Authorities regain control of prison

CAMP HILL, Pa. (AP) — Police stormed an overcrowded state prison on this morning to regain control from inmates who seized hostages and set fires in a two-night riot that left 101 people injured, authorities said.

Officers fired shots and tear gas in a kitchen building, wounding one inmate, in the assault that led to retaking of control less than two hours later at 9:35 a.m., said Ken Robinson, state Corrections Department spokesman.

Hospital officials said that at some point a guard and two prisoners were critically injured. Robinson said all four hostages were freed safely.

Police in riot gear and wielding shotguns pushed surrendering or captured prisoners to the ground, holding them face-down in the grass.

Rioters among about 1,900 inmates who remained loose in their cellblocks this morning were taken to a holding area at the rear of the prison grounds, Robinson said.

There was confusion about the numbers of rioters, injuries and hostages in the rampages that started Wednesday night.

Robinson and other officials said through Thursday night there were eight hostages. At the end, Robinson said there were four and all were safe.

More than 100 people were injured, including 54 Thursday night and this morning, Robinson said. He said there were no deaths and "all employees are accounted for."

A 24-year-old inmate was hospitalized in critical condition, suffering from a gunshot wound to the abdomen, said Deborah Saline, spokeswoman at Milton S. Hershey Medical Center. A guard, 41, was in critical condition with multiple stab wounds to the back, she said.

An 18-year-old prisoner was in critical condition from a gunshot wound at Polyclinic Hospital, said spokesman Jim Mulay.

One of the hostages, a prison guard, was released Thursday night as a "good faith" gesture, and state police freed a second hostage from a cellblock this morning, Robinson said.

"They literally pulled him out of there," Robinson said.

"At one point, all inmates were out of all the cellblocks," said Robinson, though not all inmates were actively involved in the rioting.

About 500 state troopers, with local police and firefighters, moved in early today to retake the 2,600-inmate, medium-security prison.

The officers entered through gates in prison walls, at first occupying areas that weren't held by the prisoners and avoiding clashes with hostage-holding inmates.

At the time, Robinson said prisoners were negotiating with authorities. He said their demands shifted through the night.

At one point the hostage holders demanded to talk to Gov. Robert P. Casey and officials of the human rights group Amnesty International, said a state police negotiator, Cpl. Raul Ramos. Casey did not comply.

Earlier, a huge fire in the education building sent flames rising 100 feet in the air and an explosion at or near a prison furniture factory rattled windows up to a mile away.

Officials said 12 of 31 prison buildings were destroyed in the fires, including two commissaries. Officials had to bring in a portable National Guard kitchen to provide meals for prisoners not involved in the rampage. Prison officials also said eight temporary housing units used to ease overcrowding were destroyed and three of the 10 cellblocks were damaged by the blazes.

Midland will lose 35 jobs in Mobil restructuring

By JOHN PAUL PITTS
Business/Oil Editor

Midland will lose approximately 35 employees as the result of a restructuring of Mobil Exploration & Producing U.S. Inc. (MEPUS), according to a Mobil spokesman.

John Lord, a Mobil spokesman in New York, said most of the employee loss in Midland would be on the exploration side. He characterized the Midland restructure as minor compared to other divisions.

"Denver will take the hardest hit," said Lord. "Out of 430 employees they will lose 325. Bakersfield, Calif., however, which has only 130 employees will gain about 175."

Lord said there were less than 5,000 MEPUS employees and only about 400 would be eliminated. "That will be about 8 percent reduction," he noted.

Much of the reduction will be achieved by normal attrition and placing employees in other Mobil divisions. Those terminated will be offered "enhanced separation packages."

In a press statement today Mobil said the reorganization was based on a in-depth analysis and recommendations from teams of employees, who have studied various departmental operations to improve efficiency and profitability.

Bush joins Costa Rican celebration

SAN JOSE, Costa Rica (AP) — President Bush headed here today to salute "the sweep of democracy throughout the hemisphere" and confer with Latin-American leaders about drug trafficking, foreign debt and worrisome challenges from Nicaragua and Panama.

Even before Bush's arrival from Washington for a two-day celebration of Costa Rica's 100 years of democracy, Nicaraguan President Daniel Ortega was angling to meet with the U.S. president, but Bush had already refused.

Bush regards Ortega's communist-backed Sandinista government he regards as a threat to U.S. national security. Nevertheless, said Costa Rican President Oscar Arias, "there will be a dialogue among all of us around a table."

Arias said all 18 popularly elected hemispheric leaders, including Bush and Ortega, "will be capable of sitting down to discuss a common agenda" even though Bush refuses to negotiate directly with the Nicaraguan leader.

Before he left Andrews Air Force Base, Md., aboard Air Force One, Bush made no direct mention of Ortega. Instead, he said he was flying to Costa Rica to "salute the traditions of a nation and a people that, in many ways, represents the model for our entire hemisphere."

Costa Rica "is no longer one of the few lonely democracies" in the Western Hemisphere, the president said in his departure statement. "Indeed today there are only a few lonely holdouts against the sweep of democracy through the hemisphere."

"I believe history will show that this hemisphere's democratic resurgence helped set the stage for today's electrifying changes in the communist world," Bush said.

Displaying his "suicide device," which would allow terminally ill patients to administer a lethal drug, is Dr. Jack Kevorkian.

Doctor's 'suicide device' stirs painful controversy

ROYAL OAK, Mich. (AP) — A pathologist says a device he invented that allows terminally ill patients to kill themselves is humane and painless, but some authorities say making it available could result in criminal charges.

The apparatus developed by Dr. Jack Kevorkian injects a lethal drug. He says death would occur in three to four minutes.

The device can be hooked up by a doctor but is then controlled by the patient. When the patient presses a button, a harmless intravenous injection of saline solution is shut off and the drug thiopental is injected. The drug induces a coma and potassium chloride is injected automatically to stop the patient's heart, the Royal Oak private researcher said.

Oakland County Assistant Prosecutor Gerald Poisson said someone providing such a device could be charged with murder, but the chief of the Wayne County prosecutor's appellate division, Jim Baughman, disagreed.

"If you actually take part in the act, that's criminal," Baughman said. "If you provide the means to do it, that's not."

Doctors said the device presents an ethical dilemma.

"We do not actively intervene to end life," said Dr. Myron LaBan, president of the Oakland County Medical Society. "He's providing this instrument. It's no different whether you give the patient a gun or a knife."

Kevorkian said he doesn't fear criminal or ethical violations.

"It's dignified, humane and painless, and the patient can do it in the comfort of their own home at any time they want," he said. "I'm here to help anybody who's in distress, or thinks he is. I couldn't let dogs suffer like that, how can I let a human?"

The American Medical Association opposes the instrument. The organization will accept cutting a patient's life-support system in some cases, but has said it doesn't believe a doctor should provide the means of death.

Lawmen back measure to inform jurors

By PATRICK CRIMMINS
Staff Writer

Law enforcement officials are solidly behind a proposed amendment that would allow jurors to be told the effect of good conduct laws on state prison sentences, while one defense attorney termed the idea "ludicrous."

The proposed amendment, number 10 on the Nov. 7 ballot, would allow the Legislature to enact laws permitting jurors to hear instructions on the effect of "good time" and parole laws during the penalty phase of a criminal trial.

Currently, jurors cannot be told when an inmate might be eligible for parole for a certain sentence, nor can they be told how much good time defendants can accrue.

Proponents of the measure say it is the only way to compensate for sentences sliced to as much as one-tenth by the good time laws, which are used to alleviate chronic overcrowding of the state prison system.

If jurors knew a defendant would only serve two years of a 20-year sentence, they would make the sentence more severe, they say.

But opponents say the amendment's passage would let jurors participate in an unconscionable roll of the dice.

"I think it should be required," said Sheriff Gary Painter. "Why shouldn't the jury know everything before they pass sentence? I think if the juries really understood the way the system is working, they would pass longer sentences."

But Jeff Hinkley, a Midland attorney who often represents defendants in criminal cases, blasted the proposal.

"Absolutely not," Hinkley said. "It is ludicrous. Whether a person gets good time or parole, when or if they get parole, all of those things materialize or don't materialize based on factors subsequent to the trial."

A defendant's eligibility for good time and parole is determined in part on the type of crime committed, but mostly on behavior once in prison — something a jury can't predict, Hinkley said.

The attorney also worries that juries — outraged by a particular crime or in general against the criminal justice system — may "take it out" on a defendant, and overcompensate when told of the parole and good time possibilities.

"If a jury feels they want to punish someone hard and then they get instructions, they may punish them less severely, or more severely," Hinkley said. "A jury, calculating what might happen in a case, as in someone getting released or paroled early, might say 'we had better give him fifty' years."

Supporters of the amendment say it will correct misperceptions about good time and parole for juries, argue that the additional instructions will not lengthen trials, and scoff at claims longer sentences will aggravate prison overcrowding.

"To heck with the defendant," Painter said. "He violated the law. This would be a very important tool for the citizens to be able to protect themselves.

"The only thing that is going to cure state prison overcrowding problem is more beds," the sheriff said. "The recidivism rate is 85 percent statewide.

Religious leaders determined to defeat betting referendum

By JULIE HILLRICHS
Staff Writer

Religious leaders — calling local attempts to legalize pari-mutuel wagering a "fraud" — have vowed to mobilize their armies of hundreds and defeat horse race betting at the polls Nov. 7.

Jim Denison, pastor of the First Baptist Church of Midland, has galvanized religious groups into Midlanders Who Care. Denison said the opponents will spend about $2,500 — mostly raised from church members — to fight the issue.

"Our churches have been especially interested in the issue as it's gotten closer to the time of the election," he said at a Wednesday press conference.

"We felt that an intensive media campaign in the weeks preceding the election would be far more effective in terms of our limited economic and manpower resources than an extensive long-term campaign."

In addition to religious organizations, Denison said the anti-gambling force is supported by Midland Mayor Carroll Thomas and Sheriff Gary Painter.

The local-option election was allowed after a Midland service station owner gathered enough signatures on a petition to put the issue on the ballot.

Ada Thorne, owner of Thorne Service Center, believes legalized gambling would eventually bring in $30 million worth of revenue each year and boost the local economy.

"If Midland were to start with a well-run, well-maintained race track I think it would induce other industries to bring their business to town," she said.

Bay area looking ahead to recovery from quake

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — A recovering Bay area shows America its mettle tonight with the earthquake-delayed third game of baseball's World Series, but the victims and the destruction will not be forgotten in the revelry.

"We can enjoy World Series baseball and still remember those who lost their lives or their property and those who are helping so much in the recovery effort," Mayor Art Agnos said.

By Thursday, nearly 21,400 people had registered for disaster aid with the Federal Emergency Management Agency. Damages are estimated at $7.1 billion with nearly 14,000 people still out of their homes, according to state officials.

People can talk about the quake at a forum tonight held by the Society for Traumatic Stress Studies, which coincidentally began a meeting in San Francisco this week. The 500 experts called off their disaster drill, but offered to help victims of the real thing.

"We believe in the value of talking, talking and sharing," said Yael Danieli, president of the society. Talking, "you don't have to feel lonely and scared. You can re-establish a sense of community."

Relief also came in the form of a $3.45 billion aid package President Bush signed Thursday, most of it destined for Northern California. But people also sought lighter restoratives.

Light as air, in the case of the 59th session of the mock San Francisco Court of Historical Review. On its docket: Who invented the doughnut hole? The winner?

"Mankind, in its own wisdom, invented the hole in the doughnut," Municipal Court Judge George T. Choppelas ruled after an hour of hilarious legal outrage.

And San Francisco, which treats Halloween as its own special holiday, begins the celebration this weekend.

"It was rather somber for a while," said J.S. Gilbert, general manager of the 10th annual Exotic Erotic Halloween Ball, where 10,000 people are expected Saturday night. Some of the proceeds will go to quake relief.

"But the weekend is important in the sense that people are looking for a release, an opportunity to go out and enjoy themselves,' he said Thursday. "There was a lot of camaraderie, a lot of good things that came out of the quake."

It was 10 days ago that millions of Americans, settling down in front of televisions to watch baseball's World Series, instead saw the 7.1-magnitude earthquake jerk Candlestick Park and the Bay area.

Tonight, baseball returns after the longest break in World Series history, to Candlestick, and many say it will give San Francisco a chance to show off and lure jittery tourists back.

A moment of silence will be observed at 5:04 p.m., the minute the quake hit. Disaster officials will throw out the first ball, and the ushers will carry flashlights just in case.

Fans will be asked to sing "San Francisco." The lyrics are on one side of a handout, and a message from the San Francisco Giants is on the other.

"Tonight we honor the resilience and indomitable spirit of our community to rise again," the statement says. "Let us all join together, not only in prayers for the loved ones lost, but in tribute to the survivors and selfless volunteers whose lives are changed forever."

Rebuilding from such a quake also means tearing down. Crews were demolishing some of the "red-tagged" buildings — those determined unsafe — and demolition went on at a 1¼-mile stretch of Interstate 880 in Oakland.

The crews also put up a chain-link fence around the collapsed structure to keep people out and with fewer police officers, said Highway Patrol Officer Ed Moriarty.

The quake closed the San Francisco-Oakland Bay Bridge and parts of several highways, including a collapsed section of I-880.

Region faces better-than-even odds for disaster within 30 years

By LEE SIEGEL
AP Science Writer

LOS ANGELES — An earthquake more deadly than last week's jolt is 50 percent likely near San Francisco, and a catastrophic "big one" is at least 60 percent probable in Southern California by the year 2018, scientists say.

Overall odds for such quakes, which could kill thousands of people, were listed in a 1988 U.S. Geological Survey study. They remain unchanged by the Oct. 17 upheaval that claimed at least 63 lives in the San Francisco Bay area, said USGS geophysicist Jim Dieterich, the report's lead author.

The report predicted a 30 percent chance by 2018 for a magnitude 6.5 quake on the segment of the San Andreas that caused last week's quake. That jolt measured 7.1 on the Richter scale, suggesting the forecast was conservative.

The earthquake "makes one realize these forecasts are serious and reliable," said California Institute of Technology geologist Kerry Sieh, one of 12 co-authors of the study, which represented a scientific consensus.

The report said a repeat of San Francisco's magnitude 8.3 great earthquake of 1906 is less than 10 percent within 30 years. The 1906 quake ruptured the San Andreas Fault and killed at least 2,500 people, according to recent studies.

The next magnitude 7 major quake will be much more devastating than the recent jolt because it will be located closer to the city on either the San Andreas or Hayward faults, Dieterich and others said.

"The chance of another destructive or more destructive earthquake in the Bay area is still high, and the chances in Southern California are even hig r," Sieh said.

The study listed overall 30-year probabilities of 50 percent for a magnitude 7 quake in the Bay area, and 60 percent to perhaps 70 percent odds that the "big one" measuring 7.5 to 8.3 on the Richter scale will rupture the San Andreas Fault in Southern California.

Last week's quake raised the chance of an earthquake on the San Andreas Fault between Los Gatos and Daly City, closer to San Francisco.

WEATHER SUMMARY

Chance for thunderstorms 30 percent

From Staff and Wire Reports

Partly cloudy skies and a 30 percent chance of thunderstorms are in the forecast for tonight, according to the National Weather Service at Midland International Airport. The low will be in the upper 50s and winds will be from the south at 5-15 mph.

Saturday is expected to be cloudy in the morning, becoming partly cloudy by afternoon with a 20 percent chance of showers in the late afternoon. The high will be in the upper 70s and winds will continue from the south at 10-20 mph.

Thursday's high of 80 was 10 degrees cooler than the record high of 90 set for that date in 1950. The overnight low of 61 was 28 degrees warmer than the record low of 33 set for this date in 1967.

STATE

Scattered showers and thunderstorms are expected over the eastern half of the state tonight and Saturday.

Forecasts are calling for considerable low cloudiness over most of the state early Saturday with clearing skies expected to prevail over West Texas.

The 21-county area — including Midland, Odessa, Lubbock and El Paso — has a combined annual purchasing power of more than $6 billion, according to Mrs. Thorne's area financial study.

In addition to the 250,000 people residing in Midland and Odessa, she believes thousands of area residents would be attracted to Tall City for the 44-day racing season.

Under state law, the county would collect 15 cents from each admission fee and an additional 15 cents will be collected and divided among the municipalities within the county, according to population.

Five percent of the pari-mutuel handle will go to the state, 5 percent to the horsemen in the form of purse money, and eight percent to the local racetrack.

But opponents complain that will foster crime.

"I don't think it will do much to help the economy," said Painter, who is Midland County's chief law enforcement officer.

He worries that legalized pari-mutuel wagering would not only induce people to gamble, but also provide organized crime with an extensive event on which their bookies can take bets.

Sue Cox, executive director of Texans Who Care, agreed. She told local media representatives that the connection between the racetrack gambling business and crime cannot be ignored.

"Recently, the Drug Enforcement Agency seized a South Texas horse racing track and other related facilities in two separate raids because they were being used to launder drug money," she said.

Ms. Cox's Dallas-based organization led the unsuccessful opposition to a statewide pari-mutuel wagering referendum in November 1987.

It now concentrates on monitoring gambling activities and working against a state-sponsored lottery; and functions as a research, referral and resource center for treating compulsive gambling.

Ms. Cox warned Midlanders that if a track were to be built here it would not produce the economic benefits that horse racing proponents promise.

"Do not be misled that a new palace will be erected here. Do not look for Alysheba to run a major stakes race here," she said. "What Midland would get is a tiny track attracting a small number of people watching an inferior quality of horse run."

Noting that attendance at horse tracks is declining, Ms. Cox said, "Horse racing in Texas has started out more with a whisper than with a big bang."

"Two years after they made their promises, we are still waiting for jobs ... the economic impact ... and the millions in tax revenue. Instead, we have one little-bitty track in Brady ...

"And instead of $100 million in revenue, the state has received approximately $50,000 and spent millions trying to regulate the horse racing business," she said.

AMEND

"If they would put them away for a long period of time, say, over five years, with no parole, they would be less likely to commit a crime in the first place, and less likely to commit one when they get out."

Opponents say passage of the amendment would confuse juries, result in more hung juries, and would require the impossible task of explaining the complicated system of parole and good time to jurors under constraint of a trial schedule.

"You can look at it both ways," Hinkley said. "But I don't think we should base someone's punishment on what may happen in the future. To try and put a jury in a position of having a crystal ball in front of a jury is not proper. It is too vulnerable and too tenuous."

A previous attempt to include the jury instruction during trial was made in 1985, when the Legislature amended the Code of Criminal Procedure. But that was challenged, and the provision ruled unconstitutional by the Texas Court of Criminal Appeals.

The court ruled the jury instruction was a violation of the separation of powers and due course of law, as provided in the Texas Constitution.

PRISON

"It's total chaos. They lost control," said a guard who was in one of the cellblocks when Thursday's disturbance began as meals were being served at 7 p.m. "The officers were told to lock the doors and leave. We had to get out. ... They said they were going to kill us.

"Last night was a riot. Tonight was war," said the guard, a six-year staffer who refused to give his name.

The prison had been locked down early Thursday after violence Wednesday night that caused severe damage to six cellblocks.

Prison officials had difficulty explaining how the prisoners had managed to free themselves and erupt in new violence.

"There was a bunch of little fires at first, but they started putting mattresses on the windows," said Steve Tobias, a resident of nearby Lemoyne, who was passing the prison as the new outbreak began. "A whole bunch of (inmates) were running toward the fence. But when they heard the shots, they went back the other way."

Officials said lock mechanisms on some cells may have been damaged in Wednesday's riots, and a guard at one cellblock said the inmates may have stolen some keys during the melee.

Prison spokesman John Palakovich said most of those injured were firefighters, but he wouldn't characterize their injuries.

Inmates had gotten into prison tools, such as screwdrivers, hammers and saws, Palakovich said.

Costa Rican President Oscar Arias, right, greets President Jose Sarney of Brazil during arrival ceremonies at Juan Santamaria International Airport in San Jose.

ARIAS

Security was tight as presidents and prime ministers began arriving today under cloudy skies.

The U.S. Secret Service supervised installation of a 2-inch-thick, 75-foot long sheet of bulletproof glass in front of the National Museum for Saturday's inauguration of Democracy Plaza.

A Costa Rican security officer said the 4.5-ton security shield was mostly to protect Bush and President Virgilio Barco of Colombia, who has been marked for death by drug cartel leaders for his recent crackdown.

Arias implicitly equated Ortega and Bush's status as their countries' leaders when he explained why he had not invited the leaders of Chile, Panama, Cuba or Haiti.

In drawing up the guest list for the "summit of the Americas," Arias said, he had decided "to celebrate this party with those chosen by the majority will of their people."

He also invited opposition leaders of both Nicaragua and Panama as observers, including Violeta Chamorro, who is running against Ortega in Nicaragua's presidential elections Feb. 25.

The United States has long supported the Contra guerrilla movement trying to oust Ortega's Sandinistas. Non-lethal aid continues despite a Central American agreement to disband the Contras in exchange for democratization in Nicaragua.

Bush said he would bring up the problems of a fair election in Nicaragua and arms shipments to El Salvador's leftist guerrillas "every chance I get."

Costa Rican television covered the arrival of each leader live, and the million residents of the capital were braced for two days of closed streets, shut down businesses and limited movement.

In addition to the diplomatic ballet between the United States and Nicaragua, the leaders were expected to discuss drug trafficking, Latin America's foreign debt burden and efforts to isolate Panamanian Gen. Manuel Antonio Noriega.

There was no fixed agenda, however, and plans to issue even a general communique on democracy were scrapped when Bush let it be known he would not sign a document that had Ortega's name on it.

Arias said he was not disappointed because "the communique is usually put in a drawer and forgotten. What we are trying to get out of this is a new dialogue, an exchange of opinions."

Bush planned to meet with Mrs. Chamorro and Panamanian opposition leader Guillermo Endara, whom the United States considers the legitimate president of Panama because of his victory in the May 7 elections, which were annulled.

Also scheduled to attend were Michael Manley of Jamaica, Brian Mulroney of Canada, Jose Sarney of Brazil, Andres Rodriguez of Paraguay, Jose Azcona Hoyo of Honduras, Carlos Saul Menem of Argentina, Carlos Andres Perez of Venezuela, Julio Maria Sanguinnetti of Uruguay, Lynden Pindling of the Bahamas, George Price of Belize, Rodrigo Borja of Ecuador, Desmond Hoyt of Guyana, Arthur Robinson of Trinidad and Tobago, and Rafael Hernandez, governor of Puerto Rico.

36 die in crash of Soviet military plane

MOSCOW (AP) — A Soviet military plane carrying missile crews and their families crashed into a mountain while trying to land on the Kamchatka peninsula in Soviet Asia, killing all 36 people aboard, Tass said today.

It was the third fatal air crash reported in the Soviet Union in a 10-day period, and the second in which Soviet military personnel were killed.

The Antonov-26 two-engine turboprop transport went down 22 miles north of Petropavlovsk-Kamchatsky, the main city on the volcano-dotted peninsula north of Japan, Tass said. It said the crash occurred Thursday.

"The aircraft had an experienced crew," Col.-Gen. Stanislav Kochemasov, chief of staff of the Soviet strategic missile forces, was quoted as telling Tass. "Visibility was poor."

The plane hit a mountain while trying to touch down at Petropavlovsk-Kamchatsky airfield, the general said. The 30 passengers and six crew members were killed, he said.

"The plane was carrying missile crews from distant garrisons and members of their families," Kochemasov said. Tass said a commission headed by the deputy commander-in-chief of the strategic rocket forces is investigating the accident.

MOBIL

"The proposed reorganization focuses on the value and potential of assets rather than geography. It will build on the positive aspects of our current organization and will reduce the levels of management within the organization significantly," said MEPUS President Charles E. Spruell.

Spruell said the changes would be largely directed at the producing side of the organization.

Midland differs, however, in that most of the employees will be from the exploration side. MEPUS was reorganized earlier this year and at that time there was speculation about reductions in Midland.

At first it was thought that there would be massive move-outs, but that was later mitigated when some overseas projects were assigned to Midland.

Under the restructuring program producing offices will be located in New Orleans, Houston, Denver, Midland, Bakersfield, Oklahoma City and Liberal Kan., and these offices will have responsibility for Mobil-operated oil and gas fields within those divisions. Non-operated properties will be managed by separate unit in Dallas.

"The main feature of the reorganization," said Spruell, "is that each local manager will have both the authority and accountability for profitable and technically sound operations."

Mobil officials in Midland were unavailable for comment at press time today.

Former Iran hostage urges focus on current Lebanon hostages

By TONY FREEMANTLE
Hearst News Service

HOUSTON — Instead of noting the impending 10th anniversary of the beginning of the Iran hostage crisis, the United States should concentrate instead on the Americans still held captive somewhere in Lebanon, a former Iran hostage said Thursday.

Anderson

"The important thing today is not us, not our experience, but the fact that (American) eight men are still being held hostage in Beirut," said Bruce Laingen, former charge d'affaires for the American Embassy in Tehran.

WORLD

In an interview in Houston Thursday, Laingen reminisced about Nov. 4, 1979, the day he and 52 other Americans were captured by radical Iranian revolutionaries and held for 444 days before being released the day Ronald Reagan was sworn in as president.

Laingen's remarks came on the eve of a grim milestone for Terry Anderson, the longest-held of the U.S. hostages in Lebanon. Friday is his 42nd birthday, his fifth in captivity since being kidnapped on March 16, 1985. President Bush has proclaimed Friday as National Hostage Awareness Day in recognition of the plight of Anderson, chief Middle East correspondent for the Associated Press, and the other U.S. hostages in Lebanon.

Laingen said he had been meeting with professional Iranian diplomats when the crisis unfolded. At that time Iran was in the midst of severe political instability following the fall of the Shah of Iran. A radical element of the Iranian revolution, capitalizing on the weakness of the provisional government, had whipped the masses into a frenzy demanding the return of the Shah, who was in the United States for medical treatment.

As mobs overran the U.S. Embassy, another group took over the foreign ministry building, capturing Laingen, an aide and a security guard and holding them there for the duration of the drama.

"I never saw the embassy again," said Laingen, who spent his final three weeks of captivity in solitary confinement.

Eternal optimism was what kept him going, Laingen said, and the support of the American people, the outpouring of joy on their return, made recovering from the ordeal much easier. It is this factor, if no other, that makes the Iran hostage crisis different from the situation being faced by the eight men in Beirut.

"They are hapless individuals picked up here and there over time," the former diplomat said. "The American public has gotten immune to all of that and can't reach out to them the way they reached out to us."

Laingen said that while he did not support the failed rescue attempt in April 1980 of the hostages in Iran, he admired President Carter for attempting it, as well as the men who took part.

But the elements that made a rescue attempt possible in Iran — the fact that the majority of the hostages were in one place and the U.S. knew where they were — are not present in the Beirut crisis. There, it is not known on any given day where more than one or two of the hostages are being held.

Laingen said there are only two real options for solving the Beirut situation: Waiting in the hopes of a settlement in the Palestinian problem, since most of the causes of terrorism in the region relate in some way to that problem; or put pressure on the Iranian government, which is showing small indications of moderation and which is the only government believed to have influence over the captors.

"But there can be no substantive relations with Iran while those hostages sit in Beirut," said Laingen. "There can be the beginning of dialogue and discussion, but not any kind of normal relationship."

Laingen left the Foreign Service in 1987 and is currently executive director of the National Commission in the Public Service, which is chaired by former Federal Reserve Board Chairman Paul Volcker.

East Germany grants amnesty

BERLIN (AP) — East Germany's new leadership today declared an amnesty for all citizens accused of illegally trying to escape from the communist nation, a move expected to free several thousand people from prison.

The amnesty also would allow tens of thousands of East Germans who have fled to West Germany through Hungary, Czechoslovakia and Poland in recent months to return home without facing criminal prosecution.

The announcement came a day after more than 100,000 people rallied in Dresden and other East German cities for democratic reform, and a Politburo member began talks with a leading opposition group.

The amnesty, which also covers those who took part in illegal street protests, is the firmest step toward reform since Egon Krenz replaced long-time leader Erich Honecker as Communist Party chief on Oct. 18.

It was announced by the official news agency ADN, which said all prisoners affected would be freed by Nov. 30. Although East Germany does not release information on inmate numbers, Western sources said the measure would affect thousands.

ADN said the amnesty covered all people accused of border violations through today.

Also today, the nation's legendary former intelligence chief, Markus Wolf, called for greater openness and expressed some sympathy for the refugees who headed West.

In an interview with party newspaper Neues Deutschland, Wolf said, "the recovery of trust is demanded before we can develop further," indicating Krenz may be open to loosening some constraints on the media and free expression.

Late Thursday, the state-run ADN news agency reported the huge rally in Dresden and said 15,000 people also marched in Erfurt, 25,000 in Rostock and 5,000 more in Gera.

Bomb kills five Colombian policemen

BOGOTA, Colombia (AP) — A bomb exploded on a street in Medellin as a bus carrying policemen to night patrol duty passed by, killing five officers and injuring 15, many critically, police said.

No one claimed responsibility for the attack late Thursday, but police blamed drug barons angered by the government's refusal to negotiate its policy of extraditing traffickers to the United States.

"The traffickers are the only criminals with the means and the desire to carry out an attack of this size," said a police spokesman in Medellin, the center of Colombia's drug trade.

Hours later, two bombs exploded in Bogota, the capital, injuring one person.

In the two months since the government declared a war on traffickers and the drug lords responded with violent attacks, 168 bombings attributed to the traffickers have killed 21 people and injured 218.

The latest attacks came a day after the country suffered its worst rebel violence in two years, with guerrillas storming two northeastern towns and slaying at least six people, according to army reports.

The bomb in Medellin, packing over 60 pounds of dynamite, was placed on a curb and detonated as the bus passed. National RCN radio said 44 officers were on the bus at the time.

The driver and four others died in the explosion, which severely damaged the bus and sent it reeling out of control, the police spokesman said on condition of anonymity. Many of the 15 injured were in critical condition, he said.

The bus finally stopped when it smashed into a parked taxi, the spokesman said.

The vehicle was carrying police officers to their posts for night duty. The attack stirred panic in Medellin's residential neighborhood of Bello Horizonte.

"The terrorists fired automatic rifles as they fled, and people panicked because they thought the neighborhood was under attack," the spokesman said.

In Bogota, police said three terrorists threw a bomb packing 10 pounds of dynamite at a telephone office from a passing car. One person was injured in the blast, which broke the windows of houses a block away.

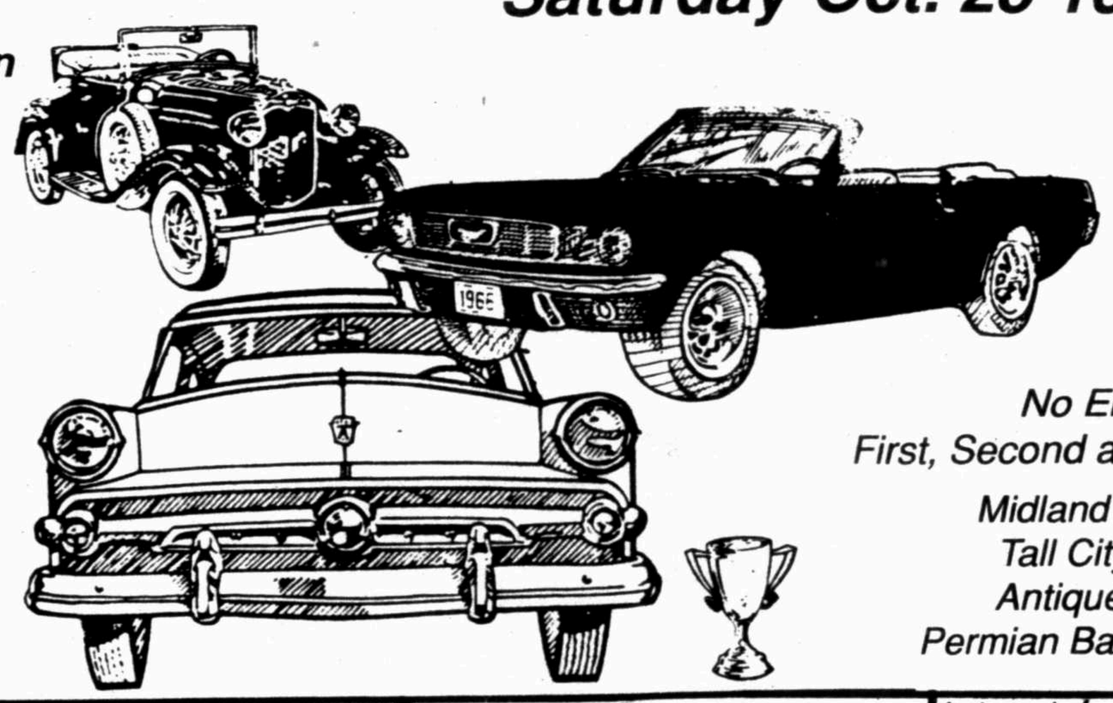

Hours later, unidentifed assailants in a taxi placed a 40-pound bomb outside a bank in southern Bogota. The blast damaged the bank, but caused no injuries.

Did goats eat early man out of house and home?

EIN GHAZAL, Jordan (AP) — A mysterious, seemingly peaceful force drove people from villages like this throughout the region nearly 8,000 years ago, foiling one of mankind's first drives toward civilization.

In chips of charcoal, slivers of plaster and trash heaps of bones, archaelogists say they have found a major suspect — the domesticated goat.

