at will, to the point of the displeasure of the school board."

Ms. Byars said she thinks teachers should receive automatic approvals, simply as a company benefit.

She pointed out that while most parents are able to take their child to his first day of school, she can't. Instead, she will be in a classroom greeting the children of other parents.

"If I stand there and tell them (school board members) that my child is going to have a better emotional environment where he is, then I know that is true. And without a good mental health, a good mental attitude, school isn't going to do anything for him. Why put an obstacle in a child's path when it doesn't need to be there?

"In February, it sounded good. 'Schools are overcrowded so we'll just change this, and we have to be consistent all over town in order to do this.' It all does sound great and wonderful, but I don't think that at that meeting they were aware of all the different human aspects that they had just wiped off the face of the earth.

"We're so caught up in numbers that we forget the most important part — we're human beings. And I know changes are supposed to be good because the world changes. We're in a transient world, but there has got to be some way to keep some things the same for kids."

Ms. Byars said she was surprised Christopher cried when she told him he might not be able to go to his nursery school with his friends next year. She had hoped that he really wouldn't grasp what she was saying.

"AND I THOUGHT, 'God, I wish I had let them tell him.' You know, take him up there and let them tell him after all that has happened to him.

"I've been teaching for 12 years. I've been indoctrinated by MISD totally; never have I taught anywhere else. And all I have ever been taught is individualization. And, as I told them (board members), that should not only be instructional, but that should be emotional and the environment and everything.

"There are a lot of times that you can make a decision with the facts that you have at your disposal, and you make the best decision you can. Then somebody else can present new facts to you and you have to re-evaluate and change it.

"I don't think it would hurt them to reconsider. MISD has always been known for tackling problems. We've done it a lot of times when other school districts wouldn't have.

"It's because we care about our kids."

TORONTO (AP) — Investigators from Los Angeles and Toronto questioned Cathy Evelyn Smith on Saturday about a National Enquirer story quoting her as saying she administered drugs to John Belushi the night the comedian died, police and the woman's attorney said.

Toronto attorney Brian Greenspan said Miss Smith told the detectives that during her interviews with the tabloid, she was under the influence of alcohol supplied by her interviewers and was further impaired by drug consumption.

'Tradition' tells DAR picnic story

By GEORGIA TEMPLE
Entertainment Writer

Talk among people clustered around picnic lunches in the shade of the trees or playing games on the sunlit lawn was in accord. From the young to the old, they all agreed it had been a perfect day for a July 4th celebration.

Saturday marked the Col. Theunis Dey Chapter of the Daughters of the American Revolution's 20th annual Independence Day celebration. Held at the Museum of the Southwest, activities began at 10 a.m. with a children's parade and closed at 2 p.m. with a tour of the museum. Filling out the time between were games, clowns, music, picnicking, film presentations and a demonstration by the Midland Police Department's canine division.

For those youngsters riding patriotically-decorated vehicles, the high point of the day may have been the parade. Laughter, coupled with merriment, came from those who participated as well as those (the big people) who helped. After traveling the parade route, all 50-odd participants were lined up in front of the museum to eagerly await the announcement of winners.

As the group quietened, the official ceremonies began with the Pledge of Allegiance.

Wedged in on the museum's front porch, members of the Community Band played. Martha Lewis, standing under Allan Houser's statue of an Indian "Offering the Sacred Pipe," led the assembled crowd in the national anthem once the final words — "with liberty and justice for all" — of the allegiance were spoken.

Although it wasn't a long ceremony, it may have seemed so to some of the little people who were waiting. They didn't wait in vain.

Each was recognized for his participation with honorable mentions going in the pre-school division to Amy Bell, Brian Bell, Sheridan Gilkerson, Caitlin Durham, Jayson Schuchard; and in the first-to-third grade division to Matthew Bell, Justin Lang and David Bales.

Third place awards went to Matthew Grant and Pauline Grant in the pre-school division; Holly Fay, Jon Fay, Jennifer Piper and Ross Piper in grades 1-3; and Jennifer Hobbs in grades 4-6.

Second place awards went to Laura Lea Daugherty and Heather Fisler in the pre-school division; Cynthia Nichols and Amy Collier in grades 1-3; and Jeff Carlton and Todd Carlton in grades 4-6.

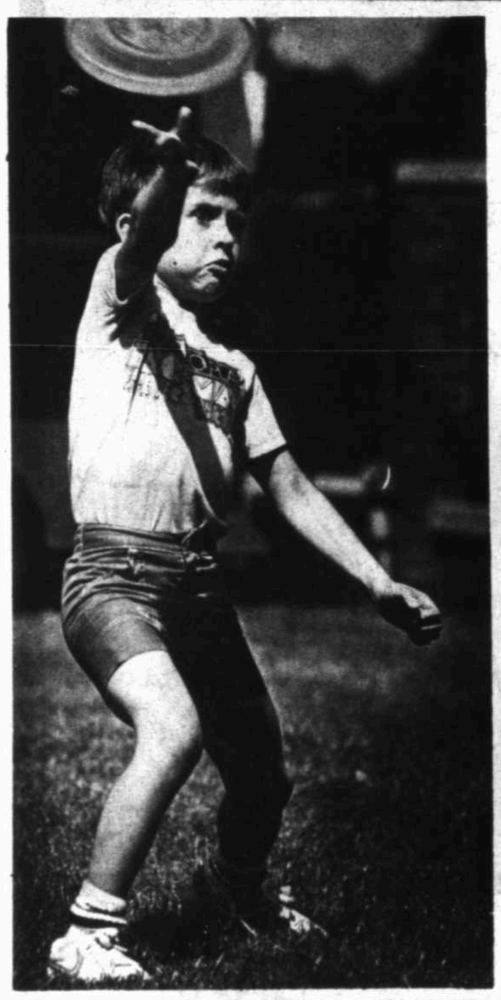

First place was awarded to Glenn Welling and Diane Welling in the pre-school division; Kelly Dodson, Natalie Hall and Alan Hall in grades 1-3; and Jamie Dodson, Ben Fay and Kate Golding in grades 4-6.

The sidewalk chalk drawing contest followed the awards presentation. Winners in the pre-school contest were Courtney Heinemann, first; Patrick Durham, second; and Theresa Hawkins, third. The grades 1-3 competition winners were Robert Graham, first; Kevin Wilson, second; and Russell Parker, third. Winners in grades 4-6 were Kirsten Krall, first; Dwayne Moore, second; and Keith Walker and Kim Wilson, third.

Perhaps the most popular single presentation of the day was the canine demonstration led by Sgt. E.M. Nicks, with officers Lonnie Payne and T. Pat Bostick participating. While Joll, Casey, Ibor and Caspar went through their routines, the audience, including children, paid rapt attention.

The demonstration inspired one woman to ask her husband, "I wonder if they'd take kids and train them?"

Laughing, he replied, "I don't know, but it sounds like a great idea."

'Independently' entertaining

Stuck in traffic, in photo above, children in the DAR's July 4th parade around the Museum of the Southwest grounds try to find the holdup down the line. At left, a grimacing James Atkinson throws a quick Frisbee while waiting for the start of such activities as games, clowns, music and picnicking. Also presented was a demonstration by the police department's canine division, right, in which Joll stops Pat Bostick in his tracks.

'Close counts' at old-fashioned festival

Six-year old David Gutierrez, son of Mr. and Mrs. Armando Gutierrez, digs his face into the fruit of the vine during the watermelon-eating contest Saturday at Andrews' Fourth of July celebration. David took a blue ribbon in the 5- and 6-year-old division.

ANDREWS — In June and July of 1776 when Thomas Jefferson drafted a 1,200-word document declaring that "these United Colonies are, and of Right ought to be, Free and Independent States," the 50 members of the Continental Congress who adopted it already may have had a foreshadowing of its ultimate impact on the world of the future.

John Adams, who was to be second president of the fledgling nation, put his John Hancock on the document only fives names down from that of John Hancock himself and declared with the authoritative voice of a medieval soothsayer: "I am apt to believe that (July 4) will be celebrated by succeeding generations as the great anniversary festival. It ought to be commemorated as the day of deliverance, by solemn acts of devotion to God Almighty. It ought to be solemnized with pomp and parade, with shows, games, sports, guns, bells, bonfires, and illuminations, from one end of this continent to the other, from this time forward for evermore."

Two hundred and six years have passed since that statement, but Adams' wishes are being fulfilled in such a way that even he would be surprised.

It's the nation's birthday party, this first weekend of July, and the candles have been lighted and the songs sung throughout West Texas.

Andrews was but grassland along the desolate "Staked Plains" in 1776, but it came alive Saturday as more than a thousand persons gathered beneath the leafy elms of Pioneer Park to celebrate Adams-style with pomp and games, sports and illuminations.

It's doubtful whether Adams ever took part in a watermelon-eating contest, but had the sticky juice ever touched his palate, surely a grin would have creased his face.

There were grins and grimaces in Saturday's event, when eyes and jaws alike opened wide. As the slices of cool, red melon were placed before the contestants, who ranged in age from 4 years on up, one could almost see mouths watering in anticipation. Upon the "go!" signal, each face buried itself into melon as though it had found the "cool side of the pillow."

Onlookers shouted encouragement to their favorites, whose eyes bugged out like bullfrogs'. Chipmunk cheeks reigned as seeds sprayed into air. A dribbling exhibition ensued which would have put Meadowlark Lemon to shame. Juice streamed down chins, streaked down arms, cascaded onto table and laps.

One 15-year-old boy attacked his slice with savagery, his teeth mowing back and forth across it like a runaway lawnmower on a crimson yard. Another dark-haired youngster entombed his face so deeply in the melon the conglomerate took on the appearance of a red-faced heifer with black bangs. And throughout, sound effects would have garnered higher Neilsen ratings than those of Batman and Robin, as lips smacked while tongues slurped and tummies burped.

Grace? Finesse? No, but like the running of Red Grange, there was certainly fluidity.

And, at the final gun, one juice-stained youngster was left to raise melon aloft in victory like Muhammad Ali lifting clenched fists over the outstretched form of Cleveland Williams.

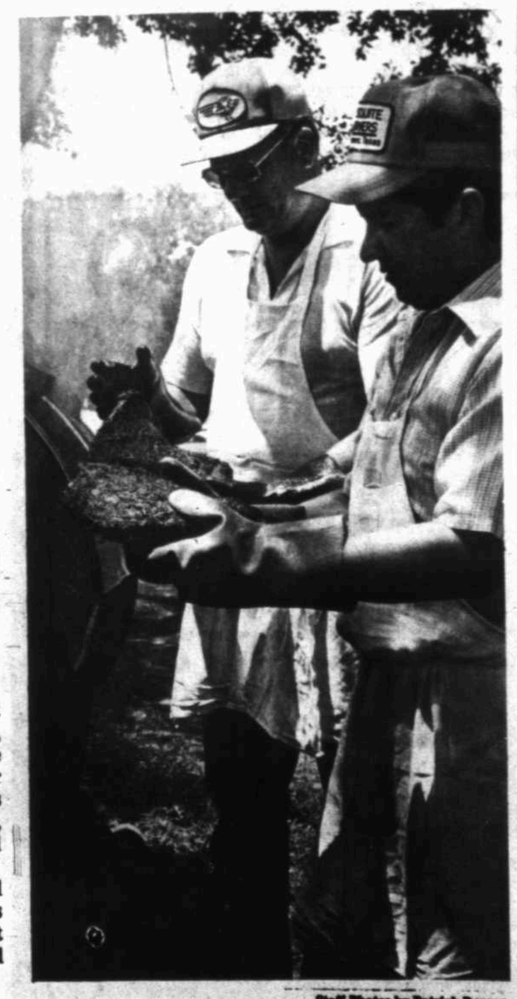

And as for the losers....

"Nobody loses in a contest like this," opined one man. "After all, you still get to eat watermelon."

In the sack race, meanwhile, the spoils usually went not to the victor, but to the survivor. Tow sacks encasing legs, youngsters bounded like kangaroos, pigtails flying and free arms flailing like bullriders. Feet strained against their bonds, mangling gunny sacks as though angry alley cats waged war within. Balance was elusive, the grass inviting, and soon bodies were strewn across ground like well-blocked linebackers.

Elsewhere in Pioneer Park, arms drew back like tensed bow strings, then lashed forward to spin metal washers from index fingers. Sailing through air, the objects sought their target — the 18th flag pin. Sometimes they dropped in; but more often, "three-putting" wouldn't have helped.

Nearby, fingers curled tenderly about horseshoes moments before the U-shaped objects flipped, twisted, hurtled end-over-end toward steel spikes. The clang of metal against metal sometimes bespoke of ultimate success, but as in hand grenades — as in all the games Saturday when old-fashioned fun proved the dominant theme — "close" counted almost as much.

You can bank on need for blood

By GAIL BURKE
Staff Writer

David Webb's customers can earn high interest and transferable credit when they make a deposit in his bank.

You might be familiar with banks that offer Christmas clubs, requiring year-long deposits to insure money with interest for the holiday.

Webb is offering a similar service with more interest, but it requires donating a pint of blood.

Webb, the blood recruiter at Midland Memorial Hospital, actively seeks out blood donors through blood clubs made up by Midland companies and churches.

These clubs, which began in 1978 and are self-governing, contribute 85 percent of the hospital's blood supply.

"WHY DONATE blood?" Webb asked. "You give blood to the community to be self-sufficient in the time of an emergency."

Blood also is needed because of Midland's growth, which has produced an increase in the surguries performed and the number of car accidents. Also, MMH's cancer center, with the increasing amount of chemotherapy treatments, has required a need for more blood.

And economically it can save a person money.

Webb said the blood costs $38.50. With the processing and replacement costs, a pint of blood is about $113. If blood has been donated, the cost decreases to $33 which insurance companies usually will pay a portion, leaving approximately $6 for the patient to pay.

By donating a pint of blood, an individual is credited that amount with interest — his life — if a transfusion is needed.

Webb said he welcomes individuals — walk-in blood donors — who want to come in and donate blood at the clinic which is open from 8 a.m. to 3 p.m. Monday through Friday and in the evening by appointment.

BUT IT'S THE 36 Midland blood clubs that keep the community adequately supplied in time of an emergency.

Webb presents the program to various oil companies, churches or any business with 100 employees or more.

"It's not convenient for a person to give blood, but with the clubs it's done right on the job," Webb said.

If 25 percent of a company's employees sign up to give blood, the donor, his/her family and the employees are credited for blood the individual may need in the next year.

The clubs provide Midland with about 300 units (pints) a month.

"What we are proposing is to increase our monthly draw to 500 a month by increasing the number of clubs from 36 to 50," Webb said.

He said the donations, which take about 20 minutes for each person, cost the companies a lot of money in terms of productivity. But for the actual time it takes compared to the lives the blood could save in an emergency, the cost is relatively small.

The blood donations can be transferred to anyone in need of a transfusion.

"The company can transfer the blood to anyone in need," Webb said. "We get the blood which we use (at the hospital) and they end up getting protection for their family...a pre-deposit plan...long before they need it.

Webb said it is important to have the pre-deposit plan instead of waiting for an emergency.

"That's too late," he said, referring to an emergency situation. "Only three out of 100 eligible donors give blood. It takes quite a while to process blood."

For example, one pint of blood can take as long as three hours to be properly tested for hepatitis, so blood is processed in large quantities. It takes approximately a day and a half for a large quantity of blood to be processed, Webb said.

WHETHER A PERSON wants to donate blood through a club or individually, he must go through a selection process which includes testing for type, RH factor, hepatitis, venereal disease, antibiotics and about 40 other physical-related questions.

Not everybody can give blood.

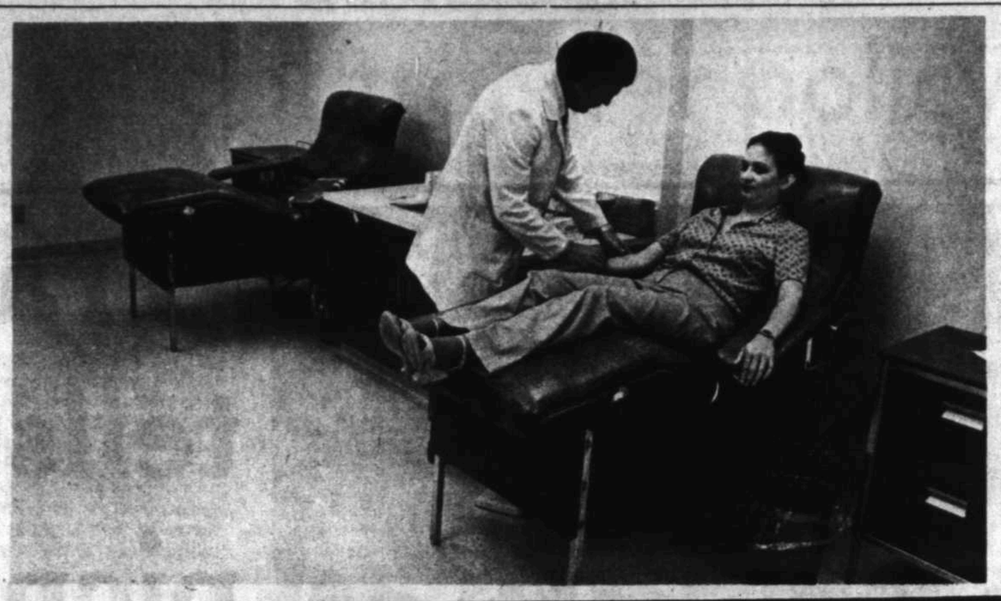

Anyone with hepatitis, taking medication such as antibiotics or for diabetes, heart problems, or the common cold cannot donate blood. Also anyone weighing less than 110 pounds cannot give blood.

And with the relocation and expansion of MMH's blood laboratory, it can be done "50 times faster than before," Webb said.

The new blood lab, located in MMH's basement, now has its own entrance from Illinois Avenue, four private cubicle screening booths, six donor beds, a refreshment area, a processing lab and storage area.

In addition, a state-of-the-art $29,318.08 blood cell separater, which was donated by the hospital's auxiliary, has kept more patients in Midland. Before, patients were sent to Odessa for this procedure which, as the name implies, separates the blood components, such as plasma, red cells, white cells and platelets.

For more information about donating blood individually or through a club, call David Webb at 685-1636.

David Webb, Midland Memorial Hospital blood donor recruiter, and Joan Hill, MMH blood bank supervisor, demonstrate the art of giving blood in the hospital's blood clinic, which has been moved to the MMH basement.

DON HARVEY REALTORS

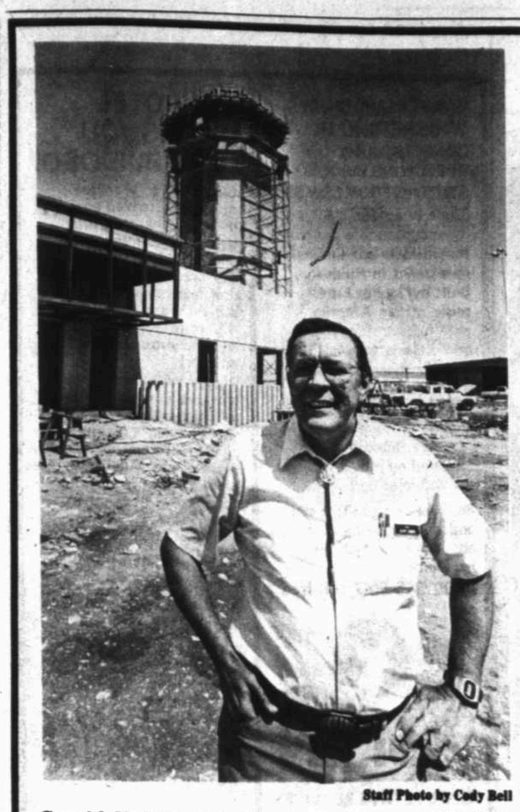

DON'T RISK LATE PAYMENT

Is there a "grace period", on mortgage payments? There is normally a 15 day period (give or take a few days depending on your lender) after your mortgage payment is due before the bank can impose a late charge. Some financial authorities advise readers to make the payment as close to the end of that period as possible to get the better of the bank interest.

This is dangerous logic. Payments made after the due date are still considered late, even though they fall within the "grace" period. That's how they will be viewed by the bank should you ever encounter problems that make it difficult for you to pay your mortgage on time.

The clean record you think you are presenting as you ask for forbearance won't be all that clean to your mortgage officer who may be somewhat less sympathetic as a result. Making your mortgage payment a "few days late" every month may be a smart way to manage your money, but it's a dangerous game to play with your credit record.

Gerald Kubiak, interim control tower chief at Midland Regional Airport, stands before the new tower under construction. He is replacing Bill Hill, who took a position with the FAA in Washington, D.C.

Control tower gets interim chief

By GAIL BURKE
Staff Writer

Gerald Kubiak, an air traffic representative (ATRP) from Del Rio, has been named interim control tower chief at Midland Regional Airport.

Kubiak, whose permanent post is at Laughlin Air Force Base in Del Rio, has been appointed by the Federal Aviation Administration to fill the position vacated by Bill Hill.

Hill, former FAA control tower chief in Midland, left his post June 25 for a position at FAA headquarters in Washington, D.C.

ATRPs are appointed by the FAA to oversee military air traffic control. But since the Professional Air Traffic Controllers' strike Aug. 3, 1981, the eight ATRPs in the southwest region have filled various positions.

"We're a little different," Kubiak said, referring to military and civilian air traffic control. "I did similar detail in Brownsville after the strike from August to December (1981)," Kubiak said.

"The FAA Southwest Regional Office in Fort Worth brought me in to handle the air traffic load and give guidance and direction to the crew here," he added, referring to the 18 employees in the tower, including a secretary, training officer, three supervisors, himself and the controllers.

Kubiak, 52, has been with the FAA about 32 years. Kubiak and his wife have six children. He expects to bring part of his family — his wife and two daughters — to Midland for a short vacation and then visit back and forth with them until August.

"I have to keep looking out the window everyday to see where I am," Kubiak said, referring to his transfers. "It's all part of the job."

Building the barriers

Workers for Clearwater Constructors Inc. of Austin put the finishing touches on concrete barriers that will be used to control traffic as permanent repairs are made on the Interstate 20 overpass five miles east of Midland. The bridge, which can be seen in the background, was a contributing factor in the deaths of two truck drivers whose rigs skidded off the twin-span structure in wet weather.

Repairs begun on 'killer bridge'

By RICHARD ORR
Staff Writer

Midland's "killer bridge" has contracted a terminal illness and may be finally laid to rest by Christmas.

According to Charles Muery of the State Department of Highways and Public Transportation, a contract has been awarded to an Austin construction firm to widen and re-floor the Interstate 20 overpass at U.S. Highway 80 about five miles east of Midland.

A spokesman for Clearwater Constructors Inc. said Friday he expects to finish the job — part of a $2.5 million safety improvement project on I-20 from the Rankin Highway in Midland to the Martin County Line — by the end of the year.

The east and westbound lanes will be widened by 7 feet each and new skid-resistant floors will be laid on the twin-span structure. The bridge's surface had been labeled a contributing factor in the deaths of two truck drivers whose rigs skidded off the overpass in wet weather.

Dallas truck driver Dale Scroggins died in a fiery crash Sept. 10, 1980, and El Paso truck driver Ronald Panchot was killed 15 days later.

Dennis Wright of Nashville, Ark. — a driver who walked away from the April 14, 1981, crash of his 18-wheeler — reported the surface of the bridge and the approaches to it were "slick as glass when it's wet."

In August 1981, a temporary skid-resistant surface was applied to the bridge and no fatalities or major accidents have occurred since that time.

Permanent repairs got under way last week.

This 'cabbie' also oil, gas investor

Midland man drives around in authentic 1967 London taxi

By MERRY SCOTT
News Intern

Staff Photo by Paul Gilbert

This 1967 British Leyland Austin with a top speed of about 40 mph does not have an air conditioner, but Arlen Edgar enjoys driving it to work almost every day. People have mistaken the vehicle for a Chicago gangster car, a German Army squad car and even a French cab. And while the inside has the same trappings as the cabs in London, the view outside the window can be a bit different.

Some of the most distinctive things about London are the cool, damp weather, the tube (subway) and double-decker buses. But most unique of all are the taxicabs.

Arlen L. Edgar, a local oil and gas investor, "became intrigued with owning one (of the cabs)" while he was in London in 1980. At the time, however, the cost of buying one and having it shipped to the United States, was about $20,000 ($17,000 for the car and about $3,000 to ship it), according to Edgar.

Shortly after that he was in Nyack, N.Y., where he found a vintage car store that had a 1967 British Leyland Austin — the exact car used in London as taxicabs.

Edgar bought the Austin, which had been owned by an American executive living in London, for $4,500 and had it shipped by van from Nyack to Midland.

The only renovation Edgar has made on the car is to have it repainted. For the most part the car was in good condition.

It has leather seats and a taxi light. And, like in London, the steering wheel is on the right side of the car. The taxi light was changed to CHIC by the previous owner, "probably for Chicago," Edgar theorizes.

The car, which has a four-cylinder diesel engine, originally was used as a taxicab in London and has mileage of "over 500,000 miles, I would guess," Edgar said.

Edgar belongs to a club called the American British Cab Society which is a club for American people who own British taxicabs. Membership fee is only $5, but people must own a British cab to join. "I would like to see a local club started," Edgar said.

There is at least one other British cab owner in Midland, Bob Darlington, a pilot with Tiger Air Charter, but he does not belong to the club "yet," he said. His cab is being renovated and the doors and running-boards have been removed for the job.

In addition to the national club for owners, there is a man in Sonoma, Calif., who owns a fleet of British cabs and sells parts for repairing them, according to Edgar. However, Edgar has had trouble finding a local mechanic who will work on his car, even though he has a repair manual for it.

One of the things Edgar enjoys most about driving the cab to work almost every day is that "people stop me all the time. A lot of people think it is a Chicago gangster car or a German Army squad car," he said. "One guy even asked me if it was a French cab."

One other thing that Edgar said he really enjoyed doing is driving the car for the Summer Mummers film this year. They spent most of one Saturday afternoon doing the film.

As for the authenticity of the car, it is very much like being in any cab in London. The cab is black, in fact Edgar said, "Any other color is a travesty." When he was in London in 1973, he said, he did not see cabs of any other color. But when he went back the last time there were taxicabs of all different colors.

Also, it has a fare schedule between the two jump-seats in back, an advertisement on the back of each of the jump-seats, a sliding window between the driver and the passengers, and even British license plates (in addition to the Texas plates).

What kind of man buys a British taxicab and drives it to work in Midland?

One who has traveled to more than 15 countries as president of the Society of Petroleum Engineers (1981), and who spent two years as president, two years as treasurer and now serves as a member of the board of trustees of the Midland Community Theatre. And he recently returned from three weeks in the Republic of China.

If you see a black, strange-looking car with a taxi sign on top, it will probably be Arlen Edgar and his British taxicab.

'Invincible' fire ants still marching across Texas

By VINCE GIORGI
Staff Writer

"Solenopsis invicta — 'The Invincible One.'"

"Its sting causes irritation, illness, even death in people and livestock. Its swarming, obstructive nests hamper farming and damage equipment. With clashing jaws and voracious appetites, its legions damage plants, crops and strip insulation from phone and power lines, air conditioners and airport runway lights."

The imported fire ants' assault on the Southern United States sounds suspiciously like a promotional ad for a grade B, drive-in monster movie.

But the continuing saga won't be playing neighborhood theaters this summer. Instead, "The Invincible One" continues to ravage nine states, from the Carolinas to East Texas, threatening to spread while leaving scientists and agricultural experts scrambling to mount a defense against the puzzling pest.

State agriculture department officials employed the pesticide Myrex in their battle against the ants until 1978, when the environmentally-hazardous chemical was banned. Before the ban, long-lasting Myrex proved moderately successful in eliminating fire ants.

"Let's put it this way, it was slowing them down a little bit," according to Mark Trostel, imported fire ant specialist with the Texas Department of Agriculture.

USING PESTICIDES to slow the ants progress and "buy" time for further research is an important part of the state's program to fight imported fire ants, Trostel said.

But a safe, effective and affordable chemical has been difficult to find. Trostel said the state is using a pesticide named Amdro, but it is expensive, in short supply and its effects are short-lived.

Fifteen states recently petitioned the Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) for a ruling on Ferriamicide, a less-expensive, longer-lasting pesticide. But EPA officials appear reluctant to approve use of the chemical, which may pose environmental hazards.

Lacking a powerful, effective pesticide, "I guess you can say we're losing the fight," Trostel said.

Recent reports of imported fire ants in San Angelo and Midland-Odessa proved unfounded. But with their high degree of mobility, one researcher says it's not impossible to find them here someday.

Scientists at Texas Tech and Texas A&M universities are researching additional weapons, including five more chemicals, for the battle against imported fire ants.

Dr. Jim Wangberg, interim chairman of the entomolgy department at Texas Tech, said one Tech scientist is searching for a virus that might act as a plague on fire ants.

"Right now, there's no disease agent that would knock it down," he said. "But, it's an exciting area."

Researchers at Texas A&M are studying feramones, scents used by fire ants for communication, and scientists at Texas Tech are scrutinizing the ant's living habits, searching for clues.

"A lot of this is very basic information," Wangberg said, but he stressed the importance of "knowing thine enemy" when searching for a solution to a fire-ant problem that some scientists date back to 1918.

AFTER STOWING away on a South American vessel, the ants probably jumped ship in Mobile, Ala., beginning a migration which currently covers about 230 million acres in nine Southern states.

Imported fire ant mounds, often reaching two feet in height, litter vast amounts of land. In infested areas, 40 to 80 mounds may clutter a single acre, Trostel said.

The ant's venomous bite raises pus-filled blisters on people and animals, sometimes causing further complications in more sensitive victims. Since 1978, two Texans have died from imported fire ant bites.

According to Trostel, fire ants inhabit over 110 counties in East Texas, an area that includes about 45 million acres of land. Besides the imported variety, Texas hosts three native, less troublesome species of fire ants.

A recent report of imported fire ants in San Angelo, which would have represented a significant move west by "The Invincible One," proved to be a false alarm. Texas Tech scientists determined the ants to be of a native variety.

But despite agriculture department efforts to control the problem, fire ants may eventually migrate into West Texas.

The ants mate in flight, often traveling long distances before landing to begin new colonies. Trostel estimated the ants' migration at 15 to 30 miles per year.

Despite a Texas agriculture department quarantine on transportation of sod, soil, trees and other potential ant-carrying material, the migration is often aided by man.

"We do our best with quarantines," Wangberg said. But with so many potential carriers, including tiny chunks of dirt on earth-moving equipment, "there's just all kinds of possibilities," he said.

WITH SUCH GREAT potential for mobility, fire ants could reach Midland "as early as today," Trostel said.

Wangberg said research indicates that West Texas' arid climate, once thought of as a poor habitat for fire ants, may instead be a perfectly hospitable environment for the pests.

Charlie Green, Midland county agricultural extension agent, said no reports of fire ants in the county have been confirmed.

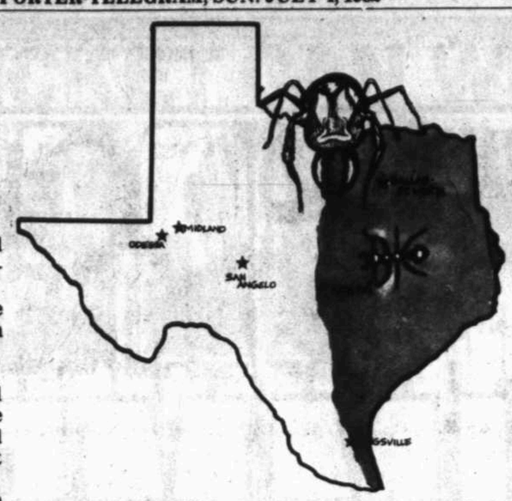

About a month ago, "we began to get a whole rash of calls," Green said. But in each case, native fire ants were found.

"To the untrained, or even some of the trained eyes, they are hard to identify," according to Green. Trostel said imported fire ants are nearly impossible to recognize "unless you get stung."

Anyone suspecting the presence of an imported fire ant colony should contact the agricultural extension office or a professional exterminator.

Trostel said about $5 million in state, federal and local funds have been spent this year to battle imported fire ants in Texas. Despite dwindling federal funds, he said future state budgets will probably allot more money for the program.

With additional funds, and some advances through research, Trostel, Wangberg and others hope to find a way to stem the spread of imported fire ants and perhaps bring down the curtain on "The Invincible One."

Imported fire ants are spreading westward through Texas, despite researchers' efforts to find a way to combat the pest.

Traffic accidents kill 20 people as holiday weekend begins

By The Associated Press

Two San Augustine youngsters killed in a hit-and-run accident as they rode bicycles were among 20 people who died in motor vehicle accidents in Texas as the Fourth of July holiday weekend began.

The Texas Department of Public Safety estimated that 47 people would die in traffic accidents in the state during the weekend, which began at 6 p.m. Friday and ends at midnight Monday.

DPS spokesman Larry Todd said 54 people died in traffic accidents during the counting period last Fourth of July weekend and that the death toll grew to 63 with the addition of people who died later from injuries suffered in accidents during that weekend.

On Saturday, Emory Andrew Roberts, 13, and Robert Parks, 11, of San Augustine, were killed and a third cyclist, Paul Jones, 14, was injured when they were hit by a vehicle that did not stop, Todd said. The 14-year-old was listed in serious condition at a hospital in Nacogdoches.

The accident occurred about 1 a.m. five miles east of San Augustine on FM 353, he said.

Two Garland residents — Raymond Robles Jr., 31, and Johnnie Montoya, 17 — were killed at 3:27 a.m. Saturday when the car they were in hit a utility pole at a Garland intersection, Todd said.

In anticipation of the weekly weekend melodrama and olio, the Yucca board stocked up on what it hopes is enough popcorn to last through Labor Day — 1½ tons of popcorn complete with ¾ ton of oil. The Mummers opened its 34th season Friday with "Poltroonery on the Pacific—The Isle You See Ain't No Bikini Atoll." Performances will run Thursday, Friday and Saturday beginning at 8:30 p.m. For reservations call 682-4111.

'Mega Force' is movie of simple-minded fun

"Mega Force" is a fast-moving, flashy film about a "phantom army of super elite fighting men" whose duty is to preserve freedom and justice throughout the world.

The leader of this "Mega Force" is Barry Bostwick as "Ace" Hunter. Bostwick is being touted as Hollywood's newest male sex symbol and does nothing to dispel that rumor in "Mega Force." His hair is sun-streaked blond and he wears a skin-tight gold jumpsuit and blue scarf around his head, designed to draw attention to his sky blue eyes, of course.

Even co-star Persis Khambata, who since "Star Trek" has grown back her black tresses, comes off like the female of the peacock pair, a little dull.

The good guy vs. bad guy plot involves a former military pal of Hunter's, named Guerera (Henry Silva), who goes over to the Russians after becoming the victim of political maneuvering in Costa Brava. Guerera battles his way across desert areas of "Gamibia," and "Sardoon," until Zara (a military officer and daughter of the president of Sardoon) and a British military advisor (Edward Mulhare) decide to hire Mega Force to stop Guerera.

"Mega Force" is simple-minded fun, filled with rocket-propelled flying motorcycles and doonbuggies, with video gadgets and holographs of Hawaiian bathing beauties. But director Hal Needham does provide a counterbalance to the preoccupation with vehicular hardware by giving each character a memorable bit.

There is a Texan named "Dallas" who wears an earring, a black guy named "Shakespeare" who sports a Walkman headset and works a Rubik cube in seconds, one fellow who throws darts and another who does crossword puzzles.

Obviously intended for youngsters, "Mega Force" is a film of few words. Action dominates in this world where the motto for the elite group is "Deeds Not Words." But slogans and watchwords are littered throughout "Mega Force." In fact, Bostwick is fond of telling anyone who will listen that, "Good guys win even in the 80s!" And just in case you didn't get the message during the movie, he shows up again after the credits to remind you.

"Mega Force," rated PG, creates the illusion of being a fast film — over in a hurry. That is due, in part, to the bubble-gum rock music of Jerrold Inmel and in part to the timed skirmishes (the actual elapsed time runs in the corner of the screen). But most of the credit goes to the editing of the battles, wherein short close-ups mix effectively with long shots to carry the action, even though some of the shots are repeated several times.

"Mega Force" is a high-tech fantasy for kids who do wheelies in the street. They are sure to enjoy a scene where Hunter rears back on his motorcycle and fires a machine gun-like apparatus on the shield at planes flying overhead. This kind of razzmatazz may even captivate a few adults, ever so briefly, but my guess is you are more likely to think "Mega Force" is just plain hokey — gadgets, guerillas, good-looking guys and all.

Search on for 'muscle-bound' man to star with Estrada

NEW YORK (AP) — This must be the place. You walk into an office and see a couch full of blond, muscle-bound clones dressed in tight T-shirts, dungarees and sneakers.

And they all have one more thing. Big smiles. If you're going to share motorcycle duty with swarthy Erik Estrada, you need good choppers.

This was the scene last week. Not a meeting of the UCLA water polo team, but a steady stream of dreamers, all hopeful of winning a starring role in NBC's beefcakey hit, "CHiPs," about California motorcycle cops.

Larry Wilcox has left the show for wider thoroughfares, so the casting call went out for a new salt shaker to star with Estrada's pepper. "We're looking for somebody with sex appeal and a strong image," says Al Onorato, casting consultant for 'CHiPs.'

Intellectual types and Wilcox lookalikes need not apply.

"We're stressing that this is not a replacement but a new character," says Onorato. "It's not an advantage to look too much like Larry.

"The guy has to be young and fairly cocky," adds Onorato. "He's on the police force because there's a moral fiber about him. But he'll take on the establishment when he has to, and bend it his way.

"It's preferable that he's blond. And preferable that he ride a motorcycle."

But the most essential quality is that he must make women swoon.

"There are different kinds of sex appeal," says Onorato. "I like to compare it to ice cream. Vanilla, chocolate and strawberry are all best-sellers. But what we want here is a man's man, like Tom Selleck. He's not a threat to men, and women love him. We're not looking for an Anthony Geary ("General Hospital"). That's too esoteric and ethereal."

Greg Wongler, 20, is one of the hundreds of hopefuls who's been auditioning in Miami, Dallas, Atlanta, New York and Los Angeles. The first three cities grow them strong and tan. The last two are actors' havens.

Wongler, from Croton, N.Y., attends C.W. Post College, where he plays lacrosse. He's blond and can ride a motorcycle. He's done recent commercials for the Army, Three Musketeers and Zest Soap.

He broke into the business by doing a Minolta camera commercial with Bruce Jenner, a "CHiPs" alumnus.

"This is surely harder than commercials," Wongler said after reading a scene with Onorato. "You have to come across in a realistic way."

Wongler made it past the interview-and-reading stage. The next step is an audition tape that will be screened by executives at NBC and MGM, the production company behind "CHiPs." Then could come an audition with Ponch (Estrada) to see how they mix on camera. Filming for "CHiPs" begins July 26.

'Superstar' auditions to be held

Auditions for Midland Community Theatre's production of "Jesus Christ Superstar" will be held July 12, 13 and 19 at 7 p.m. and July 18 at 2 p.m. in Theatre I at Theatre Midland, 2000 W. Wadley Ave. Audition material is available in the theater's business office.

Roles are available for 25 men and 10 women with a singing chorus of 50 additional voices. Besides the strong vocal requirements, on stage actors will need to possess the ability to work in ensemble. Dancers also will be needed in the production. They will be required to sing, through not to the same degree as the soloists.

"Jesus Christ Superstar" will be the next show up in Theatre I. It is scheduled to open Sept. 10 and continue for a nine performance run. Rehearsals will begin in mid-July and continue to the play's opening date.

Auditions also will be held in August for MCT's Theatre II production of "Tintypes," selected by the MCT board of governors as the play to fill the "Best Available" slot.

"Tintypes" is a musical revue of American music from 1895 to 1918. The three-woman, two-man cast portrays such notables as Teddy Roosevelt, Anna Held and Emma Goldman.

Director for the production is Michael Spicer. Spicer is looking for five talented, energetic people from 20 to 35 years old who are willing to make a long commitment to this production since it will probably be MCT's entry in the Festival of American Community Theatres. Audition dates are set for Aug. 22, 23 and 24. "Tintypes" opens Oct. 1.

Jimmy Connors, no longer firebrand? AP Laserphoto

Connors, Wimbledon...it's Love

Jimmy crowd favorite

By WILL GRIMSLEY

WIMBLEDON, England (AP) — Wimbledon galleries have come to love Jimmy Connors as they hated the Jimmy Connors of eight years ago. And Jimmy is starting a love affair with the Wimbledon crowds he once disliked.

