Exxon apologizes for tanker oil spill

VALDEZ, Alaska (AP) — Exxon today apologized for the nation's worst oil spill, and authorities said the captain of the oil company's tanker has taken steps to surrender to face charges of being drunk when the vessel ran aground.

"I want to tell you how sorry I am that this accident took place," Exxon Chairman L.G. Rawl said in full-page advertisements placed in U.S. newspapers.

"We cannot, of course, undo what has been done. But I can assure you that since March 24, the accident has been receiving our full attention and will continue to do so."

The Exxon Valdez rammed a reef on that day, spilling 10.1 million gallons of oil into Prince William Sound. Its captain, Joseph Hazelwood, admitted drinking before boarding the ship, according to court documents. Blood and urine samples taken nine hours after the accident indicated Hazelwood was drunk.

Exxon has fired Hazelwood. An arrest warrant has been issued in Alaska for him, but his whereabouts were unknown Sunday.

There were indications that the Huntington, N.Y., resident had contacted an attorney and that a surrender might be worked out, said Sgt. Clifton Smith of the New York state police.

In other developments:

■ The oil slick has turned to a swirling ugly brown glop on the brilliant blue sound and has grown to more than 1,000 square miles — bigger than the state of Rhode Island. It was moving primarily to the southwest toward salmon fisheries, fish-rich Seward area and Kenai Fjords National Park.

■ Scientists and fishermen brought in oil-smeared otters in things like airline dog cages and boxes hurriedly hammered together from plywood and chicken wire. A refrigerated trailer truck served as a morgue for dead otters and birds.

■ The Coast Guard said deliveries of North Slope crude oil will be allowed to return to near normal once the tanker is relieved of its remaining load, probably by Tuesday morning.

■ Soviet skimmer ship was en route to see what can be done with the oil in the sound.

■ A six-person team of Norwegian oil-spill experts arrived Sunday to begin assisting in cleaning up the beaches and saving oil-soaked animals.

Court documents filed in support of the arrest warrant issued say Hazelwood admitted drinking before boarding the ship and when asked what the problem was after it had ran aground, replied, "I think you're looking at it."

The ship was under the command of an uncertified third mate when it struck the reef. Hazelwood has been charged with operating a ship while under the influence of alcohol, reckless endangerment and negligent discharge of oil.

The oil has tainted an estimated 800 miles of beach.

Exxon Shipping Co. conceded Sunday its clean up efforts haven't been working, but said a new, better-equipped assault was to begin today with more effective equipment, more manpower and a floating command post, the Crystal Star.

State officials have blasted Exxon's effort to scrub beaches as dismal and ineffective. Only 10,000 barrels, about 4 percent, of the barrels of thick crude that spewed into the sound have been recovered.

Frank Iarossi, the shipping company's president, agreed with the critics.

"It's not the right thing to do. No way," Iarossi said.

He said the company dispatched beach workers simply because it was "responding to pressure to put somebody out there."

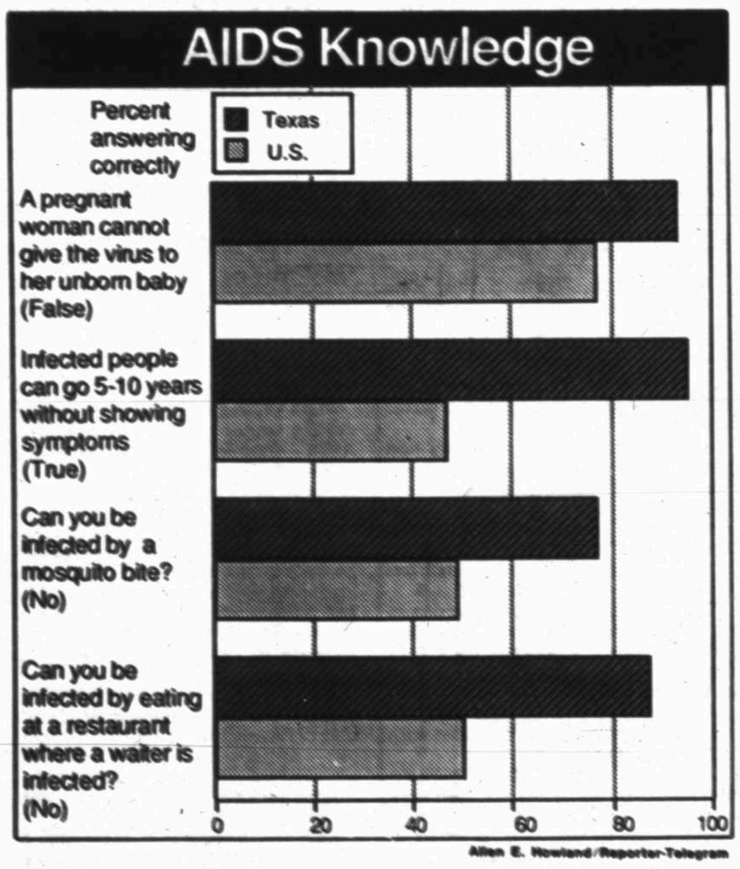

"We intend not to leave until the job is done," Iarossi added.

Lawmakers wary of funding for SSC

AUSTIN (AP) — As support for the super collider falters in Congress, Texas lawmakers are re-evaluating the spending of millions of dollars in state revenue on the atom smasher project.

"We're spending money for something that is somewhat unknown," said state Rep. Jim Rudd, D-Brownfield, chairman of the budget-writing House Appropriations Committee.

Lawmakers say if they don't provide millions of dollars for salaries, engineering and consultants for project south of Dallas they will guarantee its death.

Yet, there is a reluctance to cut the state's super collider budget out of fear such a move would undermine state leaders' lobbying efforts in Washington.

So far, the state has spent about $4.3 million on the project, most of which funded the National Research Laboratory Commission, the Texas agency created in 1985 to lobby for and oversee the building of the project.

The commission asked the Legislature this year for another $1.6 million to finish paying this year's expenses and nearly $4 million for the next two years.

Commission Chairman Tom Luce, a Dallas attorney, said if Congress decides not to fund the super collider the state will halt its efforts.

"We're not going to pour millions of dollars into something if it is not going to go forward," said Luce. "But I am optimistic it is going forward."

Under Texas law, the commission could be disbanded on 30 days' notice if Congress abandons plans to build the super collider, a 53-mile underground tunnel shaped like a race track that will be used to study the high speed collision of protons.

Congress is balking at President Bush's request that the super collider receive $250 million in 1990. Members of Congress, many of whom are not happy the project was not located in their states, say they are not convinced the project is worth the expense.

Procedural changes may increase welfare rolls

From Staff and Wire Reports

More than 53,000 Texans could benefit from changes in the federal welfare application procedures that take effect today. But bringing in that many needy recipients may mean Texas will have to come up with more than $35 million for increased aid and personnel.

The changes, partly the result of a federal lawsuit, are designed to benefit people who are poor enough to qualify for welfare, but who have been unable to make their way through complex paperwork.

"That's not to say that some workers just arbitrarily deny benefits to a client," Zeke Salinas, director of management studies for the Texas Department of Human Services, told the Dallas Morning News. "If there's been one worker who might have done that one time out there, that's an extreme case."

More often, Salinas said applicants who meet the financial needs for welfare are denied benefits simply because they have missed appointments or have been unable to satisfy the sometimes bewildering paperwork requirements in time to meet a 30-day deadline.

"What they (headquarters in Austin) are asking us to do now and what we are implementing is to 'go that extra mile,'" said Ann Bradford, area administrator for the Texas Department of Human Services in Midland.

"In the past, with the second missed appointment, we automatically denied the case. They were gone. And it was no longer an application or no longer a case.

"Now, we will give them the maximum to apply that we can."

The rate of administrative denials have been high, Mrs. Bradford said. To reduce the number of dismissed applications, the DHS caseworkers are reaching out to better help applicants.

Survey shows Texans' knowledge of AIDS

By JAMES CULLEN

AUSTIN — Texans know more about AIDS than the American public at large, but a survey conducted for the Texas Department of Health showed Hispanics and blacks have "knowledge gaps" about the deadly virus.

The Texas Health Commission must now focus its education efforts at hard-to-reach groups, commissioner Robert Bernstein said at a news conference to release the survey results.

While 87 percent of the Texas survey respondents knew the AIDS-causing virus could not be contracted by eating at a restaurant which employed an infected waiter, only 50 percent of the U.S. population correctly answered a similar question in a recent study by the National Center for Health Statistics.

Some 77 percent of the Texans, compared with 49 percent in the NCHS study, knew AIDS is not spread by mosquitoes. And 95 percent of Texans knew a person can be infected five to 10 years before developing AIDS symptoms, compared with 47 percent in the national study.

Bernstein said the survey confirmed the value of having accurate AIDS information. "The more people know about AIDS, the more tolerant their attitude is on AIDS-related issues. The better their attitude, the more likely they are to take precautions," he said.

The random telephone survey of 1,649 Texas residents was conducted from August to October 1988 by the University of Texas with a $136,000 grant from the federal Centers for Disease Control. It had a computed margin of error of 1.96 percent.

The survey showed respondents in South Texas were less knowledgeable about how AIDS is transmitted, as were blacks and Hispanics as ethnic groups.

Respondents in Public Health Region 3, which covers much of West Texas, including Midland, San Angelo and El Paso, had an average of 12.28 years of schooling and an average of 6.4 correct answers out of 10.

Bush meets with crash victims' families

WASHINGTON (AP) — Relatives of Americans killed in the bombing of Pan Am Flight 103 over Scotland told President Bush today they want an independent congressional investigation of the incident and of lapses in aviation security.

Bert Ammerman, chairman of a political action committee established to help the relatives, said Bush told them he would consider their request for a unified probe by a committee of Congress, as opposed to a variety of inquiries now under consideration.

"It was an important first step," Ammerman told reporters in the White House.

The relatives of the Pan Am 103 victims had complained that the administration gave them little information or comfort in the days following the explosion over Scotland. Today Paul Hudson, who lost his 16-year-old daughter Melina in the incident, said relatives of the bombing victims told Bush they thought the government failed to respond adequately.

"The opinion of the group was absolute outrage at the lack of compassion by the State Department," Hudson said.

The White House visitors, however, said they were pleased that Bush listened to their views, and they noted that the president gave them more than an hour's time to state their case. The meeting initially had been scheduled to last 20 minutes.

Lubbock taking advantage of free publicity from Bush

By WENDY E. LANE

LUBBOCK (AP) — Call it the Heartland. Call it Middle America. Call it America's Hometown.

But, please, just call Lubbock — especially if you're another big-time journalist who can put this High Plains town in the national news.

Imbued with a new sense of pride — and hunger for publicity — after President Bush styled this city as a barometer for national opinion, Lubbock civic leaders want the Washington press corps to make a habit of asking President Bush what Lubbock thinks of national issues, from the minimum wage to arms control.

"D.C., Phone Home," was the headline of a full-page ad Lubbock officials ran in the Washington-Baltimore edition of The Wall Street Journal last week, kicking off a campaign to promote this city of 187,000 as everybody's hometown.

The ad closed with the city's new slogan: "Look. Listen. Lubbock. Now."

"President Bush has really given us something we can rally around," said Randy Christian, a local advertising executive who helped think up the slogan.

The city is purchasing advertising, buttons and T-shirts to capitalize on all the free publicity Bush handed it.

Notoriety hit the city when Bush recounted during a nationally televised news conference a conversation with an old friend in Texas, who told the president "all the people in Lubbock think things are going just great."

Bush's story took city leaders by surprise. But it didn't take them long to see they were getting the kind of publicity money couldn't buy.

After reporters stopped calling and the crews from "Good Morning, America" took their lights and cameras out of the local pancake house, Lubbock's leaders went to work devising ways to keep the city in the spotlight.

WEATHER SUMMARY

Colder weather expected

From Staff and Wire Reports

A cool front is expected to drift through the Permian Basin tonight, bringing with it cloudy skies and milder temperatures, according to forecasters with the National Weather Service at Midland International Airport.

Tonight's forecast calls for a low near 50 degrees under cloudy skies. Winds will be out of the south at 5 to 15 mph, shifting to the north after midnight.

On Tuesday, skies will be fair with a high near 80 degrees. Winds will be out of the northeast at 10 to 15 mph.

Sunday's high of 88 was just one degree cooler than the record of 89, set April 2, 1978.

The morning low of 54 was 25 degrees warmer than the record of 29, set on that date in 1987.

STATE

A dry line stretched across Texas from near Stephenville to Junction to Laredo early today, dividing dry air over the West from the moist and unstable air in the East.

Meanwhile, the National Weather Service reported a weak cold front had entered the Panhandle and was located near Dalhart early today. A trough of low pressure extended across the Panhandle and South Plains into the Edwards Plateau near Del Rio.

Light rain was reported at Beaumont/Port Arthur in the Golden Triangle area, while some patchy fog formed in the moist air over parts of South Central Texas and along the Gulf Coast. Skies were mostly clear in the dry air over the western half of the state, while low level cloudiness was spreading across the rest of Texas.

NWS forecasters called for fair to partly skies cloudy tonight and Tuesday with widely scattered showers or thunderstorms over parts on North and South Texas.

NATION

Winter conditions continued with snow and high winds today in Colorado's mountains, which received up to 10 inches of snow over the weekend, while showery weather covered much of the central and eastern states.

In Keystone, Colo., an avalanche killed a backcountry skier who was skiing in a restricted area on Sunday. Gusts in the area reached 70 mph.

Westerly winds of 30 to 50 mph accompanying snow today in Colorado's northern and central mountains could produce near blizzard conditions.

An advisory for snow and blowing snow continued for the San Juan Mountains of southwest Colorado, where up to 6 inches were possible.

Snow also fell in some of the higher elevations of Oregon.

Castro, Gorbachev begin talks

HAVANA (AP) — Mikhail S. Gorbachev and Fidel Castro began daylong talks today after laying a wreath at a monument to a Cuban independence hero.

The government media spoke in glowing terms of the first visit by the Soviet Communist Party leader to a Latin American nation.

"Enthusiastic and Massive Reception for Gorbachev," headlined Cuba's Communist Party daily, Granma, alluding to the hundreds of thousands who lined the streets for a glimpse of the Soviet visitor.

After laying a wreath at a monument to Cuban independence hero Jose Marti, the Soviet president and his Cuban counterpart set aside more than six hours for talks today, Gorbachev's first full day in Cuba.

An enduring ally but orthodox Communist, Castro has criticized Gorbachev's domestic reform program as drawing too much from capitalism.

The Cuban revolutionary leader's unwillingness to institute such changes at home displeases the Soviets, who have suggested they may reduce the billions of dollars in aid they annually send Cuba.

A fatigue-clad Castro greeted Gorbachev on a rain-soaked tarmac shortly before nightfall Sunday and threw his arms around the gray-suited Kremlin leader in a fraternal embrace.

The man who has ruled Cuba for three decades then kissed Gorbachev's wife, Raisa, on both cheeks and escorted Gorbachev on a review of the presidential honor guard.

Hundreds of thousands of Cubans mustered by local neighborhood committees packed Jose Marti International Airport and lined up five- and six-deep along the 18-mile route to the downtown area to watch the two leaders pass by in a convertible Soviet limousine.

Soviet and Cuban flags were everywhere. Although Castro is known for his ability to turn out thousands of people in this city of 2 million, the welcome for Gorbachev appeared genuinely warm.

The Soviet leader was in an affable mood afterward, telling a Cuban correspondent, "Everything is clear in our friendship, in our hearts, in our soul. The only thing left to do is to talk and we do have something to talk about."

Official media in both countries have papered over ideological differences to stress the closeness of Cuban-Soviet relations and one of the main events on Gorbachev's schedule will be a speech Tuesday to the National Assembly.

Mrs. Gorbachev planned excursions today to a day care center, a Soviet-Cuban friendship association and a museum for Cuba's favorite American, the late author Ernest Hemingway.

Gorbachev's popularity in Cuba encompasses many who see him as the best hope for liberalization. Indeed, a coalition of dissident groups tentatively planned a pro-Gorbachev demonstration at the Soviet Embassy on Tuesday.

A woman churchgoer, asking not to be identified, told a visiting correspondent on Sunday, "Cuba needs perestroika and glasnost. God has put Gorbachev in the world and we are grateful."

With censorship now relaxed in the Soviet Union, Spanish-language magazines from Moscow are eagerly snapped up by Cubans who see them as a lively alternative to unimaginative local publications.

A major complaint among the educated is that so few copies of Soviet magazines are available at newsstands.

Given the differences in culture and the geographical remoteness of the two countries, the Soviet Union and Cuba seem an improbable partnership. But Cuba soaks up more than half of the Soviets' overseas aid program and routinely has lent itself for Soviet strategic purposes.

But with Gorbachev rethinking his priorities, there appears to be at least a possibility that Soviet generosity toward the island may diminish.

Estimates of Moscow's annual contribution to the Cuban economy range from between $4 billion to $7 billion. The Soviet media has made clear its view that that Cuba has squandered Soviet assistance to some development projects.

Youths seem to know about AIDS

An Analysis

By JAMES CULLEN
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — The good news is that younger and more sexually active Texans appear to be getting the facts about AIDS.

The bad news is that older people who tend to be less knowledgeable about the deadly virus are in positions of authority over AIDS education and prevention programs.

Those are among the conclusions of the most comprehensive study ever undertaken of sexual behavior and attitudes on AIDS in Texas.

The University of Texas Office of Survey Research conducted the survey of 1,649 Texans for the Department of Health between August and October 1988.

"As you increase in age, you decrease in AIDS knowledge," said Demetri Vacalis, an associate professor of journalism at the University of Texas who analyzed the survey results.

"People that are younger are getting the message, maybe because they are sexually active and they are paying attention," he said.

But he added, it "means the people who are making the decisions, being older, have less AIDS knowledge."

AIDS knowledge was closely tied to the level of education of respondents and their income, he said. Hispanics and blacks as groups were less knowledgeable about the virus than Anglos, but the survey points out areas that need attention, such as East Texas and South Texas.

Texas now spends $1.5 million each year on AIDS, among the lowest of the large industrial states, but legislative leaders have called for a dramatic increase in AIDS funding in the next biennium.

The survey found that 53 percent of Texans attend church nearly every week, while only 10 percent said they never attend church. Churchgoers viewed themselves at greater risk of catching AIDS than those with no religious ties, although religious respondents generally engaged in less risky sexual practices.

"Those people who never attend religious activities scored highest in AIDS knowledge," Vacalis said. But he added that churches could be an important conduit for reaching the faithful about the spread of the human immunodeficiency virus (HIV).

The consistent first choice of Texans to educate children on sex and AIDS is parents, but Vacalis noted, "Unfortunately, we're finding out the parents don't have the correct information."

Due to political problems that delay the prospects for getting sex education in primary grades in public schools, he suggested the clergy might be able to set up sex education programs more quickly in church-sponsored programs.

Vacalis said the survey pointed up a troubling statistic: nearly 40 percent of Texans believed they could get AIDS by giving blood, apparently confusing the blood donation process with the unrelated danger of infected syringes for drug users. That could lead to problems in maintaining an adequate blood supply, he said.

Also, he noted that 29 percent said they would refuse a transfusion in an emergency, out of 44 percent who lacked confidence in the blood supply.

In questions about sexual behavior, the survey found a sexually active group, as 96 percent of adults 18 and older said they had sex in the past seven years. Eleven percent admitted to having engaged in oral sex.

The vast majority reported having one sex partner (or less) in the past year. Not surprisingly, as church attendance increased, the number of sexual partners decreased.

As expected, the most sexually active group with multiple sex partners was the 18-24 age group (41 percent), followed by the 25-34 age group (19 percent). The numbers dropped precipitously for older groups.

Prostitute sex was reported by 10 percent of heterosexual males and 2 percent of heterosexual females.

The survey showed that approximately 24 percent of Texas adults are "at risk" of contacting AIDS. People are considered at risk if they have been sexually active and had more than one sexual partner in the past year or if they had been in a mutually faithful relationship less than seven years, before which they had been sexually active.

