Sarah's story

Local fourth-grader battles leukemia, but is just a 'normal kid'

The elementary school desk and chair between Katie Hardaway and Rednisha Mitchell stood empty from October to April.

As Jerita Harper's fourth-grade class mapped out the settings of books they read on a world map, hung their best work on the bulletin board in the back of the room and crammed for the Texas Assessment of Academic Skills test, Sarah McClaine's desk sat like a quiet sentinel, keeping vigil for the little girl who never came to class.

The idea to move the desk out of its row of three never occurred to Mrs. Harper. Granted, that would have freed up some space in her not-too-messy but not-too-neat room, but she never gave up on the hope that Sarah would return to her desk in Room 400 at Bonham Elementary.

Sarah, a spunky 9-year-old who has been called the smartest girl in her class, was fighting to keep her head above water in the raging river of acute lymphoblastic leukemia, known to families of leukemia patients as "the good kind" of childhood leukemia.

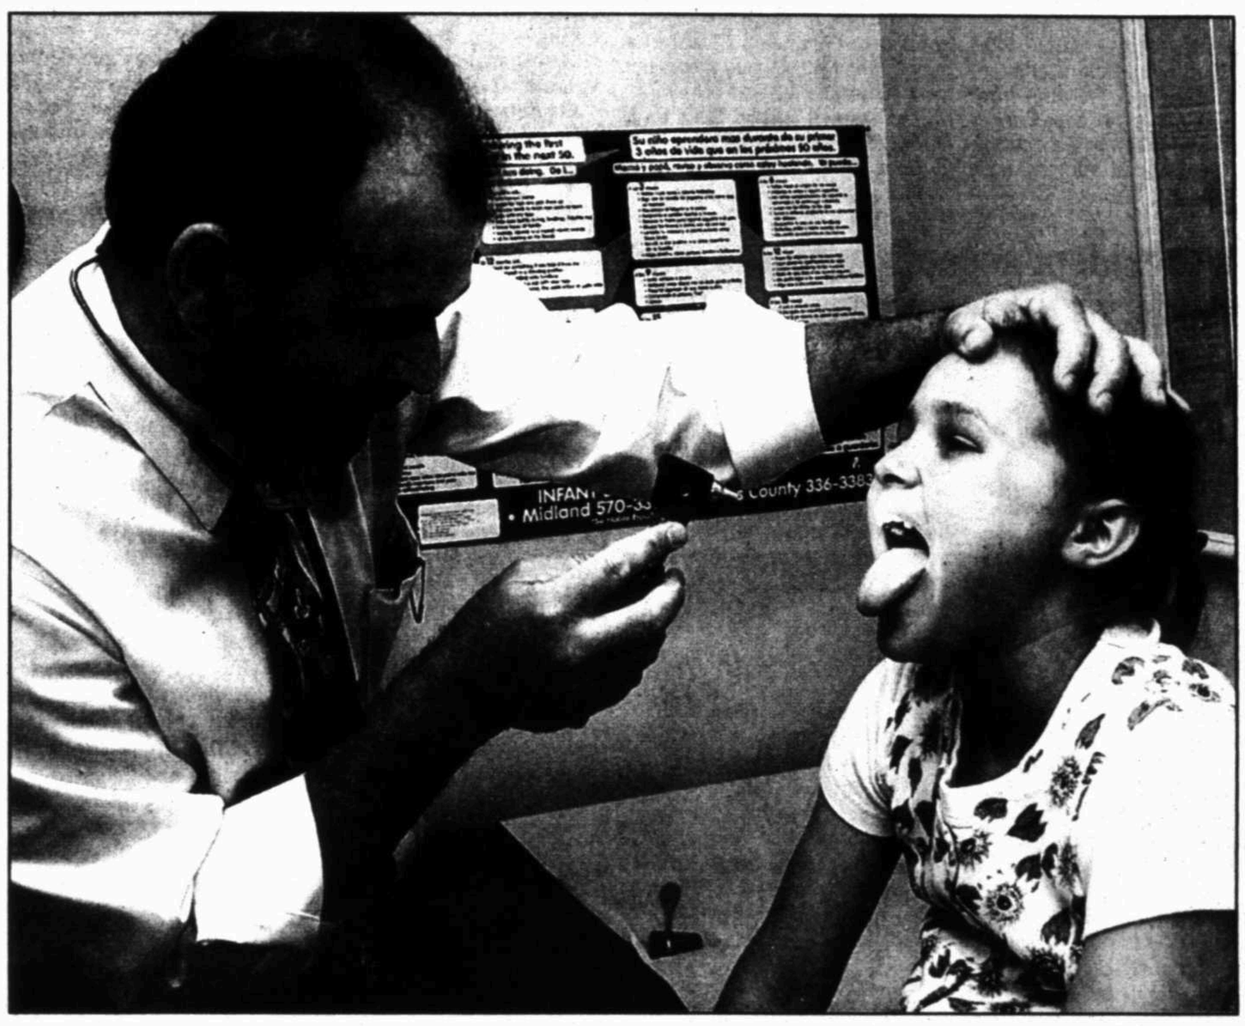

The good kind of leukemia has given Sarah and the rest of the McClaine family a different kind of year.

It has been the kind of year in which people the McClaines didn't know prayed for them.

It has been the kind of year in which they have relied on the kindness of friends and family to help them care for their three sons while Sarah spent weeks in the hospital in Fort Worth.

And it has been the kind of year that has made Sarah more than strong.

Facts about leukemia

- Leukemia is a cancer of the blood in which an overabundance of immature white blood cells crowd out healthy red and white blood cells and platelets.
- About 2,500 children are diagnosed with childhood leukemia each year in the U.S.
- Acute lymphocytic leukemia (ALL) accounts for 75 percent of childhood leukemia cases.
- Acute myeloid leukemia (AML) accounts for 15 percent of childhood leukemia cases.
- Chronic forms of leukemia account for the remainder of childhood leukemia cases.
- ALL has a 70 percent cure rate for patients receiving optimal treatment.
- 75 to 80 percent of AML patients achieve complete remission. Of those patients, 40 to 50 percent are cured.
- Chemotherapy is the most common form of treatment for childhood leukemia. Some patients, especially AML or chronic leukemia patients, undergo bone marrow transplants.

Knowledge of disease helps young patients

'Caring for the Child with Cancer," "Childhood Leukemia" and "Leukemia and You," are the titles of some of the guides and handbooks Elizabeth and Brian McClaine were given when their 9-year-old daughter, Sarah, was diagnosed with leukemia.

In the past nine months, they have learned as much as they can of a disease about which little is known. While doctors have discovered some of the answers to the whos and whats of leukemia, they still search for the answer to the question: why?

The word leukemia means "white blood," according to "Childhood Leukemia," written by Nancy Keene, the parent of a childhood leukemia patient. Leukemia is a type of cancer in which immature white blood cells, known as blasts, multiply at such a rate that they crowd out healthy white blood cells, red blood cells and platelets.

The malignant blasts refuse to die like normal cells and cannot fight infection the way healthy white blood cells do. As a result, children with leukemia become extremely susceptible to serious infection. They can also develop anemia, causing them to lose their energy, and they bruise and bleed easily because of the reduction of platelets.

"They kind of started telling me what was going on, and they put it in different stories," Sarah said about how her doctors described leukemia to her. "There are these armies,

Team Diabetes runners are in race to combat disease

By Ed Todd
Staff Writer

Rather than conjuring up excuses just because she is diabetic, Lori Lanier figured that she would take on the trials of running a marathon.

"It's just a challenge — something I've never done and decided to see if I could do it," said Ms. Lanier, a 42-year-old Midland real estate broker who is on the American Diabetes Association's Team Diabetes to run the 26.2-mile Kona Marathon on June 25 in Hawaii.

The goal is to heighten awareness of diabetes and the benefits of a healthy lifestyle in staving off the debilitating effects of the disease and, not incidentally, to raise research money for the ADA.

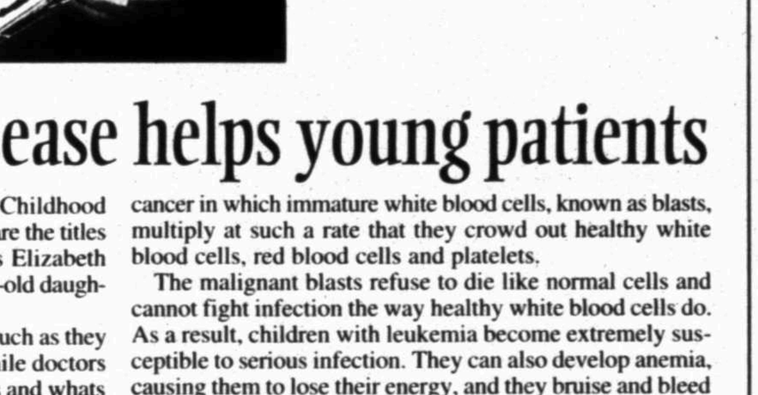

Coping with her diabetes has "made me more happy," Ms. Lanier said. "I take care of myself and work harder at being healthy."

She is among eight Midlanders and their Odessa trainer, Janet Oates, who each are raising at least $3,500 in doing their part to combat the disease and to run in the Kona Marathon.

Eighty percent of the funds will go toward diabetes research, according to Midlander Vicki Ali, Team Diabetes booster.

Negotiations begin for release of Philippine hostages

TALIPAO, Philippines (AP) — Sitting barefoot in a circle on the floor of a mosque, government negotiators and Muslim rebel leaders held their first talks Saturday on the freedom of 21 hostages who have been held in a Philippine jungle for more than a month.

They did not discuss the immediate release of any of the hostages, including a German woman suffering from high blood pressure, said chief government negotiator Robert Aventajado.

Aventajado quickly rejected two of the Abu Sayyaf rebels' main demands — an independent Islamic state and a commission to investigate the treatment of Filipinos in neighboring Malaysia. Nevertheless, the rebels were "very reasonable and I am optimistic that an agreement would be reached pretty soon," he said.

The hostages — three Germans, two French, two Finns, two South Africans, a Lebanese, nine Malaysians and two Filipinos — were snatched from the Malaysian resort of Sipadan on April 23 and taken by boat to the Philippine island of Jolo, about an hour away.

After an hour of talks, negotiators visited the rebels' mountain jungle camp and reassured the hostages that they were "doing everything" to resolve the crisis with the Abu Sayyaf, the smaller and more radical of two guerrilla groups fighting for an Islamic state in the impoverished southern Philippines, home to the mostly Catholic nation's Muslim minority.

"Just hang on," Aventajado told the hostages. "Don't do anything foolish."

Captive Risto Vahanen from Finland said, "The spirit is really high and we hope to be released in a few days."

But Vahanen said the group has been "really disappointed" by the slow pace of the talks.

"We just want to be out, all of us," said Marie Moarbes, a hostage from Lebanon.

Frenchman Stephane Loisy then gave Aventajado a gift of a hair clip made by the hostages out of a coconut shell.

The start of formal talks took a long time because of skirmishes between the rebels and troops, changes in the government negotiating team, and the need for security arrangements on the volatile island.

On Saturday, both sides agreed to keep the military about five miles away from the venue in Bandang village in the town of Talipao.

The rebels guarded a one-mile stretch of the road leading to the mosque. They stopped a long convoy of vehicles, including three vans packed with dozens of journalists, and allowed only a few to pass, including the bulletproof car used by the government negotiators.

Four of the five known leaders of the Abu Sayyaf and all five government negotiators embraced and kissed each other on the cheeks before sitting down for talks.

Galib Andang, the most prominent of the rebel leaders, rested an M-16 rifle with a grenade launcher on his lap.

Outside, heavily armed rebels peered through the windows to listen to negotiations.

Aventajado said an independent Islamic state "is something we cannot even discuss with you because if we discuss it, an impeachment proceeding can proceed because we are allowing the country to be dismembered."

The negotiators also discussed rebel demands that foreign fishing vessels be banned from nearby seas and a commission be established to look into the plight of Filipinos living in the east Malaysian state of Sabah near the southern Philippines.

Aventajado doused hopes for the commission. He said the Malaysian ambassador told him "it's something they could not possibly do because no government would allow itself to be investigated."

Andang told The Associated Press that he and the other rebel leaders will meet to prepare a formal response.

The rebels have informally expressed interest in development projects such as schools and health centers for their province of Sulu, a group of islands that includes Jolo, as a more realistic alternative. They also informally sought as much as $2 million.

There was no immediate word on when the talks will resume.

Fiji's president accepts two of rebels' demands: new government, immunity

SUVA, Fiji (AP) — Fiji's president signaled Saturday that he was accepting two main demands of rebels holding the prime minister and about 30 others hostage: a new government and immunity from prosecution.

President Ratu Sir Kamisese Mara said he has fired the democratically elected government of Prime Minister Mahendra Chaudhry, who has been held captive by an armed gang for 10 days inside the parliament compound.

The announcement came several hours after two soldiers and a journalist were injured in a gun battle outside parliament between rebels and Fijian soldiers. The president said the timing was unrelated.

Mara, a figurehead who normally holds little government power, said he would appoint a caretaker administration by Monday, and would continue to rule the Pacific nation until then through state-of-emergency powers.

The president also said it was "highly likely" that rebel leader George Speight and the six gunmen who stormed parliament on May 19 would be granted immunity from prosecution for their roles in the coup attempt.

But Mara did not accept the rebels' third demand — that he resign as president.

Speight did not immediately respond to Mara's actions.

Mara acknowledged it would look like he was caving in, but said that he had no choice and that his plan was the last hope for a "constitutionally viable route" to end the crisis.

He admitted that if the plan is accepted, Fiji would become an international pariah. Main trading partner Australia as well as New Zealand, the United States and the United Nations have condemned any deal that replaces the elected government as giving in to terrorism.

The foreign nations have threatened to impose economic and diplomatic sanctions. Mara warned that Fiji's main industries of sugarcane growing and tourism would collapse under sanctions.

"We are going to face not only purgatory, but hell," Mara said.

Chaudhry, who was elected prime minister last year, is the country's first leader of Indian ancestry.

Speight claims to be acting on behalf of the majority indigenous Fijians, and wants to reduce the powers that Indians can have in the government. He has declared himself prime minister and appointed his own cabinet.

The gun battle Saturday began after some 200 rebel supporters and at least three armed rebels left the parliament compound. On the way out, one said: "We're going to take down the roadblocks."

Confronting about eight soldiers at a roadblock 400 yards from the compound, the supporters tried to grab the soldiers' weapons and pushed one of them to the ground. The other soldiers fired warning shots. Rebels shot back, setting off a gun battle that lasted for less than five minutes.

The soldiers withdrew and were chased by the rebels and their supporters, who threw rocks and carried machetes. The mob eventually returned to parliament, marching, singing a song and carrying army tents they had pulled down.

Officials said one soldier was hit in the shoulder and the other in the leg. Jerry Harmer, 38, of Britain, a senior producer and cameraman for Associated Press Television News, was shot in the right wrist. Doctors at Suva's Colonial War Memorial hospital said his condition was good.

Speight did not appear to be involved in the confrontation.

Army commander Commodore Frank Bainimarama said his soldiers could not stop the armed rebels because they were using unarmed supporters as human shields.

Fiji, which had two bloodless coups in 1987, is an island nation in the Pacific 2,250 miles northeast of Sydney, Australia. Fijians of Indian ancestry make up 44 percent of the population of 813,000, while indigenous Fijians account for 51 percent.

Ethnic Indians own many shops and businesses in Fiji. Some ethnic Indians have been attacked since Speight's coup began.

Ulster Unionists vote to revive joint government with Catholics

BELFAST, Northern Ireland (AP) — Northern Ireland's bitterly divided major Protestant party voted Saturday to revive a joint government with Catholics, but the party's leader warned the coalition would survive only if the Irish Republican Army disarms.

The grassroots council of the Ulster Unionist party decided by a 459-403 vote to resume power-sharing alongside the IRA-linked Sinn Fein starting Tuesday. The outcome won quick praise from Britain, Ireland and the United States.

"The wind is back in the sails of peace in Northern Ireland," President Clinton declared in Washington.

The province's power-sharing government began operating in December, ending 27 years of direct rule by Britain, but it was suspended 11 weeks later because the IRA refused to make any disarmament commitments. The IRA broke the impasse three weeks ago, promising to begin putting its weapons "beyond use" — a euphemism for disarming — if power-sharing resumed.

Before Saturday's vote, Ulster Unionist chief David Trimble argued during a behind-closed-doors debate that his party must test the IRA's promise. With his leadership on the line, Trimble got backing from 53 percent of the party council.

"It is patently obvious that those promises must be delivered," a relieved but still vulnerable Trimble said afterward. "And let there be absolutely no doubt that I and my colleagues will hold the republicans to the promises they have made. If there's any foot-dragging, if there's any delay, there will be difficulties."

AP Photo

Ulster Unionist leader David Trimble, left, with dissident Jeffrey Donaldson, who lost his motion against the leader, give a press conference in Belfast, Northern Ireland Saturday. Trimble won the backing of his Unionist Council to go into power sharing with Sinn Fein.

Sinn Fein and the province's biggest Catholic-supported party, the Social Democratic and Labor Party, welcomed Trimble's narrow victory as essential to ensuring the success of the Good Friday peace accord.

That landmark 1998 pact envisioned a Catholic-Protestant administration buoyed by gradual paramilitary disarmament. Though progress has been slowed by mutual suspicions, the continuing cease-fires observed by the IRA and outlawed pro-British groups have helped keep the process alive.

"Inclusivity, equality and mutual respect is the way forward," said Martin McGuinness, a former IRA chief of staff due to resume work as Sinn Fein's education minister in the Cabinet.

The British minister for Northern Ireland, Peter Mandelson, said he had signed an order restoring substantial authority to the four-party Cabinet, effective Tuesday. He will retain considerable responsibilities, including maintaining security in the province.

"Northern Ireland today has a second chance to get it right," Mandelson said.

Whether Northern Ireland's unlikely local coalition flowers or withers once again will largely depend on IRA actions.

Sinn Fein declined to speculate on when the IRA would begin to reveal any of its secret weapons dumps to international inspectors. That was the most concrete commitment made by the outlawed group in its May 6 declaration to put its weapons "completely and verifiably beyond use."

Trimble shared the 1998 Nobel Peace Prize with Catholic leader John Hume, and he is the senior minister in the province's soon-to-be-revived Cabinet. But Saturday's vote confirmed that he retains only a shaky hold on his own party.

His deputy leader, John Taylor, said he had been prepared to vote no until he received assurances from Britain that it intended to retain two key symbols of Britishness in Northern Ireland: the name of the province's mostly Protestant police force, the Royal Ulster Constabulary, and the flying of Union Jack flags over government buildings.

Britain has insisted that the police should be renamed as part of a plan to reform the force, which many Catholics despise. But before the vote, Mandelson suggested that the RUC name might be retained in some form. In a further bid to help Trimble, he announced he would have the final say on whether the British flag flew over government buildings.

"If we'd held this meeting last Saturday we would have lost," Taylor said.

The Democratic Unionists, an uncompromising Protestant party opposed to the entire Good Friday accord, predicted it would soon represent most of the province's pro-British majority and pull the plug on power-sharing. The party has two government posts, though it refuses to sit at the same Cabinet table as Sinn Fein.

Democratic Unionist leader Ian Paisley said his party "will provide a reliable alternative to Trimble's surrender unionism."

Koreans in decades-old battle against military range

KOON-NI RANGE, South Korea (AP) — Old fishermen call them "shriekers" — U.S. military jets that swoop down and strafe practice targets only 550 yards from the nearest village.

"The whole house shakes. I can't watch TV. Babies are startled," said Choi Joong-bin, 64. "It gets worse in the summer when I have to leave the windows open."

Choi is among several thousand people here who say they cannot sleep or work in comfort as long as the United States, their country's main military ally, keeps an Air Force range near their west coast village of Mae Hyang, 50 miles south of Seoul.

Villagers say the 5,000-acre Koon-Ni tidal flat range is the cause of deaths, injuries and miscarriages among humans and livestock. They say at least nine people have died in accidents linked to the range, including a pregnant woman killed when a practice bomb hit her in 1967 and four children killed the following year when they tinkered with an unexploded bomb. In 1994, they say, roofs caved in and walls cracked in 100 houses when range workers accidentally detonated bombs.

Most recently, a May 8 bombing slightly injured several villagers and cracked walls or shattered windows of hundreds of homes, villagers say. More than 100 students were detained in subsequent days for trying to march on the U.S. embassy in Seoul to demand the relocation of the range and the withdrawal of U.S. troops from the South.

At South Korean President Kim Dae-jung's urging, U.S. officials halted firing on the range for 10 days during a joint investigation. Investigators say they have not found evidence of major damage or injuries.

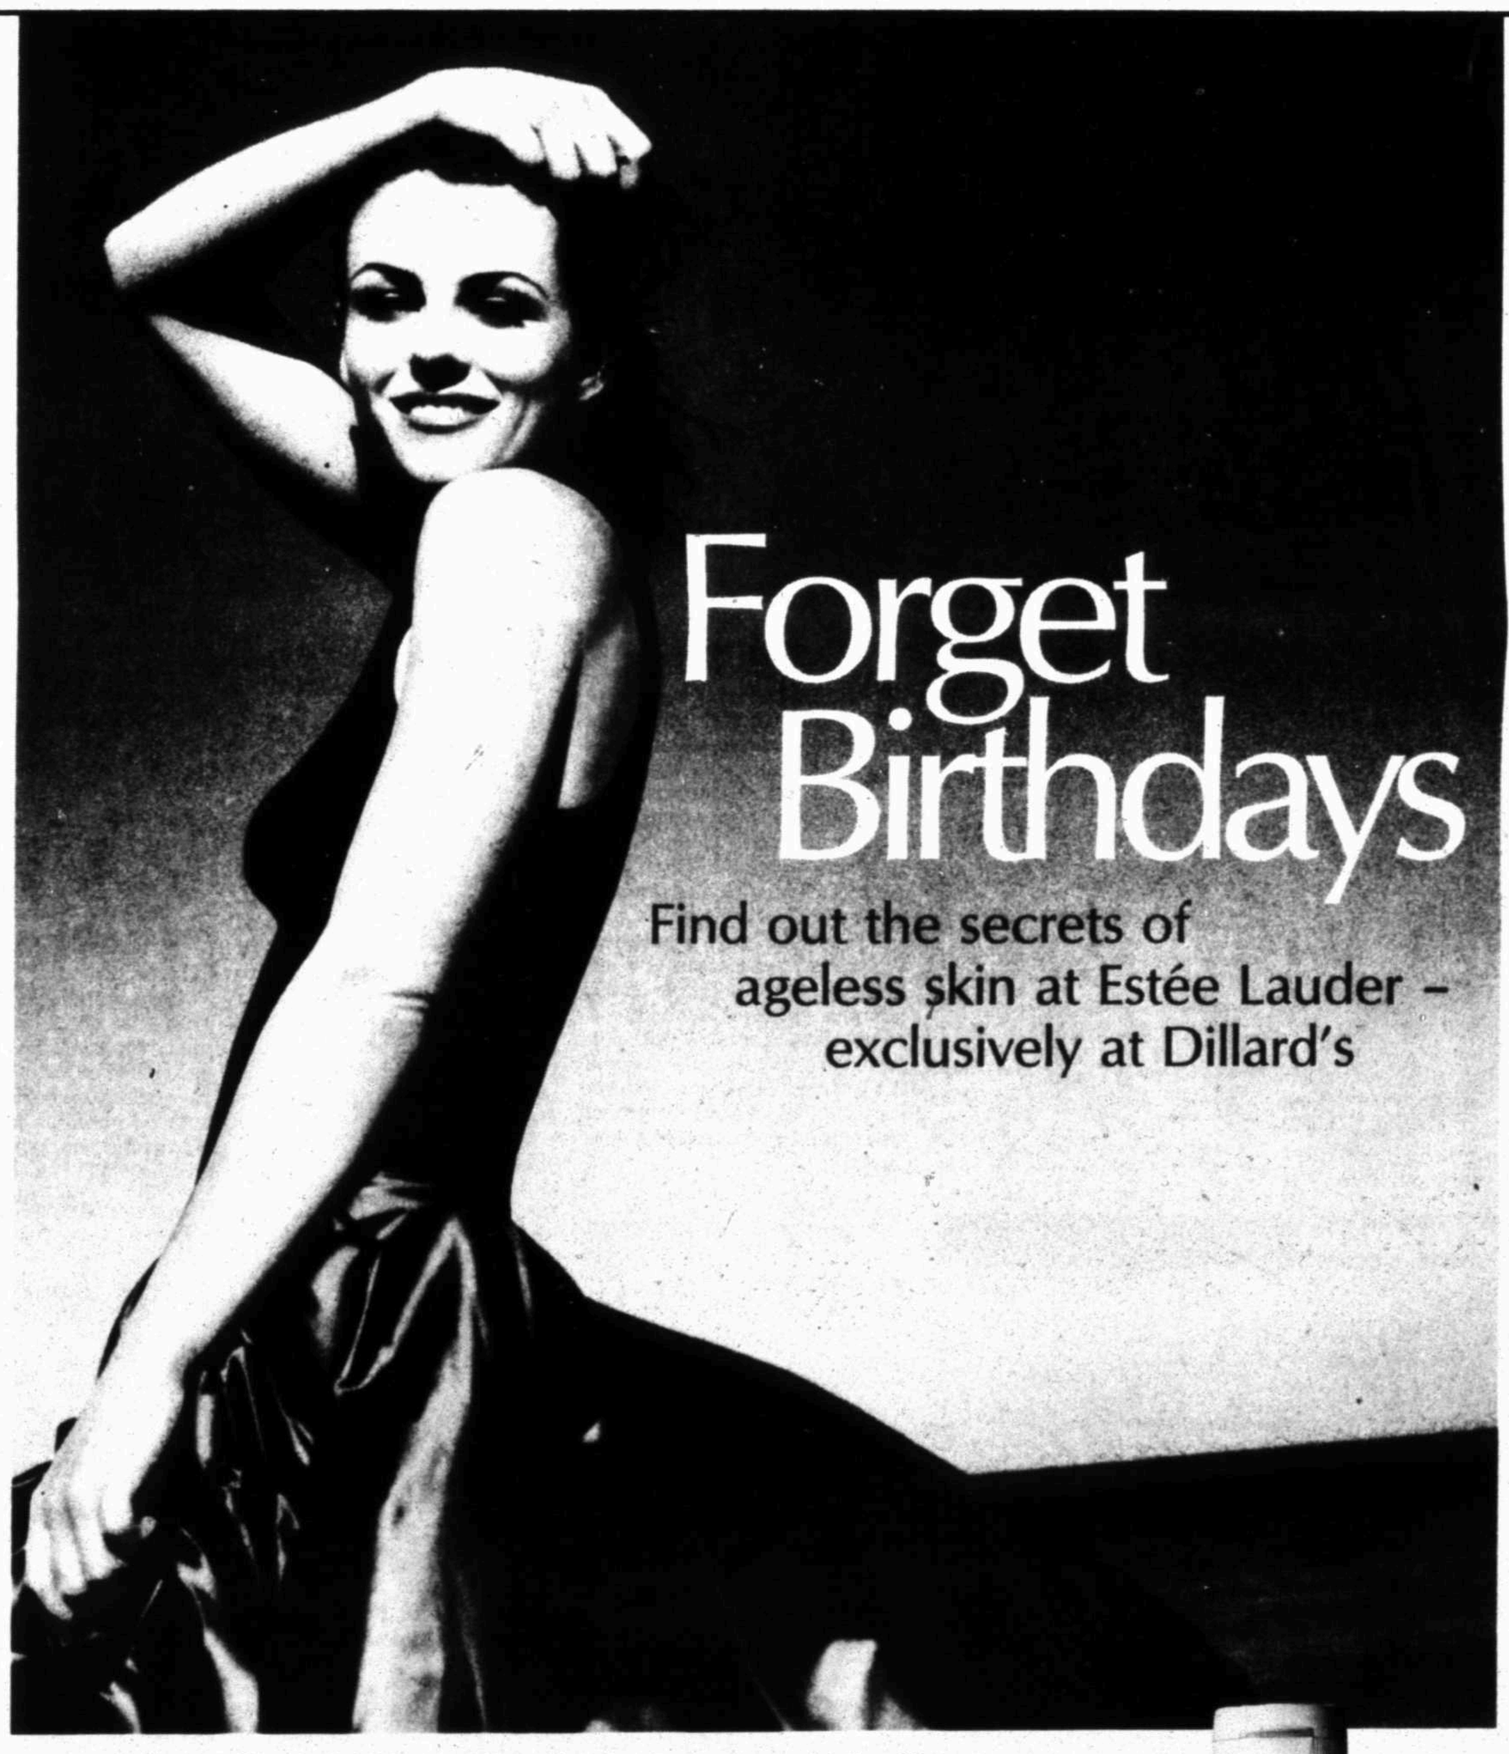

Some 2,800 residents from 10 villages around the range have filed a lawsuit seeking $27 million in compensation from their government.

"We want to live in peace!" barks a slogan painted by villagers on a cinderblock warehouse overlooking the tidal flat.

The U.S. military has about 20 bases scattered around South Korea and operates several ranges. Washington also still keeps 37,000 troops in the South. Under a treaty, Seoul must provide the U.S. military with land for its facilities, but no provinces want the range in their backyards.

LEUKEMIA: ALL accounts for 75 percent of cases

and they're fighting, and one needed more room than the other. They're kind of killing each other."

These armies of blasts come in two varieties, or the two main forms of leukemia. The "good kind" of leukemia, which Sarah has, is known as acute lymphoblastic leukemia, or ALL.

ALL affects the white blood cells known as lymphocytes, which interact to prevent infection and provide immunity to disease. ALL accounts for 75 percent of childhood leukemia cases, and 70 percent of children who receive optimal treatment are cured, according to Keene.

"Supposedly, if she is in remission five years down the road, she is considered cured," Mrs. McClaine said.

Another type of leukemia, known as acute myeloid leukemia, causes the overproduction of immature white blood cells known as granulocytes, which act as the first line of defense against diseases.

Children with AML receive chemotherapy and often a bone marrow transplant. Of the children who achieve remission from AML, about 40 to 50 percent are cured, according to Keene.

The remaining instances of childhood leukemia are cases of chronic leukemia. This disease does not advance as rapidly as the acute leukemias, and it usually requires a bone marrow transplant.

Children like Sarah who have ALL undergo a three-year treatment plan of chemotherapy.

Mrs. McClaine said chemotherapy involves the use of different types of drugs that affect cells. Some of the chemotherapy drugs keep the blood cells from multiplying, others starve cells until they die and others suppress the bone marrow to keep it from making more cancerous cells.

The first phase of the therapy, known as induction, requires extended hospital stay. Induction involves the strongest doses of chemotherapy drugs and intensive side effects such as hair loss.

"You're poisoning the kid," Mrs. McClaine said. "Someday they'll come up with something that's just not so rough. There is a good outlook."

The remaining two phases of leukemia treatment, called consolidation and maintenance, gradually taper the amount of chemotherapy a patient receives. Sarah had to spend several days at a time in the hospital during her induction phase.

Now that she is in maintenance, she makes a short visit to the Cook Children's Specialty Clinic in Midland once a week for a chemotherapy shot.

Doctors still do not completely understand the cause of leukemia. According to Keene, they believe a combination of genetic, environmental and viral factors contribute to the disease's formation.

In "You and Leukemia: A day at a time," a book explaining the different aspects of leukemia to children, Dr. Lynn Baker, who works with young cancer patients in Minnesota, explains the most important concept children must understand about the causes of leukemia: "Nobody caused your leukemia. Nobody could have prevented it."

ADVENTURES IN TEACHING

Sweet parting words from students at end of school year

By Eric Setzler

This school year was a wonderful and productive at James Bowie Middle School. It was a long year, but still a wonderful and productive one. The apparent length of the school year makes saying goodbye to students exceptionally hard for me. In our nine and half months together, these young people become such an important part of my life. After seeing them almost on a daily basis, these students will move on to bigger challenges and new horizons, only to be replaced by a fresh, new crop next year.

Setzler

However, this year some of my fellow educators came up with an ingenious idea to combat the "end of the school year" blues. Two teachers had the wonderful idea of having students write letters and notes to a special teacher that had made a significant difference in their lives. In other words, these young people were to recognize a teacher that taught them the most important lessons or helped them the most. I was blessed by receiving many of these letters.

I've included several examples written to other teachers and me. The majority of spelling errors and grammar problems has been corrected. Some mistakes were preserved to demonstrate the flavor of the writings. To protect their privacy, the student names have been omitted and teacher names abbreviated.

Mrs. S,
I really enjoyed English this year! I will never forget you.

Dear Mr. S,
I just wanted to say thank you for everything! This year has been great thanks to you and many other Red Team teachers. You have helped me a lot this year through everything even though I took a lot of it for granted. You stay after school almost every day just to help your science students and that's what makes you a great teacher. Thank you for everything! I will miss you next year at Lee Freshman but I will come back to visit. Have a great summer!

Dear Ms. B,
Hey, howz it going? I wrote you this letter to tell you that you have taught me so much this year! I really appreciate you! You taught me lots about respect! I will miss you very much! I hope you have great classes next year! I also thank you for your patience with our class!

Dear Mr. S,
Thank you for helping me when I was going to fight Steven. I know I could have beat him but didn't want to be in AEP. That's all I had to say and thank you for all those field trips and science projects we had. It made learning fun in your class.

Dear Miss. C.,
I have learned so much from you. Such as math and also life skills. This year has been so awesome being in your class. This is a year I will always remember. You have helped me more than any other teacher I have ever had. Thanx for everything! I will never 4-get you! Don't 4-get me either! OK? I'll write you a lot!

Dear Mr. S.,
Thank you for introducing me to exploring the world of science. By this, you have opened up a great New World of school opportunities and job opportunities. Your class was a blast and I hope the students next year have as much fun.

Dear Mrs. S.,
Thank you so much for teaching me respect and dignity. I have repeatedly learned from you, not to disobey teachers, or elders. Your unique personality and perkiness has taught me to be myself and not worry about what other's think. I am extremely lucky to have had such a wonderful educator as you. I will never forget the lessons you have taught me by simply being you.

Hey Mr. S,
It's been a great year. This has been the funnest class I've had all my life. Hope to C ya in future years. It's been great!

Dear Ms. B.,
I just wanted to tell you thank you for a GREAT year! I seriously had soooo much fun in your class! You are a terrific teacher and I actually remember everything I learned this year. You explained things so thoroughly and I think that is what prepared me for your tests. Even though we got off the subject a few times ( all the time … he he!), we still had fun! I hope you have a terrific summer and I will promise to come back and visit you! Thank you for EVERYTHING!

Hey Mr. S,
You always taught me to be ready for a science test.

Miss C.,
Thank you for everything you've given me. You, even though you might not have known it, encouraged me to go the extra mile. You have helped me be the winner and not the loser I had thought I was. Never forget me or my quote - "It's a Great Day!" Phil. 1:3

Behind every atom, we find electrons.

Behind every electron, we find quarks.

Hey Yo, Mr. S.,
You're class has been so-o fun! I always look forward to it! I thank God for blessing me with a teacher like you! I think I learned so much this year because of the fun way you taught (esp. The Periodic Table of Elements:!!! hee hee and the Noble gases) Well, I will always remember you and the checks in the mail! L.O.L! (lots of love) God bless ya...

In response, I believe I speak for all caring teachers when I say, "God bless you, too. Thank you for being my students and part of my life. You make being a teacher worthwhile!"

MARATHON: Diabetes affects 15 million Americans

will be running the 10-kilometer race within the Kona Marathon, noted the benefits of running and other exercise in promoting health even among diabetics.

"If someone has a healthy lifestyle, if they eat well and if they exercise regularly, they can delay the onset of the diabetes," Dr. Adcock said, "and maybe postpone it indefinitely even if they have that gene" — the genetic predisposition for diabetes.

She noted that about 6 percent of United States population, or more than 15 million people, have diabetes and that only about a half to two-thirds of them have been diagnosed.

Diabetes is responsible for the necessity of renal dialysis about half the time, Dr. Adcock said, adding that diabetes is a major cause of lower-limb amputations.

"The risk of heart disease is two- to fourfold increase if you have diabetes as compared to if you don't," she said.

A diagnosis of diabetes should not rule out an active life, Dr. Adcock said, citing Ms. Lanier as an example.

Forty to 45 minutes of aerobic exercise four to five times a week is enough to stay fit and reduce the risk of cardiovascular disease and diabetes, Dr. Adock said.

Five runners on the nine-member Midland-Odessa team will be running the marathon: Ed Adcock, a Midland attorney and Dr. Adcock's husband; Tracey Breadner, a 32-year-old Midland registered nurse; Wendell Iverson Jr., a 35-year-old seasoned Midland marathoner and landman; and Ms. Lanier and Ms. Oates.

Running the 10K will be Dr. Adcock; Lorenzo Ramirez, a Midland businessman, and his wife, Linda Ramirez, who have each lost a loved one to complications of diabetes; and Cynthia Morales, a Midland insurance agent.

Ms. Breadner noted that it is "really frustrating" to be aware of diabetics who ignore their health "because you know that they can live a relatively normal life and decrease their major complications if they did take care of themselves" through exercise and wholesome lifestyle and eating habits.

Many diabetics may not be aware of "just how much they are hindering their health by not being compliant," she said.

Ms. Oates, the team's 43-year-old fitness consultant and trainer who will be running her first marathon, said that "everybody should attempt to run a marathon no matter what age they are.

"Just take the first step and set a goal," she advised.

"Lori (Lanier) has been one of my training clients for little over a year. She came to me as not a runner, not actually a walker," Ms. Oates said. "She is running her first marathon. It has taken her less than a year to become physically fit and trained for a marathon as a diabetic. I'm running the marathon with her as her coach and friend."

In preparing for his first official marathon, Ed Adcock said that he recently ran 26.2 miles just to make sure he could run the distance.

"I've always run a mile, two or three miles," he said. "But I've never really trained to run very long distances. I just want to find out if it can be done. That's it. I'm surprised that five months of training can get you running a marathon.

"Marathon running is mental. You certainly learn a lot about yourself," he said, and about the perseverance required to complete the task.

Of marathon running, Iverson, whose best marathon time is three hours and 48 minutes (3:48), said, "I like to just stay physically fit and this is a good one to do it. I don't how long I will be running marathons, but I probably will always be a runner.

"I have a lot of family members who are afflicted with the disease," said Iverson, "and people who I know closely who have died with complications of diabetes. Since I run the marathons, I also would like to run them for a good cause."

Women seek louder voice as peacemakers

By Barbara Crossette
N.Y. Times News Service

NEW YORK — "African women are everywhere, in the media, in politics, in business," said Ergibe Boyd, an Eritrean-born American diplomat who has given herself an unusual assignment in the Rwandan capital, Kigali. "But women are never at the peace table."

In a new age of localized warfare that kills mostly civilians, "women are running and children are the victims," said Boyd, whose own family has been caught in the war between Ethiopia and Eritrea. Those who suffer most, she said in an interview in Kigali, must demand a role not only in peacemaking but also in rebuilding communities that have been shattered by the brutality of war and warlords.

In late June, Boyd plans to assemble women from all over Africa, as well as the Middle East, Northern Ireland and the Balkans, to build strategies for making their voices heard in national capitals, international organizations and the summit meeting of the world's seven leading industrial powers and Russia.

At the Center for Women's Global Leadership at Rutgers University, the executive director, Charlotte Bunch, said that the role of women in peacemaking "is one of the issues that's reached critical mass."

Boyd discovered this quickly in Africa. But the trend is worldwide, said Jessica Neuwirth of Equality Now, a New York organization that supports women and projects to foster peace in several African countries.

"Women suffer so much from war," she said in a telephone interview, "and they end up with so many of the daily responsibilities of life that become harder because of war." Women, even under fire, are expected to feed, shelter and look after their families.

In Sudan, women have held meetings on how to get into the efforts to produce peace. In Uganda, and elsewhere, women are beginning to assert authority over some of the youngest soldiers, often children, and are fighting the abduction of young people by guerrilla bands.

"In Somalia, the most amazing process has taken place," Neuwirth said. "A coalition of grass-roots organizations is representing women from warring clans where men really can't talk to each other. One woman in Marka, Starlin Arush, set up the most remarkable and effective demobilization program. In exchange for arms, she was taking young men and giving them food, shelter and education, which is really what they want and don't have any other way to get."

But, she added, women "have not been able to get in through the door to participate in the peace process."

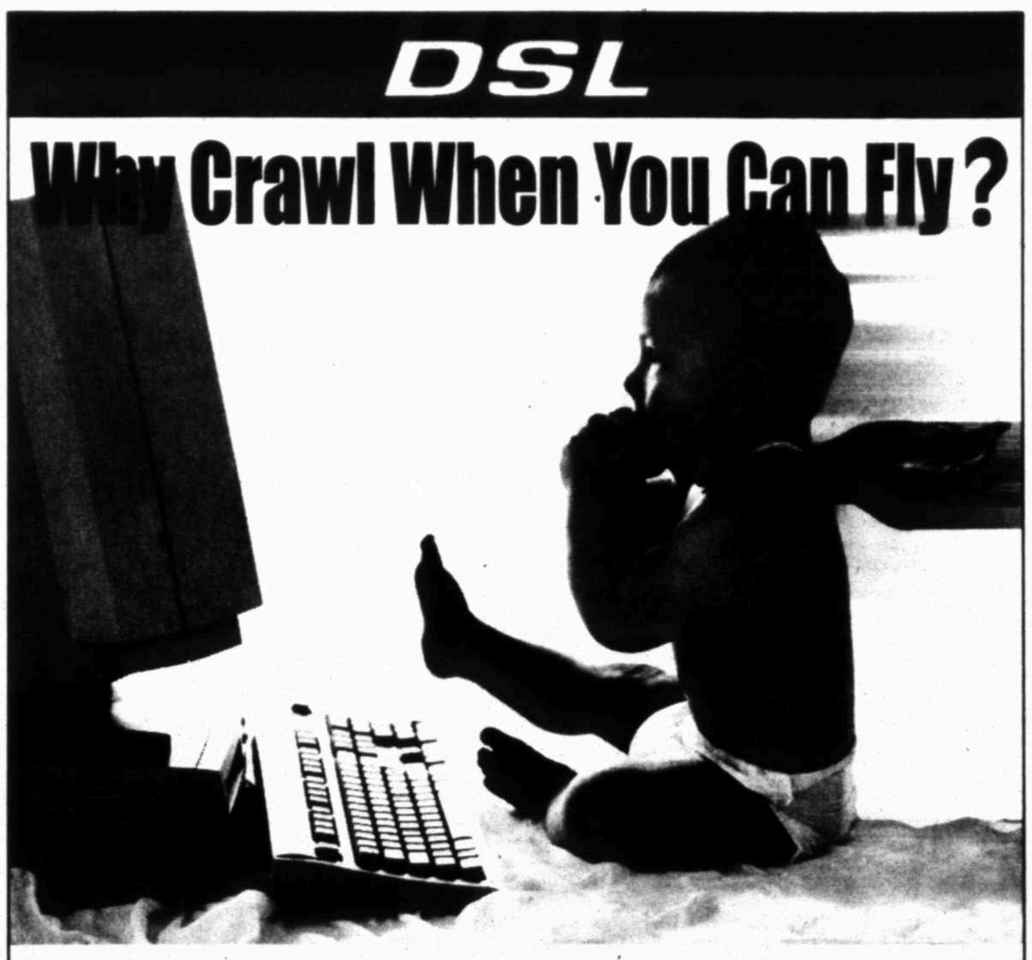

In Kigali, Boyd did not have far to look for women eager to take part in her campaign to raise women's part in peacemaking. Rwanda, torn apart by genocide six years ago, has seen the emergence of some strong women's organizations committed to rebuilding a semblance of normality for their families.

