City Gets Support In Hassle

By SYLVIA TEAGUE
Avalanche-Journal Staff

City Attorney John Ross Jr. has concluded that the Lubbock Independent School District legally can pay the cost of school crossing guards, despite a school legal opinion to the contrary.

In an opinion for Mayor Dirk West, Ross concludes "it is within the school district's authority to pay the salaries of school crossing guards."

The Lubbock City Council asked the school district to assume the $53,000 cost of paying the guards when the council removed the item from the city budget to cut taxes.

However, the school district cited a 1962 legal opinion which states "a school district does not have general police powers," thus could not pay for crossing guards legally.

Ross agrees the district has no police powers, but says "that really does not enter into the question before us.

"As a practical matter, crossing guards are not vested with any authority beyond that of an ordinary citizen," Ross says.

"If a person runs through an intersection occupied by a school crossing guard, he is prosecuted for failure to yield right-of-way to a pedestrian, not failure to heed a traffic directive. Consequently, school crossing guards need no special legislative appointment before they can act on city streets and sidewalks," he continues.

Ross cites the Texas Education Code as saying local school funds may be used for specific purposes listed in the code and "for other purposes necessary in the conduct of the public schools to be determined by the board of trustees."

Ross says "it has been previously noted by the courts that school authorities have discretion incidental to their administrative powers" and school officials have justified "the payment of architects (incidental to the design of buildings; the payment of attorneys (incidental to the power to tax); the payment of school nurses, the payment of dieticians, the payment of librarians, the payment of security police, the payment of bus drivers, and perhaps even the payment of entertainers for class assemblies."

In a 1951 case involving the Pleasant Grove school district, the opinion reads: "Courts are disinclined to interfere with regulations adopted by school boards and they will not consider whether such regulations are wise or expedient; but merely whether they are a reasonable exercise of the powers and discretion of the school authorities."

Research conducted by the Texas Municipal League indicated of 90 cities contacted, 70 bore the total cost for crossing guards and 20 shared the expense with the local school district, Ross says.

"Allied to that question is the payment

Scores Dead, Wounded In Iranian City

TEHRAN, Iran (UPI) — Troops and police teargassed, then fired on thousands of student demonstrators in downtown Tehran today, killing at least three persons and injuring 85 others, according to witnesses.

The new violence broke out as newspapers shut down to protest renewed censorship and a strike of government employees entered its fifth day.

The security units in Tehran baton-charged and teargassed several thousand protesting students, then opened fire to disperse them.

Witnesses said at least three youths died of gunshot wounds and another 85 were taken to hospitals with injuries.

The students gathered near a mosque at Shahreza Avenue, site of the Tehran University, and shouted "Khomeini or death" in continuing demonstrations for the return of Ayatollah Roohollah Khomeini, exiled opposition leader.

Some students chanted, "What happened to the oil money?" echoing growing bitterness over the county's economic problems despite a $20 billion-a-year oil income.

Several hundred people have died — no exact statistics are available — in 10 months of urban violence that has continued despite the imposition of martial law in Tehran and 11 other cities on Sept. 8.

The latest round of disturbances began Saturday when tens of thousands of teachers, government employees, railroad men, doctors and mailmen began a strike for higher pay. The government agreed Tuesday to grant a two-stage 25 percent pay increase, despite raging inflation, but the strikes continued.

Student demonstrations broke out in support other striking teachers in Tehran and several other cities. Several youths were killed and scores of others were injured in clashes with the police.

Banks, shops, cinemas and government offices were ransacked and set on fire by the demonstrators.

Youths and police also clashed on the Crown Prince Square and Queen Elizabeth II Boulevard, site of several schools in downtown Tehran.

Helmeted and machine gun-carrying soldiers patrolled the capital. Reports of trouble in the provinces still lacked in details, but rioting was reported in several other cities.

Newspapers also went on strike today to protest the military authorities' reported attempt to reimpose censorship, which was lifted last week.

The newspapers Kayhan and Ettelaat said they would not publish if the military insisted on censoring them.

Censorship of Iranian newspapers, conducted until recently by a special unit in the Ministry of Information, was stopped by Prime Minister Jaafar Sharif-Emami as part of a democratic liberalization.

But today, two officers from the martial law authority visited the editorial departments of the Ettelaat and Kayhan, the employees said. They asked to see all editorial matter before it went to the press, the employees said.

The editors refused to obey and asked the men to leave.

About 4,000 employees, writers and technical staff members of the two dailies halted work when the two officers made their demands, spokesmen said.

Ettelaat, with a circulation of about 250,000, is ceasing publication for the first time in 51 years and Kayhan, with a circulation of about 300,000, is shut down for the first time in 37 years.

The two newspapers, among other Iranian publications, have been giving full coverage to the violence that has occurred in the nation this year.

More than 1,000 persons have been killed in the demonstrations against the shah and his social and religious reforms. Some Iranians want to return to more conservative practices, while others demand more political freedom and broader civil liberties.

Syrians, Christians Reinforce Troops

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Bursts of gunfire and explosions jolted the Syrian-Christian cease-fire in Beirut before dawn today, as Syrian troops and their adversaries in Lebanon's Christian militias were reported bring up reinforcements.

On the political front, President Elias Sarkis won agreement from Arab countries policing Lebanon's civil war armistice to hold a foreign ministers conference Sunday to try to achieve a comprehensive settlement of the Lebanese crisis.

Beirut police and other eyewitnesses reported an increase of sniper fire on roads leading into the city's Christian enclave, apparently to cover the influx of reinforcements.

The Christians accused the Syrians of initiating the firing during the night. They claimed Syrian sniper fire killed 15 Christians and wounded 25 on the bridges leading into East Beirut from the Christian hinterland to the north.

There was no comment from the Syrians.

Independent observers said both Christians and Syrians were reinforcing their positions with artillery and tanks in the area of the Qarantina and Borj Hammoud Bridges that control access from the Christian sector to the north. The Christians so far have failed to take the bridges from the Syrians to gain a badly needed resupply route.

The Christian Voice of Lebanon radio said cars carrying food, water and medical supplies to Ashrafieh were blocked at Syrian checkpoints. But traffic was bogged down mainly by sniper fire from both sides.

A taxicab had its windshield riddled with bullets crossing from East to West Beirut. It screached up Hamra Street in West Beirut toward the American University Hospital carrying a bleeding passenger slumped in the front seat.

The flareup was the second threat in less than 24 hours to the cease-fire, now in its fourth day. Syrian and Christian forces exchanged machine-gun and sniper fire and rocket grenades for an hour across the green line Tuesday afternoon.

Informed sources said the Christian militias also cut off the main water pipeline from East Beirut to Moslem West Beirut, depriving most of the Moslem half of the city of water.

The water cutoff appeared to be in retaliation for a food blockade which the Christian radio claimed the Syrians had clamped on East Beirut.

The site of the foreign ministers' conference has not been agreed upon yet. But unofficial reports said it would probably be held in the Lebanese mountain resort of Chtoura near the Syrian border. The Syrians have their Lebanese military command there.

The state radio said the foreign ministers of Syria, Saudi Arabia, Kuwait, the United Arab Emirates, Qatar, Bahrain and Jordan were expected to attend.

The Christian radio said topics would include a Lebanese request for another six-month extension of the peacekeeping mandate which expires Oct. 28.

Four Flee Fire Here

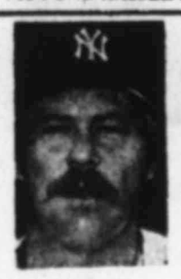

A fast-spreading blaze destroyed the Carl Mills home late Tuesday, but the four occupants escaped unharmed.

Mills said the fire erupted about 9:30 p.m. in a back office at his 707 Sunset Lane home just south of the Lubbock Country Club.

By the time six fire department units arrived about 10 minutes later, flames already had engulfed the back portion of the four-bedroom wood-and-brick home and were leaping through the roof of the house. Several persons said they could see the flames for more than two miles.

Mills, his wife, Barbara, and their two daughters, Sonie, 22, and Lisa, 11, were able to escape from the fire, along with one pet dog. However, another small dog was trapped in a bedroom near where the

Justice Of Peace Details Efforts To Get Autopsy

By FRANK PATRICK
Avalanche-Journal Staff

Slaton Justice of the Peace Arvin Stafford today indicated he made a thorough effort to obtain an autopsy in the Severo Garza Jr. case, but was unable to get one authorized.

The testimony came during a federal court trial this morning, with relatives of the deceased Garza attempting to establish a claim for damages against county officials and/or other defendants.

The body of the 31-year-old Garza was found Dec. 13, 1976, stuffed in the trunk of his automobile in a Slaton wrecking yard. Autopsies had been discontinued only four days before the discovery after the Commissioner's Court had decided not to grant an autopsy fee increase to Physicians Pathology Service.

Stafford today said that no autopsy was ever performed in the case and no cause of death was ever established.

"The first step that I took was that I called County Judge Rod Shaw and had a conversation with him," Stafford said when asked by plaintiff attorney John Simpson about his efforts to get an autopsy.

The Justice of the Peace said he had been concerned after receiving a notice from Shaw about a month prior to the incident to the effect that the pathology service was terminating services with the county as of Dec. 10.

Stafford said he also contacted Dr. Richard Keffler, a local pathologist who was named a defendant in the suit, and was told by him that Keffler could not perform the autopsy under the prevailing circumstances.

The autopsy dispute between county officials and Lubbock pathologists developed in 1976 after commissioners turned down a request for a $75 increase in the $175 fee which was then being paid.

Stafford told Simpson that he has not had a problem in obtaining autopsies since the Garza case. He indicated that Amarillo pathologists have been used on some occasions.

Stafford said he was confronted with a similar death — that is, one in which the cause was not apparent — exactly one month after Garza's body was discovered.

In that instance, he said an Amarillo pathologist agreed to perform the autopsy for $175 and that the Commissioners Court agreed to pay transportation expenses.

The original petition filed by Garza's

Loop Lights On Agenda Of Council

By SYLVIA TEAGUE
Avalanche-Journal Staff

The Lubbock City Council will consider adopting a street light policy for Loop 289 frontage roads at its Thursday meeting beginning at 9:30 a.m. in council chambers.

The Electric Utilities Board recommended the installation of sodium vapor lights at each frontage road intersection, with the cost to be paid by owners of property at the intersections.

Numerous citizens have requested additional lighting on the frontage roads, but the state Department of Highways and Public Transportation indicated it didn't want additional lighting installed and said the lighting on frontage roads is adequate.

Also on Thursday's fairly routine agenda is the appointment of a committee to study the future options for city-owned Lubbock Power and Light.

At their last meeting, council members created the committee and agreed to nominate two persons each for membership on the nine-member committee.

Mayor Dirk West will not participate in the appointment procedure because his

Refinery Blast Injures Eight

COPENHAGEN, Denmark (AP) — A massive explosion rocked an oil refinery today, seriously injuring eight persons, authorities said. Police revised an earlier report and said there were no deaths.

Authorities said a fire of unknown origin preceded the explosion, which touched off a raging blaze at the Gulf Oil refinery at Skaelskoer, on the southwest tip of the island of Zealand. Police said it was difficult to gauge the full extent of the disaster because of heavy smoke.

Residents said the explosion rocked homes three miles away.

Drivers were asked to keep off roads to neighboring towns to give free passage to ambulances and fire trucks.

A catastrophe alarm was given and the civil defense organization was called out.

Elderly Actress Makes Debut

NATCHEZ, Miss. (AP) — Susie Turner's entry into show business earned her birthday kisses from Muhammad Ali and Kris Kristofferson, but the 94-year-old movie extra says she won't forsake her garden and her church for a crack at stardom.

The spry, white-haired Natchez resident, cast in the made-for-television film "Freedom Road," said she enjoyed watching a movie being made but "I don't want to be a star. I'd have to be away from my church too much. I'd rather be a star in my church."

Mrs. Turner, known to her friends as Momma Susie, celebrated her 94th birthday on the movie set Tuesday. Ali, Kristofferson and other cast and crew members presented her with a large cake.

Universal Language — Screaming

HOLLYWOOD (AP) — Actor Peter Ustinov says his film project for UNICEF has taught him children the world over have invented the only universal language: screaming.

"They know what they want, and they scream to get it," he says.

The two-time winner of Oscars for supporting actor said he got hooked on the United Nations agency after emceeing a benefit concert in Paris.

While filming a nomadic Bedouin tribe in Jordan, he asked a father how the children found their way back from school. "I bring them back," replied the father, pointing to a Mercedes sedan between the tents, according to Ustinov.

FBI Director Will Get Subpoena

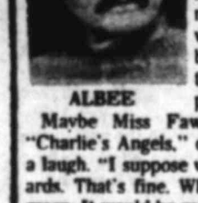

BURLINGTON, Vt. (AP) — William Webster, director of the FBI, will be subpoenaed to testify in the federal passport violation trial of Kristina Berster, says her attorney, William Kunstler.

Kunstler did not elaborate Tuesday on why he wants Webster to testify in Miss Berster's trial on charges of violating U.S. passport laws. "Time will tell," he said.

At the time of her arrest, the FBI identified Miss Berster as a suspected member of West Germany's Baader-Meinhof terrorist gang. The FBI later said it had no evidence linking Miss Berster to the West German gang, but that it still considered her a suspected terrorist. She has denied any terrorist connection.

Albee Wants Play On TV

SEATTLE (AP) — If he could cast Farrah Fawcett-Majors as a green lizard, playwright-director Edward Albee says he might be able to sell his Pulitzer Prize-winning play, "Seascape," to television.

ALBEE

Albee, 50, says he assumes commercial TV is not interested in the 1975 play because he hasn't heard from the networks since he made his pitch three months ago. He wants Helen Hayes, who no longer can work on the stage because she's allergic to the dust, in the lead role, which Deborah Kerr played on Broadway.

Maybe Miss Fawcett-Majors, former star of ABC's "Charlie's Angels," could rescue the venture, he said with a laugh. "I suppose we could dress her up as one of the lizards. That's fine. Why ever not? She could paint her hair green. It would be great."

Liz Injures Ankle

NORFOLK, Va. (AP) — Elizabeth Taylor stumbled when her heel caught in a carpet, but recovered with some "love and affection" supplied by her husband, Senate candidate John Warner.

MISS TAYLOR

Miss Taylor tripped as she walked to her place at the head table at a campaign breakfast with former President Gerald Ford on Monday at the Omni Hotel.

Former Gov. Mills Godwin, who was in front of her, kept her from falling, but there were injuries nonetheless — a swollen ankle, a wrenched back and a broken handle on her handbag, Warner said.

After the breakfast, Warner said he consoled his wife in their suite — "she needed love and affection."

Joe Namath Canceled

LOS ANGELES (AP) — NBC has thrown a block on Joe Namath's new comedy series, "Waverly Wonders." The series is canceled as of Oct. 27, the network says.

In it, the former New York Jets and Los Angeles Rams quarterback played the coach of a losing high school basketball team. The series has had low ratings since its debut last month. Last week, it was 59th out of the 62 prime-time shows in the Nielsen ratings.

Namath, who NBC said was vacationing in Florida, wasn't immediately available for comment on his future plans.

Asner To Give Up Cigarettes

NEW YORK (AP) — Actor Edward Asner will do without his cigarettes for 24 hours Nov. 16 when he leads a "Great American Smokeout" sponsored by the American Cancer Society.

According to the society, Asner, a heavy smoker since he was a teen-ager, has been named chairman of the program. Asner also will try to persuade other smokers to quit for the day, the society said.

Late Bloomers

VANCOUVER, British Columbia (AP) — A pair of used bloomers, which once warmed Queen Victoria, goes on the auction block next week.

The Lighter Side Of Today's News

David Gray of Liverpool outbid other buyers last July in London and obtained the bloomers for Village Auction Sales, a local company.

He said they have been authenticated as genuine by the sellers — Bonham's Montpelier Galleries.

Gray said collecting Queen Victoria's underclothing is a bit of a lark in Britain, and notable comics like Spike Milligan and Marty Feldman each "boast a pair."

The bloomers to be auctioned, said Gray, date back to the latter part of the 19th Century and were worn when the queen had put on a lot of weight, which is reflected in the size of the bloomers.

"In all fairness, they probably weren't worn more than once," he said. "She gave her underwear to her maidservants."

PAUL WARNKE

Solon Sees Warnke Decision As Signal

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The resignation of chief U.S. arms negotiator Paul Warnke means the United States has virtually concluded a pact with Russia to limit strategic bombers and missiles, Sen. Henry Jackson, D-Wash., said today.

"It's the clearest signal we've had so far," the Senate's most critical expert on strategic armaments said in an interview.

"The decision to resign means it's a 'fait accompli'," Jackson said. "The treaty negotiations have been concluded and we are on the verge of receiving a treaty from the president."

Jackson, who led the opposition to Warnke's appointment, is expected to play a key role next year in opposing the SALT II pact as inadequate.

But he had no comment on the effect of Warnke's resignation Tuesday in relation to the upcoming Senate debate.

Sen. Jake Garn, R-Utah, branded the resignation "a political ploy, designed to pave the way for Senate passage of a badly flawed, unacceptable SALT II treaty."

Jackson would not comment on the treaty, saying: "I haven't been briefed. I don't know what's in it."

The SALT II treaty would formalize a type of equality in the two superpowers' arsenals of strategic bombers and land-based missiles.

According to available information, both sides would be limited to an equal mix of 2,250 missiles and bombers. They would decide the composition of the mix as they choose.

No more than 1,200 of these delivery vehicles would be allowed to be equipped with multiple warheads.

Other provisions deal with limitations on modernization of missiles and principles to guide the next round of strategic talks already known as SALT III.

Conservative critics of the pact have criticized the 2,250 ceiling as far too high. Jackson for several years has been pressing for a ceiling of about 1,750 missiles and bombers.

The critics also are dissatisfied that the Soviet "Backfire" bomber has not been counted as a strategic bomber by the United States and will not be restrained under the ceiling.

But U.S. intelligence experts say with aerial refueling it could strike the United States.

Finally, Senate critics are deeply concerned the United States would not be able to check on all aspects of Soviet compliance with the pact.

They say, for example, the United States has no way to determine such elusive technical details as the true range of the Backfire.

Authorities Nab Suspected Thief

DURANT, Okla. (UPI) — Authorities have arrested a suspect in the theft of about 2,000 pounds of dynamite from a rock quarry last spring, but most of the explosives are still missing.

Edward Earl Downs, 19, of Durant, was charged Tuesday in Muskogee federal court with receiving and storing stolen explosives that had been in interstate transportation.

The dynamite was taken April 19 from the Larrimore Rock Quarry near Kenefic, about 15 miles northwest of Durant.

Downs was arraigned Sept. 29 and was freed on $7,500 bond. His trial was set for Dec. 4.

Agents of the U.S. Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms said Downs had some dynamite in his possession when he was arrested Sept. 28. Earlier, a farmer found about 30 pounds of dynamite while he was plowing in his fields.

"We are concerned more with finding the rest of the dynamite than in trying to prosecute this case at this time," said ATF agent in charge Mike Taylor.

"That much explosives could be very dangerous especially if stored improperly or left out in the weather. We're concentrating on getting the other 1,900-plus pounds back."

He said 1,200 blasting caps were stolen at the same time.

The thieves drove across the back fence of the quarry, broke off the lock of a shed and took the dynamite.

Carter Outlines Proposal To Help Vietnam Vets

By H. JOSEF HEBERT

WASHINGTON (AP) — Five years after the last major U.S. military units left Vietnam, most Vietnam veterans have smoothly made the switch to civilian life, the White House says. But for one in five, readjustments remain "incomplete and unsuccessful."

President Carter, in a message to Congress on Tuesday, outlined his proposals for helping Vietnam veterans. Critics quickly labeled the program insufficient and said the president's assessment of the problem is far too optimistic.

"Indications are the problems are far greater" than the White House portrays, said Robert Muller, a lobbyist for Vietnam veterans. Muller contended that the number of veterans who still have readjustment difficulties may be twice the president's estimate.

The White House released a study Tuesday which showed that the unemployment rate for Vietnam veterans is now better than for non-veterans, that their income is higher and that drug abuse, once a serious problem, is on the decline.

However, the study also noted that unemployment among black Vietnam veterans "remains seriously high." It said many veterans, especially those physically disabled, continue to have psychological problems and often find it difficult to obtain work.

"Overwhelmingly, the Vietnam-era veteran has adjusted to civilian life successfully," the White House said. "For a significant minority, however, readjustment has been incomplete or unsuccessful. It is estimated that as many as 20 percent ... continue to face readjustment problems, many of them minority group members."

In releasing the report, Vice President Walter F. Mondale said that "in virtually every walk of life these men and women are contributing as fully to our country today as they did through their courageous service in Southeast Asia."

The administration said it will ask Congress for authority to expand government programs to treat veterans with psychological problems and problems dealing with alcohol and drug abuse. Mondale said the government also will try harder to hire Vietnam veterans for public service jobs and ask Congress to extend the time during which a veteran can use education benefits under the GI Bill.

Critics of the program said, however, more needs to be done, particularly to help veterans who received other than honorable discharges from the military.

Muller, a disabled former Marine officer who heads the Council on Vietnam Veterans' Inc., said many of Carter's recommendations may never be approved by Congress.

At a news conference with Muller, David F. Addlestone, of the National Veterans Law Center, and William P. Thompson, president of the National Council of Churches, welcomed the president's programs as an important "first step." But they both said more should be done to make it easier for veterans with less than honorable discharges to have their status reviewed.

Addlestone said the review procedures must be streamlined because currently a backlog of more than 25,000 cases exists.

New Device No Threat After All

By EVANS WITT

WASHINGTON (AP) — For the second time this year, the nation's most secret intelligence agency has decided that what it once thought was a grave threat to national security isn't a threat after all.

This time, the National Security Agency decided it has no objections to the manufacture and sale of an inexpensive new device designed to scramble the voices on selected citizens' band radio conversations so other CBers cannot eavesdrop.

The NSA decision, revealed in letters to the inventors and Sen. Warren Magnuson, D-Wash., may clear the way for the device to be marketed to the public.

"The invention ... was not relevant to any of the classified communications and security functions of this agency and dangers of harm to the national security were less severe than originally perceived," said the letter to Magnuson from NSA Director Bobby Inman.

However, the NSA action does not lift a secrecy order against the inventors — Carl Nicolai, Carl Quayle and David Miller of Seattle, Wash., and William Raike of Monterey, Calif.

The order, granted April 21 by the Patent Office at the NSA's request, bars the inventors from manufacturing the device or even talking about it.

However, it is known that a person's voice is scrambled in some way by the device before the signal is transmitted. Then an identical device on the radio receiver unscrambles the signal, restoring the voice to its original sound.

Other government agencies — including the Army, Navy and Air Force — could ask that the secrecy order be extended.

"I think it would be incredibly stupid for any of the other agencies to do so," said Raike in a telephone interview Tuesday. "But after this, I wouldn't put it past them."

A decision by the Commissioner on Patents on the inventors' request for lifting the order should come in about a week, said Pete Olwell, a spokesman for the inventors in Washington.

If the order is lifted, Raike said the inventors will reopen negotiations with possible manufacturers and look for more capital to move the device to market. "Our resources as a result of this battle are at end," Raike said.

This secrecy order is the second one this year on which the NSA has changed its mind.

The NSA obtained a secrecy order directing University of Wisconsin professor George DaVida not to talk about a system he developed that would protect data in a computer from unauthorized use.

After national publicity, the NSA dropped the order against DaVida.

The NSA is the most secret of the federal intelligence agencies. It is responsible for insuring that the government's communications are secure and for trying to break the codes of other nations.

Vance Visits Saudi King

CLEVELAND (AP) — Policy issues will not be discussed when Secretary of State Cyrus Vance pays a courtesy call on Saudi Arabia's King Khaled today, a State Department spokesman said.

Khaled, recuperating from heart surgery at the Cleveland Clinic, is a key figure in efforts to gain Arab acceptance of the latest Middle East peace effort.

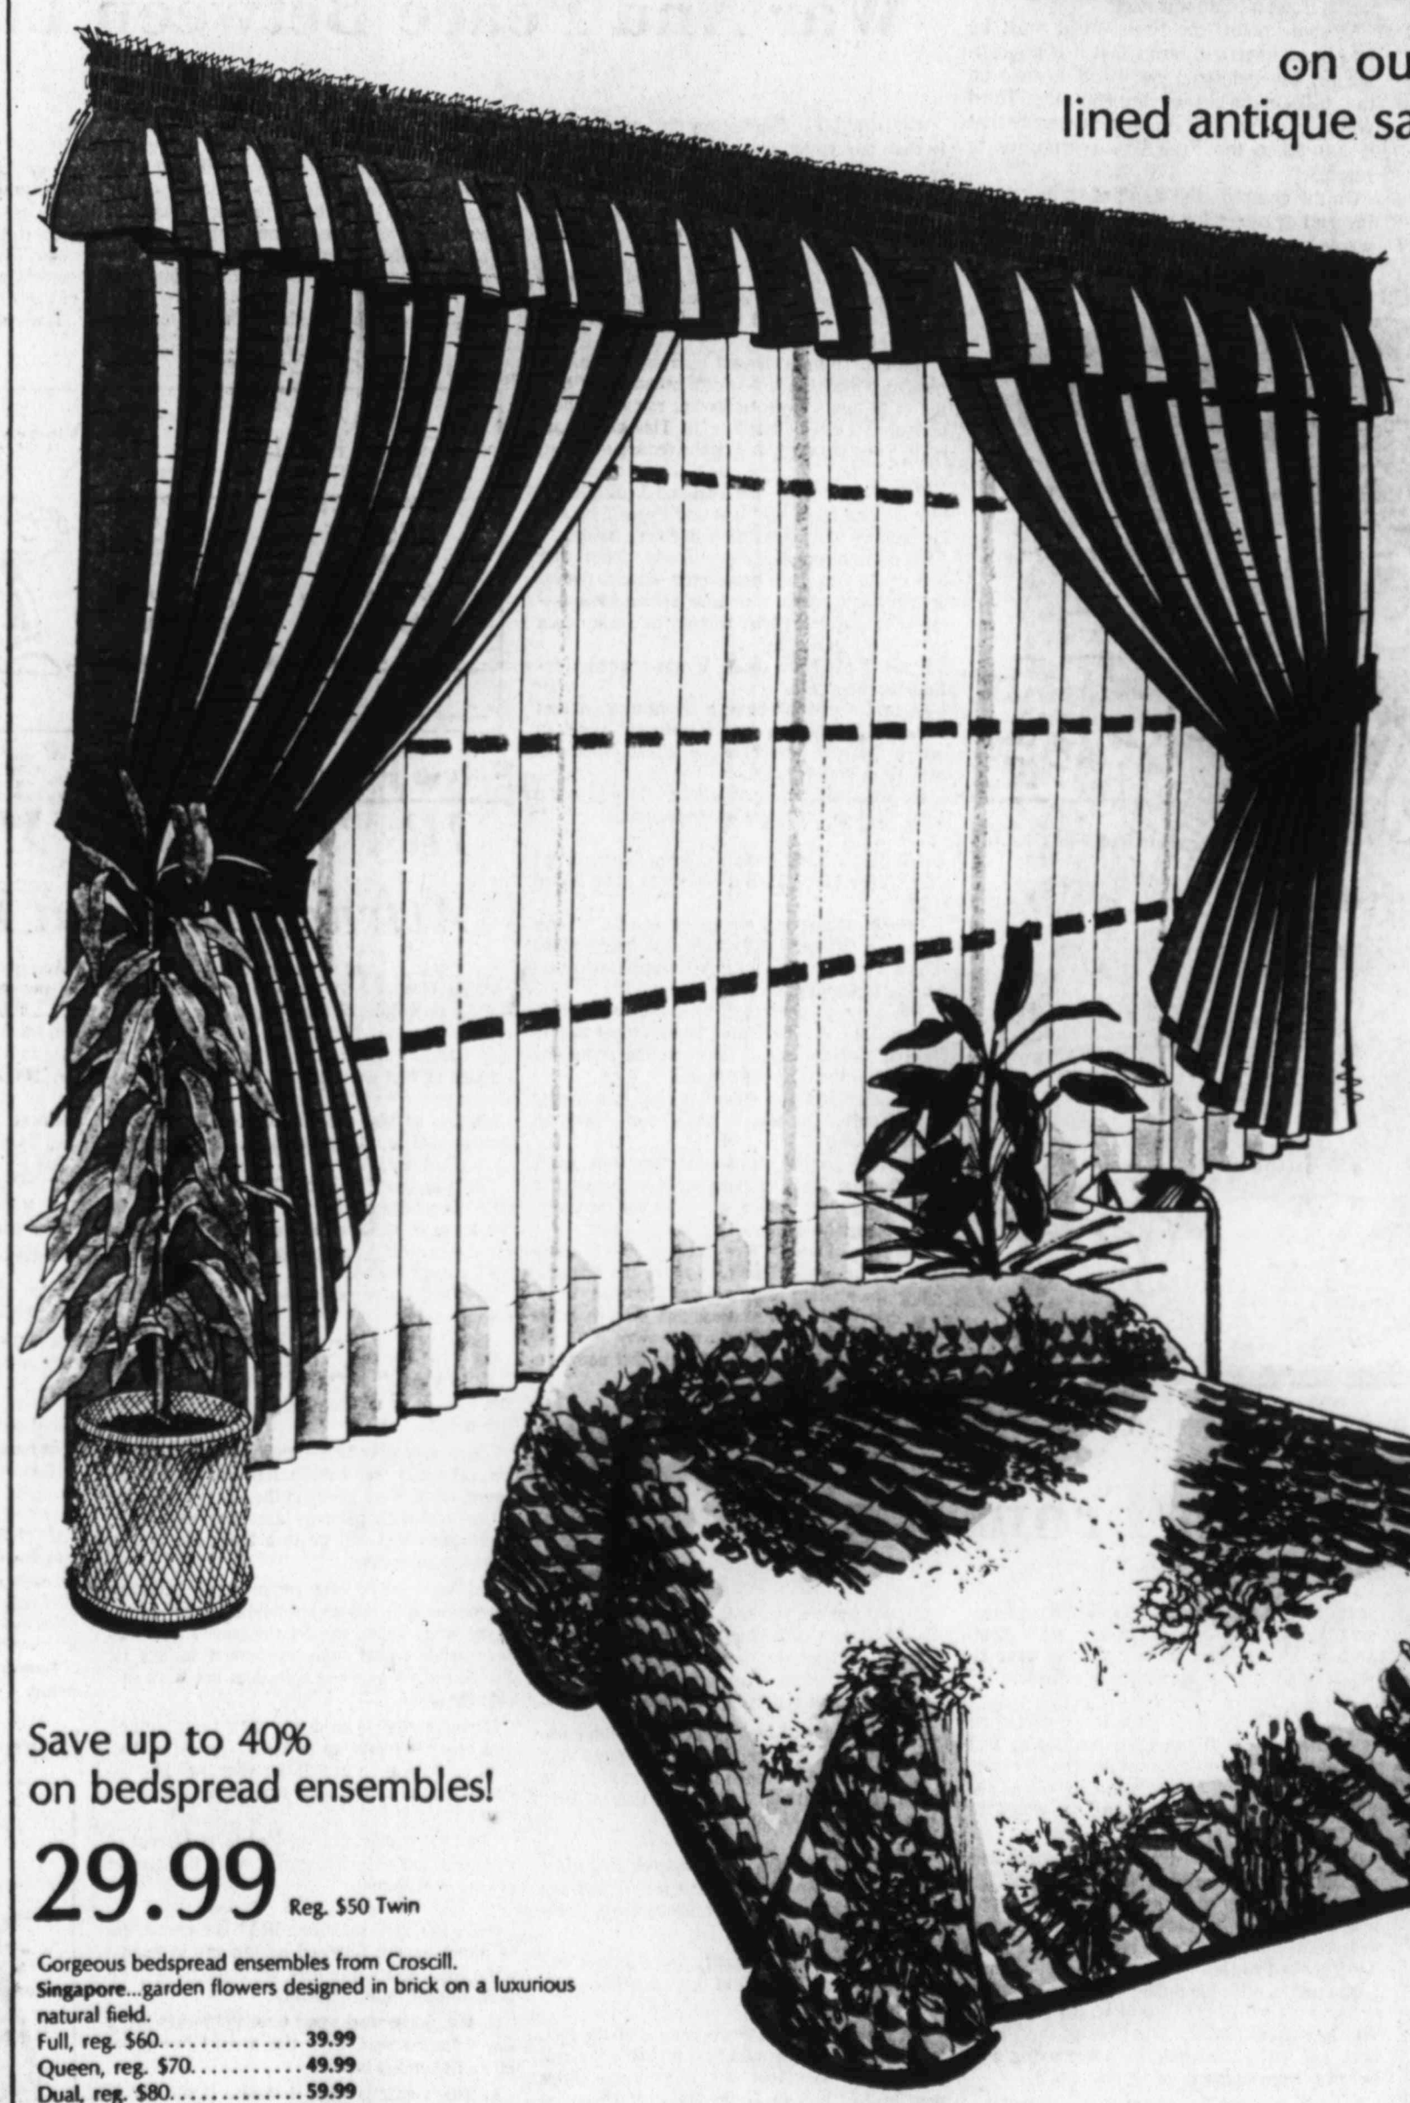

"I would be surprised if it would be a substantive discussion," said spokesman Ken Brown of the State Department.

The 64-year-old monarch of the oil rich nation underwent a double coronary bypass operation Oct. 3. He is reported in satisfactory condition.

Vance, who was scheduled to dedicate a high school at his hometown of Shinnston, W.Va., today, added the Khaled visit to his itinerary Tuesday.

Khaled has settled into lavishly refurbished rooms at the hospital, while about 300 friends, relatives and Saudi officials who accompanied him are renting hotel suites or Cleveland-area homes.

TODAY'S EDITORIAL:

An Oil Gouge With Gusto

THE OPEC Squeeze apparently is going to be drawn even tighter around the Free World's neck, and purse strings.

The OPEC, for those who use oil, is the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries. It is from them that the U.S. alone now buys almost 40 percent of all the crude oil used for fueling our factories, cars and homes.

It also is the OPEC which has jacked up the price of everything from fuel to finished products. Now, the OPEC seems bent on getting further into the economic act.

THE HINT OF "things to come" from the OPEC was given this week in Vienna when the Kuwaiti Oil Minister, Ali Khalifa al-Sabah, chairman of a three-day OPEC seminar, outlined what may be the next objective of the so-called Third World nations.

In effect, it is that the oil producing nations want the industrialized nations to start sharing their know-how and expertise in the manufacture of finished products from petroleum.

This includes everything from gasoline and lubricants to industrial petrochemical products.

THE MAJOR complaint of the oil producing nations for some time has been two-fold.

One is that the industrialized world is offsetting any profits and progress the Third World and OPEC nations might be making by charging higher prices for finished products and goods than the oil profits are bringing in.

The other is that with the devaluation of the U.S. dollar, the oil producers are not getting as much "hard cash" as they envisioned when setting their last price increase.

A boost of "more than five percent" in the overall cost of oil from OPEC has been hinted in the near future.

OFFICIALS IN Europe and the U.S. say they feel the Third World nations would be unable to make the necessary investments to gear up for, say, such things as refineries and petrochemical plants.

Such a move would set up a direct confrontation and spark possible protectionist tariffs if not a trade war itself.

At some point, the Free World must be told in no uncertain terms that it is impossible for the industrialized world to take on the task overnight of bringing the Third World into the same economic category that it has taken the Free World centuries to reach.

On the contrary, the result of further gouging and grasping for money may wreck the whole setup—for everyone.

THE CITY PLANNING and Zoning Commission is on the right track in considering a proposal to regulate the parking of recreational vehicles in residential areas.

Several aborted attempts have been made in that direction before. Owners of the oversized monsters have always nipped the suggestion in the bud.

Safety and aesthetic considerations all are on the side of prohibiting the parking of these vehicles in the streets or in the front-yard or side-yard area, however.

Some would question letting those above a certain size be kept in residential areas at all, but if there's enough room in a back yard—and if it's screened so that the neighbors aren't adversely affected—it might be a good compromise to let them be parked there.

Rights of the neighbors and the public must be given priority consideration, however, in all fairness.

Holmes Alexander:

War And Peace Between Lines

WASHINGTON—Leo Tolstoy died more publicly than any writer since the Reformation when numerous men-of-ideas were beheaded or put to the stake throughout Europe.

His estranged wife Sonya, from whom the 83-year-old patriarch had fled in a temper, kept vigil in a nearby house.

When death came to the celebrated author of "War and Peace," the news was flashed by telegraph around the world. It was Nov. 20, 1910, and 1978 is his 150th birthday.

The Leo Tolstoys' 48-year marriage began as a mismatch between a bearded, womanizing egotist of 34 and a sweet-tempered, romantic, inexperienced social butterfly of 18. This same marriage ended in tawdry and publicized separation.

BUT IN A decade that enclosed Leo's Herculean six-year labor on "War and Peace," he and his countess worked amicably in double harness.

His noted biographer, Henri Troyat, doubts that Leo would ever have persevered without Sonya, or that Sonya would ever have known the blessing of true married bliss without this experience in literary partnership.

It never happened again. It was once-in-a-lifetime for them both.

At first she didn't believe his fitful assertions about undertaking a major historical novel in which the hero would be Fatherland Russia itself. He talked so much.

He was the starter-and-stopper. Troyat would later call him, "this prodigious dilettante."

AT FIRST THE book was going to be called "The Year 1805." Then it was going to be laid in 1825.

"He is writing of Countess So-and-So," Sonya wrote in October, 1863, "who has been talking about Princess Whosit. Insignificant." How grateful she was to find herself wrong.

An "insignificant" tale? Now she called it an "epic." She was fascinated and flattered to find herself and her sister Tanya as the composite models for the winsome heroine.

"I took Sonya and ground her up in a mortar with Tanya," he was to write later, "and out came Natasha."

And the people! No wonder they were quick and familiar, for there was hardly a character in the first section whom she could not recognize, even though he was writing about long ago.

Her special delight was in being able to translate his furious scribbles, to move the marginal amendments into proper place, above all, to fill out the cryptic abbreviations and even to revise sentences that had obviously gone awry.

Years later her son would write that Sonya recopied "War and Peace" seven times.

Publication of the full work, in six volumes in 1869, was everything they'd expected, and what they'd expected was just that—everything. Their masterpiece burst like the conqueror it was upon a startled and welcoming literary world.

For the Tolstoys nothing ever would be the same. Human beings cannot live in perpetual ecstacy.

And yet the pathos of their descent from the heights, especially for Sonya, seems wanton cruelty by the gods which rule human temperaments.

She, the fulfilled wife, sought to induce the ecstasy again. He, the driven genius, could not produce it. Sonya urged him to get on with another "epic." Leo laid out a grand design to repeat his success with huge "Russian" saga in the period of Peter the Great. He just couldn't bring it off.

It was never finished.

Sylvia Porter:

IRA's Looking More Attractive Than Ever

(Third of 10 columns)

STARTING IN '79—only 80 days from now—some provisions of the new tax law will make retirement plans better than ever. Thus, right now could be the ideal time for you to take advantage of your own personal tax shelter to provide for your own future security.

Millions of you are not covered by company pension and profit-sharing plans, Keogh, government plans, etc.

For you, an Individual Retirement Account (IRA) is a bonanza, for you can contribute up to the lesser of $1,500 or 15 percent of your earned income to an IRA and get a current tax deduction for the contribution.

In effect, you're getting a deduction for adding to your savings.

ON TOP OF this, whatever is contributed to your IRA grows 100 percent tax-free. Each year you have more tax-free dollars earning more tax-free dollars.

The money your IRA earns isn't diluted by the tax collector; you have a free and clear compounding of every penny in the account until you retire—and not a penny is taxed until then, when presumably you will be in a lower tax bracket than you are today.

But what about the commonplace situation where one spouse does not hold a job but spends many hours taking care of the house? It is now permissible to set aside retirement savings for the benefit of a spouse who does not work outside the home.

If you're eligible to deduct IRA contributions, you can contribute up to $1,750—an extra $250. You contribute up to $875 for your own IRA account and up to $875 to a separate IRA for your spouse.

The total deduction is limited to 15 percent of compensation and can't exceed twice the smaller of your contributions.

HOW DO YOU set up an IRA? It's simple, easy, quick—and a financial institution can handle it for you. Meantime, here are answers to questions you ask most frequently:

Q. My spouse works part-time and makes just a few dollars a year. Does this mean I cannot set up an IRA in her behalf?

A. That's exactly what it means. If she makes one penny of earned income, you can't set up a spousal IRA.

But you may be in line for an even bigger write-off, for assuming she doesn't become a member of a company retirement plan, she can contribute up to 15 percent of her earned income, or $1,500, whichever is less, to a regular IRA.

So if you both contribute to regular IRAs, it's possible to deduct up to $3,000 on a joint return.

Q. MY SPOUSE doesn't have any earned income but she gets a lot of income from interest and dividends. Can I set up an IRA for her?

