State Senate overrides school veto

■ Hispanic senators gain amendment as body splits on party lines to override Gov. Bill Clements' veto of hotly disputed education reform legislation.

By Rick Brown
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Texas senators Wednesday voted along party lines to override Republican Gov. Bill Clements' veto of an education reform bill, setting up a showdown in the House of Representatives.

The Senate action did not come without a price, however, as Hispanic members demanded and received an amendment to companion appropriations legislation that could add $2 billion to the reform effort's price tag.

The final tally, which required a two-thirds majority, showed the chamber's 23 Democrats in favor of the override, while eight Republicans were against it.

Gov. Bill Clements in a prepared statement charged the legislation will mean a property tax hike of $1.5 billion in school districts across the state. But the bill's sponsor, Sen. Carl Parker, D-Port Arthur, and Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby, who presides over the Senate, denied the assertion.

"That's not being honest. That's absolutely not true," said Parker. The Port Arthur Democrat said districts that have maintained tax rates far below the state average of 95 cents per $100 of property valuation are most likely to increase taxes.

On Tuesday, Parker, who is the Senate Education Committee chairman, had stormed from Senate chambers after pulling down his override motion for lack of support. He said Sen. Carlos Truan, D-Corpus Christi and vice chairman of the education committee, had insulted him.

On Wednesday, Parker backed off assertions he would try to keep Truan from serving on the education committee or any other committee on which Parker also serves in the next regular session.

"That's a long way off," Parker said.

Meanwhile, overturning prior pessimistic assessments, House Speaker Gib Lewis predicted success for a House override attempt. "Surprisingly, I think we have the votes," he said.

A day of arm-twisting by key Democratic House members, including Rep. Mark Stiles, D-Beaumont, working in conjuction with education lobbyists, apparently yielded the better-than-expected returns.

"We have bent, we have moved, we have pushed, we have cajoled," said Stiles. The argument having most success, he said, is that after June 1 whatever plan the Legislature may develop will "stand second" to a plan developed by a court-appointed master.

Midland Independent School District Superintendent Joe Baressi said Wednesday he had not expected an override of Clements veto.

He said the Midland Independent School District will fare better under the legislative plan — if the house follows suit in

Bush's son denies 'conflict' in Colorado thrift dealings

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Bush's son Neil on Wednesday told a congressional committee investigating the $1 billion collapse of a Colorado thrift that his business relationships didn't conflict with his role as a director of the thrift.

Neil Bush

Neil Bush, who served three years on the board of directors of Silverado Banking, Savings and Loan Association of Denver, told the House Banking Committee that allegations of conflict of interest from federal regulators "are frivolous."

"The fact they are being pursued is baffling to me," said Bush, 34, an oil and gas developer.

Bush appeared amid tight security with four other former directors as the committee voted to issue subpoenas to former Silverado executives and others who ignored invitations to testify.

Bush told the committee his business relationships with two of Silverado's major borrowers, developers Kenneth Good and Bill Walters, "don't create a conflict in fact or in law." Regulators have alleged that loans by Silverado to the two were a conflict of interest for Bush, who had oil and gas business deals with the men but failed to disclose that relationship to Siverado's board.

Bush said Walters was "a passive, limited partner in JNB" Exploration, Bush's company, but had no involvement in operations of the enterprise. Walters put $150,000 into JNB.

Bush said his own investment was $100 "and sweat. I was out there working every day. I generated the deals."

A federal regulator told the committee Tuesday that Bush, a focal point of the inquiry into the

Three Midland nursing homes cited

WASHINGTON — Three of four nursing homes in Midland last year did not meet some of the most important standards for care set by the federal government for facilities serving Medicare or Medicaid recipients, according to a report released here Wednesday.

The government's second annual survey of more than 15,000 nursing homes nationwide showed that the Courtyard Care Center fell short in nine of 32 federal "performance indicator" categories selected for the survey.

The West Texas Care Center was substandard in two areas and the Terrace West Nursing Center failed to meet requirements in one area, according to the survey.

All three facilities have changed ownership since the survey was conducted.

The new nursing facility at Midland Memorial Hospital posted a perfect score on all counts.

The 32 indicators included in the 93-volume report are considered crucial for measuring overall quality of care. They include cleanliness, medical supervision of each resident's care, availability of nursing care, and quality of food.

Annual spot inspections are conducted by state survey agencies for the federal Health Care Financing Administration, which administers the Medicare and Medicaid programs.

Medicare is a federal health insurance program for the elderly and disabled. Medicaid is a federal-state health program for the poor.

The federal agency cautioned that infractions don't necessarily reflect a current problem in a nursing home but could be a one-time failure on the part of County jail officials worked to unshackle arriving prisoners at the new detention center on West Industrial Avenue. The 202-man facility accepted its first occupants Wednesday.

Prisoners moved to new jail

■ After several delays, Midland County prisoners are moved to a new $3.9 million detention facility.

By Michael Kashgarian
Staff Writer

Midland County's new $3.9 million jail became home to 19 prisoners Wednesday afternoon:

The Midland Detention Facility, located at 101 W. Industrial Ave., was originally scheduled to open May 1, but was postponed due to construction problems.

"We were behind because of some small problems," said Midand County Sheriff Gary Painter, adding there "still are some problems to work out."

But these problems were not enough to hinder the first transfer of prisoners from the jail on the fifth floor of the county courthouse.

"I'm very pleased we got it in a situation where we got it opened," Painter said after the first seven prisoners were brought in about 3:15 p.m.

In addition to the prisoners transferred Wednesday, a few trusties were housed in the facilities Tuesday, Painter said.

In all, the jail will house up to 202 inmates — 96 in single cells, 96 in multi-occupancy cells, nine in separation cells and one in a padded cell.

Beginning June 1, the new facility will begin directly booking prisoners as they are arrested, Painter said. Currently people incarcerated by Midland police are housed at the city jail on the second floor of the Police Department before being transferred to county facilities.

Federal prisoners, who are at this time also housed in the city jail, will be moved to the new facility closing down the city jail entirely June 1, city jail officials said.

Painter said that the jail will bring in $40 a day for each federal inmate housed in the new facilities. Up to 100 federal prisoners can be

Tonight is expected to be partly cloudy with a less than 20 percent chance of thunderstorms and a low in the upper 60s, NWS said. Friday will be sunny with a high in the mid-90s, NWS said.

Wednesday's high of 97 was nine degrees cooler than the record 106 set one year ago. The overnight low was 65. Today's record low of 48 was set in 1940, NWS said.

STATE

In the waning days of another school year, there was plenty of sunshine overhead to beckon children outdoors on Wednesday.

Skies were mostly sunny over much of the state, with a couple of notable exceptions.

Powerful thunderstorms developed Wednesday afternoon along the South Texas coastline near Brownsville and residents in those area were reporting extremely heavy rainfall.

There also were rainshowers and thunderstorms scattered from north of Lubbock to south of Alpine about 5:30 p.m. Those storms were moving to the southeast at 15 mph.

Temperatures on Wednesday afternoon ranged from the rain-cooled 73 degrees at Brownsville to the 98 degrees at Wink. El Paso was a shade cooler at 97 degrees at 5 p.m.

The winds were generally out of the south and southeast, from 5 to 15 mph. But in South Texas, east winds were common.

NATION

Spring showers fell on much of the nation Wednesday and record cold temperatures chilled spots in the South and East.

A severe thunderstorm watch was posted over eastern and northeast Wyoming, southeast Montana, western South Dakota and the northern Nebraska panhandle.

A large high pressure system, reaching from the Great Lakes to the Ohio Valley, brought chilly temperatures from the Northeast into the eastern third of the nation.

Body of Clovis boy found

CLOVIS, N.M. (AP) — The body of a 6-year-old boy missing since May 8 was found Wednesday in a station wagon parked in front of the family's home, Police Chief Caleb Chandler said.

Chandler told a news conference that the body of Matthew Roberts was found by passersby who smelled a strong odor from the car around 6:30 p.m. The body was found in a compartment in the back of the station wagon, not in the passenger area, police said.

The cause of death was not immediately determined.

"We're all saddened and depressed to learn the child is dead. That's not what we had been praying for," said Mayor James B. Moss.

Moss said that around the time the body was found, townspeople had been holding a community-support meeting for the family.

City Commisioner Gordon Smith said Roberts' parents, Geoff and Debbie Roberts, were at the meeting along with a psychologist and other experts. A note was brought in notifying the family that the child's body had been found, and the mother fainted.

"This search really brought the city together," Moss said. "As many as 10,000 people joined in the search. They pulled together, they were focused. It's just awful that it ended that way."

The child disappeared May 8 after he was left with his grandmother while his mother drove to a nearby store. The child apparently tried to follow his mother and ran out of the house before his grandmother could stop him, police have said.

There were reports that the child had been seen at least three times within hours after he left his home that day. He was said to have been seen alone at a car wash across the street from a junior high school; at a baseball field; and running down an alley.

The Friends of Matthew Foundation last week conducted a nationwide mailing of information on the boy's disappearance. The information was sent to 28,000 police departments, hospitals and places that deal with young people.

And Chandler had said Tuesday that the FBI had been trying to put together a "psychological profile" on the person or people that may have been involved in the disappearance. He said local officers had been working with behavioral scientists from the FBI on the Matthew Roberts case.

overriding the veto — than if state money had been re-distributed by a court-appointed master.

Baressi said Education Commissioner William Kirby estimated that MISD would lose $200,000 in state money next year if state funds were re-distributed among school districts.

Under the legislative plan that moved one step closer to approval Wednesday, Baressi estimated that the district would receive $5 million to $6 million in additional funds next year.

"The total there would be somewhere between $5 million and $6 million, which would be extremely helpful," Baressi said. "It would be to the benefit of the school district, yes, and I would say that it would be to the benefit of the local taxpayers."

Former Texas Supreme Justice Bill Kilgarlin was appointed to the master's position to develop a school finance plan should the Legislature and Clements fail.

The plan would take a "Robin Hood" approach of redistributing existing state aid from wealthier districts to poorer ones, instead of providing more state aid and avoiding the loses, which most lawmakers prefer.

Stiles said the changes made in the Senate to please Hispanic senators may disuade some conservative House members from voting against the governor. That attempt likely will come next week, he said.

A conference committee of House and Senate members will have to find a compromise on the changes, which prescribe a 95 percent standard of equity among school districts instead of a 90 percent standard.

"I am not optimistic about it staying in there," Stiles said.

Sen. Judith Zaffirini, D-Laredo, had said Tuesday she could not support the legislation because the reduced equity standard was inserted during conference committee negotiations before Clements saw the bill.

The Senate had approved the conference committee's bill on a quick voice vote, but Zaffirini said if Hobby had required a role call, she would have voted against it.

She said she and the senators who voiced similar reservations — Truan; Sen. Frank Tejeda, D-San Antonio; and Sen. Hector Uribe, D-Brownsville — are satisfied Senate negotiators will make a good-faith effort when they meet with House counterparts.

Also Wednesday, Education Commissioner William Kirby told the House Public Education Committee school districts that lose money under a court-imposed "Robin Hood" plan either would have to raise taxes or let some teachers go.

The last payments the state legally can send to school districts this fiscal year will go out this coming Friday, he said.

Ceasing payments early means about $1 billion extra will be available to a court-appointed master for redistribution, Kirby said, but wealthier districts may lose about 30 percent of their normal state allotment.

If lawmakers fail to draw their own plan, the master will add the extra money to the $4 billion to $5 billion he legally may redistribute during the next fiscal year.

The master's plan will "go public" June 1, Kirby said. On June 25, attorneys on both sides may comment on the plan in a hearing before State District Judge Scott McCown.

However, if lawmakers succeed in approving a plan before the June 1 deadline, the court's plan would not go into effect. The burden then would be on plaintiffs to prove the new plan is unconstitutional, he said.

Study shows drugs improperly handled in 25 percent of Texas nursing homes

WASHINGTON (AP) — Texas nursing homes fare better than the national average in nearly all performance categories of a federal study released Wednesday.

The biggest problem in the state's approximately 1,050 nursing homes is that drugs are sometimes administered improperly, said the study by the Health Care Financing Administration.

But officials warned the report has many limitations, including 32 performance standards that are poorly defined.

HCFA administrator Gail Wilensky said the results reflect individual judgments of 3,000 evaluators nationwide. And the survey only covers whether minimum standards are being met, which brought questions from the Texas Health Care Association.

"Did an insulin patient not get insulin or did a person get Maalox instead of Maalox Plus?" asked Sara Speights, a spokeswoman for the Texas Health Care Association. "Did they find peeling paint in the pantry or roaches in the soup?"

"What people really need out there are some good practical guidelines for people to choose nursing homes and this is not it," Ms. Speights said.

The study was prepared by HCFA-contracted evaluators who made an unannounced, one-day visit to each Texas nursing home receiving either Medicare or Medicaid last year.

"It is only a snapshot view," said John Willis, nursing home ombudsmen for the Texas Department on Aging. "It does not take into consideration that the quality of care can change overnight in a facility."

"The primary purpose of this report is to provide a solid basis for further inquiry," said Ms. Wilensky.

Other documents required of nursing homes by state and federal regulators cover the same ground in much more detail, she said.

This is the second such study by HCFA, following one in 1988 with similar findings and flaws.

HCFA officials say the report, part of a $100 million survey and certification process for U.S. health care facilities, is designed to help consumers. But its cost, up to $30 for each of the five Texas volumes, may be prohibitive to individuals, a spokesman said.

a single staff member.

"Our publication is not the final definitive word on the nation's more than 15,000 nursing homes," said Gail Wilensky, administrator of HCFA, at a press conference Wednesday. "It provides a snapshot of conditions in each nursing home at the time of inspection. It is not a complete measure of quality of care, but provides basic information needed by the public to ask questions and make informed decisions about nursing homes in their communities."

The Courtyard Care Center failed to meet federal standards in these areas:

- Providing nursing services at all times.
- Assisting residents in daily personal hygiene.
- Providing care necessary to prevent bedsores.
- Regularly checking residents who use a catheter — a tube inserted into the bladder to remove urine.
- Using proper care for administering injections; keeping skin around the hole created by a colostomy clean and free from sores (a colostomy is an operation that removes part of the bowel and creates an artificial anal opening), regularly emptying bags that collect feces; keeping a tracheotomy — a hole in the neck created as a breathing passage — clean and free from congestion, and making sure that tubes used for intravenous feeding remain clean and in the vein.
- Planning menus to meet the nutritional needs of each resident.
- Implementing a health care plan according to instructions from a physician.
- Keeping toilet and bath facilities clean and sanitary.
- Storing and preparing food under sanitary conditions.

In the 1987-1988 survey, the facility fell short on three counts — providing care for daily personal hygiene, care to prevent bedsores and administering drugs according to a doctor's orders.

Donna Hallman, administrator of the 3203 Sage St. center since March, said the facility has put on a healthier face since new owners took over in May 1989.

"We have a good standing with the health department," Ms. Hallman said. "Right now we have no deficiencies. We have everything up to standard."

The West Texas Care Center failed to meet standards for:

- Administering drugs according to a doctor's orders.
- Keeping toilet and bath facilities clean and sanitary.

The first survey report, from the 1987-1988 period, noted failures of West Texas Care Center to comply with standards in administering drugs according to a doctor's instruction, developing a health-care plan for each resident and having an ample supply of linens at all times.

However, Pat Fowler, assistant director of nurses for the center, said the facility has made a "100 percent turnaround" since new owners took over in late April.

The center, now known as Rockwood Manor, 2000 N. Main St., no longer has the problems listed by federal officials.

"I invite you to come in and look at the nursing home any time," Ms. Fowler said. "All our deficiencies have been corrected. We have a good nursing home. We have nothing to hide."

Ms. Fowler said the home is anxious for the return of state inspectors.

"Our new owners are just fabulous," she said. "They have made a big difference. We have big plans for the nursing home."

Terrace West Nursing Center did not meet the standard in one category — administering drugs according to a doctor's orders. In the previous survey, the facility was substandard in regularly checking residents who use a urinary catheter and in administering drugs according to a doctor's prescription.

Terrace West Administrator Russell Rogers said the center has met federal standards in all categories since he began working at the facility last November.

"We're doing a real good job there," Rogers said. "We've got a lot of good help. We're considered one of the best in town."

Though neither West Texas Care Center nor Terrace West failed in the bedsore prevention or bedsore treatment category, both had high numbers of patients with bed sores.

Fifty-six of the 115 patients at Terrace West Nursing Center had bedsores on the day of the facility's inspection — 10 times the national average for similar facilities. At West Texas Care Center, 10 of 72 residents had bedsores.

The report explains that "a large number of residents with these characteristics does not indicate whether those residents are receiving appropriate or inappropriate care." A health official said that in some cases, residents entering a nursing home may already have bedsores and may have chosen the facility because of its "ability to provide highly specialized care and services."

Staff writer Brian Pearson contributed to this report.

housed, Painter said, generating as much as $1.45 million annually. Any money raised through holding federal inmates will go toward operating expenses offsetting the cost to taxpayers, Painter said.

Jail financing came from a $3.8 million voter-approved bond issue in January 1988, with the debt being retired in 2001.

In addition to city, county and federal inmates, the new facility also will house state prisioners, Painter said.

The jail, a 36,830-square-foot facility, will employ 62 workers, including jailers, supervisors, clerks, nurses and cooks.

Despite the opening of the new jail, the old county jail, which can hold up to 104 inmates, will remain in operation incarcerating pretrial detainees, Painter said.

The jail is designed so the building can be enlarged to eventually accommodate 576 inmates.

BUSH: Testimony heard by committee

Silverado failure, approved $106 million in loans to Walters, who defaulted on the entire amount.

"There was no conflict of interest," Bush said of the loans. "I didn't have any financial interest or any interest otherwise in ay of" Walters' enterprises.

Good and Walters failed to appear before the banking committee and were among those to whom the panel issued subpoenas.

Rep. Jim Leach, R-Iowa, defended Bush. "It's inconceivable that Neil Bush wittingly did anything wrong," Leach said. "He appears to have been used."

Stephen Hershkowitz, deputy director of enforcement for the Office of Thrift Supervision, and other regulators said Tuesday that Silverado made inflated loans to developers who had to reinvest part of the money in the thrift.

The regulators told the committee that under the "quid pro quo" lending program at Silverado, developers received loans to buy buildings at inflated values set by outside appraisers.

In exchange, the developers were required to use the surplus part of the loan money to buy preferred stock in Silverado's holding company or to purchase an interest in a "loan pool" set up by the thrift.

Reagan asks senior for 19-volume scrapbook

BUCKEYE, La. (AP) — Kim Marler is honored that former President Ronald Reagan would like her 19-volume scrapbook for his presidential library, but she's not sure whether she'll give or loan them.

"I'd like to have him have them in his library. But I worked on this for nine years, so I don't want to just give them up," said Miss Marler, who graduated Monday from Buckeye High School.

She showed Reagan and Nancy Reagan the scrapbooks about his presidency May 17 in Baton Rouge, where Reagan gave the commencement speech at Louisiana State University Friday.

"Words couldn't describe what I went through. I was nervous at first, and then I kind of got relaxed. They were normal people just like me," she said.

She said the former president told her the scrapbooks would be a valuable contribution to his presidential library, now under construction in California.

When first asked if she'd give the scrapbooks, she said she'd probably lend them to the library. "They'll be more protected there," she said. In a later telephone conversation, she said, "I may donate or loan them."

Miss Marler got more of the Reagans' time and company than she had expected. The meeting was scheduled for 10 minutes but lasted 35, she said. She also had been told Mrs. Reagan probably would be resting after the couple's return from Europe. However, when she asked if she could meet Mrs. Reagan, she said, the former president brought his wife into the room.

Mrs. Reagan joined her husband in conversation and looking through the scrapbooks, and pointed out that one item had been pasted in twice, about eight pages apart, Miss Marler said.

The Reagans often stopped to reminisce about memories brought up by one photograph or another, said Miss Marler. She said Reagan went into particular detail about the 1981 assassination attempt.

"He talked about how the bullet entered him. When he got to the hospital, he could hardly walk. His suit was brand new, and they had to cut if off him," she recounted.

East Germans demand closure of Soviet base

NEURUPPIN, East Germany (AP) — Residents of this village are tired of the screeching and thundering from the Soviet military air base in their midst, and they are waging a lively campaign to get it closed.

A Soviet warplane that accidentally dropped three bombs on a neighboring village has added new fuel to the 2½-year-old campaign, which has gone public since the fall of East Germany's Communist regime.

Thousands of demonstrators converged at the airfield this week, and a protest letter to Soviet President Mikhail S. Gorbachev will soon be on its way.

"We think it's shocking that despite huge political changes, war is still being waged over our town," said Pastor Heinz Joachim Karau, who organized Monday's protest of between 5,000 and 8,000 residents — estimates vary.

More than 7,200 people have signed a petition demanding closure of the base in Neuruppin, home to 22,000 people and about an hour's drive northwest of Berlin.

While government leaders debate the likely pullout of U.S. and Soviet troops from central Europe, residents of Neuruppin say noise from the Soviet base has driven them crazy for years.

Windows rattle, houses shake, hospital patients are frightened. One doctor said children are subjected to possible mental disturbances from the fighter jet and helicopter noise.

