Jury declares Candy innocent

McKINNEY (AP) — A four-month legal nightmare ended for Candace Montgomery when a jury found her innocent of murder, but her attorney says the summer afternoon she killed a friend with 41 blows from a three-foot ax will haunt her forever.

The 30-year-old suburban housewife was acquitted of murder Wednesday after she confessed she hacked her former lover's wife to death in self defense.

The sandy-haired, bespectacled defendant began trembling when the verdict was read at 4:40 p.m., but stared straight ahead, her hands clenched in her lap.

Ushered quickly from the courthouse, Mrs. Montgomery and her husband, Pat, avoided news reporters and photographers. They soon will move to Atlanta from this North Central Texas city, where residents have talked of little but the grisly killing since Mrs. Gore's mutilated body was discovered June 13.

The innocent verdict, returned by a nine-woman, three-man jury that deliberated just over three hours, climaxed a sensational trial marked by dramatic testimony and legal maneuvering.

Each day, residents of surrounding towns lined up outside the courtroom to get a ringside seat for the show that beat anything on daytime television. The spectators' reaction to the verdict was mixed.

But lead defense attorney Don Crowder, whose antics resulted in two contempt citations from State District Judge Tom Ryan, said he was, "Very pleased. Very pleased."

Asked what convinced the jury to find his client innocent, Crowder said, "If I knew that, I would be a millionaire."

The dapper young attorney shocked a packed courtroom during jury selection by announcing his client had killed Mrs. Gore, but was fighting for her own life at the time.

District Attorney Tom O'Connell said while prosecutors were not surprised by the self-defense angle, "what we didn't know ... was just what the specifics of the self-defense theory would be."

O'Connell declined to comment on the verdict itself, saying, "We do our job, and they do their job."

Jurors and family members also refused to comment on the trial's outcome.

Crowder based his self-defense case on Mrs. Montgomery's brutally detailed account of her visit to Mrs. Gore's Wylie home on Friday, June 13.

She said the former schoolteacher struck her twice with the ax after confronting her about a 10-month affair she had with Allan Gore.

The petite defendant said she tried to escape three times during a frantic struggle on in the utility room of the Gore's Wylie home. Mrs. Montgomery said she finally wrested the ax from Mrs. Gore and hit her on the head.

Mrs. Gore fell to the blood-slickened floor, but the sobbing defendant told jurors she could not stop herself from slamming the ax into the woman who sang with her in a church choir.

A medical examiner said the victim had been struck in the head 28 times — the blows collapsing her right eye into a sinus cavity and splitting her skull down to the brain tissue at least once.

Psychiatrists testified Mrs. Montgomery was reacting on an instinctive level and that her rage could have stemmed from a 26-year-old incident the defendant could remember only under hypnosis.

Mrs. Montgomery testified Mrs. Gore told her, "Shhhh," when she screamed for her life. Dr. Fred Fason of Houston said the defendant also was hushed by her mother as she was being treated for a head cut and that the word association and sight of blood could have triggered the same anger against Mrs. Gore.

Although friends who attended a Bible school teachers' luncheon with Mrs. Montgomery shortly after the slaying said she appeared normal, psychiatrists said a "disassociative reaction" to the brutality allowed her to appear composed and even to shower off blood in a bathroom at the Gore's home.

Mrs. Montgomery still displays some symptoms of the reaction, in which she lost touch with reality, they said.

Cabinet member speaks here

By LANA CUNNINGHAM
Staff Writer

The Democratic ticket of President Carter and Walter Mondale was ahead in three out of four national polls before the head-to-head debate Tuesday night between Carter and Republican challenger Ronald Reagan, claimed one of Carter's cabinet members Wednesday.

Moon Landrieu, secretary of the Department of Housing and Urban Development, hopped into the Permian Basin for a news conference at Midland Regional Airport, a public reception in the Midland Hilton and a public rally in Odessa. He will be traveling non-stop until Tuesday to push for the re-election of Carter.

The President came out on top in the debate, Landrieu said, with Carter displaying his grasp of the office. "Our momentum is up," while the Republicans are beginning to drop.

The debate demonstrated that while "Gov. Reagan professes to have some answers, they are of a simplistic nature." In his dealings with city governments, both large and small, simple answers have never been realistic, Landrieu explained.

The cabinet member defended his department concerning statements made by Reagan during the debate that an urban program in the South Bronx area of New York City has never gotten off the ground.

"It's not true that nothing has been done," replied Landrieu, formerly mayor of New Orleans, La., until moving into his current job in September 1979. "One would have to look at the magnitude of the problem there" and realize major gains couldn't be made in three years.

"This administration didn't create poverty or poor housing," he added.

The South Bronx has deep needs, and it's not the only area in the U.S. in that situation.

Lashing out at Reagan's proposals to cut out some assistance programs, Landrieu charged the Republican "is insensitive to the poor in this country."

The Democrats traditionally have been the party for the poor and minorities, he said, and criticized Reagan's comment during the debate that as a child he didn't realize there was a racial problem.

Landrieu concentrated on his department's specialty — housing — and expressed his doubts about what Reagan has in mind for towns in need of housing. He pointed to Odessa, saying it has received $18 million in the past three years for subsidizing rents and building new housing for "those who can't afford to supply the basic needs for themselves."

Federal assistance to cities is one reason why "virtually every mayor in this country is supporting Carter," claimed Landrieu. "He's (Carter) been sensitive to local governments. What this president has done is target $25 billion more federal money into urban development."

During Carter's administration, he added, about 1 million more housing units have been added to the cities.

Midland City Council recently voted to apply for Community Development funds, with the Section 8 rental subsidy program attached. But in the past the council has refused to apply on the basis of too many government strings.

Landrieu claimed there is a reason for those government ties to the money. "We're not going to let you discriminate against women, blacks, browns or handicapped in locating that housing or in the use of those CD funds." And he expects those government strings won't be cut in the future.

"We don't intend to violate the constitutional law," he added.

Asked about the possibility of federal housing projects turning into slums, Landrieu denied it. "Look at where these people are coming from," he answered, referring to slum housing.

And rental assistance is a lifesaver for some people, in his opinion. He cited the example of an elderly woman on a fixed income whose rent goes beyond what she can pay. Under normal circumstances, she would be evicted, he said.

But with rental assistance, the woman can remain in her rented residence and the landlord will be re-

Gulf announces new building plans

Gulf Oil Corp. announced plans Wednesday for the construction of a major office building in Midland.

Jerry McAfee of Pittsburgh, Pa., chairman of the board and chief executive officer of the corporation, made the announcement at a reception for Gulf officials in the Petroleum Club of Midland. The event was hosted by the Midland Wildcat Committee.

McAfee said the 200,000-square-foot building will be headquarters for the Western Division of Gulf Oil Exploration and Production Co.

The building will be constructed on a 13-acre tract in Claydesta Plaza near Midland Air Park. The south border of the tract runs along Wadley Avenue.

McAfee said the Houston firm of Caudill Rowlett Scott is designing the new facility.

Noting that Gulf was the first major oil company to establish permanent offices in Midland in 1926, McAfee said "the decision to build this new headquarters complex reflects Gulf's commitment to increased exploration for and producton of oil and natural gas in the Permian Basin and Southwest Texas."

The building, which will make maximum use of low energy consumption techniques, will cost approximately $16 million.

McAfee said the building, in order to follow the building code in the site area, would be no taller than six floors.

McAfee was one of several Gulf officials from Pittsburgh and Houston who were honored at the reception by the Midland Wildcat Committee.

From Gulf Oil Exploration and Producton in Houston were M. J. Hill, president, and J. L. Huitt, senior vice president — U.S.

Also representing Gulf Oil Exploration and Producton was E. M. "Morty" Miller of Midland, vice president — Western Division.

Tower, Chiles to promote GOP ticket here Saturday

Midland voters will get one final shove toward the Republican ticket before the election on Tuesday when U.S. Sen. John Tower of Texas and Eddie (I'm Mad Too) Chiles of Fort Worth stop in the Permian Basin this weekend.

The special Round-Up team organized by Gov. Bill Clements will arrive in Midland shortly before midnight Friday.

Saturday events will begin with a 7 a.m. free breakfast for Midland volunteers in the Holiday Inn Country Villa on West Highway 80.

Former Midland mayor Ernest Angelo Jr. will serve as master of ceremonies. At 8:10 a.m. the Reagan Round-Up team will hold a news conference in the motel. After that, the team will go to Odessa campaign headquarters where a news conference will be held.

While at the headquarters, Tower and Chiles will make some telephone calls to local voters to persuade them to vote the Republican ticket.

The team will go to Permian Mall for a 10:20 a.m. rally. They are scheduled to leave from Chaparral Aviation at Midland Regional Airport at 11:20 a.m. for El Paso.

Joining Tower and Chiles will be the senator's wife, Lilla, former Republican state chairman Ray Hutchison, and Kay Bailey Hutchison, former vice chairman of the National Transportation Board.

The Tower-Chiles team is one of three scheduled to cover the state in a 32-hour Red, White and Blue campaign blitz that starts early Friday. The other Round-Up teams consist of Ambassador Anne Armstrong, Gov. Clements, former governor John Connally, George W. and Laura Bush of Midland, Jeb and Columba Bush and Democratic State Sen. Bill Meier of Fort Worth.

Mrs. Armstrong is heading up the South Texas swing while Clements leads the Northeast Texas tour.

Tower and Chiles will stop in about 10 West Texas cities, starting with a news conference in Dallas at 10 a.m. Friday. Stops will include Denton, Wichita Falls, Amarillo, Plainview, Lubbock, Abilene, El Paso, Midland, Odessa and possibly San Angelo.

Baskin, Floyd seek judge's post

EDITOR'S NOTE: This is one in a series of stories taking a close look at the local races and candidates in the Nov. 4 general election.

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

Two Midland lawyers who say they seek justice, would endeavor to quash crime, follow the law and cut the backlog of civil and criminal cases are campaigning for the 142nd State District judgeship held since 1954 by retiring Judge Perry D. Pickett.

"I don't care who is in the courtroom," said 37-year-old Republican contender Jay H. "Timber" Floyd. "If you've got the law and facts, that's all that I'm concerned with."

"You've got to be fair," said his opponent, Democratic candidate Pat Baskin, 53. "He (the judge) has got to split it down the middle. He can't go by the rule of thumb."

Both are seeking the $50,000-a-year job which generally pays less than established lawyers net yearly in fees.

Four years ago, oilman-rancher Floyd sought to displace Pickett in the 1976 general election but lost by 14,747 to 10,705 votes.

election 80

THIS CAMPAIGN between Baskin, who is in an established downtown law firm, and Floyd, who practices solo across from the courthouse, is carrying a higher profile.

Floyd suggested that Baskin was encouraged to run for the judgeship by fellow influential lawyers.

"There's nothing more partisan than getting somebody appointed and paying off old debts," said Floyd, who suggests he's not playing mere politics.

Baskin asserted that he will not pay homage or favoritism to attorney friends or be controlled by an outside group.

Baskin is a former Midland Municipal judge, past president of the Midland County Bar and a former city councilman and mayor pro-tem who has practiced trial here since the early 1950s. His opponent entered law practice two decades later.

Floyd, too, indicated that he would not be unduly influenced by fellow members of the bar.

"I'LL DO A GOOD JOB in that office," he said. "You've got to have a lot of energy and be in good physical and mental shape to do that.

"It doesn't matter to me which attorney it is," Floyd said. "It's cut and dried to me if the law and facts are there, and that's how I'm going to rule.

"The court has and can be operated six days a week, and I don't mind that," Floyd said. "I'm running to do the job, not because I want the position."

Baskin allowed that most established lawyers and firms in town are backing him monetarily or with good will or both.

Such backing didn't seem to faze Floyd.

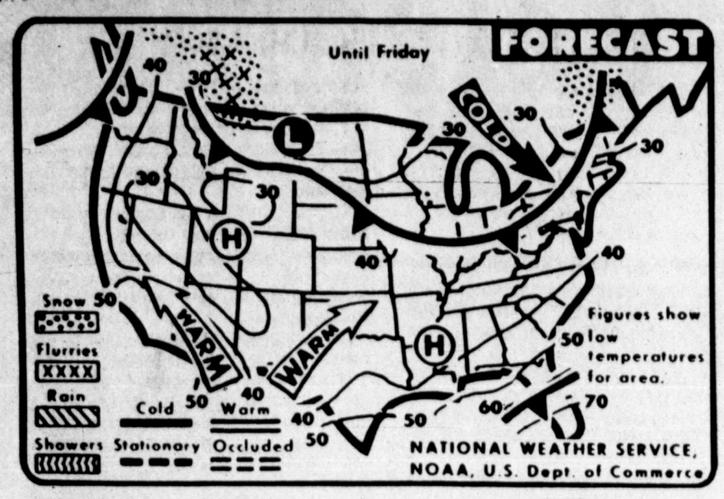

"A lot of independent guys are supporting me," said Floyd, a graduate of South Texas College of Law. "Those big and impressive firms (be-

Hostage debate boycotted

By The Associated Press

Amid stormy scenes at the Parliament building, many Iranian deputies boycotted public debate on the American hostages today, leaving the 228-seat legislature short of its 179-member quorum and forcing postponement of the session until Sunday.

Sixty-six deputies defied appeals by Tehran radio and Iran's chief Judge Sadegh Khalkali that they attend today — many of them protesting any action on release of the captives before the U.S. presidential elections Nov. 4.

Khalkhali, the stern Islamic judge who has sent scores of convicted criminals before firing squads and is known as a hardliner on the hostage issue, stormed to the rostrum, screaming and waving his white turban over his head, and pleaded for a quorum so debate could begin.

The deputies in attendance shouted that debate should be held even without a quorum, a Danish radio correspondent reported from the scene.

Saying he was "no friend of the United States or Jimmy Carter," Khalkhali said that regardless of the effect of the hostage issue on the presidential election, it was a problem the assembly was obliged to tackle, the reporter said.

Dozens of boycotting deputies milled outside. They sent a message into the hall saying a debate would only "help the cause of the United States, and especially Jimmy Carter," the reporter said.

A source close to the debate said the boycotters wanted to stay clear of the U.S. election to avoid any appearance of collusion with the Carter administration over release of the hostages, in their 362nd day of captivity today.

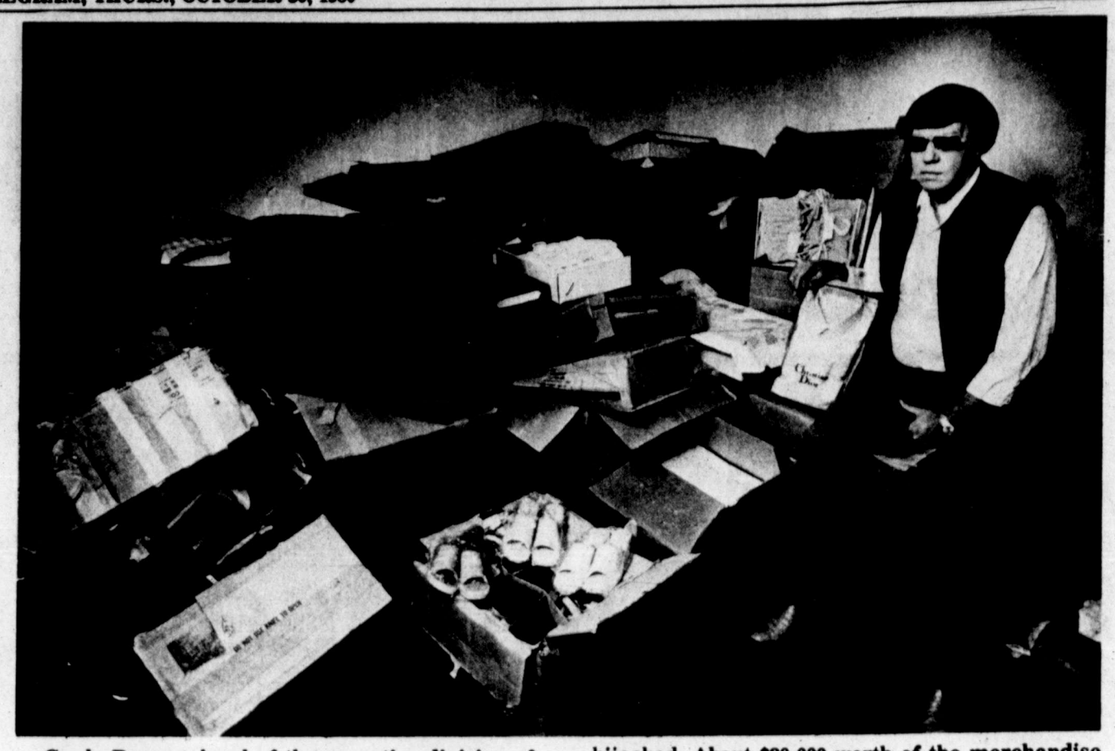

The protest by hardline deputies was joined by a second smaller faction which opposes releasing the Americans on general principle. Some deputies have called for spy trials for the hostages.

He lashed out at the Western news media and again claimed the United States was involved in the Iran-Iraq war. "At the very moment when we were due to discuss the special commission's report on the hostages the defenseless people of Dezful were smothered in blood and dust by ground-to-ground missiles," he said, referring to last week's Iraqi rocketing of the army garrison town.

"America has received many blows and will not calm down easily, and its provocations against this nation will always continue," he said. "I declare that the hostage issue has nothing to do with the Iran-Iraq war and the Americans should bear in mind that such last ditch actions and in terference in the destiny of this nation will not remain unanswered."

Pars, Iran's official news agency, confirmed the session was cancelled and said the discussion of the findings of the special committee is scheduled for 8:00 a.m. Sunday."

Midland police have recovered an estimated $20,000 in merchandise from a $103,000 load hijacked near Houston in May.

Included in the recovered property are boxes and cases of socks, children's clothes, perfumes and colognes, syrup and honey dispensers, toothbrush holders and soap dishes, shower curtains, shoes, lingerie, pajamas and men and women's clothing.

Chief Wayne Gideon said some expensive jewelry and china were in the original hijacked load, but were not part of the property found by Midland officers.

In May, a truckload of items was en route to Joske's Department Store in San Antonio from the East Coast. The truck broke down near Houston.

Gayle Reeves, head of the Midland Police Department narcotics division, said the truck driver unhooked the trailer and pulled into a garage for repairs. Two days later he returned for the truck, but the trailer was gone.

Someone had apparently hooked on to the trailer and driven off with it. About 10 days later, the empty and abandoned trailer was found near Llano, in south central Texas.

The load was valued at $103,000 by Joske's when the stolen merchandise was reported to the insurance company.

According to Reeves, Midland officers began picking up tidbits of information in June that the stolen merchandise was hidden in a storage unit in Midland.

"The story we were getting," Reeves said, "was that one or two individuals had bought all of this for $10,000, and they were in the process of trying to find a buyer for it. They were wanting to sell the whole thing."

Midland officers contacted Joske's and obtained an inventory list. Meanwhile, police continued to receive tips the merchandise was here.

"We knew who these people were that had the stuff, but didn't know where it was stored," Reeves said.

"So we watched, we looked and we waited. Friday we got information as to exactly where it was located. So again we went through a waiting and watching period for someone to come to the storage locker. But they never showed up."

No one showed up because in the meantime the man they were waiting for had died.

On Monday, Police Chief Wayne Gideon said police obtained a search warrant, searched the locker, found and confiscated the merchandise.

"We don't know," said Reeves, "if all of it actually got to Midland or whether it was doled out. But we got what's left."

No charges will be filed since the suspect is dead.

"We went for the recovery on this one," added Reeves.

Cowboys stumping for Reagan

UNIVERSITY PARK, Texas (AP) — Cowboys from Tinsel Town and America's Team stumped for Ronald Reagan as the GOP hopeful wrapped up his last scheduled Texas campaign swing before the Nov. 4 election.

Reagan made his third stop of the day Wednesday in this posh Dallas bedroom community and was greeted by about 8,000 cheering GOP faithful who packed Southern Methodist University's Moody Coliseum to hear Reagan renew his attack on Jimmy Carter's term in office.

"Jimmy Carter has demonstrated his inability to lead our nation," Reagan told the partisan crowd of conservatives, who often interrupted his 55-minute speech with chants, whistles and cheers.

Before his appearance here, Reagan taped several television interviews and told WFAA-TV in Dallas that he supports federal aid for Texas schools ordered to provide a free education to the children of illegal aliens.

Reagan and his wife Nancy were about 20 minutes late to the rally, entering the ribbon-draped arena under a banner that said, "There's Never Been Any Debate — Reagan Is The Winner."

As Reagan waded through the audience after being introduced by Gov. Bill Clements, he paused to shake hands and flash a tired but happy smile. A collection of stars, athletes and state and local GOP candidates joined the applause from the stage.

Roy Rogers and Dale Evans, who joined Reagan earlier in the day in Houston and Fort Worth, drew a standing ovation as they told the audience to elect Reagan because he is "pro-life, pro-God and a fabulous American."

Keep secrets secret and save money

WASHINGTON (AP) — Every year the government makes millions of its old secrets public. But a congressional agency wants to keep most of those documents secret — to save money.

The General Accounting Office says $11 million a year is paid government employees whose job is reviewing the documents and declassifying those they feel can be made public without harming the government.

Ninety percent of papers that now are declassified are of no interest to historians or the public, the GAO estimated.

At issue are 617 million pages of papers, 20 to 30 years old, dealing with state secrets of war, peace, diplomacy, arms control, espionage, trade negotiations and other national security matters.

The practice of systematically reviewing the documents as they become 20 years old started in 1978 under a directive issued by President Carter.

The GAO, in a report Wednesday, proposed changing the directive so that only papers considered to be of public interest would be reviewed for declassification.

The agency said "page by page review" of documents is "costly and time-consuming."

He called it "drastic," "insupportable," "one-dimensional" and "illogical."

"Systematic review establishes the principle that an open society cannot tolerate the permanent or indefinite closure of historically valuable records," Garfinkel said in a memo.

"Moreover, by establishing a finite period of restriction, systematic review helps to offset the perception held by many of a security classification system abused by government officials intent on hiding their mistakes behind the cloak of secrecy."

Involved are papers accumulated by the FBI, the CIA, the Arms Control and Disarmament Agency, the U.S. Information Agency, and the departments of State, Justice, Commerce and Defense and many agencies that no longer exist.

Absentee votes reach 5,300 total

More than 5,300 absentee ballots had been cast in person and by mail for Tuesday's general election in the Midland County Courthouse by 5 p.m. Wednesday.

Absentee balloting will end at 5 p.m. Friday in the County Clerk's office.

Through Wednesday, 3,704 had voted in person and 1,615 had voted by mail to bring the total to 5,319.

With two more days to go in absentee balloting, the 1968 record of 5,375 absentee votes will be easily broken, according to County Clerk Rosenelle Cherry.

The 1968 presidential campaign pitted Democrat Hubert Humphrey against Republican Richard M. Nixon, who won. That year, 23,529 Midlanders cast ballots in the election.

In the 1972 presidential race, 4,748 cast absentee ballots in a race which drew 24,290. That race pitted Democrat George McGovern against incumbent Richard Nixon.

The 1976 presidential race attracted 27,369 Midlanders to the polls. Of those, 4,418 were absentee ballots. In that campaign Democrat Jimmy Carter faced incumbent Republican President Gerald Ford.

Going into the 1980 general election, 44,102 people in Midland County are registered to vote.

Baskin, Floyd seek judge's position

hind Baskin) — that doesn't impress me a bit.

"Most lawyers in town don't practice law, (though) they're in legal work," Floyd contended.

Baskin, a University of Texas graduate who has practiced law for 27 years, said he finds judicial work challenging.

"It is very interesting work. To characterize it as 'fun' makes it sound shallow. It's fascinating work. It's difficult to do well," said the Democrat.

BASKIN SAID there currently are "no major innovations" at issue in judiciary in Midland. The issue is who could be the more competent person to fill the judgeship and who could fairly dispose of the backlog of cases.

"I feel confident that the backlog can and will be caught up," Baskin said. But it will take much work to whittle on the civil and criminal dockets.

"It's a pretty big backlog," maintained Floyd, who said that most civil suits eventually are "settled out of court."

"My contention," Floyd said, "is when you're filing a lawsuit, you ought to be prepared to go to trial."

And Floyd said that he "had a hard time" making his living practicing law here "because I couldn't move cases" due to the supposed slowness of the court until another district court, the 238th Judicial District, was established here in 1977 and lightened Judge Pickett's workload.

"They can be very messy and confusing," Baskin said of civil cases, "because they're not standardized, and it's not unusual to have 125 special issues" on a single civil case.

As for criminal cases, they, too, are challenging, Baskin said.

"It's a mess," he allowed. "I think possibly some tightening might be appropriate. There darn sure aren't any simple answers to law enforcement."

Baskin said the crime and punishment phase of the judiciary definitely needs improving.

"THAT REALLY IS the frustrating thing: We really haven't reached the point where we have a good rehabilitation, (but) one has to be harder on so-called hardened criminals."

A good and fair judge has to know the law and how to research law and prior rulings and, as Baskin pointed out, how to "split it down the middle" and without bias and prejudice toward the plaintiff and defense.

"All the judge has got to do is to hold to defense, and he never gets reversed (by the appellate courts)," Baskin said. "(But) that's not giving the prosecution and the people of Texas a fair shot."

Baskin, a student of constitutional law, expressed concern about the future of justice in America and the U.S. Constitution.

"I'm concerned, apprehensively, that someday our high courts will have pretty much eroded our constitution away" through broad interpretations. No longer does 'north' mean 'north' — it means northerly.

Far more than his opponent, Baskin said, his background and experience qualified him for the judgeship.

A JUDGE SHOULD have a "high level of experience and background" to pass down just and fair decisions and ruling, said Baskin, who contends that he is most qualified for the job.

Floyd, too, said that he is qualified.

"There's a lot of work to be done there (in court), and I can handle it. I've got the health and the energy to do the job correctly."

Floyd suggested that his Democratic opponent wants the judgeship as a retirement plan.

"I do not want to retire under the judgeship," Floyd said. "I want to work for the people of Midland."

Said Baskin: "I would expect I'd be there (on the bench) quite some time."

quired to keep it in shape.

If Reagan gets into office, Landrieu warned that the Republican would cut these housing programs. Under a Republican administration in 1974, the cabinet member recalled that the administration "closed down the public housing programs and began to dismantle them."

The Republican's charges that a "lot of fat" could be cut out of all the departments only prove to be a simple solution that is "totally unrealistic. We might be able to find some areas in our budget" that could be cut, he conceded. But those cuts mean there wouldn't "be enough resources to meet the immediate needs of the poor in this country."

United Way has 65 percent of goal

The United Way of Midland Wednesday achieved 65 percent of this year's $1,150,000 goal, with a total of $748,279.88 in pledges reported at a noon meeting of volunteers.

Pledges returned to the United Way office indicate that giving has increased this year, Don Evans, campaign chairman, said. But results from many Midland firms have not yet been reported.

Campaign voluneers reporting significant results in their divisions or section were Jack Steele, advance gifts; Bill Mewhorter, finance and services; Bill Thomas, manufacturing; Clarence Cardwell, major oil; and Joe Kloesel, industry and commerce division.

Evans urged all campaign volunteers to complete their contacts and report the results to the United Way as soon as possible. He also encouraged any individual who has not been contacted and would like to conribute to call the United Way office.

The next volunteer report will be at noon Nov. 5 at Midland Center. An objective of 85 percent of goal has been set for the meeting.

One penitentiary escapee still at large, officials say

LOVELADY, Texas (AP) — One of two convicts who escaped from the state penitentiary was captured but the other was still at large today.

Randall Lewis Nyman, 28, serving three life sentences for killing two Bexar County deputies seven years ago, was still being hunted.

Arthur Lee Coble, of Lea County, N.M., was captured shortly after midnight Wednesday as he walked through a wooded area near Lovelady.

The pair escaped from the Texas Department of Corrections Tuesday night by scaling a fence at the Eastham Unit, according to TDC spokesman Keith Wall.

Coble was serving a murder sentence from Harris County, and Nyman was convicted of the May 30, 1973 slayings of deputy sheriff Vincent L. "Jerry" Walker and Reserve Deputy Joshua Rodriguez near San Antonio.

The two officers were gunned down after stopping a van to investigate a possible burglary near suburban Leon Valley. Walker radioed the vehicle's license number before leaving the patrol car.

One week after Walker's death, his father, Dr. H. Vincent Walker, made a dramatic appearance before a legislative committee in Austin and testified in behalf of re-instating the Texas death penalty, which had been ruled unconstitutional by the U.S. Supreme Court.

Trick-or-treaters, drivers urged to be cautious

By KAY CRITES
Staff Writer

Police Chief Wayne Gideon is urging trick-or-treaters and their parents to be particularly careful Friday night, due to expected heavy traffic resulting from the Lee-Permian football game and Halloween activities, such as carnivals and trick-or-treating.

To help make the night a little safer, Parkview Hospital is offering to X-ray all Halloween candy from 7:30 to 9 p.m. The X-ray will show any hidden solid objects, particularly metal ones such as pins, needles or razor blades.

The hospital is located at 3201 Sage St., just south of Wadley Avenue and east of Lamesa Road.

All available police officers, including many who were off-duty, have been called in to provide coverage for all events, but Gideon still recommends following some simple guidelines for Halloween night.

"Children should dress properly — white preferably or multi-colors. No dark colors, particulary black," Gideon said.

"Any trick-or-treat goodies should not be eaten at all until the parent or guardian closely examines them.

"Never enter a house, even if invited. Wait outside.

"Do not trick-or-treat by yourself. Stay in groups when calling on homes.

"Stay away from children who are older than you unless they are in your group.

"Stay away from homes which are not well lighted with porch lights and lights inside.

"Always walk, not run. Stay on the sidewalks and out of the street.

"By all means be alert," Gideon added. "Watch for cars and other traffic. We recommend at least one adult member of the family accompany children while they are out trick-or-treating, and that children trick-or-treat only in their own neighborhoods.

"We feel like traffic is going to be particularly heavy this weekend and we would urge the utmost caution to motorists as well as children. We find that children who are caught up in the excitement of Halloween tend not to pay attention to the dark streets," the police chief said.

Dear Fellow Taxpayer,

My wife, Lyn and I have been privileged to live in Midland since 1974 where Lyn has been teaching English at Midland Freshman High and Midland High. During this time I have been employed by Midland County. With the Sheriff's Office I worked as a patrol deputy, criminal investigator and Captain of the patrol warrant section. For the past two years I have worked as a deputy constable under the late Jack Meritt.

Lyn and I have established strong ties in Midland and want to continue to contribute our small part to the betterment of this community. As your constable I will use my education in law-enforcement and experience to administer the duties of the office in a just and fair manner to all the people. I pray that few of you will need the services provided by this office, but should you find yourself in need, remember this is your office and you pay the bills. The only promise I make is that I will do the best I know how in your behalf.

I ask for your support and your vote in the coming election and together we will continue to maintain Midland County Texas as the best place in Texas to live and work.

Running off his record

Probably there were those in the television audience Tuesday evening who expected the presidential debate between Jimmy Carter and Ronald Reagan to deteriorate into a "spite session" with no real attention being given to the issues in the campaign.

It didn't happen. What the debate turned out to be, starkly, was a contrast between the two men, their personalities, their campaign styles and their political philosophies. It should provide for undecided voters throughout the nation, of which reportedly there are many, the insight they need to make a decision on which man to support.

Those voters who already have decided which nominee to support most probably found in the debate additional evidence to strengthen their convictions.

There was no "winner". President Carter undoubtedly scored points with voters as did Gov. Reagan. But the true "winner of the debate" will be the man who already has convinced enough additional voters to cast ballots for him, whose words convinced enough additional voters Tuesday night, and who, as a result, wins the election next Tuesday.

The sharp differences in political philosophies of the two men could not have been more vivdly displayed. President Carter aptly explained the philosophy to which he adheres and Gov. Reagan told voters what his philosophy would be if he is elected.