Approximately one-half of respondents who were at risk reported they had used a condom within the past year, two-thirds of them males. The survey found 94 percent of men and 58 percent of women had bought condoms. Condom users generally were better educated, more knowledgeable about AIDS and had greater income.

The survey also found 22 percent reported problems with condoms.

Resistance to condoms was heaviest among Hispanics, Vacalis noted, as 27 percent of "at risk" Hispanics said they refused condoms because they do not practice birth control, in line with Roman Catholic teaching, while 26 percent said they were too expensive.

Of heterosexual males in the "at risk" group, 56 percent reported participating in oral sex compared with 65 percent of heterosexual females.

Twelve percent of the sexually active and non-monogamous population in the "at risk" group reported having anal sex within the past seven years, the report noted, including nine percent of heterosexual males and 13 percent of heterosexual females. Although anal sex carries the highest risk of transmitting AIDS, 58 percent said they never used a condom.

While two-thirds of those in the "at risk" group have made changes in their lifestyles because of the AIDS threat, McAlister said, 14 percent of respondents — considered hard-core hedonists — agreed with the idea that life was too short to change their sexual practices because of AIDS.

AIDS

The survey also showed that approximately 24 percent of the population is "at risk" of contacting AIDS. People are at risk if they were sexually active and had more than one sexual partner in the past year or been in a mutually faithful relationship less than seven years, before which they had been sexually active.

Bernstein said the survey would help in targeting areas that need special attention.

"We don't have the resources to get out to all the places we should," he said. "It is very important to have targets in mind," such drug users or, the deaf or people with language barriers, he added.

Bernstein also called a comprehensive health education program starting in kindergarten "an absolute must," and said it should deal not only with AIDS, but also preventing smoking, teen-age pregnancy and drug and alcohol use.

He added that such a program should be handled by "professionals and not by an assistant coach who has nothing to do on a rainy day...I think it's absolutely essential and we shouldn't be toying around."

While 71 percent of respondents believed parents should teach their children about sex and AIDS, Bernstein said, "Of course the big program is parents in some areas aren't willing to teach their children these things."

Some 85 percent of the parents of children under 18 think sex education classes should be taught in elementary (39 percent) or junior high (46 percent).

The survey showed 65 percent would allow children infected with the human immunodeficiency virus (HIV) to attend public school, and Demetri Vacalis, a survey analyst, noted that non-parents were more protective of the children than parents were.

Some 59 percent opposed quarantining infected persons and 58 percent would give AIDS patients the same legal rights as the handicapped.

But 90 percent favored mandatory AIDS testing of persons arrested for prostitution or intravenous drug use, as Sen. Carl Parker, D-Port Arthur, has proposed in a bill that is pending in the Senate Criminal Justice Committee. Only 48 percent would require testing to obtain health insurance.

Christie Reed, director of the Health Department's AIDS division, said she was encouraged by some of the findings but disturbed by others. "We've got a long way to go in some areas of the heterosexual population," she said. "For example, two out of five Texans think you can contact AIDS by donating blood. That's wrong."

The behavior section results showed two-thirds of the 13 percent who admitted having more than one sexual partner in the past year reported changing their behavior as a result of the AIDS epidemic.

However, only one-half of those judged sexually active, but not monogamous, said they used protective condoms.

Some 43 percent of those respondents also reported having sex with a partner who had sex with multiple partners.

AIDS, or aquired immune deficiency syndrome, is spread predominantly through the transfer of blood or sexual fluids from an infected individual to another, primarily through sexual intercourse or the sharing of IV-drug needles or syringes, the Health Department noted. An infected pregnant woman can pass the virus to her unborn baby.

WELFARE

For example, "Now, if they miss the second appointment, we are going to hold the application for 30 days from the date of filing. We will send them another letter."

As in the past, potential welfare recipients can reapply time after time.

"They could be denied today and reapply tomorrow or even today," Mrs. Bradford said.

"We need to try harder to work with them," Mrs. Bradford said. However, "The problem (is) we do not have the staff. Our caseload has just skyrocketed" since 1985.

Texas is "not terribly generous in its human-services system," Mrs. Bradford said. "Texas has been very frugal," she said. But "Texas is 48th out of the 50 states and the District of Columbia in the amount paid per recipient by the Aid to Families with Dependent Children."

In Texas, the eligibility requirement for welfare is "so low that very likely they (the new poor) aren't poor enough" to qualify. "It is difficult and stressful to look at people who need help and not being able to help them," Mrs. Bradford said.

"Our programs are so complex. There are so many ifs, ands and buts."

In applying for public assistance, applicants are required to provide birth certificate for the children, Social Security numbers of the children, verification of rent receipts, utility bills, and, among other things, earnings."

To be eligible for Aid to Families with Dependent Children, the basic welfare program financed by the federal and state governments, a family of three in Texas may earn no more than $574 a month.

State officials estimate the procedural changes for those applying for AFDC, food stamps and Medicaid could result in a 10 percent to 12 percent increase in the number of people on the welfare rolls.

The Legislative Budget Board estimated last year that an increase of 1 percent in the approved AFDC caseload requires an increase of about $3.5 million annually in state expenditures. On that basis, a 10 percent increase in cases would cost Texas $35 million.

Even without the additional approvals, the budget board predicted that between 530,621 and 545,685 people — or between 5.2 percent and 8.1 percent more than last year — would receive aid in fiscal 1989, which began Oct. 1.

But Rob Mosbacher, chairman of the state Human Services Commission, said, "I would be amazed if the increase turned out to be as large as that estimate."

In the 1988 fiscal year that ended Sept. 30, Texas rejected about 45 percent of AFDC applicants, almost 70 percent of them on procedural grounds. The state ranks highest of any state for the number of rejections.

LUBBOCK

"We felt that this was an opportunity we should take advantage of," said Mayor B.C. "Peck" McMinn, who treasures a handwritten note from Bush thanking him for his comments about Lubbock residents' support of Bush during the media onslaught. "It's just been feeding on itself."

McMinn even got a congratulatory phone call from James Maloof, mayor of Peoria, Ill., the town made famous by the Nixon administration's quip, "Will it play in Peoria?"

"All of the sudden we were propelled into the limelight," said Lee Stafford, executive vice president of the city's industrial development board.

He hopes greater awareness of Lubbock might bring the West Texas city more jobs, tourists and conventions. City officials say they're not sure what the whole campaign will cost. They spent $6,100 on the Wall Street Journal ad.

It's too early to look for results, but the attention showered on this agriculture-based town already has spawned envy among other mid-sized cities.

"There are a lot of other Texas cities that want me to get the president to mention their cities," said U.S. Sen. Phil Gramm, R-Texas.

While Lubbock doesn't boast about its crime rate, with a burglary incidence that is among the highest in the nation, or the dust that swirls through town from the surrounding cotton fields each spring, being America's Heartland makes the city an easier sell for economic development officials, Stafford said.

"We're not just another city out looking for new business," he said. "We're Lubbock and that's a unique term now."

Others express the more altruistic desire that Lubbock's example will remind politicians the "real America" knows and cares what's going on in the nation's capitol.

"It doesn't take a genius to realize that there are many cities in America just like Lubbock," said the ad. "And how they think and how they feel about national and international issues is a barometer our leaders 'inside the Beltway' should never ignore."

FLIGHT

The relatives also planned to confront members of Congress with a march to the Capitol, hold a religious service and rally in Lafayette Park across from the White House.

The group, organized a few weeks after the Dec. 21 crash that killed 270 people, has pushed for tougher security at U.S. and foreign airports and for a system to warn passengers of terrorist threats against airliners.

Some U.S. relatives accused their government of warning diplomats and soldiers but not the flying public of threats against flights from Frankfurt to the United States. U.S. officials have said the notice of a threat posted on at least one American embassy bulletin board — in Moscow — was not authorized, and officials say there is no double standard in issuing warnings.

Investigators of the Flight 103 bombing have determined that plastic explosives packed in a radio-cassette player blew up the jet, but they have not said who they believe planted the bomb.

Still, state dollars are being used to dramatically expand the commission that only last year had a staff of seven and was working out of an office on the University of Texas at Austin campus.

The commission envisions more than tripling its staff to 24 members this year. It has moved to new office space in DeSoto that has meant increasing annual rent from $7,000 to $90,000.

The commission plans to spend $180,000 this year on travel and more than $450,000 on consultants to study everything from regional geology to file management.

Some lawmakers argue the state has more urgent needs than the super collider and tax dollars should be used to meet those needs.

"There are needs of the state and there are wants. And I put the super collider in wants," said state Sen. John Leedom, R-Dallas.

Soldiers thwart coup attempt, Haitian

PORT-AU-PRINCE, Haiti (AP) — Lt. Gen. Prosper Avril went on national television early today to announce that forces loyal to his government had thwarted a coup attempt led by power-hungry soldiers.

There were indications that the attempt to overthrow Avril may have been related to his vow to crack down on officers involved in drug smuggling.

The international airport remained closed early today and soldiers patrolled Port-au-Prince streets, now quiet, that had echoed with gunfire 24 hours earlier.

Avril, who assumed power in six months ago, was reportedly seized at his suburban home early Sunday and rescued by loyal soldiers as he was being driven to the airport to be deported.

"Some members of the armed forces, blinded by their exorbitant ambitions, attempted to overthrow the government," Avril said in a 10-minute speech.

"I appeal to the nation to cooperate with us in peace and unity for the realization of our democratic objectives," he added.

Avril gave no details of the attempted coup, but said, "I have faith in the army."

He was flanked by a dozen soldiers, including Sgt. Major Joseph Heubreux, who led the September revolt by noncommissioned officers that put Avril in power after ousting a regime blamed for widespread human rights abuses.

"Today's events have shown that the establishment of democracy in Haiti under the present circumstances is a long and arduous task," said Avril, who has promised presidential elections this year and other democratic reforms.

Loyalists in tanks thwarted Sunday's coup attempt by rescuing a handcuffed Avril as he was being driven by rebel officers to the airport to be flown out of Haiti, according to presidential guardsmen and a U.S. Embassy official.

A government communique said that in the early hours of the coup attempt "certain officers besieged" the presidential palace "and attempted to overthrow the government" of this impoverished nation.

Four days before the coup attempt, Avril fired four senior army officers for alleged drug trafficking and promised the crackdown would bring more purges.

Richard Melton, U.S. deputy assistant secretary of state for Caribbean affairs, told Avril a week ago in Haiti that resumption of $70 million in U.S. aid depended partly on efforts to curb the drug trade.

A powerful army officer, Col. Jean-Claude Paul, was indicted by a Miami grand jury on drug smuggling charges last year but died myseriously in October after eating soup that officials said was poisoned.

U.S. officials began to talk of restoring the funds after the 50-year-old Avril came to power Sept. 17, 1988 in the coup that ousted Lt. Gen. Henri Namphy. Namphy had ruled the country for most of the 2½ years after Jean-Claude Duvalier was swept from power in a February 1986 popular uprising that ended three decades of Duvalier family rule.

Details on Sunday's events were sketchy and sometimes conflicted.

Presidential guardsmen said Avril was taken captive early Sunday at his mansion in Canape Verte, a wealthy neighborhood in the hills overlooking the capital, after he returned home from a party.

They said Avril's wife, Marie-Ange, and her mother were taken captive with Avril but released a few hours later.

Loyal soldiers said one of Avril's sons, two of his brothers, and Interior Minister Col. Acedius St. Louis and his son were also seized by the rebels. They were reportedly freed Sunday night after loyalists in two tanks rolled into the Leopards commando battalion's encampment outside the capital.

U.S. Embassy spokeswoman Susan Clyde said reports indicated the coup attempt occurred about 4:30 a.m. Sunday and that Avril was detained for a time. Unconfirmed reports said four army officers planned the coup, including Gen. Guy Francois, commander of the powerful Dessalines barracks. The unit's fortress next to the National Palace houses the most feared fighters in Haiti's 7,000-man army.

The reports said the four officers were detained.

Military sources confirmed that one officer identified as Col. Himmler Rebu, commander of the Leopards battalion, was under military guard at the National Palace. The sources said army commander Maj. Gen. Herard Abraham was among the coup leaders but that the plot collapsed when he refused to assume the presidency.

Though Avril has promised elections this year and restored some suspended constitutional, critics say he is moving too slowly toward democratic reforms.

"The only way for Haiti to stop having coups is for it to have a legitimate, constitutionally elected civilian government," said Louis Dejoie Jr., a moderate politician with presidential aspirations.

Pan Am pilot wants to raise reward

LONDON (AP) — A Pan Am pilot whose wife was killed in the explosion of Pan Am Flight 103 called for a $2.5 million reward to catch the bombers and pledged the first $100,000, a newspaper reported Sunday.

The Sunday Telegraph quoted pilot Bruce Smith, whose British wife Ingrid was aboard Flight 103, as saying if Iran's Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini can raise a multimillion-dollar reward for the assassination of British author Salman Rushdie, "then we can do the same for the monsters who murdered our families."

Many Moslems consider Rushdie's latest novel, "The Satanic Verses," insulting to Islam, and Iranian clerics offered a bounty of up to $5.2 million after Khomeini called for Rushdie's death.

Smith pledged $100,000 of the reward from his compensation offered by Boeing to relatives.

Families of Britons killed in the bombing say they will pressure the government to conduct a public inquiry into how airport security was before the disaster.

UK Families Flight 103, which formed Saturday, said it objected to the way Transport Minister Paul Channon and his department handled events after the Boeing 747 blew up over Scotland on a London-to-New York flight Dec. 21, killing all 259 people on board and 11 on the ground.

Thirty-five relatives and friends of those killed attended the meeting Saturday.

Families of the dead have criticized the airline and authorities in the United States, Britain and in Frankfurt, West Germany, where the flight originated, because threats against the airline were not made public.

Security efforts at the airports have also been criticized.

Dog reportedly sniffs out tumor

LONDON (AP) — Doctors are intrigued by a dog that reportedly pinpointed a malignant tumor on her owner's thigh and even tried to bite it off.

They report in the latest issue of The Lancet, the respected British medical weekly, that the dog persistently sniffed at the tumor.

Two-year-old Baby, a cross between a collie and a Doberman pinscher, "may have saved her owner's life by prompting her to seek treatment when the lesion was still at a thin and curable stage," wrote Hywel Williams and Andres Pembroke, doctors at King's College Hospital, London.

They said the dog ignored other moles and marks on the woman but spent several minutes a day sniffing the tumor over a period of several months until the owner finally sought medical advice.

"It is unlikely that the dog was merely fascinated by the appearance of the melanoma since she could smell the lesion through the patient's clothing," the doctors wrote.

Baby's owner, Bonita Whitfield, 44, told Sky Television she was in her garden last summer wearing shorts when the dog twice tried to bite off the tumor.

"It's possible that a dog can pick out this particular (tumor) just as it smells explosives," Williams told Sky Television.

Arafat elected head of exiled government

TUNIS, Tunisia (AP) — PLO chairman Yasser Arafat has been elected president of the government-in-exile for the newly declared Palestinian state, a PLO official announced.

The Palestine Liberation Organization's central committee voted unanimously for Arafat, who was unopposed in his bid for president of the provisional government, said Abdelhamid Essayeh, president of the Palestine National Council, the PLO's parliament-in-exile.

Essayeh did not specify how many of the 70 committee members were present for Sunday's vote.

The Kuwait News Agency quoted PLO spokesman Bassam Abu Sharif as saying those voting for Arafat included members of the hard-line factions Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine and Democratic Front for the Liberation of Palestine. They have expressed reservations about Arafat's policies.

Even though no land is under Palestinian control, the council proclaimed an independent state at a meeting Nov. 15. It left it up to the central committee to establish a government-in-exile.

The central committee resumed meeting Sunday afternoon and elected Farouk Kaddoumi foreign minister of the Palestinian state, PLO official Abu Iyad told the French news agency Agence France-Presse.

Iyad is a member of a small executive committee that runs day-to-day affairs of the PLO and is also a top official in Arafat's Fatah, the largest PLO group.

Kaddoumi has long served as the equivalent of foreign minister for the PLO.

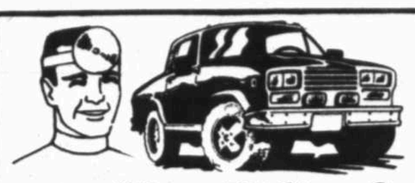

Arafat will simultaneously fill the functions of president of the executive committee, commander-in-chief of Palestinian armed forces and president of the Palestinian state.

The PLO says 114 nations have recognized the Palestinian state, which has no defined borders but is generally seen as including the Israeli-occupied West Bank and Gaza Strip. Some of these countries have raised Palestinian diplomatic missions to the status of embassies.

ANSWERS TO WEEKLY BRIDGE QUIZ

Q.1—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠K93 ♡AQ10952 ◇7 ♣AKQ
The bidding has proceeded:

South	West	North	East
1 ♡	Pass	1 NT	Pass

What do you bid now?

A.—Playing in hearts, your hand is worth 20 points. Partner should have at least 6 HCP for his response, and probably at least two hearts to give you an eight-card fit. So bid what you think you can make—four hearts.

Q.2—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠Q1063 ♡93 ◇AQ9 ♣AQ86
The bidding has proceeded:

South	West	North	East
1 ♠	Pass	1 ♡	Pass

What do you bid now?

A.—Although you have a balanced minimum, this is not the hand for a rebid of one no trump. Make it a rule never to bypass a four-card major; if you do happen to have a 4-4 fit, it is the most flexible contract of all to handle. Rebid one spade.

Q.3—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠73 ♡A87 ◇94 ♣AQJ1062
The bidding has proceeded:

South	West	North	East
1 ♣	Pass	1 ♠	Pass
2 ♣	Pass	3 ♣	Pass

What action do you take?

A.—If partner has a diamond stopper, three no trump could be laydown; at worst, it will be on a finesse. The way to advise partner of the problem is by bidding three hearts. If he has a diamond stopper, he will convert to three no trump. If he simply returns to four clubs, you will have to toss in the towel, but you will have done your all to get to game.

Q.4—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠K109 ♡862 ◇A103 ♣AQ104
The bidding has proceeded:

South	West	North	East
1 ♠	Pass	1 ♡	Pass
1 NT	Pass	2 NT	Pass

What action do you take?

A.—With only 13 HCP, it might seem judicious to pass. However, the point count doesn't do your hand full justice. Your prime cards are undervalued and you have excellent intermediates. In addition, your heart fragment means partner's suit is a potential source of tricks. Bid three no trump.

Q.5—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠A6 ♡KQ1054 ◇AQJ6 ♣K3
The bidding has proceeded:

East	South	West	North
1 ♠	Dbl	1 ♠	Pass

What action do you take?

A.—Partner doesn't have much, but you need little more than length in one of the red suits to compete effectively for a partscore, especially since the king of clubs is well located behind opener. The way to get partner to pick his better red suit is to double again. Since he hasn't bid, it's still for takeout.

Q.6—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠6 ♡Q1085 ◇AJ764 ♣K82
The bidding has proceeded:

West	North	East	South
1 ◇	1 ♠	Pass	?

What action do you take?

A.—The fact that you have a singleton in partner's suit decreases the value of your hand considerably. Since game is probably out of the question, there is no reason to disturb this contract. You have no source of tricks at no trump, and your values should serve partner well at one spade. Pass.

Maureen Reagan says she was beaten, abused by first husband

NEW YORK (AP) — Maureen Reagan, daughter of former President Ronald Reagan and actress Jane Wyman, says she was beaten and abused by her first husband.

Reagan

"One night when he seemed to think I was gathering the resolve to finally leave him, he started strangling me, and when I fell on the floor he kicked me in the head," Reagan wrote in her new book, "First Father, First Daughter."

In an excerpt published in this week's People magazine, Reagan wrote that her husband, a police officer, frequently beat her during the brief time they were married in the early 1960s.

