Clements, White ready for re-match

By STEVE LEVINE
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

ELECTION '86

AUSTIN — To many Texans, it seems as if Bill Clements and Mark White have been running for governor — against each other — forever. They're just about right.

By the time voters go to the polls Tuesday, 1,538 days will have passed since then-Attorney General White announced on Dec. 11, 1981 that he would challenge incumbent Republican Gov. Clements. Since that time, the two men have spent 792 days — that's two years, two months and one day — running against each other. They've given the electorate just 746 days of rest.

White and Clements obviously know each other very well. They just as obviously detest each other very much. Texas voters are also extremely well acquainted with the two men and, frankly, aren't overwhelmingly fond of either.

Based on absentee voter turnout, Secretary of State Myra McDaniel predicts 3.2 million Texans, just 44 percent of the state's registered voters, will cast their ballots Tuesday. Even forecasts of a down-to-the-wire photo-finish have failed to pique the voters' interest.

Republican and Democratic insiders from almost every corner of the state report a distinct lack of excitement among voters. Some blame the heavy negative advertising from both camps, some blame distractions from the World Series and the summer's special legislative session, some just blame Texans apathetic about voting for two known quantities.

White, 46, hit the political scene in 1973 when Gov. Dolph Briscoe named the young Houston attorney secretary of state. He resigned four years later to run his first race, defeating now-U.S. Treasury Secretary Jim Baker in the 1978 campaign for attorney general.

Clements, 69, left his post as chairman of the SEDCO oil drilling firm he started to serve as deputy secretary of defense under President Gerald Ford, also in 1973. Five years later he upset John Hill to become Texas' first Republican governor since Reconstruction days.

The two men clashed vigorously and repeatedly during Clements' term in the governor's office. Their 1982 faceoff in the gubernatorial race set a Texas benchmark for campaign spending and bitterness.

The day after the 1982 election, Clements vowed retirement. He broke that vow on July 26, 1985, saying none of the probable GOP candidates could defeat White this year. White, itching for the re-match, says revenge is Clements' prime motivation for office.

"When he criticizes me, which he does quite often, I think he's running more to get even than to get anything else," he says.

Clements maintains he wants to return his businessman's philosophy to the office, replacing the "clever politician" incumbent.

"I don't think there's any question that the people of Texas relate to an entrepreneur, a person who grew up in Texas here without resources — a poor boy so to speak — borrowed money, started a business and built a great business," he says. "That's what Texas is all about, isn't it?"

Mid-summer polls showed White's re-election chances slumping, with Clements up by as much as 20 points in some surveys. Buoyed by extensive media exposure and an impression of strong leadership during back-to-back special legislative session, White hit the last month of the campaign within striking distance.

The overriding campaign theme is the Texas economy — rampant unemployment, the dismal petroleum and agriculture industries, failing banks — and which man can best fix it. A recent poll shows that more than 80 percent of Texans statewide believe "there is a serious need to greater diversify the state economy" and move away from strong reliance on the energy industry.

Clements, who says White has ignored the problems, has proposed a six-point jobs plan to solve them.

By RAMONA NYE
Staff Writer

The county was presented this week with a $57,000 master plan solving its jail and space problems, but the commissioners agree a bond election to carry out the plan would be rejected by voters while the economy is depressed.

"Experience seems to indicate a series of bond issues over the next five years would be required to complete the master plan," said Commissioner Durward Wright.

Wright said he doubts there is a "groundswell of public opinion" to support the $20 million in bond issues needed to complete the master plan.

"The public is not in the position or mood or economic condition to allow us to raise large sums of money required by the short-term plan," he said.

But Commissioner Scott Welch said the plan will not sit on a shelf and gather dust.

"We're taking it one step at a time and the first step is to renovate the jail, but we are not on hold," he said.

"The plan will be used, but not all in one time. It will take a while to implement it. It may not be implemented like it says, but we can build on it," Welch said.

To complete the master plan would cost almost $20 million and it would be finished by 1998 if the county followed the study's timetable.

Five phases are presented in the plan with the first $2.3 million phase to be completed this year by renovating the jail, relocating several courthouse departments and renovating space in the courthouse.

But it's unlikely anything other than the jail renovations will be completed before the Permian Basin's economy improves, the commissioners said.

The study recommends the county add onto it's downtown location and for the short term rent out office space for the County and District Attorney, County Auditor and County Treasurer.

"This would leave room for the 318th District Court to expand, the County Court at Law to expand and the County Clerk to capture some additional space," the study said.

Lebanese TV reports eight hostages turned over to Syria

LARNACA, Cyprus (AP) — Hostage negotiator Terry Waite dropped from sight Saturday after announcing progress in efforts to free Americans kidnapped in Beirut. Lebanese television said six American and two French hostages already were in Syrian hands.

The Lebanese Broadcasting Corp. said the eight hostages were in Anjar in east Lebanon's Bekaa Valley, and the Syrians would release the Frenchmen before Nov. 10. It said the Syrians were considering releasing two of the Americans, but did not say which two.

The station, which speaks for the anti-Syrian Lebanese Forces Christian militia, has good Lebanese security sources but has been inaccurate at times in the past. Its report could not be independently confirmed.

In Damascus, Syrian Information Minister Yassin Rajjouh, asked about the reports of an immiment hostage release, said only: "Everything will be announced in due course."

"Syria is continuing to exert all its efforts" to secure the hostages' release, he said.

Meanwhile, Foreign Minister Ali Akbar Velayati of Iran met in Damascus with President Hafez Assad of Syria. Iran is believed to have ties to the Shiite Moslem group Islamic Jihad, which says it is holding three Americans and claims to have killed one other in October 1985. However, it was not known if Velayati's visit was connected to hostage negotiations.

Seven Americans and 13 other foreigners are missing in Lebanon, kidnapped by various underground groups.

Waite, a personal envoy of Robert Runcie, the Anglican Archbishop of Canterbury, telephoned The Associated Press office in Beirut on Friday to disclose he was in the city. Later Friday, he flew to Cyprus and told reporters: "Something may happen in a day or two. But I don't know for sure."

His whereabouts Saturday were unknown. The U.S. and British embassies disclaimed knowledge of Waite's activities.

Eve Keatley, a spokeswoman for Runcie, said in a telephone interview from London his plans were uncertain but "he expects to be on the move."

Waite traveled to Beirut three times last year and reported he met with Islamic Jihad members to discuss freeing hostages.

Lebanese television said French hostages Marcel Carton and Marcel Fontaine were taken to meet Justice Minister Nabih Berri in Beirut and then were brought to Anjar on Thursday. It did not say when the American hostages were brought to Anjar.

Voters statewide will choose the next governor, but Midland voters will also be making important electoral choices on Tuesday.

Snelson, 63, has represented a large portion of the 21st District for some 20 years as a state legislator.

Smith, 38, served as a state representative from 1981 to 1982 and he has held several Bexar County positions including county commissioner.

Party affiliations are the biggest differences between the two candidates, Smith's campaign office says.

Smith says he will work for a conservative agenda, while he contends Snelson will work for a liberal agenda.

Smith, as a Republican, says he will also have access to the White House, while Snelson will have a difficult time communicating with the administration.

But Snelson, saying he is a conservative Democrat, contends he will have access to the House's leadership, with Jim Wright, a Democrat from Fort Worth, expected to be the next Speaker of the House.

Sample ballot — 2B

Snelson's office says experience is the main difference between him and Smith, with Snelson's 20 years of representing most of the 21st District.

In other local races, Midlanders will be deciding on two commissioners' seats.

Republican Guy McCrary, a 33-year-old marketing consultant, is running against Democrat Don Boydstun, a 40-year-old design technician, for County Commissioner, Precinct 2.

McCrary says he will bring "new blood" to the commissioner's court, while Boydstun promises to be a full-time commissioner.

Brown, who has served as county commissioner for the past 16 years, is a petroleum landman.

GOVERNOR

"They've seen four years of Mark White doing nothing about it," says Sen. Don Henderson, R-Houston. "They're also looking at Governor Clements as a manager, as a businessman, as someone who knows how to create jobs and handle the budget. When times are tough, you need a man like that."

Touring the state, White touts the 1984 public education reforms, the passage of a statewide water plan and a massive infusion of new state funds into highway construction and maintenance as the tools his administration offers for economic revitalization. "It gives you the ability to go out and attract new industry," he tells an East Texas crowd of the $20 million in highway projects now underway in their county.

White has tried, with more success in some areas than others, to blame Texas' economic woes on the Republican administration in Washington. "The Mark White campaign hasn't been able to give (voters) a 30-second commercial that tells them that," laments Sen. Ted Lyon, D-Rockwall.

"If they'd been successful doing that, we'd be dead," says Ernest Angelo Jr. of Midland, one of Texas' two representatives on the Republican National Committee. "But I don't think they've gotten to first base on it."

With two days remaining in the campaign, however, the issues have become subservient to one political strategy aimed at the cities and three key areas of the state.

Bayoud is focussing on Houston, Dallas and West Texas.

In White headquarters, campaign manager Dwayne Holman has pinpointed South Texas and East Texas and "traditional Democratic areas in the cities." "Everything is in place to turn the vote out," he says.

Clements' only regional victories in 1982 came west of the Pecos, and observers say he still has the West Texas edge this year. "He's doing as well as he needs to be doing out here to be winning statewide," says Angelo.

Sen. John Montford, D-Lubbock, sees Clements ahead "like 52-48" in West Texas but says White has "come way up" from his mid-summer slump.

A possible West Texas wildcard is the congressional candidacy of former Democratic Sen. Pete Snelson of Midland in a district that sprawls from the Big Bend to the Hill Country to the northern borders of San Antonio.

Angelo says Republicans who back Snelson will split their tickets and back Clements as well. But White campaign manager says Snelson "can't help but help" in a city like Midland that voted 72-28 for Clements in 1982.

An enormous voter turnout helped White carry South Texas with 56 percent of the vote in 1982. Sen. Hector Uribe, D-Brownsville, says White's education platform has lured the support of the business community, in part making up for the lesser excitement in working-class neighborhoods.

"They're not exactly fanatical supporters of Mark White, but they're going to vote for Mark White because they think overall he's done a fairly good job," Uribe says.

Rep. Ted Roberts, R-Corpus Christi, says White will win in South Texas but "he's showing to be weaker here than he can afford to be." Two uncontested congressional races will depress voter turnout, he says, "and that's going to bode well for Clements and poorly for White."

White has toured extensively in East Texas, where he received more than 60 percent of the vote against Clements in 1982 but where a recent poll shows him ahead 47-38. "It's not so much a trouble spot, it's just a spot where we have to make sure that our vote turns out," Holman says of White's almost-daily visits to the stretch of land between Beaumont and Texarkana.

Sen. Roy Blake, D-Nacogdoches, says White has reversed early opposition but still not generated much excitement. "I still get the comments, 'Well, I'm going to vote for Mark, but we don't have much choice,'" he says.

Rep. Jerry Yost, R-Longview, says the apathy should help Clements buck the traditional East Texas Democratic voting patterns. "There doesn't seem to be the enthusiasm you would expect for an incumbent governor in a re-election bid," he says.

Mrs. Watson, a 41-year-old businesswoman, says she wants to ensure the justice office is run effectively and smoothly.

Jobe, a 38-year-old sheriff investigator, says he will work to bring back integrity and respect to the justice office.

Miller, a 50-year-old retired tax appraiser, says he will modernize the treasurer's office by completely computerizing it.

Ms. Thompson says she will bring experience to the office, having served as treasurer since 1959.

JAIL

In 1988 the study suggests the county make a $1.75 million expansion of the jail underneath the courthouse's north parking area, giving the jail 155 beds.

By 1990 the county should spend $3 million buying vacant property north of the courthouse and then spend $4 million building a new library and parking space on this lot, the study said.

"The library currently has two-thirds of the space it needs. Circulation will double and a new library will be absolutely mandatory — a downtown solution is preferred," said John Webre, project study manager with Henningson, Durham & Richardson.

The Dallas firm conducted the study for the county.

The courthouse and jail should be further expanded in 1992 to adjust to a predicted redistricting and another district judge, Webre said.

This expansion is expected to cost about $8.2 million.

In 1998 the county offices that are now separated from the courthouse, including county welfare, housing, elections and the tax office, could be moved back into the downtown building for $.3 million.

The road and bridge department could also be expanded in 1998, the study said.

They contend it would be cheaper to build a separate criminal justice complex on county-owned land on East Highway 80.

But the study said while the initial construction costs would be cheaper, the yearly operating costs of a separate criminal justice complex would be more in the long run.

While a separate complex would cost $677,500 less to build, the operating costs would be $167,000 more per year.

"Operation costs are so much more important than construction costs. It costs more to build in the first place, but the money you're going to save in the long run is worth it," said Brad Waters, project planner with HDR.

But before any plans can be implemented, the area's economy must improve.

The county is in an "unfortunate" situation, Waters said.

"It's an unfortunate situation, but it's a case where something needs to be done and it's going to cost a lot of money," he said.

Vietnam says it has three MIAs' remains

BANGKOK, Thailand (AP) — Vietnam plans to return what are believed to be the remains of three missing Americans and says it is investigating 19 new reports about locations of other remains, a U.S. military official said Saturday on his return from Hanoi.

Col. Joe Harvey said the two sides again failed, however, to agree on a second joint excavation of a warplane crash site. The excavations are designed to uncover remains of some of the nearly 1,790 Americans listed as Missing In Action in Indochina.

Harvey led a four-man military team to Hanoi for three days of talks with Foreign Ministry official Nguyen Can and other members of a special Vietnamese office on resolving the MIA issue. Harvey is commander of the U.S. Joint Casualty Resolution Center based in Hawaii.

The talks, held on a regular basis since December 1982, focus on technical means of searching for remains, investigating reports of Americans sighted in Vietnam since the war or otherwise accounting for MIAs.

HOSTAGES

Two Christian radio stations in Beirut reported Friday that six Americans, Carton and Fontaine would be released, and the Frenchmen had been turned over to Syrian officials in the Bekaa.

The radios stopped broadcasting the report Saturday, and a news editor at one, the Voice of Lebanon, said he was awaiting further information. In Paris, the French Foreign Ministry said there was no basis for the radios' report.

Hopes have been raised in the past by erroneous reports of impending hostage releases. In other instances, hostages have been freed without any warning.

Two unmarked planes, a Learjet and a Boeing 727, were parked at the runway of the international airport at Larnaca. Airport sources, who spoke on condition of anonymity, said the Learjet was chartered by the U.S. government.

The planes' presence prompted speculation one would shuttle Waite to Lebanon or that they were standing by in case the hostages were freed.

In Chicago, the Rev. Lawrence Martin Jenco, freed by Islamic Jihad this summer after nearly two years of captivity, said of Waite's trip to Beirut: "There must be a reason why he's there. We've been through this roller coaster so often. I would hope the roller coaster stays on the roller."

A Reagan administration in official in Washington, speaking on condition of anonymity, said: "People here have a considerable measure of confidence in Waite. The thinking is, he seems to know what he's doing so let's wait and see what happens."

The latest expectations were raised not only by Waite's presence but by the recent pullout of more staff from the U.S. Embassy in Beirut and predictions Syria would exert its influence to free the hostages in order to counteract Britain's charges it is involved in terrorism.

However, a senior U.S. Embassy official in Beirut said the partial pullout of embassy staff was "merely a precaution" and they would return from Cyprus in two to three weeks.

Islamic Jihad has said it is holding Terry A. Anderson, 39, chief Middle East correspondent for The Associated Press; David P. Jacobsen, 55, director of the American University Hospital in Beirut; and Thomas Sutherland, 55, the university's acting dean of agriculture. All were abducted in 1985.

It said in October 1985 that it killed U.S. diplomat William Buckley, 57.

Frank Herbert Reed, 53, director of a private school in Beirut, was kidnapped Sept. 9, and a pro-Libyan group called Arab Revolutionary Cells-Omar Moukhtar Forces claimed responsibility.

Joseph James Cicippio, 56, the American University's acting comptroller, was abducted Sept. 12, and the Revolutionary Justice Organization claimed responsibility. On Oct. 21, the group said it had kidnapped Edward Austin Tracy, 56, a writer.

Carton, 63, the French Embassy protocol officer, and Fontaine, 46, the vice consul, were kidnapped March 22, 1985.

Frio County's absentee ballots impounded as fraud charges surface

DILLEY (AP) — All of Frio County's absentee ballots have been impounded in the wake of allegations of fraud and forgery, said County Attorney James Smith Jr.

By the close of the absentee voting period Friday, a total of 1,033 votes had been cast county-wide, a turnout that some officials said was unusually heavy.

County Clerk Mona Hoyle said about half of those were cast at the absentee box in Dilley's Precinct 4. There are about 1,800 registered voters in the precinct, where about 1,000 ballots were cast in the May primary elections.

"There are suspected irregularities," Smith said, adding that he obtained the impoundment order from District Judge R.L. Eschinburg because of allegations of election fraud and the possible forgery of some voters' names.

Voting was not interrupted by the impounding order, which authorized Sheriff Benny Sanders to take the ballots for safe-keeping overnight during the absentee voting period.

He is to retain custody of the ballot cans pending a court hearing on the controversy Monday.

"Some people are saying they haven't voted and yet there are ballots for them," said Roger Trevino, an attorney for two county candidates who sought Monday's hearing.

"I'm not saying they shouldn't be counted, but if there are two ballots for the same person, that person will have to tell us which is the real one," Trevino said.

State District Judge David Berchelmann will preside at Monday's hearing in Pearsall. The hearing was sought by Rudy Alvarez, a write-in candidate for Precinct 4 county commissioner, and Precinct 4 Peace Justice Honorio Gonzales.

Alvarez is challenging Democratic nominee Humberto Berrones and Gonzales is defending his seat against write-in candidate Ernesto Berrones. The Berroneses are brothers.

Alvarez and Gonzales are seeking a temporary restraining order to end what they claim is improper assistance being given to voters, the altering of absentee ballots and other irregularities.

Their suit names the Berrones brothers and Hoyle as defendants, among others.

For most of the week, as a result of the impoundment order, the ballots were held overnight in a walk-in safe in the district clerk's office and returned to the county clerk by the sheriff each morning, so balloting could continue.

Committee still looking at Houston

STATE

HOUSTON (AP) — Houston remains in the running as a possible site for the 1988 Democratic National Convention despite its unfinished convention center and the possibility of Texas electing a Republican governor, party officials said Saturday.

"Houston has got what it takes," Paul Kirk, Democratic National Chairman, said Saturday. "Houston, despite the difficulties this community has gone through, has extended itself beyond expectations."

The Democrats' Site Selection Committee must decide among six cities vying for the chance to host the party's national convention. About 120 committee members, party officials and guests arrived Thursday and are scheduled to stay in the Houston area through Sunday.

One concern was the unfinished George R. Brown Convention Center, set to be completed next year. Kirk said it is crucial that a city have a facility large enough to accomodate the convention.

On Friday, Houston officials offered to buy a $5 million insurance policy from Lloyd's of London payable to the Democrats in case the center is not ready for the convention. If it is ready, Houston would give the Democrats the cost of the policy, which could be between $100,000 and $200,000, said developer Joe Russo, chairman of the host committee.

The group toured the center Friday and helped hoist the final steel beam after it had been signed by committee members.

Site Selection Chairman Nathan Landow said he is confident the facility will be open in time to prepare for the 1988 convention, but added that the insurance offer was "icing on the cake."

"I think we all agree that Houston will remain in our minds for a long time," Landow said at a Saturday press conference. "It would be a wonderful place for the Democratic Party to launch a victorious campaign for the presidency."

Landow said committee officials have been meeting with city officials to discuss technical aspects such as lodging and transportation.

"We couldn't find anything (wrong) to date," he said.

Kirk on Saturday also urged voters to re-elect White, but he would not say whether he would want the 1988 convention in Texas if a Republican is elected governor. He said that come Tuesday, the question will be a "moot issue."

Kirk was earlier quoted as saying it would be tough for Houston to be chosen if Gov. Mark White lost his re-election bid to former Gov. Bill Clements.

Let's Keep Pete Snelson Working for West Texas

For over two decades in the Texas Legislature and as a Midland businessman for 31 years, Pete Snelson earned a reputation as a leader of stature and unique effectiveness.

He was there when we needed him.

As chairman of the Senate Oil & Gas and Education Committees, he was a leader for the energy industry and instrumental in securing funding for Midland College and UTPB. Snelson has a proven record of opposition to wasteful government spending, high taxes, and gun control.

He's working for us now.

Snelson is a leader in the fight for a variable tariff on imported oil to bring permanent stability to our domestic oil industry.

Snelson's opponent has proven that he does not care about West Texas. He voted against funding for our West Texas colleges, and has said that he would not work with Congressional leaders to protect our energy and agricultural industries.

Candidates' very different styles could affect reporter's job

By STEVE LEVINE

AUSTIN — Bill Clements says this election is about jobs. Being as this is the last column I'll write before E-Day, I thought it rather appropriate to discuss that issue — particularly how the election relates to MY job.

Now I'm probably not talking in the terms Clements prefers. To assuage my bosses, let's just say up front that this isn't about how the outcome of the campaign will affect the economy in Midland, hence the balance sheets of the Reporter-Telegram, hence my continued employment here.

Rather, this is all about how whoever wins Tuesday's election will affect the real content of this job. Reporters here in Austin spend a lot of time covering the governor, and I've gotten to thinking about which man — Clements or Mark White — possesses the greater qualities in journalistic terms.

Right off the bat, Clements is — as we say in the business — much better copy. His shoot-from-the-hip style of conversation makes for interesting reading. He speaks fluent quote, if you know what I mean.

— On the Texas Legislature: "a bunch of idiots."

Now that kind of stuff is fun to report. It can move a reporter's story to the front page faster than the "good hurricane" Clements wanted to blow away the spilt oil.

One Capitol columnist, whose politics are 180 degrees apart from Clements', so relished the thought of once again reporting such verbal antics that she has actually subordinated her ideological differences and is tongue-in-cheek supporting Clements in print.

Mark White, on the other hand, is essentially boring.

His talented speechwriters can whip up stirring prose, and the governor delivers it well. But White usually uses it when talking about some of the least interesting topics in state government. One-on-one with reporters, he hems and haws, rarely zipping the one-liners that grab the headlines.

So the meat-and-potatoes "quote vote" for journalists has to go to Clements.

But there's more to a reporter's job than just re-printing politicians' statements. We have to get them as well. Again, White and Clements present a strong contrast.

To be blunt, reporters will need to grow a tougher hide if Clements returns to office. He challenges the assumptions on which we base our questions. Asked to respond to obvious inconsistencies in his comments, Clements tries to bully his way out.

"That's nonsense," he'll growl to a bunch of "wise owl" reporters. "I don't know where you got that." And it usually works. Those not absolutely convinced that they have the correct information are often so intimidated that they back down.

When that doesn't work, Clements sometimes just refuses to answer. Cornered by reporters curious about his electric bill last week, he deflected the same question three times with the same answer: "Let's get on to something else ... Let's get on to something else.... Let's get on to something else."

That's not Mark White's style. Not that he's any better at answering the tough questions, but he uses a different technique. White is a master of the Charles Durning side-step. If he wore a toupe, it'd dance circles on his head by the time White had completed a press conference.

White talks but doesn't answer. "What do you think of XYZ, governor?"

"Well, XYZ is very important, but let me tell you a little story about ABC...." And off he goes. It's frustrating but a little easier to take than Clements' gruff rebuttals.

Like the rest of the state, I guess reporters are split on which man is better for the job. OUR job, that is. I'd rather deflect Clements' bullets with a chance to grab his fiery quotes than put up with four more years of White's bland diversions.

Professionally, at least, Clements is my man.

Are Texans tired of two parties?

By STEVE LEVINE
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — If enough Texans are disgusted by the major party's mudslinging campaign — and if she gets enough publicity — Libertarian Party gubernatorial candidate Theresa Doyle says, "Perhaps I'll win by a landslide."

Ms. Doyle, the party's second nominee for governor to win a spot on the ballot, is certain the voters have had enough of both Mark White and Bill Clements. She's concerned, however, that the voters don't know they have another option.

"There is so much dissatisfaction with the two major parties that people are looking for an alternative," Ms. Doyle, a San Antonio housewife, says. Her exclusion from the League of Women Voters' televised debate between White and Clements, she says, "hurt us a great deal."

"When we're ignored by the polls and we're ignored by functions like that, then a lot of people out there don't even know that we're on the ballot," she says.

Party director Dianne Pilcher led a hard-fought petition drive earlier this year to get her candidates' names on the ballot. No other third party achieved that status. State law required her to round up nearly 32,000 signatures; she found 39,120.

Including Ms. Doyle, the Libertarians are fielding a full slate of candidates for statewide office, one for Supreme Court, two state representative nominees each in Dallas and Bexar counties and five congressional candidates in Dallas, Houston, South Texas and West Texas.

George Meeks, a San Antonio tax protester running for the job of state tax collector, gives the party its best chance to avoid a petition fight for ballot status in 1988. With no Republican in the race, party leaders believe Meeks has a good opportunity of drawing enough protest votes against the volatile Democratic incumbent Comptroller Bob Bullock to reach the 5-percent threshold necessary for the party to automatically make the ballot next time around.

"The Libertarian Party falls nowhere on the traditional left-right spectrum of politics," Ms. Pilcher says. "The Libertarian Party would grant you both your civil liberties and your economic liberties."

The first plank in Ms. Doyle's platform calls for an immediate, 10-percent, across-the-board reduction in all state agencies' budgets. She also calls for the elimination of "unnecessary and frivolous" agencies such as the Public Utility Commission, Railraod Commission, Texas Forest Service and Board of Medical Examiners.

"The proper function of government is a limited government that protects the rights of people: their lives, their liberties and their property," Ms. Doyle says.

Three of the party's candidates — Bill Howell of Dallas for lieutenant governor, Robert Reid of Fort Worth for treasurer and Rebecca Reed of San Antonio for agriculture commissioner — vow to abolish their offices if elected.

Ms. Pilcher admits that running for an office just to abolish it is a strange way to try to build power for the party — strange but consistent with Libertarian philosophy. "Part of what Libertarians are about is educating the public, we feel many of the current offices are unnecessary and frivolous," she says.

44 percent voter turnout anticipated

Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — About 3.2 million Texans, 44 percent of the state's registered voters, will go to the polls in Tuesday's general election, Secretary of State Myra McDaniel has predicted.

Ms. McDaniel based her forecast on absentee voting across the state, which ends today.

Because only 64 percent of Texas' eligible voters have registered, Ms. McDaniel's figures show about 28 percent of the voting age population will elect congressional, state and county officials.

"State and local elections consistently receive much less atention than presidential elections, yet most of the decisions determining the quality of life for citizens are made on the state and local level," she said. "Freedom makes it possible for citizens to make a difference, but voting makes it happen."

When then-Attorney General Mark White upset incumbent Republican Gov. Bill Clements in 1982, most analysts credited the unexpected 48 percent turnout for White's surprise victory. Heavy turnouts in Texas traditionally favor Democratic candidates, but a top Clements consultant said Thursday he feels Clements would benefit from a strong turnout in his rematch with White this year.

Karl Rove said a heavy turnout means the "independents and ticket splitters" that Clements needs to win will come to the polls. White campaign spokesman Mark McKinnon said the Democratic governor holds to the conventional wisdom that more voters means more support for Democrats.

Closing of Casa Romero creates other problems

By DAVID SEDENO

HARLINGEN (AP) — Oscar Orozco sat on the curb outside the Immigration and Naturalization Service office as the sun began to set behind him. His wife, Amada Tapia Orozco, sitting next to him, clutched his left arm and they pondered their future.

Catholic church officials had taken the Nicaraguan couple and 500 other Central Americans to the INS office for processing after the church could no longer house them at Casa Oscar Romero.

The church, after four years of battling with immigration officials, closed the shelter in San Benito, located about 7 miles south of this city near the Mexican border.

"We don't know what we're going to do. We don't have any money and we want to go to Miami," Orozco said as his wife turned to talk to another woman.

Some clothes and food stuffed into two brown paper bags rested at their feet. It was all they brought from their war-torn homeland.

"We got here Saturday and they were talking that they were going to close down Casa Romero. This was no surprise that they brought us here. We got our papers, but we don't have any money.

"But we left Nicaragua without any money and it took us a long time to get here, but I think we'll make it," Orozco said, his wife nodding in agreement.

Immigration officials on Thursday processed documents for more than 500 Central Americans, who were bused to the INS facility from San Benito.

Jerry Sewell, district director for the INS in Harlingen, said 265 people were given permission to travel outside the Rio Grande Valley. He said 222 were taken to a federal detention center and 36 unaccompanied minors were being housed by the Catholic Church in McAllen.

Sewell said the flood of illegal aliens would continue and that immigration officials would keep a closer watch on the Central Americans if a new shelter began operations.

"I don't think there's one sure thing that's going to stop the flow into this country, but I thing that some of their encouragement for coming here sure will be gone," Sewell said. "They'll continue to come, but I hope not in so many numbers."

Casa Romero, opened in December 1982 by the Catholic Diocese of Brownsville, was a temporary home for more than 10,000 Central Americans migrating through the United States.

It was the first stop for many Central Americans. Many had heard about the shelter before they left home; others heard about it during the long trek through Mexico.

When they arrived, they were greeted with open arms by Catholic priests and nuns and sanctuary movement workers.

They also were greeted with jeers from neighbors who saw the number increase from several dozen to more than 500 in recent weeks. The number of immigrants swelled faster than facilities to accommodate them, causing neighbors to complain about loitering and noise after dark.

The church had spent $250,000 to run the facility and had made major renovations to upgrade the facility and keep apart residents and teenagers who frequently squabbled.

But the repairs were not enough. A fight erupted between neighbors and residents in mid-August and city officials pressured the church to find a new home.

The men were separated from the women and children and moved to the exhibition building at the Cameron County Livestock Show grounds.

The move was supposed to be temporary while a new facility was found by a deadline, initially set for today.

But early last week, Sewell said, church officials knew they would not meet the deadline.

Church and immigration officials agreed to do the processing on Thursday and the shelter was closed.

"Casa Romero has had many chapters. This is just one of them," said church spokesman Hernan Gonzalez. "We had a major hurdle we couldn't overcome."

The church is providing money for bus tickets to Houston to those who have permission to leave the area. Those unable to leave the area will be taken care of, but not at the shelter, Gonzalez said.

"The people who are given permission to travel, they're being encouraged to be on the bus. We tell them, take Trailways and head north."

Suspect sought in crime spree

The teen-ager walked into a north Houston convenience store crying for help Friday morning, several hours after she was abducted while she walked to school, police said.

The spree began early Friday when the man wrecked a stolen vehicle and then forced his way into a nearby house where he grabbed a woman as her 5-year-old granddaughter ran for help, police said.

"He grabbed me by the hair with a gun in his hand," Dolores Gutierrez said.

Mrs. Gutierrez said her daughter arrived and started screaming just as the gunman tried to assault her. The man then fled in the family's car.

He then abandoned the car and took the girl with him as he broke into another home where he terrorized two other women and a toddler and stole their station wagon, police said.

GARAGE TALK

The garage is one of the first places to look when more living space is needed but the budget is strictly limited. If the garage is connected to the house or close enough to be connected, it might easily be insulated, finished, and integrated as a room. Use it as a family room, guest room, or even as a master bedroom. Since the kitchen is usually nearby, plumbing could be extended for another bathroom. A connecting area could be used a a mudroom, greenhouse, storage area, or laundry room. Or, if a garage is to be added, consider making it large enough for the car with extra space for a workshop, storage area, greenhouse, or guest room upstairs.

Chili enthusiasts gather for Terlingua's events

TERLINGUA (AP) — Chili enthusiasts from around the world gathered near this West Texas mining ghost town Saturday to vie for the championship title for the best bowl of red.

Well, for one of two championship titles.

In 1982, chili cooks split into two camps, and there are as many chili cooks as there are explanations as to the reasons behind the rift in the 20-year-old Terlingua tradition.

One of the cookoffs, the Chili Appreciation Society Internationals, is held behind the Terlingua Store, a one-room building that advertises "beer" in big, red letters and "groceries" as an afterthought, capturing a great part of the essence of this celebration.

The other, larger cook-off, the CASI World Chili Championship, is at Glen Pepper's ranch, Villa de la Mina, about three miles away.

Some 2,000 people with their campers, pickup trucks, vans and jeeps dotted the desert behind the store. Each vehicle had an open-sided tent planted nearby, where cooks stirred their spicy concoctions surrounded by several aides whose main job apparently was to cheer the cook on, clown around with passers-by and down as many cold brews as humanly possible.

Run to benefit battleship

TEXLINE (AP) — Fifteen runners from as far away as France will launch into a 1,062-mile ultra-marathon race across the Lone Star state to raise money for a facelift on the aging battleship Texas, officials say.

The trek, which winds through 92 cities and communities, starts Saturday and will end Nov. 22 with a ceremony hosted by Vice President George Bush, said Reuben Sherman, who is in charge of fund-raising for the battleship.

The race, scheduled to begin at 6 a.m. in this Texas-New Mexico border city, is designed to aid the oldest and only surviving battleship of the dreadnought era, which preceded World War I.

After 20 days of running and two days of rest, the tour concludes at the Houston Ship Channel. Sherman said final standings will be based on total time accumulated for the 20 stages by each of the 15 participants.

Gramm favors contract

FORT WORTH (AP) — Sen. Phil Gramm calls the decision to award a $633 million contract to General Dynamics "good for Fort Worth, good for Abilene, good for Texas and good for America."

Under the contract, General Dynamics will modify 270 early model F-16A and F-16B fighter planes for the Air National Guard. Those planes currently are being flown by the Air Force.

General Dynamic's Fort Worth Division also is part of a team awarded a contract Friday to design and build prototype planes for the Air Force's $40 billion Advanced Tactical Fighter program.

The GD team — which includes Lockheed Corp. and Boeing Co. — will compete against the team of Northrop Corp. and McDonnell-Douglas Corp. for the production contract.

Organ requests debated

AUSTIN (AP) — Transplant surgeons and parents groups met Saturday to begin pushing a law that would require hospitals to ask families of brain-dead patients if organs can be taken for transplant.

The proposed "required request" bill would make it easier for medical officials to handle a delicate situation, according to Lin Johnson, director of the Organ Donor Program at the University of Texas Health Science Center at San Antonio.

"No one wants to ask the question. You have a family in the throes of tremendous grief and people feel that this is an additional burden," Ms. Johnson said of asking families about taking organs from their deceased loved ones.

Under current state law, the attending physician decides whether to ask a deceased patient's family about the possibility of taking organs for transplant.

A similar bill failed to win approval in the Texas Legislature in 1985. The renewed effort on behalf of the bill began Saturday at a Capitol meeting sponsored by the health science center, Project ABC (Any Baby Can) and the Children's Transplant Association, a San Antonio group of parents whose children have been transplant recipients or are awaiting organs.

UT suspends protesters

AUSTIN (AP) — The University of Texas has notified 13 students who took over President William Cunningham's office in an anti-apartheid protest the university plans to suspend them for a year, a protest leader says.

Susan Svatek, one of the protestors who who barricaded themselves inside Cunningham's office briefly Oct. 20, said Friday the students have refused to accept the suspension and asked for a hearing.

Under disciplinary procedures at the university, a student may accept penalties set by the office of the dean of students, or may elect to have his case presented to an independent hearing officer.

Kidnapping charged

GREENVILLE (AP) — James Wayne See came to the home of his ex-wife's grandparents for lunch Thursday and left 32 hours later in handcuffs charged with aggravated kidnapping.

He is accused of holding Leroy Creekmore, 83, hostage. He threatened to kill himself while police pleaded with him throughout the night Thursday and all day Friday.

Visit Texas American Bank today and take a doll home to dress or a toy to assemble. There is no cost for either doll or toy. Dolls and Toys come boxed for easy storage. These are lifelik 19" dolls, black, blonde or brunette, permanent hair, eyes that close, dolls that will give comfort and company to many little girls. There are three toys-dumptruck, tractor, and train-each in kit form ready to be assembled and painted. We have patterns for the doll dresses and six categories from which you can choose for the dress you sew. Each toy comes with complete assembly and customizing instructions.

All dolls and toys have to be returned by Monday, December 1, 1986 which gives you plenty of time to complete your project. When each doll and toy is returned, we will put them on display in our bank lobby for all in our area to see. Prizes, ribbons, and certificates will be awarded dolls and toys judged best on Thursday, December 18, 1986.

Following their showing, each doll and toy will be wrapped and on its way to the arms of a needy child as a present from Santa at Christmas with the help of the High Sky Children's Ranch and the Texas Department of Human Resources. Together we'll have done something good for our community.

Help us help children in need this Christmas. There is no better way to spend the few hours it takes to dress a doll or assemble a toy.

Officials keep quiet on possible efforts to free Lebanese hostages

WASHINGTON (AP) — Taking their cues from President Reagan and Secretary of State George P. Shultz, U.S. officials on Saturday kept a tight hold on information about a possible new effort to free American hostages in Lebanon.

"There's a reluctance to have anything said that might endanger any efforts," said an administration official, speaking on condition he not be identified. "In the meantime, we're doing what everyone else is doing — hoping."

Speculation that hostages might be released began on Friday, when Anglican Church envoy Terry Waite told reporters in Beirut there was progress in his efforts to free the captives. He later flew to Cyprus and on Saturday he dropped out of sight.

"People here have a considerable measure of confidence in Waite," the official said. "The thinking is, he seems to know what he's doing so let's wait and see what happens."

U.S. coordination and monitoring of the situation was being handled by the National Security Council, but no information was given out.

In a speech in Los Angeles on Friday afternoon, Shultz explained why he wouldn't divulge what was happening.

"There have been moments when we thought it was going to happen and it hasn't happened," he said. "We just hope and pray that the moment will come when we do get them back and other hostages as well, of course."

He added, "We've been disappointed so often that I'll just say that I hope it's true. We'll pray that it's true. We'll work to make it true, but I will not feel comfortable until they're here in the United States."

Shultz will be seeking Star Wars concessions

By BARRY SCHWEID
AP Diplomatic Writer

WASHINGTON — Secretary of State George P. Shultz will be looking for Soviet concessions on "Star Wars" and human rights and for cooperation in the war against terrorism when he meets this week in Vienna with Foreign Minister Eduard A. Shevardnadze.

The "stock-taking" session in the Austrian capital Wednesday and Thursday also could wind up with an invitation to Shultz to visit Moscow later in the year for further talks, two U.S. officials said.

There is little indication, however, that Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev will come to the United States for a summit meeting with President Reagan by the end of December, despite the stepped-up dialogue.

Reagan, in a radio address Saturday, offered his most optimistic assessment of his Oct. 11-12 meeting with Gorbachev in Iceland, saying that "it is no longer a matter of if we reach an agreement; it is now a matter of when."

In Iceland, Reagan said, "for the first time, we came close to a historic agreement on dramatic reductions on strategic nuclear weapons."

"For the first time, the Soviets talked seriously about removing intermediate range missiles from Europe and doing it in a way that would not threaten our Asian allies," he said. "And they accept the principle that human rights issues must be a permanent part of our dialogue."

A senior U.S. official, who discussed prospects for the Vienna talks with a reporter under conditions of anonymity, said the summit had established a basis for agreements on a wide range of issues provided the details could be worked out at lower levels.

"Both sides have their motives to keep going," said the official of the drive for reducing nuclear weapons that stalled in Reykjavik over the U.S. anti-missile program, known popularly as "Star Wars."

The officials said they doubted the Soviets would let their objections to field testing of American anti-missile technology scuttle negotations now under way in Geneva to slash superpower nuclear arsenals.

Gorbachev forced a breakup over the issue at the summit. He has denounced the U.S. Strategic Defense Initiative as a threatened extension of the arms race to a new sphere. Since then, sweeping U.S. proposals for sharp cutbacks in both strategic and medium-range nuclear missiles were sent to Geneva and presented to Soviet negotiators.

The Soviets have not put any proposal of their own on the table. Nor did they respond to the package approved by Reagan after Reykjavik, officials said.

The first reaction could come from Shevardnadze in the talks with Shultz, which will be held during a 35-nation review of the 1975 Helsinki Agreement.

While the Soviets seek to impose constraints on the U.S. program, they do not want to be saddled with the responsibility for a breakdown in the Geneva negotiations, the senior official said.

Referring to the Soviet walkout from Geneva in November 1983, which touched off a 15-month suspension of arms control negotiations, the official said: "They don't want to have to work their way back to the table again."

The Reagan administration considers that walkout, which was designed to force the U.S. side to negotiate over Star Wars, a public relations defeat for the Kremlin. "Their problem is to avoid another 1983," he said.

Democratic control of Senate could alter Sunbelt politics

By PEGGY ROBERSON
Washington Correspondent

WASHINGTON — If Democrats take control of the Senate in next Tuesday's election, the Sunbelt would assume new political power as Southern and border state Democrats take chairmanships of major committees from Northern and Western Republicans.

Some political consultants believe 10 of the 33 Senate races are close — some of them too close to call.

Democrats have an edge, however, because they are defending only 12 seats in this election while the Republicans are defending 22. Of the 34 Senate elections, Democrats need only win 16 to claim a majority and with it the right to organize the body and choose chairmen.

Reagan warned that liberals would take over major committees if Republicans lose, calling particular attention to Sen. Edward M. Kennedy of Massachusetts as potential chairman of the Judiciary Committee, the panel that would screen his appointments to federal judgeships. And in a campaign stop in the depressed oil state of Oklahoma, Reagan said a Democratic victory would place Sen. Howard M. Metzenbaum, an Ohio liberal, in charge of the Energy Committee.

Most of the Democratic heirs-apparent to committee chairmanships, however, are Sunbelt senators who are conservative to moderate in political philosophy.

Many of the Sunbelt Democrats have not needed their party to win and it remains to be seen whether they will try to unite to heal cleavages in the party, according to Ethel Klein, a New York political scientist and polling analyst.

If they can achieve unity and come up with national themes, rather than cling to local politics, these Sunbelt senators could become a powerful influence in the 1988 presidential election, Klein said.

Party caucuses will formally pick the chairmen when the 100th Congress convenes next January, but time-honored custom and principle dictates that seniority generally controls the selection.

If the Democrats win, Lloyd Bentsen of Texas would take over the Finance Committee from its present chairman, Robert Packwood of Oregon. The current ranking minority member on Finance is Democrat Russell B. Long of Louisiana, who is retiring, and Bentsen is next in line.

Bentsen has worked closely with Packwood and Long. In a session with Texas reporters last week he pointed out that the work of the Finance Committee "is bipartisan."

A 16-year-veteran, Bentsen presently is ranking minority member on the Environment and Public Works Committee and could take that chairmanship instead, if he wished to, in a Democratic-controlled Senate, but he said he prefers Finance. Rules forbid a senator from chairing two committees.

Earlier this year Bentsen announced plans to drop off the Environment panel and jump to Commerce, Science and Transportation where he could exert greater influence on international trade issues, a major interest, regardless of the outcome of the election.

A Democratic win would propel 86-year-old John Stennis of Mississippi to the chairmanship of the all-important Appropriations Committee, now chaired by Mark O. Hatfield, R-Ore., which parcels out money to fund the government.

Stennis, a Deep South conservative, has not been in good health, and if he were to step aside, Robert C. Byrd of West Virginia, the present Senate Minority Leader, viewed as a moderate on most issues, is next in line. Byrd could not be both Majority Leader and chairman of Appropriations, but he is expecting a challenge for the position of party leader from J. Bennett Johnston of Louisiana. If Byrd loses, he could be available to chair Appropriations if Stennis could not serve out his term.

Sam Nunn of Georgia would be chairman of the Armed Services Committee in a Democratic-controlled Senate, replacing the retiring veteran chairman Sen. Barry Goldwater, R-Ariz.

Armed Services is another committee where partisan differences are not noticeable. Nunn, considered a "hawk" on defense, has worked closely with Goldwater. He has won the respect of the military, but has been highly critical of examples of waste and fraud in defense spending. He could be expected to redirect some Pentagon spending away from strategic weapons systems and toward building up conventional forces.

If the Republicans retain control, however, Goldwater's retirement would create a ripple effect that would probably result in new Republican leaders at the Judiciary and the Labor and Human Resources Committee.

In a Democratic Senate takeover, Ernest F. Hollings of South Carolina would chair the Commerce, Science and Transportation Committee instead of Sen. John C. Danforth of Missouri. On this committee, also, Danforth and Hollings have taken a bipartisan approach to most issues.

Taking the chairmanship of the Energy Committee, now held by James A. McClure, R-Idaho, would be Johnston of Louisiana, who like McClure is an advocate of energy industries.

Johnston, however, has challenged Senate Minority Leader Robert C. Byrd of West Virginia for the top leadership post in the party next Congress. If he wins, he could not also serve as chairman. Dale Bumpers of Arkansas, another Sunbelt state, is next in line at Energy.

Lawton Chiles of Florida would be chairman of the Budget Committee instead of Sunbelt Republican, Pete V. Domenici of New Mexico.

Wendell H. Ford of Kentucky, would take the reins of the Rules and Administration Committee, now held by retiring Sen. Charles McC. Mathias Jr. of Maryland.

Arkansas' Bumpers would be chairman of the Small Business Committee, a position currently held by Lowell P. Weicker Jr., R-Conn. But if Johnston became majority leader and Bumpers opted for Energy, the Small Business head would be Jim Sasser of the border state of Tennessee.

Three children, fire official killed in separate incidents

Associated Press

Fire swept through the apartment of a family in Pennsylvania on Saturday, killing three children and injuring their parents, while in New York state, a man who spent much of his life teaching fire prevention died in a blaze at his home.

Police in the Pittsburgh suburb of Braddock refused to disclose any information about the fire that killed the three pre-school children.

"There are no signs of foul play," said a detective, who asked not to be identified. "As of now, it appears to be an accidental fire, an electrical fire."

Allegheny County police said Leroy Moody Jr., 4; Christopher Moody, 2; and Starr Moody, 1, were found dead on the living room floor near a couch.

Their mother, April Moody, 20, was reported in critical condition at Allegheny General Hospital in Pittsburgh with burns, and their father, Leroy Moody, 24, was treated for burns on his arms, legs and side and released, police said.

In Kinderhook, N.Y., a fire destroyed the home of Ward Bohner, 74, said Columbia County Deputy Edward Porreca. He was found in the bedroom, said his daughter-in-law, Maryanne Bohner.

Bohner, former executive director of the State Association of Fire Chiefs, traveled around the state giving talks on fire prevention. The organization was briefly based in his Kinderhook home, according to Ms. Bohner.

Authorities said the cause of the fire was still under investigation. Bohner, a widower, was alone in the house.

Bohner's son Harry is chief of the Kinderhook Fire Department, but was out of town at the time of the blaze, said Mrs. Bohner.

NATION in brief

U.S. colleges criticized

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Carnegie Foundation for the Advancement of Teaching issued a harsh indictment Saturday of the nation's undergraduate colleges, saying they are more successful at handing out degrees than in educating students.

The prestigious Princeton, N.J.-based foundation delivered its blast after spending three years and $1 million on a study of the quality of the 2,000 four-year colleges that enroll more than 5 million students.

Its research included surveys of thousands of faculty members and students and first-hand inspections of 29 campuses.

The 242-page report written by Carnegie President Ernest L. Boyer echoes some of the same criticisms that U.S. Secretary of Education William J. Bennett has leveled at the nation's campuses.

Reagan to appear in ad

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan will appear tonight in a five-minute paid political advertisement on all three commercial television networks.

The ad will be broadcast at 10:55 p.m. EST. The National Republican Congressional Committee paid $500,000 for the network time to broadcast the ad.

Trial drawing film stars

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The "Twilight Zone" manslaughter trial of director John Landis and four co-defendants is drawing film stars to watch a real courtroom drama that may change the way Hollywood makes movies.

It is the first time a director has stood trial on criminal charges for a movie accident, and the case has been viewed by many as a signal for stronger safety rules for Hollywood.

Jeff Goldblum and Dan Aykroyd have appeared in the courthouse to express support for their friend and colleague Landis. So have Jenny Agutter and Ralph Bellamy, who was subpoenaed briefly.

The trial also has drawn movie industry spectators such as superagent Irving "Swifty" Lazar, curiosity seekers and even an entire high school class from Beverly Hills.

Wife's body in sinkhole

LAWRENCEBURG, Ind. (AP) — A man allegedly strangled his estranged wife, dumped her body in a sinkhole next to his driveway and for several months encouraged unsuspecting neighbors to dump garbage in the hole, police said.

Roy E. Heck was charged with murder Thursday, after police found the remains of his wife, Rickie Lynn, under 14 feet of debris with the cord of her curling iron still wrapped around her neck. Police believe she died Jan. 5.

Heck allegedly told neighbors that the stench coming from the hole, located near a driveway on his 100-acre farm on the edge of Lawrenceburg, was due to rotting grain.

He even instructed his daughter and girlfriend to sprinkle pepper in the sinkhole in an attempt to prevent police bloodhounds from sniffing out the remains of his wife, police said. He had told the women he didn't want police to find some things of hers that he had dumped in there.

Man arrested in court

NEW YORK (AP) — An absent-minded man appearing in court to answer a weapons charge was arrested when he was found to be carrying a paper bag stuffed with 76 vials of crack, authorities said.

"I forgot I had it with me," Floyd Flow, 24, of Manhattan, told court officials who found the bag of the potent cocaine derivative, according to a statement from the trial-level Supreme Court.

Mathew O'Reilly, president of the New York State Supreme Court Officers Association, said Flow appeared in court to answer a charge of illegal possession of a handgun.

Flow was unable to post the $2,500 bail, and when officers went to take him into custody he refused to be handcuffed and struggled to empty the bag, O'Reilly said.

Couple commandeered

MILWAUKEE (AP) — The excitement of just getting married ended abruptly for a couple whose car was commandeered by two escaped prisoners whose getaway was foiled by a pair of passing postal inspectors.

"They were married for all of five minutes when this happened," said M. Greenspan, one of the two inspectors.

The couple's marriage ceremony had been held at the Milwaukee County Courthouse, said the Milwaukee Sentinel, which did not identify the newlyweds.

Greenspan said he and a fellow Postal Service inspector, J. Murphy, happened to be driving past Friday when they saw the handcuffed inmates run across a street near the courthouse.

He said the prisoners dashed to a car at a stop sign and pulled a woman out, but the man resisted and the prisoners got in the car with him.

American Sikhs rally

WASHINGTON (AP) — About 40 American Sikhs rallied peacefully in Lafayette Park across from the White House on Saturday, marking the second anniversary of Indian Prime Minister Indira Gandhi's assassination.

The group, carrying large photographs of alleged government torture victims, claimed more than 20,000 Sikhs were killed with government collusion in the week after Mrs. Gandhi's death.

In political terms, Meese spends interesting week

WASHINGTON (AP) — During the past two weeks, Attorney General Edwin Meese wended his way through a lengthy political agenda dear to the hearts of conservatives, crossing swords with liberals on pornography, the role of the Supreme Court and management surveillance of employee drug abuse.

Along the way, he has drawn a new round of attacks from some in the academic community who feel right-wing political ideology has permeated his tenure as attorney general.

"The degree to which he has been guided by an ideological lode-star in his public pronouncements and in his recommendations for judicial appointment and in his governmental priorities has verged on the extreme and may be without precedent in our history," said Laurence Tribe, a Harvard University law professor.

Meese spokesman Terry Eastland denies the attorney general has politicized the judicial appointment process and says that opening a public debate over the proper role of the Supreme Court is healthy for the country.

Meese's recent speeches have emphasized the message he has eagerly conveyed since becoming attorney general more than a year and a half ago: the necessity for tough law enforcement, especially in the area of drugs and violent crime.

On some issues, Meese's aides seem perplexed at times that his remarks stir up so much controversy, and they occasionally try to downplay his statements.

On one such issue, Meese endorsed a wide-ranging program to control drug use in the workplace before the U.S. Chamber of Commerce. News stories focused on one section suggesting that surveillance outside plant gates at corner taverns in some cases might be a sound approach.

Meese aides quickly pointed out that the attorney general was simply embracing an idea favored by a former head of the Drug Enforcement Administration and they emphasized that Meese would not recommend any "unwise or unlawful" step.

The elaboration, however, failed to stave off the ensuing criticism, as members of two business groups immediately suggested that such a step appeared too extreme. Another business group, the National Association of Manufacturers, declined to comment.

