Panel pledges funds to buy land for SSC

By RAMONA NYE
Staff Writer

The Garden City "supercollider" site was given a boost Thursday, after the Midland Industrial Foundation board of directors committed themselves to raising $2 million of the up to $5 million needed to buy land in the proposed area.

West Texas Chamber of Commerce Superconducting Supercollider steering committee vice-chairman Joe Kloesel said, "It's a definite boost. That's another way we're showing we're serious about that thing and we're after it. The DOE (U.S. Department of Energy) is asking for inducements and this is one of them."

DOE is expecting to get free land where the lab is set down.

The industrial foundation members will seek the $2 million from Midland's businesses and individuals if DOE chooses the Garden City site.

"Basically we feel if our site is selected by DOE for the supercollider, we will have no problem just raising that money in the community," said Steve Hardin, manager of the Chamber of Commerce's economic development department.

The Texas National Laboratory Commission is examining up to 12 state sites and plans to propose two to DOE. A final site selection will be made by DOE in January 1989.

Industrial foundation past president Doug Henson said the $2 million could probably be raised in less than two months, because benefits would far outweigh the costs to the private sector.

No industrial bonds will be issued to buy the land for the site, Hardin said.

About 8,000 acres are needed for the 52-mile underground tunnel, where scientists will examine colliding subatomic particles. Right of way will be needed on another 3,000 acres, Hardin said.

The proposed rural lab site, about 40 miles southeast of Midland, is made up of about 56 percent range land and 44 percent cropland, Hardin said.

Loeffler, Butler leading Bush's campaign in Texas

By JIM WARREN
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Surrogates for Vice President George Bush, who leads his presidential competitors in organization and the polls, announced his Texas campaign co-chairmen and the support of most of GOP legislators.

Former West Texas Congressman Tom Loeffler, one of Bush's state campaign chairmen, spoke at the Capitol while flanked by dozens of Texas lawmakers, all wearing Bush For President buttons. Loeffler said all Republican Texas Congressman — except Rep. Beau Boulter, who is organizing New York Rep. Jack Kemp's Texas campaign — have committed to Bush or will in the near future.

U.S. Sen. Phil Gramm, R-Texas, has not formally endorsed a candidate yet, but the vice president's son, George W. Bush of Midland, said his father will talk to Gramm soon about joining their team.

Penny Butler, a veteran political operative from Houston, will serve as Bush's other Texas campaign co-chairman. Butler has worked for President Reagan's campaigns several times and has supported Bush in the past.

Loeffler and the younger Bush emphasized the vice president's experience in the myriad of government and political jobs he has held and said they were not overly concerned about Bush's slip in the polls caused by the Iran-contra affair.

The vice president's son said Bush supported Reagan and will not apologize for his role in the controversy, nor will he divulge what he discussed with the president and when they discussed it.

Kansas Sen. Bob Dole will be Bush's stiffest competition at the outset, the younger Bush said. Bush's slip in the polls actually could help his campaign, because the expectations will not be as high in the Iowa and New Hampshire caucuses, the younger Bush suggested.

Besides Bush, Kemp and Dole, former Deleware Gov. Pete DuPont, General Alexander Haig and preacher Pat Robertson also are seeking the GOP nomination.

Most political observers expect all presidential candidates to spend more time in Texas this election to take advantage of the state's first-ever involvement in the Super Tuesday southern regional primary on March 3.

Previously, the Texas primaries were in May, when many candidates had dropped out of the contest or run out of money.

Loeffler has spent the last several weeks rounding up support for Bush among Texas legislators. Rep. Tom Craddick, R-Midland, also has been active in signing up House members for Bush.

Only one Texas lawmaker, Rep. Bill Ceverha, R-Plano, has announced he will support another candidate, Kemp.

The Rev. Jerry Falwell, left, and evangelist Rex Humbard share the spotlight at a PTL press conference. Please see related stories, Page 2E.

Bakker may be dismissed; Audit planned

FORT MILL, S.C. (AP) — The Rev. Jim Bakker's church says the evangelist might face dismissal for his 1980 sexual liaison, while the Rev. Jerry Falwell says the PTL board has agreed to an audit of the ministry's finances.

Falwell, Bakker's hand-picked successor to the PTL evangelical empire, also said the Pentecostal minister and his wife, Tammy Faye, will be kept on the PTL payroll.

However, Falwell added, if Bakker tries to retake the presidency of the group, the board would likely resign in protest. He said "the credibility problem that we now have would be an impossible challenge for us."

Falwell, who presided for the first time over the PTL board Thursday, refused to say how much Bakker and his wife, who is undergoing treatment in Palm Springs, Calif., for drug dependency, will get. Their combined salaries were $72,800 in 1979, the last year the ministry revealed how much they were paid.

Texas population growing, but not at boom rate

COLLEGE STATION (AP) — The state's population continues to grow, but only about half as fast as it did during the boom years of 1980-82, according to a report charting Texas' growth.

Most of the increase has been natural, or simply more births than deaths, said demographer Steve Murdock, professor and head of the Rural Sociology Department at Texas A&M University.

The study, released Thursday, was conducted by the Texas Agricultural Experiment Station for the Texas State Data Center. Preliminary figures for 1986 suggest population growth may be stabilizing, the report said.

"The state's population is still growing. It grew from 14.2 million people in 1980 to 16.4 million in 1985, but the rate of growth has slowed substantially," Murdock said.

"In 1980-81 and 1981-82, a period of very rapid growth in Texas, the annual rate of increase was about 3.6 percent per year. But for 1984-85, the growth rate was about 1.8 percent, or about half of what it was in the boom years of 1980-82."

The study shows that 17 of the state's 26 metropolitan statistical areas experienced net out-migration between 1984 and 1985. Six of the metro areas experienced population declines because natural increase was not enough to offset exits between 1984 and 1985.

The population trends in Texas's 254 counties show that 146 counties had population decreases during the 1960s. By contrast, during the 1970s, only 44 had declines in population and in 1980-82 only 41 counties lost population.

The trend reversed in 1982-84, with 68 counties showing decreases in their population. From 1984-85 the number of counties showing declining populations increased to 110.

In terms of net out-migration, 180 counties experienced out-migration in the 1960s; 84 in the 1970s; 57 from 1980-82; 93 from 1982-84 and then 147 from 1984-85.

"These estimates, which were obtained from the Census Bureau, demonstrate that the slowdown in population growth is pervasive throughout the state," Murdock said.

Causes for those patterns appear to be largely economic and it seems unlikely that growth will return to the levels of the 1970s and early 1980s until the state's economy shows a substantial recovery, he said.

During the 1970s, net in-migration averaged about 177,000 people per year but swelled to 364,000 from 1981-82. For 1984-85, it dropped to about 101,000 people.

Even at 1.8 percent per year, the growth rate for Texas is substantially higher than the nation as a whole, which has been expanding at about 1 percent per year. One of the reasons for Texas' above-average rate is that its rate of natural increase has held steady at about 1.2 percent per year during the 1980s.

"Now, about two thirds of the growth is from natural increase with only about a third resulting from net in-migration," he said.

Wives pleading for release of hostages held in Lebanon

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — The day after Moslem extremists released a videotape of her husband, the pregnant wife of American hostage Jesse Turner today pleaded as an Arab for his freedom and the release of three other teachers.

In a five-minute videotaped message, Turner urged the United States and Israel to accept a prisoner swap to free fellow hostage Alann Steen, who he said was dying.

"We're living a new bitter time," the bearded and bespectacled Turner said. "We urge our wives and families to go to America and Israel and press there because the keys of our issue are there. Moving in Lebanon is useless."

Today, Badr Turner, a Lebanese, said that as an Arab, she could do nothing to help secure the kidnappers' demand for releasing prisoners held by Israel.

"Being pregnant, I badly need Jesse," she said in an interview with The Associated Press. "I plead with the kidnappers to be humanitarian and have mercy. Please release Jesse and the other teachers."

The four educators at Beirut University College were abducted on campus in Moslem west Beirut on Jan. 24 by gunmen posing as police.

They are Turner, 39, of Boise, Idaho; Steen, 47, of Boston; Robert Polhill, 53, of New York City; and Mithileshwar Singh, 60, an Indian and a resident alien of the United States.

Islamic Jihad for the Liberation of Palestine claimed their abduction.

The only American among the four wives is Virginia Rose, Steen's wife. The wives were interviewed at the college.

The kidnappers said on Monday that Steen was ailing and might die within 10 days. They offered to free him if Israel releases 100 Arab prisoners.

Israel has refused and the United States said it would not pressure Israel.

"We are helpless," Mrs. Turner said today. "I am an Arab and Mrs. Feryal Polhill is an Arab. We cannot go to Israel."

Mrs. Polhill, a Lebanese, said: "I am of Palestinian descent. How would it be possible for me to go to Israel? I do not even consider going to Israel because it is against my belief in the Arab cause.

"The only thing we are capable of doing is to ask the kidnappers to release our husbands.

Police dig for evidence in yard, basement of Philadelphia house

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Police continued digging for body parts today in the basement, yard and garage of a house where half-naked women were chained to a sewer pipe and human limbs were found in a freezer.

The investigation focused on the run-down home of Gary Heidnik, 43. He was charged with one count of murder and four counts of rape, kidnapping and related offenses against the women, who said he had fed them human flesh.

District Attorney Ronald Castille said he also intended to charge Heidnik in the murder of a second woman, who was butchered.

A captive who escaped led police early Wednesday to Heidnik's north Philadelphia home, where officers discovered three women naked from the waist down. The women, who had been kept captive for up to four months, told police they were chained to a basement sewer pipe.

'Blow Out' to cap oil observance

From Staff Reports

A week of energy appreciation will be capped Saturday with the Permian Basin Petroleum Association's first annual "Blow Out."

Charles Perry, president of the PBPA, and Harry Spannaus, executive vice president, both agree that this could be the start of an annual event along the lines of Mardi Gras, the Permian Basin Oil Show, or the festival in San Antonio.

Events get under way at noon at the Holiday Inn Country Villa Convention Center with a battle of the bands.

Visitors can take in karate and gymnastics demonstrations, sample brisket at the brisket cook-off judging at 1:30, and enjoy dancing demonstrations by the Susie Hitchcock Dancers and High Sky Square Dancers.

The afternoon will also be highlighted by the "World's Ugliest Roughneck" contest at 3 p.m. Winners of the battle of the bands, cook-off and roughneck contests will be announced at 4 p.m., along with trophy presentations and raffle drawings.

Outdoor events end at 5:30 p.m., but doors open at 6 p.m. for the concert and dance by Gene Watson. Music and dancing get under way at 8 p.m.

Rocket debris washing up near shuttle launch pad

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — Security patrols today found on a beach two large pieces of the rocket that was blown up after it apparently was struck by lightning in another disaster for a space agency still reeling from the Challenger explosion.

The pieces washed ashore near a space shuttle launch pad. NASA did not immediately identify the specific parts found.

The wreckage will be examined for clues to what caused the unmanned Atlas-Centaur rocket to tumble 51 seconds after launch Thursday. The vehicle was blown apart, along with its military communications satellite payload, by a radio signal to prevent it from careening into populated coastal areas. Flaming debris plunged into the Atlantic about three miles offshore.

A videotape released by NASA clearly shows a large lightning bolt descending from the area of the rocket, hidden in clouds, and striking the launch pad about the time the vehicle exploded.

NASA did not immediately place blame for the failure and was expected to name a review board today to investigate the accident, which ended a streak of seven launch successes.

The failure ruined a $161 million mission, with the rocket valued at $78 million and the satellite at $83 million. The satellite was to have joined a network of five communications payloads to link military forces worldwide.

The 137-foot rocket lifted off in a rain storm at 4:22 p.m. EST and went into a cloud bank.

NASA launch commentator George Diller said the rocket appeared to be flying normally, "a very clean bird," when he suddenly announced, "We have lost all telemetry data.... We have lost control of the vehicle. We appear to have lost the vehicle."

He reported later the rocket had shot out of control and was blown apart, at an altitude of 14,250 feet, by a radio signal that detonated explosive charges in it.

The explosion was not visible from the ground but observers heard a muffled blast.

Although launch officials were reluctant to place blame, launch director James L. Womack said, "Certainly, there was a possibility there was a lightning strike in the area. We've asked the range to check all their intensity meters to determine if there was one."

Launch rules prohibit liftoff if there is lightning within five miles. Lightning on the edge of the five-mile zone held up launch for 14 minutes, said John W. Gibb, manager of NASA's Atlas-Centaur project office.

"At the time of the launch, we were in a solid go as far as the weather was concerned," Gibb told a news conference.

The satellite was to have joined a network of five fleet satellite communications, or FltSatCom, spacecraft that enable the Pentagon and Presidential Command Network to maintain contact with land, sea and air forces. Each has 23 ultra high frequency channels.

The first four satellites in the series have operated beyond their five-year design lives. The fifth, launched in December, was the first of a group, including the payload lost Thursday, intended to replace the earlier craft.

A seventh FltSatCom is scheduled for launching in June but that may be delayed because of Thursday's accident.

NASA's suspicion of lightning causing the rocket failure was supported by two Florida experts, the Melbourne newspaper Florida Today, reported in today's editions.

There were more than 2,000 lightning flashes bombarding the state at the time the rocket exploded, said Rodney Bent, who designed a lightning tracking device for the Department of Defense. That fact, coupled with the rocket's altitude at the time of the explosion, suggests lightning was the culprit, he said.

While emphasizing their speculation was based on incomplete information, Bent and retired Air Force meteorologist Hank Brandli, who was tracking weather conditions at the time of the launch, offered similar accounts of how the rocket may have triggered lightning.

Study indicates prostitutes more likely to get AIDS from drug use

ATLANTA (AP) — A federal study of prostitutes in seven U.S. cities indicates they are more likely to be infected with the AIDS virus from drug use than from sexual activity.

"Most of the women in our study were infected through sharing needles during IV drug use," said Deborah Deppe, of the national Centers for Disease Control, which released a report on the study Thursday.

Of 835 prostitutes tested, 98 showed exposure to human immunodeficiency virus, which causes acquired immune deficiency syndrome. None of those 98 actually had the disease, said Deppe, a public health adviser in the CDC's AIDS program.

The report said half of 564 prostitutes responding to a questionnaire said they had a history of IV drug use. Of that smaller sample, 47 of 62 who tested positive reported IV drug use. Reports from the remainder of the sample had not reached the CDC by March 10.

"It's looking like IV drug abuse seems to be the greater risk for these women," Deppe said, "but you can't discount heterosexual transmission."

"What makes them at risk is they're using drugs and sharing needles and having unprotected sex with multiple partners," said Deppe.

The report also said prostitutes were no more likely to be infected with the virus than other women in the same area who engaged in high-risk activity.

"The problem of HIV infection among prostitutes is not as great as people might believe," Deppe said.

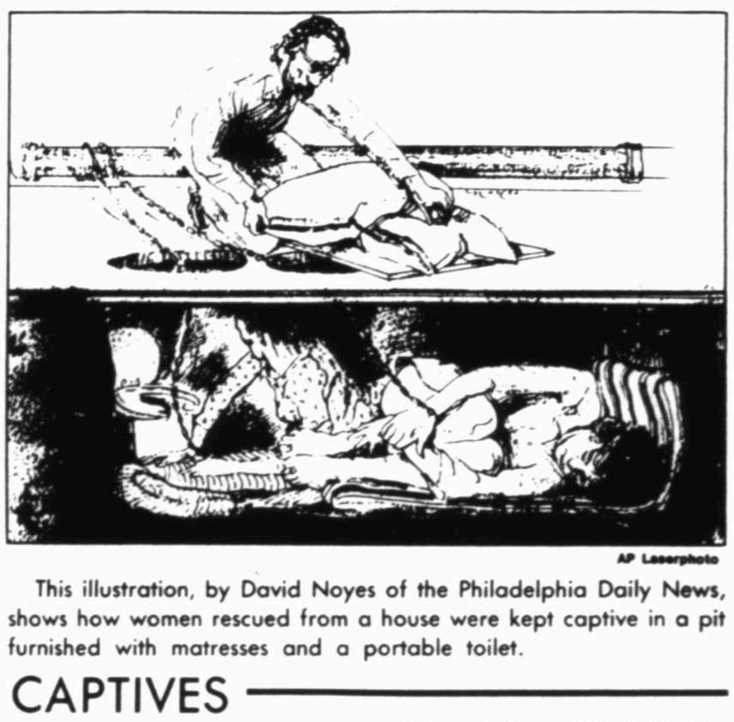

The CDC says using condoms can greatly reduce the risk of catching the disease during sexual intercourse, and Deppe said the survey supports that advice.

The study focused on prostitutes in Atlanta; Colorado Springs, Colo.; Las Vegas, Nev.; Los Angeles; Miami; Newark-Jersey City-Paterson, N.J., and San Francisco.

AIDS, transmitted through blood and other body fluids, is most often passed by sexual contact, especially among homosexual males. There have been cases, however, of the disease being transmitted between heterosexuals. It also can be transmitted by contaminated intravenous needles shared by drug users and from mothers to children at or before birth.

AIDS destroys the body's ability to fight infection, leaving individuals susceptible to other fatal disease.

Since it was discovered in the United States in 1981, 33,158 cases have been reported, with 19,192 deaths. Deppe said 2,227 of the cases were in women, but she did not have death rates for women.

CAPTIVES

Later Wednesday, police found the partly buried body of Deborah Dudley in a remote area of Wharton State Forest in southern New Jersey and charged Heidnik with murder. Miss Dudley also used the last name of Johnson, police said.

Cyril Brown, who lived with Heidnik for a time at the house, was charged with murder, rape, kidnapping and conspiracy in the death of the second woman, Sandra Lindsay, his girlfriend for about three years, police said.

Parts of Ms. Lindsay's body were found in the kitchen, authorities said.

The two men were being held without bail today.

Heidnik's father, Michael F. Heidnik, 74, said Thursday his son should be hanged.

"I'll even pull the rope," said the elder Heidnik, from a Cleveland, Ohio, suburb. He said he had not seen his son in 20 years.

Police said the body of Ms. Lindsay, 24, was identified through interviews with the captives, who ranged in age from 18 to 26.

An autopsy performed Thursday determined that Miss Dudley, 23, was electrocuted in water the night of March 19 and her body kept chilled until early Sunday, "when it was dumped in the woods," said George Kerns, spokesman for Camden County Prosecutor Samuel Asbell.

One of the captives told police she was forced to hold a live electrical wire to Miss Dudley's handcuffs while the victim stood in a water-filled pit.

The woman said she dropped the wires, but Heidnik picked them up and completed the circuit until the girl's body appeared lifeless, according to the Philadelphia Daily News, which quoted an affidavit filed by police seeking a search warrant.

Another captive said Ms. Lindsay died after hitting her head on the basement floor. The captive said Heidnik lured her to his house three days before Christmas with a flashy car and offers of money for clothes and restaurants.

The three captives found Wednesday were treated for malnutrition, dehydration and sexual abuse, authorities said. They told police they were fed the ground remains of Ms. Lindsay along with dog food and bread.

Detectives with the Camden County prosecutor's office continued searching the forest Thursday, but found nothing. A spokesman said late Thursday night a decision had not been made whether to look further in the 108,000-acre state park.

Police also dug Thursday in the basement of a house in west Philadelphia where Heidnik lived until 1976, but found "nothing of any value at all," said Sgt. Daniel Rosenstein.

The current owner, Doralene Davis, said she found an old refrigerator sitting on a board that covered a hole in the basement. When she pushed back the board, she said, "We saw what looked like a grave."

She said also she found a shooting range in the attic after buying the house from Heidnik.

Rosenstein would not elaborate on the condition of the basement except to say they found a hole in the floor.

Records show Heidnik was accused of imprisoning a young retarded woman in June 1978. While serving a sentence of three to seven years, he spent several months under psychiatric care, according to records.

BUSH

Bush went to school on the East coast and founded a Midland oil company before moving to Houston, where he successfully ran for Congress. While Bush's legal residence is Texas, many have criticized him and some have challenged his status as a Texan.

Democratic lawmakers also have begun jumping into the presidential endorsement arena and many more are expected as the campaign begins to heat up.

Sen. Ray Farabee, D-Wichita Falls, will support former Colorado Sen. Gary Hart.

Farabee was active in Hart's 1984 campaign as well.

House Speaker Pro Tem Hugo Berlanga also endorsed Hart, and several other Democratic senators say they probably will go with Hart. Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby, who campaigned in 1984 with Ohio Sen. John Glenn, has said he is leaning toward Hart, who is popular with many Texans for his support of an oil import fee.

The younger Bush said his father probably will not support an oil import fee but will push for "price stabilization" in the oil industry.

SSC

Property appraiser Robert Cook of Big Spring said farmland in the area is selling for up to $350 an acre and range land for not more than $200 an acre.

Dave Dorchester, a member of the West Texas SSC engineering committee said, the lab site land is owned by about 60 different families.

The Midland foundation is "encouraging" Big Spring, Odessa and San Angelo to make a "proportionate" commitment to buy land, Henson said.

The foundation will also begin a two-week fundraising campaign April 7 to reimburse the city's $50,000 contribution for SSC lobbying expenses. Midland, Odessa, Big Spring and San Angelo have each donated $50,000 to pay for a lobbying team.

The Midland industrial foundation is a non-profit corporation formed in 1987 to aid in the development and diversification of the city through the buying and selling of industrial land and buildings, Hardin said.

Iowa town buying up magazine

KALONA, Iowa (AP) — John Wallerich usually sells around 35 copies of People magazine a week, but this week he has a shopping cart filled with the publication to keep up with demand.

"Practically every customer is buying at least one. Many are buying several, some four or five," said Wallerich, owner of JW's Foods.

Kalona residents are nabbing the March 30 issue because several hundred of them are featured in a three-page spread that includes a photo of a crowd outside the post office.

The reason for the attention is that in a postal delivery area of 5,000 people, 584 are named Miller and 319 are named Yoder. Postmaster Terry Hagedorn has counted 113 people named Gingerich and 99 with varied spellings of Hochstetler.

"Beyond that, there are a number of Swartzendrubers and Brennemans and many others," said Hagedorn, who moved from Cedar Rapids in November to take over the job of postmaster and the challenge of sorting mail.

"If I don't immediately know the right one, I throw it in a separate pile and give it to one of the clerks who's been here 15 years," he said. "I will get it down, but it may be two or three years."

"My initial reaction was wonderment," Hagedorn said of the area's media recognition. "When the situation with so many identical names existed for years and years, I couldn't imagine why, after I was here a few weeks, it all started."

"We were very upset to know that Steen is ill. Please take Alann Steen to a hospital so that doctors could help him recover."

Mrs. Turner said she wants the four "to know that we want them to be released soon because we need them. We don't know how we can help them."

Mrs. Turner said Steen's wife has been in a "terrible condition" since reports emerged that her husband was ill.

Turner's message was delivered to the Beirut offices of the leftist daily newspaper As-Safir.

He quoted an unidentified doctor who reportedly examined Steen as saying Steen "had a crisis in his blood pressure."

"The patient (Steen) says that as a child he was hit in his head while playing baseball and he was knocked unconscious," Turner quoted the doctor's report as saying.

PTL

"The ministry would not be here if it were not for Jim and Tammy Bakker," Falwell said. "It would not be Christian to cut off the life supply to the couple responsible for this ministry."

Falwell said the board also has approved an independent financial audit of PTL, the $172 million evangelical empire from which Bakker resigned March 19. Bakker revealed he had committed adultery and claimed he was being blackmailed because of it.

The Rev. G. Raymond Carlson, general superintendent of the Assemblies of God, said Thursday during a news conference at church headquarters in Springfield, Mo., that no evidence has been found that Bakker had been blackmailed.

"To the contrary, the evidence seems to indicate that effort and money have been expended to cover moral failure. We are deeply sorry to have to say this," Carlson said. "We grieve for the impact all this has had upon the entire Christian community."

The evidence will be forwarded to the North Carolina Presbytery, which has jurisdiction over the South Carolina-based PTL, he said.

"The complete procedure must and will be followed to determine whether resignation or dismissal is in order," Carlson said.

Bakker has offered his resignation to the Assemblies of God, his 2-million-member Pentecostal denomination, but no action has been taken.

Meanwhile, Jessica Hahn, the woman with whom Bakker had the sexual tryst seven years ago, told reporters she was "deeply concerned" that churchgoers everywhere should understand the current scandal "has no reflection upon the Lord."

"I don't want people under the impression this goes on everywhere. It does not go on everywhere," Ms. Hahn said in an interview outside her West Babylon, N.Y., home.

The Charlotte (N.C.) Observer reported Thursday that PTL lawyers agreed two years ago to pay Ms. Hahn and her representatives $265,000, instead of the $115,000 initially reported.

The paper said the fund has been in existence since spring 1985, with Ms. Hahn receiving $10,045 that year.

The new PTL board agreed at its meeting to review PTL's books to learn whether any contributions were diverted improperly, but the audit will not encompass Bakker's personal finances, Falwell said.

A financial statement distributed by PTL revealed assets of $172 million and total current liabilities of $42.1 million. Other long-term debt was listed at $28.2 million.

"The board's primarily responsibility is to restore the credibility of this ministry nationwide," Falwell said after the meeting. PTL's reputation probably is intact among Bakker's followers, he added. "But with the general public, I think we will need time."

"We're here to do what Jim Bakker asked me to do ... to maintain the stability and the ongoing health of this ministry of Christ," Falwell said. "It is our opinion we could not do it if Jim Bakker were here on this campus."

Before the news conference, Falwell announced on the PTL ministry's talk show that the board had unanimously ratified the appointment of the Rev. Richard Dortch as the new PTL president. Dortch had been PTL's executive vice president under Bakker.

Surgeon General Koop says AIDS 'threat to everyone'

Koop

AUSTIN (AP) — The tragedy of AIDS is magnified in minority communities, according to Surgeon General Dr. C. Everett Koop, who says the deadly disease strikes a disproportionately high number of blacks and Hispanics.

"And just to increase our sense of horror at this catastrophe occurring in the black and Hispanic communities, we suspect that the number of cases is vastly underreported," he said.

In a Thursday speech to a joint session of the Texas Legislature Koop warned that AIDS is a threat to everyone, not just homosexuals and intravenous drug abusers.

"This is no longer an exclusive club," he said of the disease that attacks the body's immunity system.

Koop said the higher ratio of AIDS in blacks and Hispanics could be a result of higher intravenous drug abuse in those communities.

One of eight Americans is black, but one of four Americans with AIDS is black, according to Koop. One-fourth of AIDS victims in the nation are Hispanic, although the Hispanic population represents only one-twelfth of the overall population.

More than half the infants born with AIDS are black. About one-fourth of the infants born with AIDS are Hispanic, Koop said.

"Nearly all these children received the virus from their infected mothers either in-utero or during delivery," he said.

"These pieces of information are all part of a total picture of a disease that is relentlessly reaching further and further into our society and we are practically powerless to stop it or even to slow it down," Koop said.

The surgeon general brought his now-familiar AIDS message, including his urging of monogamy as an AIDS prevention measure and the use of condoms for those who have sexual relationships with more than one person. Koop also called for increased education about sexual matters, including AIDS.

"Most schools offer this minimum kind of sex education sometime during the junior high or middle school years, and that's a good thing, although it might be a little bit late. I have urged the material be presented earlier, among 9-, 10-, and 11-year-olds," he said.

"There's much more to human relationships than just good sex, and young people ought to be told about that. Everyone dreams of such a relationship. The novelists call it true love. The sociologists call it marital fidelity. The surgeon general tends to call it monogamy. And, strictly from a public health point of view, the best defense against AIDS, short of total abstinence, is to maintain faithful, monogamous relationship," Koop said.

So far, 33,000 AIDS cases have been reported nationwide. "Over half of them have died and certainly most of the rest will," Koop said.

"The Texas experience is no different. Over 2,000 cases so far with two-thirds of them dead and a very bleak outlook indeed for the rest," he said.

By 1991, the national total will top 250,000 reported cases, including 16,000 in Texas, according to Koop.

"I have delivered this message and variations of it many times in the past few months and it doesn't get any easier. It's essentially a grim disease and I guess I am a grim courier," he said.

STATE

Shelters may be required to sterilize

By DAVID PLESA
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — The Senate Thursday approved a bill that would require animal shelters to sterilize all dogs and cats before releasing them for adoption.

The bill by Sen. Bill Sarpalius, D-Canyon, would allow animal shelters to charge a fee for the sterilizations as part of the adoption costs.

The bill would address the problem of animal overpopulation, as the U.S. Humane Society estimates a surplus of 17 to 20 million puppies and kittens each year. Estimates of the national birth rate for dogs and cats range from 2,000 to 3,000 per hour to as many as 10,000 per hour counting strays.

The Senate also approved a bill that would shift the power of appointing and removing housing authority commissioners from city mayors to city councils.

The bill, sponsored by Sen. Eddie Bernice Johnson, D-Dallas, would apply to cities with populations of less than 1.5 million.

A bill sponsored by Sen. Ted Lyon, D-Rockwall, would allow the state to seize approximately seven million acres of land-locked surface and mineral land if access agreements cannot be negotiated with surrounding landowners. Proceeds from the land are dedicated to the Permanent School Fund.

The General Land Office estimates that access problems cause a loss to the fund of about $5 million to $20 million annually from undeveloped hard minerals, and at least $360,000 to $1 million annually to the Available School Fund from surface leasing limitations.

