Critical Mandela

WASHINGTON (AP) — Nelson Mandela criticized U.S. aid to non-communist guerrillas in Angola Sunday shortly after he arrived in Washington for meetings with President Bush and congressional leaders today.

During an unusual 20-minute question-and-answer session with reporters and editors from black-owned media concerns, Mandela said the U.S. should not be providing assistance to Jonas Savimbi, a guerrilla fighter seeking to overthrow the Angolan government.

WICHITA FALLS (AP) — There will be no champagne or fireworks or dancing girls. No parades, ribbon cuttings, marching bands or long-winded speeches.

But when Ray Nipper reopens his fire-ravaged beer and barbecue joint this week, it'll be no small deal.

"I may give the smokers a six-month discount to get the place seasoned like it was," he chuckled. "It won't take long to whip it back in shape; we use our building."

Indeed, folks in Wichita Falls have been using Nipper's emporium, the splendidly shabby P2, for some four decades. It's a mesquite-flavored legend, "Cheers" with a drawl.

Pride's a hit

ARLINGTON, Texas (AP) — Country singer Charley Pride had a hit on his hands, but this one had nothing to do with Billboard charts.

Pride

Pride played in an Old Timers baseball exhibition before Saturday's major league game between the Texas Rangers and the Seattle Mariners. He got a single in his only time at bat, scored a run and made a nifty running catch while playing the outfield.

The catch by Pride stole a hit from former Boston Red Sox All-Star Pete Runnels.

AIDS activists protest Sullivan

■ Many doctors and scientists are upset by demonstrators' disruption of closing speech given by HHS Secretary Louis W. Sullivan.

By Daniel Q. Haney
AP Science Writer

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Hundreds of chanting, whistle-blowing demonstrators drowned out Health and Human Services Secretary Louis W. Sullivan Sunday while he urged cooperation between scientists and AIDS activists.

Sullivan, asking for "cooperation, tolerance, understanding and caring" in the closing speech at the Sixth International Conference on AIDS, dodged wads of paper tossed at him as he stood at the podium behind a line of police.

"We must find the ways and means to work together for the benefit of people with AIDS and HIV infection throughout the world," Sullivan said, but demonstrators unfurled banners, blew whistles and air horns and chanted: "We want action. No more words."

Many doctors, scientists and others attending the meeting at the Moscone Center convention hall were upset by the disruption, organized by the activist group ACT UP, the AIDS Coalition to Unleash Power.

During the five-day meeting, ACT UP led daily demonstrations outside the convention hall. However, until Sunday, celebrated by thousands downtown as Gay-Lesbian Freedom Day, they did not disrupt the scientific sessions inside.

"It's sad," said Dr. James Curran, head of the AIDS program at the U.S. Centers for Disease Control. "It's an example of the fragmentation of the efforts that I most fear in the 1990s, sick versus well, gay versus straight."

Activists are angry with federal AIDS efforts on several counts, including the perceived slowness in finding new treatments and making them available to people infected with HIV, the virus that causes AIDS.

Activists have persuaded federal regulators to let infected people take experimental AIDS drugs even before they are formally approved for routine use.

Despite the demonstration, Sullivan was able to complete his speech. By con-

Aftershock triggers slide; Death toll soars

RUDBAR, Iran (AP) — The most powerful aftershock in three days rocked earthquake-devastated northern Iran Sunday, triggering a landslide that blocked the road linking this shattered town to the Caspian Sea coast.

The casualty toll climbed to 50,000 dead and 200,000 wounded, according to a newspaper close to President Hashemi Rafsanjani. Official radio put the death toll at 48,000.

Army mountaineers climbed peaks in the rugged region in an effort to rescue villagers trapped in remote hamlets following Thursday's earthquake, the official Islamic Republic News Agency reported.

Among them was a cargo jet carrying 84,000 pounds of U.S. aid — including bandages, antiseptic burn cream, tents and orange slices in syrup — collected by Americares, a private relief organization based in New Canaan, Conn.

It was the first overt U.S. shipment of its kind to be accepted by Iran since the hostage crisis of 1980, when 52 American hostages were held at the U.S. Embassy in Tehran for 444 days. The two nations have no diplomatic ties.

In Washington, the State Department said a Red Cross charter flight carrying supplies donated by the U.S. government was scheduled to arrive in Tehran late Sunday.

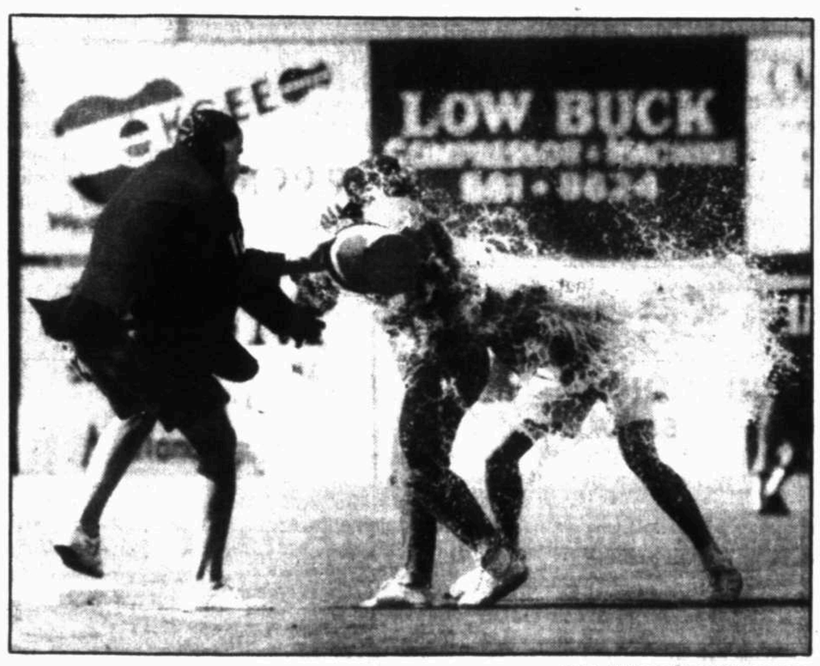

Earlier, the radical newspaper Jomhuri Islami urged that no help be accepted from the United States and other countries whose hands "are stained with the blood of the Iranian people."

The Foreign Ministry, however, said that "due to the magnitude of the disaster" Iran would accept all such aid.

"Iran accepts the assistance of all foreign countries except Israel and South Africa," Tehran radio quoted Deputy Foreign Minister Ali Mohammad Besharati as saying.

There were conflicting death tolls. The Tehran Times, the nation's leading English-language newspaper, quoted an unidentified senior relief official as saying 50,000 people died and 200,000 were injured in the quake.

Food industry lets consumers weigh choices

A THINNING OBSESSION

Driven to achieve the ideal slender physique, Americans are becoming big losers — of weight and more. From the seasonal shedding of a few pounds for a sleeker swimsuit look to radical starvation and fasting regimes for the seriously obese, dieters struggle to be a less sizable portion of society.

Today: The billion-dollar specialty food, diet plan and other industries that America's weight reduction compulsion have spawned.

By Chris Van Wagenen
Staff Writer

Not since the arrival of NutraSweet in the marketplace in the early '80s have food processors crawled over each other in such a fury to duplicate the success of America's largest selling sugar substitute.

And leave it to the Monsanto Co. unit to come up again with another potential winner — this time Simplesse — a fat substitute.

While the idea of a fat substitute already has left some dietitians and nutritionists with a bad aftertaste, the Food and Drug Administration (FDA) is being bombarded by applications that could vastly change consumer eating habits in the decade ahead.

Simplesse, a microparticulated protein that contains less than half the calories of animal fat and no cholesterol, is made up of egg white, a protein found in whey and a watery constituent of milk.

Simplesse is a potential $500 million consumer bonanza for NutraSweet and Monsanto, according to industry analysts.

Already on the gravy train is Dryer's Ice Cream Co., which has signed up to use its vast distribution network to begin marketing Simple Pleasures, a fake ice cream product using Simplesse technology to compete with premium high-butter fat competitors.

But Simplesse isn't alone in the world of faux fats.

At Proctor & Gamble the push is on to nail down FDA approval of Olestra — a calorie-free fat substitute comprised of sucrose polyesters that, unlike Simplesse, has a wide range of commercial applications because of its heat tolerance. Olestra also can't be absorbed by the body.

All this may sound a bit far-fetched, but with weight-conscious Americans scanning the store

Lawmakers hope sales tax hike will be enough

■ If there's a revenue shortfall, one answer could be "the most regressive sales tax in the country," not the taboo subject of a state income tax.

By Rick Brown
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Lawmakers, fresh from upping the state sales tax a quarter cent to pay for education reforms, are looking to the levy again to save them from a multi-billion-dollar shortfall in January.

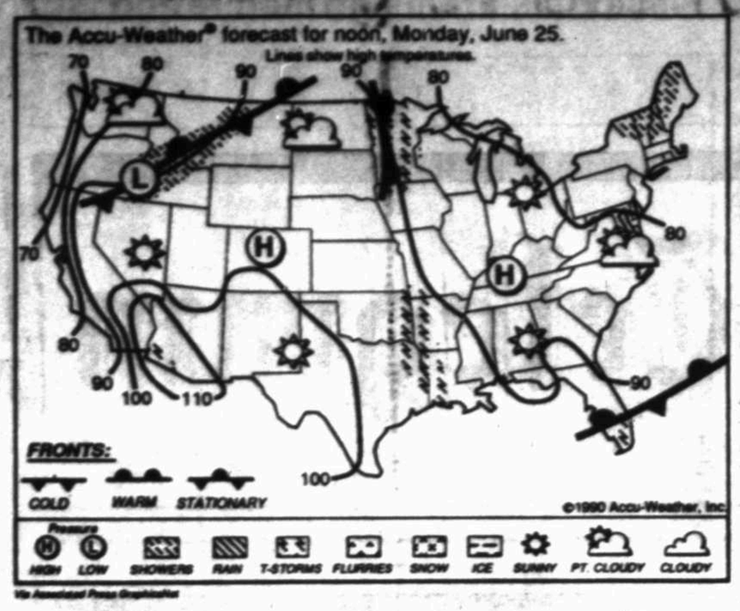

But this time, the likely strategy is broadening the tax base to include just about every product and service besides medicine and food, said Rep. James Hury, D-Galveston and chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee.

The result, if lawmakers follow through, will be "the most regressive sales tax in the country," acknowledged Hury, whose committee gives tax bills their first legislative hearing.

While not the most desirable of ends, altering sales tax collections is easier than putting into effect a variety of other proposals deemed more radical, such as an income tax. Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby, who is not running for re-election, has endorsed that idea.

Hot temperatures continue

Staff Report

Today's forecast calls for sunny skies and hot temperatures with a high near 104 and 10 to 20 mph southerly winds, according to the National Weather Service in Midland.

Tonight is expected to be fair with a low in the lower 70s, NWS said. Tuesday's forecast calls for sunny skies with a high near 102, NWS said.

Sunday's high of 108 was a new record, beating the old record of 104 set in 1980. The record low of 57 for today's date was set in 1957, NWS said.

STATE

Cloudy skies and few showers were the only reminders of an area of thunderstorms that developed across North Texas early Sunday. The showers were confined to the extreme northeastern portion of the state by late Sunday afternoon.

Partly sunny and hot weather were prevalent across the rest of Texas.

The rains developed north of a warm front that extended from near Houston to a surface area of low pressure near Amarillo. The air around this system produced strong south to southwest winds of 10 to 20 mph, with stronger gusts across West Texas.

NATION

Unseasonably cool weather Sunday chilled out a week's worth of high heat in the Deep South, but the Southwest sizzled for the first weekend of summer.

Weatherford, Texas, west of Dallas, got hail as large as tennis balls during the morning, but much of the region got afternoon rainshowers and thunderstorms ranged from central and northeast Texas across eastern Oklahoma.

Showers and thunderstorms were scattered from south-central through northeast Kansas, northeast Nebraska, the upper Texas Gulf Coast, southwest Louisiana and parts of Florida.

Showers and thunderstorms also extended from eastern Kentucky across Ohio, western and northern Pennsylvania, eastern New York and central New England.

The Associated Press contributed to this report.

MEETING: AIDS official well received

trast, Dr. Anthony S. Fauci, the government's top AIDS official, was warmly received. Fauci is director of the National Institute of Allergy and Infectious Diseases and heads the federal Office of AIDS Research.

"Activists are mistaken when they assume, or at least publicly state, that scientists do not care about them," said Fauci.

He and other government scientists frequently have been criticized by activists for what they regard as the slowness of progress against acquired immune deficiency syndrome, especially in developing and testing new drugs.

"Most scientists care deeply and are employing all of their energies and talents to accomplish the same goals as the activists are trying to accomplish," he said.

Fauci said the careful, deliberate methods of the scientific process that have long guided researchers are often interpreted as insensitivity to the urgency of the epidemic.

He acknowledged that people who are infected with HIV, the AIDS virus, are impatient because they cannot wait years for solutions to their medical problems, and this has led to anger on both sides.

"It is particularly devastating and unfair," he said, "when scientists of good faith and enormous talent are singled out and publicly named as scoundrels."

An ACT UP — AIDS Coalition to Unleash Power — protester shouts as Health and Human Services Secretary Louis Sullivan attempts to deliver the keynote speech during closing ceremonies of the Sixth International Conference on AIDS in San Francisco Sunday.

However, he noted that many activists are extremely well-informed about the technical details of AIDS experiments, and researchers should not dismiss them simply because they are not trained scientists.

"Activists bring a special insight into the disease that can actually be helpful in the way that we design our scientific approaches," he said. "We must join together, for together we are a formidable force with a common goal."

Fauci outlined research objectives for the decade and noted that several promising new drugs are being tested. He said scientists would like to change AIDS into a chronic, manageable disease that does not shorten people's lives.

"The goal for the 1990s is and should be a lofty one, namely the ability to completely and indefinitely suppress HIV in infected individuals," he said.

In another closing speech, Dr. Lars O. Kallings of Stockholm, president of the International AIDS Society, strongly attacked laws restricting travel by people infected with HIV.

He called the laws "shameful" and blamed "political bigotry" for not changing them.

Kallings did not specificialy mention the United States, which has restrictions on AIDS-infected visitors. Because of those rules, the international society has threatened to cancel the next international AIDS conference planned in this country, the 1992 meeting in Boston.

QUAKE: Death toll could be as high as 50,000

(From 1A)

He said even that was a conservative estimate because "the figures are quoted taking account only of those who have been registered officially as dead or wounded." Many victims were not counted, he said.

In Geneva, senior U.N. relief official M'hamed Essaafi also estimated the toll would reach 50,000 dead and 200,000 wounded.

The stench of decomposing bodies hung over Rudbar, a town of 100,000 people. Rescuers aided by police dogs pulled bodies from the rubble. A team of 205 French rescue workers arrived in the region with 18 search dogs and 35 tons of equipment, state television reported.

Officials said the quake killed 150,000 head of cattle, and health officials were trying to dispose of the rotting carcasses, fearing contamination of water supplies and the spread of infectious diseases.

The geophysics center at Tehran University reported 60 aftershocks Sunday. It said the strongest jolted Rasht on the Caspian Sea and measured 5.7 on the Richter scale.

Television reports said the jolt touched off a landslide that blocked the 35-mile road between Rasht and Rudbar, a critical route for relief supplies. It gave no further details. There were no reports of casualties.

A quake of magnitude 5 can cause considerable damage, while one of magnitude 6 can cause severe damage. Thursday's quake registered between 7.3 and 7.7 on the scale, which measures energy released by an earthquake.

The geophysics center also reported a moderate earthquake measuring 4.9 in southern Iran Sunday morning.

BUDGET: Legislature usually reacts to events

(From 1A)

Hury said the Legislature traditionally backs away from making radical changes until events make them absolutely necessary.

A combination of economic factors still could lead the state into that kind of dire situation by January, he said, but if crops get more rain, the price of oil remains stable and merchants have a good Christmas, such measures should not be necessary.

Legislative leaders are contemplating forming a panel to study tax alternatives. Hury said he is recommending the group start work in December — after the general election.

Lawmakers are forced to search for the easy way out by a political climate that rewards those who take a "no new taxes" stance, even when no other alternatives exist, he said.

As a lesson to those candidates, Hury offered the example of Gov. Bill Clements, "considered to be one of the most conservative of persons," he said.

"He signed nie on six and a half billion-worth of taxes," said the chairman.

This election year, "the gubernatorial candidates are opposed to taxes, as you can imagine," said a spokesman for Democrat Ann Richards' campaign, Monte Williams.

In budgetary matters, the spokesman said Ms. Richards will rely on her experience as state treasurer, in which she is said to have added $2 billion to state coffers over eight years through canny investing and other smart management techniques.

Ms. Richards also is banking on the state economy to increase at such a rate as to boost existing tax collections, thereby making more levies unnecessary, he said.

For his part, Republican candidate Clayton Williams is touting a 7 percent reduction in all agency operating budgets except those dealing with health care, education and criminal justice.

The plan would contribute an additional $235.6 million to state coffers.

Come January, however, the Legislature may have more than a couple of hundred million with which to contend.

As state agencies continue to prepare their budgets, the numbers are heralding a stiff competition for what dollars are available.

Already, Texas Department of Human Services Commissioner Ron Lindsey is asking for $725 million more during the two-year budget cycle starting Sept. 1, 1991.

Robert Dedman, chairman of the state highway commission, has called for a 10-cent hike in the current, 15-cent-per-gallon gasoline tax to give that agency an additional $750 million.

If the Legislature approves, voters would have final say on the hike in constitutional amendment balloting in November 1991. The increase would generate an additional $1 billion, but by law, a quarter of that amount must be spent on education.

Other possible expenditures come in the form of estimates from Rep. Mark Stiles, D-Beaumont, and Sen. Robert McFarland, R-Arlington, who say the state could be $500 million more in the hole if it has to pay counties for housing convicted felons.

A coalition of mostly urban counties took the state to court for money they're spending to house inmates while the state continues attempts to catch up with its prison overcrowding crisis.

The attorney general's office says it will file an appeal in the case in a couple of months.

Finally, the school finance plan signed into law earlier this month after four special sessions calls for $1.3 billion to $1.6 billion in new spending during the two-year biennium.

Yet to come are figures from the Texas Department of Mental Health and Mental Retardation on how much is needed to continue compliance with orders from U.S. District Judge Barefoot Sanders of Dallas.

A spokesman said those figures won't become available until Friday, when the board overseeing the agency convenes its annual budget meeting.

Also still out are figures for the various university and university system budgets, another traditionally big slice of the state budget pie.

Hury said these requests will come in addition to the $47 billion over two years the state needs merely to maintain services and salaries at current levels.

Even without the requests for additional money, lawmakers are estimating a shortfall of between $4 billion and $5 billion when they re-convene in January, he said.

Lawmakers could take back the quarter-cent sales tax hike and still generate as much as $6 billion by widening the base, Hury said, but he foresees some "mighty battles" among constituencies hurt by the action, such as agriculture and utility interests.

Morning News reporter charged with burglary

DALLAS (AP) — A Dallas Morning News reporter has been charged with burglarizing an Ellis County building.

An arrest warrant was issued for Pete Slover, 30, after he was found inside a closed county office building on June 15, Ellis County officials said.

Justice of the Peace Maurice Lowrey said Slover spent almost two hours alone in the county clerk's office after it closed. Slover was accused by county clerk Faye Marie Washington and county public works director Jimmy Reavis of burglary.

"I'm not after the gentleman," Reavis said. "It's just that he did wrong. There is a big sign that says when government offices are closed, but he just went ahead and proceeded to do his own thing."

Slover told his editors that he entered the building through an unlocked side entrance. He said he was researching public records for a story on a double murder that occurred in Ennis a day earlier.

Ralph Langer, executive editor of The Dallas Morning News, said the incident was unfortunate and apologized for any inconvenience it caused.

Slover said he had been in the building earlier, but left with county officials when the office closed at 5 p.m. But he told his editors he went back after learning from another reporter that a dispute over a will might have prompted the slayings.

"The reporter entered the clerk's building through an unlocked door," Langer said. "When he found no one was in the building, he attempted to leave only to find that the door had locked behind him."

Slover, who has been with the Dallas newspaper eight months, told his supervisors that he called his office, dictated notes for his story, and contacted Ellis County authorities.

Langer said no theft occurred and there was clearly no attempt to burglarize.

An Ellis County sheriff's dispatcher said no one would be available to discuss the incident until today. She said she could not say whether Slover had been taken into custody yet.

LANSING, Mich. (AP) — Republicans can't wait to get their hands on an upcoming book by the ex-wife of Democratic Gov. James Blanchard. Nervous Democrats wish they could put it on hold until after the November elections.

Paula Blanchard says both sides are overreacting. Her book covering the 1987 breakup of her 21-year marriage to Blanchard is due out in July.

Paula Blanchard's book — "'Til Politics Do Us Part" — is a question mark in the campaign, but Michigan's former first lady predicts it won't affect the election.

"This book is not a kiss-and-tell book," she said. "This book is not an exercise in vengefulness or anything like that. It's the story of my life as a political spouse and the choices I made and why I made the choices."

Paula Blanchard supports her ex-husbands's re-election bid and predicts he will win "based on his solid record of performance."

Engler offers a different assessment.

He describes Michigan as overtaxed, sputtering economically, and in need of a new leader. He contends Blanchard masks an average record with a high-powered public relations machine.

"Just think what the right man could do," is the theme of his campaign.

Engler himself is divorced, and his ex-wife, Colleen, also has written a book that touches on the breakup of their marriage.

Colleen Engler, a former state legislator and onetime gubernatorial candidate who works for the Commerce Department in Washington, said she doesn't have a publisher yet.

"It hasn't even been edited yet. An editor might say, 'You don't want any of this stuff about John Engler in there,'" she said. "My book is about running for governor in 1986 and then running for lieutenant governor."

Blanchard's divorce made front-page news, as did his remarriage, but there has been no backlash from voters. In fact, the newlyweds got a warm welcome earlier this month on a two-day tour to announce his bid for a third four-year term.

Paula Blanchard said the governor and a number of his associates asked her to hold up her book until after the election.

"The curious thing is none of them have read it," she said. "They were asking me to hold it based on speculation and assumptions."

"I've encouraged Jim to read the book. After he does that, his concerns about it will be minimized. He will be able to see it's a book that puts a lot into perspective," she said. "It goes directly from my heart to the page."

Blanchard is unopposed in Michigan's Aug. 7 primary, while Engler is expected to easily defeat tax fighter John Lauve. A March poll found Blanchard leading Engler 51 percent to 31 percent, but the lesser-known Engler said that was to be expected early in the campaign.

Engler launched his campaign in February and immediately began airing television ads aimed at boosting his name identification.

Democrats say Engler's leadership is untested and focus on Blanchard's record in erasing a $1.7 billion debt, his efforts to diversify the state's economy, improve education, and fight crime while keeping the state budget balanced.

The governor's first TV ad, unveiled last month, touted Blanchard as tough on crime and set out his campaign theme, "Tough. Tested. Trusted."

The ad closed with a white guard yelling at a black inmate at Michigan's boot camp prison for non-violent young offenders, who volunteer for its military-style discipline.

The ad was aired everywhere in the state except Detroit, which is two-thirds black. Engler's campaign director, Dan Pero, denounced it as racist, and some black leaders and lawmakers agreed.

The ad later aired in Detroit. Blanchard defended it as showing a real answer to a tough problem and dismissed the whole controversy as being manufactured by Republicans.

Mandela critical of aid to guerrillas

WASHINGTON (AP) — Nelson Mandela criticized U.S. aid to non-communist guerrillas in Angola on Sunday shortly after he arrived in Washington for meetings with President Bush and congressional leaders.

The pointed remarks were a sure sign that the African leader's three-day visit to the U.S. capital will have a decidedly more business-like flavor than his first four days in the United States, which were marked by a round of enthusiastic rallies and appearances that drew hundreds of thousands of supporters in New York and Boston.

During an unusual 20-minute question-and-answer session with reporters and editors from black-owned media concerns, Mandela said the United States should not be providing assistance to Jonas Savimbi, a guerrilla fighter seeking to overthrow the Angolan government.

"The United States and South Africa are the main countries that support Savimbi," he said. "We strongly condemn that because ... independent countries should respect the political sovereignty and territorial integrity of Angola and no assistance should be rendered to Savimbi."

Although questions were limited to representatives of black-owned media, other reporters were allowed to monitor the event.

Mandela said he had not broached the subject of Angola with South Africa's white government and he refused to divulge what he is going to tell Bush when they meet Monday.

Nevertheless, Mandela was explicit in saying "no assistance" should be given Savimbi's rebels, who have waged war for nearly 20 years against the Soviet and Cuban-backed Angolan government.

Several of the reporters who were allowed to ask questions praised Mandela and asked what they could do to help the anti-apartheid struggle.

"Apartheid is still there," Mandela said. "It is therefore necessary for you to continue to put pressure on your government and Congress" to continue sanctions.

Moreover, he said the African National Congress, with 20,000 exiles and enormous financial needs for new programs, must have money. "Take part in the campaign to raise funds for the ANC," Mandela said.

In a lighter vein, when one reporter asked about his health the 71-year-old leader said "why don't you arrange a ball (a dance) and take me on."

Asked whether he could control militant ANC youth in South Africa, Mandela acknowledged they are militant but that they also "are highly disciplined" and take orders from their leaders.

He showed no bitterness about having spent 27 years in jail, saying he didn't want to dwell on the past. "Let bygones, be bygones," he said when asked specifically about reports that the CIA had helped arrange his arrest in the early 1960s.

When one of the reporters asked Mandela whether he would help end vestiges of racism in the United States, the South African responded, "We are prepared to be guided by the black leadership."

At a brief airport arrival ceremony earlier, Mandela had said he was "greatly encouraged" by his rousing reception in the United States.

"I come here to put the message out that sanctions must be intensified, and to ask for resources so we could be able to address the problems that are facing our country today," said the ANC deputy president.

Nelson Mandela arrives at Washington's National Airport Sunday and salutes the crowd waiting for him. Mandela will meet with President Bush today. He is scheduled to remain in Washington for three days.

Mandela settles down to business in Washington, after four days of enthusiastic rallies and appearances that drew hundreds of thousands of supporters.

"We have been greatly encouraged by the rousing reception which the American people in New York and Boston have given us. They have left us with the distinct impression that in this country we have our brothers and sisters who are committed to the fight against racial oppression in our country," Mandela said.

Mandela noted that recent concessions by South African President F.W. de Klerk "have raised the hope for peace." But he said the government yielded "not because of a change of heart but because of the pressure put on the government inside the country and of the international community generally."

His only other announced events Sunday were a reception for African diplomats and a visit to a meeting between ANC members and South African exiles living in the Washington area. Both were closed to reporters.

Mandela's wife, Winnie, attended a church service Sunday afternoon to honor South African women.

Raids planned on drug dealers in public housing

WASHINGTON (AP) — Public housing tenants known to deal drugs will be kicked out of their apartments during nationwide raids set to begin this week even if they haven't been convicted of a crime, officials say.

Federal marshals are scheduled Monday to begin raiding apartments in housing projects located in as many as 22 cities where the holder of the lease is a known drug dealer and could be prosecuted for two felonies, officials said.

The tenant and his or her family may be kicked out of the apartment even if the person has not yet been convicted of a drug crime under the program first announced last month by Housing Secretary Jack Kemp, officials said.

The government calls the actions "leasehold forfeitures" — not evictions. The plan already has stirred up a legal challenge in one city.

The forfeiture of public-housing leases by known drug dealers is specifically authorized by asset-forfeiture provisions of the 1988 Anti-Drug Abuse Act, government officials say. The same provisions enable federal prosecutors to seize boats, cars and cash of drug dealers awaiting trial.

In this case, the lease is the asset to be seized.

The targeted housing projects are in some of the nation's largest cities — New York, Los Angeles, Chicago — as well as smaller municipalities such as Chandler, Ariz., Tacoma, Wash., and Frederick, Md., according to a list obtained by The Associated Press.

Bob Nipp, a spokesman for the Department of Housing and Urban Development, declined to comment on the planned raids.

Three people survive five days in cave

HARRISONBURG, Va. (AP) — A man and his two sons lost in a cave for five days without food or water survived by sitting quietly to save energy and reciting Bible scriptures to remain hopeful, the father said Sunday.

"Toward the end, we figured we were going to die," Gary Lutes said. "We were happy it would be all three of us together and not just one. We figured that was better than continuing on like that."

Lutes, 37, a Tampa, Fla., land surveyor, and sons Gary Jr., 13, and Timothy, 9, were rescued from a West Virginia cave Saturday, state police said. They had been lost since Monday.

They were taken to Rockingham Memorial Hospital in Harrisonburg, Va., where they were listed in stable condition Sunday.