The attorney general's involvement in the pornography issue has brought him heavy criticism, but has paid political dividends with segments of President Reagan's most conservative political constituency.

The anti-porn groups questioned the commitment of the Meese Justice Department to engage in a campaign against hard-core pornography and many of the activists doubted he would actually try to implement the far-reaching reforms urged by his pornography commission.

It is still questionable whether the department will actually conduct a law enforcement crackdown, but Meese did embrace almost all of the porn commission's recommendations, including legislation to curb Dial-A-Porn and hard-core material on cable television. Those proposals already have been condemned by civil libertarians and others.

Meanwhile, the anti-porn groups, including a broad cross-section of religious leaders, publicly expressed their gratitude to Meese, saying the steps he had proposed, if taken, would help curb the hard-core porn industry.

The ongoing debate over the court is a reflection of the Reagan administration's political views: The need to be seen as tough on crime coupled with the necessity to review the nation's approach to legal areas such as civil rights.

WORLD

MANILA, Philippines (AP) — Communist rebels proposed Saturday that a 100-day cease-fire be observed beginning Dec. 10 and that peace talks be resumed. A senior government official welcomed the proposal but said it needed study.

"We...dare to hope that, for the first time in many many years, the guns will be stilled on both sides this Christmas and New Year," the National Democratic Front, a Communist-dominated umbrella group, said in a statement distributed to reporters at a Manila safe house.

The front, which has represented the rebel New Peoples Army at peace talks with the government, said its negotiators met Saturday with a government panel to offer the proposal and five "talking points" to safeguard the accord.

The five points included disbanding militia and regular military units that have been accused of human rights abuses; disarming private armies used by the government to help fight the Communists; and clearly defining what acts would constitute cease-fire violations.

There was no official response from President Corazon Aquino's government.

Her executive secretary, Joker Arroyo, said the offer was "a welcome development" but that the five points, which he described as conditions, would have to be studied carefully.

Arroyo said Mrs. Aquino was expected to receive the proposal Monday when she meets government negotiator Teofisto Guingona.

Satur Ocampo, a New Democratic Front negotiator, said the five points were not conditions for a cease-fire and could be discussed before or after the fighting stopped.

"They can be taken care of in the process of implementing a cease-fire," Ocampo said. "So instead of putting them as preconditions to the signing of a cease-fire agreement, we incorporated them in the process of implementatin."

The front said in its statement that the cease-fire could go into effect by Dec. 10, the International Human Rights Day, and could be extended.

Rebels rejected a government cease-fire offer this summer, saying it lacked adequate safeguards. The front announced a counterproposal in September but refrained from formally presenting it to the government after the army arrested alleged Communist chief Rodolfo Salas on Sept. 29.

Saturday's meeting was the first between rebel and government negotiators since Oct. 18 and only the second since the arrest of Salas, who remains jailed and faces arraignment Nov. 12 on charges of rebellion.

Mrs. Aquino has refused to discuss Communist demands for sweeping political, economic and social changes until they agree to stop fighting.

The New People's Army, the armed wing of the Commuist Party of the Philippines, began its rebellion in 1969 in an effort to overthrow the government of President Ferdinand E. Marcos.

Enrile probed for diversion of U.S. aid

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Philippine defense minister, who has taken an increasingly critical stance in Philippine President Corazon Aquino's government, is under federal investigation into whether U.S. aid money was diverted into his personal accounts, law enforcement officials said Saturday.

The U.S. Justice Department is also tracking down allegations that money "may have been laundered" by Defense Minister Juan Ponce Enrile or his wife Christina while he served in the Cabinet of Philippine President Ferdinand Marcos, said federal law enforcement officials said.

Department spokesman Patrick Korten confirmed that "there is an active investigation by the U.S. attorney's office in San Francisco, but I am not at liberty to characterize it" except to say that it involves the Philippines.

The spokesman, however, denied a report in the San Jose Mercury News that until last week senior Justice Department officials had told the U.S. Attorney for San Francisco, Joseph Russoniello, to delay the probe.

The newspaper reported in its Saturday editions that Russoniello wrote a letter in March to department officials questioning a complex series of real estate deals involving the purchase and sale by Enrile's wife, Christina, of two condominiums in San Francisco, but that the probe was delayed for political reasons.

The Washington Post quoted unidentified administration sources as saying that an indictment of Enrile could destabilize the Aquino government and would be "a very big national security problem."

Sinn Fein trying to change image

By MARCUS ELIASON

DUBLIN, Ireland (AP) — Sinn Fein, the political wing of the Irish Republican Army, is trying to shake off its image as an isolated standard-bearer of pure republicanism and plunge into the mainstream of Irish politics.

The test comes Sunday at Sinn Fein's annual convention, when more than 600 delegates vote on a motion to start contesting elections for the Irish parliament, the Dail, and occupy any seats they win.

Under the party's 63-year-old policy of "abstentionism," it always has boycotted the few Dail seats it has won, leaving the seats empty.

The party leaders — young, college-educated radicals from British-ruled Northern Ireland who gained control of the party in the 1970s — strongly support the change and are confident of victory.

But the old guard, mostly rural conservatives based in the Irish republic, is putting up spirited resistance. It argues that entering the Dail means recognizing the very instruments of state and partition of Ireland the IRA is sworn to overthrow.

For the party leaders, the only question is whether the opposition will walk out, precipitating another of the painful splits that have dogged the republican movement throughout the century.

The young leadership has no plan to end the policy of boycotting any seats won to the British Parliament from districts in Northern Ireland, where the IRA is most active. Sinn Fein President Gerry Adams was elected to a seat in the British Parliament but refuses to occupy it.

The party also continues to regard Northern Ireland as an artificial entity to be toppled by violence. But they recognize that the republic is here to stay.

Adams told the party convention Saturday that if it continues boycotting the Dail, Sinn Fein will remain "a party apart from the people, proud of our past but with little involvement in the present and only dreams for the future."

"The only feasible way to break out of our isolation...is by approaching people at the level they understand. This is the sad and unfortunate reality of the dilemma facing us. It cannot be dodged by highly moral rhetoric," he said.

"You have to live with the real world," says Danny Morrison, the party's No. 2 man.

TOUGH LEADERSHIP FOR A STRONGER TEXAS

Governor White has been providing tough leadership to build a stronger Texas:

-Fighting for quality education for our children.

-Reversing years of neglect of our roads and highways.

-Ensuring water conservation and quality for every region of our state.

-Fighting trade and farm policies in Washington that are taking away Texas jobs and devastating Texas family farmers.

-Standing up for Texas and America against politicians who are ignoring the crisis in our domestic oil industry and endangering our state's economy and our nation's defense capability.

-Attracting new industries and new jobs.

-Working to build a new economy.

Hasenfus follows trial testimony

MANAGUA, Nicaragua (AP) — Captured American Eugene Hasenfus listened quietly Saturday as a Nicaraguan soldier told a special Sandinista tribunal how he shot down Hasenfus' cargo plane last month laden with arms for the Contra rebels.

Hasenfus, making his second court appearance in two days, intently followed the testimony of 19-year-old Pvt. Jose Fernando Canales Aleman as it was whispered to him by an interpreter.

He appeared more relaxed than he had Friday, when the tribunal asked him to make a statement and he refused.

Hasenfus' Nicaraguan lawyer, Enrique Sotelo Borgen, asked Canales Aleman what type of weapon he had used to shoot down the C-123 cargo plane on Oct. 5 in southern Nicaragua.

He also asked how the plane's course had been plotted and the nationality of his unit's "technical support personnel," apparently in an attempt to establish that the soldier and his colleagues were armed with Soviet bloc weapons and possibly assisted by foreign advisers.

But Justice Minister Rodrigo Reyes, acting as the state's prosecutor, objected to each question, saying they either involved state secrets or were not relevant. His objections were sustained by the president of the three-member People's Tribunal, lawyer Reynaldo Monterrey.

Hasenfus, 45, of Marinette, Wis., is charged with terrorism and other crimes against the state for helping ferry arms to the U.S.-supported Contras, who are trying to overthrow the leftist Sandinista government.

Three other crewmen of the cargo plane, including two Americans, were killed when it was shot down.

Sandinista officials have made it clear they consider the U.S. government to be on trial as well before the court of world opinion. Hasenfus' lawyer appeared to be trying to blunt that by attempting to establish a Soviet-bloc presence in Nicaragua.

Shortly after Hasenfus was captured the official Sandinista newspaper, Barricada, reported that his plane was downed by a Soviet-made surface-to-air C-2M missile known as a "flecha," or arrow. Canales Aleman was pictured in news photographs at the time posing with the weapon.

Nicaraguans soldiers reportedly chase Contra rebels into Honduras

MANAGUA, Nicaragua (AP) — Government and Contra forces battled along the Honduras-Nicaragua border Saturday, and rebel sources said thousands of Nicaraguan soldiers had chased the Contras more than three miles into Honduras. Both sides reported at least 100 people had been killed in heavy fighting in the border region.

President Daniel Ortega of Nicaragua said Sandinista soldiers had killed 80 rebels and wounded 120 others in "intense fighting since Oct. 24." He said 21 Sandinista soldiers had been killed and 16 wounded through Wednesday.

WORLD IN BRIEF

Pakistani riots continue

KARACHI, Pakistan (AP) — Mobs set fire to cars and shops in Karachi and Hyderabad on Saturday and riot police responded with tear gas and baton charges, witnesses said. Two people died in the Karachi violence, hospital officials said.

It was the second day of rioting sparked by gunbattles between the rival Pathan and Mohajir ethnic groups. Officials said 16 people died in Friday's clashes.

Hundreds of heavily armed police backed by army troops fought running street battles with rioters Saturday in the two cities, which are 100 miles apart. Roving gangs set fire to buses and cars and used them to block roads, the witnesses said.

Protesters ignored curfews imposed on most of Hyderabad and two-thirds of Karachi, and stoned vehicles and set fire to shops, witnesses said.

Officials said rioters burned more than 70 shops in Hyderabad and about 75 people were arrested there. Dozens of people reportedly were detained in Karachi, but police declined to provide any figures.

One man was shot to death and another was stabbed to death Saturday in Karachi.

Moslems stone police

CAPE TOWN, South Africa (AP) — Moslems marching on a Christian church Saturday stoned charging police in a marketplace battle, while militant youths in the black township of Soweto attacked shoppers to enforce a boycott.

In a third incident, police fired tear gas at a funeral in Cape Town's Nyanga black township after mourners leaving a church where Anglican Archbishop Desmond Tutu spoke tried to walk to the cemetery in a procession banned by authorities.

A police captain and a sergeant were badly injured when 200 Moslems, told their planned march was illegal, refused to disperse and threw stones at ranks of police moving forward with whips across Cape Town's Grand Parade, a huge parking area that becomes a teeming open-air market on Saturdays.

The Bureau for Information said nine Moslems were arrested, and witnesses said two of them were carried unconscious to a police van.

After both sides regrouped twice, and some onlookers began shouting "Pretoria's dogs," police chased off the last 100.

Beirut suburbs rocketed

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Shiite Moslem and Palestinian militiamen fought Saturday with rockets and artillery in densely populated suburbs of west Beirut, and police said five people were killed and 20 wounded.

The casualties brought to 13 the number of people killed since the latest round of fighting broke out Wednesday evening near the Bourj el-Barajneh refugee camp in southern Beirut. Seventy other people have been wounded.

A police source said most of the casualties Saturday were civilians caught in the cross-fire.

From Staff and Wire Reports

Midland has an even chance of getting wetter today.

The weatherman at the National Weather Service (NWS) at Midland Regional Airport is calling for a 50 percent probability of rain today and a 40 percent chance of rain tonight and Monday.

And it will be a cool day. The weatherman is forecasting a high temperature reading in the low 50s and winds easterly at 10 to 20 mph. The low tonight is to be in the mid-40s. The high Monday is to be in the mid-50s.

So far this year, Midland has received an official 27.38 inches of rainfall, which is approaching the record high of 30.33 inches set in 1941. The yearly normal rainfall is 13.70 inches, and the normal rainfall to date is 12.65 inches.

"We started out pretty dry," noted weatherman Ron Brown. Through May of this year, the NWS gauged 4.33 inches of rain here, and 3.89 inches of that came in May. Only 0.44 inch of rain fell here from January through April 1986.

The land has been relatively damp since late May.

In October, 7.45 inches fell in Midland. October's normal rainfall is 1.41 inches. The previous October rainfall high was 5.93 inches in 1985.

Saturday's peak temperature was 72 degrees, and the record high for a Nov. 1 is 87 degrees in 1952. The overnight low was 52 degrees, which is short of the record low of 42 degrees in 1965.

STATE

A cold front remained almost stationary across the northern section of the South Plains of Texas bringing fog and freezing temperatures to the Panhandle late Saturday afternoon the National Weather Service said.

The cold front extended from the Red River between Childress and Wichita Falls to just north of Lubbock. Thick fog and drizzle reduced visibility in some portions of North Texas to one mile.

Otherwise skies across the remainder of the state were partly to mostly cloudy.

Freezing or near freezing temperatures in the Panhandle and West Texas are expected tonight with highs Monday in the 40s. Temperatures should warm into the 50s Monday in far northwest sections of the state.

Temperatures along West Texas portions of the Rio Grande should warm into the 60s on Monday.

Heavier rain was expected through Monday.

Money becoming more important in political races

By JANE MARLER DEES
Staff Writer

"Certainly there are lots of things in life that money won't buy, but it's very funny — have you ever tried to buy them without money?" wrote Ogden Nash in 1933.

Obviously a political office can't be bought, but experts would agree a race can't be won without money. Just how much do candidates spend these days to catapult themselves into the big leagues of public service?

Contribution and expense reports obtained by the Midland Reporter-Telegram from the Federal Election Commission in Washington D.C. show before it's all over, more than $1 million will have been spent on the 21st Congressional District race between Republican Lamar Smith and Democrat Pete Snelson.

Total calendar year-to-date expenses between the two men for the period from Oct. 15, 1985 to Oct. 15, 1986 are $926,726.31. During that time, Smith spent $709,687.34 and Snelson $217,038.97.

While Snelson has relied entirely upon contributions from individuals and political action committees (PACS) to finance his campaign this year, Smith has received funds from individuals, political party committees, PACS, personal loans and his own bank account to finance his campaign, the documents show.

Snelson received during that period $147,516.15 from individuals and $80,113.28 from PACS, for a total of $227,629.43 in contributions. His campaign treasurer is Midland CPA James R. Tom.

Smith received during that period $381,630.68 from individuals, $39,114.06 from political party committees, $74,841.94 from PACS, $5,891.39 from his personal funds, $117,984.16 in personal loans made or guaranteed by himself, $1,343.28 from receipts to offset operating expenditures (refunds, rebates) and $6,463.89 in other receipts such as dividends or interest, reports indicated.

The reporting period which ended Oct. 15, showed Snelson had $10,590.46 cash on hand while Smith had $21,408.47, though reports showed Smith spent $82,417.94 more than he received in contributions during that time.

Dr. Kent Tedine, professor of political science at the University of Houston, said he who spends the most money doesn't always win the race.

"In 1982, Bill Clements spent more money than Mark White and Clements lost," Tedine said.

"But look how money is effecting the Jim Mattox and Roy Barrera campaign. (Mattox has spent about $2 million to Barerra's $900,000 and polls show Mattox ahead). Money is becoming more important as the expensive media advertising time has become a bigger part of the campaign.

"So while money doesn't guarantee a victory, its role has greatly increased," Tedine said.

Federal Election Commission rules state that an individual may donate no more than $1,000 per primary, run-off and general election, while a PAC may donate no more than $5,000 per primary, run-off and general election. So, in the case of a race needing all three of those elections, an individual may donate no more than $3,000 and a PAC no more than $15,000.

Contributions from PACs made up roughly 15 percent of Smith's contributions during the year-long time period. Out of $501,478.07 in contributions other than loans, Cahoon recorded $74,841.94 being from PACS.

About 35 percent of Snelson's $227,629.43 in contributions (he had no loans) was composed of PAC money — $80,113.28.

During the general election reporting period between Oct. 1 and Oct. 15, 1986, Smith's campaign received PAC contributions totaling $7,550.

Smith receipts for $1,000 donations came from five PACS including the National Association of Convenience Stores in Virginia, the Phillip Morris PAC in New York and the New Republican Victory Fund in Virginia.

The National Republican Congressional Committee donated $40,000 to Smith's campaign in September as well.

Donations for the same time period for Snelson's campaign were not available. In May 1986 though, Snelson received $3,000 from the Dealers Election Action Committee of the National Automobile Dealers Association in Virginia and $2,500 from the Conservative Democrat PAC in Washington D.C.

In June 1986, Snelson received $1,000 from the RepublicBank Corporation PAC in Midland as well as another $1,000 in May from the Valley Education Fund in Washington D.C.

Other sizable PAC donations for Smith include $1,007.11 donation during the runoff from the Southland Employees PAC in Texas; $1,000 during the runoff from Southwestern Bell Employee PAC in Missouri; and $5,000 from the National Realtors PAC in Illinois during the runoff.

During the primary election, Snelson received $1,000 each from the RepublicBank Corporation in Midland; the Texas Electric Service Company PAC in Fort Worth and the Stenholm for Congress Committee in Stamford.

AIDS now occurring in heterosexuals

By JANE MARLER DEES
Staff Writer

ODESSA — AIDS. The more one reads, hears and sees, the more he's confused.

A Texas Department of Health (TDH) official said one thing is for sure. "Never say 'never.'"

The Associated Press reported last week that scientists and health officials at a conference sponsored by the Montefiore Medical Center, in the Bronx, N.Y., on the heterosexual transmission of AIDS, agreed that the public at large must be alerted to the rising hazards of unprotected, promiscuous sex.

No one dissented, the AP said, when Mervyn Silverman, director of the American Foundation for AIDS Research, said educators should talk "less about risk groups," and "more about risky activities."

All applauded New York City's health commissioner, Stephen C. Joseph, when he declared, "The day of the condom has returned."

TDH Disease Intervention Specialist Tommy Langnam agreed the first line of defense is the use of condoms.

"We're trying to make them popular. They prevent bodily fluids from being exchanged and prevent tissues from being exposed. They're a good latex barrier," Langham explained.

In New York City, 156 cases of heterosexual infection were reported as of Sept. 15. Of that number, 154 victims were women and only two were men.

A woman may contract AIDS from a man by a number of ways, Langham said.

The virus is in his semen (which is largely composed of blood plasma) and could enter her bloodstream during sexual intercourse, he said. Or, if she has any open sores or cuts or torn tissue, the virus could enter her bloodstream that way as well, he added.

Langham said the transmission of AIDS from a woman to a man was a "very dubious thing" and even scientists are having a hard time pinpointing how a woman may transmit the disease.

Langham said it most likely would occur if sexual intercourse took place while the woman was having a menstrual period because the AIDS virus then would be in her blood. He said the virus would be able to enter through any open cuts or sores or torn tissue on the man.

He added that while AIDS has been isolated in a woman's vaginal fluids, it is the man's bodily fluids that stay in the woman's body and not the other way around.

"However, nothing is impossible. We just have no way of knowing right now," Langham said.

One-half of the approximate 7,700 cases of AIDS in New York City are recreational intravenous drug users, Langham said, but added heterosexuals who contract AIDS from drug use are counted in that category and not through heterosexuals getting the disease through sexual intercourse.

AIDS, which was first named in 1980, is not a viable virus, Langham said.

"It can live out of it's element — a host cell in the blood — for no more than five minutes. It can't fly, crawl or live on a toilet seat."

Up to now, most heterosexually infected AIDS victims have been the partners of heroin addicts and most have been black or Hispanic women, research shows.

Langham said this was most likely due to the fact incidence of recreational drug abuse is slightly higher in those groups.

Since the spring of 1985, the test for antibodies to the AID virus — now termed HIV (Human Immunodeficiency Virus) — has been available in the United States. Formerly called HTLV III, the presence of the virus in the blood doesn't mean the person will come down with a full-blown case of AIDS, Langham said.

The test shows whether the body has begun to produce antibodies to combat the AIDS virus in his or her blood, Langham said. He said the Centers for Disease Control (CDC) in Atlanta estimates that between 1.5 and 2 million Americans are already infected by the HIV virus.

Anne Josefy receives Trimble Service Award

From Staff Reports

Anne Josefy has been named the October recipient of the Trimble Service Award.

The award, co-sponsored by Leadership Midland Alumni Association and the Reporter-Telegram, was established to recognize citizens who best represent the spirit of volunteerism and who have contributed to the community.

Mrs. Josefy was nominated by the Midland Girl Scout Unit, where she began volunteering in 1968 when the eldest of her four daughters became a Brownie and brought home a form asking for volunteers.

She began as a troop leader for Brownie and Junior Age Levels and has not slowed down yet. During her 18 years of volunteer service, she has served on the Girl Scout Program Operating Unit and a member of the President's Team.

Anne Josefy

She has also recruited and acted as liaison to troops in one neighborhood, which includes four schools, and co-directed the Midland Girl Scout Day Camp for three years.

In addition to volunteering for the Midland Girl Scout Unit, she has served as the Field Vice President for the Permian Basin Girl Scout Council, which includes 16 counties. This year the Permian Basin Girl Scout Council is celebrating its 40th anniversary.

Midland's Girl Scout Unit opened its Program Center Facility in May of 1978. Approximately 1,500 girls in Midland participate in the Girl Scout program.

Activities include service projects such as the Adopt-A-Highway program, collecting items for the Permian Basin Center for Battered Women and Children, working with Meals on Wheels and retirement homes. They were also involved with Midland's Sesquicentennial Celebration.

In 1987, the National Girl Scout organization will celebrate its 75th annfversary. The Midland unit is planning many events to participate in the celebration. Anyone wishing to become involved with the Midland Girl Scout Program should contact Ava Jane Qarren at 684-6222.

Originally from Arlington, Va., Ms. Josefy is a member of St. Ann's Catholic Church where she serves on the Altar Guild. She has been a volunteer for Meals on Wheels, served as an officer for the Midland Society of University Women and belongs to the A&M Mom's Club.

Established in January of this year, a Trimble Service Award winner is chosen monthly. At the end of the year, the name of one of the 12 monthly winners will be drawn for a free trip for two, provided by American Airlines.

Skydiver dies when parachutes fail to open

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

ODESSA — A 38-year-old veteran Odessa skydiver was killed shortly after noon Saturday, after his main and reserve parachutes failed to fully open in a three-man jump over Odessa's Sherwood Park at 44th Street and Dixie Avenue.

The parachutist, Vernon Eugene Walden of Odessa, was participating in a jump from a Twin Beechcraft airplane during the Odessa Fall Festival. The aircraft had flown out of Stanton.

"The 'chut opened, but it didn't flare," said Odessa Police Sgt. Tommy Morris. "When he opened the second 'chut, it became entangled with the first one."

Walden, who reportedly had logged 1,800 jumps in 13 years, landed in Joe Erwin's backyard at 521 Douglas, about three blocks from the park. Erwin called police.

The other two skydivers landed safely.

"I looked up and saw them jump out," Cypert said. "I turned to the guy sitting next to me and said, 'I could be doing that (skydiving) but I'm working here" in the Midland College Student Senate booth.

Cypert, 18, said he has undergone ground training for parachuting, but did not jump after the recent training because of the windy day.

"And somebody yelled, 'His 'chut's not going to open!'" Cypert said. "I looked up and saw him just falling. The 'chut was streaming. I saw him disappear through the trees."

GARY OTT

In the past, I have taken great delight in watching and listening to people whine about gaining weight.

They seemed almost obsessed with the situation, spending hours in front of a mirror sucking in their guts, pretending, I presume, that such action would cause pounds to magically disappear.

I laughed at those people because I never had a serious weight problem. It was a tacky thing to do, I know, but fat was never at the top of my "worry list."

As a child, zits were.

Later, when I took up smoking, bad breath became a constant concern.

Now, like most people in their 30s, I worry about not being as successful as I should be. After all, I don't own a Porsche and unless a rich uncle dies and leaves me his fortune I probably never will.

With those kinds of fears it is a good thing I didn't have to waste time and energy bemoaning excessive baggage.

Now, unfortunately, that is changing. Fat is rapidly easing its way up the worry ladder.

I'm not sure when it all started. Maybe it was a couple of weeks ago when I was shopping and discovered that I no longer could fit into the same size trousers I'd been wearing for the past several years.

Or, maybe it was a week ago Thursday when, stepping out of the shower, I caught a fleeting glimpse of my stomach in the bathroom mirror and assumed the Goodyear Blimp had mysteriously found its way into my home.

Or, maybe it was yesterday when a colleague, over a huge lunch, said, "Goodness, Gary, are we putting on a little weight?"

"What's it to you, tubby gut?" I shot back. Then I pointedly reminded him that he was looking more and more like Sidney Greenstreet, who played the Fat Man in The Maltese Falcon.

"Takes one to know one," he said, smiling sadistically.

And he's right.

As much as I may try to deny it, I am getting a bit of a gut on me.

But why?

My eating habits haven't drastically changed. I don't snack between meals. I've switched to light beer and only consume hard liquor on special occasions. Still, my mid-section swells.

"What kind of exercise do you get?" The Sidney Greenstreet-look-alike had obviously decided to play my uneasiness for all it was worth.

"I walk to the bank once a week," I said.

"That's only four blocks," he countered. "Don't you work out?"

"I play golf occasionally." I was becoming defensive.

"Doesn't count," he said. "You rent a cart."

"Yeah, but when you hack at it as many times as I do, the old belly gets a pretty good workout."

He was not impressed.

"What you need is a solid exercise program," he said. "Push-ups, sit-ups, leg lifts, the whole bit. Maybe you could even do some jogging. Start out small and then work up to three or four miles a day. It would be good for you. When you hit our age, weight just starts appearing. Food and booze goes straight to the waistline. You've got to exercise. That's the only solution. It turns flab into muscle."

"Maybe you're right," I said, reluctantly.

"Of course I am," he replied. "Now pass me the mashed potatoes and gravy. If I don't finish them off, you will"

Right, Fat Man.

Fisher-Howell race 'hottest' one in Ector

By FRANK TROMBLEY
Staff Writer

ODESSA — Ector County voters will go to the polls Tuesday and decide which of 84 candidates will occupy 37 offices at the state and local level, as well as the fate of four proposed changes in the State Constitution.

The hottest race at the local level has turned out to be the one between incumbent County Judge Jan Fisher and former County Engineer Murrell Howell. Howell has repeatedly challenged the record of Ms. Fisher and Ms. Fisher has challenged voters to look at the actual records and determine for themselves who is telling the truth.

Ector County Precinct 2 Commissioner Bryan Henderson has drawn a challenger to his re-election bid. Odessa attorney Tony Chavez, a Democrat and former assistant District Attorney during the last term of longtime District Attorney John Green, is trying to unseat Henderson.

Joe "Eddie" Hernandez, a former teacher, won the Democratic nomination over two-term Precinct 4 Commissioner Willie Hammond Jr., earning the right to face Republican Roy Gentry in Tuesday's general off-year election.

Two of three Justices of the Peace have drawn Republican challengers.

Bail bond company owner Judy Burkes is on the Republican ticket to challenge longtime Democratic Precinct 4 Peace Justice Manueal "Mac" Valles.

Precinct 2 Peace Justice Virgil Lumpee faces Republican challenger E.E. "Chunky" Hendricks.

The Precinct 4 slot of longtime Peace Justice Jimmy Harris, who announced earlier this year he would retire, is being sought by former Precinct 3 Democratic Commissioner Julian "Coach" Pressly, who faces Republican Bill Bowen, brother of the man who defeated him in his bid for re-election to Commissioners Court two years ago.

District 76 Republican State Rep. Tom Craddick of Midland, whose district includes a small portion of Ector County, is seeking re-election and has no opponent.

Three Ector County district Judges, Joe Connally, Gene Ater and Bill McCoy, are on the Democratic ballot for re-election and none has drawn an opponent.

McCoy, who was named to the new 358th District Court in September 1985 by Gov. Mark White, is running for his first term, as is County Court-at-Law Judge George Svanas, a Republican, who was also appointed to the newly created county court in 1985.

County Court-at-Law Judge Carol Gregg, who is seeking another term, has drawn no Republican opponent.

Other Democratic county officials who are seeking re-election without Republican challengers are: District Clerk Jackie Tripp Barnes, County Clerk Lucille Wolz, and County Treasurer Janita "Susie" Allen Rippy.

In the District 19 U.S. Representative race, incumbent Republican Larry Combest's re-election bid is being challenged by petroleum geologist-rancher Gerald McCathern.

Ector County voters will cast their ballots at 31 polling places throughout the county and votes will be tallied in the Ector County Clerk's office after the polls close at 7 p.m. Tuesday.

AIDS

Between 5 and 20 percent of those who are infected will develop AIDS and die, he said, and added the rest will remain well but are still capable of transmitting the virus to others through sexual contact or blood exchange.

In May of 1985, the CDC and the TDH made these tests available free of charge to all those considered in high risk groups. Testing in local health departments is done only by persons trained and experienced in pre- and post-test counseling. No real names are permitted, Langham said, and each patient is assigned a number instead.

Disclosing the identities of those at risk can and has resulted in termination of insurance coverage, loss of jobs, loss of housing and loss of family support, he said.

Testing is done at the Midland Health Department or the Ector County Health Department free of charge and paid for by CDC grants.

As of Oct. 17, there had been 1,583 cases of AIDS in Texas, with 968 resulting in death. Six of the cases were children.

In TDH Region 12, which is a 17-county area including Midland and Ector counties, there have been 10 cases diagnosed, with nine resulting in death.

The history of the disease has been much speculated, but the official version from Langham began across the Atlantic Ocean in Central Africa.

Langham said there is a species of monkey in Central Africa called the "green monkey" which many Central Africans kept as pets. The same HIV virus has been diagnosed in these monkeys.

Through normal scratches, cuts and bites a pet-owner could receive, or perhaps through bestiality (sexual intercourse with an animal), the virus entered the human culture in the area.

Langham said many factors led to its proliferation there. For instance, he said they often use needles more than once in make-shift medical clinics in the jungle. Or transmission could have occurred in elaborate, but traditional tribal decorative "scarring," where humans cut designs or patterns on various parts of their bodies.

The HIV virus spread through the Central African cultures and was introduced into the Haitian culture in the early 1960s when the countries of Haiti and Ethiopia shared an all-encompassing cultural exchange program.

The virus spread through the Haitian culture then through either sexual intercourse between Ethiopians and Haitians, injections or perhaps even voodoo rituals.

Langham said that Haiti had long been a popular homosexual tourist spot especially for homosexuals from New York City. He said it was in New York City that the first case of AIDS was diagnosed in 1980.

"I don't see how it could have happened," Cypert said. "I just don't understand why his 'chut didn't open (flare) "I'm just thankful it wasn't me."

The Federal Aviation Administration is investigating the mishap.

Walden was a radio tower inspector.

Services will be at 2 p.m. Tuesday at the Stanton Airport. Brother Don Palmer of the Life Unlimited Church in Odessa is to officiate. Walden's ashes are to be committed to God in a committal ceremony and are to be spread aerially, according to Martinez Funeral Home in Odessa.

Walden was born on Dec. 16, 1947, in Cincinnati, Ohio.

Survivors include his wife, Monica; a son, Jason Matthew Walden of Cincinnati, Ohio; a daughter, Laura Michelle Walden of Cincinnati; a brother, Steve Walden of Cincinnati; and his mother, Eunice Brandenberg of Cincinnati.

Smith says Snelson trying to 'divide' voters

By JANE MARLER DEES
Staff Writer

Centennial Plaza was the setting Saturday for Lamar Smith's last stand in Midland before Tuesday's general election when he faces Pete Snelson in the 21st Congressional District race.

Smith, R-San Antonio, had one last chance to elaborate on what he said is "an attempt (by Snelson) to try and divide the voters from different parts of this great district..."

Smith also spoke on Snelson's claim that Smith "twisted the facts into a bizarre context" concerning his claim Snelson had advocated raising the Social Security qualifications age in a recent debate in Kerrville.

"We have a transcript of it. Pete Snelson has a conveniently short memory. What we quote him as saying is precisely accurate.

"Unfortunately for Pete, we have once again caught him revealing that his true views about public policy are contrary to the those of voters of this district," David Hawkings, Smith's press secretary, said Saturday.

The event in which Smith said Snelson made those remarks was in Kerrville at a League of Women Voters debate on Oct. 20. The question, as per the transcript Smith has, was, "Could you please tell what changes you believe are necessary in the Social Security system to assure the survival of that program?"

The text of the transcript was read over the telephone to the Reporter-Telegram by Smith's campaign manager in San Antonio, Joe Straus III.

The transcript goes on to say Snelson answered, "I would think that one area that the government is going to have to explore is the possibility of raising the age of qualification (for Social Security benefits)...people are living much longer and are in better health and as a result of that, it may be that we'll have to reassess where we're retiring and at what age..."

"Maybe 25 years ago he (Snelson) could get away with speaking out of both sides of his mouth. He's failing to understand that because of Republican leadership like (President) Reagan's and Lamar's, the government serves the people and they are watching," Straus said.

In Saturday's Reporter-Telegram, Snelson was quoted as calling Smith's charge a "blatant falsehood-...which is absolutely not true."

Snelson said, "He knows we are winning the election...I have never said I want to see anything whatsoever changed in qualifications for Social Security. In his panic, he sees the election slipping away."

Smith said Saturday Snelson's "latest advertising trick has been a blatant attempt to try and divide the voters from different parts of the district by distributing three different versions of what at first looks like the same campaign brochure."

Copies were shown of the eighth page of a large flyer that was different for voters who reside in the Hill Country, San Antonio and West Texas.

"I think this attempt to divide is appalling. It's a cheap shot," Smith said.

"I have said the same things in Kerrville and Fort Stockton and Mason and San Antonio that I have repeatedly said here. And I will certainly saiy the same things when I get to our nation's Capitol that I will say when I come home," Smith said.

Youth of our community who make a difference.

Tyrone Oliver

"How do you party if you don't drink?" many students ask Tyrone Oliver, who is wearing #33 for the Midland High School Bulldogs football team this year.

"Partying to me is dancing and having a good time (without drugs or drinking)," is the message this popular senior is spreading through P.U.S.H. (Prevention Using Student Help).

It all started in the summer of 1985, when M.H.S. coach Doug McCutchen needed a volunteer to attend a drug abuse conference. No one offered to go. So, the coach volunteered Tyrone, and the young man headed off to Grandville, Ohio for an eye-opening experience.

During the conference Tyrone and other young people observed a number of people who were addicted to drugs and another group that had never been on drugs. By the time Midland's representative returned home, he "felt like Midland needed a positive support group (for drug prevention)."

Tyrone contacted Becky Hardy and Kay Jones about starting such an organization which would provide alternative activities for junior high and high schoool students.

P.U.S.H. began sponsoring dances, picnics and other activities. Tyrone got his teammates involved, and the junior high football players followed. Of course, Tyrone says, then the girls came, too. By the end of the school year P.U.S.H. had over 500 regular members.

This phenomenal growth brought P.U.S.H.'s founder some recognition... all the way from the White House. "I'd dreamed about meeting football players, but... I'd never dreamed I'd meet the president's wife," Tyrone said.

When the White House called to invite this Midland student to attend a banquet in Dallas and meet the first lady, he was overwhelmed. "Is this really Nancy Reagan?," he asked.

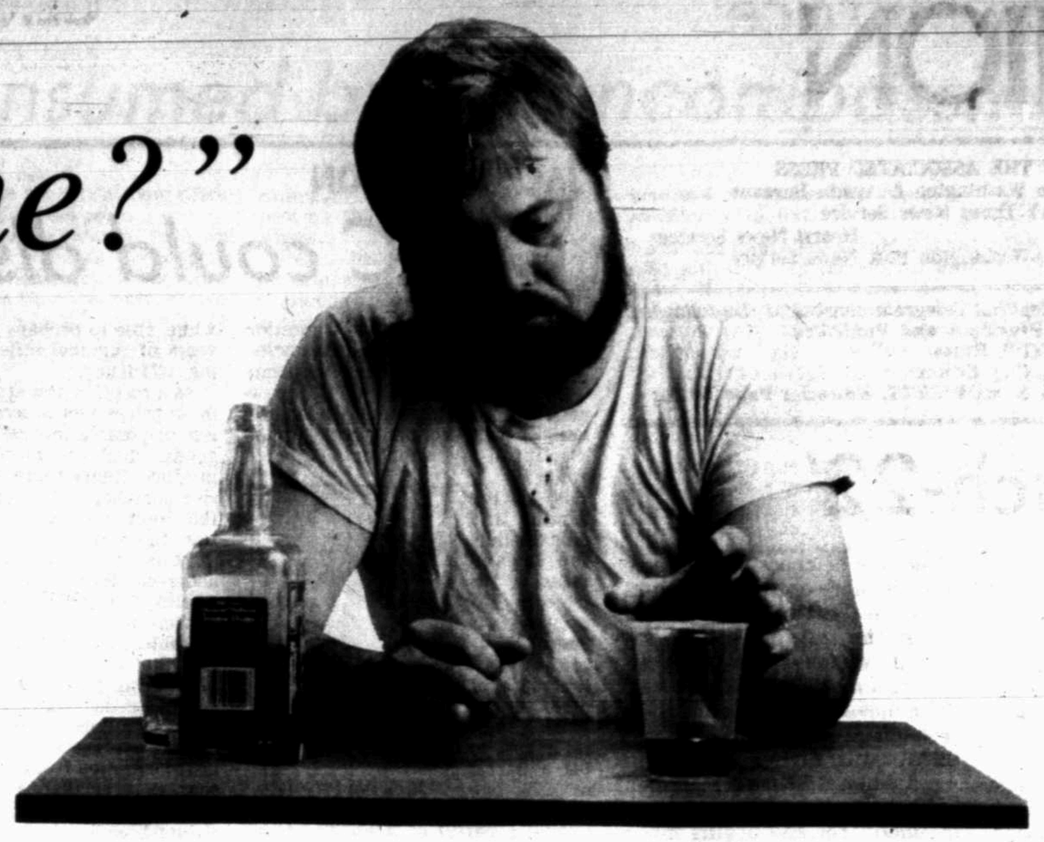

As this vice-president of the Student Council completes his last year at Midland High School, balancing football, track, studying and P.U.S.H. is quite a challenge. However, he says it's well worth it, because, "no matter who you are, you can still have problems and drugs can be a big part of it."

Tyrone is looking forward to new challenges next year, when he hopes to play college football.

Wherever next year takes this young man, you can be certain his interest will be in helping others.

"Why me?"

I had brains, talent, position, plenty of money. I also had the notion that I could somehow keep all this afloat in alcohol.

One morning I woke up on the wrong side of the line between the drinker and the drunk. I found myself launching an insane campaign of self-destruction. You know the rest.

"Why me?" I cried. "Why me?"

Fortunately, I learned about the Council on Alcoholism and Drug Abuse. Whether their help consisted of group therapy or an extended stay in a private treatment center was of no importance. I "got with the program" and things got better. Inconceivably better.

Most of what I had written off as total loss I have regained, including self-respect. I am steady of hand, clear of mind, and once more, as much as anyone can be, in charge of my life and my destiny. Most importantly, I am home again with my wife and child.

But I can't forget those others out there, still waging their own campaigns. I hope, before it's too late, they learn to turn their lives around as I did — with help. And I find myself repeating with feeling, "Why me? Why me?"

Ol' 'Catch-22'

An oil import tax has been a much-debated issue in the last year. While there is general consensus among oilmen that such a tax would provide an immediate "quick fix" for industry ills, there remains the lingering fear that government intrusion into the marketplace ultimately would be the ruin of the domestic oil industry.

The debate is no small matter. At the root of the issue are justifiable claims the industry cannot find and produce its product bound by the chains of government regulations and under tax policies that do not take into account the peculiarities of the industry.

Oilmen are all too aware that when the government becomes involved with the production of anything it seldom just walks away, and they are leery of inviting government regulation into the industry via an oil import fee.

Yet with all the dangers fully recognized, the independent oil industry has been moving closer the past several months to embracing such a fee. The reasons are simple: the oil industry is in a desperate situation economically and without a strong domestic industry, the nation is placed at risk of falling victim to another round of economic terrorism at the hands of foreign oil powers.

So the situation has rapidly become one of choosing the lesser of evils. More or less a "Catch-22" situation. That's what politicians across the state have been saying, in various ways, over the past few months and that's what we believe the Independent Petroleum Association of America (IPAA) was saying earlier this week when it issued a statement indicating all-out support of an oil import fee and urging moves that are intended to ensure "a secure supply of energy within U.S. control.

While fully embracing the oil industry's fears relative to government intervention, we think the IPAA and others are absolutely correct in calling for an oil import fee. We're aware of what happened in the early 1970s when OPEC played havoc with the American economy. And we're aware of the need to revitalize the domestic oil industry to help the economy overall. Associated Press stories in the past few days have recounted the Texas horror: Banks in the state posting losses in excess of $247 million for the first half of this year alone — and most of it directly attributable to falling oil prices.

Is an oil import fee the best solution to these concerns? Well, it's certainly not the "ideal" solution; there are definite risks. But when you're grasping for straws, you don't have the luxury of being choosy.

Spirit of helping

Times are difficult economically in the Permian Basin and, to an extent, it's understandable that charitable giving to such organizations as the United Way of Midland may suffer as families and businesses are forced to cut expenses.

But the spirit of helping that is so familiar to Midlanders is here and being exemplified in the mail being received at the United Way. In a recent letter shared by United Way officials, a Midland woman wrote:

"I am sorry to be so late sending in my contribution to the United Way.

"It is wonderful and rewarding work and you are getting so much accomplished.

"Success and thanks for the help you are getting together for the many agencies who deserve and need the help."

That note says it all. Midlanders who care about other Midlanders when times are good also care — perhaps even more — when times are trying. They want to join in bearing the burdens of those who, in this community, have become part of the Midland "family."

As this year's United Way campaign was getting under way, there were many who probably believed the effort would fall far short of the funds needed by the various member agencies, agencies that throughout the year reach out to help Midland people in trouble and in need. But through the final report rally, held Thursday, the organization was reporting that a campaign total of more than $1.5 million already has been reached. That is impressive in light of current economic problems.

Now there remains less than two weeks in the campaign, and the big job is still ahead. Impressive though it is, $1.5 million is not enough to do what must be done. Every dollar committed literally will mean less hardship for Midlanders who have already been forced to endure changes in their lives, their jobs, and other hardships.

As the campaign winds down, let's all join in helping the United Way to help the people of Midland.

Another View: Disaster, disaster

The earthquake in San Salvador, the capital of El Salvador, compounds the problems of an already suffering nation. In some ways, the situation is similar to that caused by the earthquake that hit Mexico City a year ago.

In both cases, poverty-stricken parts of the city seemed to be among the hardest hit. In both countries, confusion spread and signs of bitterness appeared about the government's handling of the relief effort.

For Mexico, the earthquake struck when the country was staggering under an economic crisis. El Salvador's quake came on top of a six-year war between government forces and leftist guerrillas that has disrupted the country's economy and strained its political system.

Estimates of how much money it will take to put El Salvador back on its feet run as high as $2 billion. U.S. Secretary of State George Shultz, after a 3½-hour tour of the area, promised $50 million in emergency aid for starters.

The United States, for reasons of compassion as well as strategy, is expected to pick up a substantial share of the rebuilding burden. But help from other nations and international organizations such as the World Bank also is needed.

Soon after the earthquake, reports circulated that the communist guerrillas had called off their attacks during the rescue operations. That news may have been welcomed by the government and the people of San Salvador, but a short and uncertain cease fire wasn't what the country really needed most from the guerrillas. What the country needs is an end to the hostilities and a united effort to rebuild El Salvador along democratic, humane and just lines.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Sunday, Nov. 2, the 306th day of 1986. There are 59 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

On Nov. 2, 1948, President Harry S. Truman surprised the experts by being re-elected in a narrow upset over the Republican challenger, Thomas E. Dewey.

On this date:

In 1795, James Knox Polk, 11th president of the United States, was born in Mecklenburg County, N.C.

In 1865, the 29th president of the United States, Warren Gamaliel Harding, was born near Corsica, Ohio.

OPEC could disrupt economy again

WASHINGTON — A question mark hangs like Damocles' sword over the oil-consuming world. Has OPEC's power over the world economy been broken, or will economic recovery be disrupted by another oil price gouge?

Jack Anderson

By price rigging and oil extortion, the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries jacked up the price of oil from $1.20 a barrel in 1969 to $41 a barrel in 1979. The cost of producing a barrel of Arab oil, meanwhile, rose to perhaps 25 cents after years of regional inflation and falling efficiency.

As a result of this stupendous leap in oil prices, consumers had less and less disposable income to buy other goods, which cost more and more to produce. Hence there was a progressive shrinkage of economic activity that went on until the oil price bulge was digested.

Thus the OPEC monopoly achieved the greatest transfer of wealth in history from one group of nations to another. Even more incredible, it was the first time in history that weak nations succeeded in plundering the strong.

What cataclysmic convergence of events produced this disaster? The official explanation was that the "oil crisis" resulted from declining oil resources overtaken by surging demand, combined with the emergent strength of the Arab-led oil producing nations. Thus it was rooted in forces of nature, economics and history that simply could not be resisted by our statesmen but had to be submitted to.

Horsefeathers! Instead of an oil shortage, we had the greatest oil surplus in history — a minimum of 20 million barrels a day in unused production capacity being sat on by the oil states so they could maintain the price at 120 times the cost of production.

Instead of strong Arab leadership, despite the surfeit of wealth and arms, we have an Arab world still inherently fearful, weak and helpless — afraid of Iran's Ayatollah Khomeini, powerless before Israel and totally dependent on the United States for defense against the Soviets.

The incredible truth is that the United States placed in the hands of surprised OPEC regimes the power to reduce output below normal demand. This quickly became the power to raise prices to whatever level the panicked bidding of a leaderless, oil-dependent West would bear. The result was a world-upending revolution, wholly triumphant because it was wholly unopposed and wholly acquiesced in.

Once jacked up, the prices that had been gained by a contrived shortage could be substantially maintained by the restriction of supply to the level necessary to support that price — though this forced the closing of factories and shops all over the consuming world and the progressive stifling of economic growth.

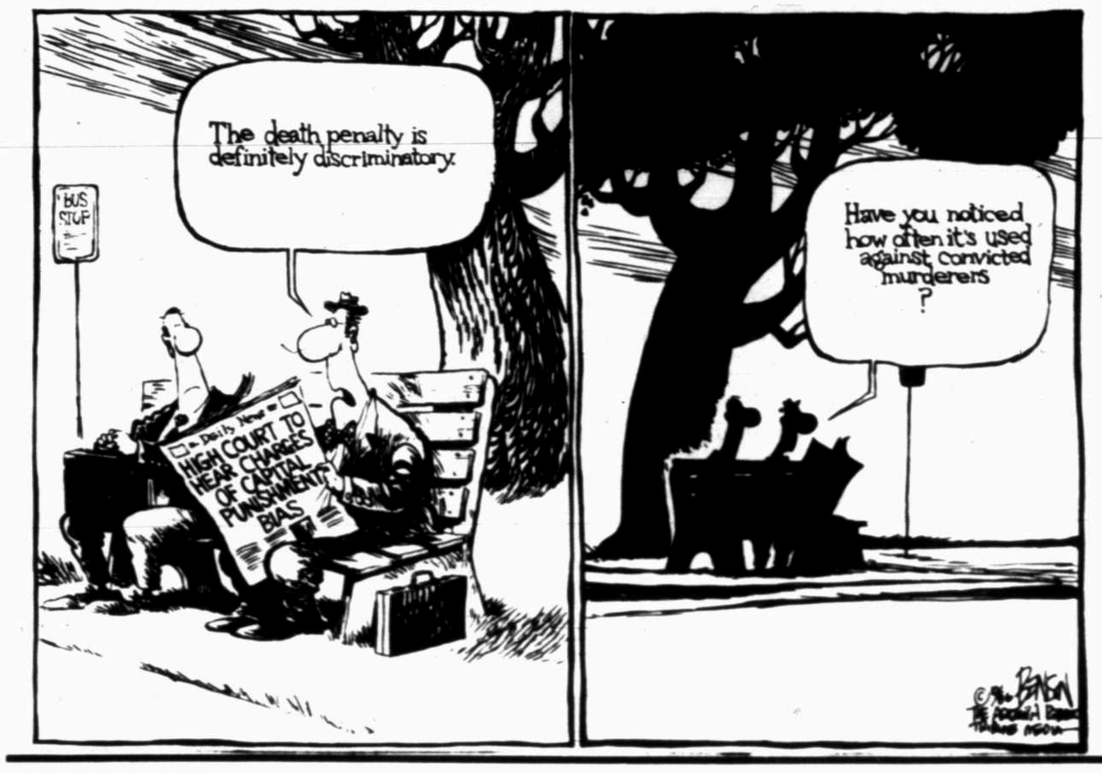

The price gouge was successful, not because the cartel was strong — far from it! — but because it was never challenged by the consuming West. In those millions of daily barrels, which at a cheaper price could have been purchased to turn profitably the idled wheels of production, would lie a basic cause of unemployment for millions in the industrial world and deepening destitution for hundreds of millions in the undeveloped world.

The $41-a-barrel price began to falter, in part, because some OPEC governments cheated on price floors and output ceilings. But CIA sources, who have been keeping a close watch on oil economics, say the Arab oil sheikdoms deliberately flooded the world with surplus oil. This brought oil prices down and stopped U.S. countermeasures.

In the early 1980s, President Reagan moved aggressively into oil development offshore and on federal lands. He also took up the old tasks of filling the Strategic Petroleum Reserve and developing substitute fuels, with a sense of drive.

But by 1985, the Arab strategy had succeeded. As the oil glut appeared and oil prices dropped, Reagan cut back drastically the filling rate of the Strategic Petroleum Reserve. Oil companies and consuming industries followed suit, cutting their stockpiles way down.

GEORGE F. WILL

Sen. Cranston typifies despair of electorate

SAN FRANCISCO — Decanted from a flight from Burbank, Rep. Ed Zschau, trailed by two panting aides, strides through a congested airport without the recognition you might expect for someone who has campaigned seven days a week for 17 months at a cost of $13 million. Zschau invites the aides to spend the night at his home. That will, he says dryly, save sufficient money to enable the campaign to purchase a milli-second of advertising on Los Angeles television.

George F. Will

Soon he is folded into the back seat of a small car scooting through the dusk toward a rally. His last commercial is in the can, broadcast times have been booked and the Gipper is coming to California to bestow his benediction on Zschau's attempt to stop Sen. Alan Cranston from winning a fourth term.

Cranston is a blend of George McGovern and Mayor Daley, of dreamy liberalism and proficiency at shunting pork to constituencies. An alumnus of the World Federalists and an arms-control zealot, Cranston also is the Senate Democratic Whip, an accomplished vote-counter who leaves no log unrolled in support of California interests. Defense spending has made California the big winner of the Reagan years, and Cranston's abhorrence of arms becomes severe only at the Nevada border, heading east.

Contrary to popular assumption, California is not politically immoderate. Only twice since 1948 has California's vote deviated more than two percentage points from the nationwide percentage of presidential winners. However, Cranston's three Senate victories have come against opponents that the Almanac of American Politics says come from "what can fairly be called the nutbag right."

Zschau is different; he is almost too normal for his political good. A successful high-tech entrepreneur, his public persona has a high ratio of rationality to flair, as you might expect from someone who taught statistical decision theory at the Harvard Business School. Were Zschau a more jagged and Technicolor personality, Cranston could not have so ruthlessly seized the opportunity to define Zschau with negative ads.

In a year of negative campaigning, California's U.S. Senate campaign has illustrated the political version of mutual-assured destruction. Zschau's culpability is mitigated by the indisputable fact that Cranston launched the first strike.

Zschau's Silicon Valley district is farther from San Diego than Pittsburgh is from Indianapolis. Even after winning the Republican primary, he was an unknown commodity to most Californians. The next day, Cranston burst on television with a barrage of negative ads.

Zschau soon got into the dismal spirit of this year and answered with negative ads, but he has done reluctantly what Cranston has done exuberantly. Cranston has a history of playing fast and loose with accusations, as when he accused a Reagan administration arms-control nominee of favoring the use of nuclear weapons against South African blacks. That was the most reckless and unrepented lie (Cranston later said: Well, the guy was wrong for the job) I have seen in 17 years in Washington.

