Big Spring Symphony auditions next Tuesday

Auditions for the Big Spring Symphony Orchestra will be Tuesday, Sept. 8, at 7 p.m. at the First United Methodist Church choir room.

Those wishing to audition are requested to prepare a 10 to 12 minute orchestral excerpt said Gene Chartier Smith, conductor. Portions of major solo literature will be acceptable but orchestral excerpts are preferred. Included in the audition will be sight reading.

"Every effort will be made to fill as many chairs as possible with Big Spring musicians," said Smith. For the upcoming season, the orchestra will maintain an instrumentation of approximately 60 members.

Applicants should park in the church's Gregg Street parking lot and enter by the north door in the rear of the building.

The Big Spring Symphony Association begins its 13th season with a Sept. 26 concert at the Municipal Auditorium.

Season tickets are now on sale for the five concert season which includes the Sept. 26 performance; orchestra with flutist Mary York and harpist Kim Gorman; orchestra with the winner of the 34th annual Hemphill-Wells Sorantin Scholarship Award, Feb. 27, 1993; Fort Worth Chamber Orchestra March 15, 1993; and Fiesta Pops Concert, with guest artist Anacani from the Lawrence Welk Show, April 17, 1993.

Fajita tickets for sale

Tickets for the Fajita Dinner to be held in conjunction with Tuesday's Community Pep Rally remain on sale throughout the community.

The pep rally, sponsored by the Big Spring Area Chamber of Commerce's YES for Big Spring group, serves as an annual community gathering at the start of the football season.

Dallas Cowboys' defensive end Jim Jeffcoat will be the keynote speaker. For more information regarding tickets to the supper, call the chamber at 263-7641.

Admission to the pep rally is free.

Sponsor-A-Child program helps needy students

By MARTHA E. FLORES

The Northside Community Center and the Salvation Army helped families prepare for the new school year by supplying clothes and school supplies.

The center in its annual Sponsor-A-Child program to assist needy children with school clothes paired 190 children with sponsor before the school year began.

The program pairs children from lower income families with volunteer sponsors during August, said Marianne Brown-Esquiline, center director.

Sponsors may take the children to purchase school clothes or may give a donation to the center to be used for clothing.

"Each year we have more children that need help," she said. "We have been fortunate to have more new sponsors to meet the need."

One of the new sponsors this year was the Federal Correction Institution of Big Spring. With donations from staff and inmates, the institution raised $430 and sponsored five children.

"It was a good opportunity for the inmates to go out of their way and have their money go to something worthy," said FCI spokesperson Charlie Marmolejo. "We encourage them to participate in programs such as this."

As many as 150 civic organizations, clubs, businesses and private individuals participated in the program.

The Salvation Army in a first time effort distributed 239 supply starter kits to children in grades kindergarten through eighth grade.

The kits were purchased by the Salvation Army through donations, said Lt. Yvette Villafuerte.

Applications will be taken next year for the program and Villafuerte hopes to distribute 300 kits.

SWCID alarm money sought by HC

By MARTHA E. FLORES
Staff Writer

Money is needed to upgrade the existing fire alarm system at SouthWest Collegiate Institute for the Deaf.

The upgrade is estimated to cost about $85,000, said Howard College President Cheri Sparks.

The new system will include new strobe lights, rewiring, duct detectors and additional fire alarms. The system will be placed in the dormitories, vocational building and administration building, she said.

'We met with officials of the coordinating board to try to allocate money that might be available.'

Cheri Sparks
HC president

Sparks and Associate Vice President of SWCID Ron Brasel meet last Wednesday in Austin with officials of the Texas Higher Education Coordinating Board, members of the legislature and representatives of Gov. Ann Richards' office.

"We met with officials of the coordinating board to try to allocate money that might be available," Sparks said.

The federal money allocation to SWCID was not available because of federal restrictions that can not be by-passed by the state. The restrictions state that a college campus must have $50,000 in student Pell grants in order to apply for additional money within pool of money, she said.

Sparks said she had hoped the restrictions would have been waived because of SWCID's special population. "Due to the small number of students at SWCID, we could never meet the qualifications," she said.

Other grant options were made available to Sparks and Brasel. As HC and SWCID administrator attempt to locate funds for the upgraded fire alarm system, renovations at SWCID continue.

Over the summer, a handicapped bathroom was installed in the lobby of the main building. The remodeled bathroom complies with the Americans with Disabilities Act regulations.

Additional renovations include relocation of the photograph restoration and retouching laboratory to the biology laboratory. The biology and chemistry laboratories have been combined into an enlarged room, Brasel said.

Dormitory improvements included adding additional emergency exit lights and replacing inappropriate locking devices and doors, he said.

California stalemate continues

The ASSOCIATED PRESS

SACRAMENTO, Calif. — The state Assembly early today rejected deep cuts in education demanded by Gov. Pete Wilson, prolonging the 2-month-old deadlock that forced California to issue IOUs for the first time since the Depression.

The Assembly adjourned for the night, and was to reconvene at 9 a.m.

"The Assembly Democrats have virtually assured that the state of California will not have a budget on Sept. 1, and they should be prepared to explain that to the people of California," said Dan Schnur, Wilson's spokesman.

The Democratic-controlled Legislature had passed a $57 billion budget over the weekend, then got to work on bills to cut spending on welfare, aid to local governments and schools. Wilson, a Republican, had said he wouldn't sign the spending plan without those cuts.

The Senate approved the 12 bills Sunday and sent them to the Assembly.

There, lawmakers voted against considering the school funding proposal 45-1, with Republicans boycotting. The Assembly also approved a measure on aid to local governments, but changed it from the Senate version.

