More hostages leave Iraq

■ 175 freed Americans arrive in Frankfurt, along with more than 90 Britons, about 30 Canadians, and former hostages from other European nations.

By Nesha Starcevic

FRANKFURT, Germany (AP) — The first Americans freed under Saddam Hussein's order releasing all foreigners arrived in Germany early today. Other former hostages prepared to leave Iraq after more than four months under guard or in hiding.

Some of the 175 Americans on the U.S.-chartered Iraqi Airways jet that landed in Frankfurt were expected to go to a U.S. Air Force hospital in nearby Wiesbaden. Most planned to return to the United States today.

Lorin Hubbard, 66, a Boeing Co. executive held as a "human shield" at an ammunition plant 35 miles west of Baghdad, Iraq, said he had waited for bombs to fall.

"We were hoping they'd blow the place up. ... We had no idea when we'd get out," he said. "Nobody knew where we were, as far as I know."

"This is the first time I have had shoes on in over three months," said construction worker Randal Warren, 49, of Charleston, Mo., who said he hid in the top floor of a Kuwaiti apartment building and went barefoot to keep quiet.

The flight also carried more than 90 Britons, about 30 Canadians, and former hostages from Ireland, Greece, Austria, Argentina, Denmark, Italy, the Netherlands and Switzerland, said airport officials in Baghdad.

In all, 324 people were on the airplane, and more than 250 of them had been stranded since the Aug. 2 Iraqi invasion of the tiny oil-rich emirate of Kuwait. The rest included family members and others.

The Iraqi parliament Friday approved a decree by Iraqi President Saddam Hussein to free all foreigners in Kuwait and Iraq.

Robert Vinton, 58, of Santa Fe, N.M, said he was picked up in Baghdad on Aug. 18 and held at a refinery south of the city.

"It was like a gulag," he said after arriving in Frankfurt.

Asked what he wanted most, Vinton replied, "I think a hamburger."

Long-awaited moment

Connally speaks out against war with Iraq

AUSTIN (AP) — Former Texas Gov. John Connally, hours after bringing home a planeload of hostages, said Sunday the United States could defeat Iraq in battle "but lose the war."

"If we become involved in a shooting war in that distant land, it will be tragic indeed," Connally said in his address to graduating University of Texas students.

"The encounter will be fierce with staggering casualties on both sides. Unquestionably we will win the battle, and just as assuredly we will lose the war because we will incur the enmity of 200 million Arabs including most of those in the lands we will be protecting."

And, Connally said, the war would be fought for "a product we can obtain elsewhere and in behalf of a regime unworthy of the blood of American youth."

His criticism of engaging Iraq militarily drew applause from the crowd of about 12,370 attending the graduation ceremony.

Earlier Sunday, Connally and oilman Oscar Wyatt returned to Houston with 21 hostages, three U.S. Embassy employees and seven family members.

Connally, a protege of former President Lyndon Johnson, said he and Wyatt

Ex-governor, oilman arrive with hostages

HOUSTON (AP) — Former Texas Gov. John Connally and oilman Oscar Wyatt brought a planeload of hostages home from Iraq Sunday and said their talks with Saddam Hussein revealed a leader who was "not an insane man, but a very tough man."

Twenty-one hostages, three U.S. Embassy employees and seven family members stepped off a Coastal Corp. Boeing 707 shortly before 5 a.m. CST Sunday to a cheering throng of nearly 200 relatives and friends who stormed the tarmac at Ellington Air Field to leap into the arms of the former hostages.

Connally and Wyatt also were mobbed by family members who covered their faces with lipstick-marked kisses of thanks and moved the visibly exhausted men to tears.

Brian Parker, of Vidor, Texas, son of former hostage Bobby Gene Parker, interrupted a news conference held by Connally and Wyatt to present them each with a red rose. In a tearful voice, he said, "This is a very, very small token of appreciation for everything you've done. You've brought my daddy home." He then led the crowd in three cheers.

The hostages flew to Houston with Connally, who has also served as secretary of the Treasury and Navy, and Wyatt, the chairman of Coastal Corp., which funded the weeklong trip as well as travel for relatives and friends to meet the group in Houston.

None of the released hostages works for Coastal.

Connally and Wyatt said they met with Saddam for 45 minutes in the presidential palace.

"We made an impassioned plea to him, saying to him in effect that we thought

AP

JERUSALEM (AP) — An Israeli soldier was killed and two were wounded when bombs exploded outside military headquarters in the occupied town of Bethlehem Sunday, the third anniversary of the Palestinian uprising.

In other violence, an Arab was fatally shot as he tried to strangle an Israeli policeman and grab his rifle Sunday, the army said. Relatives said he was shot while standing at the door of his home.

Soldiers also clashed with masked youths in the West Bank village of Bani Naim, shooting one protester in the leg, the army said.

Two homemade bombs went off in the West Bank town of Bethlehem early Sunday evening as an army patrol passed the gate of the military base along the Jerusalem-Bethlehem highway, the army said.

Troops clamped a curfew on Bethlehem and surrounding villages, erected roadblocks, and searched for suspects in the area, the army said.

Israel army radio said six paratroopers were walking along the highway in a routine patrol

Walesa wins Polish presidency in landside

Lech Walesa

■ His opponent, emigre businessman Stanislaw Tyminski, declines to concede defeat, saying he doesn't trust polls.

By John Daniszewski

WARSAW, Poland (AP) — Lech Walesa, the shipyard worker who helped lead his country out of Communism, swept to a landslide victory in Poland's first popular presidential vote Sunday, according to partial returns.

Full official results were expected late today, but earlier exit polls predicted a similar outcome.

"There are terribly difficult tasks waiting for us," Walesa said as he sipped a congratulatory glass of champagne before the television cameras and supporters in Gdansk, where his Solidarity movement began in August 1980.

"I hope that we will be building Poland's future together. I want to behave firmly, I want to firmly correct everything that is wrong, and make firm accounts for everything that has not been accounted for yet."

Outside, thousands gathered and chanted his name over and over. They sang "Sto Lat," a song that means, "May You Live 100 Years."

Tyminski declined to concede defeat immediately, saying he did not trust the polls. He said he would remain active in Polish politics.

Lung cancer rates up in women who don't smoke, study says

NEW YORK (AP) — Lung cancer rates have climbed so sharply in the United States that the death rate from the disease among non-smoking women is now higher than the total lung cancer death rate in women 30 years ago, a study shows.

"Cancer is increasing in industrial countries above and beyond that due to cigarette smoking or aging alone," said Devra Lee Davis, an author of the study and one of the editors of a collection of studies exploring the recent increases in cancer.

The increased rate of lung cancer among women who don't smoke could reflect exposure to second-hand cigarette smoke as well as exposure to radon, asbestos and possibly air pollution, said Davis, a researcher at the National Academy of Sciences in Washington.

According to National Cancer Institute figures, the lung cancer death rate among all women in 1955 was 5.1 deaths

Judge will decide

DALLAS (AP) — The narrow defeat of a referendum designed to help minorities win seats on the City Council could throw the issue back to a federal judge who already has vowed to impose the plan or one similar, officials say.

Voters on Saturday rejected by 369 votes a referendum that would have created a system of 14 single-member districts with a mayor elected at large.

Supporters of Proposition 1 said the plan would have helped ease racial inequities that make it difficult for minorities to get elected.

Notorious bonnet

LONDON (AP) — The black bonnet worn by Vivien Leigh as the tempestuous Scarlett O'Hara in "Gone With The Wind" will be auctioned this week, the auction house said Sunday.

The actress wore the Christian Dior creation in the box office blockbuster and for publicity stills with co-star Clark Gable, who played Rhett Butler.

When filming finished, Miss Leigh gave the hat to London theater critic Alan Dent, her close friend and biographer, a spokesman for Phillips auctioneers said.

When Dent died in 1978, Scarlett's bonnet passed to an elderly couple in Cumbria county, northern England, who had given Dent a home after he retired.

FREED: More flights are being arranged

(From 1A)

U.S. officials said they planned to charter another flight in three or four days to evacuate the rest of the estimated 750 Americans in Iraq and Kuwait.

Other flights being arranged included British charters to leave today and Tuesday to London, and a flight to Moscow. Airport sources also said hundreds of Vietnamese workers were at the airport awaiting departure.

The first foreigners to leave Baghdad under the decree issued by Saddam were a group of about 200 hostages, mostly Italians, who arrived in Rome Sunday aboard an Italian-chartered jet.

Western diplomats complained that Iraqi authorities had thrown up some last-minute bureaucratic roadblocks to the exodus.

For example, foreigners in cities other than Baghdad were told they must obtain exit visas from those cities. Those who had been under work contracts were told that Iraqi law requires them to present a letter releasing them from their obligations.

Iraq has refused U.S. requests to waive visa requirements for freed hostages, and the processing of the visas alone had been expected to delay some departures for days.

However, diplomats said Iraqi officials were working quickly Sunday, processing an estimated 80 exit visas an hour.

Twenty-one former American hostages landed in Houston early Sunday after flying out of Baghdad a day earlier aboard a jet chartered by former Treasury Secretary John Connally, who was in Iraq on a private hostage-freeing mission.

Their release was arranged prior to Iraq's decree freeing all foreigners.

> 'It was like a gulag.'
> — Robert Vinton, former hostage

"God bless America!" said one of the arriving Americans, Bill Nelson of Los Angeles.

Three U.S. Embassy employees in Iraq also were on the flight, along with relatives of the former hostages.

About 8,000 Westerners had been detained since Iraq's invasion of Kuwait, including about 600 who were held at strategic sites in an effort to deter an attack.

Voice of America broadcasts advised Americans in Kuwait, including those who have been in hiding since Iraq's invasion, that they could leave on Sunday's charter flights.

But diplomats said it was not immediately clear if Americans who had taken refuge in the U.S. Embassy in Kuwait would be allowed to leave. Iraqi troops have sealed off the embassy since it refused to close in August.

U.S. officials said Friday they would evacuate the embassy after all Americans were out of Kuwait.

Iraq has repeatedly linked a resolution of the gulf crisis — including any withdrawal from Kuwait — to the Palestinian issue.

But Saturday night, the U.N. Security Council, facing the threat of a U.S. veto, postponed until today discussion of a resolution calling for an eventual international peace conference on the Middle East.

HOME: Men told Saddam hostages weren't insurance

he should release all the hostages," Connally told a news conference. "Mr. Wyatt said that if indeed there's an armed conflict, the presence of a few hundred hostages would not in any way deter the armed conflict."

They also told Saddam he was being portrayed "as a vicious, brutal man, compared to Hitler, and I said the release of the hostages before the Christmas season would clearly show a concern and a compassion," Connally said.

The men also donated 15 tons of medical supplies, valued at $500,000, to Fellowship on Reconciliation, an Iraqi humanitarian group in Amman. Saddam was "very grateful, very thankful."

Saddam replied as they parted, "You will not go home with an empty plane," according to Connally.

That statement touched off a bureaucratic nightmare, in which hostages identified by the oilmen through an underground hostage network scrambled to get exit visas and be transported hundreds of miles from the strategic locations at which they were held to Baghdad.

Connally described how one British subject, Peter McCleod of London; arrived on the plane "in his shirtsleeves, with two pillowcases containing his entire possessions."

Some hostages who hoped to ride home with Connally and Wyatt were forced to remain because of delays in getting exit visas required by the Iraqis.

The plane left Baghdad at 10 a.m. CST Saturday, stopped in Shannon, Ireland, to refuel and drop off McCleod, and flew on to Houston.

Wyatt and Connally secured the hostage's release before Saddam's blanket release of all hostages Friday.

Wyatt, who said he's done business with the Iraqis for 19 years, said Baghdad donated $30,000 worth of fuel because the U.N.-imposed economic sanctions prohibited Wyatt from buying fuel there.

At the presidential palace, Saddam greeted the men in a military uniform with a pistol holster. After 10 minutes, Saddam made an obvious symbolic gesture, standing and then removing his holster, placing it on the table between them, Connally said.

"He said to us he had no argument with the American people, and he did not want a war. He wanted peace, but he wanted peace with justice and with dignity," Connally said.

Connally noted Saddam would be "foolish" to want a war. "He's not an insane man. ... He's a very tough man, but he's not a stupid man."

Wyatt and the hostages all said they had been treated well, with the only major discomfort being a shortage of food.

Before the group stepped off the plane Sunday, U.S. Customs, the Immigration and Naturalization Service, and the State and Agriculture departments spoke to the hostages for about 15 minutes, clearing them back into the country.

Coastal Corp. is now coordinating travel arrangements to get the former detainees back to their hometowns.

CANCER: Increases occurring in many industrialized nations per hundred thousand women. Davis and her collaborators calculated that the death rate in women non-smokers by 1985 was 6.1 per hundred thousand; the total reported lung cancer death rate that year for women was 26.4.

Sharp increases are also occurring in brain cancer, a blood cancer called multiple myeloma and the dangerous skin cancer called melanoma, Davis said. And the increases are occurring in many industrial countries, not just the United States.

"The changes are so great over such a short time in so many countries in men and women that we need to look carefully for their causes," she said. "These could be very important as clues for prevention. And it's better to prevent cancer than to cure it."

Although the studies emphasize occupational and environmental exposure, smoking remains one of the single most important causes of cancer, Davis said. In many industrial countries, it is responsible for 40 percent of all cancer deaths in men and 30 percent in women.

Smoking kills an estimated 3 million people each year around the world, and if current trends continue that will climb to more than 10 million per year by 2020.

The new studies are collected in "Trends in Cancer Mortality in Industrial Countries," which will be released by the New York Academy of Sciences later this week. A copy was obtained by The Associated Press.

In addition to the increase in lung cancer among women nonsmokers, Davis mentioned these other examples of cancer on the rise:

- Multiple myeloma appears to be increasing in industrialized countries, possibly as a result of increasing exposure to benzene in gasoline, although that is not yet scientifically proven.
- Melanoma is increasing in men much more rapidly than in women, suggesting some occupational exposure.

POLAND: Turnout estimated at about 53 percent of voters

(From 1A)

Outgoing President Wojciech Jaruzelski, who sent Walesa to jail under martial law nine years ago, sent his congratulations. He wished the new president "fruitful activity for the good of our homeland."

Turnout was estimated at 53 percent, compared with about 60 percent in the first round last month, according to preliminary results.

The Solidarity leader and 1983 Nobel Peace Prize laureate had asked voters to give him a broad mandate to lead the country to a market economy and a European-style democracy.

The exit polls showed that he did well among all social groups — nearly doubling the 40 percent he got in the first round in November.

Tyminski, who performed well in the first round, appeared to have been damaged by numerous questions raised about him at the end of the campaign.

"I'm surprised, but I won't make any comments at the moment," Tyminski told reporters after inspecting the returns posted at his home voting district in Pecice, outside Warsaw.

Walesa had split the Solidarity movement when he opposed Prime Minister Tadeusz Mazowiecki in the first round of voting Nov. 25.

But this time, he ran with the backing of the powerful Roman Catholic Church and virtually all political and social organizations.

"I voted for Walesa. How could anyone vote for a clown?" said Jan Grzesiak, 52, a Warsaw building superintendent. "Walesa is a worker, he went through hardship and he is an honest man — contrary to Tyminski."

Tyminski, a self-proclaimed millionaire, beat Mazowiecki in the first round based on his promise to bring Western business know-how to Poland and improve the economy in a month.

Although he returned to Poland in September after 21 years in Canada and Peru, there were reports that he had ties with former Communist and police operatives.

Natural gas explosion rips military housing complex

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — A natural gas explosion ripped through a housing complex at the Fort Benjamin Harrison Army post Sunday night, injuring at least 10 people, officials said.

There were no immediate reports of deaths at the post, which serves as a processing center for soldiers en route to the Persian Gulf. At least two men and a child were in critical condition, a hospital official said.

Dogs were brought to search the wreckage for anyone who might have been killed, but by midnight EST hadn't found any bodies.

The explosion, in a housing area for enlisted personnel, destroyed one four-family housing unit and damaged another unit, said post spokesman Maj. Ronald Downing.

Downing, who previously had reported 11 people were injured, said a later count reduced that to 10.

An investigation into the cause of the blast was begun, he said.

Downing said fire authorities had been called to the scene earlier in the evening to investigate a natural gas leak. The evacuation of the complex had been planned but the explosion at about 9:15 p.m. occurred before it could be carried out, he said.

About 210 people living in the Harrison Village complex were evacuated after the blast, he said.

Hundreds of firefighters, police, military and emergency personnel were on the scene late Sunday.

Large plumes of black smoke curled from the fort area, located on the northeastern edge of Indianapolis. Authorities said callers reported the blast could be felt more than a mile from the site.

SPEECH: War shouldn't be fought over oil, Connally says negotiated the release of the hostages with Iraqi leader Saddam Hussein.

The next day, Saddam proposed to release all hostages, but Connally, a former Navy secretary and Treasury Secretary and one-time presidential candidate, said he did not know if his visit had anything to do with that.

In a news conference before his address, Connally said Saddam wants a peaceful resolution to the Middle East conflict, but is not afraid of war.

"He clearly said to us that he wanted peace, but that there could be no peace without fairness or justice," Connally said.

Asked if the U.S. should still fight Saddam if Iraq withdraws from Kuwait but maintains control over a disputed oil field, Connally said, "What's he going to do with it? If he wins it, he's going to sell it."

He said Iraqi officials constantly told he and Wyatt that they are tired of being treated as second-class citizens.

"They're still feeling the bitterness they have toward the British and colonialist policies of the British that had dominated their people," he said.

He said modern day Iraqis are the first generation independent of European colonialism and their feelings may be similar to Americans after the American Revolutionary War.

"I see no justification for getting into a shooting war," he said at the news conference.

BOMB: Curfews confine Arabs to their homes

when the first bomb exploded.

The patrol checked out the explosion, found nothing and continued walking, the report said. After the soldiers had walked another 30 yards, the second bomb went off, wounding three soldiers.

One of the soldiers suffered critical head injuries and died in the emergency room of Hadassah Hospital in Jerusalem, said hospital spokeswoman Ruth Mekel. The two other soldiers were slightly hurt.

The death brought to 10 the number of Israeli soldiers killed during the uprising, the army said.

Curfews confined more than a million Arabs to their homes in the occupied territories, some for the third straight day, in an army effort to quell violence on the anniversary of the intefadeh, or uprising.

"At the moment, we have beefed up forces, and increased patrols, lookouts and roadblocks," said a lieutenant enforcing the curfew on the Dheisheh refugee camp in the occupied West Bank.

Soldiers fired at stone-throwers breaking the curfew in the Gaza Strip village of Beni Suhaila, wounding 25-year-old Muhamad Mardi al-Madani in the right thigh, Arab reports said.

Relatives said Al-Madani was hit as he stood at the door of his house. Hospital officials said the bullet severed Al-Madani's artery and he bled to death. The army also confirmed he had died.

But the army said he attacked a member of the paramilitary border police, trying to strangle the officer and take his rifle. It said the Israeli was slightly injured in the melee by a ricocheting bullet.

Sunday's violence brought to 777 the number of Palestinians killed by Israelis during the uprising and to 54 the number of Israelis who have died in the violence. Another 316 Palestinians have been killed by fellow Arabs, most on suspicion of helping Israel, since the uprising began Dec. 9, 1987.

The army curfews coincided with a general strike called by uprising leaders to mark the anniversary. Virtually all shops and schools and traffic were idle.

Slogans on walls near Manger Square in nearby Bethlehem called for 1991 to be "the year of destroying the enemy." They were signed by the Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine, a Marxist faction of the Palestine Liberation Organization.

Another slogan signed by the fundamentalist group Islamic Jihad said: "The language of stones, knives, and bullets is the only language the enemy will understand."

Army radio reported that only Jewish settlers and army patrols were seen driving in the occupied territories.

Large sections of the West Bank, including such principal cities as Nablus and Hebron, as well as virtually all of the Gaza Strip, were under curfew for the third straight day.

Masked activists in the Dheisheh refugee camp defied the curfew Saturday night and marched through the alleys carrying Palestinian flags, Arab reports said.

Two jailed Palestinian leaders and a left-wing Israeli legislator issued a joint statement Sunday saying violence on both sides will increase if the peace process remains deadlocked.

"We are deeply concerned that if negotiations between Israel and the Palestinians will not start soon, both peoples will find themselves in a very tragic situation of deterioration manifested by terror and oppression," said the statement.

The statement was issued by Yossi Sarid of the Citizens Rights Movement and Palestinian journalists Radwan Abu Ayyash and Ziad Abu Ziad. The two Palestinians have been jailed by Israel for six months without trial.

'Plumbers' extend mission, bad weather now threatens

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — Columbia's astronauts drained enough fluid from the shuttle's clogged plumbing Sunday to avoid an early return, but forecasts for bad weather at a landing site threatened to shorten the mission anyway.