Mary Balikungeri, coordinator of the Rwanda Women's Network, has been active not only in resolving conflict but in battling AIDS, in part a legacy of war and the widening incidence of rape as an instrument of abuse by the men with guns. She has been working, she said, to remove the stigma of AIDS and teach women that it is necessary to be tested for the virus that causes it.

Balikungeri, who also runs a center for women who were victims of rape in the genocidal Hutu-led attacks against mostly Tutsi families in 1994, recently toured the United States as a guest of the American government, traveling with 15 women from all over Africa, including from countries at war with each other. As they traveled, they shared stories — and met some American women living in poverty and distress.

"You come to realize," Balikungeri said, "we need each other. All of us, regardless of where we were from, saw that everywhere women are the victims."

SARAH: Leukemia treatment will last almost three years

(From 1A)

She has become a survivor.

Photos by Tim Fischer

The Family

Elizabeth and Brian McClaine live one block away from their Baptist church in an average-sized Midland home with their anything-but-average children. Sarah, the only girl of the family, has three brothers: Matthew, 11, Timothy, 5, and Joseph, 11 months.

The McClaine children love to play outside, and their personalities showed through the dust they kicked up as they rode their bicycles and climbed trees on the first unofficial night of summer, May 25.

Matthew systematically rode his bicycle up and down the street in front of his house. He is smart and quiet, much like his father, who works as an engineer at West Texas oil wells. McClaine keeps a pensive look on his face and pays close attention to detail, although he admits the past nine months seem like a blur in his memory.

"It all sort of runs together," he said. "There were lots of long nights."

Sarah's younger brother, Timothy, tore through the front lawn on his bicycle, nearly taking out little Joey, who loves attention and gets plenty of it as the baby of the family.

"Tim, he was only 5, so he doesn't have a great grasp at (what happened to Sarah)," Mrs. McClaine said. "But when she's sick, he'll bring her a bucket. He prays for her."

Mrs. McClaine keeps a mild temperament, even when she's telling Timothy not to ride his bike with a sucker in his mouth. She has a soft, hoarse voice, and she always sounds as though she could burst out laughing or start weeping at any moment.

"You have to have the faith and the trust," she said. She and her husband both said their faith in God and the prayers of others helped them through this year.

"God is in control," Mrs. McClaine said.

The Fight

Two weeks after school started, Sarah started complaining of a stomach ache and sore bones. She frequently ran a fever, and Mrs. McClaine took her for several visits to their family pediatrician, who thought Sarah had a virus.

"I usually was pretty tired," Sarah said. "I started getting sick, and I was throwing up for a while. My pediatrician put me on some antibiotics."

The doctor noticed Sarah had developed anemia, a common symptom of leukemia, but decided to treat her supposed virus before addressing the anemia. Sarah would perk up and feel better from time to time, but her skin started to turn yellow, and her stomach became swollen and sore.

After dinner on Saturday, Sept. 12, Mrs. McClaine dropped Matthew and Timothy off at her husband's parents' house and headed for the emergency room with Sarah and Joey. Sarah had a bad stomach ache and fever, and Mrs. McClaine said she knew something wasn't right.

"I just remember getting X-rays, and they took me up to one of the rooms," Sarah said. "They told my mom I had leukemia."

Mrs. McClaine found out her daughter had leukemia about midnight that evening. She had just met Juan Bernini, a pediatric oncologist and hematologist who became Sarah's doctor. He told Mrs. McClaine: "I think we have the good kind," meaning Sarah had the most common and treatable form of childhood leukemia.

Mrs. McClaine called her husband, who was working in an oil field south of Ozona at the time. He had to wait for another worker to replace him before he headed back to Midland. He arrived at the hospital at 5 a.m., as doctors prepared to transport Sarah to Cook Children's Hospital in Fort Worth.

Bernini, who works in the Cook Children's Specialty Clinic in Midland, decided Sarah could receive the best treatment at the Fort Worth facility.

Mrs. McClaine and Sarah took Cook's special Teddy Bear Flight on a small plane with only room for Sarah, one parent, a nurse, a respiratory therapist and one small suitcase. Her dad drove behind them after telling his parents and sons about what was happening to Sarah and grabbing a clown wig from home to cheer Sarah up.

"The first time I drove up, I'd already been up a couple of days," McClaine said. He pulled over on the side of the road for a nap between Midland and Fort Worth.

Sarah started chemotherapy almost immediately after arriving in Fort Worth. Her white blood cells multiplied uncontrollably, doubling themselves in the course of one night. The doctors considered her a high-risk patient, and no one was sure Sarah would live into remission.

Sarah said she was sometimes scared, but she just prayed whenever she felt afraid.

She told her father she prayed that God would heal her, but if He chose not to, she prayed He would help her understand.

A little more than a week later, Sarah transferred back to Midland Memorial Hospital to continue her chemotherapy. She soon went into remission.

The Future

The Cook Children's Specialty Clinic on Wall Street is familiar territory to Sarah. She casually walks from room to room the way a supervisor peruses the factory floor, checking in on familiar faces and scenery.

Once a week, Sarah comes to the clinic to have her blood tested and to receive a chemotherapy shot. The shots she receives now are lower dosages than the shots she received during the first stage of treatment that made her immune system weak and caused frequent nausea and vomiting.

Leukemia treatment lasts almost three years, long after a child has gone into remission. Sarah will keep getting chemotherapy shots off and on for the next two years.

"I feel a lot better," she said on her last visit to the Cook Clinic. "I have a lot more energy than I did."

Sarah hesitated a little when nurse Julie Jolly called her back to start the appointment. Sarah said she doesn't like the blood work, known as "counts," she has done to count her white blood cells. At this stage in her treatment, doctors are after only 0.01 percent of Sarah's white blood cells that could still be cancerous, Mrs. McClaine explained.

"She's definitely a real trouper," said Bernini, who is still Sarah's oncologist. "She's been through a lot."

Bernini grew up in Costa Rica and meandered through Texas during medical school and his residency. He has a soft Spanish accent and a warm smile, and he addresses all the parents in the clinic as "Mom" or "Dad."

As he tested Sarah's reflexes and hand-eye coordination, Mrs. McClaine told Bernini about a sick spell Sarah had the previous day during "Field Day" at Bonham. Sarah has to be careful to not overexert herself in the heat, a difficult restriction for someone who loves to play outside like Sarah. She said one of the worst things about having to stay in the hospital or at home in bed was the boredom of only playing indoors.

Bernini, Sarah and Mrs. McClaine went over Sarah's blood work as if they were grading her homework. Her white blood cell count is around 1,000, much lower than a healthy person's, but normal for a leukemia patient. Bernini also had some good news for Sarah: She only has to have her counts done every other week now.

"I can't ask for anything better," Bernini said about Sarah's health. "She looks great to me, Mom."

Looking great — and feeling great — means Sarah can go back to school, join her Girl Scout troop again, resume piano lessons and drag her older brother, Matt, across the stage by his ear during a church play, which she did a week ago today.

Even her teachers, who saw very little of her this year, say they can see the differences in Sarah's lifestyle since she has gone back to a more regular daily routine.

"I'm seeing a little different personality coming out now," Mrs. Harper said last week, as the school year was coming to an end.

The Midland Independent School District provided a homebound teacher who went to the McClaine's home twice a week to help Sarah keep up with her studies and prepare for the TAAS test. Sarah started returning to school little by little in February, and she went to school full time from the last week in April until the last day of classes. She passed the fourth grade and will start fifth grade at Fannin Elementary next year.

Mrs. McClaine said Sarah doesn't even get out of her chores at home unless she feels sick.

"You've got to let these kids live," she said.

The Fear

Sarah started feeling worse around dinnertime on Friday, Sept. 24. In the outside world, "The Sixth Sense" was storming box offices for the first time and captivating audiences with its plot twists. Inside the McClaine's home, Sarah's illness would soon take a twist of its own.

Sarah had been home from her first visit to Cook for four days, and she had just visited the Midland clinic for chemotherapy Friday morning. As the evening progressed, she began complaining of a pain in her side, and she developed an escalating fever.

"I figured I was just hungry," Sarah said. Bernini had the night off, so Mrs. McClaine called the hospital in Fort Worth and left messages for doctors there.

"It was going really fast, and she was in pain," Mrs. McClaine said. "I knew I didn't have time to waste." She couldn't get through to anyone at Cook, so Mrs. McClaine drove Sarah up to the emergency room at Midland Memorial Hospital.

Bernini soon met Mrs. McClaine at the hospital and examined Sarah. He discovered that the pain was the result of a serious colon infection called typhlitis, which infects the colon the same way appendicitis affects the appendix. Doctors put Sarah on antibiotics and pumped blood into her fragile body, hoping to build up her immune system and flush out the bacteria.

After spending a night at the hospital with her husband, Mrs. McClaine headed home at 10 a.m. to shower and pick up some clothes for her sons, who had stayed the night with their grandparents.

Around 1:30 p.m., McClaine called his wife.

"You need to get up here," he said.

McClaine and Doug Lamb, their pastor, had stayed up at the hospital while Mrs. McClaine ran home. Meanwhile, the infection from Sarah's colon was leaking into her bloodstream, causing septicemia, or a blood poisoning that causes a patient's blood pressure and heart rate to plummet to dangerously low levels.

The two men wandered down the hall around 1 p.m. so Sarah could have some privacy while using the restroom. As they talked in the visitor's area, they overheard the alert for a Code Four in Sarah's room.

Doctors call a Code Four during a cardiac or respiratory arrest. Nurses and technicians rushed to the room to assist in reviving the patient.

McClaine headed back down the hall toward Sarah's room, but a nurse stopped him and told him he would have to wait in the visitor's area. Then a guard came to the visitor's area to keep McClaine from leaving the room.

Sari Nabulsi, a pediatrician with trauma experience, revived Sarah and put her on medication to keep her heart rate up. The hospital staff then allowed McClaine back into Sarah's room, where she was hooked up to multiple machines and tubes.

When Mrs. McClaine arrived at the hospital, Bernini told them he wanted to fly Sarah to Cook again, where she spent three days in the Critical Care Unit, before she was transferred back to Midland Memorial on Oct. 6. She returned home Oct. 13.

"We decided then and there that there were no more bad days," Mrs. McClaine said.

"They were good days if she was alive," McClaine added.

The Finish?

Since Sarah recovered from typhlitis, she has had good days and not-so-good days, but never any bad days, not like Sept. 24.

She has spent the year at home and in the hospital for chemotherapy from time to time. Treating Sarah's leukemia posed a challenge to doctors because she is unusually sensitive to the chemotherapy drugs.

One morning in December, Sarah woke up paralyzed on her right side in reaction to one of the chemotherapy drugs. She spent the day in the hospital, but regained feeling and movement in her right side after doctors gave her an experimental treatment involving an asthma drug.

The paralysis upset and frustrated Sarah, and her mom recalls that day as "one of those days."

This year has thrown quite a few of "those days" into the McClaines' life, and the parents now say that they, their sons and Sarah have learned to appreciate life one day at a time.

"We just told them about it and told them you just have to enjoy everyday," Mrs. McClaine said. "There are no guarantees, even for them."

The little girl who likes to eat fried chicken, play outside and read fantasy books appears no different than any other 9-year-old with a unique personality.

"I do everything a normal kid does," Sarah said.

The wind beneath her wings: Sarah's classmates helped her persevere

Lynde Hedgpeth
MRT Correspondent

Katie went to see Sarah at the hospital. Claire went to visit Sarah at home. Amber went to the hospital a bunch of times, and Paige talked to Sarah through the glass door in her house to keep from spreading germs.

Every fourth-grader in Jerita Harper's class at Bonham Elementary has a story to tell about how they helped their classmate Sarah McClaine, who struggled with acute lymphocytic leukemia for most of this past school year. Each student tried to help Sarah and her family in some small way, and their generosity reflects that of the entire community in which the McClaine family lives.

"God has placed the right people in the right situations at the right time for us," said Elizabeth McClaine, Sarah's mother.

The McClaines acknowledged that a large network of prayer helped Sarah fight for her life and helped the McClaines keep their hope while Sarah lay sick in bed for over six months. Mrs. McClaine said a prayer request even circled around the world for Sarah via e-mail.

"I wasn't getting upset because a lot of people were praying for me," Sarah said. "A lot of people, I didn't have a clue who they were, were sending me cards and stuff."

Sarah's friends from school visited often when she had to stay home for most of the year. Those same friends joined teachers and other students at Bonham to raise Sarah's spirits, as well as some money to help with medical expenses.

In March, Bonham students and teachers participated in a fundraiser called "Silver for Sarah," in which students from all grades collected coins to give to the McClaines.

"These kids are so compassionate," Mrs. Harper said. Some of the children in Sarah's class went door to door soliciting donations to bring to Silver for Sarah.

Mrs. Harper also kept a mailbox outside her door with a sign reading "To Sarah, with love," in which students and teachers could drop off cards and banners to take to Sarah.

"Have you ever had a friend who is sick?" asked Paige Raglin in a story she submitted for the Midland Independent School District Cultural Arts competition. "Well, I have. She didn't have measles or mumps or anything. She had leukemia ... Her name is Sarah."

Ms. Raglin, a classmate of Sarah, advanced to the city level of the Cultural Arts competition with the story, which details Sarah's bout with leukemia and typhlitis from a child's point of view.

The McClaines' friends and family at Fannin Terrace Baptist Church also pitched in to help Sarah. They set up a donation fund to help pay for medical expenses and kept Sarah on all of the church's prayer lists.

"No one really knows what to do, but everyone wanted to do something to make it better," said Christa Midkiff, a member of Fannin Terrace and the mother of one of Sarah's classmates.

Mrs. Midkiff and many other of the McClaine's friends from church and bible study helped take care of the McClaine boys: Matthew, 11, Timothy, 5, and Joseph, 11 months.

"Elizabeth won't let you do much of anything to help," Mrs. Midkiff said.

Elizabeth gives much credit, though, to the people from all around Texas who helped her and her family through Sarah's illness, from the Child Life caregivers who stood by Sarah when she was being treated in Fort Worth to her son's Boy Scout troupe that held a blood drive for Sarah.

"We're very thankful He's given us doctors with such wonderful ability," Mrs. McClaine said. "They've been able to help so well. We've had lots of prayers."

U.N. teams prepare to finalize Israel, Lebanon border

CHEBAA, Lebanon (AP) — In a move likely to help defuse tension in a disputed area, Israeli forces have pulled out of two outposts at the Lebanese-Israeli frontier as U.N. teams prepared to finalize the border between the nations, U.N. sources said Saturday.

Elsewhere on the border Saturday, U.N. peacekeepers deployed at a fence where Lebanese have been throwing stones and firebombs at Israeli soldiers on the other side.

Ten blue-helmeted U.N. peacekeepers kept Lebanese about 25 yards away from Israeli soldiers on the other side of the fence to prevent friction. Israeli soldiers also kept people away from their side of the barrier.

After the peacekeepers left, however, some Lebanese civilians tried to climb the fence into Israeli territory and Israeli soldiers fired warning shots in the air, an army statement said.

Since the Israeli withdrawal from southern Lebanon on Wednesday, civilians and armed guerrillas have been converging on the new border. Some came out of curiosity to peek at Israel, which most Lebanese have never seen, but others vented their anger, shouting insults and throwing firebombs, stones, glass bottles and fruit at Israeli soldiers.

In the disputed Chebaa area, U.N. peacekeepers positioned more than a half-mile across a valley from the three Israeli outposts said two of the positions were abandoned Friday night.

In Israel, the army denied reports of troop activity in the area. But town residents and U.N. peacekeepers at a nearby post heard explosions. Lebanese security officials suspected — but could not confirm — the detonations were to demolish the abandoned positions.

It was not yet clear whether the newly abandoned outposts are part of the nearby disputed Chebaa farms. Israel captured the strip of land from Syria in the 1967 Mideast war but Lebanon claims it as its own, a position supported by Damascus. By evacuating the outposts in the Chebaa area, Israel defuses an excuse for Hezbollah guerrilla attacks from Lebanon.

Hezbollah guerrilla leader Sheik Hassan Nasrallah on Friday urged Israel to withdraw from the Chebaa farms but did not say whether Hezbollah would follow through on its threat to attack Israel if the area was not returned.

U.N. envoy Terje Roed-Larsen said in Beirut on Friday that the United Nations considers the Chebaa farms Syrian, meaning Israel's presence there would not impede a formal U.N. confirmation of the Israeli withdrawal.

Ismail Sharifa, 43, a Chebaa native who owns land in town and on the farms, came from Tripoli in northern Lebanon on Saturday for the first time since 1981. He lost his land after Israeli troops occupied the area.

"I have a good life in Tripoli but once I get the land I want to live here. It's one of the most beautiful places in the world," Sharifa said. He said his family used to grow peanuts, wheat, barley, lentils, cucumbers and tomatoes on the land.

Also Saturday, people dropped by a few at a time at spots near the border, congratulating each other on the end of the Israeli occupation of southern Lebanon. An Israeli military jeep drove slowly by on the other side of the fence, occasionally stopping.

U.N. teams will be in the area in a few days to mark the uncertain border line, after which the United Nations will work to officially confirm complete Israeli withdrawal from Lebanon in accordance with a 1978 Security Council resolution.

U.N. spokesman Timur Goskel said the teams, led by sappers looking for mines, are checking the border line to make sure it complies with maps prior to the first Israeli invasion of Lebanon in 1978.

Gore warns against Bush's defense plan

WEST POINT, N.Y. (AP) — Al Gore criticized George W. Bush's proposal to cut America's nuclear arsenal whether Russia does the same, telling West Point cadets Saturday that it "will create instability and undermine our security."

"Nuclear unilateralism will hinder, rather than help, arms control," Gore said in a commencement address that did not mention his Republican presidential rival by name while warning of dangers in Bush's defense plan.

The vice president's aides billed the speech as an official statement of U.S. policy and the Army secretary said it did not violate guidelines against political speeches at the United States Military Academy.

Stressing his credentials to serve as commander in chief, Democrat Gore told more than 940 graduates and guests at Mitchie Stadium: "I know what you need to do your jobs."

Bush last week proposed reducing the U.S. nuclear stockpile to its "lowest possible number consistent with our national security," even without Russia making cuts. The Texas governor paired the cuts with a broad national security review that must include a missile defense system

The Texas governor also opposes a treaty that bans worldwide test of nuclear weapons. It was rejected by the Senate last year as critics said it would compromise national security. Gore has said he will resubmit the treaty to the Senate if elected president.

Gore, in his 25-minute speech, warned about the possible consequences of Bush's proposals.

"An approach that combines serious unilateral reductions with an attempt to build a massive defensive system will create instability, and thus undermine our security," the Democratic candidate said.

The Bush campaign, in response, accused the administration of a failure of leadership and a lack of commitment to the armed forces.

Administration policies have left the military "underpaid, undertrained and overextended," Bush campaign spokeswoman Mindy Tucker said in a statement issued before Gore's speech. The governor's "vision for the American military realizes that the issues of military readiness and morale must be addressed by the next president."

The campaign sparring over defense policy comes as President Clinton heads to Moscow for arms talks next weekend with President Vladimir Putin.

Clinton and Boris Yeltsin, Putin's predecessor, agreed in 1997 that a START III accord would further reduce their countries' nuclear arsenals by about 1,000 warheads, to between 2,000 and 2,500. Recently, the Russians have suggested going even lower, perhaps to 1,500.

Late Friday, en route to New York from a campaign stop in Tennessee, Gore scoffed at what he called Bush's "wildly optimistic" plan, saying it amounts to "a formula ... for a reignited arms race."

"If you're not careful, you could have fewer missiles and a more dangerous world," he said aboard Air Force Two.

Gore favors a limited missile defense system that he says can be accomplished by amending the 1972 Anti-Ballistic Missile Treaty, which now forbids building a national system. The Russians have said they will put arms control treaties on hold if the United States violates the treaty.

Bush has said he will act even if Russia disapproves. Gore said continued negotiations over further arms reductions are needed.

Gore, in his speech to cadets, said he is aware this his own military service as an Army journalist for five months in Vietnam "doesn't match that of others on this stage — or what you will see in your careers."

Still, he said, he knows "what it's like to meet a responsibility to our country."

Bush served in the Texas Air National Guard during Vietnam. And as governor of Texas, he lacks the foreign policy experience of Gore.

The vice president said that to remain pre-eminent, the military must evolve into an Information Age force by taking advantage of the latest technology. That, he said, "will require foresight, technical skill and a clear understanding of the nature of war."

Echoing Clinton administration themes, Gore also said he would:

- Improve the pay and quality of life for service members.
- Bolster recruitment and training programs.
- And increase access to education, affordable housing and medical care.

Gore's speech won praise from Army Secretary Louis Caldera, who said the vice president "did a tremendous job of talking to the cadets about the kind of challenges that they're go to face in the future."

Caldera told reporters the speech was "absolutely not" in violation of academy rules against political addresses. "I think there was great care taken to make sure that this was not a political speech."

The only politicians West Point allows to address cadets are the president, vice president and U.S. House speaker.

FDA investigating eBay auction of substance that sickened students

NEWARK, N.J. (AP) — The U.S. Food and Drug Administration is investigating the online auction of a cough medicine ingredient that left four boarding school students hospitalized.

The Internet auction operator, eBay, said Friday it will cooperate with authorities and provide the names of sellers, bidders and buyers. An eBay spokesman said the company found five online sales of the drug in the past month, but he didn't know if the students were among the buyers.

The drug, dextromethorphan hydrobromide, or DXM, is a common ingredient in over-the-counter cough medicines, but in large quantities, it can produce a hallucinogenic high and cause vomiting, unconsciousness and, in some cases, death.

The four 17-year-olds were hospitalized Tuesday night after one was brought to the school nurse's office disoriented and vomiting. A boy in the same condition was later found in his room, and another student found two unresponsive girls behind a nearby church and flagged down a police car, school spokeswoman Susan James said.

James said students told paramedics the victims had taken DXM that had come from eBay, and a bag of white powder was found in the boy's room.

All four students have recovered and will probably leave the Peddie School, in Hightstown, which has a zero tolerance policy on drugs and alcohol, James said.

Flowers are placed on the gate of the Lake Worth Community Middle School in Lake Worth, Fla., Saturday. Teacher Barry Grunow was shot and killed at the school on Friday.

Grand jury to decide whether student, 13, should be tried in teacher's death

WEST PALM BEACH, Fla. (AP) — Scores of grieving children, parents and colleagues brought flowers and notes Saturday to the middle school where a popular English teacher was fatally shot on the last day of classes.

In a courtroom across town, a judge ordered that 13-year-old Nathaniel Brazill remain in custody while a grand jury decides whether the honor student should be tried in Barry Grunow's death.

The seventh-grader had been sent home by an assistant principal Friday around 1 p.m. for throwing water balloons in class. According to police, he rode his bicycle back to school about two hours later with a semi-automatic pistol in his pocket.

The pistol — a compact, 5-inch model called a Raven — was loaded with four bullets he had stolen from his grandfather's dresser drawer a week before, Police Chief William Smith said.

Brazill was trying to talk to two girls in Grunow's class. When the teacher told him to leave, police say, he pulled out the gun and shot Grunow in the head. Grunow, 35, was the father of two and had worked at the school for seven years.

Police say the boy rode away on his bicycle, but flagged down a police officer about a quarter of a mile from the school and surrendered. He told investigators he liked Grunow.

"Everybody's talking about the gun, but we need to try to figure out what made him do that," said Corey Jackson, a pastor and neighbor of Brazill's.

Early Saturday, Brazill, wearing a two-piece khaki jail uniform, his wrists shackled, appeared before Palm Beach County Circuit Court Judge Jorge LaBarga and a courtroom packed with cameras and reporters.

His parents were visibly distraught, but the boy's expression was obstructed from view. He was flanked by two public defenders, who said they are still working on how to best represent their client.

"It is too premature, we need to spend more time with our client," said lawyer Damon Amedeo.

Brazill is being held at the Palm Beach Regional Juvenile Detention Center in West Palm Beach. The grand jury has to review the case by June 17.

Curtains were drawn Saturday at the home of Brazill's parents.

An elderly man answered the door and said the family was not yet ready to comment.

"As far as I know, he was real good," said Jackson, Brazill's neighbor. "They were supposed to go to church with us last night. We're still in shock."

Outside Lake Worth Middle School, a memorial of flowers and posters covered a 40-foot section of the school's fence. Parents and children hugged, cried and tried to console one another.

Many of the messages were addressed to "Shaggy," a nickname given to Grunow because of his hair.

Students, parents and school officials said he was well-liked and known for unconventional methods, like reading J.R.R. Tolkien's "The Hobbit" aloud in class with different voices for the characters. Students said he regularly joined them in pickup basketball games after school.

At least 200 people stopped at the school Saturday to speak with grief counselors, who also planned to be there Sunday.

"I know how my children are taking this, and I just don't have the answers," said Beverly Hart.

Her 12-year-old daughter Amber should have been in Grunow's class, but her mother asked her to stay home. It's a practice Hart has followed the past few years with all her children on the last day of classes out of concern that kids are likely to bring weapons or fight, she said.

Even though she was absent, Hart came home to find Amber "shaking from head to toe hysterically on the couch" Friday after finding out about the shooting.

"He was a great man. I always enjoyed it when my kids were going to be in his classes," said Hart. "Every way you look at it, it's a tragedy. It's scary."

Gore warns against Bush's defense plan

WEST POINT, N.Y. (AP) — Al Gore criticized George W. Bush's proposal to cut America's nuclear arsenal whether Russia does the same, telling West Point cadets Saturday that it "will create instability and undermine our security."

"Nuclear unilateralism will hinder, rather than help, arms control," Gore said in a commencement address that did not mention his Republican presidential rival by name while warning of dangers in Bush's defense plan.

The vice president's aides billed the speech as an official statement of U.S. policy and the Army secretary said it did not violate guidelines against political speeches at the United States Military Academy.

Stressing his credentials to serve as commander in chief, Democrat Gore told more than 940 graduates and guests at Mitchie Stadium: "I know what you need to do your jobs."

Bush last week proposed reducing the U.S. nuclear stockpile to its "lowest possible number consistent with our national security," even without Russia making cuts. The Texas governor paired the cuts with a broad national security review that must include a missile defense system

The Texas governor also opposes a treaty that bans worldwide test of nuclear weapons. It was rejected by the Senate last year as critics said it would compromise national security. Gore has said he will resubmit the treaty to the Senate if elected president.

Gore, in his 25-minute speech, warned about the possible consequences of Bush's proposals.

"An approach that combines serious unilateral reductions with an attempt to build a massive defensive system will create instability, and thus undermine our security," the Democratic candidate said.

The Bush campaign, in response, accused the administration of a failure of leadership and a lack of commitment to the armed forces.

Administration policies have left the military "underpaid, undertrained and overextended," Bush campaign spokeswoman Mindy Tucker said in a statement issued before Gore's speech. The governor's "vision for the American military realizes that the issues of military readiness and morale must be addressed by the next president."

The campaign sparring over defense policy comes as President Clinton heads to Moscow for arms talks next weekend with President Vladimir Putin.

Clinton and Boris Yeltsin, Putin's predecessor, agreed in 1997 that a START III accord would further reduce their countries' nuclear arsenals by about 1,000 warheads, to between 2,000 and 2,500. Recently, the Russians have suggested going even lower, perhaps to 1,500.

Late Friday, en route to New York from a campaign stop in Tennessee, Gore scoffed at what he called Bush's "wildly optimistic" plan, saying it amounts to "a formula ... for a reignited arms race."

"If you're not careful, you could have fewer missiles and a more dangerous world," he said aboard Air Force Two.

Gore favors a limited missile defense system that he says can be accomplished by amending the 1972 Anti-Ballistic Missile Treaty, which now forbids building a national system. The Russians have said they will put arms control treaties on hold if the United States violates the treaty.

Bush has said he will act even if Russia disapproves. Gore said continued negotiations over further arms reductions are needed.

Gore, in his speech to cadets, said he is aware this his own military service as an Army journalist for five months in Vietnam "doesn't match that of others on this stage — or what you will see in your careers."

Still, he said, he knows "what it's like to meet a responsibility to our country."

Bush served in the Texas Air National Guard during Vietnam. And as governor of Texas, he lacks the foreign policy experience of Gore.

The vice president said that to remain pre-eminent, the military must evolve into an Information Age force by taking advantage of the latest technology. That, he said, "will require foresight, technical skill and a clear understanding of the nature of war."

Echoing Clinton administration themes, Gore also said he would:

- Improve the pay and quality of life for service members.
- Bolster recruitment and training programs.
- And increase access to education, affordable housing and medical care.

Gore's speech won praise from Army Secretary Louis Caldera, who said the vice president "did a tremendous job of talking to the cadets about the kind of challenges that they're go to face in the future."

Caldera told reporters the speech was "absolutely not" in violation of academy rules against political addresses. "I think there was great care taken to make sure that this was not a political speech."

The only politicians West Point allows to address cadets are the president, vice president and U.S. House speaker.

FDA investigating eBay auction of substance that sickened students

NEWARK, N.J. (AP) — The U.S. Food and Drug Administration is investigating the online auction of a cough medicine ingredient that left four boarding school students hospitalized.

The Internet auction operator, eBay, said Friday it will cooperate with authorities and provide the names of sellers, bidders and buyers. An eBay spokesman said the company found five online sales of the drug in the past month, but he didn't know if the students were among the buyers.

The drug, dextromethorphan hydrobromide, or DXM, is a common ingredient in over-the-counter cough medicines, but in large quantities, it can produce a hallucinogenic high and cause vomiting, unconsciousness and, in some cases, death.

The four 17-year-olds were hospitalized Tuesday night after one was brought to the school nurse's office disoriented and vomiting. A boy in the same condition was later found in his room, and another student found two unresponsive girls behind a nearby church and flagged down a police car, school spokeswoman Susan James said.

James said students told paramedics the victims had taken DXM that had come from eBay, and a bag of white powder was found in the boy's room.

All four students have recovered and will probably leave the Peddie School, in Hightstown, which has a zero tolerance policy on drugs and alcohol, James said.

Flowers are placed on the gate of the Lake Worth Community Middle School in Lake Worth, Fla., Saturday. Teacher Barry Grunow was shot and killed at the school on Friday.

Grand jury to decide whether student, 13, should be tried in teacher's death

WEST PALM BEACH, Fla. (AP) — Scores of grieving children, parents and colleagues brought flowers and notes Saturday to the middle school where a popular English teacher was fatally shot on the last day of classes.

In a courtroom across town, a judge ordered that 13-year-old Nathaniel Brazill remain in custody while a grand jury decides whether the honor student should be tried in Barry Grunow's death.

The seventh-grader had been sent home by an assistant principal Friday around 1 p.m. for throwing water balloons in class. According to police, he rode his bicycle back to school about two hours later with a semi-automatic pistol in his pocket.

The pistol — a compact, 5-inch model called a Raven — was loaded with four bullets he had stolen from his grandfather's dresser drawer a week before, Police Chief William Smith said.

Brazill was trying to talk to two girls in Grunow's class. When the teacher told him to leave, police say, he pulled out the gun and shot Grunow in the head. Grunow, 35, was the father of two and had worked at the school for seven years.

Police say the boy rode away on his bicycle, but flagged down a police officer about a quarter of a mile from the school and surrendered. He told investigators he liked Grunow.

"Everybody's talking about the gun, but we need to try to figure out what made him do that," said Corey Jackson, a pastor and neighbor of Brazill's.

Early Saturday, Brazill, wearing a two-piece khaki jail uniform, his wrists shackled, appeared before Palm Beach County Circuit Court Judge Jorge LaBarga and a courtroom packed with cameras and reporters.

His parents were visibly distraught, but the boy's expression was obstructed from view. He was flanked by two public defenders, who said they are still working on how to best represent their client.

"It is too premature, we need to spend more time with our client," said lawyer Damon Amedeo.

Brazill is being held at the Palm Beach Regional Juvenile Detention Center in West Palm Beach. The grand jury has to review the case by June 17.

Curtains were drawn Saturday at the home of Brazill's parents.

An elderly man answered the door and said the family was not yet ready to comment.

"As far as I know, he was real good," said Jackson, Brazill's neighbor. "They were supposed to go to church with us last night. We're still in shock."

Outside Lake Worth Middle School, a memorial of flowers and posters covered a 40-foot section of the school's fence. Parents and children hugged, cried and tried to console one another.

Many of the messages were addressed to "Shaggy," a nickname given to Grunow because of his hair.

Students, parents and school officials said he was well-liked and known for unconventional methods, like reading J.R.R. Tolkien's "The Hobbit" aloud in class with different voices for the characters. Students said he regularly joined them in pickup basketball games after school.

At least 200 people stopped at the school Saturday to speak with grief counselors, who also planned to be there Sunday.

"I know how my children are taking this, and I just don't have the answers," said Beverly Hart.

Her 12-year-old daughter Amber should have been in Grunow's class, but her mother asked her to stay home. It's a practice Hart has followed the past few years with all her children on the last day of classes out of concern that kids are likely to bring weapons or fight, she said.

Ride helping keep Memorial Day message alive

"In Flanders fields the poppies blow
Between the crosses,

Bill McNeill was upset. He thought that Memorial Day was being forgotten. So McNeill decided to do something about it. He organized the Memorial Day event he calls "A Ride To Remember."

McNeill, a veteran of the Vietnam War, doesn't want Memorial Day or its timeless message of patriotism and selflessness to be pushed to the wayside and forgotten. That would be the real tragedy. When a nation forgets those who fight in its wars to defend its way of life, it is danger of losing that way of life.

The first "Ride to Remember" was held last year. This Memorial Day, to be observed Monday, will mark the 2nd Annual "Ride to Remember," as McNeill and others climb aboard their motorcycles while others ride bicycles, or follow the bikers in automobiles, for a trip from the Permian Basin Vietnam Veterans Memorial at Midland International Airport to the Howard County Vietnam Memorial in Big Spring.

Fortunately because of people like Bill McNeill and all those who will be on the ride with him Monday the sacrifices paid by so many Americans through the decades will not be forgotten.

The exercise is intended to make Americans stop and think about the sacrifice that thousands of their countrymen have made through the years. Many times it involves the ultimate sacrifice. It did in Vietnam, Korea, in World War II, World War I, the Civil War and all the other wars this country has been involved in.

Even when it doesn't end in the ultimate sacrifice being paid, war marks all those it touches — leaving torn, even shattered lives in its wake.

Fortunately because of people like Bill McNeill and all those who will be on the ride with him Monday the sacrifices paid by so many Americans through the decades will not be forgotten. Memorial Day will not be relegated to the status of "just another day off of work." And the poppies will not be left, alone, waving in the breeze in a lonesome cemetery.

Memorial Day and the sacrifices of all those who fight our wars will be remembered — forever.

Today in History

Today is Sunday, May 28, the 149th day of 2000. There are 217 days left in the year.

Today's Highlight in History:

On May 28, 1863, the first black regiment from the North left Boston to fight in the Civil War.

On this date:

In 1533, England's Archbishop declared the marriage of King Henry VIII to Anne Boleyn valid.

In 1892, the Sierra Club was organized in San Francisco.

In 1934, the Dionne quintuplets — Annette, Cecile, Emilie, Marie and Yvonne — were born to Elzire Dionne at the family farm in Ontario, Canada.

In 1937, Neville Chamberlain became prime minister of Britain.

In 1940, during World War II, the Belgian army surrendered to invading German forces.

In 1972, the Duke of Windsor, who had abdicated the English throne to marry Wallis Warfield Simpson, died in Paris at age 77.

In 1977, 165 people were killed when fire raced through the Beverly Hills Supper Club in Southgate, Ky.

In 1984, President Reagan led a state funeral at Arlington National Cemetery for an unidentified American soldier killed in the Vietnam War. (The remains were later exhumed and identified as those of Air Force 1st Lt. Michael J. Blassie, and were sent to St. Louis for hometown burial.)

In 1985, David Jacobsen, director of the American University Hospital in Beirut, Lebanon, was abducted by pro-Iranian kidnappers, (He was freed 17 months later.)

In 1987, Mathias Rust, a 19-year-old West German pilot, landed a private plane in Moscow's Red Square after evading Soviet air defenses.

Ten years ago: Iraqi President Saddam Hussein opened a two-day Arab League summit in Baghdad with a keynote address in which he said if Israel were to deploy nuclear or chemical weapons against Arabs, Iraq would respond with "weapons of mass destruction."

Bush stops Schwarzkopf 24 hours short of victory

WASHINGTON — Recent allegations of unnecessary killing after the conclusion of the Gulf War have once again brought to the fore questions about the allied conduct of the war. But what really happened in the closing hours of Desert Storm? Did the operation's commander, Gen. Norman Schwarzkopf, urge a finishing of the job just as President George Bush was throwing away victory with both hands?

Anderson

The answer is yes. Here is the story, pieced together from several high-ranking sources. Schwarzkopf's plan consisted of several elements:

1. A feint by amphibious forces to tie down substantial numbers of Iraqi troops in coastal defenses in Iraq and occupied Kuwait.

2. A drive by coalition forces headlong into Kuwait from Saudi Arabia to fix in place the main force of Iraq's army.

3. The now-famous left hook, which entailed an incredible logistics effort to move Schwarzkopf's main attack force far to the west in the Saudi desert, from where it was launched in a massive dash to the Euphrates River.

4. The Euphrates River bridges were knocked out as a part of the most successful air campaign in history, a campaign that was designed to isolate the battlefield through interdiction of supplies, reinforcements and infrastructure.

It was known that much of the vaunted Iraqi Republican Guard was being held in reserve north of Kuwait along the Euphrates. The idea was for the left hook to catch the Guard with its bridges down; and the Guard nearly complied, believing it could retreat to Baghdad without crossing the river. Until what should have been too late, the Iraqi commanders did not see the left hook coming, a left hook that, once it reached the Euphrates, would cut the Guard off.

It did not happen, and now there is talk in some circles about blaming one or more of the commanders who led the left hook on the theory that they did not move as quickly as they might have. It is hard to say if there is any validity to this claim, but it has the odor of politics, the odor of scapegoating.

What our sources tell us is that Schwarzkopf and Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff Colin Powell were talking three to four times a day during the critical final stages of Desert Storm. On the final day, Schwarzkopf asked Powell to give him 24 hours more to close the trap on the Republican Guard.

At the same time, President Bush was asking Powell if the battlefield was secure. Powell passed the question on to Schwarzkopf, who naturally answered affirmatively — there being a wide gulf between the concepts of security and victory. As a result, Bush ordered an end to hostilities, and much of the Republican Guard escaped.

Bush's principal adviser in the matter was Gen. Brent Scowcroft, the national security adviser, who boasted that he was spending more time with the president than Barbara Bush was. His primary concern was that the breakup of Iraq would place Iran in a dominant position. Therefore, he advised against the destruction of the Iraqi army.

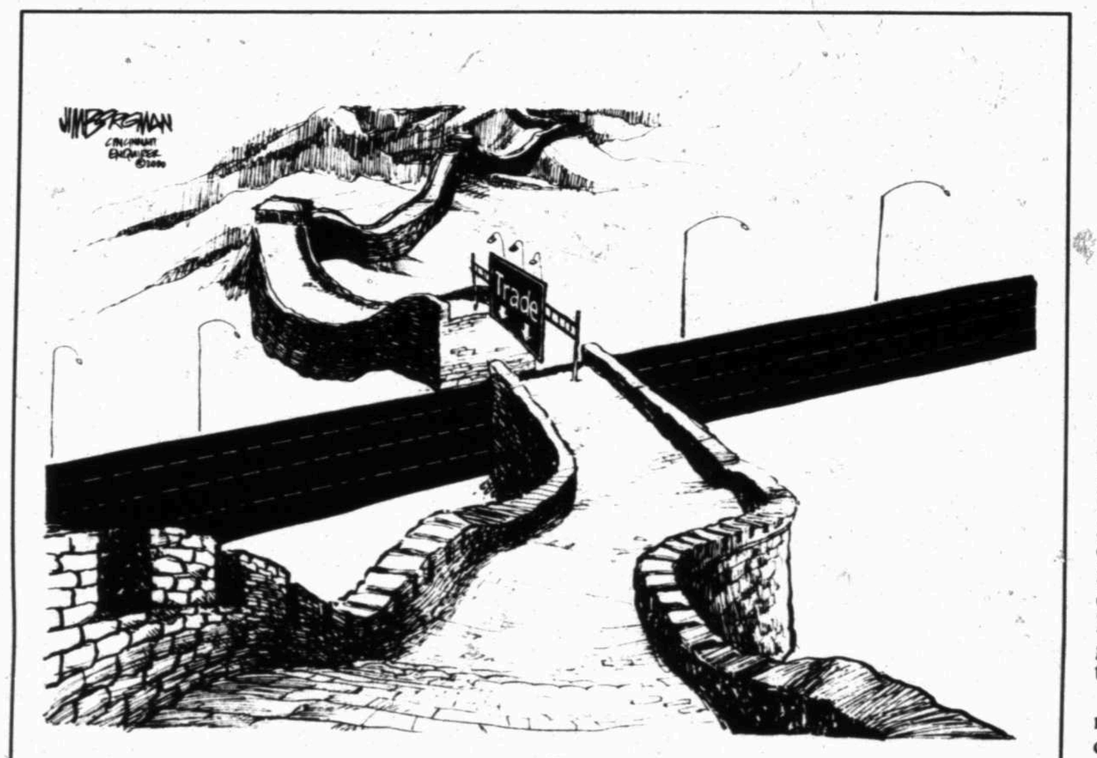

Meanwhile, the CIA, broadcasting from Saudi Arabia, was calling for the overthrow of Iraq's leader, Saddam Hussein. What was intended was a military coup, and Iraqi defectors were being encouraged in this direction by Saudi and Syrian operatives. But the wrong people responded. Kurds and Shiites rose up, only to be slaughtered by the Republican Guard, which Bush, upon Scowcroft's advice, had saved. It was a classic case of a government working at cross purposes with itself.