"Goats are referred to as the black plague of the desert," said Gary Rollefson of San Diego State University. Archaeologists suggest that voracious, newly domesticated animals destroyed the soil and ate the fuel around some of humanity's earliest settlements, helping to push people into becoming nomads.

The villages here rose about the same time as those in ancient Mesopotamia, what is now Iraq, which later evolved into civilization.

"Mesopotamia never had this abandoned period," Rollefson said. "One of the reasons was they didn't have goats."

He has spent six digging seasons at Ein Ghazal on the edge of Amman, together with co-directors Zaidan Kafafi from the University of Jordan and Alan Simmons of the University of Nevada's Desert Research Institute in Reno.

Their work, completed this summer, uncovered one of the Middle East's more important archaeological sites, a village roughly three to four times the size of ancient Jericho, that traded with other peoples hundreds of miles away.

"It was one of the largest population centers of its time," Rollefson said, estimating that at its peak, as many as 3,000 people might have been crowded into its 35 acres.

Jericho, about 30 miles to the west, and other early settlements in the region were abandoned about 6,500 B.C., Rollefson said. But Ein Ghazal hung on for another 1,500 years near the edge of the great Arabian deserts.

Ein Ghazal's survival, despite a drier location, argues against the more common theory that villagers abandoned the early settlements when the climate warmed, making farming and food gathering too difficult, he said.

But goats were first domesticated about 7,000 B.C. and rapidly became a major source of food in the region.

Villages like Ein Ghazal depended on a good source of water and on nearby trees for fuel to produce plaster or cook food and for pillars in their homes, as well as to protect against soil erosion. "Trees are a renewable resource. But goats eat anything that grows and trees don't move very fast ... So you don't get any regrowth of the forest," Rollefson said.

"The soil was completely eroded, washed away," when the village was abandoned about 5,000 B.C., he added.

Sandia labs sneak peeks for military

ALBUQUERQUE, N.M. (AP) — Tiny intrusion detectors developed by Sandia National Laboratories researchers are helping the military out-sneak the sneaks.

The miniaturized intrusion detection system is reliable, remotely operated, relatively inexpensive, easy-to-use and portable and can be quickly deployed, says Dori Miller, supervisor of Sandia's sensor systems division.

"They're not the whole answer, but they do give you a first-alert — where to look and when to look so you can make more effective use of advanced technology," she says.

The U.S. Army, Air Force and Marine Corps are using the system, which can be deployed rapidly or used as a fixed system around the perimeter of an air base, she says.

"A Marine gets tired, gets hungry, may have to go to the men's room, and sensors don't do that. They're always on duty watching," Miller says. "We've given him some extra tools to make his job more effective."

The system includes eight seismic detectors that are about the size of a pack of cigarettes, a portable monitor, two break-beam infrared detectors and a beacon device that tells the operator about the system's health.

The seismic detectors sense ground vibrations.

"If you walk, drive a car, all those things create vibration that can be measured," Miller says.

Each seismic detector can transmit one of 64 possible codes to identify its location. The detectors are buried in the ground up to their antennas, which are as thin as blades of grass.

"Depending on the setting of 10 sensitivity levels, (the sensors) can detect anything from personnel to tanks," Miller says.

The portable hand-held monitor receives and displays the codes transmitted by the seismic detectors.

The break-beam infrared detector can signal a break in an infrared beam if a skulker is crossing a path.

A beacon transmits the system's state-of-health every 10 minutes.

"If the field is quiet, you don't have to wonder if your monitor is dead," Miller says.

The package weighs 5 to 7 pounds. The components are powered by 9-volt batteries.

In the nick of time

Edward Lansdale of Long Island, N.Y., changes the batteries in all of his clocks and his smoke detector. Firefighters, burn treatment experts and the Eveready Battery Company are sponsoring a nationwide program to encourage Americans to check their smoke detector and flashlight batteries when they turn their clocks back one hour at 2 a.m. Sunday.

Mangled fuel line has honored place in museum

ALBUQUERQUE, N.M. (AP) — In an unobtrusive beige building lost in the sprawling acreage of Kirtland Air Force Base, a mangled helicopter fuel line wrapped with tape and wire hangs on display as a testament to courage.

It is a record of the ingenuity that saved nearly 200 stranded U.S. Marines during the rescue of the S.S. Mayaguez after the ship was captured by the Cambodians in May 1975.

After the successful battle to reclaim the ship, the Marines were stuck on Koh Tang Island.

An air rescue helicopter was the only machine capable of picking up the Marines but it had been badly shot up during the heavy fighting, declared unsalvageable and ordered dumped into the ocean.

With a lot of luck and inventiveness, the air rescue squadron prepared the makeshift fuel line, made repeated runs to the island and rescued all the stranded troops.

Now the fuel line is part of the little-known Aerospace Rescue and Recovery Service Memorial Museum where the men and women of the Air Force's 1550th Combat Crew Training Wing maintain a monument to honor their fallen.

It is filled with memorabilia from the end of World War II — when helicopters came into their own and began a new era in search and rescue — through the Vietnam War, said Capt. Michael I. Phelps, who doubles as museum curator and flight instructor.

The mementos attest to the pride the members of the 1550th take in their motto: "These things we do that others may live."

The museum, which was moved here from Utah in the mid-1970s, tracks the history of the service from its beginnings as the Air Rescue Service in 1946 when the Air Force separated from the Army, through the end of the Vietnam War.

It is in the care of the 1550th, a unit of more than 1,000 men and women who teach Air Force pilots the highly specialized skills of helicopter search and rescue.

Plaques from grateful servicemen fill the walls of the small museum along with a scorecard from one unit tallying the numbers of men and women it saved in Vietnam. A 15-minute video shows an actual rescue of a downed pilot.

One particularly prized wall of the museum holds nine shelves — some 50 volumes — of scrapbooks that create a pictorial history of the service. Snapshots collected by individual units recount in black and white the people and deeds of search and rescue.

Most are candid shots of servicemen — but not all. Raquel Welch can be viewed entertaining the troops.

Outside are the machines — including the larger ones popularly known as the Jolly Green Giants — that allowed the development and refinement of the service and its techniques.

From the oft-used H-43 "Pedro," which with its plywood rotor blades participated in more rescues than other craft in Vietnam, to the H-21 "Workhorse," more affectionately called the "Flying Banana" for its odd shape, the history of helicopters is on view.

Each is painted to replicate a particular helicopter which saved someone's life. The "Flying Banana" was used in the rescue of a crew member of a downed airplane in Alaska in 1957.

The early model H-19 "Hop-a-long" looks like the one that made the first trans-Atlantic helicopter flight in July 1952, Phelps said. And the H-5 "Sikorsky," named after its builder, first flew in 1943, but the display is a copy of the one that Capt. Daniel J. Miller flew while rescuing six soldiers from behind enemy lines during the Korean War.

Phelps and the 1550th paint, repair and stand vigil over the collection as part of their off-duty chores, though few people ever tour the site, he said.

The service is credited with 24,000 rescues from its inception through 1988. Of those, 10,000 saves involved the military including 3,776 combat saves, Phelps said.

The other 14,000 were civilian saves. Floods, earthquakes and lost hikers raise the rescue helicopters off their pads.

The 1550th shares some unpleasant memories along with the honor and glory, Phelps said.

Men trained by the 1550th flew the helicopters that crashed during the botched attempt to free American hostages in Iran in 1979.

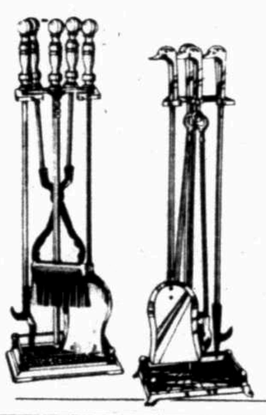

And the service was used to airlift the bodies home after the Jonestown massacre in Guyana.

The museum has not been updated much since the mid-1970s, Phelps said, because more and more the service has become involved in covert and classified operations.

Thatcher says crisis will not change policies

LONDON (AP) — Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher said today she will not change the economic policies that led to the treasury chief's resignation and plunged her government into possibly its worst crisis.

Thatcher

Britain's financial markets were rocked by news of the revolt Thursday. The pound plummeted late Thursday, sank further early today, then stabilized. Stock prices, in their first chance to react, dove this morning before recovering some of their losses.

The new chancellor of the exchequer, John Major, was named to the post Thursday night after Nigel Lawson abruptly resigned, saying he could not continue to serve as long as Mrs. Thatcher retained Sir Alan Walters as her economic advisor. Walters resigned shortly afterward. He did not give a reason.

Major said Thursday he will continue Mrs. Thatcher's fight against resurgent inflation with high interest rates, which already are at an eight-year high of 15 percent.

Mrs. Thatcher told reporters outside her office today that government policies will continue "precisely as they were" despite Lawson's resignation.

She expressed regret at his departure, citing his "enormous achievements," but said her new appointments were all "very experienced ministers."

Later, at a public appearance, she said her economic policies are working.

The government says there is no alternative to high interest rates to fight inflation and maintains the problems of inflation and record trade deficits are improving.

Critics say the policies have pushed Britain to the brink of recession, and many in the public seem to agree.

The government trails the socialist opposition Labor Party by up to 10 percentage points in opinion polls. The next general election, however, is not due until mid-1992.

Labor party leader Neil Kinnock, in a BBC interview today, blamed the crisis on "the utter incompetence of the prime minister."

The Times of London, which normally supports Mrs. Thatcher, said she faced her biggest crisis since taking power in 1979.

"Crisis for Thatcher," the conservative Daily Telegraph reported.

The Independent reported: "Government in turmoil ... Nigel Lawson last night delivered Margaret Thatcher the biggest blow of her decade in office and shook the Conservative Party to its roots."

It said some members of Parliament have secretly discussed the possibility of a leadership challenge after the new parliamentary session opens next month.

Major said after his new appointment that fighting Britain's 7.6 percent annual inflation remained the government's overriding objective. "Monetary policy is tight and is beginning to have its effect. I shall keep it tight for as long as necessary," he said.

Lawson, 57, increased interest rates to 15 percent in a bid to choke off cost of living increases and prop up the pound on world markets.

He held the job since 1983, engineering tax cuts and an economic recovery. He and Mrs. Thatcher appeared in close harmony as long as the boom lasted, but when it began to falter 18 months ago, reports of discord surfaced.

The two were said to disagree over the currency, with Lawson advocating a managed exchange rate and Mrs. Thatcher insisting it be left to the mercy of market forces.

Lawson also was thought to favor Britain joining the European Monetary System, a mechanism for stabilizing exchange rates. Mrs. Thatcher favors joining only after British inflation declines and capital flows freely in Europe. Walters opposed joining Europe and criticized Lawson's policies.

WORLD IN BRIEF

Warsaw Pact leaders meet

WARSAW, Poland (AP) — The seven Warsaw Pact foreign ministers assessed the revolutionary changes taking place in the East bloc Thursday at the military alliance's first meeting since Solidarity took over the leadership in Poland.

Non-communist Foreign Minister Krzysztof Skubiszewski of Poland welcomed the Warsaw Pact's foreign affairs committee as well as the ministers for foreign trade from each country also invited to attend the two days of talks.

Skubiszewski stressed that despite the government change, Poland wants to "maintain friendly, mutually advantageous ties" with its Warsaw Pact partners, and "strict respect of mutual interests on the principle of equal rights."

Although not officially on the agenda, changes sweeping the region were expected to be the main topic in informal moments of the meeting.

Since the foreign ministers last met a year ago, the once-banned Solidarity movement has taken the reins of government in Poland, Hungary's communist party has dissolved itself and become a democratic leftist party and the aging hardline leader of East Germany, Erich Honecker, has been replaced by a younger man promising reform and dialogue with the opposition.

Meanwhile, the Soviet Union continues to press ahead with change in its fourth year under the leadership of Mikhail S. Gorbachev. Only Czechoslovakia, Bulgaria and particularly Romania have resisted the trend toward reform.

Protest march banned

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — A magistrate today banned a protest march by black trade unions, but activists proceeded with plans for a mass rally featuring recently freed leaders of the outlawed African National Congress.

No reason was given for rejecting the application by the Congress of South African Trade Unions to hold a march Saturday in Vereeniging, an industrial city south of Johannesburg. The labor federation, which had sought to protest legislation restricting unions' ability to strike, threatened to defy the ban.

Since mid-September, the government has allowed numerous protest marches nationwide, organized by trade unions and other anti-apartheid groups. The government has approved Sunday's rally at a soccer stadium near Johannesburg welcoming the freed African National Congress leaders.

U.S. interference claimed

OTTAWA (AP) — Canadian observers of Nicaragua's election preparations said Thursday that United States is doing everything it can to disrupt the elections set for next year.

"American intervention continues as the main obstacle to the attainment of free and fair elections in Nicaragua," the Registration Observer Mission said in a report prepared after four weeks in the Central American country.

The group also said U.S.-backed Contra rebels were trying to sabotage the elections set for Feb. 25. Nicaragua's leftist Sandinista government has made the same charge.

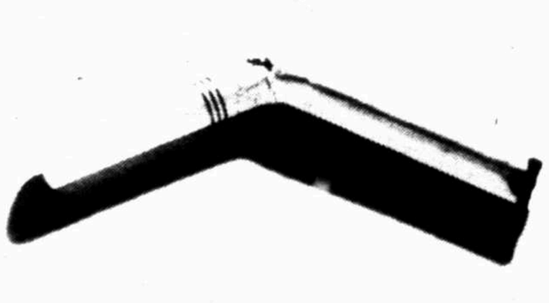

The four-man Canadian observer mission was sponsored by the Committee for Peace and Democracy in Nicaragua, a group of representatives of church, human rights and academic groups as well as unions and development agencies.

Alexandria seeks to turn back pages to former glory

By MIMI MANN

CAIRO, Egypt (AP) — When Alexander the Great founded his capital on Egypt's Mediterranean coast, he intended it to dominate the world. It did, but not through military force as he imagined.

Alexandria dominated through knowledge and culture, and at the heart of its glory was the greatest library in the history of the world.

The Library of Alexandria lasted for hundreds of years after the conqueror's death in Babylon at age 33 but it disappeared with few traces early in the Christian era.

Now, almost 2,000 years later, Egypt is embarking on a project to restore Alexandria's cultural prominence by creating a new library as a symbol of where Egypt's been and where it's going.

"We want others to see Egypt from the right point of view, as a country of civilization," said Ahmed Fathy Sorour, Egypt's minister of education, who is heading the project.

"We are much more than keepers of the pyramids. We are reviving the concept of the Alexandria Library ... in order to prove to the world that Egypt's civilization didn't go away but is a living tradition."

The site is ready and the design chosen for the projected $180 million-complex that officials say will bring new life to an old but honored city.

The site is prime Mediterranean seafront, backed by the bustle of Alexandria's 4 million people. On the horizon is the 10th-century fortress of Qait Bey, built where one of the Seven Wonders of the Ancient World, the Pharos Lighthouse, purportedly stood.

The design by the Norwegian architectural firm Snoehetta is for the new Alexandria Library to be a sweeping circle of concrete, steel, glass and stone — a symbol of the sun.

If an international fund-raising drive now under way succeeds and the project meets its schedule, the library complex will be completed by 1995.

Recapturing ancient glory won't be easy, for few cities have a more impressive early history than Alexandria's.

Founded in 331 B.C., it beckoned the greats of its time, who in turn gave the world a harvest of their best thoughts and inventions: the pipe organ, the Archimedes screw, the atlas and 12-month, 365-day year, grammar and geography, geometry and trigonometry, steam and fire engines, coin-operated machines, city planning, and cataloging.

From Alexandria came news that the Earth revolved around the sun. Alexandrian scholars calculated the circumference of the Earth to within 50 miles and the length of the solar year to within six minutes.

Poetry and prose abounded. They emptied from the Athens-Alexandria axis into ports around the world, Greek becoming Roman becoming Western heritage.

Alexandrian culture revolved around an academic complex called the Moseion, a think tank for Mediterranean intellectuals with the freedom and the means to create at will. At the heart of the Moseion was the library.

Both were thriving by 285 B.C., a half-century before establishment of a second, even greater Alexandria Library known to scholars as the daughter library. It eventually contained an estimated 500,000 volumes, a trove so vast 120 parchment scrolls were required to catalog it.

The collection included the 200,000 volumes of the Pergamum Library, carted away from what is now Turkey by love-smitten Mark Antony as a gift for Cleopatra.

Debate continues over the fate of the ancient Alexandria libraries. Some historians contend they were destroyed during Jewish revolts of A.D. 115-117. Others say Christians who rioted against pagan ways in A.D. 391 destroyed them.

There appears little evidence the institutions survived long enough to be destroyed by Arab invaders hundreds of years later, as many early Western scholars wrote.

The idea to revive the Alexandria Library was born in 1974. University of Alexandria officials saw it as a way to perpetuate a literary and cultural heritage long associated with their city, still an educational headquarters for more than 80,000 students.

Midnight burials being revealed 40 years later

WARSAW, Poland (AP) — A tablet on a plain narrow cross tucked away, almost hidden, in a corner of a cemetery on Warsaw's southern outskirts bears chilling witness to Poland's torment during the Stalinist years:

"In Mokotowski Prison, there was a shot in the back of the head, and then a little horse brought us to Sluzew."

The unsigned verse and cross in Walbrzyska Street Cemetery mark where an estimated 500 to 3,000 political prisoners were buried after being executed or tortured to death at Mokotowski Prison during the late 1940s and early 1950s.

The prison is about three miles away from the Sluzew burial ground.

On a golden autumn day children play and men wash cars only a few steps away from the cross in a parking lot where some of the victims are thought to lie. Drab modern housing blocks stretch along a small adjacent stream.

Only a few curious visitors find their way to the cross, to lay a flower or say a prayer.

But now, four decades later, people are beginning to talk openly about the midnight burials 40 years ago when Sluzew — then a tiny hamlet — seemed a safe place to hide a shameful deed.

And for the first time Saturday, the still unidentified victims will have a funeral Mass said for them at nearby St. Catherine's Church.

The parish priest, the Rev. Jozef Maj, is leading the struggle to lay bare the history of the executions and help families whose loved ones may lie here.

"The victims were from the leading circles of Poland, the ones who might have created centers of social support, who might have formed an alternative leadership," he says of those killed by the Kremlin-imposed Communist regime as it waged class war and consolidated power in Poland after World War II.

If the new Solidarity-led coalition government led by Prime Minister Tadeusz Mazowiecki is to establish its credibility, the priest said, it can start by helping to find out the truth about the killings.

Indeed, the Mazowiecki government has shown great interest in examining the dark post-war years in Poland, when the political persecution Stalin practiced at home also found favor among the men ruling eastern European countries under Soviet influence.

Justice Minister Aleksander Bentkowski this month issued an appeal for evidence of Stalinist-era crimes for his ministry to investigate.

A long-banned movie about the period, "The Interrogation," is now being released in state-owned cinemas. And state television news this week broadcast Maj's story of the Walbrzyska Street cemetery.

The cemetery stands as a "symbol of the martyrdom of Poles during the Communist terror," says Malgorzata Shejnert, of the Church-Social Committee for Homage to the Victims of the Terror of the Authorities in the Years 1945-56.

"It also symbolizes the indestructibility of memory."

The memory of the burials was kept alive by a few older residents of the area.

They say victims were brought by night in horse-drawn wagons and buried just outside the new cemetery of St. Catherine's on Walbrzyska Street. Maj said most of the burials took place between 1945 and 1951, but he has heard of one as late as autumn 1956.

According to the local accounts, lime was poured on the bodies and the ground was afterward leveled.

"After two years, there was no sign of a grave, of a body or bones. That was the point of this method," Maj said.

Further evidence of the burials came last year, when St. Catherine's, one of the area's oldest churches, was cleaning out its archives preparing for its 750th anniversary as a parish next year.

The archive keeper found letters from Maj's predecessor, Canon Adam Wyrebowski, who had written to both the Ministry of Public Security and the Rakowiecka Street prison about the burials in unhallowed ground.

Older women can use birth control pills, panel says

WASHINGTON (AP) — Healthy women who don't smoke should be able to take birth control pills until menopause without significantly increasing their risk of heart attack or stroke, a government panel of experts says.

Though these women could face an increased risk of cardiovascular problems with pill use, this would be outweighed by the risks of not taking the pill — namely, abortion or carrying a pregnancy to term, panel members agreed Thursday.

"Older women need contraception, and you have to weigh the risks and the benefits," said Barbara Hulka, panel chairwoman and head of the epidemiology department at the University of North Carolina School of Public Health.

With the hormone levels in currently prescribed pills far lower than they were in the early birth control pills, medical researchers believe the risks found with the high-dose pills are reduced.

Additionally, studies have shown that pill use offers some protection against cancer of the uterus and ovary.

"When you look at the whole picture, oral contraceptives may be the best bet for some older, healthy women," Hulka said. She added, though, that more research is needed to better determine the risks of pill use in older women.

The Food and Drug Administration will consider the recommendation Thursday by the Fertility and Maternal Health Drugs Advisory Committee to scrap the current practice of advising healthy, nonsmoking women to stop taking the pill — the most effective contraceptive — when they turn 40.

But the panel said the warning against pill use for women over 35 who smoke should remain because of an increased risk of blood clots, the committee said.

An estimated 3 million to 4 million women could be affected if the FDA accepts the committee's recommendation to remove the age ceiling advisory on pill use by nonsmokers.

Panel members noted that their decision was based on little new data on incidence of disease among pill users. Instead, it was based primarily on "informed opinion" and the assumption that the lower doses prescribed now will carry lower risks.

Increased risk of cardiovascular problems, including heart attack and stroke, are the primary concerns for older women on birth control pills.

Breast cancer has been linked with use of oral contraceptives at all ages, but not specifically to use by older women, Hulka said, adding: "There's so little data on breast cancer we can't really address that."

Soldier says U.S. knew of death squads

NATION

WASHINGTON (AP) — A Salvadoran soldier meeting with members of Congress today says he was part of a death squad responsible for as many as 72 murders ordered by top military leaders and condoned by U.S. advisers.

Martinez

Cesar Vielman Joya Martinez says he took part in eight of the killings under orders to bring leftist guerrillas "to justice."

"My work was only to execute these people," said Joya Martinez, 28, who fled El Salvador in July seeking asylum.

The Pentagon, responding to Joya Martinez' allegations Thursday, called claims of U.S. complicity in death squad activity "patently absurd."

"We know of no instances in which U.S. military personnel have been even remotely associated with such morally repugnant activities," the statement said.

Joya Martinez said that from April into July, he was a member of a seven-man special forces group of the 1st Infantry Brigade called GC-2 in the capital of San Salvador. He said two U.S. advisers, known to the Salvadoran troops only as "the Major" and "William," purchased supplies for the group and "had to know what was going on."

Joya Martinez outlined his allegations for U.S. reporters Thursday in interviews at a Washington hotel and planned a series of private visits with members of Congress today.

The Salvadoran military denies the defector's death squad claims. But Jeff Brown, an information at the U.S. Embassy in El Salvador, said Ambassador William Walker "considers the charges very serious" and "if they are truthful, they must be investigated."

Joya Martinez, speaking in Spanish, said his orders came in one-page reports issued by the Salvadoran Joint Chiefs of Staff. He said the reports went to the commanders of the brigade, Cols. Juan Orlando Zepeda and Franciso Elena Fuentes.

He said he took part in eight killings but the reports he saw indicated 72 people were killed from April to July.

"The report did not say kill them, it said 'bring them to justice,' which in simple terms means to kill them," Joya Martinez said. "My job was to kill or be killed."

He said the two American advisers were not in military uniform. They were assigned to the unit to analyze intelligence data and pay for supplies ranging from weapons to gasoline, he said.

"They had control of the department," Joya Martinez said. He said he did not know exactly what knowledge the Americans had, but said, "Obviously they had to know what was going on."

There are 55 U.S. military advisers and an unknown number of CIA agents in El Salvador.

Joya Martinez said he made the allegations public in an attempt to stop the killings. Col. Elena Fuentes said in El Salvador two weeks ago that Joya Martinez is a defector wanted for the murder of two civilians.

The former soldier is seeking asylum in the United States. The U.S. Immigration Service has accused him of "entry without inspection" and he could be deported, said his attorney, William Van Wyke.

Van Wyke said the asylum request is based on "fear of persecution" if Joya Martinez were forced to return to El Salvador.

Joya Martinez said he never knew the identities of his victims and that a lieutenant in the unit "made sure the faces were covered."

"Sometimes they were almost dead from being beaten during interrogation," he said.

The soldiers usually slit the throats of the victims and hurled the bodies over a cliff into the Pacific Ocean, he said.

"They (the officers) always said we had to do this to end the war, because they were terrorists," Joya Martinez said.

Asked how he felt about his part in the killings, he said: "I feel stupid, that's the word. I realize I was manipulated. I knew it was me or them."

Joya Martinez said he left the country after colleagues in his own unit were given orders to kill him because of a botched military sweep to pick up suspected guerillas.

Earthquake rescue efforts pay off

Rescue workers in California have continued their efforts over the past few days even though officials there have been saying that hope is gone for finding any more survivors under the debris left by the Oct. 17th earthquake.

It's a grim task, but the rescuers continue to dig through the rubble in hopes that one of the few remaining individuals still unaccounted for might be found alive.

That was the case last Saturday as workers digging through rubble under Oakland's collapsed Interstate 880 found Buck Helm, a 57-year-old longshoreman, injured and trapped in his compact car, but still breathing. Helm was freed and taken to a hospital where he remains in very serious condition.

But, sadly, what the rescuers generally locate are only the bodies of those whose lives were taken by the destruction of the quake and now, with more than a week having elapsed since the quake, hope has waned for finding any other survivors.

The one bright spot in the California story now is that the death toll, which stands at only 63 — surprisingly low for the degree of physical damage. Early estimates had placed the anticipated death count at 200 or more, with at least 1,000 injured. Now officials are saying that the actual tally is much less, but they're not certain why. Some officials have speculated more bodies — but not survivors — will be found under freeway rubble.

Certainly the more stringent building codes used there today, and modern technology which has promoted greater use of safer fuels (moving away from the heavy use of volatile fuels such as those that promoted fires in the San Francisco earthquake of 1906) made a major difference in the survival rate.

Regardless, in the wake of a calamity like the California earthquake — just as in the Mexico City earthquake of 1985 — every effort must be made to find injured or trapped individuals. The experience of the Mexico City earthquake and now the Buck Helm rescue show that even when virtually all hope is gone, additional effort may reveal survivors where none are thought to exist.

Two cases reaffirmed validity of justice

With the exception of possible appeals, Jim Bakker's 45-year sentence and Zsa Zsa Gabor's three-day jail term hopefully will bring to an end two celebrated cases which have been in the headlines for much too long.

The two cases had some things in common. In both conduct and in testimony of witnesses, it is apparent that both Hollywood celebrity Gabor and television evangelist Bakker possess their share of arrogance with one directing it toward the court and the other toward those millions of Americans who responded to his pleas for money with millions of dollars. They also had in common the fact that their sentences were handed down on the same day.

Beyond that, the similarities end. One case involved only a few weeks; the other dragged on for more than two years.

One trial, Gabor's, cost taxpayers $10,000 and part of her sentence was to repay it; the other, Bakker's, ran in the hundreds of thousands of dollars. One case bore no overtones of sex although the principal player, a former Hungarian beauty contest winner, built a career out of her femininity and beauty; the other actually originated when a sexual encounter between a church secretary and one of the country's best known preachers came to light.

It should come as no shock that both defendants had and no doubt still have their supporters. It is a mark of our nature that within the human race there always will be those willing to support and defend anything and anyone no matter what facts are revealed, no matter how obvious the arrogance or greed involved.

In the Bakker-PTL case we have a minister who may have launched his career with a genuine desire to serve God and God's people but who became involved with material wealth and possessions to the extent that they became his master. In the Gabor case, we have a movie star associated throughout her long life with money, jewels, luxurious homes and fame — all the trappings of celebrity status — and who apparently eventually came to believe those things excused her from obeying rules of conduct by which others must abide.

To that extent, Gabor is not highly different, perhaps, from Leona Helmsley, self-proclaimed "queen" of the Helmsley Hotel empire who is now awaiting sentencing on felony charges.

This week, judges followed the earlier actions of juries and said, in effect, the laws by which we live are for everyone from ministers to movie stars, from those found guilty of massive fraud to those who decide to smack a cop.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Friday, Oct. 27, the 300th day of 1989. There are 65 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

On Oct. 27, 1787, the first of the "Federalist Papers," a series of essays calling for ratification of the U.S. Constitution, was published in New York newspapers. The essays, written anonymously by Alexander Hamilton, James Madison and John Jay, argued in favor of a strong central government.

On this date:

In 1795, the United States and Spain signed the Treaty of San Lorenzo, which provided for free navigation of the Mississippi River.

In 1858, the 26th president of the United States, Theodore Roosevelt, was born in New York City.

In 1880, on his 22nd birthday, Theodore Roosevelt married Alice Lee.

In 1886, the musical fantasy "A Night on Bald Mountain," written by Modest Mussorgsky in 1867 and revised after his death by Nikolai Rimsky-Korsakov, was performed in St. Petersburg, Russia.

In 1904, the first rapid transit subway, the IRT, opened in New York City.

In 1914, author-poet Dylan Thomas was born in Swansea, Wales.

In 1922, the first annual celebration of Navy Day took place.

In 1938, Du Pont announced it had coined a name for its new synthetic yarn: "nylon."

In 1947, the radio show "You Bet Your Life," starring Groucho Marx, premiered on ABC. It later became a television show on NBC.

In 1954, Walt Disney's first television program, titled "Disneyland" after his yet-to-be completed theme park, premiered on ABC.

In 1967, "Expo '67" closed in Montreal, Canada.

In 1978, Egyptian President Anwar Sadat and Israeli Prime Minister Menachem Begin won the Nobel Peace Prize for their progress toward achieving a Middle East accord.

In 1982, China announced its population totaled more than 1 billion people, as counted by more than 5 million census takers.

In 1985, former Navy man John A. Walker Jr. and his son, Michael Lance Walker, pleaded guilty in Baltimore to charges of spying for the Soviet Union.

Ten years ago: The Rev. Charles E. Coughlin, the arch-conservative Roman Catholic priest whose Depression-era radio broadcasts attacked President Franklin D. Roosevelt, communists and labor unions alike, died in Bloomfield Hills, Mich., at age 88.

U.S.S.R. studies weather modification

LENINGRAD, U.S.S.R. — The Soviet Union could launch a "weather war" against the United States and, because of the whimsy of weather patterns, Americans wouldn't even know it.

Jack Anderson

The notion sounds like fantasy, but scientists say it is true. The Soviets are not the only ones meddling with Mother Nature. They are so afraid of America's capability to wage war with the weather that they quietly signed a treaty with the United States some years ago that banned hostile manipulation of the weather. The trouble with the treaty is that it is totally unverifiable.

For the record, no U.S. intelligence agency has any evidence that the Soviets are engaged in even minor skirmishes using the weather. The only country that has ever used weather as a weapon is the United States.

From 1967 to 1972, the Pentagon conducted a $21.6 million rainmaking operation designed to make the Ho Chi Minh Trail slippery. Mistakes were made. Once, seven inches of rain was dumped on an American Special Forces camp in two hours. It is possible that the American cloud seeding compounded a deluge in August 1971 in North Vietnam that resulted in flooding that killed thousands of people.

We have reviewed a dozen secret Central Intelligence Agency reports about Soviet weather modification research done in the last three decades. The research is conducted at the "Hydrometeorological Institute" in Leningrad and in a network of more than 100 similar institutes. Almost all of the Soviet research has a quasi-legitimate agricultural use, but the CIA is we.. aware that the same techniques could be used to deliberately disrupt the climate of other countries.

The Soviets have always believed that bigger is better, and that is reflected in their grandiose weather plans, including a scheme to melt the Arctic ice and moderate temperatures in the northern Soviet republics. One civilian Soviet scientist told the CIA that he knew of as many as 300 secret weather modification experiments done in the Arctic.

One plan, by engineer P.M. Borisov, that was mercifully never carried out, was to pump water from the Atlantic Ocean to the Arctic Ocean. Borisov believed that all the ice in the Arctic Ocean could be melted within three years, never to return again. Part of his blueprint was to throw a dam across the Bering Strait.

The complaints of more levelheaded scientists dampened Soviet enthusiasm for the Borisov scheme.

Temporarily, the Soviets have settled for melting icepacks across huge areas of their country by covering them with one black substance or another to draw the sun.

The Soviets are proficient in seeding clouds to meddle with the amount and type of precipitation, but they aren't content to use the standard seeding method of dropping chemicals from airplanes. They use rockets shot from the ground. "The use of aircraft was judged to be inadequate and anti-aircraft artillery shells and rockets were developed for this purpose," says one CIA report. "Possible danger to the local population area does not seem to concern the Soviets greatly. They claim that the shells fragment completely and it is rare to find a piece as large as one gram on the ground. The danger of the rockets is minimized by the use of parachutes and the rocket sites are established in relatively unpopulated areas."

Another long-held Soviet dream is to be able to divert their rivers that now flow north into the Arctic Ocean south so the water can irrigate Soviet agricultural regions. The loss of water in the Arctic could change weather patterns the world over.

MINI-EDITORIAL — President Bush has failed to coordinate the dozens of federal agencies that have a piece of the action in the war on drugs. Most of those agencies are fighting the drug war from swivel chairs. Meanwhile, the border patrols that face the problem standing up have been subjected to budget and personnel cuts. As usual, Bush sets lofty goals without the dollars and common sense to accomplish them.

