Oil tax proposal criticized

By JOHN PAUL PITTS
Business/Oil Editor

There were no kind words to be found in Midland today for the proposed tax reform bill passed out of the House Ways and Means Committee Wednesday night by a 29-4 vote.

At a meeting of the executive board of the Permian Basin Petroleum Association, news of the passage of the proposals, which phase out depletion for all but stripper wells over a three year period and capitalize drilling costs after casing point over a 26-month period, was greeted with resounding groans. "They're killing us," said one oil operator.

"We were not surprised at the outcome, but we were surprised at the vote," said Harry Spannus, executive vice president Permian Basin Petroleum Association. "We didn't think it would be 29-4. Four or five members of the committee must have changed sides in the last two days."

He said the oil industry was getting back a very small portion of what it should have. "To the government the $4 billion dollars tax it is putting on the industry is just pennies in the overall scheme, but it is money vitally needed by the industry. It should be zero dollars instead of $4 billion. It is devastating and sickening."

Odessa oilman Charles Perry, who has worked intensely on the tax reform issue, representing PBPA in Washington numerous times since Treasury I proposals were announced a year ago, said the process of putting the proposals in a final form would now begin.

"These proposals are a long way from their final version," he said, adding that it would now go to the Rules Committee and then to the floor of the House for a vote.

He said the proposals could come out of the Rules Committee in several forms: One version would be an up-or-down vote that would allow no amendments to the proposals. It would be either be killed or accepted in its entirity. "There is indication that House Ways and Means Committee Chairman, Dan Rostenkowski would prefer it that way," said Perry. "There is also some agreement to that effect from the opposition, who feel the same way about killing it."

According to Perry, it might also come out of the Rules Committee as three substitute bills that would represent a liberal view, a Republican view and the view of Treasury II. "Or, it could come out as no bill at all, but just recommendations to clean-up some of the present inequities in the tax code," he said. He also said that the Senate may elect to start from ground zero and write its own bill.

Perry said the bill would probably be voted on in the House before the end of the year and would go to the Senate sometime next year. "Hopefully, we will be able to mold it better to the industry's favor in the Senate and in the House-Senate Conference Committee." Perry said just talking about the bill had already stacked a large number of rigs in the Permian Basin, and that final passage of the bill as is could stack another 15 percent.

Others, such as the Independent Petroleum Association of America, weary and disillusioned, would like to see the entire tax reform bill killed.

"There is nothing wrong with tax reform," said Dick Beveridge, a Midland independent and member of the IPAA National Executive Committee, "but this is not reform. It's complex and punitive."

Buddy Sipes, a Midland engineer, agreed. "The bill should be buried. It not only penalizes the oil industry, but it penalizes productive people in all industries."

Tax overhaul plan seen as 'low water mark'

By PEGGY ROBERSON
Washington Correspondent

WASHINGTON — Oil industry representatives today said, in their opinion, the House Ways and Means Committee's 29-4 vote Wednesday to curb oil and gas benefits in an overhaul of federal tax law "is the low water mark."

Andy Yood, tax analyst for the American Petroleum Institute, said the next steps in congressional action "can't get worse than this."

The agreed-upon cuts were deeper than President Reagan wanted, but were less than Committee Chairman Dan Rostenkowski, D-Ill., originally proposed.

Oil state representatives voted with the majority for the version nicknamed "Rosty II" to head off certain passage of a more stringent cutback of benefits in "Rosty I," a draft authored by committee aides.

Peter Wellish, a spokesman for Independent Petroleum Association of America, pointed out, however, that through negotiations with Rostenkowski, oil state committee members were able to win important concessions.

Wellish noted that the committee voted to retain existing law for percentage depletion on stripper wells, by both independent producers and royalty owners.

Kate downgraded to tropical storm

VIDALIA, Ga. (AP) — Hurricane Kate weakened to tropical storm status over land today, but more than 100,000 people were without electricity, the capital of Florida was virtually without power and the panhandle was a maze of flooded streets, toppled trees and roofless buildings.

Ninety percent of Tallahassee, Fla., was blacked out after Kate barreled ashore Thursday, forcing more than 100,000 people to evacuate and spinning at least eight tornadoes across the panhandle and southern Georgia.

The twisters and high wind ripped the roofs off buildings in the Panama City, Fla., area and Meigs, toppled Apalachicola, Fla.'s water tower, tore down trees and knocked down power lines in Port St. Joe, Mexico Beach and Tallahassee, Fla.

Up to 30,000 homes and businesses were without power Thursday night, from Panama City west to Apalachicola River, Gulf Power Co said. Eight Florida Power Co. substations were knocked out and 90 percent of Tallahassee, a city of about 89,500, was blacked out early today, said Joy McIlwain, a spokeswoman for the state Division of Emergency Management.

Two people drowned when their fishing boat capsized in Kate's high seas, one man was electrocuted when he stepped on a utility line and an 81-year-old woman died of a heart attack after being evacuated.

The 11th named storm of the 1985 Atlantic hurricane season, Kate was blamed for up to 10 deaths and "grave" destruction to crops and property in Cuba.

In Florida and Georgia, streets were impassable, flooded by heavy rainfall or blocked by fallen trees and coastal roads, which had taken a beating from hurricanes Elena and Juan, were crumbling into the Gulf of Mexico in spots.

Emergency officials warned evacuees to remain in shelters for the night.

Comanche Peak plant among 'most expensive'

By GARY RASP
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Recent cost estimates for Texas Utilities Electric Co.'s Comanche Peak nuclear plant will make the facility "one of the most expensive power plants ever built," a consumer advocacy group charged Thursday.

Public Citizen, a pro-consumer organization Ralph Nadar formed in 1971, also claimed that the plant will operate at less than half of its capacity, producing electric rates much higher than the utility originally promised.

TUEC spokesman Dick Ramsey characterized the Public Citizen statements as "absolutely absurd," adding that the group is "blatantly attempting to manipulate numbers to prove their point."

A recent Public Utility Commission study does estimate that Comanche Peak will run at 45 percent of its capacity, Ramsey said, but that figure refers to the first year the plant will operate. He said the utility's goal is for the nuclear plant to run at about 70 percent, adding that that level should be reached after about two years of operation.

"The 45-percent figure they've used is misleading," Ramsey said. "When you're going through start-up, you don't expect to run at full operating capacity."

Monday, TUEC announced its latest cost estimate for the troubled plant, seven years behind schedule. Texas Utilities, an electric consortium that includes Texas Electric Service Co., owns about 88 percent of the two-unit, 2,300-megawatt power plant.

Trooper's 'raid' of candy store not sweet news for confectioner

SOUTH PORTLAND, Maine (AP) — When a state trooper showed up at David Kadoch's candy shop recently, it wasn't to satisfy a sweet tooth. He told Kadoch that he needed a liquor license to sell some of his treats.

Kadoch stocks more than 1,000 kinds of confections at his shop, called Sweets. The offending items include Jameson Whiskey Cake, cherries and raspberries in cognac and truffles with champagne.

"It's still kind of hard to believe this isn't some kind of joke," said Kadoch.

Sgt. James Banks wasn't kidding. He said a license was required to sell food products with an alcoholic content greater than ½ of 1 percent by volume and that selling the alcohol-laced sweets to people under 21 would be the same under the law as selling bottled spirits to a minor.

Reagan shares 'hope' of summit

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan, making a homecoming report on the U.S.-Soviet summit, called for a new "steady as we go" era with Moscow and won applause from legislators who found "hope rather than accomplishment" in the blunt-spoken meetings in Geneva.

"We are not further along towards an arms control agreement. But we are further along in the personal chemistry in the relationship," said Sen. J. Bennett Johnston, D-La., after Reagan's nationally televised address Thursday night on his three days of summitry with Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev.

Added Sen. George Mitchell, D-Maine, "It was a speech that reflected the summit itself. There was little substance, but much hope for improved relations in the future."

Reagan, summing up the first superpower summit in six years, said he, like everyone, is "impatient for results." But, he added, "goodwill and good hopes do not always yield lasting results. Quick fixes don't fix big problems."

For his part, Gorbachev left snowy Geneva with a message that mixed hope with a straightforward reminder that there are serious obstacles to the comprehensive arms control agreement that both men said they seek.

"I would be so bold as to say the world has become a more secure place" because of the three days of meetings, the Soviet leader told a news conference. But he issued a fresh condemnation of Reagan's so-called "Star Wars" plan for a space-based missile defense, saying that unless the president compromises, "all restraint will be blown to the wind" in the arms race.

Ruling questions constitutionality of parole information law

By FRANK TROMBLEY
Staff Writer

ODESSA — A state district judge hearing a murder case Thursday held that the newly enacted state law requiring judges to inform jurors of the effect of existing parole laws on the sentence being meted out could be unconstitutional.

The ruling of 161st Judicial District Judge Tryon Lewis came as the result of a motion filed by court-appointed Odessa attorney G. David Smith during the sentencing phase of the trial of a 20-year-old man convicted of murder.

Smith contended the change in the Texas Code of Criminal Procedure enacted during the last legislative session that went into effect Sept. 1 is unconstitutional. As approved by the Legislature, the code of criminal procedure mandates that a judge's instructions to jurors in the punishment phase of criminal trials must inform jury members that, under current parole laws, a person sentenced to prison for a specific number of years can be expected to serve no more than one-third of his or her sentence behind bars.

As precedent for his motion, Smith cited the May 1979 Texas Court of Criminal Appeals ruling in the case of James Sanders versus the State of Texas in which the appeals court held discussion of the parole issue by jurors during sentence deliberations constituted jury misconduct. The appeals court, in addition to citing consititutional violations of the separation of powers, noted that "punishment and probation are clearly distinct and separate ideas, and defendant has right to have issue of probation determined by jury."

Sanders had been convicted of aggravated assault and sentenced to two years in prison by a Randall County jury in Canyon.

In his petition to the criminal appeals court, Sanders' attorney, Charles L. Rittenberry of Amarillo, contended discussion of Texas parole laws "was harmful to defendant and denied defendant fair and impartial trial."

The appeals court agreed and, citing an extensive body of law, reversed and remanded the case to the 47th Judicial District Court for a new trial.

In granting Smith's motion to exclude mention of the effect of parole laws on any sentence from his punishment charge to the jury, Lewis said he was, in effect, inviting Ector County District Attorney Eric Augesen to file a writ of mandamus with the Texas Court of Criminal Appeals that would force the court to rule on the constitutionality or unconstitutionality of Article 3707, Section 4 of the Texas Code of Criminal Procedure.

Lewis, who had the option of granting or rejecting Smith's motion, said he granted the motion in the hope of resolving the constitutional questions involved by the enactment of the new law regarding parole instructions to jurors.

The judge said that, should the question not be resolved for two years, it could mean as many as 2,000 Ector County criminal cases might have to be retried. "I'd rather be reversed on one case now," Lewis said, "than have to retry all the cases I'll handle in the next couple of years."

Augesen said Thursday he will file a writ of mandamus with the criminal appeals court but had not yet decided exactly when he will file the writ.

Texans' reaction to summit mixed

WASHINGTON (AP) — Texas congressmen said they were pleased by renewed dialogue between the United States and the Soviet Union, but expressed disappointment at a lack of resolutions on tough issues.

"The summit provided neither a breakdown nor a breakthrough in U.S.-Soviet relations," said Sen. Lloyd Bentsen. "Their failure to make any visible headway on an arms control agreement is disappointing, but this is the first such summit in six years and it was expected to be a time for sowing seeds, not harvesting."

President Reagan returned Thursday after meeting with Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev in Geneva. Reagan told a joint session of Congress that the summit wasn't a meeting of the minds, but did move arms control forward from where it was last January.

Sen. Phil Gramm said Reagan's "upbeat" mood during the summit and his speech to Congress is reflected by the American people. Still, Gramm was cautious in his predictions of better U.S.-Soviet relations.

"I think first of all, as the president said so clearly, we have to be realistic. The Soviets are not going to change as a result of one meeting or maybe of a million," Gramm said.

"They still have their same ambitions and designs, but I think clearly that having President Reagan ... sit down and talk for two days with Gorbachev," Gramm said, "was a necessary precondition for any kind of normalization of relations with the Soviets."

Rep. Joe Barton, R-Ennis, said he was pleased with the results of the summit.

"I'm not a great believer in the good will of the Soviet Union. I am somewhat distrustful of their intentions, so I am pleased by the results of the summit," Barton said.

Barton said he likes the idea of a "people to people" cultural exchange program which Reagan and Gorbachev agreed to initiate. He also said plans for the two superpower heads to meet again seem promising.

"The agreement to meet twice more in the next two years could be of great benefit," Barton said. "When you know you're going to be meeting every year, you're more willing to put more issues on the table. The more frequent you're in contact the greater chance of reaching an agreement."

REAGAN

The Gorbachev news conference and the Reagan speech were the final acts of a summit drama whose principal agreement — aside from accords on cultural exchanges and diplomatic facilities — was a decision for future summits. The two men will meet again in Washington next year and Moscow in 1987.

They failed to come up with a new framework for arms control talks, but Reagan said, "We are both instructing our negotiators to hasten their vital work. The world is waiting for results."

That was certainly true in Congress, where most lawmakers praised Reagan's trip and expressed optimism about the future, even as a few critics complained there had been few concrete achievements.

Senate Majority Leader Robert Dole, R-Kan., called the summit "a hopeful beginning to a process of dialogue and negotiations which we hope will become more comprehensive and bring more concrete progress in the future."

"In particular," he said, "the decision to hold future summits, including the one in Washington next summer, is a welcome development."

Said Sen. Nancy Kassebaum, R-Kan., "While tangible accomplishments from the talks are modest, I believe the summit has opened the way for serious, detailed negotiations on a series of critical issues...."

Sen. Albert Gore Jr., D-Tenn., said, "It's possible the private discussions began a mind-changing in one or both leaders."

Johnston said the tone of the talk was "hope rather than accomplishment."

But Sen. Joseph Biden, D-Del., said that if he were to rate the summit on a scale of good, bad or indifferent he would choose "indifferent," while Sen. Alan Cranston, D-Calif., said, "I didn't expect a lot of substance. I wasn't surprised."

In the hours immediately after the summit, there were scant details about how the leaders of the two most powerful nations on Earth got along.

Reagan seemed to have taken a liking to Gorbachev, saying the best part of the meetings were the 5½ hours they spent alone in "our fireside summit." He added, "I found Mr. Gorbachev to be an energetic defender of Soviet policy. He was an eloquent speaker, and a good listener."

Gorbachev, in a 90-minute news conference, said he and the president agreed not to say "stupid things" about each other, but added that at times, the discussion became "very pointed indeed." He said he had told Reagan not to consider the Soviet Union "naive and simpletons" on Star Wars.

The two leaders also seemed to have developed a rapport by the time they met on a stage in a closing ceremony. One key presidential aide, who asked not to be identified by name, said, "The remarkable thing about the ceremony was the obvious ease with which the two men conducted themselves."

From Geneva, Gorbachev flew to Prague to brief the leaders of the Warsaw Pact countries.

Reagan flew to Brussels to meet with leaders of NATO allies, who greeted him warmly.

Then the president boarded Air Force One for the flight back to the United States, a helicopter ride to the Capitol, and the speech to the joint session of Congress that capped a 20-hour workday.

There, he said he and Gorbachev had achieved a "measure of progress" on arms control. "While we still have a long way to go, we're at least heading in the right direction."

Reagan pronounced the summit worthwhile for both sides, and said, "A new realism spawned the summit; the summit itself was a good start; and now our byword must be: steady as we go....

"We don't want a phony peace or a frail peace. We did not go in pursuit of some kind of illusory detente. We can't be satisfied with cosmetic improvements that won't stand the test of time. We want real peace," the president said.

Reagan also said he had raised the issues of Soviet "expansionism" into Afghanistan, Angola and elsewhere and added, "We will continue to support the heroic efforts of those who fight for freedom."

He added that he had raised human rights, as well, but made no mention of progress in winning the release of Soviet dissidents.

On Star Wars, he said there was a "very direct" exchange of views.

"Mr. Gorbachev insisted that we might use a strategic defense system to put offensive weapons into space and establish nuclear superiority.

"I made it clear that SDI has nothing to do with offensive weapons ... If our research succeeds, it will bring much closer the safer, more stable world we seek."

He also pointed to a new accord on cultural exchanges involving artists, teachers and students; a proposal for a new American consulate in the Ukraine and a Soviet consulate in New York; and agreement with Japan on a new Pacific Air Safety Agreement.

"What happened before must never be allowed to happen again," he said of the Soviet downing of a Korean civilian airliner.

KATE

Kate's 20-mile-wide eye hit land between Panama City and Apalachicola with maximum sustained winds of 85 mph and gusts higher than 100 mph.

At 5 a.m. EST, Kate, now a tropical storm, was centered near latitude 32.0 north, longitude 82.0 west, about 50 miles west of Savannah, Ga. The storm was moving east-northeast about 20 mph and was expected to emerge over the Georgia-South Carolina coast by midday.

Its peak winds were near 55 mph with stronger gusts in squalls and forecasters said little change was expected in either its speed or strength.

Little damage was reported today in Vidalia, in Kate's path to the Atlantic Ocean, said police dispatcher Ray Corbett. "We've had strong gusts and plenty of rain all night," but the only damage reported was a downed tree.

Elsewhere in Georgia, Kate was toppling trees and utility lines, but authorities reported no injuries. Georgia Power Co. spokesman Rick Rountree estimates between 2,000 and 3,000 customers without power in south Georgia "and that's probably a conservative estimate."

"It is a mess down here. All of our lights are out, all of our radios are out, everything," said Sheila Cason of the Grady County Sheriff's Department in Thomasville.

"The roads are blocked to the south to Tallahassee and to the west to Bainbridge," said Thomasville Red Cross director Theo Titus. "Trees and power lines are over the roads, and power is out in outlying areas."

Two houses were damaged by tornadoes in Meigs, officials said.

"As far as any substantial damage is concerned, I think we've already seen the worst," said forecaster Mark Zimmer.

TUEC

The company said the project will now cost $5.46 billion, up $900 million from a January estimate. That brings Texas Utilities' share of the facility to $4.64 billion from the January's $3.9 billion. The utility originally estimated the total cost of the Glen Rose project at $777 million.

The updated estimate now calls for unit 1 to come on-line in mid-1987, with unit 2 starting up six months later. Unit 1 was originally scheduled to begin producing power in 1980, with unit 2 operating in 1981.

"This latest cost overrun means that customers will be asked to pay 700 percent more for Comanche Peak than it was supposed to cost," said Tom Smith, director of Public Citizen. "This latest cost overrun should cause customers to question the wisdom of completing Comanche Peak."

Ramsey countered that the utility's ratepayers "should be concerned if we don't complete it, because of the investment we've made already."

Smith suggested that TUEC invest in conservation and co-generation and purchase power from other utilities to meet its electric needs, rather than finish Comahche Peak. Ramsey said it is too late to consider such alternatives. "The economics are just not there," Ramsey said.

RULING

Augesen said he, too, is concerned about the constitutionality of the new law incorporated in the state's code of criminal procedure.

Ector County's three other district judges, Joe Connally, Gene Ater and Bill McCoy, said Lewis' ruling in the Patino case will have no effect on the way they handle criminal cases in their courts. They said "they will follow the law" until the law is changed.

REACT

Sipes and Beveridge were referring to the minimum tax provision in the proposed bill that place a minimum tax on drilling activity above 65 percent of net income.

"This is a limiting rule that penalizes those who drill a lot of wells," said Beveridge. "It is very deceptive."

He also noted that while much mention was made of lower tax rates, nobody supporting the tax reform measures had mentioned that the industry would be actually paying more in taxes. "A group of independent oilmen in Oklahoma did a study using the proposed lower tax rates and the proposed reforms and determined that it would result in a net increase in taxes."

Beveride said IPAA had tried for many months to be cooperative and a friend to the administration, but the oil association shifted its position at the recent IPAA meeting in San Antonio when it became apparent the tax proposals would be punitive to the oil industry.

"Our position, now, is that the whole program of tax reform as it now stands, be killed and that we start over some other time, when we have time to spend on this issue. Nobody has really spent any time on this thing," said Beveridge. "Fifty percent of the land rigs are already stacked, that number will be even greater if this bill is passed in its present form."

In an Associated Press story today, Gov. Mark White had equally strong words. He said the House committee action will hurt the Texas oil industry and not help the federal budget.

"This tax increase is going to mean more loss of jobs and loss of income for workers in the industry, and that simply isn't the way to raise revenue," White said.

White last week wrote Rostenkowski, urging him to carefully consider any tax law changes which would "unduly penalize" the oil and gas industry.

"We in Texas are not going to sit idly by and watch the lifeblood of the Texas economy be leeched and our national defense be put in peril by a tax bill that seeks to eliminate deductions for intangible drilling and development costs and percentage depletion allowances," White said then.

Thursday, the governor said he found the Ways and Means Committee's vote "difficult to understand."

He also rapped Treasury Secretary James Baker, saying Baker remained silent until "the last moment" and then "urged committee members to accept a proposal that more than doubles the tax burden on the oil industry, backing off from the $1.9 billion proposal he himself previously submitted.

White, a Democrat, said that Congress should find other ways to raise revenue to offset the mounting federal budget deficit. The best way to increase federal revenue is to add jobs in the oil industry and increase domestic oil production, he said.

"It makes no sense to cripple an industry that could be such a large revenue producer," he said.

"The oil industry didn't create the national (budget) deficit, it shouldn't be destroyed to balance the budget. That's a high price for American to pay for a relatively small offset in revenue."

OIL

Also, the committee would allow producers to deduct, in the first year, certain "intangible" drilling costs, but fewer than permitted under current law. From the time the pipe is sunk into the ground, all costs would have to be written off over 26 months, a change from current law.

The oil compromise would raise most of its revenue by adding a provision not specifically related to the oil industry. It would wipe out some of the tax advantages in a corporate liquidation, merger or takeover.

Other oil provisions "split the difference" between what Reagan and Rostenkowski wanted.

Treasury Secretary James A. Baker III, a former Houston lawyer, took an unusually visible part in the debate on energy measures, congressional sources said.

On Monday, Baker met privately with Rostenkowski to try to persuade him to accept the Reagan administration's recommendations on oil and gas.

Also, Baker met with Ways and Means Committee members from oil-producing states, including Reps. J.J. Pickle, D-Austin; Bill Archer, R-Houston; William Thomas, R-Calif.; Henson Moore, R-La., and Jim Jones, D-Okla.

Rostenkowski was reported to be "incredulous" that Baker was not only overtly opposing him, but was also meeting with industry lobbyists. Sources quoted here said Baker has taken a hand in behind-the-scenes before, but this was by far the most intense effort he has made.

The oil state representatives negotiated with Rostenkowski until he said, "This is as far as I can go," according to a Texas staff man close to the scene.

At that point, they huddled with industry representatives and asked: "Do you want Rosty II, or Rosty I?"

The answer was emphatic: "Rosty II."

Bill Taylor, a spokesmn for API, said the group's initial reaction is "the oil industry is already the most heavily taxed in the country — even without a windfall profits tax."

The committee action, according to Taylor, would tax the industry $4.2 billion more in the next five years — at a time "when increased domestic petroleum production should be a national goal."

Of equal or greater importance to the oil industry is the vote yesterday to tighten the minimum tax on individuals and corportions, Wellish said.

"I think that can be turned around in the Senate," Wellish added. "That affects a lot of people other than those in the oil industry."

Under the tougher minimum tax endorsed by the committee, a congressional aide said "significantly more" individuals would pay it than the 235,000 who paid it last year.

The minimum tax restricts the extent to which taxpayers can avail themselves of deductions or credits, called "tax preferences."

The committee yesterday also rolled back by 20 percent the allowable tax deductions for business meals and entertainment.

Rostenkowski, a Chicago Democrat, wrote House members as they prepared to leave Washington for Thanksgiving that he expects to bring the bill to the floor before Christmas.

The committee chairman told members the final package would "hold the top (individual tax) rate within two to three points of the president's target of 35 percent while leaving the bottom two tiers at the rates President Reagan proposed.

Ways and Means is scheduled to consider the remaining tax issues — taxation of fringe benefits, the deductibility of state ad local taxes and transition rules — before coming back to the question of the personal exemption.

Despite Rostenkowski's optimism, there is a growing sense in Washington that tax reform may be dead — at least for next year. At its recently- concluded convention in San Francisco, the API board of directors took the position that tax reform is averting attention from the deficit and other related economic issues.

"API believes the primary focus should be on the deficit issues, and major tax changes should deferred at this time," said Taylor, the group's spokesman.

The Republican Study Committee, with 140 members, Wednesday approved a resolution denouncing the Ways and Means legislation and asking the GOP leadership to bring its own bill to the floor.

Legislator likes 'Sloopy'

COLUMBUS, Ohio (AP) — When state Rep. Mike Stinziano sang "Hang On Sloopy," his nominee for the state's official rock song, before the state Senate, it was hard to tell if he was on-key.

His rendition of the hit of 20 years ago was drowned out Wednesday by the of his accompaniment, a brass band.

"Sloopy," by an Ohio-based group called the McCoys, enjoyed renewed popularity in the state when the Ohio State University marching band made it an unofficial football fight song.

Indonesia putting 3.8 million people on the move

By KENNETH L. WHITING
Associated Press Writer

JAKARTA, Indonesia (AP) — The job ahead for Transmigration Minister Martono is to move 750,000 families — about 3.8 million people — from overcrowded Java and Bali to Indonesia's less populated islands over the next five years.

About 2.5 million were moved in the past five years.

The government's plan is designed to ease overcrowding, improve the living standards of migrants and develop virgin tracts elsewhere in Indonesia, the world's largest archipelago.

It consists of 13,677 islands, 6,004 of them with names. Its total surface area, including seas within its frontiers, is more than 1.9 million square miles, an area roughly the same size as the continental United States.

Described by the government as the world's biggest voluntary migration program, transmigration is aided by the World Bank and other international agencies as vital to the future of the world's fifth most populous nation.

Java, which is about the size of North Carolina, holds 92 million of the country's 168 million people but has only 7 percent of its land area. Officials say that ideally Java should accommodate only 70 million people.

Bali, Lombok and parts of Sumatra are less seriously crowded. The total population is likely to stabilize at 320 million to 350 million people 50 years from now, according to some projections.

Sumatra is now closed to most transmigration due to crowding, said Martono, who uses only one name. Kalimantan (Borneo) and Sulawesi (Celebes), with the exception of central Sulawesi, are expected to be closed next year to all but "spontaneous" migrants who pay their own way.

Hostage talks face 'difficulties'

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Anglican church envoy Terry Waite said today he has met twice more with the kidnappers of American hostages and faces "very grave difficulties" in his efforts to free the captives.

But Waite said he believes the problems can be resolved with more work.

"A good measure of mutual trust has been established and I am able to say that progress is being made," he told reporters in a news conference at the Commodore Hotel.

Waite, a layman sent by Archbishop of Canterbury Robert Runcie, said the two latest meetings with the Americans' captors occurred after he returned to Beirut on Tuesday.

He previously disclosed at least one meeting with the captors, believed to be fundamentalist Shiite Moslems, during his initial round of contacts last week.

Waite declined to give any details of the new meetings at secret locations in Beirut.

"It might appear to some that a point of deadlock has been reached," he said. "While I do not deny the very grave difficulties facing me with this problem, I do believe it can be resolved."

"That will involve a great deal more work by myself and the goodwill and support of others," he said.

Waite's words were punctuated by the sound of rifle fire and explosions in the streets around the Commodore as Druse and Shiite Moslem militiamen battled for the third day.

Waite originally scheduled the news conference Thursday, but had to postpone it when he was trapped by the fighting for six hours The Associated Press bureau near the hotel.

The fighting also forced him to delay a planned flight Thursday to Larnaca, Cyprus, and from there to New York for consultations with U.S. officials. He said he now plans to leave Saturday.

He reiterated that he was "satisfied beyond all doubt that I was in touch with the right people."

He said without elaboration: "I have asked the captors not to harm the hostages in any way." He did not say whether he has seen the hostages.

Waite began his one-man mission Nov. 13 shortly after Runcie, the spiritual head of the Church of England, received a letter from four of the six Americans missing in Lebanon.

He flew to London last Sunday for meetings with senior U.S. officials and returned to Beirut late Tuesday.

Islamic Jihad, the group that has claimed to be holding the Americans, has demanded Kuwait release 17 comrades convicted in the 1983 bombings of the U.S. and French embassies. Kuwait has refused.

The four hostages who wrote to Runcie are Terry Anderson, the AP's chief Middle East correspondent; the Rev. Lawrence Jenco, a Roman Catholic relief official; David Jacobsen, director of the American University Hospital in Beirut; and Thomas Sutherland, the university's dean of agriculture.

They wrote that their captors told them they had killed another hostage, diplomat William Buckley. They did not mention a sixth captive, Peter Kilborn, a university librarian missing since Dec. 3, 1984.

In an interview with the AP on Thursday, Waite also reported progress and urged the hostages' families: "Have courage. Keep calm."

The families, he said, "must be alarmed and dismayed when they see all this trouble. But...I say to them 'have hope.' I haven't lost hope. I'm optimistic. It sounds and looks terrible, but we're moving forward."

Bullets flew in the street below the bureau and chipped the walls, trapping Waite in the building for six hours.

One bullet smashed through a wall a few feet from where he was standing, and rocket-propelled grenades exploded yards away.

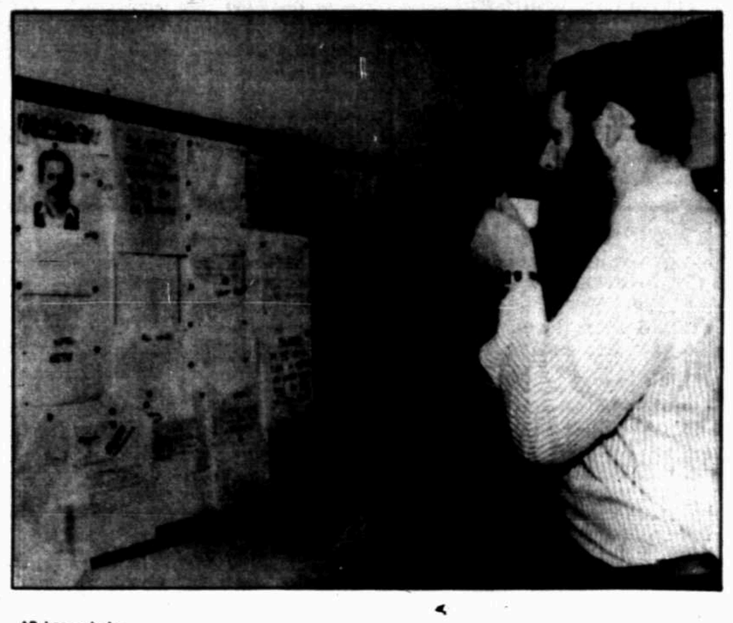

"Unfortunately, this (the fighting) is something that's been part and parcel of the life of Lebanon for a long time," he said. "My work goes ahead."

One man, apparently a civilian, was shot in the street below the AP bureau during the fighting Thursday between Shiite and Druse militiamen.

"It's tragic," Waite said after seeing the man shot. "You feel the absolute senseless futility of war."

Cosmonaut's illness cuts Soyuz T-14 mission

Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

MOSCOW — A three-man Soviet space team aborted their mission and returned to Earth Thursday because one of the cosmonauts suffered from an inflammation that could not be treated aboard the space craft, a Soviet space official said.

Vladimir Vasyutin, the ailing cosmonaut, and crew members Viktor Savinykh and Alexander Volkov brought their Soyuz T-14 spaceship to a safe landing at 1:31 p.m. local time in the Kazakhstan republic. Vasyutin had joined the other two aboard the Salyut-7 space station Sept. 18 for what was to have been a long-term stay.

Vladimir Shatalov, the head of the Soviet astronaut training center, said on Soviet television that this was not the first time that an astronaut had fallen ill during a space mission.

But during other long-term flights the ailing astronauts had been treated with medicine carried aboard their spacecraft with medical guidance radioed from Earth, without having to abort the missions.

Moslem militias battle over flag to fly during Independence Day

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Moslem militias divided over which flag should wave from government buildings as Lebanon celebrates its Independence Day today battled with tanks and multi-barrelled rocket launchers for control of a strategic sector of west Beirut.

Police said at least 20 people were killed and 80 wounded in three days of fighting between the Shiite Amal militia and Druse Progressive Socialist Party. The Druse tried to tear down Lebanese flags and raise their banners instead.

The two sides generally have been allies against Christians in Lebanon's 10-year-old civil war. But both sides used tanks and multi-barrelled rocket launchers today in the street battles that centered around seaside neighborhoods of the Moslem half of Beirut.

The battle kept firefighters from reaching a burning hospital in the Sanaya neighborhood, police said. Radios reported several apartment buildings also were on fire and said people were trapped in the basements, where they were sheltering from the battle.

Greenpeace sentences seen as warning against terrorism

AUCKLAND, New Zealand (AP) — Two French agents were given 10-year prison terms today in the bombing of a Greenpeace protest ship, and the nation's top judge said the sentences were a "clear warning" that terrorism would be punished.

But the head of the environmental group that owned the ship, the Rainbow Warrior, said the court action had no effect on the agents' superiors or on other French operatives thought to be involved in the July 10 attack that killed a crewman.

The two agents, army officers Maj. Alain Mafart and Capt. Dominique Prieur, stood quietly as their sentences were read out in Auckland High Court.

As well as 10-year terms for manslaughter, the two drew seven-year sentences for arson, but New Zealand's chief justice, Sir Roland Davison, ordered the terms served simultaneously.

Davison said the prison terms "must give a clear warning to persons such as the defendants and their masters that terrorist-style actions will provoke stern reaction and severe punishment."

Court observers said the prison terms were stiff by New Zealand standards. But Greenpeace international chairman David McTaggart said he was disappointed. "The other agents who were involved, as well as (then French Defense Minister Charles Hernu) should have been in the dock today," McTaggart said.

The Rainbow Warrior was sunk by two limpet mines attached to its hull as it was preparing for a cruise to French Polynesia, where it was to lead a protest flotilla against French nuclear testing.

The attack touched off a scandal in France, and led to Hernu's forced resignation and the reorganization of the French intelligence service.

Press reports said other groups of agents were involved, but Prime Minister Laurent Fabius denied any high-level government knowledge of the attack.

In an apparent reference to French President Francois Mitterrand, who also denied any involvement, McTaggart charged, "The thing that is really frightening is that the person who gave the order to bomb our boat is the gentleman who has his finger on the nuclear button. And that's really frightening."

Because of the time difference, there was no immediate official comment on the sentences from France.

The lawyer representing the interests of the French government, Daniel Soulez Lariviere, said the sentences were severe in view of the fact that Mafart and Ms. Prieur had pleaded guilty to charges of manslaughter, thereby saving the state the costs of lengthy proceedings.

In the first reaction from the New Zealand government, the justice minister, Geoffrey Palmer, said, "The courts have carried out their consitutional duty. That is why they are there. They have done so without any input from the arm of government.

Wreckage found in MIA search confirmed as that of B-52 bomber

BANGKOK, Thailand (AP) — A joint U.S.-Vietnamese team searching for remains of four American MIAs has confirmed that wreckage they unearthed is from a U.S. Air Force B-52 bomber, a spokeswoman said today.

Vietnamese who are working at the site side-by-side with the American team say the plane was shot down 13 years ago during the Vietnam War.

A "number of larger aircraft parts" as well as operator manuals were found by the team Thursday — enough material to identify the plane as a B-52, said Capt. Virginia Pribyla. Pieces of metal thought to be part of an airplane had been found earlier.

She said the exact identification of the plane could not yet be made.

The excavation began Tuesday and is scheduled to conclude Nov. 29, she said.

Vietnam says four airmen were killed when their B-52 was shot down on Dec. 20, 1972 and plummeted into the agricultural commune of Yen Thuong, nine miles north of Hanoi. Two of the six crew members parachuted out of the plane, were captured, and later released, Vietnam says.

The American side has said it had no record of a B-52 crash on that date.

The joint search, the first time Vietnamese and U.S. teams have worked together looking for MIAs, has turned up nearly 20 bone fragments, but they have not yet been identified.

The excavation is the latest in a series of Vietnamese steps to account for 1,797 U.S. servicemen and civilians still listed as missing. That issue has blocked an improvement in relations between the United States and Vietnam.

Twelve Americans on the team are members of the Honolulu-based U.S. Joint Casualty Resolution Center.

Vietnamese officials say the B-52 was struck by missiles while on one of a series of bombing raids ordered by former President Richard M. Nixon on the Hanoi-Haiphong area to pressure North Vietnam into reaching a peace agreement.

The Vietnamese shot down 27 attacking aircraft during the two week blitz, including 15 B-52s. Ninety-three U.S. airmen were killed, captured or reported missing.

Earlier Thursday, Ms. Pridyla, who has maintained radio contact with the team, said one of the Americans was struck in the head by a backhoe and suffered a concussion.

She said Capt. Charles Callaway of Richmond, Va., was in "good shape" when he arrived at Clark Air Force Base in the Philippines and would soon return to Honolulu.

A 70-ton tractor was flown in by the United States to remove layers of the moist, red earth at the site.

FitzGerald gets parliament nod

DUBLIN, Ireland (AP) — Prime Minister Garret FitzGerald won parliamentary approval for his agreement with Britain on Northern Ireland by a narrow margin, but there were indications that the near-unanimous political opposition was not firm.

The Dail, Ireland's parliament, voted 88-75 Thursday in favor of the accord after a three-day debate. FitzGerald's coalition of his Fine Gael party and the Labor Party backed it, while all but one member of the opposition Fianna Fail party voted against it.

Meanwhile, Protestant leaders in Northern Ireland kept up their opposition to the accord, and the mostly Roman Catholic Irish Republican Army shot dead a German-born businessman it claimed was working for the police.

The deal, signed Nov. 15, is to be debated by the British Parliament next week. Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher, with a majority of 138 plus support on the accord from opposition parties, can expect an easy victory.

Irish political sources reported considerable dissent inside Fianna Fail over leader Charles Haughey's opposition to the accord. One Fianna Fail lawmaker, in a rebellion rare in Irish politics, cast her vote in favor of it.

Some Fianna Fail legislators tried to persuade Haughey to allow abstention rather than a negative vote.

Volcano survivors pulled from steeple

BOGOTA, Colombia (AP) — Two people rescued from a stone church steeple a week after a deluge of volcanic mud covered almost every other building in Armero may be the last survivors to be found, a Red Cross spokesman said.

