Nav. district struggles with lease, Cove Harbor North

By TED NORMAN
Managing editor

In a lengthy and sometimes heated meeting Tuesday, Dec. 7, the commissioners of the Aransas County Navigation District approved a new lease and discussed their efforts to build a new harbor to be known as Cove Harbor North.

The ACND commissioners voted to enter into a new lease with Howard Gilliam who was granted a five-year lease with options for renewal near the Aransas Lighthouse in the Ann Channel near Port Aransas.

Gilliam wants to build an offshore support area for the purpose of servicing and repairing jackup rigs and other related offshore vessels.

Gilliam first brought his request for the lease to the ACND board during the regular monthly meeting of the commissioners on Nov. 9.

During the early part of the discussion of the lease the commissioners questioned their attorney Reese Rozzell who said that he had met with Gilliam earlier and discussed some points in the lease and that he felt the instrument was a good one.

The discussion then turned to the price Gilliam would pay for the lease of the submerged land and an argument broke out between the commissioners and Gilliam.

In the November meeting it was proposed that Gilliam pay the district one percent of his gross income. But a lengthy argument began over the one percent figure.

Commissioner Kirk Holman asked the board if one percent is enough and Gilliam stated that he had come up with the one percent figure from studying the Marine Drilling lease.

"Marine Drilling isn't based on market value right now," Holman replied.

Holman then walked to an aerial wall map and pointing to the area in question near the Port Aransas jetties said, "This area is fixing to become a major offshore support area. Many companies have applied for leases in this area."

Gilliam defended the one percent rate, saying, "I do not have dry land, I am leasing submerged land."

In response to the reference to Marine Drilling, one commissioner stated that Marine Drilling comes to mind as one of our problems.

"This is an ideal situation where we should know the value of that property," said Holman as he continued his fight for more than one percent of the lease. "And according to this we are locked into these terms after the five years," he added.

Commissioner Dave Maguglin told Gilliam, "Howard, there really should be a minimum and a maximum where the board that follows us couldn't shoot a figure at you that would shoot you out of the water."

Gilliam said that he would be making improvements to the area and asked the commissioners if they would take that into consideration in figuring the amount of the lease price.

Chairman Bobby Landrum responded to Gilliam's question, saying he thought the removal of the pilings in the area would remove a big liability from the navigation district.

Commissioner Dave Maguglin continued his opposition to being locked into the one percent figure, saying, "There are too many things that can happen in the next five years and I'm not in favor of locking the navigation district into a one percent figure."

Maguglin said he didn't have any land he would be willing to lease for one percent and a member of the board responded to the remark, saying, "But you don't have any land under water."

"Sometimes waterfront property is more valuable than pasture land," replied Maguglin.

The commissioners continued to wrestle with the problem citing prices paid for other leases and Gilliam responded, saying, "They have dry land behind the bulkhead." Gilliam's lease will not give him access to land, only submerged land.

Election unaffected by precinct changes

Voters in Wednesday's, Dec. 15, special senate election won't have to worry about changes in county precinct lines. The new lines won't go into effect until Jan. 1, which means for this election, county residents will vote where they have in the past.

Absentee balloting for the election continued light through Thursday morning, with only seven absentee votes cast at that time. Because of the brief time available for absentee voting, the county clerk's office will be open from 2 p.m. until 6 p.m. Saturday, Dec. 11, for those wishing to vote absentee.

Polls will open at 7 a.m. on election day and remain open until 7 p.m. for the election in which Tim Von Dohlen and John Sharp are vying for the full-term District 18 State Senate seat of the late John Wilson.

Polling stations will be the Voting Center in Aransas Pass for Pct. 1A; Rockport's VFW Hall for Pct. 1; Aransas County Courthouse for Pct. 2; Faith Baptist Chapel in Fulton for Pct. 3; the Fulton Fire Station, Pct. 4; and the Lamar Fire Station, Pct. 4A.

The winner of Wednesday's special election, called last month by Governor Bill Clements, will fill out the Senate term that begins Jan. 1, 1983.

The special election became necessary when Dist. 18 voters in the Dec. 3 elections

Fulton zoning action delayed until after Jan. 1

FULTON — The Fulton Town Council decided in their Tuesday, Dec. 7 meeting that because of the upcoming holiday period they will wait until after the first of the year to consider the proposed Fulton zoning ordinance.

Fulton Mayor L.E. Casterline said that with the holiday season upon us, it would be too difficult to get everyone together to discuss the ordinance and suggested that it wait until after Jan. 1. The rest of the council members agreed.

The decision came in response to an appearance by Fulton Zoning Committee Chairman Charles Belaire, who asked council members if anyone had any questions pertaining to the proposed ordinance. No one had any questions at the time, and several council members said that they were still in the process of reading the ordinance.

Alderwoman Pat Loflin suggested that council hold a workshop meeting after Jan. 1 and discuss the proposed ordinance paragraph by paragraph.

Belaire said that he had discussed possible zoning changes with Seachase Condominiums Sales Manager George Griffin regarding zoning on the beach side of Fulton Beach Road. Belaire said it might be possible to create B-2 district on the beach side of the road which would restrict construction projects in that district to restaurants, marinas and similarly approved projects.

Alderman Elgin Dietz stressed the need for any development in that area to be consistent with the goals of the community.

In other council news, Dietz suggested that the council get in touch with highway department officials about putting signs on Hwy. 35 and FM 881 giving the number of miles to Fulton.

Ground is broken for new shopping center

"This is the place — this is going to be the key intersection of this area," Roger Seaman Jr., president of Candy Stick Corporation, predicted Wednesday morning as ground was broken for the new Harbor Oaks Shopping Village just north of Rockport.

Rockport Mayor Burt Mills, Fulton Mayor L.E. Casterline, representatives of the two area banks and other civic and community leaders were on hand at the 10 a.m. ceremonies that marked the beginning of construction of Aransas County's newest shopping center.

The $5 million shopping development on Hwy. 35 between Traylor and Henderson Avenues will be a combination strip center and mini-mall with a total of 120,000 square feet of floor space.

Seaman said 80,000 square feet of that — including a 22,500-square-foot Stanley grocery store — will be completed to begin with another 40,000 square feet to be added later.

Plans call for the construction started Wednesday morning to be completed within the next nine months, he added.

Those attending Wednesday's ground-breaking were served champagne in the offices of Live Oak Real Estate, the firm that has handled local leasing of space in the new center. Seaman declined Wednesday morning to name any of the other tenants who will be locating in the center but last spring, when the development was first announced, Seaman said it would include an Eckerd Drug Store.

Rockport City Administrator Herman Johnson said Wednesday that Rockport is one of the fastest-growing small cities on the Texas coast. Within the last three years, he observed, approximately 150 condominiums have been built in the Rockport-Fulton area and another 400 to 500 "are in the talking stages today."

He noted the new Wal-Mart store opened two months ago and H.E.B. is now building its second-largest store in Texas in Rockport.