CHARLEY REESE

U.S.' economic problem faulty monetary system

The United States is drifting toward economic ruin because we won't face up to our basic economic problem — which is a faulty monetary system.

Charley Reese

Take the deficit, for example. Today Congress has to tax Americans $195 billion just to pay interest on the public debt. They have to take that $195 billion out of the private economy before they so much as provide a pencil to a secretary.

Consider further: that $195 billion does not reduce the principle — the amount borrowed — by even a dime. That's $195 billion that has to come off the top of the federal budget just to service the debt.

To balance the budget Congress this year would have had to spend the $195 billion on interest, then cut an additional $165 billion out of the federal budget — and even that, of course, would not have reduced by a penny the amount already owed. Nor would it reduce next year's interest bill.

Quite obviously, Congress isn't going to balance the budget. Despite Graham-Rudman, the annual deficit has increased, not decreased, in the last three years. And furthermore even those visible increases are phony because the true deficit is hidden by accounting tricks like counting the surplus in the Social Security fund against the operating deficit.

Interest, in fact, inflates the cost of every product and service Americans buy, and collectively that amounts to billions. It's built right into the price, an invisible tax levied by our monetary system which is controlled by commercial bankers.

Section 8 of the U.S. Constitution, which spells out the powers of Congress, says in paragraph 5:

To coin money, regulate the value thereof, and of foreign coin, and fix the standard of weights and measures.

In 1913, Congress delegated this power to coin money and to regulate its value to what is essentially a privately owned central bank, which is called the Federal Reserve. The board of governors is quasi-governmental and are appointed to 14-year staggered terms by the president. The 12 Federal Reserve banks, however, are non-government and are owned by the commercial banks in their district.

Money — which is denominated in Federal Reserve notes (and are backed by nothing) — are printed by the U.S. Treasury but actually issued by the central bank. And it is the central bank that regulates their value by injecting more or less money into the economy. This is done by loans made by commercial banks at interest. And, by the way, it is the central bank that sets the interest rates. It can run them up or run them down regardless of what the U.S. government wishes them to be.

When Congress overspends, it goes to the Treasury and says issue X-amount of bonds. The bonds are then delivered to the Fed, which credits the government's checking account with the money. Where does the Fed get this money? It creates it out of thin air with a bookkeeping entry, thus in fact it issues the currency. The feds then sell the bonds, which are at interest, to the public.

Question: If the government can issue a bond for $10,000 backed up by its faith and credit, why cannot it issue $10,000 in currency backed up by its faith and credit?

Answer: Because bankers are smarter than politicians and they conned them into handing over a constitutional power to issue money so that instead of issuing money, Congress must borrow it from bankers at interest. Abe Lincoln was not so dumb and he did issue the U.S. money, for which the banks hated him.

Bankers and bankers' flacks will tell you I'm full of baloney, but this is all documented by the Fed's own publications. Tom Jefferson warned that if banks are handed control of the monetary system, they will end up dispossessing the people of their own country.

MARIANNE MEANS

Nancy contends new china was really needed

WASHINGTON — Not about to echo Nancy Reagan's mistake, Barbara Bush isn't making any plans to order a complete new set of expensive china commemorating her years as first lady.

Marianne Means

Bush, in fact, once said candidly that her predecessor should have added to the official White House china a few pieces at a time instead of placing that notorious, gargantuan order for 4,732 pieces. Bush's press secretary, Anna Perez, reports that the first family is happy with the present china situation.

Reagan's unwise order eight years ago of 220 place settings of 19 pieces each, banded in her signature red and embossed with the presidential eagle, still provokes controversy. Each place setting cost $950.

The dishes were paid for by a friendly private donor, who in return got a tax break and an invitation to a White House dinner.

The china extravagance contributed to the first lady's negative image as a frivolous woman more concerned with lavish trappings than doing good works. It was estimated the White House already owned more than 10,000 pieces of china.

In her memoir, "My Turn," Nancy Reagan defends her acquisition by contending that it was really needed. "There simply wasn't enough china from any one pattern to go around," she insists.

"Nobody had ordered a complete set since the Truman administration. The Johnsons had purchased new china in 1967, but it did not include serving platters, finger bowls, dessert bowls and bouillon cups," Reagan says.

Reagan's notion of "a complete set" establishes grandiose new standards for dinner service. The Johnson china, according to Lady Bird Johnson's social secretary Bess Abell, originally consisted of 216 place settings. Despite the customary breakage from regular usage, 200 full place settings were still intact when the Reagans moved in.

Abell says Reagan's contention there were no finger and dessert bowls is simply not true. The Johnson china did not include serving platters, because the White House already owned hundreds of silver and china serving platters.

And as for bouillon cups: "Only coffee shops serve bouillon in cups. Everybody else serves it in regular soup plates, of which there were plenty," Abell says. "How many times do you think the White House serves bouillon anyway?"

And although Reagan ordered 220 of everything, she rarely served more than 100 guests at any state dinner. Technically, the White House state dining room has a maximum capacity of 150, but only by overcrowding.

There are two more likely explanations of Reagan's burning desire for new china than the dutiful hostess version she offers, and both are more self-indulgent.

She may have wanted to make sure she'd be permanently well-represented in the White House china collection, samples of which make up one of the most popular displays both in the Smithsonian Institution and the White House. A special White House room for the china collection was first established by Edith Galt Wilson in 1917.

Reagan's predecessor, Rosalynn Carter, understood this historical enticement, although she added no china herself during her four years in the White House. She said, "It's always a temptation for first families to buy china. I'd liked to have said, 'This is Rosalynn and Jimmy Carter's china,' but I didn't think we needed it."

Another possible explanation is that Reagan simply didn't like Johnson's pattern. She says as much in her book: "While the Johnson china was lovely, with the various state flowers around the edge, it was more suitable for a luncheon than a formal state dinner."

• • •

ITEM: The attitude in the White House toward interior decorating as well as china has changed since the Reagans left.

First Lady Barbara Bush is reviving the Committee for Preservation of the White House, established by President Johnson to offer expert advice on acquisition, preservation and decoration for the museum rooms on the first two floors.

Nancy Reagan ignored the committee, never bothering to appoint any members to it. She made no significant changes in the museum, however, that might have required their advice. "The Reagans liked the public rooms as they were," says White House curator Rex Scouten.

Jacqueline Kennedy's historic restoration remains the framework of the White House museum rooms today. Her plans were completed by the Lyndon Johnsons and modified to accommodate the acquisition of additional antique furniture by the Richard Nixons. "The public rooms look pretty much the way Mrs. Nixon left them," Scouten says.

The Gerald Fords and Jimmy Carters contributed a wide range of early American art. The Reagans also added art objects and refinished the floors and doors.

Nancy Reagan concentrated on redoing the living quarters that were her own private domain, which she pronounced as "shabby." She refers to her efforts repeatedly as White House restoration of public importance, making no distinction between those rooms which ordinary people can see and those they cannot see.

So far, Barbara Bush has settled into the White House without much shuffling of chairs. What she may have in mind for the long stretch is not clear. Scouten says, "There is no reason for any major refurbishment."

Pact allows U.S. to work with plotters of Panamanian coups

WASHINGTON (AP) — The White House and the Senate Intelligence Committee agree on liberalized conditions for future U.S. involvement in coup attempts aimed at ousting Panamanian dictator Manuel Noriega, the panel's chairman says.

The Bush administration and the Senate panel reached "a meeting of the minds" at meetings over the past two weeks, culminating in a detailed session Thursday with representatives of the CIA, the Pentagon and the State Department, said Senate committee Chairman David Boren, D-Okla.

Boren said his understanding is that U.S. officials will be free to counsel and consult with potential coup plotters so long as the plot does not specifically set out to assassinate Noriega.

Also on Thursday, the intelligence panel approved a bill authorizing intelligence activities for the next two years and settling a long-running dispute over how the president reports clandestine overseas operations to Congress.

The committee dropped a proposal to force such disclosures within an absolute 48-hour limit after Bush agreed to put in writing his policies on informing Congress.

The compromise followed nine months of negotiations and essentially restored the understandings on reporting covert operations that existed 10 years ago, before they were tattered by the Iran-Contra affair.

Bush is sending a letter to the committee spelling out his intention to abide by those standards, said Sen. William Cohen, R-Maine, the committee's vice chairman.

Boren said the committee held a thorough discussion Thursday behind closed doors with officials of the CIA, State Department and Pentagon on the Oct. 3 failed Panama coup and what can be done to prepare for any similar situation in the future.

Since the coup's failure, Congress and the White House have traded accusations over who was to blame for the lack of U.S. preparation. Administration officials have contended Congress tied their hands through too strict an interpretation of the government's ban on participation in assassinations of foreign leaders.

"We have removed any ambiguities" that may have clouded the meaning of the 1976 executive order that bans U.S. participation in assassination plots, Boren said. Bush is referring the matter to the Justice Department for a new interpretation of the order, said Boren, adding, "We start with a clean slate."

He added: "No one feels that the executive order prohibiting assassinations should be taken to the extreme position that you have to warn someone (of a coup being plotted against them) or that you can't participate in planning a coup where assassination is not the objective."

On the subject of congressional notification of covert operations, the panel also dropped a ban on the CIA's ability to use its contingency fund to launch new covert operations which had not been reported to Congress.

Cohen had proposed the 48-hour provision after the congressional Iran-Contra hearings, during which it became clear President Reagan neglected for more than 10 months to tell the Intelligence committees of the House and Senate that he was selling weapons to Iran in hopes of winning the release of Americans held hostage in the Middle East.

Cohen said Bush has promised to give the committees prior notice of covert actions "on virtually all occasions."

In rare cases when prior notice is not given, the president will let Congress know "within a few days," Cohen said. And should the president let notification slip beyond that time period, he will do so only with an assertion of constitutional authority that would supersede any law written by Congress.

No president would make such an assertion lightly and risk the kind of situation that confronted Reagan in the Iran-Contra scandal, he said. "It almost undid the Reagan presidency," he said. "And if it happens again, I'm sure it will undo a future one."

Searchers for abducted boy hope callers can help

ST. JOSEPH, Minn. (AP) — The sheriff's office installed extra phones hoping that a caller will respond with news of the whereabouts of an 11-year-old boy abducted at gunpoint.

Wetterling

More than 40 deputies set out on horseback Thursday to search dry fields near the spot where Jacob Wetterling was abducted by the masked man dressed in black Sunday evening, but they found nothing.

And authorities said an earlier lead that the kidnapper may have been driving a small red car turned out to be bogus.

An art student who owns such a car called authorities to say he had been driving in the area in search of good material to sketch, and probably was spotted by several residents who thought the driver was suspicious.

"We believe that was the vehicle we had been looking for," said Jim Kostreba, chief deputy sheriff of Stearns County.

The Fox network's "A Current Affair" aired a segment on the abduction Thursday night, and Kostreba said telephones at search headquarters began ringing almost continuously as soon as the phone number was shown.

"We had to hook up additional phones," he said. "We're getting calls from all up and down the East Coast" from people volunteering information about similar cases.

A group of anonymous Twin Cities business leaders Thursday night offered a $100,000 cash reward for Jacob's return unharmed within the next 72 hours. St. Joseph community organizers are offering a reward of up to $25,000 for information leading to Jacob's safe return.

FBI spokesman Byron Gigler said 20 agents have been assigned to the case.

Jacob was riding bikes after dark with his 10-year-old brother, Trevor, and an 11-year-old friend in this central Minnesota town of 2,200 people. The trip to a convenience store to rent a videotape was the boy's first trip out by himself at night, said his father, Jerry Wetterling.

On the way back to the Wetterlings' house, the boys were accosted by a man who had what appeared to be pantyhose pulled over his head to distort his facial features.

The two boys who escaped told police the man pulled a gun and asked them their ages, then ordered them to run away and threatened to shoot them.

Jerry Wetterling said he and his wife, Patty, a substitute school teacher, had warned their four children to be wary of strangers.

"My advice would be to take time to sit down and instruct children that there are sick people in the world," said Wetterling, a chiropractor and president of the St. Cloud chapter of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

The couple described Jacob as an all-around student who loved to study math and play goalie on a youth-league hockey team.

Drug agents target stores, indoor marijuana growers

WASHINGTON (AP) — Federal drug officials say they have names and addresses of thousands of people believed to be growing marijuana indoors, and they plan to go after them and their illicit crops.

"We are trying to send the message to all those people in the United States who have been cultivating marijuana that they are violating the law, they will be caught, they will be prosecuted and, if found guilty, they will serve time," said Drug Enforcement Administration spokesman Frank Shults.

More than 100 people in 46 states, along with 65 stores in 22 states believed to sell equipment intended for use in indoor marijuana cultivation, were targeted for raids Thursday by the DEA.

By early evening, 22 stores had been served with search warrants, and seven or eight boarded up as a result. 65 cultivation operations had been confiscated and 119 people had been arrested, Shults said.

Doug McVay of the National Organization for the Reform of Marijuana Laws, said the raids on stores were "a publicity stunt, a largely ineffective one," and "silly, really silly."

A federal enforcement official close to the investigation said he expects many more raids on stores and indoor cultivation sites because "we have thousands of these."

A DEA statement said the agency has obtained "the names and addresses of thousands of individuals who are suspected of being involved in the indoor cultivation of marijuana."

In the previous month, the investigation code-named Operation Green Merchant had resulted in the arrests of 112 people on charges of cultivating marijuana at 94 indoor growing locations containing 17,000 plants, Shults said.

U.S. marijuana growers — who produce about 25 percent of the supply — increasingly have been moving their plants indoors because of extensive aerial surveillance that enables officials to spot drugs grown outside.

The stores raided "specialize in the sale of these otherwise legitimate products with the knowledge that they will be used to cultivate marijuana," Shults said.

NATION IN BRIEF

Pierce says he won't testify

WASHINGTON (AP) — Former Housing Secretary Samuel Pierce vows to invoke his constitutional rights and refuse a second time to answer questions from a House panel investigating fraud and influence-peddling at his agency.

Pierce on Thursday told the subcommittee he would not testify today and urged it to cancel the hearing. But the request was rebuffed and Pierce was told to appear in person to assert his Fifth Amendment right against self-incrimination.

In a letter to the subcommittee, Pierce said through his attorneys the circumstances surrounding the hearings had not changed from last month, when he first refused to answer questions and said panel members had prejudged him.

"Mr. Pierce is concerned that there continues to be an atmosphere wherein he remains a target of the subcommittee's hearings," the attorneys said. "It is our hope that sometime in the near future the present level of tension may be reduced such that Mr. Pierce can reconsider his present position and testify under fair and mutually agreeable circumstances."

Pierce's attorneys said the hearings scheduled for today and next Friday should be canceled, arguing that forcing him to honor subpoenas "subjects him to unnecessary additional publicity, personal embarrassment and is punitive in nature."

The subcommittee chairman, Rep. Thomas Lantos, D-Calif., was to rule today on whether Pierce waived his constitutional protections by appearing before the panel voluntarily in May, a question raised when Pierce declined to answer questions last

Tampon labeling to begin

WASHINGTON (AP) — Women will be able to reduce their risk of toxic shock syndrome when tampon makers begin complying with a new government regulation requiring standardized absorbency labeling, health officials say.

Within four months, all tampon makers will have to use uniform terms with specified absorbency ranges, allowing women to compare brands and choose lower-absorbency products, the Food and Drug Administration said.

The FDA's announcement of the final regulation Thursday capped nearly a decade of haggling with industry and consumer groups and complied with a court order that set an Oct. 30 deadline for issuing a rule.

Man charged in slugging

WASHINGTON (AP) — Officials say the man charged with slugging Sen. John Glenn was trying to reach Pope John Paul II in an effort to prevent a nuclear war.

Michael Breen appeared in U.S. District Court on Thursday and was ordered held without bond and sent to a federal prison hospital for psychiatric evaluation.

The 31-year-old Washington engineer told District of Columbia Detective Tom Johnson that he wanted the pope to reveal the contents of a message some Roman Catholics believe was received from the Virgin Mary.

Painting tribute to 'golden thread of hope'

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

The artist's exalted rendering of the rescue of Jessica McClure from an abandoned water well in Midland in October 1987 was not done to honor the child, the rescuers or the town but as a "tribute to that fragile golden thread of hope that was woven in Midland during those hours of dread and fear," Texas artist Jan Johnson Sheets said Thursday at the dedication of her painting.

The oil painting that depicts a "whole" and radiant child gloriously held above the rescue tunnel was voluntarily done by Mrs. Sheets to reflect "a spirit that existed here that reassured the rest of the world that human goodness is still very much alive."

Human goodness, she said, is "that little spark that ignites within most of us the need to help others — the need to be compassionate and loving."

Mrs. Sheets' oil painting, entitled "A Triumph of the Human Spirit," officially was given to the city of Midland in a Thursday ceremony in The Midland Center. The ceremony was coordinated by Darlene Gifford, who heads up the Midland Chamber of Commerce's Midland Spirit Committee.

Midland Mayor Carroll Thomas, in accepting the six-foot painting on behalf of the city, described the art as "beautiful." And in linking the child's "dramatic rescue" to the national Midland Community Spirit Award, the mayor said he hopes the award for the compassionate spirit of volunteerism always will allow the country to "benefit from what took place in this city a couple of years ago."

Jessica McClure was 18 months old when she fell into the backyard water well. And three days and two nights later, following intensive rescue efforts and worldwide news coverage, the child, now 3½ years old, was lifted from the well.

Jessica, who was sporting a "Handle With Care!" button, and her mother, 20-year-old Cissy McClure, were among those attending the dedication of the painting.

"I like it," said Mrs. McClure. "It's beautiful — lovely. The little girl (portrayed in the painting) really looks like Jessica. I was almost crying when I saw it."

Jessica is "doing great, doing just beautifully," the mother said.

As if by cue, Jessica, as did others in the full-house celebration, applauded at appropriate times, such as the introduction of a sampling of Jessica's volunteer rescuers, including Andy Glasscock.

Glasscock, a Midland detective and chief of Greenwood's Volunteer Fire Department, and the McClures have become fast friends since the rescue.

"We hang around a lot together," said Glasscock, who cited the worth of volunteerism. "It takes volunteers and a lot of spirit and dedication to accomplish anything." Glasscock cited the rescues in Midland and in the San Franciso earthquake.

"It could have gone bad in a hurry," he said of the 58-hour Jessica-rescue efforts. "Luckily, everything turned out great. We made a lot of good friends out there and got to know a lot of people."

Among those friends is Jessica.

"She comes to me when she is troubled in any way whatsoever," Glasscock said. "She's just a sweet little girl who's been through a lot."

The community spirit shown by Midland in Jessica's rescue two years also was evident in the wake of the California earthquake and in the landfall of Hurricane Hugo that left "grief and despair" on the East Coast.

And that spirit of human goodness "always seems to surface when we have a disaster or when we are subjected to a tragedy," said Mrs. Sheets, a 40-year-old artist who now lives in Mount Pleasant and who grew up in Midland. She and her husband, Dwight, have seven children — all sons.

Mrs. Sheets reflected on today's children and world problems.

"These kids today have things to deal with that we didn't even dream of when we were kids," she said. "It's tough enough just to 'get grown.'"

But when that growing-up "transition" is coupled with "a world that is bent on destroying everything that God embraces," then the future of younger generations seems dismal.

UTPB researcher awarded $26,530 for energy experiments

By JAMES CULLEN
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — A University of Texas of the Permian Basin researcher will get a $26,530 grant for energy research as part of a $61.5 million state-funded research program the Texas Higher Education Coordinating Board approved Thursday.

The Coordinating Board approved 440 awards at its quarterly meeting, out of 3,280 submissions examined by 14 scientific and industrial review panels.

David Eggleston of UTPB was awarded the grant in applied research to study the effect of roughness on a three-dimensional separated flow on wind turbine blades.

The University of Texas at Austin was the largest grant recipient, with 121 grants totaling $16.3 million, followed by the Texas Engineering Experiment Station, with 30 grants worth $4.5 million; the University of Houston, 39 grants worth $4.49 million; Texas Agricultural Experiment Station, 33 grants worth $4.35 million; and Texas A&M University, 44 grants worth $4.1 million.

The grants to 32 public and private universities in Texas came from the $40.7 million Advanced Technology Program, an applied research effort that has specific objectives relating to products or processes, and the $20.8 million Advanced Research Program, which conducts basic research.

The Coordinating Board also released figures that show enrollment for the fall semester was down slightly at UTPB.

Enrollment at UTPB reached 2,111, down 0.98 percent from fall 1988, compared with a 2.27 percent increase at all public universities, which enrolled 394,157.

Enrollment at Midland College reached 3,875, up 5.3 percent, while enrollment at Odessa College was down 0.68 percent to 4,700, and Howard County Junior College District enrolled 1,717, up 4.7 percent.

That compared with a 4.1 percent increase for all public junior colleges, which enrolled 358,315.

Enrollment is up 3.6 percent to 83,491 at independent colleges and universities in Texas. Twenty-five institutions reported increases, while 12 reported decreases.

Combined enrollment at all Texas institutions of higher education is 858,331, an increase of 25,865 students from fall 1988.

The preliminary head-count figures are based on the 12th class day enrollments reported by the schools to the Coordinating Board.

United Way 'right on target' as campaign enters 'tough' hours

By BRIAN PEARSON
Staff Writer

"Holy campaign goal, Mr. Chairman!" the caped superhero shrieked as she dashed across the Yucca Theatre stage at Thursday's Midland United Way luncheon.

Campaign chairman Mike Cook, responding to the spectacle, then told the crowd that the fund drive has reached its toughest hours.

About $1.51 million, or approximately 67 percent, of the $2.5 million goal for this year's drive have been raised so far, it was announced at the luncheon. Only two weeks are left in the six-week drive.

"We're right on target," Cook said. "This last third (of the campaign) is really tough. We're hoping everybody will get out there and do their part.

"Thirty thousand-plus people are counting on us. We've got to do it."

Jane Wolf, United Way executive director, said fund-raisers will embark in a final push during the next two weeks.

"All of the solicitors need to follow up with the remaining contributors whose pledges are not in yet," Ms. Wolf said. "Our loan executives are trying to line up campaign rallies for employee groups not yet contacted."

With the addition of Freewill Foster Home to this year's list of United Way recipients, Cook said the campaign will need more help than ever. The number of recipients is now 18.

In addition to Freewill Foster Home, other agencies serviced by United Way are American Red Cross, Big Brothers/ Big Sisters, Boy Scouts of America, Buffalo Trail Council, Boys' and Girls' Club of Midland, Casa de Amigos, Community and Senior Services, Council on Alcoholism/Drug Abuse, Family Services of Midland, Midland Need to Read, Midland/Lee Youth Centers, Midland Rape Crisis Center, Palmer Drug Abuse Program, Permian Basin Girl Scout Council, Petro Plains Camp Fire, Salvation Army and selected programs of the YMCA.

Globe production of 'Miracle Worker' stresses communication

By GEORGIA TODD TEMPLE
Staff Writer

ODESSA — "If I can just teach you one word, I can put the world in your hands," Annie Sullivan tells Helen Keller before the teacher has broken through the young girl's silent, dark world.

"That to me sums up the play," says Evelyn Jones, director of the Globe Theatre's production of "The Miracle Worker," onstage through Sunday. "That's what she tries to do — put the world in Helen's hands."

Since a central theme of William Gibson's American classic is the power of communication, all performances of the Globe's production are being interpreted for the deaf by interpreters from the Midland-Odessa area. These include Teena Atchley, Barbara Fabion, Marilyn Cornish, Jo Ann Acuff, Mrs. Fan Hunt, Tyanna Roland, Barbara Morgan, Nancy Edge, Kyla Carver and Margaret Dean.

Based on a true story, the play dramatizes the relationship of two people, Helen Keller and Annie Sullivan. Helen was blinded and deafened by an illness shortly after her birth. Miss Sullivan is the energetic, idealistic young teacher who guided Helen out of her solitary existence into the light of communication with the outside world.

"It's a very good show, and it's a show for the family because it deals with the triumph of the human spirit over the odds," said Mrs. Jones.

The role of Helen Keller is double cast, with Odessa actresses Jennifer Smith and Amy Voyles, who have been working on their part since Aug. 19, two days after the play was cast.

"There's been a lot of things that the two little girls have had to work on and learn about being blind and deaf," Mrs. Jones said. "One of the things that's been really, really difficult for them is not looking at things. When you're blind you can't see things, and they have to be really careful to make it look like they can't see where they are going."

Mrs. Jones chose not to blindfold the young actresses because of the danger involved in working on the different height platforms which form the production's set and because of the Globe's steep ramps.

The role of Annie Sullivan is being played by Jennifer Platen, a professional actress and model.

"She has taken the two girls under her wing, so to speak," Mrs. Jones said. "They've spent time away from rehearsal working together, and I think that's helped the production."

GOP treasurer candidate targets debt reduction

By DAVID MORRIS
Staff Writer

On a campaign stop in Midland Thursday Republican state treasurer candidate Kay Bailey Hutchison said her top priority as treasurer would be reduction of the state's debt.

"The Legislature has begun to use debt indiscriminately rather than only using debt when it is absolutely necessary," she said. "I think we've got to go back to using debt to finance a project only when it is absolutely necessary."

Ms. Hutchison said the state's debt swelled from $45 million in 1950 to $2.6 billion in 1988.

"Money you could be putting into public education and highways is going to pay interest on the debt," she said. The problem is compounded by the fact that Texas bonds are not rated AAA by financial institutions, she said.

"Today, our state's bonds have been downgraded to AA," she said. "As a result, we pay at least half a percentage point more" to sell bonds.

She predicted that by the early 1990s, the state's debt will be about $7 billion. At that level, the 0.5 percent more in interest translates into $35 million a year.

The bond rating dropped because "it was not perceived that we were responsibly managing our finances," she said.

She said she hoped reducing the state's debt would result in a restoration of the AAA bond rating.

State treasury department spokesman Bill Cryer said Standard and Poor's dropped Texas' bond rating in 1986 and Moody's Financial Services followed suit in 1987.

He said a number of factors influence a financial institution's decision on bond ratings. The overall health of the economy is the primary consideration, he said.

MCHD directors approve plan to fill board seat

By BRIAN PEARSON
Staff Writer

Midland County Hospital District directors will leave no tumbleweed unturned in their search to appoint someone to a vacant board seat, they announced at their monthly meeting Thursday.

The directors approved procedures to fill the District 2 position, a seat formerly held by Oralia "Lilly" Corrales. Ms. Corrales resigned in August after suffering back trouble.

A committee of two Midland Memorial Hospital administrators and a director will research applicants and develop a list of potential candidates, who must live in the northeast Midland district.

BIG SPRING — Graveside services for J.M. "Pete" Ellis, 83, of Andrews, will be at 11 a.m. Saturday in the Andrews Cemetery with the Rev. Floyd Wallace, interim pastor of Baptist Temple Church of Big Spring, officiating. Services are under the direction of Myers & Smith Funeral Home.

Ellis died Thursday at a local nursing home following a lengthy illness.

He was born Jan. 22, 1906, in Colorado City and had been an Andrews resident since 1954, moving there from Westbrook. He worked for M&M Chevrolet and was a former member of the Eagles Lodge.

Ellis married Helen Jeffries on May 1, 1924. She died in 1986.

He also was preceded in death by three brothers and four sisters.

Survivors include a son, M.E. "Pete" Ellis of Midland; a daughter, Maxine Hinsley of Coahoma; five grandchildren and seven great-grandchildren.

Marvis James

Funeral services for Marvis "Sparrow" James of Midland are scheduled for 11 a.m. Saturday at Community First Missionary Baptist Church with Dr. O.L. Taylor officiating. Services will be under the direction of Warren Funeral Home.

James

James, 56, died Wednesday night at a local hospital following a brief illness.

He was self-employed as a mechanic in Midland.

He is survived by his wife, Loetta Badger James of Midland; one son, Marvis James Jr. of San Antonio; one brother, Marvis James of San Antonio; and five grandchildren. He was preceded in death by a daughter.

Opal Newsom

Funeral services for Opal Van Stavern Newsom of Waco, formerly of Midland, will be at 2 p.m. Monday at the First Baptist Church. Burial will follow at Fairview Cemetery under the direction of Ellis Funeral Home.

Mrs. Newsom died Wednesday at a Waco hospital.

Border Patrol stings bear fruit with seizures

WASHINGTON (AP) — Federal authorities have been running "fruit stings" along the Rio Grande as they try to crack down on a bustling trade in contraband Mexican mangoes, limes and avocados.

The Animal and Plant Health Inspection Service says it seized 93 tons of forbidden fruit in El Paso over the past year, up from just 33 pounds of prohibited produce confiscated in 1984.

Officials say the four "Fruit Interception Operations" netted 56,350 pounds of contraband produce in the El Paso area in the year that ended Sept. 30. Border Patrol agents seized another 130,500 pounds during apprehensions of illegal aliens attempting to enter the city from Ciudad Juarez.

El Paso is considered the border's hot spot for illegal imports of fruit, plants and birds from central and southern Mexico, largely because smugglers have a thriving market for their prohibited produce, which they sell door-to-door or on street corners.

"They sell it all throughout town — residential areas, busy intersections, anywhere there's a congregation of people," says Phil Garcia, assistant officer in charge of APHIS' Plant Protection and Quarantine office in El Paso.

"It's still a lucrative market, or business, for the smugglers," Garcia said Thursday. "There's still a demand and as long as that demand is there, people are trying to bring it across illegally."

Fruit seizures have exploded since the mid-1980s — jumping from 33 pounds seized by the Border Patrol during apprehensions of illegal aliens in 1984 to two tons the following year. By 1988, 78,000 pounds of prohibited produce had been confiscated from illegal aliens trying to sneak into the country at El Paso.

Additional fruit is confiscated from people legally entering the country at the ports of entry in El Paso, but officials say the quantity is far less than what is taken from illegal immigrants, who bring crates or plastic bags filled with produce.

Garcia said the smuggled produce may contain pests such as fruit flies, which are a threat to U.S. agriculture, or diseases not known to occur in the United States.

"The fruit is of unknown quality. It's not the same as the A-1 produce you receive in grocery stores. You don't know what chemicals or residues might be on that fruit. There's no quality control," Garcia said.

APHIS launched its first "fruit sting" at the end of April and within two weeks PPQ agents, working with the Border Patrol, had confiscated more than eight tons of produce. A second sting netted 21,200 pounds, with the last two operations bringing in a combined nine tons.

APHIS spokeswoman Janna Evans says the agency believes the interception operations have been effective in curbing smuggling. She says one illegal alien who used to smuggle lemons and limes is now peddling popsicles in El Paso.

APHIS, a part of the U.S. Department of Agriculture, said smuggled produce poses a significant risk to U.S. agriculture because it can be carried by consumers to crop-rich areas of Arizona, California, Florida and Texas.

In the year that ended Sept. 30, APHIS officers found more than 500 fruit fly larvae, as well as unidentified avocado weevils, scales and other serious agricultural pests.

If left unchecked, established populations of these pests could devastate local U.S. crops and cause millions of dollars in damages, APHIS said.

APHIS and Border Patrol agents also seized a total of 111 contraband birds last year from illegal aliens, up from just seven confiscated birds in 1984. The peak year for bird seizures, however, was in 1987, with 122.

The illegal parrots, fighting cocks and finches can carry deadly poultry diseases, officials said.

Thouvenel's second concert this weekend

From Staff Reports

The second concert of the Thouvenel String Quartet's 1989-90 Chamber Music Series features works of unusual innovation and influence that will provide Thouvenel listeners with a glimpse into the vast store of chamber music repertoire.

Concerts are set for 8 p.m. Saturday at the Allison Fine Arts Auditorium, Midland College, and at 3 p.m. Sunday at the Founder's Building of the University of Texas of the Permian Basin.

Opening the program will be the first string quartet composed by Beethoven, though numbered as the third.

"Packed with remarkable ideas and musical imagination, this work clearly demonstrates the genius of Beethoven and his early desire for the new and different," said Gene Purdue, first violin with the quartet.

The Roy Harris String Quartet No. 2, entitled Three Variations on a Theme, was composed in 1933. Marked by a particular Western language and flair, due to Harris' birth and early years in Lincoln County, Oklahoma, this widely respected string quartet is filled with deeply expressive melodic lines, expansive musical forms and appealing Americana moods.

"Considered by many to represent the American style in its most clear language, Harris was an innovative and influential composer on the American scene," said Purdue.

The G Minor Quartet of Claude Debussy is the first great impressionistic work for string quartet. Composed at the turn of the century, this masterpiece not only represents a culminating of decades of musical thought, but also generated decades of musical thought.

"A magnificently haunting work of great passion and coloristic sonorities, the G Minor Quartet of Debussy breathes musical sound into the visions of Renoir and Monet," Purdue said.

Other members of the quartet are Janet Chisholm, violin; Sally Chisholm, viola; and Rebecca Seiver, cello.

Recently the group performed at Southmost College in Brownsville and has upcoming performances in Durant and Oklahoma City, and at Sul Ross State University, Alpine.

Remaining concerts in the Midland-Odessa Chamber Music Series are Feb. 3 and 4, March 17 and 18 and May 12 and 13.

Tickets for Saturday and Sunday's concerts are $7.50 general admission, $5 for full-time students and senior citizens and may be purchased at the door. The Midland performance is sponsored by Mr. and Mrs. Smith Ray and the Odessa performance is sponsored by Warren Burnett Associates.

