Smell of burning flesh reported

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Neighbors had reported smelling burning flesh before three starved, naked women were found shackled in the basement of a house where police also discovered body parts in a refrigerator, an oven and a stewpot.

The owner of the rundown house and another man were charged with murdering two women. One was electrocuted in a watery pit in the basement, police said, and one captive said the other woman apparently died in a fall.

Police discovered the scene after a fourth woman escaped early Wednesday.

Officers arrested owner Gary Heidnik, 43, and entered the house, finding three women chained to a sewer pipe in the basement, 24 pounds of human limbs in a freezer and other body parts in the kitchen, police said.

One of the women, aged 18 to 24, had been kept in the basement since November, said police Capt. Robert Grasso. The women were fed only water, bread and dog food, and when Heidnik left the house, he forced them into a pit in the basement, police said.

Two of the women were in stable condition today at Episcopal Hospital, suffering the effects of dehydration, malnutrition and sexual abuse. A third was treated and released.

Authorities on Wednesday also found the body of Debbie Johnson, 23, partly buried under leaves and branches in a remote southern New Jersey forest, said Grasso.

Heidnik was charged with her murder, as well as rape and kidnapping. The other suspect, Syrill Brown, was arraigned today on charges of murder, rape, kidnapping and conspiracy in the death of Sandra Lindsay. He was being held without bail.

One captive, Lisa Thomas, 19, said a woman she knew only as Sandy fell while handcuffed and hanging from the basement ceiling, and hit her head against the concrete floor.

Miss Johnson was electrocuted in the pit, said district attorney's spokesman Thomas Williamson. Ms. Thomas told the Philadelphia Daily News that Heidnik had apparently electrocuted the woman by wires attached to her chains.

Neighbors said they repeatedly told police that the odor of burning flesh was coming from the house. The smell persisted for more than a week, said Catharine Wainwright, who lives three doors away.

Ms. Lindsay's mother, Janet Perkins, said she told police her daughter was missing and that the girl had frequented Heidnik's house. "They told me that she was an adult.... I think I wasn't treated fair."

As new PTL board meets, church leaders study Bakker

FORT MILL, S.C. (AP) — PTL lawyers agreed to pay $265,000 to the woman whose sexual liaison with Jim Bakker led to his resignation, a newspaper said today as the ministry's new board gathered to decide PTL's future.

Leaders of Bakker's denomination, the Assemblies of God, meanwhile, were to meet again today in Springfield, Mo., to weigh misconduct charges against him.

The Rev. Jerry Falwell said that he hopes "the Lord will allow us the privilege of making some kind of contribution back toward civility" in the new PTL board's first meeting. He was interviewed on CBS television's "The Morning Program" today shortly before the meeting began.

On Wednesday, Falwell, who succeeded Bakker as chairman of the 500,000-member PTL, had said the eight board members may offer their own resignations at the meeting.

"We may walk in there and find it's untolerable, unsolvable, that our presence is not going to provide anything positive and therefore there is no need for us to stay," Falwell told reporters in Cocoa Beach, Fla.

The PTL board meeting was closed. A security guard at the Heritage Grand Hotel at PTL's Heritage USA center said board members had gathered there shortly after 8 a.m.

The board includes the Rev. Richard Dortch, who had been executive director and is now the organization's president and host of the ministry's "PTL Club" television show, and former U.S. Interior Secretary James Watt.

In its report, The Charlotte (N.C.) Observer said a $150,000 fund was set up from which Jessica Hahn received monthly payments of $800 to $1,200, in addition to a $115,000 payment to her representatives in February 1985.

■ TV evangelists comment on controversy; Related stories — 6A

Ms. Hahn, who had a sexual encounter with Bakker seven years ago, would get the entire $150,000 after 20 years if she did not sue Bakker or reveal the liaison, unidentified sources told the Observer.

The newspaper said the fund has operated since spring 1985, with Ms. Hahn receiving $10,045 that year. The $150,000 was deposited in the Bank of Los Angeles, the newspaper said, citing legal documents. The documents did not reveal the source of the money, the Observer said.

Earlier, the Observer reported the $115,000 payment, of which about $20,000 went to Ms. Hahn directly. The rest was used to pay legal and other expenses, an unidentified source told the newspaper.

The paper said the fund is based on a trust arrangement, apparently never signed, that was part of an agreement reached after meetings involving Dortch, PTL's attorneys and Ms. Hahn's representative.

A retired California Superior Court judge, Charles Woodmansee, acted as mediator, the newspaper said. He approved the settlement's terms after an informal hearing at which Ms. Hahn spoke.

Chances for rain drying up

Two people were injured about 8:45 this morning in a two-car accident near the underpass at the intersection of Interstate 20 and Cloverdale Road. A spokeswoman at Midland Memorial Hospital said 27-year-old Felipe Ramirez of Greenwood and Allene Mashburn, 34, of Midland were undergoing treatment and were listed in stable condition late this morning.

Midlanders planning to attend the Permian Basin Petroleum Association's Blow Out Saturday — or just spend a day outside — can rest easy that recent rains and unseasonably cool weather shouldn't spoil the party.

Thermometers should inch upward today and Friday, with cooler weather giving way to Saturday highs reaching toward the lower 70s, according to a meteorologist at the National Weather Service at Midland Regional Airport.

Meteorologist Constantine Pashos said that a low pressure zone that sat above Southeast New Mexico Wednesday and today and brought winter-like weather to the Permian Basin is on it's way northeast.

Senate favors alimony bill in surprising vote

By JIM WARREN
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — For the first time this century, alimony would be available in Texas under a bill the Senate passed Wednesday with surprisingly little dissent.

The bill allows alimony for a divorced spouse who lacks any jobs skills if the marriage lasted for 10 years or more. The payments could not exceed $1,500 a month and must end after three years.

Sen. Kent Caperton, who successfully pushed the same bill through the Senate in past sessions only to see it die in the House, said the alimony proposal should clear the House this session. Rep. Charlie Evans, R-Hurst, worked to defeat the bill last time but will sponsor it this session.

"It's so limited and so narrow that it should cause fear in the hearts of no one, man or woman," said Caperton, D-Bryan. "It does apply to either spouse."

Currently, courts evenly divide the couple's so-called community property, and child support often is given to the parent who receives custody of the children. But since the Civil War, alimony has not been an option.

The measure cleared a procedural hurdle on a 23-5 vote and passed out of the Senate on a 26-3 vote. Caperton said the alimony will be awarded in very few cases because the bill is so narrow.

"It gives the trial court some discretion where persons have been married in the traditional concept and have perhaps stayed at home and not developed employment skills," he said. "And it gives the trial court an opportunity to look at those kinds of marriages and say some kind of extra support is reasonable under these circumstances."

Although Caperton said he knew he had the votes to pass his bill, he was somewhat surprised it cleared so easily. "Even those persons who opposed it, I think, did so because they fear what we'll do down the road as opposed to the belief that this bill isn't fair," he said.

Bodies of Martin, crewman recovered

MARCH AIR FORCE BASE, Calif. (AP) — Dean Martin's son and a fellow crewman died instantly when their fighter jet slammed into a remote mountainside in dense clouds six days ago, officials said after finding the fliers' bodies.

Searchers found the remains Wednesday of Air National Guard Capt. Dean Paul Martin, 35, and weapons officer Capt. Ramon Ortiz, 39, of Las Vegas, Nev., in the San Bernardino Mountains where the wreckage of their F4-C Phantom was spotted from the air earlier in the day.

"They made no attempt to eject," said Sgt. Carolyn Hamilton, a guard spokeswoman. They "perished instantly at the time of impact."

There was no immediate comment from Martin's father, who had been waiting for word of the search at his Beverly Hills home, according to publicist Warren Cowan.

The jet crashed into the side of a granite mountain at about 400 mph, after plunging nearly 4,000 feet from its last altitude reading on radar of 9,300 feet.

There was no indication of a malfunction with the plane, said another guard spokesman, Maj. Steve Mensik. "Apparently they did a 360-degree loop, four miles long, after his last hit (sighting) on the radar," Mensik said.

Martin and Ortiz were in one of three Phantom jets that left March Air Force Base, 50 miles east of Los Angeles, on maneuvers near the San Bernardino mountains Saturday afternoon.

Teens surrender in Salvadoran hostage incident

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador (AP) — Two armed teen-agers claiming to be leftist guerrillas surrendered to authorities more than six hours after taking nearly 950 children hostage in a grammar school and threatening to kill them.

A guerrilla communique denied any connection with the takeover Wednesday at the school in the working-class San Jacinto neighborhood. The 947 children nd 27 teachers were released unharmed in groups over the course of the day.

The siege began at about 10:30 a.m. when the young couple pounded on a school door and insisted on being let inside "for protection," said the school's director, Arely de Flores.

Once inside, the young man, an army deserter armed with a German-made G-3 automatic rifle, threatened to shoot if anyone entered the building.

Police said the couple also had at least one hand grenade. A knife was visible during an interview the young man gave to a reporter of the television newscast Teleprensa, whom he invited to enter the school.

"So long as they don't take me out of here, not a single child will leave here, and if a single soldier comes in I'm going to let the bullets fly and I'll kill myself and I'll kill the students," the teen-ager told the reporter.

At one point, a girl peeked through the bars of a ground floor window and told reporters: "We are very scared. They threatened to kill us if we talked with you."

But about four hours after the takeover started, the couple allowed 25 first- and second-graders to leave the building. The children, dressed in beige uniforms with white shirts, were visibly scared.

An hour later, they began to let most of the other students leave, but delayed the release of 47 ninth-graders, students 14 or 15 years old.

A group of rescue workers meanwhile sawed off the bars on two windows and carried some children down a ladder to safety.

Millionaire wants to give away his fortune before he dies

Ross

EDINA, Minn. (AP) — He earned millions by making plastic trash bags and won fame by passing out money, a silver dollar at a time. Now Percy Ross, who says he wants to give away his fortune, is seeking a larger audience for his flamboyant philanthropy.

His book, "Ask For the Moon — And Get It!: The Secret of Getting What You Want By Knowing How To Ask," was released a few weeks ago. He's also starting a radio broadcast and negotiating on a television show.

"With a TV show, I can actually provoke other people into doing the same thing I'm doing," Ross said. "I think every day should be Valentine's Day. The more you give, the more you get."

The book comes in addition to a syndicated column, "Thanks a Million," that the 70-year-old Ross has been writing for years. In the column, appearing in about 150 newspapers, readers ask for money or gifts and Ross responds.

The latest projects are part of Ross' plan to give away all his money in his lifetime, a dream he formed when he was growing up on Michigan's Upper Peninsula, the son of poor Russian and Latvian immigrants.

"The worst part of being poor was seeing other kids have things you don't have...bikes, nice clothes, parties," Ross said. "I made a promise that if I ever got rich, I'd give every poor kid I could a bicycle."

Ross got his start in business while in high school by selling eggs door-to-door and rebuilding junk batteries.

He moved to Duluth in 1936, met his wife, Laurian, and learned the fur trade. Two auction companies he started, one specializing in furs, failed, and his next venture also looked unpromising at first.

He borrowed $30,000 in 1958 to buy a company that manufactured polyethylene film and bags. By 1963, the company was $500,000 in debt and Ross filed for reorganization under Chapter 11 of the U.S. bankruptcy code.

Still, he believed the company could succeed.

"My wife gave me her jewelry and furs and her silverware. I sold my automobile. We fired our expensive salesmen with their expense accounts and hired people to make telephone calls." He also recruited his sons to help him.

The company's fortunes turned when it began using cheaper, recycled plastic for its Tuffy's garbage bags. When customers complained about the recycled plastic's imperfections, the company began coloring the bags to conceal the defects. The colored bags proved enormously popular and, in 1969, Ross sold the company for $8 million.

Ross declines to say how much he's worth, but his fortune has been estimated at $20 million.

His fortune made, he began giving it away.

At a Christmas party, he gave 1,050 bikes to needy children. Handing out silver dollars became his trademark, and Ross says he passes out about 100,000 each year.

"I don't want people to think I'm a braggart," he said. "But I don't believe in anonymous giving. I like to be there just as I think most mothers and fathers like to be there when they give their children presents."

Ross says he gets about 8,000 requests for help each week. Readers screen the mail and pass about 800 letters on to his assistant, Connie Hanson, who verifies the legitimacy of the requests.

"Often people don't tell me everything," Ross said. "I get a heartbreaking letter, and by the time Miss Hanson has checked into it, it's not as pressing as I thought."

Being misled doesn't annoy him.

"I can afford to be a nice guy," he says. "I'll send them a silver dollar and tell them to write me again if their situation ever really gets down there."

Ross is most likely to help those who tell him exactly what they want and why, and what they've done to help themselves. A man who asked for a new car so he could start job hunting was not rewarded. A woman who asked for help buying a station wagon to transport her equipment from one cleaning job to another got her wish.

"If he gives away big prizes, it looks too much like a game show," Miss Hanson confided. "But when he gives $50 so that a little girl getting chemotherapy can buy a wig, that makes people think they can do something like that themselves."

Ross works in a lavish office decked with Oriental art and a Cadillac-sized desk. But he says money is no longer important to him.

In fact, he says, his wealth and high profile have sometimes gotten him in trouble. "As soon as somebody is affluent, people want to take pot shots."

In 1985, he and the Internal Revenue Service agreed he owed income taxes for 1978 and 1979 totaling $50,895, according to Tax Court records quoted by IRS spokesman Bill Knight in St. Paul.

Roy Williams, director of program development for International Broadcasting Network, a Denver-based company that produces mostly live, call-in programs, helped Ross develop the radio show and said pilot programs are being developed.

Bank has unusual history

LOVINGTON, Ill. (AP) — The nails and the bolts, even the old safe, are gone now but the Hardware State Bank still serves the people of this Central Illinois farming community.

A century ago, S.P. Drake was content running his hardware store. But when the town's last bank closed, he was besieged by customers who wanted to lock their cash and valuables in his fireproof safe — the only one in Lovington.

For three years, people could buy tools and building materials and make deposits under the same roof. But by 1885, Drake was a full-time banker.

He moved out of the hardware store but the unusual name of the bank never changed.

"This bank is a survivor," said bank president Ray Duncan. "It has survived bank failures, a depression, robberies, a fire, and the current downturn in the agricultural economy."

The 90-year-old building stands at the corner of State and Broadway in this community of 1,300. The old stone block front contrasts with a new brick wall and a drive-through facility on the side.

The gold-leaf "Hardware State Bank" signs that once hung on the corners of the building were rescued from a 1985 fire and now are framed in the lobby.

The modern interior has tile and carpet on the floor and plastic light panels in the ceiling, but behind the teller booths are the original vault doors.

It was from a small room over the vault that Drake would peer into the lobby through a peep hole.

Former bookkeeper Homer White recalled two holdups, including one in 1924 in which the robbers apparently hoped to get the payroll for the town's major employer, a coal mine.

"It was not uncommon to meet the train for a shipment of $1,000 in silver or go to the post office for a registered package containing from $12,000 to $18,000 and walk back to the bank casually reading a newspaper as though you had your lunch under your arm," he said.

The four gunmen came two days too early and missed the mine payroll.

During the second robbery, in 1932, White was kidnapped from his home in the middle of the night and taken to the bank by two men carrying machine guns. But this time, the robbers were foiled by a time lock on the bank vault and escaped with less than $600.

No arrest was made but White said he saw one of the robbers describing his life of crime on the Johnny Carson Show in 1983.

Drake, who had a series of business partners through the years, died in 1930. The bank had three subsequent owners before Duncan and other investors bought it in 1977.

Duncan said he once thought the first thing he would do was give the bank a more conventional name, "but after I got to know the history and significance of the name, there was no way I'd change it."

There now are 30 stockholders and they emphasize the community nature of the Hardware State Bank, focusing on local investments to help Lovington, said Duncan.

"That's what Peter Drake believed when he opened this bank."

Males will be gracing float

FORKS, Wash. (AP) — There will be no smiling, hand-waving young women atop the festival float at the Forks Independence Day celebration this year.

Coordinator Linda Dillard said she invited about 15 high school girls to compete for the title of Miss Forks.

"Seven or eight said they would come to the (contestants') meeting. None showed up. Not one," said Ms. Dillard. "I was really depressed and thought, 'Well...the boys could use a scholarship. This is a logging town. Why not?'"

So after a frantic search, three contestants stepped forward to compete for the title of Mr. Forks: Rob Lane, 16, a junior; Brandon Sanchez, 16, a junior, and Tom Kraft Jr., 17, a senior, all of Forks High School.

"At first, the people I talked to said, 'Yeah, right. Mr. Forks,'" Ms. Dillard said. "Then, the more they thought about it, they said, 'All right!'"

"The rugged outdoor life Forks represents, it's kind of fitting to have all guys do it," Lane said.

Democrats' budget proposals fall short of goals despite new taxes

WASHINGTON (AP) — House and Senate Democrats, following weeks of closed-door struggles, emerged with budget proposals that failed to meet congressional deficit-reduction goals despite about $18 billion in new taxes.

Democrats on the House Budget Committee, meeting late into the night Wednesday, announced tentative agreement on a package crafted to reduce the deficit by at least $36 billion in fiscal 1988.

Senate Budget Committee Chairman Lawton Chiles, D-Fla., was to release today his proposal to trim the deficit by $37 billion.

Neither plan would come within $25 billion of the $108 billion deficit target of the Gramm-Rudman law for the fiscal year beginning Oct. 1. However, each would cut the deficit about as well as President Reagan's budget, based on congressional estimates that show the president's budget would leave $135 billion in red ink next year.

The White House, which uses more optimistic scenarios for government spending and economic growth, maintains its plan hits the $108 billion target.

Reagan met privately Wednesday with House Republicans and was quoted by a spokesman as saying, "The number for this year is 108 (on Gramm-Rudman) and the model is no fudging."

Rep. William H. Gray III, D-Pa., chairman of the House committee, said a marathon session Wednesday with his committee's Democrats had produced tentative agreement on "a strong, credible package that moves in the right direction with cuts in spending that are real but fair."

"I think that our budget will be much more credible than the administration's budget," he told reporters.

The only public decision by the committee has been to scale back sharply the president's military spending request.

The panel's discussions, which began more than a month ago, were guided by a framework that half the deficit reductions would come from tax increases and the spending cuts would be divided about equally between military and domestic programs.

Chiles, while holding public budget sessions, nailed down the details of his plan Wednesday following weeks of private meetings with other members of his committee. Chiles' package includes about $18.5 billion in tax increases and an equal amount in spending reductions in fiscal 1988, according to sources familiar with the discussions.

The Pentagon, farm programs, foreign aid, Medicare and government credit programs would have their spending pinched by the Chiles plan, said the sources who spoke on condition of anonymity.

The plan would leave a deficit of about $134 billion, $26 billion above the goal set by the Gramm-Rudman law but $1 billion below President Reagan's budget, based on estimates by the non-partisan Congressional Budget Office.

The administration budget contained more "revenues" and fewer spending cuts than Chiles' plan or the version being discussed by House Democrats. However, most of the $22 billion in new revenues proposed by Reagan would come from sales of government assets and from new fees the president does not consider tax increases.

Reagan supported House Republicans for their boycott of the budget process until after Democrats produced a plan of their own. Republicans said Democrats, who have spent months attacking Reagan's budget, could not expect their help without offering an alternative for GOP criticism.

Gray, whose earlier offer of bipartisanship produced the GOP boycott, has indicated he plans to bring a Democratic plan to the full House quickly without waiting for Republican support.

In Chiles' plan, about a third of the $18.5 billion in spending restraints would come from military programs. Pentagon cash outlays would increase slightly, but fall more than $6 billion behind the pace of inflation and far short of the 3 percent increase beyond inflation requested by the president, the sources said.

The Chiles proposal includes $14 billion in domestic spending cuts and $3 billion in new domestic spending, for a net savings of $11 billion. Medicare law changes would save $3.3 billion, welfare cuts $1.4 billion, agriculture $2 billion, energy and conservation programs $1.5 billion and transportation $400 million, the sources said.

Democrats push for minimum wage hike

WASHINGTON (AP) — Democrats want to add $1.30 to the minimum wage, which has remained at $3.35 an hour since President Reagan moved into the White House six years ago.

With Democrats in control of both houses of Congress for the first time since Reagan took office, they are proposing to raise the minimum hourly wage to $4.65 by 1990 for some 6.7 million workers and then provide a formula for workers to receive one-half the general hourly wage beginning Jan. 1, 1991.

The administration immediately denounced the Democratic proposal.

"We will oppose it," Labor Secretary William E. Brock said. "The administration cannot stand by while some in Congress propose an action which will further deny opportunity to America's young men and women."

Brock said each increase under the Democratic bill would result in "the loss of job opportunities for thousands of teen-agers" who already are suffering an unemployment rate of 18 percent.

Under legislation introduced Wednesday by Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., and Rep. Augustus F. Hawkins, D-Calif., chairmen of the Senate and House labor committees, respectively, the minimum wage would remain $3.35 an hour until Dec. 31 of this year, jump to $3.85 during 1988, rise another 40 cents in 1989 and become $4.65 on Jan. 1, 1990.

Beginning Jan. 1, 1991, and on Jan. 1 of every succeeding year, the minimum wage would be revised so the rate would equal one-half of "the average private, non-supervisory, non-agricultural hourly wage as determined by the Bureau of Labor Statistics of the Department of Labor for the previous November, rounded to the nearest multiple of 5 cents."

The average wage in February was $8.87 an hour, which would mean a $4.45 minimum wage under the formula.

Kennedy and Hawkins told reporters they expected their committees to hold hearings, iron out differences and vote the legislation to the Senate and House floors by late summer.

"A subminimum wage is substandard public policy — for young or old," Kennedy said. "The time has come for Congress to redeem the promise of the minimum wage by restoring its value for American workers."

He said a full-time worker today who earns the minimum wage earns less than $7,000 a year, an amount that is 77 percent of the poverty level for a family of three and 60 percent of the poverty level for a family of four.

But Richard L. Lesher, president of the U.S. Chamber of Commerce, said the bill would cost more than 300,000 entry-level jobs in the first year.

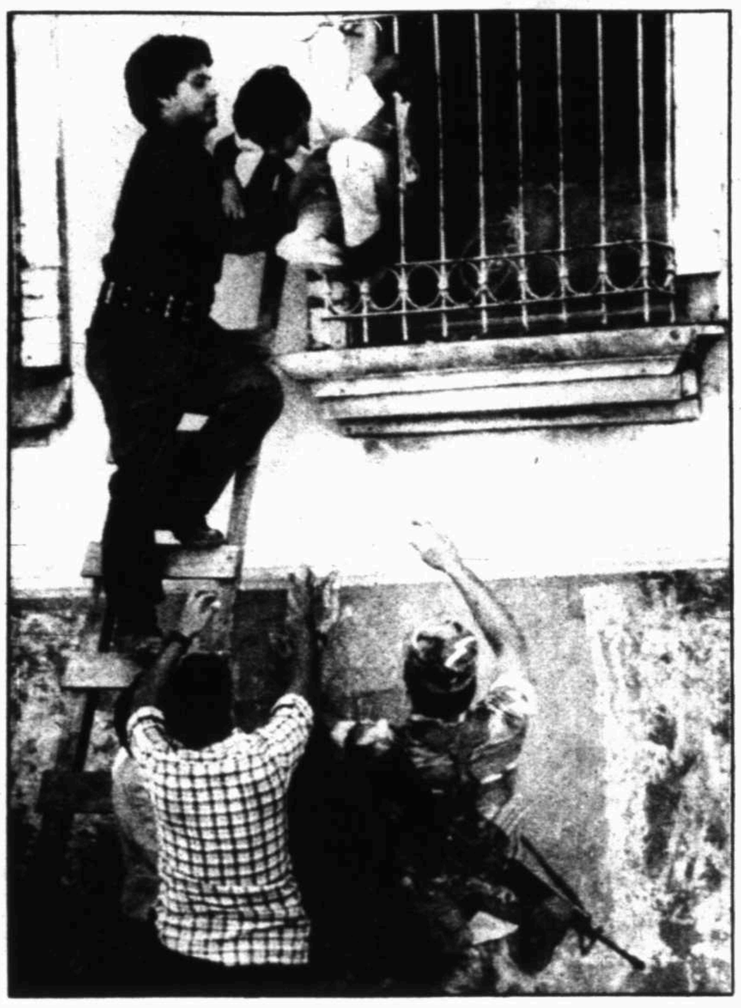
Families waited in fear as pair held schoolchildren



AP Laserphoto

A rescue worker from the International Rescue Brigade of El Salvador breaks through a barred window and frees children from a San Salvador school.

By BRYNA BRENNAN

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador (AP) — Tears streaming down her face, a young woman held her sleeping 6-month-old son and prayed for the safety of two other sons, among nearly 950 children taken hostage at their school by two self-proclaimed guerrillas.

"I pray to God it all comes out all right," Berta Alisia Oporto said, standing in the shade of a nearby hardware store. "I'm just going to wait. It's so long. And they are 7 and 14, only."

The hostage takers were identified by authorities as Juan Francisco Medrano Eraheta, an army corporal who deserted, and his female companion, both in their teens.

Claiming to be leftist guerrillas, they forced their way into the San Jacinto Grammar School on Wednesday morning and threatened to kill the 947 children and 27 teachers if anyone entered. They surrendered peacefully more than six hours later and no injuries were reported.

Leftist guerrillas of the Farabundo Marti Liberation Front denied any connection with the pair.

"We are afraid," a young girl said at one point during the ordeal, leaning from the barred window of her seventh grade class. "They threatened to kill us."

Medrano brandished a German-made G-3 rifle and appeared nervous. After four hours, he agreed to let the youngest children leave.

Rescue workers escorted them quickly from the wooden doors of the old school and through a police cordon to waiting parents.

"That's my son," a woman squealed, her face red from the heat and tears. Some of the children, dressed in beige and white uniforms, sobbed.

"I don't understand," murmured one boy, looking around quickly. "Where's my mother?"

A boy about 10 years old stood in the shade and followed the advice of adult friends to take deep breaths. He was perspiring heavily and visibly shaken.

Some mothers bordered on hysteria, screaming for the armed forces to end the standoff.

"My children," a mother moaned.

"My sons are inside," another said.

"There's my daughter," one screamed.

"No, it's mine," a woman yelled.

An hour after the initial releases, the hostage holders began to let most of the other students leave. Rescuers meanwhile sawed off the bars on two windows and pulled more children to safety.

Some children hurled out their school bags and notebooks and scurried into the arms of the rescue workers, but others sobbed that they were afraid to leave.

One child dropped his bag of flavored shaved ice and then refused to go out.

The school is located in the working class neighborhood of San Jacinto on the south side of San Salvador, the hardest-hit area in the earthquake that killed 1,500 people last October.

Where brick and concrete homes once stood, there now are corrugated zinc houses and vacant lots. Workers still cart away debris to rebuild. Piles of earthquake rubble remain in front of the school.

More than six hours after the hostage-taking began, all the children had been released.

HOSTAGES

The couple released the last hostages after speaking with Monsignor Gregorio Rosa Chavez, auxiliary bishop of San Salvador.

"I have the impression that they are not guerrillas, because their arguments are too incoherent," Rosa Chavez said.

The drama ended when Gen. Adolfo Blandon, head of the joint chiefs of staff, entered San Jacinto Grammar School and persuaded the couple to give up.

The pair left the school at about 4:45 p.m. in a blue mini-bus belonging to the army. Police sources would not say where they were taken.

Regional education director Eduardo Alfonso Molina identified the young man as Juan Francisco Medrano Eraheta and his companion as Gloria Escobar Guzman. He said they were in their teens but their exact ages were not available.

In the interview with Salvadoran television, the young man identified himself as "Alexander Alvarez Cadena, a captain of the guerrillas."

But Gen. Rinaldo Golcher, chief of the Treasury Police, said the teenager was a corporal who deserted from the Instruction Center of the Armed Forces three or four days earlier and took two G-3 rifles.

A Salvadoran colonel who spoke on condition of anonymity said the couple ran to the school after a routine police blockade stopped them outside the Instruction Center, which is for communications study, and is in the San Jacinto neighborhood.

Golcher said the young man demanded that President Jose Napoleon Duarte, Roman Catholic Archbishop Arturo Rivera Damas and International Red Cross officials come to the school.

Alfonso Molina said the young man told him he wanted to escape to Nicaragua or Mexico.

Special anti-terrorist personnel from the army slipped in through windows shortly before the pair gave themselves up.

The two dropped a bundle of propaganda leaflets of the Farabundo Marti National Liberation Front guerrilla organization on the school steps as they entered the building, and the young man insisted he was a member.

But a communique from the Front, a umbrella organization for the five guerrilla groups fighting El Salvador's U.S.-supported government, denied involvement in the hostage-taking and said it was "the total responsibility of the armed forces."

Shortly before the incident began, police reported that four suspected guerrillas attacked a national police car about a mile from the school and killed one of the officers and wounded three others. Golcher said the two incidents were unrelated.

An estimated 62,000 people have been killed since the war between leftist rebels and the government began in 1979. Most of the combat in recent years has taken place in rural areas, but there have been indications guerrillas may be trying to move their fight back into the cities.

Reagan addresses educational conference

COLUMBIA, Mo. (AP) — President Reagan, taking his campaign for educational excellence on the road and attempting to shift focus from the Iran-Contra affair, said today "money is not the key to higher quality" in education.

Reagan, in prepared remarks to a conference in this central Missouri city, pushed his campaign to make the United States more competitive in the 21st century and improve the nation's schools, but without increased federal aid.

The president, dogged by the Iran-Contra affair and his recuperation from prostate surgery, had not traveled outside Washington in nearly three months.

"Education suffered when the federal government tried to give too much direction to local schools," Reagan said. "Some seem to think education is best directed by administrators in Washington. I say the American people know better than anyone in Washington how to fix their own schools."

Reagan, noting numerous studies that have shown the nation's students to be lagging in reading and science skills, said "money is not the key to higher quality."

"The secret to educational quality is not in the pocketbook, but in the heart," Reagan said. "You don't need schools filled with high technology to give children a good education. You need schools that set high standards and pay attention to the basics of reading, math, science, language and the meaning of our sacred national heritage."

"Basic skills, standards, discipline, work, family support, ethical principles — this is the new American consensus on the secret of quality education," Reagan said.

Reagan also sent a message to Congress, which is working on the budget, that he ss holding firm to his no-tax stand.

Reagan said he was keeping up the fight to "get control of federal spending so tax rates won't go up again. That's why it's time for Congress to cut the federal budget and leave the family budget alone."

Reagan scheduled meetings with school children at an elementary and high school before addressing the conference called by Gov. John Ashcroft.

Reagan's advisers see the trip as a chance to switch public attention from the Iran-Contra controversy, which has dogged the presidency since November. The president's physicians also imposed six weeks of recuperation following his Jan. 5 prostate surgery.

"The combination of the Iran affair and his health had given an impression of total isolation," one senior presidential adviser said Wednesday.

Speaking on condition he not be identified, the official said the visit to the central Missouri city of 65,000 was "an important part of showing that the president's back and in command and anxious to do the job."

Although Reagan has made speeches and appearances at the White House and around Washington, he has not participated in a public event outside the city since he bestowed medals on the pilot and engineer of the globe-circling "Voyager" experimental plane in Los Angeles on Dec. 29.

Until his news conference last week — his first since Nov. 19 — Reagan had avoided meetings with the news media until he could digest the report of the Tower commission on the Iran-Contra affair.

On today's trip, Reagan planned to "reinforce that theme of excellence in education, preparing America for the 21st century," the presidential aide said.

During his four-hour stop, Reagan was to attend two classes at Fairview Elementary School, address students at Hickman High School and address the participants of the education conference.

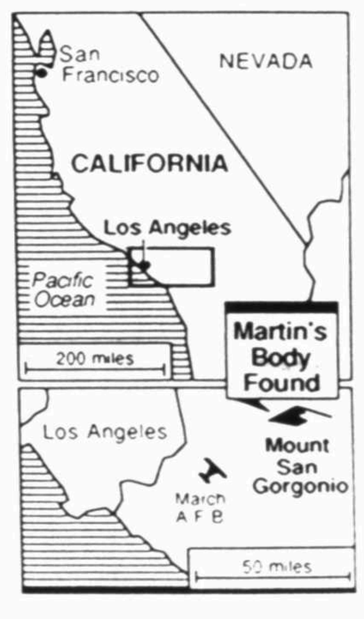
The Columbia school district was among 16 districts nationwide selected to serve as "informational laboratories" to study reforms proposed last year in a report by the National Governors' Association.

Their recommendations ranged from better working conditions for teachers to improved use of technology.

The president's campaign for improvement in education is part of his plan for bolstering the nation's competitive edge in international markets. In a speech last month, he challenged the nation to "work harder and work better" and restore pride in the label reading, "Made in America."

He also summoned Americans to undertake a "quest for excellence" in education and business to make the United States more competitive.