"Wimbledon has changed a lot," said the 29-year-old firebrand after a brisk 6-4, 6-3, 6-1 semifinal victory over Australia's Mark Edmondson Saturday.

"The crowds are looser, they're not afraid to participate. I played a match on the No.2 court the other day and the people were singing in the stands. They wouldn't have thought about that a couple of years ago."

IN THE third game of the third set against Edmondson, the Australian leaped high in the air to hit an overhead, and the ball soared on the fly into the upper tier of the stands. Connors rushed to the net, holding up a thumb and fingers to indicate the ball missed the line by a fraction of an inch.

The Center Court crowd burst into wild laughter.

Then Connors strode to the umpire's stand and began making a mock protest.

More laughter from the gallery. The umpire smiled. Wimbledon umpires, as a rule, frown on such levity.

The 1974 Connors, who crushed popular Ken Rosewall in the final, made finger gestures, but of a different kind. He was brash, brassy and bad, frequently profane.

He then was one of Bill Riordan's court mavericks, a wild, unrestrained band which included also Ilie Nastase and Vitas Gerulaitis.

THE NEW Connors is puckish, playful and polite.

"When I first broke into tennis," Connors said, "everything was life or death. I never had any money of my own. I was different.

"Then the game went pro. I started making money. I didn't have to go to my parents for 40 or 50 bucks to buy a jacket. I could even start helping them.

"The more you play, the more money you make. Your attitude changes."

Connors said that while his deportment on the court may have mellowed in the intervening years, his aggressive style of play hasn't.

"When I come to play, I'm going to give my best," he said. "You can't ask for more. That part of me will never change."

Before Saturday's semifinals, London bookies favored John McEnroe to win the title at short odds of 4-6. Connors was second at 5-4 with all others longshots at 33-1.

"I'm 30 years old (actually 29) and I haven't won in eight or nine years," Connors said. "So it's important for me to win tomorrow (Sunday).

CONNORS WAS reminded that two years ago he and McEnroe almost came to blows in a semifinal match here, won by McEnroe in four sets.

When McEnroe began protesting a call, Connors told him to "shut up." Some sharp talk and finger wagging ensued but it never reached a physical clash.

"It was nothing," Connors said. "I was in a bad mood. So was he. When we play, it's always a life and death battle. We both kill ourselves to win.

"But that just makes excitement, doesn't it?"

Navratilova's strength, guile too much for Chris

By JAMES LITKE

WIMBLEDON, England (AP) — Martina Navratilova used both strength and guile to wrest the Wimbledon women's singles crown from Chris Evert Lloyd 6-1, 3-6, 6-2 today, marking the third time she has defeated Lloyd in the finals of the All-England Tennis Championships.

Navratiola, a native of Czechoslovakia who became an American citizen last year, beame only the 10th woman since 1900 to win the Wimbledon singles title three or more times. She also captured the crown in 1978 and 1979.

"I knew I had it in me," said Navratilova. "I was expected to win. I was the favorite. But it's always hard when you are the favorite."

Victory came when Lloyd's forehand sailed over the baseline and the Czechoslovakian-born Navratilova threw her arms skyward to celebrate her triumph.

"I'm very disappointed," said Lloyd. "After winning the second set, I felt a lot of energy and a lot of good feeling. But that's part of tennis."

In the men's semifinals, defending champion John McEnroe crushed young Tim Mayotte of Springfield, Mass., 6-3, 6-1, 6-2, while No.2 Jimmy Connors turned in a workmanlike 6-4, 6-3, 6-1 decision over No.12 Mark Edmondson of Australia, setting the stage for the third Wimbledon battle between the two American left-handers.

Each has won a semifinal battle, Connors in 1977 and McEnroe in 1980.

"I respect him," McEnroe said of Connors. "He gives 100 percent. I want to get on top early and force him to stay back.

"I'm going to be aggressive. I'm going to mix up my serves and try to keep him off-balance. If he gets his rhythm going, he can be tough."

Connors, who enjoys a 10-8 lead in their lifetime series, expressed quiet confidence.

"Tomorrow's match is important to me," he said. "I'm nearly 30 years old and haven't won here for eight years."

With her victory, Navratilova also captured a $500,000 bonus and is only one step away from winning another $500,000.

The Playtex Challenge is a prize of $1 million for the woman professional tennis player who can win four specified major tournaments in a 12-month period on four different surfaces. If a player wins three of the four, as Martina has, she receives $500,000.

The tournaments are the U.S. Women's Indoors, which is played on carpet; the Family Circle Cup, clay; Wimbledon, grass, and the 1982 U.S. Open, hard court.

The left-hander, who now makes her home in Dallas, earlier won both the U.S. Women's Indoors and the Family Circle Cup.

Martina, in reaching the final of her 19th consecutive tournament, has been devastating this year, winning 54 of 55 matches. Her only loss came in the title match of the Avon Championships in New York in March to Sylvia Hanika.

She also beat Lloyd in the final of the Australian Open last year and won the French Open last month, defeating Andrea Jaeger 7-6, 6-1.

Weiskopf, Nelson take Western lead

OAK BROOK, Ill. (AP) — Larry Nelson birdied the final hole Saturday to tie Tom Weiskopf as the pair swept by faltering Bob Gilder into the lead after three rounds of the $350,000 Western Open golf tournament.

Nelson, the current PGA champion, shot a 4-under-par 68 for a total of 206, 10 under par for 54 hholes on the Butler National Golf Club course.

Weiskopf, the winner of $2 million and 14 titles in his 19-year career, shot a 70 for his 206, but bogeyed two of the last four holes to blow a three-shot cushion.

Meanwhile, Gilder whiffed a shot and saw his string of seven par or better rounds come to an embarrassing end. The Westchester Classic champion struggled to a 74 and a total of 209, good for third place.

It marked the first time in seven rounds and two tournaments that Gilder did not have sole possession of the lead.

NELSON TRAILED Weiskopf by three shots with four holes left. But he birdied the 15th and 18th, while Weiskopf, his playing partner, bogeyed the 15th and 17th with a birdie at 16 sandwiched between the two.

Gilder suffered one of the sport's ultimate embarrassments when he swung at and missed his second shot from amidst a clump of bushes on the sixth hole.

Gilder punched his third shot 30 yards into the middle of the fairway, hit his fourth over the green and missed a 15-foot for a double bogey.

That gave Weiskopf the sole lead for the first time, but Gilder birdied the next hole to remain tied for the lead until the 11th.

Changes great for Cubs, fans

By CHAD PUERLING
Sports Writer

When the Wrigley family sold the Chicago Cubs organization to The Tribune Companies, many observers feared that the only change would be in the packaging of the baseball franchise. They speculated that the bumble gum wrapper would merely be changed to a favorite fish wrap, old newspapers.

But the new owners have done more than put a new face on the perenial cellar dwellers. From top to bottom the Cubs have begun to develope what they hope will be a winning tradition. Unlike Reagan's economic policies the trickle down theory seems to be working with the new organizational planning.

Bill Schammel, the Midland Cubs General manager, is the first to praise the change and said the changes have been for the better.

"The new organization has been just great," he said. "They don't just ask for things, they also want to know what they can give in return."

Schammel is the first to admit that the fans see very little of what the positive changes coming out of Chicago have done. What effects the Midland fans' impression of the Midland Cubs is up to the local management. Its' a job that Schammel has tackled with new vigor this year.

"We've made a lot of changes, all designed with the fans in mind," he said.

One of the most noticible changes has been in the concessions where the serving lines have been doubled to increase traffic flow and the menu has been upgraded. An extra beer stand was added and they were moved further from the food and soft drink area to provide better service. The popularity of the nachos

April Sound:

Unique aquatic driving range

BY TED BATTLES

(One of a series)

April Sound has something no other place had on the Texas Tourist Development tour for golf and travel writers.

It has a driving range. An aquatic driving range! Unfortunately, it was momentarily out-of-order during our visit. Seems a boat penetrated the floats that keep the balls from drifting out into Lake Conroe the night before and "rustled" between 800 to 900 balls. Of course, they were all branded, so before you use a driving range ball, check its brand.

April Sound is just around the lake from the terrors of Walden and 50 miles northwest of Houston. And like, Walden it catches many weekend commuters from Texas' biggest city.

The 1,000-acre country club resort offers villa (hotel-type) and privately-owned two and three bedroom townhouses. The one we stayed in obviously was owned by a Big Gamesman. The walls were adorned with impressive trophies from all over the world. The townhouses are fully furnished and include living room/kitchen areas.

According to marketing director Jay Lehman, "We specialize in providing conference groups with personalized attention. We endeavor to make our guests feel that they are members of our country club."

The largest meeting room is 2,400 square feet with connecting breakout rooms 18x24 feet each.

Danny Snider is the head professional of the 27-hole golf course which meanders amidst heavy timber over rolling terrain and is designed for golfers of any caliber.

Water comes into play on nine holes and the Mojave-East hazards of Lakeway's Hills, Horseshoe Bay and Walden are not as numerous, but are strategically placed, thereby putting a premium on accuracy.

Other recreational facilities include a 17-court tennis center at which special weeklong or weekend tennis clinics are offered for conference guests.

A large family pool and two separate adult pools, with adjacent heated jacuzzis and saunas are available.

Boat slips and launches are available for the use of guests while boat rentals, sailboat, fishing and sightseeing excursions are available.

Two types of accommodations are available for conference guests: the Villa package at $94.50 per person, per day and the Townhome package at $107 per person per day.

April Sound also offers a golf package which includes two nights, three days of golf. Electric carts for 18 holes rent for $12.50 for 18 holes and $6.50 for nine.

The per couple package price is $149 and the single package is $122.

Tee times are provided at the time of confirmed reservations, Saturday and Sunday morning. Tee times are subject to availability in the March 1-Sept. 30 summer season.

Bigger crowds at games

called for the addition of an extra outlet for the spicy Mexican food, and the novelty station has a greater variety of items with an increased price range.

But aside from the physical changes, Schammel gives the credit for a smooth food operation to the new man in charge, Ernie Johnson. "Ernie has been the main difference," he said, "he's done a tremendous job for us this year."

ONE MAIN item used extensively during the offseason was paint. When you first looks at Cubs stadium, it seems that everything has been painted. Schammel calls the new look an "eye wash". "That's what it is," he said. "We want to go first class, and that means you have to upgrade everything."

It seems Schammel wanted to wash the fans ears too. So he hired a new public address anouncer, Barry Sykes.

Sykes said that Schammel's instructions were simple. "Bill told me to have a good time with the fans, 'Keep them loose and entertained,'" he said.

And, according to Schammel, Sykes has filled the bill. Pointing his finger toward the press box while responding to Sykes joking with a fan, Schammel begged the question, "Isn't he just great?"

Indeed, Sykes seems to have built a rapport with the Cub regulars and keeps his show in line with the national passtime. "It's important not to distract from the game," Sykes said, "My job is to enhance it."

Opposing players and mangers may not agree when their pitcher, being pulled from a game, is confronted with the song, "Take this job and shove it."

But Sykes thinks most players take it in stride and he for one is a man who loves his work. "This is fun, I really enjoy it." he said.

Although the players remain unaffected by the changes behind the grandstands, they have also been served. With the change in Chicago came a new outlook on the minor league operations which included a new coaching position, in addition to the manager, for the minor league clubs.

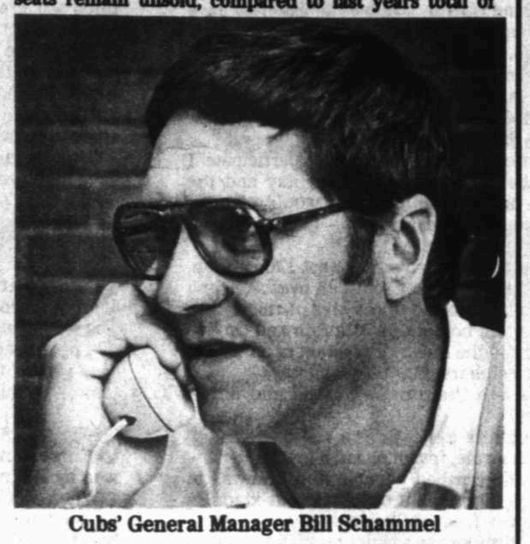

Ramon Conde has joined the Midland club to assist manager Brian Murphy and help in player developement. Schammel said the Puerto Rican native has helped tremendously with the hispanic players as they try to adjust to a new enviroment.

But Schammel hasn't ignored the players either. "We put in new laundry facilities and moved the equipment into its own building so the players would have more room." he said. "We also carpeted the club house and we think its a lot nicer than last year."

THE ULTIMATE question is whether the new positive strategy has added anything to the game? By all measurements the answer is positively "yes". Schammel points out the fact that attendance is up over last years figures and said, "Food sales have increaed anornimously."

One of the most convienient changes for Schmmmel and his staff was the moving of the Cubs office out to the ball park. The familiar downtown location made deliveries and parking a headache. "We miss the people just walking in off the streets to chat, but we're a more efficient operation out here." Schammel said.

According to Schammel only two of the 1,035 box seats remain unsold, compared to last years total of

Cubs' General Manager Bill Schammel

875. "I'm proud of that figure, it's got to be one of the best in the nation." he said.

And dispite errors in last year's attendance figures Schammel insists the crowds are larger. "I'd say there are about 200 more fans per night this year." he said.

For those who insist nothing is free, you're right. But what do you expect for 50 cents. "We raised our prices by a half dollar this year," Schammel said, "But we're still the best value in the Texas League."

With all the changes Schammel still has one goal to achieve. "I'd like to break out some champaign," he said, "It's been 11 years since the Cubs have won an outright pennant."

Cubs down Dodgers, 9-4

SAN ANTONIO — The Midland Cubs have already played better here than they did in the first half of the Texas League race.

In that season-opening series, the Cubs lost all five games of the series. Saturday night, they handed the Dodgers a 9-4 defeat. The victory also helped Midland pull to within one game of the league-leading Dodgers.

Doug Welenc, 10-6 with the victory, went the distance for the Cubs giving up all four Dodger runs in the first three innings and trailed 4-0 going into the top of the fourth. Midland gained some ground in that frame scoring three runs and scored the eventual winning run in the fifth when two Cubs crossed home plate.

Javier Fierro and Dave Owen held the the hot bats for the Cubs with 3-for-4 performances. Owens three hits, of which one was a triple, were good for three RBIs.

The two teams will play Game 2 of the series tonight at 7:30.

A's rally to beat Rangers

OAKLAND, Calif. (AP) — Mike Heath, Mickey Klutts and Dwayne Murphy delivered RBI singles in a three-run fifth inning and Rick Langford pitched a five-hitter Saturday to give the Oakland A's a come-from-behind 5-3 victory over Texas that ended the Rangers' three-game winning streak.

The victory was only Oakland's second in the last 14 home games as Langford, 7-9, pitched his American League-leading 10th complete game. He retired the final 19 batters.

In the decisive fifth, Rickey Henderson led off with a bunt single and stole second, his 76th theft of the season in his 80th game. By comparison, Lou Brock of the St. Louis Cardinals stole his 76th in the 110th game when he set the major league record of 118 in 1974.

White Sox 7, Mariners 6

CHICAGO (AP) — Jerry Hairston's tie-breaking sacrifice fly in the eighth inning Saturday scored Bill Almon and lifted the Chicago White Sox to a 7-6 victory over the Seattle Mariners behind Jerry Koosman's brilliant relief pitching.

Koosman, 2-3, relieved starter Dennis Lamp with one out in the second inning after the Mariners had scored four times to take a 5-0 lead and allowed only one run and four hits the rest of the way while striking out six.

Yankees 10, Indians 6

CLEVELAND (AP) — Graig Nettles' two-out single with the bases loaded drove in the tying and lead runs and he added a two-run homer in the ninth as the New York Yankees rallied for a 10-6 victory over the Cleveland Indians Saturday night.

Dave Winfield walloped a solo home run to start the Yankees' three-run ninth — his 12th of the seayon and third in two nights — while three relievers combined for 31-3 innings of one-hit relief after the Indians had taken a 6-4 lead with three runs off Tommy John in the bottom of the sixth.

The sellout crowd of 69,557 in Municipal Stadium was the largest of the major league season, topping the Indians' Opening Day throng of 62,443.

Twins 2, Blue Jays 1

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — Jack O'Connor, making his third start since being recalled from the minors, pitched a six-hitter as the Minnesota Twins beat the Toronto Blue Jays 2-1 Saturday night on a tie-breaking single by Ron Washington in the eighth inning.

O'Connor, 1-2, struck out four and walked three in outdueling Jim Clancy, 7-5, to record his first complete game in the majors.

John Castino started the Minnesota eighth with a leadoff double and took third when Bobby Mitchell singled to short right field. Washington then singled to score Castino. Clancy escaped further damage when Tom Brunansky flied out and Kent Hrbek hit into a double play.

Royals 6, Angels 2

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — Hal McRae keyed a five-run burst in the fifth inning with a two-run triple Saturday night, jumping his American League-leading RBI total to 72 and propelling the Kansas City Royals to a 6-2 victory over the California Angels.

The loss was California's fourth in a row and sliced the Angels' lead in the AL West to one-half game over the Royals.

Winner Larry Gura, 9-4, scattered six hits through six innings, including a massive Reggie Jackson home run. Dan Quisenberry went the final three, retiring all nine batters he faced, and earned his 21st save, tops in the majors. Dave Goltz, 1-2, was the loser.

The Royals led 1-0 on Willie Wilson's RBI second-inning single when Wilson opened the fifth with a single off the glove of first baseman Rod Carew. John Wathan, George Brett and Amos Otis singled to make it 3-0 and McRae slammed Goltz's next pitch to the center field wall, scoring Brett and Otis. McRae scored the Royals' sixth run on Frank White's infield hit off Mike Witt.

Bobby Grich led off the California sixth with a single and two outs later Jackson mashed a towering home run into the water display behind the right field fence. It was Jackson's 16th of the season and 30th lifetime against the Royals, more than any other player.

A crowd of 41,380, third largest in Royals Stadium's 10-year history, attended the game.

Brewers 7, Red Sox 0

MILWAUKEE (AP) — Pete Vuckovich tossed a three-hitter and Milwaukee's home-run bats stayed hot as Cecil Cooper cracked a pair of bases-empty homers, Robin Yount belted a three-run shot and Paul Molitor added a solo blast to lead the Brewers to a 7-0 victory over the Boston Red Sox Saturday night, tying the two teams for first place in the American League East.

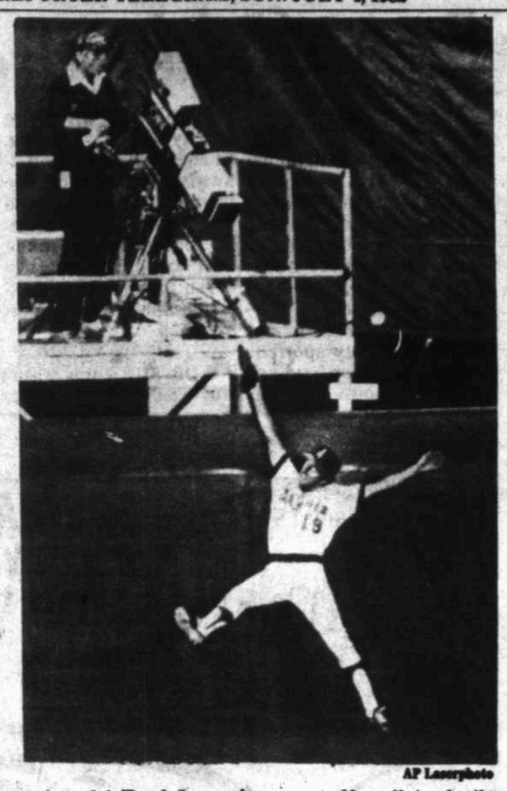

Vuckovich, 10-3, allowed only singles by Wade Boggs, Dave Stapleton and Dwight Evans and a pair of walks as he won for the ninth time in his last 10 decisions.

The four home runs gave Milwaukee 35 in 15 games, tying a major league record set by the 1947 New York Giants.

Molitor sent the Brewers on their way when he hit a pitch off Chuck Rainey, 4-3, just inside the left-field foul pole leading off the first for his eighth homer. One out later, Cooper took Rainey over the right field wall to give Milwaukee a 2-0 lead.

Yount boosted the lead to 5-0 in the fourth when he followed leadoff singles by Marshall Edwards and Molitor with his 12th homer of the year.

Cooper hit his second homer of the game and his 19th of the year in the sixth.

Martin, Kingman argue, no punches

OAKLAND, Calif. (AP) — Oakland A's Manager Billy Martin confirmed Satuday that he and pitcher Brian Kingman exchanged heated words outside a Kansas City hotel earlier in the week, the continuation of a season-long dispute between the two.

Martin also disclosed that shortstop Tony Phillips has been sent to the minor leagues for disciplinary reasons after he arrived at the ballpark late for Saturday's game.

Kingman, 0-5 since being recalled from Tacoma of the Pacific Coast League last month, has been feuding with Martin since the pitcher was suspended for several weeks at the start of the season for refusing a demotion to the minors.

"I was just angry at a comment I heard him (Kingman) make about a friend of mine," Martin said of the latest incident. "So I took him outside and we had it out. No punches were thrown. We just aired some feelings out. He showed me he's a real classy kid."

Kingman told newsmen before Saturday's game that he had no comment about the incident, saying that as far as he is concerned, the incident is over.

"I'm glad he said that," said Martin. "We don't need to air out our differences in the press. When you're winning, this kind of stuff never shows up. But when you're losing, things seem to come apart at the seams. It's been happening like this in baseball for 100 years."

Martin angrily disclosed Phillips' demotion following Saturday's 5-3 victory over the Texas Rangers.

"I never did that when I was a rookie and no rookie is going to do that to me, either," Martin said. "Here's a guy who hasn't been hitting or fielding well and should be out at the ballpark two hours early instead of showing up late.

Pirates win sixth straight

PITTSBURGH (AP) — Jason Thompson slammed a two-run homer and Manny Sarmiento held Montreal to one run in eight innings Saturday night as the Pittsburgh Pirates ran their winning streak to six games with a 4-2 victory over the slumping Montreal Expos.

It was the fourth loss in a row for the Expos and their ninth in the last 11 games.

After rain delayed the start of the game for an hour and 37 minutes, Gary Carter gave Montreal a 1-0 lead in the second inning with his 17th home run of the season. That was the only run off Sarmiento, 3-1, until the ninth. He allowed five hits in eight innings but gave way to Kent Tekulve after Mike Gates and Tim Wallach singled to start the Expos' ninth.

The runners advanced as Al Oliver grounded out and Gates scored on a sacrifice fly by Carter. Tekulve then retired Warren Cromartie on a grounder to earn his 10th save.

Braves 4, Reds 2

ATLANTA (AP) — Glenn Hubbard blooped a two-run single to center with two out in the seventh inning, giving the Atlanta Braves a 4-2 victory Saturday night over Cincinnati and extending the Reds' losing streak to six games.

The Braves began their winning rally against Mario Soto, 7-5, after two outs when Rafael Ramirez doubled to the gap in left field.

Soto then walked pinch-hitter Larry Whisenton and Claudell Washington to load the bases for Hubbard.

The game-winning hit enabled Rick Mahler, 8-6, to gain the victory. He allowed six hits in seven innings and relief ace Gene Garber worked the final two innings to gain his 14th save.

Cubs 2, Cardinals 1

ST. LOUIS (AP) — Leon Durham tripled home a run and scored another in the fourth inning to give the Chicago Cubs a 2-1 victory over the St. Louis Cardinals and spoil a four-hit performance by loser Joaquin Andujar Saturday night.

Tom Filer, 1-2, scattered seven hits over seven innings and had relief help from Willie Hernandez, who registered his sixth save after giving up a Cardinal run in the ninth on Tommy Herr's RBI single.

Chicago made the most of Durham's triple off Andujar, 7-6, in the fourth.

The Cubs' second win in a row over St. Louis handed the Cardinals their third straight loss and fifth in six games.

Geiselman has three-shot lead in Clark golf

Randy Geiselman shot a non-handicap round of 72 to take the first day lead by three strokes in the Championship Division of the 18th annual George Clark golf tournament at Midland Country Club.

Craig Campbell and Larry Snyder are tied for second with 75's followed by Kelly Cox and Steve Whiteside at 76.

In Division one, W.C. Hubbard came in with a 66 (handicap) for a three shot lead over four golfers, Tom Garber, Cal Glass, Larry Stapp and George Eng tied for second with 69. Bill Gesell posted a 70; Steve Harper, 71; and George tope, Russ Ramsland and Bill Franklin, 72.

In Division two, Bill Hill and Tom Welch share the first-round lead with a 66 (handicap) while King Hughes is two strokes back at 68, Rodney McDaniel, 69; Jack Eiteljorge and Pete Eastup 70; and Jack Cole, Gene Motter, Bill Cotner and Clem Barnes at 71.

Bonefishing...an invigorating challenge

Two nights and one day in Cozumel wasn't enough for our fishing junket, but tour director Julio Lizama of Houston had us scheduled to fly by private charter to Pez Maya, a fishng camp, situated approximately 70 miles across the gleaming Caribbean from the Island of Cozumel. Driving distance to Pez Maya from Cancun on the Yucatan mainland is approximately three hours.

Our first day was spent offshore fishing for dorado, sailfish and marlin at Cozumel. The second day and the following morning were designed for us sportswriters to taste of the different type of fishing and witness the unspoiled Yucatan jungle beauty.

Greeted by guides and the camp manager, it took these writers no more than 20 minutes to rig light tackle, hoop into the 16-foot flat bottom skiffs and hit the lagoons for some bonefishing.

The bonefish or macabi is considered one of the finest light tackle sportsfishes in the world. And visiting Pez Maya we were in the premier locations for the world's finest bonefishing. If you like freshwater bass fishing, then bonefishing is the bass fishing of saltwater. But even more exciting is that those little 'gray ghosts', as Zane Gray once said, are more ferious that a bass and display power of a run-a-way locomotive. It has been said that bonefishing is an obsession.

The bonefish, our main target at Pez Maya, aren't large, especially in the Yucatan, where the average fish ranges from two to four pounds. But what the fish lacks in size it more than makes up for in speed, manuverability, quickness and mystigue.

THE MOST exciting thing about fishing for the bonefishing is that this gamester has to be stalked, hooked and caught on a shallow lagoon flat... not more than two feet deep in most places.

Their gray color blends in perfectly with the lagoon bottom and if they happen to be spotted by a predator their speed helps them vanish.

Our Mayan guide Julio has been fishing the lagoon waters behind Pez Maya for years and he knows his bonefishing. But conditions weren't right for our first morning of bonefishng. A tropical storm off the Yucatan Penisula created clouds and outbursts of rain throughout the morning. One of the most important aspects of successful bonefishing is the need for bright clear weather so you can see the skittish gamester better.

I accidentally spotted two bonefish swimming along the bottom of the lagoon. Not knowing exactly what I was doing, I tossed my ⅛ ounce flatheaded jig toward the pair of bonefish. For some odd reason, one of the little speedsters nailed the bait and immediately began unspooling the six-pound line from my spinning reel.

FOR SURE this wasn't any bass or striper. It was like nothing I had ever encountered before. The little two-pound fish put up a battle so fierce that I immediately forgot about any seven-pound bass or 100-pound sailfish I had caught before. I was amazed at the strength of this little fish.

I boated the fish, beamed with joy and posed for several photographs, but respect for the bonefish is such that it is considered very poor to keep and kill one that is not wanted for mounting, so I let the creature of the shallow lagoon swim free to battle another day.

The key to successful bonefishing is a visual aid. Once the fish is spotted, the fisherman must lead the fish with a soft cast and coax the animal usually using a flat-headed jig. If you mess up on the cast, it's all over.

We probably spotted 50 bonefish in our two hours.

Bonefishing is a lot like quail hunting in the rugged canyonlands of West Texas. If you flush the birds too far, there is no shooting, if you spook this fish, there's no catch.

PEZ MAYA and surounding fishing waters offer the sportsman much more than casting for the little speedster. In the lagoon, which covers hundreds of acres of mangrove-studded waterways, there are no other gamesters like barracuda, stingrays and snappers and the birdwatching is like nowhere else in the world.

What's new in Canadian football?

By BOB GREENE
AP Sports Writer

The Canadian Football League opens its 1982 season Thursday night without Nelson Skalbania, Frank Kush, Vince Ferragamo, James Scott, Tom Cousineau, Bruce Clark or the Montreal Alouettes.

What the CFL has is the Edmonton Eskimos, going for an unprecedented fourth consecutive Grey Cup title; a new entry in the Montreal Concordes, and stronger teams in Saskatchewan, Calgary and Toronto.

Skalbania, who rode in from western Canada to buy the Alouettes and a host of former National Football League stars, found out that his money couldn't purchase victories on the football field. Instezd of building a dynasty, he ended up folding the franchise.

KUSH, FIRED as Arizona State coach after being accused of brutality by a former player, was given a second chance when the Hamilton Tiger-Cats hired him prior to the 1981 season. He rebuilt the Ticats into an Eastern Conference power, only to lose in the playoffs, and he subsequently signed as coach of the NFL Baltimore Colts.

Ferragamo, a star quarterback with the Los Angeles Rams, and Scott, one of pro football's top wide receivers with the Chicago Bears, were part of Skalbania's high-priced bid to build a CFL power. Ferragamo was a bust, leading the CFL in interceptions, and has not signed with any team this year. Scott decided to rejoin Chicago when the new Montreal franchise, the Concordes, refused to pick up his huge salary.

The Alouettes also lost Cousineau, who signed a huge contract with the Cleveland Browns, while Clark played out his contract with the Toronto Argonauts and signed with the NFL's New Orleans Saints.

Calgary opens the 1982 season at Toronto Thursday, while Saskatchewan will be at Winnipeg Friday, Hamilton at British Columbia Saturday and Edmonton at Ottawa Sunday.

Montreal gets the opening-week bye in the nine-team league, which will expand to Halifax, Nova Scotia, for the 1983 season.

LONG-TIME CFL star Tom Wilkinson of Wyoming finally retired, but Coach Hugh Campbell's Eskimos have been riding the arm and quick feet of quarterback Warren Moon for the past two years any.

Moon, the former University of Washington star, has dangerous receivers Waddell Smith of Kansas and Brian Kelly of Washington State, while running back Jim Germany of New Mexico keeps the defenses honest.

To back up Moon, Edmonton has former Temple quarterback Brian Broomell and Mike Williams of Grambling, the younger brother of Tampa Bay Buccaneers quarterback Doug Williams.

Edmonton's quick-striking offense is matched only by its stingy defense, anchored by end Ron Estay of Louisiana State, tackle Dave Fennell of North Dakota and linebacker Dan Kepley of East Carolina. The secondary, keyed by cornerbacks Larry Highbaugh of Indiana and Joe Hollimon of Arkansas State, is one of the best in the league.

The Winnipeg Blue Bombers will ride the arm of quarterback Dieter Brock, the former Jacksonville State star who was named the CFL's Outstanding Player last year. He hit on 63 percent of his passes for 4,796 yards and 32 touchdowns, averaging 13.5 yards a completion.

Battling for the No.2 signal-calling job will be veterans Mark Jackson of Baylor and Steve Pisarkiewicz, the former No.1 draft choice of the St. Louis Cardinals. They will be throwing to veteran wide receivers Eugene Goodlow of Kansas State and Bob Gaddis of Mississippi Valley and rookie Jackie Robinson of Kansas State.

THE SASKATCHEWAN Roughriders looked strong in preseason play, beating Calgary and Edmonton behind the passing of former Penn State star John Hufnagel. A year ago, Hufnagel threw for 21 touchdowns, completing 56 percent of his passes. Linebacker Vince Goldsmith of Oregon, CFL Rookie of the Year in 1981, anchors the defense. Joe Faragalli, CFL Coach of the Year last season, is expecting cornerback Marcellus Greene of Arizona, obtained from Toronto in an offseason trade, to step right in.

Jack Gotta returns as head coach of the Calgary Stampeders, where he will have quarterback Bruce Threadgill of Mississippi State and two from Northern Colorado: Jeff Knapple and Gerry Dattilio, the latter once a starter for Montreal.

Coach Vic Rapp of the B.C. Lions has lost linebacker Sam Britts to retirement. But Rapp, in his 11th year in the CFL, has deep back Larry Crawford of Iowa State, end Tyrone Keys of Mississippi State and linebacker Tyrone Crews to bolster his defense. On offense, the Lions have quarterbacks Joe Paopao of Long Beach State, Mike Nott of Santa Clara and Ron Dewalt of Texas-Arlington.

The Tiger-Cats, even without Kush, should be the class of the East. New Coach Bud Riley has veteran quarterback Tom-Clements of Notre Dame, who left the Ticats to spend one year with the Kansas City Chiefs, and kicker Bernie Ruoff of Syracuse, who led the East in field goals and scoring last year.

TORONTO, WHICH won only two games last year, will have first-year Coach Bob O'Billovich. Quarterback Joe Barnes of Texas Tech, a seven-year CFL veteran, is expected to guide the Argos after a tremendous camp and exhibition season, with Condredge Holloway of Tennessee always ready to step in.

Coach Joe Galat is George Allen's legacy to the Montreal Concordes. During his brief stint as president of the Alouettes, Allen hired Galat as head coach. He was retained by the new Montreal franchise and has plenty of material to work with.

Running back David Overstreet and defensive end Keith Gary, both of Oklahoma, were first-round NFL draft picks who decided to join the CFL.

NBA stars beat Spain

MADRID, Spain (AP) — Seattle's Gus Williams led a balanced attack with 17 points as a team of National Basketball Association All-Stars defeated the Spanish National squad 113-104 in an exhibition game Saturday night.

Alvan Adams of the Phoenix Suns and Dan Roundfield of the Atlanta Hawks added 16 points each. Others scoring in double figures for the NBA team included Artis Gilmore of the Chicago Bulls, 15, Campy Russell of the New York Knicks, 14, and Robert Parish of the Boston Celtics, 11.

The Americans held a 56-55 halftime advantage and led by as many as 17 points midway through the second half. But the Spaniards, led by Puerto Rican Chicho Sibilo's 25 points, cut the deficit to 100-96 with 4:30 left. But never came closer.

Beware of that handicap

It can lead to swift, sudden fall

PROVIDENCE, R.I. (AP) — An opponent's golf handicap is something like a parachute. If it works as it should, you're in for a safe landing. But if there's a hidden snag, your fall can be quick and deadly.

Joseph Parisi is out to eliminate that danger.

Parisi is executive vice president of National Publinks Handicaps Inc., a six-year-old firm which provides updated handicaps for nearly 10,000 golfers around the world.

A handicap generally measures the number of a strokes above par a golfer averages.

It's used to set up tournament pairings and is often the basis for clubhouse betting — friendly wagers which can turn into bitter accusations if the winner suddenly shoots well below his stated handicap.

The National Golf Foundation estimates that there are more than 10 million public-course golfers in the United States. Members of golf clubs have more than two-dozen handicap-computing companies to chose from, and the U.S. Golf Association has its own setup where club pros can get a visiting player's handicap direct from the USGA's computer, according to Dean Knuth, the association's director of handicapping.

BUT FOR "publinks" duffers who don't belong to a club, "the chances are good they will experience difficulty in establishing a handicap," Parisi said. The idea for National Publinks came when a golf-club member noted that public-course golfers had no ready source of handicap information.

Knuth said the USGA has provisions for handicapping public-course players, but only after the golfers have formed leagues. The handicaps would be provided to the leagues rather than the individual golfers, he said.

"You need some kind of policing," Knuth said. "You've heard the term, 'sandbagging.' That's what you could encounter."

PARISI, 34, left a marketing job with a local bank to work with two silent partners on the handicapping company. It's a fulltime job.

For $12 a year, National Publinks, provides subscribers in the United States, Europe, Canada and South America with monthly updates of their handicaps. USGA guidelines are used, the company said.

In its first year, 1977, National Publinks signed about 1,000 subscribers and added about 1,000 the next, usuaing ads in golf magazines and newspapers to attract customers.

"Our renewal ratio is holding right around 80 percent. So we must be doing something right," Parisi said.

Handicaps usually are computed on the basis of the 10 lowest scores from a golfer's 20 most-recent rounds. The average shot is compared against the average par for the course covered to determine the handicap.

THE UPDATES go out every month, regardless of the season.

"There really aren't that many states that get snowed in," Parisi said. "And you'll find someone who sends in a bunch of scores in February because he was down in Hilton Head (S.C.) or in Florida."

Besides smoothing competitive differences, handicaps help golfers monitor changes in their games and make for easier entry into tournaments.

"We think our handicaps are a truly accurate reflection of the golfer's true ability because our members are playing on different courses with different layouts," Parisi said.

WITH NEARLY 10,000 members, the National Publinks card is recognized at many private and public coures, he continued.

Brett, Beattie named top AL players in June

(Compiled from R-T wires)

BASEBALL—Kansas City's George Brett and Seattle's Jim Beattie were unanimously named AL Player and Pitcher of June. Brett hit .379 last month, with 39 hits in 103 at-bats. He collected 66 total bases, and hit six doubles, three triples and five homers, while raising his average 39 points while Beattie compiled a 5-0 record, two complete games. He allowed only nine earned runs for a 1.77 ERA, 11 walks, and he struck out 39 batters. His lone shutout of the month was a two-hitter at Tiger Stadium on June 4...

Managers Jim Fanning, Montreal, Chuck Tanner, Pittsburgh, Sparky Anderson, Detroit and Dick Howser, Kansas City, were named to the American and National League coaching staffs for the 1982 All-Star Game. Also on the NL staff will be Cincinnati Manager John McNamara, Reds coach Joe Amalfitano and Los Angeles bullpen coach Mark Cresse. For the AL, Oakland coaches Jackie Moore and Art Fowler will be batting practice pitchers for the AL squad, while the batting practice catcher wilb be Baltimore coach Elrod Hendricks...

Ray Scarborough, 64, former major league pitcher and special assignment scout for Milwaukee, died at Mount Olive, N.C. He pitched Wake Forest in the late 1930s, reached the major leagues with Washington in 1942, joining the Navy in 1943. After WW II, he pitched in Washington, Chicago, Boston, New York and Detroit. He was a member of the Yankees' world championship team in 1952. Scarborough's best season was in 1948, when he compiled a 15-8 record with a 2.82 earned run average for the Senators. His career record was 80-85 with a 4.13 ERA...

TRACK—American athletes won three events in the Nikkan Niter track and field meet before 28,000 spectators at Tokyo Saturday night as Gwen Gardner won the women's 400 meters in 54.62; Ronnie Taylor took men's 400 in 46.84 while Tony Rambo won the 400-hurdles in 50.72...

BOXING—Aaron Pryor defends his WBA junior welterweight for the fifth time today, this time against Japanese challenger Akio Kameda. Pryor, 30-0, has predicted a knockout victory within eight rounds over Kameda, 17-0, a law student from Tokyo. The 2:30 p.m. bout will be televised by NBC. "It will be a typical Aaron Pryor fight," the champion predicted. "I look to end it early and go home."

Kameda, 27, who speaks little English, said through an interpreter that he respects Pryor as "a great champion," but that he "has a few surprises"...

Poland, N. Ireland harbor Cup hopes

MADRID, Spain (AP) — Poland expects to win one for the "man in the street," while Northern Ireland dreams its impossible dreams Sunday in the second round of the 12th World Cup soccer tournament.

Poland is favored over the Soviet Union in a showdown for the Group A qualifying slot when the nations meet today in Barcelona. Northern Ireland, the only unseeded team left, is the underdog against a revived French team in a Group D match in Madrid.

No games were scheduled Saturday.

France and Poland each can move up with a draw; their opponents have to aim for a victory.

Northern Ireland, which has done very well to get this far, can afford to take chances.

"Why not?" says striker Billy Hamilton, who scored both goals in a 2-2 tie with Austria. "We've everything to gain and nothing really to lose. It is the correct frame of mind in which to approach such a game."