Dividends and interest earned by the Permanent School Fund form part of the income of the Available School Fund, which is distributed among the state's school districts on the basis of school population.

Another bill approved Thursday would authorize county commissioners courts to regulate the use of firearms in unincorporated subdivisions.

The bill, by Sen. Bill Sims, D-San Angelo, is in response to complaints from residents of unincorporated subdivisions that hunting activity around their homes has reached dangerous levels.

Killer will be released since he's turning 18

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — A teen-ager who was convicted of fatally slitting a woman's throat has to be freed because he turns 18 today, authorities say.

Michael Ray Martinez' birthday means that the Texas Youth Commission has scheduled his release from the maximum security facility in Giddings, Assistant District Attorney Mark Dowd said.

Martinez was convicted of slitting the throat of 34-year-old Lynn Clara Popham, a Bexar County housewife, on Oct. 7, 1983, when he was 14.

At the time, state law forbade holding a juvenile convict past his 18th birthday. Legislators in 1985 extended the legal age limit to 21, but did not make it retroactive.

Dowd said youth commission officials told him the teen-ager had progressed, but could still be dangerous.

Juvenile offenders are eligible for release after serving two years, but Martinez was held about three years, he said.

Bexar County Chief Juvenile Probation Officer Tom Broussard said relatives of the slain woman are concerned.

"There's no question that his release is of concern to the Popham family," he said. "If we were the survivors of such a crime, I'm sure you would be concerned."

Martinez' mother has been one of about 100 volunteers working with delinquents, helping teach arts and crafts at the local detention center.

INS: 1 million aliens may seek amnesty in Texas

SAN BENITO (AP) — As many as 1 million illegal aliens may apply for amnesty in Texas, one fourth the national total expected to seek citizenship when an immigration reform bill goes into effect May 5, a federal official says.

Stephen H. Martin, a regional commissioner for the Immigration and Naturalization Service, said Thursday that the INS will be ready to begin processing the applications in early May.

Martin, in San Benito to attend a border conference, said 400 people will be hired to process the applications in Texas.

Aliens who have lived continuously in the United States since 1982 are eligible for amnesty and later citizenship under the act.

Martin, in charge of the INS in part of the Caribbean and 13 states from Florida to North Carolina to New Mexico, said as many as 800,000 to 1 million aliens could seek citizenship in Texas alone.

"It's hard to get close because there's quite a shadow community," said Martin, who is based in Dallas.

He warned aliens to shy away from fraudulent documents and unscrupulous people when trying to prove their case for amnesty.

The INS will begin accepting the applications May 5, the same day federal agents can begin citing employers who hire illegal aliens.

Employers will be warned first and then will be subject to civil sanctions for subsequent offenses during the first year of the bill being in effect. Beginning May 5, 1988, employers who violate the law will be fined immediately and not be given warnings.

Civil penalties range from $250 to $10,000 for each illegal alien hired.

Baker says Reagan will survive scandal

Baker

HOUSTON (AP) — White House Chief of Staff Howard Baker says he believes President Reagan's overall popularity remains strong despite apparent disapproval of the Iran affair by many citizens.

Baker, guest speaker at a Rice University dinner for about 500 alumni and supporters Thursday night, said the president is "likely to emerge from the Iran (affair) without deep scars.

"People in this country make mistakes and so does its government," Baker added.

Reagan's chief of staff flew to Houston specifically for the dinner Thursday night from Columbia, Mo., where he had accompanied Reagan. Baker had agreed to speak at the Rice Associates dinner before he was asked to become Reagan's chief of staff.

Baker praised the president's accomplishments, and said he believes Reagan's greatest achievements could yet be on the horizon — especially in the area of an arms agreement with the Soviet Union.

The president, Baker said, has helped create a climate and the opportunity "to reduce the insanity of the opportunity for mankind to destroy itself in a nuclear holocaust."

Reagan's commitments to military strength have caught the Soviet Union's eye, he said.

"I'm convinced the Soviet Union respects nothing so much as they respect strength."

And although some people have criticized Reagan's management style, Baker said he has no problems with it.

"I've worked with him daily, hourly — almost constantly," he said.

The chief of staff also joked that Thursday had been a "tough day."

During the trip to Columbia, Reagan took a question from 11-year-old Heather Watson in a sixth-grade civics class and answered by saying that trading arms to Iran for hostages was "a little like paying ransom to a kidnapper."

"He answered the damn thing about Iran," Baker said, drawing laughter from the crowd. "I knew then it was going to be a tough day... The girl had not said a thing about Iran."

The girl had told Reagan that all the recent publicity would "drive me out of my mind" and asked "what it was that made it worthwhile to you?"

Baker also said he had no regrets about accepting the chief of staff position and forfeiting a chance to gain the 1988 Republican presidential nomination.

"I'm happy to try to be of service to this president and his administration," he said, adding he was not sure whether he would seek the nomination in 1992 or 1996.

Verdict form signed wrong; Judge declares man guilty

WICHITA FALLS, Texas (AP) — An innocent man briefly was pronounced guilty in a murder trial until a judge realized that the blame lay in a misplaced signature.

The jury foreman apparently had signed the wrong line on the verdict form, and his attempt to mark through his name went unnoticed by state District Judge Temple Driver as the judge scanned the page for a signature.

Jurors deliberated less than two hours before clearing Chris Hernandez, 22, of wrongdoing in the shooting death of Delbert Emory outside a bar last year. Hernandez had confessed to shooting Emory by accident.

When the judge read the erroneous guilty verdict the foreman stood to correct the judge as other members, dumbfounded at what they heard, sat momentarily with their faces frozen in shock before joining in the protest.

Driver instructed the jury to return to the chamber and remark the form, and minutes later jurors returned with a corrected form bearing the innocent verdict.

"It was quite a bit of excitement," defense attorney Gene Douglass said afterward. "As (the judge) was reading (the verdict) I was looking at the foreman and the interesting thing was the disbelief in the foreman's face."

House OKs victims' bills

AUSTIN (AP) — House members Thursday approved two measures designed to help victims of violent crimes.

The bills tentatively approved on non-record votes need another vote before going to the Senate.

One bill, by Rep. Bob Richardson, R-Austin, would require the Board of Pardons and Paroles to notify victims of violent crimes of upcoming parole hearings for the convicts. The notification would allow the victim to oppose the early release if they wished.

The second bill, by Rep. Mike Millsap, D-Fort Worth, would change the Crime Victims' Compensation Act to eliminate a present requirement that a victim must prove to be in financial distress in order to get compensation. The measure also expands coverage to pay for psychiatric care related to the crime.

TDC remains closed

HUNTSVILLE (AP) — The number of inmates in the Texas prison system continues to exceed a state-mandated limit, forcing officials to keep the doors closed to new arrivals.

The headcount taken at midnight Wednesday and released Thursday showed 38,665 convicts behind bars — 95.71 percent of capacity, or 285 over the 38,380-inmate limit.

About 81 prisoners were released Thursday, Texas Department of Corrections spokesman David Nunnelee said. That would still leave the system about 200 inmates over the 95 percent of capacity limit and virtually ensured a shutdown through the weekend.

For seven straight weeks, the 27-unit system, the nation's third-largest, has been open only two days a week — Tuesday and Wednesday — because of crowding.

Seafood plant planned

AUSTIN (AP) — A seafood processing plant planned for Port Arthur will have the capacity to handle 16 million pounds of shrimp and crawfish a year, the Texas Economic Development Commission announced Thursday.

The 19,000-square-foot plant, to be built for Net-Fresh, Inc., is viewed as a major step toward diversifying the Port Arthur area economy, which is heavily dependent on the oil and gas industry and manufacturing.

The new plant at the port of Port Arthur will need 65 employees. Hiring will begin in June, according to a release from the governor's office.

Marketing research by Net-Fresh indicated a growing world demand for seafood.

"The research also shows that Cajun cooking, which includes numerous crawfish dishes, is spreading nationally much the way Mexican cooking started growing in popularity 20 years ago," according to the release from the governor's office.

Afghan air raids continue; Pakistani fort reportedly bombed

TERA MANGAL, Pakistan (AP) — Six Afghan government jets bombed a Pakistini fort near the Afghan border, injuring seven soldiers, government officials said today.

The attack reportedly occurred Thursday, the same day four Afghan jets bombed the hills above the border settlement of Tera Mangal, about 100 miles west of Peshawar. Officials said that raid killed five people and injured eight others.

Before that attack, authorities said Afghan air raids on Tera Mangal since Monday had killed 94 people and wounded 110 others.

Afghan warplanes dropped 31 bombs on Zalai fort in south Waziristan district 150 miles southwest of Peshawar and three miles from the border, said officials in that area who spoke on condition of anonymity.

The bombs hit two bunkers and a hall inside the fort and injured seven soldiers, said the officials.

A Foreign Office spokesman said earlier Thursday at least 152 people had been killed in Afghan air attacks on Pakistani border areas this week. Pakistani-backed Afghan guerrillas operate along the border.

Pakistan on Thursday lodged a strong protest with the United Nations about the bombings.

But Afghanistan's communist government, in radio broadcasts monitored in Islamabad, denied that its forces had attacked Pakistani territory.

Afghanistan also charged that Pakistani air and ground forces had staged at least eight attacks on Afghan territory since March 14, and that an unspecified number of people had been killed and wounded, Radio Kabul said.

WORLD

Foreign Ministry officials in Islamabad had no immediate comment on the Afghan charges.

The planes that attacked near Tera Mangal on Thursday appeared to be Soviet-built Sukhoi-22 fighter-bombers. Moslem guerrillas across the border fired anti-aircraft guns.

"There are many dead bodies still buried in the ground," Maj. Shah Nawaz said as Pakistani army officers escorted journalists around the town two miles from the Afghan border. "People do not come to get them because they are afraid of more attacks. You can smell the blood."

Whole streets were blown away, and bomb craters 10 feet deep dotted the town. Workers made small piles of cooking pots and other salvaged possessions.

Bloated carcasses of 20 horses and mules were strewn over a patch of flat ground near the town. Dotted among them were mortar shells and rocket grenades that apparently were being loaded on the pack animals Monday when the bombers streaked in over the hills.

Many towns and refugee camps along the frontier serve as bases and supply points for Moslem insurgents who have been fighting in Afghanistan since the communist coup of April 1978. The Soviet Union sent military forces in December 1979 and now has an estimated 115,000 soldiers in the country.

Insurgents have several bases just across the frontier in Afghanistan.

Pakistani officials insisted Thursday that Tera Mangal was a civilian settlement. However, armed Afghan guerrillas watched the visitors before Pakistani soldiers ordered them away, and the town is known as a guerrilla center.

Pakistan aids and shelters the Afghan guerrillas but it, the United States, China and other nations that help the insurgents do not acknowledge their role publicly.

Officials in Islamabad, capital of Pakistan, said this week that attacks on Tera Mangal and other border towns are part of Afghan efforts to force Pakistan into a political settlement of the 8-year-old war.

The Soviet Union has said it wants to withdraw its forces, but 5-year-old, U.N.-sponsored indirect talks between Pakistan and Afghanistan are stalled over a timetable. Pakistan wants a seven-month schedule and Afghanistan has offered 18 months.

Jazz pianist 'delights' Soviet fans

MOSCOW (AP) — Jazz pianist Dave Brubeck mounted a Soviet stage for the first time in his career and launched into two hours of virtuoso improvisations that fulfilled a personal dream and had the audience whistling with delight.

The 66-year-old American musician began a 13-performance tour of the Soviet Union Thursday before a packed 2,500-seat concert hall in the Rossiya Hotel near the Kremlin.

For some Soviets in the high-ceilinged hall, who had first heard Brubeck in broadcasts by the Voice of America during the Cold War or on tape recordings circulated by friends, it was like coming face to face with a legend.

"Brubeck for me is my youth, the 1950s, the thaw after Stalin, better relations with America," said one 55-year-old Moscow office worker and jazz enthusiast. "He's all that, plus of course his wonderful music."

Brubeck's trip to the Soviet Union was made possible by the cultural accord signed by President Reagan and Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev at their November 1985 summit meeting in Geneva.

The pianist, who arrived in Moscow Wednesday, told reporters at the airport that his previous plans to play in the Soviet Union had fallen through because of strained relations between the superpowers.

"To come to the Soviet Union and perform with my quartet — that's the fulfillment of a dream," he wrote in program notes given out at his first Moscow concert.

Brubeck, joined by his 34-year son Chris on bass guitar, clarinettist Bill Smith and drummer Randy Jones, delighted the audience at Moscow's Central Concert Hall with unorthodox time signatures and harmonic experimentation.

The quartet swept through the Brubeck theme "Take Five," and other jazz classics including Duke Ellington's "Take the A Train" and a medley that included "St. Louis Blues," George Gershwin's "Summertime" and hints of boogey-woogey and ragtime.

At one point, Brubeck rose from the keyboard of his grand piano, clapped to a syncopated rhythm that the audience joined along in, then launched into the rollicking tune "Unsquare Dance."

Bouncing his feet off the floor, the silver-haired Brubeck dashed his fingers across the keys to end the piece with a few bars of "Turkey in the Straw" as the audience shouted, applauded and whistled its approval.

"Brubeck in Moscow — it's a pure miracle," commented one member of the audience, 32-year-old musician Alexander Mirokhin. "Like jazz, he's no longer American, he's international, something we all understand."

Law student Alexander Bolotsky, 22, said he had waited in line to buy his ticket for several hours, and that once the box office had opened, all 1,250 tickets available were sold within 2½ hours.

"But I'm happy, overwhelmed, really, by this music," he said. "This was the music my parents raised me on, and now I'm getting to watch as it's made."

The audience included military men in uniform, society matrons, bureaucrats in suits and numerous young people in sweaters and jeans.

Speaking to reporters backstage following the two-hour concert, a smiling Brubeck said, "They were wonderful." Asked about Soviet audiences, he replied: "I don't know where they'd be better."

The quartet is scheduled to play in Moscow through Monday, then travel to Tallinn, the capital of Soviet Estonia, and to Leningrad, where they will play their final concert on April 10.

The tour is sponsored by the Soviet state concert agency Goskontsert, the U.S. Embassy in Moscow and the Kadan Co. of San Francisco.

Brubeck said upon arrival in the Soviet Union that the main reason for his tour is to play music, rather than to serve as an ambassador of good will from the United States.

But Soviet jazz critic Andrei Batashyev, who served as master of ceremonies for the Thursday night concert, said the music was something people of both superpowers could share.

"Today they applaud Soviet jazz in the United States, and we are delighted to welcome American jazz to our country," he said.

Energy Week goal change in attitude

Although the title "Energy Appreciation Week" is bound to raise a few eyebrows on workers still reeling from the wham-bam effects of the oil price slump on the domestic industry, the observance now under way in Midland and the rest of the Permian Basin is intended to get people of this region thinking in a positive manner about the industry. No doubt that result would be a welcome change of attitude for the people of the basin.

Charles Perry, president of the Permian Basin Petroleum Association, noted the importance attached to the observance when he said: "It will be a coming out party for optimism, to get us looking in a new direction — up.

"What I am saying is that we have a negative attitude problem. There is money to be made and wells to be drilled at $15, and we have to get people thinking about that again."

It's about time; we've had enough of depressing news regarding the oil industry. This event affords the opportunity to view in a different light the industry so critical to the well-being of this region's people.

At the same time, however, it would be naive to assume that optimism alone will bring the domestic oil industry back from the current depths. In the past several days, various political leaders and others have alluded to the industry's troubles and offered their views on what's needed:

— Robert O. Anderson, president of Hondo Oil & Gas Co. of Roswell, N.M. and former chairman of the board and chief executive officer of Arco Oil & Gas Co., predicted earlier this week that he expects the price to rise to $28 per barrel by year-end. Yet, he said, the ability of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries to restrict production below their quotas proves they can move prices higher when they want.

— Interior Secretary Donald P. Hodel predicted lines at gasoline pumps in this country in two to five years. He blamed Congress if that happens, saying Congress will find it almost impossible not to act to "protect the consumer."

— Last week while in Midland, Gov. Bill Clements said: "Quit talking about an oil import fee. They (Congress) won't buy it, and there's no use talking about it anymore.

"But they'll buy stability."

— Proposals for dealing with the oil situation are widespread. Both U.S. Sens. Lloyd Bentsen and Phil Gramm of Texas, U.S. Rep. Larry Combest of the 19th Congressional District and many others have offered suggestions on how to relieve the problems. But there is no clear-cut consensus on what to do.

While the energy outlook and remedies for the industry's problems vary sharply depending on the speaker, a number of facts have not changed for several years and are not likely to anytime soon: (1) This country depends heavily on an adequate supply of oil and is adversely affected when that supply is interrupted, (2) heavy reliance on foreign oil suppliers is highly dangerous from a national security standpoint in addition to creating the potential for economic blackmail, (3) the domestic oil industry and alternative sources of energy can provide an effective "escape route" out of this energy trap, but it will not be rapid or inexpensive and it will require wisdom and statesmanlike conduct by the Congress.

Over the last decade and a half the Congress has been undergoing an "education" at the hands of OPEC. It hasn't been a fun education, but changes have been coming, although at an excruciatingly slow pace. One of the most promising changes has come about in recent weeks in the Reagan Administration's recognition that the petroleum industry doesn't operate in a free market environment. That's only the first step, but it is a good first one. Now the subsequent steps need to come that, hopefully, will give this nation a greater degree of energy independence by allowing the domestic oil industry to operate in the national interest.

Of course, no one should expect those events to come about overnight. They constitute a hard lesson, but a lesson that must be confronted if this country is ever to be free where energy is concerned. One step along the road is for individuals in this region to start thinking positively about the nation's oil industry. It's easier to sell a program if the seller is positive about it.

That won't bring about a magical change in the oil pricing situation, but it could help nudge along the change that must come about to bring oil back to the forefront where the United States is concerned.

That's what Energy Appreciation Week is really all about.

Highway bill paved with pet projects

WASHINGTON — Most of the media interest in the highway bill that recently landed on President Reagan's desk has been aimed at the revision of the 55 mph speed limit. But what concerns the White House — and should worry the public — are the budget-busting billions in pork-barrel projects the bill sets in motion.

Jack Anderson

Probably not even a presidential veto can overcome the House and Senate public works committees' single-minded devotion to the 170 pork-barrel items in the bill. These projects will cost $1.6 billion for the first five years, and an additional $6.8 billion to complete.

One big trouble with the pork projects — and the reason they survive and flourish no matter how big the budget deficit grows — is that they are regarded by their successful sponsors as political merit badges to show the home-district folks at campaign time. No amount of finger-pointing can shame these members out of bringing home the bacon in the form of a demonstration project or other boondoggle.

In fact, some pork-barrel dippers are unabashed to the point of arrogance. After we wrote last fall about construction projects brought home by House committee members, including one by chairman Jim Howard, D-N.J., a Howard aide called and told our associate Stewart Harris that we had failed to mention another project the chairman had netted for his district.

Some of these projects may be worthwhile. But we are curious about the inequitable way Congress decides who gets to take home the bacon.

Here are some of the more redolent examples of how the pork-barrel system works to the advantage of senior House committee members:

— Bud Shuster, R-Pa., ranking minority member, made off with the biggest special project in the bill: $90 million to build 12 miles of four-lane highway between Altoona and Tyrone, Pa.

— Glen Anderson, D-Calif., second-ranking majority member, got the next-biggest hunk of pork: $74 million for 27 "intermodal transportation" projects for the port of Los Angeles.

— Robert Roe, D-N.J., third-ranking Democrat, snagged $50 million for improvements to Route 21 in his district.

— Gus Savage and William Lipinski, with a little help from another Chicago Democrat, Ways and Means Committee Chairman Dan Rostenkowski, brought home $24 million worth of road-building contracts for their constituents.

Perhaps the most bizarre pork-barrel permutation was wrought by Rep. Jim Oberstar, D-Minn., who led the successful fight for a $14 million highway interchange — in Sanford, Fla., roughly 2,000 miles from his home district in northeastern Minnesota.

It turns out that much of the inspiration for the interchange came from Jeno Paulucci, who made his first millions as the founder of Chun King brand Chinese food products in Duluth. Paulucci moved his plant to Florida in 1981. The interchange would benefit Paulucci's business, but the Florida Transportation Department gave it a low priority. So Paulucci turned to Oberstar for help.

An aide to the congressman justified Oberstar's interest in a manner typical of the Public Works Committee mentality: not by justifying the intrinsic value of the Florida interchange, but by explaining that Paulucci was still an important constituent, so Oberstar was playing the pork-barrel game by the rules.

Paulucci maintains a home and business office in Duluth, the aide said, and provides a rent-free plant to G&G Electronics, a big Duluth employer. The aide scoffed at the suggestion that the $14 million interchange had any connection to several Oberstar campaign contributions from Paulucci, his family and associates.

Footnote: The telephone company in Duluth said it had no Paulucci home or business number listed. Paulucci did not return our calls to his Florida headquarters.

NO MORE LOOSE TALK: Visitors to Baghdad don't have the convenience of direct-dial long-distance telephone calls. Why? It seems that the Iranians, who have been lobbing about a dozen missiles a year in the general direction of the Iraqi capital, had no effective way of knowing whether they'd hit anything important. So Iranian intelligence agents took to intercepting phone calls from Baghdad to other countries and listening to the callers' conversation about the latest missile damage. Callers are now inhibited by having to go through the operator — and Iraqi security eavesdroppers. Direct-dial calls were too difficult to monitor.

MINI-EDITORIAL: Leave it to American ingenuity to come up with the consumer project of a capitalist's dreams: Rogaine, the new lotion that grows hair on bald heads. Not only is the stuff expensive — up to $1,000 a year — but it must be rubbed on the scalp for the rest of the user's life, or his hair will fall out. Talk about getting hooked on a product.

TOM WICKER

Speaker Wright fighting Democrat dilemma

NEW YORK — Speaker Jim Wright, among other Democrats, has been chastised in this space for a "political death wish" — wanting to raise taxes to reduce the federal deficit. More in sorrow than in anger, Wright recently insisted over lunch that he has a problem only a tax increase can ease.

Tom Wicker

President Reagan has sent Congress his annual dishonest budget — as usual featuring inflated revenue estimates, new taxes disguised as "user fees," and spending cuts no one believes can be made. This spurious document does project, however, a fiscal 1988 deficit of about $108 billion — the legal limit set by the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings law passed by a panicky Congress a couple of years ago (with the support of Jim Wright).

The president's budget has put Wright and the Democrats under pressure to produce their own budget, with a deficit of about the same size. They say it can't be done honestly without spending cuts in essential government services that congressional constituencies would never accept; or tax increases to produce additional revenues; or a combination of spending reductions and new taxes.

Complicating the matter is Reagan's adamant stand against new taxes, except for the subterfuges he has himself proposed. So Jim Wright's problem, and that of other Democratic leaders in the House and Senate, is that they must either risk Reagan's denunciation and veto of a tax increase; or labor under his potent charges that their failure to meet the arbitrary Gramm-Rudman deficit target confirms them as the "big spenders" he always said they were.

The speaker's favored solution is (a) to accept Reagan's inflated revenue estimates, knowing full well that the reality will fall short; (b) to cut $18 billion, half in domestic social and half in military spending, from the fiscal 1988 budget; and (c) to find $18 billion in new revenues.

That would bring the deficit down to about $111 billion, on paper at least, and near enough to the Gramm-Rudman target to satisfy legality, if little else. But even this course will not be easy. Aside from the tax issue, the administration will resist a cut of that size in the Pentagon budget. And a reduction of about $10.5 billion actually would need to be made in domestic spending, to allow room for about $1.5 billion in "initiatives" like welfare reform.

What are the alternatives?

— The Democrats could accept Reagan's budget, but that would mean an impossible $30 billion in spending cuts and $6.5 billion in "user fees" that Wright calls "the wrong taxes"; they would hit lower- and middle-income Americans harder than the wealthy.

— The Democrats could repeal Gramm-Rudman, produce an honest budget and blame its high deficit on Ronald Reagan's 1981 tax cuts and his profligate military spending; but Wright's political judgment is that congressional Democrats would have neither the courage to do this nor the better of the resulting political argument with the president and his party.

— They could repeal Gramm-Rudman and go on the offensive — or so I argue — by initiating a big public works program to reduce unemployment massively (together with other social and economic gains); this would initially increase the deficit but ultimately reduce it by about $30 billion a year for each percentage point cut from the unemployment rate.

Wright, not personally unsympathetic to this idea, throws up his hands at the prospect of getting it through a deficit-conscious Congress, past Reagan's veto and political charges and across to the public. The speaker's view is that no program costing big money is politically possible until the deficit has been substantially reduced — and he believes that's what Reagan has had in mind all along.

So Wright will continue to push for a new tax, in the somewhat forlorn hope that a weakened president can be pressured into supporting it. Reagan did limit his opposition at his recent news conference to a "tax-rate" increase, which suggests that a new gasoline tax or an oil import fee might be more nearly acceptable to him — particularly if it had the support of Howard Baker, now the president's senior adviser. Chairman Dan Rostenkowski of the Ways and Means Committee also favors that approach.

But if Reagan won't be pressured, he'll surely veto a Democratic tax increase, his party will get a new opportunity to shout "Tax and spend!" and next year's Democratic presidential nominee will have a problem bigger than Jim Wright's.

LETTERS

Real names not crucial

Probably, the pseudonym most familiar to Americans is the name Samuel Clemens chose — Mark Twain. Prior to the freedom and tolerance of the 20th century, women frequently wrote under men's names to be accepted. Nom de plumes have been used by writers, poets, politicians, statesmen to avoid persecution and discrimination.

A few people using pseudonyms for various reasons are: Alexander Hamilton (Lucius Crassus), Louisa May Alcott (Tribulation Periwinkle), Elizabeth Barrett Browning (A.A.), Josef Korzeniowski (Joseph Conrad), Charles Dickens (BOZ), Oliver Wendell Holmes (Poet of the Breakfast Table), Francois Marie Arouet (Voltaire), Oscar Wilde (C.3.3.3.), Jane Taylor Caldwell (Taylor Caldwell), William Pitt (Celebrated Commoner), Alfred Tennyson (Alcibiades), Henry Wadsworth Longfellow (Hans Hammergafferstein), Manfred Lee and Fred Dannay (Ellery Queen), D.H. Lawrence (Lawrence H. Davidson), Jean Baptiste Poquelin (Molere), George Bernard Shaw (Corno Di Bassetto), and Robert Lewis Stevenson (Le Pickleur).

Does the fact that these persons chose not to reveal their "real names" make their contributions "about as stimulating as an anonymous phone call" as suggested by Bob Rich concerning the publishers of "Youth Propaganda, an underground newspaper at Lee High School"?

Considering the dictatorial, unconstitutional policies espoused by our MISD school board regarding off-campus activity, I can well appreciate this desire for anonymity.

I am sure Rich and others would indeed like to know who these "misguided" liberals really are. I am equally sure, knowing this, they would attempt to impose their ideas of proper guidance and discipline to enable them to see the error of their ways. Surely such individualism as these youths are exhibiting must be very sinister.

I haven't read any issue of "Youth Propaganda," and I doubt that Rich has either, but unlike Rich, I do not require knowing these individuals' names to defend their right to freedom of speech. I find the initiative of these youths creative and refreshing. I commend them for their concern and enthusiasm.

As for evoking the memory of "our forefathers" signing the Declaration of Independence with their real names, has Rich stopped to consider one of the reasons they were able to do so? During Revolutionary times, Benjamin Franklin published articles as "Anthony Afterwit," Samuel Adams as "A Tory," and a future U.S. president, Thomas Jefferson, as "Oliver Fairplay."

To Benny Existential, Harley Marx and Friends, a "high five" and "write on."

CHARLEY REESE

Adolf Hitler didn't get fair shake in press

I was reading a piece about Contra raids in Nicaragua recently and it occurred to me that American journalism owes Adolf Hitler and other tyrants of the past an apology.

Charley Reese

Something has happened in American journalism which is accepted as entirely normal but which, when you think about it, is bizarre. The practice began, as far as I know, with the Vietnam War.

This bizarre practice is for journalists to visit an enemy country and assess, from the enemy's point of view, the effectiveness and morality of the allied forces at war with it.

Hitler was never given this break. If he had, the outcome of World War II might have been different. If British and American journalists had been willing, I'm sure the Nazis would have loved to arrange a tour of Dresden so they could report back to the British and American people how much terrible damage to innocent civilians Allied bombers were doing.

The North Vietnamese and now the Sandinistas were afforded this courtesy but poor old Hitler was a victim of biased journalism. American and British journalists in those days were opposed to totalitarianism and actually were so prejudiced as to openly support the Allied war effort. Put bluntly, they simply weren't willing to let the Nazis tell their side of the story.

No doubt, if they had been, the Germans could have arranged for them to talk to people in occupied Poland and Yugoslavia who were innocent victims or witnesses to the brutal raids made by the Polish underground or the Yugoslav partisans.

We could then have had congressmen calling the anti-Nazi resistance fighters nothing but a band of thugs and murderers and we could have had investigations of the Office of Strategic Services, demanded an end to funding underground movements, and a penny-by-penny accounting of funds previously spent.

With a little assistance from the Germans, we could have had a number of stories about the character flaws of the various underground leaders, about the conflicts between different partisan groups. We could have had a lot of good quotes from Nazi officials about how ineffective and futile the underground efforts were.

We could have had, if the rules of today applied to then, a lot of stories quoting American Nazis about how all the stories of Nazi atrocities were just propaganda by the war-mongering Allied governments which were entirely under control of the military-industrial complex.