The search did not begin until Friday. Father and sons endured bats, dehydration and hallucinations during the wait for rescuers that began soon after their lamps went out while they explored a side trail, Lutes said.

"If it had gone on another day, it would've been a different outcome," Lutes said in a telephone interview with The Associated Press from his hospital bed.

"For the first few days, I thought we would be rescued," he said. "After the fifth day, I was really beginning to wonder."

Lutes, a member of the National Speleological Society, said it was the first time he had gotten lost in 20 years of cave adventuring.

He and his sons were exploring New Trout Cave in Pendleton County in eastern West Virginia, about 200 miles west of Washington, D.C.

The trouble began when Lutes put down his pack to squeeze through a small opening, intending to retrieve the pack on his way out. When their lamps later went out, he and his sons couldn't find the opening or the pack, which held food, water and extra flashlights.

They took turns keeping watch. They recited psalms and prayed they would be rescued, Lutes said.

Recipes for weight loss differ

Brian Adamcik/Reporter-Telegram

Odessan Mignon Braun talks about different types of seasonings during a weekly meeting of Weight Watchers in Midland. The program, which was founded in New York City, has been in existence for more than 25 years.

By Chris Van Wagenen
Staff Writer

When the $33 billion diet industry came under fire earlier this year by a House subcommittee, most credible programs agreed that if legislation was the only way to protect patients, then so be it.

These days the competition for weight-minded customers is heating up as programs like Weight Watchers International and Nutri/System go head-to-head with other programs that talk a good game, but rarely deliver.

With so much at stake, it's little wonder that Congress has jumped into the act as it tries to decipher just who's telling the truth about what.

"The claim to lose weight quickly can be a very appealing claim," testified Peter Berger, president of Weight Watchers, a division of Pittsburgh-based H.J. Heinz Co. "But there are recognized 'speed limits' of one to two pounds a week."

Berger appeared before a House Small Business subcommittee in May along with representatives of Jenny Craig International, The Diet Center, Physicians Weight Loss Centers, Nutri/System, Optifast, Medifast and other weight-loss groups.

Their testimony has been of interest to U.S. Rep. Ron Wyden, D-Ore., who has held numerous sessions on weight-loss programs and their promises to get the weight off fast.

Weight Watchers is probably under the least amount of scrutiny, having been on the U.S. scene now for more than 25 years.

Founded by New Yorker Jean Nidetch in 1962, the company was purchased one decade later by food giant Heinz for a cool $71.2 million. Today franchised Weight Watchers programs operate in more than 40 states and overseas.

Dietitians and physicians consider it to be one of the soundest nutritional programs of its kind.

That comes as no surprise to Odessan Mignon Braun, who manages two locations in Odessa and Midland. She says Weight Watchers welcomes government scrutiny. "We certainly don't have anything to hide."

With more than 1,000 members between Odessa and Big Spring, the program has endured and grown locally over the years.

"It changed my life," said Braun, who lost 30 pounds on the program 18 years ago and has kept it off.

"It gave me a direction and pattern to live by. Most people who are overweight are just as sincere as they can be. They just don't know how to lose the weight."

> "The claim to lose weight quickly can be a very appealing claim. But there are recognized 'speed limits' of one to two pounds a week."
> — Peter Berger, president, Weight Watchers International

Not surprisingly, Braun, as well as others in the program, are not big on low-calorie liquid diets and other programs that promote rapid weight loss.

"With a liquid diet you don't learn how to eat. I don't contradict what they're doing, all I'm saying is, no matter how you lose the weight, you have to learn how to eat."

And that's a big part of the program — learning to re-adapt lifestyles so that when target weights are reached they are maintained.

However, the problem with most diets is they don't work. According to the American Dietetic Association, 90 to 95 percent of all people trying to lose weight don't know how to keep the weight off once they've lost it.

Weight Watchers offers clients a four-part program, teaching them how to eat and how to change habits through incorporated group support and exercise.

Initial cost is $28 to join and $9 for each subsequent week. Once members achieve their goal and maintain it for six weeks, they need never pay for a meeting again, so long as they stay no more than 2 pounds over their target weight.

Nutri/System, another franchise-type program offered locally, was recognized on Forbes magazine's list of "Up & Comer's" in 1981.

Recently, however, the company has come under fire, hit by a rash of lawsuits stemming from client complaints that the program's prepackaged food caused them gallbladder problems.

That point is disputed by the company, as well as by some local physicians who noted the chance of developing gallstones is greatly enhanced when obese people rapidly lose weight.

Nutri/System's manager in Midland/Odessa refused to be interviewed for this series.

Founded in 1971 by Harold Katz, owner of the National Basketball Association's Philadelphia 76ers, the company nearly fell to pieces in 1985 before a new president was brought in. It was later taken private for $70 million in 1986 by Al Donald McCulloch and three partners.

Unlike other programs, Nutri/System relies primarily on a menu of pre-packaged food that can cost $50-65 per week depending on location, as well as an up-front fee based on the weight a client wants to lose.

Coahoma resident Kelly Overton, a member of Nutri/System/Big Spring said she's satisfied with the way the program operates.

Mrs. Overton, who has lost 25 pounds since joining two months ago, said she looked at a number of weight reduction programs, including Weight Watchers.

"But I didn't feel I was getting the support that I needed. I get that with Nutri/System."

Unlike other diets she has tried, Mrs. Overton said the program never left her feeling as though she was hungry, providing up to three meals and two snacks per day.

Each week, Mrs. Overton attends a 20-minute class where she also receives her weekly allowance of food. "They also try to call me once a week to see how I'm doing."

Most physicians and dietitians said they have no problem with most existing programs, adding that consumers should be leery of ones where more interest is placed in the dollar than in the patient.

Dr. Gary Albertson, founder of Weigh of Life Clinics in Monahans and Midland, said what's important is that a patient stick to a program that works best for his or her lifestyle.

"There's very few programs I'm against out there," said Albertson.

"Nutri/System, Weight Watchers ... I think they're all excellent programs, but like anything else, what's important is what happens after you get off the diet. You have to change old habits."

Alternative programs flourishing

By Chris Van Wagenen
Staff Writer

The American Dietetic Association calls America's preoccupation with weight "a national pastime," affecting one out of every three people in the nation.

It's little wonder there are so many programs to choose from.

Two less conventional local programs that differ on their approach are Wellness Professionals Inc., which is associated with Texas Tech Health Science Center, and Weigh of Life Clinic.

Glyndon Kimbrough, health educator with Wellness Professionals, takes what she feels is a common-sense approach to diet and weight reduction.

"We're not a weight-loss program. It's a wellness program, although weight management is part of it," she said.

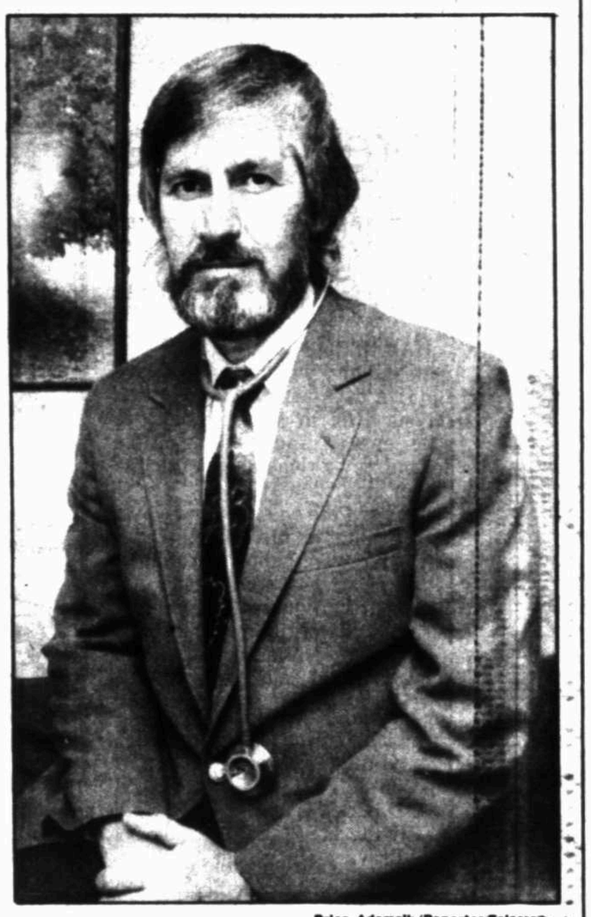

Wellness, which deals with patients, particularly chronically obese ones, believes the key to a successful diet is a different approach to food.

The program, which incorporates a very low-calorie supplement called Ultrafast, places most of its emphasis on re-education, according to Kimbrough. It also offers a moderated plan with meals for people with less than 30 pounds to loss.

"Any program that tells you there's such a thing as bad food is setting you up to fail because that gives food a personality beyond caloric consequence," she said.

Glyndon Kimbrough, above, a nurse and education coordinator at Wellness Professionals Inc. in Midland discusses, the advantages and disadvantages of certains foods her patients soon will be shopping for in area grocery stores. Monahans' Dr. Gary Albertson, right, who started his second Weigh of Life Clinic in Midland three years ago, believes different programs work for different people for a variety of reasons.

By the time most patients reach Wellness, they have tried three or four diets — including starvation — and all have read at least one book on the subject of weight reduction.

"Usually the people who come here walk in with poor self-esteem and health problems. So you're not dealing with the happy camper population, besides the emotional beating of not being a size 10."

What Kimbrough stresses is what will take place after the patient quits eating the low-calorie supplement.

"Primarily what I do here is teach people to eat and teach people to maintain their weight loss ... as far as I'm concerned, the maintenance program is the program here."

Kimbrough said most programs have consultants who provide information on diet and weight gain "who have never had a problem with weight themselves."

An admitted overeater, Kimbrough has kept 65 pounds off for five years without a regulated diet.

How has she done this?

"What are the first three letters in the word diet?" she continued. "That's right, die. That's how you feel when you're on one. I practice what I call environmental control."

Kimbrough said she's learned that all people will fail at their diets sooner or later and that they shouldn't feel guilty about it.

"I tell my patients, you don't have to go out and eat salad and fish to get what you want. Take your calories. Spend them the way you want."

For example, if patients want to use up daily allotted calories eating candy, she encourages them to do so.

"Once you've had permission to eat that many Snickers, you'd be surprised how fast Snickers lose their appeal. Now, you're not going to feel tremendous at the end of the day having eaten that much fat and sugar, but the thing is no one told you no and you feel better about it."

Kimbrough doesn't recommend her unorthodox therapy as daily behavior, but she does believe it's occasionally warranted.

"On most diets, you're going to gain back 100 to 110 percent of the weight in the first year. And it's true. But my patients, for the most part, are keeping off 50 to 80 percent."

Kimbrough said she tends to be a realist.

"Most people would say they failed if they didn't keep off 100 percent of their weight. Well, they're never going to... they're going to go as far as they can and that's it."

Still, she says, a lot of people who do get to their goal weight, keep it off.

"But you have to have some success first. ... Remember, everyone out there is making them out to be wrong. ... We have to find someplace to make them feel right."

"I have women after five pregnancies come up to me with a picture of what they want to look like, but they'll never look like that.

At Weigh of Life Clinics, Dr. Gary Albertson's patients have a pretty good idea what time it is when 2 p.m. rolls around each day.

That's because they're through eating.

Albertson, who founded his first clinic in Monahans six years ago, opened his second in Midland in 1987.

"Losing weight is easy," he said. "Changing people's behavior is the hard part."

Albertson said he started Weigh of Life after observing in his family practice that a number of patients suffered from high blood pressure, diabetes and heart problems, all due to obesity.

"It's fine to say, 'Well, here's a diet, good luck and I want you to develop some structural changes in your life,' but I've yet to find one program that has all the answers. Some do really well on Weight Watchers. Some on liquid diets. And some do well on our diet."

Albertson's diet does not require weighing food or counting calories. What it does require is a good breakfast and lunch, minus some kinds of foods, such as sugars and other complex starches.

After 2 p.m., those on the program aren't allowed anything solid and are prescribed an appetite suppressant.

"We feel here that your metabolism changes during the day, slowing down considerably in the afternoon, as compared to the morning and at lunch."

Albertson said he came up with his diet after reading a study eight years ago. In it, one group of patients were fed all their calories before 4 p.m., while a second group received theirs after 4 p.m.

He said the group fed after 4 p.m. either gained weight or stayed the same.

"My grandmother had a saying, 'Eat like a king for breakfast, a prince for lunch and a pauper at supper.' That holds true on this."

"But what we're really working at is changing their behavior as to what they eat at night."

After two weeks, the doctor said his patients claim to feel better as well as sleep better in the evening.

"But like any other diet, you have to change your behavior. There's just no getting around that and it's not easy."

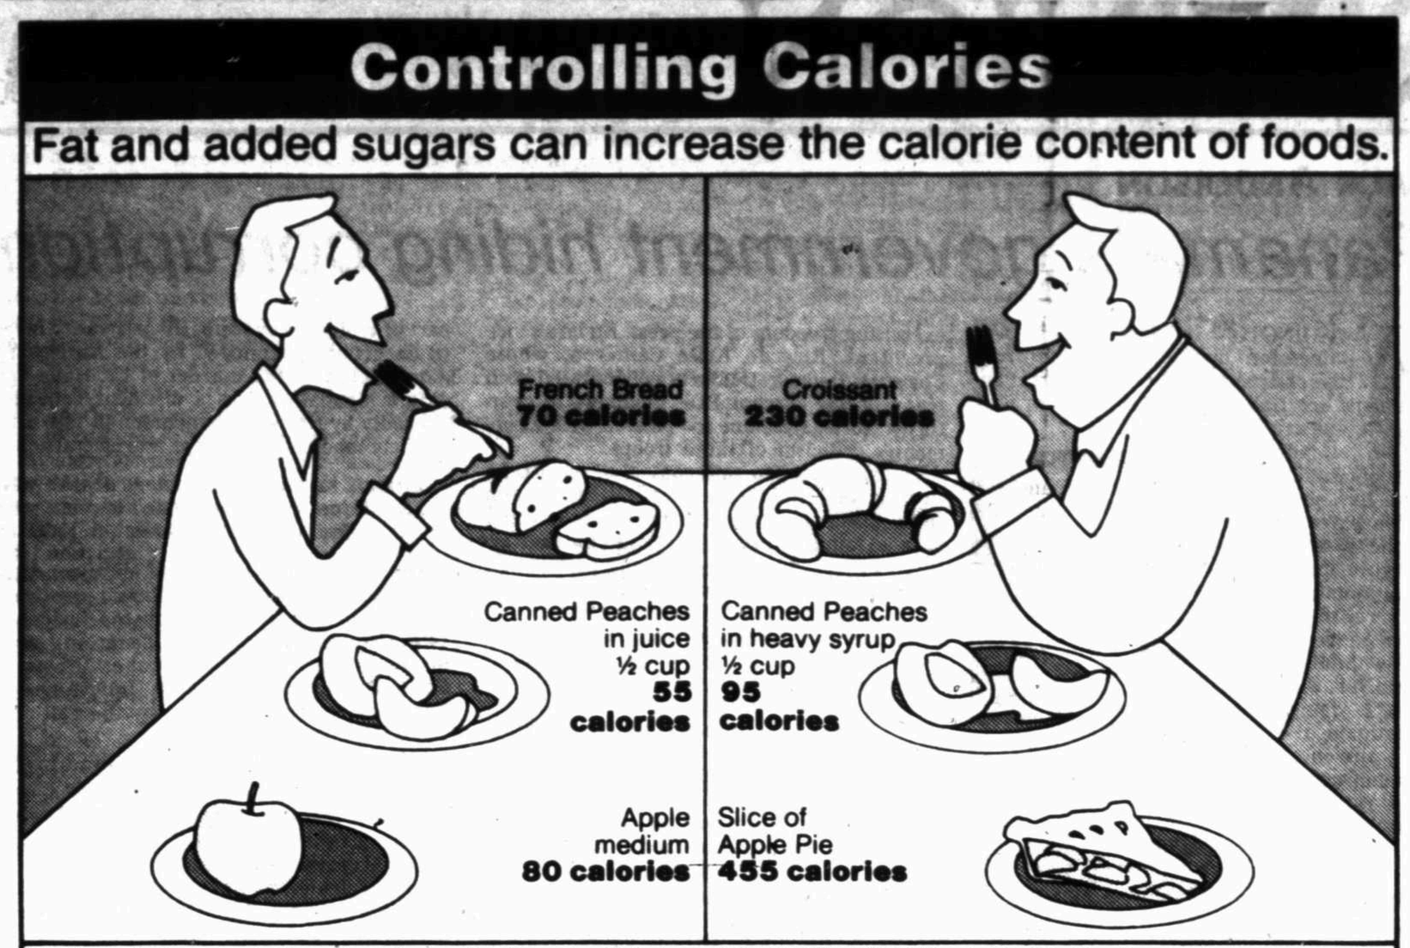

Like Wellness Professionals, Weigh of Life requires a general physical, as well as blood work, a cardiogram and a check of body compositions. Both programs are medically supervised.

Unlike Weigh of Life, the Wellness people require 1½ hours of weekly education, bi-weekly blood work, a weekly urine test and visit by a physician.

Wellness Professionals charges patients $85 per week.

Weigh of Life costs $135 for the initial workup and $48 per month for follow-up visits.

A THINNING OBSESSION

As with books, shoppers finding you can't judge food by its label

By Chris Van Wagenen
Staff Writer

Deborah McPherson may be a registered dietitian, but to her patients she's the supermarket sleuth of product labels.

When it comes to reading ingredients, this Odessan does better than most in getting down to the fine print of a product.

"The manufacturer wants you to read the bold print, but it's the fine print that tells the story."

Each week, McPherson meanders through stores' aisles grabbing everything off the shelf, from packaged meats to junk food as part of a tour she calls "Supermarket Survival."

Based on the program "Supermarket Saavy," developed by Dallas-based Leni Reed Associates Inc., McPherson's own program began three years ago when she became aware of the shopping problems encountered by some of her patients.

Since then, she's expanded her tours in Midland and Odessa to include adults who just want to eat healthier.

"Manufacturers are getting better about labeling, but they still have a long way to go as far as what dietitians want to see."

McPherson is hardly alone in this regard. From Capitol Hill to the Permian Basin, consumers are demanding responsible labeling from the nation's food manufacturers, many of whom are resisting this trend.

According to the Center for Science in the Public Interest, about 50 percent of all manufacturers now do some form of labeling.

The center, along with 24 major health and consumer groups, is pushing for legislation that would require the food industry to label products with consumer understanding of nutrition in mind.

The measure, now before the Energy and Commerce Committee, would force manufacturers to provide precise information, such as types and amounts of fat content.

"Half the food industry is lobbying vigorously against it," said Bruce Silverglade, a legal director for the Washington, D.C., lobbyist group.

"There's basically two groups out there fighting this. The Grocery Manufacturers of America and the National Food Processors Association."

Unfortunately, Silverglade said both groups represent what he called "the lowest common denominator" within the industry.

Ironically, one of the largest companies fighting the bill, according to Silverglade, is Dallas-based Frito-Lay Co., which already does some nutritional labeling on its snack foods.

"The industry claims to be so much in favor of consumer rights, yet half are opposed to this legislation," he said.

What disturbs health professionals even more are the ambiguities in labels, especially the use of the word "lite," which can mean anything from color to fat content.

Susan Braverman, a director of the American Dietetic Association (ADA), said sound labeling would not only make Americans nutritionally literate, but also would help them make healthier food choices.

Braverman, who testified in December before the Committee on Nutritional Components of Food Labeling, said current labeling information, health claims and advertising messages about food are confusing and mislead the public.

The ADA currently seeks a uniform set of food labeling regulations established through the U.S. Food & Drug Administration (FDA) and the Department of Agriculture (USDA).

Dr. Eleanor Young, a professor with Texas Health Science Center's School of Medicine in San Antonio, said she recommended a bar-scale rating system to the FDA, so that consumers could tell if they were getting good or bad amounts of fat and other ingredients.

"There's no question we need better labels, and a lot of us are working to change these formats," she said.

Jerrine Barney, a clinical dietitian with Medical Center Hospital in Odessa, said most current labeling doesn't tell the story.

"The problem is manufacturers often make claims that are misleading or at least imply a product is healthy when it might not be."

For most consumers, shopping is no more than a guessing game, leaving a large margin of error. For example, where fat is concerned, most shoppers don't know if they're getting saturated fat or healthier, unsaturated oils.

"The problem is manufacturers often make claims that are misleading or at least imply a product is healthy when it might not be."

— Jerrine Barney,
clinical dietitian at Odessa's MCH

Label Facts

- A product listed as "light in fat" must contain 25 percent less fat than its comparable counterpart.
- A food labeled "reduced calorie" must contain a third fewer calories than similar foods in which calories are not reduced.
- "Light" or "lite" can refer to fat, color, density, texture or taste, but the product must have at least a third less of whatever is lighter.
- A food product making caloric claims must list the actual number of calories per serving somewhere on the label.
- A product listing "hydrogenation" (solidification) has some kind of saturated-fat content.
- In order to determine the percentage of fat in a particular product, remember that one gram of fat equals nine calories.

Source: American Dietetic Association

Midland Memorial Hospital (MMH) dietitian Aisha Ali said it amuses her to see products touted as being cholesterol free.

"But those types of products never had cholesterol to begin with. It sometimes takes me a half hour to explain that to my patients."

McPherson said she has the same problem.

"I don't know how many people have come into my office and said the margarine they use has no cholesterol, but all margarines have no cholesterol. ... If a manufacturer makes that claim, then nine times out of 10 it's not good for the consumer."

For example, many products listed as having no cholesterol instead contain saturated fats.

"What you need to remember is it's not the 97 percent fat-free (fat by weight), but the percent of calories that come from fat. ... Look at the grams (of fat on the package) and remember a gram of fat is equal to nine calories."

She said most meat products listed as 97 percent fat-free usually contain about 30 percent fat.

But even McPherson is fooled once in a while. Products she thinks she knows during a tour one week, contain different labeling the next.

"What I teach is learning how to read a food label and in the process shopping for healthier food," she said.

Lisa Tyrer, an outpatient dietitian with MMH, said she would like to see labels listing the percentage of saturated, polyunsaturated and monosaturated fats. That may well become the law in the future.

Of the 1,500 calories per day recommended by the American Heart Association, dietitians say no more than 30 percent, or 450 calories, should come from fat. Of that 30 percent, 10 percent should come from saturated fats, 10 from monosaturated fats and 10 from polyunsaturated fats.

McPherson said she encourages her clients to be aware of the types of fats they're purchasing.

"Remember, what's listed (on a package) should be looked at in a very literal sense. Don't read anymore into than that," she said.

CHOICE: Faux fats due soon

shelves for products with less fat, the food giants have jumped at the idea.

While such substitutes are great news for fat watchers, some health professionals view their entrance into the American diet with skepticism, particularly where nutrition is concerned.

Bush wonders if fake fats will contribute to deficiencies in the American diet as doors re-open to nutrient-poor foods. Other professionals, including those at the Center for Science in the Public Interest, have the same questions.

And, after a sparkling decade of unlimited growth and profits, packaged food companies are re-examining their own efforts in reaching what amounts to a growing new market niche.

Some, like H.J. Heinz, are already there, according to Business Week. During the past two years, the Pittsburgh-based company has rolled out 100 new low-calorie items under its Weight Watchers International brand.

The same has occurred at ConAgra Inc., which introduced a line of Healthy Choice frozen dinners after the company's chairman suffered a heart attack. Those dinners now control 22 percent of the premium market, according to analysts.

Still, the fat substitutes, rather than low-calorie, low-fat dinners have generated the greatest interest among food giants, including RJR-Nabisco and Kraft-General Foods.

"Whether or not these products replace fats in our diets is an altogether different question. When substitute sugars came out, Americans did nothing about cutting back on their sugar intake," observed Dr. Eleanor Young, a professor with Texas Health Science Center's School of Medicine in San Antonio.

That opinion was shared by Bruce Silverglade, legal director for the Center for Science in the Public Interest.

"We think, if anything, that these products might lead to consumption of foods greater in fat."

Among some of the others seeking FDA approval is Biospherics, a Maryland-based company testing Lev-O-Cal — a product that acts like granulated sugar in baking and candy, but can pass through the body undigested.

Still other companies, like Monsanto and American Cyanamid, are using genetic engineering to develop growth hormones that will produce leaner meat in both cattle and hogs.

But MCH's Bush calls many of the changes taking place, especially those going on now, "an afterthought" on the part of the food industry.

"What the industry needs to be doing is providing the same thing we're telling our patients."

Historic union courting world

In Berlin these days, that graffiti-scarred obscenity known as the Wall is a prime tourist attraction; it will be reduced to rubble by the end of the month. East German border guards, those once fearsome automatons who kept the world out and East Germans in, are now congenial anachronisms.

With monetary union scheduled for July 2, the East German mark is hardly worth the paper it's printed on; East Germans scramble for hard currency.

West German Chancellor Helmut Kohl's Christian Democrats will officially unite with their East German counterparts in October; opposition Social Democrats will unite in August.

These unification preliminaries mean that a sort of psychological union already has occurred; in the minds of most Germans, East and West, the experiment known as the German Democratic Republic has been consigned to the trash heap of history.

The East German parliament wants to make it official — as soon as possible. Lawmakers began debate last week on a measure that would allow East Germany to invoke a section of the West German constitution that provides for the integration of East Germany's states into the West. The states would reconfigure themselves into prewar German states, becoming part of a unified nation.

With unity inevitable, it's difficult to see any reason to wait. Obviously, questions remain to be worked out, but they are questions that have to do primarily with Germany's role in a new Europe, not with East or West Germany. Whether a united Germany will be a part of NATO, for example, is still a contentious issue; so is the presence of some 400,000 Soviet troops still in East Germany. The East German parliament's unity vote may increase pressure on the Soviet Union to reach some kind of agreement on both issues.

Whether a united Germany will respect the existing Polish border also is still a question, although both Kohl and East German Prime Minister Lothar de Maiziere said their governments are ready to sign a treaty guaranteeing the present border.

"We have seen a country decapitate itself, put itself back together, set up a democratic government and move toward reunification, all in about six months," an American diplomat in East Berlin observed a few days ago. "It's a historic phenomenon without precedent."

What the result of a reunited Germany will be no one can say at this time. One thing is certain: Germany will become more powerful, changing — again — the world's defense configuration.

But with the surprising reforms in Eastern Europe during the past two years and primarily the move toward democratization inside the Soviet Union, reunification has been on the lips of almost every European. This "historic phenomenon" should continue to its logical conclusion.

Packaging story facts not checked

We are disappointed that you printed the story "Wastemakers Named," which contained an attack on the aseptic package, in the May 15 edition of the Midland Reporter-Telegram, without checking facts. Here are the facts concerning the aseptic package:

- The aseptic package uses the least packaging material, is the most energy efficient, and has the least environmental impacts of any alternative single serve package on the market.
- The aseptic package uses less packaging material per unit of product, by weight, than any multi-serve alternative.
- Recycling programs for the aseptic package are currently being put into place by its manufacturers.
- Switching from the aseptic package to any alternative single-serve package would increase materials usage, increase waste, and increase environmental impacts.

In the name of environmental responsibility, all of us — manufacturers, marketers, consumers, legislators, and regulators — are making decisions and taking actions today that will affect our world for years to come. The danger to our environment comes not so much from the packages we discard, but from decisions that are made with incomplete or inaccurate information, or are made in an attempt to find expedient, simple solutions to complex problems. This latest attack on the aseptic package is an unfortunate example of both.

Despite her statement to the contrary, there is no record that the Associated Press reporter ever attempted to contact our offices in Atlanta or Houston.

Thank you for your attention.

Parents must teach children responsibility

It is popular today to jump on the bandwagon of child abuse prevention, and rightly so. However, equally as repugnant as child abuse is the exact opposite — letting children do as they please all the time, as I observe so many parents are doing these days.

The Bible enjoins parents to "train up a child in the way he should go." Children both need and want discipline and guidance. They will never learn what behaviors are expected of them if they are not taught these behaviors.

A recent study found that children who grow up with a high level of control and a high level of support are more confident and better achievers than those raised with a high level of support and a low level of control.

If parents do their job correctly, spending more time with their children and being fair but firm in their discipline of their children, there might be less alcohol and drug abuse among teenagers, and our nation's children might become more responsible citizens and better leaders.

Panama's government hiding corruption

WASHINGTON — Since Panama was "liberated" by the United States from the clutches of Manuel Noriega, Panamanians are finding out that freedom isn't what it was cracked up to be.

Anderson

The new administration of Guillermo Endara has shown little patience for its critics in the press or inside the government. In recent months, the Endara regime has been accused from within and without of corruption. But the government is doing little to investigate the allegations and instead is retaliating against the accusers.