Also Thursday, President Belisario Betancur defended a government-ordered evacuation drill that sent thousands of residents of a town near the Nevado del Ruiz volcano running into the hills on a rainy night.

"What we want to do is, if there is a tragedy, not have a high human cost," Betancur said while touring Mariquita, the evacuated town.

Red Cross spokesman Eduardo Botero told The Associated Press the two people were detected Tuesday night by a British team using heat-sensing equipment, and that they were rescued Wednesday night.

"They could be the last. I believe we will not find any more of them," Botero said. He said he did not know their names or whether they were male or female.

Neither was seriously injured, but they had been without food and water for a week, he said.

"Perhaps they were saved because they chose a church as a refuge place," said Botero. He said the church's stone construction kept it from being swept away in the Nov. 14 mudslide that destroyed most of the nearly 5,000 buildings in Armero.

An estimated 25,000 people were killed, most in Armero and some from surrounding areas. A small eruption of Nevado del Ruiz melted tons of snow and ice on the mountain and swept a 150-foot wall of mud into the coffee-growing Armero Valley.

AP Laserphoto

Among the survivors of the volcanic eruption and mudslide that engulfed Armero, Colombia, are 104-year-old Ascencion Velazquez, left, and her daughter Maria de la Cruz Velazquez, 74.

Betancur told reporters the Wednesday night evacuation of Mariquita, about 13 miles north of Armero, "had no other objective than avoiding the loss of human life. The government is not trying to alarm, but to take preventative measures."

Two national radio networks, RCN and Caracol, interrupted their broadcasts of a soccer game Wednesday night to announce the evacuation.

Mariquita Mayor Joel Hartman said Thursday many people still were too frightened to return. There was no immediate estimate of how many actually fled Wednesday. The town's population has swelled to 40,000 with refugees from Armero.

RCN and Caracol later reported the evacuation was a simulation and government officials went on the air to explain and urge people to remain calm. Victor G. Ricardo, director of the National Emergency Committee that ordered the drill, said the goal was "to keep the population alert."

Scientists monitoring the three-mile-high Nevado del Ruiz say it is stable "over the short term," but caution there is a risk of increased activity in the mountain.

Defense Minister Miguel Vega Uribe said in an interview with Caracol Thursday night, "The exercises have to be done. One time it could be night, another time in the day. But we have to be ready to know what to do at the moment of a disaster."

However, army Maj. Horacio Ruiz, newly appointed mayor of Armero, said: "The exercises should be planned so that they do not cause panic."

It still was not clear Thursday exactly how many many people were injured and left homeless in the mudslide. The RCN network quoted the Defense Ministry as saying 4,253 people were injured and another 7,122 were left homeless.

The government earlier had said 12,000 people were saved, including injured, and the estimate of homeless has ranged as high as 50,000 in some newspaper reports.

Juan Castillo, a spokesman for Betancur, said that as of Wednesday about 27,000 people had died in the disaster, including up to 9,000 younger than 16. Health Minister Rafael Zubiria has not raised his figure given earlier this week of 25,000 dead.

Some refugees were leaving emergency centers to stay with relatives and friends.

A woman who gave her age as 104, Ascencion Valazquez, remained at one camp in nearby Lerida with her son Isaac Menese, 67, and her daughter, Maria de la Cruz Velazquez, 74.

Palestinians sentenced

TEL AVIV, Israel (AP) — A military court in Lod gave life prison sentences to two Palestinians who pleaded guilty to killing two Jews last June.

Amar Ganimat and Ziad Mohammed Ganimat, both 23 and from Surif in the occupied West Bank, pleaded guilty Thursday to fatally shooting Meir Ben Yair and Michal Cohen on a forest road east of Jerusalem on June 26.

The defendants are distant relatives.

Defense Attorney Jonathan Kuttab said they had acted "as part of the struggle for the legitimate rights of their people."

The court rejected Kuttab's argument that the men "saw in every Jew a representative of the occupied powers in so far as every Jew served in the Israeli army." Under Israel's reserve system, all men from 18 to 54 serve about a month of reserve army duty.

Prison barges debated

AMSTERDAM, The Netherlands — A consortium says it can solve the country's shortage of prison space by building four-story prison barges with 60 cells each complete with chapel and roof-top recreation area.

Ton Funke Kupper, a spokesman for the three-company consortium, said Thursday the Justice Ministry has not formally responded to the plan, submitted last month.

There is a shortage of about 750 prison cells in the Netherlands, and this would be a quick and cheap way to solve the most acute problems," Funke Kupper said.

He said the 99-by-17-yard barges could be built in six months with prefabricated materials for one-half to one-third the cost of a prison on solid ground.

With its many lakes and waterways, the Netherlands already has thousands of houseboats.

Greek leader resigns

ATHENS, Greece (AP) — Greece's official spokesman, Costas Laliotis, said he had resigned his post and was quitting politics because of "recent events," but did not elaborate.

Laliotis, 33, had been named deputy minister of press and information shortly after the governing Panhellenic Socialist Movement was re-elected in June to another four-year term.

He said in a written statement that he was stepping down because of "recent events" and told journalists earlier that he also was quitting political activity.

He did not clarify if he would resign from the Panhellenic Socialist Movement's 140-member Central Committee.

Laliotis' resignation had been rumored following a dispute with Labor Minister Evanghelos Yannopoulos over the minster's alleged attempt to censor a state television station's coverage of recent nationwide strikes.

Corruption admonished

TOKYO (AP) — The North Korean government newspaper has made a rare acknowledgement of corruption among officials, admonishing them to "defend the interests of the people against infringement of common property."

The newspaper, Minju Chosun, directed its criticism at representatives in state, provincial and local assemblies, a Japanese monitoring agency reported Thursday.

"Representatives should not compromise in the struggle to oppose bureaucratism so that senior officials would not abuse their powers and invade the interests of the people," the newspaper was quoted as saying.

The criticisms were published in the paper's Sunday edition, seen in Tokyo Thursday by Radio Press, a Japanese news agency that regularly monitors Communist-bloc radio and news services.

Reagan briefs NATO allies on summit talks

BRUSSELS, Belgium (AP) — President Reagan briefed the leaders of NATO allies on his talks with Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev and won their approval for his performance in Geneva.

Reagan spoke to the Western leaders, including Chancellor Helmut Kohl of West Germany, Canadian Prime Minister Brian Mulroney, Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher of Great Britain and Italian Prime Minister Bettino Craxi, Thursday.

The leader of each of the 15 other NATO members, or a representative, also spoke briefly and questioned the American president, who stopped at the headquarters of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization in Brussels before returning to Washington.

NATO Secretary General Lord Carrington summed up the one-hour, 21-minute meeting of the North Atlantic Council, NATO's highest decision-making body, by saying Reagan "was able to report in positive terms on important aspects of what had transpired in Geneva, and that allied reactions were strongly supportive."

"I am heartened by the productive personal relationship that Gorbachev and Reagan established and their agreement to meet in the future," Mulroney told reporters. Canada frequently has urged annual superpower summits.

"The meeting is a very important step toward ensuring peace," Kohl said at a news briefing. "It would not have been possible without the very personal engagement of Reagan and Gorbachev."

That sentiment was echoed by Ruud Lubbers, the Dutch prime minister. "This is not only a summit between the United States and the Soviet Union, but it is also a personal achievement between Reagan and Gorbachev," he said.

About half of the more than eight hours of talks between the two leaders in Geneva were conducted with only the principals and their interpreters present.

No progress was indicated on arms control, which particularly concerns U.S. allies in Europe. Both Reagan and Gorbachev said serious differences remain between the two superpowers.

But Lubbers said "There is a new situation, being that the Soviet Union now accepts as a fact the deployment (of NATO medium-range missiles) in the five countries."

The Netherlands last month joined Britain, West Germany, Italy and Belgium in voting to accept the U.S.-built missiles, which NATO says are needed to counter a buildup of Soviet SS-20 rockets.

Lubbers said that "there is now a possibility of a separate agreement," on the intermediate-range nuclear forces, as distinct from strategic arms and space and defensive weapons.

The Dutch prime minister said Reagan told NATO leaders that "there is no coupling anymore" among the three areas of weaponry being negotiated in Geneva, and said there was a willingness to come to an arms agreement "wherever and whenever possible."

The Turkish prime minister, Turgut Ozal, said he had received the impression that some "mechanism" had been started toward solving regional problems, such as bringing peace to the Middle East, but said no details were given.

Nearly all of NATO leaders were enthusiastic about what Belgian Foreign Minister Leo Tindemans called the establishment of "a direct link" between the heads of the superpowers.

Kohl said it was "very important" that Reagan and Gorbachev agreed that no country should start a nuclear war because no one could win it.

Mulroney said the summit established "some simple but powerful truths." He said successful summit meetings are predicated on "the real strength and resolve of the United States and its president."

Congress throws president summit bouquets

By CLIFF HAAS

WASHINGTON (AP) — Congress has welcomed President Reagan back from the summit with a carefully chosen bouquet of compliments for the positive tone of his sessions with Soviet Leader Mikhail Gorbachev and quiet disappointment that so little of substance was achieved.

"On style, the summit was a success but on arms control it was a flop," said Rep. Edward J. Markey, D-Mass. "Overall, the world must regard the summit with polite applause, but not a standing ovation."

Yet there were supporters and opponents alike who said such assessments were too harsh and that Reagan deserved high marks for what they saw as his changing attitude toward dealing with the Soviet Union.

Sen. Charles McC. Mathias Jr., R-Md., a senior member of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, said that the "most we could expect was a better relationship and a little nudge for arms control, and that's what we got."

"But," Mathias added, "I think we did get one thing that I didn't expect, which is a kind of a new Ronald Reagan. This is the man that talked about the 'evil empire' and he is now changed, as we saw him, and I think that's important."

Barely 20 minutes after the president set foot in the United States Thursday night at Andrews Air Force Base outside of Washington, he arrived on Capitol Hill by helicopter to give a joint session of Congress and the nation a muted report that seemed to match the mood of his audience.

The leaders "did make a measure of progress," Reagan said, but there is still "a long ways to go."

For now, some were satisfied with the meeting itself.

"I think the most important thing that happened is the fact they did it," said Senate Majority Leader Robert Dole, R-Kan. "I've found after you've talked to someone for the first time it's a bit easier to pick up the phone or ease off."

Some were encouraged by the chemistry they sensed between Reagan and Gorbachev.

"You get the feeling when you read between the lines that these guys get on together," said Sen. Lawton Chiles, D-Fla.

And above all, legislators repeatedly said they hoped for more progress in the future.

Before the president's arrival, Dole said statements by Reagan and Gorbachev in Geneva were "a hopeful beginning to a process of dialogue and negotiations which we hope will become more comprehensive and bring more concrete progress in the future."

Rep. Patricia Schroeder, D-Colo., a member of the House Armed Services Committee, said, "While we applaud President Reagan's efforts, we will be watching to see what substantive progress will emerge from his fond memories of Geneva."

Still, there was skepticism and some disappointment.

Rep. Les Aspin, D-Wis., chairman of the House Armed Services Committee, said people giving the summit a second look will "see it's too thin on substance so that's why he (Reagan in his speech) put in the stuff about how his way of dealing with the Soviets was more realistic than past administrations. That's not true. It's simply an attempt to explain why we've not had arms control for five years."

"However grateful we all are for the apparent change in mood that results from this meeting, we cannot deceive ourselves into mistaking symbolism for concrete action," said Sen. Gary Hart, D-Colo.

Sen. Nancy Landon Kassebaum, R-Kan., said that while tangible accomplishments from the talks appear modest, she believes the summit "opened the way for serious, detailed negotiations on a series of critical issues."

Frenzy over superpower summitry subsides quickly

GENEVA (AP) — Within an hour of President Reagan's departure from Geneva, about 2,000 Swiss soldiers were on their way out, too, just one sign that Geneva's frenzy over the superpower summitry was subsiding quickly.

Soldiers, reporters, camera crews and interpreters packed up hastily Thursday following the conclusion of the summit between Reagan and Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev. Outgoing flights from the Geneva airport were filled.

Security workers began knocking down barricades, rolling up temporary tent barracks and cleaning up shortly after Reagan's afternoon departure.

"There was some stress," said one soldier, speaking in German. "But it was also a way to see people we never get close to otherwise."

"At least we had inside duty," he said with a sigh.

Other soldiers, including the submachine gun-carrying guards along the routes of the two leaders' motorcades, had to bundle up to fight freezing temperatures and stiff winds.

More than 3,100 journalists who covered the summit also were very quick to leave. Several hundred of them flew with Air Force One and a separate press plane to Brussels, Belgium, where Reagan briefed NATO leaders.

NBC was getting ready to airfreight 30,000 pounds of equipment back to the United States, spokesman Andrew Freedman said. CBS planned to fly about 20,000 pounds of equipment back to New York and major European bureaus by Saturday, said CBS News editor Bob Alberston.

Technicians were expected to take a week to dismantle extra communications equipment installed for the summit by PTT, the Swiss state communications monopoly.

Hundreds of telephones at two press centers were to be removed by Friday.

Most of the 1,550 miles of cable strung to hook up various summit sites will be removed by late next week, said Geneva PTT spokesman Bernard Suter.

Jean Arensberger, an English-Russian interpreter for the U.S. government who had come from Washington, said the summit "was grueling."

"Today I'm going to sleep, then Friday I'm heading back home," she said, clutching a dictionary.

First test of summit could come in January

By R. GREGORY NOKES
AP Diplomatic Writer

An Analysis

WASHINGTON — President Reagan says the real results of his Geneva summit won't be evident for months or years, but the test may come sooner — in January, and in Geneva again, when the arms control talks resume.

Three sessions of the arms talks already have been held, without significant results, and now the superpowers have failed at their summit to forge a breakthrough to hand to their negotiators.

The leaders failed to forge a breakthrough in the arms talks, although they agreed in a joint statement on the need "to accelerate the work at these negotiations."

According to summit participants, neither leader budged on what has become the central issue in the negotiations, Reagan's Strategic Defense Initiative, popularly known as "Star Wars."

The Soviets came into the summit demanding the program be scrapped, while the American side was just as insistent nothing would stop Star Wars research.

Paul H. Nitze, Reagan's chief arms control adviser, told reporters on Air Force One during the flight back to Washington that the Soviets "tried their level best to break down our position on SDI, without offering anything in return, and they didn't get away with it."

But there is a consensus among many experts on U.S.-Soviet relations that the "new start" that both sides say they want in superpower ties is impossible without a new agreement curbing arms, which now seems more than ever tied to Star Wars.

Whether they will later back down or not, the Soviets have made arms control the acid test for an improved relationship with Washington.

Advocates of arms control worry that not only has there not been progress toward a new agreement, but that existing agreements are being eroded beyond repair.

Those agreements are the 1972 Anti-Ballistic Missile treaty and the unratified SALT II treaty. Each side accuses the other of major violations, and each has proposals on the drawing boards which would erode them further.

They shudder at the prospect of a world without any arms control agreements.

While the leaders' deadlock remained unmoved by the summit, the closing joint statement did specify two common goals for arms control negotiations, one a 50 percent reduction in nuclear arms of both sides and the other a separate agreement on intermediate range nuclear weapons in Europe.

Both proposals were made earlier by the Soviets and had been endorsed by the Reagan administration. There are major problems with them, including different methods for counting what weapons of each sides would be included in cutbacks.

But, however vague, the joint statement does offer a ray of hope, and the fact the two leaders gave it their blessing does increase the chance of something emerging when the arms control talks resume.

In addition, the two leaders agreed to meet again, at least twice more, probably in Washington in 1986 and in Moscow in 1987.

Press aide gives Gorbachev Armenian greeting

By MICHAEL PUTZEL

GENEVA (AP) — During a summit reception, two members of the White House staff arrived late and, rather than miss the opportunity, broke into a receiving line in order to greet General Secretary Mikhail Gorbachev.

One of them, deputy press secretary Ed Djerejian, speaks Russian and exchanged pleasantries with Gorbachev in the Soviet leader's own language.

But after they'd been through once and had enjoyed a drink or two, Djerejian and his companion, fellow spokesman Peter Roussel, discovered they had been assigned numbers according to their protocol rank and were expected to go through the line in turn.

Because he had called attention to himself the first time by speaking Russian, Gorbachev and his wife, Raisa, remembered when Djerejian came through again and gave him a quizzical look.

"You understand," the quick-thinking Djerejian told the general secretary. "I'm Armenian."

Gorbachev, who like other Russians knew the stereotype of the Armenian to be a notorious trickster, roared with laughter.

For President Reagan, the trip to Geneva was a mission for peace, but for his national security adviser, it was a sentimental journey as well.

As a young Marine officer between Vietnam tours in the 1960s, Robert C. McFarlane spent a tour on school duty at Geneva's Institute of Higher Studies, and his return to the city as a key member of the U.S. summit team brought back some memories and some longings.

This time, McFarlane stayed in an elegant lakeshore mansion, furnished in Louis XV antiques with Picassos, Cezannes and other original French impressionist paintings on the walls. White House stewards brought him his drinks from a dumbwaiter, and a Mercedes with driver stood ready to take him wherever he wanted to go.

It wasn't like the old days, when he, his wife, Jonda, and their newborn twins lived in an apartment on a farm outside Geneva, and he set out to study about the time the farmer went to milk his herd of dairy cows.

But one thing hasn't changed.

McFarlane has a passion for chocolate. And Swiss chocolate, of course, is renowned throughout the world.

His favorite chocolate shop in Geneva is a place downtown called Veyvey, and he remembers going there sometimes and spending more than he could afford to bring his wife a special treat when he had offended her somehow.

Being assigned to the mansion next door to the Reagans' was a coveted perquisite of the trip, but not everyone had the elaborate quarters McFarlane and other top aides enjoyed.

Tom Dawson, the tallest and lankiest of Chief of Staff Donald T. Regan's aides, was given a bedroom converted from an attic storeroom with the bathroom crammed under a sloping roof. The shower head in the shower was barely knee high, and Dawson became an accomplished contortionist just trying to keep himself clean.

Take these 22 tips to reduce income tax burdens

The time to do something about reducing income tax burdens is now and not after the end of the tax year. Here are a number of timely tax management tips and reminders.

1. Pay cash wages to your children for farm work actually done by them and deduct it as a farm business expense. The wages should be reasonable and for specific jobs. Wages paid to children by parents are not subject to social security tax until the child reaches age 21.

2. Give income-producing property, such as land, cattle and machinery to children and let them report income from their work and capital. Family partnerships and farm corporations through stock transfers are sometimes used to do this. It is another way to spread family income over the lower tax brackets.

3. If you are age 63 or 64, postpone income to age 65 to take advantage of the double personal exemption. Persons approaching retirement, however, may want to maintain income as near as possible to the maximum for social security in these years.

4. Do not hold breeding stock used for production of market livestock too long. By selling sows after only one (or a few) litters, a higher percentage of hog sales will qualify for capital gain treatment over a period of years and reduce taxes.

5. Buy machinery and equipment in years of high income and take advantage of accelerated cost recovery, and possibly of the expensing option.

6. Plan personal deductions. Some medical expenses or contributions that are normally spread over two years can be paid in one year and itemized as deductions. In the next year, the zero bracket amount (the old standard deduction) may be taken if higher than the total of acutal itemized deductions. Be sure to choose the larger of the two.

7. Avoid wide fluctuations in income from one year to the next so you have enough income each year to take advantage of personal deductions and exemptions.

8. Installment sales of property can be used to spread income over a period of years and thus avoid high income in one year.

9. Check for loss years in the past. Is there an unused net operating loss deduction? If so, file an amended return and obtain a refund on taxes paid in the past.

10. Be sure to claim the investment credit on all items that qualify.

11. To insure a record of all income and expenses, have a checking account in which to deposit all receipts and to pay all bills.

12. Be sure that CCC loans are not counted as income twice in one year when borrowed and next year when crop is sold. Farmers can elect to report the loan as income in the year the loan is received or wait until the grain is either reclaimed and sold or forfeited to report the income.

13. If you are using the cash method, deduct cost of purchased livestock that was lost, stolen or that died during the year.

14. If you are using the accrual method, deduct all purchases of livestock. Make a livestock number check to see that the total number purchased and born, plus the beginning inventory equals the total number sold, died and butchered, plus the ending inventory.

15. Deduct as many auto, utilities, telephone and other expenses as actually used in the farm business (half is not enough in many cases). Make certain this use is well documented.

16. Keep records to insure deduction of easily overlooked items such as farm magazines, farm organization dues, bank service charges, business trips, portion of dwelling used for farm business, household supplies used for hired help and cash outlay to board hired workers.

17. Itemize on bank deposit slips all gifts, borrowing and related actions so that they will not be considered taxable income.

18. Establish a charge account at a hardware store, elevator or other places where considerable business is done during the year. Pay account by check upon receipt of monthly statements. This prevents omitting many small items which might otherwise be paid by cash.

19. Keep exact record of date of purchase, cost and date of sale on all items purchased for resale.

20. Pay bills by check whenever possible. Record all cash expenditures at once in an account book. Always get receipts for farm expenses paid by cash. Obtain a bank statement each month and check it against the farm account book.

21. Do not report capital gains on the sale of your dwelling as income if you plan, within two years, to buy and occupy another dwelling that will cost as much, or more, than the selling price of our present dwelling. Also, you have two years to build and occupy a newly constructed dwelling. In addition, if you are 55 or older, you may choose to take a once-in-a-lifetime exclusion of up to $125,000 of the gain on the sale of your personal dwelling, even though you don't reinvest in another house.

22. Remember that if you have income subject to tax, every dollar of cost not deducted will result in unnecessary income tax.

Drug production outpaces farming in Latin America

WASHINGTON (AP) — Production of cocaine, heroin and marijuana for smuggling into the United States and Europe is displacing food production in some Latin American countries, according to an Agriculture Department report.

The finding that growing drugs is more important than growing food, "suggests the urgency of the problem as much as the specter of drug addition here," the report said. "When farmers plant coca leaves instead of corn, the victims are not only the drug users but also hungry children in the highlands of Bolivia and elsewhere."

According to Drug Enforcement Administration estimates, 22 million Americans have tried cocaine, and four million are regular users. An estimated 25 million use marijuana at least once a month.

"Heroin use is largely limited to America's inner cities, where nearly one-half million Americans are addicted," the report said.

Illegal sales last year were estimated in the range of $50 billion to $80 billion, with most of that remaining in the United States. Perhaps only $2 billion to $4 billion was funneled back to the "exporting countries," the report said.

The drug shipments came into the United States from many parts of the world, including Thailand and Turkey, but most suppliers are closer at hand.

"Although the Colombia connection for cocaine has been widely publicized in the press, the Western Hemisphere supply routes for illicit drugs can also be traced to Bolivia, Peru, Mexico and the Caribbean country of Jamaica," the report said.

The report, which was included in the latest issue of Farmline magazine, was based mostly on information supplied by Larry Deaton, an economist in the international economics division of USDA's Economic Research Service.

Although "there is now enough evidence" to back up claims about drug production displacing some of the basic food crops, that is not bad for everyone in the affected countries, the report said.

"Farm laborers who work in marijuana or coca fields receive considerably higher wages than those who work in strictly legal rural or unskilled urban jobs," it said.

"But their gain is more than offset by the apparent loss to many more people of food crops that would otherwise be grown. Bolivia and Peru, especially can ill afford the loss of any food production."

Philadelphia police protect blacks from white racists

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Police officers remained on guard today outside the homes of a black family and an interracial couple in a neighborhood disrupted for two nights by white protesters' shouts of "We want them out," and "Move, move, move."

About 300 whites demonstrated Thursday night outside the home of a black man and his white wife. A core group of 50 to 75 mostly young people chanted, "We have rights, too," and "Move, move, move."

Mounted police cordoned off 2½ blocks on either side of the row house in the southwest Philadelphia neighborhood.

Wednesday night, about 400 people, many shouting "We want them out," demonstrated a few blocks away outside the home of a black couple.

Police, who have posted a 24-hour watch at the two homes, said there were no arrests and no violence at either demonstration.

"While we were moving in people yelled a lot of slurs at us," Carol Fox, 30, who moved to the neighborhood Sunday with her husband, Gerald, 10-year-old daughter and 5-year-old son, said earlier Thursday. "They called us niggers, and yelled 'You've got it coming.'

"If they don't like us, fine. Don't talk to us, that's OK. We bought this house, so we're here to stay." Mrs. Fox is white. Her husband is black.

Sanctuary trial continues

TUCSON, Ariz. (AP) — Two sanctuary conspiracy defendants helped smuggle a Salvadoran family from Mexico to Arizona in May 1984, a government informant told a federal jury.

Jesus Cruz took the stand Thursday as the first witness in the trial of 11 defendants charged with conspiring to smuggle Central American aliens into the country.

Cruz, 58, told the jury that defendants Maria del Socorro Pardo de Aguilar of Nogales, Mexico, harbored the Salvadoran family of seven in her home and that Mary K. Doan Espinoza of Nogales, Ariz., drove them to Nogales in a van.

Defense lawyers objected to Cruz's statement that the head of the family, Alejandro Rodriguez, said his family was from El Salvador. The defense claimed it was secondhand information and should not be admitted as evidence.

U.S. District Judge Earl Carroll began a separate hearing, scheduled to continue today, on whether such secondhand statements would be admitted. The judge called off trial testimony until Monday because of a serious illness in a juror's family.

Amendments stall farm bill

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate is straining to complete its massive new farm bill this week but is stalled by a growing maze of amendments and lingering resentment from Democrats over a Republican move to cut farm income subsidies.

As the Senate labored into the early morning hours today, partisan tensions mounted along with the pile of proposals to change the bill.

"I think it's filibuster by amendment," Majority Leader Robert Dole, R-Kan., said. Sen. James Exon, D-Neb., added: "What we've got now is a test of wills."

Dole had claimed victory earlier this week when he pushed through a package of changes to the heart of the bill, its commodity subsidy sections. His plan was loaded with goodies for individual senators and commodity interests alike.

FCS could be saved

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Reagan administration says it possibly could go along with a federal rescue of the faltering Farm Credit System if Congress agreed to reform the massive farm lending operation.

"The system does not now need the government's financial support in any fashion," Charles Sethness, an assistant treasury secretary, told the House Agriculture subcommittee on credit Thursday.

He and an Agriculture Department credit official reaffirmed the administration's opposition to an immediate bailout of the FCS, but endorsed provisions of a House bill to reorganize the lending system.

FCS reforms must be carried out before any federal assistance can be considered, they maintained.

Donald Wilkinson, the governor of the Farm Credit Administration, which oversees the $70 billion farmer-owned lending system, supported the legislation even though financial aid provisions do not guarantee the $6 billion that FCS officials have warned is necessary to keep the system afloat over the next three years.

Dancing 'Cancerettes' kick off smokeout rally

Associated Press

Smokers in California watched the dancing Cancerettes, in New York's Harlem they attended a "cold turkey" rally, and even the villainous J.R. Ewing of "Dallas" helped a smoker try to kick the habit Thursday during the ninth annual Great American Smokeout.

The goal of the American Cancer Society, which sponsored the nationwide anti-smoking day, was to get one in five of the nation's 55 million smokers to quit for at least 24 hours.

Last year, a record 20.4 million smokers tried to quit and 5.4 million succeeded for the day, according to estimates drawn from a Gallup poll. About 3 million were still off cigarettes five days later.

One smoker got special help on Thursday. Gretchen Orthen, a nurse at St. John's Hospital and Health Center in Santa Monica, Calif., was "adopted" for the day by actor Larry Hagman, who plays J.R. Ewing on Dallas. Hagman escorted Ms. Orthen around the "Dallas" set and to a rally and other activities in an effort to keep her mind off cigarettes.

Another "adoptee" was University of Texas football coach Fred Akers, who was "adopted" by his next opponent in a Southwest Conference football game — Baylor coach Grant Teaff.

Under the Cancer Society's adoption program, non-smokers provide smoking "adoptees" with moral support to help them avoid smoking. Teaff sent Akers a supply of lollipops, a Baylor green-and-gold "growl towel" to chew on, and a shirt that says, "Kiss Me — I Don't Smoke."

Other efforts to convince smokers to toss away their cigarettes ranged from the bizarre to the educational.

In Glendale, Calif., a rally included entertainment by the dancing Cancerettes, who wore cigarette pack costumes and danced to the tune of "Smoke, Smoke, Smoke That Cigarette." The cigarette packs carried "brand" names: "Slayem," "FALSE," "FOOL," "Less," and "deMERIT."

In Washington state, a series of advertisements told smokers to "think carrot" instead of smoking cigarettes. In a send-up of vendors who distribute free cigarette samples on street corners, mock "carrot vendors" took to Seattle streets.

Navy analyst charged with selling secrets to Israelis

WASHINGTON (AP) — In a spy case that could damage U.S. relations with Israel, a civilian counterintelligence analyst for the Navy is charged with selling military secrets to the Israelis for large amounts of money, U.S. officials say.

FBI agents arrested Jonathan J. Pollard, 31, of Washington, at midday Thursday as, according to federal sources, he attempted to flee into the Israeli embassy in a bid to escape the pursuing federal agents.

One congressional source said it was believed the Israelis had denied him sanctuary there, but that could not be confirmed.

Gabi Raubitschek, secretary to the press counselor at the Israeli Embassy, said: "The only thing I can tell you right now is we're aware of the fact someone was detained this morning in front of the embassy." She declined further comment.

The arrest marked the third spy case involving Navy personnel in little more than a year and came on the same day that Defense Secretary Caspar W. Weinberger ordered Pentagon-wide security changes to crack down on espionage.

According to a federal court affidavit filed by FBI Agent Lydia S. Jechorek, Pollard admitted during questioning by FBI and Navy security agents between Monday and Thursday — prior to his arrest — that "he had delivered, on Nov. 15, 1985, to an agent of a foreign government documents and writings relating to the national defense."

At a hearing Thursday evening, Assistant U.S. Attorney Harry A. Benner told U.S. Magistrate Patrick J. Attridge that Pollard had "large amounts of money that he received for his offenses."

Although the government made no mention of Israel in court, three federal sources, all requesting anonymity because of the sensitivity of the case, said Pollard was believed to have been paid by the Israelis for the secrets.

One Senate aide said, "If this is true, it's bad for Israel, it's bad for the United States, and it's bad for the relationship between us."

A Reagan administration official noted, "As an ally, Israel is going to be very embarrassed over this."

Justice gets indictments for hijackers of TWA jet

WASHINGTON — The Justice Department has received grand jury indictments of the three men suspected of hijacking a TWA jetliner last summer and murdering a young Navy diver and will use international law to move quickly to capture and try them, a department spokesman says.

The indictments were disclosed Thursday by Attorney General Edwin Meese, who vowed that the United States will "continue to pursue this case in every way possible" and predicted that the hijackers eventually will be caught.

"We're going to keep at it until we do. They can't hide forever," he told a convention of airline security personnel in San Diego.

"If they do stay in countries that harbor terrorists, which they appear to be doing at the present time, they're going to have a very limited terrorist career in the future," the attorney general said. "It's not a dead letter even though the culprits are not presently in custody."

Militant Lebanese Shiites commandeered the U.S. airliner on June 14 after it took off from Athens, Greece, precipitating a nearly two-week crisis. During the hijack, Navy diver Robert D. Stethem, a passenger, was beaten and then shot to death, and his body dumped on the tarmac at the Beirut airport.

The United States does not have an extradition treaty with Lebanon. However, U.S. officials could seek to win custody of the three through the Hague and Montreal conventions, which deal with international hijacking, or through customary procedures of international law.

Butterfly surgeon hopes his research takes flight

ST. PAUL, Minn. (AP) — Gently, ever so gently, each of the L-shaped probes reached into the opening at the back of the butterfly's neck. With slight movement, they drew apart the shiny muscles like stage-hands drawing a curtain.

Beneath them, against the background of the unconscious animal's pulse, two white specks in the head were barely visible through a microscope. They were glands that produce a hormone, less than one millionth of an ounce at a time. But that's enough to transform a butterfly's life — and create years of work for William S. Herman.

After 15 years of researching the hormones of the monarch butterfly, Herman says collaborating in the discovery of evidence that the hormone from those glands regulates the monarch ovary was one of the peaks in his career. It ranks up there with his later demonstration of a diuretic hormone in monarchs.

This is the stuff of publications like the Journal of Insect Physiology, rather than the newspapers or television. But for Herman, 54, chairman of the genetics and cell biology department at the University of Minnesota, that's not the point.

"I'm not driven by the possiblity of major popular breakthroughs," he says. "I don't expect any Nobel Prizes out of it. I don't expect to cure cancer or get rid of mosquitoes.

"I WOULD LIKE to understand the monarch in great detail: what it does, and when it does, and why it does, and how. I find it intellectually satisfying to begin to learn some of the details for the life cycle of this animal."

Herman is pursuing basic science, which is driven by the urge to know, rather than applied science, which is aimed at producing a useful result. Basic science can appear to be useless. Sen. William Proxmire awarded his first Golden Fleece award for alleged waste of taxpayer money for an $84,000 study of why people fall in love.

But the web of scientific knowledge is so inter-connected that research can pay off in unexpected ways. For example, magnetic resonance imaging, a technique for producing detailed images of human anatomy without surgery or x-rays, came from basic research in physics. In the space program, research into a high-tech "sniffer" to detect life on Mars helped produce a device that warns of industrial gas leaks.

Herman's butterfly research may someday contribute to pest control.

IN ANY CASE, Herman clearly enjoys the role of monarch expert. He describes with relish the colorful flash of a flock of startled butterflies. He brakes abruptly on a residential street to point out a hedge where monarchs might gather. He gives live monarchs for Christmas presents.

"From any point of view," Herman said in his office as a monarch spread its wings over his fingers in brilliant, stained-glass splendor, "that's a magnificent beast."

He chose them for much more mundane reasons when he sought to study hormones in butterflies and moths. Monarchs were large and therefore easy to work with, readily available, well described in research literature and known to migrate — an urge generally controlled by hormones.

Early on, a graduate student working with Herman found that a female monarch emerges from its cocoon-like chrysalis without mature eggs, but is full of eggs five days later. When a pair of glands were removed from the head, the eggs didn't develop. If they were put back in, the eggs appeared. They also showed up if the glands were removed and "juvenile" hormone, which had been identified in other insects, was injected.

THAT SHOWED THE juvenile hormone played a major role in egg production of the female monarch, Herman says. "That one discovery opened up 10 to 15 years of work that isn't half done," including studies of the hormone's effects on mating behavior, the reproductive tracts of both sexes, and even migration, he says.

Surgery is occasionally needed in the monarch studies. The survival rate for removal of juvenile hormone glands from the head runs 50 to 90 percent, Herman says. With the dangers of damaging vessels that carry blood or air to the head, "there's not much room for error there," he says.

Observing the procedure through a microscope, Herman uses two long pairs of tweezers and the two L-shaped probes, which he manipulates by twisting knobs so their movements can be controlled precisely. Butterflies are anesthetized beforehand with carbon dioxide.

Other procedures in Herman's lab are more routine, such as dissection. Herman had to remove a portion of the reproductive tract from 300 male monarchs to accumulate a fifth of an ounce of one material he's interested in. At other times, organs are removed and weighed. Chemical analyses are done. Often monarchs are simply weighed and their wings measured before they are released.

Most scientific research is "fairly pedestrian, hard work, when you work years to find out a small amount, and that adds to the total picture," Herman says. Only about 5-10 percent of science is "unusual intellectual activity," he says.

"I THIKK THE funnest part is the initial discovery, the day you demonstrate the existence of a diuretic hormone. From then on, it is principally work," with follow-up studies.

"That can be enjoyable," Herman says. "But you don't get the elation out of it you do when you say, 'My God, I've got something.'"

Even hard work does not guarantee success. In 1976 Herman spent a week of long days in London removing 500 endocrine glands from locusts. He froze them and took them on a boat back to Denmark, hoping to be the first scientist to describe the chemical makeup of a particular type of hormone in insects. He and his co-workers had purified the hormone and begun deciphering its makeup when other scientists published the answer in a British scientific journal.

"It's like expecting to be first in the mile run and coming in second," Herman says. "You're happy the race is over, and have mixed feelings about coming in second place."

The outcome was cheerier in 1981, when he and a graduate student published their demonstration that a diuretic hormone, generated in a monarch's head, triggered the monarch's tremendous water loss within a few hours of emerging from the chrysalis. After a newly emerged monarch pumps water into its wings to expand them, it has to get rid of the excess fluid or it can't fly.

Herman's lab contains thousands of caged butterflies in the summer, making it a popular stop for the children of colleagues. Over the winter the scene is much different: hundreds of adult monarchs live in dormancy, their wings folded, in rows of translucent envelopes in a refrigerator. Kept this way, they can stay essentially in suspended animation for six to eight months with only a weekly feeding of honey in water, Herman said.

A monarch butterfly, the object of William S. Herman's research for the past 15 years, alights on a flower.

Arms-control rift

The leak that disclosed Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger's ostensibly private letter to President Reagan is one measure of the internal divisions that continue to plague the administration on arms-control policy. An even more telling — even regrettable — measure is that Weinberger felt it necessary to write the letter in the first place.

It's hardly a secret that the State Department bureaucracy and Secretary of State George Shultz favor a somewhat more accommodating stand on arms-control matters than does the Defense Department and Secretary Weinberger. That was apparent most recently in the embarrassingly public disagreement between State and Defense over how much research into "Star Wars" defenses is permitted by the 1972 Anti-Ballistic Missile Treaty.

Weinberger seemed to have won that round when Robert McFarlane, President Reagan's national security affairs adviser, formally opted for a less-restrictive interpretation of the treaty and said as much on national television.

But what obviously continued to worry Secretary Weinberger was that Shultz was going to Geneva with President Reagan for the summit while the Secretary of Defense was staying home at the White House's explicit instruction. To balance what he apparently regarded as a delegation overly weighted toward accommodation, Weinberger wrote the now-celebrated letter setting forth the dangers in conceding too much to the Soviets at Geneva.

Discovery of who leaked the Weinberger letter to The New York Times and The Washington Post could expose the leaker's intent as well. A Pentagon leak could have been an effort to stiffen the president's resolve, and narrow his options in the Geneva meeting earlier this week, by making Weinberger's warning public. A leak from the State Department, conversely, might signal an attempt to discredit Weinberger so seriously as to cause his departure from office. Either way, this is hardball politics by any definition.