Some voters who have experienced reservations about Gov. Reagan's position on the use of military force and government programs for the elderly should have received some clarification from the debate. It was pretty evident that the governor is not the "mad bomber" he has been said to be. It's also evident that he has no intentions of dismantling the Social Security system or Medicare. His position on the Equal Rights Amendment was also explained.

Neither candidate was particularly brutal to the other; there was verbal jabbing by both men, but that is to be expected when two candidates get together for a debate at the end of a long and sometimes heated campaign.

Interestingly, President Carter seemed to spend most of his allotted time attempting to instill in voters a fear and mistrust of Gov. Reagan. That's been the heart of his strategy throughout this campaign.

He didn't really attempt to support the record he's established in his four-year term, but there's a good reason for that.

The president would have supported his record, lavished himself in self-gratitude and held high all the accomplishments of his administration in his quest for re-election if he could. But he didn't. He merely gave voters another rendition of his scare-campaign against Gov. Reagan.

That should tell voters something.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today's highlight in history:

On Oct. 30, 1922, Benito Mussolini formed a Fascist government and became premier of Italy.

On this date:

In 1918, Czechoslovakia was proclaimed an independent republic.

In 1956, Britain and France issued an ultimatum to Egypt and Israel calling for a cease-fire.

In 1974, Dutch Marines and police stormed a prison chapel near the Hague and liberated 15 hostages who had been held for four days by convicts.

Ten years ago: President Nixon called on voters to reject candidates who condoned, excused or "failed to speak up against" permissiveness among America's "violent" youth.

Five years ago: Spain's Juan Carlos de Borbon assumed the powers of chief of state in a move that virtually ended 36 years of rule by Generalissimo Francisco Franco.

One year ago: President Carter nominated Federal Appeals Court Judge Shirley Hufstedler to be the first secretary of the department of education.

Today's birthdays: Actor Henry Winkler is 35. Baseball Hall of Fame member Ted Williams is 62.

ART BUCHWALD

Long walk to voting booth makes a strong man weep

Art Buchwald

WASHINGTON — The sun was just rising over the horizon when McNally heard the shuffle of feet. There were four men, including a minister who was reading the Bible.

"Okay, McNally, it's Nov. 4. It's time to vote."

"Any word from the governor?" McNally asked.

"No, there doesn't seem to be any chance of a pardon. You're going to have to go into the booth and pull the switch."

"I don't want to do it," McNally said. "I'm innocent. Why do I have to vote?"

"We're sorry. But we are only here to take you to the booth."

The minister came in. "McNally, it's God's will. We will all pray for you. Is there any last word of comfort I can offer you before you go into the polling station?"

"Why me, Father? I've been a good man. I worked hard. I never did anything to hurt anybody. Why do I have to vote?"

"Everyone has to vote sooner or later. Go bravely, my son. It won't take long to pull the lever, and then it will all be over."

"I'm scared, Father. I've never been so frightened in my life."

"We're all frightened of the unknown, my son. But try to think of it as taking a nice journey into a beautiful country that you have never seen before. Imagine that you will be reunited with all the loved ones who have voted before you. Pray with me."

One of the men said, "Come on, McNally. You're just stalling for time. We gave you what you wanted for dinner, and let you order anything for breakfast. We have to get the show on the road."

"Can I see my wife before I vote?"

"I won't go. You can't make me go."

"McNally, you can either walk into the voting booth or we can drag you there kicking and screaming. Which way is it going to be?"

"Okay, I'll go, but someday you're going to find out you got the wrong man to vote and it will be on your conscience forever."

Two men walked on each side of McNally as the minister read from his Bible.

"Good luck, McNally. We'll see you soon."

The group arrived at the green door.

By this time McNally was perspiring and shaking. One of the men opened the door and McNally saw the forbidding booth. A man was making the final adjustments on the voting machine.

A registrar was seated at a desk. He checked off McNally's name.

"Maybe the governor has pardoned me and knows it," McNally said.

The man in charge said, "We've been in touch with his office and he says there is no reprieve. You're going to have to vote."

Two men took McNally by his arms and shoved him into the booth. They pulled the green curtain behind him. They could only see his legs, which were quivering.

Suddenly there was a scream from behind the curtain.

McNally had pulled the lever for one of the three presidential candidates, and his scream would be remembered by everyone in the room for the rest of their lives.

WASHINGTON-MERRY-GO-ROUND

Aide suspected of lobbying for Greek junta

Jack Anderson

WASHINGTON — Earlier I reported on the surprising number of foreign agents, past or present, who have become close aides and advisers of Ronald Reagan. I listed five; here's a sixth suspect.

Washington attorney Eugene Rossides heads the Reagan campaign's nationalities division — charged with rallying ethnic Americans to the Republican banner. Yet he is regarded with suspicion by many members of his own ethnic community, the Greek-Americans, because of his support of the right-wing military junta that ground down the people of Greece from 1967 to 1974.

Rossides once registered as a foreign agent, not for Greece but for France, when he served as a lobbyist for the Concorde supersonic jet. He also incorporated the American Hellenic Institute, which has lobbied heavily on matters relating to the embattled island of Cyprus.

Yet Rossides has never registered himself nor the institute as an agent for foreign interests. Registered foreign agents are not employed, it should be mentioned, to steal state secrets. They are also seldom foreign. Instead they are usually American citizens retained by foreign interests for the purpose of prevailing upon the U.S. government to act with kindness toward their clients.

Under the law, foreign agents are supposed to register. Rossides got around the registration in a legal, if lawyerly, fashion. The year after incorporating the institute, he set up an affiliated Public Affairs Committee.

The committee, which was financed strictly from domestic contributions, handled all the lobbying. The institute, which was funded in part by foreign contributions, handled only trade relations. The funds were kept separate, so no registration as a lobbyist for foreign interests was required.

But sources formerly affiliated with the institute say the distinction between the two funds was not always enforced, with the result that donations from Greek shipowners and other foreign sources may well have gone, not to the trade activities, but to the lobbying operation.

A confidential report, sent to the Greek ambassador in Washington by a disenchanted AHI officer in 1976, made the point that the Public Affairs Committee had little funding but a lot of activities, while the institute had generous funding but few activities.

At one point, the Greek embassy tried to avoid contact with Rossides' institute, and one Greek official, John Nicolopoulos, suspected of becoming too cozy, was transferred for fear that his ties to the institute "will result in embarrassment to our government."

A number of prominent Greek-Americans — including former exile leader Elias Demetracopoulos — refused to have anything to do with the institute because of Rossides' perceived political ties to the discredited military junta. He was, incidentally, also a football star at Columbia University and a Nixon administration official at the Treasury Department.

During the Ford administration, the Justice Department and Internal Revenue Service agents launched a tentative inquiry into the institute's activities, but it was mysteriously called off. Sources familiar with the situation suspect that President Ford and his political aides feared that Rossides might disclose an embarrassing fact that was not then widely known: Jerry Ford, as House minority leader, had asked Rossides in the late '60s to put G. Gordon Liddy on the Treasury payroll — the man who was later to mastermind the Watergate burglary.

Footnote: Rossides, who still heads the institute, told my associate Lucette Lagnado that neither he nor the AHI had supported the junta, insisted that the foreign and domestic funds were scrupulously segregated, and noted that both the Internal Revenue Service and the Justice Department had investigated the institute and cleared it of any wrongdoing.

HOT POTATO: Republicans on the Senate subcommittee investigating Billy Carter's ties to Libya managed to delete from the final report a couple of references to Libyan influence-peddling attempts in Idaho that might have embarrassed Rep. Steven Symms, R-Idaho, in his race against the incumbent Democrat, Sen. Frank Church.

Any mention of the Libya-Idaho connection was vigorously opposed by Republican Sens. Strom Thurmond of South Carolina and Robert Dole of Kansas.

One of the references omitted at the last minute by a subcommittee attorney working directly with Thurmond mentioned a 1977 visit to Libya by an American delegation that "included important personalities from the state of Idaho." Though the reference didn't name Symms, he was one of the Idahoans.

The other reference, deleted because of Thurmond's opposition, was a subcommittee conclusion that "Libya's efforts to influence U.S. policy and public opinion ranged beyond attempts to exploit Billy Carter."

A subcommittee attorney working with the Republicans, Robert Kelly, reportedly told subcommittee staffers he didn't want the report to "carry the ball" for Church. The attorney denied this, saying "it would have been irresponsible for anyone to try to hurt Frank Church or help him in the investigation."

POLITICAL POTPOURRI: President Carter's campaign chairman, Robert Strauss, has lost the power struggle in the Carter campaign with the president's personal friend Hamilton Jordan. As a result, Strauss's more moderate counsel was ignored in favor of the dangerous "low road" tactics favored by Carter's pollster, Pat Caddell, and image czar, Gerry Rafshoon ... Sen. Jacob Javits of New York recently asked Republican colleagues for help in his Liberal Party campaign against the GOP primary winner, Alfonse D'Amato. But the only one who responded was Sen. John Warner of Virginia, whose wife, Elizabeth Taylor, had promised to campaign for Javits.

THE BIBLE

CAN YOU QUOTE IT?

By ELIZABETH ROSS WIERSEMA

1. Far beyond our petty and limited concept of time and space, what writer wrote "When I consider thy heavens, the work of thy fingers, the -----." Psalm 8.

2. "O Lord our Lord, how excellent is thy name in -----." Psalm 8.

3. According to Genesis, what was the last creature which God created? Genesis 2.

4. There were three courts in the Temple. Supposedly the outer court was that of Gentiles, who were allowed so far and no further. The next was the court of Israel, and the third and inner one was where priests and Levites performed ministerial duties. What article of importance was in this last court?

Four correct ... excellent, three ... good.

Mexico striving to gain agricultural self-sufficiency

William Giandoni

That was one of the shocking statistics Luis Cassio, an official of the Mexican Food System (SAM), offered President Jose Lopez Portillo during one of the chief executive's frequent working trips to rural areas.

The president has been concerned for years about the poor diet of the average Mexican. One of his early pledges after becoming president in December 1976 was to try to make sure that Mexico comes to feed itself.

No progress has been made. In fact, the country dropped back a bit in food production the year that Lopez Portillo became president.

That, of course, was not his fault. His predecessor, Luis Echeverria, had thrown the farmers who owned their lands, particularly in the productive northwestern states, into a panic.

Echeverria's agents encouraged landless persons, even from other states, to squat on producing farms and demand their share of the land and its fruits.

Mexican per capita food production fell off in 1976 and last year actually dropped another 1 percent. Of course, in more recent years, droughts, untimely frosts and other weather problems have also entered the picture.

Although the president has been guarded in his comments on the subject, there are indications that Lopez Portillo has become convinced that Mexican agrarian laws must be changed.

The laws that grew out of an agrarian reform program that was drafted some 70 years ago would seem to be out of date.

They impose strict limitations on the size of farm properties, 100 basic hectares, that is 247 acres. That may have been socially justifiable in the early 1900s, when most of the people lived in rural regions, but no longer is it sufficient.

In this day and age, in Mexico, as well as elsewhere in Latin American, and the United States, modern agricultural techniques are such that one individual, with late-model machinery, improved seeds, fertilizers, and so forth, can produce enough food for hundreds, if not thousands, of city dwellers.

But, under Mexican law, communal, or collective, rather than capitalist, organization of farming is encouraged.

What is more, the ejido, the communal farm, and its members have only the right to use the land they are granted. Lacking title to the land they farm, they find it virtually impossible to obtain credit to finance their operations.

With insufficient credit, little or no machinery, seeds or fertilizer, it is no wonder that Mexico has been importing significant volumes of corn and beans, the two staples of the poor Mexicans' diet, a well as wheat, rice and other grains.

The hope is that Mexico may be self-sufficient in beans and corn by 1982, the year President Lopez Portillo's term ends. But, according to Americo Villarreal, an official of the Agriculture and Hydraulic Resources Ministry (SARH), sufficiency in wheat and rice probably won't come before 1985.

Despite all the talk, it seems doubtful that Mexico will get around to producing the milk and eggs that those 5 million children do not have to eat.

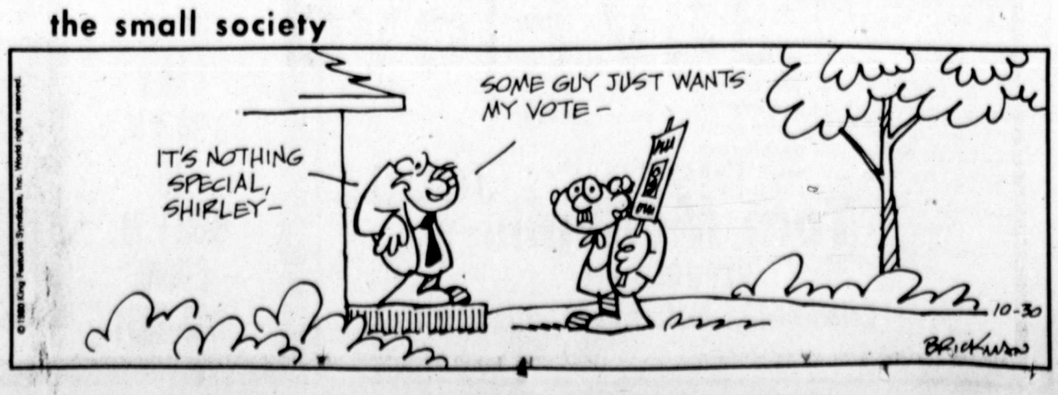

For one thing, government experts already seem to have decided that Mexico's livestock industry is obsolete. One Agriculture Ministry specialist, Dr. Fernando Aguilar, has been quoted as saying that the cattle raising should be "eradicated" in southeastern Mexico, which accounts for about 30 percent of the nation's production.

Those who believe the southeastern cattlemen should start all over argue that the "extensive" grazing technique now used may require up to two and a half acres per head of cattle. Using "intensive" techniques, feeding cattle special foods, limiting their movement, might permit fattening of 10,0000 animals in the same space.

What cattlemen presumably fear is that some radical agrarian reformer in Mexico City, basing himself on such statistics, may convince President Lopez Portillo of the social justice of expropriating most cattle lands. That paralyzes the industry.

As for the possibility of increasing Mexico's poultry and egg production significantly, that got mired in politics decades ago. The Rockefeller's International Basic Economic Corp. started a pilot plant in central Mexico to teach Mexican farmers how to raise chickens on an assembly line basis. Leftist politicians, lacking a better cause at that moment, complained that the special food given the chickens was more nutritious than what many peasants ate, and made the whole thing look like some sort of imperialist plot against Mexican sovereignty. The pilot project was abandoned.

Craddick predicts legislative deficit

By LANA CUNNINGHAM
Staff Writer

The Texas Legislature may have to work with a deficit when the session begins in January, State Rep. Tom Craddick of Midland predicted Wednesday during his talk before the Downtown Lions Club.

Craddick is running unopposed for re-election as state representative from the 68th District, a position he's had since 1968. In talking to the Lions, Craddick listed what he believes will be problems for the State Legislature and quickly outlined the nine constitutional amendments on the Tuesday ballot.

About 5,000 bills will come before the House in the upcoming session, he said. And the legislators probably will designate $22-24 billion to be spent, leaving the state budget with a deficit.

Because of this, the oil and gas industry will experience problems, he said, explaining the state may have to increase the severance tax and possibly enact a refinery tax.

"Why would the governor sign a tax bill into law when he said in his campaign he wouldn't increase taxes?" asked Craddick. Because the last legislature had to take $600 million out of the general fund for roads and highways, he explained.

Inflation has forced costs for labor and materials in the Highway Department to increase to the point that the department "can't maintain the roads they have, much less build new ones."

To relieve the pinch in that department, Craddick suggested the legislature will be forced to increase the state gasoline tax. Currently, the cost is five cents per gallon.

The legislature could up that figure per gallon. Or, said Craddick, the state might enact a tax that would be a percentage of the cost, such as 1 percent. That way, when the cost of gasoline increases, so would revenues from the tax.

When questioned by one Lions member about the legislature sifting through 5,000 bills, which would take eight hours a day for 156 days, Craddick replied that it wasn't hard. "We just throw them all up into the air. The ones that stick on the ceiling we vote for."

Redistricting is another issue the state legislators will tackle this year. Craddick's district covers Midland, Glasscock, Reagan and Upton counties. Since each district should include about 85,000 persons and Midland County has about that much, Craddick predicted his area will be cut down to two counties — Midland and one other.

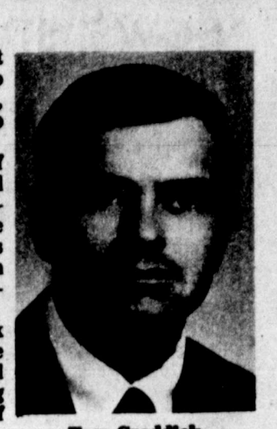

And U.S. Rep. Kent Hance, who represents the 19th Congressional District which includes Midland, could have the north section of his area sliced off, leaving Hance with all of Ector, Midland and Lubbock counties.

With the innocent verdict in Bill Clayton's trial on bribery charges, Craddick said it is apparent Clayton will be re-elected as speaker of the house. Already, more than enough legislators have voiced their support of the incumbent, he added.

Craddick praised Gov. Bill Clements for his work "on giving some direction to the energy program." The governor took three agencies "messing with energy" and combined them into one. Then Clements set up subcommittees to look at energy issues, and Craddick heads up one on coal and lignite.

This combination of agencies has saved money, claimed Craddick, citing the instance of three water agencies combined into one which saved the state $12 million.

Craddick gave a quick summary of each of the nine constitutional amendments, concluding that he is in favor of them all.

Army Ranger goes on trial

SAVANNAH, Ga. (AP) — A Superior Court jury of 10 men and two women faced opening statements and testimony today in the murder trial of a former Army Ranger charged in the beating death of a Columbus man.

The panel was selected Wednesday to hear the trial of John Archer Gibson, 24, of Gruber, Texas.

Chamber hears TACB report

By SUE FAHLGREN
Staff Writer

The Midland Chamber of Commerce heard a report Wednesday on the Texas Air Control Board's public hearing in Odessa Tuesday night. The TACB met with area citizens to discuss the elimination of Midland's non-continuous air monitoring system and other citizen's concerns about local air pollution.

Grant Billingley, director of economic development, and Fred Tyler, executive vice president of the chamber, spoke in opposition of the TACB's proposal to quit checking Midland's air for the amount of sulfur dioxide and particulate matter.

The air monitoring device, located on top of the City Hall, measures Midland's air quality for a 24-hour period every six weeks, according to Chamber President Ray Moudy.

Moudy said the TABC was considering eliminating the equipment "because we have such clean air out here (and because the TACB) was short on manpower" to do the monitoring.

Moudy said a similar station in Big Spring was also under investigation for potential elimination of its equipment. Moudy said there are two monitoring stations in Odessa, but both are continuously operating devices and are not part of the phase-out plan.

In other chamber news, members heard a report on the Objectives for Midland program which has recently completed a kit for the Urban Land Institute's study of Midland's south and east sides. The eight members of ULI will be in Midland Nov. 9-14 to review the data compiled by the chamber and make proposals to improve that area.

Mike Williams, Objectives worker, said the "kit" for the study group breaks the study into four sections: residential development, commercial development, industrial development and changes resulting from the moving of Midland Air Park.

County Commissioner Durward Wright reported on the State Highway Department's work on Loop 250 along Holiday Hill Road. This is the first phase of the Loop in which Holiday Hill is being converted into a service road of the Loop. This will include paving the west loop toward the site of the proposed Pittsburgh Plate Glass factory, said Wright. This first phase should be completed in the summer or fall of 1981.

Wright said the construction was only to include service roads with curbs.

Wright also said the second phase from Holiday Hill to Highway 349 will include access roads, curbs and gutters and will be under construction for 1½-2 years.

Wright also reported the number of absentee voters in the local elections is expected to reach a record 4,700 by the closing time of 5 p.m. Friday. Already, he said, more than 4,000 persons have voted.

In addition, the Leadership Midland program will meet Nov. 13 with Midland Memorial Hospital board of trustees president Tevis Herd and trustee Mickey Cappadonna to discuss health care in Midland.

The Chamber's 1980 economic development book, "Portrait of a City," has received a top rating from judges in the annual promotional literature competition sponsored by the Southern Industrial Development Council. Submitted in the initial response publications category, "Portrait of a City" received a superior rating from the judges who evaluted more than 150 entries.

Contradictory views studied

NEW YORK (AP) — A new study indicates the public holds contradictory views about the news media: Those surveyed oppose anything that might be considered censorship, but they think some government regulations are needed to ensure fairness.

The study also indicates that the public is confused about the consequences of laws relating to freedom of expression. "Most Americans have not worked through the complexities involved," the study says.

ACCORDING to the study, the public and the news media have conflicting views about the meaning of the First Amendment and freedom of expression. The public is reported as more concerned with the individual's right to hear a diversity of views than with the media's right to speak or write freely.

Leaders in the communications field believe, the study says, "that society is best served by a 'laissez-faire' approach to newspapers; diversity is best achieved by protecting the autonomy of journalists. The public is less concerned about the freedom of those who publish newspapers."

At the same time, the study says, "People want to increase the variety of information they receive, but a law or an enforcement procedure that results in eliminating a source of news is the last thing they have in mind."

THE STUDY also says the public thinks that government regulations should apply equally to broadcast and print media.

Several leading newspaper editors said the results of the study showed that the news media need to educate the public about the First Amendment and the importance of freedom of speech and of the press.

The study, for release on Monday, was prepared by the Public Agenda Foundation, a non-profit, non-partisan organization established in 1975 by pollster Daniel Yankelovich and by Cyrus Vance, who later became secretary of state but has since resigned. The foundation says it wants to identify the nation's choices on major issues, to define those choices and to present them to the public.

In an introduction to the foundation study, "The Speaker and the Listener: A Public Perspective on Freedom of Expression," Yankelovich says:

"As listeners, what concerns people most is their ability to have access to a broad range of perspectives ... In the public's view, media autonomy is secondary to the goal of 'fairness.' ... And while Americans soundly reject direct censorship, they do believe that government regulation, by requiring television and major newspapers to present opposing views, can actually increase freedom of expression as they, the public, define it."

CHARLES W. Bailey, editor of The Minneapolis Tribune and chairman of the Freedom of Information Committee of the American Society of Newspaper Editors, said the results of the study "are disappointing and discouraging, but not surprising to me ... We haven't done a good enough job of explaining what the real issues are..."

Bailey said the public should understand that the First Amendment "involves everybody ... It's a truism to say that the press is only as free as the public will let it be, but that is the truth..."

Robert Haiman, executive editor of the St. Petersburg (Fla.) Times and secretary of the Associated Press Mananging Editors Association agreed. He said said the study "outlines the magnitude of the job that the press still has to do ... We've been guided for many years by the principle which says that if you do a good job ... somehow the world will automatically perceive that ... Studies such as this one call that kind of reasoning into question."

ED CONY, vice president for news of The Dow Jones Co., which publishes The Wall Street Journal, and president of the Associated Press Managing Editors Association said that the results, if taken at face value, are discouraging. But he added: "I don't think it (the survey) means the public is about to call for a repeal of the First Amendment ... If you asked the same people do they really want the government to make basic decisions (about news coverage) ... you'd get quite a different result."

The survey did not include a question asking people directly whether they wanted the government to decide which stories were carried.

THE STUDY included interviews with 57 people from the communications field. It also included a survey of a national probability sample of 1,000 people, supplemented by group interview sessions in Des Moines, Iowa; Memphis, Tenn.; Minneapolis, New York and San Diego. A foundation spokesman said the margin of error was four points.

Jean Johnson, the director of the study project, warned against interpreting the results to mean that the public favors censorship. "Heavy-handed government involvement" is rejected, she said.

Ms. Johnson said the public does not understand the specifics of existing laws covering freedom of speech and freedom of the press. "They have these goals (of fairness)," she said. "They would like them to apply to both" broadcast and print media. "They have not really thought through the implications of that."

The survey indicated the public has reservations about the fairness and accuracy of the media, but also recognizes the media's accomplishments. Fifty-four percent, for example, said they disagreed with the statement: "Newspaper stories are usually fair. They bend over backwards to tell both sides of a story." Forty-six percent disagreed with a similar statement about television stories.

AT THE SAME time, however, 89 percent of those questioned said they agreed that if it were not for the news media, the nation would never had found out about a lot of corruption in government and other government abuses. And 64 percent said they agreed that most people who work for newspapers and television news really care about serving the public interest.

Almost all of those questioned — 98 percent — said they agreed with the statement: "A citizen like yourself always has the right to hear both sides of an issue." A majority also said it supports the rights of minorities to speak out and get news coverage of their views.

A MAJORITY said they opposed laws to prohibit newspaper or television stories that embarrass the president, the government or the country, or are biased or unfairly criticize a prominent person.

The survey participants also were asked about regulation in general and whether the laws should be the same for both broadcast and print media. Here are some of the questions and answers:

—"The Supreme Court has ruled that ... newspapers do not have to present both sides of an issue, but that television is required to do so. Does this make sense to you — should the same set of rules apply to both ... or should television be treated more strictly?" Seventy-two percent of those questioned — almost three people in four — said the treatment should be the same, while 20 percent said television should be treated more strictly and the rest were not sure.

Alaskans to vote on corporation

By JEAN KIZER

JUNEAU, Alaska (AP) — Alaska voters will decide Nov. 4 whether to create a citizen-owned corporation designed to put the state in the oil business and its citizens on Easy Street.

If the spread-the-riches scheme works — and it's highly disputed by many state officials — a family of four would reap $2,000 the first year and up to $6,000 annually by the year 2000, according to Sen. Mike Gravel, chief sponsor of the initiative.

The initiative would create the Alaska General Stock Ownership Corporation, and every Alaska man, woman and child would be given a share of stock, free of charge.

The corporation would borrow money, possibly with a credit guarantee from the state, to purchase ownership shares in one or more large energy projects in the state, such as the trans-Alaska oil pipeline or the proposed natural gasline.

Earnings from the investments would be used to pay off the loan and pay yearly dividends to the roughly 405,000 stockholders.

San Francisco economist Louis Kelso, chief architect of the proposal, predicts the corporation would make Alaska one of the most affluent areas of the country and a model for other states.

Gravel, however, admits there is one big drawback to the plan: "It sounds too good to be true."

Many state officials say the plan is too good to be true.

Critics, including Gov. Jay Hammond, say it would invite a raid on the state treasury, pose constitutional problems and set up a conflict of interest between stockholders and other citizens.

Under the plan, everyone living in Alaska at the time of incorporation would be a stockholder, but people who move to the state later would get a share only from a stockholder who decides to sell.

Hammond also warns that making shareholders minority partners with major oil companies could twist public opinion on regulation and taxation.

"What happens if the corporation ... has a losing year?" Hammond adds. "Suppose it doesn't make enough to pay off the interest on its bonds. How do you think the public would react to a $500 bill from the state government? No, they would just raid the state treasury expecting the state to bail them out."

The initiative reached the ballot when Gravel, a two-term Democrat who was upset in the state primary earlier this year, led a 13,000-signature petition drive after he failed to persuade skeptical state legislators to create the corporation.

Plants can grow in the thin air

By MARION KWARTLER

SITRIYA, Israel (AP) — Imagine a greenhouse trough filled with healthy houseplants sprouting through a styrofoam cover. But lift the cover and the plants come off right along with it, and you see that they aren't rooted in soil but in thin air.

The empty tub is part of a new Israeli scheme called aeroponics, an agricultural system that dispenses with conventional soil or water methods. Instead, plants sprout and grow in sealed troughs where their exposed roots receive nutrient-enriched mist from a computer-controlled spray system.

Israeli scientists hope aeroponics will one day solve the problem of a shortage in usable agricultural land. Tiers of aeroponic troughs will grow vegetables on even the rockiest terrain, and there's no need for plowing or fertilizing with gas-guzzling tractors.

Israel's Agricultural Ministry has just awarded Adi Ltd., the Israeli company which developed aeroponics, a $200,000 grant to build a quarter-acre of the modular tubs to test the system's large-scale commercial feasibility.

Aeroponics uses less water, less fertilizer and less energy, and experimental yields are up to 200 percent higher than soil farming, says Adi's director, Amiram Keshet.

"Until people see it with their eyes it's hard for them to believe it," he said.

A simple computer console and sensors monitor humidity and temperature in each trough, carefully regulating those conditions which in other farming methods cannot be as closely checked.

Because the plants don't have to fight their way through natural resistance to soil and soil diseases, they're stronger and healthier, and the aeroponic system permits "farming" all year long.

"Because the roots are exposed you can see immediately when a plant is diseased and take it out," Keshet said. "So there's no chance for the sickness to spread to the other plants."

In an average trough, a minimum of 1,000 plants grow in approximately 9 square feet, four times the density of traditional soil farming.

According to calculations based on multiplications of experimental yields, a quarter-acre of aeroponically grown tomato plants will produce over 100 tons of tomatoes, while the best hothouses in Israel produce only 20-30 tons.

In Adi's experimental greenhouse, house plants have rooted in 14 days instead of the usual month, and citrus and avocado trees cuttings have sprouted in 10-15 days instead of several months.

Federal deficit second worst ever

WASHINGTON (AP) — The federal government, battling recession and inflation at the same time, ran up the second-worst deficit on record in the last fiscal year. There was twice as much red ink as the year before.

The Treasury Department closed the books Wednesday on fiscal 1980, which ended Sept. 30, and announced that the deficit was $59 billion. That was exceeded only by the $66.4 billion deficit of 1976.

The deepening deficits were due largely to the recession, which cut government receipts, and inflation, which forced up spending.

The government collected $520 billion during the year, compared with $466 billion in 1979, and spent $579 billion, up 17.3 percent from the previous year. The 1979 deficit was $27.7 billion, lowest since $4.7 billion in 1974.

The Carter administration has forecast a deficit of $29.8 billion for the current fiscal year, but that could go higher if there is a tax cut in 1981.

The 1980 deficit was almost $20 billion higher than President Carter had projected in January, before the economy was staggered by rampant inflation and a sharp decline in economic output.

Spending also increased to accommodate higher defense costs, the influx of refugees from Cuba and Haiti and several natural disasters, including the Mount St. Helens eruption.

Recession took its toll on corporate tax collections, which dropped 1.6 percent to $64.6 billion.

At the same time, inflation pushed Social Security payments — which are tied to inflation and represented the largest single federal expenditure — from $118 billion in 1979 to $134.4 billion in 1980. Social Security taxes rose 15.6 percent to $138.8 billion

Opposition leader escapes election eve ambush

KINGSTON, Jamaica (AP) — Prime Minister Michael Manley's socialist government imposed tight security for parliamentary elections today after opposition leader Edwards Seaga escaped unharmed from an election-eve sniper attack in a Kingston slum. Both Manley and Seaga are predicting victory following Jamaica's bloodiest election campaign.

Police and bodyguards fired an estimated 200 rounds at the snipers who shot at Seaga's motorcade Wednesday night as it passed through the capital's Nannyville district. No one was wounded, but one man was hurt when he fell from a speeding security vehicle.

SEAGA CONTINUED his tour of slum areas after the shooting, the latest in a string of violent attacks in the seven months since Manley called elections on this Caribbean island.

Police say at least 450 persons were shot to death this year, many of them in political attacks. The dead include a member of Parliament, Roy McGann of Manley's People's National Party, who was seeking re-election.

Government troops were ordered out in force for the voting and public service announcements urged the nation's 990,000 eligible voters not to let the months of violence deter them from voting.

Nearly 6,500 polling stations were set to open at 7 a.m. and close at 5 p.m., with results expected around midnight.

MANLEY WOUND UP his campaign with a marathon motorcade from Mandeville, about 65 miles west of Kingston, to the capital. The procession stopped at each town along with way as the prime minister got out to press the flesh.

Manley's hands were wrapped in elastic bandages to protect him from the overenthusiastic handshakers among the dancing and singing crowds that rocked to a pounding reggae beat roaring from portable loudspeakers. Many in the crowds hailed Manley with his party's traditional clenched-fist salute.

Seaga closed out his campaign with a rally in his own constituency, a desperately poor area of western Kingston. He predicted he would win 85 percent of the votes cast in the district and be returned to the Parliament for a fifth term.

