5000 BELIEVED DEAD IN DAYTON FLOOD; SNOW AND FAMINE INCREASE SUFFERING

By Associated Press.

Dayton, Ohio, March 27.---That 5,000 persons have met death here is indicated by the first estimates, made possible by the receding waters as the flood subsided and exposed the bodies of the dead to view.

By Associated Press.

Dayton, Ohio, March 27.—Snow added to Dayton's other terrors today. The weather was bitter cold, adding misery to those still trapped on top of their homes. Fire is sweeping almost the entire downtown district of the city.

The flames are leaping hundreds of feet into the air. The conflagration already has destroyed several blocks in the very heart of the business section, as indicated fro mobservations from the roof of the National Cash Register building.

Daylight found a small portion of Dayton's citizens, from their refuge on the highest points in the city, anxiously straining their eyes toward the section hemmed in by fire and water, in which there are at least 65,000 of the city's inhabitants.

Although only a little more than a mile from the section where it is feared there has been great loss of life, hundreds of willing men and women looked on helplessly.

Falling Water Makes Rescue Possible

Although water from swollen streams had been creeping slowly uppon the out-lying sections of Dayton, the catastrophe which resulted so seriously, came within thirty minutes after the Tarrelton reservoir broke. The streets soon became swelling torrents in which boats could not live. The water went down perceptibly during each hour after noon yesterday and last night, and unless other reservoirs break, which is feared, the well organized force of relief workers probably will explore a large section of the city by tonight.

Many May Have Died In Flames

The fire, which started yesterday, according to what could be seen through field-glasses from a mile away, started in the Patterson Supply company's plant on Third street near Jefferson. This fire burned northwest for a time, and then shifted directly west. It has been conservatively estimated that 250 were marooned in the Beckel hotel, which apparently went up in flames. This fact, however, had not been definitely settled this forenoon, and it is still unknown whether there were many persons in the other burned buildings.

Motorboats Coming To Aid In Work

The two expert oarsmen who took a boat into parts of Third and Jefferson street yesterday, and who saw persons in every building who pleaded with them to save them, did not navigate that portion of the city which appears to have been destroyed by fire.

Sixty motorboats with men to operate them are coming from Cleveland and a few from Cincinnati.

Reports today from the vicinity of Lewiston, declared the huge reservoir there is still expected to break at any minute.

Dynamite To Raze Remaining Buildings

Harrowing tales have been told in connection with the rescue work already done. A boy, pitched by his mother from a roof to a boatman who was having difficulties keeping his boat steady, was missed by the rescuers and drowned. The mother was saved. Believing the city to be doomed by fire, Vice-Mayor Huber has sent appeals to all cities of the State for dynamite to raze the buildings in the fire's path whenever this can be accomplished, and also for all the fire-fighting apparatus that can be rushed here.

Water Still Ten To Twenty Feet Deep

At noon today the fire in the business section was still raging and several persons could be seen frantically running from roof to roof. It is now known there was considerable loss of life in the fire in the business district last night.

The water at noon was still ten to twenty feet deep in the business section and too swift to allow the use of rescue boats.

Danger From Exposure and Sickness.

Further danger from flood was passing today but the apprehension of great loss of life from famine, exposure and sickness was growing hourly.

The flood waters receded three feet during the night and it was expected that before darkness most of those marooned in the downtown district would be liberated. Four motor boats which arrived from Cincinnati this morning were taken to the water's edge and an effort made to extend immediate relief to the most urgent cases found.

Although there are constant rumors of great numbers of deaths from fires and floods in far parts of the city, the fact remains that up to the present there can be no actual knowledge nor intelligent estimate of the extent of the mortalities.

Need of Provisions Is Very Urgent.

George E. Burba, representing Governor Cox, today telegraphed the Governor urging that a special emphasis be given the great need of immediate supplies of provisions. There is not a full day's food supply in the city and before night it is likely that 1,000 persons who have been held down town without food or water since Tuesday will be released and there would be no provisions for them nor places to care for them.

Probably within a day there will be bodies of thousands of horses decomposing in the muddy streets and it will be impossible even to care for the bodies of the humans.

Report of Reservoir Break Causes Panic.

Needless suffering was caused by the report to-day of the breaking of the reservoir when men rushed through the uptown streets shouting "flee for your lives, the reservoir has broken."

Families living outside the danger zone, gathered their babies and belongings in their arms and fled for the Cash Register office, crushing into that already over-crowded structre.

The reservoir contains 17,000 acres of water space and it was pointed out that the flood districts is estimated at several million acres so the worst possibel effect or its breaking would be to retard the work of rescue and could not cause a rise of more than one foot.

The waters already are seven feet lower than the high water of Monday night. An effort was made to drive some of the panic stricken back to their homes but in the main they stood helpless on the streets.

Thousands Rush to Factory Building.

First alarms of the breaking of the reservoir today were spread by a policeman, who was posted on the edge of the flood district. There were others quick to take up the cry and soon thousands crowded the streets. Many of them fled straight for the hills but hundreds of them hurled themselves past guards and into the main office building of the Cash Register Company.

Not until Jno. H. Patterson had addressed the frightened throng was any semblance of order restored. Mr. Patterson has been appointed military aide in the southeast district of the city with full control under martial law.

Mr. Patterson at once ordered every available motor car and truck to scour the farm houses south of the city and confiscate all available food supplies, while the farmers in this vicinity have contributed so heavily their bins are believed to be nearly empty. It is hoped to obtain enough potatoes and vegetables to prevent starvation here.

600 TO 1000 ARE DEAD AT COLUMBUS

By Associated Press.

Columbus, Ohio, March 27.—Between 600 and 1,000 persons lost their lives in the flooded west side of Columbus, according to the first reliable reports from that section of the city, which came through today. The big state institution and store rooms on top of a hill in West Columbus are crowded with refugees who tell of incredible horrors.

Fire Chief Lauer, who was marooned on the hill just beyond the flooded section says he reached that point in his automobile just before the water swept the low-lands. He said he saw scores of people standing on their porches as the water swept down on them. Other witnesses say the houses were crushed like egg-shells.

The section of Columbus between Central Avenue and Sandusky street was almost wiped out, after two nights of horror during which hundreds clung to house tops calling for help until their voices gave way, while dozens were perched in the branches of the trees.

Many are still beyond the reach of the rescuers. The cold caused many to freeze who lost their grip and dropped into the water. With military glasses rescuers standing on the Baltimore and Ohio railroad near Center Avenue could see several dead forms lying on the roof of a building to the east.

At the corner of Glenwood and Thomas Avenue the lifeless form of a man was still hanging in a tree. He had frozen during the night as he was signalling for help before dark.

Vandals looting the the besieged territory added to the horrors. J. W. Gayer, justice of the peace at Briggsdale, swore in several deputies today and gave them instructions to shoot down all looters.

Five hundred lives were lost at Piqua according to information received here at 12:30 p. m. by Senator Kiser of Piqua. His informant was J. Guy O'Donnell, prosecuting attorney of Miami county.

PRESIDENT WILSON ISSUES AN APPEAL.

Washington, March 27.—President Wilson Wednesday issued the following appeal to the nation to help the sufferers in the Ohio and Indiana floods:

"The terrible floods in Ohio and Indiana have assumed the proportions of a national calamity. The loss of life and the infinite suffering involved prompt me to issue an earnest appeal to all who are able in however small a way to assist the labors of the American Red Cross to send contributions at once to the Red Cross at Washington, or to the local treasurers of the society.

"We should make this a common cause. The needs of those upon whom this sudden and overwhelming disaster has come should quicken everyine capable of sympathy and compassion to give immediate aid to those who are laboring to rescue and relieve. WOODROW WILSON."

President Wilson also sent the following telegram, to both Governor Ralston at Indianapolis and Governor Cox at Columbus, Ohio:

"I deeply sympathize with the people of your state in the terrible disaster that has come upon them. Can the federal government assist in any way?"

By Associated Press.

Indianapolis, Ind., Marih 27.—It will be two or three days before the loss of life in the west side bottoms here can be ascertained. The wildest rumors continued current today running the losses into the hundreds but the more conservative men engaged in rescue work were more optimistic and venture the opinion that the loss of life would prove slight, possibly not more than 20 or 30.

Governor Ralston this noon declared West Indianpolis under martial law.

Vandals started to rob and pillage and a company of the State troops were rushed into the district and a number of arrests were made.

Says He Was Not Given Opportunity to Sign Report—A. & M. Consolidation Matters

By Associated Press.

Austin, Texas, March 27.—The House after passing a 9:30 criminal closing act today adopted the free conference committee report on the civil act, closing saloons at 9:30 in lieu of the Kennedy bill. The vote was 94 to 24, with seven present and not voting. The conference committee report was signed by only four members of the House part of the committee and Kennedy protested saying he had not been notified of the committee meeting. Some one declared there was more than a 9:30 closing bill in this conference report. Allison absolutely denied this, saying it merely pledges the liquor dealer to obey all other laws. He said Governor Colquitt will approve this bill.

BUSINESS MEN SCORE LOONEY AT CORSICANA

Attorney Geenral Severely Criticised For Bringing Recent Suits Against Oil Companies

Corsicana, Texas, March 27.—The Corsicana Commercial Club has adopted the following resolution:

Be It Resolved by the Commercial Club of the city of Corsicana:

That we are committed to the enforcement of all laws of our state in a spirit of justice and fairness and will use our best efforts to secure same. Be it further

Resolved, That we express no opinion as to the guilt or innocence of the Magnolia Petroleum Company and the Corsicana Petroleum Company of the acts of which the Attorney General claims they are guilty. Be it further

Resolved, That we are not in sympathy with, but strongly condemn the procedure of the State, through its Attorney General, in bringing said companies to trial. It has the appearance of lynch law or of a mock trial where the only effort is to procure a place where injustice may be worked out. It is not usual for an officer who is seeking to enforce the law to select an unusual and arbitrary place as a background for his act. It is not usual for a court to take from any citizen his property and put it in the possession of another without notice or a chance to be heard, but both of these things have been done, and we view it as an assault on our most sacred rights to an impartial and legal trial. The Magnolia Petroleum Company and the Corsicana Petroleum Company have transacted business among us for a number of years and are managed by men whom we know, respect and have confidence in; they are our friends, and neighbors and we mingle with them day by day, and their conduct inspires our respect and commands our confidence. We can see no reason why the companies or their stockholders and officers should be subjected to such unjust, unusual and arbitrary treatment, that puts them to great costs, deprives them of the control of their property and humiliates them before their fellow-citizens by prejudgment.

The property of said companies is in Texas and gives employment to numbers of our citizens, pays large taxes to our State and advances the interest of many people and the State, and we declare that it should receive fair treatment when brought to the bar of justice.