And either way, this latest manifestation of the administration's disarray on arms-control plays directly into Soviet hands. At the very least, the evident discord within the administration on the very eve of the summit stood as a major embarrassment.

The irony in all of this is that the controversy over the letter and how it was made public is obscuring the specifics of Weinberger's advice to the president. The Weinberger letter made three points: That the unratified 1979 SALT II Treaty should not be extended indefinitely; that the 1972 ABM treaty should be interpreted to allow ample research on strategic defense, and that the Soviets should not be permitted to gloss over their history of cheating on arms-control agreements.

It certainly can be argued that Weinberger showed too little confidence in his own president's strength of purpose by repeating in a last-minute letter what he must have stressed in private counsel during recent months. And, to be sure, the administration's continuing disarray on the eve of the summit was undoubtedly damaging and dismaying, even though Weinberger's advice was sound.

Cults use mind control

As one who attended the Cult Awareness Network meeting in Dallas, I was deeply disturbed to read the article you published, "Fighting cults no easy battle." We are not fighting the cults, we are fighting ignorance that prevails on this subject.

The definition in the article as stated by a Baptist spokesman is absolutely ludicrous. What can we say or do to convince the general public and clergy this is not a religious issue? We are dealing with mind control. I think you owe it to your readers to publish the description of a destructive cult as believed by the Cult Awareness Network:

— A destructive cult uses manipulative techniques of mind control to obtain followers.

— These techniques are imposed without the person's foreknowledge.

— A destructive cult has no real concern for the welfare, freedom or individuality of its members.

After almost five years of dealing with a daughter in a destructive cult, living through lots of confusion before learning about mind control, I believe I can speak with some expertise on this subject.

Our daughter was a member of a Bible cult, The Way International. What she was believing in this group had nothing to do with us getting her out. We would have taken the same action if she had been in a political, therapy or pseudo-therapy cult. After exhausting every method we knew, we did have her deprogrammed. Six years later she is still thanking us for this act of love that restored her free will.

It is worth noting a few people who attended and spoke at the meeting in Dallas — the Rev. William Kent Burtner, O.P., Rector, Holy Family Cathedral, Anchorage; Dr. William M. Finnin Jr., chaplain to the university, Southern Methodist University, Dallas; the Rev. Amanda Grimmer, M. Dir., Pastor, St. Andrew Lutheran Church, Hurst; Rabbi Ralph D. Mecklenburger, B.H.L., M.A.H.L., Beth-El Congregation, Fort Worth; Patricia Ryan, her father was Leo Ryan and her sister is in the Oregon cult of Rashneesh. Also attending was Father James LeBar of the Office of Communications, Archdiocese of New York. Father LeBar returned earlier this fall from Rome where he had specifically discussed destructive cult concerns with the Vatican. While he was in Dallas, he met with Cardinal Arinze from the Vatican, to further discuss these issues.

Does this sound like a "coalition of bigots opposed to religious freedom"?

Thanking the pastors

As chaplain for the hospital, I have been visiting congregations in our community of all different denominations. One of the things I discovered in my travels was one church having a pastor appreciation month.

In 14 years of ministry, I have never heard of anything like it and was really impressed. During the month this congregation brought visitors to church, gave money, sent him and his wife individual letters of appreciation — in short, let him know how much he was appreciated. I tell this because I hope more churches in the community will take time to consider doing this for their pastors and priests.

It's so easy to take your pastor for granted.

Economy at spending crossroads

WASHINGTON — The big question mark that hangs over America is whether taxes should be increased or spending cut to stabilize the federal government's shaky finances.

Jack Anderson

If the spending spiral isn't stopped, most economists agree, the American people can anticipate higher inflation, higher interest rates and higher unemployment.

The amounts may be astronomical, but the problem is simple: Next year, the federal apparatus will spend nearly $1 trillion but will collect less than $800 billion in taxes. The $200 billion difference will be added to the staggering national debt, which members of Congress would rather leave for their successors to worry about.

The bottom line is obvious: The federal government is spending too much or taxing too little. Either the government should make some drastic spending cuts or raise more taxes.

Those who benefit from government spending, not surprisingly, want to raise more revenue. This has always been the response of the special interests, which don't want to lose their privileges, and the federal administrators, who don't want to reduce their budgets. They never offer to cut their extravagances.

Whenever the public shows signs of alarm over spending excesses, the special pleaders call for more taxes. They usually get their tax increase, which relieves the financial pressure. But the federal administrators never use the new taxes to reduce the national debt; they merely find new ways to spend the money.

The government has always spent all the taxes it has collected, plus as much extra as it could get away with. The result has been skyrocketing taxes, which somehow never catch up with the deficit. During our 38 years on the Washington Merry-Go-Round, the median family's income has grown nearly eight times. But the taxes this average family pays on its income has shot up more than 246 times.

The constant quest for more taxes has had a deadening effect on the economy. Multiplying taxes tend to stifle whatever is taxed. Government subsidies, in contrast, tend to increase whatever is subsidized. So the government taxes work, savings and production; it subsidizes non-work, welfare and consumption.

What America needs, in our opinion, is not more taxation but less spending. Waste-buster J. Peter Grace has found 2,478 ways to increase federal revenues without increasing taxes. He would merely cut waste, inefficiency and misspending.

You can find out whether your representative supports the campaign against government waste by asking him whether he has signed up with the Grace Caucus.

DIPLOMATIC DIGEST: Can Syria succeed in Lebanon where Israel and the United States failed so tragically? The Syrians are certainly trying to exercise the influence over fragmented Lebanon that eluded the Israelis and the Americans. Our intelligence sources have been clocking the movements of the leaders of the myriad Lebanese factions to and from Damascus, where they plead their case in hopes of obtaining Syrian support. But it's a tricky business for the Syrians. Though a "Syrian connection" is regarded as a plus in the Byzantine world of Lebanese politics, dependence on aid from Damascus is also resented. The Syrians are trying to make sure that no single Lebanese faction gets too strong.

CHARLEY REESE

One SDI criticism has merit

I've heard only one valid criticism of the Strategic Defense Initiative, but it is an important one that proponents should address. That criticism is that Star Wars is essentially a first strike weapon.

Charley Reese

This is verified by common sense. Whatever the effectiveness of the system, the effectiveness would be multiplied many times if it were used following a first strike.

Say we could develop a system that could knock out 50 percent of incoming missiles. Well, 50 percent of what the Soviets would have left after a surprise first strike on our part would be a heck of a lot more effective than 50 percent of what they would shoot on a first strike.

The nuclear arms race is more like chess than a horse race. In chess, you never actually capture the opponent's king. You win when you checkmate your opponent, which means you are in a position to capture the king on the next move and there's no way your opponent can escape. Thus in chess, the game ends one move short of the last.

In the nuclear age, nobody wants to capture the king by actually firing the missiles. The consequences of doing that are too grim and unpredictable. The U.S. strategy has been, up until now, to play for a draw with neither side able to checkmate the other. The Soviets, in my judgment, have been pursuing a checkmate strategy — a combination of strategic offensive and defensive capability that would allow them to say to an American president: "Okay, the game's over. You can't win but we could."

The key element in such a strategy is to find a way to reduce their losses from a retaliatory strike to within acceptable limits. Now, I know nuclear hysterics in this country believe no loss is acceptable, except the loss of freedom, but unfortunately the men who control the Soviet Union are not nuclear hysterics or even humanitarians.

Twenty million lives was an acceptable loss in the war with Germany. What would the Soviets consider an acceptable loss to purchase the final defeat of the United States? We don't know. We do know so far they haven't achieved the capability of holding their losses to those limits, whatever they are.

With these facts in mind, you can see how the Strategic Defense Initiative is destabilizing. It would make their checkmate impossible while giving us the capability of checkmating them. The Soviets know darn well it is feasible. We know that because they have been pursuing a similar system for years and because if they didn't think it was feasible, they wouldn't be trying to stop us from developing it.

What worries me a bit is that we have always been better at building weapons than in devising strategy. I have no doubt at all that we have the technical capability of developing a reasonably effective anti-missile defense system. I wonder, however, if the President has thought through the strategic consequences.

If not, there could be trouble. Given Soviet paranoia and the natural tendency to believe that what they would do, we will do, I don't see them allowing us to deploy the system. They would see that as an end-game move.

You never want to back a rat into a corner, especially a rat with nuclear teeth. Nuclear war will come only if one side or the other sees no alternative and the task of strategic thinkers is to make sure that situation does not arrive.

We should pursue the research and tests but while the engineers and technicians are at work, somebody had better spend some time thinking through the strategic consequences of this system. Time is on our side. The last thing we want to do is push the Soviets over the brink. Their only trump card is their military strength. If we can keep them from using it, we'll win in the long run.

Dallas police open storefront office for Asian population

By WALTER PUTNAM

DALLAS (AP) — When he was growing up, Pov Thai never dreamed of being a policeman.

"In Cambodia, if you see a policeman or a soldier, you stay away," said Thai, 23.

He saw people clubbed to death and when he was 15 his uncle was killed by the Khmer Rouge for complaining about forced field labor on a cold, rainy day. Such experiences bred distrust for authorities.

But now, Thai is one of the city's first public service officers in a program to establish links between police and a swelling population of Southeast Asian refugees who are threatened by crimes ranging from petty theft and assault to extortion rackets run by other Asians.

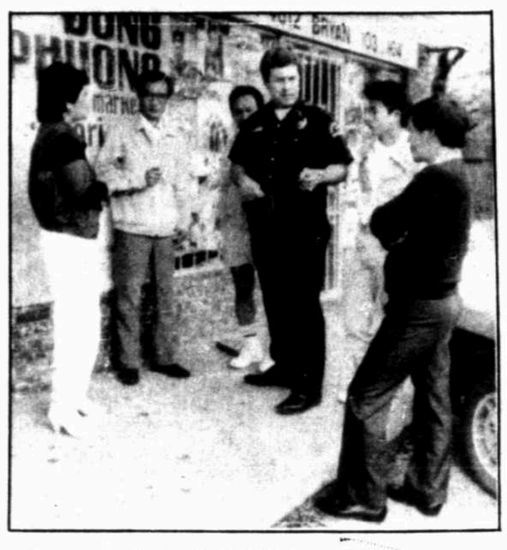

Public Service Community Outreach is symbolized by a storefront police station to open Nov. 21 in an east Dallas neighborhood teeming with immigrants from a variety of countries.

Cpl. Ronald Cowart, the Dallas Police Department's liaison with the refugee community, said many refugees have a natural skepticism of authority and misunderstand the role police play here.

"They think you kick doors in, you beat everybody with rubber hoses and if they don't talk you kill them," said Cowart, a Vietnam veteran who is also involved with community groups to help the Asian community.

The police storefront is a green-trimmed, yellow-brick building in a block surrounded by ancient mom and pop stores that gradually are being replaced by fashionable restaurants and boutiques several blocks from the skyscrapers of downtown.

"The opening of that storefront is the best thing that has happened in the Indochinese community in 10 years," said Dr. Phap Dam, a leader in Dallas' Vietnamese community.

"A year ago this was pimp city," Cowart said, noting that prostitution, gambling and drug rackets were commonplace.

The new police station, an addition to two others in other low-income minority neighborhoods, will be staffed by Thai, a Vietnamese and a Laotian. They will be uniformed, but will be unarmed and without arrest powers. However, they speak the language of the people and will provide a police presence in the community, Cowart said.

Finding the right people to be public service officers was a task, Cowart said. Applicants underwent the same scrutiny as other police personnel.

"You're dealing with people who might have had to steal food to survive or to bribe an official to get out of the country," Cowart said. Police officials said "we can't hire somebody who paid a bribe. They might start taking bribes themselves."

One applicant once was tortured by his North Vietnamese captors, who attached electrodes and shocked him every time he gave an answer they did not like. When confronted with a lie detector, "he panicked and forgot his English." The examiners were bewildered, Cowart said.

Because of lack of English and naivete about American culture, the Southeast Asian immigrants are often crime victims. Distrust of authority and the language barrier prevent them from reporting crimes.

On a recent afternoon, Cowart and Thai combed a seedy tenement, talking with residents about their problems. One woman said she had seen a truck hook up her car to tow it off, and when she yelled a man shot at her. She did not report it because she had no telephone and no English to tell her story.

The storefront presence will give victims a place to go, Cowart said.

Small South Plains town weathers floods, droughts, farming slump

By JACK HARTSFIELD

PETERSBURG, Texas (AP) — This small town nestled in the breadbasket of the South Plains has weathered floods, droughts, nasty storms and now the farming slump, but nobody plans to be the last one in town to turn off the lights.

There's no sign directing travelers to Petersburg off heavily traveled I-27 between Lubbock and Amarillo, population 1,641, or thereabouts, but it makes no never mind to a lot of the townsfolk.

"Been here since February, '22," one old-timer drawled as he watched four of his friends absorbed in a game of dominoes next door to the town's only bank. " ...When I get a little older I'll make up my mind if I like it here."

He didn't crack a smile.

"Aw, we talk a better game than we play," injected a ruddy-faced farmer, his face etched with years of hard, honest work in the fields, as he plotted strategy over the domino table.

"Keeps our minds off that soggy cotton..."

"Besides we've all got AIDS," chimed in a tall Texan, probably in his 60s with the all too familiar bill cap pulled down over his brow. His comment left the stranger aghast momentarily.

"AIDS. Yep. Agricultural Income Deficiency Syndrome..."

Petersburg, incorporated in 1928 a year before the Wall Street stock market crash, has had better days.

But, if roaming around town as a stranger is any indication, it never had better people.

Just walk into the Porter Health Mart along Main Street, saddle up at the soda fountain and Gayle Trowbridge just kind of automatically wants to know who you are, where you're from and why you're in town all friendly like.

She knows everybody else in town, so it's no feat to spot a stranger.

"It'll get busy in a few minutes when the kids are out of school," she said, chattering about her children, who are all grown now, and her farmer husband. The independent school district has 480 students.

Farmers and residents of Petersburg, Jerry Bartlett, Bryan Fullingan and Burt Scarborough, find a game of dominoes a diversion for a slow afternoon.

AP Laserphoto

She took the job at the drug store for a little extra income. The economic times haven't been any easier on the Trowbridges than anyone else in Petersburg.

On both sides of Main Street, it's evident the farming slump has taken its toll. Some businesses have closed. Others are holding on and waiting for improvement.

Nobody, though, seems to be infected with getting rich. Getting by, breaking even or saving a few dollars seems more the rule.

There's still a pioneering spirit about Petersburg with its two-man police department, volunteer fire department, grocery store, two barber shops, beauty salon, 11 area churches and a smattering of other businesses, all with a laid-back attitude.

They had a town doctor a while back, but not any more.

The pride of small town life including those who grew up around Petersburg and moved on never seems to quite get out of the blood.

Main Street was lined on both sides last August for the annual Petersburg Day parade, followed by games, bike racing, tractor backing, stilt racing and a dunkin' booth. Townsfolk figure there were, say, three or four times more people on the streets that day than the whole population.

"Yessir. It's a good life," said Jesse James Nave, the town's city manager. "Look here. See these counter checks? Anyone in town can go over to bank and use 'em without being asked a question.

"You see, everybody knows everybody else. There's no problem. You couldn't walk into a Lubbock bank and cash a counter check if the bank president himself was standing over your shoulder.

"No hustle. No bustle. Peace and tranquility," Nave said.

Shopping for dinner can be tale of two cities

KINGSTON, Mass. (AP) — Shopping for dinner is a tale of two cities at a Stop & Shop supermarket here, because the hot dogs are in Plymouth and the beer is in Kingston.

A town boundary line runs across the supermarket's floor, placing two aisles in Kingston and the rest, including the cash registers, in Plymouth.

The store's liquor license is from Kingston, so alcoholic beverages must be paid for at a separate cash register on its side of the line.

Taxing the shopping center has been difficult, said store manager Larry Astuto, because at times the two towns have differed widely on its assessed value. One year they were so far apart they had to compromise.

Police have worked out their own system, Astuto said.

When an abandoned car is found in the parking lot, police first ask which side it is on before responding to the call, Astuto said.

Kingston police said they handle reports of thefts at the store's office, but they turn over crime cases involving the cash registers to Plymouth police.

Astuto said he doesn't usually think about the store's divided personality. But, he said, some young customers get a kick out of it.

"Kids will jump on either side of the line, saying, 'Now I'm in Plymouth, now I'm in Kingston!' " he said.

Brisk, sunny day forecast

From Staff and Wire Reports

Saturday may be the ideal day for a game of backyard football as sunny skies and brisk temperatures are forecast for the Permian Basin area, according to the National Weather Service at Midland Regional Airport.

Fair skies and a low in the lower 40s tonight will become sunny with a high near 70 Saturday, forecasters said. Winds will be from the south at five to 10 mph through Saturday morning, shifting to the northeast at 10 to 20 mph by late afternoon.

Thursday's high of 64 was 17 degrees below the record set in 1970. This morning's low was eight degrees above the 1957 record of 24.

STATE

Cooler temperatures are expected to spread westward across Texas with the cooler weather expected to reach Northeast Texas by Saturday night.

Forecasts call for the cooler temperatures to start moving across the state early Saturday. It will be partly cloudy to cloudy statewide tonight and Saturday. There is a chance of some scattered showers over North Texas Saturday and for some light drizzle in South Texas.

Lows tonight will be mostly in the 40s and 50s, ranging from the 30s in the Panhandle to the lower 70s in South Texas. Highs Saturday will be mostly in the 50s and 60s, ranging from the mid 40s in the Panhandle to the 70s and 80s in southern sections of the state and in the Big Bend area of Southwest Texas.

Fog was reported early today over western sections of North Texas and along the western Red River Valley. Dense fog was reported at Stepehenville, southwest of Fort Worth, where visibility was cut to about one-fourth of a mile just before dawn.

Elsewhere low clouds covered eastern, central and southern portions of the state early today. Skies were clear over the rest of the state.

NATION

A low pressure system hovering over the Pacific Northwest buried Washington and Oregon in up to 13 inches of snow today as tropical storm Kate barreled into Georgia and sent flood warnings through the mid-Atlantic States.

At least two people were killed in Oregon in weather-related traffic accidents, officials said, and Seattle-Tacoma International Airport was closed for more than nine hours Thursday when 7 inches of snow fell. It reopened shortly after midnight.

Port Angeles, Wash., had 13 inches of snow by early morning; 10 inches' snowfall was expected in the Cascades and Columbia Gorge of Oregon.

Andress starts playoff watch in Midland

District 4-5A heads for playoff weekend

By TERRY WILLIAMSON
Assistant Sports Editor

El Paso Andress' high scoring Eagles were expected to soar into Midland today in time for a 3 p.m. workout at Memorial Stadium as the final countdown begins for Saturday's 2 p.m. Area playoff battle with Midland Lee.

Both teams are poised to throw 9-2 records at each other as Memorial Stadium hosts its first Class 5A playoff game in the afternoon. The Eagles are hoping to get a feel for the stadium's turf this afternoon.

"We really wanted to fly to Midland, but we just couldn't workout the arrangements on a time basis," noted Andress coach Allan Sepkowitz. "But everything is going to work out fine for us. We'll come in a day early and get on the field before you have 10,000 Midland fans screaming at us.

"We're still looking forward to the trip to Midland. It will be our first trip there and the kids are excited about it. Since we're busing in, that gives us a chance to bring a few more youngsters than we could by flying. Spending the night gives us a chance to negate some of the problems connected with travelling that long of a distance."

TICKET SALES for Saturday's date with destiny have been "brisk" this week, according to Gil Bartosh, Midland athletic director, but the game is not a sellout as of yet.

"We've had a good response this week," noted Bartosh Thursday. "I would say that we have sold around 80 percent of the stadium. It looks like we will have tickets to sell at the gate.

"On Thursday, we still had around 1,400 adult tickets left and we expect some more back from Andress in time to sell at the gate. I would say that we can handle just about everyone who wants to see the game. I think it's important that we let the public know that we still have tickets left. I've gotten a lot of calls from people who expected the game to be sold out by now and haven't even tried to get tickets."

Bartosh noted that when Lee hosted El Paso Irvin in 1983 in an Area game at Memorial Stadium a lot of tickets were sold at the gate.

"We sold a lot of tickets to walk-ins for the Irvin game and I expect that to be the case Saturday. A lot of the people in the Permian Basin will come if they know they can get tickets on game day," said Bartosh.

No student tickets will be sold at the gate. All tickets Saturday will be $5.

The winner of the Lee-Andress matchup will face the winner of the Irving MacArthur-Wichita Falls winner in the Region playoff. MacArthur travels to Wichita Falls Saturday for a 2:30 p.m. Area outing.

Although Lee is not counting any Area chickens before they hatch, the Rebels have learned from three straight playoff trips that prior planning is a necessity. Works are already underway for the possibility of next weekend. The same is true for Andress.

SHOULD LEE and MacArthur win Saturday, those teams are looking at a home-and-home Thanksgiving weekend in either Texas Stadium in Irving or Ratliff Stadium in Odessa. Tlfat matchup would be played either Friday night or Saturday afternoon, depending on stadium availabilities.

Lee is also working with Wichita Falls, but problems have cropped up in those negotiations. Bartosh reports that Wichita Falls wants to play a neutral site contest in Abilene at Shotwell Stadium while Lee wants to play in Lubbock's Jones Stadium. The other alternative is a home-and-home flip with Lee choosing Ratliff Stadium in Odessa as its home site. Wichita Falls has a nice stadium with artificial surface.

"I really think the deal is that Wichita Falls wants to keep Lee off the artificial surface, but neither Jack (Tayrien) or I want the game in Abilene because Shotwell's field is really chewed up by this time of year. They play junior high, high school and college games on that field and it just doesn't hold up from that kind of traffic," said Bartosh.

Duke, UAB halt Lamar, Aggies

David Henderson scored 18 points and Johnny Dawkins had 14 to lead the sixth-ranked Duke Blue Devils to a 66-62 victory over Lamar as the college basketball season opened Thursday night with the inaugural preseason Big Apple National Invitation Tournament.

Duke, one of six nationally ranked teams in the 16-team NIT field, will play Alabama-Birmingham in Sunday's second round of the tournament.

In the first game of the doubleheader, Jerome Mincy scored eight of his 16 points in the final five minutes to help UAB outrun Texas A&M 71-68. Steve Mitchell also had 24 points for the Blazers.

The remainder of the NIT field begins play Friday night. The pairings and sites: St. John's vs. No. 19 Navy and No. 10 Auburn vs. West Virginia at Hartford, Conn., Tulsa vs. Dayton and No. 9 Louisville vs. Miami of Ohio at Cincinnati, and Washington vs. Texas-El Paso and No. 5 Kansas vs. Pepperdine at Denver.

ALL FIRST-ROUND winners play again Sunday night, with the four survivors advancing to the semifinals at Madison Square Garden on Nov. 29. The final is Dec. 1 at the Garden.

Three other tournaments were scheduled for this weekend with third-ranked Michigan, the defending Big Ten champion, playing Virginia Tech in Friday night's opening round of the Chaminade Tournament at Honolulu. Chaminade, an NAIA power which has upset Virginia with Ralph Sampson and Louisville in past years, faces Kansas State.

Dawkins hit two free throws with 17 seconds to play, and Henderson had two more with five seconds to go before Duke finally put away the Cardinals. The Blue Devils never led by more than five points in the first half and took their biggest lead in the closing minutes, 60-49.

Mark Alarie also scored 12 points for Duke and Karl McCauley and Anthony Todd each scored 14 points to lead Lamar.

Only 1,250 fans attended the opening games of the NIT, the oldest tournament in college basketball but, until this year, a postseason fixture. The postseason NIT also will be held this year.

In the first NIT game, Mincy help the Blazers make their run despite playing with four fouls. Texas A&M trailed 39-23 at the half but pulled within 50-43 with 10:51 to play. A basket by Winston Crite cut the UAB lead to 56-52 with 6:48 to go, and they pulled into a 56-56 tie with 5:02 to play before Mincy hit a basket that put the Blazers ahead for good.

A&M guard Don Marbury, held scoreless in the first half, finished with 24 points and fueled the Aggies surge.

"I felt like in the first half I took myself out of the game," Marbury said. "In the second half, we were just playing our hearts out. We came back and played hard but we couldn't get the breaks."

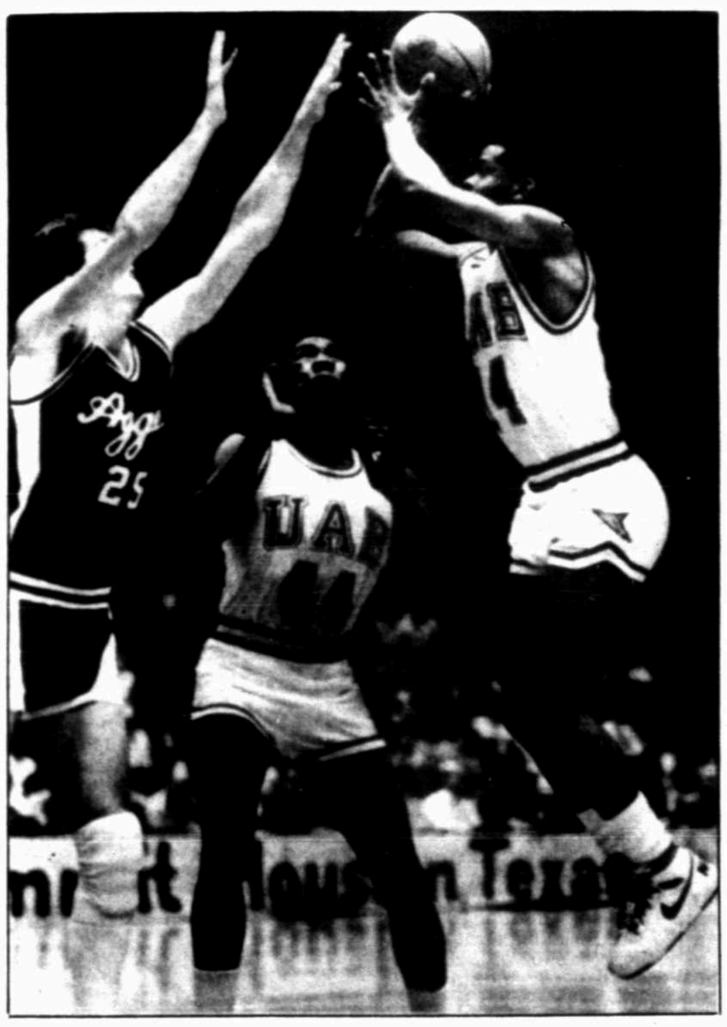

MICHIGAN HOPES to go into the Chaminade tournament with a healthy Roy Tarpley, 6-foot-11 senior center who now weighs 230 pounds, 15 more than last season. He is expected to be ready after injuring his right knee in early drills.

Says Michigan Coach Bill Frieder: "One thing I've learned already: We're not a very good basketball team without Roy Tarpley. We weren't very good the days we didn't have him in practice. We're not even in the Top 20 without Roy Tarpley, let alone No. 3."

The Lobo Tipoff Classic in Albuquerque, N.M., also begins Friday night with New Mexico facing Bucknell and Long Beach State meeting San Diego.

The Hawaii Pacific Tournament in Honolulu starts Sunday with Iowa playing Arkansas-Little Rock and Fullerton State against Hawaii Pacific.

Top-ranked Georgia Tech doesn't debut until Monday night when it faces South Carolina-Aiken.

Advertising fills Upper Iowa team

By HAL BOCK
AP Sports Writer

The idea, Coach Steve Fickert said, came during a brainstorming session at which the athletic department at Upper Iowa University was deciding just where it might find enough bodies to field a football team this fall.

Fickert had been hired in March, just after the time most high school prospects thinking about Division III programs have made up their minds about colleges. So recruiting would not help. He was inheriting a program that had eight returning players from a 1-9 team. So the answer was not lettermen.

"Starting that late, I was faced with a numbers problem," Fickert said.

To solve it, Upper Iowa University advertised.

"Wanted: College Football Players," the ad in the Chicago Sun-Times began. "Make your dreams come true. Play football for a university that is dedicated to excellence in education and has made a strong commitment to its athletic program."

The ad offered first class uniforms, "equal in quality to those worn by the Dallas Cowboys and similiar in design and color to the University of North Carolina Tarheels."

And it offered expert coaching. Fickert's credentials include stops at the University of Texas, where he spent last year as an assistant, Western New Mexico, Wayne State, Maryville, Tenn., Albion, Wabash and Western Michigan. "I keep U-Haul in business," he cracked.

Why move from the high-powered Longhorn program, which lives in prestigious Division IA, to the more understated athletic life of Division III?

"The challenge," Fickert said. "The opportunity to take a program that's been down for awhile."

Understandably, blue-chip players have found it tough to locate Fayette, Iowa, home of Upper Iowa and its 700-student population. There are no scholarships at the Division III level and media exposure in the Iowa Intercollegiate Conference is, well, limited. So Fickert decided to shake some trees and see what would fall out. The responses, he said, came in all shapes and sizes.

"It's been done before," he said. "I know Columbia does it in their student newspaper. Lots of times, schools will advertise for punters. We didn't limit it, though. We got about 300 inquiries. About 75 came and visited. Sixty applied, 50 enrolled and 25 stayed with the team the full season. We got four or five starters out of it."

The season was about what you'd expect when the coach arrives in March and has to advertise for players.

Upper Iowa opened with a 47-21 loss to Mid-America Nazarene and closed last Saturday with a 62-8 defeat against St. Ambrose. In between, the Peacocks surrendered 45 points each to Buena Vista and the University of Dubuque, and 48 to William Penn — all losses, of course. They also lost to Tarkio, Wartburg, Luther and Central.

"We were 1-9," Fickert dutifully reported. "We beat Simpson 22-20."

Now he looks forward to next year. "With no scholarships, Division III recruiting can be tough sometimes," Fickert said. "Our goal is to be one of the five or so choices kids are thinking about when they make up their minds in January, February or March. Last year, we didn't have that opportunity."

Was the advertising campaign worthwhile, then?

"Well," the coach said, "room, board, tuition and fees is $7,700 a year here. The ad cost $1,500."

Clovis: Reprieve or execution stay

Associated Press

Eric Roanhaus still has an appointment with New Mexico football playoff history.

Roanhaus and his Clovis Wildcats, who a week ago had to have everything go their way to make the Class AAAA playoffs, found out fate sometimes is best left in someone else's hands.

Top-ranked Alamogordo provided Clovis with a ride into the playoffs by beating Roswell last week, a result that gave the Wildcats second place in District 4AAAA.

"Alamogordo gave us a reprieve, and hopefully it wasn't just a stay of execution," said Roanhaus.

Aside from the fact Clovis has become a fixture in the playoffs — 13 trips in 13 years — the Wildcats are toying with a chance to become the first high school team in New Mexico history to win five straight football titles.

It is, said Roanhaus in his most convincing tone, an element best left to the imagination of sports writers and those who don't have to block and tackle on Friday nights.

"It's something we don't talk about and I don't think the players are feeling any pressure because of it," he said. "If we lose Friday, it just means we've won four out of the last five years. It's that simple."

The road to Clovis' already bulging trophy case begins in Santa Fe, a haven for tourists, but a house of horrors for a timid football team.

The Santa Fe Demons, champions of District 1AAAA, own an 8-1 record, one of the toughest defenses in the state and undoubtedly a good enough memory to remember they lost 21-7 last year in the semifinals to Roanhaus and Co.

In other quarterfinal round games this week, No. 1 ranked and undefeated Alamogordo, 10-0, is home against No. 5 Del Norte, 7-3 on Friday night; No. 6 Highland, 6-4, meets No. 8 Eldorado, 6-4, and No. 7 Cibola, 7-3, battles No. 10 Valley, 5-5, in Saturday games.

Santa Fe, which has had two weeks to prepare for Clovis, gave up an average of just over five points per game at home this season and beat two of the other teams in the playoffs, Highland, 34-7, and Del Norte, 24-11, during the regular season.

"It is a different type of arena," said Roanhaus of playing in Santa Fe. "With the weather and the crowd and their defense, a team going in there for the first time might be intimidated. I don't think we will be."

Clovis beat the Demons in Santa Fe a year ago in a game that Wildcats halfback Darren Kelley decided with a 91-yard touchdown run in the third quarter and a 58-yard halfback option TD pass in the fourth quarter.

"I'm sure they haven't forgotten that," said Roanhaus.

It is more than coincidental that Clovis, 8-3, lost two of its last three games this season after Kelley was sidelined with a sprained ankle midway through a 15-14 loss to Carlsbad. Despite sitting out the last 2½ games, Kelley led the state in rushing with 1,638 yards. He returned to practice for the first time this week.

"There are some kids that are such attributes to a team that you just can't win without them," said Roanhaus. "Darren is that type of a football player."

Santa Fe finished ranked No. 2 in the state behind Alamogordo with a defensive unit that thrives on deception and toughness.

"The teams that win the big games are the ones that play defense, and they have an awfully good one," said Roanhaus. "They give you so many different looks and don't let penalties get in the way of their aggressiveness."

Baylor bucks SWC history

SWC Roundup

Associated Press

The Baylor Bears will be bucking history on Saturday when they try to barge into the Cotton Bowl with a victory over the Texas Longhorns.

The 15th ranked Bears haven't beaten Texas in Austin since 1951 but they'll have to if they want to make their third Cotton Bowl visit.

The Bears have a high-scoring offense and are ninth in the country in scoring defense.

"This game is what we've worked for since the end of last season," said Baylor Coach Grant Teaff. "We made a commitment then. It went through the spring and summer and into two-a-days. I'm very pleased and excited to be in this position.

"We've worked hard to become a good team and we have. How good we really are we'll find out Saturday."

Baylor was a two-point pick by the oddsmakers over Texas for the 12:04 p.m. regionally (Raycom) televised game. In other SWC clashes, Texas Tech was a one-point underdog in Coach Jerry Moore's final game at the Astrodome in Houston against the Cougars; Arkansas was a one-point favorite over Southern Methodist in Fayetteville; and Texas A&M was a 21-point pick over Texas Christian in Fort Worth. Rice is idle this week.

The Razorbacks are expected to be Holiday Bowl bound while the Bluebonnet Bowl is interested in either Texas A&M or Baylor

Texas Coach Fred Akers said the Bears are a very talented team.

"The Bears have as much talent as anybody," said Akers. "They have tremendous speed and quickness, and their quarterbacks are experienced, skilled operators. It will be a real challenge."

Akers said he is proud of his team which has only one SWC loss just like the Bears.

"Our team has come a very long way from the time it was picked in the bottom division of the conference race," said Akers. "They deserve a lot of credit for what they've accomplished. Not many people believed we would be to this point with our destiny in our hands — a shot at the title and at the Cotton Bowl."

Houston won last Astrodome meeting, 43-41, against Tech in '83 as teams had SWC record 1,025 yards from scrimmage.

Nuggets end Laker streak

NBA Roundup

Associated Press

It wasn't in Doug Moe's playbook, but he was willing to take credit for it.

Wayne Cooper, with only one other field goal to his credit during the game, hit a 20-foot jump shot with four seconds left to give the Denver Nuggets a 121-120 victory over the Los Angeles Lakers Thursday night.

The loss ended a seven-game winning streak for the defending National Basketball Association champion Lakers (11-2). The Nuggets hadn't beaten the Lakers in Denver in 10 games since Jan. 19, 1982.

"It was a perfectly designed play for Coop," Moe said, unable to hide the irony in his face. "He was 1-for-7 and the last guy to throw the shot."

Cooper admitted the play actually was to have gone to Mike Evans, but fearing a turnover, Cooper instead put the ball in the air. "... I knew as soon as I got it, I had to shoot," he said.

"We didn't gear up for Cooper's shot," Lakers Coach Pat Riley said. "He did what he had to do and he buried it."

The Lakers had a final chance to win the game, but Kareem Abdul-Jabbar missed a jumper from the corner, and Earvin "Magic" Johnson's rebound shot also missed.

Alex English led Denver with 30 points and Calvin Natt had 23, Mike Evans 22 and Bill Hanzlik 21.

Abdul-Jabbar had 10 of his game-high 32 points in the fourth quarter and reserve forward Maurice Lucas contributed 10 key points in the last quarter.

Blazers 112, Clippers 108

Portland handed the Clippers their eighth straight loss, getting 21 points from forward Kenny Carr, including a three-point play with 18 seconds to play. The Blazers, meanwhile, snapped a four-game losing streak.

The Clippers made a 12-2 run, including eight points by Marques Johnson, to tie the score 99-99 with 4:56 left, and they led 108-105 with 1:10 to go. But Kiki Vandeweghe hit for Portland with 51 seconds left, and Carr added his three-point play to make it 110-108.

Vandeweghe had 23 points, and Rory White led the Clippers with 18.

Bucks 131, Kings 97

Milwaukee won its sixth in a row, and Alton Lister scored 10 of his 19 points in the third quarter to help the Bucks build a 40-point margin going into the final period.

Randy Breuer added 19 points for Milwaukee, while Eddie Johnson had 28 points to lead the Kings, who trailed 34-26 after the first quarter and never really threatened.

The Bucks had seven steals, including four by Paul Pressey, in the third quarter, during which they exploded for 41 points.

Sooners take on Huskers

Top offense against best defense

College Football

NORMAN, Okla. (AP) — One of the nation's top collegiate offenses will face one of the country's stingiest defenses when Nebraska and Oklahoma collide in a game that could decide the Big Eight championship and a trip to the Orange Bowl.

The Cornhuskers, second-ranked in the nation with a 9-1 record, are 6-0 in the Big Eight. They bring into the game the nation's best rushing attack, averaging 395 yards a game, and are the No. 2 team in total offense.

The Sooners are ranked first in total defense and second nationally against the rush. Oklahoma, 7-1 and 5-0, has given up an average of 65 yards a game on the ground.

The matchup is being nationally televised on ABC-TV beginning at 2:30 p.m. CST.

Combatants in several other bowls also could be decided Saturday.

In a night game that will reflect on the national championship, Penn State protects its No. 1 ranking and a trip to the Orange Bowl against Pittsburgh. The rest of the Top Ten schedule has Minnesota at No. 3 Iowa, Colorado State at No. 4 Miami, Fla., No. 12 Ohio State at No. 6 Michigan, No. 7 Oklahoma State at Iowa State and No. 8 UCLA at Southern Cal. Colorado State and Miami will play at night.

In the Second Ten, the schedule is Utah at No. 11 Brigham Young, No. 13 Air Force at Hawaii, No. 15 Baylor at Texas, No. 16 Tennessee at Kentucky, No. 17 Louisiana State at Notre Dame, Southern Methodist at No. 18 Arkansas and No. 19 Texas A&M at Texas Christian. Air Force at Hawaii is a night game.

