Basin may get its fill of summer rain

Permian Basin residents on Friday got a good old-fashioned drenching as heavy rains roamed the area throughout the day. And the weatherman says there isn't too much chance of drying out today.

Midland's official 2.03 inches of rain was pretty significant, but couldn't even begin to match rainfall measurements recorded in other nearby cities Friday.

One section of Odessa recorded more than 3.3 inches, according to the National Weather Service office at Midland Regional Airport, and as of 7 p.m. Friday Stanton reported receiving 4.5 inches of rain which began Thursday night.

Other area cities were reporting similar rainfall accumulations by late Friday night. Andrews reported about 3 inches, Crane about an inch and Rankin reported receiving rainfall off and on all day Friday.

It drizzled throughout the day in Lamesa and Big Lake reported receiving a good shower.

Street flooding was the order for the day as numerous streets were filled with water in Odessa and other area communities. For a period Friday, some streets and intersections were closed because of high water.

Because of the heavy rainfall amounts in Stanton, the police department there Friday night was discouraging travel to that community, according to a department spokesman.

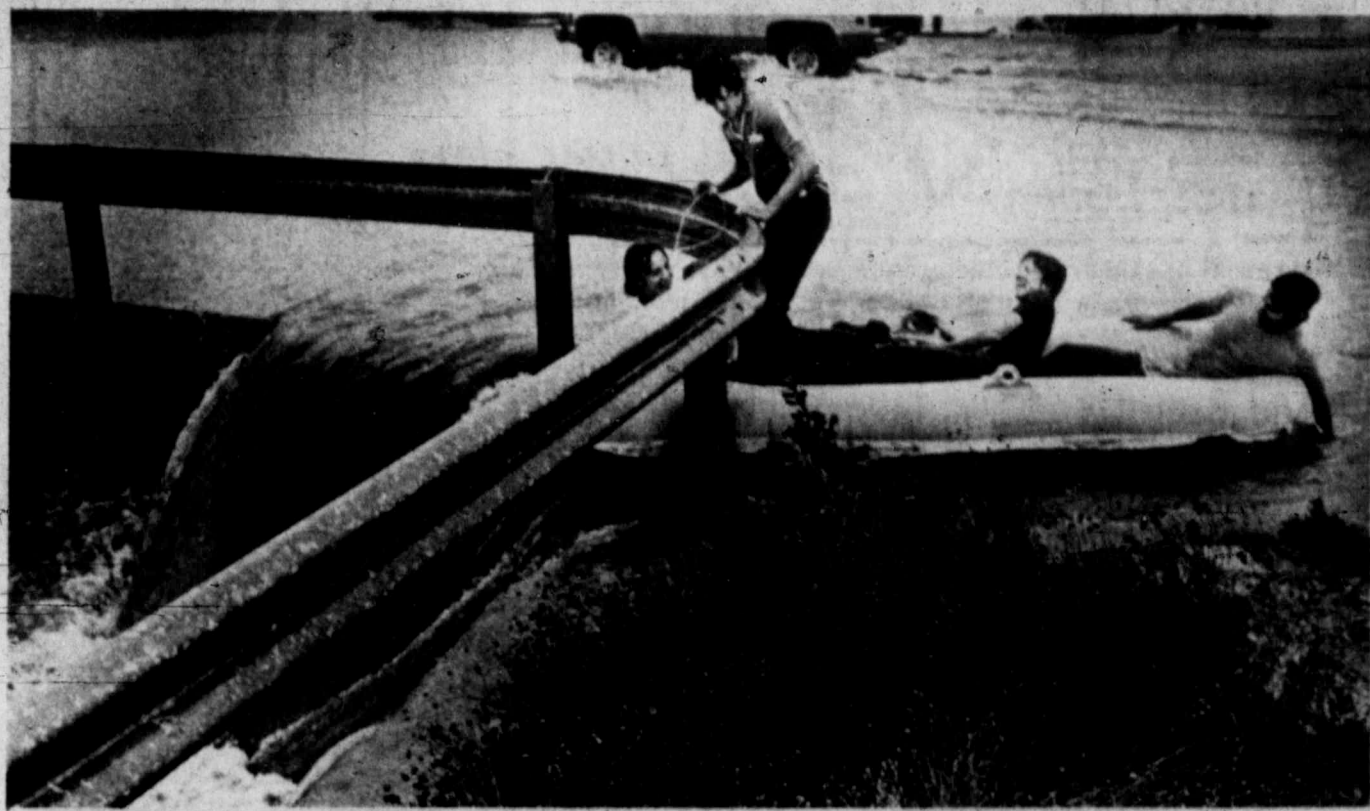

Some streets had been closed in that community earlier in the day

Friday because of flooding, the spokesman said.

Rainfall reports from throughout Midland Friday indicated that the recorded measurements ranged from .85 inch to more than 2 inches. Although there were numerous reports of minor traffic accidents, nearly all of those accidents were minor in nature.

According to a spokesman for the National Weather Service, the rains were prompted by the combination of a surface front that moved through the Permian Basin along with a "short wave" disturbance high in elevation.

And the weatherman says there's a chance throughout this weekend for more of the wet stuff. There is a 90 percent chance of more rain today, decreasing to 50 percent tonight. A 30 percent chance for still more showers will exist on Sunday.

An opportunity to "shoot the rapids" in Midland does not come along very often, but Friday's deluge changed things. This group was seen paddling south on Garfield Avenue when they spied this stretch of "white water" that challenged their abilities. The result, though not recommended, was exciting to watch. A little pushing and shoving got them past the tight spot so they could get the thrill they were after. In the top photo, from left, are Carl Davis, 17; Danny McNease, 17; Richard Sublett, 16, and Larry Benson, 17. (Staff Photos by Mike Kardos)

Nearly half of DC-10s inspected fail to pass

WASHINGTON (AP) — Nearly half of the 137 DC-10s in regular airline service failed to pass muster on the detailed engine mount inspection ordered after last week's fatal crash in Chicago, reports to the Federal Aviation Administration showed Friday.

FAA spokesman Fred Farrar said problems ranging "from serious to minor" were found on 59 of the wide-bodied jets used by eight U.S. airlines and that 21 still were out of service in mid-afternoon.

The other 38 needed at least some repairs to make them airworthy. A total 116 were cleared to carry passengers.

The problems found in 59 planes during the detailed inspections brought the number of DC-10s with some type of problem found to 68, Farrar said. He said that included nine planes where defects were found in a limited check of engine-mounting bolts on Monday.

Defects turned up in those inspections led the FAA on Tuesday to order the grounding of all DC-10s until the more detailed checks could be made.

On at least one plane that remains grounded, mechanics found a crack that one expert said eventually could have caused an engine to drop off the aircraft.

An engine fell off American Airlines flight 191 in Chicago last week as the plane was taking off and seconds later the aircraft crashed and burned, killing 274 persons. Investigators now are looking into the possibility of design flaws in the much-used jet.

Under FAA rules issued after the Chicago crash, airlines must repeat the inspection of the pylon area in which the engines are attached to the wings of DC-10s after every 100 hours of engine service or every 10 days, whichever occurs earlier.

ABC News reported Friday night that federal safety investigators have concluded there is a basic defect in the DC-10 engine mounts which will require them to be redesigned and rebuilt.

The network said that McDonnell Douglas Corp., makers of the DC-10, now has teams of designers working behind closed doors trying to figure out what went wrong and how to fix it.

ABC reporter Jules Bergman said the problem centered on the aft pylon supports for the engine which he said can collapse and lead to the engine falling off.

But FAA spokesman Farrar said the FAA had reached no conclusion on what caused the accident or whether a DC-10 design defect was involved. "We do not know that as a fact," he said. "We do not yet know what caused the accident."

Meanwhile, airlines reported no drop in business, despite a week of the worst kind of publicity, including a statement by a member of the National Transportation Safety Board that he wouldn't fly on a DC-10 right now.

"Traffic this week has exceeded all our forecasts," said American Airlines' Dave Frailey. "Each day this week we have flown more revenue passenger miles than we had forecast. We don't have the figures broken down yet by type of aircraft."

Fight 'to last vote' promised in effort to decontrol oil prices

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Carter told consumer advocates and environmentalists Friday he will not back off his controversial plan to remove federal price controls from oil.

One participant at the session quoted Carter as pledging to fight "to the last vote" for congressional passage of a tax to keep oil companies from reaping excess profits as a result of decontrol.

Carter also was quoted as describing Mobil Oil as "the most irresponsible corporation in America." A spokesman for Mobil declined immediate comment on the accusation.

The president invited representatives of consumer and environmental groups, as well as trade associations, to the White House to discuss the nation's energy problems and the need for conservation.

The group included both critics and supporters of Carter's plan to remove oil price controls. The first phase of the president's plan went into effect Friday.

Mark Green, an associate of consumer advocate Ralph Nader, and Kathleen O'Reilly of the Consumer Federation of America, said critics of the president's plan confronted him with their opposition.

"Consumer groups were unanimous before and during the meeting in opposing decontrol," Green said.

