During this seemingly short one and a half month, a shrimp will triple its weight, according to Department biologists. Since most of the shrimp are of a uniform age and size, the size of the individuals at harvest can be regulated by adjustments in the shrimping season.

Fulton Man Drowns Tuesday

Cecil Hopwood, 66, of Fulton drowned at 11:30 a.m. Tuesday in Copano Bay when his small aluminum fishing boat foundered not far offshore.

Aransas County Sheriff J. E. Hunt said Justice of the Peace H. W. Hampton ruled death by accidental drowning.

Hunt said Hopwood and his son-in-law, Leroy Loflin, also of Fulton, launched the boat at approximately 11 a.m. to go fishing. About 30 minutes later Loflin said Hopwood made a sharp turn which started a leak in the hull.

The two men went over the side and attempted to keep the boat and themselves afloat by hanging on to one end of the boat, keeping the leaking end out of the water.

Hopwood was apparently unable to hang on and drowned about 11:30 a.m. Loflin managed to secure Hopwood's body to the boat with a rope.

Hunt said the family had expected the men home early and went down to the launching return by 6 p.m. Loflin's son spotted his father just offshore and summoned help.

Loflin was reported suffering from minor exposure after eight hours in the water.

Cage-Marshall Funeral Home is in charge of funeral arrangements which will be announced later.

A local theme was encouraged. The winning poetry is entitled "Summer Haiku." It consists of a set of nine 3-line stanzas such as:

"The wind off the bay
Tugs at slacks and shirt, tugging

At memories, too.
Sand rose, sea oats stirred:
Mother's ruffled feathers keep
Warm her new grey brood.
The bluff overlooks
An oyster reef—would that we
Like they could have shells."

HEY! MAN! THEY'RE TO GLAMORIZE YOU!

Blazing red pants and jackets for men who play golf may be a possibility along about next year. And you, the well-dressed gentleman, may be going to informal cocktail parties sporting a polka dot jacket.

New York designer, John Weitz, thinks the time has come for men to go in for more color. He has come up with some creations of jackets not only in polka dots, blazing solid red, but also in white and blue awning stripes.

Further, he says he has an idea that will reduce fatigue. By some innovations his casual and evening clothing weighs four pounds less than a conventional suit. Multiplying that four by the number of hours a day he wears the lighter garments will eliminate fatigue that much.

For one thing, he has eliminated the waistband on trousers. He lets them hang on the hips. He says that's where they're going to hang anyway.

Man being the onery creature he is, one wonders if such doings will catch on. Some few will wear them, of course, because there is a critter in every group who will dare out in such garb.

Just the same he does have one idea someone should have thought of long ago. Mr. Weitz has designed barred cuffs for shirts, equipped with gold buttons sewed on. This eliminates hunting, and fumbling with cuff links.

Hold on! Here's further news from another source. Another designer says knickers are coming back for golf, and others are talking about reviving double-breasted suits. This latter is good news, along with some of Mr. Weitz's ideas.

What we've always wanted is a doublebreasted suit with blue and white awning stripes.

LITTLE MAN WINS AGAINST BIG GOVERNMENT

One of the most cheering bits of news recently was that Earl Mugele, the St. Louis sausage maker, is going to keep right on making them.

His sausages are well known in Missouri and they are very popular. The reason, he says, is a family secret recipe that has been a well-kept bit of information for years. Anyone can make sausage, he says. It's what goes into the mixture that counts. He means spices, peppers and so on. And how much.

Some time ago city inspectors told Mr. Mugele he would have to reveal his secret by explaining just what are the ingredients and how much. He rebelled. Competitors would get their hands on the information "and that would be the end of the business" to quote him.

The inspectors said no license would be granted until he told. He said he wouldn't. And he held out when many a man would have buckled down to the dictatorial demands of bureaucratic government employees.

Well, it's all settled now. St. Louis officials said that if he told them just what ingredients are used, that will be enough. How he mixes and how can remain his secret.

It was a victory for the sausage maker, and his determination to talk back to the government men is an inspiration. When bureaucrats become so bull-headed that only they can be right, things are pretty bad. Every citizen has his rights. Mr. Mugele defended his and won. It to be hoped that the inspectors have learned not to be so adamant in their demands when a man has a chance of losing his business.

BUTTER IS TOO HIGH

The Defense Department has sent out instructions to purchasing agents to buy oleomargarine for the men in service because butter, at 70 cents a pound, is too expensive. Oleo can be had for 16 cents a pound. The Navy is not affected because that department is required by law to make butter available.

Here is the government on the right hand refusing to buy an agricultural product because it is too high, and on the left hand, the Department of Agriculture pays out millions in support funds to keep the price up. Some funny things happen in the village on the Potomac.

The President has called upon housewives and businessmen to fight inflation. Use a sharp pencil in purchasing, he says. But he didn't say anything about postponing that $700,000 home for the Vice President Congress is proposing.