THE ANNUAL Nebraska-Oklahoma contest has decided the Big Eight champion 38 of the past 40 years. The Big Eight champ is the host team in the Orange Bowl. Penn State already has verbally committed to play the Big Eight winner in Miami on New Year's night.

If Nebraska wins or ties Saturday, the Huskers would go to the Orange Bowl. A loss reportedly would send the Huskers to the Fiesta Bowl.

A win by Oklahoma puts the Sooners in a showdown with Oklahoma State next week for the conference title. Nebraska beat Oklahoma State earlier in the season to give the Cowboys their only loss.

Indications are that if Oklahoma beats Nebraska but loses to Oklahoma State, the Sooners would go to the Gator Bowl with Oklahoma State going to the Orange Bowl.

Bowl bids officially can be extended Saturday.

A close game could easily be decided by the leg of Nebraska kicker Dale Klein. Klein, who hit seven field goals for an NCAA record against Missouri, set a school single-season record last week with his 13th three-pointer.

"If we do not get the ball in the end zone rushing or passing, we've got to get close enough for his leg," sophomore quarterback McCathorn Clayton said.

THE BIG Ten Conference could send as many as six teams to major bowls.

Iowa, 9-1, could clinch the Big Ten title and a trip to the Rose Bowl Jan. 1 with a victory over underdog Minnesota at Iowa City. But, if the Hawkeyes should lose, the winner of the Ohio State-Michigan game goes to Pasadena, Calif. In any case, both of those teams, plus a couple of others from the Big Ten, will be bowl bound.

Michigan also could go to one of two New Year's Day bowls, either the Fiesta Bowl or the Cotton Bowl, while Ohio State could go to either the Florida Citrus Bowl Dec. 28 at Orlando, Fla., or the Cotton Bowl.

If Illinois beats Northwestern on Saturday, the Illini are ticketed for the Peach Bowl on Dec. 31 against Army, which ends its season Saturday against Navy. Minnesota looks like it is headed for the Independence Bowl Dec. 21 at Shreveport, La., against the Clemson-South Carolina winner, while Michigan State could go to the All American Bowl Dec. 31 at Birmingham, Ala., against Georgia Tech.

The Southeastern Conference could send as many as five teams to bowl games, but the glamour bowl for the SEC is the Sugar Bowl on Jan. 1 at New Orleans. No. 9 Florida leads the SEC but is on NCAA probation, so it appears the conference title will go to 4-1-1 Louisiana State, 3-1 Tennessee or 3-1-1 Alabama. Tennessee, with games left against second-division teams Kentucky and Vanderbilt, appears to be the frontrunner.

LSU could also go to the Liberty Bowl Dec. 27 at Memphis, while Alabama has been mentioned for the Aloha Bowl Dec. 28 in Honolulu. Georgia could go to the Sun Bowl Dec. 28 at El Paso, Texas, while Auburn has been mentioned for both the Cotton Bowl and Florida Citrus.

The Southwest Conference winner will go to the Cotton Bowl to face one of the several potential opponents. Baylor, 6-1, could wrap up the SWC by beating Texas. Baylor also could go to the Bluebonnet Bowl at Houston Dec. 31, as could one of the other SWC contenders, while Texas, Texas A&M and Arkansas also are in the running for bowls.

Texas has been mentioned for the Aloha. Texas A&M could go to either the Liberty Bowl or Freedom Bowl Dec. 30 at Anaheim, Calif., and Arkansas is a possibility for the Holiday Bowl Dec. 22 at San Diego.

Besides the Orange Bowl, the Big Eight Conference could land teams in three other bowls. Colorado, fourth in the conference, has been mentioned for the Freedom Bowl, while the Fiesta Bowl apparently would like to take the Big Eight's No. 2 team with the No. 3 team in the conference going to the Gator Bowl against Florida State.

Maris seeks cancer treatment

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Roger Maris, the New York Yankee slugger who broke Babe Ruth's home run record in 1961, has had cancer "for some time" and now wants to try experimental treatment, a leading cancer researcher says.

"Roger Maris is a patient of mine," said Dr. Robert Oldham of Franklin. "We are now proceeding with some research for Mr. Maris that will lead up to some treatment."

Oldham confirmed that Maris has been treated for cancer, but declined to reveal any details about his condition.

"He has been under care and ill for some time," said Oldham, who set up Biotherapeutics Inc. in Franklin in May with Dr. William West of Memphis for cancer research and treatment.

Maris, in his early 50s, has declined comment on the treatment or his condition, his daughter, Susan Maris, said Thursday.

Maris, who owns a beer distributorship in Gainesville, Fla., underwent a few days of testing at Biotherapeutics Inc. about two weeks ago, Oldham said. The tests are aimed at developing experimental treatments involving the body's immune system, he said.

"He will continue to come back and forth as need be" from his home in Gainesville, said Oldham.

The doctor would not say what kind of treatment is in the offing for Maris and added that research for the treatment is still in the preliminary stages.

Maris bested Babe Ruth's home run record in 1961 by driving 61 homers for the Yankees in a single season. He retired in 1968 after two seasons with the St. Louis Cardinals.

Oldham formerly worked at the Vanderbilt University Medical Center before leaving in 1980 to become associate director of cancer treatment at the National Cancer Institute in Bethesda, Md.

Flyers pad wallet with NHL shutout

Associated Press

The Hartford Whalers have been having trouble scoring goals of late. And the Philadelphia Flyers didn't make it any easier for them, especially with money on the line.

"We have a team bonus, everyone gets extra money for a shutout," Flyers goalie Bob Froese said after Thursday night's 3-0 National Hockey League victory over the Whalers. "And I'm very pleased that our team could get that."

The victory was the first for the Flyers since their 13-game winning streak was snapped by the New York Islanders on Tuesday night. It also marked the return to the lineup of Froese and defenseman Mark Howe. Froese had missed four games and Howe three with injuries.

Your horoscope

By JEANE DIXON

Saturday, November 23, 1985

YOUR BIRTHDAY TODAY: Avoid confrontations at work and you will soon have the backing you need to make important changes. Revealing your plans too far in advance would be a mistake. Listen carefully to what clients, customers and older partners have to say. Love is a powerful and positive influence in your life. Reach out to someone who feels neglected or discouraged. Your humanitarian instincts are closely linked to your success. CELEBRITY BIRTHDATES: President Franklin Pierce, singer Ruth Etting, outlaw Billy the Kid, actor Boris Karloff, comedian Harpo Marx, actor Victor Jory, the Cleveland Indians' Brook Jacoby, U.S. Secretary of Labor William Brock.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Complete household chores before going shopping. Helping a friend gives you deep satisfaction. Romance blossoms when you turn over a new leaf. Do not ask for more than you are prepared to give.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Power and status intrigue. Influential people are impressed by your consistency and charm. Keep any diet or exercise resolutions. A sloppy appearance could cost you a wonderful opportunity.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Seeking security is fine, but do not allow yourself to get stuck in a rut. A close friend helps you make a big change. Loosen up with loved ones. Entertain at home.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Romance has its ups and downs, but is generally happy. Do not pursue pleasure at the expense of your work. Many tasks you are given now have a creative aspect.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): A financial matter demands immediate attention. A professional friend stands ready to offer expert assistance. Go ahead and ask an older person for a special favor. Consult mate about a change in lifestyle.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Be careful not to let your imagination run away with you. Get in touch with someone who shares your love for domestic life. A change of scenery works wonders.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Trying to foist your ideas on others could create problems at home. Volunteer to help a friend who needs special assistance. Someone could take a lighthearted statement seriously. Watch what you say.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Be flexible and you can elude any obstacles erected by an insecure individual. Direct confrontations are best avoided. Public speaking could bring you new recognition and prestige.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Give a teen-ager a chance to make his or her own decisions. Someone you thought indifferent to your charm begins to show interest. Keep loved ones' secrets. Discretion plays big dividends.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): An excellent day to sign contracts and agreements. Others are willing to agree to your terms. Avoid acting greedy. Loved ones share good news tonight, giving cause for celebration.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Consult mate if trying to decide how much to spend on travel and entertainment. Your efficiency is at an all-time high. Take down the names and addresses of new contacts.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): A shared spiritual experience brings you closer to your loved ones. Member of opposite sex figures prominently in your weekend plans. Domestic matters prove easier to handle than you expected.

The bidding:

South	West	North	East
3 ♠	Pass	6 ♠	Pass
Pass	Pass

Opening lead: Queen of ♠.

Verily, bridge is a strange game. When this hand was dealt in an international trials, those declarers who were in six clubs invariably made seven, while those who were in seven could only make six. Yet all the declarers made the technically correct play!

Most Souths elected to open with a preemptive bid of some kind or other. Thereafter, it was simply a matter of whether North judged his hand to be worth a grand slam or only a small slam.

The queen of spades was a common opening lead. Playing at six clubs, declarer should win, draw trumps with the ace of clubs, then cash the ace of diamonds and ruff a diamond. Declarer gets back to dummy with the king of hearts and ruffs another diamond to see if the king drops.

If it does drop, declarer has set up the queen for a heart discard. If it doesn't, declarer falls back on the heart finesse for an overtrick. Success.

Playing at seven clubs, there is a slightly better line for 13 tricks. Declarer wins the ace of spades, draws trumps then cashes the ace-king of hearts in an attempt to drop the queen. When that doesn't succeed, declarer falls back on the diamond finesse for his grand slam. Down one as the cards lie.

If that is the better line in the grand slam, why shouldn't those declarers in six also adopt it? Because it doesn't guarantee 12 tricks! If East has the king of diamonds and the queen of hearts, any declarer in six who adopts this line will go down one in a contract that couldn't be defeated.

North Dakotans tell former baseball great Yogi Berra 'this spud's for you'

Yogi Berra

WASHINGTON (AP) — Yogi Berra is about to get 23 tons of spuds dropped on his front yard, and that's no small potatoes.

"Boy, I just asked for a bag!" the former New York Yankees manager and Hall of Fame catcher said by telephone Thursday from New Jersey, when he heard that potato farmers in North Dakota were about to grant his wish in a big way.

Berra made the mistake of telling growers last summer he was skeptical over their claims to be one of the largest potato-growing areas in the country.

"He said, 'You don't have enough potatoes here to fill my front yard,'" said Lloyd Schmidt, executive director of the Red River Valley Potato Growers Association, which represents 860 growers in North Dakota and Minnesota.

And that's all it took.

Twenty-three tons of potatoes in 50-pound boxes are being loaded onto a truck in East Grand Forks, Minn., bound for Berra's Montclair, N.J., home. They are due to arrive Tuesday, just in time for Thanksgiving Day feasts.

Berra's wife Carmen said she was "making long lists of people to give them to."

Bob Dole

WASHINGTON (AP) — Senate Majority Leader Robert Dole is used to hearing from constituents — but probably not often from colleagues' daughters.

Dole got a personal plea Thursday from the 6-year-old daughter of Sen. Dan Quayle, R-Ind., to let her father out early.

Dole told his colleagues, who have been working late this week, that he wanted to get done in time to honor a special request, then read the letter he had received:

"Dear Senator Dole, I am having my second-grade play tonight. Please make sure there aren't any votes between 7 and 9 so my daddy can be with me. Please come with him if you can. Love, Corinne Quayle."

Dole said, "I do not want to be in the doghouse with her."

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Jan-Michael Vincent, star of the television series "Airwolf," was ordered Thursday to stand trial on a charge of beating a woman at his Malibu home.

Municipal Court Judge David Horowitz set a Dec. 4 trial in Santa Monica Superior Court, said court clerk Therese Hokoyama.

The ruling followed a preliminary hearing at which Chenoa Lee Ellis, 34, of Malibu, testified that Vincent attacked her the day after he got drunk and she and the actor's girlfriend took cocaine.

Ms. Ellis, who testified under a grant of immunity from prosecution during the hearing, was the only witness called by the state before it rested its case.

Vincent, 40, is charged with one count of felony battery and two counts of violating probation.

Under cross-examination, Ms. Ellis told defense attorney Ronald Carpol that Vincent became angry and punched her in the mouth the morning of Sept. 6 when she tried to console him about problems with his girlfriend, Joanne Robinson.

"He was getting increasingly madder at me...He was holding himself in a ball on the couch and yelling with his hands over his head," Ms. Ellis told defense attorney Ronald Carpol.

"He asked, 'What does the world want from me?' and he threatened to set his house on fire," she said.

Ms. Ellis suffered a broken nose and split lip that required 16 stitches. Carpol contends she was injured in a fall.

On the night before the alleged attack, Vincent and the two women went from his Malibu home to a bar and then to a friend's house in Montecito, with the actor drinking from a bottle of vodka, Ms. Ellis said.

She said she and Ms. Robinson were taking cocaine at the same time, and that they left Vincent sitting asleep on the couch for fear he would awaken in a rage.

Ms. Ellis said an argument between Vincent and his girlfriend broke out the next morning on the beach near his house.

She said she went back to the actor's home, where he became angry at her for allegedly interfering with the relationship.

Testifying for the defense was Dr. Susan Reynolds, owner and director of the Malibu Emergency Room where Ms. Ellis was treated.

She said Ms. Ellis appeared disoriented, possibly from drugs, when she was treated and might have been hurt tripping over a telephone cord.

Vincent pleaded guilty July 10 to disturbing the peace by fighting at a November 1984 party and was placed on three years' probation. He was also placed on probation in December 1983 for drunken driving.

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP) — Actor Frank Bonner, an Arkansas native whose Razorbacks coffee mug graced his role as salesman Herb Tarlek on "WKRP in Cincinnati," says it would be nice, but unlikely, if the mug turned up someday in the Old West or space.

The red-and-white mug emblazoned with the University of Arkansas emblem already has shown up on "Scarecrow and Mrs. King," where Bonner plays a neighbor to Kate Jackson's Amanda King. He carried it into her house.

"It's always in my bag...just in case there's an episode where I have the opportunity to have a cup of coffee," the Little Rock native said in a recent telephone interview from Los Angeles. Bonner said he also had coffee from his favorite mug on the short-lived series "The Duck Factory."

He said viewers will continue to see the mug, and not just on "WKRP" reruns.

"The only place it probably wouldn't work would be some kind of spaceship. Something futuristic. Or a western. That would be fun to see that crop up accidentally in a western some time."

BEVERLY HILLS, Calif. (AP) — Baby-faced Pia Zadora, blasted by critics for her work in movies financed by her rich husband, hears a different tune these days.

"She has it all," Los Angeles Times music critic Leonard Feather said in a Thursday review of her recent concerts featuring song standards of the '40s and '50s.

"She can belt out 'Maybe This Time' with the power and conviction of (Barbra) Streisand...

"She has it all: the range, expert intonation, a sensitive feeling for the lyrics and enough dynamic variety to preclude the danger of overkill," he said of her two nights singing such melodic standards as "I Am What I Am."

The switch in her treatment in the press has taken Miss Zadora by surprise.

Dollar down

LONDON (AP) — The U.S. dollar fell on foreign exchange markets today in thin trading. Gold bullion prices remained steady.

At midmorning, the dollar was quoted at lower levels against all major currencies but was fluctuating within a narrow range.

Traders in Frankfurt, West Germany, attributed the decline to expectations of lower interest rates, renewed concern about the stability of the U.S. financial system and uncertainty over possible market intervention by Japan's central bank.

Selected midmorning dollar rates compared with rates in Europe late Thursday:

—2.5835 West German marks, down from 2.5888

—2.1165 Swiss francs, down from 2.1235

—7.8775 French francs, down from 7.9025

—2.9105 Dutch guilders, down from 2.9165

—1,746 Italian lire, down from 1,751.50

—1.3755 Canadian dollars, down from 1.3765

The British pound rose to $1.4475 from $1.443.

The dollar closed in Tokyo at 201.75 Japanese yen, down from 202 yen Thursday. Later in London, the U.S. currency was quoted at 201.70 yen.

London's five main bullion houses fixed a recommended gold price of $326 a troy ounce, up from $325.60 late Thursday.

In Zurich, gold was bid at $326.10, up from $326.

Earlier in Hong Kong, the precious metal closed at a bid of $326.83, up from $325.19.

Silver was quoted in London at a bid of $6.17, a gain of one cent.

Despite obstacles, improved Christmas sales expected

Local sales may climb 10 percent over last year

By MELLA McEWEN
Business/Oil Writer

Despite a sluggish fall season, recent record declines in retail sales nationwide, and a Christmas season shortened six days by a tardy Thanksgiving, Midland retailers are expecting Christmas retail sales to climb about 6 to 10 percent higher than last year.

"Sales so far are ahead of last year, and we anticipate an excellent season," said Carol Joyce, who will ride herd on the busy season at Midland Park Mall, where activities are already underway because of Thanksgivings late arrival.

There are already a number of temporary retailers throughout the mall, and we are expecting about 25 retailers during the season. The mall also will begin staying open an hour later the day after Thanksgiving.

Last year's Christmas-retail season was marked by price cutting and sales, and local merchants said they have special plans for this Christmas as well. Toys Plus has started a layaway program, and Folgers Magnavox is including a $250 Italian racing bike with specified purchases, according to Van Folger, owner of the store. Andy Wigzell, manager of VideoConcepts, said his store had an "Early Bird" sale in progress. In December, Dillards will have a two-day Record Days sale for the first time, and Anthony's is offering a no down payment layway plan along with instituting its private label credit card, which Harper expects to be a big factor in his store's Christmas sales.

"We're spending more money on advertising in a shorter time period than before," said Joe Harper, manager of Anthony's.

Retailers this year are paying more attention to what they buy, and are better planning their inventories. "I just took inventory, and right now we have the largest inventory in the history of the Midland store. We're well prepared this year," said Harper

"We have a lot more stock than the last few years," said Jerry C. Jones, manager of Dillards. And Richard Adams, manager of Toys and More, said his store was stocking up on hot items like G.I. Joe figures.

This Christmas, a lot of video recorders will find themselves under the tree, with Folger, Jones and Wigzell agreeing that video recorders, and electronics in general, will be a major seller. Industry sources have figured that last year, video recorder sales were 115 percent higher than in 1983. This season manufacturers will offer stereo and a Super Beta models.

Folger included compact disc players and satellite dishes on his list of big sellers, while Wigzell listed projection tvs.

Local retailers also predicted clothing will be a popular gift this year. Dillards expects to sell a lot of men's clothing, and Jones said sweaters and outer wear - coats and sweater coats have been selling real well so far. Harper said the Levis 501 jeans will be a big item for Anthony's this year, as will "lots and lots of sweaters. It's been a better sweater year than in a number of years."

Toys are always a big seller at Christmas, however a national survey said toys are a disappointing seller so far, with no new big seller on the level of the Cabbage Patch Kids. The Kids are still a major seller, according to Jeff Evans, assistant manager of Toys Plus. "We haven't seen any end to the response for Cabbage Patch Kids, and we've had lots of requests for the Twins." A big seller is sure to be a mixture of electronics and toy, Ted E. Ruxpin, a teddy bear with a built-in cassette player whose mouth and eyes move when he speaks.

"We got in a shipment a couple of days ago, but we're sold out already," said Elizabeth Lujan, manager of the Peytons store in Midland Park Mall.

Macy's Department Store in New York is preparing for the fast-approaching Christmas season with fancy wrapped stockings on display. Retailers are stepping up promotions to lure shoppers before the season formally starts the day after Thanksgiving.

Stores stepping up holiday promotions

NEW YORK (AP) — Last year's boom, six fewer shopping days this year and recent heavy sales of such big-ticket items as cars could mean a modest Christmas for the nation's retailers, industry watchers say.

But stores are stepping up promotions before the Christmas shopping season formally starts the day after Thanksgiving, Nov. 28. And despite a heavy debt load, customers will pull out their credit cards to buy gifts, analysts say.

"I believe the consumer, who is overextended, will leverage himself more," said Walter Loeb, a retail analyst with the investment firm of Morgan Stanley & Co. "The American consumer is a sentimentalist. At Christmastime he wants to give gifts and he wants to extend warm wishes to his fellow man."

The traditional Christmas shopping season after Thanksgiving is shorter this year because both holidays fall in midweek, reducing the number of days that stores can open.

Retail sales so far this fall have been lackluster, although they picked up a bit in October, according to the retailers' most recent monthly reports.

"Consumers, after having retrenched and saved more in October and November, I think will come back to the stores for a reasonably good Christmas, but late," said Allen Sinai, chief economist at the investment firm Shearson Lehman-American Express Inc.

But he added that "this year is not likely to be as good as last," when sales gained almost 10 percent over the preceding Christmas.

Susan Duchak, a spokeswoman for Sears, Roebuck & Co., the nation's largest retailer, said, "We're cautiously optimistic about the fourth quarter and the Christmas selling season."

The Chicago-based company is forecasting an industrywide sales gain of 6 percent

Occidental redeems Murdock's stock

Los Angeles Times —
Washington Post News Service

LOS ANGELES — Occidental Petroleum said Thursday it has paid Los Angeles financier David H. Murdock $86.1 million to redeem the preferred stock Murdock acquired when Occidental bought Iowa Beef Processors in 1981.

The transaction ends the association between Murdock, a onetime Occidental board member, and the Los Angeles-based oil company.

Murdock hasn't been actively involved with Occidental since the oil company repurchased his 5 percent stake in Occidental common stock in July 1984 for $194 million. The price represented a 42 percent premium over the market value then. As part of the repurchase agreement, Murdock agreed not to buy any Occidental common or preferred stock for 10 years, and gave Occidental the right of first refusal on his preferred shares. He also resigned from the board.

Murdock and Occidental Chairman Armand Hammer were once friendly, but their relationship reportedly soured, especially when Murdock opposed Hammer on Occidental's venture to develop a coal mine in China, according to reports at the time. Neither Murdock nor Occidental has commented publicly on the reports.

Occidental said that it paid Murdock $117.25 for each share of $14 cumulative preferred stock. The stock last traded publicly on the New York Stock Exchange on Nov. 11 for $117 a share.

In a statement, Hammer said that the repurchase was part of Occidental's financial restructuring program, which is focusing on the reduction of high-dividend preferred stocks.

Hammer said that the repurchase would reduce Occidental's annual dividend payments by $10.3 million.

Negotiators push for budget-balancing plan

New York Times News Service

WASHINGTON — House and Senate negotiators continued efforts Thursday to work out differences over several key elements of legislation to mandate a balanced budget by the 1990s.

After negotiators met Thursday afternoon, several senators said they still wanted to try to reach an agreement on at least an overall framework for the legislation before the end of the week.

But Rep. Trent Lott, R-Miss., said Thursday evening that he did not think the disagreements would be worked out until early December, after the Thanksgiving recess.

The main dispute was House Democrats' insistence on protecting nine programs, most of them for the poor, from the automatic spending cuts envisioned in the budget-balancing proposals. The House plan would also limit the cuts possible in Medicare and Medicaid, the health care programs for the elderly and for the poor.

Senate Republicans have opposed protecting these programs, partly because doing so would increase any automatic cut that would come from the military budget. The House has offered as part of its compromise effort to limit any military cut to 50 percent of the total spending cut if the social programs remain protected.

The 29 negotiators from the House and the Senate have been meeting for the last week to resolve differences between the two chambers' budget-balancing proposals. Both proposals would set annual deficit ceilings that would force a balanced budget in the 1990s. Both would also mandate automatic spending reductions each year to reach the deficit ceiling if the White House and the Congress could not agree on a separate budget plan to reduce the deficit.

On Wednesday, the chief negotiators for the House and the Senate indicated there had been significant progress in reaching an agreement on some general principals for the legislation.

But Thursday afternoon, Sen. Pete V. Domenici, R-N.M., said, "We're a long way from being there."

Consumer prices rise as stocks bound

Associated Press

After five consecutive 0.2 percent monthly increases, consumer prices rose 0.3 percent in October, boosted by rising food and automobile costs, the government said today.

Meanwhile, stock prices bounded ahead into uncharted territory amid hopes for lower interest rates.

Overall food prices, including restaurant meals and alcoholic beverages, rose 0.4 percent in October, compared to a 0.3 percent increase the previous month.

But so far in 1985, retail prices have still risen at an annual rate of just 3.3 percent, according to the Labor Department's Consumer Price Index.

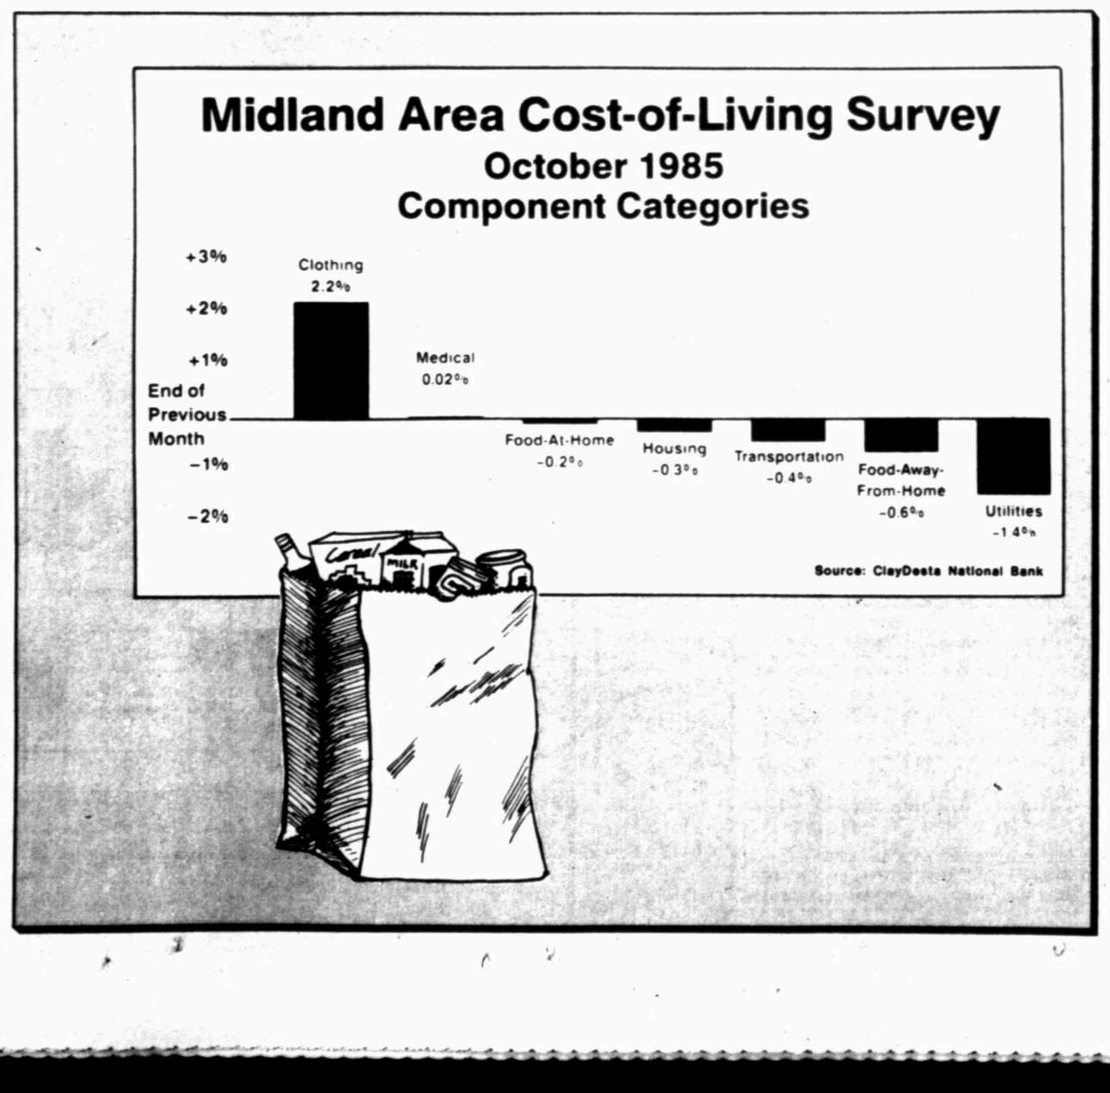

Higher prices for automobiles and auto financing pushed the transportation area up 0.2 percent after declining for five straight months, the department said.

The annual rate increase of 3.3 percent for the first 10 months of 1985 is still the slowest pace since 1967, when consumer prices rose 3 percent. The October index was 3.2 percent above the same month a year ago.

On Thursday, the Dow Jones average of 30 industrials climbed 23.05 to a new closing peak of 1,462.27. The barometer of blue-chip stocks has reached nine records this month alone. It hit a new high Monday of 1,440.02 and finished with only minor changes Tuesday and Wednesday.

Midland's cost-of-living falls slightly in October

From Staff Reports

Reversing last month's trend, Midland's cost of living fell 0.1 percent during October, according to a report released by ClayDesta National Bank.

Annualized, Midland's rate of inflation equals 0.8 percent. Odessa saw an increase of 0.01 percent during October, equalling an annualized inflation rate of 2.0 percent.

Increases in clothing and medical costs in Midland were offset by lower prices in utilities, food away from home, transportation, housing and food at home. Midland consumers have seen costs increase 0.6 percent during the past nine months.

Lower automobile maintenance costs and gasoline prices were responsible for a 0.4 percent decline in transportation costs. This is the fourth month in a row Midlanders have seen lower transportation costs. Transportation costs have declined 7.4 percent over the last nine months, 7.2 percent occurring in the past six months.

Lower rents in the Midland area were responsible for a 0.3 percent decline in housing expenses in October. Housing has gone up 2.1 percent in Midland since the first of the year, with the last six months showing a 1.8 percent increase.

Following two consecutive months of decrease, the cost of Midland clothing increased 2.2 percent in October, due primarily to higher price tags on men's apparel. Clothing costs in Midland have increased 1.5 percent during the first nine months of the year, with a 4.2 percent increase measured during the past six months.

Higher prices for over-the-counter drugs were responsible for a slight 0.02 percent increase in Midland's medical expenses. Since January, Midland has shown an increase of 1.7 percent in medical expenses.

October's measurements indicated a continued fluctuation in food prices between Midland and Odesa. Midland food costs fell 0.2 percent, reversing September's trend, while Odessa's food prices rose 1.7 percent after two months of decreases. Meat prices in Midland broke a three-month trend by falling 7.3 percent, while produce cost more. Alcohol prices fell 0.3 percent, caused by lower wine prices, while at the same time, shelf prices increased 1.3 percent, breaking a two-month decline.

Mixed trends resulted in an overall decrease of 0.6 for Midland restaurant prices in October, caused primarily by lower coffee prices. The last nine months show a 0.3 percent rise in the cost of eating out in Midland, but there has been a larger 1.9 percent increase in the most recent six months.

Reversing previous trends, Midland residential utility rates fell 1.4 percent during October, but Odessa rates rose 1.0 percent after three consecutive months of decreases. Lower gas rates contributed to Midland's lower costs, falling 4.2 percent after a flat September, and electric fuel adjustment charges remained stable following a month of decrease. There has been a 4.5 percent increase in utilities in the city since the first of the year, 3.4 percent of that coming in the most recent six months.

OIL & GAS REPORT

EXPLORATION HIGHLIGHTS

Martin opener tested for 562 Mcf

From Staff Reports

PRIMARY FUELS, INC., Houston, has opened Strawn gas production in the Belspec field of Martin County with completion of the No. 1 Meek, a northeast offset to the Belspec discovery well, Belco Development Corp.'s No. 1 Peters Estate.

The well potentialed for a calculated absolute open flow of 562 Mcfd from perforations 10,185 to 10,204 ft., which had been acidized with 3,750 gallons of acid.

Permitted as a 12,000 ft. wildcat, the well was drilled to a total depth of 11,370 ft. and was plugged back to 11,299 ft. A five inch liner was hung from 9,037 to 11,368 ft.

Formation tops, on ground elevation of 2,725 ft., include the Upper Spraberry at 7,073 ft., Wolfcamp at 8,575, Strawn at 10,119, Atoka at 10,508, Devonian at 10,982, and the Fusselman at 11,272 ft. Pay was topped at 10,185 ft.

Location is 467 ft. from south and 660 ft. from west lines of Section 47, Block 36, T-1-N, T&P survey, four miles north of Stanton.

The Belspec opener, Belco's No. 1 Peters Estate, was completed to flow 371 barrels of 45 gravity crude and 35 Mcfd and 112 barrels of water from Fusselman perforations 11,310 to 11,318 ft.

Ector County field gains second well

A recompletion operation in Ector County has yielded a second Pennsylvanian producer in the Ratliff field for an Odessa firm.

VIKING ENERGY CORP. completed the No. 1 Ratliff "C" to flow 55 barrels of 41.2 gravity crude, 80.9 Mcfd and no water on a 10/64 inch choke with a flowing tubing pressure of 300 psi. Production is through perforations 10,904 to 10,914 ft., with no treatment reported. Gas-oil ratio is 1,472:1.

Drilled to 12,500 ft., where 7 5/8 inch casing was set, the well was plugged back to 11,005 ft.

Pay was topped at 10,904 ft. on ground elevation of 2,993 ft.

Location is 66 ft. from south and west lines of Section 37, Block 42, T-1-S, T&P survey, two miles north of Odessa.

The well was plugged back from the North Headlee (Devonian) field.

Glasscock field gains fourth Penn producer

The Powell field of Glasscock County gained a fourth Pennsylvanian producer with completion of HENDON EXPLORATION, INC. No. 2 Brunson "30".

The well tested to flow 37.6 barrels of 53.5 gravity crude, 53,128 Mcfd and two barrels of water on a 12/64 inch choke with a flowing tubing pressure of 120 psi. The well is flowing from perforations 10,002 to 10,185 ft., natural production.

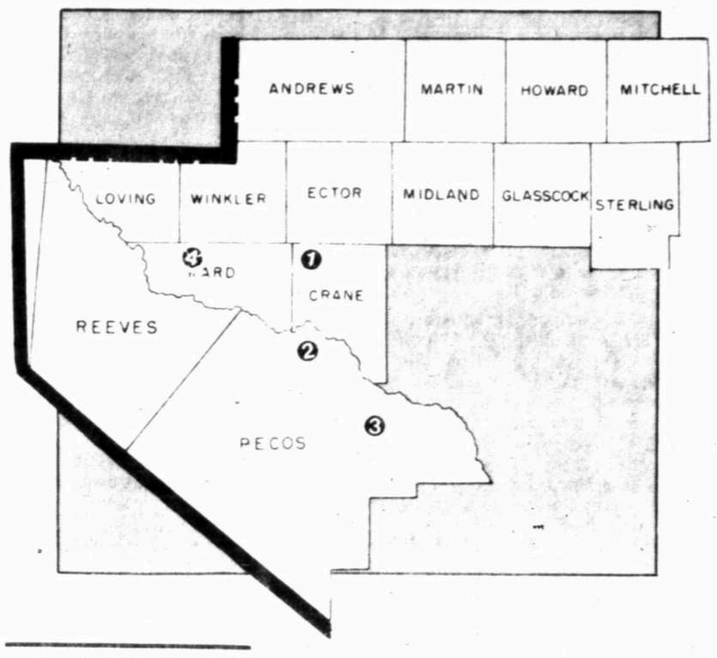

Hendon drilled the well to a total depth of 10,390 ft., where 5 1/2 inch casing was set, and plugged it back to 10,230 ft.

Formation tops, on ground elevation of 2,613 ft., include the Clearfork at 6,058 ft., Upper Spraberry at 6,540, Wolfcamp at 8,105, and Pennsylvanian Strawn at 10,003 ft. Pay was topped at 10,003 ft.

Location is 933 ft. from south and 1,980 ft. from west lines of Section 30, Block 35, T-3-S, T&P survey, eight miles northwest of Garden City.

The well is a re-entry of BTA's No. 2 Brunson.

May, Craig Hall end merger plans

DALLAS (SWN) — May Petroleum Inc. and Dallas investor Craig Hall have jointly announced that they

HNG-Internorth pipeline cancelled

OMAHA, Neb. (AP) — A subsidiary of HNG-InterNorth Inc. says it is canceling plans for a proposed $1.5 billion pipeline that would have carried Canadian natural gas to the northeastern United States.

Some of the eastern part of what is known as the CAN-AM pipeline route may be built in a scaled-down version, said William A. Henry, president of HNG-InterNorth's Joint Venture Pipelines Co.

"We were chasing a project that appeared not to have the best chance of succeeding," Henry said Thursday. "We decided, 'Let's go do something else.'"

He said if conditions improve, the plans could be revived, but he did not expect any improvements in the near future.

The decision by Joint Venture Pipelines and ANR Pipeline Co. could slow the growth of natural gas sales from Alberta, Canada, to the Northeast, officials said.

Natural gas companies and government agencies in the two nations have been considering the concept since rising petroleum prices increased the cost of fuel oil, one of the Northeast's primary sources of residential and industrial energy.

Henry said the decision to table the pipeline plans was made partly because the demand for natural gas in the Northeast is not growing as rapidly as expected.

Another reason concerns a proposal by the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission to require pipeline companies to ship natural gas owned by other companies at favorable rates.

Panel votes not to renew offshore moratorium

New York Times News Service

WASHINGTON — In a vote Thursday against renewing a moratorium on oil and gas leasing, a key House committee paved the way for renewed development of California's coastal waters.

Adopted by Congress in response to former Interior Secretary James G. Watt's efforts to lease virtually the entire continental shelf, the moratorium was embedded in the Interior Department's budget appropriation for the last four years. The House Appropriations Committee voted 27-26 not to renew it.

Congress had restricted activity on the continental shelf in response to complaints that the Reagan administration's plans for accelerating the development of offshore oil did not provide adequate protection for the marine environment and threatened the fishing and tourism industries on which many of California's coastal communities relied.

Members of the California congressional delegation and environmentalists said Thursday afternoon that they would try to restore the ban on oil and gas drilling when a continuing budget resolution comes to the floor of the House. If the committee's decision is not reversed on the floor, the moratorium would end, at least for the current fiscal year, because the Senate would not initiate action, by all accounts.

The Californians also said they would seek legislation to codify a tentative agreement reached last the summer between the current interior secretary, Donald P. Hodel, and members of the California delegation. That agreement would have limited exploration and drilling operations off California to 150 tracts of nine square miles each.

In September, Hodel backed away from the agreement after it was sharply criticized by the oil industry and by Energy Secretary John S. Herrington. Industry charged that the agreement had placed a lion's share off the offshore energy resources off limits to exploitation.