HE WAS WARNED that his Labor followers will shut down the country with a general strike if the elections are not fairly conducted.

Both candidates predicted their parties would be victorious and billed the election is the most important for this economically-troubled country of nearly 2.3 million people since the island gained independence from Britain in 1962.

Manley, an avowed socialist, has campaigned for an unprecedented third term on his administration's record of social legislation, including minimum wage laws, a land redistribution program and advances in free public education that have doubled enrollment. He also cites Jamaica's emerging leadership in the Third World.

He warns that a victory by Seaga's Jamaica Labor Party would turn the nation over to what he calls a "capitalist elite" and turn back the strides made by his party.

Seaga blames Manley's socialst rhetoric and the prime minister's friendship with Cuban President Fidel Castro for spurring a flight of foreign investment and skilled professional and managerial people.

HE CLAIMS THIS brought on the nation's current economic turmoil in which one-third of the workforce is unemployed, inflation is running at 30 percent, and the country is $1.5 billion in debt. Foreign currency is so scarce that only necessities can be imported.

Seaga wants closer ties with the United States and Western Europe and a return to private enterprise.

Manley's party has gained considerable ground since the prime minister called the election on Feb. 3. Pollsters for the government-run Daily News and the Jamaica Broadcasting Corp. say Manley's party was favored by 50.5 percent of those questioned in a poll last week, as compared with 49.5 percent support for the Labor Party.

One million claimed dead since Soviets intervened in Afghanistan

FRANKFURT, West Germany (AP) — "More than a million innocent people, including women and children, have been killed" in Afghanistan since Soviet troops moved in 10 months ago, says Afghanistan's former UNESCO delegate, who defected to West Germany last weekend.

In an interview published Wednesday in the West German newspaper Bild, Mohammed Paktiawal was quoted as saying that since the first pro-Moscow Marxist government seized power in Kabul in 1978, "16,000 intellectuals intellectuals, students, academics and business leaders have been executed in the central prison in Kabul."

Moscow intervened in Afghanistan, its neighbor to the south, last December to prop up the Marxist government in its war with anti-communist Moslem guerrillas. According to Western estimates, about 85,000 Soviet troops remain in the Central Asian nation.

Those fighting the Soviet presence are "not rebels and not partisans, but Afghan freedom fighters who are held as heroes," Paktiawal was quoted as saying.

He said Kabul, the capital, and two or three other large cities are under Soviet control, "but on the flatlands and in the mountains the freedom fighters rule."

Paktiawal claimed military leaders, not the civilian government of President Babrak Karmal, are the real rulers of Afghanistan, and he alleged that Czech and Cuban advisors are training Afghan troops, and East Germans are "bringing police and security services up to first-rate," the newspaper said.

Paktiawal, 45, fled a conference of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Orxanization in Belgrade, Yugoslavia last weekend after publicly denouncing the Soviet occupation of his homeland. He asked for political asylum in West Germany and remains in Frankfurt awaiting completion of the necessary paperwork.

The defector said he left his wife and seven children in Afghanistan because he had no choice. "I hope they will be treated humanely and allowed to travel to the West," the newspaper quoted him as saying.

Meanwhile, Afghan sources in Moscow said Karmal has extended his current visit to Moscow because of an ongoing medical checkup at a hospital outside the Soviet capital. The Afghan Embassy said Tuesday that Karmal would leave by Thursday, but the sources said he now expects to leave "by the weekend." His official schedule ended last Friday.

Afghan officials gave no details of the medical examination but said it was only a checkup and that Karmal was in "perfect condition."

Karmal was installed as president in a Soviet-engineered coup that coincided with the Kremlin's military intervention last December. His predecessor, Marxist President Hafizullah Amin, was killed in the coup.

In another development, an Afghan guerrilla group claimed its forces attacked Jalalabad airport in eastern Afghanistan last weekend and destroyed two Soviet-built helicopters. A Pakistan-based spokesman for the guerrillas said it was the second rebel attack on the airport in as many months.

Student says fellow Iranians conducted secret trials at school

OGDEN, Utah (AP) — Iranian students held secret trials at Weber State College, found two countrymen guilty of supporting the deposed Shah of Iran and told them "to leave Ogden for their own safety," according to a student who says he participated.

The Iranian student, who asked not to be identified, said the two other students were "excommunicated" from the Iranian group.

The student said the Iranian government had sanctioned the trials. "We also have authority from our government to execute our enemies, but most of them live in Beverly Hills," he said. "The ones here are just puppies."

He said the trials charged a man identified as Jim Hajimomen with being an agent for Savak, the secret police under the shah, and banished Hassan Ghaibi for making pro-shah statements to reporters.

Both students have since left the campus.

Tony Spanos, college foreign students adviser, said he heard reports of the trials last spring, but was unable to confirm them. He said Hajimomen was assaulted last spring by other Iranians and had sought protection from campus police.

Ghaibi "told me he feared for his life," Spanos said.

Spanos said such trials are not unusual. "It's part of the religious culture in Iran. It surprises us because of our lack of understanding."

He said nothing can be done about the trials unless a student signs a complaint stating his rights were violated.

The student source said about 60 Iranians participated in the trials. He said evidence was presented that Hajimomen had given names of opponents of the late shah to federal officials, and that he translated Iranian revolutionary literature for campus police.

Lee Cassity, chief of campus police, confirmed Hajimomen did such translations, adding Hajimomen received police protection last spring because of threats by Iranians.

The Iranians believed the trials were legal, the source said. "It happens with the Mormons. They excommunicated Sonia Johnson in a secret trial," he said, referring to the Mormon excommunication of Mrs. Johnson, which came after she criticized church leaders opposing the Equal Gights Amendment.

Minor injuries received in three-car smash-up

At least six people barely escaped serious injury in what could have been a fatal three-car collision about 10:45 p.m. Wednesday.

All three cars involved were totaled, police said.

According to police reports, cars driven by Bobby Bearden, 1304 W. Texas Ave.; Jose Gaona, 604 E. Estes St.; and Kim Wilburn of Odessa were all eastbound on U.S. Highway 80.

The Bearden and Gaona vehicles collided a half-mile west of Holiday Hill Road, knocking the Gaona vehicle into the south bar ditch where it rolled on to its top and caught fire. Bearden's vehicle stopped crossways in the road, where it was involved in a collision with Ms. Wilburn's car.

Bearden was injured but refused treatment. Also injured, but treated at Midland Memorial Hospital emergency room and released were Wilma Schmitto, Box 2986, a passenger in the Bearden car; Jaime Hernandez, 401 Woodcrest Drive, a passenger in the Gaona vehicle; Roy Espinoza, 401 Woodcrest, passenger in the Gaona car; and Regino Saena, 2438 Whitmire No. 50-E, passenger in the Gaona car.

Two other accidents Wednesday resulted in minor injuries to those involved.

At 1 p.m., cars driven by Paul Kenneth Haye of 2407 Holloway Ave. and Joy Lee Woodis of 2609 Dengar Ave. collided at the intersection of Washington Avenue and Burleson Street.

Both drivers were injured, but Haye refused treatment. Ms. Woodis was taken to Midland Memorial emergency room where she was treated and released.

Police Roundup

An Odessa woman was hurt in a 7:40 a.m. accident Wednesday. Jacqueline Swindle Simmons of Odessa and a car driven by Lisa Maxine Chapman of 312 Thornridge Drive collided at the intersection of Thornridge and Leisure Drive.

Ms. Simmons was treated at Midland Memorial emergency room and released.

Besides offering assistance at the 10:45 p.m. accident on Highway 80 Wednesday, firemen were called to a dumpster fire at 3205 Stutz at 4:37 p.m. and a car fire at Main Street and Jax Avenue at 7:38 p.m.

French bank shaken by blasts

MARSEILLE, France (AP) — A series of eight bombs exploded today outside bank buildings in Marseille and nearby Aix-en-Provence, causing minor injuries to four people in an apartment above one of the Marseille banks.

A telephone caller to the French news agency Agence France Presse claimed the bombs were set by the Corsican National Liberation Front, which has set hundreds of bombs on the island of Corsica and in mainland France in recent years.

The targets and timings have usually been picked to avoid injuries.

Polish leaders in Moscow

MOSCOW (AP) — Poland's new Communist Party and government chiefs are expected to face tough grilling today on the growing strength of Poland's independent trade union movement in their first face-to-face confrontation with President Leonid I. Brezhnev and other Kremlin leaders.

Stanislaw Kania, the first secretary of the Polish Communist Party, and Premier Jozef Pinkowski were met at Moscow airport by Brezhnev and were driven directly to a meeting in the Kremlin, official Soviet sources said.

A Foreign Ministry spokesman said the visit would be "brief," but gave no detailed schedule.

The Polish leaders' visit to Moscow comes as Poland's independent trade unions are threatening new strikes later this month to protest court-imposed changes in their charters that dictate union recognition of Communist Party supremacy.

The Soviet Communist Party newspaper Pravda Wednesday published a perfunctory announcement of the trip, terming it a "friendly working visit." By contrast, recent visits by Ethiopian, Afghan and Syrian leaders were described as "friendly official visits" and were preceded by biographies and photographs of the visitors in the official press.

A Western diplomat in Warsaw dismissed the official description of the trip as a "friendly working visit." If that were the case, he said, "it could have been arranged with a little less unseemly haste."

Kania and Pinkowski both came to power in Warsaw as a result of the wave of strikes that swept Poland last summer and led to the government's unprecedented acceptance of a union movement independent of the Communist Party. Pinkowski replaced Edward Babiuch on Aug. 24 at the height of the strikes and Kania succeeded Edward Gierek as party chief on Sept. 6, shortly after the strikes were settled.

At that time, Brezhnev expressed "firm confidence" that Kania would "quickly solve the difficult problems" of his country.

Since then, however, the Soviets have watched with evidently growing alarm the development of the nationwide union movement.

Last month, Pravda carried sharp attacks on "outside interference" in Poland, and quoted from Lenin to criticize what the paper called the "bourgois" concept of free trade unions outside of Communist Party control.

The Soviet press has carried little on Poland this month. But official newspapers in East Germany and Czechoslovakia have recently launched stepped-up attacks on the union movement and on Poland's "uncontrolled skid."

The East German government was scheduled to impose stiff new restrictions today on travel between East Germany and Poland, in an apparent effort to halt the spread of the Polish labor rebellion. Czech sources in Warsaw said Czechoslovakia is preparing similar travel restrictions.

Looming over the Polish developments is the continuing threat of Soviet intervention. The Soviets have repeatedly warned that any weakening of Poland's Communist system poses a danger to the entire Warsaw Pact.

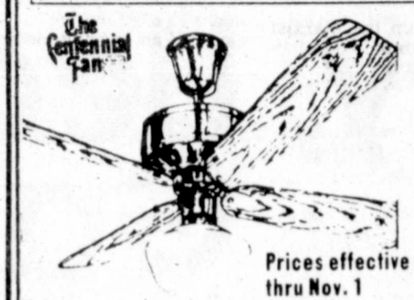

Observers in Warsaw said Kania and Pinkowski would urge Soviet leaders to remain patient and allow Warsaw time to iron out its current conflict with the unions. The Polish government has defended the unions as a chance for "renewal" but has criticized their reluctance to recognize the party's leading role explicitly.

It was not immediately known if the Polish leaders' visit to Moscow would force cancellation of Pinkowski's scheduled meeting Friday with Lech Walesa and other leaders of Solidarity, the largest independent trade union to emerge from the summer labor strife.

Leaders of the two-month-old union, angry over court-imposed changes in Solidarity's charter, have threatened new strikes unless the charter is approved as it was submitted and other demands are met.

MC adds two new short courses

The Midland College Department of Community Services continues to initiate new short courses which are available to area residents.

An advanced course in bookeeping fundamentals and a beginning course in the proper use of microwave ovens are slated to begin next week.

Additional courses are on the semester's schedule and will be announced on a weekly basis prior to Dec. 7.

Bookkeeping Fundamentals II, taught by Nancy Holland, is a continuation of the beginning course and covers combination journals, general and subsidiary ledgers, payroll systems and inventories. Students receive an introduction to automated data processing toward the end of the eight-week study.

Classes are limited to 30 students meeting 7-10 p.m. on Mondays. The course fee is $24 and the class meeting is Nov. 3.

Microwave Cook I furnishes current information abouth energy savings, safety of operation, and what microwave ovens will or will not cook.

Sample foods will be prepared during the one-evening class which meets 7-10 p.m. on Nov. 6. Class is limited to 35 students and the fee is $5.

Pre-registration is in progress in room 156 of the MC Administration Building from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. weekdays including the lunch hour.

More information may be obtained by calling 684-7851, extension 147 or 216.

Adviser quits Reagan campaign

WASHINGTON (AP) — Richard V. Allen, Ronald Reagan's principal foreign policy adviser, who has come unde fire for alleged activities while a member of the Nixon White House staff, withdrew today from the Republican presidential nominee's campaign organization.

A two-paragraph statement issued by campaign chief of staff Edwin Meese said that Allen "has withdrawn for the remaining days of the campaign to remove this matter as a possible issue in the campaign."

Nine killed, 81 hurt in Peking blast

PEKING (AP) — An explosive charge brought into Peking's central railroad station caused the blast that killed nine people and injured 81 Wednesday night, the official Xinhua news agency reported today.

There was no immediate further word on the nature of the incident, whether a bomb had been planted or who brought it into the station.

Two of the injured were in critical condition, the agency said.

It said the device exploded on the second floor, near the top of an escalator going up from the first floor, at 6:15 p.m (5:15 a.m. EST) Wednesday.

One man died on the spot and eight others died later in a hospital, it added, the station was cordoned off while doctors tended the injured and dying, Xinhua said. It said ambulances later took the injured to hospitals.

The station building was only lightly damaged and trains kept running normally, it said.

Public Security Minister Zhao Cangbi, Railways Minister Guo Weichen, Peking Mayor Lin Hujia and Qin Jiwei, commander of Peking military units, were among senior officials who rushed to the scene, Xinhua reported.

Immediately after the explosion Wednesday night, a foreign ministry spokesman said only that there had been an accident—an explosion—and that investigations were under way. Earlier today, the ministry said nine had died and dozens were injured but the cause and other details still were under investigation.

Former Prime Minister dies

VALLETTA, Malta (AP) — Former Prime Minister George Borg Olivier, the architect of this Mediterranean island's independence from Britain, has died at his home in Sliema. He was 69.

Borg Olivier, who died Wednesday night, was prime minister for a total of 13 years, last holding the post between 1966 and 1971.

He was one of the three figures who dominated Maltese life for over 30 years. The other two were Archbishop Michael Gonzi, now retired, and the current prime minister, Dom Mintoff, who heads the island's socialist government.

Borg Olivier's nationalist government steered the island to independence from Britain in 1964. It was under his government that Malta began its major program to change the island's economy from one based on revenue earned from British base facilities to one relying primarily on manufacturing and tourism.

New Jersey voters to decide secession

ATLANTIC CITY, N.J. (AP) — The strength of recent rumblings for a new state of South Jersey will be tested Nov. 4 when voters in six southern counties are asked if they want to secede from New Jersey to form the 51st state.

Atlantic, Burlington, Cape May, Cumberland, Ocean and Salem counties are offering non-binding referendum questions to gauge public sentiment on the secession issue.

Joel Jacovitz, deputy mayor of Egg Harbor Township, Atlantic County, is chairman of the Committee to Free South Jersey and undisputed leader of the newly revived secessionist movement.

Jacovitz said his committee, born out of a July 12 "convention" attended by about 190 spirited supporters, has spent less than $5,000 to promote the question among South Jersey's 1.8 million people.

Jacovitz said he is optimistic even though many voters and political leaders in the area and the rest of New Jersey — which would stand to lose millions of dollars in Atlantic City gambling revenues — do not take secession seriously.

"We're looking for a majority to vote yes," Jacovitz said, noting there is no organized opposition. "I would feel very concerned if we got less than a majority."

Even if the question fails miserably, secessionists say their movement will have focused statewide attention on South Jersey's "plight."

Largely seashore and agricultural, South Jersey, oriented toward Philadelphia, has long been suspicious of its state government in Trenton, which residents claim is controlled by urban and industrial interests from the New York-oriented north.

South Jersey residents often grumble about the state's distribution of tax revenues to the more-populous northern areas, moves to control development of wilderness and coastal areas and proposals to tax fresh water.

Kansas City voters to debate fluoridation

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — In a ballot throwback to the 1950s, voters in this city of 430,000 will decide Nov. 4 to accept or reject the latest effort by the City Council to fluoridate their drinking water.

As in different unsucessful attempts over the past quarter of a century, the issue is fluoride's value in preventing tooth decay versus its possible danger in causing cancer.

While most American communities were resolving the debate by going along with fluoridation in the 1950s and '60s, Kansas City's water remained unfluoridated by a solid community vote following a series of court battles in the wake of City Council support in 1962.

In obtaining council approval for the upcoming vote, the Rev. Emanuel Cleaver said most of the rest of the communities in the nation have fluoridated water, including Johnson County, Kan., one of the wealthiest suburbs in the nation.

"It's ironic that the people in Johnson County who can afford to take their children to dentists have fluoridation and the people of Kansas City who are poor don't have the benefits of fluoridation," Cleaver says

Cleaver said the fluoridation would not be expensive since the equiment needed for the process has been in place here since the 1960s vote.

Spearheading the opposition, as he has for the past 25 years, is Dr. Alex McCone, a veterinarian whose petition drive blocked the council action without voter approval.

"No one should be forced to drink fluoridated water, whether they don't want to or are intolerant to it," McCone argues. "The small amount of evidence about benefits to children's teeth is far outweighed by the evidence of harm, such as an additional 10,000 cancer deaths a year due to fluoridation. Fluoridation is a proven hazard to health."

Opponents quote medical sources as saying 10,000 or more fluoridation-linked cancer deaths occur yearly in the United States. But an American Cancer Society spokesman in Kansas City disputed that contention, saying the society "has examined available evidence and does not consider there is any relation between the fluoridation of water and the incidence of cancer."

Midland debate coach rates debaters

EDITOR'S NOTE: Maridell Fryar, a high school debate coach in Midland for 18 years and Coordinator of Fine Arts and Speech for the Midland Independent School District, is secretary of the American Forensic Association.

By MARIDELL FRYAR

Across the United States each year, thousands of high school and college students do exactly what the two presidential contenders did Tuesday night: they debate.

Those scholastic debates are judged by a precise set of criteria that measure, on a mathematical scale, how well the debaters marshal their evidence, refute their opponents and deliver their arguments.

Maridell Fryar

Academic debates are obviously far different, in format and intent, from those in the political arena. But if the standards of the schoolroom were applied to Tuesday night's spectacular, both President Carter and Ronald Reagan would be rated as mediocre debaters at best. As politicians, well, that is different...

As far as grasp of the issues and command of evidence were concerned, the president deserved a higher grade than Reagan. Carter outscored his challenger in the use of statistics, which debate judges consider the strongest form of evidence. He poured out the economic and energy figures early in the debate, leaving listeners with a positive impression of his expertise.

BOTH DEBATERS employed expert opinion and cited specific sources, but there were far too many vauge references to unidentified experts. Reagan said, "Economists agree with my plan" and "Black young people say...." Carter talked about how "our allies feel," without any support for his contentions.

When a debater uses an opponent's statements to indict him, that is called a turnaround — and it is usually the high point of debate. The presidential candidates took turns denouncing each other's record as governor, but Reagan proved himself the master of this ploy when he used Carter's own 1976 "misery index" against the president.

In the area of reasoning and analysis, the debate was a draw. Carter tended to lean more on buzz words, castigating Reagan's "dangerous attitudes" toward nuclear proliferation, for example, and in a formal debate would have lost points for doing so. Reagan, too, introduced a few red herrings, with his unsupported attacks on the Occupational Safety and Health Administration and Soviet morality.

Both candidates repeatedly evaded questions. Carter never listed the conditions under which he would employ military force, never supplied his anti-inflation proposals and never said how he would aid the inner cities.

AND WHEN ABC'S Barbara Walters asked what future changes in anti-terrorist policy should be dictated by the Iranian hostage experience, both Carter and Reagan ducked the original question and Walters' persistent follow-up. Instead, they hid behind the hostages, claiming they wanted to say nothing to jeopardize their safety.

Their major handicap, as debaters, was that they were obviously more interested in scoring political points than in addressing specific questions. Thus both were often more to the point in the follow-up segments than in their initial responses. In an academic debate, however, that would be called too little, too late.

Carter seemed more organized than Reagan. The president introduced his arguments well and summarized afterward. In contrast, Reagan's responses lacked structure and often trailed off; he rarely completed a thought.

Reagan outscored Carter in what debate coaches call refutation — the direct response to arguments advancedby one's opponent. In an academic debate, an argument that is not countered is awarded to its initiator. Carter allowed several allegations to stand unchallenged. Among those were Reagan's charge that the SALT II treaty leaves the United States in an inferior military posture and the allegation that the Carter administration is the victim, rather than the master, of world crises.

BY THE SAME standard, Reagan directly countered most Carter charges. He was particularly resolute in pointing out what he perceived as distortions or misrepresentations of his positions. He answered directly, with additional explanation, the charge that government spending cannot be cut, and rose to the defesne of the Nixon and Ford administrations. He gave a full explanation of how he would revise the minimum wage.

Debaters are also evaluated on delivery. After Reagan overcame his initial nervousness, both men seemed serious, straighforward and at ease. Neither had a clear advantage, in contrast to past presidential debates. It seems we are capable of learning some of history's lessons, after all.

When all the factors are taken into consideration. I would mark the scoreboard this way: Carter won on the issues of defense and terrorism. He also had an edge on energy development. Reagan did best on SALT II ratification and the need for a balanced budget, and outpointed Carter on inner-city concerns. The argument over nuclear proliferation, the Equal Rights Amendment and the economy were tossups.

If a grade were to be given these candidates as debaters, I would awar them each a C-plus, but as politicians, both deserve A's.

They defined their respective positions. They offered the voters a clear-cut choice. They were willing to risk a direct confrontation. Those are the principles on which academic debate is founded, and is reassuring to watch those principles applied in the real world.

ABC telephone survey gets widespread criticism

NEW YORK (AP) — An unscientific ABC News telephone survey, taken after the presidential debate, is drawing fire not only from aides of President Carter, who lost in the survey to Ronald Reagan, but from ABC's own pollster.

Louis Harris, who regularly surveys public opinion for the network, said on ABC's "Nightline" program Wednesday night that he had examined the telephone technique and concluded that "it just couldn't be used for any kind of election time polling."

"Maybe for a Miss America contest, fun and games, but no way (politics)," he said. "And I have to say categorically that I was very surprised to find that ABC News was doing this."

What ABC did was pay American Telephone & Telegraph to count calls after the Carter-Reagan debate on Tuesday night on who "gained the most in this debate." AT&T took calls — charging each respondent 50 cents each — through seven regional receiving points.

The result after the 100 minutes permitted was 477,815 calls registered for Reagan and 243,554 for Carter — a 2-to-1 "defeat" for the president.

A scientific Associated Press poll of 1,062 voters questioned before and after the debate indicated a gain of 6 percent for each candidate, mostly from the ranks of the undecided.

ABC stressed throughout its survey that the poll was not scientific, but simply a bid to gauge quickly the impact of the debate on voters.

However, its results drew quick criticism.

"No credence at all should be given the figures," said Dr. George Gallup Sr., a leading poll taker.

Harris and Carter pollster Pat Cadell faulted the AT&T system because one side could "stack the deck" with repeated calls; Republicans, traditionally wealthier, could better afford to participate; non-activist voters, which Harris said might make up 70 percent of the electorate, probably would not call; the system failed to handle a heavy load of urban area calls, which might go to Carter; and many on the East Coast, where Carter is seen as strong, had gone to bed.

Carter press secretary Jody Powell said: "I don't think it will have much effect on the election one way or the other but it is sort of a shame that that sort of a thing which has no scientific basis at all and no credibility at all got as much attention as it did."

Double agent pleads guilty

BALTIMORE (AP) — The government says the Soviet KGB mobilized seven agents on three continents and paid out $92,600 trying to take full advantage of a debt-ridden former CIA agent who betrayed the United States.

A tale of treachery — with spies posing as diplomats; safe houses outside Vienna, Austria; and clandestine meetings arranged on shopping center pay phones — unfolded in the U.S. courthouse here Wednesday as former undercover CIA operative David H. Barnett pleaded guilty to one count of espionage.

The red-haired father of three, who now runs an export-import business and lives in an upper-middle-class home in Bethesda, Md., outside Washington, showed no emotion as Justice Department lawyer George Matava described what the government was prepared to prove if Barnett had not negotiated a plea bargain.

THE GOVERNMENT PORTRAYED the bespectacled 47-year-old as a man who quit the CIA in 1970 in search of more money. According to Matava, Barnett then failed as a businessman in Indonesia, where he had worked for the CIA, and, more than $100,000 in debt, turned to the KGB to barter his nation's secrets for cash in late 1976.

In the ensuing 3½ years, he proved an indifferent Soviet spy as well: he lied to the KGB, disobeyed orders, never fulfilled its ultimate goals and got caught by the FBI.

But he had managed to reveal the names of 30 CIA undercover agents, several foreign CIA collaborators and the details of a CIA undercover operation known as HA-BRINK, "one of its highest priority operations" in the 1960s, according to the government.

Matava said that HA-BRINK had obtained manuals and even parts from almost every weapon the Soviets sent a nation, which he did not name but which sources have said was Indonesia. The government said the CIA obtained details of SA-2 surface-to-air missiles, Styx naval cruise missiles and W-class submarines never available from any other source.

Matava said the information saved the lives of U.S. bomber pilots in Vietnam, because it enabled the United States to jam the SA-2's guidance system. He said the United States learned how long the W-class diesel submarines, which are still used in the Soviet navy, can stay submerged. Because of Barnett, Matava said, the Soviets have undoubtedly issued new tactical orders to submarine commanders to counter the advantage the U.S. Navy gained from that information.

Within a week after Barnett offered his services in late 1976 for $70,000 to the Soviet cultural attache in Jakarta, Indonesia, he was giving information to an agent called "Dmitriy," who gave him $25,000 in U.S. currency in $100s, $50s and $20s, the government said.

Dmitriy arranged for Barnett to meet other KGB men in Vienna in February 1977, and paid him $3,000 for expenses on the trip, Matava said. At a KGB safe house outside Vienna, Barnett turned more information over to a man called "Pavel."

U.S. intelligence sources say the Soviets have stationed in Vienna some of their best operatives working on U.S. affairs. "The trails of a dozen different cases have led through Vienna," said one source.

Later, in Vienna and Jakarta, Barnett was to meet other KGB men, known to him as "Mike," "Aleksei," "Igor," "Bob" and "George," Matava said. The KGB pressed him to get back into intelligence work, particularly with the CIA, the Defense Intelligence Agency or the State Department's Bureau of Intelligence and Research, Matava said.

THE GOVERNMENT CONTENDED the Soviets eventually paid Barnett a total of $92,600, more for his efforts to get bigger secrets than for what he actually gave them. Barnett resisted trying for a CIA job for fear a lie detector test required of full-time employees would uncover his Soviet work. But he did agree to try to get jobs on the Senate and House intelligence committees and the White House's Intelligence Oversight Board, the government said.

Those efforts failed, but at one point Barnett told the Soviets he had gotten one of those jobs, Matava said. Barnett also has claimed that he disobeyed KGB orders to contact Igor in Washington in 1978.

According to Matava, Barnett has identified a former third secretary of the Soviet embassy in Washington, Vladimir V. Popov, as Igor. Igor flew to Jakarta to introduce himself as Barnett's Washington control officer, Matava said.

Igor told Barnett the location of two pay phones near a suburban Virginia Exxon station that he would call at 3 p.m. on the last Saturday of each month to reach Barnett, the government said.

Barnett, in turn, supplied the numbers of other pay telephones in the Maryland suburbs where he could be reached at set times, but one time he transposed two numbers accidentally, rendering the system useless, Matava said.

The CIA took Barnett back as a part-time contract employee in Washington in January 1979 to train agents, and three months later, still short of money, Barnett re-established contact with the KGB. At a meeting in Jakarta, the Russians told Barnett they weren't interested in what he could obtain from the training job, paid his trip expenses and pressed him to try for full-time CIA work.

BUT ON MARCH 18 of this year, the FBI confronted him at his part-time CIA job and "after a short conversation with the agents, Barnett began his confession," Matava said.

U.S. District Judge Frank A. Kaufman accepted Barnett's plea after determining that it was voluntary. Barnett agreed to cooperate fully with the FBI and CIA, and Kaufman set sentencing for Dec. 8. At that time, the judge will receive the results of a lie detector test designed to show whether Barnett has held anything back.

Barnett faces a possible maximum sentence of life imprisonment. Assistant U.S. Attorney Daniel Goldstein said the government would make no recommendation on sentencing, but would give the judge a secret report on what other damage had been done and on what secrets he had withheld from the Soviets.

Barnett was released on his own recognizance.

Nixon testimony supports FBI break-in authority

WASHINGTON (AP) — In the same building where the legal battles over Watergate were fought, Richard M. Nixon walked into a federal courtroom and waved from the witness chair to a startled jury.

In dramatic testimony Wednesday at the trial of two former FBI officials, the former president said the FBI's director had authority to approve warrantless break-ins in foreign intelligence cases at the height of terrorist activity in the early 1970s.

"We must recognize," he said, "it was quite different than it is today."

Nixon's appearance in U.S. District Court evoked a sense of deja vu: The man who had been driven from the White House by a scandal stemming from a break-in was in court six years later to testify about other break-ins ordered during his administration in the interest of national security.

Moments after he began testifying, three persons interrupted with shouts of "War criminal" and "He's a liar." Secret Service agents rushed to Nixon's side, but the former president appeared unruffled and U.S. marshals ejected the hecklers.

Jurors, sequestered during the seven-week trial, appeared astonished when chief prosecutor John W. Nields Jr. called Nixon to the stand.

"How are you employed?" Nields asked.

"Retired," Nixon replied.

The former president's 45-minute testimony focused on the FBI director's authority to order warrantless searches and White House efforts to combat terrorism and the dissent swirling through the country during the Vietnam War.

The two former FBI officials on trial are W. Mark Felt, once the bureau's No. 2 man, and Edward S. Miller, former head of the domestic intelligence division. They are accused of violating individual civil rights by authorizing warrantless break-ins at the homes of friends and relatives of radical Weather Underground fugitives. If convicted, they face up to 10 years in prison and $10,000 fines.

The break-ins occurred in 1972 and 1973 — when, Nixon said, thousands of terrorist bombs were exploding across the country.

Nixon said the FBI director had authority from the president to authorize warrantless break-ins in foreign intelligence cases — the very point defense lawyers have been making.

Two of Nixon's former attorneys general, John N. Mitchell and Richard G. Kleindienst, testified Tuesday they never were asked to approve such break-ins.

Nixon also said there was "hard evidence that the Weathermen had very definite foreign connections," the standard that the defense and Nixon agreed must be met before a warrantless entry could be approved.

Telling jurors that he delegated to former FBI Director J. Edgar Hoover the authority to make decisions on warrantless break-ins, Nixon said: "In matters of foreign intelligence, the line went directly from the president to Mr. Hoover."

Hoover's successor, L. Patrick Gray III, had the same authority because it rested "with the office, not the man," Nixon said.

Felt and Miller have admitted authorizing the break-ins, but said Gray told them to resume the burglaries, which had been stopped by Hoover in 1966. Gray was indicted along with his former top aides but has been granted a separate trial.

Group claims responsibility for bomb

LONDON (AP) — A shadowy British neo-Nazi group known as Column 88 has telephoned news organizations to claim responsibility for sending a crude letter bomb to a Jewish Laborite lawmaker, and said it would be sending more "bombs to well known people."

The mass-circulation Daily Mirror and London's Thames Television said they received anonymous telephone calls Wednesday night, hours after Laborite lawmaker Frank Allaun, 67, got the package in the mail.