White House Press Secretary Jody Powell quoted Carter as telling his critics that he was "prepared to accept their opposition." The spokesman also said Carter urged his critics to support his "windfall profits" tax and conservation measures.

Powell also said Carter is not considering appointment of a new energy adviser, a suggestion raised at a meeting Thursday with oil industry officials.

Green said that in repeating his refusal to seek continued price controls on oil, Carter reported that Senate Majority Leader Robert C. Byrd, D-W.Va., had promised to lead a filibuster on the Senate floor if such a plan were brought up.

The president drew sharp criticism from Ms. O'Reilly, who said Carter's position on decontrol was the "most inflationary, anti-consumer decision made in the White House in this century."

Both Ms. O'Reilly and Green reported Carter's charge against Mobil Oil.

Virtually alone among oil companies, Mobil has said it favors continued controls on some oil. Green and Ms. O'Reilly said Carter apparently believes the company is masking its opposition to a "windfall profits" tax by opposing the full removal of price controls.

Powell said "no comment" when asked after the meeting whether Carter had charged Mobil with irresponsibility. He added that from Ms. O'Reilly's statement, "it would seem to indicate a lack of responsibility on this issue is not confined to the corporate world."

The president flew by helicopter late Friday to his Camp David, Md., mountaintop retreat.

Carter's plan to take price controls off oil gradually has sparked strong opposition from many consumer groups and liberal Democrats in Congress. Opponents say it will drive up the price of gasoline and other oil products and cause special hardships for the poor.

Carter called the session the day after he met with oil industry officials. Emerging from their White House meeting on Thursday, oil executives said they told Carter the nation's oil shortage would continue for several years.

In contrast to consumer groups, most oil officials favor lifting price controls from oil.

Backers of decontrol say it will give oil companies a greater incentive for increased production. In addition, they say, the higher prices that result in a lifting of controls are expected to spur conservation. The president's decontrol plan will take effect gradually, with domestic oil prices eventually rising to meet world prices by Oct. 1, 1981.

Overall, Carter's plan is expected to cost a typical family of four between $100 and $175 a year, according to various government projections. In other developments:

— A White House proposal for a weekend meeting with top Democrats in Congress to discuss energy and inflation received a cool reception from several congressional leaders, sources said.

— Energy commissioners from eight northeastern states emerged from a meeting with federal officials saying they were unconvinced that gasoline from their region was not being diverted to the West Coast.

DOE 'stalls' effects of diesel fuel shortage on oil industry

By RICHARD MASON
Staff Writer

A potential diesel fuel shortage that could slow additional oil and gas exploration in the United States has been stymied — at least temporarily — by the U.S. Department of Energy.

Diesel fuel is used to drive drilling rigs in the search for and production of petroleum and in oil well servicing units. It is also widely used in powering agriculture machinery, in the trucking and railroad industry and in mass transit systems.

The DOE elevated oil and gas exploration to emergency allocation status last Friday, following reports of a diesel fuel shortage in Wyoming and parts of West Texas. The measure was to be placed in the federal records Wednesday or Thursday.

The emergency allocation places a priority use on the fuel. Top priority has been given to agriculture, the trucking industry, railroads, mass transit and the petroleum industry.

"It's ridiculous not to have fuel for drilling (for more fuel)," a spokesman for U.S. Congressman Ken Hance said today. Such a case would be a "Catch-22 clause," he said.

And the spokesman noted that the priority listing, which includes most of the use of diesel fuel, is "like having no priority at all."

Private automobiles using diesel fuel are not on the list; however, most cars are powered by gasoline engines.

Apparently not affected is aviation, which uses gasoline for its piston-powered airplanes and kerosene for its jets.

Meanwhile, despite reports of tight diesel supplies in other sections of West Texas, a spokesman for the Permian Basin Petroleum Association said Tuesday he had not received any reports of diesel shortages "anywhere in the Permian Basin."

Ed Thompson, a spokesman for the group said, however, that the price for diesel fuel was expected to climb "five to seven cents a gallon" in the next few weeks.

Diesel fuel now sells for a few pennies less than regular gasoline.

Congressman Hance of Lubbock said Tuesday that he had been in conference with Secretary of Energy James Schlesinger following reports last week that 30 oil rigs had shut down in Wyoming because they could not obtain fuel.

According to the Congressman, who represents the Midland area, Schlesinger agreed to change the priority status of oil and gas exploration in the allocation process.

"They have decided to put diesel as 'priority one' for use in oil and gas exploration," Hance said.

Agricultural uses are also listed in the "priority one" category, he said.

The Congressman said a written order on the change was due sometime Tuesday.

Hance said he had received calls from oil field servicing people in Levelland and Hockley County in West Texas about tight diesel supplies.

"Agriculture used so much that it caused a shortage in wholesalers and jobbers," he said.

"Many companies which service and maintain the drilling rigs are having to cut back on their services because they cannot get the diesel fuel to operate," he said.

Hance said the shortage was "on the verge of being very severe" without the change.

The Congressman said that with the approach of the planting season in the Midwest, greater demands would be placed on the available diesel fuel supplies aggravating any existing shortages.

In the meantime, the Congressman said that Schlesinger has been asked to investigate charges that diesel fuel sold at West Coast and Gulf ports was being shipped overseas.

Bullock moves to purge allegations from record

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — State Comptroller Bob Bullock filed suit Friday to erase from all public records a Travis County grand jury report accusing his office of thwarting a grand jury probe of Bullock's office.

Bullock's lawyers said in a memorandum supporting the petition that Bullock had been "tried and convicted according to the grand jury's private moral code, with no opportunity to confront his accusers or present his defense."

The December grand jury report said Bullock's office had tried to impede the grand jury investigation by refusing to release some information and destroying other records.

Two separate grand juries looked into allegations that included the use of state airplanes for politics and pleasure, "inordinately expensive lodging" on trips, use of state employees to conduct private business, lavish spending on office furnishings and the "total disregard of the concept of frugality and accountability for tax dollars."

The grand jury said it investigated complaints against Bullock and his chief deputy, Ralph Wayne.

The investigation began after two employees of Bullock's tax information division, Bill Collier and George Kuempel, resigned and publicly told Bullock he was ignoring potential scandals in his office.

Although no indictments were returned, the December report said, "It has been a cause of grave concern and frustration to this grand jury that the comptroller's office has used its experience with the investigative process to thwart past and present attempts to search for the truth and to require openness and accountability."

An FBI analysis of carbon typewriter ribbons used by Wayne's secretary was awaiting action in Washington when the most recent grand jury probe ended in late March.

Bullock said the five-page December report was illegal and libelous.

A grand jury is not authorized by law to "issue reports or statements concerning the nature of its investigations or the matters which transpire before it," Bullock's petition states.

"The import of the document taken as a whole is to publicly imply the plaintiff (Bullock) and his employees are guilty of misconduct and criminal activity," it added.

The legal memo said the report violated the grand jurors' oath of secrecy and subjected them to possible criminal prosecution.

The memo cited Florida and Utah cases in which grand jury reports criticizing public officials were erased.

"Due to the public and sometimes controversial aspects" of the comptroller's office, the memo said, "such a report being a public record will cause damage and always have the potential to cause damage to plaintiff so long as it remains a public record."

FBI releases composite sketches

SAN ANTONIO, Texas (AP) — The FBI released composite sketches Friday of two men sought in connection with Tuesday's assassination of a federal judge. An official said, "We're not saying these people are connected to the case in any way, but we're not saying they're not either."

The FBI, mobilizing at least 40 agents and numerous other federal investigators, has mounted a massive investigation into the sniper slaying of U.S. District John H. Wood Jr., 63, known as "Maximum John" for his stiff sentences in drug cases.

It was the second time in seven months a Western District of Texas official involved in West Texas drug smuggling cases has been ambushed.

Assistant U.S. Attorney James Kerr escaped serious injury Nov. 21 when his car was riddled by bullets as he drove to work. No one has been arrested in that case.

Daniel Shaffer, the assistant director of the intense investigation, said the two men were seen by "more than one witness" in the "immediate vicinity" of Wood's townhouse the morning he was slain.

The sketches — one showing a man with brownish long hair, glasses and a mustache and another showing a clean-shaven man with medium length light hair and glasses — represent a composite of the reports from the witnesses, said Shaffer.

"We're just trying to identify who these men are," he said.

Both men in the drawings appeared to be in their late 20s or 30s.

Shaffer refused to comment on whether there had been any eyewitnesses to the shooting. The Chateau Dijon townhouses were sealed off and witnesses were rounded up shortly after the assassination. The FBI has since kept a tight lid on the investigation.

FBI spokesman David Cassens had said Tuesday afternoon that agents were checking out reports of several cars in the area at the time of the assassination, but Shaffer would not elaborate on exactly where in the area the two men had been spotted or if they were in a car.

Rewards totaling $125,000 have been posted in the case and a special 24-hour telephone — 512-223-3581 — has been installed to handle tips. Shaffer said the reward, which he called "substantial by anyone's standards," had prompted numerous responses.