The marriage "turned out to be the single worst mistake of my entire life," the 28-year-old Reagan wrote. "By the time I finally discovered the strength to leave him, I had been brutally beaten, abused, battered and kicked...One time I picked up his service revolver and held it in my hands and realized to my relief that I was incapable of murder."

She does not identify her first husband in the book and says she has not seen him in more than 25 years.

She wrote that her father only learned about the beatings recently, when he was sent a copy of the chapter dealing with the marriage.

Reagan lives with her third husband, Dennis Revell, in Los Angeles.

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Hollywood song-and-dance man Gene Kelly was home from the hospital today recuperating from treatment for pneumonia.

Kelly, 76, was released from Cedars-Sinai hospital Sunday, said publicist Beebe Kline.

Kelly was admitted Wednesday under a pseudonym.

"He came in quietly," said hospital spokesman Ron Wise. "His physicians didn't want him to be bothered by phone calls or visitors."

The illness forced the entertainer to cancel a weekend performance of his one-man show, "Evening with Gene Kelly" at La Mirada Civic Center. Theater spokeswoman Beverly Hamlin said the performance was not rescheduled and refunds would be given to the 1,300 ticketholders.

Kelly starred in such films as "An American in Paris" and "Anchors Aweigh," with Frank Sinatra. He is probably best known for his splash dance in "Singin' in the Rain," which he also co-directed.

JACKSON, Miss. (AP) — Author Eudora Welty received a standing ovation at a Mississippi Symphony Orchestra gala marking her 80th birthday.

In addition to "Happy Birthday," the symphony on Sunday performed a concerto that was commissioned especially for the occasion.

The idea to honor the author with "Concerto for Orchestra: Images From Welty" came from conductor Colman Pearce.

Welty, whose birthday is April 13, won the Pulitzer Prize in 1973 for her book, "The Optimist's Daughter." Her autobiographical "One Writer's Beginnings" is among her best known works.

NEW YORK (AP) — Cardinal John O'Connor chastised a local TV station for repeatting a joke comedian Robin Williams reportedly told about unwed mothers and said television has become "a radioactive desert of filth."

In remarks Sunday at St. Patrick's Cathedral, the cardinal criticized WNBC-TV for a joke by critic Pia Lindstrom during a newscast Thursday.

According to O'Connor, Lindstrom said Williams had told her during the Academy Awards ceremony that his girlfriend, Marsha Garces, was going to have a baby. Williams said he intended to make a movie about the pregnancy called "Fetal Attraction."

O'Connor said he found the joke "gross bad taste in the least." He said he was particularly upset that the two news anchors laughed at the joke.

"We used to call television a wasteland," the cardinal said. "Now it has become a radioactive desert of filth and materialism."

He said television networks should begin campaigns to keep questionable material off the air.

WNBC-TV news director Terry Baker said he would have no comment on the cardinal's remarks.

COLUMBUS, Ohio (AP) — After 41 years of flying dangerous missions around the globe, comic-strip hero Steve Canyon was hanging up his blue flight suit today.

Air Force Col. Stevenson B. Canyon was to be retired in a ceremony at Ohio State University. Canyon's creator, cartoonist Milton Caniff, was a graduate of Ohio State and willed many of his drawings and papers to the university. He died last year at age 81.

"Through Steve Canyon, Milt Caniff did a lot to keep up the spirits of fliers and the Air Force," said 1st Lt. Lynn Ellen Bryant of McGuire Air Force Base in New Jersey. "He really became a part of Air Force lore, and people remember."

A biography and list of Canyon's exploits have been prepared by the Air Force for this afternoon's presentation to the university. An exhibit will be established in the journalism school's library, which recently was dedicated to Caniff's memory.

The final Steve Canyon strip appeared in newspapers on June 4, shortly after Caniff's death.

Ohio State spokesman Leon Rubin said today's presentation was the Air Force's idea. Canyon is said to have attended Ohio State before joining the Army Air Corps — the predecessor of the Air Force — in 1947.

Ms. Bryant said the Air Force went through all the old Canyon comic strips to compile a "personnel record" for the character.

"People here and in New York have dedicated a lot of time, energy and imagination to the project," Ms. Bryant said. "We are very happy and honored to do something that will be seen by others and is going to last."

Canyon's service record "includes decorations, citations, movement orders for each base, family data, all sorts of good stuff," she said. "We also put together a flight record listing all his flying achievements, the planes he was qualified to fly, the hours in each plane, the instructor, how many missions he flew."

The Air Force decided that since his record was so varied, he should be assigned to the Office of Special Investigations.

"That also allowed us to say certain things were classified and we coudn't discuss them," Ms. Bryant said.

The Air Force planned to present the university with a modern uniform with Canyon's insignia, rank and name tag, along with a retirement certificate for Canyon and his wife, Summer Smith.

The officers at McGuire made a case for the display that will hold Canyon's 13 medals and eight ribbons. It is inscribed: "Stevenson B. Canyon, AAF-USAF, 1947-1988."

Force reduction talks raise hope

For 15 years, the East and the West talked in Vienna about reducing conventional forces in Europe. But over that decade and a half there was no progress. None at all.

Now a new conference has begun, and, almost unbelievably, negotiators are talking of agreement by 1991.

What's different?

In a couple of names, Ronald Reagan and Mikhail Gorbachev.

When the Soviet leader spoke before the United Nations in December, he announced unilateral troop reductions in Europe. Did he mean it, or was this only propaganda? One early test of sincerity would come at the opening of the East-West talks on conventional forces in Vienna.

When those talks opened, Soviet Foreign Minister Eduard Shevardnadze's proposals tracked closely what Gorbachev had promised. The Soviet proposals went beyond the unilateral withdrawal and came close to the U.S. suggestions of 10 percent to 15 percent overall cuts in forces, with more reductions to come.

On the American side, Reagan has been willing to work with Gorbachev and to make the prospect for such force reductions more likely. Now, George Bush is carrying on where Reagan left off. That's why the negotiators are optimistic and it's a good reason. After all, for 15 years little of substance was accomplished in negotiations.

Of course, the usual qualifications and cautions apply. The proposals must be broken down by categories — tanks, troops, artillery, planes. The Soviets have an edge in most categories, and the 16 NATO members insist that Soviet cutbacks be larger. Adequate verification is a must. Force figures must be established before percentages can be applied. And there's always the historical problem to consider — talking about negotiating an agreement is always far easier than actually bringing one about.

In fact, after 15 years of stalemate, the prospect of a mutually beneficial, balanced, verifiable agreement in two or even three years looks like a pipedream. We should all hope that it is not and that negotiators can work out their differences this time.

Another View:

Voting in Moscow

The proletarians have nothing to lose but their chains. They have a world to win. Workingmen of all countries, unite." Karl Marx wrote those words in the late 1840s, but died long before Lenin, Stalin and the rest of the Soviet hardliners used the name and works of the German revolutionist to put the working men and women in the Soviet Union into a set of chains that to this day are still unbroken.

Since Marx had only vague dreams about a society built around working people, we cannot tell for sure how he would have felt about Nina Ageyeva, the forewoman of a team of house painters, who challenged the Communist mayor of Moscow, Valery Saikin, and beat him in the first election held in the Soviet Union since the Communists invoked the Marx name and took control of the Kremlin in 1917.

We think Marx would have been proud of Ms. Ageyeva, although we cannot be sure. Because she and the millions of other voters who went to the polls over the March 25-26 weekend were telling Mr. Marx and all the Communists who followed him that the system they had created was not working. If Marx really was sincere in advocating a "workers' paradise" he should be proud of the protest of Ms. Ageyeva and others against the system that has enslaved them throughout their lives.

None of us really know whether Soviet workers will get the consumers goods for which they are campaigning or whether citizens of Estonia, Latvia or Lithuania — taken by force into the Soviet Union decades ago — will obtain the freedom that they so richly deserve.

We still do not know what to make of Mikhail Gorbachev, who called for the first elections in Communist Soviet history and has captured countless headlines with his version of a kinder, gentler world. We cannot shake from our minds the image of a group of powerful critics plotting the downfall of Mr. Gorbachev and the return to power of a hard-liner who will snap the old chains onto the Soviet citizens.

But for today, at least, we can applaud the fact that elections were held and that at least by Soviet standards, real change is taking place. Those were real, live Estonia citizens who appeared on the "60 Minutes" television program, saying they want freedom for their homeland and more private enterprise.

Stalinism could return to the Soviet Union. But Mr. Gorbachev has let a genie escape from the bottle in which Soviet citizens have long been imprisoned. It is too soon to tell whether Nina Ageyeva and her fellow Soviet workers are on their way to creating the paradise of which Karl Marx spoke — a paradise so far attained only in those countries that have embraced the private enterprise system that Marx despised. But we can hope.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Monday, April 3, the 93rd day of 1989. There are 272 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

On April 3, 1860, the legendary Pony Express began service between St. Joseph, Mo., and Sacramento, Calif. The service would last for only 1½ years before giving way to the transcontinental telegraph.

On this date:

In 1776, George Washington received an honorary doctor of laws degree from Harvard College.

In 1783, Washington Irving, author of "Rip Van Winkle" and "The Legend of Sleepy Hollow," was born in New York City.

In 1865, Union forces occupied the Confederate capital of Richmond, Va., during the Civil War.

In 1882, the notorious outlaw Jesse James was shot to death in St. Joseph, Mo., by Robert Ford, a member of his own gang.

In 1936, Bruno Hauptmann was electrocuted in Trenton, N.J., for the kidnap-murder of the Lindbergh infant.

In 1946, Lt. Gen. Masaharu Homma, the Japanese officer responsible for the Bataan Death March during World War II, was executed.

In 1948, President Harry S. Truman signed the Marshall Plan, which allocated more than $5 billion in aid for 16 European countries.

In 1964, the United States and Panama agreed to resume recently severed diplomatic relations and seek prompt settlement of the canal dispute.

In 1968, North Vietnam agreed to meet with U.S. representatives to set up preliminary peace talks.

VA watchdogs shelved important audits

WASHINGTON — Watchdogs at the Veterans Administration have been accused of concealing politically sensitive findings of waste and abuse — findings that ended up on a shelf instead of in the hands of Congress.

Jack Anderson

The inspector general's staff at the VA produces audits, which are normally released to the public in semi-annual reports to Congress. But we have learned of a few audits that never saw the light of day for reasons that indicate the inspector general may have been distracted by politics.

Inspectors general have been installed in many federal agencies since the 1970s. Their job is to audit and investigate their own departments without concern for politics or the departments' reputation. More than anyone, these watchdogs should follow the axiom of Supreme Court Justice Louis Brandeis: "Sunlight is said to be the best of disinfectants."

For reasons that sound flimsy, however, some VA inspector general audits were never released. A whistleblower has dubbed them "credenza" reports, for their final, private, resting place.

Our associate Stewart Harris saw the uncirculated audits and found evidence that former VA inspector general Frank Sato may have caved in to outside considerations.

A 1986 audit by Sato's staff concluded that the VA could save $6.7 million if it didn't build an unneeded pedestrian bridge at the VA Medical Center in Portland, Ore. Sato agreed with the conclusion, but the audit ended up in the credenza, and the bridge was built. Sato explained that Sen. Mark Hatfield, R-Ore., had already budgeted the money for his home state and the VA audit would not have changed that. We asked him if he was afraid of stepping on Hatfield's toes. Sato's answer indicated that he balanced political considerations. Sato said he could have been called before Congress or suffered other distracting, political repercussions if he had issued the report. "You have to consider how to get the most bang for the buck," he said.

We think he is wrong. The inspector general's job is to investigate waste, even if he bumps up against a member of Congress and even if the money is already spent. It is not his job to play politics.

In another report, Sato's investigators found that many veterans who were paid for being 100 percent disabled were working in other federal jobs. A person who is 100 percent disabled is not supposed to be able to work. The audit was canceled before it was finished. Sato said there was no reason to finish it because the VA saw an early draft of the information and agreed to clean up its act. That is comparable to the police deciding not to tell the district attorney about a robbery because the robber agreed not to do it again. The inspector general is not supposed to have his strings pulled by the agency that he investigates.

Sato's staff also suspended an audit of the Walla Walla, Wash., VA hospital. The VA was grappling with the idea of turning the hospital into an outpatient clinic. Sato told us the VA had already made its decision, so it was not necessary for his team to continue the audit. But it seems to us that the audit would have been useful in that decision-making process. Rep. Tom Foley, D-Wash., proved that it wasn't too late to change the VA's mind.

Foley flexed his considerable political muscle and stopped the VA from converting the hospital to an outpatient clinic. Many of the patients in that hospital were Foley's constituents.

The General Accounting Office and the Office of Special Counsel investigated the reports that Sato did not give to Congress and found no "conclusive" evidence that the Inspector General's office has lost its independence.

A spokesman for the inspector general told us that the credenza reports are not a secret, even though they were not listed in the office's semi-annual report to Congress. It's true that the audits are available for public inspection, but only if the public knows what's in that credenza.

STEPPING ON TOES — Congress wants to know if the Central Intelligence Agency stopped the FBI from investigating the airplane crash last August that killed the president of Pakistan and the U.S. ambassador to that country. Rep. Bill McCollum, R-Fla., thinks it may be too late, because the FBI was not allowed to do its job soon after the crash. President Mohammed Zia Ul-Haq and Ambassador Arnold Raphel were killed in the crash, which Pakistani investigators believe was an act of terrorism. The FBI can investigate terrorism in foreign countries if the host country gives permission. Pakistan didn't object to an FBI investigation, but the State Department refused to give the FBI access to the crash site. Now some members of Congress are wondering if the CIA had anything to do with that decision. Our sources say hearings will be held soon on Capitol Hill to get some answers.

MINI-EDITORIAL — It's no coincidence that you get more junk mail from your representatives in Congress during an election year. Congress use its free mailing privilege as a blatant campaign tool. The Senate is peeved that the House spends so much money on mailings, so it recently voted to spend more money itself. The senators excused their action by saying they wanted to force the House to spend less. We won't even attempt to explain their convoluted logic. What is clear is that members of Congress, who recently whined that their salaries were too low to make the job worthwhile, will stoop pretty low to keep those jobs.

Apples are once again getting us in trouble

There was a little story on the inside pages of the paper the other day about a guy in prison becoming upset over prison food and swallowing certain metal objects in protest. (What was his complaint? Did he order the rice pilaf and get mashed potatoes instead?)

Lewis Grizzard

Anyway, the guy swallowed some razor blades and then took to eating his bedsprings.

I swear that's what the story said. The guy ate his bedsprings.

The article went on to note the prisoner's stomach was pumped and all the metal was removed from his innards, and that he suffered no ill effects from the entire experience.

All that leads me to ask this question: Which would be less damaging to my health — eating razor blades, bedsprings or eating apples?

Apples, you must have heard, have fallen on their hardest times since Eve disobeyed God and ate the first one in the Garden of Eden.

Phil Donahue and Meryl Streep were both on television talking about how apples are now covered with various substances that could cause cancer.

The apple scare even led some school systems to take the fruit off its lunchroom menus.

At first, I attempted to handle the news about apples in my usual calm manner.

As I began to think more about the situation, however, I became quite rattled and suffered episodes where I babbled incoherently.

During one of my babbling-incoherently fits, I happened to be in a restaurant having lunch.

After I had finished my turkey sandwich, my waitress asked if I wanted any dessert.

"We have fresh apple cobbler today," she said.

"Remember the Alamo! Attention, Blue Light Shoppers! Kenneth, what is the frequency?" I babbled incoherently.

"Are you all right, sir?" the waitress asked me.

"Of course, I'm not all right," I answered. "Airplanes are falling apart in the sky, crazy people are shooting up schoolyards with assault rifles, radon gas is slipping up from our basements, there's a hole in the ozone layer and now I'm told if I eat apples I could die."

It's not that I would find apple-abstinence that difficult. I'm quite fond of hot apple pie with ice cream on top of it, but I could do without it and eat coconut cream pie, instead, until somebody discovers eating coconuts can lead to having the gout.

It's just that apples are at the very core of our society and now we find they, like so many other things, are foe rather than friend.

After the incident in the Garden of Eden, the image of apples took a distinct upturn.

We had the pleasing legend of Johnyy Appleseed. And we taught our children, "An apple a day, keeps the doctor away," and how many times have you heard the following, "as American as apple pie"?

If Johnny Appleseed came back today he would be arrested for trafficking. Now, we say, an apple a day and you'll be dead in six months.

And what do we do about the "as American as apple pie" thing?

Change it to "as American as an AK-47."

Has it occurred to anybody else that modern living eventually taints just about everything it touches.

It has to me, and it's so depressing I think I'll go eat some razor blades and a couple of bedsprings and have a lampshade for dessert.

CHARLEY REESE

Government policies putting families in crisis

I've noticed over the years that the government will make a mistake and then — rather than admit the mistake and correct it — it will proclaim that the first mistake necessitates a new mistake.

Charley Reese

For example, government policies — taxation, inflation, failure to stop the movement of good jobs overseas, and easy divorce laws — have hit American families a pretty hard blow.

But rather than correct the tax code inequities, stop inflation, reverse the flight of good jobs, and tighten up divorce laws, the current line is that government must now provide day care for children.

I have enormous sympathy for those families who are forced by economic necessity to put their children in day-care centers and enormous admiration for those families who willingly sacrifice materially so their children may stay at home.

But nevertheless there is accumulating evidence that day care is simply not good for young children. The very young instinctively know that what one loves one spends time with and gets close to. The daily ritual of handing over the child to someone else sends a message to the child whether the parent chooses to or not. It's beyond the comprehension of a toddler to understand complex economic forces that may be forcing the act.

There is no reason why Congress should not exempt from all income tax and from income tax withholding, people with incomes of $15,000 or less. In terms of purchasing power measured against what the 1967 dollar would buy, that's about $5,000 and people trying to live on that need every penny of it.

Such people would not be receiving a free ride. So covered over is the American economy with federal, state and local taxes, many of them hidden, that no one can flush a toilet, burn a 40-watt lightbulb, or call their doctor without putting money into the public coffers.

There is no sound reason why Congress should not re-regulate interest rates. Money is not a commodity in our system with the price determined by free market forces bidding for it. That's the propaganda line, but it simply isn't so.

In our system, interest rates are driven up or down by the Federal Reserve Board to suit the purposes of the larger money-center banks. Furthermore, in our system, money is created when loans are made and extinguished when they are repaid.

Interest rates have more than any other one factor made home-buying unattainable for more and more young Americans. High interest rates permeate the whole economy and are built into the prices of the products and services we purchase.

Inflation should be stopped by seriously revamping our monetary system. Inflation is cumulative. If the rate this year is 5 percent and it drops to 4 percent next year, you have to live with a 9 percent increase in prices at the end of that two years. Reducing the rate is not stopping inflation, however much Republican partisans may like to say it is when their man is in the White House.

Between high interest rates, inflation, and punitive taxing policies, the working family in America is being battered and broken. Yet the politicians seem interested only in catering to the very rich on one end and the welfare mob on the other. I suppose they get money from one and votes from the other.

Those of us in between must then rebel and force a change in government policies. Interest rates, inflation, and taxes are not things the working man or woman do to themselves. They are inflicted on them by government, by elected politicians.

Without stable families, there will be no stable society, but the answer is to change the policies that made the family unstable, not aggravate it by new policies that will further weaken it.

At least seven dead in bridge collapse

COVINGTON, Tenn. (AP) — Divers hampered by stormy weather searched today for more bodies in the rain-swollen Hatchie River, where at least seven people plunged to their deaths after a 60-foot section of a half-century-old bridge collapsed.

Months of flooding on the Hatchie may have eroded the foundation of a bridge pier, causing the U.S. 51 span to fail Saturday night, said the state highway commissioner.

An inch of rain overnight and bursts of quarter-size hail hampered the search for more victims, but a team of nine divers who re-entered the flooded river this morning planned to search as long as the weather would permit.

"It was just terrible," Cecil Whaley, operations officer for the Tennessee Emergency Management Agency, said today. "We are facing a 60 to 80 percent chance of the same type of weather today.

"It is just going to be extremely difficult to justify the divers staying in the water that long. Lightning is also a problem."

