Everyone's OK

WASHINGTON — Public opinion in the aftermath of the Gulf War is high on media coverage, Gen. H. Norman Schwarzkopf and even the Democratic leadership of Congress, according to a survey released Sunday. "There's no question that there's a euphoria that has much to do with the approval for everybody," said Donald S. Kellermann, who directed the survey conducted by the Times Mirror Center for The People & The Press.

Tank 'kills' erroneous

U.S.: Cease-fire bell saved Iraqi armor

■ New estimates raise questions about the wisdom of halting the ground war, officials say.

By Michael R. Gordon with Eric Schmitt
N.Y. Times News Service

DHAHRAN, Saudi Arabia — The number of Iraqi tanks and armored vehicles that survived the American-led land attack that ended the Persian Gulf war is much greater than American military authoritites initially reported, and many of the weapons have been used by the Iraqi President Saddam Hussein to quell resistance by Iraqi insurgents, American officials say.

On Feb. 27, the fourth day of the ground war, Gen. H. Norman Schwarzkopf, commander of allied forces in the Persian Gulf, said in a briefing that the Iraqi armored forces had been trapped.

"The gate's closed," Schwarzkopf said a few hours before President Bush announced the temporary cease-fire.

But hundreds of Iraqi tanks and other armored vehicles did manage to leave Kuwait and southern Iraq, many of them in effect saved by the cease-fire bell sounded by Bush.

While enormous damage still was done to the Iraqi military, and Baghdad no longer presents an immediate threat to its neighbors, the equipment that escaped is important because it urgently is needed by the government's forces, which are stretched thin in trying to put down uprisings against Saddam.

The new assessment is based on an extensive analysis of the battlefield and the southern half of Iraq by American intelligence agencies, which was carried out on behalf of the U.S. Central Command. The latest intelligence estimates reflect battlefield inspection as well as more complete photographic reconnaissance.

Officials said the new estimates raise questions about the wisdom of the Bush administration's decision to halt the ground war after 100 hours of fighting.

Drug-abusing probationers draw special supervision

By David Morris
Staff Writer

Midland probationers who use illegal drugs aren't necessarily sent to prison for violating their probation.

They are just as likely to end up in the Specialized Caseload for Substance Abuse (SCSA), a probation program administered by the Community Supervisions and Corrections Department.

Ramona Martin, a Midland County probation officer who manages the SCSA, said the program is more demanding of participants than regular probation.

"The accountability to the regular probation officer is minimal, but with the specialized caseload, the accountability is very high.

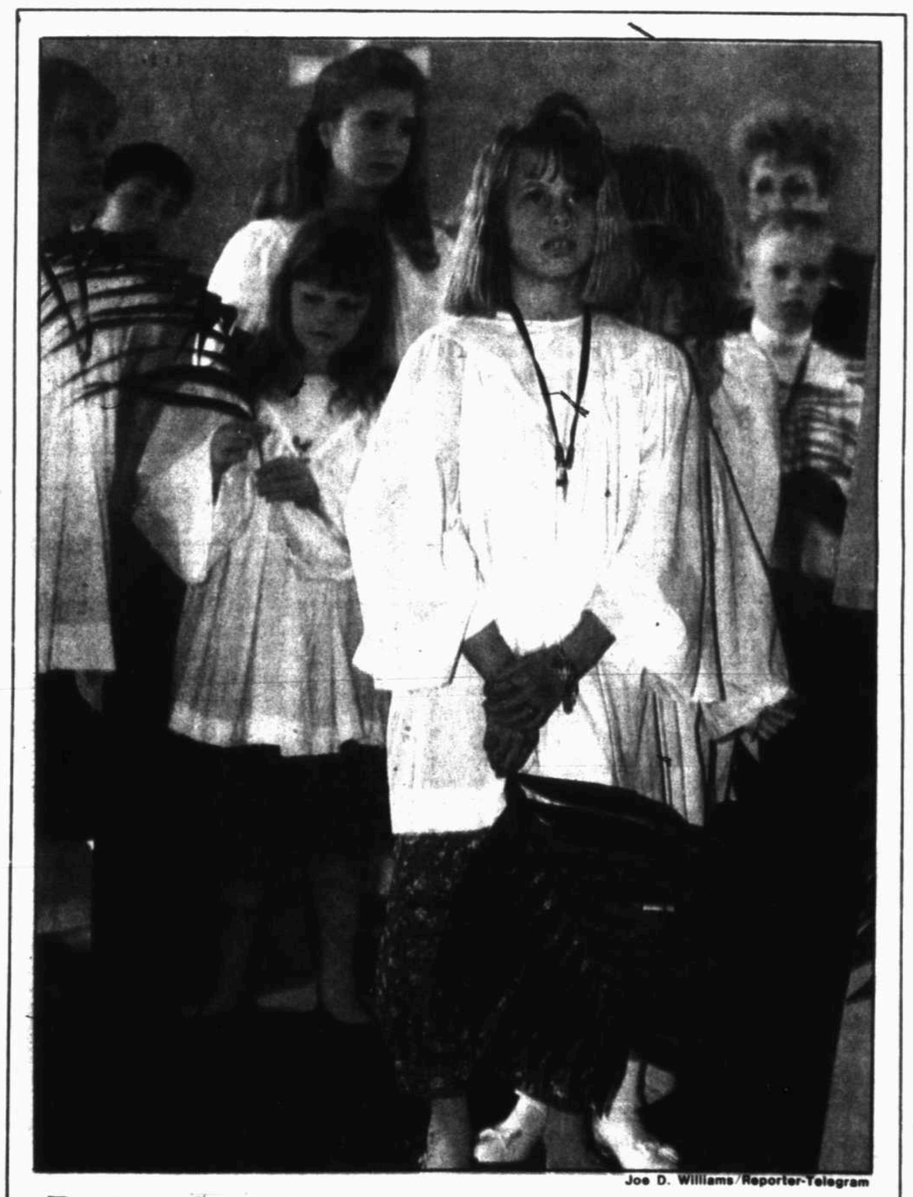

"They have a curfew from midnight to 6 a.m. They report weekly and I have to go out in the field and see them weekly, so we're seeing each other two times a week."

People on regular probation generally must report to their probation officer only once a month. All probationers must submit to periodic drug testing.

"The people who are on this caseload are what we consider either high-risk or high-need," said Bruce Thomas, unit supervisor for the Midland County Supervisions and Corrections Department. "They need either more attention or more supervision than someone who's on regular probation."

New wave of taxation sweeps U.S.

■ As a slowing economy and recession erodes tax collections, officials are forced to make tough choices about more taxes or fewer services.

N.Y. Times News Service

A wave of new taxes and tax increases — the third since the 1930s — appears to be developing in states, counties and cities.

Many taxes that Americans pay today to these governments originated in two similar periods when money for public services ran short: the Great Depression and a 15-year stretch starting in 1961 when the bills came due for the baby boomers' public schooling.

The latest trend shows up in the numerous state and local taxes enacted last year or proposed for enactment in 1991. It is reflected in bitter debates over which public services are so essential that taxes must rise to pay for them. And it is seen in the willingness of three old foes of a state income tax — Connecti-

Panamanians sue U.S. over looting

By Laurie Asseo
Associated Press writer

WASHINGTON — Fernando Pinilla watched helplessly as looters sacked his Panama City bakery. U.S. soldiers nearby refused his pleas to intervene, Pinilla said, and within days his business was destroyed.

That was January 1990, not long after U.S. soldiers invaded Panama to oust dictator Manuel Antonio Noriega. A year later, Pinilla and dozens of other Panamanian businesses are suing the United States for almost $63 million in property damage from looting that followed the invasion.

Thirteen separate suits have been filed, the most recent last week.

The United States is responsible, the plaintiffs say, because it dismantled Panama's only police force — Noriega's Panama Defense Force — leaving Panamanians virtually unprotected from their fellow citizens.

But the government denies the allegations and rejects a class-action lawsuit on behalf of people killed or injured in the invasion. It has asked U.S. District Judge Stanley S. Harris to dismiss the property damage suits. Harris has not indicated when he will rule on the motions.

Odessa lands Southwest Air Fair

By Ed Todd
Staff Writer

ODESSA — A newfangled show in West Texas aviation will appear on the horizon on May 18 and 19 when the Southwest Air Fair & Expo is held at Odessa's Schlemeyer Field.

The air fair will go beyond aerobatic demonstrations, air-safety seminars, and displays of experimental, antique, and classic airplanes and World War II "warbirds." It also will take in more earthly things, such as a jack-rabbit stew cook-off, antique-classic automobile show, show-biz entertainment and a carnival.

And this first air fair may turn into something really big not just for aviation fans but for the West Texas economy.

"Nobody started out with a 'bang' the first time," pilot Bobby Farmer said, citing national air shows and fly-ins, including the Experimental Aircraft Association's annual fly-in at Oshkosh, Wisc.

In the first go-round, the Southwest Air Fair will not be an Oshkosh affair, which attracts thousands of experimental airplanes and their pilots, designers, builders and admirers. But it will be an enthusiastic start, Farmer said.

"It (aviation) has been my life," said Farmer, an aircraft designer and builder who is on the Southwest Air Fair board of directors. "And this (air fair) is an opportunity for me to just go 'gung-ho' with it."

From antique experimental aircraft with wire struts and open cockpits to high-performance jets, such as the Lear Jet and the prop-jet Beechcraft Starship, the air fair will delineate the history of aviation.

There will be aircraft galore, including the revolutionary Starship, which was inspired by the round-the-world Voyager, and the Coors Light Silver Bullet mini-jet.

Snow and freezing rain fell over parts of northern New England and upstate New York.

Heavy snow blanketed central Maine, including 12 inches at Dover-Foxcroft and 11 inches at Eutis and Harmony.

Snowfall totals in the northern mountains of New Hampshire ranged up to 8 inches at Crawford Notch and Pinkham Notch.

ESCAPE: Decision 'helps Iraqi government a lot'

at a time when American armored units were poised to destroy remnants of Saddam's Republican Guard.

Top administration officials publicly have justified the decision to halt the fighting on the grounds the American-led coalition had achieved its goal of dislodging Iraqi troops from Kuwait and reducing the Iraqi war machine so it would no longer be a threat.

Administration officials also have argued the attack was called off because the United States did not want to appear to be vengeful.

"We did not want to appear to be piling on," said a senior administration official.

Despite the new estimates of Iraqi strength, American generals say they have accomplished their mission and showed no interest in reopening hostilities.

Nonetheless, the Bush administration hoped the war would so weaken forces loyal to Saddam that his regime might be overthrown. In light of the new intelligence, some administration officials, who insisted they not be identified, are questioning the decision to stop the ground war when the White House did.

"The decision not to pursue to the gates of Basra helps the Iraqi government a lot," said one administration official, who added that Republican Guard units now are beginning to rebuild.

According to the new estimates, which represent a consensus view among the CIA, the Defense Intelligence Agency and the National Security Agency, about 700 of Iraq's estimated 4,550 tanks in southern Iraq and Kuwait escaped — at least 100 more than previously believed. A senior administration official said about half of these are Soviet-made T-72s, Baghdad's most advanced armor.

About 1,430 of Iraq's 2,880 armored personnel carriers now are believed to have escaped. The American military originally claimed to have destroyed and captured all but 500 of the vehicles, which are used to ferry troops into battle. By contrast, only 340 of Iraq's 3,257 artillery pieces are believed to have escaped.

Even before the war began, the objective of American ground and air forces was to envelop the dug-in Iraqi military in southern Iraq and Kuwait and prevent it from escaping. Gen. Colin L. Powell, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, said after the air war started that the plan for the Iraqi force was to "cut it off and kill it."

On Feb. 28, Schwarzkopf estimated at a briefing that the allies had probably destroyed 3,700 of more than 4,000 tanks deployed against them.

"When I say the gate is closed, I don't want to give you the impression that absolutely nothing is escaping," Schwarzkopf said, noting that civilians and unarmed Iraqis were fleeing north.

"What isn't escaping is heavy tanks, what isn't escaping is artillery pieces," Schwarzkopf said. "I'm talking about the gate that closed on the war machine that is out there."

But at the time there was still fierce fighting, and though the gate may have been closed, the destruction of the trapped armor had not been completed. American armored units were poised to launch further attacks on the remnants of the Republican Guard, the most loyal and capable of Saddam's forces.

Maj. Gen. Barry R. McCaffrey, the commander of the 24th Mechanized Infantry Division, said in an interview that before dawn on Feb. 28, his division was on the outskirts of Basra, facing seven Iraqi tank battalions, five Iraqi mechanized battalions and 13 artillery battalions of the Hammurabi division, one of three heavily armored Republican Guard units.

"We intended to destroy them in a coordinated air and ground attack," McCaffrey said. "It would have finished them off."

But at 3:30 a.m., a half-hour after the division had begun its preparatory fire for the attack, orders came from the American high command that Bush had declared a temporary cease-fire, beginning at 8 a.m. local time.

With little time remaining, the 24th Division called off its ground attack but continued to assault the retreating Iraqis with Apache helicopters, artillery and surface-to-surface missiles. At 8 a.m. the division stopped firing.

McCaffrey said the Iraqi units streamed back into Basra to join other forces fleeing Kuwait. He added that while his unit had enjoyed overwhelming success, large numbers of Republican Guard troops and some equipment managed to flee.

TAXES: Trend is reflected in bitter debates

cut, Tennessee and Texas — to consider adopting one.

"When a state adopts or even proposes an income tax, that is almost like a country going to war," said John Shannon, a tax expert at the Urban Institute. "It is the most traumatic thing that a governor can lay on the backs of his constituents."

Not since New Jersey adopted an income tax in 1976 has any state publicly considered instituting one. More broadly, the booming 1980s generated so much revenue from existing taxes that budget surpluses were commonplace, and the pressure for new state and local taxes diminished. Only in the last two years, as a slowing economy and then a recession eroded tax collections, have officials been forced to make tough choices about more taxes or fewer services.

In what may be an acknowledgement of the budget pressures, opposition to tax increases has been surprisingly muted, especially in contrast to the tax revolts of the late 1970s — although Americans today pay a total of $540 billion a year to their state and local governments in property, sales and income taxes. By comparison, the federal tax on personal income is smaller: $493 billion.

More important, in contrast to the 1960s and 1970s, the states, counties, cities and towns, rather than the federal Government, are now absorbing most of the rising cost of public health care, education, prisons, waste disposal and other public works.

This transfer has produced what Alan Auerbach, a University of Pennsylvania economist, and others call "a new Federalism," in which the debate over national concerns like education, public health insurance and programs for the poor is shifting from the White House and Congress to state and city governments, which are paying a growing portion of the bills.

"The corollary of this shift is that states and cities are increasingly adopting different standards for programs that concern our society as a whole," said Harold Hovey, president of State Policy Research Inc.

Last year, more than 30 states enacted laws intended to raise $10.3 billion in annual revenue. So far this year, 21 governors have sent their legislatures bills that are likely to raise an additional $10 billion or more, according to estimates by the Center for the Study of the States and other organizations that survey state finances. It has been years since states have raised such huge amounts.

"The states had been putting off tax increases, borrowing and using up their surpluses, and they finally got to the point where they couldn't put off the increases anymore," said Scott Mackey, a policy associate at the National Conference of State Legislatures.

Most of the new tax legislation, which became effective in the fiscal year that began July 1, raised sales taxes, broadened their coverage and raised excise taxes and fees on cigarettes, liquor, gasoline, auto registrations and the like.

New Jersey and a few other states increased personal and corporate income tax rates, but not until this year did some of the 10 states without a personal income tax begin to give ground.

And in Texas, where the budget deficit is rising and a recent court ruling ordered the state to create "equal" school districts at a cost of more than $1 billion a year, Lt. Gov. Bob Bullock this month became the first high state official in memory to propose publicly a personal and corporate income tax.

"I know deep down in my heart that it is the right thing to do for Texas," Bullock was quoted as saying. Gov. Ann Richards has neither endorsed nor rejected the proposal.

CASE: Court faces issue of right to sue the boss

established arbitration procedures of the securities industry, civil rights advocates say what is at stake is far more fundamental: a worker's right to sue the boss for discrimination on the basis of race, sex, religion or age.

The case began on the morning of Nov. 13, 1987. Two senior vice presidents of Interstate Securities Corp., a stock brokerage in Charlotte, N.C., came to the office of Robert D. Gilmer, another senior vice president.

As Gilmer recounts it, they told him that he had been doing good work but that his job had been eliminated.

Gilmer, then 62 years old, said his duties were assigned to a 28-year-old woman whom he had trained.

"I was dumbfounded because this was a very profitable part of the company's business," he said. "The first person I called was my wife, and the very next was my friend John Allred."

Allred, his lawyer, brought an age discrimination complaint against the company.

That complaint has yet to be heard. The question before the Supreme Court is who should hear it.

Gilmer, joined by advocates for the elderly, organized labor and other groups, says it should be the courts and civil rights agencies like the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission.

The securities company, joined by advocates for business, says it should be an arbitration panel.

When he took his job in 1981, Gilmer signed a standard industry form accepting compulsory arbitration of any disputes with Interstate, a regional investment company now known as Interstate/Johnson Lane Corp.

Although many industries use private arbitration to settle commercial disputes, and a few companies require arbitration to settle disputes with top executives, the securities industry's system is extraordinary in its scope.

LAWSUITS: U.S. is responsible, plaintiffs say

(From 1A)

Department briefs said, adding that courts should not review military policy decisions.

Pinilla's bakery, Industria Panificadora, was near the PDF central headquarters and survived the initial U.S. military assault Dec. 20, 1989. But when U.S. soldiers reopened the area to the public Jan. 7, the looting began.

"The U.S. soldiers did not do absolutely anything to stop the hundreds of intruders who were looting and stripping down all of our property," Pinilla said in an affidavit translated from Spanish.

He said he asked the soldiers to intervene but they refused, saying they had been told the property belonged to the PDF and was to be dismantled.

"Since there was nothing left we could do, we went back to Chorillos just to watch how our property and business, an effort and hard work of almost a lifetime, were destroyed, looted and dismantled as a consequence of the U.S. Army authorization and blessings," Pinilla's affidavit said.

Ramon M. Moreno's FX Video Club, located behind a Panama City television station in U.S. Army custody, was ransacked shortly after the invasion began.

"My premise ... was broken into and looted in front of the American soldiers, who did nothing to prevent it," Moreno's affidavit said. "The destruction was absolute."

Pinilla is seeking $1.2 million; Moreno is asking for $306,823.

Insurance companies have refused to pay damages on grounds they were related to acts of war.

FAIR: Air show organizers have high expectations

(From 1A)

Military jet aircraft and privately owned World War II-era trainers, fighters and bombers flown by members of the Confederate Air Force (CAF) and other pilots also will be on display.

The air fair will feature championship aerobatic pilots, including Pat Day, Ole Olsen, James Jones and world-class aerobatic pilot Gene Beggs, who was on the United States World Championship Aerobatic team in the 1980s.

Trophies, designed with an aerodynamic flair by Odessa pilot-sculptor Bill Davis, will be awarded in the experimental, antique, classic, warbirds and best-of-show categories.

Bill Hicks, president of the Southwest Air Fair & Expo, sees the show as more than just the possible cornerstone of a nationally recognized aviation event. It also may be a factor in drawing more industry to the Midland-Odessa area.

"We've got potential out here for industrial development in this area because of good flying weather," Hicks said. "We've got land we can develop for that (industry) ... to open the diversification of our economy."

The air fair, Hicks said, will draw pilots and aviation enthusiasts of diversified interests, means, and influence.

"There's a lot of enthusiasm," Hicks said. And this air fair "adds intensity to it."

Joe Hensley, who is on the Southwest Air Fair board of directors, sees the potential of the Midland-Odessa area as an aviation mecca.

He said the new CAF headquarters and the American Airpower Heritage Museum being established at Midland International Airport will give the area a boost.

Additionally, a Houston-based military-jet museum has considered establishing its museum at the Midland airport, where Texas' early bid in aviation, the 1910 vintage Pliska Aeroplane, is on permanent exhibit.