NASA was going to bring Columbia back to Earth on Monday, a day ahead of schedule, if the constantly rising level of waste water could not be contained or the pipes unplugged.

The astronauts reduced the amount of waste water in the storage tank to slightly more than 3 percent by filling 15 urine collection bags.

That gave the crew a green light for staying in space until Tuesday as far as the water system was concerned, NASA said Sunday. But meteorologists were predicting possible rain Tuesday at Edwards Air Force Base, Calif., which could leave the lakebed runways damp for days.

Flight director Al Pennington said officials expected to decide sometime between midnight and mid-morning whether to bring the crew back Monday night.

"That strictly will be based on the weather now," Pennington said. "Mother Nature is always the driver. We always know that Mother is still in control."

Columbia's waste water output line clogged when the crew tried unsuccessfully to dump water overboard Saturday. It was the latest in a series of problems to befall the astronomy mission, already hampered by computer failures and pointing trouble with the onboard observatory.

The astronauts used hoses Sunday to suck waste water from a line beneath the crew cabin floor into the urine collection bags. Their initial efforts earlier in the day were unsuccessful.

Fluid splashed onto Guy Gardner's gloves during his first attempt to fill one of the small plastic bags, and astronomer Robert Parker helped him wipe up the mess. The water pressure was reduced for the next try, but the hose became clogged.

"It was kind of fun and exciting — for a little bit," Gardner told Mission Control's James Voss.

"OK, we'll be able to get you a good job as a plumber when you get back," Voss replied.

Referring to his wife, Gardner quipped: "Well, Linda's been trying to get me to be at that job for some time now."

Star-gazing by the telescopes in Columbia's open cargo bay continued uninterrupted during the water removal. Among the many targets observed Sunday were a quasar, a white dwarf star with a powerful magnetic field and numerous galaxies.

Parker and the three other astronomers aboard Columbia have been splitting 12-hour shifts to operate the $150 million Astro observatory.

Scientists and engineers on Earth 218 miles below have been helping the astronauts manage Astro's three ultraviolet telescopes since an on-board computer overheated and shut down Thursday. The shuttle's only other terminal for operating the instruments failed the day of the launch, Dec. 2.

Astro's ground-managed X-ray telescope indicated a jet stream of matter zooming this way from a pulsar 3 billion light years away. A pulsar is a star that emits radiation in brief, regular pulses.

Ground controllers succeeded Sunday in using the instrument pointing system in the automatic mode, which did not work right during much of the mission. Occasional use of the automatic system, primarily for focusing on faint objects, gave the astronauts a break from having to manually guide the telescopes with a joystick.

"Believe me, we don't mind giving our fingers a rest," said astronaut Jeffrey Hoffman.

Publicity jolts stealth, officials

WASHINGTON (AP) — The unfolding story of Pentagon bungling in the A-12 stealth aircraft program has revealed more than just new details about the secret Navy attack plane that's been under wraps for more than six years.

Emerging evidence of mismanagement in the $50 billion program also has shown clearly that Defense Secretary Dick Cheney has failed to break a longstanding and embarrassing pattern of waste and deception in weapons procurement.

The Pentagon inspector general and a Navy internal report last week said technical problems in producing the first prototype plane were papered over to keep the contract fees flowing.

Excessive secrecy limited normal program reviews that may have tipped off Navy managers early on to the plane's problems.

Now the plane is over budget, overweight and overdue. There is some doubt it ever will get off the drawing board.

The A-12 isn't just any plane. It's the Navy's No. 1 aviation priority, envisioned as the latest U.S. warplane to be built with composite materials that limit radar reflections and thereby make it especially difficult to detect by enemy radar.

It is supposed to replace the Navy's venerable A-6 carrier-based attack planes in the mid-1990s.

Driver uninjured in 18 collisions

HAYWARD, Calif. (AP) — A man who claimed God told him he could drive through cars with his flatbed truck hit 18 vehicles and injured about 12 people Saturday, authorities said.

A 2- to 3-mile section of the Nimitz Freeway between Hayward and San Leandro was littered with dented vehicles before Emmet Wheat, 47, hit the center divider with his truck, police said.

Most seriously injured was 8-year-old Francesca Camus of Hayward, who was listed in critical condition at Childrens Hospital in Oakland, authorities said. Camus was ejected from her mother's van when it was struck by the truck, highway patrol officials said.

The other injuries were minor, officials said. The accidents closed a half-mile section of the highway east of San Francisco Bay for about two hours.

Wheat, owner of Commercial Auto Wreckers in San Leandro, was booked for investigation of felony hit-run driving and driving under the influence of alcohol. He was not injured.

His wife, Karen, said she spoke to her husband over the truck's radio just after he rammed into the center divider.

"He said the Lord had spoken to him and that the Lord told him he could drive though the cars," she said.

Kicking horse illegal

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — A horse is not always just a horse — sometimes he's a large police officer.

That's what a judge said when sentencing a Raleigh man to one year in prison for assaulting a police officer by kicking Heir Apparent, a Raleigh police horse.

"I can't condone assault on a law officer by kicking his horse," Judge James Fullwood said Friday after sentencing Elijah Lawrence. "You created a threat to others as evidenced by you hauling off and kicking the horse."

On Oct. 15, Officer D.A. Brugger was trying to arrest Lawrence for failing to appear in court when the man kicked the horse twice in the thigh. The horse reared but wasn't seriously hurt.

Lawrence was arrested when a police patrol car arrived.

"There was no defense," said Lawrence's attorney, Tim Blake. "He kicked it and the officer said, 'Don't kick it.' and he kicked him again."

King kin snubs Arizona

TUCSON, Ariz. (AP) — Yolanda King, daughter of slain civil rights leader Martin Luther King Jr., on Saturday canceled her Arizona appearance in a musical play scheduled for the next day.

Ms. King, 34, and Attallah Shabazz, the daughter of black activist Malcolm X, partners in the performing arts group Nucleus, scheduled the performance months before Arizona voters narrowly rejected two referendums which would have created paid state holidays to honor King.

An understudy from New York would replace Ms. King in "Stepping Into Tomorrow," scheduled to be performed at the University of Arizona Sunday afternoon, said Tani Sanchez, a university spokeswoman.

The other eight performers would hold a news conference in Tucson Sunday, Ms. Sanchez said in a statement announcing Ms. King's withdrawal.

Ms. King would supply a statement but would not attend the news conference, she said.

Ms. King considered canceling in the aftermath of the Nov. 6 vote. Many conventions were canceled and NFL Commissioner Paul Tagliabue has recommended moving the 1993 Super Bowl out of Arizona because of the rejection.

She and Ms. Shabazz said last week that they would go ahead with the performance in hopes of furthering King's ideals.

Jahna Cole, Ms. King's Van Nuys, Calif.-based publicist, declined to say why she pulled out at the last minute.

Tramp doll removed

STAMFORD, Conn. (AP) — A national toy-store chain has stopped selling "Steve the Tramp" dolls after some people and others picketed outside a mall and complained that the character from Dick Tracy demeans the homeless.

The doll, sold by the Walt Disney Co., is described on its packages as an "ignorant bum ... dirty and scarred from a life on the streets. You'll smell him before you see him."

A protest Friday by 12 people at the Stamford Town Center persuaded Kay Bee Toy & Hobby to remove the doll from its 1,200 stores, said Ken Cunniff, vice president of advertising for the California-based chain.

Polls indicate Colombians backing M-19

BOGOTA, Colombia (AP) — Colombians voted Sunday for a new constitutional assembly, and pre-election opinion polls indicated a former guerrilla group may win the largest say in rewriting the 104-year-old document.

Officials said Sunday that six rebels and four soldiers were killed in clashes between the army and other guerrilla groups.

The 70-member constitutional assembly will be empowered to make major structural reform to government. Changes expected include revamping Colombia's battered court system, adding safeguards to curb congressional corruption, and establishing new civil rights in this country wracked by drug violence.

Few people doubt that Colombia's powerful cocaine cartels are donating money to assembly candidates, but it is difficult to measure the traffickers' involvement. Candidates rarely mention the government's 15-month-old war on drug traffickers.

"We are at the doors of the most exceptional opportunity to transform Colombia," said President Cesar Gaviria in a nationally televised speech Saturday evening.

"We Colombians can finally devise a way to bring our country the peace which has been so elusive," he said.

A strong showing by the M-19 group, the former guerrillas, would be a devastating blow to Colombia's traditional parties — the Liberals and Conservatives — that have governed Colombia for 150 years.

In the days leading to Sunday's election, opinion polls were favoring the former leftist guerrilla group. The M-19, led by Antonio Navarro, was expected to capture as much as 40 percent of the vote, which would likely be a plurality in the constitutional assembly.

Official ballot returns are not expected until today.

Many voters blame old party bosses for corruption and failing to curb violence that has killed tens of thousands of people in the past decade.

2 Yugoslav republics hold key elections

BELGRADE, Yugoslavia (AP) — Opposition candidates accused the government of cheating Sunday as the two Communist-ruled republics held elections that could decide whether Yugoslavia remains united.

Draskovic

In Serbia, the country's largest republic, the top nationalist party said it might not accept the election results. The Serbian Renewal Movement accused the ruling Socialists of permitting illegal voting, and most ethnic Albanians boycotted the election.

The Socialists — formerly Communists — faced an array of center-right nationalists in Serbia's first free elections in more than 50 years.

In Montenegro, the smallest republic, 10 parties were challenging the ruling Marxists.

Polling stations in both republics opened at 7 a.m. (12 p.m. CST) and were closing 12 hours later. Results were expected late today at the earliest.

The outcome in Serbia could shape the entire country's future. The nationalist Serbian Renewal Movement, led by novelist Vuk Draskovic, wants to establish free-market capitalism and return the republic to its once-dominant role in the Yugoslav federation.

The western states of Croatia and Slovenia, where center-right parties replaced Communists in spring elections, want more independence from the federation and have threatened to secede.

Serbia's current Socialist leader, Slobodan Milosevic, has refused to discuss the possibility of secession with Slovenia and Croatia.

Draskovic, his opponent, says he wants to keep the country whole but is prepared to negotiate with other republics that favor separation or confederation.

Observers say the tensions between Serbia and the Slovenes and Croats could increase if Milosevic is kept in power, while a Draskovic presidency could reduce tensions.

Widow-turned-nun named Canada's first native saint

VATICAN CITY (AP) — Pope John Paul II Sunday canonized Marguerite d'Youville, a 18th-century widow-turned-nun who is Canada's first native saint.

Her Sisters of Charity, the order she founded in 1737, operates in Canada and the United States within schools, hospitals and other social service agencies. It is particularly known for its work at d'Youville College in Buffalo, New York.

Nuns from the order or its branches also serve in Haiti, Brazil, Japan and Africa.

The saint's seventy years were marked by suffering and hardship.

She was born Marguerite Dufrost in Varennes, Quebec. Her father died when she was seven. At 21, she married Francois d'Youville, who was frequently away from home selling liquor.

Four of her six children died in infancy. One of them, a newborn, died a few days after her husband in 1730, leaving her a widow at age 29.

When her two sons entered the seminary in 1737, she and three other women founded the Institute of the Sisters of Charity, consecrating themselves to the service of God, the sick and the forgotten poor.

UN drug project worth keeping

History assures us that you can't fight a war without weapons and that even pertains to the "War on Drugs" that the United Nations has been waging against drug traffickers in Central and South America.

One of the leading components in that fight has been a project carried out by the U.N. Fund for Drug Abuse Control, which has spent $21 million since 1985 teaching farmers in Bolivia how to grow crops other than coca, which in addition to its use as a medicine and in religious rituals has supplied illegal drug traffickers with a base for cocaine.

The U.N. project is essential to keeping Bolivian farmers growing coffee, fruit, soybeans and other crops, yet it is threatened by the fact that money runs out at the end of this year. The Bolivian government is hoping for an extension and in the interest of turning the tide against the drug traffickers, such an extension is justifiable.

Farmers receive a $2,000 credit for every hectare — about two and a half acres — of coca they destroy. Additionally, they are provided loans, seeds and fertilizer to raise other crops.

Bolivia's government officials hope to reduce the estimated 125,000 acres now devoted to coca production to 30,000 which they believe will supply sufficient coca leaf for medicinal and religious needs.

Oswaldo Antezana, undersecretary of the interior, noted, "Our purpose is to change the illicit economy created by the coca-cocaine axis and enable farmers to diversify their crops."

When that transition is complete, the drug barons will lose their coca supply and the drug market in the United States will experience a sharp reduction in cocaine now on the street.

The project is a good one and should be continued. Fighting the drug barons is a difficult endeavor regardless of the tactic. This project has proven its worth both in the forests of Bolivia and on the streets of the United States.

It's one "weapon" in the war on drugs that truly makes sense.

Diet pills more harmful than FDA admits

WASHINGTON — The latest dope on diet pills is that they may be more dangerous than the Food and Drug Administration has admitted. It wouldn't be the first time the FDA erred on the side of recklessness. Nor would it be the first time that dieters had been disappointed by the promise of quick and easy results.

Anderson

A yet-to-be-released report prepared for Congress by a U.S. Public Health Service physician says that the appetite suppressant in many over-the-counter diet pills is ineffective for most people and can be a health hazard, especially to young people obsessed with thin figures.

The report, by Dr. Paul Raford, raises the possibility of consumer fraud and questions whether the ingredient — phenylpropanolamine hydrochloride, or PPA — should be sold over the counter.

The news means that the FDA has some explaining to do. Last month, the FDA had a chance to ban PPA from non-prescription uses but decided not to. Several other non-prescription diet ingredients were prohibited from being sold without prescription, but the FDA declined to put PPA on that list, saying it needed more time to study it. The FDA also allowed PPA to stay in cough and cold remedies.

Raford's study is not so timid. Our associate Scott Sleek obtained an advance copy of the report. PPA, which acts as an appetite suppressant in diet pills, has been linked to heart damage, strokes, seizures and other medical problems, Raford told Congress. PPA is a cousin of methamphetamines, commonly known as "speed" or "uppers."

Raford's report says research on PPA that, "if furthur verified shows potential for massive consumer fraud at best, and at worst could explain the disturbing and increasing incidence of medical malaffect. ..."

The findings will fuel an ongoing debate over the safety of diet pills. Rep. Ron Wyden, D-Ore., has been spearheading a congressional investigation into the diet industry. And the Federal Trade Commission is investigating claims of the companies that peddle diet pills.

Jessica McDonald put a face on the problem when she recently testified before a congressional subcommittee about her long battle with eating disorders and diets. A college junior from Washington, D.C., and a dance student, McDonald said she started taking diet pills at age 12. She wanted to lose weight fast, and at one point was popping up to 20 pills at a time. She never saw a doctor or a nutritionist.

Raford says the misuse of diet products containing PPA is widespread, especially among people under 30. He said adverse reactions are more common from PPA in diet pills than from PPA in cold and cough remedies. And he said products with PPA result in more reports of adverse reactions than any other leading over-the-counter medicine. Some people compound the risk by "double dosing," using caffeine drinks while taking diet or cold pills.

There are studies that have been kinder to PPA, but congressional investigators say those studies are flawed because they are unpublished, had no peer review, involved small numbers of subjects, did not follow up on their findings and violated research protocols.

Most developed nations have banned PPA as a diet aid, and its critics in the United States say that it should be used only under doctor's supervision.

Jack Anderson's and Dale Van Atta's column is distributed by United Feature Syndicate.

ANOTHER VIEW

1990 ushers in Cowabunga, dude!

Now heading into their third Christmas season, the Teenage Mutant Ninja Turtles definitely appear to be more than a fad.

Six years ago, they were mere doodlings in an underground comic book, but today, the Heroes on a Halfshell have their own movie, cartoon, rock band and records, plus a variety of toys. And they are on T-shirts, plastic cups, toothbrushes, underwear, posters — almost anything you can market to kids.

The Ninja Turtles might be reaching superstar status with real lasting power. To attain superstardom among superheroes, you have to do more than appeal to kids' tastes. You need a good origin myth.

Superman, the uncontested champ of superheroes, is the best example. The origin of Superman is so compelling that everybody knows it. The doomed planet Krypton was about to be blown to bits when a scientist put his only son into a rocket and sent him hurtling through space to Earth. The infant was found by Jonathan and Martha Kent, who discovered that he possessed incredible powers. To best hide those amazing abilities when he grew up, Clark Kent became a journalist.

But the Ninja Turtles outdo Superman. They were four tiny pet turtles dropped into the sewer by a little boy. Then, someone spilled something called retromutagen ooze into the sewer and the turtles mutated into half-human creatures. The Turtles learned martial arts from a mutated rat, who, depending on whether you believe the cartoon or the movie, was a disgraced karate master expelled from his Japanese dojo and forced to live in the New York sewers, or was the karate master's pet rat. Anyway, he, too, got caught in the ooze and turned into a half-rat, half-man creature named Splinter, because of his ability to splinter boards with a karate chop.

Of course, there's more to public appeal than that. Superman first became popular at the beginning of World War II, when the world seemed a dark place and the Man of Steel fighting for truth, justice and the American Way was just what the home front needed.

The Ninja Turtles are current. They are wisecracking teen-agers who would rather be eating pizza, spouting surf slang and playing video games. But they are loyal to their master, Splinter, who keeps them in line with discipline to fight evil. Although they would rather goof off, the Turtles take their public responsibility seriously.

Superman they're not. But then, today's kids wouldn't go for the battle cry of "Truth, justice and the American Way!" This is 1990, and every 4-year-old knows, "Cowabunga, dude!"

— San Diego Tribune

CHARLEY REESE

Problems must be solved if war is avoided

What will happen if, by some miracle, George Bush could be dissuaded from starting the disastrous war he seems determined to start?

Well, being neither psychic nor privileged to receive tips from divine sources, I can only rely, like Patrick Henry, on the lamp of experience and the past to light the future.

Reese

Whether Saddam Hussein keeps Kuwait or indeed came to influence or control all the Persian Gulf States, we can be certain that he would not disrupt the world's oil supply. One, nothing he has said or done in the past, indicates any desire to do that. Two, Iraq and the other states in the region have virtually no source of export-derived income but oil, and thus it is in their selfish interest to keep the oil flowing and at a competitive price. Three, there is too much oil available for anyone controlling only the Persian Gulf to hijack the world market.

So the notion, propagated by Bush, that Iraq would strangle the world economy is a lie made out of whole cloth. What drives Bush and the British is not fear of a cutoff of oil but fear that lucrative corporate contracts might be lost.

In the Arab world, as in Eastern Europe, there is a growing desire for more democratic governments. Most of the present governments, including Iraq's, are not democratic, and so one could expect some political ferment, some conflict.

The Arab world lay beneath the burden of the Ottoman Empire for 400 years and when it fell, British and French colonial rule replaced it. Even in the formal sense, this foreign rule was not shaken off until the early 1960s and the grip of foreign oil companies was not broken until the 1970s.

So the Arab people have had very little time yet to sort out their future and find their place in the world as an independent people. None of this process is a threat to us. Our proper and moral position should be to extend whatever encouragement we can rather than, as Bush has done, ally ourselves to reactionary dictators in an Arab-to-Arab conflict.

The lines on the map of the Middle East were drawn about 1922 by a Frenchman, Picot, and a Brit, Sykes — not by God. These lines are not sacred. They were drawn to suit the colonial purposes of the British and the French and they were drawn without consultation, much less permission, of the people in the area.

Whether they should remain or receive minor or major alterations is up to the people in the area. Hopefully any changes could be made peacefully, but either way, it's none of our business. And in the future, that problem of boundaries imposed by Europeans is going to continue to occupy the people of that area. After the fall of the Roman Empire, it required centuries before the present nation states of Europe emerged in their present form. The Middle East will take time, too.

Finally, even if we avoid war, the problem of Israel and the Palestinians will have to be resolved. Unfortunately for both peoples, they, too, are in a sense a victim of British colonialism. Modern Palestine was created by Sykes and Picot and the British made deliberately vague promises to both Jews and Arabs and broke them all. Thus, to many Arabs, Israel is seen as an outpost of European colonialism. To most Palestinians, they see themselves as having been victimized by both the British and the Israelis.

Since Palestinians are scattered throughout the Middle East, every state in the region is inextricably involved in the Palestinian problem. It will not go away. It cannot be ignored. Regardless of which people occupy which positions in which Middle East countries, the Palestinian/Israeli conflict will remain on the front burner.

It will be extraordinarily difficult to resolve but resolved it will be. The difficult choice is whether it is resolved peacefully or by war. We ought to be working for peace and harmony. To our shame, we are promoting war and division.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Monday, Dec. 10, the 344th day of 1990. There are 21 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

On Dec. 10, 1906, President Theodore Roosevelt became the first American to be awarded the Nobel Peace Prize, for helping to mediate an end to the Russo-Japanese War.