SSC panel agrees to buy land for atom smasher

DALLAS (AP) — The Texas commission responsible for helping to get financing for the $5 billion super collider has agreed in principle on a land acquisition plan for the experimental atom smasher.

Texas National Research Laboratory Commission members also Thursday examined needs for a potential first bond issue of up to $250 million, which could be used for some facility construction and research and development.

The superconducting super collider, expected to take up to seven years to construct, would direct proton beams against each other in a search for basic building blocks of the universe.

Commissioners received details of the project's federal budget from Dr. Roy Schwitters, SSC lab director. Schwitters also offered suggestions how the agency could provide part of the state's cost sharing for the project's magnet test facility and other construction.

The commission has not yet issued any bonds or authorized any expenditures on the project. But it has been notifying landowners along the 53-mile circular site in Ellis County about construction plans for the project's underground tunnel.

The land acquisition program, estimated to cost $36 million, involves 16,000 acres located about 35 miles south of Dallas.

MIRACLE

Although there are professionals in the show, no one is being paid for his onstage performance. Out of the cast and crew, six are from Monahans and have been driving back and fourth three and four nights a week since August.

Mrs. Jones, who was managing director of the the civic theater in San Angelo, has lived in Monahans for nine years where she teaches English and drama at the high school. Her work with the Monahans Community Theatre brought her to the Globe.

"Marjorie Morris, the founder of the Globe, saw a production that I directed called 'This West Texas Country.'"

"This West Texas Country" was produced in Monahans during Texas' Sesquicentennial and then re-produced two summers ago when it was performed in Balaklava, Monahans' sister city in Australia.

"She liked it well enough to ask us to come to the Globe and do it this past October, and she asked me, at that time, if I would be interested in coming to direct a show. They were between managing directors at that time."

When Mrs. Jones said she was interested, she was asked to direct "The Miracle Worker."

Other cast members are Jason M. Nickles as Percy; Nathan T. Sykes as James Keller; Scott Mahon as the doctor; Nancy Jo Johnson as Kate Keller; Vera Kohler as Aunt Ev; and John Rutherford as Captain Arthur.

Production time runs around two hours, including the two intermissions. Several of the periphery characters have been excluded from the Globe's production.

"I wanted to concentrate on the story of the battle between Helen and Annie as they both struggled to reach that goal of communication," Mrs. Jones said.

"The Miracle Worker," made possible in part by sponsorship from 97 Gold FM, Judge and Mrs. Max Ramsey, Marjorie Morris and Mr. and Mrs. Robert Russell, is on stage at 8 p.m. today and Saturday and at 2:30 p.m. Sunday. Tickets may be purchased by phone, 1-332-1586, and are general admission except for Globe season ticket holders.

During her years in West Texas, Mrs. Jones has "noticed what a wealth of talent we seen to have in this part of the country." Directing "The Miracle Worker" has allowed her to "work with people from different communities and see how it pulls together," and the experience has left her optimistic.

"I am very proud of the work that all of these people have done to pull this into shape," she said. "We're looking forward to a successful run."

The board will rank the top three candidates. Board President Margaret Purvis will then contact the No. 1 candidate to see if he or she will serve.

Ms. Purvis will recommend the candidate to the board for approval at its next monthly meeting.

"At this point we have no formal applications," Ms. Purvis said. "We have an indication of one possible candidate who would be interested."

Board member Pat Estes said no time frame has been set when the committee will stop fielding candidates and the board will appoint a director.

"I feel we need to take our time and give the people in that area of Midland County an opportunity to come forward and serve our taxing entity," Ms. Estes said. "I feel it is an honor to be elected or appointed to this board."

In other board proceedings, directors tabled action on a proposed purchase of 55,000 square feet of property in Midland's Gardens Addition.

MMH President Ray Branson said the hospital has reached an agreement with the land owner.

"We're now in the final process of working up the final documents to be executed," Branson said, adding that the closing date will be Dec. 15.

Neither MMH administrators nor directors would comment on how the hospital will use the land.

"We're not at liberty to discuss it until we really have a deal," Ms. Purvis said.

Ms. Hutchison's solution to the debt problem involves giving greater fiscal control to the treasurer's office.

"There needs to be a central focal point for the administration of debt," she said.

Texas is experiencing tough economic times, she said, and must continue to try to attract new manufacturing industries to the state.

"We need to revitalize the oil industry — I think we ought to be fighting for a national energy policy," she said. "We can't rest on our laurels anymore. We should be casting our lot in other areas as well."

Ms. Hutchison graduated from the University of Texas School of Law in 1967, after which she became the first female television news reporter in Houston.

In 1972, she was the first Republican woman elected to the Texas House of Representatives, where she served two terms.

She is a partner in the Dallas law firm of Hutchison Boyle Brooks and Fisher, which specializes in public law and finance. She served as director of Fidelity National Bank of Dallas until her resignation to run for the treasurer's office.

Current state treasurer Ann Richards, a Democrat, is vacating the office to run for governor in the 1990 election.

Hutchison said this was her third campaign trip to Midland.

Other announced candidates for treasurer are Republican Lynn Oates of Decatur and Democrats Karen Friend and B. Fred Ashmead.

Mrs. Sheets cited a "society that is overrun with drugs," broken homes, latch key kids, perverted sexual assaults, disregard for human life, rampant starvation, satanic cults, deterioration of the ozone layer, and a "nuclear self-destruct button."

"In light of all of that we know concerning the evils that our children are faced with day in and day out," Mrs. Sheets said, "... maybe that's why the press did an overkill on this particular (Jessica McClure) rescue."

Mrs. Sheets said that "amidst all the fears was an absolute God-graced triumph. We live in a world that is very hungry to hear something positive."

Medical examiners board being investigated

AUSTIN (AP) — Financial irregularities at the State Board of Medical Examiners are being investigated by the state auditor's office, following allegations that a former employee put relatives on the payroll for work they didn't do.

The board's executive committee reviewed the allegations at a Wednesday meeting and voted to bring the matter before the full 15-member board Saturday.

The former chief proctor of the examinations given to medical students by the board allegedly placed three relatives on the payroll to monitor examinations, but the relatives did no work, said board member Cindy Jenkins and other sources, the Austin American-Statesman reported Thursday.

The proctor, Jack Allen, is married to Flo Allen, the agency's business manager.

A woman at the board who declined to identify herself said Ms. Allen was on vacation. A call placed to Jack Allen's number in Elgin by The Associated Press was answered with a recorded message and was not immediately returned.

The American-Statesman reported that documents it obtained under the Texas Open Records Act also include other allegations of financial mismanagement. They include failure to report $158,811 to the Internal Revenue Service that was paid to medical license calligraphers and other helpers; failure to solicit competitive bids for the calligraphy; and possible conflicts of interest.

Jack Allen has received $24,930 from the board for locating calligraphers to write the names of doctors on medical licenses and for monitoring exams, the records show. They also show that Allen's medical board income over the past five years was not reported to the IRS, the American-Statesman reported.

It was Flo Allen's responsibility to report to the IRS the payments by the board to her husband, the American-Statesman reported.

Two more bodies found in Phillips plant

PASADENA (AP) — Crews cleaning up a Phillips Petroleum Co. plastics plant damaged by explosions and fire found two more bodies, and rescuers continued a round-the-clock search for 15 more employees still missing.

The two workers were found Thursday night outside a reactor control room, said Phillips spokesman Scott Carlberg.

So far, seven victims have been found at the plant. Jeffrey L. Harrison, 36, an 11-year Phillips employee from Houston, is the only victim company officials have identified.

Thursday's search was halted temporarily when officials discovered a hydrocarbon leak at the plant, which was ripped apart by a series of explosions Monday.

Work was halted for about five hours so other workers equipped with monitors could determine if the level of vapor was dangerous.

"We didn't want to take any chances," Phillips spokesman George Minter said. "When you go into an area like this, with all these pipes, you expect something like this. We feel there is no danger. It's the workers we're looking out for."

"This is the kind of material we said we might encounter," Carlberg said of Thursday's leak. "We're taking an extremely conservative safety measure."

Also Thursday, workers in another part of the plant scattered when someone spotted a vapor cloud coming out of a pipe that was being purged, Minter said. The cloud, however, was nitrogen, which is not dangerous, he said.

After making sure the area where the hydrocarbon leak was detected was safe, the search resumed at 5 p.m. and the two bodies were discovered later that night. Minter wasn't sure how the leak was corrected.

Phillips also announced Thursday night that the company will continue to pay regular workers affected by the disaster through Dec. 31. But Lavele L. Frantz, Phillips vice president of Human Resources and Services, also said the company has not yet decided long-term business plans for the facility.

Man convicted of capital murder in officer's death

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — An unemployed insurance salesman displayed no emotion when a jury convicted him of capital murder in the shooting death of a suburban policeman although the verdict could send him to Texas' death row.

Robert Sanchez, 35, merely shook his head one time when the verdict was returned Thursday.

District Court Judge Susan Reed read the verdict late Thursday in the trial of Sanchez in the shooting death of Balcones Heights deputy marshal Richard Scott Rogiers.

Sanchez had claimed Rogiers accidentally shot himself to death during a struggle.

Rogiers was shot twice in the head after stopping Sanchez's auto for a traffic violation March 11. He was pronounced dead 23 hours later in Medical Center Hospital.

Jurors took about six hours to find Sanchez guilty and were to return to court today to hear evidence in the punishment phase of the trial.

Jurors have only two options. They can sentence Sanchez to death by injection or sentence him to life in prison.

Judge Reed told the jury it will hear evidence in the trial's punishment phase today, then be released until Monday. The panel will then return to court, hear final arguments, and determine a sentence.

Assistant District Attorney Michael Gephardt told jurors during closing arguments that they should disregard defense claims that the shooting was in self-defense or accidental.

"Either all the state's witnesses under oath lied and you're going to have to accept his statement," Gephardt told the jury. "'I didn't do it, I was holding on to his hand. Or if I did do it, I didn't mean to do it.' He can't have it both ways.

"He killed, he murdered, he executed him (Rogiers)," Gephardt said. "It was a brutal cold-blooded slaying, perpetrated by that man, Robert Sanchez."

Defense lawyer Michael Ugarte told jurors that there were signs of a struggle at the scene.

"Something did happen out there, something more than the state's telling you," Ugarte told the jury.

Dallas man hospitalized after officers shoot him during arrest

DALLAS (AP) — A Dallas man was hospitalized in critical condition early today after he was shot by police from suburban Rowlett who were attempting to arrest the man on a drug charge, authorities said.

Dallas Police Deputy Chief Ray Hawkins said the Rowlett officers were waiting in the parking lot of White Rock Apartments for the man to return when he suddenly approached the driver's side of their unmarked car.

The man, who has not been identified, demanded to know who the men were and why they had knocked on his door earlier, Hawkins said.

The officers were pulling out their badges to identify themselves, Hawkins said, when the man pulled a pistol from his waistband and pointed it at them.

Women prison employees claim sexual harassment

PALESTINE (AP) — Female workers in several Texas prisons claim in a published report they've been harassed frequently and disciplined with inadequate job assignments for rejecting sexual advances from male officers.

Dozens of women have come forward in the wake of a 7-week-old sexual harassment lawsuit filed against a prison warden by his former secretary, the Dallas Morning News reported in a copyright story today.

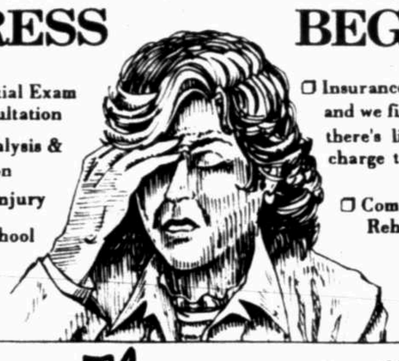

Union officials who represent correctional officers told the newspaper the female workers at three East Texas prison units outlined a pattern of harassment that they say has been condoned for years.

Some male officers promised female workers easy duties in exchange for sexual favors but women who refuse have been shocked with stun guns or given poor assignments in a scheme known as "play or pay", employees told the union.

Texas Department of Corrections officials at the three units — Beto I, Michael and Coffield units in Palestine — deny any knowledge of such incidents.

TDC officials said that only one sexual harassment complaint, separate from the suit, has been lodged with prison officials in the last six months.

AGRICULTURE

Farmland prices expected to increase

WASHINGTON (AP) — Farmland prices are expected to increase in 1990 but at a much slower pace than this year, according to a survey reported by the Agriculture Department.

Based on a survey of farmland appraisers made in early August, prices are likely to rise an average 3.5 percent by August 1990. That would be about half the 6.5 percent increase reported for 1988-89.

Farmland prices plummeted in the early 1980s, and by 1986 had reached a 19-year low average nationally of $548 per acre before turning back up. The peak was $823 per acre in 1982.

One reason suggested by appraisers for the slowdown in the price increase is a drop in corn and soybean prices from the drought-levels of last year. But higher wheat prices probably are helping support some values, particularly in the Great Plains.

A group of about 500 appraisers is checked quarterly by a University of Wisconsin survey laboratory for the department's Economic Research Service, said analyst Roger Hexem, author of the report.

Hexem said in a telephone interview that the year-ahead estimate by appraisers was "somewhat lower than we have been forecasting" within the agency. The information is being reviewed and will be considered when USDA issues its next farmland forecast late in November.

The report said appraisers expect land values to rise the fastest in the North Central region, up 4.8 percent during the 1989-90, compared with a 9.5 percent increase reported in 1988-89.

No state estimates were included in the report.

"While corn and soybean prices remain relatively high compared with recent years, current prices are lower than last year and may have contributed to the less-optimistic outlook," the report said. "In contrast, high and rising wheat prices are likely providing strength to the region's land values."

In the South, appraisers expect land values to increase an average of 2.7 percent in 1989-90, compared with 5.5 percent the previous 12 months.

"Principal factors behind the 2.7 percent increase expected in the South are commodity price movements, lower interest rates and improving farm incomes," the report said. "During the past year, the appraisers said high commodity prices, government programs and favorable weather contributed to higher farmland values in the South."

Farmland in the West was forecast by appraisers to appreciate about 3 percent, compared with 4.1 percent in 1988-89.

"High commodity prices, including cattle, and stronger demand by non-agricultural investors are the most frequently cited factors behind the increases," the report said.

Values in the Northeast are expected to rise an average of 1.4 percent in 1989-90, compared with 2.8 percent the previous year.

The report said most federal reserve banks also report slower increases in farmland values. Agricultural bankers in the Chicago district, for example, said "good" farmland averaged 1 percent higher in the second quarter of this year, down from a 3 percent gain in the first quarter.

Senate, House OK disaster aid measure

WASHINGTON (AP) — Legislation is heading to President Bush that will increase disaster payments to farmers who planted replacement crops after their wheat and cotton failed because of bad weather this year.

The Senate and House gave final approval to the measure Thursday, and Republican Leader Bob Dole, R-Kan., predicted Bush would sign the bill pushed through by farm-state lawmakers in a bipartisan effort.

"Farmers had a legitimate gripe that producers who moved quickly to plant a second crop on failed acres shouldn't be penalized when it came time to qualify for federal disaster aid," Dole said.

The measure will change the way disaster assistance payments are calculated for farmers who planted a replacement crop after drought, flooding and other extreme weather destroyed their first crops.

Lawmakers have complained that an Agriculture Department formula will penalize those producers, and in some instances mean farmers could receive no disaster payments even though they earned little or no profit on their second crops.

Winter wheat and cotton farmers will be particularly affected because many planted grain sorghum and soybeans after their initial crops failed.

The problem stems from a nearly $900 million disaster relief package enacted in August. In an effort to prevent farmers from reaping double benefits, the law required USDA to reduce assistance payments to farmers by the value of any crop that replaced one ruined by bad weather.

Congress didn't spell out how to determine the replacement crop value, leaving that to USDA. The agency decided to deduct 75 percent of the gross value of the replacement crop from the disaster payment a farmer would have otherwise received for losses on his first crop.

Lawmakers reacted angrily, contending that USDA's formula was arbitrary and failed to account for region-to-region differences in production costs.

Under the legislation, that system would be modified.

Farmers would have no payment reductions if their replacement crops failed to produce more than 50 percent of the county average yield. Those farmers harvesting more than that amount would have USDA's deduction applied only on the value of their replacement crop above the 50 percent yield threshold.

In addition, replacement crop deductions would be applied only against disaster assistance earned on acres actually replanted. Farmers would receive smaller payments without those acreage offsets.

EARNEST KIKER

Caution should be used on ATVs

Many ranchers and farmers and members of their families are using three-wheeled all-terrain vehicles (ATVs) to speed up work schedules.

These vehicles call for special safety precautions.

Kiker

Increased use of these three-wheelers has resulted in more injuries and deaths, according to the U.S. Consumer Product Safety Commission.

Accidents with these small motorized cycles can be reduced by following some key safety rules, including:

- Beginning riders should get professional instruction and certification. They should practice first on a level area and then in a more difficult but controlled environment before riding an ATV in rough or unfamiliar terrain.
- Injury investigations show that most accidents occur when the ATV encounters an unexpected obstacle, such as a rock or ditch. Riders should not exceed safe speeds for the terrain on which they are traveling.
- Parents should realize that ATVs are not just overgrown tricycles. Children should use motorized ATVs only after getting instruction under adult supervision and then only when they are old enough to handle them safely.
- Drivers should wear approved protective helmets and protective gear.
- ATVs are designed for only one rider — do not ride double.

Peanuts boost New Mexico economy

Associated Press

Statistics compiled by the New Mexico Department of Agriculture set the overall value of the 1988 peanut crop in the state at $8.8 million, most of that in Roosevelt County.

When you're talking about peanuts in eastern New Mexico, you're not talking peanuts.

In Roosevelt County, which grows about 90 percent of the peanuts in New Mexico, farmers stand to take in about $5 million for this year's crop, being harvested this month.

"And that's just to the grower," says Sam Rigsby, general manager of Borden Peanut Co. in Portales, one of six major peanut packaging plants in the area.

"When you take that, depending on how many times it turns over in the community — which is several — it has a large impact," Rigsby says. "It's the most important cash crop."

Statistics compiled by the New Mexico Department of Agriculture set the overall value of the 1988 peanut crop in the state at $8.8 million, most of that in Roosevelt County. Curry and Lea counties also produce peanuts.

Some 15,000 acres planted in peanuts this year in Roosevelt County will produce an estimated 30 million and 35 million pounds, says Floyd McAlister, agricultural extension agent for the county. Officials say that translates into a few hundred temporary jobs for a couple of months in the peanut plants — in addition to the hundreds of year-round jobs at those plants.

Roosevelt County producers grow only Valencia peanuts, which have three to four kernels to a pod compared to the two kernels found in most other varieties of peanuts, says McAlister.

Valencias have been sold historically for roasting.

"Very few of our peanuts go into butter," McAlister says. "They're the kind where you just shell them and eat them."

He says peanuts have been grown in the area for at least 50 years and the demand for the nut has been expanding.

The Borden plant, for example, produces raw, roasted and salted peanuts in the shell, selling them nationwide, in Canada, Europe, the Mediterranean, the West Indies and elsewhere, Rigsby says.

Most peanuts in Roosevelt County are dried in the field after they have been dug up because "that's where we get our best quality, if they're allowed to field dry," McAlister says.

The farmers dry some early in the season to ship and establish their place in the market, but once that demand is established, about 80 percent of the crop is left to dry where it's dug, he says.

The harvest begins the last week in September to the first week in October; peanuts take about 10 days to gather if they're allowed to field dry.

McAlister says the crop does well in the eastern New Mexico area because of its sandy soils and high and relatively dry environment.

However, while the peanut crop is a major one, it takes up only about 10 percent of Roosevelt County's irrigated land. Sandy soils require rest from the demands of a single crop, so farmers rotate crops each year, planting their land in peanuts about one in every three years. The rest of the time the crop is likely to be corn, wheat or grain sorghum, McAlister says.

Peanuts could be bringing in even more money and jobs than they are in Roosevelt County, except that cooler-than-normal temperatures in the past three years have hurt yields, he says.

Peanuts, he says, need quite a few days of 100 degree-plus temperatures to reach the maximum yield, and in the past two years, "we've had not a one."

Idled acreage may be used

WASHINGTON (AP) — An Agriculture Department economist says a world-class foot race could develop among farmers in 1990 to see who gets to the fields first if grain supplies tighten further and prices go up.

Gregory Gajewski of the department's Economic Research Service said U.S. farmers have millions of idled acres that could be brought quickly back into production if prospects brighten.

"Other countries also have the potential to expand agricultural production," he said. "Canada, the EC (European Community), Brazil, Argentina, Thailand and others could substantially boost output if producer prices rose enough."

In the United States, land used to grow U.S. crops this year is estimated at 342 million acres, up 14 million acres from 1988, Gajewski writes in the November issue of Agricultural Outlook magazine.

Slightly more than 29 million acres were idled this year under the USDA's annual crop programs. That does not count around 30 million acres of "highly erodible" cropland held out of production under the long-term Conservation Reserve Program.

"Should crop supplies tighten further and prices rise, the acreage idled under the annual programs could quickly return to production," Gajewski said.

But at the moment, the need for a large crop production increase "is in some doubt," he added.

FAMILY MATTERS

Mother concerned about son-in-law's actions

By JIM MAY, Ph.D.

May

DEAR FAMILY: Please forgive my handwriting but I am writing this on the airplane coming back from my daughter's house. I am so upset that just writing this makes me mad all over again. My daughter just had her second baby, a beautiful little girl. I came to keep my grandson the day she went into the hospital to have (the baby's name).

My son-in-law disappeared as soon as I got to their house. He reappeared almost three hours after his daughter was born. My daughter was heartbroken but didn't say anything to him. He just told me that he had some work that he had to get done. I was upset too, but I didn't say anything to him.

The entire three days that my daughter was in the hospital he only visited her about 30 minutes each day. He only came home to sleep. He came home after I went to bed (which was around 11). I never saw him except to say good bye in the mornings. After my daughter came home, he did come home by 7 or 7:30 most nights. I never said anything, but I could tell that it bothered (daughter).

When Friday came around, he didn't come home until three in the morning! I know that's when he came home because I was up helping my daughter feed the baby. He didn't say a word, he just went to bed. The next day I could tell that (daughter) had been crying. I didn't say anything again. Saturday he played golf with his friends. Then he went to play cards with his buddies. I don't know what time he got home that night, but it was after the 3 o'clock feeding.

Almost the exact thing happened the next weekend. Finally, on Monday I just had to say something to my daughter. She got very upset and told me to mind my own business. I was very hurt. My daughter and I have always had a good relationship until now. The remaining three days were very strained, but I did my job and helped and didn't say anything.

Was I out of line to say something? I just couldn't stand by and see my daughter treated like that. Now I'm worried that I won't get invited back to see her and my grandchildren. What can I do to make things all right again? BROKEN HEARTED

DEAR BROKEN HEARTED: You did nothing wrong. Your daughter is in an abusive situation that she chooses not to acknowledge. She is denying the obvious reality. You challenged her husband's inappropriate behavior. Being in denial, she responded by attacking you.

My guess is that what you saw was just part of a pattern of emotional abuse. I also am concerned about your son-in-law's drinking habits.

Apologize to your daughter, even though you did nothing wrong. She needs to know that she has your support if she is to ever confront his behavior.

You will feel helpless in this difficult situation, but let her know you are there for her. If you see his abuse getting worse, write again.

DEAR CONFIDENTIAL: If your brother was diagnosed has having cancer, he has cancer. The family may not want to talk about it, but it is more psychologically and emotionally beneficial to talk openly about the disease.

Becoming accustomed to saying the word "cancer" is difficult because it is terrifying for most of us. However, an important part of the recovery process is understanding the physiological and psychological implications of cancer and how it affects the individual and his or her family.

You (and any members of your family who are willing) may want to attend the "I Can Cope" program, which is an excellent overview of all aspects of cancer recovery. The program is 7 p.m. Mondays at Allison Cancer Center.

Also, get a copy of Bernie Siegels' book, "Love, Medicine and Miracles." Help your brother and his family by getting educated on what can be done to help. Good luck!

DEAR ABBY

Firefighter saddened by deaths due to dead batteries in detectors

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: As a firefighter, I am saddened by the number of people who die each year in home fires simply because they did not have working batteries in their smoke detectors.

During the course of our rescue attempts, we keep finding smoke detectors that did not function because the batteries were either worn out or missing.

In the early 1980s, we saw a dramatic decline in the number of home fire deaths because of the wide acceptance of smoke detectors. Now the number of deaths is on the rise again. What a tragedy!

Abby, please help us get the word out that smoke detectors are worthless unless they have batteries in them that work, so on Sunday, Oct. 29, when people should turn back their clocks an hour from daylight-saving time, they should put NEW batteries in their smoke detectors. — JIM ESTEPP, PRESIDENT, INTERNATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF FIRE CHIEFS

DEAR JIM: Consider it done! Readers, don't forget, Sunday, Oct. 29, when you turn back your clocks, change the batteries in your smoke detectors.

DEAR ABBY: I was mortified by your insensitive response to "Depressed," who had lost all her family treasures in a flood. Instead of offering her sympathy, you minimized her loss of "mere possessions" by comparing it to the loss of a child.

Comparing grief never helps an individual to grow. It's as though a quadriplegic were to say to a paraplegic, "What do YOU have to complain about?"

Loss and grief are natural parts of life. We mourn the loss of anything that is precious to us — a home that was destroyed by fire, a separation or divorce, a burglary. All are extremely painful.

We experience "death" constantly throughout our lives. Some losses are monumental, such as losing a parent, a child or a best friend. Other losses are known as "little" deaths, like moving to a new town, being passed over for a promotion, losing a favorite piece of jewelry, etc.

We can comfort people by listening to them, acknowledging their grief and letting them know we feel their pain.

Your words reach millions of people and are a source of strength to many. That's why I feel it is important to bring this to your attention. — ALEXIS JAY STEIN, CHARLOTTE, N.C.

DEAR ALEXIS JAY STEIN: Thanks, I needed that. Many others wrote to point out my insensitivity.

It was not my intention to belittle the pain of losing material things — I simply put the loss of "things" in perspective. I subscribe to the philosophy: "I pitied the man who had no shoes, until I met a man who had no feet."

DEAR ABBY: Now that fax machines are here, they have become almost a status symbol. They are remarkably speedy and convenient for business correspondence, but how about faxing thank-you notes for social occasions?

I hope this doesn't catch on. I just received one, and I must say it lacked the warmth and elegance of lovely stationery, as well as the personal touch. Please comment. — NO FAX, PLEASE

DEAR NO FAX: Almost any thank-you note is better than none, but a faxed thank-you is definitely a no-no. It's tantamount to sending a "collect" telegram, because the recipient must pay for the fax paper, which is not exactly petty cash.

"Dear Abby's Cookbooklet" is a collection of favorite recipes — all tested, tried and terrific! Air samples beneficial to passengers

NEW YORK (AP) — Trial-size product sampling — once confined to mailboxes, door knobs and shopping malls — has taken off and gone skyward.

Passengers on airlines are now being handed trial-size deodorants, shampoos, snacks, shaving systems, fragrances, mouthwash, breath mints and other products, reports SampleAir, Inc..

More than a giveaway, the samples represent the latest effort by packaged goods manufacturers to capture the public's attention — and few audiences are as captive and demographically well-heeled as airline passengers, which number some 418 million each year.

Recording Library benefit features famous columnist

By LINDA ANDERSON
Lifestyle Writer

Heloise, the world's most famous expert on household hints, was at Midland Center Thursday night to share the fact that even the routine of housekeeping can be funny, and she did it with a sense of humor.

The event, "Dustbustin' With Heloise, America's Homemaker," was a fund-raiser for The Recording Library for the Blind and Physically Handicapped Inc. "It's not just another speech to me," Heloise said. "I was born with severe crosseye. I was lucky enough to have operations and have it corrected." The fund-raiser — which was dedicated to the memory of 17-year volunteer Vic Rogers, who passed away in May — was expected to raise several thousand dollars for the Library, said executive director Sandy Davis. The money will be used to buy recording equipment.

Between 200-300 Midlanders — women and men — listened and laughed as Heloise shared her philosophy, her hints and some of her more humorous letters.

George Wolf/Reporter-Telegram

Heloise, world-famous household hints expert, wipes away tears of laughter after sharing one of her more humorous letters with the audience at the fund-raiser for the Recording Library for the Blind and Physically Handicapped Inc.

HELOISE, WHO often advises "don't take yourself too seriously," began her talk by taking off her shoes, "so I can get a little closer to the microphone." She said it was OK for a woman to tell someone how tall she is, how old she is, her Social Security number and even the name of her gynecologist, but not her weight. "Any woman who will tell you her true weight — TRUE weight — will tell you anything!

"Actually," she continued, "my weight is really OK, it's my height that varies."

Heloise, whose real name is Ponce Kiah Marchelle Heloise Cruse Evans, inherited her "Hints from Heloise" column when her mother, the original Heloise, died in 1977. And the column, which her mother began writing in 1959, grew out of an idea and a challenge.

The original Heloise, who at the time was a military wife living and rearing her family in Hawaii, thought it would be useful to have a column of household hints published in a local newspaper. She expressed her idea at a military retirement party, and a general scoffed, saying, "You're nothing but a housewife. Who do you think you are?"

Heloise said that her mother and the general argued for 30 minutes on the merits of her idea, and finally "they made a $10 bet that she could not get a job writing for a newspaper."

Today, 30 years later, that same column is published in 500 newspapers worldwide, and has been expanded to suit a changing world.

"My mother taught me two things," Heloise said. "If you want to intimidate a banker and be sure a man will not say no to you, wear red and wear a hat. She taught me there is a nice way to be persistent — you can be persistent and forthright and still be ladylike."

BECAUSE THE household hints column was begun in 1959, Heloise grew up in what she calls a "Heloise household." She said she first realize her home was different from her friends' when she was growing up in Hawaii. A friend of hers opened the freezer expecting to find ice — instead he found a girdle (to see if keeping it in the freezer would really make it easier to put on), stockings (to see if keeping them cold makes them last longer without running), candles (to see if keeping them in the freezer makes them drip less) and a sweater (to see if keeping fuzzy sweaters in the freezer makes them shed less).

"You don't know you're different until someone tells you," Heloise said. "My mother was always unique. She was spraying her hair blue and green 25 years ago. She was always different."

Because her mother spent so much time checking out household hints to see if they would work, Heloise said she "did learn at a very early age to never assume and always ask." She once drank egg whites, thinking it was peach juice. "Just because it is in the refrigerator, don't assume it is food."

She also learned, at a very early age, that one of the most important things in life is a sense of humor. "If you can have a sense of humor and laugh at yourself and the situation, you'll be a happier person and you'll survive."

She read some of her more memorable — and humorous — letters, and did what she is most famous for — shared household hints. For instance, aerosol products can be deadly to small birds, as can the fumes from a non-stick pan boiled dry; panty hose that can no longer be worn can be tied in several knots and used by dogs as a chew toy; and the importance of recycling products. "The hot topic of the '90s is to be able to recycle — think in terms of trying to use everything at least one more time."

EVEN THOUGH she is most famous for her household hints, however, Heloise said that keeping a spotless house is not the most important thing in life. "I'm Heloise and people expect my house to be perfect and it's not. My philosophy is pick up the big chunks ... It's more important to spend time with your family, your friends, your pets, your*self* — than to worry that there's a stain in the carpet that won't come out or you didn't get the dishes done right after dinner."

But household hints have been her occupation for 30 years. "'Heloise's philosophy,'" she said, "is it's important to have a sense of humor, but the majority of people are average like me. We all have our problems, and it's the little things that drive you crazy. If I, as Heloise, can help you deal with the little things, then you can handle the big things."

George Wolf/Reporter-Telegram

Heloise charmed the audience with her sense of humor and her friendly talk.

Taped parenting advice available by phone

By JANE CLIFFORD
Copley News Service

As a new parent, David Katzner felt he couldn't get his hands on enough information about how to care for his daughter, Alana. Now, 2½ years later, he has launched a service he wished had been around when she was born.

It's called The National Parenting Center, and it puts a panel of nationally and internationally recognized experts on child rearing at your fingertips.

By dialing 1-900-246-MOMS, callers have 24-hour, seven-day-a-week access to a library of 60-second audio tapes on 1,200 parenting topics.

"It's not just information on how to deal with diaper rash," Katzner said. "It's how to choose the right school, what are the right books to read to your preschooler."

It's also something that costs callers $1.95 for the first minute, and 95 cents for every subsequent minute if they choose more than one tape.

"There are costs inherent in running business. This is a limited partnership," Katzner said, when asked why he isn't using a toll-free 800 number.

And the idea of finding corporate sponsors to fund the service (which also would have meant no cost to callers) was rejected.

"I was opposed to it, and all of our experts were," he said. "They didn't want the perception that it was biased or beholden to any company or any product."

But he says he doesn't believe the price of the service is prohibitive — even though the cost of six of these calls would pay for an annual subscription to any of several national parenting magazines or, for that matter, whole books on child development.

KATZNER ACKNOWLEDGES that but says many parents, especially two-career couples, don't have the time or inclination to sit down and read an entire magazine article or a whole chapter of a book. And those who want immediate answers to their questions will get succinct and specific information on subjects they decide are important.

A sample tape included one-minute messages by each of the center's nine panel members, all well-known in their respective specialties.

In his taped segment, Peter Neumeyer, a professor of children's literature at San Diego State University and author of children's books, talks about the value of reading to preschoolers and gives suggestions to further their love of books.