Reagan sent Congress a package of competitiveness proposals, including an easing of antitrust laws, changes in product liability statutes, a $980 million job retraining program and other steps intended to help shrink the nation's $170 billion trade deficit.



MARTIN

As the jets approached 11,502-foot Mount San Gorgonio in heavy clouds, civilian air traffic controllers instructed the pilots to turn. Two crews acknowledged and steered clear of the mountain, but there was no response from Martin's jet.

Searchers had difficulty finding the aircraft, which had a green and gray camouflage pattern that blended with the terrain, Mensik said.

Search and rescue workers had remained optimistic throughout the search, confident that if Martin and Ortiz were able to parachute from the jet they could survive for up to a week in the wilderness.

Both had been wearing parachutes and survival kits containing food, insulating blankets and other gear.

Ten years ago, the 82-year-old mother of Frank Sinatra, Natalie "Dolly" Sinatra, was killed in a plane crash nearby in the same mountain range.

Fliers in Martin's unit, the 163rd Tactical Fighter Group based at March Air Force Base considered him a talented pilot.

"Captain Martin was one of the better pilots and an exceptional athlete," said Mensik.

The oldest of Dean Martin's three children by a former wife, Jeanne, Dean Paul Martin had been an athlete, a pilot, a television performer and a musician.

He most recently appeared in NBC-TV's "Misfits of Science," and starred with Ali MacGraw in the 1979 tennis movie "Players."

FEUD

"The judge talked to me and asked me what I wanted to do, asked me if it was all right if they set it up like this," Ms. Hahn said. "Nobody put a gun — the judge said how do I feel about this deal?"

Bakker, who remained in seclusion in Palm Springs, Calif., with his wife, Tammy Faye, resigned as chairman a week ago today, saying it was the only way to stop a "diabolical plot" by another evangelist to seize his $172 million empire.

Bakker's attorney later identified the evangelist as Jimmy Swaggart. Swaggart denied trying to bring down PTL but admitted telling Assemblies of God leaders what he knew about Bakker's sexual encounter with Ms. Hahn.

Bakker also claimed he was blackmailed into paying $115,000 for the one-time sexual encounter with Ms. Hahn. But California lawyer John Stewart, who represented the 27-year-old West Babylon, N.Y., woman, said it actually was a financial settlement "requested by PTL as an alternative to meeting with Christian leaders to discuss the allegations."

Stewart, who is co-host of a Christian radio program called "The Bible Answer Man," and attorney Paul Roper of Anaheim, Calif., said Ms. Hahn claimed Bakker pressured her into having sex with him.

Stewart said the settlement was negotiated on Ms. Hahn's behalf. She received "a few dollars" and the rest was divided, he said, but he wouldn't discuss who got what.

Ms. Hahn told reporters Wednesday outside her home that she had been advised by Roper, who is serving as her lawyer, not to talk. Asked how she was coping with the furor, she said, "I'm fine...for now. I'm OK."

At a meeting Wednesday in Springfield, Mo., the Rev. John Ankerberg of Chattanooga, Tenn., presented church leaders evidence he said would show that PTL officials attempted to cover up the sexual misconduct reports.

Ankerberg said he was responding to reports that he and Swaggart were involved in the alleged takeover attempt of the PTL, which stands for Praise The Lord or People That Love.

Ankerberg, a Southern Baptist, said he came upon his information while investigating rumors of Bakker's sexual affair. Ankerberg said he, Swaggart and Falwell sent a joint letter to Bakker him through Dortch that was detailed enough "so they would know we had solid information."

He said Bakker thanked them for the letter, said he wanted to discuss it with his wife and would get back to them. Dortch and Bakker later invited Falwell to meet with them in Palm Springs, Calif., Ankerberg said.

After Wednesday's meeting, the Rev. Everett Stenhouse, the Assemblies' assistant superintendent, said in a statement that the discussion led officials to believe "that as far as PTL is concerned, there has been no conspiracy whatsoever, there has been no blackmail whatsoever."

Stenhouse said the information would be presented to the Rev. Charles Cookman, superintendent of the North Carolina district, with which Bakker is affiliated.

Stenhouse said Cookman promised his district would "expedite matters in bringing this to a conclusion."

The matter was to be taken up again today, said spokeswoman Juleen Turnage.

Plains flooding feared as snow melts

Associated Press

Kansas cattle ranchers, caught by a fierce spring blizzard in the middle of the calving season, awaited a hay-lift today as streams swollen by rain and melting snow flooded streets and basements on the Plains.

A state of emergency remained in effect today in Nebraska and Kansas after the storm, packing gusts more than 75 mph, piled up drifts as high as 12 feet, closed roads and killed livestock.

Segments of Interstate 70 in Kansas that had been closed Wednesday reopened early today as the storm weakened and moved into the Midwest.

"We had such a beautiful winter," said Tom Dorn, Holt County, Neb., extension agent. "Then, right in the heart of our calving season, we end up with this."

Dorn said he had no figures on livestock losses, but "it just can't help but be bad."

Three National Guard helicopters were scheduled to deliver hay to snowbound cattle in Trego and Gove counties in western Kansas, which got up to 16 inches of snow, officials said.

Swollen creeks in central Kansas flooded 50 homes in Great Bend and dozens more north of Hutchinson on Wednesday. Halstead, Kan., was under a flood warning after the Little Arkansas River closed off roads leading to town.

The storm was blamed for two traffic deaths Monday in Oklahoma, and for the death of a woman in Kansas whose car got stuck near a flooded creek.

Motorists in central South Dakota also battled slick roads and blowing snow, but most major roads had reopened by Wednesday, state police said. Flooding was still a problem in the eastern part of the state.

"We're letting people travel but ... visibility is somewhat limited," said Highway Patrol Capt. Clarence DeWald. "Things have gotten considerably better."

Gusting winds stymied Kansas Department of Transportation workers and utility crews trying to clear roads and return power to some 10,000 customers.

"They are just having a devil of a time getting into the area because of the wind and blowing snow," said Bill Ohlemeier of Kansas Electric Cooperatives.

The Big Blue River and the Elk River in Nebraska flooded highways, parks, streets and some homes on Wednesday, and snow a foot deep closed more than 60 miles of Interstate 80 from Grand Island to Elm Creek.

In eastern South Dakota, a flood warning was issued for the James River because of snowmelt and rain.

The river was expected to be 3 feet over flood stage at Forestburg today, and a call went out for volunteers to lay in sandbags around a leaking dike protecting a a mobile home park in west Mitchell.

Grasso said the complaints would be investigated.

Despite the house's poor condition and the neighborhood's poverty, Heidnik had been seen driving a Rolls-Royce, a late-model Cadillac, a Lincoln Continental, a van and another car.

When he was arrested, Heidnik had $1,900 in his pockets. Police found a financial statement inside the house indicating that he had a $500,000 stock account. One bedroom was partly wallpapered with one-dollar and five-dollar bills, and the kitchen was decorated with pennies.

On the front of the house was a small white sign painted with black letters reading "United Church of the Ministries of God."

Grosso said there was no evidence of religious activity in the house, but a neighbor said "loud church-type music and people praying" could be heard from the house. The neighbor refused to give a name.

Ruling benefits women

WASHINGTON (AP) — The latest Supreme Court ruling on affirmative action will expand job opportunities for women and help shield employers against sex discrimination lawsuits, legal experts and women's rights advocates say.

The Justice Department, on the other hand, called Wednesday's ruling a defeat for the moral principle that hiring should not be based on race or sex. And the man who filed the case after being passed over for a job said he couldn't believe people as intelligent as those on the Supreme Court could rule that way.

The decision upholding the hiring of a slightly less-qualified woman over a man as a remedy to sex discrimination "sends a strong message to employers that voluntary affirmative action is the way to go to remedy past discrimination against women," said Marsha Levick, executive director of the National Organization for Women's Legal Defense and Education Fund.

She said the message for women is, "They have an equal right to compete for advancement and promotion."

"It vindicates our historic position that sex discrimination, like race discrimination, can be remedied by the use of affirmative action measures," added Judith Lichtman, executive director of the Women's Legal Defense Fund.

The court, by a 6-3 vote Wednesday, for the first time upheld an affirmative action plan for women. The justices said employers may give special preferences in hiring and promoting female workers to create a more balanced workforce even if the employers do not admit past discrimination against women.

The court has upheld affirmative action plans to help racial minorities in a series of decisions since 1978.

Penda Hair, a lawyer for the NAACP Legal Defense Fund, said, "Employers will be among the decision's principal beneficiaries. (They) can rest confident that their plans are legal without having to prove a history of prior discrimination — without having, in effect, to convict themselves."

The Reagan administration, which has suffered a string of Supreme Court defeats on affirmative action, expressed disappointment.

Wednesday's ruling departs "from the moral principle of non-discrimination for all citizens," said Justice Department spokesman Terry Eastland. "An employment decision should not be made on the basis of race or sex."

John D. Maddox, a lawyer who argued successfully before the Supreme Court last year in an affirmative action case from Ohio, said the latest rulings "firmly establish" the principle of preferential treatment to help minorities and women.

With Wednesday's ruling, he said, "There is much more incentive for employers to work this out. It's now much easier to implement a voluntary program, particularly if you're a private employer."

The ruling came in an appeal by Paul E. Johnson, who was denied promotion to road dispatcher by the Santa Clara County Transportation Agency in California.

The job went to Diane Joyce, who Johnson said was less qualified than himself.

The court said Johnson, who scored two points higher than Ms. Joyce on a test, may have been minimally more qualified for the job. But the justices emphasized that their ruling does not mean unqualified people will be hired or promoted.

"This case will have an impact on all women and I'm very happy for them," said Ms. Joyce, 49.

"I think this is going to be a regrettable thing for the future, especially (for) Caucasian males," said Johnson, 62, who is retired and now lives in Sequim, Wash.

"It's a gross miscarriage of justice. I can't believe people with their intelligence could rule this way," he said.

Justice William J. Brennan, writing for the court, said, "Sex is but one of several factors that may be taken into account in evaluating qualified applicants for a position."

The transportation agency "appropriately took into account as one factor the sex of Diane Joyce in determining that she should be promoted to the road dispatcher position," Brennan said.

But in a dissenting opinion, Justice Antonin Scalia said, "We effectively replace the goal of a discrimination-free society with the quite incompatible goal of proportionate representation by race and by sex in the workplace."

Brennan emphasized that employers should not be forced to admit past bias before taking such steps since to do so would expose them to lawsuits for sex discrimination.

The Santa Clara County Transportation Agency adopted its plan in 1978 to promote women, minorities and the handicapped. At the time, not one of the agency's 238 skilled craft positions was held by a woman.

Two Marines allegedly worked together as spies

Bracy

WASHINGTON (AP) — Two Marine guards arrested for allegedly spying at the U.S. Embassy in Moscow worked together, may have let Soviet agents into the embassy and were involved sexually with Soviet women, military officials say.

The officials, who spoke only on condition of anonymity, also disclosed Wednesday that Cpt. Arnold Bracy, the second Marine arrested in the spy case, had "broken down" during interrogation and acknowledged some wrongdoing.

However, a friend of Bracy's, George Simmons of New York City, said the Marine corporal told him in November that he had rejected the approaches of a Soviet woman at a Moscow social gathering that he saw as a Soviet attempt to entrap him and recruit him as a spy.

"He said he pushed her away. He didn't want any of that," Simmons told the New York Daily News in an interview published today.

As the Marine Corps' first spy case in 38 years of providing security at U.S. embassies unfolded, the corps was considering shortening duty tours for Marine guards at some sensitive posts.

The Marine Corps said Bracy and Sgt. Clayton J. Lonetree, who was arrested last December, worked together at the Moscow embassy from July 1985 to March 1986. Neither man has been formally ordered before a court-martial, but the service has drawn up 19 allegations against Lonetree, including one of espionage, which is punishable by death.

"This is very serious," one official said. "These two guys worked together; it was not just a matter of their tours of duty overlapping in Moscow."

Five Pentagon sources agreed to discuss the case one day after the Marine Corps announced that Bracy, a 21-year-old native of the New York City borough of Queens, had been transferred from the Marine base at Twentynine Palms, Calif., to the base at Quantico, Va., and held on suspicion of espionage.

The corps said Bracy was arrested as a result of the continuing investigation of Lonetree, 25, also being held at Quanitco.

The sources earlier disclosed that Lonetree became involved sexually with a Soviet woman who worked as a translator at the embassy. The sources said Bracy had become involved with a Soviet woman who worked as an embassy cook.

According to the sources, the investigation by military and State Department officials now focuses on the possibility that Bracy and Lonetree allowed Soviet agents to enter the embassy building.

The sources said the discovery of Bracy's activities gives new credence to that possibility, which was first raised against Lonetree but not included in the list of allegations against him.

One source said it appeared Lonetree and Bracy were the only guards on duty some nights.

The officials added that Bracy first was arrested last week and confronted by military investigators on Friday. He was given a lie detector test and "broke down and admitted he had worked with Lonetree," one source said.

The plan to shorten tours of duty would reduce the amount of time marines — most are unmarried men in their early 20s — would be vulnerable to approaches by espionage agents, corps and Reagan administration officials said Wednesday.

While announcing a review in procedures, officials also said the suspected breaches in security at the Moscow embassy have not undermined their faith in the 1,500-member force's ability to provide adequate protection.

"We are in the investigative process now to see what we have learned from this that can be helpful," Col. Carmine Del Grosso, commander of the school that trains the guards, told reporters Wednesday at Quantico, located 35 miles south of Washington.

State Department spokesman Charles E. Redman said, "A full-scale counterintelligence investigation is being conducted in coordination with other appropriate federal agencies. We're looking at every aspect of security at the embassy in Moscow."

Del Grosso and a Reagan administration official speaking on condition he not be identified said one of the ideas being discussed as a preventive measure against future security breaches is to reduce the amount of time guards serve at hardship posts.

Under the current system, most Marine guards serve two 15-month tours of duty, first at a lonely or especially stressful post like Moscow or Kabul, Afghanistan, and then at missions like Paris or Vienna, where life is relatively easy.

The Reagan administration official cautioned, however, that though the guard procedures are under review "It's too early to change what has been a tremendously effective system for many years."

For America's first century and a half, civilians provided security at embassies. But after World War II, when the U.S. global presence increased, the State Department decided it needed a less expensive and more disciplined security force.

In January 1949, after years of haggling over whose budget would pay for the force, the first Marine guards left for posts in Bangkok, Thailand, and Tangier, Morocco. Today, there are 1,500 Marines at 141 overseas posts, including 11 missions in Soviet bloc countries.

Besides manning glass-enclosed command posts at the entrances to embassies and providing a thin, last-ditch defensive perimeter against attack, Marines have some responsibility for internal security.

Rules designed to keep Marines from fraternizing with civilians in places like Moscow are set by the embassies, not by the corps, Del Grosso said.

Asked if a Marine would have access to secret documents other than those inadvertently left on a desk, Del Grosso said, "in general, no."

The typical guard is a 20-year-old corporal, and only unmarried enlisted personnel who promise to remain single during their 30-months abroad are selected.

Church leaders reject Bakker's explanation

Bakker

SPRINGFIELD, Mo. (AP) — Assemblies of God leaders, after hearing seven hours of testmony from a Tennessee preacher, have rejected Jim Bakker's explanation of why he resigned as leader of the PTL Club, a church official says.

Bakker has said he resigned a week ago today because of a "diabolical plot" to take over his $172 million PTL empire. He also said he was blackmailed into paying $115,000 for a one-time extramarital affair with a former church secretary.

But the Rev. Everett Stenhouse, assistant superintendent of the Assemblies of God, said the denomination's leaders looked at "a great deal of evidence that leads us to conclude that, as far as PTL is concerned, there has been no conspiracy whatsoever, there has been no blackmail whatsoever."

Stenhouse issued his statement late Wednesday after a presentation by the Rev. John Ankerberg, a Southern Baptist who investigated rumors of Bakker's extramarital affair with 27-year-old Jessica Hahn.

The Assemblies' 13-member board of presbyters was to meet again today to weigh misconduct charges against Bakker. Today's meeting, like the one Wednesday, was private.

After emerging from Wednesday's meeting, Ankerberg told reporters that television evangelists Jerry Falwell and Jimmy Swaggart joined him in writing Bakker after being given evidence of sexual misconduct.

Ankerberg said the full story about Bakker's improprieties has yet to be disclosed, echoing statements by Swaggart in television interviews Tuesday.

"When the facts are known, I believe it will be clear that the money paid as a consequence of Jim Bakker's sexual misconduct was in no way blackmail," he said. "I believe it can be proven absolutely that there was no blackmail."

He would not elaborate.

Ankerberg said talk of a hostile takeover of PTL was false. He said evidence of Bakker's sexual misconduct had been brought to him by a source he said he wouldn't identify.

Ankerberg, whose weekly religious program is broadcast by three satellite networks, said he gave the presbyters evidence he had gathered about Bakker and expressed confidence they would deal with the matter promptly and properly.

In his statement, Stenhouse said the presbyters, whose regularly scheduled meeting continues through Friday, were passing information to the Rev. Charles Cookman, superintendent of the North Carolina district that includes PTL. PTL stands for Praise The Lord or People That Love.

Cookman has assured the presbyters that the district board would expedite matters, Stenhouse said.

Ankerberg said he learned that information had been given independently to Swaggart and that the two discussed it at a convention of religious broadcasters.

He said they later discussed the matter by phone and that Swaggart asked him if he believed the information to be reliable, and Ankerberg said he thought it to be so but would investigate further.

"When I investigated and reported back to Jimmy, I said then our Biblical mandate, if it is solid evidence, which it seemed to be — the more I looked at it the worse it got — then we've got to confront him. We can't tell anybody, we've just got to confront him."

Ankerberg said Falwell was asked to join them and agreed. He said the three prepared a joint letter to Bakker that they sent to him through his associate, the Rev. Richard Dortch.

Who's on the PTL board?

Associated Press

The following is a list of the eight members of the PTL's new board, which was formed last week and was meeting today to discuss events surrounding the resignation of the Rev. Jim Bakker:

The Rev. Jerry Falwell, founder of the Moral Majority and a fundmentalist Baptist minister from Lynchburg, Va., who replaced Bakker as PTL chairman.

The Rev. Richard Dortch, who was executive director was the only member of the previous board. Last Thursday, Dortch replaced became president of the PTL and host of the "PTL Club" television show.

Former U.S. Interior Secretary James Watt.

Ben Armstrong, executive director of the National Religious Broadcasters.

The evangelist Rex Humbard.

Jimmy Swaggart 'given bum rap'

Swaggart

IRVINE, Calif. (AP) — TV evangelist Jimmy Swaggart, accused of trying to take over the PTL television ministry, "has been given a bum rap," says a religious broadcaster who helped prepare a lawsuit against former PTL leader Jim Bakker.

John Stewart said Wednesday that Swaggart had no intention of taking over the $172 million PTL empire and that no one ever threatened to expose Bakker's 1980 sexual liaison with a church secretary.

Bakker resigned last week and turned his Fort Mill, S.C.-based ministry over to the Rev. Jerry Falwell after saying he had been blackmailed over the extramarital affair.

On Monday, however, Bakker said he quit to head off a "diabolical plot" to expose the affair and take over PTL. Bakker's attorney later said Swaggart was the one behind the plot.

"Mr. Swaggart has been given a bum rap," Stewart said. He said he met with Swaggart and discussed the scandal with him Friday. Stewart refused to reveal the details of that conversation.

Stewart said he helped research a suit, which was never filed, on behalf of the church secretary, Jessica Hahn, 27, of West Babylon, N.Y., who claimed that Bakker pressured her into having sex with her.

The suit was a tactical move to get Bakker to talk about the encounter and not an attempt at blackmail, Stewart told a news conference. He said the blackmail Bakker referred to actually was a settlement negotiated on behalf of Ms. Hahn.

"No one more or less threatened to expose them and said we want money or else we'll expose you. It's more a question of trying to find out the truth and determine if this gal was in fact wronged," Stewart said.

The Charlotte (N.C.) Observer today reported that PTL attorneys paid or set aside $265,000 for Ms. Hahn.

Penthouse wants Jessica Hahn

Jessica Hahn

NEW YORK (AP) — Penthouse publisher Bob Guccione didn't get Fawn Hall to pose, but he hasn't taken his eye off the news in his quest for subjects. He now wants the woman at the center of the PTL sex scandal.

"We are preparing a formal offer for her pictures and exclusive rights to her story," Guccione said Wednesday in a statement. "If she's good enough for Jimmy Bakker, she's good enough for the rest of the world.

"She's been doing God's work long enough. Now we are going to ask her to do work for all humankind."

Guccione spokesman Sy Presten had no details of what the offer to 27-year-old Jessica Hahn would include, and could not say when it would be presented.

The former Pentacostal church secretary has admitted she and Bakker had a sexual liaison seven years ago.

Hours before Guccione's statement, Ms. Hahn kept reporters at bay who were outside her West Babylon home. She has an unlisted telephone number and could not be reached Wednesday evening.

Guccione made a similar request to Ms. Hall, a former model who was National Security Council aide Oliver North's secretary before he was fired during the Iran-Contra affair.

Evangelical war will lead to 'reforms, more caution'

Falwell

COCOA BEACH, Fla. (AP) — The Rev. Jerry Falwell says the war among the country's TV ministers will lead to reforms to make their personal lives and fund-raising activities more accountable to those they claim to represent.

"I think you will see more caution, more care. ...You will see boards (of directors) more deeply involved. We all need accountability, and someone to ask us 'why?' each day," Falwell said Wednesday.

The charges and countercharges that led to the resignation of Jim Bakker as head of the 500,000-member PTL ministry will have a positive effect, Falwell told members of the Tiger Bay Political Club here.

"All of us have to become more sensitive," he said. "This should serve as a clear warning that we have an obligation to lead blameless lives."

Falwell, a Lynchburg, Va., Baptist minister and TV evangelist who founded the Moral Majority, called the infighting "unbelievable."

"Everyone is hurt. The ministers of the gospel are at war with each other."

But he told Tiger Bay club members, reporters and the congregation of the First Baptist Church at nearby Merritt Island that all 400,000 Christian ministers should not be blamed for the faults of a few. The percentage of moral failures among that number of ministers "is infinitesimally small. But they all make headlines."

A minister without a church, without a working board of directors and without controls "really does give a spawning grounds for misconduct," he said.

Falwell said he had heard rumors that Bakker wants to return soon as head of the PTL ministry, which, Falwell said, "would make our job impossible."

Falwell and a new board of directors took over PTL after Bakker resigned last week. Bakker, charging there was a plot to depose him over a sexual encounter seven years ago, admitted the encounter and said he paid blackmail money to cover it up.

Falwell made it clear he would get out if Bakker returns soon, but said he did not know how he and the new board could "deal with the credibility issue" if that were the case.

"I'm not saying he can never return," said Falwell.

Asked at a press conference if Bakker's blackmail money could have come from the organization, Falwell said, "If it came from PTL, then there would be a serious problem" because money raised by the ministry's fund-raising activities is tax-exempt and cannot be used for personal expenses.

Wrong setting

President Jimmy Carter showed extremely poor judgment in his recent trip to Egypt when he publicly slammed President Reagan's foreign policy.

The problem isn't with Carter being critical of Reagan, but rather of him being critical while abroad. In effect, a president is a dignitary of this government and is viewed in the world community as a spokesman for this nation. That's where the need for caution arises.

In a Cairo speech, Carter contended that President Reagan is more interested in exerting military strength than diplomacy to obtain his objectives. And speaking of diplomacy, how diplomatic was Carter's insensitive statement?

President Reagan has declined comment on his predecessor's remarks, but White House spokesman Marlin Fitzwater, in a restrained response, denied the allegation and politely suggested Carter "might forgo criticism of U.S. leaders while on foreign soil." One would think this low-keyed defense might have cooled Carter's partisan ardor. But no. Instead, he answered with still more criticism before departing Egypt for Syria. He accused the Reagan administration of showing little or no interest in the Middle East peace process.

Carter is justifiably proud of his contributions as president to the Camp David negotiations, which culminated in an historic peace settlement between Egypt and Israel. Understandably, he has been frustrated that the peace process he helped to establish has stalled. But in the volatile world of Middle East diplomacy, where any number of issues can torpedo progress toward peace, it is simplistic to single out the Reagan administration as the villain. Reagan administration peace initiatives have come to grief because of Arab-Israeli differences. In light of the realities, Carter's remarks against his own nation's foreign policy show him to be silly and small-minded as no other ex-president has been in recent memory.

When then-President Carter ran for re-election in 1980, U.S. voters declared by overwhelming consensus that he was not an effective president. Judging from his remarks in Cairo he is not proving to be much of an ex-president either.

Another View:

Secaucus songbook

We won't know just how great the find is until we hear the music. But for historical purposes alone, the collection in those boxes found in the warehouse in Secaucus, N.J., is, as one theater historian said, "like opening the tomb of King Tut."

The 80 cartons contain hundreds of unpublished songs by George and Ira Gershwin, Richard Rodgers and Lorenz Hart, Jerome Kern, Harold Arlen and Vincent Youmans; original manuscripts for scores of other songs, among them 30 by Cole Porter, as well as the original manuscripts of Kern's "Old Man River" and "Can't Help Lovin' Dat Man," a 30-minute chunk of Kern's musical "Show Boat," (for which those songs were written) that was cut from the original score because the show was too long, plus the entire scores of Gershwin and Kern musicals that no one ever expected to see again.

The collection was actually found about five years ago. The possession of music publishing companies affiliated with Warner Brothers, the songs had been packed in some 80 cartons, put in storage and almost forgotten for nearly half a century. The first clue to what they contained came in 1982 when Donald Rose, a Gershwin scholar, saw a rough index of the contents in the office of a Warner executive. It was then that the search and the inventory began.

Because music publishers in the 1920s and '30s published only a few songs from each show — the practice of recording complete scores didn't begin until the 1940s — many of those songs have not been heard for generations, and in some cases have probably never been heard by anyone other than their composers.

In the coming months, the country will start to hear them. The American premiere of Gershwin's show "Primrose" and the first staging since 1933 of his musical "Pardon My English," will be performed at the Library of Congress in May.

A great many of the rediscovered songs may be unknown for good reason; they may simply not be very good. But since the great era of American popular song is long past, just the promise of those cartons in Secaucus is a treasure of immense value. (You can almost imagine Ira Gershwin working the name of the place into a lyric.) They may still be writing songs of love, but not like the Gershwins or Rodgers and Hart or Jerome Kern.

SBA rehires worker cleared of crime

WASHINGTON — The Small Business Administration recently rehired its former congressional liaison, Richard Nelson, as a $286-a-day consultant — just days after the U.S. attorney decided not to prosecute him on charges of illegal lobbying activities.

Jack Anderson

Congressional sources say Nelson now works with the SBA office that decides if a business is the proper size for agency help. Ironically, Nelson had been accused of lobbying Congress illegally on this very issue.

According to a Feb. 10 letter to the SBA, the federal prosecutor here said he did not bring the case before a grand jury because Nelson had not violated "current interpretations" of the law. Under these interpretations, federal agencies may not engage in grass-roots lobbying that might lead constituents to contact their member of Congress, but direct lobbying of members by agencies is permitted.

Nelson resigned from the SBA last January, shortly after we reported that the results of an inspector general's investigation of him had been sent to the U.S. attorney for possible prosecution. Nelson has refused to talk to us, but a spokesman said he feels we should retract our earlier report because the decision was made not to prosecute, or even to take administrative action against Nelson.

There is nothing to retract, but an update is appropriate. After the prosecutor determined that Nelson had committed no crime, our associate Stewart Harris saw copies of the investigative file in a follow-up report prepared by the inspector general. Here's what they say:

— At a cost of $4,000 and uncounted man-hours, Nelson ordered the printing of 120,000 copies of a pamphlet titled "Future of the SBA" and its distribution to newspapers, trade groups and Congress. The pamphlet laid out President Reagan's plan (since dropped) to dissolve the SBA into the Commerce Department. But because it didn't explicitly ask the public to contact Congress on behalf of the dissolution plan, it was not considered improper lobbying by the agency.

— Nelson misrepresented a business group's survey he sent to Congress, which indicated its members did not support an independent SBA. In a note attached to the survey, Nelson said the group, the National Federation of Independent Businesses, had not conducted another poll since that one. But the federation had done a follow-up survey that showed its members favored the continued existence of the SBA, and wanted only some of its programs cut. The group's Washington lobbyist said of Nelson's effort: "It is clearly an attempt to try to build a case on half-truths and omissions."

— Trying to block a House Small Business Committee proposal to change the way the SBA decides who gets help from the agency, Nelson told several congressmen about businesses in their districts that would be hurt by the proposal. But congressional aides told the inspector general that much of Nelson's information was outdated, and some of the businesses had already gone broke.

Nelson and three agency employees worked for three weeks to identify the supposedly affected businesses. He told investigators he wasn't lobbying, "only educating (members of Congress) on the adverse effects" of the bill.

— When a congressman asked for the personnel file of an SBA appointee, Nelson plucked out a sensitive document before turning the file over. The document was a White House account of the appointee's political activities. But the U.S. attorney declined to prosecute Nelson for this because, he said, "evidence of criminal intent" was lacking.

DANGEROUS DEPENDENCY: America's military machine has grown too dependent on foreign suppliers for vital spare parts, according to Sen. Alan Dixon, D-Ill., chairman of the Armed Services preparedness subcommittee. For example, printed wiring boards for the main battle tank, the Abrams M1, come from Mexico, and the tank's hybrid circuits are imported from Taiwan. Ninety percent of all ball bearings smaller than 30mm are imported, as are 80 percent of the military's semiconductors. In wartime, Dixon points out, delivery of these foreign-made parts could be impaired. He plans hearings on an "industrial independence" bill.

INDIA AND DOPE: Congressional investigators who recently returned from Asia tell us India has a growing domestic drug problem, as evidenced by large billboards warning against the use of "brown sugar." This is a low-grade heroin that is smoked rather than injected; the billboards were put up, not by the government, but by private groups concerned with the increasing number of dope addicts in India's large cities. The congressional investigators are more directly concerned about India's involvement in the world drug trade, serving as a transshipment zone between Afghanistan and the West.

MINI-EDITORIAL: Remember how quickly 7-Eleven and other convenience stores cleared their shelves of Playboy and Penthouse when Attorney General Edwin Meese's pornography commission decided that these publications were gnawing away at the nation's moral fiber? Well, now that a federal judge in Alabama has outlawed "secular humanist" textbooks, we assume the 7-Eleven and other, equally craven arbiters of public morality will strip from their racks all newspapers, magazines, paperbacks and other printed material that smacks of this dangerous new "religion."

GEORGE F. WILL

'Tin Men' provides laughter with an edge

WASHINGTON — Printed words are wonderful, but they can not whisper. That is unfortunate because, as has been said, many people will believe anything if you whisper it to them, and it would be nice to whisper in America's ear, "You should see the movie 'Tin Men.'"

George F. Will

To whet your appetite, consider this: It is about aluminum-siding salesmen in Baltimore in the summer of 1963. That description may leave your appetite unwhetted, but the era, the setting and the subject all serve this story about an American particularity.

There are many movies about glamorous people, and many about the texture and tribulations of blue-collar existence, urban and rural. The romance of manual labor is most intense for those farthest from it, and Beverly Hills has recently discovered the romance of the family farm: "Country," "The River," "Places in the Heart." But it is relatively rare for movies, the mass medium most given to romanticizing reality, to notice the slice of society least susceptible to sentimentalization: the lower — the barely — middle class.

Arthur Miller's "Death of a Salesman" is an intellectual's recoil-in-horror from the marginality of lower-middle-class life, which Miller suggests is an approximation of death. It was, therefore, a bold act of imagination for Barry Levinson, 44, to make a movie that is unsparing yet uncondescending about the aluminum-siding salesmen who proudly called themselves "tin men." They formed a small cohort of hustlers capable of callous exploitation of customers, but also of a touching pride in their flair for salesmanship.

The movie evokes a now-distant moment and, in doing so, suggests how long a quarter-century is in this republic of change. Americans, for whom change is the only constant, seem emotionally susceptible to small material intimations of the recent yet distant past. In "Hoosiers," a new movie about high-school basketball in Indiana in 1951, the coach drives a Chevy with one of those knobs people used to screw onto steering wheels. This detail is just glimpsed once — the camera does not dwell and lecture. However, this perfect accuracy (the star, Gene Hackman, grew up in Danville, Illinois, so he knows) evokes the atmosphere of an era.

Baltimore's tin men were long on brass and short on scruples about the scams, both hilarious and cruel, by which they vacuumed money from lower-middle-class home-owners hungry for the differentiation that aluminum siding might give. The tin men lost their disreputable elan when a city commission cracked down on their techniques of living by fast talk and tail fins.

The tin men flourished when tail fins were Detroit's operatic use of sheet metal. The movie is heavy on the Coupe de Ville motif. Tin men rationalized ownership of those gaudy barges on the ground that customers saw Cadillacs as proof of respectability. However, several times an ominous specter putts across the horizon of the tin men. It is the Volkswagen Beetle, portent of a more sober future.