On this date:

In 1520, Martin Luther publicly burned the papal edict demanding that he recant, or face excommunication.

In 1817, Mississippi was admitted to the Union as the 20th state.

In 1830, poet Emily Dickinson was born in Amherst, Mass.

In 1869, women were granted the right to vote in the Wyoming Territory.

In 1898, a treaty was signed in Paris officially ending the Spanish-American War.

In 1931, Jane Addams became a co-recipient of the Nobel Peace Prize, the first American woman so honored.

In 1948, the United Nations General Assembly adopted its Universal Declaration on Human Rights.

In 1950, Ralph J. Bunche was presented the Nobel Peace Prize, the first black American to receive the award.

LEWIS GRIZZARD

We need to stop messing with our food

I actually saw a sign outside a health food store in the trendy midtown section the other day advertising soybean ice cream.

I suppose, as a reporter, I should have gone inside and asked to see the soybean ice cream, but I was afraid they might want me to taste some, so I drove on.

Grizzard

Later, however, I began to think about soybean ice cream a little more deeply and I came to two conclusions.

(1) Yuk.

(2) We're really starting to do some serious messing with our food.

Soybean ice cream, indeed. What is this? Some health food junkie's idea of a joke?

There's nothing wrong with ice cream that I know of.

Eat enough of it, I suppose, and you'll outweigh the cow that gave the milk they used to make the ice cream, but if you can hold it down to a pint or two of Haagen-Dazs a week, and don't eat six Dove Bars at a single sitting, it's probably no big deal.

We can't leave food alone in this country. Either somebody is trying to force something down you that would gag a maggot just because it's good for you, or somebody is diddling around with what was perfect in the first place.

I was in a restaurant recently and chicken noodle soup was on the menu. I like chicken noodle soup.

So I ordered it.

When the chicken noodle soup arrived it didn't look anything like any chicken noodle soup I'd had before.

The noodles were too big.

"What sort of noodles are these?" I asked the waitress.

"Fettuccine," she answered.

"What did you do?" I asked. "Run out of regular chicken noodle soup noodles?"

"No," she answered. "Our chef is very creative."

That's the problem. People are getting too creative with our food and ruining it.

Whenever I am at a restaurant with which I am not familiar, I usually order a cheeseburger. It's hard to foul up anything as simple or inherently good as a cheeseburger.

Then I'm in this place and I order a cheeseburger and it comes to me with mushrooms on it.

"My God!" I scream when I see what has happened. "They've put mushrooms on my cheeseburger!"

"We always put mushrooms on our cheeseburgers," says my waiter, who has a ponytail and is wearing an earring. Never order a cheeseburger in a place where your waiter thinks he's Gidget.

Recently I saw a commercial for fried chicken with a lot of hot spices in it. God never intended fried chicken to taste like some Mexican got loose in the batter with a pocketful of chili peppers.

I'm also baffled by cereal that comes from Europe and is named after a mule. Don't forget to eat your Wheaties. You'll grow up to be like Michael Jordan, not a soccer player named Hans or Ivo.

Some order must return in this land of dancing, singing raisins, fast-food barbecue rib sandwiches, and Tommy Lasorda's "delicious milk shakes" that will make you lose weight. Lord help us, people are actually eating seaweed these days!

I don't want raw fish, anything remotely connected with soybeans, and mushrooms that taste like they sound, with the accent on the "mush."

Or, in the immortal words of my boyhood friend and idol, Weyman C. Wannamaker, Jr., a great American, when he tasted stewed prunes for the first and last time, "There's just some things that ain't fit to eat."

Viennese citizens gape in amazement at a M60 battle tank, driven into the Austrian capital by a drunken soldier Sunday night.

Drunken soldier drives tank home

VIENNA, Austria (AP) — Police thought they had made the streets safer by taking away Gregor Hajek's driver's license. But the 29-year-old soldier was back on Vienna streets hours later Sunday — with a tank.

"I wanted to go home," Hajek told police shortly after climbing out of the M60 tank following a 35-mile drive from a town south of Vienna that ended near his parents home in the Austrian capital.

Police said the man had been charged with resisting state authority and numerous traffic violations. Resisting state authority carries a maximum penalty of five years in prison.

En route the driver had tried to ram one squad car attempting to stop him, ignored several warnings to stop, and drove through a series of red lights. A police car, siren wailing to warn other drivers, had followed the tank on the last part of the journey.

Police said the drama began late Saturday.

Hajek's car was stopped for a routine check and police decided he was drunk. They took his license and drove him back to his barracks in the village of Zwoelfaxing, south of Vienna.

WORLD IN BRIEF

Inkatha urges black unity to end killing

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — The most conservative of South Africa's major anti-apartheid groups Sunday urged an end to foreign sanctions and called on all black opposition groups to work together to halt violence.

The Inkatha Freedom Party's appeal for unity came the same day gunmen killed a 6-year-old girl in Tokoza, a black township outside Johannesburg where scores have died in black-on-black clashes this month. Her death raised to nine the number of bodies found by police there in the last 24 hours.

Concluding a three-day congress, Inkatha urged the rival African National Congress and Pan Africanist Congress to join it in seeking a quick start to full-scale negotiations with the white-led government on sharing power with the black majority.

The more militant Pan Africanist Congress Sunday rejected negotiations with the government on a new constitution.

Chad camp dismantled

AM SENENE, Chad (AP) — Troops of the new government Sunday began dismantling a well-armed camp allegedly used by U.S.-trained Libyan war prisoners to destabilize Libyan ruler Col. Moammar Gadhafi, a French report said.

Agence France-Presse, a news service, reported the camp about six miles north of the capital of N'Djamena was well-stocked with Soviet-made weaponry and other arms and communications equipment.

The United States evacuated about 600 Libyan POWs from Chad to Nigeria on Friday and Saturday after Idriss Deby's rebel forces toppled President Hissene Habre earlier this month. Deby is now interim president.

Other former POWs returned to Libya, which helped arm Deby's fighters.

But the U.S. ambassador to Chad, Richard Bogosian, has declined to comment on news reports that the soldiers were trained by U.S. military advisers for commando operations against Libya.

Death decree stands

NICOSIA, Cyprus (AP) — An Iranian minister was quoted as saying Sunday that the death sentence against author Salman Rushdie is still valid and is irrevocable.

Mohammad Khatami, minister of culture and Islamic guidance, made the comment in an interview with the Islamic Republic News Agency, carried by Tehran radio.

The late Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini "passed Islam's sentence against Salman Rushdie, and this decree, and under no circumstances can this be revoked," Khatami was quoted as saying.

Rushdie has been in hiding since Khomeini called for his death in February 1989 for allegedly defaming Islam in his novel "The Satanic Verses."

JUST ONE OF THE GUYS

Beginning this Sunday:

"We are taking a sledgehammer to another wall — one which has, for too many generations, separated Americans with disabilities from the freedom they could glimpse, but not grasp."
— President George Bush speaking on the July 26, 1990, signing of the Americans with Disabilities Act

In a five-part series, the Reporter-Telegram examines what the Americans with Disabilities Act means to an estimated 43 million disabled Americans.

Who are Midland's physically challenged? They are the deaf and blind. They are those immobilized by muscular or neurological disorders. They are the paralyzed and the elderly who are limited to what they can do on their own. In short, they are the nation's largest minority.

What does ADA mean to them? How will the act affect their lives and the lives of their children.

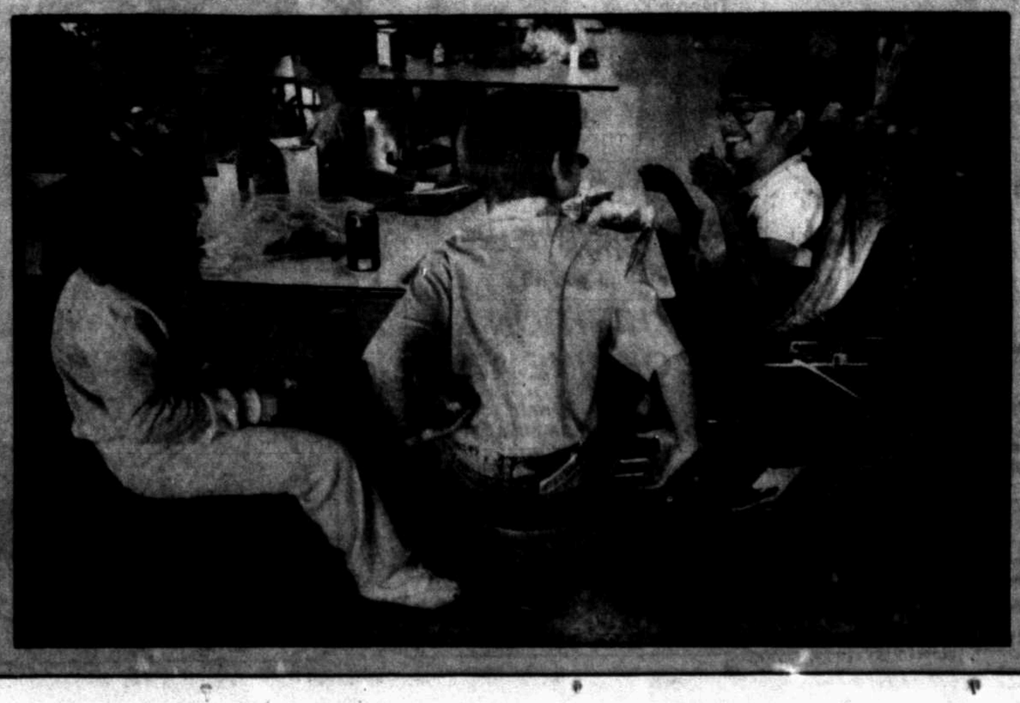

From the classroom where parents battle school officials over childrens' education rights to basic architectural flaws that limit access to professional office buildings, restaurants and hotels, the Reporter-Telegram looks at the second-class treatment of some of America's most brightest and articulate citizens.

Find the answers to those and many more questions in this Sunday's Midland Reporter-Telegram.

Beginning Sunday in a five-part series read about the trails and tribulations that Keith Dunn and other physically challenged persons in Midland face daily as they try to fit into a society that sometimes does not remember that they too are part of society.

Above, Bonham Elementary School teacher Kathy Robinson and Keith Dunn practice reading a book. Dunn gets one-on-one reading lessons daily to enhance his readings skills. Left, Dunn, who is quite popular with classmates, chats with Kati Smith, left, and Benna Telford during gym class. Right, Dunn laughs as fellow student Christopher Titus playfully hides Dunn's dessert during lunch period.

State, independent labs analyze water

Water users don't have to wait for an official government survey to find out how their water measures up chemically.

Kiker

Water can be analyzed for various chemicals by independent laboratories located in most regions or by one of the two labs operated by Texas A&M University. There is also a lab at the Texas A&M Research and Extension Center at Lubbock.

A regular analysis at either of the two labs includes analysis for pH, conductivity, sodium, calcium, magnesium, potassium, carbonate, bicarbonate, sulfate and chlorides. That costs $15. Additional analyses for some 20 chemicals and compounds may be requested for $2-$5 extra, or $46 for a complete analysis.

The lab can analyze for nitrate and plans to start screening for pesticide chemical within about eight months. Many independent labs already analyze for pesticides.

To obtain an accurate analysis, water must be properly collected. Follow these guidelines:

- Collect samples in a bottle with a screw cap closure. An eight-ounce plastic baby bottle is preferable. Water samples for pesticides or petrochemicals must be collected in glass bottles.
- Thoroughly wash bottles before taking the sample to eliminate the contamination.
- For well water, the pump should operate 30 minutes to one hour before taking the sample. The water should be taken at the pump.
- Clearly identify each container.
- Deliver samples to a lab as soon as possible after collection. Heat and light can break down chemicals, thus distorting the analysis.
- If samples must be mailed to a lab, place bottles in a box and pack with a loose, soft-packing material to prevent crushing or breakage.

If a person has any reason to suspect a problem, the water should be tested. If there has been a situation where pesticides have been mixed or spilled near a well, it might be wise to test the water.

Unless a well is subject to a spill, additional analysis of the well should not be necessary for at least five years.

For more information, contact the College Station lab at (409) 845-4816, or the Lubbock lab at (806) 746-6101.

Also, there will be a Texas Plant Protection Conference that will focus on "Agricultural and Environmental Sustainability" in sessions Dec. 11-12 at the Hilton Inn and Conference Center in College Station.

More than 40 experts — including national environmental and government policy leaders, research scientists, educators and regulatory agency representatives — will discuss significant progress in agricultural and environmental areas, and explore ways to ensure environmentally safe use of chemicals and pesticides.

Agriculture is facing challenging times in an environmentally charged social and political climate, particularly regarding the use of agricultural chemicals, said Dr. Ray Frisbie, professor and coordinator for the integrated pest management program of both the Texas Agricultural Extension Service and Texas Agricultural Experiment Station.

Among the issues to be addressed will be the directions and objectives of sustainable agriculture and environmental issues such as the impact of pesticides on water quality and endangered species.

Discussions also are scheduled on the economic impact of pests on crop production and issues that affect pesticide development now and in the future.

Of special interest will be discussions of biotech genetic stock and practical aspects of production of Bt cotton and corn. Bt stands for Bacillus thuringiensis, a naturally occurring bacterium that has been successfully inserted into the genetic material of plants. A plant with Bt produces a protein lethal to some insect pests.

In addition to plant protection sessions related to growing cotton, others are planned on soil fertility, forage and pastures, trees and turf, cotton, corn and small grains.

Immediately before the conference on Dec. 10, the Texas Department of Agriculture will provide testing for private, non-commercial and commercial applicators who need to be certified.

Continuing education units necessary for maintaining applicator certification can be earned at that special program.

Registration is $50.

For additional information, contact Dr. Jerral D. Johnson at (409) 845-8032 at Texas A&M University in College Station.

Pentagon underestimates Ellington fuel contract

HOUSTON (AP) — The Department of Defense paid some $12 million in contract overruns to an airport fuel service company at Ellington Field in a two-year period, according to a published report.

In a copyright story Sunday, The Houston Post reported federal documents show Southwest Airport Services Inc. was paid 7,200 percent more than the government's original contract estimate between October 1986 and October 1988.

One of Southwest Airport Services' owners is James R. Bath, who has connections to U.S. Sen. Lloyd Bentsen's son, Lan Bentsen, and to the President's son, George W. Bush. Bath and the younger Bentsen have been business partners, but there is no indication that the Bentsens or the Bushes have financial ties to the firm.

Bath declined to comment for the article.

In the two-year period, the government paid Southwest Airport Services $8.78 million to supply fuel at Ellington Field, where the President and other government dignitaries land when traveling to Houston. The original contract for the period estimated it would cost $119,000.

The Houston Post obtained Defense Department documents on the expenditure under the Freedom of Information Act.

In a separate dealings, Southwest Airport Services charged the DOD $807,130 during an 11-month period which began in November 1985, that originally was estimated to be $56,000.

For the period from November 1985 through November 1989, the government paid Southwest Airport more than $16.2 million under contracts that originally were projected to be $3.6 million.

Report says John Hannah will be secretary of state

AUSTIN (AP) — Texas Gov.-elect Ann Richards' choice for secretary of state is a former U.S. attorney who helped create ethics reforms that the 1973 Legislature passed, according to a published report.

The Dallas Morning News reported in a copyright story for Monday's editions that John Hannah's selection will be announced by Ms. Richards at a Capitol news conference later in the day.

Hannah, a Tyler attorney who served three terms as a state representative, was also former House Speaker Price Daniel Jr.'s point man on ethics in 1973, the newspaper said.

"He is eminently qualified," said Buck Wood, an Austin lawyer who worked with Hannah in drafting the ethics legislation that year. "Anyone who knows him will be thrilled.

"He will be a real valuable adviser to Ms. Richards on lots of issues," said Wood.

Richards, a Democrat who is the state's treasurer, defeated Midland oilman Clayton Williams, a Republican, in November for the gubernatorial post. Gov. Bill Clements did not seek re-election.

Legislation passed in 1973, in the wake of the Sharpstown stock and loan scandals, was the most far-reaching in decades and set present-day standards for the conduct of elected officials, officials said.

Several public officials, in the scandals, were accused of illegally influencing passage of banking bills and manipulating stock. Later, two top legislators were convicted of accepting bribes.

Business center to host workshop

Staff Report

The Small Business Development Center of the University of Texas of the Permian Basin will host the workshop "More business for Your Business" 1:30-4:30 p.m. Tuesday. The workshop will be taught at the Center for Energy and Economic Diversification, located at the intersection of Highway 191 and Farm to Market Road 1788.

The "hands on" workshop is designed for businesses of all sizes. The course will included discussion on bidding for hundreds of millions of dollars in state and local contracts which are awarded each year.

Cost of the workshop is $10. Arrangements for the handicapped are available with advance notice. Persons interested in attending may call 563-2400.

Baker, Shevardnadze in Houston for talks

HOUSTON (AP) — Secretary of State James A. Baker III took the Soviet foreign minister to his hometown Sunday and predicted they would make progress on a wide range of issues, including the search for a treaty to cut long-range nuclear weapons.

While the crisis in the Persian Gulf demands their attention, Baker and Soviet Foreign Minister Eduard A. Shevardnadze hope to clear roadblocks to a Strategic Arms Reduction Treaty.

"I have no doubt that our talks here in Houston will be productive and that we will continue to tackle some difficult issues in a constructive spirit," Baker said.

He and Shevardnadze plan two days of talks on the treaty, the gulf situation and other U.S.-Soviet issues. They also intend to visit the Johnson Space Center and talk to the Columbia astronauts aboard the Shuttle through a special telephone hookup.

But if the mission is cut short because of poor weather or trouble with disposing of liquid waste that colorful interlude may have to be scratched.

Baker, in an arrival statement at Ellington air field, praised the Soviets for cooperating with the United States in trying to force Iraq to withdraw from Kuwait.

"On no issue has U.S.-Soviet cooperation been more necessary than on resolving the crisis caused by Iraq's brutal aggression," Baker said.

A few hours before Baker and Shevardnadze arrived on separate planes, a group of hostages were brought home by former Texas Gov. John Connally.

"They never should have been taken hostage in the first place," Baker said. "So while we are heartened by their return, we will not rest until all hostages from all nations are safely home."

The treaty to reduce U.S. and Soviet long-range nuclear bombers, missiles and submarines by about 30 percent is nearly finished. The remaining unsettled issues deal mostly with verification — procedures to assure compliance with the restrictions to be imposed.

When it is finished, President Bush plans to go to Moscow to sign the treaty at a summit meeting with Soviet President Mikhail S. Gorbachev.

Shevardnadze, in a brief statement, said in Russian "it seems we have a lot of work ahead of us."

Noting that the United States and the Soviet Union have cooperated in some space ventures, the foreign minister remarked: "I hope we will further solidify our cooperation on earth."

Dallas voters reject minorities referendum

DALLAS (AP) — The narrow defeat of a referendum designed to help minorities win seats on the City Council could throw the issue back to a federal judge who already has vowed to impose the plan or one similar, officials say.

Voters on Saturday rejected by 369 votes a referendum that would have created a system of 14 single-member districts with a mayor elected at large.

Al Gonzalez, chairman of the 14-1 for Dallas Committee, on Saturday said he planned to seek a recount because of the vote's slim margin. But on Sunday he said he was dropping those plans.

"After talking with the mayor and discussing the alternatives that we had, we decided not to do that," Gonzalez said. "We decided to move forward in order to let the healing process begin."

The second measure on the ballot, a proposal that would have increased council members' pay from $50 per meeting to $30,000 a year and the mayor's salary to $35,000 annually, also was defeated.

Supporters of Proposition 1 said the plan would have helped ease racial inequities that make it difficult for minorities to get elected.

Opponents said the referendum would have resegregated Dallas. They backed a plan voters approved in August 1989 that called for 10 candidates to be elected by district, four by region and the mayor at large. But that system was never implemented because a federal judge suggested he would rule it unconstitutional.

Dallas Mayor Annette Strauss has said that if voters rejected the 14-1 plan, U.S. District Judge Jerry Buchmeyer would call a May election for a 14-1 or 15-0 system.

A 15-0 council would include 15 council members elected from single-member districts and the mayor chosen from among the council.

"I assume the judge is going to do what he said he would do, which is call the election," Mrs. Strauss told The Dallas Morning News, adding that the judge has indicated he could make the ruling as early as January.

What the City Council will do is unclear.

Council members, including Mrs. Strauss, have said the options include resubmitting a plan calling for 12 single-member districts and a mayor elected at large. The other options, officials said, are to either accept or appeal whatever plan is imposed by Buchmeyer.

"We're waiting for Buchmeyer to make a ruling," said council member Jim Buerger. "We have no alternative but to wait for the judge. This issue has been unresolved for decades."