Editorial & opinion

Detente: the alternatives may be unacceptable

"Detente" is a word not heard too frequently in recent months in exchanges between the U.S. and Soviet Union.

The word means relaxation of strained relations or tensions, as between nations.

Relations between the two countries have been more strained than usual during the past two years.

This has increased tension in a world frightened by threat of nuclear war.

There was speculation in some diplomatic circles when Yuri Andropov succeeded the late Leonid Brezhnev as head of the Soviet Communist Party the new ruler might be disposed to seek improved relations between his country and the U.S.

Only time will provide answers to some of the questions in the minds of people everywhere about how Andropov will handle the nuclear war threat. However, he said in his first address to the party leadership since being named general secretary "the future belongs to detente."

He indicated he believes in the doctrine of peaceful co-existence, but made clear the Soviet Union will make no "preliminary concessions" toward achieving better relations with the U.S. and its allies.

Andropov stresses continuation of Brezhnev's foreign policies, including Kremlin overtures for better relations with China.

He recalled Brezhnev had described China as "our great neighbor" in a bid to establish closer contact with the big communist nation.

In what was interpreted as a reference to Reagan administration statements the new Soviet leadership should send a signal such as removing its soldiers from Afghanistan, Andropov declared:

"Statements in which readiness for normalizing relations is linked with demands the Soviet Union pay for this with some sort of preliminary concessions... do not sound serious, to say the least."

While this statement may not be considered as closing the door on future Soviet concessions in other areas of relations with the U.S., it appears unlikely this early in Andropov's administration there will be any appreciable retrenchment in Brezhnev's policies at least beyond the Soviet borders.

The Reagan administration may have to reconsider its attitude toward the Soviet government, especially if Andropov pursues with unmistakable signs his willingness to give new meaning to detente.

The alternatives may be unacceptable.

A mouse kicking a cat

AN ALMOST CLOUDLESS day, the sun is warm and bright, Karakal is in Santa Rosa Sound. On our left the shore is covered with tall pines, to the south the white sandy shores of Santa Rosa Island, separating us from the Gulf by less than a quarter of a mile. We are between Pensacola and Ft. Walton. At hand is a small pile of notes made more than a month ago while reading William Prange's "At Dawn We Slept," beyond much question the most definitive work thus far done on the Japanese attack on Pearl Harbor — what, only 41 years ago? To me and others it seems like only yesterday. Yet the youngest among us at that time are now passing middle age. By contrast that time is to the youth of today ancient history, and so by the mores of the present just as well forgotten.

BUT FOR THOSE WHO remember, for many years I labored under the conviction that President Franklin Roosevelt knew the attack was coming. That aside from my admitted distaste for the man. Even during the years of the World War II conflict, a book, "My Ten Years in Japan," by Joseph McGrew, ambassador to Japan at the time of Pearl Harbor, gave strength to my conviction. True, McGrew made the charges, but his book contained many of his warning signals that were sent to Washington in the months, even days before the attack.

The man who undid my thinking was Sir William Stephenson, head of the British intelligence. His story was told some four years ago by William Stephenson in "A Man Called Intrepid." Any doubts I had retained regarding Roosevelt were dispelled by Prange.

None of this is to imply that FDR was doing all the right things prior to that Dec. 7. Who was? True, Roosevelt recognized the inevitability of war but was thwarted at every hand by the isolationists. Here I must give him high marks for the extent we were actually prepared when war came.

I should also note that my differences with FDR were socio-political. For even those with no more than a dilettante interest in Pearl Harbor, Prange brings loud and clear the message that the defense of this nation today is, as in 1941, because of the lack of coordination between the various branches of the military, a jealous and petty rivalry.

Of course, as the world knows, there had to be fall guys for Pearl Harbor and that role fell naturally upon Admiral Kimmel and General Short, the commanding officers at Pearl, and true, both made mistakes, but mistakes that were as much the fault of Washington as theirs. Also, each often lacked information that was in the hands of the other. From my knowledge from Prange's book I might blame Short for not maintaining more regular and frequent air patrols, especially to the north of Oahu, but even there he is to be regarded with some leniency because of shortage of aircraft, despite his pleas for more.

Both Short and Kimmel must be faulted because weekends for both branches of the military were holidays. Even sea patrols were abandoned during that time, a circumstance well known to Japanese intelligence. The Japs also knew that for more than a year it had been customary to moor all ships together at Pearl.

HIGH BRASS IN Washington had discussed the possibility of a sneak attack by the Japanese for more than a year and dismissed the possibility, as I see it, for reasons that were opposite to reality. A straight forward attack would have been out of character for the Japanese.

In Washington, their 1904 attack on Port Arthur was remembered. Well aware that Japan had no more than a six month supply of oil it was reasoned that it would be no less than foolhardy to attack the U.S., or as Kimmel phrased it, "It would be like a mouse kicking a cat."

Even so, it was assumed that should the Empire go into action it would be a move against Singapore and the Dutch East Indies. Yet in June of 1941 Rear Admiral P.N.L. Bellinger warned: "A successful sudden raid against our ships and naval installations on Oahu might prevent effective action by our forces in the Western Pacific for a long time."

A pity no one listened. Bellinger was so right that he might have been privy to the councils of war in Tokyo.

In these all too incomplete notes on Prange's book, I will conclude with a personal one.

I was in Singapore in mid-November as a passenger aboard the old President Filmore. When we sailed it was not the direct route to Honolulu but south through the Torres Straits, between New Guinea and Australia, then across the Pacific skirting east of the Carolines.

Was it the wisdom of the captain? I was not privy to his thinking nor his council. Convinced as everyone in the east in those days that there would be war with Japan I gave him credit for the wisdom. We never saw a single ship on the voyage after clearing the straits. Then after those 40 years, I learned from Prange that on Oct. 17 Admiral Starke in Washington had ordered all Trans-Pacific shipping to use the Torres Strait route.

ROOSEVELT CALLED the attack "A Day of Infamy." Without defending the Japs, I disagree. Instead the strategy was the only conceivable one open to Tokyo. We should have known. Pearl Harbor could have been prevented. We knew that the navy from the land of the rising sun was at sea, and didn't bother to give it more than passing thought.

A sharp distinction

France needs the United States more than the U.S. needs France.

That fact should be communicated in its simplicity to the French government, which seems to make a habit of challenging almost every program the U.S. proposes.

Americans hoped the French attitude would change when the deGaulle government marched off the world stage into history. But the expected changes have not materialized.

Now the French government is going out of its way to embarrass the Reagan administration by disputing President Reagan's word that agreement had been reached on how the East-West trade policy was to be made public.

The president announced agreement on the policy, although full accord had not been reached on a public announcement, which appeared to be a small detail, but which was magnified by France.

There were no challenges from other parties to the trade agreement announcement, but it was sharply rejected by the French government.