"They say this is one of the noisiest areas in all of Europe," said 61-year-old Guenter Knoerr, a retired butcher.

Knoerr, his son-in-law and his grandchildren were among those who took part in the protest at the base, which is just outside the town center.

"When the MiGs started up, the kids came screaming into the house," said another protester who used to live next to the base.

During the demonstration, about 150 people raced onto the runway, where they briefly confronted Soviet soldiers. The march included mothers pushing baby carriages and young children riding on their fathers' shoulders.

"We live right near the airfield, and we just can't stand it. The windows rattle when the planes go by. We can't even really watch television," said Knoerr's 63-year-old wife, Marga.

On Wednesday, a Soviet warplane swooped in for a landing just above a moderately busy street.

Residents are well aware their protests would have landed them in jail as recently as last fall.

A massive secret police network kept residents in check under the regime of former Communist Party boss Erich Honecker, ousted in October's peaceful revolution.

Before Honecker's fall, Neuruppin residents worked out a scheme to make their longstanding grievances known. Since petitions to the government were forbidden, in December 1987 churchgoers wrote to their pastors.

The clerics then passed the letters of protest to the local Soviet commander, who responded with a one-page letter offering no hope of change.

"We thought it was all in vain," said Lutheran Church Pastor Karau in his cluttered study, with a large crucifix on the wall.

Then, four days after the Berlin Wall opened in November, 10,000 people gathered for a protest march.

Monday's demonstration came just four days after bombs were accidentally dropped on the neighboring village of Raegelin. No one was injured, and the bombs did not explode, but two of them ripped through a barn roof and a third slammed to the ground near a lake where young people were sitting.

Iliescu says opposition must accept defeat

BUCHAREST, Romania (AP) — Ion Iliescu, Romania's interim president and now its president-elect, accused his opposition of political immaturity Wednesday for complaining that his lopsided victory in weekend elections was fraudulent.

Iliescu

He rejected a proposal that a commission be set up to investigate allegations of electoral fraud, a major demand of the chief U.S. government observer, Gov. Garrey Carruthers, R-N.M.

"None of the foreign observers could point to even one fact that constitutes fraud," Iliescu insisted. "It's all based on claims by the opposition."

Iliescu reiterated at a news conference Wednesday his claim of a complete break with his Communist past, and said he wanted the new government to include "competent people, regardless of party affiliation."

According to a near-final tally of the vote released Wednesday, Iliescu received 85 percent of the votes for president and his National Salvation Front 67 percent of the votes for the two-chamber Parliament.

Iliescu said, "The opposition doesn't want to accept the result because it's not in their favor. ... They misunderstand the political game and are displaying political immaturity. It's very sad when someone doesn't know how to lose."

Iliescu and the Front have dominated government since the December revolution that toppled Communist dictator Nicolae Ceausescu. Opposition parties and demonstrators have accused both of being neo-Communist.

The president-elect called this charge an "election slogan."

Lithuania again seeking talks

MOSCOW (AP) — Lithuania's parliament tried again Wednesday to get the Kremlin to the negotiating table by offering to suspend some of the laws it passed after declaring independence March 11, but not the declaration itself.

Lithuanian officials said earlier Wednesday that Soviet energy sanctions imposed on the Baltic republic five weeks ago will force all but emergency vehicles off the road by the weekend.

Lithuania's president, Vytautas Landsbergis, encouraged countrymen to "survive as though we were in a surrounded fortress."

"We are poor, but we'll not starve to death," Landsbergis said in a speech reported by the Lithuanian news agency ELTA. "Our main weapon is unity and stamina."

In a conciliatory gesture, the republic's Supreme Council voted 74-15, with 10 abstentions, for a resolution that offers to suspend the laws if Moscow agrees to talks.

The resolution did not spell out which laws could be suspended, but Soviet officials have objected to measures that would create a system of special identification cards for Lithuanian citizens, bar Soviet army draft boards in Lithuania and establish Lithuanian control over its borders.

Wednesday's resolution said Lithuania decided "to temporarily suspend, for the period of official interstate negotiations, those actions and decisions arising from realization of the March 11, 1990, acts of the Supreme Council of the Republic of Lithuania related to interests that could be defined by both parties as objects of negotiations," said a text released by the Lithuanian parliament's press office.

Soviets debate economic shift

MOSCOW (AP) — The government will lay its future on the line in the Soviet Union's first national referendum, in which voters will consider a shift to a market economy that could cost tens of millions of jobs, officials said Wednesday.

The government believes it must have clear public support before starting the potentially destabilizing five-year reform plan, First Deputy Premier Yuri Maslyukov told a news conference.

"If the program is not approved, it is my opinion the government should resign," Maslyukov said, referring to the Council of Ministers led by Premier Nikolai I. Ryzhkov.

It was unclear whether the public would endorse the reforms, which would double food prices Jan. 1, 1991, lead to widespread closures of inefficient factories, and eventually allow private ownership of most businesses.

Ryzhkov was to present the plan Thursday to the Supreme Soviet parliament, where some radical reformers were planning to seek his resignation. He survived a similar no-confidence vote last fall.

Violence continues

JERUSALEM (AP) — Thousands of flag-waving Israelis celebrated the 1967 capture of Arab east Jerusalem, and the government launched a counteroffensive at critics who link its hard-line policies to the killings of seven Arabs.

In neighboring Jordan, a Palestinian rioter was shot to death and four other people, including two policemen, were seriously wounded during a six-hour clash at the Hitteen refugee camp near the capital of Amman, police reported.

Hundreds of Jordanian police fired live ammunition and tear gas at the massed demonstrators in an effort to prevent looting and rioing but police said two branches of the Jordan Housing Bank on the outskirts of the refugee camp were gutted by rioters.

Police said the dead rioter "was killed by a bullet of a type not used by the police," implying he was shot accidentally by other demonstrators.

'Drug war' criticized

BOGOTA, Colombia (AP) — Colombia's presidential frontrunner said Wednesday the United States must work harder to stop the narcotics trade and more vigorously prosecute drug suspects like Washington Mayor Marion Barry.

Cesar Gaviria, the only one of four candidates in Sunday's election to take a hard-line stand on Colombia's drug traffickers, complained that Colombians are dying in the drug war while other nations take only limited action.

In a statement released Wednesday, Gaviria said the United States and other industrial countries must take more responsibility. He said other countries "are not showing a serious commitment to end this scourge" of drug traffickers.

Shooting condemned

MEXICO CITY (AP) — The government has condemned the fatal shooting of a Mexican in California by a law-enforcement officer.

The foreign ministry said in a statement Tuesday that the Mexican government was asking its consulate in Sacramento to look into the role the California Highway Patrol played in the death of Jose Eleazar Lopez.

Law-enforcement authorities in San Diego said the man was shot after lunging at officers with a bricklayer's tool along Interstate 5 in La Jolla.

Highway Patrol officers noticed the man walking along the northbound freeway lanes Monday morning and, when they began pursuing him, he ran in front of traffic and scaled the center divider, authorities said.

The Highway Patrol said an officer shot Lopez when he lunged with the tool, apparently attempting to stab the officer.

Dalai Lama comments

VENICE, Italy (AP) — The Dalai Lama, Tibet's spiritual leader, said Wednesday that China may eventually accept democratic change and loosen its grip on his Himalayan homeland.

However, he said the process, if it occurs, will take up to a decade.

Opening a private visit to Italy, last year's Nobel Peace Prize winner said he hoped the changes sweeping Eastern Europe will also occur in China and lead to greater freedom for Tibet.

"I predict, however, that it will be a long process, from five to 10 years — although that's not meant to be a prophecy," he told reporters at Marco Polo Airport.

Cheney says nuclear shell 'problem' solved

BRUSSELS, Belgium (AP) — Defense Secretary Dick Cheney on Wednesday acknowledged a safety problem with U.S. nuclear artillery shells in Europe but said it was fixed and there never was a risk of accidental nuclear explosions.

In 1988, he said, officials found that the W-79 howitzer shells did not meet minimum safety standards. "The necessary steps were taken to assure (it) does meet our very high safety standards today," Cheney said.

The Washington Post reported Wednesday that the United States was repairing artillery shells and examining the design of two kinds of missiles because of the risk of an accidental nuclear explosion.

Responding to the story, Cheney told reporters: "It is important here not to over-dramatize the nature of the problem. I will simply say that ... there was no danger, but that the shells in question did not meet the very high standards that we have. I don't believe there was any cause for concern."

He declined to go into details of what was done to correct the problems, saying such matters are classified. He spoke after a two-day NATO defense ministers' meeting.

The bulk of U.S. nuclear shells are in West Germany, with the remainder stockpiled in the Netherlands and Italy.

Cheney said the West German government was told "we had identified the problem and that we had solved the problem."

Speaking at a separate news conference in Brussels, West Germany's defense minister, Gerhard Stoltenberg, confirmed this but said his government was not told what was wrong with the shells.

He said this was normal. In the past, he said, U.S. officials have informed Bonn of "modifications" to U.S. nuclear arms on German soil without detailing the modifications.

He said U.S. officials have said there was "at no point in time any danger" to either personnel or the environment, Stoltenberg said.

In the Netherlands, where some U.S. nuclear weapons are based, a Dutch Defense Ministry spokesman said: "We are always informed when the Americans are planning maintenance" on nuclear weapons there.

The spokesman, Martijn Verbrugge, would not say when, or if, Dutch officials were told about problems with the nuclear shells.

The Washington Post said U.S. troops in Europe were warned not to move the shells until they were fixed.

The problem with the W-79 shell was one of three found recently by Energy Department experts, it said.

A special committee will review the W-88 warhead on the new seaborne D-5 missile, the Post said. And it said special flight restrictions have been instituted pending review of the W-69 warhead on the short-range SRAM-A missile carried by some bomber aircraft.

The two warheads use the same volatile fuel that experts feared could explode in certain accidents and set off the conventional explosives that trigger the nuclear ones.

Those conventional explosives surround a mass of plutonium and compress it from all sides to the point where the nuclear chain reaction begins, causing a nuclear explosion in a split second.

John C. Tuck, an acting assistant secretary at the Department of Energy, told a congressional subcommittee Wednesday that his agency "is satisfied" that the W-79 howitzer warhead is safe. He said the W-88, a Trident missile warhead, "is a safe warhead" as well.

However, he said the W-69 may be removed from alert-status aircraft and stored until actually needed.

Stanford University physicist Sidney D. Drell, who has been named to a subcommittee panel with two other outside physicists to study the safety of U.S. nuclear weapons, said Wednesday, "I don't think there is any question of coverup or negligence."

"They just wanted to appoint three of us with some experience to give our best technical judgment about what's being done and how it's being done and whether it's appropriate."

In the telephone interview from his New York office, he said he expected the panel to start work this summer. He said he was uncertain how long its studies would take.

Senate maintains curbs on nine assault weapons

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate, responding to appeals from police, voted Wednesday to maintain restritions on nine semiautomatic weapons as part of omnibus crime legislation.

"There are too many bullet holes in blue suits. There are too many women weeping over coffins. There are too many children without fathers," said Sen. Dennis DeConcini, D-Ariz.

The 52-48 vote came as a sharp defeat for the National Rifle Association, which had lobbied to kill the curbs in the wide-ranging bill. Officials of the Fraternal Order of Police and other law enforcement groups had called on the Senate to support the restrictions.

The Bush administration opposes the restrictions, which would bar the import of five foreign-made assault weapons and outlaw U.S. manufacture of four others.

The vote came as the Senate debated the larger crime bill that calls for the death penalty for 30 federal crimes, including presidential assassination.

Hours after the Senate acted on assault weapons, it voted 50-47 to uphold a provision of the bill designed to end long delays in carrying out death sentences while courts determine if the trials were constitutional, rejecting an even more stringent version.

Sen. Strom Thurmond, R-S.C., fell short in seeking approval of a rival version that would set a 60-day time limit after conviction for filing such appeals and would give courts a 110-day deadline for reaching a decision.

The version contained in the bill would allow prisoners a year to file such "habeas corpus" appeals and would place no time limit on the courts.

Sen. Arlen Specter, R-Pa., a Thurmond ally, sought to salvage the more stringent plan with a motion to reconsider and the vote was set for Thursday.

Lawmakers said they hoped for a final vote on the overall bill before a scheduled Memorial Day recess.

The narrow margin on the semiautomatic weapons provision prompted critics to call for a quick second vote in an effort to reverse the decision. The Senate voted 50-49 not to reconsider.

The plan would ban the import of:

—Norinco, Mitchell and Poly Technologies Avtomat Kalashikovs.

—Action Arms Israeli Military Industries Uzi and Galil.

—Steyr AUG.

It called for a prohibition on domestic manufacture of:

—INTRATEC TEC-9.

—Street Sweeper-Striker 12.

—Colt AR-15 and CAR-15. Colt now manufactures a new model that critics say is substantially the same, but DeConcini spokesman Dan Manes said it was sufficiently different to be excluded from the bill.

—MAC 10 and MAC 11.

Cause of Conoco refinery fire investigated

PONCA CITY, Okla. (AP) — An investigation team moved through the fire-blackened dewaxing unit at the Conoco Oil Co. refinery Wednesday, checking for clues to the cause of a blaze that heavily damaged the unit.

While flames and a heavy black smoke were highly visible Tuesday evening, refinery manager Dennis Parker said Wednesday that damage estimates will probably be lower than first expected.

"We were very surprised by the amount of equipment not damaged. Much of the area escaped damage compared to what was happening and what we were witnessing last night," Parker said.

Winds whipped fireballs 100 feet into the air and plumes of smoke could be seen as far away as Kansas, some 20 miles north of Ponca City.

No one was injured in Tuesday's fire that was confined to an area about one-third to one-quarter the size of a football field.

Parker did not have an estimate on damage Wednesday and said it has not been determined whether the motor oil dewaxing unit, where the motor oil is dewaxed before it is made into lubricants and then sold, will be rebuilt or what else might happen in that specific area.

Parker said equipment inside the building that burned is in good, almost excellent shape, considering the fire.

He said the company will have a loss of about 2,000 barrels a day of motor oil products produced, but he declined to give a monetary figure on how much the loss would be.

Firefighters battled the blaze at the refinery for more than three hours Tuesday night, company spokesman Lynn Hohensee said.

One company firefighter was taken to St. Joseph Medical Center as a precautionary measure because of apparent heat exhaustion and fatigue, Hohensee said. Hohensee said the firefighter, Hoyt O'Neil, was released about 10 p.m. Tuesday.

The fire began around 6:15 p.m., after most of the 3,800 employees of the 1,300-acre complex were off duty.

The cause of a fire that partially damaged a Conoco Oil Co. refinery in Ponca City, Okla. Tuesday evening is under investigation. There were no serious injuries in the blaze.

Study helps explain how fat, lean store calories

BOSTON (AP) — A study helps explain one of nature's injustices — why some people can eat with abandon and stay slim while others put on weight with the slightest dining no-no.

The answer is individual differences in what the body does with unneeded calories. Some folks tend to store them as fat, others lay them down as muscle.

Since building lean tissue uses up much more energy than storing fat, fat makers grow fat, while muscle makers stay trim. Many people seem to fall somewhere between these two extremes.

The findings come from a unique experiment. Doctors put 12 pairs of identical twins on diets in which they ate 1,000 more calories each day than their bodies needed, and they got almost no exercise.

When it started, all were slim men in their early 20s with no family history of obesity. After 84 days, they had all eaten 84,000 excess calories, but some had grown fat, while others stayed relatively trim.

The man who gained the most weight put on 29 pounds and stored up every extra calorie somewhere on his body. The man who gained the least added 9 pounds and stored only 40 percent of the extra calories.

"It demonstrates for the first time that for a given amount of calories, you have differences in the body's response to the surplus of energy," said Dr. Claude Bouchard, who directed the study. "The individual differences are amazing. They are huge."

The study suggests that individual differences determine to what degree people resist, or succumb, to the excess calories they take in when they eat an ice cream cone or an extra hamburger.

"Almost 40 percent of the weight gain is explained by the propensity to store in the form of lean or fat tissue," said Bouchard. "This is the single most important variable that has been presented in the literature to account for differences in weight gain."

Bouchard's study, performed at Laval University in Ste. Foy, Quebec, in 1988 and 1989 was published in Thursday's New England Journal of Medicine. In the same issue was another twin study conducted at the University of Pennsylvania and an editorial by Dr. Ethan A.H. Sims of the University of Vermont.

Sims wrote that Bouchard's work "will become a classic study."

Because Bouchard's experiment was conducted on genetically identical twins, he was able to provide more evidence to support the widely held idea that obesity is at least partly an inherited disorder.

When one man put on a lot of weight in the study, his twin tended to do the same. The study found that there was three times more variation in weight gain between pairs than within pairs.

The study also found close links between twins regarding whether they tended to grow pot bellies or big bottoms.

In the study, the doctors first determined how much each volunteer needed to eat to stay the same weight and then added 1,000 extra calories to each's diet. They lived under around-the-clock supervision in college dormitories and were allowed to take a half-hour walk each day. But otherwise they did nothing more strenuous than play cards or watch television.

They found genes could explain most of the difference in people's weights, although there was a slight sex difference.

In his editorial, Sims said the two latest reports show that "destiny, in the form of our genetic makeup, has a great deal to do with the shape of our middles."

Deficit problem is 'no' problem

President George Bush is concerned about the deficit; so concerned, in fact, that he says he might be willing to accept higher taxes, the bane of the Republican Party and veritable poison to any candidate seeking office.

That isn't logical thinking by a man who knows full well where budget deficits come from and how to control them.

Isn't the thought of increasing taxation at a time when the national debt is so staggeringly high a lot like a businessman on the verge of bankruptcy taking out a bank loan to pay off his staggering debts? Fine, fine, you say. What's wrong with a little consolidation loan? Nothing, provided he who receives such loan does not foolishly use the money to incur even more debt, which Congress is the past master of doing.

To put the budget dilemma in perspective, consider this information:

- In 1981, with the ink barely dry on President Reagan's tax cut, Congress passed a tax increase bill known as TEFRA that raised $100 billion in new taxes. Then the members of Congress voted to increase spending by $200 billion.
- Daniel J. Mitchell, the Heritage Foundation's John M. Olin senior fellow in political economy, says a tax increase will slow economic growth and could lead to a recession, which in turn would mean less revenue for the federal government and a higher budget deficit.
- Mitchell also says that because of the way projected tax revenues are figured into the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings spending target, "higher taxes would simply permit Congress to meet that target at a proportionately higher level of spending."

Congress has a disturbing pattern of increasing spending no matter what its revenues are. In fact, a study done for Congress' own Joint Economic Committee shows that for every dollar taxes have been increased since 1948, spending has gone up by $1.58.

Furthermore, Congress is struggling with a problem that every grammar school student can answer. If you spend more money than you take in, what can you do about the resulting deficit? The answers, of course, are devise a way to obtain more revenue or spend less.

The Heritage Foundation policy paper goes on to note that federal tax receipts have doubled over the past decade from $517 billion in 1980 to an estimated $1.067 trillion this year. Notes Mitchell, "In both nominal and inflation-adjusted dollars, taxes are at the highest level in U.S. history."

The solution to the federal deficit, President Bush, should not come through more taxation. The members of Congress must simply learn to say no. If Congress attempts to solve the deficit problem through higher taxes, maybe the voters will send some grammar students to Washington, D.C.

School zones need better markings

Since moving to Midland two and one half years ago, I have observed countless motorists speeding through our school zones. I believe that there are three reasons for this:

1. The police are short-staffed and do not have enough radar units to heavily patrol each school zone; 2. Some motorists just don't care; and 3. the school zone times are varied, and they are poorly marked. This is the chief reason for the problem.

The school year is almost over, and so far, we have been extremely lucky that we have not had a child killed in a school zone. Is that what it is going to take before our city acts and properly marks each school zone?

Each school zone should be marked with a flashing yellow light, and the words "SCHOOL ZONE" should be painted across the roadway at the beginning of each school zone. The wide stripe that is currently painted across the street at the beginning of each school zone should also be yellow and not white.

Our children are our future and each one is precious. The money that our city saves by not taking these measures is not worth the life of a single one of them. I urge the school board and demand that the steps that I've listed be taken this summer in order to better safeguard the lives of our children during the next school year.

Motorists, slow down! The few seconds you save by speeding through a school zone are not worth the life of a child.

What is going on in what passes for courts in this country these days?

In a Kansas City case, the U.S. Supreme Court has ordered taxes raised in order to achieve more complete desegregation. In Boston a few years ago, the courts took over the schools to achieve social results that the court (not the people) desired.

And now, in Texas, the courts have decreed that social change should be based on a take from the rich and give to the poor principle.

In ruling that rich districts and poor districts must be equalized in money per pupil, the courts are acting like left wing democrats of a few years ago who advocated taxing the rich to give to the poor in order to equalize resources.

What is this country coming to?

EPA must wait on toxic waste rules

Anderson

WASHINGTON — George Bush is playing in a field of dreams if he still thinks he's the "environmental president." He has balked twice so far on the issues of clean air and wetlands, both times following the bad signals of White House Chief of Staff John Sununu. Now Bush and his minions can add toxic waste to their hall of shame.