Cranston has focused his negative ads on Zschau's "flip-flops" — on the fact that Zschau has modified his views on some issues. Fear of such negative ads may now freeze candidates: It is politically preferable to be consistently wrong than open to the charge of "inconsistency."

California's populist tradition of ballot initiatives and referenda is used to impart energy to partisan political races. This year, conservatives will be pulled to the polls by the chance to vote against retention of Rose Bird, chief justice of the state supreme court. Liberals will be energized by an initiative concerning toxic waste. You say you oppose that initiative? "My opponent hates clean water!"

That is a California wrinkle on a national epidemic of campaigns built around the distortion of political data. The Congressional Record is mined for votes, even procedural votes or votes on peripheral amendments, which are then luridly painted with a broad brush. Anyone who votes against any of the pose-striking legislation on the environment, or drugs, or terrorism is open to 30-second hit-and-run accusations that he is "soft" on smog, crack, Gadhafi.

In a dispiriting year, California's campaign has been the most depressing. Cranston has displayed cynicism as sweeping as his genuine idealism. By refusing to debate he magnified the importance of, then debased the content of, the 30-second commercial. Zschau, who is among the the most temperate and intelligent of this year's crop of Senate candidates, did not discover an alternative to answering in kind.

So on Tuesday, when California voters, and millions more nationwide, go to the polls to pick the "best" candidate, they will do so in the sour mood of the Frenchman who, when asked to pick France's best writer, said: "Victor Hugo, alas."

RUSSELL BAKER

As there must surely be a Paradise, so surely must Rembrandt van Rijn be in residence there. Doubtless he belongs to a club. That may be where he learned about the deattribution.

Russell Baker

James Whistler probably saw it in a newspaper and couldn't wait to needle Rembrandt. We all know what Whistler was like, mother or no mother. Not the sweetest fellow who ever put paint to canvas, was he?

Picture him joining Shakespeare at the communal lunch table: "Heard the news, Will?"

Shakespeare replies, "Though news there be that may be news to thee, can such news be news that be not news to me?"

This is why so many club members don't like to lunch beside Shakespeare. Whistler, however, is not cowed by show-off wordplayers. "Knock off the nonsense, Will, and I'll tell you the latest about Remmy."

This is Rembrandt's nickname around the club, though when he's not within earshot some members call him "Rummy," in tribute to his capacity for Holland gin.

Picture now, as Rembrandt himself might have painted it, Remmy approaching the communal table (third lunchtime martini in hand) to take the chair across from Whistler and Shakespeare.

As a great painter, he no longer feels obliged to remember other people's names, and so is under the impression that Whistler is Marcel Proust and that Shakespeare is Henry Luce.

"Harry," he tells Shakespeare, "if you'd commissioned me to paint your covers for Time, that rag could have been immortal."

Because it is an old joke of Rembrandt's which Shakespeare always goes along with, the Bard says, "People don't want immortality anymore, Remmy; they want publicity. Do me a free painting of the Time-Life building, and maybe I'll put you on the cover of People magazine."

Does Whistler find this Rotary Club banter boring? Does he know from long observation that Remmy's present martini is his third? Does he feel injustice's sting when he reflects that while idiot schoolboys know who Rembrandt was, all they know of Whistler is that he had a mother?

Yes, yes, and yes. Which explains the pleasure he takes in asking, "How does it feel being subjected to deattribution, Remmy?"

Deattribution? What language is that? Rembrandt looks confounded.

"Your books are very, very long, Marcel," says Rembrandt, "and in the next life, if there is one after Paradise, I will read them, so help me, but if they contain words like ... like ...."

"Deattribution, Remmy." So the overpraised Dutchman has not heard. Judging from his stunned expression, neither has Shakespeare. Whistler explains: a small group of art scholars is studying paintings supposedly done by Rembrandt. When they find one that doesn't strike them as the real stuff, the work is "deattributed."

Two such paintings in New York's Metropolitan Museum of Art, having just been deattributed, have ceased to be Rembrandts and become "from the workshop of Rembrandt."

"Not to worry, old chap," or words to that effect, Shakespeare advises Rembrandt. He, the immortal Bard himself, has been accused of being an outright fake by people so tin-eared they couldn't compose a villanelle, much less a five-act tragedy in iambic pentameter.

But the newspapers report the two deattributed Rembrandts, "Portrait of a Man" and "Portrait of a Woman," are rife with un-Rembrandt flaws: an awkwardly foreshortened female arm, a man's cloak hanging unnaturally, eyebrows uncharacteristically coquettish, male flesh that "lacks plasticity."

"Portrait of a Man." "Portrait of a Woman." Surely Rembrandt will know if these are his. Yet I hear him crying, "Nonsense! All those portraits coming out of the workshop like sausages. That's right, like sausages. A man had to eat, had to cash in on success, didn't he?

"Didn't I, Marcel? Grinding out all those old burghers and their wives, who wouldn't have spent a few long nights in the martini pitcher, and known a few mornings when he could hardly face a palette. Just because your name is Rembrandt, you're not entitled to louse up an arm and make the eyebrows flirty?"

I can see Shakespeare, the great student of humanity, knowing how to calm the great artist. "Have another martini, Remmy," he suggests, "and show us how you would have drawn Marcel for the cover of Time."

Rembrandt finishes his martini and drawing simultaneously. "You have foreshortened my arm and made my eyebrows unduly coquettish," says Whistler. "Moreover, the treatment of my flesh lacks plasticity in spots."

Political candidates consumed by all-encompassing races

This is the point in a political race at which one begins to grapple with the realities of the word "burnout." The flame has flickered to life, surged to blowtorch intensity and held that fiery course for months, only to recognize that with each beginning there is an end. That each lighted match must end in a crumble of carbon.

Political life is all-consuming for the candidates. They must eat, breathe, walk and talk — politics. Nothing else matters...really...for until the polls close and the votes are tabulated, the race has not been run. The tape has not been broken. The flame has not reduced the chemicals to carbon.

It's a killing pace that asks much of any man or woman who wants to achieve political office. Yet it seems that every year more Americans are willing to take the gamble, despite the pressures a political race places on mind, body and soul.

Soul, because a political race will test the fiber of which any human's character is constructed. One familiar with such tests was Adlai Stevenson, the Democratic nominee for president twice in the 1950s, not the vice president who served under Grover Cleveland in the 1890. Stevenson observed the grueling nature of the political quest when he wrote:

"I'm not an old, experienced hand at politics. But I am now seasoned enough to have learned that the hardest thing about any political campaign is how to win without proving that you are unworthy of winning."

Yet in this day of multimillion-dollar campaigns in which high-intensity becomes a way of life rather than a mere byproduct, is there really any wonder more politicians do not allow the "game" to become bigger than they? For enough, politics actually does bring about the end of a marital relationship, and ties of friendship; for some, even the end of sanity. Is it worth it? Is political office worth all the demands the political quest places on the individuals who seek to possess what can never actually be theirs?

Political campaigns should be handled with care, not carried out with gusto. The point is to bring to the people the best governmental representation possible, not to prove who can get the biggest headlines with the most outrageous statements. To do such destroys the true intent of politics and turns it into a football game or a boxing match.

Historian James Harvey Robinson noted the trend toward excess in political campaigning in the early 1900s when he said: "Political campaigns are made into emotional orgies which endeavor to distract attention from the real issues involved, and they actually paralyze what slight powers of cerebration man can normally muster."

The political process must not be allowed to destroy the end of government. In case you've forgotten, that "end" is service to the people the politicians represent.

Are band students second class citizens?

Are band students, as well as students in other extracurricular activities that aren't sports-related, second class citizens or does it just seem that they are treated that way?

I was present to watch the Lee-Permian football game Oct. 24 and I was elated with Lee's victory (along with everyone else in Midland and about half of Odessa's population). I enjoyed reading about the upset in MRT's Saturday morning edition (front page Section A and two articles in Section B). The team deserved the write-up. They worked hard for their win.

However, Saturday night there was another triumph for the students of Midland I.S.D. at the District VI UIL marching contest. Both Lee High School and Midland High School bands received a Division 1, the highest rating possible, for their outstanding performances in Ratliff Stadium. Lee and Odessa High bands were the two bands selected to represent their district at regional contest to take place the following weekend. That is quite an honor! Maybe I overlooked even a 1x3 or 1x4 article in Sunday morning's MRT, although I looked through the paper three times. I'm sure I must have just missed it. These students are surely worth a small article for their victories. They work extremely hard for themselves and the honor of their schools.

How many people, except those that live close by these schools and are awakened at 7 a.m. by the band practicing, realize that these students get to Lee or MHS around 7 a.m. almost every morning. They also stay for sectionals after school until 5 or 6 p.m. several days a week as well as individual practice at home.

Along with these hours of practice, you rarely read of or hear of a dedicated student being involved in drug or alcohol — they don't have time for it. Isn't it time to recognize these "unsung heroes" of the student bodies of our school systems?

EDITOR'S NOTE: The article was published Tuesday, as soon as possible after the information was received from the Midland Independent School District representative.

Memorial Stadium replacement needed

In the past few years, Midlanders interested in their high school football teams have grown to be overwhelming in number. It far exceeds the capacity of Midland Memorial Stadium. Midland Memorial Stadium is in great need of replacement!

A few years ago the property was available for a new stadium, but it was voted down. The voters tend to forget the advantages of a new stadium, they seem only to see dollar signs. Why should we keep renovating the old stadium? Why not invest money in a new stadium?

This probably does not concern those that can get in to see the football games. But for those of us who either have to sit on the visitors' side — during a homecoming game — or are not even able to get tickets to the Lee-Permian game, it is alarming!

The cost of a new stadium would be great, but the advantages would be even greater! With a larger stadium, at least the majority of those who want to go to games would be able to. The ticket sales on that alone would help pay for the stadium in time. The revenues from people coming in from out of town would help Midland so much. The new stadium could be used for not only Midland football games, but as a neutral playing area for the playoffs. Also remember the track and field meets! As a Midlander, an ex-student, a football fan and a concerned human being, I feel the people of Midland are letting themselves and the football teams down by not involving themselves in this problem. As voters, we need to look not at the dollar signs, but at the advantages of a new stadium.

We all need to be concerned and get involved with the progress of Midland, whether during a boom or during a bust.

Citizens need to know about write-in process

The League of Women Voters received an inquiry regarding write-in candidates and the Voter's Guide, prepared by the League and published by the Reporter-Telegram Sunday, Oct. 26.

The Midland League of Women Voters has usually not included write-in candidates in the Voter's Guide, but we would like to be sure citizens who wish to will be aware of the write-in process.

Voting machines have a row of diagonal slots high above each office listed. The voter can slide up the matching slot and write on the white paper roll the name of the chosen candidate. Elections officials will instruct voters who have questions about the process. These votes are counted after the polls close and the machines are opened, just as the votes tallied by the levers.

Local write-in candidates must be certified by the county judge and a list of these candidates is to be posted at each polling place. Midland County has one certified write-in candidate, Scott Smith, who is opposing incumbent, Win Brown, for the office of County Commissioner, Precinct 4.

The League of Women Voters urges all registered citizens to go to the polls Nov. 4. We hope that each vote will be cast thoughtfully and responsibly, based on an understanding of the issues.

A C-123 military plane was shot down in Nicaragua. The Pentagon denies that it was theirs. The CIA denies that it was theirs. Whose was it?

Well, maybe it belonged to the Boy Scouts of America. After the crew was prepared — but not too well.

Constitution being constantly subverted

To me, almost nothing is more tragic than the progressive subversion of our constitutional government. It seems that during the last 70 years or so, our federal establishment has followed in the footsteps of Alexander Hamilton, who represented the banking interests of the northeastern seaboard, and has forgotten the statesman-like advice of Thomas Jefferson, who spoke for the people. Aaron Burr had to shoot Alex in a dual!

The manner in which our Constitution has been eroded is a true measure of the power exercised by national and international financiers on the American scene.

Many things of importance to the people have been done at their behest and for their interest — The Federal Reserve Act, the 16th Amendment, the growth of central government, the wars in which we have been engaged, the outrageous taxes, the skyrocketing debt, deficit, inflation — all these have been foisted upon the American people by a submissive Congress under orders from the great moneylenders and manipulators.

Then the Social Security system was inaugurated in 1936. It began like a purring kitten, but has become a ravenous tiger gradually consuming the income of our productive citizens. It must end one day in collapse with results so fearful that we can only shudder in contemplation.

This, too, like other enactments by Congress, is totally without constitutional sanction or authority.

Write your representative and senator and tell them flat-footed: If they don't vote according to the Constitution and try to save this nation from going down the drain, they will be replaced!

Cartoon strip crossed boundary of bad taste

I have tried to turn my back to the increasing decline of morality and good taste blatantly displayed in the movies and on television. I've told myself, "Betty, you may be a tad old-fashioned — this is 1986, this is now!"

However, when the funnies (or to some, the comic strips) become involved, this is a different matter indeed! This is serious, if not downright un-American! I cannot be passive any longer; it's time to come out fighting!

My grandchildren are too young to read, fortunately, but pity the poor parent who is asked to explain what "drug-taking, liquor-lapping, obscenity-uttering, liberal-lusting, homo-hustling, commie-cuddling and pathological-playmate peeking" means. (Kids do still read the funnies, don't they?) All these terms were used in one single cartoon strip in the Sunday, Oct. 26, Midland Reporter-Telegram.

Dots aren't pleasant interlude for motorists

Have you ever wondered why some people don't like change? Well, I sure do not like change when it causes unnecessary inconvenience and damaged property.

Have you seen some of those white dots painted in the middle of residential streets? I wonder what they mean? They kind of look like someone started to paint a graffiti peace sign and stopped halfway through the job. Or could they have something to do with the little white ball in cartoons that have music you can sing along with? Well, if this is the case, I don't think it's very musical when I come to an intersection and find no stop sign!

Now, surely these white dots are not going to be modern-day stop signs. Some of us citizens have enough problems trying to obey the everyday rules and regulations of society, let alone trying to see and obey something the city government has changed. We are not familiar with this and it can only spell or sound like disaster.

Editor-in-Chief, The Hearst Newspapers

Hearst

NEW YORK — At long last a Western government has had the courage to take strong action against the leading sponsor of terrorism in the Middle East and Europe.

Once again, Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher has taken a more effective stand against Arab terrorism than any other European allied leader. Once again, the lovely "Iron Lady" has proved to be America's most reliable ally in Europe.

At considerable personal and political risk, Britain's first woman prime minister broke diplomatic relations with Syria as a result of incontrovertible evidence that the Syrian regime was directly responsible for the attempt to use an unsuspecting, pregnant Irish chambermaid to blow up an Israel passenger plane with 376 people aboard, including herself and 200 Americans.

The diabolic design of this heinous crime is more ghastly than such fiction horror stories as Edgar Allan Poe's "The Murders in the Rue Morgue."

Evidence produced in the trial of the Jordanian terrorist who was convicted of planting the explosive in the Irish girl's suitcase, as well as other information obtained by British bugging of the Syrian Embassy in London, brought to light the following details:

Nezar Hindawi, age 32, was hired by Syrian military intelligence to place the explosive on an Israeli plane operating between New York, London and Tel Aviv. He was given a Syrian passport, a visa for Britain obtained by a Syrian employee of the British consulate in Damascus, $12,000 and a Syrian airline ticket to London. Told to find someone he could persuade to fly to Israel, he spent months looking for a dupe, finally meeting 24-year-old Anne Marie Murphy.

Promising to marry her, he suggested they fly to Israel and have the wedding in the "Holy Land." When she agreed, he informed the Syrian Embassy he had his pigeon. Supplied with a Czech-made small but highly explosive bomb hidden in a calculator, Hindawi was instructed on which Israeli plane to get her a ticket.

On departure day, he told the girl he could not accompany her because of an urgent business matter. Assuring her he would follow to Israel within a couple of days, he took the girl to the airport in a taxi. En route, he placed the explosive package deep in her hand-carried suitcase and told her it was a gift for a friend in Jerusalem who would meet her there.

Israeli security guards at the boarding gate discovered the bomb. It was timed to explode five hours after departure, when the plane would have been over Austria, at an altitude of 36,000 feet.

Ms. Murphy was arrested. When informed what her Arab lover had in store for her, the infuriated girl identified Hindawi. He was quickly traced, arrested, tried, convicted and sentenced to 45 years imprisonment.

Despite a special British appeal to the Soviet government to disassociate itself publicly from Syria's state-supported terrorism, Moscow not only refused to do so but denounced Britain's action against its principal ally in the Middle East as "unfriendly and provocative." Another indication of how little the free world can rely on the Soviet communist regime to cooperate in serving the cause of human decency.

I sincerely hope President Reagan makes a vigorous plea to Soviet leader Gorbachev to line up with the civilized nations of the world, no matter who or what Soviet ally it might affect. He can do this by exerting his considerable influence on Syria, a country heavily dependent for nearly everything on the U.S.S.R.

I hope Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher will personally send Gorbachev the verbatim transcript of the British court's trial of Hindawi as well as the full dossier on all information relating to Syria's involvement in the barbaric crime. The dossier should also be submitted to the United Nations secretary general for distribution to the ambassadors of every country represented in the world organization.

It is time world attention was focused on the role Syria's ruthless President Hafez Assad has played in supporting terrorism and blocking the Middle East peace process. Both President Reagan and Defense Secretary Weinberger accused Syria of involvement in the suicide truck bomb attack that slaughtered 239 American servicemen in the Marine headquarters building in Beirut in November 1983. In May of that year, Assad wrecked the president's plan that had brought about an Israeli-Lebanon peace agreement.

European governments alibi their refusal to take diplomatic and economic action against Syria on the grounds Assad is the key to an Arab-Israel peace settlement and has a military alliance with the Soviet Union. The first, if really believed, is an illusion. Assad is the main obstacle to peace in the Middle East. As for the alliance with Russia, the Soviets will no more risk nuclear war with the U.S. and its NATO allies to save Syria than it did when President Nixon bombed Hanoi during the Vietnamese war.

As British Defense Secretary George Younger said: "It's time for nations who talk about combating terrorism to stand up and be counted." I agree, and hope you do, too.

The Liberals believe that if Texans depend upon big government for their livelihood, they will be more likely to vote for those in favor of big government. For this reason the Liberals have done their very best to extend government into every facet of state commerce and the personal lives of Texans. The result has been a giant welfare system that perpetuates the poverty it attempts to cure, creating a dependent constituency the Liberals continue to exploit.

The people of this state must recognize that if they continue to elect Liberals to public office, state government will expand until Texans are forced to pay ever increasing taxes and possibly a state income tax.

FAMILY
Liberals have embraced the new morality and alternative sexual lifestyles as progress, whereas Conservatives believe that traditional morality and the family are the foundation and cornerstone upon which an orderly, civilized society must depend for its continued existence.

RELIGION
Liberals believe in the complete separation of church and state, whereas, Conservatives support prayer in public schools and believe our Founding Fathers intended freedom of religion and not freedom from religion.

LABOR
Liberals support affirmative action and employment quotas, whereas Conservatives believe a system that rewards individual merit results in productive efficiency and true equality for all citizens regardless of race.

TAXES
Liberals would raise taxes and then give money to others in the form of welfare, whereas Conservatives would decrease taxes and allow the added spending power to boost the state economy.

FOREIGN POLICY
Liberals encourage revolutionary governments in Cuba, Nicaragua, and elsewhere as recognition of their right to independence, whereas Conservatives believe the freedom fighters of Afghanistan, Mozambique, Angola and the Catholic Church of Poland are examples of individuals fighting for true independence.

In the eyes of a Conservative, Cuba and Nicaragua are nothing more than Soviet puppets bent on assisting the Soviets in extending their influence all over the world.

CONCLUSION
Texans need to elect Conservatives to office so they can continue to support the policies that have brought a more stable economy at home and a renewed respect for our strength as a nation abroad.

When you go to the polls November 4, let your conscience be your guide. While Liberals may control the Democratic Party today, their ability to control Texas State Government depends on whether or not Texans cast their votes for the political party which a majority have historically supported or the Conservative beliefs we hold to be true in our minds and hearts.

Physicians & Surgeons Hospital

House Calls

Volume 1, Number 1 November 1986

Specialists Speak from the Heart

The talks were "Straight from the Heart." And about the heart.

When six heart specialists gathered at the Plaza Club in Midland Oct. 3 for a cardiology symposium, their topics explored every aspect of the heart, starting with diagnosis of heart disease and how it is caused, advancing to a discussion on heart bypass and ending with an update on the status of heart transplant surgery.

Heading this core of specialists was Dr. Michael E. DeBakey, the world-famous heart surgeon. His innovations have spanned more than 40 years and they still serve as integral components to the field of heart surgery.

Other specialists who converged on Midland from around the country and their topics were Dr. Donald Bricker, Lubbock, repeat aorto-coronary bypass surgery; Dr. Virendra S. Mathur, Houston, changing aspects in acute coronary syndrome; Dr. Monte Malach, Brooklyn, N.Y., clinical presentation of patients with coronary artery disease; Dr. James Warren, Columbus, Ohio, non-invasive diagnostic methods; and Dr. Moti L. Kashyap, Irvine, Calif., recent advances in the treatment of high levels of fats in the blood.

The symposium was the first major educational event sponsored by Physicians and Surgeons Hospital and set the pace for others that will follow. Attending were more than 150 physicians and medical personnel from a region bordered by Abilene, El Paso, Hobbs, N.M., San Angelo and Lubbock.

The people who attended had an opportunity to not only hear of the latest advances in the field of cardiology from some of the leaders but also to discuss specific cases or problems during a question-and-answer session.

Dr. Michael E. DeBakey, left photo, answers questions during a news conference at the "Straight from the Heart" cardiology symposium. Prior to a dinner that evening Dr. DeBakey poses with Dr. Red Duke.

For the symposium chairman, it was a chance to see a former instructor. Dr. Roger Belizaire, a Midland surgeon, has studied under Dr. DeBakey.

Moderator for the afternoon panel discussion was Dr. P.V. Patel, a clinical cardiologist and director of the Cardiac Cath Lab at Physicians and Surgeons Hospital.

One of the early pioneers of heart surgery, Dr. DeBakey spoke about the most recent advances in the field, primarily in heart transplants and the use of artificial hearts. What once was experimental in the field now has become routine, he said.

Heart transplants are a "technically simple procedure," he said, but noted he doesn't support the use of an artificial heart in its current design as a permanent replacement.

The end of the symposium did not signal the end of the day, however. A dinner that evening in the Plaza Club introduced Dr. DeBakey to many local physicians and community leaders.

The dinner served as a backdrop for the meeting of two different physicians. While Dr. DeBakey is recognized for his work and inventions, Dr. Red Duke holds a reputation for his way of explaining technical medical procedures and new breakthroughs in simple terms to the public. Dr. Duke, a friend of longtime Midlander Clayton Williams Jr., hosts a popular television medical segment on the evening news and attended the dinner as a surprise guest.

Like the other speakers during the day, Dr. Duke was ready with a presentation but one with a more humorous format. However, it too was "Straight from the Heart."

Dr. Duke Prescribes Dose of Humor

The doctor was in his best form that night.

Dr. Red Duke, whose mustached face is seen three times a week on a local television news show, generally is acknowledged for the medical tips he dispenses.

But at a dinner Oct. 3 sponsored by Physicians and Surgeons Hospital, the doctor also distributed doses of humor along with tales of his "practice" as a television doctor.

He was a surprise guest for the evening event, and he soon had the crowd of about 100 physicians and community leaders warmed up to his bedside manner.

After dinner, Dr. Duke told the group he would relate some comments he has received from viewers throughout the state. Pushing the gold wire-rimmed glasses up on his nose, he pulled out a letter and began reading. This was from a man who questioned the doctor's advice about a diet which had resulted in the man's wife leaving him.

Dr. Red Duke provides the dinner entertainment.

His prescription for the audience that evening turned out better results than that given the letter writer: Listen to two of his stories, laugh a lot and leave with a smile on your face.

Nurse Picked for Belize Trip

Cheryl Cranson, R.N., surgery, at Physicians and Surgeons Hospital, will be leaving Nov. 8 to spend a week in Belize (formerly British Honduras) with a team of specialists treating people with eye problems.

A registered nurse at Physicians and Surgeons Hospital since July 1985, Ms. Cranson previously had worked with an association of ophthalmologists in Conroe. One of that group, Dr. Downey Price, each year pulls together a team of people and spends a week treating citizens in an underdeveloped Central American country. Last year, she said, the team went to Haiti.

Each team member donates his or her time to the project, and the services provided these people are free. Dr. Price "does as many cases as he can in a week."

"This is the first time I've been asked," she said. "I'm pleased they thought of calling me."

Fall Chill Sparks Flu

First comes that hot and cold feeling all over the body.

Then there's the tingling sensation — in the nasal area.

The diagnosis is a three-letter word: FLU.

Fall always brings that beautiful Indian summer weather with warm days and cool nights. But it also marks the beginning of the influenza season.

Normally, flu occurs from about November to April. For most people, it means a few days in bed and feeling uncomfortable. But flu can be life threatening for the elderly or chronically ill person.

Flu vaccinations are recommended by the U.S. Public Health Service for persons who are at high risk for serious illness if infected with the flu. Those at high risk include:

— Residents of nursing homes and other chronic care facilities.

— Persons 65 years or older.

— Persons of any age with the following health problems: heart, lung or kidney problems, diabetes, severe anemia, a type of cancer (or user of certain medicines) that lowers the body's normal resistance to infection.

Flu shots may cause side effects. But experts point out that persons who are at high risk for serious illness will benefit more from the shots than from having the flu.

For more information about the flu and vaccinations, contact your local physician.

In the meantime, there are some precautions that can be taken to avoid the flu germ.

1. Wash your hands often.
2. Avoid contact with an infected person.
3. Eat a well-balanced diet that includes extra fruits and fruit juices.
4. Get plenty of sleep.
5. Avoid stress which lowers your resistance.
6. Avoid smoking, which damages the air passages, making them less able to resist virus attack.

Heart Disease Can Be Prevented, Treated

By P.V. PATEL, M.D.
Cardiologist, Physicians and Surgeons Hospital Cardiac Cath Lab.

WHAT IS ANGINA?

Angina pectoris usually means squeezing of the chest. It is usually perceived by an individual as sensation of pain, pressure, tightness or heaviness over the front part of the chest. It is usually a symptom of lack of oxygen supply to your heart. Lack of oxygen to the heart is usually produced by hardening of the arteries which gives blood to the various portions of your heart.

WHAT IS MYOCARDIAL INFARCTION?

Myocardial infarction means "Heart Attack."

Myocardial infarction usually results if the serious warnings of angina have been ignored and if angina persists for a prolonged time. Myocardial infarction results in some damage on the muscles of the heart.

WHAT CAUSES ANGINA?

Angina is usually produced by lack of oxygen supply to the muscles of the heart. This reduced blood supply is usually due to; 1). A build up of fatty deposits in the coronary artery walls (atherosclerosis). 2). Spasm of the coronary artery. When any one of the above two events happens, there is usually a reduction in the blood supply of the musculature of the heart which results in angina.

HOW DOES IT FEEL WHEN YOU HAVE ANGINA?

Angina has different varieties. Different people have different symptoms, but most often people have one of the following: 1. Severe heaviness over the middle of the chest with aching feeling in the chest and arms. 2. Severe tightness over the center of the chest, 3. Severe squeezing in the center of the chest with similar pain radiating into the left arm or the left side of the neck or jaw. 4. Most of the people feel it like indigestion; this is very common, do not ignore it. 5. Some people feel it as a sharp, burning and cramping pain over the center of the chest. Sometimes the pain does not have to be in the chest. Some people feel the pain in the neck or upper back particularly between shoulder blades, left shoulder, left arm, left jaw or both arms and both jaws and sometimes even in the throat.

Some people have shortness of breath or extremely weak spells or severe diaphoresis (sweating).

Usually angina occurs on exertion and at time after sexual activity, on exertion in windy weather and after heavy meals Sometimes angina is present without any activities and this is more serious. Angina occuring at night time is called nocturnal angina and is a sign of a severe heart disease.

WHAT DO YOU DO WHEN YOU HAVE ANGINA?

If you experience any of the above symptoms, the best recommendation would be to stop doing what you are doing and sit down and relax. If you have nitroglycerine, put one under your tongue, this is the quickest way to relieve the angina. After using the nitroglycerine, the angina should be completely relieved in about 5 to 10 minutes or less. You can use about three tablets of nitroglycerin each at five minute intervals and if the angina persists at that time, you should immediately call your doctor or go to the nearest emergency center.

WHAT CAN BE DONE IF YOU HAVE ANGINA?

With modern medicine there are lots of treatments available for this common disease. There are several tests to diagnose the extent and severity of the disease and the blockages. Some of the most common tests which are used by the physicians are; electrocardiogram (EKG), exercise stress testing, nuclear stress testing, most commonly called Thallium stress testing and cardiac catheterization.

IS THERE A TREATMENT FOR ANGINA?

Of course. Again, with modern medicine, angina has been well controlled and is treated with several medical and surgical therapies. These are several medications available. Depending on your other associated disease, one or other medication may not be helpful to you which will be determined by your doctor. Sometimes an angioplasty (balloon dilatation) of the blockage is necessary. Sometimes a bypass surgery is done to improve the blood flow.

WHAT HAPPENS IF ANGINA IS NOT TREATED?

If angina symptoms are not treated and if they are neglected, this can gradually worsen and it can end up in a heart attack. Not all heart attacks are simple to treat and some of the heart attacks are very complicated. The maximum mortality of a patient suffering from a heart attack is before they arrive at the hospital's emergency room. So do not wait until you start having a heart attack. The heart condition is better treated if diagnosed early and treated early. It is better to prevent a myocardial infarction than to treat it.

Jail Term Brings Calls For Money

It looked like a joke, but the woman meant business.

When the blonde-haired "deputy" told Richard C. Liley, administrator of Physicians and Surgeons Hospital, he was under arrest, he thought the woman was joking until she took out her handcuffs. Captured in the dining room, Liley pleaded with others for help as he was lead away, but physicians and nurses just waved good-bye.

The "courthouse" was set up at Midland Park Mall and the arrest was part of a fund-raising event for the Midland county March of Dimes.

Liley's "crime" as read by the "judge" was for impersonating a hospital administrator. "But I am an administrator," Liley protested.

"In that case," said the judge with a laugh, "you should know a lot of people. Your bail is $250."

Administrator Richard C. Liley working behind bars.

Liley was placed inside a jail with crepe paper bars, handed a telephone and told to call for his bail. According to the rules, the jailed person had one hour to raise the bail, which went to the March of Dimes and its projects.

He called an attorney and gained a promise for some money. Then came a call to the hospital, and Liley reached deaf ears.

Liley went back to the phone book and a few calls later, he reached his goal. After spending 30 minutes in a jail whose walls were Dr Pepper crates, he was free to go — back to the hospital whose employees had donated the money for him to be arrested.

Nine Months Of Work Brings Employee Party

It was a night for everyone to celebrate, but especially the employees.

After nine months of hard work and landmark accomplishments, almost 200 employees, physicians and their spouses celebrated with an Employee Appreciation Party at Green Tree Country Club the evening of Oct. 10.

Hours of hard work had gone into building that road to the party.

The group that purchased Physicians and Surgeons Hospital in December 1985 got the ball rolling. But it was the employees who took the ball and kept pushing it — putting up with the construction surrounding them daily for nine months while delivering quality patient care.

By September, the months of planning and working began to fall into place. The road was paved and ready for traffic.

That traffic included:

— Completion of the hospital remodeling and renovations.

— The first successful open heart surgery in Midland had been performed at Physicians and Surgeons Hospital.

— The first cardiology symposium sponsored by the hospital and featuring Dr. Michael E. DeBakey had been a success.

It was time to kick back and relax.

Capping the evening of dining and dancing was a presentation by Administrator Richard C. Liley, who gave plaques to each member of the hospital board and one each to the Intensive Care Unit staff and Surgical Room staff. These plaques commemorated the first open heart surgery on Sept. 27.

But no one went home empty-handed.

Thurman's return ignites Tech over Texas

By TED BATTLES
Sports Editor

LUBBOCK — Tyrone Thurman hadn't intended to get himself in trouble. He just drifted into it innocently and right away knew a good scolding was coming and maybe even exile to Amarillo.

"I caught the ball and looked down and saw where I was and said to myself, 'Oh man, I better get what I can out of this.'"

What the 5-3, 132-pounder from Midland got was a Texas Tech record 96-yard punt return that gave the Red Raiders a 7-0 lead the first time it laid hands on the ball and keyed a 23-21 win over the University of Texas.

"Tyrone doesn't usually field punts inside the 10. It's just not something we do," said Coach David McWilliams. "But a mistake? A mistake isn't a mistake until the play is over."

"It was a low punt, the kind you return and I was on the 10," Tech's little big-play maker explained. "The ball started down and as it dropped it kept carrying. When I caught it and looked down I was on the five.

"I took one good hit, eluded another tackler and tried to get to the wall. I tiptoed along the sidelines, got a good block from somebody and then it was just a race," and Thurman won with the seventh longest punt return in SWC history.

TECH got Texas down 14-7 at half and then Scott Segrist kicked the Longhorns three second half field goals that gave Tech a 23-7 lead with only 7:30 left to play.

The game was obviously over, right? Not by a long shot. The Longhorns came roaring back to score twice on Brett Stafford touchdown passes of 28 yards to Anthony Byerly and 19 to Tony Jones, a 5-7, 137-pound Spud Webb look alike.

Each time Coach Fred Akers elected to let Jeff Ward kick the extra point rather than go for two, apparently supremely confident in the ability of his offense to move against Tech. And the strategy looked good with Texas closing to 21-23 and still 3:12 left.

TEXAS didn't even go for the onsides kickoff after the Jones TD. "I think they knew they could come back and beat us at the end with their tradition. They didn't show much respect for us," said linebacker Brad Hastings.

Texas indeed got another possession, but it was Hastings and Calvin Riggs, the defensive end from Midland Lee, who snuffed out a fourth down and three bid for a first down at the 50 with 1:15 left.

"I knew what they were going to run. They had the backs spread out like last year. They like to run to the right," explained Riggs, "This time they took a chance and went left, and we were there."

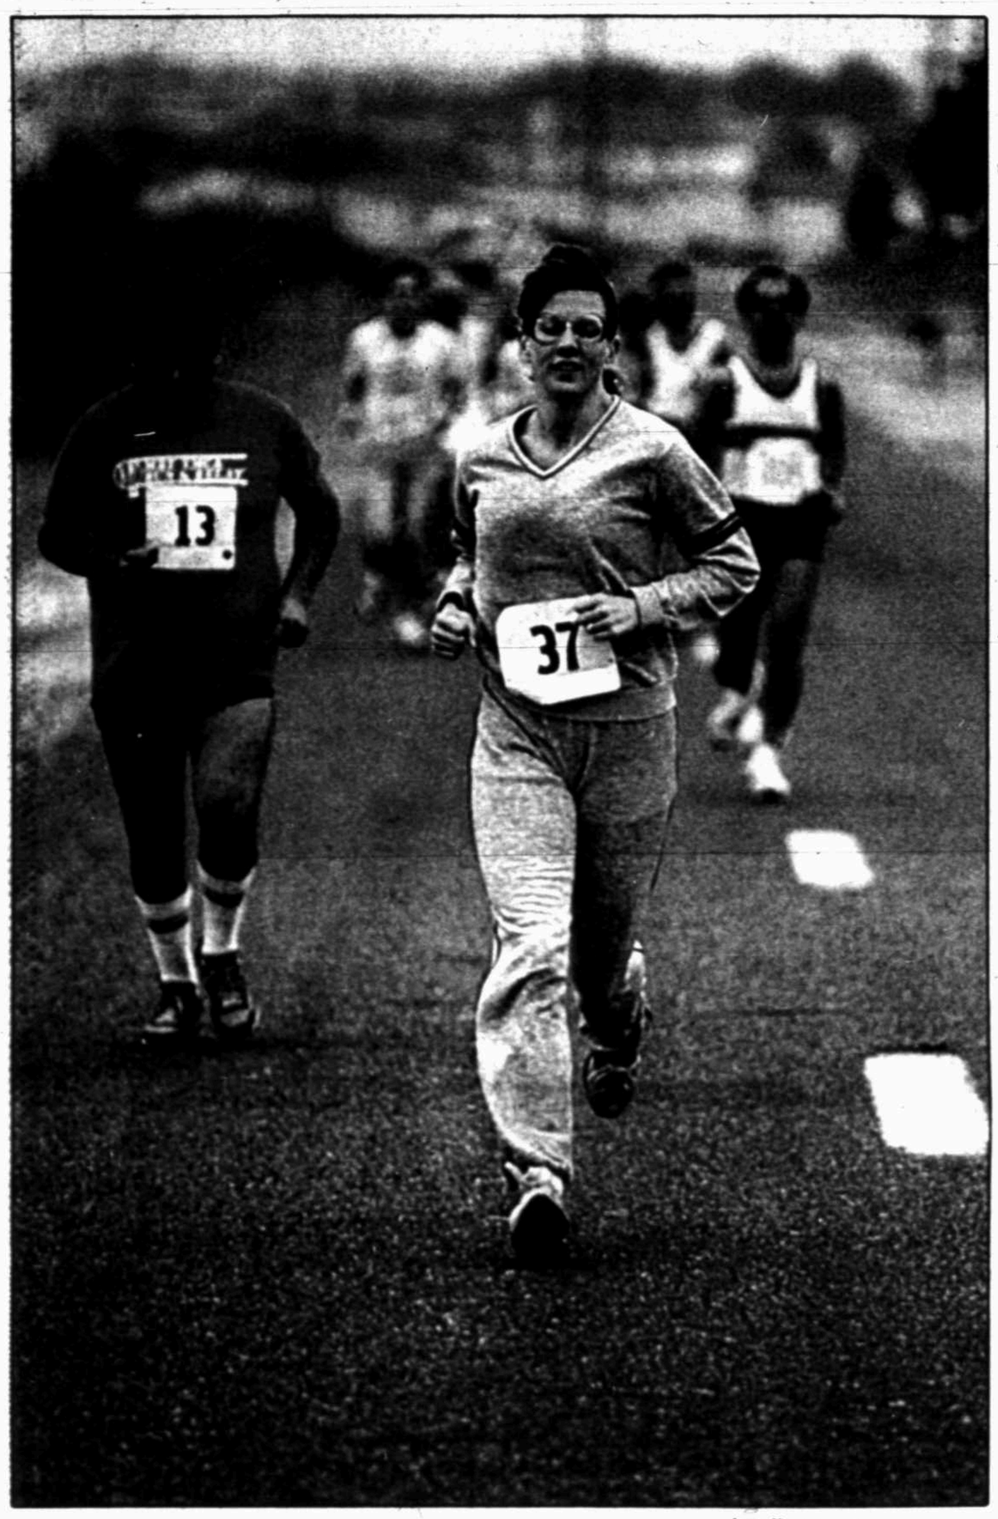

Thurman's run 3:16 into the game got the Raiders off to a winning start and James Gray's 20-yard run with 1:53 left in the quarter gave Tech a 14-0 lead. The 51-yard drive came off a short punt and the TD was set up by wide receiver Wayne Walker's whirling, juggling catch of a 31-yard pass from quarterback Billy Joe Tolliver to the Texas 20.

OF GRAY'S run, Tolliver said, "In their 4-3 defense, they line up a tackle on tackle and guard on guard on the strong side, so we checked off and went to the weakside where they showed their basic look."

Early in the game they went to six defensive backs "and took away a lot of the pass plays we were trying to run.," Tolliver said. "So we went to the run in the second half."

Just before half, UT took advantage of the Raiders' aggressive enthusiasm to turn an interception of backup quarterback Monte McGuire by free safety Stephen Braggs into

Murray rifles A&M past SMU

By DENNE H. FREEMAN

IRVING (AP) — Texas A&M quarterback Kevin Murray obviously doesn't believe in jinxes or giving up when his team is behind by 11 points.

Murray rifled three touchdown passes, including a 34-yard game-winner with 1:48 to play, to keep the Aggies atop the Southwest Conference with a wild 39-35 victory Saturday over Southern Methodist.

The Aggie victory soured SMU's homecoming and was the first in four tries in Texas Stadium since the Mustangs moved from the Cotton Bowl.

"It will go down in history as one of the greatest games played in this conference or any other conference," said Texas A&M Coach Jackie Sherrill. "I predicted at halftime that the team that had the ball last would win."

Sherrill said Murray "never lost his poise and was in control all the way. There's not a finer quarterback in the country. Everybody talks about Vinny Testaverde at Miami, but Kevin has had a great season."

SMU Coach Bobby Collins also said it was one of the finest games he had been a part of.

"It was college football at its best," Collins said. "You have to give A&M credit for coming back. We had a roughing-the-passer penalty that really hurt us."

Murray, who is from Dallas, said, "We won in the city I'd like to be in Jan. 1 (the Cotton Bowl). It was exciting for me to come back home like this."

Murray said A&M never panicked when it fell behind early.

"We're the defending champions and we think we can win no matter how far we fall behind," Murray said. "I feel like people have to beat us."

The defending SWC champion Aggies improved to 7-1 overall and 5-0 in the conference. SMU, ineligible for the SWC crown or post-season play, is 5-3 and 4-2.

SMU went ahead 35-32 with 7:33 to play after wingback Ron Morris ran 23 yards for a touchdown. But Murray, who had hit running back Keith Woodside with a 50-yard touchdown pass earlier in the fourth quarter, wouldn't back down.

A critical roughing-the-passer penalty moved the Aggies to the Mustang 34. Woodside worked free downfield, caught the ball and received a block from Rod Harris to score.

Murray completed 17 of 34 passes for 278 yards, and SMU quarterback Bobby Watters completed 17 of 30 for 173 yards in their aerial duel before a homecoming crowd of 58,125 fans in Texas Stadium.

SMU led 21-17 at halftime in a wild offensive show that included a disputed touchdown by the Mustangs' Jeff Atkins.

With A&M leading 10-7, Atkins was credited with a 1-yard run for a touchdown, although he had fumbled the ball forward and it was recovered by the Aggies in the end zone.

Limping Vinny leads 'Canes

Associated Press

MIAMI — Vinny Testaverde, limping on a gimpy right foot, passed for three touchdowns Saturday and ran for two more to lead top-ranked Miami to a 41-23 victory over 20th-ranked Florida State.

Testaverde strained his foot two weeks ago against Cincinnati. He reinjured the foot early in the game Saturday on one of five sacks, but refused to sit out. He tossed touchdowns of 23 yards to Alonzo Highsmith, 20 yards to Brian Blades and 24 yards to Brett Perriman. Testaverde finished with 21 completions in 35 attempts for 315 yards with two interceptions.

Just as impressive were his two hobbling bootleg runs for touchdowns of 1 and 8 yards. The 1-yarder came on a fourth-down with 5:20 to play. The pass to Perriman with 1:27 left completed Miami's 20-0 domination of the final period.

The Seminoles, 4-3-1, struck first on a 6-yard run by Tanner Holloman on the opening drive. Coach Bobby Bowden's team also got field goals of 36, 38 and 45 yards from Derek Schmidt.

MORGANTOWN, W.Va. — Quarterback John Shaffer hit D.J. Dozier with a 23-yard first-quarter touchdown pass and Massimo Manca kicked four field goals Saturday night as second-ranked Penn State smothered West Virginia for its eighth consecutive victory.

Penn State's defense allowed West Virginia to cross midfield only three times as the Nittany Lions beat the Mountaineers for the 29th time in 31 games. The defeat was the sixth straight for the Mountaineers, 2-6, ensuring the school's first losing season since 1978.

Manca, who missed on two first-quarter field goal attempts, hit from 42 and 37 yards in the second quarter as the Nittany Lions took a 13-0 halftime lead. He connected from 22 and 27 yards in the third quarter after Penn State twice drove deep into West Virginia territory.

Michigan 69, Illinois 13

ANN ARBOR, Mich. — Michigan quarterback Jim Harbaugh ran for two touchdowns and passed for another to lead the third-ranked Wolverines to a rout over conference foe Illinois.

Harbaugh, who played only three quarters, completed 11 of 13 passes for 224 yards. Michigan, 8-0 for the season and 5-0 in the Big Ten, scored on five of its six first-half possessions. The final tally represented the most points the Wolverines have scored since a 70-21 victory over Illinois in 1981.

3

The Wolverines had seven points in the first quarter, 20 in the second, 21 in the third and 21 in the fourth, dropping Illinois to 2-6 and 1-4.

Rebels remember bullets

Have just enough to nip Bobcats

By TERRY WILLIAMSON
Assistant Sports Editor

"When you go to war, you better hope you have some bullets with you."

Those were the prophetic words of Midland Lee head football coach Earl Miller prior to playing San Angelo Friday night.

Fortunately, the Rebels had just enough ammunition to pull off a 14-7 victory to insure a fourth consecutive trip to the state playoffs.

And the win turned out to be an even bigger victory Saturday when Amarillo Palo Duro defeated Amarillo High by a 21-17 margin up in the Panhandle.

Palo Duro is undefeated and ranked No. 6 in the state. The Dons won the District 3-5A top seed for the bi-district playoffs in two weeks, meaning that Lee won't have to face Palo Duro in the first round.

SO, WHO does Lee meet when the playoffs kickoff? Answer: Unknown at this time.

Amarillo High and Amarillo Tascosa both have one 3-5A loss, both losing to Palo Duro. They play each other Friday and the winner goes to the playoffs and the loser is out.

Amarillo High, who Lee has beaten in two playoff appearances in Jones Stadium, is 5-3-1 on the season while Tascosa is 7-2.

At this time Lee isn't prepared to say which team it would rather play when the playoffs begin, but one has the feeling that the Tascosa-Amarillo High game next week will carry a lot of interest to the Lee fans and coaches.

But Saturday, Lee's players and coaches were still soothing wounds and basking in the limelight of their first district title in a decade.

District 4-5A has a traveling bell that goes to the district football champion each year. It hasn't traveled very far in the past six years since Odessa Permian has all but put a permanent lock on it. Lee wants to bring it home.

EARL MILLER

"WE'RE GOING to ring that bell every day until school is out," said wide receiver Freddie Dawson. "People around here are going to here some bells."

After the win over San Angelo, Lee defensive line coach Eddie Wolski said, "All that's left now is to paint that bell maroon."

To get the bell, Lee had to defeat the No. 2 and No. 5 ranked teams in the state on back-to-back weekends.

"We got the job done, but to say it was easy isn't true," said offensive coordinator Van Tom Whatley. "It was tough. You talk about talent. San Angelo has it."

LEE TIGHT end Jack Chase noted, "The district championship feels good, but my legs are gone after those two games. Usually adrenalin keeps me going, but I am pretty well used up after these two games."

Center Chris Jones said, "This is a dream, but I have to admit that I'm pretty drained, both emotionally and physically. San Angelo played us a lot harder than Permian did and that's not to say that San Angelo is a better team. They just played us harder."

Offensive guard Mark Barnes said, "It's great to be on the first district championship team in 10 years and be on the first Lee team to go 8-0."

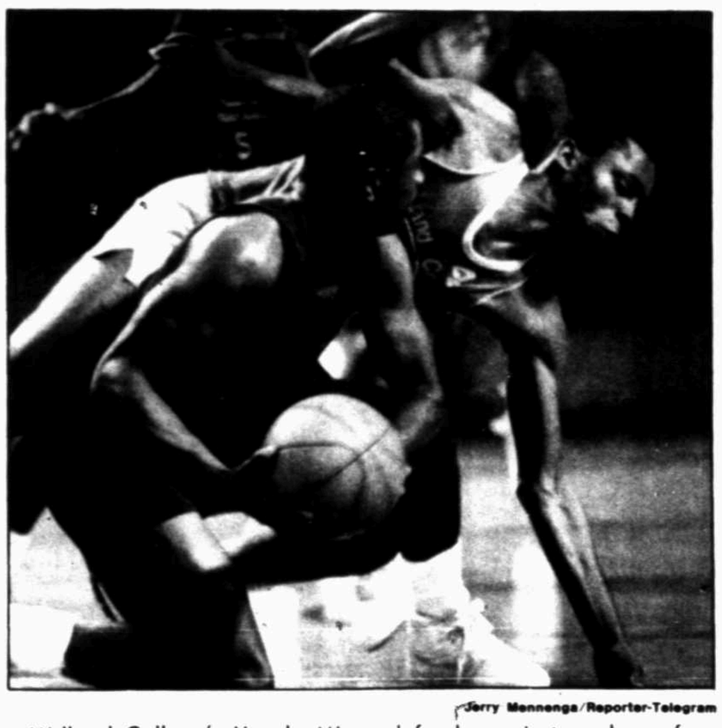

Actually, Lee can still drop to the status of co-champion if the Rebels lose to Abilene High Friday at Memorial Stadium, but it won't change the playoff picture any. Lee is in. San Angelo and Permian fight Friday to see which team will join the Rebels in the state playoffs.

Quarterback Rodney Johnson (dislocated elbow) and halfback Joe Woodard (re-injured shoulder) were both hurt late in the San Angelo victory. The good news is that Johnson didn't have any chipped bones in the arm. How long it will take for him to recover, however, is still the haunting question.

It's not now known how long Woodard will be on the shelf, but at least he says, "Don't even think about it. I'll be there when they start the playoffs. You can bet on that. I'm not dead and that's just about what it would take to keep me out."

Still, the Rebels have to play one more before getting serious again. On the line is Lee's first undefeated regular season. But it's nice for any team to know that it's one you don't have to win.

But when you've gone this far, losing has a bitter taste.

Horned Frogs jump Cougars

HOUSTON (AP) — Freshman Falanda Newton returned an interception 85 yards for a touchdown to break open a close game and lead Texas Christian to a 30-14 Southwest Conference victory over Houston Saturday, ending a 14-game SWC losing streak.

The Horned Frogs, who had not won a league game since beating Texas Tech 27-16 on Nov. 10, 1984, led the Cougars 20-14 when Newton picked off a tipped pass by Houston's Mark Davis.

Newton sprinted down the sideline, completing the longest interception return in the school's history. The Cougars lost six turnovers and four of them set up TCU scores.

TCU kicker Lee Newman kicked field goals of 26, 29 and 36 yards in the second half, all following Houston turnovers.

The Horned Frogs took a 7-0 halftime lead with their longest drive of the season, an 87-yard march that

2nd Annual MRT/YMCA Half Marathon Run and Relay

Jones shows up to win

Since he missed the inaugural MRT-YMCA Half Marathon to get married last season, Bob Jones put his mark on the second annual 13.2 mile event Saturday at Courtyard of the Midland Park Mall.

Jones pulled away from guest runner Tom Rotkis from Arizona at the seven-mile mark and cruised to a 1:15.34 finish, two minutes better than runner-up Rotkis, a six-time finisher of the 100-mile Western States Run in California.

A record 234 runners braved chilly, windy conditions to participate in the second annual half-marathon run and relay co-sponsored by the Reporter-Telegram and the YMCA.

Jones came up several minutes shy of the course record set in the first race by Phil Stenforth of Austin who was injured and unable to race this year.

"I really didn't know how I would do," Jones said after his victory. "I don't run too many half-marathons to it's hard to know what to expect."

Odessan Pam Allen is back on track as well, easily taking first place in the women's division. Allen, who took most of the summer off, ran in 13 10K runs in 1985, winning them all. She has run in just four races so far in 1986.

Now Allen is in training for a marathon as well, but she is likely to wait until next spring in Abilene after this, her first half-marathon attempt.

By TED BATTLES
Sports Editor

Midland College opens the 1986-87 basketball tournament Thursday, playing the 7 p.m. game in the opening round of the classy Chaparral Classic, in an attempt to repeat last year's championship.

This year's field is considerably stronger and MC could emerge with as many, or more, losses as all last season. That wouldn't be all that terrible. It just serves to emphasize the kind of year Coach Jerry Stone's bunch had a year ago, 33-1.

That's better than the National Championship team of 1982, which bit the dust four times. And the only reason MC didn't win the national title was because San Jacinto did, handing MC its lone loss on the way to an unbeaten season.

In Thursday's opening day of the three-day tournament, games are scheduled for 3, 5, 7 and 9 p.m.

One reason this year's Chap Classic field will be improved is that no JV teams have been invited and all the returning teams from last year's field figure to be stronger than a year ago.

Odessa College, which finished 18-12 last season, is looking to return to a challenging position in the WJCAC race under new leadership. Howard County, 11-18 last year, also has a new coach, Larry Brown, will be out to restore the Hawks' image.