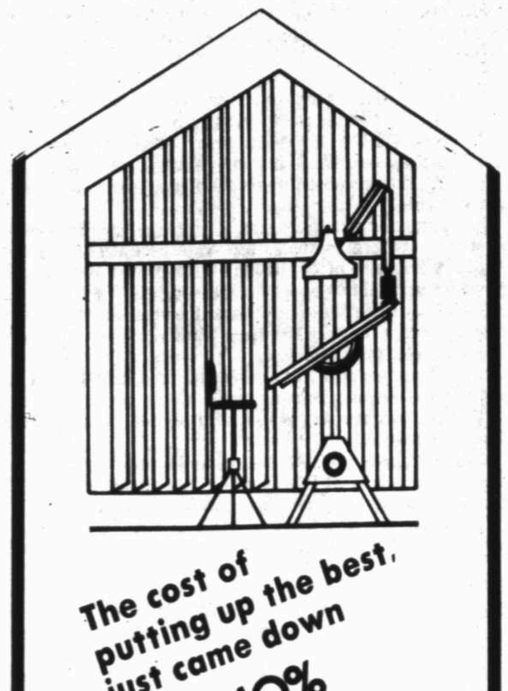

Zbigniew Boniek, who scored all the Polish goals in a 3-0 victory over Belgium, told newsmen that the match especially was important to the "man in the street" in Poland.

"He has very few reasons to be happy, rare moments to enjoy life," Boniek said. "A Polish win would be doubly important for these gray men who work hard in uncomfortable circumstances."

The last two qualifying slots will be decided Monday. Brazil and Italy face off for one in Barcelona, while England needs a solid victory in Madrid over Spain — which already has been eliminated. An English loss or draw would put West Germany into the final four.

"We will beat the Russians with no problem whatsoever," said Polish Coach Antoni Piechniczek. "We are now thinking of our opponents in the semifinal, probably Brazil."

Piechniczek allowed that the Soviets "could probably play better than in their poor 1-0 win over Belgium, but not they are not good enough to beat us."

Three tied for Jackson lead

TORONTO (AP) — Sandra Haynie, looking for her second victory in as many weeks, shot a 2-under-par 70 and shared the lead with Donna Caponi and Beth Daniel after three rounds of the $200,000 Peter Jackson Classic Saturday.

Haynie, who captured the Rochester Classic last week, was at 4-under-par 212. Caponi had a 69 in the third round, while Daniel matched Haynie's 70.

JoAnne Carner, who needs one more victory to automatically qualify for the Ladies Professional Golf Association Hall of Fame, is tied with two others, two strokes behind the leaders.

Canadian Sandra Post, who held a 1-shot lead after 36 holes, ballooned to a 5-over-par 77 and is four shots back.

DANIEL, THE LPGA Rookie of the Year in 1979, says Carner may provide the leaders the biggest challenge.

"Heck, JoAnne is two strokes under par and when she's that close in this tournament, she's capable of shooting nothing," Daniel said after her round over the 6,071-yard St. George's Golf and Country Club layout. "There's three of us leading now, but there could just as easily be six at the top."

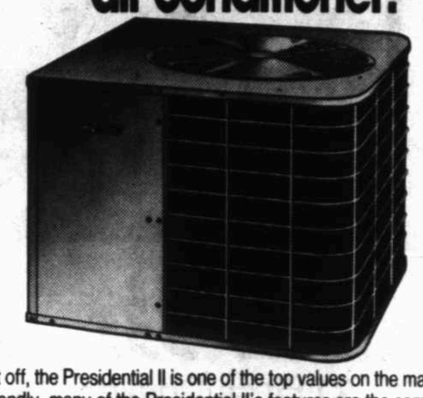

Post was tied with Daniel for the lead until she had a triple-bogey 6 on the 16th hole. She then bogeyed the next two holes and fell four behind the leaders.

Tied with Carner at 214 were Beverly Klass and Dale Eggling. Carner had a 69, Klass a 71 and Eggeling a 72.

Post, who held a 3-stroke lead going into play Saturday, refused to talk to reporters but issued a statement in which she said her game was in control until the 175-yard, par-3 16th.

It's cause for celebration, the day that marks a fight for Freedom won and the birth of our American Nation. Let's remember with pride the struggle that brought us to this great time, and know that the ideals and dreams set forth by our forefathers have enabled us to become a nation of strength and justice, one that still endures by the very principles established so long ago.

This July Fourth, let us each express our patriotism as proudly and grandly as we display America's stars and stripes.

$1450 Limited Closing Costs in Northgate Only

NORTHGATE

4909 Canadian

$75,200

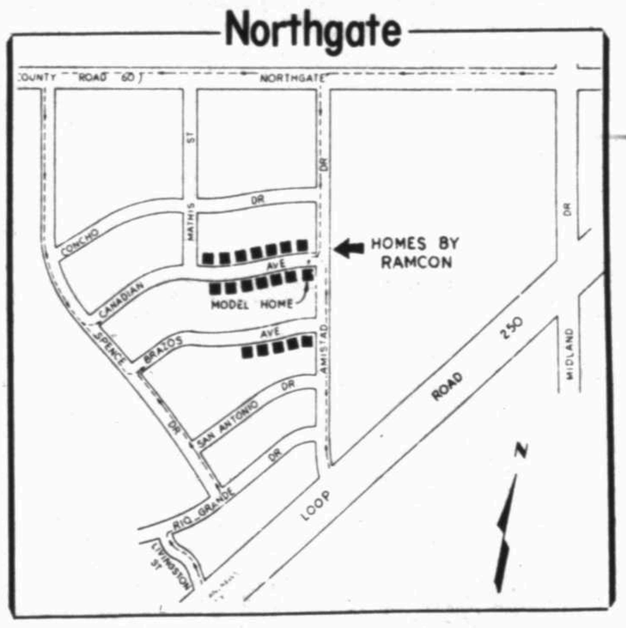

$673.30 Per Month

You can't afford NOT to buy any longer!

This beautiful Ramcon home is only one of the unique floor plans available in Midland's new prestige address, Northgate. 3 bedrooms, 2 baths, fireplace, refrigerated air and fine ash cabinetry adorn each and every model. The rich features and quality workmanship combined with our tremendous new financing package makes a RAMCON home the place to call your own. Call us or come by today. Chances are you can qualify.

Total move in costs of $5250 is based on 5% down or $3800 plus $1450 limited closing costs based on 15 days prepaid interest. The first years payment of $673.30 (principal and interest only) is based on a loan amount of $71,400. The first year's payment and buyer qualifications will be calculated equivalent to a rate of 10 7/8% for 95% loan-to-loan value. Interest will be charged at a rate of 15 7/8% for the first 6 months of the loan. After the first 6 months interest will be charged at the most recent 6 months Treasury Bill plus 4.25%. Payments on these mortgages are graduated so as to increase the principal and interest payments 7.50% each year for the next 4 years. At the end of the first 5 year period, the graduation in payments will cease. A new payment schedule will be computed using a variable rate mortgage to amortize the remaining balance over the remaining 25 years of the mortgage based upon the then current Treasury Bill rate plus 4.25%. The 7½% maximum increase can be more if the original loan principal exceeds 125%. At each 5 year anniversary date, the payment may be adjusted to allow the remaining payments to fully amortize the loan. ANNUAL PERCENTAGE RATE APPROXIMATLEY 16.575%.

Latchkey kids are making it on their own

By RHONDA RIGENHAGEN
Lifestyle Writer

Latchkey kids. The words refer to children who take care of themselves when they come home from school because their parents are at work. Depending on which estimates you go by, there may be anywhere from two to 10 million latchkey kids in the United States.

The term latchkey dates back to the early 19th century when children on their own wore their housekeys around their necks. The situation is not a product of the 1980s. But the number of latchkey children has skyrocketed in recent years, partly because divorce, feminism and economic necessity have propelled more than half the nation's mothers into the labor force.

According to latest Census Bureau statistics, about one-fifth of U.S. families with children are headed by one parent, and the number of two-income families is increasing all the time. At the same time, day care is becoming scarce and costly, while many schools have had to cut back on extracurricular activities.

"I WOULD GUESS at least 20 to 30 percent of the kids here are latchkey kids," said Dr. Barbara Thompson, counselor at Goddard Junior High School.

"Some parents bring their kids when they go to work in the morning, as early as 7:15 a.m. Some children are responsible for babysitting younger brothers and sisters, buying groceries, budgeting money and cooking meals when they get home every day.

"At the junior high level most handle the responsibility well," she continued. "They're developing more independence. It'll be easier for them when they go out on their own."

Being trusted with this kind of responsibility can foster independence, self-reliance and responsibility in many young people, and increase respect and trust between parents and children.

But many insist there are also problems associated with the latchkey situation.

"The older kids don't go home," stated Tracy Norris, a counselor at Alamo Junior High School. "They're out prowling the streets. They spend all their time in the video game parlors.

"Many of these kids have to assume the role of parent with their younger brothers and sisters until their parents get home. It creates a problem for them because they're asked to become parents in one sense and assume all the duties of parents, but they're still children themselves.

"One of the most difficult things in junior high school is learning to be responsible for yourself. We have some kids that are very responsible...but most probably aren't ready for that kind of responsibility."

Thompson points out other difficulties: "I can see this as a hindrance to developing with their peers because they may not be able to have friends over. I like to see a junior high kid enjoy being a junior high kid, and they can't when they have all these responsibilities."

Thompson wasn't too worried about the possibility of most latchkey children this age getting into trouble.

"If the student is mature, it isn't going to happen. And parents know the ones they can leave at home and trust and the ones they can't," she said. "For the most part, junior high kids will do what they're told to do."

But it's another story when the children are younger. Lee Roy Shannon, principal of Pease Elementary School, has to check out about 12 to 15 reports of unsupervised children in grades kindergarten through third each year.

"It's dangerous. It's too dangerous for kids," he said. "We do have a few who go home and take care of themselves. There's not too many that I know of that are unsupervised for any length of time.

Shannon did research three years ago that showed over 30 percent of the children in Pease came from single-parent homes. "It's probably more than that now," he speculated. "But probably less than 10 percent of the kids ages 7 to 9 are latchkey kids. There's usually someone there to take care of them — a brother or sister."

LAST YEAR IN Midland County there were 222 neglect complaints involving 514 children, according to Tom Ellison, Department of Human Resources. However, not all of those were cases of young children being left unsupervised.

The department's children's services staff handles all child abuse and neglect calls. In the case of latchkey children, they determine whether or not the child is in any danger.

"We really don't have a lot of enforcement powers unless the child is in danger," said Sue Smith, child placement supervisor. "Then we can get a court order and pick the child up." They will then work with the family until the situation has been resolved satisfactorily."

Texas law does not specify at what age a child can or cannot be left alone, so how a case is handled is left to the discretion of the Department of Human Services.

"It depends on the length of time the child is alone and the age of the child," Smith said. "We go by a general rule of 12 years.

"Thirteen- and 14-year-olds certainly should be able to take care of themselves...but they are generally the children getting involved in a lot of activities that are not necessarily constructive."

That is not the only problem faced by the older latchkey child. Research conducted by Lynette Long, assistant professor at Loyola College in Maryland, and Thomas Long, associate professor at Catholic University of America, reveals other difficulties.

Two major characteristics shared by children at home alone are fear and loneliness, they maintain. Latchkey children have to deal with everything from personal problems and emergencies to accidents and crime, and many are not prepared to handle these potential dangers.

Sometimes the unknown can be even more frightening.

"If they have radios and TVs blaring away, sometimes they do it for company and to drown the silence," Dr. Thompson of Goddard stated.

And many report having difficulty with homework because there is no one home to help them.

Parents, too, may have a hard time coping with the situation. Many feel guilty about leaving their children home alone, but may not have a choice.

Latchkey children: A story of triumph and tears

By RHONDA RIGENHAGEN
Lifestyle Writer

Editor's note: To protect the safety of the children mentioned in this story, real names have not been used.

"The saddest thing that a parent can hear from a child is 'I love you, why can't you stay with me?'" said Christine, her voice beginning to choke with emotion.

Christine is 31 and divorced. Because she can't afford day care for her children — Sean, 11, and Thomas, 7 — they stay at home alone while their mother is at work. They are latchkey kids.

"And when that happens I get angry about it," she continued. "I lash back at him saying, 'You know I have to work.' But it's not him I'm angry at. It's the situation.

"Sometimes I get so depressed I just want to quit my job and stay home with my kids. But I have no choice — I certainly won't get married just to stay home.

"So sometimes I overcompensate. I'll give them things I can't afford to give them. The children are not suffering as a result of my career. They don't feel deprived, they don't care if the alligator is on the shirt or not. It's the parent that feels guilty. And when there's one parent it seems like the responsibility is intensified."

SEAN HAS BEEN a latchkey child since he was 5 years old, when — after her divorce — Christine began working as a waitress.

"I worked menial jobs," she recalled, "it was the only way I knew that I'd have money for groceries every day. But I didn't want to be 40 years old with varicose veins and no future. I found an opportunity to get back to school. I had night classes and night jobs, and they (her children) were alone.

"The kids were very supportive at that time. I got free day care from the government," she said, referring to when she was on a limited income and welfare. "In the summertime they went to a day camp. They had the advantages of a well-to-do family.

"But I knew it was only temporary so I trained Sean from the time he was 5 to be responsible and to let himself in from school. As the years progressed he got better and better.

"I had to stress never to go outside. That wasn't only to protect them but to protect me. I was afraid that some law agency would dub me as an unfit mother when all I wanted to do was survive. It would cost me $80 a week to have both my kids in camp, and I just can't afford that."

Sean takes care of himself and his younger brother, does dishes and housework, makes lunch and sometimes starts dinner, and even washes clothes so that his mother can have her Sundays free. He has learned not only responsibility, but caution. Even though his mother had told him a reporter was coming, he was cautious about letting her in and carefully locked the door behind her when she entered and left.

Their house is in a shabby area of town ("It's the pits," Christine said.) There are neighborhood children running down the sidewalks and playing in the street, but Sean and Thomas are sitting on the couch watching TV. In the background the water heater gurgles and a baby cries next door. It's hot, and neither the refrigerator nor the air conditioner is working.

> 'We're not neglecting our children, we're trying to survive in a society that doesn't provide adequate day care for single parents.'

WHAT ARE THE advantages and disadvantages of being a latchkey child?

"The worst thing is that we can't go outside and play," Sean said. " We can play in the back yard, but we can't have friends over, because if we had an accident or someting my mom could get in trouble.

"The best thing is that we get to watch what we want. And we play Pac-Man and Asteriods." He and Thomas have become experts with their TV video games.

"We play games — Monopoly and cards. We ride our bikes to the library or go to a movie sometimes. One thing we don't do is watch soap operas — I can't stand them. What we do most is play out back or watch TV. Every day there's an hour that we don't like something on TV so we just go outside and play.

"We watch a lot of TV. The movies on Spotlight we like we've seen six or seven times. I've seen this one so many times," Sean said, pointing at the "Little Rascals" episode on the television.

This is especially frustrating for their mother.

"I guess the worst part is when I come home and see them lying in front of the TV and watching those idiotic sit coms," Christine said. "I worry about what it's doing to their minds.

"The telephone and the TV are the two electronic devices that help me take care of my kids during the day, and I hate it. It's against all my values. I don't want that TV to be a babysitter, but it does help. So you balance it out with educational TV and trips to the library. Thank goodness my oldest loves to read."

The summer months are the hardest for latchkey children, Christine said.

"When the kids are in school it's great — there's no problem. I get off work between 4 and 4:30. They'll call me as soon as they get home, raid the ice box, eat everything they aren't supposed to eat in that half hour. And I'll get home and can't understand why they aren't hungry at 5.

"Summertime is when the guilt starts. They are 11 and 7, the ages when they're more mischievous, and they're hot and they're cooped up in this house. I think it stifles them. Kids need to get outside and run around."

BEING A LATCHKEY child means having to be more responsible, and in Sean's case he's not only responsible for himself, but also his younger brother.

"The main rule is no horse play or messing around," he said. "We have to keep the doors locked, and keep everything straightened up and in order. If we have any problems we call Mom. And we've got a list of phone numbers of other friends if we can't get hold of her.

> 'You worry, but you don't let it overwhelm you. You just thank God that you didn't get a phone call that night and go till the next night.'

"Sometimes we fight," he said, referring to himself and Thomas, who was engrossed with "The Three Stooges," "but nothing really big. If he's being a pest I'll just call Mom.

"Sometimes it's a pain," he said when asked how he feels about watching after his little brother. And sometimes it's a pain having to be watched, Thomas piped up.

"Sean knows what to do in an emeregency. He knows to call 911," Christine asserted. "They're very good about calling me. They're very responsible. Then there's the times when there's a constant 50 phone calls at work: 'Mom, Thomas won't pick up his clothes,' or 'Mom, Sean is doing this to me.' Then we have to sit down and have a talk and I tell them not to call me unless it's important."

"IT'S IMPORTANT WHEN you have an older child that you don't lay too much responsiblity on him, because then you are giving him your responsibility as a parent," Christine explained. "Sean has made himself a little man in the house. He's got alot of responsibilty, and I've grown to depend on him so much. But I try to let him know that he's still a kid, and I allow him to be a child.

"I hate having to tell Sean, 'No, you can't go with your friends; you can't go to the ballgame because you have to take care of your little brother.'

"I did get Sean a Big Brother," she continued. "He's really helped. He's a male friend, a role model."

Christine glanced at her children with obvious pride. "They are going to grow up to be wonderful men, and that's the greatest reward out of all this. They're going to be understanding and loving and sharing."

She said that Sean is enrolled in the GEM program (Gifted Education of Midland) and related his hopes of being a lawyer, getting married and having children.

"Our situation hasn't warped his sense of the American dream, and I think that's great. We all need that dream. Americans have not lost the family, it's just taken on a new role. I haven't done a good job — all three of us have done a good job.

"I've felt sad that it has to be this way. But I'm doing all this to make a better life for us.

"We (mothers of latchkey children) are not neglecting our children. We're trying to survive in a society that doesn't provide adequate day care for single parents.

"If you're a parent of a latchkey child you're very careful about who you tell. If anyone asks, your first reaction is to say 'I have a neighbor who keeps an eye on them.'

"We're afraid to talk. We compare ourselves to the mothers in the Kool-Aid commercials, and we can't be that kind of mother. And from fear and guilt and a sense of failure we don't want to talk about it."

BEING ON ONE'S own can be frightening for anyone at times, especially for a child.

"I have come home and seen every light on in the house and the TV going

TOMATO CLAM ASPIC

We used unsalted tomato juice to reduce sodium.

1 envelope unflavored gelatin
12-ounce can unsalted tomato juice
6½-ounce can minced clams
½ teaspoon crushed dried basil
⅛ teaspoon white pepper
Salad greens and mayonnaise-style salad dressing

In a 1-quart liquid measure sprinkle the gelatin over one cup of the tomato juice and let soften — five to 10 minutes. Drain the clams in a strainer set over a saucepan, pressing out all the juice with a spoon. Reserve the clams. Add the remaining tomato juice to the clam juice; heat until boiling; add to the gelatin mixture and stir until gelatin dissolves. Stir in the basil, pepper and reserved clams. Chill until partly set; stir to distribute clams. Turn into four ½-cup molds or six-ounce custard cups. Chill overnight to develop flavor. Unmold at serving time and garnish with the salad greens; pass the salad dressing. Makes four servings.

It has a population of about 6,000, of which 37 percent are Hawaiians, 30 percent Filipinos, and the rest mostly Caucasian and Japanese. It is the fifth largest island in the chain and was formed by fiery outpourings of three long-extinct volcanoes. It is 50 miles from Honolulu.

INTERNATIONAL
Skin Correction Center

Jeneal skin layering is the answer to skin problems that are not considered diseases. Patients who felt they were trapped for life with problem skin can look forward to a beautiful complexion. Unless the patient has an existing medical problem that interferes; skin layering will correct cosmetic disorders such as, pimples and acne type conditions, pitts, scars, wrinkles, large pores, stretch marks, and most scarring.

The skin problems outlined above are not diseases and therefore have been of little interest to the medical profession. Dermatologists are beginning to take another look at skin layering and nurses are being trained to work in their offices or in adjoining centers.

Skin layering is not only exfoliation of dead cells and cleansing of the hair follicles, but also rejuvenation of the replacement cells. Unlike skin peeling with (phenol) or abrasives that are painful, the enzymes affect only dead cells and have no effect on live tissue, therefore some patients sleep during treatment.

Many cosmetic disorders are associated with mild hormonal imbalances, nutritional deficiency and improper diet. A simple hormone index is suggested and in some cases a Urinalysis for pregnontriol (progesterone). Skin problems seem to appear when the superficial cell count is below 50% and many times as low as 5%.

A formulation of vitamin & minerals, including trace minerals is suggested daily. Especially when dark circles under the eyes are noted and appear to be familial (inherited). This condition disappears from the outer edges first and the right eye responds faster than the left.

This vitamin supplement should be taken with morning or noon meals, which include some solids containing protein.

A normal P.H. balance should be maintained and a good routine to avoid stress is established with each patient.

The time required to correct skin problems will vary from patient to patient, but in most cases the depth of the condition and the patient's own chemistry balance influences the results.

We ask your cooperation in maintaining a regular routine so that faster results may be expected.

Scientist says teens not 'saltaholics'

EAST LANSING, Mich. (AP) — Despite fears about the eating habits of American youth, teen-agers aren't becoming "saltaholics" and those who eat salty snacks like potato chips and popcorn aren't sacrificing nutrition, a food scientist says.

"Consumption of varying amounts of salted snack foods had little impact on the average daily nutrient intake of adolescents," Mary Zabik of Michigan State University's Department of Food Science and Human Nutrition said Wednesday.

Ms. Zabik and Karen Morgan of the University of Missouri sampled food records over seven days for 480 youths aged 13-18. They said most teen-agers ate a moderate amount of potato chips, popcorn, corn chips, tortilla chips, pretzels and other such salty snacks.

"The average amount (of these snacks) consumed per week by the entire sample population was 2.1 ounces," Ms. Zabik said.

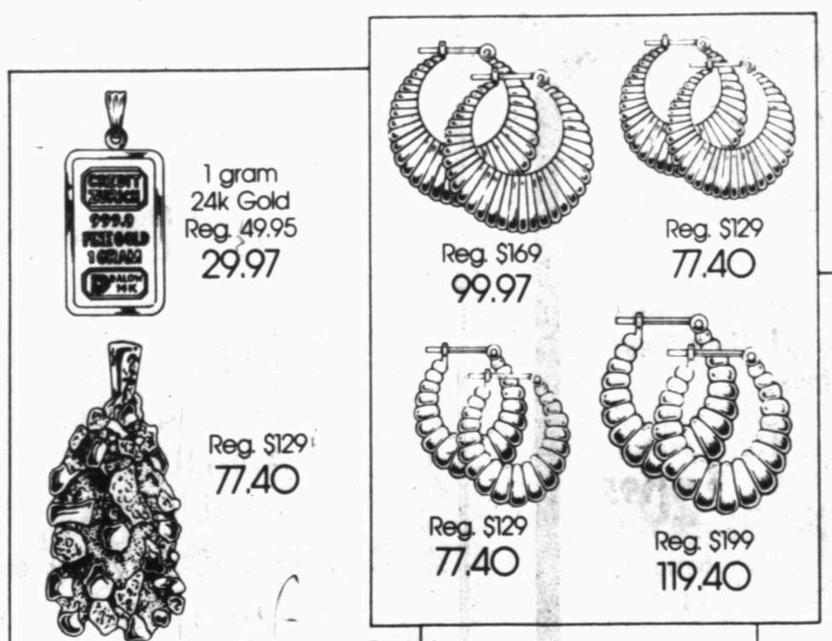

She said that equals two to four small packages of the snacks, and consumption of such snacks doesn't eliminate nutrition from the youths' diets.

"The data show that teen-agers consuming moderate quantities of salted snack foods had higher average intake levels of nutrients than individuals who did not consume any salted snack foods," she said.

The two researchers said, however, that they aren't suggesting teen-agers' diets are completely sound nutritionally. They found all the youth in the study, whether they ate snacks or not, had slightly low levels of iron, calcium, magnesium, zinc and vitamin B-6.

Dr. and Mrs. Timothy Guthrie

Golden anniversary

Long-time Midland residents Dr. and Mrs. Timothy Wesley Guthrie, 1401 Country Club Drive, celebrated their 50th wedding anniversary Saturday.

A reception was held at First United Methodist Church. It was hosted by the couple's two sons and their wives, Mr. and Mrs. Gerald Wesley Guthrie of Austin and the Rev. and Mrs. James Talbott Guthrie of Ft. Worth, along with Mrs. Guthrie's sister and brother-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. Lynn Hughes of Houston.

Also present for the occasion were the couple's five grandchildren.

Dr. and Mrs. Guthrie have been Midland residents for the past 25 years. Dr. Guthrie served for 18 of those years as pastor of First United Methodist Church. Retiring in June of 1975 after almost 44 years in the ministry, he was conferred the status of pastor emeritus by First Church, Midland.

Dr. Guthrie received his theological training at Southern Methodist University. The former Grace Ruth Talbott attended Scarritt College for Christian Workers and Peabody Teachers College in Nashville, Tenn.

The couple was married July 3, 1932, in a ceremony held between Sunday School and church services in the Methodist Church at Byers.

Dr. Guthrie's first ministerial appointment in the Methodist Church was at Gardner, Colo. Subsequent appointments included Monahans, Odessa, Wink, St. John's Methodist in Dallas, Sweetwater and Vernon.

Reflecting upon their long married life, Mrs. Guthrie remarked: "We have been blessed beyond description. We are deeply grateful."

Make small gardens look bigger

By HENRY MITCHELL
Los Angeles Times - Washington Post News Service

WASHINGTON — If you step off 20 by 40 feet outdoors and mark the boundaries with stakes, you will be distressed how small it looks.

If you come indoors and measure a room 20 by 40 feet, you will be surprised how large it is.

Now gardens are largely outdoor phenomena, with the result they look small, but they look vastly larger when enclosed with walls.

Of course we may not want walls, or may not be able to pay for them, or may not be allowed to erect them for zoning reasons; but the point remains: any enclosure will give an effect of greater space.

I do not want my small, town garden to pretend to be Versailles, and I see no good reason to try to disguise its size. All the same, I would like it to seem roomy and comfortable, and without disguising its size in any silly way, this may be accomplished by dividing the garden, however small, into smaller pieces.

If the small garden is entered from the back of the house, it may be feasible to run a row of posts along the back of the house with vines on them, and the space paved between the house wall and the posts. This may provide a pleasant effect even if the space is only six feet wide. You would sit on the paved terrace and look through the vine-covered posts. The effect will be a good bit more spacious than if the posts were not there.

In plain fact you have reduced the size of the garden by giving six feet to pavement and posts, but the eye interprets this as an increase in garden size.

Another way of dividing the garden is by changing the level. Suppose it is flat. A third of the garden may be raised 20 inches higher than the rest, and reached by steps. However simple-minded this may seem, it can be effective.

Just here let me urge the most valuable of hints: before you do any dividing of the garden at all, test it out by temporarily setting up poles or baffles (4-by-8 pieces of plywood) to see if you like the effect.

Another thing: be careful about steps. In the garden they are almost always too narrow. Six feet is about right in a very small garden. The steps should have shallow risers, say four inches. The treads may be quite deep. You are not designing functional ways to get to the attic, after all, but are trying to create an effect of space and serenity.

Sometimes it is a terrible problem what to do with earth excavated to form a lily pool. Often it can be used to make a slight change of grade. Even if it is only a foot, a flight of three steps up can make it visually important.

Often in cities the garden is the shape of a cat-run, a long, narrow rectangle. If the view to begin with is between a couple of tree trunks or columns or posts with vines, the first impact may be pleasanter than with an unobstructed view.

Beyond that, maybe a third of the way down the garden length, there may easily be another visual partial barrier. You do not, of course, want to cut the garden into tiny sealed-in rooms, but partial barriers that you see through or see around easily may give the illusion of distance or space, just as you find inside a house where one room opens into another.

Hedges of low height (two to four feet) sometimes may be right. Again, a hedge of yew or red cedar may reach out into the garden from the side boundary; not running all the way across the garden, but only a few feet. While not really concealing the long boundary of the garden, such right-angle short hedges may do much to obliterate the sense of a constraining and too-narrow rectangle.

Or perhaps the garden is meant to look informal, and yew hedges strike you as all wrong for the effect you want. The principle can still hold of reaching into the garden from its long boundaries, to break up the long view of the boundary fence. Instead of clipped hedges, you could use an unclipped, informal shrub. A good one is the flat-tiered viburnum, such as V. plicatum tomentosum, or one of its garden varieties such as "Maries."

Varieties of American holly (or English or Chinese) make substantial visual accents, and of course may be grown unclipped.

Some gardeners have found, in small, narrow gardens, they like the effect of brilliant colors near at hand. Thus the scarlet zinnias or azaleas or neon-orange daylilies would be planted nearest the house, and softer colors would be set farther off, so that at the extreme far end there would be gray and soft blue and straw yellow.

Until the gardener experiments a bit, he has little idea how a long, narrow plot can be changed simply by dividing the garden into three or four parts by means of partial hedges, by open screens of posts with vines, or large shrubs with openings between them for the eye to see into the distance.

Parade of Homes entry features sunken living area, greenhouse

The Casa Alegre entry in the 1982 Parade of Homes, sponsored by the Midland Homebuilders Association, features a sunken living area, extensive tile in the kitchen and entry way and the added attraction of a greenhouse just off the master bedroom.

Planned August 22-29, the Casa Alegre home will be among 30 entries in the second annual Parade of Homes that will benefit Christmas in April. Tickets will be $2 to tour all 30 homes Tickets will be available at the entrance to the show.

Located at 2106 Wydewood, this entry has three bedrooms, two baths, two covered patios, a double garage and a formal dining area.

Exposed beams highlight the large living area, while a vaulted ceiling graces the dining area. Colors of light tans and greens dominate the 2,000 square foot home. The kitchen will have ash custom-made cabinets and almond-colored appliances.

French doors lead from the master bedroom to the covered patio. A greenhouse is an added delight in the master bath, which also has a marble tub, dual vanities and a walk-in closet.

"Greenhouse," as the builder T.D. Howe has named the house, will be totally landscaped.

Parade chairman is David Hail. Assisting him is Tookie Berry, executive vice president of the Midland Homebuilders Association.

The parade will be located in the Wydewood Addition, just off Neely Street, west of Midland Drive.

HINTS FROM HELOISE

Remember night thoughts

DEAR FRIENDS:

Know when I do my best thinking? In the middle of the night! Know what I mean? You lie there awake, and think of something brilliant, or something that needs to be done the next day...

What do you do? Worry about it and worry that the next morning you'll have forgotten?

What I do is take off a ring, or take a magazine, or book from the bedside table and throw it near the bed or against the door.

In the morning, I see the item out of place, and it jogs my memory... I then remember what I was thinking about.

Sometimes, I roll over to the nightstand, and as best I can, I jot down (or, I should say scribble) what I am thinking about. Then, the next morning, I can usually figure out what I meant.

I think this is much better than lying awake, trying not to forget it. It really has helped me a lot. Give it a try! — Heloise

TASTIER HAMBURGERS

Dear Heloise: Season hamburger meat before forming it into patties for the freezer.

See how much better your hamburgers taste after cooking. — Mrs. Irving Wooters, Sr.

BUTTON SAVER

Dear Heloise: Before wearing a new garment, touch the center of each button with transparent fingernail polish.

This will seal the threads and the buttons will stay on longer. — Nurse

WHITER LINGERIE

Dear Heloise: How do you keep nylon tricot lingerie from turning a tattle-tale gray? I've tried bleach and various detergents, but they never stay white. Any answers? — Marie Carroll

First of all, to remove the existing "tattle-tale gray," buy a package of nylon brightener or a package of color remover in your supermarket or variety store.

Follow directions on the package explicitly and remember this is for white things only!

Once you have the garment white again, never, never, wash it with any colored item. Nylon picks up other colors faster than you can say "scat," therefore it takes on a gray look. It's a good idea to let garments soak for 30 minutes or so in the suds, to thoroughly loosen body oils, then continue with the wash as usual. Nylon lingerie can be kept white, but care in laundering is essential. — Heloise

NEEDLE THREADING

Dear Heloise: If you have difficulty threading your sewing machine needle because of poor eyesight, place a piece of white cloth or paper under or just behind the pressure foot.

Raise the needle as high as possible, lower the foot and it will be umpteen times easier to thread the needle. — Mrs. Lee Hoffman

EGGS STAY PUT

Dear Heloise: When making deviled eggs, cut a small slice off the bottom of the white part of each half before filling.

The eggs will then lie on the plate without rolling over. — Jean Houston

PENCIL POINTER

Dear Heloise: To keep a pencil from rolling off a table, put a rubber band below the eraser.

This may help someone who may not be able to easily bend over to pick up the pencil, should it fall to the floor. — Dorothy Wilson

Don't keep a good hint to yourself. Let Heloise use it in her column. Write Heloise, P.O. Box 32000, San Antonio, TX 78216. She'll pick out the best and yours may be one of them. But, much as she'd like to, she just can't answer individual letters.

OHIO CHILI

Our latest recipe for a spicy-hot version.

2 pounds ground beef

1 tablespoon cocoa
1 tablespoon Worcestershire sauce
4 tablespoons chili powder
¼ teaspoon cayenne pepper

Is another Great Depression coming?

By IRWIN ROSS
(Special from Reader's Digest)

With the country caught in the grip of a severe recession, fear is again abroad in the land. Alarmed citizens wonder whether we will once again be plunged into a depression.

Anxiety is understandable. In May, unemployment reached 9.5 percent — the highest since World War II — and the country's gross national product (GNP) was falling at an annual rate of 4.2 percent. Major industries have been in a deep slump for months.

Little wonder that memories of the 1930s have been awakened; the Great Depression was truly a frightening time. Many are asking, will history repeat itself?

HOWEVER LONG THE PRESENT recession may last, we are not likely this year or indeed in the foreseeable future to experience the awful trauma of a depression. Economists across the political spectrum agree on that.

Says Murray Weidenbaum, chairman of President Reagan's Council of Economic Advisers: "I don't see any probable set of circumstances in which a depression could occur."

Nobel laureate James Tobin, a Yale economics professor, states flatly: "I don't think the country would stand for it. Something would be done politically to keep the situation from getting out of hand."

Fears that the present recession may deepen into a depression are understandable if not persuasive. What has provoked widespread anxiety today is not simply the harshness of the recession — second only to that of 1974-75 in severity during the last 35 years, with unemployment at even higher levels. The new factor has been the persistence of high interest rates for most of the period since early 1980, the direct consequence of the tight-money policy imposed by the Federal Reserve Board in an effort to wind down inflation.

WHILE INFLATION HAS COME DOWN dramatically, the level of interest rates has burdened business with enormously expensive debt. As a result, many companies — Chrysler, International Harvester and Pan Am among them — have been spectacularly in the red.

There may well be some serious corporate bankruptcies as well as bank failures, but there are reasons why the nightmare of the 1930s will not be realized again.

The Federal Reserve Board remains the "lender of last resort." In a crisis, it will act to build up the reserves of the nation's banks, enabling them to extend loans to keep hard-pressed busineses afloat. The Fed has had this function since its creation in 1913, but it did a poor job of it in the early '30s. In modern times, however, the Fed has gotten fast and deft as a financial fire brigade.

A fundamental change since the epidemic of bank failures in the '30s is the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp., which insures deposits up to $100,000 in commercial banks and mutual savings banks, as the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corp. does for savings-and-loan firms.

BY ENSURING THE STABILITY of banks that might otherwise go under, deposit insurance has immeasurably strengthened the whole financial structure.

Since the end of World War II, the economy has also been safeguarded by a number of "automatic stabilizers." One of the most significant is unemployment compensation — tax-free payments for up to 39 weeks. Unemployment pay bolsters sagging purchasing power by billions of dollars, the absence of which would depress business activity even more.

Last spring, the most recent figures indicate, more than four million people were receiving unemployment pay and some 22 million were collecting food stamps, which also helped supermarkets, food wholesalers and farmers.

Farmers receive an enormous prop to their income from the federal program that pays the difference between the market price and a predetermined "target price" for such crops as wheat, corn and cotton. When farm prices decline during a recession, these income supports help stabilize the entire economy.

The progressive income-tax system is another automatic stabilizer. When recession occurs, the fall in employment, hours worked and corporate profits reduces tax payments to the federal treasury, thereby cushioning the effects of the income loss on the public.

WHAT MAKES A DEPRESSION even more unlikely is the country's political will and its economic expertise in preventing such a disaster. By contrast, the Hoover Administration had no practical program of economic recovery.

Last year, the Reagan Administration won passage of the Economic Recovery Tax Act of 1981, which provided for three rounds of income-tax cuts in three successive years. The economic rationale was that reducing taxes would stimulate more work, savings, investment and, thus, growth.

The Administration did not forecast the recession. On the other hand, it had a 10-percent cut in tax rates in place for July 1 to help spur the economy out of the doldrums.

WE SHOULD HARDLY BE complacent. Even a recession with 9.5 percent unemployment takes a dismaying human toll, despite unemployment compensation and other transfer payments. Too many companies and individuals are strung out on credit; there may well be an increasing number of bankruptcies. But it is time to clear the air. Doomsday talk simply is not realistic; we do not have to fear another Great Depression.

DEAR ABBY

Myths about rape get in the way of the facts

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: When I was 15, I was raped by a neighbor. We lived in a nice neighborhood and the man was married and had children. He was respected by everyone who knew him and was even a good friend of my family.

I never told anyone because I felt so guilty and ashamed. Years later that experience still haunted me, so I decided to go to my local rape crisis center for counseling, and it was the best thing I ever did for myself.

I regained my self-respect when I realized that what happened to me wasn't my fault. I am now a volunteer with the rape crisis center, and I hope you will print some facts that helped me recover fully from the experience. There must be thousands of your readers who are still suffering silently because they're ashamed to ask for help.

MYTHS AND FACTS ABOUT RAPE

MYTH: Rape is an impulsive act of sexual gratification.

FACT: Rape is a brutal act of violence and power — not one of passion. Men can control themselves. Sixty percent of all rapists are married and have regular sexual partners. Sixty percent of all rapes are planned in advance and 50 percent of all rapes don't end in orgasm for the man. Rapes are becoming more brutal, with an increasing number of rapists using a foreign object to commit the rape.

MYTH: Rapists attack strangers in dark alleys at night.

FACT: In 59 percent of all rapes, the rapist is known to the victim; he is a friend, acquaintance or relative. Fifty percent of all rapes occur in either the victim's or rapist's home.

MYTH: A woman can't get raped if she doesn't want to.

FACT: A majority of women are not brought up participating in contact sports and are not accustomed to being grabbed or physically attacked. Therefore, they often react with a paralyzing fear, which is a totally understandable response. The victim should not be made to feel ashamed or responsible — it is the rapist's fault.

MYTH: Women ask for rape, provoke and enjoy it.

FACT: Rape is a violent and brutal act. It is preposterous to believe that a woman would ask for or enjoy a violent physical attack and risk VD, pregnancy, injury or even death.

MYTH: Women falsely accuse men of rape.

FACT: FBI statistics show that false accusations for rape are the same as for any other felony — 5 percent. Every victim who decides to prosecute must undergo an extensive medical exam, a thorough interrogation by the police and a difficult court testimony. The chances of conviction are one out of eight.

MYTH: "It can't happen to me."

FACT: As with any act of physical violence, any female can be a victim of rape. It does not happen just to beautiful women. Females aged four months to 96 years have been raped.

MYTH: Rape is a women's problem.

FACT: It is a problem of the whole society when one-half of the population fears the other half. Most men in their lifetime will know a victim because one out of every three females will be raped in her lifetime. It may be his mother, daughter, lover, friend and even grandmother. — RECOVERED VICTIM IN OREGON

DEAR RECOVERED: Thank you for an enlightening addition to this column. Local rape crisis centers provide excellent counseling for all rape victims — including those who were raped years ago and still feel guilty and ashamed. It's never too late to clean out an old wound and let it heal properly.

AT WIT'S END

Silence can be golden

By ERMA BOMBECK

This was supposed to have been the most wonderful period of my life.

My grown kids are struggling for survival.

All the advice I gave them and they ignored is coming back to haunt them.

They are getting an opportunity to experience firsthand that man does not live by allowance alone.

So how come I feel so lousy?

All the time we were growing up, their father and I regaled them with wonderful stories about how broke and deprived we were. We told them how their father scrubbed post office floors at night to buy my engagement ring. We told them how we took eight years to pay off a second-hand shag rug and how we were married for five years before we owned a car. We made them sick they missed the Depression.

Every time they asked for help, we told them we couldn't possibly deny them the poverty they so richly deserved because it builds character. We didn't want them to miss a single day of the struggle in their pursuit of the American dream.

The rhetoric was easy. Sitting by and watching is the hard part. I hate it.

I don't want them to sell velvet pictures from door to door.

I don't want them to buy gasoline $2 at a time.

I don't want them to eat cold tacos from a doggy bag for breakfast.

I don't want them to sell their bicycles and records to pay the rent.

I don't want them to sleep cold and wear old.