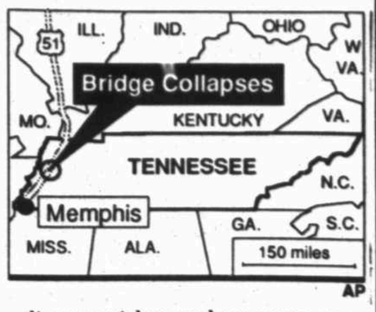

A tractor-trailer rig and at least four other vehicles fell 25 feet into the river.

A 1987 inspection found no abnormalities, but the collapse probably will lead the state to review its procedures, said Bill Moore, a state transportation department inspector.

"We certainly will look at other bridges after this failure. We'll probably re-evaluate our whole program of inspection on this type of bridge," Moore said Sunday.

National Transportation Safety Board investigators were to meet with state bridge inspectors today, authorities said.

The collapse of the two-lane, northbound bridge occurred Saturday night about 45 miles north of Memphis. A companion two-lane southbound bridge was unaffected, although it remained closed following the cave-in, the Tennessee Highway Patrol said.

AP

It was not known how many people were riding on the bridge when it crumbled, authorities said.

"Some of the cars are chopped up so bad they're not sure how many cars they are talking about," said Whaley.

"They don't have good eyewitness accounts to determine how many cars were on the bridge."

Among the seven bodies recovered were those of a trucker and his wife who had been returning home with a tractor-trailer they had just bought in Memphis, police said.

Billy Herron Sr., 49, of Ripley was driving the 18-wheeler and his wife, Betty, was following in a pickup truck, said Henning Police Chief Charles Fain. Herron's parents, who had eaten dinner with their son that night in Covington, apparently crossed the bridge just before it failed, Fain said.

Also recovered were the bodies of Mary Annette Davidson and her husband, Jimmy Davidson, of Ripley.

The bodies of Wilma Bonds, Jr., a 49-year-old Jehovah's Witness minister; his wife, Barbara, 25; and their 4-year-old daughter, Sophia, of Ripley, were pulled out Saturday night, Fain said.

"He never went to town otherwise. The only time we ever knew they were in town was coming or going to church. They were real religious, going to church every night," Fain said.

Wright ethics probe to resume Tuesday

WASHINGTON (AP) — The ethics investigation of House Speaker Jim Wright resumes behind closed doors this week as Congress returns from its Easter recess to deal with that touchy matter and some major legislation, including a raise in the minimum wage.

The House Committee on Standards of Official Conduct is scheduled to resume its private deliberations Tuesday. The 12-member panel — six Democrats and six Republicans — has been laboriously discussing dozens of areas where its outside counsel has found possible rules violations, according to sources familiar with the probe.

The uncertainty surrounding Wright, and whether he will be able to withstand whatever political damage results from the panel's findings, will likely continue for at least another week; the committee has tentatively scheduled meetings into the week of April 10.

The case, involving charges that Wright abused his office for financial gain, has been in the investigation phase since last June. The ethics committee spent three weeks hearing presentations by its outside counsel and by Wright's lawyer, and put in another three days deliberating the charges before the Easter break.

The committee reportedly has focused most of its attention on a book deal on which Wright made $55,000 in royalties, his use of a Fort Worth condominium at below-market rental rates and his dealings with business partner George Mallick.

House Republicans, who make no secret of their frustration with what they term the speaker's heavy-handed running of the chamber, are walking a fine line as the case unfolds. They say they want to remain aloof from the proceedings so that any damage to Wright won't appear politically motivated. But some in the party are unable to contain their glee at his plight.

"Anything that causes the speaker ill will, we're probably for it," Ed Rollins, co-chairman of the GOP's House campaign arm, said last week. Rollins has announced plans to make Wright the centerpiece of an ethics campaign issue in 1990.

House Republican Whip Newt Gingrich of Georgia said on national television Sunday the House is "going to have a long and difficult spring" and repeated his prediction that Wright will be out as speaker by June.

But House Majority Leader Thomas S. Foley, D-Wash., countered that he is confident Wright will be cleared of any wrongdoing.

Meanwhile, Wright over the weekend denied a report by the Fort Worth Star-Telegram, which quoted an unnamed source as saying 100 potential violations were cited in the investigative report. "It is absolutely absurd to suggest that I have broken House rules on 100 occasions," Wright said in a letter to the paper.

In the Senate, lawmakers resume debate Tuesday on legislation that would require President Bush to appoint an emergency board that would have up to 26 days to suggest a way to end the Eastern Airlines strike.

The measure, favored by organized labor, cleared the House last month with heavy Democratic support. But Bush has threatened to veto the bill, and both sides say it is unlikely to pass by a veto-proof, two-thirds margin.

The Senate also is scheduled to take up legislation to increase the minimum wage, frozen at $3.35 an hour since 1981, to $4.65 over three years.

Bush, Egyptian leader may discuss U.S. aid

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Bush is giving Egyptian President Hosni Mubarak a warm reception with talks at the White House, a box seat at the opening of the baseball season and — possibly — the resumption of U.S. aid.

The White House meeting today offered Mubarak another chance to pitch for a Middle East peace conference and a negotiating role for the Palestine Liberation Organization.

The box seat is ready in Baltimore for Mubarak and Bush to see the Orioles open the American League season against the Boston Red Sox.

And the aid?

A U.S. official hinted it may start flowing to Cairo again.

"There's a chance, but not an absolute lock," the official said Friday in a session that barred disclosing his name or title.

The Bush administration is holding up $230 million in aid to Egypt because Mubarak's govrnment failed to adopt acceptable economic reforms.

"That's something that obviously will have to be considered in the light of the visit, and something we would expect to discuss with them," the official told The Associated Press.

"We'll have to see the extent to which there has been performance on some of the undertakings."

There are several reasons for the show of U.S. friendship for Egypt.

It is the only Arab country to sign a peace treaty with Israel. It supports U.S. initiatives in the Middle East. It is considered moderate politically and pro-Western.

Moody's gives NCNB CDs highest rating

Short-term certificates of deposit at NCNB Texas National Bank on Monday received the highest rating from Moody's Investors Service Inc., which also raised its ratings of the bank's long-term certificates.

The rating agency said the terms of the agreement between federal regulators and NCNB Texas offered "significant protection" for account holders at the bank. NCNB Corp. of Charlotte, N.C., last July agreed to buy the former banks of First RepublicBank Corp. from the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp.

Moody's raised its grading of short-term deposits at NCNB Texas to Prime-1 from Prime-3. The bank's long-term certificates went to Single-A1, a jump of five grades from the bank's former BAA3 rating.

"The magnitude of the increase in our ratings was unusual but understandable in light of the vigor of NCNB Texas," chairman Francis B. "Buddy" Kemp said in a prepared statement.

With News Like This, Who Needs Advertising?

A lot of banks have been in the news recently. At NCNB Texas, unlike a lot of places, our news has been very positive. Downright good, in fact. The financial rating firm of Moody's called our short-term CDs some of the best in the land. They praised our long-term CDs, as well.

That's what one firm says. Is there other news? You bet. Did you know that NCNB Texas is a member of one of the 10 largest banking organizations in America that manages over $50 billion in assets? Or that one out of every four Texans banks with us?

Those are some very big numbers. But they all add up to say that NCNB is a strong and stable place to see your financial needs met. This DOC IS DRIVEN

Dr. J. Annette Jensen starts the engine of her Ford pickup truck. As she pulls out of the driveway she checks the address of her first client.

There's no need for a map. "I've been doing this for nine years and I know nearly all the streets," she says.

The patients she calls on range from domestic animals to livestock. Most of the visits are routine and involve the domesticated animals which she prefers.

Her favorite patient is a cat named Miss Ellie. "Miss Ellie is a pretty special patient," she says warmly. "She's used up eight of her nine lives already."

Occasionally, however, her calls involve the unusual and exotic. At one time or another she's worked on ferrets, racoons and even ostriches.

Enrollment at black colleges increases

HOUSTON (AP) — Enrollment in the state's two predominantly black schools is following a nationwide upward trend as more parents urge their children to return to schools where they can get more personal attention and camaraderie.

Black parents are looking for an affordable, competitive education for their children, and students are seeking smaller classes and a reprieve from the resurgence of racism at many predominantly white colleges, The Houston Post reported Sunday.

The state's two predominantly black colleges are Houston's Texas Southern University and Prairie View A&M University, which is about 50 miles northwest of the city.

"For one thing, this is your own race," said Karen Shaw, 25, a black University of Texas graduate who enrolled at TSU pharmacy college in 1987.

"We (blacks) have a common bond," Ms. Shaw said. "We have a common interest to try and succeed in the white man's world."

Donald Hill, chairman of the TSU Faculty Assembly Council, said when black parents saw white universities beginning to integrate in the 1960s and early 1970s, they urged their children to attend those schools, thinking that was the best track to mainstream American society.

But now, as the schools have become more competitive in their offerings and more sophisticated, parents are urging students to return to the predominantly black schools.

Enrollments at two-thirds of the 42 colleges supported by the United Negro College Fund have increased this year, said Alan Kirschner, a vice president for the fund.

In Texas, meanwhile, fall enrollment at Prairie View A&M hit a record high of 5,640, and TSU reported 8,554 students, up from 7,319 in 1987.

Kirschner said part of the reason for black colleges' growth is because costs are about half what they are at private predominantly white universities and students have taken advantage of more financial aid opportunities in recent years.

Also, the schools are more competitive in recruiting top students away from Ivy League schools by offering honors and mentor programs, such as the Banneker Honors College at Prairie View A&M.

"My parents realized it's a good experience having black teachers who understand where you're coming from and who may be more sympathetic," said Judith Whitmire, who turned down an offer from Massachusetts' exclusive Wellesley College to attend Prairie View A&M, her parents' alma mater.

But the schools continue to have problems attracting black male students and acquiring substantial endowments and other funding.

The Texas Higher Education Coordinating Board reports that black male enrollment at state public universities reached a peak in 1984 of 13,010 and declined to 11,912 in 1987.

At TSU, the number of females applying for next fall is more than double the number of males: 1,226 to 597. Currently, female students account for 54 percent of TSU's spring enrollment. At Prairie View A&M, women outnumber men 2,999 to 2,641.

Carter joins Nelson for homes project

AUSTIN (AP) — Former President Jimmy Carter joined country singer Willie Nelson in singing "Amazing Grace" at a fund-raiser that yielded at least $40,000 to build homes for the poor.

Carter, who attended a reception Sunday for Habitat for Humanity and had a front-row seat at the benefit concert that followed, accepted the invitation to sing on stage despite having earlier joked about his voice.

"Willie sent me a sound man to tell me, 'When you speak, talk right into the microphone. When you sing, turn your head the other way,' " Carter told a concert crowd estimated at more than 3,000.

Rosalynn Carter and the Rev. Gerald Mann of Riverbend Baptist Church, which arranged the benefit in celebration of its 10th anniversary, also were among those on stage for the song.

Members of the audience — which included former first lady Lady Bird Johnson, former University of Texas football coach Darrell Royal, state Attorney General Jim Mattox, Land Commissioner Garry Mauro and three Austin families with Habitat homes — also sang. Nelson, dressed in a black suit and boots, closed the concert with "Georgia on My Mind."

Mann asked concert-goers to dig deeper in their pockets as they were leaving. The church pastor, who had presented Carter with a check for $40,000 for Habitat for Humanity to build homes in Austin, said the houses cost $24,000 each.

"We have enough resources here tonight to build two Habitat Houses," said Mann, urging the audience to make donations on the way out the door.

The $11-a-ticket concert followed a $100-a-ticket reception for Habitat for Humanity, an ecumenical organization that builds homes and sells them to low-income families at no profit.

The families work to help build their own homes. Habitat for Humanity operates in more than 300 U.S. cities and 25 foreign countries, said Carter. He said he has been involved in the group since his presidency ended in January 1981.

"Habitat is not a charity organization," Carter said, adding, "The Bible says when you lend money to a poor person, you don't charge interest. So in Habitat, we don't charge interest."

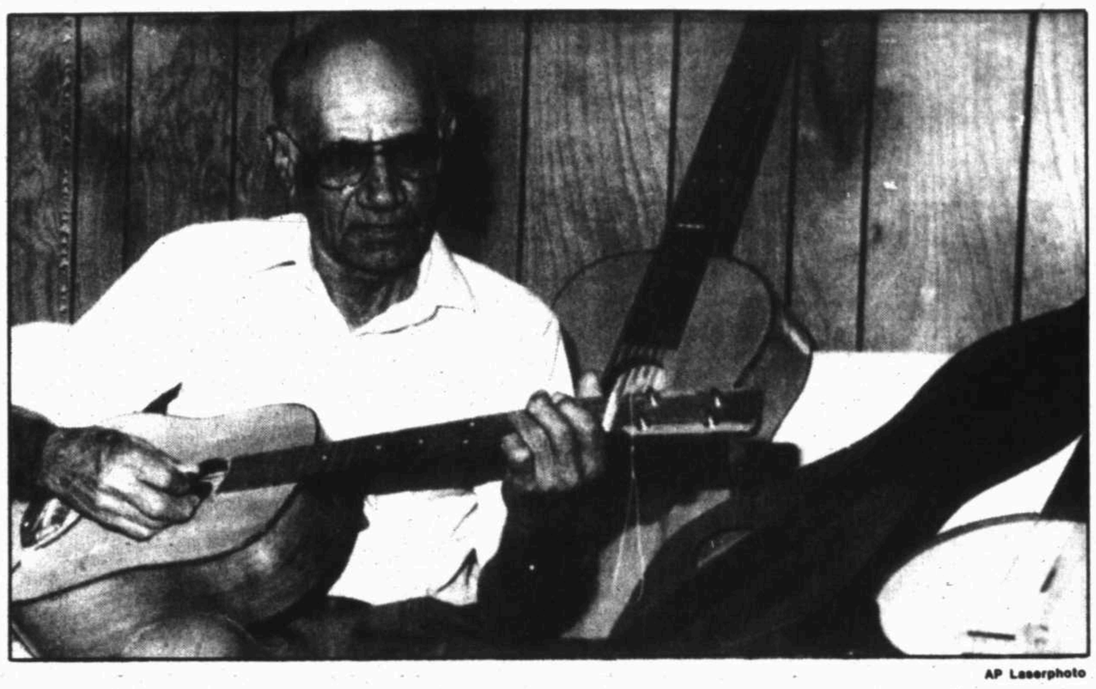

The former president, whose wife also is involved in the organization, said Habitat for Humanity has brought him closer contact with homeless people than he had in office.

"You see the homeless situation from a very personal perspective. You get to know the people that have never had a decent place to sleep in their lives. You meet mothers with five or six children who don't have anywhere to go at night," Carter said.

"Habitat gives us a chance to put our religious faith into practice more than anything I have ever seen," he said.

Nelson also had warm words for the organization.

"I think the Habitat program is by far the best idea, the best way that we can all help take care of the homeless all over the world, not only in Austin, but everywhere," Nelson said. "I'm glad to see Austin making a good showing, setting a good example for every place else in the world."

Claudio Solis, 76, displays some of his handiwork at his home in Alice recently. The former musician turned craftsman has constructed various instruments including a dulcimer.

Lack of money prompts trade for South Texas craftsman

By PONCHO HERNANDEZ JR.

ALICE, Texas (AP) — When Claudio Rios Solis decided he would build his son Ruben an electric bass guitar, he had no idea of the extent of his talents.

More than two decades later, Solis, 76, has mended guitars for some of South Texas' more popular musicians, while adding a chorus of handcrafted instruments to his list, including a banjo, bajo sexto (Mexican guitar), dulcimer, ukulele, and mandolin.

"You have to be very patient," Solis said in Spanish.

Solis was born in 1913 in the small town of Runge west of Victoria in Karnes County. In the 1920s, he traveled from ranch to ranch while playing the dance circuit. Because good music was rare and dance halls were almost non-existent, people would pay up to 75 cents to listen and dance outdoors on sparsely patched caliche roadways.

On a good day, "and with a good crowd," the group could earn four or five dollars, Solis said.

In his years as a musician, he learned to play a variety of stringed instruments.

Solis quit the music business for more steady employment in 1938 shortly after moving to Alice and marrying Berta Bernal. He served in the Navy in World War II, and spent most of his working life as a carpenter, retiring in 1975.

But it was Solis' music that inspired his sons, Claudio Jr., Ruben, and Enrique Henry Solis to organize a conjunto in the 60s called "Ruben Solis and the Gems." The group featured the handmade guitar crafted by Solis to please his 17-year-old son.

"He wanted an instrument and I couldn't afford it," Solis recalls. "I thought about it and decided I would build the guitar. He still has it today."

He later bought his son his first amplifier.

Following his retirement, Solis decided to take up instrument-making as a full-time hobby. That's when he decided to build the dulcimer, which is "plucked" and can be played with a dowel stick — small piece of wood used to press the strings while strumming.

Solis said that unlike most stringed instruments, the dulcimer is perhaps the only "true" American instrument, dating back to the early 1800s.

Patience is a prime ingredient in building a guitar, Solis says, but the the hardest step in crafting an instrument is the reinforcement and edging on the guitar itself. Once complete, proper sealing and varnish help protect the instrument.

Solis said that while manufactured instruments are fine and produce good sound, handmade guitars are made more for their acoustics. He said maple, cherry, and rosewood give good resonance.

Electric guitars, he said, require no special woods, as the sounds are generated by the amplifier.

Aside from crafting guitars and other string-type instruments, Solis has plans to patent a space-saving picnic table.

VET

She'll work on just about any animal, but she draws the line at snakes and monkeys. Even when she was a student in the veterinary school at Texas A&M she declined to take the course on reptiles.

Dr. Jensen graduated from A&M's veterinary school in 1976. For the next two years she worked in Abilene in a mixed practice, where she treated animals in the office and made house calls for larger animals. Her next stop was Odessa, where she worked for nearly a year. Her work in Odessa involved no mobile service. Dr. Jensen soon discovered, however, that she preferred being outdoors. "Being inside from 8-6 doesn't work well for me," she says.

Her desire to work outside brought her finally to Midland. Since there were no vets in Midland that made house calls, Midland was an ideal place to settle. A desire to work for herself combined with a lack of the money needed to set up a stationary practice to spur her into establishing her mobile vet service.

"It's a service for a lot of people, one that they really want, especially multiple pet owners," she says. Dr. Jensen can also provide closer attention to the animals because she sees them in their home environment.

The citizens of Midland must agree, judging from the long hours she works. Once she leaves in the morning she usually won't get home until 9 or 10 p.m. and even then she could still be called out.

"I'm lucky to be in by dark," she says. She puts about 30,000 miles a year on her pickup truck and being on the road so much affects her diet. "Vets have real bad eating habits; most convenience stores know me very well," she says, pulling into Koonce's Kountry Store for what amounts to a night's dinner.

Being on the road so much also dictates that she carries a pager in order to stay in touch with her clients. "I can tell you where just about every pay phone in the city or county is," she says.

"One of the things you learn," she explains pointing to the pager, "is when (you're) under a horse, unless you know it real well, you turn this off."

Dr. Jensen has no desire to leave Midland; she likes the people and the climate too much. The only thing she would change would be to add a river or a lake so that she could go fishing more often. But that would cut into the hours she dedicates to her practice, and right now this "doc" is too driven.

SPELLING BEE 1989

percussor (noun) — If you've ever been given a medical examination by a physician, chances are you've been whopped by a "percussor," which is also called a plexor. It is a small hammer with a rubber head that is used to test muscle reflexes. The root word "percuss" means to strike or beat, exactly the same meaning as the word's Latin ancestor, "percutere." Name other objects that "percuss."

Cosmetic surgery available to inmates

HOUSTON (AP) — Hundreds of state prison inmates have been getting facelifts, liposuction and other cosmetic fixes at taxpayers' expense for more than 20 years, according to a published report.

The operations have been performed at Galveston's John Sealy Hospital, which provides medical and surgical staff for the state prison and is a teaching hospital for the University of Texas Medical Branch in Galveston.