He said the area also has a historical link to aviation. It was home to several U.S. Army air fields for the training of fighter and bomber pilots and their crews during World War II.

"You might wind up with a hub where people come in from all over" to study aviation in the Southwest, Hensley said. "They'll go to the air show. They go to these museums. By the time they get through, they will have seen (virtually) every airplane from the beginning all the way up to the most advanced.

"We've got a broad base in aircraft," he said.

Hensley said the Southwest Air Fair will differ from other air shows in the area.

"You are not going to see the amount of World War II planes you'd see at the CAF," he said. "You are not going to see the kind of military hardware you'd see at a military fly-in.

"You are going to see a segment of all the old and antique (aircraft)", similar to a scaled-down but impressive EAA fly-in at Oshkosh," Hensley said. "You are going to see a little bit of all of it."

ABUSERS: All must submit to random drug-testing their counterparts on regular probation, SCSA participants must undergo mandatory substance-abuse counseling.

After evaluating their needs through a battery of tests, Ms. Martin refers participants to an appropriate counseling agency in the community — such as the Mental Health and Mental Retardation Center of Midland (MHMR), the Palmer Drug Abuse Program (PDAP), and Turning Point residential drug and alcohol abuse treatment center in Odessa.

The program also offers in-house group therapy once a week, with sessions conducted by a counselor on loan from a community agency.

"If they don't successfully complete the in-house, they're referred to something else," Thomas said.

Drug counseling is not the only type mandated by the program. Ms. Martin said she regularly refers people to agencies that can help them with other problems, such as spouse abuse.

"Once we get their alcohol and drug issues addressed, there are other issues — personal issues — that need to be addressed," she said. "Sometimes they can be going to two different programs at one time."

The state picks up the tab for counseling and in-patient substance-abuse treatment for SCSA participants. The fiscal year 1990 budget for Midland County's SCSA program is $55,833, all of which is covered by a state grant, MS. Martin said.

About $682,000 in grants were dispensed statewide for substance abuse caseloads, Thomas said.

Most participants remain in the SCSA for a year, but they can be sentenced to up to 10 years in the program. In fiscal year 1990, 26 people successfully completed the program in Midland County, Ms. Martin reported. Five were transferred into stricter probation programs and 10 had their probation revoked and ended up in the Texas Department of Corrections.

Statewide, 2,357 people successfully completed the program and 440 failed.

"It's very effective because of the obligations that the offenders have to put forth," Ms. Martin said.

If program participants fail to meet those obligations — by breaking curfew, failing to show up for counseling or failing a drug test, for example — they face revocation or modification of their probation.

The decision to revoke probation is the judge's, just as it is the judge who authorizes the use of the SCSA program for offenders in the first place. Nearly all SCSC participants are in the program because they were unable to fulfill the terms of regular probation, Ms. Martin said.

"My program is a sanction," she said. "It is a diversionary program for offenders who would otherwise by sent to the institutional division."

Judge John Hyde, who presides over Midland's 238th District Court, said the SCSA represents a second chance for offenders whose chemical dependency problems led to their failure on regular probation.

"Very often, it is seen with a case where someone has been on probation and has done well but had some urine analyses that have proved conclusively that they have used some kind of illegal substances," he said.

By placing such people in the SCSA, he said, he hopes to give them a chance at rehabilitation that they might not have if they were simply sent to prison for violating their probation.

"Probation can have a more lasting effect on people who have the promise of rehabilitation," he said.

About 400 people have been served by the SCSA program since its inception here 4½ years ago, Thomas said.

"It's not mandated as in a statute," Thomas said of the SCSA. "It was something where we determined we had a problem and we needed something to try to solve that problem."

Nationwide survey shows overall drop in personal crimes

WASHINGTON (AP) — The number of Americans victimized by a violent crime rose to 2.3 million last year even as the total number of personal and household crimes fell by 1 million, according to Justice Department estimates released Sunday.

According to the National Crime Survey, which the Bureau of Justice Statistics has been compiling since 1973, combined personal and household crimes, not including homicide, declined by 3 percent to 34.8 million.

But the vast majority of the 1 million fewer crimes — almost 937,000 — were personal larcenies that didn't include any contact with the victim. The total of such crimes declined to 11.6 million.

"Larceny without contact would be bicycle thefts, other relatively minor thefts, whereas the issues of greater concern are moving up," said Alfred Blumstein, dean of the School of Urban and Public Affairs at Carnegie Mellon University in Pittsburgh.

Steven D. Dillingham, director of the bureau, acknowledged in a statement accompanying the report that the overall decrease "results largely from last year's 8 percent decline in the rate of personal thefts without direct contact between the victim and the offender. Those thefts, which involve such offenses as stealing personal belongs from public places or from an unattended automobile parked away from home," comprise 95 percent of all personal thefts and about 66 percent of all crimes against individuals."

Rising last year were assaults completed with injury, attempted robbery and personal larceny that involved contact with the victim.

And although the survey found a drop in the number of rapes, the figures are in dispute.

"No one should look at today's figures — which do not even include the murder count — and believe that the epidemic of crime in America has been broken," said Senate Judiciary Committee Chairman Joseph R. Biden Jr., D-Del.

The survey lists only information provided by victims, so homicides, which hit a record of more than 23,000 last year, aren't included. But in a universe of an estimated 5.9 million crimes of violence, the addition of 23,000 murders would not make a significant change in the overall percentages.

The number of completed violent crimes rose 3.4 percent, to 2.3 million, the survey found. The increase was also reflected in a 2.4 percent rise in the rate of violent crimes, which meant 11.2 of every 1,000 people age 12 and older were the victims of such a crime.

That includes almost 6 percent increases in the number of aggravated and simple assaults that injured victims. There were some 1.5 million such victims last year.

The rate for the two types of assault with injuries increased from seven victims per 1,000 people in 1989 to 7.3 last year.

The estimates in the survey are based on questions asked by Bureau of the Census interviewers, who contacted 97,000 people in 48,000 homes and asked about crimes they experienced during the previous six months. The estimates also take into account actual police reports.

The survey found rapes declined 18.3 percent, to 110,660, last year. That would reflect a 19.1 percent decline in the rate, to 0.5 per 1,000 people.

In addition, the survey said 69,410 of the rapes — almost 63 percent — were reported to police.

That would be a huge percentage for a crime that traditionally has been tremendously underreported to police and is surprising considering interviewers found that, for all the offenses they were told about, reports to law enforcement averaged only 38 percent.

Overall, the National Crime Survey found that personal crimes — both completed and attempted — including assault, rape, robbery and personal theft declined by 4.1 percent, to 18.9 million.

That translates to a rate of almost 93 per 1,000 people, a decline from almost 98 the previous year.

Total household crimes — including burglary, larceny and motor vehicle theft — decreased 1.4 percent, to 15.9 million, a rate of 166 per 1,000 households, the survey found. The rate was almost 170 in 1989.

The most dramatic increase in one area of crime found by the survey was in motor vehicle theft, up 19 percent to 1.4 million completed thefts. The rate of such completed thefts rose 17.8 percent, to 14.6 per 1,000 households.

The NCS found 69,280 rapes were reported to police in 1989. The FBI's compilation of statistics from police departments nationwide recorded 94,500 rapes that year.

A study by the Senate Judiciary Committee's Democratic staff estimated last week that more than 100,000 rapes were reported to law enforcement officials last year, an increase of 6.3 percent.

Former provost named Harvard president

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. (AP) — Neil Rudenstine, a former Princeton administrator and the executive vice president of a wealthy philanthropic foundation, was named Sunday as the 26th president of Harvard University.

Rudenstine will replace Derek C. Bok, who is retiring in June after 20 years as president of the 17,500-student Ivy League school.

Since 1988, Rudenstine has been executive vice president of the New York-based Andrew W. Mellon Foundation, which gives grants mainly to colleges and universities and to hospitals and environmental causes.

Rudenstine, 56, who lives in Princeton, N.J., spent 20 years as an English professor and administrator at Princeton.

Bok, who was not involved in the 10-month search for his successor, said he was delighted with the choice.

"I cannot think of a candidate so well-endowed with the knowledge, experience, temperament and character needed to serve as Harvard's president," Bok said in a statement.

Rudenstine graduated from Princeton in 1956 and went to Oxford University in England as a Rhodes scholar, receiving a bachelor's degree in English literature in 1959. He received a Ph.D from Harvard in 1964.

He taught Renaissance literature at Harvard before moving to Princeton in 1968. Eleven years later, he was appointed provost, the university's second-ranking officer.

Rudenstine was widely seen as a logical successor to former Princeton President William G. Bowen when Bowen left in 1987 to head the Mellon Foundation. Instead, Rudenstine followed Bowen to the wealthy foundation.

Colleagues at Princeton described Rudenstine's management as firm, but conciliatory.

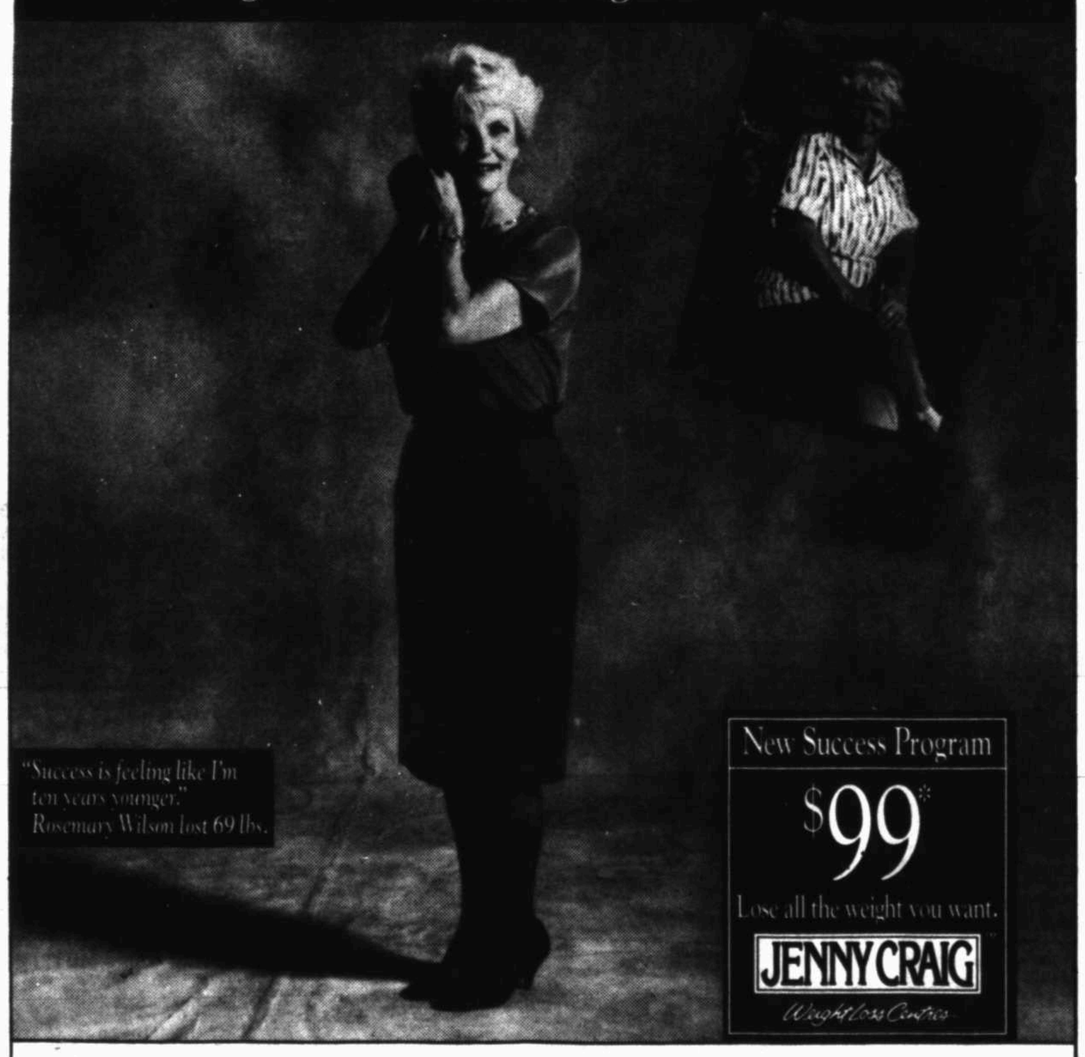

"He managed to make a lot of difficult decisions without getting people angry, which is quite an accomplishment," said Theodore Ziolowski, dean of the Graduate School at Princeton.

Post-war goodwill widens, survey finds

WASHINGTON (AP) — Public opinion in the aftermath of the Gulf War is high on media coverage, Gen. H. Norman Schwarzkopf and even the Democratic leadership of Congress, according to a survey released Sunday.

"There's no question that there's a euphoria that has much to do with the approval for everybody," said Donald S. Kellermann, who directed the survey conducted by the Times Mirror Center for The People & The Press.

"It's very much like a football game," he said. "The blood lust is up and when you win, the blood lust is satisfied. It's the 'We're No. 1' feeling."

More than eight in 10 Americans rated news coverage of the war as good or excellent, with 45 percent rating it excellent — up from 36 percent responding excellent in January.

But increases in regard for the media paled in comparison with the change in opinion of the military. Respondents rating the military very favorably rose from 18 percent in spring 1990 to 60 percent this month.

Schwarzkopf, commander of Operation Desert Storm, scored the highest "very favorable" rating in the poll's history — 62 percent.

"That's through the sound barrier," Kellermann said.

The previous high rating, 39 percent for the late President John F. Kennedy in a spring 1987 survey, also was surpassed by Gen. Colin Powell, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff. Powell was rated very favorable by 51 percent of those surveyed.

Even the public's regard for Congress and its Democratic leaders improved with the war.

In spring 1990, 6 percent of those surveyed gave Congress a very favorable rating; this month 16 percent did.

The very favorable rating for House Speaker Thomas S. Foley, D-Wash., went from a 3 percent a year ago to 13 percent this month, and from 3 percent to 11 percent for House Majority Leader Richard Gephardt, D-Mo.

But Kellermann warned that the euphoria and high ratings likely won't last.

"A good deal of it is going to fade, because circumstances are going to change," he said.

While the survey found that the public approved of the media coverage of the war, it also found that the war changed the public's attitude about censorship by the U.S. government.

Nearly a 2-to-1 majority said censorship for the sake of national security is more important than the media's ability to report important news.

Times Mirror said it periodically asked the same question since 1985. Each time previously, it said, the public was either evenly divided or came down clearly on the side of the media.

Kellermann attributed the public's acceptance of censorship to its perception that the war was well-managed, in contrast to past controversies such as Watergate and the Iran-Contra affair.

"There's nothing like coming off a big victory," he said. "I think that might well change in another context — if we come into a situation where there's great difficulty or the military fumbles the ball and the press wants to know why."

'There's no question that there's a euphoria that has much to do with the approval for everybody.'

— Donald S. Kellermann, survey director

The survey found that 83 percent of those questioned favor military restrictions on war coverage — a small increase over January's 79 percent.

Thirty-six percent said much from the war was kept from the public, and another 36 percent said at least some information was kept secret.

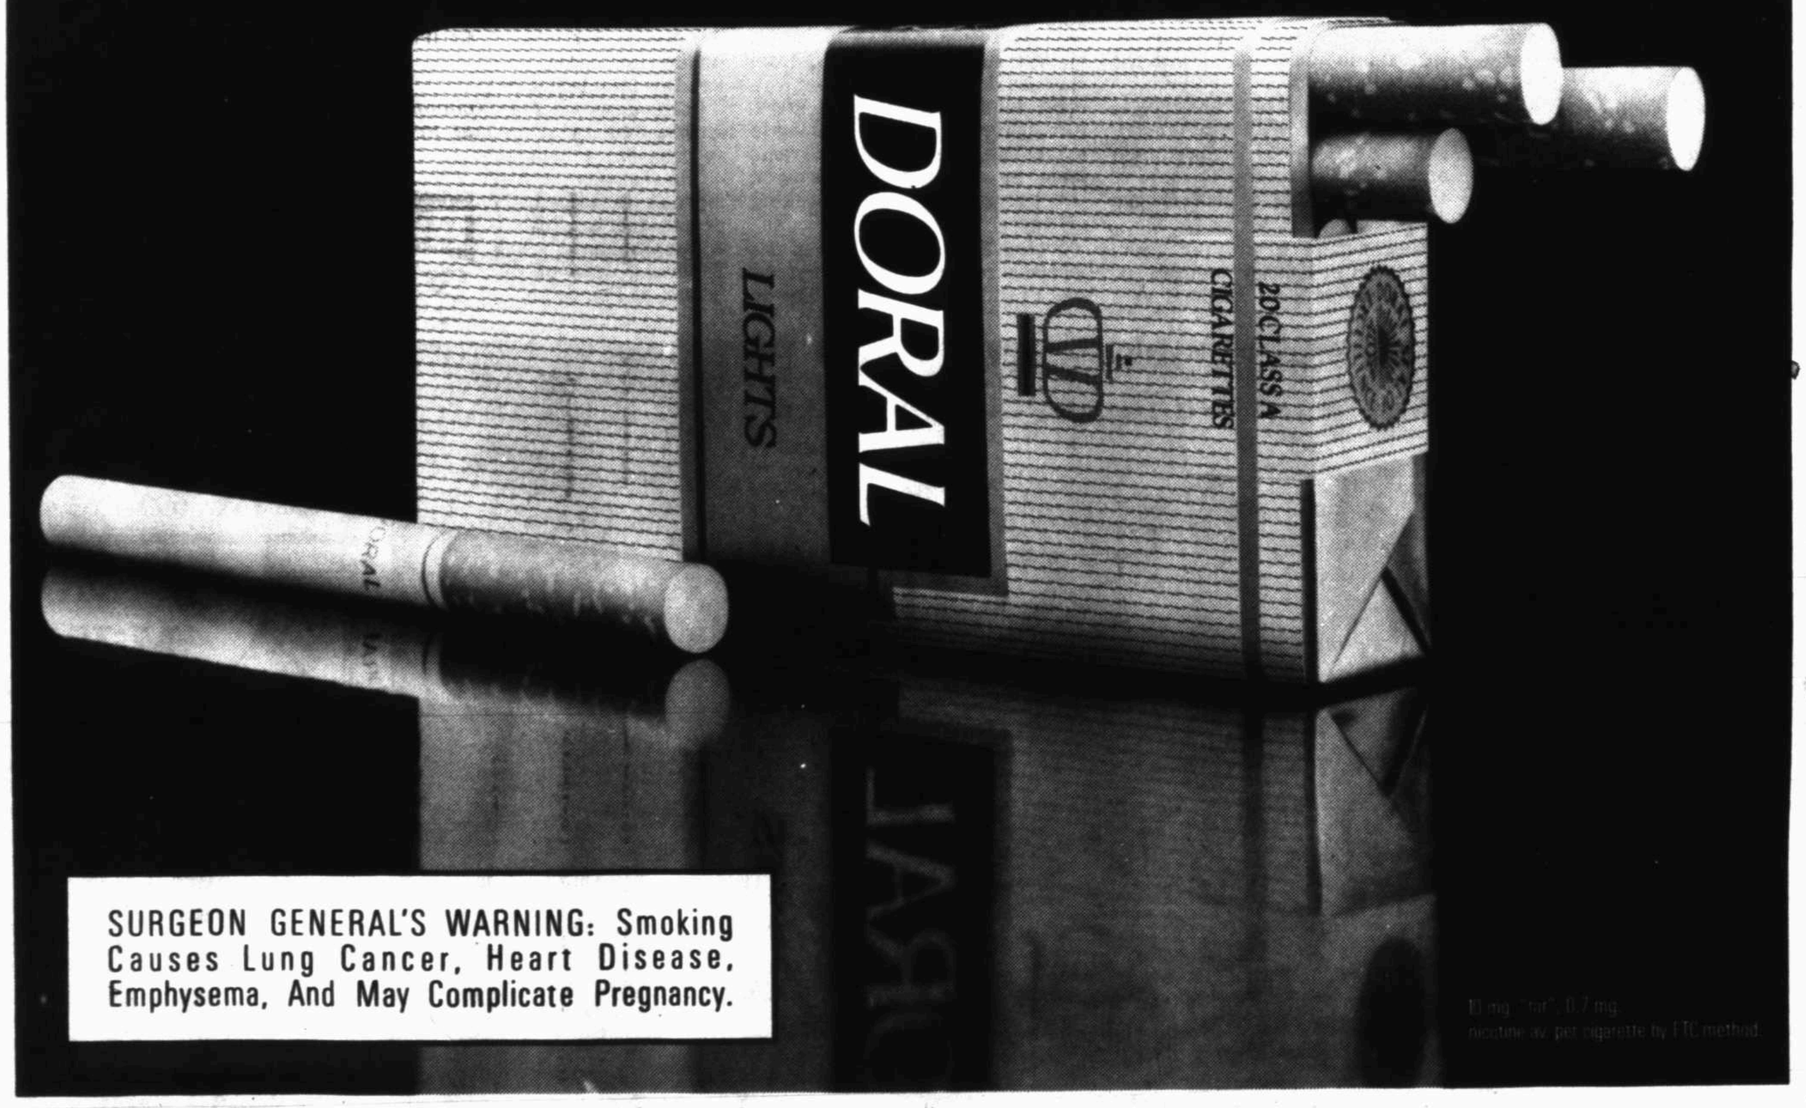

The Times Mirror Center, owned by the publishers of the Los Angeles Times, questioned 1,857 adults March 14-18. The survey has a margin of error of plus or minus 2 percentage points.