Every time a congressman or senator needed a witness to verify Allied misdeeds, all he would have to do is ask his staff to call up the Washington law firm or public relations firm representing Hitler and sure enough, witnesses would be flown from Germany to Washington so they could testify and hold press conferences.

The Allies could have clearly taken the moral highground. They could have made it plain to every Jew, to every Lithuanian, Latvian, Pole, Czech, Yugoslav, Greek, Frenchman, Dutchman, Belgian, and Russian fighting for their lives that unless they could prove to us, to our satisfaction, that they were pure democrats with only the highest regard for human rights and could refute every Nazi allegation that they could not expect any help from us. God knows we should not taint ourselves by helping anyone but the perfect.

It would have been interesting to have had American pro-Nazis visit occupied Europe and come back and assure the American people that the Europeans were perfectly happy with German occupation.

We could have had famous actresses visit American POW camps, ridicule the American prisoners, pose for a few pictures with Nazi anti-aircraft crews, then come home, call American GIs murderers and liars and win an Academy Award. Yes, Hitler has a legitimate gripe. The press did not give him a fair shake.

Carter says Syria, Israel ready to talk

TEL AVIV, Israel (AP) — Former President Jimmy Carter said Syria's President Hafez Assad now sees Israel as a "permanent entity in the Middle East," and is ready to negotiate with the Jewish state.

"You would be surprised if you could sit next to Assad and hear the change in his views," Carter told Foreign Minister Shimon Peres Thursday at a dinner in his honor at a Jerusalem hotel.

"There is a readiness to discuss all the problems you have between you," Carter said. "There's a recognition of Israel as a permanent entity in the Middle East."

Syria, the main powerbroker in Lebanon and Israel's most formidable Arab enemy, rarely has spoken on the question of direct Arab-Israeli talks.

Carter, who crossed into Israel from Jordan early Thursday, spent the first day of a six-day visit to the Jewish state meeting with Peres, Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir, Defense Minister Yitzhak Rabin and President Chaim Herzog.

He told reporters earlier in the day that he had encountered "fairly consistent support for an international peace conference" during his current trip which has taken him to Algeria, Egypt, Syria and Jordan.

The former president today had breakfast with Jerusalem Mayor Teddy Kollek before leaving for a tour of a kibbutz in the Negev desert.

Carter played a key role in designing the Egyptian-Israeli peace treaty signed eight years ago and has told Israeli leaders an international Middle East peace conference would facilitate negotiations between Israel and its Arab neighbors.

The proposal has caused a rift within Israel's coalition government. Peres, head of the left-of-center Labor Party, has advocated the idea, while Shamir, who heads the right-wing Likud Bloc, has strongly opposed it.

Peres has said the proposed conference, which would include the five permanent members of the U.N. Security Council, may be the only way to draw Israel's Arab neighbors to the negotiating table, and has emphasized it would serve only as a prelude to direct talks between the parties.

But Shamir, fearing the conference would enable participants to pressure the Jewish state into territorial concessions, has insisted upon direct negotiations as the only viable solution.

The five permanent members of the Security Council are China, France, the Soviet Union, Britain and the United States.

Carter's arrival along with his wife Rosalynn coincided with the eighth anniversary of the Egypt-Israeli peace treaty, which is the only treaty between Israel and an Arab country.

"This day should remind all Israelis and everyone in the Middle East that negotiations, even among those who have never cooperated before, can be very fruitful," the former president said.

Greek premier threatens to 'shut down' U.S. bases

ATHENS, Greece (AP) — Premier Andreas Papandreou warned Turkey today to call off oil exploration in the Aegean Sea and threatened to shut down U.S. military bases here in event of a Greek-Turkish military clash.

Earlier today, Greece put its armed forces on alert and ordered navy vessels into the north Aegean, where the Turkish ship Seismic-1 is headed.

The socialist premier said Greece would "prevent" the ship, due to reach the exploration site Saturday, from carrying out tests in the disputed Aegean continental shelf.

Papandreou blamed the United States and NATO for the crisis which arose Thursday when Turkey said it would resume oil research in the Aegean after a 10-year gap.

"The Atlantic alliance and especially the United States bear the responsibility for the Aegean developments because they increasingly support Turkey's military might," he told a Cabinet meeting.

Government officials released the text of his remarks to the Cabinet.

Asked, as he left the meeting whether a Greek-Turkish military clash would result in the closure of four American military bases here, Papandreou replied: "That is self-understood, and perhaps would occur even before a clash."

In Ankara, the Turkish general staff said Seismic-1 would reach open sea in the Aegean on Saturday, escorted by warships.

A general staff spokesman said some Turkish armed forces units were on alert but gave no details of troop movements.

Greek military sources said armed forces personnel were told to report immediately to their units.

WORLD in brief

50 gold miners buried in cave-in in Ecuador

QUITO, Ecuador (AP) — A cave-in buried 50 miners at a gold mine in mountainous southern Ecuador, killing as many as 30 of them, officials said.

The disaster occurred Thursday at the Nambija mine, on a mountainside four hours by foot from the town of Zamora, capital of Zamora Chincipe province and about 435 miles south of Quito.

Rescue equipment and doctors were being sent to the mine, said police Lt. Renan Velasco in a telephone interview from Zamora with The Associated Press.

There were no confirmed casualty figures, and details on the accident were not immediately available.

Floro Regalado, prefect of Zamora Chicipe province, estimated 30 deaths and said news of the accident had arrived with messengers from the mine. Police, quoting survivors, said 50 miners were buried.

"Doctors are urgently needed to treat the injured," Regalado, the area's chief administrative officer, told Radio Centinela, a station in the nearby city of Loja.

Students, police fighting

MADRID, Spain (AP) — Students and police fought in downtown Madrid when the youths tried to hold an unauthorized demonstration Thursday, and workers in northern Spain locked three bosses in an office to protest job cuts.

Thousands of doctors in state-run hospitals began a 48-hour strike for more pay and to protest changes in the government health system.

No injuries were reported in the Madrid demonstration. Representatives of a student group that has called a five-day strike at Spain's 39 universities against an education reform law said police arrested three protesters.

National television said other students blocked traffic and held protests in Oviedo, Murcia and Zaragoza.

Representatives of the 325 workers at the Cunosa appliance factory in Limpias, 28 miles west of Bilbao, held the three managers captive because of management's decision to eliminate 124 jobs, according to worker spokesman Jesus Pena.

Nakasone to visit U.S.

TOKYO (AP) — Prime Minister Yasuhiro Nakasone will visit the United States April 29 to meet with President Reagan about trade tensions between the two countries, a Foreign Ministry official confirmed Friday.

The visit was scheduled partly because of a "severe" attitude toward Japan in Congress "which is likely, if left as it is, to impair the base of good Japan-U.S. relations," said the official, speaking on condition of anonymity.

Japanese newspapers had reported Thursday that the visit was likely. The April 29-May 5 visit will be Nakasone's sixth to the United States since he became premier in November 1982, but his first official visit at the invitation of Reagan, said the official.

Nakasone's exact itinerary, including the date of a meeting with Reagan, was still undecided.

Reagan's Economic Policy Council reached a "consensus opinion" Thursday on trade sanctions against Japanese chip makers over alleged Japanese failure to live up to an agreement reached last year.

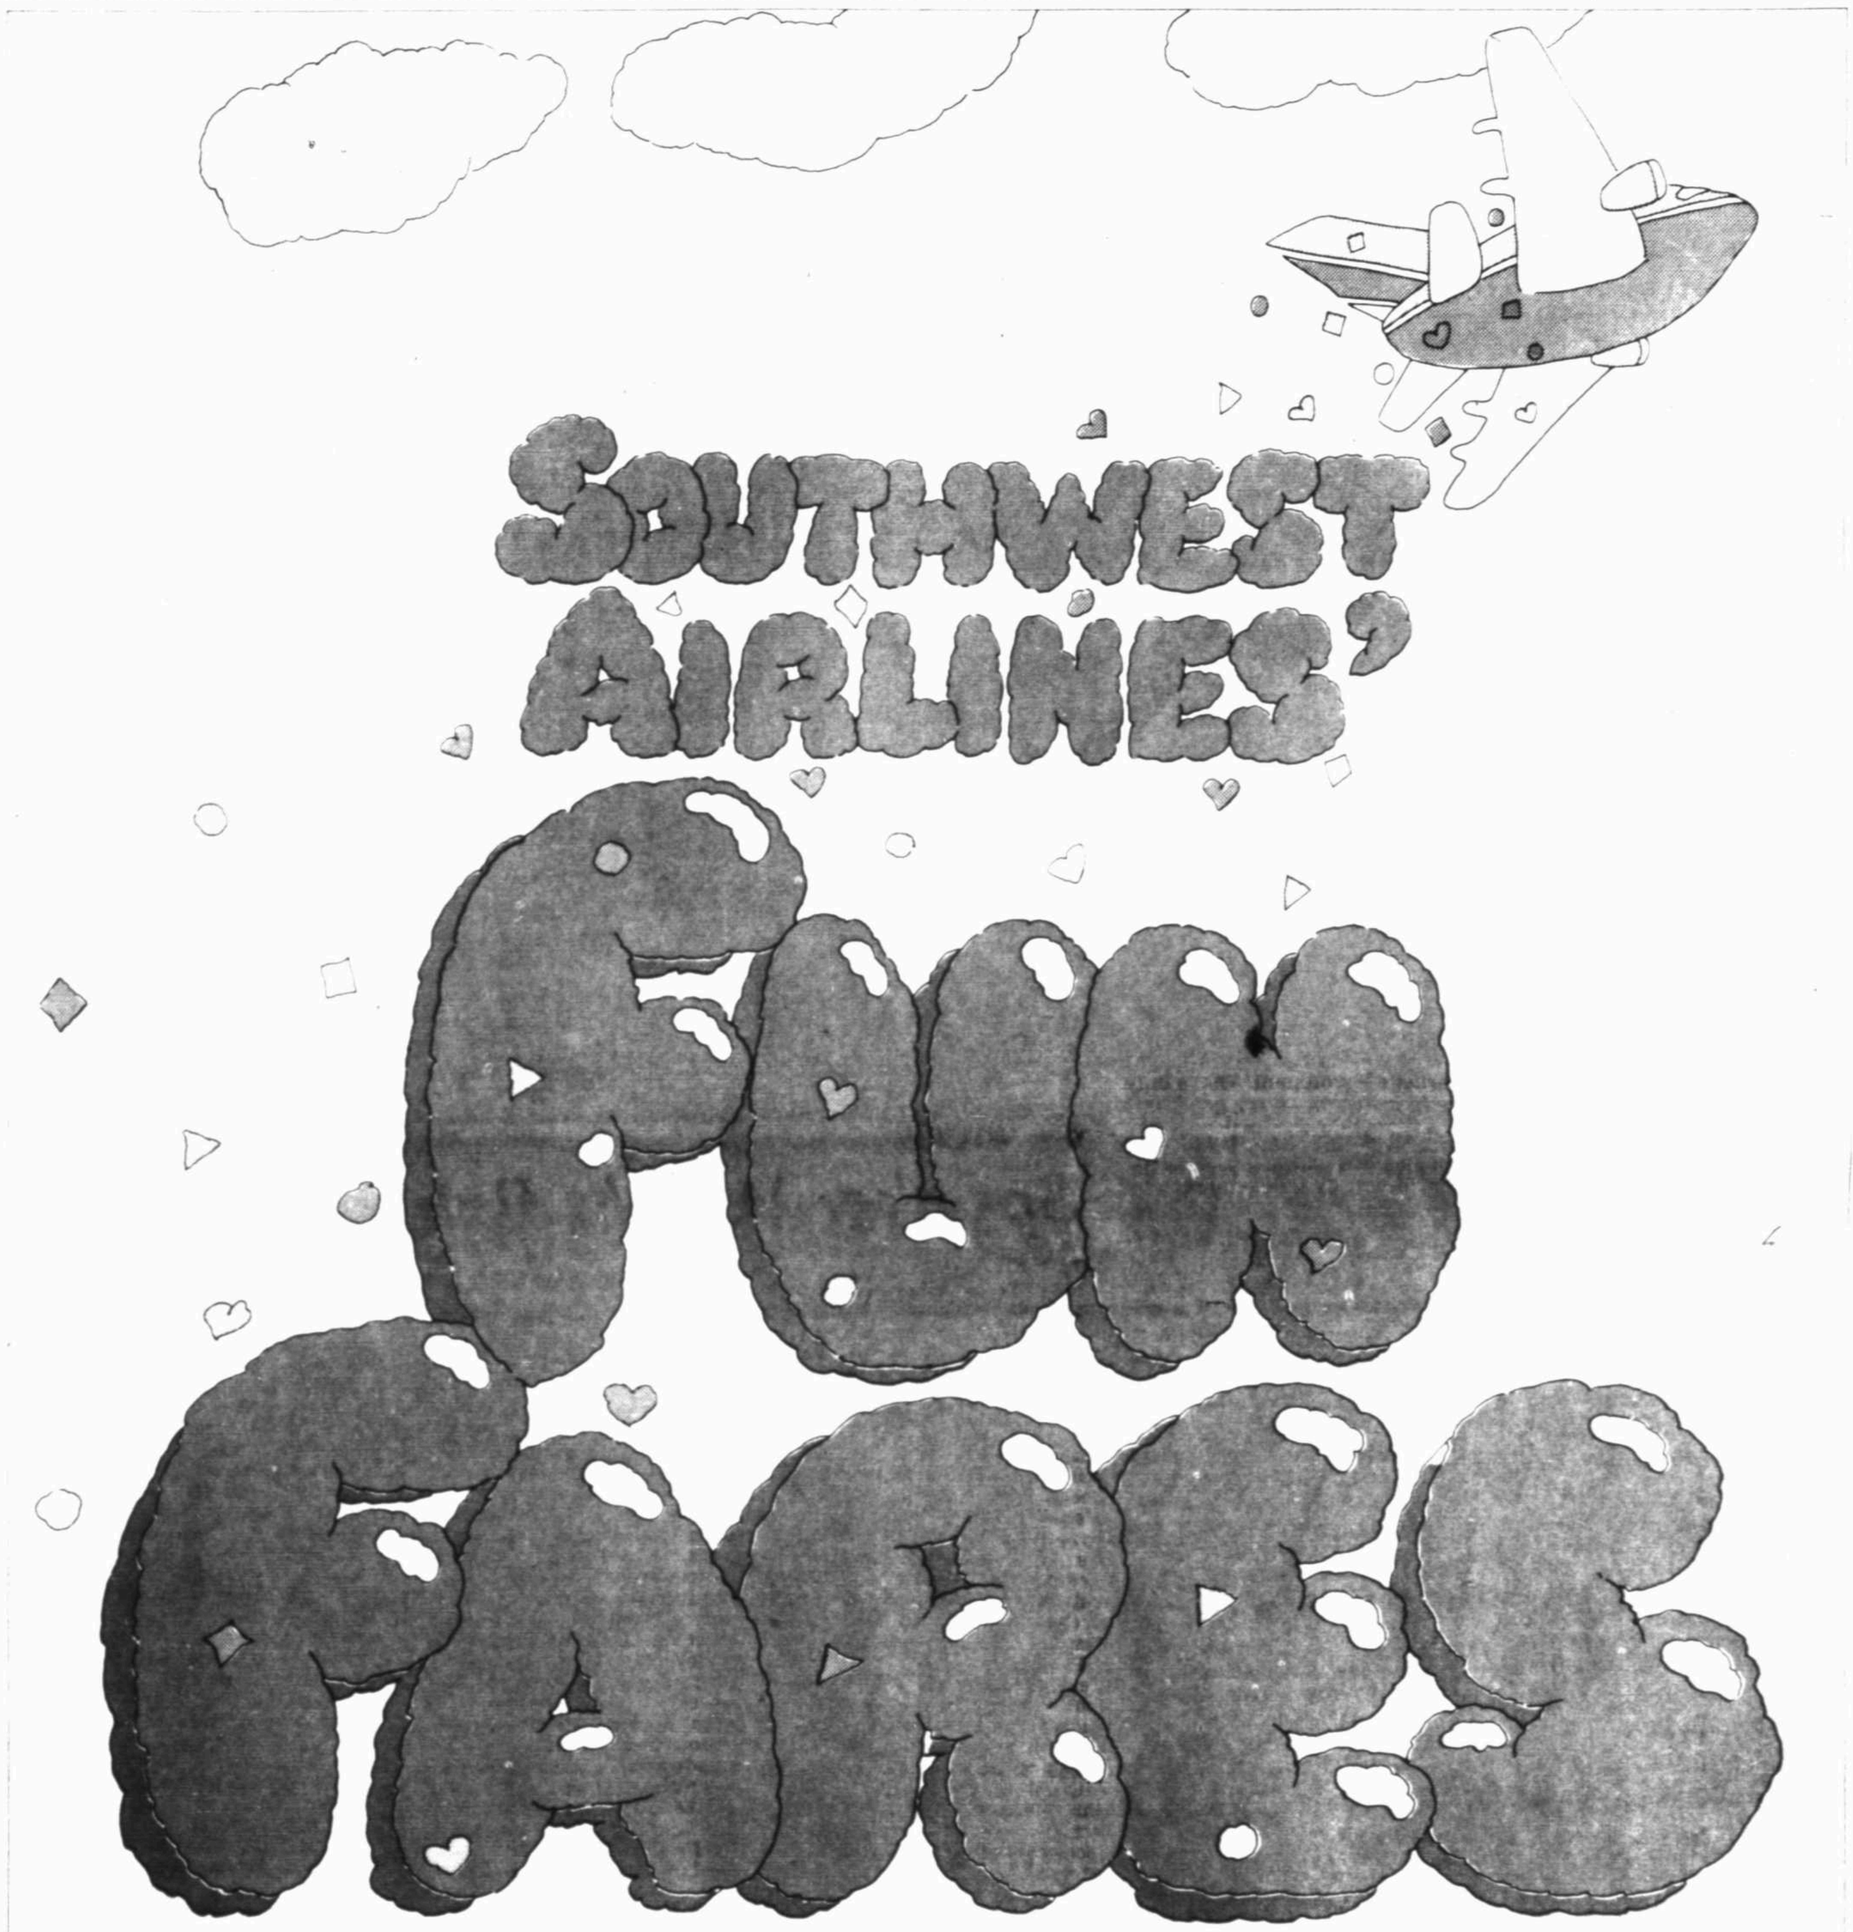

Both houses of Congress have approved a non-binding resolution demanding that the Reagan administration retaliate against Japan's failure to honor its pledge to lower trade barriers to U.S. computer chips and stop selling Japanese-made semiconductors at unfairly low market prices.

Tunisian decision praised

NICOSIA, Cyprus (AP) — Iraq today praised Tunisia's decision to sever ties with Iran and urged other Arab countries to follow suit against its enemy in the 6½-year-old Persian Gulf war.

The official Iraqi News Agency quoted Foreign Minister Tarek Aziz as saying: "Had the Arabs taken such a brave stand earlier, the Iranian regime would not have dared to carry out subversive actions or interfere in the internal affairs" of other countries.

Tunisia announced the rupture in relations with Iran on Thursday. A foreign ministry statement accused the Iranian embassy of working to "propagate anarchy and religious sedition."

MCHD redistricting, suits to be delayed

Some minority citizens storm out of meeting

By JANE MARLER DEES
Staff Writer

Via a future "peace treaty" to be signed and agreed upon by Midland County Hospital District directors and Midland's minority leaders next week, both parties agreed Thursday to hold off on respective redistricting plans and new lawsuits until a similar case is decided upon in the Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals in New Orleans.

Tempers flared, emotions surfaced and people stormed out in disgust during the normally uneventful monthly meeting of the five hospital district directors at Midland Memorial Hospital.

Thursday's meeting dealt with the MCHD plans to reorganize its system of election from five at-large positions to a 4-3 plan similar to that attempted by the Midland Independent School District three years ago.

Concerned citizens representing the Taxpayer Awareness Group, the League of United Latin American Citizens, the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People as well as just themselves, threw various flies in the ointment of the directors' plan to reorganize.

Though parties on both sides of the table agreed they were after the "same goal," a decision on attaining the means to that goal seemed far away in the horizon.

Directors said the 4-3 split will both adequately represent large and small factions of the city.

Members of Midland's minority community criticized the directors' proposal. They cried "pseudo-intellectual racism," and said directors were failing to support the positive advancement of the single-member district philosophy.

The current brouhaha stems from the fact State Rep. Tom Craddick, R-Midland, on behalf of MCHD filed a bill March 13 in Austin which calls for a redistricting plan which would create a seven-member body elected to four single-member district and three at-large positions.

Currently there are five MCHD directors elected to at-large positions. They receive no salary for their efforts.

Controversy blossomed when the concerned citizens learned there had been a public hearing on the bill scheduled for the early afternoon of the morning Craddick filed the bill.

Secondly, opponents of the 4-3 split plan discovered Thursday the bill had already made its way to the House County Affairs committee for hearing.

Had Joanne DeWitt, a concerned citizen at Thursday's meeting, not called a toll-free hotline to hear the status of the bill, she claimed to directors, "We would have been fooled and you'd have gotten your way."

Dr. William Parks Jr., president of the MCHD directors, and MCHD legal counsel Ted Kerr, said Thursday the bill was more or less a skeleton bill that had to be filed to meet a legislative deadline but was certainly and hopefully going to be amended before passage to meet everyone's wishes.

This verbal promise of future amendment was not good enough for those in attendance. Speaking on behalf of the Permian Basin League of United Latin American Citizens, Edia Hernandez said her concerns would not be satisfied unless the MCHD agreed to a reorganization composed of five or seven single-member districts.

"We will not settle for anything less. Your proposal violates the constitutional rights of minorities and delutes the voting rights of minorities.

"We don't think we're asking for anything that's not fair or just. All we want is the opportunity to serve on an equal and fair basis," said Ms. Hernandez.

However, Parks' concerns contrasted.

"A 5-0 or 7-0 plan would require redistricting and having a separate election for the hospital district. This gerrymandering would guarantee nothing," he said as he expressed his personal support for the 4-3 plan.

Director Frank Kell Cahoon agreed. "I feel like you need a situation like the Senate and the House have. You have larger points of view and smaller points of view."

Ms. DeWitt noted that if four are elected to a single-member position and the at-large members are elected in two different elections — two one year, one the next — the redistricting will have not helped get minority representation on the board.

Kerr countered that, although the bill filed March 13 did call for the situation Ms. DeWitt feared, it could be altered and in fact, said he would have altered that section.

The Rev. Joseph Williams, pastor of the Greater New Hope Baptist Church, commended directors for wanting to receive public opinion on the issue, but then launched into reasons why they were erred in their initial decision to go with the 4-3 split.

Fisher says group tried to convince Japan to allow imports

By FRANK TROMBLEY
Staff Writer

ODESSA — Ector County Judge Jan Fisher Thursday told Permian Basin International Trade Forum members her recent trip to Japan was not a sojourn, but part of a continuing U.S. effort to encourage the Japanese to relax barriers to U.S. trade.

Ms. Fisher was one of 10 young political leaders (five Democrats and five Republicans) selected by the American Council of Young Political Leaders to make the 15-day trip to Japan that began with a briefing by U.S. State Department officials in Washington to familiarize delegates with U.S. and Japanese trade policies and problems.

The judge told about 20 PBITF members and guests attending the monthly luncheon meeting at the Odessa Hilton that one of the objectives of the group's mission during the visit was "to encourage the Japanese to reduce their reliance on export for their economic well-being."

According to Ms. Fisher, a Democrat, Japanese trade policy is based, in part, on "a myth that the Japanese feel that they're a very small country (and that) their survival is dependent on exporting, particularly exporting their manufactured goods."

Referring to Japan's protectionist attitude toward importing goods from other countries, she said, "They feel that they're much too small to allow other manufactured goods into their country. This, indeed, is a myth," Ms. Fisher said, "because they are, in the world field of economic giants, they are certainly one of them."

The mission of the delegation during its Feb. 1 through Feb. 14 visit was multi-fold, she said.

In addition to trying "to open up markets for United States goods, which would allow the Japanese consumer fair and equitable access to U.S. products," the group was instructed "to communicate...that there are a great many bills before Congress at this particular time which were in the form of retaliation, which would form barriers for Japanese products coming into the United States."

Delegation members, in their many meetings with Japanese government officials and businessmen, were expected to convey the message that "there is a great feeling in the United States in favor of protectionistic legislation, so either their barriers come down very quickly or they were going to see barriers in the trade area originating here in the United States."

Essentially, she said, this is the same message being carried to Japan by "each delegation, each trade representative, each person representing the White House and Congress" for the past year or so.

Ms. Fisher observed that there is a very strong feeling of nationalism in Japan, even among consumers she and other delegation members talked to.

Referring to the possibility of an oil import tax and its potential impact on gasoline prices in Texas, she said, "I don't think any of us in the State of Texas would mind paying more for gasoline if, in fact, Congress would come out with an import fee for oil products. We in Texas wouldn't mind paying that to protect our own economy."

That fairly well typifies the attitude of the Japanese consumer, she said, observing that extends to a ban on the importation of rice.

The Japanese pay nearly twice as much for their own rice than they would if the U.S. was allowed to export rice to Japan, she said. "There is a feeling (among Japanese consumers) that they have to protect their own economy."

Survival instincts are "very great" in Japan and "that particular attitude is felt from government to the corporation to the consumer and it's well communicated," Ms. Fisher stated.

Part of the problem with exporting goods to Japan concerns the fact that Japan has virtually no natural resources and because of this, she said, the Japanese hesitate to allow importation of anything to which someone adds value through the manufacturing process.

Therefore, most of the things the Japanese import are raw materials. "They add the value onto the raw materials and then they export the manufactured goods," stated Ms. Fisher.

The Ector County judge observed that there is a marked difference in the climate that exists between the Japanese government, corporations and corporate employees and the climate in the United States.

While the government-business-employee relationship in the United States can be viewed as adversarial, in Japan there is almost an oneness of spirit, what Ms. Fisher described as "a sense of shared faith."

Man could face life in prison after federal jury convicts him

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

An Odessa man who skipped bail and failed to report to the U.S. deputy marshal for his trip to federal prison to begin serving a five-year term last Sept. 22 was convicted on five counts Thursday by a federal jury in Midland.

The man, Wayne Ross Brunson, 25, could be sentenced to life in prison for contempt of court and four additional convictions in addition to the five-year prison term.

He is to be sentenced during the week of April 6.

Last Sept. 4, U.S. District Court Judge Lucius D. Bunton sentenced Brunson to five years in prison for causing a volatile chemical used to make amphetamines — "speed" — to be shipped on a commercial flight from Dallas to Midland.

The chemical, acetic anhydride, was discovered by American Airlines personnel on March 15, 1986, after a four-liter bottle of the chemical broke as it was being unloaded from the aircraft.

The Federal Bureau of Investigation promptly arrested Brunson, who later pleaded guilty to the offense and said he was "sorry for what I done."

At time of sentencing last September, Brunson's attorney, David Smith of Odessa, said Brunson offense was "just a crime of stupidity."

The judge agreed and said that Brunson's actions endangered a "whole plane-load of people" who could have been killed had the chemical exploded or caught fire. Outside of its illicit use, the chemical is used to make plastics, fibers, pharmaceuticals, dyes and explosive.

Brunson had asked the judge for "a second chance," said he was getting married; and wanted to start his life anew.

The judge denied Brunson probation and sentenced him to five years in prison. Bunton ordered Brunson to report to U.S. Deputy Marshal Gail Boggs on Sept. 22 to begin serving his sentence.

Brunson did get married. But he did not report to the deputy marshal. Warrants were issued for his arrest.

Two months later, on Nov. 22, Brunson and Dean Cole were arrested in Odessa in the wake of a "high-speed chase" in which plastic bags of speed and a loaded pistol where thrown from a white pickup truck driven by Cole.

Brunson subsequently was indicted on five counts: receiving and possessing an AR-15 Colt rifle and a Rohm pistol, failing to appear to carry out of his five-year sentence, disobeying a court order not to commit any criminal violations, and possessing a controlled substance, amphetamines.

In the day-long trial, Brunson opted not to testify.

Brunson's defense attorney, H.W. "Woody" Leverett Jr., cautioned the jurors not to consider the indictment against Brunson or his decision not to testify as evidence of guilt.

"You can't consider Mr. Brunson's silence as any evidence of his guilt," Leverett said. "Mr. Brunson doesn't have to say one word. He doesn't have to prove himself innocent."

Further, Leverett said that the "quite natural human reaction" to associate an indictment with guilt "cannot be part of your make-up as jurors."

Despite his pleas, the defense attorney said that there "just ain't any doubt about" Brunson having to serve prison time for contempt of court, failure to appear and for transporting the chemical on the airline.

Leverett said that "the cops" never saw Brunson handling the unloaded rifle, which was "not being used as a gun-runner's gun" at the time of the arrest. There was no ammunition clip in the rifle, he said.

Stores to let some groups share marquee display

From Staff Reports

Bill Kent, president of Kent Oil, Inc., operator of 15 Kent Kwik convenience stores in West Texas, has announced that his stores will share marquee display space with qualified local non-profit organizations.

"We recognize that in these tight-budget times, non-profit organizations are hard pressed to advertise, and have to rely heavily on public service support. Our store locations offer high visibility and excellent traffic counts that will benefit these organizations," Kent said.

He said that his company's policy will be to offer space on a first come, first served basis to any local non-profit organization for projects that involve the entire community.