Thursday the interior secretary said: "The committee's bipartisan vote enables America to proceed with an orderly and environmentally sound program of assessing and developing outer continental shelf resources offshore California. For that, the nation can be grateful."

He also said the committee action would not lessen his commitment "to consultation with the state and with members of Congress in working toward a new five-year leasing program," and added that the action could enhance chances of reaching a consensus.

Hodel's chief spokesman, David Prosperi, said the interior secretary might still seek to negotiate a settlement on limiting oil and gas activities offshore California but that any new agreement could not simply be on a tract by tract basis. It would have to be based, he said, on overall "guidelines and concepts" defining "an environmentally sensitive area."

But Rep. Leon E. Panetta, D-Calif., who is a leader of efforts to negotiate a settlement protecting the coastline, said that the House committee vote was "a serious blow in terms of our ability to negotiate an agreement," adding, "Frankly, the only leverage we have to get an agreement was the moratorium."

Noting that the vote in committee was a close one, Panetta said there was a chance to reverse the decision on the floor. He attributed the defeat this year to "a massive effort by the oil industry, and calls by the White House," combined with opposition to the moratorium expressed this year by Gov. George Deukmejian of California. In the past, Deukmejian was largely neutral on the issue.

Lisa Speer, a senior scientist for the Natural Resources Defense Council, a national environmental group, said that despite the committee vote, "this fight is far from over." In addition to seeking to reverse the decision on the floor of the House, environmentalists may take their efforts to protect the California coast to court, she said.

Because of the damage that could be done to California's coastal economy, she said, the offshore oil program has to be conducted at a more measured pace than sought by the oil industry and the Reagan administration.

PROMOTIONS

Robert Brewer, senior vice president of second-ranked K mart Corp. of Troy Mich., said: "It will be up modestly from last year, but last year was such a booming period. We have a very high hurdle to compare against."

K mart, like other retailers, used drastic markdowns in 1984 to get rid of its bloated inventories. As a result, the company recorded brisk sales gains, but profits suffered.

Brewer said 1985 sales for retailers in general should gain 5 percent.

Duncan Muir, a spokesman for third-ranked J.C. Penney Co., said: "We're generally optimistic. We expect a better Christmas for J.C. Penney. Basically, we feel we have a better mix of merchandise for gift items."

Penney, based in New York, is forecasting a 6 percent sales increase for retailers.

This year's sales again will vary from region to region, said Sinai. "The depressed areas of the economy, like the Midwest, seem to be reviving to some extent. Those areas are likely to see a bigger rebound than average simply because last year was so depressed."

In addition to the usual longer hours, stores are using planned promotions and are stepping up advertising to entice buyers.

"Many stores are planning 'Midnight Madnesses,' 10-to-5 sales, 24-hour sales, in order to encourage the shopper to shop in November," said Loeb. "Many, many stores are trying to stimulate more pre-Thanksgiving business because of the shorter season, and the consumer responds because he is still very value-conscious."

Loeb warns consumers that because inventories are under control, most-wanted items likely will be out of stock early in December. Among the toys he expects to be in short supply are Pound Puppies, Cabbage Patch dolls and Transformers — vehicles that transform into robots.

However, Carol Farmer, a retail consultant, predicted retailers will promote as heavily as last year because "the customer is still deriving self-esteem from finding a bargain."

Fabian Linden, executive director of the consumer research center of the Conference Board, said consumers who intend to buy gifts will buy them no matter how long the Christmas season is.

He also said the business-sponsored reseach group has spotted an increase in intentions to buy major appliances.

What else is going to sell well this year?

Fashion, Ms. Farmer predicted, whether its a new type of microwave oven or trendy blouse. "I think people want newness," she said.

SALES

Also high on the list of toy stores like Peyton's and Toys and More were action figures such as G.I. Joe, Mask and Thundercats. "Based on what we've done on layaway, Mask items, Masters of the Universe and Cabbage Patch Kids are going well," said Richard Adams, manager of Toys and More. "We've done almost $18,000 in layaways so far," he added.

All three toys stores surveyed said traditional items like Barbie dolls, Mighty Tonka Dump Trucks, Hot Wheels cars, and stuffed teddy bears are still big sellers.

All retailers expect business to become hectic after Thanksgiving, and a number have hired new help to deal with the increased business. Dillards will have in the neighborhood of 35 percent more sales help over last year, according to Jones. Anthony's has hired about 9 salespeople, and plans to add 15 more gift-wrappers during the holidays, Harper said.

Retailers have stocked up, planned sales, and added more personnel to deal with the most important retail season of the year. Still, they have no control over factors such as weather or the local economy.

"When people buy something, it depends on their mood. There's really no way to predict what people will buy," noted Evans.

Broader market measures have also been breaking fresh ground. The New York Stock Exchange composite index rose 1.33 to a new high of 116.12.

Besides optimism about interest rates, analysts attributed the stock market's recent strength to renewed hopes for a thaw in superpower relations following the summit between President Reagan and Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev.

Meanwhile, a new survey said most big American manufacturers would like the government to do more to aid them in foreign trade.

The survey by the Conference Board, a non-profit research organization based in New York, said 38 percent of big U.S. firms favor stronger tariffs or quotas. The board polled the Fortune 1,000 companies and drew 295 responses, 95 percent of them from manufacturing companies.

In a trade development on Capitol Hill, legislation that would curb textile, apparel and shoe imports came a step further in the House of Representatives. It will be debated on the House floor Dec. 3.

The House Rules Committee ordered one hour of debate on the controversial legislation and, if approved, it will go to President Reagan, who has threatened to veto it.

Other economic news Thursday included:

— The Treasury sold $7 billion in notes, with the 9.54 percent yield representing a decline from 10.6 percent received at the last auction of 10-year notes on Aug. 7. It was the lowest rate since an auction on May 1, 1979, when yields averaged 9.37 percent.

Donoghue's Money Fund Averages
(Averages for all 282 taxable funds)

	7-day average	yield	30-day average yield
	42	7.26	7.52

Yield columns represent annualized total return to shareholders for past seven days and 30-day compounded (effective) rates of return. Past returns are not necessarily indicative of future yields. Investment quality and maturity may vary among funds listed. Restricted availability.

MONEY FUND TABLE COMMENTARY: Assets of the 282 taxable money funds reported by Donoghue's MONEY FUND REPORT (R) of Holliston, Mass., 01746 increased $1.8 billion to $246.8 billion during the week ended Nov. 19, 385. The taxable funds' 7-day average yield increased to 7.26 percent from 7.19 percent. The taxable funds' 30-day average increased to 7.21 percent from 7.18 percent. The taxable funds' average maturity lengthened by one day to 42 days.

William E. Donoghue says: "The inflow of nearly $1.8 billion into taxable money funds was the largest since mid-June. This week's 7-Day Average Yield of 7.26 percent is the highest average yield since June 11, 1985. Except for the small decline in the week of Nov. 12, the 7-Day Average Yield has risen steadily since Oct. 8. The 7-Day Average Yield of government only money funds (7.11 percent) is also at its highest since June 18. Assets of institutions only money funds rose $1.7 billion this week, reaching their highest level since August."

Two wires found cut at Palo Verde nuclear plant

WINTERSBURG, Ariz. (AP) — Two wires have been found cut in the Palo Verde nuclear plant's Unit 3 in the past few months, plant officials said Thursday.

Dan Canady, spokesman for the Arizona Nuclear Power Project, said the first cut wire was found Aug. 8 and the second Wednesday. Both were in the auxiliary building, which will house the control room of Unit 3, which is still under construction and scheduled for completion in 1987, Canady said.

He added that graffiti, found in a portable toilet at the site, said, "I will cut two cables a day until (a person) is exterminated."

The name of the individual mentioned is "at foreman level," Canady said, but declined to release the name.

"We think it's just a worker upset with a foreman," he said.

The wire which was cut in August was common utility wire and the second cut was on a solenoid near a valve, Canady said.

He said officials did not believe the incidents were serious enough to notify law enforcement agencies, but that Roy Zimmerman, the head inspector at the Arizona plant for the Nuclear Regulatory Commission, had been notified.

Meanwhile, another plant spokesman said the NRC in Washington, D.C., would be notified Friday that "Unit 2 will be ready to receive an operating license by December 2."

If the license is granted, Unit 2 then would be loaded with nuclear fuel.

Unit 1 of the plant 50 miles west of Phoenix achieved its first nuclear reaction in May and has been undergoing testing, prior to licensing for commercial operation, scheduled late this year. Unit 1 currently is shut down while several hundred bolts are being retightened.

A consortium of seven utilities in Arizona, California, New Mexico and Texas is building the triple-reactor plant.

Workers at nine major Boston hotels vote strike authorization

BOSTON (AP) — Workers at nine major Boston hotels have authorized a strike for Dec. 1 if negotiations fail to produce a new contract by then, says union President Dominic Bozzotto.

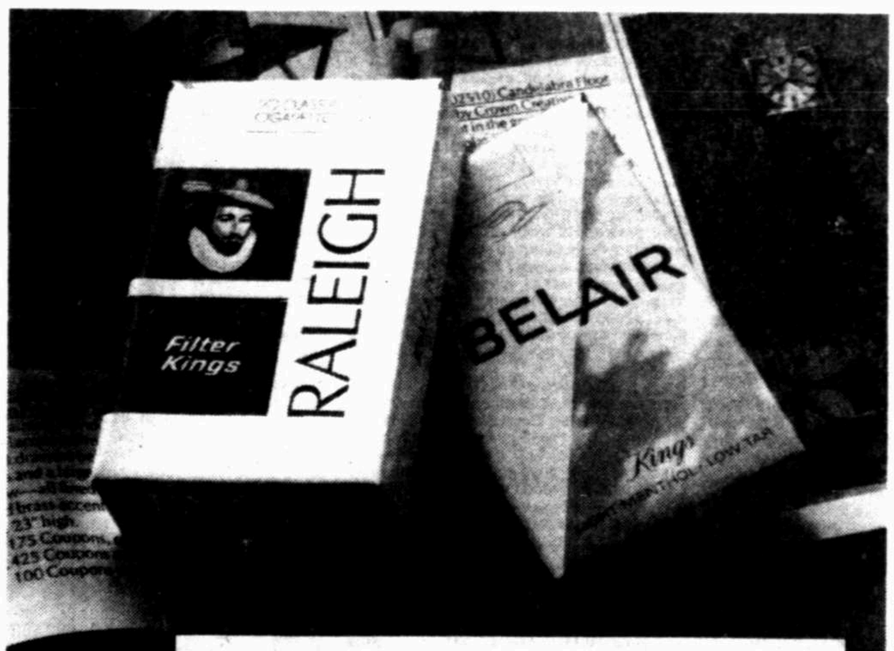

Local 25, Hotel, Restaurant, Institutional Employees and Bartenders Union members voted 1,371-71 at a meeting Wednesday night, but results were withheld to give absent members a chance to vote Thursday, Bozzotto said.

He said the workers are underpaid in the midst of Boston's economic boom and want the hotels to implement antidiscrimination policies, increase vacation and sick benefits and establish a pre-paid legal program.

The 3,500-member union opposes a management proposal for a two-tier wage scale giving new workers 25 percent less pay than existing workers in the contract that would replace one that expires Nov. 30.

The hotels affected are the Sheraton-Boston, Copley Plaza, Boston Park Plaza, Logan Hilton, Parker House, the Lenox, the Copley Square, the Colonnade and Ritz Carlton.

Jets, Eagles draw Sunday nod over Pats, Cowboys

By DAVE GOLDBERG
AP Football Writer

Ho hum.

The New York Jets and the New England Patriots go at it again Sunday with the American Football Conference East lead at stake — and Freeman McNeil's hurt again.

McNeil, who probably is the National Football League's best running back this season, missed the last meeting with bruised ribs and the Patriots won, 20-13 at Foxboro. Last week, he added a turned ankle to the still-sore ribs and is considered 50-50 for Sunday's game at Giants Stadium, in which the Jets are favored by 3½.

The Patriots have won six straight games since Steve Grogan took over at quarterback. They've allowed no more than 15 points in any of them.

The Jets scored 62 points against Tampa Bay last week, the last three quarters without McNeil. And when someone as important as McNeil is 50-50, it probably means he'll play.

So?

So when two teams are close, the team that loses the first often wins the second. Particularly if it's at home. JETS.

Philadelphia (plus 6½) at Dallas: The Eagles, back in the NFC East race, may be without Ron Jaworski in this battle of the bruised quarterbacks — Danny White is questionable for Dallas. Philadelphia rarely plays well for a full game. They also rarely give up points. EAGLES.

Washington (plus 4) at Pittsburgh: Jay Schroeder has five days rather than five seconds to think about his first NFL start. Pittsburgh has five days to watch Jay Schroeder on film. STEELERS.

Denver (plus 4½) at Raiders: The AFC West is in the "I beat you and you beat me" phase of its schedule. The Raiders, who go to Denver for the rematch in three weeks, need this one for a tie. RAIDERS.

Seattle (plus 6½) at San Francisco (Monday night): Seattle lost one it had to win last week. San Francisco won one like that and is playing as well as it has all year. 49ERS.

Miami (minus 8) at Buffalo: Injuries have cost the Dolphins most of their offensive line. The Bills have won two of their last three at home, where the weather can be a leveling factor. BILLS.

Atlanta (plus 16) at Chicago: Dan Hampton's shoulder is bruised just like Jim McMahon's. Why risk further injury when you can win going through the motions? FALCONS.

New York Giants (minus 4) at St. Louis: "We're going to be spoilers now," Cards quarterback Neil Lomax said after his team suffered its sixth loss in seven games last week. The Giants face the post-Monday night road game jinx, but that doesn't mean much the way the Cards are playing. GIANTS.

Detroit (minus 1) at Tampa Bay: At home, Detroit plays like a Super Bowl team. On the road, it plays like Tampa Bay. Steve Young's debut. Why not? BUCS.

Cincinnati (plus 3) at Cleveland: Take the Bengals off the rug and you get ... CLEVELAND.

OTHER GAMES (Home team in caps):

MINNESOTA (minus 7½) over New Orleans.
San Diego (minus 5) over HOUSTON.
Indianapolis (plus 4) over KANSAS CITY.
RAMS (minus 5½) over Green Bay.

Straight up: Jets, Steelers, Raiders, Cowboys, 49ers, Dolphins, Bears, Giants, Bucs, Browns, Vikings, Chargers, Chiefs, Rams.

Last week: 7-7 (spread), 11-5 (straight up)
Season: 67-82-6 (spread), 93-60 (straight up)

COM swimmers honored

From Staff Reports

Four City of Midland Swim team members and COM coach Brad Swindig have earned berths on the Texas USS All-Star swim team.

Swindig has been picked to coach the 11-12 year-old boys for the North. The North team will swim against the South team in a dual meet Dec. 1 in Austin.

Midlanders who qualified for the North team and the events they are swimming are Michaela Hasek (13-14 girls) 100 backstroke, 100 freestyle and medley relay; Matt Houston (11-12 boys) 50 freestyle and medley relay; Shannon Guignon (11-12 boys) 200 freestyle, 100 butterfly and freestyle relay; Ricky Perkins (17-18 boys) 50 freestyle and both relays.

In addition to the Midland swimmers, the North team will be made up of members from teams in El Paso, Odessa, San Angelo, Austin and the Dallas-Fort Worth area in addition to other cities.

Swimmers qualified for the All-Star teams in a meet held in Fort Worth, Nov. 9-10.

Odessa's Jeff McPhearson also qualified for the North squad.

The COM team has a busy schedule of events upcoming including the Odessa Invitational, Nov. 23-24; El Paso Invitational, Dec. 21-23; and the COM meet in Midland, Jan. 17-19.

Vuckovich refuses demotion

Associated Press

MILWAUKEE (AP) — Pete Vuckovich, a former Cy Young Award winner hampered by injuries, will test the free agent market by refusing an offer to pitch for the Milwaukee Brewers' Vancouver, Canada farm club.

"We have extended an offer to Pete to come to (spring training) camp as a non-roster player, and I hope he'll accept that offer," said Brewers' General Manager Harry Dalton. "The offer to go to camp gives him a chance to make the club again next spring."

The 33-year-old Vuckovich was 6-10 with a 5.51 earned run average in 22 games last season.

Wadkins, Kite trail England

LA QUINTA, Calif. (AP) — Americans Lanny Wadkins and Tom Kite were undisturbed by a dramatic, 18th-hole eagle that deprived them of a tie for the lead in the first round of the World Cup golf tournament.

"We're looking to improve over last year," Wadkins said Thursday, referring to the team's embarassing 12th-place finish, 22 shots back, in the 1984 World Cup.

On Thursday, Wadkins and Kite were tied with Canada, one shot back of England.

"This is a good start," Wadkins said. "We feel pretty good about it. "We feel if we play good, solid golf — and we did today — we'll have a run at it on the last day."

Wadkins had a 4-under-par 68, good enough for a five-way tie for the individual lead, and Kite shot a 70 in the slow-moving first round that required 5 hours, 50 minutes to complete.

"We both played good, solid golf," Wadkins said. "Our only problem was trying to keep our momentum, keep our concentration, with the play so slow."

THE AMERICANS had a 138 team total, six under par on the Mountain course at the La Quinta Hotel.

That score was matched by Canadians Dan Halldorson and Dave Barr and was bettered by a stroke when Howard Clark of England, playing in the last group on the course, scored an eagle-3 on the 18th hole.

A lucky bounce off a cart path enabled Clark to reach the green with a 6-iron second shot. He dropped a 15-foot putt for the eagle that more than offset a closing bogey by partner Paul Way, broke a three-way tie for the lead and gave the English sole control of the top spot at 137, seven under par.

Clark had a 69 and Way, with a 68, was tied for the individual lead with Wadkins, Halldorson, Eamonn Darcy of Ireland and Anders Forsbrand of Sweden.

Canada had the lead alone at the turn, but neither Barr, who had a 70, nor Halldorson could break par over the back nine.

"Dave and I have played together a number of times, and we play well as a team," Halldorson said. "We have a lot of pride and we're excited to play together."

The only other two-man team in the 31-nation competition to break par 144 was defending champion Spain, and it took a comeback to accomplish that. The veteran Jose-Maria Canizares hit two shots into the water on the second hole, made a quadruple bogey, but rallied for a 70. Manuel Pinero had a 73 that put the Spanish at 143 and alone in fourth.

Japan, Argentina and Australia were next at 144, seven shots off the lead in the chase for the $100,000-per-man prize that goes to the winner.

Lendl quits Cup team

Associated Press

Ivan Lendl, the world's top-ranked tennis player, has apparently decided to quit Czechoslovakia's Davis Cup team, the West German sports news agency SID quoted his manager Jerry Solomon as saying Thursday. In a dispatch from New York, SID also said Solomon denied reports that Lendl had applied for U.S. citizenship. "After a protracted dispute with (Czechoslovakia's tennis) federation, Lendl will most probably withdraw from the Davis Cup," SID quoted Solomon as saying.

Lendl, the U.S. Open champion, last played Davis Cup for Czechoslovakia during its semifinal against West Germany in Frankfurt in October. Because of an injury, Lendl played only doubles and Czechoslovakia was defeated 5-0.

'The Pass' still on top of Flutie's list

BOSTON (AP) — Doug Flutie, millionaire and man of the world, speaks at luncheons, hawks cologne and cars in commercials and wins praise as a network television commentator.

But Flutie, family man and hometown boy, still shoots hoops with high school kids, maintains old friendships and remains determined to get his college degree.

His life has changed dramatically in the year since "The Pass" seemed to introduce him to that part of America that hadn't known him. But in that year, the things he values — loyalty, sincerity, achievement — have endured.

"I don't think I'll ever grow up. I've matured only in that I've been exposed to a lot of things," Flutie said. "My wife will tell you I'm not a very mature person at home. Instead of walking around the couch, I jump over the back. I have the stereo turned up loud or I'm playing pool. Instead of walking down the stairs one at a time, I'll jump down them two or three at a time.

"I DON'T think I've changed that much," he said. "We bought a home in Natick (where he attended high school) and I still hang out with the same crowd."

The crowd includes Gerard Phelan. One year ago Saturday his spectacular catch of Flutie's bomb for a 48-yard, last-play touchdown gave Boston College a thrilling 47-45 victory over Miami on national television the day after Thanksgiving.

"We spend a lot of time together and it always seems a reference to the past comes up," said Flutie. "A lot of situations come up where teams throw a Hail Mary pass at the end of the game and they did it the wrong way."

"The Pass" was the rocket that zoomed the quarterback into a year of seemingly unlimited horizons.

He won the Heisman Trophy and led Boston College to victory in the Cotton Bowl. He signed a megabucks deal with the New Jersey Generals of the United States Football League. He married his high school sweetheart. Reviewers applauded his work on a Saturday college football scoreboard show. He had a road — "Flutie Pass" — named after him in Natick.

Of all that, what made him happiest?

"The Miami pass," Flutie said. "That and being married. My wife would shoot me if I didn't say that.

"As far as football would be concerned, the Miami pass, by far," he added. "You had time to build up to that (other) stuff. You knew you were going to the Cotton Bowl and that the Heisman Trophy was coming up that week and I had a very good shot at winning it, but the Miami pass was spontaneous."

HE WAS showered immediately with widespread acclaim. It took a few months before he could take that admiration to the bank. Flutie said he has no regrets about signing with the Generals.

Now, at age 24, life is "a lot more fun because I'm a lot more relaxed. (I have) financial security," he said. "I have a lot of options. I know I can play football. I might have a job in broadcasting."

His wealth has freed him of mundane, middle-class concerns.

"I'm no longer paranoid about graduating from college, what I'm going to do after college, what I'm going to do for a home, a family," said the owner of an expensive maroon Porsche who likes to share the driving with his friends.

But his wealth doesn't compensate for unmet goals. Although he needs neither endeavor to assure his economic well-being, Flutie is driven to succeed in the TV studio and the classroom.

"I knew I could handle it," he said of his rookie season before the cameras. "But I had the feeling that it'd be like open fire on Doug Flutie because I would be a young kid coming into it and jumping right into network TV. Also, the idea of a jock going into announcing, they always seem to go right at him."

At Boston College, he is taking five courses, three of them in communications, and he expects to be graduated next month. He is an outstanding student.

"It's self-pride," Flutie said, "the fact that I started it and I want to finish it and I want to prove to everybody I'm not just a dumb jock."

He may have to prove to everybody just what kind of a jock he is.

A SPOTTY spring season with the Generals, a long layoff before next fall's campaign and the anticipated competition with Jim Kelly for a starting job leave Flutie's next year in limbo.

"It's frustrating for me," Flutie said. "I like to direct my energies and say, 'this is what I like to do to prepare for next year, and this is what I want to accomplish' and I can't do that."

No matter how challenging the conditions in life or on the football field, Flutie, the scrambler, finds ways to turn probable losses into incredible victories.

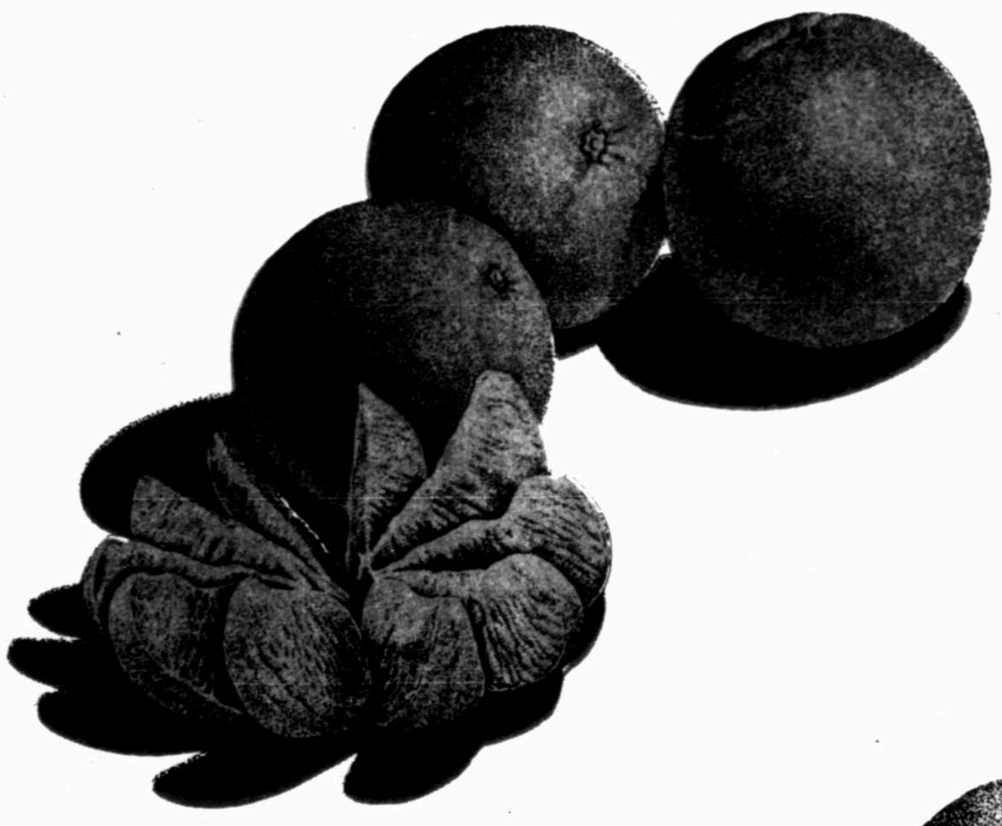

Cards turn down deal for Andujar

ST. LOUIS (AP) — The St. Louis Cardinals have turned down a deal that would have sent right-hander Joaquin Andujar to the Chicago White Sox in exchange for left-hander Britt Burns, according to Cardinals General Manager Dal Maxvill.

Maxvill said the National League champion Cardinals turned down the deal for the 26-year-old pitcher because of his hip problems.

Burns, who posted an 18-11 record last summer, was offered to St. Louis in exchange for Andujar, the Post-Dispatch was told Thursday. In addition to Andujar, the White Sox were asking for an additional player, possibly Cards left-hander Rick Horton, the newspaper said.

Color can be very a - peeling

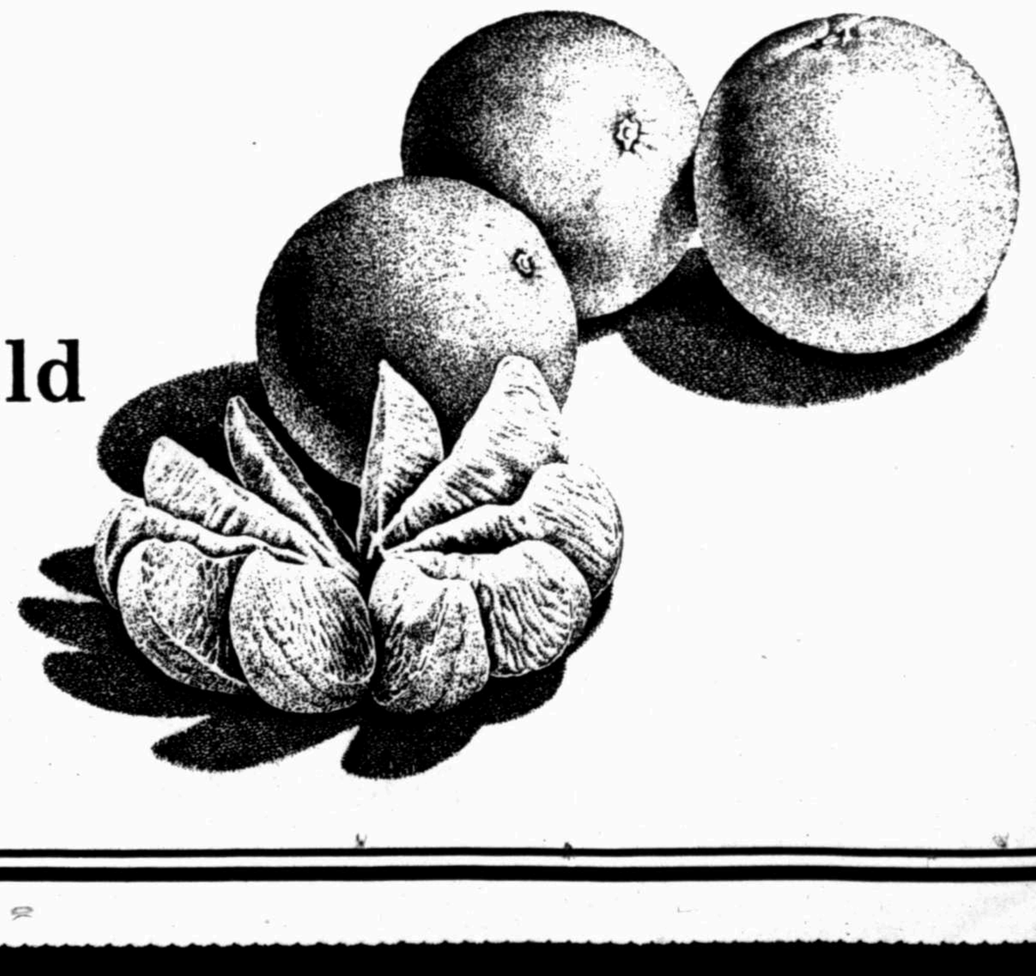

There's no comparison. The orange with color wins hands down because your eye is naturally attracted to color.

Your ad in color works the same way. It attracts additional attention. In fact, research show that the addition of a single color to a newspaper ad increases sales results by up to 65%*.

Now that's appealing!

American ' geisha ' finds dissertation profitable

KYOTO, Japan (AP) — When Stanford University student Lisa Crihfield posed as a geisha in Japan to research her anthropology dissertation, she hardly expected that her book, "Geisha," would sell over 20,000 copies, or that CBS would woo her for the film rights.

Now, 10 years later, she's back in Kyoto, not to pour sake and smile for the Japanese elite, but to serve as a consultant on the television movie being made about her romance behind the paper screens.

The 26-year-old Crihfield, now Dalby, is convinced that geisha offer a glimpse into the true spirit of this country that rose from postwar poverty to economic supremacy.

"To understand geisha, you've got to understand Japanese attitudes on male-female relations, hierarchy, sense of humor, and respect for tradition," she said in an interview on the set at Toei Studios, as a kimono-clad actress whizzed by on a pink motorbike.

"Some people say geisha are an anachronistic relic of a feudal past, but if so, they wouldn't have sprung up again after vanishing in World War II."

NOBODY IS CERTAIN how many geisha still exist in Japan. Police license figures show that from a peak of 80,000 in the 1920s, the number dropped to nil in 1944 and rebounded to 2,478 by 1947.

Dalby's research indicates 17,000 were working in the late 1970s. The kemban, local boards that now license geisha, have no overall figures but some say they "sense" a moderate revival in the affluent 1980s.

"The geisha population tends to rise when Japan's economy gets better," explained Dalby. "It's kind of like the hemline theory."

Though a quintessential symbol of Japan, geisha suffer from a false image abroad and at home. Many Westerners assume they're simpering slaves — "which tells more about Western men's fantasies than about geisha," says Dalby — and even many Japanese think they're prostitutes.

In Dalby's eyes, geisha are Japan's unsung liberated women: They may fan egos at parties to earn their keep, but what truly supports them is music, dance, and their view of themselves as artists,

"The teahouse is the one place here where women run things and don't rely on husbands to support them," she said. "They're entrepreneurs who form a tight sisterhood based on a deep commitment to the traditional arts."

LIKE MANY MAIKO, aspiring geisha who begin a grueling apprenticeship at age 17, Dalby was first drawn to the "willow world" profession by her love of the lute.

Ironically, her Indiana upbringing suited her to the trade, though her broad shoulders and statuesque height didn't quite fit the vision of the silk-clad doll.

"Japanese girls have to overcome years of conditioning in shyness and modesty to be able to socialize with men old enough to be their fathers," she explains. "As an American I had no such problems."

Catering to politicians, company presidents, and Kabuki actors who could afford the price of such status entertainment, Dalby saw sides of Japan's powerbrokers that few foreigners ever do.

"Japanese men get so silly when they're drunk it can be shocking to American sensibilities," she notes. "But there's something exuberant about their boyishness as an antidote to the formalities of everyday life."

Prevent auto theft

SOUTHFIELD, Mich. (AP) — Remember the basics of theft prevention when parking: lock the doors, close the windows and take the keys, warns the Automotive Information Council, which notes that more than a million vehicles are stolen each year.

Park in busy, well-lighted areas whenever possible, it suggests, and use a variety of locations when regularly parking on a street.

DEAR ABBY

Blind boy's legacy: Gift of sight

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: This is for that lady whose family wouldn't sign the papers for her to donate her organs after she died:

I had a brother and his name was Andy. He was 9 years old. He was blind and paralyzed. Andy died last August. His blindness was caused by brain damage, so he could donate his corneas.

Some people told me they thought that was gross, and I told them, "It was not gross because now somebody can see. They can really see!" It doesn't hurt so much knowing that Andy died because his dying did somebody some good. A 9-year-old boy who was blind and paralyzed was able to make somebody see.

I am 11 years old and already decided that I want to donate my organs after I die.

That lady in Texas who wanted her organs donated but couldn't get her family to sign for her should tell her family, "Just because you are against something doesn't give you the right to decide for everybody else." — JILL TURNER

DEAR JILL: Thank you for stating a principle that deserves to be carved in stone. You have centuries of wisdom stored in that 11-year-old head. Please write again and send me your address. I have a gift for you.

DEAR ABBY: A friend of mine and I work at the same location about 30 miles out of town. Since he doesn't own a car, and it wasn't really out of my way to pick him up and take him home, I was only too happy to have him ride along.

It's been a year now, and these thoughts have crossed my mind: I am spending $250 a month on car payments and $45 a month on gasoline. Meanwhile, my friend is saving a bundle.

I've spoken with a number of people who say they have the same problem, and the only solution we agreed on was to sell our cars and freeload on other people for transportation.

However, we find it hard to put our feet down because we really aren't going out of our way to pick up these riders.

Please print this. — NOT A TAXI

DEAR NOT: A person who "rides along" daily should not have to be prompted to give the driver a gift, or fill the gas tank occasionally. But since your passenger apparently needs a small needle, I'm printing your letter and hope it penetrates.

DEAR ABBY: I hope the controversy about whether or not to put a leash or harness on children is not closed, because I want to add my 2 cents:

I am the mother of three sons who were very active and hard to keep track of every second of the day. When my oldest son was 20 months old, I was awakened at 4 a.m. by the smell of smoke. I thought the house was on fire, so I jumped out of bed to find my son sitting in front of the fireplace in his rocker with his teddy bear, watching the fire he had started with a newspaper and matches he had taken from a can that had been stored in an upper kitchen cabinet!

That's when I decided that for his own safety and the safety of the family, I should buy a harness for him. He wore one until he was 4 years old and didn't seem to mind at all.

His two younger brothers were just as bad when it came to climbing out of their cribs, high chairs and car seats, so I also kept them in harnesses until they were 4.

Today all three boys are in the U.S. Marines, and to my knowledge none of them bears any "emotional scars" from having been restrained in a harness. — MOTHER OF THREE MEN, PARIS, TEXAS

DEAR MOTHER: My mail ran better than 100-to-one in favor of harnesses for children. To those who asked where one could be purchased, inquire at the infants' and children's department of your local department store, discount store or places where luggage and leather goods are sold.

AT WIT'S END

Women valuable

By ERMA BOMBECK

Every time you read about a premarriage contract, it always seems to favor the man. He throws a protective net over his worth to make sure he will leave the marriage without losing his assets. That arrangement has to have all the romance of Louis Rukeyser whispering Dow Jones averages in your ear. If someone had approached me 36 years ago with that kind of an agreement, I would have read his contract through and then given him mine.

As a discarded wife I would ask nothing from his estate. I would demand only payment for services retroactive from the wedding and compatible with those giving equal services.

Remember the high-priced secretary you paid to take down every word you spoke? Pay me the same wages for all those years of listening to you talk when you didn't say anything worth writing down.

Remember the two-weeks' salary you paid to the doctor to deliver each one of your children? As the one who went through the labor, got the stretch marks and hung around for the maintenance for 20 years, pay me triple and we'll call it even.

Remember the high prices you paid to have your teeth cleaned twice a year? Figure out something fair to compensate me for the disgusting toothpaste I cleaned off the bowl every day of my life.

And let's talk about the car. For 10 years you stopped and refueled it when it slowed down, took it in for a check-up when it was running raggy, footed the bills for shampoo and wax, patiently warmed it up when it was cold, took it out on a Saturday night and found new lodgings for it when you decided to trade up. I should be worth a few bucks for running cost-efficient and without major repairs for all those years.

We've never discussed tipping, but now is the time. You've tipped to have your car parked, a meal served hot, your shoes shined, your hair trimmed over the ears, a newspaper delivered to your room and your luggage checked. I've done all those things. Ten percent of your net worth ought to cover it.

Some things I'll toss in. They're on the house. Like fixing the toilet, wallpapering the hallway, changing furnace filters, catering your business dinners, taking your phone messages, running out to have prescriptions filled in the middle of the night and oh yes ... loving you.

Marriage contracts are fairly new. Their popularity reflects unions that are geared to failure. It says, in essence, I-do-and-you-do-but-if-we-don't-you're-not-going-to-do-unto-me-before-I-do-unto-you-first! It's a crummy way to start a marriage.

There's another reason why marriage contracts are better left unwritten. If men's assets are shared and women retaliate with the cost of their services, very frankly, they couldn't afford us.

Face it, sweetie, we're expensive ... but we're worth it.

More gasoline sold in Los Angeles area

Associated Press

Los Angeles accounts for more than $10 billion in car sales annually, more than New York and Boston combined, according to a magazine survey.

With all those cars, it is no wonder the Los Angeles metro area sells more gasoline than any other city in the United States — more than $3.6 billion in 1984.

Preparation helps speeches

NEW YORK (AP) — Keep a file in which you put newspaper clippings, photos, lines of poetry, random original thoughts and useful statistics in preparation for writing future speeches, suggests Wendy Reid Crisp, a veteran public speaker.

In an article in Savvy magazine, of which she is editor-in-chief, she notes that "a good speech is like a good fruitcake: there are more pieces of nuts and fruit than there is batter." Speeches should be packed with every appropriate anecdote, fact, one-liner and comparison that you can find, she says.

Armoires regain popularity

Associated Press

The present-day passion for the armoire has its roots in the distant past.

The first armoires appeared in 13th-century France, where the massive cabinets were used to store armor (hence the term armoire). During the centuries that followed, the French armoire was adapted for more genteel purposes, along with the English, Spanish, and American versions of it. As a repository for family possessions, clothing and food, it became a household necessity.