We are unalterably opposed to such unjust and reprehensible legal proceedings and we petition the Legislature of the State of Texas to prevent, by suitable legislation, the appointment of receivers without notice and the power to bring suits in remote and unusual places.

TEXAS ONIONS WILL SOON BEGIN TO MOVE.

San Antonio, Texas, March 27.—Under marketing plans worked out by the members of the Southern Texas Truck Growers' Association the Texas Bermuda onion crop for this year will soon begin to move and the prospects are for a most successful season.

The association will issue a daily bulletin to its members throughout the shipping season telling the number of cars sold, to whom sold and at what price. Car lot shipping will begin about the first of April with the bulk of the crop moving from April 15 to May 15.

Orange—At a recent get together meeting held in this city, by the Orange Commercial Club, 140 new members were added to the roster of this organization.

WICHITANS HAVE ENJOYABLE TRIP

ARRIVE HOME FROM MINERAL WELLS AT 4 O'CLOCK THIS MORNING

SISTER CITY HOSPITABLE

Entertains Crowd From This City and 1200 Others In Excellent Style —New Road Opened

Tired but good natured and conscious of a thoroughly enjoyable day, some 250 Wichitans disentrained at the Union Station at the ungodly hour of 4 o'clock this morning, home again from yesterday's excursion to Mineral Wells. The occasion was one of marked enjoyment and while everyone would have been just as well satisfied had the train gotten home four or five hours earlier, there were few complaints.

Mineral Wells did herself proud in the way of entertainment; when it is understood that the crowd from this city was about one-sixth of the city's entire number of visitors for the day, and that she fed and entertained them all, the task amy be realized.

The occasion for the gathering at the health resort was the completion of the branch of the Gulf, Texas & Western from Jacksboro to Salesville, giving Mineral Wells a new outlet to the northwest. Excursion trains from Jacksboro and Seymour preceded the Wichita Falls throng. The first train, arriving from Jacksboro, bore B. B. Cain of Dallas, vice president of the Gulf, Texas & Western, on its pilot, while in the engineer's cab, Mrs. Cain saw to it that the surplus steam went into the whistle.

Brass Band and Cannon.

A brass band and a crowd of about a thousand home folks greeted each train as it arrived, while cannon boomed their greeting to the visitors. A parade had been palnned, but delays in arrival of the trains prevented this feature being carried out altogether as planned, and the speaking program was also curtailed but no one minded it very much.

Committees from Mineral Wells met the Wichitans at Jacksboro and saw that all were supplied with dinner tickets. Previously, Secretary John Thomas had distributed badges and glass canes, while "katy-did" souvenirs presented by Manager Phillips of the Southwestern Telegraph & Telephone Company gave each excursionist the means of making noise.

The trip down was without incident. Slow time was made over the new track and there were times when the heavily loaded cars rocked like cradles but the crowd laughed and worried not at all. The spirit of fun was present in large chunks and the crowd made merry. Eugene Liepold, always the life of any gathering of which he is a member, kept the crowd in thorough good humor. He took charge of the news butch's stock in trade and also led the band when his services were needed. The band dispensed melody on the slightest provocation and sometimes with no provocation at all.

Dinner and Dancing.

Upon arriving at Mineral Wells, with the noisy greeting over, the Wichitans repaired to the various eating houses where their tickets were good. The two best places in the city had been secured for feeding the Wichitans and excellent dinners were provided for the hungry crowd, most of whom had eaten breakfast unusually early and were ready for anything edible.

After dinner there was the brief speaking program and then came dancing at the Elks club rooms and visits to the various wells. The Elks' dance was a delightful social feature and was greatly enjoyed by the younger set. The afternoon passed all too quickly and seven o'clock, the hour for departure, arrived soon enough. The Wichitans, headed by the band, marched down the streets of the city to their train.

There was a delay of over an hour in getting out, due to some trouble with an engine ahead of the excursion train, but about 8:30 the start was made. The band enlivened the passing moments with such appropriate selections as "Good Old Summer Time" and "All Night Long."

A Pullman had been attached to the train and all the berths were soon occupied, but a compartively small percent of the crowd could be given accommodation there and apparently there were not many who thought sleep was appropriate. The train made fairly good time after it got started, but the new track prevented arrival before 4 o'clock, when the lights of home shone out and looked mighty good.

Not enough can be said in praise of the citizens of Mineral Wells for their entertainment. They seemed to take the weather, which was cold and cheerless, as a personal affront and apologized for it as if it were their fault. For a city the size of Mineral Wells to handle from 1500 to 1800 visitors in one day in so thorough and pleasant manner was a performance that speaks much for the enterprise of the citizens of that health resort.

Mineral Wells will repay the visit early in April, coming up by way of Seymour and going back by way of Olney.

The fame of Wichita Falls had preceded the Wichitans to the health resort and many nice things were heard about this city. All things considered, the excursion was a complete success and those who went along feel that it was well worth while. There was an astonishingly large number of Wichitans who had never been to Mineral Wells before and these all promised to come again. Following is as complete a list of the excursionists as could be obtained:

THE KNOW HOW

To Feed Children and Get Results

There are more nervous persons made so by undigested food lying in the stomach than the average individual would suppose.

If food remains undigested in the stomach, it begins to ferment, set up gas and a large portion is thus converted into poison.

That's why* imperfectly digested food may, and often does, cause irritation of the nerves and stupor of the mind—brain and nerves are really poisoned.

"My daughter had complained for some time of a distressed feeling in the stomach, after eating, which seme thinking that her diet was not right," writes an anxious and intelligent mother.

"She had been fond of cereals, but had never tried Grape-Nuts. From reading the account of this predigested food, it seemed reasonable to try Grape-Nuts for her case.

"The results were really wonderful. The little brain that seemed a times unable to do its work, took on new life and vigor. Every morning now, before going to school, she eat the crisp little morsels and is now completely and entirely well, she seems to have a new lease on life—no more distress in the stomach, nor headache, but sound and well every way." "Winter Has Went."

And now has come the time of year
when poets rise and sing
Of the dainty wildwood blossom and the robin on the wing;
And every publication that wears
the printer's ink
Is giving to the public thoughts that some spring poets think;
But not one single word I read of good times they have spent
In the cheerful, lazy, frosty time of winter "that has went."

I, too, will sing the springtime with its blossoms sweet and rare,
And I'll chant its balmy breezes as
I up the carpet tear;
Oh, as I haul the furniture both up
the stair and down,
I'll chortle gaily that sweet spring
has reached our dear old town;
But as I move the heating stove with strength and courage spent
I will ponder on the calmness of the winter "that has went."

Make Your Cakes Taste Better

Your family eats griddle cakes for the syrup—not for the cakes themselves. True—isn't it? If you served cakes without syrup, you'd take them away untouched. Serve them with Velva instead of just syrup, and that family of yours will enjoy its breakfast more, eat heartier and be really satisfied. You can't find the equal of in the red can. It's the quality syrup of them all. Use it for candy, for cake, for fudge. Try it on waffles or biscuit. Pour some on a muffin, a popover, or on steamed hominy, and you'll have a morsel that will make your mouth water for more. Get Velva and try it. Ten cents up, according to size, for the clean, sanitary can. In green cans, too, at your grocer's, if you prefer.

Red Velva Kisses

1 cupful Red Velva Syrup, 1 cupful sugar, 2 tablespoonfuls butter, 1 teaspoonful vinegar, 1 teaspoonful vanilla extract.

Boil the syrup and sugar together until the mixture hardens when tested in cold water. Then add the butter, vanilla extract and the vinegar and boil for 2 minutes longer. Pour into a buttered pan or platter and pull when cool enough to handle. Pull into a long strip one inch thick and cut, with buttered scissors, in small kisses. Chopped nuts may be added if liked.

I want to get in touch with a few more lovers of good cheese who want something extra good in cream cheese. The cheese which I am now offering has an unusual delicacy of flavor, is particularly well ripened, is light in color and eats the best of any cheese of its kind I have seen for many a month. The price is 25c per pound, but that does not indicate how good it really is. You can't judge until you try and then you will be as enthusiastic as I am.

What We Believe

There are three things we believe in, so much so that we have made them our motto, Honesty, Quality and Service. We believe in a good many other things too, but we are strong for honesty if the other fellow owes us anything, while quality and service goes a long ways when we go to buy goods.

It's the quality that has given us success. Five years ago we opened a small plant here employing two men, today we have over a dozen employees with modern pneumatic tools with which to give the service required. Cemetery improvement is going on each day, we beautify a plot for some one by placing a memorial, they planting a flower in loving remembrance. It's all your fault, if the loved one is unremembered, as our pleased customers will tell you we can be trusted, to mark the sacred mound.

You intend to beautify your Cemetery plot, WHEN? Yesterday is gone, and tomorrow never comes. Our telephone is 440. We will get busy today if you say the word.

A great deal has been said of the Webb liquor law, passed in congress over President Taft's veto, but there are many who do not know its provisions, and for the benefit of its readers the Times reproduces the bill as it came from Congress, and which is now a law and out to be enforced, even if it is not:

"Be it enacted, etc., That the shipment or transportation in any manner or by any means whatsoever of any spirituous, vinous, malted, fermented, or other intoxicating liquor of any kind from one state, territory, or district of the United States, or place noncontiguous to but subject to the jurisdiction thereof, into any other state, territory, or district of the United States, or place noncontiguous to, but subject to the jurisdfction thereof, or from any foreign country into any state, territory, or district of the United tates, or place noncontiguous to, but subject to the jurisdiction thereof, which said spirituous, vinous, malted, fermented, or other intoxicating liquor is intended by any person interested therein to be received, possessed, sold or in any manner used either in the original package or otherwise in violation of any law of such state, territory, or district of the United tates, or place noncontiguous to but subject to the jurisdiction thereof, is hereby prohibited."

APPOINTING AMBASSADORS.

President Wilson is no doubt having trouble in finding suitable foreign ministers. For an American Ambassador is usually a man chosen to go abroad and spend $100,000 out of his own pocket in behalf of the people who hired him.

European courts expect the American to spend freely. They want him to maintain a courting parlor where impecunious noblemen can meet marketable heiresses under the proper chaperonage. To conciliate the higherups of foreign diplomacy the most expensive provision of wines, dinners, and flunkeys becmes necessary.

One great trouble with American diplomacy is that it is regarded as an incident in a man's career, rather than a permanency after the European manner.

Some more or less astonished American rises some morning to find himself appointed. He hustles down to Washington where he receives the intimate inside of delicate international negotiations. Being a believer in publicity, he lets it out before he gets to the steamship wharf. The result is much as when your young son proclaims at the evening party what you said about your neighbors at the breakfast table.

Some of the ministers live in palaces, furnished out of their own pocket. Others dependent upon the government salary, who were sent aboard on such minor considerations as experience in statecraft and knowledge of international policies, are housed much like the representative of a tail end Balkan power.