I want . . . I want the birth without the pain.

I want the pride without the loneliness.

I want the success without the sacrifice.

I want what I have no right to want.

I want them to begin where we are ending without asking or even knowing the price it took to get there.

Instead, I must sit like a spectator and watch the struggle they so desperately need. For they are finding out things about themselves they have to know to live out the rest of their lives.

It takes every bit of restraint I have to watch, say nothing, and remember . . . someone did it for me.

Houstonian Fitness Center is jogger's heaven

By CAROLYN FITZ-GERALD

George Bush stays there when he is in town. That the Houstonian Hotel and Fitness Center appeal to inveterate jogger George Bush who handles the burdens of the United States vice pesidency when he is not running, tells something about how stressed executives feel about the Houstonian fitness program that supports, changes and sometimes even saves their lives.

Set admist 18 acres of Houston's densely wooded, prime real estate area, the Houstonian complex does not look as if it were launched by a man with one garbage truck.

BUT DEVELOPER TOM FATJO managed to parlay that truck into a world-wide solid waste disposal empire and then use the profits to realize a former football player's dream — a comdominium-hotel-fitness center-luxurious spa-preventive medicine center. If that sounds like a lot, you have only to meet Fatjo to realize that superlatives are a way of life with him. His winning attitude just naturally attracted financiers who caused a ripple effect as they rushed to help make the Houstonian a reality even though many who had not met Fatjo said that he could not even get the land together much less finance the buildings.

FATJO NOT ONLY GOT the land together and built the buildings, he lives in one of the mansions that "couldn't be bought." Furthermore, he ringed the whole complex with a cushioned outdoor track that wanders through those expensive woods, over the streams and right into a gymnasium that holds more equipment than most olympic training centers.

The Fitness Center also houses racquet ball courts, a health food bar, massage rooms, locker rooms, whirlpools, steam baths, saunas, volleyball and basketball courts and a medical center that is dedicated to high-level wellness.

IN ADDITION TO FATJO'S HOME, another old mansion called the Phoenix House stands on the grounds. The Phoenix offers week-long programs designed for women who want to learn a new lifestyle in luxurious surroundings. But if you aren't female, or just don't want to spend the $2,100 per week, the Houstonian offers much the same program for much less.

Additionally, the Houstonian offers a Renewal Weekend for couples which is aimed at fitness, emotional harmony and financial independence. Combined with spiritual advice from well-knownn Christian author Keith Miller, the couples' weekend is designed to teach total fitness which Fatjo says includes mind, body and even your bank balance. "Life is three tiered," says Fatjo, "you must train body, mind and spirit to work together."

THOUGH MY HUSBAND AND I were feeling reasonably together, we decided that a little three-tiered training couldn't hurt. Besides, I had met Fatjo and his wife who are the sort that glow all the time and I wanted to know if some of that was possible even for those who aren't still in their early forties.

I sent in my deposit for the $275 weekend and even signed us up for the exhaustive $500 physicals.

As it turned out, my husband couldn't go and my 20-year-old son got the benefit of getting himself organized for life early and finding out that he was normal/normal on all scales of the physical.

AMAZINGLY ENOUGH when it came time to evaluate the weekend we both gave it a 10 which tells you something about how fast paced and professionally managed the Renewal Weekend was. Few events can appeal to a 30 year age span.

My son learned how to organize financial and career goals to earn pesonal freedom. I learned how to cut down on stress and make myself a goal list without worrying that I was too late in doing so.

EACH OF THE TWO MORNINGS we awoke to an invitation for a two-mile walk, selection of rhythm exercises and Nautilus machines in the morning and swimming or volleyball in the afternoon interspersed with a nutritious lunch and lecture by nutritionist Nancy Fong who pointed out things like "Cokes have nine teaspoons of sugar" and "get rid of King Vitamin cereal and eat Special K."

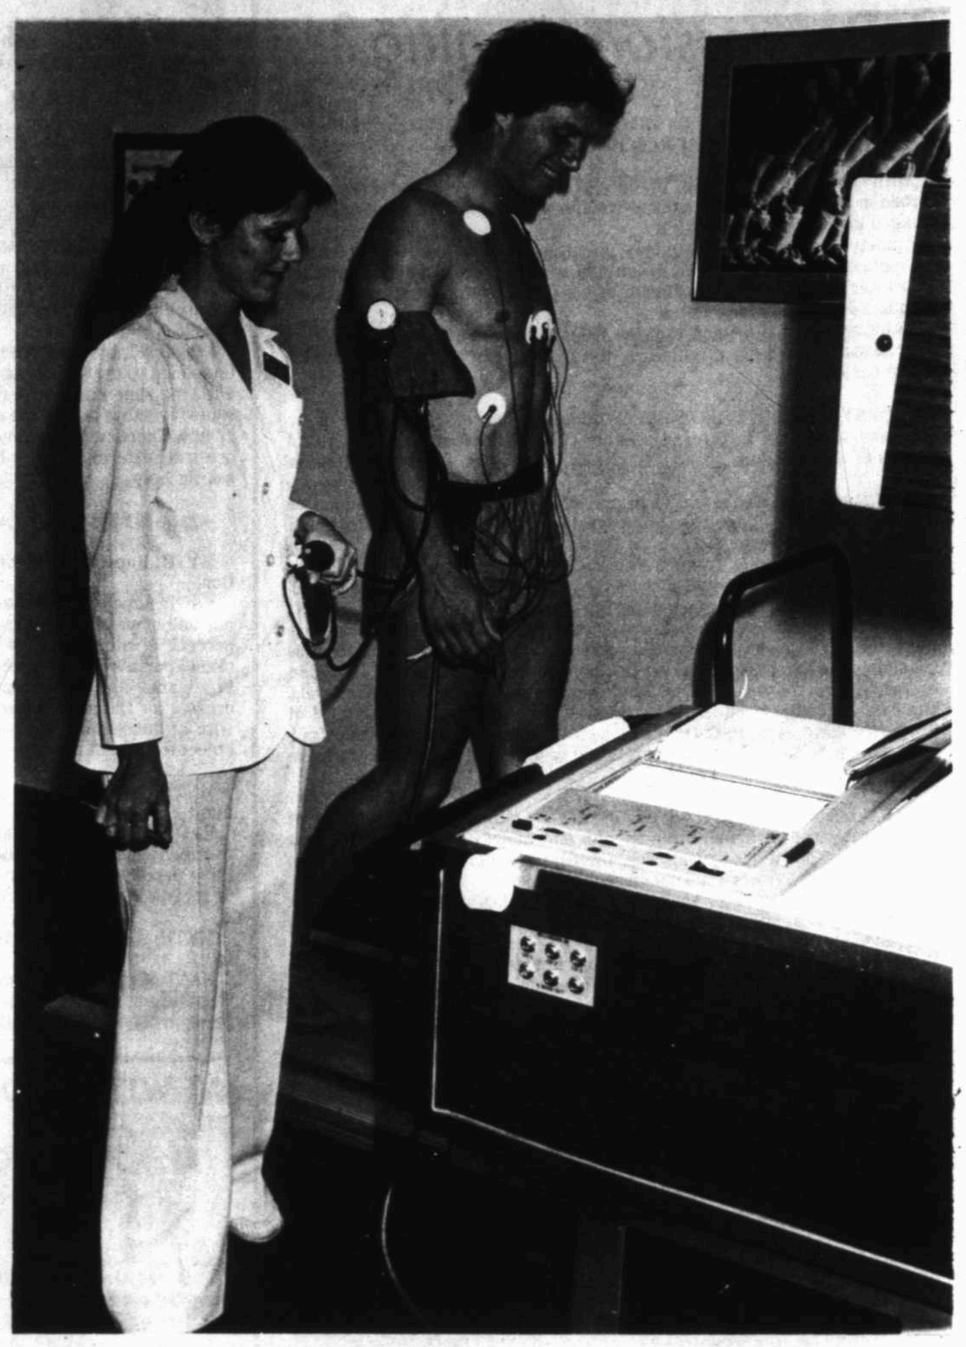

Though it sounds as if there wasn't time, we also attended classes in meditation and learned how to avoid internalizing anger without lashing out at others. "Eighty percent of all illness is blocked or misdirected energy caused by internal anger," said lecturer John Bradshaw.

WE FILLED OUT STRESS CHARTS that gave 10 points for traffic tickets and 57 points for a divorce. We filled out pie-shaped charts that indicated how much time we spent on the emotional, intellectual, financial and spiritual sides of our lives and the answers were startling. Hawaiian shopping centers also specialize in entertainment

HONOLULU — Delicate flowers and ferns circle ankles, wrists, and lovely dark hair of the young girls who proudly enter center stage.

Strains of a ukulele and the soft brush of bamboo across a drum sends the young dancers into intricate manuevers of twisting hips, swishing grass skirts, shuffling bare feet and graceful hand movements.

They are followed by slim, younger girls in floral print pareus, who wave paper pompons or tap bamboo sticks in rhythm. All are students in a dance school.

At the end of each dance, applause rings from three tiers of shoppers surrounding the paved courtyard of King's Alley, a copy of Victorian gingerbread jumble spiced with waterfalls, flowers, fountains and meandering brick paths. It is across the street from the Hyatt Regency Hotel in the heart of Waikiki.

In a way, it is typical of the delightful shopping areas that have popped up all over the Hawaiian Islands in recent years. They are a blend of Disneyland fantasy, public parks and amateur theater.

To a large degree, shopping centers have replaced parks as a place for a family outing. Shopping seems almost incidental. But don't be misled. The idea sells. Oh, how it sells!

In Hawaii, shopping has been developed into an entertaining art. Pioneer in the field and still immensely popular is the Ala Moana Shopping Center, a complex just across Ala Moana Boulevard from Ala Moana Park and Beach, a lovely arc of sand sheltered by a reef.

When the shopping center was built about 20 years ago, it was the largest in the world. Currently it is undergoing extensive remodeling, but its original fountains, pools of golden-hued Japanese carp and modern sculpture all look as fresh as tomorrow.

An early forerunner of the carefully planned shopping center is the International Market Place on Kalakaua in Waikiki.

It began as a collection of small shops catering to tourists, and has expanded to almost a city block, still filled with small shops catering to tourists.

Giant banyan trees have been allowed to expand, and small tree-house dining rooms have been tucked into their branches. Pools, flowers, vines, waterfalls and native wood carvings add to the topsy-turvy feeling. Informality reigns.

Travel maps owe existence to lost honeymooners

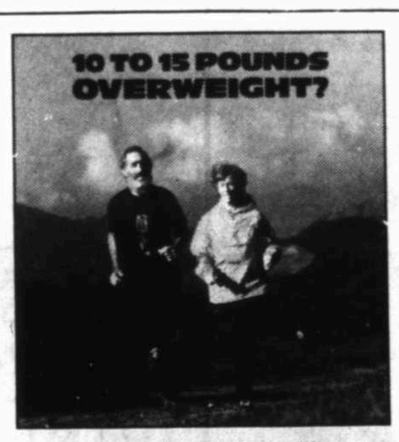

By ROBIN AND PATRICIA HARRIS

CHICAGO — The adventurous newlyweds who lost their way on a hazardous motorcar drive from Chicago to Milwaukee in the spring of 1907 had no idea what their misfortune would mean to future travelers.

The groom happened to be Andrew McNally, son of the co-founder of a busy printing firm named Rand McNally and one of the Windy City's earliest owners of a gasoline-powered auto. There can be no occasion on which a man is more in a hurry to reach his destination than the first day of his honeymoon. Young McNally was understandably furious at being lost.

In the long ago infancy of automobiles, highway signs and maps were not essential; there was hardly any inter-city driving. For shorter trips, people were likely to say "the horse knows where to go."

McNally's first move was to despatch photographers to take snapshots of all intersections and crossroads around Chicago and then to write over the picture just which ones led to which towns. Described as "Photo-Guides," they were immediately successful with the daring new breed of motorists.

Riverboats still travel on the Mississippi River

By WARD SINCLAIR
Los Angeles Times —
Washington Post
News Service

Father of waters, the Indians named it in awe, and so it is, this roistering, scouring, cantankerous, life-giving and life-taking stream called the Mississippi. The Nile and the Amazon are longer and more powerful, yes, but this is the Great River.

Up and down its ganglion tributaries, reaching out like nerve endings, this is the river on which the nation was built and still endures. It begins, technically speaking, at Lake Itasca in upper Minnesota and meanders south toward the Gulf of Mexico, challenged and taunted but never dominated by man.

Meanders is the word. Fly with a crow from the Gulf of Cairo, Ill., where the Mississippi sucks up the Ohio, and you fly a bit over 500 miles. Travel by water and you go about 950 miles, guided by navigation lights and buoys through countless turns and bends where the chocolate river loops back on itself.

THE RIVER LUMBERS DOWN the spine of the North American continent, built from droplets in 41 states from the Rockies to the Adirondacks, and several Canadian provinces, to become the most dominating natural force of the land.

And it is enigmatic, always enigmatic. It flows north and it flows south. Its channel shifts constantly, from east to west and back again, building then tearing out its deltas and islands as it seeks the shortest route to freedom. yet it meanders.

On its way toward the Gulf, carrying food and goods to the world, the Mississippi becomes the amalgam of America. Wars were fought on its banks, great cities grew up along its course, romance and tradition were burnished to idylls by its waters. Its contributing parts excite memory and emotion: Monongahela, Allegheny, Kanawha, Obion, Yahoo, Wolf, Missouri, Kentucky, Illinois, Fox, Green, Miami, Big Sandy, Arkansas. On and on the rivers.

Capt. Clarke Hawley, master of the steamboat Natchez.

WE HAVE EVEN IMBUED the great river with human qualities. Along its waters, there are those who call the Mississippi "her" and "she." Yet the terms used to describe it always connote masculine, macho, male character. Whitman called it the force that concentrated our political union. Twain's love affair with it and his literary inventions turned generations of men to addled romantics. On and on, the great river.

On its way south, draining the heartland, the Mississippi means business. More Interstate Highway than Main Street. Today it carries products to the world, brought down on barges by powerful towboats to be cached in the ocean-going ships that ply as far north as Baton Rouge. The river has spawned great industry and hustle, created ports and opened a path to the granary of the Midwest.

TO KEEP THE TRAFFIC MOVING, protect the rich delta farmlands and keep the cities intact, the federal government's Army Crops of Engineers does constant battle with the river. They try to hold it in its banks, guide its waters, anticipate its vagaries and keep it from running amok. They line imperiled banks with boulders to avert erosion. They hide cement dikes on the river bottom to direct the current. Most of the battle is man versus nature, one on one.

But there is a price for tampering and it is being paid at Angola, La., where the engineers are in hand-to-hand combat with the Mississippi. In the 1800s, man carved a canal and linked the Mississippi with the nearby Atchafalaya. Now the Mississippi has decided it wants to go that way permanently and it threatens to dramatically change course by joining the south-flowing Atchafalaya. Such a change, shortening the Mississippi's path to the Gulf by 170 miles, would devastate Baton Route and New Orleans. They could be left high and dry. It wouldn't do much good either for Morgan City, La., which would become the main end-point on a new father of waters. There's no way Morgan City could fend off that much water.

SO THE ENGINEERS have mounted an emergency, multimillion-dollar effort to keep Ole Miss on course. Academics at Lousiana State University say it is a fight that cannot be won. The engineers refuse to call it a no-win proposition, but the best they can do is cajole the river. "You don't force the Mississippi," says Herbert A. Kassner, a corps official at Vicksburg."You find out what it wants to do and you to try to manage it."

IN ANOTHER TIME, life along the Mississippi was simpler and the river was truly the Main Street of a nation. Before they were cut off by levees and floodwalls, towns and cities faced the river. Today, they turn away. Before the locomotive one traveled and traded by river. That was the time of the steamboat, the chuffing, paddlewheeling, graceful, palatial, ornate workhorse that whistled its way up to every town and plantation landing with its passengers and merchandise. The tales of their occasional races are part of the legend and tradition.

"We're tinsel. This is all tinsel. A floating carnival..."

— Capt. Clarke "Doc" Hawley, master of the Natchez

DOC HAWLEY IS AN improbable man in a lot of ways, but in his heart he cannot believe the tinsel remark. He sees himself as an entertainer of sorts, but he is one of the keepers of the flame of steamboat romance. Mark Twain, should he return, would be happy talking shop with Doc Hawley.

Hawley is only in his mid-forties, but it seems he's been on this river for ages. There are five passenger-carrying paddlewheel steamboats left in the country and Hawley he has been captain of three of them. At 16, he took a summer job playing calliope on the Avalon, the last of the regular excursion steamboats. A week after he turned 21 he had a pilot's license. At 24 he was master of the boat, tramping it up and down the inland rivers.

IN 1975, Hawley's path crossed with another improbable fellow, Wilbur Dow of Lake George, N.Y. Dow was a well-to-do maritime lawyer, ocean-going pilot and entrepreneur who owned the New Orleans Steamboat Co. Dow wanted to build — from scratch — an oldtime sternwheel steamboat and he wanted Hawley to be his captain.

Dow studied antique photographs until he found the boat he liked. Then he called in a third improbability, a crusty steamboat fanatic named Alan Bates. Bates, a Louisville architect, designed Dow's new boat, a gem of a thing which was built for something over $4 million. He called it the Natchez, the ninth in a line of paddlewheelers bearing the legendary name.

Hawley took command of the Natchez in 1976, running the big boat on excursions around the New Orleans harbor and making a mint for Wilbur Dow. But there was always a wild idea in the back of Hawley's mind. He wanted to take the Natchez north, show it off along the river, maybe revive the old tramping tradition. Nobody took him very seriously.

Last year the promoters of the annual race between the Belle of Louisville and the Delta Queen invited the Natchez to compete in their extravaganza at Louisville. Damn, or something like that, Dow said, and he told his captain to take the Natchez north and beat the pants off those boats. It would be 10 days, some 1,240 miles up the Mississippi and Ohio, with excursion stops along the way.

"I thought I heard that Natchez whistle blow ... "

— Song by John Hartford, singer, river pilot

STRAIGHT THROUGH from New Orleans, it was 30 hours to Natchez, a painfully storied town up on a bluff above the east bank of the Mississippi.

Natchez is enamored of its past. Its antebellum homes are open to the public. The Natchez Democrat, the local daily, has a steamboat silhouette on its masthead. When Hollywood wants to film its Old South epics, it goes to Natchez.

As in olden days, Capt. Hawley ordered his pilot to whistle for the landing at Natchez. When steamboats stopped here regularly, there was a brawling vice district called Natchez-under-the-Hill right near the landing. Proper Natchez was above it all. Now they're trying to make a buck off the reputation. Where trollops used to romp, tourists and drinkers live it up in artsy shops and bars. The mournful blast of the steam whistle echoed off the bluff and heads popped out of the bars to see the spectacle edge to the shore. Mayor Tony Byrne was at the dock, accompanied by a daughter in hoopskirt, to welcome the namesake boat.

FOLKS IN THESE RIVER TOWNS don't take kindly to outside criticism. The talk of the Mississippi Valley still is a book called "Old Glory," written a couple years ago by Jonathan Raban, an Englishman who traveled the entire river in a small boat. Raban seemed not a generous visitor. He found warts and eyesores. He was offended by many of the people he met. He finally flushed them away in a wave of condescension. He's not welcome back most places.

Mayor Byrne took that quite in his stride. "You've got to live in the past to see where you're going," the mayor told a curious visitor. What about the writer's mild cry that he had been ripped off to the tune of some $80 to stay overnight in Byrne's 1832 guest house? The mayor chuckled. "He was wrong by 20 cents," he said.

"I have known pilots to whom the river, year in and year out, seemed more than a wife, home or child ... "

— Charles E. Russell, "A-Raftin' on the Mississippi"

IT IS A FACT that there's nobody here or anyplace else today quite like the steamboat pilot. Mark Twain was, of course, a pilot and his Capt. Horace Bixby in "Life on the Mississippi" serves as the archetypal pilot for most readers: knowledgeable, worldly, mysterious, tough.

There's only a few of these steamboat pilots around anymore and their specialty fits in the rare-job category. They have to know how to handle the big boats, they have to know by heart every light, every navigation signal, every inch, bend and quirk of the rivers they travel. Their common ground is that they're all obsessed with love for the rivers.

Capt. Hawley, a pilot himself, got a rare bunch together for his sentimental journey up the river. He had Capt. Roddy Hammett, who dropped out of college when the lure of the water overtook him. He had Capt. Joseph Van Gale, a stoic fellow who piloted towboats between New Orleans and Louisville for 30 years. He had Capt. Lexie Palmore, a regular pilot on the Delta Queen and one of the few women ever licensed. And there was Capt. C.W. Stoll, a retired oil executive from Louisville who probably knows as much about steamboat history as anyone alive.

EVERYONE IS CALLED CAPTAIN, as in Capt. Joe, Capt. Lexie and so on. Theirs is a lonely job, often solo up there in the pilothouse, with only the river and the radios from passing tows to talk to. So they're usually glad to have visitors in their conning tower and when they do, the yarns flow.

But much of the talk is about the changes in the river, where the channel is shifting, where the obstructions are hidden, where the current has become treacherous overnight. River depths, always rising or falling, must be known for clearing bridges and sandbars. The monster has to be watched and studied constantly.

The bends, the lights and the islands all have names. Most of them conjure the mystery of the river: Morganza Bend light, Fancy Point, Longwood Plantation, Bayou Sara Bend, Ben Hur light, Cerro Gordo, Destruction, Joe Pierce.

"On the Mississippi and Ohio between New Orleans, Minneapolis and Pittsburgh, there's about 3,500 navigation lights," Gale said. "You have to name every one of them on your pilot's examination. Plus you've got about 150 other questions you have to answer. The Coast Guard makes it tougher all the time. Even boys with a college education have trouble."

"That's steamboatin' ... "

— Eddie Bayard, riverboat musician

NEW ORLEANS JAZZ went north by river, mostly on steamboats operated by the Streckfus family. In the early part of this century, such figures as Louis Armstrong, Kid Ory, Fate Marable and Baby Dodds were playing regularly on the tramping Streckfus boats. They were black and in that era of segregated entertainment, their life on the boats never was easy. Dodds once wrote that one of his great musical joys was performing for an occasional black excursion.

Per force, an excursion boat has to have a band. Hawley asked Eddie Bayard, a cornet player who had spent a lot of time on the boats, to put together a band. He called it Eddie Bayard and His Bourbon Street Five.

The Bourbon Street Five didn't know what it was in for. The Natchez wasn't built for overnight passengers, so Bayard's group took up residence around the bandstand, where they slept in sleeping bags. They had to wait in line to take showers and get their food. One of the musicians complained to Bayard about the accommodations. All he said was, "That's steamboatin'."

BUT THE BAND PLAYED hot and hard and between towns, Bayard would call his people together for practice. John Hartford would unsheath his famous fiddle and sit in with the band from time to time. They produced sensational music and the crowds loved it.

That atmosphere also produced a catchy new song. Jim Duggan, a trombonist who spent years with Pete Fountain, got an inspiration. He called it "Chuffin' on the Natchez" and it was very much riverboat Dixie. A couple of days after he wrote it, Duggan's melody was being played regularly for dancers. Duggan was a little abashed by his success. "That's what boredom will do for you," he shrugged.

The Natchez, one of a handful of steamboats that still ply the Mississippi River. It is the ninth in a line of paddlewheelers bearing the name.

Panhandle of Florida is land of many contrasts

By MICHAEL CARLTON
Los Angeles Times —

PENSACOLA, Fla. — The sky here is constantly filled with objects: fighter planes, bombers, helicopters, commercial jets, light planes, seagulls, ducks, pelicans, mosquitoes. And, nearly every Sunday, the Navy's precision flying team, the Blue Angels, arrives back home, saluting Pensacola with a low-altitude dash along the beach.

This, all this Florida Panhandle, is a military reserve. The muffled roar of jet engines thunders in the distance as the jet jockeys boom their way into the wild blue yonder.

Fort Eglin, an Air Force base near Fort Walton Beach, is nearly as large as the state of Rhode Island. Add the huge holdings of its sister bases — Tyndall Air Force Base and the Pensacola Naval Air Station — and it appears that most, if not all, of the Panhandle is military-owned, or at least military-dominated.

Along with this military presence comes the usual accouterments of military towns — the X-rated bookstores and the strip joints, the honky-tonk bars and the indelicate ladies, the ticky-tacky housing and cinemas that play movies with titles like "Captain Lust."

This image of the Panhandle has existed ever since the Navy opened its Naval Air Station in Pensacola in 1913 with nine pilots and 13 mechanics. (Now nearly 24,000 people work at the base.) With the opening of Eglin Air Force Base during World War II, sleepy Fort Walton Beach grew from a town of 90 residents to one of nearly 30,000. When the military demands, the Panhandle salutes.

Yet here, too, is great beauty, and a great calmness. Here are some of the finest beaches in the world, great sweeping strands (one beach is 52 miles long) with sand as soft and white as the veil of a virgin bride. The beaches are backed by great sand dunes and washed by the light-blue waters of the Gulf of Mexico. And, they are mostly unused. Even on the busiest day of summer in the Panhandle, when the crowds from Birmingham and Atlanta and Nashville and New Orleans play here, you can find privacy.

There are so many miles of beaches that anyone with a desire to be alone can find his solitude. Once you get away from the built-up sections along the barrier island called Santa Rosa, you are traveling an area that has changed little over the centuries. Part of the Gulf Islands National Seashore, which runs from Mississippi to the Panhandle, Santa Rosa is mostly undeveloped, with only 16 of its 52 miles touched by high-rises, pizza parlors, hotels and 7-Elevens. The rest is invitingly beautiful and open (except for a portion owned by the military) to public use.

Weathered, wedge-shaped picnic shelters and walkways dot the dunes, and parking areas are provided for those who want to walk the short distance (at its widest Santa Rosa is 400 yards; at its narrowest, 100) to the beach. Dolphins frolic here less than 20 yards from the shore, pelicans fly just over the top of the gentle Gulf swells, and sandpipers on little matchstick legs dash into the surf for dinner.

Activities can sport eye injury

NEW YORK (AP) — Sports and recreational activities cause more than 35,000 eye injuries each year, according to the National Society for the Prevention of Blindness.

"While the most common cause of sports-related eye injury is direct contact with a ball, injury can also occur through contact with a racquet, other players, or contact with a court," says Dr. Daniel M. Eichenbaum of New York.

Eichenbaum says that 90 percent of the time, common sense, good playing practices and appropriate eye protection can prevent injuries.

"Safety eyewear can absorb the impact of a ball or racquet and spare the eye. The added protection can also help players overcome the subsconscious fear of being hit in the eye, leading to more competent play," says Eichenbaum.

Build a wardrobe to wear to work

By BETTY W. KINSER
Copley News Service

If you work in a building in which the temperature seems to fluctuate minute by minute, planning your wardrobe can be a real problem. You can be too warm one minute and freezing to death the next.

Think jacket. Coordinating cover-ups can be worn or taken off, depending on the thermostat. So much more attractive than keeping an "old sweater" in the desk drawer to be whipped out when needed.

Temperature aside, planning a career wardrobe can still have its problems. You can't just buy haphazardly and hope something will go with something else. Begin with a basic suit or two and build from there.

Add blouses, scarfs, belts and accessories to change the look. Then add two or three separate skirts to go with the blouses. Then a dress or two to be worn alone or with the jackets...then slacks...and so on. A properly built wardrobe will give you something to go with something every day of the week.

Shoes and bags should be quality and basic in color. A good leather handbag in a neutral tone will last forever.

How you dress says a lot about where you're going.

If you are beginning a new wardrobe, for whatever reason, start right. Attend a color analysis course to learn the best colors for you. I attended a "Color Me Beautiful" course and it has paid for itself a thousand times over.

When choosing your color course, be sure the instructor is qualified. Just reading a book and cutting up swatches does not make one an analyst. Also, be prepared to eliminate a lot of things from your closet. It becomes very difficult to wear anything that isn't your color.

Questions may be addressed to Mrs. Betty Kinser, Ragtime Sewing Shoppe, 1305 W. 40 Highway, Blue Springs, MO 64105.

David Wells and one of his creations, a "gleaner".

'Gleaners' are bustin' out all over

By JAN JENNINGS
Copley News Service

People do a double take when first glimpsing the plywood peasant "cutouts" of New York artist David N. Wells.

In sizes varying from two inches to seven feet, these "gleaners" have popped up on Battery Park Beach in Manhattan, in a subway train headed for the Bronx, on a vibrating coffee table, in the college green at a Midwestern college and at a Frank Lloyd Wright home in Arizona.

Wells' gleaners are cutouts of bent-back figures constructed in plywood, timber and hardware and painted. All of the work, from original conception through construction and installation, is done by the artist.

INSPITATION FOR the figures, according to Wells, came partly from Millet's 1857 painting of French field women gleaning wheat, but more personally from his own experience and views on life.

Wells says he is not an artist bent on putting on the viewer with these cutouts popping up in ridiculous, even absurd surroundings. Rather, he hopes to turn on the creative juices of the viewer in an awareness of the environment and man's place in it, both past and present.

"People really do a double take when they look at the figures," said Wells in an interview. "Then they appear a little confused, then amused, sometimes bewildered. But they do pay attention. Maybe they even look more closely at their own surroundings."

MUCH OF THE MATERIAL Wells uses is, in fact, personally gleaned from his surroundings in New York City. He calls them "gathered materials."

"I identify with the plight of the gleaners in how I was living and working in New York," said Wells. "There is an adventure in finding things."

With the gleaners in "Mobile Woods," however, Wells' statement is more serious, at the same time bemusing.

"Mobile Woods" consists of 12 units on wheels — wood cutouts of trees and shrubs, and 12 gleaners — close to life-size plywood peasants bending to the earth. The gleaners clutch wheat in their hands, and Wells has also indicated wheat in their mouths, playing upon the hand-to-mouth existence of laborers.

PARADOXICALLY, the gleaners are literally tied down to stakes in the earth, while the trees and shrubs may be moved around them.

"Millet's painting romanticized the role of the hard-working peasant as noble," said Wells. "In reality, they were trapped in their situation, just as my gleaners. Perhaps they were noble to look at from afar, but the eye of the beholder is far different than the laboring participant."

WELLS SAID HE FEELS each of us has a measure of this plodding in our experiences, and that it is "important to get beyond plodders."

"Sometimes utilizing the ridiculous jars us to seek new levels."

Wells said that because of the temporary nature of the materials he uses and the portability, his statement in art today is meant to circulate and to glean as much response as possible in as many surroundings as possible.

"They may not be permanent 'works of art,' but they are what I want to do today in my art." (And at 27, Wells has time to amuse and experiment.)

Wells received his bachelor's degree in art from the State University of New York at Potsdam in 1978. Since then, he has been working and gleaning in New York City.

Homes are still good investments

By JAMES M. WOODARD
Copley News Service

Is it safe to invest in home mortgages in today's market? That's an increasingly frequent question, as mortgage delinquencies and foreclosures rise.

Current trends are a serious concern to many individuals who have found investments in second trust deeds and mortgages to be a lucrative form of investment for many years.

During the first quarter of this year, over 5.3 percent of mortgage loans on homes — involving more than one of every 20 home loans — were delinquent in monthly payments. Delinquent loans are those 30 days or more past due.

Mortgage loans in some stage of foreclosure climbed to 53 percent of all mortgages. That involves about 140,000 U.S. homes and is the largest foreclosure rate ever recorded.

Current indications point to an even worse picture of delinquencies and foreclosures during the second quarter, according to the Mortgage Bankers Association. (MBA).

"This is devastating news for both the individual home owner and the lender, as losses further jeopardize lenders' ability to continue to do business in today's recession," said Dr. Mark Riedy, MBA executive vice president.

Dr. Thomas Harter, MBA chief economist, added this perspective:

"Historically, the last payment that financially-strained home owners will miss is their mortgage payment. But the continuing recession and growing unemployment are showing their effects on mortgage delinquency and foreclosure rates."

Another major cause of the problem, says many industry leaders, is the sharp upturn in "creative financing" techniques. Most of these financing concepts involve loans with large "balloon payments" due a few years after the home is purchased.

This is a particularly serious problem in California, where creative financing of homes was born and is used most frequently. Here, the foreclosure rate is now nearly three times the rate of just a year ago.

All these ominous factors, however, do not mean investments in home mortgage loans have become a high risk or sour business venture. It does mean that the market is changing, and the investor must shift his strategy accordingly.

A more conservative approach to evaluating the merits of an investment opportunity must now be taken. A borrower's qualifications must be more carefully scrutinized.

The loan-to-value ratio — the proportion of total loans to the property's current market value — is now a particularly important element. In most cases, the combined amount of all mortgage loans should not be more than 70 or 75 percent of the property's value.

"Short-term investments in real estate mortgages and trust deeds are still a top form of investment for persons with $10,000 to $100,000 to invest," said Richard Thielscher, a principal in the mortgage and investment firm of Home Equity Loan Corp. in California.

"If proper care is exercised, this can still be one of the most sound and rewarding investment forms available today."

Q. What's being done to help elderly people acquire needed housing in today's inflationary economy?

A. Local and regional groups are organizing assistance programs to help these folks. In my home base of Santa Barbara, Calif., the local YMCA recently organized a Housing and Retirement Fund with the specific goal of helpling elderly people with special housing and financial needs.

Q. Is it true that half the residential property sales in California are now condominiums?

A. No. Condos account for about 20 percent of residential sales in California. But that proportion is growing.

Inquiries are invited and may be answered in this column. Write: James M. Woodard, 825 N. San Marcos Road, Santa Barbara, CA 93111.

Parents may feel guilty

Single mothers especially may not be able to afford day care for young children.

KAY IS A single mother in Midland with two jobs and four children, ages 13 to 20. During the school year her 13- and 16-year-old daughters come home to an empty house.

"I don't see any advantages to it," she said. "It's just something you've got to do if you're single."

"My kids have always been responsible," she said, but that doesn't stop her from worrying.

"When I call and no one answers the phone I dont know whether they didn't catch the schoolbus or they got locked out or whether they're sitting on the porch listening to the phone ring."

She tells of a time when she came home from work and found her youngest daughter standing in the yard clutching a BB gun.

"The washing machine got out of balance and made a noise like someone was in the house," Kay relates. "She was standing outside with her BB gun to protect herself."

Besides worrying, Kay feels she is missing a part of her children's lives.

"I think it's a shame that so may mothers are forced into the situation. You miss so much when you can't be there at the end of the day when they get home from school.

"Before, that was our biggest time of the day. Now when I get home they're glued in front of the TV and I'm running around trying to fix supper."

Children may feel scared and the radio going, and I'd think 'Oh my god, the electricity bill!'" Christine said. "But then I'd think, 'If that's what it takes to make them feel safe, that's okay.'"

"When she works nights it's scary sometimes," Sean admitted. "Especially when there's a movie. One night I watched 'This House Possessed,' and that was really scary. I was alone and I started hearing all these noises, so I turned up the TV a little bit and then watched the news to take my mind off it.

"When my mom's here I know she's in the next room, but when she has to work nights it's real weird 'cause we hear noises that we don't usually hear. We leave the bathrooom light on 'cause that shines in our room."

Christine lives with other kinds of fear.

"The most frightening thing that can happen is for your kid to lose the key," she said.

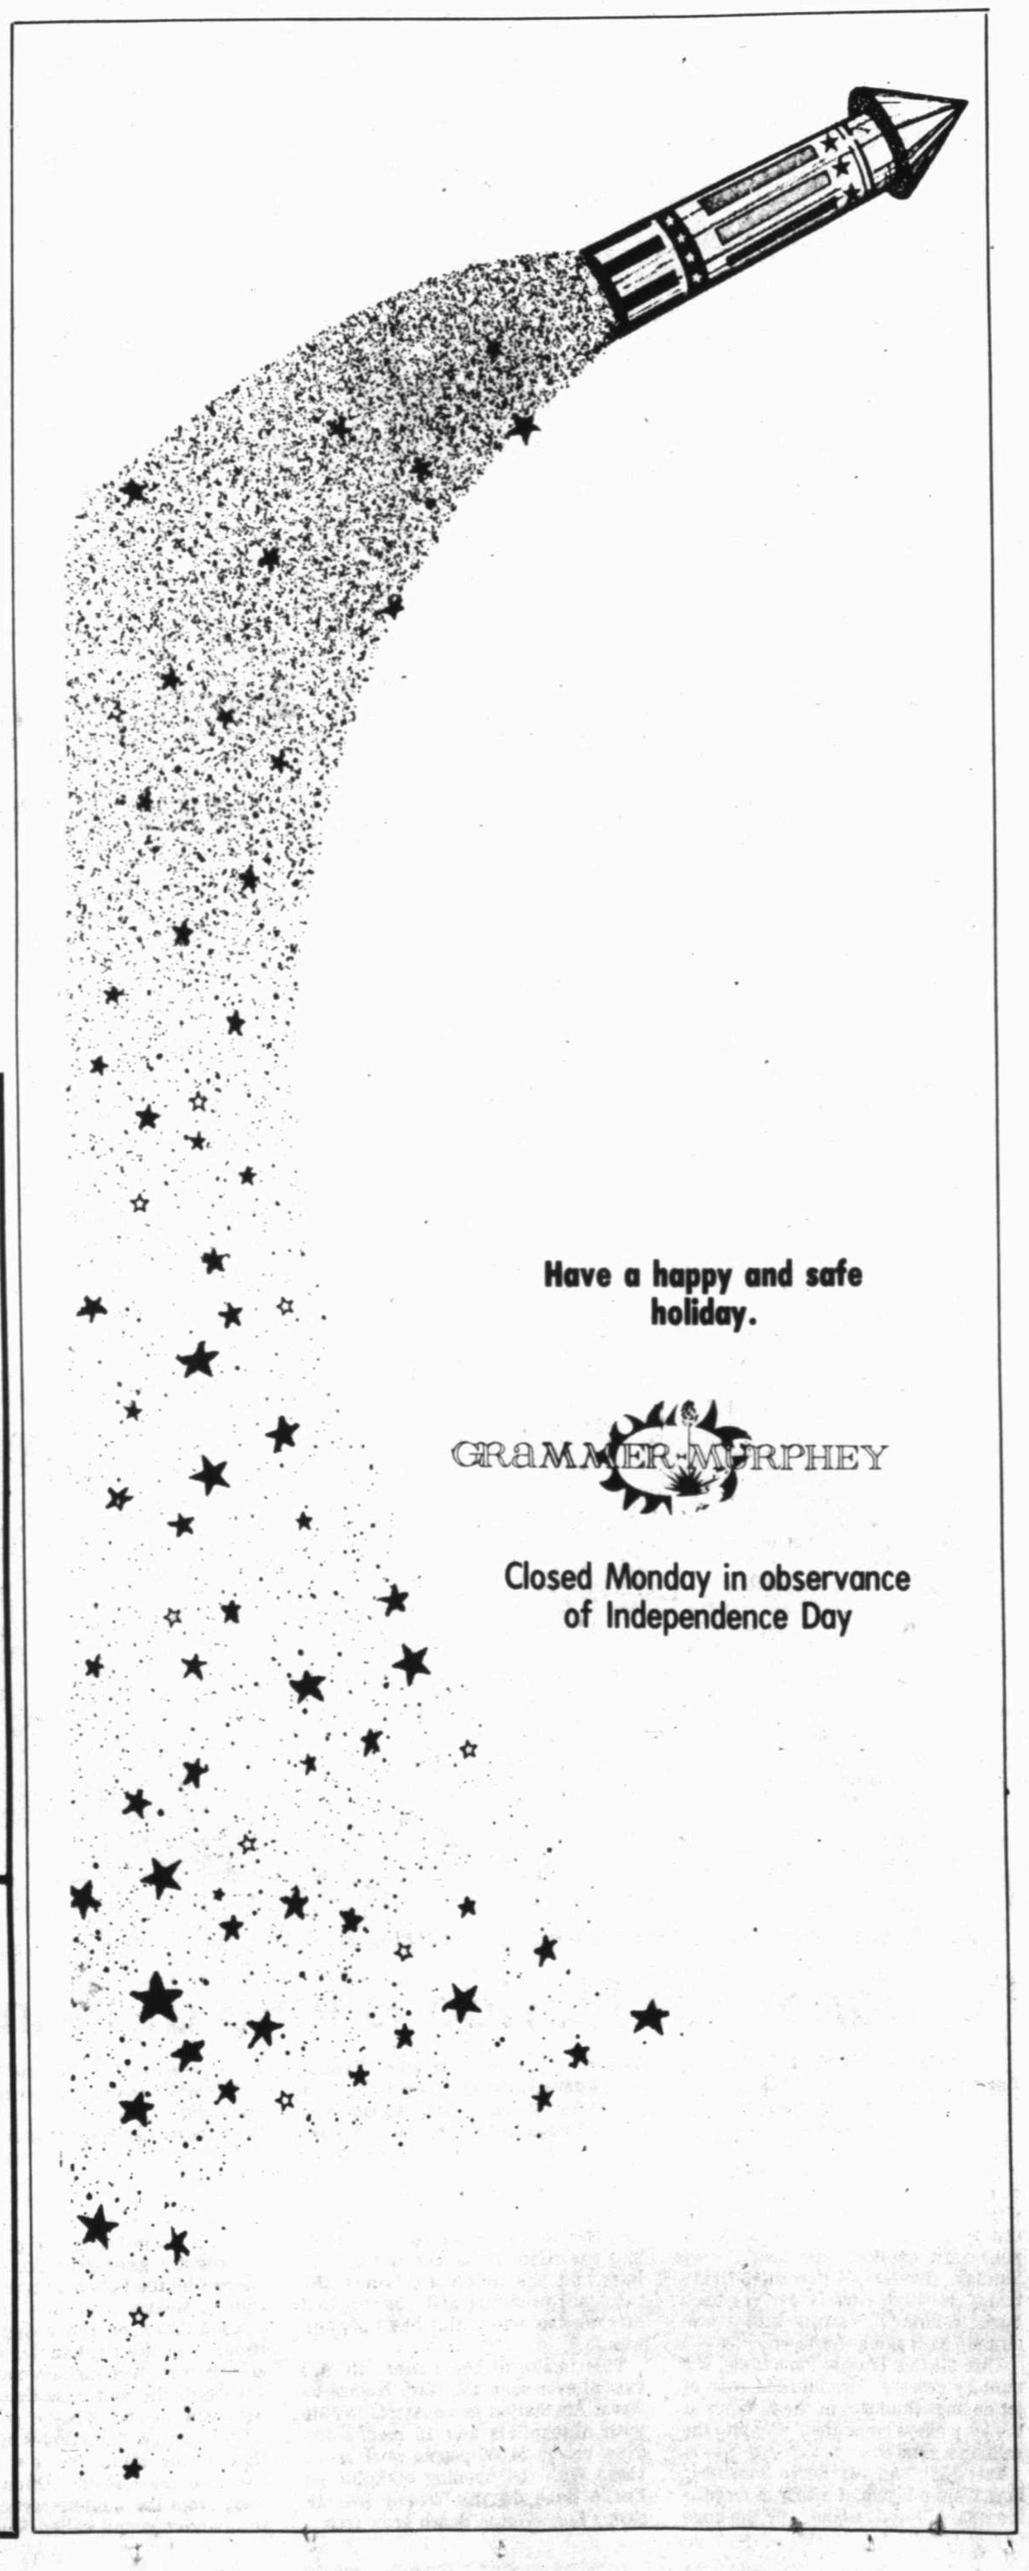

"They've never had anything happen to them that couldn't be handled. We've never had any problems. Sometimes they'll come home and forget to call. If I don't here from them within a half hour I panic. But it's an inner panic. I'm afraid to reach out to anybody at work. My heart pounds fast and I'm thinking the worst and I have to come to grips with myself.