A. You certainly can. There's no restriction on the investment income she can receive.

Q. Suppose I set up an IRA in my spouse's behalf this year and she gets a job in '79. What happens to the spousal IRA?

A. No problem. The tax law says the same IRA can be a spousal IRA one year and a regular IRA the next.

Q. What happens to my spouse's IRA if she gets a job with a company that has a retirement plan and she becomes a member?

A. Your spouse's IRA becomes, in effect, a frozen trust. The account balance will be held in abeyance for later distribution.

THE IMPORTANT new tax break for taxpayers with Keogh plans and Individual Retirement Accounts is: You can now make cash contributions after the close of the year and deduct the contribution in the current year.

Payoff: you not only have extra time to figure out your contribution, but also have the use of your money that much longer.

IRA: you have 45 days after the end of the year to make a deductible contribution on your prior year's return.

If you haven't set up an IRA by the end of '78, you can both set up one and contribute to it through Feb. 14 and take a deduction on your 1978 return.

Because of the new law, that deduction will be worth more in 1978 than in 1979.

Tomorrow: If you support a parent in a rest home.

John D. Lofton:

It Looks Different From Inside

WASHINGTON—During the first half of 1975, President Gerald R. Ford was a very busy man. Yet, in addition to his more pressing duties, Ford somehow managed to:

* Meet with soccer superstar Pele in the Rose Garden; to greet Miss America, the Maid of Cotton and the West Virginia Strawberry Queen; to officially receive his 1975 Gold Pass from baseball commissioner Bowie Kuhn;

* To pose for a photo with country singer John Denver; and to walk down memory lane with some of his old Republican congressional cronies who make up the Chowder and Marching Society.

But, alas, there were limits to what a President had time to do. So when Sens. Jesse Helms, R-N.C., and Strom Thurmond, R-S.C., asked Ford if he could meet Alexander Solzhenitsyn on June 30, while the exiled author was in town to address the AFL-CIO, the President said no.

AS WHITE HOUSE press spokesman Ron Nessen explained it on July 1, Ford was "busy," and thus unable to squeeze Solzhenitsyn into his schedule.

When Nessen was asked if Ford thought such a visit might be "diplomatically embarrassing" to the Soviets, the man who promised never to "willingly mislead" the press replied:

"I don't get the feeling that this is a factor. The President has quite a crowded schedule this week." When a reporter suggested Ford could fit anyone into his schedule that he really wanted to see, Nessen declared:

"I don't know of any special reason why there is no meeting...except there is not."

On July 2, when asked once again about the snub, Nessen noted arrogantly: "For image reasons the President does like to have some substance in his meetings. It is not clear what he would gain from meeting with Solzhenitsyn."

ON JULY 3, the New York Times quoted an anonymous White House official as saying that Ford had been advised by the National Security Council (headed by Henry Kissinger) not to see Solzhenitsyn because such a meeting would be "inconsistent with detente."

On July 7, when asked whether Kissinger had nixed the Solzhenitsyn visit, Nessen admitted, for the first time, that there had been "a variety of reasons" why the President was not seeing the exiled Soviet author. Nessen refused to say what Kissinger had advised.

On July 14, with the public outrage continuing to build against Ford's refusal to see Solzhenitsyn, Nessen was asked: Why doesn't the President just invite Solzhenitsyn to a meeting and get away from all this baloney? He replied:

"Where it stands now is that we would be pleased to see him if Solzhenitsyn wants to."

ON JULY 14, in a news conference in Milwaukee, Kissinger said he understood Solzhenitsyn's message to be that the U.S. should "aggressively" pursue a policy to overthrow the Soviet system.

The consequence of such action "would not be acceptable to the American people or to the world," said Dr. Kissinger.

On July 17, angered by Nessen's blatant duplicity, UPI reporter, Helen Thomas, asked:

"Would you say you have not misled us on the whole rationale for...not seeing Solzhenitsyn?"

Nessen: "Helen, no decision here is based on one or two reasons. They are made on a wide range of reasons, and this is just the same."

On July 18, in response to the umpteenth question about Solzhenitsyn, Nessen reiterated that Solzhenitsyn had an "open invitation (to come to the White House) and I anticipate that at some point in his visit...he will come."

IN AN INTERVIEW in Newsweek magazine, published on Aug. 11, 1975, still maintaining the fiction he was too busy to see Solzhenitsyn, President Ford observed:

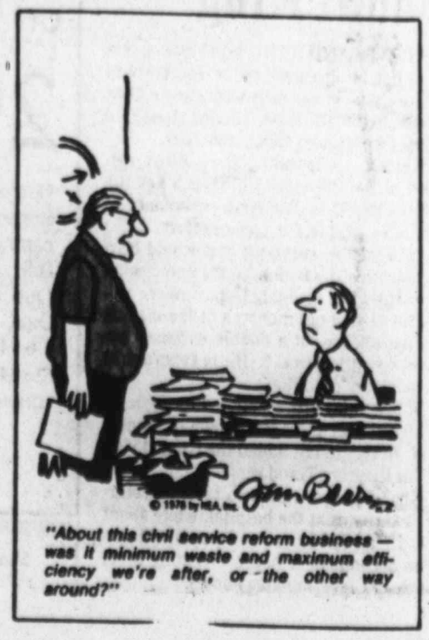

"I want to emphasize the invitation to have him come here is still open. But that could have been a bit tidier handled..."

But now, more than three years after the fact, Ron Nessen tells us what was probably the real reason Ford never met with Solzhenitsyn. In his new book, "It Sure Looks Different From Inside," Nessen writes:

"Grand Prize for calling a spade a spade: to Gerald Ford for referring to Solzhenitsyn in a private meeting as 'a g— horses's a--.' Ford complained the dissident Soviet wanted to visit the White House primarily to publicize books and drum up lecture dates."

Well, it sure does look different from the inside, Ron. And since you've given us this invaluable internal insight, I predict that that Muse of history will differ significantly with Ford as to who the horse's a-- was in this squalid affair.

Mayor's Office Remodeling Costs High

DETROIT (UPI) — A million dollars is not what it used to be — not when it comes to remodeling offices of the city' elected officials.

City Budget Director Walter Stecher originaly estimated it would cost $1 million to renovate and buy new furniture for Mayor Coleman Young's office and those of the city council, city clerk and their staffs.

But architects now say the job will cost about $1.7 million. About $800,000 has been set aside to remodel Young's office and outfitting the other offices would cost an additional $833,200.

"The million was provided," Stecher said. "It's just that the million isn't going to do what we hoped it would do."

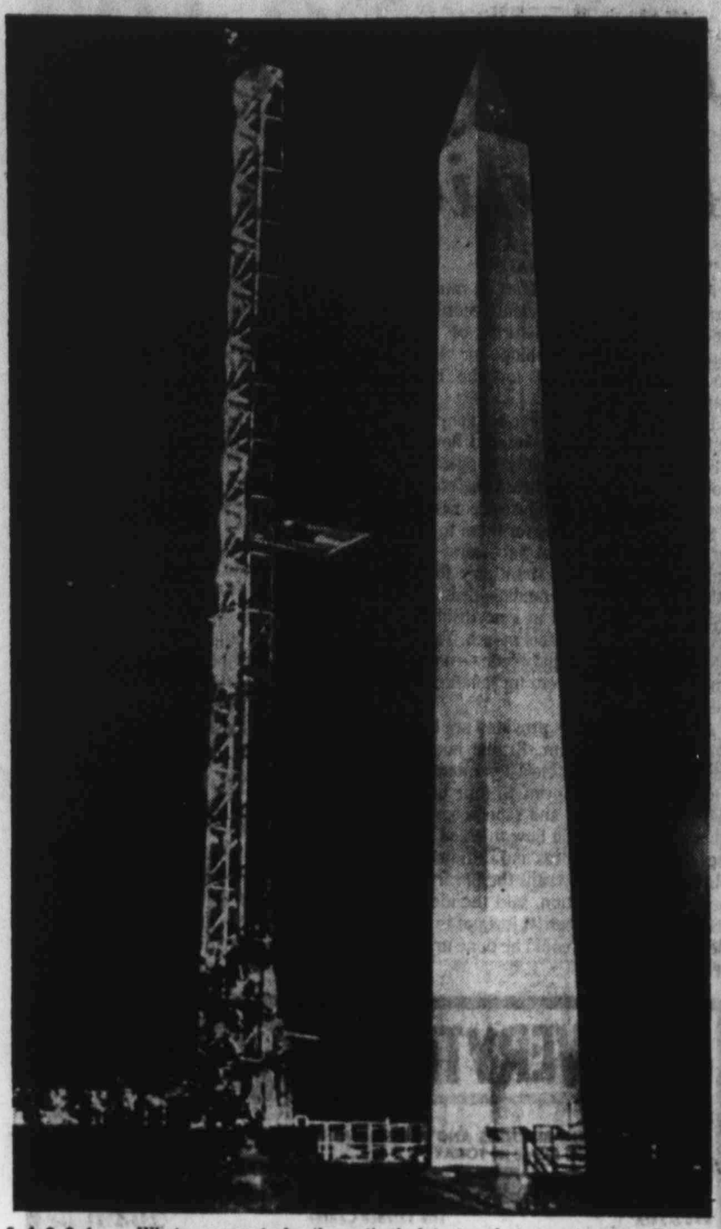

Some council members have said they were "uncomfortable" with the extent of remodeling proposed for their offices.

Young has decided to award the contract for furnishing his offices and the budget and finance offices to the higher of two bidders in order to give the business to a black-owned firm.

The city will pay $23,143 more for the furnishings than it would have under the lower bid.

One of the items which will adorn Young's office is a mohogany inlaid conference table at a cost of $16,443. The lower bid was for $14,873. The mayor's desk will cost $4,150 instead of $3,705.

Medical Funding Aids Insurance

By LARGENT PARKS JR.

QUESTION — Do you think the federal government will someday take over the insurance business? Social Security and Medicare seem to be heading us in that direction.

ANSWER — Consider the effect of Social Security on the life insurance industry. People predicted the 1934 Social Security Act would kill the life insurance business. Instead, life insurance began its biggest boom in sales and growth in the 1930s.

Insurance Adviser

The introduction of Medicare in 1966 gave birth to a new branch of the industry, Medicare supplement insurance. Many private health insurance plans have come on the scene as a result of Medicare.

And the fast-rising medical costs that accompanied Medicare have caused people over and under 65 to buy more and larger private health insurance plans.

History seems to indicate that when the government gets involved in insurance, the private sector of the industry grows and prospers.

QUESTION — Automobile insurance is becoming so expensive that many people may no longer be able to buy it. What is going to happen to the automobile insurance companies?

ANSWER — Several signs have recently suggested a reverse trend in auto insurance costs:

—One large auto insurer announced record-breking dividends for its policyowners. The dividends amounted to more than a 13 percent return, tantamount to a 13 percent decrease in premiums.

—Several major auto insurers are offering more and larger discounts on their policies. These discounts are like rate reductions for those who qualify.

QUESTION — Does insurance offer good career opportunities for recent college graduates?

ANSWER — All phases of the insurance business are expanding, offering many challenging opportunities to new graduates and people considering career changes. Personnel managers and executive recruiters see no end to the industry's high rates of growth and hiring.

Personnel needs range from salespeople to actuaries (people with math training) to claims and loss control engineers (people with degrees in the "hard" sciences) to computer and data processing specialists. Always in high demand are underwriters, who decide which risks to accept and which rates to charge.

Sales management people are also in great demand. Many insurance companies are recruiting salespeople and sales managers from other industries and retraining them for insurance.

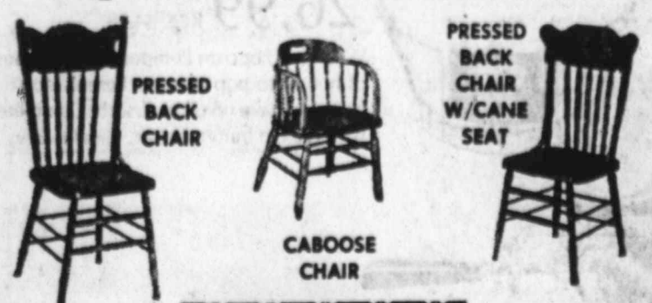

QUESTION — In going through my elderly parents' papers, I found a paid-up life insurance policy. I never heard of the insurance company and it is not listed in the phone book. Can you help me?

ANSWER — Chances are the company was bought by or merged with another. To find the current carrier, write to the insurance department of the state where the original company was housed.

Include in your letter the form number, policy number and other particulars. The insurance department can investigate and advise you which insurance company now stands behind the policy.

You and the Law

Presented by the State Bar of Texas

Q: My son is staying with friends out of state this summer. Does my ex-husband have a right to withhold child support payments because my son is not living with me during the summer?

A: The child support payments set in a divorce decree must be obeyed as long as the court order is in effect. Neither parent has a right to change the order without the approval of the court. Anyone making court-ordered child support payments who intentionally witholds payment, without first requesting the court to modify the order, risks being punished for contempt of court.

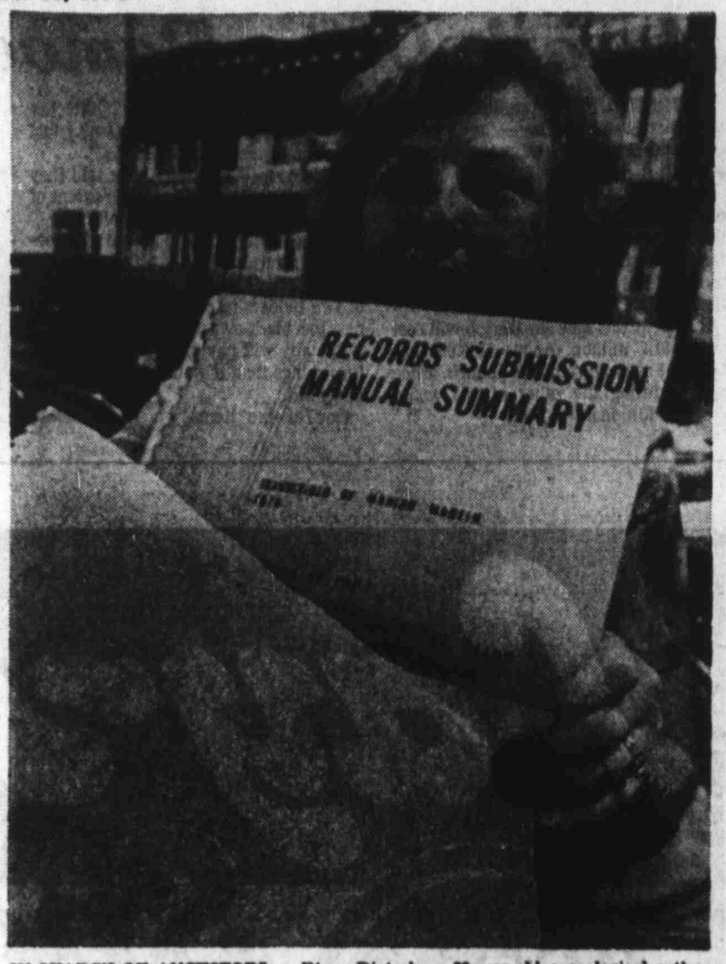

Q: My aunt died three years ago and left several hundred dollars in a safety deposit box. She left no will and her sister asked me to help her get access to the safety deposit box because she's too ill to travel. A lawyer told me we'd have to go to court, even though there is no other relative who wants the money. I can't understand why we have to go to court to get the money.

A: State laws concerning the estates of persons who die without a will provide very strict requirements designed to protect the interest of all relatives and other persons involved. Before the bank can release the funds, you must submit proof of death, an affidavit of heir-ship, and an order of the probate court.

Q: Our daughter in junior high school is threatening to move into an apartment with several other girls as soon as she reaches the age of 17. She keeps insisting that when she reaches the age of 17, she is no longer a minor an therefore cannot be held against her wishes. At what age is she no longer responsible to the rules of the home?

A: Juvenile court jurisdiction is limited to acts committed by children after they are 10 years old and prior to their 17th birthday. After they reach the age of 17, there is no law which gives a parent authority to force a child to return to their home unless the child already was under the control of the juvenile court.

Library Helps Handicapped

By PEGGY WALSH

ATLANTA (AP) — Sitting in musty libraries mulling over ancient records has become a favorite pasttime of many Americans. But searching for family roots can be difficult for the handicapped.

Diane Dieterle, a 39-year-old genealogical enthusiast, often wondered how the blind, deaf and physically handicapped could establish family ties using conventional books and courthouse records.

So she designed a way for them to satisfy their curiosity about ancestors — it's called the Genealogical Library for the Blind and Physically Handicapped.

The library, housed in a northside office complex, opened this month. The decor is bright — blue and green — a warm and inviting atmosphere for handicapped genealogists.

Among the services provided are books with extra large print, Braille books, a machine that uses a television monitor to enlarge the size of print to four or five inches on a screen, and tape recordings giving instructions on how to trace families through old records and cemeteries.

Mrs. Dieterle, who runs the library as a non-profit organization, said the idea for the facility came when "I just got to wondering if genealogy could be done in a different way.

"I got to thinking that blind and deaf people must want to know about their roots as much as sighted people or people who can hear," she said.

"We've been corresponding with about 200 people around the country and in Canada for the past 2½ years who have some kind of handicap and still want to know how to find their ancestors," she said.

"At first we operated out of my house and then out of a friend's basement. Now we're finally getting into a place where people can come and use the information we have."

Mrs. Dieterle also is in the process of supervising a genealogical television series for the deaf with the University of Georgia.

"My friend Anna Rizzaldi of the Atlanta Area School for the Deaf is doing the sign language," she said.

"The series is a beginner course with charts, how to write to relatives, what you can find in a courthouse and what kind of notes you need to keep," she said.

The library, which was built with private donations and is staffed by volunteers, is just the first step in what Mrs. Dieterle hopes will be a nationwide network of similar facilities.

San Antonio Offers Motorcycle Program

SAN ANTONIO (UPI) — On Saturday mornings some local motorists are startled to encounter Julio Esparza herding a half-dozen motorcycle riders in bright orange vests proclaiming "student drivers" buzzing down city streets.

Esparza, head of the driver's education program for Edgewood School District, and his two associates are donating their time to probably the first motorcycle safety course in Texas in which the riders are trained on city streets.

Few can disagree that there is a need for motorcycle safety programs, especially with statistics that indicate motorcycle fatalities in Texas increased from 165 to 240 last year. San Antonio has reported 469 motorcycle accidents through August, with 81 percent of them resulting in injuries or death.

The progress of Esparza's class may determine whether the Edgewood school board decides to make it a full-time program.

"I'm sure some of the other districts will take the lead also. But I wish they would hurry up and do something," said Esparza, who already has put 22 students through the 23-hour course designed by the Motorcycle Safety Foundation, headquartered in Maryland and funded by the five major manufacturers of motorcycles.

The soaring rate of injuries and deaths on motorcycles — much of it attributed to repeal of the helmet law — has led to skyrocketing insurance rates on the two-wheelers in Texas, and the high rates are working against starting programs such as the Edgewood experiment, according to Ed Johnson, an official of the Traffic Safety Center at San Antonio College.

One local dealer bought collision insurance recently on a 500-cc Honda and it cost him $280 for $250 deductible insurance, compared to $120 for his automobile. "Kind of ridiculous," he said.

Johnson and Esparza went to Austin last month in an effort to get the motorcycle safety course certified and to convince the State Insurance Board to grant the same 10 percent insurance reduction to cyclists who pass the course as is afforded motorists who complete driver's education instruction.

Johnson said Ned Price, acting chairman of the board, instructed his staff to devise a rate structure to ease costs for educational safety programs, reducing costs for providing such instruction.

"I think we'll get it. It's the motorcycle equivalent of driver's education," Johnson said of the 11 classroom hours and 12 riding hours of instruction.

"We teach them the critical things about riding a motorcycle. We teach them to avoid emergencies. We teach them emergency maneuvers. They learn how to perform them on a range, how to go over trash on a road, how to make a sudden lane change without spilling yourself."

"I'm sure if the insurance companies took a good, hard look at our program, they'd be more than willing to honor that (rate reduction). As it is right now, they just don't," Esparza said.

About 140 San Antonio motorcyclists, ranging in age from 14 to 50, went through the standardized safety course at San Antonio College earlier this year, while Johnson's department refined its teaching methods. Then the Traffic Safety Center sponsored instructor training classes to provide qualified teachers who are available to teach the course for school districts and other organizations or safety groups.

Local motorcycle dealers donated the cycles for both Johnson's and Esparza's classes, just as automobile dealers furnish cars for driver's education.

The San Antonio College riding instruction was done at Kelly Air Force Base but Esparza went to the city to take the students — many of them novices — out on the street for their training, with one instructor riding in front, one instructor behind and six trainees in the middle.

FDA Official Wanted Louisiana Waters Closed

By CYRIL GUERRERA

NEW ORLEANS (UPI) — A federal food official says although tests showed no presence of cholera bacteria in live crabs from southwest Louisiana waters that might be contaminated, the state still should have closed the areas to seafood production.

"We are trying our best to protect the consumer and in a situation like this the most effective action can be taken by the states themselves," Martin Goldstein, Food and Drug Administration acting district director, said.

When state officials refused the FDA closure recommendation, the federal agency banned interstate shipments of live crabs from selected waters and instituted an airport surveillance program to enforce the ban.

Scientists and medical researchers at federal laboratories in Cincinnati and Atlanta conducted tests during the weekend on crabs from various Louisiana spots in an effort to determine whether the seafood caused 11 cases of cholera in the southwest portion of the state in recent weeks.

However, the absence of new cases the previous few days might have meant the outbreak ran its course before its origin was traced according to Goldstein. The patients in the 11 known cases all recovered.

Airport inspection was an effective tactic to enforce the interstate ban because air transportation was the only practical method to get live crabs to Northeastern markets, Goldstein said.

"The nature of the commodity is such — live crabs sold as live — they don't stay live very long shipping them by truck," Goldstein said. "It's just not practical."

But he said he would have preferred a water closure order by the state.

"That would resolve the problem of any potential contaminated crabs getting into consumer channels while (scientists could continue) trying to isolate the problem and resolving it, he said."

The northeastern region was the only major market for live Louisiana crabs, Goldstein said. Buyers in other Gulf Coast states can purchase crabs from their own areas and seafood demand is not large enough in states that would be close enough for shipment by truck.

Dr. William Cherry, Louisiana Secretary of Health and Human Resources, accused the FDA of overreacting by banning the interstate shipments. He said even though those stricken with the illness had eaten crabs, water supplies, improper cooking or contaminated containers might have caused the sickness.

Goldstein acknowledged that Cherry was correct about the absence of cholera bacteria from live crabs.

"The crab samples that have been sampled by the Center for Diseast Control have not been shown to be positive (for cholera), he's right on that account," Goldstein said. "The Food and Drug Administration is looking at the epidemiological data and just what decision it will make right now I don't know."

He said he could not predict how soon the scientists might reach conclusions.

He also said the outbreak could not be termed an epidemic.

"There have not been that many cases and they have not been that widespread," he said.

Navy Care Packages Going To Convict

MEXICALI, Mexico (AP) — Thanks to the U.S. Navy, life isn't too bad for convicted murderer Philip Sumarkoff, who is serving a 25-year sentence in the municipal jail here.

Every month, Sumarkoff, 35, sends a shopping list to the 11th Naval District in San Diego. A few days later, a shopping cart loaded with 70 pounds of meat and vegetables, as well as cigarettes, typing paper and other items, arrives at his prison apartment.

Also on the cart are six cases of military C-rations, enough for 2½ full dinners every day for a month, which Sumarkoff says he shares with his common-law wife and family.

The Navy has provided Sumarkoff about $10,500 worth of food and supplies over the past few years because technically he is still on active duty.

The Los Angeles native is entitled to the special treatment because Defense Department regulations require the Navy to provide for its men in foreign prisons, said Capt. Genius Zitani, chief legal officer for the 11th Naval District.

Practically the only thing Sumarkoff doesn't get is his Navy salary. He gets free dental, medical and eye care — and a Navy-provided attorney, at a cost of $7,500.

The chief petty officer had been absent without leave for six months and declared a deserter when he was arrested in Mexico in 1969. A Tijuana court convicted him of killing a 72-year-old retired San Diego deputy sheriff.

He is one of 51 men in the Navy and Marine Corps who is serving a long-term sentence in a foreign jail. Forty-one are in Japan, and Sumarkoff is one of two in Mexico. The other, confined in Tijuana, receives daily box lunches because he has no cooking facilities.

Interviewed in his air-conditioned private jail apartment, Sumarkoff said the Navy's treatment of him has improved markedly since a lawyer was assigned to his case two years ago.

"The Navy almost disavowed the fact that I was in the Navy at the beginning," he said. "They gave me a little food but nothing like what I am getting now.

"I am the Navy's constitutional, moral responsibility. The 11 years I was a Navy man, I defended my country. You know, 'esprit de corps' and all that stuff."

Sumarkoff is now appealing his conviction to the Supreme Court of Mexico. If his appeal fails, the Navy could be supporting him for at least another 16 years.

When he finishes his time in Mexicali, he must stand trial in the Mexican state of Nayarit, where he is accused of killing two other persons. His lawyer said the Navy is prepared to defend Sumarkoff in that case, too.

If he wins, he will probably be brought back to the United States, tried as a deserter and discharged.

Swedish Low In Reading

STOCKHOLM, Sweden (UPI) — One million Swedes cannot read or write well enough to cope with Sweden's red tape bureaucracy, according to a university study of literacy among adults and students.

"Every year 20 percent of ninth grade school students leave with less than the reading ability required at the sixth grade. They don't have the minimum reading ability required to function in society," said Eve Malmquist, who headed the investigation.

In a literacy test using three standard forms from the health insurance department and the post office, 83 percent of Swedes of all ages could not understand the words used.

"It's not a question of illiteracy in the usual sense of the word — people can read the spelling of the words but they don't understand what they mean," Ulla-Britt Persson, another member of the literacy project, said.

The Swedish school system was blamed by the study for failing to help students who are bad readers.

"Students are uneasy, they go from one classroom to the next and never have the same teacher for very long, and Swedish language teaching is too theoretical," Persson said.

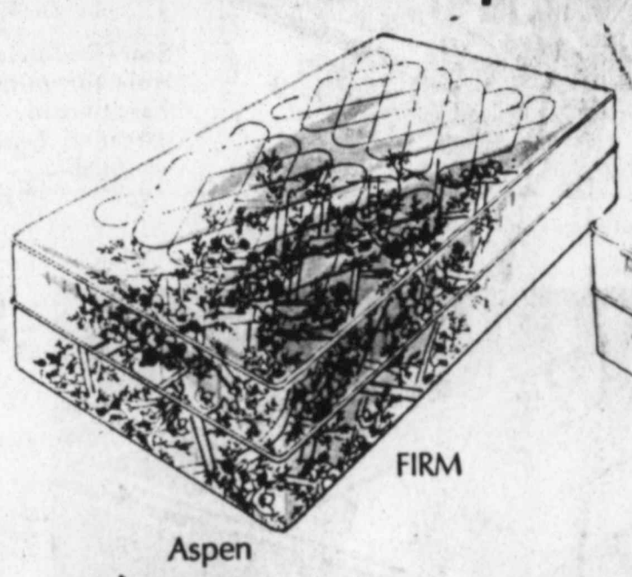

FISH EXPORTS

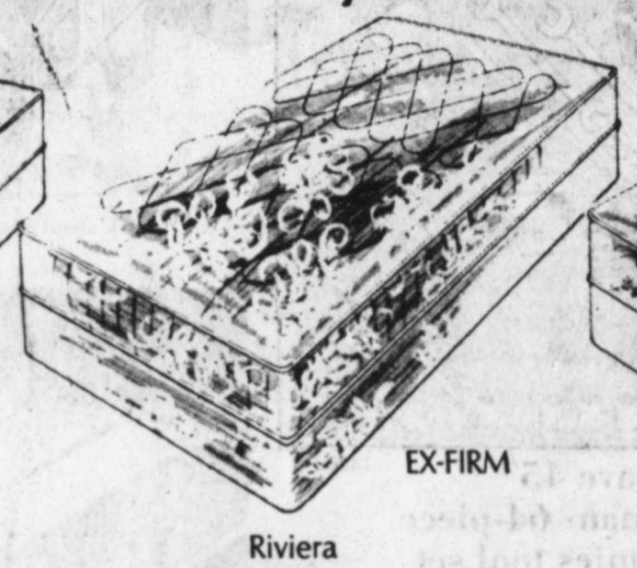

Argentina exported 12,848 tons of fish, worth $12.1 million, to the United States last year, according to government sources. It was the largest such export in the past five years, with more than 80 percent of the shipments consisting of fresh and frozen fish.

Czechs, Americans Still At Odds

PRAGUE, Czechoslovakia (AP) — The United States has resolved post-World War II problems with most other East bloc nations but those it has with Czechoslovakia remain in deadlock.

Seven American presidents and 30 years after the 1948 Communist takeover of Czechoslovakia, Prague and Washington are still at odds over confiscated U.S. property and 18.4 tons of Czechoslovak gold.

"It is a waste of time, a waste of effort, a waste of money, a waste of everything," Foreign Minister Jarostav Zantovsky, a former ambassador to Washington, says of past efforts to settle the disputes and get the gold back home.

The gold, worth about $118 million at current market prices, was Czechoslovakian government property taken from the country by the Germans during World War II.

It was found at Aachen after the war, in what is now West Germany, and placed under American, British and French control.

Only the Americans object to returning it, saying Prague first has to come up with a better settlement of postwar claims, including $72 million worth of nationalized property once owned by U.S. citizens.

There are other complications, including an $18 million steel mill ordered and paid for by the non-Communist government in Prague in 1947. After 1948, the Americans kept the money and sold the mill to Argentina.

Twice, negotiators for both governments have worked out agreements and initialed them. Neither agreement got through the U.S. Congress. Senate Finance Committee Chairman Russell B. Long, D-La., is credited with almost single-handedly torpedoing the last one, in 1977, telling the State Department to "have your Santa Claus suits at home" before coming back with another.

Eleven months of negotiations went into the last agreement, and Prague's offer to pay off old claims at 42 cents to the dollar was higher than other agreements approved with Bulgaria, Poland and Hungary.

Since then, nothing has happened. The 1977 setback stunted development of cultural and scientific programs between the two countries and left Czechoslovakia's ailing economy without both the gold and a favored trading status with the United States.

Although the last agreement foundered largely on cash issues, the issue has since become snarled in East-West disagreements over human rights.

Thousands of Czechoslovaks are still suffering from or recovering from political and career upsets that came with the 1968 Warsaw Pact invasion to put an end to the liberal "Prague Spring" government of Alexander Dubcek. Government crackdowns on critics have made Czech dissidents a prime issue among Western politicians.

"The human rights debate, where the United States and Czechoslovakia are of utterly divergent viewpoints, has caused the area of bilateral relations to be largely shelved," says one U.S. diplomat who asked to remain anonymous.

But the same American says there is a chance that progress in Soviet-American arms limitations might help get things moving again.

The Czechoslovaks, meanwhile, say they've grown wary of even opening talks without some assurances that there wouldn't be another last-minute collapse.

"What we are asking for are guarantees and no one is giving us guarantees," says Foreign Minister Zantovsky.

"Nobody can guarantee Congress will do anything," says an U.S. embassy official, who also demanded anonymity. U.S. law requires one branch of government to negotiate such agreements and another to review the results.

Zantovsky says that in spite of the latest property agreement collapse, he wrote the Americans a note suggesting an approach to going ahead and working out an implementation agreement on the stalled issue of cultural and scientific exchanges.

"I do not have a reply," he said in an interview with The Associated Press. "The note is now three-fourths of a year old."

One effect is that instead of presenting its own cultural offerings in Czechoslovakia, the U.S. Embassy in Prague can do little more than offer help to commercially sponsored touring groups and entertainers.

Some exchanges take place, some don't, and the Embassy cultural officer, Bruce R. Koch, says there are no signs of new cooperation from up above the castle.

"They tell us they don't see how things can go any further without that implementation letter."

Panel Studies Wiretap Rules

WASHINGTON (AP) — Government investigators would have to get court orders in almost all cases before tapping the telephones of foreign agents in the United States under an agreement by a congressional conference committee.

Critics claim the bill would hamper U.S. intelligence agencies. Supporters say it properly balances security and civil liberties.

The compromise bill also applies to other forms of electronic surveillance such as the "bugging" of foreign embassies.

It must be approved by both the House and Senate before being sent to President Carter, who has sought the legislation.

Under the compromise, a special court appointed by the chief justice of the Supreme Court would issue the wiretap warrants.

The chief justice is to consult with the chief judges of the various judicial circuits before making appointments to the new court, which would sit in Washington.

The Supreme Court has ruled that warrants are required for electronic surveillance in crime and domestic security cases, but has not ruled on whether they also are required for the gathering of domestic intelligence.

U.S. Media Warned About Terrorist Coverage

TULSA, Okla. (UPI) — Journalists must give more consideration on how their coverage of terrorist activity can incite similar incidents, according to the director of the Aberrant Research Center in Dallas.

Dr. David G. Hubbard, author of the book "Skyjacking," Wednesday said he believes in a free press but not that the First Amendment guarantee of a free press came "straight from God."

"The media is guilty of pandering to sick appetites," Hubbard told a workshop sponsored by the National Conference of Christians and Jews. He said terrorists are "great students of the media" and many keep clipping books several inches thick.

Hubbard said journalists should research the problems caused in coverage of terrorist activity and communicate their findings through such publications as "The Quill," the magazine published by the Society of Professional Journalists, Sigma Delta Chi.

"One does not find schools of journalism studying this problem," he said. "We felt the industry should study the issue themselves."

He said if journalists do not research the problem they "might bring down the very government that wrote the First Amendment behind which you work."

Dr. Stephen Sloan, a professor at the University of Oklahoma and director of the Study Group on International Terrorism, said terrorist activity is "a form of theater" and is "geared at the people watching." He said guidelines for coverage of terrorist events are "very good on paper" but tend to "go down the drain" when put into practice.

He said an adversary relationship exists between media covering a terrorist event and the police officers involved apprehending lawbreakers. He said he is not worried about the seasoned police officer or police reporter, but is concerned about the "young stringer who is going to make his reputation" and the young officer "who has seen three programs of 'Police Story' and one of 'S.W.A.T.'"

Justice Robert Simms of the Oklahoma Supreme Court said reporters should show restraint in covering terrorist activity but any restrictions on the coverage "must be self-imposed." He said reporters should make their stories accurate but make sure they are non-inflammatory.

Bernie Judge, city editor of the Chicago Tribune, presented a slide presentation to show how his newspaper covered the story of a small group of Nazis who wanted to march on the predominantly-Jewish community of Skokie, Ill.

"You notice most of the stories on the Skokie march were on the inside — not on page one," he said. He said the newspaper refused to use pictures or quotes which might stir the emotions of its readers.

Judge said the story might have received even less coverage if the residents of Skokie had not taken their fight to stop the Nazi march to court, where it became a constitutional issue.

Town Wants To Borrow Policeman

WHITE DEER (UPI) — The municipal money situation is a bit tight in White Deer and city fathers need a loan — but not a financial loan.

What they're after — on a part-time basis — is half the police force of another town. But Panhandle, 14 miles to the southwest, has only two officers itself.

Mayor Virgil James, mayor of the town of 1,200, says he needs part-time help controlling speeding motorists and vandals. The city's last municipal lawman was a night watchman who rattled doors, James says. More recently, a single deputy was shared by the city and Carson County, but that practice has ended.

James has ample reason to complain. Without a lawman, White Deer can't seem to get any respect.

Sometime ago an inscrutable vandal fired a large-caliber slug into the city's water tank. Water spewed down on the street a half block away, James said.

Big rigs still stop alongside "no parking" signs, James says, and a break-in at the city swimming pool might not have been cleared up at all if the burglar had not left his wallet behind.

James traces part of White Deer's problems to the Texas Railroad Commission.

"It already has cost us $62,000 just to buy equipment to cathodize our gas system. This is to protect the pipes against rust, as required by the Texas Railroad Commission," he says.

Now the town needs a new firetruck, James says, and the two outlays could run to $100,000.

James says another problem is speeding motorists zooming down U.S. 60.

Department of Public Safety troopers help control speeders some, James said, but the agency cannot devote a single officer to White Deer.

But if the community can just get one policeman, speeders may be making cash contributions to town coffers again. When the deputy gave up his duties as the town's only lawman, a $2,900 radar unit was left behind.

James says a part-time officer would be paid from a general fund, but to outfit a full-time officer — with car, radio and other equipment — could cost thousands.

James and councilman Dean Wyatt went to a Panhandle City Council meeting Sept. 22 and asked for the shared officer.

Panhandle policemen already work an average of 55 hours a week in their own hometown and leaders there are considering the White Deer request carefully.

'Skycycle' Maker Building Rocket

SARATOGA, Calif. (AP) — The man who designed the "Skycycle" used by daredevil Evel Knievel in his unsuccessful jump across the Snake River Canyon four years ago now says he is working on a homemade rocket to put a man in space.

If he does it, engineer Bob Truax said he hopes to put space flight into the barnstorming business by selling rides at $10,000 a ticket.

He says the 24-foot rocket taking shape in his backyard could be ready to launch in 18-months, if he can get the financial backing. Truax' "astronaut" is Martin Yahn, 31, of San Jose, an ex-paratrooper who has already sold 300 T-shirts promoting himself as a spaceman.

Truax said most of the rocket's parts are space industry castoffs.

Brock Blames Demos For Financial Woes

BOSTON (AP) — Runaway federal spending perpetuated by Democrats in Congress has made a "new poor" of the middle class, says Republican National Chairman William Brock.

Brock, in Massachusetts to stump for GOP congressional candidates, said Democratic congressmen care only for the "pride of authorship" of new programs, not about the programs' effectiveness. "Inflation has turned the middle class into the new poor," he said. "We do not have the self-discipline in government that you would have in your home."

Businessmen Irritated By Government Actions

BY JOHN CUNNIFF

NEW YORK (AP) — With so many people today irritated about so many things, the cold fury of those with specialized, limited-interest gripes gets relatively little attention.

Businessmen generally have many sources of irritation, especially with Washington, but two of their complaints have have not been widely expressed because, simply, they are nearly speechless with frustration:

1. About elected officials, who seem constantly to seek higher pay and fringe benefits for themselves, lecturing executives on what corporate perquisites they should be ashamed to accept.

2. About the administration, which runs huge, inflation-producing budget deficits, telling them they will have to do more to control inflation, even if it means accepting some form of official restraints.

George Meany, meanwhile, is in a lather about the ingratitude of big business which, he says, has been seeking to ruin the union movement instead of acclaiming unions for their defense of free enterprise.

"It is proper to ask some questions about the role of the captains of American industry," Meany commented in an article in the "American Federationist," an official AFL-CIO publication.

Analysis

He described the captains as "those who pretend to be defenders of free enterprise, but who are seeking to destroy a labor movement that has always defended free enterprise."

Some individual investors think they are being ruined too. And some presidents of so-called second-and third-tier companies — big concerns, but not the biggest — join them in their indignation.

They are upset about some of the big institutional investors, such as insurers, pension and mutual funds, and bank-administered trusts.

Some of these institutions have long followed a conservative policy of investing only in the top 50 or 100 companies, thus denying smaller companies the capital they need to grow.

Lately, these institutions have become even more timid. Or so it is said. At any rate, some of them are keeping scores of millions of dollars in cash, or in bonds or other fixed-income securities.

If invested in stocks, individual investors say, that money could give a giant thrust to the market. Since it isn't, the market can't seem to generate momentum. It does, however, generate frustration and wrath.

Economists are sore about some of the data they get from Washington. They say, for example, that jobless figures are inaccurate and could be adversely affecting government policy decisions.

As Markely Roberts, AFL-CIO economist, puts it: "Good economic policy and good social policy depend on good statistics." He maintains the jobless percentages are consistently understated.

Many other economists think it's just the reverse, that the number of unemployed is really much lower than the figure reported by government statisticians. One of them is Prof. Peter Gutmann of Baruch College.

Gutmann says August unemployment was really 4.5 percent rather than 5.9 percent, because it includes those seeking part-time rather than full-time jobs, some actually employed, and some who don't want to work.

Consumers, of course, remain in a state of rage, even if they have grown weary of venting their emotions publicly.

They are irritated by promises from Washington to do something about inflation, that are followed by more promises to do something about inflation, but which result in nothing being done about inflation.

And they are irritated by lenders. Always wary of the banker's cold hand, even when told his heart is warm with charity, the indignance of some loan applicants of late can be measured by a thermometer

These are the people lured by advertisements of their friendly branch bank or loan association into applying for a home mortgage, and then being asked to put 40 percent down. It's happening in some areas.

We will never run out of things to complain about. Oil, gas and coal to heat our homes perhaps, but never the complaints that fuel our tempers.

Japan Sees U.S. Stand As Bluff

By ANDREW HORVAT

TOKYO (AP) — There is a tendency in Japan to view protectionism in the United States as part of a bluff in a poker game, Assistant Secretary of Commerce Frank A. Weil said today.

"To some extent the Japanese think they're playing poker with us and I think that's very dangerous," Weil told reporters in a meeting in his Tokyo hotel room, across the street from the U.S. Embassy.