The summer of 1963 was the autumn of America's era of postwar swagger and make-up-for-lost-time consumption. White House schedulers were planning a trip to Dallas, Vietnam was a small place with a small U.S. involvement and women were in their traditional places. In "Tin Men," those places are segregated from the many venues (pool halls, diners, Pimlico race track, saloons) where men went through the rituals of being male together.

Why Baltimore? Because it is the place in the heart of Barry Levinson, the writer and director who also gave us "Diner." That movie was another snapshot of life styles of Baltimore's not-at-all-rich and never-going-to-be-famous. Its subject was late adolescence, which is inherently entertaining because it is universally awkward. Making tin men sympathetic subjects of a movie was a braver aim, triumphantly realized.

For those who do not know Baltimore's many charms, that city may seem a suitable symbol of urban life without urbanity, physical and spiritual hardness without softening graces. Today, Baltimore is one of America's most livable cities, and tin men are a vanished species. However, Levison's focus on a slightly frayed side of things serves his two purposes, which are laughter with an edge and love without blinking.

"Tin Men" may be the most constantly funny movie ever made. It is worth the price of admission for one tin man's recurring criticism of the television hit "Bonanza." It is, the critic says, "unrealistic" because (among other things) the Cartwright boys, unlike Baltimore boys, never talk about sex.

The movie is, at bottom, a love story. It expresses a deeply felt love for a time and place. It teaches a sweet lesson for a continental nation of diversity and change, a lesson Levinson, too delicate to preach, only intimates. It is that people and places need not be lovely to be loved.

Recruiting 'freedom fighters' for ol' SLU!

They always talk about the kids on the team being hurt when a college gets caught cheating, but they never mention the real victims of the tragedy — the alumni.

Art Buchwald

Barnstable is no exception. As an alumnus of SLU he has been in shock ever since Southern Lumbar University was forbidden to field a football team for three years. The penalty was for committing 1,345 conference infractions, mostly felonies, while trying to maintain a viable gridiron establishment.

"It's an outrage," he said. "The alumni are the only ones suffering. Young athletes have their whole lives ahead of them, but we graduates can't afford to lose one football game in the September years of our lives."

"Maybe the NCAA picked on Southern Lumbar because it's in Texas."

"They stuck it to us because we had a winning team. They said we paid our players. Well, how can you ask kids to go out there and lay down their lives for the Hod Carriers without laundry money?"

"I read somewhere," I said, "that the Hod Carriers Booster Club had the largest slush fund of any team in college football."

"That's what alumni are for," Barnstable said as he got up from behind his desk and pretended to throw a pass. "The coach gives us the names of the players, the school gives us their home addresses and the Boosters make sure the money gets to the SLU freedom fighters."

"Then the Booster Club's main role is to look after the welfare of the students?"

"That's all. Is it a sin to contribute to a tight end's family mortgage? Is there anything wrong in financing a struggling linebacker's career in ballroom dancing until he earns enough credits to get into medical school? The NCAA claimed we gave cars to the players. This was a lie. The only thing we did was provide each kid with a safe vehicle to get to and from the practice field every day. If he stayed off steroids for the entire season he could buy the auto for one dollar in cash."

"Anything else?" I asked.

"We're pro-family so we gave each player's grandmother a job as a groundskeeper at the stadium."

"And that is what the NCAA is punishing you for?"

"The Hod Carriers Booster Club has taken a beating. Everyone thinks we paid our players more than Southern Methodist. This is a big fat lie. Our salary scale was the same."

"What about marks?"

"We gave every athlete a grade according to his need. We had 'A' players and we had 'B' players. And we had three youngsters who even took their own tests. The NCAA doesn't talk about them."

"You couldn't have a university football team without boosters," I said.

Barnstable wiped a tear out of his eye. "Or a booster without a team. I can't explain what it feels like to stand in a stadium with 100,000 fans, look down on the shiny helmets of the Hod Carriers and say, "I paid for that team.'"

"So tell me. What are you going to do now that the Hod Carriers have been banned from playing for three years?"

"We are going to take all the players we had signed up before we got in trouble and lease them to other teams in the conference. With the money from that we will go out and buy us a whole new team of young high school players who should be ready to freedom fight for SLU just about the time our suspension is up."

EDITOR'S NOTE — This day-by-day account of 1787, the year that the U.S. Constitution was written, blends the significant with the small, personal details that bring history to life. The authors spent three years in research and writing, drawing on letters and personal diaries as well as the better-known historical documents. The writers are David D.C. Dutcher, David A. Kimball, Robert K. Sutton and Anna Coxe Toogood, all of the Independence National Historical Park in Philadelphia, where the Constitution was created 200 years ago.

Monday, March 26, 1787
PHILADELPHIA TODAY

Jacob Hiltzheimer attended the Pennsylvania Assembly today. He reported that the members passed a bill giving Oliver Evans a 14-year patent to make and sell machines that elevate flour from one floor to another in mills.

The Assembly also paid Joseph Sepher for planting 37 trees on the State House Square as part of a continuing beautification plan.

The Pennsylvania Supreme Executive Council ordered the Commissary of Military Stores to provide eight-inch cannon shells to the County of Philadelphia for confining convicts. The cannon balls will be used with chains around convict's legs so they cannot escape from labor crews doing construction in the city.

Benjamin Franklin received a letter from a J.P. Malcom today, asking if he could dedicate an engraving to the doctor. The engraving was designed in the classic style and called the "Genius of America." Malcom enclosed a specimen of his earlier work, presumably to show Franklin that he was an engraver of some ability.

CONFEDERATION TODAY

Congress convened with nine states represented. The members accepted the credentials of John B. Ashe of North Carolina and Edward Carrington of Virginia as new congressmen.

In other business, Congress received three petitions for reimbursement. One was ordered paid and two were rejected.

DELEGATES TODAY

William Blount, a delegate from North Carolina and a member of Congress from that state, celebrated his 38th birthday today.

Several weeks ago, George Washington had asked Henry Knox for information on a Frenchman, the Chevalier D'Anterroches. Knox had investigated the man and today sent his report. The chevalier was the son of a high ranking officer in the French army. His father wanted him to become a priest and forced him to enter a monastery; the young man rebelled, however, and ran away to join the English army. He made his way to America as an English officer and during the course of the war changed sides and fought for the American cause. The chevalier was then living in Elizabeth Town, N.J., and married to the daughter of a local shoemaker.

Knox believed that the chevalier could be useful as an employee of the French government in the United States, since he could not expect to make enough money from the American government to support his family. Knox suggested that Washington might write to the Marquis de Lafayette on the man's behalf to see if he could arrange some form of employment with the French.

LOOKING BACK
William Blount

Willian Blount was born on this day in 1749 in Windsor, N.C. Little information has survived about his early life. His name surfaced during the Revolution as a paymaster for various units in North Carolina's militia. Then, in 1780, he entered politics, which became his major interest.

Blount's two younger brothers, Thomas and John Gray Blount, became successful merchants in North Carolina, selling tobacco in Europe. William was involved in the family business, and appeared to have been the political muscle in the various transactions. From the correspondence among the three brothers, it was apparent that the confederation government was not very helpful in promoting their business interests. In fact, during 1787, Thomas was in Europe handling the company's business.

William Blount had served in the North Carolina Legislature since 1780, and was selected to represent his state in Congress in 1786. He was in Congress while the Constitutional Convention was in session, and, in fact, spent more time in New York than in Philadelphia during the summer of 1787. Following the convention, he was a member of North Carolina's second ratifying convention in 1789 (the first convention did not ratify the document), then, when the Constitution was approved, he ran for the Senate. He was unsuccessful in his bid for office, and moved to Tennessee as the appointed governor of that territory. When Tennessee became a state in 1796, he was elected as one of the first U.S. senators, but his term was cut short by a scandal.

It seems Blount had overextended himself in land speculation and was desperate for money. He plotted with Indians, frontiersmen, and the British fleet to forcibly take Florida and Louisiana from Spain and give jurisdiction to the British. President John Adams found out about it, turned the information over to Congress, and the Senate voted to expel him in July 1797. He returned to Tennessee and was elected to the state Senate one year later. He died in 1800, survived by his wife and six children.

Girl attacked by neighbor's bear

MORLEY, Mich. (AP) — A 7-year-old girl was hospitalized in stable condition Wednesday after a neighbor's 400-pound pet black bear bit her, authorities said.

Amanda Barnes was attacked Tuesday near her Aetna Township home.

"The little girl got off the bus, and the neighbor's bear had got out," said Mecosta County Sheriff's Sgt. Richard Rau. "She walked by it and started to run then it reached out and grabbed her."

She was in Mecosta County General Hospital in Big Rapids, where she was being treated for several severe bites on the buttocks.

Deputies said her step-brother, 16-year-old Wayne Hughes, freed her by reaching into the mouth of the bear, grabbing it by the lips and pulling it away.

The 4-year-old animal, named Wooly, was fatally shot after it was captured by county officials and its owner, Ron Monroe, deputies said.

Rau said the animal was "quite friendly in the past."

New study says AIDS may lie dormant 15 years

By MALCOLM RITTER
AP Science Writer

NEW YORK — The AIDS virus may lie dormant for an average of 15 years before causing disease, according to a new study that suggests millions of AIDS cases may yet appear in people already infected with the virus.

The study released today by economist Malcolm Rees estimates 2.5 million Americans who were infected with the virus by around the end of 1984 will develop AIDS during the next 30 years or so, barring medical advances.

The calculations giving the 15-year average incubation period also suggest two-thirds of AIDS cases will arise between 10 and 20 years after infection, but Rees stressed Wednesday that the numbers are not firm.

The study is "a picture of the thing. It's not the last word on it, I'm not claiming it is," Rees said in a telephone interview.

He also said that if AIDS patients survive longer in the future with the disease, the 15-year average would refer more to time until death than time to the appearance of the disease.

Rees, who is studying the cost of AIDS for the British government, reported his calculations in the British journal Nature. They are based on data from AIDS patients who had been infected by transfusions, and national data on numbers of AIDS cases.

The estimates differ from some prior research. While Rees calculated 2.5 million infected Americans by the end of 1984 who would get AIDS, the federal government has estimated a total of 1 million to 2 million Americans would be infected by June 1986.

Other projections have been shorter-term. Government scientists last year projected 200,000 to 310,000 AIDS cases by the end of 1991, mostly from people already infected, and said longer-term projections were too uncertain. The government estimates 20 percent to 30 percent of infected people develop AIDS within five years.

A report last year from the National Academy of Sciences and Institute of Medicine estimated that 25 percent to 50 percent of infected people will get AIDS in five to 10 years.

"Beyond 10 years, we just said you could speculate, but we didn't want to speculate," Dr. James Chin, chief of the infectious disease branch of the California Department of Health Services, said in an interview.

Chin said Rees' calculation of a 15-year average incubation is possible, but "we begin to speculate when we go beyond the data we have."

Rees said the calculations imply that a very high proportion of people who are infected eventually develop AIDS. He declined to give a percentage.

He based his calculations partly on delays between infection and appearance of acquired immune deficiency syndrome in a study of people infected by blood transfusions, because the time of those infections could be pinpointed.

Rees found the delays could be described by a mathematical model with what statisticians call a "normal" distribution for numbers of infected people developing AIDS in any given year.

NATION IN BRIEF

Toy train, music box recalled due to paint

WASHINGTON (AP) — Parent alert: The Consumer Product Safety Commission has announced the recalls of a wooden toy train and a toy music box because their paint contains excess lead that could be dangerous to children.

The Wood Toy Train, Item No. 300403, and the Toy Chest Music Box, Item No. 315427, are being recalled by Enesco Imports Corp. of Elk Grove, Ill., the commission said Wednesday.

Tests by the state of Ohio found lead in the paint on the toys exceeded federal standards. Children can suffer brain damage if they ingest lead.

AIDS reason for abstinence

WASHINGTON (AP) — Abstinence should be the main lesson children and teen-agers learn in sex education courses, and AIDS is another good reason for that, Secretary of Education William J. Bennett says.

"The phenomenon of AIDS has nature now being the unwitting ally of responsible morality," Bennett told 125 leaders of state boards of education and state school superintendents Wednesday.

Pentagon to do better

WASHINGTON (AP) — The General Accounting Office, in a report stemming from a 1985 charter plane crash that killed 248 soldiers in Canada, says the Pentagon must do a better job managing and overseeing the chartering of civilian airplanes that carry troops.

Many of the steps called for in the report already have been taken, the congressional watchdog agency noted.

The crash of the Arrow Air DC-8 shortly after takeoff from Gander, Newfoundland, killed 256 people — eight crew members and 248 soldiers returning to their Fort Campbell, Ky., base after duty with a peacekeeping force in the Mideast.

Rare birds recovered

WASHINGTON (AP) — A pair of rare Brazilian parrots — bright blue Spix's macaws — were recovered in a raid on an alleged smuggling operation in Paraguay, the World Wildlife Fund says.

The two young birds had been stolen months ago from Brazil, where the only nest in the world was believed to be, the international conservation organization said in a statement Wednesday.

County forecasts

Midland, Ector, Glasscock, Upton, Reagan, Crane, Gaines, Andrews, Dawson, Borden, Martin and Howard counties: Tonight, fair with a low in the upper 30s. West wind 5 to 10 mph. Friday, fair and warmer with a high near 70. Southwest wind 10 to 20 mph.

Sterling, Coke, Irion and Tom Green counties: Tonight, mostly fair with a low near 40. West wind 5 to 10 mph. Friday, fair and warmer with a high near 70. Southwest wind 10 to 20 mph.

WEATHER

"Until it passes, we'll be having cloudy skies," Pashos said. The weather service's early morning forecast held that clearing should occur late this afternoon, and today's high temperatures should reach into the upper 50s.

For tonight, the service predicted fair skies and a low in the upper 30s, with westerly winds at 5 to 10 mph.

Friday should be fair and warmer, with a high near 70 and southwesterly winds at 10 to 20 mph, Pashos reported.

The weather system that may have reminded Midlanders of early February instead of late March dropped about 0.8 of an inch of precipitation at the airport, including an hour of snow between 10:30 p.m. and 11:30 p.m. Wednesday night, Pashos said.

There were no accumulations, he said.

The Midland Police Department reported no nighttime accidents owing to the weather, but two fender-benders were reported before 10 a.m. this morning, a dispatcher said.

At 9:30 a.m. this morning, Texas Department of Public Safety troopers were working an accident with injuries on FM 307 east of U.S. Interstate 20, a Midland County Sheriff's Department dispatcher said.

Joyce Studlar, a petroleum association executive committee member and coordinator of Saturday's Blow Out, was hopeful that events won't have to move indoors because of lingering bad weather.

Among events scheduled for outside at the Blow Out — to be held at the Holiday Inn Country Villa on West U.S. 80 — are a brisket cook-off, battle of the bands competition and performances by gymnastics and square dancers, Ms. Studlar said.

Estimates are that the Blow Out — which is intended to encourage optimism in the oil industry — will attract between 1,500 and 3,000 revelers, she said.

"If it does rain, as far as the events go, I'm sure we could move them inside or under cover," she said. "Hopefully we won't have to do that."

STATE

Clearing skies and warmer temperatures were forecast across Texas following a soggy day that included some light snow and scattered showers and thunderstorms across the state.

Clearing skies were forecast tonight across the state. Slightly warmer temperatures are forecast for Friday and indications are that the weekend weather will continue to improve, the National Weather Service says.

The light snow was forecast today across the Panhandle and South Plains where temperatures hovered just above the freezing mark at dawn.

Dettman investigating numerous cases of perjury

By PATRICK CRIMMINS
Staff Writer

County Attorney Mark Dettman has launched an investigation of lying on official documents he says may lead to the first charges of perjury filed by his office since 1981.

And, in a separate case, the Midland County District Attorney's office intends to prosecute a Midland man on a rare aggravated perjury charge.

Dettman said although his investigation is incomplete, he said certain types of perjury may be rife at the courthouse.

He said he has decided to prosecute those suspected criminals he says falsely claim they are unable to hire an attorney.

"Some of these people are applying for court-appointed attorneys, claiming they have no assets," he said. "Many of these people are falsifying these statements in order to get the taxpayers to pay for their attorneys."

Dettman said his office is reviewing files of 60 to 70 individuals who have requested a court-appointed attorney since January of last year.

He said although none of the cases are ready for prosecution, he said "Ten to 20 percent of those" will probably be prosecuted as perjury. And, "that is a conservative figure. There may be more."

Also, Dettman said he is investigating at least four cases of perjury he said were committed when suspected hot-check writers lied on sworn affidavits of forgery.

When confronted by authorities, Dettman said hot check writers often sign the affidavits, which swear a signature suspected of belonging to them was forged.

"They think the easy way out is to file an affidavit of forgery," he said.

Dettman said he has hired a handwriting expert to analyze the forgery documents, and he said perjury charges will be filed if his suspicions are comfirmed.

Dettman said when a person requests that a criminal district court appoint an attorney, a "pauper's affidavit" must be completed, which is a defendant's declaration of an inability to pay for an attorney.

A financial statement is also required, he said. Information about income, job history, bank accounts, type of residence, and others must be provided.

Dettman said in an extreme example, one person who claimed inability to pay included certificates of deposit valued at $3,500 on the financial statement.

Dettman said he does not recall the prosecution of a misdemeanor perjury case by the county's attorney's office since 1981.

Perjury, a class A misdemeanor, is punishable by up to a year imprisonment and a maximum fine of $2,000.

Dettman said he thinks the prospect of a year in jail should act as a deterrent to others who may want to lie and think they won't get caught.

Wayne Frost, assistant district attorney, said an aggravated perjury charge, a third-degree felony punishable by imprisonment of two to 10 years and a fine up to $5,000, is also a rarity in the county.

"I guess since I have been with the office, maybe in three years, I have seen maybe one or two at most, if that many.

"The biggest reason for that is because most people, when they are under oath, will tend to be as truthful as they can, because there is a criminal sanction for being honest."

Frost said he preferred not to discuss the case of one accused perjurer here, since that person has not been indicted.

But he said in general terms, the most common forms of perjury are lying to a grand jury and at a criminal trial. But, he said even if detected, perjury is difficult to prove.

"If someone does perjure themselves, you often can't provve they did it on purpose," Frost said. "The way the law characterizes it, someone has to do it with the intent to deceive. That makes it difficult to prove.

Fitness instructors promote corporate health programs

By JANE MARLER DEES
Staff Writer

With increased pressures created by the financial hardships in the Midland work place today, stress and tension run more rampant than ever, a local fitness expert said.

To counter this negative health trend, two employees of a Midland health club have formed a business, Cole and Carrica Fitness Consultants, to help those perched on every rung on the corporate ladder feel better while at work.

A concept of "wellness" is what the business' owners, Randi Cole and Xavier Carrica, said they hope to help their clients attain.

"Wellness is the balance between the body and the mind. You are whole...healthy physically as well as spiritually," said Carrica, himself a cable television account executive and aerobics instructor.

The two said they have been in contact with fitness instructors in Los Angeles and Dallas and said they found similar corporate health programs have proven quite successful.

Techniques of reducing stress include learning how to release tension and manage pressure, Ms. Cole said. Moreover, Ms. Cole and Carrica said they want to make people aware that total fitness can be achieved while at the office...even while at the desk.

Alone, one can relax at the desk by stretching the neck, rolling the head around a few times and doing a few inconspicuous shoulder rolls, Ms. Cole said.

At home, one should put on soft music and sit and take deep breaths to relax, the two said.

Caffeine is a big problem at the office, Ms. Cole said. Diet sodas contain just as much as coffee, she said.

The caffeine acts as a stimulant and once one stops drinking it in the morning or even afternoon, the jittery hands, dull headaches and "tummy rot" set in, Ms. Cole added.

With their business, individualized fitness programs are designed for the corporate client, Ms. Cole said.

Already, a Midland bank and real estate company have signed on with Cole and Carrica Fitness Consultants, said Ms. Cole, who is fitness director at the Midlander Health Club.

"We could do a half an hour at noon that would include warming up, stretching and tension release... without getting sweaty," Carrica said.

In the case of the real estate company's program, Ms. Cole said an aerobics class was designed.

"Classes are held at the premise and geared to their needs whether it be after work or in the morning," she said.

"We are not aware that we're not in control of our health. Most people would benefit from just relaxing," Ms. Cole continued.

Recent statistics show as much as $250 million is lost annually because of employees' lack of physical health, or as Carrica said, their "not balanced" bodies.

The two agree: Every job has stress and many people find it hard to leave work at work. Channeling it out of the body in a positive manner is what they said want to teach to Midland's work force.

Techniques of reducing stress include learning how to release tension and manage pressure...Want to make people aware that total fitness can be achieved while at the office...One can relax at the desk by stretching the neck, rolling the head around a few times and doing-...shoulder rolls.

Shooting victim says 'It's miracle we're alive'

DALLAS (AP) — The grandmother and mother of a 9-year-old girl, who along with her mother was abducted, assaulted and shot by a trucker, are keeping a vigil over the girl in the intensive-care unit of a Dallas hospital.

"It's a miracle we're alive," the girl's mother, Gail Lynn Amos, said from her hospital bed.

Ms. Amos, 35, and her daughter Angela were abducted by the trucker March 11 when they were stranded by car trouble while driving through West Texas on Interstate 20, said Ector County Sheriff's Lt. Jeff Schwende.

The two were shot execution-syle and left to die in a wooded area west of Odessa along I-20 near Penwell, Schwende said.

Ms. Amos was shot once in the neck with a .25 caliber automatic pistol, authorities said. She had surgery Wednesday to remove the bullet, which had been lodged near her spine. She was in satisfactory condition, officials said.

Angela was shot once in the head and remained in a coma for several days. She underwent two operations in the past week and was listed in serious condition Wednesday, upgraded from critical earlier.

"Angie wants to be a teacher," said her grandmother, Jan Amos. "The doctor said she may be blind, deaf and unable to walk — she's paralyzed on her left side.

"I love Gail's answer when the doctor told her that Angie might be blind. Gail told him that if Angie is blind, God will use this to teach the blind. If Angie can't hear, God will use this to teach the deaf. If Angie can't walk, God will use this to teach the lame."

Ms. Amos, an El Paso Mail carrier who is divorced, said her family, friends and her "deep faith in the Lord" are helping her through the tragedy.

Ector County Sheriff's Lt. Jerry Davis said authorities in about 20 mostly southern states are looking for the trucker, who was driving a dark, possibly green, 18-wheel tractor-trailer rig. He is described as being 30 to 35 years old, 6 feet tall and about 230 pounds.

Blind woman doesn't consider herself handicapped

Most of the time, Kay Stephens sees a lovely world of glorious sunrises and sunsets. She enjoys the West Texas sky and landscapes and the mostly hospitable people. She revels in music — God's sublime sounds.

She has treated life quite well, and life has been kind to her. On that, she has no reservations. But she does wonder.

Sometimes, people puzzle her, but she watches them.

"Don't ever depend on people to tell you what the weather is like," she said. "Out of 10 people, you'll get 10 different answers. So, you go outside and see for yourself if you want to know what the weather is like."

And so she does.

Ms. Stephens is sightless. She has been living in a world of darkness since age 5 when an illness stole away her visual eyesight. Yet, her images of the world are vivid.

Though blind by the world's standards, Ms. Stephens doesn't consider herself really blind.

"Blind to me is like an invalid — somebody who couldn't do anything. There are more blind people in this world than they'll admit," said Ms. Stephens, a 37-year-old Midland businesswoman. "If they don't use what they've got, then I consider them blind — worse than I am."

Ms. Stephens is owner and operator of Kay's Concession Shop in the George Mahon Federal Building and Post Office in Midland. She has operated the business since May 1974.

Her business is faring well despite the slew of bankruptcies in the city.

"Well," she said, "I try. "I haven't gone under yet and don't intend to. So, I guess I'm doing OK."

She operates the business weekdays from 7:30 a.m. to a bit after 5 p.m.

Her short-range eyesight is her slender cane. Her radar is in her deft hands and systematic arrangement of items and goods at work and at home.

Once, a customer jammed up a newspaper vending machine and couldn't get a newspaper or her change back. She could see but couldn't see.

So, Ms. Stephens sauntered over, gently nudged the machine, which took the change, and the customer got her newspaper.

"Just magic," said the customer.

"I am magic," replied Ms. Stephens.

Her keen vision of the world is twofold: her insightful perception and her sense of sound.

"You see," Ms. Stephens explained, "I listen real carefully — try to listen real closely."

She readily exchanges goods for coins and dollars and is virtually flawless in her delivery.

Ms. Stephens, a graduate of Robert E. Lee High School in Midland, studied with the aid of Braille books and text and books on tape. She attended the Texas School for the Blind in Austin. And, today, she fancies attending movies, plays, concerts. "Oh, I love to go to concerts." She sings in her church choir, rides a bicycle, plays miniature golf, watches television quite selectively, likes old radio programs and shows, and recalls the time in 1976 when she saw Elvis Presley in concert in Odessa. "I'm not as crazy now as I use to be about him."

She opened her business here the same year the Federal Building was completed and dedicated.

"It's pretty rewarding," she said. "I've got a great location here."

In addition to the business, she operates an unofficial information booth. She knows what's going on in Federal Court, in Bankruptcy Court, what the postal workers are up to, and knows when a group of folks are standing around the "wanted" bulletin board near her shop and the two pay telephones.

Most folks are trustworthy.

"You know who to watch out for. You learn," Ms. Stephens said. "You kind of tell if you have to watch them by the inflection in their voice." Every now and them, someone will try to pass a bogus bill or a food-stamp coupon. "Now, I watch them like a hawk. I'm pretty cautious."

Occasionally, she has thought of changing business locations. But those are fleeting notions.

"I could see myself stuck in a 20-story building and everybody had moved out. It would be spooky — just me and the bats."

Her sense of humor and wit are joys.

"When I was little, I use to eat dirt by the handfuls."

But she was a darling girl.

You bet.

"I was sweet — just as sweet as honey." She smiled. "My brother (Audie) and I never fought — never got in trouble," she said. "If you believe that, I have some property out south of town I'd like to sell you."

Ms. Stephens disdains jokes about blindness and other challenging conditions which cause people to summon strength and courage to overcome. "I don't like jokes when they pertain to visual problems or hearing problems or any handicap," she said.

"I don't begrudge that (blindness) because it had to happen to somebody, and I can handle it a heck of a lot better than most people."

Funny ladies say humor has gotten facelift

King

AUSTIN (AP) — Female humor these days is a lot like comedienne Phyllis Diller's mug: it has undergone a pretty extensive face lift.

At least according to some of the nation's funniest women — such as Carol Channing, Fannie Flagg and Shana Alexander — who gathered Wednesday for a symposium entitled "Funny Women: By Pen and Performance."

To be humorous, women used to ridicule their bodies and their faces, said Liz Carpenter, the former press secretary to Lady Bird Johnson. But Phyllis Diller's face isn't the only thing that has gotten a lift, she said.

"If powerful men have used humor as a tool on the podium, ordinary women have used it as a tool in the kitchen and utility room," Ms. Carpenter said.

Miss Channing regaled the overflow crowd with a tale of what happened when she first tried to find a job in theater and went to the president of the biggest New York booking company.

"I swung right into my first number, something I was sure of because it was a big hit with the girls in Bennington (College)," she said. "A simple ancient Gaelic dirge...It was adapted from the original Greek tragedy Oerestes.'

The program also included humor writers Nora Ephron and Florence King. Columnist Liz Smith moderated the program, the third annual Liz Sutherland Carpenter Distinguished Lectureship in the Humanities and Sciences.

Each of the women related stories of how they got started in the business. The crowd particularly enjoyed an impression of Lady Bird Johnson, wife of the late President Lyndon Baines Johnson, as performed by Ms. Flagg.

"Look to yer left, look to yer right," Ms. Flagg said with a Texas drawl. "Do yew see a thing of beauty? If not, plant a tree, a shrub or a bush."

Ms. Smith said women are now sharing in the fun that men once kept to themselves.

Being funny, said Ms. Ephron, is like slipping on a banana peel. When it happens, people laugh at you. "But if you tell someone, it's your joke."

Ms. Ephron reported for the New York Post and was nominated for an Academy Award for Best Original Screenplay for the screenplay to the hit movie "Silkwood."

"There are some kinds of people who do not have a sense of humor," Ms. King said. "They are happy, optimistic people who write postcards that say, 'The scenery is beautiful, wish you were here — parentheses, Ha Ha. If you know someone who puts Ha Ha in parentheses, get rid of them."

Ms. King said she attributes her humorous disposition to her grandmother. Her grandmother wanted her to be a southern lady, so she sang her tearjerking dirges.

"The first article I wrote was called 'I Committed Adultery in a Diabetic Coma,'" Ms. King said. She said at the height of the women's movement she was writing pornography.

"I got so sick of sex that one night when I got an obscene phone call I said, 'Oh, don't talk shop,'" Ms. King said without cracking a smile.

Nursing home trial jurors gather for reunion

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — Jurors in the murder trial of a nursing home gathered for a reunion to mark the first anniversary of the marathon case's end, and say they still are angered about their deadlock.

A year ago Wednesday, then-State District Judge Don Morgan declared a mistrial after the jury locked at 9-3 for conviction of the Autumn Hills Convalescent Centers Inc. and five executives.

The trial, which marked the first time a corporation had been charged with murder in Texas, was a six-month battle that cost the state $1 million to prosecute and the Texas City nursing home $3 million to defend.

It also took its toll on the jurors, who heard testimony about patient abuse.

"I felt like I wasted six months out of my life because of the outcome," Janet Barse of San Antonio said. "I will not serve on a jury ever again. I feel like my civic duty has been done."

Ms. Barse and several other jurors met Wednesday at a downtown bookstore to reminisce about the trial. They posed for photographs with Steven Long, a Galveston author who wrote "Death Without Dignity," a book chronicling the case.

The jurors in the Autumn Hills trial heard tales of patient abuse and exhaustive rebuttal from nursing home attorneys. Some of the testimony indicated Elnora Breed suffered from neglect and maggot-infested bedsores.

The defendants were charged with causing the deaths of Edna Mae Witt in October 1978 and Ms. Breed in November 1978. It took six years to get the case to court, but the charges were dismissed several weeks after the trial.

"It's something you won't forget," Raymond Rodriguez said about his role in the trial.

Juror Sherman Miller, one of the three holdouts, said he went to the bookstore to buy a copy of the book and to see the other jurors. He said he still believes he was right.

"I think they had the wrong people on trial," Miller said. "Besides, I'm just an old country boy from Kentucky. The technicalities of all of those medical terms — I didn't know anything about it. It was confusing."

Rodriguez and other jurors have said the trial brought public awareness to the problems of nursing homes.

"They ought to continue checking it real closely, making sure that things like this don't happen again," he said.

A Texas Senate committee approved a bill Tuesday that would require nursing homes to request criminal background checks on prospective non-licensed employees.

Roy Barrera Sr., one of the attorneys who represented the nursing home, said everybody won in the case.

"I think that the defendants were winners because they were not convicted and because they are not going to let conditions of this type exist in their facilities anymore," Barrera said.

Flores says papal visit impact may not be felt for years

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — The impact of Pope John Paul II's visit to the United States may not be felt for years, Archbishop Patrick Flores said after meeting recently with the pontiff.

The pope is scheduled to visit San Antonio on Sept. 13 as part of a nine-city, 10-day tour. Flores was one of several host bishops and archbishops for the U.S. trip who talked with the pope and his staff in Rome last week.

"We've had big fiestas. We've had big rodeos, but...I think it's going to take 10 years for us to say, 'What did it really do for us?'" the archbishop said at a news conference Wednesday.

When meeting with the pope, the host bishops presented papers compiled on specific issues on the U.S. Catholic Church to Vatican officials.

Flores, the first Hispanic bishop in the United States, told the pope about the growing number of Hispanic Catholics in the nation who are no longer confined to the Southwest.

"We had the opportunity to talk about what was in our papers and plus a whole lot more, and then and there in those exchanges we were able to feel like that they understand us a whole lot better," Flores said.

"I know I was much more extensive in the area of Hispanics in San Antonio, Texas and the United States because they had asked me to," he said.

During his San Antonio visit, which falls on a Sunday, the pope will celebrate a Mass outdoors. He also will speak to people involved in church social work and those thinking about becoming priests or sisters.

The pope also will visit Our Lady of Guadalupe church in the heart of the Mexican-American community.

Mrs. Sheffield had resided in Midland for the past year and a half.

Midland man treated for several stab wounds

From Staff Reports

A 28-year-old Midland man was undergoing treatment after he was stabbed several times at an apartment near downtown this morning.

A spokeswoman at Midland Memorial Hospital said the man suffered several stab wounds.

About 9:50 a.m. today police were called to an apartment in the 500 block of North Colorado Street by the apartment manager. There they found the man and called an ambulance. Paramedics said he had been stabbed in the cheek, nose, shoulder, chest and back. The motive for the attack was not immediately known, police said.

