Japan sees its worst oil spill in busy port

■ Tanker dumps nearly 4 million gallons of light crude off coast of Yokohama making more than a dozen sick from fumes; authorities fear it could hit rich fishing grounds near coast.

Associated Press

YOKOHAMA, Japan — In Japan's worst oil spill, a supertanker gashed its hull near the country's busiest port Wednesday and dumped nearly 4 million gallons of light crude that drifted toward rich fishing grounds.

The 3 1/2-mile-wide slick in Tokyo Bay was spreading and drifting north toward Tokyo, and authorities feared it could reach the coastal fishing grounds today. More than a dozen people — mostly children — were sickened by the fumes.

"The most important thing for us to do now is to limit the extent of the spill," said Shigehiro Sakamoto, head of the cleanup task force. "We are putting all of our resources into that."

The 147,012-ton, Panamanian-registered Diamond Grace ran aground Wednesday morning about 22 miles south of Tokyo, just off Yokohama, Japan's busiest port. The leaking stopped 1 1/2 hours after the accident, and the tanker moved to nearby Kawasaki to be emptied of its shipment.

Dozens of ships were mobilized to clean up the spill and slow the oil's advance toward coastal fish stocks. Workers spread absorbent mats on the slick or scooped it up with barrels, buckets and ladles, and helicopters sprayed dissolving agents on it.

The spill was small in comparison to the world's Detergent is being sprayed over an oil slick by a ship after an estimated 3.9 million gallons of crude oil spilled from the Panamanian-registered Diamond Grace that ran aground off the coast of Yokohama in Tokyo Bay Wednesday. The spill left a slick at least 5 kilometers (3⅛ miles) in diameter and sickened more than a dozen people with oil fumes.

Cancer study

BOSTON — The largest, most exacting study ever of electricity and cancer found no solid evidence that living near high-voltage lines causes childhood leukemia, as some have feared. The researchers say their work is the strongest indication yet that this much-discussed concern is groundless.

Midland teen to try her luck at amateur rodeo

Story by Rick Lopez

She hasn't been involved in rodeo for very long, but she's got what it takes to make it to the top.

Midlander Erica Price, 17, spent most of her life gazing into the television set admiring the skill and bravery displayed by rodeo stars. It was a dream she envisioned after moving to Midland from Norway about a decade ago.

But at 15, she decided to join some friends and practice difficult maneuvers on horseback.

"I joined the FFA and went to the stock shows and watched the rodeos, and during that time I decided I was going to try it," the Lee High School senior said.

For years, Ms. Price has practiced every day of the week for at least one hour. Her mother/amateur coach, has helped her through new techniques and treated dozens of bruises she sustained from charging into barrels during practice.

Her first performance was at the Tall City Horse Club here two years ago. All age groups were invited to participate.

"That's when I decided to give it a try," she said.

That was also one of the first times Ms. Price fell off a horse during a rodeo.

"It's more embarrassing than anything," she said. "I just got up from the ground and left. There's not much more to do."

At last month's Ranch Rodeo, Ms. Price won her first award — a second place for All-Around Performance in the division for girls 16-19.

Her next challenge is at the Amateur Junior Rodeo Association's

Ranchers come to aid of agencies in standoff aftermath

By Alice Ashmore
Staff Writer

In the West Texas tradition of "neighbor helping neighbor," area ranchers are coming to the aid of Fort Davis agencies that suffered financially during the recent Republic of Texas standoff.

The April confrontation with the separatists drained resources from nearly every law enforcement agency in the area, Midlander Bobby Holt told the Reporter-Telegram Tuesday.

"It has been brought to my attention that during this unexpected standoff, the law enforcement agencies in all these counties have spent every dime that they had in their budgets," Holt said in a recent letter signed by him and Clayton Williams.

Williams and Holt are spearheading the local fund-raising effort. So far the men have raised nearly $10,000.

Williams said area ranchers have been generous in their response. "Nearly everybody has responded," he said.

Williams owns three ranches in the Fort Davis area, he said.

The Reporter-Telegram talked to several Fort Davis-area ranchers who said they had also contributed to the fund, but asked to remain anonymous.

"I think it is fantastic," said Jeff Davis County Sheriff Steve Bailey, who is overseeing distribution of the funds. "All the money stays in Jeff Davis County," he said.

"Bobby has just done wonders; he has access to resources we don't have," Bailey said. "He needs the biggest pat on the back."

Holt said that state funds were not available to reimburse the county for expenses.

Bailey said one of his first decisions during the standoff was to confiscate the Fort Davis Fire Department's diesel and fuel for law enforcement use.

He said a portion of the money would be used to "get the Fire Department back to where they were."

Food was probably the single biggest expense during the standoff, Bailey said, estimating that half of the $10,000 will be spent on food bills.

"When you start adding up 450 to 500 hamburgers, or 1,000 burritos a day, it gets expensive," he said.

Food was provided to all law enforcement, medical people and staff on the scene.

Holt, commissioner of the Texas Department of Public Safety, said every

Jimmy Stewart, star of 'It's a Wonderful Life,' dies at 89

BEVERLY HILLS, Calif. (AP) — James Stewart, the stammering, aw-shucks actor who embodied the small-town values of decency and moral courage both in his life and on the screen, died Wednesday. The star of "It's a Wonderful Life" and "Mr. Smith Goes to Washington" was 89.

Stewart died at his home in Beverly Hills from a blood clot in his lung. Fighting illness and mourning the death of his wife, he had become something of a recluse toward the end of his life.

Stewart conjured up some of the most memorable performances in cinema history. In more than 75 films, a distinguished military career and exemplary private life, he emerged as a symbol of old-fashioned American integrity.

"America lost a national treasure today," President Clinton said. "Jimmy Stewart was a great actor, a gentleman and a patriot. We will always remember his rich career of great performances that spanned several decades and entertained gener-

Midland boy remains in critical condition with gunshot wound

By Gary Shanks
Staff Writer

A Midland boy who was shot in the head Monday remains in critical condition at Memorial Hospital and Medical Center and is not expected to recover.

According to anonymous sources the child suffered severe and irreversible brain damage when a high-powered handgun discharged at a home in northwest Midland.

"It doesn't look good," admitted Officer Douglas Crabtree, a spokesman for the Midland Police Department.

Reports on the child's age have ranged from between 10 and 13 and neither hospital officials nor police have released his name. The Reporter-Telegram staff has chosen not to disturb the child's family for this information.

The boy was staying with his father, Curtis Baze, at his 3608 Apollo Court home and was playing with his 14-year-old cousin, according to police reports. The children reportedly were playing with a loaded .357 magnum

Che Guevara remains believed found in Bolivia

LA PAZ, Bolivia (AP) — The remains of guerrilla leader Ernesto "Che" Guevara are likely among seven skeletons found on a remote airstrip in Bolivia, the government said Wednesday.

Minister of Information Mauricio Antezana said the government is fairly certain the remains include those of Guevara. Confirmation is not expected for at least a week.

Six skeletons were discovered Saturday and another Tuesday in a common grave near the Vallegrande airport. Argentine, Cuban and Bolivian forensic experts have found pieces of clothing and buttons near the remains buried in hard-packed clay soil.

"From a scientific point of view, Che is in this common grave," said Dr. Jorge Gonzalez, head of the Cuban Institute of Legal Medicine. "It is not a question of a personal desire as a Cuban, but we are convinced as scientists that he is buried here."

Guevara was a charismatic Argentine doctor who fought with Fidel Castro in Cuba and was Cuba's second most influential leader until he returned to South America to foment revolution.

Gonzalez believes the other remains are those of guerrillas captured with Guevara by the Bolivian army near Vado del Yeso, 250 miles southeast of the capital. The captured men were flown were flown to Vallegrande, where Guevara and some of his forces were executed.

There have been conflicting reports on Guevara's remains.

Last year, retired Gen. Gary Prado, who headed a U.S.-trained military unit that hunted down Guevara, said that Guevara's body was incinerated and the ashes spread over a rain forest.

But retired Bolivian military officers had claimed two years ago, however, that his remains were buried under the airstrip at Vallegrande, 550 miles east of the capital La Paz.

Guevara remains a figure of almost mythic proportions in Latin America, his bearded image appearing on everything from T-shirts to mudguards on trucks.

Chee-hwa smooth in unstaged appearance

HONG KONG (AP) — The reporters used three-channel translation devices to understand the news conference and join in. The interviewee needed nothing — he spoke all three languages.

But ultimately, he didn't say much in any of them.

This was Hong Kong's new leader at his first unstaged appearance in office: erudite, affable, gently humorous, comfortable with any topic.

Tung Chee-hwa left the impression that he knows just what to say — and, more importantly for his relationship with his bosses in Beijing, just what not to say.

"Status quo," "maintain" and "continue" were his buzzwords during the hour-long news conference with 400 journalists in English, Cantonese and Mandarin.

The crew-cut, 60-year-old chief executive of the newly reborn Hong Kong took questions about democracy, housing, the legalities of protests — he even took a question about the Falkland Islands.

"He sounded good," a British reporter said later. "But I can't really remember anything he said."

In his second day in office, Tung can hardly be expected to rattle off detailed policy analyses and promises that political reality may force him to abandon.

Still, his style augurs well for the Chinese government, which wants — and appears to have — a Hong Kong leader who can satisfy people with answers while saying little that can be thrown back at him later.

Some examples:

■ On U.S. Secretary of State Madeleine Albright's bypassing of the swearing-in of the China-appointed legislature: "I was disappointed, but in the end it was quite OK. It was a happy event for the Chinese people. No single person or single event could spoil it." He also acknowledged her invitation to the United States — and said he'd get back to her.

■ On Hong Kong's most pressing domestic issue — more housing: Tung will "continue to liaise" with the housing secretary about "our No. 1 priority."

■ On whether Democratic Party members who protested without a permit at the legislative building on handover night will be arrested: He simply didn't say.

■ On future conflicts with China: "There will be conflicts. And obviously they will need to be talked through." But, he added, "It does not mean we are to humor or accommodate the other party."

Tung seemed as though he would be equally comfortable standing next to former British Gov. Chris Patten or Chinese President Jiang Zemin.

But just as he is forging his own identity, the shipping tycoon is reaffirming in subtle ways what undoubtedly will be his strong links with mainland China.

Asked about ties between Hong Kong and the nearest mainland province, Guangdong, he called their relationship a close one: "like one between the teeth and the lips."

It was classic mainland talk, the way the Chinese government once described its relationship with North Korea. And Hong Kong surely will wonder if it aptly describes the relationship between Tung and Beijing.

Cosmonauts discard cargo ship, ready for repairs

MOSCOW (AP) — The garbage-laden cargo ship that punctured the Mir space station shot through the Earth's atmosphere Wednesday and burned up. But the Russians have not said whether the vanishing vessel left any clues to the cause of the collision.

Meanwhile, the two Russian cosmonauts on the Mir tested their space suits in preparation for a difficult trip into the dark, cramped and airless Spektr module that was ruptured in the June 25 crash.

The Mir lost about half its power when the Progress M-34 cargo ship slammed into one of its six modules during a practice docking.

The cargo ship, which had brought supplies to the Mir and was taking garbage away, was ditched Wednesday morning and disintegrated over the Pacific Ocean soon afterwards, said spokeswoman Vera Medvedkova of the Russian Mission Control Center.

It is standard practice to get rid of cargo ships after they deliver their supplies. But the Russians kept this one in orbit for several extra days to see if they could glean anything about what caused the accident.

They haven't announced their findings. Viktor Blagov, a deputy chief of mission control, has played down comments by U.S. space officials that the Progress may have been overloaded.

The two cosmonauts have to go inside the sealed-off Spektr module to make repairs that can replenish the space station's energy supply.

Cosmonauts Vasily Tsibliyev and Alexander Lazutkin examined their spacesuits Wednesday and made other preparations for the mission, planned for July 11, Medvedkova said.

U.S. astronaut Michael Foale will wait for them inside the Soyuz escape capsule, ready to make a quick exit from the Mir with his colleagues if necessary.

It will be a difficult job for the Russians, who will be carrying cables designed to link the Spektr's solar batteries to Mir's main power supply system.

The cosmonauts, clad in bulky spacesuits, will have have to unseal the Spektr and squeeze through a narrow hatch to get into the module.

Once inside, they will have to rely on helmet lights to see what they're doing. The space is cramped and filled with U.S. science experiments and Foale's belongings — from his toothbrush down to his athletic shoes.

Outside Moscow, researchers have been practicing for the operation in a full-size model of the Mir submerged in a 20-foot pool of water. They will pass on their recommendations to the Mir crew.

A new Progress supply ship will blast off Saturday from Kazakstan in Central Asia to take repair equipment and other vital supplies to the Mir, which it will reach Monday.

However, the supply ship will not carry the tools to patch up the postage stamp-sized hole in Spektr, which means it will remain off limits even if the cosmonauts succeed in hooking up the cables.

The Mir's crew had to turn off most of the space station's equipment to save power. But they have accumulated enough power for a scientific experiment that involves lighting plants for several hours every day to study their growth. The experiment has been performed regularly since Monday, Medvedkova said.

Inquiry alleges Canadian cover-up of Somalia abuses

TORONTO (AP) — A commission investigating Canada's worst military scandal concluded Wednesday that senior officers had lied and attempted to cover up the killing of a Somali civilian in 1993.

The commission's scathing final report, titled "Dishonored Legacy," asserted that poor leadership was rampant throughout the military's officer corps. It said the army's 1992-93 mission to Somalia went awry from the start.

The report was assailed as "excessively negative" by Defense Minister Art Eggleton, whose government earlier this year ordered the federally appointed commission to cut short its work.

"It's a blanket condemnation of our military," Eggleton said. "It's an insult to the vast majority of the dedicated men and women who served honorably in Somalia."

The three-member commission, headed by a federal judge, conducted 18 months of hearings on allegations of abuses involving Canadian soldiers who served in the multinational mission in Somalia.

The government, contending the inquiry had become too long and costly, ordered the hearings to halt at the end of March. That prevented the commission from obtaining testimony about the worst incident — the March 16, 1993, torture-slaying of Somali teen-ager Shidane Arone by Canadian soldiers photographed gloating beside his bloody body.

The commission said the government decision to curtail the inquiry left many questions unanswered, including the roles of top-ranking officials in Somalia and at military headquarters in Canada.

Although blocked from addressing the Arone slaying, the commission was able to hear detailed testimony about the fatal shooting of a Somali intruder at a Canadian base March 4, 1993.

Though a military surgeon claimed from the outset the shooting was a homicide, his superiors at the base conducted their own investigation rather than summoning military police investigators, the commission said.

"It was at this point that the conscious cover-up in Somalia began, since crucial information was being ignored deliberately and perhaps held back from senior members of the chain of command," the report said.

The commission said the failure to investigate the March 4 shooting vigorously may have produced an attitude that led to Arone's killing 12 days later.

"They felt they were above the law," commission chairman Gilles Letourneau said of soldiers at the base.

Two enlisted men eventually were jailed for their role in Arone's killing, and several officers were reprimanded for neglect of duty.

But the persisting suspicions of a cover-up to protect senior officers contributed to a serious morale problem throughout the military. Abuses also were reported among Canadian soldiers in Bosnia and Haiti, tarnishing the nation's reputation as a world leader in peacekeeping.

The inquiry commission said the Canadian Airborne Regiment, which was disbanded because of the Somalia scandal, was unfit for deployment because of discipline and organizational problems.

The commission also said careerism, poor leadership and buck-passing were rife among the officer corps. It said some officers lied or were evasive on the witness stand.

Because its hearings were curtailed, the commission was unable to single out individual officers for blame in connection with the Somalia abuses.

However, the commissioners did criticize a former chief of staff, retired Gen. Jean Boyle, saying they disbelieved his denials of a role in altering Somalia-related documents.

John de Chastelain, a retired general who served as chief of staff and as ambassador to Washington, was criticized for poor leadership in preparing the Airborne Regiment for Somalia.

The report recommended that parliament set clear guidelines for participation in future peacekeeping missions and exercise greater oversight of the military. The military's justice system also should be overhauled to assure its independence, it said.

One Palestinian killed, dozens injured in Hebron clashes

HEBRON, West Bank (AP) — In the firebomb-scorched alleys of Hebron and the sand dunes of Gaza, Israeli troops fired live rounds and rubber bullets Wednesday to quell Palestinian riots. One protester was killed and dozens were wounded.

Palestinian police did nothing to calm tempers inflamed by an anti-Muslim leaflet in Hebron and a land dispute with Jewish settlers in the Gaza Strip.

Yasser Arafat's West Bank security chief, Jibril Rajoub, warned the violence would only get worse unless Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu implements the peace agreements the two sides have signed.

"We are not in charge of guarding Netanyahu's policies against the Palestinian people," Rajoub said — contradicting Netanyahu's claims that Israel and the Palestinians have resumed security cooperation.

Rajoub took U.S. Consul General Edward Abington on a tour of the Hebron clashes, where he watched dozens of Palestinians hurl rocks and firebombs at Israeli soldiers.

Israeli snipers, perched on rooftops, responded with live rounds, fired at the rioters' legs. It was the first time in weeks that Israeli soldiers used live ammunition in Hebron.

Standing just feet away, Abington said: "The situation is very tense. We need restraint on both sides."

Seven Palestinians, including a 12-year-old boy, were wounded by live fire in the legs, and 30 were hit by rubber bullets. The injured were given first aid at a makeshift clinic — an ambulance, a stretcher and two nurses — set up in a nearby gas station.

The clashes in Gaza began when about 200 Palestinian protesters threw stones at Israeli bulldozers leveling sand dunes near the Gush Katif Jewish settlement. The Palestinians say the land belongs to them.

Israel troops took cover behind jeeps, firing live rounds and tear gas canisters to disperse the stone-throwers. One protester, 18-year-old Maher Assar, was killed by a gunshot to the chest.

The teen-ager's funeral procession later in the day was joined by hundreds of mourners chanting "No to settlements!" and "We will give our lives to defend our land!" It was accompanied by a convoy of Palestinian police cars.

'We are not in charge of guarding Netanyahu's policies against the Palestinian people.'
— Jibril Rajoub, Yasser Arafat's West Bank security chief

The Hebron violence was triggered by anger over anti-Muslim fliers distributed by an Israeli woman over the weekend. The leaflets, depicting the Prophet Mohammed as a pig stomping on the Koran, the Muslim holy book, were posted on shops throughout Hebron.

The woman was arrested and was to be indicted Thursday, an Israeli police commander said. He did not discuss the charges.

"They have gone too far with their humiliations of the Muslims," said an 18-year-old Palestinian protester, stuffing rags into gasoline-filled bottles to prepare firebombs.

Protesters chanted "Allahu Akbar!" — "God is great!" — as they ran toward Israeli troops in riot gear, hurling rocks and firebombs.

Israeli media reports said the army moved reinforcements to Hebron on Wednesday, including an elite unit.

Meanwhile, a Palestinian security official said two Palestinians, Ayash Daoud, 45, and Hosni Fayez, 50, were detained for allegedly selling land to Jewish settlers in the 1980s.

Land is at the heart of the Israeli-Arab dispute, and Palestinians who sell land to Jewish settlers are considered traitors.

Also Wednesday, Netanyahu told his police and justice ministers to enforce laws against illegal building by Arabs in east Jerusalem, and to demolish them if necessary, Netanyahu's adviser David Bar-Illan said.

Palestinians have built hundreds of homes without permits in east Jerusalem in recent months. The Palestinians accuse Israel of creating a housing shortage in east Jerusalem and say they are forced to build illegally because they cannot get permits. City officials deny the accusations.

2 hurt in Dominican Republic fighting as general strike goes on

SANTO DOMINGO, Dominican Republic (AP) — A general strike paralyzed the northeast for a second day Wednesday and led to clashes between protesters and security forces. At least two people were reported wounded.

A reporter was shot in the hand and a young protester took a bullet in the foot during morning confrontations in San Francisco de Macoris, a reporter for Listin Diario newspaper said in a telephone call.

Strikers protesting halted infrastructure projects clashed with police and hundreds of soldiers stationed throughout the region, hurling rocks and setting off homemade bombs. Police fought back with tear gas.

More than 400 civic and labor organizations vowed support Wednesday for the strike, which began Tuesday. Demonstrators blocked roads with piles of trash and burning tires, businesses remained closed and public transportation remained halted Wednesday throughout the region.

The strike involved the northeastern provinces of La Duarte, Maria Trinidad Sanchez, Samana, Sanchez Ramirez and Salcedo. Strike organizers and officials met Tuesday night but failed to reach an agreement.

The police officer in charge of the northeast district, Brig. Gen. Carlos Antonio Reyes Mora, showed journalists spent shells from bullets he claimed were fired at authorities Tuesday.

The protesters threatened to continue the work stoppage indefinitely unless the government agrees to their demands, ranging from improved water and electricity service in rural areas to the construction of a regional airport.

STEWART: 'It's A Wonderful Life' actor dies

ations of Americans. Like all Americans, Hillary and I will miss him greatly, but his works live on, and for that we can all be grateful."

In most of his roles, Stewart played earnest, sometimes bashful heroes, slow to anger but possessed with bottomless reserves of perseverance. He rarely played the bad guy. In an age of elegant, drop-dead handsome matinee idols, the lanky Stewart was more the average-looking guy next door.

He was best known for his role as a suicidal businessman who finds redemption in the 1946 movie "It's a Wonderful Life," one of the most beloved films ever and Stewart's personal favorite.

In "Mr. Smith Goes to Washington" in 1939, he was an idealistic young senator who challenges the backroom deals and opportunism on Capitol Hill. In one of Stewart's most famous lines, he says: "I wouldn't give you two cents for all your fancy rules if behind them they didn't have a little bit of plain, ordinary kindness and a little lookin' out for the other fella."

Stewart won a best actor Academy Award for 1940's "The Philadelphia Story" and was nominated four other times.

"He was just a great human being. I think Jimmy on the screen was what he was off the screen," said Betty Hutton, who starred with Stewart in 1952's "The Greatest Show on Earth." "That's him. He doesn't act. He doesn't have to."

Stewart's life reflected a small-town, religious upbringing and sense of responsibility: He was politically conservative. He married only once, for 45 years. In World War II, he was sent to Europe as a bomber squadron commander, flew 20 combat missions and earned the Distinguished Flying Cross. A dutiful son, he often returned to help the family hardware store in Indiana, Pa., where his best actor Oscar was displayed in the window for 20 years.

"This is where I made up my mind about certain things — about the importance of hard work and community spirit, the value of family, church and God," Stewart said at his 75th birthday party in the small town.

Stewart's acting seemed effortless and natural. Frank Capra, who directed "Mr. Smith" and "It's a Wonderful Life," once said that Stewart was one of the few actors to achieve that level of performance at which there is "no acting at all, when the actor disappears and a real live person appears on the screen, a person the audience cares about immediately."

Self-effacing in life just as he was on screen, Stewart was more likely to credit his directors. "I won't let it get me, but too much praise can turn a fellow's head if he doesn't watch his step," he once said.

He worked with some of Hollywood's most distinguished directors, including Alfred Hitchcock, who put him in such stylish thrillers as "Rope," "Vertigo" and "Rear Window," and John Ford ("Two Rode Together," "How the West Was Won").

Born in 1908, James Maitland Stewart was a spindly, bespectacled youngster who staged plays in the family basement and first acted in a Boy Scout production. He studied architecture at Princeton University.

He played accordion with the university drama group, dabbled in magic and, after graduation, got a job in summer theater with the University Players in Massachusetts, working with Henry Fonda and Margaret Sullavan.

Stewart made his feature film debut in 1935 in "The Murder Man" as a newspaper reporter opposite Spencer Tracy. "I was all hands and feet, and didn't know what to do with either," he once said.

But in his first five years in Hollywood he made 24 films, including "You Can't Take it With You" and "Destry Rides Again" with Marlene Dietrich.

In his Oscar-winning performance in the 1940 "The Philadelphia Story," he played a reporter entranced by a spoiled heiress — Katharine Hepburn.

He received Oscar nominations as the senator in "Mr. Smith Goes to Washington"; George Bailey in "It's a Wonderful Life"; the eccentric whose best pal is an imaginary 6-foot rabbit in "Harvey" in 1950; and the defense lawyer for an Army officer in "Anatomy of a Murder" in 1959.

He made a string of biographical films, playing the big band leader of "The Glenn Miller Story" and Charles Lindbergh in "Spirit of St. Louis."

Through the years, his folksy stammer became easy fodder for comedy impressionists. Everyone, it seemed, could do Jimmy Stewart's voice.

In his last film role, he lent his voice to Sheriff Wylie Burp in the 1991 animated film "An American Tail: Fievel Goes West."

His wife, Gloria, died in 1994. One of his two stepsons, Ron McLean, died while fighting in Vietnam in 1969. Survivors include stepson Michael McLean and daughters Judy Merrill and Kelly Harcourt.

"We have already received many messages of sympathy," McLean said outside his father's home. "We would like to thank the public for the support and affection they gave to our father over many, many years."

Funeral arrangements were not immediately known.