"There is a tendency in Japan to underestimate the seriousness of the protectionist tide in the United States," Weil said. "The Japanese don't think Americans are foolish enough to do something like (exclude exports), because they've heard intelligent Americans tell them that doing so would mean economic suicide."

"They (the Japanese) are damn good poker players," said Weil.

The assistant commerce secretary, in Tokyo accompanying a 138-member export development mission, said the trend is not so evident in government circles but that leaving Tokyo, "I was astonished to hear some responsible Japanese businessmen say, 'why should we buy manufactured goods from abroad when we can make everything here.'"

Weil said, "It struck me they haven't the faintest idea how those words fall on American ears."

The assistant commerce secretary assessed for reporters some of the successes and failures of the two-week export development mission scheduled to wind up Friday.

The mission was aimed at stimulating U.S. exports to Japan. The huge Japanese surplus in trade between the two countries has been a major cause of the slide of the dollar in foreign exchange markets.

Weil was reluctant to talk about successes in terms of dollars but he was optimistic that in the near future business deals would come out of the mission.

On the minus side, Weil conceded that he had been able to make little headway in removing barriers against foreign firms in bidding for lucrative government contracts.

Weil said he noted a "Catch 22" response from one government agency which was reluctant to disclose specifications to a would-be U.S. supplier. The agency told the American firm on the mission to submit the specifications of its products instead, Weil said.

Weil said he had heard that a subsidiary of the Japanese telephone company turned down an offer from Eastman Kodak Corporation because "they said they already had four suppliers and they did not want another."

"When this sort of thing is done to a company as obviously competent as Kodak we have a problem," Weil said.

Italian Scholar Fined For Stealing Books

OXFORD, England (AP) — An Italian scholar who said he loved the smell of old books has been fined $8,000 and given a one-year suspended jail sentence for stealing $50,000 worth of rare editions from Oxford's Bodleian Library.

Bruno Pagono, 36, a high school teacher and university lecturer from Milan, admitted stealing the books. He had doing research on Italian literature.

Magistrates heard Monday that Pagono was caught red-handed and when confronted, told police: "I love old books, the smell of the books made me want to take them. I know that may sound ridiculous, but people who love old books will understand."

Environmental Costs Run Into Billions Of Dollars

By EDWARD K. DeLONG

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Environmentalism has mellowed and joined the establishment since the radical rhetoric of Earth Day, but the movement is flexing a bigger muscle than ever before.

The new look — legal briefs instead of street protests, lobbyists instead of marchers — comes at a time of growing concern that the environment created by industrial America may be one of its leading killers.

Americans are getting cleaner air, purer water, quieter cities and protection of endangered natural treasures. But they also are paying the price, both in higher taxes and in inflation.

First In A Series

Whether the benefits outweigh the costs remains a subject of debate.

The Council on Environmental Quality says pollution-control spending from 1976 through 1985 may top $554 billion, more than 20 times the cost of the 10-year space program drive to put men on the moon.

Many experts say the environmental establishment — government and private — may be the single most powerful force shaping where and how Americans live and work in years to come.

"I don't know if I would have agreed with that a year or two ago," says Gary Knight, environmental director for the U.S. Chamber of Commerce. "But now that so many bright young environmentalists hold high-level policy jobs in the government, I unquestionably agree."

Little more than a decade ago there was no environmental movement worthy of the name.

Individual conservation groups fought small, private wars and rarely cooperated. People who picked up bottles, shielded trees from bulldozers with their bodies or tried to save streams often were scorned as "eco-freaks."

Then came Earth Day — April 22, 1970 — a protest in defense of the environment patterned on demonstrations against the Vietnam War. With that, environmentalism entered the American mainstream.

Richard Nixon signed into life two new government bodies, the CEQ and the Environmental Protection Agency. Congress passed 13 major environmental laws in seven years. Courts gave teeth to the laws with landmark rulings.

Now, under President Carter, dozens of environmental activists sit at the helm of the federal bureaucracy. Others form a private power structure — supported by perhaps 8 million members of environmental groups, with coffers totaling some $70 million a year — that shapes legislation through lobbying and fights the giants of industry in court.

Environmentalists blocked the multimillion-dollar Tellico Dam in Tennessee to save a finger-size fish, pushed through auto pollution limits that may add $800 to the price of the average car, got sweeping changes in waste disposal and won clean air rules that shape industrial growth.

The impact of their actions colors almost every thread in the fabric of U.S. society. It was not always thus.

For three centuries, America was the land of never-ending plenty. Its people assaulted the environment — over-cropping, over-grazing, dumping wastes, moving on to new frontiers as man had done for 5,000 years of civilization.

The first private conservation groups — the Sierra Club and the Audubon Society, still movement leaders — were formed in the 1890s. Early Audubon members were bird lovers and cultivated women appalled at the slaughter of egrets and terns to provide plumes for Victorian ladies hats, while Sierra Club members sought to protect unspoiled areas of the West.

Gifford Pinchot, the nation's first chief forester, got Theodore Roosevelt in 1908 to call a White House conference on conservation. Pinchot was among the first to consider the environment as an interdependent whole, of which man is only a small part — a keystone of today's environmental bible.

Pinchot and Roosevelt saw conservation in utilitarian terms — wise management to assure continued exploitation. Hunters and fishermen shared that view.

Also at that time, naturalist John Muir, the philosophical father of the Sierra Club, stressed a quite different set of values — the need to preserve natural beauty for the simple sake of environmental quality.

The two philosophies, quality vs. utility, clashed in the early 1900s over the damming of pristine Hetch Hetchy Valley at the lower end of Yosemite Park to provide drinking water and power for San Francisco. Utility won.

To this day, the same clash arises again and again.

Prosperity, industrial expansion, scientific achievements, urban sprawl and the national love affair with cars after World War II created conditions that brought the environmental movement back to life four decades later.

Nature sounded a warning in 1948. Smog settled over the industrial coal town of Donora, Pa., for five days, killing 20 people and sickening 5,190 others — 43 percent of the population. That incident was dismissed as the product of a freak weather inversion.

By 1955, Los Angeles County authorities were empowered to call air pollution alerts and limit driving. They did so eight times that year between June and mid-September.

Conservationists fought battles over the Dinosaur National Park, the California redwoods, the Cascades in Washington and the Grand Canyon. But they also added the newer issues to their agenda and lobbied heavily in Washington.

Lyndon Johnson, proclaiming his "Great Society" May 22, 1964, warned: "We must act to prevent an ugly America — polluted air, water and food, disappearing fields and forests, overcrowded recreational areas."

By 1968 the nation was subjected to more than 200 million tons a year of the five main air pollutants — carbon monoxide, nitrogen oxides, sulfur oxides, hydrocarbons and particulates. Heavy pollution clouded even the once-sparkling air of Denver and Salt Lake City.

"There still is only one word, hysteria, to describe the Washington mood on the environment issue in the fall of 1969," recalls John Whitaker, who put together Nixon's first message on the environment shortly before Earth Day. "The words 'pollution' and 'environment' were on every politician's lips."

The stage was set for Earth Day.

Originally conceived as a campus teach-in, the observance was suggested by Sen. Gaylord Nelson, D-Wis., and inspired by the November 1969 demonstrations against the Vietnam War.

Some 20 million Americans participated. They marched, attended rallies and spread into the woods and streams for thousands of local clean-up campaigns.

Endorsement by the Nixon administration, which already had called for many measures that now form the backbone of environmental protection, won Earth Day the support of many who otherwise would have dismissed it as a radical fad.

New national groups were formed — among them the Environmental Defense Fund (1967), the Natural Resources Defense Council (1970), Friends of the Earth (1970) and Environmental Action (1970). Membership soared.

By 1973 there were an estimated 20,000 local or national environmental groups and allied citizens' organizations such as Common Cause, the League of Women Voters and various Ralph Nader groups.

The new environmentalists, according to a 1974-76 government survey, tend to be white, urban, college educated, white-collar workers over 30, earning $10,000 or more a year. Men slightly outnumber women.

By 1968, the nation was subjected to more than 200 million tons a year of the five main air pollutants...

They cover the political spectrum. Some equate "big" with "bad" and long for a simpler, more self-sufficient life free of huge corporations and utilities.

Except in the anti-nuclear movement, mass demonstrations, protests and acts of civil disobedience — tactics used in the years immediately after Earth Day — today have been largely dropped.

National organizations with vastly expanded professional staffs have grown sophisticated in lobbying federal and state governments, both directly and through indirect "grass roots" techniques such as letter-writing campaigns.

Roughly 200 environmental lobbyists work on Capitol Hill alone, backing their case with facts supplied by staff scientists. They routinely form coalitions for added clout.

Some like the National Wildlife Federation have plush quarters. But Brent Blackwelder of the Environmental Policy Center sits over over a fast-food restaurant, the air in his low-rent office often foul with the smell of hot grease.

Finances come from foundation grants and membership dues that range from $8.50 to $25 a year. Surveys show 5 million to 8 million Americans belong to at least one environmental group.

"They have had a tremendous influence in shaping the laws," says EPA chief Douglas Costle.

"One of the things they have done is shape the laws in ways that allow them a continuing participation (after the law is passed). Environmental laws are marked by a characteristic of allowing access by private citizens to compel enforcement of federal and state laws."

Two of the 15 main national groups — the Environmental Defense Fund and the Natural Resources Defense Council, with a combined membership of 80,000 — operate primarily in the courts. Others like the Sierra Club have set up special legal sections to bring suits under new environmental laws.

"In the past, environmentalists would dump diseased fish on the rug of corporate headquarters," says Denis Hayes of World Watch Institute. "Now we take the corporation to court to force them to stop water pollution."

Some environmentalists, such as Hayes, say the environmental movement has produced "no negative effects of any consequence." Others acknowledge the movement at times has gone astray.

Mike McCabe of the Environmental Study Conference says there once was "too much black-and-white — either you had total allegiance, or you would not be considered an environmentalist." Biologist Barry Commoner says there has been too much elitism, too little concern for the needs of the poor.

"Too many times we have seen new controls required as an end in temselves, with little or no environmental benefit in return," says Knight of the Chamber of Commerce, citing efforts to reduce man-made pollutants below the level that occurs naturally in the environment.

The CEQ lists another problem in its 1977 report to Congress: "Sometimes there have been adverse, unexpected effects from well-meant programs, for example, the urban sprawl generated by overambitious sewer projects which drew ... funds from the federal program to clean up the nation's waters."

Recent efforts to replace lawsuits with negotiations between industry and environmentalists have stirred controversy in the movement. There have been a few environmental dropouts, but membership on a nationwide basis is holding steady today.

Most agree with Costle the main achievement is a new environmental ethic.

"Environmentalism is now a permanent part of our political value system," Costle says. "It is institutionally a part of our (government) at the state level, the local level, the federal level. It is a part of American society."

Amateur Detective Firm Looks For Stolen Pets

By BRENT BOWERS

NEW YORK (UPI) — A man slashes a knife through the top of a convertible and seizes the frightened poodle inside.

A German Shepherd bolts after a squirrel in Manhattan's huge Central Park and doesn't come back.

A caller with a French accent tells a grief-stricken dog owner: "I'm a bartender and one of my customers has your pet." Pretending to act as an innocent go-between, he sets up a rendezvous, takes $100 and disappears.

Every day in New York City, on the average, someone steals a dog for ransom. Other animals stray from their owners, who often plaster whole neighborhoods with heartwrenching posters offering rewards for the return of their pets.

A group called Petfinders tries to track down the runaway or stolen canines and in the process, consoles their worried masters or mistresses. All it takes is a little know-how and a lot of grueling detective work.

"I got the idea two years ago when I was taking a long walk and noticed a bunch of signs describing a lost dog," Irving West, founder of the non-profit organization said.

"About 40 blocks away I saw a 'found' sign and the description matched. And I thought, there really ought to be a central clearinghouse to compare the various sources of lost-and-found information."

Now there is. For a $12 fee good for the lifetime of the pet, West fills out a card detailing breed, color, weight and other features, then begins a search.

Along with his wife, Frieda, and a couple of volunteers, West regularly combs the lost-and-found columns of all 52 New York City daily and weekly newspapers and sends a printout of missing pets to all shelters and volunteer groups within a 50-mile radius.

He claims a 45 percent recovery rate for an estimated 1,000 customers so far, "and that isn't bad."

But the 38-year-old former nursing home administrator — he says he shut down the facility to protest inhumane conditions — claims hunting animals is only part of his job.

"The most important service we provide is counseling. We deal with a lot of older people, widows, lonely people. It can be heartbreaking. We try to give them no-nonsense advice," he said.

"For example, many of them want to take out costly display ads. We point out that anybody who finds a pet is most likely to look in the classifieds."

His eyes flashing in anger through gold-rimmed glasses and his long, bristling beard giving him the appearance of an Old Testament prophet, West scorned petnappers for "playing on people's feelings of helplessness and grief."

But, he said, the victims should keep their cool and try to drive a hard bargain over the phone.

They should reject repeated, late night calls or midnight meetings in obscure places," he said. "They should refuse to pay outrageous ransom demands — and they should never hand over money until they actually see their pet."

West, who has two cats, concedes that some people today are perhaps too devoted to their animals. But he feels that others harbor an overdose of hostility toward both pets and owners.

Senatorial Candidates Similar

By HARRY CULVER

OKLAHOMA CITY (UPI) — If Gov. David Boren has a problem in his race to recapture a Senate seat for Oklahoma Democrats, it may be that he sounds too much like a Republican.

The problem, if it exists, did not keep Boren from winning the recent Democratic Senate runoff primary by 100,000 votes over former Rep. Ed Edmondson, who accused Boren of being a "closet Republican."

Both Boren and his Republican foe, former Oklahoma State University President Robert Kamm, label themselves as conservative.

Boren is a strong favorite to win in November, although Kamm, an admitted underdog, contends he is gaining. Democrats likewise are favored to retain the governor's office and their current 5-1 ratio in Congress.

Both Senate candidates have endorsed the GOP-sponsored Kemp-Roth income tax bill. Both have attacked President Carter's energy policies, the federal government, federal judges, "irresponsible federal spending," and "the federal bureaucracy."

Both support a one-third cut in federal income taxes, a balanced federal budget, increased defense funding, building of the B-1 bomber, deregulation of oil and gas prices and increased federal funding for Oklahoma water projects.

Kamm, 59, who endorsed the Kemp-Roth bill seven weeks ahead of Boren, has accused the 37-year-old governor of stealing Republican programs.

While Democrats outnumber Republicans 3-1 in Oklahoma, polls indicate Boren is doing well not only in the normally Democratic regions but the traditonal GOP areas in the rural west and north.

Boren was not supported by either teacher organizations or labor, two groups that normally back Democrats, in his recent primary battle. A labor spokesman says labor may sit out the general election.

"There's not much enthusiasm," he said. "Some feel it's better to have six years of Kamm than 30 years of Boren."

Neither candidate has endeared himself to labor, with attacks on OSHA and the 1978 "labor reform" bill, coupled with endorsement of Kemp-Roth.

The winner will succeed Sen. Dewey Bartlett, whose election six years ago gave Oklahoma two Republican senators for only the second time since statehood in 1907. Bartlett, a former governor, is suffering from lung cancer and is retiring.

Kamm's hope of overtaking Boren apparently lies in what may be a better party vote organization, improvement in name recognition and how well Kamm can attack Boren's record as governor.

In the governor race, Democrat George Nigh, who has spent 16 of the past 20 years as lieutenant governor, is favored to beat Republican Ron Shotts, a former Oklahoma University football star.

Shotts has called for cuts in the state income tax and freezing the state payroll. Nigh also has promised tax cuts but also has proposed increased state spending for highways and education, to be financed from "increased tourism and industrial growth."

In the 1st congressional district, former Republican state chairman Paula Unruh is making a strong bid to unseat Democrat James R. Jones, who is seeking his fourth consecutive term.

Democrats appear to be comfortably ahead elsewhere, including the 2nd district, where newcomer Mike Synar ousted incumbent Ted xisenhoover in the primary.

Boren, a Rhodes scholar and son of former Rep. Boren, served eight years in the legislature before winning the governorship in 1974. He was accused by a minor candidate in the primary of being a homosexual, prompting him to swear on a Bible at a televised news conference that he is not and has never been a homosexual or bisexual.

Kamm, a native of Iowa, retired last year after 11 years as president of Oklahoma State University. He had served previously on faculties at OSU, Texas A &M and Drake University.

The United States, U.S.S.R. and the United Kingdom announced an agreement in 1963 to ban nuclear weapons from space.

Western Influence Strong In Yugoslav Capital

By RUTH GRUBER

BELGRADE, Yugoslavia (UPI) — It's Indian Summer in Belgrade and the city is having a last fling before heading into the somber Balkan winter.

The elegant Hotel Moskva's huge sidewalk cafe on downtown Terazije Square is full of people-watchers sipping sweet Turkish coffee and taking the weak sun.

At the local peasant produce market dusky women in colorful harem pants hawk bootleg American blue jeans among heaps of shiny peppers, apples and tomatoes.

The fragrance of corn-on-the-cob roasting at street corner grills all over town somehow wafts deliciously through the omnipresent fumes of automobile exhaust and cheap heating coal.

Yugoslavia, its people take pains to point out to foreigners, though Communist, is neither east nor west. It is also in a way neither north nor south.

Belgrade, the capital of its "six republics, five main nationalities, four languages, three religions and two alphabets," seethes with influences from all directions.

The Communist economy and political system versus the open door policy to the west, the spiritual jostling of Orthodox, Catholic and Moslem churches, the dichotomy between the country's industrialized north and just-emerging south — all are evident and all add to the city's flavor.

Heavily bombed during World War II, Belgrade has been rebuilt in a low key manner which has made its downtown area a warm, rather cozy district of broad sidewalks and tree-lined streets, as comfortable —and slightly shabby — as some elderly dowagers.

And the streets are always crowded.

"Foreigners wonder about that," said one Belgrader. "They just can't get over how the sidewalks are alway full."

The day begins for most offices at 7 a.m. Most shops are open by 8 a.m., and many do business from 6 a.m. until 8 p.m.

Somehow, it always seems to be rush hour, and restaurants, too, serve full meals from early morning until late at night.

Sidewalk snack vendors also do a roaring trade, selling local specialties such as piroshke — a sort of cheese-filled doughnut, sweet baklava, flaky cheese and meat pies and rich apple strudel —as well as corn on the cob.

Belgraders pick up quickly on the latest fashions and styles from the west. Girls in skintight jeans and spike-heeled shoes stroll arm in arm with their denim-clad, bearded boyfriends, although they occasionally cross paths with an elderly, black-clad woman or an old peasant man in traditional tight-shinned, baggythighed trousers, little cap and curly toed shoes.

This summer's European fad of American T-shirts caught on strong, although most of the shirts are imitations of the U.S. article.

And everyone wears blue jeans, even though a pair of Levi's or other big American brand name can cost $60.

The old mixes with the new in sometimes curious ways in Belgrade, just as the north and south mix with east and west and it can be difficult to teil where one begins and the other leaves off.

The radio, for example, features the latest western rock and roll and recently the country's police arrested several of Yugoslavia's own best known rock musicians on drugs charges in a move reminiscent of similar arrests of rock stars in the west.

But, in keeping with the nonaligned world's pledge to promote and maintain national heritage and culture, the radio also devotes a large segment of programming time to ethnic Yugoslav folk music.

Supermarkets and shops are generally well stocked, with different brands to choose from. But there is a seasonal supply element involved with, for example, one resident warning a newcomer in mid-September to "eat as much green salad as you can because in a few weeks you can kiss it good-bye until next spring."

Western influence seems definitely to dominate in some, mostly youth-oriented, areas such as popular music and fashion.

In some areas it is beginning to make inroads and in others it still has had little impact.

You can buy, for instance, dry package soups — local specialities as well as good old chicken noodle — and mashed potatoes cheaply, but in this country of staunch Turkish coffee drinkers instant coffee is almost unheard of and can cost $15 for a large jar.

Yugoslavs watch Kojak and Barretta and the Muppetts on TV, but directions on the box of recently introduced American corn flakes tell them to pour milk on the cereal and let it stand 10 minutes before eating.

Data from over 750 companies showed fringe benefits to employees increasing 9 million 1965 and 1975.

Feminists Concerned About Iranian Women

By PHILIP DOPOULOS

TEHRAN, Iran (AP) — Feminist leaders are voicing concern that Iranian women, perhaps the most liberated in the traditionally male-dominated Middle East, may be heading for a period of regression because of recent religious and political disorders in the country.

The feminists say they are concerned because Shah Mohammed Reza Pahlavi made concessions to religious leaders who demanded stricter adherence to Islamic, or Moslem, social principles, which sometimes conflict with the concepts of women's liberation.

Iran is a Moslem nation and among Moslems the Shiite sect predominates.

The unrest resulted in the fall of Prime Minister Jamshid Amouzegar's liberal-minded government and his replacement by Jaafar Sharif-Emami, considered a conservative.

The new government dropped the post of minister of state for women's affairs created in 1975 and headed by Mahnaz Afkhami. She was not reappointed to the Cabinet in any other capacity nor were any other women brought in. Sharif-Emami's government also abolished liquor sales, closed down casinos and banned pornagraphic-type films.

The U.S.-educated Miss Afkhami, who also is secretary-general of the influential Woman's Organization of Iran, said: "It is inconceivable to return to the past. This country would come to a standstill if the women stayed at home and away from their jobs."

She said that it is not clear now what will happen to WOI projects. "We don't yet know how the new government is going to cope with our problems," she added.

The WOI is the leader of women's affairs in the country with a $20 million budget. It runs welfare centers throughout Iran to assist women in day care, legal matters, family planning and gives literacy and vocational training.

Miss Afkhami said the Cabinet post that she once held had been originally set up to interpret new laws concerning women so as not to conflict with Islamic laws.

She added in an interview with The Associated Press: "If we can express ourselves and continue our social progress as before, there will be no problems for us. Our main purpose is to help women in this country become self-sufficient. We want to teach them to protect themselves. We don't want women pushed around.

"It's too difficult for us to return to the past," Miss Afkhami insisted, "what with 38 percent of the students in Iranian universities being women and half of the 50,000 students studying abroad in Western countries, females."

Miss Afkhami said she believed that most of the mullahs (religious leaders) do not want women to go back to such practices such as wearing ankle-length veils. "Only the fanatic orthodox mullahs want this," she said. "The educated, enlightened mullahs are for women's progress.

She added, however, that recent bloody riots in the holy city of Qom, near Tehran, led by anti-shah mullahs had an effect on the WOI movement. "We noticed a drop in attendance at our WOI centers there, presumably due to the chaos. I really don't know why but it could be some of their husbands and families thought it best the women stay away for the time being."

Another leading feminist, Mrs. Ozar Mohtedi, who has been campaigning for women's rights for the past 28 years, said, "I love my religion, but it is not good to go back. Women are confused about the demands of the mullahs and their teachings. The mullahs' demands appear to be political and have nothing to do with social change."

She echoed statements made by other women here that enlighted mullahs "are not against progress but want to put a halt to Western permissiveness that has permeated our society in Iran. Not all of it is good," she added.

The mullahs, representing the powerful Shiite sect, were stripped of their vast land holdings and some of their secular power in 1963 when the shah declared his peoples' revolution giving the women the right to vote and also hold public office. The lifting of the veil was decreed 40 years ago by the shah's father, Reza Shah the Great. It was considered the beginning of the women's liberation movement in Iran.

Nader Not Pleased With Energy Chief

WASHINGTON (AP) — Consumer advocate Ralph Nader says Energy Secretary James R. Schlesinger should be fired because he is a tool of big oil and gas companies and has undermined President Carter's energy program.

Nader said that under Schlesinger the "Carter energy program, which the people in this country voted on in 1976, has been subverted." Nader voiced his objections in a meeting Monday with presidential aide Stuart E. Eizenstat. Nader said Eizenstat was "generally noncommittal" on the matter.

Veto Threat Hangs Over Big Tax Bill

WASHINGTON (AP) — A Senate-passed tax bill is heading for a conference committee, where negotiators will be working against the calendar and the threat of a veto to put together a compromise tax cut just in time for election day.

The Senate measure, which would reduce taxes by $29.3 billion in 1979, includes cuts for most individuals, a heavy reduction in capital gains taxes on investors and new tax relief for businesses.

The bill was passed on an 86-4 vote Tuesday night, a few hours after President Carter described it as unacceptably large.

He told a news conference that if the conference committee will take the best parts from the Senate bill and the best from the $16.3 billion version passed by the House, "We can have an acceptable tax bill which I will sign."

New figures by congressional aides estimate the Senate bill would result in a $285 tax cut in 1979 for a typical four-member family earning $17,500, compared with $115 in the House bill. At $20,000, the Senate tax cut would be $316 and the House cut $146.

For a married couple with no children and earning $20,000, the Senate bill would mean a tax cut of $239, while the House cut would be $81. A single person at $20,000 would get $147 under the Senate bill and $105 in the House version.

The $29.3 billion price tag on the bill compares with the $16.3 billion passed by the House and the $20 billion level proposed most recently by the Carter administration.

Sen. Russell B. Long, floor manager of the bill, told reporters that Senate-House conferees will begin work on the tax legislation Thursday and likely will be unable to finish before sometime Saturday — when Congress hopes to adjourn for the year and hit the campaign trail.

After the compromise clears the conference, it still is subject to a final vote in the House and Senate.

Despite their differences, the Senate and House bills agree on at least four major priorities. Both would:

—Replace the current $35-per-person individual tax credit (as well as the optional credit of up to $180) and the $750 exemption with a $1,000-per-person exemption.

—Increase the standard deduction, which is used by taxpayers who do not itemize. This would go up to $2,300 for single persons and $3,400 for couples filing a joint return.

—Repeal the existing deduction allowed for state and local gasoline taxes. This will mean slightly higher taxes for most of the 30 percent of taxpayers who itemize deductions.

—Provide for a big cut in the tax on capital gains, which are profits from the sale of property owned for a year or longer, in an effort to spur investment.

The Senate bill would go considerably beyond the House version in cutting individual taxes, mainly through adjustment in the tax rates. The Senate voted about $19 billion in individual reductions; the House, $10.4 billion.

In addition, the Senate version would distribute proportionately more tax relief to persons with incomes under $50,000 than would the House bill.

One of the big problems in conference will be deciding how far to cut capital gains taxes. The Senate bill would cut the 49.1 percent maximum tax on capital gains to 21 percent; the House version, to 35 percent.

Carter did not say specifically what he would consider acceptable. But he repeated his insistence that the bill be non-inflationary, simple, equitable and that the tax burden rise with income.

"I would not hesitate to veto if it it does not meet those criteria," he said.

Some of the president's complaints about one version of the bill or the other are well known. He wants a smaller capital-gains reduction than either house approved; he prefers the Senate distribution of more relief to low-and middle-income persons, and he does not want the new tax credit for college tuition that is in the Senate bill.

On the other hand, both houses rejected virtually every revenue-raising "reform" that Carter proposed.

PREPARING TO PICKET — Memphis school teachers prepare to return to the picket lines despite a court order declaring their walkout illegal. The teachers voted to strike after contract talks deadlocked. School bus drivers today refused to honor the picket lines, however. (AP Laserphoto)

Teachers Ignore Memphis Court

MEMPHIS, Tenn. (AP) — Defying a court order to end their strike, teachers returned to picket lines today in an effort to shut the schools until they win higher salaries and other demands.

As during the first day of the strike Tuesday, school buses rolled past pickets out of fenced-in parking lots under police supervision. The bus drivers, members of the Teamsters Union, have refused to honor the walkout.

Some buses which normally carry 55 to 60 students arrived at schools with as few as six aboard.

The walkout has been declared illegal by a Chancery Court judge.

"...This injunction will not end the current strike by Memphis city teachers," Lorene Osborne, president of the Memphis Education Association, told about 650 applauding teachers Tuesday at MEA headquarters. "We disagree with this order and are already in the process of appealing it."

Chancellor D.J. "Tene" Alissandratos issued a temporary restraining order Tuesday against the strike by the 5,300-member MEA.

The order came as 57 percent of the city's 6,200 teachers and 58 percent of the system's 113,000 students stayed away from classes. Willie Herenton, deputy superintendent for instruction services, said 3,785 teachers and 67,000 students were absent from school.

"It is clearly illegal for public employees to strike," Alissandratos said. His order directed teachers to refrain from striking and picketing, but fell short of a back-to-work edict. He said the Memphis Board of Education will have to decide whether to fire teachers who refuse to resume teaching.

The teachers voted 2,659-973 Monday to strike the state's largest and the nation's 16th largest public school system because of stalled contract negotiations.

Among the unresolved issues are salary, transfers and assignments, teacher evaluation procedures and the teachers' right to have a voice in school policy.

First-year teachers with a bachelor's degree earn $1,028 a month. The school board has offered a 5.4 percent pay increase, 7.01 percent counting longevity increases. The MEA wants a pay increase alone of more than 8 percent.

The teachers' strike is the third by a municipal employees group in Memphis in four months. In July, 1,400 firemen struck for three days. Firemen returned to work under a court order but resumed their walkout Aug. 14 in the midst of an eight-day police strike that ended Aug. 18. National guardsmen patrolled the city during both strikes.

Meanwhile, in Cleveland preparations are being made for a Thursday vote on a once-rejected contract offer in an attempt to resolve a five-week-old strike by 10,000 Cleveland school employees.

The walkout has prevented classes from being held this fall for Cleveland's 100,000 public school pupils, and Superintendent Peter P. Carlin said it is unlikely classes would resume this week.

Leaders of six unions agreed to resubmit an 8 percent salary increase offer to teachers and non-academic employees after the Ohio superintendent of public instruction pledged his support to efforts to guarantee the raise would be paid.

One week ago, school employees rejected the same pact by a 3-2 margin, although 4,000 union members never cast ballots.

The unions had asked for a 20 percent pay hike.

of school crossing guard uniforms. In Houston, Dallas and San Antonio, the city bears the total cost. In Fort Worth and Mesquite, the school shares the expense," he says.

West said the city is only asking the school district to share the expense of the crossing guards. In a letter to school officials last week, West noted the $53,000 "does not pay for all the work and time that is required to keep this necessary program."

Receiving no response to the letter, West has sent a copy of Ross's legal opinion to school attorney Charles Cobb and school board president Charles Waters.

"We're not going to go away," West emphasized.

Ross concludes his opinion by saying, "The salaries and uniforms of school crossing guards are within the scope of authority of the school district and such expenses should not be unwillingly borne by the city through the intimation that the council is indifferent to the welfare of our children."

relatives had asked, in addition to $100,000 in actual and another $50,000 in punitive damages, for an injunction requiring the county to perform autopsies in cases in which the cause of death is unclear.

The Commissioners Court, however, reportedly has been authorizing all autopsy expenses although it has never taken formal action raising the $175 fee limit. Sources said that the injunctive issue has therefore been rendered moot.

It will be up to U.S. District Judge Halbert O. Woodward to determine whether there is possible liability in the case. If defendants are found liable, then the damage claim will be pressed before a jury.

SAILOR AIRS CHARGES — Dean Bowers, 24, a machinist's mate from Seattle, stands in the engine room of the destroyer Higbee in San Diego Tuesday. Bowers was one of 13 crewmen who jumped ship in Seattle last week because they felt the craft was not seaworthy. Bowers faces a court-martial, according to Navy officials. (AP Laserphoto)

Captain Of Aging Destroyer Denies Claims Ship Unsafe

SAN DIEGO (AP) — Thirteen crewmen refused to sail with him, but Cmdr. Peter Soverel says his aging destroyer is seaworthy despite breaking down on its voyage to San Diego from Seattle.

At a shipboard news conference, Soverel insisted the 33-year-old destroyer Higbee is safe, adding that "while I had some sailors that did not come with me, I had 183 guys that did."

The World War II vessel broke down briefly last week when a spring bearing on a propeller shaft went out and for about 12 hours "we proceeded on one shaft," Soverel said.

Repairs were made in Monterey, Calif.

Soverel, 38, kept reporters waiting about an hour Tuesday after the 3,500-ton Higbee arrived in port as he met with Rear Adm. Alex Sinclair.

Two of the 13 sailors who jumped ship last week were apprehended by authorities in Seattle for being absent without leave. The others are still at large.

Bowers was taken back aboard the ship in Monterey and was allowed to speak with reporters after Soverel.

He said he kept a log documenting 35 instances of mechanical trouble on the Higbee that required repairs while the destroyer was on a Pacific cruise to Pearl Harbor last summer.

But Bowers disagreed with his skipper that morale on the Higbee is good, saying crewmen were forced to work long hours to prepare the vessel for this training cruise.

"At times, it was like a nightmare," Bowers recounted. "The lights would go out. A lot of things happened that couldn't be helped."

He said there had been numerous mechanical malfunctions, but no safety violations during his four years on the Higbee.

According to Soverel, Bowers stands to be court-martialed for missing a ship movement.

Soverel confirmed that 29 "engineering casualties" occurred en route to Hawaii and that there were four more on the voyage back to the Higbee's homeport of Seattle.

"None of those problems were of a serious nature and no lives were in danger," he said.

Council To Pick Panel For Study

advertising agency has LP&L's competitor, Southwestern Public Service, as a client.

A controversial zone change case, which would permit the construction of a 100,000-square-foot Target discount store at Loop 289 and South University Avenue, is on the agenda for second reading consideration.

W.D. "Dub" Rogers Jr. had requested a change from local retail zoning (C-2) to general retail (C-3) which the council approved with several stipulations at the last council meeting.

Also Thursday the council is expected to appropriate $370,000 from bond funds for construction and equipment at the fire station to be built at 79th Street and Slide Road.

In addition, the council will consider appropriating $22,800 from the $2.4 million in bonds to cover the costs incurred in the August bond sale. The costs include financial advisory fees, bond attorney fees, printing and bond rating fees.

Council members are expected to okay an agreement between the city and Honeywell Information Systems for the purchase of additional data processing equipment. The council previously authorized the use of $151,585 in federal revenue sharing funds for the equipment purchase.

The council also will consider bids for the installation of a sprinkler system in the city cemetery which will be financed by revenue sharing as well. The irrigation system is expected to cost nearly $394,000.

Bids will be taken for the construction of a fourth Lubbock day care center to be paid for by $260,000 in Community Development funds. When constructed, the center will be owned by the city and leased to the Day Care Center Association.

In addition, the council will consider:

—Placing a stop sign at 55th Street and Raleigh Avenue at the recommendation of the Citizens Traffic Commission.

—Allocating $10,000 from the Community Development Income Fund to cover the costs of the maintenance and disposition of land around the Civic Center.

—Eliminating Fire Zone 1 which affects buildings in the central business district and along Avenue H.

—An ordinance to place safety devices at railroad crossings in Lubbock.

—A study of medians on 50th Street.

Philippines Storm Toll Mounting

MANILA, Philippines (UPI) — Tropical storm Nina smashed into the Philippines today, killing at least 20 persons and leaving an estimated 100,000 people homeless.

Nina knifed across the rice bowl provinces in the central Luzon plain just north of Manila with 68 mph winds before swirling out into the South China Sea toward Vietnam, weather bureau officials said.

Initial reports said the 19th storm to hit the Philippines this year destroyed 309 houses and 200 small fishing boats. The storm washed away roads, railways and bridges and knocked down power and communication lines.

The Red Cross said relief agencies evacuated 96,550 people to schools and town halls. Most of the 20 fatalities were drowning victims.

Landslides buried several dozen houses without inflicting casualties, authorities said.

Costly Fire

fire began.

The fire razed the back half of the house and caused extensive smoke damage to the rest of the structure, fire officials said. Mills estimated the loss at more than $100,000.

Fire fighters controlled the flames in about 30 minutes, but spent almost an other hour at the scene making sure there were no smoldering pieces of furniture.

Mills said he was in bed when his wife told him the lights had gone out in the kitchen. He said he checked the breaker box at the back of the house, and even though he flipped the switch, the lights still remained out.

On the second try, however, he said, an apparent electrical short ignited some curtains in the back office.

"I heard my wife say, 'Oh my God' and looked and it was burning," he said. "It spread through the ceiling and in five minutes it was going. I ran back in and got a pair of shoes but I had to burn a shirt."

Fire Marshal A.C. Black said this morning the cause had not definitely been established, but he confirmed that the blaze appeared to have started in the office.

Military Spending Bill Ready For Final Action By Solons

WASHINGTON (AP) — Congress is preparing to vote on a huge military spending bill, but perhaps not in time to prevent payroll problems for more than 2 million service personnel and civilian employees.

With a $117.5 billion price tag, the legislation would be the largest appropriation ever passed by Congress. It will finance practically all defense spending in the fiscal year that began Oct. 1.

Senate and House conferees wrapped up their work on the bill Tuesday after four days of negotiations. The conference report, which includes one still-unresolved issue, must be approved by the full House and Senate.

The House, which is expected to act first on the conference report, does not plan to vote before Thursday at the earliest. Then it would go to the Senate and, finally, to the White House for signature.

The conference report leaves unresolved whether to consolidate Army and Navy helicopter pilot training at Fort Rucker, Ala. The House originally approved the consolidation, but the Senate rejected it. The issue will be voted on again separately by both houses. In theory, failure of one house or the other to yield on that point could jeopardize the compromises reached by the conference committee.

Even without an unanticipated impasse, the Pentagon said it is uncertain whether it will be able to meet a payroll on Friday for 466,000 defense employes.

Payday for 1.5 million uniformed personnel falls on Sunday, and these checks normally would go out earlier because of the weekend, a Pentagon spokesman said.

The Defense Department has been without funds since the start of the new fiscal year. The defense spokesman said alternatives are being discussed, such as sending out checks with instructions not to cash them.

The legislation totals $5.2 billion more than last year's spending, which was a record, but is $1.5 billion short of President Carter's request for this fiscal year. Conferees said the total fell under the administration's proposal because money for a nuclear aircraft carrier was stripped from the bill after the president vetoed the ship.

The legislation contains a restriction on abortions that would be paid for with military money.

It also, for the first time, would grant travel and moving allowances for the families of junior enlisted personnel sent overseas. The Pentagon had lobbied strenuously for the benefits.

The bill would put a worldwide ceiling of 350,000 on the number of dependents overseas, but conference staff said this still would leave room for travel allowances for 6,000-9,000 dependents.

Deletion of funds for the nuclear aircraft carrier defused most of the controversy over weapons buying.

Sen. John Stennis, D-Miss., chairman of the Armed Services Committee, said the legislation contains $12 billion to buy planes and $4 billion for ship construction.

Conferees scrapped a House provision to put a one-year moratorium on the up-or-out policy, under which an officer is retired if he or she is passed over twice for promotion.

NITRITE REVIEW

Vatican To Disregard Investigation Demands

By GEORGE CORNELL

VATICAN CITY (AP) — The Vatican is expected to do nothing about Italian press demands for an investigation into the death of Pope John Paul I and suspicions of foul play.

John Paul's doctor said the 65-year-old pontiff died of a heart attack Sept. 28, just 34 days after his election, and one Vatican source said any further official explanation would be an embarrassing "capitulation to popular pressure."

The press campaign for a probe began Oct. 1 when Milan's Corriere della Sera, widely regarded as Italy's best newspaper, reported that "doubts and suspicions" about the pope's death had been raised.

"We cannot understand why an autopsy on Pope John Paul's body was not performed," the paper said. "The church had nothing to lose — on the contrary much to gain — if an autopsy had been conducted, especially since the Vatican constitution does not explicitly forbid such an autopsy."

The next day an ultra-conservative Italian Catholic lay organization, Civilta Cristiana, announced it had petitioned the Vatican Courts of Justice to "open a judicial inquiry to ascertain the true causes" of the pope's death. But Cardinal Carlo Confalonieri, dean of the College of Cardinals, said there was no question about the cause of the pope's death and no need for an autopsy, according to Vatican officials.

"I don't see Vatican official circles taking these demands very seriously," said the Rev. John Long, an officer of the Vatican's Secretariat of Christian Unity.

He said he didn't believe press reports that some of the cardinals had asked for a formal Vatican statement on the matter. Others, including a spokesman for the U.S. cardinals, also disputed the report.

The press clamor has been fueled by the general climate of suspicion in Italy resulting from the activities of the Red Brigades and other terrorists. But church experts concede that another major factor has been the Vatican's failure to make public the pope's death certificate or to give the full, official explanations that would have been given after the death of a chief of state or comparable public figure.

The Rev. Donald Campion, a Jesuit expert on Vatican affairs, conceded that a full, official medical report should have been issued as soon as possible after the pope died.

"It would have been easier to squelch these rumors right away if full information had been provided at once, although there was no indication of anything sinister," he said.

He added that there "are always people around who like to stir up theories. They want to find some kind of devil, some evil person who did the pope in."

At least 10 popes were killed or died under suspicious circumstances in the Middle Ages, and plots abounded in the 15th century when members of the Borgia and Medici families were popes. But there is no record of an autopsy having been performed on a pope, or of demands for one, since 1830, when Pius VIII died at the age of 69 after a reign of 18 months.

Prince Agostino Chigi, the marshal of the conclave of cardinals that elected Pius VIII's successor, wrote in his diary that the pope died after a day of "frequent convulsions" and an autopsy was performed the next day.