Saturday's referendum was held as part of the settlement of a 1988 federal lawsuit brought by Roy Williams and Marvin Crenshaw, who failed in their at-large council bids.

The men, both black, charged the existing election system made it difficult for minorities to win election.

Black and Hispanic leaders nationwide have long charged that at-large elections dilute minority candidates' political power and make it difficult for them to win office.

Williams said he believed the 14-1 plan ultimately will be implemented by the judicial system if not by popular approval.

STATE IN BRIEF

Abilene voters approve schools

ABILENE (AP) — Voters Saturday narrowly approved a proposition to build new schools and facilities in the Abilene Independent School District but rejected a measure to create a third high school.

Proposition 1, a $23.3 million proposal, received 5,387 yes votes, or 53 percent, and 4,775 no votes, or 47 percent.

The second measure, which would have cost $10.3 million, received 7,362 no votes and 2,555 yes votes.

The failure of Proposition 2, coupled with the passage of Proposition 1, means that the school district will add 20 classrooms each to Abilene and Cooper high schools.

The district will also add four elementary schools, a middle school and 14 elementary school physical education-multipurpose buildings.

Superintendent Charles Hundley told the Abilene Reporter-News he "was very pleased" with the passage of Proposition 1 and observed that voters were "emphatic" in denying the idea of a third high school.

Soviet debris crashes

DALLAS (AP) — The body of a Soviet rocket blazed a trail through western U.S. skies early Sunday as it plummeted to Earth, officials said.

U.S. Air Force Maj. David Griffard of North American Aerospace Defense Command in Colorado Springs, Colo. said the brilliant flash of light was caused by a Soviet rocket body.

He said the rocket disintegrated about 12:45 a.m., but Giffard said he had no idea where any debris might have crashed.

The path of the object led over Dallas in a north-to-south direction, witnesses said.

Dallas County Sheriff's spokesman Jim Ewell said he had no reports of anyone finding debris.

Griffard said he didn't know anything else about the rocket, which was one of about 6,500 objects in space that NORAD tracks through the U.S. Space Command's worldwide network of radar and electrical sensors.

Store owner on trial

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — A record store owner who refused to pull from his shelves a rap album by 2 Live Crew goes to trial Monday on an obscenity charge for selling the controversial record.

Dave Risher, owner of Hogwild Records and Tapes, has pleaded innocent to promoting obscene material in connection with the sale of the album "As Nasty As They Wanna Be."

As his trial approached, Risher said he believed a County Court-At-Law jury would side with him.

"The whole community, minus all the elected officials, have been very supportive of me. Mostly they think it's a bunch of hogwash," Risher said. "Strangers have been stopping me in the grocery store wishing me good luck."

Risher was charged in June after San Antonio police vice officers visited local record stores and told owners and managers the album had been declared obscene by a federal judge in Florida.

Flawed treaty blamed

WINNIPEG, Canada (AP) — A man arrested in the U.S. on a Canadian charge of kidnapping his daughter is safe from the law in his hometown in Texas.

Federal officials blame a flawed treaty between Canada and the U.S. for ultimately setting Charles Armstrong free.

"It's very simple. The United States will not honor extradition requests for a parental kidnapping," said William Corbett, senior general counsel for the Canadian Department of Justice.

"We strongly object, but until they change the extradition treaty, that's the way it is."

Armstrong was arrested on charges of abducting his daughter, Misty Armstrong, 16, as she left classes at a Winnipeg high school two weeks ago.

The teenager was dragged into a van while a woman trying to rescue her was punched by the abducter. The girl was driven to the U.S. and her father was arrested in Jefferson, North Carolina.

Because kidnapping your child is not an offense in the United States, Armstrong was arrested solely on the strength of the Canadian warrant.

But less than 24 hours later — to the shock of both the Jefferson and Winnipeg police forces — the American Justice Department ordered Armstrong's release.

Chagra office reopens

EL PASO (AP) — Twelve years ago, flamboyant criminal defense attorney Lee Chagra allowed two men to pass by security cameras and through the locked doors of his brand new downtown law office.

Once inside, they shot him to death.

Since then, the fortress-like office that was to protect him from enemies has remained sealed, giving rise to rumors that Lee Chagra's ghost roamed inside.

But in the past month, a wrought iron gate that sealed the door has been rolled open. A new law firm has moved in, rejuvenating interest in El Paso's Chagra era that came crashing down when a San Antonio federal judge was killed.

"It was kind of intriguing to be in this building. Everybody knows about its history," said Robin Collins, an associate with Webb, Stokes & Sparks. "Lots and lots of people want to come and see it."

Collins uses the upstairs corner office that belonged to Chagra and where he was found Dec. 23, 1978, shot under the arm by a .22-caliber pistol.

Guard official probed

BROWNSVILLE (AP) — A Texas National Guard official who ran the guard's anti-drug war is under state and federal investigation in connection with the drug smuggling activities of his two brothers.

The investigations focus on Col. Richard Brito, 46, who is in charge of operations, training and planning for the 22,000-member guard headquartered in Austin, the Houston Chronicle reported Sunday.

Col. Brito, who testified at the drug trial of his brothers, was grilled by a federal grand jury in Brownsville in October 1989, and is under investigation by the Texas Department of Public Safety and the U.S. Customs Service.

"We're going to look at all of the aspects of the case, but we're not going to state who is and who is not going to be a target of an investigation," said John Crews, the assistant U.S. Attorney in Brownsville.

Blacks attending private schools

HOUSTON (AP) — At all-black Houston Preparatory School, blue-uniformed students welcome their visitors in Japanese.

The exercise demonstrates what proprietor Fred Hampton is selling: discipline, high expectations, academic challenge and self-esteem.

"I don't see African-Americans making any mass exodus from this country. If they're going to stay, they'd better get with the program," Hampton says.

But the school, which includes kindergarten through eighth grade, is not without problems.

Its classes are held in a former office building with no library, lunchroom or gym. The school also owes the Internal Revenue Service and contractors.

Storytelling-on-the-go grows with cassettes

LAKE JACKSON (AP) — Forget the television; turn off the radio. Mind candy can lead to a mental meltdown.

The healthiest food for the soul is books. But the problem in a hurry-up world is finding time to track words across countless pages.

Now with books on cassette, the ancient art of storytelling comes alive for people on the go.

"It's a good way to be a lazy classics reader," says Maxine Bagley, a Lake Jackson bookaholic. "... You're never alone. It's like being a child again. Somebody is reading you a story."

"Talking books" began trickling into local bookstores and libraries in the late 1980s and caught on with people who commute long distances to work, migrate across the country when the seasons change, or engage themselves in mindless drudgery.

BECAUSE OF audio books, homemakers have stopped glaring at dirty dishes and rumpled clothes. Instead of seeing a menacing pile of work, they see, in their mind's eye, Huck Finn and Jim gliding down the broad Mississippi under the shining stars; or Boo Radley nonchalantly escorting Scout Finch down a moonlit sidewalk after saving her brother, Jem; or Tom Joad and Jim Casey sprawled on a dusty patch of farmland during the Great Depression, speculating on God and the human spirit.

While absorbed in a spellbinding story on tape, homemakers can scrub their dishes and iron their clothes roboticalIy, and the menial chores are completed with ease and grace.

Almost all the audio books at local bookstores are abridged, due to the expense of the unabridged versions, and most are bestsellers instead of classics.

"It's not the whole book, but it is the meat and potatoes," says Becky Dorroh, manager at Waldenbooks in Lake Jackson. "... We sell an awful lot of (the audio books). ... I think it's something that's finally come of age."

Some readers (and authors) may be insulted by abridged versions; some may find the condensed stories convenient.

Abridged audio books typically take two to three hours to play and cost $10 to $25. An unabridged audio book like "The Adventures of Huckleberry Finn" lasts nine and a half hours and costs $40 to $50.

It can be confusing and frustrating when stores don't make it clear which audio books are abridged and which ones aren't. So it's important to read the labels carefully.

BOOKSTORES CAN order audio books at the customer's request, and audio book catalogs can be found at libraries with an audio collection.

Several publishing companies specialize in unabridged audio books and feature the classics, including Recorded Books Inc. (Prince Frederick, MD. 1-800-638-1304) and Dercum Press (West Chester, PA. 1-215-430-8889). Recorded Books has about 500 titles, Dercum Press has about 85.

Sometimes prices vary. For example, the unabridged version "A Connecticut Yankee in King Arthur's Court" by Mark Twain costs $65.95 at Recorded Books and $24.95 at Dercum Press.

One way to get around the expense of audio books is to rely on libraries.

The Lake Jackson Library Branch began its audio collection in 1986 and now has about 150 books on tape, including "Hamlet," "Jane Eyre," "The Hunchback of Notre Dame" and "Macbeth."

But like bookstores, the library features more bestsellers than classics.

"The people who like them really like them," says librarian Nancy Hackney. "Most people want them for trips ... commuting. Some people just like them around the house while doing housework."

THE LIBRARY plans to purchase more books on tape since the demand is growing.

"We're going to start getting them on a continuing basis," she says. "We'll be receiving six new items every month."

Other books on tape can be found in the children's collection at the library.

"Listening is a skill that has to be learned," says Susan Chappell, the children's librarian.

With both parents working, she says, more children miss out on storytime. Books on tape can help fill the void. Chappell says literature teaches children important lessons about life, instills them with good values, and enriches their imaginations.

She says a good narrator brings a story to life. Nowadays more actors like Meryl Streep, Jack Nicholson and Sandy Duncan are narrating audio books. Sometimes an author narrates his own book, as in "The Drawing of the Three" by Stephen King.

CHAPPELL SAYS the growing demand for audio books partly springs from people's natural love for storytelling.

"Storytelling goes back to prehistoric times," she says. "The stories reflect the society's traditions."

Math maverick infuriates establishment

SOUTH HUNTINGTON, N.Y. (AP) — He flunked trigonometry as a boy. Yet John Saxon now presents himself as the savior of math education, delighted to brand the nation's math experts as incompetents.

The "math establishment" — the Natignal Council of Teachers of Mathematics and top state math officials — is to blame for U.S. teen-agers scoring last in international comparisons of numerical skills, Saxon charges.

"It is only in math education where people who are abject failures are called experts," says Saxon, whose back-to-basics math textbooks have been rejected by several states and whose blunt personality leaves even supporters cringing.

"They can point to no success in math education in 30 years and yet they call themselves experts."

Many in the "establishment" do, indeed, oppose many of Saxon's methods — and they don't much like this former test pilot and junior college teacher turned math textbook publisher, either.

But interviews with teachers around the country make it clear that this math maverick from Oklahoma has tapped into widespread discontent over math education and is causing educators to rethink how the subject should be taught in U.S. classrooms.

SINCE 1982, Saxon has sold some $20 million worth of his texts to 3,000 schools around the country — from Arizona reservation schools to affluent suburban schools outside Chicago, Minneapolis and metropolitan New York.

And he's done it without the customary sales force most school textbook publishers employ.

Instead, he's run acerbic ads in education trade journals, offered free texts to schools willing to test them, and encouraged his legions of teacher-supporters to help spread his grass-roots math movement.

Saxon's philosophy lies in his fourth grade through high school textbook series that he hopes will banish three decades of "new math" and replace it with a "practice, practice, practice" regimen of basic skills.

Or, as he put it in an interview, "I beat math into the little buggers."

Saxon's latest battleground is this affluent Long Island suburb, where parents, believing that the state-mandated math curriculum was leaving their kids ill-equipped for college math, overcame opposition from state curriculum authorities and won permission to become the first in New York state to test Saxon's approach.

THIS FALL, Saxon's brand of math began a closely watched, three-year trial in two beginning algebra classes at South Huntington's Walt Whitman High School.

But here and elsewhere, it's too early to tell if the Saxon approach will do all it claims: boost test scores, keep students in math longer, and make U.S. students world leaders in math skills.

One of the few serious studies, conducted with Pittsburgh students in 1987, found that Saxon yielded no test gains compared with other books. And all students did poorly on problem-solving skills regardless of the texts used.

Saxon is hard to categorize. His texts blend rote math drill and constant repetition of lessons previously learned — similar to the Japanese "kumon" method that helped make that country a math leader.

The Algebra I text, for example, has no chapters, but 132 "lessons," each focusing on a particular skill — graphing inequalities, for example. Students work on 30 or so practice problems. But unlike traditional texts, the vast majority of practice questions deal with previous lessons learned.

It's as if students are reviewing for their math finals from the first day of the school year.

Unlike many math experts, Saxon frowns on students using hand calculators, especially in elementary grades.

AND SAXON teachers are expected to act as coaches rather than lecturers, and employ other progressive classroom practices such as cooperative learning.

In sum, Saxon seems to offer a new way to teach the "old math."

As might be expected, leading math educators haven't taken kindly to being told by this prickly outsider that they've been doing it all wrong for decades.

Curriculum officials and some classroom teachers in New York, Minnesota, Texas, California, Idaho and even his home state of Oklahoma insist Saxon is trying to march mathematics education backwards.

Saxon may teach students how to compute a square root, they say, but his texts neglect problem-solving skills, ignore key areas like probabilities and statistics, and generally fail to connect classroom math to a changing technological world.

"It appears Saxon wants students to perform quick and accurate calculations. He has a behaviorist point of view: learning through constant repeating. The rest of us believe that you build knowledge through prior understanding," said Elizabeth Stage, chairwoman of California's curriculum commission.

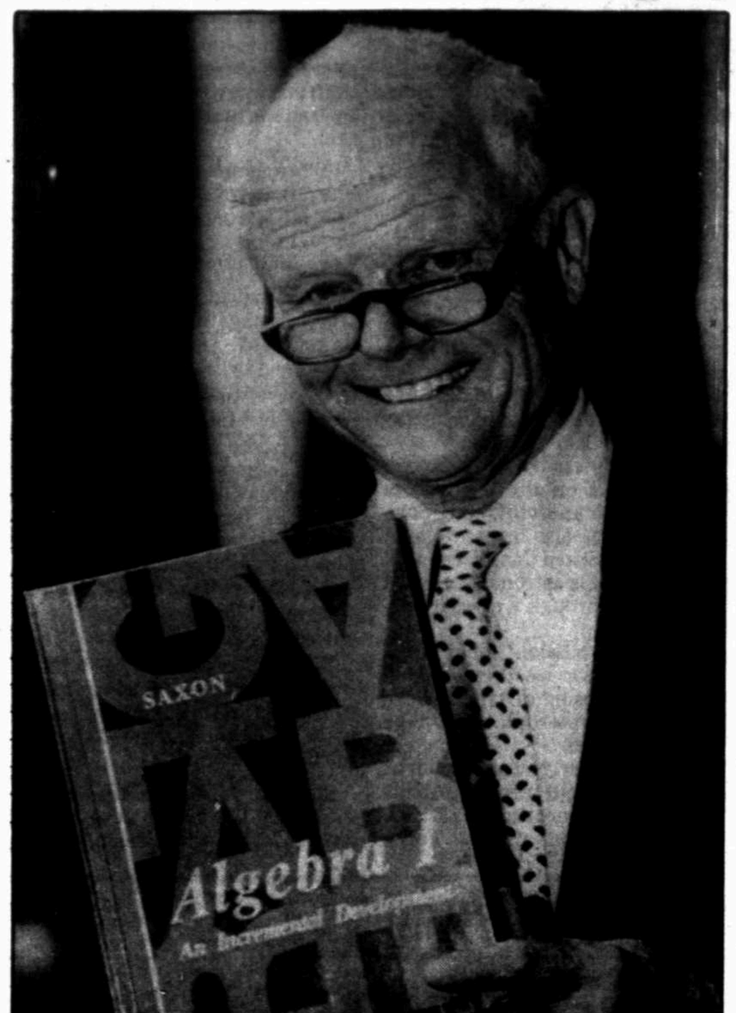

"THERE'S NO application to anything in real life. Students wind up more like trained monkeys," said Nancy Guldberg, a math teacher at Eden Prairie High School in suburban Minneapolis, which has used the Saxon texts for six years but now is almost certain to drop them because students disliked the texts and test scores languished.

But Mel Twitchell, who has used Saxon to teach his four math sections at Utah's Provo High School for the last three years, is among many others who swear the texts are making students enjoy math so much that they stick with it through calculus.

Twitchell said it's too soon to point to big test gains. But at Provo, only two sections of students now take dumbed-down "consumer" math, compared with six sections before Saxon, he said. And calculus enrollment is up, from 38 students before Saxon, to 107 students.

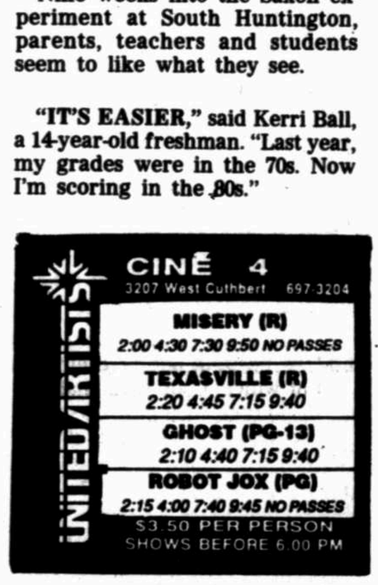

Nine weeks into the Saxon experiment at South Huntington, parents, teachers and students seem to like what they see.

"IT'S EASIER," said Kerri Ball, a 14-year-old freshman. "Last year, my grades were in the 70s. Now I'm scoring in the 80s."

Texas man has collection of Santa dolls

By Christopher Evans

ARP, Texas (AP) — They cover the mantle, the dining room table and every tinsel-daubed niche, tugging sleds, piloting airplanes, nodding their heads, prodding their elves.

One forlorn and depleted Santa, his beard tousled, sits astride a reindeer, apparently taking the lonely road back to "the Pole" after yet another harrowing yule.

Cook

Some of the Santas are straw-stuffed or large, key-wind "nodders" whose noggins bob when their metronome-like mechanisms are wound up. Some are pumpkin-shaped "roly-polies." Others are tiny, made of celluloid or bisque or aluminum or papier-mache, and once held candy or small gifts.

There are between 300 and 400 in all, each one created before 1950 and some as early as the turn of the century.

All — from the distinctly German "Kris Kringles" to the Dutch "Sinter Claese" variations — ended up in America.

They are the property of Bob Cook, the so-called Santa Man of Arp, an out-of-the-mainstream man in a mainstream East Texas town of 900.

1920s Santa with straw-stuffed mask face

COOK'S COLLECTION might not be the nation's largest in terms of sheer numbers. It is, however, presumed to be the most hifalutin in terms of expensive Santas — the ones that cost $3,000 or more. In 1988, Cook's Santa menagerie was featured in the New York Times.

Most of the Santas are German or Japanese in origin, primarily because Germany was the source of most Santas before World War II, a role the Japanese later assumed.

"For the most part, the German Santas are more elaborate and the craftsmanship is better," Cook says. "A lot of the Japanese Santas were mass-produced. Those particular ones were produced like cookies. The detail just isn't there."

The predominant colors in Cook's Santas — red, black and white — are consistent with the American St. Nick.

Some of the faces, however, are not.

Many are long and sad and hollow-eyed. Others are dark and menacing and fright-inspiring.

Further, a majority of Cook's Santas are, shall we say, less than portly.

What would children believe if Santa were neither jolly nor fat?

Pretty much what they believed after the Protestant Reformation and before the dawning of the Americanized, good-guy Santa, says Cook.

"After the Protestant Reformation in the 16th century, St. Nicholas was thrown out because it was not the thing to do to worship a saint," says Cook. "What you had with most of the European Santas was a character who was partly from mythology and pagan gods, and partly from the devil.

"SANTA WAS not so much a good guy, but a person who could be quite bad if you weren't a good child," Cook says. "A lot of Santas were cruel. In Germany he might leave you lumps of coal or a bag of switches if you were bad.

"And with the European Santas, it was quite common that people told their children that Santa might 'take them away' if they were bad," he says. "See, some of these Santas actually are carrying children or have children peeping out of their sacks."

All of which, Cook says, maligns the original Santa, St. Nicholas, the fourth-century bishop of Myra who was indeed a compassionate man.

Although cartoonist Thomas Nast, whose works often appeared in Harper's Weekly in the 1880s, is credited partly with making the American Santa the obese gent he became, the Dutch also featured rotund, pipe-smoking Santas.

Cook says Americans have more or less created their own Santa over the years — and what has emerged is fat and soft.

"As you can see, a lot of the earlier Santas, the European Santas, were tall and slender and gruff-looking," he says.

Cook, a 51-year-old former New York fashion designer, is hardly what the words, "Arp, Texas," would seem to suggest, but he is a native of the area.