Gov. Wilson defends Gates; 2,000 show support at rally

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Gov. Pete Wilson defended Police Chief Daryl Gates, describing calls for his ouster as an "attempted lynching" over the videotaped police beating of a black motorist.

The March 3 beating of Rodney G. King was videotaped by an amateur cameraman and has been televised nationwide. King suffered multiple injuries, including 11 skull fractures.

Since then, numerous critics have called for Gates to resign. Gates, who called the beating "an aberration," has vowed to remain as police chief.

"I think that we're watching the attempted lynching" of Gates, Wilson said Saturday on CNN's weekly "Capitol Gang."

"But I don't think it will be successful and I don't think it should be successful unless there can be a showing from an honest and an objective investigation that this is not an aberration, that instead it is a consistent pattern," Wilson said.

"But I don't think it's going to show that because Daryl Gates, however glib or flip he may have been on occasion, is a dedicated law enforcement professional who has taken enormous pride in a department that I think is one of the best," he said.

About 2,000 people attended a Police Academy rally Sunday in support of Gates. The chief urged television stations to stop showing the videotape.

"The video will be forever etched in my mind," Gates said, adding that the four officers charged in the beating "cannot have a fair trial if the tape continues to be played."

Civil rights attorney Gloria Allred, who with actor Chad Everett was one of the speakers at the pro-Gates rally, said Gates should not step down without due cause.

"He deserves more than a lynch-mob mentality that says Chief Gates is guilty," she said.

The FBI will question all 200 officers at the police station where the four officers charged in King's vicious beating are based. Gates has ordered personnel at the station, the Foothill Division, to cooperate with the investigation, aimed at determining if a pattern of civil rights abuses exists, Lt. Fred Nixon said.

Nixon said Saturday the FBI asked for names, addresses and telephone numbers of every officer who works at Foothill Division.

FBI spokesman Jim Nielson refused comment Sunday except to say, "We are conducting an investigation of allegations of violations of civil rights."

The police union, the Los Angeles Police Protective League, welcomed the FBI investigation, said its president, Lt. George Aliano.

"I think this should be done as soon as possible," Aliano said. "The people in the city should know what's occurring. Bad or good, it needs to get out."

Wilson also criticized lawsuits that charge police with using excessive force.

"I wouldn't be too impressed" about the $8 million the Los Angeles Police Department reportedly paid to settle excessive force lawsuits in 1990, Wilson said.

"You're going to see hundreds of millions in suits filed, and the real question is do they have any validity," the governor said.

He predicted more attention will be paid to police training.

"All of that makes sense, certainly the sensitivity and training," he said. "But you've got to remember that cops are facing far and away the most difficult and demanding and dangerous work that police have ever faced.

"They're dealing with drug gangs, they're dealing with violence."

"They don't know when they stop somebody and pull them over whether he's going to respond by blowing their head off," he said. "So it's a terribly dangerous, demanding job — which in no way excuses what was an inexcusable performance on the part of these officers."

Three people were shot, one fatally, in separate incidents Saturday by police officers and Los Angeles County sheriff's deputies. Police and sheriff's spokesmen said the officers in each case believed those shot had guns and were about to use them. However, none of the victims were armed, authorities reported.

DEAR ABBY

Religious breakup may be good fortune

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: I am a financially stable 25-year-old man, and the young lady I have been seeing for almost a year is a 20-year-old college student. We are very much in love — not superficially, but deeply. She is a very mature and unique human being with a strong love for her family.

Van Buren

The problem: religion. Her parents object to me because they do not want their Catholic daughter involved with a Protestant man. Her father dislikes me intensely because of my faith, and doesn't even want to get to know me as a person.

I had no intentions of trying to convert their daughter. I happen to love her and she says she loves me, but she has decided to end our relationship because she can't handle the turmoil and controversy it's creating between her and her parents.

What should I do? — DEEPLY HURT IN SOUTH CAROLINA

DEAR HURT: Thank God for your good fortune! Had you been able to persuade this mature, unique human being with a strong love for her family to choose you instead of her family, your chances for a happy, lasting marriage would have been small.

Either she didn't love you enough — or the "little girl" in her still desperately needed parental approval. I think you lucked out.

DEAR ABBY: This concerns a problem I have never seen in your column. What do you do when a man you have hired to do some construction work in your home asks to use your bathroom?

I can't stand the idea of strangers using my bathroom, but I don't know how to deal with it.

Recently, I had two men here laying carpet. One man asked to use the bathroom, and what could I say? I have asked my friends how they deal with it, and they all have said, "I don't like it either, but what can you do?"

My dad was an electrician, and he said he would never ask to use a customer's bathroom. When he would drive to a new customer's house, he would look the area over and locate the nearest gas station, and if he needed to use the facilities while working, he would tell the customer he had to return to the shop to pick up a tool or something, but he wouldn't charge them for the time he was gone.

Maybe employers should tell their people to follow that example. How would you handle it, Abby? — A READER, ARVADA, COLO.

DEAR READER: One's need to use "the facilities" is essential. So I could not find it in my heart to deny anyone that necessity. There are many disinfectants available for bathrooms that should be used daily, so an occasional workman should present no problem.

I dealt with the problem five years ago when a reader waxed poetic by responding:

"Dear Abby:

"That housewife who begrudged her latrine

"Is the stingiest I've ever seen.

"She deserves some compunction

"And a bladder dysfunction

"Then she might be less high and pristine.

Ivana Trump to get $10 million, 1 mansion, 1 N.Y. apartment

NEW YORK — Donald and Ivana Trump finally reached a post-divorce settlement of their property Friday night, according to lawyers for both sides.

Phillip H. Schaeffer, representing Mrs. Trump, and Jay Goldberg, representing Trump, said the couple signed a document supplementing a 1987 agreement dividing their property if they divorced. The Trumps were divorced in December, and Mrs. Trump contested that agreement.

Under the settlement, Goldberg said, Mrs. Trump received $10 million Friday night and will get another $4 million by 1993, after she leaves the couple's Trump Tower triplex. She will also get their mansion in Greenwich, Conn., an apartment in Trump Plaza and the use of a Florida mansion one month a year.

It had been reported earlier that she will get more than $600,000 a year in child support.

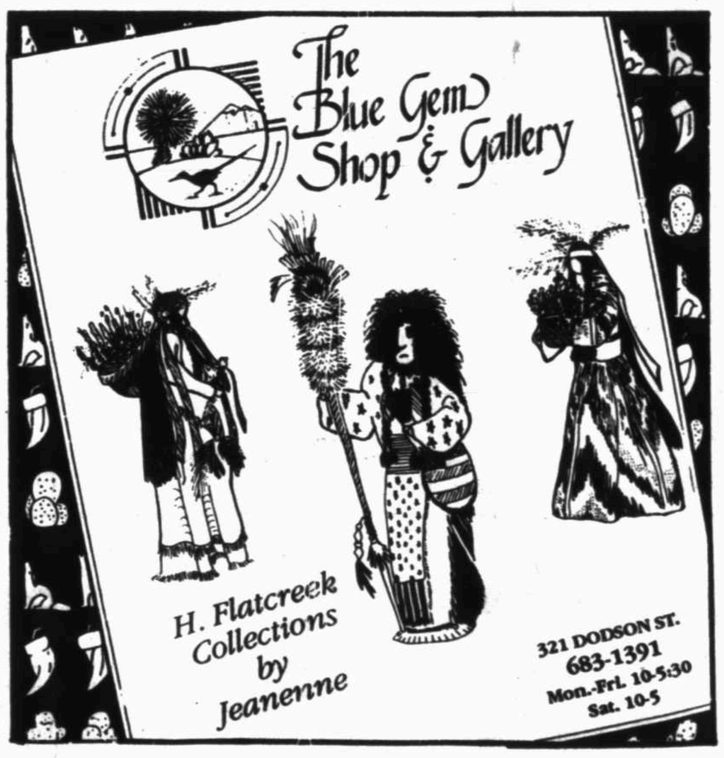

Schaeffer said she received the Greenwich house and property in Trump Plaza, and would not discuss other details of the agreement.

Peace fleeting in war aftermath

At the time when parades welcoming home those Americans who served in the war against Iraq are being held in the United States, Iraq remains torn by internal strife.

Saddam Hussein's loyalist forces continue battling opposition groups, reportedly using acid, napalm and chemical weapons.

President George Bush, responding to what appears to be Saddam's efforts to maintain his grip on power while crushing opposition forces, recently told Saddam that Iraq's use of gunships in a combat role violated terms of the temporary cease-fire. He then warned Saddam, "Don't do it."

U.S. fighter planes have shot down two Iraqi warplanes in recent days that were flying in violation of the ceasefire terms.

What apparently is occurring is a last-ditch effort by the Iraqi dictator to work just within the framework of the United Nations resolutions or slightly beyond those limits to maintain his power base while destroying his opposition. If he accomplishes his goal, where will that leave the United States in its desire to remove his from power?

Saddam has said that he will institute a democratic government, a promise that was met with extreme skepticism in the West. A democratic government must embrace human rights for all — even those who oppose the ones in power — and Saddam's past does not indicate he even knows what human rights are.

Iraq was beaten by the United States and the multi-national force during six weeks of heavy bombing raids and a 100-hour ground assault, but Saddam has continued to carry out his war against opposition forces in his own country.

During the war President Bush urged the Iraqi people to rise up against Saddam and wrest the government from his control. That still needs to be accomplished, but now the question is whether opposition forces can accomplish that goal.

If Saddam is not removed from power and continues to wage war against his own people, where will that leave the security of the Middle East? Where will it leave the United States forces still in the Persian Gulf area?

Sadly, the "peace" that was supposed to come at the end of the war against Iraq does not yet appear to be in sight.

Proposal to curb costs is flawed

Citizens charged with a crime who cannot afford a lawyer have the right to competent counsel provided by the state. That right limits the options of Harris County Commissioners Court as it considers two proposals for controlling the runaway cost of providing lawyers for indigent defendants.

One proposal would restrict each of the county's 22 criminal district courts to $370,000 a year for attorney's fees in cases not involving the death penalty.

... The other proposal ... would save $2 million a year by contracting with a few lawyers to defend indigents in each court.

Aside from its cost, the current arrangement whereby more than 1,000 lawyers in Harris County receive appointments for indigent defense is subject to abuse. Campaign contributions as well as experience influence who is appointed and how much they make. That can be cured when conscientious judges make sure lawyers earn their fees. The best alternative, a public defenders office, would entail even higher costs and bureaucratic inefficiencies.

... The cost of defending indigents mirrors the rising crime rate and the attendant costs of the troubled justice system, from courts to jails to parole officers. But those costs must be borne so justice can be done.

We are concerned that imposing spending limits or moving partially to a public defender system would leave the county with the worst features of both the private-appointment and public-defender systems while solving nothing.

Free vaccination plan required for measles

It's not supposed to happen but, increasingly, children are dying of measles right here in the United States.

In 1983, for example, there were only 1,497 reprted cases of measles in the entire country. But in 1990, there were 26,000 cases reported nationwide.

Centers for Disease and Control Director William Roper, testifying before Congress last week, said:

"It is low immunization coverage among inner-city populations, particularly among minority groups, that appears to be the primary cause of the recent resurgence of measles."

Dr. Roper believes those children can be reached if vaccinations are available for free at the same places where their parents pick up other benefits, such as the food supplements available through the Women, Infants and Children Program.

Of course, there will have to be enough money available for the vaccinations. And President Bush has asked for an additional $40 million for the CDC immunization program. That is an increase of 19 percent, but we think it would be money well spent.

Iraq owes billions for farm products

WASHINGTON — Saddam Hussein lost the Persian Gulf War, but in the process he proved that there is such a thing as a free lunch. Saddam stopped paying his commodity credit bill to the United States when Iraq invaded Kuwait on Aug. 2 — a credit that should never have been extended in the months leading up to the invasion. The bottom line is, Iraq got the U.S. agricultural exports it ordered and America didn't get its money. The outstanding bill at the Agriculture Department (USDA) is $2 billion.

Anderson

The USDA should not have been surprised that Saddam turned out to be a bad risk. The General Accounting Office had been warning the USDA about that possibility for years. It doesn't take a Monday-morning quarterback to wonder why Iraq was given billions of dollars in credit — 25 percent of all the credit extended by the export guarantee program. There were plenty of signs even before the invasion that the bills might not be paid.

Allan Mendelowitz, the GAO investigator who looked into the credit given Iraq, says it was simply a bad loan. The USDA did a risk analysis, rated Iraq as a "reasonable risk" market in 1989, and then continued to extend credit. If Saddam had gone to one of Charles Keating's high-flying savings and loan offices, he couldn't have gotten an easier loan with fewer questions asked.

The Commodity Credit Corp. is a federally insured loan program to help foreign countries buy U.S. farm products. A country places an order, a bank loans them the money to pay for what they buy and then the federal government guarantees that the loan will be paid if the foreign nation defaults. The USDA assesses the credit risk of the countries, and another federal board, the National Advisory Council, decides whether the credit policy is in sync with U.S. foreign policy.

Our reporter Jonathan Ullman looked into the handling of Iraq under that program. During the Iran-Iraq War, the United States wanted to help Iraq. Iraq needed food but was short on cash (all those tanks cost money), so the credit program for Iraq was born in 1983. Iraq became the 10th largest buyer of U.S. farm products — including buying 20 percent of American-grown rice in 1988 — using taxpayers' money.

As Saddam's poor human rights record got longer, including the gassing of his own people, the State Department continued to insist that the United States had more to gain by maintaining a friendly relationship with Iraq. In September 1989, the USDA extended $30 million in additional farm loans to Iraq, but an internal USDA memo warned against issuing a press release about it.

By the beginning of 1990, the bills were piling up. The general sales manager at the USDA, F. Paul Dickerson, wrote a memo to his boss acknowledging that the bills were high, but adding that to cut off Iraq then would be taken as "unwarranted and an affront to their dignity," and that might prompt Iraq to stop paying anything. The USDA believed the best way to guarantee payment of the old loans was to continue giving Iraq new ones.

When the USDA submitted a $1-billion credit proposal for Iraq to the National Advisory Council in 1990, the NAC finally got nervous. The Atlanta branch of an Italian bank was under investigation for allegations that it had loaned money to Iraq under the USDA program, but that not all of the money went for farm products. The NAC said Iraq should get only $400 million in credit. Iraq held out for $500 million. By February 1990, that money was gone and Iraq asked for $573 million more. This time the Commodity Credit Corp. said "no," ending more than seven years of giving Iraq what it wanted.

The GAO has since told Congress that the credit program was mismanaged, and now the GAO is investigating the possibility that Iraq put some of the money into nuclear arms development.

CHARLEY REESE

Were hawks honest and doves devious?

The present leaders of the Republican Party are as indecent and despicable a crowd of party hacks as have ever gathered around the Potomac River. The truth is not in them. They have no concept even of honor.

I say this in response to the current Republican campaign to picture themselves as great patriots and to question the patriotism of Democrats who voted against the resolution authorizing the use of force in the Persian Gulf.

Reese

There are two flagrant lies imbedded in this putrid ploy.

One, the Democratic leadership of both the House and Senate chose statesmanship over partisanship and instructed their members to vote their conscience on the resolution. The resolution voted on was drafted by two Democrats, and about 40 Democrats joined Republicans in supporting it.

Immediately thereafter, the Democratic leadership joined with Republicans in backing the president and the troops in a unity resolution. In short, the Democratic leadership had for once acted like statesmen when, if they had been as low as the Republican leaders are showing themselves to be, they could easily have embarrassed the president by making it a party-line vote.

Thus, for Republicans to picture the Democrats who voted against the resolution as unpatriotic and practically subversive, is lie number one. They voted to give sanctions longer to work and when they lost that vote, they joined in supporting the president. They did that, by the way, long before the war started, and so they willingly shouldered responsibility for any disaster, had it occurred.

The second lie imbedded in the Republican cheap campaign ploy is their own behavior during that debate. Republicans must think the American people have short memories and cannot remember how they debated. They did not tell the American people they were voting for war — they claimed they were voting for peace. Republican after Republican stood up in the well of the House and on the floor of the Senate and said only if you authorize the use of force can you avoid war.

They were then still pushing the Bush line — knowing it was false, by the way — that once Iraq really believed the U.S. was serious, then it would pull out of Kuwait. They argued that if you voted against the resolution, you were voting for war. Now they are trying to pretend they were the great honest hawks and the Democrats were devious doves.

Not only is this a dishonorable and despicable dirty campaign ploy but it is also stupid, for they are sending a clear message to the Democratic leaders in the House and Senate: put aside partisan politics, act statesmanlike, and we Republicans will call you suckers and kick you in the groin. That is a dumb message to send to the leaders of the majority party, but it is the kind of arrogance one expects from the likes of Rep. Newt Gingrich and Sen. Phil Gramm.

If we are ever to solve the problems of this great country, it will require unity and consensus but we will not get that until Republicans elect a better class of human beings that these mean-spirited, honorless yuppie demagogues who are the political equivalent of the Wall Street greedies.

It's quite typical of the current administration that Bill Bennett, whose only war experience is rhetorical, was running around thumping his chest and debating Democrats until faced with Sen. Bob Kerrey — a Nebraska Democrat with a Medal of Honor and one leg. Bennett, who like Dick Cheney and so many other Republican war hawks, sat out the Vietnam War, decided he would rather not debate Bob Kerrey on the virtues of war.

It is dishonorable for politicians to exploit the sacrifices and triumphs of the troops. Let them campaign on their records, not on those of the soldiers.

WILLIAM SAFIRE

Hit the pound sign and see what you get

A sign of the times is the one-way caller.

Person leans into the three-sided coop we used to call a telephone booth, squints to see what kind of machine it is, punches rather than dials a number, then waits. He or she fumbles for a pen and something to write on as a couple of rings go by. In a moment, the caller straightens to attention and receives instructions. Then the caller's fingers punch a few buttons; another brief wait; more punching, then a long listen, a smile or frown, and another punch. Not a word is spoken into the receiver.

Safire

The caller is either a KGB agent under intense surveillance or your average user of a telephone message service. I have one, called Audix, or Unix, or Felix — there's an x at the end — and I no longer need other people. I just leave and get messages; I could be gone for years, and nobody would know.

The caller presses the numeric keys with his secret password, which is often the day and month of his birth, the easiest code imaginable to break, but it transmits a sense of confidentiality or satisfies some other message-service need. (Go memorize an irrelevant number; if you forget and have no mnemonic, you will be frantically banging on the numeric keys; it's a piteous sight.)