Police Roundup

A 30-year-old man and a woman are in custody at the Midland County Jail after they were arrested Wednesday at a local motel following a Crime Stoppers tip.

According to sheriff's office reports, officers received the tip and went to a room at the Metro Inn, 3708 W. Wall St. Once there, they detected a strong odor of marijuana, and found more than two pounds of marijuana in the room. The two were arrested without incident, reports said.

Midland police are investigating the burglary of a storage unit. Reports said a tool box and tools valued at $150, wood axes valued at $100, a router valued at $100, a cook stove valued at $50, a saber saw valued at $40, and a portable lantern valued at $40 were stolen from a unit at Colonial Self Storage, 1010 N. Loop 250.

Police said the burglary occurred between 5 p.m. Tuesday and 8 a.m. Wednesday.

In other reports, police are investigating the theft of four tires and four aluminum wheels valued at $1,400. Reports said the items were stolen between 10:40 p.m. Tuesday and 6 a.m. Wednesday from a residence in the 400 block of Nicklaus Avenue.

PERJURY

"The law doesn't characterize someone being faced with such a serious penalty for making a mistake."

Frost said prosecutors, as officers of the court, have an obligation to investigate any allegations of perjury. He said defense attorneys have the same responsibility.

"I suspect either side, if they knew someone was going to perpetrate a fraud on the court, they would do something about it," he said.

Pilot available to scatter ashes

FORT WORTH (AP) — Need someone to scatter your remains from an airplane after you die? Bill Rich is waiting for your call.

He hasn't gotten overwhelming response so far, but Rich, a pilot, wants to take on the unusual sideline to his job as a flying instructor.

He has placed ads offering to scatter cremated remains for a reasonable fee.

"I think it's a good idea," he says. "What else can you do with all those ashes?"

Rich, 56, began advertising the service in Fort Worth. He hasn't yet decided what he will charge, but says he may ask between $60 and $100. He's convinced the idea could be a revenue-raiser because of the expense of traditional funerals and even disposing of ashes.

Clements says he's not opposed to tax referendum

By JIM WARREN
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — While maintaining he still opposes new taxes, Gov. Bill Clements said Wednesday he would not "interfere" with a referendum by the voters to raise their own taxes.

Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby, who met with the governor for more than an hour Wednesday afternoon, said he opposes referendums because lawmakers are charged with writing laws, including tax packages.

In a letter to Rep. Bill Hollowell, D-Grand Saline, Clements said he would not oppose his plan to add another ¾ of a cent to the sales tax and earmarking the money for the state's overcrowded prisons and jails. Hollowell's plan calls for an election Nov. 3 on whether to increase the sales tax through an amendment.

"My opposition to new taxes does not extend to a tax that the people vote to put on themselves," Clements wrote in his letter to Hollowell. "That is an entirely different matter, and I would accept the judgment of the voters."

But Hobby and many legislators have frowned on so-called "dedicated" funds that set aside certain money for specific programs — like prisons — because it limits the Legislature's control when writing spending bills. Also, "They're an ineffective, cosmetic sort of thing," Hobby said.

Hobby says with criticial problems also in education and human services, "I'd much rather dedicate a tax to education than to prisons."

Hollowell and House Speaker Pro Tem Hugo Berlanga offered a similar plan during last summer's special sessions but that effort failed. Hollowell's new plan would allow the state to loan some of the additional sales tax money to help expand local jails if prison overcrowding eases.

Rep. Allen Hightower, D-Huntsville, has a bill in a House committee that would increase the sales tax and earmark the money for prisons — without a vote by the people.

While saying he had not changed his position on taxes, the governor emphasized that he did not support or oppose a dedicated prison tax voted on by the people. "That has to do with my old advocacy of initiative and referendum," he said.

Clements pushed for initiative and referendum authority during his first term as governor and the Legislature consistently rejected the idea of allowing citizens to vote on their own laws.

"Well, we're back to initiative and referendum again. I thought that was dead," Hobby said. "It's an idea that has not improved with age."

Senate panel working on education bills

By STEVE LEVINE
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

STATE

AUSTIN — Trying to maintain and improve the 1984 public school reforms in light of the state's precarious budget situation, a Senate committee Wednesday worked to forge consensus on 22 controversial bills.

Education groups and senators argued for and against changes in major elements of the reform package such as teacher appraisal, class size and the no-pass, no-play rule. Education Committee Chairman Carl Parker, himself carrying four of the bills, said he hoped the committee would approve several compromise bills today.

"The career ladder and the appraisal system it is founded on is the heart and soul of education reform," Parker, D-Port Arthur, said of the much-disputed teacher bonus plan that Gov. Bill Clements wants to scrap. "We just need to have the courage and the stamina to stick it out until we get there."

Two of Parker's bills would address the problems teachers cite when they say the career ladder has done more harm than good. They would increase the amount of state school aid earmarked for the bonuses and remove non-classroom activities as criteria for evaluations.

"We don't want the teachers lounge, we don't want extra-curricular activities, we want what happens in the classroom to determine the appraisal," said Charles Beard, president of the Texas State Teachers Association.

Current law places a 22-student cap on the size of classes in kindergarten, first and second grades. That limit is scheduled to extend to the third and fourth grades in the 1988-1989 school year.

With many school districts complaining that they cannot afford to build the classrooms and hire the teachers necessary to comply, several senators' bills would relax those standards. Others, pointing to the educational advantage of small classes, want to add the limits to every grade level over the next 10 years.

Education Commissioner Bill Kirby said the State Board of Education wants to give school districts extra money for elementary school children "simply recognizing that it does cost considerable amounts of money." Kirby said he has granted temporary waivers from the limits to about 230 of the state's 1,060 school districts.

"Lower class size has a profound impact on student learning," said Brad Dugan, executive director of the Texas Elementary Principals and Supervisors Association. "Every major report since 1983 has reached one conclusion: lower class size at the elementary grade levels has a positive impact on student learning."

Parker said he favors keeping the limits but delaying placing the standard on the fourth grade.

Sen. Bill Sarpalius, D-Canyon, offered one of three bills that would reduce the current six-week suspension from extracurricular activities for students who fail any courses.

Man driving without license sentenced

LIBERTY (AP) — A man whose stalled car triggered a pileup on a bridge that left five people dead and involved 25 vehicles is serving a six-month jail term for driving without a license or liability insurance, officials say.

Samuel Leroy Hargrave Jr., 60, of Anahuac is serving the sentence in the Liberty County Jail, County Court-at-Law Judge L.J. "Boots" Krueger said Tuesday.

On March 13, Krueger had placed Hargrave on probation for driving without a license or liability insurance. But 48 hours later, Chambers County authorities arrested Hargrave for the same offenses.

Krueger then revoked Hargrave's probation and he began serving the six-month sentence.

South African says 'bloodbath' to occur if apartheid continues

By DAVID PLESA
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — South African blacks will revolt and more blood will spill unless the state of Texas, other governments and private U.S. interests impose economic sanctions to force an end to apartheid, a South African warned Wednesday.

Sebiletso Matabane, a black who was born and raised outside Johannesburg, told the House Committee on Retirement and Aging that policies of South Africa's white minority government have created a hungry, frightened and angry black working class that has no basic human or voting rights.

"Unless we force the situation to change, there is going to be a bloodbath," said Matabane, now coordinator of media services for Austin Community College. "What we are fighting for here is basic human rights."

Matabane testifed on two bills filed by Rep. Larry Evans, D-Houston, that would require two major state trust funds to divest their current investments and prohibit future investments in corporations doing business in South Africa. The goal is to increase the pressure on the South African government to end its policy of racial separation. The committee sent both bills to a subcommittee for further study.

Investment officers of the two trusts, the Employees Retirement System and the Teachers Retirement System, say divestment could mean billions in losses for the funds. They argue that divestment would cut off major investment sources that consistently provide lucrative returns on the dollar.

The Teachers Retirement System, which ranks among the 10 largest in the country, had total assets of $16.6 billion as of December and owned stocks worth $2.6 billion, or 16 percent of total assets, in 59 South Africa-connected corporations. The fund provides retirement, disability and death benefits for employees of public educational institutions.

The Employees Retirement System, which pays similar benefits to eligible state employees and their survivors, had assets of $3.8 billion, of which $348 million was invested in corporations doing business in South Africa.

Although divestment could mean the loss of jobs in the short term for many black South Africans as U.S. companies sever ties with the country, Matabane said the losses would be worth the long-term benefits of equal rights for all citizens.

"People in South Africa would rather be free than have the menial jobs they now have," she said.

"If we don't do anything at all, people will die."

Beverly Garrett of the Texas State Employees Union produced a resolution — approved unanimously by 100 delegates at the union's 1986 general assembly — in support of divestment by the two trust funds.

"State employees, many of them older workers, are worried about losing their benefits" should the South African government topple, she said.

Evans asked the committee to look beyond the economic benefits of South African investments and address the issue as a moral one.

"What is going on right now in the Republic of South Africa is an abomination," he said.

Other groups testifying in support of the bill included the Texas Conference of Churches and the Steve Biko Committee at the University of Texas at Austin. No one testifed against the bill.

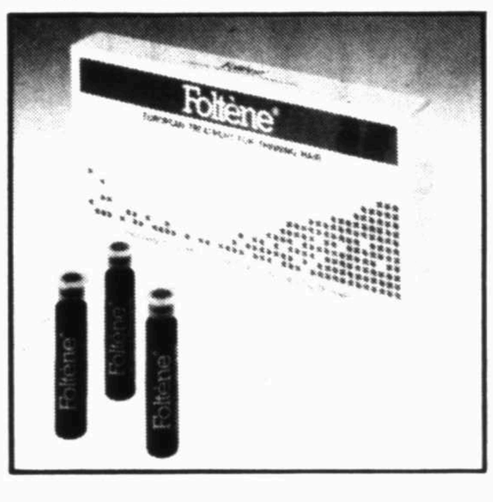
Firm Announces a Prescription-Free Solution For Thinning Hair

Minneapolis — Robert Taylor, Chief Executive Officer of MINNETONKA CORP., said the personal care product firm has agreed to distribute and market Foltene® Treatment for Thinning Hair in the U.S. This product makes hair look fuller, thicker and healthier.



Foltene treatment was developed by an Italian pharmaceutical company when research scientists noticed that special compounds they were testing had a beneficial side effect. When used in topical hair treatments, condition of thinning hair significantly improved. The researchers then mixed a number of these biological extracts together to create a unique Tricosaccaride® compound which is the basis for Foltene treatment.

Foltene treatment has been marketed in European countries for more than five years and has been acclaimed for its unique process of enhancing the look of thinning hair.

Taylor said the product will be available, without prescription, in department stores throughout the United States.

NOTE: Foltene is now available in all JC Penney Stores with cosmetic departments.

Weinberger suggests Israel strenghthen force with F-16s

FORT WORTH (AP) — Secretary of Defense Caspar Weinberger recommended General Dynamics' F-16 fighter as a possible replacement for an expensive jet fighter being developed by the Israeli government.

The Israelis have spent more than $2 billion, most of which came from American aid, to develop the new fighter called the Lavi. Defense Department officials have argued the jets will cost up to $22 million each, far more than F-16s.

General Dynamics Corp. has offered to sell Israel as many as 300 F-16s to replace the Lavis, and Weinberger says the Lavis should be scrapped.

"The Lavi is an enormously expensive way to add a small amount of air strength. It is inferior to the F-16," Weinberger said during a press conference preceding a speech Wednesday at Texas Christian University.

He said replacing the Lavi with the F-16 is "one of the things we've talked about," but stopped short of endorsing the idea.

The Israeli air force currently flies 80 F-16s and has ordered an additional 70.

Fort Worth-based General Dynamics offered in September to sell Israel 300 more F-16s, with most of the production taking place in Israel. The Jerusalem Post reported earlier this month that top Israeli military officials have endorsed the proposal.

Weinberger also expressed continued faith in the troubled B-1B bomber, which has been grounded by problems with its terrain-following radar and electronic counter-measures equipment.

Weinberger said delays in the B-1B's development allowed Soviet radar-jamming technology to surpass the bomber's original equipment, and that the bugs are being worked out of the B-1B's new equipment.

Later, a group of about 25 placard-carrying protesters gathered in front of Ed Landreth auditorium, where Weinberger addressed about 1,200 students and faculty members.

The group protested current administrative policies advocating military build-up and the Reagan administration's request for an increase in defense spending.

In his speech, Weinberger called on colleges and universities to help assist in the development of the Strategic Defense Initiative, known as Star Wars.

STATE IN BRIEF

Man wearing Reagan mask robs furniture store

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — A furniture salesman says there is nothing humorous about being robbed by a gunman wearing a Ronald Reagan mask.

"It wasn't funny to me or the people who own the store because he had a gun," Mark Luttrell said after the robbery Tuesday.

Luttrell said he was alone in the store, counting the day's receipts when the masked robber burst through the front door.

"The first thing I noticed was the gun," said the salesman. "He had it pointed at me."

The man fled on foot with several hundred dollars.

Luttrell said he could see the suspect's bluish-green eyes behind the rubber mask that covered his head. "It looked like him (Reagan)," he said.

Cocaine sezied at home

HOUSTON (AP) — Two men were arrested and 404 pounds of cocaine worth an estimated $55 million were confiscated in what police say is the largest such seizure for their department.

The arrests were made Wednesday afternoon at a southeast Houston home where the cocaine was found, police spokesman Dan Turner said. Charges of possession of cocaine with intent to deliver were pending against the two.

"This is the largest (cocaine bust) for the Houston Police Department," Turner said.

U.S. Customs officials also participated in the bust and previous investigation into the case, Turner said.

About two months ago, police received some information that the cocaine would be delivered to the home, he said. The cocaine arrived in a truck Wednesday and was in "its pure state," Turner said.

Police were not yet sure of the origin of the cocaine and were continuing their investigation.

TDC to be closed again

HUNTSVILLE (AP) — The Texas prison system was to be closed to new admissions today because the inmate population again is over a state-mandated limit set to ease overcrowding, officials say.

"We have to close," Texas Department of Corrections spokesman David Nunnelee said Wednesday — when 284 new inmates were admitted but only 34 were released on parole.

The shutdown — the eighth in as many weeks and the ninth so far this year — is part of a continous open-and-shut cycle that is triggered when the inmate population exceeds a 95 percent of capacity limit.

On Tuesday, the day the system reopened, about 245 new inmates were admitted and 122 released, Nunnelee said.

Based on a midnight Tuesday inmate population count, there were 38,461 inmates, or 95.21 percent — 83 over the set capacity of 38,378, Nunnelee said.

Garden restoration begins

AUSTIN (AP) — Restoration has begun on twin flower beds at the main entrance to the Texas Capitol grounds, which will be planted with varieties of roses that date to the turn of the century.

Capitol architect Roy Graham said Wednesday the flower beds on each side of the south entrance to the Capitol grounds will be planted with predominantly antique yellow roses.

"They have become a well-known symbol of Texas and they were the most popular variety iin Austin at the turn of the century," Graham said.

Research conducted by the architect's office led to the discovery that two beds were planted with "fine roses" in 1903. According to the architect, the restored gardens will use yellow tea roses as a backbone, while several other varieties also will be included.

Restoration of the gardens is part of a continuing project to restore the Capitol grounds to its original appearance. A dedication ceremony is scheduled for April 29.

Snakebite victim dies

BROWNWOOD (AP) — An Irving man who was bitten by a rattlesnake during a weekend roundup of the reptiles died early Wednesday, a hospital official said.

Glen R. Alexander, 29, was in a coma most of the time he was at Brownwood Regional Hospital, according to a nursing supervisor who declined to give her name.

Alexander died at 1:33 a.m. of the toxic effects of venom, the official said.

Alexander was admitted Saturday after he was bitten while hunting snakes alone along the Brown-Comanche county line, authorities said.

It was the 23rd annual Brownwood Rattlesnake Roundup.

First free black settlement in U.S. unearthed in Florida

ST. AUGUSTINE, Fla. (AP) — Archaeologists have pinpointed the remains of the nation's first free black settlement, a fort in Spanish-ruled Florida peopled by runaway slaves from the British colonies to the north.

The remains of Fort Mose, which lasted from 1738 to 1763, were found on a small marsh island about two miles north of the present-day Castillo de San Marcos, the researchers said.

"Some 125 years before emancipation took place in this country, there was a place were freedom was a fact for blacks," said Dr. Robert L. Gold, executive director of the Historic St. Augustine Preservation Society.

The fort, founded after a decree by Charles V of Spain, is "important to black history that doesn't exist in the history books," said Kathleen Deagan, curator of anthropology at the University of Florida.

"It has the potential to change some sterotypes and correct history," she said.

Ms. Deagan and 14 student archaeologists are excavating what appears to be the northwest corner of the fort. Preliminary findings suggest they've located the moat.

The fort had earthwork walls, spiked with yucca or Spanish bayonets. The earthwork was backed by a wooden palisade. Huts for the inhabitants were thatched.

The team has also found musket balls, gun flints, buttons, pieces of glass bottles, clay smoking pipes, pottery and animal bones left over from meals.

"This was not just a fortification," said Ms. Deagan. "A community of about 100 inhabitants, including women and children, occupied the site."

Ms. Deagan said the Spanish decision to establish the black settlement was not just altruistic.

"The Spanish had had a black regiment since the 1670s, so they already knew that blacks were fierce fighters and good soldiers," said Ms. Deagan. "The Spanish figured, who better to put at their northernmost point of defense than these runaway slaves who feared being recaptured by the British more than anyone else."

Ms. Deagan said the settlement was built in a field on high ground, but dredge-and-fill operations in the early 20th century have made the area prone to flooding.

Jack Williams, a St. Augustine resident who owns the 24-acre site where the fort was located, was responsible for much of the research that verified the existence of Fort Mose. Although the settlement's general location has long been known, the recent excavation found the exact site.

Williams said he is trying to sell the land to the state for $250,000.

"I've been trying to interest the state into making it into a state park and maybe an interpretive museum," said Williams.

"I'd like to see it become a state park to highlight the contribution of blacks to Florida and American history," state Rep. Bill Clark.

Clark helped secure $100,000 in funding for the Legislature for the archaeological dig that began in January in the salt marsh.

The fort was the site of a battle between its settlers and Georgia Gov. James Oglethorpe, who attacked the area with a force of Indians and Colonials in 1740.

The inhabitants of Fort Mose were taken into the Castillo, a stone fortress in St. Augustine.

"A little known chapter in Colonial history involves the black militia's run-in with the British forces who had occupied their fort and were using it as headquarters and as a fortification from which to bombard the Castillo," said Ms. Deagan.

The Fort Mose militia sneaked through the woods and attacked the British in Fort Mose from behind, devastating their ranks.

Documents show there was fierce hand-to-hand combat, said Williams, who said there are accounts by soldiers in archives in Columbia, S.C.

ENTERTAINMENT GUIDE

Late Night At Joey's presents The Harry Leeds Band, with members John Ellis (left), Steve Mitchell, Jo Harmon, Noland Harmon, Debbie Burch and Glenn Burch. The band will appear Friday and Saturday night, March 27 & 28, from 9:30 p.m. to 2 a.m. $3.00 cover charge with unescorted ladies at half price.

Late Night At Joey's proudly presents The Harry Leeds Band

Late Night at Joey's proudly presents "The Harry Leeds Band," from Lubbock, Texas. This Friday and Saturday night, March 27 & 28, from 9:30 p.m. to 2 a.m.

Since forming in February 1980, the Harry Leeds Band has become one of Lubbock and West Texas' most popular club attractions. The band, made up of four men and two women, have gone from just another local band to an opening act for such major recording stars as the Beach Boys, Don McLean, Bo Diddley and Bobby Vee.

In September 1985 the Harry Leeds Band released their first cassette album, "Personal Friends of Mine" containing ten original songs.

Besides performing their original material, the band also plays a wide variety of cover material ranging from the Beatles and the Rolling Stones to Huey Lewis and the News and Bruce Springsteen.

Joey's Restaurant, at the corner of Midland Dr. and Neely, in the Mesa Verde Shopping Center, with its "Late Night At Joey's," theme on Friday and Saturday nights, is dedicated to bringing Midland, Odessa the finest in live entertainment.

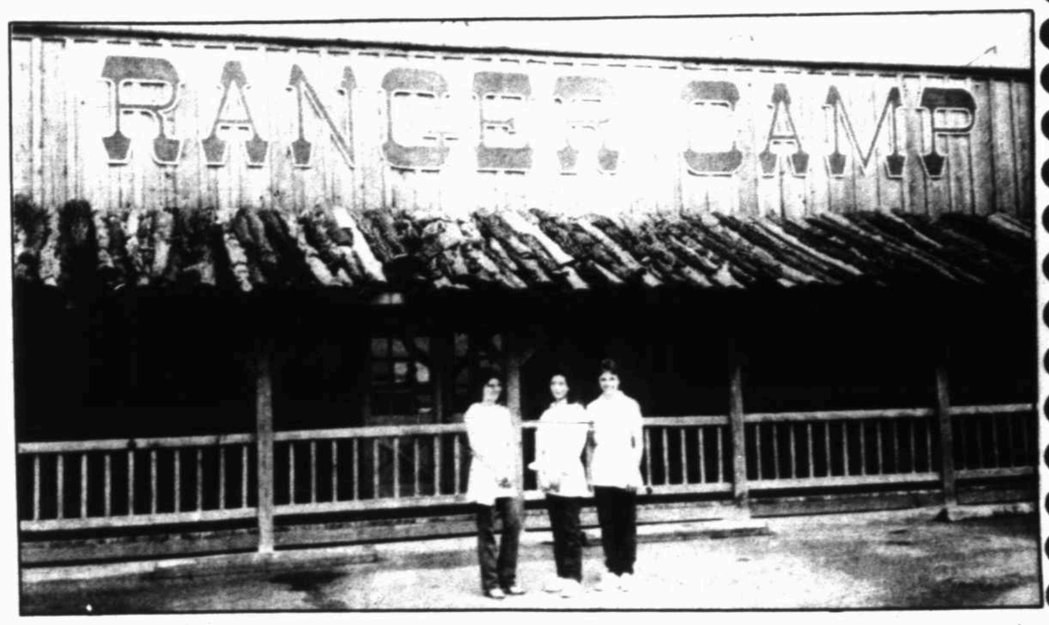
Joey's Restaurant, in addition to providing good entertainment and excellent food (including steaks, seafood, prime rib, gourmet burgers, and the best chicken fried steak in the area), offers the above in a nice, clean, comfortable atmosphere with plenty of lighted parking for your convenience.

Joey's also features a Premium-Well in their bar, along with a great wine list, for those who care to partake.

So if you're in the mood for excellent dining and some fun and dancing along with your night out, then Joey's Restaurant is the place to be.

Joey's wishes to thank the following bands, both local and from out of town, for their enthusiasm, professionalism and just good music!

The Shades, The Marbles, PrimeTime, Ace Liquidators, Rusty Wier, Hub City Rockers, The Harry Leeds Band, Sons of Fun and The Buckwheat Blues Band.



Louetta Turner (left), Cheryl Rice, Lannie Waldrip and all the staff at Ranger Camp invite you to come in today and enjoy the delectable delights at their luncheon buffet. Located on Hwy. 80 (next to Water Wonderland), Ranger Camp serves lunch from 11 a.m. to 2 p.m. Enjoy the casual dining atmosphere or, if you're on the run, Ranger Camp can pack your lunch to go.

Parrots Eatery, located in Plaza Center, corner of Wadley & Garfield (between Baskin-Robbins and Radio Shack), announces the opening of their new Midland shop. Come in today for lunch or dinner (open Monday through Thursday 10:30 a.m. to 9 p.m. Friday and Saturday 10:30 a.m. to 10 p.m.) and let Rueben Vasquez or any of the pleasant staff serve you a piping hot sandwich made of your favorite fresh ingredients.

Coaches get rich, parents get left in cold

Cox News Service

ATLANTA — The Final Four comes up this week, and a fine time will be had by all. Or by almost all. A few people might not think it's the finest time of their lives. They might feel left out. The parents and families of players might be made to feel like unwelcome strangers.

LSU coach Dale Brown has twice taken teams to the Final Four of the NCAA Tournament. Teams advancing that far earn a great deal of money; it's up to $1 million per team this time. The prestige is immense, too. National TV. exposure helps recruiting. Coaches get richer and more famous.

Because his teams win so often, Louisville's Denny Crum has a 10-year contract with a $1 million "completion bonus," meaning to collect the $1 million Crum only has to stay on the job. Georgetown alumni paid off the mortgage on a $400,000 house to make John Thompson's life easier. Bobby Knight might earn $500,000 a year coaching, selling video tapes, doing clinics, making speeches and commercials — even writing a newspaper column, if you can imagine.

"EVERY year at Final Four time," said Dale Brown, "I get the same terrible feeling about what we're doing to the kids."

Brown, 51, is in his 15th season at Louisiana State University, his 30th season in coaching. Often a critic of NCAA rules governing athletes, Brown says the rule book has too many rules written to cover too many possibilities. "If you don't violate NCAA rules," Brown said, "you're in a coma or in a crematorium."

He prefers "rules that speak to human dignity."

Brown tells two Final Four stories as illustration of his discomfort with NCAA rules....

LSU'S first trip to the finals came in 1981 at Philadelphia.

"Howard Carter (an LSU player) visited with his parents in our hotel one night. They couldn't afford to stay where we were, so they were in a decrepit hotel over in Jersey somewhere. When I saw Mr. and Mrs. Carter, they were standing in the lobby. Mr. Carter had his money out, looking to see how much he had.

"He had no concept of the big city. These were country folks. It had cost them $20 to come in from Jersey to see their son. Mr. Carter looked at me and said, 'Coach, we don't have enough money for the taxi back.'

"Mr. Carter didn't ask me for anything.",

AS BROWN spoke, he sat in an airport lounge. His team had lost that day to Indiana by a point and so failed to reach the Final Four. Yet LSU's share of the NCAA booty will be near $800,000. Brown looked at a reporter and said, "Now, what would you have done for Mr. Carter that day?"

Last March, LSU again made it to the Final Four, this time in Dallas.

"We were staying in a classy hotel in Dallas," Brown said. "The parents of the players, most of them certainly, were in Motel 6 kind of places across town from us. God. We don't give them decent tickets to the Final Four. We can't pay any of their expenses. We do nothing for them.

"We were in our hotel's fancy restaurant eating lobster and steak. Of course, our alumni office people were there. They think of themselves as very important, you know. Athletic office staff people were there. NCAA people. All these people eating at this fancy place.

"Then I saw Anthony Wilson's parents. Anthony was a junior, our best guard. His parents were peeking around the door of the restaurant to see if they could spot their son.

"I went over to them and asked, 'How are you doing, Mr. and Mrs. Wilson?' They had their other children with them, Anthony's brothers and sisters, maybe seven or eight people. They said, 'We drove over from Plain Dealing.' They had a little ol' car that might or might not make it back to Louisiana.

"For me to turn them away from that dinner would be despicable. They couldn't afford to pay, of course. But if their son wasn't on our team, we wouldn't be eating there, either.

"I ask you again, 'What would you have done?' "

TO HAND money to Howard Carter's parents for the taxi ride back to their Jersey hotel would be to commit a violation of NCAA rules.

Paying the Wilsons' restaurant tab also would be an NCAA violation.

These are, you may think, small-potato things. What, $20 for a taxi? How much for dinner for the Wilsons, $100? Out of $1 million, that isn't much to help out the parents of the athletes who earned the $1 million in the first place. But the NCAA used potatoes not much larger than these to put SMU's football program out of operation.

What would you do, dear reader? Would you call a taxi for the Carters? Would you get the Wilsons a decent hotel at the Final Four, give them expense money and put them in courtside seats to see their son play the game of his dreams?

Vegas bookies root for Rebs despite losses

From Wire Reports

LAS VEGAS, Nev. — Las Vegas bookmakers have turned cheerleaders with their hometown team in the NCAA Final Four, despite the possible loss of millions of dollars in bets on the championship game. Bookmakers are unabashedly rooting for the UNLV Runnin' Rebels. "It would do more for the town for them to win than for us to take a few lousy bets on the game," said Keith Glantz, sports book manager at the Palace Station.

Nevada gaming regulations forbid betting on amateur teams located within the state, meaning UNLV's advancement to the Final Four will cost sports books bets on one of Saturday's two games and possibly the championship game itself.

Umpire Strike?

NEW YORK — Richie Phillips, chief negotiator for major league umpires, said that National and American League officials are trying to instigate a strike by lining upsubstitute umpires for opening day. "I don't know why they're doing it, but I really don't want to comment on any of it. I'm going to try to continue to work for a fair and equitable deal."

The umpires' contract with the two leagues expired on Dec. 31, and negotiations for a new pact are under way. Umpires have not threatened to strike, but officials from both leagues have alerted teams to line up substitute umpires if the regulars walk out before the season opens on April 6.

Roger stubborn

SPRING, Texas — Boston pitcher Roger Clemens remained resolute in his 19-day contract holdout and accused Red Sox of trying to use him as an example for the rest of the league. Asked if he was prepared to sit out the season, Clemens' agent Randy Hendricks answered saying, "The question should be are the Red Sox ready to go through a full season without Roger Clemens."...

Conradt cautious

AUSTIN — Texas Coach Jody Conradt says the Women's NCAA basketball championship isn't a sure thing for the Lady Longhorns even if they are the defending national champions playing on their home court. "This isn't the same team that won the national title last year. I lost six seniors off the team a year ago. Right now this team is being led by two freshmen. This team has played to the best of its ability, I will say that but we are no way as close to being as mature as the team we had last year."

The top-seeded Lady Longhorns are 31-1 with their only loss coming Dec. 14 in Austin to Tennessee 86-78 and meets Louisiana Tech (29-2) at 9 p.m. Friday while Tennessee who are 35-6, plays Long Beach State (33-2) at 6 p.m....

NIT finals

NEW YORK — La Salle, which faces Southern Mississippi for the NIT title tonight, can forget about facing another zone defense that will let the Explorers again make eight 3-point shots in the first half. "They've convinced me they can shoot," SMU Coach M.K. Turk. "I can assure you that we won't open with a zone against La Salle."

"They know they have to play us man-to-man to win," La Salle Coach Bill "Speedy" Morris said.

Knight in no hurry to reach New Orleans

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Nevada-Las Vegas, Providence and Syracuse flew in Wednesday for Saturday's NCAA semifinals, but Indiana failed to show and Coach Bobby Knight said it had nothing to do with French Quarter bars.

Knight says it's a case of school work coming first. The Hoosiers will get here...Friday.

"As long as I've been involved in coaching, we have never — regardless of the game, whether it's a regular season game or a conference tournament or an NCAA tournament game, first-round or championship game — have we ever gone to the site of a game more than one day prior to the game," Knight said by telephone Wednesday.

"That's been our policy for 22-23 years. We still have classes today and tomorrow. We'll miss a little class on Friday. We'll get the chance to work out on Friday, and that's the way we've always done it."

UNLV Coach Jerry Tarkanian said he wanted to give his players a chance to see New Orleans. "I'm going to let the kids enjoy themselves tonight and after the game. Starting tomorrow, we will definitely keep our team under close restrictions.

"HOWEVER, we won't isolate them from the press, because I think it is very important to give them the opportunity to talk to the press and other people. I think that's a real learning experience."

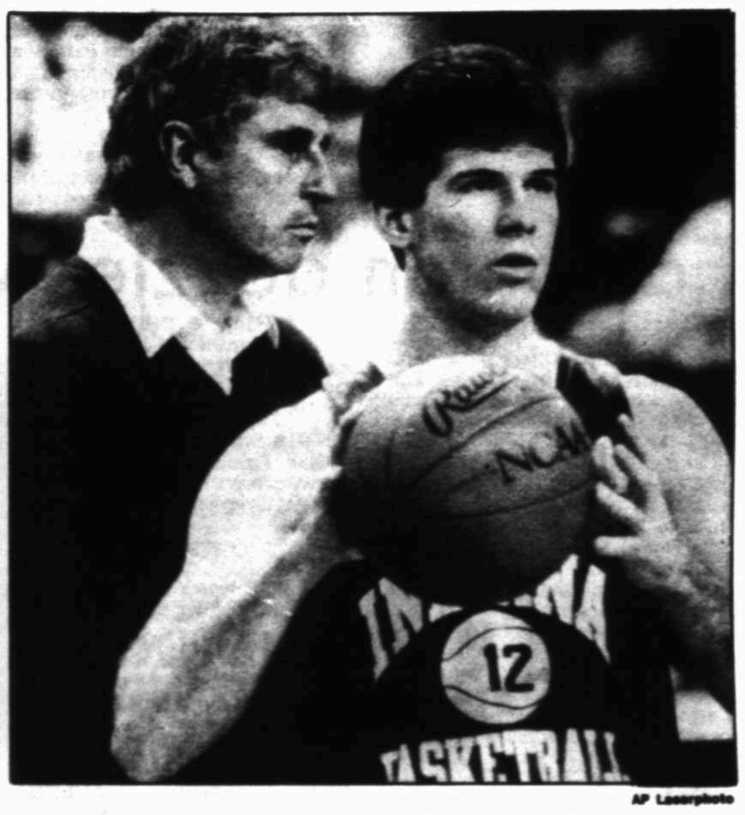
All four teams will be housed in hotels adjacent to the French Quarter, the nightclub center of the city.