"My father (the late J.G. Cook, an oilman who built football stadiums and at various times operated a five-and-dime store, a movie theater, an ice house and a feed store in Arp) wanted me to stay in Texas and go to UT or SMU," says Cook. "My mother said 'Get the hell out of Arp and go make something of yourself.' "

So in 1957 — at 18 — Cook took his Arp High sheepskin and struck out for New York City, where he graduated from the Parsons School of Design.

"I worked in New York for a while, doing mainly children's clothing," he says.

In the early 1960s, he designed junior sportswear for Bogart's Sportwear Manufacturing in Fort Worth, before moving to Dallas.

Cook has been back in Arp for seven years. He lives with his mother, Ruth, in order to be able to pursue his fancies.

Cook did not begin his Santa collection, "until about four or five years ago," he says.

"When I collect something, I collect that and nothing else," he says. "I put blinders on, because if I am going to get the best quality things for a collection, I can't be looking at two or three different things.

"To make a living, I work, mostly in Dallas, on big charity balls, doing decorations," Cook says. "Around here, I do wall upholstery and I build very elaborate cornice boards for draperies. I work around my schedule.

"I rent a booth at the Canton flea market, and I'm almost always there," Cook says. "I go to the flea markets in upstate New York, too. That's where I've gotten a lot of my nicer Santas. There's a flea market in Brimfield, Mass., that I like a lot."

Interestingly, the children of Arp know Cook not for his Santa collection but his annual home-and-yard decoration, which by early December will include a reindeer stall, the jolly fat guy and some motor-driven elves who work behind glass.

This year the Santa collection was shown in a one-day display in Fort Worth, and next year will be displayed at the Museum of Abilene for six weeks.

"After that, I don't think I'll take them anywhere," Cook said. "The Santas are old. Some of them are quite fragile. They're just not made for being boxed up and carried around."

Rural mail carrier gets stamp of approval from community

SAVOY, Texas (AP) — When J.D. Moore showed up at the coffee shop one morning, some of his coffee sipping friends asked him if he was going to be carrying the mail that day.

"Nope. I guess I am unemployed for the first time in more than 40 years," smiled Moore, who ended 26 years as a rural mail carrier the last day of November.

Moore, who served two terms on the Savoy school board and two terms on the Savoy city council while carrying the mail, says being a rural mail carrier required a lot more than just carrying the mail.

"A rural mail carrier is about the only federal employee a lot of these people ever see. And they bring you a lot of their problems or they expect a little extra help from time to time," Moore said.

"I guess in the last 26 years I have done about everything except deliver a baby," Moore said.

Originally there were 125 boxes on his 65-mile Savoy route. However, as the county and state paved the roads, Savoy and Ector rural routes were merged into a single route of 96 miles that had 370 postal boxes. Moore was the only rural carrier left.

Moore said he had "worn out" eight vehicles in his 26 years, traveling about 700,000 miles, equal to almost 30 trips around the world.

"One of the godsends for me was this automatic tire inflator that adds air and repairs the leak. I also carried plugs and would plug a tire if it went flat from running over a nail," Moore said.

He remembers some of those trips were special.

Moore said it was not uncommon to find a note in the mail box with a grocery list to pick up and bring the next day.

"I remember one elderly lady had just a bad case of the old flu and I carried groceries and medicine to her several times a week for over a month," Moore said.

Moore said on another occasion, he came to a house where an 85-year-old woman lived alone. He found her crawling near a pen where she kept chickens behind her house.

"I got out to see what she was doing and learned she had fallen down and couldn't get up. It was raining at the time and she had gone out either to feed the chickens or gather the eggs when she fell. I don't know how long she had been crawling in the chicken pen but you can imagine what a mess she was in," Moore said.

"I just picked her up and carried her into the house and put her on a bed and told her I would get a doctor," Moore said.

This year, send 'cool' Christmas cards

By Adair Lara
N.Y. Times News Service

Last year my first Christmas card was from Macy's. I didn't send them one, so I imagine I'll be searching the mailbox in vain this year.

I used to lay down an early strafing run of cards, forcing everyone to return fire so I'd have lots, but then a boyfriend told me it's a remnant of my working-class origins to hang cards across the mantel with kite string.

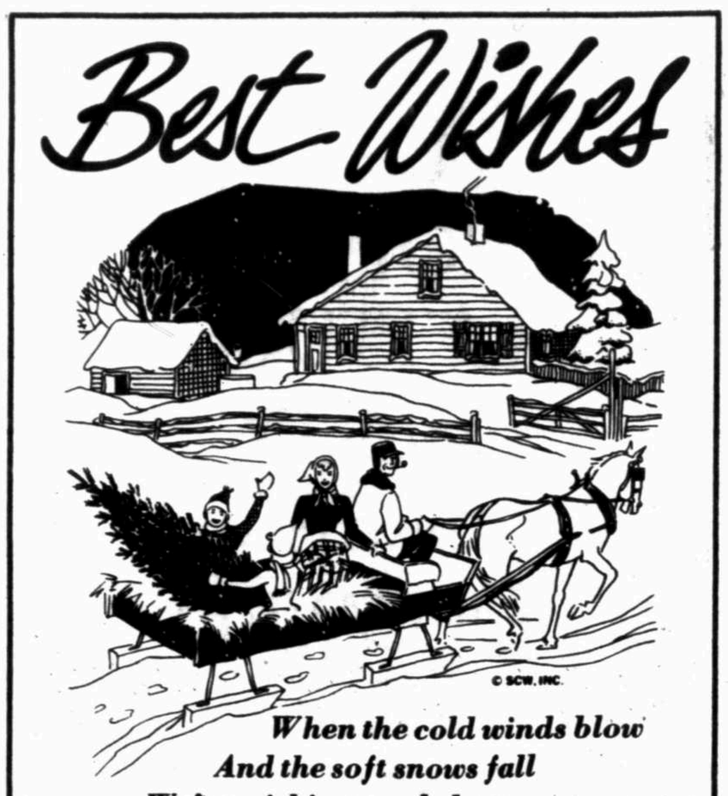

So I was very ashamed of myself and now leave the stack of pretty cards in a sort of obvious place on the desk top, so when you come in you can see at a glance how many friends I have.

The burden of being cool — never an easy one for me, what with that working-class stuff pulling me down — gets particularly heavy as Christmas approaches.

I'm supposed to deplore the decorations that appear in the stores too soon, and wince when "Winter Wonderland" issues tinnily from store loudspeakers, and sigh at the commercialism and let it be known that it's all I can do to drag myself through the holidays.

At least, this is what everybody I know does. Then, when nobody's looking, they race home and pull the curtains. When they're sure no one can see them, they nail mistletoe above the doorways, spray snowflakes all over the venetian blinds and hang tinsel from the lamps. They sing along to "I Saw Mommy Kissing Santa Claus" while sipping eggnog and watching back-to-back Bing Crosby movies.

So my notion is that cool types would love to come out of the closet, Christmaswise, and the way to do it is to fling caution to the winds and do the uncoolest thing we can think of.

That gets us back to those Christmas cards. Most of us who get cards at all get a nice tasteful picture of a pine tree with someone's name signed at the bottom and that's all, and what's the use of that, since you can't even hang it up?

Those of you with relatives in the Midwest, though, know the pleasure of opening an envelope fat with pictures and a nice newsy Christmas letter, one letter photocopied off to everybody. Nobody cool would be caught dead writing a Christmas letter, it's so plebeian, so middle of the country, so — working class.

So here's my idea. Let's ALL do it this year.

Write a letter, all about Spot and the kids and the new tile roof and having to cart Uncle Ned off to an institution. If everybody does it, it'll be cool.

You hate to write letters? You have nothing to say? C'mon. Having something to say is overrated.

Tell them what you can smell or see as you write, the aroma of coffee brewing in the kitchen, or the faint scent of dry leaves, or the sun lighting up the back fence.

Tell them what you had for breakfast, what song is playing on the radio. Tell them what made you happy this morning, or this year.

Beginnings are hard, so it's all right to start off with something inane, like pointing out that another year has passed. Then include the usual cringing apology for the photocopy.

Audience is important: If you think of your stately Aunt Mary as you write, you will write a stately letter. Instead, think of someone who will lose his mind if you write something boring and correct.

I always pretend to be writing to my friend Sinclair, who can't read such tripe. It makes her feel faint and she has to lie down.

Write as if you're drunk and can't be held responsible, or as if you're not really going to send the letter at all, to anyone, ever.

When you're done, send a copy to me, so I can show the rest of the class what a good Christmas letter is like.

I'm putting up my string now.

House plants need care, good management

By Susan McClure
N.Y. Times News Service

Just how effective a particular dose of nutrients will be depends on what unseen elements flow out of your faucet. The pH and salt levels are most influential and most variable.

Keeping a house plant looking good year after year takes certain management skills.

You don't need to treat it to a power lunch with a heavy dose of fertilizer or leaf shine for success.

Instead, says John Peterson, professor of horticulture at Ohio State University, you need to find the right balance of culture and climate.

Key your initial administrative skills into light and most other factors will fall right into place.

The direction your windows face will tell you much. Windows pointing south are usually the brightest. Eastern and western exposure may bring in a half day of sun.

However, sun-power estimates may not be clear-cut: Although summer days are longer, winter sun is lower in the sky and may shine directly into upper story windows longer than it would in the summer.

Likewise, when trees have dropped their foliage, a previously shaded window can come to life.

Make note of the number of hours of light a plant receives. If your management plans include research and development, invest in a plant light meter and buy plants that fit available footcandles.

If you have north-facing windows, you can raise small plants under fluorescent lights.

Unless you have an atrium or heated sun porch, your house is probably low on light compared to the tropics where most indoor plants originate. And, since few rooms can accommodate a tropical jungle, you can and should encourage foliage plants to grow slowly.

The secret is to keep the soil evenly moist, Peterson explains. Too much or too little water can injure the roots and affect the entire plant.

JUGGLE DIFFERENT watering schedules until you slow growth without letting the plant wilt or drop leaves. You will know you are on the right track if you can inspire an occasional new leaf.

Keep fertilizer levels appropriate for this slow-grow plan. Use just enough to get desired results and stick to products containing nitrogen, which is easy for plants to use and less likely to burn plant roots.

Just how effective a particular dose of nutrients will be depends on what unseen elements flow out of your faucet. The pH and salt levels are most influential and most variable.

Columbus, Ohio, water, for example, is so alkaline that it drenches plants with limestone in every drop. Excessive acidity or alkalinity will tie up certain essential nutrients and ultimately hurt the plant.

To find out what sort of water you have, get a pH test kit or talk to the experts at your local county or university cooperative extension service or public botanical garden and take their advice on how to bring the system back into equilibrium.

Irrigating a plant repeatedly with water high in salts, a certainty in many arid states, can make the soil brackish and suck water out of the roots until the plant wilts and dies.

The problem is compounded by the very nature of house plants. To spare the carpet or the woodwork, we trap irrigation water in the plant's container and there the salts concentrate. You may see the briny white crust they leave on clay pots.

Repair salt damage by repotting in fresh soil. Or prevent the problem by using a self-watering system.

HIGH-TECH CONTAINERS manufactured by Planter Technology Systems pulse water into the pot from a bottom reservoir when a sensor indicates that the soil is dry.

A Rubbermaid system, developed with help from Peterson, uses an absorbent wick to keep soil continually moist.

Surface evaporation pulls water from below to the top. In either case, salts are pulled away from the roots to the soil surface where they are easy to scrape off.

At one time or another, most plants will become home for insects. The best way to protect your plants is to watch for pests so you can control them before much damage is done.

When spider mites first attack, leaves become dull and lighter colored. After a month or so of unchecked multiplication, the nearly microscopic mites spin tiny webs and parachute off to new targets.

If you miss the first leaf changes, you will have a much tougher problem to deal with later.

With a pest problem identified, you can undertake a cure. Pesticides are one but not the only option.

Spurred by popular demand, Peterson and other researchers have been looking for non-toxic alternatives. Begin with water. Wash insects right off.

Commercial sprays are a second line of defense. Peterson believes Safer's insectidical soaps are among the best.

Pests like scale and mealy bugs can be eliminated with oil-based sprays that do not poison, but instead coat and smother.

Systemic pesticides, drawn up from the roots, are a good alternative for succulent plants but will not not move well through woody stems.

WHATEVER PRODUCT you use, move the plant to a place where you can spray it thoroughly without harming anything nearby.

With pesticides that work on contact, you need to reach every leaf, above and below, every axil and nook on the stem. Don't expect an insect to walk over and eat the pesticide, Peterson says.

You can use the environment to limit insect pests as well. Keep it healthy for the plant but uncomfortable for the insects.

Since mites multiply most rapidly in warm, dry air, wash an infested plant and keep it in a brightly lit, humid bathroom.

Bring in some trap plants to draw pests away from permanent house plants. If white fly flurry about your ficus, attract them to a florist's azaleas or poinsettias then send them out in the cold.

Or buy plants that are more resistant to insects such as the Amate Schefflera. Its glossy leaf has a thick, waxy cuticle that is less appealing to mealybug, mites and scale.

DEAR ABBY

Call 911 for medical or fire emergencies

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: In your column of Sunday, Nov. 25, was a letter signed "911" that needs some clarification. Abby, 911 was designated as a national emergency reporting number and should be used to report all medical, police or fire emergencies. Apparently, the writer of the letter you published is from a community where they dispatch only for the police department.

Van Buren

We at the International Society of Fire Service Instructors strongly advocate and teach nationwide that 911, where available, should be used to report any emergency dealing with fire or smoke, as well as accidents and medical emergencies. By using the 911 system, access to telephone number and location is available to the dispatcher immediately, thus greatly reducing response time and consequently saving many more lives.

Contrary to what the writer said, DO call 911 should your television emit sparks or should you smell something burning. — EDWARD H. MC CORMACK JR., CHIEF EXECUTIVE OFFICER, INTERNATIONAL SOCIETY OF FIRE SERVICE INSTRUCTORS

DEAR MR. MC CORMACK: Thanks for the information. I've heard from many others advising me of the same thing.

DEAR ABBY: I have been dating this guy for 10 months. I really fell for him, and he told me he loved me. Two weeks ago, I heard that he is engaged to marry a girl who lives out of town. Their wedding is scheduled for January, and I was shocked because he never even mentioned her to me. I finally asked him if what I heard was true and he said it was, but he says he loves me and wants to continue seeing me. He asked me to please be there for him if his marriage doesn't work out.

I don't understand this. He knows that I love him, and if he really loves me, why does he want to marry someone else?

What should I do? This is very painful for me, because we had such a great relationship for 10 months and it will be hard for me to end it. Should I keep going with him up until the time he gets married or what? — HEARTBROKEN DOWN SOUTH

DEAR HEARTBROKEN: End it now, and thank your lucky stars you aren't the girl he's engaged to. How would you like to be engaged to a guy who's telling another girl he "loves" her and wants her to be there for him in case his marriage with you doesn't work out? He's bad news. Please, read the first sentence of my answer again. And commit it to memory.

DEAR ABBY: I am a sailor aboard a Navy destroyer presently in the Persian Gulf as a part of Desert Shield.

First, God bless you for all you have done to support us while we are on the front line. We have been literally overwhelmed by the sheer volume of mail we have received. This ship has heard from three elementary schools, two junior high schools and one high school. Abby, 3,000 letters are a lot to answer, and I want to apologize because there is no way we can answer all those letters personally.

Secondly, I do not want to appear ungrateful, but what has happened to our school system? I just read a letter from a high school student from a southwestern state. I quote: "I now you are doon yore best to pertek our nation fum them and I want you to no we are prowd of you."

Abby, this is not unusual, I assure you. I do not know how this student ever got out of the third grade.

I read letters from two foreign students — one was a Dominican and the other a Russian — ages 9 and 10. Their handwriting was very neat and easy to read, and their spelling was perfect.

God help America if our kids are graduated from high school spelling and writing the way they do! — SHOCKED ON THE U.S.S. O'BRIEN

Back pain common in older women

NEW YORK (AP) — Back problems for women grow worse with advanced age, while men seem to suffer less as they grow older, according to a Chicago orthopedist.

"Males experience the most back pain between ages 15 and 55, with pain lessening after age 55. The opposite is true for women," says Dr. Gunnar B. Andersson, professor and co-chairman, department of orthopedics, Rush-Presbyterian-St. Luke's Medical Center in Chicago. Andersson is studying back problems in research supported by a grant from the Bristol-Myers Squibb Co.

"Men may subject their bodies to less physical stress as they get older," Andersson says, "either because they have been promoted to less physically demanding jobs, or they retire. Women, on the other hand, often continue physically demanding work, such as household chores, even into old age."

Houston Oiler wide receiver Drew Hill (85) rolls on the ground in a battle for the ball against Cleveland Brown defender Felix Wright Sunday as the Oilers were on the way to scoring a season high 58 points.

Oilers strike big gusher

HOUSTON — Almost before Jack Pardee could instruct his Oilers to go, they already had left sagging Cleveland far behind.

Lorenzo White ran for three of his four touchdowns in a 45-point first half, and Terry Kinard scored on a 72-yard fumble return Sunday as Houston won 58-14, sending the Browns to their eighth straight loss.

Kinard was the first to heed Pardee's orders, capping Cleveland's first drive of the game by returning an interception 47 yards to set up the first of White's touchdown runs, a 10-yarder.

"Our defense gained momentum after that first drive," Kinard said. "The interception turned it around. Fortunately, I was on the spot to run in that fumble. It was my best game as an Oiler."

Houston set a franchise record for points in a game, and the first-half points matched the third-most in NFL history. The victory, coupled with Cincinnati's 20-17 loss to San Francisco and Pittsburgh's 24-3 win over New England, put the Oilers, Bengals and Steelers in a three-way tie for first place in the AFC Central at 7-6.

Cleveland (2-11) was helpless against the Oilers' top-ranked offense, which scored on all six of its first half possessions.

White got a 1-yard touchdown in the first quarter, and 1:24 deep into the second quarter, Kinard scooped up a fumble by Kevin Mack and ran 72 yards for the third touchdown of his career.

"If they had scored early, it could have been a different game," Pardee said. "But with their record and the bad things that have happened to them, Kinard really helped us out."

Houston beat the Browns 35-23 in their first game this season, but the Browns led 16-14 in the fourth quarter of that one.

"We fumbled the opening kickoff the last time we played them," Pardee said, "so it was important to get on them early."

Bulldogs hire Sherrill as grid coach

Associated Press

STARKVILLE, Miss. — Jackie Sherrill, who left Texas A&M two years ago with the Aggies on NCAA probation, returned to college football Sunday as coach at Mississippi State, saying the job was like "coming home."

"Coach (Paul) Bryant used to say if you don't get up in the morning and throw up because you miss it (coaching) so bad, you don't know what it is," Sherrill said, quoting the late University of Alabama coach. "I was looking for the right situation to get back. This is a pleasure for me."

Sherrill

Sherrill, who spent two years in private business after leaving Texas A&M, replaces Rockey Felker, who resigned under pressure two weeks ago after a 5-6 season, the Bulldogs' fourth straight losing campaign.

The NCAA eventually cleared Texas A&M of allegations that former player George Smith received "hush" money, saying it could not distinguish fact from fiction. Smith had said Sherrill, then coach and athletic director, paid him for his silence about NCAA rules violations and that a university official later offered $30,000 to recant his charges.

The NCAA said Sherrill was never implicated in any wrongdoing. But he resigned in December 1988, following an internal investigation by the school — three months after the Aggies were placed on probation for two years for recruiting violations.

Sherrill's teams at Texas A&M had a 52-28-1 record in seven seasons, won three consecutive Southwest Conference titles and played in the Cotton Bowl from 1985-87.

Sherrill, 47, had a 105-42-2 record in 13 seasons as a coach at Texas A&M, Pittsburgh and Washington State.

"We wanted an individual that could prove he was a winner ... not only on the field, but also by placing a demand on our student athletes," Athletic Director Larry Templeton said. "Most importantly, we wanted a coach that could help Mississippi State win the Southeastern Conference championship."

Felker was 21-34 in five seasons at MSU. During his tenure, he had just one winning season — 1986, when the Bulldogs finished 6-5 after starting 6-1 and reaching No. 13.

"I don't have any magic. Nobody has it," Sherrill said. "I just felt this was an opportunity. I want what the people of Mississippi State want and if we build that unity and team, we will have a chance to be successful."

Giants win East; Bills in playoffs

■ The NFL playoffs are beginning to take shape as the New York Giants win the NFC East title and the Buffalo Bills clinch a playoff berth.

Associated Press

Not that there was any doubt by the midway point of the season, but the New York Giants officially have won the NFC East and the Buffalo Bills have clinched an AFC playoff berth.

On Sunday, the Giants rallied to beat Minnesota 23-15, raising their record to 11-2 and giving them their second straight division crown. The Bills, in a tighter chase in the AFC East with Miami, routed Indianapolis 31-7 to grab at least a wild-card spot.