The slaughter was carried out by an expert, the same Ali Hassan Najid — Saddam's cousin — who had directed the use of mustard gas against Kurdish civilians a few years earlier. Later he led the rape of Kuwait. So it was no surprise that in the midst of the Kurdish revolt, he introduced himself to peace-seeking Kurdish leaders as "Chemical Ali."

They got the message. Theirs was a revolt without allies. Turks and Soviets, historically opposed to an independent Kurdistan because part of it would come from Kurdish-populated portions of their own countries, opposed aid to the Kurds. Virtually everyone — especially the Saudis — opposed aiding the Iran-supported Shiites.

So the Republican Guard escaped, the revolt was put down, and Saddam remained in power — all because Schwarzkopf was stopped 24 hours short of victory.

What's up with the dash — will it last?

The stately colon, the confiding parenthesis and the gently pausing comma demand to know: What's behind today's big dash to the dash? Why has this lingua interruptus — expressing uncertainty, jerking the reader around, setting up startling conclusions, imitating patterns of speech — come to dominate our prose?

In the preceding paragraph, I used a pair of dashes to interrupt a sentence and insert supplementary material that gave the question meaning or — to writers, at least — urgency. I could as easily have used a pair of parentheses, specifically designed for the purpose of graceful interjection of useful explication.

Safire

In the sentence beginning the previous paragraph, I could again have used parentheses ("parens" to friends) or even commas to separate the mild interjection of "to writers, at least," but I didn't. Why not? Because I have fallen into the habit of trying too often to make writing read like speaking.

The spoken sentence is filled with uttered second thoughts, changes of direction, lurches off on tangents and similar twists. That's because we say what we think as we think it, and thoughts have a way of tumbling over one another, and we stick them in our flow of words as each notion comes to us.

In this age of raw transcription, art strains to imitate life, and artful writers feel the pressure to mirror the speech patterns of yammering people by imitating their higgledy-piggledy outpouring of unedited thoughts.

That transcribed-speech technique is fine for writers of fiction and is especially apt for playwrights and screenwriters who reveal their characters' characters realistically through their speech. Some characters blurt their thoughts, showing honesty; others weasel their words, showing duplicity; yet others expostulate grammatically but endlessly, showing off.

Writers of drama must write speech, not writing, because real people do not speak writing. Hence we have pauses, delays — you get my drift? — half-stops, restarts, stammering and exclamatory grunts (ugh!) and drifting off into pre-dot-com ellipses .... To put this speech in written form — that is, to transcribe it — we have seen the powerful punch — pow! right in the kisser — of illustrative punctuation.

Good dramatic writers are in favor of whatever turns the reader on. In an 1863 poem, the poet Emily Dickinson, writing in the halting voice of a woman dying, used the dash to signify gasping for breath: "I am alive — I guess —/The Branches on my Hand/Are full of Morning Glory — And at my finger's end —/The Carmine — tingles warm —/And if I hold a Glass/Across my Mouth — it blurs it —/Physician's — proof of Breath —/I am alive."

In our time, the writing of Tom Wolfe has made stylish use of the dash; he combines it with italics and the midsentence exclamation point to indicate herky-jerkiness or panic in thinking.

In an article in the current Harper's deriding the critics of American "triumphalism," the iconoclastic Wolfe steps into their shoes to write, "After the Soviet archives were opened up — I mean, damn! — it looks like Hiss and the Rosenbergs actually were Soviet agents — and even the Witch Hunt, which was one of the bedrocks of our beliefs — damn again! —." That's the use of fictional internal monologue in a nonfiction article, and the dash does its job of chopping up the speech.

But writers of narrative and exposition, as well as those who present fiction in the third person, choose to use the language in the voice of the writer and not of a character.

Writing is different from speaking. Organize your written thoughts so that you don't have to stud your sentences with asides, sudden additions, curses or last-minute entries. Limit your use of the dash to its indisp — to those functions where it beats the other punctuation pauses — or else.

Bush plan for Social Security shows he's leader

WASHINGTON — Suddenly, this presidential campaign is larger than Bill Clinton's mini-presidency, which has reached the 89th of its 96 months without seriously attempting to meet the principal domestic challenge of its era, entitlement reform. Suddenly, Social Security, the biggest and most popular program of big government — the program that calls the country's bluff, proving that although Americans praise Jeffersonian minimalism in government, they demand a large, active, ameliorative Hamiltonian government —is the great issue in this election.

Will

George W. Bush made it so with his decision to propose allowing Americans to devote a small portion, perhaps one-sixth, of their payroll taxes to personal retirement accounts invested in some well-established stock and bond funds. Because the crisis of the system, although predictable, is not imminent, dealing with Social Security's future just now is optional and potentially hazardous, politically. Therefore Bush is demonstrating leadership. He also is plucking up a banner from some Democratic senators.

It will be many years before the imbalance between Social Security revenues and promised benefits becomes acute. There can be three ingredients to a solution — cutting benefits, raising payroll taxes (close to 80 percent of Americans already pay more in payroll taxes than in income taxes) and causing retirement resources to grow faster than they do under the current Social Security system.

This third is the core of Bush's solution. Al Gore's proposal is to increase benefits (for working mothers who take time off to raise children) in the near term, and in the longer term—here Gore's plan is a more radical departure from Social Security's premises than Bush's is—to turn Social Security into a welfare program by large infusions of general revenues.

Gore says Bush's plan would put retirement resources horribly at risk. Gore compares participation in the stock market to rolling "dice" or playing "roulette" in a "casino." His rhetoric radiates fear and incomprehension of one of America's central economic institutions, by which capital is raised and allocated to productive uses.

Gore's rhetoric has about it the ring of the '90s—the 1890s, when Wall Street was feared and demonized. Today polls show that the only age cohort opposed to some modest diversion of payroll taxes to personal retirement accounts is Americans over 70. And among voters under 35, there is support of landslide proportions. If Gore does not understand why, he evidently missed the 1990s. Writing in National Review, Ramesh Ponnuru notes that in 1989, a high priority of the new Republican president, George Bush, was a cut in the capital gains tax. He could not get it. In 1997, a Democratic president signed a capital gains tax cut. What had changed? A number of things, but most important was the process that produced this number: Between 1989 and 1997, more than (BEG ITAL)25 million(END ITAL) additional Americans became owners of stocks.

Democracies make difficult decisions under the lash of necessity. Americans radically changed the role of the central government in the 1930s not because they read John Maynard Keynes' "The General Theory of Employment, Interest, and Money," but because a large event—the Great Depression—frightened them.

SPEAKING OUT

Please, take time to thank a veteran this Memorial Day

By Bill McNeill

Good morning America!

Are you planning to go to one of the many sales events going on this weekend? Or maybe to the lake, a barbecue, a party, have fun? Is everything packed? Have you forgotten anything? I think you have. Have you forgotten what Memorial Day is really about?

Let me remind you just a little — World War I (might be a stretch), World War II, Korea, Vietnam, Panama, Lebanon, Grenada, Somalia, Desert Storm. What do these places have in common? In each country, the blood of young Americans was spilled in the name of freedom.

Memorial Day is the only day of the year set aside to honor these fallen warriors. I want you to enjoy your weekend, but I also ask you to remember the cost of your freedoms. The price was obscenely high.

America, these young people marched into battle for you full of their hopes and dreams. Way too many came home in a flag-draped coffin to be buried and seemingly forgotten by you. Just because you may not have lost anyone in your family or one of your close friends, you did lose someone. They all died for you and they all were special — they were some of our best and brightest. They gave it all for you. Don't you think you owe them something? Just a few minutes of prayer on this Memorial Day? Take some time to reflect on what you might be having to do if they hadn't answered the call.

A Vietnam veteran who served with the U.S. Navy Special Forces in River Section 542 in the Rung Sat zone during 1966 and 1967, Bill McNeill is a native of Alpine who has lived in Midland more than four decades. He is a heavy equipment operator for the road and bridge department of Midland County.

I read it in the papers, see and hear on TV about who makes the best role models or heroes, they debate about rock stars, sports stars, movie stars — they're not even close. Look at our national cemeteries and see the rows upon rows of white headstones of the true heroes of this country.

Moms and Dads, tell your children and have them tell their children and keep their memory alive. Be proud of this country and her heroes.

It's not hard for me to remember that one of my closest friends was killed in the A-Shau Valley of Vietnam. Other friends and some of my classmates were also killed in 'Nam. I lost one of my uncles in World War II and almost lost my hero (my Dad) in that war.

You can silently give thanks to the dead, but you can speak to the living. If you don't know a vet, make it a point to meet one. Look into their eyes, past the pain and memories, and just say "thank you." That's all any of us have ever asked.

To all my brothers and sisters who paid the price for my freedom — thank you and God bless you, and to you, Curtis — rest in peace, stand to your post and guard the gates. I look forward to seeing you again.

God bless America and never forget!

Creationist misses the point of science

R.C. Holley wrote a letter (Letters, May 21) headlined "Evolutionist misses real truth of creation."

The problem is not so much what Holley doesn't know, as what he knows that isn't so.

Science works by testing a hypothesis against the evidence. A scientist must not invest himself too deeply in his hypothesis to reject it when the evidence does not support it.

The hypothesis, for the creationist, is that God created the world. It is a hypothesis the creationist is not willing to reject under any circumstances, despite all evidence.

For that alone, his science is suspect.

Faith is belief in the absence of evidence. For creationists to attempt to prove scientifically their hypothesis that God created the world is not only bad science — it's bad faith.

Midland children are well-behaved

My experience as a crossing guard at Neely and Lanham for the past two years has been pleasant and rewarding. The children have all been very well-behaved and have shown respect to their elders. They are always well-dressed and look neat. Not one of the little ones has ever had to be asked twice to walk their bicycle across the street. A smile always comes to my face as I notice the determined look on their little faces as they jump off their bicycles and their feet start pounding the pavement (some with their shoes completely untied!)

I have heard some say that children are not learning in school, but I know these children are learning fast. I asked one very small child if she could read and write. The answer was "sure." She took a pen and printed her name perfectly. With the attitude and appearance of these children, I know their parents are doing a good job at home. The teachers prove they are doing a good job at school. My prayer is that these little ones will keep themselves free from drugs and alcohol and keep the excellent attitude they now have.

Thanks to the parents and teachers.

Music should not be sacrificed for change

First, a word of thanks to the Midland Reporter-Telegram for making front-page news of the Midland Independent School District proposal to eliminate or severely curtail the elementary strings program because of the cost of the proposed magnet schools.

When we moved to Midland just about a year ago, I was so delighted at the quality and number of musical events available. I was also very impressed with the quality of the school music programs, especially the string programs that I have heard. It is certainly an educational asset to which the city can point with pride when talking to individuals and businesses looking for a place to locate. Now we are told this program may be gutted in order to fund the magnet school program. Certainly both the music program and the magnet school concept are most valuable to those young people who currently or in the future will participate in either one. But it should not be an either-or decision.

As a professional independent music teacher, I have always tried to stay abreast of the new developments in music education of all types and it always amazes me that in the past two generations of students, whenever a budget crisis comes up, the first cut on the list so often is music! Somewhere in our educational philosophy there has developed the idea that 1) music is a frill, 2) only for entertainment, 3) only for "talented" individuals and not for everybody. Only recently has it begun to be examined and found to be helpful in developing mental skills that benefit general learning capabilities. We have only just begun to understand that music is as basic to human life as walking, talking, using tools, and other qualities that distinguish the human race from other forms of life! It is not a new idea. The Greeks knew it over 2,000 years ago! It has been around since the beginning of time.

It is not a question of either music or magnet schools. Some way must be found both to preserve a successful and valuable educational asset and to find new ways to go forward in developing new programs for the new technologies and occupations that this century will need.

MHS team exhibited true sportsmanship

I was at the Midland High School–Abilene Cooper baseball games on Saturday. All of Midland should be proud of the effort and sportsmanship displayed by the young men on the MHS baseball team.

Yeah, I know they didn't win but they showed a lot of heart and spirit. Those young men gave all of us an exhibition of what high school athletic endeavors are all about. Even though the breaks did not always go their way, not once did they seem to get down or show an argumentative or haughty attitude. All during the game, they put forth a wonderful effort and seemed to truly believe in themselves even when down by 5–0 in the first game.

Coach Russell should also be congratulated for his coaching attitude displayed on the field. He has shown the fans all season the on-field attitude of a true gentleman.

Thanks, guys, from my family and me for the many entertaining afternoons spent watching you play. We look forward to the years to come.

Midland has needless traffic problems

I am writing this letter in response to the article in the May 22 Midland Reporter-Telegram regarding traffic exiting Loop 250.

What is wrong with this picture? We lived in Dallas two years, Lubbock two years and Houston 10 years. I never remember having these problems exiting the freeways or loops in these cities. I don't know why Midland has this problem. Is there a solution to this problem? I would gladly forego the new landscaping on the off ramps for another exit lane if that would help eliminate some of the danger and if it would help to keep the traffic flowing. Never in all the times I lived in these other cities do I remember having to stop and turn my head around backwards to see if someone is exiting. I guess there were enough lanes in these other cities to keep the traffic flowing. Is there a solution? No, I'm not writing this because I got a ticket — I just really wish there was a way to fix the problem.

Uniform and busing issues collide

May 16 at the school board meeting it was brought out that the magnet schools were to be picked from balloting. Five-thousand ballots were sent out and approximately 1,000 were returned. Interesting, isn't it, that MISD will pick what is taught at magnet schools with a 20 percent return, but to keep uniforms, MISD requires a 50 percent participation? Somewhat of a double standard, is it not? One direction usurps the democratic process by unilaterally determining what number MUST vote in order for a campus to either gain or keep school uniforms, while it is perfectly fine to decide on a magnet school curricula with only 20 percent responding to the balloting.

If those who were so adamant about "parental choice" in what clothing their children could wear were as adamant about parents being able to choose which school their children could attend, perhaps there wouldn't be the inequality in the busing situation. But of course, those self-same battlers of parents' rights aren't having their children bused next fall are they?

Teachers deserve to be paid more

The editorial May 24 was true. Too bad many people do not read the newspaper.

This is my two cents' worth of writing. I survived the 1968 flood with eight or 12 inches of rain in my apartment on D Street. The so-called D Street is the drainage canal for all the main streets to Wadley-Barron Park. If you were to close D Street, the drainage canal would be ended.

Our beautiful Wadley-Barron would go dry. The ducks would not have a place called home.

I am for renovating Midland High School. It is a well-constructed building. The inside could be improved.

I have already heard that the bond will not pass because voters will vote against it. I do not blame them. The loss of oil companies is hurting our community. We are losing many students as well. As much as I hate to say it, Midland's population will be decreasing.

What the educational system needs is fewer students in the classroom instead of 30 or 35 per class. Teachers might do a better job and students would remain in school. If it weren't for the teachers, we would not have doctors, nurses, engineers, etc. This is the profession that is underpaid. Teachers go home and still work with paperwork, plus their family responsibilities.

As a substitute, I can honestly say I make about $6 per hour and have 30 minutes for lunch.

No wonder we have a shortage of teachers.

Yield signs do not prevent accidents

The yield signs cause more accidents than they prevent. I have not seen an accident caused by cars not yielding to off-ramp traffic. However, I have seen several accidents caused by cars stopping for yield signs.

Also, I have had some close calls because of cars that stop for yield signs. The service roads have two lanes for traffic. Remove the yield signs; they create more accidents than they prevent.

Duellers at march should imitate MADD

The duel between Million Mom March Inc. and Second Amendment Sisters Inc. for the hearts and minds of the American people on Sunday should have been spelled d-u-a-l.

Both sides have good ideas about a problem that is still too big to be ignored. ...

To hasten the decline of gun deaths, Donna Dees-Thomases, whose sister-in-law is a close friend of Hillary Clinton ... organized a rally to demand new gun laws. ...

One proposal would close the loophole regarding background checks for buyers at gun shows. Trigger locks and mandatory gun safety classes are among other proposals. ...

To counteract that rally, the Second Sisters were hastily organized. They call for protecting the Second Amendment right to own a gun and for better enforcement of existing laws. ...

Some unsolicited advice to the moms and sisters: Emulate Mothers Against Drunk Driving.

That means being nonpartisan. That means holding people, not cars or guns, responsible for their actions. That means new laws. That means better enforcement of existing laws.

That means working together.

Fed hate crimes plan should be dropped

The federal government should not be policing the thoughts and attitudes of Americans or taking control of state criminal matters. That's why Congress should resist President Clinton's proposal to expand the federal hate crimes law. ...

Hate crimes laws put the government in the unconstitutional role of policing individuals' thoughts and attitudes. ...

Laws against hate crimes expand the government's power into our thoughts and attitudes. The federal statute expands the national government's control over state and local law enforcement. The president's proposal should be dropped on both grounds.

Democrats' move on DeLay frivolous

The Democratic Congressional Campaign Committee needs to heed the old adage of "those who live in glass houses . . ."

That is the most apt way to describe the federal racketeering lawsuit filed earlier this month by Democrats against U.S. Rep. Tom DeLay, R-Texas.

The lawsuit alleges DeLay extorted contributions from donors and transferred the money to three non-profit groups to help fund GOP candidates. This tactic is not a partisan method. It is the art of politics, pure and simple. If DeLay is found guilty of any wrongdoing, which seems highly improbable, the hoosegow is going to be mighty crowded with a bipartisan batch of racketeers masquerading as legislators.

It isn't difficult to determine the origin of such a frivolous lawsuit. Rather than clean up the system both parties use, Democrats played the hypocrite card in an attempt to discredit GOP leadership.

McCain exhibiting what nation needs

An online caption showing Sen. John McCain on the shores of Hanoi's Truc Bach lake referred to the site as the place "where he was rescued after his war plane was shot down." If you call being dragged from the water and beaten "rescued." Then, on a TV newscast here yesterday morning, a reporter noted that McCain's Vietnam trip "offered him a chance to take a stroll down memory lane."

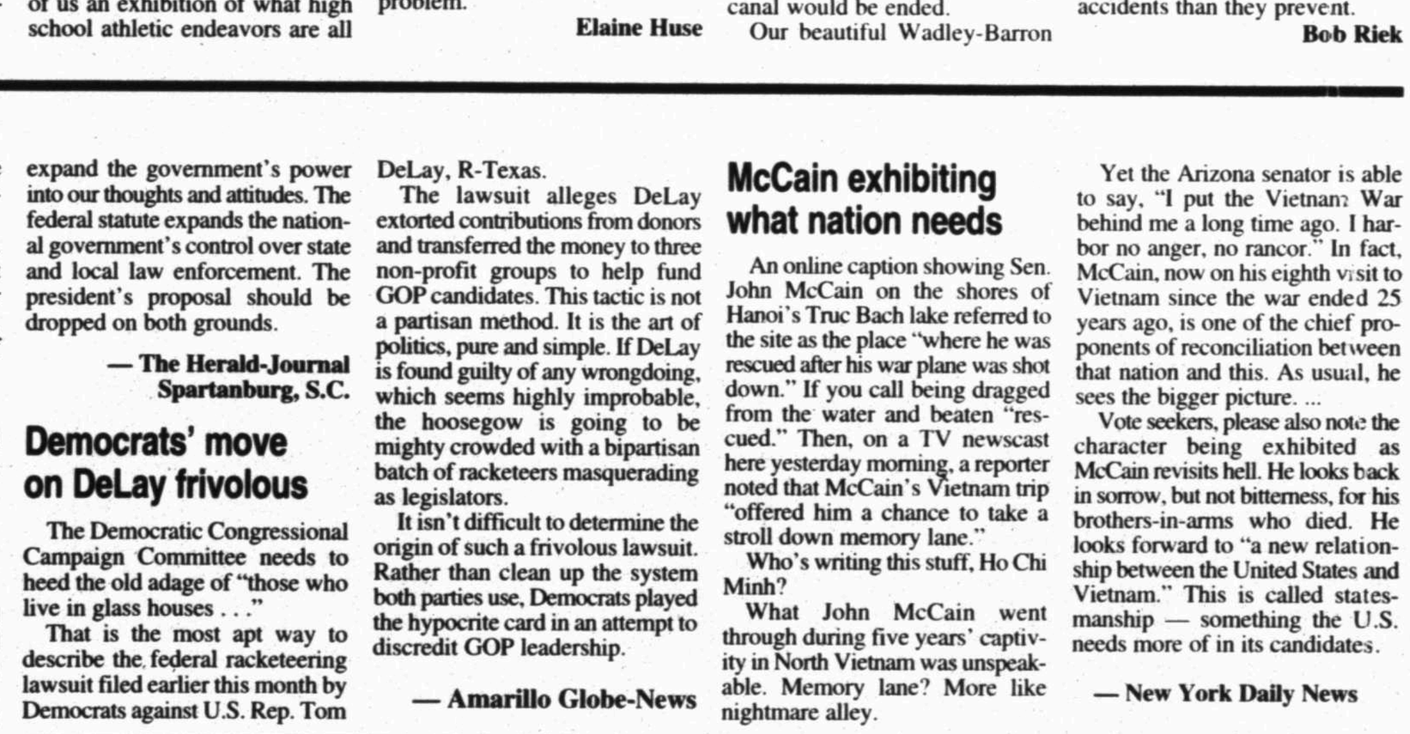

Who's writing this stuff, Ho Chi Minh?

What John McCain went through during five years' captivity in North Vietnam was unspeakable. Memory lane? More like nightmare alley.

Yet the Arizona senator is able to say, "I put the Vietnam War behind me a long time ago. I harbor no anger, no rancor." In fact, McCain, now on his eighth visit to Vietnam since the war ended 25 years ago, is one of the chief proponents of reconciliation between that nation and this. As usual, he sees the bigger picture. ...

Vote seekers, please also note the character being exhibited as McCain revisits hell. He looks back in sorrow, but not bitterness, for his brothers-in-arms who died. He looks forward to "a new relationship between the United States and Vietnam." This is called statesmanship — something the U.S. needs more of in its candidates.

Reigning champion of the West Virginia Liar's contest and Methodist minister Bil Lepp tells tales to a lunchtime crowd in downtown Charleston, West Virginia on Thursday. Lepp is master of ceremonies at this year's contest to be held tdoay, at the state capitol Cultural Center.

Storytellers duke it out at annual Liars Contest

By Malia Rulon
Associated Press

CHARLESTON, W.Va. — What does a gun-shy huntin' dog who chased a bullet smack into a movin' coal train have in common with a fishin' line that caught hold of a marijuana-laden airplane?

They're lies!

Huge, detailed, hilarious lies.

"It usually starts with a kernel of truth and just gets bigger and bigger from there," says Bil Lepp, reigning champion of West Virginia's annual Liars Contest.

The contest, set for today, draws standing-room-only crowds at Charleston's annual Vandalia Gathering, a celebration of the state's folk heritage through arts, music and the telling of the oral histories of Appalachia.

Years ago, before satellite television, there was the "story," that awe-inspiring tale that seemed to grow bigger and more exciting every time it was retold.

"That was our entertainment a lot of times," said 85-year-old Bonnie Collins, who has judged the Liars Contest every year since it started in 1983.

"When I was a child, we didn't have radio or television, so my dad would tell us stories," Collins said. "You have to have a knack for telling a story — some people can and some people can't ... and you have to have a good imagination."

Much of the mountain folklore of Appalachia comes from tales of yesteryear that have been passed from grandparent to grandchild through the generations.

"It's very much part of our Appalachian culture, probably because our culture has been mostly rural," said Ken Sullivan, who founded the Liars Contest as a way to preserve the storytelling tradition.

"In past times, they might do this at a general store or a livestock sale," he said. Now, they gather in Charleston's Cultural Center to exchange the wildest lies they can spin — from embellished fishing tales to supernatural happenings.

Just having a good idea isn't enough, said Tom Drummod, who has amassed a collection of "Golden Shovels" from his Liar Contest wins.

"A good tale is like a song, and if it's not sung right, it doesn't work," he said. "I've seen people get up there who had a good idea, but they didn't sing. And I've seen people who tried to sing, but they didn't have a song."

So what's the secret to telling a good lie?

"Start with something that you're familiar with, and from there, figure out what's funny about it," said Lepp, who has had five first-place wins in the last decade for stories about his gun-shy hunting dog, Buck.

"My brother liked to take a story that was in the news and embellish it," he said of his late brother Paul, who nabbed six golden shovels with his outlandish fishing tales.

With Drummod, it's tales of tails.

"There are dog tails and pig tails and cow tails — even horse tails. And if I get this tale together for Sunday, it's a never-ending tail.

"It's the longest tale you will ever hear — because it's the longest tail I ever saw," he said, though even never-ending tales have to wrap up in 3 to 5 minutes at the Liar Contest..

"The best lies are almost believable, they're based in truth," said John Lilly, editor of the West Virginia Division of Culture and History's GOLDENSEAL magazine, which publishes the best lies every year.

"Start with a true experience and just embellish it beyond the realm of belief," he said.

Winning takes a masterful technique, a well-development story, originality and effectiveness, said Marc Harshman, a contest judge and children's author. And having a personal touch helps.

"It's always very special to me when I recognize a tale that has a sense of history to it ... that he has obviously heard in his own home from his father, who heard it from his father," Harshman said.

Often the characters follow the themes of Brer Rabbit: an average guy outwitting a foe of great strength. And they are almost always set in West Virginia, Sullivan said.

"Among the deepest human needs is the need for a story," Sullivan said. "A story can be very awe-inspiring, it can be funny, it can be scary, but it always addresses our needs to make sense of the world."

With time running out, Clinton seeks major foreign triumph

WASHINGTON (AP) — Embarking Monday on perhaps his last official trip to Europe, President Clinton is running out of time as he scans the globe in search of a major triumph in arms control, peacemaking or crisis-solving to mark his place in history.

With only eight months left in Clinton's final term, however, some experts consider it more likely that he will be remembered not as a bold architect of post-Cold War diplomacy but as a president who, distracted by domestic policy and impeachment, was cautious on international affairs.

"He probably won't be viewed as a foreign policy president," said Miles Kahler, a political scientist at the University of California, San Diego. "What is striking is, particularly as compared to most if not all Cold War presidents, is how little foreign policy seemed to interest him in any deep way."

Clinton sets out Monday night to meet with European Union officials in Portugal, chat with world leaders at an informal gathering in Germany and hold his first summit with Russia's new president, Vladimir Putin. White House expectations are modest.

Sandy Berger, Clinton's national security adviser, said the Moscow visit will produce no breakthroughs in arms control or in Russian objections to a U.S. missile defense system. Clinton has no plans to visit Europe again, but he will see Putin several more times at international meetings before leaving office in January.

Presidential historian Henry Graff said Clinton will be remembered for his earnestness, his openness and "his marvelous persuasive tongue" in dealing with world leaders. But there were no really big successes and probably will not be, Graff said.

"They all look for their place on postage stamps and coins at this stage," Graff said. "But I don't really think he can do much."

Many areas where Clinton stepped in — the Middle East, the Balkans, Northern Ireland — continue to frustrate him, standing as missions unaccomplished.

In Iraq, Saddam Hussein remains in power after defying the United States and sending U.N. weapons inspectors packing. Haiti, another trouble spot, still is plagued by corruption, violence and poverty despite the commitment of 20,000 American troops and billions of dollars.

In an administration that concentrated so hard on the economy, it was hardly surprising that some of Clinton's biggest achievements were in international finance and trade.

He helped steady Asia and Mexico after their economies collapsed. Defying fellow Democrats, Clinton won a major trade-opening agreement with China, approved by the House last week, and forged an alliance with Canada and Mexico in the North American Free Trade Alliance.

"He gets victories when he adopts basically Republican positions," said Kim Holmes, vice president for international studies at the Heritage Foundation.

With support from Republicans, Clinton persuaded NATO to open its doors to former Soviet satellites Poland, Hungary and the Czech Republic. But the GOP also handed Clinton one of his most humiliating defeats, the Senate's defeat of the Comprehensive Test Ban Treaty.

Clinton persuaded Congress to give Russia money to dismantle its nuclear arsenal but failed to reach agreement with Moscow on cutting nuclear warheads.

"After seven years, the U.S. and Russian arsenals pretty much look like what he inherited," said Richard Haass, vice president and director of foreign policy studies at the Brookings Institution.

Berger said Clinton has a strong record.

"There's been a transformation in the trans-Atlantic relationship and in Europe," Berger said. "When we arrived here, people were saying, 'Why do we need NATO?' What's happened? NATO has been enlarged to embrace new democracies and has in a sense a new mission of not just protecting against Soviet invasion but of advancing the common interests of Europe and the United States."

"In Bosnia, we found a war, we made a peace," Berger said. "In Kosovo, at the last year of the bloodiest century in history, the world did not this time stand silent. I think it's a sweeping record."

But Kahler said he was left with a sense of missed opportunities. "If we had a president who had more of a strategic vision about where he wanted relations with Russia and China to go," he said, "we might have come out in a different spot."

Clinton proposes required nutritional labels for meat, poultry

WASHINGTON (AP) — Whether it's a box of Wheaties or a package of hamburger meat, consumers should have easy access to nutritional information, President Clinton said Saturday. He proposed that the government require labels on beef and poultry for the first time.

Nutritional labels, required for processed food since 1994, tell shoppers just how much fat, cholesterol, calories and nutrients are in each serving.

"Providing citizens with accurate information that affects their lives is one of government's most vital responsibilities," Clinton said Saturday in his weekly radio address.

But information alone won't help, he said: "Citizens have a responsibility to use that information wisely."

Clinton also released updated nutritional guidelines that advise more exercise, safe handling of food and moderated sugar consumption. They also suggest that Americans pay attention to nutritional labels.

About six in 10 supermarkets post nutrition information near their meat cases, and some major meatpackers and poultry companies voluntarily put nutrition labels on packages.

Now, Clinton said, "It's time we made it mandatory."

"We wholeheartedly believe in the consumers being informed," said Mary Young, a nutritionist with the National Cattlemen's Beef Association. Nutrition information "not only helps them understand lean cuts of meat but it also helps them understand that meat is packed with iron and zinc."

The Agriculture Department will gather comments about the proposal, which could take effect by the end of the year but may stretch into 2001.

It's the latest in a series of food safety and nutrition initiatives from the administration. This month Clinton ordered new testing requirements for listeria, a pathogen in processed meats. The Food and Drug Administration has proposed expanding nutrition labels on processed foods to include artery-clogging trans fatty acids, a common ingredient in baked goods.

The government's new dietary guidelines for Americans, also released Saturday, are revised every five years to reflect new scientific research.

The 2000 version takes an upbeat approach — "Eating is one of life's greatest pleasures," it says — and adds sections emphasizing the importance of whole grains, exercise and safe handling of food.

Today, Americans make better choices about healthy eating, Clinton said.

"Yet despite this progress, the vast majority of Americans don't have healthy diets," the president said. "We're eating more fast food because of our hectic schedules, and we're less physically active because of our growing reliance on modern conveniences, from cars to computers to remote controls."

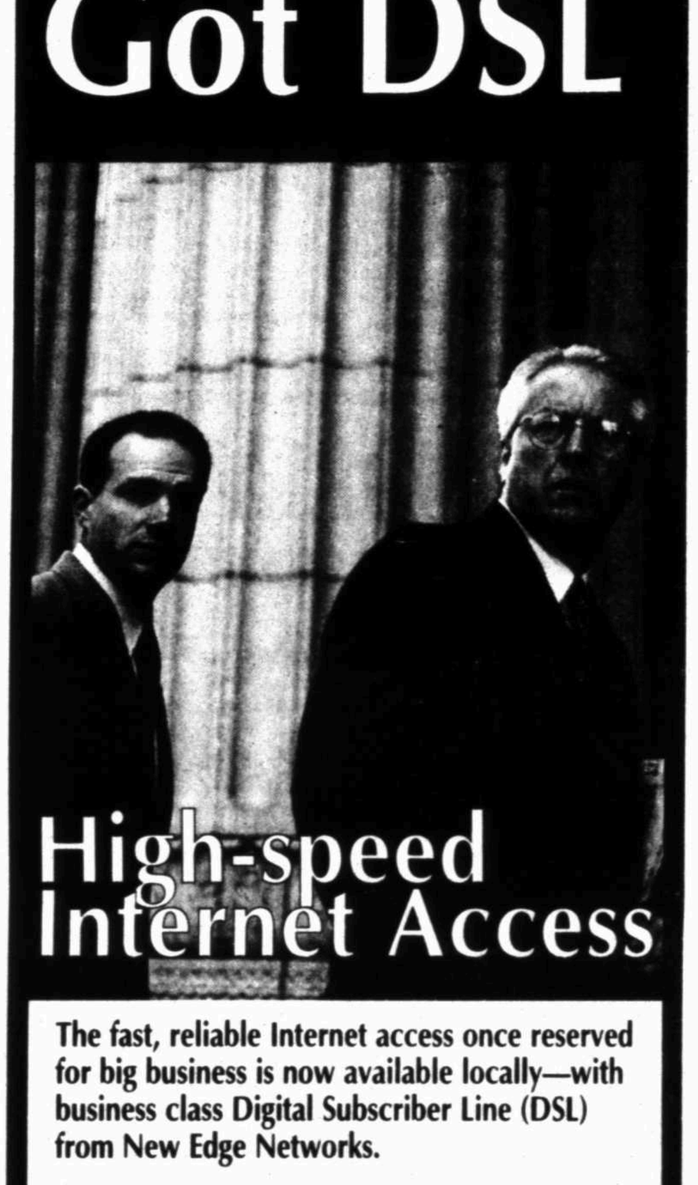

The USDA guidelines, contained in a 39-page booklet, largely followed recommendations of an advisory panel of 11 nutrition experts.

The administration bowed to criticism from the food and soft drink industry, however, and weakened recommendations for the section on sugar that urged consumers to "limit" consumption of sugary foods and beverages. The final version says consumers should "moderate" sugar intake and also deletes the panel's conclusion that Americans have been increasing their consumption of sugar.

After 9 years, NASA saying goodbye to reliable eye on universe

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Compton Gamma Ray Observatory is poised for a suicide plunge to Earth, ending a successful nine-year $670 million space mission that opened a new window on the universe.

Starting Tuesday, NASA engineers will send signals to the satellite to perform a series of rocket firings that will drop the Compton from its 317-mile orbit and send it into a final, fiery dive to the Pacific Ocean early on June 4.

"It will be like losing a member of the family," said Donald A. Kniffen, a NASA scientist who has worked with the Compton since 1979, when the astronomical observatory was little more than engineering sketches and scientific dreams.

Even though the Compton still was capable of collecting science for the world's astronomers, the craft is ailing. After a gyroscope failed, engineers from the National Aeronautics and Space Administration decided to deliberately crash the 17-ton spacecraft while they still could control it.

An analysis showed that if NASA did nothing, the craft would eventually fall on its own, with one-in-1,000 chance of killing someone on Earth. The craft's orbit carries it over some of the most populated areas of the world, including Mexico City, Miami and Bangkok, Thailand.

Using the remaining guidance and control equipment on Compton reduces that risk of fatality to about one in 29 million. NASA chief scientist Ed Weiler said he chose safety over science.

"How much science is worth the risk of even one human life?" Weiler asked when announced his decision.

NASA was not eager to repeat the nail-biting experience of Skylab, the 78-ton space station that crashed in 1979. Engineers had no control over the station when it dropped from space and spread hundreds of pounds of hot metal across the Indian Ocean and into a remote section of western Australia. No one was hurt.

The Compton will be the largest spacecraft brought down in a deliberate, controlled crash.

NASA engineers plan to dump the Compton in a remote part of the Pacific Ocean, 2,500 miles southeast of Hawaii. The impact target is a corridor 16 miles wide and some 1,426 miles long. It angles across the equator, northwest to southeast, and ends about 680 miles south of the Galapagos Islands.

A rocket firing to lower the orbit is scheduled for Tuesday night from the space agency's Goddard Space Flight Center in Greenbelt, Md. A second firing is set for Wednesday. That will set the craft up for two final firings June 4.

The rocket thrust will slow the Compton enough to drop it into the atmosphere, where friction heat will burn up most of the craft. The main concern is for six 1,800-pound aluminum I-beams that may survive the re-entry and splash into the ocean.

Kniffen said he is approaching the end of Compton with a mixture of sadness and pride.

Since the craft was launched April 5, 1991, he said, the instruments on the Compton have completely changed the way astronomers view the universe.

The instruments were designed to detect gamma rays, an energetic form of light invisible to the eye and hardly detectable on Earth.

But in space, the Compton found that the whole universe was bathed in gamma rays, with explosions occurring in distant galaxies almost daily.

Before Compton, Kniffen said, astronomers thought gamma ray bursts, the most energetic events in the universe, could be detected only in the Milky Way, the home galaxy of the Earth and Sun.

"Within months of its launch, we had proof that gamma ray bursts were coming from all directions in the universe," he said. "We realized that some of them were coming from very early in the history of the universe," which means they were far beyond the Milky Way and were very, very powerful.

During its mission, the Compton detected about 400 such bursts. Some of its detections came quickly enough to alert other observatories which then collected observations in visible light and X-rays.

Safety experts fear highway distractions may lead to increase in traffic accidents

N.Y. Times News Service

As millions of Americans travel this Memorial Day weekend, they are joined by family, friends and what has become for many an indispensable companion on a car trip, the cellular phone.

Tens of thousands of other drivers will also be on the highways equipped with wireless and Internet hookups in vehicles that can deliver faxes to the driver's seat, provide maps to neighborhood streets or faraway destinations, or route hungry travelers to good restaurants.

The information highway is merging with the nation's highways at breakneck speed, and safety experts fear that with so many distractions — even television — the devices may lead to an increase in traffic accidents.

Some law enforcement officials say cell phones have become the latest, and most common, distraction on the highway, and some have begun to note an increase in the number of accidents caused by drivers using cell phones.

But safety researchers say no reliable data exist that show cell phone usage by motorists to be any more distracting than tuning car radios or drinking coffee.

In any event, the proliferation of cell phone use by drivers has raised the concerns of public safety officials and the telecommunications industry. A few communities, but no states, have banned the use of phones while driving.

The National Highway Traffic Safety Administration, in a report two years ago, recommended more research about cell phones in cars, more education of drivers about their use and tracking by the police when phones are thought to be involved in accidents.

Law enforcement officers say their experience tells them that drivers are violating common sense.

"Most of the communications found in the office and home are becoming commonplace in cars and trucks and there's no question they can be very distracting," said Col. Charles C. Hall, director of the Florida Highway Patrol. "Put a telephone in the hand of a very aggressive driver and you have a greater problem."

The industry estimates that Americans now own more than 92 million cell phones, up from 69 million in 1998 and about 6 million 10 years ago. Surveys show that four out of five cell phone owners will place or receive calls while driving. One out of four, however, phone frequently while driving and a high percentage of these are heavy, daily users.

"What the wireless industry and state governments need to do is to constantly reach out to consumers and tell them that when they get behind the wheel of a car they must drive responsibly," said Tom Wheeler, president of the Cellular Telecommunications Industry Association, a trade organization in Washington representing about 400 manufacturers and providers of wireless equipment.

Wheeler said state governments have rightly rejected legislation to restrict the use of handheld phones by drivers.

"We don't need more laws," he said. "But we do need a lot more in the way of public education."

Bills have been prepared in more than 20 states, including New York, to limit cell phone use on the roads but all have failed.

Public awareness and political action are temporarily heightened at news of isolated incidents that link cell phones with highway accidents. Robert Carratelli, 43, of West Palm Beach, Fla., was convicted this month of six counts of vehicular homicide in connection with an accident involving cell phone use last year in Boca Raton.

Memorial Day honors war dead throughout America's history

By Ed Todd
Staff Writer

Midland's Memorial Day services Monday will include at least four ceremonies throughout the day to pay tribute to America's war dead.

"Memorial Day is a time set aside to not only remember (the war dead)," said Midland Mayor Bobby Burns, "but to show our appreciation for those who served and sacrificed for our way of life. We may never fully understand their true impact, but we must honor their memory."

Formerly known as Decoration Day after its inception following the American Civil War, "Memorial Day is the most important of all of our holidays," said Midland historian Bill Coombes, "simply because we are recognizing those who served so that we can enjoy the life that we enjoy right now.

"People like George O'Brien know full well the cost of freedom and that we owe a tremendous debt to those people who are not here," Coombes said.

O'Brien is a Midlander who earned the nation's highest military decoration, the Medal of Honor, as a U.S. Marine Corps combatant in the Korean War.

America's war dead from the Revolutionary War period beginning in 1775 forward and including World War I, World War II, the Korean War and the Vietnam War totals far more than 1 million men and women.

Traditionally, flowers and flags have been placed at the graves of fallen American soldiers, sailors, airmen, Marines and Coast Guardsmen.

Memorial Day events include:

■ "Memorial Day Ride to Remember," 9 a.m., at the Permian Basin Vietnam Veterans Memorial at Midland International Airport. Following the ceremony, a convoy of motorcyclists, veterans and non-veterans, will pay homage to the war dead in a ride from the Midland memorial to the Vietnam Veterans Memorial at Big Spring.

■ "Bagpipe Memorial Day Tributes," 10 a.m., at Resthaven Memorial Park. Flying all day, there will be the traditional Memorial Day "Avenue of Flags."

■ "To Honor Those Who Served," noon, at the Confederate Air Force's Memorial Garden at Midland International Airport. The ceremony will include recognition of O'Brien, the Medal of Honor winner, and other veterans and tributes to America's war dead. The Sun Country Gentlemen Quartet will sing patriotic songs, the Boy Scouts of America will recognize veterans, a Missing Man flyover by CAF Ghost Squadron aircraft will pay tribute to the war dead.