According to Traditional Home magazine, the armoire was considered a sign of prosperity in the rural provinces of 17th-century France. Although primitive when compared to the elaborate court furniture, the country armoire typically was handsomely decorated with ornate carving and was sturdily built.

By the mid-18th century, it was common for a household to include several armoires. Because closets were unheared of at that time, the armoire was an essential piece of furniture and usually was an important part of a bride's dowry. Because the armoire was so massive and tended to dominate a room, it was frequently made of oak and was almost always elaborately carved and paneled.

Because closets were rare until the late 19th century, armoires remained a necessity in most homes. Today they are once again in vogue. Although antique armoires are rare and consequently costly, a wide variety of new armoires is available. Many are reproductions or adaptations of antiques.

Crenna stars in year's best detective show

By JERRY BUCK
AP Television Writer

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Richard Crenna is the rumpled detective, self-consciously passing through middle age, a candidate for burnout and faced with the most bizarre crime in his career.

The movie is "Doubletake," a four-hour mystery that CBS will broadcast in two parts, Sunday and Tuesday.

Mark it on your calendar. This is the best detective show of this or any recent year. It's literate and well-written, adapted by John Gay from the novel "Switch" by William Bayer, and directed by Jud Taylor. It offers three stories unfolding at once and in four hours there isn't one car chase or shootout.

The first story follows Crenna's investigation of the murders of a schoolteacher and a prostitute by someone who decapitated them and switched the heads.

In the second story, Crenna tries to find out why his former police partner committed suicide and eventually stumbles upon a trail of corruption in the police department.

The third story tells how Crenna, the battle-scarred veteran of a bitter divorce, reluctantly falls in love with a younger woman (Beverly D'Angelo) who becomes a target for the killer and who, it turns out, has connections to the police scandal.

Crenna said he sees this as the flip side of "The Rape of Richard Beck," the role that brought him an Emmy in September. In that he played a tough police sergeant who is gang-raped.

"This is more of a procedural kind of story," he said. "No chases or gunplay. It's really a psychological kind of thriller. It's challenging in that respect, to keep interest over four hours. If the picture scores on any level it will be for the quality of the performances. We had a great cast."

AP Laserphoto

Richard Crenna plays a rumpled detective in the upcoming CBS four-hour mystery movie "Doubletake."

The movie also stars Vincent Baggetta, Paul Gleason, Cliff Gorman, Drew Snyder and Lee Richardson.

Crenna talked about the show as he prepared to leave for Mexico to begin his role as Texas entrepreneur H. Ross Perot in the NBC miniseries "On Wings of Eagles." The five-hour docudrama will be filmed in Mexico.

The miniseries tells of the rescue of two American businessmen taken hostage after the Shah of Iran was toppled from power in 1979. Perot hired Arthur "Bull" Simons, a retired Green Beret colonel to lead a commando raid into Iran.

Burt Lancaster stars as Simons and Paul LeMat as his assistant. The series is adapted from the book by Ken Follett.

"I haven't met Perot yet, but I have a feeling I'm going to," he said. "The comments he made about the script were that he wanted to be certain that his men were treated with respect and regarded as heroes. He didn't want their families to be embarrassed. He said he didn't care who played him, but he was concerned about who would play Bull Simons."

Crenna is one of the busiest actors in town and switches regularly between movies and television. He's starred in five series, "Our Miss Brooks," "The Real McCoys," "Slattery's People," "All's Fair" and "It Takes Two." His feature films include "Wait Until Dark," "The Sand Pebbles," "Body Heat," "The Flamingo Kid," "Summer Rental" and both "Rambo" movies.

About the "Rambo" films, Crenna said, they've "gotten so much criticism and for such strange reasons. Someone asked my daughter, 'How does your father feel about being in a jingoistic film?' It's not a political film, anymore than 'Robin Hood' was a treatise against monarchism. It's entertainment, but people have to shoot the political part full of holes."

Crenna also makes the transition between comedy and drama regularly enough that he hasn't been pigeonholed.

"I feel variety is important to me as an actor," he said. "As an actor I've always wanted to go back and forth between comedy and drama and between television and feature pictures. I want to experiment and learn."

ENTERTAINMENT

Mark it on your calendar. This is the best detective show of this or any recent year. It's literate and well-written....It offers three stories unfolding at once and in four hours there isn't one car chase or shootout.

Holiday movies make a trim menu

HOLLYWOOD (AP) — The lucrative holiday season will bring the nation's theater owners fewer movies than usual, but, as one of them says, "The secret is quality, not quantity."

Larry Gleason, president of the Mann Theaters chain, adds: "Last year we had one picture — 'Beverly Hills Cop.' This year we have three or four that could be big winners."

Earlier this fall, it appeared that the film companies would once again flood the marketplace with holiday attractions. Then the drop-outs began.

Columbia Pictures withdrew Richard Pryor's seemingly autobiographical "Jo Jo Dancer, Your Life Is Calling," about an entertainer's crackup.

Nothing wrong with the movie, the studio claimed; it simply wasn't ready because Pryor is doing it all himself.

Universal withdrew a Steven Spielberg presentation, "The Money Pit," a comedy with Tom Hanks and Shelley Long. Reportedly, further editing was needed.

Earlier, Columbia had decided against a Christmas release for "Murphy's Romance," starring Sally Field and James Garner. Orion decided against bringing out a Tim Conway comedy, "The Longshot."

As a result of all this, the major film companies will field only 11 new holiday attractions this year instead of the usual 15 to 18.

What happened?

"All of the distributors seem to have realized how important the Christmas season is," said Columbia spokeswoman Anne Reilly. "The reasoning is that if you don't have a big attraction, you'd better not try. It's easy to get lost in the Christmas crowd."

The year's end traditionally has been the time for studios to bring out their Academy Award hopefuls, but that seems to be a lesser factor this year.

Here is what Hollywood is giving us this Christmas:

"Rocky IV," in which you-know-who stages a climactic and symbolic ring battle with a Soviet fighter.

"Jewel of the Nile," with Michael Douglas and Kathleen Turner reprising their roles from "Romancing the Stone."

"Santa Claus: The Movie," Dudley Moore and John Lithgow in a Christmas fantasy from the makers of the "Superman" movies.

"Spies Like Us," escapades with "Saturday Night Live" alumni Chevy Chase and Dan Aykroyd.

"Young Sherlock Holmes," a Steven Spielberg presentation depicting the famous detective and Dr. Watson as schoolboys.

"A Chorus Line," Richard Attenborough's film version of the Broadway musical.

"One Magic Christmas," Mary Steenburgen in a Disney film directed by Philip Borsos ("The Grey Fox").

"Clue," a star-studded murder mystery based on the board game.

"Enemy Mine," a science fiction adventure about space travelers Dennis Quaid and Lou Gossett Jr. landing on an alien planet.

"White Nights," dancers Mikhail Baryshnikov and Gregory Hines as prisoners of the Soviets.

"Out of Africa," Robert Redford and Meryl Streep in Sydney Pollack's film based on Isak Dinesen's tales.

Also in the Christmas sweepstakes will be Disney's re-release of the 1961 "101 Dalmatians." Warner Bros. will have a three-city, Oscar-qualifying release of "Revolution," starring Al Pacino in a Revolutionary War drama.

And the box-office winners will be?

"'Rocky IV' is a guaranteed success," predicted Mann Theaters' Gleason. "'Jewel of the Nile' is also very promising, as well as Spielberg's 'Young Sherlock Holmes' and 'Spies Like Us.' Both Chase and Aykroyd are hot with the younger crowd."

Fashionable Western boots high on list

Movies have long had an influence on fashion, and this year is no exception. The success of two new Westerns, "Pale Rider" and "Silverado," has renewed an interest in denim, leather and that enduring fashion symbol of the American West — Western boots.

The good news is that Western boots are not only fashionable, and can be worn with a wide variety of casual apparel, but they serve double-duty as a rugged winter boot that offers warmth and protection from the elements — making them a perfect gift this holiday season for family and friends.

"With proper care, Western boots are ideal for cold, wet weather," says Tom Duffy, spokesman for the Western Boot Council of America. "Just as the hides used in the boots protect an animal from the elements, they also protect the wearer from rain, wind and snow."

Fashionable and durable, Western boots make ideal holiday gifts. Pictured above are a variety of styles and skins for both men and women.

Other features make these boots especially practical for winter wear. Many Western boots have wooden pegs placed in the shank (arch) which expand when wet. The enlarged pegs then serve to strengthen the sole, making the boot even more durable.

Tough leather soles can withstand tough treatment on city streets and sidewalks, and a leather lined top protects ankles and legs from icy winter winds.

Boot care guide

In order to keep your new Western boots in the best of shape throughout the inclement winter months and all the seasons to come, wearers only need to follow a few easy steps:

• Wipe off the boots everyday. Remember that leather is actually skin. Dust and dirt that settle in the creases will eventually cut the leather.

• Remove loose dirt. Oil soap is a good cleanser that can dry on the boots; if saddle soap is used, wipe it off with a damp cloth; do not let this soap dry on the boots.

• Apply shoe cream or a thin coat of wax. Select either substance in a matching color; rub it in diligently, especially over scuff marks or scratches; let it dry naturally; and then brush or rub the boots to a shine.

• Condition your boots. Your boots can never get enough oil so periodically work in a conditioner, especially when the boots are regularly subjected to snow and rain. Exotic skins such as lizard and snake should be conditioned often to retain suppleness and luster.

• Never dry wet or conditioned boots near extreme heat. This will only rob the leather of natural and added oils.

Western boots made from exotic skins such as snake, lizard and ostrich require a little extra care to retain their luxurious look.

Wipe frequently

Because dust and dirt can easily nestle into the irregular surface of these exotic skins, these boots need to be wiped off frequently and benefit from regular conditioning with a leather balm. Silicone spray should be used only on smooth pigskin boots if they will be exposed to repeated rough weather.

Some tiny TV's are small enough to fit in a briefcase, purse, totebag or palm.

New tiny TV sets make great stocking stuffers

A big surprise this Christmas comes in a very small package.

More and more Americans are discovering tiny new television sets with 4-inch diagonal screens that you can slip into a stocking or slide under the Christmas tree.

"These new black-and-white portable TV sets are ideal gifts," said Gerald McCarthy, president of Zenith Sales Company division.

"Small enough to fit in your briefcase, purse, totebag or palm, the tiny TV sets are a convenient companion wherever you go," he said.

For example, McCarthy said a new set from Zenith is less than 9 inches high and 6 inches wide, and weighs only 2.1 pounds without batteries.

McCarthy offered gift ideas for the new portable sets:

• Mom — On her desk, the 4-inch TV set provides news, stock quotes and an occasional soap opera while taking up about as much space as a calculator.

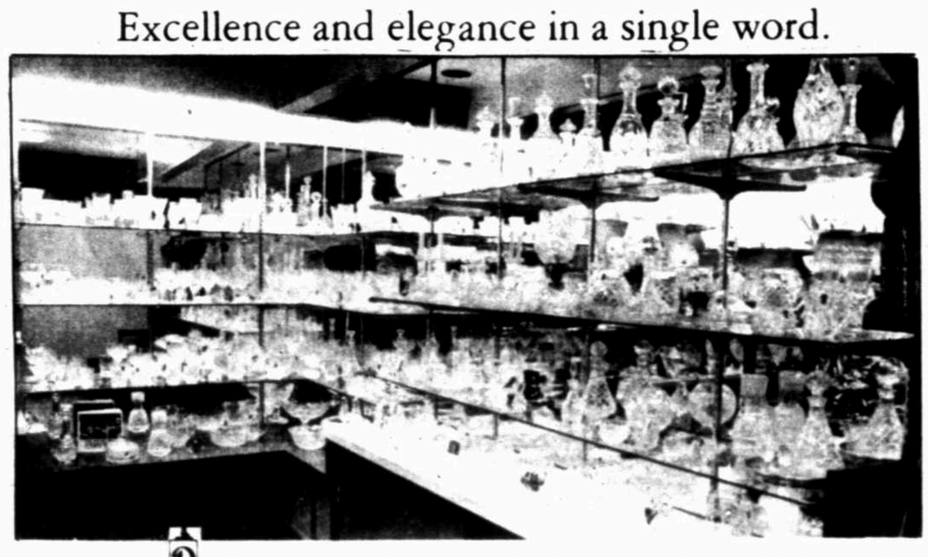

• Dad — At home, a tiny portable TV is Dad's convenient companion at the breakfast table, on the patio or at his desk. Commuters can hold the set in their palm while watching the morning or evening news.

• Kids — A small TV set will keep long holiday car rides peaceful by entertaining children in the backseat. Zenith's new 4-inch model has an optional DC car cord for the automobile's lighter.

• Video enthusiasts — The new small sets have an audio/video input jack for connection to a video cassette recorder or video camera, allowing "in the field" monitoring of video camera recordings.

January 7, 1986: The MIDLAND A&M MOTHERS' CLUB is having a TWAS THE SEASON PARTY in the hospitality room of the Texas American Bank at 7 pm. This is a come-and-go gathering for students and parents. Come on by and say "Howdy."

Home computers make great Christmas gifts

Although computers are appearing on more Christmas lists each year, many of us continually delay buying one for fear that it will soon be collecting more dust than data.

If selected carefully, however, a computer could follow you from kindergarten to college as well as help streamline a business for years.

According to the computer market experts at Zenith Data Systems, a major supplier of microcomputers to colleges and business, it helps to ask yourself a few questions before making a computer purchase.

Q. First, who will use the computer? Will the same system be used for education, home management and business applications?

A. If the computer will be used by high school or college students, or exclusively for business applications, a PC-compatible system would be the best investment. Businesses have adopted PC-compatible operating systems as the computing standard. Thus, you'll always have a wide selection of software available.

If the computer will be used specifically by young children, other computers are available that are designed to simplify learning although at the cost of versatility.

Q. Should I purchase a single- or dual-drive system?

A. Although most computers come standard with one floppy disk drive, if you plan to do much word processing, programming or maintain files and spreadsheets, you'll most likely need two drives.

Also, be sure that the computer's disk drives use both sides of a floppy disk, which allows for storing the maximum amount of information. Such drives use double-sided, double-density floppy disks.

Q. Do I really need a computer for the family?

A. If you don't have any idea how you'll use the computer but are sure that you need one, the odds are you don't. Computers are simply engines that run powerful software programs to help educate users or accelerate and organize specific business functions.

Q. Finally, how much should I spend on a system?

A. There are many variables involved. Once you have determined which system and features you need, compare prices and service. Be aware that sometimes the system advertised for $999.00 actually costs $1,500.00 after you've added the necessary options. Compare similarly equipped machines.

Computers designed to handle most home and business applications will usually retail at around $1,200.00 to $1,500.00. Retailers often run promotions where a monitor or popular software packages are included in the system price.

Many colleges recommend that students own a personal computer. Therefore, powerful computers for business and home use are expected to be popular gifts for the collegian this Christmas.

Kiwifruit is a versatile and delicious fruit

Kiwifruit originated in the Chang Kiang Valley of China. "Yang Tao," as it was called, was considered a delicacy by the court of the great Khans who relished the subtle fruit flavor and brilliant emerald-green flesh of this specialty fruit.

In the late 19th century, Yang Tao seeds were sent to England's Royal Botanical Gardens for cultivation. Shortly after, in 1906, a German orchardist brought the first vines to New Zealand, the country that ultimately gave kiwifruit its official name.

It was the efforts of dedicated growers such as James McCloughlin that turned the green rolling terrain surrounding New Zealand's Bay of Plenty on the North Island into bona-fide industry for the country. An acre planted by McCloughlin in 1937 still bears fruit today.

Available Year 'round

Agricultural testing of kiwifruit in the United States began as early as 1935, but it was not until the 1960's that the first commercial vineyards were planted in California. Today, 98 percent of the nation's kiwifruit production is in the Golden State.

Quick Kiwifruit Salad Ideas

- Add sliced kiwifruit to tossed green salads.
- Add sliced kiwifruit to fresh fruits or compotes.
- Just before serving, add chopped or sliced kiwifruit to chicken or turkey salad.
- For a pretty appetizer salad, arrange slices or wedges of kiwifruit and cooked shrimp on tender Bibb lettuce. Serve with a creamy lime-spiked mayonnaise dressing.

Arrange kiwifruit slices, thinly sliced ham and sweet red onion rings on salad greens. Serve with vinaigrette dressing.

- Use kiwifruit as a last-minute garnish for colorful gelatin salads.

Quick Kiwifruit Dessert Ideas

- Kiwifruit Pavlova: Spoon sweetened whipped cream into baked individual meringue shells, cream puff shells, sponge cake cups or over slices of pound cake. Top with slices of kiwifruit; serve immediately.

- Kiwifruit Tarts: Spoon or pipe softened cream cheese into tiny baked tart shells. Top with a slice of kiwifruit. Drizzle with melted apple jelly and chill thoroughly.

- Kiwifruit Romanoff: Drizzle sliced kiwifruit with orange liqueur. Spoon into stemmed goblets and top with a dollop of whipped cream. Or, layer the kiwifruit slices in parfait glasses with vanilla ice cream. Serve immediately.

- For an easy, help-yourself dessert, provide bowls of dairy sour cream, brown sugar and wedges of kiwifruit. Let each guest dip the kiwifruit into the sour cream, then into the brown sugar.

- Sliced or wedged kiwifruit arranged with other fresh fruits is a delicious, light ending to a meal. Crisp cookies are the perfect accompaniment.

(Remove the fuzzy brown skin of the kiwifruit with a paring knife before using.)

Quick Kiwifruit Entree Ideas

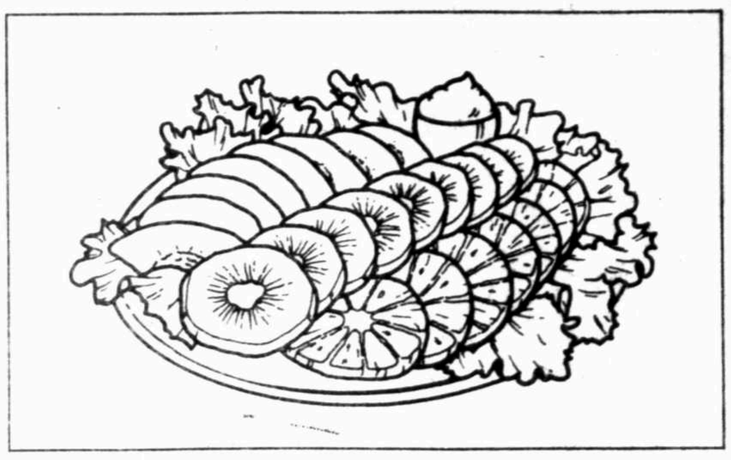

- Just before serving, add sliced kiwifruit to stir-fried chicken or fish and vegetables.

- Garnish roast pork, ham, turkey or beef with colorful slices of kiwifruit.

- Just before serving, add sliced kiwifruit to favorite recipe for sweet and sour pork.

- Just before serving, garnish lamb kabobs with wedges of kiwifruit.

- Add sliced kiwifruit to lime butter sauce; serve over grilled halibut or other whitefish. †

Kiwifruit can be used in many salads, desserts and quick entrees as a variety addition to your recipes.

When he's really special, give him diamonds, says the Jewelry Industry Council.

Diamonds and today's man

It took almost five centuries, but diamonds are again fashionable for men, observes the Jewelry Industry Council, pointing out that this Christmas is an ideal time to give that special man a diamond.

Initially, diamonds were worn only by men, for the gem's strength and invincibility were traits admired by Greek warriors who called the stone "adamus", or unconquerable. Warriors wore the gem on their breastplates to protect themselves and insure victory.

Many other attributes were given the stone. It was thought to protect the wearer from poison, evil spells and lunacy.

For centuries after they were discovered, only warriors and men of royalty were permitted to wear diamonds. The gem remained largely a masculine adornment until lapidaries learned the secret of symmetrical faceting to bring out the gem's beauty, and women were attracted to it.

Once the diamond's beauty was released, it was considered a feminine adornment, and it has taken the imagination, expertise and craftmanship of modern-day designers to bring the diamond back to men, the council notes.

Now, diamonds highlight men's jewelry, sparkling on handsomely tailored gold rings, cufflinks, tie tacs, pendants and other masculine accessories.

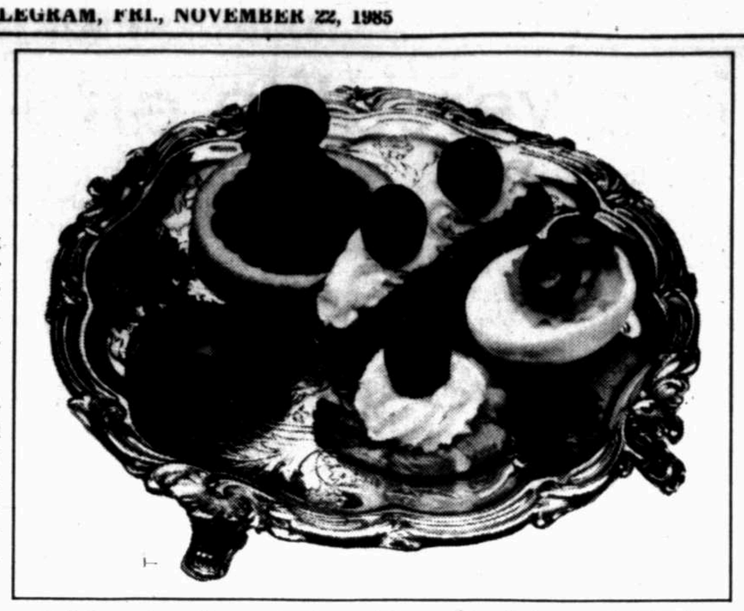

Men's watches show a tasteful use of the gem, either on the watch dial itself marking the hours or around the bezel.

In some ways, the diamond still projects its magic, because the man who wears beautifully designed diamond jewelry is regarded as important and affluent in today's society, the council observes.

Telephones: can we talk?

Here's how to take care of everyone on your shopping list with one thought . . . a telephone. They come in so many different styles. There's one for every room in the house and even outdoors. You can get a sleek, designer model for the living room, a speakerphone with answering machine for Dad's or Mom's study, a Porsche shaped model for the car buff at college, and for Grandma, a nice old-fashioned phone "like they had in the olden days" Or, if she doesn't see so well, a phone with jumbo numbers for easy dialing. There are speakerphones, phones with redial and memory capabilities, even phones with digital alarm clock radios for sleepy-heads . . . cordless phones for people who like to talk on the run; and phones that can be used in the bathtub or swimming pool.

The variety is endless. Just make your list and go down to your local phone dealer. Phones are an especially good buy. You can buy one for as little as $9.95 or spend over $200.00, depending on the model.

Delicious ripe olives come in a wide variety of sizes and styles for party hors d' oeuvres, appetizers and entrees.

Olives are sure party pleasers

California Ripe Olives love a party and no holiday gathering is complete without them. Lindsay brand Ripe Olives come in a wide variety of sizes and styles, making them the ideal complement for party hors d'oeuvres, appetizers and entrees. In fact, there are those who believe olives may have been the original "finger food." Have you ever seen a child with one large ripe olive on each finger, savoring every tasty bite?

Olive Hors d'oeuvres

Fill snow peas, tiny cooked red potatoes and jumbo cooked pasta shells with cream cheese. Garnish with Lindsay olives and your choice of pepperoni slices, caviar and green olive pieces.

Make mini kabobs of cheese-filled olives, pepperoni slices, cherry tomatoes, green pepper strips and miniature sausages.

Wrap snow peas around cheese-filled olives and secure with picks.

Top crackers with small tomato slices, prawns and cheese-filled olives.

Get a head start on the holidays

Give Dad a video "camcorder" a week ahead of time — then he'll know how to use it and be all ready to capture the kids' delighted faces and joyous squeals as they open their gifts.

A camcorder is a one-piece video camera and recording unit, easy to use and easy to carry. Camcorders, like regular video cameras and videocassette recorders, are available in three formats, VHS, Beta and the new 8mm version.

Grab-bag Christmas gift sensations

What do holiday office parties, school celebrations and social group gatherings have in common? Grab-bag gift exchanges! When names are passed around in this year's grab bag, it's time to show off your holiday creativity while keeping well within your price limit.

No matter whose name you draw, you can make your friend feel special with a customized gift you make yourself. Everything you need is at your local variety store: Small wicker baskets, plastic "pearl" jewelry, T-shirts and packages and bottles of Rit® Dye.

• Wicker Wonderland — Start with an unfinished wicker basket and dried white flowers such as baby's breath or seasonal foliage.

Turn dime store objects into grab-bag gift ideas with a little creativity.

Dye the basket colorful with Scarlet or Kelly Green Rit Dye (dip basket in a hot concentrated dye solution, dissolving 1 package powder dye or ½ cup liquid dye in 2 quarts of hot water; rinse in cool water).

Place the dried flowers in the same or a contrasting color dye-bath. Then, create an eye-catching "permanent bouquet" — complete with a dyed-to-match bow — for display anywhere in the home.

A set of dyed miniature baskets can also be presented as creative tree ornaments.

• Baubles, bangles and beads — White plastic "pearl" jewelry really takes to dye! Add color to an array of dime-store "pearls" using a hot concentrated dye solution (1 package powder dye dissolved in 1 pint hot water, or ½ cup liquid dye in one quart hot water).

For a dazzling effect, try the ombre technique on a strand of plastic beads: Immerse the entire necklace into the dye-bath for a few minutes, gradually remove ⅓ of the necklace, then ⅔ until the finished necklace is dyed in three subtle shades of the same dye color.

Then, dye bracelet and earrings for a matched set. Or, tie several strands together for an elegant Christmas tree garland.

• Shirt subjects — No one can resist a T-shirt, especially when it's personalized by you. Buy a white 100 percent cotton T-shirt to fit. Paint on your friend's name, a significant message or an attractive design using a hot concentrated dye solution.

Lay the T-shirt out on a protective covering and paint in your design with a brush. Dry, then iron the shirt to help "set" the dye, rinse and allow to dry; press again. If you wish, you can highlight the design with a permanent laundry marker.

Whether offered as grab-bag surprises or novel stocking stuffers, these creative crafts are guaranteed to make the holidays extra special this year.

For more imaginative dye ideas, write to RIT/5NC3, P.O. Box 307, Coventry, CT 06238.

Video cameras, recorders top Christmas gift lists

New video camcorders like this one from Canon are expected to be popular gifts this Christmas.

Video cameras and recorders and combined camera/recorder units or "camcorders" are expected to be popular gift items this Christmas.

"Camcorders should do particularly well," says Dr. Frank Viggiano, professor of consumer electronics at Indiana University of Pennsylvania.

"The convenience of the one-piece camcorders and their simplicity of operation will make them particularly appealing to the occasional video shooter and that's the largest part of the market," Dr. Viggiano says.

"Until camcorders came on the scene a little over a year ago, most separate camera-recorder systems appealed mainly to the advanced videographer, a minority."

Dr. Viggiano, who often appears on television to explain the fast moving world of consumer electronics, says that camcorders are the video version of point-and-shoot cameras.

New on the market

One of the newest camcorders is the Canovision unit made by Canon, the world leader in 35mm camera sales. It uses 8mm video tape which is good for up to two hours recording time. The 8mm tape cassettes are about the same size as standard audio tape cassettes.

Like other 8mm camcorders, this one is very light, weighing about 5.5 lbs. including batteries.

A key feature is an automatic focus system that is accurate even in the dark. Exposure is also fully automatic and there is an automatic color or so-called "white" balance system and an f/1.2 power zoom lens.

Easy of playback

Tapes made with the camcorder are played back on regular TV sets through a small adapter which doubles as a battery charger.

"Even the first time video shooter should be able to master most camcorders in a few minutes," Dr. Viggiano says. "That's why I expect them to do well at Christmas."

For a small fee, it can be entered in the National Sheriff's Association computerized network of 14,000 law enforcement agencies nationally, so that even if it turns up on the other side of the country authorities can check out who it belongs to.

Professional car theft, either "to order" or to chop up and resell the parts, is an estimated $4 billion a year business. A pro, who wants to maximize his profits, is likely to pass up even the jazziest sports car if it has etched windows.

The camcorder is ideal for making original "home movies", and for keeping a family history, and recording special events as they come along.

Picking the right camera gift for friends and familythis year

The holiday season is upon us and with it comes questions of what to buy for family and friends. 35mm cameras are growing in popularity because improved technology makes them easier to use and less expensive to buy than ever before.

Simplifying selection process

Selecting the right gift from the different 35mm camera categories can be confusing. The following information, provided by Konica Camera Corporation, is designed to simplify the process.

1. 35mm SLRs — These cameras are used by pros and amateurs alike, who want the advantage of interchangeable lenses.

They are designed for the photographer who wants the option of complete creative control in a camera that can also be set for fully automatic operations.

The Konica FT-1 Motor, for example, is a top-of-the-line compact SLR with a built-in autowinder for rapid sequence photography of candids and sports shots. Its autoload systems affords fumble free loading of film for even the most timid user.

For the newcomer to SLR photography, an ideal option might be an SLR with a minimal number of gadgets and dials.

The Konica TC-X is an affordable SLR that even automatically sets the proper ISO film speed setting.

But for most, it's the option of interchangeable lenses, such as an 80-200 zoom for faraway shots or 28mm for landscape or architectural photography, that makes ownership of a 35mm SLR a must.

Many quality cameras in this category are available in the $200 range.

2. 35mm Autofocus — If the recipient of your gift won't need lens options, you can still give the benefit of the large 35mm format by purchasing a 35mm autofocus camera.

This format, pioneered by Konica only seven years ago, is the fastest growing category of cameras. It is popular among SLR owners looking for a snapshot camera as well as among users of 110 cameras.

The most popular AF cameras are those with built-in autowinders, autoload systems and automatic flash, such as the ultra compact Konica MG.

Slightly less expensive are those without the autoload/wind feature, such as the Konica AF-3.

3. 35mm Fixed Focus — The simplest 35mm cameras on today's market are the fixed focus models, such as the Konica POP 10.

These extremely compact cameras are the least expensive 35mm cameras that one can buy. They are comparable in price and ease-of-use to 110 cameras, but they have the advantage of the 35mm format and can be used for taking prints or slides.

Nifty gift turns off car thieves

Here's a great gift idea for the person who has everything, including a car: A nifty little I.D. kit that can keep the car from being stolen.

Since a professional car thief has the ability to steal any car he really wants, the trick is to keep him from wanting it by etching a personal identification number on the windows.

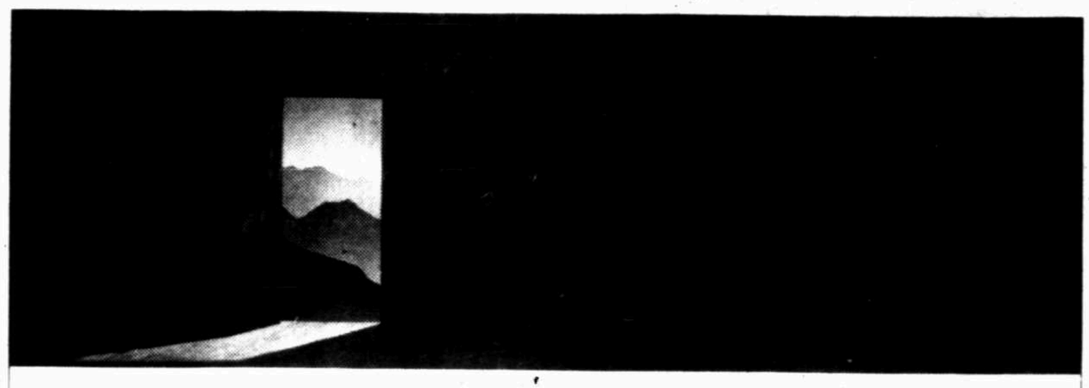

A thief can't sell a car with etched windows, so he'd have to lay out cash to replace the windows before he'd make any money. Not appealing.

Etched windows have been used in Europe for years, and now they're easy to have here with the new Norelco Property Identification System.

This kit, which sells for under $37.00, includes everything needed to chemically etch an I.D. code on car windows, plus an invisible ink pen, indelible pen and engraver for marking everything from furniture to furs.

Recent tests of car window etching in Ohio, Michigan, Kentucky and Rhode Island have shown reductions in car theft of 95 percent.

For even greater protection, and to maximize the possibility of getting a car back if it's stolen, the I.D. number should be registered with local police.

The world is waiting.

Imaginative toys provide year-round entertainment

Nothing frustrates parents more than purchasing toys at Christmas and finding them left unnoticed weeks later. Toys that promote active child involvement and creative input are the best bargain because they have lasting value.

Toys with themes that let youngsters invent their own variations prove most popular throughout the year. Some of Schaper's newest vehicles encourage kids to role-play exciting situations for hours of imaginative fun and adventure.

Daring young underwater explorers will love conquering the high seas with the new Stomper Monster Water Demon (SRV). This super huge amphibious transporter moves easily over rough terrain and through the water.

Monster Water Demon's sea research facilities include detachable research submarine, working crane, super wide tires for flotation and a water jet for extra steerability and power in the water.

Its fully articulated figure moves easily from the vehicle to the sub's controls to conduct a myriad of underwater experiments. Monster Water Demon is a great holiday value at under $25.

Schaper's new Future Force vehicles let youngsters play out the ultimate battle between good and evil in the uncharted areas of outer space. The Guardians protect their planet with Guardram and Mobile Outpost vehicles, while the Destroyers plot their attacks with the Crusher and Launcher.

Future force vehicles have moveable defense and attack systems, working headlights, three speeds and a free battery. And, at under $10, they won't strain holiday budgets.

Auto fans will love tinkering with new Stomper Zanees, crazy looking vehicles that need lots of fine tuning from their young owners.

Zanees feature bold, wild graphics, oversized engines that pop up through the hoods, and adjustable speed and engine noise levels. Stomper Zanees are also reasonably priced at approximately $9.

Finding toys that challenge a child's imagination will be easier this year than ever before. Schaper's vehicles are specially designed to get youngsters involved for hours of play.

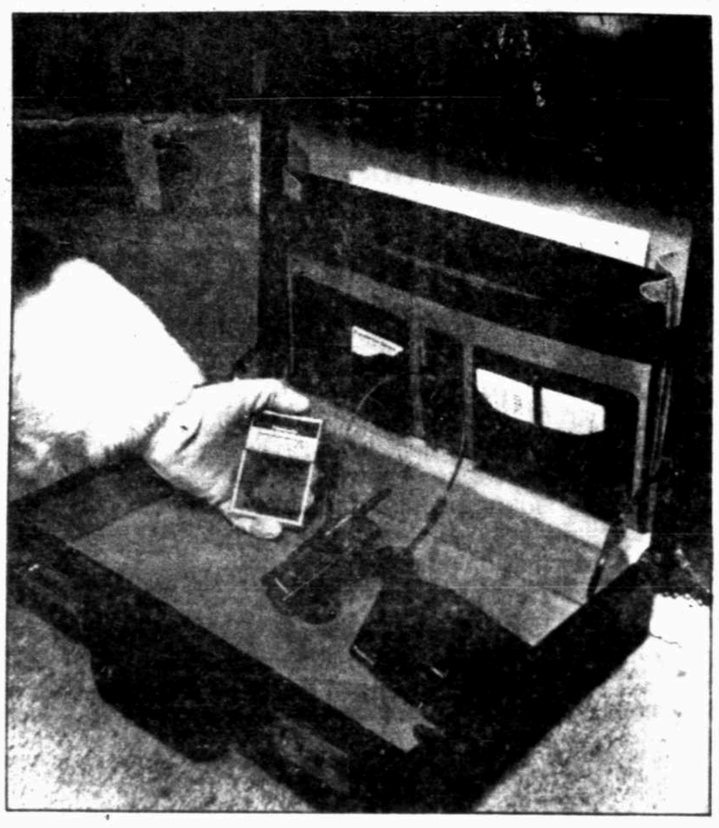

Toys that stimulate a child's imagination are a great holiday value.

Get portables for music on-the-go

Two of the most popular and useful gifts are the portable radio cassette player and the audio headset. These tiny sets can jog right along with their owners and are perfect company on trips, at the beach and on public transportation.

Many of the larger portables have detachable speaker systems for enhanced stereo separation. They contain AM/FM receivers and many are equipped with stereo recorders in addition to their playback capabilities.

Combining business and pleasure

Santa couldn't find this executive's stocking, so he hid three handy items for business and pleasure: a solar-powered calculator, a micro-cassette recorder and a compact stereo radio.

Proper wiring

Use correctly wired three-wire electrical outlets for your computer system. This is important for safety reasons (the three wire plug grounds the equipment) and to avoid erroneous data caused by electrical "noise" on the wires from refrigerator motors in your house, etc. A three-wire outlet is also important in order to minimize interference that your computer system might cause to TVs or radios in your house or apartment building. (If you get interference, turn off your computer and peripherals to see if the interference stops.

Give craft sets for leisure

Finding just the right gift for special relatives and friends is one of the more difficult challenges of holiday shopping. Hobby and craft sets, wonderful gifts that also spark ongoing interest in creative leisure time activities, can be the perfect answer to this problem.

Model railroading, for example, has been a popular hobby for many years. Adults and children alike love planning different track layouts and running engines and cars that resemble real-life trains. Also, in today's jet age, model railroading offers a great touch of nostalgia.

Youngsters just getting into hobbies also enjoy all types of model kits in plastic or wood. Constructing life-like boats, cars and planes in exact miniature scale teaches children how to follow directions and work in close detail. And, few things compare to the feeling of accomplishment that comes with completing a kit for the first time.

Beginner hobbyists will enjoy working on easy needlework projects that produce beautiful additions to home decor.

Needlepoint, embroidery, cross-stitch and rug hooking kits are available in many different designs with skill levels from elementary to expert.

Craft projects that take months to complete are excellent diversions during long winter months. Quilts, hook rug tapestries and needlepoint lampshades are among many larger projects that are fun to work on and create elegant display pieces.

Leisure time hobbies are not restricted to doing things with one's hands. Many people enjoy testing their imaginations with adventure games that let them become different characters in changing situations. Soap opera scenarios, science fiction adventures and historical battles are among the many roleplaying games that families and friends can enjoy together for hours.

Choosing memorable Christmas gifts will be easy and fun with hobbies and crafts to provide pleasure and satisfaction long after the holidays are over.

Hobbies and crafts are unique and personal Christmas gifts for the person who has everything. Hobby and craft items are creative gift choices for people of all ages.