The prince wrote that the doctors found that the pope's organs were "healthy," meaning he had not been poisoned; that there was "some weakness in his lungs, and some said his heart was weak."

Meanwhile, preparations went ahead for the opening Saturday of the conclave of cardinals to elect John Paul's successor and the start of voting Sunday.

Francesco and Annibale Gammarelli, whose family has been dressing popes for almost 200 years, were at work in their small shop on the white cassock the new pope will don for his first appearance on the balcony of the papal palace after his election.

Normally they make six white cassocks, one for housewear and one for dress in three sizes, short and stout, medium, and tall and thin.

This time they are sewing up only medium models to replace the two they made for John Paul. The short-and-stout and thin-and-tall models they made before his election two months ago are still fresh in their boxes.

Aristides Royo Wins Panamanian Election

PANAMA CITY, Panama (AP) — Aristides Royo, an attorney and former education minister, was elected president of Panama today, taking over from the man who handpicked him, Brig. Gen. Omar Torrijos.

Royo was elected by the 505-member National Assembly of Community Representatives, which has no legislative powers, shortly after it began a six-year term. Royo, 38, garnered 452 votes in a sweltering gymnasium. He was the only candidate. Ricardo de la Espriella, a former banker, was elected vice president.

Torrijos stepped down, but is expected to exert a strong influence on the new administration as head of the national guard that brought him to power in a coup 10 years ago today. He and senior guard officers swore allegiance to the new president.

Royo, a moderate who helped negotiate the new Panama Canal treaties, is expected to govern with some independence. But he has promised to consult with Torrijos often and to keep the country on the same left-center course steered by the 49-year-old general.

Torrijos stunned the nation Sept. 1 when he announced he would not continue as the nation's chief executive. Most political observers believe the general, who is very popular, could have had any position he wanted.

Torrijos' present title, chief of government, ceases to exist today under a stipulation in the 1972 constitution. The general, who has been keeping a low profile lately, was not on the official program, but his figurehead president, Demetrio B. Lakas, was scheduled to speak at a swearing in ceremony.

The election held in the same building in which President Carter and Torrijos signed documents June 16 formalizing the new canal treaties.

About 3,000 persons attended, including dignitaries from all over the Americas, a big delegation from Cuba and actor John Wayne, an old friend of Torrijos and a supporter of his fight for Panamanian sovereignty over the canal.

The government declared a national holiday, and Panama City was decorated with large signs paying tribute to Torrijos. A big electric sign on the national lottery building read: "3,650 Days of Struggle and Valor."

"Omar Has Fulfilled," said another sign.

"The Torrijos government should not be judged by the material achievements that can speak for themselves, such as acquiring the canal for Panama, the Bayano Dam and the Cerro Colorado Copper Project," said one television commentator.

"The most important thing the Torrijos government is leaving the country is stability and balance.

"Panama has no guerrilla warfare, no kidnappings, no violence directed at private enterprise and no hijackings as have been seen in so many other countries."

Under the new canal treaties, the United States will transfer the canal to Panama by Dec. 31, 1999.

Judge Chides Davis Lawyer At Hearing

HOUSTON (AP) — State District Judge Wallace Moore today gently chided the chief defense attorney in the Cullen Davis pretrial hearing for his lengthy and plodding questioning of an FBI agent.

At one point the judge turned and asked agent Joseph Gray several questions. Defense attorney Richard "Racehorse" Haynes objected, saying, "I would like to ask my own questions."

The judge answered, "I am just trying to get an answer to this question and I just want to get on with it."

Haynes said, "I'm trying to get an answer, too. But in my own way and to the best of my ability."

Gray testified concerning electronic equipment used by David McCrory, the chief witness against Davis.

Gray said McCrory had been outfitted with a taping device with a microphone taped to his upper chest.

FBI Agent Ron Jannings testified Tuesday he once told McCrory, "you talk too much. Let Davis do the talking."

Jannings said the FBI knew that McCrory had the weapon, but took no actions.

McCrory was an employee of Davis who went to authorities and said his boss had paid him $25,000 to kill State District Judge Joe Eidson, the presiding jurist over the long and bitter divorce proceedings of Davis and his estranged wife, Priscilla.

Eidson removed himself from the divorce trial after Davis' arrest and charges in the murder-for-hire case.

Earlier Tuesday, State District Judge Wallace Moore ruled that four tape recordings, allegedly linking the millionaire Davis with a scheme to kill Eidson, can be admitted as evidence in the trial, now scheduled to begin Monday.

Haynes argued McCrory was acting as an FBI agent, yet failed to inform Davis of his constitutional rights.

Prosecutors said McCrory was not an agent nor considered an informer.

Priscilla Davis ended two days of testimony Tuesday after Haynes had questioned her on financial dealings during the past two years and her relationship with Pat Burleson, an associate of McCrory and the owner of Fort Worth karate schools.

She said Tuesday she met with Burleson to discuss "the security I would need for the upcoming divorce case."

Mrs. Davis said several Fort Worth policemen guarded her home during their off-duty hours but that she met with Burleson "to arrange other security services."

The Davis trial was moved from Fort Worth to Houston on a change of venue.

Davis was acquitted late last year on a capital murder charge in the slaying of his 12-year-old stepdaughter. The trial in Amarillo was the longest and costliest in criminal proceedings in Texas history.

JOHN LOGAN

Logan Pleased With Selection

John A. Logan, executive vice president of the Lubbock Chamber of Commerce for the past 16 years, today was elected to the board of directors of the American Chamber of Commerce Executives Association.

He was named to a three-year term during the group's annual convention in Boston.

Following his election, Logan said, "I'm pleased for this recognition and look forward to serving on the board of directors, not only representing Lubbock, but the chambers of the Southwest."

The association, headquartered in Washington, D.C., is an organization of some 2,500 chamber of commerce executives from throughout the nation.

Logan has served as a state delegate to the ACCEA annual meetings for the past two years and has worked on various committees. He is one of 225 certified chamber executives in the U.S.

He also is past president of both the Texas Chamber of Commerce Executives and Chamber of Commerce Executives Association of West Texas. In 1970 he received the latter's Manager of the Year award. The state group presented him with a distinguished service award in 1977.

Health Officials Battle Buzzing

April showers bring May flowers, and early fall rains bring mosquito bite pains.

The heavy rains of September have added an unpleasant buzzing to the otherwise wonderful bright blue weather of October in Lubbock and the South Plains.

City and county health officials are busy battling the mosquitoes — so busy, in fact, that none was available for comment this morning.

A city health department secretary said there were 140 telephone calls Tuesday and there had been 50 at mid-morning from citizens wanting to be rid of their voracious little visitors.

Neither Millard Bruce, city environmental health coordinator, nor Dr. Margaret Orr, city health director, could be contacted.

Elwin Smith, a city sanitarian in charge of "vector control" who also handles mosquito control for the county, was also unavailable.

He was out spraying for mosquitoes.

Child Fitness Class On Tap

"Buckin' Bronchos," a breathing exercise and physical fitness class for children with asthma or other respiratory problems begins Oct. 21.

Sponsored by the American Lung Association, the classes are designed for children ages 8 through 12. Classes begin at 9:30 a.m. and will continue for six consecutive Saturdays, excluding the Thanksgiving weekend.

The classes will be at the Physical Therapy Department of Health Sciences Center Hospital.

A $10 registration fee is required for participation, but a scholarship fund is available for families unable to pay the registration fee.

More than 135 children have worked with the program since the first classes in 1973. More information may be obtained by calling Georgia Brewer at the American Lung Association of Texas.

City Man Loses Request For Habeas Corpus Writ

A-J Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — A man convicted of rape in Lubbock County lost his request for a writ of habeas corpus when the Texas Court of Criminal Appeals ruled a delay in his hearing was necessary to protect the constitutional rights of other parties involved in the case.

Cruz Tijerina Jr. was convicted of rape in August, 1977, and placed on probation. A condition of that probation was that he enroll in an accredited institution for the deaf. Although he did so, Tijerina later allegedly raped a partially blind deaf mute woman at the same Austin school.

Tijerina claimed the trial court did not hold a probation revocation hearing within the 20-day period required by law.

However, the Court of Criminal Appeals upheld the trial court's action, saying the lower court permitted a two-day delay to make interpreters available for Tijerina, as well as the rape victim and other witnesses.

In other action, the court affirmed the Lubbock County conviction of Steve McLin. He was sentenced to a 10-day jail term and a $150 fine for possession of marijuana. The court said no brief was filed in McLin's behalf in the trial court and nothing was presented for review.

The court also set aside the appeal of Alfredo Gamez Jr., convicted in Yoakum County of burglary of a building, and affirmed the Deaf Smith County conviction of Pantaleon Rivera Nava, convicted and sentenced to 45 years for delivery of heroin.

Montford Faces Murder Probes Snag

By BOB CAMPBELL
Avalanche-Journal Staff

The man who will become Lubbock County's chief prosecutor Jan. 1 wants to reopen several unsolved murder cases. However, that effort may be hampered by the reluctance of the state Criminal Justice Division to give him $57,000 to hire four additional investigators.

John T. Montford, criminal district attorney-elect, recently learned he may not get the grant and is going to Lubbock County commissioners for the money, he said Tuesday.

"I'll draw some criticism for trying to kick this back onto the county," he said, "but I'm just trying to do what I think is right and best for the county.

"I think these murderers that are running around here, if they are running around here, should not have the luxury of not being sought after by the various law enforcement agencies," he said.

The office would continue to have three investigators. Failure to receive the grant would eliminate funding the extra four investigators.

"I feel we need at least one per district court," Montford said. "That's in conformity with most major metropolitan areas.

"I will reopen several homicide cases." he added, "and I'll need more investigators to help on those.

"We may not solve any homicides, but we can't stop just because we don't have any new leads."

Among the cases he will reopen after he take office, he said, are those of A.J. Prim, a city zoning administrator who was shot in his car on July 7, 1970, in East Lubbock, and Forrest Barnett "Barney" Pyle Jr., a wealthy cattleman and businessman whose death controversially was ruled accidental.

Other cases to be re-examined include nightclub dancer Marcella Valenzuela, found Jan. 5, 1976, in her apartment, and Vickie Stroud Stokes, whose decomposed and almost nude body was found April 29, 1975, in a cellar near Wolfforth.

Prim, 50, was shot six times with a .22-caliber weapon and lived 16 days at Methodist Hospital. He told officers he had worked late at city hall and had stopped at a street light at East 19th Street and Quirt Avenue when a black man jumped into his car, pointed a pistol at him and forced him to drive east to an isolated field where he was shot.

Pyle, 37, was found Aug. 16, 1974, in the back seat of his station wagon at 50th Street and Indiana Avenue. An inquest resulted in a ruling that he died after consuming too much alcohol, but the case was pursued as a homicide after it was discovered that a $32,000 diamond ring was missing from his body at the time the body was found.

The Nov. 1, 1974, ruling turned the investigation only toward theft and culminated what his widow called "a comedy of errors."

Miss Valenzuela was found face up and partially nude in the bathtub of her apartment, and four separate attempts at discovering a cause of death failed after a justice of the peace ruled "murder by unknown means."

A ruling said Mrs. Stokes died from strychnine poisoning but added that "other causes undetermined and still under investigation" may have been a factor.

Another case Montford intends to pursue is that of Deborah Sue Williamson, who was found stabbed to death and partially disrobed on Aug. 24, 1975, at her 1115 82nd St. home.

Montford said he has had numerous applications from a large number of extremely well-qualified applicants' to become investigators.

"Many are willing to take salary cuts to come work for us," he said.

County Judge Rodrick Shaw received a Criminal Justice Division letter advising him that funding of the grant might depend on South Plains Association of Government priorities for the area.

"I was advised that it could be as much as a year before we could get additional funding," Montford said. "I can't wait a year because I feel like the money will be a good investment for the county in terms of the fight against crime."

Shaw said Tuesday that the grant could be approved later this year after the Criminal Justice Division learns how much money, if any, it will have left over.

Montford disclosed in a Tuesday interview that he also is preparing a grant application for a bad check office staffed in the courthouse by six secretaries, two deputy sheriffs and an assistant district attorney.

"We feel we can justify the grant because (1) of the significantly large volume of bad check cases in Lubbock County, (2) to reduce administrative duplication and provide a more efficient processing agency and (3) to get the check situation under control," he said.

Both Parties Urge Voters To Get Out

By The Associated Press

Republicans and Democrats in Texas are in agreement on at least one issue this week — both have mounted serious "get-out-the-vote" campaigns.

State Democratic Chairman Billy Goldberg has urged the state executive committee to turn its efforts toward getting out the vote, and State GOP chairman Ernesto Angelo has announced a vote-getting reception in Midland next Tuesday, headlined by former California Gov. Ronald Reagan.

Goldberg predicted Tuesday that about half of the state's eligible voters will turn out at the polls Nov. 7 to elect a governor, U.S. Senator, attorney general and dozens of local candidates.

He said Democrats are concentrating their voter-registraton drive in precincts that have voted at least 70 percent Democratic in previous elections.

"We think we have been most succesful in registereing more than 174,000 new Democrats," he said.

As for the Republicans, Midland Mayor Angelo said Reagan will discuss the major issues of 1978 and his analysis of the GOP campaign effort at Tuesday's reception.

He said Reagan will also appear at events promoting Jim Baker, GOP candidate for attorney general; Rep. Joe Robbins, R-Lubbock, candidate for the state senate; and GOP state house hopefuls Dubb Duff of Odessa and Jim Brandon of Amarillo.

GOP gubernatorial candidate Bill Clements has charged that his opponent, John Hill, was engaging in "cheap campaign tactics" by claiming that a Clements campaign newspaper misused a photograph of Garza County Judge Giles Dalby of Post. Hill claimed Dalby was a Hill coordinator and had never been a Clements supporter.

Meanwhile, Hill has announced that he will be honored today in his hometown of Kilgore with a John Hill Day luncheon hosted by the Kilgore Rotary Club with the Lions and Kiwanis clubs as co-hosts.

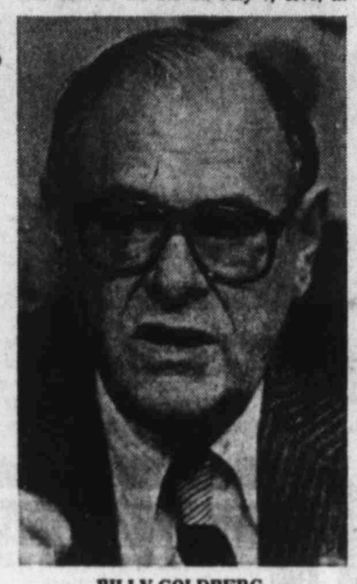

In San Antonio, Democratic attorney general candidate Mark White proposed a conference of all interested parties to discuss the growing problem of school violence. He said he'll call the conference if elected.

In Houston, White's GOP opponent Jim Baker announced that Julian Martinez of Dallas has joined his campaign as director of Mexican-Americans for Jim Baker.

Sen. John Tower, R-Texas, said at a campaign appearance in Hamilton that he has been endorsed by the Houston Chronicle and the Corpus Christi Caller-Times. Previously, Tower was endorsed by the Dallas Morning News, Lubbock Avalanche-Journal, and Wichita Falls Times-Record-News.

The office of Bob Krueger, Democratic candidate for U.S. Senate, said Krueger had no endorsements from daily newspapers.

In San Antonio, Krueger said Tower missed two key votes while campaigning in Texas — the extension of the Equal Rights Amendment and the Kemp-Roth tax cut bill.

Jurors Reject Father's Plea

SAN ANGELO (UPI) — A jury that watched a murder defendant's father throw himself to his knees and beg for lenience for his son, deliberated six hours before sentencing Curtis Williams to 10 years in prison.

The jury Tuesday could have given the 31-year-old Williams probation to life for the fatal shooting of the defendant's first cousin, James Lewis, 25, during a Labor Day family picnic but opted for the 10-year sentence.

Williams had pleaded self-defense in the shooting.

Wright's Contract Calls For $68,000

DALLAS (UPI) — Linus Wright, the new superintendent of the public school system, will receive salary and benefits of more than $68,000 annually during a five-year term beginning Nov. 1.

The school board agreed to the contract Tuesday night.

Wright, 51, currently superintendent for administration in the Houston public school system, will receive $60,000 salary, a car allowance of $450 monthly and a $250 monthly expense account.

Wright was selected Aug. 15 by a 6-3 vote of school trustees to replace Nolan Estes who resigned effective next Jan. 1 to accept a position at the University of Texas in Austin.

Agency Approves Bilingual Plan

By JEFF SOUTH
Avalanche-Journal Staff

The U.S. Office for Civil Rights has approved the Lubbock public schools' bilingual education plan, thus bringing to conclusion an investigation that began three years ago.

But the belated approval comes as little consolation to Lubbock Independent School District administrators, who say delays by the office cost the district a $133,307 federal grant.

If civil rights officials had acted on the local bilingual plan a few months earlier, the school system probably would have had a chance to secure federal desegregation assistance funds, Superintendent Ed Irons said.

The Office for Civil Rights announced in January, 1975, that it would investigate Lubbock and 330 other districts for compliance with the U.S. Supreme Court's decision in Lau vs. Nichols.

In that case, the court ruled that a school district's failure to provide special help to students who are not proficient in English is a violation of the Civil Rights Act of 1964.

Last January, the civil rights office accused Lubbock and about 50 other Texas school systems involved in the review, of irregularities in bilingual services. The allegations involved how the districts identified, categorized and provided services to students of limited English-speaking ability.

Lubbock school officials contended that some facts cited by the Office for Civil Rights were wrong or obsolete; that the district already was doing what the government wanted but had not formalized the practices; and that other criticisms represented flaws in the state bilingual plan.

After assisting in the development of new statewide bilingual guidelines, Lubbock officials in April gave the Office for Civil Rights copies of a new bilingual plan for the district.

The revised plan provided for more formal screening of bilingual students. But in general, Irons said, the document "simply put on paper what we had been doing all along."

While waiting for the plan to be approved, the school system submitted its annual applications for renewal of various federal grants.

In June, the U.S. Office of Education told Irons that Lubbock had been deemed ineligible for continuation of one certain grant — a $133,307 proposal under the Emergency School Aid Act (ESAA) — because of the alleged civil rights violations in bilingual education here.

ESAA monies are designated to enhance desegregation efforts. Lubbock had wanted to use the funds to continue extra reading, math and drama-music instruction in central and eastside secondary schools.

At a June 28 hearing, Irons argued that the allegations levied against the district's bilingual services should have been cleared up by the district's new bilingual plan. This plan, he said, "apparently was not taken into consideration" by the ESAA grant administrators.

Nevertheless, the Office of Education

Clements Favors Non-Political Investigation In Webb County

By CANDY SAGON
Avalanche-Journal Staff

A second and politically unencumbered investigation into alleged widespread corruption in South Texas's Webb County is needed before next month's general election, GOP gubernatorial candidate Bill Clements charged here Tuesday.

In an exclusive interview with The Avalanche-Journal, Clements called for reopening a grand jury probe into the allegations, but without the assistance of Webb County District Attorney Charles Boucher.

Boucher and Attorney General John Hill, Democratic gubernatorial candidate, have been accused by a former Webb County official of refusing to pursue an investigation into a scheme to bilk the county of an estimated $900,000.

The alleged scheme became a hot political issue 10 days ago following a copyrighted story in The Dallas Morning News.

In the story, former district superintendent Joe M. Guerra accused Hill of refusing to investigate the matter because the attorney general feared loss of support from political leaders in Laredo.

A sworn affidavit by Guerra, sent anonymously to the Dallas newspaper, reported Hill as saying, "How do you expect me to investigate when I have a lot of friends in Laredo?"

Hill subsequently labeled the newspaper story "false."

Clements said Tuesday three of his campaign workers had been to Laredo prior to the publication of the story "to see if there was any substance" to the charges, and to witness sworn statements by former county officials as to Hill's involvement in the matter.

But, he adamantly stated, no one in his campaign contacted the Dallas newspaper regarding the story, or anonymously sent the Dallas News reporter a copy of the affidavit.

"I don't know how they got the information, but how they got it is beside the point. Whatever has happened is due to Hill's action or inaction — he did it to himself," Clements said.

The Republican candidate said he personally "never discussed the matter with the (officials involved) in Laredo.

"I have not read the affidavit and don't know the details. But I feel where there's this much smoke, there's bound to be a fire," Clements said.

The Dallas businessman said Webb County commissioners legally could request that a grand jury investigate the corruption charges without the district attorney being involved.

"This district attorney (Boucher) has said he is for Hill and I think this is a conflict of interest," Clements said.

"I hope the investigation could be done before the election," he added.

Clements' own campaign earlier had come under attack from a Garza County judge who claimed he never authorized the use of his photograph for Clements campaign purposes.

Judge Giles W. Dalby claimed he had

At Wit's End...

By ERMA BOMBECK

At 5-4, Kylene Barker of Virginia has become the shortest Miss America since 1926.

I can't tell you all the ramifications yet, but for someone who walks under coffee tables, this has to be the most exciting news since the secret sauce stains came out of my car upholstery.

Hopefully, it will mean the end of discrimination for women 5-5 or under. The long-legged beauties who can braid their legs and still have them touch the floor are out of style. We've lived in a tall world too long. Maybe some of it will change.

Are you listening, Ann Landers? There may be a day when we don't have to go on an elevator and be sick with worry about what we'll do if we have to push the button for the 14th floor.

Rejoice, Rona (Barrett)! This could mean a breakthough in ready-made clothes where we don't have to chop 14 inches of material off every dress, skirt or coat we buy. (Which if sewn together would be enough to put a band-aid on the world.)

Think about it, Bette Midler. We can get a drink of water without a reach 'n seat, and hold onto straps on the bus without looking like we're being strung up for horse stealing.

And you, Helen Hayes, who has long fought the war of short people. Imagine being able to climb into the driver's seat of a car and not have to dig your heels into the floor and scoot your way to the steering wheel.

Tracy Austin, can you appreciate what it will be not to have to jog alongside a companion who is "walking or skipping" in order to keep up?

Imagine, Bonnie Franklin, no more treading water in the wading pool, or dancing and getting your hair caught in a belt buckle.

Ah, Nancy Walker, can you imagine driving through a drive-in bank and not having to swing on the car door to the box with your deposit slip?

Think about it, Sally Struthers. Pay phones you can reach. Shoes that don't give you a nosebleed.

It's a new day, gang. Let's stand up and hear it out there for short. I said stand up. Oh, you are standing...

South, declaring at a grand slam in spades, made the seemingly "natural" play at trick one only to find that he could not recover.

North-South conducted an excellent auction to reach seven spades. South had, in effect, a two-loser hand, so he was fully justified in opening two spades despite only 18 points in high cards. North first established the trump suit by raising, then cue-bid both his red aces while South showed first- and second-round club control. Now that he had a parking place for his second diamond, South confidently went on to the grand slam.

There would have been no story had West found a club lead, but there was nothing in the bidding to suggest that his opponents had a combined nine-card fit in a side suit. (A Lightner double by East might have steered West to the right lead.) Instead, West made his natural lead of the king of hearts.

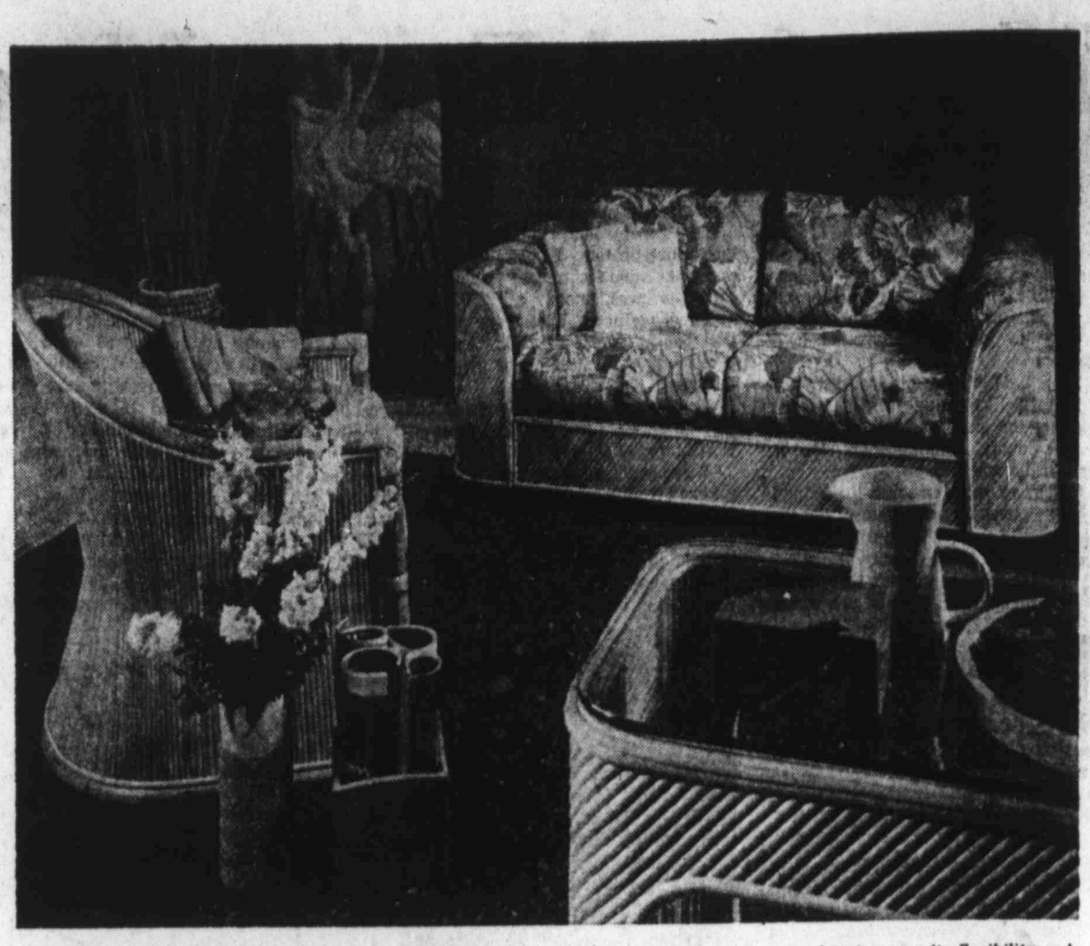

Declarer took dummy's ace, discarding a diamond from hand. He drew trumps and was all set to claim when East showed out on the first club lead. Declarer had no way to avoid a club loser. Down one.

Declarer was unlucky to find clubs 4-0 and East with the void rather than West. Still, a little more thought at trick one would have saved the day.

Instead of discarding a diamond from his hand on the ace of hearts, declarer should have sluffed a club. If clubs broke well, he would later be able to get back to dummy to discard a diamond on the fourth club and claim his contract. But not even a 4-0 club break ruffles declarer.

After drawing trumps and cashing the three high clubs, he enters dummy with the ace of diamonds and ruffs a club, setting up the fifth club. Declarer can get back to dummy with a trump to discard a diamond on the fifth club, thus making all thirteen tricks.

Your play to the first trick could decide the fate of the contract! A writer once remarked: "There's no such thing as a blind opening lead, only deaf opening leaders!" The Slim Gourmet

Her oven-fried pork chops with an oriental accent makes her this month's winner of our reader recipe contest...and the first winner to be awarded our new "International Slim Gourmet Cookbook" ($13.95, Harper & Row) just published this month.

Mrs. Cipriano dips pork chops in an egg mixture seasoned with sherry, soy and ginger before coating them with crumbs. Instead of frying them in fat, the chops are oven-baked on a non-stick pan coated with cooking spray. The result is crisp, like fried, but far less fattening. Here's how:

TERESA CIPRIANO'S
SHERRY-SOY 'OVEN-FRIED'
PORK CHOPS

4 pork chops, lean, well-trimmed of fat (about 1 1/3 lbs.)
4 tbsps. bread crumbs, unseasoned
1 egg (or ¼ cup substitute)
3 tbsps. soy sauce
1 tbsp. dry sherry (or other dry white wine) pinch of powdered ginger
pinch of garlic powder

Trim chops of fat. Sprinkle bread crumbs on a shallow plate. Beat remaining ingredients in a shallow bowl. Dip each chop first in egg mixture, then in bread crumbs, coating both sides lightly with crumbs.

Arrange chops in a single layer on a shallow non-stick baking pan sprayed with cooking spray for no-fat frying. Bake, uncovered, in a preheated 350-degree oven for 25 to 30 minutes. Turn and bake 20 to 25 minutes longer, until tender and cooked through. Makes four servings, 205 calories each.

More pork chop ideas:

SHAKE AND MAKE PORK CHOP BAKE

juice of 1 lemon
4 tbsps. water
4 tbsps. bread crumbs, Italian-seasoned

Marinate pork chops in lemon juice and water mixture for 45 minutes at room temperature (or all day in the refrigerator). Remove from marinade. Then shake with crumbs in a heavy paper bag (or press chops into crumbs on a plate, coating both sides lightly).

Liberally spray a non-stick shallow baking pan with cooking spray. Arrange chops in a single layer. Place pan in a preheated 350-degree oven and bake, uncovered, 25 to 30 minutes. Turn and continue to bake until crisp and baked through, an additional 15 to 20 minutes, depending on thickness. Serves four, 180 calories each.

PORK CHOPS PICCATA

juice of 1 lemon
¼ lb. mushrooms, fresh, sliced (or canned)
1 tbsp. diet margarine (or 1½ tsps. oil)
½ cup dry white wine (or water)
salt (or garlic salt) and pepper
3 tbsps. parsley, fresh, minced

Trim pork well; sprinkle liberally with lemon juice. Cover and wait 40 to 50 minutes, for lemon to penetrate.

Spray a non-stick skillet with cooking spray. Combine sliced mushrooms, margarine and 1 tablespoon wine. Cook and stir until moisture evaporates and mushrooms are browned. Remove from pan and set aside. Add pork chops and brown quickly on both sides. Season with salt and pepper; add wine. Lower heat to a simmer and cover. Simmer until chops are tender, about 50 minutes. Uncover and continue to simmer until most of the liquid has evaporated. Stir in browned mushrooms and parsley until heated through. Serve pork chops topped with mushrooms. (Garnish with lemon wedges, if desired.) Makes four servings, about 185 calories each.

DEAR ABBY

DEAR ABBY: An old friend of the family, a widow with plenty of money, does not realize that she has practically no friends because she is so tight with a dollar.

My wife and "Mrs. Cheapskate" are about the same age (75), and when Mrs. Cheapskate was laid up recently with a broken ankle, my wife did all her shopping for her and even drove her to a doctor in another city.

As a reward, Mrs. Cheapskate treated us to lunch at a fast-food restaurant.

My wife sets a beautiful table and prepares delicious meals when we have guests. We had Mrs. Cheapskate for dinner last evening, and when we took her home, she said, in parting, "We'll have to go out to lunch soon. Dutch treat, of course!"

This woman complains that she is lonely and doesn't know wht to do with her time. I say someone should tell her in plain English why she is so lonely. My wife says it would destroy our friendship and hurt her.

What do you say, Abby?

NO NAME IN GLENDALE

Dear No Name: I suspect you're more irked with Mrs. Cheapskate's cheapness than concerned about her loneliness.

Her lack of friends is HER problem and at 75 she's not likely to change. Your letter causes me to wonder why you and your wife would continue to cater to a person whose friendship is clearly all take and no give.

DEAR ABBY: While cleaning our desk drawer, I came across a 1935 $5 bill from China. That was before China went Communist and became the People's Republic of China.

Can you tell what this $5 bill is worth and where I can cash it in?

CHINESE BILL-HOLDER

Dear Bill-Holder: The bill is out of circulation and cannot be cashed. But one day it might be worth much more than $5 if kept as a collector's item.

DR. LAMB

Train, Don't Strain

By LAWRENCE E. LAMB, M.D.

DEAR DR. LAMB — I am a former weightlifter and jogger. Because of an injury, I was inactive for quite some time. During this period, I had a large weight gain. I have gone back to weightlifting but I am also trying to lose pounds. Local lifters advise me to eat quantities of protein and roughage. I am interested in your opinion.

Also, because of the increased exercise, I find myself arising each morning with exceptional stiffness in my legs and ankles. Is there anything I can do to loosen these muscles as average stretching exercise do not always work.

DEAR READER — We often see your problem in former athletes. While they are physically active as a distance runner, a champion swimmer or a football player, they use many calories. When they stop their exercise, they don't use nearly as many calories, but they keep on eating as many so they get fat and out of shape.

Excess protein will not help you. The roughage may enable you to maintain normal bowel function. Most foods that contain lots of roughage don't contain lots of calories, so that's a plus in your favor. You must limit your calorie intake while increasing your physical activity. By following such a routine for several months, you may be able to get back to a more normal weight level for you.

I am sending you The Health Letter Number 4-7, Weight Losing Diet. Others who want this issue can send 50 cents with a long, stamped, self-addressed envelope for it. Address your request to me in care of this newspaper, P.O. Box 1551, Radio City Station, New York, NY 10019. It provides fewer calories than you are probably used to, but it's about right if you really want to lose some excess fat.

I wouldn't like for you to stick to this diet forever. Try it for six weeks, and then stabilize yourself without trying to reduce your weight at all for about three weeks. Then go back to it.

You should increase your daily walking activity and then you can return to your weightlifting program at a reasonable level. Your muscle stiffness means you are overdoing your exercise program. The practical exercise programs are those that train and don't strain. Continue your stretching exercises, but decrease your level of weight training so that you don't have a lot of soreness and stiffness each day.

You are not any different from anybody else. If you control your calorie intake and increase your calorie expenditure to a sensible degree, you will be able to gradually eliminate any excess fat you have picked up.

DEAR DR. LAMB — I read in one of your columns that if vitamin C was old and used a lot, it might increase your tendency to develop kidney stones. Why should age of the vitamin C make any difference?

You have me worried. We have a bottle of it that is seven years old. It tastes the same. Isn't absorbic acid just absorbic acid regardless of its age? Should we not take this now? We have used it as one to two pills a day when someone was sick. We have about 200 pills left.

DEAR READER — Throw it away. The problem is that vitamin C can convert chemically to oxalate. The older the vitamin C is, the more likely it has already undergone if it does taste the same to you.

The fact you have taken some of it doesn't necessarily mean you are going to develop kidney stones, but, certainly, if you are taking massive doses of old vitamin C, as you might be if you were trying to treat an acute illness, it is not really a good idea. As a general rule, anyone who has vitamin C sitting around that's nine months old or older should discard it.

Neutral Beam Injector Helps To Harness Nuclear Fusion

By CARL A. VINES

OAK RIDGE, Tenn. (UPI) — Researchers at Princeton University have moved the nation another step toward harnassing nuclear fusion for energy production thanks to a device designed and built here — the neutral beam injector.

Using three of these proton guns shipped from Oak Ridge, Princeton physicists proved that hydrogen gas contained in a doughnut-shaped device and confined within a powerful magnetic field can be raised to 60 million degrees Fahrenheit — without the whole thing running out of control.

Science Today

Researchers expect that by adding a fourth neutral beam injector they can achieve temperatures in the fusion range, around 80 million degrees.

The recent Princeton success was a significant advance in research in nuclear fusion, the process by which two atoms are welded together to release energy. And it moves the nation closer to the eventual commercial use of fusion as a power source in the 21st century.

Useful fusion can be achieved only when three things occur.

First, hydrogen gas, or some isotope of hydrogen such as tritium and deuterium found in abundance in sea water, is boosted to fusion temperatures.

Second, the hydrogen gas must be confined within the fuel vessel long enough for fusion to occur, in the range of one-tenth of a second or longer.

Third, the energy output of the total system must be higher than the energy input. Otherwise the whole thing is an exercise in futility.

U.S. research now centers around a tokamak device first developed by the Russians. Such a device was built at Oak Ridge in the 1960s and called "Ormak." By inducing an electric current in hydrogen gas whirling about the stainless steel donut, temperatures of around 20 million degrees were achieved.

But researchers found there was a limit to the heat an electric current could produce. After a certain range, regardless of how much current was introduced, the hydrogen or "plasma" got no hotter.

So the neutral beam injection process was devised. What happens in this device is that protons are accelerated to tremendous speeds and aimed at the whirling plasma in the donut.

Protons, which have a positive electrical charge, can't get through to the plasma because of the powerful magnetic barrier used to keep the plasma pushed away from the stainless steel walls of the donut.

To overcome this problem, the protons are fired through a cloud of hydrogen gas. They pick up an electron in collision with hydrogen atoms, become neutral hydrogen atoms themselves and go slamming through the magnetic field into the hydrogen plasma.

Once past the barrier, the particles in the beam crash into the ionized hydrogen plasma particles, boosting the heat of the plasma through friction. The particles injected into the stream of plasma become part of the plasma itself in the process.

Once researchers produce a temperature of 80 million degrees, coupled with a sufficiently dense plasma, the stage will be set for fusion. In that process two hydrogen atoms will collide, fusing into a single atom of helium and releasing a neutron which goes flying off.

Oak Ridge researchers have succeeded in confining the superheated plazma as long as 29-thousandths of a second. But there's still a way to go in this area to boost that confinement to a tenth of a second or longer.

Decline Seen In Political Labels

By IRA R. ALLEN

WASHINGTON (UPI) — If you are a typical citizen, when — or if —you go to the polls next month you will be voting in a different way than your parents did a generation ago.

Washington Window

While you may still have their same preference for a candidate of your religion or nationality, the chances are it won't make a bit of difference what party he or she belongs to.

Not as it was in the old days when voters marked a single X or pulled one lever to vote for a whole slate whose views on a wide range of issues could be predicted simply by noting their party label.

You will likely vote for the candidate who comes across best on television or who shares your view on gun control, abortion, Proposition 13 or union rights. And by doing so, you will be reinforcing twin trends just now getting the attention of political scholars — the decline of parties and the decline in voting.

The American Enterprise Institute, a Washington thinktank, has issued the thoughts of 10 political scientists writing on the theme of "The New American Political System." The Washington Monthly magazine for October deals with "The Politics of Selfishness."

"If one message emerges from the pages of this book," says AEI editor Anthony King, "it is that fewer and fewer cohesive blocs are to be found in the American polity." As a result, he says, the outcome of any number of political issues is impossible to predict and change is occurring either too slowly or too rapidly.

The landmarks of the new system are: lower voter turnout, an increase in presidential primaries, the growth of well financed single-issue blocs and the independence of members of Congress who defy their leaders at will and who are getting re-elected more easily and with higher margins than in past years.

Parties used to train candidates, moderate ideological disputes, fix up potholes and deliver Christmas turkeys. They would define issues along broad themes — Democrats for social welfare and Republicans for fiscal restraint. Parties would embrace what would otherwise be sharply antagonistic splinter groups. For example, both blacks and corporate executives used to be Republicans and women's rights advocates and anti-abortion Catholics were exclusively Democratic.

Now, parties serve only to nominate candidates, and due to low voter turnout and new rules for participation, the opposing nominees tend to have sharply different idological stripes. As a result, issues are coming to prominence as they never did before, the business of governing is getting too uncomfortable for old-time incumbents and the pendulum of public opinion is likely to swing in shorter arcs — witness the desire of some states to change their minds after a couple of years on the Equal Rights Amendment.

AEI's Austin Ranney predicts what it will be like without parties.

"The candidate organizations, the women's caucuses, the black caucuses, the right-to-life leagues and the like would become the only real players in the game. The mass communications media would become the sole agencies for sorting out the finalists from the original entrants and for defining the voters' choices."

Chairman Of ACU Rated 96 Percent

By DONALD M. ROTHBERG

WASHINGTON (AP) — Could the American Conservative Union think its own chairman, Rep. Philip Crane, is less than perfect?

Apparently so.

The ACU recently looked at the voting records of members of Congress. It found that on 20 key votes during the first six months of the session, five House members voted correctly 100 percent of the time. Crane wasn't one of them.

It was as if an occult hand had writ "shame" across Crane's dream of supplanting Ronald Reagan as leader of the conservative wing of the Republican Party.

The Illinois congressman jumped ahead of Reagan and everybody else last August by declaring his candidacy for the 1980 presidential nomination.

His "wrong" vote was on a motion to send the New York City aid bill back to committee with instructions to have it provide seasonal loans instead of loan guarantees.

According to the ACU ratings, the correct vote was "yes," in favor of sending it back to committee. Supporters of loan guarantees — "bailouts" in the rhetoric of opponents — voted against sending the bill back to committee. They were joined by hard-line opponents of any aid to the city.

Among the hard-liners joining pro-aid congressmen on the issue were Crane, Robert Bauman, R-Md., and John Ashbrook, R-Ohio, all conservative Republicans accustomed to 100 percent ratings from ACU.

Crane expects ACU to reverse itself when it issues its ratings for the entire year.

"They'll almost have to go back and admit their mistake," he said. "After seeing all the good guys voting for the bailout, they should have called and checked."

But Fran Griffin, press aide for the ACU, said the chairman shouldn't complain about his 96.

"I think that Crane should be thrilled that he got a 96," she said. "It showed the ratings aren't fixed."

Dyed Hair?