AID: Area ranchers donate funds to help Fort Davis ambulance from Fort Davis, and neighboring Valentine, was on the scene for the duration of the standoff.

"It was a logistical nightmare," Bailey said of the standoff. "We are still in the process of sorting it all out."

The funds also will be used to pay for the water, electricity, phone lines and portable toilets that had to be brought in for law enforcement.

Monies also will be used to replace doors at some homes in the Davis Mountain Resort where Richard McLaren and his followers had their "embassy."

"The SWAT team had to secure every building," Bailey said. "If it was locked, that was a problem."

Bailey is proud of the work done by law enforcement during the confrontation with McLaren.

"I've never seen that many agencies work together for that long without getting into a squabble," he said. Forty-five different agencies worked together during the weeklong standoff.

Bailey said he often communicates with Holt on an official basis. "He is the liaison between Jeff Davis County and the rest of the world," he said.

Jeff Davis County Judge Peggy Robertson was "very much impressed" by the generosity of the area ranchers.

"It's saving the county a lot of money," she said. "We are very appreciative of their generosity."

"It is just the West Texas way," Holt said.

RIDE: Cowgirl to try luck in amateur rodeo

(From 1A)

Fourth of July Rodeo in Odessa.

The rodeo, sponsored by the Grandview Lions' Club, will be at the arena behind the Ector County Coliseum. The event kicks off 7:30 p.m. today through Saturday.

Admission is $4 for adults and $3 for children under 12.

The rodeo's proceeds go to several charities funded by the Lions' Club, said Johnny Shields, one of the rodeo's board of directors.

Ms. Price will be participating in calf roping, goat tying, and barrel racing.

A total of 195 youngsters from the Texas/New Mexico area will participate in this year's show. All participants are between the ages of 8 and 19.

"We've got some youngsters who are under 6 and are roping goats and running barrels," Shields said. His youngest son, J.D. Shields, 19, a Texas A&M University student, is also a participant in this year's event. Shield's other sons, Darryl and George, took part in previous rodeos.

Though many rodeo events are still dominated by males, most performances are open to girls who have the strength and passion to participate.

"A lot of girls are in rodeo now," Ms. Price said. "It used to be that it was a cowboy thing, but now, it's for cowgirls or cowboys. Just as long as you're prepared and have the confidence, then you can do it."

SHOOT: Boy remains in critical condition

revolver about 1:30 p.m. that afternoon.

After further investigation, police officers believe the shooting to be accidental and the case has been closed, according to Crabtree.

No charges are being filed in the case, he said. Investigators determined that the weapon had been stored in the top of a closet and was unloaded.

The boys are believed to have retrieved the gun from the closet and loaded it themselves, Crabtree explained.

The boy was transported to the hospital by ambulance and had emergency surgery, but remains on life support in the intensive care unit.

Dr. Prerak Doctor, a Midland psychiatrist who has been working with the other child involved in the shooting, laments the tragedy, saying young teens and handguns are a dangerous mix.

The normal behavior at that age is to be curious and impulsive, Doctor said. It is this frame of mind that leads to accidental shootings, he said.

In 40 percent of the cases in which children under the age of 16 are shot, it happens when a child is visiting a friend or relative and are left unsupervised, according to statistics compiled by the American Academy of Child & Adolescent Psychology.

CRUDE: Japan sees its worst oil spill of nearly 4 million gallons largest oil spills, which range up to 79 million gallons, according to Golob's Oil Pollution Bulletin in Cambridge, Mass. It was only a fraction of the 11 million gallons dumped by the Exxon Valdez in Alaska in 1989.

But it was nearly twice that of Japan's previous worst spill — in 1974, when 2 million gallons poured from a storage tank in the southwest.

It also was the second major oil accident this year in Japan. In January, a Russian tanker split and sank in the Sea of Japan, spilling 1.2 million gallons of fuel oil and fouling hundreds of miles of shoreline.

The light crude from Wednesday's spill probably will be easier to clean up than the thicker crude that fouled Alaska's pristine coast.

"There's going to be more of it that will exaporate ... but still, when you've got that quantity of even light crude there's going to be significant beach impact," said Steve Provant, an American expert who helped oversee the Valdez spill cleanup for Alaska.

So long as all the crude is removed from shore, Tokyo Bay probably won't suffer from the tar balls and asphalt that formed on Alaska beaches, Provant said.

Early concerns Wednesday were over the oil catching fire. The coast guard boats circled the hobbled tanker, warning fishing boats against using cigarette lighters or matches. Coast guard helicopters hovered overhead, and the thick oil glistened on the water.

The threat of fire abated by nightfall as the fumes became less potent.

Investigators were trying to determine what the tanker hit. Fishermen wondered how the navigators of such a huge vessel could have misjudged the well-known contours of the packed bay.

"This area of the bay is very crowded with ships ... so the tanker might have been trying to move out of the way of another ship when it ran aground," said Anguri Kamoshita, captain of a fishing boat.

Despite the slick and the heavy odor of oil wafting over the water, Tokyo Bay — a sprawling 15-mile wide, 35-mile long area — was full of fishing boats and other craft. The smell had largely evaporated by evening.

Rival troops face off near Phnom Penh

PEAM SATHA, Cambodia (AP) — Factions loyal to Cambodia's rival prime ministers battled with mortars and rocket launchers near the capital Wednesday, their second armed clash in two weeks.

Rising tensions between the co-premiers, Hun Sen and Prince Norodom Ranariddh, have paralyzed the government and derailed talks with Khmer Rouge rebels who reportedly are ready to trade their longtime leader, Pol Pot, for peace.

No casualty figures were immediately available. It was the first major clash since June 17, when about 200 men loyal to the two prime ministers fought near Ranariddh's compound in the capital. Two of the prince's bodyguards were killed.

The clash Wednesday began in the late afternoon around a small naval base on the Tonle Sap River near Peam Satha, 20 miles north of Phnom Penh. Most of the 40 to 100 troops based there are aligned with Ranariddh.

The base was surrounded by about 200 men loyal to Hun Sen. Reporters were stopped at a checkpoint outside the base, but mortar and rocket fire could be heard. The fighting tapered off around nightfall, but the Hun Sen loyalists remained in position.

"Now we have encircled them and are urging them to give up their arms or they will be arrested," said Sao Sokha, deputy military police chief for Hun Sen's armed forces.

The fighting was believed to stem from accusations from members of Hun Sen's Cambodian People's Party that a general loyal to Ranariddh was assembling hundreds of former Khmer Rouge guerrillas to attack them.

Another 1,000 former Khmer Rouge rebels are holed up in the jungles of northern Cambodia and reportedly are holding Pol Pot captive. Pol Pot, who is 69 and said to be seriously ill, is a key bargaining chip in peace talks between authorities and the rebels.

An estimated 10,000 Khmer Rouge have made peace over the past year. The final holdouts include most of the leaders of the regime that turned Cambodia into a vast agrarian labor camp in the late 1970s, causing the deaths of up to 2 million people.

The talks are stuck over disagreement between Hun Sen and Ranariddh on whether to grant amnesty to some high-ranking members to secure the peace deal. The premiers agree that Pol Pot should be tried for crimes against humanity.

Clandestine Khmer Rouge radio acknowledged for the first time Wednesday that the group's leaders were talking peace with Ranariddh's envoys "aimed at jointly achieving real national reconciliation and peace."

Vietnam invaded and toppled the Khmer Rouge in 1979. Through the 1980s, Ranariddh's royalists were part of a Khmer Rouge-dominated alliance aimed at expelling Vietnamese troops.

Only after a United Nations-brokered peace pact and elections in 1993 did the two rivals form an uneasy coalition government. But much of the armed forces retain old loyalties.

Relations between the premiers, always strained, have all but broken down as each side maneuvers for advantage ahead of elections planned for next May.

6 convicted in IRA bomb plot

LONDON (AP) — Six men, including a former U.S. Marine, were convicted Wednesday of an Irish Republican Army plot to bomb British power stations and plunge London into darkness.

Judge Thomas Scott Baker sentenced each man to 35 years in prison.

Two other defendants were acquitted. One was immediately rearrested, according to Britain's domestic news agency, Press Association. It was not clear whether he was questioned in connection with the same case, or another.

The men were arrested in raids in south London a year ago before a plan to bomb six electricity stations could be carried out, the prosecution said.

Gerard Hanratty, 37, one of those convicted, testified that the IRA planned to plant dummy bombs made of sugar at power stations outside London and thus force authorities to turn off power to deal with the threat.

"There was never any explosives or explosive traces in this case," Hanratty testified on June 5.

Hanratty, who admitted being an IRA member, said he had thought the plan was "brilliant."

"The electrical impact would be total disruption in London. All the traffic lights would be out. It would result in chaos. All industries would be starved — rail, tube and travel," Hanratty testified.

Hanratty said the intention was to force Northern Ireland higher on the political agenda and put pressure on former Prime Minister John Major to accelerate the peace process in Northern Ireland.

Bush can veto with best of 'em!

He probably didn't learn it from the Texas Rangers baseball team, of which he is part-owner, but the fact that Gov. George W. Bush is quite capable of playing legislative hardball with Democrats who want to force his hand on a bill came through clearly when the governor vetoed the measure.

The bill in question would have created 15 new courts, which is the type of legislation politicians typically can point to as ways they help to fight crime. So it might have been a bill that any governor would have loved — were it not for that one drawback.

In this bill's provisions, 13 of the 15 new judges would have been elected rather than appointed, and Bush viewed that move as a deliberate attempt by the Legislature to circumvent his constitutional appointment authority.

Almost immediately following the veto, Democratic legislators began blaming Bush for "delaying justice" by not approving the new courts.

But that contention was shot down by Sen. Bill Ratliff, R-Mount Pleasant, the original sponsor of the Omnibus Courts Bill. Ratliff, who noted that the House members knew Bush would veto the measure as written, observed that those pushing the bill still refused to compromise on it.

Bush pulled out his veto pen. No compromise, no bill. Even though he certainly realized he was vetoing something that voters might support. That takes political guts.

"They played a game of chicken with the governor and lost," said Ratliff.

At least the legislators learned from the experience. They now know that Gov. Bush can play hardball with the best of them.

U.S. should 'melt' away Chinese control

WASHINGTON—When President Nixon met Chairman Mao, Nixon said, with sincerity as well as diplomatic gallantry, "The Chairman's writings moved a nation and have changed the world." Mao replied, with more melancholy realism than feigned modesty, "I have not been able to change it. I have only been able to change a few places in the vicinity of Peking."

Will

Henry Kissinger, who was there, says the episode revealed how Mao "could not escape the nightmare that shadowed his accomplishments and tormented his last years: that it might all prove ephemeral, that the exertions, the suffering, the Long March, the brutal leadership struggles would be but a brief incident in the triumphant, passive persistence of a millennial culture which had tamed all previous upheavals, leaving little more in their wake than the ripples of a stone falling into a pond."

The latest renewal of regular ("most favored nation") trading relations with China is a wager that Mao's nightmare was prophetic, and that Marx's "Communist Manifesto" was correct. The reasonable basis for renewal, and one possible reason to be cheerful about China's takeover of Hong Kong, is the belief that communism is a thin veneer that can be stripped off an ancient nation, and that the stripping agent can be what Marx called a "bourgeois epoch." We call it capitalism.

Capitalism is an enveloping culture of restless striving by individuals broadly emancipated from constraints on seeking the satisfaction of their multiplying appetites. It is a permanent revolution. Marx wrote of "the icy water of egotistical calculation" and "naked self-interest" that has "stripped of its halo every occupation hitherto honoured," "torn away from the family its sentimental veil," and loosened "all fixed, fast-frozen relations":

"The bourgeoisie cannot exist without constantly revolutionizing the instruments of production, and thereby the relations of production, and with them the whole relations of society. ... Constant revolutionizing of production, uninterrupted disturbance of all social conditions, everlasting uncertainty and agitation distinguish the bourgeois epoch from all earlier ones." Marx marveled, "All that is solid melts into air." Just so.

Therefore, America's policy should aim for the melting of the Chinese regime's apparatus of social control. The policy should be to inoculate China with the American spirit. (Or as China's gerontocracy sees it, the bourgeois disease). China's swallowing of Hong Kong, a radioactive isotope of capitalism, might help. So should sending as many children and grandchildren of China's rulers as possible to school in Palo Alto and Ann Arbor, Berkeley and New Haven. Sending to those places the children of America's privileged classes has certainly been a solvent of America's traditional habits, mores and other sources of social authority.

The most recent MFN debate had an ideal outcome. The denial of MFN, a blunt and unpromising idea, was defeated, but advocates of denial won a larger victory by profoundly changing for the better the terms of debate about a suffering nation that has three provinces that are more populous than united Germany.

Advocates of MFN largely conceded the opponents' catalog of China's execrable behavior, domestically and internationally, and hence conceded the comprehensive failure of the Clinton administration's incontinent pursuit of commerce ("engagement") as a sufficient policy. Thus the way is open for myriad targeted measures that, cumulatively, can alter the tone and substance of U.S.-China relations more than denial of MFN would have.

Those measures can include increased broadcasting into China; re- establishing Reagan-era seriousness about exports of technologies with ominous military uses (such as supercomputers by which China, using nuclear tests too small to be detected, can perfect smaller, more efficient nuclear weapons); denial of soft loans from international organizations; serious responses to continued exports to outlaw states of technologies useful to the production of weapons of mass destruction; and support for Taiwan's application for membership in the World Trade Organization.

For reasons of political symbolism, China wants Taiwan's application linked to its own. But Taiwan, America's eighth largest trading partner, is much closer to meeting the WTO's free market criteria than is China, in which 100,000 state-run enterprises employ two-thirds of the nation's urban work force and produce one-third of industrial output.

Directing the votes of U.S. representatives to international organizations like the WTO is a presidential prerogative, and President Clinton, ever a willow, never an oak, nevertheless acts almost oaken in his protection of China's sensibilities. However, he remains a willow and if the admirable coalition that caused a gale to blow against MFN can keep it up on Taiwan's, and freedom's, behalf, he may bend.

Roswell explanation too little, really late

Sometimes it is better to say nothing at all...

We do not believe that bodies of extra-terrestrial visitors were hauled out of a UFO crash near Roswell 50 years ago.

But we think the Air Force explanation released this week has peculiarities that severely stretch logic. The 231-page Air Force report claims that the witnesses who said they saw bodies of space aliens actually saw only dummies that were used in parachute tests.

Rather than putting the stories about alien bodies to rest, the Air Force version seems destined to add fuel to the fire for those who believe that the government has covered up the crash of an alien spacecraft.

The very belatedness of the Air Force story is questionable. Why would it take 50 years for the government to offer that explanation? No logical reason comes to mind — the government did not exactly need to withhold top secret information revealing that they had used test dummies.

And the dummies that the witnesses supposedly saw were not used until the next decade — 1954-59 to be exact. That is a huge time discrepancy, when considering that the Air Force report would have us believe that the witnesses saw the dummies in the 1950s but somehow got confused and thought that they had seen them in 1947.

The Air Force report is titled "The Roswell Report, Case Closed." They call it a complete and open explanation.

If there is any openness, it was too long in coming. If the Air Force had something to say about the Roswell incident, it they should have said it long ago.

All government agencies should take note: The time to close a case — particularly if the explanation that would close it is shaky to begin with — is not 50 years after the fact.

China will end up looking just like Hong Kong

HONG KONG S.A.R., China — There is something eerie about watching a fireworks display in Hong Kong on June 30 and then returning home to Washington to watch more fireworks on July 4.

The one is a leave-taking of British sovereignty and the passing of a colonial territory back to its original owners. The other is an observance of a philosophy of life and-government based on the rule of law that is reshaping the world in a way that will eventually include China.

Thomas

Former British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher busily told all who would listen of her optimism that Hong Kong has less to fear from China than China has to fear from Hong Kong. China, she believes, is not only biting off more than it can chew, but also more than it can digest. Instead of looking at the passing of Hong Kong into the Chinese Communist domain, Thatcher sees the transition of economic and later political freedom passing into the very bowels of Beijing. It may take a while, she says, but liberation will eventually come.

Indeed, this is not our father's China. Everywhere you go, especially inside southern China, you see satellite dishes, computers and the Internet. The Mao jackets of less than a generation ago have been replaced by Western-style business attire. Chinese women, who once rivaled Soviet women in their drabness, now dress stylishly, use makeup and wear shorts and mini-skirts.

Communism is a dead ideology, imposed by an oligarchic clique that no longer believes (if it ever did) in the principles of Marx, Lenin and Mao but used them as paths to personal power. This makes them no less dangerous than true believers, but it does free up the West from fighting the next century's battles solely on ideological grounds. The reason communism will be defeated in China, as it was in Russia, is that communism has always ignored the depth of the human spirit, which yearns to breathe free and will not be stifled for long.

Ronald Reagan was right when he said that communism would one day end up on the ash heap of history. It may take a little longer with China because of its size, but freedom will come, and Hong Kong may be the key that unlocks the door.

In future years, as Sen. Mitch McConnell (R.-Ky) told me, it is probable that the People's Republic of China will look more and more like Hong Kong and not the reverse. Economic freedom will eventually bring personal freedom because people need a reason to live that goes beyond politics, ideology and xenophobia masquerading as nationalism. The information age will open the freedom door to increasing numbers of Chinese who will see, as Eastern Europeans and Russians did, that their government not only lied to them, but had anything but the best interests of its citizens at heart.

The coming conflicts with China will be about nuclear proliferation and its sharing of weapons and technology with nations unfriendly to the United States and its interests. But that will not be the only arena of competition. The United States of America continues to lift its lamp of freedom beside the golden door. As for Hong Kong, the lamp has not been extinguished. It now shines in a dark place, where it will illuminate a path others will inevitably follow.

Boxing fans: Lend me your ears for 50 bucks

You are probably wondering how the Tyson/Holyfield fight played on Martha's Vineyard. Mike Wallace, one of the island's wealthiest residents, paid fifty dollars for a Pay TV box and that's where we fans gathered to enjoy the fight of the century.

Buchwald

For fifty dollars we not only got the heavyweight contest, but also a warmup match between two female fighters who beat the heck out of each other. It was so rugged we all agreed that women's boxing would soon be on a par with men's and, someday, we would even see a female beat a man for the world's heavyweight championship.

As we sat around the set killing time until 11:45, we discussed the possible outcome of the Tyson/Holyfield match.

Micky Clippard sounded as if she was onto something when she declared, "I think that Tyson is going to win."

"Why is that?" Bill Watts asked.

"Because he has nice teeth."

Several guests admitted they didn't know what teeth had to do with the heavyweight championship of the world.

Micky just smiled and said, "The man who wins always has the best dentist."

After waiting forever, the contestants showed up in the ring. They both appeared to be in top form, although Wallace claimed he observed Tyson licking his lips as he stared at Holyfield's ear.

Well, I won't go into detail about what happened during the fight because most people already know more than they want to know.

Everybody saw the famous bite, but Wallace was the most indignant. "I didn't pay fifty dollars to see one grown-up man bite another grown-up man on the ear."

While we watched the mayhem after the fight, we talked about why Tyson did what he did.

Bill Watts' theory was that Tyson had lost a lot of weight for this fight and in the third round he just got hungry.

J.P. Paynter wasn't buying it.

"Everyone knows that Tyson is a vegetarian. My guess is that Tyson was trying to talk to Holyfield about how to invest the sixty million dollars they were going to get. He got so excited that he forget where he was."

Micky wondered aloud if Holyfield stuck his ear in Tyson's mouth to make him look bad.

It was boxing's greatest night and one we'll tell our children and grandchildren about, if they give us fifty dollars.

Thousands injured yearly by illegal fireworks, Feds warn

WASHINGTON (Hearst) — As the nation gears up for July 4 celebrations, the federal government is warning against the use of illegal explosives, which account for nearly a third of fireworks injuries.

The Consumer Product Safety Commission, an independent federal agency, demonstrated the danger of illicit fireworks Wednesday by setting off several M-100s, devices that resemble sticks of dynamite, on the grounds of the Washington Monument.

The devices pulverized several watermelons and turned a mannequin's hand to dust. Vibrations from the blast set off car alarms on nearby Independence Avenue.

Commission Chairman Ann Brown said before the demonstration that illegal fireworks are particularly hazardous because they don't meet federal safety standards. Some devices contain up to 1,000 times the explosive material in legal fireworks, according to the commission.

The warning against bootlegged explosives was the second in two weeks issued by the government. On June 23 John Magaw, director of the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms, said people should "buy fireworks from vendors who operate openly."

Magaw added, "Don't buy from persons who approach you on the street. Too often they sell deadly illegal explosive devices that may explode prematurely in your hand or pocket."

According to the bureau, illegal explosives typically resemble a roll of coins with a fuse. Federally-prohibited fireworks include cherry bombs, aerial bombs, M-80s as well as M-100s.

Last year 7,600 people were injured using fireworks, about a third of which were illegal, safety commission figures showed.

Ann Crampton, executive director of the National Council on Fireworks Safety, an educational group that seeks to reduce fireworks injuries, said that "bootlegged fireworks are generally sold out of the back of trucks and cars on the side of the road."

They almost never have labels, Crampton said, adding that customers should check their fireworks and their children's to make sure they have a manufacturer's label.

Crampton said permanent stands or stores usually sell "only legally approved items."

Ten states — Arizona, Connecticut, Delaware, Georgia, Massachusetts, Minnesota, New Jersey, New York, Rhode Island and Vermont — ban all fireworks, and six states — Illinois, Iowa, Maine, Maryland, Ohio and Pennsylvania — allow only sparklers. Only Hawaii and Nevada have no state fireworks regulations, while the other 32 states restrict some kinds of fireworks.

Safety Commission Chairman Brown reported that injuries from fireworks have declined in the last few years. In 1994, 13,200 were reported; in 1995, the number was 11,313. The 7,600 figure last year represented the sharpest drop, but Brown said it is too soon to say it's part of a trend.

The Commission also warned of the dangers of legal fireworks. Sparklers, for example, burn at a high temperature and can easily ignite a child's clothing, Brown said.

The Commission offered the following guidelines for Fourth of July fireworks safety:

- Never allow young children to play with fireworks.
- Never try to relight fireworks that seem to malfunction.
- Keep a bucket of water handy in case of a fire.
- Light fireworks on a smooth, flat surface away from buildings, dry leaves and flammable materials.
- Never ignite fireworks inside a container, especially one of glass or metal.

Study finds no evidence power lines cause leukemia

BOSTON (AP) — The largest, most exacting study ever of electricity and cancer found no solid evidence that living near high-voltage lines causes childhood leukemia, as some have feared.

The researchers say their work is the strongest indication yet that this much-discussed concern is groundless. Two other large studies, coming out within the next year in Canada and England, could help settle the issue for good.

Fears about exposure to magnetic fields from high-voltage electrical lines were first raised in the late 1970s. Since then, several studies have looked into the question, with mixed results. However, some have suggested that exposure might triple the risk of acute lymphoblastic leukemia, the most common childhood cancer.

The latest study was designed to overcome many of the shortcomings raised by critics of the earlier research.

"All in all, this study indicates that if there is an association between magnetic fields and cancer, it is very weak. It makes one wonder how much more money we want to throw at this subject, because basically we can't see anything definite," said Dr. Lawrence Fischer, director of the Institute for Environmental Toxicology at Michigan State University.

Fischer headed an advisory committee for the $4.5 million study, which was conducted by the National Cancer Institute and published in Thursday's issue of the New England Journal of Medicine.

'This study indicates that if there is an association between magnetic fields and cancer, it is very weak. It makes one wonder how much more money we want to throw at this subject.'
— Dr. Lawrence Fischer, director of the Institute for Environmental Toxicology at Michigan State University

The study was based on 638 children under age 15 with acute lymphoblastic leukemia. The researchers checked the youngsters' exposure to magnetic fields generated by nearby power lines and compared it with that of 620 healthy children.

The researchers measured magnetic fields in all the houses where the children had lived for five years before the discovery of their cancer, as well as in the homes where their mothers lived while pregnant.

"We found no evidence that magnetic field levels in the home increased the risk for childhood leukemia," said Dr. Martha S. Linet, who directed the study.

The only bit of data to the contrary was a 24 percent increase in leukemia risk for children exposed to especially high magnetic fields. However, this was not statistically meaningful and could have been a fluke, especially since the risk did not rise steadily as power levels went up, as would be expected if there truly was a link.

Even though acute lymphoblastic leukemia is the most common childhood cancer, it is still rare, striking about 1,600 youngsters in the United States annually.

An accompanying editorial by Dr. Edward W. Campion, a deputy editor of the journal, noted that several commissions and expert panels have also concluded there is no convincing evidence that power lines cause cancer.

"It is sad that hundreds of millions of dollars have gone into studies that never had much promise of finding a way to prevent the tragedy of cancer in children," he wrote.

Dr. David Savitz of the University of North Carolina, whose earlier research supported a link between power lines and cancer, called the latest study "important because of its size." But he added: "This doesn't put it to rest."