Allaun, a prominent member of the opposition Labor Party's national executive, said he was suspicious of the package and turned it over to Scotland Yard's bomb squad.

A Yard spokesman said the device was a can of lighter fluid wired to a battery designed to cause a spark and ignite the fluid when the package was opened. The spokesman said the left-wing lawmaker could have been badly injured had the device gone off.

The Mirror said the caller warned that Column 88 was waging a campaign against Jews in Britain. There are 410,000 Jews in this country, one of the largest Jewish communities in western Europe.

The paper quoted the caller as saying more "bombs to well-known people" were planned. A device similar to the one sent to Allaun was mailed to Arthur Scargill, militant leftwing leader of Yorkshire coalminers and a key strike strategist. It was not know if he is Jewish.

Scotland Yard said it stepped up surveillance of known right-wing extremists in response to the letter bombs, but the spokesman declined comment on the Column 88 claims, saying, "So far there is nothing to suggest a concerted campaign."

Pope's new guidelines seem to relax standards

VATICAN CITY (AP) — Pope John Paul II has ended a two-year freeze on granting dispensations from vows of priestly celibacy with guidelines that appear more relaxed than the standards used by Pope Paul VI, Vatican experts said today.

"It will depend on the Vatican's interpretation of the pope's guidelines," said a top-ranking Rome cleric who asked that his name not be used.

The new papal directive, which refers only to priests and not to nuns, was contained in a letter sent Wednesday to bishops and heads of religious orders from Cardinal Franjo Seper, the prefect of the Vatican's Sacred Congregation for the Doctrine of the Faith.

The Roman Catholic Church's celibacy rule is believed to be the reason for the sharp increase in the defections of priests in recent years. Defections are running at the annual rate of about 4,000, or one percent of the world's 400,000 priests. In the United States alone, nearly 8,000 priests are said to have left the priesthood since 1965.

In 1963, there were 167 requests for dispensation worldwide but by 1968 the number soared to 2,263 and most of them were granted by Pope Paul.

However, sources said Paul, who died in 1978, had tightened the rules in the last years of his pontificate and would not, for example, consider the case of a man only ordained for a few years.

The letter said the new "norms" are the results of a long study ordered by the pope "to determine the causes involved and to find a suitable solution" to the increasing requests for release from celibacy vows.

It includes the caution that "a process of such serious importance as this not be considered as a right which the Church should recognize indiscriminately.

"Equally to be avoided is the notion that a dispensation from celibacy in recent times can be considered to be the result of some quasi-automatic summary administrative process."

But one expert said the guidelines were "more precise and somewhat more relaxed than the ones used by Pope Paul," toward the end of his papacy.

The Vatican directive says it will now consider dispensations if the petitions fall under any of these categories:

"Priests who have left priestly life for a long period of time." This refers to priests who left priesthood and married outside the Church who may already have children.

"Priests who should never have been ordained priests because the necessary, responsible freedom to choose the ordination was lacking." A priest who entered priesthood "because that's what his parents wanted and he couldn't disobey them" will fall under this category, according to the cleric.

If, before ordination, a priest's superior misjudged his suitability for celibate life. A cleric seeking dispensation under this category will need supporting letters from the rector of his seminary.

In addition, the document said the Vatican will retain its practice of granting dispensation on grounds of physical and mental ailments.

Economist says poor countries may have to reduce food imports

WASHINGTON (AP) — Poor countries may be forced to reduce food imports because of increases in oil prices, an Agriculture Department economist says.

O. Halbert Goolsby, in the October issue of Foreign Agriculture magazine, said poor countries "may also be unable to purchase sufficient fertilizer, seed and equipment to boost food production enough to keep pace with their burgeoning populations.

"Or — in some cases — they might even be unable to maintain food output at current levels."

He suggests that if the United States and other major suppliers of food to poor countries want to maintain their levels of exports, they may have to increase the amounts of food they give to other countries as aid.

The United States gave $1.65 billion of food aid to other countries in the year that ended Sept. 30, and the Carter administration wants Congress to appropriate $1.72 billion in the current fiscal year. Food is the largest single item the United States exports.

Goolsby said poor countries are paying more to keep up with the interest on their foreign debt, and at the same time appear to be getting less money from their exported products.

He said the poor countries' reductions in food imports are not expected to be offset immediately by increased food imports by the countries benefitting from the oil price increases.

Although the 13 countries in the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries earned $207 billion last year and will probably earn more this year, they cannot spend all that money on imports, Goolsby said.

Baptists warned on political crusades

HOUSTON (AP) — The Christian Life Commission has warned Texas Baptists to beware of the individuals and groups who crusade to defeat a political candidate "soley because of his view on a single issue."

"No particular political or economic system or ideology can be equated with the will of God," said the commission's report Wednesday to the Baptist General Convention of Texas.

The 3,786 delegates, the most ever to attend a state Baptist convention, elect trustees and debate several resolutions before the three-day conference adjourns today.

Among the resolutions is a commendation of "The Baptist Standard," the denomination's weekly publication that conservatives claim has unfairly criticized their movement to gain control of the Southern Baptist Convention.

The commission's report referred to the so-called Christian New Right movement trying to rally Christians at the ballot box to elect candidates favoring conservative beliefs next Tuesday.

But the report warned Baptists to "be wary of movements which judge a public servant's Christian faithfulness soley on the basis of his stand on a few issues."

The commission, the convention's public affairs branch, also criticized those concerned about abortion and other controversial issues for "the patently unfair and immoral practice of crusading for the defeat of a candidate soley because of his view on a single issue."

In other business Wednesday, delegates re-elected the Rev. Carlos McLeod, of Plainview, as state president and refused to debate so-called liberalism in Baylor University's religion department.

Fundamentalists reportedly had hoped to force a debate on the recent appointment of Rev. H.J. Flanders as chairman of Baylor's religion department.

The meeting will be held at the THFC offices at 1600 W. 38th St., Austin.

Woman 'killed clone' of child

WICHITA FALLS, Texas (AP) — A psychiatrist told jurors that Patricia Ann Frazier sliced the heart from her 4-year-old daughter's chest last winter because she thought the child was "a clone" possessed by the devil.

Defense attorney Harold Lerew told jurors that he intended to prove Mrs. Frazier was insane at the time she carved the child's heart out with a butcher knife.

Police found the body of Khunji Wilson wrapped in a blood-soaked quilt on the front seat of a car on Feb. 22. Her heart had been cut out and wrapped in a washcloth near the body.

Rusk State Hospital psychiatrist Dr. S. Srinivason, testifying as the first defense witness Wednesday, said he believed the woman was a "paranoid schizophrenic."

"I don't think she understood the wrongfulness of her conduct, or could conform her behavior to the requirement of the law," he said.

The 25-year-old woman killed her child because she "thought it was evil," Srinivason said. "She felt that it was a clone of the baby...that the devil or something possessed the baby and she had to kill her."

Prosecutors wrapped up their case against the Wichita Falls woman Wednesday afternoon and defense testimony was to resume today.

Joe Blocher, staff devolopment coordinator for Taliaferro Community Health Center in Lawton, Okla., said he had talked with Mrs. Frazier before the child's death.

The woman had traveled to Oklahoma from Wichita Falls, and when Blocher asked her why she was in Lawton, "she said she was commanded to follow a red truck," he testified.

Earlier Wednesday, two prosecution witnesses testified Mrs. Frazier called them the night of Feb. 22 and said she had cut out the child's heart.

Five area teams still seeking titles

By MIKE CRUVER
Sports Writer

With only three short weeks left in the high school football season, five area schools are still in the thick of the battle for a district crown.

Stanton, kingpin of District 5-AA by ½-game over Plains with a 3-0-1 mark, faces O'Donnell in a key matchup that the Buffs need to win if they are to keep their title hopes alive.

Head Coach Steve Park hopes the spooky occurrances, four of five fumbles lost and missing a short field goald attempt that plagued the Buffs in their scoreless tie with Plains last weekend, will not spring up again this Halloween night.

O'Donnell, a junior-dominated club, jumped from the starting gate with three straight wins before being derailed 28-0 by Klondike. Opening district play, O'Donnell dumped Forsan, 19-0, before Morton thrashed the Eagles, 25-7. Plains continued the Eagle slide the next week by crushing O'Donnell, 41-0.

A tough defense has carried Stanton this far in the season. The Buff defense is surrendering 137.4 yards per contest, 717 on the ground and 383 through the air lanes. Opponents average a shade over 7 points per game against Stanton.

A key matchup in District 6-A has Greenwood entertaining Rankin. The Rangers, Wink and Irann stand 3-1 behind the Red Devils' 4-0 league mark. A Rankin win would just about wrap-up the district title as the Red Devils have already beaten Wink and Iraan.

Greenwood is hampered by the questionable status of its leading rusher. Mickey Somers was injuried and missed the Ranger victory over Balmorhea last week. Tailback Todd Brooks took up the slack against the Bears with touchdown runs of 50 and 37 yards.

With Somers and Brooks in the Ranger backfield it would put some added pressure on a very stubborn Red Devil defense. In its seven wins this season Rankin has allowed only 46 points. Offensively, the Red Devils have been rolling. In their last two games, the Red Devils have scored 68 and 61 points respectively. Of course, these scores were registered against two of the weaker teams in the district.

DISTRICT 6-AA opens district play on Halloween night when McCamey travels to Marfa and Van Horn entertains Clint. In non-district action, McCamey has a 5-2 mark and is considered the favorite to take the district title.

Marfa, 3-4, is not the offensive threat the Badgers are; scoring 121 points in its seven games while McCamey has put 186 tallies on the board in its seven outings.

Defensively, the clubs match-up quite close. Marfa has surrendered 105 points (15 points per game) while the Badgers have given up 108 (15.4 points per contest). Marfa gave up 37 points in its loss last weekend to Fabens. McCamey had the weekend off.

Another district getting into its first league games is District 6-AAA. None of the teams in the district have a winning record.

Crane was given the early season nod, but the Golden Cranes forgot to put points on the board as its record skidded to 0-6. In their first five outings the Cranes scored just 26 points.

Last weekend Crane errupted for 27 points, only to go down to a 35-27 defeat as Alpine scored 22 points in the final stanza for the win. Kevin Putty was the key offensive performer for Crane with help from quarterback Darryl Burton.

Crane fans hope the new found offense will carry over into the district race. Opening on the road at Coahoma, 2-4-1, the Golden Cranes will be looking for their fist win of the season to go along with a win in a league tilt.

IN OTHER action, Lamesa will try to get some help from the ghost and goblins in order to snap a three-game losing streak. The Tornadoes won their first two encounters then fell on hard times.

Pecos, 3-2 and 6-2 overall, will bring a three-prong rushing attack for the Tors to counter in the District 2-AAAA match. Three Pecos runners have over 250 yards for the season. Lamesa counters with Williams, sixth in the district with 479 yards on 119 carries and one touchdown.

Andrews, undefeated leader in District 2-AAAA, has the weekend off but will watch the Sweetwater-Fort Stockton clash in Sweetwater with much interest. A Mustang loss would give Andrews a two game lead in the district with only two contests left.

Sweetwater, on the other hand, wants to continue its Cinderella season and head into Andrews next week with only one district defeat.

This week's schedule
District 6-A
Buena Vista at Balmorhea; Sanderson at Grandfalls-Royality; Wink at Iraan; Rankin at Greenwood.
District 5-AA
Morton at Seagraves; O'Donnell at Stanton; Plains at Ropes; Forsan open.
District 6-AA
McCamey at Marfa; Clint at Van Horn.
District 9-AA
Eldorado at Reagan County; Wall at Junction; Mason at Menard; Ozona open.
District 6-AAA
Seminole at Denver City; Crane at Coahoma.
Distrit 2-AAAA
Fort Stockton at Sweetwater; Pecos at Lamesa; Monahans at Snyder; Odessa Ector at Lake View; Andrews open.

Astro partners want to oust McMullen

HOUSTON (AP) — If anyone should know the rights of a limited partner, it would be John McMullen, currently the beleaguered general partner of the Houston Astros.

McMullen was a limited partner in the ownership of the New York Yankees and he didn't like his silent role. So he purchased the Astros for $19 million and set up his own list of limited partners.

When McMullen fired popular Astros president and general manager Tal Smith on Monday, it created a furor among many of the 25 limited partners. Some of the group met in New York Wednesday to plan strategy for ousting McMullen.

It may be a difficult task.

Edward Randall, of Houston, and New York attorney David LeFevre, are among the most outspoken of the limited partners but they are proceeding cautiously.

They have not questioned McMullen's right to make unilateral decisions under the general partnership agreement.

Randall, whose firm handled the financial transactions when McMullen purchased the club, said however, the limited partners might try to prove their investments had been damaged by McMullen's actions.

LeFevre, a New York attorney who owns 10 percent of the Astros, declined to say how many of the limited partners attended Wednesday's strategy session or what approach they might take in challenging McMullen.

"Our basic philosophy is to do whatever we can to arrange the best possible management of the Astros," LeFevre said.

Asked how the limited partners might challenge the authority of the general partner, LeFevre said "That is subject to the partnership agreement and the laws of the land. We will go about it in the most thorough and professional manner and we won't rule out any options."

McMullen fired Smith and replaced him with former New York Yankee general manager Al Rosen without consulting the limited partners.

"It's not just the firing of Tal Smith that has all the partners upset," LeFevre said. "It's a series of things. The days of putting up with John McMullen's idiosyncracies are over. This has been brewing for a year. He has created tremendous ill-will among the limited partners."

McMullen says he told the limited partners from the beginning that they would have few rights.

"I think I've been very honest and fair with them," McMullen said. "If they are unhappy then I am sorry but I am going to act in what I consider to be the best interests of the Astros.

"My job begins when the season ends. I have to explore ways of improving the Astros. I think Al Rosen will add a new dimension to the Astros."

McMullen said he didn't think the limited partners had any legal grounds to overrule his decisions and that they shouldn't be discussing it through the media.

General managers meet behind closed doors

NORTH MIAMI BEACH, Fla. (AP) — The baseball general managers who gathered behind closed doors at a posh country club here didn't say very much after the first round of a three-day session.

But Wednesday's meeting at Turnberry Isle Country Club could lay the ground work for trades later this winter.

Although no major announcements appear to be forthcoming, one general manager said some names probably would be kicked around as trade bait after business sessions were concluded.

"There's really not much I can say. We're here basically to conduct our business, talk of the re-entry draft and other baseball matters," said Roland Hemond, Chicago White Sox vice president. "There probably will be some talk of trades."

Rumored possibilities include a multi-player deal between the St. Louis Cardinals and San Diego Padres and a deal that would send Boston outfielder Fred Lynn to Los Angeles.

The Orioles, who have trained in Miami for the past 22 years, are in the final year of a contract with the city and are seeking improved security in and around Miami Stadium.

The stadium, also home to the Class A Miami Orioles, is located in a deteriorating area of the city. Several violent incidents, including the fatal shooting of two fans between games of a doubleheader, marred the minor league club's season this year.

Players and fans complained that their cars were often pelted with bottles and rocks while leaving the stadium, especially after civil disturbances broke out in a neighborhood north of the stadium last May.

"At the moment, I'd say there are two problems that concern us most and in some ways they are related," said Peters. "No. 1, the lighting for the stadium is really inferior for major league competition. As a matter of fact, based on a light reading that was made this August, it's not even up to standards for a Class A club.

"The other factor is security due to the location of the stadium. We have not had any problems during spring training, but there were numerous problems for the Miami Orioles," Peters said. "Many of our players were apprehensive about playing there and the same applied to our staff people, coaches and instructors.

"We are trying to develop these young gentlemen and we don't like to put them into a situation where maybe they are apprehensive about playing and they don't play up to their full potential because of the apprehension."

Peters emphasized that the Orioles are generally happy with Miami and hope to remain.

Football tickets are still available

Tickets for the Midland High at Odessa High and Odessa Permian at Midland Lee games Friday night will be on sale at the Memorial Stadium ticket booth from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. today and from 8 a.m. until 1 p.m. Friday.

Assistant Athletic Director Edwin Nixon said there were plenty of tickets left for both games.

Kickoff is at 8 p.m. for the District 5-5A contests. League leading Permian, the only loop team without a loss this year, will meet Lee at Memorial Stadium while the MHS-OHS clash, a battle to stay in the thick of the race, will be held at Odessa's W.T. Barrett Stadium.

Howser trades barbs with owner of Yankees

NEW YORK (AP) — New York Yankees Manager Dick Howser and owner George Steinbrenner traded barbs Wednesday over the possibility that Don Zimmer would be hired as a coach of the team.

"I certainly should be given the courtesy of approving or disapproving the coaches that are added to the ballclub," said Howser, who said he had not been consulted about whether he wanted Zimmer, the former Boston Red Sox manager. "I have to work with these guys every day. Certainly, as a manager, I should be able to say who's going to coach and who's not going to coach."

Steinbrenner said he was "very angry" with Howser for his comment. "I don't appreciate Dick Howser popping off like this. Howser, I can't figure out. I am very upset. I am very disappointed in him.

"My staff is in agreement with everything I have projected and we're not quite ready for Dick Howser to start running the New York Yankees totally yet."

Howser said he wouldn't necessarily object to having Zimmer, who was fired as Boston Red Sox manager just before the end of last season.

"I'm not saying I couldn't work with Don Zimmer," the Yankees skipper said. "I respect his ability. But I still should be in a position as manager to approve or disapprove of our coaches. And I haven't heard a word from George."

Steinbrenner apparently offered Zimmer a coaching job if he doesn't get the manager's post with the Texas Rangers.

Steinbrenner said third base coach Mike Ferraro would be offered a 1981 contract, but he doesn't want him to coach at third base.

Jimmy The Greek, Musburger fight could boost ratings

By FRED ROTHENBERG
AP Sports Writer

Lots of co-workers get hot under their blue or white collars and take pokes at one another. It happens all the time. But when Jimmy the Greek and Brent Musburger try to bounce each other off the saloon wall, the vibrations can be heard all over CBS.

In this era of gossipy journalism, The Greek taking a punch at his "NFL Today" anchorman makes for a splashy headline and it will certainly bolster CBS' ratings Sunday when the curious tune in for a possible rematch.

And of course, no such thing will happen on the air. TV personalities may have varying degrees of the journalist in them, but underneath it all, they are entertainers, troopers if you will. The show must go on Sunday, and it will. The public rarely knows what's happening under the make-up and TV lights.

We can expect Musburger, the cool quarterback of the "NFL Today", and the informative Greek to make light of their fight, which happened last Sunday night at a midtown New York bar.

"When you're involved in a fight with America's oddsmaker, it's rather depressing because you realize there's no way you're gonna be the favorite," Musburger said Wednesday from his home in Los Angeles. "The punch landed, but it certainly was nothing. I don't feel it today."

The Greek said words that shouldn't have been said prompted him to lose his temper. After the one punch, the fight was broken up by Musburger's brother, Todd. The two combatants then went outside and made peace. "I was sorry, both of us were sorry. It was an unfortunate thing," The Greek said Wednesday from his New York office. He said the last time he was in a fistfight was in 1957.

But the underlying cause for the fight, why a 61-year-old man would try to sack a 39-year-old colleague, won't go away so easily. It involves "playing time," the amount of exposure the on-air personalities are getting on the tightly formatted "NFL Today".

"You just don't want to be forgotten about. I spend a lot of time and money putting my end of the show together and I have a lot to say. I would like to say it," The Greek said. "I like the kid. This is the only time we've ever had any troubles. After five years, we're allowed to have one stinking little argument."

This was the same issue that prompted Irv Cross to leave for game commentary before this season, only to rejoin the "NFL Today" team when Van Gordon Sauter became president of CBS Sports in July.

Sauter also convinced Phyllis George, who married the governor of Kentucky in 1979 and had a baby last June, to rejoin the show, which she did for the season's fifth week, Oct. 5. If 3 into the show's 21 editorial minutes didn't go, then 4 into 21 was worse mathematics.

And there are more problems.

Can the on-screen congeniality the cast displays remain believeable with the public once the show's dirty laundry is aired in the press?

Also of concern for CBS is how it handles the complaints of the cast. "She (George) wants to be more of a presence on the show, and she's pushing Brent for more time," a CBS source said.

Dealing with four egos is never easy, but it becomes even more difficult when the talented Musburger, the glue that holds the show together and CBS' star player, is talking with ABC Sports about jumping across the street when his contract expires in 1982.

"I assured Van Gordon Sauter immediately that this will have absolutely no affect on what I do," said Musburger, who listed ABC's inventory of the 1984 Summer and Winter Olympics and major league baseball as attractive inducements. "It's going to be the toughest decision of my life."

His fight with The Greek may or may not be proof that the special, yet fragile chemistry that has made the "NFL Today" so popular over the years is dissolving. The show still could be a success, even if the cast begins to resemble the 1977 Yankees.

Viewers are comfortable seeing Brent, The Greek, Phyllis and Irv every week, one reason for the show's ratings edge over NBC's lead-in football program, "NFL '80."

Bryant Gumbel's admirable one-man stands for NBC on Sundays, along with various correspondents in the field, don't achieve the same viewer identification, although each week Gumbel has impressed us immensely with his poise and intelligence under fire.

But although we applaud the format of the "NFL Today", the show can be better. We understand The Greek's frustrations. Besides Musburger and the show's production staff — some of whom were against George's return — The Greek's Grapevine and his analysis board are two of the best elements of the show.

When you know football and have a vast network of informed contacts, having to have Phyllis George control nearly 20 percent of the show's limited time with puff pieces hurts. Some feel the best "NFL Today" programs of the year were the first four — without Phyllis George.

When her interviews aren't very revealing, they shouldn't be used. It's not sexist to keep a woman who doesn't know football off the show. It is sexist to use worthless interviews (the Bum Phillips piece comes to mind), just because they were done by a woman.

Already this season, The Greek has tipped us that Chuck Muncie was heading to San Diego and that Bart Starr would survive the season at Green Bay. He even surprised studio guest Hollywood Henderson with the information he was Houston-bound.

As it usually does, for the show to remain cohesive is up to Musburger. He seems to relish the chance to display his talents under pressure for the public and two competing networks to see.

Backpack camping is one way to leave crowds

My wife, Joy, sat cross-legged before the dying embers of our campfire. With a stick she turned the foil-wrapped meal we brought in our backpacks. The blended aroma of steak and onions wafted from the foil packages and stirred appetites.

Other foil packages, nestled in the coals, contained baking apples. A kettle of water boiled and was ready for pouring into cups containing hot chocolate mix. Our first meal was nearly ready on our most recent family backpacking trip.

We parked our truck early that morning, and after shouldering our packs began our hike up Pine Springs trail heading towards Pine Top in Guadalupe Mountains National Park, some 50 miles north of Van Horn. We hiked a couple of miles and stopped at a small bench with a grand panoramic view.

It was an ideal spot for our camp. It was level and grassy, with enough trees and space to please everyone. We pitched our small tent near the edge of a clar area that over-looked hundreds of miles of valley floor. The tent stopped the wind and kept the bugs out.

The boys, veteran Boy Scout campers, roughed it somewhat, and built lean-to shelters using military surplus ponchos. Their 7-year-old sister slept under one on their shelters. They used waterproof ground clothes to stop the ground moisture from penetrating their sleeping bags.

CAMP WAS soon up and kids were out exploring. I brewed coffee, then Joy and I leaned against our packs to enjoy the peace and solitude. Joy reached into her pack for a bag of chocolate-chip cookies which we shared.

"This is such a nice spot to camp," Joy said. "It's so much nicer than campgrounds loaded with campers, tents and motorcycles. And it's so peaceful."

Joy has learned to enjoy backpack camping. The key to enjoying backpacking is to use only lightweight, quality equipment.

Her pack and frame are small and weigh little--just right for her petite size. The pack-bag is waterproof nylon and has two large zipper compartments. The bag has accessory pockets and has a place to secure a sleeping bag beneath it, attached to the frame.

Her sleeping bag is a light-weight, down-filled mummy style bag rated a zero. A mummy bag has many advantages for backpackers or any cold weather campers. A mummy bag is light weight by virtue of its body contour style. The contour style also limits the area your body must heat. The ideal bag for summer and fall camping should keep you warm in freezing temperatures and should not weight more than three pounds.

For comfort, a polyurethane foam pad is a necessity. A three-inch pad is light weight and turns rocky, uneven ground into a comfortable bed. A lightweight three-quarter pad is recommended because your torso needs the comfort more than your legs do. When using the smaller poly-pad, a waterproof groundcloth is needed to keep your legs dry.

Good hiking boots, with lug soles, must be included and they should be worn with two pairs of socks--wool over cotton. It's wise to include a package of moleskins in your pack for use on blisters and sore feet.

THE BACKPACKERS wardrobe should include long pants, long-sleeved shirt, a rain hat, a poncho and a warm sweater.

Now through spring is the best time for backpacking. Daytime temperatures aren't too unpleasant for the exertion of hiking with a load on your back and night-time temperatures are fantastic for sleeping with your head snuggled down in the sleeping bag.

Meals are planned in advance and foodstuffs were divided up by everyone. Our young daughter carried the last weight and I had the most. Pack weights should ieally be kept at 20 to 25 percent of body weight at maximum.

These ideal maximum weights are only for hikes when personal comfort is of utmost importance. I've carried upwards of 150-200 pounds on my back when the weight consisted of cape, horns and meat of a big game animal.

Our family outing into the Guadalupes was short of a three-mile hike with one overnight stay. Food for such a short trip should present no weight problems. Water is a problem in these West Texas mountains though as none is available that can be counted on. All your water must be carried in. I used a couple of 5-quart plastic water containers purchased at a surplus store.

We ate prepared foil meals for dinner and pancakes and bacon for breakfast. Meals were supplemented by raisins, candy and dried fruit.

Trained hunting dogs can be asset

KENNY REDIN'S

Fin & Feather

There are some things about dogs that didn't seem to fit into the previous sections on breeds, but which need to be said.

Before we forget it, did you know that a good hunting dog can often open locked gates? It's a fact. We've known farmers with tightly posted land to have a sudden change of heart when they see a hunting dog in the back of the car. Maybe they figured no crippled birds would be lost. Most likely, they figured anyone with a trained dog was a responsible hunter with some real stakes — and they were right. Awhile back, we heard of an outdoor writing friend, Gene LeTournea, the eminent Maine outdoor writer. He said, "Our four fine English setters my friends use for quail, woodcock and grouse make a lot of good friends for us wherever we gun."

And a few words in defense of field trials:

YOU WILL hear hunters say that field trials are not only a high-falutin' waste of time, but they don't prove a thing about the real hunting abilities of a dog. Granted, the field trial campaigners are often trained to perform in ways that a practical hunter would neither expect or want. But out of all that comes something more important than a blue ribbon and a fleeting hour of fame. The real value of field trials is improvement of the breed, and the elevation of dog performance in the hunting field.

Maybe a hell-for-leather field trial champion isn't what a typical hunter would choose for his all-around gun dog. But the champion does have many of the qualities that a hunter wants in a high-class dog: stamina, speed, intelligence, style, dash, and scenting ability of a high order. Of course, the ordinary hunter maybe far more interested in results than in style or performance. But just as a good road car owes a lot to the finely-tuned formula racer, so your day-to-day gun dog owes much to the field trial stock that maintains the classic standards of the breed.

FIELD TRIALER or meat dog, he deserves good care. If your hunting dog has normal good health, it's not hard to maintain that health and the good field performance that goes with it. At the top of the list are the basic hepatitis, rabies and distemper innoculations and examinations by a good vet. Dogs should be checked regularly for worms and wormed as needed. In regions where heartworm is prevalent (and this dangerous parasite is extending its range) it is essential to keep your dog on medication during the mosquito months.

A great part of your dog's health depends on his daily life and the quality of his food, kennel, and regular exercise. Some hunting dogs never see a doghouse or kennel run. They spend their lives in the same quarters as folks.

This doesn't ruin them as hunting dogs in spite of the old yarns. Still, a dog deserves a fenced run and a good doghouse, there are times when a dog would rather be outdoors than in, and plenty of times when that's where you'll want him!

A proper kennel area must be kept clean and sanitary and should be floored with concrete, gravel or crushed rock. There should be some shade in summer, and a dry, snug doghouse for bad weather.

AT HOME, the hunter has special obligations to his dog. In the field, certain obligations extend to his companions, as well.

Two common situations may develop that present special problems: a seasoned gun dog and hunting companions who know nothing about shooting over dogs, and experienced companions and a raw, young dog.

In either case, some preliminaries are in order. If you have a finished dog and green companions, you must let them know what to expect. The main thing is to tell them (diplomatically, if possible) that you and only you will be handling the dog, and don't need any help. Do it in a polite and friendly way, but leave no doubt in anyone's mind. And before you take a young dog afield, it's only courteous to ask your hunting buddies if it's O.K. After all, it's their hunt, too. If they seem hesitant, either leave the dog at home or go hunting alone--and the latter course is probably best, anyway. But if they're real huntes, chances are they'll say sure, by all means bring the pup and give him some work--he'll never learn by staying home.

When the boot's on the other foot, there are certain do's and don'ts when you're afield with another man's dog.

KEEP YOUR comments, advice and criticism to yourself unless asked. Don't even be critical if the dog breaks a covey or flushes a pheasant ou of gun range. You might never have seen the birds without the dog, anyway. One of the biggest boors afield is the guy who feels qualified to pass judgment on another man's dog and doesn't hesitate to do so--even though he's never owned or trained a hunting dog in his life.

About as bad is the guy who talks constantly of the superdogs he's known, comparing them to this mutt that you call a hunting dog. Over the years, we have noticed something interesting; those great dogs are always somewhere else, and unavailable. They're dead and buried, or were sold to people who moved away with no forwarding addresses. But somehow, those wonderdogs of yesteryear are never around to hunt birds today.

College thinkers start in 8th grade

ATLANTA (AP) — Some student athletes in Georgia are spending two years in the eighth grade, not because of academic failures but because their parents hope an extra year of football eligibility will help them win college scholarships.

A joint legislative committee looked at the practice this year during its study of the Georgia High School Association, which sets rules for extracurricular activities in the state. The panel asked the state Department of Education earlier this month to find out how widespread the practice is.

GHSA rules allow students to play football for only four years once they enter the ninth grade, no matter how long they take to finish high school. But officials noted that the eligibilty rule can be beaten by "retaining" a student at the eighth grade level, where GHSA rules don't apply.

"There is a great deal of controversy in some areas of the state," GHSA Executive Director Bill Fordham said Wednesday, adding that the education department, not his organization, rules on eighth grade eligibility. "I think you can see by our policy that we're opposed to holding them back a year simply for athletics."

Crisp County High School coach Ferrell Henry, who is opposed to the practice, said the extra year is a big edge in the competition for college scholarships.

"If some kind of study was done on the number of athletes held back, I think it would show that quite a high percentage rate are getting scholarships," he said. "The key to it all is a 19-year-old playing against 16, 17 and 18-year-olds. That's a big year at that age level. They're grown men by 19."

The practice also has dangerous drawbacks, said Cal Adamson, associate state superintendent of schools, who is studying the practice at the request of the legislative committee.

"While it can be beneficial to youngsters in terms of maturity and athletic ability, it can be psychologically damaging to a student who is retained and does not live up to what is expected of him by remaining back. This sometimes happens," he said.

A student does not have to fail a grade to be left back, Dr. Adamson said. "The parent simply elects for the child to repeat the grade for any number of reasons."

Parents who decide to let their children stay back to play football often say the child is immature and the extra year will be beneficial for reasons other than athletics, he said. They say it does no harm and is not unfair to other students because many children begin school a year late and others repeat earlier grades.

Adamson said the first step in his study is to "try to determine if there is a significant number of eighth graders retained in comparison to the number of retainees in other grades."

If there is, "we'll start doing further research into individual school systems. Going from that point, we'll try to isolate school systems that are guilty," he said.

Lee, MHS meet today

San Angelo, which shared the first half title with Abilene Cooper, can win the overall title outright, but must beat unbeaten Big Spring to accomplish the trick. Cooper has lost two matches in the second half and is out of the running.