Senate Majority Leader Robert C. Byrd, D-W.Va., has an enviable head of hair, silver gray and always neatly combed with no hint of a bald spot.

Finally, a reporter summoned the nerve to ask the majority leader whether he was dyeing his hair.

The senator dodged the question.

"I'm pleased I have a head of hair that can be either gray or black," said he.

Word Inventor

Credit for the latest congressional blow against the English language goes to Sen. Barry Goldwater, R-Ariz., who invented the word "berations."

After listening to Democratic Leader Robert C. Byrd berate Republicans for delaying Senate action on pending bills, Goldwater suggested that "we might get a lot more done with sweetness than with the constant berations of our side."

Mexico Withholding Access To New Oil Fields

By LeROY POPE

NEW YORK (UPI) — Despite the confirmed discovery of big new petroleum reserves in Mexico, the world is slowly but surely running out of easily recovered gas and oil, says Sheldon Lambert, manager for energy economics for Shell Oil Co. in Houston.

"The Alaskan Arctic supplies look big but the South Alaskan areas are a disappointment and so far the Baltimore Canyon area of the Atlantic is quite a disappointment," Lambert said.

He said Mexico's new reserves are much larger than at first suspected but it is not yet possible to evaluate them accurately. "They probably are at least half as big as Saudi Arabia's and could be bigger," Lambert said, "but the important thing is that they are not going to become available rapidly because the Mexicans don't want to make them available."

Lambert's assessment was confirmed when a high official of Pemex, the Mexican state-controlled petroleum company, appeared recently with several other oil experts on public television. He made it plain that Mexico would not go into any crash production program, that it would produce all the oil and gas itself and would not readmit to its borders the international oil companies which were expelled in 1938 by President Lazaro Cardenas.

Others on the televised program said the Mexican government had concealed the size of the new petroleum finds for many months because it did not wish to excite the Mexican people about the chances for a big bonanza and create popular pressure for extremely rapid development of the oil reserves that might upset the nation's social structure.

Lambert said, however, the current impasse over importing natural gas from Mexico is not likely to persist. American buyers, he said, are quite willing to pay the price the Mexicans want for the gas but the U.S. government presently forbids them to do so for fear that would upset all gas price regulation.

Lambert also said that, regardless of their desire to go slow in developing their big petroleum reserves, the Mexicans do need to export oil and gas on a steadily rising basis because they have a very high unemployment rate and need money to finance development of new labor intensive industries.

A much more optimistic picture of world petroleum supplies in years ahead than Lambert's is presented in "Window on Oil" by Bernardo F. Grossling, a Washington geophysicist, who has been a consultant to the World Bank, the United Nations, the government of Chile and Standard Oil Co. of California. The study was published by London's eminent Financial Times and sells for $110 a copy.

Grossling contends that the productive potential of about half the world's prospective areas has been much underestimated. He says the best sources for new petroleum are in the developing countries of Latin America, Africa, south and southeast Asia and the western Pacific regions.

He believes anywhere between 1.35 trillion and 4.8 trillion barrels of oil and gas remain to be discovered. World oil consumption in 1976 was only 21.2 billion barrels.

Grossling said these so far undiscovered reserves mean we have oil to last at least 76 more years and perhaps 280 years if the annual increase in the rate of consumption can be held to 3 percent. On the whole, he believes Latin America, including Mexico, has four times as much petroleum as the Middle East.

'Fast Food' Can Be Nutritious

NEW ORLEANS (UPI) — "Fast food" does not necessarily translate into "junk food," a nutrition researcher reports.

Barbara Shannon, an associate professor of nutrition at Pennsylvania State University, recently told the American Dietetic Association that fast food chains often provide healthy, wholesome meals, although she stopped well short of a blanket endorsement.

Mrs. Shannon said trends toward fast food and increased eating out among Americans pose serious questions for dieticians.

"I think that nutrition educators have not traditionally included restaurant dining as one of the sources of food and nutrition. Now we have to realize that eating out is a way of life," she said in an interview.

"We have to include that institution in our nutrition education within the context of the total diet."

Eating at fast food restaurants — those with rapid, over-the-counter service — is approaching a volume of $20 billion annually in the United States.

Some people rely on fast food restaurants for as many as 10 meals a week, Mrs. Shannon's research has shown. And customers under the age of 35 choose a fast food place about 60 percent of the time when they eat out.

There are three key questions about fast food eating as it bears on people's health, Mrs. Shannon said:

—How often do they eat out?

—How nutritious is the food offered?

—What do they choose from among the offerings?

"This business of going around and saying all fast food is junk food is just not so," Mrs. Shannon said. "There are many fast food items that are good foods. There are some that are not."

Asked which foods are the best, Mrs. Shannon is pressed to give an answer.

Most sandwiches — hamburgers, cheeseburgers, "Big Macs," fish filets and so forth — meet good nutrition requirements, she said, though some have too many calories. And she points out, "if a hamburger has tomato and lettuce on it, it's better from a nutritional standpoint than just a hamburger."

The least nutritional foods are easy to list.

"Colas — soft drinks — are the worst. They offer practically nothing but calories," she said. Second worst are fruit pies, she said — though conceding, "I think they're delicious."

Mrs. Shannon said she is encouraged by a trend toward more diversity in fast food. Where a few years ago the term "fast food" evoked images of carhops and hamburgers, she said, it now covers a wide gamut including Mexican food, fried chicken, pizza, salad bars and even Chinese and Japanese food in some areas.

The concept of fast food service is catching on in school lunch programs and Mrs. Shannon views that trend with ambivalence.

"It's a plus that this fast food approach is at least reducing plate waste. They are improving the fast food menu. That's the plus side. The negative side is that it's not teaching children to eat a wide variety of foods, to learn to eat other kinds.

"I have strong reservations about reinforcing in these youngsters a reliance on a limited food menu."

Building Firm Files Action In Takeover

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Flintkote Co., a major producer of building materials, has filed suit in federal court to block what it claims is an attempted takeover by Canadian and Belgian firms.

The suit, filed last week, claims the defendants, headed by Genstar Limited, Societe Generale de Belgique, S.A., and Sofina, S.A., acted illegally in acquiring more than 21.5 percent of Flintkote's outstanding common stock.

It alleges the defendants schemed to "fraudulently acquire Flintkote shares with the aim of obtaining control of Flintkote and of restraining and eliminating competition through an unconventional and illegal tender offer" in violation of antitrust and securities laws.

Flintkote based in Stamford, Conn., produces portland cement, gypsum wallboard and other building materials.

Genstar, based in Montreal, is a large cement and gypsum manufacturer. SoGen, headquartered in Brussels, Belgium, has substantial interests in over 80 corporations, including 2.5 million shares of Genstar, and is described as one of the largest and most powerful industrial organizations in the world.

Sofina is a Belgian holding company with worldwide interests in gas, electricity, petroleum, finance and property and owns 300,000 shares of Genstar.

The suit alleges Genstar's plan to control Flintkote will provide it with an outlet for its excess cement and gypsum capacity and eliminate Flintkote as an independent competitor in cement in northeast and northwest parts of the country and for gypsum in the west.

European Governments Leary Of Religious Cults

By DAVID MINTHORN

BONN, West Germany (AP) — The Rev. Moon, Hare Krishna, Scientology, Children of God. The guru sects that earlier beguiled young Americans have spread to Western Europe, and government leaders are alarmed.

These fringe religions are active in Britain, West Germany, France, Holland, Denmark and Italy, an Associated Press survey shows.

Authorities have been disturbed by news reports from some of these countries linking several sects to allegations about "brain-wash" conversions, sexual abuse, fraud, visa violations and suicides.

Ten Hare Krishna monks were heavily fined in Frankfurt, West Germany, last April for begging $1.2 million under false pretenses — claiming the money was destined for starving children in India, while it actually went to the sect's castle commune.

The Bonn government became so worried about crime reports involving the cults that it launched a campaign this summer to warn young Germans. It estimated 150,000 persons, most in the 14 to 28 age group, have joined a dozen various sects.

"The common aim of these sects in West Germany is the pursuit of power and money. ... The leaders scarcely believe the ideals they proclaim," said the Ministry of Youth, Family and Health, which is leading the drive against the fringe religions.

Named in the warnings are the Rev. Sun Myung Moon's Unification Church; the Society of Transcendental Meditation; Hare Krishna monks; the Divine Light Mission of Maharaj Ji; Mose David Berg's Children of God; and L. Ron Hubbard's Church of Scientology.

"All these groups share fixation on an authoritarian, patriarchal leader, total obedience, strictly regimented community life and uncompromising rejection of the 'old society,'" the ministry said.

German parents' groups are working with traditional churches to rescue their youngsters. "You get the impression the followers are bewitched, dazed and intoxicated," said one mother of a sect member.

The sects have been able to flourish in Western Europe — and the United States — under guarantees of freedom of religion. "Unless there is some evidence of criminal activity there is very little the government can do," said a British spokesman, summing up government policy.

Only Scientology is barred in Britain. In 1968, the Home Office found the sect "socially harmful," and foreign Scientologists were effectively barred from living in Britain.

A member of Parliament appealed for a clampdown on the Moonies and other sects in 1975, but Shirley Summerskill, under-secretary of state at the Home Office, replied:

"We may as individuals take the view that the doctrines advanced by Mr. Moon are lunatic. We may be particularly suspicious of the motives of people who, while claiming to benefit humanity, have substantially enriched themselves. But these are matters of opinion, and surely it is one of the principles of a free society that people may propagate ideas which the majority of us ... do not believe."

Moon is now resisting efforts to remove him from Britain, where some 3,000 Moonies are believed to be living on farms and in communes.

Transcendental Meditation followers of Maharishi Mahesh Yogi are said to number 80,000 in Britain, growing at 10,000 a year. This sect's country estate is an Elizabethan mansion in Kent.

The Hare Krishna movement has its mansion, bought for it by former Beatle George Harrision, in Hertfordshire, and the Divine Light Mission claims more than 6,000 followers in Britain.

The French Interior Ministry said the sects are "watched with a magnifying glass" and prosecuted when laws are broken. Hubbard, the American founder of Scientology, is appealing a conviction on fraud charges in France. Hubbard claims one million French followers, but membership in other groups is said to be small.

The newspaper Le Monde published an interview last month with a 16-year-old girl who admitted prostituting herself to lure men into the Children of God. The girl said of her acts: "I think of other things. And when it's finished I tell them about our faith."

The Interior Ministry said it has taken no action against the sect over prostitution because "we can't really distinguish whether it is a personal wish or an activity sanctioned by their church."

The fiery suicide of a 24-year-old Australian woman Oct. 2 in Switzerland, apparently to protest social injustice, was the latest sensational news report involving the fringe sects. The girl's father said she had joined the small Indian sect Ananda Marga, and he denounced its leaders for allegedly encouraging such acts.

Police said a West German couple from the same cult burned themselves to death last Feb. 8 in a similar protest.

The Dutch government said it is not overly worried, since members of fringe sects probably number only in the hundreds in Amsterdam and Rotterdam. However, Moonies are said to be a problem in Amsterdam, where they stand on street corners and try to recruit students.

Denmark is unofficially estimated to have at least 10,000 young cult members, ranging from Hare Krishna to Satanists. For the past few years, Lutheran church spokesmen and several newspapers have been campaigning against the activities of Scientology recruiters in the country, but no government action has been taken.

CULTS FLOURISHING IN EUROPE — Monks of the Hare Krishna sect leave a Frankfurt, West Germany, court last year after being heavily fined for begging $1.2 million under false pretenses. The state charged they claimed the money, which actually went to the sect's castle commune, was for starving children in India. The cults that beguiled young Americans in the 1970s have spread to Western Europe, and several governments have become increasingly concerned. (AP Laserphoto)

Texas Prison Officials Unsure Whether Strike Will Continue

HUNTSVILLE (AP) — Hundreds of Texas prison inmates have participated in a six-day work and hunger strike, but prison officials who quenched the action late Tuesday were unsure how many would re-join the protest today.

Only eight inmates at the Ellis Unit near Huntsville remained on strike after officials Tuesday night said "there's a limit" and put striking prisoners back in their cells.

Some volunteered to return to their cells as many had during the day, but prison spokesman Ron Taylor said some inmates at the Coffield Unit near Palestine were "put in their cells." He said some "reasonable force" was used.

"It's over for today," he said late Tuesday night, adding that officials were unsure whether the strike would continue today.

Taylor said the fate of the eight prisoners on strike overnight at the Ellis Unit was up to the Ellis warden. Earlier Tuesday, 100 of 108 striking inmates at that unit asked to be allowed back in their cells.

Of the eight remaining on strike, at least one has been out since last Thursday when the protest began in sympathy with a prisoners' rights suit in federal court in Houston.

Most non-striking inmates at the Ellis and Ramsey One units were kept in their cells Tuesday as the strike spread to other units "to reduce the potential for problems," Taylor said.

However, as additional inmates were joining the strike, dozens were returning to work, Taylor said.

In addition to the 100 who returned to their cells at the Ellis Unit, officials at Ramsey Unit One said they sent out a small work line of 62 prisoners. At Ramsey Unit Two, 194 prisoners had still refused to work but were returned to their cells Tuesday night.

Taylor said several hundred inmates refused to work Tuesday at the Coffield Unit, but 80 who were being held in the yard area decided they would rather work than go to their cells.

At the Darrington Unit south of Houston, the number of striking inmates dropped from 150 to 136, and 71 inmates refused to work at the Eastham Unit north of Trinity.

At the Clemens Unit south of Brazoria, seven prisoners had refused to work Tuesday, but by afternoon operations at the facility were back to normal, Taylor said.

The strike began last Thursday, on the fourth day of a federal trial in Houston in which inmates allege prison living conditions are so harsh they constitute cruel and unusual punishment.

Meanwhile, a 42-year-old inmate who was paroled Tuesday from the Ellis Unit said "striking inmates don't know what they are doing. They are only hurting themselves."

Bobby Joe Mays, in an interview at the Huntsville unit where he was released, said that as a trusty (he was a tractor driver) he could observe the actions of the strikers at the maximum security prison's enclosed yard.

"I will have to agree that the strikers were extremely quiet and it seems to me that they did very little talking," Mays told the Huntsville Item. "They just sat or stood around the yard."

Mays, who was serving a three-year term for forgery from Dallas County, is being paroled to a halfway house in Big Spring.

Mays said he had served prison terms in other states and after doing time in Texas, "I can truthfully say that the Texas Department of Corrections is by far better than any prison I have been in."

Thus far Prison Director W.J. Estelle has chosen not to comment on the strike situation.

"Mr. Estelle doesn't think he needs to say anything about this," Taylor said. "And he will decide when it is necessary to talk about what has gone on."

Taylor said he was still trying to piece together a shooting incident at the Darrington unit Thursday when three inmates received minor wounds. They were hit when Assistant Warden Howard Mitchell fired three warning shots with his shotgun as inmates began moving toward the guards.

Mitchell fired twice into the air and once into the ground in front of the approaching inmates.

Armstrong Not Surprised With Father's Decision

TYLER (AP) — Television evangelist Garner Ted Armstrong says he's not surprised to hear that his elderly father's chief advisor has become the heir apparent to his faher's wealthy Worldwide Church of God empire.

The younger Armstrong, reached at the headquarters of his Church of God International here, said the "entire basic grass roots expected this to occur and the majority of ministry expected this to occur so I'm not surprised."

"I think, frankly, Mr. Rader is very clearly the victor in what was a power struggle. He moved into my office, into my desk; his secretary sits where mine sat."

Rader emerged the victor in a father-son conflict that ended with the younger Armstrong's ouster or "disfellowship" last June.

He said he wonders about the influence Rader holds over his father, 86-year-old Herbert Armstrong, who founded the church.

But, in the long run, Armstrong said he feels his father has done him "the greatest favor" by removing him. He says he no longer is bothered by "enormous politics, corporate inertia and a monumental debt retirement program struggling to make ends in a gigantic religious empire which has its financial resources committed to a fiscal plant and to such ventures as ... Quest magazine."

He confessed to talking to his father privately concerning Rader's personal income in connection with the work he was doing and the money spent by Rader and his wife.

The younger Armstrong said he still gets calls and letters from deacons, ministers and followers of the Worldwide Church of God complaining about the state of the church.

"I had hoped for people to think for themselves, to make their own decisions and not be blindfolded and hogtied by being told what to think and what to believe."

Armstrong said he cannot rule out that Rader will be appointed successor or "already has done so in a document filed in a safe somewhere."

Garner Ted now runs a similar organization but said, "There's one very important difference in our attitude toward the people in the world. We do not believe in exclusivism, and keeping the sheep securely huddled together in fear — and there is absolute fear, and I mean it is a fear-ridden organization."

Details Of Smuggling Ring Surface

SAN FRANCISCO (UPI) — Details of an international drug-smuggling ring whose participants were largely black belt judo experts have begun to surface in the wake of an apparent narcotics-related San Francisco-Bay area triple murder.

Frank Ragusa, one of the victims killed inside a plush Berkeley house last January, was linked to the ring, it was disclosed Tuesday.

A black belt judo fighter named William E. Backhus, of Philadelphia, faces charges in Frankfurt, West Germany, of conspiracy to smuggle huge quantities of a substance known as "ET" into the United States.

The European-based ring which Backhus is accused of managing, is believed to be the source of illegal drugs found in Ragusa's Berkeley home after he, his wife, and another woman were slain there last Jan. 25.

Backhus, according to German investigators, is a Japan-trained black belt judo fighter who organized his ring with the help of other judo fighters.

Also facing charges in Germany is Clarence Watson, 25, an American judo practitioner, employed as a bartender in a U.S. Army officers club. German police said several Dutch men involved in the ring also are judo experts.

The charges against Backhus are that he and his group bought more than 20 kilograms of "ET" (ergotamine tartate) in Germany and smuggled it to secret laboratories in the United States where it was to be converted into LSD.

A drug official said 20 kilograms of "ET" would produce 50 million doses of LSD.

Ragusa, 29, is believed to have obtained "ET" from the European smuggling ring. Several pounds of "ET" were found in his home after the murders.

Investigators in Alameda County and El Dorado County said Ragusa is believed to have purchased $90,000 worth of the substance from Lee Hassler, a 35-year-old Berkeley linguist who made frequent trips to Germany.

Hassler was shot to death two years ago. His body was found alongside California Highway 50 in El Dorado County, wrapped in a tarpaulin. At the time, his death was not linked by authorities with drug traffic.

But now, El Dorado County investigators believe he was involved in drug smuggling and may have been killed in a dispute with a dealer identified as Jim Teegarden.

According to the account, Hassler had a series of meetings with Ragusa in 1975 and 1976 which led to the purchase by Ragusa of "ET" from Hassler.

An unidentified El Dorado County inspector was quoted as saying Ragusa agreed to pay $30,000 per kilo for three kilos, but that Teegarden, who was to make the delivery, upped the price to $45,000 per kilo, and that this annoyed Hassler.

The dispute which followed may explain the slaying of Hassler, the inspector was quoted as saying.

Hassler maintained an apartment in Hannover, Germany. Sources in Frankfurt say that after his death Backhus, posing as an American Army officer assigned to collect his effects, entered the apartment and removed cash and documents. But the sources said the intruder did not find the key to a safety deposit box which the police found later. The box contained two kilos of "ET," according to the sources.

A spokesman for the U.S. Drug Enforcement Administration said the smuggling ring was "a class one case" and that it was broken through "terrific, international cooperation."

Lawrence Reilly, 29, of San Rafael is being held on charges of murder in the Ragusa slayings. Police say they believe others are also involved.

Cosmic Notes Solicited For Space Mission

HAMPTON, Va. (AP) — "Bring back peace to all mankind," reads one message bound for outer space by rocket. "Pray for peace," pleads another.

The messages — 135 of them so far — were scrawled by visitors at the Langley Research Center, which is soliciting handwritten communications to the cosmos to commemorate the 20th anniversary of the U.S. space program.

The signed messages will orbit the Earth for six to 12 months affixed to a Langley-developed spacecraft to be launched at Cape Canaveral in Florida sometime next year.

The craft, called a long-duration exposure facility, will help inaugurate the American space shuttle project.

Visitors to the Langley center can sign a logbook between now and the end of October. All the cosmic commentaries will be reduced to microscopic size for the trip skyward.

So far, the scribbled sentiments have been short, pithy and upbeat.

"God be with us," asks one. "Freedom, health, happiness and love equal life," says another. "One nation," another reads.

French Government Shows Smoking Drop

PARIS (AP) — The French government believes it is winning its fight against smoking, particularly among teenagers, Health Minister Simon Veil and Education Minister Christian Beullac say.

They produced statistics Monday showing a decrease in the number of French smokers and a marked decrease among high-school students. They said smoking by high school students dropped 16 percent between 1976 and 1977 but that 46 percent of France's children between the ages of 12 and 18 still smoke. That is 6 percent above the national average.

REINSTATEMENT ORDERED

GOLDEN, Colo. (AP) — A subsidiary of the Adolph Coors Co. has been ordered to reinstate an employee fired in April 1977 after an argument with security guards who ordered him to remove a "Boycott Coors" sign from his car windshield. A five-member panel of the National Labor Relations Board ordered the Coors Container Corp. to put Mark Mugge, 27, back to work.

Ex-Employee Of Motel Testifies During Rape Victim's Civil Suit

By FRANK PATRICK
Avalanche-Journal Staff

A former motel employee was one of the first witnesses Tuesday as testimony got underway in a civil trial in which a rape victim is suing a motel chain for allegedly not providing sufficient protection.

The woman, 24 at the time, reportedly was raped in her room at the Rodeway Inn Motel, 2401 4th St., Jan. 20, 1977.

She filed a civil suit in U.S. District Court against Rodeway Inns of America Inc. and individual defendants, seeking $1 million in damages.

The plaintiff, reportedly a California attorney, was in Lubbock to meet with a Texas Tech University legal fraternity.

She said in her petition that she was accosted by a male gunman as she was walking from an adjacent restaurant to her room about 10 p.m.

The assailant forced her into her motel room at gunpoint, taped her, and then tried to get her to cash some checks, the petition says.

According to the plaintiff, the man, in the effort to force her to cash the checks, accompanied her to the motel office, to a nearby convenience store and to the restaurant. The woman managed to escape while at the restaurant, the petition says.

The plaintiff contends the motel failed to maintain adequate lighting on the premises, failed to provide adequate security and operated the business at night in a high crime area with inexperienced employees.

Former motel employee Tom Joyce, 23, said he thought something unusual was going on when he saw the plaintiff and a man together in the motel office sometime after 10:15 p.m.

"The gentleman with her did not look compatible — he was shorter than she was and not well dressed. He was dressed in a green Army jacket and had his hand in his pocket, he never took it out," Joyce testified.

Joyce, who said he had stopped in at the office after getting off work at 10:15 p.m., said that he acted as a handyman around the motel, with an official job designation of porter. He told plaintiff attorney Bob Huff that he had had no training in motel management.

In contrast to the man, the plaintiff was well dressed, Joyce remembered.

He said the plaintiff asked the desk man how much in travelers checks she could cash and was told she could cash $60 worth. He said it was suggested that she go to the convenience store to cash more than that.

Joyce said he thought it was odd that the woman wanted so much ready cash.

When the duo left, Joyce said, the man — who, he said, had not taken part in the conversation — backed out, keeping his eyes on the two motel employees.

"Did it ever dawn on you that the man with his hand in his pocket might have a gun?" Huff queried.

"No, at the time it didn't," Joyce said. He explained he was accustomed to seeing odd things in the motel business.

In fact, Joyce said, the thought crossed his mind that the woman might have wanted quick cash to finance a drug purchase or for something else illegal. He said he told his coworker that "something's not right" after the two left the office.

Joyce said the woman seemed calm while in the office.

He told defense attorney Charles Jones on cross-examination that if he had felt the woman were in trouble he would have obtained assistance.

"If something had stood out, I would have," he said.

Testimony indicated that uniformed policemen were in the restaurant at the time.

Joyce described the motel premises near 4th Street as well-lighted, but said it was dark on the south side of the motel.

Because of a commitment by one or more attorneys, testimony in the case, being tried before a six-member jury, will not resume until Thursday.

Plant Uses Discussed

Some 150 international delegates heard five speakers explain the potential uses of many wild plants growing in the southwestern regions of the United States at the International Arid Lands Conference on Plant Resources here.

The speakers explained research now being conducted on the use of certain plants growing in arid and semi-arid parts of Texas, New Mexico, Arizona and California. Experiments have revealed potential uses to produce oils, rubber, industrial chemicals and medicine.

Dr. D.M. Yermanos of the University of California lectured on the potential uses of a waxy desert plant called jojoba.

Dr. George P. Hanson of the Los Angeles State and County Arboretum outlined research progress of a rubber-yielding desert shrub, guayule, which also grows in the southwestern region of the United States.

Firestone International official Don Weihe said his company is expecting to "pilot run" commercial processing of the plant's rubber by 1980.

Gary Nabhan of the University of Arizona reported other research progress on proboscieda or desert claw, a desert plant native to parts of the Southwest and parts of northern Mexico which produces edible oil and protein in its seeds.

The conference is being held at the Lubbock Civic Center from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. through Friday.

Dive Off Bridge Kills Teen-Ager

CANON CITY, Colo. (UPI) — A 17-year-old Colorado Springs girl walked to the middle of the Royal Gorge Bridge, the world's highest suspension bridge, and then leaped 1,055 feet to her death before onlookers could stop her.

Authorities said an Illinois couple spotted the girl as she sat on a railing in the middle of the bridge Tuesday, but did not realize she planned to jump. The teenager tumbled into the swift Arkansas River, where her body later was found wedged underwater between two rocks.

Authorities said they had determined the girl's identity through papers found in the purse she left on the bridge. However, they refused to release her name or speculate on motives. She did not leave a suicide note.

The bridge, which attracts more than 500,000 tourists each year, was built in 1929 by the late Lon P. Piper, a San Antonio motel owner.

Schmidt Asks Japanese To Up Imports

TOKYO (AP) — West German Chancellor Helmut Schmidt, on an official visit to Japan, reminded his hosts today of a rule of free trade.

Speaking at a luncheon given in his honor by the Japan-German Society, Schmidt said: "A nation which seeks to export to world markets must also be prepared to open its own markets for imports."

Japan has come in for sharp criticism from its trading partners for benefitting from free trade while making it difficult for foreign manufactured goods to enter Japan.

In 1977 Japan exported to West Germany $2.78 billion worth of mostly manufactured goods, while buying $1.49 billion worth.

Unlike another recent visitor, U.S. Secretary of Commerce Juanita Kreps, the West German chancellor did not mention Japan by name. Mrs. Kreps last week pointed to Japan as having maintained trade surpluses with the United States for 13 years while maintaining its own barriers to processed goods.

Schmidt said, "Wild fluctuations in currency rates can be expected to come to an end when Japan has succeeded in reducing its trade surplus and the United States has controlled inflation and limited its imports of oil."

Schmidt said the European contribution to currency stability will come from the establishment of a European monetary system.

"As the European monetary system grows, it will soften the fluctuations of the yen and the dollar and contribute to make the role of the International Monetary Fund more effective," he said.

The West German chancellor, in Tokyo on a four-day official visit, emphasized the traditional feelings of friendship and mutual respect between the German and Japanese people.

Photos Not Required For Sect Members

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — Members of religious sects that prohibit photographs will no longer be required to have their pictures on driver's licenses, said the Indiana Supreme Court, ruling on grounds that the requirement violates constitutional religious freedoms.

The decision upheld a ruling by Vigo County Superior Court Judge Charles McCrory, which exempted members of the Pentacostal House of Prayer, a fundamentalist Terre Haute religious group, and the Amish from the photo requirement. The state Bureau of Motor Vehicles had appealed the ruling, arguing that driving is a privilege subject to regulation.

1 IN 5 IN CIVIL SERVICE

There are approximately 16 million civil servants — federal, state and local — in the United States today, compared with 8½ million 18 years ago. One of every five workers is employed by government.

Legal Group's Director Raps Insurance Firms

By PAULA TILKER
Avalanche-Journal Staff

By inflating unverifiable loss figures and using them in rate increase cases, the state insurance industry is reaping excessive profits, a lawyers' association director charged here Tuesday.

In an interview with The Avalanche-Journal, Tom Webb, director of the Texas Trial Lawyers Association, said:

"If people can really know the enormous profit the insurance industry is making and the fact that most rate-making is based on insurance company figures and are nonverifiable, they will see the need for a bill to simply say 'We want to know what you actually do and base rates on what you actually pay shareholders.'"

Webb, who was in Lubbock to speak about insurance abuses to the Lubbock Metro Lions Club, said the TTLA is backing such a bill, which state Rep. James Nugent of Kerrville proposes to introduce during the next legislative session.

The bill would require insurance companies to "report more fully and accurately actual losses so the Board of Insurance Commission will have genuine statistics, not estimates," upon which to judge rate increase requests, Webb said.

Insurance companies now are not required to divulge actual losses when a calendar year of bookkeeping ends, he said, explaining that often the companies will overestimate the amount of claims expected to arise but not yet reported.

The result, he said, is that many of the losses don't materialize, and the company can invest the money as profit, yet point to "paper losses" to support rate increase requests.

"There's no desire on anyone's part to cripple the insurance industry or keep it from being sound or keep it from making a profit," Webb said. "But we don't think there ought to be an unconscionable profit."

Nugent's proposal "is not an attempt to set the rates, but to give the insurance commission the authority to compel the disclosure of enough information so they can be set fairly," Webb added.

Webb, who said the problem occurs across most of the nation, cited financial reports to back up the claim that insurance companies are pocketing excessive profits at the same time they report losses.

In one case, he said, a state insurance company reported to its policyholders record profits each year from 1974 to 1977. During that same period, he said, the Texas Workmen's Compensation rates were increased almost 60 percent in eight increments.

Webb also quoted a recent news story in which four state insurance commissioners from other states charged insurance companies in general with using two sets of books — one for shareholders showing profits, and the other for state regulators, showing losses.

The lawyers' association plans to support the bill by disseminating information about the problem and solution, Webb added.

Henryetta Stompers Must Supply Snakes

HENRYETTA, Okla. (UPI) — Neither dancing nor poisonous snakes are popular in Henryetta, Okla.

But the town's anti-dancing, anti-poisonous snake ordinance has inspired Jim Wittman to organize the first Greater Henryetta Snake Stomp for Oct. 14 and the affair is B.Y.O.S., which stands for bring your own snake.

"It's not a dance, it's a snake stomp," Stringer said.

The 20-year-old dance ordinance received public support during an Aug. 29 referendum, which also outlawed possession of poisonous snakes. That prompted the snake stomp.

Fair Skies Brighten Forecast

A-J News Services

After a dry, hot summer and a wet September, cool, blue October is turning into the best month of the year.

Fair skies through Thursday and temperatures in the high 80s today, low 50s tonight and mid-80s Thursday are forecast for the Lubbock vicinity.

Winds will be variable at 5 to 10 mph today and tonight.

A few showers and thunderstorms moved southeast toward Del Rio, weathermen said.

Raineloods developed before dawn today north of Lampasas and east of San Angelo, weathermen reported.

A tornado touched ground early Tuesday night near Hobbs, N.M., the National Weather Service reported.

There were no injuries.

The extended forecast for West Texas calls for slightly cooler temperatures and a chance of showers for eastern portions of the area over the weekend.

The long range outlook for the area for Oct. 16-20 predicts below normal temperatures but no precipitation.

Thunderstorm activity spread today from western portions of the Ohio Valley across the middle Mississippi Valley as well as over southwest Texas.

Thunderstorms also were scattered along the central Gulf Coast and Southern Atlantic Coast from South Carolina through Florida.

A tornado touched down Tuesday near Hobbs, N.M., and golfball-size hail fell in southwest Missouri, but no injuries or major damage was reported.

Light rain was widely scattered throughout the Pacific Northwest today as patches of fog formed along the Pacific Coast.

Temperatures remained cool and partly cloudy skies covered much of the nation while frost reached into portions of New England again.

Most of the country enjoyed seasonably mild to warm temperatures Tuesday, with afternoon highs reaching the 70s and 80s from California across the Great Basin, Central Rockies, Plains states, Gulf Coast states and South Atlantic Coast.

Temperatures in the 90s and 100s were reported in the desert Southwest. Sixty-degree readings were common through the remainder of the nation.

Texas Court Rules In Liquor Fuss

AUSTIN (AP) — The Taylor County district court is the only one that can decide Abilene's liquor fuss, the Texas Supreme Court said today.

The high court issued an opinion to back up its Sept. 20 decision overruling an Austin district court order that kept the Texas Alcoholic Beverage Commission from issuing liquor and beer permits.

Within hours after the decision alcoholic beverages were being sold legally in Abilene for the first time since Prohibition.

"The statute (the Texas Alcoholic Beverage Code) confers original and exclusive jurisdiction on the district court of Taylor County for trial of any controversy governed by the statute arising out of the local-option election on June 17," the Supreme Court opinion said. "A suit is an election contest when the validity of a local option election, or the correct ascertainment of the result thereof, is its subject matter.

"The statute conferred no jurisdiction of the subject matter pleaded in the cause upon the district court of Travis County and that court was without authority to entertain the suit or render judgment herein."

Following the June 17 local option election a canvass by the Taylor County commissioners showed the "Drys" won by a narrow vote. However, on July 10 an Abilene district judge order another canvass because the first count did not include votes cast in voting Precinct 19. The July 20 canvass showed the "Wets" winning. Applications were made to the TABC on the basis of the July 20 canvass. Then, the anti-liquor forces brought suit in Austin and District Judge Charles Mathews issued an order Aug. voiding the "Wets" victory and said the July 10 decision would stand.

The Alcoholic Beverage Commission then asked the Supreme Court to tell it what to do, specifically asking that Mathews' decision be cancelled, which the court did on Sept. 28.

FBI Investigating Death At Center

The Travis County medical examiner's office ruled Tuesday that Miss Selvera of Pearsall had been strangled.

Another student discovered her body.

The FBI is investigating because it has jurisdiction over crimes committed on federal property, said Albert Perkins, director of the center.

WEATHER FORECAST — Seasonably cool weather and generally sunny skies are expected in the forecast period today until Thursday morning. Showers are expected for the northern Rockies, the northern Plains, the upper Mississippi Valley, the upper Great Lakes, Georgia-Florida and along most of the Appalachians. (AP Laserphoto Map)

SPAG Directors Decide To Retain Auditing Firm

Directors of the South Plains Association of Governments Tuesday finally voted to retain the same auditors they have been employing after an earlier decision for a change hit an unexpected snag.

In initial action on the question, the directors went to a split vote before deciding to change auditors. Then they reconvened after adjourning at noon and voted to keep the same firm because it was found that one of the partners in the new firm is a Lubbock area city official.

Hale County Judge Henry Heck, second vice president heading the meeting in the absence of President Medlin Carpenter of Plainview and First Vice President Alan Henry of Lubbock, broke an 8-to-8 tie vote by voting to change auditors.

There were only two bidders out of the 20 Certified Public accountant firms invited: Kelly, Cole & Co., which has been auditing the council of governments agency for several years, and Mason, Nickels & Warner of Lubbock.

Lubbock County Judge Rod Shaw led the discussion in favor of changing principally on the grounds that changing auditors every three to five years "is good policy" because it brings in a fresh viewpoint on an operation.

But after the meeting adjourned at noon, said panel spokesman Charles Phillips, it was discovered that Reid Warner, a partner in the winning firm, is an elected official of Lake Ransom Canyon Village, an association member, and would have a conflict of interest as part of the auditing firm.

The Executive Committee then met Tuesday afternoon, Phillips said, and gave the contract to Kelly, Cole & Co.

In the regular monthly meeting at 9:30 a.m., the directors approved a $70,839 grant application to the Texas Commission on Alcoholism to fund operations of the Plains Detox Center in Lubbock.

The 2507 Amherst center already has applied for money from the Texas Criminal Justice Division and was asking a second application in case the first is not approved.

A $19,045 application to the Criminal Justice Division to fund the Texas Boys Ranch vocational and education project was withdrawn. The panel staff reported that staff turnover at Roosevelt Independent School District, the grantee, made the project impossible to continue after last February and that another application was made on the contingency that another instructor would be hired in August.

An instructor was not found, they said.

The board voted to apply for a $30,000 grant calling for $18,000 in matching funds for aerial infra-red photographs of area cities to show which homes are losing excessive heat and which would benefit from better insulation.

The grant would be from the office of the governor.

Jim Lancaster of Idalou, a Lubbock County commissioner and chairman of the panel's building committee, said the old Lubbock schools administration building at 1709 26th St. might not be suitable as new headquarters.

The committee voted Sept. 29 to move its offices to the building because of the extra space it would provide, but Lancaster said it was later learned that it is laid out in such a way that there might be no advantage to the move.

The building lease at 1611 Avenue H expired at the end of September and the offices are to be moved by Nov. 1.

Committee member Carolyn Jordan said an extension obviously will have to be asked.

Lancaster said the present building is costing about $30,000 per year and the other one would be about $50,000.

Hub City Police Foil Robbery Attempt

Lubbock police early this morning reportedly thwarted a robbery when they drove up during a holdup at 19th Street and Avenue C.

The officers said they saw three men fighting near a pickup truck at the intersection about 1:10 a.m. today. They said that one of the men, Tex Lynn Nicks of Longmont, Colo., broke loose from the struggle and yelled, "These guys are trying to rob me."

One of the other two men then allegedly attempted to throw a knife under the truck. The suspects, ages 31 and 36, both of Plainview, were arrested on suspicion of armed robbery.

Another man, 54, and also of Plainview, reportedly was found passed out in the pickup. He was taken into custody on suspicion of public intoxication.

Nicks later told police one of the bandits warned him, "If you don't give us all of your money, this guy will kill you," meaning his companion with the knife.

Police today were also investigating the reported theft of two fireplaces, valued at $980, from a house under construction at 7201 Memphis Ave.

The builder, Jerry Cypert, said the fireplaces were stolen between 9 a.m. and 4:30 p.m. Tuesday.

Marylin Bullard of 2525 62nd St. said that between 4:15 p.m. and 6 p.m. Tuesday burglars came through her window and stole a $60 stereo.

A $400 color television set reportedly was taken in a break-in at Anne Hester's residence at 2405 6th St. The burglary was thought to have occurred between 2 p.m. and 3 p.m. Tuesday.

Marjorie C. Thomas said burglars climbed through the kitchen window of her 1326 E. 24th St. home Monday and took a $250 suit.

Lynch Hightower told police that someone cut the alarm wire on the money-changing machine in a 24-hour laundry at 5404 Ave. Q. and took $50 in change. Hightower said the burglars also caused $50 damage to the machine.

Gertrude M. Burr of Reming, N.M., said someone took her purse from the shopping cart she was using at a grocery store at 4th Street and University Avenue. Mrs. Burr said the purse contained $180 cash and three-fourths of an ounce of gold.

Firms Continue Search For Oil

ATLANTIC CITY, N.J. (AP) More than six months after drilling started in the Baltimore Canyon Trough off the mid-Atlantic states, a half-dozen oil companies continue their search for oil and gas.

The results so far are one confirmed strike, one possible strike and three dry holes.

Exxon announced last week that it will bring a second exploratory rig out of the Gulf of Mexico to drill in the Atlantic Ocean.

An Exxon spokesman said the semi-submersible rig New Epoch is now being refitted for winter weather in Mobile, Ala., and will soon to join the drilling ship Glomar Pacific, which began the drilling off the East Coast on March 29.

Exxon announced Sept. 1 it had "encountered some zones below 12,000 feet which exhibited inconclusive shows of hydrocarbons." Oil industry experts took this cryptic statement to mean that Exxon had found some sign of oil or natural gas in its well.

An Exxon spokesman said that it will begin testing for hydrocarbons when the well is completed.

Here is the status of the five other oil companies working off the East Coast:

Texaco — With the only confirmed strike in the area, Texaco is now drilling a second well 1½ miles west of the spot where it reported a "significant" find of natural gas on Aug. 13. The semi-submersible rig Ocean Victory is drilling below 11,000 feet with plans to go to 18,000 feet on the first of up to three confirmation wlls about 105 miles east of Atlantic City.

Shell — The semi-submersible rig Western Pacesetter II is drilling Shell's second well 83 miles east of Cape Henlopen, Del. The well is now at 13,145 feet with plans to drill to 16,000 feet. Shell's first well 73 miles east of Atlantic City came up dry on July 10. This well is 50 miles south of the dry hole.

Houston Oil & Minerals — The semi-submersible rig Sedco-J is below 1,500 feet on its second well about 70 miles east of here. Plans are to drill to 14,500 feet. Houston Oil & Minerals reported a dry hole 15 miles northwest of its present location in September.

Mobil — Working on its first well about 70 miles east of Atlantic City, the semi-submersible rig Western Pacesetter III is drilling at 15,200 feet with plans to go to 16,000 feet.

Gulf — Also on its first well, Gulf has the semi-submersible rig New Era at a depth of 17,650 feet with plans to drill to 19,000. It is 90 miles east of Atlantic City.

Continental announced in early June that its first and only well had come up dry about 77 miles east of Altantic City.