For almost two years, the Environmental Protection Agency has been waiting to issue rules for the cleanup of toxic waste sites around the country. And for almost two years, the Office of Management and Budget under Richard Darman has shuffled those rules from desk to desk.

Darman probably thinks he's doing industry a favor, but he isn't. The longer the rules are delayed, the more expensive and extensive the cleanup problem becomes. And if Darman thinks he is saving the federal government any money, he is wrong on that score too. The U.S. government owns 338 of the 4,615 hazardous waste sites on the cleanup list. It would be costly to clean them up now, but it will be more costly to clean them up later.

The toxic wastes are industrial leftovers, and in the case of most of the federally owned sites, hazardous waste generated by the military.

What the EPA can't seem to pry out of Darman and his underlings are the "corrective action rules" to put into effect the Resource Conservation and Recovery Act. The act simply orders the cleanup of industrial sites where toxic waste is generated. But the rules specify how the cleanup must be done, and until businesses have those rules, it would be a waste of their time and money to begin.

The law was passed in 1984 and amended in 1987. By this time, the cleanup effort should have been in full swing, but it isn't. The OMB's delay tactics have forced the EPA regional offices to proceed with only a fraction of the cleanup efforts mandated by the law. An April 1990 report from the General Accounting Office notes that none of the 4,615 sites has been completely cleaned up yet.

The EPA isn't the only angry party. Congress is fed up with the delays too. And industry giants have figured out what Darman and his staff can't — that the longer they wait, the more the cleanup will cost. Environmentalists are concerned that the longer this hazardous garbage sits around, the greater threat it will pose to air, water and soil.

Our associate Tim Warner obtained correspondence between the EPA and OMB dating back to 1988. In a letter last month, EPA Assistant Administrator Don R. Clay wrote, "I will reiterate my frustration regarding the length of time that the review process for this proposed rule has taken."

What EPA gets from OMB in response to its pleas are repetitive responses calling for more and more speculative data to substantiate the restrictiveness of the proposed rules.

This isn't the first time the OMB has dragged its feet to the detriment of the environment. In 1986 it took a ruling from a federal judge to get the OMB to move on some EPA regulations mandated by Congress.

Congress goofed this time because it didn't set a deadline for the toxic waste cleanup rules. Congress preferred to let EPA move at the pace it deemed appropriate. The lawmakers trusted the EPA to do the right thing, but they didn't reckon with the OMB.

If OMB continues to drag its feet, Congress may step in with a stern lecture and firm deadlines.

S&L scandal needed big-name players

Buchwald

'There's something missing from the S&L scandal," Tom Jolly told me.

"What's that?"

"There are no names. How can people scoop up $500 billion and we don't even know who they are?"

"What about Charles Keating? He's a name."

"He's not a household name like the guys in Watergate. At least with Watergate we knew who did it to us. I think that the rule should be if someone walks away with more than $100 billion, the public ought to be told who he is."

"You can't compare Watergate with the S&L scandals."

"Why not?" Tom asked.

"Because Watergate was a crime of passion. The S&L rip-off was a combination of ignorance and greed.

"That's why there are no S&L names. You don't think that Nixon, Haldeman, Erhlichman or Colson would steal the savings of widows and orphans, do you?"

"What about the five senators who made life easy for Charlie Keating when the feds were after him?" he asked.

"They're small potatoes and don't belong in the same league with the men and women who sank 500 of the biggest S&Ls in the country. Your problem is that you are looking for someone to hate because you and every other American are being stuck with the tab.

"It's true that a good deal of the $500 billion went to S&L executives for wine, women and lawyers. But you can't demand your pound of flesh just because somebody is driven by avarice and the will to win."

Tom said, "Irangate didn't involve as much money but at least it had someone you could point a finger at with contempt. Take Ollie North or General Secord or Admiral Poindexter. Americans had a rooting interest in what happened to them. We know less about the S&Ls than Ronald Reagan remembers about Irangate."

"I'm sure that the administration is working on finding the wrongdoers right now," I assured him.

"Why weren't they working on it before the money was stolen?"

"Because at that time the savings and loans were deregulated. If you watch an industry which is deregulated, it could appear that it was being regulated.

"The government had assurances from the owners of the S&Ls that they would operate strictly within the law.

"Unfortunately, under deregulation what is within the law to one banker is not necessarily within the law to another. What more can the Treasury be expected to do?"

"I want them to round up the usual suspects, march them into the courtroom and, at the end of the trial, sentence them to community service scrubbing the marble floors of the S&Ls they drove into the ground. I'd like to see their faces plastered on the front pages of the newspapers. I also want them to return all the money that they gave to their girlfriends before they went bankrupt. Then I think they should go to jail."

"You're asking a lot for the looting of a paltry half a trillion dollars. I have nothing against going public about those who filched the money, but the purpose of prison is to rehabilitate people. If they are sent to the slammer, they won't be any the wiser about S&Ls than they are now," I said.

"So what! If Leona Helmsley can go to jail, why can't the S&L guys?"

"We all wish we knew the answer to that question."

GEORGE WILL

Budget drama renews, redefines success

Will

WASHINGTON — If you blinked, you missed it, although you did not miss anything much. The budget drama was as surreal as "Twin Peaks," but had a shorter run. It is over. The four essentials of the probable agreement are apparent.

Gramm-Rudman will be changed; the costs of the savings-and-loan debacle will not be counted in deficit calculations; there will be a small bow toward honest accounting regarding Social Security, but not change in the use of the money; and Congress and the President will announce themselves too responsible to cut the deficit by more than, oh, 17 percent.

Gramm-Rudman deficit-reduction "requirements" (rarely met) will be relaxed, yet again, to make them easier to meet. Or, to be precise, the targets will be moved so that they will not be missed by such ludicrous amounts. An administration official says, solemnly, that because of the Gramm-Rudman requirements, "We are condemned to succeed." Rubbish. They will succeed by semantic fiat — by redefining success.

This will be done to serve the single imperative governing the budget process, the political convenience of the participants. But it will be justified with reference to what will be done with Social Security. Sen. Pat Moynihan has inconveniently proposed honesty. The budget deal will use just enough honesty to facilitate a larger larceny.

The budget deal may well take Social Security out of the deficit calculation, thereby revealing the deficit to be more than $60 billion higher than current bookkeeping makes it seem. This $60 billion swerve toward honesty (only toward: we will not be there until other trust funds — highway, airport, military and civil-service retirement — are removed from the calculation) will be used to justify despairing about, and hence, relaxing those Gramm-Rudman requirements.

But the Social Security revenues will still be spent, as usual. Neat, no? Honesty, used sparingly in dribs and drabs, can be politically useful: By removing these revenues from the deficit calculation, the budget-makers will justify relaxing the deficit-cutting requirements, without interfering with the fun of spending the money. But Moynihan's proposal for real reform — not using a regressive payroll tax to run the government — stands little chance in a Washington reform contest. (Charlie Chaplin once entered a Charlie Chaplin look-alike contest in Monte Carlo. He finished third.)

Next, the budgeters will agree to keepture. Finally, both sides will become most awfully solemn in saying that there is a consensus that, with the economy softening, this is not the time to cut the deficit by more than, say, $50 billion (about 17 percent of the honestly calculated deficit of $280 billion).

Hmmm. We went, in a blink, from "The deficit doesn't matter and, besides, it is evaporating in the heat of economic health" to "The deficit is so damn big we dare not do more than prune it, lest grass grow in the streets of America's cities."

What caused this shift from pianissimo to fortissimo? From time to time, astronomers have correctly postulated the existence of heavenly bodies that were not (yet) observable. They have done so by inferences from the behavior of bodies that were observable: Those bodies were behaving in ways best explained by gravitational effects of bodies as yet unseen. So: What can we infer, from this changed behavior, that President Bush has seen? Or: What is he inferring on the basis of changes he has seen in the economy?

President Bush says he does not want to frighten us. (Said Fred Astaire to a new dancing partner, "Don't be nervous. Just don't make any mistakes." Reassuring.) That is why he will not say what he has seen that caused him, just a few months after saying that everything is hunky-dorry, to say that the deficit problem is "urgent."

To be precise (more precise than he is about economic projections), what he says is: He is reticent lest he "inadvertently" frighten financial markets by exaggerating the budget problem. Is the budget the "urgent" problem he has in mind? Oh, well, then, try this: Do not exaggerate, inadvertently or otherwise.

Here is a suggestion for the budgeters: Try the truth. It is not cocaine. It is not illegal, and not habit-forming. They can be occasional users, and this would be a good occasion.

George Will's column is distributed by Washington Post Writers Group.

Survey results oppose demise of penny

WASHINGTON (AP) — Nickels from Heaven? A nickel saved is a nickel earned? A nickel for your thoughts?

No, say nearly two out of three penny-pinching Americans in a Gallup Poll released Wednesday as a House Banking subcommittee considered a bill to round off cash transactions to the nearest 5 cents.

The proposal, which the respondents obviously considered to be nickel-and-dime legislation, would keep pennies as legal tender "to a maximum of 25 cents, only if used in quantities divisible by 5 without fraction or remainder."

That's the legislative way of saying you could use up your pennies only in groups of five and no more than 25 at one time.

Rubbish, say 62 percent of the Americans surveyed, who find the idea penny-wise and pound-foolish.

Some people might regard the penny as a nuisance. Stores often keep a cup of pennies at the cash register so customers don't have to dig to the bottoms of their purses and pockets for lint-covered coins.

Pennies no longer have much use except for buying gumballs out of drugstore machines. Even the game of pitching pennies has lost much of its appeal. The most common use of pennies is to help pay for items priced at levels not divisible by five.

But introduce a bill in Congress to do away with them, and Americans become downright sentimental. Not to mention suspicious that they'll end up paying more for things.

Seventy-seven percent said they are worried that merchants will raise prices to compensate for losses due to rounding.

"Almost all Americans recognize the penny as a historical example of thrift and resourcefulness," the survey said, with 92 percent agreeing with the statement that the penny "is a long-standing tradition in this country," and the 62 percent opposing its demise.

The survey of 750 adults, conducted by telephone between April 23 and April 26, has a margin of potential sampling error of plus or minus 4 percent. It was sponsored by a group called Americans for Common Cents, whose name suggests how it feels on the subject.

The pending House bill, introduced last year by Rep. Jimmy Hayes, D-La., calls for rounding the sales price down to the nearest nickel if the price ends in 1, 2, 6 or 7 cents; the price would be rounded up if the sum ends in 3, 4, 8 or 9 cents.

The Treasury would still make pennies, but only for collectors.

The survey revealed that women are more loyal to the penny than men, with 70 percent of women opposing the change and 54 percent of men.

NATION IN BRIEF

Summer air fare war gets going

NEW YORK (AP) — The summer is not traditionally a time for airline fare wars, but this year some of the nation's big carriers are discounting domestic ticket prices to get more vacation travelers.

United Airlines made the first strike Monday with newspaper advertisements containing coupons good for $35 off round-trip tickets of $175 or more. Trans World Airlines joined the fray a day later, cutting some of its domestic round-trip fares by up to 30 percent, and American Airlines, Delta Air Lines and USAir piled in Wednesday.

Industry analysts say that so far, the fare cuts pose little danger to the companies' earnings.

"There are some diminishing returns as far as profitability, but you don't give up market share to someone else," said Paul H. Nisbet, an analyst with Prudential-Bache Securities Inc.

But if the war escalates, earnings could become a casualty, he said.

Widow's funds returned

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — A 93-year-old widow has $127,000 coming to her from stocks and cash she simply forgot about more than 20 years ago, state officials said Wednesday.

Thea Sala will get $127,045, found in an unclaimed safety deposit box said Controller Gray Davis. It was recovered under a state program to return unclaimed property to its owners.

A check for $37,891 will be written for the cash portion and the rest, mostly stock, will be turned over within six weeks, Davis said.

Toasters recalled

WASHINGTON (AP) — Nearly 9,000 four-slice toasters will be replaced because a defective switch poses a fire hazard or could burn or severely shock users, the manufacturer said Wednesday.

Toastmaster Inc. of Columbia, Mo., told the Consumer Product Safety Commission it will replace 8,857 of its model D126T toasters because the defective switch allows the electric heating elements to continue operating after the toasting cycle has been completed.

The chrome-based toasters were manufactured and sold nationwide between April and June 1989. The Toastmaster name appears on a black and silver nameplate in the lower right-hand corner of each toaster.

Consumers should also check the crumb tray at the bottom of the toaster for a five-letter and digit date code enumerated from EL101 to EL158.

Consumers may call the company at 1-800-527-3069 for instructions on returning the toasters.

Cochrane acquitted

SAN DIEGO (AP) — The former skipper of the USS Kinkaid was acquitted of criminal liability Wednesday in the collision of the destroyer with a merchant ship off the Malay Peninsula, an accident that killed one crewman.

Cochrane, who was relieved of his command about a week after the accident, smiled and embraced his attorneys, then his wife, Suzanne, upon hearing the judge's verdict.

Pit-bull report checked

DENVER (AP) — Police and NBC are investigating allegations that a television station staged a fight between two pit bull terriers for a report on illegal dog fights.

KCNC-TV insists it received a videotape of the fight in the mail.

The allegations arose from a four-part series on illegal dog fights compiled by KCNC reporter Wendy Bergen and two video camera operators. In Colorado, staging a dog fight or attending one is a felony punishable by up to four years in prison and a maximum $1,000 fine.

One of the series of reports — broadcast April 29 through May 2 during a ratings "sweep" period — featured the fight between two unmuzzled dogs that police say occurred on a grassy area near the South Platte River in Sheridan, a Denver suburb.

Arkansas ready for holiday tourists

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP) — The entire state of Arkansas is not under water and the operative word is not.

That's the message that the state Department of Parks and Tourism is trying to get out to potential Memorial Day tourists.

Richard Davies, interim state Parks and Tourism Department chief, said Tuesday that he is worried about the effects of broad brush publicity.

Joe Rice, state tourism director, said employees in Little Rock have fielded about 200 calls a day from tour operators and potential tourists.

Flash flooding occurred Saturday night in Hot Springs — one of the state's top tourist areas — but the water was gone 24 hours later. Much of the flooding earlier along the Arkansas and Red rivers involved farmland.

Of the state's 48 parks, only five have been affected by the flooding. Millwood State Park near Ashdown (Little River County)is closed because of high water, Davies said. It is also expected that Moro Bay State Park, in south-central Arkansas, will be closed. Portions of three other state parks — Lake Catherine, Jacksonport, and DeGray — will be closed.

State highways get green light

■ Including SH 158 and SH 349 in the statewide Trunk System eventually will mean less taxing drives on four-lane roads to San Angelo and Lubbock.

By Brian Pearson
Staff Writer

Midland motorists on their way to San Angelo or Lubbock eventually will be able to blast past those lumbering oilfield trucks, creeping farm machines and wide-bodied recreational vehicles.

The State Department of Highways and Public Transportation decided earlier this week to include State Highways 158 and 349 in a transportation improvement program.

As part of the Trunk System proposal, more than 11,500 miles of Texas roads within the next 30 years will become four-lane highways, providing easier access to both interstates and large cities.

Under the plan, 54 miles of SH 349 between Midland and Lamesa and 69 miles of SH 158 between here and Sterling City would be converted to four-lane highways.

SH 349 motorists would have four-lane cruising between Midland and Lubbock, which is connected to Amarillo by Interstate 27. An expanded SH 158 would create four-lane links to interstates and other four-lane highways leading to Austin, Houston and San Antonio.

"For anybody or any business wanting to relocate, one of their first questions is what access there is to and from the community," Midland Assistant City Attorney Keith Stretcher said Wednesday.

Stretcher noted the heavy oil and agriculture transportation traffic between Midland, Lubbock and Amarillo. Meanwhile, SH 158 is a well-traveled thoroughfare to Lake Spence, Oak Creek Reservoir and Lake Nasworthy.

No timetable has been set for the beginning of the two state-funded road improvement projects, he said, adding that the city should feel lucky just to have the highways on the Trunk System map.

The department had left SH 158 and SH 349 off an initial plan developed last fall, leaving Interstate 20 as Midland's only major link to the state's four-lane system.

"When the list was first published, Midland was the only metropolitan area in the state not on it," Stretcher said.

Stretcher, Mayor Carroll Thomas, Councilman Robert Rendall, Rep. Tom Craddick, R-Midland, and other Midland representatives had to lobby the state to put SH 158 and SH 349 on the plan.

Starting last fall, the representatives attended public Trunk System hearings in Amarillo, Austin and San Angelo. The officials during the meetings emphasized the economic importance of Midland to the state, Stretcher said.

Representatives from Lamesa, Lubbock and Glasscock County also supported Midland's efforts, he said. "It was a lot of hard work that got Midland on the Trunk System," he said.

Robert Cuellar, State Department of Highways and Public Transportation engineer, said the system is critical to future transportation needs.

"This is what the state would consider priority roads," Cuellar said.

However, no timetable has been set for prioritizing and constructing the road projects, he said.

"There are several issues that have not been addressed," he said. "We're trying to get this system adopted by the State Highway and Public Transportation Commission."

Cuellar said the system will not be adopted at least until after a June 20 hearing in Austin. After fielding public comments on this week's proposal, state transportation officials will then develop a final version of the Trunk System, he said.

Cuellar said it was Midland representatives' lobbying that swayed the department to put SH 158 and SH 349 on the system map.

"We had several delegations come forward and explain that these routes met the criteria of the Trunk System," he said. He added that only a handful of roads were added to the system after the preliminary proposal was established last fall.

A route was considered for the program if it connected with Mexican points of entry, with roadways from adjacent states or with deep water ports of 40 feet or more, Cuellar said.

Other criteria included major truck routes and road service to large military installations, tourism or recreational areas or cities of more than 10,000 population within 25 miles, he said.

Cheering's stopped after elections at Lee High School

By David Morris
Staff Writer

Cheerleader tryouts are a spring ritual at Lee High School, but at least one parent isn't doing handsprings over this year's outcome.

Carol Abel has threatened to file a lawsuit against the Midland Independent School District because of this year's cheerleader election — which saw her daughter Melissa Gibson, 17, fail to make the squad.

She said she filed a formal grievance with LHS Principal Jack Fryar Wednesday and will wait for his response before deciding whether to file suit.

Ms. Abel claimed that Fryar violated the school's student council constitution by requiring students to vote for an equal number of boy and girl candidates.

The constitution calls for electing eight cheerleaders but doesn't stipulate that the squad consist of four boys and four girls. Only four boys tried out for the squad this year.

"The facts are, we had a ballot that didn't follow our constitution," Ms. Abel said. "He (Fryar) told me point blank, 'I am the constitution.' My question is, who really has the authority to make these changes in the rules?"

Fryar said the rules he outlined for this year's cheerleader election conform to the school constitution.

"There's a difference between procedures and policies," Fryar said, explaining that he has discretion in interpreting the constitution. He said the number of boys and girls elected isn't addressed in the constitution because the number of boys who will try out is not known from year to year.

He suggested that Ms. Abel was disputing his decision because her daughter might have made the squad if he hadn't limited it to four girls.

Fryar said the student body supported his four-boy, four-girl decision.

"The students in this school ... want us to structure the ballots to

Incinerator seeks to be 'good neighbor'

By Ed Todd
Staff Writer

STANTON — All-American Environmental Corp. wants "to be a good neighbor" when — and if — it sets up a multimillion-dollar incinerator along the railroad tracks somewhere in Martin County.

But it's getting flak.

The community doesn't seem enthusiastic about being the site of an $8-million commercial gas-fueled incinerator designed to burn oilfield waste, including hydrocarbons in contaminated soil and the sludge from oil tanks.

"There are places where we are welcome," Joe Kapp, vice president of the Brooklyn, N.Y., based company, politely said Wednesday night following a joint meeting of the Stanton City Council and the Martin County Commissioners.

All-American, which is the incinerator-operating arm of Vulcan Waste Systems Inc. of Wilkes-Barre, Pa., is seeking a joint "host agreement" from the City Council and the Commissioners' Court to lease or buy 50 to 75 acres on which the operate its first plant.

For decades, Vulcan has been in the business of manufacturing and selling steam engine-size incinerators but now is trying to get into the more lucrative operating aspect of the waste-disposal business.

"You make more money when you operate (an incinerator) than when you sell it," Kapp said. Among other liabilities, a manufacturer is open to product-liability lawsuits if something goes awry with a piece of equipment it designed or made. But as both manufacturer and operator, a company has more "control over its destiny," Kapp said.

Otherwise, the manufacturer would have the liability but not the control over an operator which bought a Vulcan furnace.

All-American is seeking either to lease or buy land. But, at any rate, the company is asking for "tax abatements" to help it move in and set operation here.

New junior high school to bear Abell name

■ Foundation named for pioneer oilman has been a "friend" to local educational institutions.

Staff Report

Although it has yet to receive voter approval, Midland's proposed new junior high school already has a name.

Trustees voted Tuesday to name the school George T. Abell Junior High School, in honor of the pioneer oilman in whose memory the foundation which donated the campus site was created.

The Abell-Hanger Foundation donated a 75 percent interest in a 100-acre tract to the Midland Independent School District for the school.

The site, approximately 30 acres of which will be used for the school, is located on the northwest corner of the Loop 250-Texas 349 intersection.