The hospital said the Texas Corrections Department is not charged for surgery on inmates, but the expenses are paid by taxes because the hospital is part of a state-funded college.

New field of biotech law emerging

By MICHAEL SCOTT-BLAIR
Copley News Service

CNS Graphic

If a human voice box were grafted into a chimpanzee and the animal could speak to people, would it be human?

If the answer is no, then the scientist who created the talking chimpanzee could patent it.

But if the answer is yes, then no patent could be issued.

That legal distinction is opening up a new field of law — how society will govern biotechnology — according to Robert Bohrer, a California Western School of Law professor.

"Biotechnology is taking us to the threshold of remolding human life, and the laws to govern that power are now evolving and are incredibly complex," Bohrer said. "There are those who would prefer to stop this kind of work altogether. But we can't put the genie back in the bottle."

In May, Cal Western will become only the third law school in the nation (after Harvard University and the University of Maryland) to offer courses on biotechnology for credit toward a law degree.

The opening class of 20 students must take a basic course in biology before moving into the scientific and legal maze of genetic engineering, monoclonal antibodies and research that can change the very nature of human life.

BOHRER BEGAN offering annual seminars on biotechnology law at Cal Western in 1985. Those seminars expanded into regular lunch meetings attended by lawyers, scientists, business leaders and students, and have now evolved into formal credited law classes.

"More than in any other field, we have to turn lawyers into scientists and scientists into lawyers," said Bohrer. "In fact, some law firms are going out to find top scientists and paying their way through law school in order to handle the complexities that we will face."

Bohrer is not new to emerging fields of law. After private practice in Chicago, he taught in New York for three years before coming to Cal Western seven years ago. Here he became involved in the laws concerning toxic waste and nuclear energy.

"Nothing, however, matches the power of biotechnology and the need to develop laws around it," Bohrer said.

Biotechnology can change life by conscious design. It's an awesome power, Bohrer said.

But why should lawyers be involved in something that is largely a matter of science and morality?

For thousands of years, societies as diverse as those of primitive tribes and modern cities have determined what was "normal" behavior, said Bohrer.

Those societies established penalties for people who broke the norms. The law, said Bohrer, is simply the interplay between the norms and the appropriate punishment when there is agreement that they have been broken.

In this society, the rules of that interplay are established in the courts, he said.

TECHNOLOGICAL DEVELOPMENTS in modern society have required laws to regulate the changes brought by railroads, telecommunications and even man's ability to explore outer space.

"But they all pale into relative insignificance when compared to the impact of biotechnology," Bohrer said.

Although man has changed other life forms, "we have never before been able to play with human evolution," he said. "Today's cows, through selective breeding, differ markedly from the cows in the time of King Henry VIII, and the same is true for other animals.

"But today, we as human beings are biologically and genetically the same as King Henry — the same as Noah in his ark, for that matter. Now we have the power to change that.

DECISIONS ARE needed on what investors should expect to receive from a research field that can suddenly produce drugs with enormous consequences for human life.

Bohrer cited tissue plasminogen activator, a drug that can break down blood clots and be very helpful against heart attacks and strokes.

Research shows that as few as 50 goats could produce enough TPA-carrying milk to meet the needs of the entire world for the drug, he said.

Should that capacity be kept by the developers for incredible profit, or should it be generally available to the public? Such debates will be frequent in the field of biotechnology, Bohrer said.

"Then," he added, "there is the unbelievably complex question of liability and compensation for side effects from new drugs and procedures that might not emerge for years, decades, or longer."

A substantial body of biotech law already is being developed, Bohrer said.

It came about in response to the development of a single-celled organism that could digest oil and had potential for cleaning up ocean oil spills.

"It wasn't very efficient at cleaning up oil and did not develop far," Bohrer said, "but it raised the legal question — can a living organism be patented?"

The U.S. Patent Office said it could be patented because it was not human. Any human, it ruled, would not be patentable.

THE NEXT big question, said Bohrer, is how to define "human" now that research is moving into areas that will be able to modify evolution.

"In this field, 20 years is a lifetime," Bohrer said. "Giant scientific steps are taken in such relatively short time frames, and correspondingly giant questions will have to be answered. We can't afford many mistakes in answering them."

DEAR ABBY

'Justice' seems miscarried in Illinois manslaughter case

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: What in God's name is happening to this world? I just read in the newspaper that a 32-year-old man in East Dubuque, Ill., was convicted of strangling his wife during an argument. He killed her in the presence of their two daughters, who were 8 and 10 years old at the time.

He was originally charged with murder. However, after the court ruled that the daughters were too young to testify, the charge was reduced to voluntary manslaughter. He served 20 months of the four-year sentence and was released. Fourteen months later, the Illinois Appellate Court in Elgin gave him custody of his two daughters, who are now 10 and 12!

I am hoping that you will print this in order to generate a response from the general public protesting the court's decision. Thank you. — HORRIFIED IN ST. PAUL

DEAR HORRIFIED: I am equally horrified — as I am sure others are. Something appears to be drastically wrong with our judicial system. This kind of "justice" sends a sad message to society.

But perhaps we are living in a sick society: This morning's newspaper reported two items that were enough to cause one to lose his or her breakfast.

Item No. 1: "A West Covina, Calif. woman was arrested after she allegedly stabbed her 7-year-old son and 6-year-old daughter with a kitchen knife. The boy escaped through a bathroom window after being stabbed at least 10 times. He ran to a neighbor who called the police. The little girl was found crying under a bed with several knife wounds in her back."

Item No. 2: "A 28-year-old mother was charged with murder when her 3-year-old son was found (by his father) hanging from his neck on a rope from a bedroom rafter in the family home."

Obviously, perpetrators of such violent crimes are mentally ill. Yet, our mental health clinics are closing left and right because our government says they have to cut public spending "somewhere."

God help us!

DEAR ABBY: Thank you for your continued stand against using live animals in research. As you and some of your readers have expressed, a great deal of this research is duplicative, useless and just plain cruel. Our money could be far better spent on the research alternatives already available, and developing yet more. Let's hope it won't be long before animal research is seen as being as barbaric and backward as slavery. — LYN ROSEN SPRINGUT, ROCHESTER, N.Y.

DEAR LYN: I am well aware that there are areas of medical research where, for the sake of mankind, the use of live animals is absolutely necessary, and I have no quarrel with that, provided there is no other alternative and the animals are treated humanely.

But I abhor the use of live animals to test cosmetics and household products.

CONFIDENTIAL TO THE GREAT DANE: When he (or she) says, "I think we should both start dating others" — it's the beginning of the end.

Associated Press

Kicking a bad habit or sticking to a new diet or exercise program requires a lot of determination. Often, the success or failure of such programs depends almost entirely on the strength of a person's will. In this role, willpower can be compared to a muscle which requires a workout program of its own. Ladies' Home Journal describes a willpower regime with several exercises designed to improve resolve.

It is necessary to create opportunities to use willpower often. Dieters should go to the grocery store and purchase their favorite food, no matter how fattening. Then, after bringing it home, they shouldn't open or eat any of the food for at least 48 hours.

Over-spenders can go to a department store and try on clothes until they find something that fits really well and looks terrific. Then, for a real willpower challenge, put off buying it.

After willpower exercises, a mental cool-down will maximize the benefits of the workout. Review feelings right before, during and after the test of resolve. When did willpower feel weakest or most elusive? What tricks or self-suggestions helped strengthen resolve? What pitfalls or negative thoughts weakened it? Remember what worked and apply these exercises to help build resolve against other bad habits.

Each change should be viewed as a series of small steps. Try stating an ultimate goal and putting it in writing. Then think about each of the steps necessary to reach that goal and write each step on an index card. After making the cards, put away all but the first one. When the first step is completed, write "done" on the card and hang it up as a reminder of success. Then repeat the process with each card.

Most important, learn how to forgive lapses. Forgiveness prevents a single willpower failure from short-circuiting an entire plan. Don't dwell on failures and mistakes. Recognize them, forgive them and then get to work on succeeding again.

Migraine sufferers lose some vision

DAVIS, Calif. (AP) — More than a third of migraine sufferers lose some of their peripheral vision, a new study suggests.

Other studies have found permanent vision loss in a small number of migraine patients, but not the loss of peripheral vision, said Dr. Richard A. Lewis, an ophthalmologist at the Univeristy of California, Davis.

Lewis studied the eyes of 60 people diagnosed as migraine sufferers based on a complete neurologic examination, and found that 35 percent had some loss of peripheral vision, especially among those who had suffered migraines the longest. Each patient had 20-30 vision or better, so most weren't aware they sustained slight vision loss.

"The study shows there is more going on during a migraine than just the headache, and that migraine has a greater effect on the visual system than previously recognized, particularly in elderly and long-term migraine patients," he said.

"One speculation is that damage is caused to either the optic nerve or to certain brain nerves that affect sight by the reduced blood flow that occurs during migraine attacks."

Ross Perot Jr. driving force behind first industrial airport

STATE

FORT WORTH (AP) — Alliance Airport is grand enough a venture to propel this city out of the shadow of Dallas, its giant neighbor to the east.

With the world's first industrial airport slated to open in December, Fort Worth anticipates not only rising to a national level, but to a global one.

Built on land donated by Ross Perot Jr., son of the powerful Dallas billionaire, the giant project will be owned by the city 30 miles west of Dallas.

But make no doubt about it; Perot is its pilot.

Steadily emerging out of a pasture in northern Tarrant County is the $31 million monument to the partnership of Fort Worth, the Federal Aviation Administration and Perot.

But the rare alliance for which the huge effort was named has been tested by increasingly strained relations among the partners.

Perot, 30, has gone to extraordinary lengths to create a super airport dedicated entirely to industry and business.

The airport will be the centerpiece of more than 17,000 acres with office parks, international manufacturing complexes and neighborhoods planned by Perot's company, The Perot Group.

Perot's ambitious push for Alliance to become a major player in air commerce also has raised concern among those who run Dallas-Fort Worth International Airport, cornerstone of the North Texas economy.

DFW officials fear he will lure away cargo carriers.

Perot actively has sought the business of United Parcel Service and Federal Express as well as trying to lure a $250 million maintenance facility planned by American Airlines, likely in Oklahoma City.

"Twenty years from now we'll all be happy that Alliance is there," DFW Airport Executive Director Oris W. Dunham Jr. told the Fort Worth Star-Telegram. "But there certainly was an understanding that they would not be over here trying to take my tenants."

Perot contends "it's only fair that Alliance be allowed to go after a firm if DFW is going to lose them" anyway.

He also discounts as healthy the arguments and shouting matches in connection with the project.

Fort Worth Mayor Bob Bolen said, "I don't think anyone can accuse Ross of not having an abiding interest in making sure the project has been presented as a world-class airport. But he has a substantial financial interest in making sure it is a success."

Pressure to reach that success has contributed to the often biting negotiations.

If the gamble pays off, Perot will have catapulted himself into a business sphere right up there with his billionaire father.

Legislation against 'hate crimes' sought

AUSTIN (AP) — A Houston legislator, responding to recent increases in so-called "hate crimes," has drafted a bill that would increase penalties for such crimes.

The legislation, which comes before the Senate Criminal Justice Committee Tuesday, would make certain offenses such as murder, assault and vandalism more serious if they are committed because of the victim's race, ethnicity, sex, age, sexual orientation or religion.

"There has been a dramatic increase in this type of crime in Texas in the last five or six years," Sen. Craig Washington, D-Houston, told The Dallas Morning News.

"In some places it has become fashionable to voice group hatred out loud. This is something our society ought to be beyond," Washington said. "Sadly enough, we are not."

Among the organizations supporting the measure are the Dallas Anti-Defamation League, American Jewish Congress, Texas Catholic Conference, Texas Baptist Christian Life Commission, Texas Civil Liberties Union, Texas Women's Political Caucus and Lesbian-Gay Rights Lobby of Texas.

"This is a class of crime and a type of criminal that deserves special attention," Dallas lawyer Michael Stone recently told members of the criminal justice committee. He described crimes of hate as "particularly vile."

Stone, vice chairman of the Dallas Anti-Defamation League, said the league — which monitors the activities of extremist groups — detected no anti-Semitic acts in Texas in the five-year period before 1987.

But in 1987, the league had reports of five such acts in the state, and the number of incidents ballooned to 23 last year.

In the Dallas area in recent months, Temple Shalom, the Jewish Community Center and a Jewish-owned business in Richardson were painted with swastikas and anti-Semitic graffiti, and windows were shot out. Two synagogues in Waco also were vandalized.

"This represents only the beginning of the problem, and these only are acts against the Jewish community," Stone said.

In addition, the Islamic Association of North Texas mosque in Richardson was vandalized and two Dallas gay men were killed last year by a Mesquite teen-ager.

"This is exactly the type of crime I am talking about," the senator said of the slayings. "There should be a difference in the crime if violence is randomly perpetrated because of hatred of the race or group that the victim belongs to."

Washington's bill would elevate a criminal offense one degree if it could be shown that the crime was motivated out of group hatred or bigotry.

For example, assault charges that might be filed as a Class A misdemeanor could be elevated in the punishment phase of a trial to a third-degree felony if the judge or jury believed that the crime was based on group hatred.

In such a case, the maximum penalty would increase from a year in jail and a $2,000 fine to 10 years in jail and a $5,000 fine.

Religious and civil rights leaders applaud the bill.

"When it is blatant and obvious, when somebody writes on a Jewish synagogue, that should be dealt with severely to show that the community is sensitive to this type of crime," said Richard Avena of the Texas Civil Liberties Union.

Awaiting test results, Henderson residents continue boiling water

HENDERSON (AP) — Residents continued to boil tap water through the weekend as city officials awaited results of state health tests on the water supply, which may have been contaminated during heavy rainstorms last week.

Results from the last of four tests on the city's water supply were expected Tuesday, City Manager Brent Lewis said Sunday.

The water main broke in several places early Wednesday and was shut down for most of the day. School was closed for the rest of the week, Henderson Memorial Hospital was supplied by tanker trucks and bottled water sold out of local stores.

Since Wednesday, however, the city's well-driven water supply has functioned, but officials warned against consumption until it could be tested for contamination from surface or lake water.

"The only thing that people have had to do is buy their water or boil it," Lewis said.

Floodwater on Tuesday night forced 57 residents out of their apartment complex for two days.

The hospital has spent approximately $5,000 on bottled water, said Barbara Odom, the facility's chief financial officer and assistant administrator.

"We're talking about sterilizing instruments and everything we have to use it for, we just can't take any chances," Ms. Odom said.

Admissions to the hospital have remained at a normal level, but elective surgery has been restricted until the water is pronounced safe, she said.

Henderson schools were expected to reopen Monday, said Jack Cook, public utilities director.

"They have alternative sources of water," Cook said.

Restaurants brought ice and bottled water in from nearby cities, officials said.

Pregnant coyote set free in wilderness area

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — After trying to escape from a wildlife refuge by gnawing through a wire fence, the pregnant coyote captured on a Houston golf course was set free in the South Texas wilderness.

The wily coyote was taken to the San Antonio wildlife refuge Friday, but it broke through a fence shortly after it arrived, said Lynn Cuny, director of Wildlife Rescue and Rehabilitation.

It was recaptured at a nearby duck pond within an hour, but its subsequent escape attempts persuaded refuge workers to release the coyote to the wild Saturday night.

"All she's doing is everything she can to get away from people. She's been through enough," Ms. Cuny said.

The coyote roamed a Houston golf course for several weeks, surviving on ducks and geese that swam on the fairway ponds. Houston animal control workers last week tried to shoot the coyote, but that sparked a public outcry against killing it.

TRY THE REAL ALTERNATIVE!

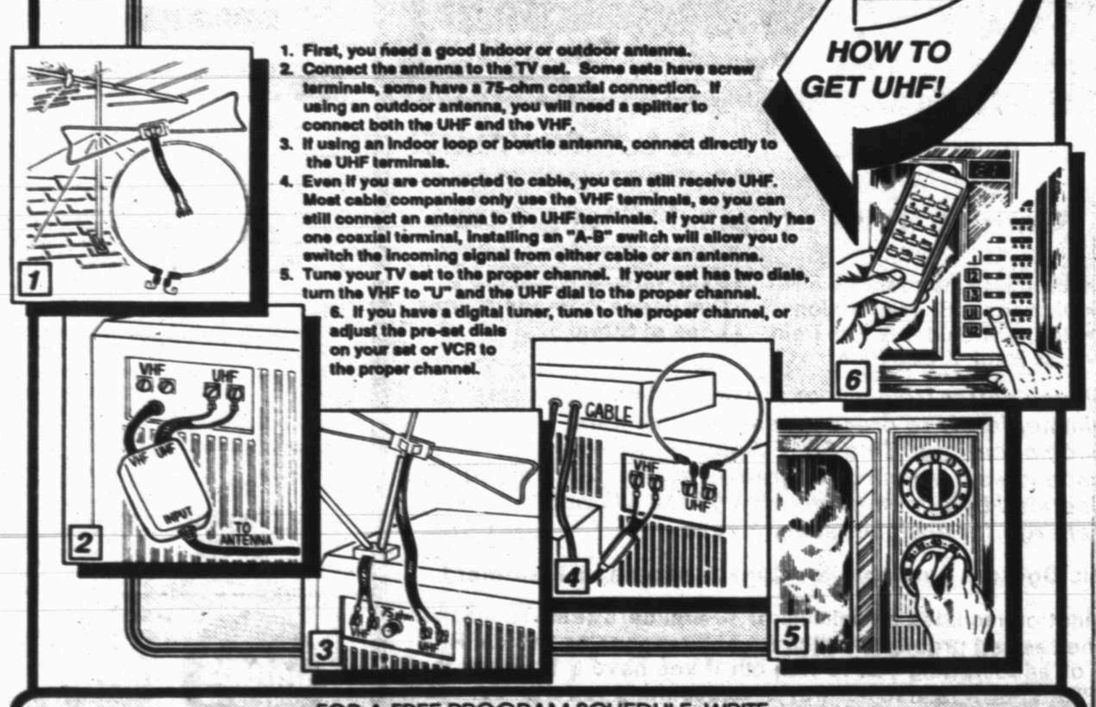

You hear a lot about alternative TV these days. Usually, it just means the same old stuff you're already getting, packaged in a different way, or a rehash of old TV programming. Maybe you're ready for a change.

Try TBN. We're not here to offer you a different form of entertainment. We're here to give you answers to perplexing questions. We're here to change your outlook on life. We're here to be your friend. Go ahead, give TBN a try. It just may change your life.

HOW TO GET UHF!

1. First, you need a good indoor or outdoor antenna.
2. Connect the antenna to the TV set. Some sets have screw terminals, some have a 75-ohm coaxial connection. If using an outdoor antenna, you will need a splitter to connect both the UHF and the VHF.
3. If using an indoor loop or bowtie antenna, connect directly to the UHF terminals.
4. Even if you are connected to cable, you can still receive UHF. Most cable companies only use the VHF terminals, so you can still connect an antenna to the UHF terminals. If your set only has one coaxial terminal, installing an "A-B" switch will allow you to switch the incoming signal from either cable or an antenna.
5. Tune your TV set to the proper channel. If your set has two dials, turn the VHF to "U" and the UHF dial to the proper channel.
6. If you have a digital tuner, tune to the proper channel, or adjust the pre-set dials on your set or VCR to the proper channel.

And then there were two...

SEATTLE (AP) — Ten years ago, Steve Fisher was coaching high school basketball in Illinois, and P.J. Carlesimo was at a tiny Division I college in New York that might not have been much better.

Neither could see far enough into the future to imagine where they would be or what they would be doing a decade later.

"I don't think anybody thinks he's going to be coaching in a national championship game when he starts out," Carlesimo said.

But that's exactly what they will be doing tonight, and nothing could seem farther away than Rich East High School in Park Forest, Ill., or Wagner College on New York's Staten Island.

Fisher, in fact, probably could not have envisioned his situation even a month ago. He became Michigan's interim coach just before the NCAA tournament after seven years as an assistant to Bill Frieder, who left to go to Arizona State.