Both the Giants and 49ers had difficult chores six days after their Monday night confrontation, and both came back for wins. San Francisco needed a pair of 23-yard field goals by Mike Cofer, one with 57 seconds left to force overtime, the other to beat Cincinnati 20-17. It was a league-record 17th straight road win for the two-time defending Super Bowl champions.

The NFC's other division champion, the Chicago Bears, fell 10-9 at Washington.

Chuck Noll became the fifth NFL coach with 200 victories as the Steelers whipped New England 24-3.

Giants 23, Vikings 15

New York ended a two-game losing streak, yet struggled for the third straight week, especially on offense with only one sustained drive. But the defense turned things around and ended Minnesota's five-game winning streak.

Trailing 15-10, the Giants rallied behind their defense in the final quarter. Greg Jackson intercepted a bad pass by Rich Gannon at the Vikings' 37, leading to Matt Bahr's wind-aided, 48-yard field goal.

New York forced a punt and the Giants drove 42 yards to Ottis Anderson's second TD of the game. Anderson gained 26 yards to become the eighth player in the NFL to rush for 10,000 yards.

Lawrence Taylor, who had 2½ sacks and was in on 12 tackles, forced an interception with three minutes to go, setting up a game-clinching 18-yard field goal by Bahr.

The victory came less than a day after coach Bill Parcells was hospitalized with kidney stones. He received a medical pass to coach the game, then checked himself back into the hospital.

"I don't think they told everybody about it," Maurice Carthon said. "They told me and told me to keep it quiet. I saw him this morning and he was hurting. But he said all week that guys who are hurting have to come back. He came out and proved that.

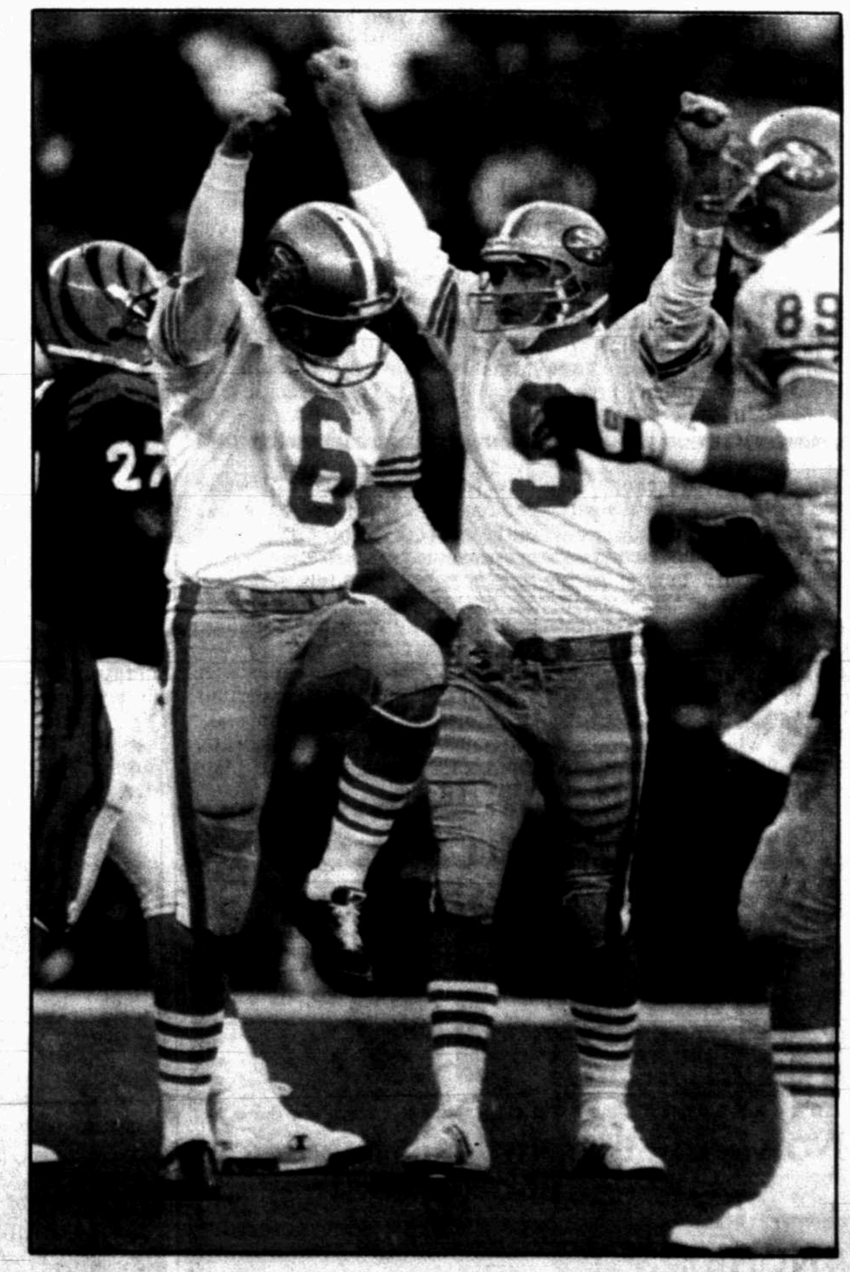

Bills 31, Colts 7

Buffalo (11-2) got four sacks by Bruce Smith, giving him 19 for the year, and five overall. Andre Reed set a team record for career touchdown receptions (37). He had seven catches for 95 yards and two scores Sunday.

The defense was so overwhelming that the Colts did not get across midfield in the first half, when the Bills bolted to a 21-0 edge.

"I think he was a little rattled," Smith said of Jeff George, the top pick in this year's draft. "If you get constant pressure on any quarter-

Connecticut spells 'we' in time to win

Top 25

BANGOR, Maine (AP) — Connecticut coach Jim Calhoun said the Huskies got a spelling lesson on Sunday: They learned that there's no "I" in "we."

The Huskies led Maine by only 3 points at halftime before Chris Smith hit a pair of quick baskets that triggered a 24-12 run as the Huskies rolled to an 85-60 win at the Bangor Arena.

"We started saying 'we' as opposed to 'I.' That's 'we' as in 'we should pass' as opposed to 'I should shoot,' " Calhoun said. "Six of our first eight (baskets) in the second half were assisted.

"We're so much more fragile than we were last year. We have to play as hard against Maine as we do against North Carolina," Calhoun said. "We have to play with the same intensity.

"We saw what happens when we don't in the first period."

Smith scored 20 points for the Huskies (4-1), and Scott Burrell added 19 points and 11 rebounds. Senior John Gwynn came off the bench and scored 12 points, while junior center Rod Sellers added 11 points and six rebounds.

No. 12 Mississippi 77, NE La. 67

Antrice McGill scored 23 points to lead No. 12 Mississippi over Northeast Louisiana.

Kristen Goehring added 12 points for Mississippi and Clara Jackson 12.

Ranita Bolton paced the Lady Indians with 19, followed by Karen Hopson 16 and Felisha Edwards with 13.

The Lady Rebels (5-0) escaped an early 10-10 tie on a 3-pointer by Goehring and moved to a six-point lead.

Northeast Louisiana (2-3), on consecutive baskets by Edwards, cut the lead to 22-21 at 6:05.

Milwaukee 10-0 at home

Associated Press

NBA Roundup

Ricky Pierce scored 14 of his 24 points in the fourth quarter Sunday night as the Milwaukee Bucks beat the Seattle SuperSonics 105-99 and tied a team record with a 10-0 start at home.

Milwaukee, also 10-0 at home in 1984-85, trailed 72-71 after three quarters before Pierce led a 13-2 run to start the fourth period.

Pierce took a pass from Alvin Robertson for a layup, Robertson stole the ball and dunked to start a three-point play and Pierce hit a jumper, putting the Bucks ahead 78-72.

After a Sonics basket, the Bucks scored the next 6 points, 4 by Pierce, and led 84-74 with 9:11 to go.

Seattle closed to 103-99 with 12.8 seconds left on a dunk by Shawn Kemp, who led the Sonics with a career-high 31 points. But Pierce made two free throws two seconds later to seal the victory.

Lakers 106, Bullets 99

James Worthy scored 20 points and Terry Teagle added 9 of his 17 in the fourth quarter as the Los Angeles Lakers continued their homecourt domination of Washington, their ninth victory in 10 games.

Magic Johnson had 19 points and 14 assists for the Lakers, who rebounded from their most lopsided defeat of the season Friday night at Utah with their 17th triumph over the Bullets in their last 18 meetings at the Forum dating back to 1976.

back, he's going to wonder where it's going to come from next. That's what was happening today."

Thurman Thomas rushed for 76 yards and two touchdowns and caught four passes for another 91 yards.

49ers 20, Bengals 17, OT

The Bengals probably knew what was coming.

Cincinnati (7-6) had a 17-14 lead, but San Francisco had the ball with 4:11 to play. So Joe Montana marched the champs 55 yards and Cofer tied it.

The 49ers won the coin toss, Montana hit Jerry Rice with three key passes and Cofer won it. The 49ers have the league's best record, 12-1.

It was another last-second loss for Cincinnati, which has dropped seven straight to the 49ers. Their last four losses, including a 20-16 Super Bowl defeat two years ago, have come in the last minute of play.

Rice finished with 8 catches for 101 yards.

Redskins 10, Bears 9

At Washington, the Bears could manage only three field goals by Kevin Butler, then were killed by a turnover. Brad Muster's fumble set up Chip Lohmiller for a winning 35-yard field goal with 2:14 remaining.

The Redskins (8-5) won despite five interceptions thrown by Mark Rypien and even though they were held to their fewest points this season. Rookie Mark Carrier had three pickoffs for NFC Central champion Chicago (10-3), which slipped a game behind the Giants and two in back of the 49ers in the overall NFC standings.

Earnest Byner gained 121 yards rushing for Washington.

Steelers 24, Patriots 3

At Pittsburgh, Noll, the only coach to win four Super Bowls, joined George Halas, Tom Landry, Don Shula and Curly Lambeau as the only NFL coaches to win 200 games. He is 200-146-1 in 22 seasons.

"Maybe you think about the little things and how long you've been around," said Noll, who has coached the Steelers in four decades. "Sure, it's a good feeling. I'll think about it today and (Monday) ... but you have to stay focused."

The Steelers (7-6) stayed in playoff contention as Merril Hoge ran for two touchdowns and 117 yards. Pittsburgh is tied with Cincinnati and Houston atop the AFC Central.

The Patriots, losers of a club-record 11 straight to fall to 1-12, the league's worst mark, have been outrushed by nearly 1,000 yards. They allowed an opposing back to rush for 100 yards for the seventh consecutive game and the 10th time in 13 games.

Chiefs 31, Broncos 20

At Kansas City, Marty Schottenheimer got his first coaching victory against the Broncos, who had denied him a trip to the Super Bowl in 1986 and '87, when Schottenheimer was with Cleveland.

Steve DeBerg had three TD passes as the Chiefs sent the reeling AFC champion Broncos (3-10) to their sixth consecutive defeat, their worst losing streak since a nine-game slide in 1967.

For the eighth time this year, the Broncos led at halftime, then lost.

Saints 24, Rams 20

Eric Martin's 4-yard TD pass from Steve Walsh lifted the Saints to 6-7 and back into the wild-card chase. Gill Fenerty, a rookie out of the Canadian Football League, had a 60-yard scoring run and Brett Maxie went 50 yards with an interception for New Orleans.

The Rams moved to the New Orleans' 9 with 58 seconds to play. On fourth down, Jim Everett was sacked and fumbled. But the Saints were called for offside on the play, giving the Rams another chance. Everett threw incomplete and the game ended.

Seahawks 20, Packers 14

At Milwaukee, the Seahawks continued their surprising climb. After losing their first three, they have moved to 7-6 and into the race for the playoffs.

Derrick Fenner ran for 112 yards and a touchown and Seattle stopped a final drive at its 8-yard line with a minute left.

The Seahawks jumped to a 20-0 lead in their third straight victory, then survived a fourth-quarter comeback led by veteran reserve Blair Kiel, playing in his first game since Nov. 13, 1988. Kiel, who replaced struggling QB Anthony Dilweg late in the third quarter, hit two scoring passes.

But he couldn't get the winning TD after Green Bay (6-7) go to the Seattle 8.

Cardinals 24, Falcons 13

At Atlanta, Phoenix (5-8) won its third straight as Marcus Turner returned an interception 47 yards for a touchdown and rookies Ricky Proehl and Anthony Thompson had big games. Proehl made 6 catches for 102 yards and a 45-yard touchdown, while Thompson ran for 96 yards.

Atlanta (3-10), which has dropped six straight, was without starting QB Chris Miller and backup Scott Campbell was just 13-for-30 and threw three interceptions.

Defensive end Dexter Manley played for the Cardinals on passing situations, his first action since being suspended last year for a third violation of the NFL's substance abuse policy. Commissioner Paul Tagliabue reinstated Manley on Nov. 19 and he was picked up on waivers from Washington by the Cardinals.

Dolphins 23, Eagles 20, OT

Pete Stoyanovich's 34-yard field goal with three seconds left forced an overtime, and his 39-yarder with 2:28 to go in sudden death lifted Miami past Philadelphia.

Miami, which trailed 20-10 with less than six minutes remaining, improved to 10-3 and stayed one game back of AFC East leader Buffalo. The Eagles fell to 7-6 with their second consecutive loss after a five-game winning streak.

Stoyanovich's winner was set up when the Eagles' Jeff Feagles bobbled a bad snap and managed only a 23-yard punt. Starting from the Miami 43-yard line, Dan Marino completed passes of 12 yards to Troy Stradford and 14 to Mark Duper to reach the Eagles' 31.

Three plays later, Stoyanovich gave Miami the victory.

Marino completed 27 of 54 passes for 365 yards and two scores. Eagles counterpart Randall Cunningham hit on 18 of 29 passes for 198 yards and two touchdowns. He also rushed for 94 yards in 12 carries.

Starting from the Miami 12 with 1:41 left in the fourth quarter, Marino moved his team 71 yards to set up Stoyanovich's game-tying kick. One play before the score, Eagles cornerback Ben Smith was flagged for a 21-yard pass interference penalty at the Philadelphia 17-yard line.

Smith also was beaten on Marino's 28-yard touchdown pass to Tony Martin in the first quarter, and for a 37-yard completion that set up another field goal.

The Eagles, who scored 23 consecutive points in a 30-23 loss to Buffalo last Sunday, this time overcame a 10-0 deficit with 20 points in a row.

YOUR HOROSCOPE

By Jeane Dixon

MONDAY, DECEMBER 10, 1990

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: Your star is on the rise! Count on your career to zoom ahead. Financial success could depend more on what other people do than on your own moves. Contact with foreign clients in early summer will lead to higher earnings. Although marriage will hold strong appeal next September, many of you will opt to continue playing the field. Be careful not to give a loved one false expectations. Honesty is still the best policy.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: poet Emily Dickinson, actress Susan Dey, basketball's Mark Aguirre, actor Harold Gould.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Learning another language could pay off handsomely. Attracting ethnic business will increase your profits. Your sphere of influence is expanding. An important individual becomes aware of who you are.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): A financial dispute can now be resolved equitably. Listen to the experts, but avoid beating around the bush. Be confident. Express your affection for an older relative in a positive manner.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): People with time on their hands may interrupt your business routine. Explain that you have a full schedule and must not fall behind. Be sure your work is up to your high standards.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Make certain you get enough rest at night. Save parties and at-home entertaining for the weekend. Forgive someone who hurt you, but do not renew your relationship on the same footing as before.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Show more confidence in yourself and your career will flourish. If you lash out in frustration, you could lose valuable ground. Keep your sense of humor intact! Talk things over with mate.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): If you run into opposition today, avoid sounding stubborn. Be willing to compromise a little, especially in domestic matters. Make the time you spend with your family more enjoyable.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): You suddenly realize that you have already achieved one of your most important goals. Treat yourself to something special. You deserve it! A night on the town may hold the most appeal.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): The amount of progress you make today will be up to you. What you want can be yours for the taking if you work for it. Take the initiative in romance. Be sentimental.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Resist the temptation to gossip about a rival. This person will soon be out the door — without any help from you. Set your sights high and concentrate on your work. Relax at home.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Do not let outsiders upset your family's domestic life. If you have young children, consider their well-being before everything else. Your mate will need you tonight. Lend a sympathetic ear.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Curb an urge to rebel against everything and strike out on your own. You will make the greatest gains by staying put. Keep a low profile until an authority figure calms down.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Stay attuned to what is happening around you. Do not be thrown off-course by negative thoughts. Double-check all financial facts and figures. Be certain you understand a friend's feelings.

TODAY'S CHILDREN are restless by nature and may develop a nervous habit, such as nail-biting. Wise parents will get these youngsters involved in sports — the perfect outlet for their pent-up energy.

ANSWERS TO WEEKLY BRIDGE QUIZ

Q.1—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠K72 ♡K6 ◇63 ♣Q109842
Partner opens the bidding with two no trump. What do you bid now?
A.—If partner has a club fit, there might be a slam. However, you can't jump to four clubs, since that would be Gerber—asking for aces. The way to show this hand is first to bid three clubs, which partner will treat as Stayman, and then follow up with four clubs to correct that impression.

Q.2—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠Q10763 ♡AJ10543 ◇Void ♣62
Partner opens the bidding with one club. What do you respond?
A.—There are hands with five reasonable spades and six poor hearts where you might want to bid spades first and then show hearts at your next turn. This is not the hand. Here, your hearts are so much better than the spades that anything other than a one-heart response should be treated with scorn.

Q.3—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠76 ♡K9872 ◇AK1062 ♣7
Partner opens the bidding with one club. What do you respond?
A.—Had you held two four-card suits, you would have responded up-the-line, i.e, you would have bid one diamond. With two five-card suits, however, you show the higher-ranking one first. Respond one heart. The strength of your suits does not enter into the matter.

Q.4—East-West vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠952 ♡AQ93 ◇KJ7 ♣J85
The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
1 ◇	Pass	1 ♡	Pass
1 ♠	Pass	?

What action do you take?
A.—This hand is borderline for a non-forcing jump to two no trump (the modern style). However, to take that action with no stopper in the unbid suit courts disaster. We suggest a slight underbid of one no trump, which would show 8-10 normally. Should partner pass, we doubt that game would be in the cards.

Q.5—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠AQ10973 ♡QJ92 ◇K65 ♣Void
Partner opens the bidding with one heart. What do you respond?
A.—It's time to throw the point-count books out the window. Your hand has massive playing potential opposite a one-heart opening bid, and anything less than a jump shift will make it impossible to catch up later. Bid two spades.

Q.6—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠Void ♡A98752 ◇A8652 ♣98
The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
1 ♣	Pass	1 ♡	Pass
2 ♠	Pass	?

What do you bid now?
A.—Although it looks as if you have a potential misfit, you do have two aces, and that can't be bad opposite a partner who has jump shifted. There's no need to rebid your hearts yet. Bid three diamonds. That tells partner you have at least five hearts.

Willis plays sleazy reporter, since he agrees with portrayal

NEW YORK (AP) — Bruce Willis says he thinks about suing the supermarket tabloids every day.

"What more could they do to me?" he asks in an interview in the January 1991 of Vanity Fair.

Willis says tabloids have printed things he said in jest as fact and made up stories, like one about him saving an actress on a runaway horse.

"In that movie, there were no horses," Willis said. "People say, 'Why do you care? It makes you look so good.' But if they can print that lie, they can just as easily print that I had sex with a goat. A lie is a lie."

Given his feelings about tabloid reporters, Willis was asked why he agreed to play a tabloid reporter in his newest film, "The Bonfire of the Vanities" — a character who is a ruthless, boozy scavenger of stories.

"That's why," he replied.

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Frank Sinatra, one-time idol of bobby-soxers who became a show business legend, evokes nostalgia these days, but as he turns 75, he's still doing it his way.

Sinatra

Known as the Chairman of the Board, Ol' Blue Eyes, the Voice, just plain Frank or simply Sinatra, the crooner is belting out standards for still another generation of pop music fans.

On Tuesday, the eve of Francis Albert Sinatra's 75th birthday celebration, the entertainer returns to an arena near his New Jersey hometown of Hoboken to begin a yearlong world tour designed to fulfill a lifetime yearning — performances in the Soviet Union and possibly China.

After kicking off his Diamond Jubilee World Tour at the Meadowlands' Brendan Byrne Arena, Sinatra will gather with his family at a hotel for a private birthday celebration.

"There are no words that can truly describe Frank Sinatra — magic, charisma and talent — they still don't accurately capture the aura about him," said his former longtime publicist, Lee Solters.

Sinatra, who first became popular in the 1940s, continues to get under our skin, whether he's performing before sellout audiences or singing from recordings, including two new boxed sets just released for Christmas.

BOSTON (AP) — Massachusetts Gov. Michael S. Dukakis wishes people would miss him when he leaves office next month.