School colors, also approved by trustees Tuesday, will be royal blue and white.

The $8 million school is expected to appear on a fall bond election ballot, and if approved should be open by fall 1992, MISD officials have said.

"I think the Abell-Hanger Foundation has been such a friend to education. ... They have been so generous to our school district, and we felt this was something that would let them know how much we appreciate what they have done for the kids in our community," said Ken Marks, District 7 trustee.

George Thomas Abell came to Midland in 1927, where he trained himself as a geologist and entered the petroleum business as an independent oil operator. In 1939, he married Gladys Hanger of Fort Worth, the daughter of a pioneer Tarrant County family.

A charter member of the Permian Basin Petroleum Pioneers Association, Abell also served on the Midland Independent School District Board of Trustees.

He was board president during construction of the Midland High School auditorium, and was named a life member of the Texas Congress of the PTA.

While serving as director of the Midland Chamber of Commerce, Abell initiated the creation of the Permian Basin Petroleum Museum, Library and Hall of Fame.

He was the first president of the museum's board of trustees and is a member of the Hall of Fame.

Abell died Aug. 13, 1979.

Todd

Way up there in the blue yonder, Joe McShane III was doing a superb job of orchestration.

Actually, he was conducting — playing, you might say — a windplane, otherwise known as an airplane, aeroplane, aircraft. Pretty fancy flying machine.

His flying skills (and music appreciation) certainly were appreciated by another sort of conductor, Don Th. Jaeger, who makes music with his baton and his oboe — his wind instrument.

McShane's passion is flying, which he does high and fast on wings propelled by twin-turboprop engines.

McShane is a pilot, aviator, flier, high adventurer.

Jaeger's passion is music, the classical stream that encompasses the world. He's a conductor, music director, musician, maestro.

Well, on this particular day, McShane, belted in the left seat, was flying his company's aircraft en route to Dallas, which, some say, is the cultural center of the Great Southwest. Snugly strapped in the co-pilot's right seat was Jaeger, the Midland-Odessa Symphony director, who could teach young Joe McShane III a thing or two about conducting a philharmonic just as McShane could teach Jaeger a bit about flying high and low, fast and slow.

Moments before takeoff, McShane turned to his payload of passengers and politely said: "If you all will pay attention to the fasten-seat-belt sign (and buckle up)," McShane said, "and just like Southwest, this is a no-smoking flight. This is always a no-smoking flight."

Once airborne and at altitude, McShane had not much more to do than flying the aircraft, working the radios, watching out for traffic, and passing the time with the conductor.

"I was real lucky," reminisced McShane, whose wife is taking flying lessons. "My parents are both pilots, and I love it (flying). I've been flying since I was 15."

"I feel the same way about sailing," Jaeger said.

Today, McShane is double the age when he started flying, and Jaeger is a good 15 years beyond that. Both are masters at what they do; their performances tell.

And Jaeger dared not tell McShane how to fly the airplane. But McShane sort of suggested he was tempted to take the maestro's baton and fool around.

"Sometime, I'm going to walk up on that stage while Don is in concert," McShane teased, "and everyone will get up and leave."

8-year-old says schoolmates assaulted her

EL PASO (AP) — The parents of an 8-year-old girl who told police that six boys molested her several times at school are angry that little has been done about the alleged sexual assaults.

"I am not trying to do any danger to anybody, I am not trying to get revenge, but I just want these kids to get help because if they did this to my kid, they're doing it to others," the mother said.

No charges have been brought; school officials say they were unable to prove the allegations. Police are continuing their investigation, however.

The girl told her mother on April 17 that a sixth-grader, one fifth-grader and four first-grade boys were involved. She said the assaults took place at Eastwood Knolls Elementary School between October 1989 and April.

An officer interviewed the girl when her mother had her examined by a doctor and determined she had been sexually assaulted, a police report states. "She told the officers she was penetrated both ways," the mother said.

The girl's principal "told me that the kids had denied it and blamed it on my daughter," the girl's father said. The father said the other children told school officials that the girl had teased the boys sexually.

On April 17, a woman found her grandson and the girl on the school playground with their pants off, the girl's mother said. The mother said that when she questioned the girl at home about why she had her pants off, the girl told her of the assaults.

The mother said she saved her daughter's blood-stained underwear. "There was discharge in her underwear that you usually don't find in the underwear of a little girl," the mother said.

"The reason she didn't tell us was they had her scared. They told her they were going to break her sister's bones," the girl's father said.

Eastwood Knolls Principal Carmen Zamora did not return phone messages Wednesday.

"The campus conducted a very extensive investigation on the allegations when they were first reported," said Luis Villalobos, spokeswoman for the Ysleta Independent School District. "She (Ms. Zamora) did interview all the individuals involved, specifically the little girl and the parents ... she did not substantiate any allegations the parents had or the little girl had."

The girl's mother said school officials told her the girl was seen yanking down the pants of boys in the school hallways. "Then how come we were never told? Now they are telling us?" the mother asked.

Villalobos said he was unfamiliar with those allegations. The girl's father said a school administrator told him it happened twice. The father said his daughter told him she did it to get back at the boys.

Police Detective Susan Reed said she does not feel the school was negligent in its investigation and she is still searching for names of the perpetrators.

"It's real touchy. Obviously something happened to her," Ms. Reed said. "(But) she doesn't know who did it. She won't say who did it and we can't find any kids who can say who did it."

The girl's father said he and his daughter gave the boys' names to police.

Although Villalobos said the school's playground is well supervised, the girl's parents disagreed.

"The school needs more security. We take our kids to school because we know they are safe. I think the school is at fault for not providing supervision for these kids," the girl's father said.

CHEERS: Principal says students back decision reflect election of an equal number of boys and girls," Fryar said, citing a vote taken at the school last week.

Fryar said he asked students to vote on whether they wanted an equal number of boys and girls on the varsity squad, and the vote was 1,757 for and 88 against.

Ms. Abel said the vote doesn't matter because it came after the cheerleader elections were held. She said that in addition to violating the school constitution, the election was unfair because some girls trying out had boy partners and others did not.

She said girls who tried out with boys had an unfair advantage because they could perform stunts impossible for girls trying out individually.

Lee cheerleader sponsor Linda Garner said girls are responsible for finding their own cheering partners if they do not want to try out individually or with a group of other girls.

"It's just their personal choice," Ms. Garner said. "If it's an unfair advantage, it's by their own choice."

She said many girls begin searching for tryout partners in the fall, and that Ms. Abel's daughter could have tried out with a boy partner if she wished.

Ms. Garner added that ballots have called for electing an equal number of girls and boys for the past three years.

"About three or four years ago we had our first election where we didn't have a boy elected," she said. "That year we had the all-girl squad we had a lot of complaints and a lot of problems."

She said 10 girls and four boys tried out for cheerleader on April 18, and that all candidates knew how the ballot was structured.

"There were no complaints until after the results were in," Ms. Garner said.

She said Melissa, a junior varsity cheerleader this year, might not have understood election procedures because she signed up late to try out — after the deadline. Ms. Garner said that she allowed Melissa to try out as a kindness.

Ms. Garner said she is giving up her sponsor position because of the controversy surrounding this year's cheerleader election.

"This has been a really big mess," she said. "I've never seen anything like this — it's really strange."

Although Fryar and Ms. Garner suggested that Ms. Abel has been a poor loser, Ms. Abel insisted that the issue is not the fact that her daughter didn't make the squad.

"It's just a matter of ethics now," she said.

Her grievance demands that Fryar apologize to all the girls who didn't make the squad, Ms. Abel said. It also calls for individual rather than dual cheerleader tryouts and for Fryar to follow the school constitution in future elections, she said.

She added that she would like to see new cheerleader elections, possibly in the fall. Melissa declined comment on the grievance.

Junior Nicole Patton, who also failed to make the varsity squad, said she supports Ms. Abel's efforts.

"I would like to see (Mr. Fryar) follow the constitution," Nicole said. "He just runs all of the elections the way he wants them to be run and he doesn't follow the rules.

"We're not fighting to be cheerleaders — we didn't make it and we know it. We just want it to be right in the years to come."

Other students, however, said they thought the election had been fair.

"How else could we have done it?" asked 16-year-old Misty Chapman, a sophomore who voted in the April election.

Teresa Davis, a 17-year-old junior, said she thought it was only fair to elect an equal number of boy and girl cheerleaders, regardless of the school constitution.

She said, "We'd look kind of stupid if there were seven girls and only one guy out there."

School bars Swede from graduation rite

CEDAR HILLS (AP) — The host father and friends of an 18-year-old Swedish exchange student are angry she won't be allowed to participate in graduation ceremonies — even in ceremonial fashion.

But school officials say the district's policy is clear: those without credits get no pomp and circumstance.

And Sophia Rosen, who arrived from Sweden last September, has only six of the 22 credits that would entitle her to a diploma.

"We don't graduate anyone who does not meet graduation requirements," said Cedar Hill Independent School District Superintendent Albert Thomas. "... We never have graduated anyone who hasn't met graduation requirements, and I assume we never will."

School officials say the decision means Ms. Rosen may not march in the parade or appear on stage during the graduation, even if her appearance is ceremonial.

"We don't do ceremonial things," said Cedar Hill Principal Louie Bledsoe.

"It has turned into a very nasty mess," said Jim Coley, Ms. Rosen's host father. "I'm really upset about it."

The girl's classmates have begun circulating a petition calling for Ms. Rosen and three other exchange students to be allowed to participate in graduation ceremonies. Since Monday, more than 230 students have signed it.

"I've been doing everything other students have been doing," Ms. Rosen said.

STANTON: Business wants 'tax abatements' for move

(From 1B)

"It's going to be hard to find some land," surmised Stanton Mayor Danny Fryar, a farmer.

From All-American's viewpoint, the next move on the incinerator proposal is for city and county officials to vote to accept All-American into the community.

"I think the quicker, the better, to get it over with," Fryar said.

Martin County Judge Bob Deavenport said he has "reservations" about the efficacy of the Vulcan Iron Works rotary kiln and its systems and, particularly, about the monitoring process to keep "hazardous" and "toxic" waste out of the furnace.

Earlier in the two-hour meeting, Kapp assured the officials and the spectators in the Martin County Courthouse that the incinerator only would burn oil-field sludge and "associated" contaminants. Further, All-American would operate under guidelines set up by the Environment Protection Agency, the Texas Water Commission, and the Texas Air Control Board.

"Things can move fairly quickly if the project is on go," Kapp said. And the operation would be open to monitoring by anyone who would want to "tap into" the incinerator's operation and its smokestack output with a home or office modem.

"We operate in a fish bowl," Kapp said.

Jim Bradley, an All-American promoter who has been trying to sell Stanton on accepting the incinerator, assured the officials of the safety of its operation.

"It wouldn't be as bad as your following a Greyhound bus from here to Midland," said Bradley, a Lubbock resident. "I live up north and I don't want anything (foul) coming to my house."

Crime Stoppers seeks suspect in robberies

Staff Report

This week Crime Stoppers is asking the public's help in solving two armed robberies that are believed to have been committed by the same man.

The first robbery occurred on April 16 at 5:29 a.m. at the 7-Eleven convenience store, 809 S. Midkiff Road. The suspect was armed with a meat cleaver and a steak knife. He demanded that the clerk put cigarettes and money into a bag. In this case, the clerk fled the store and the suspect chased after him with the apparent intent of assaulting him, police said.

The second robbery occurred on May 3 at 3:16 a.m. at the Kent Kwik convenience store, 3310 W. Wall Ave. The suspect was armed with a 12-inch butcher knife and again demanded cigarettes and cash. The suspect also robbed a customer who came into the store during the robbery.

The suspect is described as a Hispanic man, 6 feet tall, about 130 pounds and has a very thin build. In the first robbery he was wearing cutoffs and a blue T-shirt. In the second robbery he was wearing baggy navy blue pants, a blue shirt and a blue cap worn backwards.

If anyone can identify this suspect of has any information about this crime it could be worth up to a $1,000 cash reward. To reach Crime Stoppers in Midland, call 694-TIPS; in Odessa, call 333-TIPS. All callers can remain anonymous.

El Paso AIDS home open

EL PASO (AP) — El Paso's first home for people with AIDS should open this summer, a local support group says.

The home is a remodeled apartment complex that was refurbished with $488,000 from the federal government, said Terry Call, executive director of the Southwest AIDS Committee, or SWAC.

The home was dedicated Wednesday as Carnell House, named after Douglas Carnell, who died a year ago of AIDS. Carnell was chairman of SWAC.

The house is being run this year mostly with private grants. But Call is preparing a campaign to raise donations from the community and foundations. The committee expects to pay operating costs of $150,000 to $200,000 a year.

Williams' consultants suggest finding Richards' foes

HOUSTON (AP) — A goal of Republican gubernatorial candidate Clayton William's campaign is to find several people who have had a falling out with Democratic nominee Ann Richards, a newspaper reported Wednesday after seeing an internal campaign strategy report.

A Williams' campaign spokesman declined to discuss the recommendation except to say that Williams plans to protect himself from anticipated attacks by Ms. Richards.

In a copyright story, the Houston Chronicle reported that the New York consulting firm of Dresner, Sykes, Jordan and Townsend recently issued a report to Williams that includes several campaign goals.

A Republican source showed the Chronicle a Williams campaign handbook that included the report.

One goal in the handbook suggested finding "two to five people that know her (Ms. Richards) well that are on the outs."

"That project has been completed and I have no further comment," Williams campaign spokesman Gordon Hensley said Wednesday when asked about the suggestion.

"We anticipate Ann Richards to run a very negative campaign against Clayton Williams, and we're going to protect ourselves," he told The Associated Press.

Hensley said he anticipates a negative campaign because of the commercials she ran during the primary accusing former Texas Gov. Mark White of using the state's highest office for his own personal benefit. White denied the claims, saying he was enraged by Ms. Richards' campaign tactics.

Ms. Richards' spokesman did not return telephone calls Wednesday to the Associated Press.

The strategy report said a "gender fight" has been ignited by the Williams vs. Richards race. It urged that the Williams campaign "implement a sound women's issue agenda" and "fight the abortion/feminist fight early."

Williams opposes abortion except in cases of rape, incest or endangerment of the mother's life, while Ms. Richards supports personal choice on abortion.

The report to Williams said the "gender gap is incredible."

"We have created a battle of the sexes," it said.

Other goals of the campaign, according to the strategy report, are to activate conservatives and evangelicals and to try to win 55 percent of the Hispanic vote and 20 percent of the black vote.

The ultimate campaign goal, it said, is to achieve 56 percent of the vote in the Nov. 6 election.

The remarks were part of an analysis of a poll conducted for the Williams campaign in early May, the Chronicle reported. The survey of 900 Texas voters showed Williams with 50 percent of the vote, Ms. Richards with 38 percent and the rest undecided.

A breakdown of the results showed that men favored Williams 60 percent to 30 percent, while women favored Ms. Richards 46 percent to 41 percent. The margin of error was about 4 percentage points.

Williams, a businessman who wears a cowboy hat and boots and has ridden horses in some television ads, has made some remarks criticized as insensitive to women.

The consultants said Williams could boost his overall vote with the support of women who don't identify with either party.

YOUR FOOD PHARMACY

You'd be healthier to check that reflex to reject parsley

By Jean Carper

Don't ignore that garnish of parsley on your plate. Eat it. The sprig of green may help ward off disease, including, perhaps, cancer.

Carper

In an analysis of about 100 common foods, scientists at Emory University School of Medicine have found parsley highest in a natural substance called glutathione. In lab tests, glutathione is well known to inactivate at least 30 cancer-causing agents that may damage cells, according to Dr. Dean P. Jones, associate professor of biochemistry at Emory.

Glutathione is also a so-called antioxidant that can block a variety of attacks on cells, leading to numerous other diseases, including heart disease, even aging.

Other green leafy vegetables, and fruits are also rich in glutathione. "Broccoli is terrific, " says Dr. Jones, "and oranges are very high." Cooking destroys from 30 percent to 60 percent of the glutathione and canning virtually wipes it out, he adds.

This may be one more reason eating fruits and vegetables is often linked to lower rates of cancer and heart disease.

But this does not mean you should rush out and buy glutathione supplements sold at health food stores, cautions Dr. Jones. There is no hard evidence of those pills' benefits, he says.

Breast cancer diet advice

What should you eat to avoid breast cancer? Researchers at the National Cancer Institute of Canada offer some intriguing suggestions after analyzing 12 major studies on diet and breast cancer.

For one thing, they say, it may depend on your age.

If you are past menopause, cutting back on fat, especially saturated dairy- and meat-type fats, may help thwart breast cancer.

In fact, the Canadian investigators estimated that if all North American post-menopausal women cut their intake of saturated fat to 9 percent of their daily calories, their breast cancer chances would drop 10 percent. Fat intake did not seem to influence breast cancer in pre-menopausal women.

However, eating enough fruits and vegetables to get 380 milligrams daily of vitamin C (four to six times current recommendations) would probably slash the breast-cancer risk by 16 percent in all women, the researchers predicted. And if post-menopausal women followed both suggestions about cutting fat and getting lots of vitamin C, their chances of breast cancer would probably drop a whopping 24 percent, they added.

Heart foods

If you're not eating enough grains, cereals, legumes, seeds, nuts and certain seafood, you're like most Americans — you don't get enough of the mineral magnesium. And that could help clog your arteries, triggering a heart attack. There's growing evidence to support that theory.

According to new research by Drs. Bella and Burton Altura at the State University of New York at Brooklyn, here's what happens to rabbits when they eat cholesterol foods but don't get enough magnesium: They develop large, thick deposits in their aortas, a major heart artery. Rabbits fed the most magnesium — three times the recommended levels — had the fewest and thinnest deposits.

Apparently, lack of magnesium, researchers say, somehow magnifies the artery-clogging effects of a high-fat diet.

Another recent study in Denmark found that magnesium supplements dramatically benefited patients who had already suffered heart attacks. The magnesium reduced undesirable triglycerides by 27 percent and another type detrimental blood fat by 15 percent. At the same time, magnesium boosted beneficial blood fats, that help ward off heart attacks.

Harsh realities beg life-or-death debate

By Debra Hale

CHICAGO (AP) — Doctors must realize it is often better to let extremely small premature babies die, despite fears of lawsuits or outcries from lobbyists, two researchers say.

Medical costs nearing $160,000 per infant and the chance that surviving babies will suffer lifelong health problems led to the conclusion by Dr. David K. Stevenson and Ernle W.D. Young, both of Stanford University.

The researchers, writing in the May issue of American Journal of Diseases of Children, said an estimated $2.6 billion annually is spent on neonatal intensive care in the United States.

The life-saving efforts result in an average hospital stay of 137 days, at an average cost of $158.800 per infant, the study said.

Stevenson and Young said it would be more cost-effective to address "the root causes of prematurity — lack of prenatal care, poor nutrition in pregnant women, homelessness, and drug or alcohol addiction."

But doctors often feel pressured to order aggressive therapy for babies even when the treatment may not be beneficial, the researchers said.

"In part, this is due to the way in which fear of litigation causes medicine to be practiced in a defensive manner in this country," they wrote.

Special interest groups also may influence doctors' decisions, the article said.

"We appear to have a more vigorous 'pro-life' lobby in this country than is evident in either Sweden or Britain," they wrote.

The researchers said a 1984 study found that the per-capita incidence of extremely premature, underweight infants in Great Britain and Sweden "was impressively lower than in the United States.

Stevenson is a professor of pediatrics at Stanford University Medical Center. Young is a Stanford professor of pediatrics and related ethical issues who also serves as co-director of the school's Center for Biomedical Ethics.

Taking issue with the researchers was Dr. Thomas G. Storch, an associate editor of the journal and a member of its editorial board. In an accompanying editorial, he wrote that the technology to achieve good results with the very small infants "is well within our grasp."

"Money should not be a consideration," Storch said last week in a telephone interview.

"There is money out there, and we as pediatricians need to become spokesmen to get the money out there rather than throw in the towel and start rationing health care," he said.

Stevenson and Young said the costs of treating extremely underweight premature babies — those weighing less than two pounds — do not take into account the lifelong costs of caring for any resulting disabilities.

"The effects of erring on the side of life are as follows: we save some who would otherwise have died; we do immediate harm and inflict long-term suffering on many who survive; and we expend an enormous amount of money on neonatal intensive care."

"Once physicians and parents, together, have collaboratively agreed to a strategy for treatment or non-treatment, this ought not to be subject to arbitrary veto by interested third parties, whether pro-life lobbyists or federal bureaucrats."

Balloons can replace blades for lung, heart, vessel repair

By Robert P. Studer
Copley News Service

SAN FRANCISCO — When Dennis Bertolucci's grandfather suffered a hereditary lung circulation problem 31 years ago, it was necessary for surgeons at the University of California at San Francisco to remove a part of his lung.

Last year, when Bertolucci developed the same problem, physicians at the same university hospital solved it a lot more easily. They fixed it without surgery and they sent him home with his lungs intact.

The new procedure, called therapeutic embolization, is changing the way physicians treat this and similar problems that involve abnormal short circuits of the blood vessels in the lungs, brain and other organs. Instead of removing them surgically, doctors can now obliterate them with balloons or coiled wires using a simple nonsurgical procedure.