"Timing is everything, and I jumped in at the right time, no doubt about it," Fisher said.

Carlesimo, on the other hand, took over the Big East Conference's worst basketball program, Seton Hall, seven years ago. 1982 was definitely the wrong time for the Pirates, who went 6-20 that year.

But the Pirates' record has improved every season under Carlesimo, who took them to their first NCAA tournament last year and to their first Final Four this year.

Though varying in background, these coaches and teams are quite similar in many ways.

— Michigan has the hot shooter in Glen Rice, averaging 30.6 points in the tournament and shooting 59.5 percent from 3-point range. Seton Hall has a player sometimes called the hired gun, Australian Olympian Andrew Gaze, who came to the Hall as a junior just last October and has since made a school-record 93 3-pointers.

"I'm not certain yet what we'll do with Rice," Carlesimo said during a Sunday news conference. "We'll have Andrew or John (Morton) or Michael Cooper off the bench on him. He's a big, mobile player. ... We're not going to stop Glen Rice, but we can make him work harder."

As for Gaze, Carlesimo said: "We didn't how he would fit in. We knew he was a scorer. I didn't know he was a basketball player, too. Andrew would fit on any team."

— Both teams are led by solid, although unheralded, point guards: Rumeal Robinson of Michigan and Gerald Greene of Seton Hall, who are not unaware of each other. They first met in the 1985 Boston Shootout, a summer tournament.

"All the years that me and Gerald Greene have met, it's been a strong competition," Robinson said. "I learned from him that you have to control the game from the point guard position, and that's what he does."

— And Michigan and Seton Hall both are big and deep under the basket.

The Wolverines start 6-foot-9 Loy Vaught at center and 6-10 Terry Mills and the 6-7 Rice at forward, and substitute frequently with 6-9 Sean Higgins and 6-8 Mark Hughes.

"I saw enough of their game yesterday to be scared," Carlesimo said. "They have size, strength and quickness, but that's the kind of team you have to play for the national championship."

Seton Hall, on the other hand, starts 6-8 center Ramon Ramos, a 250-pounder, with 6-8 leaper Daryll Walker and the 6-7 Gaze at forwards. Off the bench, Carlesimo freely substitutes with 6-8 Frantz Volcy and 6-9 Anthony Avent.

The 10th-ranked Wolverines, 29-7, led the nation by shooting 57.3 percent from the field this season, and they have shot 54.7 percent in the tournament. Their lowest shooting percentage of the tournament was the 46.8 percent they shot in beating Big Ten rival Illinois 83-81 in Saturday's semifinal.

The 11th-ranked Pirates, 31-6, will counter with one of the nation's toughest defenses, especially in the closing minutes of a game.

In succession in the tournament, Seton Hall held Southwest Missouri State to 14 points in the final 13:48; Evansville to four points in the final 7:11; Indiana to two points in the final 2:17; Nevada-Las Vegas to 10 points in the final 8:06, and Duke to four points in the final 2:06. Seton Hall beat Duke 95-78 in Saturday's other semifinal after trailing by as many as 18 in the first half.

"The thing that jumps out at you about Seton Hall is their defense," Fisher said. "They're playing a lot like us right now — with confidence and getting great games from everyone."

While Seton Hall is in its first Final Four, Michigan is in its fourth. In three of those four, it has played in the championship game, the last time losing to Indiana 86-68 in 1976. The knock against Michigan was laziness.

"I read just yesterday that some coaches were saying Illinois would beat us because Michigan doesn't know how to work hard for 40 minutes," Fisher said. "I think our kids kind of resented that."

Rose remembers his first opener

CINCINNATI (AP) — Pete Rose remembers everything about his first opening day in a Cincinnati Reds uniform.

He remembers the crowd, the score, and going 0-for-3 as a rookie second baseman on April 8, 1963.

"I walked on four straight pitches my first time up," Rose said last week, reminiscing in the dugout before an exhibition game in Florida. "We made four double plays. I went 0-for-3, but I looked good making those three outs."

The Reds beat Pittsburgh 5-2 that day behind Jim O'Toole's pitching at Crosley Field. It was just the beginning for Rose, who would get a record 4,256 hits before his playing days finished in 1986.

Rose, who turns 48 on April 14, is being tossed about by the worst storm of his career this opening day — allegations that have prompted an investigation by Major League Baseball and could lead to a suspension if proven true.

Baseball's investigation is continuing, so Rose will be in uniform today when the Reds open the season against the defending champion Los Angeles Dodgers. It's a special moment he wouldn't want to miss.

"They treat opening day in Cincinnati about the same way people treat the song 'My Old Kentucky Home' when the horses come out at the Kentucky Derby," Rose said. "Everybody gets tears in their eyes when they play that song.

"It's the same way in Cincinnati. It's just a tradition."

He's seen the tradition from both sides of the fence. As a kid growing up in Cincinnati, Rose would go to opening day with his father, Harry, a banker who'd take the afternoon off to treat his son.

"I went with my dad. The kids in my neighborhood couldn't afford it," he said.

Ironically, baseball's all-time hits leader wasn't smitten with baseball as a youngster. He wanted to be like his father, who was a semi-pro football player.

"I was like every other kid. The most difference between me and the other kids was I wanted to be a football player, because that's what my dad was," Rose said. "Baseball was a seasonal sport. The older I got — I think every kid in Cincinnati wants to play for the Reds."

He usually didn't have prime seats to Reds' games, so there was no chance to chase autographs. One game, he sat near the dugout when his father got seats through his bank, and managed to come away with a baseball.

"One night he (his father) caught a foul tip, a National League ball with Warren Giles' name on it," Rose said, referring to the former NL commissioner. "I thought I went to heaven. We used it. We wore it out. It was like having a piece of gold, a ball to play with."

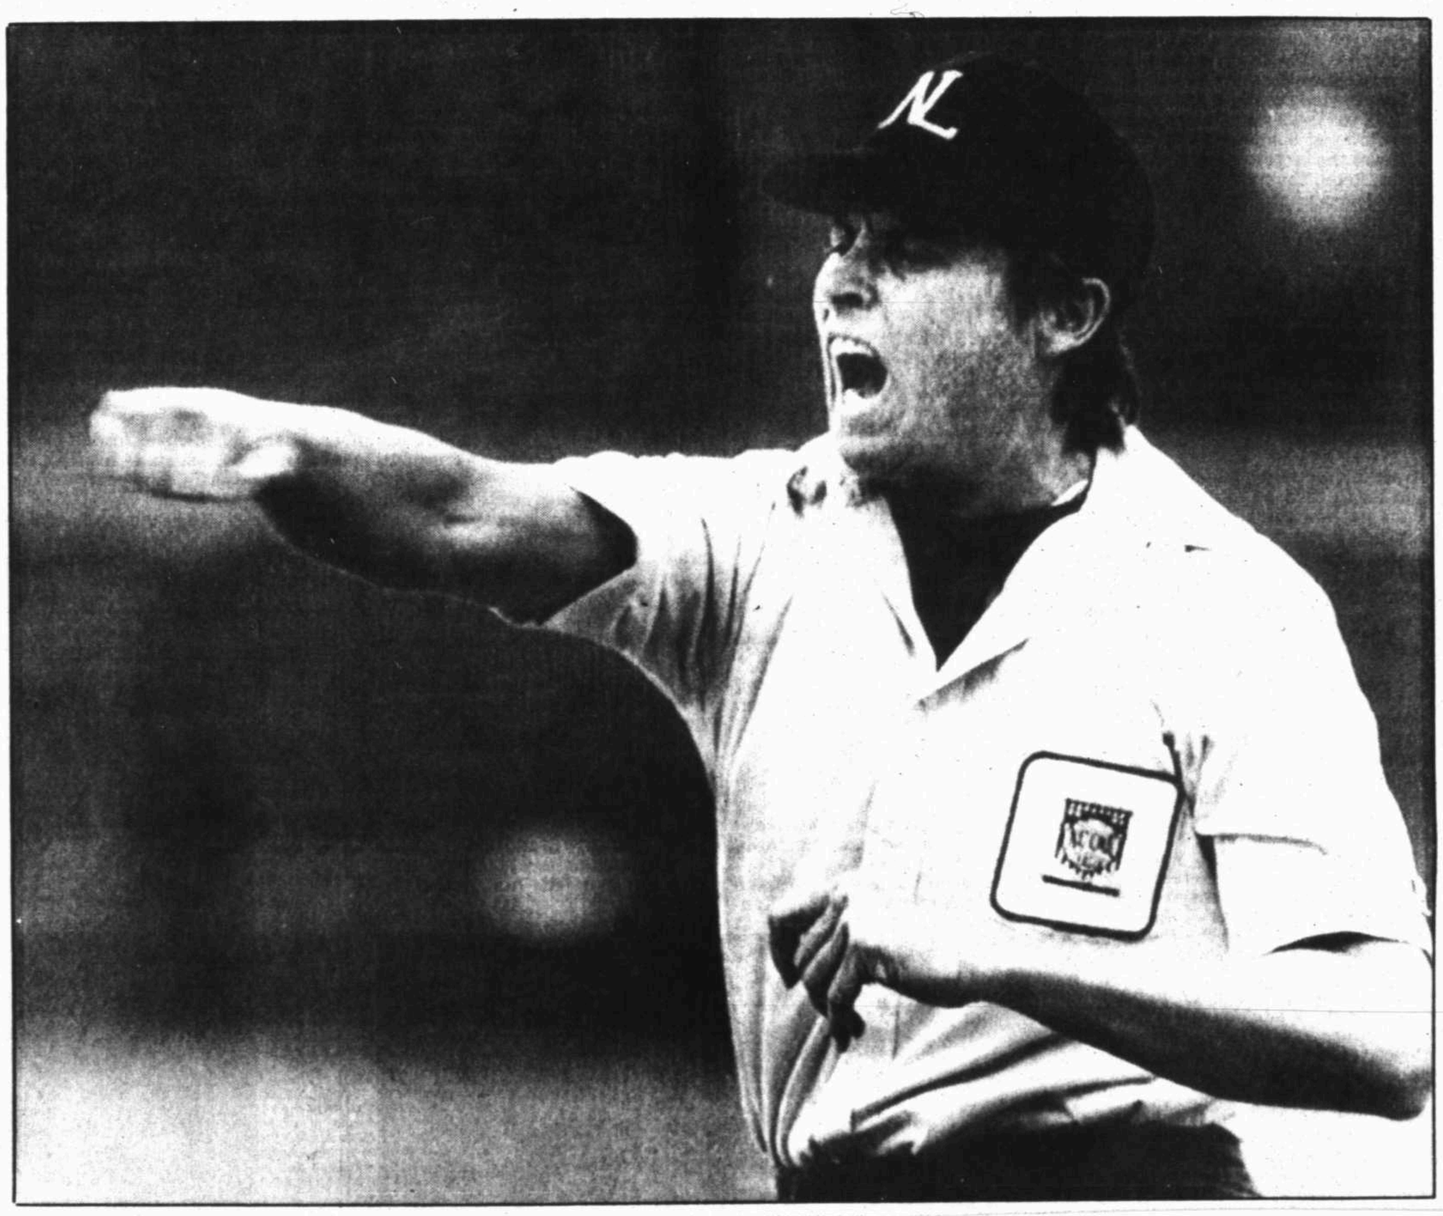

Rose played the various sports in their season — football in the fall, basketball in winter and baseball when the weather warmed.

"We didn't have cars or girls that wore skirts up to here," Rose said, tracing a line high on his thigh. "There wasn't much more to do than to play sports.

"That's probably why the older players (in the major leagues) have the dedication. It was like a way of life. Baseball to me is a way of life, not just something I did in the summertime."

Rose thinks that's one of the things that sets players of his generation apart from younger major-leaguers, who are accustomed to first-class treatment in the clubhouse and travel.

"With the players today, sometimes it's an effort to get them on on stage. The clubhouses are heaven today," he said. "It's just a matter of taking the comfort away from them.

Baseball busts out all over with Opening Day hoopla

Associated Press

Baseball's four division champions from 1988 open their seasons today, but two of the game's biggest stars will be missing.

The world champion Los Angeles Dodgers will be without pitching ace Orel Hershiser when they face the Reds in Cincinnati in the traditional major-league opener at 1:05 p.m. CDT, while the American League champion Oakland Athletics will be without slugger Jose Canseco when they entertain the Seattle Mariners in a night game.

Hershiser was scheduled to face Cincinnati's Danny Jackson in a matchup of the 1-2 finishers in the NL Cy Young voting. But Hershiser is suffering from the flu and will pitch Wednesday instead.

Tim Belcher will open in his place. The last time he appeared in Cincinnati, last Sept. 16, the Reds' Tom Browning pitched a perfect game.

The last two National League teams to win consecutive pennants were the Dodgers in 1977-78 and the Reds in 1975-76.

"Repeating, as history shows, is a very difficult task," said Fred Claire, Dodgers' executive vice president for player personnel. "We have the opportunity to do something that no Dodger team has done — win back-to-back (world) championships. The opportunity for this club is tremendous."

"We all know it's difficult," Manager Tom Lasorda echoed. "I've cautioned the team about thinking we've got it made. We know we're going to bring out the best in everyone we play."

Despite four consecutive second-place finishes, Reds manager Pete Rose thinks his team "is better than ever. I'd be disappointed if we didn't win it. More important, I think a lot of players will be disappointed, too."

Rose's problems go far beyond a pennant race. He is being investigated by the commissioner's office for alleged gambling activities.

Mariners at Athletics

Jim Lefebvre, a coach for Oakland last year, makes his debut as manager of the Mariners, who have never had a winning season. He sends Mark Langston against Dave Stewart, a 20-game winner in each of the last two seasons.

"I think this is probably the best spring I've ever had," Stewart said after compiling a 1.71 ERA. "I take spring training very seriously and I hope to carry this through into the regular season."

Canseco, who had eight homers and 24 RBIs last April, will miss at least three weeks with a wrist injury. Canseco, the AL MVP and the first player to hit 40 home runs and steal 40 bases in the same season, will be replaced in right field by either rookie Felix Jose or Stan Javier.

The A's are seeking to become the first AL team to win consecutive pennants since the New York Yankees did it in 1976-77-1978.

Cardinals at Mets

Dwight Gooden starts for the Mets against Joe Magrane, the 1988 ERA king despite a 5-9 record. The Mets have won 17 of their last 19 openers, including 10 straight at home.

"I feel very strong and I'm anxious to get the season started," Gooden said. "We need to get off to a good start like we did last year (30-11)."

The Mets' main concerns are catcher Gary Carter and first baseman Keith Hernandez, both 35. Carter hit .242 last season with only 11 homers and 46 RBIs. Hernandez, who missed two months with a hamstring pull, hit .276, his lowest average in 10 years.

Lady Vols coast to cage crown

TACOMA, Wash. (AP) — Tennessee coach Pat Summitt said the best women's basketball team in the country won the NCAA championship. Auburn coach Joe Ciampi agreed.

"This is the most athletic team I've ever had," Summitt said Sunday after her Lady Volunteers pulled away in the final nine minutes to beat Southeastern Conference rival Auburn 76-60 for Tennessee's second NCAA title in three years. "I felt like this team was the best team in college basketball starting the year. I wanted to do everything I could to keep it motivated."

Ciampi's Lady Tigers lost in the championship game for the second straight year in the Tacoma Dome.

"If you look at that (Tennessee) roster, it's a great roster," Ciampi said. "It's a 'who's who' roster."

The best "who" for the Lady Volunteers was 6-foot senior forward Bridgette Gordon, who scored 27 points and pulled down 11 rebounds. Her 27 points tied the record of the most points in a championship game set by University of Southern California's Cheryl Miller in 1983 and tied by Cynthia Cooper of Southern Cal in 1986.

When Auburn cut Tennessee's eight-point halftime lead to 50-47 with 8:43 left, Summitt told her players during a timeout that they had to start trying harder or they weren't going to win.

"What I had to say had nothing to do with basketball," she said. "I told them I couldn't believe the Auburn players wanted it more than they did. I felt like it was a matter of effort and we weren't intense enough then."

Gordon, who will play professionally in Europe or Japan next year, then went out and hit three straight jumpers in the next two minutes, igniting a 13-2 run for a 63-49 lead.

Summitt said she didn't tell her players specifically to go to Gordon at the critical time, but that it just worked out that way.

"It was in our game plan to go to Bridgette on the baseline if she was open," Summitt said. "We made good decisions after the timeout."

For Gordon and 6-4 senior center Sheila Frost, Tennessee's inside defensive and rebounding force, it was a sweet ending to a highly successful collegiate career that saw them win an NCAA championship as sophomores with a victory over Louisiana Tech.

Louisiana Tech beat Tennessee in the semifinals of last year's Final Four.

Tears just weren't for the losers Sunday. Tennessee's players also cried after their 16-point win before 9,758 fans. It was an emotional victory.

Sullivan captures dreams, Big I title

THE WOODLANDS (AP) — Mike Sullivan's fantasies finally came true.

He started Sunday thinking it would take a round from "dreamland" to contend for the title in the $800,000 Independent Insurance Agent Open.

Sullivan then shot the round of his dreams, coming from seven shots off the pace with a 7-under par 65 for a one-shot victory.

He wouldn't allow himself to think of winning until he reached the 13th green, where he completed a run of five birdies over six holes.

"I thought it would take 10-under par to get back in the tournament when I started this morning and that was like dreamland," Sullivan said. "I thought a round like that would get me in the top five."

Instead, it got him an 8-under-par 280 total and the $144,000 top prize, increasing his career earnings to $1,139,181 and earning him a spot in the Masters Tournament.

"It doesn't feel as good being a millionaire as being the Independent Insurance Agent Open champion," Sullivan said. "You can almost keep the money; it's nice having a trophy for a change."

After shooting the lowest round of the tournament, Sullivan spent an agonizing 90 minutes in the clubhouse while his challengers shot themselves out of contention.

Craig Stadler, who led the tournament after 12 holes at 9-under par, went into the water on No. 13, missed a 2-foot putt on No. 15 and finished second at 281 with a final-round 70.

Bies wins big in Frisco

FRISCO (AP) — Don Bies didn't want to go down in golf history known as the guy who blew an eight-shot lead.

"I heard Don January say if I didn't win, I ought to get out of the business," Bies said. "There was a lot of pressure on me. I didn't want to answer all those questions down the road if I didn't win."

The steady Bies shot a 1-over-par 73 on a windswept Sunday to win the Seniors Reunion Pro-Am title by a record six shots.

"Catching him was like trying to fly a kite to the moon," said second-place finisher Harold Henning, who shot a final-round 70.

Bies, the 1988 Seniors PGA Rookie of the Year, earned $45,000 for his first victory of 1989. He more than doubled his winnings for the year, boosting them to $89,612.

Bies started the day 9-under-par after rounds of 68 and 67, but struggled to a 38 on the front nine before regrouping for a 35 over the back nine for a 54-hole total of 8-under 208 at the 7,064-yard Stonebriar Country Club.

It was the largest margin of victory in the five-year history of the tournament. Peter Thomson and Don January won by two shots each in 1985 and 1986, respectively.

Inkster stays in front

RANCHO MIRAGE, Calif. (AP) — Juli Inkster was sort of comfortably sleepwalking through the final round of the $500,000 Dinah Shore tournament when she was jolted back to reality.

"I was kind of coasting on easy street, but getting a bogey on No. 11 and seeing the lead go down to three shots got me going.

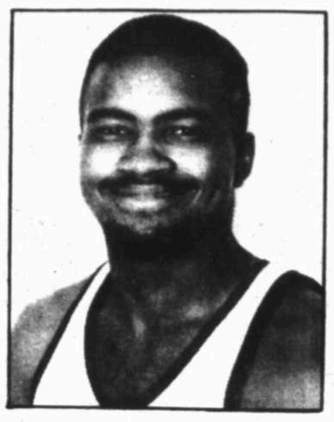

"Then I made a 20-foot putt for par on No. 12 and that sort of did it for me," Inkster said after she scored a front-running five-shot victory Sunday in the first of the LPGA's four major tournaments.