California has been without a budget since the fiscal year began July 1 because Wilson and the Legislature have been unable to come to terms over how to close an $11 billion deficit caused mostly by the recession.

The impasse has thrown state government into turmoil and forced California to issue IOUs to employees, vendors and taxpayers for the first time since 1936.

During the deadlock, Wilson and Republican leaders urged deep cuts throughout government, including welfare and education.

The Democrats, led by Assembly Speaker Willie Brown, sought more moderate cuts in welfare, protection for school funding and deeper cuts in prison operations.

Democrats have majorities in both houses but lack the two-thirds margins needed to pass budget bills on their own.

With little spending authority or cash, the state has issued $3 billion worth of IOUs to pay bills, tax refunds and thousands of employees' wages.

During July, banks accepted the IOUs as regular checks, but earlier this month they stopped, putting pressure on lawmakers and the governor to act.

Some people — vendors who provide services or products to the state under contract, for example — received nothing at all.

Others received money only under court order, including about 155,000 minimum-wage workers who provide in-home care to the aged, disabled and others.

Among other things, the budget plan would cut welfare payments 5.8 percent — or $1.7 billion — and reduce aid to cities and counties by $1.3 billion.

The blueprint also would provide schools with roughly the same amount of money this year as they had last year. It would not provide extra money for an estimated enrollment increase of 200,000 students.

It would also allow school budgets to be cut in future years, even though voters in 1988 approved a ballot initiative to protect school funding.

State schools chief Bill Honig said the education provision amounts to an immediate $1 billion cut because of burgeoning enrollment.

New protective agency to open

Agency set up to better protect children

The ASSOCIATED PRESS

AUSTIN — The state's newest agency will open its doors Tuesday with a massive staff, $380 million budget and the goal of better investigating allegations of abuse.

The Texas Department of Protective and Regulatory Service will draw its nearly 5,600 staff from the Texas Department of Human Services and the Texas Department of Mental Health and Mental Retardation.

A federal court pact mandated the Legislature create the agency to better protect children, the elderly and disabled people. The mandate came in the settlement of a long-running lawsuit over the state's care of the mentally retarded.

The agency is intended to bring more impartiality to abuse investigations and more vigor to services designed to protect vulnerable people.

"If we can do anything to prevent or cut down on the amount of abuse that is occurring to children, elderly, disabled and other vulnerable Texans... I will consider that a great accomplishment," said

Camille Miller, PRS' interim executive director. "I won't consider it a success until we have significantly made an impact."

Miller and the agency's six-member governing board have been working in the wings, even though PRS does not officially open until Tuesday.

Last week they spent $1 million in unused DHS money to buy computers and software for abuse investigators. Several caseworker and direct supervisor positions were frozen so the agency can decide whether all jobs need to be refilled. And abuse investigators in MHMR institutions have moved into separate offices.

"We intend to be a pressing agency..." Miller said. "We (have) that optimistic attitude that we are the ones who push to get things done."

Miller, 44, was the former director of policy and research for the past two Texas lieutenant governors, Bob Bullock and Bill Hobby. She was hired Aug. 7 at an annual salary of $82,500.

Medical examiners say public unprotected

The ASSOCIATED PRESS
HOUSTON — Three members of the Texas State Board of Medical Examiners say the public is not being protected from troubled doctors, a newspaper reported.
 Board members Dr. Richard Stasney, Cindy Jenkins and Barbara June Coe place the blame on the board itself, which acts as judge, jury, stand-in parent and absolver for doctors whose personal and medical practices get them in trouble, the Houston Chronicle reported Sunday in a copyright story.
 The board consists of nine medical doctors, three doctors of osteopathy and three members of the general public. It decides who will be licensed in Texas and who will lose those licenses.

 Ms. Jenkins said if she were to rewrite the law that governs medical practice in the state, she would remove from its preamble the statement: "The current system relating to licensing physicians and surgeons is basically a sound, workable system and should be continued."
 "It should not be part of the act at this time," she said. "It's not true."
 A Chronicle survey of board orders, minutes of committee meetings and board statistics issued publicly during the past four years shows:

 • At least seven convicted felons who came before the board or one of its committees were allowed to practice medicine with some restrictions.
 • At least 19 physicians were convicted of felonies or plea bargained to felony charges and, according to board records, are practicing medicine in Texas at this time.
 • Doctors who practice substandard care, abuse patients and use drugs and alcohol to excess continue to care for patients, sometimes with no board action and others after receiving little more than a slap on the wrist and a minimal monitoring by a skeleton board staff.

 • Complaints against physicians who have been found to provide substandard care by federal, state and private agencies are routinely dismissed.
 • Fewer than 8 percent of complaints filed actually result in disciplinary actions.
 • Most physicians who are disciplined by the board are placed on probation for five years, during which time they appear at the board office once or twice a year and meet with probation officers no more than once or twice a year.
 Perhaps the most critical issue is the board's lack of consensus about its role.

 "We are not a disciplinary board," said Dr. Milam Pharo, a former board member. "We are actually a regulatory board."
 "Discipline should be in the civil or criminal court. We don't discipline doctors. We are not a penal system. We are a regulatory system."
 But Ms. Jenkins disagrees. "Physician discipline should be about 90 percent of what we do," she said. "We don't regulate. Nowhere in the law does it say what a doctor can or can't do."
 Such differences of opinion might not make much difference if the whole 15-member board made the majority of decisions. But more than 80 percent of board actions arise from agreements hashed out in secret between the doctors in question and one or two board members.