Unlike many earlier studies, this one actually measured magnetic field levels inside homes rather than trying to estimate them by looking at power lines outside. The measurements were made within two years of the children's diagnoses with cancer, instead of many years later. It also involved about four times more patients than the next-largest U.S. study.

Linet said two other large studies nearing completion — one at the British Columbia Cancer Agency in Canada, the other at Oxford University — may indeed put the issue to rest if they too find no link between cancer and power lines.

In the meantime, she said, "it's very difficult for any study to absolutely, in black and white, prove the negative. Our study is no different. We cannot absolutely rule out" the possibility of a slight increase in risk, but "we feel that childhood leukemia is unlikely to be caused by residential magnetic field exposure."

Tax bill argument focuses on whether to give key benefit to working poor

WASHINGTON (AP) — One of the most intense political arguments over the $135 billion tax-cut bill involves whether low-income working families qualify for the main benefit — the $500-per-child tax credit.

House Republicans would deny many such families this break — since their taxable incomes generally are so small that they owe no income taxes — leading Democrats to charge the bill is unfair to the poor.

Now, the House GOP faces the task of defending its position, a reversal from the original "Contract With America," which would have given the new child credit to many working poor families. Rep. Charles Rangel of New York, the ranking Democrat on the House Ways and Means Committee, said the House GOP made the change in order to free money for capital-gains tax cuts for the wealthy.

"If they know they would be embarrassed publicly for taking away benefits away from working families of lower incomes, that's the risk they would take," Rangel said Wednesday.

For their part, Republicans say the Clinton administration is equally guilty of reversals, having proposed a child credit in 1995 that wouldn't benefit working poor families — similar to the current House bill.

"I'm not sure history is the best guide to the future on these positions because both Republicans and Democrats have swapped positions over time," said Ari Fleischer, spokesman for the House Ways and Means Committee.

Just who qualifies for a $500 child credit, which takes up roughly half of the $135 billion tax bills the House and Senate passed last week, will be a focal point of White House and congressional negotiations next week to iron out differences in their bills. The Senate version of the credit is closer to the Clinton administration's position.

Lobbying has been intense, with liberal Democrats confronting their rivals with statistics generated by the labor-funded Citizens for Tax Justice describing how the House GOP tax bill would deny benefits to millions of children in their states.

"If Republicans were not writing this lopsided tax bill into law, we would call it robbery," said House Minority Whip David Bonior, D-Mich., during last week's floor debate.

GOP leaders accused Democrats of supporting what amounted to a backdoor welfare increase.

"When you take out billions of dollars in tax cuts for working people and put in billions of dollars for people who pay no taxes, that's increasing welfare spending," House Speaker Newt Gingrich said last month.

All three versions start by offering a $500-per-child tax credit for children under age 17, with the Senate and Clinton plans adding older teens beginning in 2003. The plans also have different cutoff points for when wealthy taxpayers no longer qualify.

The fight involves whether families who already get the Earned Income Tax Credit can also get the proposed $500-per-child credit. The earned-income credit was created a quarter-century ago to help offset the Social Security taxes paid by the working poor; it was designed as a "work bonus" to make work more attractive than welfare.

'When you take out billions of dollars in tax cuts for working people and put in billions of dollars for people who pay no taxes, that's increasing welfare spending.'
— House Speaker Newt Gingrich

The issue is whether those families whose tax liability is wiped out — even exceeded in many cases — by the earned-income credit should qualify for the proposed new per-child credit.

The House bill would deny the $500 credit to a family of four making less than $24,385, the Senate bill to those less than $22,360 and the Clinton bill to those less than $17,500, according to Isaac Schapiro, a tax analyst at the Center on Budget and Policy Priorities, a liberal advocacy group.

The Democrats come to a different approach by noting the working poor generally face a bigger tax bite from payroll and excise taxes than from income taxes. So the Clinton administration and Rangel, sponsor of a failed House Democratic alternative bill, structured their bills so working poor can benefit even though they don't owe income taxes.

The Clinton bill would let families take the $500 credit before the EITC and allow them to get a further tax credit amounting to the portion of their payroll taxes that exceeds their EITC. The Senate bill contains a complicated formula that would give low-income working families half the EITC and then the $500 credit.

The original Contract With America bill would have allowed families that don't owe income tax after the EITC, but who owe large payroll taxes, to receive the child credit, the Center on Budget and Policy Priorities said.

The House Ways and Means Committee, at the insistence of its chairman, Rep. Bill Archer, R-Texas, changed the child tax credit in 1995 so only families that owe income taxes would qualify. Archer's critics said this was done to finance corporate tax breaks. That proposal was vetoed by President Clinton in 1995.

Date set for trial in CIA shooting

Associated Press

FAIRFAX, Va. — The man charged with gunning down two CIA employees outside the spy agency headquarters four years ago will stand trial for his life in November, a judge ruled Wednesday.

Mir Aimal Kansi faces 10 state charges and a possible death penalty if convicted of the Jan. 25, 1993, shooting spree.

Kansi's trial will not be televised, in part out of concern for the security of witnesses or others involved in the trial, Fairfax County Circuit Judge J. Howe Brown ruled.

"It is the very high publicity of this case that makes it unique and makes cameras inappropriate," Brown said.

Kansi was one of the FBI's 10 Most Wanted fugitives and the subject of an intense international manhunt before U.S. agents snatched him from his native Pakistan last month.

He has been held without bond since his return June 17. Kansi did not speak during Wednesday's procedural hearing.

Although federal agents and prosecutors say Kansi acted alone and was not part of any terrorist group, local officials fear others with a beef against the CIA or the U.S. government could be provoked by Kansi's prosecution.

"Security is increased; we're not taking chances," said Fairfax police spokesman Warren Carmichael.

A SWAT team and additional, heavily armed sheriff's deputies patrolled the courthouse complex Wednesday. Anyone entering the courtroom had to pass through two metal detectors.

Brown also barred newspaper photographers from the courtroom, but did not impose a gag order requested by Kansi's lawyer.

Brown scheduled the trial to begin Nov. 3, rejecting defense pleas to delay it until next spring to allow time for more preparation.

Kansi's attorney, Richard Goemann, opposed televising the case and cited the sensational trials of O.J. Simpson and Lorena Bobbitt as reasons.

Ms. Bobbitt's 1994 trial in neighboring Prince William County on charges of severing her husband's penis drew dozens of television satellite trucks, T-shirt and souvenir vendors and demonstrators.

Ms. Bobbitt's courtroom proceedings were orderly, Goemann said, "but what happened outside the courtroom is a travesty, and what the jurors and the witnesses saw outside ... very likely affected the way they acted."

Four Washington-area television stations, Court TV and The Washington Post had asked to have cameras in the courtroom.

Kansi, 33, was charged with murder several days after the attack. By then, Kansi had bought a one-way ticket to Pakistan and fled the United States.

"Except for catching him, our investigation was done in 1993," Fairfax Commonwealth's Attorney Robert F. Horan Jr. said. Horan has said he intends to seek the death penalty for Kansi.

Witnesses described a calm gunman firing an AK-47 through windows and windshields as he walked quickly between rows of cars stopped at a traffic light outside the CIA gates.

Frank Darling, 28, and Lansing Bennett, 66, were killed as they sat in their cars during morning rush hour. Three other people were wounded.

Stink raised over recycling center

Neighbors' complaints about odors bring warning from state

By Gary Shanks
Staff Writer

Complaints about foul odors emanating from Midland's new recycling facility have resulted in a letter of violation being sent from the Texas Natural Resources Conservation Commission.

Those working downwind of the Materials Recovery Facility (MRF) off Business Interstate 20 West have been complaining of an overwhelming garbage smell when the wind is right.

At the $1.8 million, 25,000-square-foot MRF site, 4005 W. Industrial Ave., recyclable materials are pulled out of the city's refuse.

On some days, the smell is enough to send employees home with complaints of nausea, according to people who work in the area.

The facility is licensed under the TNRCC as a "class IV transfer station," said Glen Hackler, assistant city manager.

The company operating the MRF has been given 10 days to respond to the notice of violation. Even though city officials and city services were a major factor in bringing about the new center, the citation does not effect the city since the operation of the facility is contracted out through the Recycle Midland organization, Hackler said.

If TNRCC officials are not satisfied, or if no response is made within the allotted time, the recycling facility will be shut down under the Clean Air Act, Hackler said. Currently, the center will continue operations while officials meet to determine a plan of action.

There was no wrongdoing of any kind noted in the letter. TNRCC officials simply declared that there was too much bad odor coming from the facility, Hackler explained.

Steps already have being taken to improve the air quality downwind of the facility.

Since rotting food is a major culprit in garbage odor, restaurant wastes are no longer being accepted at the MRF and no garbage is being left on the concrete site overnight, Hackler said.

MRF personnel are washing down the concrete after the day's waste has been processed, he said.

Recycle Midland officials will be working with an industry specialist to develop a deodorizing process for the area, Hackler explained.

Plans are under way to enclose the entire waste processing site, thereby sealing off its offensive odors. No action will be taken regarding this enclosure, however, without assurances from the TNRCC that the facility will not be shut down. "They don't want to invest another quarter million dollars in a $2 million facility without some assurance from TNRCC ..." Hackler said.

MRF operators will have 30 days to implement mea-

Fort Davis to host 'Coolest 4th of July'

By Dana Bartholomew
Staff Writer

FORT DAVIS — It's billed as "The Coolest Fourth of July in Texas" — the hottest Independence Day celebration this mile-high town ever had.

Only temperatures may aim at 100 degrees.

"It may be the hottest one," said Jeff Davis County Judge Peggy Robertson, of the parade. "This is the first hot weather we've had."

Don't think that fazes residents. Nor Ms. Robertson's daughter and granddaughter, who will swing down from Midland for some old- fashioned flag waving.

Like many small Texas communities, Fort Davis knows how to throw a party. The festivities, from July 4 to July 6 will include a parade, arts and crafts booths, a melodrama, a Friday night street dance and three days of team roping.

"We've had parades over the years, but this is supposedly the biggest and the best," Ms. Robertson said.

Fort Davis, an historic town of 1,200 residents that recently weathered the nearby standoff of a militant Republic of Texas faction, is playing up the red, white and blue.

Flags wave up and down Main Street. The Fort Davis State Bank is wrapped in bunting. And the town's newspaper office has hung out huge flags of Old Glory, with crepe-wrapped poles.

The parade begins at 10 a.m. Friday, and includes a color guard from Fort Davis National Historic Sight, floats, antique cars and wagons, the Peruvian Paso Ladies and such luminaries as state Sen. Frank Madla Jr., D-San Antonio, Rep. Pete Gallego, D-Alpine, and the mayor of Valentine.

Two-part program benefits children

By Mella McEwen
Staff Writer

In an effort to better serve the state's abused and neglected children, the Texas Department of Protective and Regulatory Services is implementing a two-part community partnership project that is new to Midland and Odessa.

The first part of the partnership is the Rainbow Room, a joint project of the Junior League of Midland and Odessa and Children's Protective Services.

It's a special room established at the CPS offices where a caseworker can pick up needed items, either on an emergency or non-emergency basis. The room is stocked with items ranging from diapers to formula, baby beds to sheets and towels, clothing, cleaning supplies, toys and educational items. The room will be organized and operated by Junior League volunteers who will be responsible for soliciting and organizing donations of new items from corporations or individuals.

The Rainbow Room project on Wednesday received its first corporate donation — 180 cold kits from Target. The kits, with items such as aspirin and tissues, will be evenly divided between the Midland and Odessa Rainbow rooms.

Melissa Weaver, public information officer and community initiatives specialist with the Department of Protective and Regulatory Services, said that it has been "a tremendous project and extremely beneficial to the agency because it recognizes the difficult and vital job caseworkers do. They frequently find themselves in a bind of finding goods and services for their clients or families. This frees them to do more casework."

Jacque Holliman, team relations leader with Target, said that her store donates its open packages of diapers to the CPS on a weekly basis and when she asked CPS workers to

Is there life, or is it worth living, without a good ol' cup o' Joe?

Reflection says that there is something ceremonial, almost mystical, about coffee, the drinking thereof, that is. Certainly, it is one of life's cherished experiences.

Todd

It is probably the Americas' only affordable luxury that is sheer necessity in pursuing the good life.

Much of the rest of the world, especially the English, may have their tea and certainly will to reach heights.

A pot of steaming coffee brings folks together and seals a bond, particularly if other interests within the gathering rise to a mutually high plane. And even if you are alone at the reading lamp while enjoying a good book, savoring a splendid cup coffee is delightful. It adds a cordial ambience to most any setting. Savoring coffee seems to raise your level of consciousness and well-being even if the euphoria is barely perceptible.

Back in the 1950s, when ol' Ed Todd was a teen-ager working for 50 cents an hour down at the Iowa Park grocery store, he dropped by the corner Metz Café for a Saturday supper, top-of-the-line meal, 85 cents or so. Coffee, including refills, was a nickel a cup.

Before then, down on the farm in the blacklands of Delta County, Granddaddy would have his cup of coffee early in the morning as if it were the reward for wakening up and taking on a new day. Grandmother would percolate the coffee, starting with fresh grounds. The next day's brew often was from spent grounds. Times were hard on the farm back then, mostly in the sense that there was never a loose nickel, let alone a silver dime, quarter, half-dollar, or, even back then, those rare silver dollars.

Growing up, ol' Todd never seriously considered drinking coffee. Similarly to chewing tobacco, smoking a cigarette, or savoring a nickel or even a dime cigar, drinking coffee was reserved for the then-privileged grown-ups, the folks who had survived long enough to reach the age of 21 and beyond.

Cup in hand any earlier, say 18, and you were boldly announcing your arrival on the threshold of adulthood. Of course, if you joined the military before your teen-age years ran out, you automatically could experience the adult things at the post exchange — smoke regular cigarettes, and drink beer and ale. And, if you got overseas duty, the world, bars and all, were yours to romance when there weren't any wars to fight.

Anyway, at that hometown café, ol' Todd boldly asked for a cup of coffee, which came in a heavy, porcelain china cup. Just holding that cup right and sipping, without embarrassing yourself, was self-taught etiquette.

Bitter, burnt beans. That's the initial taste of coffee. So, ol' Todd tempered the brew with cream to make it more palatable. After that, it was coffee, sans cream. Make it strong and black. It makes a fellow feel good and part of the whole.

As memory serves, the next time ol' Todd had cream in his coffee was in merry ol' England, London town, where the coffee was in a sailor's-size mug and was topped by loads of cream.

That was still in the 1950s, and adulthood, 21 on up back then, was within sight, although in the next decade. Ironically, it was in another Metz, in the train station at Metz, France, where ol' Todd drank a really stout cup of coffee in a small china cup. Espresso, the café folks called it. It was a pot packed in a cup. It was certainly a nickel's worth, francs over there, and far more.

Especially since then, Todd has been a real fancier of coffee and the delight and delights it offers.

If there is an up, then there surely must be a down. And so it is.

Last spring, after 40 years of drinking coffee day and night, ol' Ed Todd figured it was time to quit for health's

Texas homeowners face climbing insurance rates

AUSTIN (AP) — Many Texas homeowners could face up to double-digit increases to the cost of their insurance policies.

Texas Insurance Commissioner Elton Bomer on Wednesday heard arguments from insurer and consumer groups on the setting of residential property benchmark rates. Regulated insurance companies, covering about one-third of Texas' residential property, set their rates from 30 percent above to 30 percent below the benchmark rate set in each of the state's 23 rating territories.

Unregulated companies cover the majority of Texas homes.

Regulated rates within the territories vary widely, based on insurance companies' policies, the location of the insured properties and other factors. The Insurance Department encourages Texans to shop around.

Two state administrative judges have urged Bomer to approve an overall 13.5 percent increase to the statewide average benchmark rate. That includes a 14.8 percent increase to the benchmark for homeowners' policies and no change to the renters' benchmark.

Rick Gentry, regional vice president of the Texas Insurance Organization, a trade group, said the increase is overdue.

"It's unfortunate our recent loss experience — the majority of which is weather-related — has put upward pressure on rates," Gentry said, adding that the average statewide benchmark rate has not been increased for several years.

TIO had sought a 14.3 percent overall increase to the rate.

Insurance payments for damages caused by recent flooding and tornadoes in Central Texas were not considered in the annual rate hearing case and were expected to be a factor in next year's recommendations.

Public Insurance Counsel Rod Bordelon said future weather patterns and insurance payments for property damages are hard to predict and shouldn't be based solely on previous experience.

"You can't just blindly input that data," Bordelon said.

The Office of Public Insurance Counsel, which recommended an overall 4 percent increase to residential property insurance benchmarks, is a state office that argues insurance issues on behalf of customers.

Potential rate changes caused by a new system meant to more accurately consider communities' access to fire protection also were not factored into the recommendations.

Marine needs to tell his story more forcefully, attorney says

REDFORD, Texas (AP) — The Marine who killed a teen-ager near the Mexican border needs to have his side of the story "more forcefully presented," said a civilian attorney retained by the soldier Wednesday.

Cpl. Clemente Banuelos, who already has a military attorney, requested private counsel to represent him as the Texas Rangers investigate the May 20 shooting of Ezequiel Hernandez Jr., a Redford high school student.

The U.S. Justice Department approved the request and contacted Houston attorney Jack Zimmermann, a retired Marine Corps colonel, who agreed to take Banuelos as a client.

Zimmermann said he was not yet prepared to discuss the case because he had only been hired Wednesday, but added: "I do think that his side of the story needs to be more forcefully presented."

Military officials say Hernandez was shot after the teen-ager had fired twice at a four-man Marine surveillance team that was watching a suspected drug route at the request of the Border Patrol.

The Marine Corps has said it stands behind its personnel, but civilian investigators have raised questions about the series of events. Authorities say the evidence has not matched the Marines' account and suggest Hernandez was not facing the soldiers when he was killed.

Presidio County District Attorney Albert Valadez plans to present the case to a grand jury later this month.

whom she could donate the cold kits, they suggested the Rainbow Room.

"We appreciate Target because, even though it's located in Midland, they're willing to contribute to surrounding communities."

The Rainbow rooms, which are supported by first lady Laura Bush, were first opened in Dallas in 1992 with 29 items. The "store" has since grown to 29,000 items this year. The agency plans to open sites in all areas of the state.

Ms. Weaver said the Midland and Odessa Rainbow rooms are still in the planning stages and should be in full operation in three to six months.

The second part of the partnership between the agency and the community is "Adopt-A-Caseworker," where individuals, corporations or community groups can adopt a caseworker.

"As clients have needs, the caseworker can contact the group and request goods or services, whether it's a birthday party for a child who's never had a party or plumbing service or a new coat," Ms. Weaver said.

The "Adopt-A-Caseworker" program began in Dallas County in 1989 when 85 of 238 caseworkers were adopted.

According to CPS statistics for fiscal year 1995:

- 858,133 or 16.2 percent of all Texas children were at risk of abuse and neglect;
- 263,467 children were investigated for abuse and neglect; and
- 81,296 were confirmed victims of abuse and neglect.
- Each month CPS serves 36,315 families and 87,437 children.
- There are 2,400 caseworkers in Texas with a monthly average caseload of 31.7 each.

The facility is expected to recycle between 10 and 15 percent of the 110,000 tons of garbage generated annually.

Police chief says allegations are conspiracy

FORT WORTH, Texas (AP) — Police Chief Thomas Windham defended himself for the first time Wednesday against allegations that he retaliated against two officers involved in rejecting his daughter's fiance as a police academy candidate.

The civil service comission is investigating charges that Windham tried to help Jimmy Wayne Johnson gain admission to the academy and will hold a hearing on July 17.

"Up until now I have said nothing because I am the chief of police and I've tried to remain above the fray," Windham said. "But I can no longer stand idly by while this unprecedented and outrageous personal attack is carried out against me, my family and the police department ... I, in no way, helped Johnson with the application process."

Windham also made accusations of his own against one of the lawyers representing the two officers who made the accusations.

"This is a case of vindictive behavior. Bob Hasty couldn't make it at Fort Worth Police Department and now he is very resentful."

Hasty said Windham's allegations were baseless and an attempt to divert attention from his illegal actions.

"Some of those things were pretty personal, but all that indicates to me is that it's getting to him," Hasty said. "He is intitled to his opinion, but that is not relevant."

Hasty represents Cpl. Laura Klein, who earlier this month requested an emergency meeting of the civil service commission to investigate Windham's actions after Johnson's repeated applications for police jobs since 1994.

Deputy Chief David Dees, Windham's top aide, wrote a memo to the training division captain on Feb. 29, 1996, telling him to put Johnson in the next reserve officer class, according to a copy of the memo with Ms. Klein's request.

Hasty contends that action violated civil service rules.

Windham says the only violation of rules was committed when Klein gave Johnson's application records to an attorney.

"That is a breach of public trust and confidence."

Police Capt. Harry Jones, who sat on the three-member review panel that rejected Johnson as a reserve officer candidate on Feb. 14, 1996, is fighting a threatened demotion to sergeant.

Windham said he recommended that Jones be fired because he lied about having an intimate relationship with a female officer.

"I disciplined Capt. Harry Jones because of a lack of honesty on his part that has nothing to do with Jimmy Wayne Johnson."

Jones' attorney, Mike Ware, could not be reached for comment by The Associated Press, but has told the Fort Worth Star-Telegram that Windham's efforts are "payback."

Background checks revealed Johnson pleaded guilty in 1993 to shoplifting, had been arrested for suspicion of criminal trespass, and had acknowledged other thefts. He also failed a psychological evaluation.

Johnson was accepted this year, contingent upon another psychological exam.

Along with the investigation, Windham also faces a City Council member's call for his immediate suspension.

Councilman Chuck Silcox has asked City Manager Bob Terrell in a letter to suspend the chief until the investigation is completed to prevent him from trying to "intimidate and retaliate against" people in his department who cooperate with the probe.

"I feel like Windham is an intimidator," Silcox said. "He's very controlling and can affect those around him and what they're willing to admit happened."

Attorney Bill Lane alleged in a letter to the council that Silcox's calls for the chief's suspension violate the City Charter. He cites a section on council members' interfering with appointments and removal of appointees to city positions.

"Please accept this as a formal request for your assistance," Lane writes. "This conduct by Councilman Silcox can no longer be tolerated."

The city attorney could not be reached by The Associated Press for comment on the issue.

Bush asks Clinton for disaster relief in wake of floods

WASHINGTON (AP) — Texas Gov. George W. Bush is asking President Clinton for a major disaster declaration to trigger federal help for 12 Central Texas counties waterlogged by recent severe flooding.

"These storms and high water have resulted in five deaths, widespread damage and have caused many citizens to be displaced from their homes," Bush wrote Clinton on Wednesday.

The flooding, which began June 21, "is of such severity and magnitude that effective response is beyond the capabilities of the state and the affected local governments," Bush added.

To date, damage from the flooding has been estimated at just over $15 million. But because the flood waters haven't receded completely in hard-hit Travis County, a final damage tally can't be made, Bush spokeswoman Karen Hughes said Wednesday.

Sen. Kay Bailey Hutchison, in a letter signed by fellow Texas GOP Sen. Phil Gramm, also wrote the president Wednesday to ask for Washington's help. "We appreciate your review of this matter and hope you will issue a disaster declaration as quickly as possible," they said.

The initial damage survey showed flood damage to more than 500 homes and businesses. Lake Travis was the primary source of the flooding, which damaged some 200 homes along the lake's shorelines. Floods and driving rains damaged more than 200 other dwellings from Hondo, just west of San Antonio, to Lakeway, just west of Austin.

The counties for which the governor is seeking federal relief are: Bandera, Bexar, Burnet, Guadalupe, Kendall, Kimble, Llano, Mason, Medina, Real, Travis and Uvalde.

Bush said initial estimates by state and federal emergency management officials suggest the feds could be responsible for picking up $4.6 million of the total damage reported to date.

Just last month, the Clinton administration rejected a presidential disaster declaration Bush had sought to deal with the aftermath of killer tornadoes in Central Texas.

The Federal Emergency Management Agency ruled that damage from the tornadoes, which killed 28 people, didn't meet the threshold to trigger federal help.

Some 239 homes and businesses were destroyed or damaged when the twisters hit May 27, striking the small town of Jarrell with the greatest violence. Total damages were estimated at $20 million.

"This has been a very difficult year for Texas with natural disasters," said Ms. Hughes.

of the children in Jeff Davis County are invited to decorate their bikes, and their wagons, and be a part of the parade," said Kate McKenna, organizer of the parade.

In addition, she said all county residents over 90 years old are invited to pile into a wagon of their own.

Only the parade may be a bit short on martial music.

"Here's the problem," Ms. McKenna said of the award-winning Fort Davis High School Band. "Their instruments are all in Odessa being repaired, so we will have a recording of them."

Activities will include a baby contest, ugly pickup and an apple pie and empanada contest. "We grow the best apples in the country," Ms. McKenna said.

The event, Ms. Robertson said, "is a big deal. It's real old-timey."

Only Ms. Robertson, who will ride a horse in the procession, may be in for a rollicking time.