"Please enter your password," the synthetic-syrupy recorded voice directs, "followed by the pound sign."

"When was I born?" is my first internal question. The second, which I asked only once, was: "What and where is the pound sign?"

I always thought the pound sign was the symbol for the British pound sterling, a script capital L with a hyphen through it, a stylized representation of the Latin libra. (The Roman pound was several ounces lighter than the modern pound; some things stick in my mind, but numbers fade fast.)

No; the sign that the recorded Miss Syrup refers to is what some of us remember as the tick-tack-toe sign, or the crosshatch, or the sign of the double-cross, similar to the symbol Charlie Chaplin wore as a parody of the swastika in his 1940 movie, "The Great Dictator." When #, as we shall call it here, is placed before a number, it is called a number sign; #1 pencils have a softer lead than #2 pencils, and nothing fits into a #10 envelope anymore. When a musician sees it, the meaning is "sharp"; doctors often use it as a symbol for "fracture."

When a proofreader uses the #, the meaning is "insert space here": two words incorrectly runtogether are happily separated by a #. (When this copy comes to the proofreader, whose legendary name is Mr. Dunphy, that eagle-eyed worthy will circle runtogether, run a line out to the edge of the page, and put a # at the end. Another editor, with a profound sense of context, will write "stet" over that, meaning "leave as is," from the third-person present subjunctive singular of the Latin stare, "to stand." I get a lot of sweaters for birthday presents; think I was born in December.)

In internal memoranda, the telephone company (a locution left over from the days of AT&T monopoly; there are now hundreds of telephone companies) likes to use octothorpe, also spelled octothorp. Octo- is a combining form for "eight," as octogenarian octopuses know, and refers to the eight points around the outside of the symbol. But there are nine spaces in a tick-tack-toe game. The crosshatch has 12 line segments. Forget octothorpe.

Ink-stained wretches, pounding the keys of long-ago typewriters, recall the # as a substitute for -30- written at the bottom of a story to signify termination, no pages or takes to follow. (Where does ink-stained wretch come from? Wait — I was born on Dec. 17. My password is 1217. Now I can get my messages. The pound sign is the one on the lower right, not the one on the lower left, which is the star sign. Funny, it looks like an asterisk.)

Iran goes public with campaign to oust Saddam

MANAMA, Bahrain (NYT) — Iran is stepping up its campaign to oust Iraqi President Saddam Hussein and the entire leadership of his Baath Socialist Party.

The Tehran government is supplying Shiite Muslim rebels and Kurdish dissidents in Iraq with more weapons, supplies and moral support in what seems to be a final chapter of the decade-long confrontation between the two Persian Gulf nations.

While there was never much good will among the Iranian leaders, whether pragmatists or militants, toward the rulers of Iraq, the country's pragmatic leaders, led by President Hashemi Rafsanjani, had appeared over the last few months to be advocating the opening of a new chapter in Iraqi-Iranian relations.

The idea was to put behind them the enmity engendered by the eight-year war Iraq started in in September 1980. But now, Iranian policy has sharply changed.

Tehran Radio went so far Sunday as to predict an imminent assault on the Iraqi capital, Baghdad, by rebels "from two axes, north and south."

This would include Kurdish rebels from the north and pro-Iranian Shiite Muslims from the south. The broadcast said Baghdad was under siege and "defended by Republican Guards stationed around President Saddam Hussein's residence."

Arab officials in Kuwait and Bahrain have said Iran has trained and supplied 30,000 Iraqi dissidents chosen from former prisoners of war held by Iran and from families of Iraqi Shiites evicted from the country 10 years ago. Iran has also said it would confiscate about 150 Iraqi planes that sought refuge in Iran in the recent war over Kuwait.

The distinct shift in the Iranian attitude now is that it unites all elements of the country's ruling establishment, including the rarely heard from but highly influential group of religious scholars.

The government's long-held hope for Iraq is the establishment of a Shiite Muslim leadership there. While fundamentalists would presumably be favored, a more moderate Iraqi Shiite government might also be acceptable in Tehran.

With Iran's long and porous borders with Iraq and with tens of thousands of Iraqi dissidents living as refugees in Iran for nearly a decade, Tehran's renewed threats to Iraq take a new and credible dimension.

Saddam's leadership — already isolated in the gulf region, the Arab world, and the world at large — appears now on the ropes with no friends left.

Turkey, a major regional power in the gulf, as well as several important Arab nations including Egypt, Saudi Arabia and Syria, have said they are opposed to dealing with Saddam.

Kuwait revives its banks, introduces new currency

N.Y. Times-News Service

KUWAIT CITY, Kuwait — It still has no water and little electricity or food, but Kuwait revived its banking system on Sunday, introducing a new currency.

Banks reopened for the first time since Iraqi occupation forces shut them down in December. Thousands of people lined up to exchange their old Kuwaiti dinars for crisp new ones and to withdraw a limited amount of money.

Without electricity, the banks services were slow, limited to money exchange and withdrawal. There was no telex, no electronic money transfer and no telephones. The computers were unusable, so all transactions had to be entered by hand.

"It's like going back 20 years," said Mohammed al-Yahya, the manager of the Commercial Bank of Kuwait, the nation's second-largest bank.

The Central Bank is canceling the value of Kuwaiti dinars that were seized from the Central Bank and put into circulation by the Iraqis. The invalid serial numbers were posted Sunday in front of all banks in the city.

All other old dinars can be exchanged for new ones on a one-to-one rate until May 7, when the old dinars become invalid. The new official exchange rate is 3.47 American dollars for one new Kuwaiti dinar.

Although it is severly handicapped without electricity, the Commercial Bank, like many other major banks, was able to open for business because its records had been saved from the Iraqis.

Yahya hid the bank's balance sheets in his home and sent its computer records to London via Syria with an Indian employee, who packed the tapes into the back of a trailer.

The banks also face serious personnel shortages. Only 11 of the Commercial Bank's 35 branches opened on Sunday, with 137 out of 1,300 workers.

Witnesses: Mali troops fire on thousands of protesters

ABIDJAN, Ivory Coast (AP) — Soldiers fired on thousands of prodemocracy protesters in Mali on Sunday, killing at least seven people, then blocked hospitals to stop the wounded from getting help, witnesses said.

However, that country's state radio said President Moussa Traore agreed to release political prisoners and offered other concessions in an appeal for calm.

Government opponents say troops have killed nearly 150 people in three days of protests in Bamako, Mali's capital. State radio reported 34 had died.

"The capital is running with blood," said Papa Coulibaly, an employee at the city's Gabriel Toure Hospital. He was contacted by telephone from the Ivory Coast.

There has been unrest in the West African nation since January. The latest wave of protests broke out Friday, when students began demanding the resignation of Traore.

Traore on Sunday told France-Info radio station he would not step down. He added that he is not against political pluralism and is willing to hold early elections. But he gave no date.

"The army is faithful to me," he said in an interview with the station. "The government will not resign because I am not the elected of the opposition. I am the elected of the people of Mali."

He called the opposition death toll claims "a fantasy."

Later Sunday, Traore met with opposition leaders and agreed to lift the state of emergency and curfew, according to Mali radio. Both sides said all violence should end.

ANC, police clash kills 12, injures 29

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (NYT) — Twelve people were killed and at least 29 wounded Sunday when police clashed with supporters of the African National Congress who had gathered outdoors in the black township of Daveyton, east of Johannesburg.

The casualties included a police sergeant who died in the hospital after being hacked and stabbed with a machete and two policemen who were hurt, one slashed with a machete and the other hit with a traditional wooden club called a knobkerry.

The other victims reportedly were shot by police and included a 12-year-old boy and, by one account, a 9-year-old girl, according to various accounts.

The South African Press Association on Sunday night quoted a doctor as saying 38 people were treated for gunshot and knife wounds at a nearby hospital. Police reported 29 wounded.

The incident seemed certain to inflame existing tensions between residents of black townships and the South African Police, whom many blacks have long regarded as enforcers of apartheid.

"The police were forced to defend themselves," said Maj. Ray Harrold, a spokesman in Pretoria. Another spokesman, Capt. Eugene Opperman, told reporters at the scene Sunday night the police opened fire when they found themselves in "imminent danger when the crowd surged forward."

But a local ANC official, Xolati Nduna, said police surrounded the ANC supporters, who had gathered out of concern about a nearby rally by the rival Inkatha Freedom Party, and had fired tear gas, rubber bullets and shotgun pellets after ordering them to disperse.

The confrontation was the latest in a resurgence of unrest that has shaken townships around Johannesburg. Police reported Sunday that since Friday night, they had found 17 bodies in Alexandra and Tembisa, two townships northeast of Johannesburg affected by the latest wave of strife between rival black factions.

Six more people died and six were wounded when they were attacked early Sunday morning by five men firing AK-47 assault rifles near the Westonaria-Elsburg gold mine west of Johannesburg.

Iraq denounces cease-fire terms

NICOSIA, Cyprus (AP) — Iraq on Sunday denounced U.S. terms for a permanent Gulf War cease-fire, and opposition groups said troops battled anti-government protesters in the streets of Baghdad.

The opposition groups also described renewed fighting in cities of the Shiite Muslim south, where government soldiers earlier appeared to have gained the upper hand.

The rebellion in the south and one in the north by Kurds began after the U.S.-led allies drove Iraqi troops from Kuwait late last month.

A permanent cease-fire has not been signed yet, and the United States says it will not agree to one unless Iraq destroys all its chemical, biological and nuclear weapons-grade materials under U.N. supervision.

The United States also wants Iraq to swear never again to build such weapons and to turn over part of its oil profits to pay for damages caused by Iraq's Aug. 2 invasion of Kuwait and the subsequent war.

The government daily Al-Jumhouriya wrote Sunday that the American demands are aimed at "at usurping Iraq's sovereignty, mortgaging its will and holding its wealth hostage."

The Al-Iraq newspaper accused the United States of trying to "shackle (Iraq's) people with the chains of slavery" and with threatening Iraq's sovereignty.

There was no further word Sunday on the government changes announced a day earlier in a decree signed by President Saddam Hussein.

Saddam shuffled his Cabinet, but kept in place his hard-line ministers of interior and defense to direct the crackdown on dissent. Saddam gave up the job of prime minister but remained as president, and there was no indication he had given up any power.

In a move that appeared an attempt to appease the rebels in the south, Saddam appointed Saadoun Hammadi, a member of the Shiite majority, as prime minister. Saddam is a member of the Sunni Muslim minority.

Dissident groups, meanwhile, claimed that rebellion continued to rock the war-battered country from the Kurdish north to the Shiite south — and in the capital.

State-run Iranian television quoted an Iraqi refugee named Yasin Khalaf as saying dozens of people were killed in recent clashes with security forces in Baghdad. The report said Yasin entered Iran on Sunday.

Tehran Radio said other refugees accused the government of attacking protesters with napalm, phosphorous and poison gas.

That report, like those from Iraq, was impossible to confirm. Few reporters have been able to reach the fighting.

Iranian radio quoted an unidentified opposition official as saying that several rebel groups were positioned around Baghdad in preparation for an attack.

The Supreme Council of the Islamic Revolution in Iraq said in a statement issued in London that there were reports of loyalist tanks heading north toward Baghdad from Amara, apparently to reinforce troops in the capital, "where heavy fighting is taking place."

The council is an umbrella group for Shiite Muslim dissidents.

Most of the reported fighting was far from the capital, however.

Iranian radio said there were demonstrations in the holy cities of Najaf and Karbala, and in Kufa, Mosul and Tikrit, Saddam's hometown.

The Shiite Ad-Dawa party said in a communique issued in Damascus that "a fierce battle" was raging in Karbala, which government troops had earlier recaptured from rebels.

The Iranian radio reported that refugees from the southern cities of Basra, Amara, Nasiriyah and Tanumeh said government forces were using heavy weapons to try to crush unrest there.

It also quoted opposition sources as accusing government troops of forcing people to leave corpses in the streets of cities where loyalist forces had gained control, raising the threat of spreading disease.

Israel issues expulsion orders to 4 Palestinians

JERUSALEM (NYT) — The Israeli military issued expulsion orders against four Palestinians from the Gaza Strip Sunday morning, accusing them of directing and participating in violent acts against Israel.

The deportation order, the first this year, is certain to irritate the United States, which has condemned the practice in the past and is in the midst of a new initiative to encourage Arab-Israeli peace talks.

The deportation order follows several other actions in recent days that seem to suggest that Israel does not intend to alter its behavior in ways suggested by Secretary of State James A. Baker 3rd, who has asked Israel and the Arab countries to stop taking steps likely to provoke each other.

Among the Israeli moves is an announcement by Housing Minister Ariel Sharon of a program for more Jewish settlements in the West Bank.

Explaining the expulsion order Sunday, Israeli officials pointed to a rash of fatal and near-fatal stabbing attacks against Jews by West Bank and Gaza Strip residents since the Persian Gulf war ended.

These attacks suggest that some Palestinians are equally unwilling to show more moderate behavior, as the United States had wanted. But the Palestinians ordered expelled are not accused of involvement with the recent stabbings.

Defense Minister Moshe Arens defended the deportations by saying they were one of the most effective measures available for controlling violence related to the Palestinian uprising in the occupied West Bank and Gaza Strip.

With Sunday's deportation orders, Israel has ordered 69 Palestinians expelled since the intifada began in December 1987.

Even if Washington were to take an understanding view of Sunday's expulsion order, other actions in recent days are not likely to be viewed sympathetically by the Bush administration.

American officials have said they were particularly irritated by remarks last Monday in which Shamir branded the Palestinians who met with Baker while he was here as Palestine Liberation Organization representatives unfit for meetings with the Israeli government.

Then, on Thursday, Housing Minister Ariel Sharon announced a plan to build 13,000 new housing units in West Bank over the next two years.

Speaking from one of the settlements that is to be expanded, Sharon said: "We have speeded up the building of houses here for two reasons. First, we need strategic depth. Second, political dangers have caused us to hurry up."

He would not elaborate but was apparently referring to Baker's initiative.

Future of Texas 'bullet train' rides on hearing

By J. Lynn Lunsford
New York Times News Service

It's only a public hearing, but those who will participate for the next 20 days in debates over the need for a "bullet train" in Texas say its outcome will decide how Texans travel for decades.

On Monday morning in Austin all sides in the controversy over a proposed high-speed rail between Dallas and Houston will get a chance to argue their cases before the Texas High Speed Rail Authority.

"I think we're going to be able to prove that we can build this train without relying on the taxpayers of Texas," said former Lt. Gov. Ben Barnes, who represents a French consortium bidding to build the rail line. "Texas is ready for this technology."

The project, estimated to cost $5.3 billion to $5.7 billion, would be the first high-speed rail project in the United States.

If Barnes and other officials are able to persuade the nine-member rail authority that it is needed, work on a bullet train could begin as early as May. Completion of the first stages could be as early as 1998, according to optimistic estimates; other estimates put the start in 2005.

The hearings, led by Larry Montgomery, a state hearing examiner from Fort Worth, will focus on the economic and environmental aspects of the project. Two European-based groups have bid on the rights to build the system that initially will run 200-mph trains between Houston and Dallas.

Under both proposals, high-speed trains would run every 30 minutes between Dallas and Houston and D/FW Airport. The French train would also serve Fort Worth. A German train would serve San Antonio instead.

But before the hearings are finished, Barnes and representatives of the German consortium also will have to overcome the pursuasive powers of the state's most accomplished corporate underdog — Southwest Airlines Chairman Herb Kelleher.

Kelleher, whose Dallas-based airline depends on lucrative Texas routes, has been fighting the rail proposal since estimates were released saying that the rail would have to steal 60 percent of the Texas intrastate travel market to succeed.

"I don't see any way that 60 percent of the market will decide to take a 200 mph train over a 500 mph airplane," Kelleher said. "That means that somebody else, the taxpayer, is going to have to fork over massive amounts of cash to bail these guys out."

Kelleher has said that a "government-subsidized" train would make it impossible for his airline to compete. He is pushing officials to force the companies to promise they will stand on their own.

According to estimates, a bullet train would take 85 million passengers and $4.6 billion in revenues from Southwest during its first 10 years of operation.

During the same period, Dallas/Fort Worth Airport could be expected to lose 101 million passengers and $5.4 billion in revenue.

"If air is indeed our ocean, it will be substantially polluted and vastly shrunk by high-speed rail," Kelleher said two weeks ago in a debate with Barnes and a representative of the German consortium.

"I don't see any way that 60 percent of the market will decide to take a 200 mph train over a 500 mph airplane.'

— Herb Kelleher, Southwest Airlines chairman

The debate has pitted Kelleher against some of the people who helped make his airline successful — and placed him in the uncomfortable position of being called "the establishment."

In the 1970's, Kelleher relied on Barnes to bulldoze through legislation that would protect Southwest's position at Love Field while the rest of the industry was moving to D/FW.

"I remember very well when Southwest Airlines was fighting to become a carrier that Herb Kelleher was very persistent," Barnes said. "I think he is going to make it difficult for us to take each step."

Southwest Airlines filed suit last month, trying to stop the hearings from taking place. A state district judge declined to stop the hearings, but Southwest still is questioning the constitutionality of the law that established the High Speed Rail Authority.

Barnes called the confrontation between Kelleher and the rail consortiums "unfortunate," because it diverts attention from the project.

"I believe the public is overwhelmingly in support of the concept, but they need to hear what we plan," Barnes said.

Barnes said the French train would not ask for state money, but he refused to rule out federal funding, "especially if it is available."

Hershel Payne, a Fort Worth businessman who sits on the High Speed Rail Authority, said he believes the debates will benefit the state.

"Our No.1 goal is to determine if the project is in the public convenience and necessity," Payne said. "Then, we have to decide if it can be properly financed."

Payne said that while the authority is eager for high-speed rail to come to Texas, the project is not a shoo-in.

"It may very well be that we don't need it right now," he said.

But Bob Neely, executive director of the state rail authority, said he believes the companies will be able to make their case.

"Each company has put up $500,000 as a non-refundable deposit just to bid on this," Neely said. "In addition to that, they've spent millions of their own money to get prepared for this."

During recent weeks, Barnes and San Antonio banker Glen Biggs, who represents the German Texas Fastrac consortium, have been talking to anybody who will listen.

"This project rivals the building of the Houston Ship Channel and D/FW Airport in its magnitude," Biggs said. "It would be historic."

Funeral-home owner sees need for drive-thru window

LANCASTER (AP) — The owner of a North Texas funeral home wants to give his customers something no other funeral parlors in the state has offered — a drive-thru window.

Ray Williams is converting a restaurant into a funeral parlor that will allow motorists to view caskets without leaving their vehicles.

"So many people are offended if they have to go inside and be around people, and this is for them," Williams told the Dallas Times Herald. "It will also benefit those who are in a hurry, or elderly people or people in wheelchairs."

The Texas Funeral Directors Association in Austin says there are no other "drive-thrus" in Texas.

"It is happening in other parts of the country — California, Florida and up north — but this is the first one I've heard of in Texas," said association president Bob Smiley of Corrigan.

"I personally don't like the idea, but we are living in such a hurry-up world that it could be a natural step," Smiley said.

Since the concept still is relatively new, Williams said he will go to California this week to study funeral parlors now using drive-thrus.

'We could put a sign outside saying what time a body would be on view. Or if you wanted to see someone specific, you could use a phone at the window and we would roll the casket up to the window.'

— Ray Williams

"We could put a sign outside saying what time a body would be on view. Or if you wanted to see someone specific, you could use a phone at the window and we would roll the casket up to the window," he said.

The viewing area will include a tilting device to make it easy for motorists to see the body, Williams said.

So far, Williams' proposal has met with little resistance from City Hall. Assistant City Manager Doug Henderson said the only condition put on the project was that the viewing area be screened from passersby.

'Killer' beehive found

MEXICO CITY (AP) — Authorities discovered a hive of dangerous, Africanized bees hanging from a tree in the western part of the city, the newspaper Excelsior reported Sunday.

The U.S. and Mexican governments have a joint program to eradicate the bees, which have killed dozens of people in their slow migration northward from South America.