"You worry, but you don't let it overwhelm you. You just thank God that you didn't get a phone call that night and go till the next night.

"You just have to tell yourself that next year might be a little bit better. That's all you can do."

Breaking cigarette habit not easy

Help often needed in order to quit smoking

By PATRICIA DIBSIE
Copley News Service

Health officials are hoping the United States eventually will become a nation of non-smokers, but they're not fooling themselves into thinking that lofty goal will be reached as a result of smokers wising up to the life-and-death realities of tars and nicotine.

The simple truth is, it's becoming socially unacceptable to smoke.

"More and more people are coming to us for help in kicking their cigarette habits because they say they're tired of feeling like social outcasts," said John Frederitz, a former smoker and an educator who has directed substance-abuse programs for the past 20 years.

FREDERITZ COORDINATES the successful "Smoke No More" program, designed by the Preventive Medicine Center of Scripps Clinic and Research Foundation in La Jolla, Calif. The group's objective is to change permanently the smoking behavior of hard-core smokers.

"Smokers are in the minority, and non-smokers are becoming assertive in demanding their rights for segregated non-smoking areas in public places," he said.

THE PUBLIC'S ATTITUDE about smoking is changing. Even a majority of smokers support cigarette bans in restaurants, theaters and public meeting halls, as well as in airplanes.

Most smokers fail several times before managing to break the habit. Statistics show that 95 percent of those who finally do quit do it on their own without help from any program. But there are those smokers who are convinced that they can't manage it by themselves.

"And that's what we're here for — we want those who consider it impossible to quit on their own," said Frederitz. "We want the hard-core smokers who have made the decision to try quitting one more time."

THAT'S WHEN SMOKERS meet up with the likes of Dr. Alan H. Roberts, chief of the clinic's behavioral medicine program, who has a habit of talking doom and gloom to those smokers who are having a "love affair with the cigarette."

Says Roberts: "I talk about reality — nicotine hunger can go on for days, even weeks. It can go away for a few days or weeks and then come back with a vengeance. I emphasize the negative. If people expect the worst, then they can manage it better."

As an ex-smoker, Roberts said he knows the psychological reactions these smokers will face while trying to kick the cigarette habit — "depression, anxiety, cravings, tension, irritability — all these things in one form or another will have to be faced."

ROBERTS SMOKED CIGARETTES for more than 30 years before deciding that although he had tried to quit before, this time was really it.

"I talk to the group at the end of their first week, when they're feeling pretty confident. They think that because they've had several days of success that the worst part is over. It's my job to burst their bubbles."

Although positive thinking has a lot to do with ultimate success, it's the baby steps in between that make the difference, Roberts said. Mostly it all comes down to the individual's plan of attack. "Plan" is the key word.

"Different people need different techniques to achieve success," he said. "It's my job to help each individual find that special way, that special plan of attack which will work for him or her in the end."

HE FITURES THAT THE SMOKERS have to take into account the immense amount of positive psychological conditioning associated with cigarette smoking that they've been feeding their brains over the years.

"Say a person smokes a pack a day and takes 10 puffs from each of the 20 cigarettes. That's 200 daily puffs which offer an instant hit (it takes approximately seven seconds for the nicotine to travel from the lung to the brain) and immediate gratification from the pains of nicotine withdrawal.

"A person doesn't smoke to feel good," he said, "but rather to break even. Tobacco addicts need nicotine to stave off nicotine withdrawal symptoms."

ROBERTS: "It's my job to try to provide smokers in our clinic with a large variety of stress reduction and coping techniques. The primary objective is to learn to recognize how you, as an individual, respond to stress. I notice that I start to clench my fists. Others get headaches, stomachaches, or hyperventilate.

"There's a wide variety of simple reactions to stress. The trick is to know your own initial signs that warn you that something stressful is happening in your life."

Roberts offers some tips to relax: "Try deep breathing and progressive relaxation techniques (concentrate on relaxing one muscle group at a time); also, guided imagery is good — it's like having a movie projector inside your head, and you control the relaxing scenes offered to the mind (ocean scenes seem to be popular). Another good relaxation technique is the Benson Relaxation Meditation — it's TM without spiritual connotations. It was originally designed to help people with high blood pressure."

EXERCISE PLAYS A LARGE ROLE in the Scripps program.

"Statistics show that one-third of the people who attempt to quit smoking will gain weight," said Gary Scherer, an exercise physiologist at the clinic. "But exercise is quite helpful for other than the obvious reason that it helps burn extra calories. It has been proven that aerobic exercise, for instance, accelerates the metabolic disposal of the high level of undesirable hormones generated by stress and-or smoking."

SCHERER EXPLAINS TO THE CLASS the role exercise plays in decreasing the appetite:

"How hungry are you on a hot summer's day? How hungry are you when you have a fever? Whenever the internal (core) temperature of the body goes up, the appetite is suppressed. That's chemistry, not psychology."

Exercising also helps to improve self-esteem, he said. "Exercise lowers the fat content of the body and increases muscle tone; exercising improves posture and gives the individual more energy. Besides, most people have a positive image of athletes and look at themselves more positively when they feel they belong to that group."

BUT MOST IMPORTANTLY, Scherer said, exercise serves as a catalyst to help the individual make other lifestyle changes.

"A person who is successfully involved in an exercise program usually feels more in control of his or her own life and looks for other areas in his or her life to improve," he said. "One positive and successful experience leads to other challenges and they are taken on with the kind of attitude which makes success likely."

Backlash to quitting: A weighty problem

By PATRICIA DIBSIE
Copley News Service

Perhaps the most-frequently invoked alibi for not giving up smoking: "Sure, I could quit, but then I'd pick up 20 or 30 pounds in a hurry — and that would be even worse."

Fact is, many smokers do add some weight when they give up smoking.

"The usual weight gain is five to eight pounds," said Mona Doyle, dietitian for Scripps Clinic's Smoke No More seminars in La Jolla, Calif..

"It may not be so much from changed eating habits as from the fact that nicotine speeds up the metabolism rate. When nicotine is removed from the system, the body will revert to a normal rate.

"If you keep the same eating habits, the person might see a slight weight gain and panic."

The most often-asked questions in Scripps' Smoke No More seminar? Doyle recalls them and provides the answers:

WHAT CAN I EAT a lot of and not gain weight? ("Raw vegetables, popcorn prepared in an air popper and popsicles made from low-calorie drinks.")

WHICH DIET FOODS will help me out? ("It does no good to switch to a low-calorie food substitute and then eat twice as much. The low-calorie margarines are OK, but you can't eat all you want. I recommend eating what satisfies you and eating less.")

WHAT ABOUT alcohol? ("Alcohol affects a person's center of judgment and reason, and therefore it may aid you in rationalizing 'just one cigarette won't hurt.' Too often, cigarettes and alcohol are too deeply ingrained habits to indulge in one without the other. If you want a drink, try scotch instead of the usual vodka, or beer instead of wine — it's too easy to sip the same old drink and light up the usual cigarette. But it would be best to cut alcohol out all together for a while.")

It used to be believed that starting a weight-loss diet and quitting cigarettes at the same time was too great a challenge. Not anymore.

"If a diet is thought of as a lifetime behavior change, then this is the most appropriate time to initiate both changes," Doyle said.

"I'm finding that people know very little about basic nutrition and are eating combinations of the wrong foods — for both weight loss and good nutrition."

Doyle warns her clients: "Think of the supermarket as the Amazon jungle — stay on the perimeter. That's where the foods are fresher and have the least amount of processing."

What do you find when you venture into the center aisles? "That's where they keep the items high in both sugar and fat content, for the most part."

Playing 'make believe' is good for young children

By WILLARD ABRAHAM, Ph.D.
Copley News Service

Q. Can you help me figure out how far to go in explaining to my young children that "make-believe" is just that, that it's not true, never was and never will be? I know that this may sound like I'm a "scrooge" of a parent, but I don't want them growing up believing this is a fairy-tale world. Most of us (outside of institutions!) certainly know that's not true.

Do you have any suggestions that can help me out?

A. I really feel it is too bad to deprive a little child of the period of make-believe that exists for such a short while.

"The stork" and "the tooth fairy," as well as "the Easter bunny" and the spoken bedtime hope that a child will have "sweet dreams" are obviously imaginary and unreal for adults, but very real, pleasant — and temporary for most children.

Such thoughts are part of the make-believe life of young children who pretend they are cars, planes or animal. These thoughts are related to the playmates that don't even exist except in their active, fun-loving, play-acting minds. To play house, to pretend to be a spaceman (or spacewoman), or to become a fireman or cowboy for a short, happy time are all involved in growing up. It seems wrong, maybe even cruel, to take that away too fast.

A key part of that maturing process are the made-up people and animals related to birth, losing teeth and celebrating Christmas and Easter. Without them much of the glow and glamour of early childhood are missing.

Some parents feel it is necessary to "tell it as it is," with no details omitted. "How are they going to be able to adjust to the pressures of adult life if they don't begin early?" they ask.

Children who are happy and loved will usually adjust easily. They don't need to have every fact provided in full detail ... not so early ... not until they are ready.

There can be dangers, however, if they always pretend to be a baby, enjoy only the companionship of an imaginary friend, or believe in Santa Claus and all the rest longer than you feel it is healthy to retain such beliefs.

No one has to tell the average child after the preschool years that an imaginary playmate doesn't exist, that the spirit of Christmas need not require a "real" Santa Claus or that dreams are sometimes not "sweet." He or she will learn all that in time.

But until then, let's not take away the fun a little child has in a short-term unreal world.

The real one comes along all too soon.

Q. When I was young, it was so common to run all the kids into the doctor and have their tonsils yanked, whether they needed the operation or not.

My wife is of the old school and feels that's the way to go. I don't agree, assuming that they get cut out only if necessary.

What do you think?

A. I'm not a medical doctor, so in each case it seems to me that the doctor is the one to help make the decision. (Even with that comment my bias comes out doesn't it?)

In my own family I would agree to surgery only if necessary; even at best, and no matter how minor, it can still be a risky business.

Colds, infections and sore throats are all reasons given for this operation, but it is conducted far less frequently these days than it was when a lot of us were young.

Q. Are we permanently past the time when manners are important? I see the lack of them in children and young people all around me, and that's kind of sad.

Often when I pay for things purchased in stores I say "thank you" to a teen-ager who silently puts the money in the cash register. On city buses I frequently get up and let an older or handicapped person have my seat while I stand above a seated child or adolescent who is daydreaming about who knows what.

These incidents seem to be the pattern of our times. My own children are not being brought up to be that self-centered and thoughtless.

I wish you would share your thoughts on this subject.

A. Times have changed, and we've obviously left far behind the formal teaching of manners based on "How d'you do?" and bowing slightly. Although as adults we are often more relaxed these days, some basic thoughts still apply to us — and to our young children too:

1. People resent those who are rude, inconsiderate or unpleasant.
2. We all want to be liked.
3. We learn from the example of the company we keep. For a young child that "company" is most frequently his or her own family.

Key words and attitudes within the family provide the pattern a youngster will usually follow. Speaking with a full mouth, constantly interrupting without an "excuse me" and yelling or loud television when someone is trying to sleep are all easily copied by a young child but so are the exact opposites.

Good manners usually come almost naturally if a child sees or hears a respected adult practice them. Dad or Mother gives his or her seat on the bus to a person with heavy packages. An older brother or sister waits until everyone is served before eating. No one demands all the conversation; there is sharing.

Although courtesy shown to others can be practiced at home, it's often so easy to be crude, even obnoxious, with those we know best! It may take a little effort for us to quiet down a bit, control the words we use and practice the eating and other habits that we once learned but now sometimes forget. However, a 2-, 3-, 4- or 5-year-old is all eyes and ears — and parents are the major teachers. It's during these early years that the respect for others has to begin.

The original implied question was whether manners are important. It is all tied up with getting along with, understanding, having respect for and liking and being liked by other people. We can be definite about such factors — all of that is very important.

Rape Crisis Center issues new safety tips

"One of the goals of the Midland Rape Crisis Center is to educate the community on rape prevention," said Nan Gordon, director of the Center. "It may not be possible to avoid being assaulted, but there are precautions a person can take to decrease vulnerability to attack. New studies that show how women can improve their chances of escaping rape and injury emphasize the importance of assertiveness."

Ms. Gordon said that the experts advise:

1. To understand and use your body language wisely. Stand and walk tall, and with a brisk, purposeful walk.

2. Make some eye contact with suspicious strangers to let the person know that you see him and are not afraid.

3. Be aware of what is happening around you.

4. Avoid prolonged interaction with strangers.

5. Don't enter an elevartor alone with someone who makes you feel uneasy.

6. Don't be too friendly with anyone you're not familiar with.

7. Plan what you will do if you are attacked.

8. Always keep one hand free.

9. Alternate the routes you take home, know which businesses stay open along the way or where to find telephones.

10. Use your common sense, don't take home someone you've just met.

"Over 50 percent of reported rapes occur in the home, the place in which we tend to let down our guard," Ms. Gordon said. "Keep doors and windows locked. Use a peephole on your door. If someone is at your door, ask for indentification before you open the door. Don't let anyone in to use the telephone. Offer to make the call for them. Keep window shades down and blinds closed at night. Get to know your neighbors and check on each other. When you are out alone at night try to stay on well-lighted streets.

"And what do you do, if despite all precautions you find yourself face to face with an assailant? Assess the situation you are in. You must decide whether to fight back or not. Never appear to be weak or out of control and never give the impression that you're going to be an easy victim," she said.

The Midland Rape Crisis Center has issued the following steps to follow for anyone who becomes a victim of rape:

WHAT TO DO IF YOU ARE RAPED:

1. Don't shower, bathe or clean up in any way. Don't change clothes, urinate, straighten up anything at the scene. It is extremely important that you do not change the condition of your surroundings or your physical state in order to preserve evidence.

2. Report the incident to the police immediately.

3. Get a medical exam at the emergency room immediately.

For more information call the Midland Rape Crisis Center at 682-RAPE.

The Midland Rape Crisis Center exists for victims of sexual assault and their families. The Center, which began operation in October, 1979, has a 24-hour hotline, 682-RAPE, which is manned by trained volunteers who are available to offer personal assistance to the rape victims and their families, and to provide information regarding medical, legal and law enforcement procedures. The Center provides crisis intervention counseling and support as well as referrals to various community agencies. All services are free and confidential.

Red wine has a chilly fate

By DAN BERGER
Copley News Service

White wine outsells red more than three to one in this country, and market analysis indicates that isn't going to change in the foreseeable future.

Yet, Robert Mondavi and others close to the industry predict a supply-demand problem in premium red-wine grapes by 1985 — which is right around the corner in the marketing game. I suspect both analyses are accurate.

Strange as it seems, it is possible for the white-wine boom and the demand for good red wine both to increase at the same time. There are many reasons for this, but first let's look at one reason for the white-wine boom.

An editor of mine with a talented palate said the other day that he suspected white wine was "in" in the United States because of what he perceived to be a peculiar attitude among Americans: the demand for ice-cold drinks.

"Have you noticed," he said, "how we're the only nation that drinks beer ice cold? TV commercials show cans of beer submerged in ice, and glasses sweating from the ice-cold brew. The Germans and English drink their beer at nearly room temperature. And that attitude carries over to other drinks, too. Who in England would dare drink brandy on the rocks?"

A valid point. Most red wine is consumed at cellar temperature. That turns off many newcomers to wine. Also, red wine has more flavor elements than whites, and thus is more challenging — just as most imported beers are more challenging than American beers.

In England, sherry and other higher-alcohol drinks are consumed "neat" — meaning without any mixer, ice cubes or chaser. The very fact that the word "neat" is not commonly used in this country says something about our habits of mixing and-or chilling everything. Yet U.S. TV advertising features sherry on the rocks.

The coming shortage of red-wine grapes will come from three factors, experts feel:

• The demand for white has prompted many grape growers to switch from red varieties to whites.

• All premium red wines except Cabernet Sauvignon are dying on the vine. Sales of Zinfandel have turned "soft" in the last year or two, as consumers turn off high-alcohol wines.

• The wine market is putting to good use some red varieties — by making rose and lighter-styled, chillable reds.

BAKE SALE BROWNIES

Two ¼-pound sticks butter, at room temperature
2 cups granulated sugar
1 cup firmly packed light brown sugar
2-3rds cup dark corn syrup
6 large eggs
6 squares (6 ounces) unsweetened chocolate
2 cups fork-stirred all-purpose flour
2 cups pecan halves or coarsely broken walnuts

Line the bottom and sides of a 15 by 10 by 1-inch jellyroll pan with a sheet of foil.

In a large mixing bowl with a wooden spoon stir together until blended the butter, granulated sugar, brown sugar and syrup. Stir in the eggs, one at a time, until blended.

In a small saucepan over very low heat (or over hot water), melt the chocolate; stir into the sugar mixture until blended. Add the flour and stir until smooth. Add the pecans; stir until evenly distributed. (If you like, you may reserve ½ cup of the pecans and, before baking the batter, top it with them.)

Turn into the prepared pan; with a small metal spatula, spread the batter evenly. Bake in a preheated 350-degree oven until a cake tester inserted in the center comes out clean — 40 minutes. Place on a wire rack to cool. Refrigerate, uncovered, until chilled.

Invert on a large board and remove pan; strip off foil. Turn right side up.

Professor finds married mothers feel more stressed than single mothers

IRVINE, Calif. (AP) — Married mothers feel more stress than their single counterparts, whether or not they have jobs outside the home, says a Canadian study that also said all moms were still stuck with most of the housework.

William Michelson, professor of social ecology at the University of California, Irvine, released the results Thursday of a study of 545 families and their daily schedules.

The study, funded by Canada's Ministry of National Health and Welfare, was conducted in Toronto while Michelson was on the faculty of the University of Toronto. He said it should have wide applicability.

Michelson's preliminary findings focus on the impact of work outside the home on women — both married and single — who have children.

"There is a growing trend for increasing numbers of mothers with young children to have outside employment or to be single, but the community has not yet recognized what adaptations may be needed to make outside employment and single parenthood more viable and less stressful," he said.

He found that married mothers reported greater time pressures and tensions than single mothers, whether they stayed home or worked full time or part time. However, single mothers reported being less happy.

Michelson said several factors could account for the differences in pressures. Single women said they had one fewer person to care for, more help from people outside the home, more sleep, more time for socializing, more time with their families and more dining out.

The sociologist found that non-employed women spent 302 minutes — about five hours — per weekday on housework, women employed part-time spent 251 minutes and fully employed women spent 128 minutes.

Husbands of homemakers spent 43 minutes a day on housework, husbands of women with part-time jobs spent 48 minutes and husbands of women with full-time jobs spent 57 minutes.

Non-employed women spent 134 minutes a day on child care, part-time working women spent 105 minutes and fully employed women spent 64 minutes. Men spent about 22 minutes per day on child care, regardless of whether their wives worked.

Michelson also found that in some cases, wives with full-time jobs actually took on more responsibilities around the home than unemployed housewives, such as house repairs, car maintenance, budgeting and bills.

Women with full-time jobs reported greater pressure and tension than homemakers. They reported several techniques to ease overloading: 94 percent slept less, 55 percent reduced indoor cleaning, 28 percent bought more convenience foods and 20 percent prepared food in advance.

Michelson said that based on the study he would recommend more flexible, part-time jobs for mothers and more day care centers located close to home or at the work site.

Ken South, wearing his artificial arms, scratches his head. Five years ago South had an accident while working as a City Light lineman that resulted in injuries so severe that his arms, shoulders and two-thirds of his collar bones had to be amputated.

Armless man disappointed by his expensive artificial limbs

SEATTLE (AP) — A 15,000-volt, on-the-job accident cost Ken South his arms, shoulders and most of his collarbone. Now a "fantastic" $700,000 computerized replacement set has fallen short of his dreams.

"They're a marvelous piece of equipment, but there's not really enough of me left to make them applicable," a disappointed South said.

IT WAS FIVE YEARS ago that South, 37, was working in an elevated bucket as a Seattle City Light lineman and he touched a power line. His injuries were so severe that doctors had to amputate his arms and shoulder, leaving only about one third of his collarbone.

South adjusted. He was the first double amputee in the state to get a driver's license without the benefit of some special device. He learned to use his feet to drive, to write and to dial a telephone.

An $8 million settlement from the elevated bucket manufacturer left him in good financial shape. But South dreamed of mechanical arms that would allow him to perform simple tasks — like putting on his glasses without poking himself in the face or zipping his pants without using a hook on the wall.

WHAT'S WHEN HE HEARD from another amputee about the wizardry of the University of Utah's Center for Biomedical Design in making artificial limbs. He asked the center for help and it agreed.

Smith estimated he made almost 100 trips to Salt Lake City to participate in the design of the harness-like device. He also paid for its considerable cost.

THE RESULT SEVERAL MONTHS ago was a one-of-a-kind set of state-of-the-art "Ken South Arms." Made of aluminum and plastic, the flesh-colored arms are battery-powered and controlled by tiny computers.

Each arm is controlled by a swiveling lever that touches South's skin on the side of his torso. Muscle movements guide the lever.

For Smith, the arms proved impractical for everyday use.

With their harness, the arms weigh about 15 pounds — "like wearing a bowling ball around your neck all day," he said. The harness covers most of South's torso and are hot to wear. The arm movements are awkward and slow, with an action like puffing on a cigarette taking six or more maneuvers.

"We can't even come close to the natural arm in control and function," conceded Sanford Meek, one of the University of Utah engineers.

But Meek said South's arms are "essentially a first edition. We don't consider it to be finished yet."

IN LATER MODELS, engineers hope to make the arms lighter and to use sophisticated micro-computers to increase their functions.

Mint delightful in home garden

By PATRICK DENTON
Copley News Service

Like many others in North America, our family has moved on the average every four years these past two decades. And for folks who enjoy their gardens, a household move involves much more than the simple transportation of bodies and furniture from one point to another.

There is always the trauma of leaving behind treasured plantings and a landscape that reflects the artistry of its creator just as much as a painting or sculpture.

ODDLY ENOUGH, the item from our former garden that we missed most in our last move was a large mint patch that had been long established on a rocky bank. In selecting a site for mint in our new, rather heavily treed property, we decided again upon a bank, between a rock path and a woodpile, so that it would be contained.

The first year I'm afraid our precious mint was bashed about quite a bit while I was splitting and stacking the winter's supply of firewood but finally this year the patch has caught on and is spreading. I'm tenderly nurturing it, since the family misses mint jelly when we have a lamb dinner. And our steam-blanched garden peas for freezing wouldn't be the same without branches of mint in the water reservoir below the peas.

THERE IS SOMETHING so delightfully fresh and healthy about the fragrance of mint. As Gerard in his 16th century Herbal said, "The savor or smell of mint rejoyceth the heart of man, for which cause they use to strew it in chambers and places of recreation, pleasure and repose, and where feasts and banquets are made."

A modern version of this custom is to scatter dried mint on the carpets just before vacuuming. Not only does the mint scent the house but it continues with subsequent vacuumings until the bag is changed.

THE FACT THAT MINT is so easy to grow, indeed to the point of becoming a weed if allowed to outgrow its boundaries, makes us sometimes neglect it, like an old friend who is always there and so doesn't need any attention.

Still, it's a good idea not to let the mint in your garden make flowers and seed. What you're after is the foliage, so when you notice the mint beginning to set flower buds, take the time to give it a crew cut.

Cut all the plants to within an inch or two of the ground. Scratch around the roots just lightly, pull out any weeds and add a top dressing of finished, sieved compost or topsoil (not manure) and drench the whole thing with a balanced fertilizer solution. This will give you a nice growth of fresh shoots.

THE FOLIAGE that you have cut from the mint patch can be tied with elastics in small bundles and hung upside down in a dry, well-ventilated room out of sunlight. An alternative method is to spread them on drying racks, or papers, turning them once or twice during the drying. They are ready to store when the leaves crackle.

At this point the leaves can be stripped from the stems, crushed and stored in an airtight container in a cool, dim spot. The woody stems can be tied with a decorative, burnable ribbon and placed by the fireplace in anticipation of autumn's first fire.

BEFORE YOU DRY ALL the mint you've cut, you might like to use some for a batch of mint jelly. And for mint sauce concentrate, there's a recipe that has become a tradition in our family.

Dissolve one pound of sugar in one quart of vinegar and boil for 10 minutes. Slowly add washed, finely chopped mint leaves gathered from a large bunch of stalks. Keep adding leaves till the stuff is the consistency of jam, then bottle in sterile jars for winter. To use, put a spoonful of the concentrate in a dish and add hot water.

Fourth of July picnic: Midwest style

By CECILY BROWNSTONE
AP Food Editor

Marilyn Metheny Travis grew up in the Midwest where her family had their particular way of making potato salad. Very special. And always on hand for July Fourth picnics to eat with fried chicken or ham.

When I asked Marilyn for the recipe, she said, "My mother, sister and I are now the ones who make it, and not one of us ever measures. We just know what has to go in and how it should taste."

Be that as it may, Marilyn was good enough to come into my kitchen and make the salad, measuring carefully and taking notes. The Metheny salad is indeed delicious. Different, too, from other potato salad recipes I've passed along to you.

METHENY FAMILY POTATO SALAD

2 pounds new potatoes
5 large eggs
½ cup diced (⅛-inch) celery (2 small ribs)
½ cup diced (⅛-inch) onion (1 medium)
½ cup diced (¼-inch) sweet gherkins
1 cup mayonnaise-type salad dressing
2 tablespoons cider vinegar
1 tablespoon prepared mustard
1 teaspoon salt
½ teaspoon paprika
¼ cup sweet pickle juice

Scrub the potatoes in cold water; boil in their skins until tender — 20 minutes. Peel and dice ½-inch thick. Hard-cook the eggs; shell and dice ¼-inch thick.

In a large bowl stir together the celery, onion, gherkins, salad dressing, vinegar, mustard, salt, paprika and pickle juice. Fold in the potatoes and eggs. Refrigerate overnight to allow flavors to blend.

Makes about 1½ quarts.

Mule, horse trader enjoys his work

By STRAT DOUTHAT
Associated Press Writer

BUCKHANNON, W.Va. (AP) — There's no sound sweeter to Wendell Tenney's ears than the hee-haw of a mule or a horse's whinny.

"I've always loved mules and horses," the white-haired Tenney says at his farm outside Buckhannon. "I've traded hundreds of them over the years."

Tenney well recalls his first deal, a half-century ago.

"I got skinned," he said, chuckling. "It was 1932 and they took me down the river; they sold me some old horses that they said was young."

Back then, Tenney was still a tender teen-ager. During the ensuing years, however, he has become a highly successful horse and mule trader who at the moment has a matched team of giant Belgian horses.

"I traded for them sight unseen after this man and his wife came by and told me about them," he said. "They was lookin' for a pair of fancy show mules that I had."

Tenney started working horses and mules when he was 7 years old.

"My dad was a farmer and he done all of his work with horses. Well, I was just 7 when he let me harrow a field of buckwheat," he said, squinting as he looked back across the years.

Tenney smiled as he recalled the small boy guiding the big team of horses through that long-ago field.

"It was a 6-acre field and I was just wore out when I finally finished it," he said. "I still remember my dad telling me I'd have to 'spunk up' before we got home or he'd be in big trouble with my mother for working me so hard."

Tenney grew serious for a moment.

"I was tired but I loved it," he said. "And after that I started plowing all the neighbors' gardens and even sowed their fields for them. I still do all my work with horses."

Tenney has traded, farmed and raised livestock all of his life.

"I used to have a dairy," he sad. "I'd haul cream down to the B&O and send it to the Land O' Hills Creamery. I always used a buggy or a wagon back then.

"Shoot, I raised pigs for years and sold them to the neighbors. Way I did it was I'd put them in the wagon and haul them around and the neighbors could take their pick."

When he's not farming, Tenney spends a lot of his time at livestock auctions.

"Don't get me wrong, though," he said, "I do most of my buying and trading away from the auctions. Right now I've got about 13 horses and I'm out of mules. But I'm planning to get some right away."

He said a good pair of big mules will bring $5,000 in today's market.

"I sell a lot of my mules to 'coon hunters, especially the little ones. They ride them up in the hills and jump fences just like you would a horse."

Tenney said he prefers to deal in cash and has found that honesty is the best policy in trading mules and horses.

"Honesty means a lot," he said. "The people I trade with are my friends and I want to keep them as friends; you take a fellow once and you'll never take him again."

Although he never finished high school, Tenney said he thought he was better off than his three brothers, all of whom went to college.

Slot machine cheaters win in Nevada casinos

By MITCHELL LANDSBERG
AP Writer

RENO, Nev. (AP) — The tools of the trade include drills, wires, disguises, a quick hand and a steady eye. The profits can be enormous. So can the risks.

There are almost as many ways to cheat slot machines as there are varieties of machines. And officials in Nevada agree that as long as slot machines continue to lure gamblers into the state's casinos, people will try to cheat them.

"You could write books on this stuff," says Ray Jeffers, a deputy district attorney in Las Vegas with nearly 20 years' experience in slotmachine cheating cases. "I've had estimates of from $20 million to $40 million a year that's ripped off from this state in slots alone."

OFFICIALS DO NOT KNOW how many slot cheats there are or how much money they steal. State Gaming Control Board officials do know that cheaters have conducted schools to teach their skills to others, and it's assumed that such classes still take place.

Jeffers said that a recent state report broke down all forms of gambling fraud into 208 catagories. Of those, 31 were methods of cheating slot machines.

THE MOST WIDELY KNOWN cheating method is probably the "yo-yo" — the cheater dangles a coin on a thin cord, often monofiliment fishing line.

The idea is to use the coin over and over again to play the machine for free. But casinos have developed convoluted coin feed mechanisms to trip up such schemes, and many slot machines have tiny blades inside to cut coins loose from their "yo-yo" lines.

Another common cheating method involves actual manipulation of slot machine reels to artificially set up a jackpot. One way is to drill a hole in the side of the machine to stop its internal "clock," and then stop the reel at the right place with a hidden magnet.

But slot machine manufacturers have partially foiled practitioners of this method by placing thick metal shields in front of the clocks, and using non-magnetic aluminum reels.

PERHAPS THE EASIEST WAY to cheat is to obtain a key to the slot machine, either by theft, internal casino cooperation or by manufacturing a facsimile.

Cheaters with keys generally work in gangs, according to Jeffers and Washoe County District Attorney Cal Dunlap. One or two members help block the view of the machine and scout out casino officials, while a skilled cheater quickly opens the machine, sets the reels on a jackpot and jumps out of the way.

A phony "winner," often an elderly person, then slips up to the machine to collect the payoff. The gang members meet later to divide the money.

DUNLAP AND JEFFERS said that most cheating schemes involve inside cooperation. And most arrests take place when authorities are tipped off by a disgruntled conspirator in a cheating scheme — one who didn't get his or her full cut of the money.

Still, despite a new state law setting prison terms of from one to 10 years for slot cheaters, Jeffers said that few actually serve time.

Enforcement is improving with increased use of videotape monitors in casinos, Dunlap said, but there are too few state agents to keep up with the cheats.

He said he once prosecuted a cheater who managed to open a machine and insert a doctored switch inside.

THE SWITCH OPERATED normally when an unsuspecting gambler was playing it. But the cheater, using a tiny transmitter concealed in a cigar, could manipulate the switch to make the machine pay out jackpots for free.

The cheater would come by every day, cigar in hand, to play the machine. "It was like a milk route," Dunlap said. "They don't get much slicker than that."

Sniping at grunion is exercise in futility

By GEORGE ZUCKER
AP Writer

If you've ever been on a snipe hunt, you'd be a bit wary about going after grunion.

Snipe are elusive. Thousands of snipe hunters have spent cold and lonely nights in the woods, holding burlap sacks and flashlights while friends beat the bushes.

The flushed snipe were supposed to head straight for the light so they could be bagged, right? Wrong.

You don't hunt snipe that way. And the I.Q. of those hunting them is measured by how long they are left in the woods "holding the bag."

It is one of life's favorite con games.

Grunion hunting is something else. The grunion, truly, is a small, silvery fish related to the mullet. It is found only on southern and Baja California beaches.

They are perhaps the smallest game fish known to man, thanks to their moonlit mating habits.

Grunion are the only North American fish which come out of the water to mate and lay their eggs. They do it at night and therein lies the sport.

Sometime between March and August, the six-inch fish ride the waves in by the thousands, shimmering along the beach in the moonlight. The females burrow tail-first into the sand and lay their eggs, about 2,000 in each deposit.

Then accommodating males curl around them and fertilize the eggs. The whole process takes less than 30 seconds and the spent grunion return to the sea on the next wave.

While this short-lived miracle is taking place, it is considered great sport in southern California to go down to the beach in the dead of night and grab the ecstatic grunion in their throes of passion. A mess of fried grunion makes a great breakfast.

Their spawning habits are so predictable, the local newspapers publish timetables for grunion runs.

Spawning is strictly governed by the tides. Their arcane schedule calls for breeding on the first four nights after the highest tide of the full moon or the new moon.

Each year, the California State Fisheries Laboratory publishes a timetable indicating when the grunion will run.

But with all this notoriety, few who go down to the beach to hunt grunion ever see one, let alone catch enough for breakfast.

Grunion, you see, are smart. They just don't pile onto the beach because there's a full moon. First, they send out scouts. These advance grunion sneak onto the beach, one at a time, to reconnoiter.

Once they see all those crazy Californians and their bonfires, the grunion scouts return to the sea and tell their brethren, "Uh-uh, not tonight."

My mother-in-law, 61, was visiting our home in Redondo Beach, Calif., the night a group of boisterous neighbors came to the door and announced, "The grunion are running!"

All of us hurried off to the beach. It was aglow with bonfires. We spent the chilly night huddled around our fire, watching the waves for the silvery invasion of grunion. They never came.

Back in New Jersey, my father-in-law was convinced his wife had been a victim of a put-on. He thinks to this day that grunion are no more than a West Coast version of snipe.

Maybe so. I've never seen a grunion myself.

Health insurance benefits

The nation's private health insuring organizations paid out $70 billion in benefits in 1980, a 17.8 percent increase over 1979, according to the Health Insurance Association of America. It says this was more than four times the amount paid 10 years earlier. The increase was due mainly to rising medical-care costs, expansion of benefits, and higher utilization.

Ten seconds to a firmer figure

By TRISHA YEAGER
Copley News Service

Some people avoid exercise because they feel they can't spare a half-hour block of time every day. If this is the case with you, and you genuinely want the improvements in health and appearance that come with exercise, answer this: Can you spare 10 seconds?

Just as small snacks throughout the day add up, small bits of exercise add up in terms of fitness. As little as 10 seconds of body toning, repeated throughout the day, will make a significant difference over a period of weeks, months or a lifetime. Moreover, it's a way to condition yourself to enjoy movement more fully and to make it an integral part of your life.

THE FOLLOWING MINI-EXERCISES can be done any time, any place, and most can be incorporated into routine activities.

1. Thigh stretch. With feet about 3½ feet apart and toes turned slightly out, bend knees, tucking the pelvis forward and tightening the muscles of the buttocks. Bounce gently. This firms the thighs, abdomen and hips. It can be done while brushing your teeth, applying makeup or blow-drying your hair.

2. Fanny squeeze. In a sitting position, press the thighs tightly together and contract the buttocks muscles. This firms the fanny and thighs and can be done while driving, typing or watching television.

3. Jumping jacks. Take a break and do 10 jumping jacks. It will relax and refresh you.

4. Housekeep reaches. While putting dishes in cupboards, dusting, sweeping or vacuuming, you can stretch as you reach. Concentrate on exaggerating normal movements and on first tightening then relaxing your muscles.

5. Tummy tightener. While sitting erect in a chair, contract your abdominal muscles and try to press the small of your back against the chair. This is an excellent isometric exercise for waist and abdomen and can be done at mealtime without anyone noticing.

6. Flab fighter for upper arms. Bend forward from waist with knees slightly bent. Clasp hands behind you, and keeping arms straight, raise them as high as possible. With arms in same position, slowly straighten up inhaling deeply. This feels wonderful, especially if you've been working at your desk for several hours.

7. Waistline whittlers. While standing, do a quick series of side bends and upper body rotations.

8. Walking tone up. Walking will be made more enjoyable and its benefits increased if you lift your chest, tighten your tummy and fanny and rotate the pelvis slightly forward. Take long strides, reaching with the hip (this firms the thighs). Swing your arms and breathe deeply.

9. Bathtub bends. Take advantage of bath time by bending forward to touch your toes, keeping legs straight. Repeat with toes pointed, flexed and turned out.

10. Bedtime body work. Lying on your back in bed with your arms out and feet apart, contract your muscles, pushing the small of your back into the bed. Hold and then relax, breathing deeply. Repeat, starting with your feet and working up.

REMEMBER: Mini-exercising should augment, not replace cardiovascular conditioning.

Dear Trisha: I understand why it's important to warm up before vigorous exercise, but I don't see why warming down is so important. Why is it? — T.G.

Dear T.G.: When we exercise vigorously, blood is pumped rapidly throughout the body. To stop abruptly may cause nausea or muscle cramps because the muscular movement that helps circulate the blood is halted. Too, it's wise to stretch out muscles that have been contracted or worked vigorously.

This fruit mold is a show-off

By CECILY BROWNSTONE
Associated Press Food Editor

We've been on the watch for a recipe made with fruit juices and unflavored gelatin that produced a crystal-clear mold so that any fresh fruit added would be in luscious view.

Now we've found a combination — grapefruit juice and white grape juice — that produces this clear effect. (We add a little kirsch — clear cherry brandy — to the juices, but that's a matter of choice.) The crimson strawberries and green grapes we add to the fruit juice and gelatin combination show alluringly.