"Barton County will be here from Kansas and I expect them to be strong," said Stone. "And Garden City also will be coming from Kansas." Last year Garden City finished fifth at the Chap Classic.

Cisco and Grayson County come to the tournament as somewhat unknown quantities.

Howard last year beat South Plains College, 64-62, but the Texans came on to provide the only semblance of a challenge to MC in last year's WJCAC race to finish 12-4 and 25-9. MC accounted for four of the defeats.

This will be Ron Mayberry's second season at South Plains and in some quarters the Texans are regarded as the early favorite for the WJCAC race.

That's understandable since MC lost three big men inside plus All-America Ricky Grace to the University of Oklahoma.

Stone's newcomers this season include assistant coach George Walker, who played on the University of Houston NCAA finalists that lost to North Carolina State. Walker replaces Reggie Franklin, who resigned recently to become an assistant at Southwestern Louisiana.

MHS takes win into playoffs

By TERRY WILLIAMSON
Assistant Sports Editor

Volleyball

The Midland High volleyball team knew it had District 4-5A's second place playoff berth sewed up when it took to the floor against Abilene Cooper Saturday afternoon at the MHS gym, and played like it.

The Bulldogs won 15-4, 8-15, 15-10, but this wasn't the same Purple Pack that rolled to 10-2 District 4-5A mark.

"Yuk," was the response of MHS coach Sonja Pittman. "We were terrible. We haven't tried to look too far ahead this year, but our girls were in Amarillo today."

And Amarillo is where the Bulldogs will be at 7 p.m. Thursday when they travel to Amarillo High for the bi-district round of the state playoffs. Amarillo High won the District 3-5A title with a perfect record and stand 29-1 on the season, losing only to Arlington in the final round of the Duncanville tournament early in the year.

San Angelo, winner of District 4-5A, will play Amarillo Tascosa at a date and site still to be determined.

The Bulldogs took an easy 15-4 verdict in the first game against Cooper, but then struggled the rest of the match. MHS trailed 11-3 in the second game before losing 15-8.

Midland High never trailed in the third game, but almost squandered an 11-3 lead before finally winning on a thunderous spike by Amy Cumings.

Cumings also finished off the first game with a spike, but the Bulldogs didn't look sharp. Thoughts were on the playoffs and it was a forgivable trait, considering the fact that win or lose to Cooper, the Bulldogs would be in the state playoffs.

The Bulldogs may have even come out of the game with a more severe loss. Senior Erin Allen twisted an ankle and it won't be known for a few days if she will be able to play.

"We can't afford to lose Erin. She's a big part of our team. She's a tough girl and she will play if she's able," said Pittman.

With only eight varsity players, the Bulldogs need all bodies healthy.

ONE BRIGHT spot for the Bulldogs was the play of non-starter Mollie Nelson, who came up with two key spikes, two blocks and a strong serving game.

Schelle Payton and Kathi Jones played the key role for Cooper, sparking the second game victory for the Cougars. Jones' spike ended the 15-8 marathon that saw both teams make a number of mistakes. It wasn't a case of who won, but a case of who made fewer mistakes. MHS won that battle, but there were enough mistakes on both sides to cause a few anxious moments.

"I admit the girls had me worried," said Pittman.

In the junior varsity game, Cooper won a 15-5, 15-12 decision.

Midland Lee finished in third place with a 7-5 4-5A mark with a win over Abilene High and San Angelo polished off Odessa Permian as expected to keep its undisputed title.

Lee Maroon nears ninth grade title

From Staff Reports

Midland Lee Maroon remained undefeated with a hard fought 27-20 win over Midland Purple Saturday to move within one game of winning the Midland-Odessa ninth grade conference outright.

In other ninth grade action Saturday, Odessa Bonham won a 36-6 decision over Lee White. On Thursday, Midland Gold took a 22-9 win over Odessa Ector while Crockett beat Bowie 24-6 and Hood pelted Nimitz 22-8 in Odessa matchups.

Alamo claimed the eighth grade Midland-Odessa title Saturday with a 20-0 win over Bowie, posting a 7-1 record for the season. Alamo is open next week and is finished this year. Second place Goddard took a 33-6 win over Nimitz and San Jacinto blasted Ector 28-0. Hood won over Bonham 38-18.

In the eighth grade city conference, Goddard won 28-0 over San Jacinto and no score was reported on the Alamo-Trinity game.

In the seventh grade American Conference, Goddard White rolled over Alamo Scarlet 28-12 and Goddard Red posted a 12-6 win over San Jacinto Green. The Alamo Grey-San Jacinto White score wasn't reported.

In the seventh grade National Conference, Goddard White bested Alamo Scarlet 26-6 while San Jacinto Green and Goddard Red fought to a 6-6 tie. The Alamo Grey-San Jacinto White score wasn't reported.

Rebs, 'Dogs to send runners to regional

From Staff Reports

4-5A X-Country

SAN ANGELO — The District 4-5A cross country meet here Saturday morning ran to a predictable drum beater.

San Angelo won the team title with 48 points while Midland Lee was a narrow second, beating Midland High by a 60-61 margin. That's pretty much the way the teams ran last week in the Tall City Invitational meet at Hogan Park.

San Angelo's Garren Hill posted a 15:46 to win top individual honors with Lee's Mike Garza second at 16:11. That, too, was predictable after last week.

Lee's one-point margin over MHS in the team race, however, turned out to be an important turn of events for the Rebels. The one point difference allows Lee to advance to the Region I cross country meet next week in Lubbock.

Joining Garza at the Region I meet will be team members Rodney Clark, Robert Rodriquez, Philip Scott and John Beasley.

But the Bulldogs were not shutout from the Region I run. Sammy Venegas finished fifth overall to qualify as an individual. Lee's Clark was fourth overall and would have qualified with Garza as individuals even without the team.

Midland High's Mira Pina posted a 13:25 to finish third overall in the girls competition, earning the Bulldogs another Region I berth.

Kelvin Bryant activated

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Washington Redskins on Saturday activated running back Kelvin Bryant in time for their NFL game against the Minnesota Vikings Sunday and said they would make room for him on the roster by waiving a player to be announced later.

Bryant, who injured his left knee on Sept. 14, has been on injured reserve and has missed the Redskins' last six games.

Mesa College defeats NM Highlands

LAS VEGAS, N.M. (AP) — Lonnie Williams ran for two touchdowns and Mesa College rallied in the second half for a 27-17 victory over New Mexico Highlands and the Rocky Mountain Athletic Conference title.

The victory gave Mesa its fourth conference title in six years. The Mavericks clinched their latest league title with a 5-0 record and are 6-1-1 overall.

New Mexico Highlands is 4-1 in the conference and 5-3 overall.

Iowa State quarterback Alex Espinoza can't shake Missouri strong safety Eric McMillan on a scramble in a Big Eight game Saturday. The Cyclones took revenge with a 37-14 victory.

Hatcher sparks Colorado

Associated Press

OKLAHOMA CITY — Quarterback Mark Hatcher ran for one touchdown and passed for another to spark a four-touchdown second half that carried Colorado to a 31-14 victory over Oklahoma State in Big Eight college football Saturday.

Hatcher connected on a 23-yard scoring pass to O.C. Oliver and also sneaked in from 1 yard out in the third quarter as the Buffaloes came back from a 14-3 halftime deficit.

Colorado scored twice more in the fourth quarter when fullback Anthony Weatherspoon recovered a teammate's fumble in the end zone, and on a 2-yard run by Sam Smith.

The victory, the Buffaloes' fourth straight, ran their record to 4-4 overall, 4-0 in the Big Eight. Oklahoma State dropped to 3-5 and 1-3.

Hatcher's pass to Oliver capped a 74-yard drive. Oliver caught the swing pass behind the line of scrimmage and followed a wall of blockers into the end zone, making the score 14-10.

A big play in the Buffaloes' next scoring drive came when Hatcher hit split end Lance Carl for 17 yards on third-and-14. Hatcher scored three plays later, and Colorado had the lead for good.

Oklahoma State scored twice in the second quarter on a 17-yard touchdown pass from Mike Gundy to Hart Lee Dykes and a 3-yard run by Thurmon Thomas. Gundy completed nine of 16 passes for 125 yards in the first half, but was only seven of 16 with an interception in the second half.

Indiana 21, Wisconsin 7

BLOOMINGTON, Ind. — Making their first college starts Saturday, freshman tailback Anthony Thompson ran for 207 yards and quarterback Dave Schnell ran for two touchdowns and passed for another as Indiana beat Wisconsin.

The Hoosiers, snapping a three-game losing streak with their revamped offensive lineup, dominated the Badgers with the running of Thompson and the passing and scrambling play of Schnell.

Thompson had 169 yards rushing in the first half as Indiana built a 14-0 lead. His longest gain, 47 yards, put the Hoosiers in position for another touchdown at the Wisconsin 6, but he fumbled the ball after being tackled.

Schnell, who scored in the second quarter on a 1-yard run, gained 32 yards in the third period and Indiana's first possession of the fourth quarter. That drive covered 56 yards, and four carries by Thompson put Indiana at the Badgers' 1 before Schnell ran in for his second touchdown and a 21-0 lead.

Iowa State 37, Missouri 14

COLUMBIA, Mo. — Iowa State backup quarterback Brett Sadek threw a 4-yard touchdown pass off a fake field goal and Alex Espinoza threw two touchdown passes as the Cyclones overcame four first half turnovers to beat Missouri.

Sadek took the snap late in the third quarter and rolled to his right to find Marcus Lester, who caught the ball after it was tipped by Tigers' defender Erik McMillan.

Espinoza threw a 21-yard touchdowns pass to Joe Henderson to give the Cyclones, 5-3 overall and 2-2 in the Big Eight, a 10-7 lead with 13:25 to go in the third quarter. The score came one play after Darrell Wallace fumbled and Chris Moore recovered.

Espinoza then threw an 8-yard scoring pass to Henderson with 9:55 left in the game. Henderson appeared stopped at the 5, but broke away from linebacker Terry Walker to stumble into the end zone.

Purdue 17, Northwestern 16

EVANSTON, Ill. — Jonathan Briggs' 25-yard field goal with four seconds to play Saturday lifted Purdue to a Big Ten victory over Northwestern, snapping a six-game losing streak for the Boilermakers.

Cincinnati 46, Indiana State 14

CINCINNATI — Reggie Taylor rushed for 148 yards and a touchdown to lead Cincinnati to a non-conference victory over Indiana State.

Taylor pushed his season rushing total to 1,068 yards, giving him 3 consecutive 1,000-yard seasons. He needs 15 yards to become the 27th player in NCAA history to run for 4,000 career yards.

Notre Dame 33, Navy 14

BALTIMORE — Steve Beuerline passed for two touchdowns and became Notre Dame's career total offense leader as the Irish thrashed injury-riddled and outclassed Navy.

Pernell Taylor added two rushing touchdowns for Notre Dame, 3-4, which posted its 23rd straight victory in the 60th renewal of the nation's longest continuous intersectional rivalry. The Irish lead the series 50-9-1.

Peete leads USC over Wildcats

TUCSON, Ariz. (AP) — Sophomore quarterback Rodney Peete threw two touchdown passes to lead No. 18 Southern California to a 20-13 Pacific-10 Conference football victory over turnover-plagued Arizona Saturday night.

Peete's 43-yard touchdown pass to junior split end Ken Henry with 1:28 left in the third quarter opened up a tight game and gave the Trojans a 17-6 advantage over the 14th-ranked Wildcats.

Peete also hit freshman tight end Scott Galbraith with a two-yard touchdown pass in the first quarter, and senior placekicker Don Schafer kicked field goals of 30 and 23 yards.

Arizona, which committed five turnovers, threatened to get back into the game in the fourth quarter when senior tailback David Adams scored on a 5-yard run with 6:28 left in the game. Arizona freshman placekicker Gary Coston also kicked two field goals to extend to 17 his school-record streak of successful field goals.

Southern Cal improved to 6-2 overall and 4-2 in the Pac-10 in keeping alive its hopes of winning a berth in the Rose Bowl. Arizona, suffering a crucial defeat in its bid for the league title, dropped to 6-2 overall and 3-2 in the league.

It was USC's fifth victory in six games over Arizona since the Wildcats joined the Pac-10 in 1978.

The Trojans took a 7-0 lead on their first series when Peete hit Galbreath with 7:55 left in the first quarter. Arizona cut the lead to 7-3 when Coston hit the first of his field goals, from 32 yards, with 2:15 left in the first period.

Arizona scored with nine seconds left in the half when Coston hit from 39 yards.

Arizona lost four fumbles and had a pass intercepted while USC lost two fumbles and a pass interception.

Tar Heels win in bizarre finish

Associated Press

CHAPEL HILL, N.C. — Lee Gliarmis kicked a 28-yard field goal as time expired Saturday and North Carolina pulled out a 32-30 victory over Maryland in a hectic finish to an Atlantic Coast Conference football game.

Gliarmis missed a 22-yard field goal on North Carolina's second possession, but his second kick sailed true and the Tar Heels snapped a four-game losing streak in the series.

Following the kick, Maryland coach Bobby Ross stormed off the field in pursuit of the referees, claiming North Carolina had no timeouts prior to Gliarmis' kick. The Tar Heels had a timeout, although the two stadium scoreboards indicated they had run out.

Mark Maye threw two touchdown passes and scored twice, including a 1-yard dive with 7:05 left to play as North Carolina took a 29-24 edge. The Tar Heels appeared to have the contest locked up when Dan Vooletich forced a Dan Henning fumble at midfield and Tim Goad recovered for North Carolina.

But after the Tar Heels failed to move the ball and punted to Maryland 12, Henning connected with James Milling on an 88-yard pass play with 2:19 left to give Maryland a 30-29 lead. The pass for a two-point conversion failed.

Clemson 28, Wake Forest 20

WINSTON-SALEM, N.C. — Terrence Flagler rushed for 209 yards and two touchdowns and caught passes for two more as Clemson beat Wake Forest in the ACC.

South

Flagler had scoring runs of 88 and 50 yards in the first half. He caught touchdown passes of 39 yards and 21 yards from Rodney Williams in the second half as the Tigers improved to 6-2, 4-1 in the ACC.

The Demon Deacons fell to 4-4 and 1-4 despite two touchdowns by halfback Darryl McGill. Flagler's first score came 2:16 into the first quarter and his 50-yard touchdown run with 1:57 left in the half made it 14-13.

Georgia Tech 34, Duke 6

ATLANTA — John Porter returned an interception 22 yards for a touchdown and reserve quarterback Darrell Gast threw for three more scores as Georgia Tech downed Duke in ACC action.

Porter's interception erased a 6-3 deficit. Tech put the game under control less than two and one-half minutes later when Gast fired a 21-yard touchdown strike to Tim Manion to provide a 17-6 lead with 10:59 left in the opening half.

Gast, filling in for starter Rick Strom — who went out with a neck sprain in the first half — then hit Jerry Mays with a 20-yard touchdown pass to cap a 62-yard drive with just under eight minutes to play.

The victory lifted Tech to 4-3-1 for the year and 3-2 in the ACC. The Blue Devils fell to 3-5 and 1-3.

Memphis St. 22, Vanderbilt 21

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — Memphis State running back Jeff Womack scored from 3 yards out with 3:20 remaining and quarterback Tim Jones scrambled into the end zone for a two-point conversion to lift the Tigers over Vanderbilt.

The victory was the first for the independent Tigers in their last 12 games and their first in eight outings this season. Vandy, of the SEC, fell to 1-7.

The winning points came after Jones directed the Tigers 90 yards in 18 plays. The drive was kept alive by a 6-yard run by Gerald White on a fourth-and-one play from the Vandy 34 and a 15-yard completion from Jones to Womack on a third-and-12 play from the Commodore 20.

S. Mississippi 23, E. Carolina 21

Prior to that kick, East Carolina, 1-8, had gone ahead with a 20-yard pass from Charlie Libretto to Walter Wilson with eight seconds left. Libretto's pass to Jarrod Moody for the two-point conversion gave the Pirates a 21-20 lead.

After fair catching the ensuing kickoff at the 18-yard line, Golden Eagle quarterback Andrew Anderson threw a 72-yard pass to Lyneal Alston that put the ball on the Pirate 10-yard line as time ran out. However, referees ruled that Alston had made a forward lateral and was flagged for a 5-yard penalty, enabling Banks' winning kick.

Georgia 28, Richmond 13

ATHENS, Ga. — Lars Tate scored all four Georgia touchdowns as the Bulldogs came alive in the second half to down the Division 1-AA Richmond Spiders.

Tate, whose four TDs equalled a school record, scored his first on a 7-yard run late in the first period for a 7-0 lead.

Virginia Tech 17, Kentucky 15

Kinzer's field goal came after the Hokies drove the ball drove the ball from their own 5-yard line in about 4 minutes. It was Kinzer's 16th straight field goal.

William & Mary 41, Virginia 37

CHARLOTTESVILLE, Va. — William & Mary's Ken Lambiotte threw three touchdown passes and ran for two more scores as the Indians, the 10th-ranked Division I-AA football team, posted a win over Virginia's Cavaliers.

Lambiotte ran for two scores and tossed one of his touchdown passes after intermission as the Indians broke a 17-17 halftime tie en route to their seventh win in eight games this year.

TECH

its best offensive drive of the half. Braggs returned 20 yards and a personal foul put the ball on the Tech 37.

Running back Edwin Simmons, who drew crowds all afternoon, caught a screen pass for a loss but was mobbed by the Raiders, resulting in another 15-yard penalty to put Texas on the 25. Then a five-yard penalty moved the ball to the 20 from where Stafford scrambled in on a busted pass play.

BY NOW the Tech fans in the crowd of 44,820 on this gloomy, misty day began to suspect this might be the same old Texas story. But there was no buckling for the Raiders this time, although Texas made a valiant and inspiring come back.

As it turned out the three final half field goals of 24, 38 and 28 yards proved the difference.

"I dreamed that I would beat Texas with a last second field goal instead of Ward beating us," said Segrist. It didn't come out quite that way, but Segrist wasn't complaining.

Despite the steady drizzle, slippery turf and playful wind that seemed to be coming out of the east and southeast at the same time, Segrist had no complaints about kicking conditions.

"The second field goal split the uprights and then veered sharply to the right," said Segrist. "That's the kind of a day it was."

Late in the first half, Tech eschwed a field goal attempt of 52 yards into the wind and punted. "I think I could have made it," Segrist responded to the hypothetical. "I've kicked 60 yarders into the wind."

BEATING his alma mater and the team for whom he had coached 14 years had to be a special thrill for McWilliams. "However, when I saw the tears in their eyes after it was over, I could feel for them, too."

And during the comeback did the specter of Ward, who kicked two field goals in the last two minutes to beat Tech here two years ago, worry him? "I didn't think about that game, but No. 23 crossed my mind. He's done it for Texas so many times."

However, unlike a week ago when Ward's field goal beat SMU in the final 16 seconds, Stafford was never able to get the Longhorns close enough for another miracle finish.

And in view of the rumors about McWilliams as a possible replacement for Akers, should a change be made at Austin, Tolliver answered for the Raiders, "I don't think he will go. This win puts us 5-3 and we could be 8-3 by the season's end, if we play up to our capabilities, and that would let us vote on the bowl we'd go to."

But what if....? "And if Coach McWilliams did go, we'd just have to beat him."

Stafford, forced to throw as the game wore on, completed 19 of 42 passes for 249 yards with two interceptions and two touchdowns. Tolliver was 7-for-17 and 128 yards, mostly in the first half. At halftime, "We told them to calm down, eliminate the penalties, eliminate the turnovers and run the ball and run the clock," McWilliams said. "When you do that, you get conservative" perhaps one reason the Horns rallied, but perhaps also the reason they didn't get any cheapies.

Dr. J will call it quits

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — The hurt in the eyes of his four children convinced Julius Erving to end one of the brightest careers in the history of professional basketball.

Erving, who will be 37 in February, announced Friday night he is retiring after this season.

"With each passing day, I could see the effect it had on the kids," Erving said of the game that requires long periods away from home.

Erving said the desire to spend time with his wife, Turquoise, and their children, and to pay more attention to his business were the main reasons for his retirement.

The ability to perform in the style fans have come to expect from the player known as Dr. J, also was a big factor.

Erving is determined to go out on top. He wants to be remembered for his sky walks through the foul lane, his slam dunks, body control, moves that defied description.

He didn't want to become bench ballast, a guy hanging on by his reputation. The prospect of some day being waived and possibly released boggled his mind.

Erving slipped below his 20 plus scoring average through 15 years for the first time last season, but still finished third on the team with 17.9.

Arkansas airs out Rice

FAYETTEVILLE, Ark. (AP) — The University of Arkansas chalked up more yardage on the ground, but the key to the 13th-ranked Razorbacks' 45-14 victory over Rice on Saturday was their early success through the air.

Quarterback Greg Thomas riddled the Rice defense for 152 yards in the first quarter, completing five of six passes, including a 77-yard toss to split end Donnie Centers for the Razorbacks' second touchdown.

The Arkansas coaching staff decided to throw early after spotting a flaw in the Owls' secondary. "Their cornerbacks were crowding our receivers and we thought we could beat them deep," Arkansas Coach Ken Hatfield said.

The Razorbacks' first two plays were passes. Hatfield said the coaching staff had done that before, but not since arriving at Arkansas three years ago.

Thomas, who had completed only seven of 14 passes since suffering a wrist injury against Texas Tech three weeks ago, finished with seven of 12 for 177 yards as Arkansas upped its record to 7-1 and 4-1 in the Southwest Conference. Rice dropped to 2-6 and 1-5.

Arkansas scored on each of its first four possessions.

Joe Johnson's 1-yard touchdown run with 9:44 remaining in the first quarter ended a 13-play, 80-yard drive that included six first downs on the first eight plays. Thomas completed three of four in the drive. Johnson added two short touchdown runs in the second half.

ended with Tony Darthard's 5-yard run with 6:52 to go in the half.

TCU took a 14-0 lead early in the third quarter on a 45-yard touchdown run by sophomore Roscoe Tatum before Houston rallied with touchdowns passes of 26 and 65 yards from Davis to Jet Brown.

Darthard took a pitch from quarterback David Rascoe and dove into the end zone as he was hit on both sides by Houston's Randy Thornton and Gary McGuire.

Houston dropped to a 1-7 overall record and a last place 0-5 in the SWC. TCU now is 3-5 and 1-4.

Orangemen rally to beat Panthers

Associated Press

SYRACUSE, N.Y. — Senior Scott Schwedes caught a 2-yard touchdown pass from a scrambling Don McPherson midway through the final quarter as Syracuse rallied three times and claimed a 24-20 college football victory over Eastern rival Pittsburgh Saturday.

Schwedes' leaping catch in the corner of the end zone with 8:46 to play was his second touchdown reception of the afternoon and lifted the Orangemen, 3-5, to their second win in as many weeks.

McPherson, who connected with Schwedes for an 11-yard scoring strike in the second quarter, also tossed a 27-yard touchdown pass to Tommy Kane.

Syracuse's defense contributed to the win with five quarterback sacks, three interceptions and a fumble recovery as the Orangemen survived two safeties and a lethargic offensive performance in the opening half.

Pitt, which fell to 4-3-1, opened an 10-0 advantage by blocking a punt for a safety in the first quarter, and then getting another two points in the second period when Syracuse punter Tim Fox had to step out of his own end zone after receiving a high snap from center. Pitt added a second blocked punt in the third quarter.

East

Boston College 27, Army 20

WEST POINT, N.Y. — Brian Lowe kicked four field goals for the second game in a row and tailback Troy Stradford ran for a personal-record 240 yards as Boston College defeated Army.

Defensive end Eric Lindstrom starred defensively for the Eagles, 5-3, as he recovered three fumbles during the sloppy contest. In all, the teams fumbled 10 times.

Lindstrom's first recovery, of a Bill Kim fumble at the Boston College goal line in the last minute of the first half, took away an almost certain Cadet score. His third recovery, of a fumble by Army quarterback Tory Crawford at the Cadet 17, set up the winning score.

New Hampshire 28, Rhode Island 24

DURHAM, N.H. — Freshman tailback Norm Ford rushed for 129 yards, his fourth consecutive 100-yard game, leading New Hampshire to a Yankee Confernce win over Rhode Island.

Ford also scored two touchdowns as the Wildcats recovered from a 24-7 deficit. New Hampshire, which has won its last seven games to improve its record to 7-1, recorded its fifth second-half shutout of the season. Rhode Island fell to 0-8.

Penn 23, Princeton 10

PRINCETON, N.J. — Jim Crocicchia tossed a 10-yard touchdown pass and Chris Flynn scored two touchdowns as undefeated Penn struggled to its seventh straight victory with a decision over Princeton.

The 7-0 start is the best for the Quakers since 1924, but the victory did not come easy against the 2-5 Tigers. Penn's last undefeated season was in 1904. Princeton is 2-3.

Brown 31, Harvard 19

BOSTON — Mark Donovan, who scored one touchdown and passed for three, found tight end Pete Zidlicky for a 66-yard, fourth-quarter scoring pass to cap a comeback Ivy League victory for Brown over Harvard.

With Brown, 4-3, trailing 14-10 after the half, Donovan scrambled for a 9-yard touchdown midway through the third quarter to put the Bruins ahead 17-14. Brown cornerback Scott McCaleb set up the drive by recovering Mike Madden's fumble on punt return.

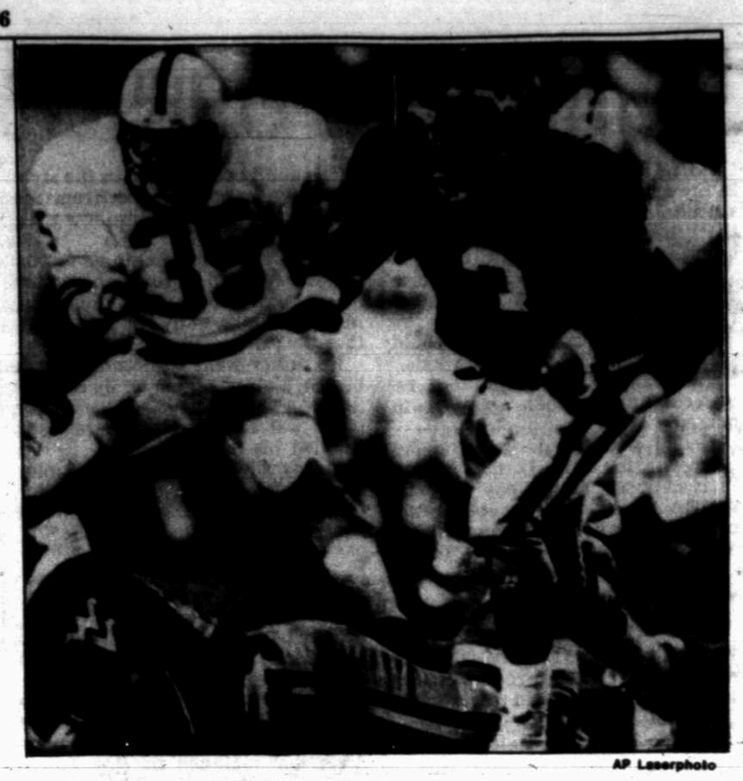

Villanova 42, Columbia 34

NEW YORK — Freshman quarterback Kirk Schulz triggered a 28-point third quarter with three touchdown passes as Villanova rallied for a victory over Columbia, sending the Lions to their 28th straight defeat.

Rutgers 41, Louisville 0

LOUISVILLE, Ky. — The Rutgers defense forced four fumbles that led to scores and quarterback Scott Erney passed for four touchdowns in a victory over Louisville.

Rutgers, 5-2-1, converted the four turnovers into three TDs and a field goal. Lineman Harry Swayne led the way with two fumble recoveries. Louisville, 2-6, suffered its fourth straight loss as the Cardinals lost 38 yards rushing and gave up the ball three times inside the Rutgers 35 yard line.

Muster blasts 277 yards to rip Washington State

Associated Press

STANFORD, Calif. — Brad Muster gained 277 yards rushing and receiving, scored two touchdowns and broke a 61-year-old Stanford record with 36 carries to lead the Cardinal's 42-12 romp Saturday over Washington State.

Stanford quarterback John Paye also ran for a pair of TDs and threw for another to Jeff James while completing 17 of 25 passes for 214 yards as the Cardinal boosted their record to 6-2 overall and 3-2 in the Pacific-10.

The Cougars, 3-4-1 overall and 2-3-1 in the conference, were completely dominated by Muster, who had 184 yards rushing and 93 yards on catches while breaking the Stanford record of 34 carries set by Ernie Nevers in the 1925 Rose Bowl.

Reminiscent of its wild 49-42 victory over Stanford two years ago when WSU trailed 28-7 at halftime and 42-14 late in the third period, WSU dug itself a 28-0 hole in the first half and tried to crawl out. This time, though, the Cougars stayed in the hole.

The Cougars managed only two first downs in the first half to Stanford's 20 but scored quickly in third quarter on Kerry Porter's 2-yard run after a 60-yard pass to wide receiver Tim Stallworth.

West

Hawaii 33, Utah 13

SALT LAKE CITY — Gregg Pipton passed for 220 yards and two touchdowns to lead Hawaii to a 33-13 victory over Utah in the WAC.

Pipton threw touchdown passes to Danny Crowell in the second quarter and Marco Johnson in the fourth. Hawaii's other scores came on a 10-yard run by Heikoti Fakava and a 20-yard sprint by Billy Stephens. Rod Valverde added a 37-yard field goal for the winners, who also picked up a safety for first score of the game.

Utah's scoring came on a 15-yard pass from Larry Egger to Craig McEwen and a 5-yard pass to Carl Harry. Ute Eddie Johnson was the leading rusher with 165 yards on 22 carries.

The victory gives the Rainbows a 3-2 conference record and a 5-2 mark for the year. The loss left Utah 0-5 in the WAC and 0-7 on the season.

Oregon 27, California 9

BERKELEY, Calif. — Chris Miller ran for two touchdowns, the first immediately after breaking Oregon's career record for passing yardage, and also threw a TD pass, leading the Ducks to a Pac-10 victory over California.

Long Beach State 14, Utah State 3

Long Beach fullback Mark Templeton had 18 receptions for 173 yards to break the existing PCAA record of 17 receptions. Templeton now ranks third in the nation for pass receptions.

Oklahoma 64, Kansas 3

LAWRENCE, Kan. — Earl Johnson scored three of his four touchdowns amid a 37-point third quarter explosion that propelled fourth-ranked Oklahoma to a swamping of Kansas.

Johnson scored on runs of 7, 24, 55 and 3 yards as the Sooners avenged a 28-11 loss here two years ago by dishing out the second-worst defeat in Kansas' 86-year football history. Only a 51-yard field goal by Mac Smith in the fourth period kept Oklahoma from posting its third straight shutout.

Florida 18, Auburn 17

GAINESVILLE, Fla. — Kerwin Bell tossed a 5-yard touchdown pass to Ricky Nattiel with 36 seconds remaining and then scrambled for a two-point conversion that capped an 18-point fourth-quarter rally to carry Florida to an upset of fifth-ranked Auburn.

Bell, a junior quarterback returning from a knee injury that had sidelined him the previous two games, came off the bench to rescue the Gators after starter Rodney Brewer lost two fumbles and was intercepted twice in the first half.

5

The victory improved Florida's record to 4-4 overall, 1-3 in the Southeastern Conference. It also halted a seven-game winning streak for previously unbeaten Auburn, 7-1, and 4-1, and knocked the Tigers out of a first-place tie in the SEC.

Alabama 38, Mississippi St. 3

STARKVILLE, Miss. — Sophomore halfback Bobby Humphrey rushed for a school-record 284 yards and three touchdowns as eighth-ranked Alabama routed No. 19 Mississippi State to stay unbeaten in the SEC.

Humphrey scored on runs of 4, 20 and 9 yards in shattering the one-game rushing mark of 233 yards set by Bobby Marlow against Auburn in 1951. Humphrey carried the ball 30 times.

Alabama, which totaled 514 yards on the ground, reeled off touchdown marches of 78, 88 and 47 yards in the first quarter alone — without throwing a pass. Humphrey had 93 yards in 10 carries.

The 6-1, 187-pound Humphrey, the conference's No. 2 rusher, left early in the fourth quarter after his 50-yard run to the Mississippi State 3 set up the Tide's fifth touchdown.

Nebraska 38, Kansas St. 0

LINCOLN, Neb. — Quarterback Steve Taylor ran for two touchdowns and threw for another to lead ninth-ranked Nebraska to a Big Eight victory over Kansas State.

Nebraska, 7-1, scored on its first three possessions before heavy snows made footing difficult. I-back Keith Jones scored from two yards out on the Cornhuskers' first possession, Taylor ran 14 yards for a second Nebraska TD less than three minutes later and Dale Klein kicked a 26-yard field goal with 3:55 left in the first quarter.

9

Kansas State, 2-6 and 1-3, failed to mount a first-half drive and missed a 27-yard field goal after recovering a Nebraska fumble at the NU 15 late in the first quarter.

Ohio St. 31, Iowa 10

IOWA CITY, Iowa — Cris Carter caught a 72-yard touchdown pass from Jim Karsatos to ignite a 21-point second quarter that carried 17th-ranked Ohio State to a resounding upset of No. 11 Iowa in the Big Ten.

The three-touchdown burst in the first nine minutes of the period wiped out a 7-0 Iowa lead and kept the surging Buckeyes tied with Michigan for first place in the conference at 5-0.

Iowa, the defending Big Ten champion, fell two games back of the leaders at 3-2 with only three weeks left in the season, and is 6-2 overall.

Carter's touchdown pulled Ohio State into a 7-7 tie with 12 minutes, 14 seconds left in the second quarter. He caught the third-down pass at midfield, spun around twice to escape the grasp of cornerback Ken Sims and sped to the end zone.

Ohio State drove 48 yards in only four plays to get its next touchdown, a 9-yard run by fullback George Cooper at the 9:50 mark. Less than four minutes later, Ohio State cornerback Greg Rogan plucked Richard Bass' fumble out of the air and ran 31 yards for a touchdown and a 21-7 Buckeye lead.

Mississippi 21, LSU 19

BATON ROUGE, La. — Sophomore quarterback Mark Young passed for 171 yards and ran for a touchdown as Mississippi upset 12th-ranked Louisiana State and won its first SEC game in Tiger Stadium in 18 years.

The victory by Ole Miss offset a splendid performance by LSU freshman David Browndyke, who tied a school record with four field goals but missed two in the fourth quarter that would have won it for the Tigers.

LSU fans' enthusiasm for the 75-year-old rivalry backfired in a key reversal early in the second quarter when crowd noise on a crucial Ole Miss fourth-and-one prompted an on-side penalty against LSU.

The penalty set up a 5-yard touchdown run by Tony Dentley four plays later that gave the Rebels a 14-6 lead from which LSU never recovered.

Browndyke, starting in only his second game, contributed most of LSU's points with field goals of 52, 40, 31 and 21 yards. But he also missed from 52 and 30 yards as LSU blew three scoring opportunities in the final period.

UCLA 49, Oregon State 0

PORTLAND, Ore. — UCLA intercepted eight passes, including three each by Craig Rutledge and Darryl Henley, as the 15th-ranked Bruins romped to a Pac-10 victory over mistake-prone Oregon State.

The Bruins, 6-2 overall and 4-1 in the Pac-10, returned two of their interceptions for touchdowns and recovered two Oregon State fumbles in the contest.

Rutledge picked off one pass and went 46 yards for a score and Alan Dial intercepted another at the goal line and raced 100 yards for a touchdown during a 21-point third-quarter outburst.

UCLA also got scoring runs of 24 yards and one yard from James Primus and a 33-yard touchdown pass from Matt Stevens to Willie Anderson. UCLA's Gaston Green carried the ball 21 times for 123 yards while playing less than three quarters.

N. C. State 23, S. Carolina 22

RALEIGH, N.C. — Erik Kramer completed a desperation 33-yard touchdown pass to Danny Peebles in a crowd of defenders in the end zone on the final play of the game to give No. 16 North Carolina State a victory over South Carolina.

The Wolfpack, 6-1-1, appeared beaten with seconds left when South Carolina swarmed Kramer under. But the Gamecocks, 2-5-1, were called for being offside to set up the final play.

N.C. State turned three first-half interceptions into two touchdowns and a field goal to take a 17-3 halftime lead. But Todd Ellis, who became South Carolina's most prolific passer, threw for 74 yards in the third quarter as the Gamecocks outscored the Wolfpack 13-0.

Ellis hit Sterling Sharpe on an 8-yard scoring strike at the 9:14 mark and set up two field goals. Scott Hagler booted a 45-yarder at the 14:03 mark.

Giants red over Cowboy losses

Associated Press

The way the New York Giants see it, they should have three straight victories over the Dallas Cowboys instead of three straight losses. The way Dallas Coach Tom Landry sees it, those three losses may have the Giants psyched out.

"There could be some doubt in their minds because of the way they lost." Landry says. "Maybe it's an edge."

The Giants-Cowboy game at Giants Stadium opens the second half of the NFC East race with New York, Dallas and the Washington Redskins tied at 6-2.

"Three teams that have to start all over," is the way New York Coach Bill Parcells put it.

Unlike Landry, Parcells would prefer to forget the last three games the two have played — the two last year and the opening Monday night this year.

The Giants lost one because quarterback Phil Simms fumbled a snap from center Bart Oates to set up the game-winning field goal; the second on a deflected pass by Simms, and this year's because the otherwise impregnable New York defense allowed the Cowboys to drive 81 yards in the final 1:41.

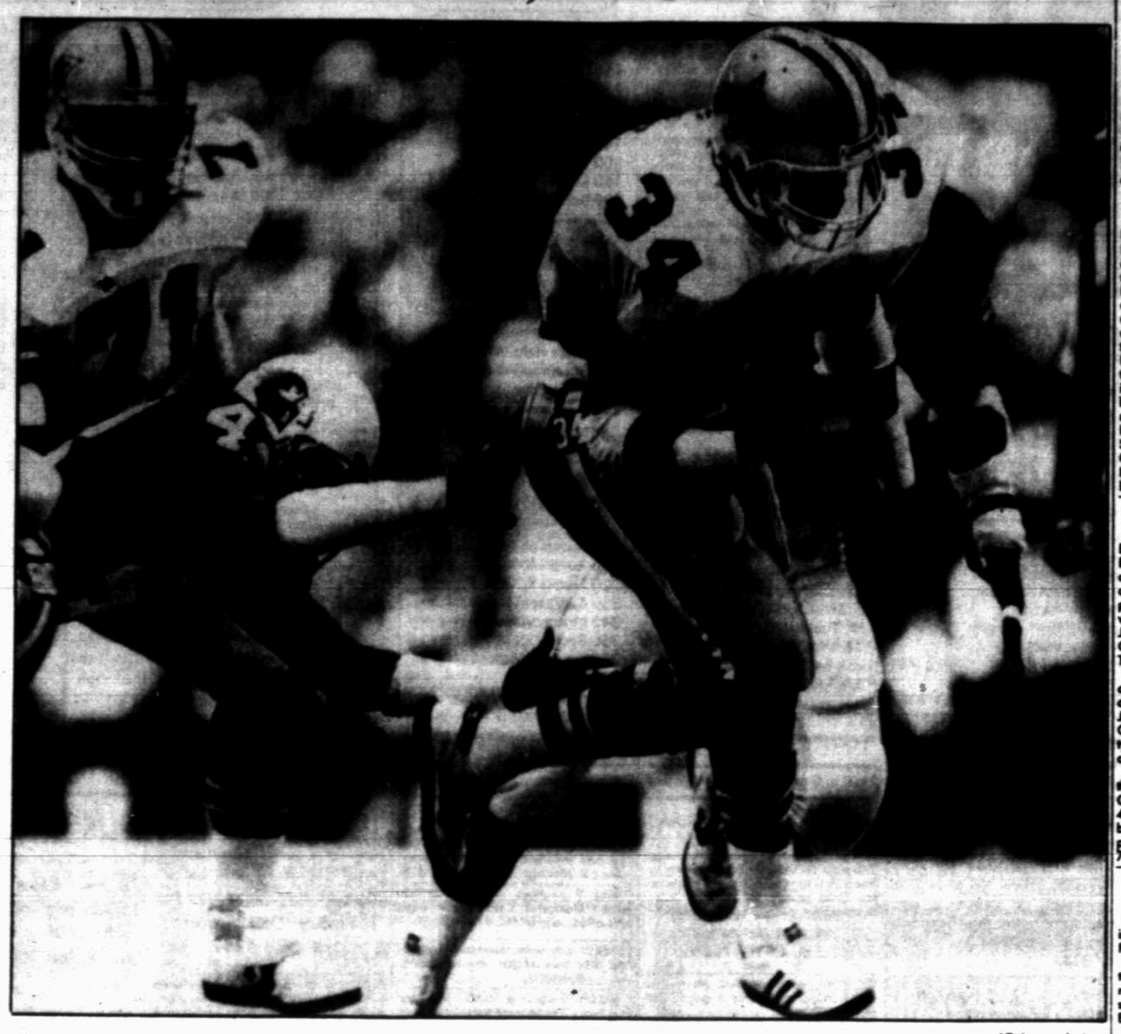

THAT GAME accents what may happen Sunday.

The Cowboys won 31-28, one of six times in eight games this year they've scored more than 30 points. The Giants haven't given up more than 20 points since and have won six of seven.

That sets up a classic matchup between the New York defense, first in the league against the run, and the Dallas offense, which will have running backs Tony Dorsett and Herschel Walker operating at close to full speed.

"I'll be there," said Dorsett, who has been hampered all year with knee and ankle injuries and who sat out last week's 37-6 victory over St. Louis to get ready for the Giants.

"I wanted to be ready come crunch time," Dorsett said.

Herschel Walker busts into the St. Louis secondary last week. This week the Cowboys return to full force at tailback against the Giants as Tony Dorsett shall return to face the stout New York defense.

NFL Roundup

The Los Angeles Rams are at Chicago Monday night.

NFL Capsules

Rams (6-2) at Chicago (7-1)

This is a replay of last year's NFC title game, won by the Bears, 24-0. That score says a lot. The Bears, who edged Detroit 13-7 last week, have made a habit of playing tough against the tougher teams.

Is armless Los Angeles tough? They're last in the league with an average of 117.6 passing yards a game and Coach John Robinson is talking about replacing Steve Bartkowski at quarterback with Steve Dils, who moves a little better.

But Dils or Bartkowski will only be there to hand the ball to running back Eric Dickerson, who with 1,030 yards is close to his record-breaking pace of two years ago. Unless Dickerson breaks loose for 150 yards or more, it will be tough for the Rams, particularly since the Bears are as healthy as they've been all year.

Denver (7-1) at Los Angeles Raiders (5-3)

These teams opened the season with an improbable 38-36 shootout in Denver, the first of three straight losses for the Raiders to start the season. Now the Raiders have won five straight and one more would put Los Angeles squarely into the AFC West race.

Marcus Allen was held out of last week's 28-17 victory over Houston, but does it matter? Allen has carried 89 times for 353 yards and his replacement, Ens. Napoleon McCallum, is 89 for 353.

Another thing about the Raiders. Marc Wilson, who threw for 346 yards and three touchdowns in the first game, is quietly having a decent year — 11 touchdowns and just seven interceptions so far.

Minnesota (5-3) at Washington (6-2)

After victories over the last two Super Bowl winners, the Vikings were brought down to earth last Sunday by Cleveland, primarily because punter Greg Coleman was forced to sit out the game with a groin pull. Coleman should be back Sunday, but punting may be the least of Minnesota's problems.

The Redskins lost to the Giants 27-20 Monday night but since Joe Gibbs has been coach, Washington is 8-0 on Sundays following Monday night games.

Moreover, nobody seems broken up about the road loss — it's more like the Giants held serve in the three-way home-away NFC East tennis game. "It's not like the world has caved in," safety Curtis Jordan said. "We're looking forward to the challenge ahead."

Atlanta (5-2-1) at New England (5-3)

This may be the turning point of the season for both teams — the Patriots have to maintain contact with the Jets and the Falcons with the Rams and 49ers.

New England has allowed a total of three points the last two weeks, beating Pittsburgh and Buffalo by a combined 57-3. The sputtering Atlanta offense can't do much more than either of those but the defense can, which probably means not much scoring.

New York Jets (7-1) at Seattle (5-3)

The Seahawks are favored because the game is in the Kingdome, where they rarely lose and because they hold the edge in one of the NFL's most lopsided series.

The Jets won 17-14 last year in the Meadowlands, their first victory ever in eight tries against the Seahawks, who have outscored them 175-94 since the first game in 1977.

Seattle Coach Chuck Knox will start Gale Gilbert at quarterback in place of Dave Krieg, who threw for just 26 yards in last week's 20-13 loss to Denver.

But the Seahawks will probably prefer to stay on the ground against a defense with an injured core — inside linebacker Lance Mehl and nose tackle Joe Klecko. Mehl is gone for the season and Klecko is likely to sit out this week.

Kansas City (5-3) at San Diego (1-7)

The new coach factor might work here for the Chargers — the guys who didn't win for Don Coryell now must begin to impress Al Saunders. But it will be hard with Tom Flick and Bruce Mathison as the quarterbacks in place of the injured Dan Fouts and Mark Herrman.

The Chargers' futility was exemplified when these teams met in Kansas City two weeks ago. They outgained the Chiefs 512-222 and lost 42-41 because Kansas City returned two interceptions and a fumble for touchdowns and Rolf Benirschke missed a 35-yard field goal at the game's end.

Houston (1-7) at Miami (3-5)

Miami Coach Don Shula talks of the playoffs, noting that a victory would put the Dolphins only a game behind where they were after nine games last year.

What would be meaningless bluster from anyone else has a certain ring from Shula. But two victories over Indianapolis and one over Buffalo do not a contender make, particularly for a team that barely hung on to beat the Colts 17-13 last week.

Houston? Jerry Glanville talks about replacing quarterback Warren Moon with Oliver Luck if things go badly. Things have gone badly since the first week, so Luck may be the man.

San Francisco (5-2-1) at New Orleans (3-5)

This could be a problem for the 49ers, who won the first meeting 26-17 but now must start third-stringer Mike Moroski at quarterback. San Francisco is limping en masse — Jeff Kemp and Ronnie Lott, two of their most important players this year, are the latest casualties.

Jim Mora has turned the Saints into one of the better teams in the NFL's second echelon. "They play a very challenging, aggressive type of defense," says 49ers Coach Bill Walsh.

Cincinnati (5-3) at Detroit (3-5)

If these teams switched divisions, their records might be reversed. Their styles certainly are — the flashy Bengals against the stodgy Lions, but stodgy may work with Detroit back in the Silverdome after a three-game road trip.

"You see Marino, or Montana, or Elway, or Fouts and everybody wants your quarterback to be like that," he says. "We'd like our quarterback to be like that too, but you play with what you have. Our quarterback does not do those things, so we use what he does best."

Cleveland (5-3) at Indianapolis (0-8)

The Browns must remember they were knocked off at home two weeks ago by winless Green Bay.

"Indianapolis is a better team than Green Bay," says Coach Marty Schottenheimer, whose team climbed back into a tie for first in the AFC Central last week by beating the Vikings. "They play very hard on every play. We certainly are going in with our eyes open."

One angle: Curtis Dickey, cast off by the Colts last year, ran for 106 yards in Cleveland's 23-20 victory last week. "Nothing Curtis does would surprise me," Colts Coach Rod Dowhower says. "That's all I'll say."

Philadelphia (3-5) at St. Louis (1-7)

These are Nos. 4 and 5 in a three-team NFC East race, but No. 4, the Eagles, has shown a lot more than No. 5.

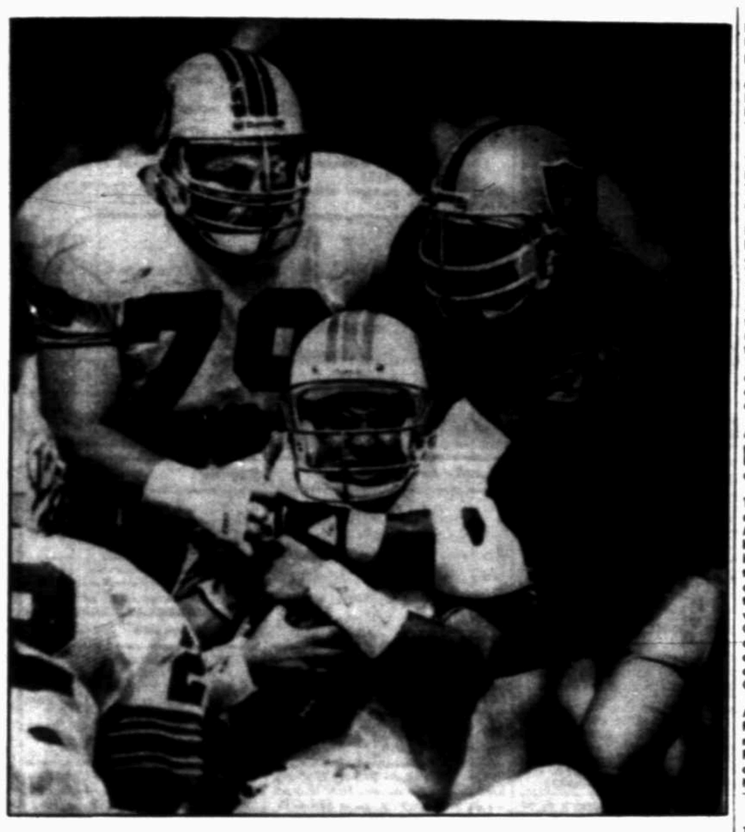

This is quarterback switching time for losing teams. The Eagles' Buddy Ryan has been hinting that he may replace Ron Jaworki with Randall Cunningham instead of just on third-and-long situations and Gene Stallings is suggesting that Neil Lomax may soon give way to Cliff Stoudt for the Cards.

Buffalo (2-6) at Tampa Bay (1-7)

The USFL Alumni Association might like to tailgate before this one, which features two quarterbacks who were made millionaires by the dormant league — Jim Kelly of the Bills and Steve Young of the Bucs.

Green Bay (1-7) at Pittsburgh (2-6)

As Dick Enberg might say, "Oh, my!" Two once-proud franchises at the other end of the spectrum, although last week's 30-9 romp over Cincinnati might have revived the Steelers.

AP Laserphoto

The New Sophisticates

That lady's at the door in her big fuzzy house shoes and a sloppy pink robe, dotted with ashes from the cigarette which hangs out of her mouth. The chihuahua in her arms is squirming. Her curlers are dangling down and she wants to know, "Where's the rent?"

There has been an evolution in property ownership. Years ago commercial buildings were owned by "Mom and Pop" and maybe a couple of their friends. The management of these properties could be handled by the owners. It could be a real down home operation.

As more and more big conglomerates have assumed the ownership of commercial buildings, a new professional field has emerged - commercial property management.

Whether the building ownership retains the management responsibilities or an outside company is called in, "It's becoming a real sophisticated asset management field," Lewis said.

He went on to say that the profession is attracting sophisticated people, like those you expect to see in accounting and brokerage firms.

MANAGEMENT

Management is also becoming an issue with tenants. Already government offices and large companies check a management company's references before leasing space. "Tenants in Midland aren't as cognizant of the importance of the management company, but I think they are becoming cognizant of that," Lewis commented.

As property management booms and becomes more and more sophisticated, there's one up-and-coming company in Midland which is sure to get its share of the market or more. That's Mike Lewis and Associates, a five-month-old company.

Yes, while many companies were backing off because of the ravished oil economy, Lewis and his associates decided, "Now is the ideal time (to start the firm). If we can survive the real estate market now, then we'll survive anytime," Lewis said.

Mike Lewis, Steve McGuire and Don Davis are the core of the company, they say is the only independent commercial property management company in Midland. Still in its infancy, this firm already has its signs scattered all over Midland, Texas. All in all, they're responsible for managing 10 properties (nine in Midland, one in Big Spring).

A close-up look at this company reveals the dynamics of commercial property management, in general. Property management has three primary dimensions: ownership relations (Lewis' specialty), leasing (McGuire's area of expertise) and operations management (Davis' responsibility).

While Mike Lewis and Associates is a typical commercial property management firm in regard to the services they offer, the company is anything but typical in the way they do business.

Within the last 60 days, the firm has turned down the opportunity to manage three to four properties, McGuire said.

Actions like this may seem contrary to business, Lewis commented. Their objective, he explained, is to establish a track record of integrity and to do that, "we must control what we're doing. We won't make a trade off (business for loss of integrity)."