We reported recently that the post-Noriega police force is harboring corrupt former members of Noriega's Panamanian Defense Force.

Roberto Eisenmann, editor of the La Prensa newspaper in Panama, has been at the forefront of a crusade to purge the police force of those bad apples. But Eisenmann has paid for exercising freedom of the press. Endara's vice president, Ricardo Arias Calderon, whose Christian Democratic Party collaborated with many of the corrupt PDF members to overthrow Noriega, is none too pleased with Eisenmann's criticism of those troops.

Calderon tried to gain control of the 700 La Prensa shareholders and have Eisenmann fired. Eisenmann won, but the battle left him with a familiar bad taste. Calderon had accused him of "plotting, or having party interests ... in short, of some of the same things that Noriega accused me," Eisenmann said.

One special prosecutor, Rodrigo Miranda, was suspended after he pointed the finger at what he said were corrupt members of the Panamanian police force. After the suspension, Miranda said the only ones being scrutinized were the ones who speak up.

Miranda had accused the judicial police chief and other officers of being part of an $80 million kidnap-for-ransom in which a 3-year-old boy was murdered. Miranda claims his evidence came from U.S. officials, but Panamanian authorities have yet to investigate the police chief.

Miranda has hinted that his suspension was part of a bigger cover-up. His job was to investigate crimes committed by the Noriega regime, including the murder of Dr. Hugo Spadafora. Spadafora was a dissident beheaded allegedly by Noriega's henchmen in 1985 after publicly labeling Noriega as a drug trafficker.

Miranda says the government doesn't want the Spadafora case investigated because some of the guilty are now working for Endara.

The official who suspended Miranda, Attorney General Rogelio Cruz Rios, recently released two prime suspects in the Spadafora case. Cruz can't afford such generosity when his own resume includes a stint as director of Panama's now-defunct First Inter-Americas Bank, which was controlled by the Cali drug cartel of Colombia.

Who will be the next to suffer for exercising freedom of expression? Probably Eusebio Marchosky, a magistrate appointed to trace the misuse of funds under Noriega. Marchosky recently accused Vice President Calderon of obstructing justice, and he says Panamanian officials are hiding from him some sensitive documents that were seized in the U.S. invasion.

Calderon says the U.S. Army has the documents and won't turn them over. But Marchosky told our associate Dean Boyd that he suspects local police officers are being allowed to pick through the documents to take out anything that implicates them. Other sources told us they have seen Panamanian officers in the compound where the documents are stored.

MINI-EDITORIAL: The first family saved a small fortune last year by not paying any state income taxes. The Bushes have three home states. Texas has no state income tax, Washington, D.C., exempts the president from local taxes and the Bushes don't qualify as residents of Maine, their vacation home. Maybe we were wrong when we read Bush's lips. We thought he said, "No new taxes." What he really meant was "No taxes." As president, he's obliged to teach the rest of us how it's done.

Defector calls perestroika KGB's new face

A great many people have written or called in an effort to locate a copy of "New Lies for Old" by Anatoliy Golitsyn, a KGB defector, who predicted in the 1984 book precisely the kind of liberalization we have seen in East Europe and the Soviet Union.

Reese

Golitsyn contends it is a false liberalization, engineered by the KGB, to lull the West into a position of weakness.

Well, the book is out of print and your best bet is a university library or a public library through the interlibrary loan system. That's how I located a copy.

I wrote to Golitsyn, through the CIA (his whereabouts are kept secret), hoping for a telephone interview. I didn't get that, but I did get a short letter from him.

Here is what he said:

"It was refreshing to hear from you and that, based on common sense, you are questioning the nature of the liberalization in the Communist World and pointing out its obvious contradictions. I believe that your realism and common sense, which you reveal in your columns, are helpful in the present euphoria over the changes in Eastern Europe. I share your concern as to what such euphoria may bring us in the future.

"Given this situation, I am presently involved in writing a new book in which I shall try to explain the aggressive designs of the Soviet strategy of perestroika. If and when my book is published, it will answer most of your questions."

Well, that's it. For those of you who haven't found the first book, Golitsyn reports that in the 1958-60 period, the KGB undertook a major study and reassessment of Soviet policy and of its role.

The authors of the study, which went all the way back to Lenin, observed that whenever communist power appeared threatening, Western democracies put aside their differences, formed alliances, and re-armed. On the other hand, when communist power appeared weak and divided, the Western democracies weakened their ties and cut back on defense spending.

According to Golitsyn, a three-phase strategy was decided upon. One, the problem of succession in the Soviet Union had to be solved. In other words, there had to be some method of insuring a smooth transition rather than an all-out wolf fight. Two, unity among the different communist parties had to be achieved. Once those two were accomplished, then the third phase of the strategy — a false liberalization — could be launched. This would weaken the Western alliance, help promote disarmament in the West, and make communist agents in the West appear less of a threat.

Once the West was sufficiently weakened and, in particular, the United States especially isolated, then, as Golitsyn put it, the velvet glove would become the mailed fist and the U.S., suddenly confronted by overwhelming communist power, would be forced to come to terms — Soviet terms.

I continue to believe he's right, for I see too many contradictions between the party line and what is actually happening. For example, to my knowledge, not one secret policeman in any Eastern country, with the exception of the few Ceaucescu cronies, has been charged and prosecuted.

It does not strike me as normal, if these countries were really free of Soviet control, that they would not attempt to bring to justice some of those who had for so long abused them. That they haven't indicates to me that either the people in control don't want to or don't have the power to do it.

Recently, Zdzislav M. Rurarz, a former Polish diplomat, reported that Edward Gierek, former head of the Polish Communist Party, has said the July 1980 demonstrations and strike were staged by the Politbureau. Golitsyn predicted the false liberalization would start in Poland and Solidarity would be the vehicle.

Flag-burners to see not-so-heavenly bodies

I've been thinking about the implications of the recent Supreme Court ruling that says you can burn our flag and go unpunished.

The court ruled any law charging flag-burners with a crime is unconstitutional because the First Amendment protects freedom of speech and expression, no matter how distasteful and disgusting such actions might seem to others.

Grizzard

I can understand some of that. Make a law against burning the flag in protest and that could lead to a law against burning down a post office in protest of long lines, surly workers and the fact you just received a nice birthday card from your grandmother, who died in 1962.

Another part of me says, however, that no matter what the Supreme Court ruled, anybody who would burn our flag for any reason is a creep.

But we don't send people to jail just because they're creeps. If we did, our jails would be even more crowded than they already are.

They would be filled with such creepy people as filthy mouthed rap singers, crooked politicians, and anybody who doesn't realize wrestling is fake — and the Rev. Al Sharpton.

I realize I am really waffling here, but it also seems to me like there ought to be something we could do to flag burners.

Why do they have to burn our flag, our precious banner of freedom, sacrifice and history, in the first place?

I know what we could do to flag burners instead of sending them to jail. We could send them all back to 11th-grade American history class, where they would be assigned a term paper on Millard Fillmore.

And it would be due tomorrow. They might at least get a little respect for Old Glory through osmosis.

Regardless, I'd like to see them sweating over Fillmore's stance on the environment.

It also occurred to me — what sort of precedent is this ruling going to set? What other forms of speech and expression come under this ruling?

Can you, in fact, shout, "Fire!" in a crowded theater now?

And an even bigger question came to me: "Where does mooning come in here?"

Mooning is a form of expression, isn't it? You drop your drawers at your high school graduation ceremonies and you are expressing the thought, "You can all stick it."

Let's say you're in the audience. Do you want the First Amendment tampered with regardless of how distasteful and disgusting it might be to have to look at some zit-faced kid's bare buttocks during "Pomp and Circumstance"?

If we are going to allow people to burn the flag and get away with it, we've got to let them shoot moons, too.

In fact, I'd rather be mooned than to see somebody burning the flag. Furthermore, if I ever see somebody burning the flag, I'm going to moon them.

So, be forewarned. It will not be a pretty sight.

NATION IN BRIEF

Children blamed for 280-acre fire

FILLMORE, Calif. (AP) — A fire that burned more than 280 acres of parched brush near here was started by two children playing with cigarette lighters, officials said Sunday.

The fire in Pole Canyon, a dry mountainous area about 50 miles northwest of Los Angeles, was virtually contained and almost under control Sunday afternoon, said Cece Grives, a spokeswoman for the Ventura County Fire Department.

No injuries were reported and no structures were threatened by the fire that began Saturday afternoon, she said. Winds in the area were calm Sunday.

About 150 firefighters and one water-dropping helicopter remained on the scene Sunday.

Fire danger throughout California is considered extreme this summer after a four-year drought turned millions of acres of trees and brush into brittle fuel.

Gonzales heads board

Oscar Gonzales of Phoenix, Ariz., was elected chairman of the board and Dr. Francois M. Abboud of Iowa City, Iowa, was elected president of the Dallas-based association.

Gonzales is senior vice president of First Interstate Bank in Phoenix. Abboud is professor of medicine, physiology and biophysics director of the Cardiovascular Center at the University of Iowa College of Medicine.

Also elected were:

David Palmer, an attorney and partner in the law firm of Gibson, Dunn and Crutcher in Denver, as secretary.

Dr. Clyde E. Johnson Jr., professor of biology at Southern University in Baton Rouge, La., as treasurer.

Anne Golden, who is self-employed in Walla Walla, Wash., as chairman-elect.

Dr. W. Virgil Brown, president and chief executive officer of Mediantic Research Foundation of Washington, D.C, as president-elect.

Benson out of hospital

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — Mormon Church President Ezra Taft Benson was released from a hospital here Sunday after being treated for a bacterial infection.

No further information was available on the condition of the 90-year-old church leader, said Don LeFevre, spokesman for the 7.5 million-member church.

Benson was admitted to LDS Hospital in serious condition on Wednesday. He was moved out of the intensive care unit Friday and his condition upgraded to fair.

Benson, who received an electronic heart pacemaker in 1986, was U.S. agriculture secretary under President Dwight D. Eisenhower.

He was named president of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints in 1985.

Castro still committed

ATLANTA (AP) — Cuban President Fidel Castro says he remains committed to socialism, despite the political changes in the Soviet Union and the wave of democracy that has swept Eastern Europe.

Castro also said in an interview with media tycoon Ted Turner that the changes in the Soviet Union would not affect its political ties with Cuba.

Soviet reforms, said Castro, "may affect our economic relations, not political relations. If the Soviet Union wants to adopt the U.S. Constitution, we will respect that."

But capitalist-style reforms will not be coming to Cuba, Castro said.

"As a socialist and as a man that is fully convinced of what socialism means, of what socialism has meant for our country, I cannot agree with that movement in the socialist countries toward capitalism," he said.

Castro said the changes in Eastern Europe resulted from complex situations unique to each nation and rejected the idea that the changes were sudden.

Search for boy resumes

CHEMULT, Ore. (AP) — More than 120 people searched a wilderness area this weekend for the body of a 9-year-old boy who disappeared during a cattle drive last autumn, leaving behind only his wandering horse.

Nathan Madsen was last seen heading back toward camp on Oct. 22, 1989. A month later, his horse was found wandering on a rocky crest.

The boy's father, Jerry Madsen, said the family would not abandon the search effort even if nothing turned up this weekend.

Nathan was the subject of one of the most extensive searches ever conducted in Oregon. Hundreds of searchers culled through the forest and clawed their way up stony slopes until mid-December snows drove them out of the mountains.

This weekend's efforts were the first since the spring thaw.

Nathan's pony was the only clue. The animal was found a short distance below the 6,400-foot summit of Six Horse Springs Ridge, where tracks and manure indicated he had been in the area, five miles from the nearest road, for two weeks.

The tackle was removed, suggesting Nathan might have taken them and huddled somewhere nearby, using his pony's saddle blanket for warmth.

Last crewmen located

NORFOLK, Va. (AP) — Searchers have found the bodies of all four victims of last week's Navy helicopter crash off the Virginia coast, a Navy spokesman said.

The bodies of Lt. Jane T. Paradeis, 26, of Rice, Minn. and Lt. j.g. Jason K. Skubi, 24, of Sandpoint, Idaho, were found Saturday night, said Lt. Russ Greer, a spokesman for the Atlantic Fleet Naval Air Force.

The bodies of Petty Officer 1st Class Norman H. Geisel, 29, of Saint Mary's, Md., and Airman John W. Burkhardt Jr., 21, of Boylston, Mass., were found earlier Saturday, Greer said.

Mandela didn't see daughter

AMHERST, Mass. (AP) — Nelson Mandela's oldest daughter said Sunday that she wasn't invited to share her father's triumphant weekend visit to Boston, and she doesn't understand why.

Makaziwe Mandela-Amuah said her husband, Isaac, received a call Friday saying only that he and the couple's three children were welcome at the festivities.

"So we decided not to go," Mandela-Amuah said in a telephone interview from her apartment in Amherst, where she is a Fulbright scholar in anthropology at the University of Massachusetts.

Mandela-Amuah, the 36-year-old daughter of Mandela's first marriage, said she watched her father's visit on her living room television set.

"Why can't my dad speak to me?" she said. "This is a whole strange story."

Asked earlier whether Mandela had met or would meet with Mandela-Amuah, Colette Philips, a spokeswoman for one of the groups that coordinated Mandela's Boston visit, declined comment on what she said was a "family matter."

Mandela on Sunday left Boston for Washington, D.C. Calls to his spokespeople there Sunday evening were not immediately returned.

Mandela-Amuah said the suggestion that she should not attend supposedly came from her father, but that she had not spoken to him.

Mandela-Amuah last saw her father in a prison visit last summer.

Corvette tour begins meeting

BLOOMINGTON, Ill. (AP) — From the 700 Corvettes in the 20-mile road tour to the 200 radio-controlled models in their own road race, there was something for every Corvette fan at the Bloomington Gold-Corvettes USA show.

There's also the coveted Bloomington Gold certificate for the Chevrolet two-seaters preserved in or restored to 95 percent of the showroom condition.

And there's a classification for "Survivors," Corvettes at least 20 years old that have been largely unrestored but preserved well enough to serve as models for those doing restoration.

In excellent condition, a Corvette built between 1963 and 1967 could fetch up to $100,000, says David Burroughs, president of the show.

The demand for Corvettes is changing, though, Burroughs says. The 'Vettes of the 1950s are popular with people who grew up then, but as baby boomers become able to invest in the cars, the 1963-67 models are becoming more popular.

Jogger rape trial will begin today

NEW YORK (AP) — The victim is known only as the "Central Park jogger" and she cannot remember the crime. But her gang rape and beating will be relived when three teen-agers go on trial Monday for the so-called "wilding" attack.

Antron McCray, 15, and Raymond Santana and Yusef Salaam, both 16, are charged with attempted murder, rape, sexual abuse, assault, robbery and riot in the April 19, 1989, attack.

They are being tried as adults.

Three other youths face trial later for their alleged roles in the crime that prosecutors say was committed by a gang out for a night of violence in Central Park.

The victim, a Wall Street investment banker, was raped, beaten and smashed in the head with a rock. She nearly bled to death.

She suffered brain damage in the assault, cannot remember the attack or identify her assailants and is considered unlikely to testify.

Junior League crusading for more diversity

EDITOR'S NOTE — It was once thought of as an elitist clique of affluent young white women preoccupied with balls, bazaars and fashion shows, "WASP to the max," as one puts it. But the Junior League these days is taking some social stands that puts it at odds with the conservative establishment. And lobbying on Capitol Hill in behalf of the League's 188,000 members is a black woman.

Karen Hendricks is a lobbyist for the Junior League in Washington, D.C.

WASHINGTON (AP) — Bone china and brooches and sterling silver for sale. Special guest rooms at New York's Waldorf-Astoria. Cookbooks and calligraphy and a fancy private boarding school in the Virginia hunt country.

It's no surprise to find these advertisements in a recent issue of the Junior League Review. But there's another side these days to the genteel club founded by turn-of-the-century debutantes to improve the lot of poor children.

More often than not, today's league members work full time. They're crusading for "membership diversity." They've got a black lobbyist on Capitol Hill. And they're promoting things like mandated job leaves for new parents, pitting themselves against conservatives and corporations.

That's not exactly the profile that comes to mind when one thinks of the Junior League. "WASP to the max" is the more apt description given by Karen Hendricks, the lobbyist.

But she is living evidence that league membership is no longer reserved for "the white, upper-middle-income woman who doesn't work outside the home, has two kids and a Volvo."

Nonetheless, much work remains if the group is to cast off its image as an elitist clique preoccupied with balls, bazaars and fashion shows.

She knows this firsthand, thanks to repeated encounters with people who are nonplussed simply by the color of her skin.

ONCE HENDRICKS was waiting to see a senator with two other visitors — a white woman and a white man. An aide arrived and approached the white woman.

"You must be with the Junior League," the aide said. The woman demurred. The aide next went over to the white man. Wrong again. It finally dawned on her that, yes, a black person was representing the league.

The Junior League did not get its white-gloved, upper-crust image for nothing. But members say the substance of the organization has been ignored by society reporters less interested in service projects than the cookbooks and cotillions that pay for them. Their purpose, they maintain, is far from frivolous and has not wavered since 1901.

That was the year Mary Harriman, sister of the late New York Gov. Averell Harriman, and her friend Nathalie Henderson founded the Junior League to aid the slum tenement movement begun by Jane Addams. The young women and their debutante friends were in such demand as fund-raisers and volunteers that by 1907 their mission had shifted to a broader goal of neighborhood improvement.

Now there are 277 Junior Leagues with 188,000 members in the United States, Canada, Mexico and Great Britain under the auspices of the Association of Junior Leagues International. More than half of the active members (as opposed to sustainers, who have "graduated" at age 45 to different types of community work) are employed full time.

INDIVIDUAL LEAGUES run the gamut from two that have gone on record in favor of abortion rights to others that stick to tea and symphonies. Museum programs and historical preservation remain hallmarks of some local leagues. But others pursue grittier tasks that take them into the nation's shelters, schools, hospitals and juvenile courts.

They are working with AIDS babies, foster children, handicapped children, the homeless, battered women, alcoholic women and high-risk adolescents. They are trying to prevent teen-age pregnancy and serving as mentors to disadvantaged young girls. They have founded and staffed child care centers and referral networks. They are even fighting pollution.

Reflecting the times, the association has a special program to help volunteers translate their skills into paying jobs. But the greatest shifts in recent years have been efforts to broaden membership and develop some lobbying clout.

Since forming a diversification committee in 1978, the association has been phasing out onerous entry requirements and stressing the need to attract minority women.

In the past, according to former association president Maridel Moulton of Moraga, Calif., leagues could impose a residency requirement of any number of years and some sought eight or nine sponsors and letters of reference.

The most a league can now require from a prospective member is a year of residency and four sponsors, who usually serve now as mentors rather than gatekeepers. Incoming members also must be under 40 and committed to voluntarism.

THERE ARE NO demographic statistics available, so it's hard to say whether the membership is less white or wealthy as a result of the changes. According to Moulton, black women have been members for decades but "the numbers haven't been there. ... You will still probably find some Junior Leagues that have no blacks. And there are some with a representative number from their communities."

Local leagues concerned about foster care prompted the association to take its first political positions in 1978. Since then, guided by initiatives from its grass roots, the association has pressed the federal government on welfare reform, civil rights, child care and other social issues.

A staid reputation, close community ties and well-placed corporate and political connections make the Junior League a valued ally.

"They are the backbone of upper-middle class voluntarism. They bring the stamp of approval of mainstream America," says Judith Lichtman, president of the Women's Legal Defense Fund. "Their women represent some of the more establishment sectors of society. Very often they have entree to members of Congress that we don't have. They are truly nonpartisan. They don't necessarily just speak to progressives or liberals."

The High Point, N.C., league brought many of these qualities to bear in a successful battle to prevent chemical dumping in a creek feeding the city's primary water supply. At issue was a permit sought by Ashland Chemical to build an industrial chemical repackaging plant.

ALERTED BY Water Watch, a tiny local citizens group, league members researched Ashland's record and the effect of the chemicals in question. They announced a hearing on the permit in a newspaper ad, at PTA meetings and church suppers, in flyers and phone calls. They even offered to chauffeur people who were afraid to go downtown at night.

"The publicity was terribly important because most people in town were not aware of the danger this particular plant represented," says June Stackhouse, acting president of Water Watch. "We were a small core group of 35 or 40. They had a lot of contacts ... a lot of connections with people with clout."

A THINNING OBSESSION

Is the American obsession for dieting and losing weight out of control?

Has the emphisis on thinness resulted in discrimination against overweight people and are they being made to feel like "second class citizens"?

Or is the nationwide interest in maintaining weight and losing excess pounds one of the healthiest trends to come about in a long time?

In conjunction with the week-long series, "A THINNING OBSESSION", now being published, readers are invited to participate in our second SOUND-OFF on Sunday July 22. Just send your letters on any aspect of the subject :

Equine EDUCATION

Robert Roark demonstrates proper show technique.

GREENWOOD — A horse is willing to work, of course, but the teacher has got to know her stuff — and the horse — if the horse is to do more than balk, horse around, or fall short of his potential.

In this case, the teacher is the trainer, Debbie Lide, who grew up ranching down south in Upton County and was riding a horse before she was walking.

The teacher, as trainer, understands horses and horsemanship.

Far too often, the rider is wont to strike out at the horse and say, "Hey, I'm boss."

But that's not the proper attitude, says Mrs. Lide, an Andrews horse trainer and champion roper and barrel racer.

Horses are "willing to do whatever you teach them," figures Mrs. Lide. And the horse, as student, seems to be reasoning: "If you'll just tell me what you want, make me understand, I'm willing to try it."

And that's where the good teacher, the horse professor, the trainer, comes in. As trainer, Mrs. Lide seeks to match the abilities, stamina, and drive of the horse to an event or happening, whether it be roping, racing, cutting, barrel racing, walking, or just looking pretty.

"You try to put them in the event that best fits them," advises Mrs. Lide, who reckons that "horses are just like people. Some have a more natural athletic ability than others.

Whether the horse is hyper or laid-back, fast or slow, or pretty or plain, the horse, if understood by the trainer, may be a willing student in the arena, pasture, range, ranch or backyard. "If you put them where they go (in their natural ability), you're halfway up the ladder."

In her line of work, Mrs. Lide deals in speed, timing, suppleness and the oneness of the rider with the horse. In roping and racing, "You deal in split-second timing. You (the rider) need to be in sync with your horse. The better basic horsemanship you have, the better you'll be with your speed events."

"It's all in timing, where your horse is, and where your body is in relation to that horse."

In speed events, such as barrel racing, the horse needs to be fast, quick and supple. "You've got to have a horse that bends and flexes and moves well. You need to be in sync with his movements."

Recently, Mrs. Lide was at the Cobb Veterinary Clinic and Arena near Greenwood to join other horse trainers at a Texas Agricultural Extension Service (TAEX) Equine Management Seminar.

Explosion wrecks grain elevator

HOUSTON (AP) — A 17-story grain elevator exploded in Spring Branch Sunday, blowing off its roof and igniting a fire that burned throughout the day, firefighters said.

The privately owned Shadowdale Grain Elevator exploded about 4 a.m. when static electricity apparently sparked volatile grain dust, said District Fire Chief J.C. Caswell.

No one was injured in the blast, but the explosion could be felt several miles away, Caswell said.

"I thought it was a loud clap of thunder, very loud, and it rumbled for a little while," said Sheryl Lentini, who lives about a half-mile from the elevator.

"I heard this big blast. It felt like my windows had moved," said Carol Weaver, who lives a mile away. "I thought it was thunder, but it lasted too long" and rumbled too much," she said.

Firefighters allowed the blaze to smolder and expected it to burn itself out over the next several days, Caswell said. Firefighters were unable to douse the flames with water because the elevator contained the pesticide photoxin. When mixed with water, photoxin creates toxic fumes, Caswell said.

Two suspects detained in shooting

Staff Report

Midland police late Sunday were questioning two suspects captured in connection with the shooting of a man.

Units responded about 10:10 p.m. to the shooting at Washington Park, located south of East Highway 80 off East Indiana Avenue, police said.

A young man was taken by ambulance to Midland Memorial Hospital, where he was listed in undetermined condition, a MMH spokesperson said.

Other details on the man were not released pending notification of next of kin, although the victim's condition was "not good," the spokesperson said.

Further information on the suspects and the events surrounding the incident were unavailable.

Dallas death ruled heat-related

DALLAS (AP) — The death of a 53-year-old man has been ruled the first heat-related fatality of the summer in Dallas.

An autopsy by the Dallas County Medical Examiner's Office concluded David Roberson died Friday of complications caused by hypothermia.

Police said Saturday that Roberson collapsed after being involved in a car accident at a Dallas intersection. Witnesses said he had been driving erratically and drove through a traffic signal before the accident that occurred Tuesday.

His truck was struck broadside by one vehicle and was knocked into another one.

Investigators said his body temperature, when taken at Parkland Memorial Hospital after the accident, was 110 degrees. He died at the hospital on Friday.

P2 tavern reopening after fire

Beer and barbecue joint restored to its former shabby splendor

By Mike Cochran
Associated Press Writer

WICHITA FALLS, Texas (AP) — There will be no champagne or fireworks or dancing girls. No parades, ribbon cuttings, marching bands or long-winded speeches.

But when Ray Nipper reopens his fire-ravaged beer and barbecue joint this week, it'll be no small deal.

"I may give the smokers a six-month discount to get the place seasoned like it was," he chuckled. "It won't take long to whip it back in shape; we use our building."

Indeed, folks in Wichita Falls have been using Nipper's emporium, the splendidly shabby P2, for some four decades. It's a mesquite-flavored legend, "Cheers" with a drawl.

And carhops.

A wooden and windowless joint, specializing in frosty longnecks and sizzling ribs, fiery sauces and secret recipes. Not to mention catfish, chili and chicken fried steak.

Signs touted armadillo burgers for $2.95 and pig lips for $1.95.

That's the P2, a service station-beer barn converted into a chain restaurant called the Pioneer 2, a name abbreviated by its customers. Inside, a scruffy and friendly stag bar with a colorful history and an equally colorful clientele.

Outside, it's a drive-in, circa 1950.

On April 24, an early morning fire swept through the building, and what flames didn't destroy, smoke damaged. Investigators suspected arson. Police later filed charges against two men, but revealed no motive.

The P2's future was in jeopardy.

Worse yet, quipped Wichita Falls Times Record News Editor Don James, "The fire left thousands of men homeless. They had no place to go after work."

A mild exaggeration, mostly because it implies that all P2 customers actually work. Or that those who do work limit their visits to non-working hours.

There is, however, no way to overstate the dedication of P2 regulars, some of whose credentials date back to the Fifties. Until the two men were arrested, a running joke suggested that at least 1,000 wives would qualify as arson suspects.

"Are you this busy when you're open?"

Raymond Nipper, owner of the P2, puts some finishing touches on repairs to his famous Wichita Falls tavern. The restaurant and bar, stag on the inside and family-oriented at the drive-in where customers come by the truckload for barbecue and a cold drink. The P2 was heavily damaged by an arson fire April 24, but Nipper hopes to reopen this week.

Humana's health plan investigated

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — Elderly residents saddled with medical bills they thought were covered by Medicare have prompted a federal investigation of a popular health maintenance organization.

Officials with the Health Care Financing Administration, the federal agency that oversees Medicare, say they are looking nationwide at Humana's marketing of its fast-growing Gold Plus Plan.

The investigation was prompted by some possibly fraudulent sales to San Antonio elderly, the San Antonio Express-News reported Sunday.

Humana officials do not dispute that fraudulent sales have occurred and say seven agents have been fired because of the allegations.

Some confusion, they say, may be the result of the program being relatively new in San Antonio, where its enrollment has soared from 570 in September to 7,000.

But government investigators say they are unsatisfied with Humana's changes. Two will travel to San Antonio in July to review the company's procedures.

Federal officials say they remain concerned about two aspects of the Humana plan — that their salesmen work on a commission-only basis, and that the beneficiaries do not have to pay a premium in addition to what Medicare pays.

"Obviously we will do whatever the Health Care Financing Administration tells us we must do to remain in compliance," Humana spokesman Tom Noland said in a telephone interview from Humana's Louisville, Ky., headquarters. "We have not been told to change either one of those things at the moment."

Among the fraud allegations are that some customers may have been deliberately misled by an agent to get them to enroll in the program. Records show that a large number of local Gold Plus Plan members apparently do not understand the program.

"(The agent) did tell me, 'You don't have to worry about Medicare; Medicare is still going to pay,'" said Felipe Chavez, whose wife, Maria Chavez, 66, ran up more than $2,000 in medical bills that neither Humana nor Medicare will pay.

"The man who represented Humana to my husband and me lied to us," said Mary Huizar, whose 74-year-old husband, Lupe Huizar, joined the plan last fall.