"I've been on horseback three times in my life. It'll be real interesting," she said. "They'll put the ambulance behind me, and other people have said they will throw firecrackers."

sake — with or without validity. Why? Probably was drinking too much of the wonderful brew from sunrise to midnight.

It was sort of like quitting smoking and boozing: Rarely is the first try a winner.

Eventually, though, coffee drinking slipped into the past. And with it, for now, at least, went the utter joy of really enjoying soda biscuits with honey and fruit for breakfast. Without coffee, breakfast falls flat.

Oh, where is the cause in arising briskly if there's no coffee a'brewing to thrill the being from pate to sole?

Since forgoing coffee, ol' Todd has been errant in showing up for Saturday-morning coffee with a saint of a fellow, Don Hellinghausen, and reveling in reflections and prospects with the dear, ol' friend.

What to do?

Can life on Earth be restored to a high level without the impetus of coffee?

Perhaps. If dearth is dear, then ol' Ed Todd ought to be in bliss.

Roswell cashes in on 'Incident'

By Tim Korte
Associated Press

ROSWELL, N.M. — Souvenir sales soared like the thermometer Wednesday at the 50th anniversary celebration of an alleged alien encounter known as the Roswell Incident.

As temperatures topped 100 degrees for the second straight day, stores were selling out of such items as pinatas, a Hispanic Christmas tradition that perhaps recalled cooler times — only these were alien pinatas.

"We're primarily an Indian gallery but with the UFO festival going on, we've added a lot to the store," said Michael Amador, the shopkeeper at the Apache Gallery. "We also sell Mexican imports, so we had a friend make the piñatas."

A group of promotional dummies made to resemble aliens sat in a weathered Jeep in front of the gallery. These five aliens, each about 4 feet tall, were supposed to represent the five spacemen who purportedly crashed northwest of here in July 1947. But with their costumes and headgear — including cowboy hat and chaps, a feathered Indian war bonnet, a military camouflage uniform and a sombrero — they were more reminiscent of the Village People pop music group.

By noon, Amador said the store had sold about 50 of its 250 alien pinatas at $7.95 each.

As he spoke, tourists paraded along the sidewalks and the mercury climbed to 101, according to the National Weather Service. It had been 105 Tuesday.

The alien designs are everywhere. There are alien T-shirts, alien mannequins, alien refrigerator magnets and alien guitar picks.

Michelle Watts, who co-owns the Quilt Talk fabric store, wore a sleeveless minidress and wire-mesh vest made with her copyrighted "fabric from outer space," a black-based print pattern showing silvery space aliens and maps of New Mexico with Roswell highlighted.

"I'm weird. I look at everything in relation to 'Can you make a quilt or sew with it or make something interesting out of it.' This is interesting," she said, motioning to her outfit. "It's a woven (fabric) from outer space. It definitely won't unravel."

The fabric has already sold out, but the store is accepting orders.

Down the street at the International UFO Museum and Research Center, guests browsed through exhibits on, among other things, crop circles, abduction stories and the Air Force's Project Mogul, a 1940s effort to monitor Soviet nuclear testing.

Military officials say it was a top-secret experimental spy balloon from that project — and not a UFO — that crashed near Roswell in July 1947.

Joyce Kiess, who greets each guest at the museum's door, says 2,067 visitors entered Tuesday, the first official day of the celebration, and the number was expected to rise daily as the week continued. Most visitors were from Texas and California, she said, with some from as far away as Vermont.

Some visitors expressed belief in the UFO story. Most, like 7-year-old Colby Kraft of Bradford, Pa., were just having a good time. Asked if he believed in space aliens, Colby shrugged and smiled.

"I don't know," he said.

Added Jason York, 19, of Amarillo, Texas: "I know something happened. I'm just not sure what."

Festival organizers said several hotel rooms became available Wednesday when a television production company cancelled plans to cover the event.

But there was still overflow. Representatives of some news outlets were housed at a retirement center.

"So obviously, there's a need for rooms," said publicist Tom Garrity.

Church project Camp SucSeed seeks to introduce children to the arts

By Daniel Rubin
The Dallas Morning News

DALLAS — As 5-year-old Ursula Hicks approached the stage, the fear showed in her eyes. She tentatively stretched her hand toward the violin that was awaiting her fingers to make the "pop" sound of "Pop Goes the Weasel."

Twenty-nine other children, ranging in age from 5 to 11, stared intently at her as she approached.

Finally, her finger touched the string and a small pop sound was emitted. Dallas Symphony Orchestra violinist Bruce Wittrig finished the song and Ursula returned to her seat with a large smile on her face.

"It felt like fun," she said.

Ursula and the other children who watched and listened to Wittrig are participating in a month-long camp run by St. Paul United Methodist Church called Camp SucSeed.

The Rev. Janette Chandler Kotey, associate pastor and minister of music and the arts for St. Paul, said the purpose of the camp is to introduce young African-Americans to the arts. Most of the children are from the inner city, and many live in public housing.

The camp began on June 16 and runs through July 18. Campers can sign up by the week, according to Barbara Weaver, camp director.

"The program is geared toward the arts — music, drama, and visual — and how the kids can use them in their everyday lives," Ms. Kotey said. "That is what makes the program unique."

Adrian Masterson, 11, said that the camp is helping him learn not only about the arts but also about religion.

Kevin Spencer plays his shoe-box-and-rubber-band-guitar at Camp SucSeed at St. Paul United Methodist Church in Dallas.

"I'm getting to spread my mind and learning to help each other and help us learn about God," he said.

Ms. Kotey said that one of the main goals of the program is to promote self-esteem in the children.

"We want to help them become wholesome citizens, and exposure to the arts can help them understand the world around them," Ms. Kotey said.

As part of the camp experience, Ms. Kotey said that the group will take field trips to various performances and museums. Trips to the Dallas Museum of Arts and the Dallas Black Dance Theater are planned. Ms. Kotey said that they have already visited the Meyerson Symphony Center.

That trip was a hit with the children, especially the Herman W. and Amelia H. Lay Family Concert Organ.

"I learned that they had 1,662 pipes up there. That's a lot," said Kevin Spencer, an 11-year-old camper.

A typical day at the camp includes prayer, singing songs, playing games and making art projects, Adrian said. Adorning the walls of the camp room were papier-mache musical instruments and faces.

The campers are also taught songs in sign language by 12-year-old Jonathan Rankin.

"It's a lot of fun, and the kids learn how to sign songs which can be a lot of fun," Jonathan said.

After lunch, a guest performer comes in. Last week, Wittrig performed for 15 minutes and then answered questions about the violin.

"I hope they are engaged by my performance and somebody starts playing an instrument," said Wittrig, a member of the Dallas Symphony Orchestra for 14 years. "If anybody connects with the music, it can start them down a path which could lead to great things."

Wittrig emphasized the amount of practice needed to become a professional violinist and the necessity of listening and learning from teachers.

Bernice Neely, Ursula's grandmother and a volunteer at the camp, said that the camp not only provides exposure to the arts but it also teaches other important life skills.

"This program gives the kids a sense of responsibility and improves their skills of helping and sharing among each other," Ms. Neely said.

Ursula said that when she grows up, she would like to become a musician.

"I already play the piano, guitar and the flute," she said proudly, "but I really like the violin."

DPS: 36 could be killed over July 4 holiday

AUSTIN (AP) — This year's long Fourth of July weekend could lead to as many as 36 traffic deaths on Texas highways, the Department of Public Safety said Wednesday.

"We're asking drivers to do everything within their power to have a safe, enjoyable July Fourth holiday," said Lt. Col. Thomas Davis Jr., acting DPS director.

"We'll have all available troopers on the roadways to watch for traffic law violators," he added.

Sixteen people were killed last year during a 30-hour holiday period.

With July 4 falling on a Friday this year, the holiday period stretches to 78 hours — from 6 p.m. Thursday through midnight Sunday.

At least five of last year's 16 deaths were attributed to drinking and driving. July 3, 1994, remains the deadliest day in Texas traffic history, with 46 people killed in accidents that day.

"Our three main concerns are drivers who are under the influence of alcohol or who are driving over the speed limit, and drivers and occupants who are not properly restrained by seat belts or child safety seats," Davis said.

The DPS is making a number of recommendations for a safer weekend. Those include:

— Calling the DPS stranded motorist hotline — 1-800-525-5555 — in case of a breakdown. Rather than accepting a ride from a stranger, motorists who call to the line will have a law enforcement officer sent to assist them.

— Making sure the driver is well-rested before starting a trip.

— Driving with headlights on during daylight hours, so the vehicle is more visible to other drivers and pedestrians.

— Watching weather conditions along the intended travel route, checking with the Texas Department of Transportation road conditions hotline — 1-800-452-9292.

Opening lead: Ace of ◇

Normally, the three heart honors in the South hand are considered equals, so it makes no difference which of them are played at any particular time. But, on occasion, some are considered more equal than others.

South's two clubs was artificial and forcing; North's raise showed a reasonable five-card suit and positive values. North's judgment in raising hearts with a doubleton ace, which could not be faulted led to a heart slam that was distinctly against the odds.

West cashed the ace of diamonds and, at trick two, shifted to the jack of spades. Declarer won in hand and, since the fate of the contract hinged on not losing a trump trick, immediately led the queen of hearts. When West covered with the king, all seemed well, but the defender's spade discard on a heart back to the jack was a rude shock. South had to lose a trump trick for down one.

Declarer made a subtle error. Instead of leading the queen of trumps at trick three, South should have led the ten. Left-hand opponent will always cover the queen with a doubleton king in an effort to promote a trump in partner's hand. However, if the ten is led and West covers, there is an excellent chance that the king is singleton since it could cost a trick to cover. Therefore, if the ten is led and West follows with the king, a sound reason exists to finesse the eight on the way back and so bring in the trump suit without loss and land the contract.

Springsteen donates portion of Polar Music Prize to program for juveniles

STOCKHOLM, Sweden — A dose of culture paid for with help from Bruce Springsteen may be the route out of juvenile delinquency for several teenagers.

The rocker had his record company search for a suitable charity that he could give an undisclosed portion of the $133,000 Polar Music Prize he won in May from the Royal Swedish Academy of Music.

The recipient, disclosed Wednesday, was the Culture School in Stockholm. It has a program in which up to a dozen youngsters will collaborate with a professional writer on a play about youth violence to be performed in October.

Culture School in Stockholm receives donation from Bruce Springsteen.

The Culture School boasts a 3-in-4 success rate in keeping its young people away from drugs and crime.

LOS ANGELES — Actor Gary Busey, who has overcome drug addiction, a near-fatal accident and now is fighting cancer, says a friend told him "the angels had him mixed up with a cat."

Busey, 53, said he is beginning radiation treatment this week following removal of a large, malignant tumor from his sinus cavity that doctors told him could have been fatal.

With the radiation, expected to be completed in six weeks, the "prognosis is that I have beaten cancer," Busey said during an appearance on the syndicated TV talk show "Crook & Chase" airing today.

The actor, who received an Oscar nomination for "The Buddy Holly Story" in 1978, was severely injured in a 1988 motorcycle crash.

Busey said he's been "clean and sober from drugs and alcohol for two years" and has learned how to "balance my internal energy with my environment and how to consider others before me."

Everybody's who's anybody in the whole country turned up in Las Vegas to watch the Mike Tyson-Evander Holyfield fight on Saturday; that is, Madonna, Sylvester Stallone, Tiger Woods, Val Kilmer, Courtney Love, Michael Douglas, Shaquille O'Neal, Michael Keaton and Roseanne were there.

After the biting broke out, and the fight broke down, and the melee began, the stars were herded into a VIP lounge so they wouldn't be hurt, reported the New York Daily News. As Tyson's after-fight comments were broadcast on a huge TV, Stallone was heard to call him a "punk," and Douglas and some others booed when he gave his head-butt explanation.

At which point, said the News, Madonna rallied to his defense. "Hey, leave Mikey alone!" she cried. "He's my friend."

DEAR ABBY

Readers unhappy with priest's response

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: You printed a query from a Baptist regarding the secrecy of the Catholic confessional. The writer asked whether a priest would disclose the confession of a murder if disclosure would save the life of a wrongly convicted person who is to be executed for a crime he did not commit.

Van Buren

The response from Cardinal Roger Mahoney of Los Angeles stated that the priest could refuse absolution to the real murderer if he refused to turn himself in to the police, but under no circumstances could the priest break the secrecy seal of the confessional, even to save the life of the innocent person who is about to be executed.

As an ethics teacher in a Catholic college, I find this answer unsatisfactory. When I discuss such dilemmas with students, I encourage them to find a solution that will respect the moral demands of both horns of the dilemma. In this case, the priest should try to save the life of the innocent convict while also respecting the confidentiality of his penitent.

For example, the priest could document the details provided by the real murderer and take the statement to appropriate authorities, while keeping the identity of the murderer anonymous. Although the priest's evidence is hearsay and may not be admissible in a trial court, his willingness to swear that he has heard the confession of the murderer and is convinced it is authentic should at least lead authorities to reconsider the planned execution.

Cardinal Mahoney's argument for absolute secrecy on grounds that penitents could stop using the sacrament if they were not guaranteed secrecy is parallel to arguments made by psychiatrists in the Tarasoff case, where a patient had told his psychiatrist he planned to kill his girlfriend and then carried out the threat. On appeal, the California Supreme Court rejected the psychiatrist's argument supporting absolute confidentiality, saying that a psychiatrist had a duty to warn or protect an identifiable potential victim, and enunciated the principle now universally accepted by psychiatrists, therapists and social workers.

Confidentiality is limited by the right of others not to be harmed, and is most strongly limited by the right to life held by innocent persons. — CAROL A TAUER, ST. PAUL, MINN.

DEAR MS. TAUER: When I printed the question, and then Cardinal Mahoney's response, I had no idea it would generate such a flood of angry letters. Some were from Catholics accusing me of having printed an "anti-Catholic, trick question." However, most were from readers who vigorously disagreed with the church's position on allowing an innocent person to die for a crime he did not commit.

Since I am not of the Catholic faith, I hesitate to criticize church doctrine. However, I think your argument has merit.

DEAR ABBY: I just finished reading about another senseless crime. A high school student fatally gunned down his high school principal and one of his "tormentors." The most troubling part of the tragedy is that the killer's friends knew that he had frequently made death threats. However, they didn't think he would carry it through because it was "just, you know, teen talk."

Anyone who considers this kind of conversation "just talk" is making a terrible mistake by not confiding in someone who can help. — SCARED MOTHER OF TWO

DEAR SCARED MOTHER: Don't be too hard on teen-agers who may not have realized the seriousness of such a threat. However, let me go on record: Death threats and threats of suicide are both serious, and should be reported to a responsible adult. They are indications of serious underlying problems for which professional intervention is essential.

DEAR ABBY: We received this letter the night before our daughter's wedding. It was Linda's gift to us. "Dearest Parents: On our wedding day, as my husband and I take our vows and make promises to each other, I make this promise to you as well. Even as I take him into my heart and life, I promise to keep you, parents dear, in my heart and life always.

"On this day, know that our love is not divided; it is multiplied, and you are embraced with the full measure of love and promises that he and I share here today.

"For I know that I am able to love and cherish him so much because you loved and cherished me first." — BLOSSOM R. HOLLANDER, LOS ANGELES

DEAR BLOSSOM: What a beautiful tribute to you and your husband as parents, and to your daughter as well. Congratulations — you raised a winner.

DEAR ABBY: I offer a love story: At a party, I danced with a beautiful Irish girl named Marie. I nuzzled her long black hair, and we discovered that my chewing gum had become stuck in her hair.

We had to get scissors to cut it out.

We married a year later and have stuck together for 55 happy years. — ALBERT BELZER, VERO BEACH, FLA.

DEAR ALBERT: My readers always enjoy a love story with a happy ending. Congratulations to you and your bride for more than half a century of happy marriage.

CANNA: Garden plants, people cut down in time almost 30 feet high, with a magnificent crown.

It was special because it reminded me of the chestnut tree in our side yard in Chicago.

I HATED TO LEAVE the Mother's Day lilacs at that first Woodinville home, too.

The Heir Apparent and I tried several years running before our Mother's Day gift of planted lilacs took hold and began blossoming the following year.

Wife Person now can see just the beginnings of new Mother's Day lilacs planted in the past two years at our new place. And, in customary Hahn-style landscaping, they are plopped down on the same fence line as our several forsythia shrubs. One of those, now prospering, is special because it was given to us by Marion, a friend from down the road. We even call it "Marion's Forsythia," and we think of her warmly when we see its brilliant spring yellow.

In the slightly less hodgepodge of my older sister's backyard garden in Chicago is a new lavender rose bush. I planted it for her when I flew back to see her last month. The rose was my payoff for the Bulls beating the Sonics last year. And it will be special for her, because she's never had a rose bush with that color blossom. And because I came all the way from Seattle to plant it.

But she's in the hospital now, or again, and suddenly that rose bush has taken on a special significance to me, too. It's a little bit of me left behind in the old neighborhood. It's to let her know I love her in spite of the geographic distance I put between us when we left our Midwest roots and families almost 20 years ago.

The new owners of Grandma's house on the Fox River in Illinois will never know the significance of the conifer tree between the house and the river and how it was planted by a small blond-haired boy as a gift to his grandmother. She often remarked how they'd both grown tall together.

But trees and cannas and people are cut down, some before their time. And we have to nurture and support both while we have them.

a house on Wedgewood. Like several other houses on the block in northwest Midland, it is not without its expanses of green in the front yard. But unlike many Midland residences, the expanse of green is not a lawn. Instead the yards are grass-free. "Free" is the operative word since residents are also free from the time-consuming maintenance of a lawn.

"Putting in ground cover is easier than maintaining a lawn. That was the whole idea," said Bonnie Childers. "Everyone on this part of the block is about the same age. We have more things we want to do than mow, like play with those grandbabies."

"Ho, ho, ho. Mow no more reads a real estate sign in one of the yards

MRS. CHILDRERS and her husband, Howell "Boogie" Childers, planted dollar vinca, a round-leafed vine not typically seen in area nurseries.

"We got the dollar vinca from an individual in town. We were warned it is very aggressive and not to put it in an area where we wouldn't want it to take over," Ms. Childers said. "We've been here two years. The vinca does die back, but it comes back in real hardy in the spring."

"The whole idea is that we wanted a low-maintenance yard," she said. "We even considered filling it in with aggregate. But when we were offered the dollar vinca, we thought: 'Why not?' We could try it and see. It obviously has worked."

Other neighbors have planted the more familiar type of vinca (vinca major), a green trailing vine with purple flowers. The vines root as they grow along the ground. Midlanders have reported vinca grows equally well in shade and sun.

Also called vinca (vinca rosea) are periwinkle bedding flowers — an annual — with variegated leaves that don't spread like the ground cover.

MIDLANDERS HAVE cited various reasons for choosing ground cover over grass. Those reasons include everything from being allergic to grass, to having no teen-agers left living at home to mow.

For some residents, mowing hasn't stopped altogether since vinca can be edged and cut down with weedeaters.

"I've thought of getting a weedeater and edging, but I really wanted a more natural look," Ms. Childers said.

Her neighbor, Danny Hobson, said, initially putting in ground cover is no small task. "Getting ready for ground cover is a lot of hard work. You have to get rid of the weeds first and plant each of the vines. But once it comes in, you're home free," he said.

A Midlander for more than 31 years, and retired from El Paso Natural Gas, Childers said he chose his home on Wedgewood for its low maintenance.

"Once vinca is established, you only need to water about twice a week, 20 minutes at a time. Our yard is not even a year old and it has filled in well," he said. "Of course we had a fantastic spring with all the rain."

He noted that the vine grows in clumps, which tends to create mounds in the yard. "Then I occasionally use a weedeater to knock the tops off and level it out."

Hobson said he was surprised that the section of Wedgewood with ground cover front yards has been such an attention-getter. Drivers often stop to get a closer look or ask the residents about the leafy plants substituted in place of grass.

"People slow down to look at what we've got growing," Hobson said. "I enjoy walking through the neighborhood myself to see what other people are doing in their yards."

Even with less maintenance, Hobson still likes to putter in a pansy bed, fronted with a stone shaped like the Lone Star State. "I'm thinking of adding some flowers beneath those shrubs in that bed in the side yard," he said.

He allows that there is a great difference between puttering and mowing, however.

Pointing to a lush green lawn at a neighbor's house, Hobson said. "It's fescue and it's a beautiful yard. But he is out mowing two or three times a week, and I'm done with that."

Summer insects ravage plants

By Deborah A. Benge Frost

Have you noticed the holes, munching marks and ragged flowers that are common this time of year because of feeding insects? Grasshoppers, caterpillars, leaf hoppers and beetles are doing their work on many landscape plants.

Benge Frost

While the bugs thrive from this feeding, the plants start to look as if they've been shot with buckshot, and the gardeners get rather frustrated.

Many of the pests that feed on yard and garden plants are small and difficult to recognize. Unless you are observant, you may blame the plants' sad appearance on some vague disorder or summer heat.

If you aren't sure why your plants look bad, get a closer look. Examine the areas where insects are most likely to hide and munch, including the growing tips, the underside of the leaves, and the oldest leaves.

Aphids are often found on the new growth of plants. Spider mites, leafhoppers, lacebugs and white flies are usually found on the underside of leaves.

Worms can be found in flower buds, growing points and both sides of the leaf surfaces. Grasshoppers, snowy tree crickets and beetles can be found on any green leaf surface.

Flea beetle adults can be found on either leaf surface, but the immature form is usually found on the bottom side of leaves. These are just a few of the insects that may be bugging you.

Another clue of insect activity is a sticky, shiny wet-appearing substance on leaves called honeydew. This is plant sap that is excreted by sucking insects such as aphids, scale insects, white flies and mealybugs while they feed.

Many insects shed their outer skin as they grow, and these can be found on the bottom side of leaves. Cast skins are small, whitish and thinner than onion skin.

Fecal spots can be found on either leaf surface and appear dark, round and small. Worms will leave fecal droppings behind on and in leaves, and may roll leaf edges to hide and feed in.

A lacy-looking leaf where the veins and upper leaf epidermis is left in place, but all the green stuff on the lower leaf surface is gone, can indicate a skeletonizing insect such as the immature form of elm leaf beetle, Western grape skeletonizers and others.

Insects with piercing-sucking mouth parts will leave a stippled appearance to leaves.

These lighter-looking spots can eventually coalesce and cause the leaves to dry up.

Grape leaf hoppers cause this kind of damage to older grape leaves, as do spider mites to tomato leaves.

Most of us don't don spacesuits, get out the fumigation equipment and nuke the neighborhood, but we don't want to sacrifice every green thing in our landscapes either. The best approach is to look at the damage and determine whether or not you can live with it. Although making this decision may take some time, while you are considering the possibilities, evaluate the damage every day or every few days. Often the insect may complete its lifecycle and stop feeding on foliage and buds and go elsewhere, or beneficial insects move in and take care of the problem.

Many cultural practices and techniques can be used to handle or lessen pest problems.

If the problem is very damaging, a pesticide spray may be in order. Pesticide sprays may be synthetic or "natural." Toxicity is a concern for most of us, especially when children, pets, wildlife and edible fruits, vegetables and herbs are in the picture. Don't assume that an organic spray is less toxic than a synthetic one. Many organics are just as or even more toxic than many synthetic insecticides.

Here are some methods and products of pest management:

■ Insecticidal soap: This works great on small, soft-bodied pests, including spider mites, aphids and lace bugs.

Mix at label rates and use early or late in the day when temperatures are cooler and the sun's rays are weaker to reduce foliage burn. Some plants are sensitive to repeated use of soap sprays. Spray must contact the pest to work, so direct sprays to where the pests are.

■ Oil: Dormant oil is fine for late winter, while horticultural oils are lightweight, highly refined, and can be used throughout the growing season. Spray must contact the pest to work. Avoid hot, mid-day sun spray conditions.

■ Neem: Products from the neem tree have been used in India for centuries. Extracts of azadirachtin from neem trees are a very low-toxicity insecticides, and we now have neem oil which, in addition to being an insecticide, also controls several diseases.

■ Pyrethrin and rotenone sprays: Have good "knock down" power and breakdown very quickly in the environment.

■ Water Wand: A high-pressure mister which attaches to a hose, the wand washes mites, aphids, and the like from roses and other garden plants.

■ Newspaper and bagged leaves: For season-long weed control, place four sheets of wet newspaper (no glossy sheets) around plants, and cover with leaves, pine needles or grass clippings. By season's end, the paper will be mostly decomposed and can be spaded or tilled into the soil.

■ Spunbound polyester row covers: This super lightweight fabric (.6-ounce per square yard) excludes pests but allows sunlight, water and air to pass through.

Great for covering a bed of pest-prone greens or other tender vegetables. A couple of brand names include Grow Web and Remay.

■ Bt or Bacillus thuringiensis: Kills nothing but the immature form of moths and butterflies, worms and caterpillars, and breaks down very rapidly. Very specific pesticides are good in protecting beneficial insects. Keep in mind Bt can reduce your desirable butterflies because it does kill butterfly larvae.