The rejection heralded warnings of a split between the U.S. and France with the potential of being as bitter and serious as that caused by President Reagan's Soviet gas pipeline sanctions because European governments had agreed to new curbs on trade with the Soviet Union and its Warsaw Pact allies.

A French Foreign Ministry statement said no new agreement on East-West trade had been reached so far in negotiations that Britain, France, West Germany and Italy have been holding with the Reagan administration in an effort to resolve their differences over the pipeline.

Although other European governments seem ready to help Reagan lift the sanctions without losing face by indicating readiness to be tougher with the Russians, the French government contends it won't pay a price for having the sanctions ended.

The Foreign Ministry spokesman restated that position when the trade dispute heated up, declaring

"a sharp distinction" must be drawn between discussions on future economic ties with the Eastern Bloc and lifting of sanctions.

French officials are saying privately that, while the Western allies are continuing to review their economic relations with the Soviet Union and other Eastern-bloc nations, any agreement on new trade and credit restrictions is still in the future and may not be reached until next year's economic summit conference, to be held in the U.S.

Charles deGaulle envisioned France as the Unites States of Europe, and during his last days in office he handled the U.S. one rebuff after another. This made it extremely difficult for the Western allies to keep the Eastern European defense establishment strong enough to resist attack.

The U.S. and its allies may have to go through the same thing again before the French government changes hands and the people realize the danger of facing up to the Soviet Union alone.

Real growth only way out

The only sure way to long-term recovery is to create real growth in our economy — more investment to create more goods, and thus more jobs. Increasing the level of exports to other countries is essential if we are to create this real growth.

The Administration is pursuing aggressively trade negotiations to open world markets for more of our goods, and I have every expectation that we will see fewer barriers to our exports as agreements are reached.

However, we are not relying solely on reaching new agreements with foreign nations. Texas is participating in an exciting program to allow American producers to compete better in foreign markets. The program involves creation of U.S. "Foreign Trade Zones."

A Foreign Trade Zone is an area within the United States that is considered to be outside U.S. Customs territory. Foreign or domestic merchandise or raw materials may be brought in this enclave without payment of customs duties or excise taxes. These materials then can be assembled, used in a manufacturing process, stored, tested, repackaged and displayed. If the final product is exported from the United States, no U.S. Customs duty or excise tax is levied. If the final is shipped to another place within the United States, duty and excise taxes are due only at the time of its physical removal from the foreign-trade zone.

How, does this benefit U.S. business? A business can use imported materials to construct a product and export it without having to factor import fees into the price he charges customers. Obviously, this makes his products more competitive.

Use of foreign trade zones creates jobs within the United States. Favorable tariff and Customs regulation treatment encourages investment in the U.S. instead of abroad. More than 11,000 people already are employed in Foreign Trade Zones. Indirectly, a domestic foreign company operating in a U.S. zone is likely to substitute U.S. — made components for foreign-built ones where possible — creating still more jobs.

Since the companies within the trade zone pay the cost of operating the zone, the federal cost of the program is minimal.

Already five areas in Texas have foreign trade zones: Brownsville, Dallas-Fort Worth, El Paso, Galveston and McAllen. Houston and San Antonio have pending applications. I have urged prompt approval of these applications by the Foreign Trade Zones Board and anticipate no problem in obtaining the necessary permission.

I am pleased to see Texas participating so actively in this effort to boost U.S. international trade. Not only does export trade create jobs at home, but also it helps our balance-of-payments. As more Texas cities become more active in the foreign trade zone system, I believe we will see them become substantial contributors to an even healthier state economy.

Talk about wild claims

It's no wonder many Americans scoff at claims about the dangers of eating certain foods or using certain products while others cringe in fear at the mention of the word cancer.

All of us fear cancer because in most cases it amounts to a death sentence, but some of the claims about how cancer can be contracted are absurd since medical science has not yet learned the cause of this dread disease.

Nevertheless, many people refrain from using any food or product if there is any mention of cancer, however, remote.

Talk about wild claims, here's one for the record books, although it has nothing to do with a cancer scare:

A researcher told nutritionists at the University of Texas that excessive milk drinkers may be headed for a life of crime.

Alexander Strauss, director of the American Institute for Biosocial Research in Tacoma, Wash., says a study of 26 chronic juvenile offenders showed they drank an average of 60 ounces of milk a day, compared with 26 ounces consumed by non-offenders.

Strauss, author of Diet, Crime and Delinquency, said a change in diet can correct anti-social behavior and learning problems. He added that overconsumption or underconsumption of certain foods and vitamins were common among criminals.

Strauss qualified his remarks by saying "there is no one diet that is going to control crime."

About 900 people attending a UT conference on nutrition and behavior heard Strauss expound his milk theory, and a newsman dutifully reported what the researcher had to say.

We wonder if such enlightening research is financed by a federal grant.

Editor's note: The Live Oak Peninsula Philosopher on his grassburr farm endorses the gasoline tax this week, we think.

Dear editor:
I'm just guessing, but it may be that the proposal for a five cents a gallon tax on gasoline came about when a Congressman, demanding that "we get this country back on the road," got out on a highway himself and discovered it was full of pot holes and the bridges were shaky.

It's a problem for the Lane Duck session of Congress, as distinguished from a regular session, which I supposed is called a Well Duck session. I've never been to Washington and wouldn't know.

Anyway, the Administration in Washington says the tax isn't a tax, it's a user's fee. Let the people who use the highways pay for repairing them and at the same time give work for the unemployed.

It's a good idea and should be carried to other areas. For example, most people never go to court. Therefore, charge the attorneys, the jurors, etc. If the courthouse roof leaks or the judge is shaky or the attorneys are full of pot holes, impose a user's fee. Five cents a second for all the time the attorneys take making up their minds whether to get started, would go toward repairing most courthouse roofs. I'm not sure where to apply a user's fee to repair judges who render hazy decisions.

I started to suggest charging Congress a user's fee for wear and tear on the National Capitol, but it'd have little chance of passing.

Yours faithfully,
J.A.

Political balance is shifting

By Scott Burns

The November cover of The Washington Monthly, surely a sign of the times, sported a picture of an older man in a rocking chair playing poker with a younger, but nervous, man.

The older fellow has all the chips, an ace hidden in his cuff, and bags of money labeled "tax breaks," "pensions" and "Social Security."

The young fellow has nothing.

The article represented is called "Taking America To The Cleaners: What The Old Are Doing To The Young." Written by a 26-year-old, it may be the opening shot in a bitter intergenerational war.

Here, right or wrong, like it or not, is the basis of that war:

The elderly have become the "haves," the young the "have-nots." While politicians like House Speaker Tip O'Neill continue to whine about helpless senior citizens and how they will "fight" to protect them from Republicans, it is a fact that older Americans have gotten a very good deal from both parties.

Under Democratic administrations, those who now are elderly got long-term, low-interest-rate financing to buy homes they can now sell at inflated prices; tax breaks for when they sold those homes; tax-free Social Security benefits that rose faster than wages; and guaranteed medical care. Directly or indirectly, these goodies that no longer have government loans for education. It is the young that no longer have school lunch programs. It is the young that no longer receive Social Security benefits to go to mean that elderly Americans, whether they recognize it or not, now represent at least 25 percent of all government spending, but only 10 percent of the population.