■ A concluding ceremony will take place at 6 p.m., sponsored by The American Legion at Midland County's Fairview Cemetery. Featured speakers will include two veterans: Judge John Hyde, of the 238th Texas District Court for Midland County, and Jer-

For special hospitality, add peanuts to your Coca-Cola

The old man, dressed in khaki work pants and a tight-fitting flannel shirt, was leaning against the checkout counter sipping a cold Coca-Cola with peanuts inside the bottle. He chuckled a lot, which made his stomach bounce around like a bowl of Jell-O. He was telling stories to the store clerk, who was a much younger fellow, one who was neatly attired and somewhat formal in his mannerisms.

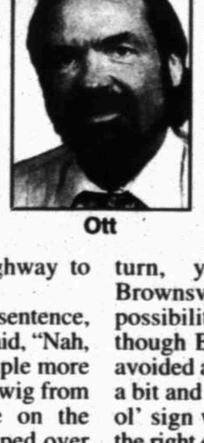

You got the impression he wasn't all together comfortable listening to the old man's rambling tales. He shifted from one foot to the other and occasionally glanced out the window to see if any new customers were approaching. He wasn't being rude, but you could tell his mind was elsewhere.

Perhaps he was worried that the store manager, his boss, might arrive unannounced and take a dim view of his casual approach to the job. Or — and this is just a guess — maybe he had heard the same stories a hundred times before and simply wanted to find a polite, yet rapid, exit from the conversation. Whatever the reason, though, he had become fidgety.

But the old man hadn't. He was just hanging out, passing the time of day without a care in the world. It was a task he seemed well-equipped to handle. You couldn't help but like him. He was everybody's grandfather.

"Excuse me," I said, as I opened the door to the convenience store and stuck my head inside. "Is this the highway to Padre Island?"

Ott

The old man stopped in midsentence, looked me up and down, and said, "Nah, you need to go on down a couple more streets." Then he took a final swig from his Coke, placed the bottle on the counter and, with his arm draped over my shoulder, guided me out to the parking lot. He pointed south. "What you want to do," he said, "is get back on this street here and then go on down to Highway 77. It's a main road, so you can't miss it."

He was squinting into the midafternoon sun as he talked. Beads of perspiration had formed on his forehead. But it didn't stop him from being talkative. He said, "Take a left there and go ... oh, 15 miles or so until you come to Highway 100. Once you get there, take another left." At that point, he gave me a stern look, almost a warning of sorts. He said, "Now, you got to be on the lookout, 'cause if you miss that turn, you'll end up down in Brownsville." For some reason, that possibility concerned him greatly, as though Brownsville was a place to be avoided at all costs. But then he relaxed a bit and said, "Of course, there's a big ol' sign with an arrow pointing you in the right direction, so you should be fine. Just pay attention. Don't let your mind wander."

"Yes, sir," I said, grinning and thinking about my own grandfather, who also possessed the unique ability to be gruff and friendly at the same time.

"Once you get on 100, it'll take you right to Padre." Then he looked at me as if to determine if I had enough sense to follow his directions. "Think you can handle that, son?"

But he grinned when he said it.

And so did I.

"Yes, sir," I said. "I got it made in the shade."

He put his left hand above his eyes and said, "We could sure use a little shade around here. It's too dadgum hot to do anything but drink soda pops and stand in front of an air conditioner." For some reason, that made him chuckle. And like before, his ample belly took on the appearance of Jell-O.

That image, in turn, made me grin.

Then, like two old friends who hadn't seen each other in ages, we both leaned against my rented car and talked about life. I explained that I was down there for a few days of relaxation, and he recommended a couple of good places on the island to eat.

Fifteen minutes later, he knew I worked for a newspaper, which seemed to impress him, and I felt like I knew all 14 of his grandkids, most of whom lived within 30 minutes of one another and who usually gathered at the old man's house on Sundays after church for a big chicken dinner and homemade ice cream.

"You oughta come over this Sunday," he said, giving me directions. "There's always more food than we can eat."

I said that sounded nice and maybe I would. But, of course, I didn't.

Finally, I had to go, I said. A motel room still needed to be secured.

"Wait," he said. He then disappeared into the store, only to return a few minutes later with two Coca-Colas and two bags of peanuts.

He handed me one of each.

"Just call it South Texas hospitality." Then he chuckled and his stomach went into its familiar dance.

I laughed, too.

After all, I never knew a Coca-Cola, peanuts and Jell-O went together so well.

Helping Hands of Midland

Reaching Out To Others

1301 Brinson Lane (Between Rogers Ford & The Kettle)
HOTLINE: 699-4900
Thrift Store: Tues., Weds., Fri., Sat. 10am-2pm
Board Meetings: Wed. 6:30 pm
Call 520-8900 for pickup of donated items

When 68-year old Laura Urban, owner of Terry's Coffee Shop, decided to retire last year, she found that she had some free time on her hands. Her daughter, Sondra, had been volunteering at the Helping Hands thrift store, and she found herself spending more and more time at the store herself. Now she is a regular volunteer.

Laura enjoys working in the kitchen, keeping the food pantry well stocked and occasionally "working the floor" -- assisting customers and keeping racks and shelves full.

Says Laura, "I like what they (Helping Hands volunteers) do. I'm very inpressed with the Christmas food boxes. I love the atmosphere and the people. When I first came here I knew no one, but I soon came to feel like one of the family."

We are always looking for volunteers, so if you have some time on your hands, please give us a call.

Last week we assisted 16 families with rent and utilities at a cost of $1741.54. We helped an additional 35 families with 979 pounds of food, $76 in clothing, and $16 in diapers.

"I FEEL SHATTERED"

Questions derived from concerns expressed by grieving people — Mark Mercer, M.S., L.P.C., S.W.A.

"Shattered" is an accurate, reality-based description of someone enduring the early months of grief. Think of your life as a beautiful, highly prized figurine. When you suffer a major loss, it is as though this figurine is dropped on a hard surface. It literally shatters. At first you can't believe it has happened. Then you get on your hands and knees, gathering all the pieces you can find, frantically trying to put them all back together again like they were. The problem is, the figurine had major pieces that are now gone forever. It cannot be restored to its original form.

The good news is that while you are crawling and searching, you will be finding new pieces that can be joined with some of the remaining old pieces to form a new figurine. The feeling of being shattered is a necessary phase of grieving. But you will eventually salvage some parts of your old life, discover some ways of coping and living that are new to you, and combine the old with the new. The resulting figurine, the new life, will never be the life you once had. But with patience and minute-by-minute courage you can eventually make it a good one.

Helping Hands of Midland

Reaching Out To Others

1301 Brinson Lane (Between Rogers Ford & The Kettle)
HOTLINE: 699-4900
Thrift Store: Tues., Weds., Fri., Sat. 10am-2pm
Board Meetings: Wed. 6:30 pm
Call 520-8900 for pickup of donated items

When 68-year old Laura Urban, owner of Terry's Coffee Shop, decided to retire last year, she found that she had some free time on her hands. Her daughter, Sondra, had been volunteering at the Helping Hands thrift store, and she found herself spending more and more time at the store herself. Now she is a regular volunteer.

Laura enjoys working in the kitchen, keeping the food pantry well stocked and occasionally "working the floor" -- assisting customers and keeping racks and shelves full.

Says Laura, "I like what they (Helping Hands volunteers) do. I'm very inpressed with the Christmas food boxes. I love the atmosphere and the people. When I first came here I knew no one, but I soon came to feel like one of the family."

We are always looking for volunteers, so if you have some time on your hands, please give us a call.

Last week we assisted 16 families with rent and utilities at a cost of $1741.54. We helped an additional 35 families with 979 pounds of food, $76 in clothing, and $16 in diapers.

"I FEEL SHATTERED"

Questions derived from concerns expressed by grieving people — Mark Mercer, M.S., L.P.C., S.W.A.

"Shattered" is an accurate, reality-based description of someone enduring the early months of grief. Think of your life as a beautiful, highly prized figurine. When you suffer a major loss, it is as though this figurine is dropped on a hard surface. It literally shatters. At first you can't believe it has happened. Then you get on your hands and knees, gathering all the pieces you can find, frantically trying to put them all back together again like they were. The problem is, the figurine had major pieces that are now gone forever. It cannot be restored to its original form.

The good news is that while you are crawling and searching, you will be finding new pieces that can be joined with some of the remaining old pieces to form a new figurine. The feeling of being shattered is a necessary phase of grieving. But you will eventually salvage some parts of your old life, discover some ways of coping and living that are new to you, and combine the old with the new. The resulting figurine, the new life, will never be the life you once had. But with patience and minute-by-minute courage you can eventually make it a good one.

CHECKING OUT THE LIBRARIES

Library has many fun activities to offer to liven up your summer

By Sandra Wegner

For all who are sometimes baffled by the actions of local government, there is hope of understanding. As part of "It's A Mixed Bag," the Main Library's summer brown bag series, three brave women are scheduled to explain the responsibilities and functions of the school board, the city council and the county commissioners court. All of the speakers are veterans of the trials and tribulations of public service.

Jackie Hamilton, former school board member, will lead off the series on June 7. Next up to explain how local government works is Pat Schneider, former city councilwoman, who will speak on June 14. Still a county commissioner but one who did not choose to run for re-election is Louisa Valencia, who will speak from many years' experience about the Midland County Commissioners Court on June 21.

All brown bag lunch programs are scheduled at the Main Library on Wednesdays with the doors of the second floor meeting room opening at 11:45 a.m. The programs begin at noon and are 30 to 35 minutes long. The audience may bring their lunches; drinks are provided.

The next four programs set on June 28, July 5, July 12 and July 19 are a mixture of nature, gardening and landscaping. Speakers lined up are Sibley Nature Center Education Director Burr Williams, Landscape Architect Kelly Cook, Texas Agricultural Extension Horticulturist Debbie Benge-Frost, and Master Gardeners Barbara Craig and Rosemary Tittle.

The last three programs of the summer, July 26, Aug. 2 and Aug. 9, also have varied topics. Horace Brown of Channel 2 will tell how he predicts the unpredictable West Texas weather. "Stars over West Texas," the program of Connie and Gene Hardy of Blakemore Planetarium, will keep the subject in the sky. The program that should have been scheduled first will be last. Virginia Greer, dietician, will tell us how our brown bag lunches could taste better and be better for us.

School is over and the summer is starting with a blast and a baseball at the Main Library. Using a rocket theme, the Children's Department begins its summer reading program, "Invent the Future — Read," with a kick-off party on May 31. The next day, June 1, the Midland RockHounds start their "Reading for Home-Runs" program.

Children are invited to stop by between 10 a.m. and 4 p.m. on May 31 at the Main Library at 301 W. Missouri to play 18 holes of indoor mini-golf, make a craft, get an activities schedule, and sign up for summer reading fun.

If the sign-up event is missed, children may register later at the Main or Branch Library. Centennial Branch Library is in Midland Park Mall.

The storytellers are scheduled, the crafts are planned, the games are prepared, and the movies are selected with something for every age group beginning June 6 and ending July 20.

Ages 3 through kindergarten have their special activities upstairs in the second floor meeting room at 10:30 a.m. to 11:15 a.m. Tuesdays and 2:30 p.m. to 3:15 p.m. Thursdays. Children in grades one through seven have the meeting room for their stories, crafts and games from 2:30 p.m. to 3:30 p.m. on Tuesdays and from 10:30 a.m. to 11:30 a.m. Thursdays. Spanish story time for all ages will be 10:30 a.m. to 11:30 a.m. Tuesdays in the Kaleidoscope Room on the first floor.

Everyone can attend the movies from 2:30 p.m. to 3:30 p.m. on Wednesdays in the second floor meeting room.

While not part of the library's summer programming, the Main Library is delighted to be the site for the RockHounds "Reading for Home-Runs" June 1-July 31. Students entering the fourth, fifth, sixth or seventh grades are invited to drop by the Children's Department of the Main Library or call the Midland RockHounds at 683-4251 for information on how to win RockHounds tickets and other goodies.

It's all about keeping those reading skills up over the summer and having a good time while doing it. RockHounds players will be at the library to encourage the "Home-Runs."

Books are half-price at the Friends of the Library Book Nook, 2305 W. Michigan, between 9 a.m. and noon every Wednesday and Saturday during June. Bargain hunters can expect to find every category of used book — fiction, non-fiction, recent best sellers and classics for adults and children.

The Friends will be accepting donations of used books at the same time and place. Just books, please; magazine donations belong downtown at the Main Library.

Using some of their "hard-earned" money, the Friends recently voted on more than $1,000 to help make the children's summer reading program special. This included a wireless lapel microphone, craft supplies, craft cutting tools and recognition awards for children who reach their summer reading goals.

Both Main and Branch Centennial Libraries will be closed on Memorial Day, May 29. The Main Library is now operating on summer hours, which means the library closes at 6 p.m. Tuesday through Saturday but stays open until 9 p.m. on Monday evenings.

MARATHON

THANK YOU!

Iraan-Sheffield ISD

MARATHON OIL COMPANY

The Board of Trustees, administration, staff and children of the Iraan-Sheffield Independent School District would like to say thank you to Marathon Oil Company for supporting quality academic and co-curricular education for the communities of Iraan, Sheffield, Bakersfield and Girvin.

We would especially like to thank Dave Hoopman, Yates Field Superintendent for his involvement in band and athletic activities as well as his support for the KICK-IT tutorial program. We would also like to recognize Mr. James Erlandson for his tireless efforts in making KICK-IT successful for 1999-2000.

Marathon Oil Company is a true partner in quality education for Eastern Pecos County. The financial contribution (while extremely important) pales in comparison to the cooperation and support the district receives from the people who work for Marathon Oil. It is the quality and selfless nature of these individuals that make Marathon Oil Company a unique partner in the education of our young people. MARAFEST has been a huge success for the last three years, and MARAFEST 2000 was the best ever!

New novel reviewed

HALF A HEART
By Rossellen Brown
(FSG, $24)

Review by Anne Stephenson
Arizona Republic

Miriam Vener is a doctor's wife whose perfect life in suburban Houston includes an elegant house, walk-in closets, good clothes, terrific husband and kids. She knows, however, that if her former friends came to visit, they "would have trouble getting past the gatehouse Gestapo ..." They knew Miriam during the 1960s, when, as a civil rights activist in Mississippi, she had an affair, and a child, with a Black professor named Eljay Reese. Their daughter, Ronnee, was raised by her father and is now 17. When Miriam sends her a letter, it is a surprise that she answers, but not the last surprise Ronnee will bring as she re-enters her mother's life. Brown ("Tender Mercies," "Before and After") is a master at rendering the tentative dynamics between mother and daughter, two of the best women characters to come along in years. It's good summer reading.

Midlanders write about oil industry

OIL & IDEOLOGY
The Cultural Creation of the American Petroleum Industry
by Roger M. Olien and Diana Davids Olien
(The University of North Carolina Press—Chapel Hill, N.C., 2000; $49.95 cloth, 303 pages, notes, index)

Reviewed by Myra Salcedo

"Every American's birthright is cheap fuel" — or is it? Is the American petroleum industry at odds with public interest or does it have an undeserved reputation?

For years the oil industry has been perceived as wasteful, disorderly, speculative, risky, out to corrupt government, conspiratorial, out to gouge consumers and a threat to public welfare. These perceptions — and how they came about — are closely examined in the newly released book, "Oil & Ideology: The Cultural Creation of the American Petroleum Industry," co-written by well-known oil patch authors Roger M. Olien, Ph.D., and Diana Davids Olien, Ph.D.

The husband-and-wife history teachers at the University of Texas of the Permian Basin, pen non-fiction books about the oil industry when not teaching.

The J. Conrad Dunagan chair of UTPB's history department, Olien has been with the university since 1973. Mrs. Olien has been a senior history lecturer with the university since 1986. Each wrote one book before they began writing together.

Now the Midlanders — known to carry the card, "Two historians, no waiting" — have written five books together (including the 10-year project, "Oil & Ideology") and are preparing their sixth book, one of two volumes "Oil and Texas: The Gusher Story Beginning in the 20th Century to 1945." It will be published by The University of Texas at Austin Press in fall 2001. Not ones to rest on their laurels, the Oliens are busily writing the second volume which will focus on 1945 through 1990. The two-volume set was commissioned by the Spindletop Centennial Celebration Commission.

How do they manage to write together and maintain a marriage?

"We divide the work," Mrs. Olien said. "We pick our topics and rough them out. If I rough something out, Roger edits. If he roughs something out, I edit. By the time we get it done neither one of us know who wrote what," she said, laughing.

And there is no arguing or pressing of points? "Oh, there is a little of that," she admitted. "But we generally talk things out before we even start writing."

One thing the couple heartily agreed on was that they kept running into negative attitudes throughout their research. "For me as a historian," Mrs. Olien said, "I found it necessary to trace the history of this negativism. What I found is that initially journalists and others said negative things about the oil industry for strategic gain or as a competitive device. Early opinions were generalized into public opinion."

Fascinated to find such opinions pre-dating Standard Oil, the couple researched the early days of the oil field and found its very existence offended the delicate sensibilities of 19th century Americans. One reporter in 1865 described the reaction of a visitor to an oil field in Pennsylvania with, "The objects he is to apt to touch, in spite of all precautions, have a greasy, clammy feel. His nostrils are assailed by gaseous odors, such as they probably never before inhaled in the open air."

In the oil fields, the laws of man and nature were both bent and broken, the Oliens said, sometimes giving rise to bad reputations for people in the business. However, they said the perceived misdeeds of oil giant Standard Oil, a company which made some powerful political enemies, were applied to an entire industry. "Understanding complicated price movements took knowledge of the industry and economics. Understanding 'predatory pricing' only took moral judgment," the Oliens wrote.

The book explores how the negative image of the oil industry shaped policy in ways that were sometimes at odds with both the goals of reformers and in the public interest.

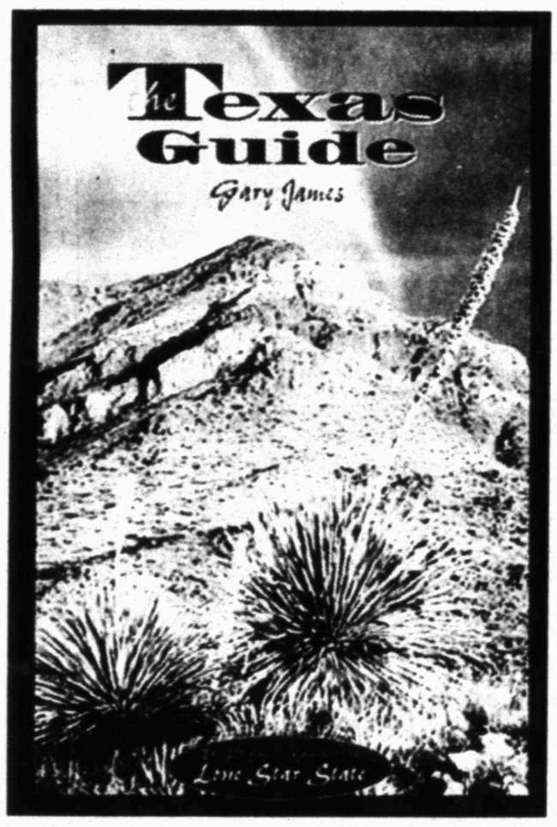

The problem is that the oil industry's tarnished image in America is ingrained in present-day opinion. Mrs. Olien said that the industry needs to educate the public about some of the unfounded perceptions. "At one time, everyone believed the sun revolved around the earth. We have to start somewhere," she said.

Myra Salcedo is public information officer for the University of Texas of the Permian Basin. "Oil & Ideology," described as a "pathbreaking" study of cultural history, is available from The University of North Carolina Press. Previously published by the Oliens is "Easy Money: Oil Promoters and Investors in the Jazz Age."

Guide celebrates Lone Star State

THE TEXAS GUIDE
The Definitive Guide to the Lone Star State
by Gary James

Staff Reports

GOLDEN, Colo. — Texas. The word alone conjures up images of wide-open landscapes, of cattle ranches and cowboys, of a landscape dotted with oil wells, cacti, and dusty Cadillacs. But the real Texas offers far more.

A good opening paragraph for an article about a book about Texas. But it also made us wonder why the book had been published by Fulcrum Publishing of Golden, Colo.

Then we noticed that the author was Gary James, who was raised in West Texas and who now lives at Sugar Land with his wife and three children.

James, who has traveled Texas for more than 25 years, developing stories for his award-winning syndicated TV show "Eyes of Texas," is well-qualified to write such a guide for the Lone Star State.

The guide gives the attractions of each community that have been grouped into geographic areas. The areas include The Heart of Texas, South Texas, The Gulf Coast, East Texas and the Pineywoods, The Red River Valley, The Panhandle and the High Plains and The Far West.

"The Texas Guide" sells for $21.95 and offers a good overview of the state's top attractions.

Former Permian Basin resident to be guest of honor at book signing

Staff Reports

Cody, Wyo., author Bob Cherry, who grew up in Kermit in the West Texas oilfields, will sign copies of his book, "Spirit of the Raven," at 2 p.m. today at Barnes & Noble in Midland.

"Spirit of the Raven" was a finalist in two categories — Best First Novel and Best Novel of the West — in the Western Writers of America's 2000 awards competition.

Cherry is launching a book tour of the Southwest; during the past year, he has been to more than 50 bookstores in the Pacific Northwest.

Cherry writes about an Alaska that he has experienced. He spent almost three decades in the Alaskan bush in an isolated fishing village accessible only by air. In "Spirit of the Raven" he tells a compelling story that encompasses all of that land, and contains strong strands of adventure and humor.

"Spirit of the Raven" was published in 1999 by Picaro Press of Denver, Colo.

Cherry currently divides his time between writing from his ranch in northwest Wyoming, 60 miles outside Yellowstone on the Southfork of the Shoshone River, and traveling in Alaska and the Southwest.

New mystery full of surprises

By Bobbie Hess
Hearst News Service

Jeffery Deaver's latest thriller featuring quadriplegic criminologist Lincoln Rhyme is a taut page-turner, full of surprises and bound to hit the bestseller list.

"The Empty Chair" (Simon and Schuster, $25, 411 pages) opens with Rhyme, protege Amelia Sachs, and his driver and caregiver Thom traveling to North Carolina, where Rhyme hopes to undergo experimental surgery at the Neurologic Research Institute at the Medical Center of the University of North Carolina.

While awaiting surgery, Rhyme gets a visit from Paquenoke County Sheriff Jim Bell, the cousin of Rhyme's good friend in the New York Police Department. Bell is asking Rhyme's assistance in tracking down 16-year-old Garett Hanlon, a.k.a. Insect Boy, who is wanted for the murder of a jogger and the kidnapping of a young woman.

The case escalates when a second woman is kidnapped and a sheriff's deputy dies of multiple wasp stings after entering one of Insect Boy's hideouts.

While Rhyme analyzes every bit of evidence, Sachs joins the hunters and uses Rhyme's findings to track down Insect Boy and one of his victims. The second kidnap victim is unharmed and Insect Boy is arrested and charged. However, Sachs believes Insect Boy's denial of killing the jogger and says he must rescue the first woman, whom he has been trying to protect.

Nothing is as it seems in "The Empty Chair," as surprising plot turns keep pushing the story along. The relationship between Rhyme and Sachs becomes clearer. Once again Deaver craftily says "gotcha" in one of the year's best thrillers.

"Cradle and All." By James Patterson. Little, Brown and Co. $25.95, 325 pages.

In "Cradle and All," James Patterson serves up an extremely well-written religious thriller that is part "Rosemary's Baby" and a tad of "The Exorcist."

Plagues and famine are sweeping the globe. Cardinal John Rooney of Boston hires former nun and now private detective Annie Fitzgerald to investigate polio outbreaks in Los Angeles; then he asks her to go to Newport, R.I., to investigate an immaculate conception — 16-year-old Kathleen, a virgin, is pregnant.

In Rome, Father Nicholas Rosetti is summoned by a gravely ill pope, who tells Rosetti the secrets of Fatima. He then tells Rosetti of Kathleen and of another immaculate, 14-year-old Colleen, who lives in a tiny village in Ireland. Rosetti's must determine which girl is carrying the child of God and which is carrying the child of Satan. After Rosetti checks out Kathleen, he asks Annie and the Rev. Justin O'Carroll to travel to Ireland and meet Colleen and help him determine which of the unborn babies must be killed.

"Cradle and All" is as disturbing as it is well-crafted, a fast-paced tale driven by well-defined characters, sharp dialogue and a well-developed plot.

"Serpent: A Novel From the NUMA Files." By Clive Cussler, with Paul Kemprecos. Pocket Books. $7.99 (paperback). 470 pages.

For 25 years, Clive Cussler has created thrillers featuring Dirk Pitt, of the National Underwater and Marine Agency. Now Cussler teams up with Paul Kemprecos to create a new team of NUMA protagonists, led by former CIA operative Kurt Austin.

"Serpent" begins on the night of July 25, 1956, in the waters off Nantucket as the Swedish-American liner Stockholm collides with and sinks the Italian liner Andrea Doria. However, "Serpent's" version of the collision has a mysterious helmsman deliberately aiming for the Italian liner. A waiter sees four men gunned down in one of Doria's cargo bays, the bodies thrown in the back of an armored truck and the killers getting away. The waiter tells no one what he saw.

Four decades later, underwater archaeologist Nina Kirov, while on a dig on a remote stretch of Moroccan coast, discovers an old Phoenician port and a sculpted head that bears a remarkable resemblance to Mayan artwork. If the discovery is real, it will prove pre-Columbian contact between the Old World and the Americas.

Kirov faxes her sketches of the underwater port and the head to a colleague in Boston. Shortly thereafter the dig party is attacked: Only Kirov gets away and she finally is rescued by Austin, who is working on a nearby NUMA vessel.

NUMA begins an investigation and soon discovers that numerous other archaeological expeditions have disappeared — all had reported discovering pre-Columbian artifacts in very unlikely places.

The search to find out what is happening will lead back to that armored car in the cargo hold of the Andrea Doria.

Book will please dog-lovers

ANGUS
By Charles Siebert
(Crown, $18.95)

By Anne Stephenson
Arizona Republic

Oh, but the dog lovers will fall for this one. Look at that face. Look at that name. Angus was a Jack Russell terrier puppy, and for just shy of 11 months he lived with Siebert and his wife, Bex. All but the epilogue of this "memoir" is narrated by Angus himself, in a voice that is uncanny — not cute, not altogether lovable, but terribly real and affecting. The story begins as Angus lies dying after he is attacked by coyotes near a cabin where his owners have sought refuge from city life. Siebert and Bex are looking for him. Angus hears them calling, and as he waits for them to find him, he contemplates the association he has had with these people. What did his people want from him, and did he meet their needs? Angus is not sure, but he looks at the questions with an intelligent and often alien sensibility that makes for a moving book. Angus did well to inspire it in such a short lifetime.

MEMORIAL: Events to remember fallen heroes slated for Monday

ry Wall, American Legion official.

Beginning at about 8 a.m. Monday, members of the American Legion Post 19 will be posting American flags at the graves of hundreds of veterans who are buried at Fairview Cemetery and at Resthaven Memorial Park and adjoining cemetery.

"If it hadn't been for those people, we would never have in this country the freedom that we have got today," said John Crosby, a World War II U.S. Army Air Corps veteran.

Bill McNeill is a 53-year-old Vietnam War naval veteran who is helping organize the Memorial Day "Ride to Remember."

Rather than honoring all military veterans, Memorial Day "is strictly to honor those that gave their life for this country," McNeill said.

"It's a day of reverence," he said. "And it ought to be a day of thanksgiving to thank the good Lord for putting these kinds of people in this country that were willing to go the extra mile to allow us to have our freedom."

McNeill's good Midland school-days friend, Curtis McKinney, was killed in Vietnam in 1968 during his second tour of duty.

"We are thanking them for our freedom," McNeill said of the fallen warriors. "The guys in World War II, if it hadn't been for them, we wouldn't have any freedom."

Of nations at war, McNeill said that it "all boils down to whether you agree with the politics or not: These guys thought that what they were doing was right, and they died for our freedom. And our freedom allows ... us to do the things we want to do."

McNeill cited "the thousands upon thousands of young men and women that have died for this country" to preserve the freedom and liberty which many people "supposedly think they were born with. They weren't born with them (freedoms), but it was because somebody else died for them. Freedom ain't free."

Eagle Court of Honor to be held for Morris

Morris

The Eagle Court of Honor will be held Sunday, May 28 at 7 p.m. at the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. Braden Morris is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Robert A. Morris of Midland.

Braden is currently a member of Troop 231, sponsored by the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. He attends Lee Freshman High School where he is a member of the band and captain of the brass section. He plays the baritone and was recently awarded "Outstanding Bandsman." He also plays competitive soccer.

Braden earned his Eagle on December 15, 1999 when he was only 14 years old. He waited to have the presentation of his Eagle until others from his Troop could also be awarded theirs.

His service project was for Casa de Amigos. In July, he organized Cub Scouts to help staple flyers to bags and distribute bags to residences asking for donations of school supplies for needy children. He organized the pick-up of those bags using the Boy Scouts in his troop a week later. He also organized a booth outside of Wal-Mart where people could donate supplies. He and some of the members of his troop inventoried all the supplies collected and turned them in to Casa de Amigos for distribution. This project totaled over 1500 school supply items. The project took a lot of time in planning and organization of details from printing the flyers, arranging work crews, arranging transportation, refreshments, and meeting with representatives at Casa de Amigos, to the actual distribution and collection of goods.

Braden will be escorted by his brother, Robert Tyler Morris, also an Eagle Scout.

In March of 1993, Braden first entered the Scouting program in Gillette, Wyoming with Pack 266 as a Bobcat and achieving the status of a Wolf.

Upon moving to Midland, he continued Cub Scouting in Pack 231 as a Bear and Webelo. He earned his Arrow of Light in January of 1996. In April of 1996, he became a Boy Scout. Within the first year, he had earned his Tenderfoot and Second Class Badges. Soon afterward, he earned his First Class, then went on to earn his Star, Life and finally, his Eagle. Braden was selected for and attained membership in the Order of the Arrow. At the time of the Eagle Court of Honor, Braden will also be eligible to receive his first palm, the Bronze.

Sprewell, Houston shoot Knicks past Pacers, cut into series lead

By Chris Sheridan
AP Basketball Writer

NEW YORK — Patrick Ewing was out and Marcus Camby went down, too — a double dose of adversity that brought out the best in the rest of the New York Knicks.

Despite losing another big man to an injury, the Knicks received inspired performances from Latrell Sprewell and Allan Houston to beat the Indiana Pacers 98-95 Saturday in Game 3 of the Eastern Conference finals.

It was another chapter of hardship overcome for a Knicks team that always seems to play its best when things look their worst.

If the sight of Ewing sitting on the bench wearing a gray suit wasn't bad enough, it looked even worse when Camby slipped in the second quarter and injured his knee. Camby was taken to a hospital for an MRI exam, but the Knicks didn't miss him.

Sprewell broke out of a series-long slump and scored 32 points and Houston won his matchup with Reggie Miller and scored 28 as the Knicks cut the Pacers' lead to 2-1 in the best-of-seven series. Game 4 is Monday.

"Our team has exceptional pride," Knicks coach Jeff Van Gundy said. "They could have subconsciously had a little give-in, but we hung in there very well."

Miller had predicted that Houston and Sprewell would take 25 shots apiece in Ewing's absence, and he wasn't that far off.

Sprewell shot 13-for-23, scoring nine points in the fourth quarter, and Houston was 11-for-21. Charlie Ward and Larry Johnson added 14 points apiece for New York, which started the seldom-used Chris Dudley at center as Ewing sat out with acute tendinitis in his right foot.

Coming off a 3-for-14 performance that he called the worst playoff game of his career, Sprewell played with much more confidence. Driving the ball to the basket and freeing himself with one or two dribbles for pull-up jumpers, Sprewell was clearly looking to get his offense going as two of the team's scoring threats were sidelined.

Houston was almost as assertive, using an array of spin moves to free himself of Miller's defense and create enough room to shoot.

Miller, meanwhile, did so little in the fourth quarter that coach Larry Bird sat him for the last 1:49 — even when the Pacers pulled

'Hounds get strong six-inning outing by Miller in 5-1 victory

By Jay Peden
Sports Writer

The wind was blowing in hard Saturday night at Christensen Stadium. One starting pitcher took advantage of it, and one didn't.

Midland's Justin Miller pitched six innings of three-hit shutout ball and combined with three relievers to lead the RockHounds to a 5-1 victory.

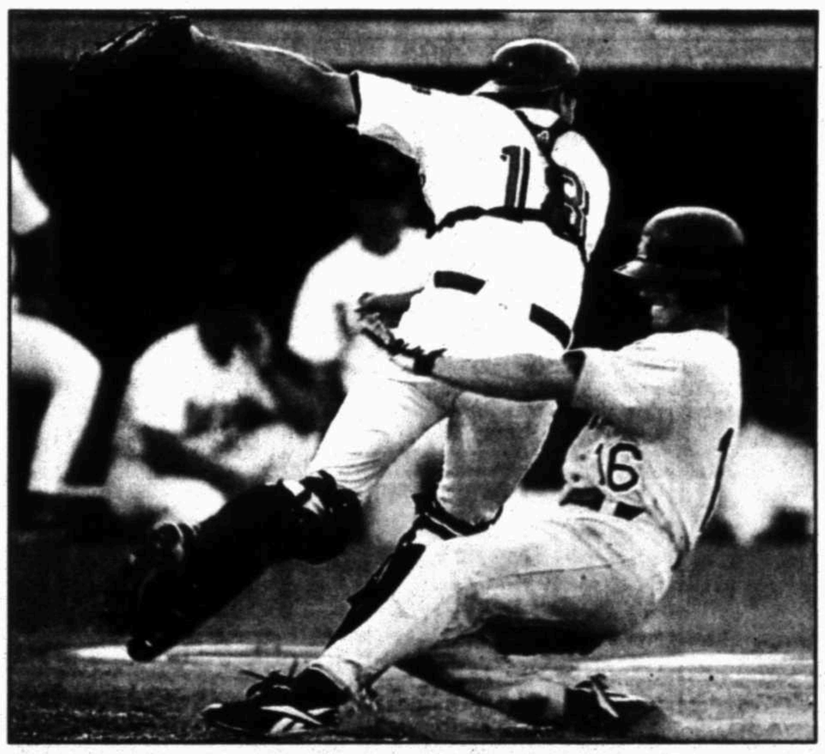

"We've had some pretty good pitching these last couple of games," Midland manager Tony DeFrancesco said, referring to Tim Manwiller's effort in a 4-1 loss to the Diablos on Friday as well as Saturday's game. "He (Miller) has a good splitter and a good breaking ball. If he gets his stuff down, he'll be a good pitcher."

And on a night when a pitcher could have gotten away with throwing the ball right down the middle, El Paso starter Brian Scott rarely could get the ball close to the plate. Scott lasted only four innings, during which he threw three wild pitches, hit two batters, walked five and struck out no one.

Of the five walks, two turned into the Midland's first two runs. Chris Norton led off the second with a walk and eventually scored on Oscar Salazar's fielder's choice grounder. In the third, Jason Hart walked with one out and scored on Cody McKay's double to give the 'Hounds a 2-0 lead.

Salazar, Midland's No. 9 hitter on Saturday, had the biggest offensive game of anyone, going 3-for-4 with two runs and two RBIs. His two runs were scored in distinctly different fashions. In the HOUSTON — Jayme Sperring drove in two runs with a pair of doubles and Jon Skaggs struck a career-high 14 as Rice eliminated Texas Tech from the NCAA Houston Regional with a 11-4 victory Saturday night.

The Owls will face Houston in the championship game Sunday afternoon. The Cougars beat the Owls in a winner's bracket game earlier Saturday. If Rice wins, the two teams will immediately take the field for a second game, since the tournament is double-elimination.

Texas Tech had eliminated Princeton 10-1 in an earlier game in the losers' bracket on Saturday.

Skaggs (12-2) allowed four runs on six hits and walked two in the complete game effort.

The Owls took advantage of three Red Raider errors to score seven unearned runs.

Sperring doubled off the left field wall in the fifth, scoring Mitch Ackal, who had doubled, as the Owls increased their lead to 7-4.

Marco Cunningham hit a solo homer in the first and Scott Holzhaur added another during Tech's three-run third as the Red Raiders cut the Rice lead to 6-4.

The Owls scored four runs in the first on four hits and an error with Sperring's rbi double capping the outburst. The Owls added a pair of runs in the third on a single by Jesse Roman, an error, a single by Jeff Van Noy and a sacrifice fly by Jeff Van Noy to take a 6-1 lead.

Rice added four runs in the eighth.

DALLAS — When their three-goal lead was chopped to one, the Dallas Stars focused on what they do best: smothering defense.

That return to basics, some great saves by Ed Belfour and a friendly bounce off the right post in the closing seconds gave Dallas a 3-2 victory over the Colorado Avalanche in Game 7 of the Western Conference finals Saturday night.

"It was an unbelievable series," Stars forward Brett Hull said. "It could have gone either way. I'm just thankful we got kind of lucky at end and held on."

The defending champions will open the finals Tuesday night in New Jersey. The Devils overcame a 3-1 deficit to beat Philadelphia in the Eastern Conference finals.

Every game in this series was tight until the Stars threatened to make this one a rout. Sergei Zubov and Mike Modano scored on the power play in the first period, then Roman Lyashenko blindly kicked in a rebound early in the second period.

Dallas was 10-0 this postseason when taking a lead into the third period, so the only question left seemed to be whether Belfour could hold the shutout.

But then Peter Forsberg scored a shorthanded goal 5:25 into the final period. Three minutes later, Milan Hejduk redirected a shot by Ray Bourque past Belfour, reviving the tension that had been missing since the first period.

"We made a game of it," Colorado's Adam Deadmarsh said.

The Avs only got three more shots at Belfour before pulling goalie Patrick Roy for a sixth attacker with 1:20 left. They failed to punch it in on a good flurry in front of the net with 21.2 seconds to go, then Bourque fired

Excitement returns to Indy

By Mike Harris
AP Motorsports Writer

INDIANAPOLIS — The buzz is back at Indy.

Is it enough to restore prestige to what was once the most famous race in the world? Maybe not.

But after four years of no-name drivers, dwindling interest and sinking TV ratings, the seemingly dying old girl of auto racing has new life.

That's because the lineup for the 84th running of the Indianapolis 500 Sunday will include two-time champion Al Unser Jr., who is back after a five-year absence; two drivers for Chip Ganassi's team, the champions of the rival CART series; and 19-year-old Sarah Fisher, the youngest driver in the field and only the third woman to race at the Indianapolis Motor Speedway.

Indy's loss of luster can be traced to 1996, when speedway president Tony George created the Indy Racing League as a lower-cost, all-oval alternative to the established Championship Auto Racing Teams.

Since then, CART's big-name teams and drivers, and most of its big-dollar sponsors, have stayed away from what immediately became the centerpiece event of the new league.

An event that had filled hotels and restaurants, and created an annual month-long buzz in Indianapolis suddenly was viewed by many as just another race.

"Yeah, it's just like every other race that has 400,000 people in the stands, 90 years of history and pays $9 1/2 million," said Brian Barnhart, director of racing operations for the IRL.

But even Barnhart agreed that the return of popular two-time champion Unser, the appearance of Ganassi drivers Juan Montoya, the CART champion, and Jimmy Vasser, is a big plus.

"Everybody is happy that Al is back because the Unser family is a huge part of the history of the speedway, and the Ganassi team is the best open-wheel team of the past decade and they're here racing with our IRL guys on a level playing field," Barnhart said.

Eddie Cheever, a former Formula One and CART competitor who became an owner-driver in the IRL, also welcomes the Ganassi team.

"Now the best that the other series has to offer is competing in our race, and that's a lot of fun," the 1998 Indy winner said. "I have a lot of respect for them coming over here. Indy is a very hard race to win, much less dominate. They have dominated everything they've done. We'll see if that

Rookie Earnhardt has spotlight on day to recognize Adam Petty

By Charlie Nobles
N.Y. Times News Service

CONCORD, N.C. — The specter of Adam Petty will be evident on Sunday when Dale Earnhardt Jr. tries to expand on a distinguished rookie season and Robby Gordon goes for an usual racing double in the Nascar Winston Cup series' longest race of the year.

A flag honoring Petty — the 19-year-old driver killed in a wreck on May 12 — will fly over Victory Lane at Lowe's Motor Speedway, site of the Coca-Cola 600.

Kyle Petty, Adam's father and head of Petty Enterprises, will not be there. He is taking off until next weekend's race in Dover, Del., to mourn his son's death.

Earnhardt Jr., the only driver to win more than one Winston Cup race this season, understands the potential peril that comes with every race.

"What happened to Adam puts everything in perspective," the 25-year-old Earnhardt said. "You never know when you're going to be here or not."

Earnhardt has certainly been driving as if there were no tomorrow. He has two victories and recently became the first rookie to win the series' all-star race, The Winston, and has been taking a lot of the spotlight away from his legendary father, Dale Sr.

After Earnhardt Jr. won in Richmond, Va., his father gave him congratulatory hugs, but then the seven-time series champion whispered to his son that he was leaving and to find his own ride home.

"I know he's happy and proud when his son and his car win," Earnhardt Jr. said. "But at the same time, if his son and his car win, he doesn't, and that's got to be a little tricky."

Earnhardt Jr. collected $516,410 for his victory in The Winston, not bad for a guy who was working in the service department of his father's auto dealership several years ago. He bought a 25-foot boat and pickup truck with recent winnings.

Yet the real gravy may lie ahead. Earnhardt Jr. is blossoming into a crowd favorite. He received the warmest applause of the night on Wednesday when he qualified for the Coca-Cola 600 pole with a lap of 186.034 miles an hour, breaking the track qualifying record established in 1994.

"It's exciting," he said of the crowd's reaction. "I just hope I don't get tired of it."

Meanwhile, Gordon wants to attempt a racing double accomplished by just two men: driving in the Indianapolis 500 and the Coca-Cola 600 on the same day. John Andretti (1994) and Tony Stewart (1999) are the only to do so. The Indy 500 starts at noon today, the Coca-Cola 600 at 6:05 p.m.

Gordon plans to leave Indy by helicopter from the track infield, head to the airport for the flight to Charlotte, then take a helicopter to Lowe's. A nurse will be on the plane to make sure he is not dehydrated.

If Gordon cannot make it to Concord, Bryan Reffner will be standing by to drive.

Stewart, who went without food for much of the day in performing his double, said Gordon should make it barring rain or a victory in the Indy race. A victory would likely require him to stay for a celebration and news conference.

Burton captures 12th Busch win

By David Droschak
AP Sports Writer

CONCORD, N.C. — Jeff Burton took advantage of a mistake by Mark Martin's pit crew, a gamble from his own team and a wreck by Matt Kenseth near the finish to win the Carquest Auto Parts 300 race Saturday.