Mrs. Huizar, who claims she was told by a salesman that her husband's Medicare would continue to pay his medical bills two months after signing with Humana, was finally reimbursed $156 by the company for bills she had to pay.

The Gold Plus Plan — not to be confused with the Humana Gold Plan, a Medicare supplemental insurance policy — is one of two Medicare replacement programs operating in San Antonio.

Since 1985, Medicare has entered into "risk" contracts with HMOs. The contracts call for the government to pay an elderly person's HMO premium at a rate calculated through a complicated formula, now between $200 and $250 a month.

The elderly customer is then "locked-in" to the HMO's doctors and hospitals. When Medicare pays the customer's HMO premium, it no longer will reimburse any other medical expenses for that customer.

"We deal with Humana constantly on this issue," said Joe Heird, who oversees Medicare risk contracts at HCFA's regional office in Dallas.

"When we hear a beneficiary doesn't understand lock-in — that they've gone to Dr. Jones for the past 15 years and don't know why they can't go to him after enrollment — it leads us to the conclusion that, somewhere along the way, the beneficiary didn't have lock-in explained."

(From 1B)

knowingly says her veterinarian-husband, Dr. Henry Lide.

"She just understands what goes on in a horse's mind and tries to get within the horse. She has kind of a sixth sense where she feels and understands and thinks about things that most of us, who are kind of duffers on the golf course, don't."

Lide offers this analogy:

"There are people who play pro golf and understand what's going on and how to make a shot. And there are those of us who just hit the ball, and we don't really know where it's going."

However, his wife "understands what the horse is going to do before it ever happens and how to anticipate and how to head things off."

Not nearly the horseman that his wife is, Lide said he does some roping, "but I'm a hacker."

Mrs. Lide has been around horses all of her 35 years. And even today, she and her family drive down to Rankin to help out her parents, Shank and Sug Bloxom, on the Bloxom Ranch in Upton County.

"She's been riding ever since she was big enough to stand," Lide surmises.

In truth, Debbie Bloxom Lide was riding before she was walking.

"She has been riding all of her life," says her mother, Sug Owens Bloxom, a seasoned cowgirl and rider herself. "When she was old enough to sit alone, I was taking her in the saddle."

"That's kind of like being born in the saddle," Mrs. Bloxom figures. In following suit, the Lide parents got their children, Amy, 5, and 2-year-old twins, Lorissa and Aaron, into the saddle early in their childhood.

At the ranch, Shank and Sug Bloxom mostly run Spanish goats and Rambouillet sheep due to the usually short grass on the rangeland there.

"The grass is not long enough for cattle," Mrs. Bloxom knows.

The drought has seen to that.

"We do run some (cattle) if we have rain and if we have (tall) grass," Mrs. Bloxom says. But most of the time, it's goats and sheep and, always, horses.

Though the horse is still widely used by cowpunchers on working ranches, the horse has more and more become a hobby — an instrument for people's entertainment and pleasure.

On the range, notes Mrs. Lide, the cowboy or cowgirl "can get closer to your stock and understand your stock better" than if the cowpuncher is driving a pickup truck or motorcycle.

But in "today's world," the versatile horse is moving more to showing and racing for money and riding for pleasure.

"The horse has so many fields that he can go into that make him the outstanding animal in relation to the human being," Mrs. Lide says. Horses can be trained as race horses, show horses, cutting horses, rodeo horses, riding horses, roping horses, ranch horses, or "just backyard pets for kids," Mrs. Lide says.

Baby stillborn after collision

CLEBURNE, Texas (AP) — An Itasca woman's baby was stillborn Saturday after the car in which she was riding collided with a Johnson County Sheriff's Department vehicle.

Felicia Howard, 21, was in labor and about a half-mile away from a hospital when the accident occurred about 1:30 a.m. Saturday, officials said.

"We were driving with our hazard lights on, looking out for people," said Lynette Howard. She is Felicia Howard's aunt and was helping take her to the hospital so a doctor could deliver her first baby.

Felicia Howard was in stable condition Sunday at Walls Regional Hospital. Hospital officials declined to comment, but family members said she was being treated for internal bleeding.

"The doctors don't know yet if the accident caused her to lose the baby," Lynette Howard told the Fort Worth Star-Telegram.

The mother and aunt were treated for head and neck injuries, then were released from the hospital.

Deputy Bob Whetley was not injured in the accident. After his unmarked truck collided with the right rear tire of the Howards' vehicle, he called for ambulances and Department of Public Safety officers.

Derailed train hits lumber yard

HOUSTON (AP) — Eight cars on a Southern Pacific freight train derailed early Sunday when the 78-car train smashed into a northeast Houston lumberyard, officials said.

Two people suffered minor injuries.

The train smashed through a two-story security guard tower about 1 a.m., destroying a building at the Eastex Forest Products lumberyard. The security guard, Chevo Espinosa, and his son, who was asleep at the time, were thrown to the ground from the tower and suffered minor scrapes and bruises.

"When I was halfway going to sleep, my dad got up to get a soda. And the next thing we knew, I woke up on top of a big, old pile of boards," Andrew Espinosa, 11, told KTRK-TV in Houston.

Investigators said vandals may have tampered with the switching device and caused the accident.

Officials said the accident, which caused more than $1 million in damages, might have been worse had the engineer not noticed a signal that indicated the train was going off the track.

The engineer, who was not identified, was able to slow the engines from 50 mph to 25 mph, stopping the train just short of three homes.

"It came right through the sales office and then went on through the rest of the offices," said Bobby Schiel, an employee at Eastex Forest Products. "If I'd have been here, I wouldn't have been here now."

Schiel said had the accident happened on a workday, at least 15 employees would have been in the office.

Officials evacuated a family that lived next door while the train spewed diesel fuel. There were no hazardous materials aboard and all of the cars were empty, officials said.

"We never even heard it," said Dale Callis, who lives near the accident site. "We came out here and they told us to evacuate because of all the diesel fuel leaking. I said we'd drive out in a few minutes here and he said, 'You can't drive out. Your driveway's blocked. There's a locomotive sitting in the middle of it.'"

Major law firms taking death penalty cases

HUNTSVILLE, Texas (AP) — When Johnny Paul Penry was tried for the rape-slaying of a Livingston housewife a decade ago, he was represented by a court-appointed attorney and a retired Houston lawyer.

In his second trial, Penry will be defended by the younger attorney and a major New York law firm. The case represents a growing trend for major firms to take on death penalty cases.

"I think prosecutors have had it so easy," said Houston defense attorney Stanley Schneider, who has tried three capital cases and represents eight death row prisoners whose cases are on appeal.

"They have not had to worry about any issue but 'Is he guilty?' State law has worked to the advantage of prosecutors because almost invariably once a defendant was convicted, he was sentenced to death," Schneider said.

Madisonville defense lawyer Billy Carter agreed.

"Capital cases are so difficult to defend that you go in with the deck stacked against you," said Carter, who has tried four capital cases.

But prosecutors say the use of high-powered law firms gives defense attorneys an unfair advantage.

"The state is placed in a real unfair position," said Ned Butler, a lawyer in the Texas Attorney General's prosecution assistance division. He is particularly critical of the Texas Resource Center's role in helping locate law firms to assist at the trial level, and the effect that is having in small counties.

"They don't rear their ugly heads where the prosecutor's office has enough manpower to fight back," said Butler, who this year was appointed to prosecute a capital case in Abilene. "Their sole goal is to destroy capital punishment, and their (method of operation) is to concentrate on rural prosecutors."

In the Penry case, the U.S. Supreme Court ordered a new trial for the 34-year-old mentally retarded inmate because jurors were not given information about his mental problems.

In his new trial, Penry will be represented by his lawyer in the first case, John Wright of Houston, and lawyers from Paul, Weiss, Rifkind, Wharton and Garrison — the firm that recently represented convicted junk bond dealer Michael Milken. Houston lawyer Randy Smith and a New York lawyer for the Legal Defense Fund of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People also are participating in the defense.

Donating its services, the firm already has hired a jury selection expert from Florida; private investigators from Galveston and San Francisco to track witnesses; a political scientist to study newspaper accounts of the case; and a criminal justice professor to conduct telephone surveys of Walker and Galveston counties.

On the state's side is Trinity County District Attorney Joe Price, who prosecuted Penry the first time in 1980 for the rape and murder of 22-year-old Pamela Moseley Carpenter in Polk County. Terry Brown, the new Polk County district attorney, and Walker County District Attorney-elect David Weeks will assist in the prosecution.

Penry's is not the only case that out-of-town legal experts have helped defend. Earlier this year, in capital cases stemming from robbery-murders in Wichita Falls and Paris, Texas, prosecutors found themselves facing an avalanche of paperwork generated by out-of-town law firms and anti-death penalty groups.

A dead fish floats on Astin Lake at the Astin Recreation Area in Bryan on Saturday afternoon. An unidentified toxic substance is blamed for the killing of hundreds of fish in the lake on Friday. The Texas Parks and Wildlife Department has taken water samples for testing.

BRYAN (AP) — Authorities say an unidentified toxic substance has killed hundreds of fish in a Bryan lake.

Dead bass, catfish, perch and sunfish covered the surface and littered the shores of the lake next to the Bryan municipal golf course Friday night.

James T. Davis, an ichthyologist with the Texas Agricultural Extension Service, said it is likely that the fish kill was caused by a toxic chemical, but he is awaiting laboratory reports on samples taken Saturday.

"At the moment, I'm drawing a blank," Davis said. "Until we get something back from the lab, we've ruled out an oxygen kill."

Lab results will be available later this week, he said.

Tribe marks grave of Chief Colabe

LIVINGSTON (AP) — Members of the Alabama and Coushatta tribes dedicated a granite monument Saturday to mark the grave of former chief Colabe Sylestine.

The Indian leader helped found the Alabama-Coushatta reservation in 1853 after the tribe had relocated from near Mobile, Ala., a year earlier.

About 50 people attended the dedication ceremony.

Tribal attorney Arnold Battise said Sylestine had been a pillar of strength when the tribe was being threatened by the outside world and politics.

"Our future depended on picking the right kind of chief," Battise said. "We survived because of leaders like Chief Colabe."

Until the new marker was installed, the chief's grave had only been marked by a small rock. Only a few family members knew where Sylestine's plot was located.

Dozens pay steep price in sex for cocaine trades

WACO, Texas (AP) — Dozens of people who traded sex for cocaine in the McLennan County area got something else in the bargain: syphilis.

Investigators for the Waco-McLennan County Public Health District are trying to track down the sexual partners of 53 individuals diagnosed as having early infectious syphilis.

"We're having a rough time with it this summer," said Dennis Pierce, manager of the Sexually Transmitted Disease Clinic. "Most of these cases involve drug-related sex."

Most of the individuals do not know the names or addresses of the sexual partners. All investigators have to go on in many cases is a nickname or physical description.

"Each one of these people have had, on average, at least three people they've had sex with who need to see the doctor," Pierce told the Waco Tribune-Herald. "They were smoking cocaine, so they don't know who they've been with."

He said some people couldn't remember their sexual partners because they had been smoking cocaine.

There has been a marked increase in reported syphilis cases. Last year, the health district counted 41 people with early infectious syphilis, a term used to indicate those who have had the disease a year or less.

"We pretty much had this thing at a controlled level until the summer of 1988, when cocaine came into Waco," Pierce said.

Syphilis, which is caused by a bacteria transmitted through broken skin or mucous membranes during sexual contact, causes serious circulatory system or nervous system damage in one of three people who get the disease. It also has been linked to stillborn babies.

The risk of becoming infected after one sexual contact with an infected person is about 30 percent.

"It doesn't go away until it gets treated," Pierce said.

Demonstrators stand in front of burning police cars during riots in East Berlin Saturday. After about 2,000 people peacefully demonstrated against neo-Nazis, clashes began between police and some 400 protesters.

East Germans riot, wait in line

EAST BERLIN (AP) — East Germans lined up in front of banks Sunday as they spent an anxious weekend on the threshold of enormous change.

Next Sunday, July 1, the former Communist country will merge its economy with West Germany, a momentous event that will have an immediate effect on the lives of the nation's 16 million people.

Left-wing radicals tried to attack the East Berlin headquarters of a neo-Nazi group Saturday, the latest in a series of extremist clashes in recent months that some officials call a byproduct of the social upheaval under way.

Authorities said 21 police officers were badly injured in the rioting, and East German Interior Minister Peter-Michael Diestel called for tougher laws against extremist acts.

Despite recent unrest, Diestel said Sunday that the country has so far succeeded in "safeguarding our young democracy and process of German unity with calm and order."

East Germany's currency will be changed to West German marks Sunday, which marks the former socialist nation's official immersion into the free market and a major step toward full unification with West Germany.

Banks stayed open all weekend to allow customers to fill out applications to change their savings to West German marks, and thousands of people stood in lines.

To keep the powerful West German mark from being weakened by the abrupt expansion of the money supply, East Germans will only be able to convert 2,000 marks — $1,210 — of their savings to West German marks during the first month of economic union.

Some already were receiving checks for that money, which they will be able to cash Sunday.

"We're going to buy a car," said Margit Schollain, 32, as she waited with more than a thousand other people in a series of lines that snaked from a bank on East Berlin's Leipziger Street.

The mood was a mixture of apprehension and excitement over the economic experiment about to unfold.

"I think it will bring many social problems, and not just unemployment," said Jan Falkenstern, 24, as he waited. "I think the unrest that happened yesterday is part of it."

The riot in the city's Lichtenberg district followed a demonstration by about 4,000 leftists who were protesting recent attacks by radical rightists on foreigners.

However, thousands of police blocked intersections and the protest broke up without incident.

Later, police said 400 of the leftists rampaged through the streets and battled police, who used tear gas, truncheons and water cannons. Four police vans were burned and a small kiosk was plundered. Four people were arrested.

Lichtenberg, a working class district where many Vietnamese, Mozambicans and other foreigners live, has become a flashpoint for extremist violence.

Diestel said in a statement Sunday that the government should ban such radical groups and give the police broader powers to battle extremists.

Resentment of foreign workers in East Germany has been growing. The country is expected to face massive unemployment as its former state-run enterprises compete with more efficient Western companies that already are flooding into the country.

On Leipziger Street, West Germany's Mayer food chain already has renovated a building just 50 yards from a dowdier looking East German store. The new store is to open its doors next week.

63 stalwarts of Solidarity break ranks with Walesa

WARSAW, Poland (AP) — Sixty-three of Lech Walesa's senior advisers and longtime allies in the Solidarity movement broke ranks with him Sunday over his criticism of the Solidarity-led government.

They said he should dissolve the national Citizens Committee in which they fought together to overcome four decades of Communist rule, a suggestion that appeared to mark the end of an era of opposition unity.

It came in a letter read at a day-long meeting of the committee, which since 1988 has functioned as Solidarity's political arm.

The 200 members of the committee postponed considering the letter for one month at Walesa's behest in order to let emotions cool.

"Let's think it over. Maybe there are solutions for our further joint path," the Solidarity chairman said.

The signatories of the letter agreed to remain on the committee in the meantime. They include major figures of the Solidarity movement: Zbigniew Bujak, Adam Michnik, Bronislaw Geremek, Jacek Kuron, Henryk Wujec and Wladyslaw Frasyniuk.

The men were once Walesa's closest allies in his struggle to make the Communists share power with opposition forces.

But now they differ with Walesa over his criticisms of the government of Prime Minister Tadeusz Mazowiecki and what Walesa considers the slow pace of economic reform. The former allies also disagree with Walesa's drive to become president of Poland and his opening the Citizens Committee to members of other political groups.

Mazowiecki stayed away from the meeting. But in a speech in Szczecin, he appealed for national unity until the country completes painful economic reforms.

"The greatness of the tasks we are facing today requires an emphasis on going through the most difficult time together. ... It requires a broad democratic consensus and avoiding a demagogical bidding war" of political promises, Mazowiecki said.

The emotional debate among Citizens Committee members was tinged with sadness and anger.

"I have a feeling that I have lost something," said Geremek, leader of the Solidarity caucus in parliament, taking the floor near the end of the day.

"In our movement, there used to be no leader, there were no servants. There were citizens. There were friends. ... What happened?" he asked, addressing Walesa.

Michnik told Walesa he had no right to say who could use the name of Solidarity. Michnik is editor of Poland's largest daily paper, Gazeta Wyborcza, whose use of the Solidarity logo Walesa is disputing.

"Nobody can take away our struggle, not even you, Lech," he said.

Wheat waves on the Champs-Elysees avenue in Paris, France, Sunday, as farmers laid out wheat-planted turf into a 4½-acre field stretching halfway down the avenue, as the Arc de Triomphe looms in the background.

Wheat waves on Paris avenue

PARIS (AP) — The Champs-Elysees, the most famous street in Paris, was transformed into a giant field of golden wheat Sunday during an eye-catching promotion for French agriculture.

An army of 1,500 farmers laid sections of turf holding 3,600 tons of wheat across a large stretch of the avenue starting at the Arc de Triomphe, then mobilized a fleet of tractors to harvest it.

Police estimated that more than 300,000 Parisians and tourists gathered behind barricades along the avenue to glimpse and photograph the unique spectacle. Many clasped shocks of wheat in their hands, others purchased small plastic periscopes for $5.40 in order to see over the throng.

The field covered almost five acres.

"The Big Harvest" was sponsored by the National Center For Young Farmers, at the cost of $3.6 million to focus public attention on the positive aspects of farming.

WORLD IN BRIEF

Israeli official warns Arabs

JERUSALEM (AP) — The national police commander said Sunday that more Palestinians will be killed in Jerusalem if stone-throwing riots persist in Arab areas of the city.

Also Sunday, Defense Minister Moshe Arens approved the formation of civil guard units made up of Jewish settlers in the occupied West Bank, a move condemned by some as certain to fuel violence between settlers and Arabs.

Both steps came at a time of increasing friction between Jews and Arabs in Jerusalem and in the occupied West Bank and Gaza Strip.

Sunday, police kept 20,000 Palestinians under curfew in the Jerusalem neighborhoods of Silwan, Abu Tor and Ras el-Amud for a third day. The curfew was declared after rioting last week in which two Palestinians were shot to death by police.

The curfew was lifted late Sunday after an appeal from Jerusalem Mayor Teddy Kollek, a political moderate.

Police spokesman Uzi Sandouri said about 45 suspected rioters were detained during the curfew.

Territories off limits

JERUSALEM (AP) — Soviet Jewish immigrants will not be settled in the Israeli-occupied territories, right-wing Housing Minister Ariel Sharon announced Sunday.

Palestinians in the West Bank and Gaza Strip as well as Arab nations have strongly protested the recent wave of Soviet Jewish immigration, fearing if the immigrants settle in the occupied lands, that would push the Palestinians out.

Israel says only a few hundred immigrants have settled in the area. However, Sharon's statement was the strongest yet by an Israeli official to assure Western and Arab governments that Israel will not use the wave of new immigrants to increase its hold on the occupied lands.

"Our efforts in resettling immigrants are directed at this side of the Green Line," Sharon said, referring to Israel's pre-1967 borders.

He said, however, that Israel will not stop its settlement drive in the West Bank and the Gaza Strip, lands captured from Jordan and Egypt in the 1967 Middle East war.

Colombian gunmen kill 19

BOGOTA, Colombia (AP) — Assailants toting automatic machine guns stormed a tavern near the cocaine trafficking center of Medellin, killing 19 people and wounding at least four, police said Sunday.

The massacre occurred Saturday night in Envigado, a Medellin suburb long considered the headquarters of the powerful Medellin cocaine cartel.

Twenty armed men entered the tavern, shooting indiscriminately at customers drinking and listening to music, a Medellin police spokesman said in a telephone interview.

He said police did not know the motives for the murders, nor who was responsible. All 20 assailants escaped without being caught, the spokesmen said on condition of anonymity.

In the past, similar violence in Medellin has been attributed to fighting between rival gangs working for the cocaine barons.

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — Two extreme right-wing groups signed a cooperation agreement Sunday in the latest effort by pro-apartheid whites to build opposition to reforms instituted by President F.W. de Klerk.

The groups also pledged support for a white fugitive who has declared war on the government.

Both de Klerk and African National Congress leader Nelson Mandela have warned that heavily armed right-wing extremists could undermine efforts to launch black-white negotiations on a new constitution and ending apartheid.

The Boer Resistance Movement and the Boer State Party announced Sunday they would work together to establish a homeland for the Boers, or Afrikaners, the country's Dutch-descended settlers who account for 3 million of the 5 million whites.

Too many states in fiscal straits

By Vic Ostrowidzki
Hearst News Service

WASHINGTON — Since the early days of the Reagan administration, the White House and Congress have collaborated to saddle the states with new spending responsibilities while, at the same time, cutting federal aid to them.

As a result, many states are struggling with red ink. Budget deficits, once the scourge principally of the federal government, are popping up in state capitols around the country, forcing governors and legislatures to scramble for more revenues.

In California, slower growth in tax revenue is expected to create a billion-dollar gap in the current year and cause worse problems next year.

New York state recently enacted a $1.5 billion tax package to take care of this year's deficit but will need additional levies next year.

Texas hiked sales taxes on June 8 by $528 million to finance education.

Washington state's legislature raised gasoline taxes to pay for highway and bridge repairs.

With near unanimity, state officials across the country blame the White House and Congress for their fiscal problems.

New York Gov. Mario M. Cuomo, a Democrat, accuses Bush of saying, "Read my lips: Raise your taxes on yourself so I can boast I did not."

South Carolina Republican Gov. Carroll A. Campbell Jr. complains that "instead of giving the power to the states and giving us the flexibility of addressing the problems of the states, Congress keeps giving us mandates."

Gov. James Blanchard, D-Mich., says: "It has gone from revenue sharing to revenue bleeding."

State Sen. David H. Locke, R-Mass., says his state, which arguably is in the worst fiscal condition of any state, "is literally paralyzed" because of its budget problems.

"It has gone from revenue sharing to revenue bleeding.'

— Gov. James Blanchard, D-Mich.

Thomas Mann, a scholar at the Brookings Institution, says: "The Washington cabal (of the White House and Congress) wants to have it both ways: to tell states what should be done and how to do it, but not to provide the funds to do it with."

Raymond C. Scheppach, executive director of the National Governors' Association, complains that Bush and Congress enact programs "making both look 'kinder and gentler' but stick us with a big part of the bill."

"The 'feds' have lived on their credit card for years," Scheppach says. "Now, by mandating us to do the things they can't afford, they're trying to use ours. They get credit, we get the bills."

Bush's war on drugs, for example, is expected to cost the states well over $9 billion for new prisons and more police. State expenditures for Medicaid are projected to quadruple from about $12.5 billion in 1970 to $50 billion in 1994.

In March, Bush declared that fixing the country's transportation system is in the national interest, but stuck states and localities with the bill.

The administration's new national transportation policy, titled "Moving America Into the 21st Century," called for new user fees, more state and local spending, and a decreased federal commitment to mass transit programs.

Sen. Alfonse M. D'Amato, R-N.Y., who is on the Senate Appropriations subcommittee on transportation, rejected the proposal as "not good enough because there is not sufficient federal revenues allocated to it."

Cuomo charged that the plan "perpetuates the existing federal fiscal policies that continually seek to force state and local governments to pick up the slack for proposed federal cutbakcs in domestic programs."

Rep. Robert A. Borski, D-Pa., added: "This is another example of the administration's passing the buck."

The Reagan and Bush administrations cutback policy was defended Thursday by Marlin Fitzwater, Bush's press secretary who served in the same capacity for President Reagan.

"Both presidents," Fitzwater said, "subscribe to the idea of limited federal involvement in state issues."

"Whether it is the question of improving quality of education services or building highways, states are in a better position to know what their needs are and whether they can afford to fund them," Fitzwater said.

"You always find the states wanting the nation's taxpayers to pay for local programs," he said. "The president believes states ought to pay for what they want to build when it comes to their transportation needs."

One result of federal policies over the past 10 years is that states have been forced to raise taxes faster than the federal government.

Between 1981 and 1989, local taxes went up 81 percent and state taxes by 71 percent, a survey by the National Association of State Budget Officers (NASBO) shows.

At the same time, the survey found, federal taxes, excluding Social Security increases, went up by 39 percent. Including Social Security, the federal bite rose 52 percent.

There is general consensus across the country that balancing the books will be an even bigger preoccupation with state legislatures in 1991 than in the recent past.

Steven Gold, director of the Center for the Study of the States at the Rockefeller Institute in Albany, N.Y., says states will have to raise taxes by at least $10 billion next year.

Gold says taxes will go up because of an economic slowdown that is shrinking state revenues and has forced many states to cut planned expenditures out of their enacted budgets this year.

New taxes will be needed, Gold contends, to take care of new federal mandates, rising health-care, funding for AIDS and the drug war, expanded programs for early childhood education, child care and efforts to improve the educational system and to repair neglected highways and bridges.

Gary Wood of the Texas Research League says Gold's $10-billion figure is too low. Texas alone may have to raise $4 billion in new taxes next year to meet another court-ordered revamping of the state's $13.5 billion system of school finance, he says.

The squeeze facing the states also is reflected by the cutback in federal aid to state and local governments.

In 1977, President Carter's first year in office, federal assistance to states and localities hit an all-time high. That year 19.4 cents of every federal dollar was set aside for grants to states and localities.

By 1981, President Reagan's first year in office, federal funding for state and local programs was reduced to 15.5 cents. By 1988, Reagan's last year, the federal government was sending just 9.9 cents of every dollar it spent.

According to a study by the Advisory Council on Intergovernmental Relations, a federal agency made up of federal, state and local officials, federal allocations to the states fell by 13 percent after inflation from 1978 to 1989.

Vet treats pets with acupuncture

Take your suffering pet to the acupuncture vet.

After spending 120 hours in Florida learning the ancient Chinese art of acupuncture, Ellen Paul has brought her skills back to Urbana to improve the health of ailing dogs and cats.

Take Divot, for example — a dog with more than the usual canine aversion to cats. She's allergic to them, and when her skin itches, she tugs at it with her teeth, leaving scabs behind.

"This is the worst part," said Paul. "Once the needles are in, they get bored and want to leave."

Divot, who started treatments early this month, was calmer when she returned for her second round of treatments last week, said her owner, Bob Heister.

"She doesn't seem to be biting herself as much," Heister said. "It seems to work."

Acupuncture is not a cure-all, Paul said. "But it does a good job for the things it is indicated for and is better than some medication," she said.

The aim is to treat specified pressure points. These known nerve pathways in humans have analogs in other animals, Paul said, which share many health problems with humans.

Colombian farmers miffed over lack of market control

LA PAZ, Bolivia (AP) — Coca farmers who agreed to switch crops waited hours to sign up for the government eradication program, two months for officials to certify their coca plants had been destroyed and several weeks to be paid.

Samuel Zambrana, 61, with seven children, said he was going along with the plan, but "I have no income now and I cannot get my banana and orange crop out because of bad roads. If the government is going to take coca away from us, we need profitable alternative crops, good roads and a market."

Since Dec. 1, farmers have destroyed a record 4,500 hectares of coca, more than one-tenth of the 38,250 devoted to growing the crop from which cocaine is made, according to U.S. government figures. A hectare is about 2½ acres.

"We continue to be very pleased with voluntary eradication programs and the commitment which the Bolivian government continues to demonstrate," the U.S. Embassy said.

Tens of thousands of farmers have left the Chapare coca-producing region because of a sharp drop in prices for the leaf. Farmers receive $2,000 from the Bolivian government for every hectare destroyed.

Voluntary eradication was spurred late last year, when Colombia's drug war and increased interdiction in Bolivia disrupted cocaine production and reduced the demand for coca leaves.

A 100-pound sack of coca costs about $30 to produce and brought only $10 at the beginning of May, compared with $100 five years ago, but had risen to about $20 by the end of the month. The increase caused concern that cocaine processing operations were resuming in Colombia.

Excalibur opens with medieval fanfare

LAS VEGAS (AP) — The world's largest hotel — a giant castle with court jesters, friendly dragons, slot machines and poker tables — opened with medieval fanfare last week on the Las Vegas Strip.

The 4,032-room Excalibur is the latest effort to lure middle America to this gaming capital. It was built for a modest $290 million, less than half the price-tag of the recently-opened Mirage hotel. Rooms start at $45 a night.

Hundreds of Las Vegas business, political and social figures received a sneak preview before the Tuesday opening.

"Isn't this the most sensational thing you've ever seen?" actor Ernest Borgnine enthused as he watched a knight on a white horse prance across a lobby. "Just look at this. What can you possibly say?"

Minstrels, jugglers and harpists entertained guests, a 10-foot dragon cavorted and a man in a suit of armor walked stiffly amid the guests. The entertainers will be standard fare at the hotel, which mixes some of the aura of a theme park with the glitz of a casino.

Tuesday's formal opening marked a milestone for Circus Circus Enterprises Inc., the gaming-hotel operation that has carved a niche for middle America in Nevada.