So while owners are busy qualifying management companies, Mike Lewis and Associates is carefully qualifying its owners and properties. Lewis said ownership of the property is their first consideration. If it's a syndication that's fueled solely on tax incentives or a company with a poor payment record, this new management company won't be handling it.

Secondly, the property itself is studied. If it is directly competitive with another property already handled by Mike Lewis and Associates, it will be skipped over. This is to assure that there is no conflict of interest, which would concern owners. This is also the reason that the management company won't own part of its portfolio, like most firms do.

A third consideration is can the firm "provide intense management" for the particular property? "We don't have aspirations at all of ever being a big management company... Big management firms try to operate (efficiently), but what they do is loose sight of day-to-day needs... I don't want to be the GM of property management. I'd rather be the Mercedes," Lewis said.

How many properties can they handle and still maintain that intensity? How large a geographical area can they cover and not sacrifice this standard? The three men agree that they just don't know. This is a big concern to them.

If, however, a valued client requested that they accept a property outside of Midland/Odessa/Big Spring, Lewis said, they'd probably accept the job. Lewis, McGuire and Davis hope to avoid the big property management company syndrome by personally getting the property in order and then recruiting local talent to continue the daily operations.

So, who are Mike Lewis and Associates' clients? The company primarily handles properties for lenders and insurance companies. Ninety percent of their portfolio is comprised of Fortune 500 companies.

There are nine retail and/or office properties scattered across Midland and one property located in Big Spring in their portfolio. Many of these, Lewis said, they brought with them from the local branch office he had opened previously for Sentry Property Management of Lubbock.

Not all the properties this company manages are distressed, but Lewis said that's their specialty. "Almost every property in Midland/Odessa could fall into that category (distressed) because of the economy and the amount of space on the market," he added.

Though Davis said, "We saw a strong 20 percent increase in occupancy" in the last year, no such increase is anticipated for 1987.

McGuire explained that last year the leasing was good from January to June. This, he categorized as "positive absorption," where companies were moving to adjust for decreased need for office space.

"I think the people that have had the intention to move have moved... Now, everybody's holding their breath," McGuire added.

Lewis said, because of this, they are looking at their 1986 year end occupancy rate and hoping to hold it in 1987. "We hope to remember 1987 as the year of stability," he said.

That doesn't mean Mike Lewis and Associates will just be sitting around waiting for the price of oil to rebound. McGuire explained that productivity in leasing may be dropping off, but his effort is increasing.

Lewis summed it up this way, "Whatever activity there is, we're gonna get our share of it or more."

This they plan to do by keeping the ownership informed about the realities in the Permian Basin and working with the owners to adjust rates and find other creative leasing tools.

In the long run, Lewis is more optimistic. "The Permian Basin goes down fast, but it's got so much vitality and it can come back... We're getting ready for the repair and resurrection of this area... I don't think the (oil) industry can be allowed to degrade itself for an extended time," he said, pointing out national security concerns.

Yesteryear inspires new look in decor

The stark look of white-washed walls and simple blinds has given way to a new softeness in decor. The flowing draperies, decorative valances, patterned walls and pastel colors of the past are with us once again.

Patterns are nostalgically traditional, harking back to those that have stood the test of time. "The country sophistication of historic homes works just as well today, even in city apartments," says John Leigh Spath, director of design at Albert Van Luit & Co. whose new collection of wallcoverings and matching fabrics was inspired by the 17th and 18th century fabrics in the Winterthur Museum in Delaware.

They include patterns used to decorate landed estates during the Colonial and Federal periods of American history when wallpapers and fabrics were often imported from Europe. In Van Luit's Winterthur Collection there are large-scale exotic florals with Oriental overtones, handsome English chintzes and tiny stylized florals popular in France — all of them historic patterns that retain their strong appeal over time.

With the return of finishing touches, interior designers are happily adding ornamentation to enhance the romantic look. windows are being framed in generous billows of draperies and balloon shades, topped with deep-pleated balances and trimmed with ruffles and ruching. Many window draperies are being made so that they "puddle" on the floor in an elegant extra-length over-florw of fabric.

Adding that special finishing touch are borders. They are being used to create decorative wainscotting effects or to outline floors and ceilings.

The pink flamingo is back in the yard

By KEN FRANCKLING
UPI Feature Writer

BOSTON (UPI) — The pink flamingo, for three decades the most loved, hated and joked-about lawn ornament, is flying high again.

This cheap, plastic symbol of 1950s Americana has found new friends as a nostalgia item for the Big Chill generation.

"For a while, the pink flamingo was an endangered plastic species," said its creator, Don Featherstone. "It no longer is. Now it is the status symbol of a new generation, and they're coming back into the front yard again."

The pink birds are also coming into the house and spawning an array of interior offspring that range from wall clocks to night lights.

The original flamingo craze started in the 1940s when Florida, the home of the real thing, became a popular vacation spot for tourists. The Florida theme inspired shower curtains, decals and one-dimensional lawn ornaments.

In 1957, Featherstone, then a 21-year-old art student, put the flamingo on the cutting edge of outdoor decor when he designed a three-dimensional lawn ornament for Union Products Inc., of nearby Fitchburg, Mass.

Union, a major manufacturer of plastic lawn ornaments, sold 80,000 of the hot pink birds in 1976. It sold 190,000 in 1985 and has sold about 250,000 so far this year. Featherstone and Union have been laughing all the way to the bank.

"I still say that eight percent are bought by people who are playing jokes and having fun, but 92 percent are bought by the little old lady with the garden," Featherstone said.

The undisputed king of the flamingo accessory market is The Cat's Pyjamas, a Montclair, N.J., mail order firm.

Its catalog offers at least 25 flamingo items, and owner Michael Kwaloff says the next edition will have 10 or 15 more.

"We have flamingo watches, four mugs, three vases, pilsner glasses, leather-covered outlet and switchplates, address books, clocks, stationery, swizzlesticks, shower curtains, bathroom accessories from towels to toothbrush holders, neon flamingos, jewelry, a spoonrest, calendars, butter dishes, ashtrays, cream and sugar sets, salt and pepper sets, night lights, mirrors and decorative wall items."

The Cat's Pyjamas also offers a polo shirt with a flamingo over the heart, instead of an alligator or other status symbol.

"When we started 2 ½ years ago, it was kind of fun and tacky," Kwaloff said. "Now, it's starting to dominate the catalog. Everybody has fun with it."

Why are the birds suddenly so hot? "It's the pastels, the pinks and greens," said Kwaloff. "They're graceful, they have a certain beauty about them also. They're not just purely tacky. The lawn ornaments were the tacky part of the whole thing.

New home sales up

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Sales of new single family homes rose 10.6 percent in September to a seasonally adjusted annual rate of 690,000, largely offsetting a big drop the previous month, the Commerce Department said Thursday.

New home sales fell by a revised 10.2 percent between July and August, dropping from 695,000 to 624,000 at an annual rate.

The September increase was the largest since 1982, when sales rose at an annual rate of 24.7 percent to 924,000, an eight-year high.

The estimated actual number of new homes sold during the month was 56,000, up from 52,000 in August. The numbers are adjusted for seasonal differences and extended for 12 months to arrive at the annual rate.

Sales of free-standing homes so far this year totaled some 595,000, up 10.6 percent over 538,000 for the first nine months of 1985. Home sales have declined steadily after the March peak to what industry analysts believe is a more sustainable level.

A drop in mortgage interest rates to the 10 percent level precipitated the surge in housing activity early this year. Rates are expected to stay at about that level through the year, making 1986 the best year for the housing industry since 1978.

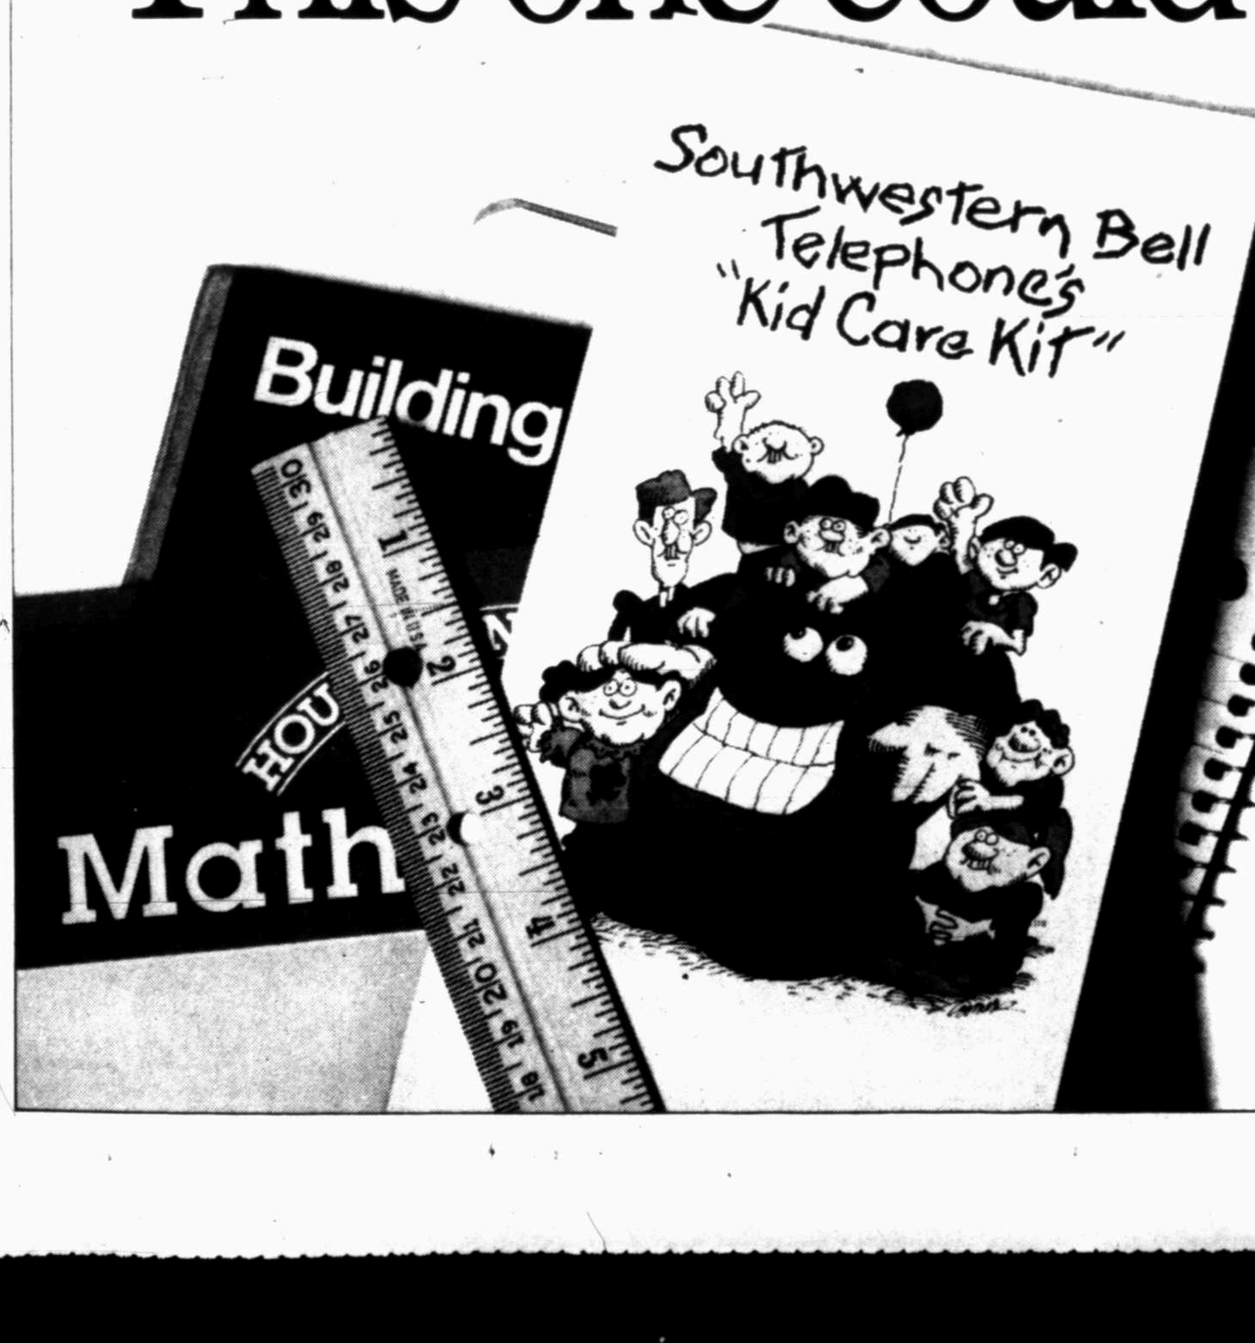

The median price of a new home on the market in September was $91,700, up franctionally from $91,600 in August.

There were some 359,000 new single family homes on the market at the end of September, representing a supply of 6.3 months at the current rate of sale. The figure was down slightly from 6.8 percent in August.

The rise in new home sales is in pace with a rise in existing home sales last month. Home resales rose 4.4 percent in September to an annual rate of 3,700,000, a seven-year high, according to a survey released Monday by the National Association of Realtors.

In contrast, construction of new single-family and multifamily housing fell 7.6 percent in September to an annual rate of 1,680,000, representing the slowest pace of housing starts since November 1985.

Study shows fireplace helps to sell house

A recent study found that a fireplace is the number one feature wanted by home-buying consumers. Over 80 percent of the buyers surveyed ranked a fireplace as the most important feature to be found in their new home.

If your present home doesn't have a fireplace, you can still install a pre-fabricated fireplace (factory-built), and not only enjoy the beauty and efficiency yourself, but also increase the value of your home when it comes time to sell. Experts consider the addition of a fireplace a very good investment and project that the short-term recovery of your investment is likely to be up to 125 percent!

A pre-fabricated (factory-built) fireplace requires no masonry work, so if you are reasonably handy and have basic carpentry tools, you can install the fireplace yourself.

Probably the most complicated part of the installation process is the planning stage, such as choosing a location. Because "zero-clearance" prefabs are self-insulating, they can be safely installed on or against just about any flat, hard surface. So you must choose whether you want your fireplace on an inside or outside wall, in the corner, or as a room divider.

The most popular spot for a fireplace these days is in the family room, but other favcorite spots include the living room, kitchen, even the bedroom. The Wood Heating Alliance, an industry trade association, suggests that you draw a rough sketch of the room where you want to install your fireplace. Consider that your fireplace will most likely be the focal point of the room and a gathering spot for family and friends. Also consider that today's energy-efficient, heat-circulating fireplaces offer the best heating performance when placed in areas that have open access to other rooms or hallways.

You have many finishes to choose from. You can use face brick, man-made stone or hardboard to create a decor that ranges from colonial to contemporary. A built-in bookcase or firewood nook neatly finishes off a setting and adds a note of practicality. A more prominent focal effect can be achieved by designing an elevated fireplace and hearth area.

Create fun child's room with wallcoverings

A child's cheerful bedroom, complete with an activity center, can result from just a bit of ingenuity. With the simplest of items — ice cube trays, planks of wood, plastic pails, spray paint and new wallcovering — the room is easily and inexpensively trasnformed.

A play space can be constructed in even the smallest of bedrooms. Designate a corner of the room as a place the child can call his own and build from there. A plank of wood installed at a height suitable for the child provides a counter with space for storage above and below. Plastic waste baskets sprayed bright colors are perfect for housing stuffed animals, building blocks and other large playthings. They are safe, durable and easily managed by small hands.

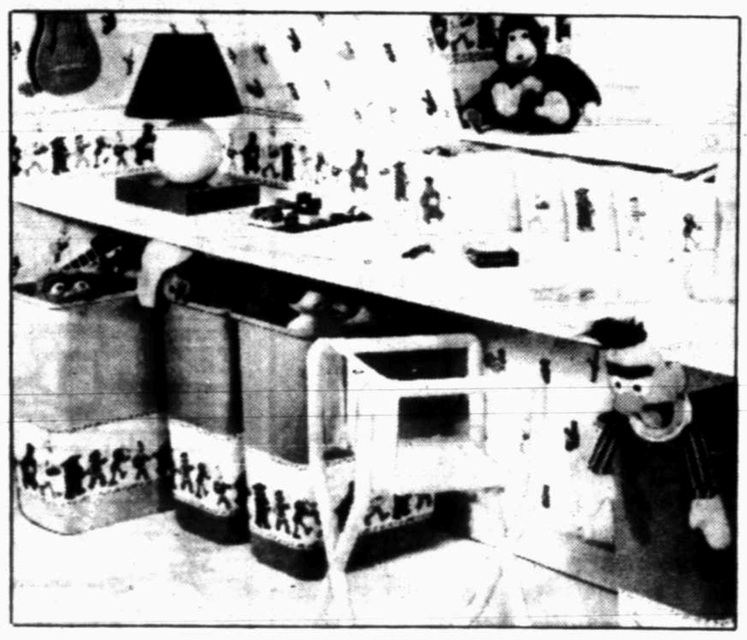

An array of dime store ice cube holders provides a way to hold children's small toys which usually get underfoot. The clutter disappears and the child does not have to look far to find his favorite tiny toys.

The child's domain even becomes more this own when the walls are covered with favorite characters such as Big Bird, Ernie and the Cookie Monster. Jim Henson's Sesame Street Muppets, in a musical mood, parade around the room in a stripe motif and strum and toot in solo in an all-over pattern — on strippable fabric-backed vinyl Wall-Tex wallcoverings.

"Rhythm and Sesame Street" the all-over pattern, with an airy look, makes even the smallest play area appear larger. The stripe pattern, "Sesame Street on Parade" is best used to accent a wall and can also be cut to form bands which easily wrap around the storage baskets, can finish a window shade or form a decorative chair rail. A cut-out of Bert playing his guitar of Ernie clapping his cymbals glued to an ice cube bin is the perfect way to help the child identify what toy goes where. Big Bird, Ernie and the rest of the muppets marching around the storage items tie the whole activity center together.

The bright colors in the wallcoverings can all be picked up as accents in the room. Use spray paint on wastebaskets and ice bins to creatively coordinate the play space in colors such as Popsicle orange, jungle green and daisy yellow.

Every child loves a bright place to play. A simple makeover like this organizes toys, allows for a special place for the child to be creative and provides a happy environment.

Custom window shades suit your taste

Copley News Service

For window dressings that are a shade better than the rest, create a custom window shade to suit your taste.

Turn a simple stencil pattern into a new look for any room or create a fabulous design of your own. Just apply a new twist to the principle of stenciling by cutting the edging out of the window shade rather than painting it on.

Although roller-type shades are available today in many colors and textures, traditional white shades are usually the best choice for this project. With these, the cutout design will have optimum contrast and will better stand out in the window.

Before starting, examine the shade in the window, then be sure to draw or mark your design on the back of the shade. Use a light pencil marking to draw your design on the shade so it won't show through the shade once it is installed.

If you are using a stencil as your pattern, center the stencil in the area to be cut. Trace inside the stencil pattern onto the shade. Then, using a craft utility knife, carefully cut around the outside of the penciled design. This way, you are certain to remove any markings from the back of the shade.

A design that is to be drawn on freehand style can be put directly on the back of the shade. Then follow the same steps as with a stencil design.

If you have a pattern or design that you want to trace onto your shade, the method of transferring that design is easy, too. Simply attach carbon paper to the back of the design, center it on your shade and lightly trace around it.

Although cutting a pattern out of a window shade is least complicated if you stick to the border edge of the shade, you can also create a surprising effect by cutting portions farther inside the roll. Spread the shade out on a cutting table and sprinkle the designs randomly. Or line tiny figures up one or both sides of the shade.

If you do decide to make cuttings on the shade in places other than along the pull bar, remember not to cut such large areas or space the cuttings so close together that the shade will tear easily when it rolls up.

Designers with projects they would like to see featured are invited to submit ideas and photographs along with a stamped, self-addressed envelope to Kelle Banks Barfield, Copley News Service, P.O. Box 190, San Diego, CA 92112-0190.

Prolong life and prevent accidents by checking safety of garage door

For safety's sake, garage door remote controls should never be handled by children, only by responsible adults.

Proper installation of a garage door usually requires a professional.

For the life of your garage door and the safety of your family, especially if the door is an older one, maintenance and periodic lubrication is very important.

Your garage door may be the largest piece of moving equipment on your property. For peace of mind, keep that door to safety running smoothly.

Police spend time, money on false alarms

By KEVIN JOHNSON
San Antonio Light
Distributed by UPI

SAN ANTONIO (UPI) — Every day, the San Antonio police and Bexar County sheriff's department respond to hundreds of cries for help sent by electronic alarm systems — calls that could signal a desperate homeowner facing an armed intruder or a businessman confronting a burglar.

But when the reports are in, 97 percent of the calls turn out to be false alarms — electronic figments of the imagination triggered by malfunctioning equipment, inclement weather or paranoid businessmen and homeowners.

San Antonio police officers responded to 50,473 false alarms last year — a record that carries with it $1.7 million in personnel and equipment costs and 24,541 hours of wasted patrol time.

And in Bexar County, false alarms have become so pervasive that sheriff's officials recently stopped responding to emergency alarm calls at residences and business where more than three false alarms have been recorded in a month's time.

The staggering rise in the number of false alarms, which has cost the city close to $7 million in the expended salaries and equipment during the past five years, has recently prompted city and county law enforcement officials to begin independent studies on ways to curb the problem.

They do not have far to look.

San Antonio is the only major city in Texas that does not have a law regulating business and residential alarm systems.

Such laws require individual owners to pay permit fees for each system installed, and mete out stiff penalties against those whose alarms are causing unneeded responses from law enforcement officials.

In Houston in the past five years, police have collected about $3.5 million in licensing fees and fines for excess false alarms, and have forced about 50 chronic violators to spend time behind bars.

Officials there say the rigid penalties have been the key to an 11 percent drop in the false alarm rate.

The Houston police created a special "alarm detail." The unit is composed of 13 officers and civilians whose job is to keep track of the city's 119,554 burglar alarms.

But in San Antonio, the last effort to enact such an ordinance in 1984 failed. According to estimates by the Greater San Antonio Alarm Association, more than 30,000 electronic security systems exist in the city and Bexar County, and that number is growing by more than 150 each month.

Association president Henry Homrighaus said new sales each year in San Antonio alone amount to more than $30 million.

"And that's a conservative estimate," Homrighaus said.

Most residential and business alarms are set up by individual alarm companies throughout the city. In the event of an alarm, these private monitors notify the police department for emergency response.

Police detective Andy Walker, who is helping with the police study, said the city has been trying for some time to incorporate an alarm ordinance because of the drain on police resources.

"So many people are in the alarm business today, there exists a need to regulate the operation," Walker said.

City Councilman Jimmy Hasslocher, who proposed the 1984 ordinance, said the sheer numbers of false alarms have forced him to take a second look at proposing city regulations.

Hasslocher had agreed to withdraw his proposed ordinance two years ago.

"The alarm companies pleaded and asked that we not put any more government restrictions on their companies. The rate is still very high, and I think it's time we look at it again," Hasslocher said.

But Homrighaus and other alarm company executives in San Antonio have been opposed to any restrictive ordinances in their industry.

They dispute the city's claims, saying only a small number of old and malfunctioning systems are responsible for the bulk of the bogus calls.

Homrighaus, who sells and installs security systems at his South Texas Services Co., said the alarm industry is already being policed by the Texas Board of Private Investigators and Private Security Agencies.

"We don't want anybody running our business when we already have the state board," Homrighaus said.

Wayne Hayes, Ranger American of Texas president in San Antonio and the largest installer of alarm systems in the city, said the industry has invited the police department to "sit down with us and try to work out our problems, but they have turned their backs."

Deputy Police Chief James Robinson said the real danger often comes when an officer arrives at a scene that has been the source of frequent false alarms.

"He may not be paying too much attention while he checks over the building, when in fact it may be the real thing," Robinson said.

Fascinating Facts

by Bob & Bill Drummond, Licensed Master Plumbers

The Conestoga wagon, which was used for the transportation of heavy loads of freight over long distances, originated near Lancaster, Pennsylvania, in an area occupied by the Conestoga Indians. Among the wagon's distinctive features were broad wheels, a white fabric hood and a convex wagon box. The average vehicle, usually drawn by 6 horses, had a capacity of five tons of freight. Prior to the extension of railroads into the frontier regions, most of the inland commerce of the United States was transported in the Conestoga wagon. The vehicle was the prototype of the famed American prairie schooner, used by tens of thousands of west-bound immigrants.

Let's talk about Real Estate...

What determines "value" of a property?

In real estate courses we were always taught that a property was worth what a willing buyer and a willing seller would agree to. Unfortunately, however, in today's market, there are too many unwilling sellers who because of economic stress have had to accept sales prices much lower than would logically be expected. The repercussions from these transactions have depressed, not just "leveled" values throughout the entire market. I cannot see that this is a good situation for anyone!

Even though the short term benefit of purchasing a great property at a low price seems highly desirable to a buyer, the downward pressure of the transaction on the market only contributes to continued lowering of values. Bad news for other sellers on the market as well as for that buyer as a potential future seller.

As a broker, and as a 28 year resident of our community, I have great concern about todays real estate market. I feel it is not going to get better until buyers exhibit a greater responsibility to purchase properties at fair, reasonable prices and until more of our distressed sellers can resist pressures that force them to accept ridiculously low offers! I think it is imperative that we in the real estate community encourage sales at reasonable levels, and lend our support to the reestablishment of a more "normal" market. A "dream" situation I know, but something that we can all at least strive for.

Joanne Langston

Scents of the Seasons

By ELIZABETH EDWIN

With Thanksgiving just a few weeks away and Christmas just around the corner, holiday fever is beginning to set in. There's a crisp smell in the air and remembrances of fresh Christmas trees and apple pies tickle your senses. Suddenly, the thought of waiting hours, let alone weeks, is just too long for these wonderful aromas to fill your head — but why wait until the holidays?

Those warming scents also can be a part of planning your holidays — or be a part of every day activities throughout the year. A generous supply of potpourri is the answer.

What is potpourri, you ask?

Well, there are two forms of potpourri, wet and dry, the dry being more common. Each form is a mixture of fragrancies which emit a gentle aroma into the air.

Dry potpourri is a mixture of herbs, spices and flower petals cured in a sealed container. To allow the scent to escape, the mixture is usually placed in brass, clay or porcelain containers with holes or sachet bags and pillows of loose woven fabric. (Some prefer closed containers so that the lid can be removed when fragrance is wanted.)

These mixtures come in a variety of scents and intensities. They can be purchased — premixed — at many gift, candle, bed and bath and specialty shops in scents including "Bay-N-Berry," "Gentleman's Touch," "Lady Di's Favorite" and "Strawberry Fields." Relatively new to potpourri are the perfume scents such as "Georgi," named and scented after "Georgio" perfume, and "Obsession" from the perfume of the same name.

These are usually sold by weight and package for you to take home and place in your favorite container. Many stores also offer the option of potpourri already placed in such decorative items as porcelain containers, wicker baskets, sachet bags, dried flower bouquets and pillows.

The sachet bags are not only decorative, they also can add a touch of fragrance to closets, drawers, desks, beds or sofas.

In fact, potpourri can even be used to create an "illusion," if you will.

For example, a lemon scented sachet tied to a chair can make a room smell as if the furniture has just been polished with a lemon wax. An apple scented potpourri placed in a simmer pot will make the kitchen smell like a fresh apple pie has just been baked. (Just don't forget to warm the oven and to take the frozen pie out of the tin pan.)

Dry potpourri, just like grandma's, is relatively easy to make, but time-consuming. If you start a mixture now, it would have time to cure before Christmas for gifts.

A typical method for making dry potpourri is to collect enough rose petals to fill two quart jars once they are dried. Petals should be spread on a clean paper or cloth and allowed to dry thoroughly but quickly in the sun or an airy room. If enough petals cannot be gathered at one time, they may be dried and collected in a covered jar until the right amount is obtained.

In the same manner, gather and dry about a quart of any or all of the following: leaves of spearmint, beebalm (bergamot), rose geranium, lemon verbena, or lemon mint, rosemary; and the flowers of pinks, carnations, lavender and heliotrope.

When the petals and herbs are dry, you will need a generous amount of table salt and spice mixture. The spice mixture is made by combining a few or all of the following:

- ¼ ounce allspice
- ¼ ounce powdered cinnamon
- ¼ ounce powdered cloves
- ¼ ounce nutmeg
- ⅛ ounce crushed cardamon seeds
- ⅛ ounce crushed coriander seeds
- ⅛ ounce powdered gum storax
- ⅛ ounce powder gum benzoin

In a large crock or glazed pottery jar, place a half-inch layer of rose petals, add a thin layer of mixed herbs, sprinkle the surface lightly with salt and add a small amount of the spice mixture. Repeat this procedure until all ingredients are used or the jar is full.

Then stir the mixture lightly and cover the jar tightly. Put it away in a cool, dark place. Leave the mixture there for six to eight weeks to ripen, opening it once a week to stir it thoroughly. Always remember to replace the lid tightly.

Occasionally, if the rose petals are not very fragrant, a drop of attar of roses (rose oil) can be added to the mixture. Some people consider this a violation to the ethics of potpourri-making, but the fact is that drying the petals removes many of the fragrant natural oils. Adding the attar of rose has the effect of replacing oils that were lost.

After the mixture has cured for six to eight weeks, it is ready to be used. The jar the mixture has been cured in can be opened occasionally to let the scent escape, or the mixture can be used a little at a time by placing it in smaller containers and bags and spread throughout the house to perfume the air. If you use the mixture little-by-little, be sure to close the jar tightly after each use to hold in the fragrance. The stock jar can be added to from time to time when the supply gets low. When grandma made potpourri, it was not uncommon for mixtures to be in the process for years.

The recipe given for potpourri is just one of many. The November 1986 issue of Redbook features an article about "The Scented Room," by Barbara Milo Ohrbach which includes several recipes. Also, local specialty shops carry refresher oils and other accessories for making potpourri at home. Refresher oils should be handled carefully though. They are very potent — a little goes a long way, so don't overdo it. These oils also may damage fine finishes so direct contact should be avoided.

So if you're getting a whim for a whiff of the holiday spirit, find a bag of "Spice Apple," "The Smell of Christmas" or "Christmas" potpourries and fill the air with holiday spirit.

Have you heard...?

By MARILYN McKNIGHT HARRISON

Virginia Smith's program, "The Psychology of Fashion" for the Midland Country Club Ladies Association, provided members and guests with new insights on the effects their wearing apparel has on others.

Speaking at the group's October luncheon meeting, the Clovis, N.M., image and wardrobe consultant explained the seven looks, which a woman can use to achieve her goals. They are: the Town and Country, the Sophisticate, the Gamin, the Romantic, the Patrician, the Exotic and the Docent (or art to wear). "Your wardrobe affects those people around you and their reactions to you," Virginia stated. Among the looks women can create by what they wear are those of power, credibility, friendliness and accessibility, conservatism, naivete, daringness and simply fun to be with.

Virginia no more began describing the four predominant fashion styles than we all began thinking of our friends who fit the different categories. They are: Miss Chic, with her impeccable grooming (described as "perfection personified"); Miss Elegant, a strong and restrained presence who commands attention wherever she goes; Miss Glamorous, a natural beauty who also commands attention but is more akin to "fireworks and sirens going off," and lastly, Miss Spicy, a fun and vivacious type.

A lasagna luncheon was enjoyed prior to the program. Hostesses for the social hour were LeRae (Mrs. Glen) Aaron and Sarah (Mrs. Lowell) Branum.

Among those attending were two new members Fran (Mrs. Grant) Billingsley and Janet (Mrs. Frank) Riley, Barbara (Mrs. William H.) Jowell, Betty (Mrs. Richard) Jons, Carol (Mrs. James) Lamb, Jenna (Mrs. Harold) Welch, Donna (Mrs. Darrell E.) Smith and Mildred (Mrs. Ed) Smead.

FOR THE FIFTH consecutive year, Carla and Rick Davidson and Patty and Mike Loftis entertained with a Halloween party. The event, which alternates between the two homes, was held this year at the Loftises.

Prizes were awarded for the best costumes, and winners included Andy Salcedo as "Shigellosis" and his wife, Myra, as a head of lettuce, for most original, and Lou and Andy Pauley, as tuxedo-dressed "Mice on the Town," for best couple. Additional winners were the hostesses dressed as French maids, "caveman" Cliff McCluney, and Roger Johnston, as an Astros player. The "Party Poop" award was reserved for Michael Spicer for consistently refusing to wear a costume.

Judges for the event were guests Pam Allen, Jeff Hewett and Neal Allen. Clever Halloween decor (our favorite being a black cat in the window) created a festive setting for the party.

ATTENDING A SEND-OFF RALLY for President Reagan on the back lawn of The White House was one of the highlights of Sharri and Jim Ketcham's recent trip to Washington, D.C. They watched as the President addressed the assemblage and then departed by helicopter for a campaign tour.

Other high points of their stay in Washington were visits to the famous monuments and memorials, tours of the Capitol and the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, and their favorite, the Smithsonian, where they spent considerable time browsing through its various museums. They also enjoyed visits to Mount Vernon and Georgetown. Sharri tells us they had the added bonus of arriving in Washington just as the leaves reached the height of their beauty.

The Ketchams also visited New York City. They particularly enjoyed the "Treasurers of the Holy Land" exhibit at the Metropolitan Museum of Art, which featured some of the Dead Sea Scrolls and other antiquities; a surrey ride around Central Park, and the Museum of Natural History.

The Midlanders didn't let a little thing like a non-functioning elevator keep them from touring the Statue of Liberty, walking up all 400 steps to reach the top. They enjoyed a breathtaking view of the city at dusk from the World Trade Center's 110th floor observation deck.

The couple also saw two Broadway shows, "La Cage Aux Folles" and "I'm Not Rappaport" with Hal Linden and Ossie Davis, as well as "Liberace" and the "Rockettes" at Radio City Music Hall.

ANN SEMPLE'S HOME was the setting last weekend for the second annual reunion of the Summer Mummers three bar crews.

Approximately 60 persons turned out for the fun event, which included a hot dog supper and playing "catch up" with one another since the close of the Mummers. The group deserves a collective pat on the back, for through their efforts alone, almost $47,000 was raised this past summer for the Midland Community Theatre.

What would a theatre party be without awards? In Ron Hughes' inimitable manner, he emceed that portion of the evening. More than 20 awards were handed out in such categories as worst lime cutter, fastest pitcher washer, most gung ho worker and best wine hawker.

The real star of the evening was former longtime MCT director Art Cole, who was in town for the opening of his art show at Saturday's and who made a late appearance at the party. Art now resides in Boulder, Colo.

Heading the bar crews, which rotated weekends during the run of the show, were Ann (Mrs. Joe) Hathaway, Dottie (Mrs. Jack) Fox and Ann Semple.

Doctors say asthma can be controlled

DENVER (AP) — Currently, more than 11 million Americans suffer from asthma, according to the National Jewish Center for Immunology and Respiratory Medicine here.

Asthma is a chronic, intermittent respiratory disease, and millions of adults, as well as children, are asthma sufferers. The disease can be characterized by a feeling of tightness in the chest, coughing, wheezing and difficulty in breathing. And its effects can be extremely serious, even life-threatening.

But, there now is good news about the disease. According to doctors at the center, with the most up-to-date methods of diagnosis, treatment and care, most cases of asthma can be controlled and many of its symptoms are entirely reversible.

By KELLE BANKS BARFIELD
Copley News Service

With autumn in the air, many grasses, herbs and flowers are drying or fading naturally now. The time could be ripe to harvest those grains and grasses and use them to turn plain reed and grapevine baskets into seasonal treasures.

The mechanics of drying the various plants and grasses is relatively simply. Cut off, rather than pull up, the stem of the plant, leaving it as long as possible. This gives you plenty to work with if you plan to wrap an entire basket in dried foliage.

Dry the plants at the bottom and tie them together with a string, then hang them upside down as they dry, they will be more likely to dry with stiff, straight stalks. Also, any color in the flowers will remain more vibrant.

The baskets you may choose as bases for your dried plants will also vary widely. Consider various treatments for the basket before attaching the dried flowers and herbs.

A natural grapevine basket can be bleached by soaking it for several hours in undiluted liquid bleach. Or add a hint of color to split oak baskets by soaking them in a bucket of water to which powdered paint has been added. Spray paint any type basket all over, or spot paint various parts of the basket, such as the handle or the inside.

After the plants have dried a week or more, use craft glue to attach to the baskets. One simple idea is to drape grasses along or around the handle of the basket only.

Or apply glue around the rim of the basket and trim it with bright crushed flower petals and leaves.

Of course, you may find that the best idea is the easiest. Rather than covering up a pretty container, why not fill it up? Trim the stems of the dried plants, if necessary, then use Styrofoam in the bottom of your container to anchor the herbs, flowers or grasses into place.

IT'S YOUR LIFE

Guilt common emotion

By STEVE EDWARDS

When asked, "What is the most common feeling adult children have toward parents?" there was an astute response made: "Guilt."

This answer may seem odd or raise questions. Guilt is not only real and authentic to the person experiencing it, it also represents normal responses that need to be expressed and worked through by adult children as they relate to and make decisions with parents.

In fact, it's common for adult children to experience mixed feelings of love and guilt as they seek to fulfill responsibilities to their parents. As one daughter expressed it, "I love my mother so dearly, yet I carry this great feeling of guilt as I try to help her with some very difficult decisions."

To counter these feelings, friends or spouses often try to be encouraging with positive phrases such as "You shouldn't feel that way" or "There's no need to feel guilty." Yet, as one noted psychologist observed, "This is counter productive because guilt feelings are inevitable."

He noted that from infancy on, the child demands total care from parents. Often, though, children don't want to give that kind of care to their parents. Thus when parents reach the time they need care and the child does not fulfill the demand, the child feels guilty. These feelings about aging parents may come from a belief we haven't lived up to parental expectations; or we haven't "honored father or mother" with a particular code of ethics or morals; or we haven't lived up to our own expectations. Our guilty feelings may derive from any one or a combination of these things.

Feelings of guilt and vulnerability are common for adult children. In fact, it is often through these feelings that children frequently overreact. One overreaction is known as role reversal. The child takes on the parent role and the parent becomes the child. The adult child becomes both caretaker and decision maker. This process may have been going on for years between child and parents. Growing up, children look to parents as authority figures. They made the decisions, and their wisdom and judgment were accepted. As adult children this role changes. Parents may ask the child for advice or counsel. The child, whether asked or unasked, may provid some means of guidance.

In some cases, a workable balance of role reversal in maintained. At times the parent may remain a dominant figure. The reverse is true as well, as a child may take over completely the role of parent to the parent.

There are instances when the parent is completely dominated by the child. Sons or daughters with strong guilt feelings may be insistent on assuming the parental role. In fact, abuse of parents has occured as the controlling child takes on this role.

It is important to note that children and parents never actually reverse roles. A lifetime of experiences cannot be wiped out. However, some behavior displayed by the eldely may appear to be childlike. Remember, though, these behaviors are brought on by a different set of circumstances. There's a major difference between feelings of growing up and feelings of growing old and adjusting to these experiences.

Adult children should recognize that their parents are adults and they need and should, if possible, have input into decisions that directly affect their lives. When adult children overdo the role reversal, the parents' decision-making rights are bypassed and the probability of a parent's dependency may be increased. This may be the opposite effect desired by the adult child. In most cases, the decision-making authority is taken from the mother by the strong child, as women have traditionally been regarded as weaker and less able to cope on their own.

Obviously there are times when the decision-making process must be assumed by the adult child. A parent may recognize his limitations that prevent self-help. Given these conditions, a child will act even if the parent may resist such help.

In assuming this new role, adult children must remember they're not going to rewrite their life or family history in a brief period, or erase all emotional trauma that may have been part of their relationship with their parents. Children should be cautious about taking away parents' rights to their own lives. Assistance should be provided only as it is requested or truly required.

Parents should not be rushed into a dependency that is both unnecessary and undignified. Children should deal with the present reality as thoughtfully and competently as possible under the circumstances.

Take one step at a time. Do not overreact, overanticipate nor over indulge. At the same time, children should not be so aloof they stay clear of everything. It is surprising how a little compassion and loving care can go a long way toward helping the, as well as the child's guilt.

DEAR ABBY

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: I'm a widow in my 70s with many regrets. Many years ago, I discovered that my husband had a mistress. He had always provided well for me and our children, but he showed me little real affection. It was to his mistress that he turned for companionship, comfort and love.

I was brought up to believe that marriage was forever — no matter what — and besides, I enjoyed the beautiful home, financial security and prestige of being his wife. I had enough information about his business dealings to send him to prison if I had wanted to, and he knew it.

On his 55th birthday he asked me for a divorce, but I wouldn't hear of it. I created a terrible scene, threatening blackmail, suicide and everything I could think of to remain his wife.

A year late he became terminally ill. Toward th end, he begged me to allow his mistress to visit him in our home. I refused.

Did I really win? As I look back, I realize that had I given him a divorce, I still would have been financially secure and could have made a new life for myself. He and his mistress could have had happiness, and everyone would have been better off. — AN OLD LADY WITH MONEY AND REGRETS IN MICHIGAN

DEAR OLD LADY: Regret is the cancer of life. I offer you this prayer that I hope will comfort you: "God, grant me the serenity to accept the things I cannot change, the courage to change the things I can, and the wisdom to know the difference."

DEAR ABBY: I called a plumber yesterday. As soon as I opened the door, he entered and asked, "May I use your bathroom?" This annoyed me for the following reasons: I'm sure the company would not dock him for making a "pit stop." I don't know how far this man traveled from his other job, but en route I'm sure he passed some bathrooms that were open to the public. Very near me are numerous filling stations, restaurants, shopping centers, and any number of places he could have stopped to use the bathroom.

This has been irritating me for years. How do other readers handle this? I'd like to hear from them as well as plumbers, TV repairmen, insurance salesmen, etc. who have asked to use the bathroom.

If it's an emergency, I have no objections, but I do resent plain laziness. — MRS. G.A., LOS ALAMITOS

DEAR MRS. A.: I, for one, would be hard-pressed to discern an emergency from plain laziness. I know of no way politely to send a service person down the street to use a bathroom.

DEAR ABBY: Reminding readers who still owe for their student loans to contact their college and pay something toward their debt was right on target.

I received a student loan in the mid-'70s. After I graduated, I could have paid it off, but frankly I regarded it as more of a "gift" than a loan, so I ignored it.

After 10 years and countless address changes, plus a name change after I married, I opened my 1985 tax return check and noticed that $775 had been deducted from it to repay that student loan I had ignored. How embarrassing!

It's amazing how the IRS can find you when you owe it money. — TRACKED DOWN IN GEORGIA

MISTER ROGERS

Dealing with life

By FRED ROGERS
with BARRY HEAD

Some serious food for thought — in fact, enough for a full meal — came with this letter from a friend. Here's the major part of it for you to share.

"A little while ago, as I was on my way home after celebrating good news with friends in a bar, my euphoria came to an abrupt end with a siren's wail and the flashing of lights in my rear-view mirror.

"After the brief preliminaries, I was breathalyzed, pushed up against the side of the car, frisked, handcuffed and carted off behind the heavy-duty grillwork in the back of the patrol car. At the station, I gave up my personal possessions and my identity and spent a cold bleak night in jail. There it all was: the plank bed, the bars on the window, the seatless, stainless-steel toilet ... the works. And me.

"Me? Who was I, anyway? Certainly not the responsible, successful, joyful adult of moments before. How fast that balloon popped, turning me, as it burst, into someone I didn't recognize or even care to meet: a drunk driver in jail.

"The child in me protested and cried, engaged in magical thinking that maybe, just maybe, if I closed my eyes and tried really hard, I could roll time backward just a little and I'd still be in my car on my way home. And where were my mom and dad who could always make everything right? How could they dare have left me here like this and have passed beyond the reach of any telephone call?

"As the weeks elapsed, weeks full of repeated inconveniences and mortifications, money for fines and a lawyer was spent, a stern judge looked down at me and passed sentence, and the weekly mandatory rehab classes for drunk drivers inched by one after the other. Ever present was that child within wondering why it had all happened and trying to cope.

"There was a frequently recurring memory: I was back in the bedroom I shared with my brother when we were little, and my parents were coming in the door late at night after a party to kiss us a last goodnight. Their voices were different than usual, their gestures loving but a little clumsy and their breath had a sweet aromatic smell that I came to associate with the coziness and warmth of a safe bed, with the reassurance of a soft pillow and a down comforter.

"I came to understand that my parents were dedicated drinkers; drinking was a solid and steady part of their lives. I remember, at 17, how they at last welcomed me into their charmed circle at cocktail time. How grown-up I felt! More than that, what approval I felt! What love!

"There were about 30 people in my rehab classes, and they came from a wide spectrum of ethnic backgrounds and socio-economic levels. One thing they all had in common, along with me, was that the inner child of each was right out front. There those children were, face to face with authority, rebellious or scared, aggressive or guilt ridden, cowed or cocky.

"Some, almost disgracefully, played up to the instructors as though desperately seeking some sign they were still lovable. Others were clearly determined in thought, word and deed to resist any insights the classes might have provided; to the end, they defended their 'freedom' and their 'independence' against all appeals of emotion or reason.

"I found myself wondering again and again about what roles love and parents had played in the early lives of all these people, and of course I wondered about these roles in my own life as well. I've never doubted that I was truly loved as a child, and I believe I can see confirming signs of it even in the resolution of this sorry tale.

"There are no perfect parents and there are no perfect children. But imperfect parents can be loving parents, and the gifts of their love can be enough to preserve 'the child within' from despair when times get rough.

"More than that, though, those loving gifts can save the lives of others — as in the case of this driver from whom the tragedy of a needless killing on the highway remains, thank God, only a specter along a road not taken."

Furniture refinishing tedious chore

Copley News Service

Furniture refinishing can be a tedious chore, but there is an easier way to give an old (or new) piece of furniture a distinctively different look. Use self-stick or glueable materials such as heavy fabric or wallcoverings directly on the furniture and highlight small areas with paint. When covering the furniture, consider using coordinating or contrasting prints and papers on different parts of the piece.

The most cooperative types of furniture for this project are those that have predominantly flat surfaces. A cupboard or chest of drawers, for example, will work much better than a wooden chair with a curved back and bottom.

Start your project by sanding the surface as smooth as possible and thoroughly cleaning the piece so your materials will stick completely. Next, paint portions of the furniture for contrast with the fabric. This is one way of bringing together the elements of a print like florals, with its many small designs and colors. Parts of the furniture to consider painting are door and drawer knobs, shelves or molding and trim.

To prepare the fabric or wallpaper for application, measure each part of the furniture that requires a continuous piece of the material. Then cut the material slightly wider and longer to allow for tightening of the fabric and to ensure a perfect fit.

Starting at the top or along one side of the surface, smooth the material down, avoiding wrinkles and air bubbles. After this dries, use a utility knife to trim the material back to the proper dimensions.

Designers with projects they would like to see featured are invited to submit ideas and photographs along with a stamped, self-addressed envelope to Kelle Banks Barfield, Copley News Service, P.O. Box 190, San Diego, CA 92112-0190.

Husbands taking hike

Copley News Service

More and more husbands are taking a hike — without their wives.

According to New York therapist Laura Singer, the number of men leaving marriages without a word of warning is on the rise.

Speaking in McCall's magazine, she says men are saying in effect, "It's my turn."

She says deep down, however, all this could really be a defense against their anxiety about aging.

What's most startling about the trend is that it has little or nothing to do with adultery.

Copley News Service

Here's some alarming news — more than half the students who start college drop out.

But 80 percent of them have marks high enough to continue.

With that in mind, researchers in Canada are scrambling to solve the mystery behind the missing students.

Sociology Professor Sid Gilbert says some universities blame the problem on the high cost of education, while others blame it on the academic environment, and still others believe that kids are opting for high-paying manual labor jobs.

In the meantime, Gilbert says universities should focus on providing the best education possible for the students who choose to continue.

'Spec' homes large category

By BILL MATSON
Hearst News Service

Planning to buy a "spec" home?

By definition, a spec home — derived from "speculative" — is one started by a builder with expectations of selling it at a profit. It could be a single-family residence or a condominium. Slightly more than half of the nation's homebuilding is in this category, as contrasted to construction against a purchase contract or custom building to order.

Prospective homeowners are attracted to spec homes because either they can't afford the expense or don't want to spend the time selecting a site, working with an architect, hiring a contractor and checking the entire construction process.

If construction is completed when the buyer comes along, it's pretty much a matter of "what you see is what you get." But if the timing is better, the buyer can have a voice in how things comes together — design changes such as adding a pantry in the kitchen, window placing, type and size, cabinets and the like. There even can be an opportunity to select carpeting, appliances, cabinetry, paint colors, wall coverings, lighting fixtures and a host of other features.

Disadvantages are relatively few unless one has distinct preferences on room size and arrangement, prefers an established lawn and can't handle extra costs that might be involved for draperies, extra shelving and completed landscaping.

Having decided that the spec style is the route to go, selecting the neighborhood usually is the next order of business. Points to consider are proximity to schools, churches and shopping and possibly the breadwinner's place of work.

A drive-through of candidate subdivisions usually will result in some tentative selections. After noting the names of the various builders, it often is a good idea to contact occupants of homes constructed by the same contractor. Usually, several homes in the same neighborhood are built by the same company.

Buyers also should pay attention to the builder's credentials. Does he enjoy a sound reputation among the area builders? Is he willing to offer references to other customers? Such questions are worth asking whether the home already is built or it is just coming out of the ground.

A home usually is life's greatest investment for the average American. Buying one can be a joyous or a miserable experience. It's up to you.

Pool above ground

Associated Press

Looking for a visual extension of your home's traditional living area or an economical way to keep your teen-agers occupied until they head for college?

An above-ground swimming pool may be the solution. Such pools are increasingly dotting the countryside, rivaling their in-ground counterparts in numbers, according to Poolife magazine.

"One low-cost version is a circular continuous wall of lightweight sheet metal," says the publication, "but stronger versions have heavy, interlocking metal panels. A vinyl-lined pool is likely to be the least expensive of the above-ground options and the least difficult project for do-it-yourselfers."

Together tips to make new love nest 'home'

Copley News Service

A marriage doesn't just bring the lives of two people together. It also brings their furniture, knicknacks, favorite colors and furniture preferences under one roof — his beloved antique gun, her brass daybed and their wedding gifts.

Together, these things make a house "home" for the new couple.

Whether your "love nest" will be a new house, apartment or your old living quarters redesigned to accommodate two, a few basic decorating tips will help you design an environment that reflects your personality and suits your new lifestyle.

If you're like most newlyweds, you probably have a minimum amount of space. How can you minimize design flaws and bring out the best in your space? Color is the keynote. It is probably the most versatile decorating tool available to the home decorator. The right color choice can make small spaces appear larger and vast expanses of space more intimate. Color can set the mood for a particular room and act as the unifying factor when combining different decorating styles.

Rely on neutral tones to visually enlarge a space. The use of light, basic shades in wall coverings can function as the foundation for your total design scheme. The term "neutral" does not mean you're limited to colors within the beige family.

"WHILE BEIGE has retained its position as the basic 'neutral' color, gray is a good color that is gaining in popularity," according to Alben J. Milwid, vice president and director of styling for Mannington Resilient Floors, a manufacturer of sheet vinyl flooring.

Also, consider muted shades of blue, green and even yellow as the dominant color in your home.

"Consumers are opting to put pattern on their walls as opposed to their floors to allow them added flexibility," Milwid said.

With a basic floor covering as the focal point of the room, inexpensive decorating changes such as new curtains can be just the decorating face-lift you might need every few years.

Select furnishings with your lifestyle in mind. For the working couple, floor and wall coverings should be durable with minimal upkeep. Consider a floor covering with a "never-wax" surface which provides protection against stains and abrasions and requires only soap and water to maintain its shine and luster.

If you enjoy having guests over, select carpets and furnishings designed to withstand a lot of traffic in colors and patterns that won't show accidental stains.

TAKE A GOOD look at your decorating styles. Do you have a penchant for antiques while he prefers clean lines and bold graphics? Is his present home decorated in dark grays and masculine blues while yours is utterly feminine? Don't despair. With just a few small compromises and some basic design awareness your home can combine both styles while maintaining a comfortable, integrated look.