"We can't tell you whether any have been productive or not, but the telephone has been ringing," he said.

Dallas millionaire industrialist H. Ross Perot, who financed a commando team last February to rescue some of his employees from an Iranian prison, reportedly contacted U.S. Attorney Jamie Boyd on Thursday about increasing the reward fund.

Perot's secretary said Friday, however, that Perot was not posting any rewards in the case.

A $100,000 reward was offered Thursday by a group of local attorneys and the FBI is offering $25,000.

Shaffer said any other possible reward offers must be screened before being considered legitimate by the federal government. "We certainly wouldn't support any 'Wanted: Dead or Alive' offers," he said.

Wood was gunned down outside his townhouse as he prepared to leave for work. He was killed by a single shot to the spine with a .243-caliber bullet, the FBI said. The .243-caliber bullet is usually fired from a high-powered deer rifle, but Shaffer refused to speculate Friday on what type of weapon was used.

FBI lab technicians said they have not been able to determine from how far away the shot came.

Boyd and Kerr have been conducting federal grand jury investigations in El Paso and Midland into alleged multi-million dollar interstate narcotics trafficking. That West Texas crackdown will be accelerated in the wake of Wood's slaying, Boyd vowed Thursday.

The ongoing inquiries have focused on the Bandidos motorcycle club and the slaying Dec. 23 of flamboyant El Paso defense attorney Lee Chagra. Sources said in March that the names of top organized crime figures in Arizona and Las Vegas have surfaced in the investigation in connection with Lee Chagra.

Wood was scheduled to preside over the narcotics trafficking trial of Las Vegas gambler Jamail "Jimmy" Chagra, Lee Chagra's younger brother. The trial was scheduled to begin Tuesday in Austin, but had been recently reset for July 23 in Austin.

Joe Chagra, Jimmy and Lee's brother and Jimmy's defense attorney, said the Wood assassination is the "worst thing that could happen to us" because it will not be forgotten by any judge or juror in Texas. The Chagras had vainly sought to have Wood removed from the case.

A federal grand jury in San Antonio investigating the Kerr case has also heard testimony from Bandidos. In March, several Bandidos took lie detector tests and participated in a police lineup viewed by Kerr.

One former Bandido member awaiting trial on federal firearms charges has been named by an FBI agent in a court hearing as a "prime suspect" in the Kerr case.

MOVE members make shambles of courtroom; Judge bidding time

By LEE LINDER

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Damning American justice and denouncing charges they killed a policeman, nine mop-haired members of a radical group called MOVE are making a legal shambles of a courtroom battlefield even before their murder trial formally begins.

Since proceedings began this week, they have stridently baited the judge and prosecutor by refusing to cooperate in the trial and by shouting slogans as "On the Move" and "Long Live John Africa" — founder of the back-to-nature cult. Their rhetoric is often echoed by supporters in the courtroom as they press preliminary motions expected to delay jury selection for several more weeks.

Their trial attire is not the judicial vogue, and would be banned in any other courtroom. The men often wear sleeveless undershirts and the women low cut blouses that sometimes expose bosoms — but no admonition comes from the bench.

"We are not going to give them a chance to scream they didn't get their day in court, so we'll give them weeks, months, if necessary, to make sure justice is done," says Assistant District Attorney Wilhelm Knauer.

Common Pleas Judge Charles Mirachi grimaces at the sometimes obscene rantings and ravings, but he has kept a tight rein on the action despite the defendants' penchant to make irrelevant speeches while acting as their own lawyers. He has occasionally ordered a defendant removed from the courtroom for refusing to restrain verbal outbursts.

The five black men and four black women — each use the surname "Africa" in honor of their founder — are accused of murdering Patrolman James Ramp, 52, last Aug. 8 as police and firemen broke into MOVE headquarters to end a 15-month siege that had cost the city more than $1.5 million.

Two other women, also charged in the killing, were granted separate trials.

The defendants have pleaded innocent. They have said they do not want a jury trial, but they have refused to give a written or oral waiver.

MOVE, which has less than 25 known members, nearly all of them black, claims its goal is to overthrow the government and American way of life.

The bloody confrontation with police officers and firemen using water cannons flushed out 12 adults, 11 children and 22 dogs from a three-story Victorian-style house in which they had barricaded themselves. After the battle, bulldozers and a crane were used to level the brick and wood building, which had no indoor plumbing.

"We did it so they can't get back in again," Mayor Frank Rizzo said about destroying the house on the edge of the Drexel University campus and seven blocks from the University of Pennsylvania in west Philadelphia.

Rizzo, a former policeman, later offered to pull the switch of the electric chair if the MOVE defendants were convicted and sentenced to death.

"Too much blood flowed," he said. "But we were dealing with psychotic revolutionaries."

Besides Ramp, six other policemen, five firemen and two MOVE members were hit by bullets in a battle that investigators claim was triggered by a MOVE member firing through a window of the flooded basement.

The group had been cited for violating the city's health and fire codes. It had rejected numerous court orders since 1976 to vacate the barricaded premises where garbage and human waste composted in the backyard, and where their children played nude in the dung piles.

For two years, the city sought unsuccessfully to negotiate an arrangement that would satisfy complaining neighbors and MOVE supporters.

The adversary in this case was an uncivilized foe who we were forced to cope with according to civilized rules," said Rizzo.

"The city leaned over backwards to demonstrate its restraint and its compassion, especially because of the children who were involved. But this lawless group chose instead to continue its defiance, its mockery of the rules of law and justice to the end."

For a time the city tried a blockade, cutting off food and water. This ended when MOVE agreed in early 1978 to evacuate the premises.

Quality of concrete in dome at power plant questioned

GLEN ROSE — An official of Texas Utilities Generating Co. said late this week that the Nuclear Regulatory Commission (NRC) has determined that a portion of the concrete placed at the top of the Comanche Peak Unit 1 containment dome earlier this year is of unknown quality.

The announcement was made by Perry G. Brittain, president of Texas Utilities Generating Co., who said the assessment followed an extensive investigation by the NRC.

The investigation came after a former construction worker lodged an allegation.

"The potential problem was created when, after the placement had been completed, unusually heavy rains during the night caused portions of the concrete to sag and actually washed away a small area," said Brittain. "Construction workers immediately reworked and repaired the affected areas, but not in the presence of quality control personnel as required by procedure. The NRC has reported this as an item of non-compliance."

Brittain continued, "When we were notified of these events, our original investigation into the matter disclosed no evidence of defective concrete. We are currently conducting an evaluation to determine what testing must be done to assure ourselves and the NRC that the concrete meets requirements."

He said the company will do whatever is necessary to ensure the strength of the containment, including removing and replacing the concrete.

"The containment must pass a pressurization test to prove the integrity of the structure, but we intend to resolve this matter now rather than wait for this final test," said Brittain.

TUGCO, the licensee for Comanche Peak, acts as agent for Texas Electric, Dallas Power & Light and Texas Power & Light in construction of the plant.

The Comanche Peak plant is located five miles from Glen Rose in Somervell County.

Many of the motorists who attempted to drive around town Friday had to spend at least part of the time waiting for their engines to restart from the rain. This city worker seems to have found a solution to the problem as he cruises south on Garfield Avenue — wide tires and a high center make getting around a little easier. (Staff Photo by Mike Kardos)

U.S. 'vulnerable' to OPEC actions

WASHINGTON (AP) — The nation has been left vulnerable to a OPEC-induced recession by those who oppose lifting price controls from domestic crude oil, President Carter's chief spokesman said Friday.

White House press secretary Jody Powell gave the assessment on a day that saw Carter begin his gradual lifting of controls on domestic oil prices and as new unemployment figures showed 5.8 percent of the workforce still seeking jobs.

"It's entirely appropriate that we're dealing with the beginning of decontrol and with employment figures and a tenuous economic situation on the same day," Powell said, "because we are much more vulnerable than we should be to price increases by OPEC" — the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries.

Powell said the latest unemployment figures "are consistent with our view that economic growth is slowing, and that a recession can be avoided."

But he also said that price increases by OPEC make control of inflation and prevention of a recession "increasingly difficult."

"The reason that we are so vulnerable is that we have failed to act in the past," Powell said.

He referred to last month's congressional rejection of Carter's proposals for standby gasoline rationing plans, and of rejection last year of proposals for taxes on petroleum to encourage conservation.

Powell raised the possibility of an OPEC-spurred recession during a chat following his regular daily briefing for White House reporters.

If OPEC boosts prices, he said, "I would be willing to bet that some of those who have been least willing to make the difficult decisions that are required, or even to allow the president to make them, as he has done in the case of decontrol, will be some of those who will be lamenting the increased inflation and increased unemployment that will result from those price increases."

Thefts reported

Several alleged thefts were reported to Midland law enforcement agencies Thursday, according to reports.

E.L. Epley, 2306 W. Dengar St., reported the theft of oilfield equipment from a well located in the Pegasus field approximately 16 miles south of Interstate 20 on on FM 1788, according to the Midland County Sheriff's Department.