The $1.6 billion Circus Circus company, which started with a single struggling Strip hotel-casino 16 years ago, has become the envy of the gaming industry with a strategy focusing on low-rollers rather than coveted high-rollers.

Chairman William Bennett announced to stockholders last week that the company planned to reduce its $500 million debt by about $200 million in the coming year, largely on added revenue from the Excalibur.

Glenn Schaeffer, chief financial officer for Circus Circus, said the company could probably pay off all its debt in three or four years from Excalibur revenue, but may opt to look at new projects.

Schaeffer said the company, which once eyed Atlantic City, now has no interest in expanding to New Jersey. "Our desire is to have the strongest balance sheet in the industry," he said.

The Excalibur is anchored by four 28-story towers and covers 70 acres. It has about 500,000 square feet of public entertainment space, including a Renaissance village, 12 food outlets and a casino the size of four football fields, with 2,630 slot machines. Shows will feature a medieval flair, with live jousting.

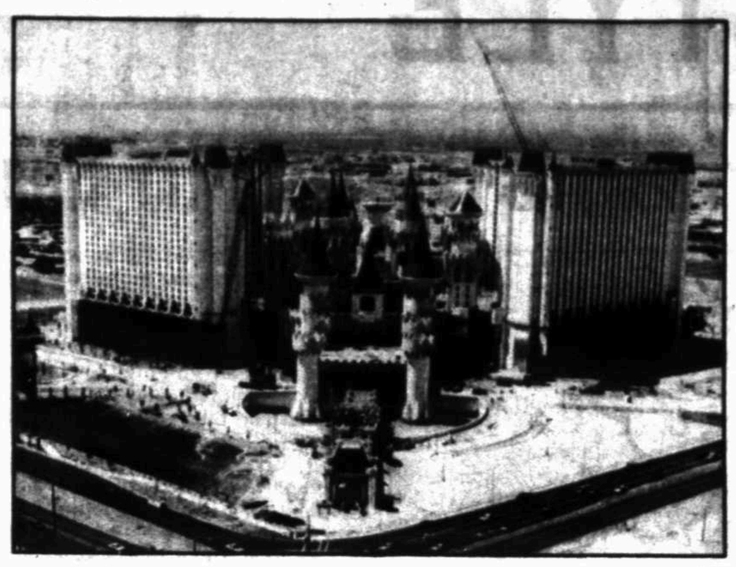

An arcade will feature a dozen themed game booths such as archery and electronic crossbows.

The hotel has 4,300 workers, enough wallcovering to paper an area 10 acres in size, enough carpeting to blanket 11 football fields.

It will replace another Las Vegas property that held the title of the world's largest hotel — the new, 3,530-room Flamingo Hilton.

Circus Circus now has a total of 11,320 rooms in Nevada, with hotels in Las Vegas, Reno and Laughlin. By comparison, Atlantic City's 12 major hotels total 8,100 rooms.

With the addition of the Excalibur, Las Vegas now has 75,000 hotel rooms.

Amateurs may use Hubble

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The folks who operate the Hubble Space Telescope are offering another opportunity to amateur astronomers to compete for observing time on the $1.5 billion instrument.

Proposals from five amateur astronomers already have been accepted and the projects will be carried out when the telescope begins making scientific observations early next year. The telescope, put into orbit in April, is still being checked out and calibrated.

Riccardo Giacconi, director of the Space Telescope Science Institute in Baltimore, issued the invitation for amateurs to conduct "revolutionary new research alongside professionals" within the first 12 months of Hubble operations.

Official application forms are available from the American Association of Variable Star Observers, an organization of amateur astronomers in Cambridge, Mass., NASA said.

NASA preparing to launch Atlantis shuttle

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — A fuel leak will keep the shuttle Columbia and its $150 million Astro observatory grounded at least until August, NASA said recently.

The next shuttle mission will be that of Atlantis, to carry a secret military payload into orbit in mid-July.

"It is our intent to make sure that these vehicles are ready and safe to fly," said shuttle director Robert L. Crippen.

"When we have a problem such as this, and this is the nature of the machines that we're dealing with, we just have to fall back and regroup and put them in a condition that is safe to go fly."

Columbia's upcoming flights will be pushed back "in an orderly fashion," Crippen said. A scientific research mission scheduled for August is now set for December, pushing Columbia's December mission with a microgravity laboratory into next year.

Columbia will be moved from the launch pad back to the hangar next week so the hydrogen leak can be repaired, the National Aeronautics and Space Administration said Wednesday. The leak was detected as more than a half-million gallons of super-cold liquid hydrogen and liquid oxygen were being pumped into the shuttle for last week's launch attempt.

The Astro mission, the first in five years dedicated entirely to scientific research, already was two weeks late.

Meditation has become mainstream in business

By Leigh Fenly
Copley News Service

The day Bobbye's Balinese fabric got stuck in customs, her energy level hit an all-time low. President of a garment-manufacturing firm, Bobbye was on the telephone all day trying to appease her customers — 40 angry retailers — who wanted their garments now.

From there, things got worse. A month later, the fabric was finally released from customs and sent directly to seamstresses to be cut and sewn. Then the garments were shipped back to Bobbye, who took one look at the batik fabric and nearly fainted. Messy, runny dyes had ruined it all. There was nothing to do but cancel the shipment.

"In the end we disappointed all our customers, so now we have to re-establish our validity with them," Bobbye said. "Plus the fact that it cost a lot of money. And then to have to dump the goods that are not acceptable ...

"Things like that happen in this business all the time. Trying to control it is like having a huge octopus grabbing at you."

Bobbye is not immune to the octopus, but, like many other highly stressed business executives, she has figured out a way to disarm it. Her anti-burnout strategy is meditation — a simple half-hour every morning of deep breathing and focused thought.

"If I don't meditate," she said, "then I get so stressed out that I feel lost — like there's just not enough energy left to keep the Monopoly game going."

ONCE CONSIDERED the stuff of ashrams and saffron robes, meditation has become downright mainstream, especially among overworked business executives and entrepreneurs. Meditation's leap to middle class is due, in part, to a growing body of research that has demonstrated its benefit in various applications, from controlling chronic pain to treating drug addiction. Physiologically, meditation is known to lower heart rate and blood pressure and to increase circulation.

Regardless, meditation still sounds fringy to some straight business people. Psychologists, including Dr. Jan Bruner, a consultant to Scripps Hospital Executive Health Center, prefer to sell the idea to these folks as "training your unconscious life."

By any tag, meditation is increasingly recognized as a simple, cheap and effective way to handle stress in business. A recent survey of 200 large U.S. companies indicated that 70 percent offer some kind of anti-burnout training, and a popular choice is meditation.

"It is happening more and more," Bruner said. "More people are beginning to understand how meditation can help them do a better job.'

Bruner explained that today's ladder-climbing middle managers are working harder and burning out faster. In businesses everywhere, increasing numbers of executives are plain worn out, complaining of fatigue, anxiety and ennui. Fortune magazine recently reported that one large New Jersey corporation hired a prominent psychologist to treat middle managers for burnout — in groups of 50.

SOCIAL AND economic change is part of the problem. The number of dual-career couples or single parents has increased to the point where only one in 10 American families now fits the traditional Ozzie and Harriet mold. Parents already dizzied by work feel additional pressure as they struggle to spend more time with the kids while trying to keep afloat economically. The result is harried, high-strung individuals who run red lights, crash toward deadlines, feel guilty when they relax and are always late, impatient and irritable.

CNS Graphic

in an adrenalin rush and a caffeine jag. Ever since Meyer Friedman and Ray Rosenman identified type-A behavior in the 1960s, researchers have known that a hard-driving lifestyle is a significant risk factor for cardiovascular disease and shortened life expectancy. And it takes its toll emotionally, too.

"We're programmed to stay constantly worried," Bruner said. "It's like spinning your wheels. You never get out of that state of arousal. Meditation is a way of training yourself not to be worried. It's time away from the internal dialogue we have with ourselves. Often we take a problem or incident that took 15 minutes of our lives and dwell on it for the next six months."

BEYOND BREAKING the stress cycle, proponents say that meditation also pays dividends in increased creativity and better communication. Lilie, founder of a gift store, has used meditation for two decades to help control headaches, manage her weight and communicate more clearly.

"Without meditation I don't think I would be as effective in terms of making decisions or coping with the ordinary shifts and stresses that happen in the regular business world," she said. "When I don't meditate, I'm more frantic and unfocused, and I get more headaches.

"No matter what you do in business, you experience some turmoil inside, and you want to resolve that. I have never had the desire to escape, but I have wanted to feel more centered. It's a way of bringing myself back into the most peaceful part of myself."

Meditation, Lilie said, is not the same as relaxing. It doesn't usually happen while zoning out in front of the television or soaking in the tub. It's a structured period of time when you concentrate on an idea or a word and pay no attention to other thoughts that may intrude. Many different forms and techniques for meditation are taught, but a common approach involves focusing on deep, slow breathing.

"I find breathing the most essential ingredient — a sort of circular breathing," Lilie said. "It falls into your body and falls out, until all you notice is that cycle of breathing."

THE WHOLE PROCESS takes about 15 or 20 minutes and is best done once or twice a day. Beginners can learn the technique from psychologists or other professionals, but it is also simple enough to pick up from reading instructions in a book.

Longtime meditators such as Trish, a professional seminar speaker, can get into a meditative state almost any time, anywhere.

"It's become so much a part of me that I can be sitting on an airplane or in a car or lying in bed exhausted at the end of the day and go through the practice and reap the benefits."

The challenge to teaching meditation is to get wound-up executives to slow down long enough to try it. Bruner's sister, an astrophysicist, couldn't deal with the concept until Bruner suggested she meditate by focusing on the sweep hand of her watch. The psychologist has taught some people who can't sit still how to meditate while running.

"Meditation is not the act of doing something," Trish said, "it's the act of not doing something. And that's a very foreign idea to many busy working people. What happens in the beginning is your hand starts to itch to make a list, and your mind is thinking about what's going to go on the list. Meditation is something you have to relax into."

TRISH AND HER husband, Will, begin each day with meditation, each in their separate home offices or "bliss stations." By meditating, Trish has become familiar with feelings of peace and calm and relies on those feelings when a stressful situation arises.

"In the middle of a deadline, or when your airplane is not going to take off, you can remember the feeling of calmness. In those situations, rather than moving toward a greater point of stress, you can control your body and breathing and bring your thoughts to a more peaceful place."

For Trish, the benefits have been greater clarity and effectiveness.

"When I go into a business meeting, I have a set purpose that I can remember," she said. "It has helped me become very conscious of what I'm doing and what I want to accomplish. Meditation is like vacuuming the thought processes — sucking out the dust particles so you don't have to carry that negative stuff around with you. When you're free like that, you can form new habits and concentrate on less stressful thoughts."

But some executives still may be wondering how to squeeze 20 minutes out of the day for meditation.

"Think of it as time saved," Trish said. "Meditation's benefits come back to you, so that at the end of the week you look at your (date book) and see the difference. You have had time to organize and relax. And you'll feel a whole lot better."

DEAR ABBY

Lonely hearts are still looking

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: How does a nice person meet other nice people? I'm not the type to hang out in bars, and these days it's dangerous to get too friendly with people you meet casually on the street, even though they may look nice. I'm over 21, am told I am very attractive, and I have no bad habits. Sign me ... LONELY AND SINGLE

Van Buren

DEAR LONELY: You have asked me the question that turns up the most frequently in my mail. The following is from my booklet, "How to Be Popular; You're Never Too Young or Too Old." The message is as applicable today as when it was first written:

IF YOU'RE SINGLE FOR ANY REASON — and want to know how to meet someone decent, this is for you:

"Decent people" are found where decent people gather. If you want to hook a mountain trout, don't go fishing in a herring barrel.

At the risk of sounding like a broken record, may I repeat the advice I have given in my column time and again:

Get out of the house and get involved! Get a job, go back to school, enroll in some adult education classes, learn to paint or sew, or offer your volunteer services in your community. Work with your church, the Red Cross, mental health society, the underprivileged, the disabled, the elderly, your political party — the list is endless. They need volunteers! I can't say enough for volunteer work. That's where worthwhile people meet other worthwhile people.

If you're recently divorced or widowed, let your friends know that you're interested in getting back into circulation. The safest way to meet a decent person is through folks who include singles when they entertain. And I'm sure there's a special place in heaven for the matchmaking angel who is constantly "fixing up" dates for singles.

DEAR ABBY: Stamps don't stick? Wet the stamp but don't dog-lick all the glue off. Touch the stamp to a wet sponge. If possible, buy stamps in coils of 100 or more; they're made for machine applications and have more (and better) glue. Also, they haven't been touched by the hands of the many inventory employees at the post office. There is nothing in the many postal books about clean hands, and most post offices have no convenient place to wash hands anyway.

Another tip. It's better to lick the envelope, not the stamp. Believe it or not, the envelope is usually cleaner than the stamp.

No glue at all on these stamps? Cockroaches ate it all off in the drawer. Honest. It happens all the time. They leave no tracks.

Print more letters about the poor quality of glue. It didn't used to be this bad. Maybe the postmaster general will wise up, but don't count on it. I am a retired postmaster, and you may use my name. — ELMER PINKERTON, ELMWOOD, NEB.

DEAR ELMER: Postmaster General Anthony Frank has promised a new,improved stamp that sticks. Let's be patient. However, there are more serious complaints. It seems, lately, the mail is delayed. (The bills are on time, but the checks are late.)

"How to Write Letters for All Occasions" provides sample letters of congratulations, thank-yous, condolences, resumes and business letters — even how to write a love letter. It also includes how to properly address the clergy, government officials, dignitaries, widows and others. To order, send a long, business-size, self-addressed envelope, plus check or money order for $3.95 ($4.50 in Canada) to: Dear Abby, Letter Booklet, P.O. Box 447, Mount Morris, Ill. 61054. (Postage is included.)

Child development experts offer tips for parents with impulse to spank children

N.Y. Times News Service

Child development experts offer several suggestions for parents to think about when they have the impulse to spank their children:

■ Try to take a few moments to calm down.

Spanking a child while you are very upset may do more harm than good.

"My mother was right when she told me to count to 10 to keep from doing something I'd later regret," said Dr. Irwin Hyman, the director of the National Center for the Study of Corporal Punishment and Alternatives in the Schools.

■ Look for alternative ways of responding to undesirable behavior.

Sometimes the best solution when a problem arises is to take the child firmly by the arm and move to another location, said Dr. Lee Salk, a professor of psychology at the New York Hospital-Cornell Medical Center and the author of several books on child development.

Fred Rogers, the host of the "Mister Rogers's Neighborhood" public television program and the author of several books on children and relationships, offers another suggestion.

"I've known times when it's been very useful to me to put my arms around a child and give that child some outside structure when he couldn't manage that control by himself," he said.

■ All is not lost if you lose your temper.

Look for ways to help your child understand your reaction.

"If you do spank your child in the heat of the moment, briefly apologize to your child for the spanking, but explain what the child was doing that got you so upset," Salk said.

"That gives the child the idea that hitting is wrong and what the child did was wrong, too."

■ Remember your goals for discipline.

Spanking is usually ineffective in the long term because it does not teach children an acceptable alternative behavior.

For example, it is obvious to adults to speak more quietly when someone tells them to stop yelling, but some young children do not yet see the logical connection between the two.

Simply spanking a child for yelling does not help the child learn to speak at a lower volume.

"You want to do things that will guide the child even when you're not around to spank him," said Dr. John E. Schowalter, chief of psychiatry at the Yale Child Study Center.

Perez luckless

NEW YORK (AP) — New York Yankees pitcher Pascual Perez escaped unhurt but his 1990 BMW sustained about $5,000 worth of damage when a man attacked the car as Perez waited at a traffic light, police said.

Roberto Chauarriaga, 35, of Miami, was arrested and charged with criminal mischief after the incident, at 3:45 a.m. Saturday in the Jackson Heights section of Queens, police said. They said the man evidently did not know Perez and it wasn't clear why he suddenly began kicking in the doors and fenders.

'Oldsters' meet

ARLINGTON, Texas (AP) — Eight participants in an old-timers game Saturday at Arlington Stadium are younger than Texas Rangers pitcher Nolan Ryan, who had thrown the day before.

Cecil Cooper, who is 40, said he doesn't feel bad about playing in old-timers' games while Ryan is still active.

"When he starts playing in them, I won't anymore," Cooper said. "You think I want to face that 90 mph fastball?"

Walls honored

DALLAS (AP) — The Cowboys have released cornerback Everson Walls, but he still is being embraced by the Dallas community.

Walls was awarded the first Hamilton Park Achievement Award in a ceremony Saturday. He also was honored by Dallas Mayor Annette Strauss.

"He has been such a wonderful role model both on the playing field and off," she said.

Walls, who is the only player in NFL history to lead the league in interceptions three seasons, has donated considerable time to help children in the Hamilton Park section of Dallas. Walls said he believes underprivileged children must be encouraged to succeed.

"Role models are important for children, no doubt about it," he said. "But the best role models are parents."

Walls said he hopes to make the New York Giants roster in July.

Even Wimbledon must face change

■ Top seeds Ivan Lendl and Steffi Graf will try to take care of business at the All-England Lawn Tennis Championships after recent disappointments.

WIMBLEDON, England (AP) — Times are moving fast, too fast for some, as Wimbledon opens Monday amid the rush of youth, the last stands of the old guard and heretical calls to abandon the lovely lawns for fake grass.

Egad! Is nothing sacred?

Next they'll be talking about throwing out aging champions — watch out, John McEnroe — and doing away with "predominantly white," though Andre Agassi isn't around to press hot-pink power on the good stewards of the All England Lawn Tennis Club.

Reputations certainly don't guarantee respect, as former wunderkinder and defending champions Boris Becker and Steffi Graf are finding out.

Becker, a three-time Wimbledon winner, finds himself the mere second seed behind Ivan Lendl, who hasn't won here in 10 attempts.

Becker at least will have the honor of opening Monday's play on the lush, fresh turf of Centre Court, taking on a late, and no doubt, trembling qualifier, Luis Herrera of Mexico.

Lendl opens on Court 1 against Argentina's Christian Miniussi as the Czechoslovakian native and Connecticut resident renews a quest for the only Grand Slam title to elude him.

Graf, seeded No. 1 among the women, will be trying to regain the respect of the teenie boppers, particularly 16-year-old Monica Seles, who drubbed Graf in their last two matches — the German and French Opens.

Graf, who begins Tuesday against West German compatriot Claudia Porwik, won Wimbledon the past two years and has been ranked No. 1 since 1987, but her dominance would be imperiled by a loss here.

Floridian Jennifer Capriati, 14, the youngest seed in Grand Slam history at No. 12, is taking the leap from the juniors at Wimbledon last year, where she won the doubles with Meredith McGrath and reached the quarters in singles.

Another Floridian, Mary Joe Fernandez, 18, was playing up to the form that saw her reach the finals of the Australian Open in January, where she gave Graf a tough time before succumbing 6-3, 6-4. But she had to pull out of a semifinal at the main women's warmup in Eastbourne last week and her Wimbledon prospects are doubtful.

But in all the excitement over youth, no one should overlook Martina Navratilova, who may be making her last serious bid for a record ninth Wimbledon singles title.

Navratilova, 33, is seeded No. 2 and appears to have an easy draw with an opening round match against Sophie Amiach of France. Graf, Seles and Capriati are all on the other side of the draw.

Winning at Wimbledon and breaking Helen Wills Moody's 52-year-old record has become a virtual obsession for Navratilova, who skipped the Australian and French Opens to prepare for Wimbledon.

She won four tournaments this year, but was trounced by Seles, 6-1, 6-1, on clay in the Italian Open.

Navratilova's fellow Czechoslovakian native, Hana Mandlikova, announced her retirement from singles competition after Wimbledon — "I'm like an orange with the juice squeezed out," she said — and Navratilova is thinking of hanging up her racket, too.

A victory by Navratilova surely would fulfill her dream and make quitting easier. But even a loss and the prospect of having to work harder next year to come back could hasten the end for the player who brought power to the women's game.

If the winds of change are blowing among the players, a thunderstorm may be gathering about the officials of Wimbledon.

There is serious talk of enlarging the Centre Court stands, adding a retractable roof or building a new show court nearby with a retractable roof. McEnroe, who opens Tuesday against Derrick Rostagno, called last week for a glass dome to be placed over the courts.

But perhaps the most radical suggestion would cut to the essence of this most cherished tennis championship: the grass.

The rain-swollen lawns gleamed during a brief spell of sunshine last week, each court looking just right for the start of play. But the nag, say critics, is that by the end of the first week, the courts will begin to look scruffy.

"No matter how perfect the climate, the Centre Court almost invariably looks a mess by the beginning of the second week, and the men's singles final — arguably the most important and certainly the most watched tennis match in the entire year — is often played on a surface that is simply not up to scratch," says prominent British tennis writer Richard Evans.

Two in a row plenty for Irwin

■ U.S. Open champion Hale Irwin ends a productive two weeks with a win in the Buick Classic, but will skip next week to be with his family.

HARRISON, N.Y. (AP) — Hale Irwin has his double, and he won't even try for a triple.

"I have other, more pressing matters to attend to next week," the U.S. Open champion said Sunday after he made the Buick Classic his second victory in six days.

And just what are those more pressing matters that will keep him from competing in next week's tournament?

"Going home and being with my family," Irwin said.

"I'm excited about the double. I'm very, very pleased. But I'm quite exhausted," said Irwin, who came to this event after winning his third U.S. Open title in a 19-hole playoff Monday.

"It's been very, very tense week, a lot of work. But these are the days you look forward to. There aren't many of them. And, at this stage of my career, I probably appreciate these two more than any others. I'm proud of myself in the way I reacted after such an emotional week at the Open."

Paul Azinger, who was two strokes behind in second, was simply amazed.

"It's hard to follow up any win," Azinger said. "I can't imagine what it takes to follow up an Open victory."

It took four consecutive rounds in the 60's, capped by a bogey-free final round of 66 and a 15-under-par total of 269 as Irwin became the first player since Billy Casper in 1966 to follow up an Open triumph with a win in the next tournament.

Azinger, who once closed within one stroke of the lead, was quick to attest to the life left in the 45-year-old Irwin, the oldest man ever to win the Open.

"Being behind, I figured I'd have to shoot a good score to have a chance, and I certainly thought 65 would be good enough.

"But I'd have had to shoot 63 just to catch him. I did as good as I can do," said Azinger, who will defend his title next weekend at nearby Hartford, Conn.

Rookie Kirk Triplett came on with a 66 and was third at 272. He was followed by Ken Green at 67-273.

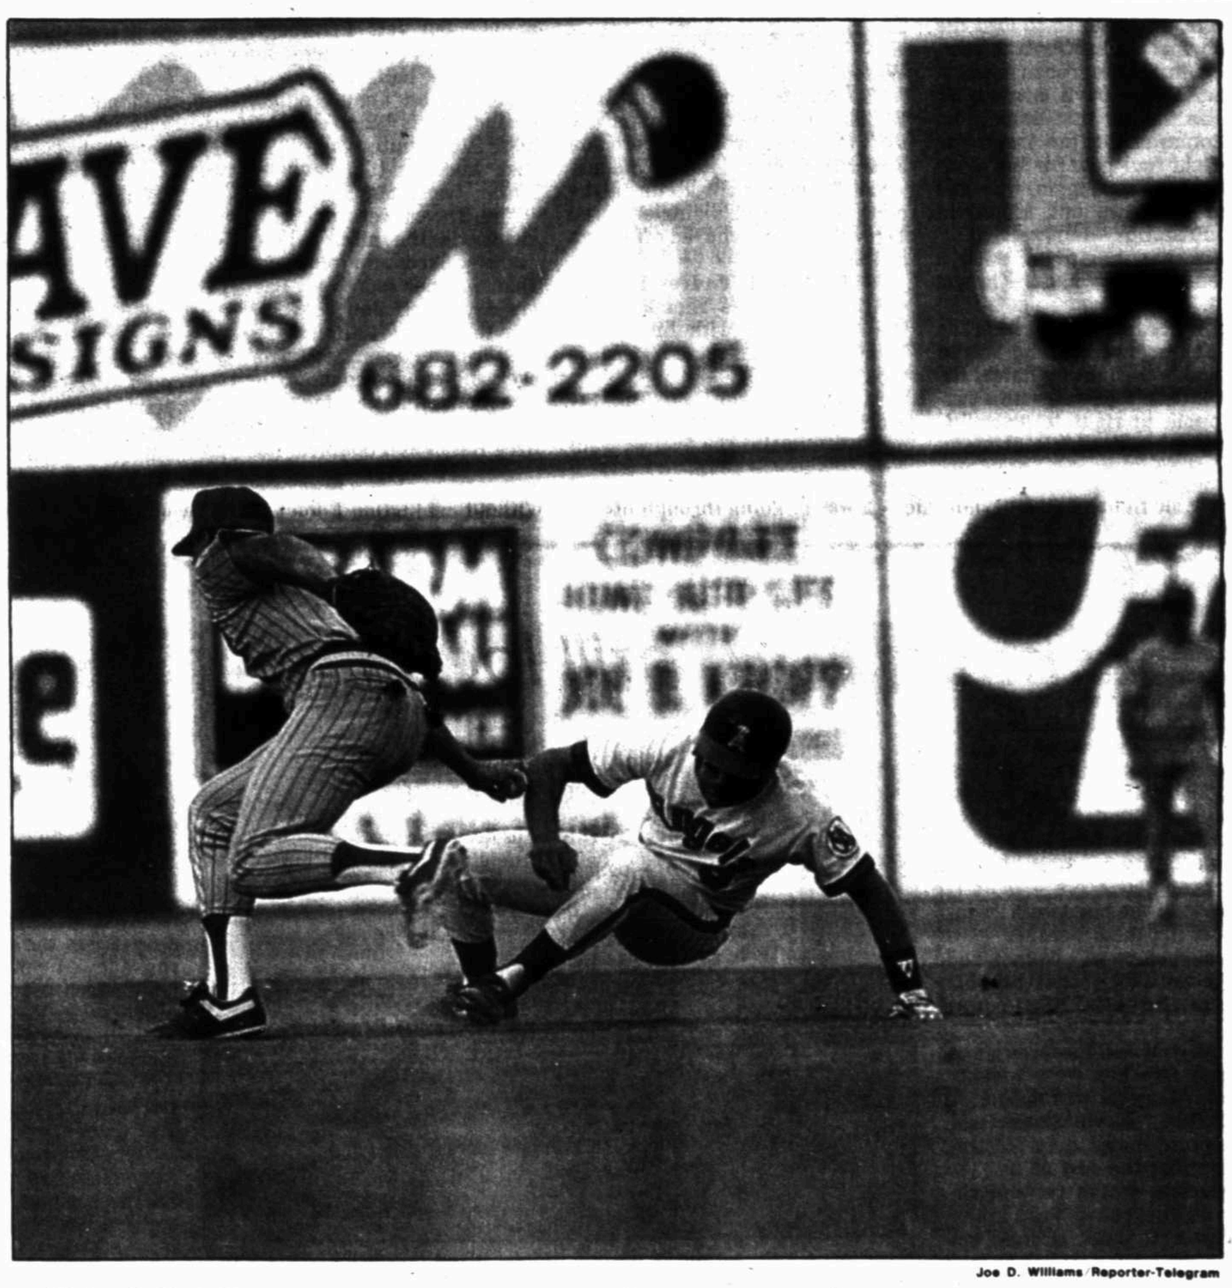

Blaine McCallister, who shared the third-round lead with Irwin, took himself out of the title race over the first nine holes and dropped into a tie at 274 with Jim Gallagher.

McCallister matched par 71 on the hilly course in the northern suburbs of New York, and Gallagher shot 67.

Just as he did in celebration of a 72nd-hole birdie in the Open at Medinah, Irwin trotted to the ropes restraining the gallery around the 18th green and slapped high-fives with spectators after a last-hole birdie.

But was a much more restrained, sedate visit to the gallery than the joyous romp at Medinah, and was accompanied by a wry, almost-embarassed smile from Irwin.

Irwin, who came from behind in both the fourth round and 18-hole playoff in the U.S. Open, followed a different script this time.

Haloes get arms, but no bats

By Jimmy Patterson
Assistant Sports Editor

Midland's inability to push across runners in scoring position told the tale of yet another Angel loss Sunday night at Angels Stadium.

El Paso defeated Midland 3-1 as the Angels passed on numerous opportunities to gain a lead that was never to be had.

The Angels, who fell to 1-3 in second half Texas League action, have yet to reach the .500 mark at any point in the season and have either been in last place or tied for last for the last 76 straight days — since Day 1.

In the first half, pitching woes got the team down. Last night, Midland bats fell asleep, unable to wake in time for a rally of any substance.