Roughnecks host ACU

The Midessa Roughnecks will host Abilene Christian University at 2 p.m. Sunday at Hogan Park. The Roughnecks, composed of players from Midland and Odessa, take an 11-1-1 record into the soccer game.

Victories have come over Hobbs' All-Stars, twice; Carlsbad All-Stars, New Mexico Military Institute, undefeated for two years; ACU A & B teams and Texas Tech, ranked second in the SWC.

MC hosts fall invitational net tourney

There will be three teams each in the men's and women's play, according to Midland College tennis coach Brian Gilley. Entered in the men's competition are New Mexico Military Institute, Hardin-Simmons University, and Midland College. Teams from New Mexico Military Institute, South Plains College, and Midland College will be playing in the women's events.

Play begins Friday afternoon and continues on Saturday morning.

In the team tournament, each players competes in singles and doubles against his or her counterparts on the other team. Winners are determined by the number of total matches won.

"The team tournament allows all players, regardless of ability, to play the same numer of matches," Gilly said, "The points won by the lower ranked playes are as important as those of the top players."

Bullpups, Brigade test Odessa teams tonight

Coach Tim Whalen sends his unbeaten Midland High Bullpup junior varsity against the Odessa High JVs today at 7 p.m. in Memorial Stadium while Ernie Johnson's Midland Lee Stonewall Brigade travels to Odessa to take on the Permian JV at the same time.

Midland had a close call in nipping the San Angelo JV, 7-6, last Thursday night in San Angelo. The difference in the game came on a 65-yard punt return for a touchdown by junior Wesley Williams. Whalen's crew is now 6-0-0, but is weakened somewhat with the loss of five players to the varsity. The moves were made when there were some injuries on the varsity.

Lee shut out Big Spring, 29-0, last week and sports a 3-2-0 record while OHS brings a 4-2-0 reading into its game with the Bullpups tonight.

Permian lost 19-14 to Abilene Cooper's JV last weekend in the final 15 seconds in Abilene. Permian is 4-2-0 on the year.

In sophomore action last weekend, San Angelo blasted Midland, 47-0, and Hobbs, N.M. beat Lee, 24-12. Abilene's sophomores beat Stamford, but the score was unavaliable.

Tonight, the Lee sophs travel to Lamesa for a 7:30 p.m. game while on Saturday, San Angelo is at Abilene; Cooper at Stamford and OHS is at Permian.

Permian's sophs are 4-1-0 on the year while Midland is 4-2-0 and Abilene 4-1-0. Lee is next with a 3-2-0 mark.

Spurs give up draft pick

SAN ANTONIO, Texas (AP) — The San Antonio Spurs have agreed to give the New Jersey Nets their No. 1 draft pick in 1981 as compensation for signing 6-11 center George Johnson, team publicist Wayne Witt announced Wednesday.

Johnson, a defensively strong player ranked second in the NBA in blocked shots, signed with the Spurs during the offseason and has helped San Antonio jumped to a 9-2 record.

Rogers chases Heisman as Gamecocks soar

COLUMBIA, S.C. (AP) — For all the noise that is being made over him, George Rogers Jr. may be one of the quietest people around.

He gets plenty of opportunity to talk with sportswriters from all over the nation who want to interview one of college football's hottest running backs.

Rogers gives the interviews — up to an hour and a half at a stretch — but always in a soft Georgia drawl.

Rogers is the leading ground gainer of the offense-minded South Carolina Gamecocks. He has carried the ball 169 times for 1,089 yards in seven games for an average of 6.4 yards per carry this season.

Last year he was seventh in the voting for the coveted Heisman Trophy, the award presented to the nation's top collegiate player, and the school's public relations department is pushing him for the prize this season.

The senior tailback says he tries not to let the chase for the Heisman preoccupy him. "The Heisman is a dream. It's something every running back thinks about," he says. "More than anything, it's an effort.

"I'm a candidate. That makes me feel good. If we win games, everything else will take care of itself."

Rogers' soft-spoken, modest personality fits the Gamecocks, a team eager to prove it is better than its No.14 national ranking.

"George still doesn't know how good he is," says Coach Jim Carlen, who recruited Rogers while transforming South Carolina from an also-ran into a ranked team.

"When the offensive linemen come off the field at the end of a game, they want to know how many yards they got for him, but George doesn't ask," he said.

Tight end Willie Scott says the linemen are proud of Rogers' record of 17 straight games of more than 100 yards. "We tell George, 'don't worry, we'll get you a hundred,'" he says.

On a recent afternoon, the All-American back granted an interview in the Gamecocks dressing room.

But first he stepped onto the scales, which gave him a reading of 223 pounds. He stands 6-foot-2, runs the 40 in 4.47 seconds and bench presses 375 pounds.

Asked if the constant requests for interviews disrupt his studying, he replies, "It interferes with it a whole lot, especially when I talk to reporters at night.

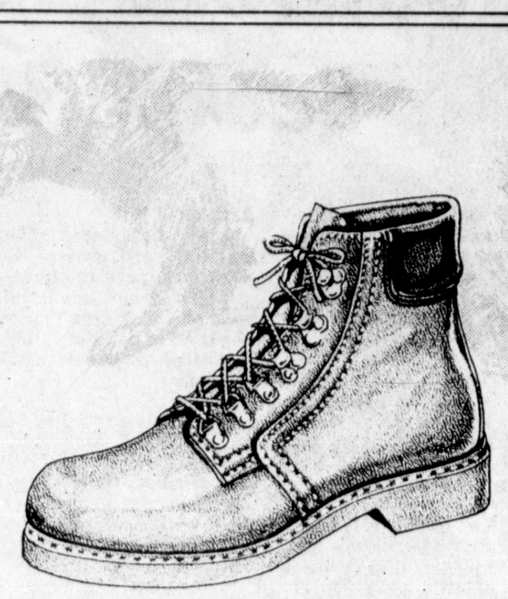

"The school needs the publicity real bad," he adds. "The better we do and the more we talk to the media, the better it is."

Kings fire John Begzos

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — The general manager of the Kansas City Kings National Basketball Association franchise, John Begzos, apparently has been fired, the Kansas City Times reported today.

The newspaper said sources close to the club who are friends of Begzos expect an announcement today confirming the firing.

Questioned about the report Wednesday night, Begzos said, "My only comment is, 'No comment.'"

Phoenix Suns improve record to 8-1

By The Associated Press

The Phoenix Suns will become the stars of the National Basketball Association if they can keep playing defense in the tradition of the old Boston Celtics and New York Knicks teams.

The Suns improved their record to 8-1, best in the NBA so far, with a 105-89 victory over the San Diego Clippers Wednesday night. It was the fifth straight victory for the Suns and the fifth straight time they held the opposition under 100 points, a stretch during which the defense has allowed an average of only 88 points per game.

"They pressed us full court and got us into a bad situation, forcing us into 37 turnovers in the game," said San Diego Coach Paul Silas, who learned a few things about defense in his long NBA career. "We just can't lay back and let teams pick us apart like that."

Forward Len "Truck" Robinson scored 23 points and guard Dennis Johnson, a perennial all-league defensive performer, added 21 to pace Phoenix offensively.

But it's the defense that has Coach John MacLeod raving.

"We are very fortunate to be where we are right now," McLeod says. "We're playing together as a unit, which is a big difference from last season. No one guy can play good defense, its got to be a team thing. I think we're legitimate, it's not a fluke. This year's team is a lot more agressive defensively, we won't back down when things get sticky. The 'want to' attitude is very big on the team this year. The desire, the drive is there."

Rockets 109, Mavericks 103

Moses Malone scored 38 points and grabbed 21 rebounds and Houston staved off a fourth-quarter rally by Dallas.

The Rockets led 70-54 in the third quarter before the expansion Mavericks fought back to tie the game 82-82 going into the fourth period.

Jazz 109, Spurs 96

Adrian Dantley and rookie Darrell Griffith combined for 29 points as Utah outscored San Antonio 42-22 in the fourth quarter to break the Spurs' eight-game winning streak.

Dantley scored 17 in the final period and 38 for the night, while Griffith pitched in 12 in the fourth quarter and 27 in the game. In addition, Griffith held three-time NBA scoring champion George Gervin to 10 points.

Bucks 132, Nets 116

Sixth-man Junior Bridgeman came off the bench to score 26 points to lead Milwaukee to its eighth straight victory.

New Jersey trailed by 15 points in the third quarter but managed to hit five baskets in a row to cut the lead to five. But Bridgeman made five baskets as the Bucks responded with a 20-4 streak to put the game away.

Kings 115, Blazers 98

Otis Birdsong tallied 26 points and five other Kansas City players scored in double figures as the Kings won their third game in four outings.

76ers 115, Bulls 102

Philadelphia won its sixth straight game as Darryl Dawkins scored 20 points and Steve Mix and Maurice Cheeks added 19 apiece.

Pacers 102, Knicks 95

Billy Knight scored 27 points to lead Indiana over New York, which fell out of first place in the Atlantic Division.

Celtics 103, Pistons 85

Robert Parish scored 23 points to lead Boston over Detroit, which lost its eighth game in nine decisions.

Warriors 115, Nuggets 109

Bernard King scored 27 points and combined with Larry Smith for two crucial three-point plays as Golden State won its fifth game in a row at home.

Big Ten puts Illini under investigation

CHICAGO (AP) — Faculty representatives of the Big Ten Conference are investigating whether the University of Illinois is complying with conference rules regarding eligibility of student athletes, conference officials have announced.

The investigation stems from a controversy centered around Illini quarterback David Wilson, who is embroiled in a dispute with the conference over whether he is eligible to play football. He has taken the Big Ten to court over the matter.

"This investigation, and many others which the conference conducts, reflects long-standing conference traditions and principles," the Big Ten said in a statement Wednesday. "Student-athletes must be first and foremost students who meet conference-wide academic standards."

The release said the Big Ten's regulations require "a thorough investigation in any instance where a possibility of a violation of conference requirements may exist." It set no timetable for completing the inquiry.

The Chicago Tribune disclosed last week that the investigation was in progress. Neale Stoner, Illinois athletic director, said at the time that the university was meeting conference standards regarding academic eligibility of student-athletes.

The conference said it seeks to determine "whether the University of Illinois is in compliance with conference principles of institutional responsibility and faculty control and with the conference's eligibility procedures."

The conference defines institutional responsibility as each member school's adherence to Big Ten regulations. It said faculty control means a group of faculty members at each university has responsibility for developing policies concerning athletics and eligibility and supervising compliance with conference standards.

Cowboy start suits Landry just fine

DALLAS (AP) — In Thousand Oaks, Calif., during the dog days of their July training camp, a 6-2 start for his Dallas Cowboys was more than Coach Tom Landry could wish.

Featuring a new starting quarterback and a green secondary, Landry could see some hard times until the two units jelled. He was so worried about his defense he spent most of training camp working with that side of the line of scrimmage.

"Our team is where I hoped it would be," said Landry. "I felt our offense could do a lot of things it has done.

"But our defense was almost an impossible question. But we kept working and hustling and doing the things we had to do."

Would he take another 6-2 down the National Football League's back stretch?

"I'd take another 6-2 and not suit up," Landry quickly answered.

He added "the toughest part of our schedule is coming up.'

Landry refused to concede the National Conference East to the Philadelphia Eagles, who own a one game lead. He also pointed out the Cowboys and Eagles are in good shape for a wild card berth which goes to runner-up teams with superior records.

"We expect to win the east and won't give it up," said Landry. "Of course, if we're not the champions I'd like to be in the playoffs anyway we can get there."

"We have the ingredients...we have a chance to be in the Super Bowl," said Landry. "We definitely have a chance for the East (division) and if we keep improving and playing at the level we have been we could get to the Super Bowl with a few breaks."

The Cowboys play in St. Louis Sunday, travel to the New York Giants, host St. Louis, Washington and Seattle, go to Oakland and Los Angeles, then entertain Philadelphia in the season windup at Texas Stadium Dec. 21.

Dan Reeves open to Auburn position

AMERICUS, Ga. (AP) — Offensive coordinator Dan Reeves of the National Football League's Dallas Cowboys says he would consider accepting a job as head football coach at Auburn if Doug Barfield is fired.

Reeves, a former Americus resident who has been placed on a list of possible candidates, told The Americus Times-Recorder on Wednesday he would "definitely consider the head coaching position at Auburn University if the position were offered."

Several names have been mentioned as successors to Barfield, including Florida State Coach Bobby Bowden, Bobby Collins of Southern Mississippi and Pat Dye of Wyoming.

One year remains on Barfield's contract, but alumni reportedly will attempt to buy out the contract when Auburn's 12-member Board of Trustees meets Nov. 7.

Barfield has been under attack this year at Auburn as the Tigers have fallen to 4-3, were defeated 42-0 by Tennessee and are winless in the Southeastern Conference.

"This talk about Barfield being ousted is all premature and nothing official has been done," said David Housel, assistant sports information director at Auburn.

"We're working with fact (at Auburn) rather than with speculation and Auburn's Board of Trustees is not scheduled to meet until Nov. 7 when the Barfield matter presumably could be reviewed," said Housel.

Housel said Reeves' name has been mentioned unofficially, in addition to several others.

Jim Rice blasts Red Sox

BOSTON (AP) — Jim Rice, slugging Boston Red Sox outfielder, says the American League club would make a "big mistake" by trading centerfielder Fred Lynn or shortstop Rick Burleson and suggests players with long-term contracts might think about leaving the team.

Rice has a seven-year contract he signed for a reported $700,000 a year in 1979.

"They should have signed them to long-term contracts earlier," Rice said of Lynn and Burleson in an interview published Wednesday in the Boston Herald American.

"If they should lose either one, other people with long-term contracts might start thinking of leaving. There's nobody in the minor league system to replace either one. What would happen to the team if they were to go?

"We have no centerfielder to replace Freddie. The same with Burleson. Who would replace him?

"I feel you should take care of the guys who produce. The owners created the high salaries, and I think starting players like Fred and Rick should be signed.

"I don't know what they want. But good players should be paid in the same range. My opnion is to sign Lynn, Burleson and Carlton Fisk. Take care of the guys who have produced for you."

The Red Sox have disclosed they are close to dealing away Lynn to the Los Angeles Dodgers. Lynn and Burleson have said they have received no contract offers.

Mile gap blocks Pan American highway

By JOE FRAZIER
Associated Press Writer

CHEPO, Panama (AP) — The end of the road is here, in a sleepy village that stews quietly in the tropical sun. The Pan American Highway, intended to stretch from Alaska to the tip of South America, changes from pavement to gravel, eventually runs over a bridge and halts in the jungle and swamps.

This is the Darien Gap, the last 250 uncompleted miles of the 16,000-mile project conceived in 1923. Mostly jungle and swamp, the gap makes a direct overland voyage between the north and south virtually impossible, although a few adventurers have done it. The less adventurous go either by air or sea to Colombia where the highway picks up again.

Environmental questions, money and hoof and mouth disease among Colombian cattle keep the highway from completion.

Spain's King Charles V envisioned such a road four centuries ago but it was not until 1936 that the American republics signed a binding agreement to complete the project.

From 1930 to 1963 the stretch from Laredo, Tex., to Panama City was built with the United States paying two-thirds of the costs except for the Mexican and El Salvadoran portions, which were paid for by those countries.

A separate agreement among the United States, Panama and Colombia in 1971 continued that arrangement and Congress authorized $100 million to complete the Darien Gap portion in Panama and Colombia.

About half of that had been appropriated through 1978, and none since.

"It's hard to convince congressmen to support money for a highway through the jungle in Panama when highways in their own states are suffering and need work," said John S. O'Marr, an executive officer with the Federal Highway Administration assigned to the project in Panama City.

Lawsuits filed in the United States by four U.S. environmental groups in 1975 held up work for more than two years until a statement was filed on the highway's impact. The groups argued that even though the project was not in the United States, the impact statement was needed because federal funds were involved.

Since Congress has halted appropriations, Panama has been paying the whole cost of the construction, with the United States promising to pay back its two-thirds share if Congress authorizes more money.

The Panamanian government, however, has severe economic problems and specialists here question how much longer they can or will keep footing the whole bill.

"If there's no more money in the next year or so I guess we'll all just go home," said O'Marr, whose staff has been cut to only a few.

U.S. Transportation Secretary Neil Goldschmidt visited the gap last January and promised to support further funding for the project.

Much of the money Panama is using for the project now is from International Development Bank loans. The United States is overseeing the work, "representing the bank's interest on the job," as O'Marr put it.

The United States is limited to design work on the Colombian part of the project, which includes the difficult Atrato Swamp.

Your horoscope

By JEANE DIXON

Friday, October 31, 1980

YOUR BIRTHDAY TODAY: Actress Barbara Bel Geddes, who plays "Miss Elly" on the TV hit show "Dallas," shares this birthday with you. Nothing makes those born on this day happier than the opportunity to win in a battle of wits! In the months just ahead, you get a number of chances to advance career aims, and money woes should become a thing of the past. Romance will produce both unusual contentment and some new personal goals. Show your deep commitment to romantic partner.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): If attending a party or social function, do not make companion uneasy by discussing personal problems. Put worries aside for awhile and join in the fun!

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Your career concerns may bore an old friend, find conversation topics in which both of you are interested. Getting an associate to consent to an unusual request may be easier than anticipated.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Romance is heightened in unusual circumstances, surroundings. You have high hopes regarding a new business or career contact. Follow up on friend's suggestion.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Break away from your everyday routine, and brush up on a special skill or sport. Co-workers are congenial, talkative. Be careful not to fritter away the afternoon!

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): An office tug-of-war can lead to both fireworks and constructive change. Career-minded individuals receive help from influential friends without having to ask for it.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Behind-the-scenes activity can advance career aims. Answer letters promptly and return all phone calls. Restore friend's faith in the power of love by keeping promise to parents.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): The emphasis is on diversification, so expand your horizons. Developments in the areas of communication, education hold special promise. Keep any promises made to offspring.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): A personal dilemma may be uppermost in your thoughts. Have it out with the individual involved at the earliest opportunity. A child may ask for something inappropriate. Offer an attractive alternative.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): A chance meeting with a former associate could ruffle a few feathers. Stay on the sidelines when colleagues do battle. This is one fight in which there will be no clear winner.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): A last-minute change in plans works to your benefit. Re-evaluate a mutual assistance agreement. You may be giving a lot more than you could ever expect to gain.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Patch up an argument without further delay. Avoid sounding skeptical about loved one's pet project. In all likelihood it will be highly successful!

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Choose to discover more about your natural talents. Chances for breaking new ground in your chosen field are excellent now. Pay more attention to details, costs.

Opening lead: Seven of ♠.

On fiercely competitive hands where each side has one or two long suits, it often pays to "bid one more" rather than try for a penalty. It is usually impossible to judge the potential of the hand accurately. You can be sure that even if you go down by bidding on, it is not going to be expensive. But failure to defeat your opponents can cost dearly.

To facilitate a rebid, East chose to open one spade. After South's normal two diamond overcall, the bidding headed for the stratosphere. Everyone got into the act, and when South chose to double five hearts, North decided that he did not like his defensive prospects — the contract would have been defeated only two tricks with accurate defense. He pulled to six diamonds and East wielded the axe.

North was skeptical about his side's chance to score a heart trick, so he led the seven of spades. East's ten forced the ace, and declarer was on the right track when he led the queen of diamonds and rose with the ace when West did not produce the king — it was unlikely that East had doubled with a diamond void.

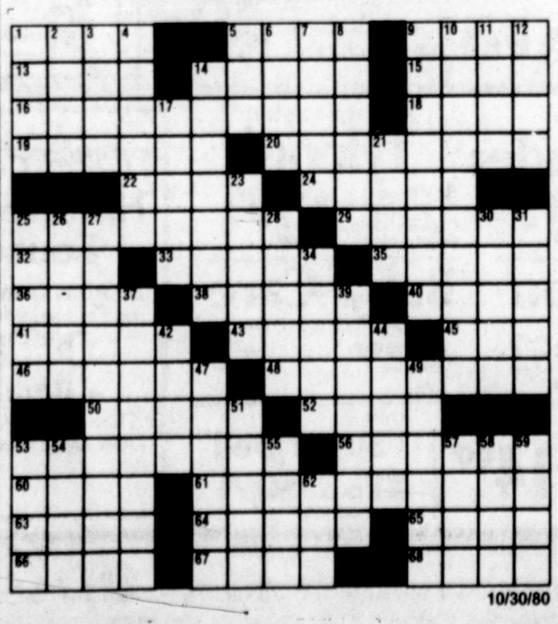

A successful club finesse was followed by a heart ruff in dummy and another club finesse. When the king of clubs dropped under the ace, dummy's ten of clubs was high. Declarer crossed to the table with a trump, sluffed a spade on the good club and claimed his slam, losing only a spade trick.

East should not have doubled. Holding an aceless hand, a singleton king in the suit bid to his left and length in the suit in which partner was known to have six or seven cards, the least he could have done was pass the decision to his partner. West quite likely would have chosen to save at six hearts rather than defend.

London Times stirring up interest in North America

TORONTO (AP) — The editor of The Times of London says he is meeting publishers in North America this week to stir up interest for his plan to raise about $43 million to ensure the newspaper's future.

"The support for what we're trying to do is absolutely incredible," William Rees-Mogg said Tuesday. "We've obviously taken a very big step forward."

Rees-Mogg was in Toronto to present his idea to Kenneth Thomson, who announced last week he would close The Times and its sister publication, The Sunday Times, if no buyers are found by March.

Under Rees-Moog's proposal, the financial ties binding the two newspapers would be severed with The Sunday Times continuing as a conventional operation under the direction of new owners.

The Times, however, would be taken over by a consortium of journalists and management. He said to sidestep opposition that British newspaper unions have to new computer technology, the printing itself would be contracted out.

Special area kids get swim lessons, gymnastics

Thanks to the Alamo YMCA and the Midland Independent School District, 15 children at Bonham Elementary School are getting a chance to learn swimming and participate in gymnastics...a chance they otherwise might not have had.

The children in the program are in a special education class. Fourteen of the children are mentally retarded and one has cerebral palsy.

Every Tuesday and Thursday, for one hour in the afternoon, the children walk with their teachers aide, Cloris Thurston, to the Alamo YMCA, a United Way agency, and either swim or work in the gym.

The program is designed to teach the children the skills needed to participate in a regular Physical Education class and therefore mainstream them into a regular P.E. program, says Cloris.

Cloris has a degree in recreational therapy and is a qualified instructor in Adapted Aquatics, which is water safety for the handicapped.

This is the second year she has taught the class. Last year she taught the Bonham students while working full-time at Alamo YMCA.

"I enjoyed working with these children and wanted to do it all the time, so I applied for the position with the school district," Cloris says.

Some of the activities the children participate in are swimming, tumbling and gymnastics, including work on the balance beam.

"The children are particularly good on the balance beam, but they enjoy swimming most of all," she said.

"At the beginning of the year we have children who are even afraid to put their faces in the water," Cloris says. "We work with each child to help build their confidence and skills.

"I think the most important part of the program is giving these children a chance to participate in activities they have never done before," she added.

"This year we started teaching the kids to play baseball and most of them had never played before. The kids not only develop physical skills, but also social skills from participating," she says.

Not only are Cloris, the YMCA and the school district supportive of the program, but also the children's parents.

Cloris says, "Before year, several parents called to find out why we hadn't started yet this year."

All of the parents gave their consent for the children to participate, she said.

Cloris hopes the program can be expanded to include more children.

"The children in the program now are ages 7 to 13. It would be great if we could expand the program to include other age groups and mentally retarded adults," she says.

In addition to the program for the mentally retarded, the YMCAs in Midland organize and conduct programs for children, adults and senior citizens.

Programs include: swimming for parents and tots, parents and preschoolers, school age children, women and men, including basic swimming, lifesaving, basic rescuing and scuba, gymnastics, fitness testing, parent child programs, aerobic dancing and fitness, karate, western dance, CPR classes in conjunction with the Red Cross, gym and swim programs, team sports and many more activities and programs.

Alamo YMCA, Washington YMCA and Park Center YMCA are funded through the United Way of Midland, membership and program fees and private contributions.

The Metropolitan YMCA, which is the administrative branch of all the Midland area YMCAs, is funded through United Way of Midland, Inc., private contributions and association fees.

The Midland YMCAs are just 4 of the 18 agencies supported by the United Way of Midland, Inc., which provides services to people in our community.

Protesters block pass

INNSBRUCK, Austria (AP) — A blockade of the Brenner Freeway — one of Europe's busiest Alpine passes to Italy — continued today with hundreds of demonstrators threatening to stop all north-south traffic, which on busy days numbers as much as 30,000 vehicles.

Residents of two valleys close to the freeway started the blockade Wednesday morning after the freeway authority tried to raise annual toll tickets from $64 to $72. They demanded toll-free passage for their private cars and more reasonable rates for their trucks.

A message to users of Rely tampons from Procter & Gamble.

Women who use Rely* tampons should stop using them and return the unused product to Procter & Gamble for a refund.

Government studies show that tampons are associated with an increased risk of Toxic Shock Syndrome (TSS). This is a newly-discovered disease that affects mainly women who use tampons during their periods.

Toxic Shock Syndrome can be very serious and is believed to be responsible for a number of deaths. Almost all women who have had the disease have recovered.

Some recent studies indicate that Rely was apparently involved with Toxic Shock Syndrome to a greater extent than other tampon brands.

Toxic Shock Syndrome was first reported in November 1978. It is believed to be caused by a toxin produced by a bacterial infection (Staphylococcus aureus). In June 1980, the U.S. Center for Disease Control (CDC) first linked it to tampon use. No one yet knows how or why tampons are associated with this disease.

In June, based on research conducted up to that point, CDC said that tampon use alone was not sufficient to cause the disease. CDC also said that no particular brand of tampon was more involved than others.

But on September 15, CDC announced a new study. It compared women who had Toxic Shock Syndrome with women who did not. The study confirmed that Toxic Shock Syndrome was associated with tampon use. It also indicated that Rely was apparently involved with more cases than any other brand. Here are the key data available to date:

DEFINITE TSS CASES REPORTED TO CDC

| | # Cases Involved | Brands Used* Rely Brand | Other Identified Tampon Brands | Brands Unidentified |
|---|---|---|---|---|
| CDC Study #1 (completed June 20) | 52 | 17 | 43 | 2 |
| CDC Study #2 (completed September 12) | 50 | 35 | 22 | 0 |
| Other cases reported to CDC | 140 | 24 | 19 | 100 |
| Total CDC cases (through September 23) | 242 | 76 | 84 | 102 |

*Brands used" totals more than the number of cases reported because some women used more than one brand.

On September 21, P&G convened a scientific advisory group to review all known data relating to TSS. The group concluded that the available data were still fragmentary, but advised that the results of the latest CDC study should not be ignored.

Therefore, on September 22, Procter & Gamble announced it was suspending sales of Rely and that it would refund money to consumers who had Rely in their homes.

The Food and Drug Administration offers this advice to consumers:

"The current evidence indicates that women should stop using Rely. Women who want to reduce their risk of toxic shock even further may want to consider not using any tampons at all, or using napkins part of the time during their periods.

"Women using tampons who develop a high fever and vomiting or diarrhea during their periods should stop using tampons and see their doctors right away."

The FDA and CDC have said they will continue studying Toxic Shock Syndrome to find out what causes it and why it is associated with tampons. Procter & Gamble will participate with the government in this important effort.

In the meantime, Procter & Gamble advises women not to use Rely tampons and to return unused Rely for a refund.

You should know these symptoms of Toxic Shock Syndrome:

- High Fever (102°) and
- Vomiting or diarrhea

If you have these symptoms during your menstrual period, discontinue use of tampons and see your doctor at once.

How to return Rely and obtain refund:

Rely,
P.O. Box PM006,
El Paso, Texas 79966.
And you will receive a refund including cost of mailing.

NOTE: You may see Rely advertisements in the November issues of various women's magazines. Unfortunately, these issues were already printed when the decision to suspend sales of Rely was made on September 22, 1980.

Mystic occult store is no Halloween happening

By AL ESPOSITO
Associated Press Writer

COLUMBUS, Ohio (AP) — Don't say "Boo" to the lady running the Mystic Occult store. Despite the orange paint job out front and the giant eye staring down at passers-by, the store is not a Halloween happening.

Lillian Nellons, the owner, won't deny that the season of things that go bump in the night is good for business. But the trappings of religion, not revelry, are her stock and trade.

"If you're a Satanist," she says, "you should be able to buy the things you need for your religion."

That, along with the fact that they make money, is why Mrs. Nellons and her husband, Theodore, run the store. Witches — and others — know if they need a newt's eye or bat's wing, the Nellons are likely to have the articles in stock. They also carry herbs and potions, as well as amulets, witch's robes, voodoo masks, satanic books, ritual knives, black crosses and literature on Islam.

Mrs. Nellons and her husband wear the traditional white robes of the Moslem faith, and express belief in religious freedom. But it's business that brought the teachings of Mohammed and devilry together, not the sharing of ideology, she says.

She says Satanists should be able to find religious paraphernalia for their ceremonies. "But you want the truth?" she asks with a smile. "We make money."

The shop was fresh out of $20 ritual knives. But there was a blood chalice priced at $17. Only one inverted black cross with the devil's numbers "666" was in stock, but there was a variety of oils for all occasions.

An ounce of Love Oil guaranteed to win the heart of the most unloving cost $6. There was Bend Over Oil to subjugate the most stubborn. And Bingo Oil,which "you rub on your hands and money before going to play," was on sale.

Court Oil, which sells for $8, is used "when you go before a judge and want to get a favorable decision," Mrs. Nellons says. Lottery Oil is another big seller. The shop sells lottery tickets, and her husband bought one there in 1977 that turned out to be worth $10,000.

Mrs. Nellons says she had no special powers to dispense winning tickets, and her husband acknowledges he had a shopping bag full of losers.

Herbs in stock include Rattlesnake Root for $35 an ounce; High John Conqueror for gambling; Passion Flower for colds, and West African Yohimbi, a psychedelic.

Wohoo Bark gets rid of spells and acts as a laxative. And the Nellons stock Dragon Blood, Maiden Hair for love and beauty, Ladies Thumb, and Cruel Man of the Woods.

Mrs. Nellons says she doesn't believe in the devil or spirits, but she has for sale nonetheless a $50 trumpet designed to wake up the dead and get them to a seance.

Pill may protect against cancer

BOSTON (AP) — Birth control pills apparently provide protection against uterine cancer up to five years after a woman stops taking them, according to a Boston University study.

In the report, the doctors cautioned that their findings need more study.

Now there's a finger ring for footloose ones

NEW YORK (AP) — Finger rings — they've been around since heaven knows when, observes the Jewelry Industry Council, which notes that some scholars of jewelry artifacts think rings came into being about the same time as Neanderthal man.

This year, 1980, may well be known as the year of the ring renaissance, for it was earlier this year that the first diamond engagement rings for men made their appearance. And now the latest ring is the romance ring, reports Kae McCulloch, fashion director of the Council. This ring signifies that the wearer is footloose and fancy free.

"It was probably inevitable that the romance ring came into being, for rings have always been worn for a variety of reasons," she says. "Rings once were thought to have magic powers. You could become invisible, or invincible."

The ancient Gauls and Britons issued a code on who should wear rings, and even decreed which finger the rings should be worn on. Doctors wore thumb rings; merchants, rings on their index finger; fools on the middle finger; students, on the third finger, and lovers at one time, on the small finger.

Romance rings — which signify the wearer is open to Cupid's arrows — have as an integral part of their design a free-form pattern. Some, to give interested parties an inkling of the wearer's zodiac sign, incorporate a birthstone.

"While today's romance ring can be worn on any finger, chances are the wearer is aiming at a diamond ring for the third finger, left hand, in the future — and that goes for the men too," says Ms. McCulloch.

Boneless center cut eye is not always best

By MERLE ELLIS

There are a number of terms used in merchandizing meat that are, to say the least, misleading and often downright deceiving to most consumers. The "boneless," "center cut" and "eye" of many cuts of meat, for example, are not always the "best." Even the "best" is not always the best, and if that isn't confusing, I don't know what is.