This bias has continued under a Republican administration. While Democrats have made substantial political capital out of Republican plans to control future Social Security benefits, it is a fact that government cost-cutting and policy changes, to date, have been at the expense of the young.

It is the young that no longer have access to home ownership. It is the young college. It is the young who must work, but are coming of age in an economy that is chronically incapable of employing them. It is the young who must pay the rising burden of employment taxes while seeing the elderly reap capital gains on their housing sales, tax-free, or capital gains on their stock sales at reduced rates.

The political balance is shifting. While there are frequent articles on the "graying of America" and the rising political clout of the elderly, there has been less discussion of the political balance between the new "haves" and the new "have-nots." As you can see from the table below, the number of elderly has declined relative to the number of young Americans who have been hardened by the experience of the last two decades.

THE SHIFTING BALANCE

Year	Number 18-35
1960	28.4 million
1970	48.8 million
1979	63.9 million

Number over 65	Ratio
16.6 million	1.71
20.0 million	2.44
24.7 million	2.59

It takes little thought to realize that the potential for a backlash is very large.

Can something be done?

Yes.

We can stop thinking and legislating as if all older Americans were the same.

One of the more interesting efforts in this direction is "Old Folks At Home," a book by Hoover Institute Senior Fellow Alvin Rabushka and University of Rochester Professor Bruce Jacobs. Based on a careful survey of older Americans, Jacobs and Rabushka found:

"It is true that some of the elderly are in financial, physical, mental, or medical distress and genuinely need assistance from government and private or church-related organizations, but a few is not 90 percent."

They point out that while the media image of the elderly is a choice between institutional alienation and private poverty, nine in 10 Americans over 65 live on their own, 85 percent feel well, 80 percent had seen their children within the last week (50 percent within the last day!), and that most had sufficient income to meet their needs.

Just as rich and poor elderly people benefit equally from public transit and movie theater discounts, they say, our public spending for the elderly fails to discriminate between those with real (often desperate) needs and those who are like the rest of us.

Only older.

Cattlemen should be wary of the futures market

Cattlemen keeping an eye on the futures market should not despair due to current low price quotations. These really have little to do with what actual cash cattle prices will be down the road.

"Cattle futures prices are really not reliable as forecasts of future cash market prices," emphasizes Dr. Ed Uvacek, livestock marketing economist with the Texas Agricultural Extension Service, Texas A&M University System. "Similarly, these futures prices also do not reflect current market conditions in the cash market and are, therefore, a poor market news source."

The futures market revolves around hedgers — people who actually own the commodity and are looking for some price insurance, and speculators — risk takers who invest their money in a futures position, hoping to make a profit from a price change. The cattle futures market generally has many speculators but only a few hedgers, notes Uvacek.

"Recently, futures prices have drifted lower and lower, causing a depressing effect on the current cash market," says Uvacek. "For example, a recent quotation for an April 1983 live cattle contract was $58.15 per hundred-weight."

The economist explains that this simply means that one trader thought the price would be lower while another believed it would be higher. They both agreed on one thing — the price would not be $58.15 in April, or they both lose. They are betting on a price change in their favor, so they can reap a profit.

As to the lack of reliability of futures quotations to predict future price levels, Uvacek notes that the spring months are priced at a discount to the December contract. "If these prices were really believed by cattlemen, no one in his right mind would feed cattle this winter," he says. "And if that did happen, prices would soar next spring due to a short supply of beef."

While the futures market can serve as an effective marketing tool, it must be understood and used properly, says the economist. Used incorrectly, it can lead many cattlemen astray. Allowing futures market quotations to influence current marketing decisions is like letting "the tail wag the dog."

When a habit begins to cost money it is called a hobby.

No time for the market

Unless the small investor has an inside tip on a particular stock, now is not the time to move into the stock market, believes a professor of economics at Texas Christian University.

Dr. John Wortham says he thinks "the best bet is still some kind of short-term credit instruments — 90 days or six months — at the most — until things improve."

"We're going to have a fairly large sum of government debt to be refinanced. With the new debt that's being created this year, the government deficit will run somewhere in excess of $130 billion," the TCU economist noted. "Somebody's got to borrow that money to cover those debts, so the government will have to go into the market to do that."

"In the past," said Wortham, "we've had the Arabs and Japanese buying some of the government debt. I think we're going to have less of that, so we'll be more dependent on the U.S. market, U.S. consumers and investors."

The TCU economist thinks this will cause the interest rate to rise again, and, if that happens, the stock market will decline.

"I would say sometime after the first of the year I anticipate a change in the direction of the interest rate, because this large volume of refinancing has to be done between now and the first of the year."

Unless the small investor can find a good stock to invest in, Wortham recommends Treasury bills or certificates of deposit.

ROCKPORT AND FULTON City officials joined representatives of the architectural firm and contractors in groundbreaking ceremonies for the new Harbor Oaks Shopping Village Wednesday morning. Construction of the new strip shopping center and mini-mall — including a 22,500-square-foot Stanley food store — is expected to be completed within the next nine months.

New construction off to good start

New construction in Rockport got off to a good start this month with permits issued for more than $165,000 in new buildings.

Largest single permit was for a residential building in Harbor Oaks Unit 7. The nine-room, three-bath house is expected to cost $107,530. Permit was issued Monday, Dec. 6.

One commercial permit was issued, on Wednesday, Dec. 8, for an office building at Hearn's Nursery on South Bronte. The $12,240 structure will have some 1,224 square feet of floor space.

Earlier in the month, Linard F. Day Jr. received a permit on Dec. 3 for conversion of an existing garage at the Ocean View Motel into a motel unit. Estimated value is $1,000.

Also issued on Dec. 3 was one other residential permit for a $44,990 wood structure with four rooms and one bath.

Permit requests

Corpus Christi Oil and Gas Company has applied for a permit to do work in Aransas Bay, in State Tracts 67, 69 and 70. The applicant proposes to add the area to the existing permit to erect and maintain structures and perform work for drilling of wells for producing oil or gas.

Plans for the proposed work may be seen at the office of the district engineer in the Essayons Building, 400 Barracuda, Galveston, or at the Corpus Christi Area Office.

The application will be processed pursuant to Section 10 of the River and Harbor Act of 1899 and Section 404 of the Clean Water Act. Any person may request a public hearing. The request must be submitted in writing to the district engineer within 30 days of the date of the notice, (Dec. 30) and must clearly set forth with particularity the reasons for holding a public hearing.

The nature, scope and magnitude of the proposed work is such that no further review is warranted at this time.

Anderson speaks to ACMSI women

"Rockport is birdsfield, USA," exclaimed Ella Anderson, guest speaker at the monthly business and luncheon meeting of the Women's Committee of Aransas County Medical Services Inc. Friday Dec. 3.