Give stereo rack systems for an all-in-one gift

Woofers? Tweeters? Components? What's the best? You want to give a gift of stereo, but the language of hi-fi is one you've yet to master?

Solve the problem with a stereo rack system — the ideal gift for newlyweds — or that second home. These systems, combined by the manufacturer, include the components audio buffs want most for a fraction of what it costs to purchase them separately.

You'll find a combination of three to six matched components, depending on the model you select and the price you want to pay. These units include a receiver or amplifier, cassette deck and/or turntable, speakers and a cabinet. Some have additional parts like mixers and amplifiers.

Stereo rack systems sell for as little as $299 and provide high quality, high fidelity performance like expensive components, but without the trial and tribulation. They're available at very affordable price levels and you don't need a degree in audio engineering to hook one up!

Taking care of holiday plants

Whether you buy holiday flowers and plants for yourself or receive them as gifts, you'll enjoy them more if you give them a little care.

The Consumer Information Service of the Florists' Transworld Delivery Association (FTD) offers these tips for taking care of flowers and plants, during the holidays and throughout the year:

• Display arrangements of cut flowers in cool areas, but away from drafts. Keep them far away from heat sources, like the top of the television. TV sets are hot even when they're turned off.

• Water cut-flower bouquets daily with tepid water. For watering plants, follow the instructions that come with them or consult your florist.

• Cut flowers often are combined with evergreens in centerpieces and other arrangements for the holidays. When the flowers wilt, you can still enjoy the greens alone or replace the flowers with a few fresh blooms.

• If you want to create your own holiday flower arrangements, make sure the container is sparkling clean. Then cut the stems of the flowers on an angle with a sharp knife. Remove any foliage that will be under water. Fill the container with tepid water and add a floral preservative, a powder that dissolves, before arranging the flowers. Preservatives are inexpensive and available at florists.

Fruit, veggie friends show fun of fitness

Fergus, Charley Barley, Miss Pear, Zippy and Zappy. These are a few of the characters in Today's the Day! — the story of the Somersaults, a group of fruit and vegetable friends who live in a meadow and put their assorted talents and eccentricities together to plan a foot race to the top of a hill.

Fergus is a timid little fellow, badly in need of assertiveness training. Charley, a natural leader, has a persuasive voice and an organizational flair. The impeccable Miss Pear is the meadow's resident expert on style. And then there's that high-energy duo, Zippy and Zappy.

The theme of the story is that everyone's a winner; all you have to do is try — as Charley explains it — "step by step, little by little."

And, in the end, it is Fergus, along with the boisterous Charley, who win the contest — this despite an attempt by a pair of rowdies called the Mean Weeds to trip our heroes en route to victory.

"For the first time in my life," says the diminutive Fergus, "I feel 10 feet tall."

Today's the Day! is written by Joan Lexau and whimsically illustrated by Susanna Leigh. The book comes with a record or cassette tape ($12.00 for the set) that expands on the story and describes exercise routines that children three years old and up can follow as they listen.

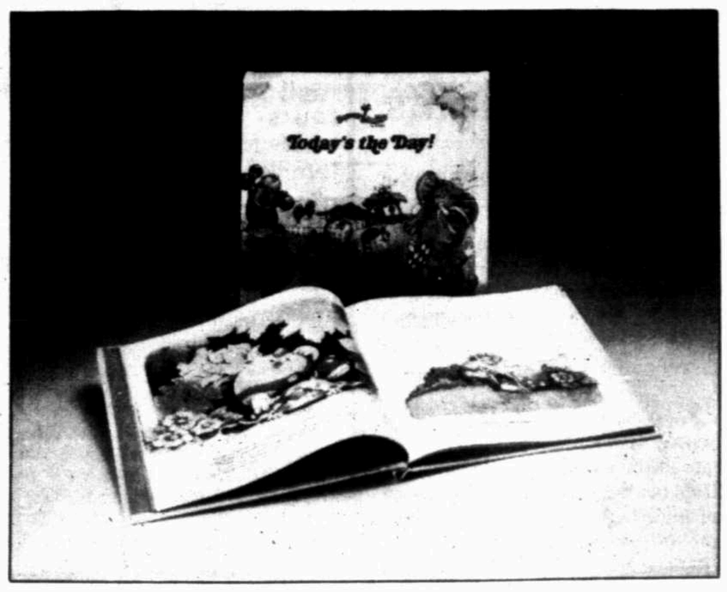

What's more, five of the story's characters — Fergus, Charley Barley, Miss Pear, and Zippy and Zappy — are available in cuddly 10-inch stuffed velour ($15.00).

The Somersaults were created by Avon to acquaint children with the fun of fitness and exercise and help them make friends with healthy fruit and vegetable "characters." There's even a Somersaults shampoo and cream rinse ($4.00 each) to encourage good grooming habits.

The Somersaults book and music sets, stuffed velour characters, and shampoo and cream rinse can only be purchased through an Avon Representative.

Ten inches high and made of cuddly plush velour, Fergus is one of five Somersaults characters.

Kids can listen to their own special record or cassette as they read along about Fergus, Charley Barley and the other Somersaults characters in "Today's the Day!', available in books and on cassettes.

Give the gift of security

What unexpected guest is least appreciated at Christmas or any other time? A burglar!

To make a burglar feel uninvited in your favorite person's home, give the gift of security — an automatic timer for lights and appliances.

An empty house is a burglar's invitation to walk right in. When lights and radios turn on and off at irregular intervals, it seems as though someone is home, so a would-be burglar will move on to more inviting premises.

Light/appliance timers such as the new Norelco Home Security models plug right into the wall electric outlet, and the lamp, radio or TV plugs into the timer.

The more timers operating in the house the better. For example, there could be one in the living room set to turn a light on at 5:00 PM and off at 10:30 PM, and another in the bedroom that goes on at 10:30 PM and off at 11:15, on again in the morning at 6:30 and off at 8:30.

Daytime is no problem; set a TV to go on loud for a couple of hours each day. One of the Norelco timers will even turn lights and appliances on and off at different times for a whole week.

Once you give your favorite person an automatic light/appliance timer, you can do still more by providing some tips on other ways to help deter burglars. The idea is to make the house look lived in.

When going away for even a couple of days, stop newspaper and mail deliveries, and ask a neighbor to come in once a day to rearrange blinds or curtains and check for unexpected packages that may have been left in front of the door.

Since some five million homes will be burglarized this year, it's well worth the few small steps to keep from being one of them.

A present for the house has great lasting power and will be appreciated by the entire family

By LIS KING

If you are tired of the sweater-tie-perfume gifting syndrome, you are a good candidate for a super present for the house, notes the Laminate Council of America.

For the same price that you are likely to sink into a bunch of well-meant but meaningless presents, you can probably come up with some home improvement or a beautiful piece of furniture that will enhance the whole family's lifestyle for countless Christmases to come.

The Council says that new kitchen countertops may sound prosaic, but submits that it would be hard to find a homemaker who would not delight in the great looks of new laminate counters in some fabulous new fashion color.

A new kitchen island is another gift that is sure to be appreciated on a daily basis and, if she has been complaining about those scuffed old kitchen cabinets, give them a face lift with high-pressure decorative laminate.

A new storage wall, laminate-covered, of course, for wipe-clean efficiency and fashion savoir faire, will be appreciated by the entire family, especially when it is designed to house TV, stereo and VCR equipment and paraphernalia.

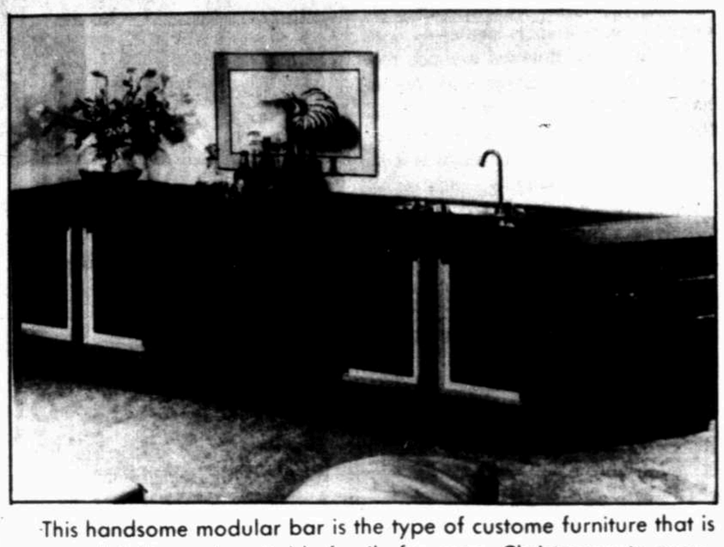

A bar is a good idea for the entertaining family and, if you have been looking high and low for a specific kind of occasional table or a computer desk to suit your brand of PC and printer, think of having it made to order.

So much sensational color and design is available in high-pressure decorative laminate today that any special style is possible. Be it a cocktail table in lacquer red, an entertainment storage unit in jade green to echo the room's color scheme, marble-look countertops, or reed design insets in those tired kitchen cabinet doors, laminate can produce it.

The way to get a custom piece of furniture is to call a local laminate distributor for a list of excellent fabricators. The distributor can be found in the phone book, and the fabricator can produce your dream table, bar or whatever.

Some fabricators can work from your description or sketch, while others will need plans drawn up by an architect or interior designer.

Either way, you will have a very special gift that will be around after countless generations of Christmas perfumes and ties are gone with the wind.

This handsome modular bar is the type of custome furniture that is sure to delight any hospitable family for many Christmases to come.

Surprise little girls by giving a traditional doll they will love

As Christmas approaches, even the most serious-minded grown-ups get caught up in the spirit of tradition, and remember with glee the favorite toys they received and loved as children.

Some adults even share those childhood memories and traditions with their own children, by giving their little ones toys and games that they themselves cherished.

One of those toys, which many of today's mothers remember as their favorite play friend, is the Ginny doll, made by Vogue Dolls. Just as Ginny won the hearts of little girls 30 years ago and more, now she is finding a whole new generation of children to fall in love with her wide-eyed innocence and "little girl" charm.

While most toys change over the years, this doll retains the look that her fans from the '50s will remember. In an age of punk rock, robots and military toys, Ginny expresses an old-fashioned sweetness, with her rosy cheeks, button nose, and combable curls or pigtails.

Like her predecessors, the Ginny of the '80s has a complete wardrobe of outfits for play, dress-up or party fun, and little girls can spend many happy hours dressing and grooming her for any occasion.

In addition, more than 60 Ginny dolls with different hair colors, hair styles, or outfits, are made each year, so that girls (or their mothers) can build an entire collection. Some are even available in porcelain (limited edition versions) a perfect gift to start, or add to, a little girl's doll collection.

When Ginny is under the tree, the fun doesn't stop with Christmas, either. Each doll comes with an invitation to join the Ginny Doll Club, which Mom might have belonged to back in the '50s. Just by sending in the card, little girls receive an official certificate of membership, a pin with Ginny's picture, and a periodic "Ginny Club Newsletter" with news and stories about Ginny.

A doll always makes a perfect Christmas gift for little girls. But a Ginny doll might well be that extra-special gift that will be long remembered and a tradition that today's little girls will continue someday with their own daughters, on and on for many Christmases to come.

Dolls are a Christmas tradition and the Ginny doll is almost as traditional as Christmas itself.

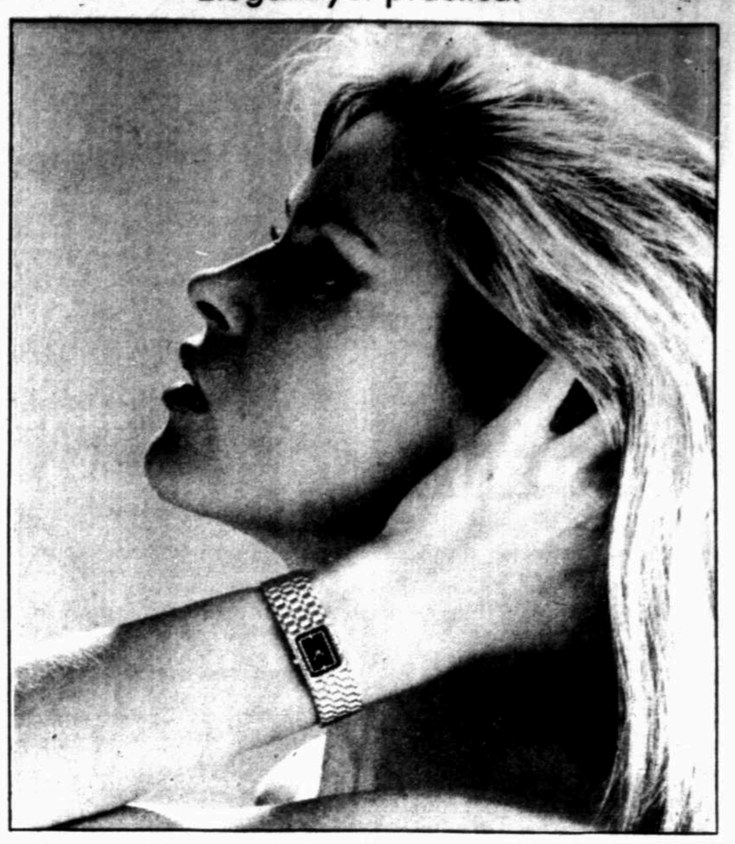

Save time with a new microwave oven

Microwave ovens are the perfect gift for today's two career families. Get home late? Guests coming for dinner and all your assets are frozen? Families on the run will enjoy the quick defrost-quick cook advantages of a microwave oven. Even kids can safely and easily heat up their own meals while Mom and Dad are out.

There's nothing like the freedom a microwave allows in planning and preparing elegant meals on the spot.

Worried about lack of counter space for your gift? Don't. Many of the new models can be installed beneath hanging kitchen cabinets so they don't take up valuable counter space. Microwaves cost anywhere from $400.00 to $1,500.00.

Elegant yet practical

A new watch makes a bold fashion statement for any woman of today, meeting the needs of the active woman.

Add fragrance glamour to this holiday season

Fragrance is a wonderful way to add a festive touch to the upcoming holiday season. Nina Ricci, Paris, creators of romantically feminine L'Air du Temps, offers some tips on making this holiday season extra special.

- Spray L'Air du Temps on lightbulbs throughout the house. The heat of the lightbulb will diffuse the fragrance.
- Many potpourris lose their freshness after they're exposed to air. By liberally spraying with L'Air du Temps Eau de Parfum or Eau de Toilette, you can bring the potpourri back to life. Bath oil, which is highly concentrated, can also be used to liven up your potpourri.
- Drench a cotton ball with perfume and place behind the cushions on a sofa or chair. Gentle floral notes will waft through the air creating a soft, festive ambiance.
- Instead of using a commercial air freshener, use your favorite fragrance as a special scent for the home. You will create a romantic aura.
- Put some perfumed dusting powder in your shoes. After a long day of Christmas shopping your feet will still feel refreshed.

Martin aims for reversal in MC obscenity case

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

John Barnhill, attorney for former Midland College economics instructor Dr. Jay Dee Martin, today said he feels "confident" that the U.S. Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals will reverse a free-speech judgment rendered by a federal judge against Martin on Nov. 15.

U.S. District Judge Lucius D. Bunton had ruled that Martin's use of certain profane and obscene words in the classroom were not protected by the free-speech Amendment to the U.S. Constitution.

In addition, the judge nixed the jury's verdict which had awarded Martin, 40, $28,000 for loss of his job after he was fired for using the words, which the Midland College administration and board had found objectionable, in a night economics class in the summer of 1984. The jury had deemed that Martin was discriminated against since instructors in similar situations were not fired. The administration in 1983 had warned Martin not to use obscene or profane words in the classroom and placed him on probation. Bunton said the jury erred in that instance and that no other Midland College faculty member was in a situation identical to Martin's. Barnhill said it was "completely absurd" to find someone in a completely identical situation.

Barnhill said he would file notice of appeal "very shortly."

"He (Judge Bunton) said the words were not part of free speech and are not constitutionally protected," said Barnhill, the Crosby County attorney and a friend of Martin, who today is teaching economics at Longwood College in Farmville, Va.

He said Bunton used a 1942 Supreme Court case to back up his ruling. However, Barnhill cited the more-recent Roth case on community standards. That case, he said, did hold that "fighting words" and words which appeal to the "prurient interest" were not constitutionally protected.

However, Barnhill contends that Martin's controversial words were neither "fighting words" nor lewd words.

"I find it hard to believe that words (such as "damn," "sucks" and "bullshit") so common in usage would offend anybody today."

Laser may end Midland's 'street wars'

By LANA CUNNINGHAM
Assistant City Editor

Nathan Johnson

After a few hours of driving up and down Midland's downtown streets, the engineer had one conclusion about the roughness: "We've had some good and bad." He added quickly, "Illinois and Texas are beautiful."

"They should be. We just rebuilt them," said Harvey Hanson, Midland's traffic engineer.

A pavement management system company hired by the Midland City Council during its Nov. 12 meeting has started the first of a three-phase program. On Thursday, the van equipped with a laser and computer began driving up and down the streets, testing the pavement surface.

For the second phase a Dynaflect machine will test the subgrade. And in the third phase all the computer data will be analyzed and a report on every block of each city street will be given local officials.

Nathan Johnson, field engineer with Infrastructure Management Services based in Arlington Heights, Ill., said the $500,000 laser machine is the only one in the United States and the company is buying another. The first was purchased in September 1983 and the first year was spent working on it to "get it useful" for the task of evaluating street surfaces. Since then, it has traveled across the United States doing pavement management programs for cities such as Oakland, Calif., Knoxville, Tenn., Gainesville, Fla., and Shawnee, Okla., and up to Canada to North Vancouver in British Columbia.

It will take about 10 days to get a surface rating of every Midland street, said Johnson, field engineer. Out of those days of driving the streets will come a report detailing the rutting, ride comfort, cracking and texture of pavement.

The laser machine resembles a passenger van equipped with unusually large bumpers in the front and rear. Inside these bumpers, however, is the laser which shoots a beam of light to the pavement. A Canon camera records that beam and angle and a computer records the data. This can be done 16,000 times a second, said Johnson. The bumper on back can operate as fast as 32,000 times a second.

Inside the machine is computer equipment which stores the data on floppy disks and also spits it out on paper.

It takes three persons to operate the machine — one to drive and the other two to operate the various computer components. Assisting Johnson are Dan Morley and Manuel Vega.

Before laser, a paving firm would hire people to walk up and down the street and visually evaluate the pavement. But Morley said while a person can cover about three miles a day, the machine can evaluate 30 to 50 miles for the same time. And in the long run, it's cheaper.

IMS evaluated Oakland's streets in two months using four people and the cost was $280,000. Another firm would have done the job using people to study the pavement and it would have required 13 man-years and $526,000, according to Johnson.

The computer-processed data will give Midland officials:

— A listing of the best and worst streets in town.

— Present conditions of the streets.

— Strategies for paving the streets and what each would do. "It would look at what 2 inches of asphalt would do and how long the road should last," Johnson said.

— Budget information on how to better spend money and a cost-benefit ratio.

The Dynaflect machine — the next step — will evaluate what's happening to the street under that 2 inches of asphalt.

"You can look at a surface and say it's cracked. But we find out why it's so bad. If the base is good you won't have to spend the money tearing up the street — just resurface it. And the opposite may be true. The street may look good but the base is bad, so putting asphalt on top won't fix it," Johnson said.

In about 2½ months, city officials should have their analysis in hand, he noted. The laser study will take 10 days, another 25 to 30 days will be needed for the deflection analysis, and the computer analysis for the management program will require another 30 days.

"Pavement," said Johnson, "is a science."

TRC hopeful Sharp pushes rail safety

By RAMONA NYE
Staff Writer

Texas Railroad Commission candidate Sen. John Sharp said Thursday he wants railroad safety to become one of the top concerns of the commission and Texans.

"I think it (railroad safety) ought to be a concern of the public and the railroad commission as well," said the 35-year-old Democratic candidate, who was in Midland on a campaign stop.

"Unfortunately a lot of us become interested in things once they already happen."

"We are dead last in virtually every safety category you can think of," Sharp said.

The state's poor safety record is not caused by it's 13,000 miles of tracks, as some people claim, Sharp said.

Visual obstructions at railroad crossings, unsafe storage of chemicals on trains and deteriorating railroad ties cause many of the railway accidents in Texas, he said.

Other announced candidates for the commission post are Republicans Milton Fox and William McNaughton for one opening on the three-member board. The commission regulates oil, gas, mining and transportation industries in the state.

Sharp, a senator from Victoria, sponsored legislation that gave the Railroad Commission authority in September to oversee safety on the rails. The Interstate Commerce Commission regulated railroad safety before the legislation was passed.

Texas had the most railroad accidents nationwide in 1984 for the following categories:

— 82 adults deaths in railroad accidents.

— 205 adult injuries from railroad accidents.

— 94 damaged cars carrying hazardous materials.

— $4,005,375 worth of damage from accidents involving hazardous materials.

— 40 train-to-train collisions.

— 313 derailments.

— 174 track related accidents.

— 25 rail-highway crossing accidents.

Sharp also said he is against severance tax increases and higher drilling fees proposed for the oil and gas industries.

"When you tax something, you get less of it. We're not in the business to get less oil and gas," Sharp said.

He said oil and gas production can only be increased by providing incentives, not by taxing the industry.

Sharp said he is against deregulating the trucking and transportation industry.

"We cannot simply totally deregulate the trucking and transportation industry and expect there to be safety standards," he said.

Wageman resists temptation in 'Smokeout'

Tom Wageman

By RON GILMORE
Staff Writer

It was 9 a.m. and one question that hung heavy in the air at a Thursday press conference announcing the merger of RepublicBank First National Midland and Republic Bank Midland, finally got asked.

"Have you had a cigarette yet Tom?" exploded an over-curious newsman.

Tom, of course, is Tom Wageman, president of RepublicBank First National and 1985's honorary chairman of Midland's Great American Smokeout campaign.

Wageman laughed and the room laughed with him.

"No I haven't smoked a cigarette since midnight and I won't, God help me, have another one until this day is over, at the very least," he stated good-naturedly.

Holding up a roomy, gray sweatshirt emblazoned with the GASO mascot, a big green frog with kissable, red lips, exclaiming, "Kiss me, I don't smoke," Wageman peered down through his bifocals to announce the uniform of the day."

"I had this on up until the conference," he bragged. "I barely had enough time to get changed."

Wageman confirmed a pre-conference briefing by those who work by his side.

"I talked to him when I got to work this morning and he said that he had been up since 5:30 and hadn't had a cigarette yet," stated Eleanor Josting, assistant vice president of marketing.

Still another unimpeachable source backed up Wageman's proclamations.

"He did real well up until the time he went to work," reported Mrs. Tom Wageman.

Mrs. Wageman reported that her husband was "still doing real well" and was eating apples and raisins.

The apples and raisins, of course, were a gift from the American Cancer Society to ease the way for the uneasy executive.

2 p.m.

"See this?" exclaimed Wageman as he waved his hand over a desk-sized basket of goodies, sitting on his, er, desk.

"This was full of apples and raisins and candy," he stated. With true pride, he took a large bite out of a MacIntosh, mumbling that he had "hardly eaten any candy at all."

Among the candy was a cherry-flavored pacifier, uneaten.

Reeves County Sheriff indicted for tax fraud

From Staff and Wire Reports

PECOS — Reeves County Sheriff Raul Florez was indicted Thursday by a federal grand jury on charges of falsifying income tax returns.

The first part of the two-count indictment alleged Florez said in his 1979 tax return that he derived no profit from his food service business at the Pecos County Jail.

According to the indictment, Florez "had derived substantial and material profits from his food services business."

County attorney Scott Johnson said it is not illegal for Florez to run the food service at the jail, but "...he's not suppose to make a profit on it."

All county sheriffs have the option of contracting with a third party to prepare jail meals or hiring cooks themselves and submitting expense vouchers to the county commission for reimbursement, Johnson said.

The indictment also alleged Florez reported in his 1981 income tax return that his adjusted gross income was $20,679 when his "adjusted gross income was an amount substantially greater."

According to the indictment, Florez reported an income of $24,944.20 for 1979.

Florez, 48, who began working in law enforcement 29 years ago, was first elected sheriff in 1976. He has denied the allegations.

"This is strictly political," Florez said Thursday. "Since I was elected sheriff, there has been a conspiracy here to get me out of office."

Vowing he will not step down from office, Florez emphasized he will fight the allegations.

"This is a good system. The United States is one of the best countries in the world," he said. "No where else on earth can a poor boy born under a mesquite bush from a poor Mexican woman be a chief law enforcement officer or even president of this country."

"We will know when the trial comes about all these people who are going to testify against me," he said.

Florez declined to elaborate.

Florez's arraingement will be Dec. 2 and the trial will begin Dec. 30 in Pecos with Federal Judge Lucius Bunton presiding.

Grand jury probe allegedly complete on Sprayberry

By MARK LEWIS
Staff Writer

A Midland County grand jury Thursday apparently completed an investigation into alleged improprieties by Midland Justice of the Peace Charlie Sprayberry, but it was not known this morning if any indictments had been handed down.

Grand jury deliberations are secret, but rumors about an investigation of Sprayberry had been circulating the County Courthouse for months before Special Prosecutor Andy Shuval of Austin presented the case to the jury Wednesday. The jurors convened for another session Thursday, but no information about those deliberations had leaked out by this morning.

Sprayberry, 44, is on a hunting vacation, according to his staff. Calls to his house went unanswered.

The investigation reportedly began as a joint effort by the Midland County District Attorney's Office and the Midland County Attorney's Office, but District Attorney Al Schorre declined to comment Thursday and County Attorney Mark Dettman was out of town and unavailable for comment.

Exercise-nut Silkwood proves diabetics can run with the pack

By RON GILMORE
Staff Writer

Before Chris Silkwood ran in a marathon race up Colorado's Pike's Peak, she made sure she took her insulin.

"A diabetic can never live a 'normal' life," states Ms. Silkwood, a widely known health fitness expert and director and co-founder of Houston's Phoenix Spa. "There are always certain limitations and you just learn to control it."

The authoress of a video exercise cassette being sold across the nation and the occasional guest on television talk shows including NBC's "Today Show," Silkwood never forgets that she has the disease; she also does not let it stop her from doing what she pleases.

"I believe in exercise," said the 33-year-old former physical education teacher. "A lot of people think that all you have to do when you have diabetes is to take insulin. That's just not so. Taking insulin is what you have to do to stay alive. It's amazing how many people use a disease as an excuse not to be healthy."

Exercise is a daily constant for the statuesque Ms. Silkwood who practices, at work and home, what she preaches across the country. Currently she is on a 12-city tour to promote her videotape, entitled "Silkwood" and made a two-day stop in Midland-Odessa, speaking both days at Odessa Country Club.

Other stops include Chicago, Kansas City, New York, Palm Beach and Austin.

"A lot of people who come to hear me speak are just very active people who want to know more about health," she said. "I talk with them about behavioral re-education, prioritizing, fitness 'myths' and creating a workable program of exercise."

Some of those myths include the concept of "spot reducing."

"There's no such thing," she states. "A lot of people think that they're going to 'tone-up' areas of fatty tissue. It can't be done. Fat must be burned off by exercise, you can't tone it up."

She also speaks out against diets ("they sabotage our bodies and weight control"), weight-lifting for weight loss ("lifting weights won't drop pounds") and the dangers of exercising over age 50 ("it's dangerous not to exercise over 50 but exercises must be suitable.")

Ms. Silkwood also has some serious doubts about some of the exercise video tapes available in today's market.

"So many of them were done by self-taught people who don't really understand the proper way to do things," she said. "A lot of them use 'high-impact' exercises instead of 'low-impact.'

High-impact exercises, according to Ms. Silkwood, require a high amount of skill and usually involve upbeat music, a lot of jumping motions and generally last 30 to 40 minutes.

"I know very few people who can consecutively jump for 30 minutes without feeling like they've been beat to death," she said. "In low-impact exercises we keep the upper body active and don't involve the lower body as much."

"The 'popular' jumping aerobics has created a whole new breed of athletic injuries — to feet, shins, lower back, knees, and other joints — for both aerobics instructors and their students," she said. "Low-impact aerobics are a system of lively, uncomplicated dance steps combined with vigorous arm and upper body movement to high energy music."

The vigor of the routines and the emphasis on arm and upper body movements more than compensates for the lack of jumping to provide a good workout for the cardiovascular system.

"That's why conductors have such long life spans," she states."We are seeing all the beginnings of a nationwide trend toward low-impact aerobics. Because it requires a different skill level to teach, we won't see the majority of instructors embracing this system immediately. But once the public is educated about low-impact versus high impact aerobics, instructors will have no choice but to teach aerobics the safe way."

The low-impact method of aerobics is nothing new to Midlanders, according to YMCA spokeswoman Judy Reuter.

"We've been offering it here for about two years," she said. "High impact exercises, like anthing, can do more harm than good if you do too much of them. If a person does jumping exercises six to seven days a week, one or two times a day — yes, it will be harmful."

Still, the five year veteran of aerobics instruction is cautious of Ms. Silkwood's technique.

"If you do only low-impact aerobics, it has a tendency to put a stress on the back if you're not careful," she explained. "We try to combine the two in all of our classes."

Accident victim cuts up his pickup seat for warmth

From Staff Reports

A 25-year-old Midlander was forced to cut up his pickup seat and use it for warmth after a traffic accident left him stranded for almost seven hours Friday morning in lows that reached 32 degrees.

"He may have saved his own life by cutting up his seat to keep warm," said Department of Public Safety spokesman Jim Nance.

David Henry Reed of Midland broke his leg and possibly broke several of his ribs after his 1982 Chevrolet pickup rolled over once at State Highway 349 and County Road 1213.

Reed told Department of Public Safety officials that he crawled to the roadway and attempted to flag down passing motorists after his accident at 1 a.m. today.

Reed said he crawled back into his overturned vehicle after no one would stop to pick him up. The accident scene was discovered at 7:30 a.m. today.

Reed was reported in stable condition at Midland Memorial Hospital this morning.

In other police reports, the theft of three rings worth $6,900 were reported by Dorothy Burton, 2408 Stutz Place, on Thursday.

Ms. Burton told police officials that the rings were taken sometime between 8 a.m. and 1:10 p.m. at her residence on Thursday. Two wedding rings worth $6,000 and one gold pinkie ring worth $900 were reported missing.

Temporary water permits may stop 'questionable practices'

By STEVE LEVINE
Reporter-Telegram
Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Legislation authorizing the state to issue temporary water diversion permits would help alleviate some current practices of questionable legality, representatives of two state agencies told a special House panel Thursday.

In a decision on the controversial Stacy Dam project last year, the Supreme Court of Texas ruled that the Texas Water Commission must count all previously granted water rights — including those permit holders may not have yet used — as unavailable. In the past, the commission had considered authorized — but unused — water rights as available to persons seeking new permits.

An assistant attorney general and a Water Commission official Thursday told the Water Rights Subcommittee of the House Natural Resources Committee that temporary permits would allow the state to comply with the Stacy Dam decision and still make water available to new users.

"The (temporary) permits could be used for a term of years keyed to the agency's projections of future use under the existing water rights," Nancy Lynch, chief of the attorney general's environmental protection divison, told the subcommittee.

SMOKEOUT

With an apple in his right hand and a pencil to thump in his right, Wageman told his sad tale.

"They (ACS) came to me and asked me to do this," said the 51-year-old banker. "I wouldn't have done it if they hadn't asked me, but I'm involved in so many things and get asked to do things now and then and I always try to help out."

Wageman, still in his banker's suit, but now sporting a large button stating, "It ain't easy, but I'm trying," reflected on how it all started.

"I didn't start smoking until I was in college," he said. "Of course I tried to quit once before. It was in the early 1960's and I quit for six weeks. I was just a miserable person — not a nice guy to be around."

Wageman admitted that his doctor has told him that he "smokes too much, drinks too much coffee and is overweight."

"I have noticed, however, that I don't drink as much coffee when I don't smoke," he said. Wageman jokingly stated he has "eight cups of coffee before he ever gets to the office."

Twenty minutes later, the determined financier ushered a reporter out of his office, smiling and waving goodbye with the apple.

Later that afternoon...

"We're just all real proud of him," blushes an assistant. "He ate the apples and chewed the gum. He had people in and out of his office all day who were smoking and he never once had a cigarette."

Friday morning...

"We haven't seen him yet," said a worried secretary. "He's supposed to have gone for a physical this morning, so I guess it's good thing he wasn't smoking yesterday. We don't know if he went back to smoking or not. We'll let you know when we find out something."

EXERCISE

Ms. Reuter noted that one class, "Shape" uses low-impact aerobics exclusively.

She agrees, however, that many of the exercise tapes available are not as effective as they should be.

"Many of the tapes are by people who are self-taught," she echoed. "When buying a tape, you have to be cautious. Look for instructors who urge you to go at your own pace and who stop to take heart rates."

Low impact aerobics, however, are just one area of emphasis of Ms. Silkwood's Phoenix program.

She also tells others how to "party and still stay slim."

"This is especially important now that the holidays are coming up," she said. "People having parties need to accept responsability for others' needs."

Serving such low-fat items as hot cinnamon and cranberry tea, lemon cheesecake with ricotta and fruit smoothies, can make a party festive, but low-cal, she insists.

While her following at the Phoenix and in her presentations around the country include a variety of people interested in health, Ms. Silkwood also noticed an increase of yet another health-minded group of individuals — other diabetics.

"It was amazing," she said. "After I was on the Today Show, we started getting a lot more diabetics coming to the Phoenix."

Texas education report expected

AUSTIN (AP) — A non-profit educational research organization said today in releasing two reports on public education, "It is clear that there is genuine desire to provide the best educational system possible for our state."

Texans for Quality Education, Inc., (TQE) which was formed in May 1984, co-sponsored studies by Texas A&M University and the Lyndon B. Johnson School of Public Affairs on recent education reform legislation.

TQE planned to release a summary of the reports today, and said it would offer recommendations later.

Garrett sentenced to eight years for shooting teen-ager in the back

From Staff Reports

A 19-year-old Midlander was sentenced to eight years in prison Thursday by 142nd District Judge Pat Baskin for reckless injury to a child.

Ricky Ladell Garrett received the sentence for shooting 14-year-old Merry Preston in the back with a shotgun on Aug. 8.

Garrett was not sentenced on two other charges — intentional injury to a child, which can result in a life prison sentence, and criminal negligence to a child, which is a misdemeanor.

Anticipating a possible courtroom disturbance, Lt. Hugh Buzzel said he assigned two extra deputies to maintain order in the courtroom, in addition to one baliff.

"We do this quite frequently if the defendant is known for being a little unruly," Buzzel said.

Garrett's earlier actions of hitting his fist against a wall and wringing his hands, caused the Sheriff's office to be cautious and assign the extra deputies to the courtroom during sentencing, Buzzell said.

"We just wanted to prevent anything from happening," Buzzel said.

Everything was calm after the sentencing, he said.

Federal court to hear Tri-Service, Tamaray case

From Staff Reports

A dispute over the drilling of an oil well between Midland Southwest Corp.'s Tri-Service Drilling Co. and Tamaray Inc. has been transferred from Midland's 238th State District Court to federal court in Midland after Tamaray filed for bankruptcy under Chapter 11 for reorganization under the U.S. Bankruptcy Code.

Tamaray is involved in oil-and-gas development.

The suit was initiated by Tri-Service to collect a $606,943.90 debt incurred in its drilling a well for Tamaray in 1984. Tamaray, in its refusal to pay the debt, subsequently lodged a suit against Tri-Service and claimed it was damaged by $5 million due to Tri-Service's alleged negligence in drilling the well hole on the Nichols Lease in Midland County. In addition, Tamaray asked for $5 million in punitive damages to bring its countersuit to $10 million.

U.S. District Court Judge Lucius D. Bunton has set the case for trial on March 10, 1986.

Tamaray alleged it lost 150,000 barrels of oil and 300,000 mcfs (thousand cubic feet) of gas valued at $4 million and expended $1 million in fishing in the original hole and in drilling and completion expenses.

Tamaray claimed Tri-Service was negligent in drilling the hole at an excessive bit weight and rotary speed; drilling the hole with a bent or crooked Kelly and causing abnormal wear on the casing, allowing salt water to contaminate the well and bore and affect mud properties; using improper pump pressure; and failing to properly supervise drilling activities.

In addition, Tamaray accused G. Arthur Donnelly III, vice president of Tri-Service, of interfering with Tamaray's contract rights and business dealings with third parties and with defaming, slandering and libeling Tamaray's name and reputation in the business community and with encouraging other third parties to cease doing business with Tamaray.

Tri-Service and Donnelly took exception to Tamaray's charges.

The drilling company said Tamaray's accusations against Donnelly were "indefinite, ambiguous, vague, obscure and unintelligible."

Before the case was transferred to federal court, Tri-Service had asked the state court to dismiss the Tamaray suit in order to avoid "vexatious litigation, multiplicity of suits and the possibility of inconsistent jury verdicts."

The drilling agreement between Tri-Service and Tamaray was made in late July 1984 and drilling was started in mid-August 1984. A year later, Tamaray filed for bankruptcy.

Chambers concur on highway repair

From Staff Reports

ODESSA — The Greater Odessa Area Chamber of Commerce executive committee has unanimously voted to support the Midland Chamber of Commerce's effort to reconstruct and widen a portion of State Highway 158 (the Garden City Highway).

Noting that the present SH 158 was designed to handle only 4,700 vehicles per day, Odessa chamber president John Landgraff said the 1984 average traffic volume was 6,100 vehicles per day.

"The present overload situation on SH 158 is more than just the obvious inconvenience," Landgraff said. "It is becoming an increasing hazard." He further noted that, during the past three years, 57 accidents have occurred on the stretch of highway in question and four people have been killed.

"We are in complete agreement with the Midland Chamber that Highway 158 is past due for improvement," Landgraff said.

The highway committees of both chambers are presenting written and oral support for the requested project, he said.

Second Odessan sentenced in 'feud' murder

By FRANK TROMBLEY
Staff Writer

ODESSA — A 20-year-old southside Odessan became the second man to be sentenced to prison for the April 1985 murder of a 19-year-old man.

A 161st District Court jury of eight men and four women, after once reporting they were deadlocked in punishments deliberations, finally determined Robert Patino should serve 10 years in prison for driving the car from which the shot was fired that killed Daniel A. Castillo Jr. April 2.