For instance:

■ With two out in the eighth, Angel designated hitter Jim Aylward doubled and Luis Aguayo came to the plate, representing the tying run. Aguayo grounded to El Paso pitcher Ed Puig to end the inning.

■ With two out in the ninth, Angel shortstop Kevin Flora doubled and went to third on a passed ball. Centerfielder Mark Davis struck out swinging to end the game.

■ Twice the Angels had the bases loaded and were only able to bring in one of a possible six.

In the second, Diablos' pitcher Dean Freeland walked the bases full. But after Reed Peters was called out on an infield fly and Flora grounded into a double play, the inning was history.

And in the third, Mark Davis doubled and went to third on a wild pitch. Davis scored on a grounder by Scott Cerny. Later, Mark Howie walked and was caught stealing for the second out. Howie's toss-out was followed by a John Skurla double and consecutive walks by Jim Aylward and Luis Aguayo to load the bases again. Catcher Mike Knapp, though, flied out to right to end the inning with the bases juiced.

"That's what killed us," Rodriguez said of the lost opprtunities. "Bases loaded, no outs, and we can't score a run. That's brutal."

Rodriguez blamed the loss on a "lack of concentration", saying that the Angel players need to "go up with a plan and carry that plan out. We haven't been carrying it out. It's as simple as that."

El Paso scored two of its three runs in the fifth when, with two outs, leadoff hitter Dee Dixon doubled home catcher Joe Kmak and center fielder Rafel Skeete. The Diablos' final tally came in the seventh when Kmak singled and came home on a throwing error by Midland catcher Knapp. Knapp had tried to nail Skeete stealing second, but the throw hit the runner in the head and bounded into left-center field.

The Angels mustered just six hits, four through the first seven innings. Davis' run in the third and the three doubles were the offensive highlights of the game.

Starting pitcher and loser Carl Hamilton, now 3-4, allowed just four hits through five innings, but walked seven batters, which he said was indication of poor pitch selection. Still, Hamilton would not blame the lack of offense for his losing outing.

"We can't go out there expecting them to score a bunch of runs," Hamilton said of the offense. "When I came out, we still should've been leading 1-0. I stayed in as long as I could, but you can't depend on offense all the time.

"Our pitching is coming around. The hitting will. And if

Gullickson ends drought against Giants

Associated Press

For a guy who hadn't won against the San Francisco Giants for five years, Bill Gullickson looked Sunday like he'd been beating them all of his life.

Gullickson (5-5) allowed eight hits and two runs in 8 2-3 innings, and drove in two runs with an eighth-inning single as Houston defeated the Giants 8-2.

Gullickson had not defeated the Giants in 10 since May 26, 1985. He came within one out of his first complete game since Sept. 14, 1987, before Juan Agosto relieved.

"I've pitched good against the Giants in the past, but the last few times I have faced them, I'd end up losing 2-1 or 3-2," Gulickson said. "And for the last two years, I was a Giant."

Gullickson pitched for the Yomiuri Giants in Japan. He singled in two runs off Bob Knepper as Houston blew the game open with a three-run eighth.

"It isn't very often we have a seven-run lead going into the ninth," Astros manager Art Howe said. "After some of the tough losses Bill's had, he deserved a game like this,"

"He pitched a great game," Giants first baseman Will Clark said. "He had a good fastball and kept putting the breaking pitches where he wanted to."

In five starts this month, Gullickson is 3-2 with a 2.17 ERA.

San Francisco has lost four of five since winning 16 of its first 17 games in June.

Franklin Stubbs, replacing first baseman Glenn Davis, made it 5-0 when he hit the first pitch from Don Robinson (2-1) just inside the right field foul pole for his ninth home run. Craig Biggio, who had singled with two out, scored in front of Stubbs.

The Giants scored when Mike Kingery singled, took third on Wilson's two-base error and scored on a sacrifice fly by Matt Williams.

Braves 11, Padres 10

Atlanta's Andres Thomas led of the 12th inning with his second home run of the season to cap a wild game.

San Diego made it 7-7 in the ninth on Mike Pagliarulo's two-out, RBI double. The Padres went ahead in the 10th on pitcher Dennis Rasmussen's three-run, pinch-double, but Jeff Blauser tied it with a three-run, pinch-homer in the Braves' half.

Thomas hit an 0-1 pitch from Craig Lefferts (5-2) to end the four-hour, 15-minute game. Winner Rick Luecken (1-2) gave up two hits in two innings.

The Braves were one out from victory in the ninth when Jack Clark walked and pinch runner Shawn Abner scored on Pagliarulo's double off Joe Boever.

In the Padres' 10th, Roberto Alomar drew a two-out walk from Boever and stole second. After two intentional walks loaded the bases, Rasmussen batted for pitcher Greg Harris and doubled. Rasmussen, a .170 career hitter before this season, is 9-for-25 (.360) with six RBIs this year.

Cubs 3, Cardinals 2

Pinch hitter Hector Villanueva singled home the winning run with two outs and the bases loaded in the 10th inning to give the Cubs a win.

With two outs, Ryne Sandberg, who earlier hit his National League-leading 21st home run, singled off Tom Niedenfuer (0-3). Mark Grace singled and reliever Ken Dayley intentionally walked Andre Dawson to load the bases. Villanueva, batting for Marvell Wynne, singled to center field on an 0-2 pitch. The hit broke Chicago's three-game losing streak.

Pirates 5, Expos 3

Stan Belinda escaped a bases-loaded, no-out jam in the ninth inning for his first major league save and Pittsburgh ended a five-game losing streak to reclaim first place in the National League East.

A crowd of 41,054, the largest at Olympic Stadium since opening day, saw the Expos pull to 5-3 in the ninth on Tim Wallach's two-run double off Bill Landrum. Bob Kipper relieved and walked Larry Walker, loading the bases.

Neal Heaton (10-2) tied Frank Viola for the league lead in victories. He gave up four hits in six innings, struck out two and walked two, and won for the 15th time in 17 decisions.

Mets 6, Phillies 5

Tim Teufel's two-run, pinch-single capped New York's dramatic three-run rally in the ninth inning and the Mets picked up their sixth straight victory.

Howard Johnson and Dave Magadan opened the ninth with singles off reliever Don Carman and former Met Roger McDowell relieved. Gregg Jefferies, who drove in four runs, singled past first baseman John Kruk to make it 5-4. McDowell (2-3) got red-hot Darryl Strawberry to fly out but walked Kevin McReynolds to load the bases.

After Mark Carreon struck out, Teufel singled to center to give the Mets a three-game sweep and a 5-0 homestand. Teufel is 5-for-15 as a pinch-hitter this season with five RBIs.

Reds 10, Dodgers 6

Chris Sabo's three-run homer capped a six-run sixth inning against Fernando Valenzuela and led rough-and-tumble Cincinnati to its ninth victory in 12 games and a nine-game lead the National League West.

The Reds' style of play was best typified by "Nasty Boys" reliever Norm Charlton, who got his second save after thrilling a Riverfront Stadium crowd by colliding hard with Los Angeles catcher Mike Scioscia to score a run in the seventh inning.

Valenzuela (5-6) took a 4-2 lead into the sixth, but gave up six runs while retiring just one batter. Rick Mahler (2-2) gave up five hits and four earned runs in six innings. Charlton allowed four hits over the last four innings.

Royals follow Keeler's advice

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — The man who coined the phrase "hit 'em where they ain't" a century ago would have been mighty proud of the Kansas City Royals Sunday.

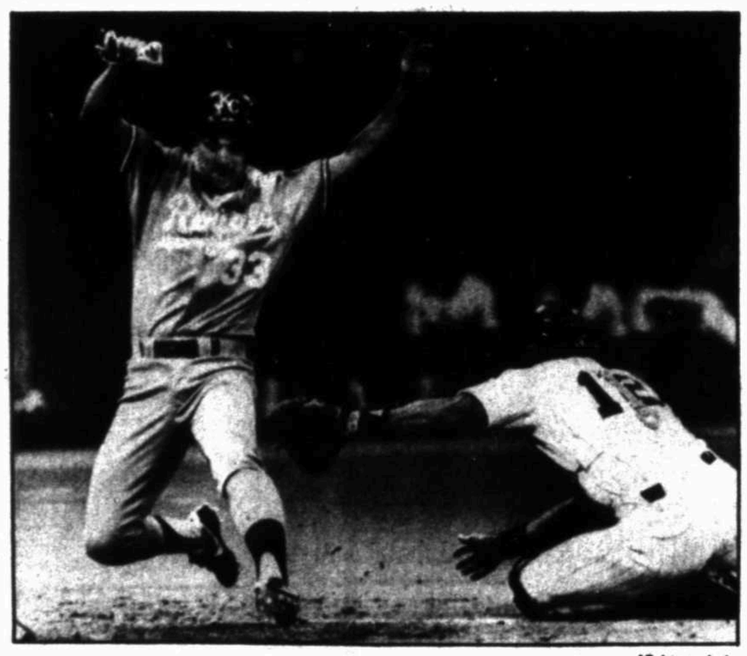

"(First base coach) Bob Schaefer said we Wee Willie Keeler-ed them," Royals manager John Wathan said Sunday after Kansas City had an American League season-high 23 hits — most of them bloopers and bouncers — in an 11-2 blowout of the Minnesota Twins.

"I feel for them because we've had it happen to us," Wathan added. "We had a lot of (soft) base hits and groundballs that found holes."

But most of Jim Eisenreich's career-high five hits were well-hit.

"I told Eisey he was making us all look bad," Kevin Seitzer said. "He should have been hitting bleeders like the rest of us."

Eisenreich, whose two-run single keyed a seven-run third inning that featured seven straight singles off loser Allan Anderson, is a former Twin and a native of St. Cloud, Minn.

Indians 9, Brewers 5

After taking a 1-0 lead in the first on James' run-scoring single, the Indians chased Milwaukee starter Mark Knudson (5-4) during a four-run second. James capped the rally with a two-run single off reliever Randy Veres.

John Farrell (4-4) got his first victory since May 13, limiting the Brewers to three hits over five innings before leaving with tightness in his right elbow. He improved his career record against Milwaukee to 5-1.

Trailing 9-1, the Brewers rallied for four runs in the eighth.

Cleveland reliever Sergio Valdez gave up a two-run homer to Bill Spiers, a solo shot to Robin Yount and a one-out double to Dave Parker before getting relieved by Jones.

Dale Sveum greeted Jones with an RBI double, but the relief ace then retired Rob Deer on a groundout and B.J. Surhoff on a fly to left to end the inning. Doug Jones retired the Brewers in order in the ninth, but did not earn the save.

Blue Jays 8, Yankees 3

Bell started a four-run rally in the second inning with a leadoff homer off Chuck Cary (4-3). He added a two-run homer in the third, his 17th of the season, and a run-scoring single in the fourth.

Bell now has 11 RBIs in his last five games.

The victory kept first-place Toronto a half-game ahead of the Boston Red Sox in the American League East.

Blue Jays starter John Cerutti (4-5) got the win, allowing three runs on seven hits over five innings. Jim Acker finished with four shutout innings for his first save of the season.

Mariners 11, Rangers 5

Dave Valle had a three-run homer among three hits and added four RBIs to tie a career high, and Harold Reynolds had four of Seattle's season-high 18 hits.

Valle hit a three-run homer in the second inning, his fourth, singled during a five-run third and added a run-scoring single in the seventh. Erik Hanson (7-6) allowed eight hits and five runs in 7 2-3 innings, struck out eight and walked four.

The Mariners pounded Charlie Hough (7-5) for seven runs and eight hits over two-plus innings. Hough had the shortest outing and gave up the most runs of his 15 starts this season. Valle reached Hough in the second with his fourth homer, scoring Pete O'Brien and Edgar Martinez.

The Mariners finished off Hough with five runs in the third.

American

Red Sox 2, Orioles 0

Dwight Evans, who homered twice in a one-run Boston victory on Saturday, drove in both runs on Sunday with a home run and a sacrifice fly.

Greg Harris (7-3) gave up five hits in eight innings and Jeff Gray got his first save as Boston swept the three-game series. Baltimore has lost four straight.

Evans, whose two-run, 10th-inning shot gave the Red Sox a 4-3 victory, connected off Bob Milacki (3-4) in the seventh, and tied Rocky Colavito for 31st on the all-time home run list with 374.

Harris walked two and struck out seven. Baltimore loaded the bases in the second, but failed to score. With one out, Joe Orsulak singled to right, and moved to second on Cal Ripken's single to center.

Harris then struck out Brad Komminsk before walking Craig Worthington on a full count. But the rally ended when Mike Devereaux bounced to shortstop.

In the eighth, Baltimore had first and second with two outs, but Mickey Tettleton grounded out to first.

White Sox 3, Athletics 2

Chicago swept a three-game series from Oakland and pulled within a game of the American League West lead.

The Athletics tied the score with two outs in the ninth on Dave Henderson's two-run homer off relief ace Bobby Thigpen (3-2).

Dan Pasqua then led off the 10th with an opposite field homer off Oakland starter Dave Stewart (9-6). It was the first extra-inning run allowed this season by Oakland, which fell to 5-1 in extra-inning games.

It was the first time since June 1988 that the Athletics were swept in a three-game series at home.

Chicago pitchers limited the Athletics to five runs and 19 hits in the three games as the White Sox bounced back from losing three of four to Oakland last week.

Chicago starter Melido Perez held the Athletics to three hits over eight innings, striking out three and walking one. In his last start against Oakland on June 16, Perez lasted only two-thirds of an inning, giving up five hits and seven runs.

Oakland, which has lost five of its last six, had its first three baserunners erased by double plays Sunday.

Angels 10, Tigers 2

Kirk McCaskill (6-3) limited the Tigers to four hits and two unearned runs over seven innings before giving way to Mike Fetters, who finished with two shutout innings.

McCaskill hasn't given up an earned run to the Tigers in his last 37 1-3 innings.

Kent Anderson gave the Tigers a run in the first when he dropped a two-out popup to second by Cecil Fielder. But Anderson redeemed himself in the fourth with his first home run in 310 major league at-bats.

Scott Lusader drew a leadoff walk in the fifth, went to third on McCaskill's wild pickoff throw and scored on a Mark Salas groundout to cut the Angels' lead to 4-2.

But Lance Parrish hit his 14th homer in the fifth — a two-run shot off Frank Tanana (5-5) — to give California a 6-2 lead.

"He's one of the old-time type of players," said catcher Tom Haller.

Ripken, who recently played in his 1,308th straight game to pass Everett Scott for second place on the list of most consecutive games played, is one of the rare players these days who won't allow an injury or fatigue to move him from the lineup.

"But the other players with long-term contracts, when you're looking at the possibility of maybe losing up to $10 million, you're going to say, 'Hey, wait a minute. I'm going to take a few extra days and make sure that I don't permanently injure myself," Haller said.

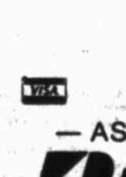

Many of baseball's legends, arriving here for the ninth annual National Old Timer's Baseball Classic on Monday night, saluted Ripken for his persistence in an era when many players don't need much of an excuse to leave the lineup.

Charles fights off Trevino for win

Seniors

CONCORD, Mass. (AP) — If defending his title wasn't enough, Bob Charles also had to contend with a charging Lee Trevino. He did both and pulled away Sunday to win the $350,000 Digital Senior Golf Classic.

"I was aware that I had been tied by Trevino," Charles said. "That's when I made my two birdies."

Those two birdies, on Nos. 11 and 12, settled the tournament, Charles' first victory of the year and the 14th of his career on the Senior Tour.

Charles shot a final-round 5-under-par 67, and his 13-under-par 203 total for three trips around the Nashawtuc Country Club course was three short of his winning mark last year when broke Chi Chi Rodriguez's three-year victory streak.

"I felt if I could put together a good score, I would win." Charles said. "I like playing with the leaders. Chi Chi and Lee had most of the gallery and when I didn't hear too much from Lee's gallery on the last few holes, I knew what was going on."

Trevino's final-round 66 for a 205 total earned him $28,000 and pushed his earnings for his first full year as a senior to $508,633.

Trevino, who has won five of his 11 tournament starts this year, blamed his loss on his par round of 72 on Saturday.

"There's no reason why I played like that yesterday. I played very well today. Everything was the same, I don't know what happened," he said.

"I stayed at 10 under for a while and it got me pumped up. No one was moving. I took a chance at 15 hitting a driver off the tee," Trevino said of the last of six birdies on Sunday.

Rodriguez, who had led the tournament after the first round and was tied for the lead with Dave Hill after 36 holes, wound up third with his second straight 71 for a 206.

Charles, who started the day at eight under, had two birdies on the front nine and took charge with the two on 11 and 12. His birdie on the 15th gave him breathing room.

Charles, a 54-year-old left-hander from New Zealand, had a bogey-free round and admitted he knew he had been tied by Trevino when he made 4- and 15-foot birdie putts to regain the lead on the back nine.

"I don't think I played poorly off the tee," he said in reference to a Saturday problem. "But I kept making the odd putt and I didn't have a bogey. I played well, sufficient to win."

"I enjoy playing this course," he said of the 6,453-yard layout. "I think I've played here five times and I've finished in the top five every year except the year I had food poisoning."

Rodriguez birdied the final hole for sole possession of third.

Aussie earns 2nd victory

HAKUI, Japan (AP) — Australian Brian Jones shot a final-round, 5-under-par 67 Sunday to capture the $433,000 Mizuno Open golf tournament.

In winning by four shots over Tsuneyuki Nakajima, Jones received $78,000 for his second victory over the year. Jones started the final round a shot behind Nakajima, but he eagled the par-5 13th hole to take command and finished with a 16-under 272.

Nakajima had five birdies and five bogeys to finish with a 72 and four-day total of 276. He won $43,000.

Tateo "Jet" Ozaki, Eduardo Herrera of Colombia, Nobuo Serizawa and Australian Roger Mackay shared third at 278. Ozaki, Mackay and Serizawa each had 70s and Herrera a 69.

Naomichi "Joe" Ozaki, Tateo's younger brother, shared the third-round lead with Nakajima, but shot 75 and dropped to seventh with Sandy Lyle of Britain, who had a 67.

In the women's event, Fukumi Tani beat Yuko Moriguchi and Australian Elizabeth Wilson in the sudden-death playoff.

Tani rolled in a 7-foot birdie putt on the 18th hole, the third hole of the playoff, while Wilson parred it.

Tani's second victory of the season was worth $48,000. Tani shot a 72, Wilson a 70 and Moriguchi a 73. The three players had a three-round total 214 total, 2-under-par to force the playoff.

Spaniard beats Calcavecchia

DUBLIN, Ireland (AP) — Jose-Maria Olazabal shot a 72 in the fourth and final round Sunday for a three stroke victory in the Irish Open golf championship.

The tough conditions of the last three days, with winds whipping in from the southwest and gusting up to 30 mph at times, caused problems for most of the field.

Patty Sheehan raises her arms in victory after winning the Rochester LPGA Invitational for the second straight year. Sheehan shot a tourney record 17 under par.

Sheehan heats up to beat cool Alcott

LPGA

ROCHESTER, N.Y. (AP) — As Amy Alcott's game was cooling down, Patty Sheehan's was heating up. Really heating up.

Sheehan, who trailed Alcott by three shots midway through Sunday's final round of the LPGA Rochester International, shot a sizzling 5-under-par 32 on the back nine to win the tournament for the second consecutive year.

Sheehan had seven birdies and two bogeys to finish with a final-round 67 for a record 17-under-par 271 total for the tournament.

The previous record on the 6,162-yard, par-72 Locust Hill Country Club course was 276, set by Hall of Famer Sandra Haynie in 1982.

Alcott shot a 73, her first over-par round of the tournament, to finish four shots back. Three-time Rochester champion Nancy Lopez was another shot back in third.

Sheehan described her par performance on the front nine, where she birdied No. 2 and bogeyed No. 9, as "kind of ho-hum."

Sheehan backed off her tee shot in mid-swing on the par-3 ninth when a spectator's camera clicked in her ear. Her subsequent shot landed in the bunker, and she two-putted for bogey.

"I was so angry at myself for letting somebody interrupt my concentration," Sheehan said.

"I think I bore down a little more and tried to get it back to where we had a little more of a tournament."

Alcott agreed that the ninth, where she missed a 7-foot birdie putt that would have given her a four-shot lead, may have been the psychological turning point of the match.

Possible Gibson return no problem with Tigers

ANAHEIM, Calif. (AP) — The mention of Kirk Gibson's possible return to Detroit has one Tiger willing to give him the shirt off his back.

"I've got his (uniform) number and I'd be more than happy to give it up — and it wouldn't cost him a dime," said pitcher Dan Petry, a teammate of Gibson's for nine years in Detroit. "Kirk and I came up together in the minor leagues. It would be wonderful for the city of Detroit and it would be good for our team."

Petry was reacting to a published report in Sunday's Los Angeles Times that Gibson has asked the Los Angeles Dodgers to trade him back to the team he helped lead to the 1984 World Series title.

The paper said the Tigers have offered Los Angeles pitcher Frank Tanana, who worked Sunday against the California Angels. Tanana, a 20-year veteran, has gotten all of his 203 victories in the American League. But Tanana, who is from the Detroit area, is a 5-and-10 man and would have to agree to any deal.

Manager Sparky Anderson, who denied that a deal was in the works as recently as Friday night, acknowledged Sunday that he was aware of Gibson's request to return to Detroit. But he was concerned about possible tampering charges he would be faced with by commenting on whether he would like to see him back.

"I don't think it's a question of that," Anderson said. "I've always liked him as a person, but I can't speak about whether I'd like him back. They call that tampering. I cannot talk about him at all."

ANGELS: Lee benched despite 8-game bat streak

On the upside, the Angels turned five double plays.

Angel outfielder Wiley Lee was benched for the game in favor of Aguayo, who has been out of the lineup of late.

Lee had hit safely in eight straight games before the benching, and has the best batting average of all Angels against El Paso pitching (.368.)

"I just didn't feel like playing him," Rodriguez said of Lee. "Statistics are overrated. And I wanted to get Aguayo back in the lineup."

Aguayo finished 0-for-2 at the plate with two walks.

"It's his decision," Lee said of Rodriguez. "Whatever he puts on the card he feels is better for the team. And when he calls on you, you've got to be ready to play."

Rodriguez said the most frustrating aspect of the Angels is the team's obvious potential, yet their inability to capitalize on positives.

"Winning or losing is not everything at this level," Rodriguez said. "I've been in this situation before. Things happen at this level that shouldn't. And that's frustrating.

Mavs shift draft priorities after Lever trade

NBA

DALLAS (AP) — Dallas Mavericks coach Richie Adubato thinks the addition of Fat Lever gives him outstanding depth at the guard position. Others around the league are quick to agree.

Lever, obtained from the Denver Nuggets this past week for a first-round pick in Wednesday's draft and a first-round pick in 1991, will join Rolando Blackman and Derek Harper. Lever and Blackman were NBA All-Stars last season.

"Before we got Fat Lever, we were looking mostly at guards with our ninth pick," Adubato said. "Now, we're looking exclusively at forwards."

Atlanta coach Bob Weiss said he thinks Dallas now has a "great" three-guard rotation.

"The Detroit group is pretty good. Michael Jordan and any other two guards is a good three-guard rotation. But the Dallas rotation is right up there," Weiss said.

Bob Whitsett, president of the Seattle SuperSonics, said the acquisition of Lever should move Dallas to a spot among the best in the West.

"I now put another team in the top six fighting for the Western Conference," Whitsett told The Dallas Morning News. "I think it was a great deal. If Detroit set the wheels in motion for a three-guard rotation to lead a team to a championship, the Mavericks' three guards are arguably as good if not better."

All three of the Mavericks' guards are excited about the prospects.

"I think a three-guard rotation is the way to go," Lever said.

Blackman said it should make the Dallas attack more versatile.

"It's going to work because first of all, the three of us are excellent guards," he said. "We can stand alone and do well. We're all unselfish. We play defense. We all can score. We bring the same thing to the court that Detroit brings."

"I think we can create havoc," Harper said.

Dale Earnhardt celebrates his Miller 400 win.

Elliott has more bad luck

NASCAR

BROOKLYN, Mich. (AP) — Dale Earnhardt knew Bill Elliott was going to win Sunday's Miller 400 unless something bad befell the leader.

Earnhardt didn't gloat when it happened.

"It wasn't good or bad. I didn't cheer or anything," Earnhardt said after winning the race at Michigan International Speedway. "I just gave a sigh of relief. Bill looked like he had us covered.

Elliott led 102 of the 200 laps on the two-mile, high-banked oval and appeared ready to wrap up his first victory of the year with ease. But a plume of smoke from the rear of the car signaled the end of his race on lap 186.

That left the battle to three-time Winston Cup champion Earnhardt and winless Irvan, a rising star in NASCAR's premier stock car series.

Earnhardt's Chevrolet Lumina inherited the lead when Elliott's engine blew, but Irvan drove his Oldsmobile Cutlass into the top spot on lap 188 and held Earnhardt off for eight laps.

Finally, however, the more experienced driver asserted himself, moving on top to stay at the finish line on lap 195 and holding off Irvan the rest of the way to win by just 0.14 seconds.

"I wasn't pondering on what Ernie had done before, or what I had done," Earnhardt said. "I was pondering the race. He was just another car to beat."

Irvan, whose best previous finish was third at Atlanta in March in his first race with the Morgan-McClure team, said, "We had a good close run, but Dale had a good car. Who would have known that Dale could have come through there like that and win? He had a good strong car."

The bitterly disappointed Elliott, who had won seven of the previous 12 stock car races here, said, "That last restart (after the fourth and final caution period), it felt like it was vibrating a little bit, and the oil pressure was dropping a little bit. I didn't think it would last the race. That's just been our luck all year."

Earnhardt, who earned his fourth victory of the season and 43rd of his career, ended a string of poor showings that saw him drop from the Winston Cup point lead to fifth.

During that period, he finished 30th, 31st, 34th and 13th with a variety of mechanical and tire problems. That erased a 90-point series lead and left him 133 behind Martin heading into Sunday's race.

"You've got to be there all day," Earnhardt said. "That's been my problem the last four of five weeks. We were there all day today."

Earnhardt, who won $72,950, averaged 150.219 mph in a race slowed by just four caution flags for 17 laps.

That left the top five separated by 118 points.

Martin leads by 94 points over Shepherd, followed another 13 points down by Bodine. Wallace fell to fourth, nine points behind Bodine, and Earnhardt is two points behind Wallace.

Rain washed away all but 30 minutes of practice Friday and Saturday, but Sunday was sunny with the temperature in the low 70s.

NASCAR put out a caution flag on lap 20 for a mandatory pit stop, giving all the teams a chance to check tire wear and make necessary adjustments because of the limited preparation time.

The only other caution period in the first half of the race began on lap 60 when Jack Pennington crashed in turn four. The crash apparently was caused by a cut rear tire. The driver walked away without injury.

Hut Stricklin's blown engine sent him into the turn four wall on lap 132 and brought out the third caution of the race. He was able to drive the car back to the garage area.

The final caution flag waved on lap 172 when Ed Cooper's engine blew, allowing the leaders to make their final pit stops. The green flag came out on lap 177 with Ken Schrader in the lead, followed by Earnhardt, Irvan and Elliott.

Elliott, still showing his Ford Thunderbird's muscle, quickly moved back to the front, taking the lead for the final time on lap 181.

The huge crowd, estimated at about 85,000, a track record, cheered wildly for Elliott. Five laps later, the fans were groaning as Elliott slowed and watched Earnhardt and Irvan race away.

Father, son finish one-two on familiar track

More Sports, 8C

PORTLAND, Ore. (AP) — For the second time ever, and the second time in Portland, Michael and Mario Andretti finished 1-2 in a race.

This time, it was the son, not the father, who won.

"We finally came through with a 1-2," Michael said after winning Sunday's Budweiser-G.I. Joe's 200, his second Indy-car triumph in as many weeks.

"We threatened many times in many races, but we weren't able to get the job done," he said. "We finally did it, ironically, in Portland."

On Father's Day, Michael was headed for victory when he ran out of fuel on the final straightaway and was passed by his dad, who won by .07 seconds, the closest finish in modern Indy-car history.

Michael was thinking about that day as he rounded the final turn Sunday at Portland International Raceway.

"I was thinking, 'Please just make it over,' because if I don't, I'll lose because I know he doesn't let up."

He said the 1-2 finish with his dad "is great, as long as he stayed in the mirror."

Michael had the other 24 cars in his mirror through much of a sunny afternoon on the nine-turn, 1.99-mile road course.

The younger Andretti led all but three laps, when he briefly fell behind his father during his two pit stops.

Michael finished 3.92 seconds ahead of his father with an average speed of 110.673 mph that broke the track record of 103.984 set by Emerson Fittipaldi last year.