Woman Stays Young By Playing Fiddle

By MELANIE RIGNEY

For 73 years, Miss Gerkins has stroked and plucked tunes from the fiddle her grandfather taught her to play. "When I was 12 and he was 72, we played on each other's birthday," she said. "The one whose birthday it was had to tap dance."

At 15, she played mood music for silent films — "The Volga Boatman was a good one for jungle pictures" — and afterward performed at dance halls. "I liked the dance halls because the ones I played at didn't sell liquor."

Miss Gerkins, who doesn't read music, said she has competed in countless fiddle contests and "never finished anything but first." The reason, she said, is performing tunes nobody else will touch.

Her favorites are "Bing Crosby, southern blue grass and symphony. But I hate country western music. There just isn't anything to it."

Miss Gerkins stands about 5 feet 5 and weighs a bit more than 100 pounds. She wears flowered print dresses and has cocoa-colored hair.

Wisconsin-Madison Students Elect Clowns For Top Office

"All the average student cares about is sex and drugs and rock 'n' roll. In that order," says the student body president at the University of Wisconsin-Madison.

Chairing student senate meetings with a huge plastic gavel or cavorting on campus in clown suits, Mallon and his vice president, Leon Varjian, have brought new humor to this campus, a hotbed of anti-war radicalism in the 1960s.

Mallon, 22, a communications arts senior, and Varjian, who at 27 is in his 10th year of college, founded the "Pail and Shovel" party last spring.

They proposed converting students funds into pennies and dumping them into a campus fountain, so students could dig in — with pails and shovels.

"Pail and Shovel is dedicated to the 4-year-old in all of us," Mallon said in his disheveled student union office, which features a filing cabinet marked "Toys."

Mallon and Varjian began by building a giant campaign "platform" out of Popsicle sticks. Now, they're the dominant figures in student politics — 29 Pail and Shovel candidates won election to the 36-member student senate last week.

"We have two more than a two-thirds majority now and no one can stop us," Mallon gloated.

Stop them from what?

Their campaign promises include:

Flooding the football stadium for mock naval battles, stuffing and mounting all deans, converting parking meters into gumball machines and running clocks backward so classes end before they start.

And they are apparently serious about some of their plans.

Last week, the student senate changed the school's name to the University of New Jersey.

"That way kids from Wisconsin can say they graduated from a prestigious Eastern school," Mallon said. "And we should be able to get the New York Times a lot cheaper."

Earlier, Mallon and Varjian helped plan and okayed funds for a wild "toga party," attended by about 12,000. And then there was the marijuana "smoke-in," which drew 5,000 to the state Capitol.

Paul Ginsburg, dean of students, said the rise of Mallon and Varjian means students are seeking a little light-hearted relief from academic and social pressures. "People are just looking for something less serious," he said.

But Mallon and Varjian, paid $150 each monthly from student funds, say students are just less concerned with the world nowadays.

"We're happy that students are apathetic," Mallon said. "If not, we'd be out of office."

McCathern Says War Declared Between Farmers, Washington

By ESTHER LONGORIA
Avalanche-Journal Staff

An American Agriculture Movement leader said Tuesday night as far as he is concerned, "war has been declared between the agricultural community and Washington, D.C."

At an American Agriculture Movement meeting in Levelland, Gerald McCathern of Hereford told about 150 area farmers, "We don't intend to sit back. We're going to do whatever is necessary to get what we want."

McCathern said an American Agriculture tractorcade will begin as soon as Congress convenes, sometime between Jan. 15-22.

He estimated it probably would be about 16 days before tractors from Lubbock, Amarillo and Dallas would reach Washington. He said farmers would try to cover about 100 miles a day, traveling on major highways across the country.

"We plan major tractorcades through every city west of Washington — cities like Nashville, Pittsburgh and Knoxville," he said.

"I'm angry and I'm not going to be as nice to my legislators as I was last year," he warned. "I'm going to make them realize that the American farmer has a real problem.

"Our products are priced from the top on down and we just end up with the residue and that's got to be changed by law," McCathern said.

He told the Levelland gathering, though, that it is up to them to save their way of life. Their only other choice is to "bow under or walk off and let big business" buy their farms, he said.

Father Andrew Gottschlak, a Denver, Colo., priest and an outspoken movement supporter, earlier told the audience, which consisted mostly of Hockley County movement members, that people misunderstand the parity concept.

"All parity means is equality in the marketplace," he said.

He told the farmers not to lose faith because "we're fighting the second greatest power next to God himself and we have lots of sympathetic people in the cities supporting us."

The priest, who was raised on a Kansas farm, said he especially is concerned about "last rites" for the family farms. "I'm very interested in seeing that AAM saves the family farm as a way of life," he said.

He then asked the group, "Are you tired of feeding the world out of your own pocket, tired of going greater and greater into debt and tired of foreign money coming in and buying your land? Well, I think we've had enough."

The audience resoundingly applauded his words.

Gottschlak indicated he spends a majority of his time crusading for the AAM across the nation.

The priest said some farmers had expressed reservations to him about striking. "In matters of justice, though, I think we have a responsibility to stand up and fight," Gottschlak said.

Bill Clements

been "set up" by Clements campaign workers into having his photograph taken and statements attributed to him saying he supported Clements for governor.

Clements's campaign spokesmen, however, said the judge signed a release allowing the use of his picture.

Clements called the whole issue "a tempest in a teapot," but stated that Dalby had pledged his support to Clements personally when the picture was taken.

"He (Dalby) said he was going to support me," Clements said. "But if he wants to change his mind, so what?"

Clements earlier Tuesday spoke to a group of honor political science students at Texas Tech University during which he said the major difference between himself and Hill regarding education was that "I want the educational system to produce results, while Hill wants to throw money at the problem."

Clements said he opposed automatic across-the-board raises for teachers and collective bargaining by teachers or any other state or local employees.

Braniff Makes Flight Pitch

BOSTON (AP) — Braniff International Airlines has applied for permission to run daily, non-stop flights at reduced fares from Boston to Europe and from Boston to South America.

In an application to the Civil Aeronautics Board Tuesday, Braniff sought to fly the Boston-to-London route vacated recently by Pan American Airlines. It also sought extensions of its routes from Boston and New York to Panama, Peru, Columbia, Eduador, Chile, Brazil and Argentina.

If approved, it would be the first air route between Boston and Central-South America in recent years.

The European flight would offer daily, round-trip, non-stop service between Boston and London's Gatwick Airport for $219 round trip. Fares to Paris, Amsterdam and Luxembourg would be $230 and to Frankfurt $245 round trip, according to a spokeswoman at the Massachusetts Port Authority.

Civil Rights Office Approves

remained adamant about Lubbock's ESAA ineligibility. A big reason, according to Irons, was that the Office for Civil Rights still had not approved the new bilingual plan. This delay in approval "may have added to the Office of Education's suspicions" that the civil rights allegations were true and had not been remedied, Irons said.

In August, at the suggestion of federal officials, Irons withdrew Lubbock's ESAA application. He did this, he explained, to keep the district's record free of any "black marks" about ineligibility or civil rights violations.

Last week, the Office of Civil Rights finally gave Irons its verdict on the new bilingual plan. The office announced that the "violations" — which Irons still insists never existed — apparently have been remedied.

Irons said he "can't believe" such a determination should have taken so long — six months after the bilingual plan was submitted in April.

"I honestly believe that if they had read the plan when we submitted it in April, we wouldn't have had to go through all this trouble," the superintendent said. Had the plan been approved — and allegations cleared up — in the spring or early summer, the district probably would have been eligible for the ESAA grant, he said.

That does not mean Lubbock necessarily would have received ESAA funds, Irons said. He said the district still would have had to compete with other districts for the available monies.

Nevertheless, said Irons, "At least we would have had a chance to compete."

Command Performance

..."one of the hottest franchise deals going"
Wall Street Journal
5/8/78

We are the fastest growing company in a nine billion dollar industry with operations across the United States and Canada. Our business is all cash with no receivables or perishables—and virtually no inventory—a proven hedge against inflation. Unusually high pre-tax return on investment, with immediate cash flow and long term capital gains potential. We provide a complete turn-key operation—from site selection to hiring and training staff—and then support our Licensees with essential services on a continuing basis. Since only 8 to 10 hours weekly supervision is necessary, many of our Licensees retain their present employment.

Our Licensees must submit impeccable references—both business and character. A total investment of about $80,000 per location is required. Some financing is available for qualified individuals.

For facts about the market, the company/and a reprint of the entire WSJ article call toll free 800-243-6491.

Requirements Pose Problem

By MARGARET GENTRY

NEW YORK (AP) — What does it take to be a good cop? Wisdom teeth, said the rules in one city. A good credit rating, perfect vision and the ability to scramble over an 8-foot wall, according to standards in others.

Such rules govern many of the nation's police forces and have become a major obstacle to women and racial minorities seeking jobs as police officers.

The rules, often written in another era and dusty with obsolescence, also are problems for police administrators who know they risk lawsuits and federal pressure if they fail to hire enough women and minority members.

Police officials and a representative of the National Urban League explored the situation Tuesday at a workshop sponsored by the International Association of Chiefs of Police.

Under a contract with the Law Enforcement Assistance Administration, the Urban League helps police departments develop affirmative action plans. LEAA can, and sometimes has, cut off federal grant money to law enforcement agencies which fail to implement such plans.

Lee Reynolds, director of the Urban League project, said many police departments have arbitrary employment standards which have the effect of screening out women and minority applicants.

Height, for instance. In Virginia, Arlington County requires its police officers to be at least 5-feet 8-inches tall and "this means that 94 per cent of the women cannot even apply," Reynolds said.

"New York City clung to the idea for years that officers had to direct traffic and they had to be tall enough to be seen over the cars," he related. "But they've gotten away from that and now have shorter officers, including women, directing traffic."

To comply with the law, Reynolds said, an employment standard must be proven to have some relationship to the work an officer actually does. But, he said, police departments usually have allowed rules to mushroom over the years with no system to check their validity and weed out the obsolete ones.

One department, Reynolds related, required each officer to have six molars on at least one side of the mouth, automatically ruling out all those people with no wisdom teeth. Local officials at first were unable to explain how that rule got on the books, but finally discovered it originated in the days when officers had to bite off linen patches of powder for muzzle-loading rifles, Reynolds said.

That restriction may have had little discriminatory effect on women or minorities, but a number of others do.

Some departments require applicants to pass physical agility tests, including scaling an 8-foot wall or dragging a 150-pound dummy. Women often cannot pass such tests, but Reynolds says they shouldn't be held to such a standard anyway because patrol officers seldom need such strength.

"No longer do you have to have the burly cop when they all have radios and can call for help," he said.

Noting that Jersey City, N.J., uses the 8-foot-wall test, Reynolds reported, "We drove all over Jersey City and couldn't find a single 8-foot wall. So we asked them how could they validate the test when the officers don't have to climb 8-foot walls."

Some departments, Reynolds said, reject applicants with poor credit ratings. "With women and minority applicants, you're going to find poor credit ratings because of the low-paying jobs they've been able to get in the past and because women traditionally get bad credit ratings just because they're women," he said.

Reynolds said police forces must add women and minorities in proportions roughly related to their share of the labor force, not just to comply with the law, but also to serve the community.

He said San Francisco's police force illustrates what can happen when racial or ethnic minorities are not represented.

The city has few Oriental officers despite the city's large Chinese population. On one of the daily shifts, no dispatch officer spoke or understood Chinese, so when emergency calls came from Chinese citizens, the calls had to be routed through Los Angeles where an officer could serve as translator.

Reynolds said San Francisco police plan a major campaign to recruit Oriental officers.

Police Union Rapped By Official

NEW YORK (AP) — A classic political struggle is shaping up among the nation's police chiefs. It has nothing to do with Democrats or Republicans, but it may ultimately have something to do with public policy and the way public money is spent.

In one corner is Patrick V. Murphy, president of the Police Foundation and former police commissioner of New York City.

In the other corner is the International Association of Chiefs of Police, the nation's largest organization of police officials, and for years the only national spokesman for law enforcement executives.

Both are based in Washington, where they often spar with one another in testimony before congressional committees and in their public statements and dealings with federal agencies.

Both are in New York for the IACP's annual convention which became the forum for a new round of volleys.

Murphy fired the major shot Tuesday when he called the IACP "a formidable obstacle" to police progress. Nonsense, replied the IACP.

"The IACP is involved in performance. Pat Murphy is involved in rhetoric," retorted IACP spokesman Bill Ellingsworth.

Murphy's criticism was his strongest direct attack on the organization, but the battle of words may get even hotter today when Murphy debates Edward M. Davis, the former Los Angeles police chief who recently lost a campaign for the Republican nomination for governor of California.

Davis is a former IACP president who generally supports the IACP's more conservative positions against Murphy's liberalism.

What this all means is that Murphy and the Police Foundation are challenging the IACP's preeminence as national spokesman on law enforcement issues, and that could ultimately affect law enforcement policies and spending. The foundation is a private non-profit group which uses Ford Foundation money to support research on police issues.

In his speech, Murphy accused the IACP of discouraging research and paying too little attention to the needs of the nation's big cities with the greatest crime problems.

He said poorly-educated small-town police chiefs have a stranglehold on the IACP and because of that, the organization cannot be an effective spokesman for urban law enforcement.

That's not true, said Ellingsworth. Murphy's speech contained "misrepresentations and clear untruths," he asserted.

Big city police departments have thousands of their officials among the IACP's total membership of more than 11,000, he said. The New York City police department alone accounts for about 400 organization members, he continued.

"We acknowledge that the major cities have the major crime problems and we stress that major cities need the bulk of the money," he added.

But Murphy contended that the organization cannot adopt policies which would offend thousands of small-town police chiefs. He quoted an anonymous IACP staff member as saying, "Whatever I do, I have to keep in mind how the chief in Elephant Breath, Mont., will respond."

Farber Gets One-Day Reprieve To Observe Jewish Holiday

HACKENSACK, N.J. (AP) — New York Times reporter Myron Farber, ordered back to jail, got a one-day reprieve from his indefinite sentence so he can observe Yom Kippur today, the highest holy day in the Jewish religion.

Superior Court Judge Theodore Trautwein ordered Farber, a Jew, to surrender Thursday to continue serving the sentence for refusing to turn over his files on Dr. Mario Jascalevich.

"Maybe there'll be a change of mind Thursday morning. Think about it, Mr. Farber, please," Trautwein said.

Farber, who has served 27 days in jail for contempt, also faces a second contempt citation for refusing to answer a defense question during Jascalevich's murder trial.

Trial Judge William Arnold said he would hold the citation in abeyance until he decides if the initial contempt citation covers Farber's refusal to answer questions as well as his refusal to surrender his notes.

The U.S. Supreme Court Friday vacated an order freeing Farber from jail pending his formal appeal of the initial contempt citation.

Trautwein gave the reporter another opportunity to surrender the files Tuesday. But Farber was unbending.

"Your honor, I respectfully decline to comply with that order in accordance with my rights under the U.S. Constitution and the New York and New Jersey shield laws," the reporter said.

The Times, which is also appealing a contempt citation in the case, gave Trautwein's court a $100,000 check for criminal contempt penalties.

Attorneys for the surgeon, dubbed "Dr. X" by Farber in his early reports on a 10-year-old series of hospital deaths, say the reporter's files are needed to ensure their client a fair trial.

The Times and Farber argue that to surrender the files would violate a reporter's obligation to protect confidential sources.

Jascalevich is on trial here on charges he murdered three hospital patients in the mid-1960s with injections of curare, a muscle relaxant. Farber's investigation and reports in The Times led to a renewed investigation of the deaths.

The murder trial was recessed today because of Yom Kippur. Farber was to continue testifying Thursday.

Farber was cited for contempt Tuesday after he refused to identify the law enforcement officials who told him curare had been found in the body of one of the hospital patients. He said his sources were protected by the Constitution and state shield laws.

But Arnold ruled Farber waived his rights by disclosing information to prosecutors and by agreeing to write a book on the case.

BEAT THE BUREAUCRACY

Job Seekers Can Get Help

By HOWARD K. OTTENSTEIN
Newspaper Enterprise Assn.

At least 5 million unemployed Americans are seeking work at any one time. And many of the nation's 93 million employed citizens are looking around for better jobs. Perhaps you are one of these job seekers.

If it's a federal job you're after, head directly to one of the 114 Federal Job Information Centers (FJICs). These centers, administered by the Civil Service Commission, are located in each of the 50 states.

Competition is fierce for most federal jobs. FJICs fielded 11 million inquiries about the 200,000 white-collar jobs that were filled in fiscal 1977. But as in other dealings with the government, patience and persistence can pay off. Don't give up, even if your first attempt in unsuccessful.

Tenth In A Series

On your visit to the FJIC, find out about jobs you might qualify for and how to apply for them. To be considered for any of these jobs, you must first obtain a civil service rating. The Civil Service Commission assigns these ratings on the basis of education, experience and, frequently, performance on written Civil Service exams.

Would you prefer a job in business or industry? The U.S. Employment Service, through a nationwide network of 2,500 federal-state employment offices, annually finds jobs for 5 million Americans in the private sector.

These offices provide all the services of private employment agencies — and more without charging you a cent. At any one of these offices, you can receive job counseling, take aptitude tests, learn about vocational education programs and obtain information on job openings in your community.

Each office is staffed with counselors trained to assist groups that have had special problems getting jobs: older people, youths, minority group members, women, the handicapped, rural folk, even ex-offenders.

Thanks to the computer, many of these offices can now furnish up-to-the-minute information on job openings elsewhere in your state.

Of course, the Employment Service can be as useful to employers as it is to would-be employees. If you or your firm has a job to fill, contact the government job office first.

To locate the employment office nearest you, check the state government listing of your telephone directory. You can also obtain its address from your nearest FJIC.

A government publication you might find helpful in your search for work is "Merchandising Your Job Talents." The 28-page booklet offers tips on preparing a resume, writing a letter of application and interviewing for a job. That publication can be purchased from the Consumer Information Center, Pueblo, Colo. 81009.

Brzezinski Says Faith Aided Talks

CHICAGO (AP) — Zbigniew Brzezinski, President Carter's national security adviser, says strong religious faith was an essential factor contributing to the success of the Camp David talks.

"The three (Carter, Israeli Prime Minister Menachem Begin and Egyptian President Anwar Sadat) shared a prayer at the beginning, and each prayed a great deal during the 13-day conference," Brzezinski told a dinner audience Sunday. "The prayers helped reinforce the political commitment to peace."

Brzezinski described the Camp David talks as a "profoundly moving experience," and said he thinks "we would have gotten nowhere if we approached the problem in a traditional diplomatic way," such as holding a series of meetings spread out over a period of time.

U.S. Court Refuses Appeal

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Although the U.S. Supreme Court has refused to hear an appeal challenging Louisiana's unique "Head and Master" law, the losers say the court fight wasn't a total loss.

Without comment, the high court Tuesday refused to hear the case.

It marked the end of the legal road for Selina K. Martin of New Orleans and the National Organization for Women in a drive to overturn a state law which designated husbands as the family "head and master."

As such, a husband could handle a couple's property as he saw fit, with no consent required by his wife.

Dorothy F. Waldrup, Mrs. Martin's lawyer, said the decision was a bitter disappointment but the court fight brought about some changes.

"It is no comfort to Selina that she is going to lose her home, but thanks to her case we got equal management through the Legislature, and I think we have done a lot in educating women in Louisiana," Mrs. Waldrup said. "That means a lot to her."

Confronted by a legal showdown over the law, the last Legislature adopted a new community property system which in 1980 will supercede the old head and master law.

The law is a survivor of Louisiana's days of Spanish machismo and became embedded in the state's legal code back in the late 1700s, when Spain owned Louisiana.

Civil District Judge Gerald Federoff in New Orleans ruled on Feb. 15 that the law was obvious sex discrimination and thus unconstitutional, but his decision was reversed.

In a 4-3 split, the Louisiana Supreme Court decided April 10 that Federoff should have limited his ruling to a narrower issue, without reaching the constitutional question.

Selina Martin's challenge to the law came after her husband, Lawrence J. Martin Jr., took out a $5,000 second mortgage on their home, over her objections. At the time, Mrs. Martin was the family breadwinner. They were divorced after that and the loan company moved to foreclose on the house.

The state Supreme Court said an obscure law does provide a wife with a legal procedure for blocking her husband from mortgaging the home over her objection and that Mrs. Martin could have used it.

Dow Jones Dips 2.51 To 889.12

NEW YORK (AP) — The stock market declined slightly today, apparently influenced by renewed pressure on the dollar in foreign exchange.

The noon Dow Jones average of 30 industrials was down 2.51 at 889.12.

Losers held a 3-2 advantage over gainers among New York Stock Exchange-listed issues.

After a weak showing late Tuesday, the dollar continued to lose ground today, touching new lows against some leading European currencies. In Tokyo, where the market had been closed for a holiday Tuesday, it dropped by one full Japanese yen to 186.975 yen.

The price of gold, meanwhile, set a record for the second straight day in Europe, reaching $226 an ounce.

International Paper, opening late, fell 1⅜ to 43¼. On Tuesday the company reported that its third-quarter profits fell to 54 cents a share from $1.33 in the like period last year.

NCR climbed 1½ to 64½ on substantially higher quarterly earnings.

The NYSE's composite common-stock index dropped .10 to 58.74. At the American Stock Exchange, the market value index was off .15 at 171.26.

Volume on the Big Board came to just 8.07 million shares at noontime, down from 11.17 million at the same point Tuesday. A relatively quiet day was expected with the observance of the Jewish holiday Yom Kippur.

Local Teens Arrested In Beating

Three Estacado High School students were arrested about 5:45 p.m. Tuesday at their aunt's home in connection with the beating death of Marie Booker Lyons less than half an hour earlier, according to police.

The 20-year-old woman was pronounced dead about 5:20 p.m. at her brother's 402 Walnut St. home by Justice of the Peace L.J. Blalack. A ruling in the case was pending the outcome of an autopsy.

Police Capt. Bill Cox of the juvenile division said the suspects, two 16-year-old brothers and their 14-year-old cousin, were being held this morning in the Lubbock County Juvenile Ward.

Cox said it appeared the woman was killed by a blow from a baseball bat. The youngest suspect allegedly was seen with a bat.

According to reports, the victim, of 1807 E. 2nd St., was injured when she became involved in a gang fight about 4:40 p.m. at the Alderson Junior High School baseball diamond across the street from the brother's home.

Police Information Officer Bill Morgan said the fight, which grew to involve as many as 200 persons, was initiated by a two-day-old quarrel between two families and their friends. Their were conflicting reports as to whether the victim was attempting to head off the fight or was trying to get her brother out of the fracas.

Cox said statements taken from witnesses to the incident led police to the arrest of the suspects.

Reports indicate several persons carried the injured Mrs. Lyons to her brother's home despite police warnings not to move the victim.

Officers were told the fight began when a group of youths gathered at the 7-Eleven store at Parkway Drive and Zenith Avenue.

After dispersing the crowd, police were called to the school yard where the fight had once more erupted. However, Mrs. Lyons had been injured before police back-up units arrived.

Services remained pending this morning with Jamison and Sons Funeral Home.

Warning System Used By Airline

TOKYO (AP) — A Japanese domestic airline says it will begin testing an experimental collision-avoidance system on its U.S.-built Tristar passenger jets later this month, the Kyodo news service reported Saturday.

The system All Nippon Airways will install in some of the Lockheed jets is designed to alert pilots to approaching aircraft and tell them whether to climb or dive to avoid a collision.

Kyodo said the system was eight years in the making, with development begun after a 1971 collision of an ANA passenger jet and a military plane that killed 162 persons. A collision of a commercial jetliner and a light plane over San Diego last month killed more than 140 persons.

HY GARDENER HAS THE ANSWER:

Glad You Asked That!

To R.K.G., Royal Oak, Mich.: The courageous former First Lady, Betty Ford, is busy recalling her life for Harper & Row. It will be titled "The Times of My Life" . . . to Arthur Nardin, La Gorce Country Club, Miami Beach: Good idea. Thanks to the Jimmy Carter-inspired Sadat-Begin peace pact announced at Camp Dvid on national television, the camp almost automatically ecomes one of the most historical sites in the world. It originally was a WPA (Works Progress Administration) recreational camp rebuilt for FDR in 1942. Named "Shangri-La," President Eisenhower renamed it Camp David in honor of his father and his grandson, now married to Julie Nixon . . . To Mrs. B.R., Omaha. Hedda Hopper writes in her book that Marilyn Monroe once faced the movie cameras fleetingly in the nude. What film it was for or whether the scene was bleeped, the Hollywood chronicler didn't say.

Q: As parents yourselves, what do you find is the most helpful way to understand a teen-ager these days? — Mrs. O.R., Pittsburg.

A: Father Donald Connolly, (nationally recognized writer and radio and TV speaker on religious and family problems) recently wrote a poem we believe touchingly answers your question. He has given us permission to publish the poem which e calls, "Cry of a Teenaged Boy to His Parents":

"I am lonely, not just for you. I am lonely within me, and don't know why. I look at sunsets, I look at woods, I look at oceans and the mountains. And am still just all alone. What is love about? Is it sharing and caring? Am I afraid to grow — to give? Help me, now, for once you said you would.

"You said more to me: You said, 'I love you.' I can never forget — because you said, "I love you." Help me now as I reach out to make you proud, to make you proud for loving me. Teach me how to be — for whatever I become I want to share with you.

"Your face, your smile, yo tingle touch, your understanding grace — O Lord, I want you to be with me all the while I grow. Keep loving me, keep loving me as I try — as I try to love you just for you. Maybe once the day will come when you and I — just you and I can be one: together, and the birds will sing, and the deer will play, and the sun will rise in all God's glory, as all at once I can say to you: I love you, too; I love you, too.

"O Lord, I am lonely, not just for you. I am lonely within me and I don't know why. Help me now as I reach out to make you proud, to make you proud for loving me. Teach me how to be — or whatever I become I want to share with you, I want to share with you.

Send your questions to Hy Gardner, "Glad You Asked That," care of this newspaper, P.O. Box 11748, Chicago, Ill. 60611. Marilyn and Hy Gardner will answer as many questions as they can their column, but the volume of mail makes personal replies possible.

Ann-Margret Proving To Be Triple Threat

By VERNON SCOTT

HOLLYWOOD (UPI) — Ann-Margret Olsson was professionally born in "Bye, Bye Birdie" in 1963, a year after Marilyn Monroe's death at a time when Hollywood was looking for a successor to the world's greatest sex symbol.

To be sure, she had appeared in "Pocketful of Miracles" and "State Fair." But "Bye, Bye Birdie" revealed her as a leggy, lusty prospect to fill the void left by Marilyn.

For a time it appeared Ann-Margret would do just that. She was red-haired, full-figured and lent herself easily to the big glamour buildup.

Jayne Mansfield was still around. Raquel Welch was yet to come along.

For several years she played roles in which her curves were more in evidence than her talent — "Viva Las Vegas" with Elvis Presley and "Kitten With A Whip."

But the Swedish-born beauty was as bright as she was alluring, and determined to become more than a sex symbol.

Today Farrah Fawcett-Majors has ascended to the goddess status of Monroe while Ann-Margret has safely established herself as an actress. She received Academy Award nominations for her performances in "Carnal Knowledge" and "Tommy."

At this moment she may be the most versatile star in show business: a dramatic actress ("Magic"), musical star ("Tommy") and comedienne ("The Cheap Detective").

Ann-Margret will star in two television specials — "Rockette —A Holiday Tribute to the Radio City Music Hall" in December and "The Donny and Marie Show" scheduled for Oct. 14.

As if two new movies and a brace of TV musicals were not enough, Ann-Margret will have dazzled Las Vegas on stage eight weeks this year with her own night-club act. Only Liza Minnelli and Barbra Streisand begin to approach her as a triple threat performer — in films, TV and clubs.

Ann-Margret munched hot chocolate chip cookies in her Benedict Canyon home, an estate formerly belonging to Hedy Lamarr and Humphrey Bogart, taking a breather between assignments.

She was tanned, slim and relaxed. Her husband-manager, former actor Roger Smith, was busy putting the house in order. They have spent only three months at home this year.

"It's hectic and frantic, but performing is what I do," said Ann-Margret. "As long as I'm healthy and love my work, I'm going to keep it up. I plan to take four months off in January for a rest, my first vacation in five years.

"Between now and then I am going to Tucson, Ariz., to star with Kirk Douglas in 'The Villain," a spoof on westerns, and another two weeks in Las Vegas.

"I'm lucky because I'm able to go from TV to movies to cabarets. Each one is different from the other. It's refreshing.

"If I did nothing but heavy drama, as I do in 'Magic' (co-starring England's Anthony Hopkins and due for release in November), I'd climb the walls. You're so intensely involved with your co-star and director the pressures get to you.

"I couldn't continue doing one dramatic film after another playing depressed or psychotic characters again and again. They'd have to put me away.

"On stage, I'm able to open up and have fun. TV is sort of a combination of both. Close involvement with other performers and with an audience, too.

"I live in several worlds because I'm really several different people. I think everyone is. My work allows me to show different sides of myself because of the variety of things I do. It's a great outlet.

"There is no problem about staying with one character after I finish a movie because I go right into something else. It's a matter of shifting emotional and psychological gears. It's a healthy way to work.

"Some performers get confused about their identity because producers have locked them into a category — comedienne, dramatic actress or glamour girl.

"I had a good, sturdy family background as a child and think of myself as a stable individual. Roger keeps me on an even keel, too.

"I never confuse my real life with my performances on stage or with a movie role. I never lose sight of the fact that I'm a wife and the stepmother of three children.

"I'm still working on selfconfidence as a performer. But there is no insecurity about my own identity.

"Movie audiences don't identify me as Ann-Margret. I never know who that person is on screen, so maybe audiences don't know either. I guess they don't relate me to the character or to the singer and dancer they see on the tube."

Ann-Margret is well aware she was categorized as a sex symbol early in her career and recognized the limitations and pitfalls.

"It's amazing to me that I'm still around after 17 years," she said. "In the beginning I was exploited for sex appeal, but I am no longer associated with that sort of thing.

"Sex appeal is in the eyes of the beholder. I never thought of myself as beautiful or sexy. I was never told that at home. Sex symbols have very short professional lives.

"If an actress thinks all she has to offer the world is her face and figure, she has no real values about self-worth. I think about my work, not about being sexy."

Union Leaders Jailed For Inciting Riots

TUNIS, Tunisia (AP) — The State Security Court sentenced union leaders Habib Achour and Abderrazak Ghorbal to 10 years at hard labor early today for inciting riots in which at least 80 persons were killed after a general strike last January.

Thirteen other defendants were given prison terms of five, six or eight years, nine got suspended sentences and six were acquitted.

Achour, former secretary-general of the General Union of Tunisian Workers, collapsed in the dock shortly before the verdicts were announced. It took a doctor 10 minutes to revive him, but the court refused a defense request to suspend the hearing.

New Book Tells Texas Tech Football History

The 53-year history and tradition of Texas Tech football have been fully documented by text and photograph for the first time.

Beginning with the first game against McMurry College in 1925 to the Tangerine Bowl contest against Florida State in 1976, the history of the Red Raiders and their predecessors, the Matadors, is chronicled by two Texas Techsans.

Stories are included on all the Tech coaches: E.Y. Freeland, the first Tech grid mentor; Grady Higginbotham, who stayed only one year; Pete Cawthon, the colorful, famed friend of Knute Rockne; Dell Morgan, who eased Tech through the World War II years; DeWitt Weaver, who helped Tech into the Southwest Conference; JT King, whose goal for the Raiders was SWC contention; the sometimes bombastic Jim Carlen; the youthful Steve Sloan, and his promising successor, Rex Dockery.

There is an account of every game of the more than 500 Tech has played since 1925, plus statistics of Tech teams and players.

The book, published by Strode Publishers, Inc., Huntsville, Ala., is just off the press and going into commercial distribution.

Former Nixon Aide Addresses Students

BELOIT, Wis. (AP) — Republican candidates should pin blame for inflation on Democrats instead of pinning hope for election on tax-cut campaigning, says former Defense Secretary Melvin Laird.

The former adviser to Presidents Nixon and Ford told students Tuesday at Beloit College, where he was given an honorary degree, that taxes are a non-issue for the GOP because Democrats are in power and will reap the credit for any tax-reducing legislation.

Von Horvath's Tragedy Leaves Audience Limp, Powerless

By PATRICIA McCORMACK

NEW HAVEN, Conn. (UPI) — Tragedy should draw the spectator taut as a violin string, then break him on every joyless emotional scale at play's end.

One is left limp and powerless as such a severed string when the American premiere of Odon von Horvath's "Tales from the Vienna Woods" has run its course.

On that score, among others, the play — which runs through Nov. 8 as the opening work in the Yale Repertory Theater's 1978-79 season —rates a resounding "well done."

Von Horvath's script exploits and explodes the romantic view of a carefree picture-postcard Vienna in the 1930s, instead showing the harsh realities of a new world of economic exhaustion, inflation, crime and fascism.

The Yale rep newsletter says it is "Fairy Tale Vienna as seen by the Brothers Grimm." But it could also be Chicago, Pittsburgh, San Francisco, Atlanta, Boston or New York of the time, with the rose-colored glasses off.

In this bitter tale, there is an aborted arranged marriage between the village butcher Oskar (Clarence Felder) and Marianne (Carol Kane).

There is Marianne's tryst with a bisexual horse-playing dandy, Alfred (John Glover). This ends in marriage and there is an infant shipped off to the country where Alfred's despairing mother and grandmother are to care for it.

Alfred takes to battering Marianne when she makes him give up the horses and sell beauty creams. They break up. Marianne turns to God.

Her bitter father declares he has no daughter. Marianne makes money by showing off her naked body in a cafe, earning a little to help provide for the baby.

In this stark soap opera, the elder of the two women caring for the infant put his carriage in a draft. He gets pneumonia and dies —as planned.

Just as a "Dear Marianne" letter is being dictated by the grandmother, informing her of the baby's "act of God" death, Marianne and Alfred and the rest appear, reconciled and vowing to rally around the baby.

Marianne collapses — a limp, quivering mound of humanity curled fetal-like on the ground. Oskar picks her up, swearing he will take care of her.

Felder's playing of Oskar is perfect male chauvinist. The tragic life of Marianne is so well depicted by Miss Kane that one weeps as events over which she has no control shape her into a forlorn figure.

Transitions in this play are viemsic, Strauss waltzes often played off-key to empathize with the tragedy unfolding on the stage. Both the music, arranged by Gary Fagin, and the play's direction, by Keith Hack, are superb. The first act, however, takes a little long to get going and seems cluttered at times.

Tony Straiges' sets and Thomas Skelton's lighting work pefently to create the moods of this tragedy.

Von Horvath was born in 1901 in the Austro-Hungarian port of Fiume. In 1921 he started writing plays near Salzburg. In 1924 he moved to Berlin where his plays were first staged. Later his anti-Nazi sentiments closed stages to him. He left Germany in 1934, living for a while in Vienna.

In 1937 he wrote a study of the Hitlerjugend, "Youth Without God." He left Vienna for good two days before Hitler's army occupied it.

On June l, 1938, Horvath went to see Walt Disney's "Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs" at a cinema on the Champs Elysees. As he left the movie, a thunderstorm broke. He stepped under a tree for shelter. A falling branch struck and killed him instantly.

In the late fifties there was a revival of interest in his work in Germany. In the English-speaking world, Horvath's plays remain largely untranslated and unknown. "Tales of the Vienna Woods," the first of his plays to emerge in the English-speaking world, last year had a highly successful National Theater production in London.

Balloonist Bowled Over By Attention

ROCKFORD, Ill. (AP) — The celebrity life has "overwhelmed" Ben Abruzzo, one of three men to cross the Atlantic Ocean in a helium balloon last August.

"It is more difficult than the pre-flight planning, the final flight preparations or the flight itself," Abruzzo said. "I am just overwhelmed at the great attention. It couldn't have been anticipated or expected."

Abruzzo, an Albuquerque, N.M., businessman, visited his hometown here Sunday to be inducted into the city's new Italian-American Hall of Fame. He said the worldwide attention focused on him and his fellow balloonists, Maxie Anderson and Larry Newman, has been more demanding than they expected.

Firm Has Commitment To Sponsoring Series

By EDWARD CRAIG

NEW YORK (UPI) — If anyone should long for the good old days, especially around World Series time, it is the Gillette Co.

When the company first sponsored the series in 1939, its total bill for broadcast rights, air time (only radio then), production costs and talent came to around $200,000. Today this amount of money would buy about three 30-second commercial segments on the sports extravaganza now occupying prime television and radio time.

"Actually we now spend on getting our message across at World Series time about 50 times what we did way back then," Joseph A. Marino, marketing vice president for Gillette's safety razor division, said in an interview.

The money shoveled out by Gillette includes a $1 million promotion involving prizes and rebates and the cost of special displays at retail stores. It pays off. Marino estimates the safety razor division rolls up as much as 20 percent of its annual sales during the World Series.

The company is similarly committed to baseball's All-Star game in midsummer, most visibly through an underwriting of the ballots cast for the players. Gillette distributed 40 million ballots for this year's game in what it claims is the largest non-political election in the United States.

Gillette's identification with sports dates to the early part of the century when it used testimonials from sports figures to plug its product, among them New York Giants manager John McGraw and baseball stars Honus Wagner and Frank Chance.

During the 1940s and '50s, it sponsored more than 600 boxing programs from arenas throughout the country. And it is now working on its presentations for the 1980 Olympics.

"We probably have a longer association with sports than any other U.S. corporation," Marino claims. The bulk of the safety razor division ad budget goes for sports, half to baseball.

Marino's division emphasizes sports simply because that's where the customers are. He has figures showing that more than 200 million persons in the United States saw some part of the 1977 World Series, that nine of 10 Americans see a baseball game either on television or in person during the season.

"We also know that 72 million Americans shave, and most of them are baseball fans," he said.

The company's first major venture into sports advertising was an embarrassment. In the mid-1930s it sponsored the heavyweight title bout between champion Max Baer and Jimmy Braddock. Like everyone else, the company figured Baer would be champ for years to come and signed him to star in a private detective series on radio under its sponsorship. Audience interest in the program plummeted after Baer lost.

Gillette began as the American Safety Razor Co. 77 years ago in South Boston, and has been in the area ever since. Wisconsin-born King Camp Gillette, a traveling salesman, founded the company with MIT graduate and machinist William Nickerson on a $5,000 stake. The first razor set, which included 20 blades, sold for $5, which is about what the company's latest razor costs, the inflation factor aside.

The company still makes all the blades it has produced since its beginning and even gets requests for repairs of some razors more suitable as museum pieces.

"We recently had a request from an 80-year-old man to repair his three-piece razor," Marino recalled.

"He said it had sentimental value because it had been handed down to him from his father."

Lithuanian Consulate Still Exists

By ED LION

CHICAGO (UPI) — Josephine Dauzvardis lives and works in a quiet, tree-lined section on Chicago's southwest side, far from the posh downtown consulates.

A red emblem of a knight on horseback — symbol of a largely forgotten independent nation that no longer exists — is the only hint that her house is a government office.

Mrs. Dauzvardis operates the Chicago consulate of the "Lithuanian Government Under Duress" in a book-lined study near her kitchen and living room. She is one of 11 remaining diplomatic service officials in the United States and Europe for the nation that lost its independence to the Soviet Union in 1940.

"We hope that someday our land will be free from the Soviet occupation," said Mrs. Dauzvardis, a grandmotherly woman who took over the consulate when her husband died seven years ago.

"The Soviets don't allow free emigration, they don't allow our people to worship and you can only visit there through Moscow and then you have only five days in the capital," she said. "It's a bad situation."

Mrs. Dauzvardis performs all the regular functions of a consul general, except issuance of visas and promotion of trade.

"I work with Lithuanians to solve their problems. It's impossible to get records from the Soviet Union, so we try and authenticate their records for jobs or Social Security purposes. I also lecture on Lithuania and go to community social functions."

Chicago has 100,000 people of Lithuanian heritage, making it the largest Lithuanian community outside the Baltic region near Poland, she said. A notebook attesting to her duties as consul general showed more than 900 letters written this year.

The State Department has never recognized the Soviet occupation of Lithuania and Lithuanian diplomats are accredited by the State Department. A number of countries around the world, including the United States, still accept Lithuanian passports.

Lithunia, an independent kingdom dating back to the 13th century, first was swallowed by Russia in the 18th-century and did not regain independence until 1918. The Soviet Union incorporated Lithunia as a republic in 1940, but it soon was taken over by Nazi Germany and after World War II was retaken by the Soviets.

Mrs. Dauzvardis, American-born to Lithuanian parents, has visited Lithuania only twice but speaks the language fluently. She said the diplomatic service in exile, which got its authority from the last Lithuanian president, soon will have to draw on non-Lithuanian-born people to run its consulates.

She said the diplomatic service is funded by reserves frozen in the United States after the country lost its independence. She declined to discuss the funds, but said, "like any savings account that's being depleted, we have to watch our spending."

But, she said, "you must remember our history. We were under foreign domination for 125 years and then regained our independence. We believe it will happen again."