So it is not surprising that a noted statesman, being informed that the government wanted to make him ambassador, emphatically remarked, "No plush pants for me." Others are more yfeiding. They depart amid the unanimous acclaim of the American people, "Darn the expense and let George do it."—Paris Advocate.

TWO SIDES OF QUESTION

As usual, there are two sides to the Texas patronage question. The Thomas Campbell side is that Texas congressmen, not friendly to Wilson nor to the Wilson shouters, are discriminating against the dominant element of the party, and are handing out the rewards to those who fought the successful candidate and his policies. Mr. Campbell urges that the man who was faithful and who was responsible for the turn of the tide in the Wilson favor, should not be thus punished for that allegiance. The other side of the controversy, is that the congressmen indicated have accepted the verdict and are now as good democrats as anybody, and are helping along the Wilson and progressive movements. They claim the right to appoint whom they please, and they urge that if the democratic party is to make good, one element must not discriminte the other element. They urge that their favored appointees are just as good democrats as the 'originals.' The shrewd wisdom of the president is taxed to protect his real friends and at the same time hold the allegiance of those others who accepted the verdict and are now working shoulder to shoulder for triumph of democratic policeles.—Temple Telegram.

President Wilson, doubtless, will be able to figure cut a plan that should meet with approval of all Democrats. It is all right for the congressman to be consulted when appointments are to be made, and doubtless this will be done. If the congressmen are inclined to do the right thing and are sincere in their desire to keep down party rows, they will recommend for appointment to federal office in counties that were carried for Wilson, men who worked and helped to bring about such a result, and in counties that were carried for Clark, men who were known as Clark men, and who were not afraid to champion the cause of their favorite, and the same recognition should be given the friends of Harmon and Underwood. They are all good Democrats. No one who is fair could offer objection to such a plan of distributing the favors. In that way, each faction of the party would receive all the recognition of its serength as shown on the test at the presidential preferential primary would entitle it to.

The Examiner does not wish to be sensational or be placed in an embarrassing attitude by having its veracity questioned, but it becomes our duty to report that our cash drawer was robbed of $12.10 last Friday night. The party who did the work pryed open our front door. He must have been a wise guy not because he was an expert on lock manipulation, but because he was aware of the fact that the Examiner readers are paying up rapidly and, notwithstanding we are paying it out to our creditors about as fast as it comes in, it so happened we had $12.10 left over from a good day's work. We feel hurt because he did not leave us the 10 cents as a "nest-egg." In our twenty-seven years work in the newspaper business this is the first time we have been robbed. We believe that it is an experience that even Joe Taylor, the man who got "miffed" at the Dallas police, has never "enjoyed." Our latchstring was not disturbed. Come again—McKinney Examiner.

It might be that the Examiner's cash drawer was robbed, but it's going to convince the average newspaper to take more proof than the above mail that the amount was so large. The idea of a newspaper man having as much as $12.10 left over after a day's run. We're still registering from Missouri.

RISES FROM MILL HAND TO GOVERNOR

Lincoln, Neb., March —A native fund of energy and good sense, aided by a little good fortune, in thirty years have carried John Henry Morehead from a Nebraska sawmill to the governorship. He has been an opportunist, always seeking the main chance, a conciliator of factions, but a man of strong personality.

He rose successively through school teaching and an ascending grade of county political offices, until the ripples of a democratic inundatoin washed him to the state senate in 1910. He was the almost unanimous choice for president pro tem of that body; and when a few months later the lieutenant governor died, Morehead automaticaally took the vacant position.

He was so active as lieutenant governor that he won the Democratic nomination for governor last year over Richard Metcalf, the Bryan leader. At the election in November he defeated Governor Aldrich, the candidate of the republicans. Many Taft men supported Morehead in preference to Aldrich, who was regarded as the most violent progressive in the state.

Governor Morehead married in 1885. He has two children, both nearly grown up.

Truck Crops Not Far Enough Advanced To Be Injured—East Texas Crop Suffers

Practically all of the fruit crop in this vicinity was killed in last night's freeze according to reports today from those who have examined the buds. Some of the unopened buds do not appear to have been killed but most of the trees were in bloom and practically all of the fruit in bloom has been killed and much of that not opened also.

Dispatches this morning from Jacksonville and other East Texas fruit centers indicate that great damage has been done not only to fruit crops but to vegetables which in some places were well advanced in growth as well.

Damage has also been done to truck gardens here but generally garden crops were not far enough advanced here to be seriously affected by the freeze.

The temperature dropped as low as 23 above last night and this morning the ground was hard frozen and ice half an inch thick covered the pools from Tuesday night's rain.

EARLY CLOSING BILL IS PASSED

No More House Bills.

The House adopted a resolution that one more House bill shall be passed at this session. It concurred in Senate amendments to the bill authorizing the issuance of $2,000,000 penitentiary bonds to pay off the debt of the prison system, and adopted the free conference committee report on the bill authorizing cities to sell park properties to railroads and if heard a petition from A. & M. students opposing the consolidation with the University.

The Senate set Friday morning for consideration of the Burgess-Glasscock bill. The Senate finally adopted the resolution submitting a constitutional amendment to allow Confederate pensions to those coming to Texas since 1900. It adopted finally the Townsend resolution for an amendment to make the terms of prison commissioners six years each and to make them elective. It denied the request of the House for permission to take up the joint resolution for separation of the University and A. & M. College at once.

"THE PET OF THE PADDOCK" AT MAJESTIC TONIGHT.

William B. Friedlander has written a new masterpiece in tabloid musical comedy, for the express delight of Southerners who enjoy his work so immensely. He will introduce at the Majestic Theatre "The Pet of the Paddock" vaudeville's newest, most completely diversified and all star miniature musical comedy before the footlights today.

The show consists of seventeen people, including a wonderful chorus of eight, who wear the most beautiful costumes ever seen in a chorus outside of New York City. There are nine song numbers promised, all clever and enhanced by the singing and dancing of this clever chorus of much beauty and charm. There are many big new song hits and musical and dancing numbers form the greatest attraction of the show.

"The Pet of the Paddock" entails a story of the Race Course, and the simple environment of the rural district of Cherryville, Mass. The characters are typical of the surroundings and are reminiscent of the Old Homestead. Intermingled with the comedy and pathos of an interesting story is a merry jingle of music and lyrics, written and composed by Wm. B. Friedlander himself. The cast throughout is of exceptional merit, and the wonderful scenic appurtenances and gorgeous settings combine to make this the latest, greatest miniature musical comedy seen outside of New York City.

DYNAMITE DISCOVERER REPORTED TO HAVE CONFESSED

Denison, Texas, March 27.—Reports received by local officials of the Katy today say that the man who claimed to have found five sticks of dynamite on the Katy tracks at Urban Saturday evening, has confessed that he placed the explosive there himself.

Five sticks of dynamite with caps were found on a switch frog at Urban, a sidetrack north of the Dallas yards, just before the Katy flyer was due to pass. The train was flagged by Pate, who told the train crew that he had listened to two men talking near the switch and heard one man say: "We will place it on the frog and drive west."

After hearing the men, he claimed to have watched their movements and saw them tampering with the switch frog. After they left he went to the frog and said he found the explosive. The man and dynamite were taken in charge by the train crew and turned over to officers in Dallas. The man was held and it is said, confessed late Monday afternoon that he placed the dynamite on the track and flagged the train, thinking the railroad would reward him for the act.

JERSEYS YIELD OVER POUND OF BUTTER A DAY.

Falfurrias, Texas, March 27.—The high water mark for butter production for this section of the Southwest is believed to have been reached, when a local Jersey dairy reported a yield of 993 pounds of butter, from the butter fat furnished by 978 cows, making an average of more than a pound of butter for each cow milked. The dairy is turning out more than one thousand pounds of ... butter per day. In the herd being milked at the present time more than two hundred Jerseys are milked for the first time and probably an equal number which have been milked ... last autumn. The manager of the creamery is of the opinion that a great increase will soon be made in the output and it is probable that the record will be broken in the spring.

Every Phase of Human Activity to be Represented in Complete and Instructive Detail

San Francisco, Mar. 27.—The most wonderful and elaborate classification of exhibits ever made for any international exposition is that which has been prepared for the Panama-Pacific International Exposition to be held in San Francisco in 1915 to commemorate the opening of the Panama canal.

In the vast work of getting ready for a world's fair, perhaps no feature is of greater importance than the planning of the manner in which the exhibits shall be displayed, in order that their inspection shall prove of the greatest benefit to the visitor, no matter what his walk in life.

A modern universal exposition is an epitome of human achievement containing in logical relationship man's words and work. It constitutes a compendium for ready reference of the accomplishments of all peoples in all phases of their activities, both material and intellectual. It is a dictionary of human development.

Because of this development and because public opinion becomes more critical as the years go by, the task of creating a classification of exhibits becomes more and more difficult with each succeeding exposition. [illegible] has been eliminated as such, and the classes are distributed in those branches of human activity where they are used. The majority of electrical exhibits are classified under machinery and electricity is made a group in that department.

The exhibits which will be grouped in the transportation exhibits palace will be wonderfully arranged, according to Captain Baker's plans. As the exposition is to celebrate the opening of the Panama canal, a distinct maritime event, it is the intention to feature marine exhibits under the marine section of transportation exhibits. In the transportation palace will be shown the exhibits of all the great steamship companies; water transportation of all countries, navigation and commerce, characteristic boats of all nations, a complete exhibit of motor boats, their engines and motors, pleasure yachts, sail and steam yachts, which are generally shown by models, methods of water transportation, the great water industry of the great lakes, showing the transportation of ores, methods of unloading, models of the great battleships of the world, an historic exhibit of models of the ships of the early navigators of England, Holland, France and Spain, thereby making an international exhibit in all its forms.

A remarkable classification has been effected by Captain Baker in the department of social economy. Representation will be had of all phases of the important economic questions which agitate the world at the present day. Fifteen groups including 52 classes are found necessary in this department alone. Special attention has been given to the care of juvenile dependents and delinquents.

Fine Arts Exhibit.

The fine arts exhibits is another department in which the Panama-Pacific International Exposition is to outdo all previous world's fairs. Particular interest attaches to this exhibit because of the awakening in art which has manifested itself throughout the western hemisphere in the last decade. Finer paintings and more of them are owned in the United States today than at the time of the exposition at Chicago. [illegible]

BASEMEN [illegible] HIGH [illegible]

Bermuda, W. I., March 24.—Two of the greatest first basemen baseball has known are here competing for a position on the New York American league team. Hal Chase, in days of yore called the greatest first baseman the game ever saw, and Frank Chance, the "Peerless Leader" and present manager of the Yankees, are the two in question.