The Busch Grand National victory was Burton's second of the season and 12th of his career. Burton beat Martin, who had won three of the last four Carquest 300 races at Lowe's Motor Speedway, by about one second.

Burton and Martin are Ford teammates, so the win broke a string of five straight Busch wins by Chevrolets.

Burton beat Martin under caution March 4 in Las Vegas.

Points leader Jeff Green started 26th, but finished third for his fourth straight top three finish. Jeff Gordon was fourth and Todd Bodine fifth. All three drive Chevrolets.

Martin, who dominated the first half of the race, failed to win because his pit crew didn't remove a gasoline catch can from his Ford during a pit stop of the leaders with 36 laps left.

Martin was in second place behind Burton at the time, but had to return to the pits to have the equipment removed and a stop-and-go penalty dropped him to 10th.

Once the green flag dropped with five laps left, Burton was able to pull away on his fresh tires.

Martin led 55 of the first 89 laps and was in front by five seconds before the race's seventh caution for debris on the track. All the leaders changed tires and Martin was beaten out of the pits by three other drivers.

But Martin soon picked off Gordon and Bodine before settling into second behind Burton as the two Winston Cup veterans took charge of the 200-lap race.

The 13th race of the season got off to a sluggish start with seven caution flags in the opening 89 laps.

INDY: Unser, Ganassi team return

applies here."

Unser, who won here in 1992 and 1994, failed to qualify for the 1995 race and has spent the past four years in CART, away from his family's beloved Indy.

"It left a hole in my heart to not be here," Unser said. "Now I feel like I'm breathing again."

Unser will start 18th Sunday. He is coming off a victory last month in Las Vegas — his first IRL win and first of any kind in five years.

On his first day back at Indy, Unser got a standing ovation every time he appeared on pit road. The response hasn't died down much since.

The arrival of Ganassi's team, winners of a record four straight CART titles, is at least as significant as Unser's return.

The IRL and CART require entirely different chassis and engines, and although an initiative to unify the series fell apart last summer, CART decided to open the door for its teams to return to the speedway.

The weekend of Indy time trials and the race were left open on the CART schedule, although a snowed-out race in Nazareth, Pa., was rescheduled for Saturday long after Ganassi and fellow CART owner Derrick Walker had committed to Indy.

Ganassi's arrival made the most impact, since he brought Montoya and 1996 series champion Vasser, while Walker is running the entire IRL schedule with Fisher.

"We've been working very hard," Ganassi said. "I've been asking a lot of these guys and, this isn't an easy place a lot of times. But I'm finding it enjoyable. I'm glad we're here."

Ganassi, who was co-owner of the winning team in 1989 when Emerson Fittipaldi took the checkered flag, would be even happier if Montoya or Vasser could overcome the logistical disadvantage of racing 225 miles Saturday in Nazareth, then win here on Sunday.

"Every driver that isn't here that's on the CART circuit would like to be here," Vasser said. "This is the biggest motor race, it's a fantastic facility, it's got great history and it's the Indianapolis 500, so I have yearned to be here all along."

Fisher, who has run in only two previous IRL events, probably won't contend Sunday. But her confident, charismatic presence, combined with a strong qualifying effort — four laps averaging 220.237 mph — has made her an instant Indy favorite with fans and drivers.

"She has one hell of a competitive spirit," Cheever said. "She's a real racer and she's going to be good."

For Fisher, who follows Janet Guthrie and Lyn St. James onto the 2 1/2-mile speedway oval, arriving at Indy is simply the next step in her development.

"I don't even think about that issue," she said when asked about being a woman in what has been a man's sport. "I'm a race car driver."

She's also the third youngest starter in Indy history — behind Josele Garza and Troy Ruttman. St. James, who will be in the race for the seventh time, is the oldest driver, 53.

With Kenny Brack, last year's winner while driving for A.J. Foyt's team, racing in CART, the top contenders from the IRL roster include Unser; defending IRL champion and pole-winner Greg Ray and his teammate Robby Gordon; Cheever; two-time Indy runner-up Scott Goodyear; and Foyt's three entries of Eliseo Salazar, Jeff Ward and Billy Boat.

"You can't say who the favorite is," Ray said. "You have too many good teams and good drivers."

John Menard, owner of the car entered for Ray and Gordon, has been coming here since 1979 with strong cars and good drivers and has yet to win the big race.

He came close last year when Gordon led with six turns remaining only to run out of fuel and finish fourth.

Menard remains optimistic about his team's chances and is pumped up over the direction the race has taken this month.

"The momentum is building again to make this a really exciting event Sunday," Menard said.

Penske gets 100th Champ-car victory

NAZARETH, Pa. (AP) — Car owner Roger Penske got his long-awaited 100th Champ-car victory when Gil de Ferran avoided a rash of accidents Saturday in the Bosch Grand Prix.

The victory, the first by a Penske car in three years, ended the hopes of CART champion Juan Montoya for a unique weekend double. Montoya, hurt early by slow pit stops and caught up in one of the accidents, wound up fourth.

On Sunday, he starts second in the Indianapolis 500.

De Ferran, who started fifth, won for the fourth time in his career. His Honda-Reynard beat the Mercedes-Reynard of Brazilian compatriot Mauricio Gugelmin by .815 seconds.

Gripp, Overstreet earn all-star bids

Midland High's James Gripp and Colby Overstreet were named to represent Texas in the Sun Belt Classic All-Star Game in Shawnee, Okla.

Gripp, an outfielder, and Overstreet, a first baseman, will compete with Texas' sophomore team during the three-day event which takes place next weekend.

Maurice Richard dies at age 78

Associated Press

MONTREAL — Maurice "Rocket" Richard, whose explosive speed and scoring heroics made him the cornerstone of the Montreal Canadiens' dynasty that won five straight Stanley Cups, died Saturday at the age of 78.

Richard, who slipped into a deep coma overnight, died of abdominal cancer, family friend Jean Roy confirmed.

Richard was hospitalized with a recurrence of the cancer that was first diagnosed more than two years ago. He also had Parkinson's disease, and Roy said doctors also suspected the onset of Alzheimer's disease.

Richard, No. 62 on The Associated Press list of the top 100 athletes of the 20th century, helped the Canadiens win eight Stanley Cups during his 18-year career.

Richard finished his career with a then-record 544 goals. He was the first player to score 500 goals and the first to score 50 goals in a season when he did it in 50 games in 1944-45. His six overtime goals remains a playoff record.

"What set the Rocket apart was his intensity," said former linemate Bernie "Boom" Geoffrion. "If we were down a goal or two, the Rocket was there to tie it up again.

"As soon as he would touch the puck, you could feel the electricity in the crowd. It was amazing to see how people would react — not only in Montreal, but everywhere he played. There's never been another like him."

A number of Montreal radio stations switched to all-Richard programming upon learning of his death.

STARS: Belfour stays perfect in Game 7s

(From 1C)

a shot that hit Belfour and clanged off the right post with eight seconds left.

"I tried to get my body over there," Belfour said. "It hit me on the hip and it was like slow motion as it went toward the post."

Said Bourque: "I didn't see it, but I heard it hit the post."

The Stars knocked the puck to the other end of the ice, triggering a postgame celebration that was filled with as much relief as joy.

"There's so much pressure to perform," Modano said. "As you get older, you turn that into a positive and try to have fun with it."

This was the second straight year the Stars and Avs have fought to a winner-plays-for-the-Cup finale. Dallas won last year's duel 4-1.

This was the third straight year Colorado was eliminated in a seventh game, and the fourth straight time Roy has lost a Game 7. He's allowed 16 goals in those games.

"We played good enough in this series to win," forward Dave Andreychuk said. "We didn't get the bounces, especially in this game. It's hard to explain the way the bounces go."

The Stars blew a chance to end the series in Game 6, although they knew the 2-1 loss was one of their best performances of the postseason. They seemed to pick up where they left off by scoring on their first two power play chances.

Colorado's never overcame that, ending their near-storybook quest to get Bourque the first championship of his 20-year career. He agreed to a trade from Boston in hopes of helping a team make a run at the Cup. His arrival sparked the Avs down the stretch and gave them a rallying point in the playoffs.

In the end, the storyline that played out best was the challenge between Belfour and Roy.

Belfour said late in the season that he was as good as Roy or better, then backed it up in this series.

Although Roy had two shutouts, Belfour never allowed more than two goals in a game and was a steadying influence for his team. Fans cast their ballot by chanting "Ed-die's bet-ter!" in the final period.

"I'm not a cocky guy, I never have been," said Belfour, who improved to 4-0 in Game 7s and has won his last eight games following a loss. "But I am confident in my ability."

Tiger Woods misses a par putt on the par-4 18th green during the third round of the Memorial Saturday at Muirfield Village Golf Club. Woods bogeyed the 18th to finish the third round with a 9-under-par 63. Woods goes into the final round at 17-under par.

DUBLIN, Ohio — On the table next to Tiger Woods' chair Saturday was a bottle of water, not a trophy, a reminder that there's still one round left to play in the Memorial Tournament.

Try getting everyone else to believe that.

Harrison Frazar, who trailed Woods by one stroke when the third round began on soft, soggy Muirfield Village, finished the day 14 strokes behind and became the latest member of the Tiger Woods Fan Club.

"It's been a long time since I've played with him, and now I know why," Frazar said.

Ernie Els thought he had seen it all. He has had four sensational battles with Woods since 1998, but could only watch as Woods manhandled Muirfield Village for a 7-under 65 to build the largest 54-hole lead on the PGA Tour in two years.

"He's just awesome, man," Els said.

Woods will be paired Sunday with Steve Lowery, who birdied the 18th for a 66 that left him six strokes behind.

Let's see. Lowery, whose only PGA Tour victory came six years ago, will spot the No. 1 player in the world six strokes on the course built by Jack Nicklaus but now seemingly owned by Woods.

"I'd have to bet on Tiger," Lowery said.

Safe bet.

Of course, anything is possible. Woods could get the kind of migraine that made Mike Weir feel as though the Ohio State marching band was playing "Hang On, Sloopy" inside his head. He could miss his tee time. He could slip the non-conforming Callaway ERC driver in his bag and get disqualified. He could retire.

Then again, just last week in Germany, Woods had a three-stroke lead going into the final round and finished third, the first time since 1996 he had let a 54-hole lead get away.

"Oh, come on guys," Els said. "Don't even try. It's over."

Woods made his first bogey in 48 holes on No. 18, but still was at 17-under 199 and has plenty room for error as he tries to become the first repeat champion in the 25-year history of the Memorial.

Montgomerie headlines Volvo

Associated Press

VIRGINIA WATER, England — Scotland's Colin Montgomerie took control of the Volvo PGA on Saturday, shooting a 7-under-par 65 to take a four-stroke lead after the second round.

"Sure I expect to win. If you were in my position, you'd expect it too," said Montgomerie, who finished off a first-round 67 on Saturday morning in the rain-delayed tournament.

Montgomerie won the 1998 tournament and also took the World Match Play title on the Wentworth course, just a 15-minute drive from his home in Surrey.

Northern Ireland's Darren Clarke shot his second straight 68 for a second-place tie with Scotland's Andrew Coltart and Sweden's Robert Karlsson.

Kuehne takes one-shot lead over King

CORNING, N.Y. — Defending champion Kelli Kuehne shot a 5-under-par 67 Saturday to race past struggling Mi Hyun Kim and take the third-round lead in the LPGA Corning Classic.

Kuehne, who beat Rosie Jones by a single stroke last year, overcame a double-bogey on the first hole and finished the round at 11-under 205, one shot ahead of Betsy King, who had a 69.

Alone in third place another stroke back was Nancy Ramsbottom after a somewhat erratic 70. Pat Hurst finished with a 67 and was tied at 208 with Liz Earley over King, Ramsbottom and Cindy Flom, self-destructed with a 76, as did Flom.

Nelson leads Boone Valley Classic

AUGUSTA, Mo. — Larry Nelson shot a 6-under-par 66 on Saturday to take a one-stroke lead over Tom Watson after the second round of the Senior PGA Tour's Boone Valley Classic.

Nelson, the 1998 winner, had seven birdies and a bogey for a 12-under 132 total on the rain-soaked course.

"It'll be a lot of fun," said Nelson, a three-time major winner on the PGA Tour who won the Las Vegas Senior Classic last month for his sixth senior title. "I'm in a position where I won't have to buy a ticket to see a lot of good golf."

NBA: Injury adds to Knicks' troubles

within six with 40 seconds left.

"I thought Reggie played hard for most of it," Bird said. "He just got frustrated at the end and he continued to talk with the officials. I thought we'd better get him out of there at that time."

Jalen Rose nearly came up with a steal with 30 seconds left, but the Knicks kept control as Chris Childs made two foul shots with 23.8 seconds left for a 96-88 lead. Austin Croshere hit a 3-pointer with 4.6 seconds left to make it a three-point game, but New York was able to inbound and run out the clock.

After scoring only two fast-break points in the first half, the Knicks took the lead for good in the third quarter as they started pushing the ball upcourt and driving to the basket. Sprewell had nine points in the quarter and New York scored eight on the fast break.

Sprewell hit his first shot of the final period, a jumper that snapped his 0-for-11 streak over the fourth quarters of the last three games.

"I've been struggling. I wanted to be aggressive today," Sprewell said. "I was on. I felt really good on the floor. I felt loose.

"We felt we were going to stay together no matter what the circumstances were, and we did," Sprewell said."

Sprewell hit his next shot, a 3-footer for a seven-point lead, and his next, too, a jumper over Rose that made it 77-68 with 8:35 left.

Houston pushed the lead to 11 on a driving layup through traffic, and Sprewell fed Thomas for a layup that made it 81-68 with 6:31 left.

From there, it was only a question of whether the Knicks could hang on.

"We're at our best when we're attacking," Houston said. "In the past two games, and even in the Miami series, we let their defense dictate what type of shots we were taking."

Rose led Indiana with 26, including 22 in the fourth quarter. Rik Smits added 25, scoring only four points and taking just five shots in the second half after dominating the first 18 minutes.

"We kept talking about getting it back into him, but instead we took a lot of jumpers and bad shots from outside," Bird said.

Camby went down with 8:49 left in the second quarter when he drove to the basket, lost his footing and slid several inches as his weight shifted to his right leg. He was carried off the court and then wheeled out of the building .

Camby was averaging only 5.0 points and shooting 31 percent from the field during the series, but the Knicks were counting on him to break out of his funk and at least provide some rebounding.

Camby sprained a medial collateral capsule, but there was no ligament damage, a team spokesman said. Camby's status was listed as day-to-day.

"They've been in this position before, being shorthanded, and guys have stepped up. They did it again today," Miller said.

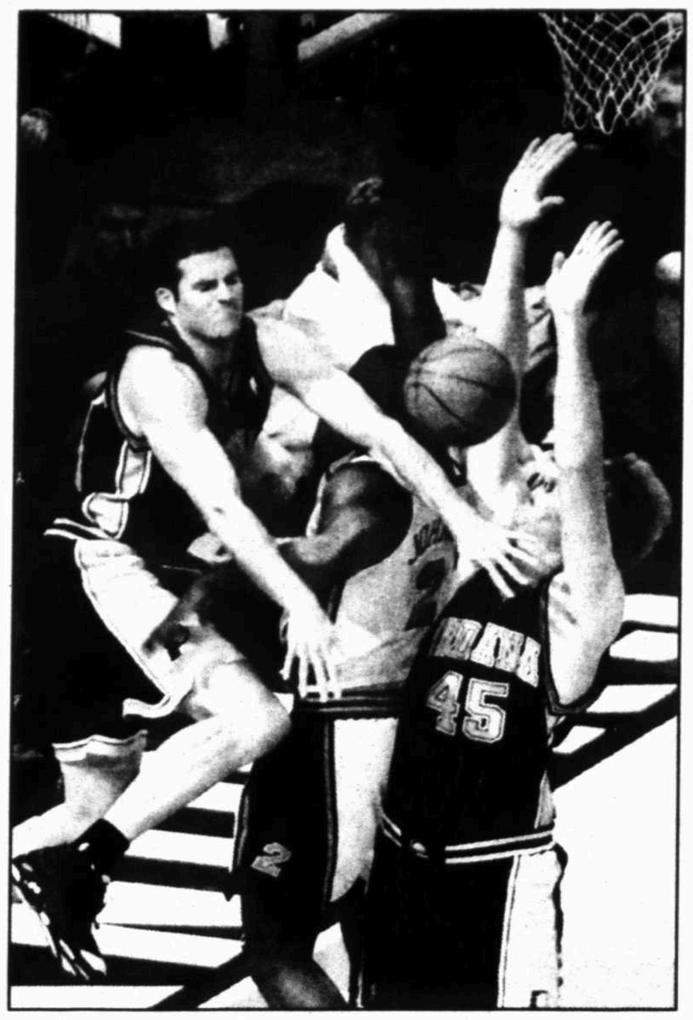

The first half ended with Indiana ahead 42-41 after both teams had 9-0 runs to alternate control of the momentum. The Pacers repeatedly fed the ball to Smits in the low post, where Dudley and Kurt Thomas were helpless to defend him.

Smits scored 12 of Indiana's first 17 points and had 21 just past the midpoint of the second quarter, but he didn't score again until 3:14 remained in the third quarter as the Pacers got away from repeatedly dumping the ball inside to him.

"You can only keep up that pace for so long," Van Gundy said. "He was scoring so much."

Miller had 12 points in the third to keep Indiana close, but the Knicks steadily pulled ahead over the final five minutes of the quarter to go ahead by as many as nine, 71-62.

"We're still up 2-1," Indiana's Mark Jackson said. "We had a great opportunity to go up 3-0, but you've got to give them credit. They've got a lot of heart. But the pressure is still on them."

Expanding WNBA begins fourth year with 16 total teams

By Melissa Murphy
Associated Press Writer

NEW YORK — The WNBA is stretching out. Way out.

In just its fourth season, the league has already doubled in size from eight teams in 1997 to 16. Teams in Seattle, Portland, Indianapolis and Miami join the WNBA for the 2000 season.

Another theme this summer will be the Olympics. The league condensed its season to allow players to join their national teams for the Sydney Games.

"We had our origins with the great success of the 1996 Olympics and see it as an important story line," WNBA president Val Ackerman said. "We see it as an exclamation point at the end of our season."

Games begin Monday with a nationally televised rematch of last year's championship, New York at Houston.

The new season brings new rules, too, including an unlimited number of players from the defunct ABL on all rosters and eight teams, not just six, in the playoffs in a best-of-three format in all rounds.

The 32-game schedule will be squeezed into 11 weeks, meaning plenty of back-to-back games that may affect play in a league that sent two losing teams to the 1999 playoffs.

"If you did that in the NBA, four expansion teams in one year, you'd have four horrible teams," New York Liberty coach Richie Adubato said. "They'd win 16-18 games. That isn't the case. You still have all those ABL players, all the European players. They can play."

Last year's collective bargaining agreement allowed just three ABL players per team, while the 1999 expansion teams in Orlando and Minnesota were allowed five.

The coaches in Seattle and Portland look to develop a rivalry before someday challenging the three-time defending champion Houston Comets in the Western Conference.

Linda Hargrove, coach of the Portland Fire, said she and Seattle coach Lin Dunn are "Northwest expansion sisters."

"Portland and Seattle have a natural rivalry that will be very healthy," Hargrove said. "The West is so strong, it's important that we win against each other, making our rivalry even more intense."

Czech Republic star Kamila Vodichkova, the No. 9 pick in the draft, will be the centerpiece of the Seattle Storm's offense. Dunn, who turned the last-place Portland Power of the ABL into a conference champion in one season, never saw Vodichkova play in person before selecting the 6-foot-4 forward.

The WNBA draft began with an international flavor when the Cleveland Rockers selected 19-year-old Ann Wauters of Belgium as the top pick.

Like many players returning from European and South American leagues, the willowy Wauters, who can dunk, missed the first two weeks of the 22-day training camp.

Ackerman said eight of the 12 Olympic women's basketball teams will have current or former WNBA players on their rosters. The WNBA championships will end no later than August 27 so players can rejoin their national teams before the start of the Olympics in mid-September.

The league rode the popularity of the 1996 U.S. gold medal team, signed many of its stars and has averaged more than 10,000 fans in the last two seasons.

Besides Teresa Edwards, 10 of 11 members on the U.S. national team will be in WNBA uniforms this summer. Edwards, training for an unprecedented fifth Olympic appearance, did not agree to terms with the league for the second consecutive season.

Coach Anne Donovan of the Indiana Fever coached Edwards with the ABL's Philadelphia Rage and would have welcomed her to Indianapolis.

"I think Teresa Edwards is the greatest player in this game," Donovan said. "I would love to have seen Teresa in this league where she could be showcased and the public would get an opportunity to see her more than just during the two weeks of the Olympics."

Washington Mystics All-Stars Chamique Holdsclaw (broken foot) and Nikki McCray (knee), and Charlotte's Dawn Staley (knee) are among the banged-up on the national team, which recently ended its six-month training camp.

But Mystics coach Nancy Darsch sees player participation on the national team as a positive.

Houston remains the team to beat, even though Sacramento boasts MVP and defensive player of the year Yolanda Griffith, Utah features Natalie Williams and Los Angeles has Leslie.

The Comets "Big Three" of Cynthia Cooper, Sheryl Swoopes and Tina Thompson joined President Clinton earlier this month in a Rose Garden ceremony in honor of the champions.

The Comets could make it a long season for the expansion teams.

"I had to stop the shootaround because it was too competitive," Houston coach Van Chancellor said. "This is the most motivated team I have ever seen."

Lakers play Portland without Shaw

By Bob Baum
AP Sports Writer

PORTLAND, Ore. — After what might have been their biggest victory so far in the playoffs, the Los Angeles Lakers can put the Portland Trail Blazers on the brink of elimination in Game 4 of the Western Conference finals on Sunday.

They'll have to do it without one of their role players, though. Reserve guard Brian Shaw was suspended for the game for leaving the bench during a brief shoving match between Portland's Scottie Pippen and Rick Fox in Friday night's 95-93 Los Angeles victory.

"It's a big loss for us," coach Phil Jackson said. "He came off the bench, took a couple of steps toward the fracas between Fox and Pippen. The league is very protective of this sort of thing, even though it was during a timeout and a player has every right to come off the bench during a timeout."

Shaw played only three minutes in Game 3, but his absence further depletes a bench already without injured rookie guard Davean George.

Los Angeles leads the best-of-seven series 2-1. If the Lakers win Sunday, they can advance to the finals with a victory in Los Angeles Tuesday night.

On the Portland side, the concern is Rasheed Wallace's sore left ankle. Wallace injured the ankle in the third quarter of Friday night's 93-91 loss. After the injury, he seemed less effective and was limping and grimacing during stops in play.

"It's cool," was all Wallace would say about the injury Saturday.

Portland coach Mike Dunleavy said there was no doubt Wallace will play after scoring 29 and 19 points in the last two games.

"It's still sore and there's some swelling there," Dunleavy said. "I see him playing. He's a gamer. His foot would have to be hanging off before he can't play."

The Lakers have ridden the talents of Shaquille O'Neal and Kobe Bryant to the best regular-season record in the NBA, and both were the leaders in Friday night's victory, scoring 25 points apiece.

After just eight points in the first half, O'Neal scored 18 in the second, 13 in the third quarter when Los Angeles caught the Blazers with a 20-6 run.

O'Neal's status as the game's MVP and his 7-foot-1, 315-pound stature (he probably weighs more than that), didn't stop some of his teammates from getting on him at halftime.

"I told him 'Shoot more, score more. You've got to be selfish,'" Robert Horry said.

The Blazers' double- and triple-team of O'Neal, so quick and effective in the first half, slowed just enough to allow the big guy to get going in the third quarter.

"They were coming hard, especially in the first half," O'Neal said. "I was giving it up, and my teammates were hitting the shots, and that kind of opened it up for me."

Bryant kept the Lakers close with an 18-point first half, and his defense held Pippen to just four points until the Blazers' floor leader broke loose with eight points in the final four minutes.

Jackson said he expects Pippen to start Sunday's game the way he ended Friday's game, on the attack. Pippen said his old Chicago coach is right.

"I have to be more aggressive," Pippen said. "I probably held back a little bit too much."

Mihm tops NBA's list of slim draft pickings

By Dwain Price
Fort Worth Star-Telegram

Those who follow the NBA Draft claim this year's class is the weakest in years, but don't tell that to New Jersey Nets owner Lewis Katz.

The Nets, who won last week's NBA Draft Lottery, appear poised to select Texas center Chris Mihm on June 28, when the NBA will conduct its draft in Minneapolis. Katz hopes the 7-foot, 250-pound Mihm can help the Nets reverse their disappointing 31-51 record this season.

"Clearly a big man is a priority, an inside presence," Katz said. "We must have lost 30 or 40 games in the last two minutes due to the lack of second shots, or getting defensive rebounds."

Katz knows the No. 1 pick could have a domino effect within his organization. The Nets had a plethora of injuries to key players, including former All-Star center Jayson Williams, and also must hire a head coach and vice president of basketball operations.

"You've seen what happened in the past," Katz said. " Tim Duncan came out, and suddenly there was a new team in San Antonio.

"Orlando changed quickly when they had the first and got Shaquille O'Neal and Penny Hardaway. This could be a real boost in the arm to get us where we need to be."

The Vancouver Grizzlies are expected to select Cincinnati power forward Kenyon Martin with the second pick. Martin played high school basketball at Dallas Bryan Adams.

With the third pick, the Los Angeles Clippers probably will take Louisiana State forward Stromile Swift, who can start after Maurice Taylor leaves via free agency.

"We're very satisfied with our position at No. 3, because we know that we'll get a very good player," said Elgin Baylor, the Clippers' vice president of basketball operations. "We'll get a player who will come in and make a good contribution."

The Mavericks have the 12th pick in the draft, and they will be searching for someone who has a passion for rebounding.

"We need to get bigger, that's for sure," said Mavericks general manager Don Nelson. "We need to rebound better; we have to solve those issues. Size and rebounding."

One of Dirk Nowitzki's former German teammates — 6-11 forward Olumide Oyedeji — has already worked out for the Mavericks.

Oyedeji hails from Nigeria, and is another find by Amadou Gallo Fall, who coordinates the Mavericks' international scouting assignments.

Other players the Mavericks are looking at include Michigan State swingman Morris Peterson, Syracuse power forward Etan Thomas and UCLA center Jerome Moiso, who enters the draft after his sophomore season.

Still, since no one is all that thrilled about paying guaranteed money to a first-round pick in this year's draft, the Mavericks are not against trading down for a lower pick or moving out of the first round.

"If we go down the board and it looks like there's a great reason to keep it, we'll keep it," Mavericks owner Mark Cuban said. "If someone makes us a better offer, we'll trade it.

"If there's a way that we can trade up because there's somebody we want, that's the kind of thing that Nellie and I will sit and go through — and all of the coaches — and make decisions."

WNBA PREVIEW

Team-by-team look at the WNBA, which opens its fourth season on Monday:

East Conference

CHARLOTTE STING (15-17), 2nd.
Coach: T.R. Dunn
Key Players: 5-6 G Dawn Staley (Virginia '92); Sholanda Enis 5-11; F Tracy Reid (North Carolina '98); 5-10 G Andrea Stinson (N.C. State '91); Rhonda Mapp (N.C. State '92).
Strengths: U.S. national team member Staley is recovering from knee surgery. Reid, the 1998 WNBA rookie of the year, looks to return to form after an injury-riddled season. High-scorer Stinson (13.6 ppg) needs help in the middle from first-round draft pick, 6-foot-6 Summer Erb, who is hobbled by a reoccurring foot injury. Charlotte is the only team other than Houston to make the playoffs every season.
Weakness: Traded physical Vicky Bullett to Washington.

CLEVELAND ROCKERS (7-25), 6th.
Coach: Dan Hughes
Key Players: 6-4 C Ann Wauters (Belgium); 6-3 C Chasity Melvin (North Carolina State '98); 5-9 G Merlakia Jones (Florida '95); 6-3 F Eva Nemcova (Czech Republic); 5-5 G Suzie McConnell Serio (Penn State '88).
Strengths: Wauters, the willowy 19-year-old top draft pick from Belgium, is a smart player who can dunk. Nemcova is the league's top free-throw shooter (98.4 percent). McConnell Serio is recovering from foot surgery. Draft pick Helen Darling adds depth at guard.
Weakness: At 193 pounds, Wauters will get pushed around in the paint.

DETROIT SHOCK (15-17), 3rd (tie).
Coach: Nancy Lieberman-Cline
Key Players: 6-2 F Edwina Brown (Texas '00); 5-10 G Dominique Canty (Alabama '99); 6-2 F Wendy Palmer (Virginia '96); G 5-9 Tamicha Jackson (Louisiana Tech '00); C 6-3 Olympia Scott-Richardson (Stanford '98).
Strengths: Wade Trophy winner Brown will bring versatility to a young team. Brown, the No. 3 pick and first collegian selected in the draft, averaged 21.2 points, 8.4 rebounds, six assists and three steals at Texas. She'll complement Canty, who had a solid rookie season.
Weakness: Traded veteran Jennifer Azzi and lost three players because of the Sydney Olympics.

INDIANA FEVER (expansion team)
Coach: Anne Donovan
Key Players: 5-11 G Stephanie White-McCarty (Purdue '99); 5-6 G Chantel Tremitiere (Auburn '91); 6-7 C Kara Wolters (Connecticut '97); 5-9 F Monica Maxwell (Louisiana Tech '99); 5-11 G Gordana Grubin (Yugoslavia).
Strengths: Two-time Olympian Donovan heads the team while Nell Fortner coaches the U.S. Olympic team. Donovan will develop Wolters, acquired from Houston, into a starting center again. A healthy White-McCarty, who led Purdue to the 1999 NCAA title over Duke, will draw basketball fans in Indiana. Grubin is a 3-point threat.
Weakness: Must jell quickly.

MIAMI SOL (expansion team)
Coach: Ron Rothstein
Key Players: 6-5 C Marlies Askamp (Germany); 5-2 G Debbie Black (St. Joseph's '88); 6-3 F Sharon Manning (N.C. State '91); 6-0 F Yolanda Moore (Mississippi '96); 5-10 G Umeki Webb (N.C. St. '97).
Strengths: Askamp, acquired from Minnesota, brings much-needed help in the paint. Scrappy point guard Black, acquired from Utah, is recovering from back surgery. She led the Starzz in assists (5.0) and steals (2.4). Stanford graduate Milena Flores and Webb add speed at the guard spot.
Weakness: Russian center Elena Baranova blew out her knee before training camp.

NEW YORK LIBERTY (18-12), 1st.
Coach: Richie Adubato
Key Players: 5-8 G Teresa Weatherspoon (Louisiana Tech '88); 5-9 F Vickie Johnson (Louisiana Tech '96); 5-11 F Crystal Robinson (SE Oklahoma St. '96); 6-3 F Sue Wicks (Rutgers '88); 6-5 C Alessandra Santos de Oliviera (Brazil).
Strengths: Two-time defensive player of the year Weatherspoon ignites a quick backcourt that includes leading scorer Johnson (13.3 ppg). Robinson is the league-leader in 3-pointers made (76) and fourth in percentage (.437) behind the arc. Rebecca Lobo is expected to make a midseason return after two ACL tears in six months. First-round pick Olga Firsova and de Oliviera bring size in the paint.
Weakness: Kym Hampton (knee) is a question mark at center.

ORLANDO MIRACLE (15-17), 3rd (tie).
Coach: Carolyn Peck
Key Players: 6-4 C Cintia Dos Santos (Brazil); 5-7 G Shannon Johnson (South Carolina '96); 6-0 G Nykesha Sales (Connecticut '98); 5-9 G Elaine Powell (Louisiana State '97); 6-3 C Taj McWilliams (St. Edwards '93).
Strengths: With the fourth pick in the draft, Orlando selected Dos Santos of Brazil. The 25-year-old center will help the guard-heavy team. McWilliams, who had eight double-doubles, brings leadership. All-Stars Sales and sharpshooter Johnson will lead the backcourt.
Weakness: Dos Santos must learn the system quickly.

WASHINGTON MYSTICS (12-20); 5th
Coach: Nancy Darsch
Key Players: 6-2 F Charnique Holdsclaw (Tennessee '99); 5-11 G Nikki McCray (Tennessee '95); 6-3 C-F Vicky Bullett (Maryland '89); 6-1 F Shalonda Enis (Alabama '97); 6-2 F Murriel Page (Forida '98).
Strengths: Coaches are keeping a watchful eye on the Mystics after acquiring Bullett from Charlotte. The All-Star is a physical force inside and fills a void in the paint. She completes the "mini-Big Three" along with rookie of the year Holdsclaw and All-Star Nikki McCray. Darsch used the second pick in the draft to get "Baby Shaq" Tausha Mills (Alabama '98).
Weakness: Injuries to Holdsclaw (broken foot), McCray (knee) and Tonja Washington (concussion) will make for slow start. Bullett is still in Brazil.

West Conference

HOUSTON COMETS (26-6), 1st.
Coach: Van Chancellor
Key Players: 5-10 G Cynthia Cooper (USC '86); 6-0 F Sheryl Swoopes ('93 Texas Tech); 6-2 F Tina Thompson (USC '97); 5-11 F Janeth Arcain (Brazil); 5-6 G Jennifer Rizzotti (Connecticut '96).
Strengths: Two-time MVP Cooper led the league in scoring (22.1 ppg). Sweet-shooting Swoopes and Thompson provide a potent defensive tandem. The three-time defending champs are looking for a starting point guard after trading Sonja Henning to Seattle. Arcain and Rizzotti are vying for the spot. Monica Lamb is expected to replace Bulgarian Polina Tzekova, who will not play this season. Tzekova averaged 6.1 points and 5.1 rebounds in 24 minutes.
Weakness: Arcain, training with the Brazilian national team, is not in camp yet.

LOS ANGELES SPARKS (20-12), 2nd.
Coach: Michael Cooper.
Key Players: 6-5 C Lisa Leslie (USC '94); 6-1 C DeLisha Milton (Florida '97); 5-11 G Mwadi Mabika (Congo); 5-9 G Tameka Dixon (Kansas '97); 6-5 C Clarisse Machanguana (ODU '97).
Strengths: Leslie (15.6 ppg) gets her fourth coach in four seasons. She's familiar with assistant Marianne Stanley, however, who coached her at USC. Milton is sharing the offensive load, averaging 10 points and five rebounds. Draft pick Nicole Kubik of Nebraska will provide an outside scoring threat.
Weakness: Leslie had eight double-doubles, half as many as the previous season.

MINNESOTA LYNX (15-17), 4th (tie).
Coach: Brian Agler
Key Players: 5-11 F Katie Smith (Ohio State '96); 6-2 F Kristin Folkl (Stanford '98); 6-2 F Andrea Lloyd Curry (Texas '87); G Betty Lennox (Louisiana Tech '00); G Grace Daley (Tulane '00).
Strengths: Does quantity translate into quality? Lynx fans will soon find out. Agler practically gutted his roster in favor of eight draft picks. He kept versatile starters Smith and Lloyd Curry, and added youth and quickness with first-round picks Daley, Lennox and Maylana Martin of UCLA. Folkl, recovering from knee surgery, developed her game in Australia in the offseason.
Weakness: Young team. Traded leadership of Tonya Edwards and offense of Brandy Reed to Phoenix.

PHOENIX MERCURY (15-17), 4th (tie).
Coach: Cheryl Miller
Key Players: 5-10 G Tonya Edwards (Tennessee '90); 5-7 G Michele Timms (Australia); 6-3 F-C Jennifer Gillom (Mississippi '86); 5-9 G Bridget Pettis (Florida '93); 6-1 F Brandy Reed (Southern Mississippi '98).
Strengths: Miller picked up smooth players Edwards and Reed in trade with Minnesota. Edwards is a solid floor leader while Reed returns to the Mercury fold. Reed led the Lynx in four statistical categories, including points (16.1) and rebounds (6.0) and averaged 25.2 points in the European League during the offseason. Timms and Pettis are 3-point threats. Michelle Griffiths is back from maternity leave.
Weakness: Reed, whose defense needs to match her offense, has been a discipline problem in the past.

PORTLAND FIRE (expansion team)
Coach: Linda Hargrove
Key Players: 5-10 G Sophia Witherspoon (Florida '91); 6-3 F Alissa Burras (Louisiana Tech '98); 6-1 F Tari Phillips (Central Florida '91); 6-6 C Michelle Van Gorp (Duke '99); 6-2 G Lynn Pride (Kansas '00).
Strengths: Witherspoon, acquired from New York in expansion draft, can be unstoppable at times on offense. She'll provide experience while rookie Pride brings potential. Sylvia Crawley, the ABL dunk champ, adds size in the paint along with Van Gorp.
Weakness: Phillips still playing for Italy in European championships.

SACRAMENTO MONARCHS (19-13), 3rd.
Coach: Sonny Allen
Key Players: 6-4 F Yolanda Griffith (Florida International '93); 5-11 G Ticha Penicheiro (Old Dominion '98); 5-9 G Ruthie Bolton-Holifield (Auburn '89); 5-11 F Latasha Byears (DePaul '96); G 5-6 Kedra Holland-Corn (Georgia '97).
Strengths: Griffith, the league MVP and defensive player of the year, averaged 18 points and 11.3 rebounds. The ex-ABL player had 15 double-doubles. Flashy point guard Penicheiro led the WNBA in assists (7.1) last season and will complement Bolton-Holifield in the backcourt.
Weakness: Griffith had offseason knee surgery.

SEATTLE STORM (expansion team)
Coach: Lin Dunn
Key Players: 6-4 F Kamila Vodichova (Czech Republic); 5-7 G Sonja Henning (Sanford '91); 5-8 G Edna Campbell (Texas '91); 6-5 C Quacy Barnes (Indiana '98); 6-2 C Tajama Abraham (George Washington '97).
Strengths: Dunn got a bargain at No. 9 in Vodichkova of the Czech Republic, who was expected to go in the top three picks. She averaged 16.8 points and 9.6 rebounds a game. Dunn acquired steady guard Henning from Houston. Simone Edwards returns from playing in Israel.
Weakness: Must jell quickly.

UTAH STARZZ (15-17), 4th (tie).
Coach: Frank Layden
Key Players: 6-2 C Natalie Williams (UCLA '92); 6-0 F Adrienne Goodson (ODU '88); 7-2 C Margo Dydek (Poland); 5-8 G Jennifer Azzi (Stanford '90); 5-9 G Korie Hlede (Duquesne '98/Croatia).
Strengths: All-Star Williams, who averaged 18.0 points and 9.2 rebounds, will have to wait for the Stockton-to-Malone connection. Azzi underwent hand surgery Thursday after breaking a bone during a fall in an exhibition game. The Starzz will look to 7-2 center Dydek for offensive help. They also have Stacy Frese, a third-round draft pick from Iowa State, as a 3-point threat.

Agassi starts French Open in love, playing best tennis

By Steve Wilstein
AP Tennis Writer

PARIS — Back where it all began, Andre Agassi stretches out at his hotel, thinking about the magic of the past year, trying to find the right words to capture the ways it's thrown his life into a new and wonderful realm.

From the ruins of a marriage and with his career in jeopardy, Agassi found love again in Paris with Steffi Graf and started a historic run through four Grand Slam tournaments.

"It's been a crazy, over-the-top, incredible, overwhelming year for me," he says, no hyperbole seeming quite adequate. "I hope I never have another year like this. Anything this dramatic, that changes my life in so many ways, could only be a drastic change in a bad way. I'll take everything just the way it is right now."

Who wouldn't?

He won his first French Open, completing a career Grand Slam, amid a cascade of cheers and tears the day after Graf captured the women's title in a similarly emotional scene.

Ranked as low as No. 141 late in 1997, he reached the Wimbledon final, won the U.S. Open, snatched the top ranking from Pete Sampras' six-year stranglehold, and won once more at the Australian Open in January — the first man to reach four straight Grand Slam finals since Rod Laver won them all in 1969.

Agassi's three majors in a span of eight months equaled the total he accumulated in his first 13 years on tour.

And all of it happened against the backdrop of a round-the-world courtship of Graf, who retired after Wimbledon last year.

"I'm no different than anybody who has experienced the same thing," Agassi says of falling in love again after breaking up with actress Brooke Shields. "It's a very important part of one's life."

Yet, unlike Andrei Medvedev, who waxed poetic in Paris last year about his love for fellow player Anke Huber and the effects it had on his game as he surged to the final, Agassi is a bit more circumspect.

Now, as the French Open begins Monday, exactly one month after the top-seeded Agassi turned 30, he has neither a fear that the bubble might burst nor a sense that he is impervious to defeat.

He has put in too many hours running hills, lifting weights and getting his legs in shape back home in Las Vegas to prepare for the special rigors of the thick red clay at Roland Garros not to think he can win it again.

And he has too much respect for the challenges presented by the likes of Gustavo Kuerten, Marat Safin, Lleyton Hewitt, Magnus Norman, Alex Corretja — the players he considers the toughest threats — to imagine he will simply stroll to another title.

"Winning here helps you believe you can do it again, which I'm not sure I did believe when I came in here last year," Agassi says. "I'm going to enjoy the role of champion, but this is the most difficult tournament in the world, physically and mentally. You have to be ready to grind out every point. You have to be disciplined, focused, every shot in every point."

Agassi knows his game is familiar to every player, that it's too late for him to come up with new strokes or strategies, that he just has to wear his opponents down and overpower them from the baseline.

Graf will be watching him this year, rather than playing, and the women's title is up for grabs.

Martina Hingis, who threw a tantrum and wasted a lead against Graf in the final last year, is seeded No. 1, but a foot injury caused her to withdraw from last week's Italian Open.

No. 2 Lindsay Davenport is bothered by a lower back problem, No. 4 Venus Williams is coming back from a wrist injury, and No. 8 Serena Williams is questionable after missing more than a month with a knee injury.

Agassi, despite his age, feels just fine.

"You can be your best in your 30s, if you're healthy," says Agassi, shrugging off the hamstring injury that hit him briefly about six weeks ago. "As you get older, you get more focused and experienced. Fitness and strength are huge factors. I spent a lot of time in training, working hard on my legs. The points are long here. The need to break down an opponent is crucial."

Agassi angered promoters of the Hamburg Master Series tournament last week when he withdrew a couple of days before the start.

"I was looking at the long term, and I wanted to give myself as much of a chance at doing well in the majors and the Davis Cup as I could," he said. "This is a tough stretch: the French Open, Wimbledon two weeks later, Davis Cup, the U.S. Open, the Olympics. You want to win the slams, all the slams you can, the more you play this game, and you realize you won't be around forever.