Lopes, Dodgers Found Incentive

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Davey Lopes, the team captain, showed the way with a pair of home runs and some rousing exhuberance around the bases as the Los Angeles Dodgers began their emotional campaign to capture the 1978 World Series title.

Supplying the power from his leadoff position, Lopes keyed a pair of three-run innings with a two-run homer and a three-run blast, leading the National League champs to an 11-5 opening-game victory over the defending world champion New York Yankees Tuesday night.

As he rounded first base in the second inning, Lopes raised his right fist toward the sky. When he passed the bag following homer No.2 in the fourth inning, he thrust both arms in the air.

"Yeah I was thinking of Jim," said Lopes, the fiery Dodger second baseman, referring to longtime Dodger coach Jim Gilliam, who died Sunday night after three weeks in a coma following a stroke. "He meant so much to me.

"I know Gilliam is up there watching us. The Yankees don't have to beat just 25 of us. With Gilliam, they have to beat 50 of us.

"I mean that Gilliam's spirit is in each one of us. We're trying to do our damndest to win this thing for him. If you look out there closely, you'll see Jim Gilliam in all of the holes in the field."

Gilliam was to be buried today and Lopes, one of his favorite pupils, was expected to be one of the pallbearers.

Then Lopes and his teammates will try to back the Yankees to the wall when Dodger ace right-hander Burt Hooton hooks up with right-hander Catfish Hunter in Game 2 tonight (7:30 p.m. CDT).

"We'd like to leave here with a split," said Hunter, who will be pitching in his 11th Series game. "Any team is better in its own ballpark. The Dodgers are better here and we're better in our park."

Hooton, who was 1-1 against the Yanks in last year's Series, expressed little outward excitement about his starting assignment.

"I'm sure my heart will be beating a little bit tomorrow," said the dour Hooton, who is sarcastically nicknamed "Happy" by his manager, Tom Lasorda. "A pitcher dreams about being in the World Series all his life and I've been in two back to back. A whole bunch of guys haven't played in one."

Hooton Worries About All Yanks

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Burt Hooton was impressed with Reggie Jackson's tape-measure home run in the first game of the World Series, but the Los Angeles Dodger pitcher says the New York Yankees have harder men to get out.

The right-handed Hooton gets his chance against the Yanks tonight after the Dodgers downed the American League champions 11-5 in the Series opener Tuesday night.

Jackson, who homered three times in the final World Series game of 1977 when the Yankees downed the Dodgers in six games, tagged a fastball an estimated 430 feet in the seventh inning after the Dodgers had built a 7-0 lead.

"Reggie's a muscleman, their most impressive hitter," said the right-handed Hooton. "I was impressed when he hit that one into the back of the bullpen. But the Yankees have five guys who always are hard outs. . .like Thurman Munson and Lou Piniella are harder outs than Jackson, I think."

Hooton didn't chart the game because, he says, "Tommy John and I pitch differently. It wouldn't do me any good to chart his pitches."

Catcher Steve Yeager explained, "TJ might throw 12 breaking balls where Hooton will throw 25 to 30. Tommy's best pitch is his sinker, while Burt's is the knuckle curve. They have two different philosophies. I think if the score had been close on the 3-1 pitch to Jackson, Tommy would have walked him."

Before tonight's game, the entire Los Angeles team was to attend today's funeral of former Dodger player and coach Jim Gilliam, who died Sunday.

Davey Lopes, the Dodgers' second baseman and captain who hit two homers in Game 1, said, "The Yankees aren't playing 25 men, they're playing 50. The spirit of Jim Gilliam is with each of us."

Yeager wasn't surprised that Lopes hit two homers in the National League championship series against Philadelphia and now two against the Yankees.

"Give him his pitch and he'll hit it a long way," the catcher asserted. "He has just as much power as Joe Morgan," a reference to the Cincinnati second baseman who twice has been the National League's Most Valuable Player.

Dodger manager Tom Lasorda said the hitting of the Dodgers, who had 15 hits Tuesday night, was reminiscent of the powerhouse of last year when four players hit 30 or more home runs, a major league record.

"It's most encouraging to see them hit with that power," he said of his club, which tonight faces veteran right-hander Catfish Hunter after destroying Ed Figueroa.

Hooton's dispassionate countenance was a vivid contrast to the fire of Lopes.

"All I can say is that he (Lopes) said he was as high as the sky, and now I believe him," said Hunter.

Reggie Jackson, the Yanks' inspirational leader this October and last, supplied three hits, including a record-breaking, 430-foot homer, but it wasn't enough against left-hander Tommy John's baffling sinkerball.

Jackson, who homered on his last three pitches in the Yanks' triumphant Game 6 last year, singled his first time up Tuesday night, then grounded out. In his third at-bat, he creamed John's fastball, giving him six homers in his last four Series games. Yankee immortal Lou Gehrig held the record of five in four games spanning the 1928 and 1932 fall classics.

"Lou Gehrig was one of the alltime greats," said Jackson. "I'm just one of the faces in the crowd. Maybe a little more recognizable."

John, who had his Dodger infielders eating ground balls until he tired late in the game, said Los Angeles' 7-0 lead entering the seventh caused him to change his pitching pattern.

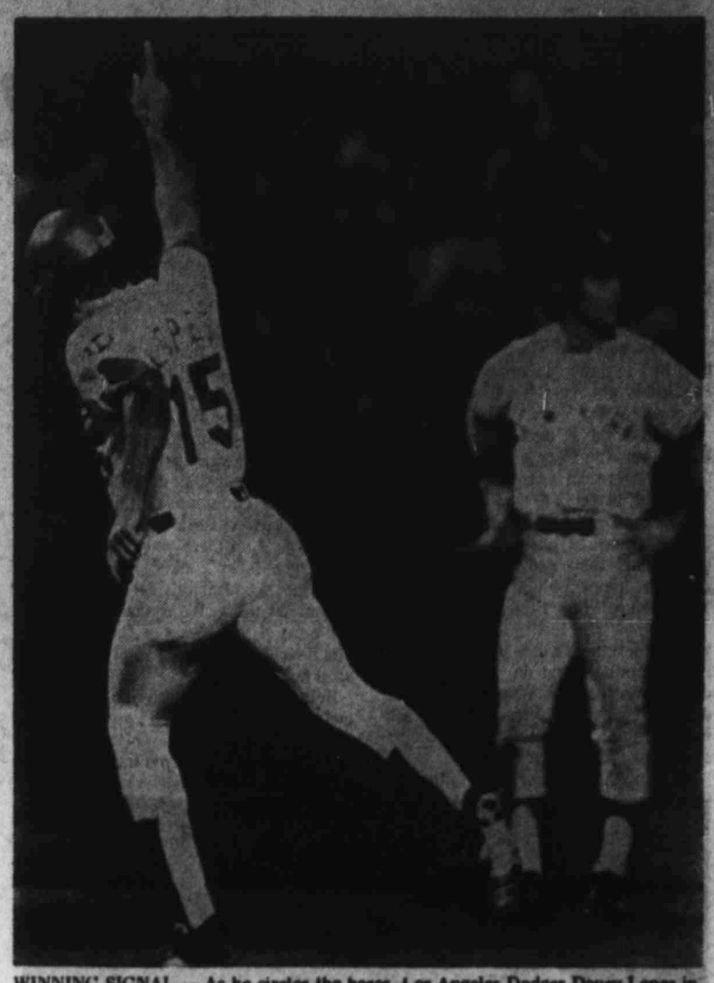

"I can tell you this: Reggie wouldn't have gotten that pitch if the game were close," said John, who was victimized by some shoddy fielding that made three of the five Yankee runs unearned.

Lopes' two homers and a solo shot by Dusty Baker had provided Los Angeles with its early edge.

"With a big lead, you don't have the sharpness or concentration you should have," said John, whose streak of 23 straight scoreless innings was snapped by Jackson's seventh-inning homer. "Your primary concern is not to walk hitters. You just want to make sure they hit the ball."

But John was impressed by the Yanks' rally and was happy to give the ball to ace reliever Terry Forster.

"The Yanks are a very good late-inning ballclub," said John, while soaking his valuable left arm in a pool of ice. "That comeback had the markings of a quality ballclub with a lot of character."

WINNING SIGNAL — As he circles the bases, Los Angeles Dodger Davey Lopes informs the crowd as to who is No. 1. Lopes' signal came on his way to his second home run in Tuesday night's opening World Series game. Lopes had five runs-batted-in during the 11-5 win over the New York Yankees. (AP Laserphoto)

Swann, Watts Get Starts At Corners

By DON HENRY
Executive Sports Editor

Mark Olbert's promotion to the first unit on Monday was not the only lineup change of the week, as the Raiders prepared for New Mexico.

There were some promotions in the secondary and some changes on the defensive line, as the result of injuries.

And amid the changes and swaps, the Raiders looked at that they will be facing Saturday night at Albuquerque; offensively, part of the action occurred on the goal.

Last week, the Raiders had the ball in scoring territory three times in the early stages of the Texas A&M game but could get but two field goals. And Tuesday, the Raiders worked on that goal-line offense.

"We didn't spend any more time on it (goal-line play) than usual," said Raider head coach Rex Dockery. "We had good work on the goal, though.

"The last part of the workout (following the goal session) we kinda went backwards."

Olbert, the redshirt freshman from Edmond, Okla., worked with the first unit at tailback, and Don Earl, the sophomore from Stamford who opened at tailback against the Aggies, was playing a wide receiver spot.

Dockery said the move of Earl to the outside position is permanent.

In the secondary, however, Dockery said that freshman Alan Swann from Odessa Permian and juco transfer Ted Watts will be starting. Watts had opened the Aggie game at safety, with Johnny Quinney moving from his free safety spot to the corner.

Quinney will be returning this week to free safety.

Mike Patterson, a starting cornerback when injured against Texas, is running better and should be ready by the New Mexico game. However, linebacker Jeff Copeland and defensive ends Andy Thomas and Olan Tisdale remain on the "if" list. Adding to the precarious end situation, another freshman, Terry Baer, was hospitalized by a kidney stone problem.

Thus, another freshman, Lewis Washington from Kerens has stepped into a starting spot. Washington played his first game against the Aggies.

And with Copeland injured, Rusty Maroney, a sophomore from Midland, has stepped in at linebacker. Maroney was in on 12 tackles against the Aggies, after Copeland limped off the field in the first period.

Tech will take on the Lobos in Albuquerque at 8:30 p.m. CDT Saturday. New Mexico stands 3-2 for the season after overtaking Wyoming 19-15 last at Laramie.

At cornerbacks, however, Dockery said that freshman Alan Swann from Odessa Permian and juco transfer Ted Watts will be starting. Watts had opened the Aggie game at free safety, with Johnny Quinney moving from that spot to the corner.

RIGHT SIZE TO BE FRIENDLY

Gilliam Remembered By Dodger Teammates

By HAL BOCK
Associated Press Sports Writer

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The game is simple, really. Bats, balls, gloves. Runs, hits, errors. This business of baseball is no complex, esoteric sport.

And yet, there is something more to it, something beyond the mathematical summary that reduces the players to cold, raw numbers. The important numbers in Tuesday night's opening game of the 1978 World Series between Los Angeles and the New York Yankees read 11-5 in favor of the Dodgers. Those are the basics. But the story of this game goes much deeper than that.

Baseball players are, you must remember, human beings with the same feelings and emotions as the rest of us. They know fear, they know courage. They know happiness, they know sadness. They are no different than any one of us.

You know the feeling of helplessness when a close friend dies suddenly. There is an emptiness and an anger that you cannot control fate. Why, you wonder, did this happen? The frustration of asking a question that simply cannot be answered just increases the sadness.

It was with that same sadness that the Dodgers approached this World Series. Today, they buried a friend, coach Jim Gilliam, who died Sunday night after suffering a sudden, cruel stroke less than a month ago.

To a man, the Dodger family has asked that imponderable, unanswerable question. Why, at age 49, did their friend die? There is no logical answer, of course, and the team realizes that. In their helplessness, the Dodgers did the only thing they could. They dedicated this World Series to the memory of Jim Gilliam.

Davey Lopes, a pallbearer at Gilliam's funeral today, perhaps put it best after leading a 15-hit assault in the Series opener with two home runs that drove in five runs for Los Angeles.

"Jimmy's up there watching us now," said Lopes. "The Yankees have to beat 50 men, not 25. Gilliam's spirit is in each player out there. We're trying to win it for him. If you look out there closely, you'll see Jim Gilliam in all of the (defensive) holes."

Believe the man. There was a very special relationship between Lopes, the current Dodger second baseman, and Gilliam, the man who played the position so well for the team a quarter century ago.

"It's hard to express what he meant to us," Lopes said. "He was loved and respected by all of us. It's going to be very difficult not to keep thinking about him. They say time heals all wounds. But it's going to take a long, long time."

"He can't be with us physically, but he's with us spiritually, up in heaven," the veteran left-hander said.

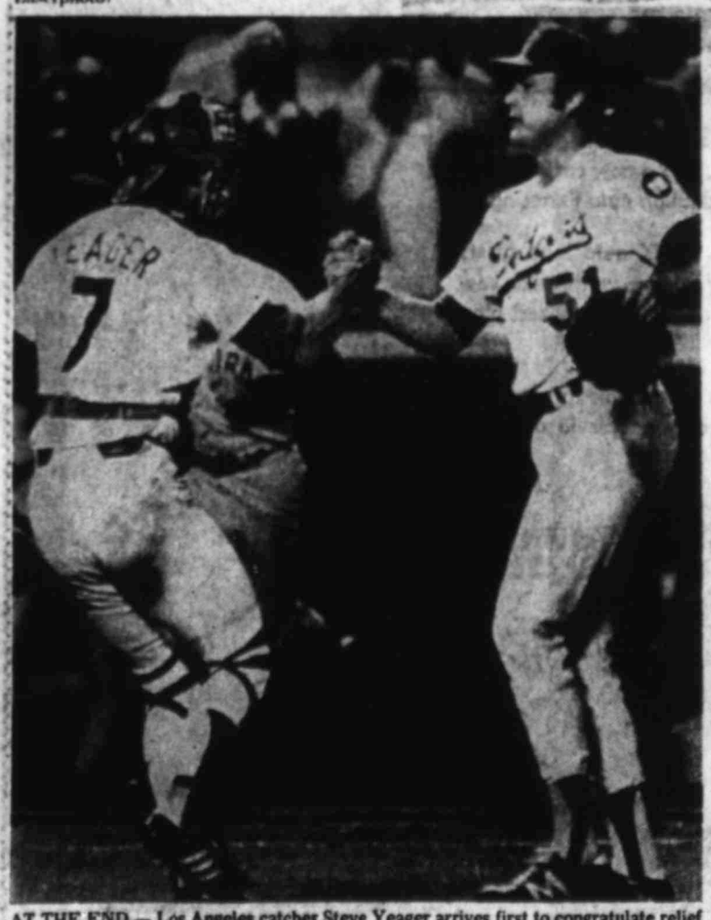

The Dodgers, to a man, believe they have a spiritual ally in this World Series. They feel that their longtime coach is watching over them, making sure nothing bad will happen to them in their quest for this world championship. And if they can help him along with some timely hits and a couple of home runs here and there the way they did in the opener, so much the better.

CLOSER LOOK — Umpire John Kibler gets a close look as he prepares to call Los Angeles baserunner Dusty Baker safe at second base in the seventh inning of Tuesday night's World Series game at Los Angeles. Baker had doubled and the throw to second baseman Fred Stanley arrives just a fraction of a second too late for the out. (AP Laserphoto)

FALLING, BUT NOT FAILING — Terry Forster practically falls off the mound in pitching to a Yankee batter in the final inning of Tuesday night's World Series game at Los Angeles. But the Los Angeles Dodgers pitcher got the pitches over the plate, striking out three of the four batters he faced in preserving the 11-5 Dodger triumph. (AP Laserphoto)

AT THE END — Los Angeles catcher Steve Yeager arrives first to congratulate relief pitcher Terry Forster after the final out of Tuesday night's 11-5 win over the New York Yankees in the opening game of the World Series. (AP Laserphoto)

Yankees Now Look To Catfish

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The defending champion New York Yankees are leaving it up to Catfish Hunter to put them back in the World Series chase.

The Yankees, down 1-0 after losing the first game 11-5 Tuesday night, send the 32-year-old Hunter, a veteran of six previous World Series, against the Los Angeles Dodgers tonight in Game 2.

It's a different Hunter, however, than the flame thrower who once helped started and was knocked out and later worked in relief, is Hunter nervous?

"I still get a little nervous," Hunter confessed. "Especially in the first couple of innings. You have to find the corners or you won't be in there long. I don't care who you are."

Then he offered the usual World Series cliche.

"We'd like to leave here with a split. Any team is better in its own ball park. The Dodgers are better here and we're better in our park," Hunter said.

The middle three games of the Series are scheduled for Yankee Stadium in New York over the weekend.

How about Davey Lopes, who socked two home runs and drove in five runs in the Dodgers' opening-game triumph?

"All I can say is that he said he (Lopes) was as high as the sky, and now I believe him."

Tuesday night loser Ed Figueroa, who pitched 11/3 innings, described the loss as the biggest disappointment of his life. Figueroa now is 0-4 in postseason competition, two playoff losses and two World Series defeats.

"I don't want to make excuses," said Figueroa. "They (the Dodgers) hit the ball pretty good. But to me the mound seemed flat. I couldn't bear down out there."

Figueroa also said he had trouble adjusting to National League umpire Ed Vargo behind the plate. The NL umpires give the pitcher the low strike, the American league umps customarily allow the high strike.

Ironically, Figueroa is recognized as a low-ball pitcher.

The only bright light for the Yankees Tuesday night was Reggie Jackson's 430-foot home run, which gave him six in his last four Series games. It broke a record of five held by the late Yankee great, Lou Gehrig, who hit three in the last three games of the 1928 Series and two in the first game of the 1932 Series.

Lakers Trip Suns In Final Exhibition

DAYTON, Ohio (AP) — Norm Nixon scored on a driving layup with 27 seconds left in the game to give the Los Angeles Lakers a 107-105 victory over the Phoenix Suns in a National Basketball Association exhibition game here Tuesday night.

It was the final game for both teams prior to the start of regular-season play on Friday. The Lakers wound up with a 4-3 pre-season record and the Suns finished 3-5.

Landry Expects East Champion To Lose Four

DALLAS (AP) — According to Tom Landry's personal computer, the eventual National Conference Eastern Division champion should lose at least four games.

Since prognostication is far from an exact science, the Dallas Cowboy football coach hastily adds: "My guess is about as good as yours."

Well, not exactly, because Landry comes close almost every year to picking the won-loss record of the division king.

"I'm still not sure what effect there will be from the 16-game season," says Landry. "The longer season will take its toll. A 10-4 season in the past would almost guarantee the championship and the playoffs. I believe a 12-4 season would put you at the top of our division."

Of course, Washington leads the Cowboys by two games with a perfect 6-0 ledger.

Landry says the Cowboys must pick up the pace immediately.

"We'll need an 8-2 record. That means we have to streak the last 10 games," Landry says.

Landry's teams usually start fast, slump, then come on strong the last half of the season.

"You could probably lose six games and still get a wild card but wild card teams usually come up short," says Landry.

"We are playing against the level of performance Washington has set for us. We have to win every week or we'll be watching them in the playoffs."

The Cowboys added fullback Larry Brinson to the squad Tuesday to make up for the loss of runningback Doug Dennison. Preston Pearson will move from fullback to halfback to back up Tony Dorsett. Brinson will back up Robert Newhouse.

Brinson was a victim of the final cut and was at Florida helping coach Doug Dickey's staff and resuming his studies.

"Larry is in good shape," says Landry. "We worked him out Monday and he looked good. He's quick and can carry the ball well. Larry suffered a groin injury in camp, and that's probably the main reason he had to release him. It went right down to the wire."

Dennison was injured on Dallas' specialty teams in a 24-3 victory over the New York Giants.

"We'll miss Doug because he was a great team man," says Landry.

Dennison suffered a torn knee capsule and will be lost at least a month.

Asked if he thinks the offensive line is the weakest part of his team, Landry says. "It's the least experienced part of our team. But it will pick up with Rayfield Wright performing."

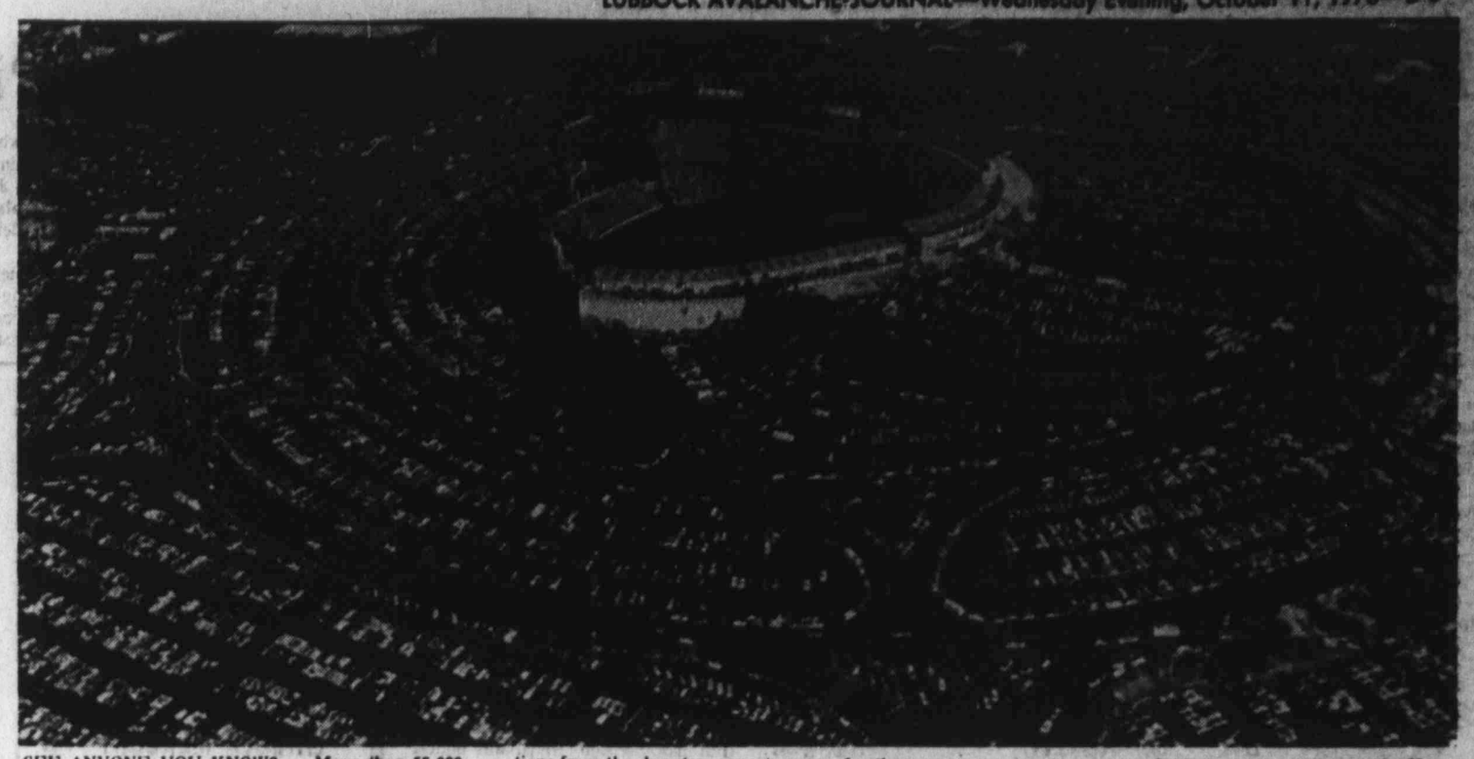

Wright, who has been bothered with a leg injury, started at right tackle last week for the first time this year. He also will start against the Cardinals.

Coach's Dad Dies

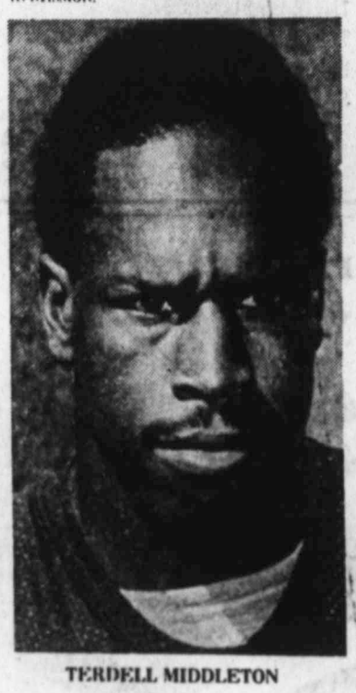

MISSION (AP) — Ray Landry, father of Dallas Cowboys coach Tom Landry, died Tuesday night of an apparent heart attack. He was 78.

He was a lifetime resident of the Rio Grande Valley.

Landry was dead on arrival at McAllen General Hospital. Funeral services were pending at Virgil Wilson Funeral Home in Mission.

SEE ANYONE YOU KNOW? — More than 55,000 fans jammed their way into Dodger Stadium in Los Angeles, and their cars fill parking areas in all directions from the downtown sports arena, for the opening of the World Series Tuesday. The fans saw what they came for: a Dodger victory, 11-5 over the Yankees. (AP Laserphoto)

TERDELL MIDDLETON

Name Means Little; Rushing Total Counts

By The Associated Press

The first question which comes to mind is not "What is Green Bay doing up there among the leaders?" nor is it "What is Terdell Middleton doing up there among the leaders?"

The first question, of course, is "What's a Terdell?"

"It's just a name my mother picked at random," says the Packers' soft-spoken runningback. "I asked my mom once what it meant. She told me it had no meaning, that I wasn't named after anyone or anything like that. Just liked the sound of it, she said.

"So do I. Some people say it's kind of odd. I say it's unique."

So is Middleton, a virtual unknown in the National Football League who stands third in the National Conference and fourth in the league in rushing with 516 yards, only 68 yards behind league leader Tony Dorsett and ahead of some other big names like Walter Payton and O.J. Simpson.

"It's nice to be ranked up there with such great runners, but I haven't set any personal goals for myself," he says. "I'm fairly new. No one has ever heard of me. If I work hard maybe those things will take care of themselves.

"Team goals come first. If we make them, the other goals — like 1,000 yards, maybe making All-Pro — they'll all fall into place."

The 6-foot, 200-pounder is one of the big reasons the Packers have a 5-1 record and a two-game lead in the NFC's Central Division. And being an unknown isn't new to Middleton. He has labored in relative obscurity most of his life.

"I've been in that position a while now," he said. "In high school and in college I was underrated, I guess. Didn't get much publicity like the guys in the big schools.

"But I think that's worked more to my advantage than against me. It's caused me to work harder. When people don't know you, don't even notice you sometimes, you want them to, so you try and do a lot more."

Somebody on the Packers noticed him at Memphis State. He was a third-round draft choice in 1977. "Obviously we liked his potential," Bart Starr, the Pack's coach and general manager, recalls of Middleton, also a collegiate track star. "More important, we were pleased with him from the day he came to camp. Even though he had a pulled hamstring, he wanted to run. We already knew about his speed and strength but that showed us something about his heart."

"I worked on being mentally tough and being able to go 60 minutes and coming off the ball hard every play," Middleton says. "If you can last the whole game, good things will happen to you."

Like Payton, Middleton wears No.34. That's not the only similarity, but Middleton shrugs aside comparisons. "I'm not trying to imitate his style," he says. "I've got my own. But he does hard play after play after play, and that's the type of back I want to be."

One major adaptation of Payton's (and Simpson's) style is Middleton's insistence on giving the Packers' anonymous offensive line its share of the credit.

"I couldn't do a thing without those guys," Middleton says of center Larry McCarren, guards Derrel Gofourth and Mel Jackson and tackles Tim Stokes and Greg Koch.

"I have an idea that they get the feeling, knowing I'm back there, that they need to give me just a crack, just a decent block, to spring me."

Unlike Buffalo's linemen, who became known as "The Electric Company" when O.J. turned on the juice for the Bills, and the Chicago Bears' "Cosmic Rays" who opened the holes for Payton in 1977, Middleton's blockers haven't been tagged with a nickname just yet.

With a first name like Terdell, you'd think Middleton has a nickname of his own. You'd be right.

"Some people call me. . .well. . .TD," he said, sounding a bit embarrassed. "Yeah, I know that's what they call Dorsett. I guess right now I'm the TD on the other end of the field."

Braxton Shipped To Miami

MIAMI (AP) — For the second time in his career, Jim Braxton will be teamed with one of the National Football League's top runners.

Braxton planned to arrive in Miami today to join the Dolphins — and the American Football Conference's leading rusher, Delvin Williams. Braxton and O.J. Simpson formed the NFL's most potent backfield with the Buffalo Bills in the early 1970s.

But the 29-year-old fullback didn't figure in the future of Chuck Knox's rebuilding Bills, and the Bills traded him to Washington for an undisclosed draft choice. The Redskins in turn shipped him and an undisclosed draft choice here for runningback Benny Malone.

"I'm looking forward to it. I don't know Delvin Williams, I've never met the man, but I'm happy to be back on a team that believes in running the ball," Braxton said Tuesday night.

"I enjoy blocking as much as I do running with or catching the ball. I've been a blocker ever since high school, and I enjoy doing it. It's just something that's going to show up," he said.

Braxton missed all but the first play of the 1976 season because of a knee injury, and played most of last season with a pinched nerve in his neck.

"I feel very healthy. It's going to be good to be on a winning team. I've watched Don Shula coach for eight years, and I'm just hoping I can fit into his system," he said.

Braxton had just 30 carries for 73 yards for the Bills this season as Knox went with young runners Terry Miller, Curtis Brown, Dennis Johnson and Roland Hooks.

"I expected to get phased out. I guess I didn't fit in the plans at Buffalo," said Braxton, who didn't play in Sunday's game with the New York Jets.

He said playing with Simpson was "a great experience" and also praised former Bills coach Lou Saban, now coach at the University of Miami.

"Coach Saban was one of the better people I've ever met in the game. He was always a man about it," Braxton said.

Rams' Coach Wants Victory At Minnesota

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The Minnesota Vikings have had a way of turning the Los Angeles Rams from worldbeaters to weatherbeaten.

The Vikings ousted the Rams from the National Football League playoffs by a 14-7 score in a mud-soaked game in Los Angeles last December. The Vikings also ended Los Angeles' title dreams in playoff games of 1969, 1974 and 1976 when the Rams left the warmth of Southern California to play in Minnesota's frigid weather.

Coach Ray Malavasi of the Rams said Tuesday: "Our players want to play a good game and have the extra incentive," when they meet the Vikings on Sunday at Bloomington, Minn. And this time they can expect mild autumn weather.

"It's always close when we play up there," said Malavasi, a Ram assistant coach for five years before taking over at Los Angeles in August when George Allen was fired as coach. Since then the Rams have had a perfect record, two exhibition victories and a 6-0 regular season mark under Malavasi.

Malavasi didn't say it, but a victory at Minnesota would also lessen the Vikings' chances of qualifying for a playoff opportunity against the Rams in 1978. Minnesota is 3-3 after a 29-28 loss to Seattle last Sunday and already has fallen two games behind National Conference Central Division leader Green Bay, 5-1.

Veteran quarterback Fran Tarkenton was "throwing the ball very well" against Seattle, Malavasi said after viewing the Vikings-Seahawks films.

"He presents a particular problem because of his ability to scramble, sprint out and throw on the run. He may not be the same quarterback he was 10 years ago, but he hasn't slowed down that much. I haven't seen much dropoff," he said.

Eagles' Hawley Picked City Defensive Lineman

By BOB BAJACKSON
Avalanche-Journal Sports Staff

The last time a Dunbar Panther won a player of the week honor, Farrah Fawcett hadn't come out with her own shampoo yet, Coach Van Jefferson didn't need his glasses to see his stop watch and there was no such thing as Coors' light beer.

But the dry spell ends this week as Daryl Green garner's the Avalanche-Journal's defensive back of the week honor.

Green graded out 87 percent and was involved in eight tackles in helping Dunbar record its first victory of the season last week against Lamesa. The Panthers defeated the Tornadoes 14-3.

"The amazing thing about Daryl is that he continued to play injured," said Jefferson. "And what was even more amazing is that his injury didn't take away from his performance."

Green suffered a knee injury in the Lamesa tilt. He is a doubtful starter when Dunbar opens the district season in two weeks. The Panthers have a bye this week.

"Daryl made some key stops for us," said Jefferson. "He also was involved in some important pass plays. Daryl got us out of trouble after we made mistakes deep in our own territory."

Others cited include Coronado's Eric Santos, eight tackles, one interception; Monterey's Kent Potts, involved in 16 tackles; Lubbock High's Chris Bigham, one interception, one fumble, seven tackles and graded out 83 percent; Lubbock Christian's David Wishmire 14 individual tackles and Christ the King's Jimmy Durham, 11 tackles.

The defensive lineman honor goes to Lubbock Christian's Scott Hawley. Hawley was placed at middle linebacker and successfully shot the gap to cause a number of fumbles in Lubbock Christian's victory over Loraine.

Right on Hawley's heel's for the award was Coronado's Randy Lusk with 16 tackles. Dunbar's Karl Lusk, graded 88 percent with seven tackles; Lubbock High's Johnny Gonzales, graded 78 percent with five tackles and one fumble recovery; Christ the King's Jatin Mehta was in on 24 tackles and one fumble recovery; and Monterey's Todd Gresham had four tackles.

Others getting votes include Lubbock High's Larry Walker, who was 4-6 in passing for 73 yards and rushed for another 55 steps including one touchdown; Lubbock Christian's Gary Paul Miller, 88 yards in 21 carries; Dunbar's Ernest White 60 yards in 15 carries; Christ the King's Durham, 52 yards and scored 20 points against Klondike; and Monterey's Dwayne Smith, 31 yards in 10 carries.

Lubbock Christian's Mike Holt wasn't far behind the leader with 88 percent, Lubbock High's Larry DeLeon, 83 percent; Coronado's Ben Pollard, 80 percent; Dunbar's Kevin Lusk, 75 percent; and Christ the King's, Phillip Buescher, who consistently opened holes at key times in the upset win over Klondike.

Jefferson believes Green, who also plays quarterback on offense, has more defensive talent.

"It takes some out of him to be on the field all the time," said Jefferson. "But he's the best we have to play quarterback. We have to go with what we've got."

Fem Reporters Okayed In NY

NEW YORK (AP) — Women reporters will be admitted to locker rooms at Yankee Stadium during the World Series, but they can still be banned from the Dodgers' clubhouse in Los Angeles.

Baseball Commissioner Bowie Kuhn lost his battle Tuesday in the 2nd U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals to secure an injunction barring women from the Yankee clubhouse. Two weeks ago, a federal judge ruled that women could not be excluded from the Yankees' dressing room or their visiting team locker room.

But that decision, which was upheld Tuesday, applies only to the Yankees clubhouse.

The Yankees played the first game of the series Tuesday in Los Angeles and will play there again tonight with the traditional ban against newswomen in the dressing area, according to Kuhn's attorney, Jess Climenko.

The issue arose when Time, Inc., brought suit against Kuhn on behalf of Melissa Ludtke Lincoln, a reporter for Sports Illustrated.

Tech Punter Second In Nation

Bahr, who also plays professional soccer, has kicked 14 field goals in 17 tries this season to lead NCAA Division I kickers for the third straight week.

If Bahr can maintain his .824 accuracy percentage through at least three more kicks, he would erase an 11-year-old record for accuracy held by Gerald Warren of North Carolina State. In the 20-kick minimum category, Warren hit 17 of 22 field goal tries in 1967 for a 77.3 conversion rate.

Buford punted nine times for a 47.1-yard average in last week's game against Texas A&M to move up in the national standings.

In other categories, Jerome Persell continues to lead the nation in rushing with an average of 169.4 yards per game (17 better than runner-up Charles White of Southern Cal) and Allen Ross of Northern Illinois is again on top in scoring this week with eight touchdowns in four games.

Steve Dils of Stanford is first in passing for the fifth straight week with an average of 22.4 completions per game while David Petzke of Northern Illinois is tops in receiving with 35 catches in four games for 467 yards and five touchdowns.

Quarterback David Spriggs of New Mexico State is No. 1 in total offense with an average of 307.8 yards per game and White is the leader in all-purpose running with an average of 199.5 yards per game — 23 more than Auburn's James Brooks, who was injured last week and will miss the remainder of the season.

Also Richard Blackmore of Mississippi State leads in punt returns with an average of 21.6 yards in seven returns, Cris Collinsworth of Florida is first in kickoff returns with an average of 41.2 yards in five returns and John Curran of Cornell leads in interceptions with four in three games.

Akers Delays Announcement

AUSTIN (UPI) — Longhorn fans and Texas' next opponent, North Texas State, will have to wait a little while longer for coach Fred Akers' decision on who will start Saturday's game.

Akers' announcement, expected Tuesday, on who would be at the helm of the Texas Longhorns Saturday was postponed, but no reason was given.

Akers had told reporters Monday he would announce his decision Tuesday on whether to start freshman Donnie Little or senior Randy McEachern, who hs started each of Texas' four games this season.

There has been speculation that Little, a highly recruited scrambler from Dickinson, will replace McEachern as the Longhorns' top signal caller. Little played about half the game against Texas Tech and three quarters during the Horns 31-10 loss to Oklahoma Saturday.

Texas failed to make a first down with McEachern at the helm, but Little was plagued by three interceptions and two fumbles.

"Coach Akers has changed his mind and is not going to announce it today," a spokesman in the Texas athletics department said Tuesday. "He's really sort of leaving it open now."

North Texas coach Hayden Fry anticipated Akers would go with Little in an effort to instill some life in the Longhorn offense, which thus far has lacked the explosivness of previous years.

"You have to prepare for Little. When he scrambles he is really dangerous," Fry said. "He's going to be a good one."

Fullback Leroy King suffered a torn muscle in his shoulder in the loss to Oklahoma, and Akers said he will be out at least for a week. Kermit Goode and freshman A.J. Jones, considered one of the top runningback prospects in the nation last year, will replace King in the Longhorn backfield, and Akers indicated he plans to continue using Olympic sprinter Johnny "Lam" Jones both as a wide receiver and at runningback.

Lam Jones has been the starting wide receiver for two years, but played sporadically at runningback in the Oklahoma game.

Dusty Loses To Russell; But LA Wins

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Most people stand for the seventh-inning stretch at the ballpark, and then sit back down.

Not Andrea Morse. After a few choruses of "Take Me Out To The Ballgame" last Saturday when the Los Angeles Dodgers met the Philadelphia Phillies in the National League Championship Series, she left to have a baby.

"I began having contractions before the first pitch," Mrs. Morse recalled Tuesday as she was leaving Cedars-Sinai Hospital. However, every time her husband, David, pleaded with her to leave for the hospital, she replied: "Let's wait just one more inning."

"I made it to the seventh inning," she added. "During the stretch, David convinced me we should at least call the doctor."

When they discovered long lines in front of each pay phone at Dodger Stadium, David shouted, "My wife's having a baby!"

Everyone stepped aside, and some of the fans even offered him change for the call.

"The doctor told us to leave right away," Mrs. Morse said. "He was afraid the game would end and we would be stuck in traffic.

"A few hours later in the delivery room, the obstetrician said: 'I know you're excited about the Dodgers, but listen to what I'm trying to tell you.'" Mrs. Morse recalled. She did and gave birth to a son 7 pounds, 11 ounces several hours after her beloved Dodgers clinched the National League pennant by beating the Phillies.

The Morses had been thinking about naming their baby Dustin, so they could call him Dusty after Dodgers outfielder Dusty Baker.

"But when Bill Russell got that hit to drive in the winning run, we decided to name our child Russell," she said.

Stanley Denies Quitting Rumor

STILLWATER, Okla. (AP) — Rumors that Oklahoma State University football coach Jim Stanley will be quitting his post before the end of his sixth year have been vehemently denied by the Poke leader.

"No chance," Stanley angrily said Tuesday. "I don't teach quitting. That's not part of my mind."

The Cowboys, who have not won a single game in five outings this season, are in the middle of a nine-game losing streak over two seasons.

Yet, overall, Stanley still supports a fairly impressive record of 32-28-2. His teams have won two bowl games in recent seasons and in 1976 the Pokes shared the Big Eight title.

However, a Tulsa paper printed Tuesday that several of Stanley's former supporters met with the coach Sunday, urging him to quit now. This would open the way for a new coach to get into the office before the recruiting year gets in full swing.

Tascosa Posts Volleyball Victory

Amarillo Tascosa defeated Monterey in girls volleyball Tuesday night at the Monterey High School gym.

The Monterey girls' record fell to 5-9 for the year with the 15-7, 9-15, 15-9 loss to Tascosa.

Monterey's outstanding spikers were Shelly Dunn and Janis Rhea. Both girls were successful on 85 percent of their spikes.

Monterey will travel to Hereford Thursday night to begin district action.

Chrissy, Austin Advance

BLOOMINGTON, Minn. (AP) — The Queen, the Kid and the Vet all won matches Tuesday night at the $100,000 U.S. Women's Indoor Tennis Championships.