This mold is low in sugar. It may be served as a dessert — with a vanilla custard sauce passed for those who have a sweet tooth. Or it may be served as the fruit mold that is traditionally part of a smorgasbord.

GRAPEFRUIT AND GRAPE JUICE MOLD

2 envelopes unflavored gelatin
2 cups grapefruit juice, Note follows
1½ cups bottled unsweetened white grape juice
¼ cup sugar
¼ cup domestic 90-proof kirsch, if desired
1 cup sliced fresh strawberries
1 cup halved or quartered fresh seedless green grapes
Garnish, membrane-free grapefruit sections and mint leaves, if desired

In a medium bowl sprinkle the gelatin over the grapefruit juice and let soften — about five minutes. Heat the grape juice until it boils; pour over the gelatin mixture and stir until the gelatin dissolves. Add the sugar and, if used, the kirsch; stir until the sugar dissolves. Add the strawberries and the grapes. Chill until partly thickened; stir to distribute the fruit. Turn into a 5-cup mold. Chill to set. Cover. Unmold at serving time. Garnish, if you like, with the grapefruit sections and mint leaves. Makes six to eight servings.

Note: In making this recipe we used unsweetened frozen concentrated grapefruit juice and diluted it according to the label directions before measuring the amount called for.

Safety with tools

By ANDY LANG
AP Newsfeatures

More often than not, a family has little choice where to locate its home workshop. Space being at a premium in most houses, the workshop has to be in the garage OR the utility room OR the basement OR the attic. Fortunate indeed is the do-it-yourselfer who has a choice.

IDEALLY, the workshop should be in an area which is soundproofed; has plenty of space, light and electrical outlets that can handle power tools; isn't damp; doesn't get too warm in hot weather; doesn't get too chilly in cold weather; is easily accessible for the movement of materials; and can be closed off to prevent small children from playing with the equipment.

The solution, then, is to do the best with what is available. When there is any kind of choice, make it in favor of a site which favors safety, since a home workshop, by its very nature, invites trouble for the careless.

MANY ACCIDENTS in the workshop occur because somebody slips and falls, which is also the main cause of accidents throughout the entire house. The No. 1 rule of safety, therefore, is to wipe up anything that spills.

Not when you get around to it, not in a few minutes, but immediately.

Stop whatever you are doing if you spill or drop anything and wipe or pick it up. The screwdriver that falls off the workbench may be the very thing that will send you sprawling a couple of minutes later when you are concentrating on something else. The admonition applies to everything — nails, screws and other small objects. Even a piece of paper can cause you to slip.

WHILE MOST power tools have some kind of built-in safety feature, none of these will help you avoid trouble if you don't look at what you are doing every second the tool is in operation.

Sure, you think, I naturally look at what I am doing, especially when working with a power tool. Then why do people get injured because they took their eyes off their work for a fraction of a second when somebody entered the shop or spoke to them? Make it a point to turn off the power to a tool or machine the moment a person enters the area or speaks to you. Only when the motor is off is it safe to engage in conversation.

ANOTHER possible troublemaker when working with power tools, as with all tools, is fatigue. The moment you feel the least bit tired, stop and rest a while. Ditto when you begin to get bored with what you are doing. Fatigue and boredom are two common causes of workshop accidents. With boredom, try to vary the type of work every so often. With fatigue, rest.

NOT FOLLOWING the directions on the label of a container is another way to get into trouble. If the label says to work in a well-ventilated area, do it. Don't figure that you'll only be working with the chemical or other product for a few minutes. It takes only one second for an explosion. Remember, too, that some items which once were flammable or volatile or both can now be obtained without those hazards. An example that comes immediately to mind is contact cement.

DOING ANY grinding or anything else where particles might fly through the air? Wear safety goggles. You know that, of course, but you figure the procedure can be skipped every now and then. The same with smoking while working with certain dangerous materials.

CHECK LADDERS before using; sand wooden handles that might cause splinters in your hands; keep paints, solvents, etc., in locked cabinets which are not readily accessible to children; and don't wear loose or dangling clothes.

Ed E. Runyan

FOCUS: Ed E. Runyan
Right in the middle of his competition

By Leslie Haines
Energy-Business Writer

There's an old oilfield axiom that says find out where your competitors are and get right in the middle of them.

And that's pretty much what Ed E. Runyan has done in recent years.

So far in 1982, his company, Bell Petroleum Services Inc., has acquired two competitors and in June, opened a large wireline truck manufacturing center in Fort Worth, where other wireline companies operate.

"I think I probably have an entrepreneurial temperament."

Originally a petroleum consultant, Runyan broke away from that business in 1969 to start Western Pollution Control Inc., a firm that dealt with oilfield waste water and monitoring air pollution.

GRADUALLY, RUNYAN acquired other companies and formed new ones, and in 1981, he renamed all of them, put them under Bell Petroleum Services, and went public. He chose the name "Bell" because it was short and simple.

"There are plenty of things on our plate now," says Runyan.

Indeed. The companies engage in well servicing, manufacture of electric wireline products; oil, gas, water and core analysis, and safety services. Revenues for the year ended April 30, 1982, were $21.4 million, a 46 percent increase.

The companies include Bell Petroleum Laboratories, Bell Rubber Company, Bell Petroleum Surveys, Bell H2S Safety, and Bell Petroleum Systems.

"If you set out to get a picture of Bell, we are a small oilfield service company," says Runyan, "but we carefully identify our market niche." Bell Rubber has a significant influence on the rubber jar market, he says, and the wireline operation is Bell's second largest contributor to corporate profits.

THE LATTER COMPANY was started three years ago and was capable of building eight wireline trucks a year. The new Fort Worth facility, opened June 1, will build 50 a year. Why Fort Worth rather than Midland?

"We're the new kid on the block. We had to be right there, where the big boys (Gearhart and Pengo Industries) are. People are not going to fly to Midland to see our products when all the competition is in Fort Worth."

Also this year, Bell opened core analysis labs in Casper, Wyoming, and Midland — both natural extensions of Bell's previous analysis business.

In February, Bell acquired Pioneer Machine & Tool of Athens, Texas; and in June, it bought J & J Engineering, a California manufacturer of free point wireline logging tools and equipment. Both purchases involved cash and notes.

"Until August, 1981, (when Bell had a public offering) we couldn't have done this," Runyan says. The offering brought $5 million in new equity to Bell.

"The comments that you hear from a lot of people about how terrible it is to go public usually come from companies that didn't prepare. We anticipated becoming a public company from the day we opened our doors.

"Everything was ready. It was just fortunate that when we got to the size where we could go public, the market was very receptive (in the height of the boom in the summer of 1981)."

UNFORTUNATELY, that market, and Bell's stock, have softened. "Don't ask me what it is today," says Runyan with a big laugh. "The stock came out at $13 a share and is now around $4.50. Everybody is down. At least I'm in good company.

"Other than wounding our pride and affecting our stockholders, it does nothing to the company."

But Bell is in good shape, and people know it. The long term debt is only 30 percent of the company's equity, and the new additions to the company are bringing in more revenue.

Runyan says he gets at least a phone call a week from someone wanting to acquire Bell, but it's not for sale. In fact, Bell is prowling around for more acquisitions itself, according to Runyan.

"In this economic climate, I get two or three calls a week from other companies asking if we would be interested in acquiring them."

AS PRESIDENT-ELECT of the AIME, a national association of four engineering societies, Runyan is very active in state and national professional affairs.

That doesn't mean he has all the answers; neither do other experts.

"I spent all last week in New York talking to oil analysts, and you can get about as many opinions as people have time to talk to you.

"Out here, our marketing plan is a continuing level of activity about equal to what we have so far in 1982. Perhaps there'll be an upswing near the end of 1982."

He said the slowdown was a factor of high interest rates, changes in the tax structure, and lower crude oil prices.

"All three converged simultaneously to put breaks on growth. We don't see any of the three changing bfore the end of the year."

RUNYAN EXPECTS to see a decline in deep gas drilling throughout the rest of the year as well.

Runyan is known to Midlanders as past president of the Midland School Board, where he served six years. He's also active in several organizations, including the Society of Petroleum Engineers and the Permian Basin Petroleum Association. He was named Permian Basin Engineer of the Year in 1975, an honor of which he is quite proud.

The award hangs on his office wall, as does a plaque indicating he is an honored alumnus of the University of Tulsa, and a framed one-dollar bill he won in a bet (which he declined to describe).

Not only does Runyan focus on local and national activities; he is also chairman of the board of Weeks Petroleum Ltd., an international oil and gas exploration firm based in Connecticut and Bermuda.

Weeks just drilled a dry hole in the Netherlands Antilles, and is preparing to drill in offshore Australia and South Korea. The company has a new concession off the coast of Spain also, and is having geophysical work done now.

IN GENERAL, petroleum action in foreign countries is less regulated than in the United States, Runyan says, although the United Kingdom regulates the industry heavily.

"The choice you have in international operations is, if you don't like the deal, you don't go into the country. You weigh the balance between political, economic and geological factors in a country you are considering."

If the geology is especially promising, then Runyan is more willing to take political or taxation risks, he says.

One problem with foreign petroleum deals is that the lead time on a wildcat is "just tremendous. First you havr to get the geology, then you have to get the concession, then fly it, get the seismic, arrange to have a rig brought in...all the supplies and logistics can take five years."

China is probably receiving more attention from American oilmen than it deserves, geologically speaking, Runyan says. Weeks has no immediate plans there, he added.

RUNYAN HAS SEEN oilmen with lots of different styles; some research every move they make while others "fly by the seat of their pants."

"My style is to deal with the oil business from a very technical standpoint. I like lots of data. But I know other guys who go by their intuition and do just fine.

"I think one thing every oilman has to have is complete integrity. There are lots of deals of millions of dollars that are made with a handshake. But, in the boom, that was abused by a lot of newcomers."

It's surprising to Runyan how small the "oil fraternity" really is. In a group of just about a thousand decision makers, a man's reputation travels quickly, he says.

Runyan's idea of a fantastic day would include these factors: all the segments of his businesses running well, getting a favorable report from a Weeks well, having lunch with some Midland friends who report they are doing well in their businesses, and maybe picking up a good game of tennis, or planning another trip abroad.

He reports he's been having those kinds of days regularly, and there's no reason why he shouldn't expect more of them.

Court ruling won't effect Midland

By Leslie Haines
Energy-Business Writer

Midland lending institutions which handle assumable mortgage loans won't be effected by last week's Supreme Court decision regarding the "due-on-sale" clause. But local lenders and realtors differ on whether or not the ruling will ultimately cause interest rates to drop.

The high court ruled June 28 that federally chartered savings and loans can exercise their option to enforce the due-on-sale clause. The clause allows them to call in the entire mortgage balance due when a home owner sells to a buyer who is assuming the loan.

Some analysts fear the decision might harm the real estate business, which now relies heavily on assumable mortgages, but area lenders and realtors say they expect no changes in their existing policies.

State chartered savings and loans are not affected by the ruling, nor are government loans such as FHA and VA affected.

About half of the savings and loans in the country are federally chartered; the rest are state chartered, including the S & Ls in Midland.

Local realtors and banking officers have received phone calls from worried clients with homes on the market with assumable loans, but they said there is no reason to be concerned.

"I don't see where it'll affect the Texas market at all," said Ed Lasater, executive vice president of Citizens Savings and Loan.

"We've had customers who called to ask us about it, but if they have a non-escalating note, the case has no bearing on their note."

The court decision upheld the right to escalate a loan if it had an escalation provision or a due-on-sale clause written in, he added.

The ruling does materially affect those states where the due-on-sale clause was prohibited by state court decisions, according to Jim Muir, branch manager of Jackie Johnson Mortgage Company.

A landmark case brought by Sentry Savings Association of Lubbock was completed recently by the Texas Supreme Court as well, he said. The decision supported the lender's right to exercise the due-on-sale option if it wished.

"There is no big change here," said Dene Kelly, president of the Midland Board of Realtors. "We have a lot of assumptions in progress here and this has not affected them.

"Most of the mortgage companies do not enforce the due-on-sale clause. They let people assume the existing loan, but they do require a buyer to be approved for the loan," she said. "They also have the option to escalate the interest if they want to, and they do."

Midland S & Ls all include the due-on-sale clause in their loan agreements, she said. Enforcement of the clause is optional.

"I don't know when we have exercised the due-on-sale clause," Lasater said. "Now we will renegotiate the note; it just depends. If it's an old 8 percent note, the money we are using to loan it is costing us 15 percent, so we may want to escalate it."

Lenders can make more money by calling in the balance due and loaning it back out at the current, usually higher, loan rate. When they choose to escalate the rate on the assumable mortgage instead, they charge a percentage between the current rate and the low rates of the old mortgage.

"What it amount to is you lose less money," Lasater said.

Eighty to 90 percent of the loans Kelly handles are assumable, she said. A similar percentage was reported by First Savings and Loan, Citizens Savings and Loan Association and Gibraltar Savings, mortgage companies and other lenders.

Raising the buyer's interest rate on the assumed mortage can be done many ways. Some lenders escalate the interest to within a percentage point of FHA and VA rates (currently 15 1/2 percent). Others write a conventional mortgage at the current rate of 16 3/4 to 17 percent; others use an adjustable rate mortgage (ARM).

"I'd say 99 percent of the market is assumable loans; it just depends on the terms of the mortgage," said Kathy Shebat, mortgage loan manager for Gibraltar's Midland office. "In most instances, we do escalate the interest rate."

Gibraltar's policy on changing the rate of assumable loans is re-written every 60 days by the home office in Houston, she added. She expects no change in the policy, other than possibly to raise the minimum interest rate allowed.

Currently, Gibraltar will escalate the rate on an assumable loan so that it at least hits the minimum of 12 3/4 percent. Loans with old interest rates above that minimum are raised one "point" or percentage, for example, from 13 1/2 percent to 14 1/2.

These so-called blended rates are still less than the current conventional rate of 16 3/4 to 17 percent as reported by the various lenders in Midland.

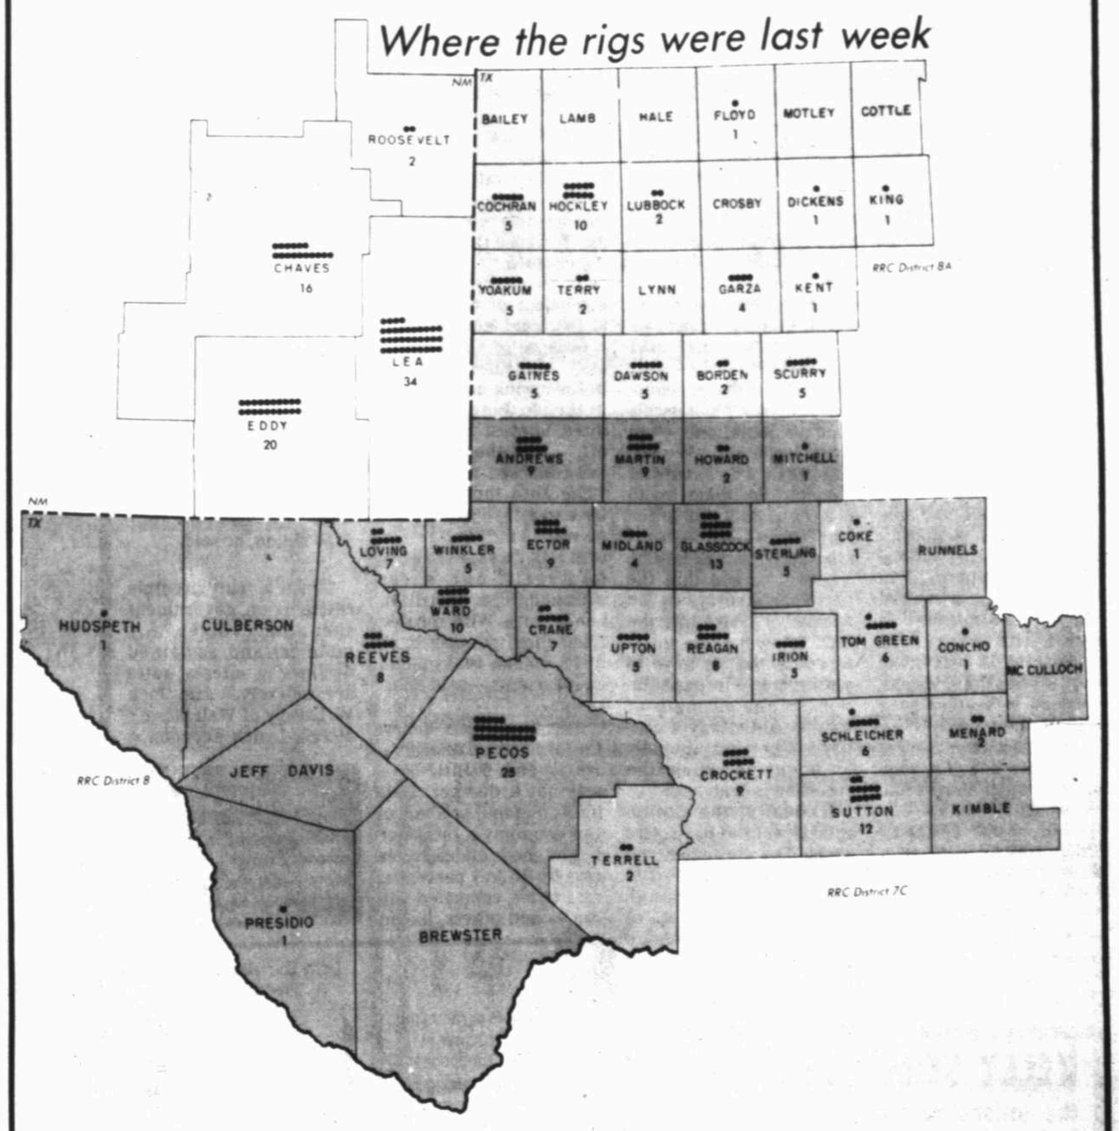

A spokesman for Citizens Savings and Loan said about 20 percent of its mortgages are left intact, with the remaining ones open to renegotiation.

Shebat doesn't think the ruling will lead to lower interest rates, as some experts have speculated.

Jim Gallagher, president of First Savings and Loan, believes that in the long term, the Supreme Court ruling may bring interest rates down, but to what degree is impossible to predict.

Prices for Midland homes are escalating much faster than elsewhere in the country, Kelly pointed out, "and a great deal of the loans go as new (conventional) loans anyway. The equity is high, so we just establish a new loan at the current rate."

Area tally higher, nation's slighter

The regional rotary rig count swung back up again last week. According to a survey by Reed Rock Bit Co. the Permian Basin tally was 294. A week earlier it was 278.

One year ago the bit makers spotted 441 rotaries plying the area covered by the map.

Nationally, the rig count is down. The International Association of Drilling Contractors reports only 2,874 rotaries making hole June 28. One week earlier there were 2,906.

June 29, 1981, the score was 4,007.

The IADC weekly figures show 763 active rotaries working on land in Texas, and an additional 77 drilling offshore. New Mexico was credited with 93 rigs.

Hearst Corp. makes media's top ten

Hearst Corp., New York, is the ninth-largest U.S. media company, with 1981 media property revenues estimated at $1.2 billion, according to the June 28 issue of Adverising Age.

A weekly international business newspaper that specializes in marketing information, Ad Age ranks and profiles the 100 leading media companies by their revenues from publishing and broadcasting only.

"Hearst is strongest in the traditional areas of magazines and newspapers." reports Ad Age. Hearst publishes 13 newspapers — including the Midland Reporter-Telegram — and 21 magazines that are distributed in 30 countries and eight languages.

"The big news for Hearst last year in newspapers was the purchase, for more than $15 million, of 28 Southern California weeklies and two small dailies with an estimated total circulation of about 425,000.

"The company's interest in smaller newspapers is a relatively recent development, and in Southern Calfornia is designed to bolster the Los Angelos Herald Examiner as an advertising force, particularly in the suburban areas, where the paper was weakest."

In addition, Hearst's San Franisco Examiner is participating in a videotext test, and overall the company is looking into all phases of electronic publishing.

Says the Ad Age story: "The thinking is that the growing new technologies provide Hearst with opportunities to extend already strong franchises in magazines (both consumer and trade), newspapers, books and broadcasting ... Hearst Cable Communications division was established in May, 1980, to acquire cable TV systems and to develop programing.

"The move to expand in broadcasting started last year with acquisition of WDTN-TV in Dayton, Ohio, for $49.9 million. It was the first action by Hearst in 15 years to expand its TV-related holdings. Hearst now has a full complement of five vhf stations, four of them ABC—TV affiliates, and WBAL—TV in Baltimore, affiliated with CBS—TV."

In addition, a joint venture with American Broadcasting Co. — Hearst/ABC Video Services — was formed 18 months ago and is "producing and supplying programing for two specialized cable network services, Alpha Repertory Television Service (a nightly cable TV service devoted to the performing arts) and 'Daytime,' a four-hour weekday video magazine specializing in programing for women ... The strength Hearst brings to the venture is its sophisticated knowledge of the women's market." notes Ad Age.

The Ad Age survey's cutoff point for this year's listing of the 100 leading media companies was estimated revenues of $59.2 million. The top 10 companies were the only ones with media revenues topping $1 billion dollars.

American Broadcasting Co. was ranked No. 1, followed by: CBS, No. 2; RCA Corp. (with its NBC network), No. 3; Time Inc., No. 4; Times Mirror Co., No. 5; Gannett Co., No. 6; S.I. Newhouse & Sons, No. 7; Knight-Ridder Newspapers, No. 8; Hearst Corp., No. 9, and Tribune Co., No. 10.

Sterling finishes Windscape

DALLAS — The Windscape, a 200-unit apartment complex in North Midland has been completed and is open for occupancy according to William L. Cravens, executive vice president, Sterling Projects Inc.

The garden apartment community is located on FM 868, just north of Midland Park Mall. This is Sterling's second apartment venture in Midland. The company completed and totally leased the adjacent 232 unit Windtree Apartments complex in 1980.

Architects for the Windscape are Fusch-Ikemire & Associates, AIA. Construction financing for the six million dollar project was provided by Lomas & Nettleton Financial Corporation. Leasing and management is being handled by Sterling Projects, Inc.

The Windscape is built on a 9 acre site. Masonry and wood, highlighted by extensive landscaping, have been combined to create a feeling of warmth and hospitality for residents of the apartment community.

Sterling is active in multi-family, single family residential, and office developments. The company has active projects in Midland, Dallas, and seven other Texas cities.

Summer may decide fate of many American businesses

By ROBERT BURNS

NEW YORK (AP) — As the U.S. economy wavers between recession and recovery, the summer quarter that is just beginning may decide whether much of American business rebounds or falls even deeper into trouble.

It also is the moment of truth for the Reagan adminstration's "supply-side" economic program, which banks heavily on a stimulative ripple from the 10 percent cut in personal income taxes that took effect last Thursday.

And the economy's next move also is critically important for U.S. relations with its European trade partners, who are anxious for a drop in U.S. interest rates that would reduce the pressure on their currencies.

"This really is a very important period we're starting now, especially for the administration," said Maria Fiorini-Ramirez, an economist at Merrill Lynch & Co. "If renewed economic activity does not materialize, the (economic) program will be under some more doubt."

With further indications this past week that the economy probably is starting to grow again, administration officials — including the president — were quick to sound a chorus of optimistic notes about recovery.

President Reagan said Thursday in Los Angeles that he believes the economy is beginning to rebound but warned against expecting a "sudden upsurge or boom." The day before, Commerce Secretary Malcolm Baldrige told a group of financial writers in New York, "we're coming out of a recession."

The latest economic reports from the government seemed to support those statements.

The Labor Department said Friday the national unemployment rate held steady at 9.5 percent of the labor force in June. The number of unemployed people fell from 10.5 million in May to 10.4 million last month, while the number of people holding jobs also fell, to about 98 million.

In a sign that future economic activity may increase, the Commerce Department said its index of leading indicators rose 0.3 percent in May, the third consecutive monthly increase. The department also revised the April increase to 1.3 percent from its previouly estimated 0.8 percent.

Also, the Commerce Department said construction spending in May rose 1.3 percent, the third consecutive monthly increase in building outlays. Sales of new homes rose 13.3 percent in May from April, while sales of existing houses in May occurred at about the same pace as in April.

The key question now, however, is how strong and lasting the recovery can be.

Many economists and business leaders say the economy could again lapse into recession before the year is out unless interest rates fall significantly. Interest rates in the open market fell slightly this past week.

If businesses get no, or only slight, relief from high borrowing costs, more and more companies are likely to collapse. That, in turn, could make banks less willing to renew or increase their loan commitments, thus making a further rash of corporate failures even more likely.

This past week Dun & Bradstreet Corp., the business information service, reported 448 businesses failed in the week ended June 24, down 18 percent from the week before, but still 28 percent higher than in the comparable week a year ago. In each of the previous two weeks the business failure count was the highest since the weekly average of 612 in 1932.

The airline industry, which includes some of the financially weakest of U.S. companies, is counting on an upturn in passenger traffic this summer. Without it, more carriers may join Braniff International Airways in failure. Braniff filed for court protection from creditors May 13.

Overseas, the Common Market countries are getting increasingly impatient with the United States. They are concerned about the flight of capital away from their borders as investors take advantage of the higher yields on dollar-denominated assets while U.S. interest rates are high.

In Brussels, Belgium on Tuesday, leaders of the 10 Common Market nations sharply criticized the United States, saying U.S. economic policies were disrupting Western Europe and jeopardizing free world trade.

In other business and economic developments this past week:

—The Supreme Court ruled that federally chartered savings and loan associations can force home owners to pay off mortgages granted through the institutions when the owners sell their homes. The decision is expected to severely restrict the availability of assumable mortgages, which allow a home buyer to take over a mortgage that often has a lower interest rate than the buyer would receive on a new mortgage.

—In another key decision, the Supreme Court struck down as unconstitutional a bankruptcy law Congress enacted four years ago. The court said Congress must return to the drawing board and come up with legislation giving federal bankruptcy judges less broad powers.

—The Federal Trade Commission delayed the planned takeover of Cities Service Co. by Gulf Oil Corp. The agency, which is reviewing the deal for antitrust implications, requested more information from both companies about the planned $5 billion merger, which would be the third-largest in U.S. corporate history. Once the materials are provided by the companies, the FTC has 10 days in which to act to block the proposal.

Economists hope mid-1982 will be turning point

By CHET CURRIER

NEW YORK (AP) — Though the stock and bond markets have shown few signs of life lately, hopes persist on Wall Street that midyear 1982 will mark a turning point in the U.S. economy.

The key figures in the script written by many economists for the next several months are American consumers — recipients in the past week of a 10 percent income-tax cut and a 7.4 percent increase in Social Security payments.

If all goes according to plan, that extra money, spread through millions of pocketbooks, will act as the seeds for a recovery from the recession. If the consumer doesn't respond with enthusiasm, analysts fear that it could be a long dreary summer in the financial markets.

Even the optimists generally don't expect any sudden upsurge in economic activity. For one thing, the infusion of money from the tax cut and Social Security benefit increase will be gradual.

The unemployment rate, at 9.5 percent for the past two months now, stands by itself as a stark argument against any rapid buildup in consumer confidence.

And even with a recession that is almost a year old, interest rates remain at levels that can discourage many a would-be buyer of a car, a home, or a new set of furniture.

"The business decline is running out of momentum," economists S. Jay Levy and David A. Levy told subscribers to their letter "Industry Forecast" recently. "However, the economy will move hesitantly and without sustained vigor during the coming three quarters."

The stock market, which had seemed to be anticipating a pickup in the economy when it staged a rally early in the spring, reached the July 4 weekend near its lowest levels of the year.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials fell 6.09 to 796.99 in the past week, approaching the two-year low of 788.62 it reached on June 18.

The New York Stock Exchange composite index dropped .73 to 61.99, and the American Stock Exchange market value index was down 4.05 at 248.38.

Big Board volume averaged 48.93 million shares a day, against 52.59 million the week before.

Along with its painful effects, a recession is supposed to set in motion forces that eventually lead to recovery — for example, reducing business inventories to clear the way for demand for new production.

"What's unpleasantly unique about the current recession is the high level of interest rates, which will definitely inhibit a rapid recovery," said Yale Hirsch, publisher of the investment advisory letter "Smart Money."

High rates, by widespread agreement, have also kept the stock market from staging the kind of upswing that traditionally foreshadows an improvement in the economy as a whole.

Thom Brown, chairman of the investment policy committee at Butcher & Singer Inc., put it: "Interest rates must come down if the staggering pool of money that is parked in high-yielding short paper (for example, $200 billion in money-market funds) is to be lured out" into stocks and bonds.

Still, those who argue that a turn is near for the stock market believe time is on their side. The approach of the November elections, they say, can only increase pressure on the Reagan administration to show some more positive results from its economic programs.

In addition, said Alan Shaw and Robert Colby, analysts at Smith Barney, Harris Upham & Co., the bear market in stocks is, by past standards, "quite mature, even old."

Firm develops computerized correlation process

HOUSTON (SWN) — Spectrix Corporation, a Houston, Texas, based research and consulting firm, announced the development of a new computerized geochemical correlation process to aid oil exploration and production. The announcement was made at a special seminar coinciding with the annual meeting of the American Association of Petroleum Geologists, in Calgary.

Dr. Donald A. Flory, Executive Vice President and Director of Research, in presenting Spectrix' findings, declared the process a significant development in the field of geochemistry. Dr. Flory presented data showing that a series of sequentially degraded oils ending with a paraffin-free asphaltic crude were closely related, indicating they originated from the same source rock. He said the ability to relate a highly degraded oil to its undegraded predecessor is the ultimate test of a geochemical correlation technique. The Spectrix process utilizes all of the information obtained on an instrument known as a gas chromatograph-mass spectrometer, whereas past methods have used only a small fraction of the information from a geochemical analysis of crude oil. Dr. Flory pointed out that petroleum exploration will be significantly enhanced, since it will now be feasible to determine with much more certainty if all oils in a field or basin are related, not previously possible in many situations. He noted that the process can easily be extended to correlation of oils with their source rocks resulting in the definition of multiple sources where present. He said that an area with known multiple sources will be much more prospective - hence, the chances of finding oil are increased.

Dr. Harris A. Lichtenstein, President of Spectrix Corporation, noted that his company is applying for patent and other protection for the new process. Dr. Lichtenstein said that "Spectrix is well on its way toward developing a significant predictive tool in the exploration and production of oil." An exclusive article describing Spectrix' process will soon be published in the 'Oil and Gas Journal.' Further development of the process is in progress. Other ongoing applications include environmental characterization and pollutant source determinations.

Economy is in recovery, but isn't an outpatient yet

By DONALD C. BAUDER
Copley News Service

Technically, the economy is out of the woods. But for the rest of this year, we'll still be seeing tall trees, tangled vines, deep brush and truculent-looking wolves and wild boars. And all because Congress will still be playing Robin Hood.

"I think we can look forward to a recovery — but I would stress that it's not going to look, feel or smell like a traditional economic upturn," said Robert T. Parry, chief economist of Los Angeles' Security Pacific Bank in an interview.

Parry and his confferees, who had earlier been looking for a second-half recovery, were buoyed by these statistics: Most important, the Commerce Department's composite index of leading indicators rose 0.3 percent in May, following a revised jump of 1.3 percent in April and a revised increase of 0.2 percent in March. With the revisions, the lead indicators have now inched upward in three consecutive months — an indication of a looming upturn, in many economists' minds.

Also, new factory orders rose 1.5 percent in May, following a 2.3 percent decline in April. "Those new factory figures are quite volatile month by month, but at least this is an indication that the economy is not gathering momentum on the downside," said Arnold X. Moskowitz of Wall Street's Dean Witter Reynolds, who said that the three-month upticks in the lead indicators is "very encouraging."

One of the statistics, however, is considered downright misleading.. F.W. Dodge (a unit of McGraw-Hill) reported that the value of new construction contracts awarded in May rose 7 percent from April. "That means nothing. Construction contracts should go down the rest of this year because of the weakness of capital spending," said Moskowitz.

And Ted Gibson, economist for San Francisco's Crocker Bank, was even more emphatic: "We see business investment spending declining by 15 to 20 percent at real (inflation-adjusted) annual rates in the second half."

Gibson agreed that the recovery itself will be anemic: "It looks like the recovery will come in on schedule, but we have to scale back our expectations of the strength of it," he said. Many statistics will be weak; the public might not know the recession is over.

Basically, the economists' scenario is the same: The consumer will lead the recovery — but not in the traditional, debt-dependent areas of autos, housing and housing-related goods such as heavy appliances. Although inflation will be soft, interest rates will remain high — tossing a black cloud over Detroit and other industries financed with debt.

Lamented Parry, "We're not expecting a significant decline in long or short rates the rest of this year. The prime is 16½ today — it's likely to be about that at the end of the year."

And low interest rates can move autos. Recent history is a good example. "I figure that General Motors' offer of 12.8 percent financing was the equivalent of a rebate of $1,100," said Moskowitz.

Because of GM's generosity, auto sales picked up in the spring and boomed in May. In June, the subsidized interest rates went off — and the auto market collapsed completely. "The auto industry will have to reinstitute rebates of some kind. In the second 10 days of June, domestic car sales plunged to a 5 million annual rate. With rebates, I see them coming back to 7.5 million to 8 million by year-end," said Moskowitz.

The economists believe that the second quarter — which ended June 30 — was not a downer. GNP (gross national product, or the economy's total output of goods and services) rose by 0.5 to 1 percent in real terms, estimated Gibson — and others, including the government, agree.

But it's still a coin flip as to when the recession bottomed. Moskowitz thinks it bottomed in the first quarter. Said Gibson, "It will be some time before we know the whether the turn came in May or June."

They're all looking for inflation of 6 to 7 percent this year and into next year. That would be double the rate of the first quarter, which was aberrational, they agree.

Most economists blame the high interest rates on excessive federal deficits. "The Treasury will borrow $100 billion in the second half," said Gibson. When government-sponsored agency borrowing such as Fannie Mae is included, the total for the year will be more than $150 billion, he said.

"Until a truly credible restraint on government spending evolves, any material and sustained declines in interest rates are unlikely," said Jack W. Lavery of Wall Street's Merrill Lynch Economics.

TOM BROWN INC.
(NASDAQ: TMBR)

Company officials have released financial results for the fourth quarter and fiscal year ended March 31, 1982. Revenues were up for both the quarter and year, to $57.35 million for the quarter compared to $42.2 million for the same period a year ago; and to $216.88 million for the fiscal year, an increase from $139.6 million recorded in 1981.

Earnings per share were 51 cents for the year, down from 55 cents a share in fiscal 1981. Earnings (loss) for the fourth quarter were (1 cent) a share versus earnings of 15 cents a share in the same quarter a year ago.

The company attributed its fourth quarter loss and relatively flat earnings level for fiscal 1982 to significant exploration expenses and dry hole costs, which totaled $17.1 million for the year and $10.7 million for the fourth quarter.

ELCOR CORPORATION
(NYSE: ELK)

Roy E. Campbell, president of the corporation, announced a regular quarterly cash dividend of $.075 per share which will be paid August 6, 1982, to shareholders of record July 15, 1982.

Elcor manufactures roofing products and industrial products and engineers and constructs processing facilities for the energy, chemical and mining industries.

GNC ENERGY CORPORATION
(AMEX: GCE)

DALLAS, (SWN) — Audited results for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1982, show a net loss for the current period, principally the result of a $3,579,000 write-down of costs from its oil and gas property full cost pool. During fiscal 1982, the company drilled over 90 wells and at March 31, 1982 production from most of these wells had not stabilized.

With less than a full year's production history, reserve engineers could only value the company's discounted future net revenues (cost ceiling) at an amount less than the company's costs. This difference in the company's cost and the cost ceiling was the write-off.

DELTA DRILLING COMPANY
(NASDAQ: DLTA)

TYLER, (SWN) — Company officials have announced the board of directors met June 25, 1982, and declared a cash dividend for the third quarter of $0.01 per share, payable September 22, 1982, to shareholders of record August 25, 1982. There are approximately 20,916,607 common shares outstanding.

The company engages in domestic oil and gas exploration and production and is an oil and gas drilling contractor with 58 domestic and six foreign onshore rigs.

TEXAS OIL AND GAS CORPORATION
(NYSE: TXO)

DALLAS — The board of directors has raised the regular quarterly cash dividend 17 percent, from 6 cents to 7 cents a share, payable July 15, 1982, to stockholders of record July 6, 1982.

This is the fifth effective increase in the company's cash dividend rate since the beginning of fiscal 1980, and it brings the 1982 fiscal year total to 25 cents a share, a 28 percent increase over the dividend pid in the full 1981 fiscal year. Presently there are approximately 95.3 million shares of common stock outstanding.

TECTONIC ENERGY CORPORATION
(TORONTO STOCK EXCHANGE: TTO)

AMARILLO — Officials of the company, with exploration offices in Midland, announce results for the first quarter of 1982, ended March 31. Total revenues were $259,000, with a net loss of 3 cents a share as compared to revenues of $326,000 and net income of 3 cents a share for the same quarter in 1981. Total oil and gas revenues were up 30 percent, and U.S. oil and gas sales were up 100 percent for the quarter.

The loss was primarily due to a $88,000 write-off of the balance of an investment in a subsidiary company which drilled a dry hole in the Phillipines.

The company has wells in Texas, Oklahoma, Louisiana, Kentucky and Wyoming.

MITCHELL ENERGY & DEVELOPMENT CORP.
(AMEX:MND)

THE WOODLANDS — The company, with a district office in Midland, has announced first quarter earnings were 38 percent below those of the same quarter in 1981.

Earnings for the quarter ended April 30 were $16.3 million or 34 cents per share, compared with earnings of $26.5 million or 55 cents a share in the same period a year ago. Revenues were $227.8 million compared with $233.2 million.

The decline was attributed to recession-caused softness in the market for natural gas liquids, a major part of corporate earnings. Favorable first quarter results from the company's natural gas production, gas gathering and transmission, and real estate operations partially offset the NGL price and volume decline.

TRANSCO COMPANIES INC.
(NYSE: E)

HOUSTON — Consolidated revenues for the company and its subsidiaries were $929 million for the first quarter of 1982, ended March 31, up from $865.2 million the same period in 1981. Earnings per share of common stock rose 13 percent to $1.46 from $1.29 earned in the first quarter last year.

The board of directors increased the regular quarterly dividend on common stock by 13 percent to 45 cents a share for an effective annual rate of $1.80 a share.

ENERGY MANAGEMENT CORP.
(AMEX: EMC)

DENVER — The company, with offices in Midland, announces results for the second quarter, ended March 31, 1982. Net income was $1.1 million or 24 cents a share. Cash earnings (funds from operations and adjusted for minority interestss) were $2.2 million. Revenues increased 35 percent compared to the same quarter in 1981.

The company plans to offer $45 million for its 1982 Energy Gas & Oil Drilling Program. The first segment of the program, the 1982-A Partnership, closed may 14 with capital of $15 million.

Additional offerings will be made for oil and gas, and for coal partnerships later in the year.

UNC RESOURCES
(NYSE: UNC)

FALLS CHURCH, Virginia — The company, which owns a subsidiary in Midland, UNC Texas Inc., reports first quarter, 1982, results. Net earnings were $3.5 million or 31 cents a share on revenues of $104.6 million. The quarter's results are not directly comparable with those of the year-earlier period, which included several property sales and a special uranium transaction.

For the year as a whole, the company expects to generate operating revenues of at least $400 million. The principal change is the addition of about $150 million in expected revenues from its oil and gas support activities from three subsidiaries acquired in 1981. The company is negotiating additional acquisitions which, if completed, could add as much as $100 million in additional 1982 revenues.

State offshore lease production up during April

AUSTIN — State leases in bays, inlets and the Gulf of Mexico produced 76,898 barrels of crude oil during April 1982, in contrast to 70,282 barrels in the same month of 1981 and 81,944 barrels in March 1982.

Through the first four months of this year, state leases have produced 304,403 barrels of crude oil offshore.

Gas well gas production from state leases amounted to 16,650,773 thousand cubic feet in April against 24,384,447 thousand cubic feet a year earlier and 16,450,633 thousand cubic feet in March of this year. Total gas well gas production offshore from state leases was 69,458,241 Mcf through April.

Casinghead gas production totaled 217,981 thousand cubic feet in April against 229,915 thousand cubic feet in the same month of 1981 and 258,532 Mcf in March. That makes 893,841 thousand cubic feet through the first four months of 1982.