"What's the long-term effect of playing a lot? That's the million-dollar question. How much should you play? How much should you rest?"

The answers won't come until the summer is over, when the grind has taken its toll and Agassi can see how he fared. However it turns out, and whenever he decides to retire, he knows he's already been blessed so much in the past year that he can live with anything that comes.

"I'm not worried that everything will fall apart," he says. "At this stage of my career, my life, I don't think like that anymore. I can lose a match, lose a tournament, but it's not going to change my life."

Astros lose another 1-run game

Association Press

HOUSTON — Andruw Jones, Brian Jordan and Chipper Jones hit home runs in cooled-down Enron Field, leading the Atlanta Braves to a 6-5 victory over the Houston Astros on Saturday.

Braves reliever John Rocker walked the bases loaded in the ninth inning and was pulled. Kerry Ligtenberg escaped the jam without allowing a run, getting Richard Hidalgo to ground into a game-ending double play.

The one-run loss was Houston's 13th in 14 games this season.

Rockies 7, Pirates 6

DENVER — Todd Helton hit two home runs, including a lead-off shot in the ninth inning that lifted the Colorado Rockies over the Pittsburgh Pirates.

Helton tied the game with a three-run homer in the fifth.

Cubs 3, Giants 2, 11 innings

SAN FRANCISCO — Jose Nieves' sacrifice fly in the 11th inning lifted Chicago over San Francisco, giving the Cubs just their eighth win in 24 road games this season.

Diamondbacks 7, Brewers 3

PHOENIX — Tony Womack extended his hitting streak to 22 games and scored twice and the Arizona Diamondbacks stretched their team-record home winning string to 11, beating the Milwaukee Brewers.

Luis Gonzalez also homered for Arizona, which has won five straight overall. Milwaukee has lost four in a row.

Twins double up Rangers; Yanks win

Associated Press

MINNEAPOLIS — Corey Koskie hit a bases-loaded triple, and Butch Huskey added a two-run double as the Minnesota Twins beat the Texas Rangers 10-5 on Saturday night.

The Twins, who lost all 12 games to Texas last season, have won four of the five games played between the two teams this year.

Yankees 8, Red Sox 3

NEW YORK — Derek Jeter, who rented his own flight in order to get to the game, went 3-for-4 with a steal and RBI single Saturday as New York beat the Boston Red Sox 8-3.

Jeter, who had been on the disabled list since May 11 because of a strained abdominal muscle, stopped an 0-for-14 slide, his longest since April 1997, with a third-inning single.

Jeter had been in Tampa, Fla., on Friday night for a one-game rehabilitation assignment, and the Yankees had planned to have him take a commercial flight Saturday. Instead, Jeter paid to rent a plane and returned late Friday night.

DETROIT — Deivi Cruz stroked an RBI single in the ninth inning to lift Detroit.

Doug Brocail (2-3) pitched the last 1 2-3 innings for the victory, holding the Blue Jays hitless after relieving Hideo Nomo.

White Sox 14, Indians 3

CHICAGO — Jose Valentin drove in a career-high six runs and fell a single shy of becoming the first AL player to hit for the cycle twice in one season, leading Chicago over Cleveland.

Athletics 4, Orioles 0

BALTIMORE — Tim Hudson allowed one hit over 7 1-3 innings for his fifth straight victory as Oakland snapped Baltimore's four-game winning streak.

Royals 6, Angels 5, 10 innings

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Dave McCarty hit a game-tying two-run homer in the ninth inning, and Carlos Beltran scored the winning run in the 10th on a sacrifice fly just past first base for Kansas City.

The Royals, who rallied from 5-3 down in the ninth against Troy Percival, won for the 12th time this season in their final at-bat.

TEXAS: Houston, Rice UT continue on today

(From 1C)

defeated Miami of Ohio to earn another shot at the Sun Devils.

Doble struck out Matt Rosenberg for his ninth save to preserve the win for starter Jason Fingers (2-1) as the Sun Devils (44-13) advanced to Sunday's championship game.

Tommy Nicholoson's solo homer in the fifth inning off Fingers tied the game at 1-1.

Arizona State's first run came in the fourth when Martin tripled and Jeff Duncan singled him in.

Texas stranded 13 runners in the game and wasted a complete-game effort by Beau Hale (11-5), who threw 135 pitches in 100-degree heat.

Texas 11, Miami, Ohio 1 (Miami, Ohio eliminated)

TEMPE, Ariz. — Freshman Ray Clark threw a four-hitter to lead Texas (42-19) past Miami of Ohio (40-22).

Clark struck out 10 in his first career complete game, and Tom Yost's homer with two outs in the ninth spoiled the shutout bid.

Florida 10, Baylor 1

WACO — The Florida Gators scored in each of the first five innings, eventually beating Baylor 10-1 on Saturday.

Jeff Cardozo (6-2) went the distance for Florida, allowing seven hits, walking one, and striking out eight.

The Gators (42-22-1) will play again at 7 p.m. against the winner of the Southwest Texas-San Jose State game.

Baylor (45-17) made several small mistakes in the first few innings, and Florida made the Bears pay.

Houston 5, Rice 2

HOUSTON — The Houston Cougars got only three hits, but took advantage of four walks, two hit batsmen and two sacrifice flies to defeat crosstown rival Rice 5-2 on Saturday in an NCAA regional game.

The win puts top-seeded Houston in Sunday's championship game against Rice, which beat Texas Tech Saturday night. If Houston loses Sunday afternoon, the same two teams would go right back out for a second game to determine the championship.

Shane Nance (9-2) got the victory, striking out seven and walking two in 7.2 innings. Rice starter Marc Gwyn (7-7) took the loss. He allowed four runs on two hits.

ROCK: Team hits road

fourth, he led off with a single, stole second, then scored on two of Scott's wild pitches. In the sixth, leading off again, he simply hit a home run — the only homer of the evening.

Jay Pecci followed Salazar's homer with a walk and eventually scored on McKay's sacrifice fly, finishing Midland's scoring.

Midland relivers Leo Vasquez and Benito Baez followed Miller with a scoreless inning each. Bert Snow went to the mound for the ninth inning and El Paso's Jamie Saylor led off with a double — the Diablos' only extra-base hit of the night. Saylor later scored on Alex Cintron's sac fly, busting up the shutout.

The RockHounds had to settle for a split of the four-game series with El Paso, but they've still won 10 of their last 15 games.

Now they travel to San Antonio for a four-game series against the team directly above them in the Texas League's Western Division standings. Midland (24-26) is four games behind San Antonio and six games behind leader Round Rock with 20 games left to play. After San Antonio, the 'Hounds finish up the first half of Texas League play with 16 games against the bottom two teams the Eastern Division, Tulsa and Wichita.

"These next four games — it'll be important how we play just to get us close going into the last 16 games," DeFrancesco said.

NOTES: El Paso designated hitter Brian Dallimore got an early exit. He was ejected for arguing after striking out looking in the ninth inning... Long-time official scorer Bobby Dunn scored his last game at Christensen Saturday. Dunn, who had the job for 13 years, if giving it up to devote more time to golfing and fishing...

HOW TO WRITE A CLASSIFIED AD THAT WORKS!

❶ Promote Your Merchandise - The more descriptive you are the more likely your merchandise will appeal to someone.

❷ Check The Market Value - The most common mistake that occurs is over or under pricing your goods.

❸ Always Include The Price - People are more likely to respond when they know the price range.

❹ Keyword Your Ad - Begin each ad with the name of the item, such as "Stove" or "Guitar" rather than "Kenmore" or "Gibson". "Ford 1997" instead of "1997 Ford", or by its key reference point, such as location or area in real estate ads.

HOMES & CLASSIFIED

2605 Maxwell

Escape from the summer and into the pool at this charming Fair Oak Estate address where the living is easy. With gorgeous Lennox wood laminate floors, immaculate new carpet, wood blinds throughout and ceiling fans in every room but one, this home is not only beautiful, it's easy care as well.

The centrally located family room looks out over the pool and patio through atrium doors, and features a soaring ceiling, built-in shelving, and of course, a fireplace, all in pristine condition, that the present owners awakened by painting it white and transforming it from a good room to a great room that will set your spirit free, soaring with the ceiling. The kitchen area is the same-white, bright, where cooking will be a pleasure, and cleanup almost happens without help. In fact, every room feels large and light and clean, enhanced by a white and pale color scheme that will accommodate any décor with ease. There is new epoxy coating on the pool, new wallpaper, new exterior paint, new crown molding in the master bedroom-the updates to this 1972 built home just go on and on. With more than 2100 square feet livable, there are three bedrooms, two full baths, a breakfast area, great room, formal dining and living areas, and nice-sized utility. With heating unit moved to the garage, the resulting hall closet is humongous. The present owners appropriated it for their holiday closet-with plenty of room to organize those hard to store decorating accessories! The other closets (two of them walk-in) also have built-in shelving; and the two baths have doors that can close off lavatories from tub and shower areas.

Entertaining is also fun and easy here. Not only is the pool big and easily accessible to inside areas, but in addition to the two-car garage, there's also attached parking for two more cars. The lot is professionally landscaped.Located just a short distance from Midland College, Emerson Elementary and Goddard Jr. High, this home is a great location for families, with a quiet and friendly neighborhood where walking is a pleasure and birdsongs are some of the loudest sounds you'll hear.

Listing at $105,900, this home will be open today from 2 to 5, or for a private showing, call Chris Beckett at ReMax of Midland, 682-8820 or pager #567-6200

Safety and Maintenance Tips to Help You Enjoy Your Swimming Pool

Summer is in full swing and that means it's pool season. Backyard swimming pools can be great summer fun, but they require maintenance and attention to safety.

To help you have a safe and fun summer in your pool, here are some things to consider.

Routine pool maintenance requires between four and eight hours each week during the peak swimming season. Some pool owners choose to hire a professional pool maintenance company. A full-service contract should include weekly inspections and cleaning. As with any contract, review it carefully and sign only after you fully understand all points.

If you plan to handle the day-to-day maintenance yourself, hire pool professionals twice a year; once when the pool is ready for use and again when you close the pool for winter. For routine maintenance, you'll need some basic equipment, including a vacuum cleaner, brushes, leaf skimmer and water test kit. A swimming pool manufacturer's catalog will offer you these items as well as a number of other accessories to make your maintenance easier.

There are two types of vacuum cleaners. The first works from a vacuum inlet as part of the filter system. It is hooked to the vacuum fitting and is pushed slowly around the bottom of the pool to pull in water, dirt and debris. Leaves and other large objects are caught in the pump strainer and smaller particles are removed in the filter before the clear water is returned to the pool.

The second type of cleaner, a jet cleaner, is frequently used in pools without a vacuum fitting. Similar to a carpet sweeper, it's easily assembled and moves rapidly across the pool surface. The movement of water pulls dirt and debris off the bottom into a filter bag. When the vacuuming is complete, the filter bag is removed and cleaned.

Brushes are needed for cleaning pool walls. A nylon brush works well for general cleaning and scrubbing, and a stainless steel brush is good for removing algae, rust stains and entrenched dirt.

The leaf skimmer is a frame with a plastic mesh skimming net attached. Skimmers are available in a variety of sizes and styles.

Correct maintenance of pool water is the most important element of pool care. Prevention, rather than cure, is the key to a chemically safe and attractive pool. A regular system of cleaning and purifying, under normal conditions, will prevent any serious problems from developing. Carefully follow all instructions on pool chemicals and call a pool maintenance service with any questions.

A clean pool makes a safer pool, but there are other safety aspects to consider as well. Check with city hall to ensure that your pool meets all local safety ordinances. If there are no prescribed ordinances, consider instituting these safety features:

Place a locking fence or gate around the pool. Check it regularly, particularly at night, to ensure the pool area is secure. The fence or gate should be built so that small child could not slip through. An adult should always be present when small children are in the pool area. It is wise to have members of your family certified in lifesaving and CPR. Check with a local chapter of the Red Cross for courses in both lifesaving techniques and first aid.

Your safety equipment should include a long pole, a ring buoy attached to a strong rope and an easily accessible first aid kit. If the deck seems slippery, have it treated with a nonslip paint containing grit. Determine pool safety rules for your family and their guests and stick to them.

Finally, although pool parties are great fun, remember that alcohol and swimming don't mix. The vast majority of accidental drownings are alcohol-related. Don't let your summer fun turn into tragedy.

What is an ARM?

To first-time homebuyers, the terms used for various types of home financing can be confusing. One of the most common of these terms is "ARM," the acronym for "adjustable-rate mortgage."

Printz

ARMs can be most easily understood by comparing them to fixed-rate mortgages. In a fixed-rate mortgage, the interest rate is established at the beginning, and it never varies. If the loan is for thirty years, the interest rate in the first year is the same as the interest rate in the thirtieth year.

In an ARM, on the other hand, the interest rate is adjusted periodically (usually every one, three, or five years), based on some particular economic index, such as the cost of U.S. Treasury securities. After the adjustment, depending on the terms of the loan, your new interest rate will be one to three points above the index your loan is tied to.

For example, if the index goes to six percent at the time of your adjustment, and your interest rate is supposed to be two percent above the index, your new interest rate will be eight percent.

Most likely, then, your monthly payments will change every one, three, or five years (depending on the terms of your loan). Will they always go up? Not necessarily. Interest rates decrease as well as increase.

But this is exactly what makes ARMs popular with both lenders and borrowers. For a fixed-rate loan, lenders must gamble that interest rates will not change significantly. To protect themselves from that risk, they often charge higher interest for fixed-rate loans than for ARMs.

Borrowers, then, can often get a lower interest rate by choosing an ARM. And because there are usually limits to how much the interest rate can be increased for an ARM, borrowers have historically saved money in the long run.

If you'd like a further explanation of these or other financing terms, talk to an experienced real estate agent.

REAL ESTATE FACTS

Planning to buy a home? The process begins by selecting an agent, identifying preferred locations, and looking at homes. The actual purchase, however, requires a firm decision. It begins when you make up your mind.

Noles

Once you've decided on a home, the first step is a written purchase offer. This document, which specifies price, terms, legal description, closing date, etc., when signed by you becomes your purchase "offer".

Your offer may be accepted or rejected by the sellers. If not accepted, the sellers may make a "counter offer". Until accepted by all parties, the purchase offer may be withdrawn at any time. Once accepted, however, it becomes a binding contract.

This written contract then becomes the governing document and contains all terms of the agreement between buyers and sellers. The closing of the transaction follows the instructions contained in the contract. Variations and changes to the original document must be in writing and signed by all parties to the transaction.

It is important to remember that verbal promises and agreements made outside the signed contract are not enforceable and should be avoided. This is especially true when personal property is involved. Once you've made up your mind, put it in writing, then prepare to enjoy your new home!

'world's most humorous vegetable'

By Richard Acosta

LIFE IS NOT EASY FOR THE PICKLE.

Born and raised hoping one day to be in the third bucket down at a local salad bar, only to be chemically changed into something different. Living out its days in a jar of its own juice waiting to get eaten.

But what would we do without the pickle?

Whether dill, sweet, kosher, deli or sandwich sliced, they give salads a certain zing, hamburgers a special flair and lips a little pucker.

Some people even pour the juice over ice and drink it down in one gulp.

Although it can be said that no pickle ever saved a child from a burning building, helped an old woman across the street or took a bullet for the president, the pickle is honored during International Pickle Week, May 22-29.

International Pickle Week was started by the Pickle Packers International Inc. (www.ilovepickles.org), "To give national recognition to the world's most humorous vegetable."

The Pickle Packers International Web site may be the only place on the planet where a person can find recipes using pickles. From fried pickles to sauerkraut chocolate cake, it is the leading authority on pickles.

Marian Farr, Midland County extension agent for family and consumer science, said that pickle making is still done, even in West Texas.

"It's just like canning," Ms. Farr said. "It's no longer done out of necessity anymore, but people do it for pleasure or because their grandmothers did it."

Although Midland is not known for its acres and acres of growing cucumbers, that does not mean you cannot find a fresh one in town.

"We have some garden growers, and you can always get some at the farmer's market," Ms. Farr said.

Of course, like everything else in the world, homemade pickles are considered better-tasting than the store-bought kind, but making these crunchy gems is not a simple task. However, if anyone wants to give it a whirl, just check out the following information on how to make pickles from North Carolina State University's Cooperative Extension Service Web site (created as a cooperative effort with the Extension Service offices in North Carolina to promote food safety). Because pickling can be tricky the information is exactly what the Web site recommends.

MAKING PICKLES

Pickling is a way to preserve food by using salt, vinegar and/or sugar. There are many types of pickles. Each type uses a different combination of ingredients and preparation method.

The acidity of the pickling brine needs to be maintained below 4.6 if water bath canning is to be used. For this reason only use vinegar that is at least 5 percent acidity (or 50 grains).

TYPES OF PICKLES

Fermented pickles are vegetables soaked in a brine solution for four to six weeks. During this time, lactic acid bacteria, naturally present on the surface of vegetables, will grow. Other microbes are inhibited by salt. The color changes from bright green to olive/yellow green, and the white interior becomes translucent. Examples of fermented pickles include dill pickles and sauerkraut.

Refrigerated dills are cucumbers fermented for one week in a salt brine and then stored in the refrigerator for up to two months.

Fresh-pack (or quick process) pickles are cured for several hours in a vinegar solution or are immediately combined with hot vinegar, spices and seasonings. Examples include bread-and-butter pickles and pickled beets.

Our congratulations and best wishes to Alisa Heidelberg and Jason Dean, both of Dallas, who were united in marriage Saturday evening at Midland's First United Methodist Church and honored at a reception at Midland Country Club afterwards.

McKnight-Harrison

The Rev. Lane Boyd officiated the ceremony. Rebecca (Mrs. Gary) Darnell of Houston and formerly of Midland, a longtime friend of the Heidelberg family, was soloist for the service, while Carol (Mrs. Gary) Hall was the organist.

Alisa is the daughter of Wilson and Sharon Heidelberg. Jason is the son of Dee Dean of Rowlett and Ken and Peggy Dean of Odessa.

Pre-nuptial festivities for the couple began last December with a holiday shower in the home of Myra (Mrs. Mike) Atnipp. The other hostesses were Minda (Mrs. Don) Parks and Kathy (Mrs. Kelvin) Waggoner.

In March, a couples' party was hosted in Dallas by Rhonda Chitwood and Samantha Agan.

April began with an engagement and cocktail party at the home of Sandy and Pat Looper in Mission Estates. The other hosts were J'Nevelyn and Larry Melton and Gin Black, all of Odessa. Later in the month, a display shower was held in the home of Missy (Mrs. Jim) Rasnick. Co-hostesses were Kay (Mrs. Marvin) Baker, Julie (Mrs. Bob) Cole, Natalie (Mrs. Tom) Eustace, Bonnie (Mrs. Red) McKeller and Eddie Ray (Mrs. Wayne) Merritt. Also assisting was Caroline Baker. That evening, a "Honey-Do" Party was held at the home of Kathy and Franz Weis. The other host couples were Carolyn and Ron Stroman, Nell and Don Furgeson, Jane and Dennis Rambo and Kelly and Joe Phillips.

While a student at West Texas State University (now known as West Texas A&M University), Mrs. Harmon served Alpha Delta Pi as president and treasurer and she received her sorority's top national honor, the Dorothy Shaw Leadership Award. She is currently the Midland Alumnae president.

Alpha Delta Pi, founded in 1851 at Wesleyan Female College in Macon, Ga., is the oldest college sorority.

ALTHOUGH SUMMER-LIKE WEATHER came to Midland early this year, the evening chosen for the backyard barbecue and pool party honoring Lee High School graduate Collin Gilliam turned out to be perfect for such an occasion.

Approximately 25 of Collin's friends and baseball teammates from LHS gathered at the home of Margaret and Ronnie Williams for the end-of-school bash.

Tables around the pool were covered with red and white checked cloths and decorated with yellow, red and white daisies.

PICKLE: Pack a peck for fun

(From 1E)

Fruit pickles are whole or sliced fruit simmered in a spicy, sweet-sour syrup. Examples include spiced peaches and crabapples.

Relishes are made from chopped fruits or vegetables which are cooked to desired consistency in a spicy vinegar solution. Examples include corn relish and horseradish.

INGREDIENTS:

Vegetables or fruits for pickling

- Fruits and vegetables should be firm but ripe and in good condition with no evidence of disease or insect damage.
- Cucumbers should have the blossom end removed. The blossom contains enzymes that cause softening of the final pickle product.
- Use unwaxed cucumbers for pickling so brine will penetrate.
- Discard any cucumbers which "float." Gas is produced inside the cucumbers, resulting in a hollow cucumber. These cucumbers can be used for relish.
- Prepare fruits and vegetables for pickling within 24 hours of harvest.

PICKLE YIELDS:

- 14 pounds cucumbers for 7-quart canner load
- 9 pounds cucumbers for 9-pint canner load
- One bushel weighs 48 pounds and yields 16-24 quarts (2 pounds per quart)
- Use cucumbers that are 1-1/2 inches to make gherkins and 4 inches to make dills.

VINEGAR:

Vinegar must be at least 5 percent acidity so low-acid vegetables, such as cucumbers, are properly acidified. Never dilute the amount of vinegar stated in a recipe. For every cup of water, 1 cup of vinegar must be added. The acid must be uniform throughout the vegetable to prevent the growth of botulinum bacteria.

Use white vinegar to pickle light colored fruits and vegetables. Never use homemade vinegar — there is no way to know the amount of acid in it.

SALT:

Use canning or pickling salt because they contain no iodine. Iodine can cause darkening of the pickles because it contains anticaking ingredients, such as sodium silicate or tricalcium phosphate (which also causes cloudy brine).

In fermented pickles, salt inhibits the growth of undesirable microorganisms. Salt also draws water out of the vegetable, making the pickle more firm. Too much salt causes shriveling. Never reduce the amount of salt in a fermented pickle recipe.

Never use "sour salt," which is citric acid and does not inhibit the growth of microorganisms that cause spoilage of fermented pickles.

Never use reduced-sodium salt to make fermented pickles. Reduced-sodium salt can be used to make fresh-pack pickles. Because fresh-pack pickles are acidified with vinegar, they can be prepared with less or no salt. However, their flavor and texture might be affected.

SUGAR:

Use either white or brown granulated sugar.

SPICES:

Use fresh, whole spices packed in a cheesecloth bag. Powdered spices cause darkening and cloudy brine.

WATER:

Hard water often interferes with acid formation in fermented pickles; also, hard water might have a pH of 8.0 or higher, affecting the acidity of the curing brine. To soften hard water, boil the water for 15 minutes then let stand for 24 hours. Skim off any scum that appears. Pour out of container so sediment is not disturbed.

FIRMING AGENTS:

Alum can be safely used to firm fermented pickles, but it is not necessary. Alum does not improve the firmness of fresh-pack pickles. The calcium in the lime improves pickle firmness. Soak cucumbers in a solution of 1 tablespoon lime per quart of water for 12 to 24 hours before fermentation. Excess lime absorbed by the cucumbers must be removed to make safe pickles. To remove excess lime, drain the lime-water solution, rinse, and then resoak the cucumbers in fresh water for one hour. Repeat the rinsing and soaking steps two more times.

PREVENT SPOILAGE

Pickle products are subject to spoilage from yeasts and molds and from enzymes that might affect flavor, color, and texture. Processing pickles in a water bath canner will prevent this. Always use standard canning jars and two-piece caning lids are recommended. Processing times and procedures vary depending on the food being pickled.

EQUIPMENT FOR SUCCESSFUL PICKING

The right type of equipment saves time and energy. Read the entire recipe before beginning to prepare pickles. Have all the utensils and tools you need ready to use.

UTENSILS

Heat pickling solutions in containers of unchipped enamelware, stainless steel, aluminum, or glass. Never use copper, brass, galvanized or iron utensils; the metals might react with acids or salts and cause undesirable color changes in the pickles or form undesirable compounds.

When making fermented pickles, use an unglazed crock or stone jar, unchipped enamel-lined pan, or large glass jar, bowl, or casserole. Use a heavy plate or large glass lid that fits inside the container to cover vegetables in the brine. Use a weight to hold the cover down and keep vegetables below the surface of the brine. A glass jar filled with brine makes a good weight.

A food-grade, heavy weight plastic bag filled with brine is another effective weight. Fill the bag with enough brine to form a tight-fitting cover over the vegetables. Tie it tightly so the brine will not leak out. For added protection, put the brine-filled bag inside another heavyweight plastic bag intended for food use. Check the bags daily for leaks. If a small amount of the brine leaks out, it will not hurt the fermenting vegetables but still replace the bag.

Do not use a plastic bag to cover fermenting cucumbers. Sometimes during fermentation cucumbers become hollow. This is because carbon dioxide builds up inside the cucumber. The brine surface should not be tightly sealed to allow the carbon dioxide to escape.

Small utensils that make preparation easier include:

- measuring spoons
- ladle with lip
- sharp knives
- slotted spoon
- large trays
- footed colander
- tongs
- wire basket
- vegetable peelers
- funnel food chopper/grinder
- cutting board

SCALES

Use scales to weigh ingredients, especially when fermenting is important. The proportions of vegetables by weight to salt is essential to successful fermentation. Good household scales are readily available and not expensive.

WATER BATH CANNER

Inexpensive water bath canners are available at many hardware and variety stores. However, any large metal container can be used if it: Is deep enough to allow for 1-2 inches of water above the tops of the jars, plus a little extra space for boiling; has a close-fitting cover; is equipped with a rack with partitions to keep jars from touching each other and falling against the sides of the canner; a steam-pressure canner can serve as a water bath. To use it for this purpose, set the cover in place without fastening it. Be sure the petcock is wide open so that steam escapes and pressure does not build up.

GLASS JARS AND LIDS

Use jars designed for home canning. Other jars break more easily or do not seal properly. Use jars that are free of cracks, chips or other defects. Run your finger along the rim of the jar to check for these defects. Lids must be free of rust and dents. Always use new flat metal lids. Faulty jars and lids result in faulty seals and so the product might spoil faster or become unsafe. Before packing products into jars, wash jars in hot, soapy water or wash in your dishwasher.

PROCEDURES FOR PICKLING

To insure acceptable quality and safety of the pickle product, follow these procedures.

Packing jars: Uniformly pack pickle products into jars before processing. Do not pack tightly. Leave enough room for the brine or syrup to surround the product. Leave 1/2-inch head space. Wipe the rim and threads of the jar with a clean cloth. Small food particles on the rim could result in a faulty seal.

Closing jars: The two-piece canning lid (flat metal lid and screw band) should be used to seal the jar. Put in boiling water for a few seconds before use. Put the lid on the jar with the sealing compound next to the glass. Screw on the metal band. When the band is screwed hand tight, the lid has enough "give" to let air escape during processing. Do not tighten the screw band further after processing. If liquid has boiled out of a jar during processing, do not open it to add more liquid because spoilage organisms might contaminate the product. Loss of liquid does not cause food to spoil, however, the vegetables at the top of the jar might darken or dry out.

Heat treatment: Pickle products must undergo a heat treatment to destroy spoilage organisms and to inactive enzymes that affect flavor, color, and texture of the product during storage. Process in a water bath canner for the time outlined in timetable. Heat process all pickle products to minimize chances of spoilage. Open-kettle canning is not recommended. Immerse the jars in actively boiling water in canner. Water must cover the jars at least 1-2 inches. Bring the water back to boiling as quickly as possible. Begin counting processing time when the water returns to a boil and continue to boil gently for the time recommended.

Processing procedures for fermented cucumbers and fresh- pack pickles are slightly different from normal water bath procedures. For these products, start to count the processing time as soon as the filled jars are placed in the actively boiling water. This prevents development of a cooked flavor and loss of crispness.

Processing times given in the recipes are for altitudes less than 1,000 feet above sea level. At altitudes 1,000 feet or above, processing time are increased one minute for each 1,000 feet above sea level.

Cooling the Canned Pickles: To cool the jars, put them upright on a wire rack or folded towel, leaving several inches between jars to allow free circulation of air. Keep the jars out of drafts. Do not cover them. Cool for 12 to 24 hours. Remove metal screw bands and check jars for a seal. If the center of the lid has a slight dip or stays down after processing, the jar is sealed.

Storing the Canned Pickles: Remove the metal screw bands from the two-piece lids so they will not rust, making removal more difficult. Sticking bands can be loosened by covering with a hot, damp cloth for a short time. Wash bands and dry thoroughly for reuse. Wipe jars with a clean, damp cloth and label with name of product and date. Store in a dark dry cool place where there is no danger of freezing.

Before opening a jar, examine it carefully. A bulging lid or leakage means the contents are spoiled. When a jar is opened, look for signs of spoilage, such as:

- spurting liquid
- mold
- disagreeable odor
- change in color, or
- an unusual softness, mushiness or slipperiness of the pickle product.

If there is even the slightest indication of spoilage, do not eat (or even taste) the product. Dispose of the contents so that they cannot be eaten by humans or animals.

Menu turns back clock and cranks up nostalgia

Associated Press

Author Frank Browning has two basic memories about Saturday nights in the 1950s: A supper of fried apples and sausages in the kitchen, followed by Lawrence Welk on the black-and-white telly in the living room.

"To today's cooks, biscuits might seem like a big deal, but in my parents' generation they were ordinary," Browning writes in "An Apple Harvest," his cookbook of recipes and orchard lore.

FRIED APPLES, SAUSAGE AND BISCUITS

FOR THE BISCUITS:
2 cups all-purpose flour
1 tablespoon baking powder
3/4 teaspoon salt
1/4 cup solid vegetable shortening
3/4 cup milk

FOR THE APPLES AND SAUSAGE:
3 tablespoons unsalted butter
4 apples of at least two varieties, such as Golden Delicious, Jonathan, Pink Lady, Stayman Winesap, or Jonagold, unpeeled, halved, cored, and cut lengthwise into slices 3/8-inch thick
1/4 to 1/3 cup sugar
1-1/3 pounds bulk country sausage, formed into 8 patties, each 2-1/2 inches in diameter and 1/2-inch thick

Preheat oven to 450 degrees.

To make biscuits, sift together flour, baking powder, and salt in a bowl. Add shortening, and with a pastry blender or two table knives, cut in shortening until mixture is the consistency of coarse meal. Make a well in center and pour in milk. Using a fork, stir and toss wet and dry ingredients until mixture holds together. Place on a floured work surface and knead lightly 3 or 4 times, then let stand for 5 minutes.

Roll or pat out the dough to 1/2-inch thick. Using a biscuit cutter about 2-1/2 inches in diameter, cut out the biscuits. You should have about 16 biscuits. Arrange them, evenly spaced, on an ungreased baking sheet. Bake for 12 to 15 minutes, or until golden.

While the biscuits are baking, fry apples and sausage.In a large frying pan, meltbutter over medium high heat. When it begins to bubble, add apples and stir for about 5 minutes, or until apples begin to brown. Add sugar to taste and continue to cook, stirring often, for about 20 minutes, or until sugar melts and begins to caramelize and apples are tender.

In a large nonstick frying pan, fry sausage patties over medium heat, turning once, about 5 minutes on each side, or until cooked through and golden brown.

When biscuits are ready, pile them into a napkin-lined basket and wrap to keep hot. Serve sausage patties and apples on a warmed platter or on individual plates. Pass the biscuits.

Spaghetti Pie still satisfies — even low-fat version

Associated Press

Spaghetti Pie must be one of the regulars on the calorie-laden covered-dish circuit. How then to explain the recipe's appearance in the May Issue of Cooking Light?

Well, the dish was decadent as submitted by a reader to the magazine's Lighten Up column. It weighed in at 775 calories with more than 50 grams of fat. Given Maureen Callahan's light touch, it now has 408 calories with just over 13 grams of fat. Callahan, a former food editor at the magazine, writes the column and develops healthful recipes for Harvard Medical School.

The pie a la Callahan, actually a deep-dish casserole, is made with ground round and reduced-fat cheeses and sour cream.

SPAGHETTI PIE

1 pound ground round
1/4 teaspoon salt
1/4 teaspoon black pepper
2 cans (each 8 ounces) tomato sauce with garlic (see note)
1-1/2 cups low-fat sour cream
1/2 cup chopped green onions
1/4 cup (2 ounces) 1/3-less-fat cream cheese, softened
4 cups hot cooked spaghetti (about 8 ounces uncooked)
Cooking spray
1-1/3 cups (about 5 ounces) shredded reduced-fat extra-sharp cheddar cheese

NOTE: You may substitute plain tomato sauce and add 1/4 teaspoon garlic powder.

Preheat oven to 350 degrees. In a large nonstick skillet, cook meat over medium heat until browned, stirring to crumble. Drain well and return meat to the pan. Stir in salt, pepper and tomato sauce. Bring to a boil; reduce heat and simmer for 20 minutes.

In a small bowl combine sour cream, green onions and cream cheese and set aside.

Coat a 2-quart casserole dish with cooking spray and add the pasta. Spread the sour cream mixture over the pasta. Add the meat mixture and sprinkle with cheddar cheese. Cover and bake for 25 minutes. Uncover and bake 5 minutes or until the cheese is bubbly. Makes 6 servings.

Drama under the stars

Summer outdoor historical performances planned

By Jerry Morris
N.Y. Times News Service

Dramas are bringing history alive under the stars throughout the United States.

More than 46 outdoor historical dramas are held every summer to celebrate local communities' heritage and contributions to the American tapestry. Through drama, music, dance, and special effects, these productions tell the stories of such notables as Abraham Lincoln, Daniel Boone, Tecumseh, Sir Walter Raleigh, Andrew Jackson, Sequoyah, Helen Keller, and others.

Outdoor dramas, an original American art form, are performed in large, open amphitheaters often on or near the actual site where the events portrayed occurred. The dramatic form began with Paul Green's "The Lost Colony" in Manteo, N.C., in 1937. Originally conceived to be a one-year celebration of the birth of Virginia Dare, the first English child in the New World, the play has proved so popular that it has run ever since and played to more than 5 million visitors. Soon after its inception, other outdoor historical dramas began appearing all over the country.

Some of the plays, such as "Texas," celebrate a state or region. More than 60 festivals this year will feature Shakespeare, others offer religious drama on the life of Christ or the Mormon faith. In New Hampshire, "The Old Homestead" has been a longtime favorite, telling the story of growing up in Swanzey in the mid-1800s (July 14-16; for tickets, call 603-352-0697). Some theaters offer free admission.

If you would like to see one of these shows, the states with the most offerings are California (14), North Carolina (13), and Texas (12). For a complete listing, send for the 2000 Directory of Outdoor Drama in America by mailing $5 (check or money order) to the Institute of Outdoor Drama, CB3240, University of North Carolina, Chapel Hill, NC 27599.

BASTILLE DAY

An interesting way to celebrate France's Bastille Day is a stay at the Hay-Adams Hotel in Washington. The hotel, overlooking the White House, has a package for July 13 or 14 that includes a stay, afternoon tea in the Lafayette dining room, an evening tour of Mount Vernon with tidbits on George Washington's interests in all things French, and a four-course French-inspired dinner appropriate for the Marquis de Lafayette, a close friend of Washington, followed by a champagne dessert reception on the hotel's rooftop terrace. The package begins at $500 a couple. For information visit www.hayadams.com.

FREE STUFF

Maryland has many nicknames, and one is "The Free State." If you'd like to know more about visiting the state, call 800-MD-IS-FUN for "Free Stuff from the Free State." The kit includes a discount book on restaurants, hotels, attractions, and shops, along with a travel guide, calendar of events, and a state map.

The Delta Express Expressly Fun Vacation Sweepstakes is offering a trip to Orlando for four. To enter, send a card with your name, address, home telephone number, and e-mail address (if available) to Delta Express Expressly Fun Vacation Sweepstakes, PO Box 20521, Dept. 727, Atlanta, Ga. 30320-2521. Entries must be postmarked by May 31. For more information on Orlando, call 888-871-0678.

Another way to save on an Orlando visit is to buy an Orlando Shuffle pack, a boxed set of three card decks that offer savings on accommodations, attractions, dining, and car rentals, along with information on the area (the company refers to the cards as the "Cliff's Notes" version of travel information). The cards are designed for both vacation and business travelers. Sets can be purchased for $19.95 and are available from travel agents or at www.theshuffle.com. Las Vegas and Hawaii versions will also be available this year.

UPCOMING

"Singles are the Rodney Dangerfields of society. We can't get no respect," says Rich Gosse, keynote speaker for the upcoming world Singles Convention in Moscow July 17. Gosse, who has authored eight books on singles, adds, "Society has long had a vested interest in stigmatizing singles as social misfits."

Did you realize that the term "charge it" is just 50 years old? In 1950, a world without cash was inconceivable, but that's when "plastic" was born.

In 1949 Frank McNamara dined at a New York restaurant only to find he had left behind his wallet. That incident, which he managed to finesse, led to his developing the Diners Club Card.

When he returned to the restaurant in February 1950, he paid the bill with a small cardboard card — a Diners Club Card — and signed for the purchase. In the credit card industry, that event is known as the First Supper.

The credit card concept soon caught fire, including a movie, "The Man from The Diners Club," and by 1952 became the first international charge card.

This year, Diners Club earned its third successive Freddie Award for Best Affinity Charge Card Program. Its Club Rewards offers points that never expire and other services. For information, call 800-234-6377 or visit www.dinersclubus.com.

Women travelers mean business

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — When a woman business traveler checks into a hotel, the amenity she prizes most is an in-room hairdryer. Also important are non-smoking floors, concierge staff, complimentary car service, flexible check-in/check-out, voice mail, in-room fax machines, computer hookups, Internet access, multiple phone lines and a business center. Those are the preferences which showed up when Pan Pacific Hotel asked 200 of its female customers and a focus group of 10 women travel industry leaders what they looked for in hotel service. The women also like fitness centers but could live without cable TV, video games and VCRs. And they prefer a smaller, more personal establishments over large hotels catering to convention groups.

Moscow's villians not what they used to be

By Marilyn Stasio
N.Y. Times News Service

I went to Russia not too long ago and it wasn't there — at least, not the sinister, Soviet-era Russia that writers of Cold War spy thrillers had prepared me to find behind the Iron Curtain. For that matter, the Iron Curtain wasn't there.

Where was the cold air of menace that hung over Moscow in Martin Cruz Smith's "Gorky Park," smothering a politically sensitive murder investigation in an oppressive landscape of "white breath, white trees, white snow, white sky"? What ever happened to Karla, the implacable chief of Soviet espionage ("so self-possessed that he could allow, if need be, 10 years for an operation to bear fruit") who relentlessly pursued the British agent George Smiley in "Quest for Karla," the trilogy of cerebral thrillers that John Le Carre wrote in the 1970s? Where, oh where, among the spring buds of a new political climate, were the bitter snows of yesteryear?

Gone, gone, gone.

Nobody reads that stuff anymore, my Russian hosts gently informed me, as they hustled me into the smart shops, fancy restaurants and gleamingly refurbished landmarks of modern Moscow.

Actually, they don't even write that stuff anymore. The great spy masters are either abandoning the old Russia and striking out for new frontiers or repudiating the genre entirely. Martin Cruz Smith's latest novel was set in Cuba, and Frederick Forsyth's last book, a sequel to "The Phantom of the Opera," was set in a Coney Island fish factory.

Having had a glimpse of the new Russia, I can understand the disenchantment of the genre masters. Compared with the subtle chess players in Cold War thrillers, those black-booted Mafia gangsters who gun their BMW motorbikes on the cobbled side streets of the Tverskaya while making their shakedown rounds are drugstore cowboys. The millionaire bankers, oil tycoons, media moguls and industry barons who make up Russia's new oligarchy might prove to be more cunning villains.

But don't ask these greedy biznizmeni (stout men who ostentatiously park their big Bentleys on public sidewalks) to adapt their crass style to the classic spy thriller, with its reflective foreign agents, its byzantine games of intrigue and agonizing moral dilemmas. The buy-or-die spirit of Russia's new market economy doesn't adapt any better to the atmosphere of bleak despair in these novels. Pleasant as it may be, shopping in the fashionable boutiques of the Arbat and Manezh Square will never replace the old thrill of being herded through the GUM department store by an Intourist guide.

On the morning that I went to Red Square, the sun was shining, tourists were gamboling, and the fuzz-faced soldiers who marched up to me only wanted to have their pictures taken to send home to their mothers in Gdansk.

So, it was with some relief that I buried my nose in "The Forbidden Zone," a political thriller by Michael Hetzer, founding editor of The Moscow Times, the English-language newspaper in Moscow, and a survivor of the fusillade of gunfire that ripped up the newspaper's offices (and killed four people) in the chaotic street fighting of 1993. In the eyes of his heroine, an American astronomer named Katherine Sears, Moscow in 1984 was still a "gloomy, oppressive and sinister" place for a woman traveling alone.

Although I encountered no hostility on my own trip (beyond the supercilious sneer of a waiter at the ever-so-trendy Boyarsky restaurant), poor Katherine fares otherwise when she tries to find out the fate of a dissident astrophysicist. Pegged as a spy, she is dragged from her room at the huge and hideous Ukraine Hotel by KGB agents and hounded into hiding by a senior member of the Politburo. Happily, the chase takes her to the very landmarks I was headed for that day: the magnificent Cathedral of the Assumption; the medieval enclosure of Novodevushi Convent; the swank Moskva Restaurant.

While Katherine's jaunty Perils-of-Pauline adventures are fine for sightseeing, Robert Harris' "Archangel" is a book best taken out after dark. The hero is a British scholar named Fluke Kelso who has come to Moscow to attend an international symposium marking the reopening of the Soviet archives only to discover that the cult of Stalinism is still very much alive in Russia.

When night falls on the city in "Gorky Park," Martin Cruz Smith's police inspector, Arkady Renko, experiences the same sensation of being adrift in time. Standing alone in the winter twilight, "he felt he could have been in any Moscow of the past five centuries, and he wouldn't have been surprised by the sound of hooves in mud."

City of Light offers music too

N.Y. Times News Service

Vienna, Austria, has long been called the City of Music, but Nigel Simeone, a lecturer in the department of music at the University of Wales in Bangor, makes a case for sharing the distinction with Paris.

His book "Paris — A Musical Gazetteer," scheduled to be published by Yale University Press on May 30, suggests hundreds of sites associated with composers and performers who have lived in Paris in the last 400 years, including such non-Frenchmen as Chopin, Donizetti, Liszt, Mozart, Prokofiev, Rossini, Stravinsky, Verdi and Wagner.