At present it looks very much as if Chance would hold down the job, at least when the season starts, for his legs, which went back on him and forced him to manage the Cubs from the bench most of last year, are acting most acceptably. He seems completely recovered from the old injury to his head. [illegible]

MANY TEACHERS GIVEN PENSIONS

ANNUAL REPORT OF THE CARNEGIE FOUNDATION IS MADE PUBLIC

SOME SHAM UNIVERSITIES

Educational Institutions of Doubtful Merit Discussed—Distribution of Steel King's Money

By Associated Press.

New York, Mar. 27.—The seventh annual report of the president and treasurer of the Carnegie Foundation, which has just appeared, covers the year ended September 30, 1912.

The endowment in the hands of the trustees at that time amounted to approximately $14,000,000 and the income for the year amounted to 0676,486 of which $634,497 was expended. From its first pension payment in June, 1906, to the end of the fiscal year September 30, 1912, the Foundation has distributed $2,077,814 in retiring allowances to professors and $238,590 in widows' pensions—a total of $2,316,404. In all 429 retiring allowances and 90 widows' pensions have been granted, of which 98 have terminated through death and 23 at the expiration of temporary grants, leaving 315 retiring allowances and 83 widows' pensions in force at the end of the year.

The report of the president, like the former reports, is divided into two parts—the first referring to the current business of the year and dealing with questions more directly pertaining to the administration of the Foundation; the second part being devoted to current educational problems of a larger and more general nature.

Pension For Teachers.

The first part of the report includes a careful statement of the whole question of pensions for teachers, for government employes, and for industrial employes. This statement contains the results of the examination of practically all of the pension systems now in operation anywhere and leads finally to a discussion of a feasible pension system for the public school teachers of a state. This discussion is particularly needful at this time, since the question of teachers' pensions is a matter under consideration by a number of state legislatures. As the report points out, the bills which have been introduced in the various legislatures almost without exception, violate fundamental actuarial conditions, and have been framed without study of the essential conditions which must be fulfilled by any adequate pension system. The material brought together in this report, the examples of the failures of pension systems which have occurred—as for example, that in New South Wales—and the precarious situation in which many state pension systems now stand, make this portion of the report one of great practical value to the authorities of any state contemplating pensions either for teachers or for state employes.

President Pritchett, in arguing finally for some form of contributory pension system for public school teachers, points out clearly the difficulties of the contributory system, the necessity for the most careful actuarial advice, and the public nature of the questions which are involved in a distribution of the cost of such a pension system between the state and the teacher.

Following the discussion of these pensions, a complete history of the methods by which the Carnegie Foundation pensions were arrived at is given; the process through which the trustees worked is told in the frankest manner; the difficulties which they encountered and the differences which arose out of the fact that the pensions of teh Carnegie Foundation are not contributory, but have come as the result of a free gift, are made clear. The literature on pensions now at the disposal of the Foundation is probably the most complete in the statement of such problems that has ever been brought together, and the discussion here made cannot fail to be of value to a college, a state, or an industrial association which is studying the pension problem; and the pension problem today is one of the insistent problems of modern social progress.

Fake Universities.

The second part of the report is devoted to such subjects as the matter of college entrance requirements, admission to advanced standing, a statement of medical progress, university and college financial reporting, advertising as a factor in education, education and politics, and finally, sham universities.

All of these subjects are discussed in the frank and specific manner which has hitherto been used in these reports. In recounting the extraordinary medical progress of the last five years attention is called to the connection which still exists in the United States between reputable colleges and unworthy medical schools. The lessons of the recent Bulletin on Medical Education in Europe are also brought clearly forward. During the last five years the mortality among unworthy medical schools has been most satisfactory. The number of such schools in the United States has been reduced by about one-third and the number of students attending them by about one-quarter, and this diminution has occurred in exactly the places where it ought to occur—namely, in the elimination of the unfit.

The section devoted to education and politics discusses not only the recent remarkable changes in the University of Oklahoma, the University of Kentucky, and the University of Montana, but also deals with two other tendencies in political life which are profoundly affecting education; first, with the rivalry which comes from competing state institutions and secondly with the practice inaugurated almost wholly within the last ten years in states where there are no state universities of subsidizing institutions that are under private control. In a number of states this process has gone on until it has enormously increased the number of privately controlled institutions which share in state appropriations. So marked has this tendency become that the question of state appropriation to education without state control is one which ought now to be frankly and squarely met.

Under sham universities the report deals with conditions such as hold, for example, in the District of Columbia, where commercial enterprises without endowment or facilities are chartered as educational institutions under the loosest conditions, which enable them to appeal to the credulity of ignorant students throughout this and other countries under high sounding names and under the shelter of charters granted by the general government. A bill now before Congress aims to correct this situation.

THE ATSEQUIES OF JOHN AND BUD

Their Tragic Fate at Lawton Mourned by Scores of Friends There

(Lawton News and Star.)

What a wasteful waste, 309 quart bottles of beer, 376 half pints, 1 gallon jug and 10 full cases of whiskey all poured into the sewer. At prevailing prices, retail $228.75 worth of brew and $272 worth of whiskey destroyed in an hour. In one hour, set in sixty diamond minutes, the awful deed was accomplished while surrounding hundreds knew not of the hour or the place and parched tongues clung to the roof of the mouth. $500 worth of unholy joy dedicated to the dark depths of an unappreciative sewer. Five hundred songs, five hundred toasts and five hundred headaches all went tumbling in one iron mouthed man hole, with water for a chaser. The date of the obsequies not having been announced, no mourners were present to drop scalding tears upon the cold, cold bier.

Johnny Barleycorn and Bud Weiser, who, but a few weeks ago, arrived in this city, via Rock Island, in the fullness of their strength and who were honored upon their arrival by being met by a delegation from the office of the county attorney and the sheriff, were quietly but effectively consigned to their last resting place in the sewer late Monday night. Their fate was tragic, although notice was given a week ago that hopes were slight for their remaining long in this vale of tears. Johnny and Bud have scores and scores of friends in this city who will sincerely mourn the manner of their passing. But the boys were game to the last breath and one of the pall bearers stated that he plainly heard them repeating at the last gasp, as their heads were being lowered into the dark channel of the sewer, "Goo! Goo! Goo!" He supposed they were trying to say good.

Sheriff Walter E. Nix and deputies Monday night destroyed one of the consignments recently secured at a local freight office. The booze and beer was poured out into the sewer. And the sewer wasn't dry.

CUPID STILL HAS A KNOCKOUT PUNCH; JUST SEE WHAT HE DID TO JOE RIVERS

Joe Riveers expects to win all his fights from now on and gain clear title to the lightweight championship which he has long been near. The reason is that he has added to his establishment that famous little pink god known as Dan Cupid, and a young woman formerly known as Miss Pauline Siert, but now as Mrs. Joe Rivers. Joe thinks that this pair will be mascots of sufficient potency to confound all opponents whom the may meet in the squared circle.

Joe acquired this augmented establishment in Los Angeles the other day. Justice J. W. Summerfield, an old friend of the bride's family, performed the ceremony. The bridesmaid was Miss Dorothy Levy, sister of Joe's manager, Joe Levy. That dignity was best man.

Rivers, Mrs. Rivers and Cupid at once set forth for San Diego, whence, by way of Salt Lake City, they departed for the east, where the newly-made husband is shortly to commence training for his coming bout with Leach Cross in New York.

Mrs. Rivers is the daughter of Henry Siert, a Santa Monica contractor. He is German and his wife is of an old Spanish family.

Importance of Bible Study

(An address by Woodrow Wilson)

I take it for granted that the significance of a Sunday school lies in this circumstance: that it is an attempt to carry along the religious education of the nation with the secular education of it. Almost all my life I have been engaged in educational work. I have always had the same conception of it from the beginning until now namely, that education is a fundamental part of progress, that you can't make progress unless you tie one generation in with another. Any disconnection between one generation and another will be a break, and may be a fatal break in the continuity of progress. You can't make progress in disconnected groups and, therefore, with each generation you have to take the younger people as they come on and supply them with those conditions of thought which have sustained the progress of the generations that have come before them. You have to see to it that the light that has been accumulated by scholars and sages and men of profound experience shall not be dissipated, because the next generation knows nothing of it.

There is a sense in which education may be said to be the memory of the race—recollecting its experiences, building upon the things that it has done, not forgetting its successes and always remembering its mistakes; throwing aside the things which have not borne the test of time and of thought and discovery and going on to those things which are more and more sanctioned from generation to generation by what is known and thought and discovered in the world. You know that one of the experiences of the Christian church has been that it from time to time has feared the effect of discovery and the effect of scientific thought—the effect of the thought based upon the mere phenomena of nature—upon the teachings derived from the Bible. It has turned out to be an idle fear, because there has never been any fundamental discrepancies between the teachings of the Bible, which is God's written word and the teachings of nature, which is God's cipher—which we make out more and more distinctly from generation to generation. Religious education is education in this very Word of God; not the Word of God written in nature, for that is the study of the schools on week days but the Word of God written in Holy Scriptures.

For my part, I am interested in Sunday school work only as a study of the Scriptures. The only significant book, the only book that can have any possible significance as a text book in the Sunday school is the Bible itself, and as we must train our children in the rest of the thought of the world, we must, if we are to make progress as a nation, ground each generation as it comes along in the established and tested moral judgments of the world. When you think what this is—what all men in all ages have been in search of—the search for what is right to do and right to think and right to feel is not a search confined to Christian nations. It began long before the Bible began to have the pervasive and general influence that it has in the modern world. The great thinkers of the old so-called heathen nations thought along these profound lines of human morality—of the things that made human life pure, effective and happy. I take it that what every man and woman in the world is in search of in the last analysis, is happiness, and that the trouble with the greater part of the world is the superficial view it takes of happiness. So many people waste so many years of their life in the pursuit of those things which they fancy will bring them only repining and disgust. The search of the world is for peace of mind, happiness of relationship, the joy of living and of sharing the life of others.

If you turn to the works of Dante, the great Italian writer, to that extraordinary book of his which he denominated "The Divine Comedy," you will find the same thing. There is one thing in Dante which is, perhaps, to be found nowhere else. One of Dante's books—one of the divisions of his great work—is entitled "The Inferno." In other words, it is entitled "Hell." It is a picture of the life of the damned, and the significant thing of that book is that Dante picks out characters living at the time that his book was written, and shows them already in hell, displaying, perhaps, for the first time in literature the significant fact that a man goes to hell of his own volition and of his own character, and gets there before he dies; that hell is the moral setting which he has made for his own life. It is the debauching and debasing of his own motives; it is the conscience that he lives and sleeps with, and he is tortured long before the day comes when he shall render his final account.

Is there no man present who can testify to that? Is there no man present who tosses uneasily on his bed at night because of the things that he remembers that he did in the day time? Is there no man here who works feverishly during the day in order that he may forget what he did yesterday? Is there no man here who resorts to strong drink in order to forget? Is there nobody here who knows the impulse of plunging into that stream of forgetfulness that the ancients called the Stream of Lethe? You know what Dante meant when he depicted those still living as already caught in the tortures of iniquity; and so all great serious literature has this first or last as its theme: What was man borne into the world for? What are the motives which will lift him along the highway? What are those that will drive him downward into the pit?