Providence Coach Rick Pitino and Syracuse Coach Jim Boeheim agreed in general with Tarkanian's approach.

"We don't have that much time for them to get out much," Pitino said. "It's a lifetime experience for them."

"We want them to have a good time, but we also expect them to concentrate on the game," Boeheim said.

Syracuse will look to Rony Seikaly against Big East foe Providence in Saturday's NCAA finals. Seikaly proved too much for North Carolina and J.R. Reid to handle in Saturday's game.



AP Laserphoto

Indiana's Steve Alford may pose probelm for UNLV's defense and Coach Bobby Knight is going to keep the Hoosiers home until Friday before arriving at the Final Four site.

BIG EAST rivals Providence, 28-5, and Syracuse, 30-6, meet in the opening game of the Final Four on Saturday. The regular season ended with UNLV ranked No.1, Indiana No.3, Syracuse No. 10, and Providence out of the standings, although getting a few votes from pollsters.

Providence last beat Syracuse 13 seasons ago, the only victory for the Friars in 17 meetings.

Las Vegas, 37-1, is picked to win the title. Indiana, 28-4, is Tarkanian's pick for the favorite's role.

"I'm really shocked that we're the favorite. I look around, and Indiana's a great basketball team," Tarkanian said. "I hope those people picking us know something we don't know."

Knight has never hidden the fact that he believes defense is the way to win games. Only this season has Tarkanian's defense been mentioned.

"We've been, always, a great defensive team," Tarkanian said. "The public looks at our scores and says, 'No defense.'

"We score a lot, and that's because we shoot it quick.

"We're not into being patient."

"Jerry has never been understood as a coach, as I understand him as a coach," Knight said. "I've always felt that basketball starts with defense.

"I think his trademark has been outstanding defensive play.

"I think that over the years, people have not looked at Tark as they should — as a basketball coach. He has done a great job."

Coaches endorse 3-point goal

SPRINGFIELD, Mass. (AP) — In an abrupt turnaround, college basketball coaches have endorsed the 3-point goal by such an overwhelming margin that one of the game's chief rulemakers says its future is assured.

"The support has been beyond my wildest expectations. It's such a clear mandate that there's no question it's here to stay," said Dr. Edward S. Steitz, the Springfield College athletic director who has been secretary and editor of the college basketball rules committee for more than 25 years.

More than 83 percent of the 1,400 coaches and 1,000 administrators, referees and basketball writers who responded to the survey at the end of the season supported the 3-pointer, Steitz said. Eighty percent of college coaches from all levels endorsed it.

The respondents, about 60 percent of the survey group, were nearly evenly split, 36 percent to 35 percent, on whether the 3-point line should remain at its present distance — 19 feet, 9 inches from the basket — or be moved back 9 inches to the distance used in international play.

In the absence of a clear mandate, Steitz said the current distance would likely be retained by the Rules Committee, which will meet this week at New Orleans, site of the NCAA Tournament finals. However, he said he expected "considerable consideration" of the idea of moving the line back to the international distance.

NCAA Division I coaches favored the longer distance 39 percent to 31. NCAA Division II coaches gave it a 41-35 percent endorsement while those in Division III, junior college and NAIA ranks supported the shorter distance.

Referees were almost unanimous in support of the 3-pointer, with 94 percent favoring it. It also was endorsed by 90 percent of the administrators and 82 percent of the sportswriters.

But the biggest change of heart was on the part of the coaches, 66 percent of whom had told Steitz last spring they didn't want the 3-pointer.

The coaches' complaints continued throughout the first half of the season, "then they started discovering how to use it and what it could do for them," Steitz said. "With the 3-point shot, a team is never out of the game.

"I expected it to take much longer, but we have achieved all our goals with the 3-point shot in one year," he said. "Scoring, which had dropped 17 points per game over the past 10 years, was up by 10 points per game.

Dome makes big difference for Syracuse

By MALCOLM MORAN
N.Y. Times News Service

SYRACUSE, N.Y. — When the big field house opened in 1962, Syracuse University was ahead of its time. Two decades before the indoor practice facility would become the plaything of major universities, a commitment to attract nationally known coaches and a selling point in the bidding for talented teen-agers, Syracuse erected one.

Manley Field House had 5,400 seats in those days. Its presence was intended to perpetuate the greatness of a football program that won a national championship in 1959 and made the uniform number 44 famous. Basketball would also be played there, but its purpose was clear. "Are you ready for this?" said W. Carroll (Nick) Coyne, a Syracuse graduate, attorney, and fan. "To prepare for bowl games."

The facility was hardly a basketball showplace, what with all the dust in the air from the dirt floor that surrounded the court, but it was an improvement. For all their success throughout the years — no coach has had a losing record for his Syracuse career — the Orangemen were often nomads.

They played at old Archbold Gymnasium on the campus. They played at the War Memorial, Jefferson Street Armory and the State Fair Coliseum, and they often played in near obscurity. "I remember going to a game when I was in law school or shortly after I was out," Coyne said. "Syracuse was playing Cornell at the War Memorial. There was an announced crowd of 327. Probably, it was padded. We weren't very good, and Cornell wasn't much better."

EARLY last Saturday evening, as the Orangemen completed their victory over North Carolina to win one of the four spots in the semifinals of the national collegiate basketball tournament, dozens of students spilled into the streets. For much of that evening, the intersection of Marshall and South Crouse Streets was the scene of a party. Later that night, a crowd estimated at 3,000 waited at the airport for the team to arrive.

From his perch at The Varsity, which has fed Syracuse students since 1926, Jerry Dellas, who began working there for his father 55 years ago, considered the possibilities of the weekend ahead.

"Saturday, it'll be like a zoo in here," he said, "and Monday, it'll be a real zoo. I think we can survive."

Syracuse, which was founded 117 years ago, celebrated its first Rhodes Scholar last year. Its new $52 million Science and Technology Center is scheduled to be completed in late 1988. But the focal point of the wintertime attention has been the flat building with the white fiberglass roof. The Carrier Dome, once a $28 million object of doubt and controversy, has turned a program of limited regional interest into one that is nationally known.

FROM COAST TO coast, high school players can turn on televisions and watch a basketball game become a spectacle. The result has been the presence of Stephen Thompson, class of 1990, who chose to leave Los Angeles to spend his college winters here. Jim Boeheim, the coach of the Orangemen, now finds himself successfully recruiting in California.

"I never thought we could," said Boeheim, who has witnessed the growth as a walk-on player, a guard in the Dave Bing era in the early and mid-1960s, a graduate student, assistant coach and, since 1976, the head coach. "We couldn't get New York City kids. We were getting almost all upstate kids. Then we started getting New York City kids, then some from Washington D.C."

And then, starting in 1980 when the Orangemen moved from the enlarged, 9,200-seat field house, the Dome turned basketball into a happy assault on the senses. At first, the thought of leaving the place that had come to be known as the Manley Zoo created apprehension. Coyne, the attorney who is also a member of the athletic policy board, remembered learning that for a program in the dome to break even, the team would have to average 13,000 fans a game.

"We were a little nervous whether we could get 13,000 people or not," he said. "There was some concern."

SYRACUSE has led the nation in attendance for the past three seasons with an average this year of 26,256. The Orangemen have played before crowds of 30,000 or more 19 times, including the NCAA campus facility record of 32,602 that was set this Feb. 22 for the game against Georgetown.

The dome has attracted players of national reputation and players who were unknown. Several years ago, a student at The American School in Athens visited his brother, then a student at Colgate University. Colgate was playing Syracuse at the dome, and the brothers went to watch the game.

"I told him, 'This is the place where I'm going to play in college,' " Rony Seikaly remembered. "He said, 'Yeah. Yeah.' "

FOR FIVE years, a dispute over the payment of taxes angered part of the community until a settlement was reached last August.

But when the Orangemen take the floor, the ball is tossed in the air and the big crowd begins the rhythmic applause that does not cease until the first Syracuse basket, everyone is on the same side. The formula is simple. All winter, the people come out of the cold, and the Orangemen keep them warm.

"Howard Carter (an LSU player) visited with his parents in our hotel one night. They couldn't afford to stay where we were, so they were in a decrepit hotel over in Jersey somewhere. When I saw Mr. and Mrs. Carter, they were standing in the lobby. Mr. Carter had his money out, looking to see how much he had.

"He had no concept of the big city. These were country folks. It had cost them $20 to come in from Jersey to see their son. Mr. Carter looked at me and said, 'Coach, we don't have enough money for the taxi back.'

"Mr. Carter didn't ask me for anything."

AS BROWN spoke, he sat in an airport lounge. His team had lost that day to Indiana by a point and so failed to reach the Final Four. Yet LSU's share of the NCAA booty will be near $800,000. Brown looked at a reporter and said, "Now, what would you have done for Mr. Carter that day?"

Last March, LSU again made it to the Final Four, this time in Dallas.

"We were staying in a classy hotel in Dallas," Brown said. "The parents of the players, most of them certainly, were in Motel 6 kind of places across town from us. God. We don't give them decent tickets to the Final Four. We can't pay any of their expenses. We do nothing for them.

"We were in our hotel's fancy restaurant eating lobster and steak. Of course, our alumni office people were there. They think of themselves as very important, you know. Athletic office staff people were there. NCAA people. All these people eating at this fancy place.

"Then I saw Anthony Wilson's parents. Anthony was a junior, our best guard. His parents were peeking around the door of the restaurant to see if they could spot their son.

"I went over to them and asked, 'How are you doing, Mr. and Mrs. Wilson?' They had their other children with them, Anthony's brothers and sisters, maybe seven or eight people. They said, 'We drove over from Plain Dealing.' They had a little ol' car that might or might not make it back to Louisiana.

"For me to turn them away from that dinner would be despicable. They couldn't afford to pay, of course. But if their son wasn't on our team, we wouldn't be eating there, either.

"I ask you again, 'What would you have done?' "

TO HAND money to Howard Carter's parents for the taxi ride back to their Jersey hotel would be to commit a violation of NCAA rules.

Paying the Wilsons' restaurant tab also would be an NCAA violation.

These are, you may think, small-potato things. What, $20 for a taxi? How much for dinner for the Wilsons, $100? Out of $1 million, that isn't much to help out the parents of the athletes who earned the $1 million in the first place. But the NCAA used potatoes not much larger than these to put SMU's football program out of operation.

What would you do, dear reader? Would you call a taxi for the Carters? Would you get the Wilsons a decent hotel at the Final Four, give them expense money and put them in courtside seats to see their son play the game of his dreams?

Vegas bookies root for Rebs despite losses

From Wire Reports

LAS VEGAS, Nev. — Las Vegas bookmakers have turned cheerleaders with their hometown team in the NCAA Final Four, despite the possible loss of millions of dollars in bets on the championship game. Bookmakers are unabashedly rooting for the UNLV Runnin' Rebels. "It would do more for the town for them to win than for us to take a few lousy bets on the game," said Keith Glantz, sports book manager at the Palace Station.

Nevada gaming regulations forbid betting on amateur teams located within the state, meaning UNLV's advancement to the Final Four will cost sports books bets on one of Saturday's two games and possibly the championship game itself.

Umpire Strike?

NEW YORK — Richie Phillips, chief negotiator for major league umpires, said that National and American League officials are trying to instigate a strike by lining upsubstitute umpires for opening day. "I don't know why they're doing it, but I really don't want to comment on any of it. I'm going to try to continue to work for a fair and equitable deal."

The umpires' contract with the two leagues expired on Dec. 31, and negotiations for a new pact are under way. Umpires have not threatened to strike, but officials from both leagues have alerted teams to line up substitute umpires if the regulars walk out before the season opens on April 6.

Roger stubborn

SPRING, Texas — Boston pitcher Roger Clemens remained resolute in his 19-day contract holdout and accused Red Sox of trying to use him as an example for the rest of the league. Asked if he was prepared to sit out the season, Clemens' agent Randy Hendricks answered saying, "The question should be are the Red Sox ready to go through a full season without Roger Clemens."...

Conradt cautious

AUSTIN — Texas Coach Jody Conradt says the Women's NCAA basketball championship isn't a sure thing for the Lady Longhorns even if they are the defending national champions playing on their home court. "This isn't the same team that won the national title last year. I lost six seniors off the team a year ago. Right now this team is being led by two freshmen. This team has played to the best of its ability, I will say that but we are no way as close to being as mature as the team we had last year."

The top-seeded Lady Longhorns are 31-1 with their only loss coming Dec. 14 in Austin to Tennessee 85-78 and meets Louisiana Tech (29-2) at 9 p.m. Friday while Tennessee who are 25-6, plays Long Beach State (33-2) at 6 p.m....

NIT finals

NEW YORK — La Salle, which faces Southern Mississippi for the NIT title tonight, can forget about facing another zone defense that will let the Explorers again make eight 3-point shots in the first half. "They've convinced me they can shoot," SMU Coach M.K. Turk. "I can assure you that we won't open with a zone against La Salle."

"They know they have to play us man-to-man to win," La Salle Coach Bill "Speedy" Morris said.

Knight in no hurry to reach New Orleans

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Nevada-Las Vegas, Providence and Syracuse flew in Wednesday for Saturday's NCAA semifinals, but Indiana failed to show and Coach Bobby Knight said it had nothing to do with French Quarter bars.

Knight says it's a case of school work coming first. The Hoosiers will get here...Friday.

"As long as I've been involved in coaching, we have never — regardless of the game, whether it's a regular season game or a conference tournament or an NCAA tournament game, first-round or championship game — have we ever gone to the site of a game more than one day prior to the game," Knight said by telephone Wednesday.

"That's been our policy for 22-23 years. We still have classes today and tomorrow. We'll miss a little class on Friday. We'll get the chance to work out on Friday, and that's the way we've always done it."

UNLV Coach Jerry Tarkanian said he wanted to give his players a chance to see New Orleans. "I'm going to let the kids enjoy themselves tonight and after the game. Starting tomorrow, we will definitely keep our team under close restrictions.

"HOWEVER, we won't isolate them from the press, because I think it is very important to give them the opportunity to talk to the press and other people. I think that's a real learning experience."

All four teams will be housed in hotels adjacent to the French Quarter, the nightclub center of the city.

Providence Coach Rick Pitino and Syracuse Coach Jim Boeheim agreed in general with Tarkanian's approach.

"We don't have that much time for them to get out much," Pitino said. "It's a lifetime experience for them."

"We want them to have a good time, but we also expect them to concentrate on the game," Boeheim said.

Syracuse will look to Rony Seikaly against Big East foe Providence in Saturday's NCAA finals. Seikaly proved too much for North Carolina and J.R. Reid to handle in Saturday's game.

Indiana's Steve Alford may pose probelm for UNLV's defense and Coach Bobby Knight is going to keep the Hoosiers home until Friday before arriving at the Final Four site.

BIG EAST rivals Providence, 28-5, and Syracuse, 30-6, meet in the opening game of the Final Four on Saturday. The regular season ended with UNLV ranked No.1, Indiana No.3, Syracuse No. 10, and Providence out of the standings, although getting a few votes from pollsters.

Providence last beat Syracuse 13 seasons ago, the only victory for the Friars in 17 meetings.

Las Vegas, 37-1, is picked to win the title. Indiana, 28-4, is Tarkanian's pick for the favorite's role.

"I'm really shocked that we're the favorite. I look around, and Indiana's a great basketball team," Tarkanian said. "I hope those people picking us know something we don't know."

Knight has never hidden the fact that he believes defense is the way to win games. Only this season has Tarkanian's defense been mentioned.

"We've been, always, a great defensive team," Tarkanian said. "The public looks at our scores and says, 'No defense.'

"We score a lot, and that's because we shoot it quick.

"We're not into being patient."

"Jerry has never been understood as a coach, as I understand him as a coach," Knight said. "I've always felt that basketball starts with defense.

"I think his trademark has been outstanding defensive play.

"I think that over the years, people have not looked at Tark as they should — as a basketball coach. He has done a great job."

Coaches endorse 3-point goal

SPRINGFIELD, Mass. (AP) — In an abrupt turnaround, college basketball coaches have endorsed the 3-point goal by such an overwhelming margin that one of the game's chief rulemakers says its future is assured.

"The support has been beyond my wildest expectations. It's such a clear mandate that there's no question it's here to stay," said Dr. Edward S. Steitz, the Springfield College athletic director who has been secretary and editor of the college basketball rules committee for more than 25 years.

More than 83 percent of the 1,400 coaches and 1,000 administrators, referees and basketball writers who responded to the survey at the end of the season supported the 3-pointer, Steitz said. Eighty percent of college coaches from all levels endorsed it.

The respondents, about 60 percent of the survey group, were nearly evenly split, 36 percent to 35 percent, on whether the 3-point line should remain at its present distance — 19 feet, 9 inches from the basket — or be moved back 9 inches to the distance used in international play.

In the absence of a clear mandate, Steitz said the current distance would likely be retained by the Rules Committee, which will meet this week at New Orleans, site of the NCAA Tournament finals. However, he said he expected "considerable consideration" of the idea of moving the line back to the international distance.

NCAA Division I coaches favored the longer distance 39 percent to 31. NCAA Division II coaches gave it a 41-35 percent endorsement while those in Division III, junior college and NAIA ranks supported the shorter distance.

Referees were almost unanimous in support of the 3-pointer, with 94 percent favoring it. It also was endorsed by 90 percent of the administrators and 82 percent of the sportswriters.

But the biggest change of heart was on the part of the coaches, 66 percent of whom had told Steitz last spring they didn't want the 3-pointer.

The coaches' complaints continued throughout the first half of the season, "then they started discovering how to use it and what it could do for them," Steitz said. "With the 3-point shot, a team is never out of the game.

"I expected it to take much longer, but we have achieved all our goals with the 3-point shot in one year," he said. "Scoring, which had dropped 17 points per game over the past 10 years, was up by 10 points per game.

Dome makes big difference for Syracuse

By MALCOLM MORAN
N.Y. Times News Service

SYRACUSE, N.Y. — When the big field house opened in 1962, Syracuse University was ahead of its time. Two decades before the indoor practice facility would become the plaything of major universities, a commitment to attract nationally known coaches and a selling point in the bidding for talented teen-agers, Syracuse erected one.

Manley Field House had 5,400 seats in those days. Its presence was intended to perpetuate the greatness of a football program that won a national championship in 1959 and made the uniform number 44 famous. Basketball would also be played there, but its purpose was clear. "Are you ready for this?" said W. Carroll (Nick) Coyne, a Syracuse graduate, attorney, and fan. "To prepare for bowl games."

The facility was hardly a basketball showplace, what with all the dust in the air from the dirt floor that surrounded the court, but it was an improvement. For all their success throughout the years — no coach has had a losing record for his Syracuse career — the Orangemen were often nomads.

They played at old Archbold Gymnasium on the campus. They played at the War Memorial, Jefferson Street Armory and the State Fair Coliseum, and they often played in near obscurity. "I remember going to a game when I was in law school or shortly after I was out," Coyne said. "Syracuse was playing Cornell at the War Memorial. There was an announced crowd of 327. Probably, it was padded. We weren't very good, and Cornell wasn't much better."

EARLY last Saturday evening, as the Orangemen completed their victory over North Carolina to win one of the four spots in the semifinals of the national collegiate basketball tournament, dozens of students spilled into the streets. For much of that evening, the intersection of Marshall and South Crouse Streets was the scene of a party. Later that night, a crowd estimated at 3,000 waited at the airport for the team to arrive.

From his perch at The Varsity, which has fed Syracuse students since 1926, Jerry Delias, who began working there for his father 55 years ago, considered the possibilities of the weekend ahead.

"Saturday, it'll be like a zoo in here," he said, "and Monday, it'll be a real zoo. I think we can survive."

Syracuse, which was founded 117 years ago, celebrated its first Rhodes Scholar last year. Its new $52 million Science and Technology Center is scheduled to be completed in late 1988. But the focal point of the wintertime attention has been the flat building with the white fiberglass roof. The Carrier Dome, once a $28 million object of doubt and controversy, has turned a program of limited regional interest into one that is nationally known.

FROM COAST TO coast, high school players can turn on televisions and watch a basketball game become a spectacle. The result has been the presence of Stephen Thompson, class of 1990, who chose to leave Los Angeles to spend his college winters here. Jim Boeheim, the coach of the Orangemen, now finds himself successfully recruiting in California.

"I never thought we could," said Boeheim, who has witnessed the growth as a walk-on player, a guard in the Dave Bing era in the early and mid-1960s, a graduate student, assistant coach and, since 1976, the head coach. "We couldn't get New York City kids. We were getting almost all upstate kids. Then we started getting New York City kids, then some from Washington D.C."

And then, starting in 1980 when the Orangemen moved from the enlarged, 9,200-seat field house, the Dome turned basketball into a happy assault on the senses. At first, the thought of leaving the place that had come to be known as the Manley Zoo created apprehension. Coyne, the attorney who is also a member of the athletic policy board, remembered learning that for a program in the dome to break even, the team would have to average 13,000 fans a game.

"We were a little nervous whether we could get 13,000 people or not," he said. "There was some concern."

SYRACUSE has led the nation in attendance for the past three seasons with an average this year of 28,255. The Orangemen have played before crowds of 30,000 or more 19 times, including the NCAA campus facility record of 32,602 that was set this Feb. 22 for the game against Georgetown.

The dome has attracted players of national reputation and players who were unknown. Several years ago, a student at The American School in Athens visited his brother, then a student at Colgate University. Colgate was playing Syracuse at the dome, and the brothers went to watch the game.

"I told him, 'This is the place where I'm going to play in college,' " Rony Seikaly remembered. "He said, 'Yeah. Yeah.' "

FOR FIVE years, a dispute over the payment of taxes angered part of the community until a settlement was reached last August.

But when the Orangemen take the floor, the ball is tossed in the air and the big crowd begins the rhythmic applause that does not cease until the first Syracuse basket, everyone is on the same side. The formula is simple. All winter, the people come out of the cold, and the Orangemen keep them warm.

Associated Press

Right-hander Mario Soto, trying to recover from an injury-plagued 1986 season, pitched three perfect innings in his first spring start Wednesday to help the Cincinnati Reds to a 5-3 exhibition victory over the Los Angeles Dodgers.

He threw 36 pitches in his first appearance since he had arthroscopic surgery last August to remove spurs in his shoulder.

Astros 8 (ss), Pirates 4

In Bradenton, Jim Pankovits hit a home run, drove in two runs and scored twice as Houston and right-hander Nolan Ryan defeated Pittsburgh.

Tigers 6, Royals 2

In Lakeland, non-roster rookies Billy Bean and Scott Lusader each singled and drove in a run and Walt Terrell pitched six innings for the second time as Detroit beat Kansas City. Terrell is 3-0 in Grapefruit League play.

Astros 4 (ss), White Sox 3

In Kissimmee, Bill Doran drove in three runs with a sacrifice fly and a two-run single to lift a split Houston squad over Chicago.

Braves 5, Expos 3

In West Palm Beach, Ken Griffey's two-run double highlighted a five-run eighth inning.

White Sox (ss) 7, Phillies 2

In Sarasota, Jerry Royster hit a three-run homer and Ron Hassey added a solo blast to propel a split Chicago squad over Philidelphia.

Cardinals 4, Blue Jays 2

In St. Petersburg, left-hander John Tudor, who has been announced as the starting pitcher for St. Louis' season opener, tuned up with a strong six-inning effort as the Cardinals defeated Toronto. The victory raised St. Louis' spring record to 14-4, best in the major leagues. Outfielder Andy Van Slyke supplied the power with a 3-for-4, three-RBI performance. Van Slyke, who is hitting .390 for the spring with 11 runs batted in in 14 games, also made a diving catch of a Kelly Gruber line drive in the sixth.

Twins 11, Mets 6

In Orlando, Tom Brunansky's two-run home run started a seven-run, sixth-inning rally that carried Minnesota over New York. Minnesota has won four straight.

Indians 8, Brewers 4

In Chandler, Cory Snyder's run-scoring double capped a three-run fifth inning as Cleveland used a 16-hit attack to beat Milwaukee. Snyder's double to left off Milwaukee reliever John Henry Johnson followed singles by Brett Butler, Joe Carter and Mel Hall and an RBI grounder by Pat Tabler. The three-run rally snapped a 2-2 tie. Julio Franco drove in two more Indian runs with a two-out single in the eighth.

Edmonton dazzles Whalers

Associated Press

The Edmonton Oilers are generally considered the best skating team in the NHL, and they showed some of their flash and dash to the Hartford Whalers.

NHL

"Edmonton's wide-open skating game got us into trouble," Hartford Coach Jack Evans said Wednesday night following a 5-3 NHL loss to the Oilers. "We played pretty well and then we got behind and started scrambling."

The victory put the Oilers on the verge of their sixth straight Smythe Division championship. Holding a nine-point lead over second-place Calgary, the Oilers can clinch the regular-season championship with a victory tonight in Boston.

Kings 6, Red Wings 1

Jimmy Carson and Luc Robitaille, the NHL's highest scoring rookies, each scored goals as Los Angeles won in Detroit.

North Stars 6, Maple Leafs 2

Mark Pavelich and Bob Brooke scored two goals each as Minnesota broke a three-game losing streak in Toronto.

The victory gave the North Stars a five-point lead over the last-place Leafs. Both teams have five games left in the regular season.

Jets 10, Flames 1

Jim Nill had a goal and two assists and Winnipeg scored four times in four minutes during the first period to rout Calgary.

A home-town crowd's chants of "we want 10" were answered late in the third period when left wing Doug Smail scored his third goal of the night.

The win set a Jet team victory for the largest margin of victory, erasing the old mark of seven goals.

Devils 8, Rangers 2

Pat Verbeek scored three goals and linemates Aaron Broten and Kirk Muller each contributed five points to lead New Jersey over the Rangers.

Blues 4, Blackhawks 4

Chicago's Darryl Sutter tipped in a 60-foot slapshot with less than five minutes remaining in regulation and the Blackhawks held on for a tie with visiting St. Louis.

The tie enabled the Hawks to remain two points behind second-place St. Louis (71-69) in the Norris Division.

West Texas Runner

Frank Morgan

The state's running community descends on Austin this weekend for Sunday's 10th anniversary running of the Capitol 10,000.

The race, the fourth largest road race in the nation and the second largest 10K, will attract over 25,000 runners and should pass Atlanta's Peachtree race as the largest 10K.

Everyone should run this race at least once. The words run and race are a misnomer because of the crowds. Many are forced to walk the first mile until the crowds thin out, which leads to slower times. The newly TAC certified course is difficult, since it goes uphill for the first two miles.

So what attracts 25,000 runners to a race that, at best, is hard to run?

It is considered the official kickoff of spring in Austin and is looked upon as an excellent chance to party. Over 100,000 runners and spectators will be at the finish area near Town Lake and it gives you a great feeling to know that the common bond of the sport has gathered them together.

Festivities start Saturday with the annual RRCA Texas State Convention, which features workshops, a fun run, a hospitality room, a banquet and awards ceremony. I have the privilege of being the keynote speaker at the banquet.

For information on the convention or the Capitol 10,000, contact Andra Chamberlin 687-2961...

The West Texas Master's 5K turned into the fastest race ever in the Permian Basin with three runners going under 16 minutes and five others breaking 17. John Stukey's winning 15:41 beat the area's previous best 5K of 15:45 set by Joel Summrell in 1985...

Wednesday is speed day in Midland. Most runners are aware that regular interval workouts on the track can greatly increase their speed.

Intervals are short, faster runs, varying in length from 220 yards to one mile, with 440 yards being the most popular distance. Because of their intensity, intervals can be painful and hard to do. Several area runners have been meeting at the Memorial Stadium track at 5:30 on Wednesdays for these workouts. It's much easier to run intervals with a partner and you shouldn't worry about your speed because there are people of all abilities. (John Bahr at 697-5951.)...

If you are following our 10 week beginning running schedule, you should be starting week No. 3, which calls for running two minutes, walking one minute and repeating five times.

By now, some of you are beginning to experience some of the minor soreness and injuries that come when you force inactive muscles back to work. The best advice is to slow down.

Most beginning runners try to do too much, too soon and end up injured. Take it easy. Run slow and run every other day to allow for plenty of rest.

Ice and aspirin can help reduce the minor soreness. Try not to get discouraged. It generally takes a month or two until your running will become easy and enjoyable. If you stay with it a few more weeks, you will begin to feel better and the pounds should start coming off...

The next race in Midland will be the RRCA Challenge Series 5K on April 11, and is sponsored by the Permian Basin Road Runners Club. The race features an award for every runner based on how they finish compared to national age group standards. Entry forms are available at area sporting goods stores and YMCAs. For more information, contact Chuck Chamberlin at 687-2961.

Webb may veto pros for Navy

ANNAPOLIS, Md. (AP) — President Reagan's nominee for secretary of the Navy may rescind his predecessor's decision allowing Navy athletic standouts Napoleon McCallum and David Robinson to play professional sports, according to a published report.

James Webb, Jr., who strongly believes that military service after graduation from the Naval Academy is a full-time job, has indicated that going pro while on active duty is not appropriate, The Washington Post reported today.

Last August, Outgoing Navy secretary John Lehman Jr. gave McCallum, a former Navy running back, permission to play for the Los Angeles Raiders of the National Football League as long as it didn't interfere with his duties as a supply officer on board the U.S.S Peleliu.

"We've always said that the arrangements between Ensign McCallum and the United States Navy have been and will continue to be just that — between them," Raiders executive assistant Al LoCasale told the Post. "We haven't been a party to those discussions. His availability is something that they will have to work out.

"We'd like to have him back," LoCasale added. "He played a considerable role for us last year, much more so than anyone expected because of the injury to Marcus (Allen)."

McCallum was a kick returner and reserve running back during his rookie season with the Raiders.

The 7-foot-1 Robinson was classified by the Navy in January as unfit for unrestricted naval duty because of his height. In place of the standard five years of active duty at sea expected after graduation from the academy, Robinson would serve two years of "restrictive" active duty and then four years as a reserve.

A person in that capacity would be assigned to one of the major naval bases.

That would enable Robinson to be available for either the 1988 Olympic team or the 1987-88 National Basketball Association season. He is expected to be the top draft pick.

New Guerrero in debut

Murray

VERO BEACH, Fla. — The most damaging hit in L.A. Dodger history?

Well, it was not necessarily the home run Jack Clark hit off Tom Niedenfuer for the 1985 National League pennant, nor any one of the three Reggie Jackson hit for the 1977 World Series championship.

Nor does it have to be the ground single Willie Mays ripped through the pitcher's box to keep the winning ninth-inning rally alive in the playoff game in which the Giants won the 1962 pennant.

So, what was it? It's too early to tell. But, how about the line single Pedro Guerrero hit to right field in the first inning of the final game of spring training here last year?

IF YOU don't want to vote for that, how about the hit in the dirt the baseball made a few seconds later on the hit-and-run play that sent Guerrero to third?

Well, not quite to third. Because a funny thing happened to Pedro on his way to third. He never got there. He never touched the bag. He was, you might say, an easy out. Because he was lying in a heap by the time the ball got to third.

So, you would have to say, was his career.

When Guerrero was heading for third that April day, he was on his way to more than an extra base. He was on his way to Dodger immortality. He was a .320 hitter with 33 homers, 87 ribbies, 22 doubles and even 12 stolen bases the year before. He was one of the game's most awesome offensive machines. He was, in short, the franchise. The pennant.

WHEN HE left third base that day, on a stretcher, he was just another traffic accident, a guy who came into an intersection too hard to put the brakes on.

He could also have been a tragic figure of baseball history, a guy cut down in his prime like Herb Score, Tommy Davis or Bobby Thomson or Pete Rieser.

His left knee was twisted grotesquely beneath him that afternoon. For the rest of his life, his knee was going to tell him when to expect rain. It might not be good for much else. Pete might have hit his last curveball, taken his last step without a cane. Or, at least, never have been the overpowering player he once was.

THERE WAS precedent for that kind of thinking. In 1965, Tommy Davis was that kind of player for the Dodgers. In two previous years, he had won the league batting championship. He had driven in 153 runs in 1962. In the 17th game of that year, 1965, he slid hard into second base. There was a snap — and Davis' ankle was on backward.

Tommy put in a dozen more years in the big leagues, but not at the level he once played on. He wandered around the game, a nomadic player, a fill-in, finally phasing out his career in the American League as a DH. He never was the bubblegum card hero he had been.

Bobby Thomson hit the most dramatic home run in major league history when he won the 1951 pennant playoffs for the New York Giants. Three years later, he slid into second base in spring training and the rest of his career was a limp and an anticlimax, the One-Play O'Brien of baseball.

Herb Score, of course, was the all-world fireball pitcher, who threw one blazer too many. It came back off the bat of Gil McDougald twice as fast as Score threw it, hit him on a line and all but obliterated the left side of his face, to say nothing of his career.