Taken was a "christmas tree," a drilling tool, valued at $1,400, officials said.

Herbert Jones reported to the sheriff's office that a television set had been taken from his home at 1708 Griffin Ave.

Aluminum frame windows worth an estimated $1,000 were reported to police as missing from a construction site maintained by Joe Ryan Construction, according to reports.

Nuclear weapons test delayed

LAS VEGAS, Nev. nuclear test scheduled (AP) — An underground for Friday morning was delayed at least until Monday by high altitude winds over the Nevada Test Site.

The weapons-related test, code-named "Papa-to" and having a yield of between 20,000 and 150,000 tons of TNT, will be the fifth announced test this year.

The nuclear device is buried 2,234 feet beneath Pahute Mesa.

Exemption gets part of blame

WASHINGTON (AP) — The accidental release of radioactive gases at Three Mile Island might have been averted if the nuclear plant had been required to abide by federal design standards enacted four years ago, officials said Friday.

Federal regulators told a presidential commission that the Three Mile Island plant, however, was exempt from the 1975 rules because the commission agreed not to apply them to plants already operating or under construction.

The construction permit for Three Mile Island Unit II was issued in November 1969.

"I must confess, I find that shocking," said presidential commission chairman John G. Kemeny. He said he did not understand how existing plants could be omitted from a significant improvement on a critical safety issue.

Roger Mattson, director of reactor safety at the Nuclear Regulatory Commission, said the agency's 1975 rules required new plants to increase from one to three the number of conditions under which a plant's containment building would automatically be sealed airtight at the time of an accident.

After the March 28 accident at Three Mile Island, investigators said, the containment building, which holds the reactor core, did not seal shut for about 4 1/2 hours, thereby releasing radioactive gases into the air.

Under questioning, Mattson said the decision not to require plants already under construction to conform to the new safety rules was "a question of practicability."

"It's hard for me to believe that economics did not play a part in it," Kemeny, a computer scientist and president of Dartmouth College, told reporters later.

The Three Mile Island containment building was designed to be automatically isolated when the pressure within the structure reaches 4 pounds per square inch — a point Kemeny said was reached 4 1/2 hours after the accident.

Kemeny said the 1975 NRC rules require a design which also would seal the building immediately when the emergency cooling system is turned on — 2 minutes and 4 seconds after the accident at Three Mile Island — or at a certain level of radiation — less than an hour after the accident.

Meanwhile, Kemeny told reporters after three days of hearings that better instrumentation in the control room at Three Mile Island would have averted a major accident.

"If there had been decent instruments in the room...none of us would have been here today," he said. Kemeny said he was not limiting blame to the instrumentation.

During the hearings, the utility shift operators said they never were trained to handle the type of accident that occurred and did not know how to deal with it. Members of the Nuclear Regulatory Commission conceded the accident demonstrated the NRC had become "complacent" about safety procedures.

Two NRC commissioners — Victor Gilinsky and Richard Kennedy — told the 12-member presidential panel Friday the commissioners have failed over the years to "delve into the details" of safety issue.

"That's what I suspected," retorted Kemeny.

South took the king of clubs, drew two rounds of trumps and then prematurely led a second club.

West ruffed and returned the nine of spades, trying to look like a man who didn't have the king.

South had started badly and finished the same way. He stepped up with the ace of spades and returned the queen of spades from dummy.

East played low, naturally, and South discarded the jack of diamonds. Down one.

SHOULD CASH ACE

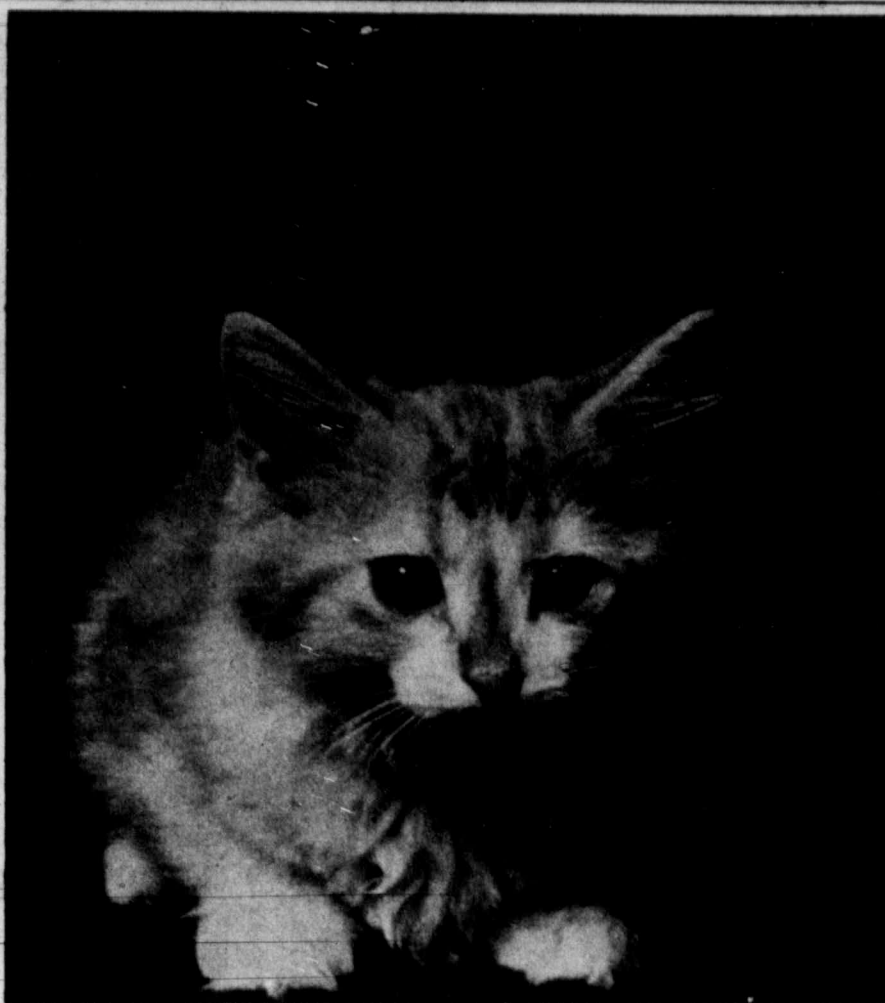

Before leading the second club South should cash dummy's ace of spades. Then he plays the club. If West refuses to ruff, declarer puts him in with a third round of trumps.

Whether West returns a spade or a diamond, declarer gets a free finesse and cannot guess wrong.

DAILY QUESTION

As dealer you hold: S-8; D-AK 8 7 4 3; D-AKJ; C-Q 8 4. What do you say?

ANSWER: Bid just one heart. The hand is not quite worth an opening forcing bid. If the hearts were headed by A-K-Q, you would have a respectable opening bid of two hearts.

Weissmuller to mark 75

HOLLYWOOD (AP) — He is kept "somewhat sedated" and has occasional memory lapses, but Johnny Weissmuller, the movie star most often identified as Tarzan, will have a lot to celebrate Saturday when he marks his 75th birthday.

Weissmuller is still savoring his recent victory in avoiding commitment to a mental health facility, and a granddaughter is graduating from high school on Saturday at age 16.

His daughter, Lisa Weissmuller, said Friday that the former swimming champion will have a cake and a party with his family Sunday at the Motion Picture and Television Country House and Hospital in Woodland Hills.

Meeting on oil policy called

PARIS (AP) — Western industrial nations plan an emergency meeting next week to debate the United States' attempt to use subsidies to stockpile home heating oil — a policy under attack throughout Europe as selfish and damaging to the common fight against the oil shortage.

"Carter declares oil war," shouted the headline of the London Daily Mirror on Friday. "The hallowed principle of egoism, every man for himself, is at work," charged the Paris socialist paper Le Matin.

The International Energy Agency (IEA), claiming membership of 20 Western nations including the United States, said it would assemble its permanent delegation says the purpose is to build up U.S. supplies of heating oil and diesel fuel. The subsidy, known in Washington as an "entitlement," is paid from a pool of funds financed by oil-company contributions required by the government.

In Washington, Energy Department officials said Friday the measure would have less effect on Europe than on Caribbean oil markets, where U.S. companies are expected to go first because prices are lower than in Europe.

But the Europeans saw the move as an effort to help U.S. buyers compete with spiraling oil prices on the spot market in Rotterdam, Netherlands, a crucial source of oil for Europe during the present period of shortfalls.

Lately, the Americans have been saying, the Rotterdam market has been so lucrative that oil that normally would have gone to the United States is being diverted to Europe.

European energy experts claim the subsidies will simply drive the price up by $5 on the Rotterdam market.

"In the face of crisis, Uncle Sam has reacted as usual: it is applying the law of the strong," commented the Paris daily Le Figaro. It accused Washington of going behind the backs of its allies in the struggle for oil and delivering "a scandalous coup de force."

British Energy Minister David Howell asked his French counterpart, Andre Giraud, to express "profound concern" to Washington officials whom Giraud will be visiting next week.