The beauty about the Bible is that it is the most wholesome, the most perfectly symmetrical, the least morbid picture of life and motives of men in the world. Almost every other book has a streak of morbidness in it, but this book is wholesome and sweet and natural and naif from cover to cover. Here are no dull moralizings; here is the life of man set forth as it was simply lived from generation to generation. I take it that the problem which you would all study for the Sunday school is the biographies and the histories of the Old Testament and of the New. I suppose that the Epistles of the New Testament are for the perusal of those who are mature, because in the Epistles is set forth, as it were, the philosophy of the whole thing, the thoughtful reflection based upon the providence of God and the revelation of His son. The Epistles constitute the theology of the Bible, and the rest of it constitutes the experience of mankind in contract with Divine Providence.

The reassuring thing about the Bible is that its biographies are not like any other biographies that you know of. Take up almost any biography outside of the Bible and the writer tries to make a hero of the man he is writing about. No writer in the Bible tries to make a hero out of mere human stuff. There isn't a character of the Bible—there isn't a character even amongst those who are picked out by the Bible itself, by the special representatives and ambassadors of God, whose life is not displayed as full of faults and shortcomings and natural slips from the way of virtue. It were a matter of despair to those of us who have come after, if the Bible had represented these persons as unimpeachable in character and unexceptional in their conduct, because of the theme of the Bible, so far as it is a biography, is the theme of the discovery of itself by the human soul, is the theme of the slow "come on" which each man and woman may gain for himself or herself under the guidance of the Spirit of God.

After all, we fight not with flesh and blood, but with unseen forces, most of which are within ourselves. The Bible says: "Let no man say he was tempted of God, for God tempteth no man." I am inclined to add: "Let no man say that he was tempted of the devil," for the devil never comes into a man's soul except by his permission and invitation.

How often does the Bible eulogize the man who masters his own passions? "Greater is he that ruleth himself that he that ruleth a city," and the foundation of the mastery of cities and states and of nations is the mastery of one's self. Just as soon as the man who tries to master human circumstances puts himself at the front of it, then the day of his defeat. In every circumstance of life, for the child as well as for him who is grown, in every day and in every turn of every day, the question is: "Shall we rule our own spirits?" and here, set forth in such simple terms that the child may understand it, in the annals of the Holy Scripture are written the histories of men of every kind, whose glory was that they did master their own spirits and through the whole thing lies what the Greek tragedies were never able to supply—the key, the thread to the labyrinth, the solution of the problem, the answer to the eternal question.

He alone can rule his own spirit who puts himself under the command of the Spirit of God, revealed in his Son, Jesus Christ, our Savior. He is the captain of our souls; he is the man whose suggestions and from whose life comes the light that guideth every man that ever came into the world. Ah, if we can make our Sunday schools the blazing center of that light, then indeed will the darkness of the world be dissipated. The happiness of seeing a great company of people gathered together in the interest of Sunday chool, is the happiness of knowing that there are they who seek light and who know that the lamp from which their spirits can be kindled is the lamp that glows in the Word of God.

Every Sunday chool should be a place where this great book is not only opened, is not only studied, is not only revered, but is drunk of as if it were a fountain of life, is used as if it were the only source of inspiration and of guidance. No great nation can ever survive its own temptations and its own follies that does not indoctrinate its children in the Word of God; so that as school master and as governor I know that my feet must rest with the feet of my fellowmen upon this foundation only; for the righteousness of nations, like the righteousness of men must take its source from these foundations of inspiration.

Henry Not In Guessing Mood.

New Orleans, La., March 26.—Congressman Robert L. Henry of Waco, Texas, was in New Orleans en route to the Ntaional capital.

"Congress is likely to do a lot of tariff tinkering at the special session, but no one can tell what the outcome will be," he remarked.

"I don't know what anybody is going to do, not even myself; of course, I am going to stand squarely on the Baltimore platform on the tariff issue. The best you can do now is to guess what Congress will do on sugar, rice and lumber, and I don't feel like guessing."

American Wives of Foreign Diplomats Are Numerous

The American home is making its influence felt in the world of diplomacy. Through the medium of the American wife of the foreign diplomat, the cheery grate fire, emblem of the national domesticity, is casting its ruddy glow over the policies of nations as far apart, geographically and governmentally, as France and Persia. Some of the more prominent of the foreign diplomats who have American wives are Ambassador Bakhmetieff, who represents Russia at Washington; Ambassador von Bernstorff, German representative at our national capital; Ambassador Jusserand of France; Senor de Riano, the Spanish government's representative in this country; M. Havenith, the Belgian minister to America; M Coromilas, the Greek minister of finance, and M. Zia, secretary of the Turkish embassy at Washington.

Washington, March 25.—The American home is making its influence felt in the world of diplomacy. Through the medium of the American wife of the foreign diplomat, the cheery grate fire, emblem of the national domesticity, is casting its ruddy glow over the policies of nations as far apart, geographically and governmentally, as France and Persia.

The ambassadors of three of the greatest nations represented at Washington have American wives, while ministers of lesser nations and minor diplomatic aids almost without number are similarly blessed. All these women have established homes more or less American in nature, and from them radiates an influence which can hardly be calculated.

American women playing a part in world affairs are Mme. Bakhmetieff, Mme. Jusser and the Countess von Bernstorff, wives respectively of the Russian, the French and the German ambassadors to the United States.

Mme. Bakhmetieff is perhaps one of the most heroic figures among the women in diplomacy. Before marriage Miss Mary Beale, a sister of the late Mrs. John R. McLean, she is a woman of splendid attainments, most accomplished and possessing a rare force of character.

Her excellent management brought about a cabinet crisis which resounded to the credit and advancement of her husband when in Sofia. Moreover, while in the Bulgarian capital tcting as president of the Russian committee of charity, formed for relieving the suffering of the Christian inhabitants of Marcedonia, she subjected herself to a tremendous ordeal. Dishers, who might bungle the work and misapply the funds, she herself took the moneys which had been subscribed to the society and personally distributed them among the wild and barbarous districts of the Turko-Frontier and, with the aid of the officials of the Russian Red Cross Society, even penetrated deep into Macedonia, bringing great relief to persecuted Christians.

Mme. Jusserand, wife of the French ambassador, was Miss Elsie Rishards, a daughter of George Richards, associate banker in Paris with Monroe. Although born in that city, she yet calls herself an American and asserts her pride in her Yankee blood. As have many other fashionable women of France, she took a normal school education and receiv from the city hall in Paris her certificate and degree. As far as her duties in social diplomacy will permit affairs and is a constant giver and leader in charities. With her husband she has been in America since 1903.

One of the most accomplished of the ambassadresses is the Countess von Bernstorff, wife of the German ambassador, and before her marriage Miss Jean Lukemeyer of New York.

The countess is eminently practical and capable. Since coming to Washington she has taken charge of her husband's large library, cataloguing it and paying close attention to publisher's lists and books of review for her aid in the purchase of additional volumes. Partly for this purpose and partly for her own information she spends much time in the Congressional library.

Because of her American birth and her long residence in London, when her husband served there, she is in great sympathy with the English band also possesses. She is especially familiar with social and economic questions which now puzzle America, not only through her reading, but through lectures, which she has assiduously attended.

Mere ministers almost without number have American wives.

There is the Castillian-looking American wife of the Spanish minister, Senor de Riano, a decided brunette, with black eyes and a lithe, small figure. Before her marriage in 1902 she was Miss Alice Ward of New York. Since their marriage the two have lived at European capitals, visiting this country annually until their present assignment to this legation.

The Belgian minister, M. Havenith, also has an American wife, before Washington and a prominent society woman.

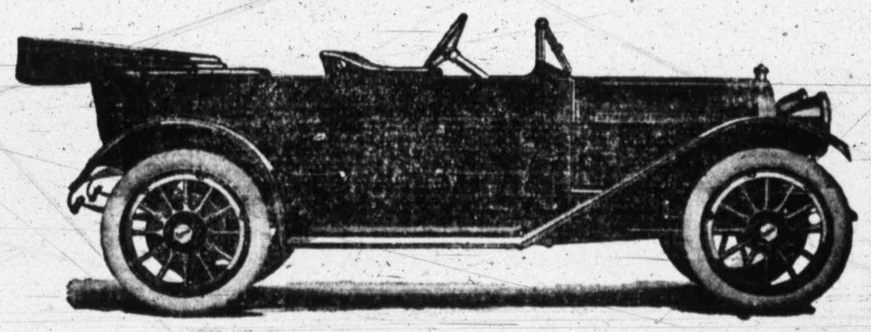

The legation of the Netherlands, as well, has its American hostess, in the attractive person of Mme. Loudon, wife of Jonkeer J. Loudon, the Dutch minister. She comes of the Eustis family of Louisiana, extremely prominent socially in the South. The Loudon family makes its summer home in Holland but winters in Washington where the embassy is noted for its excellent musical and literary entertainment.

One of the youngest diplomatic wives is Mme. Coromilas, wife of the Greek minister of finance, who still is accredited minister to the United States. She now is living in Athens, and is said to be remarkably popular riage, she was Anna Ewing Cockrell daughter of former Senator Cockrell of Missouri. She lived in Washington the greater part of her life, and was presented to society there after a finishing course in Paris.

For the first time since its establishment, the Turkish Embassy now has a hostess, and an American girl at that. She is Mme. Ibrahim Zia, wife of the secretary of the embassy. She is a member of the Carry family of New York, and possessed of extreme poise and dignity despite h evident youth. She speaks fluent French, German, Italian and Spa and is rapidly learning Turkish. M over, she is exceedingly well in ed on the questions of the d which she keeps tab by diligent

DIRECT SERVICE OVER NEW ROUTE

THROUGH TRAINS BETWEEN MINERAL WELLS AND THIS CITY PLANNED

MOTOR CAR IS PROBABLE

New and Prompt Service To Fort Worth and Dallas Now a Possibility

Through train service between Mineral Wells and Wichita Falls, with connections that will afford a convenient route to Fort Worth and Dallas is to be inauguarted at an early date, according to an announcement yesterday at Mineral Wells by B. B. Cain, president of the Gulf, Texas & Western.

Details of the service have not been completed, but Mr. Cain spoke of the matter in a way that indicated that he considered it an assured fact. The service would be by way of the Wichita Falls & Southern to Olney, then over the Gulf, Texas & Western into Mineral Wells, being the same route as that taken by the excursionists yesterday.

Just whether the service will be by train or motor car could not be learned. It is understood that if the Texas & Pacific will agree to operate through motor cars from Dallas by way of Fort Worth, Mineral Wells, Olney and Wichita Falls, the service will take that form.