The problem that had felled Dennis, which has struck at least five members of his family over four generations, is a tendency for abnormal blood vessels to appear in the lungs or elsewhere in the body. In the lungs, these short circuits detour blood away from the area where it picks up oxygen, leaving the individual tired, short of breath and occasionally suffering chest pains.

It can deprive some areas of the brain of oxygen and precipitate a stroke, or it can lead to fatal hemorrhaging.

Now, though, instead of cutting out these malformations, which requires major surgery and always entails the loss of healthy lung tissue, university radiologists now can plug them with balloons or small coiled wires inserted via a catheter.

Thus, Dennis — who saw a cousin lose nearly a third of her lungs four years ago because of clusters of these malformations — had another option to surgery, explained UC San Francisco pulmonary specialist Jeff Golden, associate professor of medicine and chief of bronchoscopy at the university.

As for Dennis, he hadn't fully realized the impact of his problem until the physicians fixed it for him last November.

"When I bike or hike now, I feel like I can do a lot more than I did before," said the 32-year-old California draftsman. "I have more energy now."

This also has been the case with every patient he has seen, Golden said. "Everyone has shown immediate improvement in blood oxygenation — in some cases the amount of oxygen dissolved in the blood nearly doubled — and all patients show a dramatic increase in endurance when subjected to a daylong exercise test."

The new technique of blocking unwanted blood vessels with balloons or coils, Golden added, is an expanding field that seeks to plug holes in the body from the inside, thus avoiding surgery.

"Embolization can be used to treat vascular disorders anywhere in the body, as long as we can get a catheter to it, manipulate it with a guidewire, and check its position with fluoroscopy," explained Ernest Ring, M.D., professor of radiology and chief of interventional radiology at UC San Francisco. "If it needs plugging, we can plug it — if it needs opening, we can open it."

Ring and his colleagues currently also stuff balloons or coils in blood vessels in the brain to fix aneurysms as well as malformations in the kidney, liver — virtually any organ.

In the procedure, he explained, a coil or balloon is slipped on the end of a catheter that is snaked through a vein in the groin up to and through the heart and into the lungs. Using X-ray fluoroscopes — devices that project the X-ray image onto a television screen — radiologists position the coil or balloon directly within the abnormal blood vessel.

When balloons are used, he said, they are inflated and slipped off the catheter. If coils are used (Ring prefers coils to plug vessel malformations in the lungs), they are pushed out the end of the catheter and curl up to block the vessel. The coils range from 2 to 20 millimeters (nearly one inch) in diameter and are up to 10 centimeters (4 inches) in length. When they curl up they fit snugly in vessels of any size.

Sometimes, Ring said, it takes as many as eight or 10 coils in one hole. Then, before long, he said, they are cemented into place by clotting blood and completely block the short-circuit.

Nonoxynol-9 may put women at risk

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Nonoxynol-9, the spermicide touted for its ability to prevent the spread of AIDS and other sexually transmitted diseases, may increase the risk of bladder and yeast infections in women, new studies show.

Some women should consider switching to other forms of birth control, but only if they are in a relationship that puts them at low risk of catching AIDS, chlamydia, gonorrhea or other venereal diseases, researchers said Wednesday.

"Nonoxynol-9 is an extremely effective agent against many sexually transmitted diseases, as well as sperm," said Jackie McGroarty, a microbiologist at Toronto General Hospital.

"We wouldn't recommend people discontinue use of spermicide unless they are suffering recurrent bladder or yeast infections and are currently in a stable, monogamous relationship."

If women who suffer infections when using spermicides or diaphragms want to use those contraceptives, they can get antibiotic treatment for the infections, said Dr. Thomas Hooton, of the University of Washington's Harborview Medical Center in Seattle.

Bladder and yeast infections cause discomfort, but aren't dangerous compared with sexually transmitted diseases or unwanted pregnancy, Ms. McGroarty said. Birth control pills previously have been linked to yeast infections.

Ms. McGroarty presented her findings last week in Anaheim, Calif., during the American Society for Microbiology's annual meeting. Two related studies by Hooton have been submitted for publication in medical journals.

The studies are the first to link bladder and yeast infections to nonoxynol-9 even when the spermicide — found in most spermicidal jellies, foams and creams — is used without a diaphragm, vaginal sponge or condom, Hooton said. Some condoms are packaged with nonoxynol-9.

"There are studies that show women who use diaphragms and sponges are at higher risk of urinary tract (bladder) infections," said Dr. Amy Pollack, associate medical director of the Planned Parenthood Federation of America. "However, the spermicide is generally considered antimicrobial. Therefore the presumption has been it's the barrier method (diaphragm or sponge) itself, not the spermicide, that's the problem."

Links sought between nutrition, health

WASHINGTON (NYT) — A coalition of doctors, dieticians and elderly-rights advocates Tuesday launched a five-year campaign to promote nutrition screening and better nutritional care as part of the nation's health system.

"We have to make nutrition screening a routine part of health care," said Dr. Gerald Keller of the American Academy of Family Physicians. "Nutrition is one of the important vital signs, just as blood pressure or pulse."

The nutrition screening initiative's immediate target will be the elderly — particularly those who live alone, are in poor health, or have low incomes and are considered at high risk of suffering from malnutrition, said Nancy Wellman, president of the American Dietetic Association.

Such screenings — which vary from simple observation of appearance and skin tone to questions about diet — should be given to every person entering the health care system, Wellman said. The cost would vary.

Trinity crests at Liberty, recedes elsewhere

LIVINGSTON (AP) — The Trinity River headed for a crest Wednesday while federal officials tried to ensure that thousands of flood victims were taking advantage of aid programs.

A crest of 30.03 feet was anticipated at Liberty, more than six feet above the 24-foot flood stage and above the 29-foot record set in 1942, according to officials at the Trinity River Authority.

Water from rain-swollen Lake Livingston has been funneling at record levels through a 208-square mile area downstream, although release levels dropped for a third straight day Wednesday.

"If I had to pick a cutoff day — a day when this would start turning around — it would be today," Jim Mitchum, Liberty County Emergency Management coordinator, said Wednesday. "I think we're getting the worst of it now."

In Livingston and at Liberty, federal and state officials briefed local agencies about programs available to people displaced by the floods, which were triggered by torrential rains some three weeks ago 200 miles to the north.

"One problem here is that the water is still up and we can't get in to inspect," said Graham Nance of the Federal Emergency Management Agency.

About $1 million in federal money already has been distributed.

"We don't know what it will cost ultimately," he said. "The main thing we're trying to do is get money into people's hands as quickly as we can."

Nance said flood victims should be able to get federal checks within four to six days of placing their application. The agency had received 3,800 applications for help, he said.

"Under the circumstances, I think they're doing the best they can," said Joe Tomlinson, 35, whose home in Goodrich in Polk County is under water.

"Everything I've got is under water. I can't even find my house."

FEMA so far has assisted 935 families in Texas, passing out nearly $731,000 primarily for temporary housing, according to spokesman George Burgess. Another $600,000 already had been distributed to 180 families for home repairs, replacement of personal items and essential home furnishings, Burgess said.

"People need temporary housing and the money to pay for a place to go," Nance said . "The most immediate problem is where do these people go in the interim? So that's one of our priority programs."

Flood victims protest in Dallas

DALLAS (AP) — About 25 flood victims briefly obstructed the entrance to City Council chambers Wednesday, complaining about the lack of flood planning for their South Dallas neighborhood.

The protesters chanted "We're fired up, we can't take it no more!" and carried signs reading "Build a Levee or an Ark" through the lobby of City Hall as they moved upstairs to the council chambers for a 15-minute protest.

The demonstrators say members of the city council have dragged their feet in constructing a levee for the Rochester Park community.

About 400 homes in the neighborhood were inundated for the second straight year when the Trinity River spilled its banks after heavy rain in mid-April.

Members of the Association of Community Organizations for Reform Now and the Rochester Park Flood Victims Committee demanded regular meetings with city officials on the status of the levee.

"Please come speak with us ... let us know what you're going to do for us until the flooding issue is taken care of," Denisa Lem shouted outside the council chamber.

Assistant City Manger Cliff Keheley, who met for about 40 minutes with the protesters, called the request for meetings "reasonable."

STATE IN BRIEF

Panel names not secret

AUSTIN (AP) — The names of members of a committee that oversees the treatment and care of research animals at Texas Tech University Health Sciences Center cannot be kept secret, Texas Attorney General Jim Mattox said in an opinion released Wednesday.

School officials had argued the names of the committee members should be kept secret because the committee chairman, a researcher and University President Robert Lawless have received several threatening letters.

But Mattox said an exception under the Open Records Act "does not protect the identities of individuals performing services for the government."

Texas Tech also argued the names should be kept secret because of possible litigation against those who have made threatening telephone calls or written threatening letters to center representatives.

Victim's car fire probed

LUBBOCK (AP) — Police continued to investigate Wednesday a car that belonged to a slain Tarrant County man and that was found burning in an alley here.

"We are investigating it as an arson case," Lubbock Police Sgt. Randy McGuire. "But we don't have any information pertaining to the death of the former owner of the car."

Police investigators Tony Gribben and Mitch Mount said they found the vehicle in an alley early Tuesday.

The vehicle had been stolen from Gardner G. Nolley of Fort Worth, who was fatally stabbed May 19 at Benbrook.

Riot gear approved

HOUSTON (AP) — Harris County Sheriff Johnny Klevenhagen won Commissioners Court approval of more than $35,000 in riot gear, bomb squad equipment and fax machines for the July economic summit.

"In law enforcement, we have to be prepared for any and everything, and that's what we try to do," Klevenhagen said Tuesday.

The court last week balked at approving the Sheriff's Department request for new "urban gray" uniforms and riot gear.

Bridge behind what was the Iron Curtian is flourishing, especially in Poland. Here's a hand played by Irina Raczynska at the recent European Mixed Teams Championship in Bordeaux, France.

When the major-suit probe located the spade fit, North wasted no time in getting to a slam. As the cards were, that contract was shaky, but switch declarer's red-suit holdings and a grand slam would have reasonable play.

West led the jack of diamonds, ducked to declarer's queen. After drawing trumps in three rounds, declarer guessed well by cashing the king and ace of clubs, then running the jack for a ruffing finesse. When East did not cover, declarer discarded a diamond.

Another club now would have been fatal, since West would have been able to sluff the ten of diamonds. Instead, declarer led a low diamond from the king! East could not rise with the ace without handing South her contract on a silver platter, so was forced to play low, and West's ten won. But now West was endplayed, and the forced return of a heart into declarer's tenace allowed declarer to get rid of dummy's remaining diamonds and claim the slam.

Note that declarer's diamond play would have worked equally well had East held a doubleton ace of diamonds. The suit would now be established while declarer still had a trump in hand to ruff the losing club. A beautiful hand.

Maples shows off jeans

NEW YORK (AP) — Marla Maples, the Other Woman of Donald Trump fame, came out of "hiding" Wednesday, showing off her brand new jeans and smiling sweetly for photographers.

"I'm kind of easing my way back in" to a normal life, the 26-year-old Maples said after a news conference introducing her as the new spokeswoman for No Excuses jeans.

Maples, a model and actress, refused to discuss her relationship with Trump, whatever it may be, saying, "I don't want to comment on that. He's still working on his own personal situation."

Trump in February separated from Ivana, his wife of nearly 13 years. Maples found herself in the eye of the Trumpian storm after she was tagged the "other woman" in the billionaire's life.

Maples said she was on her third callback for a part in a movie when the Trump deluge began.

"It was looking very, very good," but because of all the attention "I just pulled out. That's when I chose to go into hiding because I didn't want to get involved."

Maples signed a one-year contract with No Excuses for a reported $500,000.

Donna Rice, whose alleged affair with Gary Hart forced the senator from Colorado to drop out of the 1988 presidential race, was also a spokeswoman for the jeans.

TOKYO (AP) — Wynton Marsalis, Dizzy Gillespie, George Adams and Tania Maria will highlight this summer's Mount Fuji Jazz Festival, one of Japan's most popular jazz events, organizers said Wednesday.

The annual outdoor festival, held on the banks of Lake Yamanaka at the foot of Mount Fuji, brings leading jazz musicians from the United States to join a handful of Japanese musicians in three days of concerts.

Also playing in this year's festival, Aug. 24-26, will be groups led by Jimmy Smith, Ellis Marsalis, John Scofield, Rachelle Ferrell, Terumasa Hino and others, the organizers said.

Another annual Japanese international jazz festival, Select Live Under the Sky, will be held July 28-Aug. 1 at various Tokyo locations, organizers say.

Among the participants in that festival will be Pat Metheny, Herbie Hancock, David Sanborn, Wayne Shorter, Al Jarreau and Jack Dejohnette.

SANTA MONICA, Calif. (AP) — Elizabeth Taylor was significantly improved in her seventh week of hospitalization for a near-fatal bout of pneumonia, and her doctor said Wednesday the actress may go home early next month.

Dr. Michael Roth's prognosis shaved a couple of weeks off the length of her anticipated hospital stay announced earlier this month. Doctors said previously that Miss Taylor would remain at St. John's Hospital and Health Center until late June.

"Her response to anti-fungal medicine has been very positive," Roth said. "She is resting comfortably and her spirits are good.

Miss Taylor, 58, was first hospitalized at Daniel Freeman Marina Hospital on April 9 with what was described as a sinus infection. But her condition worsened and she was transferred to St. John's in serious condition with viral pneumonia.

She was placed on a respirator and intravenous medication and doctors said she was near death on April 22. Miss Taylor rallied, however, and was moved from the intensive care unit to a fourth floor hospital suite early this month.

Prince

THE HAGUE, Netherlands (AP) — Prince is used to getting royal treatment, but one Dutch couple decided to put a stop to the divine rights of rock stars.

A Dutch court has ruled in favor of Marcel Soek and Merith Gijtenbeek, who sued the posh Hotel des Indes for allegedly giving their VIP suite reservation to the singer.

The court ordered the hotel to pay a $13,369 penalty unless it gives the Imperial Suite to the couple for their June 2 wedding night, the couple and the hotel management said Wednesday.

The couple booked the suite in March, but "the hotel told us after several weeks that the room was going to be given instead to an American pop star along with 10 other royal suites," Soek said.

"They didn't tell us who the star was, but the lawyer slipped the other day in court and said it was Prince," Soek said.

Hotel Des Indes General Manager Bernard Felix said the hotel had not decided whether to appeal the ruling.

SILVER SPRING, Md. (AP) — Marx Lewis, veteran labor organizer, has died at age 93.

Accuracy in Media, a watchdog group on whose board he served, said Lewis died Tuesday of cardiac arrest.

Lewis earned a law degree from the American University in 1924 but never practiced, chosing to become an organizer for the Cap and Millinery Workers Union.

A socialist in his youth, he held several labor positions and helped organize the Liberal Party of New York. He served in the administration of Republican New York City Mayor Fiorello LaGuardia in the 1930s and 1940s and later became a Republican.

East Germany reportedly planned to jail opponents

WEST BERLIN (AP) — More than 10 years ago, East Germany's hard-line Communist government proposed building internment camps to lock up thousands of its opponents, a newspaper recently reported.

The reported plan to stamp out the first signs of a grassroots opposition was never carried out, and on Oct. 18, 1989, a surging pro-democracy movement drove Erich Honecker and his Communist regime from power.

Since Honecker's downfall, there have been numerous accounts of how he tried to curb growing dissent. Some of those reports said Honecker intended to lock up opponents last year as the pressure on his tottering regime mounted.

In the latest report, the East German newspaper Der Morgen said Honecker's aides started planning internment camps much earlier, during the late 1970s, as the fledgling opposition movement was just beginning.

The internment camps would have marked a major change for Honecker, who imprisoned hundreds of activists during his regime but never rounded up opponents en masse and shipped them to a gulag.

The subject of such camps is sensitive in a country still saddled with the murderous legacy of the Nazi death camps and concentration camps.

Der Morgen said it had obtained "extensive proof in the form of numerous secret papers" that the once-dreaded secret police were behind the plot. "The Ministry for State Security had plans ready since the late 1970s for internment camps for opponents of the system and opposition figures," the newspaper said.

Der Morgen is published by the Liberal Party, once a puppet of the East German Communist regime and now an independent party that plays only a negligible role in the country's politics.

"From the documents for the period from 1979 to 1989, it is clear to see with what precision and disrespect for human rights principles the internment was planned," the daily newspaper said in its Saturday editions.

The newspaper said one of the camps was planned for 1,500 people near the town of Gotha in the far southwestern part of the country.

Lee's Maroon-White tilt on tap

■ Midland Lee head football coach Earl Miller will focus on his offense during tonight's Maroon-White scrimmage.

By Terry Williamson
Sports Editor

Midland Lee completes spring training football drills tonight with the annual Maroon-White scrimmage game as head football coach Earl Miller keeps a watchful eye out on some "problem areas."

"We've had a pretty good spring, but we still have some problem areas. The good thing is that we have some talented people to work with. We just haven't put it all together yet," said Miller.

"We're still optimistic that we can develop into a pretty good football team. Every year I've been here since 1978, we've had a good year following a good spring. This year has been between great and good if there is such a word to describe that. We have a good feeling about these kids. If we keep improving, we can be a contender in this district."

The Maroon-White night begins at 6 p.m. with the junior varsity scrimmage and the varsity will tee it up at 7:30 p.m.

"We'll probably take the first team offense and defense for one team and give the other team six points per quarter, just like Midland High did in its scrimmage," said Miller before adding, "but I don't think our first team can win giving away that many points. Our second team has some good athletes on it."

Offense is the focus for Miller tonight.

"We're going back to the pure (Wish)bone this year and we need to see if our backs will block for each other. That's the only way a three-back offense can work.

"We also need to look at the poise of our quarterbacks. Both Derrick Turner and David Sullivan have had good springs, but they don't have a lot of experience."

Miller says that his backfield still has a lot of question marks and there are other fights going on at tight end and at tackle. But the question marks are really in the "Who's No. 1" mode. There is talent to pick from.

"We're ahead offensively where we were at this time last year, mainly because we have some fullbacks we didn't have last year," says Miller.

Junior Jovan Tellez, a 250-pound bruiser, could give Lee an added dimension on offense in 1990, but senior Rene Cuellar and junior Roy Robinson have looked good.

Right now, halfback Reggie Webb and Turner, who played linebacker last year, are the only starting seniors in the skill positions.

"We have some youngsters, so we're going to have to have some patience until these kids feel comfortable in what they are doing," said Miller.

Four players coming over from Lee Freshman are getting a serious look. They are split ends Aaron McMaryion and Demon Robinson, 220-pound guard Doug Rook and defensive back Sherman Dedrick.

"That doesn't mean all four will be on the varsity, but they have all looked good. They aren't afraid of what we are doing," said Miller.

Defensively, Lee is in much better shape than a year ago. Several down lineman and linebackers return. Miller would like to find one more linebacker to come to the front, but again the talent is there.

Weis motors put pals at the poles

■ Engine builder Franz Weis has assembled 63 Indy-car winners, but that number could easily increase with Sunday's running of the Indianapolis 500.

By Bill Price
Staff Writer

Things were running smoothly at VDS Racing Engines the morning of Wednesday, May 9. That is, until the call came.

Rick Galles, owner of the the cars that Al Unser Jr., and Bobby Rahal were trying to qualify for this Sunday's Indianapolis 500, was on the telephone from Indianapolis, Ind., with what Cathy Weis called "an emergency." Her husband Franz, sitting in his Midland office adorned by autographed posters of a virtual who's who in Indy car driving, immediately picked up the telephone.

"I knew it must have been something pretty big, because Galles doesn't call if it's not. I thought maybe they had blown an engine or something like that," said Franz, who operates VDS along with Count Rudi Van der Straten.

Though not quite as severe as a blown motor, Galles did have a major problem. After turning one of the fastest practice laps prior to the 1990 Indianapolis 500 time trials (228.502 mph), "Little Al" Unser was poised to make a run for the pole position eventually to be held by Emerson Fittipaldi.

But as his qualifying engine was being unloaded from an airliner at the Indianapolis airport, it was dropped on the tarmac, resulting in a cracked block.

Weis immediately told Galles that another Ilmore Chevrolet block was unavailable, so the best bet was to try to repair the cracked one. After ruling out an attempt to weld the cast aluminum block, Weis decided on trying to bolt a strap onto the affair to get Unser into the race.

Galles paid a princely sum to have the motor flown to Midland aboard a private charter the following Thursday, then back to Indy Friday for that weekend's opening time trials.

Unser, however, was denied the chance for the pole when rain shortened the opening week's trials, where Fittipaldi turned a record four-lap average time of 225.301. He did qualify the following week when weather conditions were less than ideal, ending up with the inside spot on the third row in Sunday's grid.

EVEN THOUGH the world of Indy car racing is a far cry from the little town near Stuttgart, West Germany, where Weis was born, the type of dilemma that May 9 posed is just where he excels. A list of VDS customers is testimony to that fact.