 The results are seldom ideal, and that draws scorn from Les Weisbrod, a Dallas malpractice attorney.
 "Their story is that if we prosecuted them, then the doctors would bring in some slick lawyer and they'd take it to state court, and the whole thing would be reversed. So it's a lot better to just plea bargain with these guys and settle for what we could get."

Fort Worth mayor's son arrested for burglary

The ASSOCIATED PRESS
FORT WORTH — The youngest son of Fort Worth Mayor Kay Granger has been released on bail after his arrest on charges of burglarizing an antique store.
 Brandon Granger, 20, was arrested Sunday after police were called about 6:15 a.m. to Forest Park Antiques. Granger matched the description of the suspect seen breaking into the store, Officer R.M. Lilly said.

 A stolen Persian rug was found in a pickup truck registered to Granger's father, officials said.
 Granger identified himself as the mayor's son and became belligerent when officers asked to see proof, police said.
 Kay Granger was out of town on city business and unavailable for comment Sunday.

Hood growth tests area infrastructure

The ASSOCIATED PRESS
KILLEEN — The gradual relocation of 33,000 troops from Fort Polk, La., to Fort Hood is a boon for Bell County, but officials say the area's infrastructure is struggling to keep up.
 About 12,000 of the 5th Infantry Division troops being moved under the Base Realignment and Closure Act of 1991 are scheduled to begin moving to Texas this week.
 "Right now the concern is, 'Where are we going to put all of the people?'" said Bill Doss of the Killeen Building Department.
 Doss said his office is running at "110 percent of capacity," issuing permits for new construction sparked by the relocation.
 Killeen, which now has 68,000 residents, is expected to receive the largest largest share of 33,000 soldiers and their families arriving over the next year. Copperas Cove, Harker Heights and Belton also are preparing for growth.

 Construction permits worth $45 million were issued from January through July in Killeen, compared with $9 million during the same period last year.
 "We all welcome it because this time last year, with Desert Storm and the deactivation of the 2nd Armored Division here, there were literally hundreds and hundreds of vacant houses and businesses," Doss said. "It's either hamburger or steak here."
 Killeen schools, which now have 24,000 students, are expected to get 3,500 more from Fort Polk. That's not good news for a district already operating at capacity.
 "I have teachers with no rooms," said East Ward Elementary School principal Betty Robinson, who added that six temporary classrooms are being put up on her campus. "As soon as they're done, the children will move in."

 Ward Hughling, a Killeen Independent School District planner, said construction on new facilities could not begin until the Pentagon approved the Fort Polk relocation on July 21.
 Now that the move is finalized, a $29 million bond election is scheduled for Sept. 26 for two new secondary schools and two new elementary schools.
 "With the bond issue, we are providing about half of the classrooms that will be needed in the next five years," said school board President Gordon Adams. "If the bond issue were to fail, it will be a very serious situation."

Killeen Mayor Raul Villaronga said the proposed city budget includes 17 new police officers, six new paramedics and two additional city staffers.
 "I'd say we're at the front end of a boom and I hope it never stops," Villaronga said. "We hope economic development will come alongside and we continue to grow."
 The state is even getting into the act, planning road expansions in the area.
 Some officials are concerned that the Army could later relocate Fort Hood troops, leaving Killeen with a surplus of homes, schools and businesses.
 "There's always that fear in the back of anyone's mind who's been here that troops will be moved out. We have seen it," Doss said.

Names in the news

The ASSOCIATED PRESS
WILBERFORCE, Ohio — Bill Cosby says any dummy can get a college degree. The point is to learn something along the way.
 "You are not here just to get a passing grade," the comedian told Central State University students Sunday. "You are here to get an education. You are not here to get by."
 Cosby said some of the "biggest dummies in the world have gotten through college."
 "We need you," he said. "But we don't need people who just want to pass."
 Cosby was honored for his efforts for education and his gifts to the university, including more than $400,000 for scholarships and $235,000 for a running track.

JANESVILLE, Wis. — Geraldo Rivera won't be prosecuted for punching a heckler while filming a Ku Klux Klan rally.
 District Attorney Perry Folts said Sunday that a tape of the incident showed that the talk show host acted in self-defense.
 "My wife and I were overjoyed, tremendously relieved," Rivera said. "It was one less obstacle. With this behind us, we can now both move on."
 Police arrested Rivera Aug. 16 after a scuffle during a KKK rally he was taping for an upcoming show.
 John R. McLaughlin, 42, of Champaign, Ill., the other man involved in the confrontation, will be prosecuted on a disorderly conduct charge, Folts said.

LOS ANGELES — Susan Sarandon, who plays a cocaine dealer in "Light Sleeper," says she likes the idea of a movie about drugs that doesn't focus on minorities.
 In "Light Sleeper," a thriller co-starring Willem Dafoe, Miss Sarandon's character operates a home-delivery drug operation.
 "Usually in the films and the news, drugs are always connected with people of color. You never see rich, white, upwardly mobile people. In this movie, that's who I, the drug queen, sell to," she said.
 Sarandon's other films include "Bull Durham" and "Thelma & Louise."

NEW YORK — Wayne Newton says his big mistake was trusting the wrong people.
 "And if that is my major crime in life, then I accept that," the Las Vegas headliner said in the latest People magazine.
 Newton, 50, filed for bankruptcy protection this month, citing debts of $20 million.
 Newton makes millions, but some of his investments — such as those in Indian gambling parlors — have run into trouble.
 He said former business managers failed to keep his bills paid and keep him informed.
 Newton said his spirits are high as he works out a repayment plan.

Living standards better through most of world

The ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Life is getting better in most of the world — but slowly, not everywhere and not in every way.