"We want to help the Boy Scouts, Girl Scouts, the YMCA, United Way agencies, Easter Seals and other programs along these lines," Kent said. He added that public service messages would be coordinated with Kent Kwik's own promotional messages.

"Due to our own promotional schedule, we suggest people call us four to six weeks in advance," he stated.

The person to contact for scheduling messages is Jeane Covey, who may be reached at 563-1620 during business hours. Public service messages can be posted in both Midland and Odessa, or exclusively in either city.

Kent Oil operates convenience stores in Midland, Odessa, Andrews, Big Lake and Monahans.

Letter says group on campaign to stop illegal aliens

ØZONA (AP) — Authorities searched Southwest Texas brush country after receiving a letter from a group that claims to have killed two undocumented Mexican aliens in a campaign to stop illegal immigration into the United States.

Department of Public Safety spokesman David Wells said authorities had never heard of the group called "New South Freedom Fighters," but said its claims were being investigated.

No bodies were found Thursday night in the search that was to resume this morning, DPS dispatcher Bob Falkner said.

The letter — sent to various government officials, including President Reagan, as well as least 12 media outlets — demands repeal of the amnesty portion of the Immigration Reform Act of 1986 and calls for Congress to authorize further U.S. intervention in Central America.

"The New South Freedom Fighters have turned to terrorism," the letter states. "Two Mexican illegals have been killed this last week in Southwest Texas, and their bodies were dumped and covered with light brush several thousand yards away from the road on Texas Highway 163 between Ozona and Juno, Texas.

"Two illegals will be sacrificed each month" until the group's demands are met, the letter states, adding that illegals from Mexico have "invaded this country and refused to leave."

The letter prompted an air and land search by the DPS' Criminal Intelligence Service, Texas Rangers, Crockett County Sheriff's Department and U.S. Border Patrol agents.

"They're trying to respond to see if there's anything to it," Wells said.

Crockett County Sheriff's deputy Aldo Gonzales said many illegal aliens use the sparsely populated county as a route for traveling from Mexico into the United States.

Bullock aide says '87 to be 'pretty bad year for Texas'

AUSTIN (AP) — One of the state's top revenue forecasters says the Texas economy has "bottomed out," but that was about the only optimistic note he sounded during a talk to newspaper editors.

"1987, on average, will still be a pretty bad year for Texas," Tom Plaut, a top aide to Comptroller Bob Bullock, said Thursday.

Plaut, Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby, three lawmakers and Gov. Bill Clements' top budget aide were panelists at a Capitol session sponsored by the Texas Associated Press Managing Editors.

The editors heard the state government fiscal doom-and-gloom story directly from men involved in writing the plot.

"Indications are the economy may be beginning to turn, but like a large ship on full steam, it doesn't turn around on a dime," said Bob Davis, Clements' director of budget and planning.

He said the governor's proposed 1988-89 state budget, which essentially continues current spending for most state agencies, could get Texas through the economic slump without dipping further into taxpayers' pockets.

"It is the governor's belief you cannot tax your way out of difficult economic times," Davis said.

But Hobby, responding to a question from the floor, said Clements' plan might hold the line on state taxes while sparking higher local levies.

"The answer is very simple," Hobby said in response to whether the Clements budget would force higher local taxes. "It's yes."

Investigation continues into stabbing incident

From Staff Reports

Police are continuing their investigation into the stabbing incident Thursday that sent a 26-year-old Midland man to the hospital in critical condition.

The victim, Luis Flores Jr. of Midland, was rushed to MMH where he underwent surgery twice for stab wounds to the chest, scalp, abdomen, face, and back. He was listed in critical condition this morning, a hospital spokeswoman said.

Although police say they have a suspect, Flores told them he does not wish to press charges.

Also, police are investigating an alleged sexual assault Wednesday at the Midland Association for Retarded Citizens, 2701 N. A St.

According to police reports, officers were called to the emergency room at MMH Wednesday night where a male resident of MarcWood alleged he had been assaulted.

Police Sgt. B.G. Johnson said a sexual assault test kit proved inconclusive, so the investigation continues.

Police also are investigating the sexual assault this morning of a 24-year-old woman at Loop 250 and U.S. Interstate 20.

According to the report, officers were called to the south service road along I20 near Loop 250 about 2:45 a.m. in response to a one-car rollover.

When they arrived, the woman told them she had been sexually asaulted by a man she had picked up at an unknown location, the report said.

Police Roundup

The woman told the police the man sexually assaulted her, drove her to the intersection of I-20 and Loop 250 when the Chevrolet Impala in which she was riding veered off the roadway and overturned. When the car came to a rest, the suspect fled the scene, according to the report.

Police say they aren't sure whether foul play is involved in the disappearance of a 38-year-old Midland woman.

According to police reports, Mary D. Renteria, 501 S. Loraine St., was reported missing by her husband, Erasmo Renteria, after she failed to return home from a visit to Canton, Ala., earlier this week.

The report said Mrs. Renteria had been visiting her mother when she called her husband on Monday, claiming she needed money to return home.

Renteria told police he wired his wife $115 cash and that her mother took her to the Greyhound Bus Station the same day. She was expected to arrive in Midland Tuesday from Dallas, but failed to do so.

According to the report, Mrs. Renteria is described as being 5 feet, 3 inches tall and weighs about 165 pounds. She has reddish-blonde hair and was believed to be wearing blue jeans, a navy jacket and carrying a blue suitcase.

Man convicted in toilet paper theft

HOUSTON (AP) — A former storeroom supervisor at a Houston hospital is on probation for 10 years and must pay a $10,000 fine after a jury found him guilty of stealing 79,680 rolls of two-ply toilet paper.

Edward Warren Williams, 45, was arrested after he was fired from his job at Jefferson Davis Hospital.

The jury in State District Judge Carl Walker's court returned the verdict Thursday.

Prosecutor Eric Hagstete said Williams picked up the paper from a supplier from September 1984 to April 1985 and is believed to have sold it to a janitorial firm. He was nabbed when he continued to get a load of paper from the supplier even though he had been fired from his job.

Williams contended the 835-case shortage was the result of a record-keeping problem and insisted he delivered the paper to the hospital warehouse.

MCHD

"The at-large system is a discriminatory...the at-large system represents special interests and is removed from the public...it is more responsible to the powerful and not the common...special interest groups manipulate...

"This is nothing more than pseudo-intellectual racism," Williams said. "You need to have more faith in the American way...you're too far removed from my thoughts. I doubt there are any poor people on this board."

Threats of lawsuits were voiced.

LULAC and the Black Advisory Council are currently awaiting the decision of the MISD's second appeal following U.S. District Judge Lucius Bunton's ruling that MISD's 4-3 split proposal was unconstitutional.

"I can assure you we will win," said Ms. Hernandez of her prior promise to sue MCHD into creating a solely single-member system.

Cahoon has said in earlier interviews, the hospital district is unlike other taxing entities such as the school district, city, college or county.

If the MCHD appears to be politicized, a generous base of contributors who greatly aid MMH in its quest to become a regional medical center, would dissipate, the director said.

Cahoon noted that Odessa's county hospital, Medical Center Hospital, is run by county commissioners and is sometimes faced with political problems outweighing the problems of health care for the citizens.

However, minority representatives argued that elections were the issue at this point.

Tempers flared and many walked out during the discussion.

Members of TAG remained though, and sought to make their point heard. Not as much concerned with the question of discrimination, TAG members expressed concern that now was just not the time to redistrict and urged directors to wait until the MISD appeal was decided upon in New Orleans.

"TAG urges the directors to withdraw the proposed 4-3 redistricting plan from the Legislature pending a definitive ruling on the MISD lawsuit by the Fifth Circuit. To do otherwise is not only ill-timed, but causes what was originally a well-intentioned act to be perceived as tokenism by the members of the local minority communities.

"More importantly to the members of TAG, if the MCHD continues with this plan the result will surely be a single-member district lawsuit which will burden the already overworked staff, distract the directors from their duties as 'watch dogs' of the budget, and probably result in an increase in taxes for the MCHD," said TAG executive committee member Richard A. Mendenhall.

Members of the MCHD promised to pull the bill from the legislature until MISD's suit is decided upon, if and only if, LULAC and other minority groups agree — in writing — to hold off on yet another lawsuit until the MISD decision comes down.

"The board of directors will withdraw action on its proposed 4-3 reorganization of the board dependent on LULAC, et al., withdrawing their action of lawsuit until the MISD suit is decided and further informal discussions take place between the concerned minorities and the board," said Parks.

The letters are slated to exchange hands some time next week.

UPS Foundation donates $10,000 to Casa de Amigos

From Staff Reports

Casa de Amigos, a local United Way social service agency, has received a $10,000 grant from the UPS Foundation, the main charitable arm of United Parcel Service.

The grant was presented earlier this month in Midland by Scott Barker, employment manager, and Ronald Maulsby, district personnel manager, of the New Mex-Tex district of UPS. Gerald Naber, local manager, and Robert Gomez, on-car supervisor with UPS were also present.

The unrestricted cash grant is part of a nationwide program which was started by the UPS Foundation in 1984.

Annually each of the 66 UPS districts submit nominations from their communities for consideration by the Foundation. This year 65 grants, with a value of more than $1.6 million, are being made, according to UPS spokesman.

"We are most grateful for this contribution," said Lael Cordes-Pitts, executive director of Casa, who revealed the grant will be used for the purchase of computer equipment to upgrade record-keeping capabilities for the agency.

"Our activites are made possible through support from the private sector," said Ms. Cordes-Pitts. "Without such help, we could not function."

Casa de Amigos has existed in the Midland community sice 1964. It serves low-income and minority residents of Midland with much-needed programs and services. These include senior activities, social services, education opportunities, and health screenings.

"UPS believes it is important to help support those organizations dedicated to improving the quality of life in the communities in which we operate," said Maulsby. "We regard that as a corporate citizenship responsibility."

"This endeavor enables the foundation to donate funds to worthwhile local organizations," Maulsby said. "We want these grants to make a significant difference to the recipient organizations, to allow them to continue their valuable work, or to start up a new project that may not have been possible otherwise."

The prosecutor, Assistant U.S. Attorney Steven "Jake" Snyder of San Antonio, reminded the jurors not to "leave your common sense at the courthouse door" in rendering their verdicts.

"We're not asking you to engage into a psychoanalysis of Mr. Brunson."

Snyder said that Brunson and Cole were partners in a "drug business. They both owned that dope, obviously."

"They were throwing stuff out of the (pickup) window" while they were driving 90 miles an hour in trying to elude pursuing Ector County Sheriff's deputies in Odessa on Nov. 22.

"It wasn't very pretty what he (Brunson) did," Snyder told the jurors. "It should inflame you. Go through the evidence. You use your common sense."

The jurors deliberated about 40 minutes before they returned five guilty verdicts against Brunson, who is being held without bail in the federal unit of Midland City Jail.

FISHER

"Government and business and the employee," she said, "recognize the simple notion that they all share the same fate. The government realizes that if they make business too difficult for corporations that the government will suffer, so they work with the corporations. The corporations see government as their single largest shareholder because they turn over 50 percent of their profits to the government every year," Ms. Fisher said.

"So that close cooperation, Japan Inc, if you will, is obvious and I don't mean that in a derogatory sense. I think we need a little bit more of that in the United States, a little bit more of the realization by government that the success of corporations is essential to the success of the government," Ms. Fisher said.

"The (Japanese) government also realizes that the better off the corporation is, the better off their employees are. They keep employees employed and if people are employed they are tax producers rather than a tax drain," she stated.

Larvae of Nantucket pine tip moths damaging to small pines

Minzenmayer

The Nantucket pine tip moth (Rhyacionia frustrana Comstock) is a small moth occurring throughout the pine forests of southern and eastern United States. In Texas, the larvae are responsible for an immense amount of damage to small pines in plantations, forests and ornamental plantings. Although trees are seldom killed by its attacks, repeated infestations reduce the growth rate and cause deformation of the main stem, loss in wood quality and a bushy appearance. Open-growth trees less than 15 feet tall are most severely attacked.

The adult moth has a wingspread of about one-half inch and is generally a reddish-brown color with silver-grey marking. The eggs are one-thirtysecond of an inch in diameter, white to orange in color. When young, the larvae are tiny, cream-colored caterpillars approximately one-sixteenth of an inch long. The head is black. Full grown larvae reach a size of about one-fourth of an inch in length and are colored light brown to orange. The pupae, when first formed, are about the same color as the full grown larvae but become darker as they mature.

The tip moth spends the winter months as a pupa within the injured terminals and twigs of the tree. From early March in southern Texas until early May in extreme North Texas, the pupae, with the aid of a series of abdominal spines, work their way out of the infested tips. The adult moths are then free to emerge, leaving ther empty pupal cases projecting from the twigs.

About 2 days after emerging, female moths begin laying eggs. Flying at night, moths usually place the eggs, singly on the needles, buds or shoots. The egg's incubation period may be as long as 31 days during cool spring weather or as short as 5 to 10 days during late summer generations.

As the larva develops, fecal material and resin exuded from the stems begin to accumulate on the outside of the tips. Eventually the mining of the larva severs the conductive tissue of the tip and the affected portion turns brown. The bud seems to be the most desirable food of the new shoots. After the bud has been eaten, the larvae bore down the center of the young stem.

Maintenance of high tree thrift is one of the most efective methods for reducing the incidence of tip moth damage. Management practices that promote rapid growth through the first 6 to 8 years of age will lessen the time spent in the susceptible stage of tree development.

For high value ornamental pines, control may be accomplished with repeated insecticidal treatments.

If a chemical spray is used, application timing is of utmost importance to obtain an effective kill. The spray should be directed at young larvae that are feeding on the exterior of the pine shoot. Spray applications should be made about April 1, June 1, July 15 and Sept. 1. Exact spray timing will vary from season to season, although frequent tree inspection will aid in judging the proper time to spray.

Power sprayers are best for spraying standard trees. Thoroughly cover the foliage and twigs, especially in the upper half of the tree crown. If heavy rains occur within two days after spraying, re-spray the tree.

Suggested insecticides include: Orthene, Cygon, Defend, and Di-syston (restricted use pesticide). Each of these compounds is classified as systematic insecticides. Follow product label for application rates.

Government's sugar program blamed for hikes in production

WASHINGTON (AP) — If Agriculture Department economists are correct, U.S. sugar production may increase again this year as Congress is prodded by the administration and consumer groups to come up with a less sweet subsidy program.

The sugar industry contends, however, that the current law needs no radical surgery and that producers and consumers are being well-served.

Agriculture Secretary Richard E. Lyng has blamed the government's sugar program, with its protective quotas and high price supports for causing recent increases in domestic production.

There is a huge world supply of sugar, and prices have been low. But U.S. producers are protected from being engulfed by cheaper sugar from Latin America, Africa and the Far East by quotas assigned to individual countries.

Last December, Lyng announced a 41 percent cut in the 1987 import quota to just over 1 million tons from 1.72 million tons in 1986.

According to a new report by the department's Economic Research Service, U.S. prices of raw cane sugar are expected "to continue strong" in 1987, averaging about 21.8 cents per pound earlier this month, the highest in more than two years.

The world price of raw sugar, by comparison, was 6.05 cents per pound in 1986. And that was up sharply from about 4 cents in 1985.

Retail prices paid by American consumers averaged 35 cents per pound last year, down slightly from 35.3 cents in 1985, the report said. Some increase is expected in 1987, but prices still should remain in the range of 35 to 36 cents per pound.

The administration wants Congress to change the sugar portion of the Food Security Act of 1985 to reduce costs of the sugar program and reduce the built-in incentives that trigger greater domestic production in times of global over-supply.

AGRICULTURE

One of the biggest changes would be a reduction in the sugar price support rate to 12 cents a pound for raw sugar from the present rate of 18 cents. If approved, the new rates would go into effect with the 1987 crop.

To compensate sugarcane and sugarbeet growers for the lower rates, payments would be provided for four years to help producers switch to other crops, with costs estimated at more than $1 billion over the transition period.

Lyng predicts the sugar program will be the most controversial farm policy change that will be tackled by Congress this year.

Domestic sugar production comes from both sugarcane and sugarbeets. Cane is produced mostly in Florida, Hawaii, Louisiana and Texas. Sugarbeets are grown in a dozen states: California, Colorado, Idaho, Michigan, Minnesota, Montana, Nebraska, North Dakota, Ohio, Oregon, Texas and Wyoming.

Total U.S. sugar production for the 1986-87 crop year is estimated at 6.48 million tons, raw value, up 11 percent from 1985-86. Nearly three-fourths of the increase came from larger output of sugarbeets, which produced 3.33 million tons of sugar.

"U.S. sugarbeet acreage for harvest in 1987-88 may be up slightly from 1986-87's 1.19 million acres," the report said. "Significant increases are expected in California and Michigan, but acreage may be down in the Red River Valley."

Looking at the situation for U.S. domestic sugarcane, the report said cane sugar output in 1986-87 was a record of 3.15 million tons, raw value, up almost 4 percent from 1985-86.

The area used to grow cane increased to 750,300 acres from 722,800 acres in 1985-86, reflecting a jump of almost 10 percent in Louisiana's acreage.

"Sugarcane industry sources estimate that the U.S. cane area for processing and seed cane could increase slightly (in 1987-88) and has the potential to at least equal 1986-87's sugar output of 3.15 million tons, raw value," the report said.

The Washington-based consumer group, Public Voice for Food and Health Policy, says the sugar program translates into a $3 billion annual subsidy for U.S. sugar interests through higher prices paid by consumers.

But an industry group, the Sugar Information Bureau Inc., disputes claims that the sugar program has not served the nation well. The bureau is supported by producers and processors representing both cane and beet interests.

"During the 40 years the United States Sugar Act was in effect, the sugar prices in the United States seldom varied more than a cent or two per pound," the bureau says in a background paper. "The shelf price of sugar increased only through general inflation — considerably less than increases for other staples."

The report said that when the Sugar Act expired in 1974, prices fluctuated wildly and many American sugar producers went out of business. And consumers often faced high prices.

Despite chilly weather farmers still planting

COLLEGE STATION (AP) — Texas was a bit chilly the first few days of spring, but farmers continued full speed ahead with planting operations, says Dr. Zerle L. Carpenter, director of the Texas Agricultural Extension Service.

Corn and sorghum planting was active throughout central, eastern, coastal and southern areas where fields were not too wet, Carpenter said in his weekly report on the state's agriculture. Planting ranged 40 to 85 percent complete in these regions while corn planting in Southwest Texas stood at the halfway point due to rain delays, he said. About 75 percent of the cotton acreage has been planted in the Rio Grande Valley while about 10 percent of the crop has been planted in the Coastal Bend area.

Soil temperatures continued to moderate although this week's cool weather will have an adverse effect. Readings at the 4-inch depth for the past week as reported by the Southwest Agricultural Weather Service Center at Texas A&M University were as follows: Austin, 61 degrees Fahrenheit; Beaumont, 68; Big Spring, 59; Bushland, 49; College Station, 60; Fort Stockton, 55; Haskell, 59; Lavon Dam (near Dallas), 62; Lubbock, 55; Lufkin, 61; San Angelo, 60; Stephenville, 64; and Waco, 60. Minimum soil temperatures recommended by the Extension Service for good seed germination are 50 degrees F. for corn, 55 for sorghum and 65 for cotton.

Planting of such early season vegetables as onions and potatoes continued over northern areas of Texas while onion harvesting has started in the Rio Grande Valley. Also, sugarcane harvesting continued in the Valley, and citrus harvesting was in the final stages.

Some cotton remained to be harvested in the Rolling Plains due to extensive wet conditions, Carpenter said. About 25 percent of the crop is still in the field in several counties.

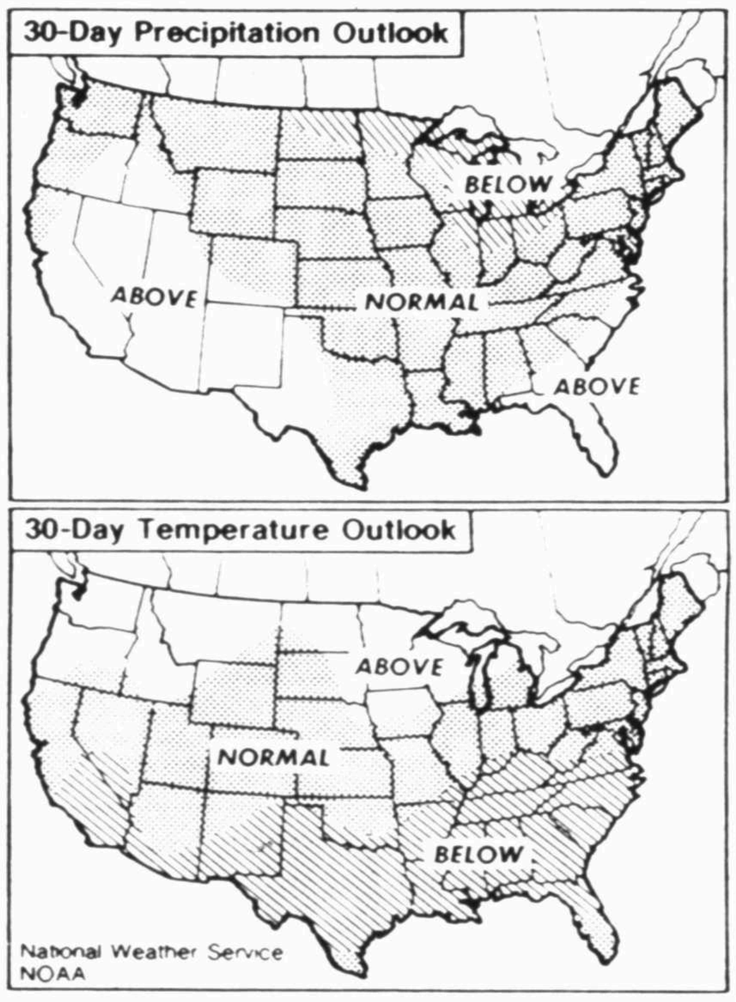

The state's wheat crop is continuing to make good progress. Fields in southern counties are starting to head and yield prospects generally look good at this time. However, leaf rust and insect problems could affect the final outcome of the crop, Carpenter noted.

Reports from district Extension agents showed these conditions.

PANHANDLE: Blizzard conditions early in the week hampered field operations. Wheat is looking good and pastures and ranges are starting to green up. Onion planting has started in Deaf Smith County.

ROLLING PLAINS: Heavy rains last week continued to add to the woes of cotton farmers in a few counties where about 25 percent of the crop remains to be harvested. Also, wet fields have slowed fertilizer and herbicide applications on wheat. Cattle are making excellent gains on graze-out wheat. Onion planting remains active in Knox County.

FAR WEST: Alfalfa irrigation is under way in Pecos County and surrounding areas. Alfalfa weevils are showing up in some fields. Farmers are continuing to get land ready for spring crops; recent high winds have dried the topsoil. Onions and cantaloupes look good. Livestock are in good condition; sheep and goat shearing is about complete.

Agricultural experiment stations 100 years old

WASHINGTON (AP) — In virtually every nook and cranny of the U.S. agricultural research community, there is a notation on a calendar, bulletin board, diary or in-house publication that 1987 is the 100th anniversary of the Hatch Act.

The federal bureaucracies, including the Agriculture Department and Smithsonian Institution, are paying homage. Politicians of Capitol Hill and in statehouses across the land are tipping their hats.

In signing the legislation, President Grover Cleveland on March 2, 1887, created a nationwide system of state agricultural experiment stations that have helped develop new crops, improve livestock and come up with thousands of ways of making life better for Americans.

The Smithsonian Institution, a key player in the centennial observance, noted that the earliest American settlers engaged in agricultural experimentation but that it wasn't until the 1800s that agricultural research was organized with both public and private support.

It was Rep. William Henry Hatch of Hannibal, Mo., chairman of the House Agriculture Committee, whose name would carry the new law into its second century. The Smithsonian described Hatch as a former Confederate army officer and a lawyer who had led "a number of congressional skirmishes on behalf of the American farmer," as evidenced by more than 50 pieces of legislation during his 16 years in the House.

"This landmark legislation build a system of research that provide farmers and ranchers with the scientific knowledge that led to the American agricultural revolution," the Smithsonian's report said. "It provided the scientific foundation upon which this nation's industrial base was constructed as well as providing a continued investment in the development and training of personnel devoted to scientific research and original investigations into agriculture."

According to the Smithsonian, Hatch was so proud of what the new law provided that "he would not have been amused by modern confusion of this act with the Hatch Act of 1939 which restricts political involvement of government employees."

The Smithsonian's report noted that the first state agricultural experiment stations — still in operation today — were established in Connecticut and California in 1875, a dozen years before the Hatch Act. And similar operations were developed in other states.

In its description of a new "Search for Life" exhibit opening later this year at the National Museum of American History in Washington, D.C., the Smithsonian noted:

"Behind many household items there is a little known agricutural research story. The clothes we wear, the food we eat, the air we breathe, the water we drink, the land that sustains us and many of the products we use are the result of agricultural research."

Rep. Kika de la Garza, D-Texas, the current chairman of the House Agriculture Committee, noted that Hatch also was a Democrat and came from "the southern part of our country." And many of the basic challenges facing agriculture remain today, he said.

New cherry tree may be hardy to 'cold'

WASHINGTON (AP) — Tests are being made on a new variety of ornamental cherry tree from Japan, which the Agriculture Department says might be able to thrive in some of the coldest parts of the United States.

"As far as we know, the tree has never been killed by cold temperatures in Japan. It could possibly live in even colder climates here," said Roland M. Jefferson, a cherry tree expert for the department's Agricultural Research Service. "We expect that places as far north as Minnesota will have, for the first time, an ornamental double-flowering cherry tree that is extremely hardy."

The trees survive in readings as low as 31 degrees below zero Fahrenheit in Japan, Jefferson said Tuesday in an announcement by the agency. Double-flowering cherry trees in the United States usually can withstand weather no colder than minus 10 degrees.

Jefferson said the tree — Prunus sargentii — was patented in Japan in 1981 by its discoverer, Rokuro Inazawa. It was Inazawa's daughter who called the American's attention to the tree while Jefferson was on a six-month trip last year to Japan, South Korea and Taiwan in search of seeds to improve the Japanese flowering cherry trees now growing in this country.

The new tree is named Kushiro Yae — Kushiro for the Japanese city where it was discovered, and Yae, meaning double.

Jefferson said the new tree's double blossoms bear 25 to 50 petals and that it is "much hardier than the single-flowering variety that will soon be bursting into bloom around the capital's Tidal Basin."

It will be years before the new trees are available to the public, however, because of quarantine testing to make sure the budwood or vegetative buds Jefferson brought from Japan are free of diseases. The quarantine alone could take as long as six years.

Jefferson also brought back from Taiwan budwood from a warm-weather double-flowering cherry tree which would be suited to southern parts of the United States, and samplings or germplasm from wild cherry species, which are not found in this country.

Tips ensure lawn gets off to good start

Kiker

About this time of the year home lawns need a boost to get them in shape for spring. Here are some suggestions that can get a lawn off to a good start and help maintain it throughout the growing season.

March:
1. Water two times, 1 inch per application.
2. Check thatch thickness; remove some if greater than ½ inch.
3. Mow at 1½-inch height.

April:
1. Water once a week, 1 inch per application.
2. Apply five to 10 pounds of 16-8-8, 12-6-6 or 10-5-5 and five pounds of copperas (iron sulfate) per 1,000 square feet of turf.
3. Check for fungus problems.

May:
1. Water once a week, 1 inch per application.
2. Broadcast seed into thin areas.

June:
1. Water every five to seven days, 1 inch per application.
2. If you want a dark green lawn, apply five pounds each of 21-0-0 and copperas per 1,000 square feet and increase watering and mowing.

July:
1. Water every five to seven days, 1 inch per application.
2. Raise mower 2 inches.
3. Check lawn for white grubs and treat before grubs reach one-half inch in leangth.
4. Check for bermuda mites.

August:
1. Water every five to seven days, 1 inch per application.
2. Check for white grubs and don't hesitate to treat again if you treated in July but still have grubs.
3. Check for bermuda mites.

Adjust all spring and summer water applications to your own needs; soil must be moist 6 inches deep. Don't water in the hottest part of the day. Water infrequently and deeply, rather than light, frequent waterings because this produces a deep root system.

Mow frequently enough that only one-third of grass height is removed with each mowing throughout the season.

Dollar down

LONDON (AP) — The dollar fell against all major currencies in light European trading today.

Currency traders said the dollar was being pulled down by persistent bearish sentiment, but concern over possible market intervention by major central banks was preventing a steep fall.

There were no signs of intervention early in the European session, but the central Bank of Japan intervened heavily in Tokyo in support of the dollar.

Tokyo traders said the Bank of Japan bought an estimated $300 million to $500 million in the morning session alone.

It was the fourth straight day of intervention reported in Tokyo, and Bank of Japan Governor Satoshi Sumita said the central bank would continue take act, as necessary, to maintain a stable dollar-yen rate.

The dollar closed in Tokyo at 149.00 Japanese yen, down from 149.40 yen Thursday. Later, in London, the dollar fell to 148.10 yen.

Midmorning dollar rates in Europe compared with late Thursday:

—1.8225 West German marks, down from 1.8285

—1.5190 Swiss francs, down from 1.5275

—6.0650 French francs, down from 6.0950

Gold bullion rose sharply in active dealings. London's five biggest bullion houses fixed a recommended gold price of $415.90 a troy ounce, up from $411 late Thursday.