Anderson told in her speech "That's for the Birds" of Connie Hagar, internationally known bird-watcher, who put Rockport on the bird-watcher's map. Hagar discovered a central flyway through Rockport for spring-migrating birds. "Living in Rockport is the best place to be exposed to birds," Anderson said. "Birders who come to Rockport spend more than one million dollars here every year."

Joyce Thornton, president of ACMSI, announced that $10,000 had been transferred by the Women's Committee to the ambulance fund for October and November.

Sara Bates, treasurer, reported $10,413.65 in net proceeds from the Christmas Bazaar, the highest net ever for any bazaar. Memorials for November totalled $378.50.

Mary Casey reported that ACMSI Handcraft Shop's sales for the month of November totalled $1,107.65.

Joann Haskell, vice president, discussed the next big fundraising project — the Valentine's Dance. "Proceeds have grown each year for the past five years," she said, "but not much more money can be earned beyond last year's total because the Paws and Taws building can only hold a certain number of people." Tickets for the dance will go on sale the week after Christmas.

Thornton discussed changing two by-laws in the constitution which no longer apply to the present organization. The two changes will be voted on at the January luncheon.

A committee, headed by Haskell and including Wanda Sorem, Anderson and Carolyn Barnardy, will study the feasibility of accepting Juanita Wagley's offer to donate the Paws and Taws building to the Women's Committee and a permanent home for the organization. The committee will present the results of their study at the January meeting.

Mavis Lloyd reported that 80 members and guests attended the December luncheon. Eileen Harrison reported that four new members had joined, bringing the club membership to 228.

Nativity story transcends time

In the course of two millennia, countless millions of people have lived their lives in accordance with the teachings of Christ. To all of them, the story of the birth of Christ is of great significance. It is at once the history of the Mother and Child whose lives are at the heart of Christianity, and the moving tale of a mother and her infant.

The story of the Nativity is both glorious and tender, infinitely complex and profoundly simple, universal in significance and deeply personal in tenor.

With a meaning that is truly for all time because it transcends it, the Christmas story is as integral a part of thought and belief in the 20th century, as it was in the third or 13th. Perhaps no other occurrence has touched so many lives in so many ways, fulfilling vastly different needs while remaining itself untouched.

The mystic bent of the medieval mind, for instance, envisioned the Christ child as a miniature adult, crowned with a golden halo. Perched rather stiffly on the Madonna's lap, He sits enthroned and surrounded by an honor guard of angels and saints.

Even in infancy, the painters of the Middle Ages seem to say, Christ was already the man who would die upon the Cross for our sins. The paintings of Madonna and Child which date from the Middle Ages are intensely devout celebrations of the glory of God and Christ, His Son.

In contrast, the paintings of the Italian Renaissance, when the philosophy of Humanism was current, depict the Madonna and Child as a very real mother and son. As painted by Leonardo da Vinci, Masaccio, Botticelli, Fra Angelico and Fra Filippo Lippi, for example, the infant Christ is truly a child, pudgy and squirming on His loving mother's knee.

The setting is realistic — a landscape or light-bathed interior — rather than a stiff throne floating on a golden background. The saints and angels of Renaissance art are as likely to be teasing the infant Christ as solemnly adoring Him. The playfulness of the artist's conception in no way dims the glory of God and Christ, but rather enhances it, emphasizing love rather than awe.

At the same time, the Italian Renaissance conception of Christ was a glorious one. Paintings such as Gentile da Fabriano's "Adoration," with its air of regal courtliness, illustrate that, to the Renaissance mind, Christ was a king as well as a child and a man.

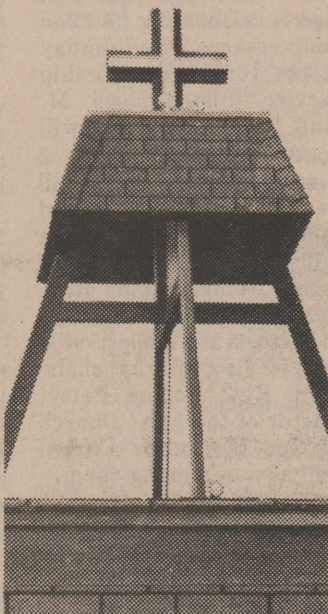

The Flemish painters of the 15th century see the Nativity from a different perspective. The emphasis is on the personal in such paintings as Hugo van de Goes' "Portinari Altarpiece" (whose central panel depicts the Adoration) and Geertgen tot Sint Jans' "Nativity."

The homely virtues the Flemish admired are represented in the many true-to-life details, as well as in the attitude of the Madonna watching over her Babe, the epitome of loving motherhood.

Mystic, regal, touching, awe-inspiring, loving. That the Nativity can be so many things at once is in some way a measure of its immeasurable significance.

That is has meant so many things to so many people indicates its infinite power to reach disparate lives, in centuries and continents far removed from one another, touching both heart and soul. As the eternal leaves its indelible mark upon the temporal, it repeats the lesson of its ultimate, essential universality.

If you ask people about Mrs. Turner, they will tell you that she is one of the happiest women in town. Yet not so long ago she was feeling pretty sorry for herself. Life seemed such a humdrum affair. As an accomplished musician, she had dreams of the concert stage, but marriage and children had changed all that. Somehow it didn't seem fair!

Then one day, a friend persuaded her to go to church. The sermon happened to be about the ingredients that make a full and happy life. The things the minister said struck home and, the next week, she found herself back in church again. Then several weeks later Mr. Turner went along, and next, the youngsters.

Now Mrs. Turner is still "just a housewife," but is she dissatisfied with her role? Look at her face and see for yourself! It took the Church to show her that she already possessed all the tools needed for fulfillment and happiness, if she would but use them. Now, she does!

Rain or shine, Ruby's always there when needed

By PAT BLAIR

Ruby Carpenter figures her job is getting better. "The first year, '79-80," she says, "I almost got run down eight times. Last year, it happened only five times and this year only once — so far."

She gets justifiably indignant about that, less for her own sake than for the youngsters she marshals across the street several times each day for five days a week.

Ruby is the school crossing guard at the Live Oak-Hwy. 35 (Liberty) intersection.

"I get so mad at these drivers who just speed through here," she says. "They don't think — what if it was their kids? They'd want someone to slow down for them."

But despite the risk, Ruby likes her job. Rain or shine, five days a week, she's at her post: from 7 until 8 a.m., then again at 2:30 p.m. for the youngsters who get out of Rockport Elementary School at that time and again from 3:30 until 4 p.m., or sometimes a little later, until she's seen the school buses through the intersection.

"I still don't have any rain gear," she said. "I have been sopping wet but I've never come down with a cold or the flu yet. I've been trying to find a nice orange poncho but I haven't been able to so far."

Fortunately she lives close to her work, almost at the corner in fact, in a house she and her husband, Gordon, a tugboat captain, bought when they first came to Rockport almost 17 years ago.