World Bank statistics show, for example, that the income of the average Japanese in 1990 was the equivalent of $25,430, up from only $900 in the 1960s. The United States and Western Europe have recorded less spectacular gains.

On the other hand, incomes in the Third World have been rising on average by about 3 percent a year, yet, in some countries, incomes still average less than $1 a day.

The bank, in its recently published "Social Indicators of Development 1991-2," reported incomes have been declining steadily since 1965 in at least 17 out of 38 African countries. The average in Zaire 15 to 20 years ago was $400 a year. The most recent estimate: $220.

Nigerians, who live in Africa's most populous country, also earned an average $400 in the 1970s. More recently the figure was $290, despite the country's oil wealth.

Incomes have declined in seven of 22 Western Hemisphere countries. Although Buenos Aires and Caracas look prosperous to the visitor, when rising prices are taken into account their citizens' incomes have gone down.

Some comparatively poor countries, including China, Paraguay and Botswana, have increased their earnings faster than industrial countries.

One cause of low incomes may be military spending, which the bank and its sister organization, the International Monetary Fund, are trying to curb.

In a "Human Development Report" published earlier this year, the United Nations found that Third World countries have been increasing spending on soldiers and weapons — from 4.2 percent of national earnings in 1960 to 4.6 percent in 1989.

Despite the cold war, industrial countries decreased military spending over that period, to 4.9 percent from 6.3 percent.

In the industrial countries, the U.N. reported, nearly one of every two people have a television — and one in every 500 is in jail.

And in the Third World, "The mortality rate of young children has been halved in the last 30 years" but "180 million young children are still malnourished."

Money isn't everything when it comes to the quality of life.

Not only do the Japanese earn more, they survive longer to enjoy it. The average baby girl can expect to live until almost 82 and the average boy until almost 79. That is nearly nine years longer than the life expectancy of babies born there a quarter century ago.

Fighting delays U.N. aid convoy

The ASSOCIATED PRESS

SARAJEVO, Bosnia-Herzegovina — U.N. officials say heavy fighting in Gorazde has forced them to delay sending an aid convoy to the eastern Bosnian city, where Serbs are said to have lifted a five-month siege.

Downtown Sarajevo, by contrast, was relatively calm today for the first time in several days.

In Geneva, the U.N. Human Rights Commission's special envoy to former Yugoslavia submitted a damning report that blamed Serb forces for the worst human rights violations in Bosnia.

The report, by former Polish Prime Minister Tadeusz Mazowiecki, urged the creation of an international commission to investigate war crimes.

It said there were signs the brutal practice of ethnic cleansing was about to spread to other parts of former Yugoslavia.

In Sarajevo, officials said at least six people were killed and 71 wounded in overnight fighting on the city's outskirts.

On Sunday, a howitzer shell crashed into a crowded marketplace, killing at least 15 people and wounding dozens. It was the deadliest single attack in the Serb siege of Sarajevo since May 28, when mortar rounds killed at least 20 people in a bread line and wounded 100.

At that time, Bosnian Muslims withdrew from peace talks and the United Nations imposed trade sanctions on Serbia. Serbia is accused of supporting Bosnian Serb fighters, who took up arms six months ago when Bosnia's majority Muslims and Croats voted for independence from Serb-dominated Yugoslavia.

Bosnian President Alija Izetbegovic, in an interview today with The Associated Press, threatened to boycott peace talks that are to begin Thursday in Geneva if the "murderous assault on the Bosnian people in Sarajevo does not cease."

"How is it possible to negotiate with people like this?" he asked. "They are killers. They don't want peace, they want blood."

The latest deaths soured hopes that agreements reached last week in London at an international peace conference would stop the fighting.

In Gorazde, 40 miles southeast of Sarajevo, an "extremely dangerous" and confusing situation reigned, said Fred Eckhard, the U.N. spokesman in Sarajevo.

He had planned to visit Gorazde today with a 14-truck convoy of the U.N. High Commissioner for Refugees. But because of pitched battles there, the relief supplies might not set off for Gorazde until Wednesday, Eckhard said Sunday.

Gorazde, the lone government holdout against Serb insurgents in eastern Bosnia, has been an emotional symbol of the war. The peacetime population of 30,000 has swelled to 70,000 — many of the newcomers Muslims evicted from their homes by Serb forces.

What exactly was going on in Gorazde remained unclear.

Sarajevo radio said government troops had entered the city, lending some credence to Serb claims Saturday that the Serbs were pulling back men and artillery. But the report also said the loyalists fought their way in and "liberated" 80 percent of the city.

The leader of Bosnian Serbs, Radovan Karadzic, told AP that government troops, mostly Muslims, had exploited his soldiers' retreat to attack Serbs.

Karadzic's pledge to pull back from Gorazde appeared intended to counter suggestions that Bosnia's Serb leaders lack the will or ability to control local militias and honor the London accord.

Mazowiecki's report said rule of law had completely broken down in Bosnia and parts of Croatia. It warned that serious human rights abuses would likely continue after the end of the conflict because of mutual distrust and hatred.

The report acknowledged that all three ethnic groups were guilty of atrocities, but said the Serbs must shoulder most responsibility.

"The importance of the human rights violations suffered by ethnic Serbs in Croatia cannot be underestimated or minimized," it said.

"Nevertheless, the evidence available at this time suggests that the practices which have caused large numbers of Serbs to flee ... cannot be compared to the systematic use of violence against ethnic Croats and Muslims in Bosnia and Herzegovina."

Mazowiecki recommended that U.N. soldiers be given powers to stop abuses and gain access to detention centers.