A London trader said bullion was helped by bullish option operators and the dollar's weakness. Today was declaration day for over-the-counter March bullion options, and many buyers were trying to push the price up, the trader said.

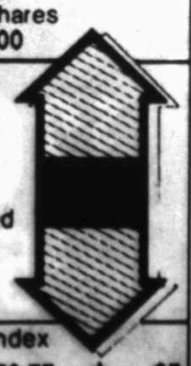

In Zurich, the metal rose to a bid of $415.30 from $411.50.

Earlier, in Hong Kong, gold had closed at a bid of $414.68, up from $410.91.

Silver bullion rose in London to a bid of $5.95 an ounce, up from $5.89.

Wallace will continue battle for oil import fee

By JOHN PAUL PITTS
Business/Oil Editor

Texas Railroad Commission Chairman Mack Wallace let members of the Permian Basin Petroleum Association executive committee and guests know in no uncertain terms Thursday that he doesn't think much of the Reagan administration's energy policy and plans to continue his efforts to get an oil import fee.

In town for Energy Appreciation Week, Wallace told the gathering at Midland Petroleum Club that we could not depend on the Middle East for our oil, and must stabilize oil prices immediately to save the domestic petroleum industry and guarantee our own reserves.

"Do you want to depend on sheiks, ayatollahs and Gadhafis for your oil? Do you really think we can count on people who send little children and old men into mine fields to spare the soldiers? These are people who believe you kill to get into heaven and view us as infidels," he warned.

Wallace who has served three terms as Railroad Commissioner said that petroleum touches all our lives a thousand times a day and was too important a commodity to be trusted to people that would cut off a hand for stealing or a head for adultery.

"Nations do not have friends they have interests," said Wallace. "It has been that way since the first national border was scratched during the time of the Roman Empire. If you think the Arabs will set the price of oil for the best interests of producers in the Permian Basin, you're crazy. They will set it to destroy the American petroleum industry."

He said if we think we have friends we should remind ourselves how much the Canadians charge Americans for natural gas.

Wallace who subscribes to the Nixon policy of energy independence is furious that the policy has been abandoned by the present administration, saying that America still has vast oil and coal reserves to be developed. "We have got more coal than the Saudi's have oil."

The testy East Texas lawyer urged: "We need to get mad! If you can't get mad now, you don't have much mad in you." He said those who claimed a free market for petroleum was either a fool or telling a deliberate lie.

He also took a swipe at those who suggest that an import fee would be "socialistic." He explained: "Tariffs are not socialism. We have tariffs on teddy bears, underwear, shingles, shoes, neckties and automobiles just to name a few." He added that when he first started talking about an import taroff on crude oil in 1984 a lot of people laughed, but they weren't laughing anymore, and said that a import fee on crude oil was far from being a dead issue.

He also took a swipe at the notion that it was best for America to utilize cheap foreign crude. "When you count how much we spend on aircraft

Gas, coal forces square off in Fuel Use Act fight

By PEGGY ROBERSON
Washington Correspondent

WASHINGTON — The Senate Energy Committee has voted to end the Fuel Use Act's restrictions on new gas-fired power plants after the coal industry's allies attached an amendment requiring the plants to be "coal capable."

Kentucky Sen. Wendell Ford, a Democrat whose state leads the nation in coal production, authored the amendment requiring new power plants to be capable of converting to coal during future gas shortages.

The gas industry has complained that making plants coal capable would destroy the economics of gas-fired plants.

An expected fight in the committee — before a standing-room-only crowd — failed to materialize after Ford and committee chairman Sen. J. Bennett Johnston, D-La., had a private negotiating session and resolved the issue.

BP bids for rest of Standard shares

$7.4 billion offered for 45 percent

By STEVE LOHR
New York Times News Service

LONDON (NYT) — The British Petroleum Co. announced Thursday that it would offer $7.4 billion for the 45 percent of the Standard Oil Co. it does not already own.

If the offer is accepted, the purchase would equal the third biggest takeover in American history and would greatly increase British Petroleum's stake in the United States, giving it complete control over the company that John D. Rockefeller founded 117 years ago.

Sir Peter Walters, the chairman of British Petroleum, said full ownership of Standard Oil would give his company a platform from which to start further expansion efforts in America. And he called the United States "a focal point for B.P.'s future strategy."

The move would also give British Petroleum, the largest company in Britain, the No. 3 ranking among the world's major oil companies, trailing only the Royal Dutch-Shell Group and Exxon. British Petroleum is currently among the second rank of major oil companies, which includes Mobil, Chevron and Amoco, all of which have roughly the same revenues and oil reserves.

"This lifts us well ahead of that second tier," Sir Peter said.

With full ownership of Standard Oil, British Petroleum would gain management freedom and access to the Cleveland company's cash flow. At present, British Petroleum income from Standard is limited to dividend payments and, although it is the majority shareholder, it does not have a majority on Standard's board.

Whether British Petroleum's $70-a-share offer will be high enough to win approval from the Standard Oil board and the minority shareholders remains uncertain. Standard Oil's share price rose Thursday to exceed B.P.'s offering price.

Standard Oil jumped $6.50 Thursday in trading on the New York Stock Exchange, to $71.375. Other oil issues rose modestly. In London, British Petroleum's share price rose on the announcement, closing up 32 pence, or 51 cents, to 920 pence, which is equal to $14.72.

GSI returns to downtown

From Staff Reports

Geophysical Services Inc. announced today that it will move its operations back to downtown Midland after an absence of seven years.

The firm will occupy 12,000 square feet of office space on the ninth floor of the Briercroft Building for its processing, administrative and operations, according to Ron Rollins, mid-continent area manager for GSI.

He said 34 employees would be involved in the move.

A subsidiary of Texas Instruments Inc., GSI moved from downtown Midland in March of 1980 to the Texas Instrument plant at Air Terminal in 1980 to take advantage of extra office space at that facility. Now, says Rollins, expansion at the Texas Instrument plant plus a desire to get back downtown and closer to the customer, has resulted in the relocation.

National consumer prices surge again in February

WASHINGTON (AP) — Consumer prices, reflecting increases for energy and a wide range of other goods, rose a hefty 0.4 percent in February, the government reported today.

The rise in the Labor Department's Consumer Price Index followed a 0.7 percent surge in January. So far this year, consumer prices have increased at an annual rate of 6.7 percent — compared to the 1.1 percent rise for all of 1986.

Economists said the February increase was, in part, a direct reflection of higher import prices stemming from declines in the value of the dollar against foreign currencies.

Higher energy prices were also a factor in the February increase, but not to the extent that they had been the month before.

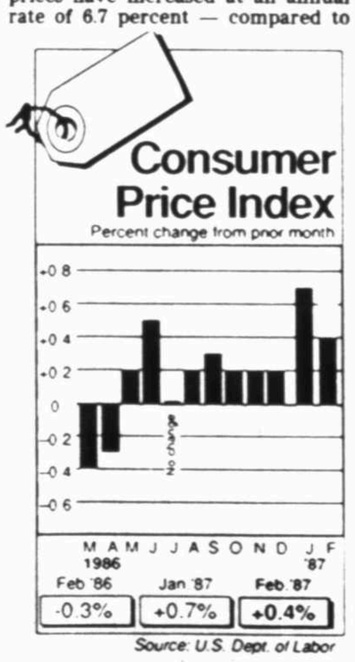

Gasoline prices were 4.2 percent higher at the pump in February than they were the money before, after rising 6.6 percent from December to January. Heating oil prices were up 4.4 percent, following a 9.8 percent rise in January.

The gains in gasoline and fuel oil prices accounted for roughly one-third of the overall February rise. Excluding energy, consumer prices increased 0.3 percent in February after a 0.5 percent rise in January.

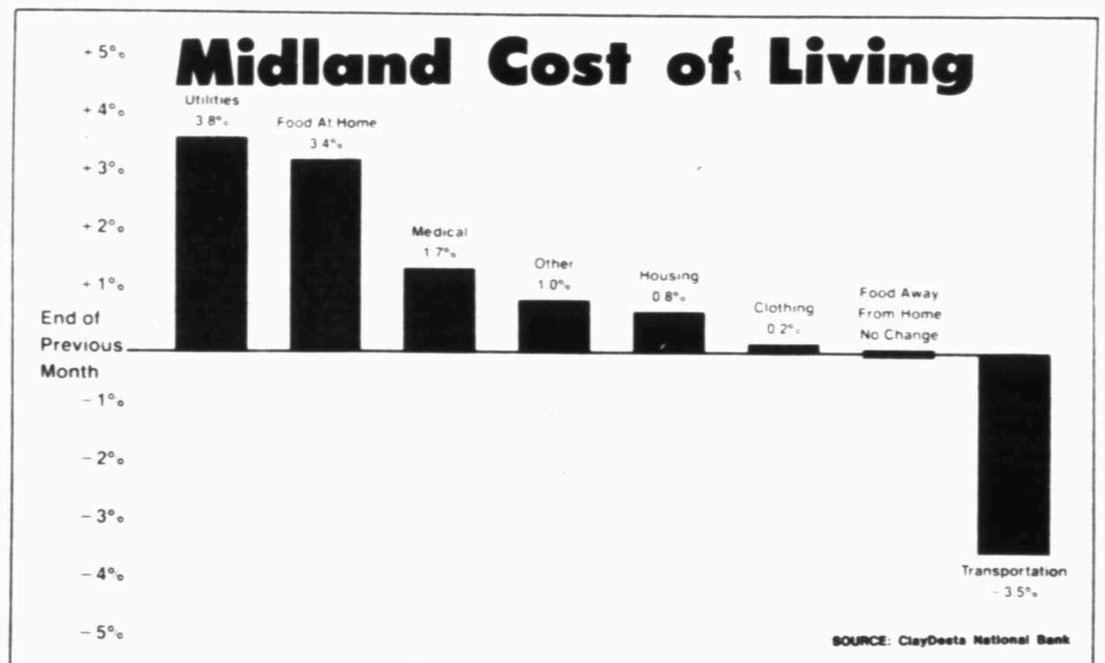

Food prices, meanwhile, increased 0.3 percent after a 0.4 percent gain the month before. Grocery prices were up 0.4 percent while restaurant meal prices rose 0.2 percent.

Housing costs, up a sharp 0.5 percent in January, advanced 0.4 percent in February.

Meanwhile, in one of the few decreases recorded last month, new automobile prices fell 1.1 percent, a decline largely reflecting renewed manufacturers' incentive programs. Car prices had risen 0.4 percent in January.

Utility prices force living costs higher

From Staff Reports

A 3.8 percent surge in utility costs helped push Midland's cost of living up 1 percent in February, according to a survey conducted by ClayDesta National Bank.

The increase was the second straight for the Tall City, and puts the six-month annualized inflation rate would at 2 percent. Over the past year, the cost of goods and services in Midland has fallen 0.1 percent.

Odessa saw a 0.05 percent rise in the cost of living during February, the fourth straight increase recorded in that city.

The discontinuation of the last rebate program caused electric bills to jump 11.1 percent, leading to February's 3.8 percent rise in utility costs. Gas and water rates remained stable. Over the past year, Midland utility bills have risen 1.7 percent, although a 3.2 percent fall has been recorded over the last six months.

ALLEN E. HOWLAND

The high cost of high living keeps going up

Howland

The evidence continues to pour in. The facts are making it clear that Texas oilmen in general — and Midland oilmen in particular — though still suffering from bad P.R. in many parts of the country, aren't living the Dynasty and Dallas lifestyles witnessed weekly in living rooms across the nation.

A case in point:

FACT A — During 1986, economic deflation lowered the cost of living in Midland by 2.6 percent, according to calculations by ClayDesta National Bank. Even with the 1.0 percent increase reported in today's bank figures, it still costs less to live in Midland in March 1987 than it did a year ago — 0.1 percent.

FACT B — The Moet & Chandon Champagne cost of "really" living index jumped by more than 6.1 percent in the same 12 months. This marked the third consecutive year that the Moet index outpaced the national consumer price index, which rose 1.9 percent last year.

In 1986, the cost of "high living" rose 5.0 percent while the consumer price index increased only 3.6 percent and Midland's cost of living rose a meager 1.1 percent.

LOGICAL CONCLUSION — There isn't much of an overlap between the Moet "ultimate luxury" shopping basket of goodies and a West Texas necessities list, otherwise the movement of the two indexes would be in the same direction. This obviously blows some holes in the common perception of high living on the West Texas Plains, perpetuated by the nighttime soaps.

Moet's upscale market basket contains a dozen "tres chic" items, including Beluga caviar, truffles, Dom Perignon champagne, a full length mink coat and a Rolls Royce Corniche convertible — the staples of a J.R. Ewing/Alexis Morrell-Carrington-Colby-Dexter lifestyle.

The full-length ladies' mink and 750 milliliter bottle of Dom Perignon showed the biggest increases last year. The cost of a high fashion mink stroller increased 14.5 percent to $15,750; the champagne up 9 percent to $59.95.

No item on the virtual "Robin Leach's Shopping List of the Rich and Famous" showed price declines during the year, although two remained stable at year-earlier levels. A $4,296 round-trip New York-to-Paris ticket on the Concorde and a $45 orchestra seat at "Cats" on Broadway were flat during the year.

Services were more expensive on the Worth Avenue-Rodeo Drive circuit in 1986 as well: an hour limousine rental was up 8.6 percent to $36; a day's maid service was up 3.9 percent to $80; and the cost of getting your hair washed, cut and dried at fashionable Bumble & Bumble in New York climbed 9.1 percent to $60.

While the Moet index may be a reliable economic barometer for the Gucci-shod Town & County/Robb Report crowd on the right and left coasts of the country, it cuts little fiscal ice in the Great Southwest.

On the other hand, ClayDesta's index incorporates such mundane goods as utilities, auto insurance, medical costs and a slightly more realistic grocery list: everything from eggs to bananas and canned tomatoes to canned sodas and coffee.

Living the good life has never been cheap or easy, but with luxury item prices going up more than three times faster than general consumer goods nationally — it's getting tougher all the time.

But then again, Mom always said life isn't fair!

Wainoco Oil recapitalizing

HOUSTON (SWN) — Wainoco Oil Corp. has announced a major recapitalization program, including the proposed offering of two million units of common shares and warrants; the planned redemption of its Shareholder Value Rights; and a change in its corporate structure which substantially reduces future income taxes.

Wainoco announced that it had filed a registration statement with the Securities and Exchange Commission for the offering of two million units consisting of two shares of common stock and one warrant per unit for a total of four million shares of common stock and two million warrants. Included in the two million units to be offered are 280,000 shares of common stock to be sold by Waverly Oil Co., a selling shareholder of Wainoco. Proceeds of the offering will be used to reduce bank debt. The company's outstanding 10-3/4 percent Subordinated Debentures may be used at face value to pay the exercise price of the warrants. The offering will be underwritten by the firms of E.F. Hutton & Company, Inc.; Kidder, Peabody & Co. Inc. and Smith Barney, Harris Upham & Co. Inc.

Simultaneous with the offering, Wainoco announced that it intends to redeem its Shareholder Value Rights attached to each common share at 10 cents per Right. Wainoco explained that without redemption of the Value Rights, the company would not have sufficient authorized and unissued shares of common stock to complete the units offering. Due to certain covenants under the company's 10-3/4 percent Subordinated Debentures, the Value Rights redemption is contingent upon the success of the units offering. Wainoco's Shareholder Purchase Rights distributed to the shareholders in June, 1986 are unaffected and remain valid.

Wainoco further reported that as the result of the liquidation of its Canadian subsidiary into the parent company, it will be able to offset all of its corporate overhead expenses and some of its debenture interest against Canadian income for tax purposes. More imporantly, Wainoco's pool of future Canadian tax deductions has been increased by an amount which should generate tax savings that will exceed its existing deferred income tax liability.

NEW YORK — In recent years, the Standard Oil Co. came to be considered a stodgy giant, an especially cruel blow for the company founded by John D. Rockefeller in the early days of the oil industry.

But as the British Petroleum Co., Standard Oil's majority shareholder, has begun in the last year to flex its muscles to streamline the company, Standard has won over many of its critics.

That favorable view was bolstered Thursday by B.P.'s unexpected decision to seek full control of the Cleveland-based company.

To many industry analysts, the $70-a-share tender offer indicated that B.P. felt that Standard, based in Cleveland, could compete more effectively in the tough new environment facing the world's big oil companies.

"The new management, which B.P. hand-picked, of course, has been in for a year now and they have really reshaped the company, clearly with London's approval," said Bryan Jacoboski of Paine Webber Inc.

Jacoboski was referring to the abrupt way in which Standard's two top officers, Alton W. Whitehouse and John Miller, were replaced last year with a management team headed by Robert B. Horton, a top B.P. executive who became Standard's chairman and chief executive.

Since then, Horton has undertaken an ambitious reorganization that includes selling a number of unprofitable non-oil operations. The company also sold millions of acres of unproductive land that had been leased for oil exploration. And it put together a multibillion-dollar war chest that is expected to be used for acquisitions.

The most formidable task confronting Standard Oil is figuring out how to blunt the impact of the inevitable decline of its chief moneymaker, the Prudhoe Bay oilfield in Alaska, which provides more than 90 percent of its revenue.

Notwithstanding that problem, Horton's actions continue to be widely praised.

"He was sent here to get Standard moving again," said Barry Sahgal, managing director of research at Ladenburg, Thalmann & Co. "It's got to be considered a feather in his cap that B.P. is confident enough in Standard to make a $7 billion bid for the rest of it now that he's at the helm."

Dillard P. Spriggs, the president of Petroleum Analysis Ltd., a New York-based energy consulting firm, said that under B.P.'s complete control, Standard would almost certainly place greater emphasis on exploring for oil overseas, as many other American oil companies are likely to do.

But he said that perhaps the greatest benefit to both B.P. and Standard in operating terms would be a "better coordination" of resources, especially in exploration efforts.

Without the "encumbrance of having a minority share-holding public to contend with," B.P. could build a much more effective approach to investing in exploration and acquisitions in the United States, Sahgal said.

That benefit of B.P.'s total ownership was repeatedly mentioned by David A.G. Simon, the managing director of B.P., and Rodney Chase, its group treasurer, in briefings to reporters and securities analysts in Manhattan Thursday. They cautioned, however, that it was "premature" to say how Standard's exploration activities would be affected.

Officials of Standard declined to comment on the future activities of the company or on the tender offer, other than to say it was being studied by a committee of outside directors.

The management shake-up last year reached well below the chairman and president's level, and analysts said they consider the new management arrangement a well-balanced and effective group.

For example, analysts said that under Whitehouse, the former chairman, Standard seemed unable to confront its problems at the Kennecott Corp., the nation's largest copper producer.

But last summer Horton negotiated a labor contract with Kennecott employees that he said would enable Standard to undertake a $400 million modernization of its Bingham Canyon operations in Utah. Analysts said Standard's copper operations could now be competitive.

A number of analysts suggested that B.P. would have to increase its offer by a few dollars a share to prevail. It needs approval from owners of 80 percent of the remaining Standard shares to be able to force all shareholders to accept its terms.

Eugene Nowak, the head of the energy group at Dean Witter Reynolds Inc., called the price reasonable but said he saw a good chance of a moderate increase, to perhaps $74 to $75 a share.

A committee of Standard Oil's outside directors is evaluating the British Petroleum offer.

Like most oil companies, British Petroleum's earnings fell last year, to $798 million (499 million pounds at current exchange rates), on revenues of $43.5 billion. In 1986, Standard Oil lost $345 million on revenues of $10 billion.

British Petroleum acquired the majority interest in Standard Oil in the 1970s in exchange for the British company's North American assets, mainly in Alaska's Prudhoe Bay. Standard Oil operated quite independently from its overseas parent, under a 1970 agreement limiting B.P.'s representation on the board.

But British Petroleum's patience with the hands-off approach eventually wore thin after Standard Oil was forced to take huge write-offs resulting from misguided diversification efforts and an ambitious exploration program that went sour when oil prices dropped. Last year, Sir Peter installed a British Petroleum executive, Robert B. Horton, as Standard Oil's chairman.

The British government, which has been selling its holdings in British Petroleum, owns 31.6 percent of the company. The government announced just last week that it would sell its remaining shares, which are valued at more than $7 billion.

Most securities analysts praised the British Petroleum $7.4 billion offer as a low-risk way of increasing its stake in the oil and gas business at a time when oil prices are stable and apparently edging higher. "It's a financially sound move," said Paul D. Mlotok, an oil analyst for Salomon Brothers Inc. in New York. "It's hard to fault."

However, British Petroleum is often called a "two-pipeline company," meaning that nearly all its production comes from Alaska's Prudhoe Bay and the North Sea. And Alaska represents more than 90 percent of Standard Oil's crude output. Production in both Alaska and the North Sea is expected to peak next year and decline steadily afterwards.

Before Thursday's announcement, some industry analysts had been expecting British Petroleum to use its cash hoard to diversify its production base, possibly by acquiring natural gas properties elsewhere in the United States. By buying the remainder of Standard Oil, they note, British Petroleum is increasing its dependence on a production base that will begin depleting in 1988.

"This move accentuates B.P.'s greatest weakness," said Fergus MacLeod, an analyst for Barclays de Zoete Wedd in London. "It does nothing to address the basic problem of depleting reserves, so B.P. will have to continue to make acquisitions or find new oil and gas."

Standard would be consolidated with British Petroleum's other North American interests, including Purina Mills, America's largest animal feed producer, which it bought last year. The headquarters would be in Cleveland, and the combined entity would be called B.P. North America. The Standard Oil brand name would be kept on most products.

New owner 'juiced' on valley producer buyout

WESLACO, Texas (AP) — The new owner of Texsun Corp. says he wants to put Texsun's popular pink grapefruit juice into grocery stores nationwide.

Robertson

Texsun juices, produced at a plant that has been part of the Rio Grande Valley citrus industry since the 1920s, have been marketed primarily in the Southwest.

But James F. Pomroy, president and chief executive officer of Darien, Conn.-based Sundor Group Inc., said Thursday he's "very bullish" about expanding the sales area for Texsun products.

Sundor, a national speciality beverage company, purchased Texsun for $27.5 million last week. Pomroy said Sundor also plans to bring its own Lincoln apple juice, a strong seller in the Northeast, into the region.

He said Texsun's plant here could double its capacity and would be used to produce apple juice and apple juice blended with other fruit juices, in addition to canning its present lines of citrus juices and juice blends.

Sundor's top seller is Sunny Delight, a blend of orange, tangerine and lime juices.

Ron Robertson, operations officer at Texsun, said the Weslaco company in recent years has had sales of $45 million annually, with Sundor's annual sales at about $150 million.

The Valley juice canner evolved from a grower-owned cooperative in the 1920s to a corporation in 1956. Royal Crown Co. of Miami acquired the company in 1970 and sold it last week to Sundor.

Texsun has been renamed Sundor Brands Inc., Texsun Division.

Pomroy said Texsun would continue to produce juices from Valley citrus and Texsun products would be marketed under the same label, although packaging will be updated.

FUEL USE

Johnston was motivated to negotiate because he expects problems in getting the Fuel Use Act repeal through the House, where the Energy Committee is chaired by Sen. John Dingell, D-Mich., who "tends to be a coal person," in the words of one Senate aide.

Also, Ford let it be known he was primed for a hefty floor fight on behalf of the coal producers in an arena where he could enlist supporters from gas-consuming states and where the position of "gas people," like Johnston, would be weakened.

Ford denied that his measure is "anti-gas." Instead, he described it as "a safety valve for an uncertain energy future."

"We want to be sure in the event of another energy crunch that electricity consumers are not stuck with high utility bills simply because power plants cannot be converted technologically to lower cost fuels. One of the energy lessons of the 1970's is the need for fuel flexibility," Ford said.

The Reagan administration has made repeal of the Fuel Use Act one of its goals to help the depressed oil and gas industry.

The Fuel Use Act was enacted in 1978, in the national push for energy conservation, to preserve natural gas for residential heating in areas where alternate fuels were not available.

The law prohibits using oil and gas as primary fuels in electric generating plants and industrial boilers. A provision that would have required existing oil- and gas-fired plants to switch to coal or alternate fuels by 1990 was repealed in 1981.

Included in the bill approved by the Energy Committee is a repeal of the 1978 Natural Gas Policy Act's incremental-pricing system, which was enacted to place most of the costs of partial gas decontrol on industries and other non-residential gas users.

COSTS

Reversing a two-month trend, the cost of food to eat at home rose 3.4 percent in February, with increases shown for produce, alcohol, meat and shelf items. Produce prices rose 9 percent, alcohol costs went up 7.6 percent, meat prices showed a 2.7 percent increase, and shelf items rose 1.5 percent. A 3.6 percent rise has been seen over the last year, with 2.7 percent coming in the last six months.

Higher costs for dental care and non-prescription medicines pushed medical care expenses up 1.7 percent in February, the third straight increase in that category. Medical expenses have risen 1.7 percent in the last year and over the last six months.

Housing costs in Midland rose for the second month in a row, recording a 0.8 percent rise in February. Mixed but generally higher area rents were responsible. Overall, a 7.7 percent decrease has been measured for housing costs over the last year, with a 3.9 percent rise coming in the last six months.

Although higher price tags on women's clothing were offset by lower costs for men's wear, clothing expenses rose 0.2 percent in February.

This is the third month clothing costs have risen. Over the last year, clothing costs have gone up 1.2 percent, with a larger 2.1 percent rise being shown over the last six months.

For the second month in a row, the cost of eating out in Midland remained stable, following two months of increases. The cost of eating out over the past year has shown a 7.1 percent increase, with 6 percent coming in the past six months.

After four months of increases, transportation costs fell 3.5 percent in February. Higher automobile insurance premiums were offset by lower costs for auto maintenance and slightly lower gasoline prices. Over the last year, transportation costs in Midland have fallen 5.3 percent; however, a 3.1 percent increase has been measured over the last six months.

carriers and ships and planes and forces in the Middle East to make sure oil supplies are not interrupted, it is the most expensive crude oil in the world. It will get even more expensive when we start laying out American bodies, end to end, on the deck of an aircraft carrier." The Commissioner said he was not anxious to send his son to the Middle East to fight for oil.

He took a grim view of recent events in which U.S. Navy ships had offered to escort Kuwaiti tankers through the treacherous Strait of Hormuz, saying Iranian missiles were in place. "I am aggravated because I knew military action was coming. I just didn't know it would come this soon. We are escorting tankers through Iranian missiles because we didn't have the nerve to develop a national energy policy."

He said he applauded such projects at the Pacific-Texas pipeline which could not be threatened by missiles and submarines.

"The Saudis have 425 wells; we have 600,000. We can't let them force us to shut those wells down so they can sell their oil," Wallace said. He said Secretary of Energy John Herrington was a good fellow, but he didn't know a thing about the oil industry.

3-point rule paves Final Four road

NCAA Championship

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Some basketball coaches agree that Nevada-Las Vegas and Providence might not be in the NCAA Final Four if not for the 3-point goal.

But playing by the new rule instituted this season, Providence and Las Vegas, with more outside shooters than most teams, rank 1-2 in making the 19-foot-9-inch goals per game.

"It helped some teams, that's for sure — UNLV and Providence," said Pittsburgh Coach Paul Evans Thursday. His Panthers beat Providence twice during the regular Big East season.

"The 3-point goal really benefitted Providepce because they haven't a lot of inside players," said Michigan Coach Bill Frieder.

WHETHER THE championship game will be a shootout between UNLV and Providence remains to be seen.

In Saturday's first game of the Superdome double-header, No. 10 Syracuse, 30-6, takes on Providence, 25-8, followed by No. 1 UNLV, 37-1, against No. 3 Indiana, 28-4.

Indiana, led by Steve Alford's 52 percent accuracy with 98 3-pointers, has the best 3-point shooting marksmanship (121 for 241 — 50 percent) among the Final Four teams.

Syracuse basically relies on one 3-point player, Greg Monroe, and has made 93 of 230.

UNLV, with Freddie Banks and Gerald Paddio leading the way, has thrown up 746 bombs, making 40 percent. Banks made 142 and Paddio 85.

The Runnin' Rebels, coached by Jerry Tarkanian, are on the biggest roll of all with a 22-game winning streak in quest of their first NCAA crown.

Providence hit 43 percent of his long-range shots on 275 of 646. Billy Donovan, 96; Ernie "Pop" Lewis, 94, and Delray Brooks, 65, head the Friar 3-point makers.

THE FRIARS finished fourth in the Big East regular season and are the lowest seed (No. 5 in the Southeast) to get this far. Both UNLV (West) and Indiana (Midwest) were No. 1 seeds and Syracuse (East) was the No. 2 seed.

In a sampling of coaches who are meeting in New Orleans in connection with the Final Four, most agreed that both games were tossups.

"It's wide open, a tough call," said Frieder, who added that he picks Big Ten rival Indiana and Syracuse to win. "Indiana has been in every game this season and (Syracuse's Ron) Seikaly is playing extremely well."

Southern California Coach George Raveling said, "It's a strong Final Four. Any team has a good shot at winning it. (Indiana Coach) Bobby Knight's tough with a week to prepare. (Providence Coach) Rick Pitino's on a roll.

"Vegas not only has a good offense but a good defensive and rebounding team. The 3-point rule has helped Vegas and Providence and helped Syracuse because it opened things up inside for Seikaly."