Penelope Leach, author of the best-selling book "Your Baby and Child," describes (in her distinctive British accent) the "baby blues" and how to cope with them.

Peter Weiss, a Beverly Hills obstetrician, discusses fetal growth during the first 13 weeks of pregnancy. And Alvin Eden, associate clinical professor of pediatrics at Cornell University Medical Center and author of "Positive Parenting," debunks several popular myths about babies' development (no, wearing shoes won't make them walk sooner — going barefoot will).

Kathleen McCoy, whose expertise is adolescent behavior, talks about how to keep teens safe from the lure of cults. And there's advice on setting limits for teens who seem to be growing up too fast from Dr. Charles Wibbelsman, a practicing pediatrician, chief of The Teenage Clinic at Kaiser Permanente Medical Center in San Francisco, and author of "The New Teenage Body Book."

PSYCHOLOGIST AND learning specialist Tom Armstrong talks to parents about the special handling of physically active children (really active ones). Nationally recognized parenting author Vicki Lansky does a sensible (and humorous) bit on the tooth fairy — especially what to do when she forgets to show up. And Dr. Barton Schmitt, author of child-care books and on staff at The Children's Hospital in Denver, discusses the familiar malady of growing pains.

Katzner said these and the other one-minute messages aren't meant to supplant books, magazines or conversations with the family doctor.

"It's just another alternative," he said.

Each day, 35 tapes are available with advice and guidance in seven categories: pregnancy, newborns, infants, toddlers, preschoolers, preteens and adolescents. The tapes change daily. Callers (with touch-tone phones) first hear a menu outlining the topics of the day. They then access the tape they want by following instructions and pushing appropriate buttons on the phone.

Katzner said the phone number (1-900-246-MOMS) is not meant to imply that moms are supposed to do most of the child care and should be the only ones calling for information on how to do the job better.

"The best answer to that is the plain, awful truth," he said. "We tried desperately to get a 727 exchange for the line (which would have made the number 1-900-PARENTS), but that exchange is not available on the 900 service."

Farm fathers feel effects of 'empty nest' syndrome

LAFAYETTE, Ind. (AP) — The empty nest syndrome affects fathers as well as mothers, according to a Purdue University researcher, and farm fathers suffer more than other dads.

According to a study of more than 700 men in nine central states, 20 percent of farm fathers reported great emotional distress when their last child left home, compared with 15 percent of non-farm fathers.

Robert A. Lewis, professor of family studies at Purdue's School of Consumer and Family Sciences, has been researching the role of fathers for 12 years. He says the greater distress of the farm father may be because he is losing not only a child but a work partner.

In general, Lewis says, men who suffer the empty nest syndrome tend to have fewer children, are somewhat older than average and see themselves as nurturing persons. They also are more apt to feel neglected, less understood, lonely and less enthusiastic about their wives' companionship.

The best remedy for overcoming the distress, according to Lewis, is to focus on special projects and social commitments.

Gain without pain

Associated Press

For those who think staying in shape shouldn't be painful, a recent survey has good news: Less demanding, low-impact exercise is in.

According to the Mature Outlook newsletter, walking had the greatest increase in participation out of the 18 sports tallied. Almost 30 million people in the United States walked for fitness in 1988, up 28 percent from 1987. The study was conducted by American Sports Data Inc., a market research firm in Hartsdale, N.Y.

People over age 45 account for 45 percent of all fitness walkers, the study also found.

Other sports on the fast track also are less jarring than running. Treadmill exercise, for example, gained 1.7 million new participants last year — an increase of 40 percent over the previous year.

More women are turning to stationary cycling, low-impact aerobics and fitness swimming, and men are turning to free weights, resistance machines and stair-climbing machines.

The new exercise trend goes hand-in-hand with population trends, says Harvey Lauer, president of American Sports Data. People 45 plus are leading the third wave of the fitness revolution, he notes.

Running was on the first wave and other pain-is-gain activities, such as high-impact aerobics, were on second wave.

At 88, renowned lawyer has no plans to retire

By RONALD POWERS

NEW YORK (AP) — At an age when most men are into their third decade of retirement, Harry H. Lipsig decided to start his second law firm.

With characteristic nerve and verve, the 88-year-old Lipsig — one of the nation's best-known personal-injury lawyers — marched into his longtime office several months ago, accompanied by a half-dozen guards. With his men standing sentry — the decision stemmed from a feud with his partners — Lipsig emptied his desk and pulled his name from the door.

Lipsig still appears in the courtroom occasionally but most of the day-to-day trial work goes to his new partner and protege, Bonita E. Zelman, a tough, no-nonsense lawyer and former assistant Queens district attorney.

But driven by a passion for perfection, enormous ambition, endless energy and a gift for showbiz glitz, Lipsig has made millions for himself, winning unheard-of settlements in apparently unwinnable cases.

It was Lipsig — known at the courthouse as "The Equalizer" — who got $740,000 for the family of a heart-attack victim by convincing a jury the man had been frightened to death by a car that rolled up on his lawn.

It was Lipsig who once showed how an Acapulco hotel was actually to blame when a shark attacked a guest. He argued that the hotel had dumped garbage in the ocean and failed to warn guests that the refuse might attract sharks.

It was Lipsig — in the dual roles of lawyer and Exhibit A — who argued last year that Dr. Hyman Chernow, a 71-year-old psychologist run over by a squad car driven by a drunken officer, had years of potential income-earning left.

"He could well have outlived me," Lipsig argued.

City lawyers threw in the towel and settled the case for $1.25 million.

Lipsig boasts that he's one of the reasons New York City employs 120 full-time personal-injury lawyers — overworked lawyers at that — and expects to shell out some $175 million this year in awards and settlements.

Like most lawyers in tort or personal-injury law, he works on a contingency-fee basis, typically taking a third of the final award. He sneers at those who say aggressive personal-injury lawyers have caused insurance rates to skyrocket and are costing taxpayers millions in suits against city governments.

Then he tells of the feelings that "well up within me very often on behalf of some poor devil torn to shreds or living in that vilest of prisons one can conceive — not a prison cell that he has been unjustly confined in, but the vilest prison of all — helpless on a hospital bed, paralyzed."

At his finest, Lipsig handles the emotions of a jury with the finesse of a symphony conductor. "Bore a jury and you've lost the case," he says.

But his victories are supported by long hours of meticulous research — Lipsig is obsessed about not being proved wrong or made to appear the fool for overlooking something in the law.

In a career that has lifted ambulance-chasing to a new level, Lipsig has seen himself adoringly profiled in Time magazine and The Wall Street Journal; he points proudly to the framed clippings on the walls of his office.

Modesty has no place in his vocabulary when he speaks of himself or his practice. "No lawyer who tries cases is any good unless he has vanity. What is vanity but the blood brother of self-respect and confidence?"

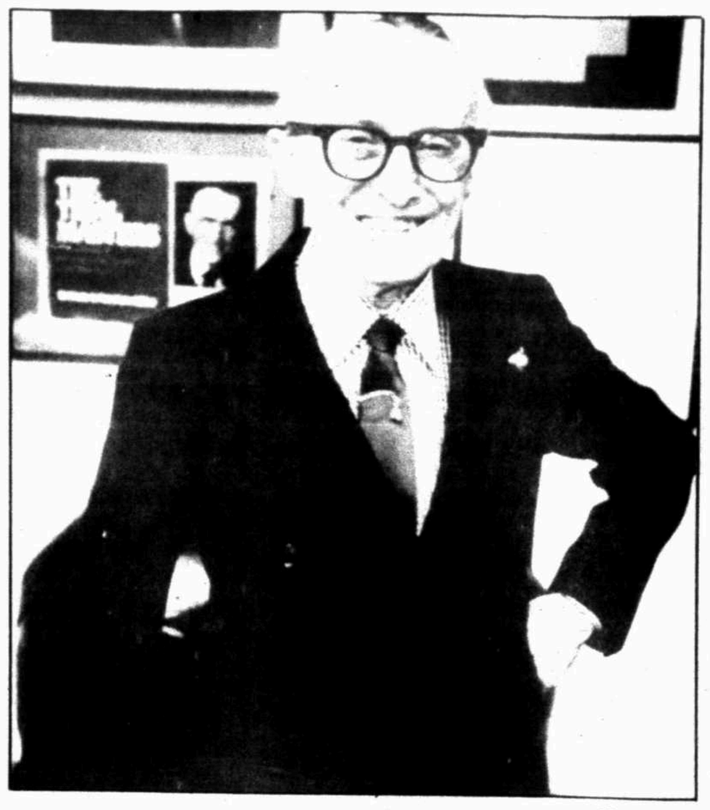

The details of his personal and professional life are overseen by Mary Lou Castillo, a 33-year-old woman adopted in January by Lipsig and his wife.

Some of his old partners say Ms. Castillo, the owner of a Mexican restaurant and Lipsig's ever-present assistant, drove the wedge that split him from his former firm. He says she merely helped open his eyes.

Lipsig, whose Ukrainian family immigrated to New York when he was 6, graduated from Brooklyn Law School in 1929 when most of the good legal work went to large and politically connected Irish firms. Aspiring Jewish attorneys like Lipsig were left with minor criminal cases, personal injury and the like.

It has made him rich; Lipsig was getting a reported $5 million a year when he quit his old firm. Still, he insists on working and is driven to his office in lower Manhattan daily from his luxury apartment near the United Nations.

He still finds time to be host of a weekly cable TV talk show and "Ask Harry," a radio show in which he offers legal advice. He has no plans to take it easy. After all, he has a fledgling law firm to get off the ground.

Harry H. Lipsig, 88, one of the nation's most renowned personal injury lawyers, poses in his New York office earlier this year. Driven by a passion for perfection, driving ambition, endless energy and a gift for showbiz, Lipsig has made millions for himself, winning unheard of settlements in apparently unwinnable cases.

IT'S YOUR LIFE

Communication is key to good relationship

By STEVE EDWARDS

Edwards

Communication breakdowns are common, even between family members, because of inattention or preoccupation. When one person doesn't want to hear what the other is saying, he may block out the conversation by letting his thoughts wander.

Sometimes the relationship between adult child and parent is nothing but one massive communications barrier. These family members may talk, but do not hear or understand each other.

Adult children, faced with what seems like constant complaints from older parents, may discount these concerns and refuse to take them seriously. Confrontations between an impatient adult child and an upset parent is common in many families. Frustration with the elderly parent can make adult children turn completely away.

But the situation can be improved, through honest and open communication.

Frank and open dialogue between parent and young child will probably result in frank and open dialogue throughout life.

Bad communications between parent and child often starts early in the child's life, but unfortunately they may never get better.

Honest communication becomes more important as family members age, so opening channels for talking to each other is essential.

Adult children may be frustrated by their communication patterns with their parents, perhaps through a sense of not being heard or by a parent's need to pry into the child's life.

Whatever the reason for the frustration, it's likely that the less the adult child responds, the more the parent will talk in the same vein. These older parents may be facing a fear of the future and a need for reassurance and affection from family members. In their own way, they are trying to communicate.

The Choice of a Lifetime for People 62 years and Older

Dr. Karl worries about unhealthiness

Crusade for homeless children focus of 20-year old project

By LEW FERGUSON

TOPEKA, Kan (AP) — Dr. Karl Menninger worries these days that people are so hostile toward each other and that "there is so much greed in the world."

Pointing to a large jar of pennies on his desk, the 96-year-old psychiatrist says, "I keep them there to remind me of the unhealthiness of people grabbing onto material things in life. When I think of people who have acquired great wealth, what can they do with it? What does it prove?"

Menninger's interests run more toward fighting injustice, pollution and other ills of society. "I've tried to make life easier for people. You hold a coat when you can and you tie a man's shoe when you can.

"You try to do what you can."

His focus has been a crusade to make life better for socially homeless children. It manifests itself in The Villages, a program of residential care for children without parents that he founded. The Villages observed its 20th anniversary July 22, Menninger's birthday.

At 96, Dr. Karl is only slightly less active than he was two or three decades ago. He spends his days consulting, teaching, advocating social causes and receiving visitors to Menninger, the mental health center he founded with his father and brother in 1925. He remains chairman of the board.

He still speaks out against society's "taking revenge" on prison inmates by mistreating them, denounces capital punishment as unworthy of a civilized society, pushes for nursing home reform and often lectures those who come calling because more isn't being done to improve the lot of mankind.

Wealth-driven physicians are a special worry. "Our medical profession and our society don't fit any more. I shouldn't say this, but doctors want too much money. My father never made much money and he had a good life.

"I want to see it changed back in that direction, where doctors care more about people." Menninger sees a government-mandated medical system evolving in the United States if the system doesn't change.

The advance of years sometimes makes him grumpy. But when he talks about his infirmities, his determination shows. He won't go down without a fight.

"I don't feel good, and that worries me. I'm used to feeling good. But I don't feel 96. I feel better than that," he said. "I'm as forgetful as hell. I'm sometimes irritable. My hearing problem doesn't get any better. ...

"I feel rusty and my damn knees won't hold me up, and that frightens me. But I'm doing OK, I guess."

He's alternatingly angry and philosophical over the advance of years.

"I've had a good time all my life. There's so much to do and I've found so much interesting to do. And I've found a lot of friends to do it with."

Dr. Karl derives pleasure from his weekly meetings with Menninger students and friends, and trips to The Villages.

He helped launch the series of residential homes for children in Topeka, Lawrence and several communities in Indiana after a local judge complained that he had no place to send young people without families. It was Menninger who got $25,000 in seed money from the Fraternal Order of Eagles after speaking to its convention, and started what he calls his "homes for homeless kids."

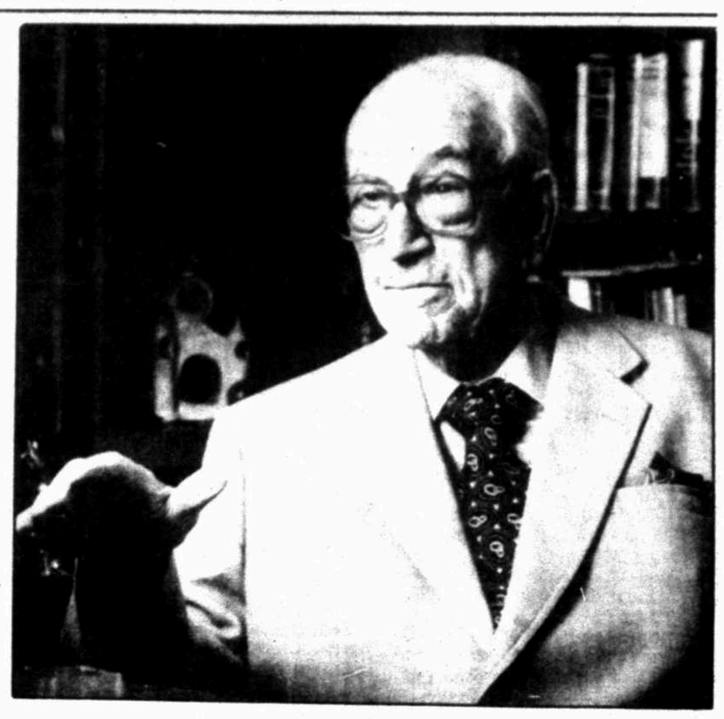

"Our goal," he said, "was to replace families these kids had lost, either by death, or abandonment, or their parents just couldn't care for them. A modernized orphan's home is what it was, although we never called it that."

Menninger persuaded his friend, philanthropist W. Clement Stone of Chicago, to buy and donate 320 acres on the northwest edge of Topeka. The first cottage was built in what became Eagle Ridge Village. There now are five homes here, three in Lawrence, eight in Indiana and an affiliated program in Michigan.

"They have done a tremendous job in Kansas from that beginning," said Villages Director Gary Duncan, despite bucking a trend promoted by the federal government to create treatment programs for homeless youth rather than homes.

"Children who come here need families. They are not patients who need treatment," Duncan said. "When children's homes emphasize treatment, they de-emphasize caring, and caring is paramount at The Villages."

That, too, is a testament to Karl Menninger and his personal creed: "I'd like to be remembered as a person who cared."

Dr. Karl Menninger, considered by some to be the father of American psychiatry, observed his 96th birthday recently. He ramains active, going to his office each day, consultng, teaching and receiving visitors. He is still chairman of the Menninger mental health center which Menninger, his father and his brother founded in 1925.

Combat 'not having enough' with knowledge, planning

PROFILE

PRIME TIME

EDITOR'S NOTE — Edythe Pahl is director of the Certified Financial Planning professional education program at the College for Financial Planning and holds an MBA and a Fellow in Life Management Institute, an insurance organization.

By Edythe Pahl

DENVER (AP) — The recent publicity about long-term care insurance policies and the stories of families devastated by the burgeoning costs of nursing home care bring to mind fears of becoming a burden to our loved ones.

This scenario never has to play if we learn more about long-term care itself and the resources available to cover the risks of "not having enough." Information, education and careful planning will eliminate the fears usually associated with long stays in nursing homes.

What is long-term care? It has been described as medical, personal or social services provided at a nursing home, a custodial facility, at home, or at a community program for a year or longer. A long-term care insurance policy is designed to cover most of the expenses associated with these services, but that are not covered by Medicare, Medicaid or Medigap policies.

Why is there so much publicity about long-term care? There are three major influences at work that have focused attention on the issue.

The first is the growing number of Americans over age 65; it is expected that by 2020, 20 percent of our population will be "seniors."

The second is a dramatic change in the definition of "family" — two working parents, fewer children per family, more people without children, more divorces, more families living in geographically diverse locations. All of this equals fewer resources available for extended care at home.

Finally, Medicare accounts for less than 4 percent of extended care benefits. Under the old and new laws, Medicare does not pay for "custodial" nursing home care. Yet a recent study shows that 90 percent of nursing home patients need only custodial care, usually defined as care that meets personal needs, such as getting out of bed, walking, eating, or bathing; professional skills or training are not required of the caregiver. The other social health-care program, Medicaid, is intended only for the indigent.

So for most of us, private resources must be available for both the patient and the patient's family so neither will end up financially destitute.

Before you research financing possible long-term care, three steps should be taken. First, evaluate whether you think you will need long-term care in the future. Your family's medical history may give you clues — did your forebears generally die young, have your grandparents lived long, healthy, active lives?

Next, answer these questions dealing with your extended family. Are they willing to care for you at home? Would they refuse to let a family member stay in a nursing home? Are there resources to cover professional home health care? Is the family so displaced that there is no possibility of home care? What kind of decisions would your family make about long-term care if you were incapable of making that choice? Finally, consider the possibility that all your assets could be depleted by a stay of two years, five years, or longer.

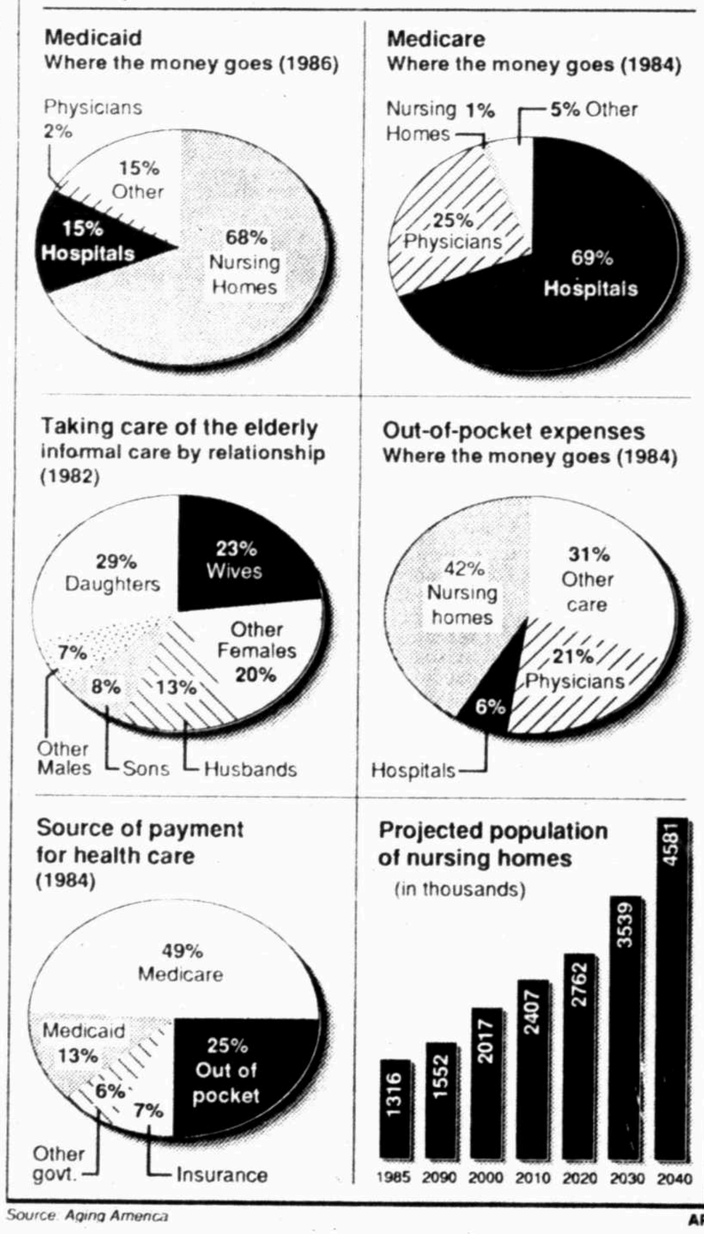

The average cost of a year's stay in a nursing home today is approximately $24,000. Using an inflation rate of 5 percent, that annual cost will be almost $40,000 in only 10 years. Knowing this now means that some of your assets can be invested specifically for such a purpose. If you need it for long-term care, it's there; if you don't, it becomes a part of your estate.

Long-term care insurance policies, then, are not the only answer, but the efficiencies of a long-term care policy may prove to be the best course.

Finding the right policy is no simple matter. Products are complicated and expensive; each seems to offer the perfect solution. The number of companies offering these types of policies is increasing rapidly, which means competition will continue to increase benefits for the consumers. But it also means you must examine the details and fine print.

The best advice now may be to wait a while, if you can, perhaps a year or two, while the marketplace sorts out the best policies.

Row to grow fit

Associated Press

Rowing is one of the best fitness sports for older Americans, says Frederick "Fritz" Hagerman, an Ohio University exercise physiologist and consultant to U.S. rowing teams in the past five Olympics.

In a recent rowing study including 14 men and women over age 60, Hagerman found that virtually all showed improvement in cardiovascular function.

"Rowing has tremendous potential among older people," says Hagerman, chairman of zoological and biomedical sciences at the university.

Bulldogs glad to be at home

By TERRY WILLIAMSON
Sports Editor

Midland High will be celebrating Homecoming at 8 p.m. today at Memorial Stadium, but the football Bulldogs, who will be facing the San Angelo Bobcats, are just celebrating being at home.

It has been a solid month since the Bulldogs have dug a spike in the Memorial Stadium turf since touring West Texas with stops in Odessa, Wichita Falls and Abilene. And the road wasn't kind to the Purple Pack as MHS enters today's District 4-5A contest with a 1-6 record, including losing all three road trips and losers of five straight.

Still, Memorial Stadium is a welcome sight to the Bulldogs since it was there that they almost pulled off a stunning upset of Midland Lee before falling short, 32-27.

"Homecoming can be a distraction," said MHS first year coach Davis Corley, "but the big thing for us is coming home to play. It feels like we've been on the road forever and I think our kids are excited about playing before a home crowd."

The Bobcats haven't had much more success than the Bulldogs. Both teams own identical 1-6 season records, but the Bobcats do have a leg up on MHS in the district race since San Angelo's only win of the year came against district foe Abilene Cooper, 7-3.

Since that victory, however, San Angelo has been beaten by Lee and Odessa High by a 96-3 margin.

Defense has not been a bright spot for either team. Midland ranks next to last in the seven team league on defense, allowing 344.6 yards per game to opponents while San Angelo is last, allowing a whopping 411 yards per game.

So, what can we expect tonight?

"Well, a lot depends on what team San Angelo brings," said Corley. "It's been a fruit basket turnover for them this year. They've changed people on offense and defense in about every district game.

Rangers do...or die

By BILL GRIMES
Sports Writer

This is do-or-die week for the Greenwood Rangers, and Coach Bob Purser knows it.

"We're really in a bind because we lost to Alpine (two weeks ago)," Purser said on the eve of tonight's key District 4-3A matchup with the Crane Golden Cranes at J.M. King Memorial Stadium.

In other area action, Andrews visits San Angelo Lake View; Big Spring travels to Pecos; Lamesa invades state-ranked Denver City; Rankin travels to Garden City in a key District 8-A tilt; Stanton hosts Van Horn; McCamey travels to Marfa; and Iraan entertains Presidio.

Greenwood rebounded from a disappointing shutout loss at Alpine to crush Fabens 35-8 last week. Purser said the Rangers have to continue that level of play to have a chance at returning to the bi-district playoffs — something they do for the first-time last season.

"I really don't think we can afford to lose another game," the coach said.

Well, wait a minute.

"We probably have to just win two out of three, but we need this one to give us a positive outlook," Purser said.

Paul Tagliabue meets the press Thursday after his appointment as National Football League commissioner.

Owners go with Tagliabue

Lawyer has been league insider for 20 years

Pro Football

CLEVELAND (AP) — One of Paul Tagliabue's credentials as a candidate for NFL commissioner was the insider's view he had at the job as one of Pete Rozelle's closest advisors.

Judging from his first public appearance as the NFL's seventh commissioner, his actions may not differ much from Rozelle's, at least not for a while.

Tagliabue was elected Thursday morning, breaking an impasse that has existed since July 6 when a group of dissidents blocked the election of Jim Finks, the sole candidate proposed by the first of three committees that had a hand in the selection process.

Tagliabue became the candidate of those dissidents. But in reality he is a league insider, close to the so-called "old guard" that had backed Finks, the president of the New Orleans Saints.

"The truth of the matter is that the 48-year-old Tagliabue is as much =Old Guard' as anyone," said Cleveland Browns owner Art Modell, one of the members of the committee that first recommended Finks. Modell was one of the principal targets of the insurgents and one of the two Finks supporters — Wellington Mara of the New York Giants was the other — who switched their votes to come up with Tagliabue.

Tagliabue sounded a lot like Rozelle in his position on issues. That's not unusual — league officials say that Rozelle often asked when confronted with a major issue: "What does Paul think?"

Tagliabue reiterated, for example, that there can be no expansion without a new collective bargaining agreement, and there hasn't been one since 1987. That was also Rozelle's position.

And while he denied being the author of "Plan B," the modified plan of free agency that took effect last year, Tagliabue had a major role in formulating it. He has also been the league's chief lawyer in the lawsuit that stemmed from the NFL Players Association's 1987 strike.

"There are ways of dealing with the question of free agency," he said. "The Management Council would like to get to the table so that a lot of new ideas could come forward. We need the other side to respond."

The union reacted to Tagliabue's election with guarded optimism.

"I find him to be very straightforward and he wants to solve problems. He understands things have to be done and he's never been opposed to taking actions," Gene Upshaw, the NFLPA's executive director, said.

"I'm glad to see the process is over. It gives us some certainty as to who will be leading the league in the future. The question is, will he be able to pull the owners together? The other question is how much authority will he have?"

Tagliabue's election capped 50 hours of deliberation in seven separate sessions dating back to July 6, when Finks' election was blocked three votes short of the necessary 19. Tagliabue was elected on the 12th ballot.

Rozelle, by contrast, was chosen on the 23rd ballot as a compromise candidate after the then-12 NFL teams debated for 11 straight days on a successor to Bert Bell. At the time, Rozelle was the little-known, 33-year-old general manager of the Los Angeles Rams.

Tagliabue and Finks were the front-runners almost from the time Rozelle announced his resignation last March 22 and both were among the six finalists recommended by the first selection committee, made up entirely of "Old Guard" owners.

UH invades Arkansas

SWC Football

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP) — If the topic is Houston's football team, Andre Ware's name is bound to come up. He's the triggerman of the most prolific offense in NCAA history.

His numbers would embarrass Dan Marino, John Elway, Warren Moon or any other NFL quarterback.

He has completed 187 of 308 passes for almost 2,600 yards and 27 touchdowns. He has completed as few as 25 passes only once and that was last week when he threw for 517 yards and six touchdowns in the first half of a 95-21 rout of Southern Methodist University.

On Saturday night in Little Rock, Ware's 12th-ranked Cougars take on 13th-ranked Arkansas. Both are 5-1 for the season and 2-1 in the Southwest Conference, though Houston is not eligible for the Cotton Bowl.

Houston Coach Jack Pardee was asked this week if he considers Ware the No. 1 candidate for the Heisman Trophy.

"Yes, I sure do (with) what he's accomplished so far this year," Pardee said. "I also preface that with, if he keeps on doing it. That's a what-have-you-done-recently type deal."

He said Ware was criticized some after the Cougars lost to Texas A&M, 17-13. In that one, he completed 28 of 52 for 247 yards and one touchdown.

"What most people don't realize is that he had two or three dropped balls or that could have been his best game yet over a good opponent," he said.

World Series

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — A few San Franciscans, those who remember 1906, have been through it before. The World Series has not.

When the quake-stunned Bay area takes time out for baseball once again today, the sounds of silence and a 62,000-voice chorus belting out "San Francisco" will drown out the crack of bat on ball. And subtle but visible changes at Candlestick Park should make it easy to keep winning and losing in perspective.

The Giants are determined to see that the spirit of recovery from the disaster is recharged in alternately somber and defiant pre-game ceremonies. But they also have taken steps to ensure that any aftershocks don't jolt public safety, from equipping ushers with flashlights to hooking up a backup sound system.

The tone will be set early.

The Candlestick crowd will observe a moment of silence at 5:04 p.m., the time the Oct. 17 quake hit the Bay area with a force measured at 7.1 on the Richter scale.

And disaster officials, not former Giants great Willie Mays, will throw out the first ball.

As for those cracks in the concrete walkways and chips in the pillars, the Giants say there's no need for worry. They are simply signs of aging in a 27-year-old ballpark that, while much maligned, is about as safe as any other place in the heart of an active fault zone.

Still, on the eve of long-delayed Game 3, a media tour of the damaged sections and a briefing on public safety precautions on Thursday held more interest than the team's workout. The official whose words were most scrutinized was not Roger Craig, the Giants manager, but Jerry Anderson, the architectural consultant for Candlestick.

Reporters trailed Anderson around the upper-deck sections of the stadium. Perhaps surprisingly to those who experienced the 10- to 15-second temblor nine days earlier, evidence of the quake was hard to detect.

"It held up as it was designed to hold up," Anderson said. "Our repairs out here have been minimal."

Concrete steps that cracked and broke up in the upper deck in two outfield seating sections have been replaced. Fresh concrete now enforces three concrete A-frame columns damaged in the outer walkway outside the upper grandstand sections in the outfield. Anderson downplayed the damage and estimated total repairs at less than $200,000.

"It certainly showed last Tuesday that it's a good place to be in an earthquake of 7.1 on the Richter scale," he said.

In addition to the flashlights issued to ushers and security guards, there will be plenty of reminders of the disaster.

As fans arrive, they will have the opportunity to donate food, clothing, blankets and other items. They will also be handed pamphlets to remind them of the quake victims, rescuers and survivors.

The fans will be asked to sing "San Francisco," the song popularized by Jeannette McDonald in the 1936 film of the same name. The lyrics are on one side of the handout and, following the moment of silence at 5:04, the cast of the local hit musical "Beach Blanket Babylon" will lead the public chorus.

On the front side of the pamphlet, the Giants compliment the fans for the "remarkable composure and restraint" shown on Oct. 17.

This is one the Dawgs should get

The Midland High Bulldogs enter Homecoming activities at Memorial Stadium tonight without a chance of pulling off a winning season in 1989, but the Purple Pack needs a victory over San Angelo.

Williamson

At 1-6 for the year, MHS could easily be carrying a 5-2 mark into this contest. The only games the Pack has been out of is an opening season loss to Lubbock Monterey and No. 2 state ranked Odessa Permian.

It's a well documented fact that MHS shoots its gun from its holster more times than not. In other words, bullets fired by the Bulldogs often end up in the foot.

Too many times the Bulldogs have failed to put points on the boards after climbing inside an opponent's 20 or 15 yard lines.

But that's past history and the Bulldogs face a team tonight that they should have a chance of beating. San Angelo is 1-2 in the District 4-5A race, but the Bobcats have scored only 10 points and have given up 99 in those three games.

San Angelo stunned respectable Abilene Cooper in a controversial decision during the second week of the campaign.

The Bulldogs have been able to score (27 points against Midland Lee and 21 against Cooper), but not enough to erase the 121 points allowed by the defense.

The one thing MHS wants is to climb out of the district cellar. Tied with Abilene High at 0-3, the Bulldogs want to avoid at all costs ending up on the bottom rung after fashioning a 9-1 campaign a year ago. It's one of those penthouse to outhouse stories that doesn't make good reading if you hail from Midland.

So, Homecoming offers a test of will for the hard luck Bulldogs. The strength of that will goes on the line tonight.

Meanwhile, there will be a lot of eyes cast westward tonight when Abilene Cooper travels to Odessa Permian. This is the game of the week for the Lee fans since the Rebels are open. It's a simple situation. If Permian beats Cooper, Lee is back in the state playoffs for the seventh consecutive year. That's right, Lee could lose it's last two games and still be in the playoffs.

That game could also put Permian in the state playoffs for a third consecutive year and ninth time in this decade.