The 18-page report detailed abuses uncovered during Mazowiecki's recent visit to former Yugoslavia. His evidence may be used in future war crimes trials.

He cited allegations about the systematic execution of prisoners in a northeast Bosnian area.

New home sales drop in July

The ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Sales of new homes fell in July for the fourth time this year, despite the lowest mortgage rates in 19 years, the government said today.

New homes were sold at a seasonally adjusted annual rate of 563,000 last month, down from 578,000 the month before, the departments of Commerce and Housing and Urban Development said.

It was the steepest drop in four months. Sharp declines in the Northeast and South were only partly offset by sales gains in the Midwest and West.

Meanwhile, the median price of new homes recorded its sharpest drop in nearly 11 years.

In advance, economists expected falling mortgage rates would produce a sales increase of between 1 percent and 2 percent. Mortgage rates started declining at the start of the month after the Federal Reserve eased monetary policy. By the end of the month they were near 8 percent, nearly a half point lower than when the month began and the lowest since 1973.

Rates continued to fall in August, edging below 8 percent before jumping back above the 8 percent level in reaction to the plunging value of the dollar.

Lower rates apparently did stimulate a gain in sales of existing homes in July. They were estimated by the National Association of Realtors to have risen 3.9 percent.

The July drop in new home sales followed a revised 5.3 percent gain in June, not as strong as the 7.9 percent increase estimated a month ago. Sales had risen slightly in May and fallen in February, March and April.

Regionally, new home sales fell 16.9 percent in the Northeast to a seasonally adjusted annual rate of 64,000. They dropped 10.1 percent in the South to a rate of 231,000. Sales rose 11 percent in the Midwest to a rate of 111,000. They were up 9 percent in the West to 158,000.