In addition to Unser and Rahal, Mario Andretti, Michael Andretti, A.J. Foyt, Arie Luyendyk and Eddie Cheever all drive Weis-powered cars. When Fittipaldi edged — or bumped — Little Al out of the Indy title a year ago he was feathering the throttle to a Weis power plant. In all, 63 races sanctioned by CART, the governing body of Indy type car racing, have be won by Weis engines. Of the top nine cars in this year's Indy field, six contain a Weis motor.

Beverly Shilling/Reporter-Telegram

Midland's Franz Weis builds Cosworth engines for world-famous Indy-car drivers A.J. Foyt, Mario Andretti and many others.

WEIS ALWAYS says that racing is a team effort, especially in this high-tech, high-dollar age of Indy car competition where a much-coveted 700-horsepower Ilmore Chevy runs a cool $100,000.

"Even though the drivers get all the attention, racing is a team sport. It's gotten to where you can't do everything by yourself because of the demands of doing one thing well. I'm a bit of a perfectionist, so if I do a job, it is done well," he said.

There was a time, though, when things were simpler. Weis came to the United States in 1959 as a Volkswagon mechanic in Shreveport, La. That was where his interest in racing was piqued by Midlander Ronny Hissom, who brought Weis to Midland in 1963. By 1966, Weis was offered a job with Midland racing legend Jim Hall, whose avant-garde Chaparral Racing was about to make its indelible mark on auto racing in the next 15 years.

With Hall pioneering the ground effects technology that every Indy car now uses, and Weis tuning the dominant Cosworth engines, Chaparral went on to win a pair of Indy 500s, as well as an unprecedented first-year 500 triple crown — winning three 500-mile races in one season. Al Unser, Sr., won the triple crown and Indy for Hall in 1978. Then

Angels picked off by Drillers

By Bill Grimes
Staff Writer

A one...

Midland Angel slugger Steve DeAngelis reaches base on a walk with two out in the first inning of Tuesday's Texas League game at Angels Stadium, but is promptly hung up between first and second by Tulsa Drillers pitcher Cedric Shaw and is run down by Driller first baseman Rob Maurer and shortstop Monty Fariss.

And a two...

Mark Howie leads off the Midland half of the second with a base hit, but leans the wrong way on the first pitch to Jim Aylward and is consequently hung out to dry. Fariss again makes the tag.

And a three...

Aylward reaches base on an infield error, but falls victim to Shaw's mound trickery — Shaw to Maurer to Fariss, for those keeping track.

The Drillers parlayed Shaw's sleight-of-hand and an active attack off Midland starter Carl Hamilton for an 8-5 win in the second of five between the two teams this week.

Odd as it may seem, Shaw did not set a personal record for catching runners off base.

"I picked off four at Charlotte (the Texas Rangers' Class A team in the Florida State League) last season," he said.

After Aylward was tagged out, Midland manager Eddie Rodriguez held a long-distance discussion with the umpiring crew without straying far from the third-base coaching box, for what he thought was a questionable move to first by Shaw.

"I wanted to make the umpires aware enough to give this (Shaw's move) a little extra look," Rodriguez said.

Howie thought Shaw was balking by crossing an imaginary line with his right foot on his move to first.

MISD fills coaching vacancies

By Bill Price
Staff Writer

Jack Tayrien, Midland Independent School District athletic director, announced Wednesday the appointment of two new head coaches in the MISD system.

Jesse Benavidez will take over for Ernie Johnson as Midland Lee baseball coach, while Jim Raughton grabs the reins of the Midland High girls basketball program.

Benavidez has been the junior varsity baseball and an assistant football coach for four years at Lee, and steps in upon Johnson's retirement after 29 years as the only baseball coach the Rebels have ever known. The 42-year-old Odessa High graduate was an All-American baseball player at Lubbock Christian (1974) and has been in the MISD system since his graduation from LCC (now LCU).

From the time he left college until he moved to Lee, Benavidez coached at Lee Freshman High (formerly Austin Freshman).

Raughton has built an impressive record since his 1979 graduation from Angelo State. As MHS boys junior varsity coach, the Bronte native posted pitches and we chased a lot of bad balls," agreed Scott Coolbaugh.

DuBois said his "curveball was working again tonight. It used to be my best pitch, and now I'm getting it over consistently again. I just have to always keep it down."

Mike Jeffcoat (0-1), getting his first start of the season because of an injury that put Nolan Ryan on the disabled list, gave up four runs and 10 hits in 6⅔ innings.

With two out in the third, Jeffcoat hit Lloyd Moseby with a pitch for the second time in the game and Fielder homered to straightaway center field.

"I threw him a good pitch, low and away," Jeffcoat said. "I don't even think it was in the strike zone, and he hit it anyway."

Texas scored in the seventh. John Russell and Mike Stanley started the inning with singles.

Royals 4, Red Sox 1

Steve Jeltz, who started the game batting .067, broke a tie with a hit-and-run single in the seventh inning and Willie Wilson added a two-run single as Kansas City beat Boston Red behind Bret Saberhagen's seven-hit pitching.

Saberhagen (3-3) allowed just four hits after the second inning, struck out five and didn't walk a batter in his second consecutive complete-game victory.

The Royals managed just three hits and an unearned run off Boston starter Greg Harris (4-3) over the first six innings.

Jeltz squared away to bunt on three pitches. Then, on a 2-1 count with the runners moving, he grounded a single to left-center, scoring Macfarlane.

The Red Sox got a break when Kevin Seitzer's hard grounder hit second base umpire Dale Scott's leg. The ball was ruled dead and the bases were loaded.

White Sox 6, Orioles 3

Seldom-used Dan Pasqua, starting for only the 13th time this season, drove in four runs with a pair of homers as Chicago beat Baltimore for the sixth straight time.

Pasqua hit a three-run homer in the first inning and a solo shot in the seventh, giving him four for the season. It was the eighth time in his career he hit two home runs in a game.

Winner Eric King (3-0) held the Orioles to two hits in six innings — including Joe Orsulak's three-run game-tying homer in the fourth — but was removed after walking Craig Worthington to open the seventh inning. He was replaced by Donn Pall, who pitched two hitless innings. Bobby Thigpen pitched the ninth for his 12th save.

Yankees 12, Twins 0

New York, which had only 22 home runs in 36 games, hit six Wednesday night, including two by Steve Balboni and a three-run shot by Deion Sanders, and crushed Minnesota behind Tim Leary's four-hit pitching.

Mel Hall, Roberto Kelly and Jesse Barfield also homered, the first time the Yankees hit six in a game since June 5, 1977, against Chicago. Bucky Dent, the current manager, hit one of those six.

Leary (3-4) yielded singles in a second, third and fourth innings and then retired 15 consecutive batters before the Twins got their final hit in the ninth. He walked one and struck out 11 in his third complete game of the season. Loser Tim Drummond (0-1) and John Candelaria each gave up six runs.

Sanders, brought up from the minors on Monday, capped a four-run fourth inning with his first homer of the season. Sanders started the year with the Yankees before being sent down on April 30.

Mariners 4, Indians 1

Ken Griffey Jr. doubled home two runs in a three-run first inning and Alvin Davis homered Seattle beat Cleveland.

Erik Hanson (4-3) held Cleveland to five hits in eight innings while walking none and striking out nine. Mike Schooler pitched the ninth for his 12th save.

In handing the Indians their fourth consecutive loss, Hanson outpitched Bud Black (4-2), who shut out the Mariners and Hanson in Cleveland last Friday night.

The Mariners took a 3-0 lead in the first on three of their five hits. Black walked leadoff hitter Harold Reynolds and singles by Henry Cotto and Davis loaded the bases. After Jeffrey Leonard's sacrifice fly, Griffey doubled to make it 3-0. Davis homered in the eighth, his fifth.

NL Roundup

Knepper (3-2) entered the game with a 6.05 earned-run average, but allowed only one run with three strikeouts and two walks. He also doubled home a run during a three-run sixth that broke a 1-1 tie.

Gary Carter's RBI single against Greg Mathews (0-4) put the Giants ahead 2-1 and Brett Butler also had a run-scoring single in the inning. Will Clark added a first-inning solo home run, his eighth of the season and second in as many games. Mathews gave up nine hits and four runs in 5⅔ innings.

Ozzie Smith singled home the Cardinals' run in the first inning. St. Louis has scored three or fewer runs in 22 games and trails the National League in runs scored.

The Cardinals had won five straight against left-handed starters before facing Knepper. The began the year 2-10 against lefties.

Dodgers 4, Cubs 3

Chicago starter Mike Harkey took a three-hit shutout into the eighth, but with one out, pinch-hitter Mickey Hatcher singled to left and Lenny Harris beat out an infield single to third.

But Daniels, a left-handed hitter, spoiled the strategy by hitting a 1-2 pitch into the left-field bleachers for his eighth homer of the season.

Tim Belcher (4-3) allowed seven hits and three runs, one earned, in seven innings. He walked one and struck out two. Don Aase, the fifth Los Angeles pitcher, escaped a first-and-third, none-out jam in the ninth for his third save.

Expos 4, Padres 0

Oil Can Boyd shut out San Diego for the second time this season, Tim Wallach homered for the third straight game ar. Tim Raines stole his 600th base in Montreal's win.

Boyd (3-2) pitched a five-hitter, walked none and struck out eight. He blanked the Padres on May 13 and tied for the major league lead in shutouts with two.

ANGELS: Halos trail early

From 1C

"I thought he crossed over, but the umpires were right there," the veteran first baseman said. "If he didn't (balk), it was a great move."

Shaw thought Rodriguez' protest might have been sour grapes.

"Of course, any time you pick off three guys, somebody will say something," the 22-year-old lefty said.

The pickoffs were the only unusual aspect of a very ordinary contest. Simply put, the Drillers got ahead early and the Angels never quite caught up, though the hosts finally got to Shaw for four runs in the fifth.

The Drillers drew first blood in the second on a single by Fariss and a double by Maurer. The two repeated that act in the third, only this time Dan Rohrmeier walked before Fariss and Bill Haselman and Paul Postier singled after Maurer to create a three-run inning.

REBELS: Lee owns depth and more speed this year

From 1C

The secondary is young, but mobile, an ingredient that was missing last year. Jimmy Patton and Sullivan have been impressive at cornerback while Gary Mackey and Henry Stewart have looked good at the safety slots.

"We have a lot more speed in the secondary and more depth than last year," said Miller. "Mackey has great speed and we will probably give him a look at running back.

"Last year we were thin in a lot of positions," said Miller. "It was kind of like having a wife. You had to love her because it was the only one you had. This year we have about 70 kids to pick from and we feel we can dance with several of them."

Jordan lashes out at fellow Bulls

Associated Press

AUBURN HILLS, Mich. — Michael Jordan, frustrated by injuries and lack of support, blasted his teammates following the Chicago Bulls' loss to the Detroit Pistons in Game 2 of the Eastern Conference finals.

Jordan, angry and disgusted Tuesday night after the Pistons took a 2-0 lead in the best-of-7 series, left the locker room and avoided interviews. But his teammates were surprised by Jordan's uncharacteristic behavior.

"He said the guys are playing like (expletive)," the Bulls' Horace Grant said. "He didn't want to name any names. But he was right. The guys know who they are. We were embarrassed.

"Mike feels some guys aren't giving their all and I don't blame him. He's giving his all and gets upset when other guys don't do the same. We played terribly. I've never seen Michael more upset."

Jordan, playing with a sprained wrist and bruised hip, was held to 20 points, making only 5-of-16 field goal attempts on Tuesday.

The Bulls trailed 53-38 at halftime and Jordan blasted them for lackluster play. Jordan reportedly kicked a chair in the locker room following the 102-93 loss. He dressed quickly and boarded the team bus, refusing to answer questions.

Stacey King, a reserve forward, declined to go into detail but said Jordan was angry.

"It's a sign of a player who doesn't like to lose," King said. "He was embarrassed. He got dressed and left. He was just mad."

Chicago coach Phil Jackson said Jordan was upset with himself as well as the others.

"I think he's disappointed in his effort," Jackson said. "Fourteen minutes he played pretty good basketball but other than that, he didn't really show the characteristics he showed all year."

Jackson said it also was frustrating to watch Jordan play injured.

"I think it's pretty obvious when Vinnie Johnson beats him off a left-handed dribble that he wasn't 100 percent physically," Jackson said. "He's not shooting the ball well, you could tell that from the start."

King said Jordan wasn't the only injured Chicago player.

"He's not 100 percent, but neither is (John) Paxson," King said. "He orchestrates our offense."

Paxson suffered a sprained ankle in practice before the first game and has struggled in the series.

Detroit's Joe Dumars had 31 points to help push the Pistons past Chicago in Game 2. And the Pistons outrebounded the Bulls 44-43, outshot them 47-percent to 41-percent from the field and forced 14 first-half turnovers.

Porter leads Blazers

PORTLAND, Ore. (AP) — Terry Porter hit a driving jumper with 12 seconds remaining and the Portland Trail Blazers overcame a 20-point third-quarter deficit to beat the Phoenix Suns 108-107 Wednesday night and take a 2-0 lead in the Western Conference finals.

Porter, whose 3-pointer with 28 seconds left tied the game 106-106, scored 23 of his 28 points in the second half as the Blazers beat the Suns for the 19th straight time at Memorial Coliseum.

His game-winning jumper gave the Blazers their first lead since the opening basket of the game. The Suns had a chance to win, but Eddie Johnson's 15-footer from the baseline was off-line.

Kevin Johnson hit the second of two free throws with 27 seconds left to put the Suns in front 107-106.

The margin tied the second-largest second-half comeback in NBA playoff history.

Jerome Kersey had 29 points for Portland, matching his career playoff high, and Clyde Drexler added 20.

Tom Chambers led the Suns with 28 points. Kevin Johnson and Dan Majerle each had 22 with Majerle scoring 18 in the first half.

Phoenix raced to a 22-point lead late in the first half and led 70-50 with 8½ minutes remaining in the third quarter. The Suns still led by 19 with 6:50 remaining.

A 10-3 run cut the lead to 79-67 and a 12-2 surge early in the fourth quarter sliced the margin to 93-90 on Drexler's baseline drive with 8:01 left.

ENGINES: Penske and Weis trade ideas in 1980, Johnny Rutherford took Indy by storm in Hall's first ground effects car.

WHILE HALL'S design was receving much deserved rave reviews, Weis' accomplishments went unnoticed outside of Indy car racing's inner circle.

As a matter of fact, Weis was gone from Chaparral when Rutherford won in 1980 because that was the first year of Van der Straten, Weis and VDS. Van der Straten came to Midland from Belgium, and Weis was one of the main reasons for that move. Van der Straten wanted Weis, and Weis wanted to stay in Midland.

"A lot of people ask me 'Why Midland.' Well, I'll tell you, I've been to a number of other places and the people here in West Texas are the nicest I've ever met. I hate Indianapolis because it's so cold in the winter and the people just aren't the same.

"Midland is a great place to raise your kids. And from a business point of view, it's centrally located as far as East and West is concerned," Weis said.

IRONICALLY, ONE of the things that has made Weis so successful the past three years was the brainchild of Mario Illian and foe Roger Penske — the Ilmore Chevy.

It has become the dominant force in Indy motors since its inception, which Penske was instrumental in getting Chevrolet to back. Only two institutions are allowed to work on the Ilmore — Weis' VDS and Penske Racing. The other three of the top nine cars in Sunday's lineup are, you guessed it, Penske rides.

But lest anyone think Weis and Penske have anything less than a professional relationship, Weis is quick to point out the cooperation between them.

"Whenever they spot a possible problem, they let us know and we do the same thing. Oh sure, we're always trying to get an edge. But there are so few of these engines and parts are so scarce, that we need to keep in good standing with Penske and he with us because there's nobody else who can help," Weis said.

Weis also said that the low number of Ilmores available is a boon not only to him, but the sport in general.

"If everybody gets an Ilmore Chevy, then Chevrolet will get complacent like Cosworth did and somebody will catch up. But I don't see that happening, at least not in the near future. And that's good not just for me, because it will spark the competition to try to come up with something better."

Also, with the next few years looking as bright as any in Weis' life, retirement does not seem anywhere near.

"I'll do it as long as I have fun and feel challenged by it. Beyond that, I can't say when I will retire," he said.

"So long as Count Van der Straten is pleased — and I can't emphasize enough how much he has meant to my career — I can't think of doing anything else."

records of 26-7 in 1987-88, 28-4 in 1988-89, and 28-1 in 1989-90. In four years as head boys coach at Haskell, his slate was 95-25. He also served assistant stints at Haskell and Roscoe.

"I learned a lot from Ernie over the years. I feel I have a good baseball background, and since Ernie lives right by the field he will still be around to offer me and the boys support," Benavidez said of the former Reb mentor, who was inducted in the Texas High School Baseball Hall of Fame this season. "It's a challenge to come in right after Ernie. It's kind of like coming to bat after somebody hits a grand slam — what are you going to do for an encore?

"As far as next year, I'm just going to see how things fall into place. We've got a good nucleus back from this season," said Benavidez, who guided the j.v. Rebels to a 9-11 record in 1990, while Lee's varsity was 11-10 and 6-6 in District 4-5A.

Raughton

Benavidez

"I know our record wasn't that great, but that is one the best bunches of players we've had here at Lee in a while. We have some good athletes coming up."

Raughton replaces Jane Young at the helm of the MHS girls program, and despite never having coached girls before, said he thinks there will be little transition.

In a parallel to Benavidez' situation, Raughton replaces the only coach the Lady Bulldogs have ever had. Even though MHS has won only one 4-5A game in the past two seasons, Young won three district championships since her tenure began in 1976, with playoff teams four of the last eight years. She also guided MHS to a bi-district title in 1983.

"I don't expect there to be much difference as far as the way the players respond to me. Physically, girls don't have the upper body strength that boys do and I will have to remember that. We're young, but with some work commitments and some goals, we can win. The talent's there.

"I've experienced success on the boys side and expect the same with the girls. I wouldn't go into a situation where I didn't think I could win."

RHCC championship dedicated to Winkel

Staff Report

The 25th Annual Ranchland Hills Country Club Stampede will have a special purpose this year when the club's golfers convene beginning Friday.

The tournament will be dedicated to the memory of Jamie Winkel, a top ClayDesta Corp. official and former RHCC member. Winkel and four others died in a February plane crash.

Winkel and partner George Tucker won the championship flight of last year's Stampede.

The format is a member-guest, two-man, best-ball tournament. Play begins Friday morning and concludes Sunday.

Oil tumbles

NEW YORK (AP) — Crude oil prices tumbled in frenzied trading Wednesday as dealers worried that continued overproduction from OPEC members would result in a worldwide oil glut.

On the New York Mercantile Exchange, the July contract for West Texas Intermediate slipped 78 cents to settle at $18.14 a 42-gallon barrel, after falling as low as $17.95 at one point Wednesday. Other contract months also fell sharply.

The June WTI contract, which expired Tuesday, had declined 58 cents in that session.

Local crude purchasers such as Permian Corp. lowered their posted priced 50 cents to $17 per barrel. Sun Refining and Marketing lowered its posted price 75 cents to $16.75.

Peter Beutel, an energy analyst at Elders Futures Inc., said signs of a possible oil glut already are emerging, making oil traders nervous.

He noted that northwestern Europe is being flooded with crude from Iran, and that the Trans-Panama pipeline has run out of storage space for crude.

In addition, a report released late Tuesday by the American Petroleum Institute said crude oil stocks had reached a larger-than-expected 4.4-million barrel buildup at the end of last week.

Beutel said last week's stock levels were the highest in about eight years.

In natural gas trading, the July contract fell to $1.602 per 1,000 cubic feet from $1.613 Tuesday.

Gold plunges

NEW YORK (AP) — Gold prices plunged worldwide Wednesday, reaching a seven-month low in domestic trading, as reports of heavy Mideast selling brought chaos to the morning fixing session in London and triggered a sympathetic selloff in the United States.

The dollar, meanwhile, ended mixed against major foreign currencies after falling slightly overseas.

On the Commodity Exchange in New York, gold tumbled $11.50 to settle at $364.10 a troy ounce, after losing about $11 an ounce in Europe.

Other late dollar rates in New York, compared with late Tuesday's quotes, included: 1.6780 West German marks, up from 1.67315; 1.4175 Swiss francs, down from 1.41765; 5.6400 French francs, up from 5.6300; 1,229.00 Italian lire, up from 1,228.00; and 1.18415 Canadian dollars, down from 1.18735.

Silver rose in London to $5.24 an ounce from $5.19.

Apartments sold

Windscape Apartments, located at 3809 Caldera, has been sold to The Midland Apartment Co. Lincoln Property Co. will manage the complex.

Steven Sloan of Midland Apartment stated that "We are excited about this new investment in the quickly-recovering Midland economy and look forward to serving the Midland public with a high quality and economic apartment community."

Sloan's company is planning a $400,000 improvement program, to begin June 1, that will include new landscaping, painting and extensive interior improvements.

The company is investigating other acquisitions in Midland.

Analyst says oil stocks look better

■ A tightening oil market and expanding natural gas potential has suddenly made energy stocks a hot investment on Wall Street.

By John Paul Pitts
Business & Oil Editor

The prospects for oil and gas exploration companies looks better than ever, says David Bradshaw, an energy analyst and vice president of research for PaineWebber Inc.

"There is a renewed appetite for the stocks of oil and gas exploration companies for the first time in many years," Bradshaw told the Producers Forum at a luncheon Wednesday.