So, here is how we see it happening tonight:

Midland High 28, San Angelo 14: The Bobcats score more points than they have in three previous district outings and still lose as the Bulldogs find the end zone and keep it.

Odessa Permian 42, Abilene Cooper 14: This really isn't a bad Cooper team, but too much is riding on this game for Permian to look that far ahead to Lee. Besides, Chris Comer is back. Wonder just how many Lee fans will be on a scouting mission to Ratliff tonight?

Odessa High 32, Abilene High 12: It will be the Eagles alone in last place as the Bronchos make a run for third place.

Open Date 7, Midland Lee 0: Complete forfeit. Lee fails to show up because of date with TV make-up man.

Reuschel, Mitchell not ready

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Rick Reuschel isn't ready for the World Series to resume and Kevin Mitchell doesn't seem to be, either.

Reuschel was scratched Thursday as the San Francisco Giants' Game 4 starter, two days after he was hit with a line drive during batting practice.

Mitchell, the major league leader in home runs and RBIs, doesn't have a physical problem. His is mental.

"I can't get locked in. I can't get pumped up," he said. "It's like the year is already over. I don't think everybody s there yet, right now. The intensity, it ain't there."

What will it take for Mitchell to get pumped up?

"It's just a matter of everybody getting their confidence back and going out there and trying to regroup," he said.

Don Robinson, San Francisco's scheduled Game 3 starter before an earthquake struck on Oct. 17, seemed really anxious to get going. He'll get the chance, and a day sooner than expected. Because of Reuschel's injury, Robinson will be moved up to pitch on Saturday against Oakland's Mike Moore.

"If it keeps on going like this, Dravecky and Krukow will be the starters," Robinson joked, referring to teammates Dave Dravecky and Mike Krukow, both out with season-ending injuries.

Robinson said his primary worry was his right knee. He had a cortisone shot on Sept. 28 and he hopes it hasn't worn off.

"They usually last about four to six weeks, depending on how much you've done," he said.

He's started just three times and pitched only 13 1-3 innings since pitching a seven-hit shutout against the New York Mets on Sept. 3. He may be rusty physically, but Robinson appears mentally sharp.

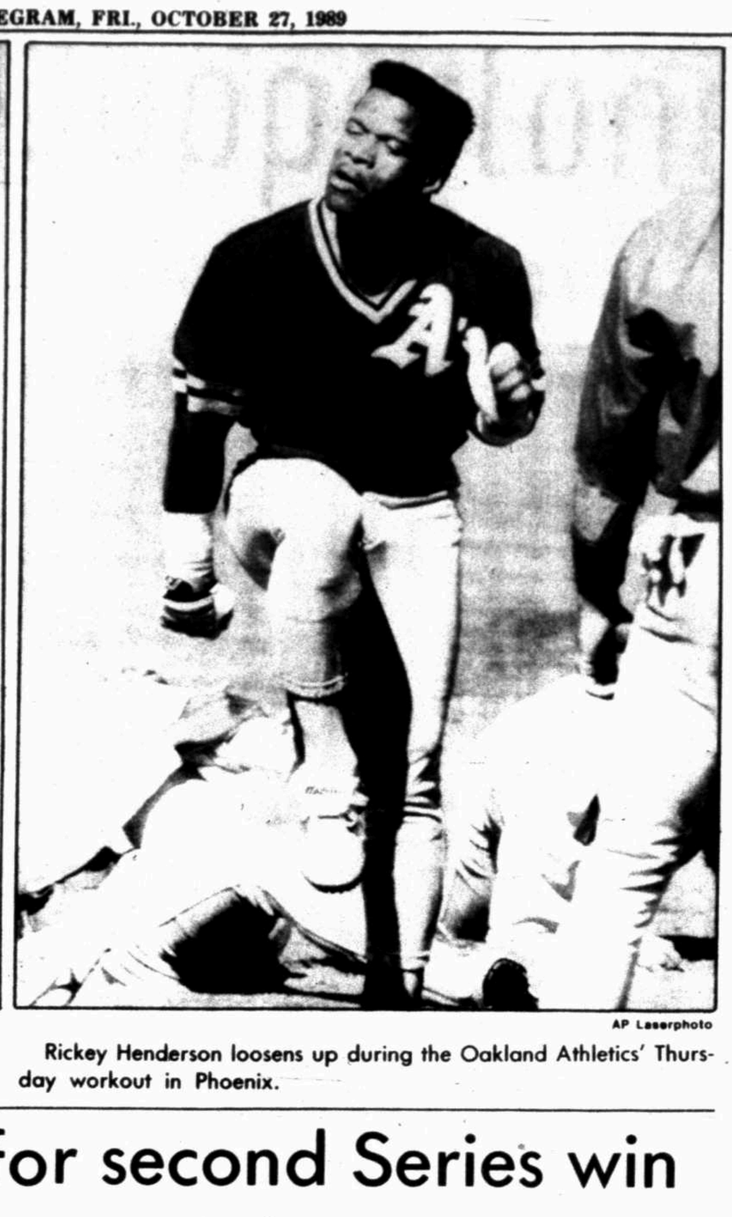

"Everybody's back into it," he said. "The press is here. It feels like the World Series again — even though it's almost Thanksgiving."

The Giants practiced Thursday, their eighth session since Game 2.

Fall Classic takes on soap scene

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Call it "As the World (Series) Turns." Or returns.

Remember when a favorite soap opera character went upstairs and took 10 days to come down? That's sort of what the World Series is like. Forget Luke and Laura. Moore and McGwire are back.

The earthquake changed a lot of things, but not Oakland's 2-0 lead. When last we left, Dave had shut out the Giants 5-0 and was anxiously awaiting his next turn. Well, turns out that it's Game 3. In the meantime, Scott feels better. But Rick feels worse. And Storm is really mad.

Dave Stewart, who won two games against Toronto in the American League playoffs, pitched a five-hitter in the Athletics' victory over San Francisco in Game 1 of the World Series. Stewart struck out six and walked one in his first shutout since Aug. 30, 1988.

Oakland took a 3-0 lead in the second inning off Scott Garrelts. Dave Henderson walked and Terry Steinbach and Tony Phillips hit consecutive singles for a 1-0 lead. Walt Weiss grounded to first and Will Clark threw home, but the sliding Steinbach knocked the ball out of Terry Kennedy's glove and Oakland led 2-0. Rickey Henderson's single scored Phillips for a three-run lead.

Dave Parker homered leading off the third, his third home run of the postseason, and Weiss homered leading off the fourth. That was that.

Game 2 seemed much the same, but this time it was Mike Moore leading Oakland to a 5-1 victory. He allowed four hits and one run in seven innings before Rick Honeycutt and Dennis Eckerlsey finished.

Carney Lansford's RBI double in the first gave Oakland the lead, but the Giants tied it in the third on Robby Thompson's sacrifice fly.

Parker put Oakland ahead in the fourth with an RBI double off Rick Reuschel. Dave Henderson walked and Steinbach broke open the game with a three-run homer.

Don Robinson was scheduled to pitch Game 3 for the Giants against Bob Welch and Garrelts was slated to start Game 4 against Storm Davis.

Stewart gets chance for second Series win

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Oakland manager Tony La Russa has seen Dave Stewart pitch through tough times before. He expects the right-hander will do it again.

"Stew will find a way to win," La Russa said. "I'm not worried about him."

The Oakland A's and San Francisco Giants are scheduled to resume the World Series today after an 11-day layoff because of an earthquake.

"We all know it won't be the same," Stewart said. "But we're still playing for the World Series and that has a lot of meaning for every player on this team."

Since Oct. 17 at 5:04 p.m. (PDT) some moments have stood in time, while others have flashed by.

On Oct. 18, the thought of playing a baseball game seemed insignificant and distant. Stewart had trouble looking his catcher in the eye.

"We've all been through a national tragedy," Stewart said. "I'm sure I'm not alone, but the earthquake had a deep psychological affect on me."

The Bay area is back to work, and now it's time for the A's and Giants to do the same. The A's take a 2-0 lead into Game 3 of the best-of-7 Series.

"I think our minds are back on baseball," Stewart said. "That wasn't the case a week ago."

The day after the quake, Stewart visited some of the harder hit communities and spent some time talking to the rescue workers along I-880.

"I hope by playing we can give something back to the people of the Bay area," Stewart said. "That's what sports is for."

And the sport of baseball will be played this evening at Candlestick Park.

Correa given freedom

ARLINGTON (AP) — Texas Rangers pitcher Edwin Correa has been offered an outright assignment to the American Association's Oklahoma City club and chose to become a free agent, officials said Thursday.

The righthander, with three or more years of major league service, exercised his right to refuse the assignment, the Rangers said in a prepared statement. Correa became a free agent, effective immediately, the statement said.

The 23-year-old Correa missed all of the last two Rangers' seasons with right shoulder problems. He pitched briefly on medical rehabilitation assignment in the Gulf Coast league in July. Correa went 0-2 with an 8.64 ERA in four games.

He last pitched in a regular-season major league game on July 5, 1987. He spent the remainder of the 1987 season and all of the next two seasons on the disabled list.

White Downs zaps unprofitable Friday racing

AUSTIN (AP) — After three weekends, G. Rollie White Downs has received permission to end Friday horse racing because crowds fell short of expectations, the track manager said.

To boost revenue, the track in Brady, where pari-mutuel betting began on Oct. 6 for the first time legally in Texas in 52 years, will be allowed to increase its Saturday and Sunday fare to 12 races, instead of 10.

An average of $180,000 has been wagered on weekend days and $75,000 on Fridays, said Richard Lerma, general manager of G. Rollie White Downs. The track had projected an average of $200,000.

"We were the first to test the market and the first to learn from it," Lerma said.

"We found that Friday is not a viable race day for a track our size in our location. Our Saturday and Sunday attendance has been good, and we have decided to concentrate our resources to offer more racing on those days."

Although the Texas Racing Commission approved Lerma's request to drop Friday racing, it balked at the track's second request in as many months that it be allowed to offer trifecta wagering, in which bettors try to pick the first three horses in the order of their finish.

The commission said it would consider the trifecta proposal again at its Nov. 6 meeting.

In September, the commission turned down trifecta wagering at G. Rollie White Downs on grounds that it takes sophisticated handicappers to choose the first three horses in the correct order of finish. Commissioners decided to restrict wagering to simpler bets until Texas racing fans get better acquainted with betting.

Tracks that allow more so-called exotic bets like twin trifectas and pick-sixes generally have higher "handle," or total amount bet, because handicappers will sometimes bet a horse several ways.

Walter "Butch" Smith, president of the Texas Professional Horse Trainers' Association, said he thinks track management at Brady made the correct decision in discontinuing Friday racing.

"Our problem has been on the offensive side of the fooball. We aren't moving the ball and we need to be

"When they got Ricky Ford back in the lineup, they tried to run more, but last week, they tried to get the ball to him by throwing. However, this is one of the few teams in the district we feel we can lineup with size-wise. That'll be a change."

Dan Gandy, first year head coach at San Angelo, says it won't be an easy task to beat the Bulldogs.

"Those rascals look to me like they are snake bit," said Gandy. "They haven't had any difficulty moving the football. They've had a lot of opportunities to score. And they don't give up no matter what the score is. They will play you for 48 minutes. Midland is difficult to prepare for since they can run and throw. It may be more difficult to prepare for them than someone like Lee, who just lines up and comes at you.
more consistent. We really played over our heads on defense against Cooper and Cooper had a lot of turnovers

"As far as the district race is concerned, the meaning is gone for both of us in this game, but whether we win or lose, we just want the kids to play good."

Despite the records of the two teams, both Corley and Gandy say that team attitudes haven't been a problem.

"We've really had good practices the last three or four weeks," said Corley. "I really feel the kids are excited about playing the game."

Gandy said, "Our kids aren't down. We haven't had much success in the win column, but this has been an enjoyable group of kids to work with. I wish we could have given them a few more victories."

J.W. Orr, who has played both at running back and quarterback this year, leads the Bobcats with 308 yards rushing, 99 yards passing and 117 yards receiving while Ford has 190 yards rushing and 57 receiving in limited duty this year.

Patrick Mowles and Jason Stone have alternated possessions most of the year for the Bulldogs at quarterback, but Mowles got the lion's share of time against Cooper last week with Stone being forced into action in the defensive secondary. Still, the pair need only combine for 32 yards passing tonight to put MHS over the 1,000-yard passing mark for the year.

If they accomplish the task at hand, and it's almost certain with three games to play, it would be the third year in a row the MHS attack has generated over 1,000 passing yards. Jeff Somers and Russell Page combined to throw for over 1,000 yards in 1987 while Page came back and threw for 1,000 yards (1,196) himself last year.

MHS has two of the Top 10 receivers in the league with Brandon Oden (No. 2 with 22 catches for 348 yards) and James Woolsey (No. 7 with 10-160).

The Bulldogs have been hit hard again at fullback. Brent Noisette, a junior who has started the last three games after the injury to Will Sowders, will miss tonight's game with a knee injury. Junior Major Williams will step in. Also, safety David Worley, who also punts, is questionable on defense, but is still expected to punt. Stone and Williams will have to play in the defensive secondary to shore up the injury-riddled Bulldogs.

AREA

A win over Crane seems all the more crucial because the Rangers finish with road dates at front-running Kermit and Clint. Crane whacked Clint last week, but the El Paso-area schools are traditionally tough at home — especially after the long bus ride taken by the other district teams.

Purser thinks the Rangers could benefit from playing Crane in their last regular-season game.

"It ought to help, because we've played well at home this year," he said. The Rangers are 3-1 at King, and were leading the fourth quarter of their only home loss.

Two things that won't help are injuries to starting right halfback-kicker Jerry Gay and startin weakside backer Shan Cumba. Gay will miss the rest of the season after undergoing major knee surgery, while Cumba is sidelined with a deep back bruise.

In addition, left guard Jason Goff has a hyper-extendeed knee.

"I knew depth was a problem," Purser said. "The injuries just make it that much tougher.

Crane might hinder recovery, too. The Cranes have a variety of weapons, including wide receiver Jackie Jeffrey and tight end Rodney Lane.

"They have more speed than anyone in the district and more size, too," Purser said.

TAGLIABUE

But Finks was the only candidate recommended and he came up three votes short when the newer owners and some who felt they had been left out of the process mustered the votes to block him.

A second, more broadly based committee included the two among the finalists and the battle began. It was less a battle over candidates than over how the two groups of owners perceived the league. Indeed, a majority on both sides said either man was acceptable.

After a meeting at Dallas two weeks ago, Finks and Tagliabue came out with 13 votes apiece — there were two abstentions — and then Tagliabue began gaining strength. He reached Finks' high-water mark of 16 votes when the meetings began here Tuesday.

At one point, Finks was offered the job of president for football operations under Tagliabue, but declined.

After Rozelle suggested he would walk away even if a successor hadn't been found, the deadlock began to erode Wednesday night. Rozelle said he met with Pittsburgh's Dan Rooney, an old-guard member who had switched to Tagliabue, and they agreed to form a five-man committee to resolve the issue.

It was chaired by Rooney and included Mara and Modell from the Finks side and Minnesota's Mike Lynn and Denver's Patrick Bowlen representing Tagliabue. Mara and Modell agreed to switch, then called Finks early in the morning to tell him of their decision.

"I wanted a man with a football background," Mara said. "I felt we'd have the best of both worlds with Paul staying on as our lawyer. But I'm satisifed. Maybe it will be like the time when Forrest Evashevski turned down the Green Bay coaching job and they had to settle for Vince Lombardi."

Tagliabue, who had said in Dallas that he wanted the job "because it would be fun," said Wednesday that he was well aware of the problems he faced.

He was confronted by the variety of things that will come up when a Cleveland reporter asked him if he would reinstate Browns running back Kevin Mack, who is due to be released from jail next week.

DALLAS (AP) — Here are preview highlights of this weekend's college football games involving Southwest Conference teams:

TCU (4-3, 2-2 SWC) at BAYLOR (3-4, 2-2 SWC), 12 Noon (CDT), Raycom Sports Telecast — Horned Frogs used a 24-14 win at Fort Worth last year to gain a 46-42-7 overall lead in the series. SWC "dean" of head coaches Grant Teaff of Baylor opposes "associate dean" Jim Wacker of TCU Saturday as the conference's two coaches with the longest current tenures. Teaff is 147-136-7 (27th year, nation's ninth-leading active coach in terms of wins), 105-90-5 (18th year, SWC's sixth-longest head coaching tenure), 67-64-3 in SWC games (fourth-most SWC wins by any coach) and 12-5 against the Horned Frogs. Wacker stands 132-77-3 (19th year, 15th-most wins among active Division I-A coaches) overall, 28-44-2 (seventh season) at TCU after winning four of the last five games, 14-35-1 against SWC foes, and 3-3 against the Bears. An improved passing attack, paced by QB Ron Jiles (98-of-182, 1,230 yards, 53.9 percent, five TDs) and backup QB Leon Clay (10-of-11 for 165 yards against Air Force), has been a big difference for the 1989 Frogs. WR Stephen Shipley has 11 receptions for 231 yards (21 yards per catch) in the last two games. Baylor relies on balance between QB Brad Goebel's throwing (84-of-156, 1,077 yards, seven TDs) and the two-pronged rushing attack of Eldwin Raphel (123 carries, 544 yards) and Lincoln Coleman (96 carries, 315 yards).

TEXAS A&M (5-2, 3-1 SWC) at RICE (1-5-1, 1-3 SWC), 1:00 p.m. (CDT) — Texas A&M seeks to protect a shot at the conference title, major bowl hopes and national rankings against the Owls, who have held leads at one time against all seven opponents. The Aggies lead the series with Rice 43-27-3. Rice last conquered the Aggies 10-6 in 1980 while A&M has won 14 of the last 15 games between the teams. Two of the SWC's first-year head coaches meet Saturday. A&M's R.C. Slocum, an Aggies' assistant coach for 16 years, takes a 5-2 overall mark and 3-1 SWC record into Saturday's tussle. Rice coach Fred Goldsmith is 3-12-1 (second year, one season at Slippery Rock State in 1980) overall and 1-3 in SWC play after opening his career with a 35-6 win by the Owls at SMU. The Aggies' Darren Lewis has zoomed for 384 yards on 78 carries in the last four games while moving into fourth place in SWC rushing (124 carries, 543 yards, seven TDs currently). The Owls have a big-play quarterback in Donald Hollas (260 yards per game total offense, second in SWC behind NCAA leader Andre Ware). Aggies' TE Mike Jones (23 catches, 364 yards) is one of the most sure-handed receivers in the SWC while the Owls' Eric Henley (52 receptions, 635 yards) is third nationally in receiving. DBs David Griffin (four interceptions, 59 tackles) of Rice and speedy Larry Horton (two pilfers, 11 kickoff returns for 285 yards) of Texas A&M are two of the SWC's top young defenders.

NORTH TEXAS (3-4) at SMU (1-5, 0-5, SWC), 2:00 p.m. (CDT) — The Eagles and Mustangs renew a 28-game series when they clash at Ownby Stadium. SMU leads the all-time series with UNT 25-2-1 and defeated the Eagles 24-6 when they last met in 1984. Both head coaches are familiar with Texas high school and college football and are highly-respected clinicians from the Metroplex. Nelson is 40-45-1 (ninth season) as a college mentor with all service at North Texas. SMU coach Forrest Gregg is 1-5 in his first season as a college head coach but has directed 13 pro and collegiate squads to 81 victories in his last 13 years as a football chieftan. North Texas had won 11 of its last 14 regular-season games and made the NCAA Division I-AA playoffs last year (finishing 8-4 overall after losing 7-0 to Marshall in the first round) before running into some rugged Southland Conference opponents in mid-1989. The Eagles rely on the solid throwing of junior QB Scott Davis, one of Texas' most accurate college passers. He's 110-of-180 in the aerial department for 1,371 yards and nine TDs in seven contests. RB Tony Cook made 36 catches in the first six games for UNT and has been among the SLC's punt and kickoff return average leaders all year. SMU relies on the steady run-and-shooting of QB Mike Romo (third in SWC passing yards with 1,432 in six tilts). Freshman RB Kevin Love (45 carries, 184 yards, one TD) has more than half of the Mustangs' net rushing yardage. Mitchell Glieber (27 catches), Michael Bowen (26 receptions) and Korey Beard (24 grabs) are all among the SWC's top nine receivers. CB Richie Butler had 14 tackles for SMU last week against Houston.

HOUSTON (5-1, 2-1 SWC) vs. ARKANSAS (5-1, 2-1 SWC) at Little Rock, 7:00 p.m. (CDT) — It's a game which SWC partisans have been waiting to observe, and neither squad has disappointed prognosticators in early activity. The upstart Cougars broke or tied 13 SWC and NCAA records last week in a 95-21 win over SMU. Arkansas, meanwhile, is 9-1 in SWC games over the past two seasons and can move to within a half-game of SWC-topping Texas with a win. Both teams have potent offenses but move the ball by entirely different means. The Cougars pass 74 percent of the time (388 attempts in 524 plays from scrimmage) while the Razorbacks take the overland approach on 79 percent of their plays (360 rushes on 457 snaps with an impressive average of 5.4 yards per carry, tops in the SWC, as a team). The squads have combined for a 67 touchdowns and 6,680 yards total offense. Arkansas leads the all-time series 10-5 and holds a 9-4 edge in SWC games against Houston. The Hogs also have won the last seven meetings with the Cougars, including a 26-21 triumph in the Astrodome last year. Coach Jack Pardee of the Cougars is 18-10-1 (third year, all at UH) overall in the college ranks, 9-7-1 in SWC encounters and 0-2 against UA. Razorbacks' coach Ken Hatfield is 77-47-2 (11th season) overall, 50-16-1 (sixth year) at Arkansas, 31-10 in SWC games, and 5-0 against Houston. Cougars' QB Andre Ware (tutored by former Arkansas players QB Ron Calcagni and RB John Jenkins, now UH assistant coaches) has broken or tied NCAA and SWC records 14 times in 1989 and already ranks first in SWC career TD passes with 56. He's already tops in TD passes (27), fifth in passing yards (2,584) and eighth in completions (187) on SWC season record books after six 1989 games. Arkansas counters with RBs Barry Foster (78 carries, 465 yards) and James Rouse (62 tries, 335 yards).

BOWLING BEAT

Ausmus' 709 series paces city bowlers

By MIKE VELASCO

Larry Ausmus recently rolled his highest series ever with a 709 on games of 277, 257 and 175 while bowling in the Thursday night Civic Commercial League at Dellwood Lanes.

In other bowling news, Youth League members at Fairmont Park decorated Grafa Park with red ribbons to help promote the Texas Red Ribbon "Just Say No to Drugs" campaign.

Following the decorating party, 23 teams bowled in the "Just Say No to Drugs" Adult/Youth tournament, which featured teams from the surrounding area. First place went to Steve Curtis and Billy Smith while Darrell Hopkins and Smith took second. Third went to Mike Abbott and Kevin Edwards while the sportsmanship award was taken by Cory Elliott of Big Spring.

The Midland Women's Bowling Association recently completed its annual Texas Special Olympic tournament. The winners were Loretta Faseler and Rodney Holsworth of Fairmont Park, Cathy Rollins and Sherman Wright of Dellwood and a Cactus Lanes tie between Peggy Anderson and Rosa Grant and Paul Bolinton.

Finalists in Fairmont Park's weekly singles tournament were 1. Curtis Alford, 2. Steve Witte, 3. Jeff Minnick, 4. Ron Brashear, 5. Jan Wooten.

Spurned Finks claims to be glad quest over

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Jim Finks harbored no ill will after being spurned by the league he has served for 40 years, saying he felt almost relieved that the quest for an NFL commissioner was over.

Finks, president and general manager of the New Orleans Saints, was the early favorite to succeed Pete Rozelle as commissioner. But Finks finished second to league counsel Paul Tagliabue in a vote announced Thursday.

"I'm certainly not disappointed. This has been going on since June for me. I'm relieved personally, and I'm relieved for the league," Finks said. "It had dragged on much too long.

"The process was fair, and maybe it had to come to this, because this league doesn't have much experience hiring commissioners. The last one held the job for 29 years.

"The research and interviewing had to be done and positioning had to be done, and the league fortunately came out with an outstanding man," Finks said. "I couldn't think of a better person than Paul Tagliabue to succeed Pete Rozelle as commissioner of the National Football League."

Finks entered the NFL as a rookie defensive back with the Pittsburgh Steelers in 1949. He helped build the Minnesota Vikings into a perennial Super bowl team in the 1960s and early 1970s.

He joined the Saints in 1986, hired Jim Mora as coach, brought in an entirely new personnel operation, and the Saints had a first-ever winning season in 1987.

Upstart Hammond parlays newfound success into lead

HILTON HEAD ISLAND, S.C. (AP) — Donnie Hammond, the upstart leader of golf's richest tournament, didn't even expect to be playing in the Nabisco Championship.

Three weeks and two tournaments ago, he was mired in 92nd place on the season's money-winning list and, admittedly, "not even thinking about Nabisco."

He had booked himself into a tournament in Japan on the same dates as the elite Nabisco, which takes only the top 30 money-winners for the year.

"I wasn't thinking about it until we were on the plane to Texas and my caddy said, 'Well, we finish first and second in the next two and we're in Nabisco.' I told him he'd better quit drinking."

But the journeyman Hammond, who had won only once before in a seven-season PGA Tour career, followed his caddy's plan, a win in the Texas Open with the second-best 72-hole score in Tour history, and a runner-up finish last week.

Those two tournaments provided him with $194,400 in winnings, vaulted him into 26th place on the money list and put him in the 30-man field that is chasing almost $3.5 million in individual prize money.

Mojo golfer nabs honor

From Staff Reports

Odessa Permian's Ben Bangert, the defending District 4-5A golf medalist, has been named to the second team of the 1989 Rolex/Golf Magazine Junior All-America team.

Bangert will be honored at the Rolex Junior All-American banquet on Nov. 22 at the Innisbrook Resort in Roswell, Ga.

Each year the American Junior Golf Association, Golf Magazine and Rolex select 40 junior golfers nationwide to make the All-America teams. Selection is based on points received by individual finishes in national tournaments during the year. Ten players are then placed on teams first through third and honorable mention.

Bangert is the grandson of Midlanders Mr. and Mrs. W.N. Cole, Sr. He is the son of Odessa's Mr. and Mrs. Bruce Bangert.

Bangert is a senior at Permian and will be back to defend his District 4-5A medalist title this year.

Australians to host ring championships

SYDNEY, Australia (AP) — Australia will host the world amateur boxing championships in 1991.

New South Wales state premier Nick Greiner announced Friday that the competition would be held in Sydney from Nov. 13-23.

Saturday may be critical for national title hopefuls

Associated Press

Notre Dame, Miami, Colorado and Alabama, four of the nation's six remaining unbeaten and untied college football teams, appear to have their work cut out for them on a weekend that will go a long way toward determining the eventual national champion.

Top-ranked Notre Dame (7-0) entertains No. 7 Pitt (5-0-1), runnerup Miami (6-0) visits No. 9 Florida State (5-2), No. 3 Colorado (7-0) is at Oklahoma (5-2), which is unranked but one of three teams tied for the Big Eight lead, and No. 6 Alabama (6-0) visits No. 14 Penn State (5-1).

The other teams with unblemished records are No. 4 Nebraska (7-0), which is tied with Colorado and Oklahoma atop the Big Eight and plays host to Iowa State, and unranked Fresno State (7-0), which entertains Nevada-Las Vegas.

Among those holding their breath will be the Orange Bowl, which is drooling over the possibility of a national championship 1-2 shootout matching the Nov. 25 Notre Dame-Miami winner against the survivor of next week's Colorado-Nebraska showdown. The Sugar Bowl's hopes are riding on Alabama, the only unbeaten team in the Southeastern Conference.

Spoilsports Pitt, Florida State and Penn State are hoping to join the New Year's Day bowl picture while Oklahoma, on probation and ineligible for postseason action, would just like to ruin someone else's holiday plans.

Rounding out the Top Ten, fifth-ranked Michigan entertains Indiana, No. 8 Illinois plays host to Wisconsin and No. 10 Southern Cal is at home against Stanford.

Elsewhere, No. 11 Tennessee is at LSU, No. 12 Houston plays No. 13 Arkansas at Little Rock, No. 15 West Virginia is at Boston College, Mississippi State is at No. 16 Auburn, Pacific is at No. 17 Arizona, No. 18 Brigham Young is at Hawaii, No. 20 North Carolina State is at No. 25 South Carolina, No. 21 Texas A&M is at Rice, Wake Forest is at No. 22 Clemson and No. 23 Washington State is at Arizona State. Florida, the No. 19 team, and No. 24 Texas are not scheduled.

For Pitt, this is the biggest game since 1982 when a No. 1-ranked Panther team was upset by unranked Notre Dame 31-16. That was the last time Pitt was unbeaten this late in a season.

"It's the biggest game since we've been at Pitt, the biggest game of my life," defensive back Louis Riddick said. "We're playing the best team in the country, with a chance to move up in the rankings. It's a great test, but it's also a great opportunity."

Pitt coach Mike Gottfried remembers "walking off the field last year after losing to Notre Dame 30-20 and telling (Coach) Lou Holtz his team was a year ahead of schedule. I thought they'd be a good team (in 1989) and all they did was win the national championship.

"I've talked to our squad about the winning streaks they have — a 19-game winning streak, 14 straight at home, 11 straight since they were voted No. 1. That's impressive in this day of college football when you play so many tough teams.

"No one runs against them. I don't know if they've given up 100 yards rushing in a game this season. Miami passed for 424 yards against them last season and still didn't win. Southern Cal threw for 333 yards against them last week and still didn't win. Notre Dame is the quintessential team."

After Notre Dame, the Panthers have a week off, then play Miami on Nov. 11.

Colorado visits Oklahoma without two of the people it was counting on last spring. Quarterback Sal Aunese died of cancer last month and running back Eric Bieniemy suffered a knee injury two weeks ago.

Bieniemy insists he will play. Coach Bill McCartney isn't so sure. Besides, backup J.J. Flannigan ran for 178 yards on just 10 carries and scored three touchdowns against Kansas last week.

"As far as I'm concerned, I'm playing, regardless," Bieniemy said. "They'll have to hang me up outside to keep me from making the trip."

Oklahoma's Mike Gaddis, the nation's No. 3 rusher, is out for the season after injuring a knee two weeks ago.

"There's no question we're going to be fired up," Oklahoma coach Gary Gibbs said. "We'll be intense, we'll be highly motivated and we'll play with great effort.

"One of our goals is to win the Big Eight Conference championship, and this is one of the things you've got to do if you want to achieve that goal — beat Colorado.

"They've got all the ingredients — a big, strong offensive line with great skill people, a great quarterback (Darian Hagan). They not only can drive the football, but they have the great big-play capabilities. Defensively, they're a big, strong, physical team."

Colorado hasn't beaten Oklahoma since 1976 and hasn't won at Norman since 1965.

Seminoles may finally have quarterback edge

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. (AP) — Ninth-ranked Florida State heads into Saturday's game against No. 2 Miami with an edge at quarterback for the first time this decade.

Fifth-year senior Peter Tom Willis, who has pieced together spectacular numbers while leading the surging Seminoles to five straight victories, is the key to Florida State's high-powered offense.

"Peter Tom has made the right decisions all year," Florida State coach Bobby Bowden said. "He's gotten better and better."

The 6-foot-3, 202-pound Willis, who will turn 23 at the end of the season, has completed 60.4 percent of his passes for 1,832 yards and eight touchdowns. His 2,999 career passing yards and 21 touchdown passes rank him in the school's Top 10 in both categories.

"He's a very accurate thrower with a good arm," Miami coach Dennis Erickson said. "He's a very, very mature quarterback with a tremendous perception of what they're doing offensively."

Willis has also been surprisingly elusive, being sacked just six times.

"I may not be a guy who'll run for a lot of yards, but I can usually get away from people," he said. Willis has run the ball just 15 times this season, twice for touchdowns.

Of course Erickson isn't without some talent himself at Quarterback U. Redshirt freshman Gino Torretta, who took over last month for the injured Craig Erickson, has also hung up impressive totals going into the toughest test of his career.

"If he can perform well against FSU, then we'll know he can get the job done against anybody," Coach Erickson said.

But Torretta will be making just his third collegiate start when the unbeaten Hurricanes line up against Florida State, 5-2, for the nationally televised contest.

Torretta is also trying to prove he should be the Miami starter. He probably needs a win against Florida State to convince Coach Erickson that he's the best man for the job.

"Quarterbacks are judged on their winning," said Torretta, who prepped at Pinole, Calif.

Torretta, getting most of his playing time the last two games against Cincinnati and San Jose State, has connected on 63.6 percent of his passes for 976 yards and seven touchdowns.

He will be the least experienced Miami quarterback that Florida State has seen in a long time.

Quebec's Jeff Jackson is thrown to the ice by Boston's Randy Burridge during Thursday's National Hockey League action.

Blackhawks pass major test

NHL Roundup

Associated Press

The Chicago Blackhawks got a true measure of their progress. They passed the test.

The Blackhawks won their fourth straight, their longest winning streak since Mike Keenan became coach at the start of last season, with a solid 5-3 victory over the Montreal Canadiens. Chicago ended a 12-game winless streak against Montreal as Steve Thomas scored twice.

The Blackhawks, now 7-4-1, were just 2-9-1 a year ago. They last beat Montreal on Jan. 2, 1985 and were 0-7-5 since.