Condensate production from state leases amounted to 46,897 barrels in April, down from 68.893 barrels a year earlier and down from 49,256 barrels in March. Through April, state offshore leases have produced 204,016 barrels of condensate.

In April, offshore crude production was about 0.1 percent of total estimated crude production in Texas. Offshore gas well gas production was approximately four percent of the state total.

****

The figure compares with reported production totaling 74,997,266 barrels and April 1981 production of 74,163,737 barrels.

Texas oil production averaged 2,417,328 barrels daily in April, down from 2,419,267 barrels daily in March and down from 2,472,125 barrels daily in April 1981.

The April allowable totaled 95,511,051 barrels.

The preliminary April summary indicated Texas oil production was 23.81 percent under the allowable for the month.

Through the first four months if this year, Texas has produced 289,116,252 barrels of oil.

Nugent announced that Texas oil and gas wells produced 528,665,528 Mcf of gas in March 1982, down 7.83 percent from field runs a year earlier.

Marketed gas production totaled 444,846,804 thousand cubic feet and reflected a 8.67 percent decrease from the March 1981 volume. Marketed production is the total gas to transmission lines, carbon black and plant fuel and lease use.

Gas exported from Texas in March totaled 285,447,556 thousand cubic feet. Natural Gas Pipeline Co. of America was the month's largest exporter, moving 78,655,772 thousand cubic feet of gas of which 36,887,447 thousand cubic feet was Texas-produced gas.

Exports, of Texas-produced gas in March totaled 209,704,969 thousand cubic feet, and reflected a 8.32 percent increase from the year-earlier month.

Texas gas production in March came from 224,904 oil and gas wells.

In February 1982, Texas wells produced 490,786,592 thousand cubic feet of gas. Marketed gas production in February totaled 418,038,756 thousand cubic feet. February exports of Texas-produced gas totaled 196,879,171 thousand cubic feet.

Through the first three months of this year, Texas produced 1,573,724,329 thousand cubic feet of gas. For the same period, marketed gas production totaled 1,334,911,681 thousand cubic feet.

The Railroad Commission recently set the Texas oil production rate for July 1982 at the market demand factor of 100 percent for the 65th month in a row and the 121st time since the Commission first went to the ceiling level in April 1972.

Chairman Jim Nugent and Commissioners Mack Wallace and Buddy Temple directed the continuance of the maximum statewide allowable after receiving and reviewing purchaser nominations for Texas oil in July totaling 2,479,957 barrels per day, a increase of 6,660 barrels daily when compared with June 1982 buyer requests. July 1981 nominations totaled 2,558,299 barrels daily.

Next month's permissible rate of output is calculated to average 2,970,610 b/d with actual production estimated at 2,415 million b/d. The maximum allowable applies to all but 10 fields in Texas that are assigned lower legal rates of flow for conservation purposes. Actual production in July 1981 was 2,438,764 barrels daily.

Nugent reported that July 1982 nominations for the purchase of Texas gas totaled 23,065,011 thousand cubic feet per day. Gas nominations for June amounted to 24,149,279 thousand cubic feet per day. July 1981 gas nominations totaled 24,705,664 thousand cubic feet per day.

The next statewide oil and gas hearing will be held Tuesday, July 20, at 9 a.m. in Room 107 of the Railroad Commission headquarters building 1124 S. IH35 in Austin.

Nugent announced that 13 permits to operate new pipelines in Texas were granted by the RRC in May.

Through the first five months of this year, the Commission has issued 64 permits to operate new lines. For the same period last year, 47 permits were approved.

Six of the permits in May were for gathering pipelines, four were for trunk transmission lines and three were for multi purpose lines.

Gathering lines bring oil and gas from production leases, while a trunk transmission line is a larger diameter line into which smaller lines connect.

Twelve of the newly permited lines will transport gas, while one will move crude oil.

Private pipelines accounted for 12 of the permits last month. One was for a gas utility line.

Tax bill could make losers of powerful interest groups

By THOMAS B. EDSALL
The Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

WASHINGTON — The $21 billion tax bill approved Friday morning by the Senate Finance Committee would make losers of some of the most powerful interest groups: public utilities, federal employees, the tobacco and oil industries, exporters, insurance companies, banks and many more.

In a remarkable shift for the committee's Republicans, who just last year helped push to passage a bill giving business a record tax cut and individuals rate cuts skewed in favor of the rich, the bill approved Friday appears to be the largest tax increase since World War II and 75 percent of it will fall on corporations and individuals in the upper brackets.

The bill thus faces powerful opposition, yet Finance Chairman Robert Dole, R-Kan., Friday predicted it will be passed by the Senate. "It brings fairness and balance and more equity to the tax code," he contended. Throughout three days of closed-door caucuses and open committee sessions, Dole's goal was a bill that would quiet criticism of the GOP as a party favoring the rich at the expense of the poor.

At one point just before the votes began, Dole was walking down a corridor lined with mostly business lobbyists. "There are a lot of Gucci's here," one person noted. "They'll all be barefoot by the time we're finished," Dole replied.

A spokesman for President Reagan, who is vacationing in California, gave the new bill a tentative endorsement. "The new tax increases are carefully crafted to preserve the incentives for savings and investment," the spokesman said. In fact, some of the business tax incentives enacted last year are significantly cut back.

Though the bill would increase both cigarette and telephone taxes, two levies that fall on almost all income groups, nearly half the tax increases, $9.5 billion, will fall on corporations, and $6.5 billion will have to be paid almost entirely by taxpayers in the upper middle and highest brackets. Here are major provisions of the bill:

New reporting requirements will be set up to give the IRS notice of capital gains. Nearly half of all capital gains, most of which go to taxpayers in upper income brackets, now go untaxed largely because the IRS currently has no means for knowing when they occur.

The airlines passenger ticket tax will be increased from 5 percent to 8 percent, and a tax on general aviation gas and jet fuel would be set at 12 cents a gallon. The air freight tax would be restored at 5 percent.

Many tax preferences that benefit corporations would be cut 15 percent across the board. Among those affected would be the right to deduct all intangible drilling costs on oil wells in the year they are incurred, and to defer taxes on export profits made by special exporting companies called DISCs. In addition, corporations could use the investment tax credit to eliminate only 85 percent of their tax liability, instead of 90 percent.

The federal unemployment tax required of employers would be increased an average of about $1.20 a month for each employee.

Federal employees will have to start paying for Medicare coverage. The Medicare tax this year is 1.3 percent of wages up to a ceiling of $32,400.

The committee would repeal a provision that lets utility stockholders reinvest up to $1,500 a year in dividend income tax free.

The controversial provisions in last year's tax bill allowing corporations to buy and sell tax breaks would be significantly restricted, and would be eliminated altogether under a sunset provision effective September 30, 1985, unless Congress affirmatively voted to preserve them.

The corporate pension provision that currently allows major benficiaries to postpone taxation on income of $150,000 or more annually, would be signficantly cut back, leaving a maximum of about $90,000 in income on which taxes could be postponed annually.

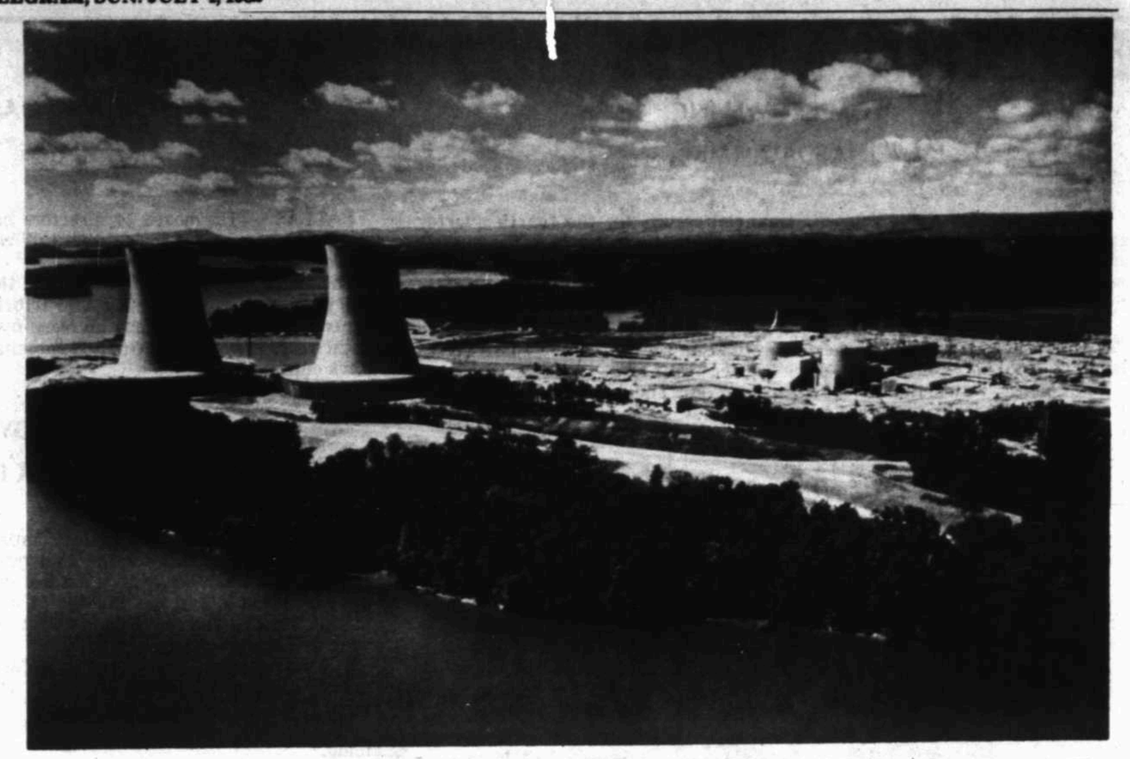

The bill would reduce the amount of medical costs that are deductible. At present, medical bills in excess of 3 percent of adjusted gross income can be deducted. The bill would raise this to 10 percent, although casualty losses could also be included.

Financial institutions would be required to withhold for the IRS 10 percent of interest and dividend income. This proposal has been successfully fought by the banks, savings and loans and stockbrokers in the past. To appease these interests, the committee voted to cut from a year to 6 months the time assets must be held before profits from their sale can qualify as long-term capital gains, which are taxed at lower rates than ordinary income.

The existing minimum tax on the wealthy will be replaced with a new one that will require about 200,000 persons, some of whom pay no taxes currently, to pay $200 million in 1984 and $300 million in 1985.

Corporations will have to pay accelerated income taxes, will be able to depreciate only 95 percent of a new investment instead of 100 percent and will lose some of the tax breaks now received when subsidiaries are set up in Puerto Rico. In addition, some of the special tax breaks available when companies merge will be eliminated.

The life insurance industry will lose a special break allowing some firms to pay little or no tax, and multi-year contractors, particularly the aerospace industry, will lose much of a break that allows firms to postpone tax on income while deducting expenses incurred to make the money.

Twin reinforced-concrete containment buildings, right, are dwarfed by the cooling towers of the 525-acre Sequoyah nuclear electricity complex on the shores of manmade Lake Chickamauga on the Tennessee River. The nation's newest commercial nuclear generation facility, near Chattanooga, was completed this summer by the Tennessee Valley Authority. It provides more than 2,200 megawatts of electricity to a seven-state region in the South. The two pressurized-water reactors were built by Westinghouse. With startup of commercial operations at Sequoyah-2, 18 percent of TVA's capacity is now nuclear, and on certain days as much as 40 percent of the electricity consumed in the region is fueled by uranium. TVA also operates three nuclear units at Brown's Ferry, Alabama.

Tennessee Valley Authority adds second power plant

WASHINGTON, D.C. — Commercial startup of the Tennessee Valley Authority's Sequoyah-2 nuclear power plant has added another 1,128 megawatts to U.S. electric capacity and boosted the nation's nuclear power supply by nearly two percent.

Sequoyah-2 this month joined its unit, Sequoyah-1, in putting power into the TVA regional system that includes Tennessee and portions of Mississippi, Kentucky, Virginia, North Carolina, Georgia and Alabama.Sequoyah-1 went commercial last July.

The new plant, located near Chattanooga, Tennessee, increases the nuclear portion of TVA generating capacity from 15 percent to 18 percent, while decreasing slightly the coal and hydropower proportions. On certain days as much as 40 percent of the electricity used by TVA consumers is now nuclear in origin.

The two units, built by Westinghouse, cost approximately $2 billion and required 12 years to complete. Together they produce enough electricity to serve the immediate needs of more than 1.2 million persons.

The Sequoyah plants are the vanguard of more than a score of new nuclear electricity complexes scheduled to come into service across the country during the next two years.

According to the U.S. Department of Energy Short Term Energy Outlook, nuclear generation will reach a record 313 billion kilowatt-hours during 1982.

and will account for 13.4 percent of all U.S. electricity. As a result of Sequoyah and other plants entering service, nuclear production is expected to grow by 15 percent this year alone, becoming the second most important source of electric power in the nation.

Nationally, nuclear electricity is a major factor in the projected 20 percent decrease in oil and 12 percent decrease in natural gas as sources of electricity during 1982. More than half the U.S. electric supply will continue to come from coal.

Cal-Pine Construction Inc. starts experimental program

Midland homebuilder David Pine, of Cal-Pine Construction Inc., has announced the start of an experimental program intended to save homebuyers thousands of dollars on new homes.

The program began last week when cnstruction was started on a new home at 3007 Tealwood. It is designed to cut the price of a new home by increasing worker productivity. Faster construction means builders pay less interest between the time construction begins and a home is sold — payments that are ordianrily passed on to the buyer.

Under the program a new home will be built in 45 working days, compared to the current 6-8 months construction time. The savings in time could save a buyer an estimated $25,000 to $33,000.

As an example, Pine said a new home currently built by Cal-Pine for $133,000, would sell for $99,500 under the new program.

"It is my goal," said Pine, "to have the people who work for me work a full day for a full day's pay. We have been a victim of our own vices, in wanting more for less work. Apathy is a disease and must be controlled, not only in our business, but in other businesses as well."

Other savings will be gained by such things as substituting insulated metal doors for more expensive wooden exterior doors.

Chemical engineering graduate student Jay Morris checks a pipe fitting on a sour gas plant being donated to the University of Oklahoma by Perry Gas Processors Inc. Morris rebuilt the plant to fulfill master's thesis requirements, and his efforts will enable OU students and researchers to search for effective methods of purifying natural gas.

Perry Gas donates gas plant to Oklahoma U.

NORMAN — Chemical engineering graduate student Jay Morris has spent much of the past year piecing together a labrinth of pipes, valves and pumps that makes up a sour gas plant being donated to the University of Oklahoma.

The plant, which purifies natural gas, is owned by Perry Gas Processors Inc. of Odessa. The firm has offered to rent the plant to OU's School of Chemical Engineering and Materials Science for $1 annually over the next four years, then to donate the unit to the university.

"It has been like putting together a jigsaw puzzle with some of the pieces missing and no picture to use as a model," said Morris of his project, which was undertaken to meet his master's thesis requirements. "I've had to reuse as many of the parts as I could, but I've had to rearrange much of the system to meet our needs. It's been a challenge right from the start."

The plant was obtained by Jay Radovich, an associate professor of chemical engineering at OU. "I originally visited Perry Gas Processors to explore opportunities to acquire equipment for our Unit Operations Lab," he said.

The sour gas treating plant was built in 1979 by the firm to run unattended in the field for a client. After collecting the needed data, the company closed the portable plant and moved it to a storage yard, where it sat unused for about a year before being shipped to OU.

Morris has cleaned and replaced some of the plant's components, and altered its network of pipes and tanks to form a closed-loop system for undergraduate studies and research projects.

In the plant, natural gas containing such acid gases as hydrogen sulfide and carbon dioxide passes through an absorber tower, Radovich said. A solution enters the tower and absorbs the acid gases. Then, the purified natural gas leaves the tower and the soljution containing the acid gasses is pumped to a stripper tower, where it is heated. The acid gases are driven off by the heat, leaving the solution ready for reuse.

Normally, the acid gases would be released into the air and the purified gas would be piped off to be sold, Radovich said. To keep the cost of running the plant to a minimum, however, the acid gases are remixed with the purified natural gas to form a steady supply of sur gas.

"Recent finds of natural gas like that found in the Overthrust Belt in Wyoming and Montana are under great pressure and contain high volumes of carbon dioxede. Computer models are available which suggest changes in the current gas treating systems to eliminate high concentrations of carbon dioxide from the natural gas, but no commercial process actually has been developed for these models," the professor said.

"No one knows for sure which solutions are best for absorbing acid gases under high pressure and temperature conditions. The plant will be used to develop performance data to test the validity of the computer modes currently available."

The plant was not reconstruced without help, Radovich said. "The Kimray Co. of Oklahoma City repaired valves and pumps free of charge. C. M. Sliepcdevich of OU's chemical engineering school donated miscellaneous equipment and the use of a shed for housing the plant. The Energy Resources Center at OU funded some of the salaries and much of the additional equipment that was needed, and chemical engineering provided a technician and machinist, K. Hudson, to help with the reconstruction.

"Jay and I would be at a total loss as to how to reconstruct the plant without the help and advice of all these people," Radovich said.

"As far as I know, no other unversity has a research facility of this type. We are extremely grateful to the poeple who have helped make this a reality.

John M. Wilson says

'There's never been better opportunities for oil industry'

By LESLIE HAINES
Energy-Business Writer

John M. Wilson says he's never seen better opportunities for the oil and gas industry than he sees now. It's just a matter of time before the industry is on top again, he says, although he's not predicting the recovery will be as fast as the downturn has been.

And, Wilson isn't just sitting back to wait for the recovery; he is doing something to make it happen, at least for his own companies.

He is president and founder of Wilson Energy Inc., the flagship of four other companies: Perfojet Services, John Wilson Drilling Company, Big Chief Well Servicing and Big Chief Supply.

Each company is flexible and available to work with the other, and for outside clients as well.

He says the experience gained working on internal drilling programs gives each company the financial stability and strength to better serve its outside customers as well.

Wilson is capable of doing something he says other companies have flirted with for years — to operate a complete turn-key drilling program where the operator and the drilling contractor are one and the same.

With this organization, Wilson is starting his biggest thrust yet in the Permian Basin with two large drilling programs that are ready to roll. One will see 40 development wells of about 9,500 feet each, to be drilled in the Sprayberry Trend Area, for an estimated cost of $24 million.

The other project will begin in the fourth quarter of 1982. It involves a $35 million program in eight Permian Basin counties, drilling a wide variety of plays on acreage the company owns. Wilson describes these holes as development wells and semi-wildcats, "or, as we say in the industry, semi-rank wells where we have a reasonable amount of control."

Altogether, the projects total $59 million and are not expected to be finished until the summer of 1983.

Wilson says he has been steadily preparing for just such a project since 1974, by acquiring acreage, equipment and investment funds. He recently brought seven new professionals on board to put together his most ambitious play yet in the Basin.

"We're really putting on the big push now, even though the times are not the same as they were last year," says Wilson. For personal and business reasons, the big moment is now, in spite of the downturn, he adds. It just so happens that all the elements came together recently, so Wilson is moving ahead.

"The downturn affected the capital that's normally available to the Permian Basin. At the end of the year (1981), when the word 'glut' was spread across the land, it caused so much of the investment circle to pull in, to withdraw from the industry."

Wilson thinks the industry needs to re-establish itself "as the best ball game in town."

There's an advantage in having momentum, Wilson says. "The larger the program the better." A large drilling program is more efficient for his companies to operate and is more attractive to investors, he added.

The low-key Wilson, who attended Oklahoma University, came to the Permian Basin in 1947 and has been an independent operator since 1957. He started Perfojet in 1963, and for about 10 years, that was his main concern.

In 1974, he founded Big Chief Well Services. The other companies came in rapid succession.

"We were wanting to be able to work in whatever direction was needed, whether it be for straight contracting, or our own internally-generated programs," he says. He has kept his five drilling rigs and six well service rigs busy with his own programs, having drilled approximately 60 holes in the last two years.

The companies have a symbiotic relationship. "They give us another set of eyes and ears to monitor our overall operation," and serve as back-up when need be.

Because he offers a turn-key operation, Wilson says he's been able to attract some enthusiastic investors.

"This is what we are bringing to the table: if we can take a good, proven area and drill a low-cost project, then the economics fit with what the property might eventually accumulate in production.

"We give them (the investors) a one-price concept. We complete the well into the tanks.

"The name of the game today is the bottom-line price; what did the well cost, what is the ultimate accumulative for a prospect?"

Wilson is moving now because of employee and investor enthusiasm. "Our investment people are saying, 'We like what you are doing and we want you to do more of it.' This puts us in a posture of doing more."

He cites the country's need for oil as another reason for the push. "We're really seeing an opportunity here. The country needs millions of barrels of oil. We need to become independent from world suppliers."

The market, the prospects and the money have all come together to form an opportunity Wilson says may not occur again in his lifetime.

"It's essential that we stay out front and keep our people active and very alert. We need to make sure our niche is out there, considering the economic climate we're facing in 1982."

Melton Drilling completes Howard County oil discovery

MELTON DRILLING

MIDLAND — Melton Drilling & Exploration Company of Midland recently reported an oil discovery on its West Luther Prospect in Howard County.

The well, Stanley No. 1, is on pump and producing 65 barrels of fluid per day — 50 percent oil and 50 percent water — from a depth of 6,712 feet.

With successful completion of the well, four additional locations now may be drilled on the 976-acre lease.

In Hockley County, three additional wells will be drilled on the Davies Lease, with the first to be started in July.

In Yoakum County, the company will drill two wells on a recently acquired 80-acre lease.

IKE LOVELADY

Ike Lovelady, Inc. announced on June 25, 1982 the results of drill stem test of the Schwartz No. 2 re-entry well in Glasscock County, Texas. This well, a 1810 feet east offset to the Hillger No. 1, San Andres discovery well, recovered 2400 feet of water from depths of 3015 feet to 3103 feet. The productive formation in the Hillger No. 1 well was not present in the Schwartz No. 2 re-entry. This is attributed to a channel or lagoon effect in the reef. According to sample analysis, the Schwartz No. 1 well located 1155 feet east of the Schwartz No. 2 contains the same formation that is present in the productive Hillger No. 1 well. The area covered by the channel is considered to be small in relationship to the overall prospective area.

The company plans to immediately re-enter the Schwartz No. 1 and attempt completion in the San Andres formation and has selected five additional locations to be drilled on the Hillger Prospect.

GETTY OIL COMPANY

Getty Oil Company announced recently the completion of a gas development well in the company's Brunson Ranch field in Loving County, Texas. The well, the Brunson Ranch 9-26 No. 1, is located approximately 25 miles west of Kermit, Texas.

The well flowed gas at a stabilized rate of 4.6 million cubic feet per day through an 8/64-inch choke. Flowing tubing pressure was 7,200 pounds per square inch. The well was drilled to a total depth of 16,271 feet and completed in the Atoka formation through perforations between 15,980 feet and 15,986 feet.

SUN EXPLORATION

DALLAS (SWN) — Another oil discovery from the elusive Pennsylvanian Granite Wash (PGW) in Oldham county, the Texas Panhandle, has been announced by Baker & Taylor Drilling Company and Sun Exploration and Production Company (Sun E&P) equal interest owners.

Located approximately 23 miles northwest of Amarillo, the No. 1 Neptune well was completed June 16 pumping 572 barrels of oil per day from the perforated zones 7,104 feet to 7,119 feet. A confirmation test well is being drilled approximately 933 feet northwest of No. 1 Neptune site.

The discovery is on a 52,000 acre block where the partners have had an active Pennsylvanian Granite Wash exploration program for over three years. In early 1979, the Lambert field was found where there are presently six producing wells. This marked the first PGW production in the area in about a decade. In September 1981, the Sundance field discovery was made where there are eight producing wells and one well being completed. In March of this year, the Hryhor field discovery well was completed and there are nine producing wells and two wells being drilled or completed.

ADAMS RESOURCES

HOUSTON (SWN) — Adams Resources & Energy, Inc. and Patrick Petroleum Company of Jackson, Mich. jointly announced that they are completing a new deep Woodbine-Tuscaloosa sand discovery in Polk County, Texas, located northeast of Houston.

Bank officials trying to reorganize Oklahoma City bank

Federal banking officials are trying to arrange the reorganization of a fast-growing bank in Oklahoma City that has made millions of dollars in loans for oil and gas exploration at a time when sagging demand has caused drastic reductions in drilling activity, informed sources here and in Oklahoma said Friday night.

The sources said it is likely that the Penn Square Bank, Oklahoma's fourth largest, will be taken over by new management next week. The Federal Deposit Insurance Corp., which insures the bank's deposits, is reportedly seeking a transfer of ownership that would keep the bank operating and minimize the amount FDIC would have to pay to depositors.

Oklahoma City television stations reported Friday night that customers, alarmed by new accounts of the bank's problems, were calling to inquire about the safety of their money and were lining up to withdraw funds at the bank's drive-in window, which was open during its usual Friday evening hours. The bank's main office was closed, but a moving truck was hauling furniture away.

Penn Square Chairman Bill P. Jennings, who has used to bank to provide capital to some of the most prominent figures in Oklahomas's energy industry, told reporters in Oklahoma City that the bank would open for business as usual Saturday and that the depositors' funds were protected.

But sources in Washington said many Penn Square depositors have more than $100,000, the maximum covered by the FDIC, in the troubled bank.

Penn Square has 80 percent of its loans in energy ventures, according to American Banker magazine. The portfolio includes heavy investment in the troubled oil companies of one of its directors, Carl W. Swan, described by Oklahoma sources as a reclusive young wildcatter with close ties to Jennings.

The reported problems at Penn Square could cause ripples in banking circles far from Oklahoma, because the bank has sold more than $2 billion in loan participation to leading banks in New York, Chicago and Seattle.

These banks might be unable to collect if Penn Square folds because the security for the loans is "still in the ground," an Oklahoma banker said.

A spokesman for Seattle First National Bank, largest in the Pacific Northwest, confirmed Friday that is has been notified by the U.S. controller of the currency that "certain Penn Square loans" have been "identified as problems. Penn Square lending is under review, including all participant loans."

About half the loan participations have been sold to Chicago's Continental Illinois Bank and Trust Co., which recently has been hit by a series of setbacks among borrowers it has backed heavily.

The other banks holding Penn Square loan participations are Chase Manhattan of New York and Northern Trust of Chicago.

Economist thinks market will rally, then collapse

By JEAN GODDEN

"No, I don't think the market is going to collapse," Justin Mamis, Wall Street investment counselor, remarked. "I think it's going to rally first, suck everyone in, and THEN collapse."

Manis chuckled over this gallow's humor. "On the whole," he said "I'm feeling very bullish."

Manis has just written his second book, "How to Buy: An Insider's Guide to Making Money in the Stock Market." Out this month, the book is a sequel to "When to Sell: Inside Strategies for Stock Market Profits," which Manis co-authored with his brother, Robert, in 1978.

Mamis lays out guidelines on what to buy, when to buy and how to buy in any market. He explains how to translate information available in newspapers into tips on the market.

The author also advises on which day of the week and which hour to buy, how to avoid buying near the top and how to check out "hot tips."

Mamis said that he believes that Joseph Granville of "Granville Market Letter" fame is about to advise investors to buy. "He missed the market's last rally," Mamis said, "and now his ego is at stake. The indicators on which Granville depends are almost there."

Some other "hot tips" from Mamis:

- Today's technicals are tomorrow's fundamentals.
- Don't look for low-priced issues as if they have some special virtue.
- "Do not buy a stock when it is all over the tape. Wait until it quiets down."
- "Don't buy more stocks than you can watch."
- "There's a right time to sell, but you can buy at many different times."
- "Don't buy a hitherto strong stock if its new high is made on less volume."

Arco Alaska Inc. approves Prudhoe Bay agreement

ANCHORAGE (SWN) — ARCO Alaska, Inc., announced it has approved an agreement among the Prudhoe Bay major interest owners (ARCO Alaska, Inc., Exxon Company, U.S.A., and Standard Oil Company (Sohio) regarding the final determination of each company's participation in the Prudhoe Bay unit.

The redetermination procedure was provided for in the Prudhoe Bay unit agreement signed by oil unit participants in 1977.

Interim equity values have been used prior to the final determination. Under the determination agreed to today, ARCO Alaska's equity in the oil reserves will increase by 1.282 percent to 21.664 percent and in the gas cap reserves will increase by 0.273 percent to 42.515 percent.

The equities of the major interest owners in the Prudhoe Bay Field were adjusted to reflect a better definition of the reservoir characteristics and the knowledge gained from the field's production history, ARCO Alaska said. Negotiations with smaller interest owners are continuing.

When all redetermination adjustments are implemented, ARCO Alaska's equity share in the Prudhoe Bay unit oil production will increase by about 17,000 net barrels per day to 284,000 net barrels per day (exclusive of condensate production). These adjustments will be retroactive to the start of Prudhoe Bay production.

If implemented on September 1, 1982, ARCO Alaska will receive 37,500 net barrels per day of additional oil for about two years to bring total oil production in line with its new equity.

Similarily ARCO Alaska's investment will be adjusted to reflect the new equity interest. For prior capital, operating and maintenance costs, this will amount to about $200 million.

ARCO Alaska, Inc. is a subsidiary of Atlantic Richfield Company.

Freedom's flame burns

In the 206 years since the Declaration of Independence was signed, nearly every aspect of life in these United States has changed, most many times over. It is one of the ironies of our society that we take for granted a way of life many people throughout the world cannot even comprehend and most would surely die to achieve.

The foundation on which the government of this land was based more than two centuries ago was one of independence. That is why our forefathers risked life and limb in signing the declaration, proclaiming the formation of a new nation of free men and women who would live in a free society unafraid of political or religious persecution.

Those principles formed the basis for the Bill of Rights, which guarantees Americans certain specific and general freedom such as freedom of speech, religion, of the press and the right to assembly. Further, the Bill of Rights protects our right to life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness.

During the 200-plus years since the formation of this union, the rights of Americans have been challenged, threatened, eroded and confused by a mishmash of laws that have obscured the clarity our forefathers sought to convey. What they were seeking was freedom — freedom to work in the trade of their choosing, freedom to criticize their government, freedom to worship the Creator as they chose, even freedom to not worship if they chose to not.

In areas such as Midland where patriotism is a way of life and the free enterprise system promises everyone an opportunity, the vision of the forefathers still burns as brightly as ever. They came to this land seeking a new way of life. Since the time that way of life — and of self-government — was established an unavoidable dilution has taken place.

But the principles that brought about the creation of the most progressive, most dynamic, most diverse society known to man have not changed. They will never change.

As the declaration so appropriately states: "We hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created equal, that they are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable rights, that among these are life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness."

The United States has changed drastically in the past 206 years. But those unalienable rights will not change because they are part of the spirit of a free people. Freedom's flame burns forever in the minds, hearts and souls of men.

The price of justice

There's little justice in the expenditures needed these days to obtain legal testimony in court from some expert witnesses.

A case in point is the recent Penthouse magazine trial. Libel charges over an article in Penthouse were brought by Rancho La Costa, the resort in San Diego, Calif. Penthouse magazine won out in the end, but the cost to the publisher, Robert Guccione, was extremely high — estimated at $6.5 million.

Much of the money went to the lawyers, of course, but a lot found its way into the pockets of witnesses. The biggest fee for a witness went to Aladena "Jimmy the Weasel" Fratianno, a mobster and former hit man, who wanted $250 an hour for his time when giving depositions or appearing as a witness in court. Fratianno was paid $40,000 for his testimony during the 5½-month trial.

Another witness, a journalism professor, received $33,000 from La Costa for testimony and consultation. He was considered an expert witness, testifying on the issue of prevailing standards for investigative journalism.

The magazine also brought a journalism professor from the University of Missouri to the stand. He received about $11,000, and most of it because he stood by nine days before he testified. An author who appeared for Penthouse received about $15,000 and a former newspaper reporter from Miami drew approximately $10,000 even though he never testified.

Perhaps the plaintiffs and the defendants in the Penthouse case are extremely lucky psychiatric testimony wasn't needed. That would have brought on even more financial woes.

The system is wrong — one side paying through the nose for testimony and the other side forced to answer with its battery of high-priced witnesses. It cries for an investigation and a complete overhaul. Justice should not come with a fancy price tag.

Another View:

Donovan's suitability

A federal grand jury investigating charges of illegal activity involving Labor Secretary Raymond Donovan has concluded that there is "insufficient credible evidence" to support a prosecution of Mr. Donovan. Since the jury had heard testimony from 156 witnesses and reviewed hundreds of pages of documents compiled by Special Prosecutor Leon Silverman, this is an important victory for Mr. Donovan in his fight to clear his name and defend the suitability of his appointment to the Cabinet.

There are over 700 pages in the edited public version of the special prosecutor's report and a weighty tome of supporting exhibits. But the grand jury's unanimous conclusion that no prosecution is warranted indicates that there is no "smoking gun" buried within it. All there is is smoke, an awful lot of it.

There are still some matters to be cleared up. One concerns perjury possibly committed (though not by Mr. Donovan) with respect to "no-show" employees on the payroll of Mr. Donovan's firm. The other concerns the murder of a witness shortly after he flunked a lie detector test concerning his links with Mr. Donovan. But the inquiry found no evidence that the labor secretary was involved in any way in these matters.

As the special prosecutor noted, there are a "disturbing number" of allegations (more than two dozen) of ties between Mr. Donovan and organized crime figures, many of them coming from more than one source. These associations, even if they could be proved, would not substantiate illegal or even improper activity by Mr. Donovan and his firm. But they are not the sort of links that one would expect of a Cabinet officer — especially one with direct responsibility for combating mobster infiltration in the labor movement.

The report does nothing to allay the Senate's concern that it was poorly served by the hasty FBI investigation conducted during Mr. Donovan's confirmation hearings. If nothing else, it confirms that the information that the committee received from the incoming administration was far from complete. The Senate may also fairly conclude that Mr. Donovan showed poor judgment in allowing his firm to conduct a so-called "counter-investigation" of Senate staff.

The special prosecutor has concluded a long and careful inquiry with the finding that there is insufficient evidence to support charges of criminal offense. That judgment deserves to be accepted as the answer to that question. The next question is one that only the White House can answer. It is whether a careful reading of the record as the special prosecutor laid it out meets the standard of public propriety that Mr. Reagan wishes to uphold.

SPEAKING OUT

Insanity plea has place in U.S. judicial system

By WILLIAM B. SMITH

William B. Smith came to Midland from Cleburne in 1957. He received his law degree from the University of Texas Law School. Smith is a past president of the Midland County Bar Association and specializes in trial work.

The Midland Reporter-Telegram asked me to comment on the Hinckley trail and on the insanity defense. I am happy to do so.

The Congress of the United States passes the legislation that pertains to insanity as a defense for one who is accused of committing a criminal act in violation of a federal law. The legislature of Texas passes the legislation that pertains to insanity as a defense for one who is accused of committing a criminal act in violation of a state law.

One of the duties of the presiding judge in both a federal court and a state court is to instruct the jury as to the rules of law that apply to the particular type legal matter that the jury is hearing.

By contrast to the duty of the judge, the jury's duty is to decide the facts of the given legal dispute; and in deciding the facts, the jury is to accept the judge's explanation and definition of the rules of law. The only information about the facts of the case that the jury is to consider is that information that the jury hears in open court and that is permitted by the judge.

I do not have a copy of the specific legal definition of insanity that the federal judge used in the Hinckley trail, but a typical definition that a judge uses in federal court states as follows:

"A person is not responsible for criminal conduct if at the time of such conduct as a result of mental disease or defect, he lacks substantial capacity either to appreciate the wrongfulness of his conduct or to conform his conduct to the requirements of the law. The terms 'mental disease or defect' do not include an abnormality manifested only by repeated criminal or otherwise antisocial conduct.

"In other words, you should find the accused not guilty if you find that at the time of the alleged assault he was, by reason of mental disease or illness, either (1) unable to appreciate the wrongfulness of his actions or (2) unable to conform his conduct to the requirements of the law."

The jury in the Hinckley case heard several witnesses testify for several days before the jury made its decision, and the jury deliberated several days before reaching its decision. Some of the witnesses were called by the government prosecutors, and some of the witnesses were called by the attorneys representing Hinckley.

I was not present during any of the Hinckley trial. I shall assume, however, that the government's position was fully and ably developed and presented to the jury and that Hinckley's position was fully and ably developed and presented to the jury. That is, the jury had the benefit of a competent presentation from each side on which the jury could base its decision.

Under the rules of the law of insanity that were in existence at the time and which were defined for and explained to the jury by the judge, combined with several days of testimony from witnesses for both sides, and considering that the jury followed the oath that each of them took, I conclude that the jury made the correct decision. Although the decision of the jury is not a popular one, I believe the jury should be commended for having the courage to follow their oaths and to go by the rules of law that were presented to them.

If one is interested in changing the rules of law of the insanity defense, one must remember that any law must be applicable to all and capable of being applied impartially.

One must recognize that there are people with severe mental problems who are physically capable of committing the physical portion of a criminal act, yet who are incapable of having the mental capacity to form the necessary criminal intent to be held responsible for committing and act that would otherwise be a crime.

Consider the returned soldier who served so gallantly for his country on the battlefield, but who is now, unfortunately, so mentally berserk that he does not know what he is doing. He may be able to load and fire a deadly weapon, and he may be able to kill someone that he erroneously believes to be the enemy, but who is only his innocent and unsuspecting next door neighbor.

Consider the aged, very senile person who is so mentally disturbed that he cannot recognize his own relatives. He can wield a butcher knife in such a manner that can kill another who the aged person believes to be attacking him; yet the person whom he kills is an innocent bystander.

Another example would be the three-year-old child who seriously injures his baby brother or sister believing that he is only playing with the baby.

Neither the soldier, nor the aged, nor the three-year-old child in the above examples should be found guilty of a criminal act because none had the mental capacity to know that he was doing wrong. Rules of law that are passed by Congress must not criminally punish anyone who is as bad off mentally as any of those in the above examples.

There are those who would attempt to fake insanity in an effort to go unpunished for committing a crime. The lawmakers consequently are confronted with a very difficult task. On the one hand, the rules of law that they write must be broad enough to prevent those people who are mentally capable from abusing the rules of law.

The lawmakers can solve these problems best by using deep intellectual thought based upon much reearch and cool reflection. Hasty decisions based upon emotional impact will not best serve the common good.

Booming business

To The Editor:

It is still hard for those of us who lived in Midland B.B. (before the boom) to realize all the facets (headaches, if you will) of that boom. Streets and traffic have been the most obvious and worrysome facet. That affects all of us to greater or lesser degrees. More about traffic later.

My personal hang-up is books, books and people, especially children. The Midland County Library (and I believe it serves as city library also) offers a number of special services. One such service is the large and vital section used by people in the petroleum industry, Midland's lifeblood. A downtown location is handy for business patrons.

But, Midland County needs more than just one new and bigger main library in downtown Midland. Some cities smaller than Midland have branch libraries. Many counties have bookmobiles to reach out and serve the reading public.

Two more brief words: Just drive down and see the traffic now in that area. And, second, don't forget the children who should be able to use the public library often and easily.

Somtimes an unpleasant crisis situation leads to a helpful solution in the long run. Maybe keeping Midland County Library in busy downtown Midland will lead to some good. It will become clear that location cannot serve everyone.

Contributions by individuals and businesses might start the ball rolling for expansion by branching out. I hope so.

A fatal mistake

To The Editor:

So the mediators are arranging an exodus for the PLO guerrillas.

Well they are making a mistake. These people are terrorists. They will fall back and regroup. And it will come to pass that more innocents will be assassinated by their malevolent activities.

There are evil people in this world and they must be exterminated. Property and lives are not safe anymore — anywhere.

Adult: Word's 'meaning' ranges from responsible living to irresponsible sex

To be adult used to mean being — or at least acting — grown up and accepting "what is" without bawling or sulking. "Be adult about it," they'd admonish. They must have meant you were being sophomoric about it in a juvenile sort of way.

In recent years, the word "adult" has been associated with unorthodox, perverted sex with a triple X.

It forever may have ruined your taste for root beer and added a new dimension to sex imbued with guilt.

Adulthood, which by the books naturally is equated with responsibility and maturity, bends toward prurient yearnings when it's associated with books, movies, massage parlors and specialized motel rooms with ceiling mirrors and closed-circuit television showing smut in the name of entertainment and profit. Art has little to do with it outside of mitigating guilty and justifying the pleasures of the moment.