Ruby was born — "48 years ago" — in Winnie-wood, Okla., but her parents left Oklahoma when she was a year old, moving to California. Her mother divorced while Ruby was still a baby, remarried, and Ruby's stepfather "followed the crops," taking his family from California to Oregon to Washington then Oregon again.

"From the time I was 2 till I was 14 we followed the crops," Ruby said. "I've picked everything that grows on a tree, every berry that grows on a vine, I've picked cotton..."

"But when I look back," she added, "I don't regret it. I don't regret having to work."

She can recall living as a child in a 15 by 15-foot tent "with the ground as a floor," dragging cotton bags, "toting bags up and down ladders to pick grapefruit, oranges..."

Eventually the family went to Port Isabel where Ruby's stepfather had lived in the early 1920s. "He knew my husband's daddy and granddaddy." She met Gordon and in March, 1950, just after her 15th birthday, they were married.

"If I had it to do over, I'd do it again," she said. "I've had a wonderful husband."

Because of his work, Gordon was frequently away from his family and Ruby feels like "in a way, I raise my kids by myself." But she has no regrets over that either and is proud of her four grown children — one in Rockport, a son in Jackson, Miss., two in San Antonio — and of her seven grandchildren (four boys and three girls).

After their marriage, the Carpenters lived in Port Isabel several years then in 1964 moved to Corpus Christi and from there came to Rockport. There were also two two-year stays in California, Ruby adds.

"I worked at what used to be the old Dairy Whip for a while, worked as a maid for a while," Ruby recalls. There were some rough times, "but we managed, and we paid the house off two years ago this past Thanksgiving."

She is amused by the fact it took school officials 17 years to offer her the job of school crossing guard.

"In '79, Mr. (School Superintendent Joe) Randow came to me and said, 'Ruby, would you like a job?' I asked what and he said, 'School crossing guard.' "I said," Ruby laughed, "Mr. Randow, I've been living here at this corner for 17 years and you wait until my kids are out of school before you offer me this job!"

But she took it, and she enjoys it. "It gives me something to do," she says. "And I've made friends with a lot of the kids. They're real sweet children — they obey me real good and I'm real proud of them. They're remarkable children!"

The traffic this year hasn't been as bad as in previous years either, she believes. "The cars have been good to me. And those 18-wheelers are real good."

"I guess I'm doing okay," she added, "cause Mr. Randow hasn't said anything."

Some of the children have given her school pictures of themselves and she hopes she'll get more. "I want to start a scrapbook," she says. "Then in years to come, I can look back and say, 'This is what he looked like then,' or 'This is what she looked like'." She looks forward to watching "her kids" grow up.

In the meantime, she takes satisfaction from getting them safely across the street.

Genuine Texas-grown Christmas trees offer number of advantages to buyers

COLLEGE STATION — For real Texas Christmas this year, be sure your Christmas tree is a genuine Texas product.

"About 100,000 Texas-grown Christmas trees should be available this year in retail lots and on a 'choose-and-cut' basis," says Dr. Mike Walter-scheidt, forester with the Texas Agricultural Extension Service, Texas A&M University System. "Sales of these trees should total $1.2 million to growers. Texas currently boasts about 3,200 acres of Christmas trees, mainly in eastern areas, with some 1,000 trees per acre.

"Texas-grown Christmas trees offer a number of advantages," notes Walter-scheidt. "They are fresher, more fragrant and usually less expensive than those shipped in from other states."

More than five million Christmas trees are sold in Texas each year, imported mainly from northern and western states. So the growth potential of the Texas Christmas tree industry looks good, notes the forester.

Texas growers have planted about a million seedlings each of the past several years. Most of these are Virginia pines native to the Appalachian area of the southeastern U.S. Another species, the Afghan or Elderica pine, is now being grown in central, western and southern areas of Texas. The trees are generally ready to harvest in about four years.

Man arrested in theft

Jeffrey Allen Smith, currently residing in Rockport was in jail Thursday on charges of theft over $10,000 after he was arrested for alleged theft of a pickup truck on Dec. 1.

The truck was spotted by an Aransas County deputy sheriff on routine patrol shortly after 8:30 p.m. Dec. 1. The vehicle was at the intersection of FM 3036 and Hwy. 35 North and appeared to have been involved in an accident shortly before it was found.

The deputy recognized the truck as belonging to David Pilgrim of Lamar. Pilgrim was contacted and confirmed the vehicle was taken from the parking lot of an area bar.

The big decision on Article III

Five-member council established

The big decision in writing Article III of Rockport's proposed city charter was one of numbers: How many members should there be on the city council under home rule?

The number originally proposed in this article — which covers the city council and its powers — was seven, six aldermen and a mayor. This was the number presented to the charter commission by Marty Renfro, chairman of the Article III subcommittee, at the commission's Sept. 13 meeting.

Seven other charter commission members agreed with Renfro that the charter should be written with an eye toward a future time when Rockport will need a seven-member council.

Remaining commission members — including the chairman, Ed Armstrong — expressed concern that Rockport residents were not ready for a jump from a five-member council (the current number) to seven. Concern was also expressed that the two at-large council members (in addition to the mayor) would probably be elected from Ward 2 because of a larger voter population in that area and could "load" the council in Ward 2's favor.

By the commission's next meeting, Sept. 20, members of the charter commission had heard from numbers of Rockport citizens who were opposed to the seven-member council. At that meeting, the commission rescinded its Sept. 13 decision and voted to base Article III on the current number of council members — a mayor and four aldermen.

A decision to limit the terms of council members and mayor was made on the feeling of charter commission members that the number of consecutive years an official serves in office should be limited. A limit of three consecutive terms (six years) as councilman or mayor and eight consecutive years for councilman-elected-mayor or mayor-elected-councilman was felt by the majority of commission members to be an optimum number.

The charter provides for compensation to be paid to the council members but, in keeping with an attempt to keep the proposed document as broad as possible, the amount of compensation is left to the city council to decide by ordinance as at present.

Another provision in proposed Article III will require a council member to reside in the ward he or she seeks to represent.

Remaining provisions of this article are primarily based on state laws, charters of cities comparable in size to Rockport and current procedures of the Rockport city council.

Junco uncommon in this area

Although to most of the rest of the country, the dark-eyed junco, in whatever form, is a common bird, to birders in this area it is very uncommon.

The most common races of the dark-eyed junco are the slate-colored junco and the Oregon junco. This winter being a year for western species, sure enough, I've seen five Oregon juncos so far. That's not many, since they usually can be found in groups of at least 10 or 12 in the winter.

The upper part of the slate-colored race is colored, appropriately, slate gray. Slate covers the head, neck and upper breast, giving a hooded appearance. But the lower breast and belly are white. So, there are white outer feathers that are shed a lot when flying as a recognition aid to keep the flock together. The bills are pale pink and the eyes are dark. The females have similar color patterns but are brown where the males are slate.