Energy is now viewed as an attractive investment, he explained, because of a tight oil market that is expected to get even tighter.

Some of the factors that indicate a tightening oil market are:

■ An oil market that is tighter than at any time since 1979,

■ OPEC's need to increase its capacity to 12 million barrels daily,

■ Major impediments to announced capacity expansion,

■ Increasing instability among Persian Gulf nations,

■ Increasing oil prices and a possible crisis.

The energy analyst said that demand, increasing at the rate of 1.7 percent per year, would keep the oil market tight and should result in $23 oil by 1992. The energy demand forecast takes into account zero growth for the USSR and China and two mild recessions in the U.S. in 1995 and 1998.

He explained that OPEC was now producing at 80-82 percent of capacity, with eight of the 13 OPEC nations producing at 100 percent. "There is not that much left to do to bring on new supplies," he added.

Bradshaw, an Oklahoma native, noted that demand would necessitate that OPEC increase 12 million barrels daily by the year 2,000. During the same period non-OPEC production is expected to decline by 2 million barrels daily.

A positive outlook for natural gas is also playing a role in the grooming of energy stocks, according to Bradshaw, who said the so-called "gas bubble" disappeared in 1989 when deliverability and demand curves crossed. He predicts gas prices will hit $2.00 in 1991 and $2.60 by 1995. He also predicts that there will be

Price of rescuing S&Ls raised sharply

■ A slumping real estate market is blamed for sharply raising the cost of rescuing the savings and loan industry, now put at between $90 billion and $130 billion.

By Martin Crutsinger

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Bush administration on Wednesday dramatically boosted its estimate for rescuing the savings and loan industry, saying the government will need to borrow between $90 billion and $130 billion to clean up the S&L mess.

Treasury Secretary Nicholas Brady, in an appearance before Congress, blamed the slumping real estate market for bloating what was already the largest government bailout in history.

It was the first time the administration has acknowledged what critics have been contending for some time — that the amount of money included in last year's massive S&L bailout bill would not be enough.

During debate on the legislation last year, the administration insisted the problem could be largely handled with the $50 billion in long-term borrowing authority included in the bailout bill.

Some Democratic critics contended the new estimate showed that the administration was not moving quickly enough

Hunts win in IRS suit

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Hunt brothers of Dallas have won a $313-million Tax Court victory over the Internal Revenue Service.

The court, in a decision signed Tuesday by Judge Jules G. Korner III, rejected an IRS attack on a partnership that the Hunts created to cover heavy debts after the silver market collapsed in 1986.

"We conclude that PIL (Placid Investments Ltd.) was a valid partnership for federal income tax purposes," Korner wrote.

The IRS had sought $154.9 million in additional 1982 income taxes from Nelson Bunker Hunt and his wife, Caroline; $158.5 million from W. Herbert Hunt and his wife, Nancy, and $550,377 from Lamar Hunt and his wife, Norma.

Girl Scout cookie maker sold to Taiwanese firm

SAN FRANCISCO — Ian Wilson, the low-key but fast-moving financier, announced he is selling his Wyndham Food Inc. — the nation's third-largest but little-known cookie company — to a huge Taiwanese company for $335 million.

About half the price represents cash, the other half assumption of debt including $100 million in junk bonds.

Wyndham, founded in 1985, includes eight regional cookie companies in the South and Southeast including the nation's largest baker of Girl Scout Cookies. It sells mostly low-priced cookies under the brand names Murray, Jack's, Jackson's, Greg's, Barbara Dee and Plantation.

Wyndham paid just over $200 million for the cookie companies, whose revenues topped $300 million last year. Wilson and his investors — wealthy families and a few institutional investors — have about $35 million worth of equity in the company.

Wilson, chairman and chief executive of Wyndham, also revealed Tuesday that he has quietly assembled another food-products company — this one named Windmill Corp. — that has grown even larger than Wyndham.

The buyer for Wyndham is President Enterprises Corp., the Republic of China largest integrated food company with more than $1 billion in revenues.

Founded in 1967, the publicly held company produces instant noodles, edible oils, dairy products and fruit juices. It is also the exclusive distributor in Taiwan of Welch's juices and Budweiser beer, and is the Taiwan franchisee of Pepsi, 7-Eleven stores and Kentucky Fried Chicken.

President wants to expand in the United States, and selected Wyndham as its first U.S. acquisition because "they can get a good look at this country without competing head-to-head with a major food company like Keebler or Nabisco," Wilson said.

Cutting 'world-class saver's' tax liabilities

By Scott Burns

Burns

Q. I am 45 years old, unmarried, and have an annual salary of $35,000. I have about $117,000 in CDs, $33,500 in tax free muni bonds, $3,300 in a money market account, $8,300 in a 401k plan (to which I am currently adding 20 percent of my salary) and $52,000 in an IRA account that is managed by a management company and usually investing in the stock market (to which I am still investing my full $2,000 yearly). I own a home valued at about $90,000 and owe only $18,000 on a 73/4 percent mortgage with about 12 years left. I have no big outstanding debts although I intend to buy a new car within a year. Additionally, I am a saver and manage to save between $500 and $750 from my take home pay.

Now my questions: (1) Taxes are killing me and how can I legally lower them: (2) should I pay off the house early thereby saving lots of money in interest charges (my house payment is only $250 a month) and finally, (3) when I buy the new car should I pay cash or make payments?

I don't intend to retire until I'm at least 65, providing my health is OK and I don't believe that Social Security will be around or worth much to help defray retirement costs. I've worked hard for everything I have and want to keep it. One other thing, my mother lives with me and I claim her as a dependent and claim unmarried head of household on my tax. What do you advise? — R.D., Phoenix, Ariz.

A. The first thing you should know is that you are a world class saver. Assuming you are reinvesting all interest income, you are saving $9,000 in tax deferred accounts, at least $6,000 in after-tax income, and paying down mortgage debt at $1,600 a year for a total of $16,600 a year or 47 percent of your income. That's about 8 TIMES the average savings rate.

Your tax problems are NOT the consequence of your income from work. With a standard deduction of $4,550 and two exemptions of $2050 in addition to the $7,000 of 401k deduction, your taxable income based on employment is under $20,000. Your taxable income has to be over $24,850 as a head of household to be in the 28 percent tax bracket. This means that the first $5,000 or so of investment income is taxed at only 15 percent.

Your $117,000 in CDs, however, probably produce over $9,000 in taxable income. Here is how to reduce your tax exposure:

Increase your 401k contribution to the maximum, now over $8,000. That will reduce your taxable income by about $1,000.

Pay off your home mortgage. I wouldn't recommend this to someone who saved less or had less in financial assets... but for you it is reasonable even if it isn't absolutely efficient — you will be redeeming 8 percent CDs to pay off 73/4 percent debt. There are no tax benefits from the interest deduction on the mortgage and it will increase your cash flow by $3,000 a year while reducing your taxable interest income.

Put about $40,000 into a tax deferred annuity. These now yield about 8.4 percent, which is competitive with CDs... but it will reduce your taxable income. These three steps will reduce your taxable income by almost $6,000, taking you back into the 15 percent tax bracket.

Invest the remaining $60,000 in a combination of the following: $20,000 in shares of several regional telephone companies; $20,000 in a quality growth fund; and $20,000 in a small company fund such as the Vanguard Extended Market index fund. The average yield on this will be about 3 percent or less than $2,000 a year. You will need a raise or a substantial increase in dividends before you are in the 28 percent tax bracket again.

ANALYSIS

By CHET CURRIER
AP Business Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — Stock prices inched ahead on the strength of some late buying Wednesday, pushing the Dow Jones industrial average to its third straight record closing high.

Dow Jones's average of 30 blue chips rose 4.03 to 2,856.26, extending its gain over the last three sessions to 36.35 points.

Advancing issues and declines were about evenly balanced in the overall tally on the New York Stock Exchange, with 753 up, 739 down and 517 unchanged.

The Commerce Department reported Wednesday morning that new factory orders for durable goods fell 4.1 percent in April, providing a fresh sign of weakness in the economy.

As the day passed, the news helped to foster a moderate decline in interest rates. Prices of long-term government bonds rose almost $5 for each $1,000 in face value, reducing their yields to the 8.57 percent-8.60 percent range.

Still, brokers said bond traders seemed wary about chances for any extensive further drop in rates over the near term.

That in turn seemed to encourage the impulse among stock investors to cash in a few of the market's recent gains.

Precious-metals issues tumbled as the price of gold fell $11.50 an ounce to $364.60 on the Commodity Exchange in New York amid talk of gold sales by major investors in the Middle East.

ASA Ltd. lost 2⅜ to 49⅛; Homestake Mining 1½ to 18¼; Placer Dome 1 to 16⅛; American Barrick Resources 1 to 18⅛, and Newmont Gold 1½ to 43½.

Energy issues also were mostly lower as oil prices sagged. Exxon dropped ½ to 47⅝; Amoco ½ to 53¼; Chevron ⅝ to 69⅝; Schlumberger ¾ to 57, and Halliburton ⅝ to 48¾.

Gainers among the blue chips included International Business Machines, up 1 at 118¾; Coca-Cola, up 1⅜ at 44⅞; Philip Morris, up ⅛ at 45⅛; General Motors, up ⅛ at 49, and McDonald's, up ½ at 34⅛.

Donaldson Co. rose 2¾ to 30. Late Tuesday the company posted higher quarterly profits and raised its dividend.

Volume on the floor of the Big Board came to 172.33 million shares, down from 203.35 million in the previous session. Nationwide, consolidated volume in NYSE-listed issues, including trades in those stocks on regional exchanges and in the over-the-counter market, totaled 205.58 million shares.

As measured by Wilshire Associates' index of more than 5,000 actively traded stocks, the market increased $6.47 billion, or 0.19 percent, in value.

The NYSE's composite index of all its listed common stocks gained .27 to 195.85.

Occidental devotes half to oil and gas

LOS ANGELES — Occidental Petroleum Corp. said it is devoting nearly half of its companywide $1.4 billion capital budget to oil and gas and this year plans to drill 35 exploratory wells in China, Indonesia, Latin America, Malaysia, Oman, Pakistan, Syria and the U.K. North Sea.

Chairman and Chief Executive Officer Dr. Armand Hammer said Occidental has the best portfolio of international oil and gas exploration prospects in its history.

In remarks to more than 1,500 shareholders at the company's annual meeting at the Santa Monica Civic Auditorium, Dr. Hammer said Occidental last year replaced 124 percent of the reserves it produced on a worldwide energy equivalent basis.

Dr. Ray R. Irani, Occidental's president and chief operating officer, said production from the Claymore and Scapa fields in the North Sea, which resumed last August, is now at 50,000 barrels per day and is expected to reach 100,000 barrels per day by year-end.

Tesoro plans to auction Carrizo Springs refinery

SAN ANTONIO — Tesoro Petroleum Corp. announced its plans to auction all components of its Carrizo Springs, Texas refinery and off-site facilities. The company will accept bids for the refinery components at the auction scheduled for September 1990.

The company discontinued operations at the 26,100 barrels per day refinery in May 1984, and has been unsuccessful in attempts to sell the refinery.

Tesoro Petroleum Corporation is a natural resource company engaged in the following industry segments: refining, marketing, transportation and crude oil supply; exploration for and production of crude oil and natural gas.

IRA withdrawals get Uncle Sam his share

By Bill Doyle

Q. I'm going to be 58 in January 1991. I plan to retire in November 1990 and want to start taking money out of my individual retirement accounts without paying the 10 percent penalty tax usually levied for making IRA withdrawals before age 59 1/2.

In one column, you wrote: "To duck the penalty, the (withdrawal) payments must be made systematically — at least once a year over your life expectancy or the joint life expectancy of you and your IRA beneficiary. Also, once the withdrawals begin, they must continue for at least five years or until the IRA participant reaches age 59 1/2, whichever comes later."

You have referenced Internal Revenue Service private letter rulings concerning this. I've asked the IRS for copies of those letter but always received replies that all retirement information is in IRS Publications 554, 560, 575, 590 and 939. I've read those but can't find any reference to the five-year requirement.

Can you help me?

Doyle

A. Your memory is just a bit faulty. There has been no mention of IRS private letter rulings on that subject in this column. I have explained that the Tax Reform Act of 1986 contains a provision allowing penalty-free, early IRA withdrawals — exactly as mentioned in the paragraph you quote from a previous column.

It's no wonder you didn't find any mention of the five-year arrangement in those IRS publications. It's not in any of them.

IRS Publication 590, "Individual Retirement Arrangements (IRAs)," does touch on the subject. Under the heading "Tax on Premature Distributions (Early Withdrawals)," it mentions exceptions to which the 10 percent penalty tax does not apply — including "Distributions that are a part of a series of substantially equal payments over your life or your life expectancy or the lives of you and your beneficiary."

But there is not one word about having to continue making withdrawals for five years or until you become 591/2, whichever comes later.

Nevertheless, there is no doubt those are the rules. A spokesman for the IRS Washington, D.C., public information office says the statutory language for this is in Section 72t2Aiv of the Internal Revenue Code. If you want more details, get a copy of IRS Notice 88-25, in which the rules are spelled out in question and answer form.

Q. My husband and I will both reach age 70 1/2 this year, thus requiring us to start withdrawing money from our IRAs. Will we be able to defer tax on our withdrawals by helping our grandchildren with their education or by helping our son start a business?

A. No. It makes no difference what you do with the money withdrawn from IRAs. You're still required to pay whatever income tax applies. The money in an IRA remains tax deferred only as long as it stays in the IRA. Once it comes out, Uncle Sam gets his bite.

Your first IRA withdrawal must be made by April 1 following the year in which you turn 70 1/2. After that, you are required to make a withdrawal no later than December 31 annually. If you don't withdraw amounts based on your life expectancy or the joint life expectancy of you and your IRA beneficiary, you're socked with a tax equal to 50 percent of the amount you should have withdraw.

What you do with the money after you withdraw it is your decision. But you can't defer tax on, even though you put it to good use.

Q. I am 77. For the past several years, I have withdrawn more than the required amounts from my IRA. So, this year, I plan to withdraw less than the required amount to even things out. That should keep me square with the IRS. Right?

A. Wrong! Sorry about that, but your plan will get you into trouble with the IRS. You can make withdrawals in excess of the required amounts for as many years as you please. However, if you withdraw less than the required amount in any year, you are hit with that fat 50 percent tax penalty.

ANALYST: Sees gas activity as good sign less excess capacity in the non-peak months.

He said records indicate exploration companies are significantly increasing their exposure to natural gas and that was a good sign. He is not concerned about Canadian imports, and said that the U.S. will eventually need all the gas it can get and that gas from Canada would not back U.S. gas out of markets.

The PaineWebber researcher, who was invited to Midland by Midland Stockbroker Joe Liberty, said that LNG imports did not pose a problem to natural gas markets either, because the liquid gas was non-competitive at this point, even though it might become competitive as the price of natural gas increases.

Asked if the futures trading of natural gas on the New York Mercantile Exchange had impacted natural gas prices, Bradshaw said he had found no indication of impact on prices. He attributed the lack of impact to deliverability problems within the system.

BURNS: Saving questions

(From 5C)

Buy the new car with a low interest two year loan. You can afford the high payments even if they cut into your savings rate until the loan is paid off.

Now please allow me to make a peculiar observation. You currently have about $214,000 in financial assets. You are saving at least $15,000 a year, paying $3,000 on a home mortgage, and paying another $2,660 a year in employment taxes. Based on your earned income, you are living on less than $15,000 a year. To produce that income plus income taxes, conservatively and reliably, you need no more than $350,000 in savings if you assume a 5 percent yield.

You will be there, at your current savings rate, by age 50. You will be financially secure. After that, your continued saving will inevitably INCREASE your standard of living. Why don't you start thinking about doing something that would be fun?

COST: Bush's son dragged into crisis to close sick S&Ls.

(From 5C)

Rep. Charles Schumer, D-N.Y., called the situation an "unmitigated disaster" and warned that without greater administration attention "the crisis will get worse."

President Bush's son Neal has been dragged into the crisis. The younger Bush, formerly a director of Silverado Savings of Denver, is testifying before a House committee this week that is investigating allegations of conflict of interest between Bush the thrift board member and his business associates.

The administration said its more pessimistic projection was based on a belief that the slumping real estate market means more S&Ls are likely to fail and the cost of protecting depositors at the insolvent institutions will be greater.

Since most of an savings institution's assets are in the form of loans based on the value of real estate, falling real estate prices put more borderline institutions into trouble.

The administration's new cost range assumes that between 722 and 1,032 institutions could fail.

The new cost estimate does not include the cost of borrowing the money over the next 30 years. When that price is included, the bailout cost is expected to exceed $300 billion.

The General Accounting Office in April put the bailout cost with interest payments included at $325 billion, saying that figure could skyrocket to $500 billion if the economy falters.

Brady presented the administration's new estimate in testimony before the Senate Banking Committee. He refused to provide an estimate of the total pricetag with interest costs included, but he did not dispute the GAO assumptions.

Shagrue talks to creditors

CORAL GABLES, Fla. (AP) — Trustee Martin Shugrue gave Eastern Airlines' creditors a status report Wednesday in their first meeting since he was appointed to run the struggling carrier.

"We had a very candid, constructive open dialogue with the creditors," Shugrue said. "I was very encouraged by their attitude."

He wouldn't give details of the meeting at a hotel in this Miami suburb.

Shugrue was appointed April 18 by a federal bankruptcy judge to run Eastern after creditors became increasingly upset by setbacks in the rebuilding plan of the Texas Air Corp. management led by Chairman Frank Lorenzo.

Eastern has been in Chapter 11 bankruptcy reorganization since five days after the 1989 strike began.

There have been recent reports that Northwest Airlines and perhaps Pan American World Airways are interested in acquiring or combining with Eastern.

"We've had, as I've said before, expressions of interest from a number of people, and we'll examine every expression of interest. But to comment any further is just premature," Shugrue said.

"We're not out peddling the business or shopping the company, we're devoting our energies to restoring viability to Eastern and we're off to a darn fine start," he said.

Eastern's cut-rate "Y-not" fare promotion, offering money-back satisfaction guarantees and first-class seats for below industry coach rates, has "gone over very, very well," Shugrue said.

"We have seen double-digit increases in our advance bookings for summer travel, north-south travel, families coming to Florida flying Eastern Airlines, and we're very heartened by our initial look at the marketplace."

Shugrue said negotiations were ongoing with the pilots and Machinists unions. The pilots are negotiating recalls of union pilots, who ended their sympathy strike last November.

Advisors urges president not to drill for oil on Florida Keys

N.Y. Times News Service

WASHINGTON — A presidential task force has recommended that the Bush administration cancel the planned sale of oil and gas exploration rights near the Florida Keys, but left the door open to drilling on existing leases in that area.

The report could increase the pressure on President Bush to cancel the long-delayed sale of drilling leases off southwest Florida, and either cancel or defer similar sales off the southern and northern California coasts. Bush told Florida and California lawmakers last week that he would make a decision within days whether to proceed with the sales.

A congressional moratorium on drilling in those areas and certain areas off the New England and Alaskan coasts expires Sept. 30, but lawmakers have said they will seek to extend the moratorium if Bush tries to allow drilling to proceed.

The report was prepared by a Cabinel-level task force appointed by Bush last year. Although delivered in early January, the White House had kept it under wraps until a copy was obtained this week by Rep. Barbara Boxer, D-Calif. — a staunch opponent of offshore drilling — who made it available to the press.

The report notes the conflict between protecting the environment and assuring a steady supply of domestic energy sources and comes down primarily on the side of environmental protection.

"Based on its review of available information, the task force concludes that additional time and effort are needed before environmental concerns can be resolved in a manner that provides an acceptable balance between these often conflicting goals," the report said.

The area in dispute off the southwest Florida coast — roughly from Naples south — is formally known as Sale 116, Part II, which originally was scheduled to be sold in 1988. It covers 14 million acres divided into 2,500 tracts. Each tract is 9 square miles and could be offered for a five-year lease of exploration rights.

The report offers three options for Sale 116, Part II — all calling for the sale to be cancelled. The options differ on when to allow future sales and what to do with the 73 remaining existing leases purchased by 10 companies from 1982 to 1985 for $107.5 million.

One option would include the area of Sale 116, Part II in the 1992-97 Outer Continental Shelf (OCS) exploration program and allow drilling in the existing leases, subject to current law.

Two companies have sought permission to drill within the existing leases, but Florida has appealed to the Department of Commerce to block such activity under the Coastal Zone Management Act.

In deciding whether to grant the state's appeals, the task force suggests that "any subsequent development on these leases should be conditioned on the demonstration of the ability to better protect the Everglades and Keys ecosystems from oil spills and completion of additional ecological and socioeconomic studies."

A second option would include the area in the 1997-2002 OCS lease program and also would allow drilling in existing leases subject to current law. If the state wanted to block drilling in the existing leases, the report suggests that Florida repurchase the tracts from the oil companies.

Florida officials have vehemently opposed that suggestion and have argued that the federal government — which was paid for the leases in the first place — should repurchase them. Rep. William Lehman, a Democrat from Miami, has asked the House Appropriations Committee for money in next year's budget to begin repurchasing the leases.