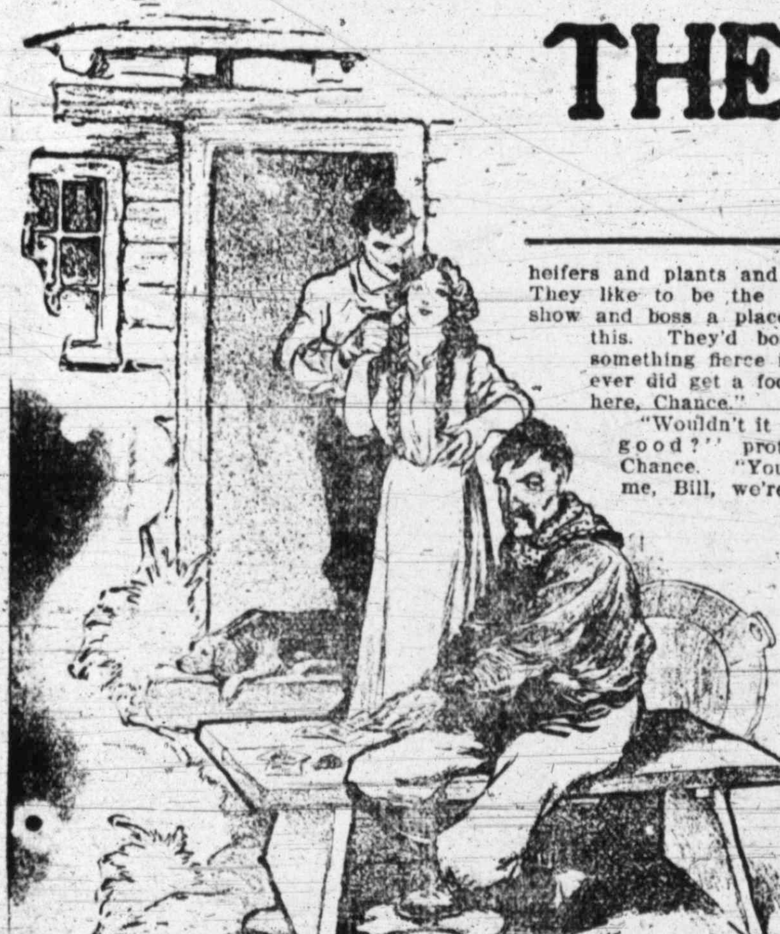

Patrons of the Wichita Falls & Southern are hopeful that a schedule will be arranged so that they will have double daily service to this city, and if the time card is made up that way, it will be possible for Wichitans to leave here in the morning, reach Fort Worth shortly afternoon and return by way of the Denver that night, without having to spend two nights away from home.

THE COURTING OF LUCKY CHANCE

By IZOLA FORRESTER

WHEN the call came to move south, Chance laid it to the prairie fires.

"Nowadays, the minute I see that yellow in the air, and the grass crackles up crisp and ready under Siwash's tootsies, why, I don't stop to do any plowing or back-firing. Siwash and me get the call of the south quick, and we take the trail toward Yankton."

"Going to stop off at old man Nawn's place, as per usual?" inquired Bill mildly.

"Sure," said Chance.

"Going to bring a missus back with yer?" Still the tone was gentle.

Chance laughed and rubbed his fingers up through his thick, curly hair dubiously.

"She wouldn't like it 'way out here, would she, Bill? Even you and me find it lonely. I guess a woman would die."

"Nope." One of the brown puppies rolled nonchalantly over into the pan of milk, and Bill fished him out carefully and rolled him on the ground in tender, motherly fashion, to dry him off. "Women don't mind being lonesome if they've got the man they love best and a few chickens to look heifers and plants and kids. They like to be the whole show and boss a place like this. They'd boss us something fierce if one ever did get a foothold here, Chance."

"Wouldn't it do us good?" protested Chance. "You and me, Bill, we're getting too set in our ways. We're getting like a couple of half-petrified polliwogs down under the creek bed. We're getting so plumb set that we don't care what we turn into in the next thousand years, if they'll only let us alone. I'm going to ride south to-morrow, and I'm going to stop off at old man Nawn's place and say 'howdy.'"

It was a challenge to further argument, but Bill took it not up. He knew the spring was against him, as well as the memory of Madelaine's tanned, dimpled face, with its quick smile and big, soft, dark eyes. So the next morning at daybreak Chance rode south, rode with his head held high to greet the dawn-light over his shoulder, and his hat brim turned low with a jaunty twist, as befitting a wooing cavalier.

Every spring, for six years back, he had taken the same route. It had constituted his spring run, after the long, slow, snowbound winter back up in the foothills where the prairie breaks against their base like long, rolling waves.

Through the winter he and his partner would live quietly in the litle rough shack that hugged the shelter of the shelving butte behind it. When a big storm was in the air, they would ride out with the dogs and drive the herds down into the gullies. It was the only exciting thing that ever happened from November to April.

But when it was over, the winter in Chance's veins and he took the southern trail for relaxation.

He was whistling softly as he rode this time. It was getting on toward sunset before he checked Siwash and rested to take his bearings. They were on the crest of a creek bed. It was one of those meandering, dried-up affairs, with tangled masses of mud-caked grasses down in the bottoms and a few scrawny young cottonwoods here and there along the slopes. The bleached, weather-beaten skull of a steer lay half buried in the sun-baked earth midway down the slope; but it was not a mere skull that caused Siwash to droop his long neck and whinny restlessly.

"Not meaning to argue with you, Si," said Chance, "but I don't see a blame thing suspicious on this horizon."

The horse nosed at the long, dry grass tops; and suddenly Chance looked down, not at the creek bed, but at the deep, tangled mass of weeds where the land dipped to the slope, and he swung off the pony's back with a sharp exclamation. It was the body of a man.

"Si, you're the most sagacious and perspicacious animal on four legs in the State of South Dakota."

He turned the body over and looked at the face. The eyes opened widely and stared back at him, dully at first, then with slow-gathering consciousness in their listless, filmed depths.

"Hallo, Chance," whispered the parched, blackened lips. "Hallo, Lucky Chance. Give me a drink."

Chance drew the bottle from his hip pocket and put it to the dry lips. The man drank thirstily. Chance laid him back on the dusty, yellow grass and sat on his heels, his square chin tilted inquiringly forward.

"Where's Leroux?" he asked. "Heard you and he had swung into partnership since he got thrown out of the reservation, Pete. Heard he and you were making quite a bit of money out of land speculation. Indian mortgages ain't much value when Uncle Sammy uses pen and ink, are they, Pete?"

The half-breed closed his eyes obstinately, his lips shut in a curious half moon of bitterness. Chance watched him closely. Pete Frozen Nose he was called—outcast from his own people, and from the whites also, because of crooked deals carried on in Indian mortgages. Not by his own wit, however. Chance knew he had been merely the outward symbol of the business intricacies of Leroux, one-time Indian agent, and now a stroller from station to station among the hill camps and prairie ranches, getting money wherever it grew easy.

For over three years the two had carried on their trade in their own the reservation Indians, the name of Leroux had been enough to lend confidence to any deal the half-breed proposed, until miles of the best land lay under paper bearing the Leroux stamp.

And from out the far east of red-taped officialdom had swung the thunderbolt. After years of bickering and dallying, the reservation was to be opened up that fall. The Indians had moved northward to good, arable, guaranteed land, homeseekers had crowded in down at Dallas, and, as a side issue, totally unimportant, two light-fingered gentlemen partners had found themselves and their projects squelched.

"It's too bad, Pete, it sure is," said Chance soothingly. "Who gave you this one?"

Hatred showed in Pete's eyes.

"Leroux," he muttered. "He not want me to tell Madelaine Nawn."

"Tell what?" demanded Chance. The half-breed shivered, and his head dropped lower on his chest. The sun was half an hour above the line of the earth and sky. Before that time the soul of Pete Frozen Nose would have slipped out past the sky limits. Chance pulled him up on his arm and gave him another drink. He didn't want the soul to slip out before he had all the news.

"Did he try to kill you, Pete?" he asked, bracing the half-breed's head against his own shoulder and knee.

Siwash whinnied anxiously, lifting his nose to the wind.

"He shoot about the girl and the land," began the half-breed slowly. "She draw big land last fall—big Indian land down at Dallas."

"I know," interrupted Chance impatiently. "At the land drawing. Go on, quick."

"Me an' Leroux hold Indian mortgage on that land. Last week Leroux finds ore there, some silver, some gold. Then he go down an' get old man Nawn, and they play cards, and Leroux gets back the land."

"But it's the girl's land," broke in Chance.

"Sure." Pete's lips formed the words stiffly. "Girl rode down with old man Nawn to buy stuff. Come in where Leroux's making the old man give up, and stirs up big row. Then they chase Leroux an' me out of town, and Leroux says wait for the two out here."

"Wait out here?" Chance lifted up his head and stared dully around at the wide expanse of "out here," miles upon miles of bleak, silent land, with no living soul as far as the eye could see. "What for?"

"To kill old man Nawn. Then we talk about Madelaine; and I say I take Madelaine, and Leroux shoot me like one yellow dog."

Chance bent over the form that suddenly grew heavier as he held it. "Which way, Pete, which way?" he cried, shaking the half-breed almost savagely to force him to speak again. And Pete lifted one hand slightly, with a queer, unsteady motion southeast, but he made no answer. Power of speech had left him.

Chance waited a while, staring blankly out at the wide, darkening land with half-shut eyes. When the last sunset glow broke hazily through the still, yellow haze in long, widening lines of dull red, he mounted Siwash and rode southeast, leaving a defunct half-breed in the dry, mud-caked grasses of the creek bed.

Miles to the southwest lay what had been the reservation land, covered now with the mushroom growth of tents and shacks of the fall homeseekers. Miles north and east stretched the prairie, a great dry sea of tawny, heat-scorched grass; and every time Siwash lifted his nose and sniffed the air, it meant a fresh whiff of fire on the wind.

Chance lifted his hat and rode fast, as fast as he dared with Siwash's dread of a stray badger hole. He knew enough of old man Nawn's weakness and Leroux's far-sighted guile to guess the missing parts in the half-breed's narrative. Leroux held an Indian mortgage on the land drawn by Madelaine Nawn. While it didn't amount to the paper it was written on in the eyes of the law, still he had made old Nawn believe the claim was a just one.

Steadily the scrawny, long-limbed pony pushed ahead, his nose pointing out aggressively toward the point his rider aimed at. Just ahead lay old man Nawn's home, a meager dot somewhere out under the waste of the darkening blue sky on the solitary prairie. To Chance that night it was like a sheep shelter and he herder, hurrying to save it from wolves.