Giraud will see Energy Secretary James Schlesinger, while Foreign Minister Jean Francois-Poncet will have talks with President Carter.

In West Germany, the Stuttgarter Zeitung daily said Economics Minister Otto Lambsdorff had sharply complained to the U.S. ambassador about the subsidies.

The paper said the move was sure to cloud Chancellor Helmut Schmidt's talks with Carter in Washington, also scheduled for next week.

MEET THE MINISTER

Harmon leads Midland Alliance

The Rev. Les Harmon is pastor of Midland's First Alliance Church at 1610 W. Wall St. He came to the Midland ministry more than two years ago from the pastorate of a church in Tucson, Ariz. (Staff Photo)

By ROGER SOUTHALL
Staff Writer

The Rev. Les Harmon is pastor of Midland's First Alliance Church, 1610 W. Wall St., a post he has held for the last 2½ years.

The church is a unit of the Christian and Missionary Alliance, an evangelical denomination founded in 1887 that now has more than 8,000 churches in 47 countries around the world, with a total membership in excess of 1 million.

According to Harmon, the Christian and Missionary Alliance grew out of a a minister and there have been numerous other clergymen in the family. (His wife's father also is in the ministry.)

Harmon attended Fort Wayne Bible College, graduating with honors with a B.A. degree in pastoral theology, after which he had special training and field work in Tucson, Ariz. He then was called to the pastorate of Northwest Alliance Church in Tucson in a ministry of development and church growth.

After five years in the Tucson pastorate, during which time the church evolved into a fully self-supporting unit, he accepted a call to the pastorate of the Midland Alliance Church, to succeed the Rev. Curtis Pace who had moved to a church in Oklahoma.

In addition to serving the Midland congregation as pastor, Harmon serves the Southwestern District of the Christian and Missionary Alliance on the Committee for Extension and as a member of the Executive Committee. He also is head quizmaster for the district.

During his years in the ministry, he has been actively involved in the direction and administration of several Christian camps.

Of the Midland Alliance Church, Harmon said "we are now actively engaged in developing the church and promoting it in the community as a strong Protestant, evangelical church. The local church has a goal of growth, namely, to double the size of the congregation."

Harmon says he has always enjoyed sports and camping. His hobbies are "working with people and getting to know the people of Midland, which always brings a special feeling of satisfaction," he said. "I thoroughly enjoy Midland, its challenges and its promises of the future!"

Harmon and his wife, Marilyn, are the parents of a five-year-old daughter, Shawna, who attends the Trinity School of Midland. The family resides at 1606 W. Wall St.

vision of Dr. Albert B. Simpson, minister of a fashionable Presbyterian Church in New York City, who was deeply moved by the spiritual needs of multitudes in North America and overseas.

Simpson's gift for evangelism and his vision for international missions led to the establishment of a great missionary society, a Bible institute (the nation's first one) and ultimately a church denomination of remarkable vigor — the Christian and Missionary Alliance.

"Many outstanding leaders were attracted to this daring pioneer," Harmon said, "and throughout its history the deep spiritual impact of the Christian and Missionary Alliance has extended far beyond its immediate membership."

"Its influence has been felt by individuals who today are pastors and evangelists, college presidents and highly-placed men and women in government, industry and the arts."

The Midland pastor said the denomination has more than 1,600 churches in the U.S. and Canada which support 952 overseas missionaries. Each CMA church shares in the support of this worldwide outreach, he said — an outreach consisting of evangelism, Bible translation and publishing, theological education, church leadership training, radio and TV broadcasting, medical services and emergency relief work, including refugee resettlement.

The Midland First Alliance Church was established 12 years ago. One of the highlight events of each church year is the congregation's traditional Missionary Convention at which missionaries come to the city as guest speakers, to tell the congregation of their respective endeavors in foreign fields.

Harmon is a native of Iowa and he grew up in the Midwest. His father is

Pope's place of birth gets facelift for visit

By DAVID MINTHORN

WADOWICE, Poland (AP) — The house where Pope John Paul II was born is getting a state-paid facelift just in time for his return visit June 7.

"I've been trying for 35 years to get this place painted," said Zbigniew Putyra, who lives in the two-room apartment where Karol Wojtyla was born. "Suddenly the painters showed up last week and did the job in three days."

The pope, who will visit Poland June 2-10 for the first time since his elevation, is scheduled to deliver an address to thousands of Roman Catholics in the town square June 7.

He will also say Mass in the morning at a nearby monastery and in the afternoon at the former Auschwitz concentration camp some 18 miles from Wadowice.

It remains to be decided whether the Pope will visit the second-floor apartment in the 160-year-old house where he was born in this southern Polish farming and factory town of 15,000.

Just in case, communist authorities ordered the inner courtyard of the three-story building painted bright yellow, and the apartment itself given a coat of green paint.

A marble plaque on the outside of the building reads: "In this house was born May 18, 1920, and lived Karol Josef Wojtyla, Pope John Paul II."

Across the street at the baroque church and the adjacent parish buildings, scaffolding is still up for the rush renovation of the church properties, gleaming with a fresh coat of yellow and white paint.

Putyra, a 57-year-old physics teacher at a local high school, said crowds of pilgrims have visited the town ever since Wojtyla was elected the first non-Italian pope in 455 years last October 16.

By now Putyra and his wife are used to having strangers appear at their door at all hours of the day and night to see the apartment.

"I am accustomed to it now, and I don't mind visitors in the morning and the afternoon. But it's difficult when they get us out of bed at night," the affable, gray-haired man said.

"Once the doorbell rang when I was wearing only a pair of shorts. I opened the door and found myself face-to-face with a group of nuns."

Putyra's guestbook for visitors has more than 1,000 signatures and messages. Italians make up the largest group of foreign pilgrims, followed by French, Americans, Hungarians and Czechoslovaks.

A 74-year-old Polish woman, a distant cousin of the pope, signed the guestbook last week, recalling her visits to the apartment when Wojtyla was a child.

The latest entry was from an American who lives in Adelphi, Maryland. She wrote: "Your Holy Father, My mother and I have come to Poland to see your heritage. We were sorry we had to leave your country before we could actually see you. Please remember us in your prayers. God be with you."

Putyra's family moved into the apartment in 1938 after Wojtyla and his father, a retired Polish warrant officer, moved to Krakow, where the future pope entered the seminary in 1942.

His mother died in 1929, an older brother in 1932 and his father in 1941, during the German occupation of his homeland.

Putyra said the house where the pope was born was owned by a Polish Jew who managed to escape to Palestine before the Holocaust. After the owner died, the house reverted to the communist state, to which Putyra pays a monthly rent of 200 zlotys, about $60.

Putyra was two classes behind Wojtyla in the town school. He remembers him as a friendly, strong-willed youth, as do many of the elderly and middle-aged residents.

All those interviewed agreed that the papal visit will be the highpoint in the 652-year history of the town, despite enormous crowd-control problems it will doubtless pose.

"It will be a mess," Putyra said. "There may be 30,000 people trying to crowd into the square. Police say there is room only for 10,000."

The church has already put out appeals for 300 men, aged 20 to 40, to keep order among the throng. The only requirement, beyond sex and age, is that the marshals be educated "in the Christian way of life."

Lithuanians hope to watch Pope John Paul II on TV

MOSCOW (AP) — When Pope John Paul II arrives in Warsaw today, less than 200 miles will separate him from Lithuania, the Roman Catholic Church's stronghold in the Soviet Union. But members of his Lithuanian flock will see him by television only.

Informed sources report thousands are flocking to the southern part of the southernmost Baltic republic, where Polish telecasts can be picked up, to see the reports of the pope's visit.

"Many, many will be watching," a Lithuanian priest said.

From the time of his election, the "Polish Pope" has been a symbol of hope for Lithuania's struggling, fervent Catholic movement.

During his investiture last Oct. 22, he ended with a message of greetings to Lithuanians in their language. Last week, he gave them another lift by naming a cardinal "in pectore" — his identity a secret the pope is keeping to himself — who church sources say is a Lithuanian bishop under fire from the Soviet government.

There is speculation the prelate is Bishop Julijonas Stepanavicius, 68, who for 20 years has been exiled from Vilnius, the capital, to out-of-the-way Zagare and forbidden to participate in religious activities because he was too sympathetic to anti-government priests.

Although atheism is the official policy of the Soviet Union and religious education for children is outlawed, there are an estimated 4 million Roman Catholics in the entire country, and half of them are in Lithuania. They comprise about 70 per cent of the republic's population of 3.39 million.

To watch over the rights of Soviet Catholics, five Lithuanian priests founded the Catholic Committee for the Defense of Believers' Rights last November. Since then, its members have held clandestine news conferences for Western correspondents in a tiny Moscow apartment.

Last month the committee called on the pope to "support and defend us" in Rome and during his trip to Poland.

The Soviet Union's last remaining Catholic seminary is located in Lithuania, in Akunas, the republic's second largest city. Last year seven priests were graduated and dispatched to posts around the country.