The bees have been found in 23 states in Mexico since 1984.

Police chief's letter condemns beating

DALLAS (AP) — Police Chief William Rathburn, who became the top Dallas police officer in February after a distinguished career as a deputy chief in Los Angeles, has written an open letter to all Dallas officers condemning the March 3 beating of a black motorist by Los Angeles police.

In the letter, printed in the March 22 issue of the Dallas Police News, Rathburn called the officers' actions an example of "gross criminal misconduct" and said that "physical abuse of any kind cannot and will not be tolerated" here.

Four Los Angeles officers have been charged in the beating of Rodney G. King. A resident of a nearby apartment building videotaped the beating. The video, shown repeatedly on network television, has prompted a federal investigation and spurred calls for Los Angeles Police Chief Daryl Gates to resign. Gates, 64, has vowed not to quit.

Dallas police spokesman Jim Chandler said the chief wrote the letter to share his philosophy on how officers here should conduct themselves. Earlier this month, a copy of the videotape was played for the entire department.

Rathburn also condemned "less overt acts of abuse," noting that "any type of verbal abuse, racial slurs included, cannot and will not be tolerated."

The chief concluded: "Please know that this organization's commitment to basic decency starts at the top, in my office. I pledge to lead by example — to treat everyone with dignity and respect and to be fair and impartial in all my actions. I simply ask that you do the same."

Business lays low on debate over funding

By Evan Ramstad

DALLAS (AP) — Texas businesses have taken great interest in the state's classrooms in recent years but are playing a quiet role in the current school finance debate.

Lobbying by business has been spotty on ways to erase the spending gap between rich and poor school districts, reflecting, in part, the confusion and complexity of the problem.

The Legislature must pass an equalization bill by April 1 to meet a Supreme Court order. Legislators received a compromise bill Thursday from a conference committee that shifts hundreds of millions of dollars in property taxes from rich districts to poor ones and raises state spending on education by at least $1.4 billion.

Like many Texans, business leaders believed a sweeping reform law in 1984 would improve the state's educational performance and its economic attractiveness.

When it became clear that the changes weren't enough, business leaders created mentor, vocational help and other programs, viewing their role in Texas' schools as an investment in the future work force.

"One of the things that makes me most optimistic that we're going to restructure schools is the change in attitude by the business community since 1984," said Tom Luce, a Dallas attorney and 1990 GOP gubernatorial candidate who helped craft the education reform law known as House Bill 72.

"Gradually, every year, they have realized the education system is having a direct impact on their business. Now they're getting involved because it's in their self-interest," Luce said.

If such activity gave the business community more muscle in Austin on school matters, it hasn't been flexed in the finance debate.

That's because of confusion over the effects of the bill and the widespread disbelief that equalized financing will improve the quality of Texas education, lobbyists say.

"We view this quality problem as a long-range thing that's not going to be solved once a school finance plan is put in place," said Dane Harris, president of the Texas Association of Business.

"Simply reallocating money or putting more money into the system is not going to address the central problem in education," he said.

"We've got to be convinced that ... we are spending our dollars as wisely as possible," said Larry Zilner, president of the Texas State Chamber of Commerce.

The Legislature's plan aims for per-student annual spending that is about $800 below the U.S. mean of $4,900 but will likely cost Texans millions in new taxes and ultimately force a restructuring of the state's tax code.

Business leaders interviewed last week said they want to be sure inefficiencies are filtered from the school system before spending more money on it.

"There's sort of a dichotomy here," said John Moore, education professor at Trinity University. "On the one hand, most people believe it is scandalous that some Texas school districts spend $6,500 per student per year and some can only spend $2,400. I think that means they're generally for equity.

"But there's not one person I know in the state's business leadership that believes we need to spend more money on schools," he said.

'We've got to be convinced that ... we are spending our dollars as wisely as possible.'

— Larry Zilner, president Texas State Chamber of Commerce

Moore said they don't believe additional money would make to teachers, where it counts.

Darwin Winick of Alvin, chairman of the coordinating committee of the Texas Business and Education Coalition, said the Legislature should have addressed the entire tax structure and education reform at once but was prevented from doing so by the court deadline.

"You can't really change education by tinkering at the fringe," Winick said.

Harris said he fears the Legislature's so-called Robin Hood approach will ultimately spur "major upheaval" and perhaps even a tax revolt.

"I think there's going to be a massive awakening by local property owners and school patrons of what has happened to them," Harris said.

The core disagreement in the school funding debate is how spending affects educational quality. Those who believe it makes little difference point to school systems that spend little and turn out bright students.

But wealthy districts that will lose funds under the Legislature's plan, including top performers like Richardson and Alamo Heights, are asking business leaders to help fight it.

In the Dallas suburb of Farmers Branch, Mayor Dave Blair sent a letter to every business owner in town urging them to contact legislators to oppose the bill, saying it will "destroy one of the finest school districts in the state."

Blair told business owners that their school property tax could rise 25 percent to 33 percent while the Carrollton-Farmers Branch Independent School District would lose millions of dollars.

"The business community is going to have to make up its mind — is this a solution?" he said.

Meanwhile, assistance to schools from business seems likely to grow.

The 1,000-member Texas Education and Business Coalition is the largest effort to promote such ties. Exxon U.S.A. and IBM have loaned executives to help it start business-school partnerships in every Texas school system.

Grass fire mars firefighters cook-off

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — At least 100 cars were damaged by fire when dry grass ignited Sunday afternoon at a cookoff sponsored by the San Antonio Firefighters Association, authorities said.

There were no initial reports of injuries, though Bexar County Fire Marshal dispatcher John Longoria said several people were treated for heat exhaustion.

The blaze was reported about 3:45 p.m. during a menudo cookoff at the Hidden Valley Recreational Park in southwest Bexar County. Hundreds of people were attending the annual event when the fire began.

The blaze was brought under control shortly after 5:30 p.m., fire officials said.

Thick, black smoke caused by burning rubber billowed from the scene, a witness said.

Investigators are uncertain what sparked the fire, but observers speculated that someone had thrown a cigarette onto the dry grass, where many cars were parked in rows.

Damage estimates were not immediately available.

"We still have people working on it. There are a lot of cars to process," Longoria said.

Texas judge's Huey Long play opens in New York City

MARSHALL, Texas (AP) — An East Texas judge's one-man play about the life and times of former Louisiana Governor Huey P. Long opened off-Broadway Sunday in New York City.

"I'm excited. New York is the mecca for plays," said Texas Court of Appeals Justice Ben Grant. "But I'm also a little leery, trying to brace myself for what the critics might say up there. They're pretty hard on plays because they have a lot of good shows come through there."

Grant first wrote a version of "The Kingfish" 15 years ago. Larry King, who wrote the Broadway and movie version of "The Best Little Whorehouse in Texas," collaborated with Grant on the later version now being used in the off-Broadway show.

The Kingfish, which has already been staged in Marshall, New Orleans, and Washington, D.C., will play at the 299-seat John Houseman Theater near several Broadway houses. Grant said he and his wife planned to attend the opening performance Sunday.

Grant said that New Orleans attorney and accountant Michel Claudet put up approximately $500,000 to finance the show. Grant said the show must have more than 100 sold-out performances to cover advertising and promotion costs and to break even. The producer is Perry Martin.

"The Kingfish" stars John McConnell, a stage actor with several small movie roles to his credit. Grant said McConnell turned down a major role in an Oliver Stone movie to continue his role as Long.

"I think people are interested in government and I think Huey Long is the classic dictator, demagogue, in extreme times," said Grant. "I think there is a lot of interest in him and I guess we'll soon see how long this run lasts in New York."

One of Grant's favorite tales about Long is the time he wore green pajamas to greet a German admiral.

"That was considered pretty bizarre," Grant said. "That was not too long before he was assassinated. But he had become so powerful and had gotten so much attention from the media that he could get by with things like that."

Grant first began hearing stories about Long while growing up. He became interested in writing the play after reading Long's book "Every Man a King."

"This was a colorful time, not only in Louisiana political history, but in the United States," Grant said.

Cafe fed travelers in Route 66's prime

SHAMROCK, Texas (AP) — Its high domes have lost the green and red neon that once shone for miles, but the U Drop Inn Cafe will forever remain a landmark both on Route 66 and in the hearts of Shamrock residents.

During the late 1930s, the U Drop Inn Cafe was the only place on Route 66 between Oklahoma City and Amarillo to stop and eat, said Bebe Nunn, original owner of the cafe.

Mrs. Nunn's father had owned the precious lot on the well-traveled highway U.S. 83. Later, when Route 66 passed through, the cafe was right on the intersection of the two major highways.

"They don't cross anywhere in the world but right here at the light in front of the cafe," she said. "And both of them are cross-country highways."

Mrs. Nunn's father would not sell the land because he knew Route 66 was coming and he owned all four corners of the intersection it and Highway 83 would create. Plus, he had the only gas station on its intersection, she said.

Mrs. Nunn said that when her father died, Amarillo businessman James Tindall told her husband John that he would build him any kind of building he wanted on the land if he could get her mother to sell it.

"So my husband picked up an old rusty nail in our yard and drew up just what he wanted," Nunn said. "It took a long time to build it. It is made of polished tile and is just as pretty today as the day we opened it in 1936."

When Route 66 came through in 1937, the cafe sometimes had more business than it could handle, she said.

"Our business got a lot bigger after 66 went through," she said. "But we had all we could handle."

In 1938, during Shamrock's first St. Patrick's Day festival, Mrs. Nunn said the cafe had so many people wanting to eat that many of them could not be seated.

"In '38, you didn't have all these little places to eat. You had to come here," she said. "We had 20 people in the kitchen. We fed more people out the back door in a paper sack than we could fit in the cafe."

The only eating establishment for hundreds of miles along Route 66, the U Drop Inn Cafe, which could be seen for miles at night, set the mouths of weary travelers a-watering.

"Back in the '30s, neon was all the go. Our sign and tower was all bordered in green and red neon," Mrs. Nunn said. "It shined so bright that you could see it from way back past McLean."

The name, which originated from a 10-year-old Shamrock resident, and the unusual architectural style of the building have never clouded in people's memories.

After selling the cafe and then repurchasing it in the '50s, Mrs. Nunn and her husband changed its name to Nunn's Cafe, because they were afraid the old owners had abused the U Drop Inn name.

Mrs. Nunn said she was pleasantly surprised several years ago when a man who had bought the cafe called her and asked if he could change its name back to the U Drop Inn Cafe.

"He was a little bitty kid when we opened it up in '36," she said. "He came back through here and bought it. He called me up and said he'd been all over the world and had people show him match covers from the U Drop Inn Cafe. He said they would always ask if it was still here."

Although the cafe might have been only a "good place to stop and eat" to tourists, it was a heartfelt home to many Shamrock residents. The Nunns soon became Aunt Bebe and Uncle John or simply Mom and Dad to Shamrock teens.

"My husband would let the kids come and have dances there with the nickelodeon on the weekends, and then he would take them home when it was over," she said.

Angler changed leader's goals

CORPUS CHRISTI, Texas (AP) — Five months on a fishing boat and a pep talk from a man he never saw again persuaded 13-year-old Raul Yzaguirre to seek more than most young Hispanics could hope for in 1952.

"I found out cockfighting was an organized industry in Corpus Christi," said Yzaguirre, who had quit school and run away from his San Juan home. He now is president and chief executive officer of the National Council of La Raza in Washington, D.C.,a Hispanic civil-rights organization with 117 affiliates in 32 states.

On a recent visit to Corpus Christi, Yzaguirre recalled his youth.

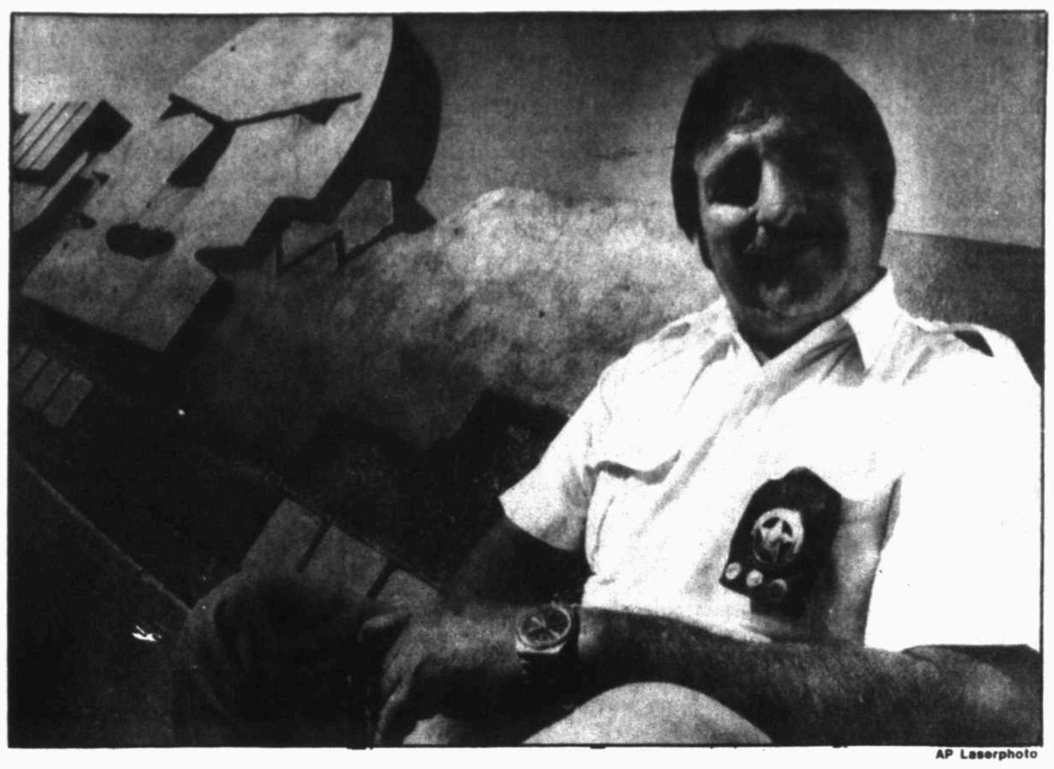

"I was going to bars with money in my pocket," Yzaguirre said. His employer wanted him to learn to drive the fishing boat.

Meanwhile, fellow worker Jose Rodriguez, a man in his late 20s, told young Raul Yzaguirre about the American GI Forum, a Hispanic civil-rights organization that still was in its formative years.

Yzaguirre said he decided that being a fisherman for the rest of his life wasn't enough, that he wanted to do more for himself and his community. He returned home, where he finished school while helping organize a chapter of the American GI Forum — and became a political activist at age 14.

"It's a parable for all of us," Yzaguirre said. "People need to make a commitment to something, to have a sense of what they want to accomplish in life."

Having said that, Yzaguirre also speaks of how difficult it is for Hispanic children, and their parents, to make sense of the American educational system. It is that sector of American society, he said, in which Hispanics are performing least effectively.

La Raza activist-turned peace officer Arturo Gonzales sits with the Crystal City monument to the political party that rocked south Texas.

"The assumption of the educational system is that we all enter with the same background, so we're all taught the same thing in the same way," Yzaguirre said. "The system assumes monolingualism," he said, consequently, bilingual Hispanic children, and especially those who speak little English, very often fall behind early in their academic careers and never catch up, dropping out of school as soon as they can, legally.

Reforming the system for the sake of Hispanic students would reform the system for everyone, Yzaguirre said.

For example, he said, schools should make more use of video and computer technology to provide individual instruction that would allow students to progress at their own pace without the stigma of academic failure, he said.

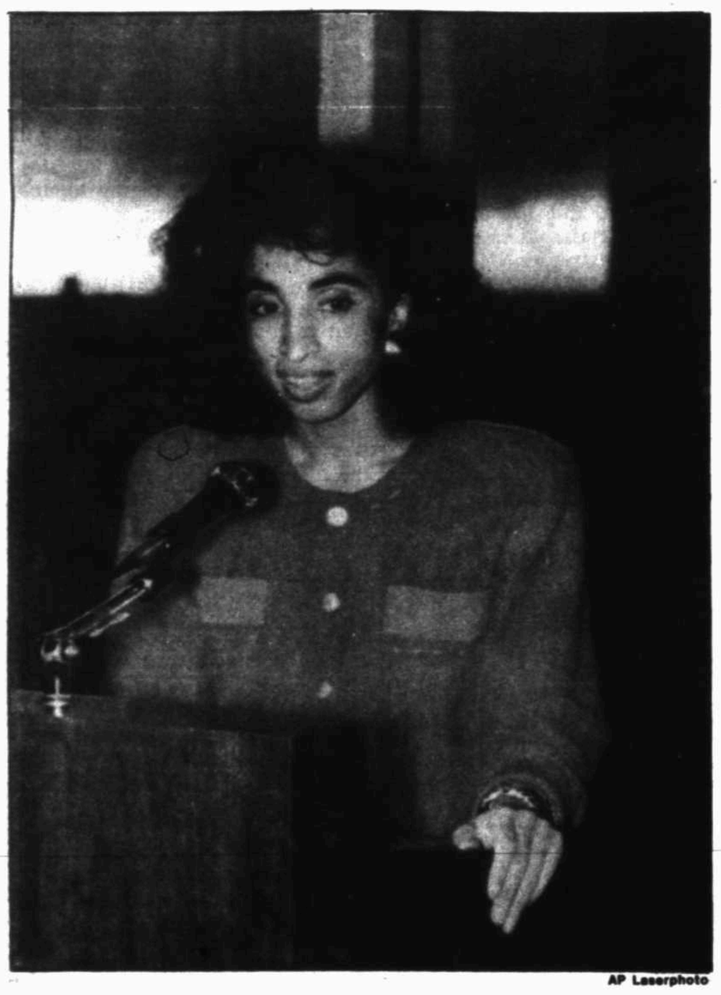

The role of teachers should change, Yzaguirre said, from being imparters of information to skilled "diagnosticians of needs," tutors who would tailor individual curricula to match students' capabilities.

Moreover, he said, teachers should expect more from Hispanic students.

La Raza studies have shown that nothing has a more direct effect on student performance than teacher expectations, Yzaguirre said. "If a teacher expects kids to learn, kids learn," he said.

Education reform also needs to reach into Hispanic homes, Yzaguirre said. Hispanic "parents do impart the value that education is important," he said, but many are not equipped themselves to participate in the educational process as helpers. Consequently, said Yzaguirre, "they do not hold the system accountable." But such accountability is important, he said.

"We have to make the system work for us, not against us," he said. "We need to demystify education," Yzaguirre said. " It's not an absolute science."

Alison Leland talks to a group of students from Texas A&M in Houston. She is the first black woman to serve on the A&M board of regents.

Alison Leland picks up the pieces

HOUSTON (AP) — As Alison Leland pauses to reflect on how her life has changed since her husband's death, she suggests it might be easier to determine what is the same.

"I live in the same house," she says, laughing at her inability to find many constants. "Some of my life remains the same, but much of it is very different."

It is a new life she didn't choose, but was thrust upon her when U.S. Rep. Mickey Leland died in a plane crash in Africa in 1989 — leaving her a widow at 30 with one young son and pregnant with their second child.

The second child unexpectedly turned out to be twin boys who were born prematurely in January 1990 while she was on trip to Atlanta to accept an award for her late husband.

Besides being mother of three boys, she has a busy career as a vice president for Lehman Brothers, an investment banking firm, that often keeps her working late and takes her out of town.

Then there are still honors to accept for her husband, speaking engagements and charity events. She also remains involved in politics, campaigning last fall for Texas Gov. Ann Richards.

And Thursday, Mrs. Leland got a hefty task, when she began a six-year term on the Texas A&M University System Board of Regents. She is the first black woman to serve on the nine-member board that governs the eight-school A&M system.

Mrs. Leland seems at ease with the many changes she has packed into her life in such a short time.

"I think I'm evolving into becoming Alison Leland," she said, sitting in her glass office high atop a downtown Houston skyscraper. "It's an evolution. I was happy to be Mrs. Mickey Leland. I'm comfortable to be just Alison Leland now."