Al Unser Jr. finished third, holding off a strong late challenge from Danny Sullivan, who started from the pole position. Mario Andretti passed Sullivan on the 26th lap and Sullivan lost further ground during his second pit stop.

For Michael, the race was nearly identical to his victory last week at Detroit, when he became the first Indy-car driver to lead from start to finish since 1985.

Andretti has won 11 races in eight Indy-car seasons and the consecutive victories and this 1-2 finish show Newman-Haas to be the hottest team on the circuit.

"We've been capable, like Dad said, all year," Michael said. "We've just had problems getting the results. Finally the last two races we've been able to get the results and hopefully we can keep the old ball rolling."

Mario Andretti, who won in Portland in 1985 and 1986, narrowly missed his first victory in two years.

"I never had a car work so good and still finish second," he said. "The kid really had it hooked up good today."

Michael started in the No. 2 spot in the 25-car race, but charged ahead of Sullivan at the start. The start was postponed for a lap because the cars weren't lined up properly.

"It was fortunate that we didn't get the green the first time," Michael said, "because if we would have, it would have been a different scenario. I think I would have gone into the first turn third."

He stretched the lead to just over 11 seconds after 27 laps. Sullivan, meanwhile, was passed by the hard-charging Mario at the end of the main straightaway at the start of the 26th lap.

Michael probably would have won by an even greater margin had it not been for the yellow caution flag that tightened the field from the 41st through 45th lap after Buddy Lazier's Lola spun out in the chicane at the end of the straightaway.

When the yellow flag was lifted, Michael's lead over his father was just .22 seconds. But that was as close as it got. The lead was about two seconds most of the rest of the way, with the winner adding to the margin in the last few laps.

MEXICO CITY (AP) — Alain Prost of France flashed past Ayrton Senna, his chief antagonist and former teammate, with 10 laps to go Sunday and went on to pace a 1-2 Ferrari finish in Sunday's Mexican Grand Prix.

Among Prost's complaints last season was that Senna at time took chances without weighing the consequences. It appeared that just such an occurrence Sunday ended any chance Senna had of running down Prost.

After Prost went ahead, Senna tried to regain the lead by shaving through a tight series of corners. But he cut it too close, and his left rear tire was shredded when the wheel climbed the curbing.

While the damaged McLaren-Honda limped back to the pits, ending Senna's 100th Formula One race, Prost and Mansell held off the third-place McLaren driven by Berger.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Budget your time so you can get everything done. What goes into the hopper now will produce results very soon. An old flame resurfaces. If married, you may feel some anxiety.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Singles should find this an especially exciting day. Romance offers interesting options. Although friends make bright suggestions, professionals will steer you in the right direction.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): You are lucky in love! Forget old grievances. A friend offers you a chance to form a new partnership. Look at this proposition from all angles. Your financial security could be at stake.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): If you deal directly with an authority figure, you will get the answers you seek. Someone could grant you an interest-free loan to launch a business. Remember to repay favors as soon as possible.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Your popularity is on the rise. Stick to a routine and you will accomplish more. The atmosphere at work improves following a personnel change. Sharpen your skills. Pay bills on time.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Stick to your priorities in business or courtship. New work methods save time and money. Spend more time with friends who share your intellectual interests. Romance heats up.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Be more open to new ideas and experiences. A short business trip is indicated. A love relationship remains rewarding. A change in lifestyle will bring greater comfort and serenity.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Your diplomacy serves you well today. Seize a unique opportunity to boost a loved one's sagging ego. An afternoon phone call brings glad tidings. Celebrate with family members when you get home.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Certain business or travel plans must be postponed. A hunch could prove highly profitable. Lend a helping hand to someone who is overburdened. Share secrets with loved ones only.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): A real estate proposal should be thoroughly investigated. Rely on experts' advice. An unexpected development could postpone travel. Be flexible; complaining will not win you sympathy.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): A creative or artistic project presents you with a special challenge. Give free rein to your imagination; an original approach will produce results. A relative suggests a solution to a financial problem.

TODAY'S CHILDREN have a strong sense of tradition and family. They adore all kinds of celebrations and enjoy hosting parties. Impulsive and sentimental, these Cancerians sometimes send out contradictory signals. They want to be both independent and protected. Although these youngsters are not particularly studious, they usually do just fine in school. They grasp new concepts quickly and turn their assignments in on time. A job with limited contact with the public holds the most appeal for these free spirits. They treasure their privacy.

ANSWERS TO WEEKLY BRIDGE QUIZ

♠AK76 ♡K83 ◇83 ♣Q1092
The bidding has proceeded:

South	West	North	East
1 ♣	Pass	1 ♡	Pass

A.—The problem with bidding one spade is what do you do if partner's next bid is one no trump? You are not strong enough for a third bid and you will always feel guilty about suppressing such good heart support. The answer to this dilemma is to forget about the spades and raise to two hearts now.

Q.2—East-West vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠AK76 ♡K83 ◇83 ♣Q1092
The bidding has proceeded:

South	West	North	East
1 ♣	Pass	1 ♡	Pass
2 ♡	Pass	5 NT	Pass

A.—North's five no trump is the Grand Slam Force, asking you to bid seven hearts if you have two of the three top trump honors. Since you don't, you must sign off with six hearts unless, by partnership agreement, you have a way of showing one of the three.

Q.3—Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠AK753 ♡AJ75 ◇AQ ♣62
Partner opens the bidding with one club. What do you respond?
A.—In the modern style, you make a jump-shift response only with a self-sufficient suit of your own or with a good fit for partner. This hand measures up on neither count, so all you can do for the moment is respond one spade. You will make a forcing bid at your next turn.

Q.4—Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠AKQ7 ♡8 ◇KJ4 ♣A10765
Partner opens the bidding with one heart. What do you respond?
A.—There are those who, with a good hand, respond in a four-card major rather than a five-card minor. In the immortal words of Sam Goldwyn: "Include us out!" We consider anything other than two clubs to be anathema.

Q.5—Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠AKQ7 ♡8 ◇KJ4 ♣A10765
The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
1 ♡	Pass	2 ♣	Pass
2 ♡	Pass	?

What do you bid now?
A.—Slam may be in the offing, but you don't yet know whether a fit exists, so there's no need to crowd the auction by jumping. Bid two spades. That's 100 percent forcing, and partner's next bid should clarify matters.

Q.6—Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠AKQ7 ♡8 ◇KJ4 ♣A10765
The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
1 ♡	Pass	2 ♣	Pass
2 ♡	Pass	2 ♠	Pass
3 NT	Pass	?

What action do you take?
A.—Although partner is showing a good, balanced hand, bear in mind that he did not open one no trump or jump in hearts, so his strength is limited. You should still be interested in slam, but you need fillers in clubs as a source of tricks. All you can do for the moment is invite by raising to four no trump. The final decision is up to partner.

Actor's break not so lucky

B.J. Cleveland, appearing in the Casa Manana production of "Gypsy," came out to make a curtain call, fell and broke his leg.

Of course, the saying "break a leg" does not actually mean that actors are wishing each other misfortune, a Fort Worth Star-Telegram columnist pointed out.

The vertical poles of a stage curtain are called "legs." So, actors hope they'll get so many curtain calls one of the stage curtain legs will break.

Jackson

Wampold filed a class-action suit that alleges Jackson was not sick, as he said he was, when he canceled three concerts in Tacoma, and that he therefore committed a breach of contract with 72,000 fans.

A telephone call seeking comment from Jackson's publicist Lee Solters in Los Angeles Sunday was not immediately returned.

The suit also names Ticketmaster Corp., which withheld service fees from refunds on tickets sold to the canceled October and November 1988 concerts.

Wampold had no luck trying to reach Jackson's attorney in Los Angeles by telephone. So he decided to have a process server go to Jackson's residence.

But process server Mark Hamilton was turned away repeatedly by guards at Jackson's Encino and Malibu homes. At Encino, Hamilton was first told Jackson didn't live there, and then was told he was out of town and wouldn't be back for several weeks.

Wampold finally asked King County judge Marsha Pechman for an order allowing him to give Jackson legal notice of the case by first-class and certified mail. The judge granted the request.

Wampold figures guards may turn away process servers, but nothing stops the U.S. Postal Service.

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — The country music group Shenandoah is a sentimental bunch. The musicians were reduced to tears and had to pull their tour bus over early one morning while listening to their song "Daddy's Little Man."

The tune, on their current album "Extra Mile," is about the joys and duties of fatherhood. It was written by drummer Mike McGuire — the band's only childless member.

"I'll tell you how effective that song is," group guitarist Jimmy Seales said in a recent interview. "One night on the way home from a long run, about 4:30 in the morning, Mike played us that, just a tape of him with acoustic guitar singing that song and we all started crying — had to pull over and call home."

The five-member group, based in Muscle Shoals, Ala., has had No. 1 country records such as "Two Dozen Roses," "Sunday in the South" and "Church on Cumberland Road."

• • •

Gabor

The complaint against Deputy District Attorney Elden Fox was under investigation by the State Bar, said spokeswoman Susan Scott Friday in San Francisco. Miss Gabor's complaint was sent to the bar in May.

Fox said the bar sent him a letter about the probe a month ago. He dismissed the complaint as "baseless" and "sort of funny."

Miss Gabor's complaint cited a March 31 story in the Daily News of Los Angeles. It reported that Fox said he talked to Municipal Judge Charles Rubin concerning the community service portion of Miss Gabor's October sentence for slapping Officer Paul Kramer on June 14, 1989.

Miss Gabor had been sentenced to 120 hours of service at a women's shelter as well as a short jail stay.

Miss Gabor also complained to the Committee on Judicial Performance that the judge was biased and wanted publicity. Rubin said he hasn't been notified of any investigation.

Queen Elizabeth's youngest son was at Wimbledon Stadium Saturday night to see his dog, Druids Johno, the 4-7 favorite, beaten by 8-1 shot Slippy Blue.

Edward, 26, said he would donate his share of the $13,800 second-place winnings to a fund for injured victims of an Irish Republican Army bombing of the military music school. Ten people died in the 1989 attack.

Leaden Lendl seeks 1st title

John McEnroe, Jimmy Connors and Boris Becker, Wimbledon winners all, were among many who scoffed at the notion that the 30-year-old Lendl could remake his carefully crafted game so late in his career.

Now, on the eve of Monday's opening matches of this most cherished of tennis championships, they're not so sure he hasn't succeeded.

McEnroe once described Lendl's form as "programmed" and "robotic," fine for the hard courts of the U.S. and Australian Opens or the clay courts of the French, but unsuited to the odd bounces and artistic demands of grass courts.

Connors declared recently that the top-seeded Lendl, winner of eight Grand Slam events but never a Wimbledon title, simply didn't have the serve-and-volley style that comes so naturally to boomers like Becker.

"Grass-court tennis is a game of aggression and risk taking, but of a calculated nature," says Mark Cox, Britain's former top player and an expert on the surface.

Rallies often last only two or three shots, he points out, putting a premium on the serve, return of serve and volley. Lendl's big weapon, the baseline passing shot, is difficult because of the low, skidding bounces, and his ventures to the net in the past have been rare.

Beyond technique and strategy, grass-court tennis requires "a flexible, creative mind — the ability to salvage a point with something outrageous," Cox says. "This is what Lendl finds so difficult. He favors the predictable and is secure with the obvious. How well he can wrench that spark of innovation from his careful and precise character will determine his success."

Arthur Ashe pulled one of the great switches in tennis history when he forsook power for soft-touch shots to beat a slugging Connors in the 1975 Wimbledon finals. But that was only one match, not a whole tournament.

Tennis players, like boxers, don't often fare well when they change styles in big matches. In the crunch they tend to revert to old habits.

Bjorn Borg, a ground-stroker supreme, won five Wimbledon titles from 1976 through 1980. But he was the rare exception to the rule of serve-and-volleyers dominating through most of Wimbledon's 113-year history.

Lendl, running out of time to capture the one championship that has eluded him, dedicated himself this year to proving he could win at Wimbledon. The quest has been called an obsession, though the Czechoslovakian native dismisses that term and says he merely wants to give himself his best shot of winning here.

"I'd hate to look back, years from now, and think there was something I could have done differently to win at Wimbledon," Lendl says. "If I don't win, OK, but at least I made the sacrifices to prepare for it. I'm doing everything I can do."

Lendl, a Wimbledon semifinalist the past two years and runner-up in 1986 and 1987, solidified his No. 1 ranking by winning his second straight Australian Open in January. He then spent much of the next five months honing his grass-court game with coach Tony Roche.

From Roche's home in Australia to Lendl's estate in Connecticut to private clubs in England, Roche and Lendl worked on the nuances and power requirements of grass-court play. Lendl also adjusted to the demands of fatherhood after his wife Samantha gave birth to their first child three months ago.

In selecting Roche, a 1988 Wimbledon finalist, to retool his game, Lendl concluded that what Roch doesn't know about grass-court tennis probably isn't worth knowing.

Hundreds of hours of pumping iron, riding bicycles, running, and court exercises have turned Lendl into a tall, thin version of Arnold Schwarzenegger, with whom he shares some of the same chiseled facial features.

Lendl passed up the French Open, which he'd won three times, to work out with Roche on grass across the English Channel and play in a grass tournament in Beckenham. Lendl, who had seemed allergic to grass for so long, won the tournament and suddenly fell in love with the surface.

The love affair deepened the following week on the grass at Queen's Club in London when Lendl trampled an overweight and out-of-shape McEnroe, 6-2, 6-4, in the semifinals and stunned a perfectly fit Becker, 6-3, 6-2, in the finals.

So dominant was Lendl, so strong were his turf-scorching serves and volleys, that an interviewer afterward said to him, "Boris, is that the best you've played on grass?"

Lendl could take pride in that case of mistaken identity and comfort in the knowledge that he'd just beaten Becker for the first time on grass. Becker, the defending and three-time Wimbledon champion, had won their last five meetings since 1987 and all three of their matches at Wimbledon, including a five-setter in last year's semifinals.

"The one good thing is that he cannot play better than that," Becker said, searching for consolation in the loss last week. "He played like the perfect grass-court player ... I think I can play better."

Becker, seeded No. 2 behind Lendl at Wimbledon, also suggested hopefully that the victory might hurt Lendl by exploding the "myth" of his incompetency on grass and shifting the burden of Wimbledon favorite onto his shoulders.

"There will be a bit more pressure on his back now because everyone knows he can play on grass," said Becker, who once explained his grass-court dominance over Lendl in mental rather than technical terms.

McEnroe, seeded fourth at Wimbledon in his first Grand Slam event since his ejection from the Australian, was equally impressed by Lendl's adjustments to grass. Lendl had been paying particular attention to his serve and dealt out 11 aces to McEnroe.

"I've never seen him looking so solid and comfortable on grass," McEnroe said. "I got my butt kicked."

McEnroe looked chubbier in the thighs and slower after missing much of the past four months because of injury. Though not expected to be a serious contender for the title this year, the irascible three-time champion cannot be dismissed against anyone, even Lendl.

Nor can No. 3 Stefan Edberg.

Teenagers seek Wimbledon glory

WIMBLEDON, England (AP) — Can it happen here? Can the teenage takeover of women's tennis roll over the lawns of Wimbledon?

Most signs say no. The pace, the pressure, the presense of all of the world's top women's players, all dictate that here, at the tournament where things change slowly if at all, the tide will be stopped and order restored.

When Steffi Graf begins the defense of her championship this week against Claudia Porwik, she will be under relentless attack from players who make this just-turned-21-year-old seem ancient.

To them, the grass of the All England Club is just another surface, Centre Court just another place to play.

But, as 14-year-old Jennifer Capriati said when she became the youngest Grand Slam semifinalist at the French Open earlier this month: "Why not go for it?"

"I think it's a neat surface," the Florida sensation said after her first professional grass-court match, a 6-2, 7-5 victory over Ann Smith at the warmup tournament in Eastbourne last week.

Monica Seles thinks it's pretty neat, too. The 16-year-old Yugoslav has a two-match winning streak over Graf, in the finals of the German and French Opens. She feels her game of rock-hard two-fisted groundstrokes can be as successful on grass as on the clay of Berlin and Paris.

"Clay is my best surface," Seles said. "But maybe I can beat her on grass as well. We shall have to wait and see."

The wait should be interesting, and not so long. Capriati, the youngest seed in grand Slam history, should meet the top-ranked Graf in the fourth round. If the seedings hold, Graf would then meet Seles in the semifinals.

Other youngsters, such as 18-year-old Arantxa Sanchez-Vicario of Spain and Mary Joe Fernandez of the United States, and a true old-timer — 33-year-old Martina Navratilova — are primed for Wimbledon as well. Suddenly, the women's game has so many attractive matchups it's hard to believe that little more than a year ago it was being described as a one-player show.

"Women's tennis is a lot better now," Sanchez-Vicario said. "The younger players have become very tough. Things are changing and it is really good now. It's not just Chris and Martina at the top any more."

Navratilova and Chris Evert were the last great rivalry in the sport. Their series spanned 15 years and 80 matches, before Evert retired to home life and the television booth this year. She thinks Graf may remain at the top for a while, but that the West German's reign of dominance is over.

"Steffi had better grow accustomed to hearing the teen-age footsteps of Monica and Jennifer pounding in her ears," Evert said in a guest column for the Daily Express, a British tabloid. "Usually, there is only room for one special player in an era. But Monica and Jennifer and ... Arantxa are here now and they're here to stay. What's more, they can only imporve."

Graf has had a year on the court that, for anyone else, would be judged excellent. She won the Australian Open and reached the final of the French without losing a set. Graf has played in 13 consecutive Grand Slam finals and won nine of them, and only two of her last 74 matches have ended in defeat.

But both those losses were to Seles in big finals within the last two months. What's more, even when she was winning, Graf did not display the overpowering forehand that has made her No. 1 in the world since August 1987.

A broken right thumb suffered in a skiing accident kept Graf out of action for two months just after the Australian Open. More recently, the West German has been playing under a different kind of pain.

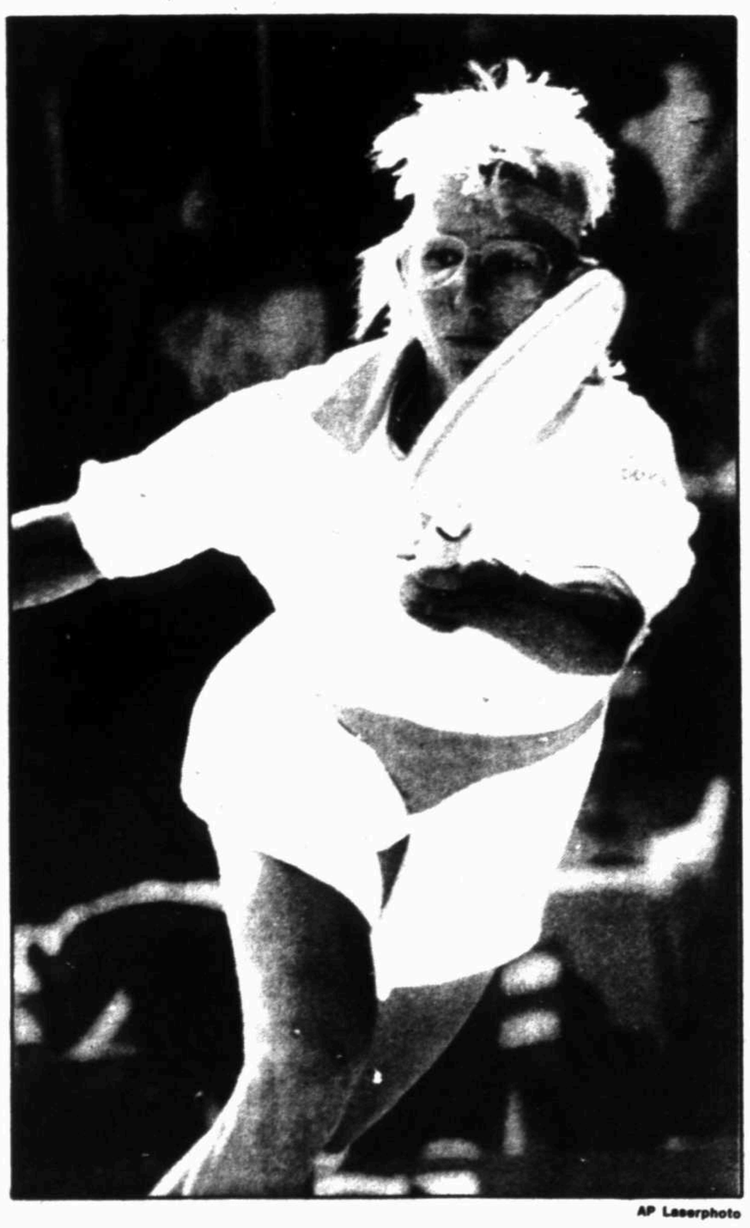

Peter Graf, her father and mentor, has been involved in a highly publicized paternity suit with a topless model. The top-ranked women's player has refused to talk about the case but said in Paris that there had been times in recent weeks when she wished she were someone else.

While the focus has been on Graf and Seles, and the growing challenge from Capriati, the forgotten player in all of this is the one with the most impressive credentials.

Navratilova has won eight Wimbledon singles titles and needs one more to break the record she shares with Helen Wills Moody. With a big serve and the best volley in women's tennis, Navratilova has won four tournaments this year, losing to Seles in the final of the Italian Open, and skipped the French Open for the second consecutive year to prepare for Wimbledon, her favorite tournament.

"I know my time is running out and I want to make sure I give it my best effort this year," Navratilova said. "I am happy so far. I am playing pain free and for someone my age, that's a bonus."

Navratilova and Graf have met in the final here for the last three years, with Navratilova winning in 1987 and Graf taking the last two. With a lucky draw — only Gabriela Sabatini, the struggling fourth seed, appears to stand between her and a ninth consecutive championship match — Navratilova is confident she can end the West German's streak.

Martina Navratilova is old enough to be the mother of some of the top teens on the women's tour, but the adopted Texan is still expected to be a force at Wimbledon after an easy win in Eastbourne this weekend.

Oil rebounds

NEW YORK (AP) — Oil prices rose across the board Friday, boosted by technical factors.

The contract for August delivery of West Texas Intermediate jumped 52 cents to settle at $17.46 a 42-gallon barrel on the New York Mercantile Exchange. The contract rose 19 cents on Thursday, but crude prices had fallen sharply earlier this week.

Other contract months also gained ground.

Analysts attributed the advance to technical factors. "It was mostly short covering," said James Steel, an analyst at Refco Inc.

Once the crude contract pushed above the $17.30-a-barrel barrier, the market "just jerked" higher, he said.

Steel also said there was some interest in a rather positive statement from Indonesian oil minister Subroto, who said members of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries had trimmed back their production.

Chronic overproduction by OPEC members has been depressing oil prices for some time.

Dow falls 44.55

NEW YORK — Stocks tumbled late Friday as program traders moved in heavily toward the end of the day selling stocks along a broad front.

By the close, the Dow Jones industrial average had plunged 44.55 points, to 2,857.18.

Despite three days of advancing prices after Monday's 53.71-point drop, Friday's loss brought the cumulative decline for the week to 78.71 points.

In expectation of further declines, speculators have been selling short, that is, selling stock they do not yet own in the hope of buying it later for less money.

For most of the day the Dow moved narrowly, staying close to the opening level of 2,901.73, climbing just before 3 p.m. to around 2,921, its highect point of the session.

Gold drops

NEW YORK (AP) — The dollar was mixed against most major currencies Friday, with most activi ty centered on the sale of Canadian dollars as the deadline approached for Canada to approve controversial constitutional accord.

Gold declined domestically and overseas.

The U.S. dollar gained against the Canadian dollar in New York trading as the midnight Saturday deadline approached for approval of the Meech Lake accord. The agreement, which would recognize French-speaking Quebec as a "distinct society," will expire if not approved by all 10 provinces by the deadline.

There has been speculation that Quebec will try to separate from Canada if the accord is not approved.

The approaching deadline has caused money to leave Canada, pushing the currency down against the dollar, said Robert Hatcher, a corporate dealer in Barclays Bank PLC's foreign exchange department in New York.

Du Pont has announced that it would design four plants to produce refrigeration chemicals that do not endanger the earth's ozone layer, but said it was continuing to delay a commitment to produce another family of compounds that would have a different use.

Th company said on Friday that the decision to build the plants put it among the leaders in the production of environmentally friendly refrigerants.

"These commercial facilities would be among the first to produce world-scale quantities of non-ozone depleting alternatives," said Joseph P. Glas, director of the Freon Products division of E.I. du Pont de Nemours & Co.

Both groups of chemicals are intended to replace the most widely used refrigerants, known as chlorofluorocarbons, or CFC's.

The chlorine in CFC's that escapes to the atmosphere has been identified by scientists as the principal agent responsible for the thinning of the ozone layer.

Because the ozone shields the earth from harmful solar rays that can cause skin cancer and disrupt the food chain, most industrial nations have agreed to phase out the use of the CFC's by 2000.

More than 2 billion pounds of the chemicals are used annually worldwide, a third of them in the United States.

They are also used in insulation and as cleaning agents in electronics.

The company said the new plants would produce four types of hydrofluorocarbons, or HFC's, for use in automotive air-conditioners, home refrigerators and commercial refrigeration equipment.

The new compounds contain no chlorine and are therefore not expected to be any threat to the ozone.

When they become operational, between 1992 and 1995, the plants will have the capacity to produce 140 million

Pickens bets on Amarillo

By John A. Bolt

DALLAS (AP) — An Amarillo school could receive $200,000 in gifts if an offer by former resident — and city critic — T. Boone Pickens is accepted.

Pickens, who left the Panhandle city this year for Dallas, has offered to contribute $100,000 to Carver Elementary Academy Magnet School if the gift is matched by former Amarillo mayor Jerry Hodge.

Hodge has accepted "conditionally" while demanding that Pickens also respond to an earlier wager.

The offer is the latest skirmish in the wake of a letter Pickens wrote to a high school friend that was highly critical of the city and found its way into the public eye.

The squabble began last month when Hodge challenged Pickens to a $100,000 bet that Amarillo would have at least 100,000 population in 2000. In his letter, Pickens had predicted the city of 162,000 people would have less than 100,000 residents in 10 years.

Last week, Pickens responded with a letter of his own — one that also became public — telling Hodge he "would never bet against Amarillo." Instead, he said he would donate $100,000 to Carver if Hodge would match it.

"Carver Elementary Academy is a great success story that all of Amarillo shares," Pickens said. "We can make no better investment in the future of Amarillo than an investment in its children and education."

Pickens has befriended the one-year-old school in the past, contributing money for computers and enlisting the support of comedian Bill Cosby to raise more money. Pickens' Mesa Limited Partnership contributed $427,000, or half of the school's operating budget for its first two years.

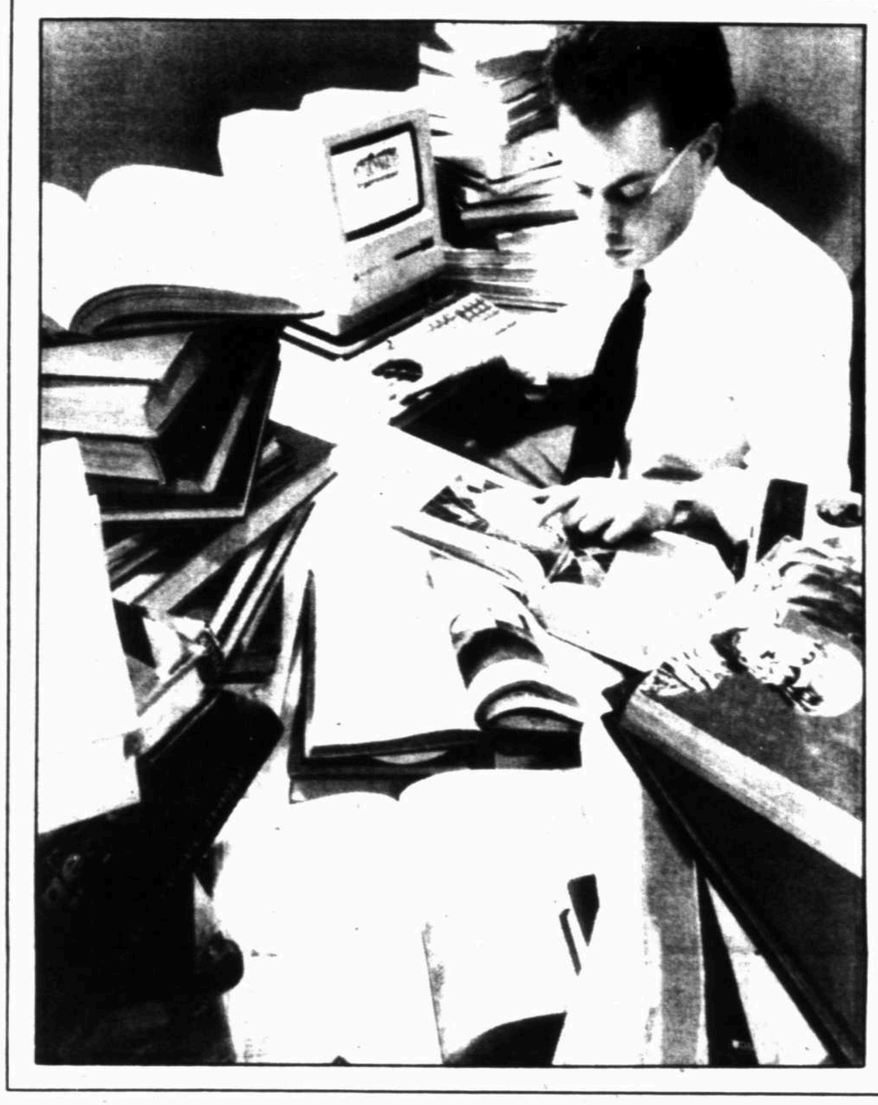

In a news release Wednesday, Hodge said, "I ... have sent my response to (Pickens') Dallas office. ... My response will not be released publicly until Mr. Pickens has had sufficient time to review it personally."