If a kinder environmental approach is more appealing to you, consider some these and other Earthkind principles outlined by the Texas Agricultural Extension Service in a tabloid entitled "Earthkind Gardening" that is available at your local county Extension office.

It is full of articles and guidelines to help you have a healthy, productive and beautiful landscape and garden.

Some homeowners in the 3300 block of Wedgewood Street have opted to use low-maintenance ground covers in place of traditional lawns. Bonnie and Howell "Boogie" Childers planted the vine referred to as dollar vinca in their front yard, left. A close-up look at the vinca, above, shows it to be round and somewhat larger than a silver dollar. Other Wedgewood residents planted the vinca groundcover typically found in Midland garden centers. Get grounded with vines

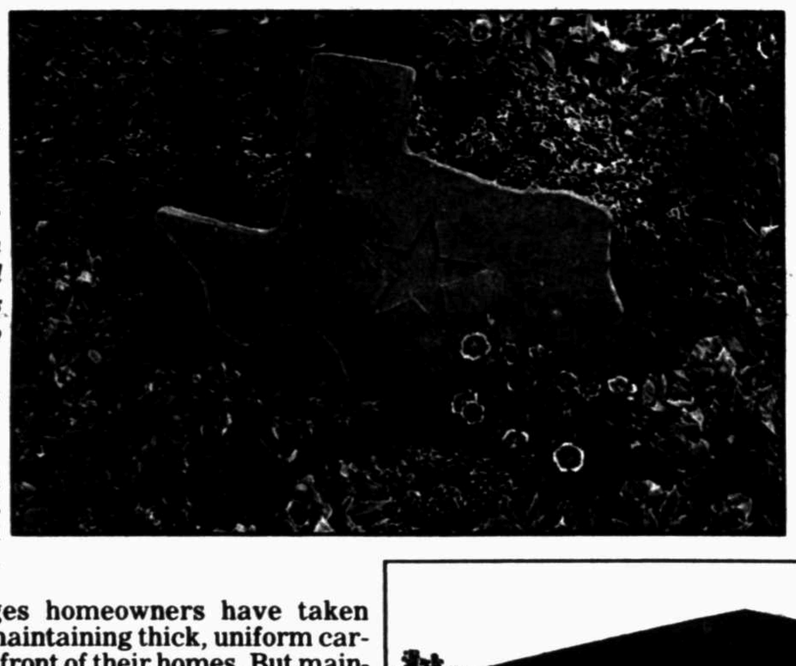
"Nothing is more pleasing to the eye than green grass kept finely shorn."
—Sir Francis Bacon, 17th Century philosopher and essayist.

"Close cropped lawns are an unnatural condition, an invention of man. The normal height of nearly all grasses used for lawns is 18 inches to 3 feet. Keeping grass green, healthy and trimmed can make one a slave to an outdoor carpet."
—James Underwood Crockett, horticulturist in "Lawns and Ground Cover," 1975.



A stone in the shape of Texas, left, fronts a pansy bed in front of the house belonging to Danny Hobson. The bed is seen in full view, below. Hobson said preparing the ground and planting ground cover takes a lot of physcial effort. "But once it comes in, you're home free," he said.

Through the ages homeowners have taken great pride in maintaining thick, uniform carpets of green in front of their homes. But maintaining a perfect lawn is not without its toil. Some gardeners have been known to devote every warm weather weekend mowing, edging, weeding, fertilizing, aerating, raking and watering their lawns.

When the usual cacophony of lawn mower engines sounds on a weekend, however, some Midlanders are out hitting balls on the golf range, enjoying a good read while lounging in a hammock, or cavorting with grandchildren.

Several of those Midlanders reside in the 3300 block of Wedgewood. They have traded lawn care for leisure time by putting in ground cover, namely low-maintenance vines.

Ground covers add variety

Staff Reports

The most popular ground cover of all is grass. But the words "ground cover" are now being used to distinguish low-growing spreading plants from grasses. With all of nature's vines and creepers, tufted grasses and dwarf bushes to choose from — as well as a multitude of hybrids plant breeders have developed over the years — the gardener who restricts himself to a lawn alone is missing the chance to add a fascinating, varied and personal dimension to his garden floor. Lawns that slavishly follow the straight lines projected on some land developer's drafting board, or those that simply carpet the entire outdoor space, will inevitibly lack interest. In many cases, gardeners mix ground covers with lawns, to add dimension and texture to yards.

Canna blooms, garden flora evoke memories

By Jon Hahn
New York Times News Service

Each year since my older brother, Bill, died, I have kept an early-summer eye on the edge of our back yard where we planted a row of brilliant orange cannas he sent from his garden in St. Louis.

The year after he died, I remarked one late June day how these exotic flowering plants apparently hadn't survived the Seattle winter. He used to dig them out every fall, but I counted on milder winters and left them in the ground.

"I guess it's fitting, somehow, that they didn't survive," I told Wife Person.

Two or three weeks later, they poked above the mulch in our impossibly late-starting summer. A small shiver of something special, about someone special, ran through me when I saw those plants and thought of my brother.

They are "late" again this year, as usual. They've managed to survive and bloom in each of the four years since he died. But when they don't show up by about this time each year, I tell myself to let go. They're only one more part of my eclectic hodgepodge landscape that happened to have a personal attachment. And after all, plants die, just like people.

But while they're living — the plants and the people — we take special satisfaction from both and even more when they are somehow linked. Also transplanted to our little plot of land are shamrocks, dahlias, other perennials and several ground-cover varieties from friends' gardens. And right now, an abundance of colorful wildflowers grown from seeds that also were presents from friends.

Back in the little northern Illinois town of Wauconda, we had a magnificent old apple tree in our back yard. Lyle Broughton, the old white-haired guy who'd grown up in that house, told us how he and his father had planted the tree more than 70 years earlier, when he was a boy.

I CAN'T RECALL Lyle saying if he ever got to climb in that tree, but it was a special climbing tree for our son, the so-called Heir Apparent. And for me, too, especially when apples were ripening. And I thought of old Lyle every time that tree blossomed in the spring or produced bushels of apples in the fall.

On another part of Hollywood Hill in Woodinville, Wash., at our first house in this area, there are still some fir trees that the Heir Apparent planted as seedlings left over from a Boy Scout project a dozen years ago. Some have been moved and some were cut down, but the remaining ones have grown tall, like the boy who planted them.

There also was a huge clump of pampas grass and an even bigger rhododendron shrub transplanted from friends' property in Everett, Wash, I don't know if they have survived because our old house and property have undergone a drastic transformation and two changes of ownership since we moved four years ago.

Still intact, I think, is a buckeye tree, grown from a foot-high sprout we dug up alongside the gas station at the bottom of the hill. By the time we'd moved, that tree had grown

Spurs ink Johnson

SAN ANTONIO — The San Antonio Spurs have signed guard Avery Johnson to a new contract reportedly worth about $9 million over three years.

Johnson, 32, was released to free agency Tuesday, then signed again with the team Wednesday. The Spurs would not disclose terms of the agreement, but the San Antonio Express-News reported the three-year contract was valued at $9 million to $9.5 million.

"We are pleased to keep AJ in the fold," said Gregg Popovich, Spurs coach and general manager. "He is the juice that makes us run, and he is the heart and soul of our team."

Johnson, a former New Mexico Junior College Thunderbird, is in his third stint with the Spurs after signing on as a free agent in July 1994. In his three seasons since, Johnson has averaged 12.4 points and 8.2 assists in a total of 240 games.

Ryan's future

FORT WORTH — Nolan Ryan said Wednesday that he will not run for state agriculture commissioner after all.

The major league's career strikeout leader said he decided not to run in the Republican primary after learning that his endorsements and sports broadcasting commitments would conflict with his campaign and election.

"I've been giving a lot of consideration to my deep interest in agriculture, and it has come down to the conflict I'd have with the endorsement commercials and running a campaign and holding office," Ryan told the Fort Worth Star-Telegram.

The Federal Communications Commission ruled last week that TV stations would have to give his opponents equal time if his commercials continued to air during the campaign. Ryan is featured in commercials for Advil and Dairy Queen and does broadcast work for Fox Sports Southwest Cable network.

Ryan said he also wants to continue spending more time with his family and other business interests, including his ranches. But he added that he is not ruling out a running a future election.

"I'm not ruling out that at some point ... if the timing is right," he told the Star-Telegram in a telephone interview from his hometown, Alvin.

The Texas Farm Bureau was courting Ryan for a run in the GOP primary for Texas Agriculture Commissioner Rick Perry's post. Perry is running for the Republican nomination for lieutenant governor.

Tyson to tell his side at hearing

By Tim Dahlberg
AP Sports Writer

LAS VEGAS — Mike Tyson might be better off leaving his lawyers and handlers at home when Nevada boxing regulators meet to determine his fate for biting a chunk out of Evander Holyfield's ear.

The chairman of the Nevada State Athletic Commission said Wednesday there's only one person who can explain what happened in the ring that night — Tyson himself.

"I really think there's only one guy who has to justify his actions in the ring and that's Mike Tyson," Dr. Elias Ghanem said. "I don't want to press anything and tell him he has to show up, but we are really talking about Mike Tyson here."

Tyson was expected to sign papers Wednesday allowing the commission to go ahead with a meeting next week where he could face a lifetime ban from boxing along with a $3 million fine.

Tyson has said he will not fight the sanctions, but pleaded earlier this week to be allowed to box again.

"I only ask that I not be penalized for life for this mistake," Tyson said.

The state attorney general's office asked for the revocation of Tyson's boxing license in its formal complaint, a legal move that allows the commission to impose its stiffest fine, 10 percent of Tyson's $30 million purse.

If Tyson's license were revoked, he would have to wait at least a year before reapplying, but the commission has the authority to make that even longer. A suspension could be up to five years with a maximum fine of $250,000.

Ghanem said that any speculation about possible penalties is just that. He said he hasn't discussed Tyson's fate with any of the other four commissioners, and won't until the hearing, which is tentatively set for Wednesday.

"I'm not the type that would stand for a secret deal and I don't know how we could do a secret deal," Ghanem said. "It's pure speculation from everyone that isn't involved. There is no done deal and there won't be one."

However, if the way the commission handled Oliver McCall's quitting in the ring during his heavyweight title fight with Lennox Lewis in February is any indication, Tyson figures to face more than a year out of boxing.

McCall has agreed to a one-year suspension for quitting against Lewis, but commissioners have said they view Tyson's biting of Holyfield as more serious.

Joe Rolston, a deputy attorney general prosecuting the case, said the state doesn't plan to call any witnesses during the hearing and will simply play the tape of the fight for commissioners.

"It's not a situation where we need to find a smoking gun," Rolston said. "The tape speaks for itself."

If Tyson changed his mind and decided to fight the

Wichita cools Angels' fireworks

■ Wichita Wranglers beat Midland, 5-1, to salvage being swept by the host Angels in six-game series.

By Stewart Doreen
Sports Writer

It was a matter of saving a little pride and having a good pitcher.

The Wichita Wranglers couldn't win their six-game series with the Midland Angels. They came into Thursday's game at Christensen Stadium having lost the previous five.

Nor could the Wranglers (6-12 for the season) claim a better record over the Midland Angels during a most unusual 12-game, home-and-home set. The Angels clinched that, having won eight of the 11 straight games.

There wasn't much the Wranglers could do but play the spoiler and save a little pride in the process. Thanks to Wichita's staff ace Enrique Calero and some timely offensive production, they did both with a 5-1 win.

"It is a relief to win this one," Wichita manager Ron Johnson said. "Getting beat six-in-a-row, it is a big relief. I'm elated. No one wants to go on the road and go 6-for-6 (in the loss column), and then go home. I don't know how good we are or if we are a playoff contender, but we aren't as bad as we have been over the last five days.

"The biggest relief is having a guy like Enrique Calero. (The Angels) are a good hitting ball club. So, we were in dire need of this."

Calero, who was selected to play in the Double-A All-Star Game, was the lifesaver. He improved to 8-4, dumbfound-

Woods is rested, ready

■ After a few bad finishes, Tiger Woods hopes to regain his form in the Western Open.

LEMONT, Ill. — Tiger Woods has retooled his swing, reshaped his putting stroke and, he says, recovered from an overdose of golf.

Fresh off a week of rest and adjustments, Woods is returning refreshed to a sport that has reached new heights of popularity since he turned pro last August.

Nevertheless, the 21-year-old Masters champion doesn't necessarily expect to win the Western Open, which starts Thursday at Cog Hill Golf & Country Club's Dubsdread course in southwest suburban Chicago.

"If (fans) expect me to win every week, I think that's unrealistic," said Woods, who leads the 1997 PGA Tour with more than $1.4 million in earnings. "I don't expect myself to win every week because that's just physically impossible. I'm human. I'm going to make mistakes. You can't hit the ball well and putt well every week."

It's been several weeks since his entire game has clicked.

After shooting 11 consecutive rounds under par — a stretch that included victories in the Masters and Byron Nelson Classic — Woods has been under par in only one of 12 rounds.

He's a cumulative 15 strokes over par during that span. And in his last three tournaments (Memorial, U.S. Open, Buick Classic), his average finish was 43rd, his average winnings $13,428.

"Anytime you slump, you just go back to fundamentals. You start from ground one and work your way back up, and that's exactly what I did," said Woods, who skipped last week's St. Jude's Classic after finishing 43rd in the Buick. "I tore my swing apart, worked from the ground back up. Same thing with my putting stroke, and yeah, it's coming around."

And when he wasn't hitting buckets of balls and toiling at the practice green, Woods just relaxed.

"I fished every day. What else did I do? Watch TV, sleep, eat. That's about it," he said. "I've never played tournament golf for an entire year. I've played too much too soon sometimes, and I've played not enough. I'm trying to find the right balance. The hard part is trying to keep up your intensity every tournament."

Sampras survives Korda, opposes Becker in quarters

By Steve Wilstein
AP Tennis Writer

WIMBLEDON, England — Pushed to five sets though never broken, Pete Sampras drilled his 28th ace Wednesday to escape the same fate as defending champion Richard Krajicek and set up a showdown against fellow three-time Wimbledon champ Boris Becker.

Sampras vs. Becker is like a final in the quarters.

"It's kind of a tough draw for both of us," the top-ranked Sampras said after beating No. 16 Petr Korda 6-4, 6-3, 6-7 (10-8), 6-7 (7-1), 6-4. "I feel Boris, for the rest of his career, should be seeded in the top four, no matter what he's ranked, because he got to the finals here seven times and he's won here three times.

"We've had some unbelievable matches in the past. This what it's all about for us — the Wimbledons and the Grand Slams."

What it's all about for Tim Henman is an opportunity to give British fans a men's champion for the first time since Fred Perry won his third title in 1936.

Henman raised hopes by closing out a 7-6 (9-7), 6-7 (9-7), 7-6 (7-5), 6-4 upset of the No. 4 Krajicek with a 36-minute final set of their suspended match. Henman broke Krajicek at love with four strong returns that the Dutchman volleyed long or into the net to fall behind 3-2, then held serve the rest of the way, ending the match with a put-away volley. Henman next faces 1991 champion Michael Stich.

Belle, who will return to Jacobs Field in the uniform of the Chicago White Sox, led the list of reserves and pitchers announced Wednesday for the All-Star game on July 8.

He will be reunited with Indians catcher Sandy Alomar Jr., chosen by AL manager Joe Torre as a backup. Another former Indian, Atlanta's Kenny Lofton, earlier was selected in fan voting to start for the National League.

ANGELS: Midland heads to the road

ing the Angel batters to the tune of five hits in eight innings pitched. And the one run allowed speaks volumes, considering the Angels were averaging six-plus runs a game in the previous 11 versus Wichita. The Halos have also scored 31 in their past three games.

"Their pitching shut our hitting down tonight," Angels manager Mitch Seoane said. "He mixed pitches well and kept the ball down in the zone. It was just one of those nights when good pitching stopped good hitting."

Calero, who pitched in rookie ball last season, shouldered the burden for the Wranglers, taking pressure off the offense, which didn't exactly hammer Angels' starter Rob Bonanno (3-4).

The Angels righthander never really got in serious trouble on Wednesday. On any other night, allowing nine hits and four runs (three of which were earned) over seven innings would have been all the Angels needed. However, that was not the case Wednesday. The Wranglers manufactured scoring opportunities, and players like Jeremy Giambi (4-for-5 with three RBIs) and Anthony Medrano (2-for-3 with two RBIs) converted when asked.

"When your guy is putting up zeros, you can do more things," Johnson said. "It was all quality stuff. (Jeremy) Carr steals a base and Giambi comes through. Boom, we are up. Then, Enrique shuts them down."

The only Angel highlight at the plate was Jed Dalton's fifth home run of the year in the eighth inning. The bomb, which just missed the Marlboro Man over the left field fence, made the score 4-1. Up to that point, no other runner had reached third.

Having won eight of 12 makes the loss hurt a little less, but for Midland it would have been nice to get its first series sweep in recent memory and to extend its longest winning streak of the season to seven. Treating the largest crowd of the season (5,185) also couldn't have hurt. Seoane prefers to focus on the positive, and that is how his team is playing.

"We have to keep playing like we are playing," Seoane said. "We played well at home and won 5-of-6, and we played 12 times and won eight. Over our last 12 games, we played good baseball."

The reward for their efforts is momentum. The Angels are 11-7 in the second half and one game back of El Paso in the Texas League's Western Division.

However, all the momentum can go for naught in one game, one series and one 12-game, 13-day road trip if Seoane's group doesn't watch out. Don't think that the skipper and his boys don't know that. The Angels have not played Tulsa or Shreveport this season. So as familiar as the Angels were with Wichita when the Wranglers' bus left Christensen, the opposite will be said when the first pitch is thrown against their Eastern foes.

"You want to play .500 on the road, and going into Tulsa, we have to play good baseball," Seoane said. "We have no idea about the other teams, but you don't change a thing."

STREAK-BREAKING ANGELICS: What a year it has been for Anaheim's Jason Dickson. In 1996, he opened the season in Midland and one year later, the righthander is an American League All-Star. The rookie owns an 8-4 record with two complete games, one shutout and a 3.51 ERA.... After this upcoming road trip, the Angels will play 17 straight at home ... Today's starters are Midland's Fernando De La Cruz (1-0, 1.23) and Tulsa's Jim Brower (7-5, 3.78). The game starts at 7 p.m...

New York Knicks star center Patrick Ewing smiles as he speaks to reporters after signing a four-year contract with the Knicks Wednesday at Madison Square Garden in New York.

Ewing signs on dotted line to stay with Knicks 4 more years

By Mike Wise
N.Y. Times News Service

NEW YORK — After 12 years of success and strife, Patrick Ewing still saw the Knicks as his best hope for a National Basketball Association title. Conversely, they knew, down deep, that they would never be the same without him.

Ewing and the Knicks renewed their vows Wednesday night at Madison Square Garden, and it looks as though they will be together until retirement does them part. The 11-time All-Star center signed a four-year deal believed to worth $65 million.

The pact was signed in the arena's Theater area after round-the-clock negotiating since midnight Tuesday. It y makes Ewing the second-highest-paid center annually behind the Lakers' Shaquille O'Neal.

"We have some unfinished business we need to take care of," said Ewing, his 7-foot frame towering over a small lectern during a make-shift news conference. "I'm happy to be here in New York. I'm going to be here until the end of my career."

In order to create salary-cap room for themselves after the year 2000, the Knicks front-loaded the contract considerably. Ewing will most likely make $20 million his first season, $18 million the second season and split the remaining $27 million over the final two seasons. The annual average salary of $16.25 million puts him on a monetary plateau above Hakeem Olajuwon, Alonzo Mourning, David Robinson and Dikembe Mutombo.

Only O'Neal's $17.1 million annual salary tops Ewing's among centers. But, said David Falk, Ewing's attorney, that was not the goal. Neither acrimony nor posturing entered the pre-negotiation phase the past year. All along, the Knicks said they would do everything they could to keep their franchise center. And all along, Ewing said he wanted to remain in New York.

"His worth to the team is what he wanted," Falk said. "If you have to find out what a superstar is worth by going to another team, he doesn't belong with that team. In this day and age, it is very uncommon for two parties to work as well and as we have to get this done."

Ernie Grunfeld, the team president and general manager, and Dave Checketts, the Garden president, had key roles in the negotiating. But so, too, did Ewing, who attended every minute of every meeting and made his intentions known.

The deal was finally consummated at 4 a.m. Wednesday, an hour after Checketts made a call to Marc Lusgarten, the Garden's new chairman, to firm up conditions and terms.

Checketts added, "I don't think this is the last contract Patrick will sign with the Knicks."

Ewing, who turns 35 on Aug. 5, consistently dispelled the notion that his body and production are declining. The Knicks were 13-1 in games in which he scored 30 or more points last season. He gradually gained trust in his new teammates as the season wore on, to the point that he promptly passed out of almost every double-team near the end of a tight game.

In nine playoff games, Ewing averaged 22.6 points, 10.6 rebounds and 2.44 blocked shots. He shot .527 from the field and scored more than 30 points twice.

He missed only four games to injury during the regular season and finished eighth in the league in scoring, fifth in rebounding and sixth in blocked shots.

He led the Knicks to their fifth 50-victory season in the past six years and was selected an All-Star for the 11th time. Though he did not play in the game because of a strained left groin, Ewing took his place among the l 50 greatest players in NBA history during a halftime ceremony.

TENNIS: Hingis reaches semifinals

(From 1C)

On a cool day when the rain relented and the sun poked through at last, the two teen-age starlets of Centre Court, Anna Kournikova and Martina Hingis, scored impressive victories to reach the semifinals against each other.

Kournikova, an unseeded 16-year-old playing in her first Wimbledon, advanced 7-6 (7-1), 6-4 against French Open champion Iva Majoli.

The No. 1 Hingis, also 16, beat a childhood friend from the former Czechoslovakia, 18-year-old Denisa Chladkova, 6-3, 6-2, to reach the Wimbledon quarters for the first time in three tries.

Kournikova showed a deft touch with drops and volleys, plus plenty of power on returns and groundstrokes. That combination could someday make her a grass court champion in a league with Martina Navratilova and Steffi Graf if she continues to develop and stays free of injuries.

Comparing her to other players, Bollettieri boasted that "Kournikova is in a class of her own."

The effort of playing singles, doubles and mixed doubles wore down Kournikova on Wednesday. She received treatment for a sore hip while she and partner Elena Likhovtseva were losing their doubles match, and she had to pull out of mixed doubles.

But Kournikova pronounced herself fit for singles against Hingis, who is nursing a cold. Hingis beat her 6-1, 6-3 at the French Open last month, but Kournikova may have the stronger and more creative game that can produce wins on grass.

"I played very well in Paris, but here on this surface I think she feels much more confident," Hingis said. "For sure, it's a little different than in Paris. She has nothing to lose, and now she has beaten a couple of great players out there."

Opposing the winner of Kournikova-Hingis in the final will be a player who's been there before: Arantxa Sanchez Vicario, a finalist the past two years, or Jana Novotna, who came so close to winning in the 1993 final.

Sanchez Vicario beat Nathalie Tauziat 6-2, 7-5, and Novotna downed Yayuk Basuki 6-3, 6-3.

Sampras, forced to stop in the fading light Tuesday evening with a 6-4, 4-2 lead over Petr Korda, picked up where he left off by taking the second set easily. But Korda, a left-hander who has rejuvenated his game this year after working his way back from injuries, refused to go down gently.

Korda forced two tiebreaks, won them both, and celebrated with some of the fanciest footwork seen so far in the tournament when he leaped in a victory shuffle. Sampras merely shrugged and went back to work, breaking Korda in the first game of the fifth set and holding serve to the end.

"I could have been a lot easier on myself," Sampras said, referring to the way he played the tiebreakers to keep the match going. He led 5-1 in the second-set tiebreaker before letting Korda back into it by missing a couple of first serves.

"It just goes to show on grass anything's possible out there," Sampras said. "I mean, 5-1 in the breaker, I was looking forward to getting into the warm climate inside."

Instead, Sampras said he played "a little bit careless," found himself at 7-7, and hit a "tentative" second serve on set point for Korda.

"All of a sudden, he's back into the match," Sampras said. "It was in my hands and I let it slip away a little bit. But he still had some work to do if he was going to defeat me. I was going to continue to hold onto the serve and hopefully get a break."

The last thing Sampras needed was a long match the day before playing the No. 8 Becker, who completed his fourth-rounder before rain and darkness halted play Tuesday. Sampras has won 10 of his 17 matches against Becker, including the 1995 final and 1993 semis at Wimbledon.

Henman won his only match against Stich, on carpet at the Grand Slam Cup last year.

"It's not going to be easy," Henman said. "He announced his retirement (at the end of the year) and I think he's probably taken a big weight off his shoulders. He seems to be very, very relaxed, and grass is obviously a surface that suits his game. It will be another match similar to the Krajicek one."

Britain has another chance at claiming a champion if Henman is beaten. Greg Rusedski, the Canadian turned Brit, reached his first Grand Slam quarters Tuesday and will play France's Cedric Pioline. If Henman and Rusedski win, they will play each other in the semis and produce a British men's finalist for the first time since Bunny Austin in 1938.