The Oregon race has the same hood, but the back is rusty brown and the sides are pinky brownish. The breast, belly and outer tail feathers are white as in the slate-colored. The females are very similar but paler with brown across the top of the head.

Juncos are sparrows, about five inches long, and have the typical conical bill of the finch family.

In winter, besides the white tail-flicking, the flock communicates with constant conversational chipping — short and sharp. They move about the fields, hedgerows, edges of woods, city parks and vacant lots in search of weed seeds. Favorites include ragweed, pigweed, sunflowers, purslane, crabgrass, chickweed, sedge, etc.

Insects are eaten, too, especially in summer. Caterpillars, beetles, ants, wasps, true bugs and even spiders and snails add up to about half of their summer food.

The junco spends most of its time on the ground foraging in leaf litter. It hops forward then kicks backward to uncover its food.

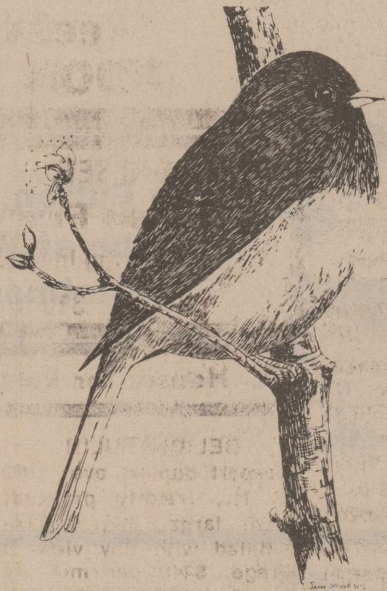

About the only time that they can be found up high is when the male delivers his song from the top of a tall tree.

In summer, juncos are mainly birds of the coniferous forests, migrating as far north as the Canadian tree line. However, there are some races that do not migrate at all.

A nest of grasses is made in a depression in the ground. It is lined with finer grasses and hairs. Usually, something like a fallen limb conceals it. The male helps the female to gather materials but the female does the building. An average of four eggs are laid and usually two broods are raised.

The various races interbreed where their ranges overlap.

I'm enjoying seeing my first South Texas junco visitors.

The Aransas County Independent School District was one of four school systems in Texas chosen to represent the state in a national elementary school library contest.

Fourteen members of the High School Pirate Band were selected for the All-District band tryouts at Yorktown. Six received high ratings which made them eligible for regional tryouts in Victoria.

The honor roll was made up of 97 high school students and 71 junior high school students.

The Junior High Choral Group presented the mystery play "The Black Sheep of Bethlehem." The play was a modern version of the second shepherd's story concerning the experiences of a little, mischievous black sheep who visits the Christ child.

There were 134 fish caught — most were trout, a few were redbreast and one was a five pound drum.

Drills provide valuable training

It is a surprisingly emotional experience to witness an emergency medical services disaster drill. Even when you know the injuries are simulated, you get an understanding of what you would feel if a plane crash, a building collapse, an explosion or a high rise fire resulted in a large number of casualties.

A region-wide drill is being held in Corpus Christi. This will be followed early in 1983 by drills involving several neighboring communities to test abilities to support one another across the Coastal Bend.

The stage for a recent Woodsboro drill was the high school. The script called for an explosion to take place in the chemistry laboratory, leaving 20 students injured or dead. Student council members took the roles of the injured and also coordinated a safety drill for the school to show how smoothly evacuation could be carried out.

Moulage, an extremely realistic makeup, is used to give the appearance of the type of wound that each victim is designated to have. The students were rehearsed in acting out the symptoms that would be expected from the injuries assigned to them. A youth with a head injury was in convulsions. A young woman in shock sat, rocking back and forth, her eyes glazed. They knew their blood pressure and other vital signs to tell rescuers. They had their lines to say or scream.

The sound of the explosion was heard. A smoke machine pumped smoke into the laboratory and out into the hall. The substance that is used to give natural gas a detectable odor was released. Victims were screaming and crying for help.

Teachers, few of whom knew the drill was to occur, and their students cleared the building rapidly and in good order. Most of them believed for a period of time that there had actually been an explosion. Volunteer firemen were the first on the scene. They had recently had a "first responder" course in emergency medical treatment from Mike Smith, Refugio EMS training officer. This was a chance to test the skills they had gained. They were being evaluated on whether or not they got victims out of the smoke-clogged building and began proper treatment in time to save lives.

Emergency Medical Service personnel arrived from Refugio. Law enforcement officers responded and routed traffic away from the vicinity. The students were carried onto the campus and laid under shading oak trees. Their cries were disturbing. One girl kept screaming that her friend was inside and trying to run back into the building, in spite of the wounds that she appeared to have. Paramedics and others working with the victims felt some of the psychological stress they would have to contend with in a real disaster.

The victims were triaged there under the trees, a quick determination made of the type of injury and tags attached to them assigning the priorities that the severity of their wounds required. Often, some of the most critical wounds are internal and must receive attention much more rapidly than the open wounds which give the most frightening appearance. The victims had been told how long they could survive if they did not receive the proper attention. If that time passed and a rescuer began treatment, they said one word, "dead."

As emergency treatment was completed at the scene, the injured were transported to Refugio Hospital where their arrival signaled a drill there. One of the means of transporting mass casualties when there is an insufficient number of ambulances is by strapping stretchers across the tops of seats of a school bus.

An emergency medical plan is being developed across the Coastal Bend at this time. Drills and a training seminar are getting the services into a position to carry out that plan.

No one who was at the high school in Refugio that afternoon of the fake explosion in the chemistry lab will ever quite forget the contorted faces of the young people who appeared to be mangled, the cries of pain and fear for classmates, and the nagging reminder that such scenes had been real in other places and they could be here.

Three injured in two-car collision

Three people were injured in a two-car collision at 7 p.m. Monday, Dec. 6, on South Bronte about 100 feet south of Morgan.

Injured and taken to Coastal Bend Hospital in Aransas Pass were Carolyn Metzner and Tim Metzner, driver and passenger of one of the cars involved, and Doris Tillison, driver of the second car. The Metzners were taken by ambulance. Tillison was transported by private vehicle.

Police said Tillison's car was stopped in the northbound lane of Bronte (Hwy. 35 South) and Tillison was attempting to turn left into the Aransas Bay Apartments entrance when her car was struck from the rear by the Metzner vehicle.

In an earlier accident Monday, Joseph J. Sullivan of Houston was ticketed for no proof of liability, no motorcycle endorsement on his driver's license and failure to control speed to avoid an accident after his motorcycle was in collision with a car driven by Carl B. Shilling of Chickasha, Okla.

Police said the accident occurred at the intersection of Liberty and Austin when Shilling stopped for a traffic light. Sullivan, following Shilling, failed to stop in time to avoid colliding with the back of Shilling's car.

Norman Dunbar Jordan of Rockport was ticketed for failure to yield right-of-way following a collision between her car and one driven by Leonard Dale Walter of Rockport Tuesday morning.