Look at the pieces you each own. His gray camelback sofa may be perfect in a living area muted in a shade of dusty rose. Curtains can add a softer touch and frame the once masculine-looking couch in a more classic environment. Your antique desk may not work in this room, but could be the perfect addition as a vanity in the bedroom. Select sheets, quilts, bedspreads, comforters and pillowcases in patterns and colors that will tie the room together.

Just as each of you will probably have pieces that will work perfectly within the structure of your home, there will also be those pieces that will not work at all. The idea is to compromise without either of you feeling like you're making all the sacrifices.

You will probably have to make some purchases to round out the total look of your home. Make a major investment, such as a dining room table or couch, based on factors other than appearance. Remember that these pieces not only need to fit well within the structure of your current interior design, but should be timeless enough to adapt to changes in design schemes throughout the years.

Think about function to be sure that the items you select will stand up well under everyday wear and tear. For example, if your dining room will double as your daily eating area or work space, select upholstery materials and table finish that will wear well, such as pine with a polyurethane finish or butcher block.

MORE AND MORE of today's busy working couples are sharing the kitchen detail right from the start, according to certified kitchen designer Ellen Cheever, design director of the Maytag Kitchen Idea Center. Working together efficiently requires some planning ahead in kitchen design.

"Since most kitchens are designed for one cook, when more than one person is trying to prepare a meal, a lot of bumps and inefficiencies can result," she said.

Here are several strategies Cheever suggests to streamline a kitchen for two cooks:

■ Separate the microwave oven from the conventional range by at least four feet, but place it near the refrigerator, so one cook can prepare a salad and vegetables while the other works at the range.

■ When space is at a premium, consider a complete cooking center with a full-sized conventional range and microwave oven all in a 30-inch space. Other options include mounting the microwave or placing it on a restaurant shelf or utility cart that can also hold utensils and cookware.

■ You also might consider a compact microwave oven.

A lot of simple, fast dishes can be prepared in a compact microwave oven, according to Nancy Boyle of Sharp Electronics. "The compact microwave oven is still large enough to help you prepare a wide variety of foods in a one- or two-person household," she says.

"Don't return those double wedding gifts, put them to work," Cheever said. "Plan for two sets of measuring cups, knives and cooking utensils."

■ When apartment hunting, looking for a new home or planning to remodel a honeymoon cottage, remember that a wider aisle in a corridor kitchen and additional space between the range, refrigerator and clean-up center work best for two cooks.

When selecting items for your bridal registry, shop together to assure you receive bridal gifts in keeping with both your design scheme and your personal tastes.

You will find that the pieces that have the most meaning to you will be those that not only reflect the ambience of your home, but that were chosen together.

Temporary work seen as challenge

NEW HYDE PARK, N.Y. (AP) — A new national survey of temporary personnel in office and light industrial positions indicates the challenge of new situations is more appealing to them than the income, with 57 percent finding "temping" more challenging than permanent employment.

Half of those questioned in a survey conducted by Uniforce Temporary Services said temporary employment fulfilled their economic needs, as well as those of their family and children.

This is a 16 percent increase over 1985 survey figures and the highest percentage since the service began surveying its temporaries on economic needs in 1981.

Of those queried, 15 percent have spouses who are unemployed or have been laid off, while 5 percent of the men and 12 percent of the women are sole supporters of their children.

Women with children of all ages are temping, with greatest increases among those with children age 1-5, up from 17 percent in 1983 to 26 percent in 1986. The percentage of male temps is holding steady at 25 percent, the same figure reported in the survey last year.

"These figures demonstrate that temping is now a prime workplace choice for adults of every age, income and job experience level," said John Fanning, president of Uniforce, based in New Hyde Park. "The Bureau of Labor reports 5 million temps are employed annually, with 700,000 placed daily. I foresee a 60-70 percent increase in these figures by the end of the decade."

ASK DR. RUTH

By DR. RUTH WESTHEIMER

Westheimer

I am happy and proud to have a column in 130 papers in the United States and Canada. Not just because I like the taste of success! I think good information about human sexuality belongs in the media, where it reaches people. In the media, you can learn about cooking, shopping, gardening, restoring furniture, stamp collecting, playing chess and bridge. Why not about something that touches every human life, every day, to some degree?

When I spent all my working time in classrooms teaching student teachers, or in my office doing sex therapy with clients, I grew more and more certain that we needed sex education in the media. At least, to balance all the stimulation and bad sex-myth making in the soaps, the songs, the commercials, wherever one looked or listened.

When I got my first quarter-hour radio program, I was pleased. But I never expected the huge interest the show attracted. I worried that not enough people would phone in questions. I was sure they would tune me out after a few weeks, when the novelty was gone. Instead, the radio show went to an hour, then to network broadcasting where I am on television five nights. And now a newspaper column.

Naturally, I enjoy being Dr. Ruth. But I know that my "success" really shows that there is a vast hunger for factual information on sex and realtionships.

Human sexual behavior has to be learned. We are not birds or bees, just programmed for reproduction. We have to learn almost everything we do. Bad teaching, or lack of teaching, works disaster. This year, 1986, a million unwanted teen-age pregnancies are predicted. We need to teach wisdom about sex.

People deserve information on so vital a subject. Not just in textbooks and lectures, but where the young, mature and old can find it easily. Information, advice and encouragement are badly needed. And also reassurance that the individual is not the only one who feels doubts and fears, or who feels pushed in directions that seem wrong, or who wants greater warmth, confort, company and intimacy with another human being.

Dr. Ruth Westheimer is a columnist for King Features Syndicate.

'Yellow Pages' celebrates centennial

Hearst News Service

The Statue of Liberty isn't the only American institution celebrating a centennial this year. Reuben H. Donnelly had a triumph of his own in 1886 when he became father of what is now known as the Yellow Pages.

At the time, only a few visionaries recognized the potential of Alexander Graham Bell's invention. Among them was Donnelly, who at age 22 was working in his father's publishing and printing company in Chicago.

Young Reuben already had a clear and determined focus: to publish the Chicago Classified Telephone Directory. He envisioned that it would combine the existing city directory format of classified business listings and advertising with a unique new feature — telephone numbers. Explaining this idea some years later, Reuben said he sensed the value of the telephone and its potential to both advertisers and users.

By 1886, the 10-year-old telephone industry was fast becoming a fact of everyday life and Reuben's publishing career was dramatically changed by this revolutionary creation. On May 15, Donnelly published the first clearly recognizable Yellow Pages.

Nearly 500 businesses were listed in this first 200-page edition. The new directory was quickly followed by the "Blue Book," a listing of Chicago's socially prominent; "Chicago Securities," the city's top businessmen; and the "Guide to Streets and Avenues in Chicago." He secured directory contracts from Milwaukee to Providence.

In 1917, when the publishing side of the business began to outgrow the framework in which it had flourished for three decades, the business was restructured under the new Reuben H. Donnelly Corp.

Donnelly died in 1929 at age 65. Despite his many accomplishments, his most lasting and prominent achievement was his original creation of the classified telephone directory, now known everywhere as the Yellow Pages.

Earliest Yellow Pages fascinating

Hearst News Service

The early directories made full use of the page. Margins were filled with advertisements — small ads were contained in all of the borders. Advertising inserts also were used. Full-sized pink cards were placed between the directories' sections, calling specific attention to those advertisers.

The earliest headings guide, rough and somewhat crude by today's standards, contained the businesses that were in their heyday during that period, providing an interesting glimpse of changing American lifestyles and occupations: Metal workers, tinsmiths, bronze and brass fabricators are listed, along with collars, bloomers and cuspidors.

Listed businesses included 128 coal dealers, 16 restaurants, two advertising agencies and one directory publisher — Donnelly.

Among the original advertisers in those first pages were Pinkerton Detectives, Morton and Joy salt and the Associated Press.

The pages in the 1930s also show just how undeveloped certain businesses were in that era. Employment agencies, for example, focused only on certain types of employment — governesses, hairdressers, lunchwagon help. Subcategories under schools featured instruction in corset design, electrolysis, switchboard operators and vulcanizing.

From that small beginning a century ago, the venture has grown. Today, the Donnelly organization operates in 3,500 cities and towns throughout the country. It publishes more than 700 Yellow Pages directories that serve 3.5 million businesses and 50 million consumers.

Author provides 'manhunt' instructions

Hearst News Service

There's an abundance of "great" single men in this country, and author Warren Farrell knows where women can find them.

"But you're going to have to do exactly as I say or you'll look right past them," explains Farrell, whose latest book is "Why Men Are the Way They Are."

"It's simple," Farrell says. "Take out an ad in the personals column of a newspaper. Offer a man the option of either working full-time or part-time or devoting himself entirely to you. Promise in exchange to provide the economic safety net he will need if he decides to quit work. He in turn is expected to cook dinner, clean house, maybe give a massage and be nurturing and attentive to your needs. You'll find a great abundance of available men by offering them what you have been expecting from them for so long."

Farrell, a Ph.D. who also wrote "The Liberated Man," has been issuing this challenge everywhere he has gone on his book tour. And so far, "What I've found is that the women who go through the workshops I conduct first have to confront the shock of using their money to support a man."

Once they've managed to recover, however, women still have a problem with the whole idea of letting a man be financially dependent on them, Farrell says.

"Women friends will tell them that they'll only be used if they do this," he says. "This is an important part of the search for good single men because it gives women some understanding of why many men are so afraid of commitment. They, too, are afraid of being used."

Suppose you do find that nurturing, caring man, only he soon finds himself uncomfortable that you are earning more or all of the income. Farrell says:

"Try to remember that it's parallel to the woman who feels uncomfortable when her husband assures her that he is not losing interest, even though she is gaining weight. Then, at the next party they go to she notices that he is eyeing all the single women.

"What happens for a man in this situation is that he hears the assurances that her earning more makes no difference, but then, oftentimes, he'll see her eyeing with a glint of admiration the men who have done particularly well, the heroes or maybe even a former lover who has had exceptional success. Then, be open to exceptions to the rule. Because if a woman really is willing to earn more and to spend her money on you, then what she is saying is that she truly loves you."

Following Farrell's advice might not be easy, he admits.

"But I'm challenging you women out there to try it, especially those over 30, who surveys show have less of a chance of marrying the older they get and the longer they stay single. There is hope for you, but there won't be unless you're willing to change your values," he says.

("Why Men Are the Way They Are," McGraw Hill, $17.95).

Making a splash with aquatic program relieves pain

ATLANTA (AP) — People around the country who have arthritis are making a splash in the Arthritis Aquatic Program.

The program, developed by the Arthritis Foundation in conjunction with the YMCA, provides opportunities to do gentle activities in warm water which helps to relieve pain.

By STEVE LEVINE

So terrorists and the declining dollar are scaring you away from that European vacation, and you want to take advantage of 70-cent-a-gallon gasoline prices.

But you're not sure where you want to go. How about the mountains? Maybe the desert? The river? Enjoy all three at once and view of 708,118 of Texas' most beautiful acres in Big Bend National Park, "the last great wilderness area of Texas."

Visitors in cars, RVs, four-wheelers, on rafts, on horseback or on foot can loll in the soul-reviving vistas of the Chisos Mountains, the Great Chihuahuan Desert or the Rio Grande. Easter and Thanksgiving-to-New-Years are the busiest seasons. The rest of the year, you can virtually have the whole park to yourself.

Photographers, bring as much gear as you can carry: close-up lenses for the blooming desert flowers; zooms to catch the coyotes, javelina or two spieces of deer; a wide-angle to capture the breath-taking mountain-top or desert scenes.

Big Bend offers tourists of all ages and out-back abilities the opportunity to bring home lasting memories. No matter where you stay, you'll wake up each morning with the nearby mountains reminding you why you came.

In the Chisos Basin, a lodge/motel/cottage setup costs $38.50 to $65.75 per night for those not prepared to rough it. If you're driving an RV or pulling a trailer, you'll find 25 full-service sites at Rio Grande Village. Campers who want the convenience of nearby restrooms or toilets may pitch their tents at one of 200 sites in the Basin, at Rio Grande Village or at Cottonwood near historic Costolon.

Backpackers should stop at one of the four rangers' stations to obtain primitive camping permits for treks into the outback. Thirty-six designated trails, ranging in length from 50 yards to 34 miles, criss-cross the mountains, desert and river plain.

The Lost Mine Trail, one of the most popular hikes, begins about one mile from the Basin campground. The 2.4-mile trail climbs 2,850 feet to a ridge overlooking two of the parks largest valleys. At the trailhead, walkers can pick up booklets that point out the indigenous plant life and explain the geological development of the massive stone features.

If aching legs remind you that you're not as young as you once were, take advantage of Big Bend's natural jacuzzi. Drive two miles to the end of a dirt road and you'll end up at what was a booming resort at the turn of the century. The remnants of J.O. Langford's hot mineral springs along the river bank hold in the 105 degree water and can provide soothing relief for aging hikers.

On the road to Big Bend

By DAVID LEE FORREST

While Big Bend National Park is a fairly long drive from here, Midlanders can take consolation in one fact — Big Bend is a long, long way from most anything, but, compared to most other Texas cities, it's not far from here.

Big Bend is certainly well worth the long drive. The towering peaks and rugged terrain are impressive all the time, but are exceptionally beautiful this year due to the unusually high rainfall West Texas has received. The vegetation in Big Bend, especially in the Chisos Mountains, looks positively lush.

Driving to — and in — Big Bend can be considerably more of an adventure than the usual cruise to the Dallas-Fort Worth Metroplex. Keep in mind that no matter what route you take from Midland to Big Bend — the shorter route through Fort Stockton and Marathon or the scenic route through Fort Davis and the Davis Mountains — it's a long trip through some isolated areas.

Before leaving, make sure your vehicle is in good shape. There are certainly worst places than south of Alpine to be stranded — Outer Mongolia and the dark side of the Moon spring to mind — but not all that many.

PARK

Check the engine coolant (most of Big Bend is warmer at this time of year than the Permian Basin), oil, belts, etc., prior to hitting the road.

Good brakes are also extremely important. There are many steep, winding roads with potentially dangerous drop-offs. Within the national park itself there are some 10 percent grades and on the scenic mountain drive along Ranch Road 170 between Big Bend and Presido, there are some 15 percent grades.

Ten or 15 percent may not have seemed like much of an angle long ago in high school geometry class, but it looks terribly steep when your car is struggling up or careening down one of those slopes. You definitely want your brakes to work, and work well.

Keep a close eye on the gas gauge. It's called "Big" Bend for good reason. The 708,221-acre area is larger than the whole state of Rhode Island and there are more than 250 miles of roads just within the park itself.

The driving distances in and around the park are immense and can consume fuel quickly. There aren't a lot of handy corner service stations in that neck of the world and you could be left sitting around for quite a while if you run out of gas in the wrong place (see the preceding reference to "Outer Mongolia and the dark side of the Moon").

Be forewarned that the roads can vary widely in surface condition and quality. For example, U.S. Highway 385 from Marathon to Big Bend is noticeably wider and smoother than most of State Highway 118 from Alpine to the park.

If the weather should be threatening during your trip, heed the low water crossing warning signs along the roads. Flash floods are a serious danger in a hilly landscape like Big Bend's.

While the "Loose Livestock" roadside warning signs may sound much less ominous, meandering animals are actually a more common problem than thundering floods.

In many areas outside of the park, goats, cattle and the occasional horse do wander freely back and forth across the road. If you don't watch carefully for them, particularly when topping hills or rounding curves, you might have to try to explain to your insurance company how you managed to wipe out an entire herd of goats.

Once in Big Bend, you can obtain a free road map of the park from the Park Headquarters at Panther Junction.

Another handy publication for driving around Big Bend, the "Road Guide to paved and improved dirt roads of Big Bend National Park," is also available at the headquarters building. This inexpensive 44-page paperback, published by the Big Bend Natural History Association in cooperation with the National Park Service, gives information on all the major roads in Big Bend.

A final "Don't": Don't let all these little warnings discourage you from visiting Big Bend. The isolation and ruggedness prompting all this backseat driving advice are the very qualities that make Big Bend so special.

The trip is worth it.

The early morning and late-afternoon tours to the Window provide photographers with opportunities for award-winning pictures of the looming mountains lush with vegetation and wildlife.

The eight-hour ride to the south rim of the Chisos begins at 8 a.m. and gives those unwilling to undertake the 14.5-mile hike a look at the heart of the park.

Several outfitters will arrange one- to seven-day float trips through the three immense canyons the Rio Grande has carved along the park's southern boundary. Eagles and other birds nest high in the rocks along the river. Fishing for catfish — no license required — is popular and often successful.

No trip to Big Bend is complete without a visit to the tiny Mexican village of Boquillas, just across the border. Bring $3.50 American dollars for the boat ride across the Rio Grande and the "burro taxi" into town. Be prepared to fend off tiny vendors selling polished quartz to gringos.

Big Bend National Park is open year round. Admission to the park is free. Pets are not permitted on trails. Reservations are recommended for the lodge/motel and for the horseback rides.

How to get there from here: take Interstate 20 west to Monahans. Turn south on Texas 18 to Fort Stockton and continue south on U.S. 385 through Marathon, 40 miles more to the park entrance. Stop for maps, guide books and further directions at the Persimmon Gap ranger station 2.6 miles inside the park.

Utah's natural wonders found soothing, inspiring

By JOHN SINOR
Copley News Service

If God hadn't wanted people to go on vacations, he wouldn't have created Utah.

But he did, and with utmost, loving care. He gave the state beauties that make you gasp, peaceful scenes that drain the weariness from you, natural wonders that look downright unnatural, and a gentleness of spirit that soothes the soul.

And then he whispered into the subconscious of the merchants: "Keep the prices down."

They did. Motel rooms in Salt Lake City for as low as $15. Dinners in Cedar City restaurants for $4.95. Ski packages at Brian Head for $32, including lodging, lifts, a meal and a drink.

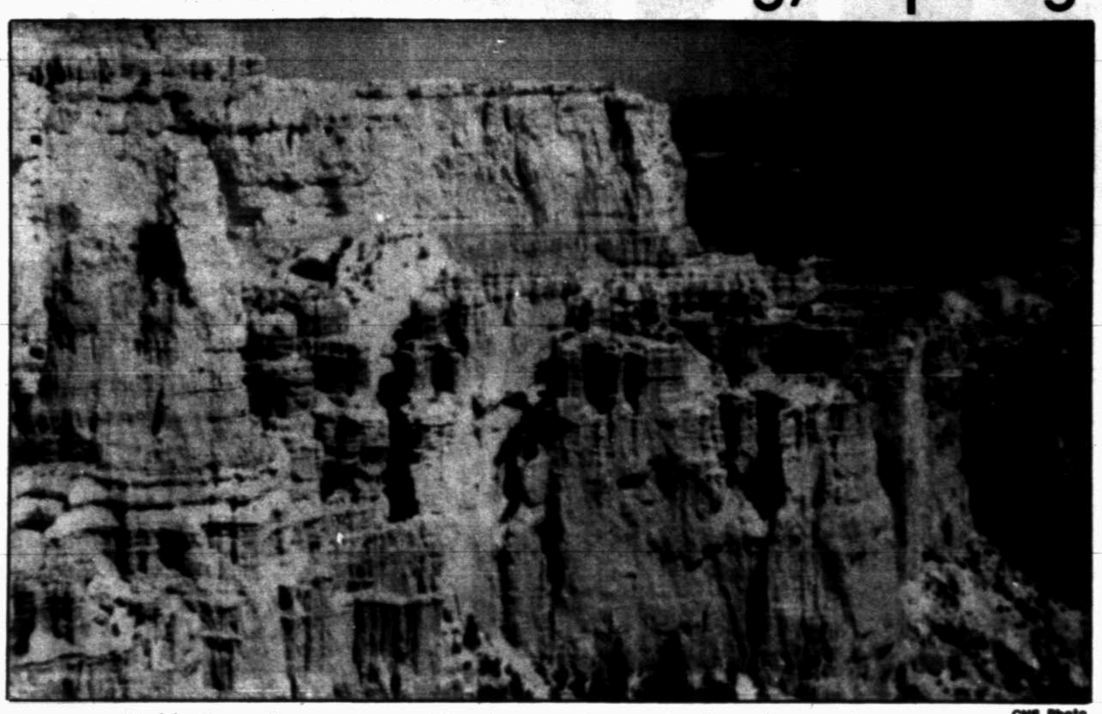

You may want to fly into the state but, in order to see it right, you are going to have to travel its highways and backroads. It's restful travel, though. The roads are uncrowded and there is sure to be something worth seeing around every next corner. Just go slow and soak it in. There is no "are we almost there?" urgency.

From Salt Lake City, we caught SkyWest's one-hour flight down to Cedar City to catch the opening of the Utah Shakespearean Festival at Southern Utah State College.

The festival is a family-oriented spectacle. There's as much activity on the shady green campus as there is inside the theater. There's dancing, puppet shows, jesters, music, shops, a costume museum, and a care center for children whose parents want to attend one of the three productions of the year.

The next day we drove to Zion National Park, less than an hour away from Cedar City. Zion is massive and soaring with monoliths such as Cable Mountain (where a cable once served sky-high lumbering) and the Great White Throne.

You look up in Zion, whether walking (or wading) through the Narrows or driving the park roads, unless you take a hike up to a spectacular overlook at the east end of the park's tunnel carved in a mountain.

At Bryce Canyon, also about an hour from Cedar City, you look down. What you see are stone forests of hoodoos. A hoodoo is a pinnacle, pillar or odd-shaped rock left standing by the forces of erosion.

They change from eerie to enchanting as the sun shifts its lighting to give your eyes and cameras new pictures to look at every few moments.

We spent the night at Bryce Canyon Lodge and went to a small, local and rousing rodeo just outside the park. On the way back from Bryce to Cedar City, we stopped at the tiny visitors' center at Cedar Breaks. It's a remarkable nature museum in a one-room structure. Full of stuffed examples of the wildlife of the area.

In Cedar City we got back on the little SkyWest plane to return to Salt Lake. The plan was to have lunch in Salt Lake and then head for an afternoon and evening in Snowbird.

If you spend any time in Salt Lake, join a private club. There are 40 in the city and you can join for two weeks for $5. Some of the best meals are served in them, and all offer liquor service, even on Sunday.

Snowbird is just 25 miles from Salt Lake and we got there just in time to sit under a canvas awning and enjoy the 4 p.m. concert given by the Utah Symphony and featuring Metropolitan Opera star Roberta Peters.

It was informal and inviting.

Of course, this is only a part of Utah and only one look at it. There's much more to see, such as Lake Powell and Monument Valley, the Big Rock Candy Mountain and Park City, and many other lakes, mountains and streams.

As Brigham Young said when he first saw it, "This is the place."

Native haunts

Los Angeles Time-
Washington Post News Service

Many American travelers spend their holidays seeing the great cities of the world. But where do the residents of these cities go on their own vacations?

■ Vienna: You will find the Viennese enjoying the outdoors in Austria's three easternmost provinces — Carinthia for its bounty of lakes (about 100); Styria for mountain hiking on the gentler slopes of the Alps; and Burgenland, close to Vienna, where the draw is one of Austria's largest lakes, the curiously shallow Neusiedler Sea.

■ Peking: The public — or at least the Chinese leadership — flocks to the beach in the town of Beidaihe, about a six-hour train ride east of Peking. The powerful stay in secluded homes; lesser ranks share dormitory-type structures; and there are spartan seaside hotels for foreigners. Beidaihe is famous for its large crabs, which can bought from fishermen and have steamed at your hotel.

■ Copenhagen: The Danes also love the sea, and when the weather warms they spill out of the capital to Hornbaek and other beaches. Many own or rent houses in Hornbaek, only a 90-minute drive away — if the traffic flows smoothly. Tourists have a wide choice of small hotels.

■ Tokyo: With the Japanese yen so strong, many citizens of Tokyo are traveling abroad. Those who aren't are likely to go hiking, fishing and sightseeing in two mountain retreats nearby — Chichibu-Tama National Park, about two hours northwest, and Nikko, about two hours north, a village of shrines surrounded by some of the country's loveliest scenery.

■ Buenos Aires: Summer in the southern hemisphere begins in December, which is when the crowds from the Argentine capital head for the Atlantic beach at Mar del Plata. It's a large and vibrant resort city, complete with gambling casinos and sophisticated dining.

Baby boomers poorer, but happier than parents

By T.R. EASTHAM

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Baby boomers feel their parents had better economic essentials like owning a home and accumulating wealth, but most believe they have nicer lifestyles and more personal satisfaction, a survey said Thursday.

A Gallup poll of 1,538 adults, based on survey questions by University of Massachusets Public Service Professor Ralph Whitehead, showed 57 percent of respondents in the 22-40 age bracket also feel better able to find a job with "good pay" than people of a comparable age in the 1940s and 1950s.

Thirty percent said they were "less able" and 8 percent said they were "as able" to find such a job.

But the nationwide poll taken in July showed 51 percent thought they were less able than their parents to find a job with "long-term security." Thirty-six percent felt they were more able to hold onto their jobs.

Significantly, 61 percent said it was harder for them to afford a home "that fits their expectations," while 30 percent said it was easier. However, 48 percent thought they were better able to buy a suitable car, compared with 39 percent who said they were less able.

Among the most revealing responses, 75 percent said it was harder for them to support their families on one income.

Only 14 percent felt it was easier today for a spouse to remain at home with young children, suggesting that the two-income family is fast becoming the norm among the 78 million Americans in their 20s and 30s.

Also revealing, 47 percent said they were less able to save money for their old age, compared with 42 percent who said they were more able.

"Economic data suggests the baby boom generation is not better off," Whitehead said at a news conference, noting that there was been "virtually no growth" in household income since 1970, despite the growing number of two-income families.

But, noting a recent Conference Board poll suggesting a majority of baby boomers believe they have a better lifestyle than their parents, he said young adults may put less emphasis on economic well-being than earlier generations.

"They don't think they are wealthier than their parents, but they do think they are happier," Whitehead said.

United Press International

NEW YORK (UPI) — It takes more than luck and an uncle on the board of directors to make it to the executive suite these days, a survey of vice presidents and personnel directors of 100 top American companies showed.

Competence was the key factor for reaching the top, according to 61 percent of the executives polled by Robert Half International, a New York-based personnel company.

Ambition was cited by 15 percent in the survey, while intelligence, personality and skill tied for third, with each one chosen as most important by 6 percent.

Four percent said that luck or timing made the all-important difference, and a mere 1 percent said it was nepotism.

Nobody said education was the essential element, according to the survey.

Understanding of money management studied

NEW YORK (AP) — American women are only half as likely as men to understand terms common to money management, financial planning and investment, according to a new Money magazine study.

Women think in terms of balancing checkbooks and paying bills on time when defining what makes a good money manager, while men are more apt to include long-term objectives, such as planning for retirement, according to Money's fourth annual financial profile of Americans.

The study was based on a nationwide survey of people who are the financial decision makers in their households. Lieberman Research of New York compiled the results of the poll, which drew responses from 2,555 women and men.

In commenting on the findings, Money said the differences between women's and men's orientation to money management come despite the rising number of women pursuing careers and heading households.

Time-keeping complicated

By ERMA BOMBECK

Bombeck

We have three clocks in our house, and each of us has a wristwatch. If you want to know what time it is, you'd find out faster by driving over to the bank or calling Time of Day.

The clock on the VCR blinks on and off at 12 a.m. That is because the power went off in the house last spring and when the continuity is broken, that's how the clock lets you know that the continuity is broken.

We had every intention of resetting it until we saw the directions. I was to hold down the clock button while my husband performed steps 2 through 5, but he screwed up by pressing the hour-minute button BEFORE he pressed the day button and after a while, we figured we were too old to start again at Step 1, so we let it blink.

The clock in the bedroom is hooked up to all kinds of things including a radio and a speaker phone. It blinks too because its continuity was broken, so we never know what time it is. We are only sure that every morning at 6, a disc jockey awakens us with a promise to maintain our pool with premium service. We don't have a pool. We also don't have to get up at 6, but we can't figure out how to make him go away.

I have a wristwatch that gives you the time in Hamburg, Germany. That is where the watch was made and set. The directions that came with it are very complete, beginning with, "Nach einem weiteren Druck auf S1 Kann die strunde ein gerst werden."

I live for the day when I'll be walking along the street and someone will say, "Pardon me, but do you have the time in Hamburg? I want to call my wife before 3."

Possibly the only source of time in the entire house is my husband's watch. It's a runner's watch, which means it looks like a time machine that is ready to blast off. He can give you the time if you have the time to wait for it. He must depress a small knob with a sharpened pencil and subtract four or five hours from the time he bought it depending on the season and whether we are on daylight saving time. It sounds like a lot of fiddling, but to reset it, he would have to climb in the car and make sure the owner of the shop where he bought it is in.

A couple came over the other night and innocently inquired, "What time is it?"

My husband said, "I don't have my calculator with me. You tell them."

I blinked my eyes 15 or 20 times.

They left hurriedly. It wasn't that late.

By ALLEN E. HOWLAND
Business/Oil Writer

The corporate acquisition business has been given a black eye by the likes of T. Boone Pickens, Carl Icahn and Irvin Jacobs; but if done correctly, says one Midland investor, acquisition and restructuring can generate additional jobs and economic prosperity not layoffs and asset liquidation.

Big Spring native C.F. (Buddy) Barnes, and his company, Gulf Standard Industries Inc. (GSI), specialize in revitalizing small companies in a variety of businesses, but all of which have a common thread binding together some part of their operations. Under its umbrella approach, Gulf Standard is involved in fuel oil distribution, mining operations, trucking, equipment leasing and real estate development businesses.

Many of the acquisitions made by the company since its formation in 1984 have been from sole proprietors, who have built up a company over 20 or 25 years, and are seeking a way to get out of the business but still have financial security, Barnes explains. Gulf Standard works with E.F. Hutton to structure an annuity program in conjunction with the business acquisition, which will provide a retirement income stream for the seller.

There are also provisions built into the acquisition agreement to provide for a seller's heirs to buy back into the company at a later date, generally within three to five years.

One company GSI has acquired from its founder is Frank W. Johnson Co. (FWJ) of Hobbs, the Gulf/Chevron distributor for eastern New Mexico. GSI's approach to managing this company is a case study in how Barnes' acquisition philosophy works.

"FWJ's expertise is selling petroleum products — not maintaining trucks, keeping books or worrying about administrative matters. We take the headaches out of the day-to-day operations, and leave the experts in the field to the business of making money," Barnes says. Another GSI company, FBP Leasing Co., maintains and leases the trucks to FWJ.

GSI provides management expertise and administrative support to all its companies. That removes those functions which drain the profits from a firm.

Barnes says that among the acquisitions under consideration by GSI are several petroleum jobbers throughout Texas, additional trucking interests, a fiberglass tank manufacturer and a crude oil gathering operation, as well as adding to its inventory of oil and gas producing properties.

With crude oil gathering and sales, refined product distribution and a manufacturing concern, which utilizes petroleum resins in its processing, under their corporate umbrella, GSI could be in a position to make more effective deals for all its firms, Barnes says.

If the acquisition of the tank manufacturer, which makes underground storage tanks for use at service stations, is completed, Barnes anticipates expansion of the company to include a manufacturing plant in the Midland/Odessa area.

Ron Jaap/Reporter-Telegram

Offshore sailing enthusiast Buddy Barnes abandoned the Gulf Coast in favor of West Texas where he sees abundant advantages in the native resources and opportunites of today's economy.

"HISTORICALLY, A DOWN MARKET is the time to consolidate business," observes Barnes, who holds undergraduate degrees in geology and finance from the University of Houston and an MBA in finance from Princeton. "Consolidating is one key way to survive in a fragmented market where demand for goods and services is declining."

Companies which are basically financially sound, but have taken on too much debt burden, are another likely source for acquisitions for GSI. A 500-home retirement community real estate development in the Bryan-College Station area had been in bankruptcy since 1978 until GSI stepped in.

After eight months of restructuring, refinancing and paying off past creditors, GSI has resumed development at the community "with a clean slate," Barnes says.

A 9,000-acre equestrian and golf resort in Winchester, Virginia is also being developed by GSI's real estate division, Savannah Oaks Corp.

Can gas decontrol ease trade deficit?

WASHINGTON (AP) — Natural gas producers feel they could take a $5 billion bite out of the federal trade deficit annually if the government eased price controls and mandated access to the country's interstate pipeline network.

Figures released by the Commerce Department on Thursday showed the trade deficit for September was $12.6 billion, with oil imports accounting for $3.1 billion, or about $12 billion a year.

Nicholas J. Bush, president of the Natural Gas Supply Association, said in a prepared statement that at least $5 billion could be cut from the oil import figure each year with greater deregulation.

"The inability of natural gas producers to get their gas to markets has been an important contribution to the U.S. balance of payments deficit since 1982," Bush said, citing a study prepared by his organization.

The NGSA study concludes government price controls on natural gas cannot react keep up with the rapidly fluctuating prices of the global oil market. Foreign producers have no such restraints and so can undercut U.S. producers.

Price controls on domestic natural gas apply only to fuel produced before 1978, called "old gas," according to Robert Isaac, a spokesman for the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission.

The Department of Energy has asked FERC to look into rule changes that would ease those controls in order to give domestic gas producers more freedom on the open market, Isaac said.

Bush's study also blames restricted access to interstate pipelines for choking off the sale of natural gas equal to 1 million barrels of imported oil per day.

"In 1985 alone, U.S. imports of petroleum products cost the country $52.4 billion, while over 2 trillion cubic feet of domestic gas, which could have replaced imported oil was 'shut in' for lack of access to markets," Bush said.

Isaac said current federal law asks that pipeline companies voluntarily provide access to transport natural gas, but doesn't require them to do so.

But Ray Courage, spokesman for the Interstate Natural Gas Association, said pipelines are in the business of carrying gas and have been carrying as much as they can handle.

He said 80 percent of the country's pipeline companies have have filed with the FERC for "blanket certificates to be open access pipelines."

"They call it voluntary, but it's closer to mandatory," Courage said.

Isaac said before deregulation of the natural gas industry in 1978, the pipeline companies traditionally served as both the purchaser and transporter of gas, but that has changed in recent years.

"Since deregulation in 1978 there has been a shift in the market. Users have started going to the producers and buying, then going to the pipelines for transportation," Isaac said.

Construction on the 80 MMcfd Wasson ODC Unit carbon dioxide removal plant is underway near Denver City and is scheduled to be completed next summer.

Amoco gears up for CO_2 expansion

From Staff Reports

Amoco Production Co. has selected H.B. Zachry Co., San Antonio, as prime contractor for expansion of the Mallet CO_2 Removal Plant in West Texas.

Zachry has subcontracted engineering design work to The Pritchard Corp. of Overland Park, Kan.

The construction site is immediately west of the existing plant, about four miles west of Sundown in Hockley County. The Mallet plant recycles carbon dioxide used in an enhanced oil recovery project and has a capacity of 100 million cubic feet a day (MMcfd). The expansion project will increase the plant's processing capacity by 65 MMcfd.

Manpower levels for the construction project are expected to peak at about 300. While the number of area residents employed for the project cannot be predicted, Amoco encourages its contractors to use qualified local personnel when possible.

The existing Mallet plant recovers CO_2 and natural gas liquids from sour casinghead gas that is produced with oil when the reservoir is swept by alternating cycles of water and CO_2. Recovering the CO_2 improves the Largest frac proves successful

Mobil taps Wilcox Sand

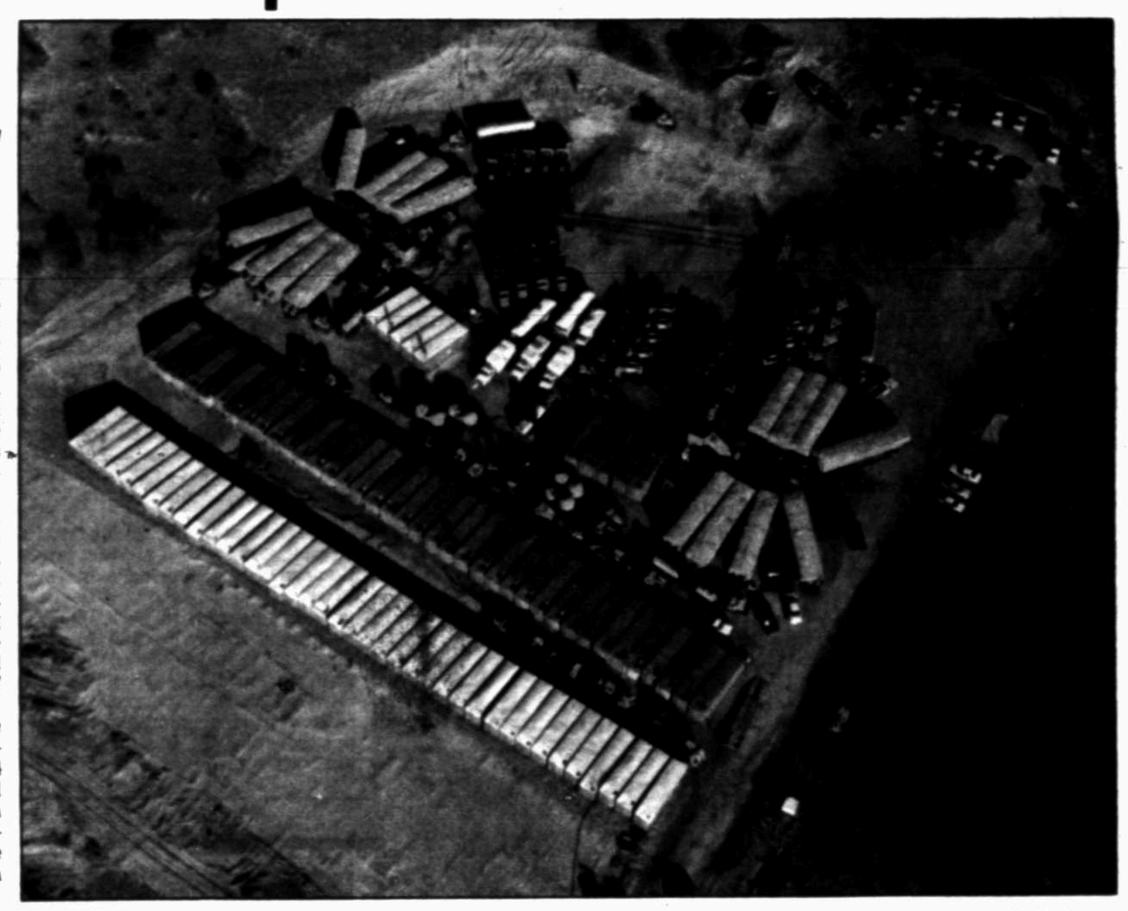

By JOHN PAUL PITTS
Business/Oil Editor

For almost 11 long, loud and grueling hours, 18 high pressure pump trucks roared like giant chained demons, unleashing 25,000 horsepower of hydraulic energy. The pump trucks strained to pump a gelled mixture of fluid and sand into solid rock. Finally, the rock yields to the intense pressure and the world's largest single zone, single stage hydraulic well fracture was completed.

The well was the E.B. Zachry Well No.7 in the Benavides field in Zapata County, 45 miles south of Laredo, and for Mobil Producing Texas and New Mexico it was a gamble that paid off. The massive fracturing technique brought a barely commercial well up to a highly successful well, that could be the prototype of many massive fracs to come.

The well which put the top of the Wilcox Sand at 9,187 ft. was completed at 9,366 ft. for 500 Mcfd on a 18/64 choke. Mobil had already completed and fractured several other wells in the area at lesser pressures and experience told them that a massive fracture might improve production rates significantly.

The massive fracture which was designed and executed by Dowell-Schlumberger called for the pumping of 6.3 million pounds of 20-40 sand, using 1.54 million gallons of frac fluid, at a rate averaging 70 barrels per minute and a pressure of 4,500 psi. The frac fluid was gelled while pumping and sand was added to the fluid by computer-controlled blending equipment, which added sand in progressively increasing concentrations. In all, the massive frac required 100 pieces of equipment and 10 hours and 40 minutes to complete.

File Photo

Upon completion of the stimulation the well tested at a rate of 4.2 million cubic feet of natural gas per day and 360 barrels of load water per day with a flowing pressure of 3,061.

Five wells are producing on the lease, including two in the Benevides field, and Mobil Texas & New Mexico Producing says future massive fracture stimulations in the field will be dependent on how well the E.B. Zachery No. 7 sustains production rates. The firm reports that production rates thus far are holding well.

Is import tax the only option for oil industry?

"There's more than one way to skin a cat," goes the old saying that reminds us to look at options. Some have obviously heeded this wisdom, because now we are being told there is more than one way to stabilize oil prices.

While I support a clean, no-exceptions crude oil import tax as an immediate (and I do mean immediate) remedy to collapsing oil prices, I am no longer convinced it is the only way ultimately to stabilize oil prices. As the back of the U.S. oil industry is pressed flatter to the wall, the more options we see cropping up.

At the Independent Petroleum Association of America's annual meeting in Dallas this week, much of the debate centered around whether or not to put a mandate for an oil import fee on the president. The position of the IPAA Emergency Action Task Force was that recommendations should not be put in the form of a mandate. "The president has other options," Task Force Chairman C. John Miller told me in a private breakfast meeting. "These recommendations were meant to give him ammunition to work with. One of the options he has is negotiation." Miller would not be specific. One gets the feeling from talking to Miller and other ranking IPAA members that there are options we don't know about yet.

Senator Phil Gramm's Oil & Gas Production Revitalization Act has been billed as an option. Basically, it would clean some of the regulatory garbage out of the industry, repeal the Windfall Profits Tax and require 50 percent of Strategic Petroleum Reserves to be purchased from domestic producers. The bill has received the support of the administration and most in the industry. But if there is anyone who believes this is a valid option for bringing relief to the industry, I have yet to meet them. For the most part, Gramm's bill is perceived purely as political cosmetics, designed to hide a sore spot. It is supported solely because it is viewed as an opportunity to rid the oil industry of some excess baggage.

This, however, is not to discount the option of legislative remedy. Asked how he would save the ailing oil industry, former Secretary of Energy James Schlesinger remarked that if he had to solve the problem, he would first try to provide an incentive remedy through the tax code. That failing, he would then consider an import tax. Over the long run, a legislative rememdy bringing relief through the tax code probably will be the best medicine for an ailing industry.

One possible tax code remedy being tossed about is a variable depletion allowance. The idea for such an allowance, based on world oil prices, was first mentioned to me several months back by Midland geologist Frank Ittner, who picked it up somewhere and passed it on to me to examine as an alternative way way to stabilize oil prices. At the time, however, I was so blinded by the notion that an oil import tax was the only viable option, that I could not catch the vision for his scheme, which was placed on the bottom of my "things to do" list.

The variable depletion allowance, however, just may be the ticket to stable oil prices, but to date it has captured the imagination of few in the industry.

One who does have the vision for the concept is Sherman Norton, economics of enhanced oil recovery projects by reducing the volume of CO_2 that must be purchased.

The Mallet expansion will use a membrane/solvent extraction process to remove about 98 percent of the carbon dioxide from the incoming gas stream.

The carbon dioxide will be reinjected at about 2,400 pounds per square inch pressure, using two compressors totaling 16,000 horsepower. Associated sulfur production from the Mallet complex will total 25 tons per day. The separate hydrocarbon gas stream will be processed at the nearby Slaughter Gasoline Plant.

The Mallet plant, Amoco's first carbon dioxide removal plant in Texas, began operations in July of 1985. It processes gas from the Amoco-operated Slaughter Estate, Frazier, and Central Mallet Units. Amoco began carbon dioxide injection in December 1984, and has currently injected 89 billion cubic feet since then. Amoco is currently injecting more than 167 MMcfd. The daily volume of carbon dioxide to be processed is expected to peak in the early 1990s.

Forty miles southwest of the Mallet plant, an estimated 150 construction workers are building another Amoco carbon dioxide removal plant. Manpower levels for the Wasson ODC Unit Carbon Dioxide Removal Plant in Yoakum County are expected to peak in excess of 300 by spring.

The plant will separate from the produced stream 73 MMcfd of CO_2 for reinjection, 14 long tons/day of sulfur, more than 3,000 b/d of NGL and nearly 5 MMcfd of residue gas.

Completion of the 80 MMcfd plant, about four miles northeast of Denver City, is scheduled for next summer. Contractor is KCI Constructors.

PITTS

president of Norton Drilling Co. of Lubbock, who has been one of the primary evangelists for the incentive concept to stabilize oil prices.

I met Norton at the IPAA meeting in Dallas and questioned him recently on his views about the variable depletion allowance and the use of incentives to revitalize the domestic industry.

"I think some version of a variable depletion allowance, along with an incentive for exploratory wells could restore the oil industry," said Norton. "A variable depletion allowance, would be tied to the alternative minimum tax, and may not help that much, but tax credits for exploratory wells would not be affected."

He explains how a variable depletion allowance would work: If oil prices were $15 and under, the depletion allowance would be 100 percent; at $20 per barrel, it would be 60 percent, and at $30 it would be 15 percent. Also involved would be plow-back provisions to keep the money in the oil patch and out of Colorado ranches and Florida condos. Tax credits for exploratory wells could operate the same way.

Norton says such a plan would provide the incentive to attract investment capital and put the oil field back to work, while keeping energy costs low for the consumer. At the same time, he says, putting more than 300,000 people back to work would make up for the loss of federal tax revenues.

"We could thumb our nose at OPEC and tell them if we can't control oil prices, we will control our return. We will continue to drill even if oil goes to $10," he gloated.

He said an import fee would penalize the rest of America by raising oil prices, but a domestic oil industry revitalized by drilling incentives would not cause oil prices to increase, but could even cause them to decrease even further.

"I think the reason everyone has charged blindly after an oil import tax, is because it is a quick-fix. Lord, knows I am hurting as a drilling contractor and could use a quick-fix, but in the long run I think drilling incentives would be best for all concerned," said Norton, "besides I don't think the public will set still for an import tax."

The incentive option is a great idea and I fully support it. I also support the market option to bring natural gas into the market place as a transportation fuel. Perhaps the healing of the domestic oil industry will rest with a variety of options. But in the meantime, a tourniquet — such as an import tax — to keep this industry from bleeding to death is probably in order. There is no healing a corpse.

Unexciting small wells steady producers

LYTLE, Texas (AP) — Some of the more than 5,000 pump jacks perched in the wheat and maize fields of southern Bexar County have been pulling sweet crude oil out of the ground since Eisenhower was president. They've rocked back and forth through boom times and bust, making a barrel or two a day, covering shallow wells that are, while trustworthy, more than a little dull.

But if they weren't, Robert Condit and Owen Good would not have chosen to add 112 pump jacks to the Bexar County collection this spring and summer. The sickening suspense that fills the moments before drilling stops on a wildcat is not for them. They are not adventurers, only businessmen, and they relegate their gambling to the tables of Las Vegas.

"We know in advance what it's going to cost us to drill and complete a well," Condit said recently, sipping coffee in the Little Brown Hut cafe, which, along with the cab of his pickup truck and the den of his house in San Antonio, serves as headquarters for C.G. Oil Co.

"We know what it's going to cost to produce a well and how much it's going to produce every day. There isn't a chance we're going to hit a gusher and get rich."

Neither Condit, an International Business Machines Corp. salesman for 18 years before he quit to launch his new career, nor Good, an independent producer since 1970 and Condit's friend since elementary school in the late 1940s, seem to mind. When a barrel of oil is worth no more than $15, the sure and steady course is the one they intend to follow.

"What we do is like going to a bank and buying a CD," said Condit, who with Good has owned C.G. Oil for five years. "It's that exciting. We're not taking risks. But we're still drilling wells."

They are not alone. Although the number of drilling permit applications filed at the Texas Railroad Commission has dropped by 55 percent since oil prices began to tumble in January, drilling continues.

Some of those projects will be launched because leases require a certain number of wells be completed within a certain period of time or, as Tenneco Oil Exploration & Production Co. president Philip Oxley said, because a company wants "to keep a certain amount of the pot boiling." Some still are launched to make money.

"To drill in Texas in this environment, generally there has to be a relatively low investment and low risk," said Greg Clock, a spokesman for Amoco Production Co. "But even at $13 a barrel, there are some prospects that can be profitable and even provide a reasonable rate of return on your investment. Relatively shallow-depth producers drilled in established oil production areas are still profitable."

The search for oil has not stopped, only slowed considerably and changed course. Drilling is not only less intense than in the past but less frequently of the chaney kind that discovers hydrocarbon deposits and adds to proven reserves.

"There are 800 rigs running out there," said Dallas independent operator Steve Lyons, "and you can bet that 99 percent of them are drilling the safe stuff."

The "safe stuff" is in known zones, close to already productive wells and often close to the surface, and drilling for it is more popular than drilling into the unknown. The number of permits issued across the country for exploratory wildcat wells is down 53.4 percent from this time one year ago, according to Petroleum Information Corp., while the number for development wells is down 49.7 percent.

Drilling in the Anachaco formation of the Fairfield Field in Bexar County is developmental and considered quite safe. Said Roger Carlton, a longtime Lytle drilling contractor: "It doesn't produce a whole lot at a time, but you can depend on it, and it lasts forever."

So confident of the Fairfield Field's profitability were Condit and Good that when West Texas intermediate crude oil was wallowing in April at its 7-year low of under $10 a barrel, they were in the midst of drilling a 30-well package north of Lytle.

The Anachaco formation and others in nearby fields have been drilled so often and so successfully that the partners said they had no trouble scaring up the average of $30,000 needed to complete each well.

Putting up an undisclosed sum themselves, they obtained the remainder from friends and backers who are in the oil business, too. Said Good: "If you're depending on doctors and dentists and little old school teachers to put their life savings into an oil well these days, you're dead in the water."

The shallow C.G. Oil wells will give the investor an 11 to 15 percent return on his dollar, said Good, taking lunch, as he did breakfast, at the Little Brown Hut. He worked it out on a paper napkin: A well that cost $30,000 to drill and complete and produces two barrels a day of oil that sells for $15 a barrel will earn nearly $11,000 in a year, lease costs aside.

Additional 1986 wells are planned by C.G. Oil Co. and will probably be drilled by its subsidiary, C.G. Drilling Co., created in February when Condit and Good bought out a small San Antonio energy company and obtained its two drilling rigs.

But although they own two companies, operate more than 100 projects and are responsible for hundreds of thousands of dollars (they've not yet celebrated their first $1 million revenue year), the partners said they do not plan to acquire any of the other trappings of the oil business that might increase their overhead and, in their view, lessen their fun.

"The people who are in trouble (from the oil price collapse) have got company cars. They've got engineers and geologists on staff. They're flying around in private planes. They've got gold jewelry dangling from their necks. They've got walnut-paneled offices," Condit said.

"We don't even have an office. We have two pickup trucks."

The two men do not, at first glance, belong in the portrait of the swaggering Texas oilman that was painted, accurately or not, during the late 1970s and early 1980s. They are likely to wear deck shoes as cowboy boots out into the field.

But Good sported a Rolex watch on a recent visit to one well site, where an eight-man crew from Dowell Schlumberger Inc. was at work with $800,000 of equipment, preparing the limestone formations underground for the pumping out of oil by one of C.G. Oil's pump jacks.

The job was not inexpensive, and neither was Good's Rolex. He was quick to point out, however, that hiring Dowell Schlumberger was a necessary business expense and that the watch was a gift, from Condit.

"I had visions of getting rich," Good said, referring to his move from Wichita, Kan., to Texas in 1970, when he entered the oil business with another partner. "I learned that this is not a get-rich-quick scheme. But the return on your investment here (in the Fairfield Field) is as good or better as with a 200-barrel-a-day well, just without the high glamor or the risk."

All 112 of the C.G. Oil pump jacks should be bobbing up and down across southern Bexar County any day now. None of them are expected to pull more than five barrels a day out of the ground at the beginning, and all are expected to pull fewer than two barrels a day after the first year.

Condit and Good said they are confident their Bexar County collection will continue top produce for generations. They said they would be satisfied should their wells never average more than even one barrel a day. But they draw the line of their easy-going attitude toward the oil business when it comes to price. They have been paid as little as $8.30 this year for a barrel of crude, and they would rather not be paid that little again.

"If we thought oil was going to be $14 a barrel forever, we probably wouldn't stay in business," Condit said. "But I fortunately don't know of an experts who are predicting that."

Alta completes acquisition, reports smaller 1986 losses

From Staff Reports

Alta Energy Corp. president R.F. Bailey announced acquisition of approximately $3,135,000 of oil and gas properties, securities and cash through a stock exchange offer that closed on Sept. 30. Additionally, Alta reported a loss of $94,288 for the fiscal year ended June 30, down from a loss of $142,975 for the prior year.