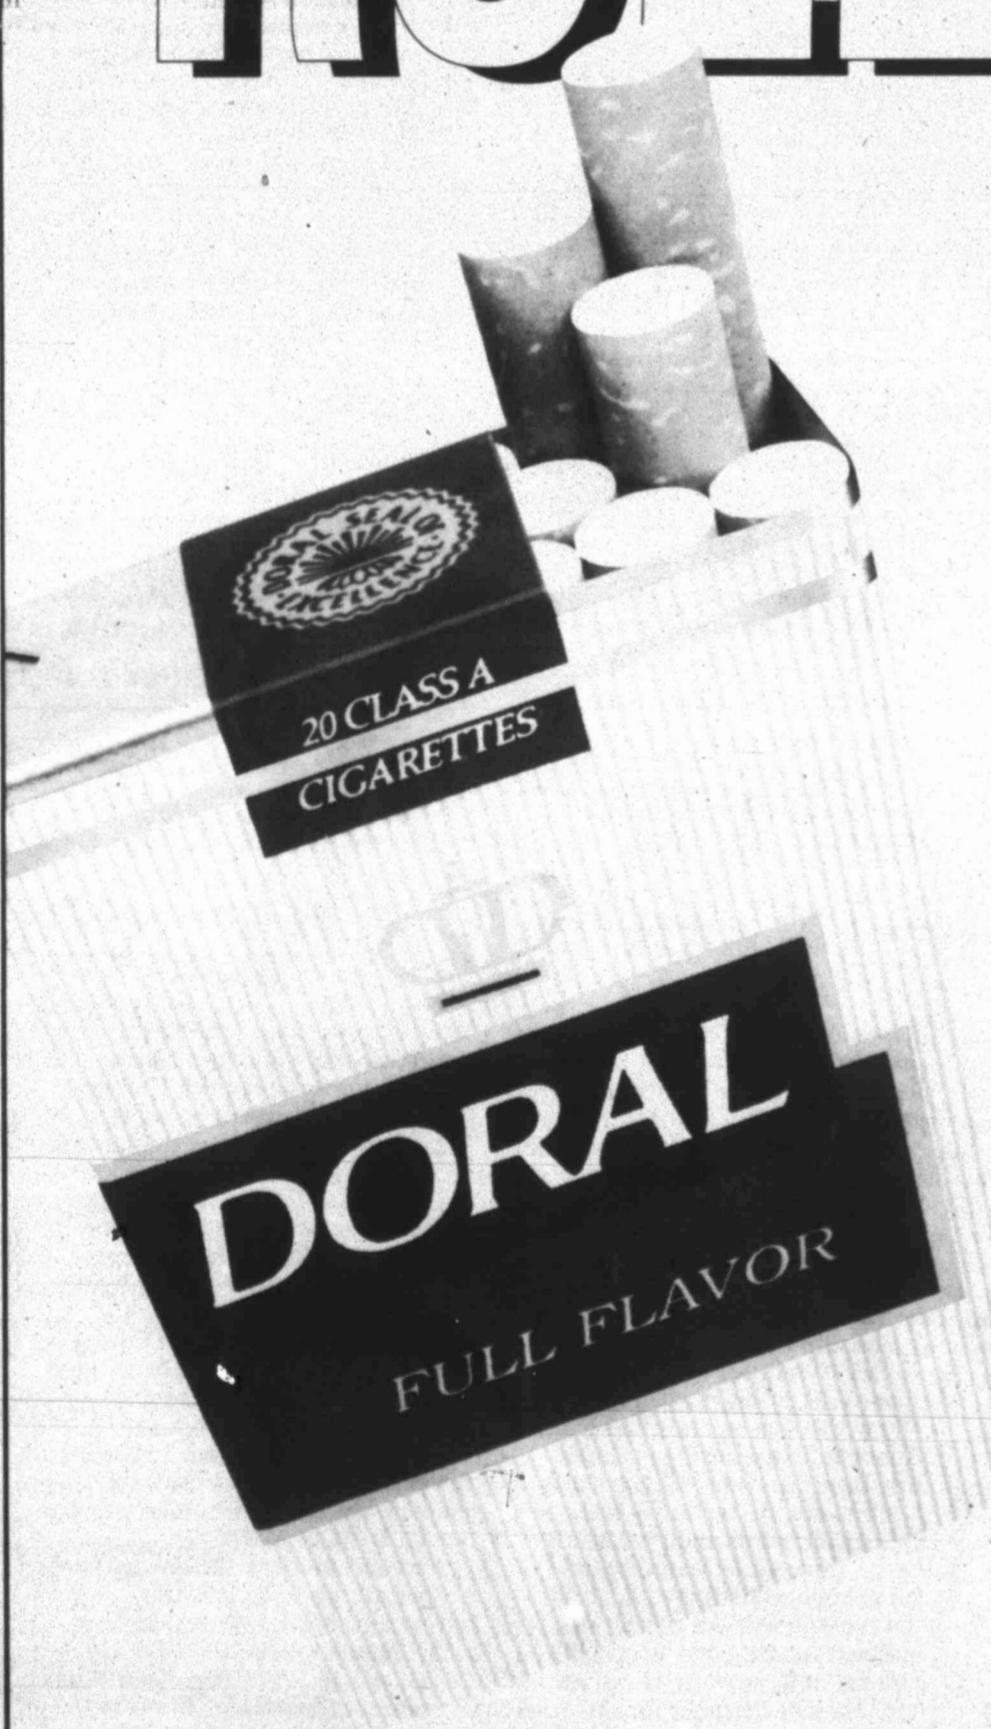

The median price of a new home, meaning half the homes sold for more and half for less, was $115,000 in July, down from $124,900 in June, a 7.9 percent decline. It was the sharpest decline since September 1981.

Helping others

Big Spring residents got together Saturday to help others.

Big Spring Correctional Center volunteers gathered goods for transport to the Federal Bureau of Prisons' Miami Correctional Center following Hurricane Andrew.

Community residents got together to help residents clear up their neighborhood in the Jones Valley area.

County employees started clearing away a jungle-type area adjacent to Lakeview School to make the grounds and neighborhood safer for children and adults alike.

In all instances these were cases of people helping people. Of people making a difference. Of trying to make our community a better place to live, work and raise a family.

With your continued commitment, it will work. In Big Spring. Where the West is Best.

Hispanic Heritage celebration slated

In celebration of Hispanic Heritage Month, Sept. 15-Oct. 15, the Herald will publish daily articles focusing on Hispanic culture, heritage, interests and achievements. Stories will range from Latin American artists to the high rate of diabetes in the Hispanic community.

I encourage the community to submit suggestions and story ideas.

The month-long endeavor is part of the Herald's commitment to report the news, the achievements and the concerns of all sectors of our community.

Recordatorio Local Diez y seis de Septiembre celebrations are scheduled for weekend prior to Sept. 16.

The League of United Latin American Citizens chapter No. 4495 activities will be downtown on the 300 block of Main St. Sept. 11-13. Tres Amigos Club, north service road of Interstate 20, will celebrate Sept. 11-12.

Both celebrations will have food booths and entertainment. Last year, more than 5,000 people celebrated locally the day commemorating Mexico's declaration of independence from Spain in 1811.

Booths are still available for downtown and at the club. For more information about the LULAC celebration call Marquez and Sons Radio & Television Service at 263-3033 before 5 p.m. and La Favorita radio program at 263-5294 after 5 p.m.

Call 263-5939, 263-6630 or 267-6190 for more information on the Tres Amigo booth availability.

The Consulate of Mexico in Midland invites everyone to their celebration Sept. 15 at 6 p.m.

recognizing the Mexico's declaration of independence. The celebration will be at Centennial Plaza in downtown Midland.

Food will be served to the first 500 people.