Police said Walters was eastbound on Market Street when Jordan, northbound on Live Oak, proceeded into the intersection. The accident occurred about 4:45 a.m.

Four fires in two days

Four fires in two days — with arson suspected in two of them — kept Rockport firemen busy this past Tuesday and Wednesday, Dec. 7 and 8.

No injuries were reported in any of the blazes but County Fire Marshal Elva Mullinax said investigations are under way in two of the fires: a car fire and a house fire, both of which occurred Tuesday night.

Mullinax said arson is suspected in both cases.

Rockport units were called to the car fire in front of Gene's Lounge about 8:30 or 9 p.m. Tuesday. That same night, they were called to put out a house fire in South Rockport. Mullinax said he did not as of Thursday morning know whether anyone was living in the house at the time of the fire. The structure had been sold Tuesday afternoon in a delinquent tax sale, he added.

In an earlier fire, about 7 or 8 p.m. Tuesday, an apartment at Rockport's 50 Oaks Apartments was damaged when tenants in the apartment attempted to fill a gas lantern in the kitchen.

Mullinax said they apparently had the lantern in the middle of the floor and were filling it when it exploded.

The couple were identified as Mr. and Mrs. Dennis Spellman. Extent of damage to the apartment was not determined as of Thursday morning.

Firemen were called to put out a brush and trash fire at the intersection of Hwy. 35 South and 3rd Street Wednesday night. Mullinax said a man was burning trash in a ditch and left it.

Cats should be inoculated

Dr. HapLutz

Dear Dr. Lutz,

You recently wrote an article concerning the necessity of preventive medicines that should be given to dogs. Since we are now having frequent weather changes, isn't it just as important to have my cat given similar inoculations?

Signed Judy

Dear Judy,

Your letter was very timely. Cats need preventive inoculations, too. It is recommended all cats be given a rabies inoculation at six months of age, and annually thereafter. Statistics show that there are more cats that develop rabies than dogs. This inoculation requires 10 days to develop immunity.

All warm blooded animals (including rats and mice) are susceptible. The triple vaccine is very important. Here we are preventing three infectious diseases. They are Rhinotracheitis (also called Herpesvirus) which is highly contagious. The second disease that is prevented with the triple vaccine is Feline Calici (a highly contagious disease of the respiratory tract). Panleukopenia is the other disease known as feline distemper. These make up the triple vaccine.

The age recommended to give the triple vaccine for kittens is six weeks of age and should be given three injections, two to three weeks apart. Cats nine weeks of age, should receive two inoculations two to three weeks apart. After this, cats should be given one inoculation annually.

All cats should be examined for internal parasites once a year. This is performed by a microscopic examination of the bowel action.

I will discuss in detail the above diseases in future articles.

Comfrey is a versatile leaf

By Jean Glowka

Q. I have been hearing a lot about comfrey lately. Can you give us some information on it?

A. Used internally, comfrey is helpful for coughs, rheumatic pains, digestive disorders, eczema, anemia and colitis. Some feel that comfrey can cleanse the entire system of impurities and strengthen the blood.

Externally, poultices of comfrey have been useful in treating bruises, ulcerous wounds, boils and broken bones. Comfrey ointment is often used for sores, rashes, scratches, itches and burns.

Comfrey contains protein, being an especially good source of the amino acid lysine. It is one of the few vegetable sources of vitamin B-12 and is also rich in vitamins A, C, B-1, B-2, niacin, pantothenic acid, D, E and choline, calcium, potassium, phosphorus and other trace minerals.

Perhaps comfrey's "main claim to fame" is that it contains a healing agent called allantoin, which is known to promote granulation and formation of epithelial cells, thus increasing the speed with which nature can heal a wound, internal irritation or broken bone.

Q. I have a tendency to get ugly white spots on my skin. What can I do?

A. This condition is called "vitiligo" and is characterized by small white patches (depigmentation) or darkening of some areas of the skin. Studies have shown that this skin condition has completely cleared up when 1,000 or more milligrams of PABA (para-aminobenzoic acid, a B-vite) were taken daily, especially if generous amounts of pantothenic acid and fresh liver were obtained with it.

PABA is available in tablet and cream or ointment form and occurs naturally in liver, brewer's yeast, milk, yogurt, eggs, whole rice and cereals, whole wheat, wheat germ and molasses.

Until next week, folks, stay happy and healthy! It's a beautiful world!

Author to appear at First National

Bill Walraven, author of "Corpus Christi: The History of a Texas Seaport" and columnist for the Corpus Christi Caller will appear at the First National Bank in Rockport from 9 a.m. until noon Wednesday, Dec. 15, to sign autographs and promote the new book.

In addition to giving a comprehensive history of the Corpus Christi area, the book also mentions several individuals prominent in Rockport-Fulton area history.

Mentioned in the book are the Coleman-Fulton Pasture Company and its founders, George W. Fulton Sr., Thomas M. Coleman and Thomas H. Mathis. All played an important role in shaping the history of the Rockport area.

The book also details plans by the Gulf Coast Immigration Company to develop Rockport into a "modern city" and an elaborate harbor facility called Harbor Island," and explains why these plans never materialized.

Walraven has filled the book with photographs and historical data demonstrating the importance of Corpus Christi and the Coastal Bend in shaping the area as we know it today.

Roberts donates painting

Rockport artist Della Roberts has donated a portrait of Brother Lester Roloff to the People's Baptist Church in Corpus Christi.

The portrait has been selected to serve as Roloff's memorial picture in the new memorial which is to be built on the church grounds.

Suit fashionto lifestyle

Many fashion choices are available this season and into Spring 1983, with lengths varying for all garment parts including sleeves, skirts and pants, says Becky Saunders, clothing specialist with the Texas Agricultural Extension Service, Texas A&M University System. Choose a look, color or fabric that is becoming and useful to a person's lifestyle.

Nutritionmeans variety

A "good" diet means planning for and eating a variety of foods in moderation, rather than a few in abundance, since no single food has all the nutrients needed for good health, points out Dr. Dymple C. Cooksey, food and nutrition specialist with the Texas Agricultural Extension Service, Texas A&M University System. A well-balanced diet should include selections from the four major food groups. Use knowledge about nutritive content to combine foods into a sound, healthy diet.

Headaches areindividual

Some 20 million Americans — two-thirds of them women — seek medical help on a regular basis for headaches. Despite being so common, headaches are often difficult to sort out in terms of a specific diagnosis and treatment program. The majority of headaches are not related to a serious underlying disease, reports Dr. Mary Ann Shirey, health education specialist with the Texas Agricultural Extension Service, Texas A&M University System. The five major types of headaches, she says, include migraines, tension-type, post-injury related headaches and those resulting from sinus and high blood pressure. Two areas of prevention and treatment — identifying and minimizing "trigger" factors and careful drug therapy — are most effective for many patients. Your physician should be able to pinpoint the exact cause of the headache and establish an individual treatment program.