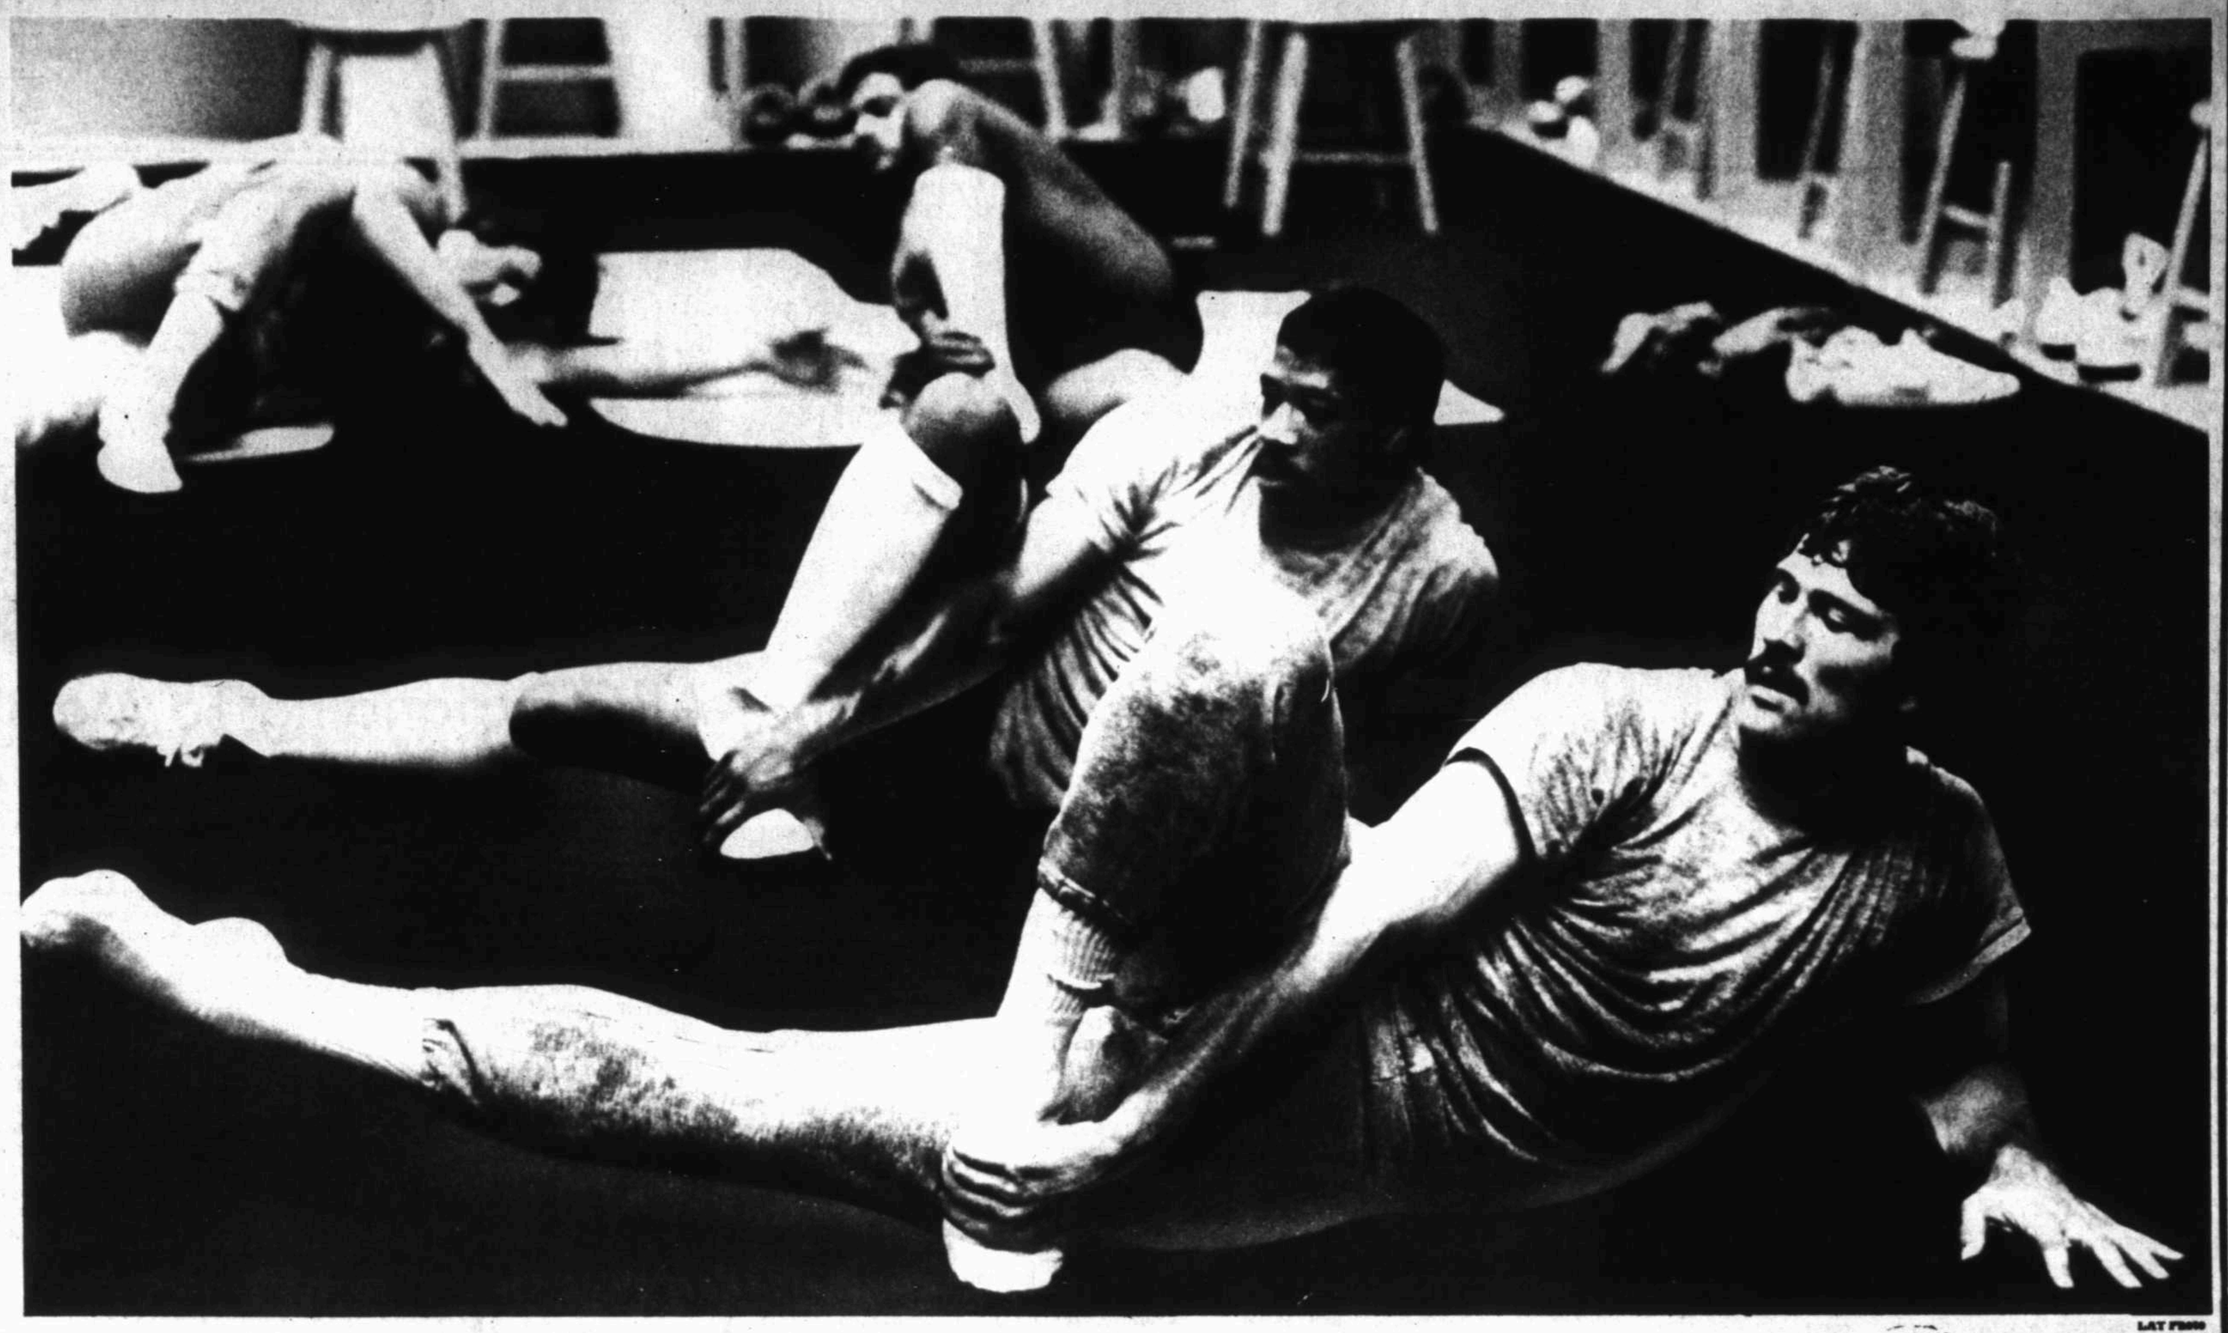

No one today wants to be called "adult" for fear that it's the same as being sordid and inclined to look up lascivious reading material and photograghs and sketches in the library or bookstore. You could even get an adult complex by glancing through a department store catalogue or, for art's sake, reading from great works of literature from the Bible to Shakespeare and Balzac to your favorite 20th century writers.

The adult quest certainly seeks planes other than that of the sensual, sensuous and voluptuous — however lofty and gratifying they may seem at the time. To be adult is to be intellectual about things intellectual, spiritual about things of the spirit, emotional when the time comes, earnest in living a spiritual life, and just being human and trying your best with all the help that's available on high and low to be yourself.

Aerobic dancing is the latest craze for Los Angeles Rams football players trying to keep in shape. Nolan Cromwell, front, and Lucien Smith are among those players who have taken up the class.

Dancing Rams

By CHRIS BAKER
The Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

ANAHEIM, Calif. — After the 6-10 season the Rams had in 1981, defensive end Jack Youngblood was ready to go through hell to avoid another disaster in 1982.

But aerobic dancing? Isn't that something housewives do in leotards to shed poundage?

"I used to think that aerobic dancing was for sissies," Youngblood said as he chewed tobacco before a recent "Ramerobics" class. "But we take our hats off to the ladies who do it. At my club those girls run for 20 minutes in their aerobics classes, but we only run for 12. It's real tough. It ain't no day at the beach. It works muscles we normally wouldn't stretch, like the hips and backs."

Aerobic dancing is the trendy new way some people fight flab. It's the biggest fitness craze to hit since Nautilus centers. Jane Fonda's new book on aerobic dancing for women is a smash, and Dianna Ross has just released an aerobic dance-oriented single.

Aerobic dancing is not actually dancing, rather it is callisthenics to music. An aerobic exercise is an exercise that uses oxygen, like running, cycling or swimming.

The Rams are the first pro sports team to try it regularly as a group and most swear by it — when they're not swearing at instructor Nancy Gregory.

"We're definitely not gazelles...and we don't have a lot of rhythm," said offensive guard Bill Bain, who at 6-4 and 277 pounds looks like a dinosaur stuck in the tar pits when dancing. "But as long as this gets the job done, I like it.

"IT'S HELPED me lose weight and I'll eat just about every kind of junk food. I don't eat breakfast on Tuesday and Thursday because I don't want to puke during class. And I'm not as hungry when I go home after class, so I'm only eating one meal a day. I've noticed that there's more food left in my refrigerator," said Bain.

The classes are the brainchild of Rams owner Georgia Frontiere, Coach Ray Malavasi and conditioning coach Clyde Evans. For the players, the classes break the monotony of their off-season conditioning program, which also includes running and weight lifting. Some of the players work with a track coach to develop speed.

"I've done some checking, and as far as I know, we're the only team in the NFL that does it," said Evans, who attends the class regularly. "There have been athletes who have gone out on their own and taken ballet and dance classes, but I don't think a team has ever brought it into the locker room.

"I talked with Georgia and Ray (Malavasi) and we thought it was a good way to develop body control, flexibility and to also bring the guys together more during the offseason."

When a reporter phoned Dallas Cowboys conditioning coach Bob Ward to ask if his team was considering dancing, Ward was interrupted at the start of the interview.

"Pardon me," he said when he returned. "One of the players just came in to check out a pair of tights. Seriously, though, aerobic dancing isn't completely alien to me. My wife teaches it at 10 health clubs in the Dallas-Fort Worth area. Anything that seems to contribute either mentally or physically has to be positive.

"But I'm more into the martial arts as a conditioner. Our sport is a hitting sport and I focus on things which help a player's striking (hitting) ability and his conditioning."

THE RAMS' teacher, Gregory, is a dancer-choreographer who has worked in the theater, TV and movies. She is assisted by Vivian Love, a Rams cheerleader. Frontiere is installing a $10,000 exercise carpet in the cafeteria for the classes.

"The players sweat bullets during the classes," Love said. "It's very different from dance. From a dancer's point of view this is not dance. But you work out a lot of groin and stomach muscles. The level of intensity is pretty high. I thought I was in shape until the first time I took it."

Said defensive tackle Larry Brooks after taking his first class: "If I can get as flexible as she (Gregory) is, it must be good. it certainly works up a sweat."

Said linebacker Carl Ekern: "Normally, I just crank out the miles to get in shape, but that gets boring. This develops good coordination and it's a good cardiovascular workout. It's a trip. It's a different way to get some good work done."

The 45-minute classes are held every Tuesday and Thursday. There is also a weekly aerobics class for the coaches and front office staff — but so far the coaches haven't tried it.

"It's been a big morale booster for the secretaries," Love said. "I think some of the coaches are going to take it after they lose some weight. Aerobics is pretty strenuous."

Good music with a lively beat, pacing and a good teacher are the keys to a good aerobic dancing class.

THE RAMS dance in shorts and T-shirts (no leotards here) to a combination of everything from new wave, jazz, rock and big band music.

Gregory paces the class. She gradually increases the amount of running time at each workout. The Rams run for about 12 minutes during a 45-minute class.

Gregory's routine starts with exercises to stretch the neck, back and legs, switches to running in place, then gradually adds arm movements. At times, the scene resembles an out-of-step chorus line.

She then moves into leg raises, situps, bicycle kicks and abdominal exercises, and finishes with more stretching exercises.

Dance instructor Nancy Gregory leads aerobics classes twice a week.

Monterrey is Fine Family Tradition

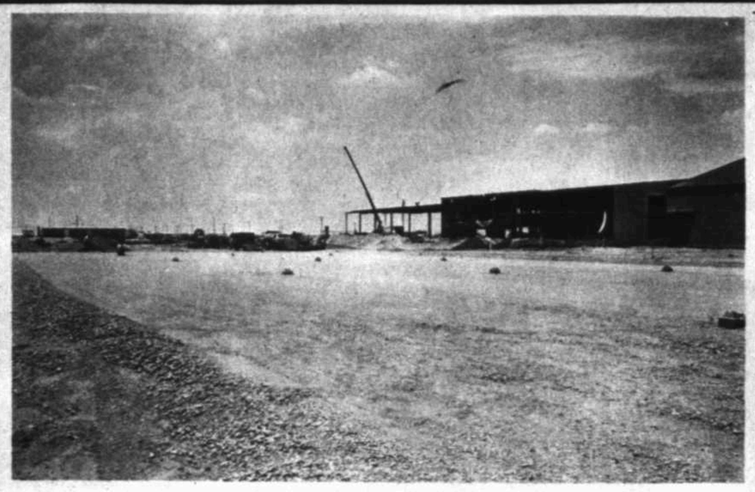

Since 1953, when Manuel and Feliz Veloz first turned their dream into reality, Monterrey Cocina Mexicana has served Midland the finest Mexican food available. Monterrey is the oldest Mexican food restaurant in Midland, and one trip to the cozy little restaurant makes it easy to see why the business has prospered so well over the past 29 years. The atmosphere is a relaxed, casual, family atmosphere, and the food is absolutely delicious.

Present owners George and Gloria Veloz maintain the high standard of excellence for service and quality that has been a tradition since George's parents founded the restaurant. Recipes used today are the same family recipes used 29 years ago began serving Midland traditional Mexican dishes made with a family touch. The cocina has been owned and operated by the Veloz family for two generations, so you know that you get the personal service and supervision that comes only in a family-owned business.

Since they opened, Monterrey has met with tremendous success; having had to expand to a new facility in August of 1979. Already, Monterrey has had to make plans to further expand sometime next year, due to the popularity of the restaurant. Further expansion will mean better service to the customer, and less time spent waiting for a place to be seated.

Monterrey has made some special additions to enhance the atmosphere and make your meal more enjoyable. On Tuesday nights, you'll be pleased to dine to mariachi music. All day Thursdays, margaritas from the bar are only 99¢. Margaritas are also only 99¢ on Mondays, but the restaurant is only open until 2:00. Arrtco Builds Professional Courts

If you're in the market for a tennis court, you know how important it is that the job is done right. Your court is an investment that will probably be with you the rest of your life,so it must be perfect. There should be no flaws in the surface, design, engineering, or in any part of the construction of your court. That's why most people who know tennis courts appreciate Arrtco Tennis Systems, Inc.

Arrtco Tennis Systems was founded about 7½ years ago in Lubbock, Texas. The first six jobs Arrtco accepted were right here in Midland. Since then, they have completed many jobs in our area. In August of last year, Rusty Abell, President of Arrtco, decided to open an office in Midland to better serve those in this area. Arrtco is presently doing a job for the Paul Thorpe Spa, pictured above under construction, with 8 outdoor and 4 indoor courts. Arrtco not only does tennis courts, but also running tracks and other recreational areas as well.

There are only 14 certified tennis court builders in the world. Rusty Abell was one of the original nine. Mr. Abell is on the Board of Directors of the U.S. Tennis Court and Track Builders Association, of which his company is a member. With that kind of record and experience, you know that when you call on Arrtco Tennis Systems, you're getting professionals.

Unlike some companies who only surface and paint your tennis court, Arrtco does the complete job in tennis court building. This means that Arrtco takes the time to design and engineer that perfect court for you, and then they build it completely from ground up leaving nothing to sub-contractors. Arrtco has their own equipment to build and level the dirt,surface and paint the court, do the lighting, nets and poles, and attend to every last detail of your tennis court. The workmanship is superior and the personnel are trained to spot and correct any flaw which may appear. And yet, prices are comparable to those of other builders.

If you really wany your tennis court to be perfect and last a lifetime, call on the professionals at Arrtco Tennis Systems. Superior workmanship is what makes your investment worthwhile. Attention to every minute detail and personal supervision are what make it last. Call Rusty Abell at 683-7798. Arrtco Tennis Systems are the "perfect" professionals for the job.

Colleges to sell tax-exempt bonds

By RANDOLPH E. BUCKLIN
The Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

WASHINGTON — More than 100 private colleges in eight states are expected to join Dartmouth College this summer in selling hundreds of millions of dollars in tax-exempt bonds to finance loans to students made ineligible for federal help by budget cuts and eligibility restrictions.

Dartmouth announced Thursday that it had raised $29 million through the sale of tax-exempt bonds. The Hanover, N.H., college plans to use $12 million to make loans to needy students rendered ineligible for loans by cuts in the federal student aid programs. It says it will use the rest of the $29 million to finance campus construction projects.

Dartmouth is the first private college to raise funds in the financial markets for student loans. The move was made in direct response to threatened cutbacks in federal financial help for college students, Dartmouth officials said.

The Reagan administration proposed in February that the federal government's $6 billion program of aid to college students be cut by $900 million. Most existing aid programs, however, should remain intact this year, according to Robert Aaron, public affairs director for the American Council on Education.

Financial aid officers are worried about further cuts in federal aid next year, Aaron said, adding they are also concerned about the new tightened eligibility requirements for the Guaranteed Student Loan program.

The irony for the administration is that this increasing use of tax-exempt bonds represents an additional loss to the Treasury, which does not collect taxes on the interest received by bondholders.

Dartmouth officials said it was primarily the uncertainty over future federal aid that prompted their unprecedented move to the bond market.

Officials at Harvard University in Cambridge, Mass., said they also planned to raise several million dollars for student loans this summer in a joint effort with a number of other major private schools in the state. That offering would be made under the auspices of the newly created Massachusetts College Student Loan Authority.

If this summer's offering is successful, Harvard plans to return to the tax-exempt bond market for more money next year, according to Robert Scott, Harvard's financial systems director.

Scott said Harvard would use the low-cost money to "fill in around the federal program."

A representative of Northwestern University in Evanston, Ill., said it will seek $10 million to $15 million in the next two or three months to finance student loans next year. Plans are for it to join a dozen other private Illinois colleges in a $30 million to $40 million offering under the auspices of the Illinois Independent Higher Education Loan Authority.

Colby College in Waterville, Maine, is also planning a much smaller entry into the bond market this fall with similar state-authorized support.

At present, at least five states — New Hampshire, Massachusetts, Maine, Illinois and Iowa — have set up authorities that permit private colleges to offer tax-exempt bonds. At least four other states — New York, Maryland, Pennsylvania and Florida — have legislation in the works that would establish such authorities.

According to educational lobbyists here, more than 100, and maybe as many as 200, private colleges in the country may soon seriously consider offering tax-exempt bonds to get around cuts in federal student aid programs.

Money for student aid has been raised through the tax-exempt bond market by at least 12 state-managed loan programs for the last four to five years. Dartmouth, however, is the first private school to go directly to the market and the first to manage a loan program using funds obtained by bond sales.

Several college officials and lobbyists for educational groups expressed concern earlier this week that Congress might attempt to restrict the ability of colleges to raise money for student loans through tax-exempt bonds. But, according to congressional sources, it is highly unlikely that colleges will be affected.

A series of new restrictions on the sale of tax-free bonds issued by non-governmental entities were proposed by the Reagan administration in February and are now under consideration by the Senate Finance Committee.

Although the legislation was directed at the growing use of Industrial Revenue Bonds by private businesses, it might also have affected bond offerings made by private colleges. The proposal included tighter notification and registration requirements and a provision mandating financial contributions from the governmental agency authorizing the sale.

Congressional sources said an administration official from the Treasury Department had proposed that students receiving loans from tax-exempt money be subject to the same eligibility requirements that apply to existing federal loan programs. Reportedly, no such restrictions are contained in language currently before the Senate Finance Committee or in the House version of the same bill.

The Dartmouth move is also significant because the issuing college assumes direct liability for the bond issue. Under existing state programs that use tax-exempt bonds to raise money for loans, liability for the bond issue was assumed by the state government.

Dartmouth and any other schools that use the bond market now will be directly liable for repaying the bonds.

With the money raised from its offering, Dartmouth says it plans to start offering loans to students this fall at 11.9 percent interest. Dartmouth will be paying an effective interest rate on its bonds of 10.6 percent. The difference will go to cover the expenses of running the program.

Dartmouth's bonds were rated AA and sold out on the first day of issue, according to college officials. Goldman, Sachs & Co. was the principal underwriter.

S&Ls to offer short-term accounts

WASHINGTON (AP) — Federal regulators are giving banks and savings and loan associations permission to offer savers a new short-term account.

The account requires a minimum daily balance of $20,000 in order for savers to earn interest at market levels. The maturity will range from seven days to 31 days.

Federal regulators, acting as members of the Depository Institutions Deregulation Committee, voted 4-1 Tuesday to approve the new account, effective Sept. 1.

William Isaac, chairman of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp., voted against the proposal, arguing instead for a "money market account" — with no interest caps — that he said would compete more directly with the popular money market mutual funds.

The regulators agreed to study proposals for a higher paying account, but indicated it would only go into effect once Congress has given savings and loan associations greater powers to operate more like commercial banks.

Treasury Secretary Donald Regan, who proposed the $20,000 minimum account, told the panel he would urge them to "consider authorizing a truly competitive market rate, transaction-type account," once legislation is agreed on for S&Ls.

Savings and loans must have additional powers, he said, so they "can generate the earnings needed to pay for additional market rate deposits."

The account agreed on by the federal regulators will require a $20,000 minimum daily balance to earn interest of as much as the discount rate for 91-day Treasury bills at savings and loans. That rate was 13.269 percent in Monday's auctions.

Commercial banks will be able to offer a rate one-quarter of a percentage point less. Compounding will be permitted.

Whenever the account balance falls below the minimum, interest will be paid at the regular passbook level of 5.5 percent for savings and loans and 5.25 percent for commercial banks.

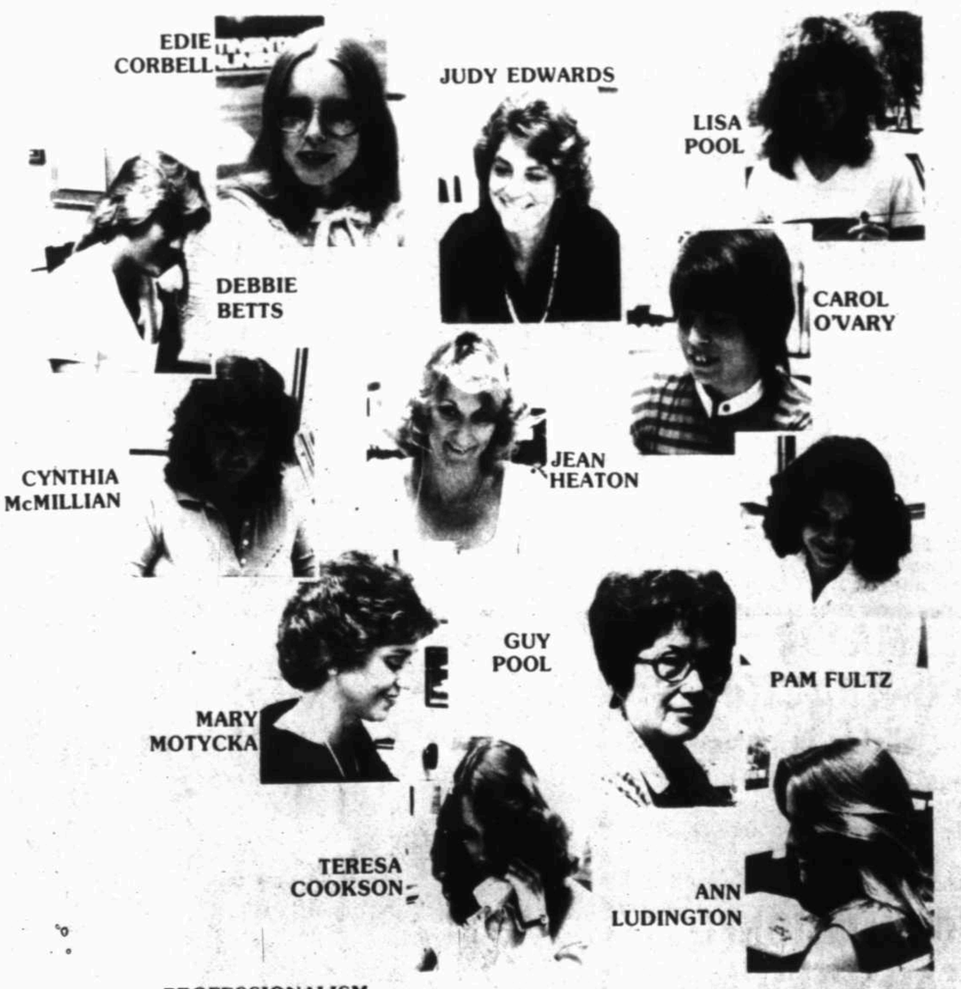

The ceiling rate will be eliminated May 1, 1983. The ceiling rate and differential for S&Ls will be suspended whenever the 91-day Treasury bill rate is 9 percent or below for four straight weeks.

Penalties will be imposed for early withdrawals, and checks cannot be written on the account.

In addition to Regan, those voting in favor of the new account were Federal Reserve Board chairman Paul Volcker; Richard Pratt, chairman of the Federal Home Loan Bank Board, and Edgar Callahan, chairman of the National Credit Union Administration.

State needs to invest more funds in vocational education

By BILL KIDD
Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — If Texas wants to assure that students are getting skills which will allow them to find places in the job market - and to maintain that market - it needs to invest more funds in vocational education.

That's the conclusion of a special report to the State Board of Education by the Advisory Council for Technical-Vocational Education in Texas.

"Vocational education has been blessed over the past 15 years with substantial increases in funding," the report comments, "resulting in trememdous increases in facilities and programs."

"Even still," the report adds, "many school systems, by themselves, are hard pressed to respond to their respective community's labor market needs."

Surveys by ACTIVE indicate many school districts and post-secondary institutions are interested in "joining hands to provide vocational instruction" - and the report recommends allowing such arrangements.

"Area vocational schools" could be created, the report suggests, that would "cross county lines and/or encompass parts of several counties based on a jurisdiction that would serve the needs of citizens for vocational education."

The report also says institutions list as their "number one unmet occupational program need" health occupations and computer - related programs - with those two categories ranked first in over half of the responses.

And 55 percent of those responding said they had to turn students away from occupational programs during the past year - with 32 percent of the students turned away wanting to take health occupation programs and another 19 percent wanting to take office/computer courses.

The survey notes 218 of Texas' 254 counties are experiencing "critical shortages of allied health care workers."

The report recommends that the legislature provide $5 million to the Texas Education Agency to purchase equipment to be used in programs at the post-secondary level "for jobs in skill shortage areas."

Other recommendations by ACTIVE include:

Supporting TEA's recommendation for funding for the 1984-85 biennium which would permit 500 new vocational education units each year, with an increase in foundation school program funds from $215.7 million in fiscal 1983 to $280.7 million in fiscal 1985 for secondary level vocational education. (TEA also has recommended increases in funds for equipment, adult programs, etc.)

Providing payments to reimburse persons using their own vehicles to travel to vocational instruction programs "when it is not economical to use school-owned vehicles."

Amending the Education Code to liberalize requirements for hiring qualified persons to teach post-secondary vocational courses (the report comments that post-secondary institutions "maintain high standards" and requirements for certification as teachers aren't necessary).

Making adult students eligible to be counted in allocation and reallocation of vocational teacher units.

Appropriating $32.5 million in the coming biennium for adult academic education and $8 million in the biennium for adult vocational education.

The Sunset Advisory Commission has begun public hearings on whether to continue, alter or abolish a number of State agencies–holding hearings on the State Securities Board, among others and setting additional agencies for this fall.

Hearings are set for Oct. 6-8 on the State's financial institutions regulatory agencies, including the State Banking Board, State Depository Board, Department of Banking, Texas Savings and Loan Department, Office of the Consumer Credit Commissioner, Texas Credit Union Department and State Finance Commission.

The hearing on the Securities Board brought a plea from board member Grogan Lord, Georgetown, for continuation of the agency, with Lord commenting that in the 22 years since creation of the board, Texas hasn't suffered a major securities scandal.

Efforts at governmental deregulation, the Central Texas financier warned, aren't always beneficial (he cited the demise of Braniff International Airlines as an example).

Lord also included a blast at money market funds in his remarks, contending the funds have been "draining money out of the banking industry like crazy" and that they "have raped the savings and loan industry.

And, he warned, it will be "the young Americans who are going to have to pay for it" in the form of higher interest rates on home mortgages.

Securities Commissioner Richard D. Latham says the agency and the commission are in agreement on most matters, except as regards registration of investment advisors and requiring the board to hear appeals from certain decisions by the commissioner on registration denials.

EPA wants to amend the soon-to-expire Clean Water Act

By VIC OSTROWIDZKI
Hearst Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON — The Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) wants to amend the soon-to-expire Clean Water Act, which was aimed at creating "fishable and swimmable" waters by 1983 and putting an end to the discharge of pollutants into waterways by 1985.

The 10-year-old statute directed EPA to set standards for removal of pollutants from industrial wastes before the wastes may be discharged into sewers.

Senate subcommittee hearings on some 14 proposed changes which would make the issuing of these standards discretionary — with EPA deciding which industries would be required to meet pretreatment standards and which would not — will be held July 20, 22, 28 and 29. House hearings are now set for August.

Opponents of changes — including the National Audubon Society — claim the proposals would weaken the law and cause more delays in a program that already is lagging badly.

The law required industries discharging directly into rivers, lakes or streams to install the "best available technology" (BAT) for controlling pollution. Factories discharging into local sewage treatment plants were required to treat their toxic wastes first.

The agency was required to come up with pre-treatment guidelines for 129 toxic pollutants and 21 industries nationwide.

However, EPA has been unable to come up with the guidelines. Since the 1977 amendments were passed, the agency has issued guidelines for only three of the 21 categories of industries that discharge toxic pollutants.

Testimony from local sewage agency officials and from industry during 1980 oversight hearings condemned the pre-treatment program developed by EPA as unworkable, needlessly complex, confusing and more costly than the environmenal benefits derived.

Some industry groups seek elimination of the law's federal pre-treatment requirements, contending that cities should be allowed to develop their own pre-treatment programs and to determine which chemicals, if any, need to be neutralized before being dumped into a city treatment system.

According to critics, EPA is also far behind schedule in issuing regulations for direct discharge of effluents into waterways. The agency's proposed Clean Water Act amendments would extend its deadline for promulgating these regulations by another two years and then would allow industry four years to comply.

In a related development, the Chemical Manufacturers Association claims that a recent joint industry-government study shows that the industry's wastewater treatment program has been very successful in removing toxic pollutants. The association, which represents the chemical industry, said the study proved that, for the most part, the treatment technology now in use at many chemical plants is meeting the objectives of the Clean Water Act.

"If any additional controls are required for any specific organic priority pollutants, they should be selected and applied on a case-by-case basis, taking into consideration the 'treatability' of the specific pollutant in question," the association contended.

The study, known as the "CMA - EPA Five Plant Study,'" was begun in 1980 after the EPA had screened a large number of chemical plants in this country to indicate which of the 129 priority pollutants should be studied more closely.

HELP FOR SMALL BUSINESS

The Small Business Administration has established a national export revolving line of credit loan program to help more small businesses export their products and services abroad and is today (Thursday) entering into agreements with three agencies to help boost their exports.

Perhaps as many as 25,000 small firms are capable of exporting their products and manufacturing services immediately but are not doing so because of the shortage of ready cash. The line of credit would be available to manufacturers, wholesalers and export management companies, with the maximum length of loan 18 months and the maximum guaranty for any one business $500,000.

SBA will also work with three federal agencies toward boosting exports by small businesses.

The agreement with the International Trade Administration will help SBA field offices to disseminate "how-to" information on exporting and encouraging participation in trade fairs, shows and missions.

Under the agreement with the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration, SBA will select 12 small U.S. fishery firms to take part in foreign trade shows to help them sell fish products abroad. The agency's agreement with the Foreign Agricultural Service will permit it to fund participation and shipping fees connected with foreign trade shows of 20 small firms which produce agricultural products.

EXIMBANK LOANS

The Export-Import Bank has approved its first final authorization of a guarantee covering a Japanese yen loan to assist an American export sale. The loan, equivalent to $25.2 million, will help finance the $38.7 million purchase of two Boeing 737 jet aircraft by Royal Air Maroc of Morocco. The aircraft are scheduled for delivery in March and June 1983.

U.S. companies will make export sales totaling $154 million to buyers in Mexico, Brazil and Norway — including a $41 million sale of two Boeing Vertol model 234 Chinook commercial helicopters to a Norwegian corporation.

Boeing facilities in Pennsylvania, Washington and Connecticut will receive appoximately 300,000 hours of direct employment as the result of the helicopter contract.

JOBS

Almost half of the job growth between 1972 and 1980 occurred in just 20 occupations — including cashiers, registered nurses, cooks and secretaries — according to the recent Department of Labor study. The findings show that white-collar groups — in particular, professionals, managers, and clerical workers — experienced the fastest growth during this period. Women accounted for about 65 percent of the employment rise over the period, increasing their share of employment from 38 to 43 percent. Accountants, bookkeepers, and cashiers all had large employment increases, as did computer specialists, computer operators and engineers. There are about 50 occupations which declined in size because of changes in consumer tastes, technology, and labor supply, especially among delivery, private household and farm workers.

DRILLING

A bipartisan group of House Interior Committee members is sponsoring legislation to permanently ban leasing of national wilderness areas for oil and gas drilling. In California, the Forest Service is now studying the possibility of leasing 14 tracts in the Ventana, Santa Lucia, and other designated and officially recommended wilderness areas of the Los Padres National Forest. Under current law, leasing in these areas could be initiated any time before the end of 1983. No leases could be issued after 1983, but exploration and development under leases issued before that deadline could continue indefinitely. The effect of the legislation, co-sponsored among others by Leon E. Panetta, Don Clausen, Robert J. Lagomarsino and Charles Pashayan, would be to move that deadline up to the present and thereby establish a permanent ban on oil and gas leasing in wilderness areas.

AROUND AND ABOUT

The House is expected to take up later this month a highly controversial Defense Industrial Base Revitalization Act which would direct the Reagan administration to offer financial assistance to more than 50,000 small and medium-sized businesses to modernize their aging industrial plants and equipment, initiate training and retraining programs to provide workers with needed skills and develop greater capability to produce strategic materials and substitutes . . . The number of one-parent families doubled between 1970 and 1981, according to the Census Bureau. About one in five of the nation's 31.6 million families with children are now supported by one parent . . . You may not be any safer taking a train than driving on a highway. A study funded by the Federal Railroad Administration estimates that 19 percent of the 234,000 workers surveyed at seven major railroads are repetitive, excessive drinkers and that five percent showed up for work "very drunk" or got "very drunk" while on duty . . . A House subcommittee has approved a bill by Rep. George Miller, D-Calif., that would strengthen penalties against employers who violate the minimum wage. Current law requires an employer caught violating the statute to play the amount of the underpayment. The proposed bill would triple the amount . . . Workers put out of jobs by plant closures and layoffs could get help finding aid and new jobs under a plan proposed by conservative Sen. Orrin Hatch, R-Utah. The Displaced Worker Readjustment Act provides incentives for employers to give advance notice of plant closings and mass layoffs voluntarily and provides for a joint effort by management, labor and state and local governments to help workers adjust before layoffs, rather than after.

Monsanto announces formation of subsidiary

ST. LOUIS — Monsanto Company recently announced the formation of Monsanto Oil Company as a wholly owned subsidiary to direct its worldwide hydrocarbons explorations and production operations. All the activities of Monsanto's current Oil & Gas Division will be conducted through the new company.

In announcing the new company's formation, John W. Hanley, Monsanto chairman and chief executive officer, said, "Monsanto has been an active member of the oil industry since the merger of Monsanto and the Lion Oil Company in 1955. In recent years this segment of our business has been expanding its contributions to Monsanto through increasing revenues and enlarging our oil and gas reserve base."

"The establishment of the subsidiary will strengthen Monsanto's identity in the hydrocarbons exploration and production industry, while continuing to provide the financial backing that is so important to this business," Hanley added. "Also, it will facilitate our ability to enter into joint ventures and to make other arrangements to spread the cost of our expanding exploration activities."

Frederic Tietz, presently general manager of the Monsanto Oil & Gas Division, is appointed president of Monsanto Oil Company. J. William Soderman is appointed vice-president, exploration; Elmer H. Muhlbach, vice-president, production; James E. Teddlie, vice-president, international; and L. Baxter Brown, vice-president, general counsel and secretary.

Tietz, in reviewing the past performance of Monsanto in the oil and gas exploration and production areas, noted that, "Every year since 1975, Monsanto has increased its hydrocarbon reserves. We think this is a significant achievdement and has resulted from Monsanto's dedication to increasing funds for exploration, development and purchase of producing properties."

"Last year 7.7 million barrels of oil and 45.7 billion cubic feet of gas were added to Monsanto's existing reserves and resultecd in year-end reserves totaling 33.6 million barrels of oil and 598.6 billion cubic feet of gas," Tietz said.

Most of Monsanto's oil and gas investments last year were made in the drilling of 62 net exploratory wells and 119 net development wells. Of the total, 81 percent were productive, with notable successes in North Dakota, Oklahoma, West Texas, Wyoming and offshore Gulf of Mexico. Net sales of oil and gas rose 44 percent, to $194 million, in 1981 compared to 1980. During the same period pretax earnings — before interest and general corporate expenses, and excluding the profit on operation of the natural gas plants — increased 24 percent, to $34.1 million.

"As to the future, evaluation is underway on a number of high potential leases we acquired in 1981 and 1982."

Tietz explained. "These acquisitions have increased our undeveloped acreage positions to over one million net acres, including interests in seven Gulf of Mexico federal offshore blocks. Later this year we will commence an exploration drilling program on several licenses which we, as operator, hold with numerous partners in the U. K. North Sea."