Landmarks include houses, monuments, graves, churches and concert halls, with directions. The armchair traveler may appreciate such arcane details as the fact that the Palais Garnier, which houses the Opera, has 2,531 doors and 7,593 keys.

The bulk of the book is devoted to brief biographies, enumerating the places where composers and musicians lived or stayed.

The author outlines four separate walks, including a circular walk from Les Invalides; the neighborhood of Passy; from the Opera to Montmartre Cemetery; and from Place de l'Alma to the Etoile.

Sites noted in the book include 12, place Vendome, Chopin's last home; 4, avenue Carnot, Ravel's apartment; La Trinite, the church where Messiaen was organist for 61 years; the Opera and the Opera--Comique, the Theatre des Champs-Elysees, the Musee de la Musique and various cemeteries, especially Pere-Lachaise and Montmartre.

The book costs $40 in hardcover, $18.95 in paperback. It can be ordered by calling (800) 987-7323 or at www.yale.edu/yup.

16 helpful hints can take years to learn

By Dr. Hap LeCrone
N.Y. Times News Service

A reader recently sent me the following:

"Dear Dr. LeCrone, you have periodically given us, your readers, a humorous lift with your newspaper column. I, for one, have saved these for the days when it seems like nothing is going well. Here is another bit of humor that I thought you and other readers might enjoy. Sorry, the author is unknown."

- You will never find anybody who can give you a clear and compelling reason why we observe daylight saving time.
- You should never say anything to a woman that even remotely suggests you think she's pregnant unless you can see an actual baby emerging from her at that moment.
- The most powerful force in the universe is gossip.
- The one thing that unites all human beings, regardless of age, gender, religion, economic status or ethnic background, is that, deep down inside, we all believe that we are above-average drivers.
- There comes a time when you should stop expecting other people to make a big deal about your birthday. That time is age 11.
- There is often a very fine line between "hobby" and "mental Illness."
- People who want to share their religious views with you almost never want you to share yours with them.
- If you had to identify, in one word, the reason why the human race has not achieved, and never will achieve, its full potential, that word would be "meetings."
- The main accomplishment of almost all organized protests is to annoy people who are not in them.
- If there really is a God who created the entire universe with all of its glories, and He decides to deliver a message to humanity, He will not use as His messenger a person on cable TV with a bad hairstyle.
- You should not confuse your career with your life.
- A person who is nice to you, but rude to the waiter, is not a nice person.
- No matter what happens, somebody will find a way to take it too seriously.
- When trouble arises and things look bad, there is always one individual who perceives a solution and is willing to take command. Very often, that individual is crazy.
- Your friends love you anyway.
- Nobody cares if you can't dance well. Just get up and dance.

- Engagement announcements: There is no limit as to how early in advance of the wedding an engagement can be announced. However, engagements must be published in the paper no later than two weeks before the wedding date.
- Wedding announcements: Wedding announcements must be published up to six weeks after the event. Names of no more than 25 attendants for the bride and 25 attendants for the bridegroom will be published. Cities of residence for wedding attendants will no longer be published. Relationships will be published only for brothers and sisters, parents (or grandparents) or children of the wedding couple. For those wishing to list more, advertising space may be purchased.
- Wedding anniversaries: Anniversary announcements — 25th or higher — are also accepted for publication up to six weeks after the anniversary date or celebration.
- Pageants: Announcements of pageant winners are published for teen-age and adult winners only. Photographs are published of winners, not runners-up or contestants. These announcements will be published on a space-available basis.

Forms for weddings, engagements and anniversaries are available in the Editorial office. All materials should include the signature and telephone number of the person submitting them.

Photographs may be submitted with wedding, engagement and anniversary announcements, but are not required. A portrait of the bride-elect or engaged couple may be submitted with engagement announcements. Portrait photographs of the bride only or of the wedding couple may be submitted with wedding announcements. A different photo must be submitted for engagement and wedding announcements. Anniversary photos should be current.

Vertical photos are preferred. Both black and white, and color studio quality portraits are acceptable from wallet size up to 8x10. Polaroid shots are not accepted.

Photos can be picked up in the Editorial Department after publication, or a self-addressed, stamped envelope can be enclosed for the photo to be returned by mail.

FRANKLY SPEAKING

Crunch-time for wedding plans is time for crunches

By U. Frank Williams Jr.

"Operation Wedding Day" has now reached the critical point. My wedding is less than three months away. Deposits are being made, invitations are being addressed, and vacation days are being scheduled. There's no turning back now.

Williams

But the real day of reckoning was just last week. The most significant event in the whole process of preparing myself for nuptial bliss has already occurred. That one day could make or break my whole wedding experience. Months of preparation led up to that moment. The pressure to perform was almost unbearable.

I got fitted for my tuxedo.

Back in August, Cori and I joined a local gym. The mission was clear: Get lean and sexy for our wedding pictures. Cori, a fitness buff, was all keyed up after taking our first few months in Midland to get acclimated and catch up on bills.

On the other hand, I was less than excited about pumping iron. In fact, Cori had to pretty much drag my flabby butt to the gym the first month or two. Don't get me wrong; I knew Cori loved me, regardless of my weight. But I have also noticed that she checks out my butt a lot more these days.

So, I'm standing in the formalwear store, under the close scrutiny of a clerk's measuring tape. I asked for a copy of the measurements, and was pleased with the numbers. No, I don't look like one of the guys on the cover of those muscle magazines yet. But I have dropped two pant sizes. And while there's still plenty of fat, at least now I can see some muscle trying to make its way up to the surface.

What's really weird is that now I'm the one that's all revved up to work out, and my fiance needs a little more encouragement. She recently started working as a photographer for the Odessa American. While she loves her job, the schedule has wreaked havoc on her workout routine. Now she's paranoid that she won't be able to fit into her wedding dress.

I've done my best to reassure her that she's still a hottie, and more important, she's still a size 6. But when a woman believes she has put on weight, no amount of male convincing could prove sufficient.

So, my fiance has gone fruity.

We went to the grocery store, and Cori proceeded to load the cart with eight mangoes, seven oranges, six pears, five golden bananas, four cantaloupes, three honeydew melons, two purple plums and a partridge in a pear tree. (Where do you think we got the pears?) She has created a diet plan loosely based on something she found in a bridal magazine. Cori believes this festival of fruit will appease her sweet tooth and allow her to strut down the aisle looking every bit as good as the model in the brochure wearing her wedding dress. What do I get out of all of this fruit and fitness? All the smoothies I can drink.

Just the other day, one of the sportswriters commented that I have lost some weight in recent months.

Thankfully, he wasn't checking out my butt.

Some packages not tied neatly

By Jean Starnes

I like everything tied up in nice neat packages. This column discusses a few things that have unraveling strings; that is, they remain a puzzlement to me.

My apartment is surrounded by four others. I hear nothing from the people who live on the sides and only the footsteps of those over me. I haven't met the people behind me, but know that they have to be a couple. How do I know this? Because I hear the commode seat being put down all through the day and night. It sounds as distinct and clear as if I was in the same room. I don't hear the cabinet doors being closed, voices or radios, just the seat and the water going through the pipes. How do you explain that?

Starnes

Another thing I don't understand is why the television stations run the same commercial twice, one right after the other. Do they think we don't hear it the first time? Or do they get behind in the number of commercials and count this as two times? If I were paying for each advertisement, this would make me mad!

Speaking of TV, sometimes I watch "Walker, Texas Ranger," and I've yet to figure out why it requires 10 or 12 kicks to get the bad guy to stay down. If Walker wore pointed cowboy boots, one kick should do the job. But if they did that, the producer would have to come up with at least 20 more minutes of an actual plot and dialog.

That might be as difficult as teaching youngsters to tell time. We say there's 60 minutes in an hour. How, then, do we explain why 60 isn't on a digital clock?

How many times do we see vacant lots filled with yellow, blue and white plastic sacks flapping from every twig and bush? I don't think the sacks grew there. Have we become a city of so many litterbugs that we let all those sacks escape to blemish our nice, flat, treeless lots?

Talking about twigs and bushes, with all the new technical instruments designed to predict the weather, why does the mesquite bush remain the most reliable in telling us the freezes are over for the year?

Along with mesquite bushes, Texas also has a law that all drivers have to have liability car insurance. Considering this, why did the three drivers who hit me during my 40 years of driving experience not have insurance? Even the hysterical cow that ran into my car one night on the highway didn't have insurance.

We all have certain mysteries that can't be solved completely to our satisfaction. They vary as much as our personalities. Maybe some packages just aren't meant to be tied neatly.

Jean Starnes' autobiography is titled, "Hell on Wheels."

Millions of moms marched...

They want to know what happens now that the march is over

By Susan Swartz
N.Y. Times News Service

They gathered. They marched. They gave the NRA hives. Now what?

Elise was a marching mom last week. She opted for the smaller and rainy day Oakland version of the Million Mom March, and she considers herself one of the lucky ones. She wasn't carrying a photo of a dead loved one.

Violence, however, has visited her family. Last summer Elise's college student son invited a young woman over for dinner and a video. While he began cooking she went to her car to retrieve the movie. Two men drove by, slowed and looked at her.

"She told me later that they gave her a look," says Elise, shaking her head, knowing the look.

The two men burst through the back door, demanded drugs and money, beat up on Elise's son and forced him and the young woman into separate rooms. While one shoved Elise's son face-down on the floor, the other raped the woman. Then they switched.

It was over in less than 20 minutes — long enough to turn an ordinary night into something that altered lives forever.

One of the suspects grabbed a butcher knife from the kitchen counter. One looked to be carrying a gun and Elise's son wasn't sure if it was a gun or knife at his back as he lay on the floor, hearing the cries from the other room.

Police found a gun on one of the suspects when they arrested them later that night.

Elise walked in the rain in Oakland with her husband, daughter and another son because she knows that "violence can happen to anyone at anytime. You can't just worry about the problem, sitting on your couch. You have to show up, do something."

Listening to the heartbreaking stories of other marchers, Elise's family felt grateful. "We saw a family that looked just like us but they were carrying a sign with a photograph on it of a young man in a tuxedo, looking like he might be going to a prom. He was shot and killed a year ago."

She's not sure what the solution to stemming violence is, but she believes "what's going on in our country right now is nuts."

Elise attended the trial of her son's alleged attackers, listening to the couple recount the terror of their ordeal.

Family members of the suspects were also there and when one of the men, a parolee with a history of sexual and violent assaults, was sentenced to prison, the man's mother let out a long wail.

"At first I wanted to hate her for not doing a better job at raising her child," said Elise, "but I don't know her story."

Elise prays, too, for the suspects. "They could have killed them, but they didn't."

To Elise the challenge is more than what to do with guns, but what to do about "our beliefs, our culture and how we're desensitizing people to violence.

"I used to march in anti-war protests but back then we were trying to stop a war that was over there. Now it's here. This is our civil war."

Elise's brother is a member of the NRA and told her that her son could have saved himself and his friend that night if he'd had a gun in his apartment. She says, "The only way having a gun would have made a difference was if he were holding it in his hand and waiting for someone to break through the back door."

Elise says she's always been anti-gun. When her kids were little she wouldn't let them play with toy guns. But she allows gun control is a complex issue and doesn't believe guns should be outlawed.

Meanwhile, she's trying to think up other strategies for herself and other mothers.

"We need to do it with money because that's the quickest way to make a difference in this country.

"My friend's been urging me to invest in the stock market and when I heard Congress arguing about trigger locks and how they wouldn't work, I had an idea. I'll find out which high tech company knows how to make a trigger lock that yields only to the thumb of the owner.

"What if a bunch of us decided that we'll only invest in companies that are working to end violence?"

What if?

'We need to do it with money because that's the quickest way to make a difference in this country. My friend's been urging me to invest in the stock market ... What if a bunch of us decided that we'll only invest in companies that are working to end violence?'
— Elise, a mother who marched

Teenagers still have lot to learn

N.Y. Times News Service

Despite renewed efforts across the country to educate teen-agers about sex and repercussions like pregnancy and disease, many young people say they still need more information. A study of high school students suggests that they are right. The survey of 1,012 public school students conducted for the Kaiser Family Foundation, the health care philanthropy, found these gaps in students' knowledge:

■ 15 percent of those who reported being sexually active said they did not know they could obtain condoms without their parents' permission, and 39 percent did not know they could buy birth control pills on their own.

■ More than half the girls asked did not know that emergency contraceptive pills could be taken after intercourse to protect against pregnancy.

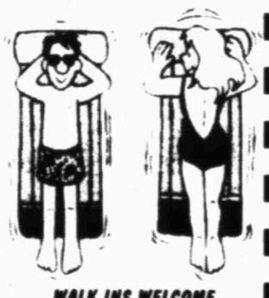

■ Nearly half those surveyed did not realize that their chances of becoming infected with the AIDS virus through sex increased if they had another sexually transmitted disease.

The students also said they needed more information about where to get tested for AIDS and other diseases, how to use condoms and what to do in case of sexual assault.

DEAR ABBY

Snooping son loses his parent's trust

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: Please help! I caught my 11-year-old son sneaking in my bedroom going through my husband's drawers, and he found a Penthouse magazine. (The only one in our house, I might add.) My husband and I are both extremely upset over this, but don't know how to handle it. First, my son has lost our trust by going through our room when we weren't home, and second, he lied about it. Lastly, we are concerned that he was exposed to that kind of material. There was much more in that magazine than anyone should see.

Van Buren

I feel that our son has lost his innocence, and my husband and I are both distraught at the thought of it. How do you punish a child for this? I understand the curiosity — his class is in the middle of "family life experiences" this week. My son is generally a good kid, other than the fact that when he does something wrong, he tends to lie his way through it.

Please help or advise any way you can. — UPSET IN ALEXANDRIA, VA.

DEAR UPSET: It's important not to overreact. Your boy is becoming a man, and his curiosity is normal. Use this experience as an opportunity to open the lines of communication. If his father hasn't already had that "father-son" chat with him, Dad had better hurry, because it is overdue.

In a week or two, in a nonconfrontational manner, point out to your son that just as you respect his privacy, you expect him to respect yours. That means not rummaging through your personal effects. In the future, keep items that are "private" in a locked cabinet or closet.

Lest you think you're the only parents with this problem, read on for one that arrived the same day as yours:

DEAR ABBY: I had a collection of Playboy magazines in a sealed box in our attic. One day while putting something in the attic, I noticed that the tape had been removed from the box and someone had gone through my magazines. I brought this to the attention of my wife. She recalled that my 8-year-old son had been in the attic recently.

I went upstairs to his bedroom and asked him if he had been in the attic and had removed the tape from a box that held some magazines. I told him that all I wanted was a truthful answer. I told him that when he answered, I would know if he was telling me the truth. He asked, "Dad, how can you tell?"

I replied, "After you answer, I'll ask you to stick out your tongue. If you're not truthful, your tongue will have spots on it." Then I asked him if he had removed the tape from the box in the attic. He replied, "No."

I said, "Stick out your tongue."

After he did, I said, "Uh-oh!"

He stood there looking up at me with his hands on his hips and said, "Dad, that was from the LAST time." — B.W. IN HURON, OHIO

DEAR ABBY: Last year, my boyfriend's parents gave me a large, expensively matted and framed picture of him and me for my birthday. Our relationship ended several months ago, and I am debating whether it would be appropriate to return the picture. It has been sitting in the closet since we broke up. Should I return the picture to his parents, or to my former boyfriend? — OUT OF THE PICTURE IN INDIANA

DEAR OUT OF THE PICTURE: Write the parents a sweet note and ask them if they want the picture returned. If they don't, you can always use the frame if someone new comes along.

DEAR ABBY: I work in a small office, and every two weeks an e-mail is sent to solicit money to buy cards and gifts for fellow employees for birthdays, new babies, funerals, etc.

Recently, we were asked to contribute to a get-well card and gift for an employee who had elective cosmetic surgery.

Abby, is there a limit to what is appropriate to solicit for office contributions? For those of us on a tight budget, it is embarrassing and uncomfortable to be put on the spot this way. How should I handle this?— PENNY-WISE IN JACKSONVILLE, FLA.

DEAR PENNY-WISE: You should discuss this problem with your supervisor and suggest changing the card and gift policy. This is a delicate situation. The directive should come from management — otherwise, it could create resentment.

DEAR ABBY: I have been in a relationship for two years. My boyfriend makes nearly twice my salary, yet I often find that I am paying for myself when we go out. We currently live together, and he pays $720 to my $505.

I have always been accustomed to the man paying for the majority of our times together, and therefore I'm taken aback at being expected to shell out any money. Would you consider me a gold digger, or have times changed that much? -- SECOND THOUGHTS IN VIRGINIA BEACH, VA.

DEAR SECOND: You are not a gold digger, just a bit behind the times. Times have changed since the days when men paid for everything, and many women today do pay their own way. Since this has become a problem between you, you are overdue for a serious discussion to clear the air about the division of financial responsibilities. Unless you can come to a comfortable agreement, he is not the man for you.

'A Really Big Deal'

(Above) MC President David Daniel congratulates the students for completing the GED program and urges them to continue their education at Midland College. (Right) Erma Soto and Rebecca Stephan wait for their turn to walk across the stage and receive their certificates of GED completion. They are two of the more than 90 students who completed the GED program though Midland College.

Ceremony honors GED graduates

"So many of these people have not had the opportunity in the past to complete their education, so when they do it's a really big deal," Cynthia Turland, Director Adult Basic Education, said.

Turland is referring to the General Education Development (GED) graduates who celebrated the completion of their high school equivalency certificate May 23.

The GED is an alternative high school degree for those who do not complete traditional secondary school.

To start the GED process students should visit Turland at MC. The student is sent for diagnostic testing to place them at the appropriate level in five areas of study: literature (reading), math, science, social studies and writing.

Study is individualized. Although students usually start with reading, which will increase understanding in all areas, they may choose to start in any area and proceed to work their way through the subject.

There are no time constraints so students can take as long as they need to finish a subject.

Students, ranging in age from 17 to 70, come to the program because they encountered obstacles in their education.

"Some students have had to quit school or never attended because they had to work to support their family," Turland said.

Younger students may have faced other obstacles. A family moving, parents divorcing or other problems necessitate students having to choose educational alternatives.

Obstacles continue during the course of study.

"One obstacle for students is the lack of affordable child care," Turland said. "These are working people and they don't have a lot of money."

Another obstacle may be transportation.

"We've anticipated this obstacle," Turland said. "We have several learning centers in various sections of Midland we hope will be within reach for most people."

Other obstacles may be people in a student's life who don't support the student's desire to further their education or better themselves.

One obstacle that doesn't exist is tuition cost: GED classes are provided at no cost to the student.

In spite of obstacles there is lots of support for the GED program.

"There are plenty of people who are very supportive," Turland said. "We've had business people, including the City of Midland and private industry, who have called about employees they have. The employers want to further their employee's education and help them become better employees."

Turland has numerous goals to make the program even more attractive.

"I hope to continue meeting the needs of the community," Turland said. "I hope that even more mature students will give us a try.

"I would also like to involve our students in other MC programs, either credit or certificate," Turland said.

Turland would like to attract those students most in need of the program and others who would benefit the most.

"I would also like to increase the number of students who complete the program," Turland said.

HOME & GARDEN

Ecological CATASTROPHE

By Burr Williams

The drought is becoming an ecological catastrophe.

City dwellers with automatic water systems and air conditioning have not suffered. Our culture has insulated us from knowing within our marrow the horror occurring in almost every pasture within 50 miles.

There is no grass left in most pastures. Most ranchers have sold off most of their livestock. There is no soil moisture for a farmer to utilize. They feel the relentless pressure of the drought, but not the rest of us.

Take a short drive along one of the county roads one afternoon, when the temperature is more than 100 degrees and the wind is blowing more than 20 miles an hour. Stop and walk away from the vehicle and sit down in a lawn chair. Most of us could not even last 10 minutes. We are very spoiled, for discomfort comes easy, and few of us endure discomfort well. I challenge everyone to spend one hour enduring the conditions that are normal for this drought.

As we sit in that hypothetical chair, and while the sweat drips and tender flesh reddens even through sunscreen, think about where we get our water. Most of it comes from Lake Ivey, which is below half-full, having dropped 25 percent of its capacity in one year. With another year of drought, the dissolved solids will convince most of us to drink bottled water, and will cause damage to inappropriate landscape plants. Yes, there is some groundwater, but it is finite. We can continue to use water as we do now for a number of years.

Our political leaders tell us that there is no need to worry about the water supply. Elected officials pride themselves on being conservatives. However, Midland is a rich town, so we can buy water. We do not have to conserve water, we are told.

We do waste water. Everybody has seen that some water goes down the streets because of an untended sprinkler system. A number of people comment about schools and parks being watered in the heat of the day.

The water in the duck pond at Wadley-Barron Park originally was used as landscape irrigation. Excess water in the home landscape percolates down to the first impervious layer of rock, and then travels down its subterranean slopes, emerging in the old playa of the park as a spring.

The duck pond at Wadley-Barron Park is a blatant statement by the citizens of Midland that we do not care to conserve water. Most automatic irrigation systems are set to put down anywhere from 60 to 140 inches of water a year. There are few places anywhere in the United States that have that much rainfall. Hydrologists know that the water table that supplies the park as a "perched water table," far above the Oglalla Aquifer.

The Oglalla Aquifer is the source of our ground water. Its source was the Rocky Mountains, before the Pecos River began running and separated the aquifer from its source. The water in the aquifer is finite. No amount of rainfall will fill it up, ever.

You are sitting in that chair, and the sweat is making your skin crawl. You reach for that nice cold soda pop, but there is none to be had. This is a simple test of endurance, remember? Up high in the sky a vulture is circling, sensing you might not last long! There is nothing else in the sky, no clouds anywhere. In the rainy 1980s we often had 50 to 60 days with some precipitation. The last two years each had less than 25 days during which at least a slight mist fell.

Nowadays, when thunderheads do build up, strong gusts of wind, some lightning, and maybe a brief shower occur and then the clouds race away, or dissipate. When a thunderhead does build up, a country person goes outside. A farmer or a rancher needs the rain for the viability of his or her business. He/she sniffs the sweet softness of the humidity and lifts eyes to the heavens. "Rain! Rain! Please come! Even if there must be hail and tornadoes! Please rain!" Even when lightning strikes within a mile or two, the country person stays out, watching and praying, trying to guide the moisture to where it is needed. "It won't rain unless I stay outside!"

Let's have a good steady 25-mph wind blow as we sit in the chair. The skin begins to become taut with surface dehydration. Dust lands in the folds of the skin on the inside of the elbow and causes more minor irritation. A tiny piece of dried vegetation flies into an eye and feels like a log.

Drought and low water levels are not just affecting Texas and the Permian Basin. A cow stands next to a pond Wednesday in Folsom, La., which is receding due to the driest spring on record in southeastern Louisiana, according to National Weather Service rain data. Hoses are running dry. Lawns are brown. Tomato and pecan farmers worry about losing crops. Forests are burning. Even dirt is on fire. Southern parts of the state, especially the southeastern, are reeling from drought. Officials are calling for prudent use of water and a ban on open burning.

Think about the adaptations of grassland plants and animals. Most grassland plants are not tall. If a species is tall, it has a suckering habitat, so each copse forms a dome. When a mesquite germinates, the first stem stays flat on the ground and only after several stems are covered with blow sand a half dozen upright stems finally begin to grow. Meadowlarks spend most of their time on the ground, only flying to avoid predators. Cassin's Sparrows only fly to advertise for a mate. Grasshopper Sparrows only flit a few feet to dive into the grass.

It would be smart to lie down and get out of the wind, wouldn't it? But if you do sprawl on the ground, the soil temperature is at least 150 degrees F. You can feel your toes beginning to bake in your shoes. You are totally terribly miserable, aren't you? Only 10 minutes have passed.

You are participating (as you read) in a pedagogical technique known as guided imagery. The imagination is very powerful, even if it has been atrophied by the heroin-numbness of television. If you were truly out in the pasture, miles from any house, no car in sight, and no chair to sit in, by now you might be panicking, breathing quickly and shallowly, your pulse rate elevated until a pounding in your ears deafens you. Every year in the American Southwest, people die of heatstroke and dehydration because they disrespect the realities of the natural world.

There is a parallel between those who die of dehydration in the Southwest and how our society wastes water. Modern culture despises the realities of the natural world. The material infrastructure coddles us in to believing in an illusion of endless water and endless air conditioning. We are aliens upon this land (importing all of our food, water and even energy), living in enclosed "space stations" that are cocoons protecting a soft gooshy smushy interior, for we are like hairy little caterpillars, gobbling and gobbling up limited natural resources. Our copious trash piles are the frass of our culture.

If the drought persists even 10 more years, Midland may be a ghost town. In the 1200s a drought of 25 years occurred, so it is possible. If we continue to pretend we can liberally waste our water and believe we can always buy more, the real world will eventually put an end to our callow puerile self-centeredness.

We can do better. We must.

A first step may seem radical. It is second-stage water conservation as already put into practice in Sweetwater and San Angelo. WATER OUTSIDE ONLY ONCE EVERY TWO WEEKS. These conservative towns have water conservation plans that they have implemented. Does our liberal town?

Comedy opens Friday

By Georgia Temple

Shy is Charlie's middle name. To avoid having to speak with strangers at the Meeks Lake House, a Georgia fishing lodge, he pretends to be a foreigner who doesn't understand English. His pretense places him in a position to hear the beliefs and plans of those around him. The truth is shocking, but what can he do?

"Charlie's character runs the gamut from just being a very painfully shy individual to broad physical comedy," said George O'Connor, who plays Charlie in Midland Community Theatre's production of Larry Shue's outrageous comedy "The Foreigner," opening Friday in Davis Theatre I, Cole Theatre, 2000 W. Wadley Ave.

"It's a wonderfully, wonderfully funny show," said Jane Burgess, who is co-directing the production with her husband, Carl Beery Moore. "It's kept us in stitches every night we've had rehearsals thus far, and we are very lucky to have such tremendous actors to pull off these characters."

The play represents a first for the couple, who are both drama teachers in their day jobs.

"It's the first time either of us has co-directed anything," Moore said. "We are such a good fit. We get along about absolutely everything. And neither one of us is very, very possessive about things.

"She did most of the blocking. If there was something I thought would work better, I changed it. And if there were things I had done, and she came up with a better idea, she changed it. And that was fine with me.

"It's easy to give in because we have a great deal of respect for the other's abilities. And we just want the best show."

Co-produced by Chevron and rated PG, "The Foreigner" will be onstage June 2-17. Tickets are $10 for Friday and Saturday shows and $8 for Thursday and Sunday performances. Curtain is at 8 p.m. except for the 2 p.m. June 11 matinee. For reservations call 682-4111 or 570-4011.

Shue's comedy has its rip-roaring moments, particularly when Charlie begins telling a story in his supposed foreign tongue.

"It's almost wet-your-pants funny, if it's done right," said O'Connor, who has a fondness for this piece of theater.

"This show is like comfortable clothes that you just love to wear to me," O'Connor said. "The first time I was in it, I was going through a divorce. I think it saved my sanity, so I have a special soft spot in my heart for this show."

O'Connor has played Froggy LeSueur and worked as stage manager in previous productions of Shue's comedy. Playing the role of Charlie has special meaning for him.

"The first time I was in this show, a very good friend of mine, Bob Schmidt, played Charlie," O'Connor said. "And, unfortunately, he died of a brain tumor about five years ago. So I just in my heart of hearts dedicate my performance to him and what I learned from him the first time I was in this production."

The Midland actor who played Charlie the first time MCT staged this play also has moved on to the big stage in the sky.

"I remember Bill Shaner playing the part, and I loved the play," said Andy Salcedo, who plays Froggy this time around. "I laughed and laughed. And I knew that if we ever did it again, I'd want to be in it."

Fiesta Night to be dedicated to kids

By Georgia Temple

Music and dance will fill Centennial Plaza on Thursday when Summer in the City kicks off with the Midland Hispanic Chamber of Commerce's Fiesta Night.

"This first one is dedicated to the children — it's a kids night," said Bo Zertuche of the Hispanic Chamber of Commerce, who is chairman of the Fiesta Night Summer in the City program. "We're going to provide activities for the children."

And children from the Hispanic Cultural Center will be providing the entertainment for the evening.

"We'll have a children's mariachi group and children's folkloric dancers," Zertuche said. "In conjunction with this, we also have a family carnival set up down Texas Street."

The carnival, which is linked with the Mex-Tex Cook-off Festival, opens on Thursday and runs through Sunday. Carnival hours on Thursday are 6 p.m. to midnight. Admission is charged.

Summer in the City is a free event designed for families. Held in Centennial Plaza downtown, entertainment and activities run from 7:30 to 9 p.m.

"It's a wonderful opportunity for organizations such as the Hispanic Chamber of Commerce to come forward and promote the downtown area and promote Hispanic cultural and heritage," Zertuche said of Summer in

This week: You'll exude star quality all week. Others will enjoy sitting back and watching.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20)
★★★★★ Join friends and seize the moment. Happiness surrounds you. Don't worry about another so much. Don't agonize over decisions — just do it! What happens naturally between you and others is real. A new acquaintance could be a lot of fun. Tonight: Cheer in Memorial Day.
This week: Mulling over a problem might help. However, eventually you will need to take action.

CANCER (June 21-July 22)
★★★ Your instincts help with a parent or an older relative. Remain sensitive and stay in touch with your needs. Friends seem to pull at you with extremely strong ideas. You might opt to bring everyone together for a spontaneous get-together rather than juggle everyone. Tonight: Take the lead.
This week: Aim for what you want, and enjoy life. However, don't go too far overboard!

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22)
★★★★★ Take an overview when someone pressures you to attend his gathering. You can't blame anyone for wanting you to be present and accounted for! You are a strong personality and would be missed. A friend lets you know once again how important you are. Tonight: Follow the music.
This week: Take charge, and others will listen — until Thursday, that is!

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22)
★★★★★ You get interesting news, where you see both a plus and a minus. Don't worry about it. Let events flow and see what happens. One-on-one relating proves to be unusually special. You beam wherever you go. Make an extra effort for a loved one. Tonight: Happy as can be.
This week: Take an overview. Understand why another is stuck, but don't play into it.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22)
★★★★★ Let others run with the ball. You find that a partner is a bit confusing; however, you do understand him — perhaps better than he does himself. Reach out for someone who might not be close to you but who you care about. Tonight: Where the barbecue is.
This week: Work as a team, and you'll gain. If you get too many red flags, back off.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21)
★★★★ Dig in and help out at a friend's barbecue or party. Everyone appreciates your effort and enjoys catching up on news. A partner or new friend demonstrates his feelings. Allow an open exchange; get to know this person better. Tonight: Relax with the moment.
This week: Others hold all the cards. However, you can always say no!

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21)
★★★★★ Your impish, delightful side comes out. You make plans and decide to stick to them, especially if they involve sports or exercise. Go out and jog. Popularity mounts, as others plunge you into a dilemma. So many invitations! Tonight: Raise the roof!
This week: Before deciding to oppose an idea, do your homework.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19)
★★★★ Take time to visit with friends. You might not want to get into everyone's frenetic attempts to make this a whopper of a few days. Instead, invite a couple of friends over. Enjoy the extra day of R&R. Family plays a key role. Tonight: At home.
This week: You cruise into work full of ideas. Obstacles that appear on Thursday force you to pull back.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18)
★★★★★ Others talk up a storm, wanting to share everything with you. Your sense of humor comes out with family. Love seems to be brewing; do what you need to do to make it blossom. On no account should you step back. Tonight: Flirting and smiling away.
This week: You are centered. Even so, zeroing in on what you want could be tricky.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20)
★★★★ Once you let go, you're out of control. Your sense of humor comes out. You intuitively know what to do. Build on existing plans. Add your personal touch to a party or get-together. Treat a family member or dear friend well — roll out the red carpet. Tonight: Pick up the tab.
This week: Make calls and get into the thick of things.

In rubber bridge, if you go down in a doubled contract, you lose coin of the realm. In duplicate pairs, a minus score could easily be top on the board. Consider this deal from an upstate New York tournament.

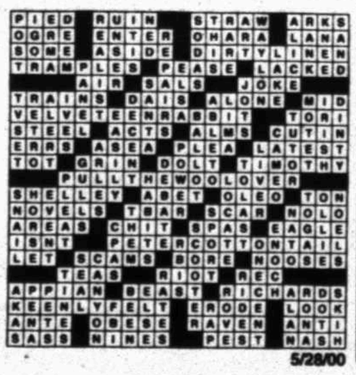

North-South stole the hand in the auction. Once South could enter the bidding, even going two down doubled in a spade contract would be an excellent result since East-West are cold for three no trump, scoring at least plus 600 instead of only plus 500.

West's drastic underbid of one no trump was the root of the debacle. The good intermediates and fit for partner's suit are easily worth a point or two, making even a forcing jump to two no trump a standout. If West is averse to jumping in no trump with only 11 points, an acceptable alternative is one heart on the three-card fragment. Either action would have kept South from entering the auction. As the bidding progressed, it was clear to South that North held length in spades and some values, so entering the auction with two spades ran virtually no risk.

It worked out better than South, Gerald Fried of Buffalo, N.Y., ever expected. West led a club against three spades doubled, ruffed in the closed hand. The ace and king of hearts were cashed and another club ruffed. After cashing the ace of diamonds and ruffing a diamond in dummy, declarer trumped a third club in hand and another diamond on the table.

A fourth club ruff provided the entry for declarer to lead another diamond. When West ruffed with the ace, declarer had 11 tricks and a result to be proud of.

PLAY: MCT to present comedy

special reasons for wanting to be cast in this play.

"I wanted to work with Carl and Jane," said Ms. Chambers (Betty Meeks). "With two very small exceptions, I haven't been onstage since I was 19. I'm always on the other side of the proscenium. And I have a real urge to do 'Gypsy,' which comes up in the fall.

"I needed to get onstage and show people I know what I'm doing, and maybe they will consider me for this big musical. That was what got me here. I didn't really know the play. But I love it. I'm having so much fun. It's a great script."

Stanton teacher Jacky Dumas (Ellard Simms) had heard that MCT was going to produce the comedy when he discovered the high school was to perform "The Foreigner" for its one-act play.

"When the drama teacher said he was going to do it, I said, 'Get me a copy of the play.' And I read it and enjoyed it and couldn't wait until auditions came."

Clay Grizzle, who teaches theater at Howard College in Big Spring, did not know what play MCT was presenting when he came to auditions. He just wanted an opportunity to be in whatever the theater was doing.

"The last show I did here, I had a good time," Grizzle said. "So I wanted to come back and do a show."

He plays Owen Musser, who is not a particularly nice guy to those outside his immediate group of acquaintances.

"Villains are fun," said Grizzle, who most enjoys the opportunity to act and not direct. "It's wonderful not being responsible for anything except me. I don't have to worry if other people are here. I don't have to worry about costumes. I just have to worry about me."

Unlike Salcedo and Dumas and Grizzle, who have school schedules that limit them mostly to productions in the late spring and summer, Christopher Randolph has a choice.

"It's really hard to chose what I want to do, but I heard about this play and the plot and thought this sounds like a good one to be in, and I decided to go for it," Randolph said. "We have a great cast and stage manager, and, of course, Carl and Jane directing. This is a great way to end the day when you come to rehearsals everyday."

Randolph plays the Rev. Marshall Lee.

"I was the reverend in the past play I was in, so I guess I'm being typecast," Randolph said. He laughed. "But this reverend is a little more nasty than the one before."

The directing duo and the time slot drew Lindsey Stewart to auditions.

"This is the only time I have to do a play, and when I heard Carl and Jane were directing it, I had to audition," said Ms. Stewart (Catherine Simms), who ran into the couple in line at H-E-B. "The fact that Carl is directing a comedy is pretty humorous itself."

Shue, who died young, also wrote "The Nerd." Both plays address through situations and characters particular attitudes held by some groups of people.

"It's great fun, it really is," said Moore. "It has a very strong message. As long as attitudes in our country remain as they are, it will always be an appropriate show to do. It has good lessons for people who have fixed opinions."

Cast as townspeople are Gary Simmons, Tommy Cooley, James Moore, Toika Jones, John Schneiderwind and Angela Rice.

"The Foreigner has a wonderful sort of message about how people will treat people from other countries, automatically stereotyping them," said Ms. Rice, who has spent more time in theaters behind the lights than in front of them. "It not only teaches a lesson, but you are enjoying the comedy of it. That's one of the best ways to get any message across, through comedy."

Need to Read to host fund-raising performance

Midland Need to Read is hosting a special fund-raising performance of "The Foreigner" at 2 p.m. June 4 in Davis Theatre One, Cole Theatre, 2000 W. Wadley Ave.

"So many of our volunteers are interested in reading and writing and literature and plays, so we thought they would enjoy the play," said Patti Groce, executive director of Midland Need to Read. "Plus many of our students haven't seen a live theater performance, and we thought it was a good opportunity for them to do so."

Tickets to this special performance can be purchased at the Midland Need to Read office by calling 685-4572. They can only be purchased at Midland Community Theatre's box office the day of the performance. Tickets for Need-to-Read students are being sponsored by contributors who purchase additional seats. Tickets are $15.

Midland Need to Read is, Ms. Groce said, "An adult literacy council that trains volunteers to work with adults who need to improve their reading, writing and English skills."

KIDS: Summer in the City to begin Thursday

(From 1F)

the City. "We try to do that at every opportunity we have."

Next up on the program is German-Czech Night on June 8.

"We had an excellent response last year," said Sue Buck, co-chairman of the German-Czech program with Becky Halfmann of St. Lawrence. "We had so many out-of-town people due to our out-of-town advertising by the band.

"There was a lot of local response from people of German ancestry. And there are also many German and Austrian restaurateurs in town, and I think their name recognition helped people come."

This year's program includes a return engagement of the polka band.

"They are a dance band, and people enjoy dancing in the plaza so much," Ms. Buck said. "We couldn't get any of the people with beards to come and join the beard contest if they were dancing. They said, 'No. We're dancing with our wives.' They were having a great time."

Other Summer in the City programs planned for this June in Centennial Plaza are Gospel Night, chaired by Thelma Gibbs, on June 15; Western Night, chaired by Mike Lawrence of KGEE-FM, on June 22; and Senior Night, chaired by Saul Herrera of Community and Senior Services, on June 29.

"We're planning a good time for the seniors," said Herrera, noting that this is the first year for Community and Senior Services to sponsor Senior Night.

"It's going to be a family event."

Most Summer in the City offerings include activities for children, food and drinks for sale, a featured artist and local performers.

"Everybody goes to see the big-name artists, but we have a lot of local talent here that people don't always know about," Herrera said. "This gives them an opportunity to be seen and viewed, plus it's a good family atmosphere. Bring your lawn chair and find a shady spot."

A new downtown activity debuts this year during Summer in the City.

"Summer in the City has graciously allowed us to piggyback with them on June 22 to kick off our ArtWalk Midland," said Cindi Mladenka, co-chairman of ArtWalk Midland. "We felt like they go hand in hand, and the timing was perfect. The purpose of ArtWalk Midland is to give our community exposure to various art experiences through a free monthly downtown event. It will be held again July 13 in conjunction with Summer in the City and then, in August, it will stand on its own as Artwalk Midland."

Retro Night, chaired by Jimmy Patterson, is the planned Summer in the City offering for July 13. The evening will feature Jive Train, a Pickwick Players revue of "Grease" and swing dancers. No Summer in the City is planned for July 6 because of the July 4th Star Spangled Salute.

Also, History in the House, which will be held at the Permian Basin Petroleum Museum, is part of the Summer in the City series. The play, which tells the story of the Santa Rita, will be held July 20-22, 27-29 and Aug. 3-5. Tickets are $10 for History in the House, which is a fund-raiser for the Petroleum Museum and Summer in the City.

"It's going to be great fun and interactive," Linda Bond said of this year's History in the House production entitled "To Tent City Texas."

Ms. Bond's involvement in Summer in the City dates some seven years when she and Sonny Buck began putting the program together.

"We just wanted to generate some activity downtown and create free, family-fun evenings in the summer," Ms. Bond said.

The series took hold, said Ms. Bond. "Summer in the City's always been a wonderful mix of people from all ages, all areas of town and all walks of life."

Video exhibition

ODESSA—The Presidential Museum is showing a series of videos related to Texas history as part of the museum's Celebrate Texas, "Statehood" on Saturday, at 11 a.m., 1 p.m., and 3 p.m.

"Statehood" is based on the acclaimed history of the "Lone Star" state by T.R. Fehrenbach. After much debate in Washington and Texas, the Lone Star Republic joins the United States, thereby precipitating war with Mexico. The outcome enlarges Texas and the United States, and it intensifies the national debate over slavery. In 1861, Texas joins the Confederacy. Some skirmishes occur in Texas, as well as naval engagements off the Gulf coast. After Appomattox come years of economic troubles and frontier hardships, before a more stable society emerges.

On Saturday, June 10, the museum will be showing the video, "This Most Singular Country." The war between Mexico and the United States was concluded by the signing of the Treaty of Guadalupe-Hidalgo. The Treaty relied, however, upon on error-riddled map, and it became necessary for the two nations to redraw the boundary lines. "This Most Singular Country" gives viewers an insight to this survey and the subsequent history of the border. For more information call, (915) 332-7123.

Church art

LONDON, England—For those long familiar with "church art," a startling Millennium Art Exhibition will begin this June at Westminster Cathedral in London. For the first time ever, a living artist will be featured in a one-man art exhibition right in the middle of the "sacred space."

The Royal Preview, scheduled for June 6, will open a month-long display of more than one thousand square feet of canvases created by the explosive Irish-American artist, Matt Lamb, who was born in Chicago. His artwork is neither wooden carving nor gilded plaster. It is not stained glass or curving marble. It's bold, free, vivid, textured and restless. It is not passive, but demanding. The art will be impossible to ignore.

Twelve contemporary paintings, each nine feet by twelve feet, will be hung in the nave of the Cathedral. They're an outward reflection on the Life of Christ, but viewers must look inward to comprehend their message. These works of "raw vision" as they are called by some critics, were initially commissioned by the Cathedral of the Holy Spirit in Mannheim, Germany, in 1997.

Proxy information will be mailed to stockholders of record as of May 1, 2000 of both National Oilwell and IRI.

National Oilwell is a worldwide leader in the design, manufacture and sale of comprehensive systems and components used in oil and gas drilling and production, as well as in providing supply chain integration services to the upstream oil and gas industry.

IRI is a world leader in the design, engineering, manufacture, sales and rental of oilfield equipment and downhole tools.

Duke postpones planned IPO

Denver — Duke Energy Field Services said it postponed its $552 million initial public offering because of volatile market conditions.