"Home," he muttered. "As if any spot on the face of God's earth could be a home just because it was ground with your own particular tag on it. Si, a few hours back I was homesick. I wanted some doggone little hole in the ground for a home; wanted plants at the windows, and a real clothes-line out back, with women's aprons and general dingbats hanging on it, maybe kids' dingbats, too. And in the middle of the dream, Si, was a little girl-woman, understand. Name of Madelaine."

He pursed up his lips into a whistle. He had almost forgotten that stark, dead body back in the tangled dry grasses of the creek bed.

"Little bit of a girl-woman, Siwash, with brown eyes and curly hair good deal the color of this here prairie needs us now. Si; she sure needs us bad."

There was no moon in the sky. A strange, nebulous glow seemed to overhang the prairie since the night had come on. It was hard to take in a deep, full breath. And suddenly Siwash came to a dead stop, head up, ears pricked forward, listening.

From somewhere out of the darkness ahead there came the troubled whinny of a horse.

Chance, peering keenly ahead, could see nothing; but the noise came again.

The land was not level. It lay in long, deep rolls; and Siwash made straight for the nearest dip of land. Behind it, at first sight, reposed a peaceful and unsuspecting camp. A couple of ponies were picketed in the shelter of the slope. A buckboard, with boxes of provisions protruding from its buffalo robes, stood by. Under it reposed old man Nawn, sound asleep. But, standing, facing each other, were Jim Leroux and Madelaine.

The sound of their voices came clearly on the silence of the night.

"It don't make no difference what you say," Madelaine was saying, her head back like a fighting little wildcat. "I know all about you, Jim Leroux. You can't talk your way round me the way you do with daddy. The land belongs to me. I drew it. Daddy never even knew I was putting in a bid for it. It was my idea and mother's. You can't have it. We've lived ever since I can remember in that old shack, and first it wasn't even a shack. It was just a dugout. And daddy ain't got a mite of ambition. He'd just as soon we all died there. But we ain't a-going to. We're going to have that land of mine—do you hear me?—and we're going to have a real house on it, a cottage-house like mother used to live in back East. And we're going to be real town folks. I know all about you, Jim Leroux." Her voice rose higher.

Chance listened, the muscles of his throat tightening, his hands clenched on Siwash's bridle as he waited.

"You've followed daddy and me out here all the way from town. I ain't afraid of you, do you hear? You can't do a thing to us."

"Can't I?" Leroux threw back his head and laughed.

He was in no hurry. The turn things had taken amused him. He sat down on the buckboard's shaft and looked at the girl. It seemed almost a pity to do what he meant to, and leave the two of them at the mercy of the fire that was certain to come. Perhaps there'd be a chance of saving out the girl if she'd behave herself, if she wouldn't tell on him, if she'd get tamed down and give up the land without a holler.

and before she was aware of his intent he had deliberately shot the two ponies dead.

At Madelaine's scream old man Nawn stumbled heavily out from under the buckboard; but, before Leroux could shoot again, there came a noise that checked his move, the steady, hard thud of horse's hoofs, and, even louder still, a low, queer roar and the soft, quick wind that comes before a prairie fire.

"It's got us!" yelled old Nawn, as he raised both hands helplessly skyward Leroux rose. His own horse stood safe, and he hesitated, looking at Madelaine. And even as he lingered, there whizzed out over his head the circling line of Chance Haines' lariat, thrown neatly and with precision, until it threw him flat on the earth, roped as surely and safely as any steer.

"It wasn't that I meant for him to die outright," Chance was fond of explaining. "But there wasn't no time for fine calculations. Here was two dead horses. Here was a prairie fire a-sweeping down on us like kingdom come, at short range. Here was old Pa Nawn, and over there was my own little girl. How was I to stop and take notice of Jim Leroux against such odds? All I had time to do was to put him out of business. And I sure did. Then pop took his horse, and I swung the little girl up close to me, and we were off. That's all, ain't it, Madelaine, honey dear?"

Madelaine said nothing. As "missus" of the ranch, besides a real house in the making, she fed the brown puppies and let Chance do the talking.

"It sure must have dawned on Jim pretty sudden that he'd landed in the right place when the fire caught him," said Bill as he sorted out flower seed envelopes on the wash bench outside the kitchen door.

"God help him, anyway," whispered Madelaine, with a shudder, and she leaned her head back on Chance's shoulder. "Let's have morning glories all over the porch, Chance. And double hollyhocks, pink ones with deep-red hearts, Chance."

"Sure," laughed Chance, kissing her upturned lips. "You can hang Bill and me up for ornaments, if you want to, honey girl. 'Cause why? 'Cause it's going to be home. And you won't be lonesome, will you, with just old Bill and me and the dogs?" He gazed at her tenderly.

"Lonesome?" she repeated, her big eyes wide and reproachful. "Lonesome, Chance, where you are?"

Bill looked up thoughtfully at the blue sky and winked with an understanding heart. The other two [illegible]

NEW HONEYMOON HAVEN

IN LILY TIME

WHAT glories once belonged as of right to Niagara Falls, to Atlantic City, to Washington, as havens for honeymooners are fast passing away—if, indeed, they have not passed into the limbo of things that were. Bermuda has the call with the changing order of things, and toward the fortunate isles in the summer seas sets an ever increasing tide of newlyweds.

What arbiter of national customs brought about this innovation no one can say. Neither can any one determine with certitude why the lapels of dress coats are faced with silk one year and with satin or velvet five years to ten years later, nor why a generation of men ordinarily sane and conservative calmly consent to have their shoes burdened with hummocks above the toes with room for an extra foot. But the change has come about, speedily after it was once under way, and Bermuda welcomes the brides and grooms with a smile and arms filled with roses and lilies as they trip down the gangplank.

Recognized Everywhere.

Nor do the blushing and self-conscious youngsters have to wait until their arrival at the islands for recognition of the newly acquired responsibilities they try so hard to conceal. No amount of amateur subterfuge short of physical violence on the part of the bridegroom can escape the lynx-like observation of the seasoned traveler, who is always on the steamship in company with the cynical bachelor of uncertain years. Together these tyrants scan passenger list and passengers, scrutinize deck chair tete-a-tetes and observe dining saloon deportment with such practiced eyes that before the first evening at sea is half spent they have winnowed out the honeymooners from the hundreds of passengers, checked them off relentlessly and passed the word to their smiling confederates.

Thereafter there is no escape for the love birds in such time worn attempts as studied indifference and the neglect of each other's presence, which they assume to mark married life years beyond the halcyon stage of the honeymoon. The seasoned traveler cannot be deceived by any such artifice, nor can the cynical bachelor be deluded into the belief that the bride has no rice in her hair and that the groom's pocket is not filled with white ribbons hastily plucked from their hand baggage after it reached the pier. And in the end their only escape from the smiles and nods that greet and follow them about the ship is an admission, perhaps the least bit defiant, that they are just starting out hand in hand and that they are very, very happy.

Possibly it is because honeymooning amid snowbanks and sleetstorms, icy railroad journeys and arctic winds is a bit trying even on the most angelic tempers that the Bermuda honeymoon trip has become so popular, since its joys and conveniences became more widely known. No bride could be anything but ecstatically happy where roses and oleanders are blooming for her along the highways under the hot December sunshine; no bridegroom, but must revel in his lot when he has surf bathing all winter, fishing at his very door in lazy southern breezes like those of midsummer, and miles of shaded drives and walks, where there are only two people in all the sunlit summer world by the sea.

It requires only a short stay in Bermuda to find out why newlyweds describe with ecstasy the charms of the islands seven hundred miles out in the Atlantic in almost a straight line from New York. The Gulf stream baffles all attempts of the cold blasts from the north to chill the floral grandeur of this island paradise. In all seasons the air there is scented with the perfume of flowers, and lowering skies are seldom seen. The thermometer seldom indicates a lower temperature than 60 degrees in the winter or more than 80 degrees in the summer.

Never Any Dust.

To the person going to Bermuda for the first time the impression is immediately conveyed that everything there is different. As the white tops of the coral dwellings become visible from the deck of the steamship the first thought is that the vessel is approaching an island where nothing except marble is used in construction. Then comes the sharp contrast between the snowy white and the myriad colors in the waters about the island. First the waters appear a wondrous green, then blue, then sapphire, then delicate pink, until the bewildered and delighted tourist believes he is looking upon the reflection of a gorgeous rainbow.

But the door of this wonderland is just opening. Once on shore and seated in an easy riding four-wheeled vehicle, hired at a very low rate, the traveler has opportunity to examine and study the wonderful coral roads. There is never any dust. Automobiles and street cars are unknown, and they are unnecessary. Rapid transit has no place in this bower of loveliness and rest.

Famed for its fields of lilies, Bermuda has many other beautiful flowers. There blooms the oleander in prodigal profusion, and the bibiscus. Great palm trees of all varieties line the roads and bananas are seen on all sides. There, too, grow the pawpaw, the prickly pear, the famous Bermuda onion the night-blooming cereus and the queer little green rose.

If the land gives forth delights, the sea is not behind in its offerings. There is an aquarium containing many queer specimens, not the least interesting of which is the octopus. But the real treat of the sea is made possible by trips in glass bottom boats to the sunken gardens.

Then there are the crystal caves far underground, and the Devil's Hole. In the latter place a queer man, who resembles the fiction pictured creatures of Mars, talks to huge and tiny fish and makes them all do his bidding.

The so-called crystal caves are called craters of volcanoes. The tremendous number of stalactites and stalagmites present an awe inspiring spectacle.

BROUGHT IN HUMAN ELEMENT

Young Man's Explanation Rather Detracted From the Former Pathos of Story He Had Told.

Standing on the rear platform of a crowded car the other evening, a young fellow from Nottingham felt a hand stealing into the pocket of his waistcoat. He raised a loud howl, and a "dip" was arrested. And the young man had to appear against him in police court the following morning.

"Was it an expensive watch?" asked the counsel for the defense.

"I don't know," explained the prosecuting witness. "It was a gift from my mother"—and he paused to wipe a tear away. "It was an heirloom, even when she got it. I don't know whether it was expensive or not, but it was worth more than money to me. It was so precious that I seldom carry it in my pocket."

"Why did you carry it on this particular day?"

"Do I have to answer that question?"

The court decided that he did.

"Well, I had been in a little game, the night before, and I was going to pawn it. And this thief swiped it when I was within a block of the pawnshop!"

The human element comes into these criminal cases so often!—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

The Excuse.

The break in the price of eggs following the demonstrations of the Housewives' league in Philadelphia and Chicago was being discussed at the Colony club in New York.

"The dealers declare that the housewives' demonstration had nothing to do with the break," said Miss Elizabeth Marbury. "They declare that the ten-month storage law caused it. But this law, I fear, is only their excuse. This law is like little Bobby.