Through the exchange offer, Alta increased oil and gas reserves approximately 25 percent by acquiring proven reserves of approximately 120,000 barrels of oil and 1.45 Bcf of gas under 89 oil wells and 23 gas wells for $1,910,000. The acquisitions were primarily from limited partners in partnerships of which Alta is the general partner.

In addition, through the exchange offer, the company acquired approximately $300,000 of cash and $925,000 of its 15 percent convertible preferred, Series One Stock. For these assets, which will significantly increase the company's revenue and its asset base, Alta will issue approximately 4,180,000 shares of common stock and 1,880,000 shares of convertible preferred, Series Two Stock, which has a minimum dividend of 8 percent. According to Bailey, the exchange offer, in which 170 partners tendered interests, "is a major step in positioning Alta to weather the current downturn in the domestic industry and to take a more aggressive role in the near future."

The net loss of $94,288 for fiscal 1986 was due to decreased revenues as a result of decreased product prices and the sale of producing properties. Compared to the prior year, revenue decreased $952,000 (40.7%) from $2,340,000 to $1,388,000. Offsetting this decreased revenue were decreased expenses of $992,000 (38.6%). The product price decrease has essentially all been experienced during the last six months of the fiscal year. In December 1985, the company received $25.88 per barrel and $2.48 per Mcf for its oil and gas, respectively. In June 1986, the company received $11.83 per barrel and $1.31 per Mcf. Expense reductions were realized in all segments of the company's activities. The 1986 results do not recognize the impact of the exchange offer, which was not closed until after the end of the fiscal year.

Eagle success may help Texas coins

AUSTIN (AP) — Texas tourism officials hope the issuance of the American Eagle gold coin will help the sale of the popular Texas bullion commemorative medallions.

"The Lone Star Medallion bullion remains a good investment," said Rep. Ralph Wallace, D-Houston, who bought the first medallion issued. "An investment in the Lone Star Medallion not only benefits the buyer but all of Texas. A small portion of the price is used to help bring in more tourists to Texas and for other state projects."

Wallace said the medallions, which portray the front and back of the state seal, are produced in pure .999 gold and silver. They are sold at licensed coin dealers throughout the state.

The Texas Tourist Development Agency said the 24 karat gold medallions are made in four sizes, from one ounce to a tenth of an ounce. The silver coin is made in the one-ounce size.

The agency said that last week gold one-ounce medallions were selling for $425 to $450 plus about $20 for minting, handling and royalty. Silver one-ounce coins were about $5.75 plus $1 royalty.

About 10,000 medallions will be made in 1986, the agency said.

ARLINGTON, Texas (AP) — Employees at the General Motors assembly plant here say they aren't too concerned by rumors that the company plans to close down operations.

That's because they've heard the rumors before.

"We don't believe anything out here until it happens," a GM worker said during a shift change at the plant.

"It's a new rumor every month," said City Councilman Kelly Jones.

The Detroit News, quoting unidentified sources, reported the Arlington plant is one of nine nationwide scheduled to be shut down.

In Detroit, GM spokeswoman Nettie Seabrooks said the company would neither confirm nor deny the newspaper report.

Dave Perdue, president of United Auto Workers Local 276, said GM assured him the Detroit News report is speculation.

"When the company tells me that, I've got to go along with it," Perdue said.

However, Jones said he won't be surprised if the plant does close eventually.

"I think it's going to happen," Jones said. "General Motors isn't going to base their decision on how much we love GM or how much they love Arlington. It's a numbers decision, and the fact is that is now a very old plant."

The plant has 2,375 workers and is the city's largest taxpayer.

City Manager Bill Kirchoff said if the plant does close it would be a critical loss to the community. "It's hard to assess the economic value of that plant above and beyond the property taxes they pay.

"The reality is, there's very little the city can do if that's a strategic decision made by GM," Kirchhoff said.

Last week, the automaker announced plans to close several U.S. assembly and metal-fabricating plants by the end of 1987. General Motors reported a third-quarter loss of $338.5 million.

The Arlington plant makes the Chevrolet Monte Carlo and the Oldsmobile Cutlass Supreme. Sales of the mid-sized vehicles have been sluggish.

In April, GM laid off nearly 2,000 assembly workers when demand for the cars slipped.

R.E. Peterson, president of the Local 276 shop committee, said plant workers are concerned about the possibility of a plant shutdown. But he doesn't place any significance on the latest newspaper story.

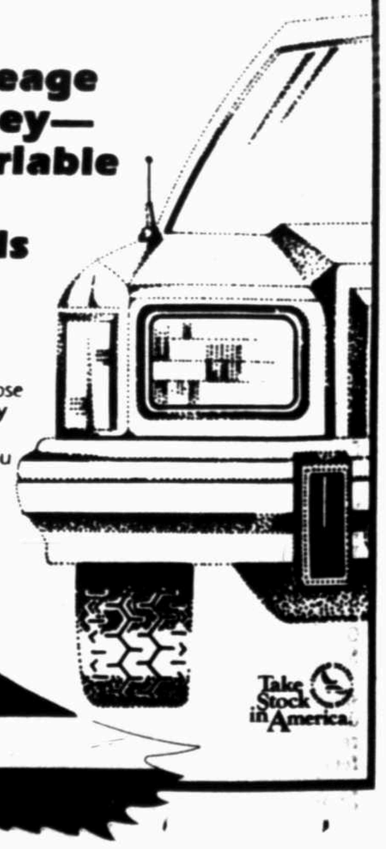

"I think they did a lot of speculating," Peterson said. "I don't think they really have it together on this article. I think they've taken a collage of information and put it together and made a story. Some of these things I just don't agree with."

Basin, National rig counts advance

The number of working oil rigs in the Permian Basin leaped 11 this week, to 94, while the count in the United States rose to 829, up 16 from the 813 total posted last week, according to Hughes Tool Co.

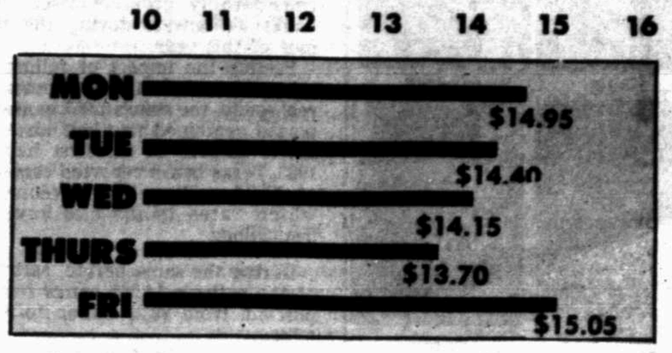

Efforts to use up drilling budgets before year-end is what most of the gain can be attributed to, according to oil company personel.

The rig utilization picture is also showing a healthier look with 85 rigs active in the Permian Basin out of 566 available, according to figure released by Smith Tool. Those figures represent a 15 percent utilization, up from a pitiful 11 percent in July. The U.S. utilization stands at 19 percent.

Jobe: Texas now stripper well state

AUSTIN — Railroad Commissioner Clark Jobe says Texas has become a stripper oil well state.

According to August 1986 production figures, oil well production dropped to an average of 9.9 barrels per well per day for the first time in Texas oil production history. The state's average production for August was 2,061,015 barrels per day.

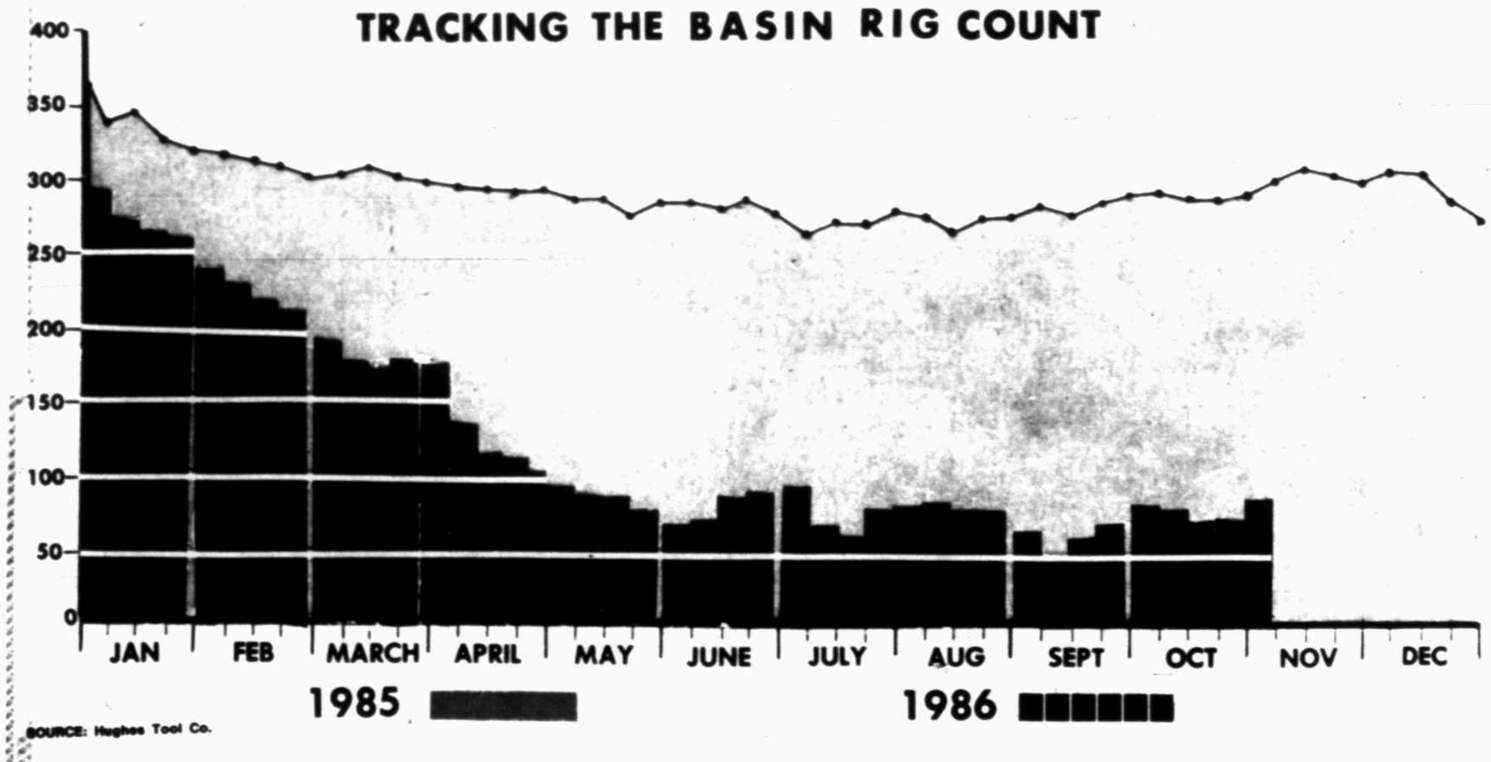

By industry definition, an oil well is labeled a stripper well if it produces 10 barrels or less per day.

The 1985 average production was 10.33 barrels per well per day, according to December 1985 figures. Average production fell 4.16 percent per well in eight months, a 6.2 percent annual reduction.

"You can chalk this decline up to imported oil. We're not drilling any wells, to speak of. Meanwhile, we're unloading tanker after tanker of foreign oil at U.S. docks," adds Jobe.

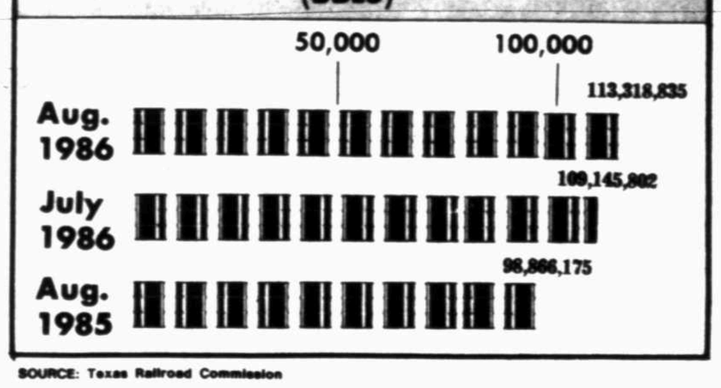

"In September, we imported seven million barrels per day. That's exactly the amount we used in motor fuel. Do you realize that if the foreign tap go turned off, the whole country would come to a screeching halt?" he asked.

Tallest platform goes up off Louisiana coast

From Staff Reports

NEW ORLEANS — One of the world's tallest oil and gas production platforms will be installed this week when Mobil Oil Exploration & Producings Southeast, Inc. (MOEPSI), an affiliate of Mobil Oil Corp., launches its Green Canyon 18 platform in the Gulf of Mexico 125 miles south of Morgan City, Louisiana.

The platform will have 30 well slots and is designed to accommodate production of up to 20,000 barrels of crude oil and 20 million cubic feet of natural gas per day. Initial production is expected in the spring of 1987.

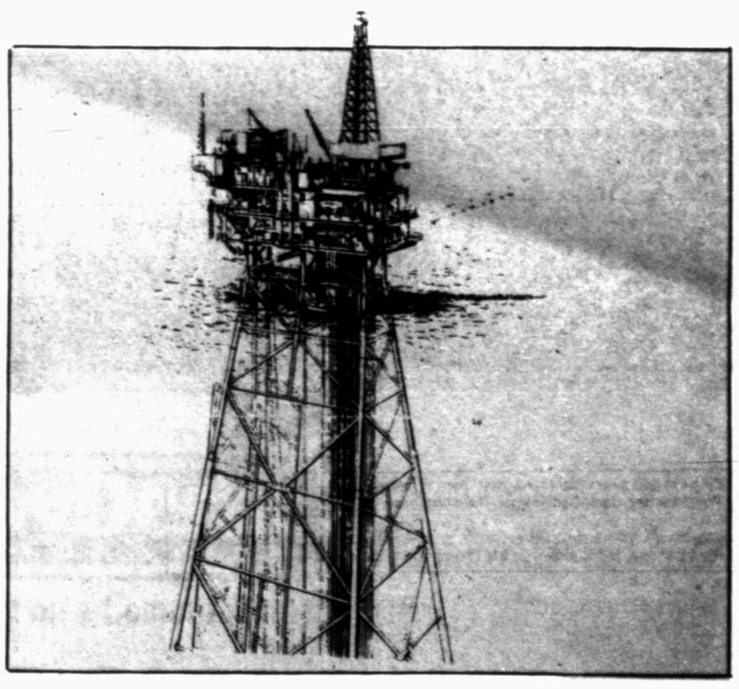

When completed, the Green Canyon 18 platform will measure 1,075 feet from the seafloor to the top of the drilling derrick, making it the tallest platform operated by Mobil and almost twice the height of the Center Tower II in Fort Worth.

The 15,200-ton, 815-foot tall jacket, a steel structure that supports the platform's decks and associated facilities, will be launched from a barge in 760 feet of water, uprighted and lowered into position on or about November 4. The jacket will be secured by 16 steel pilings, each 84 inches in diameter and up to 440 feet long, which will be driven into the seafloor by underwater hammers.

After the piledriving work is completed, the deck section and drilling rig will be installed. A compact, three-level topside design will include drilling and production facilities, along with living quarters, repair shop, warehouse, electrical shop, laboratory, central control and switchgear building. The total weight of the facilities to be installed on the jacket offshore will be 5,188 tons.

MOEPSI is operator and has a 55 percent interest in the Green Canyon 18 project. Bechtel, Inc. of Houston was the project general contractor and the platform was constructed by Gulf Marine Fabricators, Inc. in Ingleside, Texas. The installation will be performed by Heerema Marine Contractors S.A.

MOEPSI and its partners acquired the rights to Green Canyon Block 18 for $31.1 million in Federal Outer Continental Lease Sale 66 in October, 1981. A wildcat discovery well tested in 1982 at a sustained rate of 600 barrels of oil and 600 Mcfd of gas on a 19/64-inch choke. The Green Canyon 18-2 appraisal well tested at a rate of 2,053 barrels of oil and 1.7 MMcfd of gas in 1983. Six wells have been drilled in the field to date, four of which were drilled through an underwater template beneath the platform.

Mobil Oil's Green Canyon 18 platform will stand in 1,075 feet of water 125 miles south of Morgan City, Louisiana.

Texas banks rate low in nationwide survey

AUSTIN (AP) — According to a new study released by Sheshunoff Ratings Services, Texas banks posted considerably greater losses than banks nationwide during the first half of this year.

Feeling the impact of falling oil prices and a slump in commercial real estate, the state's 1,957 banks reported combined first-half losses of $247.4 million. In the first half of 1985, Texas banks reported earnings of $652.2 million, said Sheshunoff, which rates banks and savings institutions.

During the same period, earnings of the nation's 14,248 banks fell 2.6 percent, from $9.27 billion to $9.03 billion.

Non-performing loans made up 4.5 percent of total loans by Texas banks during the first half. Such loans for banks nationwide represented approximately 2.9 percent of total first-half loans, Sheshunoff said.

The Sheshunoff study is based on the Federal Reserve Bank Board's June 30 preliminary report of condition and income. But Texas' bank holding companies have subsequently posted considerable third-quarter losses or diminished earnings.

First City Bancorp of Houston posted a third-quarter net loss of $47.9 million, compared with net income of $10.8 million a year ago.

InterFirst Corp. of Dallas reported net income of $2.1 million for the third quarter, down 87 percent from $16.2 million last year.

MCorp of Dallas posted net income of $7.1 million, down 78 percent from $32.9 million in last year's third quarter.

RepublicBank Corp. of Dallas said its third-quarter net income fell 55 percent to $16 million, compared with $35.7 million a year earlier.

Despite the slowdown in the state's economy, the Sheshunoff report ranked seven Texas banks among the nation's largest 100 in total assets.

RepublicBank Dallas was 19th with assets of $15.4 billion; Texas Commerce Bank-Houston ranked 24th with $10.8 billion; InterFirst Bank Dallas was 33rd with $8.6 billion; MBank Dallas ranked 47th with $7.1 billion; First City National Bank of Houston was 57th with $6.2 billion; Allied Bank of Texas ranked 81st with $4.8 billion and MBank Houston was 83rd with $4.6 billion.

Citibank of New York was the nation's largest, with $142.5 billion in assets.

Judge could force Love Field to accommodate Continental

DALLAS (AP) — A state district judge says he has ruled that Continental Airlines should be allowed to operate out of Dallas Love Field and that he expects to order the city next week to give the airline gate space.

Judge Harlan Martin said earlier this week he issued a summary judgment in his chambers Friday in a lawsuit that Houston-based Continental filed against the city of Dallas.

Martin said the issues in the case centered on whether Continental intended to offer only intrastate flights to and from Love Field — a requirement being met by the other two airlines using the airport.

Continental "met that requirement," Martin said. "Therefore, the city should offer it a lease."

While declining to comment on the exact terms of the ruling, City Attorney Analeslie Muncy said Tuesday that the city will probably appeal.

City Manager Charles Anderson said his biggest concern is the effect that the ruling could have on an agreement reached nearly 10 years ago requiring major airlines to use only Dallas-Fort Worth International Airport.

Foreclosures sweeping Texas neighborhoods

HIGHLAND PARK, Texas (AP) — Mansions valued at fancy six figures are joining thousands of more modest tract houses on the auction block in Texas as economic hard times stir up a blizzard of foreclosure notices in virtually every neighborhood of the state.

Financial troubles — caused by slumps in the energy, agriculture and real estate sectors — are touching hearth and home in the enclaves of wealth in Dallas, Houston, Midland, Abilene and throughout the Texas heartland.

Homes of oil and corporate executives are joining those of construction workers and clerks on foreclosure posting lists.

In the lush Dallas suburbs of Highland Park and University Park, speculators who once struck gold by redeveloping lots are left holding half-million dollar palaces that nobody wants to buy. Many face foreclosure.

In River Oaks and Hedwick Village, Houston neighborhoods where Mercedes are more common than crab grass, mansions are being marketed at fire sale rates by hard-pressed owners who seek to get out with credit and reputation intact.

More than 40,000 properties have gone on the foreclosure auction block in the last two years in Texas, and several times that number have been "posted", or notified of intent to foreclose.

"They are all over the place," says Ken Edelman of Bacca Publications, a Houston firm that reports on real estate activity. "They're in just about every neighborhood you can think of."

In Highland Park and University Park, the Dallas "Park Cities" suburbs favored by the wealthy, hard times are sinking speculators by the dozens. Foreclosure Listing Service Inc. shows 77 foreclosures posted in the Park Cities in 1986, compared to just 14 for all of 1985.

"Many of the people who owned some of these (foreclosed) residences were energy company executives," said William Brueggeman, professor of real estate at Southern Methodist University's Edwin L. Cox School of Business.

"But the more significant problem is that it was an extremely hot market for six solid years and an incredible price appreciation was going on in the Park Cities," he said. "Twenty percent a year for six years is not out of line."

Brueggeman said that skyrocking valuations left many small homes, some of which were built 50 or more years ago, sitting on lots worth hundreds of thousands of dollars. Developers scrambled to buy the sites and raze the old houses to build modern, spacious homes, usually on borrowed money.

"What builders did was to buy a site, tear the house down, redevelop it and sell at a price range of $500,000 to $700,000," he said. "For a two- to three-year period, there was a brisk market but they basically overdid it."

When the market softened, developers found themselves holding heavily mortgaged property which they couldn't sell. Banks started foreclosing.

David Bywater, senior vice president at InterFirst Bank Park Cities, said the foreclosure rate in the area is at an all-time high.

"Most of these foreclosure situations involve people who did not have the financial wherewithal and were speculating in the Park Cities," said Bywater.

Elaine Schneider bought a run-down house across the street from her home and planned to rebuild on the lot for a tidy profit. But the property she bought for $200,000 in August 1985 was posted for foreclosure last month.

"I stayed with that one as long as possible," she said. "But even the banks said there is only so much you can do."

Ms. Schneider, a 15-year real estate veteran, adds: "I have never seen a market like this."

Edelman said that though scores of houses in River Oaks and other lavish Houston neighborhoods have been posted for foreclosure, most of the homeowners find a way out of their problems or manage to salvage something from their homes.

As an example, he said, a resident may live in a $500,000 home that has a $250,000 lien. When foreclosure is posted, he may sell it for $400,000, pay off the loan and still pocket $150,000, his credit intact.

"It's a win, win, win situation," said Edelman. "The seller gets some money back, the buyer gets a bargain and the lender can retire the loan."

Eventually, though, such bargain selling can affect the basic value of homes in the neighborhood. A resident with a high mortgage could then find himself owing more for his home than it is worth.

AP LaserPhoto

Rental specialty stores, such as Blockbuster Videos at Medallion Center in Dallas, are largely responsible for video rentals and sales exceeding movie theater revenues for the first time during 1985.

DALLAS (AP) — Dallas and Philadelphia share the title of the most saturated video rental markets, but Dallas should take the lead in less than six months, industry analysts say.

The hot competition has companies fighting for a share of the estimated $5 billion Americans spend to rent movies each year, and analysts note that VCRs are in up to 40 percent of the 90 million TV households, providing a fertile ground for the movie-rental business.

But customers are changing their viewing habits and making the operation of rental outlets an expensive proposition, the founder of a chain of Dallas video stores says.

Gary and Nancy Meinershagen founded Video Works here five years ago with one store and 175 titles. They now have 16 locations and carry up to 6,000 titles in each store.

Viewers are no longer just interested in the latest hits. They want more of a variety of movies, Meinershagen says.

"Today, only about 25 percent of our business is the latest releases," he said. "That wasn't the case a year ago. Then, everybody wanted just the hits."

In 1985, video-movie sales and rentals exceeded revenues of movie theaters for the first time in history, according to industry reports.

Nevertheless, Meinershagen says it was easier to start video movie rental businesses in the past.

"Starting back in 1981, we were given the chance to grow before we had heavy competition," he said. "Today, if you're not part of a big company, you don't have much chance to succeed."

He says one must begin with 6,000 titles worth about $240,000 and spend about $10,000 per month to obtain the new releases needed to keep customers coming back for more.

Blockbuster opened its first video store in Dallas a year ago. It now has $10.6 million in movie rental assets with five stores in Dallas, says president Ken Anderson, who adds there are plans to open an additional four outlets by year's end.

Some of the smaller outlets are now suffering and facing hard times financially, analysts say.

One firm that had to file for bankruptcy protection under Chapter 11 recently told the Dallas Times Herald about the problems in the video rental business.

"You begin in a small town that will support two stores comfortably, and suddenly there's 12 to 15," said the firm's spokesman, who asked that his name not be used. "Everybody's got one, every grocery store and every corner convenience store. You pie is divided up more ways."

A larger store can move into a neighborhood with 15 or 20 mom-and-pop-type stores and survive with no problems," Butler of Video Superstores says. "Small stores, nowadays, cannot survive."

Less production hurting economy

AUSTIN, Texas (UPI) — A downturn in Texas' oil production has hurt the state's economy about as badly as depressed petroleum prices, state Comptroller Bob Bullock said today.

Bullock said Texas oil wells have produced 51.1 million barrels less during the past fiscal year than the year before.

"The drop in production was worth $772.1 million at current market prices," he said. "So much attention on declining oil prices may have masked the fact that production in Texas has slipped by more than 140,000 barrels a day."

Bullock said tax records show that Texas wells were producing about 2.3 million taxable barrels of oil per day in mid-1985. By August 1986, production had dropped to slightly more than 2 million taxable barrels a day.

The downturn in production alone cost the state about $35.5 million in severance taxes during the one-year period, based on the comptroller's estimated average oil price per barrel.

Bullock also said active rotary rigs operating in Texas fell by about 60 percent and drilling permits were down by more than 50 percent.

The downturn in oil prices and production sent the state's economy into a tailspin earlier this year and caused a $3.5 billion revenue shortfall.

Professor's bright idea pays dividends for university

Los Angeles Times —
Washington Post News Service

WASHINGTON — No one knew quite what to do when Prof. Mark Spikell approached George Mason University officials a few years ago with an intriguing idea that he hoped could bring both of them money and recognition.

Spikell wanted paid time off from the state-supported Northern Virginia school to develop an invention: a high-tech clipboard to translate handwriting into computer data. It would allow sales orders scribbled by a traveling sales agent, for example, to be entered directly into the company's computer.

The problem was that the university had no policy governing its professors' products. In the end, Spikell and George Mason made a friendly deal; Spikell got the time off, and the university will get a share of the revenue if the invention, called DataPad, makes money when it is marketed next summer.

The outcome is not always so peaceful when universities and their professors sit down to negotiate ownership and revenue rights to "intellectual property," as a growing number are doing.

Money is one reason. Royalties from professors' inventions offer an attractive source of cash to universities suffering from budget cuts. Most inventions do not yield vast wealth, but in totality can be big business.

Stanford University, for example, made $3.9 million in gross royalties last year from products including a computer program to assist with airplane design. The University of Virginia makes $1 million a year from 126 licensed products, most of them medical devices or drugs. So far George Mason has made only a few thousand dollars.

"Clearly the university deserves some return because they've given me a lot of encouragement and support," Spikell said of his deal with George Mason.

One problem case that still is talked about in academic circles involves Stephen Wolfram, a brilliant young physicist who left the California Institute of Technology four years ago in a bitter high-stakes dispute over ownership of a computer software program he designed. Wolfram, winner of a MacArthur Foundation "genius award," defected to Princeton's Institute of Advanced Studies, where he negotiated an agreement that lets him own the rights to his future inventions.

At the time, CalTech had no written policy governing ownership of computer software, which remains the thorniest area in intellectual property disputes. It later wrote regulations that give the university extensive rights and most of the royalties.

Spurred by inventions such as Spikell's and by a new state law, George Mason University's Board of Visitors recently approved tentative rules governing employees' inventions that can be patented and copyrighted. The law, passed this year by the Virginia General Assembly, requires all state-supported schools to draft intellectual property policies and is part of a growing academic interest in entrepreneurial ventures.

"We're always looking for the one invention that will make us rich," said Ralph Pinto, patent administrator at the University of Virginia, which has a well-developed program begun a decade ago.

Policies drafted by universities range all over the map. But many, including George Mason's, allow faculty to keep the rights and royalties from their copyrighted books or works of art. Patent policies, on the other hand, often require inventors to hand over ownership and a share of the revenues to the university.

A 1984 survey by the Society of University Patent Administrators found that half the 127 institutions it polled had adopted or revised policies in the last five years, and only four had none. The group's national membership has more than doubled in the last three years, from fewer than 200 to its current 500.

Some say a properly written policy can keep inventive professors from deserting academia for well-paying jobs in private industry, as happened with some of the nation's most gifted biotechnology researchers in the late 1970s.

"Historically we have given our best and brightest professors a black and white choice: Stay in the religious institution of chastity and obedience, or leave the institution and be an entrepreneur," Spikell said.

Davis issues $7 million challenge to Pickens

From Staff Reports

Danny Davis, the outspoken president of Texas Ranger Oil Co., Houston, opposes the Wall Street approach to restructuring the oil industry embraced by T. Boone Pickens — and to prove his point, has issued a drilling challenge to the Amarillo oilman.

Rules of the year-long contest are straightforward: each is to drill onshore, Texas oil prospects with a budget of $7 million, including all overhead, lease acquisition, drilling and completion costs. The winner will be the company finding more oil as certified by a third-party energy firm. The loser will donate one month's production from his best discovery to a charity of the winner's choice.

Davis chose Pickens as the target of his challenge because he sees the Amarillo oilman as largely responsible for many of the industry's current woes.

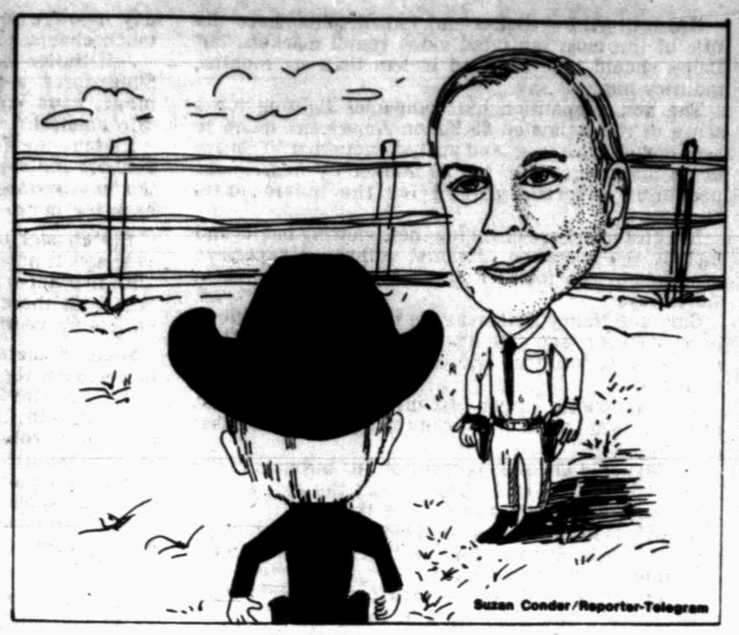

"Pickens has diverted many companies' exploration budgets from drilling into self-protecting, stock buy-back programs at a cost of hundreds of thousands of jobs and a greatly weakened national security," Davis says.

"Even Mesa's stockholders will benefit more from a healthy, active domestic drilling program than they will from the Master Limited Partnerships and the collapse of domestic drilling," Davis claims.

Davis is confident that his approach to finding oil — using traditional methods integrated with modern technology, a low operating overhead, and using outside investors and independent geologists — will give him and his small staff the edge over Pickens, as well as provide a "shot in the arm" to a battered industry in need of a banner to rallyaround.

Davis says he has taken it upon himself to reunite oil operators with a common cause of putting men and equipment back to work.

Pickens has yet to publicly respond to Davis' challenge.

AGA: Gas industry moving aggressively

From Staff Reports

Current conditions have put the natural gas industry in the most competitive position in its history, says American Gas Association (AGA) president George H. Lawrence.

"While being caught at the crossroads of low oil prices, weak demand and federal restraints on the use of gas, the natural gas industry is responding by moving ahead with aggressive marketing programs designed to capture new markets and to stimulate growth in existing markets," Lawrence says.

The key elements enabling the industry to turn what appears to same to be a "deadlocked" position into an era of opportunity are abundant gas supply and competitive prices, according to the AGA president.

A three trillion cubic foot deliverability surplus will last a few more years. The current low level of drilling activity means the present excess gas supply bubble will likely dissipate by the 1989-90 period, Lawrence says. When the bubble is finally absorbed, some predict shortages will be close behind.

"This is not true," says AGA chairman Edmund Schroer. "When the bubble disappears, supply and demand will come into balance.

There will be adequate supplies of natural gas for delivery to consumers due to the sizeable U.S. reserve base and extensive delivery system. In addition, Canada has significant long-term supplies that are available at competitive prices in some U.S. markets.

"The fact is, with gas supply and demand in balance and no federal price controls on exploration and drilling, for the first time in the modern gas industry, gas producers can respond to new demand," Schroer says. "Admittedly, a major turnaround in gas exploration will not take place overnight."

That is why 'bridge' gas supplies are so important.

As the bubble dwindles, there could be as much as 1.6 to 2.5 Tcf per year of natural gas available within 12 months, as needed. These additional supplies could increase to 3 Tcf per year by 1990 when new Canadian gas projects are completed.

These supplies will satisfy demand from the time the bubble dissipates until the time revitalized gas prone exploration and development activity brings on new conventional supplies for the long term, the AGA officials state.

The cost of producing these new supplies will not cause a rise in the price of gas to consumers — natural gas will continue to be competitively priced. As a matter of fact, prices to residential consumers, which have stabilized during the past few years, will be declining by six percent this winter as compared to last (on a nationwide basis), will decline about the same amount next year, and should track inflation thereafter. Natural gas will remain the consumers' best energy buy.

Therefore, the industry is not focusing on shortages, but on how to increase gas demand.

The natural gas industry is involved in technology development directed at providing new more efficient gas equipment to more efficiently and economically serve major new markets. The industry also is initiating ambitious marketing programs to make gas customers more aware of this new technology and the benefits of gas service in these new markets.

Arco continues property sales

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Atlantic Richfield Co. says it has reached agreements to sell the bulk of about 900 small and remote oil fields put up for sale in January.

The 900 fields put up for sale accounted for only about 10 percent of Arco's production and 4 percent of its profits at the time.

Arco's interests in about 600 fields in Arkansas, Colorado, Kansas, Montana, Nebraska, New Mexico, North Dakota, Oklahoma, Texas, Utah and Wyoming have also been sold.

The sale involved a joint venture of Roswell, N.M.-based Diamond A Cattle Co., headed by former Arco chairman Robert O. Anderson, and Lohrho PLC of London.

Bankruptcy filings reach record high

DALLAS (AP) — People and companies flocked to North Texas' bankruptcy court in record numbers during fiscal 1986, bettering last year's already dismal pace by more than 50 percent, officials say.

The case loads are getting so heavy, that a new bankruptcy judge will be appointed to help handle it, said Michael Youdin, chief clerk for the North District of Texas' U.S. Bankruptcy Court.

The district — with offices in Dallas, Fort Worth and Lubbock — reported 9,204 petitions for the fiscal year ending Sept. 30. The figure is up by more than half from the record-high 6,085 petitions filed in fiscal 1985.

In comparison, only 1,848 petitions were filed in fiscal 1980.

"Everybody's swamped with bankruptcy work," said Sander Esserman, who two years ago was the only attorney at Stutzman & Bromberg doing bankruptcy work. Now he is one of four.

The U.S. Bankruptcy Code offers three protection options:

- Chapter 7 petitions, which allow companies to liquidate to pay off their debts, increased 66.5 percent for the year to 5,755 petitions.
- Individuals wanting to stave off the bill collectors seek Chapter 13 protection. In excess of 50 percent more people filed those petitions, bringing the total to 2,294.
- Chapter 11 petitions, which protect companies in most cases until they can come up with a new business plan, increased 2.8 percent to 1,155.

HOUSTON (AP) — Texas Air Corp. is seeking to pay less than it originally offered for People Express Inc. because of the carrier's worsened financial problems, officials said Friday.

Texas Air officials also announced Friday completion of a $158 million purchase of Frontier Airlines. The final purchase price was $18 million less than planned because of the carrier's decline of assets, spokesman Rick Scott said.

In September, the Houston-based holding company offered stocks and securities valued at $298 million to People Express shareholders for the carrier and its subsidiary, Frontier.

"What we're discussing with People Express is a change in the amount of stock and securities that we would exchange for People Express stock because of the worsened financial condition of People Express," Texas Air spokesman Bruce Hicks said.

The negotiations include changes in the airline's lease at Newark International Airport and the possibility of lending additional money, on a secured basis, prior to the merger if conditions are met.

Officials said a Texas Air subsidiary, Continental Airlines, has agreed to allow travel agents to write Continental tickets for travel on People Express without concern for its financial woes.

The third-quarter earnings of People Express have not been released, but its problems have worsened since the company reported a $133 million loss in the first half of this year, Hicks said.

The Department of Transportation gave a final approval on the People Express-Texas Air merger last week, pending debtholder approval. The acquisition of Frontier is one of several conditions established by Texas Air as requirements for its purchase of People Express.

Four honored with Hall of Fame induction

The Permian Basin Petroleum Museum has announced the election of four prominent area oilmen to the Petroleum Hall of Fame.

Elected to the Hall of Fame were Mac O. Boring, Sr. (deceased) formerly of San Angelo, Midland and Ft. Worth; Fred T. Hogan, Midland; John J. Redfern, Jr. (deceased), Midland; and Clayton W. Williams, Sr. (deceased), Ft. Stockton.

The Petroleum Hall of Fame honors those persons who have made outstanding contributions to the development of the petroleum industry, or who have served as worthy examples of service, strength of character and achievement to those in the industry.

The honorees will be officially inducted into the Hall at a gala dinner to be held in Midland in late Spring.

Mac O. Boring, Sr. began work with Gulf Oil in 1918. He launched Gulf's leasing program in the Permian Basin, opened Gulf's Midland office, and then transferred to Ft. Worth as drilling and production superintendent for West Texas. Boring retired from Gulf in 1945 to join his son in forming Dixilyn Drilling Co. Boring died in 1966.

Fred T. Hogan was a Wyoming cattle rancher and oilman who moved to Texas in 1924 as an oil scout. With his father, T.S. Hogan, he arranged the sale of the giant J.T. McElroy ranch in 1927 and the sale of the T.G. Hendrick ranch in 1929. With his father, Hogan built the Midland Petroleum Building, only to lose control of the building after the great stock market crash of 1929. Hogan stayed on as a broker and janitor, then began successfully drilling wells near McCamey and in Crockett County. Hogan was a strong civic worker, serving as Midland's mayor and on numerous boards. Hogan and his wife, Novadean, now live in Midland and Scottsdale, Arizona.

John J. Redfern, Jr., a civil engineer and geologist, moved from Oklahoma City to Midland in 1939. He was a partner in Redfern and Herd, Inc. from 1946 to 1961. He formed Redfern Oil Co. in 1956, merging it with Flag Oil Corp. in 1969. He also formed Pennant Oil Ltd. in Canada, later Pennant-Pum Oils Ltd. Redfern became chairman of the board of Flag-Redfern in 1983. Redfern died in 1986.

Clayton W. Williams, Sr. was an oilman, petroleum and electrical engineer, rancher, historian and civic leader. As chief engineer and geologist for Texon Oil and Land Co., he recommended drilling the University No. 1-B in Reagan County, which in 1929 became the deepest producing well in the world at that time. Williams authored various histories of the Permian Basin, including The Last Frontier. Williams passed away in 1983.

The men were elected in a special joint meeting of the museum's boards. These four electees bring the Hall of Fame honorees to a total of 68, including some two-man teams. A maximum of four honorees are elected every other year from among candidates whose names have been submitted by the public.

Dalton

Q. I've admired Timothy Dalton ever since I saw him in "The Lion in Winter." He never receives any publicity, however. Could you tell me about him?

Kelly Anne
Plainsboro, N.J.

A. He's 40, from Colwyn Bay, North Wales, but he spent part of his youth in London acting with the National Youth Theater. While in his late teens, he made his professional debut in the classic "Coriolanus" at London's Queens Theater, and then studied for two years at that city's prestigious Royal Academy of Dramatic Arts.

Like many RADA graduates, he then went into the repertory system, in his case in Birmingham, to stretch his mastery of different roles. Shortly afterward, he got the role that you noticed, that of King Philip of France in "The Lion in Winter." (One of the film's stars, Peter O'Toole, suggested him for it.) Several years after that, he starred in the remake of "Wuthering Heights," "Mary, Queen of Scots," "Agatha" and two dubious ventures, "Flash Gordon" and Mae West's "Sextette."

His TV appearances have also run the gamut from the classic "Jane Eyre" to "The Master of Ballantrae," "Centennial" and "Sins" with Joan Collins.

His recent movie outings are also pretty varied, from the grim "The Doctor and the Devils" to the new, cartoonish "Brenda Starr" with Brooke Shields. His next film, which started shooting in September, is also quite a departure and one that will undoubtedly guarantee him loads of publicity. As you may well know, he's the new James Bond, having edged out the "Remington Steele"-bound Pierce Brosnan, and is in production with his first Bond feature, "The Living Daylights." Others are set to follow.

He's been involved in a tumultuous decade-long relationship with Vanessa Redgrave. They do not, reportedly, talk much about politics.

Q. Edward Woodward of "The Equalizer" has been one of my favorite actors for years but I don't know much about him. Could you tell me a little bit about him and whether the show will be on all this season?

Teresa Merner
Lancaster, Ohio

A. He's 56, from Croyden, England, a former aspiring journalist who, at 16, won a scholarship to the Royal Academy of Dramatic Arts. During that experience, he not surprisingly decided to become an actor instead. He stayed a year before going off into repertory and slowly building a reputation as one of the finest, most flexible actors in England.

Most of his dramatic performances have been seen here, in films such as "Becket," "Young Winston," "King David" and notably, "Breaker Morant," and in TV productions such as "Winston Churchill: The Wilderness Years" and "A Christmas Carol" starring George C. Scott.

Regarding his current stint on TV over here: "The Equalizer" has a 13-episode commitment from CBS for this season, but there are no guarantees of anything in prime time, especially in the case of this show. The planned cross-pollination between "The Equalizer" and "Magnum P.I." on several episodes should raise the ratings of both, at least for awhile.

He and second wife Michelle have a 3-year-old daughter. He has a grown son from his first marriage.

Baryshnikov

Q. Could you tell me if Mikhail Baryshnikov is married or has a girlfriend? Also, I heard a rumor that he's going to leave the American Ballet Theater. Is that true?

B.K.
Walker, La.

A. He isn't married; he does have a girlfriend, a model, but since his romantic situations have been known to change suddenly, this may or may not still be current by the time you read this column. As for his leaving ABT, he has no plans to do that at the moment.

He is, like the others, on hiatus from the company at the moment, though, and is using it to make a new movie, "Giselle," co-starring ABT's Leslie Browne (his romantic interest in "The Turning Point"). Being shot in Italy, it's a love story set against the production of the ballet "Giselle" and is tentatively set for release next summer.

In his off-hours, he's also been busy in the garment trade — his first line of bodywear is due out in stores next spring.

Douglas

Q. I've always been a fan of Mike Douglas and I miss his TV show. Is he currently doing anything?

Barbara Toreso
Upland, Calif.

A. According to his agent, he's negotiating for another TV show, which, will be either a talk show or a game show. As we go to press, no deals have been signed.

Q. Please tell me a few things about Boris Becker, like how tall he is and where he lives. Also, I'm curious about his social life.

Angie Lopez
Baton Rouge, La.

A. The 19-year-old is 6-foot 2-inches, from Leimen, West Germany, but despite his superhero status in his homeland, he lives in Monte Carlo, a tax haven, to shield his growing earnings. (Newest source of major earnings away from tennis: an endorsement deal with Coke.) His social life is very active, as one might expect.

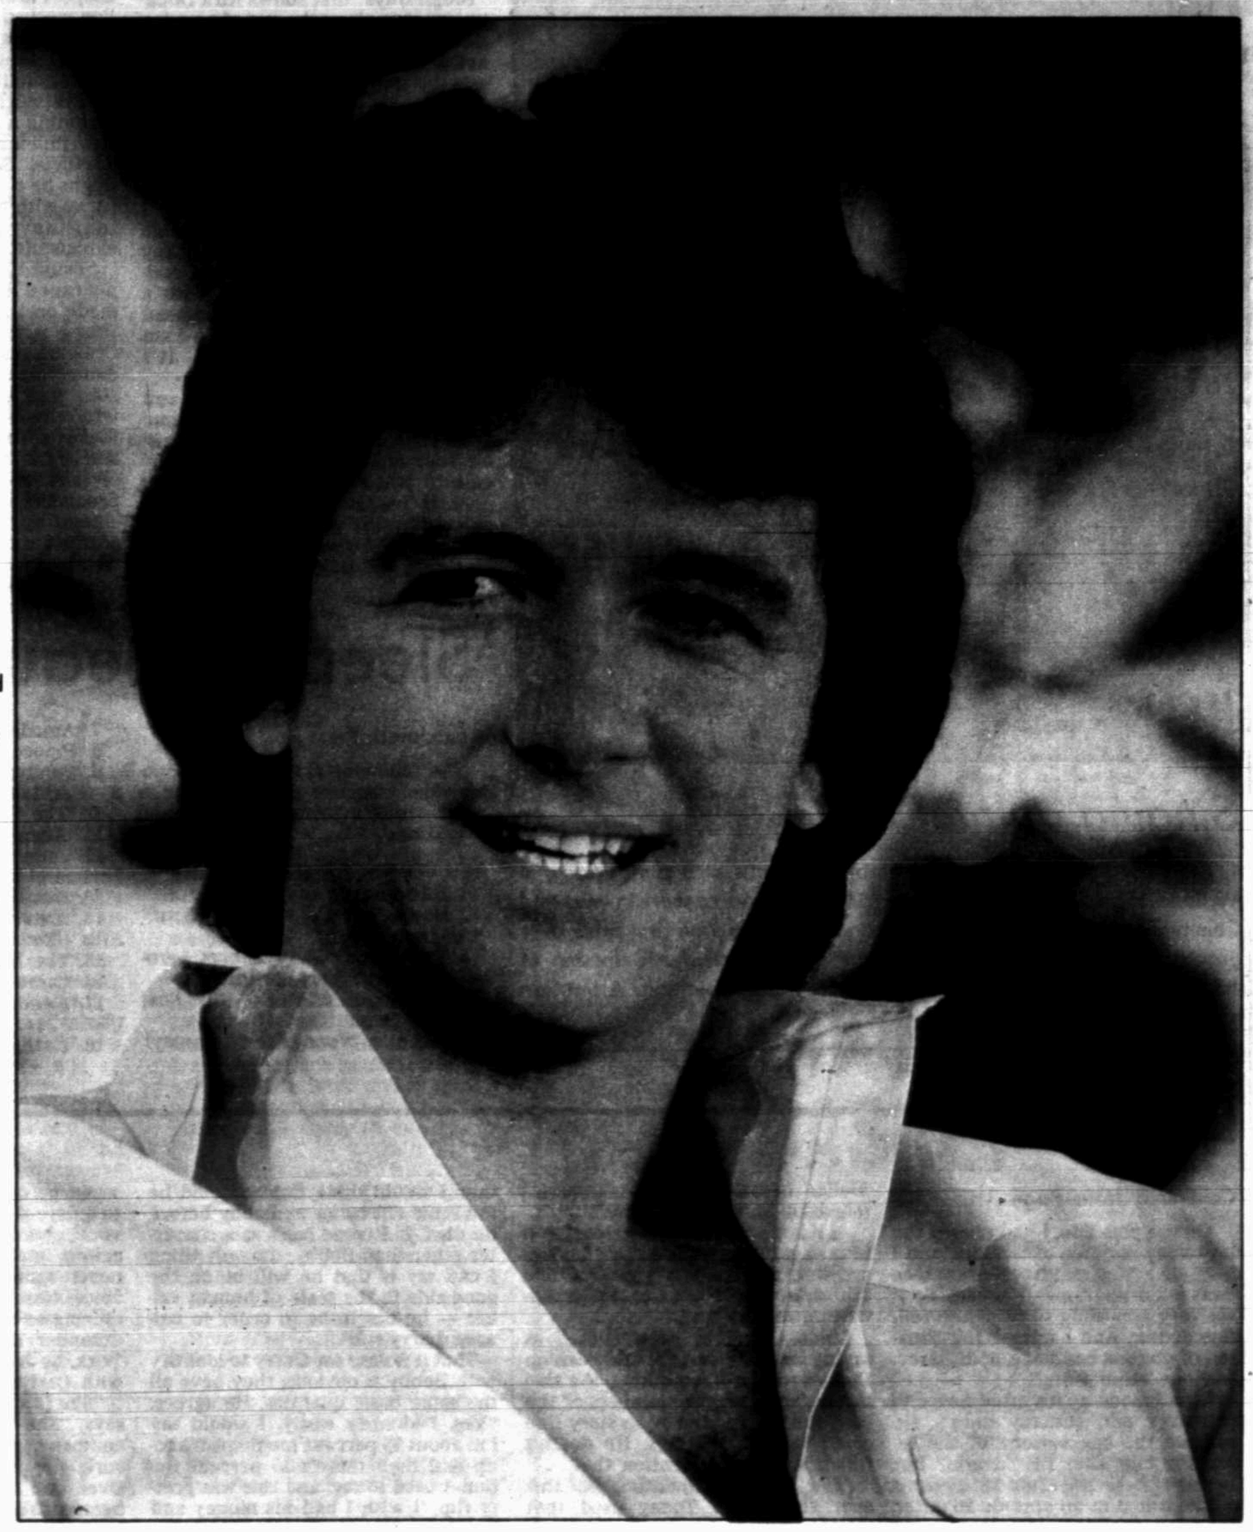

Q. I know you recently did a feature of Val Kilmer but I must know something else. What is he doing now and will he be in the Iowa area anytime soon?

Heather Bolwar
Blue Grass, Iowa

A. Right now, his plans seems to call more for Paris than for Iowa. He's co-starring with George C. Scott and Rebecca de Mornay in "Murders in the Rue Morgue," being filmed in that city. It's due to air on CBS later this season.

Actor Patrick Duffy says he decided to come back as Bobby Ewing on CBS' nighttime soap, "Dallas," at the request of Larry Hagman, who plays J.R. Ewing.

Patrick Duffy

says he'll never say never again

By JANE ARDMORE
King Features

"Certainly I said, 'Never, never, never will I play Bobby Ewing again!'" says Patrick Duffy, giving you that earnest, steady hazel-eyed look that has endeared him to viewers around the world. Then he smiles across the table at the MGM commissary where he hasn't eaten lunch for almost a year, while a motherly waitress presses his shoulder and whispers, "Patrick, we're so happy you're back."

"It was an easy decision. My wife and I just sat down, rethought our priorities and said, 'Let's try something new.' I'd been playing Bobby for seven years, and you do tire of playing the same character. But that wasn't as important as the fact that, as an actor, I was becoming frustrated at never playing other parts. In a series like 'Dallas' with a one-month hiatus, you are limited in what else you can do. The reasons for my leaving were only augmented by executive director Leonard Katzman's leaving, and Leonard had been the quality control on the series.

"This meant Phil Capice would be in full charge and I never had gotten on well with Phil. There'd been an immediate ill-at-ease feeling between Phil and me — not as animated as Larry Hagman's problems with Phil. I was on the periphery; but without Leonard...He understood my decision and was amicable when I requested that Bobby die on the show. I wanted him to be seen carried out in his coffin. Period. End of story. I didn't want any of the inevitable publicity speculating about will he or won't he come back? That phase of my life was completely over."

So he's back! An easy decision, you might think. They probably offered him tons of money and he hasn't exactly been setting the world on fire since he left "Dallas."

Laughing, he said, "I made more money in the year I was off the series than I ever made in my life," he says.

"I bought real estate in Scottsdale; it turned out to be lucrative. I formed a development company — Montanio International — which was very successful. Then I formed a house-designing and construction business with partners in Scottsdale and that went well. I started a little invention manufacturing company in St. Louis — any time we get an idea for a gag or a toy, if it's feasible we make a prototype and start selling. I did commercials. I did a miniseries, 'Strong Medicine.'"

He also did a number of guest spots.

Then one night he came home and his wife, Carlyn, said Larry Hagman had called. Duffy returned the call. "Larry is one of my best friends in the world, on or off the set. We hunt together, we fish. If we don't see each other for six months it makes no difference. From the day we met, we've been like brothers. I have to tell you about that meeting.