But the Catholic Committee recently reported that 15 priests "and many more" who were educated underground in recent years are giving communion and holding services secretly in Lithuania. So far, the government has let them alone even though they work illegally.

"The authorities cannot do anything because otherwise there will be a big outcry in the West," a Catholic Committee member said.

But Lithuanian Catholics say the persecution of believers continues.

During a recent visit to Vilnius, Western correspondents met with a woman who said her husband has been in prison for two years on charges of "anti-Soviet propaganda." She said his only crime was his Catholic faith and that the police confiscated his religious books when they arrested him.

She said she found out about his trial by listening to the Vatican Radio.

Outside the Cathedral of Sts. Peter and Paul in Vilnius, elderly women in black kerchiefs kneel on the sidewalk to pray beneath a window in which the Black Madonna hangs. The jewel-studded icon is a replica of the dark-skinned Virgin and Child in the Jasna Gora Monastery in southern Poland.

Lutherans to install Wenzel

SEGUIN — The chief feature of the 19th annual convention of the Southern District of the American Lutheran Church will be the installation of Dr. August Wenzel as district president.

The installation ceremony is scheduled for 7:30 p.m. June 8 at Texas Lutheran College in Seguin.

The district convocation opens June 8 and continues through June 10 on the college campus.

Representatives of churches of the American Lutheran denomination from throughout this region will be in attendance at the annual meeting, including representatives of the Midland Lutheran Church.

Wenzel, prior to his being named president-elect of the Southern District last spring in Odessa, served as director of the Lutheran Institute for Religious Studies, based at Texas Lutheran College. Although he has been in the district president post since last October, the official installation was reserved for the convention this month.

Conducting the installation rites and preaching the sermon at the service will be the American Lutheran Church's general president, Dr. David W. Preus of Minneapolis. Special music for the service will be provided by choirs from San Antonio-Austin area, and by an instrumental ensemble from Seguin. A reception will be held in the Seguin Coliseum following the service.

The installation of Wenzel as president of the district will be the first such ceremony within the district for more than 22 years, since Dr. Vernon A. Mohr, who now is pastor of the American Church in Copenhagen, Denmark, was installed. He served as district leader for three six-year terms before retiring in 1978.

Theme of the district convention itself is to be "Lift High the Cross," taken from the theme hymn of that title.

The Southern District is one of 18 geographical divisions of the American Lutheran Church within the United States. The district has more than 260 congregations in Texas, Arkansas and Louisiana, the majority of them in Texas.

Bishops oppose building nukes

BOSTON (AP) — United Methodist bishops have urged a halt in nuclear power plant construction until their safety can be assured.

Worship leaders for the service will be Max Wood, Henry Hermann and Sam Hatcher.

Featured speaker at the gathering will be John Garlock of Dallas. Garlock is well-known as a writer, teacher and school administrator. Currently, he serves as an instructor at Christ for the Nations Institute at Dallas and as headmaster of Tyler Christian Academy. In earlier years, he served as dean of Bible schools in Africa and Belgium.

Sonics earn NBA championship with 97-93 win over Bullets

LANDOVER, Md. (AP) — The Seattle SuperSonics, led by center Jack Sikma and a trio of talented guards, made up for their playoff disappointment of a year ago by beating the Washington Bullets 97-93 Friday night to win the first National Basketball Association championship in their 12-year history.

The Sonics took the best-of-seven playoff final four games to one to dethrone the Bullets, who had won the title a year ago by beating Seattle in a seven-game series.

It was a comeback victory in which Seattle recovered from a 51-43 half-time deficit by limiting the Bullets to 42 points in the second half.

Not once in the five-game series was Washington able to match its regular season scoring average of 114.9 points per game, and four times the Bullets were held under 100 by the Sonics' sticky defense.

Sikma, Seattle's 6-foot-11 second-year man, scored 12 points and grabbed 17 rebounds, battling Washington's Wes Unseld and Elvin Hayes under the backboards.

Meanwhile, the Seattle guards took care of the scoring. Gus Williams had 23 and Dennis Johnson, named the series' Most Valuable Player, had 21 points while reserve Fred Brown contributed 14.

The Sonics trailed 69-66 going into the final period but scored the first six points of the quarter to take the lead for good. Paul Silas scored on a layup. Brown hit a spinning bank shot and Lonnie Shelton sank a jump shot to give Seattle a 72-69 advantage with 8:59 to play.

The Sonics built the lead to 80-74 midway through the final period and then turned back repeated charges by the Bullets.

Three times in the final 4:25 Washington pulled within two points — only to have the Sonics meet the challenge. Williams hit a jumper from the right side, Dennis Johnson sank a 10-footer while falling to the floor and Gus Williams sank two free throws with 12 seconds left to close out the victory.

Williams was dribbling the ball when time ran out and as the final buzzer sounded, he tossed it high in the air in jubilation. The Sonics players raced onto the court and hugged each other in celebration.

The capacity crowd of 19,035 at the Capital Centre gave both teams a standing ovation as the players headed to the locker room.

Elvin Hayes led the Bullets with 29 points, scoring 16 of them in the first period as Washington took a 30-19 lead. The Bullets missed eight of their first nine shots in the second quarter but recovered to hit seven of their remaining 10 in the period to lead 51-43 at the half.

Three straight baskets by John Johnson and one by Williams enabled Seattle to tie the score at 55-55 with 7:50 to go in the third quarter. But the Bullets responded with four baskets and led by as many as nine points late in the third period before a basket and two free throws by Dennis Johnson and a field goal by Brown cut the deficit to three going into the final quarter.

Williams scored eight points in the final period, Dennis Johnson had seven and Brown six as the Sonics went on to victory.

Seattle's guards, who have dominated this series, outscored their Washington counterparts 58-27. For the five games, the Sonics backcourt enjoyed a 302-185 advantage.

Washington lost its two starting guards to injuries during the game. Kevin Grevey suffered a pulled hamstring three minutes into the first period and Tom Henderson was forced out of action with an injured, left ankle in the opening minute of the third period.

Neither returned to action, and reserves Larry Wright, Charles Johnson and Phil Chenier were unable to contain Seattle's explosive backcourt men.

By winning, the Sonics earned $317,500 from the league's playoff pool while the Bullets will split $307,500. There was a $60,000 difference between the winners' and losers' shares in the finals.

Nehemiah sizzles in NCAA hurdles

CHAMPAIGN, Ill. (AP) — Renaldo Nehemiah of Maryland, top-ranked in the world, continued his mastery over arch-rival Greg Foster of UCLA, winning the 110-meter high hurdles in the sizzling time of 12.91 seconds, the fastest electronically timed race ever Friday night at the NCAA Outdoor Track and Field Championships.

However, Nehemiah's time will not be eligible for world recognition because it was wind-aided. The allowable wind for such a race is two meters, or 4.473 miles per hour. The wind for this race in Memorial Field at the University of Illinois was 3.45 meters, or 7.7 miles per hour.

This race will go alongside Nehemiah's magnificent effort last month at Kingston, Jamaica, where he ran 12.8 seconds. That race was hand-timed, and again the International Amateur Athletic Federation — the governing body of track and field — will not accept it because the IAAF only recognizes electronically timed races under 400 meters.

The sensational Nehemiah, who glides over the hurdles with the grace of a ballet dancer and has the speed of a gazelle, set the world mark of 13.00 seconds last month at Los Angeles. That time clipped a remarkable .16 of a second off the mark Nehemiah had set in April.

While Nehemiah was flying past the finish line, far ahead of the field, the disconsolate Foster — last year's NCAA champion — was back at the seventh hurdle, where he had stopped running after missing his steps and banging into a hurdle.

For Foster, running before his home state fans — he is from Maywood, Ill. — it was another bitter defeat against Nehemiah. This was the ninth consecutive time he had been beaten outdoors by the brilliant Maryland sophomore.

Ironically, Foster — ranked No. 2 in the world — also failed to finish when Nehemiah set his world record at Los Angeles. He fell after the fourth hurdle.

For Nehemiah, considered America's top hope for a track and field gold medal in the 1980 Summer Olympics at Moscow, it was sweet revenge against Foster. The Bruins' junior had beaten him in the NCAA meet at Eugene, Ore., last year in 13.22 — an American record at the time. In that race, Nehemiah finished second in 13.27, an American junior record that he has since smashed.

That was Foster's last victory over the 20-year-old Nehemiah, now the world's dominant hurdler. During the 1978 indoor season, Nehemiah set five records — breaking the 60-yard hurdles mark three times and the 50-yard and 50-meter hurdles records once each.

Although his brilliant performance Friday will be negated by the wind, the 20-year-old Nehemiah, now the world's dominant hurdler, during the 1978 indoor season, Nehemiah set five records — breaking the 60-yard hurdles mark three times and the 50-yard and 50-meter hurdles records once each.

Washington was a distant second in this year's point race with 16, followed by Maryland with 14 and UCLA and Auburn with 12 each. Oregon, the pre-meet co-favorite with Texas-El Paso, trailed badly with 10.