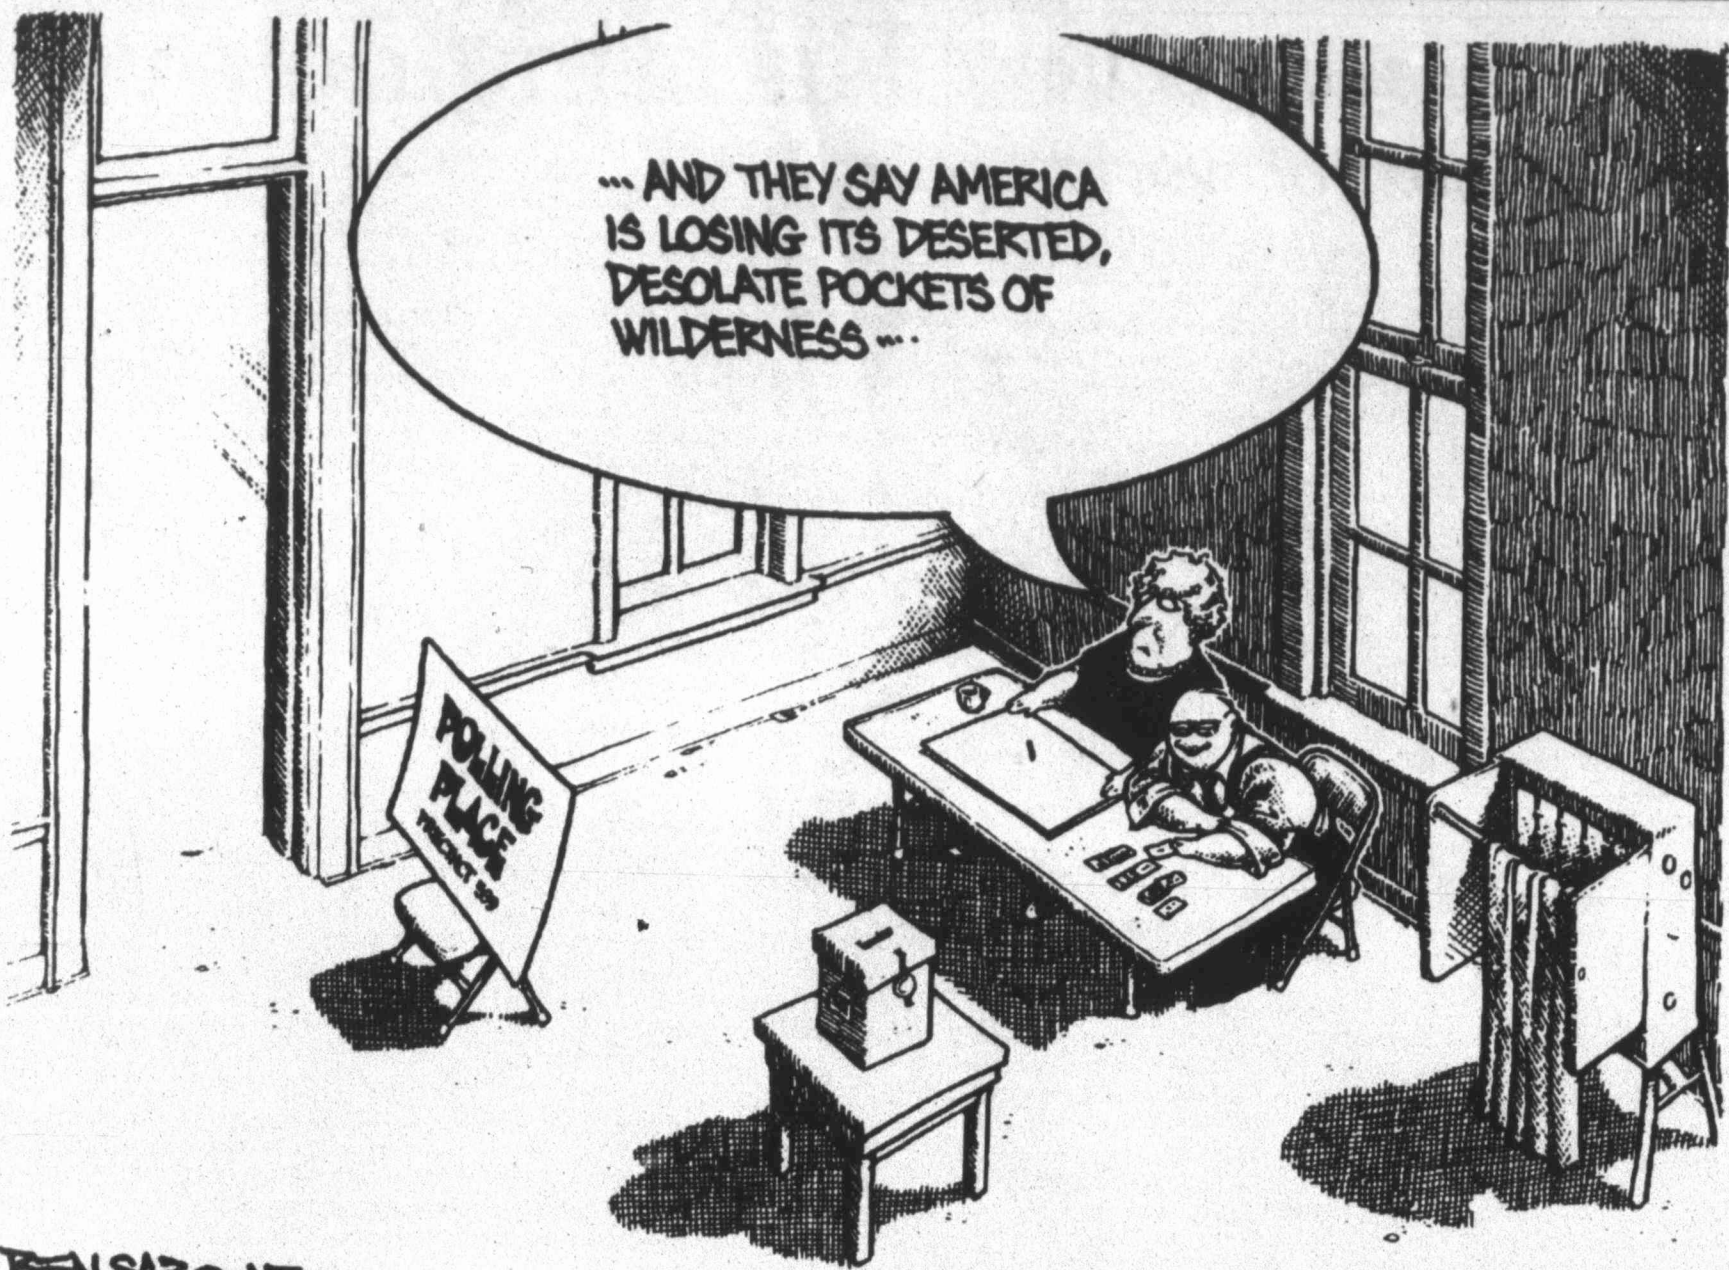

Hispanic Women for Process recently awarded two scholarships to Big Spring High School graduates who will be attending Howard College. Cynthia Resendez and Rocky Ortega each received $300 - $150 each semester.