LPGA Hall of Famer JoAnne Carner, who turns 50 on Tuesday, and Tammie Green both picked up two shots on Inkster when they birdied the 11th hole to move to within three shots of the lead. But that was as close as they got.

Inkster completed the round at Mission Hills Country Club with a 1-under-par 71 to finish at 9-under 279 for the tournament.

Evert starts to accept string of 2nd places

KEY BISCAYNE, Fla. (AP) — The losses come a little more frequently now for 34-year-old Chris Evert, and while she doesn't like that fact, she accepts it.

Evert has finished second in her past two tournaments and is still looking for her first title this year. Gabriela Sabatini beat her 6-1, 4-6, 6-2 in Saturday's finals at the International Players Championships.

"Getting into the finals, I'm consistent at least," Evert said.

"But I don't put the pressure on myself anymore that I have to win every single match. Nowadays when I lose a match, I'm disappointed for an hour, and then I go home and realize I have another life."

Evert has 157 career singles titles, more than any other player. Her most recent came in New Orleans last October.

"It would be nice to win a tournament," said Evert, ranked fourth in the world. "When you've been No. 1, you're never satisfied — not completely satisfied, anyway. But I'm still excited about playing. I'm looking forward to the majors in the summer. I'm not that disappointed."

Saturday's crowd at Key Biscayne, less than 90 minutes from Evert's home in Boca Raton, roared after almost every point she won, especially during her second-set rally.

"I don't know if I'll be back next year, but I really enjoyed this," Evert told the crowd at the award ceremonies.

But later at a news conference, Evert dismissed speculation by reporters about her retirement.

"You guys are thinking about that, 24 hours a day it seems, but I'm not thinking about that at all," Evert said.

While Evert's best days are past, Sabatini confirmed that she has a bright future. The 18-year-old Argentine may be the best bet to challenge top-ranked Steffi Graf, who skipped the tournament.

"I'm really playing well," Sabatini said. "Mentally I feel more strong now, and that's the key to beating Steffi."

Sabatini, the tournament's top seed, won her first title this year and her first championship in a two-week event.

"I have to try to play every tournament the same, not just play a few tournaments well," she said.

The next chance for a meeting between Sabatini and Graf will be at the Bausch & Lomb tournament on Amelia Island, Fla., April 10-16.

Daugherty dominates in Cav romp

Associated Press

Robert Parish, long one of the best centers in the NBA, was lame. Brad Daugherty was the young lion, poised for the kill.

The Cleveland Cavaliers, with Daugherty scored 23 points in the first half, opened a 14-point halftime lead, then coasted to a 117-100 victory over the Boston Celtics Sunday.

Daugherty, who finished with 27 points, said he was aware of Parish's sore knee, which had kept him out of the previous two games. He took advantage of the situation, but wasn't gloating after the game.

"His knee was hurting, I guess. I don't really think about things like that," Daugherty said. "My scoring was a tribute to good passing. My teammates were getting me the ball down where I could score. The passes were splitting up a lot of the double teams."

And Parish was making no excuses.

"Don't take anything away from Daugherty. He got off to a great start and it just steamrolled after that," said Parish, who finished with 10 points and 11 rebounds. "It'll take a couple more days to get it back in shape and to get the conditioning back."

Cleveland fell behind 6-0, but Daugherty scored eight straight points to give the Cavaliers the lead for good at 8-6. He made his first 10 field-goal attempts and scored 16 points in the first quarter.

Pistons 117, Clippers 101

Detroit won its eighth straight game and ended the Clippers' longest winning streak in three years at three.

Lakers 118, Bucks 117

Byron Scott scored 32 points, including five 3-point shots, and Magic Johnson added 24 points and 11 assists for the Lakers.

Bulls 106, Nets 95

Michael Jordan had 28 points, 14 rebounds and 12 assists — his fifth consecutive triple-double — as Chicago beat New Jersey for its 10th victory in 12 games.

The Bulls broke open a 57-57 tie with a 23-6 run, with Scottie Pippen scoring 10 of his 12 third-period points during the spurt. Pippen finished with 23 points.

76ers 108, Rockets 99

Philadelphia beat Houston for the 22nd consecutive time at the Spectrum as Charles Barkley had 26 points and 10 rebounds and Hersey Hawkins scored 23 points.

Bullets 120, Warriors 103

Washington won its 13th consecutive home game as Darrell Walker had 16 points, 10 rebounds and nine assists in less than three quarters against Golden State.

Hawks 132, Pacers 109

Atlanta had four players with more than 20 points as the Hawks handed Indiana its worst home defeat of the season.

Reggie Theus led Atlanta with 27 points, Moses Malone had 25 points and 13 rebounds, Glenn Rivers with 24 points and Dominique Wilkins 23, including 19 in the second half.

Mavericks 98, Heat 96

Dallas moved within a half-game of Portland in the race for the eighth and final Western Conference playoff spot when Adrian Dantley's 20-foot bank shot as time expired broke a tie with Miami.

Danny Cox is out for the season with an elbow injury and pitcher Greg Mathews is on the disabled list with an inflamed elbow.

Red Sox at Orioles

The Orioles lost their first 21 games last season and get to face Roger Clemens, 18-12 last year with eight shutouts and a club-record 291 strikeouts. President George Bush, a one-time baseball player at Yale University, will throw out the first ball.

The Red Sox lost pitcher Bruce Hurst to free agency and their spring has been one of turmoil thanks to the Wade Boggs-Margo Adams controversy and Clemens' threat to reporters if they wrote about his family.

"The season starts, everyone will settle down and concentrate on playing together and winning," pitcher Wes Gardner said.

The Orioles, who have six rookies and 14 players with two years or less of major-league experience, will start Dave Schmidt, who is 18-10 over the past two seasons as a reliever.

Giants at Padres

San Francisco's 39-year-old Rick Reuschel pitches against San Diego's Eric Show, who was San Diego's opening-game pitcher in 1987, 1986 and 1984, when the Padres won their only pennant.

The Padres have a new look after a series of off-season transactions that included the signing of Hurst and the acquisition in trades of pitcher Walt Terrell and slugger baseman Jack Clark.

Jack McKeon is the Padres' manager after taking over for Larry Bowa last May 28 when San Diego got off to a 16-30 start. Under McKeon, the Padres went 67-48.

"When you're objective about it, you've got to say we're a good ballclub," McKeon said. "We've made a lot of improvements. But preseason predictions don't mean a thing. You've got to do it on the field."

Blue Jays at Royals

Toronto's Jimmy Key, opposed by 20-game winner Mark Gubicza, will try to beat Kansas City on Opening Day for the second year in a row. George Bell backed him with three home runs.

Neither team made many off-season personnel moves, although Kansas City signed 41-year-old catcher Bob Boone as a free agent from the California Angels.

Brewers at Indians

With ace Teddy Higuera on the disabled list, Milwaukee's Don August gets the call against Greg Swindell, who was 5-0 last April but lost eight straight from June 5-July 19.

"The opening day starter is usually the ace of the staff," Swindell said.

Exxon spill spurs oil need debate

New York Times News Service

A decade ago, concern about pollution from oil spills reached a crescendo with what remain the two biggest disasters so far: the wreck of the tanker Amoco Cadiz off the coast of France in 1978, spilling 68 million gallons of crude oil along the Brittany shoreline, and the blowout of the Ixtoc I oil well in the Gulf of Mexico a year later, pouring 140 million gallons into the sea.

But in the 1980s, the issue faded from public consciousness partly because a more cautious oil industry, stung by costs and criticism, succeeded in significantly reducing the number of large spills. The spotlight shifted elsewhere as other environmental issues like toxic waste took center stage.

Now the grounding of the tanker Exxon Valdez in Alaska's Prince William Sound and the ecological and economic calamity caused by the escape of more than 10 million gallons of crude have brought the issue back to the forefront.

But this time, the discussion has emerged amid increasing worry about the broader effects of fossil fuels on the environment.

So far attention has focused on the immediate circumstances of the worst disaster of its kind in American history: the ship captain's drinking, the control of the tanker by an unlicensed helmsman, the delay by Exxon in trying to contain the spill.

Some energy experts, looking beyond the immediate questions that are likely to be the subject of long and thorough investigation, say that the Exxon Valdez spill could be a warning of risks to come.

When, as is eventually bound to happen, world oil prices rise again, oil exploration will expand into its last frontiers: the pristine, ecologically sensitive arctic and Antarctic regions where harsh conditions make it extremely difficult to deal with an oil spill, and where cold weather delays the natural decomposition of petroleum.

Environmentalists are not only seizing on the Exxon Valdez incident to bolster their case against oil drilling off the California and Florida coasts and in the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge in Alaska; they are also holding it up as one more example, along with urban air pollution and the greenhouse effect, of the cost of continuing dependence on fossil fuels.

Since its peak in 1979, the amount of oil lost worldwide at sea and on land through spillage, fire and sinkings has plummeted from 328 million gallons to between 24 million and 55 million a year, according to the Center for Short-Lived Phenomena in Cambridge, Mass., which keeps track of oil spills.

IMF mulls Brady debt plan

Brady

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Bush administration, buoyed by a vote of "broad support" from the world's top industrial democracies for its Third World debt reduction scheme, is seeking prompt action on the proposal from the International Monetary Fund and the World Bank.

Treasury Secretary Nicholas Brady was scheduled to present the plan to the steering committee of the two international lending organizations today at the opening session of their two-day spring conference.

America's allies endorsed the plan — put together by Brady — in a communique issued Sunday after a daylong, secret session of the top finance officials from the United States, Japan, West Germany, Britain, France, Canada and Italy.

The administraion's plan to help ease the Third World's crushing $1.3 trillion debt involves some debt forgiveness — a major departure from the approach envisioned by the Reagan administration.

"There was broad support for strengthening the debt strategy along the lines of the U.S. proposals," Brady told reporters after the meeting.

Brady said he was pleased that the seven nations had agreed on a statement that contained "a very high level of detail" backing up his proposal and one that mentioned the need for prompt action on the part of the IMF and the World Bank.

Canadian Finance Minister Michael Wilson echoed Brady's assessment, telling reporters, "We have a good agreement and we have good support demonstrated for the proposal."

Wilson added the ministers believed that their joint efforts at coordinating economic policies would lead to a seventh year of economic expansion, although at a slower growth rate than last year.

Inflation linked to world debt

WASHINGTON (AP) — Inflation is the biggest threat to improved conditions in the United States and other big industrial countries, the International Monetary Fund said today.

Its semiannual "World Economic Outlook" predicted a 4.7 percent increase in prices for the United States this year and 4.5 percent in 1990, compared with 3.4 percent last year, by the fund's calculation. The forecast for Japan was as usual the lowest for the biggest countries: 1.4 percent in 1989 and 1.2 percent in 1990.

Predictions for most West European countries were higher than for the United States.

Inflation is closely linked to the problem of the Third World's $1.3 trillion debt, the major topic at meetings of the fund's 151 governments this week. Fear of inflation has made the Federal Reserve System encourage higher rates in the attempt to thwart it. Higher rates increase the burden of debtor countries just when Treasury Secretary Nicholas Brady and others are discussing plans to lighten it.

The fund saw a risk that inflation may be higher than previously predicted because of:

—demand for goods continuing to grow faster than the capacity to produce them.

—a higher-than-expected rise in prices for raw materials.

—more expectation of price rises because of larger amounts of cash in circulation; prophecies of inflation can be self-fulfilling.

The fund classes 21 of its 151 members as industrial. The other 130 are listed as "developing countries," though many of them have "developed" lower production and living standards in recent years.

For these Third World areas, which are also the most heavily indebted, the outlook was much more pessimistic. The predictions indicated a further drop in the low standard of living in many areas.

The Fund found that, overall, their production last year increased by even less than what the fund called its earlier "cautious expectations." Last April, it predicted their

Airline takeovers heat up

Trump, Davis making moves

NEW YORK (AP) — Eastern Airlines is mostly mothballed, and Northwest Airlines is flying. But both are attracting bids from billionaire business celebrities ranging from hoteliers to Hollywood investors.

People who saw "Wall Street" may have thought they were watching real-life variants of the back-room maneuvering for the movie's fictional Bluestar Airlines if they followed accounts of Eastern and Northwest this past week.

The cast of contenders included baseball commissioner Peter V. Ueberroth, Hyatt hotel chain owner Jay Pritzker, property-casino centurion Donald Trump and energy-entertainment investor Marvin Davis.

Others said to be involved, either as buyers or their lenders, included takeover strategist Carl Icahn, who also is chairman of Trans World Airlines, reclusive West Coast financier Kirk Kerkorian, and David Batchelder, the former adviser to the dean of the corporate stalkers, oilman T. Boone Pickens.

Miami-based Eastern remained comatose, its fate unclear, planes mostly grounded and assets increasingly mired in bankruptcy court proceedings, with little sign from parent Texas Air Corp. that a sale was close.

A group led by Ueberroth had offered $464 million offer for the airline, which prior to the March 4 strike flew 100,000 passengers daily to 118 cities with 250 jetliners. Since then it has barely managed a skeleton schedule.

Pritzker reportedly offered a higher price, value unknown. But Ueberroth's offer told a story in itself about the perceived worth of Eastern, one of the nation's most unprofitable airlines.

The Ueberroth deal was $200 million below the price Texas Air paid three years ago, and barely $100 million over what Trump had offered for Eastern's Northeast shuttle, which flies to only three cities with about 20 planes.

Size of Milken wages stuns Wall Street

Milken

By KURT EICHENWALD
New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — The indictment last week of Michael R. Milken stunned even the most jaded Wall Street professionals — not for its legal implications, but for its revelation of the income paid to the "junk bond" pioneer.

Milken's compensation, which topped $550 million in 1987 alone, exceeded $1 billion in a four-year period. Surely no one in American history has earned anywhere near as much in a year as Milken, head of the high-yield bond department at Drexel Burnham Lambert Inc.

J.P. Morgan, the best-known financier of this century, had a total net worth of less than $500 million when he died in 1913, and even allowing for inflation his income never matched Milken's.

Milken's income left mouths agape on Wall Street as many wondered how Drexel could have allowed one person to gain so much power. And some say it highlights enormous and disturbing changes that have transformed the financial markets and shaken the foundations of corporate America in the last decade.

"Such an extraordinary income inevitably raises questions as to whether there isn't something unbalanced in the way our financial system is working," said David Rockefeller, retired chairman of the Chase Manhattan bank, whose investments and shares of family trusts are estimated to be worth $1.1 billion.

"One has to be concerned when the norms that have been accepted over the years suddenly become so distorted."

Whatever the outcome of this latest case in the government's three-year investigation of the financial markets, the income of Michael Milken is assured a prominent place in the mythology of Wall Street in the 1980s, a decade of greed in which almost incomprehensible sums poured into investment houses to be divvied up among some of the nation's most talented young professionals.

The push for more money and bigger deals contributed to a public perception, popularized in books and movies, that something fundamental had gone askew. Financial profes-

Economic growth slowing

The nation's economic growth in March was the slowest in three years, a monthly survey of the nation's purchasing managers concluded.

The report, by the National Association of Purchasing Management, was scheduled to be released on Monday. But on Friday afternoon, word of the report reached bond dealers, who say news about the report contributed to a surge in prices of all Treasury issues.

"The report was largely responsible for the rally," said David M. Jones, senior vice president and chief economist for Aubrey G. Lanston & Co., a New York-based dealer in government securities.

Dealers reacted to rumors about the association's composite index, which declined from 53 percent in February, to 50.4 percent in March, according to the report. A composite index above 50 percent indicates that the ecomony is expanding, while one below 50 implies a contraction.

While March marked 32 consecutive months the index has exceeded 50 percent, it was also the third straight month it has fallen. The March reading was the lowest since the index hit 48 percent in July 1986.

The March figure was a sign that the Federal Reserve Board, which has been nudging interest rates up for more than a year, has succeeded in dampening demand to restrain inflation.

The report, which is based on responses from managers at more than 250 companies representing 21 industries, is considered to be an initial indicator of economic activity in the previous month.

Jones said Friday's rumors had a significant effect in spurring the bond market because the report supported other indications of a softening in the economy. Factory orders and new home sales showed declines in February.

"Two things happen when the economy declines — interest rates decline and inflation fears recede," he said.

Both benefit the bond market because falling interest rates make bond investments more attractive, and inflation erodes the value of fixed-income assets.

As a result, late trading on Friday found the benchmark Treasury long bonds, the 8¾ percent issue due 2019, offered at 97 25-32, up 17-32 for the day and 20-32 above its intraday low.

The report also indicated slower growth in production, new orders, new export orders and vendor deliveries, and employment continued to decline for the second consecutive month after eight previous months of increase.

"Virtually all indicators confirm the considerably subdued growth in the first quarter and signal even more modest growth in the second quarter," said Robert J. Bretz, the chairman of the association's business survey committee. He is the director of materials management at Pitney Bowes Inc.

Oil prices turn higher

From Staff and Wire Reports

Oil futures prices turned higher after Friday's sell-off, with contracts for May delivery of West Texas Intermediate rising 27 cents to stand at $20.46 at midmorning on the New York Mercantile Exchange.

Spot prices for WTI plunged 62 cents Friday to $20.19 when traders decided to sell so they could collect profits amassed during the market's runup. The selling started in the afternoon as rumors circulated in the market that Alaskan tanker traffic was returning to normal.

Meanwhile, speculation about possible shortages drove wholesale gasoline prices higher while a public interest group sought to dispel fears of shrinking supplies as the peak summer driving season approaches.

In an unusually hectic session on the New York Mercantile Exchange, traders bid up gasoline prices amid reports that refiners on the West Coast temporarily will receive smaller quantities of crude due to disruptions in shipments from a major Alaskan port.

Unleaded gasoline for April delivery rose 2.12 cents to settle at 65.31 cents a gallon. At one point during the busy session, the contract was up more than 4½ cents a gallon.

This week wholesale gasoline on the West Coast has surged to more than $1 a gallon, up about 15 cents since an Exxon tanker rammed a reef causing the country's worst oil spill.

A nationwide consumer organization said the sharp surge in gasoline prices this week was unwarranted given that there is plenty of oil available to satisfy refining needs.

Dollar steady but lower

LONDON (AP) — The dollar was steady at lower levels in moderately active European trading late this morning as Sunday's meeting of the Group of Seven had little impact on the market. Gold moved higher.

Traders said the dollar moved lower earlier today in response to dollar sales by the Bank of Japan early in the Tokyo day. This was the first time this year that the Bank of Japan intervened in the open market, they said.

The move was probably requested by Japan's G-7 partners, which met Sunday for eight hours in Washington.

No new features emerged from that meeting, leading market players to believe that the G-7's presumed dollars ranges were still in effect.

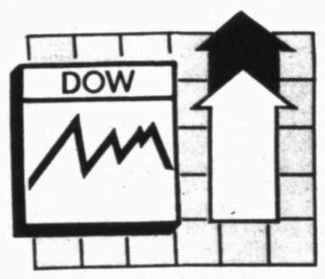

In Tokyo, the dollar fell 0.29 yen to a closing 132.26 yen. Later, in London, it was quoted at 132.35 yen.

In London, the British pound fell to $1.6805, compared with $1.6875 Friday.

Gold opened in London at a bid price of $384.10 a troy ounce, up from $383.75 bid late Friday. At midmorning today, the city's five major bullion dealers fixed a recommended price of $85.30.

Silver was quoted in London today at a bid price of $5.79 a troy ounce, unchanged from Friday.

Stock prices fly on airline issues

NEW YORK (AP) — Stock prices staged a broad advance Friday, following the lead of soaring airline issues, to cap off a generally upbeat first quarter of 1989 in the market.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials rose 12.28 to 2,293.62, finishing the week with a net gain of 50.58 points.

Advancing issues outnumbered declines by more than 2 to 1 in nationwide trading of New York Stock Exchange-listed stocks, with 1,038 up, 411 down and 521 unchanged.