"I wish I were going out with people feeling somewhat better about Mike Dukakis than they do right now," the former presidential candidate said in an interview televised Sunday.

He went on to say that "despite the difficulty of the past two years, this is a lot nicer going out voluntarily than being thrown out, as happened to me in 1978."

That year, Dukakis, the incumbent governor, lost a primary battle to retain his seat. He later regained the governor's office, but after losing the presidency in 1988 to George Bush, the state's economy ebbed and his popularity at home plummeted.

"I got close to the top of the mountain, unfortunately, failed," he said. "It's been an extraordinary time and life for me."

LONDON (AP) — Former President Reagan ended a five-day visit to Britain over the weekend that included tea with former Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher.

Reagan

Reagan, 79, left London's Heathrow Airport on Saturday with his wife, Nancy, aboard a private jet.

During his stay, Reagan renewed his personal "special relationship" with Mrs. Thatcher over tea and cakes at his London hotel, and visited her successor, John Major, at No. 10 Downing St.

The Reagans also had lunch with the Queen and Duke of Edinburgh at Buckingham Palace. And Reagan addressed the Cambridge University debating society on its 175th anniversary.

APPLETON, Wis. (AP) — A little help from local law enforcement was all the Hager Twins of "Hee Haw" fame needed to create a traffic jam.

The look-alike singers known for their years on the long-running program visited northeastern Wisconsin to work on a music video for a tune called "I'm Wishin' I Could Go Fishin' Forever."

The video, with a classic country theme, starts with Jim and John Hager in hard hats and work clothes in a pickup truck, stuck in a traffic jam in Ashland, where traffic jams are uncommon.

"We called up the police chief and told him what we were doing, and that we needed a traffic jam," Jim said. "He said, 'What time?' When we got there, he had the main street blocked off and cars lined up for the traffic jam. It was wonderful."

MERIDIAN, Miss. (AP) — John Alexander, a tenor with the Metropolitan Opera for 27 years who was renowned for his interpretation of 19th-century bel canto roles, died of a heart attack, authorities said Sunday. He was 67.

Prices rise

NEW YORK (AP) — Oil prices showed little change Friday as traders paused to wonder what crude might do next, after a dramatic weeklong slide based on perceptions that peace could break out in the Persian Gulf.

"When the market moves like this one has, it tends to get a little bit overdone and then moves back," said Brian Tagler, an oil broker with Shearson Lehman Brothers Inc.

West Texas Intermediate rose 18 cents to $26.58 per barrel at the New York Mercantile Exchange on contracts for delivery in January.

For the week, oil was down $2.27 per barrel for next-month delivery. After a big fall of $4.06 per barrel on Nov. 30, this week's losses dropped oil into a price range it had not seen since August, the month Iraq invaded Kuwait.

Oil kept falling this week, first when Iraq accepted the offer, and later when Iraqi President Saddam Hussein announced plans to free all of his hostages.

Natural gas, which is not directly affected by fears of war in the Persian Gulf, also showed little direction Friday. The January delivery contract fell .1 cent to $2.350 per 1,000 cubic feet. For the week, gas dropped 9.5 cents for January delivery.

Credit slows

WASHINGTON (AP) — Growth in consumer credit slowed to a seasonally adjusted $1.47 billion in October, the government reported. Analysts said it was another sign of a weakening economy.

The Federal Reserve on Friday said consumer credit grew at an annual rate of 2.4 percent, down from a revised 4.6 percent rate posted in September. The September rate was even slower than the 4.9 percent advance originally reported.

Revolving, or credit card, debt increased $1.56 billion, or an annual rate of 8.6 percent, down from a 12.9 percent gain in September and a 13.3 percent advance a month earlier.

Workers idled

DETROIT (AP) — More than 30,000 auto workers, nearly all of them at General Motors Corp. plants, will have next week off as the auto industry wrestles with a recession.

GM, Ford Motor Co. and Chrysler Corp. said Friday they plan to shut down all or parts of a dozen assembly plants for the week of Dec. 10, keeping 32,380 workers at home. The closures stem from slow dealer orders.

GM also said it will lay off 50,470 workers when it shuts down 18 assembly factories in 14 states the week of Dec. 17, the last week before the industry's traditional shutdown between the Christmas and New Year's holidays.

NYSE members' profits off 98 percent

■ The New York Stock Exchange reports that a broad sector of its membership has seen profits fall 98 percent in the first nine months of 1990, reflecting the recession that has hit Wall Street.

By Kurt Eichenwald
N.Y. Times News Service

NEW YORK — Reflecting the intense recession that has struck Wall Street, the New York Stock Exchange reported late last week that the earnings of a broad sector of its membership collapsed in the first nine months of this year, falling by 98 percent.

The Big Board's report on investment firms that do business with the public is the most striking evidence yet that the difficulties that have spread across Wall Street since the market crash of 1987 have grown much more significant.

The steep decline is a result of the deterioration of the big-fee investment banking business, as well as the dwindling volume on the national stock exchanges.

For the first nine months, member firms reported an anemic profit of $22 million, compared with a profit of $1.28 billion in the first nine months of 1989.

For the third quarter, ended Sept. 30, the firms reported an after-tax loss of $124 million, in contrast to an after-tax profit of $467 million in the third quarter of 1989.

Revenues also declined in the third quarter, falling 13.4 percent, to $13.09 billion from $15.11 billion last year.

One member group that was hard hit were the Big Board specialists, who are granted a franchise in a particular security in exchange for maintaining an orderly market in the stock.

The specialists reported an after-tax loss of $19 million in the third quarter, in contrast to an after-tax profit of $17 million a year earlier.

In the first nine months, the specialists lost $5 million, in contrast to a profit of $56 million for the first nine months of 1989.

A spokesman for the exchange could not determine whether it was the worst nine-month period in the Big Board's history.

But the first quarter of this year was worse than the third quarter, with after-tax losses of $321 million.

In the fourth quarter of 1987, when the stock market crash occurred, firms lost $2.35 billion.

Analysts said the results reflected the difficulties on Wall Street.

"It illustrates the weakness that has been present in the business in the third quarter and will extend into the fourth quearter," Michael Goldstein, a securities industry analyst with Sanford C. Bernstein & Co., said of the Big Board's results.

Analysts cautioned that they did not believe the numbers reflected all of the business of the firms, in part because they did not include earnings from foreign subsidiaries or business conducted by holding companies.

That perhaps made the picture even gloomier, since many Wall Street firms have found a good deal of revenue from their overseas operations.

Despite the huge decrease in domestic earnings, spending cutbacks at the firms have been comparatively small.

According to Big Board data, expenses for the third quarter fell only a meager 7.8 percent, to $13.28 billion, compared with $14.39 billion a year earlier.

FDIC chairman reports drop in bank profits

N.Y. Times News Service

Seidman

WASHINGTON — The chairman of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. announced that the profits of the banking industry for the third quarter were down 20 to 25 percent from the second-quarter earnings of $5.3 billion but were significantly better than had been expected.

The figures for the quarter ended Sept. 30 also compare favorably with the corresponding period last year, when the industry posted its first loss in two years, said L. William Seidman, chairman of the FDIC, in an interview Friday.

Seidman provided a preview of the earnings report for more than 12,000 banks that will be released Tuesday.

Although he did not give an exact figure for the third-quarter earnings, he said the report shows that many of the nation's banks are doing "quite well and are still profitable, despite what everyone has been saying about the industry."

He said the earnings were significantly higher than the third quarter in 1989 because last year many banks added to their reserves against losses from troubled loans to developing countries.

Labor, management join forces to survive

EDITOR'S NOTE — Competition has revolutionalized relations between management and labor, who have found in many industries that they have to become partners to survive. In the second of a three-part series, "The New Workplace," Midwest Regional Reporter Sharon Cohen explores the changes that have led to no more Us vs. Them.

By Sharon Cohen

JANESVILLE, Wis. (AP) — Each Monday, two guys named Mike get together to talk about their future. Their jobs seemingly make them rivals, but, in fact, they share a goal: survival.

Mike O'Brien is a union leader. Mike Spitzley is a company man. But in their meetings here at the General Motors plant, the two talk costs, labor, quality — topics workers wouldn't have been privy to years ago.

"Most of the things we talk about, it's 'we.' It's not us vs. them. We've pretty much recognized our goals are the same," said Spitzley, manager of GM's 5,300-worker car-truck plant. "We make decisions together. ... I don't think there's anything I know I wouldn't tell them if they asked me."

"There's something different going on," said O'Brien, president of UAW Local 95. "Years ago, it wasn't any of our business what went on in the business."

Like two boxers bloodied and bruised, union and management in a small number of industries — mostly auto and steel — have stopped fighting. Instead, they're joining forces, sharing ideas and working together in ways they never would have before.

Nowadays, blue and white collar, company and union, travel, lobby and meet customers together. In perhaps the most revolutionary example, Saturn Corp., both parties share all big decisions, from choosing suppliers to the advertising agency for the new auto company.

"An adversarial relationship cannot be compatible with today's market. We're part of a world trade. We're no longer king this and king that," said John Smith, administrative assistant to the president of the United Steelworkers of America.

"Survival is probably not too strong a word for what drives the two parties together," said Steelworkers' president Lynn Williams.

NCR looks for help in takeover fight with AT&T

■ NCR visited Washington seeking help fighting off AT&T, but experts say that may not be enough.

By Eben Shapiro
N.Y. Times News Service

NCR took its case for independence to Washington on Friday, but Wall Street professionals said such efforts would be unlikely to help it ward off American Telephone & Telegraph.

Metzenbaum

A delegation from NCR Corp. met with staff members of Sen. Howard M. Metzenbaum, D-Ohio, chairman of the Senate Subcommitte on Monopolies and Business Rights.

Metzenbaum has already said the $6 billion AT&T offer to buy the computer maker does not appear to violate antitrust law. Still, such meetings could put public pressure on AT&T.

But AT&T Chairman Robert E. Allen told Metzenbaum in a phone call last weekend that AT&T would keep NCR's headquarters in Dayton, Ohio, and that the acquisition would not affect NCR employees in Ohio.

Despite that assurance, NCR executives told Metzenbaum's staff Friday they were concerned a takeover would lead to layoffs at NCR.

Analysts said that given AT&T's determination to acquire NCR, the phone company would not be likely to back down in the face of public or political pressure.

Thursday, AT&T began a $90-a-share cash tender offer after NCR's board rejected a stock bid for the same amount. NCR's board said it considered $125 a share a fair price, a move widely interpreted as a negotiating tactic.

On the New York Stock Exchange on Friday, NCR's shares slipped $1, to $91.75, while AT&T lost 25 cents, to $29.875.

Analysts expect the two companies to negotiate a deal above $90.

In a statement Friday, NCR Chairman Charles E. Exley said the $125 price was not a negotiating tactic. Exley continued to maintain the company was not for sale. He also reiterated earlier statements that NCR would use every means at its disposal to fight a takeover.

AT&T won a small victory Friday. Ohio Securities Commissioner Mark Holderman ruled that the department would not suspend the bid by AT&T for control of NCR. If the commissioner determined AT&T had not provided enough information about its financial backing and other details, the commissioner could have tried to halt the offer in Ohio until AT&T disclosed additional information.

Dealing with computer's memory limitation

By Paul H. Pause'

Pause'

We've seen how the memory limitations of our computers derive from two things: The architecture of the microprocessor, and the design of the operating system.

The CPU runs our programs and manipulates our data. To juggle information in and out of memory, the CPU needs to know where each byte of data is temporarily stored by referring to a particular memory address. The CPU in the original PC was the Intel 8088. An 8088-based system can address up to 1,048,576 memory locations. This is 1024 kilobytes (K), or 1 megabyte (Mb). So we say the address space of the 8088 is 1Mb.

The programmers who designed our disk operating system, DOS, knew they were working with a machine that could handle up to 1Mb of memory, and no more, so DOS, itself, was designed to work with a maximum of 1Mb. At the time, this seemed an enormous amount. (Do you remember that the original IBM PC came with a whopping 64K?)

The problem is, other parts of our system need to use some of those memory address, too. There are ROM BIOS chips (Read Only Memory, Basic Input/Output System) that contain permanent instructions for the computer that have to be addressed, and there is a type of RAM (Random Access Memory) that is used by our video display adapters. DOS programmers had to decide how to divvy up that 1Mb. They decided that DOS would use the first 640K addresses for "regular" memory, to hold our programs (including DOS itself) and our data. The remaining 384K addresses would be used for the BIOS, etc.

Well, as the PC evolved, the CPU was given greater memory-addressing capabilities. The 80286 processors can address 16Mb of memory, and 80386 chips can access 4 gigabytes (4000Mb). Unfortunately, DOS is still restricted to the 1024K total, and 640K for running programs and manipulating data — that's the way it was designed.

What's made the problem even worse is that our newer programs are so big and require so much memory just to run, that we're feeling the pinch because there's no room left for our data!

Two different approaches to the solution have been made.

For one thing, we have a new operating system, OS/2, that has been designed to use much more memory. People haven't been convinced that OS/2 is really worth switching to, yet, so we still have about 40 million PCs running plain ol' DOS.

The introduction of DOS 5.0, scheduled for early next year, should help out. One of the major attractions of the new version will be the ability to load much of DOS, device drivers, and terminate-and-stay-resident (TSR - "pop-up" type) programs above the 640K limit, thus leaving as much as 600K free for application programs and data.

The other solution involves a memory-manipulation scheme devised by Lotus, Intel, and Microsoft, known as LIM EMS, or just EMS (expanded memory specification). This was developed to allow a PC- or XT-type system to access more memory than it was designed to use. A special program, the expanded memory manager, is required to manipulate data in and out of memory on a special expanded memory board.

Anything over 1Mb of RAM is either extended or expanded memory. Extended memory is simply extra memory, either on the main system board or on a memory adapter board. With a 286 or 386 machine and OS/2, you have direct access to extended memory. Unfortunately, very few programs are designed to work with extended memory this way (Lotus 123, release 3, is one).

Expanded memory is special. To use it

INVESTORS' GUIDE

Tax-free interest best for higher tax brackets

By Bill Doyle

Q. After my husband retired in 1987, we sold all of our stocks except one and purchased tax-free bonds. He died in 1988 and a woman from the brokerage affiliate of our bank helped me change the ownership of the stock and the bonds from our two names into my name only.

Doyle

She called recently and asked me to come in to sell the bonds. She said some are paying back principal, which means the principal is shrinking, and if I live to be 90 I won't have anything left. She decided which ones should be sold and which ones should be kept. I am enclosing copies of the sale transactions.

I wanted to leave things the way they were, because I just retired and must learn to live on fixed income. She insisted the sales had to be made immediately.

Did I do the right thing?

A. It's impossible to provide a sure answer, without knowing your entire financial situation. As a general rule of thumb, however, it is sensible to receive tax-free interest when you are in the 28 percent or higher federal income tax bracket. It is not wise to have such investments when you are in the 15 percent bracket.

The reason is simple enough. In most cases, tax-free interest is lower than the taxable income available from other types of investments. So people in the 15 percent bracket get more after-tax keeping money from higher taxable interest and dividends.

The copies you sent along are confirmation statements for the sale of "units" (Think of them as "shares.") of unit investment trusts holding municipal bonds.

A unit investment trust is somewhat similar to a mutual fund. The trust collects interest from the municipal bonds, which is not subject to federal income tax, and passes that money along to unit-holders as tax-free dividends.

As each bond matures and is redeemed, the trust also distributes that money to unit-holders. Each such distribution reduces the principal of your units. After all the bonds are redeemed, all principal has been returned and the units are worth zero.

If you live long enough, that could have happened to you, as the broker evidently was trying to explain.

The confirmation statements show the proceeds from the sale of those units totaled $210,134.64. Let's hope you invested that sizable sum prudently — in conservative interest-paying items.

Q. When I asked the broker what it was costing me to sell units of unit investment trusts, she said the cost is going to be "absorbed." I am not satisfied with that answer. Somebody pays and that is me. Can you provide this information?

A. As is the case with most bonds and some stocks, unit investment trust units are traded on a "principal basis." The brokerage firm, acting as a "dealer," buys the units at one price and attempts to sell them at a higher price.

The difference between the two prices is a markdown, a markup or a combination of the two. Depending on the size of your transaction, the markdown could have amounted to anywhere from 2 to 5 percent of the actual value of the units you sold.

Q. I mentioned to my broker that I would like to purchase U.S. Treasury securities through the Treasury Direct system on my own. She ignored that completely. Is that fair?

A. Settle for "understandable." When you open your own Treasury Direct account through the Federal Reserve Bank or branch serving your part of the country, you don't use a brokerage firm and you pay no brokerage commissions, markup, markdowns or other fees.

Q. You sometimes mention the "28 percent or higher" federal income tax bracket and the "15 percent" bracket. I have never seen you write about middle brackets, in between 15 and 28 percent. Why?

A. Because there no longer are any. The Tax Reform Act of 1986 did away with the mishmash of 15 brackets then in existence and set three — 15, 28 and 33 percent.

The tax law Congress finally passed this fall, before scooting home for reelection, keeps the 15 and 28 percent brackets but changes the 33 percent bracket to 31 percent, effective in 1991.

Three companies get contracts to sell S&LS

Hearst News Service

HOUSTON – The Resolution Trust Corp. awarded contracts to three firms Friday to manage and sell $478 million of assets from failed thrifts in the Houston area.

The three winning bidders for the contracts were J.E. Robert Co. of Alexandria, Va.; Northcorp Realty Advisors of Dallas, and R&B Realty Group of Los Angeles.

The federal agency divvied up the assets at 13 failed thrifts in the Houston area to the three companies.

The companies will be paid a monthly management fee that will decline as the value of the portfolios drops with sales. The firms also earn disposition fees as assets are sold in addition to incentives for selling assets quickly and at higher-than-expected prices.

Northcorp won the largest contract and is expected to earn $8 million in management and disposition fees over the three-year life of the contract, said the RTC.

NOTES: Growing memory

requires either using special memory boards or using a program that can turn regular extended memory into special expanded memory. Again, with 286 and later CPUs, you can directly access extended memory and treat it like expanded memory. You can only use expanded memory with programs that are specially designed to work with it. Many of our popular applications have the ability to follow the EMS specification and use expanded memory.

An excellent resource for wading through the memory maze is "MS-DOS Beyond 640K, Working With Extended and Expanded Memory", by James Forney (1989, Windcrest (TAB) books, 235 p.). This is an attractive, well-written introduction to the various aspects of memory management on our PCs.

The author treats a very technical subject in a generally readable fashion. The book is occasionally a little too on the technical side for a lot of us (like discussing hexadecimal addressing locations), but for the most part he guides you through a complicated subject by building on basic concepts and leading gradually into more complex ideas. I was a little put-off by the author's abundant use of footnotes throughout the text. This seems to me to break your train of thought and interrupts the flow of reading when overdone.

Chapter 1 begins with a look at "The Raw, Unexpanded System." This is a solid introduction into understanding the physical limitations of our machines, and sets the foundation for the remainder of the book. The author discusses the various limitations of both the hardware components and out operating systems.

After this introduction, he examines the evolution of the microprocessor that runs our PCs. I like this because it emphasizes the intimate relationship between the hardware and the programs — including DOS — that run on it.

The heart of the book, Chapters 3-13, gets into detailed examinations of memory options, and hardware and software choices, including discussions of specific products. He talks about choosing extended or expanded memory, installation, upgrading older systems, multitasking, and getting the most out of DOS. He relates complex subjects to familiar objects, like a "Lazy Susan," to help our understanding of these ideas.

He finishes with a discussion of alternative operating environments (PC-MOS/386, Digital Research's DR DOS and Concurrent DOS, Unix, Windows, etc.) and a rather technical look at what can go wrong and how to fix it (Chapter 15, "Crash Course").

This is, frankly, the first book from TAB publishers that I've been able to recommend. I was extremely disappointed with books I'd received earlier through their computer book club, and was pleasantly surprised with this one. Their new Windcrest line seems to offer a dramatic improvement over the content and production of their earlier texts.

SURVIVE: Alliances grow

(From 6C)

Though there's a growing alliance, conflict remains, as evidenced by bitter strikes against the New York Daily News, Eastern Airlines and Pittston Co.

Some labor officials also contend unions' acceptance of concessions in the '80s didn't ensure job security. And cooperation, they say, really is co-opting.

"The largest loss is the union's autonomy. We become one with the corporate agenda. It's an unnatural place for the union to be," said Jerry Tucker of the New Directions Movement, a dissident autoworkers group.

Even so, a survey released this year found at least half of 350 unionized manufacturers had some formal joint activities, most begun in the 1980s.