"Little Bobby was the only son of the Baptist minister in Peacham, and when the circus came to town the Methodist minister called and said to his confrere:

"'My dear friend, I have long had a curiosity to see a circus; but I have hesitated lest, you know, I cause my brother to offend. There is no harm, however, in a child's presence at a circus, provided he be suitably escorted. Will you, therefore, lend me little Bobby for this evening's performance?"

"'No, sir; I will not! I have patiently waited six years for little Bobby to get big enough to visit the circus, and tonight I propose to use him myself.'"

Boy Just Missed Fortune.

"To find a record-breaking pearl, sell it for $500, and then learn of its sale in New York for $9,000, is enough to make a man lose heart," says John Risley, a farmer boy, who picked up a 68-grain pearl in White river, near Peel, Ariz., late last summer. Risley sold his prize to a pearl buyer from Cotter, who later disposed of it for $1,000. It was last sold in New York city, where a wealthy young woman is said to have paid $9,000 for it. The Risley pearl is 1⅞ inches in circumference, and is perfect in shape and luster.

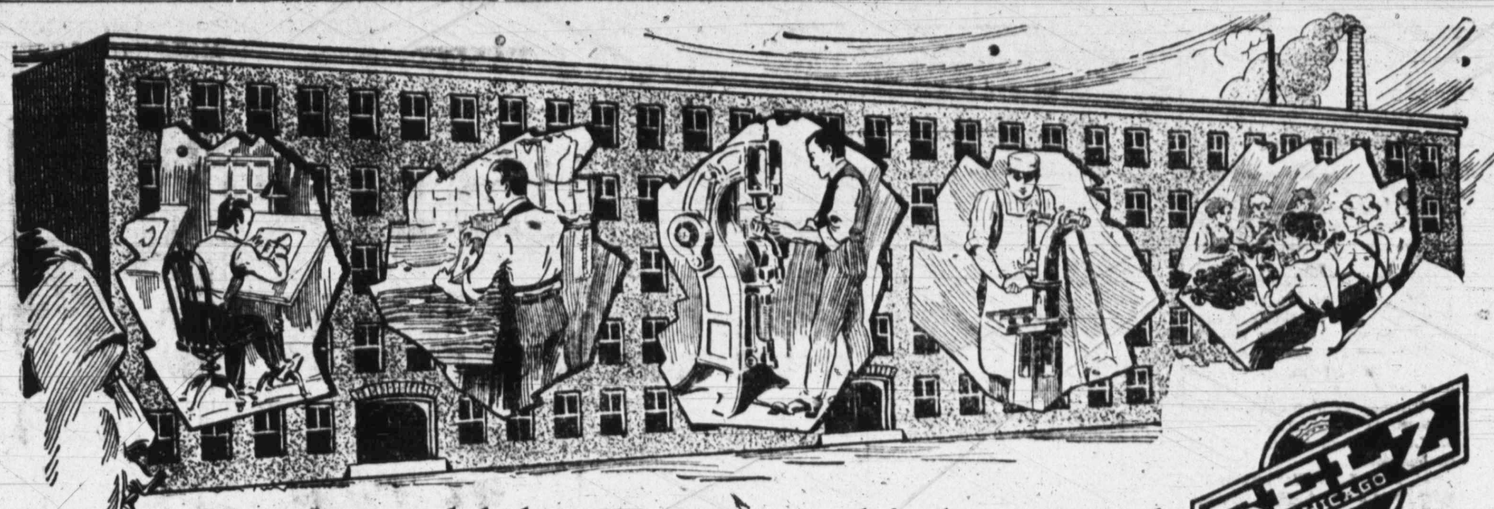

Literal.

"Is that your wife's picture in your watch?"

"Sure. She's the woman in the case."

MRS. SMOCK'S FATHER DIED AT INDEPENDENCE.

The following is taken from Tuesday's Independence (Kansas) Journal:

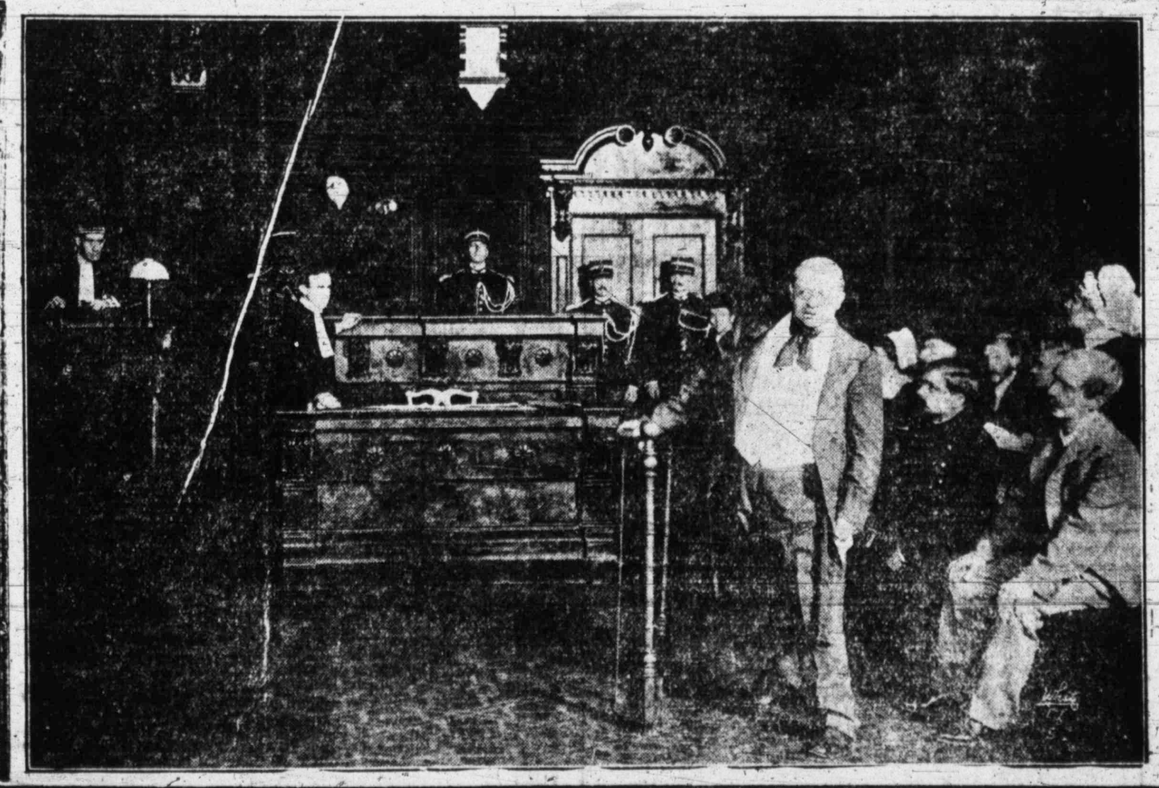

John A. Woodyard, father of Mrs. Tom Smock, died Monday night at the home of his daughter, 1521 Spruce street. He apparently was in his usual health Monday and retired about 9:30 o'clock. Members of the household heard him once during the night. When they arose at 6 o'clock Tuesday morning, they found him dead. A physician summoned said that he had passed away without a struggle. Paralysis was the cause. He suffered the first stroke four years ago.

Mrs. Smock is at Wichita Falls, Texas, with her husband, who is overseeing the erection of the Ball Bros., fruit jar factory there. Mr. and Mrs. Smock will arrive here Wernesday morning. Until their arrival the funeral arrangements will not be completed, but the plan now is to hold a shotr service at the home between 4 and 5 o'clock Wednesday afternoon, then ship the body to Centerton, Indiana for interment.

Mr. Woodyard was a widower and had lived here with his daughter for four years. He was about 70 years old. Another daughter, Mrs. Jim Laughlin, lives at Brooklyn, Indiana.

BURLESON PUZZLED OVER LAW'S INTERPRETATION.

Washington, March 27.—An interpretation of law, which if sustained, would take away from the express companies of the country, all their business in packages weighing less than eleven pounds is puzzling Postmaster General Burleson and the legal sharps of the postoffice department. Some interpreters of the parcel post law, construing that statute in connection with the postal clause of the constitution, maintain that it has the effect of giving the government an absolute monopoly of the handling of parcels within the limit of size set by the law.

Under the constitution and the accumulated statutes and the action of the courts, it is unlawful for any private individual or concern to compete with the government in the handling of mail matter, that function being particularly reserved as a monopoly for the government. This law, those who have raised the question in the department, claim automatically covers all of the activities of the postoffice deaprtment and therefore would cover the parcel post service.

The assistant attorney general for the postoffice department has prepared an opinion which it is said holds that the law does not give the government a monopoly on the handling of packages.

Postmaster General Burleson is going over the matter carefully and is inclined to act with caution. It is probable that he will refer the question to Attorney General McReynolds for an exhaustive investigation of the law and that the opinion will be laid before President Wilson for his views.

HELPS GIRLS WHO SEEK HIGHER WAGE

Mrs. Sarah Conboy.

Five thousand employes, mostly young girls in the silk throwing mills of the Lackawanna valley in Pennsylvania, are closer to higher wages as a result of a conference between a committee of the Pennsylvania Silk association and the representatives of the Central Labor Union, headed by Mrs. Sarah Conboy.

It is expected that at a future conference a uniform wage scale will be adopted, providing for an increase of wages of from ten to fourteen per cent.

Scranton, Pa., March 26.—Five thousand employees, mostly young girls in the silk-throwing mills of the Lackawanna valley, are closer to higher wages as a result of a sonference between a committee of the Pennsylvanit Silk Association and the representativees of the Central Labor Union, headed by Mrs. Sarah Conboy.

It is expected that at a future conference an understanding will be reached that will bring the following three results:

Prevention of strikes.

A uniform wage scalee.

A permanent board of arbitration.

The adoption of the proposed uniform wage scale, it is lgured, would give the employes an increase of from 10 to 14 per cent.

Pennsylvanit operates about 49 per cent. of the spindles in the country. In Lackawanna county there are about 200,000 spindles, with a capacity of 60,000 pounds a week. The investment in the silk industry in this city alone is about $3,000,000, and, in the caunty neaarly $6,000,000.

JURY OF TWELVE WOMEN AGREED IN THIRTY MINUTES

Spokane, Wash., March 27.—It required twelve women composing the first exclusively feminine jury in a Spokane county court today only thirty minutes to reach a verdict in a case entrusted to them.

The women sat for two days in the case of R. T. Lawrence vs. W. B. Cowne, involving a transfer of real estate and personal property. Lawrence alleged that he had not received all the horses and equipment specified in a sale contract. The women returned a verdict giving him $1,175 the amount he asked.

In his instructions Judge H. L. Kennan outlined the duties of the jury, addressing them as "ladies of the jury." He told them that if ten of them could agree upon a verdict the decision would be final, as they were trying a vicil suit. When the women brought in their verdict they received the commendation and cingratulations of Judge Kennan, who said the jury had demonstrated to be false the theory that women could not agree on anything.