The old life ended abruptly Aug. 7, 1989 when her husband and 15 others were killed while on a hunger-relief mission in Ethiopia.

Mrs. Leland stayed secluded at the couple's Houston home during a week-long search for her husband. At a memorial service in Houston, she appeared stunned and fragile.

But amid the many tributes to her husband and the questions about his replacement, she emerged into the spotlight that her husband had held so many times.

"Alison has shown a remarkable ability to keep her poise and her elegance in the face of a crisis that most people couldn't dream of being able to cope with," said Democratic state Sen. Rodney Ellis, a longtime friend of the Lelands. "I think many people have grown to admire and respect her ability to pick up the pieces and carry on."

Mrs. Leland said she was surprised when she got a telephone call one Sunday morning from Richards asking her if she wanted to be an A&M regent.

"I've had time, subsequently, to realize the magnitude of the appointment and how important it is to Texans," said Mrs. Leland, a Boston native who attended Spelman College in Atlanta and Georgetown Law School.

"I think A&M has come a long way from the days when they were an all-male, predominantly military institution. They've come a long way into the 90s, and I'm happy to be part of their progress into the next century," she said.

"As far as being the first black woman to serve on their board . . . I think that she (Richards) had a very particular purpose in mind in selecting me. She realized it was time for some diversity on the board," she said.

"But I also have a background in finance, I have a law degree. I will also be the youngest regent, and I think that brings something to bear as well. I've had an opportunity to establish a career in business, but it doesn't seem so long ago that I was a student. I think that I will be interested in what students are thinking and doing, and I think that I can be someone who doesn't seem so far removed from them on the board.

"I'm not really approaching this with a set agenda. I'm approaching it with a lot of curiosity," she said.

In a recent speech to a group of about 60 A&M students attending a leadership conference in Houston, she said she also should be able to provide "an outsider's perspective" on the board.

The students seemed impressed with their new regent, whose composure is offset by her candor and a hearty laugh that often slips out in her conversations.

"I think she's incredible, almost intimidating. She's incredibly poised," said Kathy Kirkpatrick, an English graduate student who chaired the conference. "She's incredibly accomplished.

"It was time to find a black woman, or just a woman, and someone who is not in the good ole' boy network. She definitely fits the bill. I think she's very qualified," Ms. Kirkpatrick added.

Although Mrs. Leland is neither the first black nor the first woman to serve on the board, it's been almost 70 years since a woman was on the board and about 10 years since a black served.

Soldier pulled over, gets good news

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP) — Returning Arkansas National Guardsman Eric Marsh was thinking the worst when the state police pulled him out of his convoy in Malvern.

"I didn't have any indication at all what was going on," he said Saturday. "I thought my wife had had a wreck."

Then he learned he was becoming a father.

"It's a blessing from God," Marsh, 32, of Maumelle said from his wife's hospital room at Baptist Medical Center in Little Rock.

Marsh is a member of the guard's 212th Signal Battalion, which served in support of Operation Desert Storm. Members returned Saturday from Fort Hood, Texas, where they had been training.

Marsh arrived at the hospital shortly after his son's birth Saturday morning. The baby was named Eric Steffon Marsh.

Spur denies fued

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — San Antonio forward Terry Cummings said Sunday he is not in a feud with Spurs coach Larry Brown, contrary to a report on NBC's NBA pregame show.

"I don't remember commenting on anything like that. I don't think that's the thing we need to focus any attention on," Cummings said. "Coach is coach. I don't want it taken out of context with a negative comment."

Cummings was quoted as saying Brown was the most negative coach he had ever seen and suggested the Spurs were winning in spite of Brown.

Brown downplayed Cummings' comments, attributing the outburst to frustration from injuries.

Table set for Final Four

■ Duke and North Carolina finalize this year's entries in the NCAA men's basketball semifinals.

Associated Press

North Carolina and Duke, whose campuses are just a long jog apart, will be sharing a new neighborhood next weekend in Indianapolis.

The Atlantic Coast Conference rivals advanced to the Final Four on Sunday, giving the league half of the NCAA semifinal field for the second straight year.

North Carolina held off tenacious Temple 75-72 for the East Regional championship, ending Dean Smith's longest absence from the Final Four and making him the first coach to get there in four different decades.

Duke defeated St. John's 78-61 for the Midwest title, joining UCLA and Cincinnati as the only schools to make four consecutive Final Four appearances.

The victories set up intriguing semifinal matchups next Saturday at the Hoosier Dome.

The Blue Devils (30-7) will play top-ranked UNLV (34-0) in a rematch of last year's championship game, a 103-73 rout by the Runnin' Rebels. North Carolina (29-5) meets Kansas (26-7) in a pupil-teacher showdown between Dean Smith and former assistant Roy Williams.

The Final Four also had two ACC teams last year, Duke and Georgia Tech.

King Rice hit four free throws in the last 22 seconds and Temple's Mark Macon missed a potential, game-tying 3-pointer with four seconds left, putting North Carolina in the Final Four for the first time since winning the national title in 1982.

"Maybe now I won't get any letters asking why I hadn't been to the Final Four," said Smith, who lost four consecutive regional finals after winning his first seven. "I can hardly remember the last time we made it. I'm pleased for the seniors who haven't been there before."

Although his team lost, Macon wasn't haunted by his humiliating 6-for-29 performance in the 1988 East Regional final, which took place on the same court in East Rutherford, N.J.

The senior guard scored 31 points on 12-of-23 shooting and earned regional MVP honors. His fourth 3-pointer, with nine seconds left, cut North Carolina's lead to 73-72. But Rice then hit two free throws and Macon misfired on his final 3-point attempt.

"I've never guarded anyone other than Rodney Monroe that has so much confidence in his shot," said Rick Fox, who shadowed Macon on his final drive. "He's definitely one of the best shooting guards in the country."

Smith moved into a tie with UCLA's John Wooden for most career victories in the NCAA tournament. Smith's tourney record is 47-21; Wooden was 47-18.

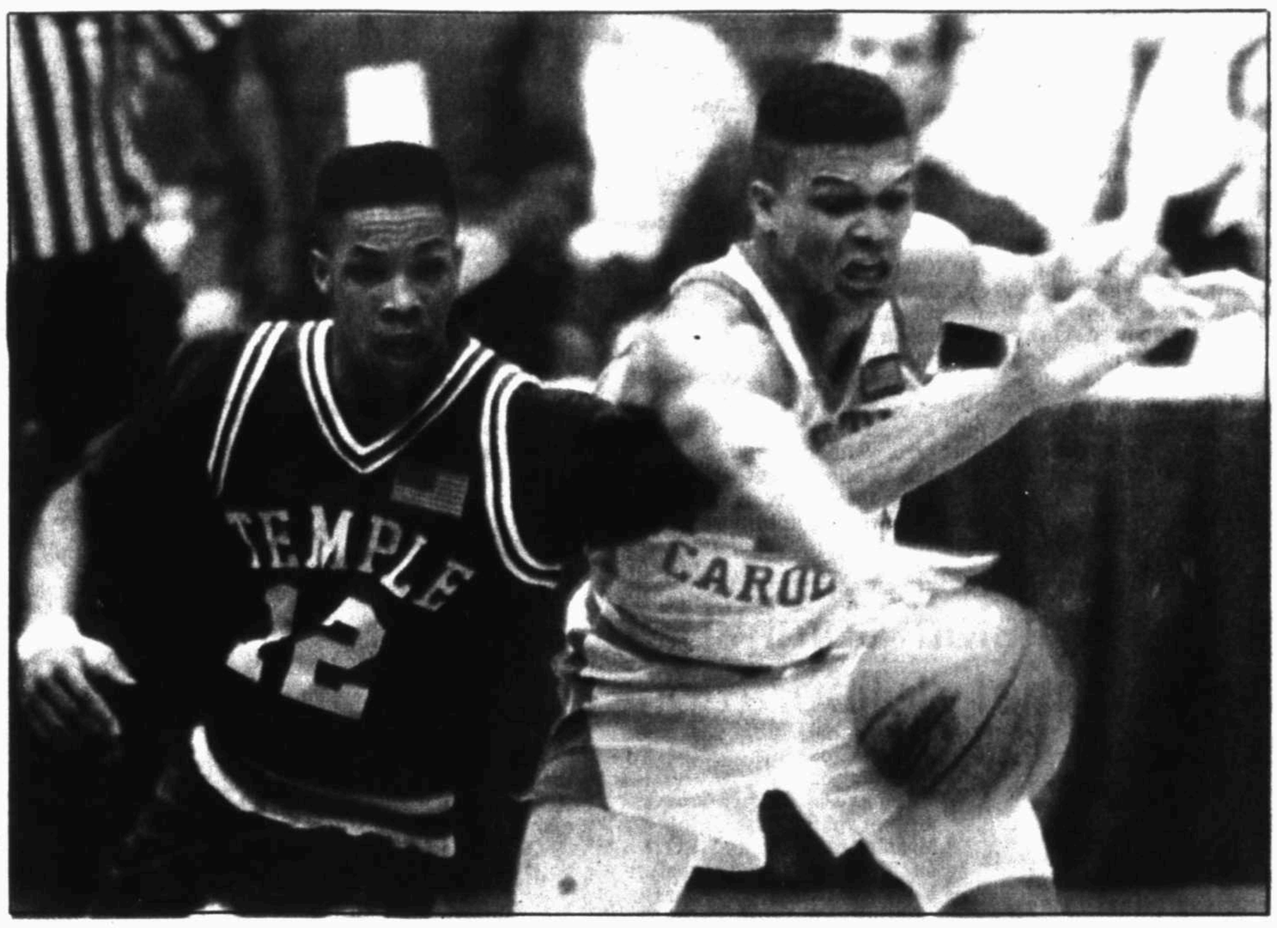

"We've been close before, getting to the final eight and final 16 every year," Rice said. "You have to be a little lucky to get here."

Fox and Hubert Davis led North Carolina with 19 points each. Mik Gilgore had 18 for Temple (24-10).

A 12-3 run by Temple pulled the Owls within two points with 11:47 remaining, but the Tar Heels countered with a 9-3 spurt to extend the lead to 61-53.

Temple, trying to join 11th-seeded LSU in 1986 as the only double-digit seeds to reach the Final Four, stayed close down

Defense-minded Spurs lower boom on Pistons

Associated Press

NBA Roundup

SAN ANTONIO — Detroit, which has won two straight NBA titles by stressing defense, saw some remarkable defense by the San Antonio Spurs Sunday.

Holding the Pistons to season lows for points and field goal percentage, the Spurs scored an 85-78 victory, led by 25 points from David Robinson.

"They played great defense," Detroit coach Chuck Daly said.

Detroit, which got 22 points from Joe Dumars and 19 from James Edwards, was a dismal 33 of 98 from the field for 33.7 percent.

The Spurs, winners of a season-high seven in a row at home, were almost as ineffective, hitting only 37.5 percent.

But San Antonio held Detroit without a field goal during seven minutes of the fourth quarter.

"This wasn't our type of game," Spurs guard Willie Anderson said. "But we went to the half court offense and got the job done."

The Spurs led 68-66 with 9:39 to play when Robinson triggered the key run of the game, scoring three points as San Antonio went on an 8-2 spurt.

Down 76-68 with 5:43 left, Detroit came no closer than five the rest of the way. From the 7:19 mark of the final period until the final four-tenths of a second, the Pistons failed to score a field goal.

"We felt good for the first three quarters," Dumars said. "The tempo was in our favor. But we weren't able to convert when we needed it."

San Antonio, which got 16 points apiece from Rod Strickland and Terry Cummings, tied the score 38-38 on a Cummings jumper at the first-half buzzer.

The score still was tied with two minutes left in the third quarter, before San Antonio scored the final six points of the period and the first two of the fourth to go up 66-58.

Three straight Mark Aguirre field goals brought Detroit within 66-64 with 10:07 left. But Detroit made only three more field goals the rest of the Big Eight rivals clash in semifinals of NIT

■ Oklahoma will try to maintain its grip on Colorado, and Massachusetts takes on Stanford for the rights to the National Invitational Tournament title game.

Associated Press

NEW YORK — Although Oklahoma has beaten Colorado 28 straight times, Sooners coach Billy Tubbs doesn't think the streak will affect their semifinal game in the National Invitation Tournament.

"It doesn't matter if you have seven girls in a row, there's a 50-50 chance the next one will be a boy," Tubbs says.

The Big Eight rivals will meet for the third time this season on Monday night at Madison Square Garden. Oklahoma won the two regular-season games, 113-97 in Norman and 69-68 in Boulder.

"You can throw out the first two games because we're both playing better now," Colorado coach Joe Harrington says. "We know each other pretty well, so there shouldn't be any surprises."

Massachusetts (20-11) plays Stanford (18-13) in the other NIT semifinal. The Minutemen barely made it to the final four, winning three tournament games by a total of nine points. In the last round, they hit a 3-pointer at the buzzer to force overtime and went on to beat Siena 82-80.

"My team hasn't slept since that game," Massachusetts coach John Calipari said. "They're afraid if they wake up, the dream will be over."

Stanford finished in a five-way tie for fifth place in the Pac-10, but has looked impressive in its NIT victories over Houston, Wisconsin and Southern Illinois.

"We've had a rollercoaster year," coach Mike Montgomery says. "It's been a bit of an odyssey for us, but the ending is nice."

Colorado (18-13) hasn't beaten Oklahoma (19-14) since 1982, but this will be their first meeting outside Big Eight territory.

"This will be like a neutral court," Tubbs says. "It will be really neat playing them without Big Eight refs."

In his first year at Colorado, Harrington has led the Buffaloes to their first postseason appearance since the 1969 NCAA tournament. Colorado was runner-up in the inaugural NIT in 1938 and won the tournament in 1940, but hasn't been back since.

"We're very, very happy to be here," Harrington says. "Our fans have really gone crazy. We've had a lot of success with our football team, but this is something new for us in basketball."

Colorado has a potent inside-outside combination in center Shaun Vandiver and guard Stevie Wise. Both seniors average about 20 points, while Vandiver also led the Big Eight in rebounding with 10 per game.

Barcelona routs Knights in torrential rain, 19-7

Associated Press

World Football

BARCELONA, Spain — Pro football's first trans-Atlantic game turned into a water torture Sunday as Barcelona ignored torrential rain to defeat New York-New Jersey 19-7 in the World League of American Football.

The Dragons scored their points in the second quarter despite a downpour and a strong, cold wind. Scott Erney passed 43 yards for one touchdown and ran six yards for another.

The 19,223 fans huddled under umbrellas and clustered in seats covered by the second deck of the Olympic Stadium.

The intense rain forced organizers to move the press box at the last minute and led team officials to offer free tickets to an April 14 game against Orlando to all fans who braved the elements.

The level of play was significantly higher than that of a night earlier in Germany, where the London Monarchs defeated the Frankfurt Galaxy in the WLAF's inaugural game.

Erney, who played at Rutgers, beat out Notre Dame's Tony Rice for the starting job with Barcelona and solidified his place on Sunday.

After Lydell Carr had given the Dragons a 6-0 lead early in the second quarter on a 1-yard run, Erney connected on a 43-yard touchdown pass to Gene Taylor after a Barcelona interception.

Another interception led to the third touchdown, a 6-yard run by Erney, who completed nine of his 18 passes for 122 yards.

Ojeda leads Dodgers past former team

Associated Press

Bob Ojeda, almost a lock for the starting rotation, pitched six strong innings and Juan Samuel drove in four runs, leading the Los Angeles Dodgers past the Atlanta Braves 8-1 Sunday.

Dodger right fielder Darryl Strawberry, who had been out since March 11 with a strained right hamstring muscle, returned to the lineup. Strawberry went 1-for-3 with a third-inning single off Atlanta left-hander Tony Castillo.

"My first two at-bats I was a little too anxious," Strawberry said. "My last at-bat, I was real aggressive. It helped get my focus back where it should be. I didn't really feel any problems when I run. I'm looking pretty good out there and feeling pretty good. I've very pleased with the progress I've made. I feel like I'm healthy. The key is working to keep the leg strong."

Ojeda (2-0) allowed one run and five hits in six innings, struck out seven and walked one. Ojeda, acquired from the New York Mets in the Hubie Brooks trade, was not guaranteed a place in the rotation at the start of the exhibition season.

Paul Marak, who had been pitching well, gave up eight runs and 10 hits in 2 2-3 innings and hit hit two batters.

Woosnam's first American PGA title comes in playoff

Associated Press

NEW ORLEANS — For a moment, Ian Woosnam said, he had visions of a replay from last year.

"I thought the same thing was going to happen to me that happened to Greg (Norman)," he said.

But the 5-foot, 4½-inch Welshman ducked Jim Hallet and went on to gain his first American PGA title in a two-hole sudden death playoff Sunday.

Woosnam, a relatively unknown quantity to the casual American golf fan but a bone fide world-class player of the first rank, said the victory should help him toward his ultimate goal — recognition as the best player in the game.

"They say you can't have recognition as the best until you win in America," he said after accomplishing that feat.

"They say you can't be the best in the world until you win a major."

And that's his next goal.

"I don't care which one it is, I just want to win a major," said Woosnam, who has done almost everything else.

But the husky little man, a one-time amateur boxer, was pressed to the limit to blunt Hallet's determined, turn-around comeback.

Hallet, not yet a winner in a four-season American career, blew a three-stroke lead, then came from five strokes back. He capped the revival with a 4-foot birdie putt on the final hole to gain a share of the lead and force the playoff.

After both he and Woosnam parred the first extra hole, Hallet dumped his tee shot into the left bunker on the par-3 17th hole, the second of the playoff.

NL expansion committee begins final deliberations

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The National League expansion committee visits Buffalo, N.Y., Washington and Denver this week, the last step before it begins its final stage of deliberations.

The committee already has visited the three Florida finalists — Miami, Orlando and St. Petersburg, and after this week's visits it will attempt to rank the cities.

"The way I see it, Washington is one of the sites, and the other five cities are scrambling for the other one," said Washington developer John Akridge, who heads the capital's group. "Give me a fact you want to compare, and I can't find one where Washington doesn't come out on top."

The four-man expansion committee visits Washington on Monday morning and Buffalo on Monday afternoon before looking at Denver's facilities on Tuesday.

Washington believes it has an edge because its population of 3.7 million is much larger than the other finalists, and its television market is the seventh-largest in the nation. The Washington area's average household income of $48,038 is the highest in the nation.

"The support has been just overwhelming," said Akridge, who hopes to have season ticket deposits from 30,000 fans by May 1.

Ammaccapane earns first title

LPGA

PHOENIX — Danielle Ammaccapane was a winner for the first time in her 4-year LPGA career, shooting a 4-under-par 69 to take the $550,000 Standard Register tournament by two strokes Sunday over Barb Bunkowsky and Meg Mallon.

Ammaccapane, who started the final round with a one-shot lead over Bunkowsky, Michelle McGann and Colleen Walker, finished 9-under at 283. She collected $82,500.

Mallon shot 67 and Bunkowsky 70 in the final round at the 6,514-yard Moon Valley Country Club course. Walker shot 73 to finish at 288.

McGann carded a 74 for a 289. Defending champion Pat Bradley, playing on her 40th birthday, shot 71 to finish 8-over.

The previous best finishes for Ammaccapane, a Phoenix native and former Arizona State standout, were two second-place ties last year.

She tapped in a 1-foot par putt on the 18th hole, pumped her right fist in victory and then choked back tears.

Birdie on final hole lifts Chi Chi

Associated Press

INDIAN WELLS, Calif. — Chi Chi Rodriguez made a 15-foot birdie putt from just off the green on the final hole to win by a stroke Sunday in the Vintage Invitational and take over as the leading money winner among PGA Seniors.

On the strength of a final-round 69, 3 under par at the 6,800-yard Vintage Country Club, Rodriguez collected $75,000 from a $500,000 purse to take the lead with earnings of $229,169. He passed Lee Trevino, a non-factor as the defending champion of the tournament.

Trevino carded a 71 to finish 4-under in a tie for 12th place. He earned $10,772, and fell to second on the money list with $205,112.