"My parents knew Larry before I did. They live in a little town called Boulder, Montana, in the vicinity of some natural hot springs. Larry and his wife go on about experiencing hot springs wherever they can find them. So one time they got to Boulder. There's a school for mentally retarded people, and Larry did some public-service announcements for them and became acquainted with my parents who also worked for the school.

"At that time I was in Los Angeles, starving, and trying to get a job. My mom used to write me and say why didn't I contact this nice Larry Hagman; he might be able to help me. I had no idea who Larry Hagman was. I couldn't afford electricity, far less a television set. Carlyn was pregnant. I finally landed two small parts. The first was in 'The Stranger Who Looks Like Me,' the second, 'Hurricane.' Larry was in that picture but not at the same time and we never met. Again, without TV, I never saw that film.

"We finally met one week after my series, 'Man from Atlantis,' folded and I was signed for 'Dallas.' We met at a read-through at the old Lorimar offices in Burbank. His name rang no bell. We started shooting in Dallas, and Larry had this old converted bread truck as a personal trailer. The first time I got in, I sat down in the passenger seat, looked up at the visor and there was a picture of a Larry standing in front of the general store in my home town!

"I thought I was in the twilight zone. I just about had a coronary. We hit it off from that moment, like soul mates. We play together all the time on the set, kibbitz. When I left the show, he was what I missed most, like leaving home and missing your brother."

So when his wife said, "Larry Hagman wants you to call him," he called.

"Why don't you come out to the house?" Hagman said. "I have an idea I want to discuss with you." Duffy hung up, turned to her and said, "You know what? They're going to ask me back to the show.

"My wife couldn't believe it," Duffy remembers. "But something in Larry's voice...I went out to his house at Malibu. We don't play games with each other, so when he opened the door I said, 'What's up?' and he said, 'Let's talk about getting you back on the show. I want you and Merv Adelson (who owns Lorimar) wants you.' I thanked him but the answer was no. The conversation lasted five minutes top.

"The rest of the time was like always when we're together. Have a drink, watch a little television, take a jacuzzi. We went out and had Mexican food. Talked about hunting. Except one thing more. He said they really wanted to sit down and talk with me. Then he phoned again and said the objective was to get me back and there would be no obstacles financially or otherwise to do it.

"Then Carlyn and I sat down and evaluated our position after the year's absence, evaluated the potential of what going back to the show would mean to me and to us and to my career. Going back was more difficult because we knew what would happen. We knew it meant an enormous amount of attention publicity-wise, and we are people who like privacy.

"On the other hand, the media has always been good to me. They haven't invaded our privacy, probably because we lead what would seem a rather boring life. I can't imagine a front page on one of those gossip rags reading: Patrick Duffy mows his lawn.

"I had made some pretty definite statements about never never, and I'd have to eat those words. I learned never to say anything unequivocably again. What I would have to accept was that I'd be committing myself to probably three years of playing one character. (The contract I signed finally was for two years with another year's option and I fully expect 'Dallas' to go on that long).

There was a time when jumping off steps was exciting

By SUSAN WOJCIECHOWSKI
King Features

Do kids jump off porch steps anymore? When I was young, that was one of the stock ways to have fun. Having fun was simple back then. It didn't take a pocketful of money or a month's worth of planning or a car pool. Fun just happened.

Like jumping off porch steps. You'd be sitting around after school wishing you had a TV so you could watch "Howdy Doody," and one of your friends would come to the side door calling, "SUE-zeh-en." (It was the eleventh commandment that kids should never ring the doorbell. They came to the side door and called out your name in three syllables, no matter how many syllables your name had. My older sister was "CARE-uh-uhl" and my younger sister was "JEE-ee-een.")

You'd come to the door and your friend would say, "Hey, let's go jump off the steps." So you'd go outside and climb up to the highest step you dared, then hold your breath and leap, hoping like heck you'd clear the steps below. It went on like that — climb, jump, climb, jump — till your mom called you in to eat or the bottoms of your feet started to burn, whichever came first.

Once in a while you'd go one step too high and get the wind knocked out of you when you fell. Then your mom would be forced to yell out the door, "What are you trying to do, break your neck?" But to my knowledge no one ever broke a neck jumping off porch steps.

Philip, across the street, came close, though. He had mastered the top step and decided that leaping from the porch railing would mark his finest hour. He perched himself on the narrow railing and waited for a crowd to gather. (After all, one's finest hour should not be experienced alone). "You'll break your neck!" we all yelled. "Your mom'll kill you," we warned.

But Philip flexed his knees and sailed over the hydrangea bushes below. Instead of his neck, he broke his arm. And his mom didn't kill him. The next September, though, he went off to military school. The rest of us went back to having fun. Climb, jump; climb, jump.

In the evenings we'd strap on our roller skates. Not those fancy-shmancy skates that cost $50 and have pompons on the fronts, but your basic one-size-fits-all, dull-metal skates that rusted if you left them out and it rained.

There were two schools of roller skaters: the "Gusto" group and the "Safety First" group. My older sister was a Gusto skater. She'd slap on her skates in three seconds and fly off, her braids standing straight out behind her. Just as she was about to reach Mach 1 speed, the front of one skate would inevitably come loose, and she'd end up with torn pants, a skinned knee and mom yelling, "What are you trying to do, break your neck?" But, what the heck, you only go around once.

I was a Safety First skater. I'd check out the sidewalks first for pebbles or twigs that might be lying in wait to trip me. Then I'd drag out my shoes with the two-inch lip around the sole and clamp the skates so tight my fingers would turn purple from pressing on the skate key. Off I'd go, clickety-clickety-click, only to stop every 30 seconds to give another quarter turn on the key. By the time I'd gotten a few houses down, it was time to come in. My hair never blew in the wind and I stopped to walk over every crack in the sidewalk, but I thought I was having fun, so I guess I actually was.

The supreme act of fun in my neighborhood was "touching Felix's car." Felix was the neighborhood bum. He spent all his time walking up and down Hudson Avenue in a greasy tweed, ankle-length overcoat, summer and winter. He carried a peck tomato basket over one arm and a cane over the other. I don't know what the basket was for, but the main purpose of the cane was to swat at any kid who happened to pass him on the street.

On warm evenings if things started to get dull, one of us kids would dare another to go to the back of the Amoco gas station lot and rap on the hood of the abandoned car that Felix called home.

It always took a double dare, a triple dare and finally, the ultimate, an "up-to-the-end-of-the-counting" dare before one of us would reluctantly attempt the awful task. None of us succeeded. Halfway across the lot we would hear "something" and come high-tailing it back to the safety of the streetlight on the corner.

Let me say that we never intended any disrespect to this man whom fate had dealt a low hand. We accepted Felix as he was, without giving it much thought; in fact, at times we envied him his position of notoriety.

Douglas does own stunts in 'Tough Guys'

"Of course running on a speeding train is dangerous," he admits. "If you fall off, you can get hurt.

"But I check it out. I make certain what kind of shoes I'm wearing, I make certain that I am comfortable with the stunt. I've done most of my stunts, because it gives a certain reality. If they did a long shot with a double and then came in for a head shot, it wouldn't look good. So I am there on top of the train. It's important."

In "Tough Guys," Douglas and Burt Lancaster play a pair of oldtime train robbers who come out of prison, sour of the straight life and decide to pull one last job.

As Archie Long, Douglas is a physical culturalist who lifted weights during his 30 years in the slammer. However, he didn't really train for the part.

"I didn't do any more training than I do ordinarily. I always stay in shape. I'm not a fanatic about it, but I've worked out all my life. For me, acting takes tremendous energy and vitality. I tell my kids, 'You've got to be in condition to act.'

"I've worked at all kinds of jobs, including a steel mill. Working in a steel mill is not as hard as working in a movie. Besides the fact that it might be a physical role like 'Tough Guys' with a lot of stunts, you're using nervous energy. That's exhausting."

"Tough Guys" resulted from an appearance Douglas and Lancaster made on the 1985 Oscar show. Two young writers, James Orr and Jim Cruickshank, decided it would be a dandy idea to reteam the veteran stars in a modern adventure. They wrote a script which the people at Disney's Touchstone Pictures liked, and so did the stars — with additions of their own. Both men have been producers and directors as well as actors.

"Burt and I fought and argued, as we always do," Douglas said. "Somehow it comes out that one and one makes three. We always kid about it.

"We don't agree on anything. The only thing we agreed on was that he was Harry and I was Archie and we both should do 'Tough Guys.' After that we agreed on nothing. I've done six or seven movies with Burt, a few song-and-dance routines, a play in San Francisco, 'Boys in Autumn.' By now we know our foibles. We've never killed each other yet. Sometimes people say we've gotten close to it, but it hasn't happened."

Douglas was talking at the offices of his company, Bryna Productions, named for his mother. He has never forgotten his roots as the son of poor Russian immigrants in Amsterdam, N.Y. He started acting as early as kindergarten, when he recited a poem about the red robin of spring. His fellow students applauded — "I liked the sound, and I guess I've been searching for it ever since."

"The reason most actors become actors is that it's a form of escape. My father left us when I was at an early age. I had six sisters and my mother. Seven women — how would I survive it? When I was a kid I could escape in a world of fantasy and daydreams. That would lead to fantasy.

"The difficult thing about being an actor is to keep clear in your mind what's the world of make-believe and what's the world of reality. If you confuse the two, you have a problem."

After Navy service in World War II, Douglas began to make a name for himself in the New York theater. The movies? Forget it.

"I've often said I'm a failure, because I didn't achieve what I set out to do. My goal in life was to be a star on the New York stage. The first time I was asked by Hal Wallis to come to Hollywood, I turned him down. 'Hollywood? That trash? I'm an actor on the Broadway stage!'

"A year later, I had my son Michael, I had my wife, I was out of a job. I wondered, 'Do they still want me in Hollywood?' I made a long-distance call, and I ended up in my first film, 'The Strange Love of Martha Ivers.'"

That was in 1946. Forty years, 70 movies and several television films later, he's still here.

DUFFY

"On the plus side, I had missed the day-to-day regimen of working and I do enjoy acting and have, ever since I was a kid in grammar school. So it was very appealing to return to full-time acting. And I missed the situation of endless badinage with Larry. And one other thing..."

He had made up his mind never to look back and actually didn't. He watched the one episode of the series, the one after his "death;" but turned off the set after 15 minutes and he tuned in on episode 26 (after finalizing the deal to come back) "and didn't recognize any part of it. It didn't seem familiar. It wasn't the show I had been on. It was like watching a totally different show.

"I felt sad. I knew things had not been going well. There had been dissention, unhappiness, even ugliness. I knew Larry was working to resurrect the old atmosphere and if seeing that one episode was bad news, it was also good news because of the challenge to change things.

"To Larry's credit, he really worked on getting me back and he really worked on getting Leonard back, now in total charge. Until a year ago, there were very few people that knew what made 'Dallas' successful. Most of the people, with the exception I would say of Leonard Katzman, Larry and myself, always tried to find the success factor of the series in the subject matter of the plots, the location of the shooting, the texture of the show, etcetera.

"It was Larry, Leonard and I who felt that the secret ingredient was the corps of actors. There is a strange, mystical thing that happens when you get the correct group of people together to film a story. It doesn't happen often, but when it happens, it works, and it did work. 'Dallas' became the most successful television show of its time."

Linda Gray has been quoted as saying she feels that the emphasis on Duffy's return is something of a slap in the face to other members of the cast; she feels a change in story line could save the ratings. He doesn't flinch when you mention that.

"I've been commenting on this ever since USA Today used that quote. Linda and I are good friends and remain so. She wasn't making a statement against me as a person, but against the premise that they needed to bring back male domination of the series in order to get the quality back up. As a female member of the cast, she took it as a slight toward the female members' contribution.

"Unfortunately, reality and the ratings prove that this particular series is a success as a male-dominated show. It was for seven years. It changed the year I left, and Larry's character was changed from the wild and woolly JR to something of a wimp! The ratings reflected the loss of interest. Other shows are female-dominated: 'Knotts Landing,' 'Dynasty,' 'Falcon Crest.' But 'Dallas' is a different story, and Leonard Katzman's main concern has been to restore male prowess as the base of the storyline. This will be a telling year. Leonard's return and mine and Larry's return to villainy will make or break the series.

"What kind of a character will I be? Well, there is a certain game they're playing. The game is never to assume the bottom line until it's proven, which is a game-play way of saying that if I come back as Bobby, then I would think Bobby would be the same character as Bobby before he died. If I come back as a character other than Bobby, the only thing I can say is that he will be on the good side in the scale of human values — he has to be in order to balance Larry's JR."

That it is easy for Duffy to identify with Bobby is obvious; they have all the same basic qualities. He agrees. "Yes, I identify easily. I would say I'm about 85 percent me in his make-up and then there's 15 percent fiction. I used to say, and this was pretty flip, 'I wish I had his money and he wishes he had my wife.' Now, I've got his money and he still only wishes he had my wife.

"There was a time early on that I felt the character was too bland. In the second or third year, he was getting monochromatic in his whole approach to life. He was not demanding, he was only good. He was not emotional, he was only good. He was not vulnerable, he was only good.

"I went to Leonard and suggested that even the most die-hard fan was going to get fed up with his character's gullibility and the ease with which people manipulated him. I felt this guy had to have some human qualities. And he got them. I stopped complaining about Bobby at the end of the fifth year and found him a good deal more substantial."

The 15 percent difference between Bobby and Patrick has to do with his relationship with his wife, Carlyn, who came into his life in 1972, and his living under the teachings of Buddhism to which she introduced him. They met when he was still a student at the University of Washington, where he studied drama. He was in his senior year, working on two productions, going to school and singing in a production with the Seattle Opera Company when he developed laryngitis, tried to ignore it, and seriously injured his vocal chords. He was told to forget acting, maintain total silence and never again take acting classes or voice lessons. One month before, touring as a narrator with the First Chamber Dance Company of New York, he had met and fallen in love with Carlyn.

"She fascinated me totally," Duffy says. "She was leader of the ballet company, never losing her composure, her energy or her kindness. Over one weekend, I saw her rehearse, take a night plane back to New York, then take the next night plane back to Seattle to get to that day's rehearsal, go 36 hours without sleep and arrive to dance looking fresh as a daisy.

"When I asked her how she did this, she smiled and chanted a few words that meant nothing to me. When this terrible thing happened to my voice, she just smiled and taught me the words to chant: Nam Myoho Renge Kyo. And here I am 15 years later, married and the father of her children.

"My wife is, of course, a Buddhist. You have to immediately dispel the vision you have. She's Occidental rather than Oriental, a blond, blue-eyed Southern California girl who was raised basically in New York and started practicing with this layman's organization of a sect called Nichiren Shoshu, NSA. I have practiced it now in many different countries: Italy, England, wherever we have traveled, and the basic tenets are always the same. The philosophy: Everything that happens to you is of your own making. It is, in other words, your karma. What she told me to chant, I chanted.

"Of course, it is more than the chant. It is a complex set of theories and actuary tables. Basically you are fusing yourself with a mystical law of simultaneous cause and effect through your actions and the sounds that you make. The actions you take by repeating these words fuses you with a fundamental concept. It's complicated, it's interesting and the study of it is predicated on long practice.

"My faith and practice is as integral to my life as is my wife." And she is certainly integral. In discussing the decision to come back to "Dallas," for example, he never uses the word "I" or "my" decision; it is always "we" and "our."

So when it came to decision time, "We came to grips with being unavailable for other projects with the exception of the one hiatus month; we came to grips with the perception that might exist in some viewers' minds that I was coming back because things weren't going too well for me. And since that wasn't true, well...

"Larry had warned me that I might find it 'cold outside,' but that's not where the Duffys are at. It's not that I could never work again and live on my income, but our family would be just as happy if we were to pack up and move back to Montana and I'd find a regular job. My kids have never even watched the show.

"They watch whatever they choose; I don't believe in censorship. They'll watch 'G.I. Joe,' then turn around and watch eight hours of ballet on PB station. Padraic is 10 and Connor is 6, and they're pretty good judges of quality. If something too hard-core comes on, I'll give them a recommendation, 'Do what you want but I think this is way over your head.' 'Dallas' isn't over their heads, they're just not with it, which is unique because everywhere I go in public, children at the age of 6 know the show as well as the script writers.

"We just have a certain quality to our life. I love the business. I love to act, I love to direct, and will — three segments a year are in the contract — and it's great to be back with my friends and 'family.'

"The difficulty was never in making the decision to come back. The difficulty was actually to listen to the proposal. Much easier for Carlyn when she left ballet. There's not much in the way of employment for pregnant ballerinas. When the first baby came, that was the end of her career. It's nice to end a career because you want as opposed to being put out to pasture. But it's also nice to be wanted back where you've made some history and now have a brand-new challenge. I've learned a lot — never to say never again."

FUN

Touching Felix's car had nothing whatsoever to do with the dignity of the man. It was simply something to do when there was nothing to do.

One day Joey said he had gone up to the car when none of us was around and had seen a refrigerator inside. "Joey, you're a big, fat liar," we accused. "Where would he plug a refrigerator?"

"In the cigarette lighter," Joey shot back, smug as could be. We were more determined than ever to get within rapping distance of that car. No one ever did have the courage. But I still think Joey is a big, fat liar.

We were all chicken hearts, through and through. We'd spend hours convincing ourselves that we had the courage to do brazen acts, like peeking our Catholic eyes into the synagogue a few blocks away, just to satisfy our childish curiosity. But in the end, we decided the God of Catholics would condemn us to the bowels of hell if we did.

We also almost convinced ourselves that we had the courage to walk into Marie's Soda Shoppe, considered to be the turf of the neighborhood "hoods." What do they think they do, own the place?" we'd complain to each other. "Yeah, we have just as much right there as they do," we'd announce, a little louder than was necessary.

And we'd set out, determined to walk past the tough gang in their tight jeans; walk past the clouds of cigarette smoke that swirled around their slicked-back hair; walk past their sneers and snide remarks; and sit down to order a round of cherry Cokes. That deliciously dangerous deed, too, went undone. At the last moment, we'd duck around the corner, detour our path and head for the soda shop frequented by all the other chicken hearts.

What fun it was planning the awesome feats we'd undertake tomorrow! But for today, we'd end up at the library skimming the shelves for any new Beany Malone or Betsy books. The only excitement the library ever held was the time one of the "hoods," Gary, doused his hand with lighter fluid and set it on fire in the main reading room. He was banished forever. It didn't matter, though. We doubted whether he could read, anyway.

At the end of an evening we'd take turns walking each other partway home. When I finally got to my back yard, I'd climb up the steeply angled storm cellar doors, hop onto the sheet-metal roof of the storage shed, which advertised Nehi Beverages in faint, rusted letters, and lie there for the last few minutes of the day looking up at the stars.

Under the quiet peace of the night sky, I'd let my mind drift back over the day and wander for a while into tomorrow. I'd think about how tomorrow I might just try jumping off the next higher step. Or maybe I'd actually touch Felix's car. Maybe.

It wasn't important, though. Lying there on the cold metal roof, in the stillness, all was well with the world. Life was good. Life was simple. Life was fun.

Finally Mom would stick her head out the door to call me in for bed. "What are you doing climbing up on that roof, trying to break your neck?"

'Trick' mixes horror with humor

By MYRA LEE SALCEDO
Lifestyle Writer

Salcedo

Just in time for Halloween comes a DeLaurentis film, directed by Charles Martin Smith that is more effective than Wes Craven's latest "Deadly Friend." Smith, the actor, (Toad in "American Graffiti") makes his directorial debut, alternating horror with humor. For heavy metal rock fans only, "Trick or Treat," spoofs everything from rock censorship to rock fanatics.

Eddie "Ragman" (Marc Price) appears to be the only long-haired kid in a high school sea of preppies. He is a loner who idolizes Sammi Curr, (Tony Fields), a heavy metal performer who is a graduate of his high school, Lakeridge High. Curr's character bears more than a passing resemblence to the autobiography of Ozzy Osbourne. Curr dies in a hotel blaze leaving Eddie more of a loner than ever.

He mourns Curr, shouting, "He stood up for what he believed in and they nailed him, like me." Unfortunately, "what" Curr believed in was in satanic messages and biting the heads off of snakes. For his offensive behavior, he was banned from playing at Lakeridge's Halloween party before he died.

Not to worry, Eddie begins playing backward pirate copy of the last tape Curr made before he died, and lo and behold, the worst nightmare of those trying to censor rock and roll comes forth.

The movie becomes a "Videodrome" for the stereo set but not without a sense of humor. Consider the fact that Ozzie Osbourne, who caused a ruckus at nearly every concert hall around the country that he planned to play at, (including the Ector County Coliseum which he cancelled) for his on-stage antics (including biting the heads off of live bats) is seen in the movie as a religious anti-rock crusader. Osbourne appears on television denouncing rock and roll and the people who play it as "sick and bizarre, evil people who have got to be stopped."

Other humorous touches poke fun at the horror genre in general, such as a movie marquee announcing "Lunch of the Dead."

Fields as Curr does a wonderful job of playing the satanic idol with a demonic laugh. You kind of feel sorry for the guy, all he ever wanted was to give one electrifying (literally) performance at his alma mater.

Eddie begins turning the tables on his tormentors with the aid of the often disembodied Curr. The film becomes a mad dash adventure with Eddie racing the clock to halt Curr's destructive tape from being played at the high school Halloween party. The satanic influence of rock is played to the hilt. Spirits rush out from head phones, cars take control of their drivers and Eddie soon learns (as he beats his stereo senseless) that Curr, like most heavy metal, can't be shut off fast enough.

The film answers "Where do rockers go when they die?" and asks "Can morality or music be legislated?"

Curr must have had great fun making this movie. Special effects abound and Curr soon becomes the life — er — death of the party. There are lots of tongue-in-cheek dialogue. Fighting for his life with Curr, Eddie pleads, "We're your fans. You can't destroy us, who will buy your records when we're gone?"

So, if you like heavy metal, you'll love "Trick or Treat." After all, it's more fun than having your trick or treat bag X-rayed.

Premise of 'Soul Man' lacking

New World pictures attempts to answer this with "Soul Man," a film starring C. Thomas Howell as Mark Watson.

His father, Bill Watson (played by James B. Sidding) is the stereotypic preppie parent, complete with huge house in the suburbs, swimming pool, a condo in Barbados and a wardrobe of jogging outfits.

The plot begins when dad offers Mark his "manhood." "I want you to feel good about yourself and to pay your own way," he says. Translate that to "you need to find $53,000 for four years tuition at Harvard."

Rather than seeing his acceptance to such a prestigious school go down the toilet, Mark decides to masquerade as a black student for a full black scholarship.

Watson, who debuted in "E.T. — The Extraterrestrial," then impressed critics as "Ponyboy" in Francis Ford Coppola's "The Ousiders," has a certain charm but not enough of the magnitude required for a role like this.

Rae Dawn Chong and James Earl Jones manage to keep their dignity as the misguided with who Mark spins a tangled web of relationships. Although the film has some fun moments, it never reaches the high camp of the opening scene, (Mark, in his underwear, kicking his legs in the air a la "Risky Buisness" when he learns of his acceptance to Harvard) and a later scene where Mark gets revenge on his father by hanging a Cabbage Patch doll which is wearing a jogging suit.

The problem is that besides taking a leap of faith to believe that Mark is not just a white guy in make-up and a wig, can anyone believe that tanning pills provide a consistant all over, even tan? At some point, wouldn't the tan begin to fade? Do his peers at Harvard really believe his hair or skin color is real? And aren't there side affects to taking such megadoses?

Since the film attempts to expose racial stereotypes and bigotry, it seems ironic that the script gets its biggest laughs with the most offensive material.

A scene of one man imagining Mark dressed like a pimp, eating watermelon, is enough to set civil rights movements back 20 years. It also takes far too long for a couple of wiseacres, always telling racial jokes to get punched.

Arye Gross, who stars as Howell's roommate and best buddy, Gordon Bloomfield, is a most engaging newcomer and seems much more comfortable with his role than Howell.

The dialogue is good, there are some laughs, but the premise is lacking. Especially when James Earl Jones as Professor Banks exhibits so much pride in Mark. Even though Mark makes good on his deception, it was a pretty dishonorable thing to do.

Former football star now star of NBC series

By RICK DU BROW
Hearst News Service

Fred Dryer was a star when he played for the Los Angeles Rams, but now the two-time all-pro defensive end suddenly is experiencing the fruits of his tenacity to become a star in another field — acting.

Dryer's unpretentious but comfortable Saturday night detective series, "Hunter," has become a major success for NBC in its return for a third season this fall. It's true that "Hunter" benefits enormously from the lead-in of two other NBC hits, "The Golden Girls" and "Amen." But Dryer's series is trouncing the competition, ABC's "Spenser: For Hire" and CBS' "The Twilight Zone," neither of which has a strong lead-in.

Just as important as its time slot is the fact that "Hunter" itself evolved an easy-to-take style, thanks to the addition last season of one of TV's most knowledgeable producers, Roy Huggins.

In a remarkable career, Huggins has amassed a list of television credits that includes David Janssen's "The Fugitive," which he created, plus two James Garner series, "Maverick" and "The Rockford Files." Who better, then, to whip into shape an action series with another laid-back, tough-guy hero with a trace of droll humor?

"Roy brought to our show a sense of organization," said the lean, 6-foot-6 Dryer. "He wanted the show to tell stories, not be all cops and robbers and chase scenes. And we agreed."

When "Hunter" was announced three years ago, it seemed an apparent NBC attempt to cash in on Clint Eastwood's "Dirty Harry" film character.

"Well, it was," said Dryer. "It was a takeoff of 'Magnum Force' with Clint Eastwood and Tyne Daly. But I wrote out 13 pages for myself of how I was going to play the character. I was not going to play Clint Eastwood. That would be ridiculous."

The ex-football player also feels the show, with its on-the-streets Los Angeles look, is working this season because there's "more characterization, more humor, underplaying. My character doesn't have to be thumping people all of the time."

What makes "Hunter" work, and clearly appeals to much of the TV public, is its no-frills, straight-ahead approach in an era of trendy, erratic action shows such as "Miami Vice." And the no-frills attitude is a very comfortable fit for Dryer, who's had that outlook toward show business since his days with the Rams.

"Ever since I began playing football, I knew it would be very temporary," he said. "It's a great place to establish yourself. It's fun as a youth. And you certainly make some money. But I never wanted to be anything in football but a player. It's a great place to grow up. And I did grow up. Around 1978, I definitely decided to be in the acting profession. I started to go to Nina Foch's acting school. I asked around, and she was on all the lists."

Once he broke into the field, he committed himself to it fully, appearing on such series as "Cheers,"

TV screens display America's family album

But instead of soap operas or game shows, the screens flash snapshots of weddings, barbecues, graduations and other family gatherings, plus the occasional pet portrait.

The high-pitched beeps made by operating the machines are accompanied by shouts such as "I'm going to try my mom's name" and "We don't know him!"

The sets are actually part of an exhibit called America's Family Album, an electronic display of more than 35,000 family photographs collected from all over the country.

Since it reopened to visitors July 5, Liberty Island has been mobbed daily with an average 14,000 people, and the electronic album is becoming one of the most popular exhibits, according to those working on the island.

"People really do seem to enjoy it a great deal," said Paul Kinney, curator of collections at the museums in the statue's base, which include an overview of immigration and a history of the statue.

Sixteen Cub Scout packs sent in pictures. One family in "Davie, the United States," sent in a picture of their three Irish setters named Jake, Maggy Mae and Raffles. A woman named Gardner from Marionville, Mo., sent in a picture of herself in a Santa Claus suit.

Each picture flashes for about 30 seconds with a last name, the year the family's ancestors immigrated and the place and date the photograph was taken.

Visitors, punching instructions on a panel resembling an automated teller at a bank, can call up pictures by asking for family names or the country of origin. Donors were sent computerized numbers to call up their pictures.

The entries span the globe. There are the Kims, originally from Korea, the Luongs from Vietnam, the Lingamallus from India, the Millers from the Soviet Union, the Abrahams from Syria, the Corellas from Italy, the Rowes from England, and the Barays from Mexico.

The pictures, stored on video discs, can be called up on 10 of the 16 television screens, while the other six screens flash random pictures from the collection.

Kodak spokesman Mike Donnelly in Rochester, N.Y., said more entries were coming in all the time — 75 on an average week. The company had planned to stop taking new entries in December of this year, but because the display is well short of its 1 million photographs capacity, the deadline may be extended.

Harmon excited about newest role

By LARRY RATLIFF
Hearst News Service

What does Mark Harmon, the former star of NBC's "St. Elsewhere," think about being dubbed the "Sexiest Man Alive" — the dubious honor bestowed on him by People magazine — now that his one-year reign is nearing an end?

"I think it's pretty silly stuff. What People perceives is what they perceive. I don't think it is real. It's a joke. It doesn't have anything to do with the work part of it. That's what I'm really interested in. If People still feels the same way in 35 years, I'll get excited."

Right now, the 35-year-old son of pro-football legend/sportscaster Tom Harmon and actress Elyse Knox is excited about his title role in the new film "Let's Get Harry." The Rambo-influenced action-adventure centers around a group of blue-collar buddies who brave the Colombian jungle in an attempt to rescue one of their own (Harmon), who is held captive by drug smugglers.

When the cameras aren't rolling, Harmon comes across as a down-to-earth, career-minded actor serious about his chosen craft. He quarterbacked the UCLA Bruins to winning seasons in 1972 and 1973. He was also taking acting classes, and the acting bug had begun to nibble. When the bite got stronger, Harmon passed on the chance to follow in the steps of his dad's pro football cleats, and took a job in advertising.

"At the time, I was developing my technique as an actor. In fact, 'actor' wasn't a word I could even say. So I started out in advertising, listening to the boss talk on the phone for $103 a week. Later I was a sales rep for five Los Angeles radio stations. Then I was a national rep for Adidas tennis shoes. The guys I played with in college went into the pros and made more money in six months than I made in six years. At the end of my college career I was ready to move on, but saying goodbye to anything after 17 years is not an easy decision."

Harmon got his foot in the acting door with roles in episodic TV ("Emergency," "Adam 12"). He became a "hunk to be dealt with" during his three-year run as smooth-talking plastic surgeon Robert Caldwell on "St. Elsewhere."

Constantly on the lookout for acting roles that are a "stretch," Harmon portrayed charismatic, convicted mass-murderer Ted Bundy in "The Deliberate Stranger" mini-series on NBC. "Let's Get Harry" will be followed by another TV movie and Carl Reiner's "Summer School," which he's currently filming in Los Angeles.

"What roles do for me as a person is enable me to experience a certain thing. I look for variety in roles; the AIDS storyline (in 'St. Elsewhere'), for instance. I never said I wouldn't play that. It's a good check point for me. I realize that if a role scares me, it's worth doing."

His latest new direction is "Summer School," which is midway through its shooting schedule. Harmon takes a stab at comedy, playing a PE teacher forced to teach remedial English. Harmon insists his role as "a leading man who knows where the joke is" isn't a piece a cake.

"I don't think it's fluffy. It's light," he says. "I would have killed to work with Carl Reiner. He's one of the great comic minds of our generation."

His role as spokesman for Coors beer has been mutually rewarding, he says. He recently completed his 27th pitch for the Colorado brewery, and broke his shoulder in the process.

"I was riding a horse, and he did an 'el foldo' at full gallop. I finished the spot, though."

He doesn't regret promoting an alcoholic beverage.

"It would bother me if the commercial campaign was based on having a good time, then getting in the car and driving home. But our commercials are about outdoors and a quality beer. We've got some ecology and nature and 'don't drink and drive' spots coming up," Harmon says.

He's been linked romantically to Pam Dawber ("My Sister Sam" on CBS) by several publications. But the object of much "Hunkmania" gracefully declines to discuss the possibility of any permanent "Mark and 'Mindy'" relationship. For now, Harmon is content to share the house he built himself in the Santa Monica Mountains with his three dogs (Paddy, Frank and Cooper) and a cat named Steve.

As for who he'd like to pass the "Sexiest Man Alive" baton to in January if he had his choice?

"Maybe they could pass it along to my dad. He cares about those things."

'Jumpin' ' Marshall's first director's job

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Penny Marshall, late of "Laverne and Shirley," recalls that it all started as she was walking out the door of her house, on her way to furnish a new apartment in New York.

"The phone rang and they said, 'How would you like to take over shooting this movie.' I said, 'What? I've never done this before.' Given only an hour to make a decision, I said, 'I'll try.' I really don't know what went down before or why they chose me, but I said yes," she said.

What had gone down was "artistic differences" on the filming of the 20th Century-Fox comedy-adventure, "Jumpin' Jack Flash," starring Whoopi Goldberg. Miss Goldberg says she wasn't involved in the decision to fire Howard Zieff as director after 10 days of filming.

Why had Miss Marshall, a television star who had never directed a feature movie, been chosen? She figures it was because of producers Lawrence Gordon and Joel Silver, and Fox production chief Barry Diller. They had previously worked together at Paramount, where the actress directed four segments of "Laverne and Shirley" as well as a pilot, "Working Stiffs," starring Michael Keaton and Jim Belushi.

Miss Marshall accepted a double challenge: directing a big-budget film with a catalog of intricate stunts and dealing with a newfound star, Whoopi Goldberg.

"The budget of the film I had nothing to do with; that's the producer's realm, especially since I came in late," she remarked. "I had met Whoopi socially and had seen her stage show, and I liked Whoopi. 'The Color Purple' had not opened when we started, so I wasn't thinking in terms of 'superstar.' The second week I was.

"I think she was as shell shocked by the change as I was. In some cases we had a meeting of minds, in others we had a difference of opinion."

Scoggins: Brunettes tend to get better roles than blondes

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Blondes may have more fun, but brunettes get better roles, says Tracy Scoggins, who's been both.

Ms. Scoggins contends dark-haired actresses tend to get more substantial roles than those offered to blondes.

"I'd become a blonde for 'The Renegades,' " she said. "It was six guys and me in a sort of updated version of 'The Mod Squad.' They all had dark hair so they wanted someone to be a contrast. That was me."

She got lots of work as a blonde, she said, but not in prize parts.

"It seems that the roles for brunettes are more substantial. If the character is a blonde she's always described as dizzy or sexy," she said. "But brunette roles are described as sultry or intelligent. The roles are just better than those you get as a blonde."

"The Renegades" folded after only a month in 1983, and "Hawaiian Heat," in which she played a helicopter pilot, lasted only slightly longer the following year. After that, she let her hair grow back to brown. "I didn't work for six months," she said.

Ms. Scoggins was cast last year as Monica Colby after auditions and a screen test. "I think I probably auditioned along with every woman in L.A. and New York between the ages of 25 and 30," she said.

It was finally down to about six actresses when she did the screen test with Maxwell Caulfield, who plays her twin brother, Miles. She got the part a week later.

On "Colbys" she plays the daughter of Charlton Heston and Stephanie Beacham. She's also a lawyer who's determined to make it in a man's world and can't understand the inequalities that confront her.

"Monica is what I think is one of the most admirable prototypes on television," said Ms. Scoggins. "She's an achiever, well-educated, at home in the world of business, competent, a loving daughter and a nurturing friend. Usually, when someone's as successful as Monica, she's portrayed as bitchy.

"It's a fine line in real life to be that successful and retain your femininity. Monica's fatal character flaw is her poor choice in men. We see that in women of the '80s. They may be fantastic in the board room, but they can't seem to get it together in the bedroom."

Ms. Scoggins was raised in Dickinson, Texas, by parents who were lawyers. She had no brothers, so she grew up as a tomboy. She had the genes for athletics, since her mother was a top-ranked tennis player and her father was a Golden Gloves boxer and triathlete.

"I was raised with the same values he would have given a son," she said. "Independence is the first word that comes to mind. He'd say, 'Don't ever rely on anybody but yourself, then you'll never be disappointed. Make your own way in the world.'

"We were always outside playing some sport and if I fell down and cut my knee he'd say, 'Get up, you little sissy.' So there was never a time when I grew up crying or doing girly things."

She was on the swimming team for 12 years, was a gymnast, tennis player and springboard diver.

Ms. Scoggins said she doesn't feel she missed anything in her upbringing. One thing she never learned was how to cook; she and her parents went out for every meal, including breakfast.

She studied at Southwest Texas State, then was hired as a model by John Casablancas. She modeled for a year in New York, then in Italy, West Germany and France. She studied acting when she returned to this country and landed her first role as a baton twirler in a movie called "Twirl."

Guest roles in a number of episodic series followed until she went into "The Renegades."

After her first year in "The Colbys" she took off for New York, Europe and a rafting trip on the Kern River.

"I chose not to work," she said. "You have to understand this is the first time I've been on a series that's gone longer than 13 weeks. I have to revel in its longevity."

BY CHARLES GOREN AND OMAR SHARIF

DEAR MR. GOREN

Q.—I know the mechanics of the weak two-bid. However, I don't see the use of the bid. After all, a two-level bid is hardly much of a preempt. What's your opinion? — G.L., Boca Raton, Fla.

A.—Before I answer you, let's recapitulate the criteria for opening with a weak two-bid.

Two clubs becomes the only demand bid. It is artificial, and says nothing about the suit. Opening bids of two diamonds, two hearts and two spades show hands not strong enough for a one-bid, i.e., about 7-11 points, and a good six-card suit. The hand should not contain more than two defensive tricks and, in keeping with other preempts, should not have two aces.

The bid was devised by Howard Schenken about a half-century ago, fell into disrepute but subsequently was adopted by the vast majority of experts. On its own, it does not have much preemptive value. However, since it describes opener's hand within fairly strict limits, it does offer responder the opportunity to raise the level of the auction and pose problems for fourth hand.

As far as the opponent immediately to the left of the opening two-bidder is concerned, he treats the weak two-bid as if it had been an opening one-bid, and acts accordingly. Therefore, on hands where he is strong, the weak two-bid has little or no effect, since he can enter the bidding easily.

Where the weak two-bid scores considerably is on those hands where the strength is evenly divided between the two sides and both can make a partscore. Here the weak two-bid can serve to buy the hand for a profit, or perhaps a very small loss, when the hand actually belongs to the opponents. Because of their limited point count, neither opponent might find it possible to enter the auction. It can also gain where a cheap sacrifice is located immediately.

Q.—There are so many good chess-playing programs for computers, how come there isn't a really good bridge-playing program?—R.A., San Diego, Calif.

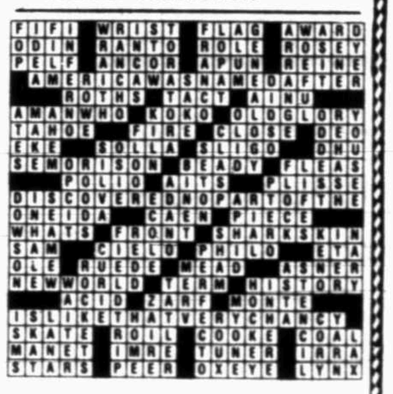

A.—Because bridge is so much more difficult to program than is chess. In chess, at any point you have all the information about the position available to you. It is simply a matter of considering every move and rejecting the inferior ones until only one is left, then going on from there.

In bridge, half the information is unknown and you have to rely on inference and deduction to work out the position. There are so many possibilities to consider that, working with limited memory, no one has yet succeeded in solving the programming problems.

Souffle is ultimate in elegant culinary puff

By PHILOMENA CORRADENO
King Features

Souffle — the ultimate in elegant culinary puff. That's exactly what a souffle is: a puff. It's actually a thick cream sauce flavored with chopped cooked meat, fish, fruit, vegetable, cheese, liquor, liqueur, chocolate or other goodies. Beaten egg yolks are blended into the sauce, then folded into beaten egg whites. Isn't that easy?

So, if you can make a cream sauce, you can make a souffle — for a first course, entree or dessert. The beauty of it all is that even a main course souffle made with leftovers can look luscious when it comes to the table.

Some of the most confident cooks hesitate to try a souffle because of the numerous "don'ts" they've read or heard. Not to worry.

Only two of the don'ts are valid: Don't get even a smidgen of egg yolk or other fat into the whites or they won't whip up. Fat keeps the whites from absorbing air, which is a necessary ingredient in a souffle. Make sure the bowl and beater are thoroughly clean. And don't sneak a peek in the oven during the first 20 to 25 minutes. Cool air can cause a collapse.

1. Separate the eggs as soon as you remove them from the refrigerator. They separate best when cold. To almost insure against getting a bit of yolk into the whites, the American Egg Board urges using an egg separator. This is safer than bouncing the yolk from one shell half to the other. Or, drop the egg into the palm of your hand, fingers spread apart, and the white will slip through into the bowl. I first break the eggs into a saucer.

Have three bowls ready: one for the yolks, one to take the eggs that don't separate cleanly, and for the whites, a thoroughly clean glass, ceramic or metal bowl (no plastic). Because whites beat best at room temperature, set them aside while you proceed with the recipe and prepare the souffle dish collar, if you use one.

2. Make the sauce. Melt butter in a saucepan, stir in the flour. When that's bubbling, pour in the milk all at once. Cook, stirring over medium heat until thickened. Now add your finely diced, grated or shredded main ingredient, be it leftovers or freshly prepared. Set it aside to cool a bit.

3. Beat the egg whites, adding cream of tartar before beating. If using a copper bowl, you can eliminate the cream of tartar because copper creates the same chemical rection with the whites. Do not use salt. It weakens the foam so essential to the leavening process.

Never use a plastic bowl. Plastic is a boon in the kitchen but not for beating whites. No matter how clean of fat you think it is, plastic, being porous, tends to retain fat and fat inhibits the absorption of air.

Whites should be beaten until still and glossy but not dry and until they will not slip when the bowl is tilted. But overbeating will break the air bubbles you've beaten in. Blend the egg yolks and any additional ingredients into reserved sauce.

4. Fold the yolk mixture into the whites by pouring the yolk mixture over the whites, then gently but thoroughly with a rubber spatula move the mixture from the bottom of the bowl through the center and then over the top, turning the bowl as you work.

When it looks fairly uniform with tiny flecks of white still visible, it's ready. If the sauce is heavy you may soften it by folding a small smount of beaten whites into it before adding it to the bowl of whites.

The basic souffle for two to four servings is like the four steps, based on four fours:

Four eggs, ¼ cup butter, ¼ cup flour and 4¼ cups of milk, to all of which you can add up to 1½ cups of solids, pureed, shredded or finely chopped. Large pieces will sink and spoil the dramatic look you want.

The added ingredients should not dilute the base. There should be enough so that the sauce is still about the consistency of whipped cream.

You need not bake a souffle immediately after preparing it. Although you will get best results if it's baked at once, you can get it all together, cover it and refrigerate it for up to two hours.

You may even freeze an unbaked souffle for several weeks. The frozen will not puff as beautifully as the unfrozen, but it is a spectacular convenience you can rely on in an emergency. Just add 20 minutes to the suggested cooking time.

You don't have to put the filled pan into a larger pan of hot water (a bain-marie) to protect the egg protein from direct oven heat. While a bain-marie produces a more stable souffle, it takes almost twice as much time and it can present a definite danger in handling.

A souffle dish isn't essential but it does make for a nice presentation. A straight-sided round casserole will be fine.

A few more tips for success:

Have the base well flavored. Remember, the whites will have no seasoning and they provide about half the volume of the mixture.

Don't use too large a dish. The souffle will rise, of course, but not as dramatically as it does in a small dish. Magically, a souffle rises above the rim of the dish but will not spill over.

If there is less than ½-inch space from the mixture to the rim of the dish, you can extend it with a collar.

Grease the dish, and the collar if you're using one, and dust them with flour, bread crumbs or grated cheese. For a dessert souffle, you might dust with granulated sugar, finely chopped nuts or cookie crumbs. The dusting gives the souffle something to climb up on.

To make a collar for the souffle dish, ue a four-inch-wide band of cooking paper or triple-fold of aluminum foil, long enough to go around the outside of the pan and overlap two inches. Secure it with string or transparent or masking tape.

Armed with these dos and don'ts, hints and helps, you're ready for the main-dish beauties that follow.

First the basic recipe:

BASIC SOUFFLE

¼ cup flour
½ teaspoon salt
1 cup milk
4 eggs, separated
½ teaspoon cream of tartar
1½ cups additional ingredients, optional
Seasoning, optional

In medium saucepan over medium-high heat, melt butter. Blend in flour and salt. Cook, stirring constantly, until mixture is smooth and bubbly. Stir in milk all at once. Cook and stir until mixture boils and is smooth and thickened. Set aside.

In large mixing bowl, beat egg whites with cream of tartar at high speed until stiff but not dry, just until whites no longer slip when bowl is tilted. Thoroughly blend eggs yolks, additional ingredients and seasoning, if desired, into reserved sauce.

Gently but thoroughly, fold yolk mixture into whites. Carefully pour into 1½-quart souffle dish or casserole. For a "top hat," hold spoon upright and circle mixture to make ring about 1 inch from side of dish and 1 inch deep. Bake in preheated 350-degree oven until puffy, delicately browned and souffle shakes slightly when oven rack is gently moved back and forth, 30 to 40 minutes. Serve immediately.

Yield: 2 to 4 servings.

SPINACH AND SMOKED SALMON SOUFFLE

2 ounces Gruyere or Emmentaler Swiss cheese, grated
2 ounces grated Parmesan cheese
2 ounces smoked salmon, diced
2 teaspoons capers, chopped
1 scallion, top only, diced

Dust dish with a little of the Parmesan cheese.

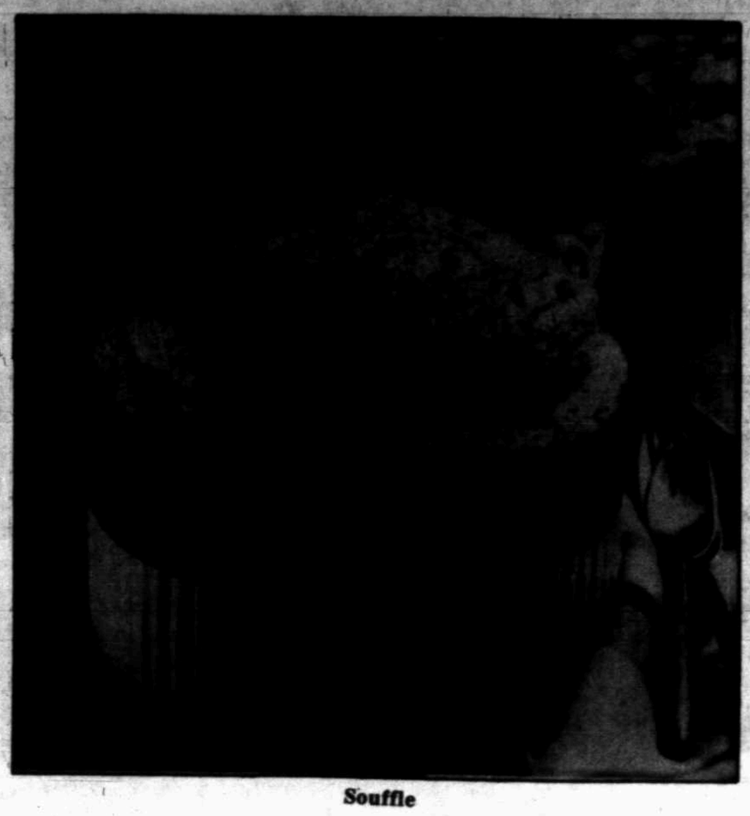

Squeeze drained spinach to remove any excess water. Combine all ingredients and add to yolk-sauce mixture. Proceed with Basic Souffle directions, baking in preheated 350-degree oven 30 to 45 minutes. Serve immediately.

Shrimp de Jonghe Souffle is gorgeous enough to serve to guests you want to impress.

SHRIMP DE JONGHE SOUFFLE

Butter
grated Parmesan cheese
⅓ cup butter
⅓ cup all-purpose flour

Souffle

1¼ cups milk
¼ cup dry white wine
⅓ cup (2 ounces) shredded Gruyere or Swiss cheese
1 tablespoon parsley flakes
¼ teaspoon garlic powder
½ teaspoon paprika
¼ teaspoon salt
6 eggs, separated
¾ teaspoon cream of tartar
1 (6-ounce) package tiny frozen cooked shrimp, thawed and drained

Butter bottom and sides of a 2 to 2½-quart souffle dish or straight-sided casserole. Dust with Parmesan cheese. Prepare a collar by making a four-inch-wide band of triple-thickness aluminum foil long enough to go around dish and overlap two inches. Butter one side of band and dust with Parmesan cheese. Wrap band around dish, dusted side in, and fasten with string. Collar should stand at least two inches above rim of dish. Set aside.

In medium saucepan over medium-high heat, melt butter. Blend in flour. Cook, stirring constantly, until mixture is smooth and bubbly. Stir in milk all at once. Cook and stir until mixture boils and is smooth and thickened. Stir in wine. Remove from heat. Stir in Gruyere cheese and seasonings until cheese is melted. Set aside.

In large mixing bowl, beat egg whites with cream of tartar at high speed until stiff but not dry, just until whites no longer slip when bowl is tilted. Thoroughly blend egg yolk and shrimp into reserved sauce. Gently but thoroughly, fold yolk mixture into whites. Carefully pour into prepared dish. For a "top hat," hold spoon upright and circle mixture to make a ring about 1 inch from side of dish and 1 inch deep.

Bake in preheated 350-degree oven until puffy, delicately browned an souffle shakes slightly when oven rack is moved gently back and forth, 35 to 45 minutes. Quickly, but gently, remove collar. Serve immediately.

Yield: 4 to 6 servings.

This looks like a souffle, puffs up like one because the egg whites are beaten separately, but actually it's a baked zestily flavored baked cheese fondue. Preparations is somewhat easier than a souffle. Satisfying, it's perfect for family or guests. Serve a fresh green salad and a fruit dessert with Puffy Cheese Fondue.

PUFFY CHEESE FONDUE

Butter
¼ cup butter
¼ cup all-purpose flour
1 tablespoon instant minced onion
1 teaspoon prepared mustard
½ teaspoon salt
½ teaspoon Worcestershire sauce
1 cup milk
½ cup (2 ounces) shredded Cheddar cheese
½ cup (2 ounces) shredded Swiss cheese
4 eggs, separated
3 slices whole wheat, cracked wheat or white bread, cut in ½-inch cubes
¼ teaspoon cream of tartar

Butter bottom and sides of 1½-quart souffle dish. Make three-inch band of triple thickness aluminum foil long enough to go around dish and overlap two inches. Lightly butter one side of band. Wrap around outside of dish with buttered side in and fasten with string. Collar should extend two inches above rim of dish.

In large saucepan melt ¼ cup butter. Blend in flour, onion, mustard, salt and Worcestershire. Cook, stirring constantly, over medium-high heat until mixture is smooth and bubbly. Stir in milk all at once. Add cheeses. Continue to cook and stir until mixture thickens and cheeses melt. Remove from heat. Let stand five minutes. Beat in egg yolks.

In large mixing bowl beat egg whites and cream of tartar at high speed until stiff but not dry, just until whites no longer slip when bowl is tilted. Gently but thoroughly fold yolk mixture and bread cubes into whites. Carefully pour mixture into prepared dish.

Bake in preheated 350-degree oven until puffy, delicately browned and fondue shakes slightly when oven rack is gently moved back and forth, 35 to 40 minutes. Serve immediately.

Yield: 4 servings.

To serve, gently cut through the top and lightly spoon out portions, including some of the top and side crusts with each.

If your people are not at the table when the souffle is ready, don't panic — it can be left in the oven with the heat off for five to (at the most) 10 minutes.

Classical artist Frank Mason to give workshops

Artist of the "classical style," Frank Mason, will be conducting three-day workshops, Nov. 6-8, under the auspices of Stehle-Reed Fine Art.

Workshops are available for preregistration by calling 689-6889. The fee for all three days is $150 and per-day is $65.Classes are limited to the first 20 people.

While in Midland, Mason will be feted with an art showing and reception Friday from 7 to 9 p.m. by Stehle-Reed. Invitations may be obtained by calling owners, Glenn Stehle or Walter Reed at 689-6889 or 682-6892.

He will also give a free painting demonstration at the Museum of the Southwest's Stables Gallery Wednesday.

Mason, a self-proclaimed believer in the Old Masters, paints landscapes, religious paintings and portraits with the light, space and brushwork frequently associated with the past.

Part of his allegiance to the masters is his willingness to make his own paints. As he states, he grinds colors in cooked oils and varnish "after teh methods of Rubens and the other masters."