The other quarters pits unseeded 19-year-old German Nicolas Kiefer, a Wimbledon newcomer, against Australian Todd Woodbridge.

ALL-STAR: Key, Olerud, Thome left out

him throughout a three-game series.

Torre had a tough task in selecting a reserve first baseman — so he chose two: Oakland's Mark McGwire, who leads the majors with 30 homers, and Chicago's Frank Thomas, the AL's leading hitter.

Left off was Cleveland's Jim Thome, second in the balloting to New York's Tino Martinez, and Boston's Mo Vaughn, who is on the disabled list.

"There were a bunch of them — O'Neill, (B.J.) Surhoff, Rusty Greer, Thome, Will Clark," Torre said of his biggest problem. "First base is impossible. I spent a lot of time on that today."

AL East leader Baltimore, with three starters already on the team, contributed pitchers Mike Mussina and Randy Myers.

Torre offered a roster spot to Baltimore's Jimmy Key, who announced prior to pitching the Yankees to the World Series title in Game 6 last year that he would be getting married this season. Key, who will be wed during the All-Star break, declined the roster spot.

Also putting five players on the team was Seattle, which has pitcher Randy Johnson and infielder Joey Cora in addition to elected starters Ken Griffey Jr., Edgar Martinez and Alex Rodriguez.

The other Yankees added to the AL roster were outfielder Bernie Williams and pitchers David Cone and Mariano Rivera. Filling out Torre's pitching staff were Cy Young Award winner Pat Hentgen and Toronto teammate Roger Clemens, Kansas City's Jose Rosado, Anaheim's Jason Dickson and Detroit's Justin Thompson.

Dickson and Boston infielder Nomar Garciaparra were the only rookies chosen. Also on the AL team for the first time were Cora, Rivera, Rosado, Thompson, Williams and Milwaukee infielder Jeff Cirillo.

Minnesota's lone representative is second baseman Chuck Knoblauch.

Joining Atlanta's pitching trio and starter Lofton were catchers Javy Lopez and infielders Chipper Jones and Jeff Blauser.

Both Houston — with first baseman Jeff Bagwell and second baseman Craig Biggio among fan selections — and San Francisco have three players on the NL team. Pitcher Darryl Kile was added from the Astros. Added from the Giants were pitchers Shawn Estes and Rod Beck and outfielder Barry Bonds.

Filling out the NL pitching staff were Pedro Martinez of Montreal, Kevin Brown of Florida, Bobby Jones of New York and Philadelphia's Curt Schilling.

New York's Todd Hundley gave the NL three catchers. The rest of the position players added by Cox were infielders Andres Galarraga of Colorado, Mark Grace of Chicago and Tony Womack of Pittsburgh, and outfielders Moises Alou of Florida and Ray Lankford of St. Louis.

Like Torre, Cox had a tough choice at first base, and he selected Galarraga and Grace. Among those omitted was New York's John Olerud.

"I tried not to think about it, so I wouldn't be disappointed," said Galarraga, who thought he had All-Star numbers the last two seasons but wasn't picked. "I know it's tough. That's why it's kind of more special because it's so tough to make it."

Estes, Jones, Schilling, Lopez, Womack and Lankford made the roster for the first time.

Voted in as starters earlier for the AL were catcher Ivan Rodriguez of Texas, first baseman Tino Martinez, second baseman Roberto Alomar of Baltimore, third baseman Cal Ripken of Baltimore, shortstop Rodriguez of Seattle, designated hitter Edgar Martinez and outfielders Griffey, David Justice of Cleveland and Brady Anderson of Baltimore.

Voted to start for the NL were catcher Mike Piazza of Los Angeles, Bagwell, Biggio, third baseman Ken Caminiti of San Diego, shortstop Barry Larkin of Cincinnati and outfielders Lofton, Larry Walker of Colorado and Tony Gwynn of San Diego.

This will be Ripken's 15th All-Star appearance and Gwynn's 13th.

Larkin, Lofton and Justice are injured. Larkin will miss the game, but Lofton and Justice might play.

Aside from the return of Belle and Lofton to Cleveland, Indians fans also will have a chance to greet honorary captains Frank Robinson and Larry Doby. Robinson in 1975 became the first black manager in the majors in Cleveland, where Doby became the first black AL player 50 years ago — just months after Jackie Robinson broke the racial barrier with the Brooklyn Dodgers.

WOODS: Western Open starts today

(From 1C)

One thing for sure: The fans will be intense at the Western Open.

The Motorola-sponsored $2 million tournament could draw crowds as high as 80,000 daily. That's almost solely because of Woods — whose popularity among old and young, white and black, rich and poor already is legendary.

Woods knows some fellow pros don't like playing with him because of the large galleries that follow him.

"But it's more difficult playing in the group ahead of me because people leapfrog. They like to go ahead and watch us hit shots on the greens or hit shots off the tee," he said. "The group ahead has to pay a pretty good price because the people are always moving."

He will be teeing off with Mark O'Meara and John Cook at 8:33 a.m. Thursday. Justin Leonard, Jeff Sluman and Davis Love III will precede Woods' group on the 7,073-yard, par-72 Dubsdread course.

Woods played the Western Open twice as an amateur, missing the cut in 1994 and finishing 57th the following year.

"It was my first (tour event) cut made in the U.S. And I shot a 69 the last round, my first round in the 60s," he said of the '95 Western. "I've had some pretty good experiences here, some real good positive memories."

TYSON: Boxer faces hearing next week

sanctions, Rolston said the scope of the hearing will enlarge dramatically.

"Its different in this case because Mr. Tyson has said he won't be resisting," Rolston said. "If that changes, we would have a full blown hearing with witnesses and everything else."

Ghanem said he wants to hear from Tyson himself, whose only comments so far came during a 4-minute and 16-second statement Monday in which he said he "just snapped" when he bit Holyfield twice during the third round of their heavyweight title fight Saturday night.

"It's good sometimes to say, 'Hey, I want to explain,'" Ghanem said. "We might have some questions for him. Right now we've only heard from a press conference and from what everyone else is saying."

A spokesman for Don King, meanwhile, said the normally talkative promoter would remain quiet until the hearing, which he would probably attend to show support for Tyson.

Mike Marley said King did not want to interfere with the commission's penalty process.

"Don's feeling is that it is in the hands of the commission and until that is resolved he won't be talking," Marley said.

Boxing officials, meanwhile, were looking for a place to hold next week's hearing, which is expected to draw hundreds of media and curiosity seekers.

At Tuesday's preliminary hearing, the Las Vegas City Hall chambers were nearly filled by the turnout.

Dallas Stars sign goalie Ed Belfour

By Michael Buteau
c.1997 Bloomberg News

DALLAS — The Dallas Stars signed free agent goaltender Ed Belfour to a three-year $10 million contract, making him the highest-paid player in team history.

Belfour, 32, a two-time Vezina Trophy winner, will replace 37-year-old veteran Andy Moog, who became a free agent yesterday after the team was unable to re-sign him.

The contract will pay Belfour $2.5 million this season, with a deferred bonus of $750,000. In 1998-99, he will be paid $3.25 million, followed by $3.5 million in 1999-2000.

"My main goal is to win the Stanley Cup and be a part of a team that is headed in that direction," Belfour said. "This team is very close and I'm excited to be a part of it."

A three-time All-Star, Belfour finished last season with the San Jose Sharks after being traded by the Chicago Blackhawks in January for goaltender Chris Terreri, defenseman Michal Sykora and forward Ulf Dahlen.

In San Jose, he won just three games and posted a 3.41 goals against average. For the season, he went 14-24-6 with a 2.89 GAA in 46 games. Belfour had spent more than eight seasons in Chicago before joining the Sharks. His career record is 204-147-56.

"Ed's reputation in the NHL is solidly based on consistency at a high level and success at all costs," said Dallas General Manager Bob Gainey.

Moog, who has the sixth-most wins in NHL history, posted a 28-13-5 record with a 2.15 GAA in 48 games with Dallas last season. His career record is 354-192-83.

"I'd like to thank Andy Moog for the great job he's done for the team the many, many years he's been here," said Stars Owner Tom Hicks. "We've offered Andy a job in our organization at a point in time when he decides to retire."

Nevada Senate gets tough with biting bill

■ Tyson's action prompts Nevada Senate to approve bill that would seize boxer's payout for biting fellow boxers in ring.

By Martha Bellisle
Associated Press Writer

CARSON CITY, Nev. — The Nevada Senate moved quickly Wednesday to approve a bill that would let the Nevada Athletic Commission seize all of a boxer's purse for biting opponents or other foul behavior.

The money would go to a fund for abused and neglected children.

Lawmakers said they were shocked by Mike Tyson's ear-biting attack on Evander Holyfield during Saturday's heavyweight title fight. Once they determined they had jurisdiction over the penalties, they endorsed harsh sanctions on boxers who behave in an unsportsmanlike manner.

Two of the 21 senators voted against the measure.

Sen. Bob Coffin, D-Las Vegas, said the bill hadn't been well thought out and several provisions could contain unforeseen problems. Coffin also wanted the funds to go to the fighter's families and to pay the medical bills of brain-damaged boxers.

Sen. Joe Neal, D-North Las Vegas, called the bill an attempt to punish the top boxers who are often black or Hispanic.

The measure provoked bitter debate on the Senate floor by many lawmakers who called the introduction of the bill "sound-bite legislation" and a publicity-seeking move.

But by the time the bill came up for a final vote, most of its opponents had reversed their positions.

Minority Leader Dina Titus, D-Las Vegas, said she changed her vote after talking with a friend who was a former chief of the athletic commission.

He told Titus the commission already had planned to approach lawmakers and request a toughening of the laws regarding inappropriate behavior in the ring because of the rise of such actions in recent years.

The commission was thrilled to see lawmakers move quickly when the issue gained international attention, she said.

If the bill passes in the closing days of the 1997 Legislature, it couldn't be applied retroactively to Tyson.

It would give the commission the authority to take the full purse if a boxer violates standards listed in official contracts signed by a boxer before a fight.

Those would include decisions by a referee or the commission that a fighter or manager entered into a contract in bad faith, agreed to throw a fight, didn't honestly compete, or committed "an act detrimental to the interest of boxing."

The change will bring Nevada's statutes into compliance with boxing contracts and will define for the commission the behavior deserving of a penalty.

Under current laws, the commission can withhold up to 10 percent of the purse or $250,000, whichever is greater, for violations of fight rules. In Tyson's case, that would amount to just under $3 million.

Texas, Astros squash interleague opponents

Associated Press

ARLINGTON — John Burkett doesn't have a 95 mph fastball or a wicked forkball. His game is all about pitching where he wants, when he wants and trying to outsmart hitters.

Burkett has struggled with that finesse style all year, but he had everything working Wednesday night as he limited the Colorado Rockies to four hits in the Texas Rangers' 9-1 victory.

"I had good rhythm," said Burkett (6-7), who struck out seven, walked one and didn't allow a runner past third after leadoff hitter Eric Young tripled and scored.

"For me, it's all about control. I probably only threw three or four all night over the middle. The rest were on the corners. That's how you want to do it."

Colorado came in as the best-hitting team in the National League, but the Rockies never had more than one hit in an inning and didn't get anyone past first base after the fourth. Larry Walker put his NL batting lead in jeopardy by going 0-for-4 for the second straight night, his first consecutive 0-fers this year.

NL RBI leader Andres Galarraga, who before the game was chosen as an All-Star reserve, also went 0-for-4.

Texas broke things open with a five-run fourth inning. Damon Buford had the big hit, a three-run double with the bases loaded off John Thomson (2-6). It was Buford's first hit in a week, ending an 0-for-21 drought.

The Rangers, who hadn't scored more than one run in 43 innings, added another run in the fifth and capped the night with a three-run eighth.

"It was only a matter of time," Texas manager Johnny Oates said. "We may not score as many as last year, but we'll score more than we have been."

Thomson had a chance to get out of the fourth without any runs when Dean Palmer's grounder with the bases loaded trickled under his glove, wasting a chance at a possible double play. The ball rolled to Young at second for an run-scoring fielder's choice.

Thomson then walked Mickey Tettleton to reload the bases and walked Domingo Cedeno to put Texas up 2-1 before Buford's double, which sailed over center fielder Quinton McCracken.

"He took a step in and by the time he recovered, the ball was over his head," Baylor said. "If he makes the right break there is a chance he makes the play."

Texas made it 6-1 in the fifth on a sacrifice fly by Juan Gonzalez. Palmer's RBI single and a two-run single by Mark McLemore padded the lead in the eighth.

Astros 6, Indians 2

HOUSTON — Mike Hampton won his fourth straight home game and hit a two-run triple in a five-run fifth inning, as the Houston Astros avoided a sweep with a 6-2 victory over the Cleveland Indians on Wednesday night.

The Indians' Sandy Alomar extended his hitting streak to 28 games, longest in the major leagues this season and the second longest for a catcher in major league history behind Benito Santiago's 34-game streak in 1987.

Alomar, who was named an All-Star reserve Wednesday, went 3-for-4 and is batting .426 with 15 RBIs in the streak.

Houston had three triples to tie a club record accomplished several times, the last against Chicago on May 16, 1981.

The Astros avoided being swept in the Astrodome in a three-game series for the first time since St. Louis swept them May 20-22, 1996.

Hampton (4-7) has struggled on the road this season, but now is 4-0 at home. He allowed 10 hits, struck out three and walked one.

Bill Spiers and Brad Ausmus each singled off Orel Hershiser (7-5) to start the Astros' big fifth inning. Hampton blasted a one-out hit through the infield that rolled to the left field wall to score Spiers and Ausmus.

Craig Biggio's single scored Hampton and Chuck Carr tripled to score Biggio. Carr scored the final run of the inning on Jeff Bagwell's grounder to shortstop Tony Fernandez, who threw home for an error.

Kevin Seitzer singled and Manny Ramirez doubled to start the sixth and Alomar's single scored both runners.

Hershiser allowed seven hits, six runs and struck out five and walked two.

Houston took the early lead when Biggio led off the game with a triple and scored on Luis Gonzalez's sacrifice fly.

Oakland Athletics' Mark McGwire follows his 30th home run of the season, a three run shot, off San Francisco Giants pitcher Kirk Rueter during the fifth inning of their game in San Francisco on Wednesday.

Braves 2, Yankees 0

NEW YORK — For Greg Maddux and the Atlanta Braves, victory over the New York Yankees came 8 1/2 months too late.

Maddux, the loser in Game 6 of the World Series at Yankee Stadium last season, dispatched New York with machine-like precision Wednesday, pitching a three-hitter in the Braves' 2-0 victory.

Atlanta lost four straight games to New York last October after taking a 2-0 Series lead. This time, the Yankees won the opener of the three-game interleague series before dropping two.

Maddux (11-3) walked none for the fifth straight start, went to three balls on just one batter and went to a two-ball count just twice.

The right-hander threw 23 balls among 88 pitches, faced just 28 batters and started 20 of them off with strikes. He struck out eight.

Dwight Gooden (3-1) allowed both runs and seven hits in seven innings.

Athletics 8, Giants 1

SAN FRANCISCO — Mark McGwire became the first player with 30 homers this season, hitting a three-run shot as Oakland beat San Francisco in the first regular-season game between the neighboring clubs.

Other than spring training exhibitions, it was the first game between the teams — their ballparks are about 30 miles apart by car, a lot closer by ferry — since the earthquake-interrupted 1989 World Series.

Scott Spiezio added a two-run homer as the A's scored six runs in the fifth. Scott Brosius and Patrick Lennon added RBI singles for Oakland and Tony Batista hit a solo homer.

Dane Johnson (2-0) pitched two scoreless innings of relief for the win. Buddy Groom pitched three hitless innings for his third save.

San Francisco starter Kirk Rueter (5-3) allowed five runs and nine hits in 4 1-3 innings.

Orioles 10, Phillies 6

BALTIMORE — Two rare events occurred Wednesday at Camden Yards — President Clinton showed up and Jeff Reboulet got an extra-base hit.

Reboulet snapped a tie with a three-run double in the seventh inning as the Orioles swept three from the Phillies.

Scott Rolen hit two homers and Ruben Amaro and Mike Leiberthal also homered for the Phillies, who have lost a season-high nine straight and 17 of 18.

Clinton, who addressed the sellout crowd in a pregame ceremony, left after the fourth inning with game tied 2-2.

With it 4-4 in the seventh, the Orioles loaded the bases with two outs against Jerry Spradlin (1-4). Reboulet, making his first start since June 18, hit a sinking liner that eluded diving center fielder Rob Butler. It was only the second extra-base hit of the season in 80 at-bats.

Jeffrey Hammonds hit a two-run homer in the eighth for a 10-6 lead.

Arthur Rhodes (5-2) got the win.

Reds 7, Brewers 4

CINCINNATI — Bret Boone emerged from the deepest slump of his career with a tie-breaking single as the Reds finished their first three-game sweep this season.

The second baseman was 0-for-26 — the longest slump of his career — and hitless since June 11 when he came to bat with the score 1-1, two out and runners on second and third in the fourth inning.

Ben McDonald (6-6) served up a two-run single to left, and Boone came around on Pokey Reese's double for a 4-1 lead.

Brett Tomko (5-1) won his fifth consecutive decision.

Tigers 9, Mets 7

DETROIT — Detroit hit three more home runs against New York, including Tony Clark's shot off the roof and completed a three-game sweep.

The Tigers hit 14 home runs in the three-game series, finishing two shy of the record for homers over three consecutive games. The Boston Red Sox hit 16 homers over three games in 1977. New York did not hit a homer in the series.

More Sports/8C

Damion Easley homered for the third straight game and Melvin Nieves also homered for the Tigers, who have won four straight interleague games after losing their first five.

Easley's solo homer in the fourth inning off Dave Mlicki (4-7) gave the Tigers a 3-1 lead.

Clark hit his 21st homer off Tiger Stadium's right-field roof in the seventh.

Detroit starter Willie Blair (5-4) allowed eight hits in six-plus innings.

Cubs 3, Royals 2

CHICAGO — Sammy Sosa's solo homer supported Kevin Foster as Chicago got its first sweep this season.

Sosa hit his 17th homer leading off the second and added an RBI groundout in the fifth for the Cubs, who improved to 6-3 in interleague play. Chicago has won five of six.

Foster (10-5) won for the seventh time in his last nine decisions despite strong southwest winds gusting to 28 mph and blowing out of Wrigley Field. He gave up seven hits in 6 1-3 innings. Mel Rojas got his seventh save.

Kevin Appier (6-6) took the loss, the fifth in a row for Kansas City.

Pirates 3, White Sox 1

PITTSBURGH — Jason Schmidt's five-hitter helped the Pirates finish off a sweep of suddenly slumping Chicago.

Dale Sveum, one of only two Pirates starters with much prior playing time against the White Sox, homered and drove in two runs as Pittsburgh completed its first three-game sweep of the season.

Frank Thomas and Albert Belle, named to the AL All-Star team earlier in the day, combined to go 1-for-8 and were 4-for-20 with six strikeouts and two RBIs in the series.

The White Sox, one of the majors' top offensive teams, had been shut out for 25 consecutive innings until Belle hit a two-out RBI double in the ninth.

Schmidt (4-4) struck out a season-high 10 in his third consecutive winning start.

White Sox starter Jaime Navarro (6-7) is 0-4 against Pittsburgh the last two seasons, including 0-3 with the Cubs last season.

Marlins 3, Red Sox 2

BOSTON — Felix Heredia struck out Reggie Jefferson with the bases loaded in the seventh inning to preserve Florida's win.

Kevin Brown (8-5) scattered seven hits in his first six innings. But with one out in the seventh, Arquimedez Pozo hit a line drive that left fielder Billy McMillon misplayed into a double.

One out later, shortstop Edgar Renteria fumbled Darren Bragg's grounder for an error, and John Valentin walked to load the bases. Heredia came on and fanned Jefferson on a 2-2 pitch in the dirt to end the threat.

Heredia has allowed just two of 21 inherited runners to score this season. Robb Nen pitched the ninth for his 24th save.

Tom Gordon (5-7) allowed five hits in the loss, leaving with one out and the bases loaded in the ninth.

Blue Jays 7, Expos 6, 13 innings

TORONTO — Joe Carter's two-out single in the 13th led Toronto over Montreal as the Blue Jays salvaged the final game in the first series between Canada's two major league teams.

Carlos Garcia hit a one-out single in the 13th off Anthony Telford (2-2) for his first four-hit game as a Blue Jay. Otis Nixon followed with a fielder's-choice groundout, erasing Garcia at second before Orlando Merced walked to chase Telford. Ugeuth Urbina relieved and Carter blooped a 3-2 pitch to center in front of a hard-charging Rondell White to score Nixon without a throw.

Carter added a three-run home run, his 115th career homer at SkyDome, to put the Blue Jays up 5-4 in the fifth. Midland's Mike Timlin (2-0) allowed one hit and struck out two in 3 1-3 innings to pick up the win.

Cordero needs OK from doctors before any trade is made; Johnson wants new contract

By Jimmy Golen
AP Sports Writer

BOSTON — Boston Red Sox outfielder Wilfredo Cordero met with counselors in New York on Wednesday night even as negotiations that would allow him to return to the team stalled.

Sources on both sides of the negotiations, speaking on the condition of anonymity, told The Associated Press that Red Sox CEO John Harrington initially balked at an agreement that would force the team to play or trade Cordero after the All-Star break, if doctors gave him the OK.

But talks progressed later Wednesday night, and one source said it appeared the deal finally would be put on paper and agreed to by Thursday.

Cordero, who has been charged with beating and threatening to kill his current wife, has been in exile since last Thursday, when the Red Sox learned that a previous wife had also accused him of physical abuse. The informal and indefinite "administrative leave" angered the players' association, which pressed for a resolution.

If no deal is reached by Thursday, the players' union is expected to ask for an immediate grievance hearing. Arbitrators have traditionally ruled against teams that attempted to discipline players with criminal cases pending.

Harrington was unavailable for comment, Red Sox spokesman Kevin Shea said. Shea confirmed only that the team was working on an arrangement that would provide Cordero with long-term counseling and allow him to resume his baseball career.

Shea said the team had no position on whether that career was likely to resume with the Red Sox or another team. Boston has placed Cordero on waivers in an attempt to gauge trade interest but found no takers; several teams have said they were not interested because of Cordero's history.

On Tuesday night, the union and the owners' Player Relations Committee agreed in principle to a settlement in which Cordero would meet with doctors chosen by both sides. If those sessions produce a consensus that he is fit to play, the Red Sox would have to reinstate the outfielder or trade him.

Cordero was arrested early on the morning of June 11 after a fight with his wife, Ana, that left her nose bloodied. When called to court later in the day, though, she refused to testify against him.

Prosecutors have said they will proceed with the case without her. Cordero pleaded innocent to charges of assault and battery, assault and battery with a dangerous weapon and threatening to commit a crime and was released on $1,000 bail pending a court date on July 24.

Johnson wonders about contract

SEATTLE — Randy Johnson is wondering aloud whether the Seattle Mariners want him back next season.

"The only thing that bothers me is that the Mariners seem to be waiting for me to fall apart," Johnson told The Seattle Times. "I don't see why they haven't renewed my option yet."

The AL pitcher of the month for June then said he was only joking. But it didn't sound like that.

Johnson, 33, is in the final season of a four-year, $20 million contract. The Mariners have an option for Johnson for next season for $6 million.

With an 11-2 record, a 2.18 ERA and 164 strikeouts, he appears to be the dominant pitcher he was in 1995 when he won the AL Cy Young Award. He underwent back surgery last Sept. 12.

He was named Wednesday to pitch in the All-Star game. In June, Johnson was 4-1 with an 0.92 ERA. He struck out 19 batters against Oakland, an AL record for a left-hander.

Keith Van Horn holds a New Jersey Nets shirt bearing his name as he poses with head coach John Calipari following a Nets' news conference at Continental Airlines Arena in East Rutherford, N.J., Wednesday.

Van Horn optimistic about playing for Nets

By Deepti Hajela
Associated Press Writer

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. — Ask Keith Van Horn what he thinks of himself after the New Jersey Nets used up a lot of salary cap space to sign him, and the second overall draft pick doesn't drop the modesty for a minute.

"I don't know, hopefully I'm pretty good," he said after a news conference Wednesday.

While Van Horn may be reluctant to toot his own horn, the team that fought to get him doesn't seem to have that problem.

"This was another big step for us, this trade and being able to acquire the rights to Keith Van Horn," Nets coach John Calipari said. "In all the workouts we had, he stood out head and shoulders above everybody else."

Originally drafted by the Philadelphia 76ers and not hiding his reluctance to play for them, Van Horn came to the Nets through a multiplayer trade.

In the deal, the Nets got Van Horn, a forward from Utah, and three veterans, center Michael Cage, swingman Lucious Harris and forward Don MacLean. The Sixers received Villanova forward Tim Thomas (the seventh pick), Bradley guard Anthony Parker (21st pick overall) and two veterans, swingman Jimmy Jackson and center Eric Montross.