"The putt at 18 broke 6 inches," Rodriguez said after finishing the 54-hole event with a 10-under-par 206. "I wasn't going to dog it. It would have gone past three or four feet if it would have missed.

"I made the same putt earlier in the week, so I knew the putt."

Don January and Mike Hill tied for second place. Hill closed with a 68, January with a 67.

Bob Charles, who shot 70, tied Gibby Gilbert (69), Bobby Nichols (68), Terry Dill (72) and Jimmy Powell (72) for fourth. They finished at 209.

Dill and Powell entered the final round tied with Rodriguez at 7-under.

Rodriguez saved par on the par-3 17th hole after his tee shot went into the back bunker. His sand shot stopped within 3 feet of the hole.

"At 17, I hit the wrong club into the back trap," he said. "But then I hit one of the best sand shots of my life.'

the stretch but could never overtake North Carolina.

At Pontiac, Mich., Bobby Hurley scored 20 points and ran the Duke offense brilliantly as the Blue Devils advanced to the Final Four for the fifth time in six years.

"I see a killer," St. John's coach Lou Carnesecca said. "He makes the other guys look better. He hits the 3s; he's smart."

The Blue Devils will be making their ninth overall trip to the national semis, but they've never gone all the way. That's a record for Final Four futility.

UCLA made 10 straight Final Four appearances from 1967-76, winning eight times, and Cincinnati was there five straight years from 1959-63, winning twice.

Duke raced to a 40-27 halftime lead Sunday and was never threatened. The Blue Devils are 28-0 this season when leading at halftime.

"If we have a big lead, we don't want to let the other team get its confidence by getting it into single digits," said Hurley, who was named the regional's outstanding player.

Hurley made 6 of 10 shots from the field, including 4 of 7 from 3-point range. The 6-foot sophomore also had four assists and four steals with only one turnover and even led his team in rebounding with seven.

Christian Laettner scored 19 points for Duke, while Malik Sealy got 19 for St. John's (23-9).

St. John's was plagued by poor shooting, injury and foul trouble in the first half and never recovered.

"I don't need to tell you that we didn't play very well," Carnesecca said. "It was in no small measure that Duke contributed to that. They are an excellent club. It is no accident that in five of the last six years, they have gone to the Final Four."

St. John's point guard Jason Buchanan had problems guarding Hurley, and picked up his third foul with 12 minutes left in the first half. He sat for the rest of the half as the Redmen made 16 of their 26 turnovers.

Robert Werdann, the Redmen's center, played little after the first eight minutes due to a leg injury, finishing with four points and seven rebounds.

way.

"At the right time of the game, we picked up the pace and put them away," Cummings said.

It was not a pretty game to watch.

"Nobody had confidence in their shots," San Antonio coach Larry Brown said.

ANSWERS TO WEEKLY BRIDGE QUIZ

Q.1—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠AKQ95 ♡A1062 ◇7 ♣Q87
The bidding has proceeded:

South	West	North	East
1 ♠	Pass	2 ♠	Pass

What action do you take?
A.—There is a possibility of game—if North holds the right cards. A re-raise to three spades does nothing for the cause because it does not reveal the location of partner's values. The key to the hand is North's club holding. Make a game try of three clubs. North must value that suit alone in deciding whether to accept the game-try.

Q.2—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠876 ♡Q5 ◇10862 ♣AJ103
The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
1 ♠	Pass	2 ♠	Pass
3 ♣	Pass	?

What do you bid now?
A.—This is the companion hand to the above. Partner has asked about your club holding, and it could not be much better. Bid four spades. Note that the combined hands give excellent play for that contract.

Q.3—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠106543 ♡962 ◇6 ♣A1065
Partner opens the bidding with one diamond. What action do you take?
A.—Most experts hate to pass partner's minor-suit opening bid when they hold a five-card major. With an ace and a singleton, even though it's in opener's suit, a one spade response is justified.

Q.4—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠106543 ♡962 ◇6 ♣A1065
The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
1 ◇	Pass	1 ♠	Pass
2 ♡	Pass	?

What action do you take?
A.—In the modern style, partner's reverse is forcing either to two no trump or three of opener's first-bid suit. As responder, your first duty is to tell opener you have a five-card suit, since his reverse could be based on support for your suit. Bid two spades.

Q.5—Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠Q53 ♡1074 ◇AKQ103 ♣62
The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
1 ♡	Pass	2 ◇	Pass
3 ♣	Pass	?

What do you bid now?
A.—Partner's high reverse shows a very good hand, and the first order of business is to tell him that your side has a playable spot. Show your three-card support for partner's first-bid suit. The quality of your diamonds can be shown later should partner evince interest in slam.

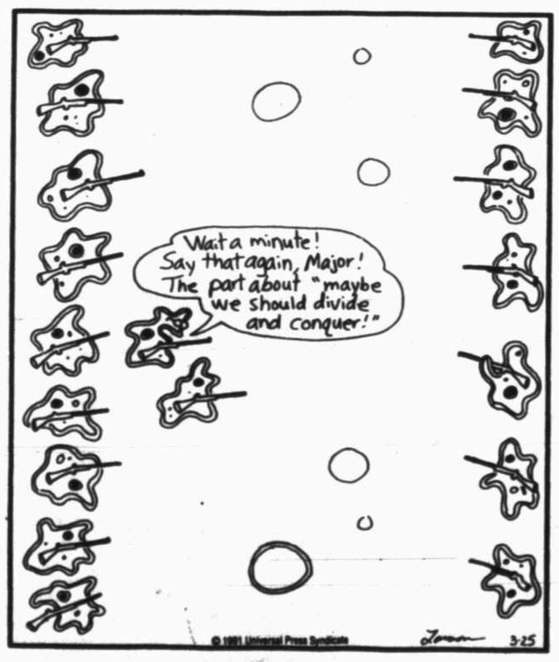

Q.6—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠874 ♡6 ◇AQ62 ♣KJ763
The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
1 ♣	Dbl	?

What do you bid now?
A.—You have the high-card count for a redouble, but that action would be pointless, since you have no intention of doubling an opposing major-suit contract. Bid one diamond now to advise partner of your side strength, then support clubs vigorously at your next turn.

One of world's wealthiest men makes 3 new friends

CHARLOTTESVILLE, Va. (AP) — Britain's most famous little patient and his working class parents have thanked America's richest man for arranging the brain surgery that saved the boy's life.

Craig Shergold, an 11-year old from suburban London, received a record 33 million get-well cards after he was diagnosed as having an incurable brain tumor.

Then, John Kluge paid Craig's expenses for treatment in this country. Kluge is the founder of Metromedia and was listed by Forbes magazine last fall as the country's richest man, with an estimated worth of $5.2 billion.

Kluge

University of Virginia neurosurgeons had hoped to extend Craig's life up to a year with a risky operation March 1. They instead were able to remove nearly all of the egg-sized tumor, which turned out to be benign.

Kluge and the Shergolds met for the first time Saturday.

"This really is a miracle," Craig's mother, Marion, told Kluge. "And you are our guardian angel."

Craig's father, Ernie Shergold, 51, said he didn't have words to describe his thankfulness.

Craig told Kluge, "I can't say anything big enough. I'd kiss you all over if I could." The 76-year-old businessman stood up, leaned over, and they kissed.

Kluge gave Craig his lucky quarter — it has heads on both sides. Craig gave Kluge a framed photo of himself posing as a boxer and a copy of the 1991 Guinness Book of World Records with the listing of him and his cards.

Craig tires easily. His speech is slow and his left limbs are weak. But neurosurgeon Neal Kassell said he is recovering "far better than anticipated." It will take about six months to determine if Craig's speech and coordination will return to normal.

NEW YORK (AP) — Nineteen-year-old violin virtuoso Midori — a child prodigy who began playing at age 3 — still shuns pop music, but she loves shopping with her own credit card and eating dessert.

Midori, who is Japanese but lives in New York, got the credit card for her 18th birthday, she in an interview published Sunday in The New York Times Magazine.

Her mother writes the checks to pay the credit card bills, but the money comes from Midori's $700,000-a-year income.

"My mom takes care of the bills and I take care of the fees," she said.

Midori's mother, Setsu Goto, was a violin teacher and chamber-music player when Midori began studying the instrument. But Midori says her mother "didn't force me to play the violin. She only taught me because I wanted to learn."

Midori, known professionally just by her first name, debuted at Carnegie Hall last October.

"I feel so comfortable onstage," she said. "I feel safest. The best part of giving concerts is just being out there and playing, nothing else."

PASADENA, Calif. (AP) — Science fiction writer Ray Bradbury says pursuing special interests, even rather unusual ones, can pay off in the long run.

Bradbury

"I fell in love with dinosaurs and science fiction movies" as a youth, Bradbury told students at the National Conference on Undergraduate Research at the California Institute of Technology.

"When I was 18, I met a young man who was building dinosaurs in his garage," he said Friday. "God, what a great friend to have."

Years later, Bradbury's friend, Ray Herryhausen, became a well-known science fiction filmmaker who asked Bradbury to write a screenplay for him about dinosaurs.

Bradbury said that screenplay later caught the attention of director John Huston, who offered Bradbury the job of writing a screenplay based on the novel "Moby Dick."

"If I hadn't loved dinosaurs, I wouldn't have gotten the job," said the author of "The Martian Chronicles" and "I Sing the Body Electric."

LA CROSSE, Wis. (AP) — Astronaut Mark Lee says a space shuttle flight next year in which he and his wife will become the first married couple to fly together in space will be just another work assignment to him.

"We don't think it's a big deal, although it's been exciting and fun," said Lee, a native of nearby Viroqua. "The media will make more of a big deal out of it. We look at it as two people just doing their job."

Lee and Jan Davis are scheduled as payload specialists on the Aug. 3, 1992, mission of the new space shuttle Endeavour. It will be the first joint mission between the United States and Japan and will feature experiments in life sciences and materials.

Lee said he does not expect to see much of his wife during the flight since they will be on separate 12-hour shifts.

"We'll probably just pass each other," Lee said. "When I'm working, she'll be sleeping and we will not see much of each other."

Prices retreat

NEW YORK (AP) — Oil prices retreated Friday, led by a late sell-off in gasoline that capped a generally strong week in the energy market.

"I don't think anybody was in the mood to make any brave new trades," said Stephanie Rzasa, an oil broker at Dean Witter Reynolds Inc.

Volume was extremely light, reflecting a lack of market-moving news.

Unleaded gasoline for delivery in April settled at 71.18 cents per gallon, down 1.89 cents for the day but still up 1.39 cents for the week at the New York Mercantile Exchange.

Crude oil showed more modest losses for the day, but it also finished higher for the week.

West Texas Intermediate for delivery in May settled at $20.10 per barrel, down 39 cents. For the week, crude for next-month delivery was up 34 cents per barrel.

"We're flirting and seem to be continuing to come back to that $20 area for crude oil," said Thomas P. Blakeslee, an energy analyst with Pegasus Econometric Group Inc., in Hoboken, N.J. 'It's still a market lacking direction as the fundamentals give mixed feelings about where the price of oil should be."

Natural gas closed lower. For delivery in May, it settled at $1.385, down 1.2 cents per 1,000 cubic feet. Natural gas for next-month delivery was down .1 cent for the week.

Automaker cuts

DETROIT (AP) — Cost-cutting among the nation's Big Three automakers is escalating as General Motors Corp. and the United Auto Workers union discuss how to implement an early retirement system for some hourly workers.

GM, Ford Motor Co. and Chrysler Corp. are trimming billions of dollars from annual expenses, targeting nearly every aspect of their businesses.

Ford and Chrysler each have announced plans to cut costs by $3 billion by next year, while GM is continuing a program that has removed around $13 billion in costs since 1987.

Top defender

WASHINGTON (AP) — McDonnell Douglas Corp., a maker of the Tomahawk cruise missiles that opened the war against Iraq, was the top defense contractor in fiscal 1990 with $8.2 billion in awards.

In all, the Pentagon awarded $130.8 billion in major contracts in fiscal 1990, up $1.8 billion from the previous year, the Defense Department said in a report released Friday.

Soviet oil industry given dim outlook

■ Experts say the Soviet oil industry, the world's largest, is declining rapidly and Western assistance may not be enough to turn it around.

N.Y. Times News Service

WASHINGTON — The Soviet Union's oil industry is in a steep, continuing decline, and the most likely remedy — an infusion of Western capital and technology that both Soviet officials and U.S. oil companies had hoped for — is beginning to seem out of reach, according to experts at a conference Friday at Georgetown University's School of Foreign Service.

The reason: political uncertainty within the country.

The Soviet oil industry is still the world's largest, about 18 percent ahead of Saudi Arabia's, and it is both vital to the nation's economic stability and important to the world energy balance.

But production is declining rapidly because of cuts in investment in recent years, backward technology and the Soviet Union's general economic breakdown, said experts at the conference, which was sponsored by Georgetown and Salomon Brothers.

Several high-ranking Soviet oil and gas officials told potential investors that with new capital and technology they could raise production.

But they, as well as Western analysts, painted a confused picture on such crucial questions as who owns the mineral resources, who has jurisdiction over joint ventures or outside investment and what taxes will be applied.

For example, Ronald Benson, the American director of White Nights Oil & Gas Joint Venture, which says it is the first U.S.-Soviet joint drilling venture, said that his group had raised $80 million and had agreed to take over three oilfields in western Siberia, now producing 20,000 barrels a day.

The group, expecting to expand output to 150,000 barrels and to have new drilling rigs shipped in by May or June, has already spent between $10 million and $15 million.

In January, however, the central government announced that under a law passed last year, oil exports this yea would be taxed at 40 percent.

Benson, who is also vice president of Phibro Energy Inc., a Salomon subsidiary, said that if the the tax stood, drilling would be canceled.

He added: "You couldn't go to a bank anywhere in the world today and get money to do work like this in the Soviet Union. You have to be ready to take risks."

An executive of a major U.S. oil company that has been talking with the Soviets for months called the 40 percent tax "a real show-stopper."

The executive, who spoke on condition that his company not be identified, said that at that tax level, or even a much smaller tax that was put in place after deals had been signed, there would probably be no joint ventures at all.

Tuboscope, a Houston-based company that makes pipeline-inspection equipment, has experience in the Soviet Union but is finding it harder to work there now.

Chrysler gets new credit line

N.Y. Times News Service

DETROIT — Chrysler Corp. agreed with a consortium of 38 banks Friday on a new $1.75 billion revolving credit through the end of 1993. The new credit agreement is smaller than the $2.64 billion credit agreement it replaces, but it constitutes an important financial safety net for the No. 3 auto maker, nevertheless.

Thomas Capo, Chrysler's assistant treasurer, said there was no current plan to borrow under the new credit line. "Depending on future business we may or may not draw on the line," he added.

Chrysler said the new credit's covenants are less restrictive than the older one's, which means Chrysler may draw money from it in harder financial circumstances.

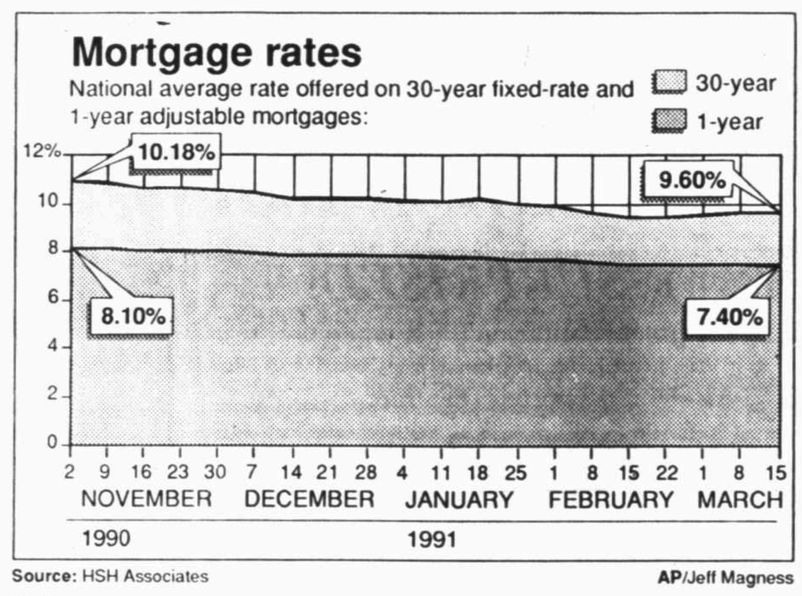

The banks "and holders of other senior Chrysler obligations" that were not specified, however, will be entitled to claim 11 Chrysler manufacturing plants and other assets as security if the company borrows more than $500 million. Under the previous agreement the banks could not have claimed Chrysler's assets as collateral.

The credit agreement should reassure suppliers, lenders and others that the banking community is confident of Chrysler's ability to weather current hard times in the industry. Chrysler has been cutting $3 billion from its cost structure and trying to sell an equity stake in its Chrysler Financial Corp. subsidiary.

Capo said the banks and the auto maker wanted to change their previous credit line because of "a much tougher environment for the auto industry and the banking industry." Banks have been under regulatory pressure to reduce the size of loans that could be judged as risky.

Offering an example of a covenant that had been made more liberal, Capo said Chrysler's borrowings might now constitute up to 110 percent of the company's net worth, compared with a previous limit of up to 100 percent of the net worth. Banks routinely attach tests of financial soundness to loan agreements to make sure they will be repaid, even if a company's condition deteriorates.

Capo said Chrysler's current borrowings were much less than 100 percent of the company's net worth, although he said he could not be more specific.

Hearings on trade pact set

■ U.S.-Mexico trade pact getting serious attention as studies begin.

WASHINGTON (AP) — The U.S. International Trade Commission said Tuesday it will hold hearings here and in Chicago and Scottsdale, Ariz., on the effects of the proposed U.S.-Mexico free-trade agreement.

The pact would eliminate tariffs and other trade restraints between the two nations. The ITC hearing is intended to determine the economic effect of such action on U.S. consumers, labor and industry.

Organized labor, some apparel and agricultural interests oppose the agreement because of a perceived threat to U.S. jobs and products. Supporters say it would expand business opportunities and make both nations more competitive worldwide.

The hearings will be held in Scottsdale on April 8, Chicago on April 10 and in Washington on April 12.

Dollar's rally shakes Wall Street

■ Experts differ greatly on how the dollar's rally will affect the stock and bond markets.

By Chet Currier

NEW YORK (AP) — A rally by the dollar in foreign-exchange markets has sent many Wall Street analysts back to their computer terminals to recalculate outlooks for the stock and bond markets.

After swooning for much of the past five years in the face of such muscular foreign currencies as the German mark and Japanese yen, the dollar has lately put on an impressive show of strength.

Late last week it was quoted at around 1.64 marks, up from a post-World War II low of about 1.44 in early February. Over the same span, it has risen from about 125 yen to about 138.

Most observers agree that the resurgence has been inspired by the overwhelming victory U.S.-led forces achieved in the Gulf War, and accompanying talk of a recovery from recession in this country.

But there is no such unanimity over what the rally means for stock and bond prices. Whenever they look at the behavior of the dollar in the currency markets, it seems, security analysts see a coin with two sides.

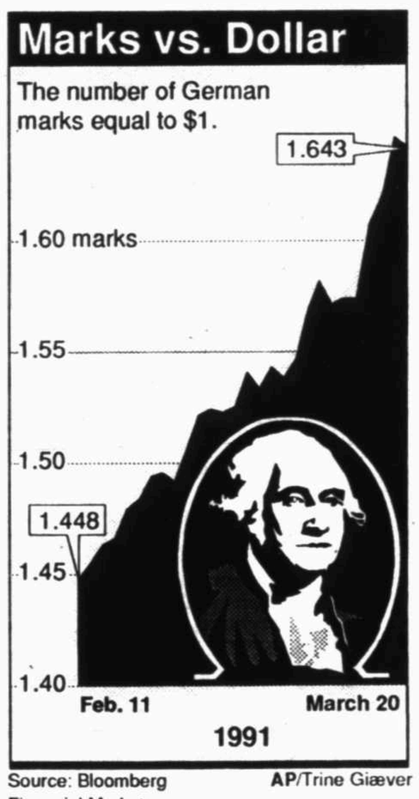

"In and of itself, appreciation of the dollar would be a negative for many United States companies because it worsens their competitive position in world markets," say market-watchers at Merrill Lynch & Co.