"What is so gratifying is that with each game, the team seems to be playing better," Thomas said.

Keenan said it was especially satisfying "to beat a team of Montreal's caliber, despite the fact the Canadiens are missing Bobby Smith, Claude Lemieux, Mike McPhee and Brian Skrudland."

The Hawks won because they didn't let the Canadiens do much damage on the power play. Montreal has gone 7-for-59 with a manpower edge.

Guy Carbonneau, playing his first game after sitting out nine games with an injury, had two goals. But, he said, "it all boiled down to them capitalizing on our mistakes. But, it was obvious, we were not ready to take on Chicago."

Adam Creighton, Wayne Van Dorp and Mike Hudson also scored for Chicago.

"Hopefully we can hang on," Canadiens coach Pat Burns said. "The Blackhawks killed us forechecking, and we were not prepared to forecheck them back."

Red Wings 3, Penguins 3

At Detroit, the Penguins used every tick of the clock, scoring the tying goal on Phil Bourque's tap-in with one second remaining in regulation.

Mario Lemieux backhanded a pass in front of the Detroit net and Bourque jabbed a shot past goaltender Tim Cheveldae from close range.

The blue light signifying the end of the period came on before the red goal light, but after a five-minute delay referee Dave Newell ruled the puck entered the net before time expired.

"(Newell) was in the same position I was," Bourque said. "As soon as the puck went in the net, he heard the buzzer. He pointed right to it, meaning it was a goal. I thought it was fairly obvious."

"I saw the blue light and thought there was no goal," Coach Jacques Demers said. "But give credit to the referee for a good call."

Steve Yzerman and John Chabot had short-handed goals for the Wings.

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: Concentrate on one thing at a time and you will reap unusual success. An enterprise that seems to be going nowhere will suddenly catch fire. You are the lucky benefactor! Travel in April and May for business as well as pleasure. New partnerships will help you build greater financial security next summer. Sound monetary moves start to pay big dividends. A management position opens up. Go for it! Romance turns around. Learn to delegate more responsibility next fall and domestic harmony will flourish.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: explorer James Cook, coach Lenny Wilkins, Dr. Jonas Salk, actress Jane Alexander, Olympian Bruce Jenner.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Your enthusiasm for activity is almost limitless today. Do not ignore job advancement possibilities. Enroll in a night class or computer workshop. Romance could be frustrating.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Differences with relatives or your mate can be overcome with affection or a compromise. Someone's feelings may be badly hurt if you play games in romance. You may not be ready to settle down.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): A blunder could be a good thing. A newcomer will soon dominate your life. Impromptu meetings alter your views, perhaps even a relationship. Be more flexible.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Get household errands done early today and you will have more time and energy for fun. Romance is part of the picture. Your prospective mate is waiting for you to make the first move.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Your indecisiveness is even greater than usual today. Do not fret about the choices you make. Your instincts are excellent. Rule out a clandestine romantic encounter or your reputation could be damaged.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): If you suddenly shift gears, others may think you are erratic. Take the time to explain what you are doing. Stay away from any ventures that involve major financial risk.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Meditation will bring you the answers you have been seeking. You have a tendency to be too harsh on others. Try to put yourself in their place; it will make you more compassionate.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): You may decide to create a new you. Get your hair done and buy that outfit you have been wanting. Others will be highly complimentary! Romance finds you when you least expect it.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): You may feel nervous without knowing why. All will be clear by midafternoon. Excitement looms this evening. Be ready for a big change in your social life. Romantic partner has lots of plans.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Go for life's finer things today. Splurge on something luxurious for yourself or your mate. Have dinner in an intimate restaurant. Share your hopes and dreams.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Your quick thinking saves the day on a family outing. Everyone returns home feeling refreshed. Spend the evening with good friends. You could hit on a wonderful moneymaking idea.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Your winning smile and charming manner lead people to seek you out. You make a new friend today and feel content. A parent-child relationship still needs work. Forget past grievances and be conciliatory.

As declarer, how you handle a hand might be dictated by the number of losers there are in your side's combined holding. The corollary, therefore, is that a defender can often pick up a trick or two by forcing declarer to commit to a losing line of play before finding out how the cards lie.

North-South were employing a no-trump range of 13-15. North's two-diamond response was a transfer to hearts. When South obliged, West, who had been content to defend no trump because of his long suit, intervened with a diamond overcall, but nothing could deter North from going on to game in hearts.

West led his king of diamonds, and it needed no more than a cursory inspection of dummy to realize that, unless his partner had at least two tricks, there was no way to defeat the contract. At trick two, therefore, West shifted to the two of clubs!

Consider the possibilities from declarer's vantage point. Since he does not yet know of the bad heart break, he foresees only three losers—one spade, one diamond and one club. It seems that the greatest threat to the contract is West has a singleton club. If that is so, taking the club finesse would needlessly cost the contract should East win and return a club for West to ruff.

The logical play is for declarer to rise with dummy's ace of clubs and attempt to draw trumps, using a diamond ruff as the entry to the table. But when West shows out on the second trump, the contract is doomed. Sadly, declarer later learns that a club finesse would have landed the game—a play he would have to have made had he known beforehand that he had a sure trump loser.

Pat Robertson among bidders on Bakker's cable TV network

VIRGINIA BEACH, Va. (AP) — Pat Robertson's Christian Broadcasting Network is among the bidders for the cable TV network once run by imprisoned evangelist Jim Bakker, a Robertson spokeswoman said.

The Inspirational Network — actually a cable distribution system that reaches 7 million to 8 million homes — is up for sale because of the bankruptcy of the religious empire built by Bakker, who was convicted this week of defrauding his followers.

Three "prominent" bidders are to be considered today, including the Robertson network, said John McEntee, director of Heritage Ministries, a spinoff of Bakker's old PTL organization in South Carolina. McEntee, who valued the network at $10 million, refused to identify the other potential buyers.

A sale would require the approval of the federal bankruptcy judge overseeing the breakup of the PTL empire, McEntee said.

The Christian Broadcasting Network, which reaches 47 million households with its for-profit The Family Channel, would add the old PTL to its operation if its bid were accepted, said CBN spokeswoman Frankie Abourjilie. She refused to disclose the amount of the bid.

"We're going to make a bid on the cable delivery system and equipment," Ms. Abourjilie said Thursday night.

Bakker, whose ministry unraveled in a series of sex and money scandals, got his start on the airwaves when he and his wife, Tammy Faye, appeared on Robertson's network in the early 1970s.

Baker has begun serving a 45-year sentence for conspiracy and fraud at the Talladega, Ala., Federal Correctional Institution. He entered the prison Tuesday, hours after being being sentenced in federal court in Charlotte, N.C., and fined $500,000.

Numerous requests for prison interviews have been referred to the evangelist's lawyers, said spokeswoman Dana Newell.

The bidding for Bakker's old TV network doesn't affect Heritage USA, the Christian theme park and resort near Fort Mill, S.C.

PTL bankruptcy trustee M.C. "Red" Benton decline to comment on plans for sale of the rest of the ministry.

Stephen Mernick, a Toronto businessman who had agreed to buy the PTL's assets after it filed for bankruptcy in June 1987, let his $64 million purchase contract expire Sept. 30 because he was unable to obtain title insurance for Heritage USA.

CHICAGO (AP) — Michael Flatley knew he had fast feet, but didn't think about seeking official recognition for his tap-dancing prowess until Sen. Ted Kennedy suggested he try for a spot in the "Guinness Book of World Records."

Flatley

Then it became a quest for the 31-year old hoofer, who made it into the new edition of the record book with a 28-tap-per-second performance.

"I really believed I was the best in the world, and I'm saying this as modestly as I can, it seemed to me to be a good way to prove I was the best," he said in a recent interview.

"Tap dancing, for me, is a very powerful, masculine thing," he said. "That's how I approach it."

His feet are enshrined in the Guinness edition that arrived in bookstores this week. Heel-and-toeing it for a tape recorder and Guinness judges in a suburban dance studio in May, he beat the previous record of 24 taps per second, set by Roy Castle on Jan. 14, 1973, on a BBC-TV program.

Flatley, a native of southwest Chicago, developed his nimble-legged style through years of Irish step dancing, and won the world step dancing championship in Dublin in 1975.

Ms. Pauley's farewell announcement, in which she said she'll most miss working with co-host Bryant Gumbel, was preceded by his comments in which he criticized "idle and often erroneous speculation" about the troubled, top-rated show.

Gumbel said the speculation had been "much to the detriment of all of us here."

The top ten hunks included Kevin Costner, Dennis Quaid, Patrick Swayze, Mark Harmon, Tom Selleck, Harrison Ford, Rob Lowe and Kurt Russell.

The fourth annual list of 10 men and 10 women, published in the magazine's Nov. 13 issue, was based on a mail-in survey from readers.

Turner

NEW YORK (AP) — Singer Tina Turner, who turns 50 on Nov. 26, says she's a practicing Buddhist who lives "like a monk," doesn't like being a sex symbol and takes no drugs — not even aspirin.

"I live a very quiet life," Turner said in an interview in the Nov. 13 issue of US magazine. "There's no television, no music blaring. I live like a monk, almost. A monk with red lips, short dresses and big hair."

She went on: "I have at times given off the image of raunchy, rock sex, but I've tried to turn that energy into something positive. But I wish it could have been nicer in some way. Maybe I feel that way because I am an older woman who is grown up. Young girls, they like all of that crazy image stuff."

Turner said that Jacqueline Kennedy Onassis "is the lady I would have most liked to have been." Turner said that she was impressed by Onassis' manners on the one occasion when they met.

Brady contradicts SEC chairman

Brady

WASHINGTON (AP) — Treasury Secretary Nicholas F. Brady is disputing the new Securities and Exchange Commission chief's contention that the SEC doesn't need the power to halt trading in stock market emergencies.

Testifying before a Senate panel in support of proposed market reform legislation, Brady said Thursday that the Bush administration supports giving the SEC emergency powers to suspend or halt trading for up to 24 hours.

One day earlier, SEC Chairman Richard C. Breeden told a House panel he neither wanted nor needed the emergency power, one of four changes originally proposed by the SEC in the wake of the 1987 stock market crash.

Brady declined to comment further on his testimony after the hearing before the Senate Banking, Housing and Urban Affairs Committee.

Breeden, on the job just two weeks, said through a spokeswoman late Thursday that he had no comment.

On Wednesday, Breeden said safety mechanisms called circuit-breakers — automatic, temporary trading halts in times of market volatility — have eliminated much of the need for officials to halt trading.

Breeden told the telecommunications and finance subcommittee of the House Energy and Commerce Committee that he believed the possibility of arbitrary halts could cause uncertainty and volatility in the markets. The power to make such a decision should remain where it is now — with the president, he contended.

Brady, in a letter accompanying his testimony, said, however, that he believed the change is needed.

The initial governmental response to market emergencies should come "from a regulator with expertise and proximity to the markets," Brady said.

Brady noted that the proposed legislation still gives the president power to terminate SEC emergency actions and would require presidential approval for any trading halt longer than 24 hours.

In other testimony, Brady backed away from a recommendation made by a commission he headed that investigated the 1987 crash when the Dow Jones industrial average, a key market indicator, dropped more than 500 points in one day. Brady said his crash study may have "overreacted" in calling for a super-regulator to oversee all the financial markets.

PBPA warns against 451 gas refunds

By JOHN PAUL PITTS
Business/Oil Editor

As a result of the Court of Appeals vacating Federal Energy Regulatory Commission Orders 451 and 451-A, the Permian Basin Petroleum Association today advised its members to go slow in initiating natural gas sales that involve revenue funds.

The FERC orders, issued in June of 1986, eliminated vintage based pricing of old gas under the Natural Gas Policy Act of 1978, and established a uniform ceiling price available for most old jurisdictional gas, according to PBPA.

"Since the courts have vacated these orders," said Harry Spannaus, executive vice president of PBPA, "producers and royalty owners could be liable for massive refunds. If the courts decide to enforce refunds, it could bankrupt some producers. We are talking about billions of dollars."

Spannaus said gas producers would be advised to sell gas based on current contracts.

He said he did not think the U.S. Court of Appeals had considered all the ramifications of vacating the FERC order, because any gas producer collecting a price under Order 451 that was greater than the NGPA ceiling price is potentially at risk for refunds beginning from the effective date of the order in 1986.

Robert K. Anderson, chairman of PBPA natural gas committee, strongly suggested members to take no ac-

Exxon announced Thursday it is moving its world headquarters to Dallas and will temporarily lease office space in the Las Colinas Towers until a facility is built.

Exxon move 'tickles' officials

DALLAS (AP) — Exxon Corp.'s decision to move its headquarters to a Dallas suburb surprised officials who had little inkling the nation's third biggest industrial company was looking for a new home. Their delight, however, was obvious.

"We're tickled pink," said Mike Murphy, a spokesman for the Texas Department of Commerce. "This confirms what we've been trying to say to the rest of the world for some time: that Texas is on the rise again."

Although the department is the state's chief industrial recruiter, Murphy said no one in the agency was aware of the impending move.

"It's a great event for the entire region," said Rick Douglas, president of the North Texas Commission, a regional development group.

Exxon said it would move its 300 headquarters employees to Las Colinas, a development in the Dallas suburb of Irving. The company will move into temporary space beginning next fall, with construction of a new, campus-style headquarters expected to be completed by 1993.

Since the move involves only 300 people, the symbolic aspects of the decision are as important as the direct economic ones, said many officials.

"Anytime you move a headquarters operation of that stature into the area, it has a variety of kinds of impact," Douglas said. "First and foremost is prestige."

But the kinds of businesses that will follow Exxon — lawyers, ac-

Supply, demand weaken oil price

From Staff and Wire Reports

Crude oil futures were $19.51 per barrel at mid morning, up 13 cents from Thursday's close.

On Thursday, petroleum futures prices ended mixed as crude oil prices weakened for the fourth straight day mainly because of internal market conditions of supply and demand.

On the New York Mercantile Exchange, the December contract for West Texas Intermediate, the benchmark grade of U.S. crude oil, fell 24 cents to finish at $19.38 a barrel. Other contracts also declined.

Among refined oil products traded on the exchange, wholesale heating oil also fell. The contract for November delivery lost 1.20 cents to close at 57.24 cents and the December contract dropped 1.11 cents to 57.56 cents a gallon.

Wholesale unleaded gasoline for November rose 0.23 cent to end at 53.63 cents a gallon while the December contract gained 0.07 cent to 52.85 cents.

Analysts said the market's recent weakness was driven by technical factors after an 11-week rise in prices.

"The uptrend was led by product prices and now the downward move is also product led," said Michael Broder, energy trader with Dean Witter Reynolds Inc.

Peter Beutel, assistant director of the energy group at Elders Futures Inc., said that seasonal weakness also appeared to have hit the market.

"Prices usually decline from about the second week in November to December," Beutel said. "It seems to be occurring early this year."

Dollar higher in calm trading

LONDON (AP) — The dollar was higher in calm European trading early today and the pound was stabilizing after its tumble due to Chancellor of the Exchequer Nigel Lawson's resignation.

Gold prices moved up.

The sharp drop in the pound, signaling disarray in the British financial markets after the Cabinet revolt Thursday, helped the dollar as traders switched funds from the British into the U.S. currency, dealers said.

But some traders said the resignation has triggered a deep crisis for Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher and will further undermine the trust of the financial markets in the soundness of British economic policy. The falling fortunes of Thatcher's government, coupled with the huge British current account deficits, could prompt a further decline in the pound's value, they said.

In Tokyo, where trading ends before Europe's business day begins, the dollar rose 0.85 yen to a closing 142.75 yen. Later, in London, it was quoted at a lower rate of 142.63 yen.

In London, it cost a stabilizing $1.5755 to buy one pound, compared with $1.6130 late Thursday.

In Zurich, the bid price was $371.75 compared with $368.25 late Thursday.

Earlier, in Hong Kong, gold rose $3.13 to close at a bid $371.87.

Silver was quoted in London at a bid price of $5.18 a troy ounce, up from Thursday's $5.13.

Stock market sustains broad loss

NEW YORK (AP) — The stock market sustained a broad loss Thursday in selling attributed to increasing concern over the outlook for corporate earnings.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials fell 39.55 to 2,613.73, bringing its drop over the last four sessions to 75.41 points.

Declining issues outnumbered advances by about 11 to 4 in nationwide trading of New York Stock Exchange-listed stocks, with 406 up, 1,141 down and 410 unchanged.

Volume on the floor of the Big Board came to 175.24 million shares, against 155.65 million in the previous session. Nationwide, consolidated volume in NYSE-listed issues, including trades in those stocks on regional exchanges and in the over-the-counter market, totaled 204.16 million shares.

BUSINESS IN BRIEF

Coke revives early advertising themes

N.Y. Times News Service

Coca-Cola hopes that by early next year millions of Americans will be humming "I'd Like to Teach the World to Sing" — all over again.

In a new commercial to be broadcast next year, the company plans to revive the gentle paean to "peace and harmony" that was the theme song of its popular 1971 television commercial.

The nostalgia does not end there.

Coca-Cola will dust off "the Real Thing," its ubiquitous slogan from the early 1970s, and make it part of a new slogan for Coca-Cola Classic — "Can't Beat the Real Thing" — which also borrows from the current theme, "Can't Beat the Feeling."

Coca-Cola Co.'s latest campaign was created by its longstanding agency, McCann-Erickson U.S.A.

Business Hall of Fame inducts five

HOUSTON (AP) — Five businessman from across the Lone Star State have been inducted into the Texas Business Hall of Fame, including one who received the honor posthumously.

Albert B. Alkek of Victoria and Houston, Perry R. Bass of Fort Worth, Ben F. Love of Houston, McHenry Tichenor of Harlingen, and Hugh Roy Cullen of Houston were honored Thursday night at an awards dinner in Houston.

The Texas Business Hall of Fame, established in 1982, is a non-profit organization that honors business leaders whose accomplishments "best mirror the entrepreneurial spirit of Texas," the organization said.

UAL employees draft new strategy

CHICAGO (AP) — Advisers to United Airlines' pilots and flight attendants met to draft a new strategy following a failed buyout bid, as leaders of the Machinists' union discussed ways to prevent an outside takeover of United's parent, UAL Corp.

Collective bargaining nets higher wage

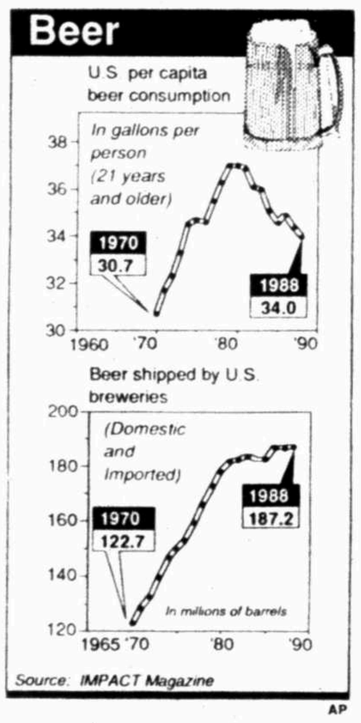

WASHINGTON (AP) — Private-sector workers who received new contracts through collective bargaining from January through September won average annual wage increases of 3.1 percent compared to average gains of 2.4 percent in their prior contracts, the Labor Department said.

The data in Thursday's report covers contracts for 1.3 million workers negotiated in the first nine months of the year.

Sales incentives erode auto profits

DETROIT (AP) — Summertime sales incentives eroded the Big Three automakers' third-quarter profits, which skidded a combined 27.3 percent from record levels a year ago.

General Motors Corp., Ford Motor Co. and Chrysler Corp. reported Thursday combined earnings for the three-month period of $1.33 billion on revenues of $56.92 billion.

Beer sellers shrug off price war

ST. LOUIS (AP) — Wall Street analysts say war is brewing over beer prices, but the folks who ring up six-packs aren't lathered up about it.

"We've seen and heard these kinds of things over and over," said Don Cowan, a spokesman for the Dallas-based Southland Corp., which owns 7-Eleven, the nation's largest convenience store chain. "I think this is more like standard operating procedure."

But the decision by Anheuser-Busch Cos. Inc., the world's largest brewer, to match price cuts made by competitors did attract attention Thursday from the financial world.

"It's going to be flat-out war," said Julie Neimann, a securities analyst for St. Louis-based Stifel Nicolaus Co.

"There has been a beer war in this country for the past 18 months, but we've really tried to stay above the fray. Now, we are joining the fray,"

S&L owner's maneuvers detailed

WASHINGTON (AP) — Regulators who tried to close Lincoln Savings and Loan Association say the thrift's millionaire owner fought back as late as this spring with political influence reaching the highest levels of government.

William J. Crawford, commissioner of the California Department of Savings and Loans, told the House Banking Committee on Thursday that two attempts were made from Washington on behalf of Phoenix businessman Charles H. Keating Jr. to approve the sale of Lincoln to a group of investors.

Crawford never approved the sale, described as a "sham" by federal regulator William Black.

Within weeks of the calls, the Irvine, Calif.-based S&L was taken over by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. and is expected to require a $2 billion bailout, making it the nation's costliest thrift failure.

Carolyn Jordan, an aide to Sen. Alan Cranston, D-Calif., urged approval of the sale in March. In April, according to Crawford, Sen. Dennis DeConcini, D-Ariz., called Crawford's boss, Business, Transportation and Housing Secretary John Geoghegan.

Crawford said DeConcini called at the instigation of the top federal thrift regulator, M. Danny Wall.

In an 8½-hour hearing, Crawford and San Francisco-based officials of Wall's agency, the Office of Thrift Supervision, detailed Keating's three-year effort to deter them from bringing enforcement action against his institution.

The effort included what they characterized as secret meetings in 1987 between Keating and Wall as well as the enlistment of five senators to plead Lincoln's cause and the hiring of Federal Reserve Board Chairman Alan Greenspan, then a private economist, as a consultant to defend the thrift's financial condition.

Treasury set to borrow $17 billion

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Treasury Department says it is preparing to borrow $17 billion on an emergency basis early next week so it can pay Social Security benefits to 38.9 million retirees and avert an unprecedented government default.

Treasury Secretary Nicholas Brady said Thursday the emergency borrowing will enable monthly Social Security checks to go out on schedule Nov. 3 regardless of whether Congress breaks a deadlock and passes an increase in the national debt limit.

The details of how the debt auction will be handled were to be announced today. Officials said the hastily announced debt auction likely will occur on Monday.

Treasury officials said the borrowing will go forward unless the administration receives assurances from congressional leaders that it will be able to pass an extension of the debt legislation before the midnight Tuesday deadline, when the current $2.87 trillion debt ceiling drops to a lower level of $2.8 trillion.

Brady's announcement came in a letter to House Republican Leader Robert Michel.

Brady said in his letter that the government will have $17 billion in borrowing authority left on Monday, which he will use to raise cash in the financial markets before the Tuesday deadline.

A Treasury official, briefing reporters on condition that his name not be used, called the emergency borrowing unprecedented and said it will cost the government money through higher interest rates that will have to be paid on the debt due to the hurry-up nature of the borrowing announcement.

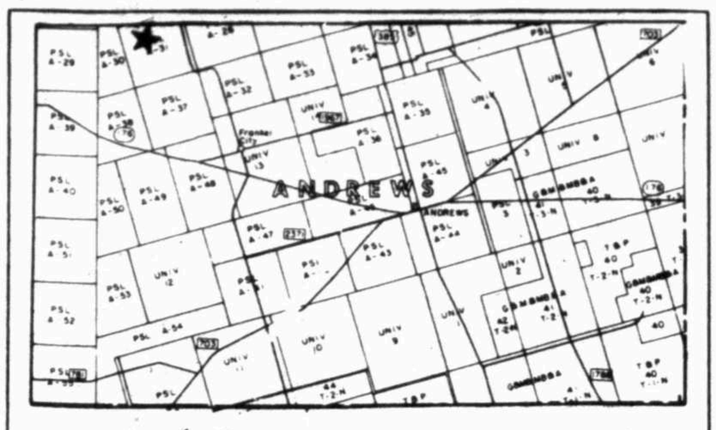

The official said, however, that Brady decided to go forward with the borrowing because he did not feel he had any choice. The alternative, the official said, would have been an unprecedented default by the government on its obligations.

The emergency borrowing will only enable the government to scrape by until Nov. 7, when it will again run out of money.

At times of other debates over extension of the debt ceiling, the government has been able to function for several days after hitting the borrowing limit essentially on a cash basis where it meets its routine obligations out of tax revenues it receives on a daily basis.

The House last spring passed an increase in the debt ceiling to $3.1 trillion. However, the measure has yet to clear the Senate, where it has been bogged down in debate over a host of unrelated matters, such as the proposed cut in the capital gains tax.

Sage Energy records Queen oil discovery

From Staff Reports

A Queen discovery has been completed in Andrews County, north of the Union field.

SAGE ENERGY CO. potentialed the No. 1 Goens to flow 90 barrels of 30 gravity crude, 35 Mcd and one barrel of water on a 12/64 inch choke with flowing tubing pressure of 100 psi. The well flowed from perforations 3,700 to 3,708 ft., which had been acidized with 1,000 gallons of 15 percent HCL acid and fractured with 7,500 gallons of gel and 10,400 lbs. 20/40 sand.

Permitted as an 8,600 ft. wildcat, the well was drilled to 7,580 ft. and plugged back to 3,865 ft. with 5 1/2 inch casing set at 3,907 ft.

Formation tops, on kelly bushing elevatin of 3,416 ft., include the Yates at 2,854 ft., Queen at 3,684, Lower Clearfork at 6,750, Wichita Albany at 7,232, and San Andres at 4,300 ft. Pay was topped at 3,700 ft.

Location is 1,980 ft. from south and west lines of Section 3, Block A-31, PSL survey, 22 miles northwest of Andrews.

Santa Fe, Yates final wells on Eddy prospect

Santa Fe Energy Partners L.P. and Yates Petroleum Corp. have completed three gas wells in the Dagger Draw prospect of Eddy County, N.M. The three are approximately 25 miles northwest of Carlsbad.

The No. 1 Cacti "AGB" State Com. was tested in the Cemetary field at a rate of 2.1 Mmcfd from 9,128 to 9,183 ft.

The No. 1. Cacti "AGK" Federal was completed in the Morrow formation at a rate of 9.4 Mmcfd from perforations 9,180 to 9,195 ft.

These two wells are currently producing at a rate of 5 Mmcfd.

The third well, the No. 1 Larue "XX" Federal, was recompleted to flow in excess of 1 Mmcf daily. The well flowed from Upper Pennsylvanian perforations 7,679 to 7,736 ft.

Santa Fe has 41.7 percent in the Cacti "AGB," a 51 percent interest im the Cacti "AGK," and a 50 percent interest in the Larue "XX". Yates holds the balance of the working interest and is the operator.

Further development in the Dagger Draw Prospect in both the Morrow and Upper Pennsylvanian reservoirs is being planned.

Oryx to participate in offshore gas platform

DALLAS (SWN) — Oryx Energy Co. has approved participation in a $13.3 million gas production platform on High Island Block A-553 (Lease G-6237), off the Texas Gulf Coast.

Initial production of 20 to 25 million cubic feet per day of natural gas (MMcf/D) is expected to begin in the third quarter of 1990. The six-slot, four-pile platform will be set in 270 feet of federal water, some 100 miles southeast of Galveston Bay. Four exploratory wells and one development well have been drilled on Lease G-6237. The property was acquired by Sun Exploration and Production Company, predecessor of Oryx Energy, and its partners for $6.733 million at the Outer Continental Shelf Lease Sale No. 74 in 1983.

The capital expenditure of $13.3 million includes platform fabrication and installation; the laying of a 15,000-foot, six-inch pipeline and its hookup to a gas processing facility on the adjacent High Island Block 552; engineering and project development work; the drilling and completion of additional wells and completion of three existing wells.

Oryx Energy has a one-third interest in the High Island A-553 platform. TOTAL Minatome Corporation of Houston, also with a one-third interest is the operator. Rosewood Resources of Dallas has the remaining one-third working interest.

High Island Block A-553 is one of the six tracts announced by Oryx Energy earlier this year for development at a total capital expense of $50 million during the next 18 to 24 months. A second High Island platform, on Block 384, is scheduled for start up in 1991. Oryx Energy is the sole interest owner and will be operator.

tion regarding refunds, since FERC has filed for a rehearing and announced that it will take the case to the Supreme Court if necessary.

"Also, Senator Phil Gramm and Rep. John Bryant have introduced legislation that would negate the court decision. Gramm's bill would negate the decision entirely, while Bryant's bill would negate refunds," said Spannaus.

Order 451 was brought to the courts when Mobil Oil and certain pipelines filed suit objecting to provisions in the order dealing with gas price abandonment, take-or-pay and gas transportation.

"PBPA feels that the 5th Circuit Court decision is an unauthorized intrusion into the jurisdiction of FERC," said the association executive.

countants and others that do business with the company, provide a tremendous potential for continued growth, Douglas said.

Gov. Bill Clements said, in a statement, said the decision is "a real coup for Texas. ... This is great news for Texas and for the continued vitality of our state's economy.

"Exxon's decision clearly reinforces the fact that the Texas business climate is among the best in the country. Low taxes, our opposition to a corporate or personal income tax and a standard of living that's second to none have made Texas a favorite among corporate America," he said.

Sen. Phil Gramm, R-Texas, said Exxon's decision sends a "signal that will go out all over the world that the business climate in Dallas is good and that our economy is on the mend."

Gramm said that if the national economic recovery continues in 1990, "Texas will be the engine pulling the economic expansion of America in the 1990s and I can hardly wait."

"Our economy can sure use the shot in the arm these high-powered jobs will bring," said Sen. Lloyd Bentsen, D-Texas. "The company will benefit from a warm and hospitable business climate and the employees will find life in our state pleasant and rewarding."

"Welcome to Texas," said Bruce Childs, a spokesman for GTE Telephone Operations, a unit of GTE Corp. which moved from Stamford, Conn., earlier this year.

"We've found a very warm welcome in the Metroplex (Dallas-Fort Worth area) for all our employees. I'm sure that the people coming from Exxon will find that it is very hospitable."

Exxon is the third corporate giant in two years to pick the Dallas area.

Besides GTE Telephone Operations, J.C. Penney & Co. Inc., the nation's sixth largest retailer, left New York in 1987. Currently in temporary office space in Dallas, the company plans to construct a headquarters building in Plano, a suburb north of Dallas where its financial services operation already is located.

Prior to that, Kimberly-Clark Corp. moved its 115-member headquarters staff to Dallas from Neenah, Wisc., in 1985. One of the first large corporate moves to the area came in 1979, when American Airlines Inc. left New York for Fort Worth.

In New York, meanwhile, city officials downplayed the significance of Exxon's departure.

"Although Exxon is certainly a major company in New York, in the country and the world, the practical matter is they employed 300 people here," said Stanley E. Grayson, deputy mayor for finance and economic development.

"I don't think that Exxon's decision to go to Dallas — the national oil and gas capital — suggests a trend of businesses generally leaving New York. Quite the contrary."

"No matter how you stack it up, we're a net winner," Grayson said, citing RJR Nabisco Inc.'s decision to move its headquarters from Atlanta to New York. The move came after a New York leveraged buyout firm purchased the consumer products company earlier this year.

Michael Patriarca, the thrift office's chief supervisory agent in San Francisco, and Black, counsel in that office, had recommended in May 1987 that the government seize Lincoln to end reckless activities and prevent further losses.

Their recommendation was rejected, and in an unprecedented move the case was transferred from the San Francisco office to agency headquarters in Washington.

"If our recommendations had been followed, the taxpayers ... would have suffered dramatically smaller losses," Black said. "It need not have happened and would not have happened if (regulators in Washington) had showed any backbone."

Rep. Henry B. Gonzalez, D-Texas, chairman of the banking panel, said he would ask President Bush to have Wall take administrative leave during the hearings.

said Jerry Ritter, a vice president and chief financial officer for St. Louis-based Anheuser-Busch.

Talk of a beer price war was news to Miller Brewing Co., the nation's second-largest brewer.

"Our pricing and Anheuser-Busch's have not been significantly different this year," Susan Henderson, a spokeswoman for the Milwaukee-based company, said Thursday.

The Stroh Brewery Co. ranks third among domestic brewers, followed by Adolph Coors Co. and the G. Heileman Brewing Co. Last month, Coors signed an agreement in principle to acquire most of Stroh's beer-related assets.

INVESTOR'S GUIDE

Tax rules on mutual funds vary with situations

By BILL DOYLE

Q. My no-load mutual fund has done well for me, except in 1987. On my income tax return for that year, I paid substantial capital gains tax, even though my gains disappeared in the stock market crash.

Using mutual funds would be a good approach for the small investor like me, if this tax problem could be avoided. My mutual fund is now back up to where it was in the fall of 1987, so I'll be paying those taxes again. Am I missing something?

Doyle

A. Rather than a "miss," suppose we call it a "misunderstanding" — of the basic tax rules covering mutual funds.

You will pay a 1989 capital gains tax only if your mutual fund declares a capital gains distribution this year and/or if you redeem some of your fund shares at a profit.

Those are two different situations. Let's take them one at a time.

First, a capital gains distribution comes from the net profit a mutual fund realizes by selling securities it formerly held as investments. Mutual funds buy and sell investment securities — stocks, bonds and such — in the normal course of their operations. When a fund has more profits than losses doing that, it has a net capital gain.