"We've never seen anything as widespread in our own history," said William Cooke, a professor and associate dean at Wayne State University, who conducted the survey and wrote a book on the topic. "In every case, it's come out of the same, 'If we don't change, we're out of the market. The old way doesn't work well.' "

The biggest test of cooperation may be the layoffs and idling of plants in the current economic downturn. Hard times, Cooke said, could have a demoralizing effect and, perhaps, even crush the more fragile partnerships.

"If (workers) perceive management as doing this without due consideration for the welfare of employees ... it will have the potential of destroying the efforts altogether," Cooke said. "If employees have information shared with them about the market ... then employees, generally speaking, are able to accept management decision-making."

Cooke's survey found partnerships in almost all industries — including trucking, mining and public utilities'.

Former hostage William Mills, left, of Washington, is greeted by family members after he returned to Houston from Baghdad early Sunday morning.

Cheering crowd greets plane with hostages

By Wendy Benjaminson and Laura Tolley
Associated Press Writers

HOUSTON (AP) — The voice of former hostage Jim Vine rang out above those of the other Americans returning Sunday from Iraq as they greeted their families and friends in an emotional reunion.

Vine was meeting his son for the first time.

"Oh my God!" he shouted as he charged across the tarmac at Ellington Air Field to throw his arms around his wife, Donna, and son, Evan. The baby was born Sept. 6., barely one month after Iraq invaded Kuwait.

The Vines, of Pasadena, Calif., knelt on the ground while Donna wiped tears from her eyes and Jim held Evan, wrapped in a blue blanket and wearing a blue knitted cap to ward off the freezing predawn air.

A score of similar scenes erupted in noisy bedlam at the former Air Force base 20 miles outside of Houston as 21 U.S. hostages, three U.S. Embassy employees and seven family members stepped off a Coastal Corp. jet with former Texas Gov. John Connally and Coastal chairman Oscar Wyatt, who secured their release.

Connally and Wyatt brought $500,000 worth of medical supplies to Iraq last week, and met with Iraqi leader Saddam Hussein for 45 minutes to plead for freedom for American hostages.

Hussein agreed to release a small group to the oilmen the day before he announced his blanket release of all Western hostages.

The former hostages said they generally were treated well, although all complained about food shortages. Many looked gaunt and tired, and some of the men sported beards they said were grown during the months in captivity.

John Remington of Redondo Beach, Calif., who works for DMJM, an architectural engineering firm, said he was held 400 miles northwest of Baghdad. The Iraqis brought them groceries, but he and the others held with him cooked their own food.

"Once you accept the baseline for the questioning, that you were a prisoner held against your will, yes, we were treated very well," Remington said.

Jackie Nelson, wife of former hostage Bill Nelson of Los Angeles, kissed Wyatt and Connally on the cheek and said, "God bless you. I can't thank you enough. We're so grateful." The men, visibly exhausted from the 18-hour flight, were moved to tears.

"That's why we went," Wyatt said later.

Nelson, who said he was held at a munitions plant about 37 miles south of Baghdad. Asked how he felt, Nelson said, "God Bless America. There's nothing like it. These people are marvelous. They have done things our government can't do and won't do."

Bobby Gene Parker of Vidor, Texas, who was greeted by at least 40 relatives and friends, said that from the moment he became a hostage, "we hoped just sometime that we would all be released."

Parker, who worked for Kuwait Drilling Co., said he was kept at a military base 25 miles north of Baghdad. He lost about 40 pounds and said "There was never enough food." He spent his time listening to Voice of America and BBC radio, and read a lot.

"I just hope everyone will be home for Christmas," he said.

Parker's son, Brian, interrupted a news conference by Connally and Wyatt to present each of the men with a red rose.

"This is a very, very small token of appreciation for everything you've done," he said, his voice cracking with emotion. "You've brought my daddy home." He then led the crowd in three cheers.

Chahy Gandji said he heard that his in-laws, William and Khadijan Mills of Washington, D.C., had left Kuwait separately for Iraq, but then heard nothing for several days.

William Mills was a hostage, but Khadijan, an Iranian-born American, stayed in Kuwait against all advice to use Iran's new relationship with Iraq to help her husband.

"She saved my father-in-law several times," Gandji said.

The nearly 200 relatives and friends flown to Houston by Coastal Corp. cheered as the Boeing 707 appeared in the sky, again when it touched down, and a third time as it pulled up to the hangar. They clutched hands nervously while federal officials boarded the plane to clear them for entry into the country.

Brithe Rodebush, wife of former hostage Bill Rodebush of McAlester, Okla., danced a nervous little jig as the plane touched down, while a television cameraman taped pictures of her black, hot pink and yellow sneakers.

DALLAS (AP) — Families of 12 Americans being held hostage by Iraq said the U.S. Embassy was to blame for their relatives being left off a flight that delivered 21 captives to freedom Sunday.

A jet chartered by Houston oilman Oscar Wyatt and former Texas Gov. John Connally arrived in Houston shortly before 5 a.m. Sunday to the cheers of nearly 200 relatives and supporters.

But the families of hostages left behind were angry and said the 180-seat jet departed Iraq mostly empty.

"We're trapped. They're playing with my husband's emotion, and he just can't take it any more," said Willie Carr of the Fort Worth suburb of North Richland Hills. Her husband, Gary, was one of the hostages not allowed to leave with Connally.

"He's put up with too much too long to be hurt any more," Mrs. Carr said.

Connally and Wyatt flew to Baghdad last week seeking the release of hostages. They took $500,000 worth of medical supplies as a goodwill gesture.

'This is another example of politicians getting involved and royally screwing something up. Now they're going home with an empty plane, and my husband is a wreck. It's cruel.'

— Donnita Cole of Odessa, wife of hostage John Cole

Seven of the hostages' relatives and three U.S. Embassy employees were also on board the corporate jet. A 22nd hostage was also on board when the plane left Iraq, Peter McCleod, a British subject who got off during a refueling stop in Ireland.

But some hostages who hoped to ride home with Connally and Wyatt were forced to remain because of delays in getting exit visas required by the Iraqis.

Samir A. Vincent, an Iraqi-born consultant to Connally's group, said the U.S. Embassy did nothing to help the group's mission.

"We did our damnedest to get everybody out," Vincent said. "If they're angry with anybody, it should be at the American Embassy. They didn't do anything for us."

Donnita Cole of Odessa, whose husband, John, was among the hostages left behind, said the hostages' nerves are frayed.

"You don't understand how much we've put up with," Mrs. Cole said. "This is another example of politicians getting involved and royally screwing something up. Now they're going home with an empty plane, and my husband is a wreck. It's cruel."

Mrs. Cole and Mrs. Carr were in Iraq with 15 other members of an Illinois-based group called Coming Home. The group went to the Middle East to plead for their relatives' freedom.

Five hostages and their wives from the group were allowed on Connally's flight. Many in the group were especially angered because three of the Americans allowed on the flight were U.S. diplomats.

"It's like everything else in this whole mess. The embassy always gets its people out first," said Ellen Martin of Detroit. "How do you think we felt the last time when it got its people out?"

An embassy official, who declined to be named, disputed the charges, saying the embassy was never informed of Connally's plan for getting the hostages out.

"These people were stuck here like other hostages," he said. "They were detained while in transit, and all three had medical crises."

Millionaire oilman Wyatt no stranger to success

Associated Press

The success of oilman Oscar Wyatt at getting 21 American hostages out of Iraq should come as no surprise. The self-made millionaire is well-known for his drive and persistence in the oil and gas industry, observers say.

Wyatt and former Texas Gov. John Connally arrived in Houston early Sunday after a successful mission seeking the release of Americans being held in Iraq.

The burly 66-year-old Wyatt has built an $8 billion energy conglomerate, Coastal Corp., from scratch with a strong view for the bottom line.

Analysts credit Wyatt with running one of the most profitable gas pipelines in the country. Coastal earned $178 million in 1989 and had $150 million in cash on hand, according to data obtained by the Dallas Morning News from Disclosure Inc.

Wyatt lacks the high profile of other corporate raiders, but he is known as one of the toughest takeover artists in the gas and oil industry. His company was largely built from shrewd acquisitions over the past two decades.

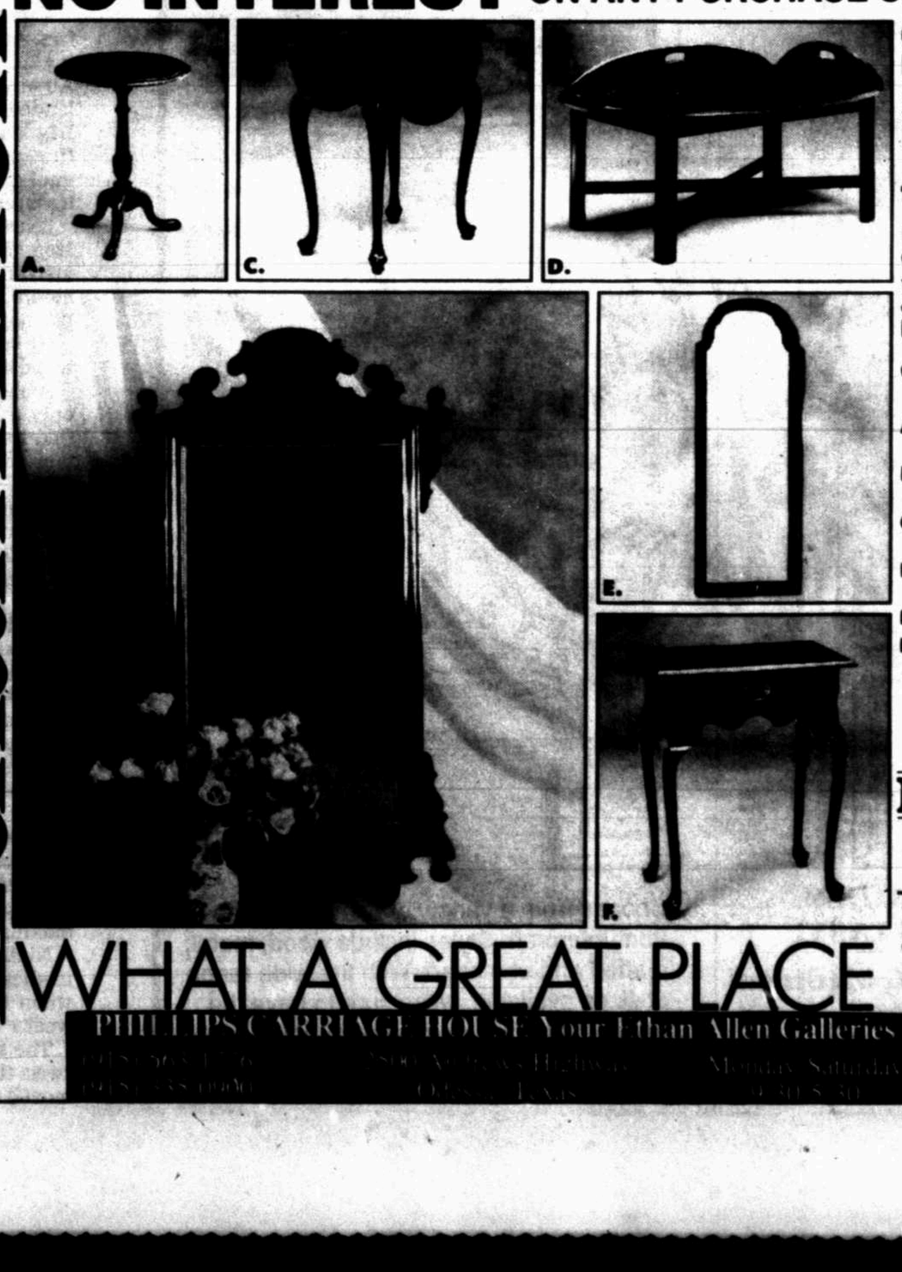

Wyatt has a reputation for fighting for what he wants and for using plain, tough talk.

"You certainly don't play hardball with him because he will play hardball right back," said Dale Steffes, a Houston oil and gas consultant. "He doesn't play according to everybody else's rules."

End of ordeal

Parents, soldiers write Bush about their concerns

N.Y. Times News Service

WASHINGTON — The letters pour into the White House by the hundreds from battle-ready GIs in the Arabian desert and anxious families in households all across America.

"Be strong Mr. President," wrote the father of a 19-year-old paratrooper. "Ask God for help. Do not let my son's song and those of others be snuffed out for something not truly worthy of the sacrifice."

Another, signed by "your American fighting soldier," offers support: "Rest assured that we are in clear conciense (sic) and know our mission well. Each soldier here is a trained keeper of American values and interests."

This is George Bush's Persian Gulf mail call, an endless flow of cards and letters to the one man in America who can decide whether U.S. fighting forces go to war.

They come neatly typed or in a hasty scrawl, in fractured grammar or in soaring prose, and occasionally poetry. And, the president says, all serve as a wrenching reminder that he has life-or-death power over thousands of young men and women, many still in their teens.

"You ought to read my mail," he told reporters during an emotional moment at a news conference Nov. 30. "It is so heart-moving. Supportive and yet: "Please bring my kid home. Please bring my husband home.' And it's a tough question."

A sampling of letters — made available by the White House under the condition that names not be used — illustrates the personal stakes confronting the president as he contemplates the use of force in the Persian Gulf. Collectively, they translate foreign policy into human terms.

"These troops continuously live under adverse conditions," wrote an infantry captain's mother who described herself as "the proud mother of a patriot."

"Their days dawn to blowing sands, oven-like temperatures and the loneliness of isolated make-shift quarters in a foreign land. Worst of all, each day they face death with Iraq's army standing ready to launch thousands of tanks, planes and poison gas."

The paratrooper's father attached a tape of a song his son performed in church just before leaving. "He is just a country boy with no formal voice training, as you can probably tell," the man wrote. "He can just sing a pretty song."

Shirley Green, in charge of the president's correspondence, says the president reads the letters that cross his desk and often adds a personal P.S. at the bottom of the standardized White House response.

Bush returned one letter with a picture showing the president trying to plow out of a sand trap during a golf game. "Scottie, try to stay out of the sand. May your life be full of Eagles."

To another parent, he wrote, "God bless your wonderful son." In another response, he complimented the writer for likening Iraqi President Saddam Hussein to Hitler, a comparison used by Bush himself.

The White House has received more than 1,100 letters from family members on the Persian Gulf issue, largely supportive but often laced with concern, Green said.

"In the past, we've been able to categorize his mail as pro and con," she said. "The difference with the Iraq mail is that a very large number don't fit in pro or con. They're somewhere in between."

A typical letter came from a Texas woman with a son and daughter-in-law both serving in Saudi Arabia.

"I know that you have some of the best military minds in the world advising you and I would not presume to do so myself except I feel I have a tremendous investment over there," she wrote.

A letter from an airman struck a conversational tone as he told Bush of life in Saudi Arabia.

"I am a member of your Air Force. Alas, I can't tell you where I am. I hope you find time to find out for yourself. ... I have not got it bad over here. We've got basketball ... and an improvised track. We also have a recreational tent."

Is U.S. ready for women soldiers to die in war?

By Nancy Benac

WASHINGTON (AP) — Diane Evans' parents had four sons and two daughters. It was Diane who went to war.

"No place in Vietnam was safe," the former Army nurse recalls. "We were in a combat zone and we were subject to attack."

It saddens her that two decades later, America still is coming to grips with the prospect that women may die in war alongside men.

If there is a war in the Persian Gulf, for the first time in history American women may be injured or killed in significant numbers.

The Pentagon won't say how many women serve among the 240,000 U.S. troops in the gulf, only that they comprise somewhat less of the gulf contingent than their 11 percent share of the overall U.S. military.

Images of women soldiers feature prominently in news reports from Saudi Arabia. And the role played by women has expanded, allowing them to serve in a whole range of support positions that were off limits in days past. Many argue that makes them more vulnerable if fighting breaks out.

"Although women don't fill combat positions, the roles that they are serving in will expose them to hostile fire," said Meredith Neizer, head of the Defense Advisory Committee on Women in the Service.

No one is sure how the nation would respond to female casualties.

"After all we've said about how far women have come, Americans are not ready to have their women go out there and get maimed and killed in combat," said Bill Taylor of the Center for Strategic and International Studies.

Taylor said the number of women killed or injured in a gulf war probably would be low because women don't serve in tank and armored infantry units.

But even the possibility of casualties among women is generating debate about the expanding role of women in the military and the accompanying risks.

"There's been a wakeup call on what wartime military duty might entail," said Martin Binkin, a military analyst with the Brookings Institution. There's less discussion about scrapping the military's ban on women in combat jobs, he said.

Women are barred by law from serving on combat ships and planes in the Navy, Air Force and Marines. The Army bars them from serving in combat-related fields such as infantry, tank and some artillery units. But women serve in many of the support and supply units that could be caught in battle.

Rep. Patricia Schroeder, D-Colo., is pushing legislation to require a four-year test to see how women would perform in combat-related jobs. She argues that excluding women from combat jobs doesn't insulate them from danger but it does deny them career advancement opportunities.

Women, she says, often handle the communications for maneuvers, and communications centers are considered prime targets for attack.

"Women would be the first hit in a strike," Schroeder said.

She rejects arguments that Americans aren't ready to see women wounded or killed. Female police officers face life-threatening dangers daily, she notes. And a few women "came home in body bags" from both World War II and Vietnam, she said.

Eight women nurses and more than 58,000 men died in Vietnam. More than 200 women and more than 400,000 men died in World War II.

Retired Air Force Brig. Gen. Wilma Vaught, president of the Women in the Military Service of America Foundation, believes the public has overcome any special qualms about the wartime loss of women vs. men.

"We've progressed far from where we were," she said. "People don't want their women killed any more than they want their men killed. They'd like for them all to live."

Freed hostage says he'll help U.S. military

FRANKFURT, Germany (AP) — After four months hiding from Iraqi soldiers in Kuwait, Joseph Lammerding of California said Monday he would like to return to the region to help the U.S.-led military effort against Iraq.

Lammerding

Lammerding, 35, was the first of 175 Americans leaving a U.S.-chartered Iraqi Airways jumbo jet after it landed in Frankfurt. It left Baghdad Sunday with the first Americans to depart under an Iraqi order to release all foreigners.

"Now I just want to see Mom and Dad," said Lammerding, a native of Sacramento, Calif. "I hope to be back in Saudi Arabia next month."

He said he would like to be part of the effort to push Iraq out of Kuwait.

A slight, bearded man in jeans who carried only a small canvas bag, Lammerding identified himself as an adviser to the Kuwaiti military who had lived in the oil-rich nation since 1983.

Lammerding, three other Americans, and one Briton fled at night to a villa outside Kuwait City after the Iraqi invasion Aug. 2. They remained there for more than four months.

The group learned they were free to leave Saturday night, one day after the Iraqi parliament approved a decree by President Saddam Hussein allowing all foreigners to go home.

Recalling his experience, Lammerding described Iraqi brutality accompanied by a low level of military professionalism.

"Sometimes they (Iraqis) would shoot one member of a family. Sometimes the entire family. They raped and plundered, literally," he said of the treatment of Kuwaitis.

He said Kuwaitis did their best to hamper Iraqi efforts to keep control of the country by tearing down street signs and house numbers, making it difficult for the Iraqis to get around.

Nighttime visits by Kuwaitis with food and medical supplies helped his group survive when their own food supplies ran out several weeks after the invasion.

The small band of foreigners refused to answer the door when Iraqi soldiers who had moved into a neighboring villa rang the bell.

PART-TIME INCOME AVAILABLE

The Midland Reporter-Telegram has several routes which need to be filled with qualified, responsible individuals. Now is one of the best times ever to obtain a route in your area!

Often asked questions:

Is it worthwhile for adults also?
Yes! Our current carrier force is already 65% adult and 35% youth. Morning newspaper routes are attractive for:
- ADULTS who have full-time jobs, yet want to supplement their income with a steady part-time job.
- MOTHERS who can't justify a small job and daycare, because as a carrier, you do not need daycare!
- COLLEGE STUDENTS needing a part-time job which will work with classes!
- YOUTHS who are involved in afternoon school functions, but want to work!
- SENIOR CITIZENS wanting regular exercise, added income, or just want to work with people, neighbors, and friends.

How much money can I make as a carrier?
Depending on the size of the route(s) from $200 to $600 monthly! Some motor routes make even more. Although no motor routes are expected to be available, depending on your service record, you may qualify to move up to a motor route later!

How long does it take?
The actual delivery takes 1 - 2 hours Monday - Saturday, and 2 - 3 hours on Sunday, again depending on the size of the route(s). Also, a few hours a month are needed to collect from subscribers. Many carriers choose to handle some of this by putting envelopes in subscribers' papers. Collecting in person will be necessary though!

When do papers have to be delivered by?
6 AM Monday - Friday and 7 AM on Saturday and Sunday

Do I ever get a day off?
The job requires a 7-day a week commitment. However, carriers do take days off by finding a friend or family member to substitute for them!

RESERVE YOUR ROUTE NOW!