Oregon State's Ralph Miller, the dean of Division I coaches, said, "Any four teams are capable of winning. It's whose game is on. Like Tarkanian said, it takes a a little luck. With North Carolina and Villanova the last few years (NCAA champions in 1983 and 1985), who knows?"

Coach John Thompson, whose team beat Syracuse in the Big East tournament final, said of the Orangemen-Providence game:

"It's very unpredictable when you have two league teams. It's like the NBA when teams play best-of-five or seven. You never sweep the other team. Syracuse is in a tough situation. They already won twice. It's psychologically tough to win a third."

THOMPSON SAW the the UNLV-Indiana game as one of contrasting styles.

"Jerry tends to run a lot. Bobby has a great half-court offense. I'm not about to make any predictions," he said.

Of those coaches interviewed, only Evans had a strong view on the outcomes, picking Indiana and Syracuse to meet in the title game.

"Probably Syracuse's inside game will take its toll on Providence. When Bobby Knight has a week to prepare, he can beat anybody."

And the winner will be?

"I hope for Syracuse," Evans said, " but probably Indiana."

Knight has two NCAA crowns to his credit, in 1976 and 1981.

Seattle may lose another franchise

SEATTLE (AP) — The Mariners are for sale, leading to conjecture that Seattle will lose its second American League baseball franchise in less than two decades.

Seattle Mayor Charles Royer said Thursday's announcement by Mariners' owner George Argyros that he is buying the San Diego Padres and selling the Mariners might cost the Pacific Northwest its major-league team.

"I'm surprised and disappointed at this announcement, because it once again puts the future of professional baseball in Seattle in question," Royer said.

ARGYROS, A Southern California land developer who purchased the Mariners from the team's original group of owners in 1981, said he wanted to sell his club quickly. He emphasized he wanted to find a local buyer in order to insure that the Mariners remain in Seattle.

But he added "I can't own two baseball teams. I've got to sell as quickly as possible."

Washington Gov. Booth Gardner sounded pessimistic about Argyros' chances of finding a local buyer. He said it would take at least $35 million to keep the franchise in Seattle.

"Of course there's $35 million around, but whether somebody wants to invest in a club and take the operating losses that go with it until they can double the value of it and resell it remains to be seen," Gardner said.

"I don't know if it (local purchase) is a possibility or not," said Chuck Armstrong, the Mariners' president and a longtime Argyros employee.

Argyros refused to reveal what he was paying for the Padres or how much he was asking for the Mariners.

Argyros purchased the Mariners from the team's original owners, including the late entertainer Danny Kaye, for a reported $10.5 million.

The Mariners came to Seattle as the result of a suit against the AL that was filed by government officials after the 1969 AL Pilots, who spent only one season in Seattle, became the 1970 Milwaukee Brewers.

At the time the Mariners were awarded to Seattle, the franchise signed a 20-year lease to use the Kingdome, owned and operated by King County. Argyros inherited that lease.

But in 1985, Argyros negotiated a new lease agreement for use of the Kingdome. During the sometimes acrimonious negotiations, he threatened to declare bankruptcy and sell the Mariners to another city.

The new Kingdome lease agreement contains an exit clause that allows the Mariners' owners, no matter who they are, to move the franchise if the club doesn't draw a combined 2.8 million fans in 1986 and 1987. The Mariners drew one million fans last season.

When the Mariners were sold to Argyros, there were no local buyers. They may be a hard sell now.

"No!" said Herman Sarkowsky, a Seattle developer and a minority owner of the National Football League Seattle Seahawks, when asked if he was interested in buying the Mariners.

KING COUNTY Executive Tim Hill, who signed the lease agreement that gave the Mariners their exit clause, said he was caught off guard by Argyros' announcement.

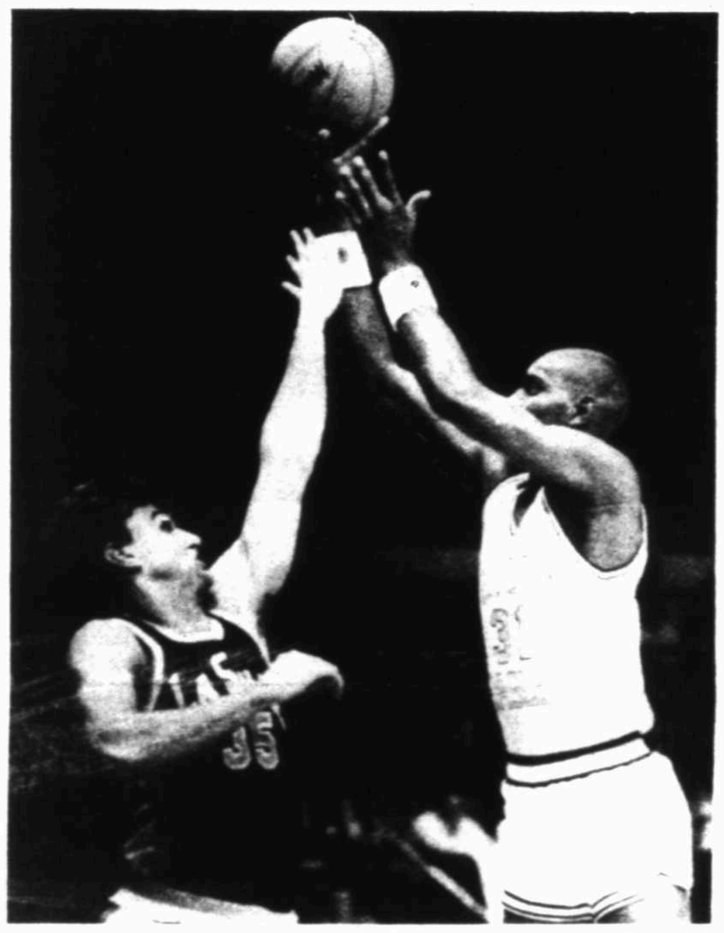

Asked whether the county or some other public agency might be interested in owning the club, Hill replied, "I don't think that's within the realm of possibility at this time."

State Sen. Jim McDermott, D-Seattle, who has introduced a bill in the Washington Legislature to make it possible for the city of Seattle to buy the Mariners, said he was not surprised by Argyros' announcement to sell.

The measure sponsored by McDermott doesn't specifically mention the Mariners. It would give authority to any Washington state city or county to own a sports franchise, the same way Green Bay, Wis., owns the NFL Packers.

State Rep. Max Vekich said his House Trade and Economic Development Committee is expected to approve the state Senate-passed public ownership bill next Tuesday. He predicted full House passage later next week, too.

"This is a pro-fan bill," Vekich said. "Fans don't want to be held hostage by owners who are more interested in corporate profits than in caring about the community that supports them."

Navy's Robinson top cage player

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — David Robinson, Navy's 7-foot-1 senior center, today was named winner of the Adolph F. Rupp Trophy as The Associated Press college basketball player of the year.

Robinson, the only unanimous selection on this year's AP All-America team, received 206 of 419 votes in a nationwide poll of sports writers and broadcasters taken before the NCAA tournament. Voters were limited to 10 finalists chosen by the AP's weekly poll board.

He led Navy to a 26-6 record and its third straight NCAA appearance this season. He averaged 28.2 points, fourth among Division I schools and 36.5 of Navy's output, and led the nation in blocked shots with 144, an average of 4.5 a game.

Robinson also ranked fourth among the nation's rebounders with an 11.8 average. He hit 59 percent of his field goal attempts.

Robinson played only one year of high school ball in Woodbridge, Va., and grew about seven inches since he entered the Naval Academy. Among the records he set in four seasons were school career scoring (2,669) and rebounding (1,302) marks.

He closed out his college career with 50 points in the Midshipmen's first-round NCAA loss to Michigan. It was the sixth-highest point total in tournament history and the most by any player since 1971.

Despite a two-year service commitment, Robinson is expected to the No. 1 NBA draft choice. His height prompted the Navy to reduce his service time after graduation from five years to two.

Steve Alford, Indiana's senior guard, was a distant second in the voting with 63, followed by junior forward Danny Manning of Kansas with 56, senior forward Reggie Williams of Georgetown with 37 and senior forward Dennis Hopson of Ohio State with 25.

Completing the voting were four seniors, Horace Grant of Clemson, 12; Kenny Smith of North Carolina, 10, Armon Gilliam of Nevada-Las Vegas, 8, and Mark Jackson of St. John's, 2.

Robinson is the first service academy player to win the award since it was instituted in 1972. UCLA's Bill Walton and Virginia's Ralph Sampson each won theward three times.

The award, named for the late University of Kentucky coach, is sponsored by the Commonwealth Athletic Club of Kentucky, a group of businessmen who formed a not-for-profit organization to establish the trophy and care for it and other Rupp memorabilia at the Rupp Arena in Lexington, Ky. The original trophy resides there. The player of the year receives a replica.

Southern Mississippi rocks LaSalle in NIT final

NEW YORK (AP) — Southern Mississippi Coach M.K. Turk said all week that the 3-point shot wouldn't beat his team in the 50th National Invitation Tournament, and he was right.

"In crunch time, you have to get the ball into the paint," Turk had warned after La Salle used the 3-point shot to get into the NIT final against Turk's Golden Eagles.

In the championship game on Thursday, the 3-pointer was Turk's best friend, but it was also La Salle's worst enemy as Southern Miss held on for an 84-80 victory that represented the state's first Division I postseason basketball championship.

Casey Fisher had 18 points on six 3-pointers and Derrek Hamilton added three more, two of them as he scored 10 of his 17 points during a 16-4 streak that gave the Golden Eagles a 59-48 lead with 10:13 remaining.

LaSalle, which went 4-for-24 from 3-point distance after going 9-for-5 in the semifinals against Arkansas-Little Rock, never caught up despite the efforts of freshman Lionel Simmons, who scored 21 of his 34 points in the second half.

"It wasn't just the 3-pointers that beat us," Simmons said. "I missed three layups that I should have made. Shutting down our 3-pointers is a credit to their man-to-man, but we missed a lot we normally make."

"We missed shots we normally make with our eyes closed," La Salle Coach Bill "Speedy" Morris said.

"I said before the game that we had to defend against their 3-point shots, and that's what we did," Turk said.

Turk said he doesn't consider the 3-pointer an integral part of his offense, but he acknowledged that the long-distance shots can come in handy.

"It's great when you're up two and then you take two trips down the floor, look up at the scoreboard and you're up by eight," he said.

Randolph Keys joined Fisher with 18 points and Kenny Siler, the Golden Eagles' only senior, added 17. Forward John White had 10 points, including two free throws with six seconds left after La Salle forced a five-second violation and then turned the ball over before getting a chance to tie the score.

Keys, with 42 points and 18 rebounds in the last two games, won the Most Valuable Player award, but said after the game that any of the Southern Miss starters could have won it.

"It's a great feeling to get the award," Keys said, "but all of us are MVPs because we're a family and it was a team effort."

"Webster's dictionary doesn't have the words to describe how the players, coaches and fans feel about winning this," Turk said. "A team that was not mentally tough could not have survived this."

High schools may shoot for threes

WILLIAMSON

The long range bombers of college basketball may not be the only players to be rewarded for their skills of dialing long distance next season.

According to the University Interscholastic League's Susan Zinn, the 3-point shot beyond the 19-feet, 9-inch line may be coming to high school basketball for the 1987-88 season.

This week, the National Federation of High School Athletic Associations voted to put the new rule in effect and Zinn says that Texas may not be far behind in adopting the rule.

"We haven't formally adopted the 3-point play as of yet, but we are presuming that it will be used next season," said Zinn. "We are going to be discussing soon the painting of the 3-point lines at our next meeting.

"We use a lot of the Federation rules in Texas, but we don't have to. But right now I'm presuming that we will adopt the rule."

The UIL, Texas' governing body for high school athletics, uses a combination of both NCAA and Federation rules, but not all of both. Texas is under no commitment to adopt the rule, but if Zinn is right, the rule is upon us.

MIDLAND HIGH basketball coach Jack Stephenson and Midland Lee coach Paul Stueckler knew nothing of a rule change proposal in the works and greeted the news with mixed blessings.

"I talked with Bill Forney of the UIL at the state tournament and he seemed to think at that time that there was no way we would have the 3-point shot this next season," said Stueckler. "However, I assumed we would have it sooner or later if the college game continued to use the rule."

Stephenson said, "If they are going to keep the 3-point shot in college, it's logical to me, at least, that we ought to be involved with it. After all, this is where the colleges are getting their players."

It didn't take either coach long to look at past seasons when the rule would have been beneficial at both schools.

"I wish we had the rule back when I had Anthony Deande," said Stephenson. "That would have been a great rule for us then."

Stueckler added, "They seem to change the rules at all the wrong times for me. Back when I had big Anthony Dickens, they did away with the center jump and now when I don't have any 3-point shooters, they start talking about the 3-point play. When we had Derek Westbrook and Brian Marczynski, I would have loved the rule."

Neither coach expressed dismay over the possibility of adding the 3-point rule to the high school game, but both see problems with the rule.

"It's something new and it's something we'll have to get used to," said Stephenson. "Sometimes you have to learn to change. I guess it will be OK.

"There are problems, however. I, for one, will have to learn when and how often to use it. I may have to have some long talks with (Midland College coach) Jerry Stone since he used it with great success. It changes the game a great deal."

STUECKLER SAID, "It's a new dimension and adds a lot of excitement for the fans, but I see some problems. We've worked all our life to teach kids to take the good shot and now you may be teaching them that you get a prize for taking a shot that's not so good.

"Basketball is such a team game, but the 3-point rule, I think, teaches individualism to a certain degree. But there is one thing I know for sure. The kids will like it. As soon as they hear about this, they'll be out working on that 3-point shot."

Stueckler also added, "It might change the way we look at a few individuals. Take Todd Duncan at Midland College. The 3-point rule was great for him. He's not a very quick or physical player, but I understand that a bunch of major colleges want him now because he's such a great shooter from outside."

The time may have come for the Todd Duncans of the world to stand up and be counted — by threes.

San Angelo Relays has 57 teams entered

By TERRY WILLIAMSON
Assistant Sports Editor

SAN ANGELO — The 29th annual San Angelo Relays was scheduled to get underway here this afternoon with 57 teams expected to vie for titles in four divisions.

The all-boy meet has attracted a quality field in the 5A division with Midland Lee, Midland High, Odessa High, San Angelo, Austin Reagan, Bryan, Converse Judson, Del Rio and Fort Worth Eastern Hills.

Reagan, Converse Judson, San Angelo and Lee appear to be the front runners in that division. Fourteen teams are lined up in the 4A divison while 15 3A schools will compete and 19 teams from Class A and 2A will be in the lower division.

The one real hole in the meet is the absence of Odessa Permian. Permian, San Angelo and Lee have had some heated meet races this year with all three winning a title.

Midland High should also be improved this week if the relay teams come through. Three relays will be run here, including the two-mile relay. MHS dropped the baton in the sprint relay two weeks ago in the West Texas Relays and failed to qualify for the finals in that event.

Both Lee and MHS took the week off last week for spring break and should be fresh for this meet.

The Lee girls also took the week off and will get back into action Saturday in Hobbs, N.M. The Midland High girls, who won their first team title two weeks ago at the West Texas Relays and placed second in the Canyon Reef Relays in Snyder last weekend, will take this weekend off.

The San Angelo affair was scheduled for a 2:30 p.m. start today with some field event finals and all running preliminaries. Saturday's running finals begin again at noon Saturday.

Somebody up there likes SMU linebacker

By PETER H. FRANK
N.Y. Times News Service

DALLAS — While many of his football teammates at Southern Methodist University sift through offers from perennial bowl candidates, at least one player is relatively confident that he will not be playing on a championship team next season.

John A. Robinson Jr., 22, a 6-foot-4-inch, 240-pound outside linebacker from Baytown, Texas, has been recruited by Columbia University.

"I had heard of Columbia," he said, shrugging his shoulders, "but I didn't know it was Ivy League. I didn't know where it was. I didn't know anything about it, except that it was up there someplace.

"And I hadn't heard anything about the football team. I found out later it wasn't that good," he said, with a burst of laughter.

ROBINSON KNEW he was stating the obvious. On Oct. 15, 1983, during his freshman year at SMU, Columbia beat Yale, 21-18. They have not won a game since, a streak of 31 losses.

SMU, on the other hand, went 10-2 that season and played in the Sun Bowl, losing to Alabama. The following season, again 10-2, the Mustangs were the Southwest Conference co-champions and defeated Notre Dame in the Aloha Bowl in Hawaii.

SMU, whose football program has been suspended for next season because of repeated violations of NCAA rules, has not had a losing season since 1979.

Columbia has not had a winning season since 1971. And that, said Coach Larry McElreavy, is why the Lions want Robinson, who has a year of football eligibility remaining.

"I think this can work well both ways," he said. "Obviously, he can help our football team. But Columbia can help him quite a bit, too. If he comes in and is attitudinally the right way, he could be the dominant factor on our team."

THAT WOULD be quite a jump for a second-stringer who made only eight tackles in each of his last two seasons at SMU. One of the assistants there said Robinson was a good player but only average in size for the SWC.

But Robinson's admission to Columbia is still not assured. He said he has almost a 3.0 grade average on a 4-point system. A decision on his application is not expected for two weeks.

"If he didn't have a good shot, we wouldn't be bringing him up," said Doug Jackson, Columbia's offensive coordinator who was responsible for recruiting Robinson.

McElreavy said that this was only the second season that there has been money available for the school to recruit heavily nationwide and that he expected to be able to bring in a number of players from the Oklahoma and Texas area next year. But Robinson is the only player the school recruited from SMU.

"People like him just don't come along every day," said Jackson.

And opportunities like this, Robinson said with a smile, don't happen all the time either.

Stormin' Norman survives TPC lightning

PONTE VEDRA, Fla. (AP) — Greg Norman was delayed one hour, 20 minutes by a storm, finished play in the rain and saw lightning strike the ground a few hundred yards away.

But golf's dominant player last year was completely serious when he said: "I think we early starters got the best of the conditions."

And he was right.

The afternoon half of the field in the $1 million Tournament Players Championship were lashed by another heavy rainstorm that eventually washed out play Thursday.

Those 72 players were scheduled to return to the Tournament Players Club today to complete first-round action.

Second-round starting times were set back by two hours, which meant that not all players will be able to complete second round play today. They'll go over Saturday, with third-round play to follow that.

Norman birdied his final hole — immediately after returning from the first storm delay, and set the target score for the late finishers at 5-under-par 67.

He missed only two greens and did not make a bogey.

"My best start this year in the States," said the Australian, who won the British Open and led both the American and Australian tours in money-winnings last year.

Hale Irwin, a two-time U.S. Open champion, and Dave Stockton, winner of two PGA championships, led the large group at 68.

Putting game places Foyer, Pulz in lead

PHOENIX, Ariz. (AP) — Those who thought the Moon Valley Country Club greens would be a special challenge in the $300,000 LPGA Turquoise Classic have an answer from first-round leaders Martha Foyer and and Penny Pulz — yes and no.

Foyer, playing in only her seventh pro tourney, and Pulz, a 13-year veteran, shot 69s for a one-stroke lead entering today's second round.

The 22-year-old Foyer sank a 16-foot birdie putt on the par-4 18th hole, capping a round that included five other birdies but a pair of 3-putt bogeys as well.

Pulz posted three straight birdies that included two 15-foot putts and a three-footer.

For the tourney's first appearance on this course, the greens were enlarged, recontoured and had their bermuda grass replaced by bent grass. As a result they were expected to be faster and "extremely difficult."

Pulz said she did feel the greens were hard, but said it didn't matter.

"I wasn't cute with the ball," Pulz explained. "It's when you start trying to spin the ball left and right with these undulations that you start having problems. I hit such a high ball and I hit it so solid that it didn't bother me."

But Foyer thought the greens were on the soft side and said that, while she did have to play short, she had the right angle on the greens and was playing so consistently that she wasn't surprised at having shot the lowest round of her young LPGA career.

"It's about time," she said. "It could have been better, but it's a stepping stone. Everything I do out here, every day, is a new experience. It's a lot of fun. But then it's allways fun when you're playing well."

Turquoise Golf

Patti Rizzo was among those bunched one shot back at 70, along with Spain's Marta Figueras-Dotti, Deb Richard, Lisa Young and Colleen Walker.

Jane Geddes, the season's money leader, came in with an opening-round 72.

Defending champion Mary Beth Zimmerman was 2-over at 75, along with last week's Tucson Open winner, Betsy King, and the top 1986 earner, Pat Bradley.

Foyer scored her first hole-in one last week and almost shot another Thursday, hitting to within four feet on No. 5, a 155-yard, par-3 hole. She made the putt for a birdie, but answered that with a bogey 5 on No. 6, three-putting from 24 feet.

Chipping up on the par-5 No. 8, she sank a 5-foot birdie putt, then rolled home a seven-footer for a birdie 4 on No. 10. She also dropped in birdie putts from 10 and 20 feet on Nos. 15 and 16 but bogeyed the par-4 17th, three-putting from 15 feet.

Figueras-Dotti, 29, sank birdie putts of 8 and 4 feet on Nos. 18 and 4, then closed with two birdies, one from an 18-foot putt.

Young, whose best finish this season has been a tie for 26th, spiced her opening round with an eagle-3 on No. 8. But like Foyer, she followed the eagle with a 3-putt bogey on No. 9, a 4-par hole.

Penny Hammel scored the first hole-in-one of her career by sinking a 6-iron on the 150-yard second hole.

Truelove records 300

From Staff Reports

While he achieved his goal of a second sanctioned 300 game, Midland bowler Lonnie Truelove, 23, fell just short of a second target: An 800 series.

"I was one 10 pin away from an 800," said Truelove, who rolled 211-267-300 Tuesday night at Tall City Lanes for a 778 series.

Already wearing one 300 ring, Truelove will receive a watch for his second effort but wants another one soon.

"I want to shoot another one some day so I can send my next watch to my Dad," said Truelove. "He's shot 300 before but it's never been sanctioned."

Even though his Father hasn't been honored for his perfect games, Truelove isn't the first member of his family to roll a 300. Brother Bill Theobald has shot four in the past two years. In fact, "this is the second time we've shot 300 in the same year," said Truelove. "I'm only two behind him now."

Truelove's first 300 game came in August of 1985, within a month of his brother's perfect game.

For the 200-plus average bowler, stringing strikes isn't an uncommon occurance and it wasn't until after the 10th strike was on the scoreboard that Truelove became nervous.

"The 11th and 12th strikes I was nervous because I've thrown 10-in-a-row before."

Most bowlers who compete in leagues and tournaments have the thought of some day going on the PBA tour and Truelove is no different.

"When I get my mental game together I hope to make it some day," said Truelove. "At least I'd like to try. It's worth a shot."

Raines may return to Expos

MONTREAL (AP) — The wife of free agent outfielder Tim Raines has given the latest and strongest indication that her husband will return to the Montreal Expos May 1.

"You can bet on Tim coming back to the Expos," Virginia Raines said in published reports Thursday. "If somebody offers $1.5 million — that's the only way (he'll play somewhere else)."

She said only such a guaranteed annual offer from one of five clubs — the Atlanta Braves, Los Angeles Dodgers, San Diego Padres, Houston Astros or California Angels — would keep Raines from rejoining the Expos.

None of those clubs has offered him more than $1.2 million a year.

The Expos offered Raines a three-year guaranteed contract for $4.8 million last fall. Under the rules of free agency, Raines cannot re-sign with his former club until May 1.

Since becoming a free agent in December, Raines had maintained he would not rejoin the Expos. Recently, however, both he and his agent, Tom Reich, have significantly softened that position.

The Explorers, who trailed by as many as 11 points in the first half, came back after halftime to go ahead 44-43 with 17:06 remaining. Keys started the 16-4 spurt with a basket before Hamilton scored the Golden Eagles' next eight points to make it 55-48 with 11:22 to go.

After a spurt gave Southern Miss a 59-48 lead, La Salle fought back to get within three points twice, at 59-56 and 64-61.

Two 3-pointers by Fisher rebuilt the advantage to 75-65 with 3:11 remaining, but two baskets by Simmons, two free throws by Rich Tarr and a rebound basket by Craig Conlin cut the deficit to 82-80 with 21 seconds left. The Explorers then forced a five-second call on the inbounds pass, but Hamilton forced an off-balance pass and a turnover.

Washington deals Celtics fifth straight road loss

Associated Press

Do the Boston Celtics have a weak spot? Even their star, Larry Bird, thinks they do.

"We're not as good on the road as we were in past years," Bird said Thursday night. "I think now we just come to play, instead of coming to win."

As if to prove that point, the Celtics lost their fifth straight NBA road game. The defending league champions, who already have clinched at least a tie for the Atlantic Division crown, couldn't handle the Washington Bullets, who beat Boston 106-103. Boston is a mediocre 18-17 on the road.

Moses Malone returned from a neck problem and had 23 points for Washington. But Manute Bol and Jay Vincent were the keys as the Bullets more than made up for the absence of Jeff Malone, their star guard, who was out with the flu.

Bol had 17 rebounds and 12 blocked shots. Vincent had 28 points and keyed a surge early in the third period that put Washington ahead to stay.

Vincent has started nine games, averaging 20 points in them.

"Jay has played probably his three best games for us the last three," Bullets Coach Kevin Loughery said. "I think he might be getting into his best playing shape. We need him in our half-court offense."

Bol threw off the Boston offense with his mere presence.

"He played very well," Boston's Kevin McHale, the victim of four of Bol's blocks, said of the 7-foot-6 center. "When he's that active, its tough to get good shots inside."

"He has an immense effect," Loughery said. "He doesn't have to jump to block your shot. He has the biggest effect defensively of any player I've seen since Bill Russell."

Bol and several Celtics tangled near the end of the game. Bol picked up a loose ball, and was grabbed by Conner Henry and Danny Ainge with 46 seconds left. The whistle blew and Henry turned to head upcourt. Ainge let go of Bol, who took a swing at Henry, but missed by about three feet.

The benches emptied, but no further punches were thrown. Bol received a technical foul, while Henry received a personal foul.

Bird had 22 points and McHale 21 for Boston, which has not won on the road in more than a month.

"We are in good shape for the playoffs, basketball-wise," said Celtics Coach K.C. Jones. "Now we just have to get healthy."

Boston's ailing players include Dennis Johnson, who has a sore shoulder and won't play tonight in Chicago.

NBA Roundup

Rockets 119, Trail Blazers 104

Robert Reid scored a season-high 30 points and rookie Dave Feitl sparked the Rockets off the bench. Feitl had six points in the first 4½ minutes of the final period to boost the Rockets to a 101-89 lead. He finished with a season-high 17 points.

Visiting Portland was led by Kiki Vandeweghe with 23 points.

Houston's Ralph Sampson did not play, but was in uniform for the first time since undergoing arthroscopic surgery Feb. 5 to remove a torn lateral cartilage in his left knee.

"It was real exciting for me to go out there and for the coach to leave me in down the stretch," Feitl said. "It's nice to know he has that kind of confidence in me."

Hawks 120, Mavericks 112

In a game featuring division leaders, the host Hawks got 35 points and 12 rebounds from Dominique Wilkins for their fourth straight and 15th in 16 games. The win increased Atlanta's Central lead to 2½ games over Detroit.

The loss snapped a six-game winning streak for Midwest-leading Dallas, which has an 8½-game edge on Utah.

Dallas led 58-57 at halftime, but the Hawks scored the first eight points of the second half to take the lead for good.

Randy Wittman scored 24 points for the Hawks. Mark Aguirre scored 31 points, followed by Derek Harper's 20.

Lakers 128, Pistons 111

Byron Scott scored 25 points and James Worthy added 24 as host Los Angeles clinched its sixth consecutive Pacific title. The Lakers are 55-15 and 13 games ahead of the Trail Blazers with 12 games left.

Scott scored 21 points in te first half as the Lakers surged to a 78-56 halftime advantage. Detroit, which got 23 points apiece fro Adrian Dantley and Isiah Thomas, was down only 41-40, but Los Angeles ran off 12 straight points over a three-minute span.

Nets 109, Bulls 107

Ray Williams' 20-foot jumper with two seconds to play won the game and offset a 40-point night for Michael Jordan. Williams got all eight of his points in the fourth quarter.

The visiting Bulls missed a chance to tie when Jordan, the NBA's leading scorer, missed a 21-footer at the buzzer.

Orlando Woolridge paced the Nets with 23 points. Buck Williams added 19 points and 10 rebounds. Kevin McKenna hit five three-point field goals — a Nets team record.

Nuggets 123, SuperSonics 113

In Denver, Alex English scored 36 points and the Nuggets held Seattle to just eight points in the first eight minutes of the final quarter. The Nuggets took the lead for good at 99-97 on a basket by English one minute into the final quarter.

Seattle failed miserably at the foul line, making just 18 of 33 free throws for the game, compared to 31 of 35 for Denver.

Kings 124, Suns 115

Reserve forward Eddie Johnson scored 10 points in the final quarter at Sacramento. Otis Thorpe scored 24 points and had a game-high 15 rebounds, while Reggie Theus and Johnson added 23 points for the Kings.

Boyd, Hershiser turn in impressive performances

Associated Press

Dennis "Oil Can" Boyd and Orel Hershiser, two pitchers with much to prove, took some positive steps with productive outings against each other in spring training.

Boyd threw six scoreless innings in helping a portion of the Boston Red Sox beat the Los Angeles Dodgers 4-0 Thursday. Hershiser also had a strong outing, allowing just one run in seven innings.