A third option suggests that no leases be sold until after the year 2002 and suggests that the Interior secretary immediately begin a five-year process of cancelling the existing leases.

IRS: Hunts win tax bout

minor issue, denying Lamar and Norma Hunt a $12,580 deduction for real estate expenses.

The judge criticized IRS lawyers who handled the case, saying their motions for subpoenas requiring banks to produce numerous documents were unreasonable and oppressive. Enforcement of those subpoenas, Korner wrote, "would have resulted in a chaotic atmosphere, causing great inconvenience for many persons for little or no gain."

The central issue in the case was whether PIL was a legitimate partnership. PIL was set up by the brothers and by Placid Oil Co., which was owned by Hunt family trusts. Placid participated because of a fear it would be damaged if either of the Hunt brothers was forced into bankruptcy.

Fantasy fiction writers still enchanting readers

By Robert G. Wieland

PLANO (AP) — Master storytellers L. Sprague de Camp and his wife of 50 years, Catherine Crook de Camp, have a cottage industry busier than a lemonade stand at the gates of Hades.

They're trying to satisfy the booming market for fantasy fiction — a market de Camp helped create in the 1930s.

Six decades later and less than a year after his last sword-and-sorcery book release ("The Honorable Barbarian," Ballantine Books, $16.95), de Camp has another book at the printer ("The Pixilated Peeress"), a science fiction novel in progress and is working on his autobiography, "Time and Chance."

At the same time, the de Camps, both 82, are popular speakers at science-fantasy conventions.

They help raise money for libraries in their new home town, a Dallas suburb, and are administering the commercial empire of Conan the Barbarian, the sword-wielding strongman created by the late Robert E. Howard.

David G. Hartwell, editor of The World Treasury of Science Fiction, said de Camp is well known as one of the first-generation fantasy and science fiction writers.

"He is still published both in hardcover and in paperback by major New York publishers and has no trouble finding an audience for his work," Hartwell said in a telephone interview from his home in Pleasantville, N.Y.

The de Camps manage their hectic careers from separate dens. His is festooned with swords and buttressed with bookshelves.

Age hasn't stopped their writing, but it has changed their lifestyle. The de Camps recently moved from a one-acre estate in Villanova, Pa.

"I could either write books or keep up the grounds but I couldn't do both," de Camp said of the move from the Northeast. "We were beginning to find the stairs, the winters and the upkeep of the lot just a bit much for octogenarians."

He still pulls weeds, but de Camp now has more time for writing — a profession he entered by accident after selling a short story to a magazine in 1938.

"I said, 'Whee, why hasn't somebody told me about this before? It sure beats working.' "

De Camp holds degrees in engineering and economics and has worked in many fields. But he has spent most of the past six decades toiling before a typewriter as a highly successful freelance writer.

His style was influenced by such writers as Edgar Rice Burroughs, Thorne Smith, P.G. Wodehouse, H.G. Wells, Lord Dunsany and Lewis Carroll, de Camp said.

As a result, his works are literary, scholarly or whimsical.

De Camp is the author or co-author of about 100 books, including popularizations of science and technology. Mrs. de Camp has collaborated with him on 16 and has written three books of her own, including two on managing money.

"I'm his business manager," Mrs. de Camp said. She deals with publishers, handles requests for convention appearances and works closely with her husband on the development of each story.

He and Mrs. de Camp recently donated 120 of their titles and numerous files to the University of Texas at Austin, she said, including hardbacks, paperbacks, and translations into other languages.

The de Camp archive "is probably one of the most comprehensive author files in existence and documents the lengthy career of an extremely popular and successful American author," said Dr. Harold Billings, director of UT Austin's General Libraries.

De Camp's classics include "Lest Darkness Fall" and the Harold Shea stories (co-authored with Fletcher Pratt) contained in "The Complete Compleat Enchanter."

Hartwell calls the Shea stories, written half a century ago, a breakthrough.

"It was fantasy treated as a series of scientific experiences — but for fun," Hartwell said.

The de Camps now are getting involved in movies as Rabb Productions of Philadelphia explores making a film out of the short story "A Gun for Dinosaur."

However, producers want the mostly male story written in 1956 to include a strong female character — a device that has helped bolster the popularity of fantasy stories among women.

Fantasy accounts for nearly 10 percent of all fiction sales in the United States, Hartwell said. Science fiction couldn't capture enough female readers, the majority of mass-market fiction buyers, he said.

Fantasy sales also have outstripped science fiction, de Camp said, because rapid advances in technology quickly turn science fiction into fact. And, he said, "You don't have to think" while escaping into the pages of a fantasy story.

Button up style with a spring jacket

Must-have spring wardrobe item is versatile jacket that may last through fall

By Nancy Miller Lewis
Copley News Service

In fashion, there is always a certain article of of-the-moment clothing that is absolutely indispensable.

Being the peripatetic animal fashion is, however, that pivotal piece changes. One day it's the oversize sweater. It remains in style long enough to lull you into sartorial security, and then all of a sudden — ZAP! — it's the short skirt.

Make no mistake about it, when the switch occurs, you've got to stop in midstep and get with it. It's one of those one-minute-you-don't-see-it-any where-and-then-all-of-a-sudden-it's-everywhere phenomena.

Until le must is procured, a woman can feel a bit uneasy about her clothes, sometimes getting downright self-conscious about her appearance. You feel like you're wearing a corset and bustle while the rest of the world is dressed for "The Jetsons."

In an effort to make knowledge power, then, be warned that a switch is in the works for spring:

THINK JACKETS.

"The jacket is meant to simplify life. It's a constant, like the T-shirt or jeans, something that sooner or later everybody has to wear," designer Giorgio Armani says in Mirabella magazine.

Of course, a jacket can't simplify your life if you don't have one — the right one.

Basically the good spring jacket — and don't be misled by "spring"; it is quite possible you'll still be wearing the thing in November — is longer and more form-fitting than its forerunners.

To make it a good buy, it should come in a seasonless material so that if it does end up costing the ranch, at least you'll get your wear out of it. Most of all, though, the new jacket must bear something outstanding — a suede collar, a floral print, an unusual neck line, a peplum.

And because women have different clothing needs and wants, the jacket comes in a variety of styles that boils down to three looks:

SPORTSWEAR. For many women, this is the most versatile jacket. It pulls an outfit together whether she is going off for a day in the country in her jeans or into the office in the city where she wears her best skirt and silk blouse.

While long, this jacket may be a bit boxy (to accommodate blouses and sweaters).

Michael Kors, a designer of simple sophistication, even takes the sportswear look into the evening by combining a structured linen jacket (like the kind you might wear to work) with a long flowing chiffon skirt. Talk about versatile.

DRESSMAKER JACKET. The jacket in this instance is not quite so versatile, but it is unmistakably ladylike and afternoon-elegant. It often features dressmaker details such as a neckline that makes a blouse superfluous, and — especially this spring — waist interest, such as a belt or peplum.

Because this jacket is part of a suit that, in total, looks remarkably like a dress, it is said to be "married" to its skirt. While this marriage may not make for any mixing and matching, it does make for no-brainer dressing, no small blessing on mornings when you're rushed.

EVENING JACKET. Here's a jacket so opulent that it's every bit as much an accessory as your crystal earrings.

This spring, a must-have item for women's wear is a versatile jacket.

Composed of a luxurious material — something like slubbed silk — or adorned with sequins or beading, this jacket appears to be an emotional buy (you know, the thing you empty the piggy bank for and have absolutely no idea what to do with once you get it), but it actually can be quite a savvy purchase, much smarter than getting another evening dress.

The evening jacket can be worn with a variety of plain pieces such as a jumpsuit, slip dress, silk skirt or slacks, allowing for a variety of looks.

The advantages of the jacket are not new-found. Many professional women do not feel completely dressed unless they are suited.

And then comes a woman like designer Donna Karan, who likes the jacket so much she elongated the style and camouflaged it as a dress.

Jose Eber's makeovers in book make some startling changes

By VALLI HERMAN
N.Y. Times News Service

LOS ANGELES — Beverly Hills hair stylist Jose Eber hopes to give women a new look with his new book. In "Beyond Hair: The Ultimate Makeover Book" (Simon and Schuster; $19.95), Eber takes readers through the makeovers of a variety of women. By giving them different haircuts, hair colors and makeup, Eber produces some startling changes.

The book, in stores this week, is a manual for improving self-esteem, according to Eber.

"I want to convince women to accept what they have," he said. "I'm tired of hearing women complain about their features. There is hope for everybody."

In a series of photographs, the book shows how a new hairstyle can reduce the emphasis on a woman's large nose, increase attention to her eyes or take years off her face.

"This nose is going to be pretty, I decided," Eber said of one client in the book. "I believe in her case, the dark hair made her face look more severe. I changed her hair color immediately. I'm not going to send anybody to plastic surgery."

His book illustrates possibilities available to women.

"My theory is that women have more than one look," he said. "Too many times, they're stuck with the same look, and they become afraid of changes." Women may also need the self-esteem to believe that they aren't unattractive, no matter what they have been told.

"In the '80s, we were brainwashed," Eber said. "You must be thin. You must work out. You must have a fabulous mane of hair.

"In the 1990s, every woman is going to find her own look. Nobody is going to dictate," he said. The first step in a makeover is to have faith.

A makeover at any salon can be pricey. At Eber's salons in Beverly Hills, the Beverly Center, South Coast Plaza and other locations, a complete makeover can cost from $200 to $250.

"They come to me looking for a change. It's almost like going for an exciting ride at Disneyland," he said.

Tastebuds improve with age

By Erma Bombeck

A "thirtysomething" reader posed an interesting question. "Why is it when speaking with an 'older' person about a trip or a vacation they've been on, I get an answer like this?

Bombeck

"Me: 'You were at Yellowstone last summer. How was it?'

"Them: 'Oh, it was wonderful! We had the best spaghetti I've ever tasted just outside of Jackson Hole at a little restaurant ...'"

The young woman observed that about 75 percent of the conversation with older people is about food ... where it is, how much it cost, how it tasted. She wondered if it was because they grew up in the Great Depression, when food was scarce and they had to eat the same thing all the time.

I think that's part of it. When I was attending college, my mother's letters read like a menu. She began with breakfast and outlined everything she had to eat for the entire week. Our phone conversations were always about the same thing: food. "What are you having for dinner? I'm heating up the leftover ham and frying some potatoes and having a little corn on the cob."

A few years ago, she and my dad took a cruise to Alaska. They took 125 slides; only six had people in them. (Two of them were pastry chefs.) The other pictures were carved bits of ice, cheese displays, baskets of bread and flaming desserts.

I blamed the Depression years for having to "clean up" everything on my plate and eat up the black bananas before I could start on the yellow ones. We were told the "heels" of bread made your hair curly and starving Armenians were waiting in line for those stinking brussels sprouts. Mom would spend a fortune on glass jars and lids to can a bag of "free" apples.

My other theory is that after a certain age, food is one of the few vices left that you can enjoy. The kids are gone and have their own lives. Your job is a memory. Physical activities are a real effort. A new car no longer gives you the kick it once did. Food is one of the few fantasies you can lust after and turn into reality. If you live long enough, food even replaces sex.

Our young friend said the weird part of her findings was that a couple of weeks ago, a contemporary of hers went to a Paul McCartney concert, and when asked how she liked it, said, "Oh, it was great. You should have seen all the food we had before the concert — honey-baked ham, roast turkey, munchies ..."

I told my reader that her friend was older than she thinks.

Avant-garde designer go long on skirts

By Woody Hochswender
N.Y. Times News Service

The city never sleeps, and fashion never rests. Just when you became comfortable with short skirts, guess what?

"All the avant-garde designers are starting to make long," said Pablo de Echevarria-Navarro, the director of Neomode, the experimental young designer division of Gruppo GFT, a large Italian manufacturer.

This could mean closet shock for American women who have taken two years to grow accustomed to showing their knees. But don't worry, it won't happen overnight.

Neomode, which was set up to provide a design laboratory for new talents, has its eye on the future. After seeing 180 design collections around the world, Neomode arranged to distribute six: Workers for Freedom, from England; Dries Van Noten, from Belgium; Jesus del Pozo, from Spain; Mirella and Michael Kramer, from West Germany, and Kalinka, from the United States.

The company plans to back the designers for two to six seasons, giving them the kind of marketing and production support most small fashion companies do not have, before deciding whether to produce them on a larger scale.

Interestingly, none of the designers chosen are from France or Italy, where Neomode's parent company gets most of its heavy hitters: Giorgio Armani, Emanuel Ungaro, Valentino and Claude Montana.

"The big trees do not let the little ones grow," Echevarria said, adding that many of the young designers they looked at were following too closely in the footsteps of established innovators like Romeo Gigi and Jean-Paul Gaultier. The designers they found were ones who went their own way, which these days include some longer lengths.

Neomode expects to invest about $500,000 in each designer.

DEAR ABBY

Allowing child to nip is no no

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: My son-in-law thinks it's perfectly all right to give his 3-year-old son sips of his beer and wine. He has been doing this for some time. I am extremely concerned over this, as the child seems to like beer and wine, and there is a history of alcoholism on both sides of the family. My daughter has expressed her disapproval of this, but he pays no attention to her.

Van Buren

Abby, please comment on this subject, as my son-in-law is extremely stubborn and nothing my daughter and I have said changes his mind. Maybe he will believe you. — CONCERNED GRANDMOTHER

DEAR CONCERNED: I hope he believes me when I say — unequivocally — that giving a child sips of beer and wine is child abuse, whether there is a history of alcoholism in the family or not.

DEAR ABBY: Regarding your advice to "Sad," who had strong suspicions that her trusted friend was stealing from her, add this to the thousands of letters you'll receive from lawyers throughout the country. Our judicial system requires jurors to be convinced beyond a reasonable doubt, not a "shadow of a doubt," as you stated. It is unlikely that any of our overworked prosecutors would even attempt to overcome the burden of "shadow of a doubt," coupled with a plea of "not guilty."

Further, since it was painfully obvious that "Sad's" friend was stealing from her, the friendship can never be the same, as she will always have a reasonable doubt as to his honesty. — ROYCE GUINN, ATTORNEY AT LAW, CLEVELAND

DEAR MR. GUINN: I did not receive "thousands" of letters advising me that the correct term was "beyond a reasonable doubt," but I did hear from half a dozen sharp-eyed readers. Thanks to the others who wrote — two from New York, one from Florida and three from Nevada!

DEAR ABBY: As the end of the school year draws near again, please remind high school graduates not to send graduation announcements to their teachers.

My husband has been a teacher for 26 years, and every year we are swamped with graduation invitations. The same is true for weddings, baby showers and bridal showers.

Some even write, "I was in your class when I was in 9th grade" or, "I am So-and-So's daughter."

Abby, even sending a card of congratulations can be too expensive for our budget, and time-consuming as well. We send gifts and cards to those we feel close to — whether they send announcements or not. If graduates, brides-to-be and expectant mothers would realize how many students their teachers have had during their teaching careers, it would be a big favor to the teachers. Please print this. — NO NAME OR TOWN, PLEASE

DEAR NO NAME: You make a good point. Well-meaning students, please take notice.

DEAR ABBY: Apropos "older" graduates: I was present when the then-ambassador to Japan, Mike Mansfield, delivered the commencement address for the University of Maryland's Asian Division in Tokyo. Ambassador Mansfield began his speech with, "To the graduate who is receiving his degree at age 61, young man, you have a bright future!"

Ambassador Mansfield was 83 years old at the time. — JEFF CHEEK, AOMORI, JAPAN

What teen-agers need to know about sex, drugs, AIDS and getting along with their peers and parents is now in Abby's updated, expanded booklet, "What Every Teen Should Know." To order, send a long, business-size, self-addressed envelope, plus check or money order for $3.95 ($4.50 in Canada) to: Dear Abby, Teen Booklet, P.O. Box 447, Mount Morris, Ill. 61054. (Postage is included.)

Reservists on 'nation-building' duty

By Gordon Zeigler
Hearst News Service

PLAINVIEW, Texas — Texas Army reservists and others from across the nation have been caught up in highly unusual active duty assignments in Panama in recent months — primarily because they possess key civilian skills needed to help rebuild the nation.

Called to serve active duty tours of 31 to 139 days, they became part of an elite Army team known as Civil Military Operations Task Force South, citizen-soldier "experts" tapped to accomplish a post-combat mission of nation building and restoration of a democracy within a deteriorating Panama.

Unlike the U.S. invasion last December to topple Panama's military dictator, Gen. Manuel Antonio Noriega, this civil affairs mission in no way resembles combat. It is unorthodox by Army standards in that many of the soldiers don civilian clothes, not battle fatigues, to serve as advisers to Panamanian citizens.

It also is unusual for the Army to rely so heavily on reserves, but the active Army has only one civil affairs (CA) battalion. The majority of the Army's CA strength exists in CA reserve units.

So, with little fanfare, and out of the public eye, soldiers have been rotating into the country, then back home again since the U.S. invasion — dubbed Operation Just Cause — began.

A stint in Panama was the farthest thing from the mind of the postmaster of Abernathy, Texas, of a farmer from Idalou, Texas, and of two Texas Department of Public Safety officers when their phones rang Dec. 20 alerting them their skills were needed at once in Panama.

Jesse Mendoza, an Army reserve captain and Department of Public Safety officer stationed in Plainview, Texas, put his law enforcement background into play when called to active duty with a 21-member team of men highly-skilled in civilian police work.

"As reservists, we are always prepared to be called to active duty," Mendoza said. "But we still had a lot of last-minute things to take care of before we left."

Mendoza, who says his wife supported his efforts, prepared to leave, learning later that even his 3-year-old son Mark comprehended much of what was going on while Dad left job and family behind.

"His daycare teacher, Mrs. Frances Sams, told me he was telling everyone at the center that 'My Daddy is in the Army. He's in Panama.' Apparently, he knew just where I was," Mendoza recalls.

The DPS officers were involved in planning sessions with Panamanians, helping brainstorm the framework for a national police academy — a task that Panama's vice president Guillermo Ford recently told Congress is currently a top priority for the country.

Another DPS officer, C.A. "Tony" Richardson, called the Panama tour one that "surpassed anything I had ever done in the army."

Abernathy's postmaster and chamber of commerce president Ruben Garcia was one of the first West Texas reservists to leave.

Garcia learned his rushed-up deployment was to come on Dec. 26. The Army, however, changed its mind and called him at 2 a.m. Christmas Eve. He hurriedly celebrated a pre-dawn gift exchange with his family then left for the Lubbock airport.

BY TOM AND RAY MAGLIOZZI

SENSING SOMETHING'S WRONG WITH SENSOR LIGHT

Dear Tom and Ray:

I drive a late-model car. At 30,000 miles, the oxygen sensor light came on. I have gotten conflicting opinions about the importance of replacing the oxygen sensor when this dashboard light comes on. One mechanic told me it's necessary for the car to run properly and efficiently. Another said that it was only for emission-control requirements and wasn't needed for the car to run properly. Do I need to spend the $300 (estimate) to replace it? — Larry RAY: That's a very good question, Larry. The oxygen sensor IS necessary for the efficient and clean operation of the car, but you DON'T necessarily have to replace it just because the light comes on.

TOM: What the oxygen sensor does is constantly measure the amount of oxygen in the exhaust. It then sends those readings to the car's computer, which continually adjusts the fuel/air mixture. If the sensor isn't working, the car will run poorly and will pollute the air.

RAY: The "oxygen sensor" or "emissions" light on your dashboard comes on for one of two reasons. Either there IS something wrong with the oxygen sensor, or it's simply time for the emissions system to be serviced.

RAY: Most cars call for emissions service at 30,000 miles, so I'm going to guess your light was tripped by the odometer, rather than a malfunction. But regardless of why the light came on, you should take the car to a mechanic.

TOM: If everything is fine, your mechanic can simply reset the dash light (which will then come on again at 60,000). Don't bother trying to reset it yourself. The manufacturers have learned to hide the reset buttons so people like you won't be tempted to skip the emissions service.

RAY: If it turns out something is wrong with the oxygen sensor, or if the manufacturer calls for a replacement at 30,000, then you'll have to replace it. Since you didn't tell us what kind of car this is, check your owner's manual to see if a new one is required.

TOM: One final thought, Larry: $300 is an awful lot to spend on an oxygen sensor. Unless you're driving something like a Mercedes, an Audi or the Starship Enterprise, you should spend $150 or less.

Dear Tom and Ray:

I am trying to locate an exhaust manifold for a 1965 Ford Thunderbird. I am having a very difficult time. Ford has not been able to help me. Do you know of any way I might find such a rare part? — Robert

RAY: We have two suggestions. The first assumes that you're looking for a manifold because yours is cracked. If that's the case, our suggestion is to have it welded.

TOM: If, on the other hand, you're looking for a manifold because yours has been stolen (I understand there have been a rash of manifold burglaries in your area), your best bet would be to place an ad in a classic-car publication like Hemmings Motor News (P.O. Box 100, Bennington, VT 05201).

RAY: Actually, Robert, if I were you, I'd put two ads in Hemmings. One looking for a manifold for a '65 T-Bird, and one offering for sale a '65 T-Bird without a manifold. See which ad gets the first response and go for it!