The remaining 14 finals are scheduled today.

Midland captures first game win

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. — The Midland Cubs started slowly here Friday night but gradually picked up steam en route to a 4-2 come-from-behind victory over the Arkansas Travelers in the 11th inning of a Texas League twinbill.

After five complete innings in the nightcap, Arkansas led the Bruins 5-2.

Arkansas erupted for a pair of runs in the first inning of the opener as Traveler centerfielder Tito Landrum romped home on a wild pitch and hard-hitting first baseman Joe DeSa singled home Neil Fiala.

But that was it for the hosts as Bill Earley, a 6-foot, 2-inch lefty from Cincinnati, Ohio held them in check the rest of the way to improve his pitching record to 4-3.

The Bruins tied the score 2-2 in the second when designated hitter Brian Rosinski doubled home Carlos Lopez.

Then in the fourth, Randy Hundley's crew went ahead for good when first baseman Jim Tracy tallied on an infield out.

Catcher Ted Trevino put the icing on the cake with a solo homer in the seventh, his second of the campaign. That capped an eight-hit Cub attack. The teams are scheduled to renew hostilities again tonight.

Stadler ups Kemper lead

CHARLOTTE, N.C. (AP) — Craig Stadler added a solid, 3-under-par 69 to his opening effort of 62 and moved to a 4-stroke lead Friday in the second round of the $350,000 Kemper Open Golf Tournament.

"It was about the same game as yesterday," said the chunky Stadler, who listed at 210 pounds and said he'd be happy if he were that light. "I just didn't get it as close to the hole. But there wasn't much difference in the way I played — just 7 shots.

"But there's nothing wrong with a 69 on this golf course. I'm very pleased."

His 131 total was 13 strokes below par on the 7,160-yard Quail Hollow Country Club course and put him in command going into Saturday's third round of the chase for the $63,000 first prize. It will be his 26th birthday.

"I've shot 67 here on my birthday the last two years. I'm looking forward to tomorrow," said Stadler, who is seeking his first pro title.

Jerry McGee, who had bested Stadler's 10-under-par first round with an 11-under-par 61, went 13 shots higher with a 74 this hot, humid, hazy day and drifted back to second at 135.

"Today, everything went the other way," said McGee, who finished in a rain shower with thunder grumbling in the distance. "I didn't play that badly, but every time I mislaid it I was dead, frozen against a tree or something.

"I have no excuses. But it's very discouraging, to say the least. You shoot 61 and have the opportunity to put the tournament out of reach, at least out of reach of the rest of the field. We could have made it so that nobody but Craig or I could win it. But that's golf.

"I don't think I've ever been in second place in a golf tournament after two rounds and been as dejected as I was when I walked off the last green today. But I'll be back tomorrow."

J.C. Snead slipped into third after a 7-under-par 65 that ranked as the best round of the day and the best of Snead's season. He was at 136, 5 off the pace.

Hog rally sinks Waves

OMAHA, Neb. (AP) — Marc Brumble's run-scoring single in the eighth inning gave Arkansas a 5-4 come-from-behind victory over Pepperdine in the opening game of the 33rd College World Series Friday night.

Arkansas (47-13) capitalized on two errors by Pepperdine third baseman Ron Dearth to rally from a 4-1 deficit and move into Sunday's second round against the winner of Friday night's second game between Miami and Arizona.

With Arkansas trailing 4-3, the Razorbacks' Larry Wallace opened the eighth with a single off loser Mark Liber (4-3), the second Pepperdine pitcher. Wallace stole second and came home when pinch-hitter Tim Clancy's one-hopper bounced off Dearth's glove and rolled down the foul line.

Clancy reached second on the play and scored two outs later when Brumble cracked his single up the middle.

Steve Kruger held Pepperdine to one run and six hits in eight innings of relief to pick up the victory, his 10th in 11 decisions.

Pepperdine jumped on Arkansas starter Rich Erwin for three runs in the first inning, all with two outs. Mike Gates singled and Walt Steele followed with a towering home run to right field. Garry Humpston then doubled and scored on a single by John Lais.

Kruger took over in the second inning and gave up his only run when Dearth singled, took second on a wild pitch and scored on a single by Jay Schellin.

Arkansas started its comeback in the seventh when Ed Wallace tripled off the center field wall and scored when Kevin McReynolds singled off Dearth's glove.

Dearth threw wildly to the plate in an attempt to get Wallace, allowing McReynolds to go to second. One out later, Rob Kauffman singled in McReynolds.

College coaches fear summer baseball draft

NEW YORK (AP) — The annual summer free agent draft will be staged by major league baseball this week and there is a group of men who may just be more apprehensive about it than the young players waiting to be selected. They are the college baseball coaches.

Recruiting high school athletes is considered by coaches of all sports the toughest facet of their job. Schools wage intense struggles against each other for the services of the future collegiate stars.

But baseball coaches face one other opponent that no other sport's coaches do. They must go against the pros.

"It (professional baseball) hurts us quite a bit," said Joe Russo, head coach of St. John's, N.Y., one of the more successful Eastern teams. "Let's face it, the best kids get drafted and they're going to be offered money to play in the minor leagues. All we can counter with is the chance for an education and the chance to play some good competitive baseball."

The chance for an education may seem more attractive to the player the later he is drafted, but the earlier in the draft he is selected the larger the financial figures are to be discussed.

"The real top kids are going high and are going to be offered good money," said Ron Fraser, head coach of Miami, Fla. University who started play this weekend in the annual College World Series.

"You just have to go and find a kid who really wants to go to college. We can't compete with the money that the pros offer so we have to sell our own product. And we feel we're selling a pretty good one."

Fraser feels that he is almost better off staying away from the "super" high school player.

"If a kid is that good then you have to lay off. You're just spending the school's money trying to convince him to come."

Fraser did come up with one of those "supers" last season when Neal Heaton signed with the Hurricanes. Heaton, from Long Island, N.Y., was drafted in the first round by the New York Mets. But he and the Mets couldn't reach contract terms so Heaton went shopping for a college to attend.

Only after waiting silently while Heaton negotiated with the Mets could Fraser start his sales pitch.

"We had talked to Neal before the draft and when it was obvious he wasn't going to sign the competition really got keen. He came down for a visit and liked what he saw."

Heaton is doing well for the Hurricanes, compiling an 8-1 mark prior to the Series.

Other coaches don't fare as well as Fraser.

"A few years ago we were in the running with some pretty good kids," said Russo, who played in the 1968 World Series for St. John's. "It would have been a dream infield for us if they came instead all four were drafted and three of them, Ed Kurpiel, Tom Verzyer and John Valle made it to the big leagues."

The problem with the draft doesn't end once the athlete begins his four years at a school. The major leagues may draft him again after his sophomore year. So for all your work recruiting the top player in the area, you may only have him for two seasons at the most.

"You never really know who you're going to have on the roster until the first day of classes," Russo said. "Even then they have a January draft for players of certain eligibility."

"Because of the way the kids can be drafted before their senior year is over, any good collegiate baseball program works on a guesswork game plan. You have to be ready to lose any player at any time."

So Bear Bryant, Joe Paterno, Joe B. Hall, Digger Phelps and all you other college coaches who have recruiting so easy, stop, and think how hard it could be for you if you were involved in the Great American Pastime.

Error causes loss for Rose, Phillies

CINCINNATI (AP) — Second baseman Rudy Meoli's two-run error in the eighth inning on Ken Griffey's grounder gave the Cincinnati Reds a 4-2 victory over Pete Rose and the Philadelphia Phillies Friday night.

The Reds had loaded the bases on two walks off loser Steve Carlton, 6-6, and a fielder's choice before Griffey's slow bouncer over second base scored Ray Knight and Rick Auerbach. Doug Bair pitched one inning in relief to get his third victory without a loss.

It was Rose's first appearance in Cincinnati's Riverfront Stadium since he played out his option with the Reds and signed with the Phillies. He was hitless in four at-bats with two fly balls to center field and grounders to third base and first base.

The victory snapped the Reds' three-game losing streak but extended Philadelphia's string to five straight losses, the Phillies longest of the season.

The Phils broke a club-record 39-inning scoreless streak with consecutive home runs in the seventh by Del Unser and Gary Maddox. Philadelphia's previous record for futility had been 38 scoreless innings during the 1960 season.

The Reds scored a run in the first inning on an RBI-single by George Foster and a run in the sixth on an RBI-single by Ray Knight.

Bill Bonham, still recovering from last fall's elbow surgery, held the Phillies scoreless for six innings but left the game after giving up the two homers and a single to pinch-hitter Bake McBride in the seventh.

Antioch has friends in time of need

YELLOW SPRINGS, Ohio (AP) — Antioch College is flat broke but hopes to get by — with more than a little help from its friends.

The small, private liberal arts college that grew to a behemoth as it led the trend toward campus expansion in the booming 1960s, found itself in immediate need of $2 million earlier this month.

Antioch — noted as something of an educational vanguard — found a quick salvation by deferring salaries and other payments.