EDITOR'S VIEWPOINTS

DRAFT SHOULDN'T BE UP TO COLLEGES

The academic world is understandably upset these days at the suggestion of Selective Service officials that students in the lower half or third of their classes may lose their draft deferments and be sent to fight in Viet Nam. The trouble with such a policy is that it adds a grave new significance to the process of giving grades and places on faculty members the burden of deciding which young men will stay in college and which will risk their lives in Viet Nam.

This is a burden that faculty members cannot fairly be required to assume. When a few points either way in the grade on a term paper or on an essay question on an examination can effect a student's life so profoundly, the problem of determining those points become almost intolerable. Class standing is widely recognized as an unsatisfactory measure of intellectual promise. Students with heavy, difficult schedules compete with students with an easy load. Standings change each semester. A student whose intellectual awakening came late may have acquired a low class standing on his past performance, even though his work may now be superior to that of his classmates.

It is also true that students in the lower half of their classes at some universities may be better students than those in the upper half of their classes at other universities. A young man who ranks 251 in a class of 500 at some schools may be a superb student in every respect, while a young man who ranks at the very top in another school may be only average in academic ability when measured on a national basis. If the proposed Selective Service policy were implemented, it could induce students to seek out easy schools and easy courses. At the difficult schools, it could intensify even further the competitive pressures which are even now too great.

In the future, it may well prove necessary to draft a substantial number of college students. If that is to be done, we believe the responsibility for making decisions should rest with the draft boards and not with the faculty members who hand out grades. Each student ought to be evaluated in terms of his total record in school and in life, not only on the basis of his class standing or his grades and not at all by a rigid numerical standard. If a student is serious about his college work and spending his time in college profitably, his draft board ought to let him remain there, if he can, if he's not in the upper half of his class.

On the other hand, if a student is merely using college as a refuge from the draft and is not taking it seriously, then the draft board should probably take him, regardless of what his grades are. The colleges can undoubtedly supply the draft boards with useful information. But they ought not to be forced to take the responsibility for choosing draftees or to suffer the ill-effects of a draft system that is based on class standing.—Denver Post.

FOR THE BULL

You'd think wouldn't you, that the blood being shed in Viet Nam would be enough. Not for the 100,000 who filed into Houston's Astrodome recently for a bullfight, Portuguese style. Attendance was so good, in fact, that the promoter predicted that the "sport" would become "a great new spectator attraction" in the United States.

The Houston bullfights weren't in the Spanish tradition, in which the bull meets death. The Portuguese style is merely to enrage the bull, but not kill him. If the bull, or the bullfighter happened to spill a little blood, it'll be quite accidental, 'tis said.

But what possible kick can people get out of watching a bull maddened by the antics of a man on a horse? Or on foot, for that matter?

We're afraid we'd have to pull for the bull.—Goshen (Ind.) News.

NEW SAFETY DEVICE

A man who has devoted many years to studying auto safety says a V-shaped harness attached to the roof of the car would provide far more protection than seat belts. He has a point, since a shoulder harness of the type used in military aircraft would prevent the head injuries that still occur even when seat belts are used.

With all the recent talk of added safety features on automobiles, however, no one has mentioned a simple, practical device that would greatly improve the ability of the vehicle operator to concentrate: A muzzle for the backseat driver. Norfolk (Neb.) Daily News.

CARD OF THANKS

I would like to thank the Aransas County Emergency Corps and others who helped in the rescue of my daughter who nearly drowned Saturday afternoon.

Mrs. Annie Cox

JOHN KINSEY

If being baptized twice doubles a person's chances of entering the "Pearly Gates," then I should have a little edge on the average guy.

I didn't plan it that way, but here's how it happened:

First, I was baptized in the Christian Church — completely immersed — when I was a boy seven or eight years old. Years later, after I had married, my wife and I decided to join a Congregational Church in another city. My wife had been brought up as a member of the Universalist Church in Peoria, Ill., and it is my impression that that church does not believe in baptismal services.

Therefore, the plan was that my wife was to be baptized (with the minister placing a few drops of water on her head during the service), and I was to be accepted as a member of the church by transfer of papers from my former church.

Somehow, when the minister asked that those people rise and come forward who were to be baptized, I got up with my wife and walked down to the altar.

As I was marching, I knew I was in the wrong group, but I didn't know what to do about it. I thought that if I stopped and went back to my seat, it would look like I had changed my mind.

So onward I marched. When I lined up with my wife and the others to be baptized, I noted that the pastor (a wonderful man named Rev. Clarke) kept glancing at me in a puzzled way.

Finally, as he got to me, I muttered something about, "Might as well give me the works, Rev. Clarke," and he did.

SHRIMPING SEASON—

son's production is based on the success and survival of the tiny shrimp entering the bays in March of this year. During this critical spring period Department biologists have monitored the young shrimp in all Texas bay areas.

While the Department has authority to adjust the beginning date of the 45-day closed season, it has not been necessary to do so this year.

Biologists have expressed concern over the effects of flood swollen rivers emptying into the nursery areas and which prematurely drive the small shrimp from the bays.

Since the Gulf shrimp fishermen must comply with a minimum shrimp-size limit, biologists believe that the statutory closed season will provide the best coverage again this year.

Bait shrimping operations in the bays will not be affected by the closed Gulf season.