Let's look at the terms — boneless, center cut, eye and best — as they are used to merchandise a variety of different cuts of meat. Let's see if we can't become better meat buyers who are less likely to pay a premium for the "best" when it isn't.

Boneless, usually abbreviated BNLS on most meat labels, means, of course, that the particular cut so labeled contains no bones. More specifically, it means that the bones normally present in a cut of meat have been removed. Seldom will you see a cut of meat that is normally boneless labeled BNLS.

The sirloin tip, for example, contains no bones, but it is never labeled "boneless sirloin tip." The label BNLS is used almost exclusively on those cuts, such as the chuck of beef or the shoulder of lamb, that often are sold with the bone in. The term usually carries with it a premium price, justified, presumably, by the fact that you're not paying for "all that bone."

Yet, BNLS is not always worth the premium that you have to pay for it. A "Lamb Shoulder RST BNLS" (RST is short for roast) may well be worth more than a lamb shoulder with the bone in. It usually is the whole shoulder of the lamb, boned and rolled and, indeed, a good deal of bone has been removed.

A "Beef Chuck Arm Pot RST BNLS" is apt not to be worth the difference in price over one with the bone left in. The bone in a beef chuck arm pot roast is not very big and when you pay a premium for one without it, you pay more than BNLS is worth. The same is true with "Beef Round Steak BNLS" and "Beef Loin Sirloin Steak BNLS."

Before you buy any cut of meat BNLS, check the same cut with the bone left in to make sure the removal of the bone is worth what the butcher is asking.

"Center Cut" often is used to justify a premium price in merchandising meat. And yet, the center cut — even if it costs more — is not always the best cut. The center cut chuck pot roast is, for example, always more expensive than the first cut blade pot roast, but the latter is a more tender cut. Center cut beef brisket is apt to cost more than either "point" or "flat" cut, and yet the "point" has more flavor and the "flat" is leaner.

Often you will see "Beef Shank Center Cut." When you do, ask the butcher how much beef shank end cuts are going for. He will probably stammer a bit, for there are no end cuts of beef shank. They exist, but they are never sold as beef shank. Only the center cuts and the cross cuts (which are the same) are sold as beef shanks. It gets confusing, doesn't it? Beware of "center cuts."

The "eye," ah, the "eye!" Now there is a part that just has to be the bestpart of whatever it's part of. Right? Wrong!

There are two cuts of beef that are commonly labeled eye. One is the rib-eye and that eye may well be worth the premium you pay for it. It is, to use the terms we've been talking about, the boneless center cut of the rib. It is, in fact, the most tender part of the rib section and one of the most flavorful parts of the beef carcass; well worth the premium you pay for it.

The eye of the round, on the other hand, is one of the most overrated, overpriced cuts of meat in the meat case. The eye of the beef round is the toughest cut of the hind top round. Don't pay a premium for the wrong "eye."

In England, the term "best" is used to describe one cut of meat. There, the term "best neck" is used for that cut of the lamb that we in America call the "rack."

Here in the United States, I have only seen the term "best" used to merchandise chickens. There is a company in California (and I'm sure other companies around the country do the same) that sells what they call the Best of Fryer. This is the best example — worst would be a better word — of using a positive sounding word to sell you something for a premium price.

You can buy that same chicken for 50 to 75 cents less per pound whole.

Easy and different — that's a good way to describe this hearty harvest time casserole made with ham, prunes, apples, seasoning and potatoes.

Hearty stews are economical and simple to make

Autumn is time for hearty eating to ward off the cold. For robust fare, count on delicious, substantial potatoes to stretch your meals and food dollar. And, since fall is the harvest season for potatoes, spuds are in abundant peak supply in your supermarket right now.

Sturdy potatoes in stews will appease big appetites. Ideal for large families, hearty stews are economical and simple to make. They're also great leftover dishes with a flavor that's somehow more delicious when reheated. In addition, stews usually freexe well — a boon for the busy person. If you're defrosting a stew for dinner, leave it on your refrigerator's lowest level in the morning. When you come home, put the pot of stew in your oven, set the temperature to 300 F. and heat it for 30 to 60 minutes depending on size. Or, simmer it on top of the stove for about the same time. Don't rush the stew with high heat or it will boil and overcook.

GERMAN POTATO APPLE STEW

2 tbsp. butter or margarine
1½ cups sliced onion
1 tbsp. flour
1 cup chicken broth
1 cup apple juice
2 tbsp. lemon juice
½ tsp. salt
¼ tsp. caraway seeds
1½ pounds potatoes, unpeeled, cut in large chunks
1 lb. cooked ham, cut in large cubes
½ lb. pitted prunes
2 red apples, cored, cut in wedges

In Dutch oven or large covered saucepot, melt butter; saute onion until golden. Stir in flour; gradually add broth, apple juice, lemon juice, salt and caraway seeds; stir until slightly thickened. Add potatoes, ham and prunes; bring to a boil. Cover; simmer 15 minutes. Add apples. Cover, simmer 15 to 20 minutes longer until potatoes and apples are tender; stir occasionally.

Yield: 4 servings.

FOOD

POTATO CABBAGE CASSEROLE

1½ pounds potatoes (3 large), unpeeled
½ pound bacon cut into 2-inch strips
1 cup sliced onion
2 tbsp. flour
½ tsp. dried leaf thyme, crumbled
½ tsp. salt
1½ cups (12 ounce can) beer
½ cup milk
6 cups finely shredded cabbage (1½ pounds)
1 cup shredded Swiss cheese (¼ pound)

Steam potatoes in 1-inch boiling water 30 to 40 minutes, until tender. Slice, unpeeled, into ½-inch thick slices. In large skillet cook bacon until crisp; set aside. Pour off all but 2 tblsp. bacon fat. In same skillet saute onion until golden; stir in flour, thyme and salt. Gradually add beer and milk: stir over low heat, until mixture boils and athickens. In 3-quart casserole, layer half the cabbage, potatoes, bacon cheese and sauce. Repeat with remaining ingredients. Cover. Bake in 375 F. oven 30 minutes. Uncover, bake 15 minutes longer until cabbage is tender.

What's cooking?

Janet Watson

The "old-fashioned" housewife is still around. She just has an updated image. And Janet Watson of Midland typifies that new image.

Wife to Charles Watson and mother to three children (daughter Kim, 14; Will, 10; and Mick, 4;), Janet stays busy with home activities. But she is also dedicated to building a better home life through her involvement in community and civic organizations.

She's president of Calico Extension Homemakers Club. Beginning in 1981, she will serve as vice president of the County Council of Extension Homemakers.

She is also currently a 4-H Club leader and is serving as president of District Six Adult Leaders Association in 4-H.

Every month, she and Charles take time off from their work and do a little square dancing with the Grand Squares Club. Actually, Janet dances while Charles does the calling. And they're both vice presidents of the Permian Basin Square and Round Dance Association.

At Annual Day sponsored by the Midland County Extension Homemakers this month, Janet prepared two delicious dishes, both using that old standby—macaroni.

"The Macaroni and Beef dish is a favorite with the family," she said. "It's great for when I'm busy with clubs and other activities. I just put it on the slow cooker and serve it with cornbread as a complete meal. It's good for working women, too."

MACARONI AND BEEF
4 to 6 servings

1½ lbs. lean ground beef
2 cups uncooked macaroni
½ medium onion, chopped
1 can (4 oz.) sliced mushrooms, drained
1 can (16 oz.) whole-kernel corn, drained
2 cans (10¾ oz. each) condensed tomato soup
salt and pepper

In skillet, brown ground beef; drain well and put into crockpot. Cook macaroni according to package directions until barely tender; drain. Stir just enough to blend. Cover and cook on low setting for 7 to 9 hours (on high setting for 3 to 4 hours.)

MACARONI SALAD

12 oz. shell macaroni
1 teaspoon salt
2 onions, chopped
9 hard-boiled eggs, sliced
2 cups celery, chopped
½ cup pimiento
1 cup green pepper, sliced
2 No. 2 cans English peas, drained
1½ cups mayonnaise

Boil macaroni in salted water. Drain all other ingredients. Cover and chill. Makes a large salad.

This cake has Dutch ancestry

By CECILY BROWNSTONE
Associated Press Food Editor

Diana Schwalb has been enjoying her mother's Dutch Raisin Spice Cake since she was a little girl. When she was old enough to do so, she learned to bake the cake. It's the hearty sort of loaf that tastes wonderful with a cup of coffee.

Diana knew the cake recipe had been handed down in her mother's family for several generations, but it was only recently she found it may go back 150 years. That's when the first member of her mother's family came from Holland to settle in Columbia County, bordering the Hudson River in New York State. Diana's mother, Pearl Simmons Schwalb, was the first member of her family to marry someone not of Dutch descent.

When I asked Diana how she had done all this tracking back, she said she had been tracing her family tree. She searched through state and county records, guided by a book on finding family roots.

Diana's family lives in Hudson, N.Y., and the Dutch Raisin Spice Cake is a favorite with their neighbors and friends. Diana, who lives and works in New York City, bakes the cake as a treat for her friends.

DUTCH RAISIN SPICE CAKE

1 cup raisins, coarsely chopped
1 cup water
2 cups all-purpose flour
1 teaspoon baking soda
¼ teaspoon salt
1 teaspoon ground cinmamon
½ teaspoon ground cloves
½ cup butter, at room temperature
1¼ cups sugar
1 teaspoon vanilla
1 large egg

Line the bottom of a 9 by 5 by 3-inch loaf pan with wax paper; grease paper.

In a small saucepan bring the raisins and water to a boil; simmer, covered, for 5 minutes. Strain raisins over a measure, reserving liquid; cool raisins and reserve. Set aside ½ cup of the reserved liquid to cool; if there is not enough to make this amount, add cold water; if there is more than this amount, discard the extra liquid.

On wax paper or in a bowl, stir together the flour, baking soda, salt, cinnamon and cloves.

In the large bowl of an electric mixer cream the butter, sugar and vanilla; beat in the egg until blended. Stir in half the flour mixture until blended; stir in ¼ cup of the raisin liquid until blended; stir in the remaining flour mixture and raisin liquid in the same way. Fold in the reserved raisins. Turn into the prepared pan.

Bake in a preheated 350-degree oven until a cake tester inserted in the center comes out clean — 50 to 55 minutes. Place cake in pan on a wire rack; let cool for 10 minutes. Loosen edges and turn out on the wire rack; turn right side up on the rack; cool completely and slice at once if you like. Store the cake tightly wrapped in saran or tightly closed in a plastic bag in the refrigerator. Keeps well for at least 2 weeks.

Baby solves court problem

CHICAGO (AP) — Three-day-old Kirsten Wilcox has engineered a kind of out-of-court settlement between her feuding parents. She wasn't a boy.

Kirsten's arrival Saturday made moot a suit filed by her father for the right to name the child.

William Earl Wilcox III, of south suburban Oak Forest, filed an emergency petition two weeks ago seeking to force his wife, Tammi, to name their baby William Earl Wilcox IV if the child was a boy.

Last summer, the couple agreed a son would be named after his father, grandfather and great-grandfather.

But in August, Mrs. Wilcox filed for divorce and argued she had the right to name the child whatever she chose. The divorce is pending.

Cook County Circuit Judge Robert C. Buckley ruled earlier this month that the mother was free to choose any name for a girl but that he would decide on a name if it was a boy.

He ordered that she name a male infant "Baby Boy Wilcox" until a further hearing could be held on the matter.

Reagan's secret for youth

One of Ronald Reagan's most closely guarded secrets — what helps to keep him fit and young — has been leaked.

According to Washington Correspondent, Malvina Stephenson, the Republican candidate eats the very same food that gives the wonderful honeybee its endless energy.

Reagan is in good company with his secret. The world's No. 1 Olympic athlete eats bee pollen too. Daly Thompson, this year's Gold Medal winner of the Moscow Olympic's Decathalon event, the toughest contest in the Olympics, eats English bee pollen pods, which are available as a daily supplement in health food stores in this area and across the United States.

Who would have thought that the world's No. 1 athlete and the man who aspires to be the world's No. 1 politician would have the energetic honeybee in common?

Just what is bee pollen? Honeybees collect the pollen from flowers, add nectar to it and take it back to the hive to eat as the main source of their energy. Some is harvested from the hive for consumer use because it contains in trace amounts of every mineral, vitamin and amino acid needed to help give the body renewed energy.

DEAR ABBY

Hospital room not a hospitality suite

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: I just returned from 12 days in the hospital, and I am exhausted!

The ordeal of my surgery was bad enough, but what really wore me out were the visits I had from well-meaning friends and relatives. I looked like hell and felt like hell and didn't want to see anybody.

I had a "Do Not Disturb" sign on my door, which didn't mean a thing. People would knock on my closed door, and if there was no response, they'd slowly open it and peek in to see if I was up. If my eyes were closed, they'd tiptoe in, sit down and wait for me to get up. Once when I was dozing, a cousin came in and just stood by my bed. (I could feel her breathing on me.) Then she leaned down and whispered, "Honey, are you awake?"

I pretended to be asleep, but she kept asking if I was awake until she finally got me up. Then she stayed an hour and a half telling me who was getting divorced, who died and who had cancer.

Abby, if you have a letter in your files advising your readers not to visit sick friends in a hospital, please dig it out and run it again. It's too late to help me, but it could help others.—EXHAUSTED IN COLUMBIA, S.C.

DEAR EXHAUSTED: I dug out a dilly and here it is:

DEAR ABBY: Please remind your readers that even if a patient isn't seriously ill, he is in the hospital to get well, not to entertain visitors.

I just came home from the hospital, and I'm glad I had the foresight to tell friends and relatives I didn't want any company.

My roommate in the hospital appeared to welcome graciously a constant stream of friends and relatives, but I noticed how relieved she was after they left, because she really didn't feel up to seeing them.

Please ask your readers to check first to see if a patient REALLY wants company before popping in with a surpise visit. A card may be much more appreciated.—RECOVERING FROM SURGERY

DEAR RECOVERING: Well said. And while we're on the subject, I wonder why everyone thinks a "No Visitors" sign on the door means everyone but him?

DEAR ABBY: Regarding the column about children who are taught to call their parents by their first names:

We have some twins here in Olympia, Wash., who did the same thing.

When they started school, after the first day they came home and demanded to know, "How come we don't have a father and mother like everybody else?" —NO NAME, PLEASE

CONFIDENTIAL TO J.F.D. IN ARLINGTON HEIGHTS, ILL.: I think the quote you are searching for is the statement made by the famed British obstetrician and gynecologist, Lord Brain, who said, "When, wherever you live in the world, you can have children only when you wish, that will be a revolution with more far-reaching effects on the pattern of human culture than the discovery of atomic energy."

(Getting married? Whether you want a formal church wedding or a simple "do-your-own-thing" ceremony, get Abby's new booklet. Send $1 plus a long, self-addressed, stamped (28 cents) envelope to: Abby's Wedding Booklet, 132 Lasky Drive, Beverly Hills, Calif. 90212.)

Trinity Towers celebrates birthdays

Dapheny and Louis Kluck, a sing and dance couple of Midland, presented a musical review of well known Broadway hit tunes at the October birthday party at Trinity Towers. They were accompanied by Alice Moxey.

The Trinity Towers Auxialiry provided a colorful silk flower arrangement in a basket for the event. The cake was provided by the Circle L Sunday school class of the First Presbyterian Church.

Celebrating October birthdays were Alice McFarland, Alma Chambers, Ira Livingston, Bess Neil, Agnes Davis, Nora Blackaller, Eleanor Luton, Jane Dodson, Jessie Wiseman, Alice Coffield, Dorothy Ross, Snow Forehand, Bertha Johnson, Laura Allen, Annie Adams, Jennie Brenneman, Ivy Lee Epley, Theresa Moore and Hooper Sanders.

Guests present included Bruce, Susie and Paul Brenneman, Brenda, Andy and Robert Nance, Malcolm, Paula, John, Dorothy and John Dooley Brenneman, and Gladys Baker of Mission Viejo, Calif. Also F.L. and Naomi McFarland, Cindy and Jim Siebenthal, Bud and Pat Brewer, Bess Caldwell, Alta Mae Powledge, Annice Sewell, Bill Fine, and Elizabeth and Hooper Sanders Jr.

Volunteers for the occasion were Oweta Cornelious, chairman, Helen Leff, Helen Reid, Jo McGill, Mildred Brown, Bettye Sue Caudle, Theda Redding and Thelma Echols. Leona Armentrout and Mary Frances Haden assisted in serving.

Do something different with pumpkins

This year, see how the pen can be mightier than the sword when creating Halloween pumpkins.

"Using paper, yarn, ribbon, gift-wrap scraps, markers and other household items instead of a knife, children can make almost any Halloween character," says Angela Orwin of Hallmark cards.

"Instead of having the children watch Dad carve the pumpkin, they can participate and use their creative talents to bring the pumpkin to life," she says. "And parents will appreciate continuing this age-old custom in a safer manner."

WITCH — Create an enchanting witch. Make her hat out of wrapping paper by twisting a long piece into a cone and securely taping it to a matching piece cut into a donut shape. The hat band is made out of complementary colored gift wrap and taped to the cone. To make locks of hair, curl ribbon and tape to the top of the pumpkin. Cut the nose and mouth out of construction paper and glue into place.

VAMPIRE — "Happy Halloveen," says this scary Count Dracula look-alike. His hair is black gift yarn glued to the top of the pumpkin. The eyes and eyebrows are made of one piece of construction paper colored with marking pens and glued into place. The nose is white construction paper outlined in black. Lift the nose up at the tip for a more life-like appearance. The mouth, ears and fangs are also cut out of construction paper (outlined in black) and glued into place. Place Dracula on a pedestal made from a block of wood encircled with colored paper. His cape is the final devilish touchm made from folded gift wrap.

FRIENDLY GOBLIN - This happy fellow will especially appeal to the younger children. To make bug-like eyes, glue 7-inch round white paper dessert plates (outlined in black) to the pumpkin. Glue black circles on one edge of each plate to make the pupils. Fashion his mouth from white construction paper outlined in black. For hands, cut white lightweight poster board or use white work gloves attached to sticks.

A child's imagination plus paper, glue and ink are all that's required to create these Halloween characters — witch, vampire and friendly goblin. Because there's no pumpkin carving required, it's safe and more fun for kids.

Join us in voting to keep Judge Will Garwood on the Texas Supreme Court. He's the best choice by any standard.

Judge Will Garwood is clearly the best qualified candidate for the Texas Supreme Court. He's been on the Court a year and has over twenty years experience in private civil law practice. He served with the Judge Advocate General's Corps, U.S. Army, and was first in his class every year at The University of Texas School of Law, graduating with honors.

Judge Garwood was overwhelmingly endorsed by 82% of the Texas lawyers. He won local judicial preference polls by 86% in Dallas, 86% in Houston and 80% in Fort Worth.

He's the choice of so many because he's fair-minded, non-partisan and better suited to the job through personal qualifications and superior training.

Five die in clash between rival leftists

TOKYO (AP) — A band of leftists armed with steel pipes and hammers beat five members of a rival group to death today in a "revolutionary" attack on a suburban Tokyo street, authorities said.

Police quoted witnesses as saying that at least 10 men dressed in gray, military-style fatigues, white helmets and ski masks, apparently ambushed the five unarmed men. The victims were pronounced dead on arrival at a hospital, police said.

The attackers sped away in two vans, the witnesses were quoted as saying.

Later, a man identifying himself as a member of the Middle Core Revolutionary Army, one of several extreme leftist groups, claimed in a telephone message to Japan's Kyodo news agency that his organization was responsible for the attack.

He was quoted as saying the Revolutionary Army "destroyed" five members of the Kakumaru, a Marxist faction, in a "revolutionary" attack.

The deaths brought to 80 the number of persons killed in about a dozen clashes between rival radical groups in Japan since 1969, police said.

DR. NEIL SOLOMON

Essential doesn't always mean necessary

Dear Dr. Solomon: What is the meaning of the word "essential" when used to describe a disease, such as "essential hypertension"? I know it doesn't mean necessary. — Ron

Dear Ron: In the sense that you use the term, "essential" means "without obvious cause." In relation to hypertension, for example, it describes a condition for which there is no apparent explanation. A person with essential hypertension either has a heart that pumps too much blood or, if the heart output is normal, narrowed blood vessels.

Dear Dr. Solomon: This may be a silly question, but what happens to all the blood a patient loses while being operated on? I assume there must be bleeding if a surgeon makes an incision, and I imagine there's a great deal of blood lost when someone who has been in an accident undergoes surgery. Is the blood simply wasted? — Henry

Dear Henry: The question of blood loss during surgery is not silly since there is always a need for blood. The subject has been receiving a substantial amount of attention, and now some answers may be forthcoming. For example, surgeons at the North Carolina Memorial Hospital have developed a device called a "Cell Saver" which they have been using with patients undergoing open-heart surgery.

The machine is used to collect a portion of the approximately four to six pints of blood a patient loses during the operation. It then separates the red cells from the rest of the blood, removes any impurities, and returns them to the patient. Since it is the patient's own blood that is being recycled, there is a decreased need for blood donors, and the risk of hepatitis and other adverse reactions to a blood transfusion is reduced.

Dr. John Shallal, a heart surgeon at the North Carolina Memorial Hospital, explains that a unit of blood is drawn from the patient before the operation and processed through the Cell Saver to separate the various components. (A unit is about a pint.) The nutrient-rich red cells are returned to the patient just before the start of surgery, while the blood plasma is saved and given to the patient after the operation in order to enhance the normal clotting process.

When a patient undergoes open-heart surgery to repair a heart valve or to by-pass the coronary artery, a muscle relaxant is injected into the heart, permitting it to withstand a temporary reduction in its blood supply. However, the drug dilutes the blood, making it unfit for transfusion. The Cell Saver filters out the chemical and other impurities, saving the red cells which are later returned to the patient.

Although the Cell Saver so far has been used only for open-heart surgery, Dr. Shallal believes it is applicable to other types of surgery as well, especially in operations requiring substantial amounts of blood.

Haitians arrive here at increasing pace

MIAMI (AP) — Federal immigration officials here are bracing for an influx of Haitians because of the Bahamian government's move to deport 25,000 of the refugees.

The illegal entry of Haitians here already has increased to an average of 200 a day, and Miami resettlement officials are hard-pressed to find them shelter.

About 1,500 Haitians have arrived in South Florida since the Bahamian government ordered Haitians to come forward for deportation to their Caribbean island homeland. The status of the refugees is clouded by the fact that although many claim political asylum, U.S. officials maintain they are actually fleeing poverty.

Bahamian government spokesman Bill Kalis said the Ministry of Home Affairs announced Oct. 22 that the Haitians there would be given a 12-week amnesty period to agree to leave. Haitian residents who do not come forward would face prosecution, he said.

"When the Bahamian government puts pressure on the Haitians to leave, we can expect an influx here," said Raymond A. Morris, district director of the U.S. Immigration and Naturalization Service.

"We believe that the large percentage of them are coming from the Bahamas, but we have not completed our processing so we don't really know at this time," he added.

More Haitians arrived in South Florida on Tuesday than could be relocated. By Tuesday night, the Krome Avenue processing center west of Miami held more refugees than at the peak of the "Freedom Flotilla" boatlift from Cuba.

The illegal boatlift brought more than 125,000 Cubans to the United States. The arrivals of Cuban refugees has since slowed to a trickle, with only seven arriving in the past week.

There were 1,278 Haitian refugees at the center Wednesday, 278 more than the facility held at the peak of the "Freedom Flotilla."

Most of the Haitians have reached the Unted States by boat, but 41 of the 330 Haitians who arrived Monday and Tuesday came aboard commercial flights from the Bahamas. Those Haitians had phony documents, said Maria Linares, spokeswoman for the State Department Cuban and Haitian Task Force.

Probably 12,500 Haitians have arrived this year, Morris said, up from 2,522 refugees in 1979. In all, up to 40,000 Haitians have sought refuge in the United States, most settling in South Florida.

A U.S. Supreme Court justice on Friday temporarily blocked the government's plans to transfer refugees from the Krome camp to Fort Allen in Puerto Rico, saying the transfer could not proceed pending a review by the full court.

Mennonite Appreciation Day set

SEMINOLE — Seminole has declared Nov. 7 as Mennonite Appreciation Day.

From 4 to 7:30 p.m. in the Civic Center, members of the Mennonite community in and around Seminole will be serving German foods and displaying their handicrafts.

Foods available will include pork and Borscht, rolls, loaves of bread and pies. Some of the bread and pies will also be for sale.

On display, and also for sale, will be quilts, needlework and Christmas decorations.

In addition, 50 to 90 children will be singing in four different languages. Seminole's former mayor will welcome them, and the current mayor Mickey Ray will present the Mennonites with a key to the city.

A spokesman for Seminole said Sen. Lloyd Bentsen would also be invited since he had done so much for the Mennonites.

"We wanted to make the Mennonites feel we are glad they're here. They wanted to show their appreciation," the spokesman said.

A small admission fee of $4 for adults and $2.50 for children will be charged. Anyone is welcome to attend, said the spokesman.

This gold and diamond wristwatch, worth $5 million, is displayed Wednesday at New York's Bucherer jewelry store. The watch, named "Kallista," was created by Swiss watchmakers Vacheron Constantin and designed by French artist Raymond Moretti. It has 118 perfect emerald-cut diamonds totaling 130 carats, set in a grillwork sculpted from a two-pound block of solid gold. Because of rising diamond prices, the watch increases in value at a rate of $4,000 daily, the manufacturer says. (AP Laserphoto)

Anderson says debate may have 'eliminated' him as contender

NEW YORK (AP) — Five days before the election, John B. Anderson concedes that the presidential debate may have eliminated him as a major contender with President Carter and Ronald Reagan in the eyes of American voters.

While insisting that a political miracle will occur next Tuesday, Anderson said Wednesday that his exclusion from the Cleveland debate with Carter and Reagan has effectively isolatated him as a serious challenger to the two major-party nominees.

Asked at a Philadelphia news conference to assess the performance of the debators in Cleveland, Anderson said, "I thought it was shallow. I thought it was a shallow performance."

The independent presidential candidate said both Carter and Reagan failed to lay out specific actions they would take on the critical issues of war and peace, the economy and energy.

Anderson made his own debate appearance on Cable News Network on Tuesday night, and he said that in his own attempt to get a bit of the debate spotlight he felt he did well in contrasting his positions and specific proposals with Carter and Reagan, the Republican presidential nominee.

When it was recalled that neither of the major-party nominees mentioned his name, Anderson said, "There still seems to be a studied and determined and assiduous effort to continue the mythology that there isn't another candidate in the race."

Because as many as 125 million Americans watched the Carter-Reagan debate the three major television networks, Anderson said, "suddenly the campaign was transformed into a two-man race instead of the three-man race that I think it should have been.

"I think it skewed a perception. I am trying very hard to remedy that obviously in the closing days of the campaign."

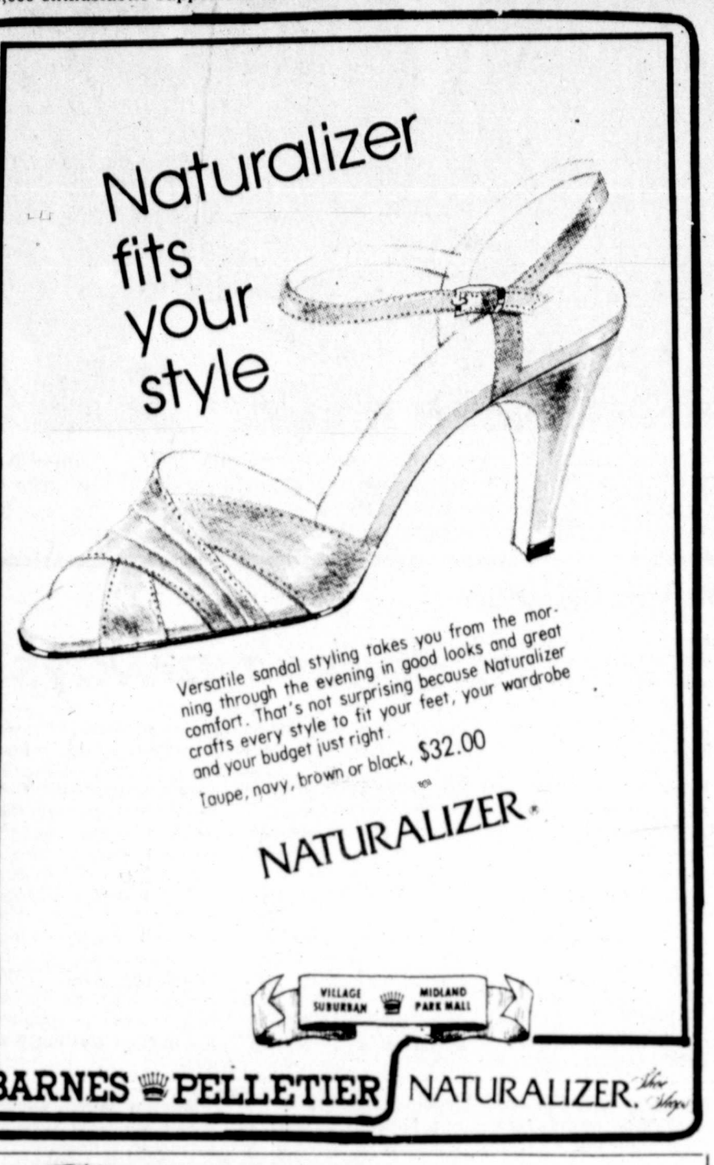

Despite his declining status in comparison with Carter and Reagan, Anderson has been campaigning as if he expects to come close to Carter and Reagan on Nov. 4.

His campaign day on Wednesday began in Philadelphia, including a rally in bright sunshine near Rittenhouse Square, and ended with a speech in Morristown, N.J., late in the evening.

In the days before the election, Anderson will touch down in Connecticut, New York City, Boston, California, Oregon, Minneapolis and Illinois.

In Morristown, Anderson told about 2,000 enthusiastic supporters that the two major political parties "are asleep at a time when they ought to be awake to the problems of our time."

Neither Carter nor Reagan, Anderson said, made any fresh proposals for solving the country's economic and energy problems over the next four years. "We did not hear any new ideas," Anderson said.

College board elects Midlander

Reagan H. Legg

Reagan H. Legg, Midland attorney and member of the Midland College Board of Trustees, was elected president of the Association of Texas Community College Board Members and Administrators at the close of its annual conference in Austin Tuesday.

Previously he served as a member of the board of directors of the organization.

A resident of Midland since 1948, Legg is a former Midland County attorney. He is serving his third elective term as a Midland College Trustee and was the Board's first president.

He is also a member of the Board of Directors of the national Association of Community College Trustees, and was recently elected second vice president of ACCT. Legg was named "Outstanding Community College Trustee in the United States" in 1977.

"As always, I am very grateful for the opportunity to work for better community colleges in Texas in this position of responsibility," Legg said today.

"We are involved in the most exciting and challenging area of public education in the country and we must not be satisfied with less than the very best in our colleges and in the quality of our instruction and programs."

Legg, who was instrumental in the founding of Midland College, has long been a leader in community affairs.

He recently retired as chairman of the Leadership Midland program, serving a third term as a director of the Midland Chamber of Commerce, and currently is the chairman of the Chamber's education committee.

Legg formerly served as president of the Board of Governors of Midland Community Theatre, as president of the Midland Bar Association, United Fund chairman, group leader and conferee in both Objectives for Midland programs, and has held many other leadership positions in other state, local, civic, political and religious organizations.

Also attending the Austin conference were Dr. Al G. Langford, Midland College president, and Ken Peeler, MC trustee.

Clayton names speaker pro tem

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — Rep. Craig Washington, a member of Speaker Bill Clayton's defense team, has been named speaker pro tem of the House of Representatives by Clayton.

The Wednesday appointment makes Washington, D-Houston, the first black to hold the largely ceremonial post.

Washington was among the lawyers who represented Clayton at the speaker's recent federal trial in Houston on corruption charges. Clayton was acquitted on Oct. 22.

Rep. Tim Von Dohlen, D-Goliad, served as speaker pro tem since January 1979.