GUERRERO'S accident was as scary as any of them. But it seems to have had an unpredictable side effect.

Before the accident, calling Guerrero fiery was like calling Mount St. Helens that. Pete would have had to calm down to be merely fiery.

He was no more belligerent than the German army. He thought rules were for guys who couldn't hit 30 home runs, team buses were optional and arrival dates flexible. When you had to interview him, you felt like throwing in a piece of meat first.

Pete couldn't understand why baseball wasn't like watch making, why you didn't just fit in all the parts and let it go at that. He didn't seem to notice that nobody was paying guys a million and a half a year to tell time and that show business made other demands on you.

If you just wanted a pure ballplayer, Pete was probably your guy. If you could pick a physique off a gas-pipe rack and put it on, it would probably be Guerrero's. Pete was built like a capital "X." Shoulders as wide as the back of a cab, wrists like two pieces of lead pipe, he had this kind of knock-kneed movement of the born runner and he was as nerveless at the plate as he was high-strung off it.

He was an intelligent player. He picked up idiomatic English years before most Dominican players and he spoke it forcefully and melodiously. He was seldom fooled by the same pitch twice and you couldn't get a fastball by him in the dark.

He was aggressive. Confident didn't begin to describe Pete. Pete's attitude was such that he would be surprised — and hurt —if Babe Ruth started ahead of him.

ALL THIS seemed to have come to a shuddering halt April 3, 1986. For the first time in his life, Pete Guerrero was scared of something — himself. His own frailty.

This wasn't something he could fight off like an inside curveball or a line drive in the lights or a dumb question from a reporter. This went to the soul. Pete suddenly realized for the first time that his body was, so to speak, on loan to him.

"I suddenly realized it could all end — in a minute," he admits wonderingly.

Out of this, though, has come a Pete Guerrero so different that one writer suggested they check this one's fingerprints, that this may be Steve Garvey with a Spanish accent.

Pete Guerrero II missed a team bus this year, too. But he apologized to his teammates, his management and the public. The old one would have thought it was nobody's business.

Pete Guerrero II showed up two days early for spring training. The old one preferred two weeks late.

Baseball is more than hits, runs and errors. Leadership is more than just RBIs.

The Dodgers are glad to have the old Pete Guerrero in the batter's box. The new one can be twice as valuable out of it and can take his place with the great Dodger leaders, on and off the field, of the past.

High Schoolers to get 3-point shot next season

LEXINGTON, Ky. (AP) — High school basketball players will be getting three points for shots made beyond the 19-foot, 9-inch line starting next season.

The basketball rules committee of the National Federation of High School Athletic Associations voted this week to put the new rule in effect with the 1987-88 season.

The 3-point circle will be the same distance as in college basketball, which began using the 3-pointer this season.

Sparky confident he will always have job

LAKELAND, Fla. (AP) — Sure, managers are hired to be fired. But with managers like Detroit's Sparky Anderson, that's not where the story ends.

Anderson, by his own admission, is one a select few men who will always be able to find a job in baseball.

"I've never worried about a job in my life," Anderson said Wednesday. "I've never feared hearing the phone ring."

Anderson's theory is that when club owners go out looking for a new manager, they look for a recognizable face first and won-lost records second.

"THAT GUY will never be fired," Anderson said. "He'll just be rehired and rehired."

Anderson, by any measure, is one of the most recognizable faces in baseball.

He said that within three days after being fired by the Cincinnati Reds after the 1978 season, he had six job offers. Anderson turned them all down, but signed on with the Tigers about two months into the 1979 season, replacing Les Moss.

Since then, Anderson and Jim Campbell, the Tigers president, have become close friends. There's little chance, therefore, that Anderson would be fired while Campbell is in command — although nothing is absolute.

"If pressure was great enough, Jim might have to fire me, but it would have nothing to do with our friendship," Anderson explained. "Eventually, animosity is bound to build up in any organization."

And even if he were fired by the Tigers, it wouldn't necessarily be a bad thing, Anderson noted, for example, that he signed with the Tigers for double the salary the Reds paid him.

THE SECRET of his success, Anderson explained, isn't that he fears being fired but that he fears losing.

"The fear I never want to lose is the fear of losing a ballgame," he said. "That's my main desire, to win every game."

Anderson concedes, however, that much of winning and losing is beyond a manager's control.

"I never worry at the start of the season whether I'm going to finish first or last, because the players are going to determine that," Anderson said. "If you've got first-place players, you'll win. If you don't, you won't. Didn't Whitey Herzog manage the St. Louis Cardinals in 1985 and '986?"

Anderson isn't naive, nor is he a braggard. He simply knows how he stands.

"Why do you suppose every city I go into, you guys (reporters) are in here (his office) instead of out there?" he said.

Anderson said another key to his success is the fact that he maintains absolute control, although is isn't exactly certain how he does it.

"ALL CLUBS, no matter what the sport, will emulate the guy that's leading it," Anderson said. "I can tell as soon as I walk through a clubhouse what kind of guy is in charge, just by the way the players behave.

"In our clubhouse, all the people act like professionals. You think I'm going to live with a jerk for seven months?"

What does the manager do then? He creates the mood, in Anderson's opinion. As examples, he cited the late Bear Bryant and Joe Paterno of college football, Bob Knight of college basketball, and Don Shula of professional football.

"All of those men have had talented players," Anderson said.

HSBC sets tournament

From Staff Reports

The High Sky Bass Club will hold its 12th annual Invitational at Lake Amistad May 16-17.

Registration will be from 5 p.m. to midnight at Anglers Lodge May 15. The tournament's three divisions will be for men, women and teens.

Based on 300 entries, it will be a $12,000 cash tournament. In the past the tournament has averaged 400 entries.

This will be a live release tournament with weigh-in at Diablo East Marina. Contact tournament chairman Larry Turner at 686 3759...

WHITE AND black bass at Lake Spence shunted the stripers into the wings, but the biggest excitement was provided by a record yellow catfish caught on rod and reel.

Joe Carter of Canyon, using a 12-pound test line in 68 feet of water, took a 29 pound, six ounce flathead. Larger catfish have been caught at Spence, but were on trotlines.

Among other catches: Dale Neagle, Midland,a five-pound black; Tom Morgan, Jr and Sr., 25 white bass; and Kirby Nutt, Odessa, 14 1/2 and 15-6 stripers...

Meanwhile, fishing at Lake Thomas was comparatively light with crappie along the rocky and brushy areas providing the most action while black bass in 6-10 feet was fair to good....

DEER HUNTERS in 60 Texas counties may encounter less red tape when hunting anterless deer in 1987-88. An either-sex system, eliminating the requirement of an anterless deer hunting permit or tag from the landowner, has been proposed for the Edwards Plateau, South Texas and the Trans Pecos.

Landowners would have the right to dictate what hunters may take from their property....

AN INCREASING number of bass clubs in Texas are adopting rules allowing the immediate release of bass instead of bringing the cstch to a central weigh-in area.

This is made by possible by measuring each bass caught and using length/weight conversion tables to determine the weight of the total catch of the day.

Of course, paper tournaments require honesty in recording the fish size and random drawing of partners helps minimize the possibility of cheating....

ANGLERS trolling with downriggers have had outstanding success catching striped bass at Lake Spence.

Texas Parks and Wildlife biologist Bill Follis said at least 12 striped bass weighing more than 25 pounds each were taken during the last week of January along with large numbers in the 15-25 pound class.

Most of the catches have been at depths of 25 and 30 feet near the river channel.

FRIDAY, MARCH 27, 1987

YOUR BIRTHDAY TODAY: Money could slip through your fingers unless you stick to a budget. Get your personal life on track so that you can take advantage of the golden career and business opportunities that lie just around the corner. Pride is the key to getting back on top.

CELEBRITY BIRTHDATES: British leader James Callaghan, lithographer Nathaniel Currier, singer Sarah Vaughan, Cincinnati catcher Dave Van Gorder, actor Michael York, former Secretary of State Cyrus Vance, author-screenwriter Budd Schulbert, actress Gloria Swanson, auto racing's Cale Yarborough.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): A new business partnership will pay off handsomely. Agreements can be finalized and contracts signed. Family members are willing to hold the fort if you are tied down with work. Delegate more responsibility.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Financial affairs must be kept free from unnecessary risk. Arguments could arise with mate over money management. Do not follow the advice of friends. Community affairs hold special interest tonight. Find out more.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Avoid getting involved in an office dispute. There is no need to take sides. Keep your more unusual projects on the shelf for the time being. Loved ones seek your company. Be attentive.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Business negotiations may proceed slowly. Stick to routine work early in the day. Do not dip into savings. Acting impulsively will only worsen an already difficult work/home situation. Seek partner's understanding.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): This is not the day to contact an influential person. You may have to spend your spare time looking into someone else's affairs. A parent-child relationship improves when you spend more time together.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): A somewhat slow business day lies ahead. Your attempts to drum up business could prove useless. Concentrate on routine tasks and paperwork. Romance will be exciting. You meet a newcomer who shares your goal.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Keep your spending down and avoid getting involved in friends' get-rick-quick schemes. Influential people are impressed with your staying power. While others complain, you get the job done. Be diligent.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Do not go off on a tangent. Use logic when trying to solve a parent's problem. What is offered in the way of entertainment may not be worth the cash outlay involved. Stay home.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Concentrate on what you consider to be your top priorities. Loved ones make fewer demands. Formalize agreements. A legal or inheritance question can be cleared up on a friendly basis.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Distant financial affairs will require careful handling. Consult an influential person who has the clout you need. Enrolling in night school could be the answer to a stalled career. Learn new skills.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Favors will not be granted. Do not expect special treatment. Be prepared to knuckle down to routine. Do all possible to improve appearance of real estate to increase its market value.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Be careful how you deploy your resources. Resist temptation to gamble. Romance is mostly happy. A bind date could lead to a lasting alliance. Avoid revealing too much too soon.

The rubber bridge player usually doesn't give a tinker's hoot about overtricks. If he makes a couple, all well and good; but the contract's the thing. On the other hand, to the duplicate (ital) aficionado (end ital) overtricks can be all-important. That gives clever defenders the opportunity to exploit declarer's greed.

This hand is from the Life Master Pairs event at a recent North American championship. North's one no trump response was forcing. Note South's decision to bid his weak four-card heart suit in preference to a jump rebid of spades he did not want to risk losing a possible heart fit.

West led his singleton in his partner's suit. Sitting East was Tom Snow, business manager of New York's prestigious Cavendish Club. He won the jack of diamonds and smoothly shifted to his low club!

Declarer took his ace, cashed the ace of hearts and ruffed a heart. Since a crossruff would have promoted West's nine, declarer drew trumps and he could then have claimed 10 tricks, conceding two heart tricks to the opponents. But East's shift to a club at trick two had all the earmarks of a singleton and, after all, this was duplicate. With the help of the "marked" finesse for the queen of clubs, at least one overtrick seemed there for the taking. So declarer led a club to the jack, and a satisfied East took his queen and shifted to a heart for a one-trick set.

At the other tables East continued with a diamond at trick two. Declarer ruffed high, trumped a heart on the board, drew trumps and continued with the ace-king of clubs to earn an unexpected bonus of two overtricks.

'Color of Money' nomination won't lure Newman to Oscar ceremonies

Newman

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Paul Newman, nominated for the 1986 best-actor Oscar for "The Color of Money," is skipping Monday's award ceremonies, citing work and superstition.

Newman is working around the clock editing "The Glass Menagerie," starring his wife Joanne Woodward, said Newman's publicist, Warren Cowan. "He told me, 'Besides, I'm superstitious. I've been there seven times and lost. Maybe if I stay away I'll win.'"

Newman has been nominated seven times by the Motion Picture Academy of Arts and Sciences as an actor and once as producer, of "Rachel, Rachel."

In "The Color of Money" he reprises his 1961 Oscar-nominated role of "Fast Eddie" Felson, the razor-sharp pool player in "The Hustler."

Bonet

NEW YORK (AP) — A topless photo of Lisa Bonet of "The Cosby Show" appears in the April issue of Interview, and a spokesman for the magazine says it has two more such shots of the actress.

The photo follows the controversy that surrounded Miss Bonet's first movie, "Angel Heart," which initially received an X rating. The rating was changed to an R when a sex scene between Bonet and actor Mickey Rourke was edited.

Interview magazine spokesman Glenn Albin said Wednesday that three topless photos were taken of Miss Bonet, who plays one of the "Cosby" kids on the NBC series, and the magazine picked the best one.

He said Interview has no plans to print the two others.

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The USA for Africa Foundation, which produced the 1985 anti-famine hit "We Are the World" and the Hands Across America project, said 80 percent of the $82.5 million raised will be funneled to the homeless and hungry by May.

Foundation president Ken Kragen released an audit of the group's finances Wednesday showing 91 cents out of every dollar donated was being spent on relief programs in the United States and Africa.

Most important, Kragen stressed, was that the charity efforts raised the national awareness of hunger and homelessness.

USA for Africa will stay in operation indefinitely, disbursing funds and organizing more fund-raising efforts, Kragen said. There are no plans, however, to put together another Hands Across America event, he said.

"Our next big push will be the 1988 elections," Kragen said.

Asked if USA for Africa will lobby candidates to address world and nationwide hunger and homelessness, he said, "I don't know if you'll find a lot of them resisting. I think this is an issue which we have made so much a national issue that you will find, at least on the surface, substantial commitment to doing something."

The audit by the accounting firm of Laventhol & Horwath showed that USA for Africa's total general and administrative overhead was $1.65 million, or 2 percent of total revenue. The cost of raising the funds, the audit showed, was $5.6 million, or 7 percent, of the total raised.

The "We Are the World" project has raised $53 million as of Dec. 31 of which 90 percent was earmarked for use in Africa and 10 percent for distribution in the United States. So far, $41 million from that project has been disbursed in various grants, the audit revealed.

An additional $1.5 million in record royalties has been received since the audit period, Kragen said.

The Hands Across America event occurred last May 25, when an estimated 7 million Americans formed a cross-country chain, raised nearly $25 million, with $15 million spent in grants to the hungry and homeless in the United States, Kragen said.

Nearly $10 million in new grants to aid the hungry and homeless were also announced by Kragen.

The grants announced Wednesday bring the total of "We Are the World" funds awarded to 77 percent of the total raised, Kragen said. More grants to be announced on the first anniversary of the Hands Across America event will bring the total to 80 percent, he said.

Urich

BOSTON (AP) — Actor Robert Urich has Boston behind him in his effort to keep ABC from canceling his "Spenser For Hire" detective series.

City Council passed a resolution in favor of the Boston-filmed show and addressed it to ABC Entertainment President Brandon Stoddard.

"This show is not ready to die," Urich told the council and a cheering audience of about 200 in City Hall on Wednesday.

Tom Mackin, vice president for program information at ABC in New York, said fall programming will not be determined until May and that "it's premature to speculate" on the show's future.

He said that as a show of support ABC will preempt "Dynasty" April 15 to show a special episode of "Spenser," which is based on the novels of Boston writer Robert B. Parker.

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. (AP) — Chuck Yeager of "Right Stuff" fame says he became a test pilot by accident.

The retired Air Force general, who in 1947 became the first man to fly faster than the speed of sound and in 1953 the first to fly at twice the speed of sound, lectured Wednesday at Florida State University.

Yeager, 64, said World War II pilots who had been shot down could select a base for their post-war assignments and that he chose Wright Field, a test site in Dayton, Ohio, because it was closest to his West Virginia home.

"I had no intention of being a test pilot," he said. "I lucked out. I was in the right place at the right time."

NEW YORK (AP) — Ed Bradley, who says he had to prove to news executives that black people could be reporters, was one of six people honored by the World Institute of Black Communications and CBS Records as pioneers of excellence.

Others honored Wednesday were Parren Mitchell, a former Maryland congressman; former heavyweight champion Floyd Patterson; Jackee Harry, a star of NBC's "227;" Bettiann Gardner, a co-founder of the nation's largest black hair care company, and newly-crowned heavyweight champion Mike Tyson.

Dollar up slightly

LONDON (AP) — The dollar was marginally higher today, propped up by a two-day burst of central bank intervention to arrest its slide against the Japanese yen and major European currencies. Gold was lower.

Dealers said trading was extremely quiet as the market absorbed the effects of intervention Tuesday and Wednesday by U.S., Japanese and West German central banks.

In Tokyo, where trading ends before Europe's business day begins, the dollar rose 0.05 yen to a closing 149.40 yen. Later, in London, it was quoted at 149.30 yen.

Bank of Japan Governor Satoshi Sumita said the bank would continue to act in concert with other industrial powers to stabilize the yen.

Gold opened in London at a bid price of $411.20 a troy ounce, compared with late Wednesday's $413.50. At midmorning today, the city's five major bullion dealers fixed a recommended price of $411.30.

In Zurich, the bid price was $411.20, down from $414 late Wednesday.

Earlier, in Hong Kong, gold closed at a bid price of $410.91, down $1.56.

"The market seems to have run out of steam" after getting as high as $415.50 an ounce Wednesday, one London trader said. She said the market would probably consolidate at current levels and strengthen Friday or early next week.

Silver bullion was trading in London today at a bid price of $5.86 a troy ounce, down from $5.88 late Wednesday.

PRO

Sams

- An oil import fee would prevent predatory pricing by nationalized oil companies.
- Oil prices must be stabilized to insure the survival of the domestic industry.
- Overdependence on foreign crude oil poses a threat to national security.
- An oil import fee would be good for consumer and producer, insuring a healthy oil industry and uninterrupted supplies.
- America cannot depend on 'friendly' nations for crude oil, because they may not be friendly when the chips are down.
- Without an oil import fee OPEC can stop exploration and production in this country at will.
- The independent oilman is the exploration arm of the industry and must be saved if new reserves are to be found.

CON

Hughes

- America's best interest is served by saving our reserves and buying foreign crude oil.
- In the long run, low oil prices are best for the country. Higher oil prices would cut $70 billion from the GNP and cost the nation 400,000 jobs.
- There is nothing wrong with being 50 percent dependent on foreign crude, because Mexico and Canada are our biggest suppliers of energy.
- World War III will not be an extended conflict, requiring large energy reserves.
- Many major oil companies do not want an import fee.
- Those wanting low oil prices outnumber those wanting higher prices 220 to one, making an import fee impossible.
- There are few reserves left for independent oil companies to discover; majors will have to invest heavily in offshore and frontiers to find substantial new reserves.

Import fee continues to be divisive issue

By JOHN PAUL PITTS
Business/Oil Editor

The oil import fee continued to be a divisive topic as the proposal was debated at a Wednesday meeting of the West Texas Producers Forum, and approved only by a narrow 13 to 11 margin, with a number of the audience abstaining from the straw vote.

Oilman Perkins Sams, chairman Banner Energy and a member of Energy Security Policy group spoke on the pro side of the import fee question, while Kingdon Hughes, owner of Subsurface Library, took the con side.

Tracing petroleum back 2,000 years to when the Chinese discovered natural gas, trapped it in bamboo pipes and used it for fuel, Sams said oil is and always has been a global effort. The United States is now in a global market in which $2.5 billion changes hands everyday and in which nations — not corporations — control most of the oil in the world. He said oil prices must be stabilized to prevent nations from predatory pricing and halting exploration at will.

Sams said recent proposed incentives, such as 27.5 percent depletion on new wells, would help the industry but would not stabilize oil prices. "We are so far down, we need both the incentives and a stable oil price," said Sams.

He linked a sick oil industry to national security, saying the U.S. appetite for oil had increased dramatically for the past four decades with each decade requiring more than all the previous decades: "The more we consume, the less we produce and the less we produce the more we fall into the hands of those with the most reserves."

The import fee spokesman said a temporary, variable tax on crude oil would provide an instant remedy for the domestic oil industry and prevent U.S. dependence on third world countries, but added that it should be fair tax for all America.

Kingdon Hughes disagreed, stating that it was the Reagan administration's position that America would best be served by the continued use of cheap foreign oil, while not using any more U.S. reserves than necessary. He said preservation of reserves would be the equivalent to establishing strategic petroleum reserves around the nation.

Explaining that there were some who saw the administration as having no energy policy, Hughes said preservation of reserves and the use of foreign crude was the apparent and implied energy policy of the Reagan administration: "It is an unwritten policy and I am not sure they (the administration) want to or should go public with it." He admitted he had no direct knowledge that this was indeed administration policy, but said it was so obvious that it should be officially stated.

Natural gas receipts tax introduced

By STEVE LEVINE
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Trying to recapture a portion of the $19 million a year in taxes lost with recent changes in natural gas marketing, a state representative Wednesday announced a new tax plan for the industry.

House Energy Committee Chairman Clint Hackney, D-Houston, said his bill would recoup about $6 million a year, with one quarter of that money providing a tax break for drillers of new oil and gas wells.

Texas applies a gross receipts tax on the sales price of the gas. Before 1983, most of the gas in the transmission pipelines was owned and sold by the pipelines, Hackney said.

Since then, producers, independents and special marketing affiliates have picked up a share of the transportation market. Those groups pay taxes only on the transport fee for the gas, not the entire sales price.

"The industry has undergone extensive restructuring, causing a significant loss in revenue," Hackney said. "This bill would impose the gross receipts tax equitably among the entities engaged in the transportation and sale of gas in the state."

In 1982, he said, the state collected nearly $36 million in gross receipts taxes. Last year, collection dropped to $16 million.

Twenty-five percent of the revenues from Hackney's new tax would flow directly to the state well-plugging fund, "providing for correction of environmental damages attributable to the industry." In addition, the tax could allow the state to discontinue the $100 drilling permit fee which now finances well plugging activities.

Congress boosts EOR funds

From Staff Reports

Funds for enhanced oil recovery research (EOR) were increased 57 percent Wednesday by the Energy Research & Development Subcommittee of the House Science, Space and Technology Committee, according to a spokesman for Rep. Lamar Smith's office.

He said most of the additional funds will go to the research of light crude extraction and could be a benefit to the Permian Basin, since many of the research projects are government-private joint venture projects and the Permian Basin has a high potential for EOR.

Current EOR budgets which call for the spending of $11.2 million will now be increased to $17.6 million.

The push to increase the funds for enhanced oil recovery research was led by Rep. Lamar Smith (R-San Antonio) and Rep. Jim Chapman (D-Sulphur Springs).

Developer selected for Hall of Fame

DALLAS (AP) — Trammell Crow, the architect of a North Texas real estate company with more than $13 billion in assets, is still going strong at age 73.

As testimony to his achievements, he was to be inducted today into the National Business Hall of Fame, which is sponsored by Junior Achievement Inc. and selected by the editors of Fortune magazine.

Privately held Trammell Crow Co. is attempting to transform and broaden its management organization to better conform to its gigantic size. Its founder retains the title of chairman of the Crow holding company.

"I'm not a figurehead, but neither am I an executive," Crow said. "My goal is to support the company the best way I can. That's all I want to do."

At the start of this year, Crow Co.'s owners discarded the company organization used during the past 10 years of growth and adopted a new structure. All the development firm's divergent businesses and operations have been consolidated into a single company.

"I'll never take another big risk in my life," Crow said. "I just don't want to bother. Neither will I stop leading a functional life."

AP Laserphoto

Developer Trammel Crow will be honored for his role in shaping the Dallas skyline by being inducted into the Business Hall of Fame.

"Trammell was born to take risks and he will always take risks," said Mack Pogue, a former partner who now runs Lincoln Property Co. "Sometimes those risks will get him in trouble, but those risks are what made him what he is."

Pogue, asked to compare Crow with another famous real estate baron, Donald Trump of New York, said, "There's no comparison. Trump can look out his window and see all the buildings he's ever built.

"Trammell can get in a jet and travel for three days and not even catch a glimpse of all his buildings."

Main Hurdman censured by SEC over FNB audit

NEW YORK (NYT) — In an unusual wrist-slapping of a major public accounting firm, the Securities and Exchange Commission censured KMG Main Hurdman Wednesday for "improper professional conduct" during two audits in Texas.

One of the audits was of the First National Bank of Midland, a big energy lender declared insolvent in October 1983. Ten months earlier, on Dec. 31, 1982, the bank had reported a profit and shortly thereafter KMG Main Hurdman issued an unqualified, "clean" opinion on all of the bank's 1982 financial statements.

The other audit dealt with Time Energy Systems, a marketer of energy-conservation equipment that is based in Houston. The SEC charged that Time Energy prematurely recorded revenue in 1983, 1984 and the first half of 1985 on research-and-development contracts and that KMG Main Hurdman failed to note this in financial statements it audited or reviewed.

KMG Main Hurdman is one of the largest accounting firms in the world and specializes in auditing small and midsize companies. Its chairman and chief executive, John A. Thompson, said in a statement that the firm had settled the charges without admitting or denying guilt and had agreed to make certain internal changes in order to put the cases behind it.

"We have reviewed the work performed in these engagements and stand behind it," he said. He said he had wanted the case closed so as not to derail KMG Main Hurdman's pending merger with Peat Marwick & Co.

Although the SEC has censured big public accounting firms in the past, firms generally go to great lengths to avoid such a reprimand.

"Basically, a censure means 'you didn't do this job well, but we don't believe it's indicative of an endemic problem in your total firm's practice,' " said John Burton, the former chief accountant at the SEC and now dean of the Columbia University Business School.

The SEC's deepest concerns seemed to center on the audit of the Midland bank.

The commission took issue with the accounting treatment of a sale-and-leaseback transaction the bank engaged in at the end of 1982.

The transaction, which involved the sale to a group of local businessmen of the bank's headquarters, resulted in a gain in the bank's 1982 financial statements that allowed it to report a full-year profit.

Industrial Foundation seeks SSC funds

By DEANNA J. NEAL
Business/Oil Writer

The Industrial Foundation of Midland, Inc. is organizing a fund-raising drive to obtain money they plan to donate to the Superconducting Super Collider project.

The non-profit organization, formed in 1987 as an arm of the Midland Chamber of Commerce, is raising the funds to help attract the multi-billion dollar SSC project to a site in Garden City, east of Midland.

At a Wednesday board meeting of the Chamber, Doug Henson, member of the fund raising committee and immediate past president of the Foundation, told board members the "private-public cooperative endeavor will be a two-week concentrated drive to solicit funds for the project."

The group has set a minimum goal of $50,000 and will kick off its campaign on April 7. Said Henson: "Because of the importance of this project, we anticipate no problem in raising the funds. Area residents realize the opportunity and potential of having the facility in West Texas."

Bill Franklin, chairman of the fund raising group, said, "This is an economic opportunity that has the potential of becoming one of the most important, powerful and economically stabilizing forces in our history.

"People have been wanting diversification and our chance is now. We want the project. We need the project. And the Industrial Foundation of Midland is going all-out to be sure we get the project."

The city of Midland has already invested $45,000 in the project notes Joe Kloesel, vice chairman of the SSC steering committee and Chamber executive vice president. "It requires a great deal of marketing and research to attract the SSC to West Texas, and marketing and research cost money. The Foundation's campaign will be crucial to our success," Kloesel added.

Members of the boards of the Chamber, the Foundation and the Midland Industrial Development Corp. have volunteered their time to contact a prospect list of more than 800 individuals. "If each of the prospects gives $100, we could easily surpass our goal of $50,000," Henson said.

McCrory's launches TG&Y grand opening today

By MELLA McEWEN

Midland's TG&Y store at 36 Village Circle will be one of more than 500 TG&Y stores welcomed into the McCrory family of five and dime stores today.

According to Jim Anderson, manager of the Midland store, there will be a grand opening celebration that includes a sale and prizes. The prizes include two $25 shopping sprees, an AM/FM clock radio, cassette storage crate with a free cassette, and three men's and ladies' LCD quartz watches. A circular containing information on sale items was to be in Midland mailboxes Wednesday, he said.

One customer — drawn from entries submitted by all the stores — will win a trip for four to Disney World and Epcot Center in Orlando, Fla.

TG&Y was acquired by McCrory in 1986. McCrory operates five and dime stores under the names McCrory, J.J. Newberry, TG&Y, H.L. Green, Kress, Silver, Elmore, Britts and Kittinger. Anderson said the Midland store is now officially a McCrory's.

A new restaurant in Plaza Center next to Baskin-Robbins offers sandwiches on homemade whole wheat or french bread.

PARROT'S EATERY offers ham & cheese, roast beef, chicken, turkey or tuna salad sandwiches; hamburgers; chalupas; soft tacos; nachos and salads to eat in or carry out.

Owner Kevin Smith pointed out that Parrot's is open for dinner. Hours are from 10:30 a.m. to 9 p.m. Monday through Thursday and 10:30 a.m. to 10 p.m. Friday and Saturday. Parrot's moved to Midland after five years in Odessa.

BACK TO EDEN, a new delicatessen in Northwest Crossing next to the Body Shop, will open Monday and cater to Midlanders who believe they are what they eat.

"We want our food to be as natural as possible," said owner Udell Wilson. He and his family — his wife, two daughters and a son — will operate the deli, offering a salad bar and a selection of five to six vegetarian-style sandwiches, fresh juices and protein drinks. "We won't carry any fried foods," Wilson said. "Our objective is to get back to nature." Other offerings will include a soup and salad combination and a whipsee, which is similar to soft ice cream. Wilson noted that along with their food, customers will receive a listing of the amount of caloric, carbohydrate and fat content of their selection.

The restaurant will seat 40, and is decorated with a small fountain and palm trees.

A new nightclub in Midland is best described as "funk and rock" according to owner Bob Jackson, former office manager for James Brown in Augusta Ga. and New York City.

PLAYMATE WEST, 3305 W. Front, boasts a live disc jockey and two dance floors — although the upstairs floor is open only on weekends. Jackson plans happy hour buffets on weekends and hopes to bring in well-known recording artists to perform at the club. He also said he is trying to reach an agreement with KQIP radio to broadcast from the club on Saturday nights.

WEST TEXAS RECYCLING, No. 28 Industrial Loop West, is the only paper recycling plant in this vicinity, according to manager Armando Urquidez. "Right now we're running 400 tons a month of corrugated, and 80 tons of newspaper, and there's 400 to 450 tons floating around that we'd like to get out of trash cans, dumpsites and landfills," he said.

A grand opening is planned for 1 p.m. Saturday and Midland Mayor Carroll Thomas will greet the mayors of Fort Stockton, Monahans, Kermit, Pecos and Odessa, who have been invited to attend the opening. They were invited because the plant collects papers from the Midland, Odessa, Fort Stockton, Monahans, Kermit and Pecos newspapers.

Urquidez said the plant will have a drop box that can be used by the Boy Scouts, and other civic and relief organizations for fund-raising. He said he can be contacted for details on the drop box.

OIL & GAS REPORT

EXPLORATION HIGHLIGHTS

Strawn find has caof of 11.1 Mmcf

From Staff Reports

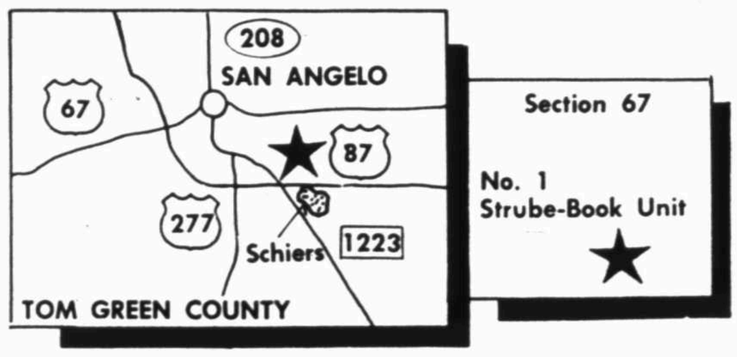
A Strawn gas discovery has been recorded in Tom Green County, on the northern edge of the Schniers field.

FORTUNE PRODUCTION CO., San Angelo, potentialed the No. 1 Strube-Book Unit for a calculated absolute open flow of 11.1 Mmcfd from perforations 4,714 to 4,716 ft. The interval was acidized with 250 gallons of acid.

Total depth was 4,900 ft., where 4 1/2 inch casing was set, and the well was plugged back to 4,808 ft.

The well topped the Strawn at 4,631 ft., Harkey at 4,370, and the Palo Pinto at 4,213 ft. on ground elevation of 1,866 ft.

Location is 889 ft. from south and 2,211 ft. from east lines of Section 69, District 11, SPRR survey, 1/8 mile north of Wall.



Upton field extender flows 395 barrels oil

POGO PRODUCING CO., Midland, has completed the second producer and a quarter-mile north extension to the King Mountain Southeast (Bend) field of Upton County.

On potential test, the No. 6 J.H. Shirk Estate flowed 395 barrels of 42 gravity crude and no water on a 16/64 to 22/64 inch choke. The well is flowing from perforations 9,583 to 9,606 ft., which had been acidized with 2,000 gallons acid. Gas-oil ratio is 1,525:1.

The well was drilled to a total depth of 9,761 ft., where 5 1/2 inch casing was set, and plugged back to 9,720 ft.