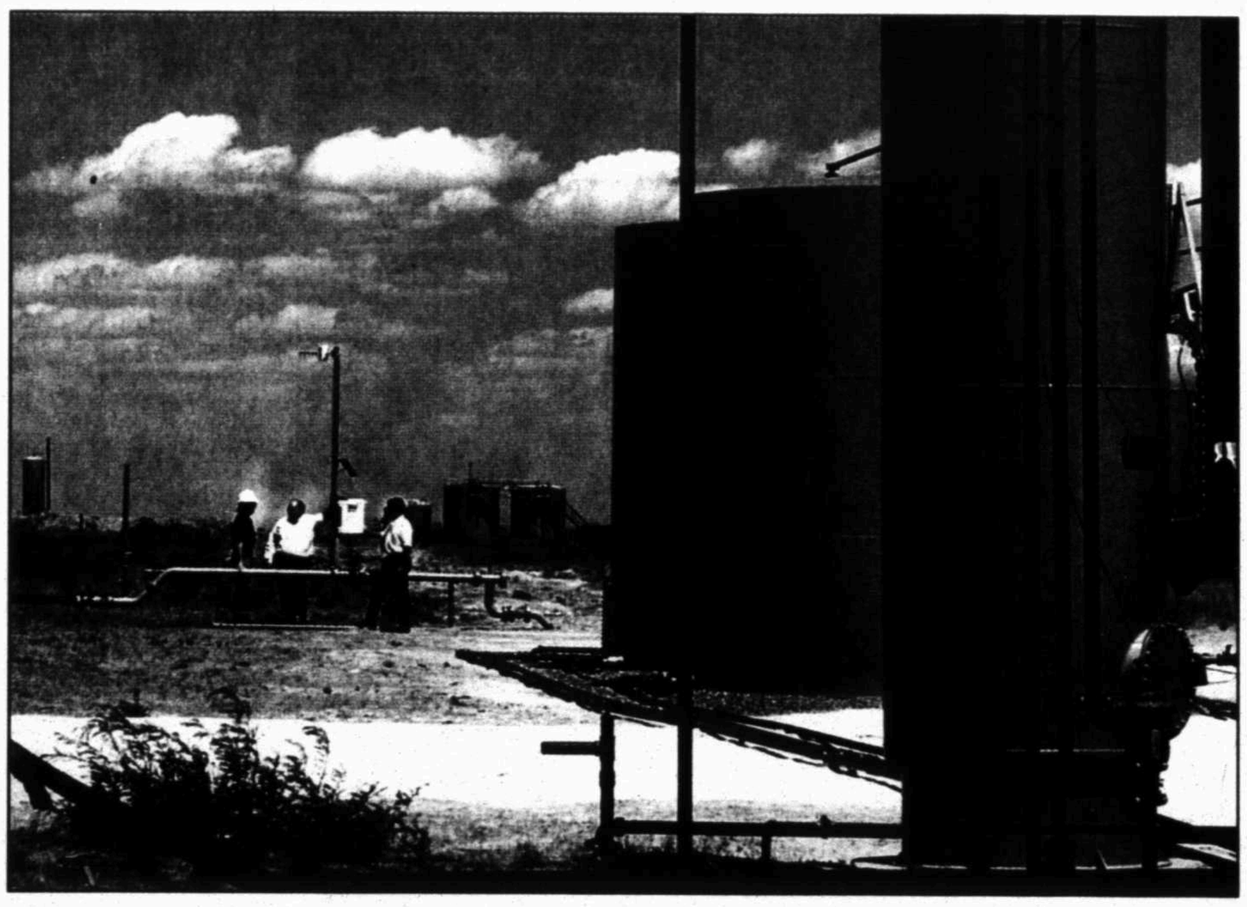

The company, created in March by the merger of the natural-gas gathering and processing businesses of Duke Energy Corp. and Phillips Petroleum Co., said it will offer shares when conditions are more favorable. Until then, the venture will continue to be 69.7-percent owned by Duke and 30.3-percent by Phillips.

Duke Energy Field Services, based in Denver, collects and processes more natural gas than any other U.S. company. It had planned to sell 26.3 million shares, or about a 19 percent stake, at $21 each.

Duke, the largest U.S. utility owner, and Phillips, the sixth-largest U.S. oil company, agreed in December to combine their gas processing units, valued at $5 billion to $6 billion, into a separate, publicly traded company. The companies said then they planned then to sell shares to the public within six months.

Gas sales

Operators inspect a a remote monitoring unit on a gas sales line in the Permian Basin. Natural gas futures moved above $4 this week for the first time in 3 1/2 years. Low inventories and hot weather are credited for the higher prices, which are expected to continue this summer. Higher gas prices and higher oil prices will help Permian Basin operators to continue to heal from the downturn of 1998-99.

Natural gas prices strong heading into summer

By Mella McEwen
Staff Writer

Unseasonable summer-like heat has pushed natural gas prices , which passed the $4 level on the New York Mercantile Exchange futures market this week.

More importantly, local experts say, natural gas prices are expected to remain strong for awhile.

"I think it's good news for natural gas producers and I'm hopeful it will cause them to call their drilling contractor and drill prospects they've been holding all across the state," said Railroad Commissioner Charles Matthews, adding that it should also benefit the service industry and producers as well.

Natural gas Analyst Robert Anderson said the rise in gas prices is rare but not unprecedented, usually occurring for a day or two during nature-related events like hurricanes or ice storms, which will raise prices for a day or two but not weeks or, as some expect, for months.

Amarillo Economist Karr Ingham said that the economic impact of $4 gas will be substantial to the Permian Basin economy because, with oil prices also high, at near $30, "it makes it possible to drill. The economic benefits are clear."

With substantial natural gas production in the area, he said the commodity will be a wonderful economic development tool.

Clayton Williams of Clayton Williams Energy said that the high prices are a function of supply and demand and said $4 natural gas will ratchet the industry up a couple of notches.

Barry Winstead, vice president of the Mid-Continent Region for Burlington Resources, agreed that such prices will bring some incremental increase in activity.

"We are encouraged by the fundamentals of natural gas supply and demand," said Winstead, whose office oversees the production of 280 million cubic feet of natural gas out of the Permian Basin, Anadarko Basin, Wind River and Williston basins. Companywide, Burlington Resources produces 2 billion cubic feet a day of natural gas.

Anderson credits the combination of three factors with strengthening gas prices.

"First, the 1998-1999 period produced very little new supply of natural gas," he said. "People don't realize that although gas prices were good, crude prices were very low and that affected all drilling. Replacement of reserves and deliverability was down as the lack of drilling impacted the availability of gas. So supplies are down."

Secondly, he said, Local Distributing Companies (LDCs) who provide natural gas to consumers are creating demand by buying all the natural gas they can to fill storage because they're concerned about having enough natural gas for the coming winter.

OU names Petroleum School for oilman Curtis Mewbourne

By John Paul Pitts
Oil Editor

Officials of the Oklahoma University School of Petroleum and Geological Engineering have announced a new direction and new name for the school.

In announcing its new direction, the school earlier this month was renamed the Mewbourne School of Petroleum and Geological Engineering, for Tyler oil man Curtis Mewbourne. Mewbourne who has extensive oil and gas operations in the Permian Basin, provided an endowment gift of $6 million to the school.

In an earlier interview with Mewbourne, an OU grad, he said he was making the $6 million endowment, because of a strong interest in providing the professionalism needed to meet the needs of a dynamic, technology driven industry. He said more needed to be done by industry to promote the training and hiring of petroleum professionals. The vast majority of the Mewbourne endowment will go to benefit undergraduate students and re-energize the undergraduate program at the Mewbourne School.

"Technology will continue to drive the future of the energy sector, the third largest in the world, and the Mewbourne School is dedicated to producing the top talent, research and education programs to meet industry needs," said Mewbourne. OU graduates, he said, occupy top management positions in oil producing nations throughout the world.

Ranked by U.S. News and World Report as one of the top five petroleum engineering schools in the U.S., the Mewbourne School is home to some of the top research facilities in the country.

The school owns and operates the Integrated Core Characterization Center, a nationally known rock physics laboratory, originally developed by Amoco.

Basin lease sale encouraging

By John Paul Pitts
Oil Editor

Results of the recent University Land Sale in Midland are indicative that there is still a high level of interest in the Permian Basin, said James Holtzclaw, mineral lease specialist for University Lands in Midland. "Overall, Texas Land Commissioner David Dewhurst, was extremely encouraged by the sale," said Holtzclaw.

He called the sale, held last week, very successful, considering the fact that the industry has only recently come off a major downturn. A total of $1.43 million bonus was paid at the sale, up from $1.27 million at the last sale in November. Other encouraging signs were higher per acre prices and an increase in bidders. The average per acre went from $100 to $108 per acre, and there were 17 successful bidders out of a total of 20. This compared to 12 bidders at the last sale in November.

"Nearly all the bidders were smaller independents, reflecting the trend that major oil companies are exiting the Basin," said Holtzclaw.

While the total bonus is far below the record of $52 million, set in 1979, and not as high as some had expected, in light of current high oil and gas prices, Holtzclaw, who has been in the Basin 19 years, says it is good for the times.

He explained that a lot of the University acreage in Ward and Winker counties was already leased, and said the November sale could be even higher.

He said there was no particular "hot area" of interest, because the tracts were spread throughout the Basin. The largest contiguous tract was 12-13,000 acres in Pecos County, and resented about half of the sale.

The coyote is dead, long live the coyote

The corporate storm that destroyed Arco Permian has passed, leaving in its path a swath of silent outrage and the rubble of what was once the best-operated oil company in the Permian Basin.

Pitts

I say "silent outrage" because oil company employees have been conditioned to choke back their rage when it comes to oil company executive decisions. The rationale, I guess, is that you never know who you will have to do business with in the future.

Clayton Williams, however, did not sit on his outrage. Williams made the banner headline in the Reporter-Telegram, shortly after the announcement that Arco-Permian would be dismantled, accusing the Clinton Administration of allowing unchecked mega consolidation in the oil industry that did not benefit America's national security, oil and gas employees or consumers. He accused the mega oil companies of using their bigness to hide inefficiency and stupidity.

I am not all that certain that the Clinton administration is any more remiss than any other political regime at allowing mega-style businesses to form and grow to the detriment of the U.S., but I am certain that a lot of corporate inefficiency can be hidden by the blood of innocent, honest, loyal, hard-working, oil company employees. I also know that a lot of corporate ignorance and arrogance can be concealed in the the bureaucracy of bigness.

In the BP Amoco decision to dismantle Arco Permian, I think we saw corporate arrogance out of control, and a decision that went beyond business, and bordered on "meanness."

If BP Amoco had sold Arco Permian it would have been the best deal possible for the Basin, but over 30 companies made bids for Arco Permian, and none were accepted. If BP had decided to keep the best run-oil company in the Permian Basin intact in the Permian Basin and leave it alone, it would have still been a good business decision. Even if BP Amoco had decided to take the money-making business unit to Houston and rule it with the BP iron fist, it still would have smelled like a business decision.

But to tear apart, one of the best operated oil companies in the country, to scatter the pieces, and plow up the foundation goes beyond a rational, bottom line business decision. We saw a corporation tear up an acquisition, not because it couldn't make money, (Arco Permian made money even when the posted price dropped to $8 per barrel.), but simply because it did not make money the BP way.

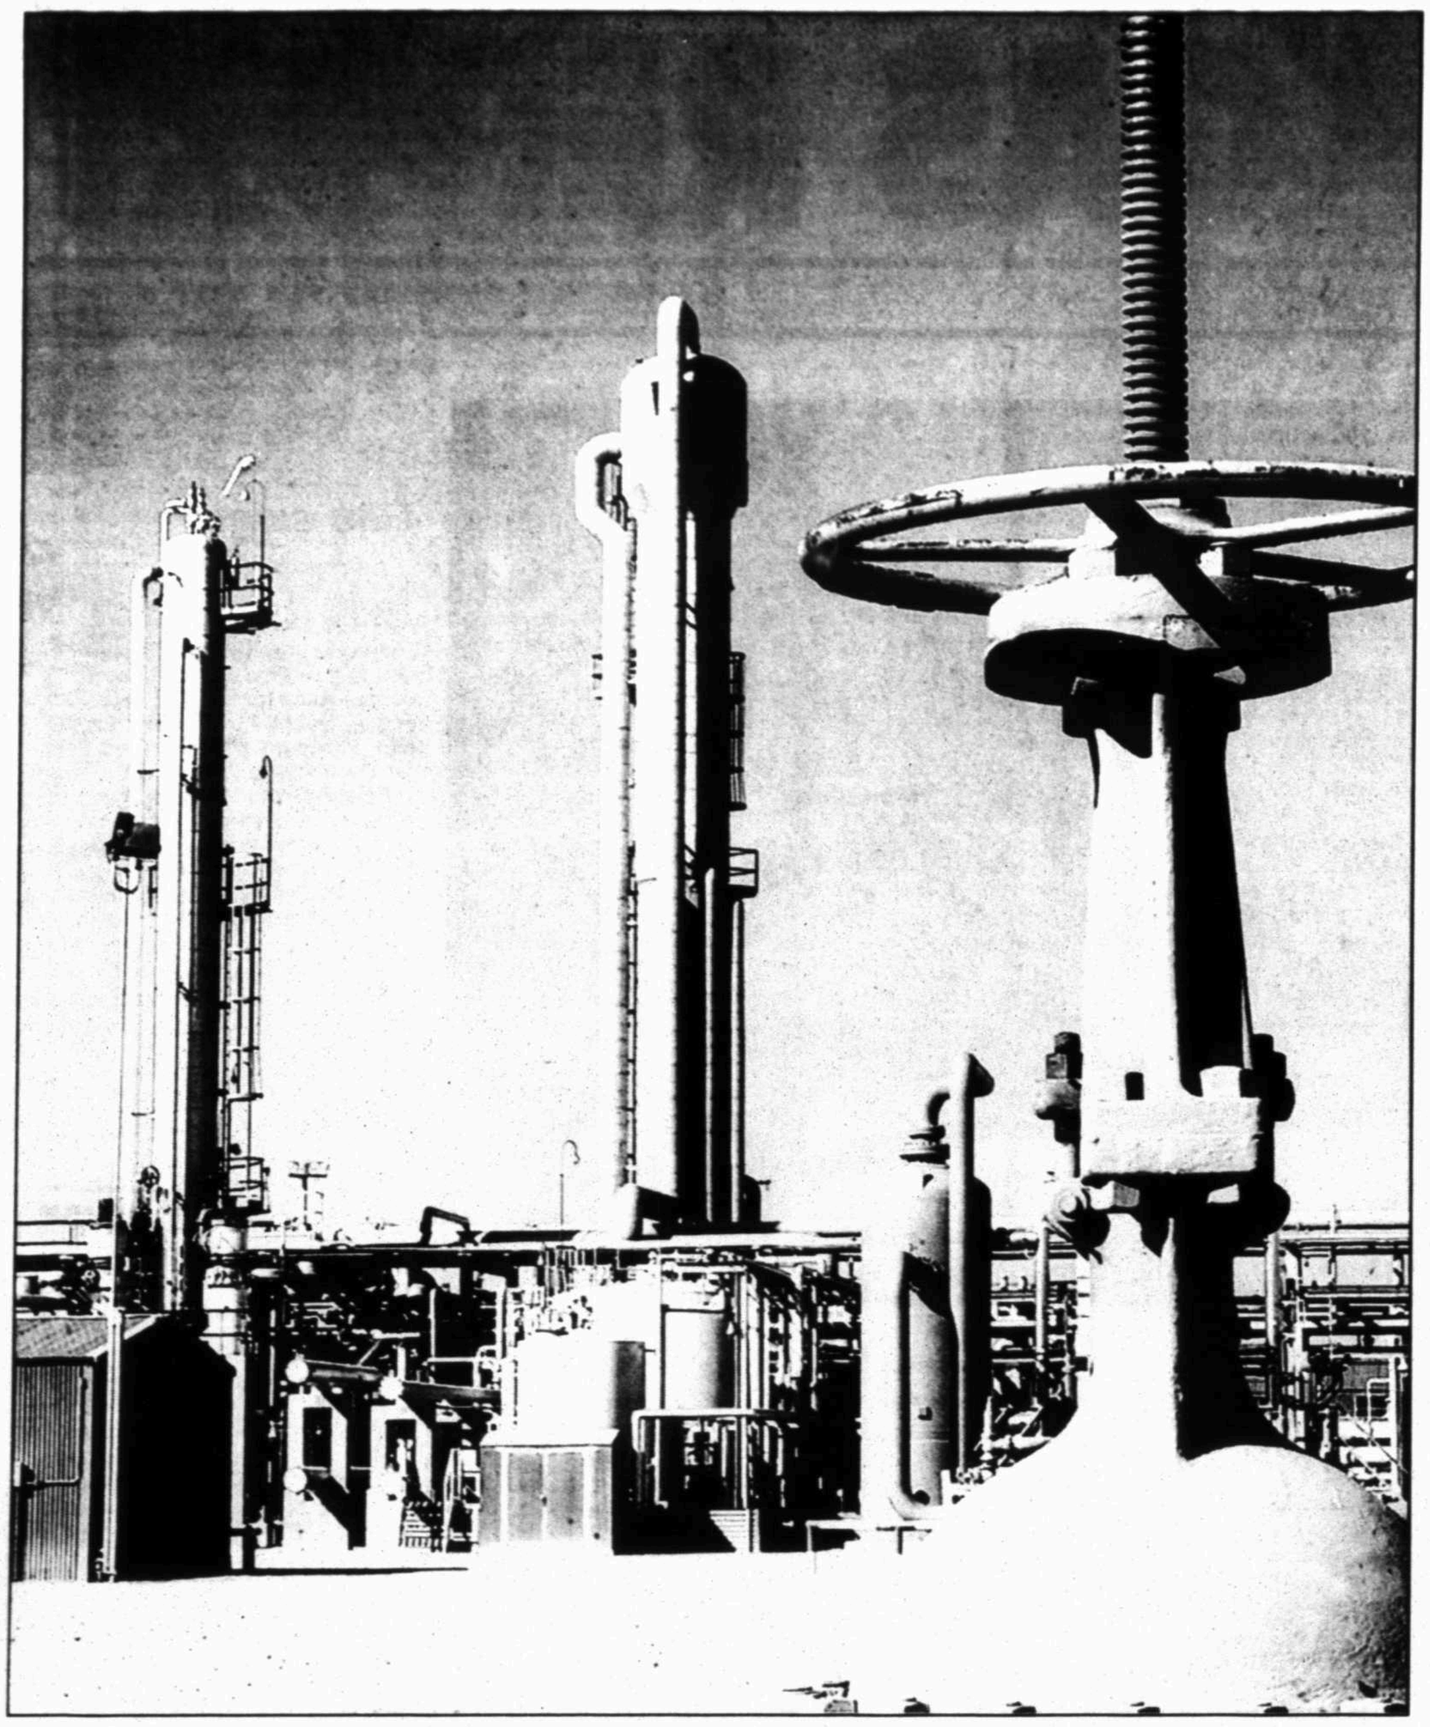

When BP Amoco explains the action it makes total sense. They tell us that a massive organization, with massive resources, and everyone on the same page, marching in the same direction, is absolutely essential to meet the challenge of a soaring demand for energy worldwide. That is correct, but it does nothing to erase the meanness of the act or the gut feeling that what BP Amoco did was wrong. I have spoken to over a dozen individuals since the bust up of Arco Permian, and almost to a person, when I asked for an opinion, the response has been the same: "It was uncalled for! BP went too far!"

The Arco Permian story speaks volumes about the way BP Amoco corporate leaders think about business, the way they feel about people, and what America can expect from them in the future. The demise of Arco Permian is likely to become a text book case for mega oil bad behavior, and decades from now, when survivors gather around the campfires to tell mega oil horror stories, Arco Permian will likely be one of them.

PRICES: Supply and demand boost prices

(From 1)

Suppliers last year, he said, didn't overfill this past heating season and, although the winter wasn't extremely cold, it was average and drew down gas storage levels to about 1 trillion cubic feet. This compares, Anderson said, to a normal level of 1.3 to 1.7 TCF at the end of a heating season.

Thirdly, there is additional demand for natural gas earlier than expected to fuel electric generators to meet air conditioning demand as parts of the country experience unseasonably hot temperatures. Such demand is normally seen in July or August, but is being seen in April and May, he said.

Matthews said that demand is outstripping supply, and that since he visited Midland several weeks ago to discuss natural gas, prices have risen 70 cents.

He said that "The point I've tried to make is that natural gas prices should be fairly stable. Whether they stay at this level, I don't know, but they should be good due to the demand from new electric power generating plants."

He said the state has plants coming online this summer that will produce 6,800 megawatts of electricity and another 12,000 megawatts should be coming online next year and yet another 12,000 megawatts by 2003.

"From a gas producer and a service industry perspective, you can look down the road and see prices at reasonable levels and at levels that encourage drilling," Matthews said. "We haven't had that opportunity for years."

The growth of the clean-burning fuel should also be good news for Texans, especially those in the metropolitan areas because it will help provide cleaner air, he added.

SCHOOL: University honors Mewbourne

(From 1)

Located at the Sarkey Energy Center, the school also operates the world's largest rock mechanics research laboratory, and the only one dedicated to petroleum engineering.

A Well Construction and Technology Center provides the oil and gas industry with innovative technology in the areas of drilling and completions. The Center recently entered into a partnership with Sandia National Laboratories to develop several energy projects.

In another cooperative effort, the school, which has a 12 to 1 staff to teacher ratio, recently teamed with Schlumberger in a training alliance called NExT or Network of Excellence in Training. The program will bring academics and industry together to provide training and technical support for engineers. The Mewbourne School will focus on continuing education in well construction and petrophysics.

The school, which is the primary source for petroleum engineers for the Algerian national oil company, SONATRACH, is also the first to offer a master's degree in petroleum engineering at a location entirely outside the U.S.

"The University of Oklahoma is grateful to Mewbourne for his gift that enables the school to leadership in petroleum engineering," said OU President David Boren.

Tesoro unit to buy retail fueling facilities

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — Tesoro Petroleum Corp. said that a subsidiary has agreed to buy eight gasoline stations in Colorado, Arizona, Idaho, South Dakota and New Mexico.

Financial terms were not disclosed.

Tesoro West Coast Co. said seven of the stations are at Wal-Mart stores, and the land will be leased from the retail giant.

The parent company, San Antonio-based Tesoro, is an independent petroleum refiner and marketer.

Focus on natural gas

The American Gas Association testified before Congress this week that the U.S. should adopt a national energy policy focused on natural gas. Congress can help protect the environment and ease the impact of electric-power outages by making natural gas the core of a national energy policy, an industry official told House members.

"Natural gas should logically form the cornerstone of a national energy policy, because it is the most viable fuel to bridge the key energy and environmental issues facing our country," Roger Cooper, the American Gas Association's executive vice president for policy and planning, told the House Commerce subcommittee on energy and power.

If appropriate policy changes were made, the use of natural gas could increase by 60 percent over the next 20 years, and U.S. reliance on imported oil would decline, Cooper said.

Oil producers increasingly desperate for workers to fill jobs

TULSA, Okla. (AP) — Oil companies are so desperate for workers that one producer in Oklahoma is recruiting released inmates at the prison gates. Producers in Alaska, meanwhile, are banding together to get workers trained; in Texas they are calling former hands and asking them to come back.

With crude oil prices having recovered, some oil companies looking to drill are finding themselves helpless in the face of a shortage of experienced hands.

"There's nobody to work," said Dewey Bartlett Jr., president of the Oklahoma Independent Petroleum Association. "After the last industry downturn many people said 'That's it. No more. I'm going to learn a new trade.' They are gone.

"One operator told me that he had become so desperate for experienced employees that he knows when the prison releases the parolees. He stands outside the gate and asks anyone if they want a job," Bartlett said.

There were 25,381 oil and gas workers in Oklahoma in the third quarter of 1999 — the most recent available — compared with 30,931 for the same period two years earlier, the Oklahoma Employment Security Commission reported. Similar declines have been reported in New Mexico and Texas.

But with oil prices having nearly tripled from early last year, more and more rigs are coming online — and they need workers.

According to Houston-based Baker Hughes Inc., last week the number of rigs actively exploring for oil and natural gas in the United States was 849. A year ago, with oil prices hovering in the mid-teens, only 518 rigs were drilling.

The biggest increases have occurred in Texas, which jumped from 177 to 308, and in New Mexico, up to 80 from 34.

Ray Peterson of UTI Drilling in Midland, Texas, said his company has been calling former workers and asking them to come back.

"It's the same old story whenever you lay them off, hire them back, lay them off and hire them back — you can expect people will leave," said Peterson, a senior vice president. "We're just doing the best we can to get the word out to those who left our industry that there is business again."

About 3,000 Oklahomans were laid off because of declining oil prices in 1997 and 1998, while Texas lost 14,600 jobs and Louisiana 3,400 positions. In total, 29,300 people lost their jobs in the major oil-producing states, according to the Interstate Oil and Gas Compact Commission.

Although the oil industry is still recovering from the 2-year bust, the rest of the economy soared. The unemployment rate, meanwhile, has fallen to a 30-year-low, making it harder for oil producers to fill shaky positions.

"There's equipment out here, but there's not people to do it," said John Bell, an independent producer and consultant based in Kermit, Texas.

In Alaska, companies that haven't had to do serious recruiting in 20 years have banded together to train workers for the estimated 500 jobs expected to open over the next decade.

The average worker on the North Slope is 50 years old, said Kitty Farnham, director of Alaska hiring and training for BP Amoco.

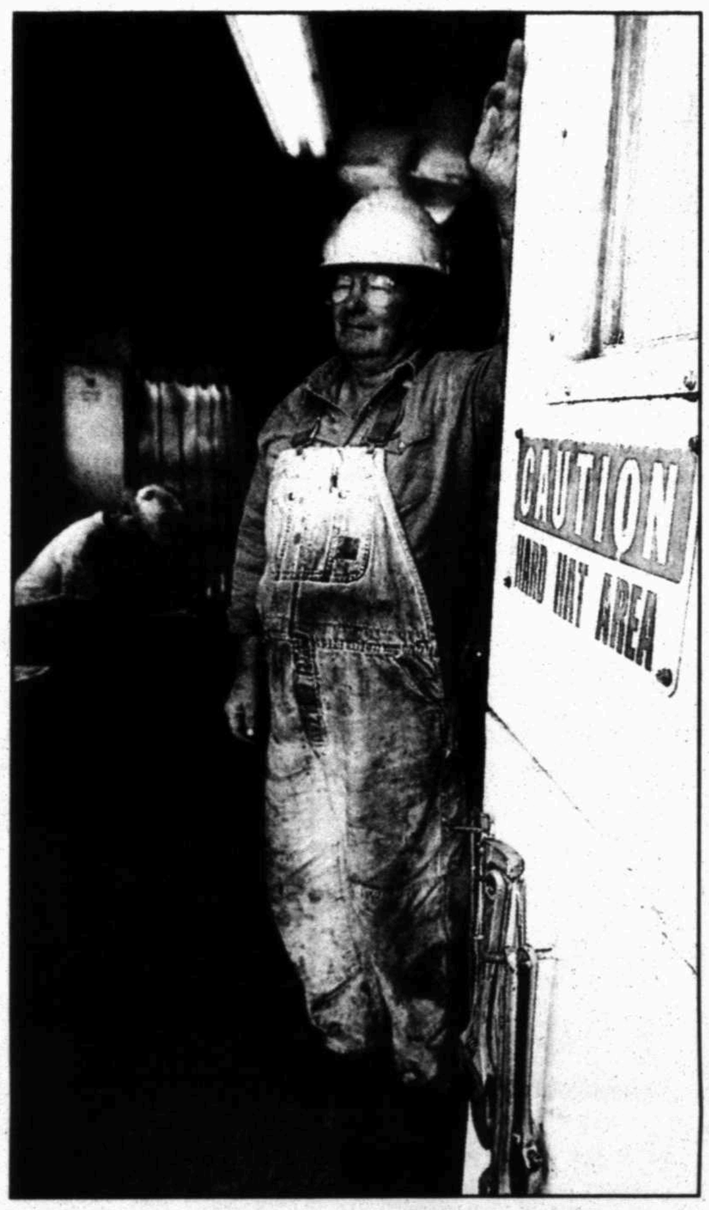

"We are suffering from really more of an aging issue and the fact careers have not been marketed," she said. "The jobs are excellent jobs."

In Oklahoma, some producers have been able to afford higher wages to attract experienced oil workers, but many are left without options. The wait to drill a new well in Oklahoma has been from one to 12 months.

The need for workers couldn't come at a worse time. Just to meet demand, Oklahoma needs to almost double its active rigs within the next three years, said Bruce Bell, chairman of the Mid-Continent Oil and Gas Association of Oklahoma.

"Those people who left are not about to come back to a job that may not be secure," he said. "We just may not be able to meet the oil demands we have."

Above, Ralph Gray works on a oil field drilling rig outside Tuttle, Okla. He is a member of a four man crew drilling a 10,000 foot well. Left, Wayne Routh observes the operation of the oil drilling rig. Oklahoma is experiencing a shortage of oil field workers. Talking about the shortage of oil field workers, Routh said they are being paid about the same as they were back in the 80's, but it is still a good job. He has worked in the oil fields for 40 years.

Energy Finance

Risk, return help determine interest rates

By Art Hobbs

How is the interest rate determined?

It is a risk/return issue. A loan is an investment by a financial institution or other entity in a company. And like any investment, a rate of return is anticipated. The rate is determined by the level of risk perceived in that investment. Conventional bank financing is considered the least expensive source of capital for a company. As such, the bank will usually only consider those investments or loans that fit within its risk profile. The risk profile is not so specific as to be inflexible, but rather it is flexible within a given set of parameters. Each bank has its own set of parameters and will work within them to achieve its goals while complying with it's various regulatory bodies. Most conventional bank loans will be priced between Prime Rate, which is currently 9.50 percent, and Prime Rate plus three percentage points or 12.50 percent. Whether the rate is fixed for the term of the loan or floats with the Prime Rate is determined by the lending institution.

What is a floating rate loan?

A floating rate loan is one where the interest rate of the loan moves up or down with the Prime Rate. The Prime Rate is determined by the appropriate spread over the Federal Discount Rate (the rate of interest charged by the Federal Reserve for short-term borrowings), and that rate is determined by the actions of the Federal Open Markets Committee or FOMC chaired by Federal Reserve Chairman Alan Greenspan. If the Prime Rate increases by 50 basis points or 0.50 percent as it did recently, then those loans that float with the Prime Rate will increase by the same margin. Banks prefer to have floating rate loan so that their rate of return will not decrease if the Prime Rate should increase. The loans that will most commonly have a fixed rate will be home mortgages and consumer loans.

What is LIBOR?

LIBOR is an acronym for London Interbank Offering Rate. This is an index similar to the Prime Rate. The Prime Rate is similar to LIBOR in that they are both indexes which are used to price loans. The Prime Rate is determined by the money-center banks in the United States and indirectly by the FOMC. LIBOR is determined by the European banks. Historically, LIBOR has been less than Prime. This index is used by large companies who borrow a minimum of tens of millions of dollars. These companies are perceived to have less risk because usually they will have access to other sources of financing, i.e. equity markets. For a complete listing of the types of rates in use today, check out the money rates page within Section C of the Wall Street Journal; a definition of all the rates is listed daily.

Texaco makes Gulf discovery

HOUSTON—Texaco and its partner Agip Petroleum Exploration Inc., an affiliate of Eni SpA, have announced a deepwater Gulf of Mexico wildcat oil discovery in the Atwater Valley Block 63 located approximately 160 miles south of New Orleans in 4,385 feet of water.

The discovery well, Champlain No. 1, was drilled to a total depth of 23,540 feet on March 21. A sidetrack of the original well was drilled to a depth of 24,989 feet on May 4, and confirmed the lateral extent of the pay sands. Initial results indicate the presence of high quality reservoir sands with a total net pay of 140 feet.

In making the announcement, Dr. Bruce S. Appelbaum, vice president of Texaco Inc. and president of Texaco Exploration and New Ventures said, "The Gulf of Mexico is one of Texaco's exploration focus areas, and we have a strong inventory in this prospective region. The Champlain discovery is the result of the first well drilled in our year 2000 Gulf of Mexico exploration program. We plan to drill five more deepwater wildcats this year."

Texaco holds a 75-percent interest in Atwater Valley Block 63 and in the adjacent Block 64. Agip Petroleum Exploration Inc. holds the remaining 25-percent working interest in both blocks.

Rig Count Profile

Rig Count information provided by Hughes Christensen

Panaco recompletes well for 10,302 Mcfd

HOUSTON—PANACO announced the D. T. Sturlese No. 1 well is producing 10,302 Mcf per day with 331 barrels of condensate per day and 25 barrels of water per day. The well is in the Price Lake Field (the Stallion Prospect). The well was placed on production May 17th.

The D. T. Sturlese Estate Well No. 3 is currently producing 7,405 Mcfd with 216 barrels of condensate per day and 363 barrels of water per day.

The combined production from both wells at this time is over 17,000 Mcf per day with both wells on restricted chokes.

PANACO Inc. is the operator of the wells and has a 56.25 percent working interest in the No. 1 well. Partners in this well include St. Mary Land and Exploration Co.with a 31.25 percent working interest and Carson Energy Inc. with 12.5 percent.

Larry Wright, PANACO's president and chief executive officer, stated, "We are pleased with this flow rate and the positive impact it will have on our cash flow."

PANACO Inc. is an independent oil and gas exploration and production Company focused primarily on the Gulf of Mexico and the Gulf Coast Region. The Company acquires producing properties with a view toward further exploitation and development, capitalizing on state-of-the-art 3-D seismic and horizontal drilling technology to recover reserves that were bypassed or previously overlooked. Emphasis is also placed on pipeline and other infrastructure to provide transportation, processing and tieback services to neighboring operators.

Horizontal technology doubles production in Union Pacific Resources Guatemala well

FORT WORTH — Union Pacific Resources Group Inc. announced that it has more than doubled production — from 1,300 barrels of oil per day (BOPD) to 2,900 BOPD — from its Xan 27 horizontal well, drilled into Guatemala's Xan field.

The Xan 27, completed in mid-February, was the first well UPR drilled horizontally into a low-permeability layer below the karst zone, the source of most previous Xan production.

Xan 27 produced approximately 2,000 barrels of fluid per day, or 1,300 BOPD at 35 percent water cut when first put on production. Indications of additional production potential led to the installation of a larger capacity pump, which increased oil production to approximately 2,900 BOPD with a slight decrease in the water cut. Continued indications of even greater production potential have spurred plans to double the size of the new pump once the well's current performance has stabilized.

In addition, the recently completed Xan 28 vertical step-out well has extended the limits of the Xan reservoir further to the east.

"This is another example of UPR's greatest operating strength, the exploitation of existing fields through the application of advanced technology," said George Lindahl III, UPR's chairman, president and chief executive officer. "Xan 27 and Xan 28 will add reserves and increase our average production from the field. We plan to follow up on Xan 27's production performance by drilling additional horizontal wells into the same low-permeability zone this year."

UPR has a 100 percent working interest in Xan. The Company operates the field under a production-sharing contract with the Government of Guatemala. Production from the Xan field averaged 19,400 BOPD in the first quarter and is currently producing 25,000 BOPD. UPR anticipates a significant increase in average daily production from the field in the third and fourth quarters of the year.

Arab producers don't expect supply increase

Kuwait (Bloomberg) -- The Organization of Arab Petroleum Exporting Countries, which includes Saudi Arabia, said it does not expect world oil supply to increase in the third quarter to meet a 2 percent rise in global demand, Kuwait's official news agency reported.

World demand will rise by 1.5 million barrels a day to 76.8 million barrels a day in the third quarter over the second quarter this year, though supply will remain unchanged at 76 million barrels a day, said OAPEC in its monthly report. OAPEC groups Bahrain, Egypt and Syria with seven members of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries - Algeria, Iraq, Kuwait, Libya, Qatar, the United Arab Emirates and Saudi Arabia, the world's biggest producer.

With four weeks to go before OPEC is next due to meet in Vienna, pressure is mounting for more oil supplies to come onto the market to lower prices that rose above $30 a barrel last week. The U.S., along with other consumers, including Japan and Korea, is concerned that high oil prices could boost inflation and stunt economic growth in their respective economies.

Global oil inventories have thinned and prices have doubled over the last 14 months since OPEC, along with other producers such as Mexico and Norway, agreed to cut 7 percent of daily crude supply, or about 5 million barrels a day, from world markets to end an oil glut. Prices have remained near record highs even after producers agreed in March to add back about 2 million barrels a day starting April 1.

The Kuwait-based OAPEC said world supply would next increase in the fourth quarter by 1.8 million barrels a day to 77.8 million barrels a day, though supply would still lag behind by one million barrels a day, KUNA reported.

The U.S. Energy Secretary Bill Richardson has asked OPEC to keep an open mind about whether to supply additional oil after they meet on June 21 in Vienna. He is set to meet with Qatar's oil minister tomorrow in Washington and hasn't ruled out visits to oil-producing countries in advance of the OPEC meeting.

Union Pacific Resources, Magnum Hunter complete significant confirmation gas well

FORT WORTH and IRVING, Texas — Union Pacific Resources, Inc. and Magnum Hunter Resources, Inc. jointly announced results on a significant confirmation well and extension of their Mossy Grove natural gas discovery 90 miles north of Houston, in Walker and Madison Counties, Texas.

The Dickens A-231 No. 1 well is producing 12.5 million cubic feet of gas plus 330 barrels of condensate per day through a 30/64-inch choke with flowing tubing pressure of 2,800 psi. Natural gas sales began May 18, 2000.

UPR, operator of the drilling phase, owns a 75 percent working interest and Magnum Hunter owns a 25 percent working interest in this well and the surrounding 2,000-acre unit. Production is from one horizontal segment extending over 8,596 feet in the Glen Rose formation from the vertical borehole. The total footage drilled in this well was 19,901 feet. Magnum Hunter's wholly owned subsidiary, Gruy Petroleum Management Co., is the operator of production.

The Dickens A-231 No. 1 well was drilled on acreage previously held 100 percent by UPR. Magnum Hunter and UPR have formed an Area of Mutual Interest (AMI) and currently hold over 36,000 mineral acres under lease within the AMI in which UPR owns interests ranging from approximately 35 percent to 75 percent and Magnum Hunter owns approximately 25 percent. The next well site in the AMI has been identified for drilling later in 2000.

Union Pacific Resources, Inc., based in Fort Worth, Texas, is one of the nation's largest independent oil and gas exploration and production companies.

Magnum Hunter Resources, Inc. is one of the nation's fastest growing independent exploration and development companies engaged in three principal activities: the acquisition, production and sale of crude oil, condensate and natural gas; the gathering, transmission and marketing of natural gas; and the managing and operating of producing oil and natural gas properties for interest owners.

Government doubles ANWR estimate

Washington — Between 5.7 billion and 16 billion barrels of recoverable oil lie along the coast of the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge in Alaska, triple the previous estimate for the unexplored area, the government said.

The mean estimate —the most likely amount — of recoverable oil in the ecologically sensitive refuge is 10.3 billion barrels, compared with 3.4 billion barrels estimated by the U.S. Geological Survey in 1987. USGS figures were updated in 1998 and published in a new report by the Energy Department's data branch, which used them to estimate how much oil could be produced from the region.

"This is the largest unexplored, potentially productive onshore basin in the United States," the Energy Information Administration said in an assessment released this week.

EIA said the potential oil production from the refuge could be worth between $125 billion and $350 billion by 2020, in 1998 dollars, based on a projected price of $22.04 a barrel. Oil is now selling for about $28 a barrel, so the value could be greater.

The Clinton administration and environmental groups have argued that the area is too ecologically sensitive to consider for oil drilling. It is home to one of the few large caribou herds in the U.S.

"Drilling the refuge would be as shortsighted as damming the Grand Canyon for hydroelectric power or tapping Old Faithful for geothermal energy," said Melinda Pierce, senior Washington lobbyist for the Sierra Club. "The answer to the country's energy needs lies in energy efficiency and renewables, not beneath the surface of the coastal plain of the Arctic Refuge."

Senator Frank Murkowski, an Alaska Republican and chairman of the Energy and Natural Resources Committee, supports development along the coast of the refuge and requested the EIA analysis.

"This study shows that the total U.S. undiscovered technically recoverable oil for the onshore lower 48 states from tens of thousands of small fields was about 23 billion barrels," Murkowski said.

"ANWR could yield more than 16 billion barrels of oil over its lifetime, yet this administration has ignored that resource in favor of begging the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries to send us more oil."

Murkowski said Alaska's environment is already well protected, with 192 million acres of parks, refuges, preserves and conservation areas, including 58 million acres of designated wilderness — 61 percent of all American wilderness.

The coastal plain region is about 8 percent of the 19 million-acre refuge.

EIA projected that initial ANWR production could take place around 2010 if leasing approval occurred within the next few years.

Senate Majority Leader Trent Lott of Mississippi and nine other Republicans introduced energy legislation earlier this month that included a provision for drilling the refuge. The bill is aimed at decreasing American dependence on foreign oil and increasing U.S. energy production.

Ultramar Diamond finals pipeline expansion

SAN ANTONIO— Reporting on further progress in the company's efforts to grow earnings and returns through integrated operations, Ultramar Diamond Shamrock Corp. announced the completion of the Colorado Springs pipeline expansion project and the re-opening of the company's Arkansas City, Kan. asphalt terminal.

The completed expansion of the company's McKee, Texas to Colorado Springs, Colo. finished products pipeline will allow full utilization of the line's 52,000 barrel per day capacity. Prior to the $9 million project, which included the installation of three new pumping stations, the line was limited to just 32,000 barrels per day. The increased throughput capacity will allow UDS greater access to the growing and sometimes-tight Denver and Rocky Mountain gasoline and diesel markets from its flagship 165,000 barrel per day McKee, Texas refinery. UDS currently operates a 27,000 barrel per day refinery in Denver in tandem with the McKee facility. The pipeline expansion will allow for greater flexibility and optimization of operations between the two refineries.

Working to higher prices

Higher oil prices, bumping near $30, have pushed worover rig utilization to almost 100 percent for some companies. Yet, in a survey conducted by Ernest & Young at it 1999 Energy Conferenceal most 60 percent of those attending said oil prices would be between $16-$18 in 2004. For 2000, 30 percent said they would be $20 to $22 per barrel and 38 percent said they would range between $18-$20. Less than 5 percent thought they would be above $24.