Boyd's tirades last season have been well-documented. He went wild in the Red Sox clubhouse after learning he hadn't made the American League All-Star team, was suspended by the team and eventually missed a month of the season. The Red Sox won the AL East anyway.

Boyd also was yanked as the starting pitcher for Game 7 of the World Series in favor of Bruce Hurst. Again, he reacted emotionally although not as angrily, to that move.

But he has looked good this spring, winning both of his decisions. Against the Dodgers, the right-hander allowed only four hits, walked one and struck out two.

Hershiser allowed only a first-inning run on Bill Buckner's RBI double. He was reached for only four hits and struck out six.

Spring Training

Rangers 8, Expos 2

Larry Parrish hit a three-run homer and Ruben Sierra hit his first home run of the spring. Montreal starter Floyd Youmans gave up five runs in six innings, including Sierra's home run leading off the fourth. Parrish's home run came off reliever Bob McClure in the seventh.

Oddibe McDowell was 2-for-3 with a walk for the Rangers, scoring three runs and stealing a base.

Mariners 7, Angels 3

Seattle got run-scoring singles by Dave Valle and Rey Quinones which snapped a 3-3 tie in the sixth inning.

Angels starter Kirk McCaskill struggled, surrendering six hits and five runs in 5⅓ innings. McCaskill has allowed 13 hits and nine runs in his last 10 innings.

Indians 7, Giants 6

Don Lovell singled home two runs to break a fifth-inning tie and Cleveland snapped the Giants' six-game winning streak Thursday. The Indians, behind 5-0, came back on a five-run rally in the fourth off Giants starter Atlee Hammaker.

A's 6, Cubs 5

Mark McGwire's pinch-hit single scored Carney Lansford from second base with the winning run in the ninth inning. Last year's AL Rookie of the Year, Jose Canseco, hit a three-run homer in the first inning.

Royals 13, Orioles 6

Frank White's three-run home run and Steve Baboni's two-run shot paced Kansas City. Balboni's homer highlighted a five-run first inning against loser Mike Flanagan.

Kevin Seitzer went 3-for-3 for KC and Willie Wilson extended his hitting streak to 15 games with two singles, raising his average to .400.

Padres 4, Brewers 0

Eric Show and Ed Whitson combined on a four-hitter for San Diego. Show, trying to come back from tendinitis of the right elbow, struck out nine without walking a batter in five innings. He gave up two hits.

Whitson, coming off a 1-7 season, struck out four and walked none in his best outing this spring.

Braves 3, Tigers 2

Ken Griffey keyed a three-run seventh inning with a bases-loaded double. Detroit right-hander Eric King had held the Braves hitless through the first five innings.

Lady 'Horns just two away

AUSTIN (AP) — Tennessee and Louisiana Tech are big underdogs for tonight's NCAA Women's Basketball Final Four semifinals, but there's a general feeling among coaches that the sixth annual tournament is wide open.

"There always seemes to be a dominant favorite in other Final Fours, but that's not the case here," said Tennessee Coach Pat Summitt. "Any of the four teams here could win this one."

In the first semifinal, Tennessee's Lady Volunteers, 26-6, have the tough task of stopping the run-and-gun attack of the Long Beach State Lady 49ers, who are the women's counterpart of the Nevada-Las Vegas Runnin' Rebels in the men's Final Four.

The Lady 49ers, 33-2, have the highest scoring team in women's basketball, averaging over 90 points a game. Tennessee is the only team to beat Texas this season.

In the second game, top-seeded and defending national champion Texas, 31-1, puts its 25-game winning streak on the line against Louisiana Tech. Tech is 29-2 and twice has knocked Texas out of the NCAA playoffs.

ESPN will televise the games nationally on cable. The winners of the semifinals collide Sunday afternoon for the national title. CBS will televise that game.

Sellout crowds of 15,615, an NCAA women's record, are assured for each session at the University of Texas' Special Events Center. The women play with a 30-second clock, and there is no 3-point field goal shot.

The Lady 49ers of Coach Joan Bonvicini come into their first Final Four on a high-scoring roll.

"We're at the peak of our game right now," Bonvicini said. "The biggest key is our confidence. We'll press from the start of the game to the end of the game. We want a fast tempo. I think we have a good chance to win it."

Jody Conradt's Lady Longhorns also prefer a quick pace, while the Lady Techsters of Coach Leon Barmore like the half-court, patient game.

"Anybody can win," said Conradt. "We just have one senior. It's nice playing at home. We'll need the crowd."

Barmore has a senior-dominated lineup and the Lady Techsters have tradition.

They have the highest winning percentage in women's basketball history at 86 percent, including two victories over Texas in three tries. Louisiana Tech won the tournament in 1982.

Texas goes into the game as the hottest-shooting team in the NCAA Tournament. The Lady Longhorns have made 60 percent of their shots from the field.

Lee, MHS head 4-5A golf

From Staff Reports

ODESSA — Midland Lee and Midland High took the first step toward earning Region I golf berths here at Mission Country Club Thursday as the first round of the girls District 4-5A golf tour was completed.

Lee recorded a team total 387 to take the lead while Midland High is in second place, eight strokes off the pace. They are followed by defending champion San Angelo, 402; Odessa Permian, 414; Midland High No. 2, 419; Abilene Cooper, 424; Abilene High, 475; and Lee No. 2, 512.

In the medalist race, San Angelo's Chrissi Wittenburg set the early pace with a 79 while Permian's Candice Morgan trails at 83. Lee's Jane Pepperone is third at 84 while teammate Jamie Winborne is fifth at 94. MHS was led by the 97 by Joanna Barillo.

Defending district medalist champion Michelle Hapack of San Angelo is still in the hunt for a repeat title, standing in fourth place with an 87 Thursday.

The second leg of the tour heads to Abilene next week. Other tour stops will be in Midland and San Angelo. San Angelo has won the district title three years in a row.

The top two teams earn advancement to the state playoffs, the first stop being the Region I meet in Lubbock later this spring.

THE SIMPLE LIFE

North-South vulnerable. West deals.

	NORTH ♠ 6 5 2 ♡ Q 6 5 4 3 ◇ 7 6 ♣ 6 4 3
WEST ♠ 4 ♡ K 9 2 ◇ J 8 5 ♣ Q J 10 8 7 5		EAST ♠ J 9 8 7 ♡ J 10 8 ◇ 10 9 4 3 ♣ 9 2

The bidding:

West	North	East	South
3 ♣	Pass	Pass	Dbl
Pass	3 ♡	Pass	4 C
Pass	4 ♡	Pass	5 S
Pass	6 ♠	Pass	Pass
Pass

Opening lead: Queen of ♣

When you are dealt a bad hand, it is often easier to complain than to value it realistically. While South might get the credit for his fine play in making the slam, we feel the kudos really belong to North for bidding it in the first place.

South showed a tremendously powerful hand on the given sequence. Since North had shown nothing other than length in hearts, South's takeout double and cue-bid prior to his jump to five spades virtually guaranteed a secondary diamond suit as well, and the ability to take 11 tricks on his own. North decided his three trumps and ruffing value in diamonds just made his hand worth the trick South was looking for.

West led the top of his club sequence. Matters looked easy until West showed out on the second trump. A brief study of the position revealed only one possibility: declarer, saddled with a sure heart loser, had to reduce his trumps to the same length as East's, and then be able to give up the lead when both declarer and East were down to nothing but two trumps each. Once the position had been visualized, the execution was simple indeed.

Since East would have to hold four diamonds and two clubs, declarer cashed the king of clubs and his high diamonds. Then he ruffed his diamond loser on the table. When he led a club, it would not help East to ruff, so he discarded a heart and declarer trumped. The rest was easy.

Declarer cashed the ace of hearts and exited with his low heart, not caring who won the trick. If East had the monarch, he would have to lead a trump at trick 11, and the finesse was marked. If West won, East's trumps would be caught in a coup. Either way, the slam was home.

Elton John, wife separated

LONDON (AP) — Rock star Elton John and his wife, Renate, have separated, his office said Thursday.

Repeated press speculation of a split reached a peak Wednesday night with reports that Mrs. John was not present in London at a star-studded 40th birthday party for her husband.

Elton John

The statement Thursday said, "Elton and Renate jointly wish it to be known that they have for many months lived apart whilst each of them has been considering the future of their marriage.

"During this period neither of them has wished to discuss their marriage publicly and apart from this statement do NOT wish to do so now.

"Since Elton's return to the country earlier this week they have had friendly discussions as to their future and have sadly decided that they should continue to live apart," the statement said.

It said the couple has no immediate plans to divorce and, "They remain on very good personal terms."

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Jazz drummer and orchestra leader Buddy Rich has been released from UCLA Medical Center after surgery to remove a brain tumor, a spokesman said Thursday.

Rich, 69, was released Monday and is receiving radiation treatment on an out-patient basis, hospital spokesman Michael Burns said.

Rich, who underwent a four-hour operation March 16, said he was "happy to be out, and expecting to rest up for a couple of months."

"I've been very touched by all the calls and good wishes — that really helps me to make it through some trying times."

Rich, a self-taught drummer, began playing as a toddler on the vaudeville stage. He has played in the bands of Joe Marsala, Artie Shaw and Tommy Dorsey before joining the Marine Corps during World War II.

After the war, Rich formed his own band with the financial help of another Dorsey alumnus, Frank Sinatra.

Rich was incapacitated by a heart attack during the winter of 1959-60, but recovered and defied the decline of the big band sound by forming a swing band in 1966.

PALM BEACH, Fla. (AP) — Ethel Kennedy, the widow of U.S. Sen. Robert F. Kennedy, went to a hospital emergency room early today after she was stung by a jellyfish.

Paramedics came to Mrs. Kennedy's oceanfront home late Thursday night after her son, Christopher George Kennedy, called for help.

Mrs. Kennedy, 59, who had been swimming earlier in the evening, was complaining of shortness of breath, emergency officials said.

After the paramedics left the home, Mrs. Kennedy, wearing a blue bathrobe, was taken by her son and three other people to the emergency room of Good Samaritan Hospital.

"She's fine," Christopher Kennedy told The Palm Beach Post. "Thank you for asking. We appreciate your concern. She just wanted to have it (the sting) checked out to be sure."

Robert Kennedy was assassinated by Sirhan B. Sirhan in June 1968, after Kennedy won the California Democratic presidential primary.

MAMMOTH SPRING, Ark. (AP) — Tess Harper's hometown plans to throw an Academy Awards Watch Night Party to root for the actress nominated for her role in "Crimes of the Heart."

"Entertainment Tonight" will also be stopping in town Monday, which has been declared Tess Harper Day, said Mayor Jean Pace.

Miss Harper — who grew up in this Missouri border town of 1,200 as Tessie Jean Washam — has been nominated for best supporting actress. Her parents, Ed and Rosemary Washam, operate Washam's Hardware on Main Street.

"The first time that I can remember that she did anything was for the school when she was in second grade," Miss Harper's mother said Thursday. "...She sang a song called 'Tammy.'"

The other actresses nominated are Piper Laurie for "Children of a Lesser God," Mary Elizabeth Mastrantonio for "The Color of Money," Maggie Smith for "A Room With a View," and Dianne Wiest for "Hannah and her Sisters."

Miss Harper, who lives in Beverly Hills, Calif., won't be attending the Watch Night Party, her mother said. She'll be at the awards ceremony in Los Angeles.

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A $12 million lawsuit filed against Liberace and a tabloid by a man claiming to be the late entertainer's lover was dismissed Thursday by the California Court of Appeal.

Scott Thorson claimed in the lawsuit that Liberace paid Thorson's half-brother, Wayne Johnson, to have an article appear in Globe magazine on Dec. 7, 1982. Johnson also was named in the lawsuit.

Thorson refused to comment on the ruling, referring calls to his lawyer, Ernst Lipschutz. Lipschutz did not immediately return a telephone call.

The Globe "is obviously very pleased with the outcome of the suit," said Jane D. Saltsman, one of the lawyers representing the tabloid.

The story, running under the headline "The Wicked Past of the Gay Suing Liberace" and written by Mike Snow, said that Thorson was a boy prostitute.

The six-page order, requiring Los Angeles Superior Court to enter a summary judgment in favor of Globe, stated there was "no evidence that Snow...or anyone at Globe entertained doubts as to the truth of the questioned statements."

Liberace died of complications from AIDS at his Palm Springs home in February. When the lawsuit was filed, he called it "just another attempt to use the media to grab headlines and cause me personal embarrassment."

Liberace spent nearly four years embroiled in a separate civil lawsuit brought by Thorson. The 27-year-old Thorson wanted $113 million from Liberace, claiming he lived with Liberace as secretary, chauffeur, animal trainer and lover.

The lawsuit was settled out of court last year for $95,000, after a judge threw out Thorson's palimony claim.

NEWARK, N.J. (AP) — Rock star Bruce Springsteen says he has no plans to run for governor, contrary to a tabloid report that he was considering entering the race as a Democrat.

The report in this week's National Enquirer was false, Springsteen's publicist, Marilyn Laverty, said Thursday.

The tabloid said the New Jersey native told an unidentified "close friend" he is "seriously considering" running in 1989, when Republican Gov. Thomas H. Kean must step down at the end of his second term.

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Edgar Rosenberg, husband of comedian Joan Rivers and co-executive producer of her late-night talk show, has been told to stay out of the program's daily operations.

"He was told to perform the duties of executive producer and leave the day-to-day operation to the producer," by Fox Broadcasting president Jamie Kellner, Fox spokesman Michael Binkow said Thursday.

Bust in oil business busted grocery store's business too

By CAROL RUST

MONROE CITY, Texas (AP) — Thirteen of maybe 15 buildings here are standing. Not all have paint any more.

No traffic; no customers. Micky Thompson isn't surprised. She crouches beside the cash register, her elbow propped on the counter. She watches a dog play out by the highway until the soap operas come on television.

It's Wednesday at Micky's Grocery on Texas Highway 65, but it might as well be any day. Not too much happens to make one stand out from the others.

But she remembers 1975, the whole year, just like it was yesterday. That was back when oil rigs were pumping not far down the road, and customers just about wore out the screen door coming and going so often.

"It passed by quicker than days do now, it was gone before you know it," she says, looking at faded Polaroid pictures of dust-covered faces stapled on the wall of the store where she lives and works when she gets business.

"I had sausage on a rotisserie over there where that old broke coffee maker is, and I had sandwiches they could put in the microwave," she says. "At noon every day, I'd have a whole string of customers, and I knew just about every single one of them."

An oil well put this town — just three miles east of Anahuac in Chambers County — on the map in 1935. Other wells followed, as did rows of company houses, two cafes, two grocery stores and a cleaners.

When Micky bought the store 13 years ago, several companies had offices here, oil was gushing and business was good. But the companies relocated, oil prices tumbled and about the only thing left between the city limit signs is Micky, two cats and a dog.

When she thinks about it, though, it doesn't really surprise her that business played out like it did. Seems like things have been playing out all her 58 years.

"When I was 4 years old, I might as well have been 101," she says, recalling how sickly her mother was and how she had to stand on an apple box to see over the counter to wash the dishes. Her mother later died, and "until I was 12, I thought my name was 'get-out-of-the-way-and-hush,'" Micky says.

She took to school pretty well; in fact, she skipped the fifth and sixth grades and did just fine in the seventh, she says. But by then, her father was dead, too, and her grandparents had children of their own and times were hard. She quit school and ran away from home when she was 12 because she didn't think anybody cared anyway.

She worked and got married, went to beauty school and got divorced and then bought the store 13 years ago. It wasn't easy starting out in business by herself, but then she's a firm believer that "you can do anything you set your mind to."

"When I moved in, this place wasn't fit for a barn, but I slapped some plywood on the walls and went to work," she says.

As long as oil was doing well, so was she. But set her mind where she will, she can't bring enough customers to her store any more to keep from dipping into her savings to pay the utility bills.

"I took in $19 worth of business yesterday, and that's about usual," she says. "But it'll pick back up, maybe not to where it was, but things'll get better."

Things might pick back up and they might not. And Micky might not be around to worry about it. If she had her way, she'll tell you, she'd be in beauty operator's school this second. And as soon as she can be, she will.

A smile sneaks out of the corners of her mouth when she furtively speaks of her plan, glancing around as if someone might hear. It's a secret just she, you and the dog know about, but she's got her mind set.

No, Micky won't be in this little town forever. But for the time being, she leans against the silent cash register, pets the dog and recites directions to the bathroom when an infrequent visitor asks.

Schoenfeldt

ALPINE, Texas (AP) — Roddy Schoenfeldt says that even when he was growing up in Dallas, he felt more comfortable with a campfire's glow than with city lights.

Schoenfeldt, 42, one of the organizers of the first Texas Cowboy Poetry Gathering conducted recently in Alpine, recalled feeling the lure of the lasso even before he lived on a ranch.

The yearning led to his joining a 4-H club in metropolitan Dallas and later to his becoming a real-life cowboy on a 22-section ranch near Hovey, northeast of Alpine.

Cowboys who tell stories around the campfire provide a much-needed service for fellow ranch hands and at the same time find an outlet for their own machismo, Schoenfeldt said.

"That's our MTV," Schoenfeldt said. "But the cowboy mystique is nothing new. We've just changed clothes. Anytime you get a bunch of men together doing a dangerous job, there's a camaraderie.

"It's he-men, doing he-man stuff," Schoenfeldt said. "These stories are a release because it's hard to get cowboys to tell their feelings."

Schoenfeldt said he and other organizers of the Alpine event revived a "dying art" with the cowboy poetry gathering: dying because the cowboy way of life got the boot from the 20th Century's age of technology.

Cowboy storytellers evoke the same nostalgia for things past that watching a Shakespeare play or a reading of Chaucer creates, Schoenfeldt said. That's compared with other art forms of today, such as heavy metal music that registers on Schoenfeldt as "nothing human."

Gary Morton, 35, a cowboy and nationally known Western artist from Lincoln, N.M., was one of more than 30 working cowboys who read both original and classic range-rider poetry during the Alpine gathering.

Morton said he never sat astride a horse until he turned 18, when he was living with an aunt and uncle who thrived on a steady social diet of attending rodeos.

It struck a chord inside Morton to see rodeo cowboys striving so hard to wrestle a calf to the dirt, lightning-quick, or to clutch a bronco's mane and hang on for dear life. The poetry of the cowboys' motions spurred Morton to try his own hand at riding, he said, and out of his own pure ignorance, his first horse was a bucking bronco.

From there, Morton took a job as a cowhand on the 455-section Bell Ranch in New Mexico. The experience taught him the pleasure of creating things, he said.

Writing poetry forces him to reach inside and grab his feelings — an unfamiliar action for supposedly rough-and-tumble cowboys, Morton said.

But he defended cowboys as "very gentle people."

"Taking care of an old cow or horses, you have to be gentle," Morton said. "And cowboys are nature lovers. You've had a drought and it rains, and it makes you feel good inside."

Organizers of the Texas Cowboy Poetry Gathering, modeled after the 3-year-old Elko Cowboy Poetry Gathering in Nevada, branded the Alpine event as an attempt to dispel the macho myths surrounding cowboys, Morton said.

"They may not be the literary types," Morton said, "and they may not be writing good poems, to an English professor, but most of their poems are showing an emotion.

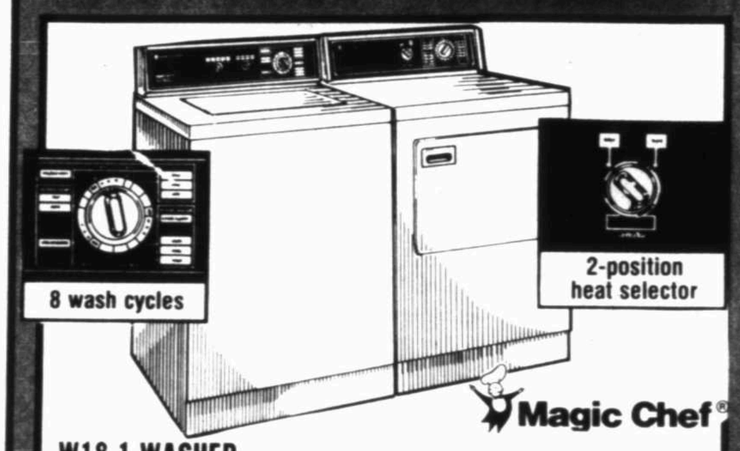

"They're baring their soul," Morton said.

Schoenfeldt said he hopes cowboy poetry gatherings remind people about their beginnings. "This has got to bring back the 'old days,'" he said sadly. "We're running out of land, and now we can annihilate ourselves. Man has gotten away from the basics. And when people got off the farm is when they got in trouble. They don't know it, but Mother Nature is one of the best teachers."

Schoenfeldt said he can't recall a time when he didn't want to move to the country. He studied animal husbandry at Texas A&M, then moved to Lajitas and ran a trading post for seven years.

Later he ran the 40-section Elephant Mountain Ranch and finally assumed the management of his wife's family ranch, where he oversees the grazing of 250 head of cattle. Inside the ranch house he oversees the growth of his children Shad, 13, and J.J., 12.

COPING WITH JOB LOSS

Confusion stems from implied relationship

By JIM MAY

May

DEAR COPING: As an active Christian, I have always worked very hard, first in college and then in my job. I was very successful by virtually anyone's standards. While I have been fortunate enough to hold onto my present job, the reduction in challenge, as well as in pay, makes me wonder if it was all worth the effort. I am confused as to what I should do next, and why. — BH

DEAR BH: I think I share your confusion. Let me begin with what I think is an implied relationship — that is, a Protestant Ethic that suggests that the honest accumulation of capital is a testament to man's glorification of God. Others even have interpreted the Ethic to suggest that economic success is a sign of a state of grace. As a test, you might consider responding to the following Protestant Ethic Scale questions from Mirels and Garrett of Ohio State University. (Answer each of the questions by circling the number indicating how much you agree or disagree):

	DISAGREE STRONGLY			AGREE			STRONGLY AGREE

Go ahead, answer the questions. Just for real fun, you might ask your spouse to answer the questions independent of you and compare your answers. I will discuss the research findings in next week's column.

CONFIDENTIAL TO MR. G.: I am very skeptical of any firm that promises you success in a new endeavor such as you describe without requiring any prior experience on your part. You did not mention any "up-front" fees, but such propositions often have some form of non-refundable processing fees. Before proceeding much further, check them out with the Better Business Bureau. If that check proves satisfactory, request references. Then check those references out carefully. Ask questions. If they are ligitimate, they will respect your thoroughness. If they are not, then you have spent a little to save a lot.

DEAR ABBY

Jokes are cruel to sufferers

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: This letter is addressed to everyone who does NOT have genital herpes or any other transmittable disease:

I have had genital herpes for six years. No one knows except my mother, my husband and, of course, my doctor. It's not something I tell everyone. It's a disease that your co-worker, neighbor, fellow church member, or even your brother or sister may have, but it's not discussed because it's so misunderstood.

An outbreak of herpes can be caused by stress, overexcitement and even extreme weather temperatures. For years, I've heard people make jokes in public or in personal conversation about the disease. "Don't sleep with him! You'll probably catch herpes or VD!" Or, while several women are sharing a lipstick in the ladies' room, someone says, "I hope no one here has herpes!" (Giggle.)

People with herpes are neither "dirty" nor "bad." Not only would it be extremely painful to engage in sex during an outbreak of lesions, I wouldn't do that to my worst enemy.

So, please, folks, cool the jokes. They aren't funny, and could deeply hurt your co-worker, neighbor, or even a member of your family. Sign me ... NOT LAUGHING

DEAR NOT LAUGHING: Thank you for a helpful letter. Herpes jokes should be outlawed along with those tasteless Helen Keller, Stevie Wonder and AIDS jokes.

DEAR ABBY: This pet peeve has bugged me for years. My English literature teacher taught me 65 years ago that I could not love anything that could not love me back. You hear people say, "I love my car," "I love ice cream," "I love a certain brand of soap or toothpaste." You get the idea.

There aren't any teachers like Miss Brudie around anymore. — MRS. RALPH CRAMPTON, LEMON GROVE, CALIF.

DEAR MRS. CRAMPTON: Unfortunately, Miss Brudie isn't around to defend herself, but she surely must have known that people can "love" their country, their freedom, their independence and any number of other things that can't love them back.

DEAR ABBY: My husband and everyone he works with has to "ask" for their paycheck when it is due. When I asked him why he has to "ask," he said that he was told that a former employee had told management that he felt demeaned by having his check handed to him, so they adopted this policy as correct business etiquette. (They employ eight people.)

My husband once jokingly told them that he didn't mind being "offended," but their policy continues as usual.

I have been in the business world for the last 30 years and have never heard of management anywhere employing such an intimidating tactic. My husband works hard for his money, and I think it is either sadistic or "power happy" to force an employee to "ask" for his paycheck.

What do you think? — AGHAST IN SAN FRANCISCO

DEAR AGHAST: Your husband should submit a written request stating that his paycheck be "given" to him routinely when it is due. And if his fellow employees also resent having to ask for theirs, one letter signed by all should do it.

Posters first form of film promotion

Copley News Service

CNS Graphic

Several factors combined to incite the interest in motion picture posters that began to erupt in the 1960s and that continues to increase.

For one thing, film festivals and revival houses piqued enthusiasm for the movies of the Golden Age. Another factor was the boom of the contemporary poster, the Peter Max and Milton Glaser-inspired graphics that oriented the eye toward oversized images of popular rock and folk personalities.

The appeal was enhanced by the vivid colors often used in movie posters — even those of the old black-and-white classics were colorized, not with a bland palette but in appropriately bold tones.

Posters were the earliest form of motion picture promotion, dating back to the day of the Vitagraph and Biograph studios. It was during this primitive period — around 1909 — that the dimensions and format of the standard "one sheet" poster were set at 27x41 inches vertical.

After World War I, improved lithographic techniques, plus the rise of the grandiose movie palace with its variety of display cases, led to more elaborate and variegated posters, as well. In addition to the one sheet, there was the horizontal "half sheet," 22x28 inches (the most valuable of which are the ones produced by MGM and RKO in the '30s), the 14x36-inch "insert cards," "window cards," which came in three sizes and, since they were placed in neighborhood shop windows, were made of heavier stock, "title" and "lobby cards" (11x14 inches). The last came in sets of eight, one announcing the film's title and featured players, the others showing key scenes and close-ups of the stars. Somewhat later came larger-sized posters: the 41x81-inch "three sheets," the 81x81-inch "six sheet" and the billboard-scaled "24 sheet," 246x108 inches or 24 times the size of the one sheet.

The market today depends on a balance between the popularity of cult films, graphic excellence and rarity. The one sheet is the classic collectible in the field. They were usually printed in runs of 8,000 to 10,000, as compared to only 1,000 runs of lobby cards, and are much more likely to be available. Prices for some posters and for particularly prized lobby cards have reached astronomical heights. A set of "King Kong" lobby cards, for example, brought $8,000 at a 1981 Los Angeles auction and the title card for "Bride of Frankenstein" has been valued at $3,500.

What, then, is out there for the more modest collector? For one thing, he would be well-advised to forget such cult favorites as Mae West, W.C. Fields, the Marx Brothers, Humphrey Bogart, Marilyn Monroe, James Dean and Elvis, and the all-time most popular films like "Gone With the Wind," "The Wizard of Oz" and "Casablanca." Still, there are many attractive one sheets on the market in the under-$50 range.

Drivers of inanimate objects should pay for pain they inflict

By ERMA BOMBECK

A couple of years ago, a woman in Vermont filed a $25,000 suit, charging she was struck from behind by a shopping cart while grocery shopping.

The suit alleged that another customer failed to keep her shopping cart under control and that she suffered injuries to her back and legs which made it impossible for her to work.

I say it's about time we got bad drivers of inanimate things off the streets and the aisle ways. Every day our lives are put in jeopardy by thoughtless operators who are never held accountable for the pain they inflict.

It isn't only shopping carts that leave wheel marks on the back of your knees and across your feet, but did you ever get in the path of a baby carriage being operated by a little brother or sister? Believe me, you'll never dance the polka again.

Umbrellas are lethal when put in the hands of unlicensed drivers who figure if God hadn't wanted them to carry an umbrella into an elevator, then how come He gave people two eyes?

Luggage is being taken over by amateurs, and the potential is there for mass extinction. Golf bags and boxes are thrown off airport carrousels with no thought of who is in their path, and in ticket lines huge stacks of luggage are piled up directly behind you so that your chances of remaining upright are nonexistent.

For years, I've watched men behind the wheels of power mowers who have no business there. Bulldozers maybe, but never in control of a motor-driven machine that within seconds levels every shrub and flower including the 5-year-old blue spruce that is just beginning to peek above the grass.

As a professional domestic, I've seen some women wheeling a sweeper around like a crazy person sucking up everything in its path. And if you don't know what you're doing, don't even think of renting a cleaner to shampoo your rug. I've lost two or three friends to foam.

Possibly the worst offenders of careless driving are the kids who mount skateboards and proceed to terrorize pedestrians. We're talking a vehicle with no steering mechanism, no brakes and no reason for being, other than a broken bone wish.

Inanimate vehicles are underrated. People with no experience whatsoever turn a key, push a switch, grab a handle and they're off!

The other day in a doctor's office, a small child scaled a water cooler and proceeded to spray the office with water. Where was a policeman when you needed him? Probably out giving someone a traffic ticket!

Evangelistic rivalry 'symptomatic of field'

By GEORGE W. CORNELL

NEW YORK (AP) — Signs of rivalry in TV evangelism, which emerged this week in the Jimmy Swaggart-Jim Bakker affair, were seen as symptomatic of an underlying condition in a packed field of such broadcasts.