Formation tops, on ground elevation of 2,788.5 ft., include the Rustler at 1,530 ft., Grayburg at 3,991, San Andres at 4,139, Dean at 7,470, Cisco at 8,600, and the Bend at 9,485 ft.

Location is 2,310 ft. from south and 1,980 ft. from west lines of Section 19, Block 2, MK&T survey, 10 miles north-northeast of McCamey.

Tannehill discovery tested in King County

A Wichita Falls firm reports a Tannehill discovery in King County, west of the Buggs field.

TRIO OPERATING CO., Wichita Falls, finaled the No. 1-67 Parramore to pump 80 barrels of 38 gravity crude and no water from perforations 3,094 to 3,097 ft. Gas-oil ratio is 89:1.

Permitted as a 3,300 ft. wildcat, the well was drilled to a total depth of 3,180 ft., where 4 1/2 inch casing was set, and plugged back to 3,144 ft.

The well topped the Stockwether Lime at 3,040 ft. on ground elevation of 1,749 ft. Pay was topped at 3,094 ft.

Location is 467 ft. from north and 1,400 ft. from west lines of Section 67, Block F, H&TC survey, 16 miles south of Guthrie.

The operator has proposed a field name of Laura (Tannehill) for the find.

Midland field gains Devonian producer

The Azalea field of Midland County has gained a new Devonian producer as TEMPO ENERGY, INC., Midland, continues activity in the area.

Tempo potentialed the No. 1-W Hale to flow 44 barrels of 48 gravity crude, 300 Mcfd and no water on a 12/64 inch choke with a flowing tubing pressure of 240 psi. Production is from perforations 11,244 to 11,294 ft., which had been acidized with 2000 gallons of 15 percent NeFe acid and fractured with 78,000 gallons of frac and 85,000 lbs. 20/40 sand. Gas-oil ratio is 6.8:1.

Drilled to 11,800 ft., where 5 1/2 inch casing was set, the well was plugged back to 11,664 ft.

On ground elevation of 2,694.5 ft., formation tops include the Rustler at 1,653 ft., Yates at 2,427, San Andres at 4,062, Upper Spraberry at 7,217, Lower Spraberry at 7,739, Strawn Lime at 10,312, and the Devonian at 11,240 ft. Pay was topped at 11,240 ft.

Location is 1,980 ft. from east and 660 ft. from north lines of Section 12, Block 37, T-2-S, T&P survey, 11 miles east of Midland.

Hendrick field yields 66 barrel producer

KEYSTONE ENERGY OIL & GAS, INC. has added a new producer to the Hendrick field of Winkler County with completion of the No. 1 Leck "A".

The well was tested to flow 66 barrels of 34.8 gravity crude, 35.6 Mcfd and 250 barrels of water on an 18/64 inch choke with a flowing tubing pressure of 170 psi. The well is flowing from perforations 3,014 to 3,078 ft., which had been acidized with 5,800 gallons of 15 percent HCL and fractured with 24,000 gallons of gel and 51,000 lbs. 20/40 sand. Gas-oil ratio is 539.4:1.

Total depth was 3,185 ft., where 5 1/2 inch casing was set, and the well was plugged back to 3,078 ft.

Formation tops, on ground elevation of 2,880.5 ft., include the Rustler at 1,215 ft., Sat at 1,635, Tansill at 2,762, and the Yates at 2,888 ft. Pay was topped at 3,014 ft.

Location is 330 ft. from south and east lines of Section 15, Block 74, PSL survey, eight miles northwest of Kermit.

OIL & GAS DIGEST

Seagull Energy has revenue increase in 1986

HOUSTON (SWN) — Seagull Energy Corp. announced increases in revenues, operating profit and funds provided from operations for 1986. However, the company reported a small after-tax net loss, primarily as a result of non-cash charges arising from valuation allowances taken during the first half of 1986 to reflect accounting adjustments to the value of the company's oil and gas reserves.

For the full year, Seagull recorded revenues of $177 million, operating profit of $31.2 million and funds provided from operations of $48.3 million. During 1985, revenues totaled $96.2 million, operating profit was $29.3 million and funds provided from operations was $22.7 million.

The company's 1986 loss applicable to common stock totaled $2.2 million, or 34 cents per common share, compared with 1985 earnings of $7.3 million, or $1.16 per common share. The valuation allowances, which totaled $35.9 million before taxes, primarily were a result of sharply lower energy prices.

Alexander Energy announces financial results

OKLAHOMA CITY (SWN) — Alexander Energy Corp. has announced financial results for the third fiscal quarter and first nine months ended Dec. 31, 1986.

For the quarter, revenues totaled $999,000 compared with $1,925,000 in the same period of last year. In the nine months, the company reported a net loss of $885,000, or 11 cents per share, vs. a profit in the year earlier period of $304,000, or 4 cents per share. Revenues in the latest nine month period were $3,216,000 compared with $6,095,000 in the year earlier nine month period.

YOU ARE INVITED

Pacific Texas Pipeline Company extends an invitation to all; to our official groundbreaking for our Midland Terminal and Tank Farm.

The Time - 11:30 A.M.
March 27, 1987

Location - Midland Fairgrounds Rd. & FM 307

We of Pacific Texas want this to be our homecoming to Texas after eight years of California and the accomplishments of obtaining over 700 government permits for the construction of our Crude Oil Pipeline from Los Angeles Harbor to Midland. This is a proud day for us, especially us Texans, to come home with over 100 permanent jobs for Midland, of operating our present offices and future facilities here from now on. We are creating Texas jobs for over 1,800 people at the USX (U.S. Steel Plant at Baytown) over 1,000 jobs at the Pittsburg Des Moines (POM) plate plant at Orange, Texas (our contractors for the Midland and Los Angeles tank farms) and the Westinghouse Plant at Georgetown, plus several thousand jobs for construction workers in Texas and the other three states that we pass through, transporting Alaskan crude destined for the Midwest, East Coast and the Gulf Coast refineries, which will help reduce the amount of imported oil needed in our country, thus reducing our country's balance of payments deficit and this will benefit each of us citizens. We are extremely proud to have used our "Buy U.S.A." plan for everything that was purchased and to be purchased, which has worked for all of us.

When we decided to form Pacific Texas Pipeline Company eight years ago, to build a West to East crude pipeline, there were many "naysayers" who said it couldn't be done, because others had tried and failed, but we ignored these people and went ahead with our plans of methodically obtaining our permits in advance of beginning construction. At times it was a lonely battle and often very discouraging. Today these same "naysayers" are saying we are "lucky" and I agree; but I remember an old saying from the East Texas Oil Patch that was a favorite of the wildcatters. It went like this - "If you spell luck with a 'P' it becomes PLUCK and if you keep "Plucking" away long enough, you get very lucky."

It is with a great deal of pride that we of Pacific Texas feel that you, our neighbors and friends in Midland, have Pluck within your plans for the future of Midland and the Permian Basin. Together we will create our luck, with God's help. We look forward to seeing you at our celebration!

Record Conrail public offering expected

NEW YORK (AP) — Conrail is ending 11 years under government ownership and going public with an expected record $1.65 billion initial stock offering.

The federal government is selling its 85 percent stake in the freight railroad today by offering 58.75 million common shares to investors. The remaining 15 percent of the company is owned by participants in Conrail's employee stock ownership program.

The offering's underwriters, led by Goldman, Sachs & Co., priced the issue late Wednesday at $28 a share, according to market sources who agreed to discuss the sale on the condition they not be identified.

That means the underwriters will attempt to sell the stock for $28 a share to their investor clients, after which the stock will begin trading in the open market.

The stock, which will carry the ticker symbol CRR and trade on the New York Stock Exchange, was expected to be priced between $26 and $29 a share.

At $28 a share, the offering would raise $1.65 billion for the government less its selling costs, making it the largest initial public offering by a U.S. company.

The previous record was Henley Group's $1.3 billion offering last May 20, according to IDD Information Services, a financial research firm.

On a global scale, the Conrail issue would fall short of several recent public sales of shares in British companies that were state owned. The largest offering was British Gas PLC last Dec. 8, which totaled $8 billion.

Conrail, based in Philadelphia, was formed by the government in 1976 out of the the bankrupt Penn Central Railroad and other railroads. It operates in 15 states in the Northeast and Midwest.

Conrail suffered losses until the early 1980s but it has since used cost-cutting, employee concessions and modernization to become profitable. Last year, Conrail earned $431 million on revenue of $3.14 billion.

Those 1986 figures reflect certain favorable accounting treatment that Conrail would not receive as a private company. Conrail has said it would have earned $208 million had it been subject to conventional accounting procedures and federal tax liability.

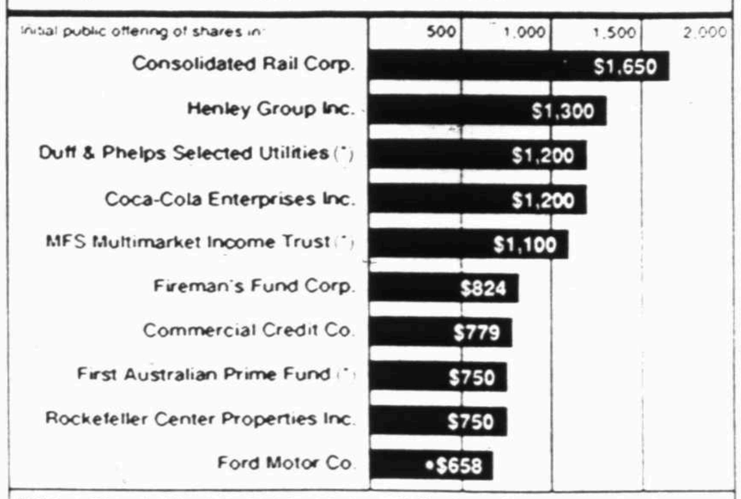
The Reagan administration proposed several years ago to sell the government's interest in Conrail, and in 1985 the Transportation Department endorsed a $1.2 million merger proposal from Norfolk Southern Corp.

Norfolk Southern's offer, later raised to $1.9 billion, won Senate approval, but the bid stalled in the House, where critics asserted that the merger would be anti-competitive. The bid also was opposed by Conrail management.

Norfolk Southern withdrew its offer in August, after which the government opted for the public stock offering.

Conrail's Stock Flotation

The initial public offering of 85% of Consolidated Rail Corporation is expected to be the biggest in U.S. history. Ranked below are the ten largest U.S. offerings (in millions of dollars)



Note: Lists of offerings sold primarily in U.S.; dollar figures include shares sold outside U.S. but excludes over-allotment options.

Bankers host district meeting

Six Midland banks are hosting the 1987 District Six meeting of the Texas Bankers Association, scheduled for Friday and Saturday.

Activities include a golf tourney at Mission Country Club, ladies luncheon and style show at the Plaza Club, dinner and dance at the Midland Hilton, and a business meeting with noted speaker William Carden.

Over 90 banks in District Six will be sending bankers as representatives to the meeting. The Texas Bankers Association will be represented by the president, Bookman Peters, executive vice president Sam Kimberlin, and the editor of "Texas Bankers," George Seagert. The chief executive officer and chairman of Texas American Bank of Midland, Charles Grimes, is the chairman of District Six.

DEBATE

Hughes said it would be hard to refute the evidence that cheap oil was good for the nation as a whole, saying that an import fee would cut $70 billion from the gross national product and 400,000 jobs. He said the oil industry was outnumbered about 220 to one on the issue and had little chance of passing an import fee.

He equated an oil import fee to farm price supports and said the oil industry could be subjected to the same devastation caused by artificial prices and federal subsidies. Said Hughes jokingly: "They say a good farmer is a capitalist on the upswing and a socialist on the downswing."

Hughes also noted that there were few reserves left to be found by independents in the U.S. He said significant reserves remained to be found offshore and in Alaska, but it would be up to the major oil companies, with their vast financial resources, to explore these frontiers.

As for the national security argument, Hughes explained that it was the conclusion of many military people that World War III will be over in a matter of days.

AUDIT

According to the SEC, the price was inflated and the accountants should have known that and reported it. In any case, the commission said, KMG Main Hurdman failed to give proper accounting treatment to the lease payments the bank made to the new owners of its building. Under Generally Accepted Accounting Principles, a gain on a sale of a building must be reduced by lease payments received.

The SEC said the auditors had "substantially ignored the substance of the transaction and persuasive evidence in conflict with the accounting treatment and failed to display appropriate professional skepticism."

The commission also criticized top executives at KMG Main Hurdman.

"The national office was aware of the significance of the client, of the incorrect accounting advice which the engagement team had provided First National Bank of Midland's management on the November proposal, that the sale/leaseback transaction was intended to mitigate the effects of write-offs and increases in loan loss reserve, and that management had resisted advice as to proper accounting and was not forthcoming in its disclosures to the engagement team," the SEC wrote.

Federal Reserve OKs Texas Commerce sale

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Federal Reserve announced Wednesday it has approved the application of Chemical Bank of New York to acquire Texas Commerce Bancshares, the fourth largest bank in Texas.

The Fed said Chemical Bank's parent company, Chemical New York Corp., had been granted approval to acquire the Houston bank, which has domestic deposits of $13.5 billion, representing approximately 8.6 percent of the total deposits of commercial banks in Texas.

The Fed said it was granting approval under a section of federal banking law that allows banks to cross state lines if state law expressly grants such authority.

The board said that before granting the application it considered what impact it would have on future competition in New York and Texas. It said the approval was granted based on a belief that competition would not be lessened in either state given the existence of numerous other banks in both areas.

GAS TAX—

Railroad Commissioner John Sharp and Rex White, chairman of a Texas Independent Producers and Royalty Owners Association committee on state issues, endorsed the plan. Focussing on the possible elimination of the drilling fee, White called the bill "a wise precaution in view of the hard times facing the energy industry."

First City introduces IRA plus
The IRA with high opening interest plus the opportunity to go higher.

First City Bank's exclusive IRA Plus is an exciting new addition to our wide range of IRA investment services. The First City IRA Plus gives you a high opening rate on a 2-year to 5-year CD, plus the chance to earn even more if the cost of living goes up.

Every April 1st, beginning next year, we'll compare your IRA Plus opening rate to the cost-of-living index.* And whichever rate is higher – that's your rate for the next year. But that's not all. The new First City IRA Plus gives you one plus after another.

Plus Rate protection. You'll never earn less than your opening rate.

Plus You can open your IRA Plus with as little as $100.

Plus You can make additional deposits of $100 or more through December 31st, 1987.

Plus You pay no fees or charges.

Plus You'll receive detailed quarterly statements.

Plus You have the security of FDIC insurance.

Remember – the April 15th tax deadline may be your last chance to claim an IRA deduction. So, call First City or come in today for full details about the new First City IRA Plus.

We'll also be glad to discuss with you our other IRA investment services, which include our 6-month and 12-month CDs, Money Market Savings and Self-Directed IRAs.

*The cost-of-living index is the previous year's percentage change in the annual average Consumer Price Index (CPI) plus 5.5. Rates are subject to change without notice. Substantial interest penalty for early withdrawal. Available at participating First City Banks. This offer is subject to cancellation without notice. Member FDIC. ©1987 FCBOT.

INVESTOR'S GUIDE

Up to 25 percent of net income can go toward Keogh plan annually

By BILL DOYLE

Q. I operate my own business and have been making tax-deductible contributions to both a Keogh self-employed retirement plan and a regular individual retirement account since 1982.

The new federal tax law restricts the IRA tax deduction a working person is allowed to take, if he is in a pension plan. Since I am not covered by a corporate or government pension plan, can I still take tax deductions for IRA contributions?

A. That depends on your income. A Keogh plan is a "tax-qualified retirement plan." The rules that apply to employees in pension and other retirement plans also apply to Keogh plan participants.

Doyle

You're counted as being in a retirement plan, just as you would be if you were covered by an employer's pension plan.

Beginning this year, you can take a tax deduction for the full amount you put into your IRA, if your adjusted gross income is less than $25,000 — $40,000 if you're married and file a joint federal income tax return.

If your adjusted gross income is higher than those numbers, you're allowed a partial IRA deduction. The deductible amount declines gradually, until your adjusted gross income reaches $35,000 — $50,000 for joint filers. Past those income levels, you're not allowed any IRA tax deduction.

The maximum annual deduction for an IRA contribution remains at $2,000 — $2,250 for a spousal IRA, if you're married and your spouse is not employed.

These new rules go into effect for 1987. Don't neglect to make your 1986 IRA contribution.

You can, of course, continue to make tax-deductible contributions to your Keogh plan. You're allowed to put up to $30,000 or 25 percent of your "net" self-employed income into a defined contribution Keogh plan annually. However, that "net" is reduced by the amount you put into the plan, making your effective contribution 20 percent of your self-employed income.

• • •

Q. When I reach age 70½, I will be obliged to begin making mandatory withdrawals of money from my IRA and Keogh plan. But I will continue to engage in an income-producing profession.

Will I then be permitted to continue making contributions to my Keogh plan and taking tax deductions as I have in the past?

A. Yes. Your annual contributions to an IRA must stop, as of the year you turn 70½. But you can keep making tax-deductible contributions to a Keogh plan as long as you have self-employed income.

Non-dairy coffee creamers can contain saturated fat

By MARIAN FARR

Farr

Although powdered non-dairy coffee lighteners can boast that they contain no cholesterol, they may still help elevate blood cholesterol levels.

The coconut oil commonly used in these products is even more saturated than the fat in cream. The more saturated the fat, the more it works to raise blood cholesterol. Even small amounts of these products used in coffee can make a difference. For example, a person who eats 2,000 calories a day should be getting 10 percent or less of those calories from saturated fat. That amounts to about 22 grams a day.

Four cups of coffee, each with a level tablespoon of lightener, will contain nearly eight grams of saturated fat, or more than a third of the day's allotment.

Powdered non-dairy creamers are often used in the workplace because they require no refrigeration. As an alternative, you might bring a box of nonfat dry milk powder to lighten coffee at the office. It contains very little fat, virtually no cholesterol and does not require refrigeration.

At home or when eating out, low-fat evaporated milk, low-fat or skim milk also are alternatives to the non-dairy creamers.

People who don't like the taste produced with low-fat milk can use whole milk. It contains more fat and cholesterol than low-fat or skim milk, but is better for people on cholesterol-lowering diets than the highly saturated powdered coffee lighteners.

Liquid non-dairy creamers made from soybean oil contain less saturated fat than the powdered coffee lighteners, but they have as much total fat. They also are substantially higher in fat than whole milk.

When shopping for liquid non-dairy creamers, check the ingredients label to make sure the porduct doesn't contain coconut oil.

Persons who have been told by their doctors to reduce their cholesterol intake should be particularly cautious in their selection of coffee creamers.

Hawaiian potato chips not as good as being there

By LINDA ANDERSON

Anderson

Like Julie Andrews in "The Sound of Music," I, too, have my favorite things — two of them are potato chips and the Today show. Deprive me of either one and I become very, very cranky.

So naturally when Willard Scott, weatherman and professional ray of sunshine on Today, started raving about Hawaiian potato chips, I took notice.

Unfortunately, my chances of actually visiting Hawaii in person in the near future are somewhere between slim and none. Fortunately, Hawaiian potato chips are available in West Texas, thanks to some local supermarkets and Granny Goose Foods Inc. (No, I'm not kidding — that really is the name of the company.)

Hawaiian Style Potato Chips were checked out by several junk-food junkies for taste, price and advertising accuracy.

A 5-ounce bag of the chips cost about $1.59 in a local supermarket. Regular made-in-Texas potato chips cost $1.33 for a 6½-ounce bag. (Prices listed are from a local supermarket. Prices at other locations may vary.)

Label advertising claims the chips are "crispy, crunchy and extra good. Just like they've always been made in the islands. All natural." It gets even more wild: "Hawaii. Where the warm blue Pacific washes over soft beaches of golden sand." (Sounds wonderful, but where are the potato chips?) "Where tall coconut plams and wild orchids sway in gentle sea breezes." (Come on!) "Where a luau means singing and dancing under the huge stars of a deep tropical night. And feasting on tender, delicious treats cooked over the smoky embers of a glowing charcoal fire." (Well, we're getting warmer!) "Hawaii. Where they've always made a special kind of chip from a special island recipe. HAWAIIAN STYLE Potato Chips. ... Today, you don't have to go all the way to an island luau to enjoy this special Hawaiian treat." (But I want to go all the way to Hawaii!!!)

After wading through all that, I checked the ingredients label for something exotic and delicious (you know, that "special island recipe" and all), but all I found was the usual potatoes, vegetable oil (cottonseed, safflower, sunflower, partially hydrogenated soybean and/or palm) and salt.

OK, if the difference isn't in the ingredients or the price or the wildness of the advertising claims, maybe it is in the taste.

It wasn't. The Hawaiian chips tasted like regular chips to me — salty, slightly greasy and a little on the tough side. Some of the tasters loved them, some didn't and some were just hungry and didn't care what they tasted like.

If I had my druthers, I'd just as soon go to Hawaii. In the meantime, I'll stick with Ruffles.

Fighting bugs with bugs eliminates insecticides

Copley News Service

CNS Graphic

OAKVIEW, Calif. — The license plate on Jake Blehm's Volvo station wagon tells the story: "WE BUG U."

"People come up to me and ask if I work for the CIA or the Internal Revenue Service," he said with a chuckle.

Hardly. Blehm grows insects — tens of millions of insects.

From wasps and beetles to ladybugs and mites, Blehm's company, Rincon-Vitova Inc., breeds "beneficial" bugs for use by farmers and gardeners in controlling pests without the use of insecticides.

"People used to think that the only good bugs were dead bugs. But we're working at changing that sort of thinking," said Blehm, the firm's vice president of marketing.

The company, with yearly sales approaching $1 million, is the largest and oldest insectary in the world.

It ships seven varieties of bugs — all homegrown — to more than 500 clients worldwide, including the San Diego Wild Animal Park, the Disney Epcot Center in Florida, the governments of Nicaragua, Canada, Italy and France.

Irvine Ranch, in Orange County, Calif., one of the company's biggest customers, annually buys several million parasitic insects to patrol its extensive avocado groves.

"OUR BUGS are the natural enemies to a wide-ranging number of pest insects," said Blehm, 29. "They're voracious eaters that attack only specific species or groups of insects, but do not harm humans, plants or animals."

On a recent weekday afternoon, Blehm stood in a cool, cramped room in the middle of the Rincon-Vitova facility, an unassuming cluster of small, one-story buildings tucked behind a warehouse off of Oakview's main street. Most of the buildings serve as nurseries and hatcheries for the company's unlikely "team."

"Most people expect to walk into a swarm of insects when they enter our buildings," he said, pulling from a shelf a white, round container the size of an ice cream carton, one of dozens that lined the walls.

Inside were 50 adult green lacewings, a scrappy 3½-inch-long bug that attacks virtually any soft-bodied insect, but especially likes to feast on aphids, small worms, insect eggs and mites.

During its lifetime of about two weeks, the lacewing will lay about 60,000 eggs.

Newly laid eggs — which are oval, green and attached to a hairlike stem — are immediately refrigerated for shipment to clients.

"A grower places the eggs in his field, where they hatch and go to work," Blehm said, adding that the lacewing is used to protect a variety of crops, including avocados.

In a hot, humid hatchery next door to the lacewing, Blehm introduced the company's next best-selling bug, the trichogramma.

A tiny parasitic wasp — four or five could fit on the head of a pin — this insect feeds on more than 200 species of moths and butterflies and is effective in corn, tomato, avocado, walnut and apple crops.

TRICHOGRAMMAS ARE bred in large wooden boxes, each containing six rows of shelves. On each shelf is a sheet of sticky paper on which the wasps lay their eggs.

"A 1-inch-by-1-inch square of paper will contain about 4,000 eggs," Blehm said. "A grower with a moth problem in, say, his avocado crop, will usually need to release about 50,000 eggs per acre every two to three weeks."

The lacewing, a predator, attacks and consumes his victim directly, while the trichogramma, a parasite, uses the pest as a vehicle to reproduce.

"The trichogramma lays an egg in, on or near the host, and its offspring will then attack the host," Blehm said.

Rincon-Vitova also ships the predatory Australian beetle, the parasitic greenhouse whitefly and the predatory ladybug. Some are mailed in egg form, others fully hatched. The ladybug, for example, is mailed after hatching occurs, in cloth bags suspended in wood crates, about 75,000 per bag.

The use of such insects in biological pest control is becoming increasingly attractive to growers whose confidence in pesticides has been shaken by recent horror stories concerning chemical poisoning and contamination of crops.

"After the pesticide scare with watermelons a couple of years ago, our sales hit an all-time high," Blehm said.

Additionally, the use of predatory insects to control crop pests is relatively inexpensive when compared to the costs of regular pesticide spraying. One gallon, or 75,000 ladybugs, sells for $27.50, while 40,000 trichogramma are priced at $10.

WHAT BUGS Blehm is that many veteran farmers are set in their ways, and fearful of changing past tried-and-true methods.

"They worry that if they suddenly convert from pesticides to predatory insects that it'll ruin their crop and their livelihood," he said. "It takes a powerful lot of work to convince them otherwise."

Certainly, many farmers are already sold on the effectiveness of the hardworking lacewing and trichogramma.

"I'm a believer," exclaimed Steve White, president of the Cal-Flavor avocado cooperative in suburban Escondido.

The co-op, which manages about 1,000 acres of avocado trees, releases about 20,000 trichogrammas per acre every two to three weeks.

"It costs us about $15 a year per acre for the insects, less than half the cost of pesticides," said White, adding that the predators not only rid his crop of the worms that damage the valuable fruit, but also strike an ecological balance that can't be matched by chemical controls.

"When I've used pesticides in the past, I've noticed that they may get rid of the primary pest, but not the secondary pests like mites," he said. "The beneficial insects get rid of them all. Besides that, we don't have the chemical residue left on the fruit."

BESIDES BREEDING and supplying predatory insects, the firm also offers consulting in biological and integrated pest management to commercial growers.

The typical grower will release about 50,000 predatory or parasitic insects per acre of cropland every two weeks or so depending on the extent of the pest problem.

When the pests have been eliminated, the beneficial bugs will not turn on the crop they have protected, but will merely move on to greener, more infested, pastures.

"Usually, they migrate to a neighbor's field and help him out," Blehm said.

As tax preparation rules become more complicated, the necessity for reliable and honest tax preparation service becomes more urgent. The Better Business Bureau has a list of tax preparation services, from CPAs to bookkeeping and tax services which are members, that is available on request.

The value of advice of this nature and its cost often corresponds to the amount of professional tax expertise the advisor can offer.

Chain tax preparation services are relatively inexpensive. However, their advisers may have minimal experience in tax preparation, and they are not usually directed by their employers to suggest advice that exists in a gray area or a claim that may be disputed by the IRS. As a result, their possible failure to uncover legitimate tax deductions may be more costly than the avoided mistakes in arithmetic they may help you with.

Certified public accountants, tax lawyers and enrolled tax agents generally are highly trained in tax preparation and will usually give you advice on how to find legitimate tax shelters to which you may be entitled. While the cost of hiring one of these specialists may be higher than using a less experienced tax preparer, the eventual savings to you by using an "expert" may surpass the increased cost.

When considering hiring a tax preparer, ask the following questions:

- What is the preparer's training or expertise in preparing tax returns?
- How does the preparer check for accuracy, and will he or she sign the return?
- How much will it cost, and on what is the cost based?
- Can and will the preparer represent the client in case of an IRS audit? And what will the charge be?

Direct your request for a roster of these members to 1-800-592-4433.

Shopping for a diamond engagement ring.

Becoming a diamond expert takes years of intensive study. So the best way for you to be introduced to the world of diamonds is to find an expert jeweler and ask a lot of questions. It's absolutely vital to purchase your diamond from someone you know and trust-your jeweler-so don't wait until the last minute to start shopping. Look around and shop carefully before making your final choice.

Let your jeweler inform you. Take advantage of his expert knowledge by having him show a whole range of sizes, shapes, and qualities up close. You might even ask to look at the finest diamonds he has. After all you deserve to see the best, even if it's out of your price range right now. Remember, the only way you'll begin to get a feeling for the type of diamond you prefer, is by examining a variety of different diamonds and comparing one with anohher.

Where to buy your diamond engagement ring.

By all means go to a reputable jeweler who is established in the community. He can give you reliable information on current value, and you can be sure his prices will be fair. Also, he will provide service if anything should go wrong with your purchase. And if you require easistance or advice on choosing additional diamond jewelry in the future, he will be there.

Be cautious about a "bargain" or "wholesale" offer. There are many factors that determine the cost of a diamond-color, cut, clarity, and carat weight. A lower price might well reflect a lower quality diamond than what you had in mind.

This is another reason to deal with a jeweler you know and trust. After all, the diamond engagement ring you buy is an investment in love, beauty, and prestige. Making the right choice will give both of you years of enjoyment.

Today's backyard satellite dishes provide picture of TV's future

Copley News Service

The ABC miniseries "Amerika" offered a far-out view of life in the United States in 1997, but you don't have to let your imagination run wild to conjure up what TV programming might be like around the turn of the century.

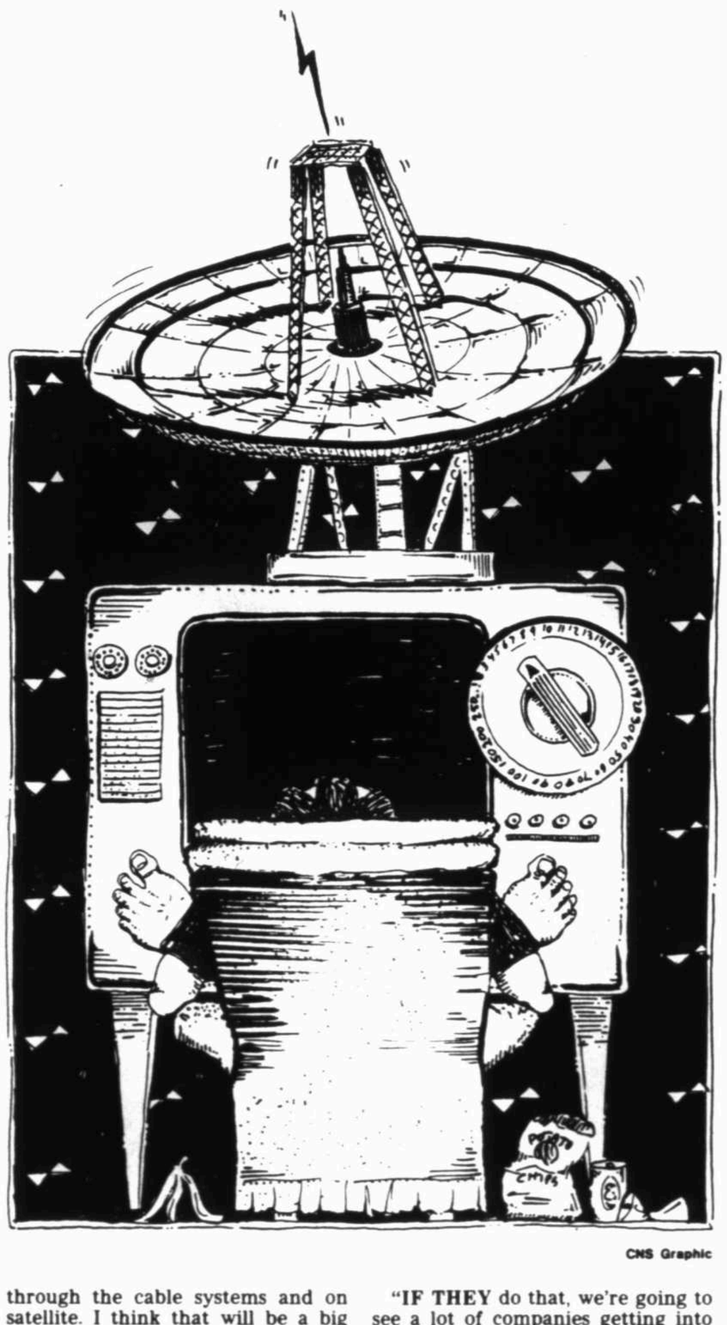
A peek into the future of television is available every day through backyard satellite dishes, and it reveals a multitude of home shopping networks, myriad sports stations, in-depth financial coverage and highly specialized educational programming.

Although the home satellite dish is a relatively recent phenomenon, it already has a track record for providing glimpses of what's to come.

Take, for example, the American Movie Classics network. Those with satellite dishes have been enjoying the great old films on American Movie Classics for years now.

Same thing for many of the premium movie channels. At a time when HBO was about the only service available on cable, those with access to a satellite dish also were watching the Movie Channel, Showtime, SelecTV, Cinemax and many others. At no charge.

With massive scrambling of the TV signals, which began approximately a year ago, the free ride ended for dish owners, but all the aforementioned services are still available — at a price and with the aid of an expensive decoder that restores the picture.



CNS Graphic

EVEN SO, the satellite dish still has its advantages, which explains why the fiberglass, aluminum and mesh receivers have exploded onto the American landscape like so many giant mushrooms. According to Satellite Broadcasting and Communications Association figures, there were just 5,000 home dishes in the nation in 1980. Today, the SBCA estimates there are 1.9 million. Even Amway is selling satellite dishes today.