"The facts are, people are not being paid," said the college's chief financial officer, Dudley Woodall.

"The suppliers and vendors essentially are not being paid, or we are agreeing to terms with them. And, the federal government, which is a whole different category, is also standing pat," Woodall said.

"Everybody is helping us out by not panicking, by continuing to work: teachers are teaching, union folk are maintaining necessary services, vendors and suppliers are understanding — they're not giving us anything, but they are agreeing to terms which are reasonable."

Woodall added: "We consider the outpouring of support a mandate to continue."

The college's board is meeting in Washington today to work out further details of the financial recovery, and supporters held a march Friday in Ohio to help raise funds. Woodall has said the next few months are the most crucial time for the school as it tries to get through the summer, when revenues are low.

Woodall, vice president for finance, sat behind his desk recently and recounted the mistakes and unavoidable factors that led Antioch into its financial bind.

"Antioch has had financial troubles as long as I have been here, which is 2½ years, and from what I'm told it was for five or six years before that," he said.

What happened, he said, is that Antioch got caught up in the euphoria of the late 1960s and early 1970s when students and funds abounded.

"The call then was for 'expansion,' and Antioch mushroomed from one campus to 30 branches in as many cities across the country. It bloated to about 7,000 enrollment. The main campus, tucked away in Yellow Springs, swelled from its usual 1,100-1,200 pupils to 1,700.

"In order to do this, it required an investment of substantial working capital," Woodall said. "Antioch started out with an endowment of $4 million, which was obviously not enough."

Suddenly the baby boom was past and students no longer were rattling the ivy-covered gates, trying to get in. Enrollment and income from tuition and fees — now about $5,000 a year — dropped dramatically.

Antioch now instructs the equivalent of 5,000 pupils nationally, including some 900 at Yellow Springs.

Then Antioch found itself battered by the inflation of the mid '70s.

There were buildings to pay for and a payroll to meet — a payroll which makes up 80 percent of Antioch's $19 million annual budget.

Antioch went on a crash diet.

Twenty branches were closed, leaving only nine in Boston and Cambridge, Mass.; Keene, N.H.; New York; Washington; Philadelphia; Seattle; San Francisco; Los Angeles; and San Antonio, Texas, plus the international program headquartered at Yellow Springs.

Programs were looked at on a cost-efficient basis. Some were dropped, others consolidated.

"That job is not done. We still have a couple that need shaping up," Woodall said without naming them — "they know who they are."

Faculty and staff were reduced through attrition, from the 1,000-plus in the halcyon days to about 800 at present, including some 350-450 faculty members. (Woodall would not divulge exact faculty salaries, but said the range is in the lower half of what is paid around the country, and that the average Antioch professor earns less than $20,000 a year.)

To supplement its reduced teaching staff, the college hoisted its reputation up the flagpole and began drawing "quality faculty from surrounding major universities on an adjunct or part-time basis."

Finally, a $16 million fund-raising drive was started last February, and was accelerated when finances dried up in May.

The result, Woodall maintains, has improved Antioch's product.

Michael Caine (left) and Sean Connery star as soldiers of fortune who struggle to reach a primitive country where they set themselves up as rulers, in "The Man Who Would Be King," to be presented for the first time on television Saturday, June 2, on CBS.

Two British soldiers try to bamboozle high priests of remote Kafiristan into turning over their riches by convincing them that Connery is a god. The old-fashioned adventure is based on a Rudyard Kipling story.

Elderly sisters jump to deaths

NEW YORK (AP) — Two elderly sisters jumped six floors to their deaths Friday, apparently, police and neighbors say, trying to escape two weeks of excruciating pressure to invest in a scheme that would have cost them their life savings of $17,000.

The bodies of Lee Young, 68, and Martha Young, 72, were found in the front courtyard of their apartment building in the Kingsbridge section of The Bronx around 9:15 a.m., police said.

Over the last few days, neighbors said, the women had become increasingly fearful that con artists were trying to pressure them into withdrawing their money from the bank account and invest it in the scheme.

The women, barefoot and dressed in slacks and shirts, stepped out of their fourth-floor apartment window onto a fire escape and then walked up two stories, a neighbor said.

"I caught them out of the corner of my eye and went over to pull up the shade," said Barbara Turchin, who saw the women outside her sixth-floor apartment.

"I was screaming at them to stop and why were they doing it, but one of them yelled, 'We have to,' Mrs. Turchin said. 'One of the sisters...climbed onto the railing of the fire escape and jumped, and the other followed.'"

Originally, police said the sisters jumped because they had been bilked out of their money. But later, officials said that a special police unit had foiled the theft in a confidence scheme two weeks ago.

The two sisters described the confidence scheme last Saturday evening to their close friend Sally Elliott, 68, and her son, Michael, 29. They gave the following account:

Two weeks ago, Lee Young met an attractive young woman on the street who asked where the nearest off-track betting office was located.

After Miss Young replied, the woman said: "You look like an honest person. I think I can trust you. A truck just came by and a bag of money fell out of it."

The woman then showed her a full sack with with $50 and $100 bills on top. When the woman asked Miss Young what to do, the elderly woman told her to return the money. But the young woman suggested that she call her boss, a "Mr. Goldberg."

The two women went to a telephone booth and talked to "Mr. Goldberg." The conversation eventually turned to how Miss Young could invest $12,000 for a return of $25,000.

"Mr. Goldberg" managed to obtain Miss Young's Social Security number, bank book number, vault number and phone number.

"All of the things that a stranger shouldn't know," she told them," Elliott said.

During subsequent discussions, the sisters were told that their initial investment had to be $17,000 instead of $12,000.

When the sisters went to the bank to withdraw their money, bank officers stalled them, and then telephoned the police department's senior citizen's unit, a standard procedure in such cases.

Police dissuaded the sisters from the investment, and had them move the money to a different account.

But then, the pressure began.

The sisters received threatening phone calls. They thought people were following them. Their doorbell rang in the middle of the night.

During the last few days, the Elliotts said, the Young sisters grew more paranoid.

On Thursday, they refused to let a gas man into their apartment because they didn't trust him.

"They were prisoners in their own apartment. They were afraid to go out," Elliott said. "They were threatening them."

Detective Ralph Friedman, who investigated the deaths, said: "You don't know what goes on in someone's mind, but it wasn't the money."

"The money was saved two weeks ago."

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — Nearly all the medical costs for the separation of Siamese twins Lisa and Elisa Hansen are being picked up by Medicaid, officials say.

And, some of the doctors involved in the separation — a 16½-hour operation that made medical history — apparently will not charge the twins' young parents, David and Patricia Hansen.

The total bill is expected to run well over $100,000. Hospital charges alone for the separation and first two days of recovery were $7,900, according to John Dwan, spokesman for University of Utah Hospital.

The Hansens had no health insurance when the twins — were born 19 months ago.

Hansen, 23, is now a management trainee at a grocery store. His wife, 22, is not employed. Because of their income level, officials say, the family qualifies for Medicaid and is paying the state any amount earned above the financial assistance cutoff level to remain qualified. The money to the state goes toward medical bills.

Before this week's surgery, hospital charges for the girls totaled $70,000, not counting doctors' bills.

It is not known how much longer the girls will have to stay in the hospital, or what additional surgery will be needed.

Many of the doctors have said privately that they will volunteer their services, the twins' father said in an interview several months ago.

Dwan said it would be up to each doctor to decide whether to bill the state or his expenses.

The hospital has refused to say how many doctors or nurses were involved in the delicate operation, or to identify them.

About a dozen doctors were in the operating theater at any given time during the marathon surgery. Double surgical teams of neurosurgeons, plastic surgeons, anesthesiologists and pediatricians were needed to care for the twins.

Lisa and Elisa remained in the hospital's cardiovascular unit Friday and were listed in critical but stable condition. They are receiving large doses of antibiotics to ward off infection.

Ex-GSA worker sentenced to prison

WASHINGTON (AP) — A former General Services Administration employee who worked at CIA headquarters received a six-month prison term Friday for defrauding the government.

Elmer A. Van Pelt, 60, of Mechanicsville, Md., also was sentenced to 2½ months on probation by U.S. District Judge Oliver Gasch.

Van Pelt pleaded guilty to one count of conspiracy to defraud the government, which could have brought him a maximum sentence of five years in jail and a $10,000 fine.

Van Pelt, who worked for GSA's Public Building Service, authorized inflated contracts for floor tile work at the spy agency's Langley, Va., headquarters. He also approved payment for work that was never performed.

Van Pelt admitted receiving $35,000 in kickbacks and other gratuities from the inflated and phony contracts. The same contractor who bribed Van Pelt, John P. Rudell, also gave the former GSA worker $65,000 to purchase his home, said prosecutor William S. Block.

Anthony Interdonato, Van Pelt's attorney, said his client had planned to work for Rudell after he retired and pay off the $65,000, which Van Pelt considered a loan.

Rudell, who also pleaded guilty in the GSA scandal, went out of business after the kickback scheme was revealed, Interdonato said.