Some call it a "saturated market," using up the available pool of support, creating increasing competition for it. Others say new, added donors remain to be gained, but nevertheless, the competition goes on.

"It's part of the free enterprise system among evangelists," says the Rev. Ben Armstrong of Morristown, N.J., long-time president of National Religious Broadcasters.

"The competition for the religious market is a healthy thing, and not hurtful," he said in a telephone interview. "It's what keeps evanglelists on their toes, to come out with better programs."

However, he said that in that vying field, TV evangelists are going to have to subscribe to high, defined standards of financial accountability, and his organization is taking steps for such certification.

The Swaggart-Baker feud showed up in disclosures naming TV evangelist Swaggart as the previously indentified figure whom resigned TV evangelist Bakker accused of plotting to take over his ministry.

However, the middle-man Bakker picked to handle it, TV evangelist Jerry Falwell, said the conflict was resolved after he had a long conversation with Swaggart and was convinced he had "no designs whatever" on Bakker's ministry.

NATION

"He told me his only goal was to clean up a very embarassing situation on behalf of the Assemblies of God, and I believe him," Falwell said. Both Swaggart and Bakker belong to that Pentecostal denomination.

Bakker earlier had said his resignation was prompted by blackmail over a 1980 sexual encounter.

That episode and other undisclosed criticism were cited in letters both by Swaggart and a group of religious broadcasters, relayed to Falwell, his spokesman said, leading him at one point to see a potential "civil war" between TV evangelists.

"But it's not going to happen," said Mark Demoss, a Falwell associate. "Enough rumors and stories were circulating to give reason to believe that was a possibility. But some misunderstandings that had existed don't exist now."

Neverthless, the sequence of events brought out the latent ingredients of rivalry among TV evangelists that both Armstrong and others say exists.

The Rev. Arthur C. Borden, executive director of the Evangelical Council for Financial Accountability, says TV evangelists have "saturated the market. No new donors are out there. That's why they're struggling for them."

To get them, he said, TV evangelists have to take them from each other.

However, Armstrong maintains new audiences and donors still are available, although there is a "sense of saturation in the major markets," and "increasing competition" for them among TV evangelists.

"But the real competition is against the secular market," he said. "The TV evangelists are not at one another's throat, but are trying to get attention in a secular environment in which they've been largely ignored.

"That's the No. 1 battle. The secondary battle is among evangelists and the quality of their programs." He called that a positive, stimulating competition, the kind of free enterprise that "made America great."

He said additional audiences still are obtainable with new programs and varied approaches — what he called "different strokes for different folks."

"But I don't see the donor pool as exhausted or in trouble," he said. "There's an increasing response to spiritual and traditional values."

He said that while the major markets, with only so much TV spectrum, were crowded, most TV evangelism was in cable systems, with ample room for expansion. "That's the growing edge," he said.

Armstrong, who has headed the swiftly expanding religious broadcasters organization for 20 years, now including 1,200 members, said its Ethics and Financial Integrity Commission is drafting a firmer code of ethics.

It previously had a 1944 set of standards, tightened somewhat in 1978, but never effectively applied. He said the new guidelines, requiring independent auditing of finances and public accessabililty, would be ready in June.

Religious broadcasters adhering to the rules would be publicly certified as doing so, he said. "They must meet the standards and prove they've met them," he said, adding:

"It's not that they would like to do it, but they're going to have to do it if they want to get money from people. The public is demanding it. That's part of the problem. People are asking these questions and wanting certified records."

Armstrong said that the plan wouldn't duplicate work of the Evangelical Council for Financial Accountabily, headed by Borden, since it covered a broad range of organizations, and not just religious broadcasting.

"We have the same objective, but we want it run by people who understand broadcasting. The council deals with a broad range of groups, hospitals, schools and others. But we want ours designed particularly for broadcasters."

Hahn urges Christians to keep religious trust

WEST BABYLON, N.Y. (AP) — The former church secretary who had a sexual tryst with evangelist Jim Bakker said she fears the controversy will decrease people's trust in religion.

Jessica Hahn, 27, urged Christians to "continue going to church and supporting their ministries."

"For many people, this is all they have — their faith, their church. I'm anxious for this to be over so people can continue going to church and worshiping," she told reporters Thursday. "I don't want people under the impression this goes on everywhere. It does not."

Ms. Hahn said she still could not discuss specifics of her relationship with Bakker until she meets with her legal adviser, Paul Roper, who was in Missouri on Thursday meeting with Assemblies of God leaders.

Roper, a California businessman and self-described church watchdog, said Ms. Hahn told him that after the sexual encounter she felt "like a piece of hamburger somebody threw out in the street."

He said Ms. Hahn told him that she first met Bakker after being invited to watch the evangelist tape a television service in Clearwater, Fla., according to the Los Angeles Times, which reported his account in today's editions.

When she arrived, Roper said, a mutual acquaintance of Ms. Hahn and Bakker checked her into a hotel room and gave her a glass of wine that made her ill.

Bakker was soon brought by the acquaintance from the swimming pool to the room, arriving in a bathing suit, Roper said. The acquaintance suggested that Ms. Hahn give Bakker a back rub to relax him before the night's prayer service, then left the room, Roper told the Times.

"Before long, they were engaged in a sexual incident. ...The next day she went home. She didn't go down there to have an affair with this guy," Roper said.

Bakker, in resigning last week as head of the South Carolina-based $172 million PTL television empire, said his night with Ms. Hahn in a Florida motel seven years ago led to a $115,000 blackmailing that threatened his ministry.

Ms. Hahn said, "The only thing I can really discuss is that I feel deeply concerned about the people that attend all these churches.

"I hope they see this will pass, and this has no reflection upon the Lord. God is still there for them and always will be. I am all right but would like for this to end. I don't want to see innocent people hurt."

Mood surrounding PTL ministry one of hope, forgiveness

FORT MILL, S.C. (AP) — From jars of wrinkle cream to autographed piggy banks, reminders of the PTL's exiled founding family are everywhere in the curious capital of their evangelical empire.

Post cards picturing the Rev. Jim Bakker, his wife, Tammy Faye, and their two children were selling out at the PTL gift shop at Heritage USA, the Christian theme park where the multimillion-dollar ministry is based.

"I guess people figure Jim and Tammy might not be around anymore, so they consider this picture of them so precious that it's like a collector's item," said Anita Lidie, assistant manager.

Hope and forgiveness seemed to be the predominant mood in the 2,300-acre compound where the Carolinas meet.

Sue and Lloyd Coursey journeyed here from their Atlanta home when they heard the bad news.

"We just wanted to be here at this time, like dropping in to visit a sick friend," Mrs. Coursey said. "We're not Jim and Tammy followers. We're not caught up in them. But that doesn't mean we're not hurting for them right now."

Feelings may be hurting, but business is not, according to the Rev. Jerry Falwell, the PTL's new leader.

"There is no indication of any loss of support or...negative fallout," Falwell said Thursday, noting that the 504-room Heritage Grand Hotel was booked solid.

Falwell also said Bakker souvenirs would be sold as long as there is a demand for them.

PTL officials were unable to provide sales figures for merchandise trading on the Bakkers' popularity.

Some of the items spotted on a stroll through the village's shopping arcade:

— Nine albums recorded by Tammy Faye Bakker, including her latest record, "Enough Is Enough." Price $10.

— An album by the Bakker's 17-year-old daughter, Tammy Sue, featuring the single "It'll Be Alright" and baby blue sweatshirts ($21) bearing her name and the song title.

— A dozen books by Jim and Tammy Faye Bakker, including "How We Lost Weight and Kept It Off!" which includes confessions of a chocolate cake binge.

— A line of Tammy Faye cosmetics, including wrinkle cream and eye makeup.

— Tammy Faye pantyhose.

PTL vice president and spokesman Neil Eskelin acknowledged the Bakkers' tremendous hold on Heritage USA, noting that "there's very little here that was not Jim Bakker's idea."

Even before the scandal, some fundamentalists argued that PTL's wealth would be better spent spreading the gospel and helping the needy, but Bakker kept building his dreamland.

It has mushroomed into the country's third-largest theme park, outdone only by the Disneys.

Heritage resident Pamela Schuffert doesn't think the park's appeal will suffer without Bakker.

"When Walt Disney died, it didn't affect Disneyland," she said.

Today, Heritage features a 52-foot, $10 million water slide and other rides, lodging for 6,000 guests — including some 600 campsites that ministers visit on horseback — a clinic, petting zoo and dinner theater.

On Tuesday afternoons the hotel's lobby swimming pool is converted into a baptismal font.

"They're not sprinkled, they're immersed," Eskelin said.

Under construction are a golf course and the world's largest Wendy's hamburger joint — a 10-story castle that will seat more than 300 people.

Bakker used to spend his Saturdays patrolling the vast grounds, asking shopkeepers what was selling best, pointing out what needed to be done.

"He sees every gum wrapper on the floor," Eskelin said.

Some 6.1 million people visited last year, he said, noting that about half came over the holidays to see the compound's 1.2 million Christmas lights.

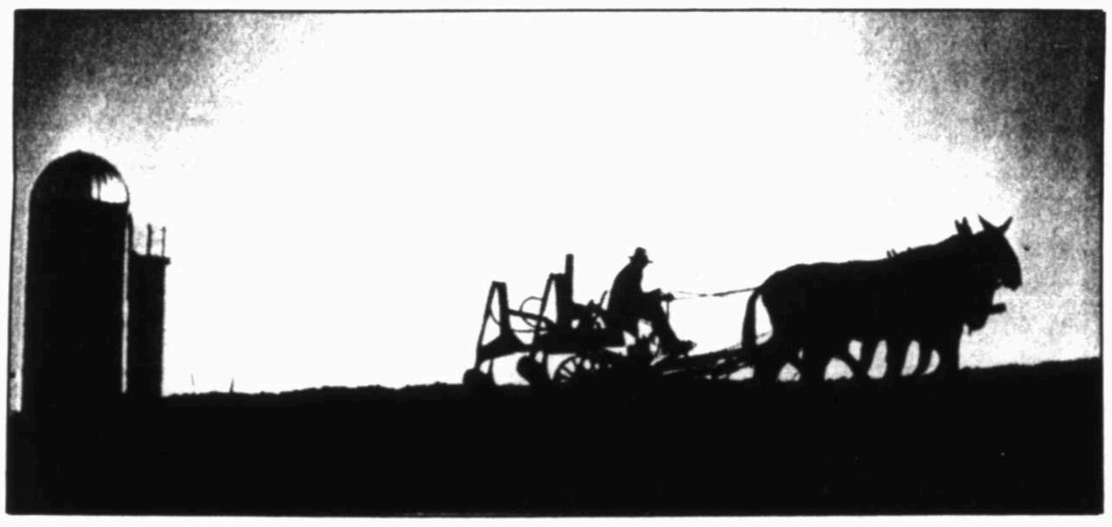

Every employee on the grounds, from gardeners to accountants, must write a testimonial on his or her personal faith as a Christian. The requirement extends to people working in shops that merely lease space from PTL.

If anything, some residents believe Heritage USA will become even stricter under new leadership.

Three sorority sisters die, five are critical after charity walk

OXFORD, Miss. (AP) — Five University of Mississippi sorority sisters were in critical condition today after three others died when a truck slammed into a car trailing a charity walk-a-thon, flipping it onto the group, officials said.

A one-ton truck pulling a hay-baler slammed into a small foreign car that was trailing 20 walkers Thursday afternoon, said Lt. Steve McClure of the state Highway Patrol.

"Apparently the truck overtook the procession, overtook the rearmost vehicle, struck it, knocking it into the walkers," McClure said.

The members of the Chi Omega chapter were walking from Batesville to their sorority house on campus about 25 miles away to raise money for the Mississippi Kidney Foundation, Chancellor Gerald Turner said.

Killed at the scene were Mary Langford and Beth Roberson, police said. Robin Simmons died at the Regional Medical Center in Memphis, Tenn., said Carolyn Clark, nursing supervisor at the hospital. All the victims were 20 years old.

Listed in critical condition with head injuries were Hess Worsham and Margaret Gardner, both 20, Ms. Clark said.

Three students remained in critical condition in intensive care at Oxford-Lafayette Medical Center, officials said. Six others were admitted to the hospital, with one listed in serious condition and five in fair condition.

Two were treated for minor injuries and released.

More than 50 sorority members and friends consoled relatives of the victims at the Oxford hospital Thursday evening, with many donating blood.

A memorial service is scheduled for noon today at Fulton Chapel on the Ole Miss campus. Turner has canceled noon classes for the service.

"We're just in shock" said Stephanie McGee, whose sister, Susan, was injured in the accident. "We've done a walk-a-thon for years."

McClure said no charges had been filed and the investigation would take a couple of days to complete. There was no evidence of drug or alcohol use involved or excessive speed, the patrol said.

The driver of the truck, Robert Davis of Senatobia, was uninjured.

Reagan expected to veto highway bill

By PEGGY ROBERSON

Hearst News Service

WASHINGTON — The $88 billion highway and mass transit bill that could raise the speed limit to 65 miles an hour on rural interstates landed on President Reagan's desk Tuesday and probably will bounce back to Congress today.

Reagan will veto the bill he says is "seriously flawed" because of special highway demonstration projects in some districts and "excessive funding" for mass transit programs.

While the president supports the increase in the speed limit, it is that issue that has been the major sticking point in getting an agreement in the Senate.

Western-state members of Congress generally support the speed limit increase, but many Easterners, like influential Rep. James J. Howard, D-N.J., chairman of the Public Works and Transportation Committee, fought it on grounds it would result in the loss of 3,500 lives over the next five years.

Howard was sponsor of the 1974 law requiring states to adopt the 55 mph limit or face the loss of up to 10 percent of their highway funds.

The House, which cleared the long-delayed highway bill by a vote of 407 to 17 on March 18, is expected to easily override the veto, possibly next Tuesday.

House Speaker Jim Wright, D-Fort Worth, placed the highway bill as No. 2 on a list of "must pass" legislation in the new, Democratic-controlled 100th Congress.

The administration's lobbyists are twisting Republican arms in the Senate, urging senators to stand behind the president to prove that he has recovered his clout since being weakened by the Iran-contra controversy.

The Senate voted 79 to 17 for the bill, and the votes of 66 senators would be required to override the veto. Head-counters said Thursday, "It will be close."

Senate Majority Leader Robert Byrd, D-W.Va., on the floor Wednesday, said the highway bill "will not make or break this president, but it could certainly make or break the lives of some half a million, or more, men and women who need the jobs that will be created by this bill."

In Texas, about 14,000 jobs are at stake as the highway building and repair season gets underway. Texas already has postponed about $181 million in highway construction projects.

"What a waste it would be for so many jobs, so many people, to be idled by the side of the road with no work because...to prove that the president has macho," Byrd said.

Conservative acvists opposed to demonstration projects have applauded the president's veto threat.

All of the 27 House members from Texas voted for the final compromise that included authority for states to increase the speed limit from 55 mph to 65 mph.

Marine guard now faces two charges of espionage

WASHINGTON (AP) — Sgt. Clayton J. Lonetree, the Marine embassy guard whose arrest on spying allegations triggered an investigation and the arrest of another Marine, now faces a second capital charge of espionage, Pentagon sources say.

The sources, who agreed to discuss the matter only if not identified, disclosed Thursday the Marine Corps had preferred five new charges against Lonetree — including a new count of espionage under Article 106 of the Uniform Code of Military Justice.

Conviction on such a charge carries a maximum penalty of death. The corps previously had preferred 19 counts against Lonetree, including a single count of espionage.

The sources said the decision to add charges was prompted by last week's arrest of another guard at the U.S. Embassy in Moscow, Cpl. Arnold Bracy, who is a former Lonetree colleague.

"It's directly related to the surfacing of Bracy," one source said. "The investigators believe they have enough to show the damage done here was more than originally thought."

The sources declined, however, to discuss the specific allegations underlying the new charges. They said the new charges included one count of espionage, two counts of conspiracy to commit espionage and two counts of "espionage-related" general misconduct charges.

According to the sources, the corps' decision to prefer the additional charges was made Wednesday. But it did not become known until Thursday at the conclusion of a closed-door legal hearing at the Marine base in Quantico, Va.

Both Lonetree and Bracy are being held at Quantico, located about 30 miles south of Washington.

After being informed of the new charges, defense attorneys were granted a recess of the hearing until April 15, the sources said.

Efforts to contact the defense attorneys were unsuccessful Thursday.

Maj. Tony Rothfork, a Marine Corps spokesman, confirmed a recess had been ordered in the case, but he said he could not discuss the report of new charges.

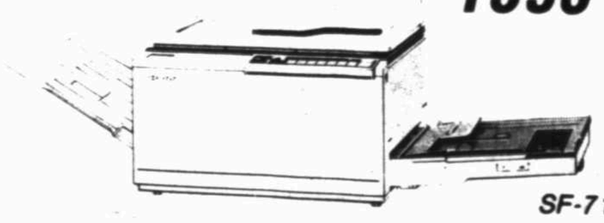

Lonetree, who worked as an embassy guard in Moscow and Vienna, was arrested in mid-December and transferred to Quantico on Dec. 31.

U.S. offers to drop plant inspections if Soviets scrap rockets

WASHINGTON (AP) — U.S. negotiators offered to drop their demand to surround Soviet nuclear missile plants with American inspectors if the Soviets scrapped medium-range rockets aimed at China and Japan, U.S. arms control director Kenneth L. Adelman says.

But the Soviets dismissed the proposal and insisted on retaining 100 warheads in their Asian territories, Adelman said Thursday in an interview.

All other SS-20 warheads would be dismantled in a treaty with the United States that also calls for the withdrawal of the U.S. Pershing 2 and cruise missiles now deployed in Western Europe and aimed at the Soviet Union.

The latest round of negotiations ended Thursday in Geneva without an agreement, but Adelman said he was not disappointed.

"Each round has been better than the last, so the trend is upward," he said. "I think the last round was very productive."

The talks are scheduled to resume April 23. The Soviets are expected to introduce their own proposal for verification along with a text for a treaty to eliminate medium-range missiles from Europe.

The two main unresolved issues apparently are how to verify a treaty and whether to include shorter-range nuclear missiles.

The Soviets have about 130 of the shorter-range SS-12 and SS-23 rockets in East Germany, Czechoslovakia and in the Soviet Union. The United States demands the right to match them.

The Soviets are willing to withdraw the missiles from Eastern Europe but not to negotiate the issue until there is a treaty to eliminate medium-range missiles.

Alexei Obukhov, the Soviet negotiator, accused the U.S. side on Thursday of taking an "unconstructive" stand in the talks.

Adelman responded: "They moan about everything we do. The Soviets are disappointed when we say there has been progress because their position that there has been no progress puts pressure on us to make progress."

On verification, the U.S. negotiators proposed a tough system of on-site inspection of Soviet missile plants and installations.

The Soviets have accepted the principle of American inspectors but not the details of the U.S. proposal, which involves what is known technically as "perimeter and portal monitoring" of the plants in which the Soviets produce, store and assembly the triple-warhead SS-20 missiles.

Initially, the United States proposed scrapping all medium-range nuclear warheads, but President Reagan and Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev reached a tentative understanding at the Iceland summit last October to retain 100 warheads on each side.

Iran controversy 'following' Reagan everywhere

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan, while suggesting to a sixth-grade class in Missouri that his secret sale of arms to Iran may encourage further hostage-taking, also is finding out the controversy is following him everywhere.

Reagan, who traveled to Columbia on Thursday to highlight his push for "back-to-basics" education, instead ran headlong into the Iran controversy by offering his harshest assessment yet of the secretive arms deals.

"The president is going to have to answer an Iran question wherever he goes," Reagan's spokesman Marlin Fitzwater said afterward.

Speaking to sixth-graders at Fairview Elementary School in Columbia, Reagan admitted the arms deal "wasn't carried out the way we had thought it would be. It sort of settled down to just trading arms-for-hostages.

"That's a little like paying ransom to a kidnapper. If you do it, then the kidnapper is just encouraged to go kidnap someone else," Reagan said.

The trip, which was Reagan's first out-of-town travel since his January surgery, was promoted by aides as a means of ending the seclusion imposed by the Iran controversy and emphasizing the president's agenda for the remainder of his term.

Fitzwater, who accompanied Reagan on the four-hour visit to the central Missouri city of 65,000, disputed the notion that Reagan wants to duck questions about the ongoing furor.

Fitzwater said Reagan wants to deal with the issue, and no one should be surprised that the chief executive speaks up.

"That should never be an unexpected event because it is a major part of his presidency," Fitzwater said.

Reagan commented on Iran in response to a student's question in a civics class, where the president observed a discussion of the branches of government.

Sixth-grader Heather Watson said her question was to find out what the president liked about his job, not to inquire about the Iran affair.

"I just wondered, what makes it so worthwhile to you?" she asked.

Reagan replied with a long defense of his decision to embark on the Iran policy, saying he believed it proper to attempt to free the U.S. hostages in Lebanon and improve relations with Iran.

"I still think that the idea was right to try to establish a friendly relationship, try and bring peace to two countries that are at at war, and try to get our people freed," Reagan said. "It kind of deteriorated into something else and as I said the other night on television, I won't make that mistake again."

Heather said she feels sorry for Reagan "because I wouldn't enjoy it — people following you around all the time and questioning you."

But she had one complaint.

"He never did answer my question," she said.

Fitwater contended that despite the focus on the Iran-Contra matter, Reagan had a "very good day" on his long-distance outing.

He pointed to the fact that Reagan had voluntarily approached the White House press corps to talk twice during the trip — a rarity on any day and something that has not occurred in the months since the Iran-Contra affair broke.

Fitzwater said the president had been able to speak at length about education and predicted that the nation would see that Reagan is back in control of his administration.

"It's a question of how well he can do on the other issues," Fitzwater said. "You saw a very strong presidency (today) and that's what you're going to see."

1906 quake death toll may be higher than thought

SANTA BARBARA, Calif. (AP) — More than 5,000 people may have died in San Francisco's 1906 earthquake disaster, 10 times the original estimate and twice the newest confirmed death toll, the city archivist says.

Many of the great quake's previously unconfirmed victims "were poor people, working people," said historian Gladys Hansen, adding that she wants to learn the real toll because "nobody should be shoved out with the garbage and forgotten."

Mrs. Hansen said determining the quake's real toll — officially reported as 478 to 498 soon after the quake, and for decades believed to be 700 — will provide a more realistic basis for emergency planners trying to prepare for the next such catastrophe.

She cited several reasons why she thought the toll was underestimated: Many fled San Francisco immediately after the quake and died elsewhere, post-quake fires were so intense that they destroyed all traces of bodies, and city leaders in 1906 played down the fatalities because they feared a high count would discourage investment in reconstruction.

The April 18, 1906, temblor had a magnitude estimated at 8.25 on the Richter scale of ground motion, although the scale did not actually exist at that time. Fires ignited by the quake burned 500 square blocks of the city and destroyed 28,000 buildings.

Scientists don't expect a repeat of the great 1906 temblor within the next 100 years, but federal officials estimate such a quake would kill up to 11,000 people in the entire San Francisco Bay area — a figure Mrs. Hansen believes is far too low.

Mrs. Hansen has confirmed about 2,500 deaths, up from the 2,010 she reported one year ago, she said Thursday during the American Seismological Society's annual meeting at the University of California, Santa Barbara.

She is investigating reports of another 500, and "it wouldn't surprise me at all that we'll eventually reach over 5,000 people."

Mrs. Hansen's new estimate is based on continued examination of public records, obituaries, clippings from newspapers around the nation and letters from people telling her of relatives who died.

Her belief that the final total will exceed 5,000 is based on the rate at which previously unknown deaths are being discovered, Mrs. Hansen said.

1787 Constitution Daybook

Associated Press

Tuesday, March 27, 1787
PHILADELPHIA TODAY

Today was fair, with a mean temperature of 50 and a breeze from the south- southwest.

Meeting in its room on the first floor of the State House, the Pennsylvania Legislature prepared to correct an embarrassing oversight. The Act of December 30 appointing delegates to the proposed Federal Convention had not included Benjamin Franklin, president of the Supreme Executive Council and by far the state's most eminent citizen. Today, the Assembly read for a second time and ordered printed an amendment adding Franklin to the state's delegation.

Philadelphia's six street commissioners also met, appointed men to collect the taxes due for maintaining the city's streets, agreed to appoint scavengers to haul away street dirt and debris and discussed whether or not to employ convicts from the county jail to scrape and sweep the streets, which were exceedingly dry and dusty.

CONFEDERATION TODAY

Congress had a quorum and could act. It heard a report from Secretary Thomson that a petition from Henry Ringlispeur asking for his pay as a soldier during the Revolution should be referred to the Board of Treasury. Congress so ordered, appointed Abraham Clark, Rufus King and William Pierce to a committee on a request from John Porter that the findings of his court-martial be overturned, and adjourned.

DELEGATES TODAY

After Congress adjourned, William Samuel Johnson of Connecticut dined with President of Congress Arthur St. Clair at the Cherry Street mansion that Congress rented and maintained for its president.

George Washington noted that Mount Vernon's weather was "very smoky" and lowering, with a very light south wind. As usual, he rode out to supervise his farm workers and had an inventory of all his horses and cattle taken. Dr. and Mrs. Stuart and their two daughters, who had been visiting Mount Vernon, left for home after dinner.

Gov. Edmund Randolph wrote about the impending Convention to an old friend and fellow Virginia delegate James Madison.

"My Dear Friend:

"I have turned my mind somewhat to the business of May next: but am hourly interrupted. At present I conceive 1. that the alterations shd. be grafted on the old confederation. 2. that what is best in itself, not merely what can be obtained from the assemblies, be adopted. 3. that the points of power to be granted be so detached from each other, as to permit a state to reject one part, without mutilating the whole.

"With these objects, ought not some general propositions to be prepared for feeling the pulse of the convention on the subject at large? Ought not an address to accompany the new constitution?"

Gov. William Livingston of New Jersey also wrote an old friend and colleague. Livingston's letter was addressed to Mr. McElroy, Innkeeper Bristol (across the Delaware from Burlington, N.J.) and said:

"As our next Legislature meets at Burlington, I say prepare your fishing tackle. If you Pennsylvanians will take Jersey money (and I believe it is as good as your own) I shall be making parties not to the Sign but to the Reality of good victuals and drinks at Bristol in the house of Mr. McElroy."

LOOKING BACK

Philadelphia City Government

Imagine what Philadelphia would be like today if there were no mayor, no City Council, no municipal courts — if, in fact, the only city agency left was the Streets Department. Could the city continue to function? It did in 1787.

Philadelphia had had a mayor and a City Council, and a city court system until 1776. However, since they existed by virtue of a charter granted by William Penn, they were wiped out by the Declaration of Independence. Fourteen years later, the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania got around to granting the city a new charter, and a mayor, City Council, municipal court system, etc. were re-established.

From 1776 until 1790, the Street Commissioners, who were meeting this day 200 years ago, were the only government, providing all of the essential municipal services — water, street construction and repair, weights and measures, markets, a night watch, street lighting, sewers and so forth. They did so with a part-time clerk and a lot of contracted services.

NATION IN BRIEF

Progress on nation's water quality mixed

WASHINGTON (AP) — Improved sewage treatment was credited with reducing the amount of bacteria and lead in the nation's streams and rivers, according to a study published today.

However, the study published in the journal Science also found that levels in water of such dangerous metals as arsenic and cadmium are on the increase.

Impressive improvement in water quality has occurred since the passage of the Clean Water Act in 1972, particularly in light of the growth in population and industrial production in the same period, the study said.

Much of this gain is the result of improved sewage treatment, limiting what is called "point-source" pollution, the study said.

But other, "non-point" sources of pollution, such as agricultural chemicals, may still prevent achievement of national water quality goals, said the report by Richard A. Smith and Richard B. Alexander of the U.S. Geological Survey and M. Gordon Wolman of Johns Hopkins University. They studied the results of periodic water quality tests on nearly 300 rivers and streams from 1974 to 1981.

Point sources are such things as industrial plants and municipal sewage systems, where the source of water pollution can be identified and treatment measures can be applied.

Defense research costs up

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Massachusetts Institute of Technology and Lockheed Missile and Space Co. led the list of 500 top recipients of research contracts awarded by the Pentagon, which totaled nearly $20 billion last year.

The Defense Department reported Thursday that its spending for research last year had increased by some 4.6 percent.

The annual report ranks the top 500 companies or non-profit groups receiving research, development, test and evaluation contracts. The rankings are based on a review of all contracts totaling $25,000 or more awarded during the fiscal year that ended last Sept. 30. Contracts totaled $19.8 billion.

Among corporations, Lockheed Missiles & Space took first place with awards totaling $1.48 billion, down slightly from the $1.53 billion awarded in 1985 but still far ahead of second-place McDonnell Douglas.

Long distance calls eyed

WASHINGTON (AP) — Federal employees may make personal long-distance calls from work for compelling reasons under guidelines the government is drawing up to curb the telephone abuse estimated to cost taxpayers $165.8 million a year.

The proposal will be published in the Federal Register to begin a 60-day comment period, said Government Services Administration head Terence C. Golden.

Under the proposal, federal employees would be allowed to make telephone calls under limited circumstances, including notifying relatives if an employee is injured, brief calls home daily when an employee is traveling overnight on business, and calls to a babysitter if employees are working overtime without advance notice.