By picking up the veterans, who have between two and six years left on their contracts, the Nets have lost room in their salary cap and in effect, kept themselves from being able to spend major cash in next year's free agent market.

Calipari said the Nets tried to get some of those prospects this year, making hundreds of calls to see if the players they wanted could be gotten a year earlier, with no success.

Then, when Van Horn came out to work out for them, they were impressed with his athleticism and work ethic as well as his shooting ability.

The 6-foot-10 Van Horn gives the Nets a big forward who can shoot. He led Utah in scoring in each of his four years, averaging 22 points last season.

"I'm like, 'Who is this guy? This is crazy,'" Calipari said. "I didn't realize he had this much range."

Team officials also praised Van Horn's maturity. The California native decided to go through four years of school rather than come out early for the draft. He is married and the father of two children, 2-year-old Sabrina and 5-week-old Nicholas.

But the Nets were quick to emphasize they don't expect Van Horn to turn the organization around single-handedly.

"We looked at him as another piece of the puzzle," Calipari said. "We're not looking at Keith Van Horn as our savior. We're looking at him, as we build this team, as a player who adds great versatility."

Van Horn said he was looking forward to the challenge of playing in New Jersey.

"This is a place that I think I will fit into," he said. "I'm excited about being here. I think with the way this organization is heading, it's a place I want to be for a long time."

Van Horn said he liked the Nets' work ethic, and didn't feel pressured about his ability to help the team.

"I'm going into this with a lot of confidence," he said.

Prices gain

NEW YORK — Crude oil rose for a fourth straight trading day Wednesday as traders who bet prices would fall had to admit failure and become buyers to square their "short" positions.

Crude for August delivery settled at $20.34 per barrel, up 22 cents, on the New York Mercantile Exchange. On Tuesday, crude notched its first settlement above $20 a barrel since June 5.

Driving the buying was continued optimism on the supply front out of the Middle East. Pleasing the market was the recent promise of OPEC ministers to rein in overproduction as well as the continued failure of Iraq to reach an agreement to sell oil under the second phase of a United Nations-sponsored oil-for-food deal.

"As we understand it right now, Iraq is still not pumping oil because they're still not happy with the humanitarian aid package," said Peter Beutel, an oil analyst at Cameron Hanover Inc. "They're out of the market until we're told otherwise."

Further, Beutel said, a decision late last week by the Organization of the Petroleum Exporting Countries to crack down on nations violating its production ceiling has given the market a bullish tone.

Rising crude prices, as a result, have caused traders betting on price declines with "short" sales to cover their bets by purchasing crude.

Natural gas fell, with contracts for delivery in August down 4.3 cents to $2.067 for each 1,000 cubic feet.

Dollar stronger

NEW YORK — The dollar fell to a six-month low against the pound but ended mostly stronger in other foreign-exchange dealings Wednesday, indirectly pulled higher by a powerful rally in the British currency.

The dollar reached an intraday high of 1.7550 marks before settling in New York at 1.7536 marks, up from 1.7467 Tuesday.

The dollar cost 114.49 yen, down from 114.88 yen. The pound cost $1.6731, up from $1.6581 and the highest level since Jan. 16.

Other dollar rates in New York, compared with Tuesday: 1.4700 Swiss francs, up from 1.4653; 5.9040 French francs, up from 5.8845; 1,705.00 Italian lire, up from 1,700.50; 1.3774 Canadian dollars, down from 1.3790.

Dow jumps

NEW YORK — First there was hesitation, but the blinking contest ended quickly Wednesday as investors bid the stock market to record territory after the Federal Reserve left interest rates unchanged.

The Dow Jones industrial average rose 73.05 to 7,795.38, slightly more than a point shy of June 20's record finish of 7,796.51.

Broader stocks measures broke past their previous highs, with the Standard & Poor's 500 list closing above the 900-mark for the first time.

Advancing issues outnumbered decliners by nearly a 2-to-1 margin on the New York Stock Exchange, where volume was heavy again at 526.80 million shares.

The Standard & Poor's 500-stock list rose 13.00 to 904.03. Also setting new highs were the NYSE composite index, up 5.70 to 471.71; and the Nasdaq composite, up 17.36 to 1,455.61.

Texas homeowners face higher insurance rates

■ A number of Texas homeowners could see up to double-digit increases on insurance policy costs.

Associated Press

AUSTIN — Many Texas homeowners could face up to double-digit increases to the cost of their insurance policies.

Texas Insurance Commissioner Elton Bomer on Wednesday heard arguments from insurer and consumer groups on the setting of residential property benchmark rates. Regulated insurance companies, covering about one-third of Texas' residential property, set their rates from 30 percent above to 30 percent below the benchmark rate set in each of the state's 23 rating territories.

Unregulated companies cover the majority of Texas homes.

Regulated rates within the territories vary widely, based on insurance companies' policies, the location of the insured properties and other factors. The Insurance Department encourages Texans to shop around.

Two state administrative judges have urged Bomer to approve an overall 13.5 percent increase to the statewide average benchmark rate. That includes a 14.8 percent increase to the benchmark for homeowners' policies and no change to the renters' benchmark.

Rick Gentry, regional vice president of the Texas Insurance Organization, a trade group, said the increase is overdue.

"It's unfortunate our recent loss experience — the majority of which is weather-related — has put upward pressure on rates," Gentry said, adding that the average statewide benchmark rate has not been increased for several years.

TIO had sought a 14.3 percent overall increase to the rate.

Insurance payments for damages caused by recent flooding and tornadoes in Central Texas were not considered in the annual rate hearing case and were expected to be a factor in next year's recommendations.

Public Insurance Counsel Rod Bordelon said future weather patterns and insurance payments for property damages are hard to predict and shouldn't be based solely on previous experience.

"You can't just blindly input that data," Bordelon said.

The Office of Public Insurance Counsel, which recommended an overall 4 percent increase to residential property insurance benchmarks, is a state office that argues insurance issues on behalf of customers.

Potential rate changes caused by a new system meant to more accurately consider communities' access to fire protection also were not factored into the recommendations.

The new system takes effect when Bomer puts new benchmark rates into effect, probably next year. In some areas, the change could result in dramatic rate decreases. Other areas could see large increases.

Bordelon said the wide changes should be tempered by phasing them in.

Bomer said he would consider how to deal with the new fire protection system before announcing his decision on rates.

Dow soars as Fed leaves rates steady

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The Federal Reserve gave American borrowers a vacation from higher interest rates, opting Wednesday to wait and see if the economy's best inflation performance since the 1960s lasts deeper into the summer.

After a two-day meeting of its Federal Open Market Committee, the central bank signaled that it had left the benchmark federal funds rate on overnight loans between banks at 5.5 percent.

The decision had been widely expected and at first Wall Street showed little reaction. But the Dow Jones average of industrial stocks staged a late advance and came within about a point of breaking its June 20 record close. It finished the day at 7,795.38, up 73.05 points.

An increase in the benchmark rate would have quickly translated into higher borrowing costs for millions of businesses and consumers on everything from auto loans to credit cards. And that eventually would have slowed economic growth.

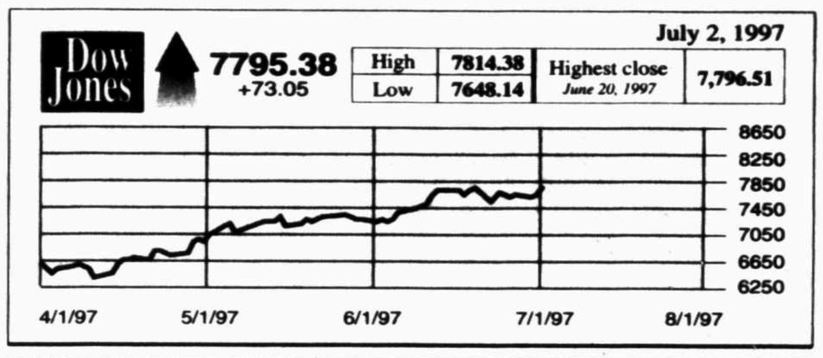
But Fed policy-makers apparently decided growth has slackened sufficiently on its own from a first-quarter surge at a 5.9 percent annual rate, fastest in nearly a decade. Most economists are looking for moderate, 2 percent growth in the April-June period.

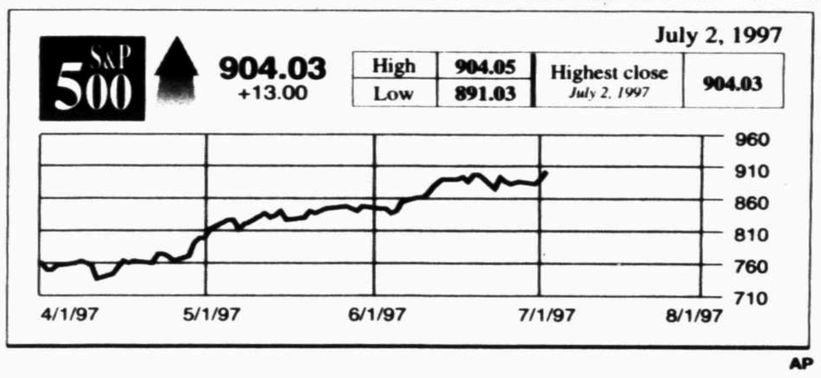
Signs of a slowdown abound, including a Commerce Department report Wednesday that factory orders fell 0.7 percent in May, the second decline in three months.

The backlog of unfilled orders at factories was unchanged following decreases in April and March. That shows manufacturers were keeping up with the flow of new orders and that there is little danger for now of inflation-causing delivery delays and shortages.

"The easing in growth we've seen came just in the nick of time. If there was any evidence the economy was growing markedly greater than 2 percent, on top of the first quarter, I don't see how they could have failed to raise rates," said economist Paul Getman of Regional Financial Associates in West Chester, Pa.

The question before policy-makers at their Aug. 19 and Sept. 30 meetings will be whether growth bounces back in the second half of the year to the point where prices start accelerating.





AP

So far this year, inflation has been decelerating. Consumer prices have risen at just a 1.4 percent annual rate, less than half last year's. That's the best performance in three decades and has astonished economists who believed it could not coexist with an unemployment rate at a 24-year-low of 4.8 percent in May.

Refineries rush to meet July 4 demand

■ U.S. refineries are working at their highest levels in a quarter century.

N.Y. Times News Service

Houston — With July Fourth approaching, U.S. refineries are working at their highest level in a quarter century, producing record levels of gasoline.

The production boost comes as a healthy economy and lower gasoline prices are encouraging Americans to hit the road for holiday travel. The American Automobile Association expects 35.9 million Americans to travel more than 100 miles from home over the July 4th holiday, the highest number since 1988. A huge majority will go by car.

One of these is Alan Hammer, 40, of Long Island, New York, owner of a medical supplies company. He is planning to drive a group of friends on a two-hour trip to the Catskills Mountains resort area for Independence Day.

"Without my car, I'm dead. My car is my life," Hammer said as he filled up at a Gulf station on U.S. 1 near Princeton, New Jersey.

The holiday travel plans of millions like Hammer come on top of a general increase in driving and the increased use of trucks instead of rail for freight. A study by the Motor & Equipment Manufacturers Association showed Americans are driving 56 percent more miles per year than they did two decades ago.

Travel this summer, according to an AAA survey, will also be boosted by lower gasoline prices. The AAA said the average price of self-serve regular unleaded gasoline at $1.25 per gallon is 5.3 cents lower than this time last year. Midgrade and premium gasoline prices also are lower than last summer, the AAA said.

Over the past 20 years, the price of gasoline, adjusted for inflation, has fallen 21 percent, the Motor & Equipment Manufacturers' study showed.

"It's a simple case of demand," said William Brown, president of W.H. Brown & Co., an oil markets consultant. "People are driving more."

Refineries, which had a heavy schedule of maintenance in the spring, operated at 97.6 percent of capacity in June, the highest rate in at least 25 years, according to the American Petroleum Institute. It is more than the record of 96.4 percent set in May, which bested the previous record of 96.4 percent from Augus 1994.

"The economy is strong and the demand for gasoline has increased to the point that there is an economic incentive for refiners to run at those levels," said Roger Hemminghaus, chief executive of Ultramar Diamond Shamrock Corp., which owns four refineries and 4,300 retail gasoline outlets.

Gasoline production for the week ending June 20 set a record at 8.25 million barrels. Gasoline demand reached a six-month high two weeks ago of 8.75 million barrels a day, and is expected to grow 1.5 percent for the year.

Such figures should improve the financial health of refiners, who have seen profits quashed in recent years by slim profit margins and required spending to produce less-polluting fuels and reduce air emissions.

Refiners have had to pay less recently to buy the crude oil they turn into fuel and other products. Oil prices on the New York Mercantile Exchange averaged $19.94 a barrel in the second quarter, down 7.8 percent from a year ago. And higher utilization allows refiners to operate at a lower fixed cost per barrel. Ravi Kamath, a Jefferies & Co. analyst, said refining profit margins so far in 1997 are 20 percent higher than a year ago.

Yet the improvement in profit margins is eaten away in some instances by competition with imported refined products and gasoline price wars.

"So far, the increased utilization doesn't really increase profitability that much," said Hemminghaus of Ultramar Diamond Shamrock. "Profitability will only be helped if the margins increase. Margins are better than they were this time last year . but not really significantly better."

Refinery utilization historically declines in the fall and early spring when companies perform required equipment maintenance. Utilization soared after the end of an unusually heavy period of refinery outages for maintenance this winter and spring.

Most observers expect utilization to remain high as demand continues to grow and profits fall far short of levels needed to justify new refinery construction. Imports of refined products also are expected to rise to fill the gap between demand and U.S. production.

The American Automobile Association expects 35.9 million Americans to travel more than 100 miles from home over the July 4th holiday weekend, the highest number since 1988.

SBC sues to challenge telecom law

Associated Press

SAN ANTONIO — SBC Communications Inc. sued in federal court Wednesday, contending that part of the 1996 federal Telecommunications Act is unconstitutional because it discriminates against SBC and other "Baby Bell" operating companies.

The federal lawsuit filed in Wichita Falls follows thwarted attempts by SBC to enter the long distance business in Oklahoma, a state served by its subsidiary Southwestern Bell Telephone Co.

"The suit challenges only that portion of the (Telecommunications) Act which singles out and excludes SBC from competing in certain lines of business," said Lonny Morrison, an attorney representing the San Antonio-based company.

SBC is not challenging parts of the law that require local phone companies to open their local networks to competition, Morrison said.

The lawsuit names the Federal Communications Commission and the United States as defendants. It marks the first time the 1996 law has been challenged in court on constitutional grounds, Morrison said.

SBC contends the law is unfair because it identifies SBC and other Baby Bells by name, rather than establishing classes or categories, and bars them from long distance and other businesses that other local phone companies can enter, such as electronic publishing or electronic alarm monitoring.

INVESTOR'S GUIDE

Starting a business takes financial preparation

By Eric Tyson

Q: For a number of years, I've dreamed of running my own company. While I've been successful in my career, I don't much care for my boss, and I would like to have more control over putting my ideas to work.

How do I turn my dream into reality? I have a business plan but am petrified of giving up my paycheck and benefits and leaping into an unknown financial world.

Tyson

A: I commend you not only for your goal but also for your caution in approaching it.

Many budding entrepreneurs ignore the personal-finance side of planning a small business. Such an oversight can derail a new business before it even has a chance to get going. But if you plan ahead for the personal-finance changes that come with quitting a job and striking out on your own, then you should be able to cut the paycheck umbilical cord without being petrified.

Here's my short list of personal-financial steps to take before launching your own small business:

■ Prepare for the income change. In all probability, your net income will drop at first. So before you quit your paycheck job, estimate how much income your business will provide you. To get a realistic estimate, talk with small-business owners in your field.

If you're starting your business in the same field as the job you're leaving behind, assume that it will take at least three years to re-create your salary.

■ Create a budget that reflects your decreased expected income. You probably should re-evaluate the necessities and luxuries in your life.

■ Start following your new lean and mean budget as soon as possible, well before you quit your job and plunge into your business. The immediate reduction in spending allows you to boost your savings rate, giving you more money to sink into your business or into your emergency fund.

■ Consider cutting back to part-time paycheck work while you work on your business the rest of the time. Such an arrangement often makes it easier both financially and psychologically to shift gears.

■ Get smart about benefits. Before quitting your job, take stock of your needs for all types of insurance. It's a lot easier to line up insurance policies while your income stream is still steady. You don't want to leave yourself or your dependents out in the cold.

On the health insurance front, if you are quitting a job where there are more than 19 employees, then you probably are allowed, under a plan called "Cobra," to continue coverage under your ex-employer's health plan for 18 months after you quit.

One option is to convert your existing coverage under your employer's group plan into an individual policy. Don't do that until you have done a fair amount of shopping among other health plans.

When choosing an individual health policy, keep costs down by taking as high a deductible as you can.

Before leaving your current job, line up an individual disability insurance policy. Otherwise, you typically would need to show at least six months of self-employment income.

If you're leaving a job that covered your dental and vision care expenses, don't waste your money purchasing such policies if you are self-employed. Ultimately, dental and vision plans cover small out-of-pocket expenditures that aren't worth the insurance.

Don't despair about losing access to your employer's retirement savings program, such as a 401(k) plan. Once your business turns a profit, you can establish a self-employed retirement plan that allows you to sock away a hefty chunk of your net income, up to 20 percent in some cases.

The Market in Review

Market Summary

How To Read The Market in Review

Here are the 1,675 most active stocks on the New York Stock Exchange, 925 most active on the Nasdaq National Market and 405 most active on the American Stock Exchange. Stocks in bold are worth at least $5 and changed 5 percent or more in price. Underlining for 50 most active on NYSE and Nasdaq and 25 most active on Amex. Tables show name, price and net change, and one to two additional fields rotated through the week, as follows:

Name: Stocks appear alphabetically by the company's full name (not its abbreviation). Names consisting of initials appear at the beginning of each letter's list.
Last: Price stock was trading at when exchange closed for the day.
Chg: Loss or gain for the day. No change indicated by ...
Tkr: The stock's ticker symbol.
How to use: The ticker symbol can help you get information about a company. Two important uses: Most services that provide stock quotes over the phone require the ticker symbol. Second, stock brokers and analysts can recognize stocks more easily with a ticker symbol.

Generally, ticker symbols resemble the company name although some – BUD for Anheuser Busch Cos. and FON for Sprint Corp. – are more related to what a company does. Tickers on the New York and Amex usually don't exceed three letters. On Nasdaq, they go up to five letters.

The names you see in this paper are abbreviations of the company name supplied by The Associated Press. Companies can help determine what their abbreviation will be. Overall, AP tries to use an abbreviation that will most closely match the full company name.

American Greene sprints past world's best at Swiss meet

By Erica Bulman
Associated Press Writer

LAUSANNE, Switzerland — Under a steady rain and facing the toughest field this year, American Maurice Greene beat the world's best sprinters and won the 100 meters at the Athletissima Grand Prix meet Wednesday.

Olympic champion Donovan Bailey, two-time Olympic silver medal-winner Frankie Fredericks of Namibia and Olympic bronze medalist Ato Bolton of Trinidad were among those beaten by Greene, who matched his best clocking of 9.90.

Greene, who won the recent U.S. championships in the same time to claim his first major title and become the third fastest American ever, registered the second best time of the season.

Winner of this meet last year, Fredericks settled for second, crossing only .01 of second behind the 22-year-old American.

Bailey, who holds the world record of 9.84 and hinted that he might attempt to beat that time, finished third.

In the women's 100, Americans ran 1-2 with two-time Olympic champion Gail Devers winning in 10.89 and Marion Jones second in 10.90.

It was a sweet victory for the 30-year-old Devers, who was forced to pull out of the U.S. trials due to a leg injury, leaving Jones, touted as the next great American track star, to run off with the American title and a spot in the World Championships in Athens next month.

It was the first time Devers and Jones, who also won the women's long jump, met this season.

"I'm pleased with my performance," said Devers, the 1993 world champion. "It was cold and raining and it was difficult to get warmed up."

U.S. veteran Butch Reynolds took advantage of the absence of double world champion Michael Johnson, who returned to the United States after losing his first 400 race in eight years, and Olympic silver medalist Roger Black of Britain, to win the 400 meters.

"I'm starting to get back to my running form," Reynolds said. "I'm making progress and I'm really pleased I ran a good race."

Reynolds, whose 43.29 world record in the 400 has held since 1988, won in 44.08. The 33-year-old was followed by Britain's Iwan Thomas in 44.46 and American Tyree Washington in 44.64.

After finishing second to Russia's Natalya Voronova by 1-100th of a second in the women's 200, double Olympic champion Marie-Josee Perec of France pulled out of the World Championships.

Disappointed with her time of 22.76, Perec said she didn't think she would be able to regain top form in time for Athens.

"It's finished, that's the way it is," said the 29-year-old Perec, who added that she would race again in the first Grand Prix meet after the worlds in Zurich.

Other winners included American Suzy Hamilton in the women's mile; Nigerian Falilat Ogunkoya in the women's 400; Kenyan-born Wilson Kipketer, who now runs for Denmark, won the men's 800 in a meet-record 1:42.61; American Bryan Bronson won the men's 400 hurdles; and Olympic champion Ludmila Engquist of Sweden won the women's 100 hurdles.

Pegram sent to San Diego for future pick

PITTSBURGH (AP) — The Pittsburgh Steelers traded running back Erric Pegram to San Diego Wednesday for a seventh-round draft choice in 1998, freeing up money to sign some of their top rookie picks.

■ NFL News

Pegram, who has 3,303 rushing yards in six years with Atlanta and Pittsburgh, becomes the sixth tailback on San Diego's roster heading into training camp.

Pegram's departure leaves the Steelers without a proven backup to Jerome Bettis, who just signed a four-year, $14.4 million contract. Either rookie George Jones or second-year back Jon Witman could fill Pegram's slot, although neither catches passes as well as Pegram.

General manager Bobby Beathard said the deal adds quality to a group that includes Gary Brown and Terrell Fletcher.

"Another one makes it the best competitive situation we've had at the position for a long time," Beathard said.

Before the trade, the Steelers were $500,000 beneath their salary cap, not nearly enough to sign the six draft picks who do not have contracts. Beathard said it was strange to see Pittsburgh caught up in a salary cap problem.

"When the thing came up and they called, we thought, here's a guy who's pretty darn good and wanted a chance to compete as a starter. They told him that Bettis was going to be the starter, but we could work him in. We jumped at the opportunity," Beathard said.

Pegram had 17 kickoff returns for 419 yards last season, including a 91-yard touchdown. He missed the last game of the season and two playoff games with a strained calf.

It's believed that the Chargers renegotiated Pegram's base salary from $725,000 to about $300,000.

Pegram gained 1,185 yards on 292 carries for the Falcons in 1993.

"He always gave us trouble when he played against us," Beathard said. "He's a very talented runner."

Since the season ended, the Steelers have lost eight free agents, including cornerback Rod Woodson, linebacker Chad Brown, cornerback Willie Williams, defensive end Ray Seals and wide receivers Ernie Mills and Andre Hastings.

Bills re-sign LB Mark Maddox

ORCHARD PARK, N.Y. — The Buffalo Bills have re-signed veteran linebacker Mark Maddox, who lost his starting job last season and was released three weeks ago in a cost-cutting move.

Maddox, 29, enters his seventh season with Buffalo, which selected him in the ninth round of the 1991 draft. Terms of his agreement were not released

He had signed a three-year contract with Buffalo before last season that paid him nearly $1 million annually.

Maddox was a starter for 14 games last season and had a career-high 110 tackles but was largely ineffective toward the end of the year. Backup Damien Covington took over the final two games of the regular season and a playoff loss to Jacksonville.

Maddox became a starter in 1993. He missed 11 games and the playoffs of the 1995 season with a torn anterior cruciate ligament in his right knee.

Teams installing cameras to find unruly fans

By Scott Newman
c.1997 Bloomberg News

LANDOVER, Md. — The Chicago Bulls and the Washington Redskins have a message for unruly fans.

Somebody's watching you.

The Bulls and Redskins are among at least 20 professional sports franchises who have installed state-of-the-art surveillance cameras in their stadiums to find fans who instigate fights or throw objects from the stands, said Clark Mleynek, an architect with HOK Sport, an architectural firm that designs sports stadiums.

While the system costs around $100,000, it's an expense teams are incurring because sports executives and players are becoming more concerned about safety at sporting events after several incidents where athletes have been pelted by snowballs, coins, and other projectiles during games, stadium officials said.

"There's a need today, unfortunately, for more and more security," said Jim Dalrymple, executive director of the Washington Sports Commission, which runs Robert F. Kennedy Memorial Stadium. "Things seem to have gotten more out of control."

The cameras can scan the crowd, zoom in on a fan bothering a neighbor, and with the help of a computer overlay can tell security exactly where the patron is seated, said Fred Curdts, senior vice president of Signal Perfection Ltd., the company that installs the system.