State-by-state figures are hazy, and regional counts aren't available, but Mark Sheldon, marketing director of Chaparral satellite systems in San Jose, Calif., estimates that there are between 150,000 and 200,000 dishes in California, the No. 1 state for home dishes.

Why do satellite transmissions provide such an excellent vantage point for detecting TV trends? George Bryant, an executive for Satellite TV Week — the dish owners' answer to TV Guide — explains:

"The reason services like the home shopping networks are on satellite is they're going out to cable companies. There are a lot of programmers across the nation selling to many different cable companies. If you're with a local cable company, you may or may not get a home shopping channel. You may get two. If you own a satellite dish, you're going to get all 12 or 13."

The same applies to many other specialized services — all free — that are beamed to various cable outlets.

Bryant said he believes that regional sports stations such as the Houston-based Home Sports Network and the New England Sports Network that have proliferated on satellite transponders also mirror the future.

"THESE REGIONALIZED sports stations are really in their infancy," Bryant says. "I think eventually, rather than being able to watch, say, the San Diego Padres on your local TV station, you're going to be able to see it on the San Diego Padres' own network or the city of San Diego's own network, which will run through the cable systems and on satellite. I think that will be a big trend.

"Having a satellite system, you have 12 sports stations to choose from now. Most people think the only one available is ESPN, and they're very far from being right. In the future, fans will be able to watch the games that they want to watch and not the ones that their local TV stations and cable companies tell them they have to watch."

Bryant noted that in an upcoming Satellite TV Week sports section, there's a listing of where to find baseball's spring training transmissions.

"All the spring training games pretty much are going to be done on satellite — the Orioles, Tigers, Yankees, White Sox, Red Sox — all those guys," Bryant says. "So people who are baseball fans can get into watching baseball well before the regular games are played. We reported recently that the Dodgers and a number of teams are using satellite systems rather than paying traveling expenses to send scouts out to these exhibition games."

There has been considerable speculation that the next National Football League TV contract will award a number of special night games to cable-TV. Bryant sees that as a harbinger of big changes in TV sports viewing:

"IF THEY do that, we're going to see a lot of companies getting into the pay-per-view thing. With sport events, you're going to have a lot of resistance from people who say, look, 'I want to watch HBO's boxing but I don't want to pay them to play that movie 12 times this month.'

"So what I think they're going to have to do is set things up on a pay-per-view basis so that you can watch the fight or a football game for three bucks, or something like that. I think that's going to be the wave of the future for sports events."

The SBCA's Margaret Parone thinks the specialized programming that's available to satellite owners now is something that everyone will be exposed to in the future. She singled out the 24-hour-a-day business information for executives and investors.

"I would think there would have to be a response by cable programmers and networks to fill this void that only satellite television can accommodate to such an extent right now," Parone says.

"Education as an entire category — universities, hospitals and correctional facilities that utilize satellite technology to bring specific types of educational programming to them. It is something that is growing and will continue to grow."

As will, apparently, the satellite dish industry.

DEAR ABBY

Couple's nude bathing upsets Mom

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: The other evening, Donna, my 26-year-old daughter, asked me to baby-sit her two children. As Donna and her husband were preparing to leave for the dinner party, Donna remarked that she always loved an invitation to the Smiths (made-up name) because they have a hot tub. I asked Donna as they were walking out the door whether they had forgotten their bathing suits, since all her husband was carrying was a bottle of wine for the hosts. Donna's reply astounded me. She said nobody wears a bathing suit in a hot tub because it's too darn hot.

Abby, am I old-fashioned and over the hill at 46? Donna and her husband and the other couples apparently soak together naked! I asked Donna how they could do this, and she replied that all the couples involved are "good" friends. Abby, I have a number of very good and close friends, but not close enough to bathe together in our birthday suits. In fact, the only person I would ever share a hot tub with is my husband.

What do you think of what my daughter and her husband and their friends are doing? Is this as common as she makes it sound? Am I the odd duck now? — IRENE B. IN ALBANY

DEAR IRENE: You are not an odd duck. Many others, including me, believe that married couples who soak together in the altogether could find themselves literally in hot water up to their necks.

DEAR ABBY: This is in response to "Too Late Now" — the poor woman whose husband never bathed or brushed his teeth, so she just moved into another bedroom and closed the door. Ten years ago, I met a really great guy. We dated for a long time before getting very close. After we did, I noticed he had bad breath and body odor. I also discovered he didn't wear underwear, and thus his jeans carried a foul smell all the time.

Well, I bought him plenty of underwear and told him I thought they were "sexy," I got him deodorant and said it "turned me on," and I showered with him — not for sex, but to be sure he showered. Because of this, he was clean and I was happy. We've been married for five happy years.

Some people are lazy, and with an incentive they'll come around. — HAPPILY WED

DEAR HAPPILY WED: Wonderful! You nipped some slovenly habits before they were so ingrained they were impossible to change. If you'll recall, "Too Late Now" had locked her repulsive husband out of her bedroom for 49 years. Were she to buy him sexy underwear and a quart of cologne, at this stage of the game he'd probably drink the cologne and polish his car with the underwear. My point: You can't teach an old dog new tricks.

DEAR ABBY: My boyfriend is a high school teacher. He is 29 and very good-looking. I know that he is attracted to some of the girls in his classes and wouldn't mind dating them.

I love him and I'm concerned about this. What's to prevent teachers from dating their students in high school? — CONCERNED IN CALIFORNIA

DEAR CONCERNED: Ethics. It's usually the "principal" of the thing.

DEAR ABBY: In apologizing to "Dentist's Wife in Utica," you still haven't gotten it right. You said, "One day I may be in Utica and require the services of a first-class dentist to extract my foot from my mouth." In the case you have just mentioned, your need would be not for a DENTIST, but a PODIATRIST — a doctor of podiatric medicine and surgery.

Just trying to get your doctors straightened out. — NORMAN S. SCHUMANN, D.P.M., M.D. in NYC

'Little black book' electronically updated

By GWEN JONES
Hearst News Service

The little black book is back. But what a difference! No longer merely an index of telephone numbers and addresses, the pocket-size book has been updated to include everything from colorful jackets, pages and special sections to a minicomputer for recording frequently called numbers.

Merchants and manufacturers attribute the datebook's transformation to consumer demand for the kind of efficiency provided by the larger loose-leaf-style appointment books, but on a more compact scale. Enter Harper House, the L.A.-based creator of Day-Runner, one of the most popular organizers on the market.

"Our market representatives saw a need for a compact address book two years ago," recalls Felice Willat, founder and president of Harper House. "However, the book had to offer more than a few lined pages for jotting down names and addresses."

To meet the demand, Harper House introduced its "Suit Pocket Edition" late last year, so named because the 3-by-5-inch organizer tucks discreetly into the pocket of a sport coat or jacket. The compartmentalized book retails from about $25 to $37.50.

Willat says the Suit Pocket Edition is Harper's best-selling telephone book-organizer, and is especially popular among single men and women.

"Not only do they have a place to record the names, addresses and phone numbers of people they meet, there's a section for listing personal information and a map for pinpointing where to meet," she says.

Price is another strong selling point. While the thick organizers range anywhere from $45 for a vinyl-covered style to $185 for leather versions, compact books average about $7.

Even the most sophisticated electronic address books fall in the $35-to-$75 bracket.

The Electronic Little Black Book is available at department stores. A store spokesman says, "It was a major gift item for Valentine's Day. We believe that consumers are constantly looking for ways to streamline their lives. And then there are those people who just love gadgets."

Free brochures give information on piano lessons

Copley News Service

From the time they're infants, most kids respond with enthusiasm to music. So why not foster your children's musical abilities and give them piano lessons? The piano allows beginning musicians to learn all about melody, harmony and rhythm.

Read two fold-out flyers from the National Piano Foundation and discover how piano lessons can benefit your child.

Titled "Piano and Your Preschooler" and "How to Help Your Child Succeed At the Piano," the informational brochures answer many of the questions you may have about nurturing your child's interest in music.

In "Piano and Your Preschooler," a music educator tells how current findings show that the preschool years are the optimal time for developing musical abilities. She suggests ways parents can help their preschool children develop their talents and what parents should expect from a preschool piano program.

The 10-panel "How to Help Your Child Succeed At the Piano" describes how parents can choose the best piano teacher, provide the right environment for children who are learning the piano and establish for their children a regular routine of daily practice.

Send a long, self-addressed, stamped envelope to The National Piano Foundation, 15080 Beltwood Parkway East, Suite 108, Dallas 75244.

Ask for "Piano and Your Preschooler" and "How to Help Your Child Succeed At the Piano."

"Freebies" is compiled by Freebies Magazine, a national publication that features free (or postage-and-handling-only) offers you can request through the mail. To receive information about Freebies, send a long, self-addressed, stamped envelope to Freebies Magazine, P.O. Box 20283-CP, Santa Barbara, Calif. 93120.

Talks on medium-range missiles in Europe end

GENEVA (AP) — U.S.-Soviet negotiations on eliminating medium-range missiles from Europe recessed today with the two sides still at odds over shorter-range missiles in Europe.

The chief U.S. negotiator on intermediate-range nuclear forces, Maynard Glitman, told reporters after the final meeting that "difficult issues remain before us," though he added "useful progress" was made.

"Substantive issues need to be resolved and detailed work needs to be done in all areas which should be covered by an INF (intermediate-range nuclear forces) treaty," he said in a statement read to reporters.

The final session lasted about 1½ hours and was held at the U.S. mission. The Soviet delegation, headed by Lem Masterkov, did not immediately make a statement.

Glitman said medium-range missile talks would resume April 23, the same day the other two negotiating groups — space and defense systems and long-range missiles — are scheduled to start again.

He said the date for resuming talks on medium-range missiles could be changed after the meeting next month in Moscow between U.S. Secretary of State George Shultz and Soviet Foreign Minister Eduard A. Shevardnadze.

The U.S. negotiator was scheduled to travel to Brussels and other West European capitals to brief the NATO allies on the talks. U.S. spokesman Christopher Henze declined to provide an itinerary.

The seventh round of superpower arms talks officially ended March 6.

The groups on long-range and space and defense systems recessed, but the medium-range talks were extended after officials reported the end of a long stalemate.

There is no separate group dealing with short-range weapons, and the two sides spent the last three weeks discussing a U.S. proposal presented March 4 that includes limiting such weapons in Europe.

The United States wants to include short-range missiles in any pact because the Soviet Union has such rockets in Eastern Europe while America maintains it has none in Western Europe. Washington argues removing medium-range weapons would tip the balance of power in Moscow's favor unless the short-range missiles are included.

But Deputy Foreign Minister Vadim Loginov said Wednesday in Moscow that Warsaw Pact foreign ministers had ruled out a package deal on the missiles during a two-day meeting in the Soviet capital.

Loginov told reporters the Soviet-led military alliance wants to deal first with the medium-range missiles and would not accept linkage to shorter-range weapons.

Gandhi losing key elections, prestige

By VICTORIA GRAHAM

NEW DELHI, India (AP) — Things couldn't be much worse for Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi as, halfway through his 5-year term, he is losing key state elections and prestige.

Communist victories this week in state assembly polls in the south-western state of Kerala and the northeastern state of West Bengal represented major political setbacks for the 42-year-old former airline pilot.

Although Gandhi's governing Congress Party won in the Moslem-dominated northern state of Kashmir, it was in alliance with a traditional Moslem leader.

The defeats compound mounting problems, including tensions with Pakistan and Sri Lanka, a separatist movement in Punjab, an ugly rift with President Zail Singh and a revolt in his own party.

There also is growing criticism of Gandhi's high-handed treatment of government officials and allegations that he hasn't lived up to a campaign promise to rid India of corruption since winning a five-year term in a landslide election victory December 1984. The election followed the Oct. 31, 1984 assassination of his mother, Prime Minister Indira Gandhi, by Sikh bodyguards.

The media has accused him of favoritism to big business and suggested some of his powerful friends may be wrongfully hoarding wealth abroad.

To make matters worse, an Indian rocket capable of carrying nuclear missiles failed in its maiden flight Tuesday and India's cricket team lost to old political rival Pakistan.

Then came the counting of the ballots from Monday's elections, which were seen as a major test of popularity and power for Gandhi. He campaigned fiercely and staked his reputation as prime minister and party president on victory.

AP Laserphoto

Followers of the Communist Party of India celebrate in Calcutta Wednesday following victory over Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi's Congress Party in voting for the state assembly in West Bengal.

During the campaign, Gandhi urged voters to "storm the red bastions" and reject Communist fronts in Kashmir and West Bengal.

He denounced Marxists as godless, incompetent and unpatriotic, drew large crowds and distributed government financial largesse.

But newspapers Wednesday dubbed Congress' losses "debacles" and personal defeats for Gandhi.

"The growing questions about Mr. Gandhi's abilities are taking their toll," the independent Calcutta Telegraph newspaper said in an editorial.

In Kerala, the Left Democratic Front, a Communist-led alliance, ousted Gandhi's squabbling, governing coalition of seven unlikely partners representing many groups from Hindu castes to fundamentalist Moslems.

Gandhi blamed the defeat on the charges his party was aligned with sectarian forces.

By losing Kerala, the Congress Party lost its strategic toehold in south India.

Despite Gandhi's hectic campaigning in Communist-run West Bengal, its Communist-led alliance, the Left Front, was returned for a third, five-year term in a state infamous for poverty and urban decay.

Gandhi said Congress lost in West Bengal because of superior Communist organization. But the independent Statesman newspaper judged that voters merely regarded the Communists "as the lesser of two evils."

Gandhi also might have gone too far in personally taking on West Bengal Communist chief Jyoti Basu, 72, one of India's shrewdest and most distinguished politicians.

Communist parties now control three states — Kerala, with the nation's highest literacy rate, West Bengal, and Tripura in the northeast. The Congress Party is in power or in governing alliances in 15 of India's 24 states.

Gandhi already has been criticized for deliberately losing elections to regional parties in Punjab, Assam and Mizoram to head off independence movements.

The latest losses are blows to his vote-getting power and his ability to unite and lead his party.

Gandhi's party still holds a three-fourths majority in the national Parliament of 544 seats. National polls are due in 1989.

But the pro-government newspaper Hindu said Wednesday that the loss of Kerala would make it more difficult for Gandhi to counter the opposition.

"He had so completely identified himself with the party's campaign there, as elsewhere, that he would find it difficult to escape from the fallout of the defeat," the newspaper said.

An Analysis

"The growing questions about Mr. Gandhi's abilities are taking their toll," the independent Calcutta Telegraph newspaper said in an editorial.

English interviewer takes aim at U.S. presidency

LONDON (AP) — In 1968, his line-up included Richard Nixon, Eugene McCarthy, Robert Kennedy and Ronald Reagan. Now, the names have changed, but David Frost's interest in the American presidency has not.

Almost 20 years after he last tracked the campaign trail to the White House, the British television personality is returning to the American beat in "The Next President," a planned series of 13 hour-long television interviews with the 1988 presidential candidates.

"Anybody who's running for public office has a duty to let the public know something about them," the 47-year-old interviewer and talk-show host told The Associated Press, before flying the Concorde to the United States for Wednesday's public announcement of the upcoming series.

Due for syndication by Westinghouse to individual television stations, "The Next President" will follow the Republican and Democratic presidential hopefuls in weekly airings to begin next November. It will end with the New Hampshire primary Feb. 16, 1988.

In the plushly carpeted comfort of his north London offices, Frost, cigar in hand, looked more like a politician himself than the investigative journalist who elicited an apology to the American people from former President Richard Nixon. His 1977 televised interviews focusing on the Watergate scandal gained worldwide attention.

But the Cambridge University graduate who found fame at age 23 with the series "That Was the Week That Was," a satirical revue of current events, said he looked forward to renewed coverage of American politics after time spent on books and other TV work.

"At that time, Vietnam overshadowed all else, really," said Frost, contrasting his 1968 encounters with the nine presidential aspirants with the ones to come.

"One of the questions relevant in '68 — and it got a whole spectrum of replies — was, 'Do you believe in my country, right or wrong?' " he said. "That question is no longer topical. Nobody would say yes anymore.

"The nuclear dialogue under way at the moment would have been inconceivable in 1968. The dialogue with China has also opened up in a way that would have been inconceivable," he said.

Frost said he believed his being British helped him get and conduct interviews in America.

"I think independence is an important factor in a country as diverse as America, with so many loyalties," said Frost. "I'm not part of the Eastern establishment or the rising Sun Belt."

Frost first worked in the United States at age 24, when "That Was the Week That Was" began its two-year American airing.

"Over the years, I've had a long love affair with the States. I was touched and delighted by the generosity of the welcome you get," he said.

South Africa expelling Mozambican refugees

By ANDREW TORCHIA

KOMATIPOORT, South Africa (AP) — More than 50 illegal immigrants pass through this border post each day on their way back to Mozambique — captured by South Africans and expelled after fleeing war in their homeland.

Some will slip back in again, get caught again and be sent back to Mozambique again.

But in the end, some get to stay.

"We caught one man 13 times; we believe he eventually got through," said Johan Kloppers, head of wildlife management in Kruger National Park.

South Africa, politically and racially at odds with its neighbors, is using park rangers, soldiers and a high-voltage electric fence in an effort to seal its border with Mozambique.

Ronald Edwards, a retired admiral and a member of a joint South Africa-Mozambique security commission, told foreign reporters on a recent government-organized visit here that 60,000 Mozambicans have entered South Africa illegally since late 1984. He said they are still coming at a monthly rate of 2,000, although 1,600 a month are sent home.

Tens of thousands of Mozambicans also have fled into nearby Zimbabwe and Malawi but most have come to relatively wealthy South Africa, the country that Mozambique blames for its troubles.

Mozambique accuses South Africa's white-led government of training and supplying anti-Marxist guerrillas in a bush war that has displaced hundreds of thousands and contributed to widespread famine. South Africa denies the charge.

Mozambique also suspects that South Africa combs illegal immigrant settlements for recruits for the Mozambique National Resistance Movement rebels.

About 70,000 Mozambicans work legally in South Africa, holding permits for jobs on farms or in gold and coal mines, Edwards said.

More than a third of the illegal migrants enter South Africa by climbing over an elephant-proof fence along Kruger Park's 200-mile boundary with Mozambique. Many come barefoot and in tatters, having abandoned cattle and corn fields after a guerrilla attack.

Some travel alone or in family groups. Others assemble in bands of 60 or more, led by guides who charge the equivalent of as much as $50 a person for the five-day walk westward across the park.

In Kruger, the refugees live on insects, berries and water from streams. They face patrols by park rangers and soldiers and attacks by wild animals. Two reportedly were killed by lions.

But two-thirds get through, Edwards said.

Some bear scars of the war.

"My wife treated a baby whose foot had been shot off," said park warden Salomon Joubert. "The mother had carried him in the bush for 10 days and had kept the wound clean all that time."

Park officials said about a third of the more than 11,000 migrants who entered Kruger last year were headed back to Mozambique — illegal migrants who had found jobs and were carrying food and clothing bought in South Africa to relatives back home.

South of the park, a 10-foot-high electric fence extends for 15 miles from Komatipoort along the border. Edwards said nine Mozambicans have been killed trying to climb the fence since construction began a year ago.

Maj. Hannes Koch, army commander at Komatipoort, said migrants manage to cross the fence, avoiding somehow its nine coils of razor wire and 10 electrical strands carrying 3,000 volts.

A Mozambican woman and her child await expulsion at the Komatipoort border post as part of South Africa's efforts to stem the flow of refugees from Mozambique's civil war.

Mozambique accuses South Africa's white-led government of training and supplying anti-Marxist guerrillas in a bush war that has displaced hundreds of thousands and contributed to widespread famine. South Africa denies the charge.

Although it tries to halt migrant flow, the South African government allows them to stay if they reach one of four black homelands near the border. Edwards said that is because homeland authorities look on the migrants as tribal brothers, and want them to stay.

In the impoverished and crowded homelands, the migrants rarely get jobs. But they are given land to build mud-and-thatch huts, and food is provided, largely by non-governmental Western and South African agencies.

"There was war, so I ran away," Andros Mnisi, 54, told the reporters through a Shangaan-language interpreter. "I was in a group of 37 who came through the park. We had no food, no water and we looked at the sun to guide ourselves."

Mnisi said he arrived at the Lillydale migrant settlement in Gazankulu homeland in May 1985, with his two wives and nine children. He has been unable to find work but receives monthly allocations of cornmeal and powdered soup.

"I just sit around and clean the place," Mnisi said of his two huts and small, fenced plot. He said he once had 30 head of cattle in Mozambique but added that now "you can't go to the fields now because the guerrillas kill people in the fields."

Planned dam on Mexican-Guatemalan border threatens major Mayan sites

By LARRY ROHTER
New York Times News Service

MEXICO CITY — Mexico and Guatemala are planning to build a series of dams along their border that would destroy two of the most historically important archeological sites of the Mayan civilization, a group of Mexican ecologists and cultural figures said Wednesday.

The dams would be built along the Usumacinta River and its tributaries and would create a lake of up to 500 square miles that would inundate ninth century Mayan ruins at Yaxchilan and Piedras Negras, the group said. It said such flooding would also prevent the discovery of other sites in the remote, rarely explored jungle area.

"The destruction that this project will cause will be greater than that which occurred at Aswan," said Homero Aridjis, president of the Group of 100, a coalition of Mexican intellectuals concerned with ecological and cultural issues. "It would be worse than if there were a war in the region." The Aswan High Dam on the Nile flooded several significant Egyptian archeological sites.

Manuel Anaya, an official of the Ministry of Agriculture and Hydraulic Resources here, confirmed in an interview Wednesday that a dam project is "under general study and analysis." But he said any effort to "develop the potential of the zone" would be for "beneficial ends" and "would not damage any archeological vestiges in the area."

Anaya, an engineer, said that none of the locations being considered for dam sites would threaten the ruins "because they are on much higher ground."

Archeologists and other specialists here and in the United States, however, said that any construction in the area would be potentially catastrophic, not only to known sites of enormous historical value but also to future work in one of the most important centers of Mayan civilization.

"This area has never been fully surveyed archeologically, and we have no idea what may still be out there undiscovered," Rosemary Joyce, assistant curator of pre-Columbian archeology at the Peabody Museum in Boston, said in a telephone interview. "Our experience over the last 10 years indicates that there are many sites with sculptures and monuments that we simply don't know about yet."

Both Yaxchilan, in Mexico, and Piedras Negras, in Guatemala, were city-states that lay along what is believed to have been a highway connecting Palenque and Tikal, two of the best-known Mayan archeological centers.

Various expeditions to the two sites have uncovered more than 140 buildings, including temples, palaces, sports arenas and baths. From these and other discoveries, archeologists have gathered important information about the development of Mayan religion, trade and hieroglyphic writing systems from A.D. 250 to A.D. 900.

Because of their remoteness and the presence of leftist guerrillas on the Guatemalan side, neither site has become a tourist attraction like Tikal or Palenque. But finds made over the last decade have excited archeologists and convinced them that the sites rival more celebrated ruins.

"Yaxchilan and Piedras Negras are classic Mayan sites of the highest rank," Joyce said. "They are famous for their sculpture and art, which are truly unique."

Specialists fear that the construction of new roads in the area will bring an influx of settlers to the area. With that, they say, the risk of looting of or damage to undiscovered Mayan sites would dramatically increase.

Yaxchilan is located in the Mexican state of Chiapas, one of the poorest in the country and one that the Mexican government has promised to help develop. The new civilian government in Guatemala has made similar promises to impoverished Indian peasants in the north as a way to stop the inroads made by the guerrillas.

Most international agencies require archeological surveys as a prerequisite for funding of development projects in important historical zones. But Anaya said the Usumacinta project is "a purely binational" effort that involves three Mexican ministries and their Guatemalan counterparts.

Aridjis said that information he had received from sources within the Mexican government indicated that no study of the dam project's effect on Mayan sites had been made or was planned.

"Nor does it appear that there are yet any plans to remove, protect or safeguard the valuable historical and archeological artifacts on the site," he said. "We have been told this by people inside the government who are very concerned at the absence of such precautions."

The dam project has also raised concern among many biologists and anthropologists here. The Usumacinta River flows through what is believed to be the largest tropical rain forest still remaining in North America, and is home to the Lacandon, an Indian tribe descended from the Maya whose culture, anthropologists believe, would be disrupted by the dams and the changes they would bring.

Aridjis said his group had been told that two to four dams are planned for the region. In a statement to be published today, his group condemns the project as impractical and economically inefficient and demands that it "be canceled immediately."

Signers of the statement include the painter Rufino Tamayo; Eduardo Matos Moctezuma, director of the Museum of Anthropology and History here, and Gaston Garcia Cantu, former director of the National Institute of Archeology and History.

Archeologists discover what might be blood of Mayan king

WASHINGTON (AP) — Archeologists have discovered in Honduras what they think are relics from the dedication of a Maya pyramid 1,200 years ago, including what may be blood from the king to whom the structure belonged.

The remarkably well-preserved store of artifacts, including exquisite jade carvings and decorative flint lance heads, was uncovered March 5 in the ancient Maya city of Copan, archaeologists said Wednesday.

Scientists found the 1,200-year-old hoard of jade, flint and shell artifacts beneath an altar at the foot of a temple-pyramid of the old city, located in western Honduras.

"This is the finest ceremonial offering that's yet been discovered in the ruins of Copan," said William L. Fash of Northern Illinois University, head of the team that made the discovery.

Offerings located under the altar include two large jade pieces carved in the shape of human and supernatural figures; three elaborate flint lance heads with Maya faces chipped in profile; stingray spines and a spiny oyster shell.

One of the most exciting finds is a reddish-brown substance inside the oyster shell, the scientists said.

If the material is dried blood, as they suspect, it almost certainly would be that of a Maya king, the pyramid's final owner, who hieroglyphic symbols indicate was named "Smoke-Shell."

Maya men commonly used stingray spines in ritual bloodletting. The scientists think the offerings were made, and Smoke-Shell's bloodletting performed, at the dedication ceremony of the tall temple-pyramid 1,231 years ago.

Temple-pyramid 26, previously known for its large hieroglyphic stairway, was dedicated in 756 A.D., during the Classic Period of the Copan Maya.

Hieroglyphs deciphered so far indicate the temple was constructed to restore prestige to the king after a political setback. It represents an extravagant attempt to restore legitimacy to the local dynasty by depicting the ruler basking in the glory of his 14 predecessors, the scientists said.

The other jewels of the find, made by Princeton University student David Stuart, were the jade pieces. These included a 7-inch tall, full-round statuette of a squat male figure clad only in a loincloth and headband.

The other major jade, a flat plaque about 10 inches long that was worn on the chest, is the largest jade ever found at Copan. It represents a Maya god associated with symbols of the sun and the jaguar on one side and has the image of the supernatural serpent deity on the other.

"The really neat thing about both jades is that they are heirlooms — pieces that had been owned by previous kings in Copan and passed down from generation to generation," Fash said.

The researchers said the jade pieces were carved during the early Classic Period, between 250 A.D. and 600 A.D., centuries before they were put under the altar.

The project responsible for the find is sponsored by numerous groups and agencies, including the National Geographic Society, the National Science Foundation and Earthwatch.

U.S. planted spies, Jerusalem Post reports

TEL AVIV, Israel (AP) — The Jerusalem Post said today the United States planted spies among American volunteers who informally served in the Israeli army for month-long periods.

The English-language newspaper's Washington correspondent, Wolf Blitzer, quoted "two well-placed U.S. sources, elements in the American intelligence community — not necessarily the CIA" as saying the agents were planted over the last few years in Volunteers for Israel.

Volunteers for Israel sends people of all ages who pay their own way to Israel and work at army bases in non-professional jobs, such as washing tanks and kitchen work.

Thousands of Americans have participated in the program. The Post said American agents infiltrated the program and were instructed to "pick up some useful tidbits of information about Israel's military...(but) it is unclear whether they managed to do so."

The Post also quoted an unidentified State Department source as saying: "I've never heard anything like this."

In reply to a question from The Associated Press, Israel's military command issued a statement denying the United States planted spies in the Volunteers for Israel program.

"We deny the report. Each year about 3,500 volunteers come from different countries and not only the United States," the military statement said. "All of them undergo some checking at offices abroad and have to be members of youth movements or other Zionist movements."

Sen. David Durenberger, R-Minn., was quoted last week as telling a Jewish group March 15 in Palm Beach, Fla., that the United States had "recruited an Israeli to spy on Israel." A member of the audience quoted him as suggesting Israel decided to recruit Jonathan Jay Pollard after learning the United States had spied on Israel.

Durenberger later issued a statement saying he was only expressing public speculation about what may have happened, and Israeli leaders and Secretary of Defense Caspar Weinberger denied the United States recruited Israelis as spies.

Pollard, a 32-year-old American Jew and civilian analyst for the U.S. Navy, was sentenced this month to life in prison for selling Israel classified U.S. information. His wife was given a five-year sentence for her role in the affair.

On Wednesday, Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir promised not to pass on to the United States information given by three Israelis in the Pollard case, and their lawyer responded by saying the three would testify before an Israeli investigatory commission.

David Libai said his clients, Yosef Yagur, Ilan Ravid and Irit Erb, "were only asking for certain safeguards" when they refused to cooperate with the commission.

"My clients have received what they wanted, and they thank the government," Libai said. "There is now no reason for them not to testify."

Ravid was a deputy science attache at the Israeli Embassy in Washington, Yagur a science consul in New York and Ms. Erb a secretary at the Washington embassy.

WORLD IN BRIEF

U.S. reassures Gulf states

WASHINGTON (NYT) — President Reagan and his top advisers have decided to intensify efforts to reassure Arab countries in the Persian Gulf region that the United States is committed to protecting their security, administration officials said Wednesday.

The decision was made last month after a series of high-level policy meetings, including one attended by the president, on how to repair damage to the administration's reputation in the region following revelations of secret American arms sales to Iran. The meetings culminated in a presidential statement last month that strongly criticized Iran and supported efforts by gulf governments to end the protracted Iran-Iraq war.

"There was obviously a feeling in the gulf that the United States had turned sharply away from its traditional support for moderates in the gulf," one administration official said. "We are taking steps at a high level to set things straight."

The disclosure this week that the United States had offered to escort Kuwaiti ships traveling through the gulf is the latest manifestation of a policy that administration officials say is designed to convince the Arab world that the United States does not want Iran to win the war.

Kuwait has not accepted the American offer.

Afghans hit border town

TERA MANGAL, Pakistan (AP) — Afghan air force jets bombed and rocketed this bomb-shattered border town and Moslem guerrilla bases just across the frontier today, killing at least five people and injuring eight others.

Today's attack, carried out while journalists were visiting, brought casualties in the town to 94 dead and 110 wounded in a series of raids since Monday.

Pakistani military officers said four Afghan jet fighter-bombers intruded about two miles into Pakistani air space and hit the badly damaged town with six rockets and three bombs. All the casualties were Afghan refugees, they said.

Reporters, brought here by the government, heard the sound of repeated bombing from the nearby city of Parachinar. Jets again bombed the border zone as the journalists were visiting Tera Mangal and huge blasts shook the hills as the Soviet-made planes soared overhead.

The attacks seen by reporters appeared directed at Moslem guerrilla bases over the hills inside Afghan territory. Guerrilla anti-aircraft guns could be heard blasting away at the planes.

There was no way to determine what damage or casualties the attacks caused on the guerrilla bases across the border.

Contras blamed in deaths

MANAGUA, Nicaragua (AP) — Contra rebels ambushed a government forestry truck in south-central Nicaragua on Wednesday, killing nine workers and wounding two others, a government radio station said.

The victims, civilians working for a state-owned forestry company, were hauling wood out of the forest when their truck was ambushed about 9 a.m., the Voice of Nicaragua radio station said.

It said the attack occurred north of the town of Nueva Guinea, 140 miles southeast of Managua, but did not give an exact location.

Thousands of rebels, newly equipped with weapons purchased with U.S. assistance, reportedly have infiltrated into northern and central Nicaragua from bases in neighboring Honduras since the beginning of the year.

Dissident's son released

FRANKFURT, West Germany (AP) — The teen-age son of Soviet human rights activist Anatoly Koryagin has been released from labor camp, and the family has been asked to apply to leave the Soviet Union, a human rights group said today.

The Frankfurt-based International Association for Human Rights said Anatoly Koryagin called the human rights organization today to say his son, Ivan, arrived home Wednesday.

The elder Koryagin was speaking by telephone from his home in Kharkov in the Soviet Ukraine, the group said in a statement.

Ivan Koryagin was serving a three-year sentence that was due to end next year. He was sentenced in 1985 after being involved in a fight.

Anatoly Koryagin said his son was told he was being released because of his "good work performance" in the labor camp, according to the statement issued by the group.

Communist authorities told the elder Koryagin he should apply for exit visas for himself, his wife and three sons within one week.