"But the circumstances that give rise to appeciation of the dollar — more favorable interest-rate and economic-growth differentials and a more favorable political climate — can benefit the United States."

In particular, analysts note, the U.S. economy seems to have worked its way through most of the recession that began in 1990. At least the beginnings of recovery are widely forecast by mid-1991.

Germany and Japan, by contrast, are believed to be in the early stages of economic slowdowns.

COMPUTER NOTES

Computer network is GEnie of information

By Paul H. Pause'

No, you don't need a magic lamp. You do need a modem, though. (Come to think of it, that may not be a bad 20th century equivalent.)

Pause'

GEnie is the General Electric Network for Information Exchange. It is one of the five major telecommunications networks you can subscribe to, and, I think, close to the best of the bunch.

Through these networks, you can connect your PC to huge, remote computer systems and access vast amounts of information. As Alfred Glossbrenner, author of The Complete Handbook of Personal Computer Communications, puts it: "There is no faster, more effective way to improve your productivity, expand your life's horizons, or multiply your social and business opportunities — and have fun doing it - than computer communications."

While many of the services the networks offer are similar, variations in the 'look and feel' of each system, the rate structure, and the total number of features available, add up to big differences between the various networks.

GEnie offers as much as any of them, and a lot more than most.

With GEnie's excellent electronic mail (E-mail) service you can instantly send and receive E-mail all over the world. With GEnie's travel services, you can plan a trip and make your flight reservations from your PC's keyboard. You can check stock quotes and place orders day or night. You can also access the Dow Jones News/Retrieval Service, the world's leading online financial information system. Or, have fun in the games section, some of which actually let you compete with other players online.

Check the latest news 24 hours a day. GEnie's NewsGrid is tapped into UPI, Reuters, AP, and five foreign news agencies. NewsGrid includes more than 100 financial and US Government statistics and economic indicators (including spot crude-oil prices), weather information, and sports. You can set up a personalized clipping service to automatically search for news of particular items of interest, and have it waiting for you each time you log on.

Through GEnie, you can access support conferences — called RoundTables — run by major hardware and software manufacturers. Having trouble getting Quatro Pro to print to your laser printer? Leave a message on the Borland RoundTable. There are RoundTable conferences available for Amiga, Apple, Atari, Commodore, IBM and compatibles, Macintosh, and Tandy computers. They also host regular online meetings — Real Time Conferences — with experts to help you get the most out of your hardware and software.

Other RoundTables (RTs) are available for business and hobby interests. These RTs are mutual aid and support societies, each an online club with electronic bulletin boards for exchanging messages and libraries full of interesting software and files. Topics are as diverse as travel information, education, medicine, genealogy, real estate, and desktop publishing. There are RTs for lawyers, scuba divers, writers, small- and home-business owners, photographers, pilots, and sailors.

You can shop on GEnie and get discount prices on brand-name merchandise. GEnie's online Shopping Mall offers selections from a constantly growing collection of shops and services. This is the ultimate in shop-at-home convenience. You'll find Sears and Tiffany's, as well as Godiva Chocolatier, Long Distance Roses, and Amish Crafts.

Do you have a hard time thinking of just the right gifts to give? Well, for you GEnie offers a section called GiftQuick, which features specially selected gift-suggestions by various merchants. Under "Gifts for Special Ladies," for example, you might find crystal bud vases, chocolate specialty items, or even an Alaska Blueberry Muffin Mix.

What would you think if every article in a major, multivolume encyclopedia was just a few keystrokes away? GEnie's

SOVIETS: Hurt by political uncertainty

(From 6C)

Robert Lahr, its president, said that because of the uncertainties, it is planning to limit its work to subcontracting for a major company that would be paid in oil, to simplify payment.

Others predicted failure for foreign investment.

Dr. Stanislav Shatalin, author of the now-rejected 500-day plan for transformation of the Soviet economy and a former adviser to President Mikhail S. Gorbachev, said that under the current conditions, "if I was a banker I would not invest a single cent in our economy."

The Soviet Union is backing away from a free-market system, he asserted.

Jeffery Burt, a lawyer with Arnold & Porter in Washington, said that companies would be wise not to invest much until they had approvals in hand, from as many layers of government as they could assemble.

"The exit strategy may be more important than the entrance strategy," he added.

John Blaney, economics counselor of the U.S. embassy in Moscow, described doing business in the Soviet Union as "almost like a three-dimensional chess game, where each level has different rules and different pieces, and every once in a while, on any level, all the rules change."

Investors seemed to be souring, too.

Rick Woltman, an analyst at ASB Capital Management, a Washington firm that manages $9 billion, said: "The potential is hyped. It's dangerous and problematic."

Despite the gloom, top Soviet officials maintained that with some new capital and technology, they could work wonders in their troubled industry.

Rantik Margulov, the first deputy chairman of the Bureau of Fuel and Power of the U.S.S.R. Council of Ministers, said that the Soviet oil industry was "entering a new century with a large portion of unsolved technical, ecological, economic and political questions."

To obtain the needed oil, he said, oil executives would have to "concentrate the economic and technical resources of several countries."

Akif Djabarov, general director of Gazneft Azerbajian, the republic's oil and gas producing enterprise, said oil reserves were vast but deeper than the 10,000 feet to which his company could drill.

Also, more oil could be recovered from older fields if 4,000 wells could be renovated and air compressor stations built, he said, an impossibility with the resources in Azerbaijian, where the price of oil produced is artificially low.

Although the health of the Soviet industry has been poor for some time, Western experts said they could not tell how bad because some of the restive republics have ceased reporting data.

Earlier this week, Pravda reported that Gorbachev had said that crude oil exports would be be only half what was originally planned.

Experts at the conference said, however, that much of what the Soviets export is oil products, not crude, and it was already clear that exports were falling.

Robert E. Ebel, vice president of the Enserch Corporation, a Dallas-based energy, engineering and construction company, put exports at some 3.1 million barrels a day last year, down from 4.1 million barrels two years earlier.

Airline woes trouble pension agency

N.Y. Times News Service

The airline industry's crumbling finances, highlighted by Continental's announcement on Thursday of a $2.25 billion fourth-quarter loss, have become the top concern of the federal pension insurance agency, says the head of the agency.

The Pension Benefit Guaranty Corp., which insures the private pension plans of 40 million Americans, faces more than $1 billion in potential losses if failing airlines like Continental and Pan American do not recover, said James B. Lockhart III, the organization's executive director, on Friday.

The exact amount could be less if the agency manages to recover large amounts from the liquidation of bankrupt carriers.

But it could also be much larger, because the agency is still relying on information from 1989 and has not yet received companies' filings for 1990.

USAir was the only leading airline with all of its pension liabilities fully met in 1989, but has just reported that its pension fund had a $235 million deficit by the end of 1990.

A falling stock market last year made it difficult for managers to keep pension fund assets growing as quickly as liabilities.

Eastern Airlines, Pan Am and Continental have all filed for Chapter 11 bankruptcy protection, and had unfunded pension liabilities totaling about $1.6 billion at the end of 1989.

The agency has guaranteed $1.26 billion of these benefits, and has already set aside several hundred million dollars to cover expected losses from the Eastern and Pan Am bankruptcies, Lockhart said in an interview.

He declined to provide the exact amounts set aside, saying he did not want to disclose how much the agency expected to collect in bankruptcy proceedings.

If another major carrier fails this year, the agency may be forced to ask Congress to raise the premiums it charges, Lockhart said.

He added that it was unlikely that the agency, which is supposed to be self-supporting, would be obliged to ask Congress for cash.

(STORY CAN END HERE. OPTIONAL ADD FOLLOWS)

Lockhart called on financially stumbling Trans World Airlines to top up its pension plan with part of any money it may receive from the planned sale of its London routes. The airline did not comment.

Pension plans become underfunded when companies increase benefits or overestimate the rate at which pension fund assets grow.

They can also become underfunded when retirements increase, either because of layoffs or an aging work force.

With a few exceptions, airlines are not eager to discuss unfunded pension plans.

Northwest Airlines, for example, said it was not interested in providing figures on its pension problems, for which the pension agency has already accumulated a potential liability of $50 million by the end of 1988, the last year for which the agency has received information.

UAL Corp., the parent of United Airlines, said it had three pension plans that were overfunded by a total of $354 million and two pension plans, for its ground employees and managers, that were underfunded by a total of $188 million.

It is not legal to move money from overfunded plans to underfunded ones.

Joseph Hopkins, a spokesman for UAL, said the company had no immediate plans to change its pension fund contributions.

Most of the $2.25 billion loss in the fourth quarter at Continental Airlines Holdings consisted of one-time charges.

These included $300 million for a contribution to the federally managed trust fund that has assumed responsibility for the benefits of 50,000 employees of Eastern, a subsidiary of Continental Airlines Holdings that stopped flying on Jan. 18.

Continental Airlines Holdings made a special accounting entry but did not actually pay the $300 million to the pension fund because the company is bankrupt.

The pension agency's charges for pension plans that failed or were about to fail soared to $928.1 million in 1990 from $163.2 million in 1989.

It collected $659 million in premiums from the pension plans it covers.

First Seismic buys software from Soviets

HOUSTON (AP) — Soviet scientists will begin helping American drilling companies electronically search for oil with the aid of a Houston energy company.

The Soviet Academy of Sciences signed a preliminary agreement with First Seismic Corp. of Houston to market a computer software package of mathematical equations and formulas designed to help Western energy companies.

First Seismic officials say the formulas interpret raw geophysical and seismic data, which help drilling companies pinpoint the location of underground crude.

"Their thinking is leading edge," said First Seismic President Rogers E. Beall, who spent a week in Siberia earlier this year to review the Soviet seismic program. "They have just been stuck in a system that applies their thinking much slower than in the West."

Beall said his company will broker the information in the West for the Soviet academy. The local firm opened an office in Moscow last month to handle the new business and Soviet officials arrived in Houston Monday to begin negotiations with First Seismic.

The academy, like many of its counterparts in the Eastern Bloc, is starved for Western-style technology, officials say. The scientists hope the alliance not only will provide a forum for their work, but also spark more enterprise activities.

Beall said even though he has not yet shown the Soviet algorithms to American energy companies, he is banking on their becoming a hot property in the oil patch.

"They are giving us equations that would take us five years and $500,000 to develop," Beall said. "It has never crossed my mind that companies in the West will not want this information."

In a twist on conventional U.S.-Soviet joint ventures, the think tank has asked to be paid for the data in computer equipment instead of cash, Beall said.

U.S. computer sales to the Soviet Union were banned until 1989, when a thaw in superpower relations cleared the sale of some desktop machines.

RALLY: Will have good, bad impact on businesses

(From 6C)

"Investor confidence in the United States and the dollar has rebounded," says Wright Investors' Service, a Bridgeport, Conn., money-management firm. "The dollar may be in for a period of volatility, but fundamentally it appears to be set on a rising path."

In theory, changes in the dollar's foreign-exchange standing can have complicated and pervasive effects on economic growth, inflation and corporate profits.

Earnings of U.S. companies that do extensive business overseas, for example, can be pinched when foreign currencies lose value relative to the dollar.

But perhaps the key issue to most participants in stock and bond trading is the potential impact of the dollar's ups and downs on interest rates in this country.

Lately, analysts say, interest rates on U.S. bonds have been growing more attractive to international investors by comparison with yields in Germany and Japan.

A rising dollar, furthermore, stands to attract foreign investors to bonds in this country by enhancing the return they can realize when their results are translated into their local currencies.

"Private foreign investors tend to increase their purchases of Treasury securities as the dollar appreciates," says Jack Lavery, Merrill Lynch's director of global securities research.

"In the current environment, a strong dollar should help to limit the rise in interest rates that would come with a stronger economy, by attracting non-United States capital flows."

If the credit markets get extra support from overseas investors, analysts add, that improves the options open to the Federal Reserve Board as it tries to manage money flows through the economy.

Says Wright: "The stronger dollar gives the Federal Reserve greater leeway to lower U.S. interest rates — which is what the latest economic data indicate it ought to do."

War isn't over for everyone

By Peter Applebome
N.Y. Times News Service

SOUTHFIELD, Mich. — News comes in slivers — an unexpected fax, a letter forwarded by a Jordanian cab driver, a telephone call from a neighbor who heard something third hand about whether a neighborhood in Baghdad survived the bombings.

For the 60,000 Iraqi Christians, or Chaldeans, who live in the Detroit area, the war in the Persian Gulf was not bloodless, and it is not over. For them and other Iraqi-Americans, the most immediate problem is an inability to learn the fate of relatives in a country that, as a United Nations survey put it, has just undergone a "near apocalyptic" bombardment.

"At the least, people need to know who is still alive and who is dead," said the Rev. Manuel Shammo Boji, priest of the Mother of God Chaldean Catholic Church in this Detroit suburb. "If people died, they need to mourn the dead. Those are very primary needs. You can see the sorrows on their faces every day."

After the war began, Chaldeans here, the nation's largest Iraqi community, formed an organization, Victims of War, which has raised $250,000 for medical supplies for the people of Iraq.

Chaldeans in Europe have helped forward the first large shipment of mail from Iraq, which provided more good news than bad, said Amir Denha, publisher of the Chaldean Detroit Times. But getting information from Iraq remains a tortuous process.

There is still no telephone service or mail coming in or out of Iraq, where basic services like electricity and water have largely been destroyed in major cities.

"When it started, I started to drink and smoke," said Ron Gabbara, a real estate salesman who has three brothers, a sister and many other relatives in Iraq. "I never drank before in my life. I could not sleep at night. I stayed up all night watching the television. You wish you could do something, but you can't. You realize it's not in your hands."

The center of the effort to get medicine into and news out of Iraq is the Victims of War office on the second floor of a two-story suburban office building.

On the wall are news clippings about life in Iraq. One quotes a doctor talking about amputations of children's limbs done without anesthetic and deaths from infections because there were no antibiotics. There is a poem written by a Chaldean woman in Detroit for her nephew in Baghdad contrasting what the war meant for Americans and for Iraqis.

"In sheer terror, I watched them light up the Christmas tree and the Fourth of July fireworks they described as the bombing of Baghdad," the poem begins. "As I fought the tears that burned my soul harsher than my cheeks, I thought of you."

After a month of negotiations, a delegation of three American Chaldeans has been granted permission to take to Iraq medicine and 3,000 letters requesting information about friends and relatives. Members of Victims of War say they hope it signals a recognition by the American government of the great human needs in Iraq.

"President Bush has said that he had no quarrel with the people of Iraq," said Nahil Antone, a lawyer for the group. "But the reality is this war has had tragic and incredibly devastating consequences on the people of Iraq.

"I am grateful that Americans are receiving their loved ones and that there weren't high casualties, but I would hope that the American people would go beyond that and see to it that Iraq is not left to bleed to death."

Chaldeans, Catholics who originally lived in the far southern part of Iraq known in ancient times as Chaldea, account for 600,000 of the 18 million people in Iraq.

Chaldeans began to immigrate to the United States on a large scale in the late 1960s when political unrest spread in the Arab world. Besides the 60,000 Chaldeans here, there are 15,000 of them in other parts of the country.

Chaldeans have become a prominent part of life in Detroit. They own virtually all the small grocery stores and small food and liquor stores known as party stores in the city. There is a separate newspaper, The Chaldean Detroit Times, and there are four Chaldean churches.

'President Bush has said that he had no quarrel with the people of Iraq. But the reality is this war has had tragic and incredibly devastating consequences on the people of Iraq.'

— Nahil Antone, lawyer for Michigan-based Victims of War

Members of Victims of War insist that the effort is an apolitical effort to help stave off disaster in Iraq. Reports by the United, Nations the World Health Organization and UNICEF have cited shortages of food and medicine and the growing threat of famine and epidemic.

Estimates of civilian and military deaths range from 25,000 to more than 150,000, and the toll is rising as fighting continues in Iraq. Because of Iraq's widespread military draft, most Chaldeans in Detroit have male relatives in the Iraqi army.

"I never heard of a painless war, and this certainly was not," said Yvonne E. Nona, one of a dozen Chaldean women who founded Victims of War. "These people were not nomads. They were civilized city people, and all of a sudden everything around them was destroyed. I don't think think has sunk in for the average American."

Everyday, the mail and telephone lines at the group's office bring dozens of black and white forms in English and Arabic reading "A Message to Relatives in Iraq."

There have been traditional Chaldean funeral Masses for those reported dead.

"We heard the priest died at the Chaldean church in Mosul; then we heard, no, it was in Telkaif," said Denha, the publisher of The Chaldean Detroit Times. "Now we believe both are O.K."

Some Chaldeans blame Iraq's president, Saddam Hussein, for the war that led to the destruction of his country.

"I feel angry about the Iraqi government," said Shoki Konja, who hosts a Chaldean radio program called "Chaldean Youth Voice. "They had the opportunity to pull out of Kuwait and save the country, and by not doing it, look what the country has to suffer."

More common is a condemnation of the Bush administration's conduct of a war that many say could have been avoided and need not have resulted in the devastation of Iraq.

"Children and their families, many of which are my immediate relatives are being deprived of adequate medicine, clean water and other basic necessities of life, while having their city and homes bathe in overflowing sewage systems, so as to become victims of your drunken power," wrote Virgean Arabo in an open letter to President Bush in the Chalden Detroit Times headlined "When My New Homeland Murders My Motherland."

"Hurray to you, Mr. Bush," the letter said. "You have claimed power over the poor, the weak and the innocent. So much for being the leader of a superpower."

Still, most Chaldeans know that Iraq's future and their own efforts to learn the fate of their relatives depend largely on the United States.

"We have to separate the Iraqi people from the government of Iraq, especially now," Denha said. "Here we are the world's superpower. We are like the father to the world now. We have to look at the civilians, people who are innocent, through different glasses as human beings who need help."

NOAA buoy network to fill forecast gap

WASHINGTON (AP) — A network of 65 new weather monitoring buoys will be scattered across the Pacific Ocean over the next two years in an effort to improve weather forecasts, the government said Sunday.

The National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration said the United States, France and Japan were cooperating to place the moored buoys in a series of north-south lines spread across thousands of miles of ocean — from the Galapagos Islands to New Guinea.

Additional weather observations are vital to improving weather forecasting, Richard Hallgren, executive director of the American Meteorological Society, said last week.

Unfortunately, Hallgren said, most weather observations are done over land, which is concentrated in the northern hemisphere.

PART-TIME INCOME AVAILABLE

The Midland Reporter-Telegram has several routes which need to be filled with dependable individuals. Now is one of the best times ever to obtain a route in your area!

OFTEN ASKED QUESTIONS:

Is it worthwhile for adults also?

Yes! Our current distributor force is already 75% adult and 25% youth. Morning newspaper routes are attractive for:

- ADULTS who have full-time jobs, yet want to supplement their income with a steady part-time job.
- MOTHERS who can't justify a small job and daycare, because as a distributor, you do not need daycare!
- COLLEGE STUDENTS needing a part-time job which will work with classes!
- YOUTHS who are involved in afternoon school functions, but want to work!
- SENIOR CITIZENS wanting regular exercise, added income, or just want to work with people, neighbors, and friends.

How much money can I make as a distributor?

Depending on the size of the route(s) from $300 to $700 monthly! Some motor routes make even more!

How long does it take?

The actually delivery takes 1 - 2 hours Monday - Saturday, and 2 - 3 hours on Sunday, again depending on the size of the route(s). Also, a few hours a month are needed to collect from subscribers. Many distributor's choose to handle some of this by putting envelopes in subscribers' papers. Collecting in person will be necessary though!

When do papers have to be delivered by?

6 a.m. Monday - Friday and 7 a.m. on Saturday and Sunday.

Do I ever get a day off?

The job requires a 7-day a week commitment. However, distributors do take days off by finding a friend or family member to substitute for them!