The Redskins have installed the cameras in their new home, Jack Kent Cooke Stadium in Landover, Maryland, where they will play next season's games.

Two cameras on top of the stadium at either end of the 50-yard line can zero in on any seat in the stadium, Curdts said. The placement allows police officers to get a clear upper body and face shot from across the field.

Unlike some other franchises, though, the Redskins have a history of well-behaved fans. Over the past six years, only one person has been arrested inside Robert F. Kennedy Stadium at a Redskins' game, and that was for running on the field, Dalrymple said.

Giants Stadium in East Rutherford, New Jersey, home of the New York Giants and Jets, averages about six arrests a game, said the New Jersey Sports and Exposition Authority, which operates the stadium. Pro Player Stadium in Miami averages about six arrests a game when the Miami Dolphins play, the team said. Ericsson Stadium in Charlotte, North Carolina, home of the Carolina Panthers, averages two arrests a game, the team said.

Mleynek said teams that have installed a system similar to one at Jack Kent Cooke Stadium include the Philadelphia Flyers and 76ers at their arena, the CoreStates Center; the Boston Celtics and the Boston Bruins at their home, the Fleet Center; the Colorado Rockies at Coors Field and the Baltimore Orioles at Camden Yards.

Curdts said teams tell him they need better security because of incidents like these:

The Los Angeles Dodgers forfeited a baseball game in August last year to the St. Louis Cardinals after hundreds of fans in the crowd of 53,361 threw complimentary baseballs onto the field. Teams twice had to retreat to their dugouts to avoid being pelted.

Snowballs thrown by fans marred a college football game in November between Penn State and Michigan State at State College, Pennsylvania. When Nittany Lions Coach Joe Paterno appealed to the crowd to stop, some fans defiantly threw more snow onto the field.

Seattle Mariners manager Lou Piniella pulled his team off the field during Game 2 of the American League divisional playoffs in 1995. He said his outfielders were being hit with batteries, coins, and other objects at Yankee Stadium.

Fifteen people were arrested and 175 were ejected after several snowballs were thrown by fans at players during a Dec. 23, 1995 game between the New York Giants and the San Diego Chargers.

Although the Giants had a security camera installed for the World Cup held in 1994, a team spokesman said they're making better use of the system since the snowball incident embarrassed the franchise on national television. The Giants responded by revoking season-ticket privileges for some fans who were ejected.

"We know how to operate it a lot better now," said Giants spokesman Peter John-Baptiste.

It's a good thing, because the cameras are a great deterrent to fans who break the law — once they knew they're being watched, Dalrymple said.

"If people know this is out there," he said. "They're going to think twice."

Airlines halve infant fares

N.Y. Times Service

American Airlines said Wednesday that it would permanently offer a 50 percent discount on fares for children under 2 years old, a move that was quickly matched by many airlines, including United, Delta, Northwest and Continental.

The discount, which is only for flights within North America, offers a new choice for parents who regularly grapple with the decision of whether to pay a full extra fare for a seat for their babies. Many parents do not buy a ticket and hope that empty seats are available on their flight. If not, they have to hold the babies in their laps.

A Federal Aviation Administration regulation allows this for children under 2, though some safety experts have questioned the wisdom of the rule. In February, for example, a commission on aviation safety led by Vice President Al Gore recommended eliminating the waiver that allows infants to fly without being restrained in their own seat.

But the aviation agency has determined that requiring parents to buy a seat for every child might make air travel too expensive for many families, and that they would instead travel by automobile, which statistically would make them be more likely to be injured or die in a car crash.

The FAA, which started an advertising campaign last December to encourage parents to restrain their children in a safety seat, said it "applauds American Airlines' move to enhance aviation safety for young travelers."

Parents must supply their own infant safety seat. Most car seats for babies are approved by the government for use in cars and airplanes.

According to a 1995 report to Congress by the aviation agency, nine infants died in plane crashes on U.S. airlines from 1978 to 1994. In that period, four infants suffered major injuries in plane accidents and another eight suffered minor injuries.

Like many other airlines, American often reserves the seat next to a parent who does not buy a ticket for their infant. But on heavily booked flights, those seats are not guaranteed.

Airlines have for some time offered a variety of discount fares for children on international flights.

Airlines generally use sophisticated computer software to gauge whether a new fare is likely to generate revenue, or possibly lose money by displacing passengers paying full prices.

Ford changed sentence in JFK shooting report

WASHINGTON (AP) — Thirty-three years ago, Gerald R. Ford took pen in hand and changed — ever so slightly — the Warren Commission's key sentence on the place where a bullet entered John F. Kennedy's body when he was killed in Dallas.

The effect of Ford's change was to strengthen the commission's conclusion that a single bullet passed through Kennedy and severely wounded Texas Gov. John Connally — a crucial element in its finding that Lee Harvey Oswald was the sole gunman.

A small change, said Ford on Wednesday when it came to light, one intended to clarify meaning, not alter history.

"My changes had nothing to do with a conspiracy theory," he said in a telephone interview from Beaver Creek, Colo. "My changes were only an attempt to be more precise."

But still, his editing was seized upon by members of the conspiracy community, which rejects the commission's conclusion that Oswald acted alone.

"This is the most significant lie in the whole Warren Commission report," said Robert D. Morningstar, a computer systems specialist in New York City who said he has studied the assassination since it occurred and written an Internet book about it.

The effect of Ford's editing, Morningstar said, was to suggest that a bullet struck Kennedy in the neck, "raising the wound two or three inches. without that alteration, they could never have hoodwinked the public as to the true number of assassins."

If the bullet had hit Kennedy in the back, it could not have struck Connally in the way the commission said it did, he said.

The Warren Commission concluded in 1964 that a single bullet — fired by a "discontented" Oswald — passed through Kennedy's body and wounded his fellow motorcade passenger, Connally, and that a second, fatal bullet, fired from the same place, tore through Kennedy's head.

The assassination of the president occurred Nov. 22, 1963, in Dallas; Oswald was arrested that day but was shot and killed two days later as he was being transferred from the city jail to the county jail.

'My changes had nothing to do with a conspiracy theory. My changes were only an attempt to be more precise.'

— Gerald Ford

Conspiracy theorists reject the idea that a single bullet could have hit both Kennedy and Connally and done such damage. Thus they argue that a second gunman must have been involved.

Ford's changes tend to support the single-bullet theory by making a specific point that the bullet entered Kennedy's body "at the back of his neck" rather than in his uppermost back, as the commission staff originally wrote.

Ford's handwritten notes were contained in 40,000 pages of records kept by J. Lee Rankin, chief counsel of the Warren Commission.

They were made public Wednesday by the Assassination Record Review Board, an agency created by Congress to amass all relevant evidence in the case. The documents will be available to the public in the National Archives.

The staff of the commission had written: "A bullet had entered his back at a point slightly above the shoulder and to the right of the spine."

Ford suggested changing that to read: "A bullet had entered the back of his neck at a point slightly to the right of the spine."

The final report said: "A bullet had entered the base of the back of his neck slightly to the right of the spine."

Ford, then House Republican leader and later elevated to the presidency with the 1974 resignation of Richard Nixon, is the sole surviving member of the seven-member commission chaired by Chief Justice Earl Warren.

In the interview, he recalled making the change, but said that clarity, not conspiracy, was the purpose.

He said he supposed the commission's overriding conclusion — that Oswald acted alone — would always be challenged, but "I think our judgments have stood the test of time."

James Lesar, a lawyer who runs the Assassination Archive Research Center, the largest non-governmental collection of materials on the assassination, said that both Ford's description and the commission staff's were in conflict with the Kennedy death certificate "which said the bullet entered in the upper back region, well below the neck."

But lawyer Gerald Posner, author of "Case Closed," a 1993 book that accepts the Warren conclusions, said the death certificate was based on erroneous drawings by the doctors who autopsied Kennedy.

"Only Warren saw the autopsy pictures and X-rays," Posner said. "He deemed them so horrendous he did not pass them around, even to other members of the commission. Those photos show the autopsy doctors got it wrong. The entry was in the high upper neck, higher than where the doctors mark it on their drawings, which the death certificate was based on."

The pictures are in the possession of the National Archives but have not been made public. However, some who have seen copies say they do not conclusively settle the argument about the bullet's entry point.

Couple on trial accused of striking newly adopted girls

NEW YORK (NYT) — Testimony began Wednesday in family court in Queens in the custody trial of an Arizona couple who are accused of beating their newly adopted children on a flight from Moscow to New York City last May.

A detective and a caseworker for the city testified that the parents had told them they had struck the children, but said they were disciplining them after the children had become hysterical during the 10-hour flight on May 28.

Before the trial began, lawyers for the parents, Richard and Karen Thorne, tried to reach a deal with city officials that would have let them return to Arizona with the children. There, the family would have been supervised by social workers and the Thornes would have attended parenting classes.

Cheryl Solomon, a lawyer for the Thornes, said, "They will jump through as many flaming hoops as they have to jump through" to be reunited with the children.

The two 4-year-old girls have been in foster care since the plane landed at Kennedy International Airport and the Thornes were arrested and charged with assault, harassment and endangering the welfare of the children. The Thornes face a separate criminal trial on the charges. The parents were released on bail and have visited the children four times under supervision.

But after six hours of negotiations between officials from the city's Administration for Children's Services and lawyers for the Thornes, no deal was reached.

Earlier last month, the city had made its own offer to the Thornes, saying it would grant them custody and parole in exchange for a plea of guilty to reduced charges. But the Thornes' lawyers rejected the offer, maintaining that the Thornes had done nothing wrong.

The city intends to call eight witnesses at the custody hearing, including the pilot of the Delta plane and a flight attendant, who have said the Thornes were abusive to the children, officials said.

Defense lawyers say that three other passengers on the plane have come forward in defense of the Thornes, and that a fourth passenger signed an affidavit that the Thornes had done their best with an out-of-control situation.

Testifying for the city Wednesday were John Trotter, the Port Authority detective who arrested the Thornes, and a caseworker for the Administration for Children's Services who has interviewed a number of people involved in the incident.

The caseworker testified that the girls apparently began the trip calmly. Then after another passenger spoke to them in Russian and then walked away, the girls began to cry.

The caseworker added that Mrs. Thorne told her that the girls were jumping up and down in their seats and "smacking" her in the face. "She said she was frustrated and embarrassed," the caseworker said. "She tried to comfort the child, but it didn't work."

Both Trotter and the caseworker, whose identity is being withheld at the request of the court, said that the Thornes had told them that they did strike the children. "He said he disciplined them because they had pulled Mrs. Thorne's hair and were misbehaving, but that he didn't do anything wrong," Trotter said of Thorne.

Trotter said Mrs. Thorne "said yes, she had hit the child, but it was discipline and it wasn't anything out of the ordinary."

Trotter said that an unspecified number of passengers on the plane willingly missed their connecting flights out of Kennedy because they wanted to make sure the Thornes were arrested. "They were adamant in remaining," he said.

The court is to reconvene July 14 to hear more testimony.

Richard and Karen Thorne leave Queens Family Court Wednesday in the Queens borough of New York. The Phoenix, Arizona couple were seeking to regain custody of their two adopted Russian four-year-old girls who were removed to foster care last month after the Thornes were accused of hitting them during a flight from Moscow to New York.

FTC, state securities regulators plan campaign to crack down on 90s-style investment fraud

WASHINGTON (AP) — In a high-tech age, investment scam artists are getting more sophisticated — and creative — at stealing people's money, regulators say.

Struggling to keep up, the regulators announced a campaign Wednesday to stop telemarketing schemes involving Internet "shopping malls," movie production and snail-ranching — as well as old standbys such as pyramid schemes.

Consumers lose an estimated $40 billion each year to telemarketing fraud of all kinds, the group of federal and state regulators say.

The glossy brochures touting partnerships in cybershopping networks looked legitimate to Paul and Eloise Wood, an elderly couple living near Akron, Ohio, who sank $15,000 into the scheme.

He is nearly deaf and she is legally blind, and they needed help from people involved in the scam to fill out the paperwork, according to David Kidd, a family friend who went to authorities on the couple's behalf.

The telephone solicitors who called the Woods beginning in December 1995 were "very cordial and convincing," Kidd told a news conference.

Paul Wood had had a stroke earlier that year and he "wasn't thinking straight" when he got the call, his wife said in a telephone interview.

"He was just so caught up in this wonderful presentation they made," the retired teacher said.

No telephone listing could be found Wednesday for the company, World Net Development Group Inc., which authorities said had been located in Santa Monica, Calif.

In another alleged scam captured in undercover tape recordings, a phone solicitor promised returns of 57,000 percent.

The law enforcement effort, led by the Federal Trade Commission and securities regulators from 21 states and two Canadian provinces, has been under way for six months. It involves 61 separate cases, some of which likely will be referred for criminal prosecution, officials said.

Mark Griffin, president of the North American Securities Administrators Association, had this advice for consumers if they get calls promoting similar deals: "Keep one hand on your wallet and hang up the phone."

Some examples of what Griffin called "a contemptible array of investment scams" — most offered through unsolicited phone calls: allegedly worthless oil and gas drilling in Kentucky; digital fingerprint technology in Indiana; ostrich-farming in Idaho; snail-ranching in Nebraska; retirement investments for the clergy in Maryland; interests in frozen embryos from an Ohio cow named Missy Cool; and $25,000 "commercial promissory notes" to build medical clinics in Hungary, a water treatment plant in Congo and roads in Bosnia.

"These frauds have become epidemic," said Teresa Schwartz, deputy director of the FTC's Bureau of Consumer Protection. "They are increasing in number and type. ... All these schemes are alike in one very important way: The only ones to profit are the scam artists."

In the nine civil cases filed in federal court by her agency, investors may have lost more than $150 million, Ms. Schwartz said. Violations of the agency's telemarketing sales rule — which prohibits misrepresenting the risk, potential profit or other important aspect of investments — carry penalties of as much as $11,000 each.

Examples of the alleged fraudulent schemes:

■ A company promised returns of up to 600 percent a year on investments in a partnership that was said to be ready to unveil a "virtual shopping mall" on the Internet for live, online shopping. The FTC alleged that investors were left with essentially worthless stock certificates after most of their money was squandered by the defendants.

■ A film production company offered small investors a stake in family films produced by what it said was an award-winning producer and director. The producer, Lyman Dayton, is bona fide, but the FTC alleged that neither he nor his films have won many of the awards claimed and have made substantially smaller profits for investors than the 500 percent advertised.

John Iavarone, president of High Voltage Pictures Inc. in Las Vegas, one of the companies in the case, issued a statement he said had been approved by the FTC-appointed receiver for the companies. "We are cooperating as much as we can with the people who are involved in this investigation," Iavarone said, adding he expected there would be findings "that will exonerate us."

■ EZ-Score, a company that said it produces a basketball training machine used by athletes, has defrauded investors, according to the Massachusetts Securities Division. One investor from Waltham, Mass., is said to have lost $6,000. No phone listing could be found for the company, located in Westerly, R.I., and a message left at another location for its president, Richard Chipperfield, wasn't returned.

The states and Canadian provinces that have brought cases are Alabama, Arizona, Arkansas, California, Idaho, Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Kentucky, Maine, Maryland, Massachusetts, Mississippi, Missouri, Montana, Ohio, Pennsylvania, South Carolina, Virginia, Washington, Wisconsin, British Columbia and Quebec.

Consumers are asked to call the FTC's Consumer Response Center at 202-326-3128 to report suspected fraud.

Future NATO invites for Romania, Slovenia likely

WASHINGTON (AP) — Still squabbling with allies, the White House offered assurances Wednesday that it expects Romania and Slovenia eventually to be invited to join NATO — but not at next week's summit in Madrid.

"The answer is not 'no', but 'no at this time,'" said Sandy Berger, President Clinton's national security adviser. "The question is not whether, but when."

The administration's unwavering stand against immediate invitations to Slovenia and Romania guarantees a last-minute fight Tuesday when Clinton joins the leaders of 15 other NATO nations in Madrid to formally offer NATO positions to new members.

There is consensus among the allies to bring Poland, Hungary and the Czech Republic into the alliance, and Clinton wants to hold the line there.

France wants to include Romania, and Italy wants to include Slovenia to give NATO a southern anchor in areas where Europe faces its biggest security risks.

Nine of NATO's 16 members have expressed varying support for admitting the two southern states. The United States has lobbied hard to limit membership just now, arguing that Romania and Slovenia do not yet meet the alliance's standards.

While the administration had hoped to reach consensus before the summit, Berger told a White House briefing, "I think there's a divided view." He predicted a "lively discussion" Tuesday, adding, "At the end of the day, I think it's fair to say that there will be a consensus on the three."

NATO membership brings countries under the alliance's extraordinary security blanket, guaranteeing an attack against any nation will be regarded as an attack against all.

While Berger spoke of eventual membership for Romania and Slovenia, Defense Secretary William Cohen indicated that the next round of invitations would wait at least until a NATO summit in 1999. "That would be one point at which, presumably, this would be reviewed," Cohen said.

Senate Majority Leader Trent Lott, R-Miss., met Wednesday with NATO Secretary General Javier Solana in Brussels, Belgium, saying afterwards that the discussion included "the importance of keeping the door to NATO open after Madrid."

But he also said there is concern that the alliance's new partnership with Russia "could lead to a weakening of NATO." He called the prospects of the Senate ratifying NATO's expansion good but added, "we should recognize that the opponents of NATO enlargement are organized and are making their case."

Clinton and his wife, Hillary, leave Washington late Friday, after the Fourth of July fireworks, and fly to Spain for a weekend vacation on the resort island of Mallorca. They will arrive in Madrid on Monday.

From the summit, Clinton will fly to Warsaw on July 10 to congratulate Poland on its invitation.

Judge: Military policy violates gays' equal protection rights

NEW YORK (AP) — Responding to a challenge by a higher court, a federal judge ruled Wednesday that the military's "don't ask, don't tell" policy violates gays' rights to equal participation in national defense.

A military "called on to fight for the principles of equality and free speech embodied in the United States Constitution should embrace those principals in its own ranks," U.S. District Judge Eugene Nickerson wrote.

Spokesmen at the Pentagon and White House said it was too soon to comment on whether there would be an appeal. But the issue is widely expected to be decided eventually by the Supreme Court. Several cases around the nation are challenging the Clinton administration's 1993 compromise.

Nickerson was forced by an appeals court panel to review the 1995 ruling in which he became the first federal judge to strike down the policy.

He concluded in his follow-up opinion that it discriminates against gays by violating both their First Amendment free speech right and Fifth Amendment equality protections.

The judge found that for the policy "to single out gay and lesbian members denies them, without legitimate reason, the right to openly participate as equals in the defense of the nation."

The American Civil Liberties Union and the Lambda Legal Defense and Education Fund, which brought a lawsuit on behalf of two active duty and four reservist plaintiffs, said the decision, if upheld, would eliminate a cruel set of double standards applied to gay and lesbian troops.

Nickerson has "said there should be one set of rules for everyone, straight or gay," said Matt Coles of the ACLU's National Lesbian and Gay Rights Project.

Under the "don't ask, don't tell, don't pursue" policy, gays can serve as long as they keep their sexual orientation to themselves and do not engage in homosexual acts. Otherwise, they can be honorably discharged. In addition, commanders may not ask a service member his or her sexual orientation.

Nickerson, a liberal judge nominated to the bench by President Carter in 1977, said in his original decision that the policy violates free-speech rights because it bars service members from saying "I am gay."

Last year, a three-judge panel of the 2nd U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals said the lower court failed to address the section of the policy banning homosexual acts. The issue of free speech was "incidental and wholly subservient to the restriction on acts," the appeals court said.

Nickerson responded by arguing the policy not only infringes on free speech, but also on equal treatment under the due process clause of the Fifth Amendment by subjecting only gay and lesbian troops to a separate, discriminatory set of regulations.

'Holy Ghost bartender' serves up revivalism, sacred laughter

By JIM JONES
Fort Worth Star-Telegram

FORT WORTH, Texas — A woman laughed uncontrollably. A man leaped from a front pew of the church and began spasmodically jerking, his arms flying up and down.

"In the name of Jesus, let it bubble up. Let it bubble up out of your belly," said Rodney Howard-Browne, 36, a burly, long-haired evangelist from South Africa as he stood at the lectern of Calvary Cathedral near downtown Fort Worth last week.

Howard-Browne, who calls himself "the Holy Ghost bartender," was dispensing quick shots of the spirit-filled revivalism that is sweeping the land from Toronto, Canada, to Pensacola, Fla. Often the revivals are marked by "holy laughter," or people falling backward as they are "slain in the spirit."

The Pentecostal-style revivals have received attention in national newsmagazines and on network television are going on in the United States, Australia, Europe, Africa and Asia.

Some discount the spirit-filled revivals as overblown emotionalism and refer to the "holy laughter" as nothing more than religious hokum.

But many Christians see the protracted revival meetings marked by unusual signs of the spirit as a new "Great Awakening" similar to two far-reaching spiritual revivals that swept America in the 1700s and the 1800s.

"I may offend you, but I'm here to serve up the new wine of the Holy Spirit," Howard-Browne told some 2,000 people at Calvary Cathedral, where he preached to near-capacity crowds during a four-night revival. "Some of you have been drinking vinegar so long you look like a pickle."

His one-liner brought new pockets of staccato laughter from around the church auditorium. Others sat quietly or applauded and yelled "Amen" and "Hallelujah" during the worship service that lasted more than three hours.

The Rev. Bob Nichols, who as pastor of Calvary Cathedral invited Howard-Browne, says he believes that the revival movement and holy laughter are "mostly good."

After the laughter died away at 11 p.m., some 200 people of different races and income levels came to the front of the church for prayer with the evangelist.

"The bottom line is that people are being changed," Nichols said.

Busloads of pilgrims are flocking to a revival at the Brownsville Assembly of God in Pensacola, Fla., that has been going on since June 1995. Its emphasis is not on "holy laughter," but people cry, dance, sing and fall to the floor as they are "slain in the spirit." Its leaders say that thousands of lives have been changed and that miraculous healings have occurred.

Before Pensacola, the major destination for those seeking spirit-filled blessings was the Toronto Airport Vineyard Church, where many labeled the experience of holy laughter "the Toronto Blessing."

Closer to home, a 17-week spirit-filled revival recently occurred at Calvary Temple in Irving, Texas, where the Rev. Don George is pastor. Evangelist Marcus Lamb, also president of Dallas TV station KMPX/Channel 29, preached at the revival.

"We did not have a lot of the holy laughter, but there was some," Lamb said. "But many were slain in the spirit and there were many healings reported. We had prostitutes, a male stripper and a topless dancer come to know Christ."

Lamb said that the British Broadcasting Corp. filmed the Irving revival and is sending crews to a continuation of the revival at Christ for the Nations auditorium in Dallas in August.

Nichols said his Fort Worth church has been in a state of revival since Howard-Browne first preached a series of meetings there in 1993 that went on for six weeks.

Critics of the revival wave include Hank Hanegraff, president of the Christian Research Institute in California and author of "Counterfeit Revival," released recently by Word Publishing.

"People are looking for God in all the wrong places," Hanegraff said in a telephone interview last week. "They look for shortcuts to spirituality and are being worked into altered states of consciousness where they jump up and down and laugh hysterically."

"What is really happening is psychological manipulation through the use of peer pressure and the power of suggestion," Hanegraff said.

Hanegraff, in his 315-page book, criticizes evangelists Howard-Browne, Benny Hinn, John Arnott and several others for their tactics and labels the so-called new Great Awakening the "Great Apostasy."

While pastors and parishioners are traveling to "power centers" such as Toronto, Canada, and Pensacola, Fla., looking for a quick fix, the solution is found in the fundamentals, he wrote. "While multitudes clamor for a massive revival, what the body of Christ desperately needs is a mighty reformation."

During the meeting recently at Calvary Cathedral, many in the congregation did not respond at first but began warming to the occasion as Howard-Browne kept on preaching until about 11 p.m.

A young woman left her seat and began running and leaping around the sanctuary. About 20 others followed her as the congregation applauded. A man in his late 20s who had been joining the others running through the church leaned on a back wall to rest, breathing heavily and still engaged in unbridled laughter.

"Run only one way," Howard-Browne advised. Then he broke into a frenzy of laughter, left the lectern and ran up the center aisle of the church, laughing all the way.

Hanegraff contends that such outbursts are orchestrated by the atmosphere produced by the charismatic revivalists.

"Immoderate laughter is contagious; so is yawning," Hanegraff said. "What these evangelists do is ask people to suspend their critical thinking process. They say that God offends the mind to reveal the heart."

Hanegraff said the new revivalism focuses too much on "feel-good" religion.

"Christianity is not about self-aggrandizement," he said. "It's about self-sacrifice. All kinds of people are turning on to Jesus Christ, but few are willing to march by his creed and help others."

Emotional religious expression is not new, Hanegraff says in his book. He notes that in the 1740s, laughter broke out during revival meetings conducted by John Wesley, and he attributed it to Satan.

During what was called the Second Great Awakening in the early 1800s, there were many instances of falling, jerking, barking like dogs and holy laughter, he writes.