Most funds are required to distribute that profit to fund shareholders annually. That removes one layer of taxation. The fund does not pay tax on its realized capital gains. The fund's shareholders do, whether they take the capital gains distribution by check or reinvest it to buy more fund shares.

A relatively small number of mutual funds can retain, rather than pay out, their realized capital gains. The fund pays the tax on the gain. Each shareholder then takes a proportionate share of that tax as a credit on his or her return and has to do other complicated tax calculations.

Second, any profit you personally realize by redeeming mutual fund shares at a price higher than you "basis" — cost for tax purposes — is taxable as a capital gain. You can avoid that bite by not redeeming fund shares.

You cannot, however, duck the tax on capital gains distributions declared by your mutual fund.

In 1987, many mutual funds — especially those holding stocks as investments — realized large profits by selling portfolio securities during the first nine months of the year. The funds were required to make capital gains distributions of 1987 net profits at year-end. And shareholders were required to pay tax.

Meanwhile, the October 1987 crash knocked down the value of mutual fund shares. Shareholders who reinvested their capital gains distributions owned more shares, but the total value of each shareholder's account was much lower.

That won't happen to you again, unless the stock market goes through another collapse.

Q. I am 40 years old and would like to start a long-term investment in an income mutual fund, by investing $25 a week for 24 years. How can I get started?

A. Spend some time studying the "Panorama" section of Wiesenberger Investment Companies Service, a fat manual you will find at many public libraries. There, you will find which mutual funds accept relatively small investments. Although most require larger initial investments some take smaller amounts. Frankly, I feel you would be wise to save up and start by investing, say, $1,000 and then adding to it.

And choose a true no-load fund, which has no sales charge when you buy shares, no continuing 12b-1 fee and no rear-end load in the form of a redemption fee or contingent deferred sales charge.

The Wiesenberger manual tells you which funds have investment objectives of producing high dividend income. It also provides data on funds' past performance, other information and fund addresses.

Most mutual funds have toll-free 800 telephone numbers.

Is your employer experiencing 'negative employee retention'?

By MIKE FEINSILBER

WASHINGTON (AP) — In the world uncovered by Professor William Lutz, nobody is ever laid off.

When a company has to fire people, the departing employees are:

- "Dehired."
- Or "non-retained."
- Or "non-renewed."
- Or "selected out."
- Or, if all else fails, "released."

You see, the company is having "work force adjustments." Or "head count reductions." Maybe experiencing "negative employee retention." Or it may be "initiating a career alternative enhancement program."

The company is "restructuring." Or "downsizing."

When General Motors closed a plant in Massachusetts, it announced "a volume-related production schedule adjustment." When Chrysler downsized in Wisconsin, it "initiated a career alternative enhancement program." Some 5,000 workers were non-retained.

In Lutz's book, hospitals don't charge for services; they seek "reimbursement." A patient who dies experienced "negative patient care outcome."

Lutz laughs at these things — if he can laugh through gnashed teeth. He thinks using words to cloak meaning is perverse, pervasive and dangerous to democracy. He prefers his language low-falutin'.

He's written "Doublespeak," a book that looks at the work product of the mind capable of writing a government safety pamphlet that says: "Exit access is that part of a means of egress that leads to an entrance or an exit."

"Doublespeak is not a slip of the tongue, or language used out of ignorance, but is instead a very conscious use of language as a weapon or tool by those in power to achieve their ends at our expense," he writes.

Sometimes doublespeak is so clever it is funny. People riding a roller coaster at an exhibition in Vancouver, Canada, might throw up? No, but Expo 86 said they might experience an "occasional protein sill."

A black-and-white television set is "television with nonmulticolor capability." The death house in New Jersey is the "capital sentences unit." The executioner is an "execution technician." In New York State, death row is the "Unit for Condemned Prisoners."

And solitary confinement cells are "individual behavior adjustment units."

"I have a real sense of outrage that something as beautiful and powerful as language is being perverted," Lutz said in an interview. "I think that language is the most precious invention of human beings."

Lutz, 48, teaches English at Rutgers, the state university of New Jersey, and is chairman of the Committee on Public Doublespeak of the National Council of Teachers of English. He has clipped examples of doublespeak for 16 years.

He makes these points:

- Words needn't be convoluted to be doublespeak. When an advertiser says its product "helps fight the symptoms of dandruff," that's doublespeak because it seeks to evade meaning. "Helps" is a weasel word; it doesn't say how much it contributes to the fight. "Fight" doesn't say it succeeds, just that it tries. "Symptoms of dandruff" aren't dandruff, just a condition that accompanies the malady.
- Government uses doublespeak, but so do businessmen, admen and educators — such as the college officials who shunned the term "raiding" when they told of luring faculty members from other campuses. Instead they engaged in "selective development" at George Mason University, "quality recovery" at Indiana or "preventive retention" at Minnesota.
- Doublespeak doesn't come easily. It is crafted, at great effort and cost, with committees hard at work, staffs meeting, drafts drafted.

When the Reagan administration decided to raise taxes after pledging not to, budget official Lawrence A. Kudlow offered "tax enhancement" to officials seeking an escape euphemism. That was too frank, so "revenue enhancement" was crafted.

And when that term's veils proved too thin, "tax base broadening," "tax base erosion control" and "update the revenue mechanism" were labored out.

"Doublespeak is used by very, very intelligent people who are extremely skillful in using language," says Lutz.

He has isolated four kinds — euphemism, jargon, gobbledygook and inflated language.

Euphemisms are used to hide unpleasantness. He doesn't object to "passed away" but won't permit the Pentagon to get away with "incontinent ordnance" to refer to bombs dropped by error on civilians.

He accepts jargon as verbal shorthand, but objects when it is used to make "the simple appear complex, the ordinary profound, the obvious insightful." He singles out lawyers, like those who described a plane crash as "the involuntary conversion of a 727."

He skews the government for pretentiousness, as in this outfit's name: the Federal Insurance Administration of the Office of Risk Assessment of the Technical Operations Division of the Production Control Branch of the Federal Emergency Management Agency.

And he faults anyone who uses the kind of inflated language that causes car mechanics to call themselves "automotive internists" and used car salesmen to call their product "preowned" or "experienced."

Lutz concedes that it is an old battle. The Pentagon described the Grenada invasion in 1984 as a "pre-dawn vertical insertion"; Julius Caesar described his brutal subjugation of another state as "pacifying" Gaul.

Kennedy, Reagan, Washington still have the write stuff

By JOHN P. WALLACH
Hearst News Service

WASHINGTON — If the stock market strikes you as too volatile and you think the stakes in baseball cards aren't high enough, you might try investing in presidential signatures. The blue chip performers? Jack Kennedy. Ronald Reagan. George Washington.

And a surprising newcomer, Mikhail Gorbachev.

Consider a couple of recent sales. A photograph of Reagan and Gorbachev taken in the White House library and signed by the soviet leader fetched $1,600 at an auction this past weekend in Bethesda, Md. A similar photo signed by both Reagan and Gorbachev sold for $4,000 last month in New York.

Realize, too, that presidential signatures are available for much less — and more.

"A Jimmy Carter signature can be purchased for $50 and letters by Carter, (Richard) Nixon, (and Gerald) Ford can be found for between $100 and $200," according to Barry Goldman, a prominent Washington, D.C. collector.

At the same time, a simple signature by George Washington is still considered so desirable that one sold for $5,500 at Saturday's auction.

Then there was the letter in which Teddy Roosevelt first used the expression "speak softly but carry a big stick." It sold several years ago at a New York auction for $50,000 — a year after being purchased for $3,000.

However, before putting your John Hancock to a check for the purchase of a presidential signature, remember the adage: let the buyer beware.

There is much to learn about what qualifies a presidential signature autograph as a good investment.

TO BEGIN WITH, some presidents simply are considered worth more than others.

But don't assume that the signature of a dead president is worth more than that of a live one. Already, prices for Reagan signatures are worth more than those for Dwight Eisenhower.

Whether a signature is on a card, a letter, a document or is inscribed in a book can have a significant impact on its value.

A number of recent presidents have written memoirs that they have signed in bookstores. The cost to those holding such signatures often is no more than the price of the book and the time they spent waiting in line.

Generally, signatures on handwritten letters are worth more than those on typed letters while signatures penned while a president is in office usually are worth more than those written out of office.

Supply also is a factor. Only 18 letters handwritten by Harry Truman while he was president have surfaced. Hundreds of such letters were penned by George Washington, Thomas Jefferson and Abraham Lincoln.

The content of material to which a presidential signature might be attached can be a significant factor in the establishment of a document's worth.

A copy of John Kennedy's book "Profiles in Courage" with the inscription "To Mrs. Alexander: there is no question of either your profile or your courage" sold recently for $5,000.

At Saturday's auction, a letter scrawled on a yellow legal pad and signed "R.R." for Ronald Reagan before he became president sold for $250.

A typewritten John F. Kennedy letter sold for $1,600, considerably more than letters by John Tyler ($400), William H. Taft ($150), William McKinley ($180), and Nixon ($160).

THE MARKET for Nixon's autograph apparently is not large.

A first edition of Jimmy Carter's memoirs "Keeping Faith," signed in 1982, sold for $120. Two Carter autographs, on notecards, sold together for $50.

A signed copy of Eisenhower's "The White House Years" brought $220. Truman's "Memoirs" sold for $160, while a first edition of Ford's 1979 volume, "A Time To Heal," signed and including the presidential seal mounted on the book's inside cover, sold for $25.

Dale Sorenson, owner of Waverly Auctions in Bethesda, said: "I would put Carter, Nixon and Ford all in the same camp, namely that a lot of material is around and the signatures are not scarce so the only thing that commands great value would be something that is extraordinarily unusual."

Among more recent presidents, Kennedy's signature seems to bring the best prices.

"The mystique is still there," Sorenson said, noting also that "genuine Kennedy material is difficult to obtain because he used an autopen a great deal."

The autopen is a mechanical device that uses real ink and follows the outlines of a real signature to sign documents. It has replaced a past nemesis of autograph collectors — the personal secretary, who often has signed letters for presidents.

Letters Reagan hand wrote in the White House are very popular and command unusually high prices, according to Sorenson, who added that "it's difficult to find (Reagan) material with any great content."

WHAT IS in store for George Bush signatures?

Bush has been in public life for several decades and habitually sends notes to a wide range of friends and acquaintances so there are many Bush signatures in circulation.

Currently, prices on Bush signed materials are at least as high as those of most presidents during their first year of office.

A July 1985 Bush signature, on the outside of an envelope, brought $120 at Saturday's auction in Bethesda.

Can the value of presidential signatures appreciate?

Goldman said that over the last decade, his collection has outperformed certificates of deposit and the rate of inflation.

But he cautioned against investing in autographs if your only motivation is to make money. "Like antiques or fine art, one should only collect if one is passionate about it," Goldman said.

Sorenson agreed. Asked whether autographs are a better investment than stocks and bonds, he said: "Not necessarily. But the interest in autographs is healthy and the bull market in them will continue to be strong."

Woman thinks tournament backers spinning fish story

EDEN, N.C. (AP) — Sue Rakes concedes it may be tough to sit in a boat for an eight-hour bass fishing tournament without a bathroom break, but she doesn't think it should keep her out of the competition.

"I take my fishing seriously, and I deserve the same opportunities as the males," she said. "I don't want to be pushy and feminist, but I want people to understand the situation I'm in. I just want to be treated fairly."

Organizers for a state tournament sponsored by the North Carolina BASS Federation have told her she couldn't participate, partly because they say men want their privacy if they need to go to the bathroom.

Mrs. Rakes has fished her way into the tournament for the past two years. This year, she qualified by finishing 18th out of 122 fishermen who competed in a regional contest.

Lyn Wheatley, the director of the BASS Federation in Montgomery, Ala., said the reason women are banned from state and national tournaments was simple.

"Sometimes when you're out on the water, Mother Nature calls," he said. "Even though we don't encourage fishermen to answer the call, sometimes they do."

Partners are matched randomly for the competition; he said pairing two females in a boat would be a case of discrimination. The state BASS tournament will be held on Lake Norman near Charlotte in April.

Washington spud fanatics find potato artifacts appealing

Meredith and Tom Hughes operate the Potato Museum in Washington D.C. The museum features nearly 2,000 potato artifacts.

AP Laserphoto

WASHINGTON (AP) — If visitors to this museum get the feeling they're being watched by hundreds of eyes, they're right. After all, they're standing in the Potato Museum.

Surely one of the smallest museums in Washington, if not anywhere in the world, the Potato Museum occupies the basement of a yellow-brick rowhouse on Capitol Hill that is the home of Tom and Meredith Hughes, a fun-loving couple of spud fanatics, and their 5-year-old son, Gulliver.

Gulliver's nickname, naturally, is "Tater Tot."

Filling the two tiny basement rooms are 400 items from the Hugheses' collection of 2,000 potato artifacts, from a bronzed, heart-shaped potato donated by a Canadian woman to a North Carolina inventor's digital "Tater Time Clock" which runs on electrical current supplied by the acids in two attached potatoes.

"The goodness of the potato knows no bounds," the couple gushed in a tuber tome they wrote in 1986, titled "The Great Potato Book," extolling the virtues of their favorite vegetable.

Visitors to the private, non-profit museum are welcomed by Mrs. Hughes with a slide show of potato folklore, accompanied by tapes of such top tuber tunes as "Cold Tater Stomp" or Weird Al Yanokovich's "Addicted to Spuds."

Then her husband, a schoolteacher in suburban McLean, Va., invites guests to become couch potatoes and enjoy his videotape of "great moments in potatoes" from Hollywood movies. The scenes include Marilyn Monroe snacking on potato chips in "The Seven-Year Itch" and Richard Dreyfuss making a mountain of his mashed potatoes at the dinner table in "Close Encounters of the Third Kind."

Q: What was the biggest potato ever grown?

A. An Englishman named Thomas Seddal is reputed to have harvested a monster spud weighing 18 pounds, 4 ounces on Feb. 17, 1795.

Q. What was the biggest single serving of mashed potatoes in history?

A. An 18,260-pound mound of instant mashed potatoes, prepared in a cement mixer truck for the annual Potato Bowl football game at Grand Forks, N.D., in 1982.

The museum's shelves are stuffed with potato toys (including a "Spudomatic" air pistol that shoots potato pellets), a burlap potato sack jacket, potato posters, dolls and postage stamps, a 1948 Idaho "World Famous Potatoes" license plate and some 4,000-year-old potatoes preserved in a jar.

There's also a cluster of antique potato chip cans, a basket of deep-fried potato skins woven by the chef at Antoine's Restaurant in New Orleans, and a staggering assortment of implements and kitchen appliances — potato mashers, slicers, peelers, scrubbers, hoes, rakes, planters, baskets, diggers and beetle sprayers.

Hughes says potatoes fueled German rockets in World War II, and once were used as money by the island people of Tristan da Cunha.

Most illegal aliens find jobs in U.S.

N.Y. Times News Service

LOS ANGELES — Despite the government's effort to turn the workplace into the front line in the battle against illegal immigration, most illegal aliens are still able to find jobs in the United States.

Immigration officials and other experts say most companies are trying to comply with the provisions of the 1986 immigration law that prohibit the hiring of illegal aliens.

But many illegal aliens continue to find jobs using fraudulent identity papers.

Most of the rest are forced deeper into the underground economy, where few questions are asked, no records are kept and the potential for workers to be exploited is high.

"Like the undocumented workers already here who didn't qualify for amnesty, the new arrivals have not become unemployable in this country because of employer sanctions," said Wayne A. Cornelius, the director of the Center for U.S.-Mexican Studies at the University of California at San Diego.

"It's just that their range of job options may have been reduced somewhat."

Congress imposed the sanctions in the hope that jobs would become impossible to obtain and therefore no longer be a magnet for illegal immigration.

Two years after the law began to take effect thousands of people continue to enter the country illegally every day.

The ease with which the law is being violated is raising increasing questions about whether migration from Mexico and other economically troubled nations can be deterred by the 1986 law, the Immigration Reform and Control Act.

In addition to granting legal status to many illegal aliens, the law requires all employers to demand that new workers show proof of legal residency or other evidence of their right to work.

Employers who do not or who are found to have knowingly hired an illegal alien are subject to fines of $100 to $10,000 for each violation.

In the most severe cases, the law provides that employers may be jailed for up to six months, although no such sentences have been imposed.

After a period of issuing warnings, the Immigration and Naturalization Service began fining employers in June 1988, and it is prosecuting them more aggressively.

Officials of the immigration service acknowledge that the law has not yet had its intended effect.

But they say there are many promising signs, including a decrease in the number of aliens apprehended while crossing the nation's southern border and reports from illegal aliens themselves that good jobs are harder to obtain.

"People are still coming here and looking for jobs, and some are still finding jobs," said A.D. Moyer, executive associate commissioner of immigration and naturalization. "But it's not as easy as it used to be."

By all accounts, the law is being undermined primarily by the spread of fraudulent Social Security cards, "green cards" signifying alien residency status and other documents widely accepted by employers as proof of the right to work.

Employers are not required to verify the authenticity of the documents, and critics of the law call this a gaping loophole.

"Compliance with the law has come to mean compliance with the paperwork requirements," said Kitty Calavita, a sociology professor at the University of California at Irvine who studies immigration.

"Because of the ready availability of fraudulent documents, employers can comply and still employ the same people they always have."

The law's effect is most visible at places like the intersection of Pico Boulevard and La Brea Avenue in Los Angeles, where dozens of illegal aliens wait every morning for employers seeking day laborers for construction, gardening, painting and cleaning jobs that generally pay less than $5 an hour.

Standing on the corner one recent morning, Francisco Javier Saldivar, a 38-year-old Mexican, who arrived here about two months ago, said the law is undoubtedly having an impact, but not enough to stop the flow of immigrants.

Saldivar, who also spent time in the United States last year and in 1980, said:

"It was much easier then. Now it's hard to find work. In 1980 I could make $500 in two weeks, and now I'm making $4.25 an hour. I make about $300 a month because I'll work one day but not the next."

"It's less secure," Saldivar said. "Still, lots of people keep coming because life is very tough in Mexico."

'Dirty' videos helping Amarillo water, sewer department

AMARILLO (AP) — Want to see a dirty video? The guys in Amarillo's water and sewer department can show you several.

But the subject matter may not be exactly what you have in mind.

Water and sewer foreman Bobby Gil spends his days behind the viewfinder of a 22-inch torpedo-shaped video camera that he sends coursing through sewer mains.

The view of Amarillo's seamy underbelly that the costly little camera provides saves the city time and money when repairs are needed, he said.

First, Gil and his helper, utility worker Don Killough, clean out the pipeline and run the cables necessary to pull the camera through it.

The camera is on skids resembling skis that hold it in the center of the pipe, Gil said. The bigger the diameter of the main, the bigger the skis, sort of like platform shoes.

As Killough sits at one end of the main watching the winch that pulls the camera, Gil retires into a van at the other end to watch the alley's featured flick.

Because the van looks somewhat like an undercover surveillance vehicle, Gil said residents venturing into the alley often ask what he's doing.

So he does a lot of explaining, often showing them the video monitor to prove his story.

Smiling, he said he's been tempted a few times to tell youngsters that he's looking for alligators in the pipes.

"I tell them it's an alligator zapper," Gil said, adding, "I think the people of Amarillo don't have to worry about that. I've never seen one down there."

Gil said it's important for the camera to "go with the flow" in the sewer line.

Filming upstream, he said, can cause sewage water to rush toward the camera lens, obstructing his view of the pipes.

Gil looks for tree roots jutting through the pipes, cracks or any other types of obstruction or damage.

"There's a root," Gil said, pointing at a gangly plant tapping into the main. "Eventually, it'll clog up (the pipe) and that's when the people start calling in."

When Gil sees an area in need of repair, he videotapes it, marking the location and other information needed to find the spot from aboveground.

The camera eliminates the guesswork that used to be involved in finding trouble spots when residents or businesses made complaints, Gil said.

Man tapes pieces of Texas' past

LATEXO, Texas (AP) — Henry Kjellander's pained expression grows as his questions are greeted with a stream of mostly negative responses.

"You don't know about Oveta Culp Hobby...Amos 'N' Andy...Glenn McCarthy...Edith Parker...Jesse Jones...the Battleship Texas?" Henry Kjellander asks in disbelief.

Kjellander grimaces, shaking his head. For a man who's made restoring audio tapes of Texas' greatest historical events and heroes his passion for the past 40-odd years, the ignorance is more than he can stand.

He spews forth facts and anecdotes like an Old Faithful of history.

For instance, did you know that Mrs. Hobby, a Killeen native, established the first Women's Army in 1945?

Or that Edith Parker, a Texas secretary, drafted the declaration of war against Japan in 1941?

Or that the 1947 Texas City explosion was more powerful than the blasts of the atomic bombings of Hiroshima and Nagasaki?

Or that Texas is the home of the world's largest wooden structure, the Hitchcock Blimp Base, and airplane, the Spruce Goose, built by Howard Hughes?

Kjellander does.

His makeshift studio workshop contains more than 28,000 hours of audio tape, from which he has culled enough information for a wide collection of historical tapes. The topics of his tapes are broad, ranging from Texas' involvement in World War II to the history of the Battleship Texas to a radio talk by Jesse Jones, a Texan member of Franklin D. Roosevelt's Cabinet, to a 1954 San Jacinto Day speech by Sen. Joseph McCarthy.

He also saved enough old recordings from junk dealers and radio stations to warrant a 12-tape album of "Saturday at the Shamrock" shows, the only national radio broadcast originating from Texas.

The show was broadcast for four years in the 1940s and '50s from the Shamrock Hilton Hotel in Houston. At various times the show featured entertainers such as Burns and Allen, Jack Benny, Liberace, the Marx Brothers, Mel Torme, Rudy Vallee, Chill Wills and the Tommy Dorsey orchestra. Humphrey Bogart even stopped for an appearance one night during which he made his singing debut.

Kjellander has spent countless hours and dollars preserving these pieces of Texas' past.

"It's like looking for gold," he said. "You've got to move a mountain before you find a couple of ounces. I had to go through a mountain of recordings before I found these."

Now that the collection is substantial and well-organized, Kjellander wants to share some of the Lone Star State's history and nostalgia with a new generation. He is marketing his tapes to libraries through his company, Audio Archives.

"The only way it can be saved is to put it into the libraries," he said.

Kjellander soon will begin approaching public school systems with the same offer. He believes his tapes could be a valuable teaching tool in the classroom.

"When you have history like this, it's so darn interesting to find them and to let young people listen to them," Kjellander said. "This is part of the heritage of Texas. The schools are finally getting around to feeling that we need more Texas history."

Because most of the history on the tapes comes straight from the mouths of the people who made it, they are more valuable than other types of resource materials, Kjellander said.

"We're taught in college that primary source material comes from newspapers and magazines," he said. "But that is not primary. These are primary resource materials. This is not only exactly what the man said, but how he said it. A speech is made to listen to, not to be read. It's so important to listen to the original speech."

Kjellander, who calls radio and history his two loves, is a strong advocate of the advantages of his historical tapes, which he says outweigh those of visual mediums such as television.

"I don't think you're using your mind when you're watching audio-visual," he said. "Visuals are good items to reinforce what you've already learned."

For instance, he said, when people read or hear accounts of a story on the radio they must visualize all the details of the events in their minds. Because television spoon-feeds its viewers, it doesn't stimulate the mind, he said.

"When you're watching television, it's all there," he said. "Your mind does nothing."

Phyllis Dunham, executive director of the Texas Abortion Rights Action League, describes the organization's plan to raise money to fight candidates who oppose abortion at a press conference Thursday in Austin. TARAL plans to identify and register voters who favor abortion rights.

Anti-abortionist denies issue is hidden 'giant'

AUSTIN (AP) — A leading abortion opponent says a pro-choice group's vow to fight anti-abortion candidates in 1990 with money and votes is just a scare tactic.

"I have always heard that there was some sort of abortion giant in the state of Texas, just below the surface, waiting to be unleashed — but I haven't seen it yet, and I doubt this will be it," said Bill Price, president of Dallas-based Texans United for Life.

"I think it's a lot of hype and a lot of hoopla to try to scare politicians," he said.

The Texas Abortion Rights Action League announced plans Wednesday to raise $250,000 and mobilize 250,000 voters for a "1990 Freedom Campaign" to secure a pro-choice majority in the Legislature.

"This campaign has a single message for Texas legislators: If you take away Texans' rights, we'll take away your jobs," said Phyllis Dunham, executive director of TARAL.

The group, which plans to establish a statewide political action committee, said it specifically would work to oust 10 abortion foes, who are to be announced later.

The new offensive follows this summer's U.S. Supreme Court decision allowing states to impose certain restrictions on abortion, Ms. Dunham told a news conference.

"The state has become a battle ground for individual freedom," she said. "We've always worked to protect our friends, but this time there's a difference. We're going to do more. We're going to work to defeat our enemies."

Price said it would be politically risky for TARAL to name the lawmakers it wants to drive from office, "because if they don't knock these people out, we'll have something definite to measure their success by."

Being on such a "hit list" could help some candidates in some parts of the state, he added.

Texans United for Life is developing its own campaign for 1990, Price said. He said the group has been involved in political campaigns for years but generally does not divulge money-raising plans.

"We'll let our actions speak for themselves," Price said.

Anti-abortion group ordered to pay damages

AUSTIN (AP) — An Austin jury has ordered an anti-abortion group to pay $587,000 in damages to an Austin abortion clinic that was the frequent target of the group's protests, but lawyers for both sides say it is unlikely that the clinic will ever get any of the money.

The organization has no assets, making it virtually impossible for the clinic to collect the damage, lawyers for both sides said Thursday following the verdict.

Karen LaFayette, administrative assistant of The Ladies Center, said the real victory cannot be measured in money.

"The goal was to stop the harassing," said Ms. LaFayette. "I definitely think this is what we need to stop this from happening again."

Austin Rescue leader Rex Moses was also claiming victory and said the decision would not deter the anti-abortion movement "one iota."

The center was one of three local clinics targeted in the past year by Moses and his group.

Hundreds of anti-abortionists picketed the center on several occasions from October 1988 through August 1989. The protesters formed human blockades to stop people from entering the building.

The protesters refused to move when told to do so by police and were arrested. More than 500 criminal trespass cases related to the protests are pending in Travis County courts.

A state judge issued a permanent injunction against the group in August, barring them from blocking entry to the clinic and from harassing patients and staff members.

The injunction was issued as part of the same suit that resulted in the jury trial that led to the award to the clinic Thursday.

The suit, tried before District Judge Jerry Dellana, asked that a jury set the amount of damages.

Jurors deliberated less than three hours Thursday before recommending the group be ordered to pay $44,136.62 in actual and $543,500 in punitive damages.

Clinic attorney Charles Johanson said this may be the first time in Texas that an anti-abortion group has been ordered to pay damages stemming from its protests.

"I think this sends the message out to the rest of the people in Texas," Johanson said. "There's no question that it will deter anybody that has property from running the risk of getting awards like this against them."

Jury foreman Richard Strickland said jurors worked their way down from a figure of $1 million in damages and wanted the decision to show protesters that they would face strict consequences if they damaged a business.

"If it doesn't deter them, maybe it will teach someone else," Strickland said.

Moses said he believed the decision would be a "boost in the arm" to protesters because there were discoveries made during the trial that he believed meant more than the judgment.

Clinic officials testified that the group's action had kept 208 abortions from being performed.

"This is the proudest day of my life," Moses said. "We prevented the killing of 208 children."

Brownsville teachers rally to support suit filed over cuts in health benefits

BROWNSVILLE (AP) — The Brownsville Independent School District should be prohibited from scrapping a health plan for teachers that paid 80 percent of medical expenses after a $200 deductible was met; three teachers' organizations say.

Dozens of public school teachers rallied at the Cameron County Courthouse Thursday to call attention to a lawsuit filed in 107th state District Court by the Association of Brownsville Educators, the Texas State Teachers Association and the National Education Association.

The suit asks for an injunction to prevent the district from reducing its health insurance benefits to teachers.

The lawsuit claims that reductions in health care coverage and benefits approved Sept. 19 breach the employment contracts of district employees.

Damages for teachers who are local union members also are being sought.

When teachers employed by the Brownsville ISD signed employment contracts for the current school year, the district had a self-insured employee health benefit plan in place. The plan provided coverage for 80 percent of the first $5,000 in medical expenses, after a deductible of $200, and would pay 100 percent of expenses beyond $5,000, with a lifetime maximum of $1 million, the lawsuit said.

At its Sept. 19 meeting, the school board voted to reduce the plan's benefits so that only 60 percent of the first $10,000 in expenses would be covered, with a deductible of $500. The $1 million lifetime limit remained in effect, but other benefits and coverage were cut, the lawsuit states.

On a $10,000 claim, a teacher's expense "has risen from a $1,200 out-of-pocket cost to $4,500 out of pocket, so we're looking at over a $3,000 jump in what the employees will have to pay," said Raye Lokey, TSTA representative from the organization's Harlingen office.

"We've been to the board numerous times to try and ask them to do better by their employees and they simply refuse to do it and have been silent on the issue, so we feel that this is our only alternative we have at this point in time," Ms. Lokey added.

New system may bring clean water to colonias' homes

SAN ELIZARIO (AP) — One of the most common questions that Geno Cobos hears when neighbors see the giant steel tank and pump in her yard is: When will they get one?

Mrs. Cobos is helping local officials test a new water purification and sewage treatment system that uses an organic liquid called AG-14 to clean water before it is discharged into drainage lines.

Mrs. Cobos, her husband and two children live in a trailer home in San Elizario, an unincorporated community south of El Paso. Like many of her neighbors in the "colonias" of San Elizario, she has lived without running water or a sewer system in her trailer home.

Many colonia residents use contaminated water from backyard wells. Some without sewage systems dig a hole in the back yard, said Anthony Parra, spokesman for San Elizario Independent School District and project director.

The water in Mrs. Cobos' yard, before she received the water purification system, was salty and high in nitrates, said Howard Applegate, a retired professor of the University of Texas at El Paso.

"You have high nitrogen and children drink the nitrogen, they turn blue," Applegate said.

But with a $28,000 grant from the Meadows Foundation, a philanthropic organization based in Dallas, the water purification system was built in Mrs. Cobos' yard.

The project began three years ago when the school district officials, who were examining students' low testing grades, wondered whether contaminated water had an effect on children's learning ability, Parra said.

"Most of our wells are highly contaminated," he said.

The system built in Mrs. Cobos' yard cost $4,500, but Parra said project officials hope to reduce the cost to $1,000 so colonia residents can build their own.

If the system is effective, project officials hope to build a 10-home unit in the next three months, Parra said.

The system was shown to people attending a convention on sanitation in the colonias on Thursday as an example of a low-cost, low-technology solution to the colonias sanitation problems.

STATE IN BRIEF

Plant fire called no danger to town

GRAND PRAIRIE (AP) — Plumes of black smoke billowed from a plastics warehouse in this Dallas suburb early today, but firemen said it posed no danger to residents in the Grand Prairie-Arlington area.

The fire erupted about 11 p.m. Thursday at the Poly-America Corp., a firm that warehouses plastic bags and other plastic items, according to Assistant Fire Chief James Smith of the Grand Prairie Fire Department.

No one was injured and Smith said firemen had not been able to determine what caused the fire. Company officials had no immediate damage estimate, Smith added.

Fire Lt. Mike Taylor said the roof had caved in and that about 1 million pounds of plastic pellets were slowly burning inside. He said it probably would burn at least two days, until the pellets are gone.

The smoke was visible five miles away and fire was visible from about two miles.

It was not believed to pose any danger to area residents, Smith said.

"It could be noxious if you were right in the middle of it," Smith said, noting that the wind was blowing the smoke towards a 700-acre area of vacant land.

The smoke was also blowing in the direction of Dallas-Fort Worth International Airport, but Smith said firemen didn't believe it would be thick enough when it reached the airport area to pose any problems.

Chemical plants 'safe'

HOUSTON (AP) — Despite this week's deadly Phillips Petroleum Co. plant explosion, industry representatives say the chemical business has one of the best records in manufacturing.

"The chemical industry is probably the safest industry in which to work," said Harry Whitworth, president of the Texas Chemical Council and its related organization, the Association of Chemical Industries of Texas.

Whitworth said Thursday that one reason the industry has a good record is because officials are aware of the materials and hazardous conditions involved. Those conditions include high temperatures and pressures.

"When you're dealing in high temperatures and pressures, you put safety at the top of the list," he said.

"When you look at business from a manufacturing standpoint, the chemical industry is in the top one or two for safety," said Larry Wright, TCC chairman-elect and vice president of Texas operations for Dow Chemical Co.

Phillips' plastic plant explosion in Pasadena Monday killed at least seven people and injured 124, six critically. Another 15 people remained missing and presumed dead Thursday.

Electrical box explodes

CHILDRESS (AP) — Officials continue to investigate why an electrical box exploded at a hospital, burning two maintenance workers badly and forcing the building's evacuation.

None of the 15 patients at Childress General Hospital were injured when the outdoor electrical box exploded about 1:20 p.m. Wednesday, officials said. But maintenance supervisor Archie Howell and assistant Richard Proffitt were sent by helicopter to Lubbock General Hospital.

Howell, 61, was in serious condition Thursday with second- and third-degree burns over 40 percent of his body. Proffitt, 58, was in satisfactory condition with second-degree burns over 20 percent of his body.

Hospital administrator Frances Smith said the building's lights were flickering, so the men were sent to check the 6-foot by 4-foot electrical box. The steel box exploded as they were working on it.