The speaker pro tem presides over the House of Representatives in the speaker's absence.

Former Tennessee governor indicted in payoff scheme

By BILL RAWLINS

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Former Gov. Ray Blanton, who once said he was "the most investigated governor in Tennessee history but...I've never been indicted," has been indicted on charges of conspiring with two former aides to take payoffs in return for state liquor licenses.

Blanton, who left office three days early after a mass commutation of prison sentences in 1979, had no comment on the 12-count indictment, which also accused him of disguising a $23,000 share of the profits from one liquor store as capital gains in his 1978 income tax return.

It was the third set of indictments involving members of Blanton's 1975-1979 administration. Wednesday's charges were the first to name the former governor.

Blanton was indicted along with his former campaign manager, James M. Allen. Allen said the indictment, coming so close to the general election, "just smacks of politics...with Carter and Reagan running neck-and-neck across the state."

"I'm almost looking forward to proving to all my friends that I'm not guilty," he said.

The third man indicted, former special assistant Clyde Edward Hood Jr., appeared late Wednesday at the federal courthouse and was freed on $10,000 bond pending arraignment by U.S. Magistrate Kent Sandidge III.

Hood refused comment but his lawyer, Alfred E. Knight III, said Hood would plead innocent.

Blanton and Allen have 10 days to answer summonses.

Conviction on all charges could result in prison terms of up to 30 years and fines totaling $21,000 for Allen and Hood and up to 38 years and $36,000 for Blanton.

The indictment accuses the three of conspiracy, fraud and misuse of the mails, and Blanton of income-tax violations.

The indictment accused them of conspiring to ask liquor license applicants to make payoffs to them, leading the applicants "to believe that the defendants, under color of office, would influence and continue to influence the decisions and actions of the Tennessee Alcoholic Beverage Commission in granting or denying retail liquor licenses in Davidson County."

The licenses listed in the indictment were issued by the state Alcoholic Beverage Commission, whose members were appointed by Blanton on Hood's advice.

The indictment said state law forbids any public official from holding an interest in a liquor store and Blanton's concealment of his interest in liquor stores was illegal under Tennessee law.

Previous grand juries have indicted three other former Blanton aides on federal charges of selling pardons and reprieves to prisoners and on state charges of illegally disposing of surplus cars.

Former Transportation Commissioner Eddie Shaw was tried and acquitted in the surplus car case in 1977.

Boston school bus strike continues despite judge

BOSTON (AP) — Public school bus drivers defied a federal judge's back-to-work order today, staying on picket lines set up Oct. 9, but school attendance continued to rise despite the strike.

A total of 48,437 of 65,699 enrolled students, 7 percent fewer than normal, attended school Wednesday as drivers rejected an order by a federal judge who directed management to rehire 20 fired union leaders until arbitration settles their cases.

Five hundred members of Local 8751 Steelworkers of America are employed by ARA Services Inc., which provides transportation for 27,000 Boston school children.

Seven drivers are serving indefinite jail terms on contempt of court charges for defying an earlier back-to-work order.

"We were offered nothing new," union spokeswoman Kara Speltz said of U.S. District Judge Rya W. Zobel's order directing ARA to take back 20 union officials fired shortly after the strike began until it can be determined if they were dismissed for just cause.

She said the union had hoped Zobel would order the officials rehired without condition and order the start of round-the-clock negotiations to end the walkout.

"We intend to comply fully with the court's orders," ARA said in a statement. "We have reinstated the discharged employees pending arbitration."

Richard Lynch, the union shop steward, said issues still to be resolved include allowing drivers time to make safety checks on their buses, requiring the company to pay drivers on time and posting monitors on the buses to keep order.

Prison nurses being held hostage

CARSON CITY, Nev. (AP) — An inmate at Nevada Maximum Security Prison was holding two nurses hostage in the jailhouse infirmary today and was demanding "a news expose of this whole place," a corrections official said.

Armed with a knife, David "Bang Bang" Wayne took the two women and a guard hostage late Wednesday, said John Slansky, superintendent of the nearby Medium Security Prison. The guard was released unharmed a few hours later, he said.

Seven inmates were in the infirmary with Wayne, but they were "just there," Slansky said, and did not appear to be taking part in the incident.

The attack occurred after Wayne entered the infirmary for treatment of an apparently self-inflicted cut, Slansky said.

Wayne, serving time for attempted murder and escape, was transferred here a week ago after being caught with a loaded gun at the Medium Security facility, Slansky said.

Asked whether the transfer may have triggered the incident, Slansky said, "I don't know what provoked it. I can't even guess."

Wayne was making "vague" complaints about prison conditions, which prison officials were urging him to define, Slansky said.

Negotiating for release of the nurses were Wayne, his wife Teree, Prison Director Charles Wolff Jr., psychiatrist Robert Whittemore and newsman Tad Dunbar from KOLO-TV in R

ENO. Dunbar came to the jail from Reno, 30 miles to the north, after Wayne called and asked for his help in negotiations.

Mrs. Wayne said her husband didn't want to hurt anyone, but "would if he had to," according to Dunbar.

Asked whether her husband might harm the hostages, Mrs. Wayne said, "Yes, he would." She also said he was "not afraid to die."

Wayne has served 11 years of a 20-year sentence for the attempted killing of a Reno bartender and a later jail escape. For about two months, he was a cellmate of Jesse Bishop, a convicted killer executed in Nevada's gas chamber a year ago.

The incident marked the second time in recent months that hostages were taken in the infirmary. In mid-July, a nurse was taken hostage and later released. That same day, she was taken hostage again by a another knife-wielding prisoner and again released.

Prison officials said at the time that inmate access to the infirmary was being restricted to insure such attacks did not recur.

Mafia boss collapses in court

Frank "Funzi" Tieri, 76, had tried earlier to convince authorities that he was too ill to stand trial for running a Cosa Nostra crime "family" in New York City from 1969 to 1977. He had been arriving at his trial here each day in a wheelchair with a nurse in attendance.

He collapsed in court Wednesday shortly after returning from luncheon recess.

Defense lawyers were to meet with U.S. District Court Judge John Griesa today to report on Tieri's condition.

Despite their claim that Tieri was too sick to stand trial, the FBI said videotape surveillance of the defendant showed him going about his regular activities. An appeals court ordered Tieri to trial.

A spokesman at Mt. Sinai Hospital where the alleged "boss of bosses" was taken said, "We have been requested not to give out any information about the patient."

The prosecution's star witness at the trial, Aladena "Jimmy the Weasel" Fratianno, told the jury Tuesday he had been a gangland contract killer for 20 years, and had attended a Manhattan meeting at which Tieri voted to "hit" a California man. The murder plot was never carried out, government prosecutor Nathaniel Akerman said.

Spokesman For Oil...

When Jane Fonda and other liberals were holding anti-petroleum industry demonstrations, PAT BASKIN condemned the leftist "hate-oil" movement while serving as Master Of Ceremonies at Midland's PRO-OIL rally–the first such event held in the United States.

PAT BASKIN has spoken out firmly and clearly against those who oppose the industry, and against the windfall profits tax and other unfair taxation and unreasonable regulation.,

An active attorney who has represented individuals and companies engaging in exploration and production, for the last 27 years.

A proven conservative who will apply the law according to the rule of strict construction of the Constitution and Statues.

WHAT INDUSTRY LEADERS SAY:

"Our District Judges often have a great impact on the oil and gas industry. Their decisions can affect the rights of all of us, from landowners to independent brokers to small producers and major companies plus related drilling and service companies–and the tens of thousands of the industry's employees and their families. That's why a District Judge must be an expert lawyer, well-trained in the courtroom, a strong and fair-minded man of absolute integrity. PAT BASKIN IS THAT MAN FOR MIDLAND. WE'RE FOR HIM 100%.

Vladan Stiha works on display

The Museum of the Southwest, 1705 W. Missouri Ave., is currently exhibiting the works of Vladan Stiha through Sunday while Stiha is conducting a painting workshop through Saturday.

Stiha, who was born 72 years ago in Belgrade, Yugoslavia, is the son of an artist and the last of 11 children. He painted his first "work of art" at the age of 18 months when he proceeded to paint himself from head to toe with his father's paints.

At 20 he married Elena, whom he was married to for 51 years. They wanted to come to the United States, but were unable to get passports out of the country. While waiting, Stiha studied at the Academy of Fine Arts in Vienna and in Rome. After World War II, the couple migrated to Argentina where Stiha became one of that country's most productive artists.

Always in search of new colors, new faces and new subjects, the Stihas moved to Brazil in 1958.

Finally, in 1968, they were allowed to migrate to the U.S. His North American debut was made at the Gallery Alex Dzigurski in Beverly Hills. He now resides in Santa Fe where he maintains a studio and gallery in the La Fonda Hotel.

Stiha was invited to show his paintings at the National Academy of Western Arts' first annual exhibition at the National Cowboy Hall of Fame in Oklahoma City. He was also chosen for the U.S. Embassy program at the Smithsonian Institution in Washington, D.C. His work, "City of Enchantment," was chosen for the official poster of Santa Fe.

ENTERTAINMENT

Joffrey came back, pleased audience

NEW YORK (AP) — The Joffrey Ballet, which had no New York season last year because it was broke, raised the money to have one this year.

The novelty on the program was "Illuminations," being danced by this company — and very well — for the first time.

Its choreography is by Frederick Ashton and white clown-type costumes by Cecil Beaton, while thehmusic is by Benjamin Britten, a setting of Arthur Rimbaud poems which were sung in French. The ballet is a series of sometimes disturbing scenes from the poems, commenting on the up-and-down life of the young poet.

The evening began with the lively, lovely, sidelighted "Suite Saint-Saens," which Gerald Arpino choreographed for this company in 1978. One striking feature of the four-part work is the lifts which end with a little push away, sending the partner out in a new direction.

Luis Fuente was outstanding in the three-character, Spanish-flavored "Fanfarita," clicking castanets, jumping high and pirouetting with balance and dash. This ballet was choreographed by Arpino for Fuente in 1968 and has never been performed by another male dancer.

Bertinelli plays bride

HOLLYWOOD (AP) — Valerie Bertinelli of "One Day at a Time" plays a young bride whose husband is killed in Vietnam in the CBS movie "The Promise of Love," set for Tuesday, Nov. 11.

Shirley MacLaine has several faces

All are snatches of the sometimes whimsical, sometimes philosophical, sometimes political but always gutsy life of this actor-dancer, writer-adventurer, political activist, mother-wife, lover.

"Buddha belonged to my mom," she said, stroking the wooden belly of the one-armed relic. "She was an actress, you know. She'd rub him for luck before going on. Now I do."

Miss MacLaine smiled as she replaced the tiny statue on a windowsill overlooking the East RiVer, where objets d'art chronicle her various adventures around the world — watching the birth of a Maasai baby in Africa; working with orphans in Calcutta; learning to be a Geisha in Japan.

She settled into a stiff-back chair, stealing a glance at pictures of Shirley and Fidel during a 1977 trip to Cuba — and Shirley and Jimmy, taken at the White House that same year.

At 46 and a success, Shirley MacLaine doesn't need to rub Buddha anymore. She's busy hyping two new feature films and just finished her first novel — a work she will say little about. What she isn't doing is actively campaigning for a presideNtial candidate. That's something of a curiosity.

Miss MacLaine sprang from middle America — a Southern Baptist from a Virginia "Wonder Bread family" — to become a delegate for the late Sen. Robert F. Kennedy in 1968 and later to work for Sen. George McGovern's presidential campaign.

She was strident a decade ago, as she condemned Richard Nixon for his Vietnam War policies, spoke out against over-population and championed civil rights and sexual freedom.

"I just don't see too much to be active about today, except the women's movement," she said, doe eyes intense. "I'm not too sure a real leader, even a fine leader, can help. I think we have to do it ourselves."

She leaned forward in her chair, her focus somewhere beyond Castro and Carter. "Ronald Reagan bothers me and I'm not even sure why," she said. "There might be trouble now or later."

But Miss MacLaine is not discouraged by the current political scene, she said, in spite of growing apathy. And she still responds tartly when she feels individual rights are being eroded by such groups as the Moral Majority.

"Hey," she just about shrieked, "where do they get those rules anyway? Certainly not from the Bible. 'Thou shalt not commit adultery' is the only one I know of ~~in the~~ Bible.

"The real immorality is garbage in the streets, rape, starvation, murder," she said. "How can you make a big deal out of morality when half the people haven't got enough money to eat?

"It's funny how you really can't separate sex from politics."

Sex seems to be a hot commodity in Miss MacLaine's work these days. In her latest film, "Loving Couples," she plays a married doctor who has an affair with a younger man. Her husband, also a doctor and played by James Coburn, has an affair with the young man's lover.

Her second film, "A Change of Seasons," with Anthony Hopkins, also focuses on the sexual liaisons of a married couple.

"But the controversy seems to be not that people have varying sexual partners, but that they're being friendly about it," she said. "There's a wonderful scene in 'Loving Couples' when the lover of the wife tells the husband what the wife likes in bed."

Swinging is hardly new in Hollywood or anywhere else. But that's not what attracted her to the script. "As soon as I heard all the studios had turned it down, I said, 'That's for me'," she said.

'Winslow Boy' revived off-broadway

NEW YORK (AP) — There are award-winning plays which, looked at a few years later, make one wonder why they ever won anything. "The Winslow Boy," revived off-Broadway by the Roundabout Theater Tuesday night and seen at a preview, makes one cheer and think it should have won more.

The company has imported Broadway actor Remak Ramsay, veteran of Tom Stoppard plays among others. He is fine as barrister Sir Robert Morton whose glacial exterior covers a not-always glacial heart. However, he is matched by Giulia Pagano, an actress off-Broadway and such cities as Cincinnati, who gives a stunning performance. She makes Catherine Winslow, a suffragette in her late 20s, a multi-faceted person, fine and worthwhile to the marrow of her bones, a magnet to men though not pretty or sexy or much thinking in those terms.

The play, first seen in London in 1946 and on Broadway in 1947 and believed by the Roundabout not to have had another major production since, is long. There are no dull places. Director Douglas Seale, the admirable cast, the late Sir Terrence Rattigan and the reality he based this play on have seen to that.

In the play, set from 1912 to 1914, 13-year-old Ronnie Winslow is kicked out of a government military school for stealing a five-shilling postal order. He says he didn't do it.

Arts, crafts show scheduled

MONAHANS — The annual Sands Arts and Crafts Show will be Nov. 15-16 at Ward County Coliseum, two miles south of Monahans.

Those interested in securing a booth may call the show's chairwoman, Gladys Powers, at 1-943-5113. Booth fees are $20 for an individual and $30 for two or more sharing a booth. No fees are collected on sales. Booths will be set up Nov. 14 from 1 to 8 p.m.

Gallery hosts open house

SAN ANGELO — The Kendell Gallery of San Angelo invites the public to an open house Sunday from 2 to 5 p.m.

The works of Janie Carr and Cindy Carr Pepper, both of Big Lake, will be on exhibit starting Sunday and continuing through the month of November. Both artists paint landscapes, still lifes and portraits using oils, pastels and acrylics.

Wurstfest set Nov. 9

NEW BRAUNFELS — The predominantly German community of New Braunfels is hosting its Wurstfest Friday through Nov. 9.

Attendance is expected to top 170,000. Wurstfest which honors the German culture of this Texas hill country town, pays specific homage to the art of making sausage with the entire community involved in the special activities.

Suspect held in racial killings

TAMPA, Fla. (AP) — Joseph Paul Franklin, held under $1 million bond today as authorities prepared to question him about racial shootings in five cities, was a high school dropout reared in a broken home by a mother he hated, relatives say.

The avowed racist and drifter, wearing a long-sleeved shirt that hid the tattoos which helped officials identify him, appeared in court here Wednesday and was ordered held pending a hearing next week to determine whether he will be sent to Salt Lake City.

The 30-year-old Alabama man is wanted there on federal charges of violating the civil rights of two blacks by killing them Aug. 20. Officials say he used a dozen names and disguised himself to elude the law for months.

"I'm innocent," Franklin told reporters Wednesday, calling the charges "trumped up ... because of my racist views." Asked if he held racist views, he replied: "Oh, definitely. ... I'm against race mixing and communism."

At a hearing Wednesday, U.S. Attorney Gary Betz backed his request for high bond by listing incidents officials want to question Franklin about.

Betz cited the May sniper wounding of National Urban League President Vernon Jordan; sniper slayings of blacks and white women in Cincinnati, Johnstown, Pa., Indianapolis and Oklahoma City; the alleged defrauding of a Utah hotel; and bank robberies in Tennessee and Georgia.

He said Franklin is also named in an escape warrant in Florence, Ky., where he was jailed a month ago.

Betz said Franklin is a drifter who hasn't held a job for three years and has used 12 aliases, wigs and other disguises to avoid authorities.

Attorneys countered that Franklin has no felony convictions, but four misdemeanor convictions. They declined to elaborate.

Franklin was arrested in Lakeland on Tuesday night, three days before a scheduled visit there by President Carter. Authorities say Franklin sent a threatening letter to Carter four years ago accusing him of "selling out to blacks."

But Franklin told a reporter Wednesday he wasn't planning to see Carter, saying: "No, I'm not interested at all in Jimmy Carter."

Automatic weapons used to kill elephants for ivory

BY EARL LANE
(c) 1980, Newsday

WASHINGTON — The elephant has become an unfortunate victim of the arms buildup in many African nations, with poachers increasingly using automatic weapons, particularly the Soviet-built AK-47, to slaughter the animal for its tusks, a Kenya-born writer said Wednesday.

Oria Douglas-Hamilton said that automatic weapons and even rocket-propelled grenades have been falling into the hands of poachers who use them to kill elephants more efficiently than ever before. She told of coming upon clearings where a half dozen or more of the animals had been dropped in their tracks.

As an example of how effective automatic weapons can be, Mrs. Douglas-Hamilton told of witnessing an approved culling of an elephant herd in which several hunters killed 20 elephants in about three minutes.

With the AK-47, Mrs. Douglas-Hamilton told a National Geographic Society briefing, "It takes little skill for a man to kill five to 10 elephants." There have been reports of automatic weapons use by poachers in Zambia, Chad, Zimbabwe, Senegal, Sudan and Zaire, she said. In addition to the Soviet weapons, poachers apparently have access to weapons from many other sources. At one killing site in northern Uganda, Mrs. Douglas-Hamilton and her husband, Iain, a zoologist, found cartridge shells of Russian, Chinese, Dutch, French and Egyptian origin.

John Eisenberg, assistant director of Washington's National Zoo, said there have been reports from other researchers on the increasing use of sophisticated weapons by poachers. Eisenberg, a specialist on Asian elephants, said the wars in Southeast Asia have had a significant impact on elephant populations in such countries as Laos, Vietnam and Cambodia. While researchers have been unable to make counts, bombing and defoliation of forests may have cut the herds in half in some areas during the last decade. There are only about 50,000 to 70,000 elephants left in Asia, Eisenberg said.

As for Africa, Iain Douglas-Hamilton directed a continent-wide census of elephants between 1976 and 1979. He estimates that there are about 1.3 million elephants in Africa. While the animal is not yet endangered, poaching has reached the highest levels in 60 years — with 50,000 to 150,000 animals killed each year — and there have been sharp declines of herds in some regions. The herds are also being crowded out by loss of their forest habitat to farming. Douglas-Hamilton found significant declines in 10 of the 35 nations included in the survey. Kenya lost more than half of its elephant population between 1970 and 1977. The country then banned all trade in wildlife trophies, skins and ivory, but poachers continue to roam Kenya's wildlife parks.

One of the most severe declines occurred in Uganda, where retreating troops of fallen dictator Idi Amin killed thousands of elephants in the Kabalega Falls National Park. In 1966, the southern portion of the park had 8,000 elephants. After Amin's fall, there were only 160, and even those may now have been killed.

Many African governments have sought to control the killing of elephants, but the price of ivory has made such efforts difficult. During the 1970s the price per pound of ivory went from $2.30 to more than $45, before leveling off at about $35 a pound at the end of 1979, Mrs. Douglas-Hamilton said. A pair of tusks can fetch a poacher $1,500, more than the annual income of many Africans. Even some poorly paid game wardens have resorted to poaching, Mrs. Douglas-Hamilton said.

Chrysler finds repair program more costly than expected

WASHINGTON (AP) — A repair program that Chrysler Corp. agreed to carry out for customers who bought cars with bad fenders is costing the financially troubled company much more than the $45 million it expected to spend, sources say.

Chrysler signed a consent agreement with the Federal Trade Commisson earlier this year to replace rusted fenders on an estimated 200,000 cars or to reimburse car owners who already had paid for the work.

However, in recent days, the automaker has sent letters to dealers asking them to postpone for two or three weeks customer appointments for repairs to affected 1976 and 1977 Plymouth Volare and Dodge Aspen cars. During the postponement, Chrysler said, it will work out unspecified "alternatives."

The government sources said Wednesday that Chrysler representatives held informal discussions with the FTC staff about possible changes in the agreement because it was much more expensive than the expected $45 million. No formal request for change has yet been filed with the FTC.

A Chrysler spokesman who asked not to be identified said the company "intends to comply with the agreement with the FTC. We're just exploring alternatives for the customer. We may not offer any."

Asked what the company might offer, he said, "We're not talking about that." How much Chrysler might save and the current cost estimate for the original agreement could not be learned.

Chrysler's interest in lightening the financial burden of making the repairs became known only days before Friday's deadline for owners to apply for the repairs or to ask for reimbursement if they had the fenders fixed on their own.

Residents of Yorba Linda, Calif., look up at a fire burning in the Santa Ana Canyon, threatening some 100 homes. The brushfire was declared contained Wednesday. (AP Laserphoto)

Brushfires contained

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Aided by diminishing winds and moist air, firefighters contained brushfires that charred over 25,000 acres in southern California and destroyed one home and two barns.

Santa Ana winds clocked at 50 mph to 60 mph dropped off late Wednesday, allowing crews to contain and nearly control all six brushfires, which covered 32 square miles.

The Owl fire in Orange County — the largest of the blazes — was declared 90 percent controlled after burning over 14,800 acres and destroying one home and two barns.

County fire spokesman Mike McKee said the fire, the largest in that county since 1967, was expected to be completely out today. The remaining hot spots were in Telegraph Canyon on the fire's north flank, in thick brush, oak and eucalyptus trees.

Two firefighters were treated for second-degree burns.

In Ventura County, a fire blackened 8,700 acres and threatened to close the Pacific Coast Highway before it was controlled in Sycamore Canyon.

Fifteen miles away, another fire erupted near Santa Paula, where actor Steve McQueen's ranch is located. It was controlled after burning 3,600 acres and briefly threatening several homes and the Saticoy Country Club.

Board studying Medicaid bids

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — The State Board of Human Resources has decided the lowest and best bidder for Texas' $2 billion Medicaid insurance business will get the four-year contract — even if it is not Bradford National Corp.

Board members made their decision Wednesday and hired Touche Ross Co. as consultant to help them choose between Bradford and H. Ross Perot's National Heritage Insurance Co.

A state district court judge had scheduled a hearing for today on Perot's suit to prevent the board from signing a contract with Bradford, a New York firm.

The board voted July 15 to give the contract to Bradford after its staff and actuarial consultant said Bradford would do the job cheaper than Perot's firm. Attorney General Mark White said this month the vote created a binding contract.

Marshall Doke, Bradford's attorney, insisted Bradford has a binding contract but said the firm would cooperate with the Touche Ross study "to the extent we can do so without prejudicing Bradford's rights."

After White held earlier this month that Bradford had the contract, board Chairman Hilmar Moore said the board had no choice but to sign.

Moore said Wednesday, however, a "clarification of the attorney general's opinion" empowered the board to break the contract "at any stage if we deem it not in the best interest of the state."

The contract could be terminated even before it is signed if the board determined NHIC would do a better job, Moore said.

Perot asked the board to require both bidders to disclose "any criminal investigations of their companies" involving bribery or pay-offs to get or keep contracts.

The Dallas millionaire said he would be willing to make such an agreement and challenged Bradford to say the same.

"We respond to the board, not to Mr. Perot," Doke later told reporters.

Board members also resolved to review the process by which its staff and consultants arrived at their recommendation of Bradford and to "determine the weight, if any, to be given to that recommendation."

Perot has maintained the staff misled the board into thinking Bradford would be the least expensive while NHIC really was the low bidder.

Millions of dollars ride on the decision — NHIC made a $3.8 million profit last year from its current Medicaid contract, while Bradford expects $5 million to $10 million in profit over the next four years.

Volcano's consequences likely increase in asthma, silicosis

ST. LOUIS (AP) — Autopsies on some of the victims of Mount St. Helens' first big eruption indicate the long-range consequences of the volcano's blasts may be silicosis and asthma, according to a report to a pathologists convention.

Dr. N. Karle Mottet, head of the University of Washington environmental pathology programs, said nine people killed when the southwest Washington volcano erupted May 18 had both silicon and silicon dioxide in their lungs.

The compounds are associated with silicosis, a disease in which the inhaled particles cause serious scarring of the lungs. Silicon is also known to cause asthma.

Burns from the heat of the eruption were the primary cause of death in the nine victims studied and inhalation of volcanic ash was a secondary factor, Mottet said.

There have been five eruptions of Mount St. Helens since the May eruption which killed 34 people and left two dozen missing.

Mottet said people living in areas of Washington and Oregon where fallout levels were highest are most susceptible to the diseases. But he said the risk of contracting silicosis was "not very high" while the risk of asthma was "somewhat higher."

Farmers will be most susceptible to the diseases as they scatter the ash while overturning the earth, he said.

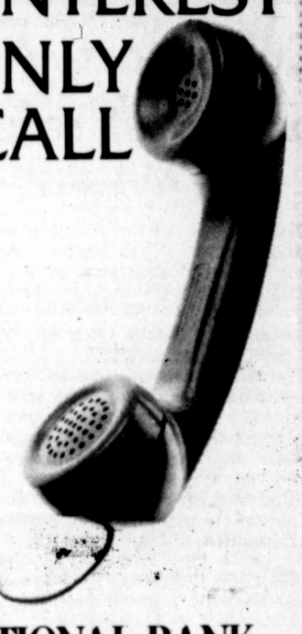

The autopsies indicated a silicon concentration of 6 percent in the lungs and a silicon dioxide concentration of 2 percent, Mottet said.

"That breakdown of particles closely mimics the composition of the soil in that area, which, of course, is volcanic material," he said.

Mottet reported the results of the study Tuesday to about 6,000 pathologists attending the joint meeting of the College of American Pathologists and the American Society of Clinical Pathologists.

Improper import permits used for turtle meat, agent says

BROWNSVILLE, Texas (AP) — Samples of turtle meat used in government tests on other turtle meat allegedly imported by two seafood businessmen were brought into the United States without proper permits, a federal agent testified.

The testimony by Agent Gus Nunn of the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service came Wednesday in the trial of Pat Pace of Brownsville and Ben Soloff of Philadelphia.

Nunn said a Florida scientist did not have a proper permit when he brought Pacific Ridley meat samples to the United States from Mexico for tests in connection with the current case.

"With a name like Kermit, I don't even know the species of frogs," said Kermit Cosse, a New Orleans restauranteur.

Fisherman says 'willpower' kept him, companions alive

SOUTHPORT, N.C. (AP) — A fisherman who spent 10 hours floating in a lifejacket in the cold waters of the Atlantic Ocean after his boat sank says "willpower" kept him and three companions alive.

"With the water temperature and our body temperature dropping, we wouldn't have made it through another night," said John R. Lisk, 27, of Long Beach. "The general will to live kept us alive. I kind of figured we'd get through somehow or another with all that willpower."

Lisk and the three others were picked up by the Coast Guard and reported in good condition Wednesday at a hospital, where they were being treated for exposure, cramps and exhaustion.

David Johnson said his companions were awakened by a crash about 10:30 p.m., and found water pouring into the boat.

"I never saw anything happen so fast," he said. "I heard a crash. I looked up and our fish box was off the deck and coming into the cabin. The water was just pushing it."

While Johnson tried to crank the boat's engine, his son, George, cut the anchor line. Lisk radioed a quick "Mayday" distress call and Steve Merchant, 33, of Yaupon Beach found four lifejackets. The boat sank within a minute, Johnson said.

"It was so cold," Merchant said. "You think about sharks and those things, but you don't talk about it that much. It'll scare the hell out of you. I won't go fishing again, not in this life anyway," he said.

"I don't know what I'm going to be doing, but it won't be fishing," Johnson said.

THE NEWSPAPER BIBLE

You're going to rise from the dead!

But tell me this! Since you believe what we preach, that Christ rose from the dead, why are some of you saying that dead people will never come back to life again?

For if there is no resurrection of the dead, then Christ must still be dead.

And if He is still dead, then all our preaching is useless and your trust in God is empty, worthless, hopeless;

And we apostles are all liars because we have said that God raised Christ from the grave, and of course that isn't true if the dead do not come back to life again.

If they don't, then Christ is still dead,

And you are very foolish to keep on trusting God to save you, and you are still under condemnation for your sins;

In that case all Christians who have died are lost!

And if being a Christian is of value to us only now in this life, we are the most miserable of creatures.

But the fact is that Christ did actually rise from the dead, and has become the first of millions who will come back to life again some day.

Death came into the world because of what one man (Adam) did, and it is because of what this other man (Christ) has done that now there is the resurrection from the dead.

Everyone dies because all of us are related to Adam, being members of his sinful race, and wherever there is sin, death results. But all who are related to Christ will rise again.

Each, however, in his own turn: Christ rose first; then when Christ comes back, all His people will become alive again.

After that the end will come when He will turn the kingdom over to God the Father, having put down all enemies of every kind.

Frozen plants: Crops of future?

By MARY POWERS
The Arizona Daily Star

TUCSON, Ariz. (AP) — In the next century, a fungus ravages the fields of an Idaho potato farmer, and he thinks longingly of a potato variety he used to grow back in the 1980s — one particularly suited to stand the latest assault.

John O. Anderson, a University of Arizona adjunct assistant professor of plant science, wants to make sure that never happens.

If his work is successful, a tiny plant shoot from that 1980s potato will be frozen, stored and waiting for the farmer. The bud, a little larger than a pinhead, will then be thawed and grown into a mature plant.

"A future plant breeder should have the capability of going to a computerized file, defining what traits he's looking for, and getting a withdrawal from a freezer that he can grow into one plant and clone into hundreds," Anderson said .

Every summer, while Tucson swelters, Anderson and his research assistants send carnations, potatoes, apples, cassavas, Douglas firs and loblolly pines into the deep freeze. Then they bring them back to life. They've been doing it since 1977.

"It's as close as you can get to suspended animination," Anderson said.

The goal is to treat a plant's tiny growing tip — called a heristem — so it can survive storage in liquid nitrogen at temperatures of minus 321 degrees Fahrenheit.

Cryobiology, the science of freezing living matter, dates back 30 years to a discovery by two English scientists. They found glycerol was the magic additive that turkey sperm needed to survive freezing. That discovery was largely responsible for making artificial insemination the routine procedure it is today.

Most seeds can survive freezing by immersion in liquid nitrogen. But work to freeze plant samples successfully, rather than seeds, has progressed more slowly.

The university, backed by a $70,000 three-year U.S. Department of Agriculture grant, is one of six American institutions working in the area today.

"We started from ground zero," Anderson said. From the beginning, he concentrated on vegetatively propagated crops — like potatoes and apples — that grow best from plant tissue, rather than seeds. Currently, such varieties are preserved only by actually growing the plants.

"Even big orchards fill up," Henderson said. "When the spaets scarce, someone ends up deciding what varieties to keep. Or the land may become so valuable that someone decides it is too expensive to keep an orchard there anymore."

Loblolly pine and Douglas fir pose even greater problems. They need more time and space to grow, and there are more varieties to preserve.

"It turns out there are slightly different gene pools between trees in different valleys, along different mountains or rivers," says Anderson.

The freezing procedure, which Anderson sees as a backup system to traditional preservation, is simple for most plants. Under sterile conditions, a plant's heristem domes are removed and stored in a nutrient solution for 48 hours to make sure they are still alive when freezing begins.