Volume on the floor of the Big Board came to 170.96 million shares, up from 159.95 million in the previous session. Nationwide, consolidated volume in NYSE-listed issues, including trades in those stocks on regional exchanges and in the over-the-counter market, totaled 198.42 million shares.

BUSINESS IN BRIEF

OPEC may boost output if prices hold

KUWAIT (AP) — OPEC will consider boosting its daily 18.5 million barrels production quota if oil prices remain at the $18-a-barrel level in the next two months, the cartel's president, Rilwanu Lukman said in a published report Monday.

"If we found oil prices in June stabilized at the level of $18 a barrel or more, we would increase the organization's production ceiling," Lukman told the dialy Al-Watan. "Otherwise, the reference price will remain as it is. We cannot predict what is going to happen in the coming two months."

SmithKline, Beecham Group talking merger

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — SmithKline Beckman Corp. and Beecham Group PLC confirmed the companies are discussing a merger of most of their operations that could create one of the world's largest pharmaceutical firms, but officials refused to give details.

In a news release Sunday from the Philadelphia-based SmithKline, the companies said no agreement has been finalized and cautioned that there was no assurance any agreement would be reached.

Bush repeats support for Alaska exploration

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Bush has reiterated his support for Alaskan oil exploration, saying a policy reversal in the wake of the nation's worst oil spill would be an "irresponsible action" that would ill serve an energy-hungry nation.

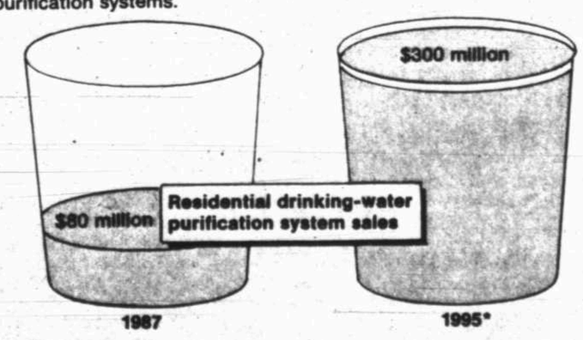

"We are becoming increasingly dependent on foreign oil, and that is not acceptable to any president," Bush said Friday. "We have to transport oil. What we will do is not go backwards."

The comments came a week after the oil spill of the Exxon Valdez, which ran aground.

INCOME

"It's embarrassing to our financial system," said Samuel L. Hayes 3d, a professor of investment banking at Harvard Business School. "It portrays the image of an industry that has gotten totally out of control in terms of its greed for money."

While Hayes believes the image is unfounded, the numbers for deals and fees that Wall Street has been cranking out in the takeover era have numbed the public imagination. Indeed, late last year, the $24.88 billion paid by Kohlberg, Kravis, Roberts & Co., the small but powerful investment firm, to buy out RJR Nabisco Inc. brought some $400 million in fees to Wall Street — a sum that in itself would have been a very large deal just a few years before.

Indeed, the RJR Nabisco deal raised questions about how far Wall Street would go in its pursuit of private gain. F. Ross Johnson, chief executive of RJR Nabisco, who instigated a management-led buyout, was roundly criticized for arranging a deal in which he stood to gain as much as $100 million if the offer was accepted.

Publicity about the potential profits is considered one of the essential elements that led Johnson to lose a bidding contest with Kohlberg, Kravis.

But ilken's $550 million income in 1987 brought new attention to the issue of excess. Every minute of every day and night, Milken earned about $1,046.

From the time he got to work at 4:30 a.m. until he had lunch at his desk, he earned enough to purchase a handful of Rolls-Royces. As he headed home from work he was close to breaking the $1 million mark.

Despite his wealth, Milken lives a relatively modest life. He is not known, as some on Wall Street are, for extravagant purchases. He lives in Encino, Calif., in a house once owned by Clark Gable, which he purchased in 1978 for about $700,000.

He owns two cars, including a Mercedes station wagon. He also donates large sums to charity; last fall he anonymously purchased pen-pal letters by Anne Frank and her sister for $165,000 and donated them to the Simon Wiesenthal Center in Los Angeles. It is unclear what Milken does with the rest of his income.

His indictment last week on racketeering, securities fraud, mail fraud and other charges spells out a world in which he used the vast resources at his disposal to exert unprecedented control over the junk bond market and corporate America. Milken says he is innocent and promises to contest the charges vigorously.

For its part, Drexel defends the large payments to Milken. Last week, in a talk to employees, Frederick H. Joseph, the firm's chief executive, said that in the early 1970s, when Drexel was a third-tier investment house, it agreed to pay him a percentage of the business he brought in.

It was, Drexel officials contend, a worthwhile decision. Because of Milken's efforts, Drexel has become a Wall Street powerhouse.

Milken reached his agreement with Drexel in 1975, when he was doing comparatively little business. Since 1977, the high-yield unit has raised more than $98 billion, according to some estimates, with Milken getting up to 35 percent of the commission on each transaction.

Nevertheless, many Wall Street professionals criticized the deal Drexel had with Milken. Once his salary began to exceed the budgets of many small countries, the firm should have altered the terms of the deal, they said.

"It is just so beyond the pale you can't even come to terms with it," one investment banker said. "It is more than any public firm on Wall Street earned. I think that says something about the way Drexel has been run."

Business executives have also begun to voice concern about what the payments say about the firm's management. "You can be happy on a lot less money," said Donald J. Trump, the New York developer, whose net worth is estimated at $1 billion. "I'm amazed that the firm would allow someone to benefit that greatly."

Moreover, many wonder how the news of Milken's salary will play if his case goes to trial. How would a jury identify with a man who makes more than most corporations? On the other hand, how would the government convince jurors that a person earning that much would break the law to make even more?

"This is like a Great Gatsby case," said John C. Coffee Jr., a professor of securities and criminal law at Columbia University. "You really can't understand why Milken, who was making hundreds of millions of dollars, would violate the law just to make a few million more."

In large part, Milken's salary and the growth of the takeover boom go hand in hand. With the use of Milken's junk bonds, the debt instrument once derided by the white-shoe Wall Street firms, many corporations that could not get bank financing suddenly had access to huge pools of capital.

he bonds are rated lower than the investment-grade issues of blue-chip firms, and thus pay higher yields. Milken focused on medium-sized but quickly growing companies that generally proved to be solid investments.

By 1982, the junk bond transactions that fueled Milken's income were growing in popularity. Interest rates began to collapse that year, breathing life into the bond market. Corporations and business people were suddenly willing to listen to Milken's gospel of using leveraged capital for financing.

Besides helping to raise tens of billions of dollars a year for corporations, ilken's team of traders and salespeople helped raiders in hostile takeovers. The bonds they sold were used to buy the public shares, using assets of the target company. Such deals are known as leveraged buyouts.

"His salary speaks to the leveraged buyout movement which he was instrumental in bringing to life," said James C. Van Horne, a professor of finance at Stanford Business School.

But Milken was not alone. Because of the deals he made possible, hundreds of millions of dollars began to line the pockets of a steady stream of young people on Wall Street, with hundreds now making more than $1 million a year.

"A million is kind of like peanuts now," said Perrin Long, a securities analyst with Lipper Analytical Services.

Even more money is available for the best deal makers. "The battleground for the top people on the street is $2 million to as much as $7 million," one investment banker said. But even Ivan F. Boesky, once thought to be the highest-paid person on Wall Street, did not come close to the amount made by Milken.

SPILL

There was one exceptional year, 1983, when well blowouts in the Iran-Iraq war and a rash of large tanker accidents swelled the total to 242 million gallons.

While the downward trend was being established, a study by the National Research Council found in 1985 that the most important source of oil pollution in the oceans was not well blowouts and tanker accidents but municipal and industrial runoff, the cleaning of ship bilges and other routine occurrences.

The study also found that all the sources together posed less of an overall threat to the environment than many had thought.

Still, the study found, "Petroleum can have a seriously adverse effect on local environments, persisting, in some cases unaltered, for decades."

Since large oil-spill disasters are "low-probability events," the Exxon Valdez disaster will most likely turn out to be an aberration, not the start of a new upward trend, said Richard S. Golob, director of the Cambridge center and an expert on oil spills.

The United States, he said, has been particularly fortunate in having no major incidents since 1976, when the tanker Argo Merchant grounded off southeastern Massachusetts, spilling 7.6 million gallons of crude.

Still, these unlikely events are going to happen, he said, "no matter how well you plan in advance." And, "In a massive spill situation, regardless of the degree of pre-planning, all hell breaks loose," he said. "The reason is that it takes place so infrequently, and the resources are never available in a single location to deal effectively with it," he said.

One problem, in Golob's view, is that the decline in big accidents in the 1980s caused the government to shift its attention toward hazardous waste and toxic chemicals. Funds for oil-spill response and research "have decreased dramatically," he said.

AIRLINES

At Minneapolis-based Northwest, meanwhile, management was facing a $2.7 billion, $90-a-share takeover offer from Davis, a second offer of undisclosed value from a group the airline wouldn't identify, and rumors that at least one other investor group was preparing to make a bid.

Not coincidentally, Northwest's parent company NWA Inc. erected an anti-takeover "poison pill" shield to thwart unfriendly acquirers by making it prohibitively expensive for them to sell any of the airline's assets.

The defense was designed to foil what many analysts have called the airline's biggest weakness: lucrative operations in the economically booming Asian Pacific region and a lagging domestic business.

As the 1980s takeover era has shown, that kind of unwieldy, inefficient performance invites unsolicited offers from investors who see profit in selling a company in pieces.

A takeover of Northwest therefore raised the prospect of the biggest airline bustup since deregulation, only three years after NWA acquired hometown rival Republic Airlines for $884 million.

ECONOMY

The report indicated that the production index fell to 50.7 percent in March from 53.7 percent in February. The index is the lowest since July 1986 when it was 49.3 percent.

While new orders increased for the 46th consecutive month, the report said the rate of growth declined sharply as the new orders index plunged to 50.9 percent from 55.9 percent in February. The index is at its lowest since it was 50.7 percent in June 1985.

New export orders posted a lower rate of growth for the fourth consecutive month. Of the companies in the survey that export, 22 percent reported better export orders in March, the same as in February. But 9 percent reported worse orders, up from 6 percent in February.

The administration is looking to countries with large trade surpluses such as Japan to provide money for new loans as a means of supporting the Brady debt reduction effort.

The endorsement by America's major allies was the first step in a sales strategy that is to be presented to the steering committees of the 151-nation IMF and World Bank. The two major lending organizations have key roles to play in implementation of the new debt relief approach.

Under the Brady debt plan, commercial banks would be asked to forgive voluntarily a portion of the loans they have made.

OUTLOOK

output would rise by 3.7 percent in 1988 and 3.9 this year. Now it thinks the increase will be only 3.3 percent in 1989 but 4.2 percent in 1990.

These figures compare with an average of 5.5 percent a year in the 1970s. Though the percentages are small, they are important because they apply to huge amounts of goods. In this country, 1 percentage point of growth is equal to increased production worth $50 billion.

The low predictions for the Third World mean that some average incomes will continue to go down as they have in many African countries since the 1960s and in most of Latin America during the 1980s.

Indonesians become precarious passengers on a freight train, leaving Jakarta, the capital city, for the overcrowded conditions of their shanty-town homes. The small island is home to 180 million people.

Crowded country

WASHINGTON — Name the country with the fifth largest population in the world.

It's a land of 180 million people of some 300 ethnic groups speaking 250 different languages. It is surpassed only by China, India, the Soviet Union and the United States.

Answer: Indonesia.

Indonesia is the most populous Muslim nation. Its dominant island, Java, where more than 100 million people are jammed into an area just a bit larger than Louisiana, has one of the world's most densely populated rural societies.

Overpopulation has resulted in the largest voluntary resettlement program anywhere — the movement of more than 700,000 families to frontier areas.

As one of the most populous nations, Indonesia is beset with staggering problems, Arthur Zich reports in the current National Geographic.

For the past four years economic growth has barely kept ahead of population growth. Per capita income has stayed at about $530 a year — even lower than in the Philippines. Forty percent of the people are underemployed. Some 2 million new workers enter the labor force each year. About 50 percent of the population is under age 20.

That the island nation has kept its head above water is attributable to its abundance of natural resources and to the 24-year, ironhanded but subtle rule of President Suharto, who often goes by the title Father of Development.

A country of more than 13,660 wildly beautiful islands, the former Dutch colony stretches across 3,200 miles of water from the Indian Ocean to the Pacific. In the geographic heart of Java, the subterranean cave abode of the demon dwarf Semar is revered by devout Javanese as the center of the world, the most sacred place in creation.

By contrast, at the northern end of neighboring Sumatra, another subterranean phenomenon, a multibillion-dollar gas liquefication plant, taps one of the earth's largest natural-gas fields.

"Two worlds coexist in present-day Indonesia," Zich says.

"Indonesian man is not modern man," former foreign minister Mochtar Kusumaatmadja told Zich. "He is marginal man: one foot in the present, one in ancient traditions. But he is changing fast."

Marginal man is seen in the streets of Jakarta, Indonesia's capital and heartland: sinewy-legged pedicab drivers, WTS's (women of injured morals), sidewalk hawkers and fast-food peddlers, who proffer everything from Gucci-like bags and Levi's-like jeans to kabobs and goat's-feet soup.

These people are part of an underground economy that is estimated to represent more than a quarter of the city's labor force. They toil up to 16 hours a day and their earnings average well above the $62.50 monthly base salary of university-educated government workers.

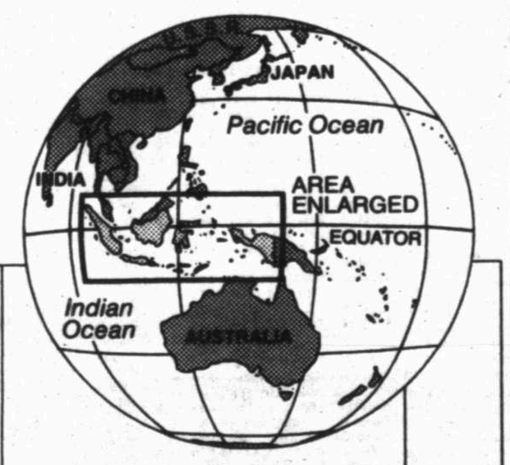

By some estimates, as much as a fourth of Jakarta is without housing. Beyond Jakarta to the southeast stretch mile after mile of shimmering rice fields and trim green coffee and tea plantations that roll up the flanks of scores of volcanoes.

"Indeed, to a foreigner," Zich says, "Java is a primeval world of such astonishing beauty that it is hard to believe it is so beset with woes."

World's Most Populous Island Nation

Draped across 3,200 miles, Indonesia is a land of more than 13,660 lush tropical islands, dominated by Java, center of wealth and power. With 180 million people, Indonesia is surpassed in population only by China, India, the Soviet Union, and the United States.

NATION IN BRIEF

Rape victim grabs onto cable wires

NEW YORK (AP) — A woman who was raped at gunpoint and pushed from a 21-story building grabbed onto cable television wires and screamed until she was pulled into the building through a 17th-floor window, police said.

The 29-year-old victim was watching the sun rise from a housing project rooftop Saturday when two men with guns stripped her and raped her, said police spokeswoman Sgt. Diane Kubler.

She said the woman was then pushed off the roof, and as she was falling, grabbed onto the wires at about the 18th floor.

Robert Powell, who lives on the 17th floor, was awakened by a scream and a thud on his bedroom window, and saw a woman's legs dangling outside, Kubler said. He opened the window and grabbed the woman's feet.

Meawnhile, on the 18th floor, Freddy Wyatt woke up, saw the woman swinging from the cable and grabbed her hands, Kubler said. By the time police reached the 18th floor, Wyatt had lost his grip, but Powell managed to slide the woman through his window, Kubler said.

The woman was taken to Harlem Hospital, where she was treated and released, said Nilsa Ortiz, an emergency room employee.

B-1Bs ordered back into air

WICHITA, Kan. (AP) — The Strategic Air Command gave the entire B-1B bomber fleet a clean bill of health and ordered the planes back into the air, an Air Force spokesman said.

All 97 planes were returned to active status in an order received by B-1B bases Sunday evening, said Lt. Col. Paul Muehring, chief of public affairs for McConnell Air Force Base in Wichita, where 16 of the bombers are based.

The order by Gen. John Chain Jr., SAC commander-in-chief, was based on inspections that began shortly after the planes were grounded Tuesday.

It was the third time the multi-million-dollar planes have been grounded in the past 18 months.

The grounding was a result of a problem discovered last Monday during a pre-flight check of a B-1B at Dyess Air Force Base in Texas.

Eighth victim unidentified

NEW BEDFORD, Mass. (AP) — An autopsy did not help investigators identify a woman believed to be the eighth victim of a serial killer, and officials pinned their hopes on finding the author of an anonymous letter about the case.

"We have received a lot of phone calls...But we don't believe the person who wrote the letter has been in contact," Jim Martin, a spokesman for the district attorney, said Saturday. As of early this morning, no one had contacted authorities about the letter, he said today.

Officials have been trying since last fall to solve the mystery surrounding the young women's bodies that have been found since July along three highways near this port city.

Astronaut to lead NASA

WASHINGTON (AP) — Navy Rear Adm. Richard H. Truly, an astronaut who flew in two space shuttle missions, is expected to be nominated by President Bush to head the nation's space agency, according to administration sources.

Truly's nomination to succeed James Fletcher as chief of the National Aeronautics and Space Administration is likely to be announced this week, said the sources, who spoke on the condition of anonymity.

50 years ago, America's school buses turned yellow

STAMFORD, N.Y. (AP) — If not for the efforts 50 years ago of Frank W. Cyr, the ubiquitious yellow school bus might be a bus of a different color.

Green, white, bright red, just about every color showed up on the vehicles that carried kids to class back in 1939. Some districts painted theirs yellow, as safety experts had begun to urge. But others had the idea that red-white-and-blue buses would make children more patriotic.

In Kansas, children traveled to school in wooden wheat wagons. In many rural states, it wasn't unusual for youngsters to ride in trucks with floorboards covered with cow flop.

To survey this school transportation mess, Cyr, then a rural education expert at Columbia Teachers College in New York, toured 10 states with the help of a Rockefeller Foundation grant.

Returning, he gathered educators, school bus manufacturers and paint experts for a landmark meeting that produced a 42-page pamphlet containing the nation's first school bus safety standards — from axles to brakes to color.

On April 26, half a century after the gathering, Teachers College plans a luncheon in honor of Cyr, now 88 and the acknowledged "father of the yellow school bus."

"School bus yellow" is now as natural to America's morning landscape as the sunrise. More than 22 million public schoolchildren ride in 361,998 buses each day, says Larry McEntire, president of the National Association of State Directors for Pupil Transportation Services.

The formula for the orange-yellow paint used on virtually all of them is on file at the National Bureau of Standards.

"It is hard to imagine today any area of education policy where you could gather people in one room and cause such a national change to occur," said P. Michael Timpane, president of Teachers College.

The standards agreed upon at that meeting had impact far beyond color.

"What the next 50 years revealed is that this simple instrument, the school bus, can be a powerful instrument in education policy," said Timpane.

If not for national standards that put safe buses in each district, the school consolidation movement would have stalled. There were 80,000 school districts in the 1930s. Today, there are just 16,000.

Later, buses became both the symbol and engine of racial integration.

Within a few years of the conference, about 35 states adopted bus standards. The last state, Minnesota, switched from "Minnesota Golden Orange" to yellow in 1974.

But safety was by no means the sole reason for standardizing school bus color, Cyr told a visitor to his white clapboard Victorian home in the tranquility of this northern Catskills hamlet.

Economics and bureaucratic chaos were at least as important in causing the clamor for standards during the 1930s, he said.

"Terrible" is how he described the student transportation situation.

Cyr, who had grown up in a sod house in the Republican River Valley of Nebraska and had taught in country schools, was by then a noted authority on rural education. It was his idea in the 1930s to form school cooperatives to help rural districts provide student services they couldn't afford on their own.