Pickens is traveling in Japan drumming up support for his battle with Koito Manufacturing Co. Ltd., but his office issued a release Wednesday quoting him as saying: "I assume (Hodge) has decided to personally match my most recent contribution to Amarillo's long-term growth.

"It will be a great disappointment to the Amarillo school district and Amarillo residents to discover that Jerry has attached any conditions which would deprive the school district of this much-needed money."

Students and business professionals can now utilize computer technology to increase proficiency in almost any saubject with a new program called Studymate. The new interactive computer program created by Compu-Tech Educational Software of New Haven, Conn. The program, which hopes to gain a share of the $132 million educational software market in the U.S., allows teens and adults to use their own course material to create tests in a variety of formats including multiple choice, true/false and fill-in-blanks. It is available for IBM, compatibles, Apple and Macintosh.

Perrier in uphill market fight

■ Perrier is making a run at regaining market share it lost as the result of a benzene recall earlier this year.

Associated Press

NEW YORK — Perrier is back. But whether the French bottled water will recapture its once sparkling position in the U.S. market isn't clear.

Hotels and restaurants, the staple of Perrier's sales, stopped carrying the water when benzene contamination forced the company to recall it worldwide on Feb. 9. Many haven't taken it back.

"None of our customers want it. I think the recall really frightened people," said Mark Schachern, manager of the Washington Square Bar and Grill in San Francisco.

Some distributors and industry officials say Perrier has received a tepid reception from hotels and restaurants since it was reintroduced in the United States in late April. The return included a $25 million advertising campaign and such publicity events as a give-away of cases of the familiar pear-shaped bottles in New York's Central Park and Rockefeller Center.

"There's still a certain amount of reluctance on the part of many hotels and restaurants," said Hellen Berry of Beverage Marketing Corp., an industry trade group. "Many customers are happy with what's been substituted."

Perrier Group of America Inc., based in Greenwich, Conn., said it had no concrete sales figures for the year. But company spokeswoman Jane Lazgin said, "We are right on target for where we should be at this time."

Lazgin admitted that the response from restaurants since the reintroduction hasn't been what the company hoped it would be.

"We are working hard to regain our accounts. But it won't be a quick fix. We have a lot of work to do," she said.

Experts say Perrier probably has done better at recapturing lost shelf space in supermarkets because it was able to offer its other brands — Poland Spring, Calistoga and Arrowhead — as alternatives.

The Pepsi-Cola Buffalo Bottling Corp. in Buffalo, N.Y., a Perrier distributor, is sending its salespeople to supermarkets it once served in the Buffalo area to help boost customer confidence.

"We feel we owe it to them to meet face to face and explain that it's O.K. to take Perrier back," said manager Scott Pastor.

Pastor said his Perrier customers now number less than the 800 restaurants and supermarkets he had before the recall, but he declined to be specific or release recent sales figures.

Source Perrier SA recalled its water from worldwide distribution after tests showed traces of naturally occurring benzene, a cancer-causing chemical, in its product in several countries. The contamination stemmed from improper filtration of the water, the company said.

Will you please explain pipelining to me?

Dennis Sever

Sever

I have been told that the Intel 80486 microprocessor is far more powerful than the 80386. I was also told that there are several reasons for this and that 'pipelining' capability of the 80486 was one of the reasons. Can you explain 'pipelining', and what some of the other improvements are.

There are several reasons why the '486 chip outperforms the '386 chip. In addition to the pipeline logic the main reasons I feel are the onboard math coprocessor and the onboard cache memory and cache controller. The math coprocessor circuitry on the 80486 chip emulates the 80387. This means that every 80486 sold has a Five Hundred Dollar Plus math coprocessor already installed. If you use a CAD (Computer Aided Drafting) program or you work with large spreadsheets this fact will excite you. As the popularity of the 486 grows I'm sure we will see a proliferation of software requiring the math coprocessor. In addition to the onboard math coprocessor, the 486 contains an onboard eight kilobyte memory cache. The purpose of a memory cache is to allow the processor to work with out having to wait on data retrieval or data updates to memory (wait states). Cache memory is very fast memory that the cache controller keeps updated with data that it expects the processor to want next.

Since regular memory is considerably slower than the processor in most environments, the cache improves processor throughput significantly using fairly simple rules for determining when to bring values into the cache and when to write them to regular memory. The pipelining feature of the 486 is something that before was found only in mainframe type computers. What the pipeline does is allow the processor to begin execution of the next instruction prior to the completion of the previous instruction. Most processor instructions require multiple (even several) separate steps to complete. Each of these steps require their own logic and at least one clock cycle to complete. For instance the first step in an instruction is probably the instruction fetch, where the instruction to be executed is brought from memory into the processor. The second step would be the instruction decode, where the instruction is analyzed for data and process requirements. Pipelining logic allows for the instruction fetch step to be executing for one instruction while the instruction decode step is executing for the previous instruction. This is an expensive feature to implement and it is one of the reasons I have trouble considering the 80486 based computers to be microcomputers. However, I must say that an 80386 system with an 80387 math coprocessor and an 82385 cache controller and cache memory will cost as much if ,not more than an 80486 system.

I have need for a large disk drive (in the neighborhood of 600 Megabytes) for a single database application. I have recommendations for an optical drive, a CD-ROM drive, and an SCSI drive. Price is not such a concern as is reliability and speed. What do you suggest?

Optical drives and CD-ROMs are improving in speed as the technology is refined, however when compared to SCSI drives both the Optical and the CD-ROM drives will be poor contenders. The Optical Drives are slightly faster than the CD-ROM drives on average and it is a toss up on reliability there. I would suggest to you that if you are dealing with that large a file the logic that you use in access, that is the indexing and retrieval schemes in your programs, are going to prove to be problem areas unless you develop those schemes especially for that large a database. If you use adequate power protection, carefully back-up on a regular, timely schedule and pre-

Carbon black keeps publishing in black

Long an industry stained by ink on the hands and clothes of irritated readers, the newspaper business can at last switch to rub-off resistant ink, of which carbon black, developed in part at Cabot's Pampa R&D plant, is a major component.

The low-rub ink comes after years of complaints from readers wanting to digest the news without getting it all over themselves.

The black, powdery, soot-like carbon black forms from the incomplete combustion of hydrocarbons, and, in modern processes like the one used by Cabot, is made mostly from heavy oils. Carbon black gives newspaper ink its black color.

When the particle has a smaller or "lower" structure it blends better with other raw materials in ink and reduces the amount of carbon black on the surface of ink on the printed page, said David J. Kaul, research section manager at the Pampa R&D facility.

"It's the way the carbon black mixes with the rest of the raw materials in the ink that we're trying to work with here, to keep the carbon black from being near the surface to be rubbed off," Kaul said.

Other ingredients in low-rub ink also had to be altered to get the right mixture, Cabot officials said.

The first carbon black batches produced as samples for low-rub ink were made at the Pampa R&D center after initial work in Cabot's Boston laboratory began five years ago, said Lynn C. Whitney, director of special blacks business development for Cabot.

The product is part of the company's move in recent years to boost its production of specialty chemicals and invest in associated energy and processing companies, according to the company's 1989 annual report.

Last year, Cabot sold its natural gas processing operation in West Texas and the Panhandle to The Maple Gas Corp. of Denver for $53 million in cash and securities, giving Cabot the option of obtaining 40 percent ownership in Maple.

The company also merged its natural gas transmission business with American Oil and Gas Corp. of Houston for $35 million in cash and securities, worth 49 percent ownership of American Oil and Gas stock.

It consolidated oil and gas assets under subsidiary Cabot Oil & Gas Corp.. and offered 18 percent of the subsidiary's shares to the public, and continued to boost Cabot LNG Corp., which ships liquefied natural gas from Algeria to markets in New England.

The moves place the affected operations in what Cabot calls a more "entrepreneurial environment" that gives each segment access to more investment capital outside Cabot.

The Pampa R&D facility makes the prototypes and develops the production process for all new kinds of carbon black made at Cabot's plants around the world.

Waltham, Mass.-based Cabot is the largest carbon black producer in the world, with about one-third of the world's market share. Cabot has production plants in 19 countries, including the United States and Canada.

Cabot operates a production plant in Pampa that employs about 140, said plant manager Ron Hurst. About 50 work at the smaller production facility and lab at the R&D center.

The research and development plant is working constantly with other Cabot customers to improve the quality of carbon blacks, Kaul said.

The Pampa research plant, part of the technology division of Cabot's carbon black production segment, can produce as much as 50,000 pounds of carbon black a week.

Carbon black is sold by the pound in most cases and can cost from 20 cents to $2 a pound, depending on the kind of carbon black is produced, its application and the cost of production, Kaul said.

The Pampa production plant can produce from 30 million to 60 million pounds of carbon black annually.

Carbon black also is used in paints and plastic coatings on electrical cables. Larger carbon black particles are used as a strengthening agent for rubber in tires, motor mounts, auto belts and hoses and in other industrial rubber goods.

The substance makes the difference between a tire having what is considered a normal road life and a tire lasting for about 3,000 miles without carbon black in the tread, Cabot officials said.

Philip Morris gains European market

By Anthony Ramirez
N.Y. Times News Service

NEW YORK — Philip Morris Companies Inc., the world's largest consumer-products company, announced plans Friday to become the world's second largest coffee manufacturer and marketer by buying most of a Swiss coffee-and-candy giant for $3.8 billion.

Philip Morris agreed to buy the European operations of Jacobs Suchard AG of Zurich, which makes the expensive triangular chocolate stick called Toblerone and is a leading coffee seller in France and West Germany.

Philip Morris, based in New York, already owns Maxwell House, the second-best selling coffee in the United States after Procter & Gamble Co.'s Folgers.

The 60 percent share of Suchard about to trade hands is owned by Klaus J. Jacobs, who thought of himself as a David taking on the Goliaths of the food business, Mars and Nestle.

By agreeing to sell his stake and thereby dismantling his conglomerate, Jacobs appears to be abandoning the challenge.

Philip Morris stock closed at $46 Friday, up $1.625, and was the third-most active issue on the New York Stock Exchange.

"Investors love the deal because it isn't a mega-acqusition that dilutes Philip Morris's shares and puts it deep into debt," said Rebecca B. Barfield, an analyst with First Boston.

Ms. Barfield estimated that the dilution of shares, the reduction in value for current shareholders, would be perhaps two cents a share or less this year.

Lawrence Adelman, an analyst with Dean Witter Reynolds, said Philip Morris was acquiring the Suchard businesses for a "very attractive price."

He noted that Philip Morris was spending less than a dollar for each dollar of Suchard revenue.

Interim financing will come from Philip Morris credit lines and Swiss banks, Philip Morris said.

Financial advisers to Philip Morris on the transaction were Rothschild & Cie., France and Rothschild Bank AG, Switzerland.

"Once you can run a truck from France to Italy," Adelman said, "baby, watch out. You're going to see some very favorable improvements in profit margins."

The Suchard deal would move Philip Morris' business further out of cigarettes, still its main source of profits led by Marlboro, the best-selling cigarette in the world.

It would also add $3.9 billion in revenue to the $44.8 billion Philip Morris posted in 1989.

The deal also fits Philip Morris's strategy of trying to build global products by using brands, technology and marketing across foreign borders.

So far, the company's major world brand is Marlboro, and to a lesser extent, Philadelphia cream cheese, which is sold in 40 countries, and Tang powdered soft drink, which is sold in 70 countries.

Michael A. Miles, Philip Morris' vice chairman, was good humored and clearly exultant about the transaction.

"Oh, this deal makes us twice as big a company in Europe as we used to be," said Miles, who is also head of the huge Kraft General Foods subsidiary based in Chicago.

"Other than that, we didn't do so hot."

In 1989, Kraft General Foods had European revenue of about $3 billion.

But the deal does not include several large businesses, like E.J. Brach Inc., the leading maker in the United States of sugar confectionaries, such as jelly beans.

Jacobs will retain these businesses, which have revenue of about $800 million.

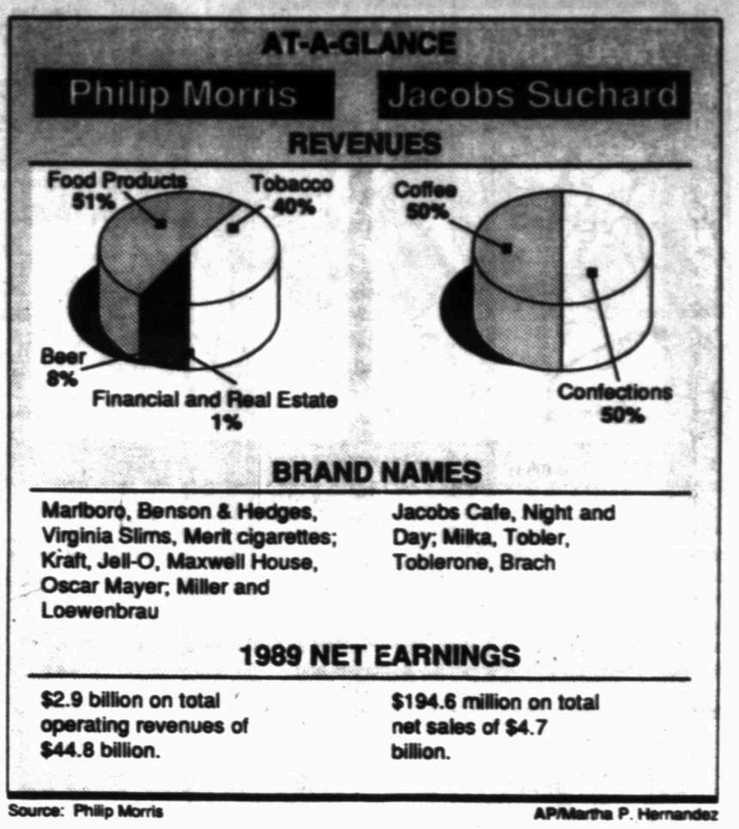

The parent company's troubled reorganization of Brach helped lead to a 10 percent decline last year in opfrancs, or about $190 million at current exchange rates.

In the 1989 Jacobs Suchard annual report, Jacobs bluntly called the effort, with its frequent change in Brach management, a $50 million "failure."

According to S.G. Warburg & Co., an investment house, Jacobs Suchard's 1989 revenue was sliced into about $1.9 billion in coffee sales; $1.9 billion in chocolate; $521.3 million in a cocoa trading company, and $388.7 million in sugar confectioneries, mainly the Brach candy business in the United States.

Suchard's major coffee brands are Jacobs Cafe, and Night and Day decaffeinated coffee. Candy brand names include Tobler, Toblerone, Brach, Sugus and Nabob.

In France, for example, Philip Morris will be able to add its 2 percent coffee-market share to Suchard's 38 percent.

Small firms cash in on trade shows

N.Y. Times News Service

ATLANTA — Some days when he's working the floor at trade shows, hawking the huge, party-colored storage racks which his company makes, Leigh S. Bissell harks back to one he worked in the autumn of 1987.

He made his biggest show-related sale then: a $500,000 order for his company, Base Manufacturing. A sale like that is a remarkable chunk of business for a company whose annual sales run about $6 million.

"That's the story I tell my boss when he wants to know why we go to shows," he told a visitor to the company's booth at a recent trade show in Atlanta. "A single sale like that will convince you to go to trade shows for the rest of your life."

It's also the kind of story that has brought more and more small businesses to trade shows in recent years. There are many benefits to the shows, but the main reason is to boost sales.

"For the average small-business person, the budget for marketing and advertising is pretty limited," said Marilyn Johnson, a spokeswoman for the DeKalb (Ga.) Chamber of Commerce and the organizer of its small-business trade fair, which took place last week. "Trade shows allow that small-business person to make a wide range of contacts, relatively cheaply and in one given period."

"The person who is coming to a trade show today is not a tire kicker," said John B. Nofsinger, the marketing chief for the Charlotte-based Material Handling Institute Inc. It is the trade association that put on Logistex 90, the show that filled the Georgia Congress Center's caverns with Bissell, half of his sales force, and the goods and aspirations of 125 other manufacturers.

The presence of decision makers is a major draw for exhibitors.

"These are the hardest people to reach if I come (to their home offices) as a peddler," said sales manager Jim Wampler of Basiloid Products Corp. He traveled to the Atlanta show from the home office in Elnora, Ind., to sell the forklift attachments his company makes.

"Here, I have the possibility of being one-on-one with the president or another significant officer," Wampler said. "What do you think my chances would be if I went to somebody's office, knocked on the door and said, 'I have something I want to show you.' "

Relatively inexpensive sales contacts. Wolverine Software Corp., an Annandale, Va., company which bought a larger than average sized booth at Logistex, has one sales person. "It would take perhaps six to make the same contacts as we will make here," said marketing director Daniel T. Brunner. According to the Trade Show Bureau, a research organization sponsored by the trade show industry, companies spend an average of $334 to close deals with customers from trade shows. Without the trade-show entree, the average cost to close a deal is a $1,158.

INVESTORS' GUIDE

Brokers don't always rush checks to client

By Bill Doyle

Q. When my broker owes me money, he mails the check on the remittance date and, of course, I receive it later. But when I owe him money, he expects to have it in his little hot hand on the due date.

It does me no good to point out to him that he could put the due date on a check for money he owes me and mail it earlier. He says, if I want money owed me on the due date, I can pick up the check at his office. To which I reply, "O.K. And when I owe you money, you can pick it up at my house." You can imagine his reaction.

Your comments, please?

A. That arrangement is terrible. However, bad as it is, it is far from unusual. Your lament is all too familiar. Letters similar to yours have been coming in during all the years I have been pounding out his column.

Doyle

The hard fact is that most brokerage firms hang on to customers' money as long as possible. But brokerages aren't alone in this. The same thing can be said about some banks, mutual funds, insurance companies and other outfits.

Think it through and you will realize why. The longer a brokerage can put off mailing a check — consequently delaying the cashing and clearing of that check — the longer the brokerage has the use of the money involved. That money can earn interest until the check clears. An efficiently run "back office," where such things are handled, can be a brokerage profit center.

When checks to which you are entitled are mailed on what you call the "remittance date" and "due date," you really have no kick coming. All too many brokerages fail to send checks when due and customers have to hound brokers for money.

Q. Exactly when am I supposed to pay my broker for stock I buy? More important, when is he supposed to pay me for stock I sell?

A. Assuming it's a "regular way" transaction, as is usually the case, you are required to pay for stock you purchased five business days after the "trade date" on which the transaction took place. When you sell stock, regular way, your broker is required to credit the proceeds from the sale to your brokerage account on that fifth business day after the sale.

Q. My broker insists I deliver to him certificates for stock I sell by the "settlement date" — the fifth day after I sell. When I buy stock, however, I receive the certificate two to three weeks later — at the earliest. I have waited months for some certificates. Why should I have to wait so long to become the owner of stock I buy?

A. You don't. You become the owner of a stock the very minute your brokerage firm executes your purchase order — either on a stock exchange or in the over-the-counter market.

The confirmation statement you receive from your broker is proof you bought the stock. A confirmation statement normally is mailed to you the day you buy or sell stock — the next day at the latest.

A stock certificate reaches you much later because of the details involved. The person who sold the stock you bought delivers a certificate to his or her broker. That broker sends it to your broker, who ships it to the stock's transfer agent. There, the old certificate is cancelled; a new one is issued in your name and sent to you.

Here, we are assuming the seller had possession of a certificate. Many investors have stocks in "street name" — registered in brokerage firms' names, with ownership recorded on computers and no certificates issued.

The seller's broker is required to deliver the stock — either in certificate form or as a computerized transfer — to the buyer's broker on the fifth business day following the transaction.

In the best of all worlds, a certificate should be delivered to you, the buyer, shortly after that. But there can be delaying foul-ups, such as the seller not making "good delivery" of the old certificate in transferable form and/or sloppy work at one or both of the brokerage firms involved.

PLANT: To make safer refrigerant compounds of refrigerants annually, which the company said "could supply most worldwide refrigeration needs through the end of the century."

The plants will be in Corpus Christi, Tex.; Louisville, Ky; Dordrecht, the Netherlands, and Chiba, Japan.

Du Pont said it was holding back on plans to expand production of a third group of chemicals, known as hydrochlorofluorocarbons, pending passage of the revised Clean Air Act.

HCFC's, as they are known, have been scheduled to replace CFC's in the about 75 percent of applications where HFC's are not suitable.

Among the CFC applications where HFC's will not work are as refrigerants in large industrial chilling equipment and in the production of insulating foams, Du Pont officials said.

As a result, some environmental advocates have called for their use to be phased out soon after CFC's early in the next century.

Big producers like Du Pont have said the HCFC ban should not take effect until 2030, to allow it and makers of equipment using the chemicals to recoup their investments in equipment to make and use the compounds.

But an amendment to the Senate version of the Clean Air Act revision would ban their use by 2015.

Glas said large chilling units that cool office buildings and hospitals have an economic life of up to 40 years.

Anyone buying equipment designed for HCFC's could face a shortage of refrigerant long before the equipment was scheduled to be retired.

Chemical industry officials have argued that the use of HCFC's is necessary for a quick phase-out of CFC's.

And they have warned that if HCFC's are banned too soon, developing countries may continue to use the more dangerous CFC's until completely environmentally benign alternatives are found, to the detriment of the ozone layer.

PICKENS: Bets on Amarillo

(From 1D)

Hodge released his conditions today, saying Pickens must first accept his population bet. "You need to accept the challenge or apologize, one or the other; the choice is yours," the letter said.

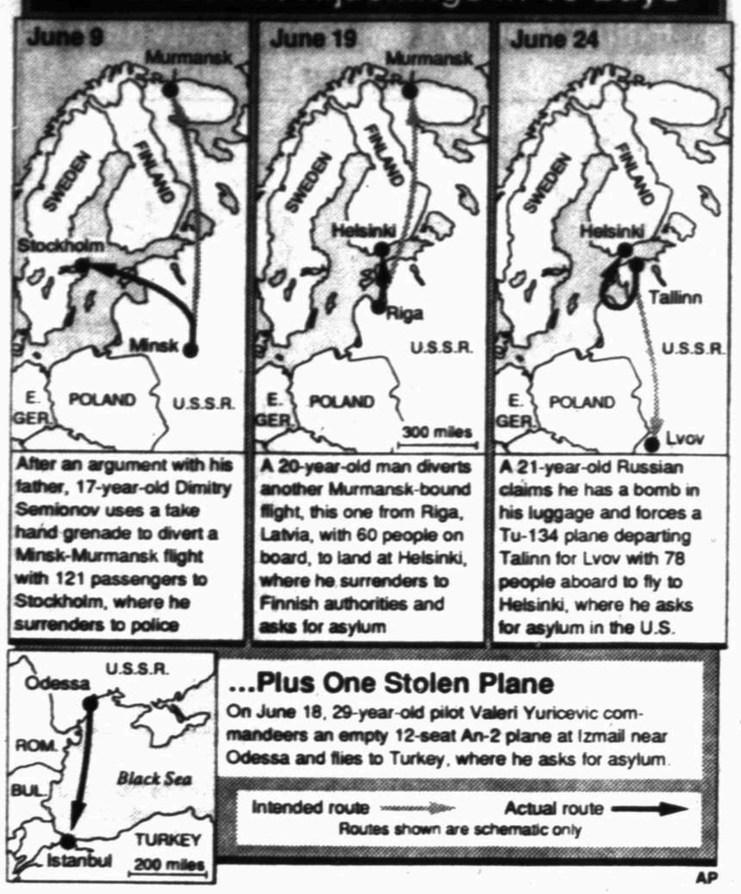

"When you have taken care of the first order of business I will accept the Carver academy challenge" if Pickens agrees to keep 350 Mesa employees and their families in Amarillo through June 30, 1995, he said.

In his letter to an Amarillo High School classmate, who had returned to the city, Pickens said: "I know that there are better places to live than Amarillo. ... Probably the biggest problem the town has is no leadership. The city has now moved basically to a blue-collar district."

Pickens, who had feuded with city government and the city's newspaper, never gave a clear reason for leaving Amarillo, where he grew up and founded Mesa.

Although Mesa headquarters were moved to Dallas, the energy company still employs about 400 people in the city, and has a $20 million payroll.

AP

HELSINKI, Finland (AP) — A young Soviet hijacker claiming to have a bomb in his briefcase forced a Soviet domestic airliner to land in Finland Sunday, then surrendered to police, airport officials said.

The 71 other passengers and six crew were released unharmed, and police found no explosives or arms aboard the airliner, said Erkki Lepola, head of air traffic controllers at Helsinki airport.

It was the second hijacking of a Soviet aircraft to Finland in less than a week, and the third to Scandinavia in two weeks. Finnish authorities said they were concerned and would raise the issue with Moscow.

The plane, a Tupolev 134, was on an internal flight from Tallinn, Estonia's capital, to Lvov in the Ukraine.

Police earlier said the hijacker had asked for political asylum in the United States.

A Soviet civil aviation official in Moscow identified the hijacker as M. Varfolomeyev. Finnish authorities refused to confirm his identity because of his asylum request. Soviet authorities have asked for his extradition.

Witnesses said Varfolomeyev took control of the plane five minutes after takeoff from Tallinn, and demanded that the crew divert the flight to Stockholm, Sweden.

"About five minutes after takeoff he went to the toilet with his briefcase, then to an air hostess, so I thought he was sick," said Vladimir Vager, a passenger who sat next to the hijacker.

"When he came back to his seat he said to us, 'All of you remain seated and obey me,' and he said he had a bomb in his briefcase," Vager told The Associated Press. He said everyone on the plane remained calm.

After conferring with the rest of the crew, the copilot told the hijacker the plane did not have enough fuel to reach Stockholm. Varfolomeyev agreed to fly to Helsinki, where the plane landed Sunday morning.

"When we had landed police came on board with an interpreter and took the hijacker off the plane," said Vager.

The briefcase and hand luggage were put on the runway and examined with the help of dogs, while the plane was searched for explosives. None was found.

Finland, which has traditionally close ties with the Soviet Union, has granted asylum to a Soviet citizen only once before since World War II, in 1973. Officials refuse to discuss that case.

Tens of thousands cross Romanian-Soviet border

ALBITA, Romania (AP) — About 10,000 Romanians, many waving flags and chanting "Unite, Unite with the Country," poured across a bridge into Soviet Moldavia to mark the 50th anniversary of Moscow's annexation of the republic.

Smaller groups from Kishinev, the capital of Soviet Moldavia, and other areas crossed into Romania to visit relatives.

Romanian and Soviet border patrols watched the exuberant Romanians, who crossed without passports or visas. No incidents were reported before the crowds returned home.

'This celebration does not do any good for the USSR, but it does to us because we want to live with our families from the other side in democracy.'

— Elena Matarkova, 24-year old Moldavian

"You cannot stop these people. They have the same blood in their veins," said a Soviet border official. He was pushed aside by hundreds of Romanians who stormed passed a red line marking the border in the middle of the bridge.

"This celebration does not do any good for the USSR, but it does to us because we want to live with our families from the other side in democracy," said 24-year old Elena Matarkova.

The Popular Front of Moldavia and other official and independent cultural organizations have been growing on both sides of the frontier.

On May 6, tens of thousands of Romanians streamed across eight bridges on the Prut River into Soviet Moldavia for their first visit to the republic in more than half a century.

Last year, Moldavia restored their language's Latin script, which is virtually identical with the Romanian script. The Soviet Union had imposed the use of the Russian Cyrillic alphabet in Soviet Moldavia.

Saturday, Moldavia's Parliament followed the Baltic states and Russia in approving a declaration of sovereignty, declaring that its laws supersede those of the Soviet Union.

They reach 1,800° and cause third degree burns.