Finally, it is immersed in liquid nitrogen and either quick-frozen at a rate of more than 1,000 degrees per minute, or slow-frozen at about one-half a degree per minute.

Cuban art, American statue point out refugees' conflicts

By TIMOTHY HARPER

NEW YORK (AP) — The first thing visitors notice in Ivan Acosta's 32nd-floor Manhattan apartment is the collection of old family photographs and art objects from Cuba. The first thing Acosta himself points out is the view of the Statue of Liberty.

The big statue of his adopted country and the little photos of his native land symbolize the anguish of Acosta and other Cuban artists and professionals who consider themselves exiles and refugees.

Hundreds of members and supporters of a group they have formed, the Committee of Intellectuals for the Freedom of Cuba, gathered recently at Columbia University here to condemn Castro's rule in their homeland.

Acosta, a director of off-Broadway plays on Cuban culture who fled Cuba at age 18 in 1963, said the dissident movement is gathering strength with the arrival of 100,000 additional refugees in this year's "Freedom Flotilla."

He said the recent arrivals boost the number of Cuban immigrants to the U.S. to more than one million — about one-tenth the population still in Cuba.

"We want to tell the world the end of the myth is here," he said.

Acosta, who said he and his family had fled Cuba after he was identified at a student protest against Castro's army policies, estimated 80 percent of Cuba's artists and intellectuals are now living outside Cuba.

Mud wrestling oozes its way into American disco scene

By HUGH A. MULLIGAN
AP Special Correspondent

BROOKFIELD, Conn. (AP) — Mud wrestling, the latest spectator sport sweeping the country, or oozing across it, made its first big splash in our area the other night.

On the whole, it beats bear baiting, pig sticking and cock fighting and is not nearly as violent as Italian soccer, in which during my European experience a referee had his nose bitten off.

Mulligan's Stew

The sport made its local debut at the Cuckoo's Nest, an aptly named sometime discotheque that has been trying to broaden its psychedelic horizons with more exciting, from the audience viewpoint, forms of groping in the dark between the stabs of the strobe lights.

In keeping with the hallowed hyperbole of professional wrestling, the contestants, all female, had names like Killer Kim, Hurricane Heidi and Mad Duck Marcia. Or was it Mona? Monica? My notes are a bit mud-splattered. I'm not much on remembering names, but I never forget a leotard.

Ballerina-style black leotards were the uniform of battle, although the figures they attempted to contain were a good deal more lush than one observed among the royal corps de ballet at Covent Garden or the Bolshoi. The decorum was a bit less decorous too.

"No biting, no hair pulling, no eye-gouging," the referee, known as Mr. Clean, intoned the rules as the gladiatrixes entered the arena: a 12- by 15-foot pit of mud about a foot deep on the site of what a few hours before had been the dance floor.

Mr. Clean, wearing an immaculate white T-shirt and matching clam digger shorts, detailed for the contestants several sensitive areas of the anatomy that were not up for grabs "under federation rules." He never did specify which federation, but there was no challenge to his authority.

Indeed, there were no managers, seconds, handlers or cutmen in the respective corners to file a protest or throw in the towel. If any of the girl grapplers had a husband or boyfriend in the house, he kept a low profile throughout the evening. But there was no shortage of fans, both male and female, urging on the combatants once the bell sounded.

Actually there was no bell. The referee just said "Go at it" or words to that effect and they did, for three two-minute rounds. The match began with each leotarded lioness facing the other in a kneeling position, hands on the opponent's shoulders. The object of the game hasn't changed since Ajax got a half-nelson on Ulysses back in the primordial ooze, with a Greek scribe named Homer in the press box: attempt to pin your opponent to the mat, both shoulders touching, with a series of holds, locks and grips.

In the first match of the evening, a slender, long legged blonde named "Killer Kim" slithered and sluiced through the slime trying to come to grips with a slippery compact brunette simply named "Mad Dog," but never was able to get a handle on her. By the time the third round was over, the blonde wasn't very blonde anymore and the eel-like Mad Dog had got the upper hand or at least was sitting on the other's face.

"A revolting dehumanizing spectacle, I'm leaving," said a young lady in the front row, whose jogging jacket paid allegiance to the University of Connecticut.

"I'm not," answered her boyfriend, or former boyfriend, emptying his beer into the pit to lubricate the mud bank, a custom that seemed to win encouragement from the management, which after all was also in the beverage business.

The house, for the local debut of this new exhibition sport, was an odd mixture of young college kids and middle class blue collar types, several of whom wore the initials "B.P.O.E." across their backs. The predominance of sports cars and pickup trucks in the parking lot seem to bear out this random analysis of the audience. Men outnumbered women, but not overwhelmingly.

The audience was strangely sedate until Hurricane Heidi and Mad Duck entered the lists. Then even the boys in the back billiards room deserted their cue sticks for the main event.

Heidi was a generously built baby faced blonde with a Bo Derek braided coiffure, who according to the announcer tipped the scale at 165 pounds. This gave her a 40 pound weight advantage over the taller, rather elegant looking Mad Duck, who affected a sort of Theda Bara hairdo and the same beestung lips, soon to be buried in the muck.

Although this was opening night and her first bout, Heidi already had a noisy claque who cheered her on with resonant bovine mooings. An instant Mad Duck faction responded with vociferous quackings. Still, the ladies went about their slithery scuffling in a rather demure fashion, despite the barnyard overtures from the gallery, most of them now on their feet, moving around the pit to follow the action.

Mad Duck was quick and wiry, inclined to use her height as leverage to overturn the other, but Heidi had the ability to roll herself into a ball, a large mud ball that didn't present any shoulders to pin. Both seemed to lack the killer instinct, although Heidi several times rolled over on top and seemed to be squashing more than her opponent's hopes.

At one point the referee tried to separate them, since neither seemed able to break the other's grip or escape her bulk. For his troubles, he wound up with two embarrassing handprints on the back of his previously pristine shorts.

I can't recall whether Hurricane or Mad Duck won the featured event of the evening. Near the end of the round, someone at the corner of the bar intoned, "Here's mud in your eye," and as if on cue the interlocked combatants obliged by plopping over in a huge splash of slime. The local dry cleaner cheered the loudest.

As if in sensitivity to any women's rights issues that may be at stake here, the management urged the patrons to "remember Monday nights are ladies nights with an all-male review."

Recruiting changes sought

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. (AP) — Harvard should adopt a more aggressive recruiting policy to attract minority professors discouraged by Boston's "forbidding" racial climate and women scholars torn by the demands of childrearing, a faculty committee recommends.

Because some minority scholars also find Harvard "aloof and cold," the university "will not increase its share of scarce minority faculty without an aggressive policy," the committee advised in a report released Wednesday.

The report said that of 356 tenured members of the Faculty of Artsland Sciences, five are black and 12 are women.

Of the entire arts and sciences faculty of 649, 13 are black and 90 are women, according to the report.

The committee studied hiring searches of seven Harvard departments in the past five years. Of 10,000 applicants in 84 hunts, 39 minority job seekers made it to "long lists" of prospective candidates, the report said. Two made it to "short lists," and one was offered a position.

Pacific Northwest Bell begins postcard calling campaign

SPOKANE, Wash. (AP) — Pacific Northwest Bell, hit by a slump in long-distance dialing, is asking its workers to write friends and relatives extolling the virtues of saying it by phone.

PNB even provides the postcards.

Company officials say that because of the recession, people are trimming their budgets and their phone calls, cutting income the phone company had counted on.

"That's why we've come up with this unusual program," said Steve Doolittle, the company's Spokane district manager.

"It's understandable that people are concerned about costs these days. Many people don't realize what a good bargain a long-distance call is," he said.

As an example, he cited a three-minute station call from Spokane to New York. In 1960, the call had to be operator-dialed and cost $2.10. In 1980, it costs $1.37 by direct dialing, Doolittle said.

Since September, some 24,000 employees in PNB's operating area — Washington, Oregon and Idaho — have been mailing messages about long-distance calls.

It's designed to remedy sagging corporate revenue, which is running about 14 percent below projected levels, said Katherine Lewis, PNB's public relations representative.

In Spokane, residents are placing an average of 143,601 long-distance calls daily, compared with 133,639 a year ago and 117,377 two years ago. But the increase is deceiving, because PNB in the past year made some 4,000 new connections.

Lamb, Nolan, Fisher gain wildcat project locations

Jed J. Miller of Odessa announced location for a 5,000-foot wildcat in Lamb County, six explorer sites were reported in Nolan County and a wildcat test was staked in Fisher County.

The Miller project in north Lamb County is No. 2 Hinson Farms, 660 feet from south and 1,980 feet from east lines of section 43, block 1, W. E. Halsell subdivision, and four miles northwest of Spring Lake.

The site is one location north of Miller No. 1 Hinson Farms, which was drilled to 8,800 feet and plugged and abandoned as a failure.

NOLAN WILDCATS

Gage & Co. of Midland will drill five of the Nolan County projects, each to 7,400 feet in the southwest part of the county, 18 miles west of Blackwell.

No.1 Foster Price will be drilled 467 feet from north and west lines of section 222, block 1-A, H&TC survey. It is a southwest twin to a 7,412-foot dry hole and one location south of upper Canyon production in the JMM field.

****

The operator spotted No. 1 Jahew Jameson "C" 2,252 feet from south and 467 feet from west lines of section 223, block 1-A, H&TC survey. It is one location south of Canyon oil production.

****

Gage & Co. No. 1 Jahew Jameson "D" will be drilled 467 feet from south and west lines of section 223, block 1-A, H&TC survey and one location south of Canyon oil production in the JMM field and 1/2 mile east of Strawn gas production in the Jameson, North field.

****

The operator spotted No. 1 Jahew Jameson "E" one location northeast of Strawn gas production and 5/8 mile southwest of Canyon oil production. The site is 2,000 feet from south and 1,000 feet from east lines of section 224, block 1-A, H&TC survey.

****

Gage & Co. No. 1 Jahew Jameson "F" will be drilled 1/2 mile west of Canyon oil production and one location southwest of Canyon gas production. It is 467 feet from north and 2,172 feet from east lines of section 224, block 1-A, H&TC survey.

Oil price again climbs

ROTTERDAM, The Netherlands (AP) — The price of crude oil from the Persian Gulf took another upward jump on spot markets Thursday, traders said, as the war between Iraq and Iran continued to cut off exports of 3.8 million barrels a day from the two countries.

Arab light, the oil produced in Saudi Arabia and the tradtional benchmark on which world crude prices are set, was quoted at $38 per 42-gallon barrel following the reported sale to India of some oil at $37.75 a barrel.

The oil was selling in mid-October at $37 to $37.50 a barrel in spot-market trading for individual cargoes, and $31.50 a barrel a month earlier.

Lea draws wildcat; field tests staked

A wildcat operation has been announced for Lea County, N.M., and several projects have been staked in field areas.

Atlanta tension may increase

ATLANTA (AP) — Worried that racial tensions over the slayings of 10 black children may increase when a white Florida policeman goes on trial here in connection with the slaying of a black businessman, federal officials have met with local officials to discuss the trial.

At a closed-door meeting here Wednesday, local government officials and representatives of civic and civil rights groups talked about ways of heading off any problems, according to Ozell Sutton, regional director of the Justice Department's community relation service.

The 35 participants discussed "added pressures that the trial would bring to Atlanta," he said.

Former Dade County officer Charles Ververka is scheduled for trial Dec. 1 in federal court on charges of violating the civil rights of insurance executive Arthur McDuffie, who died last year of severe head injuries, allegedly after a confrontation with police.

When four other policemen were acquitted in May on state charges in McDuffie's death, race rioting broke out in Miami. The riots lasted three days, took 18 lives and caused more than $100 million in property damage.

One participant at the meeting, the Rev. Fred Taylor of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference, said some people suggested Ververka's trial should be moved to another city. Others, however, said a violent reaction to the trial might be less likely in Atlanta than elsewhere because of a "climate of growing sensitivity to civil rights" in the city.

Atlanta's black community has been shaken by the killings of 10 black children, which some say are evidence of a nationwide resurgence of violence against blacks, and the accidental deaths of four toddlers and a teacher in a boiler explosion at a housing project day care center.

Elderly couple burned

CLAYTON, Mo. (AP) — An elderly husband and wife whose charred remains were discovered in the ruins of their farm house apparently were shot to death by burglars who then set fire to the home, police said.

The bodies of Charles C. Williams, 83, and his wife, Lottie, 72, were discovered by Ballwin District firefighters Wednesday in the basement of the 1½-story frame house in western St. Louis County.

"The house was almost collapsed when we got there," said fire chief Jim Silvernail.

The fire began before dawn, and police and firefighters initially did not know whether the house was occupied.

But the couple's son, Charles, who arrived at the farm about 5:30 a.m., said he had spoken with his parents the night before about a party they were planning at the farm that night, officials said.

His parents' car was then found to be missing, and homicide, arson and explosives investigators were called in.

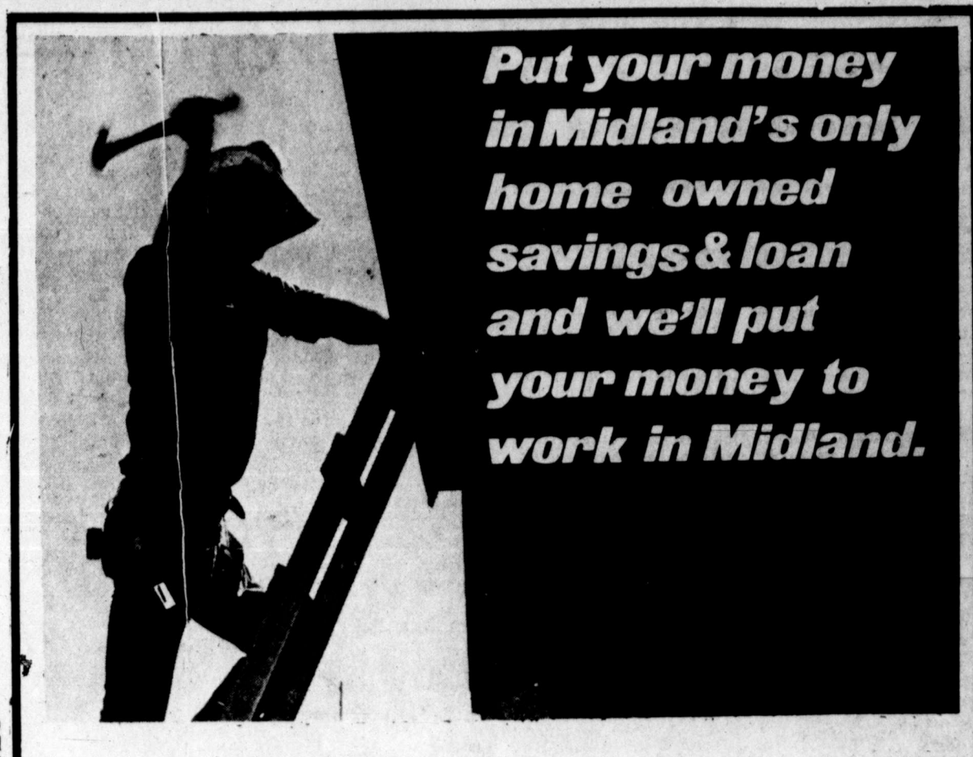

Autopsies at St. Louis County Hospital revealed both victims had been fatally shot, authorities said.

Moderate quake shakes Alaska

PALMER, Alaska (AP) — A moderate earthquake registering 4.1 on the Richter scale shook parts of south-central Alaska on Wednesday evening but there were no reports of damage, the Alaska Tsunami Warning Center reported.

The quake, reported at 5:45 p.m. AST, was centered 20 miles northeast of Talkeetna, the center said. It was felt from Talkeetna to Palmer in the Susitna and Matanuska valleys and also was felt in Anchorage, 90 miles south of the epicenter, the warning center reported.

Britons oppose nuclear weapons

By MAUREEN JOHNSON

LONDON (AP) — After nearly 20 years in the doldrums, campaigners for disarmament are marching again to protest British purchase and deployment of American nuclear weapons.

Membership in the Campaign for Nuclear Disarmament — the movement formed in 1958 with the help of famed philosopher Bertrand Russell — has doubled this year, to 7,000. Last Sunday 50,000 people came to its biggest protest in almost two decades.

U.S. cruise missiles are due in Britain and four other nations in 1983, NATO's response to the Soviet buildup of medium-range nuclear weapons aimed at Western Europe.

And Britain has already begun buying $12 billion worth of Trident missiles from the United States. They are due in Britain in the 1990s as replacements for the Polaris missiles, the ones that prompted the mid-1960s marches.

"We have shown that the people of Britain are fed up," Monsignor Bruce Kent, a Roman Catholic priest and CND secretary, said in an interview.

He argued that cruise missiles in Britain make it a prime Soviet target: "Britons realize that they are on a course of maximum danger. There are not enough targets for all the weapons."

Anti-nuclear sentiment revived this year as Conservative Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher followed her hawkish campaign promises to make Britain a staunch U.S. ally in containing communism and to rebuild her nation's defenses "after years of neglect" by previous administrations.

Further fueling the protests are welfare spending cuts, last year's reactor accident at the Three Mile Island nuclear power plant in Pennsylvania and publication of a civil defense booklet telling people what steps to take in case of a nuclear attack.

Sunday's rally in London attracted prominent figures from the opposition Labor Party, the centrist Liberal Party and the trade union movement, along with dozens of enviromental, pacifist and religious groups and a sprinkling of communists and anarchists.

Although conservative Laborites oppose unilateral nuclear disarmament and worry that a unilateralist ticket would cost them support, the Labor party voted for unilateral nuclear disarmament at its annual conference in October.

This means the unilateralists now include legislators who hope to oust Mrs. Thatcher in elections that must take place by early 1984.

"Unilateralists" opposing the purchase of Trident missiles have some strange and influential bedfellows. They include retired military chiefs and academic nuclear analysts who say the 5 billion pound Trident program will mean skimping on conventional weapons.

Military critics of Trident, such as Field Marshal Lord Carver, the former Chief of Defense Staff, say Britain could never be an independent nuclear power anyway.

Retired generals argue that the Tridents — to be deployed as part of Britain's NATO contribution — will merely leave Britain too poor to buy the tanks, artillery and warplanes it needs for its own defense and its commitments to the Western military alliance.

Mrs. Thatcher remains adamant that the only way to talk to Moscow is from a position of strength. She tells her critics Britain will find enough money to buy Trident missiles as well as to maintain conventional weaponry. Despite tough budget cuts for all other departments, defense spending has increased steadily since Mrs. Thatcher took office.

"We have no wish to seek a free ride at the expense of our allies," Mrs. Thatcher told her party's conference this month.

Kent sees nuclear disarmament as a serious business of "educating" average Britons, persuading citizens to elect a Labor government that will "send back" the cruise missiles, as promised by Michael Foot, deputy Labor leader and main left-wing contender for the party's leadership next year.

Kent says that rather than organizing marches, current CND methods include lobbying professional groups, particularly teachers.

"We are not going to get into the sterile syndrome of 'when's the next march?'" Kent said. "We've got to form a broad spectrum, not just left-wingers or people perceived as bizarre.... There's a limit to the impact of walking around between Hyde Park and Trafalgar Square."

Voters to consider anti-nuclear propositions

By LEE MITGANG
AP Urban Affairs Writer

Voters in six states will decide the fate of anti-nuclear propositions on Election Day, and nuclear power foes — who until now have fared poorly at the polls — are given a chance of victory in at least one or two of the contests.

The only major ballot victories for opponents of nuclear power have been in Oregon and Missouri, where voters in 1976 prohibited utilities from passing the cost of nuclear plant construction along to consumers while the work was in progress. The Oregon measure applied equally to non-nuclear plants.

In September, nuclear foes were defeated in a Maine referendum that would have shut down the state's only nuclear power plant and banned future nuclear development.

But public concern over radioactive waste, and how to dispose of it safely, may turn the tide in statewide referendums which focus on those concerns in Missouri and Oregon.

In Massachusetts, voters in 34 communities will consider a non-binding referendum on whether future nuclear plant construction should be halted. A strong anti-nuclear vote is forecast.

"I guess 50 percent of the people will vote against nuclear power," said Murray Campbell, a Cohasset, Mass., consulting engineer who heads the pro-nuclear Massachusetts Voice of Energy.

Even if anti-nuclear issues are passed in one or more states, it won't necessarily signify that the public has soured on nuclear power. In Missouri, for instance, polls have said that voters may be willing to pass referenda halting nuclear construction until safe ways are found to dispose of radioactive waste. But the polls also say most Missourians do not oppose nuclear power in principle.

"We would obviously have concern if these things pass," said Kirk Willison, a spokesman for the pro-nuclear Edison Electric Institute. "But it's hard to say it would have a drastic national effect. The most important one this year was Maine. Maine was the only one to date that would have closed down the operations of an existing nuclear plant."

In Missouri, voters will consider a measure that would ban the operation of nuclear plants until there are federally licensed disposal sites for storage of nuclear waste. Since no such sites exist yet, that would effectively ban nuclear plants in the state. Missouri presently has one nuclear plant under construction.

The measure also would require any utility building a nuclear plant to post a bond adequate to decommission it once it became obsolete.

In Oregon, Measure 7 would, like Missouri, require the existence of federally licensed nuclear waste sites before new nuclear construction could take place. It would further require voter approval for future nuclear plants.

Jim Hulden, a spokesman for Portland General Electric which operates the Trojan nuclear plant near Rainier, said that "most likely the issue will pass, because people don't understand the measure."

He said in an interview that PGE had hoped to have another nuclear plant built and operating in Oregon by the mid-1990s. But if Measure 7 passes, it would mean there would be no new plant until perhaps the year 2010, since there won't be any federal waste disposal sites ready until 1995.

In Washington state, an initiative would ban, after June 30, 1981, importation of nuclear waste into the state except for medical wastes. Washington, South Carolina and Nevada are the only states that have commercial nuclear waste dumps, and the ballot measure is specifically aimed at the Hanford reservation operated by Nuclear Engineering Co.

Initiative 84 in Montana would not outwardly prohibit uranium mining, but would prohibit the milling of radioactive waste. The Montana Mining Association maintains that would effectively end uranium mining in the state since the ore would have to shipped out of state for milling, or mill wastes would have to shipped out.

In South Dakota, Measure 2 would require voter approval of future nuclear power plants, radioactive waste disposal sites, and uranium mines and mills. South Dakota has no nuclear plants at present.

Power of re-elected leaders attracting fund-raisers?

WASHINGTON (AP) — The business world's political fund-raising groups are donating heavily to the powers-that-be in Congress despite challenges to some of them by conservative Republicans espousing pro-business views.

It may not be the philosophies of the key Democratic leaders that impress the fund-raising business groups, however, as much as the power they will continue to wield in the next Congress once they are re-elected.

House Majority Leader Jim Wright, D-Texas, pointedly reminded potential contributors of that political fact of life in an unusual letter to business fund-raising groups last month.

In the letter, Wright, facing a tough race in his normally safe district, noted the importance of his party post and added: "I will be coming back to Congress. But anything you give to my opponent just makes it that much more costly for me."

Asked about the letter, Dave Lindsey, a Wright aide, said, "Jim Wright isn't vindictive but he does remember who supports him and who opposes him."

Wright, who is considered a leading contender to eventually succeed House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill Jr., has received $85,741 from business groups, compared to $20,950 for GOP challenger, James E. Bradshaw, according to figures compiled recently by the Federal Election Commission.

Sen. Warren Magnuson, D-Wash., chairman of the Senate Appropriations Committee, and Rep. Al Ullman, D-Ore., chairman of the tax-writing House Ways and Means Committee, are two other congressional leaders fighting for their political lives.

Although their Republican opponents generally take more conservative, "pro-business" positions, Magnuson and Ullman are leading easily in donations from business political action committees — or PACs.

Ullman, who is being accused of losing touch with his district, has received $167,663 from business PACs, the FEC figures show. His Republican opponent, Dennis Smith, has raised only $33,850 from business PACs.

"Business PACs appreciate the work Ullman has done on Ways and Means at giving them an even shot to give their opinions even if he doesn't always support them," said Ed Groswalder, an Ullman spokesman.

Magnuson, 75, considered politically vulnerable because of his age, has received $184,394 from business groups to $3,200 for his GOP challenger, Gorton Slade, according to the FEC figures.

Magnuson's campaign manager, Abrey Davis, said he suspects some of the money does reflect a concern about maintaining access to a key congressional leader although he added: "I don't know if it buys particular access."

Rep. Thomas Foley, D-Wash., House Agriculture Committee chairman and head of the Democratic Caucus, is also running hard for re-election.

Foley is being aided by $87,060 from business groups — many with agricultural interests — while his opponent, John Sonneland, has received only $875 from business PACs.

In addition, Ullman, Magnuson and Foley have drawn strong financial support from organized labor.

Sens. Russell B. Long, D-La., Finance Committee chairman, and Ernest F. Hollings, D-S.C., Senate Budget Committee chairman, have also benefited from the generosity of business PACs, even though neither faced a tough re-election battle.

Long, whose influence often can decide the fate of tax legislation, received $409,625 from business groups for his campaign in Louisiana's unusual open primary system in which he assured his re-election by winning a majority of the vote.

Many business contributors with strong interest in tax legislation gave Long the maximum $5,000 donation permitted under federal law.

His $5,000 donors included PACs sponsored by Ashland Oil Inc.; American Bankers Association; Associated Milk Producers Inc.; Occidental Petroleum Corp.; National Association of Realtors; and Texas Eastern Gas Transmission Co.

Hollings, a leading advocate of higher defense spending, received $181,015 from business PACs, compared to $1,500 for his Republican opponent, Marshall Mays. A total of $39,600 of Hollings' contributions came from major defense contractors.

Moving of Spruce Goose marred by delays

LONG BEACH, Calif. (AP) — Howard Hughes' 200-ton wooden flying boat — which skeptics dubbed the Spruce Goose — floated in a harbor channel early today as a $1 million effort to move it to a temporary haven met with one delay after another.

Officials of Wrather Corp., operators of the airplane, hoped to complete the move today. The journey, which began Wednesday, was a short one — 300 yards from the drydock hangar that has protected the aircraft since its only flight, Nov. 2, 1947.

But the move to another drydock, scheduled to begin at 6:16 a.m. Wednesday and to last eight hours, was never on schedule.

"It has completely baffled everyone," said Wrather spokesman Bob Liljenwall. "They ran into problems they just couldn't foresee."

The aircraft was floated and towed from its hangar late Wednesday morning, its 80-foot high tail clearing the door by five feet. The move was already four hours late because of uneven pump-flooding of parts of the drydock. Things were further delayed at midday by problems with the cranes.

The Spruce Goose is to rest on the other drydock for eight months to prepare it for being moved across the harbor in June for display next to the Queen Mary. Wrather Corp., a Beverly Hills-based entertainment-petroleum conglomerate, will manage the exhibit.

Wednesday's project had a work crew of about 100 and a security and public relations force of 100. The Spruce Goose was insured for handling by Lloyd's of London for $10 million, but no one could say what the premium cost.

Among those witnesssing the move was Charles Jucker, who was crew chief aboard the plane when it made its only flight.

Wrather officials say at least some of the plane's 3,000 horsepower Pratt & Whitney engines are being rebuilt, permitting the plane to taxi across the harbor in June.

"There's considerable work to be done before you can even think about starting them up," Jucker said. "You should have at least four engines to control that mast (the tail) when you get it out in the water, particularly if there's any winds come up."

On Nov. 2, 1947, Hughes taxied the plane along a five-mile stretch of the harbor. "We had passengers and no 'chutes aboard," Jucker said. "There was no reason to think we were going up."

But Hughes steered the craft back into the harbor, apparently to taxi some more, and "when we got to 70 knots I knew we were going up," Jucker said.

The plane lifted to about 70 feet, then settled back into the water one minute — and about one mile — later. It was never flown again.

Study due on military exchange

DALLAS (AP) — A House subcommittee member says Congress is alarmed over the fact that senior management people have come under the gun in a federal investigation into the Dallas-based Army-Air Force Exchange Service.

The U.S. House member told a Dallas newspaper that allegations of fraud and corruption within the largely civilian-run military exchange soon will be scrutinized by a Congressional committee.

U.S. Rep. Dan Daniel, D-Va., said the House Armed Services subcommittee will conduct hearings in Dallas and Washington to look at problems in the exchange and commissary systems of all four branches of the armed forces.

Daniel said the subcommittee he heads would make an "in-depth investigation" of the charges, The Dallas Morning News said in a copyright story Wednesday.

Subcommittee staff member Will Cofer said congressmen are becoming increasingly concerned that top-level managers "are now being named and indicted and brought into the picture."

A federal task force including the FBI and U.S. Air Force has been investigating the bribery and fraud allegations for three years. The investigation already has resulted in indictments of more than a dozen AAFES employees and has implicated 50 companies, the newspaper said.

"The chairman (Daniel) has taken the position that just as soon as the task force work has been completed, the panel will move to call hearings and will make a complete review of the entire exchange system," Cofer said.

"This is of very serious concern to all of us," he added. "The investigation does not appear that it will die soon. It may last another year or two."

Several exchange employees have petitioned Attorney General Benjamin Civiletti to stop the investigation, complaining of illegal mail interceptions, wiretaps and monitoring of conversations, the newspaper said.

The Army-Air Force Exchange Service is the nation's seventh-largest retailer, with annual sales exceeding $3.5 billion, and employs 60,250 people worldwide. The service buys, prices and sells goods offered through military base and post exchanges for sale to active-duty and retired military personnel and their dependents.

Panel seeks removal of judge

CRYSTAL CITY, Texas (AP) — The Zavala County Commissioners Court is asking the State Judicial Qualifications Commission to remove Jose Angel Gutierrez, the fiery founder of La Raza Unida Party, as county judge.

The commissioners court, back in control of Democrats after several years of La Raza Unida rule, voted 3-1 this week to ask the state commission to remove Gutierrez on grounds he has neglected his official duties.

"The action was taken because Mr. Gutierrez has been absent from 22 of the last 28 commissioners court meetings this year alone," said Precinct 2 Commissioner Frank Guerrero Jr. "He's also on the juvenile probation board and hasn't been there to do his job. We've had to drop the juvenile probation office services from the budget."

Gutierrez, who has been a guest lecturer at a college in Oregon this year, replied when asked about the absences: "I was present at the meetings I wanted to be present at.

"The public elected me and the public can vote me out of office at the next election."

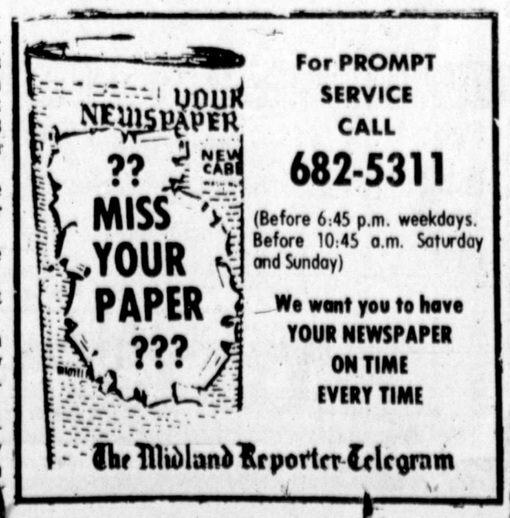

Gutierrez, who founded predominantly Mexican-American La Raza Unida Party in a tumultuous school boycott in 1969, was elected county judge in 1974 and re-elected in 1978. But Democrats won back control of the commissioners court in the 1978 election and only one La Raza Unida member, Elena Diaz, remains on the commissioners court.

"The judge has abused his office and neglected the duties he was elected to do," said commissioner Felipe Torres.

Torres said he feared Gutierrez's absence from the Oct. 13 meeting would jeopardize the legality Zavala County's tax setting which occurred that day.

Guerrero said commissioners hope to hear from the Judicial Qualifications Commission "in a few days" whether it would act on the court's recommendation.

Gutierrez would not comment on Guerrero's allegations that he may not longer be living permanently in the county, but his secretary said he still resides in the county.