But the heaviest hitter of them all — Martina Navratilova — was forced to withdraw because of a finger injury, leaving the field for the 70th annual event wide open.

"There's 31 tough players in this tournament," said the Queen — Chris Evert, who downed Trish Bostrom 6-0, 6-1 in her first round match. "I can't take anything for granted with players like Virginia (Wade) and Tracy (Austin) here."

Miss Evert, seeded second behind Miss Navratilova, became the favorite of the tournament which she has never won, but admitted that she'd prefer Miss Navratilova be included in the 32-player field.

"I'm disappointed," Miss Evert said. "Martina and I are so close right now that the more I play her the better it is for me. If I ever want to regain the No. 1 ranking I need a couple more wins over her."

Miss Evert is second with $140,907 in prize money.

Meanwhile, Miss Austin — the Kid — subdued stubborn Marita Redondo, 6-1, 6-7, 6-3. Miss Austin, 15, had just turned 14 early in Jan., 1977, when she won her first Virginia Slims match at the Met Sports Center in Bloomington.

"She had me reaching," said Miss Austin of Redondo. "She was really hitting the ball hard."

The Vet — 33-year old Virginia Wade, quickly dispatched Val Ziegenfuss, 6-2, 6-2, noting that she "felt good," especially after a "pathetic match" in Phoenix.

Martina Sits Out Tourney With Injury

DALLAS (AP) — For a person who has a $300,000 career going, Martina Navratilova takes the injury which has her temporarily sidelined pretty philosophically.

"I could cry all night about it, but things wouldn't change," said the Checkoslavakian tennis star who was forced to withdraw from the U.S. Women's Indoor Tennis Championships Tuesday because of an injured little finger on her left hand.

"Accident's happen; there's nothing I can do about it. I really don't care, because I was going to take three weeks off anyway. This just makes it four."

The injury occured Sunday night when she was playing a doubles match with her partner, Anne Smith, against Betty Stove and Tracy Austin at the Phoenix Classic. Miss Austin lofted a shot down the middle and Miss Navratilova reached for it but was struck by Miss Smith's racquet.

X-rays showed no break, but Miss Navratilova, who is lefthanded, says she cannot grip a racquet at all and won't discount the possibility of an unnoticeable hairline fracture.

"Nothing is broken that we can see and the swelling is down, but it's all green and blue," she said by telephone from her home in Dallas.

"I'll just take it easy for a while and come back to practice in about a week."

Red Raiders Win Volleyball Action

Against Abilene Christian, Valerie Earl with eight and Connie Tittman with seven were the high servers for the Red Raiders.

Laura Borchardt led the Tech effort in the West Texas game with nine points.

Phoenix Wants Davis Cup

PHOENIX, Ariz. (AP) — The final round of the Davis Cup tennis competition could be played here in December, but there is many ifs to be answered before a final decision is made.

The United States faces Great Britain in the contest scheduled for Dec. 15-17.

Community leaders met Tuesday with officials of the United States Tennis Association to discuss requirements for the event.

"We didn't know until Monday that we (the U.S.) would have choice of ground (site)," said Marvin Richmond, USTA vice president. The U.S. defeated Sweden last weekend and Great Britain eliminated Australia.

"A proposal must be presented within a week if Phoenix is to be considered a possible host city," said Richmond. "The site must be confirmed before the USTA management committee meets in New York Oct. 24.

"Davis Cup is not a moneymaker for USTA," said Richmond "Our Davis Cup fund is almost zero. Although there is no prize money involved, the players are paid and travel expenses are guaranteed for players and their wives, the team captain, trainer and doctor. Any leftover funds are used for Junior Davis Cup."

Jim Frazier, chairman of the recently completed $75,000 Phoenix Women's Tennis Classic, was enthusiastice about the prospect of promoting the area through the Davis Cup competition.

"I can imagine no better 30-day blitz than Davis Cup on network TV, the Fiesta Bowl (Christmas Day) and the Phoenix Open Golf Tournament (in January).

Seagraves Continues To Produce Winners

By RUSS PARSONS
Avalanche-Journal Sports STaff

If there was any doubt before last weekend, there can be no doubt now.

Seagraves has one successful football program.

The Eagles lost 13 letterman last season, including 11 (count'em) all-district performers. With only two starters returning this year, the most optimistic thought it would be a rebuilding year.

And the Eagles haven't played many patsies either. In the opener they traveled to New Mexico Class AA defending champion Eunice's place. Eunice had three all-state performers returning across the front defensive wall but that didn't stop the Eagles from taking a 14-0 win.

But one fluke win does not a season make.

The next week Seagraves took on Class B power Sundown. The Eagles shut them out too, 28-0. Two wins, well maybe.

The next weekend Seagraves dealt Lorenzo its first loss, but a 3-2 baseball score. If you haven' been reading closely, that was the first points the Eagles had allowed — an intentional safety.

People were starting to believe.

"People told me they were better than last year," Rickey White said. "But I just didn't see how they could be that much better. That is a fine football team."

For the record, the Eagles have now scored 65 points to their opponents' 10. That is, they have allowed only one touchdown all season.

What does it take to build a program that can withstand the loss of 11 all-district performers. Not only withstand it, but (according to some) come out better than before.

Really, that's hard to answer," said Eddings. "Everybody seems to do about the same things. . .Build junior high, JV and varsity programs. We do the same.

"I think most of our kids stay in the program. Of course, we feel like we have excellent coaches throughout the program. That and the kids stay in it, that's two main things.

"Attitude and discipline are another two big things. I don't know which comes first. Pride goes with the others. Our kids have a lot of pride in themselves and the school.

"We win a lot too, and that builds pride. But pride is one of the things that makes you win. I don't know which comes first.

"I think another big thing is that the programs in the school have to get along together. They have to go hand in hand. The kids have to be able to participate in anything they want."

But before you rush out, this article clutched in your sweating hand, anxious to take over a program and turn it into a power, take heed:

"I don't think you can turn a program around overnight. Everybody likes to think maybe it can be done but it can't, not in a year or two. Three or four years, It's awful hard to say what makes a winning program," Eddins said. "I don't know if I could tell you which one of those things is most important.

"If it was that easy, everybody could do it."

Trimmed-Down Alan Page Dropped By Vikings

BLOOMINGTON, Minn. (AP) — Alan Page, once the heart if not soul of the Minnesota Vikings defense, was placed on irrevocable waivers Tuesday and the least surprised person of all was Page.

"They don't like individuals, on or off the field," said Page, who as a defensive tackle helped the Vikings to four Super Bowl appearances. "They (the management) have a hard time dealing with people on a personal level."

Page, enamored with the sport of running, dropped his weight to about 220 pounds, wispy for a lineman, and was often replaced this year on short-yardage plays.

"Every team has its different personalities and it's not my job to mold them into one," said Bud Grant, who took over as coach of the Vikings one week before Page was drafted in the first round in 1967.

"I talked to Page about his running and I can't remember the exact words now — I know I felt it was hurting his play — but he said he was going to stand or fall at 220 pounds."

Grant said trade efforts had failed, mainly because of his 10 seasons in the NFL. Lately, his effectiveness has fallen off dramatically.

"Nobody made us any offers for Alan Page," he said. "We had calls on our younger defensive linemen and at one point in the trade talks Page's name came up. We decided to query other teams but they weren't interested."

That foursome instituted the phrase "meet at the quarterback," and in the late 60s and early 70s they produced one of the fiercest rushes in the game.

"I'm not really shocked and not really upset," said Page, who was aware of the trade rumors. "I've seen enough crazy things in this league that I'm not hard pressed to be shocked about anything."

Page, a vested player (four or more years in the NFL), had 24 hours from Tuesday's 3 p.m. deadline to decide if he wanted to become a free agent. If not, the team claiming him can assume his contract, estimated to be at least $100,000 per year, after that time, he may negotiate his own deal with any club.

Page was active in the NFL Players Association and only last week filed a grievance against the Vikings concerning a $50 fine for being late to a team meeting.

Grant said Page's involvement with the NFLPA was not a factor in his release and Vikings president Max Winter concurred.

"Alan Page served the Vikings well, but he came to the end of his career as far as the Vikings were concerned," Winter said.

"I'm disappointed for the way the thing was handled," said cornerback Bobby Bryant, who played with Page for 10 years. "I'm embarrassed that more dignity couldn't have been used in such a situation. I'll miss him as a friend and as a companion and it will be different on the field without him — sad. But life goes on."

"Page has a lot of football left in him," said linemate Doug Sutherland, who replaced Larsen.

"Alan and I have been through it all," added Grant. "Alan has had as much to do with our success as any player. Nobody did more than Alan."

Minnesota general manager Mike Lynn said the Vikings would probably sign another player before Sunday's game with Los Angeles. The team is short of offensive lineman and runningbacks due to injuries.

Pro Hockey Campaign Faces Off

By The Associated Press

Little by little, season by season, the world has gotten smaller in pro hockey. Not too many years ago the most distant supplier of player talent had been British Columbia in western Canada.

But things have changed greatly since then and never has it been more evident in the National Hockey League than this year, when 18 Swedish-born players dotted the preseason rosters of eight teams.

Many of them will see action tonight when the NHL opens its 62nd campaign with six games.

The Vancouver Canucks, who open against the Colorado Rockies, signed four Swedish players in the off-season. Center Roland Eriksson signed after completing his option year with the Minnesota North Stars while center Thomas Gradin and defensemen Lars Lindgren and Lars Zetterstrom came over from their homeland.

The Toronto Maple Leafs begin another campaign with one of the most successful Swedish imports as All-Star defenseman Borje Salming leads them into Pittsburgh to play the Penguins.

In the other opener tonight, the Atlanta Flames travel to Chicago to meet the Black Hawks.

The other teams, and the other Swedes, open Thursday, highlighted by the long-awaited debut of center Ulf Nilsson and right wing Anders Hedberg, John Ferguson, general manager of the New York Rangers last year, spent big bucks to sign the veterans, who led the Winnipeg Jets to the World Hockey Association title, then left for New York.

Ferguson later was replaced by Fred Shero, who took the GM's job and became one of the six coaches guiding new teams this winter.

The Rangers will open against the Philadelphia Flyers, while the New York Islanders take on the Buffalo Sabres and the Boston Bruins host Pittsburgh.

The Islanders also have Swedes on their roster, though the parents of Bobby Nystrom left Stockholm when the right wing was still on training blades. Islanders defenseman Stefan Persson was a more recent emigrant. Swedish goalie Goran Hogosta will spend more time in the Islanders system before being promoted.

Other coaches making debuts tonight: Harry Howell with the North Stars, Danny Belisle with Washington, Bob Berry with Los Angeles and Harry Neale with Vancouver. Bob McCammon, who took Shero's place in Philadelphia, opens his NHL coaching career Thursday.

Admiral Voices Arms Opinion

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Carter's limit on U.S. arms sales could backfire and end up increasing — rather than lessening — the chances of war involving weapon-buying nations, a representative of the Joint Chiefs of Staff says.

Rear Adm. James A. Lyons said Tuesday the unilateral restrictions on American sale of conventional weapons could force countries seeking arms to turn to other suppliers, thus reducing U.S. influence over possible future conflicts.

Lyons told a House panel that the Joint Chiefs support administration efforts to negotiate a multilateral agreement to limit the growing worldwide arms trade and reduce its threat to international security.

But, Lyons added, "Lacking such wide cooperation, continued U.S. unilateral controls could jeopardize the military security of friends and allies and could lead to arms substitution by other suppliers, resulting in diminished U.S. influence with no net increase — and possibly a decrease — in security among recipient states."

The president, concerned about dangers to world peace caused by the weapons trade, has established a ceiling on U.S. arms sales to all countries except NATO allies, Australia, New Zealand and Japan. The ceiling is intended to reduce U.S. arms sales, except to the exempted countries.

Lyons was one of three military officials who testified before a House Armed Services Committee panel on Indian Ocean force limitations and controls on conventional arms transfers.

The military panel generally endorsed the president's negotiating efforts with the Soviet Union on limiting arms sales and controlling the size of Indian Ocean forces.

Brig. Gen. James M. Thompson, representing the Defense Department, testified that progress has been made in talks with the Soviet Union on both issues.

However, Thompson said the leading Western European arms suppliers — France, West Germany and Great Britain — have refused thus far to join in the negotiations on weapon sales.

"To be successful, we need to involve as many suppliers as possible in the restraint process," Thompson said. "One or two countries, even if they include major suppliers like the Soviet Union, may not be sufficient."

Critics of unilateral limits on arms sales have argued that nations seeking weapons will buy from other suppliers if the United States unilaterally refuses to sell weapons abroad. Proponents contend that the United States should not contribute to worldwide instability and possibly war.

On the Indian Ocean force limitations, Thompson said the United States and Soviet Union have agreed on a general framework to keep ship deployments at about current size although differences on specific force levels remain.

Alaska Land Negotiations Continue

By JOHN LENGEL

WASHINGTON (AP) — Negotiations continue on saving the sweeping Alaska lands legislation, but Sen. Mike Gravel, D-Alaska, is staying away and remains determined to kill any compromise.

Gravel has consistently opposed the bill as it made its way through Congress, promising to kill it either through a filibuster or by manipulating Senate rules.

Although Gravel and his fellow Alaskan, Sen. Ted Stevens, are on opposite sides, both want the bill where it is now, ready for Senate action, with time running out as Congress prepares to quit Saturday.

Stevens said he worked to draw out Senate Energy Committee preparation of the bill to increase leverage for bargaining.

Gravel wants as small a time frame as possible in order to increase his chances of killing the bill.

"I'm doing everything to guarantee it will fail.... It is in my interest to stop any bill," says Gravel as House and Senate managers of the bill and their staffs try on their own for a compromise.

Essentially, the aim of the negotiations is to shape a bill that could be put to the Senate, passed, and sent on to the House for final action without a time-consuming House-Senate conference committee having to reconcile differences.

Such a compromise would include Senate amendments approved by Rep. Morris Udall, D-Ariz., the bill's House manager. But the two bills are so different, Udall said Tuesday, that he doubted a deal could be struck by Saturday.

Conservationists and the Carter administration prefer the House version of the legislation. Stevens thinks a compromise can be drafted to suit the remaining objections of companies that feel the legislation would throttle development in the resource-rich state.

Stevens says a compromise bill can be made palatable to the Senate, and he wants it this year. It would give the state control of about 75 million acres of federal land promised under the 1959 Alaska Statehood Act.

Gravel says, "It is in my interest to stop any bill" because, in his view, the federal government would have final say on Alaska's economic development.

The Senate Energy Committee chairman, Sen. Henry Jackson, D-Wash., says there can be no movement until Gravel agrees to go along.

Stevens declines to meet with Gravel, saying it's up to Alaskans to convince him to change his mind.

The Senate and House bills would set aside roughly the same California-size block of land — at least 100 million acres — as national parks, wildlife refuges and national forests. But the Senate bill has less stringent provisions on possible development of the lands for oil, minerals and logging.

Klan Planning To Recruit

CONCORD, N.H. (AP) — The leader of one of the largest chapters of the Ku Klux Klan says he's starting a major recruiting drive in New Hampshire because "the Seabrook nuclear plant is the kind of issue that will draw people to the Klan."

"New Hampshire is ripe for a Klan membership drive and I won't leave the state without forming a Klavern (chapter)," said William Wilkinson Tuesday in a telephone interview from his headquarters in Denham Springs, La.

"We're going to Seabrook to support the construction workers because nobody else is looking out for their interests," said Wilkinson, the imperial wizard of the Invisible Empire of the Knights of the Ku Klux Klan, one of the three largest chapters in the country.

Union and company officials could not be reached immediately for comment on Wilkinson's announcement.

Wilkinson said he will hold a march or a rally Saturday at the Seabrook site. He said he was asked to come to the state by several construction workers at the controversial nuclear plant.

The $2.3 billion power facility is being built on New Hampshire's 17-mile long coastline and has been the focus of dozens of anti-nuclear protests and more than 2,000 arrests.

"It may seem unusual for the Klan to be concerned over a nuclear plant but everyone is listening to the people opposed to the plant and the workers are being forgotten," Wilkinson said.

"Federal law calls for 10 percent blacks on any major (construction) job, but I don't think that even 10 percent of the people in New Hampshire are black," he said. "It's time for the silliness to stop and we're going to try."

The 1970 census report issued by the U.S. Census Bureau listed New Hampshire's black population as just over 2,500 while the white population was given as 733,106.

Jury Hands Out 10-Year Term To Molester

A jury Tuesday assessed a Lubbock man a 10-year prison term after finding him guilty of molesting a nine-year-old girl.

The term meted out to Jimmy Clifford Buntin Jr., 37, was the maximum possible for the indecency-with-a-child conviction.

The 10-woman, two-man jury in Judge William R. Shaver's 140th District Court deliberated only 17 minutes before returning the punishment verdict. Earlier Tuesday, the panel had taken 25 minutes to find Buntin guilty.

Buntin — who, according to evidence presented during the punishment phase of the trial, had two prior theft and three burglary convictions — was found guilty of molesting the child June 2.

The main witness for the state was the girl, now 10, who said Buntin carried both her and her eight-year-old sister away in a pickup truck after finding them playing in the front yard at their residence.

She said Buntin — who, she said, was known to her as "Psychedelic Slim" and called "Psych" — was known to her as a friend of an older sister.

In response to questions from Assistant District Attorney Cindy Miller, the witness indicated Buntin, after making a couple of stops, drove the two girls to a rural area.

The witness testified Buntin took her out of the pickup truck, ripped her panties and threw her in a ditch. She said the defendant had unzipped his pants, exposing himself.

She said that as Buntin grappled with her in the ditch, her sister hit the defendant on the head with a rock. After that, the witness testified, the two girls attempted to run away. The complainant said Buntin caught her and her sister, put them back into the truck and took them home.

Five Lions Escape At Oregon Refuge

SILETZ, Ore. (UPI) — A bull buffalo knocked a hole in a fence Tuesday briefly freeing five lions, including one that had attacked a child earlier, at the Oregon Coast Safari.

Handlers managed to recapture the animals while sheriff's deputies stood by with high-powered rifles.

Sheriff's Sgt. Larry Weaver said the lions never got outside the safari grounds after escaping their fenced-in area after the buffalo tore a hole in it. Safari personnel spent 1 1/2 hours getting leashes on the lions.

Weaver said four of the lions were said to be gentle but one was considered more dangerous after attacking a child visiting the safari earlier this year. He said the child was "not hurt very badly."

Not Many People Visit Site Of Agnew's Exit

BALTIMORE (AP) — The federal courthouse where Spiro Agnew bowed from public life is used by the city now, and the day is long past when the curious would come to see the historic spot.

Five years ago — on Oct. 10, 1973 — Agnew pleaded no contest here to a federal tax evasion charge before becoming the first vice president of the United States to resign in disgrace.

Agnew lives most of the year in Palm Springs, Calif., now, maintaining telephone contact with his Pathlite Inc. consulting firm in Crofton, Md., and keeping up a summer home in Ocean City, Md.

"No one comes in to look, or even asks about it any more," said a courthouse guard, who asked that his name not be used. "They did for a while after it happened, but not anymore."

Agnew was out of the country when the anniversary passed, unavailable for comment. A Pathlite spokesman, who asked not to be identified, said the former vice president to Richard Nixon was halfway around the world on a business trip.

Maryland was where Agnew first made his name, serving as Baltimore County executive and governor of the state.

And those early years were probed in the government's investigation — "a probe that went far beyond the single count of evading $13,551.47 in federal income tax for 1967.

A 40-page document filed with the court said Agnew had accepted thousands of dollars during his public life from architects and engineers in exchange for contracts.

The payments, which began while he was executive of the sprawling county in the mid-1960s, continued during his governorship and into his term as vice president, the document said.

Lester Matz, an engineer and a key government witness, said he gave an envelope full of payoff cash to Agnew in his office at the Old Executive Office Building, across the street from the White House, the document said.

The document said Matz gave an envelope full of payoff cash to then-Vice President Agnew, and quoted Matz as saying he worried that middlemen in the payoff scheme would say he was holding back too much money.

To this, the document said, Agnew replied; "Tell them you gave at the office."

In return for Agnew's no-contest plea, the government recommended against a jail term and promised a prohibition on further criminal charges.

Agnew was fined the maximum — $10,000 — and placed on three years' unsupervised probation.

Since then, Agnew has maintained his innocence, saying the payments were political contributions and had never influenced his official acts.

Teen Enters Guilty Plea

SANTA MONICA, Calif. (AP) — An 18-year-old college student who pleaded guilty to trying to extort $150,000 from Walter Mattheu by threatening to kill the actor's son will be sentenced Nov. 7.

Kenneth Dahlinger, who said he got the idea for the scheme from watching television, pleaded guilty during his arraignment Tuesday to a felony charge of sending a threatening letter with the intent of extorting money. He was free on $5,000 bail.

Superior Court Judge Edward Rafeedie could sentence Dahlinger, a student at Pierce College who lives in nearby Canoga Park, to seven years in prison.

"He said he got the idea from watching TV," said Deputy District Attorney James Grodin. "He said he picked Matthau after he saw an interview in which Matthau described a gambling problem. He also said he'd seen a lot of extortion cases like this on the tube and thought he'd try it."

Police said Dahlinger arranged for the pay-off in a type-written letter last July to Matthau's Pacific Palisades home in suburban Los Angeles. He threatened Matthau's son, Charles, 15, unless Matthau left $150,000 at a designated drop site, according to police.

Authorities staked out the site near Pacific Coast Highway below Pepperdine University's Malibu campus and arrested Dahlinger two days later when he opened a suitcase he thought contained the money. The suitcase contained cutup newspapers.

Family Involvement Enhances Scouting

(EDITOR'S NOTE: This is another in a series of articles dealing with agencies supported by the United Way of Lubbock. Except for officials of the United Way agencies involved, names used are fictitious to protect the identities of those served. However, the stories reflect actual case histories here.)

"I look at girl scouting as a family affair," said Mrs. Anita Randall, expressing her philosophy as a mother and girl scout leader.

"I can involve my whole family and sometimes it's hard to get parents into scouting," she said. Indeed, Mrs. Randall did get her family into the scouting spirit — from her husband's simple chauffeuring jobs for the girls to the children, John, John Jr., Beth and Rita — accompanying their Girl scout leader-mother on camping trips.

The Girl scout Caprock Council is a United Way agency and will receive $76,890 from the 1979 United Way goal of $1,682,369.

Mrs. Randall related that she began as a Girl Scout leader when her oldest daughter, Beth, became interested in joining the organization about five years ago. Mrs. Randall figured that joining her dughter in the enterprise was better than letting her go alone and this decision was beneficial to both.

"Scouting gave me the opportunity to know Beth and grow up with her. It also let me 'stay up' with the changing times," Mrs. Randall said. "It was a learning experience and we were learning together."

Mrs. Randall said she sees a great need for scouting in the changing society she wants better to understand. "We need leadership. The kids now don't know what direction to take. I feel that scouting fills that gap. Scouting is the answer. It gives them the opportunity to grow and to get along with others. Most of all it enables them to learn their potential," she said.

As a troop leader for growing girls, Mrs. Randall said she noticed the growing and changing interests of her girl scouts. She said most of the small girls want to do simple crafts while in elementary school they enjoy cooking and as teenagers the girls want to be going all the time.

She said she felt many girls may drop scouting when they enter junior high and she feels a group troup leader can prevent this with interesting activities. "If you want to keep a good troop you have to keep the girls active. There's plenty to offer, it's harder, but the offering is there. The leader has to offer it to the girls."

Mrs. Randall's daughter is a prime example of a girl who stayed in scouting and is reaping enormous benefits. This year Beth went to the World Center meeting of the World Association of Girl Guides and Girl Scouts in Cuernavaca, Mexico. Mrs. Randall said her daughter loved the trip, making new friends from around the world.

Pat Harris, director of the Girl Scouts Caprock Council, said the World Center trip is part of the World Association of Girl Scouts and Girl Guides plan to improve international relations. Eight Girl scouts and two adults from the council were selected to make the trip to Mexico, out of its local membership of 4,419 girls and 1,107 in 18 surrounding counties.

Mrs. Randall said that when her daughter came home she seemed so much more grown up and sensitive to others. However, Miss Harris maintained that this is an objective of scouting. "We hope the girls find a set of values and stick to them. The Girl Scouts is trying to grow with the times. We want to teach girls to respect others and themselves."

Mrs. Randall stepped down from her post as troop leader this year, as her oldest daughter is entering senior scouting. "There are some things we would have never been able to give to Beth that scouting has provided her with. For me being a troop leader was a challenge. You not only have to live the adult life but the little girl life, too."

Mrs. Randall is probably not too sad about leaving her troop. She has a full-time job and, besides, her youngest daughter is getting into Girl Scouting and she'll need a troop leader too.

Inventor Of Wrench Collects From Sears

CHATTANOOGA, Tenn. (AP) — Peter Roberts, who runs a grocery store and manages an apartment building, is becoming a millionaire because of a socket wrench he invented 15 years ago.

Roberts will fly to Chicago today and receive a check for $1 million from Sears, Roebuck and Co. for the device he invented while working as an 18-year-old clerk in a Sears store in Gardner, Mass. The wrench Roberts invented on his own time permitted a mechanic to change sockets with one hand. Sears paid him $10,000 for rights to the tool.

Grain Futures

CHICAGO (AP) — Profit-taking in anticipation of a religious holiday and a major government crop report trimmed soybean and corn prices Tuesday on the Chicago Board of Trade.

The surprising corn and soybean price gains of Monday continued in early trading Tuesday but lost impetus later in the session.

The Agriculture Department's report on Oct. 1 crop conditions, expected after the close Wednesday, combined with the approach of Wednesday's Yom Kippur holiday, led to heavy selling at the closing bell that took 6 to 8 1/2 cents off soybean prices.

Some harvest-time hedge selling by grain buyers and processors was reported. Hedge selling enables large grain users to avoid taking losses if prices fall between their harvest-time grain purchases and their later sales.

Wheat trade was generally dull in the absence of significant news to affect prices either way.

Insulation Study Assistance Sought

WASHINGTON (AP) — The National Bureau of Standards is looking for homeowners to participate in a survey of the effectiveness of wall insulation.

The study is seeking people who had insulation added to the walls of their homes at least two years ago.

This column previously reported that the study was for homes insulated within the last two years. That is incorrect.

In particular the study will concentrate on homes in New England, Minnesota, Maryland, Virginia, the District of Columbia, North and South Carolina, Georgia, Alabama, Louisiana, Florida, Ohio and Kentucky.

Persons who had insulation added to their homes at least two years ago and who are interested in participating should write to John Weidt Associates Inc., Jonathan Lake Village Center, Post Office Box 401, Chaska, Minn., 55318.

Russians Here To Talk Grain

By DON KENDALL

WASHINGTON (AP) — A delegation of Russians is meeting with U.S. officials to talk about the grain supply and requirements of both countries in the year ahead.

The meeting today is one of two each year that are routinely held as part of an agreement requiring the Soviet Union to buy a minimum amount of wheat and corn annually from the United States. This year's earlier conference was in Moscow.

According to the latest estimate by the Agriculture Department, the Soviet Union's total grain production this year will be about 220 million metric tons, the third largest harvest in its history.

Also today, the department will issue an updated estimate of U.S. production of corn and some other key crops. A month ago, it forecast the 1978 corn harvest now under way at a record 6.8 billion bushels.

Along with existing stockpiles, that is far more corn than is needed to meet U.S. domestic and export needs in the coming year as they are now perceived.

Agriculture Secretary Bob Bergland said that he hopes to announce next week how much cropland farmers will have to set aside next year to qualify for federal price supports on corn and other feed grain.

However, Bergland told reporters that he will have to get White House clearance first and that he hoped to send his proposals to President Carter this weekend.

Bergland did not say what he will recommend. This year feed grain producers, to qualify for supports, were required to idle land equal to 10 percent of their 1978 corn acreage. They also had the option of taking additional land from production to qualify for greater benefits.

Some groups have urged the administration to tighten the program to help cut down on the growing surplus of feed grains. Bergland said those recommendations have ranged from "zero to 30 percent" land set-aside.

Bergland indicated that a 30 percent acreage set-aside might be too much for 1979.

He also said in response to reporters's questions following a news conference that discussions with the Soviet Union today will be aimed, in part, at determining how much grain it will require in the coming year.

Colorado Apple Crop May Be Lost

DENVER (UPI) — Attorneys for the Western Colorado Fruitgrowers Association say a $6 million apple crop could be lost unless farmers can bring in outside help to help harvest.

U.S. District Judge Alfred Arraj today awaited word from federal attorneys and the growers on Colorado's Western Slope to decide if he should issue an order allowing Mexicoan nationals to be used to harvest the crop.

Federal and state labor officials said plenty of American migrant laborers had been brought into the area and that should be enought to harvest the apples.

Although Arraj originally indicated he would issue a ruling Tuesday, he said he would delay action for 24 hours to give lawyers for both sides a chance to verify figures on the number of workers available in the Western Slope area.

Members of the growers association filed the federal court action last week after complaining they did not have enough workers.

"We could very easily lose this crop," warned Dale Ferguson, president of the fruit growers organization. "We've got a $6 million crop here and we've got to get it picked one way or the other."

Spokesmen for the federal and state labor departments said workers had been brought into the area from parts of Texas, Utah, New Mexico, Arizona and Colorado.

A federal official said 206 workers arrived in the area Saturday and another 116 had arrived or were en route Monday. That is in addition to 200 already in the area, he said. The spokesman note that the growers had asked that 345 migrant workers be brought into the area.

State Labor Department Director Bob Orr said the growers originally offered $2.65 an hour for the help, but the wages automatically jumped to $3.36 when the growers made their request to use Mexican nationals. Orr said federal law required the automatic increase when a request for a federal certification is made.

AIR PASSENGER SUBDUED

ATLANTA (AP) — A spokesman for Delta Airlines said an unidentified passenger "forcibly intruded his way on the flight deck" of a Delta flight from Atlanta to Boston Tuesday, but was subdued aboard the aircraft and apprehended by Massachusetts authorities.

Burger Demand Keeps Cost Up

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (UPI) — Americans are consuming more and more hamburger these days, much to the delight of cattle producers.

Joe Cook, an market analyst for Livestock Business Advisory Services Inc., said the high consumption of the ground meat will keep cattle prices high in coming months.

Cook told the Kansas City chapter of the National Agri-Marketing Association Monday night that a few years ago only 40 percent of a slaughter steer went for hamburger.

"But that's all changed," Cook said. "Right now there seems no way to satiate the housewife's demand for hamburger and we're looking not too far ahead to the day when 60 to 65 percent of the steer will go for hamburger."

Cook said the demand for hamburger is keeping the price up for fat cattle. Despite high prices, he said, consumer demand for all varieties of beef has increased because of moderate increases in consumer earnings.

He predicts the current liquidation of cattle will continue and there will be no real growth in the cattle industry until after 1980.

KIDS-ONLY CLUB

Camp Fire Girls Aid Elderly

By SHARI LEWIS

It makes me feel really good to be able to share ideas from my mailbag with you. Today, I sent a "thank you" copy of my "Kids-Only Club Book" to Tami Rapp of Portland, Ore., because she wrote:

"I'm a fifth-grade Camp Fire Girl. Our group regularly goes to a nursing home to entertain senior citizens. At Halloween, we carve pumpkins for them and sing, dance and play the piano for them. We have even adopted some as foster grandparents.

"Senior citizens in homes often can't afford to buy certain foods that they love: soft candies (easy to chew), crackers and cookies, olives and pickles and other 'extras.' So we always try to bring goodies to give away."

I called a senior citizen home in my neighborhood and they said that Halloween entertainment would really be a treat, but they ask that anyone interested call first, and make a date for the visit.

And as you make that visit, remember that the older people you will be meeting probably went trick-or-treating when they were young, 60 or more years ago. Ask 'em what they did on Halloween. Who knows, they may give you some "new" ideas!

YESTERDAY'S BRAIN TWISTER: Almost all rivers flow from north to south. In America, there is a river that flows from south to north. Which one?

ANSWER: The Red River flows from North Dakota up into Canada's Lake Winnipeg.

TODAY'S BRAIN TWISTER: Why does a faucet drip? (Look for the answer in tomorrow's Kids-Only Club column.)

(Do you have something you like to do to give helping hand to others - people or animals, friends or strangers, youngsters or senior citizens? Share your "helping hand" idea with me, and I'll send a free copy of my new book, "The Kids-Only Club Book," as a prize for the helping hand idea submitted that we print. Just write to KIDS—ONLY CLUB, c/o this newspaper, P.O. Box 1111, Los Angeles, Calif. 90053.)

Ex-Secretary Pens Script

By JAY SHARBUTT

BEVERLY HILLS, Calif. (AP) — Sandra Harmon used to be a secretary, then a writer for Dick Cavett in his ABC talk show days. Now, she's written and produced an NBC movie. About a TV talk show, of course.

Called "Fast Friends," it's her first film. Ironically, it was bought, she says, by an NBC program executive, Deanne Barkley, who was head writer of a Cavett show where she began her career in 1968.

She credits Miss Barkley with giving her the proverbial big break back then by helping her shift from secretarying to scrivening notes about guests on the show for Cavett's use in interviews.

Miss Barkley also helped her join the staff of writers, added the lady who, when she dropped out of high school at age 16, never suspected she'd someday be composing gags for Cavett, a Yale man.

Mrs. Harmon, a lively, red-haired woman born in Brooklyn "a couple of years ago," entered TV in a roundabout way. After school, she toiled as as secretary and typist in New York's garment district.

In time, she met and wed a TV producer in New York, Larry Harmon. She says he provided her first introduction to the world of television. Alas, the marriage broke up after two years.

"I took no alimony, even though he was a millionaire," she said. She started laughing. "People said, 'Ha-ha-ha, what a fool you are,' and guess what, I am."

She decided to try the world of TV, and "I lied, I said I was a writer. All the networks laughed at me." So, she said, she fibbed a bit, claimed she'd written many shows her ex-husband had done.

Well, you have to start somehow, and all this led to her start as a $120-a-week secretary to the associate producer of the Cavett show. She's worked in TV ever since in a wide variety of programs.

Her wordsmith credits include a Bill Cosby series, an all-female comedy special, "The Shape of Things," five televised beauty pageants and even a syndicated talk show Joe Namath once hosted.

She also wrote a novel, "A Girl Like Me," and six Cosmopolitan articles, one entitled "Never Be Faithful to a Married Man."

Her "Fast Friends," which NBC hasn't scheduled yet, stars Dick Shawn as a privately cruel, publicly down-home type of talk show star, and Carrie Snodgrass as the show's kindly head writer.

Mrs. Harmon, who calls the film a "dramedy," a drama with comedy, was asked, of course, if it's what they call a "thinly-diguised" slice of real life. Of course, she said no, sort of:

"None of the things that happen in my movie happened to me. But all the people are modelled after real people."

The film's other characters include a lady who books music acts and always dallies with rock stars and a trumpet-playing bandleader. There even is a "green room groupie," a lady who hangs around the room where guests wait before going on the show.

Producer Harmon grinned. She said she plays the groupie. She'll be sighted when a guest played by Michael Parks turns to her and asks: "Do you come here often?"

Tomorrow's Horoscope

By Bernice Bede Osol

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23) Be extra-wary tomorrow of exceeding your physical limitations. Seek energetic assistance if you get involved in heavy work.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 22) You could rain on your own parade tomorrow as well as on those you are with if your attitude is glum rather than festive. Get in the spirit.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 23-Dec. 21) Sweep no family responsibilities under the rug tomorrow. You'll collect lots of guilt regarding things you could have done, but didn't.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) Don't ask for a critique tomorrow of your actions from a pal who tells it like it is. You may not be prepared to deal with the raw truth.

AQARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 19) Be extremely sensible tomorrow in the management of your financial and material resources. Don't loan what you can't afford.

PISCES (Feb. 20-March 20) You may feel unable to achieve tomorrow without the assistance of strong allies. In actually, you'll perform much better as a loner.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) Assuming others responsibilities could severely stifle your independence tomorrow. They could be straws that might break the camel's back.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) Social demands may prove surprisingly burdensome tomorrow. What you thought would be fun may end up being a bummer.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) Personal ambitions might have to be shelved tomorrow because duty calls. Fighting this fact to life will only make things worse.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) It's not like you to be so rigid, but tomorrow if your views are opposed you won't give an inch. Clinging to a fixed position will suffocate you.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) An old obligation may clamor for payment tomorrow. Even though it may financially inconvenience you, it's best you get it off the ledger.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) Tomorrow you may have difficulty in seeing beyond the negative side and thereby overlook a possible solution to your problems.

Mail-Order Electronic Gadget Sales Bring Fortune To Man

NORTHBROOK, Ill. (AP) — Joseph Sugarman has developed a mail-order Midas touch.

Eight years ago he figured he could become rich selling little gadgets through the mails. And he has.

First it was electronic pocket calculators. For $12,000 Sugarman persuaded Craig Corp. to let him market its calculator. When the price was dropped from $240 to $180, he mailed ads to a million people.

"I made $20,000 in 10 days," he said, and by the end of 1972 he had done "a half-million dollars in volume, grossed $100,000 and netted $50,000."

His Midas touch was born. Giant retailers like Sears Roebuck and Montgomery Ward took an interest in the Craig calculator and began selling it, too.

Since then Sugarman, 40, has sold dozens of electronic gadgets by mail order — ranging from burglar alarms and home pinball machines to remote-control model speedboats.

His method is to pick an emerging product, plug it with ads in general magazines and special brochures and distribute it through the mail. His company, JSA National Sales Group, has grown from his basment to modern offices with 50 employees and annual sales nearing $50 million.

Sugarman, an electrical-engineering dropout from the University of Miami and a former CIA agent, has a passion for intricate dials and buttons. "I like gadgets," he says. "Someone offered me a small walkie-talkie in the middle of the CB craze. Instead of using the walkie-talkie idea, I focused on the mini-CB angle" and called the product the "Pocket Com."

In three years he sold 250,000 of them.

He said he looks for products employing new technology that makes the device faster, cheaper or somehow better than existing items.

Last January he latched on to the Canon P10D calculator. It simultaneously prints the computation on paper. The $90 machine has a novel printing head that makes it lighter, smaller and cheaper than other models, Sugarman said. "I thought, 'It's new, it's better, and with my enthusiasm I can show people why.'"

His company has sold more than 15,000 of them and recently J.C. Penney and Montgomery Ward began stocking it.

Sugarman says he typically receives 1,000 calls or letters a year from inventors but finds that fewer than 10 percent of the products worth a look.

Once he gets a new product, Sugarman has it photographed, writes the ad copy and test-markets the device in a Southwest U.S. publication. If the response is good, he opens the throttle nationally with ads in such publications as Time, Business Week, Scientific American and the airlines in-flight magazines. Three times a year he sends a glossy catalog of about 50 pages to one million people.

Not all of Sugarman's efforts succeed, however. A $1,500 laserbeam mousetrap flopped. He didn't sell a single one. His biggest flop, financially, was a $250,000 loss sustained in 1975 on a "checkbook with a brain."

Opera Reviewer Pans Latest Met Offering

By MARY CAMPBELL

NEW YORK (AP) — In a spirit of friendship and cooperation unknown a few years ago, the director of the New York City Opera conducted at the Metropolitan Opera when the Met's conductor became ill.

Viennese-born Julius Rudel, director of the New York City Opera since 1957, was applauded as he made his Met debut Saturday night, conducting "Werther." Richard Bonynge had withdrawn more than a week before, because of illness.

"Werther," by Jules Massenet, to be kind about it, is a faded Valentine of an opera. It is based on Goethe's novel, "The Sorrows of Young Werther." The hero loves Charlotte and she loves him but she had promised her dying mother to marry Albert. She does. Werther pleads with her a few times then shoots himself.

Tenor Placido Domingo was singing at the Met for the first time this season in the title role, which his press representative says is his favorite role. He will sing it twice more this month.

His voice sounded as though coming through a tight throat. His sad arias opening and closing the second act were well delivered, but he sounded quite unlike the Domingo that Met patrons have admired for a long time. Through much of the opera he sounded like an ordinary tenor, which we never had heard Domingo do before.

Elena Obraztsova, a Russian mezzo heard here in starring parts with the Bolshoi Opera and who made her Met debut two years ago, was Charlotte. She has a big, hard voice which sometimes wobbles. However, she can take vocal and acting command of the stage in a splendid way and she looks beautiful.

We admire the attractive sets, where the background really looks at a distance, by Rudolf Heinrich, except for the final one of Werther's study. That looked like a cabin in the woods after a storm had knocked its walls down.

There was cheering from time to time. We only agreed with the applause for Rudel.

Opera Lovers Pay Peanuts For Show

LONDON (AP) — The $40 seats were removed from the Royal Opera House in Covent Gardens Monday to let 700 Wagner-lovers sit on the floor for $4 each for the opening performance of Wagner's "Ring of the Nibelungen."

The plan, made possible by a donation from a major British bank, is to widen the opera house's audience. It takes four nights to produce the "Ring" cycle, and the cut-rate seats are first-come, first-served each night. The rest of the house has been sold out for weeks for the performance produced by Gotz Friedrich and conducted by Colin Davis.