After deliberating close to four hours Thursday jurors notified District Judge Tryon Lewis they were deadlocked, unable to reach unanimous agreement on a sentence for Patino.

Lewis called the jury into the courtroom about 2:15 p.m. and read to the 12 men and women what is known as the Allen charge, often referred to as the dynamite charge. In effect, under the Allen charge, a judge informs jurors they should make arrangements to be away from home for as long as it takes them to arrive at a unanimous verdict, that they will be sequestered until the deadlock is broken.

The judge then ordered the jury panel back into the jury room to continue deliberations and less than an hour and a half later they announced agreement on a sentence had been reached.

The jury deliberated less than two hours Wednesday to find Patino guilty of murder in the death of Castillo.

In sentencing Patino to prison, jurors rejected his attorney's plea for a probated sentence. G. David Smith had earlier asked jurors to find Patino had acted in self-defense.

Assistant District Attorney Carson Grimm, taking note of a long-standing feud between several southside Odessa families, urged jurors to sentence Patino to life in prison.

To assess less than a prison sentence, Grimm said, would, in effect, send out word to others that "your first killing is basically free."

Robert Patino, his 18-year-old brother, Carlos, and their 17-year-old cousin, Israel Patino, were indicted for murder in the death of Castillo, attempted murder in the shooting and wounding of 17-year-old Terrence Lopez and aggravated assault on 18-year-old Rene Gomez. Israel Patino was convicted of murder in July and sentenced to 50 years in prison. He is alleged to have fired a 30.06 rifle during the attack on the three. Carlos Patino is yet to come to trial on any of the charges.

Christmas handbell festival rings in free concert at First Presbyterian

From Staff Reports

The sixth annual Midland Christmas Handbell Festival will be held at 4 p.m. Saturday in the Fellowship Hall of First Presbyterian Church, 800 W. Texas Ave.

About 200 handbell ringers from Texas and New Mexico, representing several denominations, will be participating. Festival clinicians will be Thomas Roberts and Susan Roberts of First Presbyterian, Ty Morris of Crestview Baptist Church and Brad Kisner of First United Methodist Church.

The Festival is hosted by the Music Department of First Presbyterian. Roberts is director of music ministries at First Presbyterian and festival chairman.

The concert is free.

Watercolor exhibit in Monahans

From Staff Reports

MONAHANS — An exhibit of works by members of the Watercolor West Society is hanging in the gallery and parlor area of the Monahans New Community Center, Fourth and Calvin streets, through Saturday.

The all-original, watercolor-on-paper show was organized by Linda Jordan of Monahans, vice president of WWS. WWS was formed two years ago and includes members from West Texas. Mary Broadwell, watercolorist and potter from Odessa, is president.

Judge for the show was artist Betty Lynch, Midland. Ms. Lynch was a featured artist in American Artist Magazine in 1982 and 1984.

The public showing opened Thursday.

Legal assistants electing officers

From Staff Reports

Gay Hock has been elected chairperson of the Legal Assistants Association/Permian Basin's nominating committee to propose association officers for 1986.

Ms. Hock is a certified legal assistant (CLA).

The election of new officers will be held at the association's annual meeting in January.

Denise Holden, CLA, is current president of the group, which was chartered in 1985. Other officers are Cel Wiginton, CLA, first vice president; Ms. Hock, CLA, second vice president; Marcia McGinnis, secretary, and Melinda Hardwick, CLA, treasurer.

Persons in the legal profession who might wish to join the association may telephone Ms. Hock at 684-5782 for addition information, according to Brenda Ringener, association publicist.

Bankrupt man owes IRS $85 million

STATE

FORT WORTH (AP) — Dallas race car promoter Donald R. Walker already swimming in debt, must now add to his list of collectors the Internal Revenue Service which contends he and his wife owe the agency $85 million.

According to documents filed in U.S. Bankruptcy court in Fort Worth the debt dates back to 1981 and is owed by Walker and his wife Carol, in back taxes, interest and penalties.

The IRS said in the documents that Walker has not filed his income tax return for 1984, and two of his businesses — DRW Investments Ltd. and DRW Service Inc. — have never filed returns.

Another Walker company, DRW Realty Services Ltd., did not file corporate tax returns for 1984, the IRS said.

Walker "has failed to voluntarily supply information or records necessary to determine the correct income tax liability for himself, the debtor corporations, and the debtor partnerships for the years 1980 through 1984," the IRS said.

But Walker's bankruptcy attorney Steve McCartin said Walker owes only $1 million to $2 million in back taxes.

Walker has not filed returns in years specified by the IRS, but accountants are assembling the returns now, McCartin said.

The IRS alleges Walker owes $49.01 million for taxes and $27.59 million in interest and penalties.

Mrs. Walker owes $9.082 million in taxes, interest and penalties dating to 1981, the IRS said in the filed documents.

More than $6.85 million sought by the IRS is for taxes, and the balance is for interest and penalties. The federal agency has attached a lien to all of Mrs. Walker's property.

McCartin said Walker has cooperated with the IRS and the agency has overestimated Mrs. Walker's tax liability.

Walker gained visibility as the promoter of the Dallas Grand Prix auto race in July 1984.

On March 25, 1985, Walker, four real estate firms and 85 limited partnerships filed for protection under Chapter 11.

When Walker filed for bankruptcy protection, his attorney said a lack of cash forced Walker into Chapter 11.

Divorced Davis' scrap over back taxes

DALLAS (AP) — Priscilla Davis, former wife of Texas millionaire T. Cullen Davis, sat in the back of a Dallas courtroom hoping for a quick end to a case that is pitting her and her former husband against one another again.

This time the Internal Revenue Service is the battle initiator, claiming it is owed more than $600,000 in back taxes on the $3.3 million divorce settlement the couple agreed to when they broke off their marriage in 1979.

But Ms. Davis and Davis both denied responsibilities Thursday for the taxes on their settlement.

Ms. Davis' attorney, Robert Mankoff, said the funds his client received in the settlement represented her tax-free share of the couples' coummunity property.

But Fort Worth attorney Harry E. Bartel, representing Davis, said the divorce settlement actually involved a purchase by Davis of his ex-wife's share of their assets.

The couple were pitted against one another in court in the past when Davis was charged with murder in the 1976 shooting death of his 12-year-old stepdaughter, Andrea Wilborn, after a masked gunman entered the Davis mansion in Fort Worth and wounded Ms. Davis and killed her lover, Stan Farr.

Davis was aquitted and later was found innocent of charges that he conspired to murder a judge who was handling the divorce.

Bartel said the divorce settlement money Ms. Davis recieved was income, and therefore she should be held responsible for any IRS debt stemming from the transaction.

IRS Attorney Deborah Butler asked U.S. Tax Judge Stephen Swift to rule that one of the two received a taxable gain as a result of the settlement. The IRS is seeking either $647,294 from Ms. Davis or $662,262 from Davis.

Swift said he hoped to make a decision in the case soon after a Jan. 21 deadline for filing post-hearing briefs.

When asked to comment on the couple's renewed publicity, Ms. Davis responded, "I hope everyone is as bored with it as I am."

She still has a civil case pending against Davis.

Autumn Hills fatality entered 'in good health'

Defense lawyer Tom Sartwelle got pharmacist Jeannine Watson to acknowledge that keeping track of medications at a facility like a nursing home can be a difficult job. She said such records could involve up to 100,000 individual entries per month in a facility with 100 patients.

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — An 87-year-old woman who prosecutors say was the victim of a nursing home's neglect was in reasonably good health when she entered the Texas City facility, according to a medical expert.

Elnora Breed died on Nov. 20, 1978, 47 days after she entered Autumn Hills Convalescent Center. The nursing home and five present and former employees are on trial for murder by neglect in the woman's death.

The defense has said there was no neglect in Mrs. Breed's death. Defense lawyers are expected to try to show that she was a sick, elderly woman who died of natural causes.

Dr. William Steffee of Cleveland testified Thursday that Mrs. Breed's medical records show no reason for her death.

"I don't see any evidence of cancer. There's no evidence of other disease," said Steffee, chairman of the department of medicine at St. Vincent's Charity Hospital.

The records included a history of illnesses and complaints common in old women, he said. Mrs. Breed had been treated for colon cancer three times, but the doctor said she had recovered each time.

"If they survive five years it's chalked up as a cure," he said, noting Mrs. Breed was first treated for cancer in 1961.

Overall, Steffee said the records from a hospital and another nursing home showed a woman who was "reasonably active for 87 years of age."

"She's doing well. This isn't a lady with cancer," he said as he looked at her records.

Steffee is scheduled to return to the witness stand when the trial resumes Monday. Jury selection in the case began Sept. 9.

Also Thursday, defense lawyers spent two hours trying to knock down testimony from a former state health inspector who told jurors she found problems in the Texas City nursing home.

Jeannine Watson had testified Wednesday that she found numerous errors and omissions in medication records she checked during the 1978 inspections.

"It's not an error-free business, is it?" defense lawyer Tom Sartwelle said of drug record-keeping as he questioned Ms. Watson.

"No," she replied.

Ms. Watson, a pharmacist, worked for the Texas Department of Health when she was part of a state team that checked Autumn Hills.

She testified Wednesday that poor record-keeping indicated residents of the home could have received more or less of the medications ordered by their doctors.

Sartwelle got Ms. Watson to acknowledge that keeping track of medications at a facility like a nursing home can be a difficult job. She said such records could involve up to 100,000 individual entries per month in a facility with 100 patients.

"There are medication errors in every institution in the world, isn't that true?" Sartwelle asked.

"There is an error rate," Ms. Watson replied.

She said any single error was considered important if it was "life threatening." Asked by Sartwelle if she had ever seen an "untoward result" caused by such an error, she said no.

The indictment in the case also charges the defendants with the death of Autumn Hills resident Edna Mae Witt, 78. The indictment alleges the two women died as a result of the defendants' failure to report abuse and neglect of 62 other patients.

The defendants are Autumn Hills president Robert Gay; vice president Ron Pohlmeyer; Mattie Locke, a nursing consultant; Virginia Wilson, former administrator of the home; and Cassandra Canlas, former director of nursing.

Construction worker held for threatening Bush's life

HOUSTON (AP) — A Conroe construction worker charged with threatening the lives of Vice President George Bush and a Montgomery County prosectuor was ordered held without bond pending a detention hearing Friday.

After appearing before U.S. Magistrate H. Lingo Platter, Judson Witham, 29, was transferred into the custody of Secret Service agents in Houston Wednesday.

He is charged with threatening the vice president, Secret Service Special Agent Bill Livingood said. Montgomery County officials said Witham also is charged with threatening to kill County Assistant Attorney Mark Winberry.

Witham telephoned the Houston FBI office at 2:45 a.m. Monday and told a records clerk that the vice president had done nothing to solve road and drainage problems in his neighborhood, according to a Secret Service complaint.

The complaint quoted Witham as telling the clerk, "Bush has blood on his hands by ruining my life and soon I am going to have Bush's blood on my hands."

Witham also threatened to blow up the federal building in downtown Houston, the complaint said.

Witham apparently was upset because of road, draining and septic tank problems at the subdivision in which he lives.

El Paso invitation eased dancer's defection

Korobeinikov

EL PASO (AP) — When Ballet El Paso invited D'mitri Korbeinikov to be a guest dancer in their annual Christmas special "The Nutcracker," the dance company laid the groundwork for the performer's eventual defection.

Korbeinikov, then a member of Ballet Nacional de Mexico, will perform in El Paso again this year, but this time as a Soviet defector to the United States.

Korobeinikov was granted political asylum last week by the U.S. Immigration and Naturalization Service after formally defecting Sept. 6.

Korobeinikov, who trained for eight years in the Bolshoi Theater School of Dance, said he arrived in Mexico four years ago after he met and married Natasha Lagunas Wolfman, dancer and daughter of a Mexican diplomat in Moscow.

"The Russian government could not legally deny a passport to the spouse of a foreign national," he said. "It's in the Helsinki accord."

Korobeinikov, who speaks better Spanish than English, said that although both he and his wife were members of the Ballet Nacional de Mexico, he was the only one invited by Ballet El Paso last year to perform in "The Nutcracker."

He said that at the time, he came to El Paso with a guest visa from the U.S. government.

"But after the performance, the university's International Student Services arranged for me to continue staying in El Paso with a student visa and gave me a scholarship," he said.

Korobeinikov explained that a problem arose later when he had to return to Mexico because his permit expired and had to be renewed.

At that point, he said, the Mexican government demanded he sign a labor contract proving he worked eight hours a day, 40 hours a week in Mexico. He said he also was required to live with his wife in Mexico City.

"But the Mexican immigrations inspectors, like the Russians, do not know what it is to be a dancer," he said. "There is no way we can work on a contract like that. Also, I'm a Russian and my wife is supposed to live where I am, not I where she is."

Korobeinikov said he and his wife now are separated but remain good friends.

The 22-year-old dancer said that after he returned to Mexico he decided to defect and formally request political asylum in the United States.

Resume bank may prompt hiring of minority faculty

GEORGETOWN (AP) — In an effort to boost hiring of minority faculty members, Southwestern University has become the repository for a new "resume bank" established by more than 100 colleges and universities.

Applicants' credentials are kept in a computer at Southwestern. Capsule summaries of the credentials are collected in a directory and forwarded every six weeks to hiring officers at the various institutions.

Since the project was started in September, nearly 300 names have been collected, said William B. Jones, administrative vice president at Southwestern.

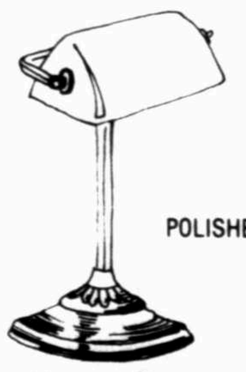

Participants include such large institutions as Boston, Duke, Emory and Syracuse universities, plus small colleges throughout the country, Jones said.

Of the 110 United Methodist Church-affiliated schools in the country, 103 are participating, he said.

"Many of our institutions feel that the numbers of minority faculty on our staffs are abysmally low," Jones said. "One has to turn every card one can. If it works, fine. If it doesn't work, then you have to try other things."

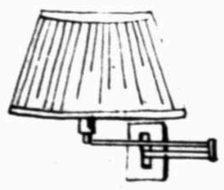

Jones noted that many of the small colleges participating in the program often weren't considered by job applicants from minority groups.

Kickapoo Indian Cuca Garcia-Flores displays her U.S. citizenship card after receiving it from tribe chairman Raul Garza, center, at their camp on the U.S.-Mexico border in Eagle Pass.

Kickapoos rejoice at citizenship

EAGLE PASS (AP) — The Texas Kickapoo Indians, having cleared the hurdle of gaining U.S. citizenship, now focus attention on moving out of their bamboo hut village and onto a new reservation, officials say.

"We are hopeful that in the future we can get rid of all these shacks where they have been living — tear them all down," said former U.S. Rep. Abraham "Chick" Kazen.

Kazen, a Democrat from Laredo, sponsored legislation in Congress in 1983 that gave the Texas Kickapoos the opportunity to file for U.S. citizenship.

Thursday, citizenship cards for 143 of the 536-member tribe were turned over to tribal council leader Raul Garza, who later distributed them to the Kickapoos.

"He cannot tell you how everyone feels. But he feels very, very happy," said Nakai Breen, a Cherokee and spokeswoman for the Kickapoos, interpreting for Garza.

Mrs. Breen said Garza told her U.S. citizenship "is going to better their life."

The Indians now are eligible for government health care, food stamps and other welfare services.

The next step for the Texas Kickapoos, a branch of the Kickapoo tribe living on a reservation in central Oklahoma, is to build suitable housing on a 125-acre tract of land south of Eagle Pass.

The land was purchased earlier this year with donations from various churches.

The Kickapoos for years have lived in primitive bamboo and cardboard huts underneath the international bridge at Eagle Pass.

Migrant farm laborers, they have drifted from Mexico to the northern United States annually. But they have made Eagle Pass their permanent home.

James Wahpepah of the Oklahoma tribe said he hopes the Texas Kickapoos now can bring industry to Eagle Pass and "get away from farm laboring."

"I hope we will become self-sufficient," he said, adding the Kickapoos want to vote and serve in the military.

At the citizenship ceremonies at the Eagle Pass National Guard armory, Kazen said he hoped the tribe and its supporters could "move a little faster to get proper homes for you."

"Now you will be formally recognized as American citizens. Then you should be proud to do for yourself and get involved," Kazen urged.

"No one's handing it to you. We're just extending a helping hand. You've got to do it yourself," he said.

About 75 Kickapoos, all wearing traditional western dress — jeans, shirts, skirts and blouses — turned out for the ceremonies.

Mrs. Breen said the Kickapoos, who speak their own Algonquin dialect, are clannish and shy and have kept alive many tribal traditions.

Another 65 tribal members have applied for citizenship and their applications are being processed, officials said.

Gaining U.S. citizenship, said Mrs. Breen, means "living in a country like the United States — so beautiful. The country of milk and honey. And especially that they have all their rights back."

TRC hopeful Sharp nixed safety funds

By EDWARD M. SILLS
Hearst News Service

AUSTIN — State Sen. John Sharp may be calling for better railroad safety in his campaign for a Railroad Commission seat, but he voted against more funds for railroad safety while a member of the House, a prospective rival says.

Dallas lawyer John Pouland said Thursday that Sharp voted against an additional $507,000 in funding for rail safety during the 1981 legislative session. Supporters of Pouland also produced a copy of the record vote on the issue.

Sharp, a Democrat from Victoria, has been campaigning this week in 20 Texas cities on the theme that the state needs to improve its accident record, which is the worst in the nation in several categories. Sharp is citing the spill of sulphuric acid into the Medina River south of San Antonio last September as one of the worst accidents.

Now that Mr. Sharp is running for the Railroad Commission, he's trying to climb on board a train that he was doing his best to sabotage just four years ago," Pouland said.

Sharp says his interest in rail safety dates back to when he was in the fourth grade and witnessed a fatal accident involving a train. Apparently, he had a case of amnesia in 1981 or he thinks everyone else has one now."

Pouland, who was a policy adviser to U.S. Sen. Gary Hart in last year's presidential campaign, also said Sharp has performed a flip-flop worthy of his old employer, Phil Gramm."

In 1976, Sharp worked for Gramm, the Republican U.S. senator who was then a Democrat, against U.S. Sen. Lloyd Bentsen.

Pouland said in a telephone interview that he supports increased funding for rail safety and generally agrees with Sharp's present position on the subject, but believes the senator's campaigning is inconsistent and hypocritical."

Sharp's campaign manager, Russ Tidwell, said that Sharp's vote on an appropriations bill probably involved side issues" that had nothing to do with the merits of rail safety.

In any event, Sharp has compiled a consistent Senate record of support for rail safety well before running for the commission, Tidwell said. That includes a bill expanding the commission's jurisdiction in the area, he said.

If Sharp changed his position along the way, it was long before this race," he said.

Pouland is planning to announce in January for the Railroad Commission post being vacated by Buddy Temple. Also running in the Democratic primary is William MacNaughton, an Austin lawyer.

Former Oiler McVea tackled in chicken dinner con

HOUSTON (AP) — A former professional football player was charged with misdemeanor theft after he allegedly tried to get 42 free fried chicken dinners which he said were for indigent children, authorities said.

Authorities said Warren McVea, 39, telephoned a Kentucky Fried Chicken restaurant Monday, claiming he was Houston Oilers wide receiver Tim Smith and was soliciting food donations.

"He said he needed chicken for indigent children in connection with the work he does for the Oilers," said Assistant Harris County District Attorney Vic Wisner. "He promised that there would be good publicity for Kentucky Fried and complimentary tickets for the people who helped."

McVea called the restaurant from a telephone at a vehicle service center and left the business number with the restaurant. Restaurant workers said they became suspicious and notified police.

Police telephoned McVea at the car center on Tuesday and told him he could pick up the chicken dinners, which were valued between $50 and $100.

When McVea arrived at the restaurant Tuesday morning, a security guard asked him for an autograph. He signed the autograph "Best Wishes, Tim Smith," police said.

McVea was then arrested by undercover officers and charged with misdemeanor theft. He was released from Houston City Jail on Wednesday after posting $800 bond.

The former athlete, who told authorities he lives in Houston, could not be located for comment. A telephone operator said she had no directory listing for him.

McVea was a running back for the University of Houston from 1965 to 1967.

Kennedy's memory honored

DALLAS (AP) — Separate ceremonies were to be held today to commemorate the death of President John F. Kennedy, who was assassinated here 22 years ago in downtown Dallas.

The first ceremony was to be held at 12:30 p.m. in front of the former Texas Schoolbook Depository Building, the building from which the Warren Commission said Lee Harvey Oswald fired the fatal shots Nov. 22, 1963. The ceremony was sponsored by Downtown Dallas Democrats.

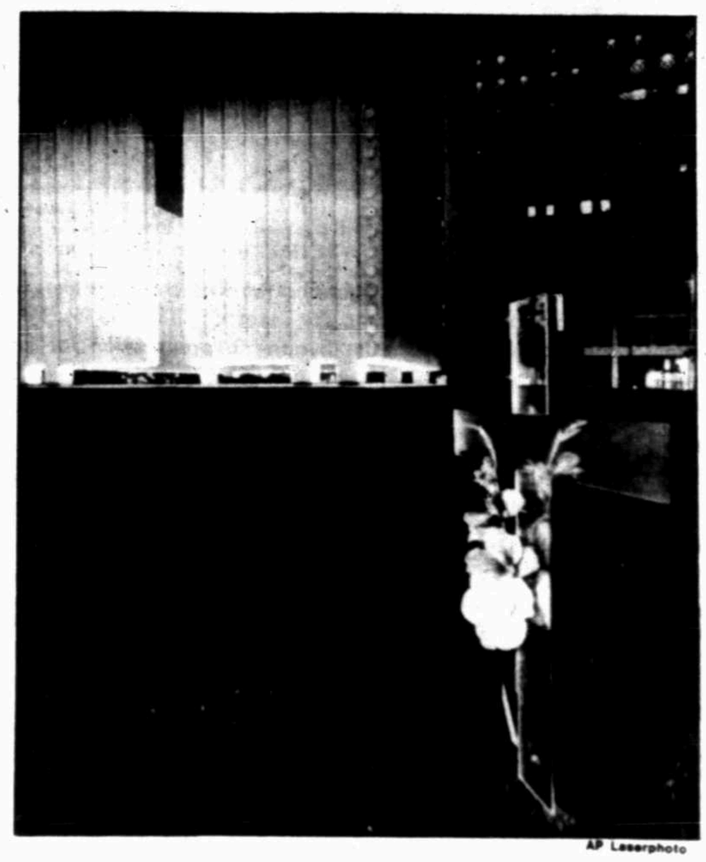

At 2 p.m., Green Berets from chapters in Dallas and San Antonio were to lay a wreath on the Kennedy Memorial, located almost two blocks from the Dealey Plaza assassination site.

Officials from various civic and political organizations here say they prefer to forget the tragic event and remember Kennedy instead on his birthday, May 29.

"I think we want to highlight ther positive rather than the negative," said Richard Johnson, public information officer for the city of Dallas. "Rather than do something on the day of his death, we prefer to do something on his his birthday."

Johnson pointed out that other U.S. presidents are honored on their birthdays, not on the day they died.

"What are you going to honor?" asked Dallas County Democratic Party Chairman Mike McKool. "We're honoring the man. To honor the individual, you do it on his birthday."

STATE in brief

Abilene man dies of rabies

ATLANTA (AP) — This year's first U.S. case of human rabies has been reported in Texas, where the disease was diagnosed two months after death in a man who had reported no animal bites.

A 19-year-old Mexican man died of rabies in Abilene, Texas, on May 20, about two months after his arrival in the United States, the national Centers for Disease Control reported Thursday.

He had become ill the first week in May with nausea and shortness of breath.

Migrant's pay too low

PHARR (AP) — Farmworkers are not getting paid minimum wages, are discriminated against and field sanitation regulations are not being enforced, a federal labor panel was told.

About 60 people showed up Thursday night for a U.S. Department of Labor hearing regarding migrant workers and farmworkers.

The six-member panel heard that thousands of farmworkers and vegetable packing shed workers lost their jobs after a freeze in December 1983.

Topless dancer 'shocked'

HOUSTON (AP) — A topless dancer told Houston City Council members she was shocked by the working conditions in local strip clubs and that similar businesses in other cities "don't allow such practices."

"I am a moral and responsible person. Once I come off the stage, I put my clothes on and act like a lady," dancer Virginia Schrang, 46, said during a council meeting Wednesday.

Research geologist Paul Carrara is studying the Grinnell glacier's history for the U.S. Geological Survey.

Tracking the glaciers

By JIM CARRIER

MANY GLACIER, Mont. — When Paul Carrara stopped talking you could hear the glacier dying. Dripping from sculptured corners, twice as fast as a human pulse, adding to rivulets already alive with motion.

Deep in the crevasses, out of sight, the water ran faster, rolling rocks along blue ice, sending out echoes of winters past.

At the front edge, the white marbled monolith broke off occasionally, calving icebergs into cold gray soup. It was the only sign of the glacier moving, that and the sound: a deep groan from nowhere in particular. A death moan from Grinnell Glacier.

Carrara watched as two kids danced from piece to floating piece, until they fell into the icy drink. "This is a sick glacier," he said. "A bad year for the ice."

Since 1850, Grinnell Glacier has been dripping away its life, shrinking back toward the shadow cast by the Garden Wall, where the sun never touches the winter's snow. It is this snow, year after year, that feeds this glacier, that becomes the glacier, packing itself into airless, blue cold, hard as rock and 200 feet thick, but flowing, like plastic.

Climbing toward Grinnell, as he does to study its history for the U.S. Geological Survey, Carrara adds gloves and layers of clothing, whooping and hollering to alert the bears, passing the early signs of autumn in Glacier National Park: yellowing dogbane, the red berries of mountain ash, fireweed seed fuzz — and goldenrod, the universal sign that summer is over. It is like a time-lapse walk into winter.

EVEN IN SUMMER, the glacier is a reminder of winter. Walking onto it is like walking into a cooler. Grizzlies often ramble across it to cool off. Grinnell is not high by mountain standards, about 9,000 feet. But it is near the Canadian border, where winter comes first to the Rockies.

It snows so much at Glacier, even in summer, that the park's senior scientist, Cliff Martinka, doesn't consider it a place of seasons. "There's snow-free periods," he says. Periods when the yellow glacier lillies rush to flower and the Columbian ground squirrels break their endless hibernation for four months of eating and breeding.

By mid-September, the first "winter" storm comes in from the Pacific, rising against the Continental Divide, dumping snow, the first of a series of Pacific storms that will close the Going-to-the-Sun road in October and pile up to 70 feet of snow in wind-blown places. On the divide, 150 inches of moisture is not unusual.

Ironically, says Martinka, all that water is tied up much of the year in snow and ice, making the park a desert of sorts.

In about 75 places in the park, by Carrara's count, winter's store becomes a glacier. And its slow release through the year keeps the creeks high, the waterfalls gushing, the irrigation ditches running on the plains of eastern Montana.

GLACIERS ONCE COVERED the park; only the tips of the mountains showed through the ice. With Carrara's help, you can see the line near the top of the canyons where the ice scraped the rocks smooth. It made the park what it is today: deep U-shaped valleys, lakes dammed by terminal moraines, matterhorn peaks, and loose soil that drains water through hidden cavities.

The last great Ice Age was 10,000 to 20,000 years ago. By 1850, the end of a period known as the Little Ice Age, about 150 glaciers remained in the park, most of them less than a square mile in size. The warm climate since then, especially during the Dust Bowl days, ate them alive.

Along Grinnell's melting edge, Carrara points to layers of winters, where rocks and dust are caught, forming dark lines in the ice, yielding information about the glacier and the climate, just as rings in a tree do. Bugs are trapped in there. Even air is trapped, Carrara says, holding clues to how pure the atmosphere was before the Industrial Revolution, or atomic testing or the greenhouse effect.

By counting rings on trees that grew back when the glaciers receded, checking soil samples for volcanic ash, and other sleuthing, including radiocarbon dating, Carrara is able to write a rough history of glaciers.

AT LOGAN PASS, Carrara climbed over a moraine of loose gravel, much like bulldozed tailings, to look down at a cavity that in the 1930s was Clements Glacier. "He's dead," Carrara says. "But at one time he was healthy and respectable."

Behind the moraine, lichens and algae, the beginnings of life, are fastening themselves to the bedrock once hidden by ice. Carrara ran the toe of his sneaker across scratch marks in the rock. The track of a glacier. As it slid forward, carrying rocks, it ground out dust as sandpaper would do, dust that turns glacier runoff milky, that gives high mountain lakes a turquoise color, that gave the Milk River its name. It is a sure sign that a glacier is alive.

Carrara, who has been climbing glaciers since 1969, doesn't believe the bigger glaciers in the park will ever disappear. There is too much new snow each year, the remaining glaciers are shaded much of the time, and it just doesn't get warm enough.

He estimates that to kill Jackson Glacier, for example, the average summer temperature would have to increase several degrees, a change that would profoundly affect the North American climate. A couple of glaciers in the park actually are growing.

Carrara believes that it's only a matter of time before glaciers return — in a big way. "I kinda root for them to get bigger, and they will," he says.

Data from deep-sea studies show "several dozen ice advances in the last million years," he says. "So, more than likely the big ice will be back. We're just in a little trough, possibly because of man-made greenhouse effect. If nature takes its course, the ice will be back. It always has."

"They'll be another time when they'll be down on the plains of Montana. It may be 10,000 or 20,000 years. But they'll be back."

Jerusalem stonemasons chisel a place in time-honored art

By DAN FISHER
Los Angeles Times
Washington Post News Service

JERUSALEM — Shabtai Levy, sitting in his wooden lean-to on a suburban building site, is in some ways a more fitting symbol of the spiritual link between past and present in the Holy Land than any priest or rabbi or imam.

Squinting beneath bushy white eyebrows to avoid the smoke from the ever-present cigarette hanging from a corner of his mouth, Levy works slowly, using a hammer and thick iron chisels to shape the stone.

He is 60 years old and has "been working with stone since I was 12."

How many stones has he cut in all those years? Levy laughed and shook his head, then said, "Millions!"

Levy learned the trade from his father, now 90 and retired. The stonemason's skills were passed down to him through a human chain that reaches back through the "four score thousand hewers in the mountains," who, according to the Bible's First Book of Kings, quarried the stone Solomon used to build his temple.

Preceding them were the people who, 10,000 years ago, built a stone wall around their settlement at nearby Jericho, which is considered to be the world's oldest city. Part of a conical tower built by those early people is still standing.

Nature provided copious amounts of stone on the highlands between the Mediterranean plain and the Jordan Valley. And stone, owing to tradition and law as well as availability, has played an important role in the life of these hills, from the beginnings of recorded history to the present.

DAVID IS SAID to have slain Goliath with a stone just a few miles southwest of Jerusalem in the Valley of Elah, and Jesus saved the adulteress on the Mount of Olives by advising those who would have executed her, "He that is without sin among you, let him cast the first stone."

Rocks are still a commonly used weapon here. Palestinian Arab teenagers in the West Bank refugee camps that dot the route between Nablus and Hebron stone passing Israeli cars almost daily, even though they are risking years in prison.

And the police in Jerusalem put up roadblocks every Saturday to prevent ultra-Orthodox Jews from stoning motorists who in their view are violating the Sabbath.

Stone walls are everywhere on the hills between the Galilee and the Negev, draped on the hillsides like strings of popcorn on a Christmas tree. The walls, which date from time immemorial, trap scarce rainwater and divide the slopes into narrow terraces for farming.

The Jerusalem holy places of the three great monotheistic religions are all associated with stone. The Dome of the Rock shrine is built over the stone from which the Prophet Mohammed is said to have ascended to heaven to confer with God. Judaism's sacred Western Wall is built of giant Herodian stones still standing from the Second Temple, which was destroyed in AD 70. And the Christian Church of the Holy Sepulchre is said to stand over the stone outcropping called Calvary, on which Jesus was crucified.

THE IMPORTANCE OF stone as a building material is evident at every hand. On the populous coastal plain around Tel Aviv, the buildings are of concrete and glass, but here in the hills they are of stone, and this gives the towns a sense of timelessness.

"In the mountain towns of Israel...the ancient merits of stone — strength, beauty, insulation — were too much valued to be set aside," geologist Ithamar Perath says in his book, "Stone Building and Building Stone in Israel."

"By far the greatest amount of stone building is concentrated in and around Jerusalem," Perath says, and in addition to its other features, stone has "saved countless inhabitants' lives."

Jerusalem's stone buildings "have repeatedly withstood the peppering of small arms fire, and occasional heavy artillery shelling," he says, adding, "A less-solidly built city would have suffered irreparable damage."

If wood ever had a chance of competing as a building material here, the Ottoman Turks took care of that when they denuded the hills of trees to build and run a steam railway from Constantinople to Mecca, leaving only the rocks behind.

The British codified stone's special place in Jerusalem when the League of Nations gave them a mandate to rule Palestine after World War I and the collapse of the Ottoman Empire. A municipal ordinance from that period requires that exterior walls of all new buildings be faced with stone; the British regarded this as fitting in view of the city's historial nature and its dignity as a religious center.

THE STONE ARCHITECTURE survived the departure of the British and the coming of the new state of Israel, but not without a few touchy moments.

The new Jewish state adopted the old British ordinance as its own but lifted it temporarily in the 1950s when Diaspora Jews flocked here in such numbers that they taxed the availability both of stones and stonemasons. A few stucco and prefabricated concrete buildings from that period can still be found around the city, and they are considered embarrassing eyesores.

And just after Israel captured East Jerusalem from Jordan in the 1967 Middle East War, David Ben-Gurion, Israel's first prime minister, even talked about destroying the wall that surrounds the Old City in order to make the unified city more open.

According to geologist Perath, the 1967 war may have saved stone architecture in Jerusalem. "Among the Jewish population, the once highly esteemed craft of stone dressing and building had been on the decline for a generation," he notes. The Shabtai Levys were already a disappearing breed.

But with the administrative takeover of the West Bank, "the entire mountainous center of the country, with its great stone reserves and settled population was drawn into the sphere of an intensive, countrywide building activity, and stone building came conspicuously back into fashion," Perath says.

Much stone for building in Jerusalem today is quarried around Hebron, on the occupied West Bank. And the great majority of the workers who finish, or dress, building stones, on both sides of the pre-1967 border, are Arabs.

"THEY COME OUT of the womb with a chisel in their hands," Yitzhak Mantsuri, the Jewish manager of a Jerusalem stone-finishing plant, said of its Arab workers.

Stone is considerably more costly than alternate building materials, and this is one reason that new structures have only a facing of stone.

For all its importance in these hills, some people — Perath among them — worry that the future of stone building is uncertain.

"Stone today is a mere tapestry, inessential, and it may disappear at a whim of fashion or legislature," he said.

Depression-era CCC workers reminisce in Grand Canyon

GRAND CANYON, Ariz. (AP) — Seventy-five-year-old Louis Purvis hiked alone down the Kaibab Trail into the Grand Canyon and then back out along the Bright Angel Trail.

The Brownwood, Texas, resident wanted it that way on his two-day trek.

"I went down and reminisced," Purvis explained. "A group would distract me from my thinking."

For that brief time, Purvis revived the memories of 50 years ago, when he and hundreds of other young men built trails and other projects at the canyon as part of the Depression-era Civilian Conservation Corps.

Purvis and 50 or 60 other former CCC workers on conservation projects in Arizona gathered recently at the Grand Canyon for a reunion.

For many of the now-gray-haired and bespectacled men, the reunion meant rehashing old times and proud accomplishments of their younger, impoverished days.

For many who were in their teens or early 20s at the time, those few formative years as CCC workers transformed them into men, and they wouldn't trade any part of that toughening experience.

MARVIN J. GRANDY, 70, of Philadelphia, had the job of training a mule to carry a litter in the event someone was injured within the canyon's depths.

"I came down with an attack of appendicitis and I was the first one to ride out on the mule," Grandy recalled, chuckling.

The reunion that brought people like Purvis and Grandy together was the brainchild of Roy Lemons of Belen, N.M. Lemons spent 14 months tracking down many of the 52,000 CCC men who worked in about 30 camps around Arizona during the corps' life from 1933 to 1942.

Lemons, 66, organized the reunion, not only to bring together former CCC comrades but to keep the program's memory and accomplishments in Arizona from being forgotten.

There aren't a lot of CCC workers left. Many were born while Arizona still was a territory, and it is unknown how many are still alive.

Keeping the memory of the CCC alive has become a burning objective for Lemons, a retired oil-field drilling engineer who recalled growing up so poor that "my stomach felt like my throat was cut until I was 18."

"A LOT OF people haven't heard about us," said Max Castillo, 68, a retired Cornville bricklayer. "Down in the Verde Valley, you can still see the dams we built to keep the erosion down."

The CCC was one of President Roosevelt's New Deal programs to put the Depression-ravaged nation back on its feet.

Instead of standing in bread lines, CCC workers became breadwinners by working on such conservation projects as building roads and trails, planting trees, fighting forest fires, building flood barriers and other conservation work.

It meant jobs at a time when jobs were scarce for young, unmarried men and unemployment was rampant. Recruits lived in work camps under a semimilitary regime and received $30 a month, plus keep. They kept $5 and the government sent the rest to their families.

During its nine-year life, the CCC provided work for 3 million men, many of whom subsequently entered military service to fight in World War II.

IT ALSO PROVIDED moments worth reliving 50 years later.

Men such as Lemons, who toiled in the canyon, carved River Trail out of sheer rock cliffs, worked on the Kaibab and Bright Angel trails and strung a transcanyon telephone line.

Roland Brents, 70, of Antlers, Okla., was the mess sergeant on the South Rim camp. He fed each man on 39 cents a day, and "we didn't throw anything away."

Lemons recalled that there was something of a caste system at work at the Grand Canyon, where the Parks Service and employees of lodging concessionaire Fred Harvey didn't care for CCC workers to be around the tourists.

That, however, changed in the later years, Lemons said, and an incident that occurred shortly before midnight one cold November evening may have helped.

That night, Purvis and three other CCC men worked their way through the inky darkness to the flooding, untamed Colorado River to rescue four sightseers who were marooned on a rock ledge and in danger of being swept away in the raging waters.

At other times, the duty was less exciting. There wasn't much in the way of entertainment within the canyon, and Purvis recalls the men asking the boss for a pool table.

"We told him that if he could get the pool table to the head of the Kaibab Trail, we'd get it down. He did, and we did."