Resendez is majoring in physical therapy and plans to transfer to the University of Texas at San Antonio. Ortega is majoring in alcohol and drug abuse counselor and plans to attend San Angelo State University or Southwest Texas University at San Marcos. He plans to work with youth.

The HWP helped the Chicano Golf Association raise $950.50 for United Way with a benefit golf tournament Aug. 16.

English as a Second Language class late registration will continue until Sept. 2 at Howard College. Classes are offered as a Developmental Studies credit course or as an Adult Basic Education non-credit course.

'Media elite' — and Longridge Court

EDITOR'S NOTE: This is the final of four Bob Greene columns about delivering newspapers in the middle of the night.

The "media elite" — that's the term some politicians keep tossing around in an effort to persuade the public that there's a huge gap between the people who report the news, and the people who read or watch those reports.

I was thinking about the media elite at 4:36 a.m. on Cedarbrook Road in Naperville, Ill. There was a rabbit on the road in front of our car. Jennifer Foss, who was driving, slammed on her brakes to avoid hitting the rabbit. She was in time; the rabbit, startled, dashed onto a front lawn. In the back seat of the car, the rolled-up Chicago Tribunes we had yet to deliver shifted, and some fell onto the floor.

"A lot of rabbits are out at this time of the morning," Foss said.

I was in the midst of my night tossing papers in Naperville. Foss, a college student who delivers papers part-time, drops 282 Tribunes off at 282 Naperville homes before dawn each morning. She had challenged me — she had said that without people like her, people like me wouldn't have a job. So I was out delivering the morning paper with her, and the "media elite" tag — the insult directed at journalists by the politicians — stuck in my mind as the rabbit disappeared.

This date

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS
Today is Monday, Aug. 31, the 244th day of 1992. There are 122 days left in the year.

Bob Greene

There's some truth in the insult. All of us who report and edit and broadcast the news for a living give lip service to the idea that it's an honor being allowed into our readers' and viewers' homes, but the fact is, too few journalists get a look at where their words are going as close-up as the look the newspaper delivers get every morning. "The readers" are no more a monolithic group than "the media"; both are catch-all phrases that don't tell you much of anything.

A man was standing in front of his house on Hobson Oaks. "He takes early walks," Foss said. So, instead of tossing the paper, we pulled up and I reached out the window and handed him the morning edition.

"Thanks," he said, smiling. "I appreciate it."

"I appreciate it, too," I said.

And I do. It's such a fragile bond, this link between those of us who write and edit the newspaper and those of you who buy it. No matter the name of the paper or the town where it's published, at times it does seem that a chasm exists between the lives of the people who report the news and the lives of the people who read it. In the Naperville newspaper warehouse, Jennifer Foss had read the feature section of the paper to pass the time. She read it upside down — that's how the sections are laid out on her table before she bags them.

"Do you know Ann Landers?" she said, looking at the Landers column.

"I do," I said. Foss seemed surprised.

"How about Brenda Herrmann?" she said, looking at another byline in the paper.

"Yes, I know her," I said.

"What about James?" she said.

"Which James is that?" I said.

"James Warren," she said, turning the byline rightside up.

"I've known him for a long time," I said.

"So you must all sort of work in the same area of the newspaper building?" she said.

Yes, most of us do. Just like she and her newspaper-delivering colleagues work in the same area of that warehouse in Naperville.

That's the trick to getting past the "media elite" thing, right there — to understand that there is no media elite, certainly not out here in the Midwest, and probably not anywhere. Media elite? Any journalist with any sense of perspective would tell you that he and his colleagues are really just a bunch of goofballs who write stuff. It's when you start believing otherwise that you're in trouble.

Still, it might not be a bad idea for reporters and editors, wherever they live, to deliver the morning paper once in a while, just to take a look at the houses where their words end up. On Bristol Court, a house lit up suddenly. "It took me a while to get used to that," Foss said. "The lights come on automatically when a motion sets off a detector." On Olesen Drive a work crew fixed some power lines. On Kenilworth Circle you could see the sun coming up behind the houses.

In the warehouse, I had noticed on a chart that Foss had one new customer this morning: a family on Longridge Court. For whatever reason, the family had decided to have the paper delivered every day.

The house on Longridge Court was dark as we drove up; a Dodge Ram pickup truck was parked in the driveway. I pulled a copy of the paper out of its blue plastic wrapper, and across the top of the front page I wrote the family in the house a short note thanking them for deciding to read us, and hoping that they would enjoy our work every day. I signed the note, slipped the newspaper back inside the wrapper, got out of the car, and put the paper on the mat in front of their door.

Then I got back into Jennifer Foss' car. We had a lot of papers left to deliver.

Are taxpayers being double-taxed by city, county?

By JOHN R. COFFEE
City Council Member

Guest column

For several years many people have asked Howard County to contribute more of the County's tax dollars to the city of Big Spring, the standard slogan to make such a plea being "the city is in the county and the county is in the city," meaning simply, city folks pay county taxes too. The Mayor of Big Spring added another battle cry during the last council meeting when he said the citizens of Big Spring are subject to "double taxation."

Let us try to understand the role that city and county play in our community and see if we are being subject to "double taxation." Much is being said without proper understanding of the role each agency serves in our community. The real area of lack of understanding is how much the citizens of Big Spring pay to each agency and what for.

First, it should be understood that county government is a subdivision of the State of Texas. It receives its power from the State through the Constitution of the State of Texas and statutes enacted by the legislature. The county can do nothing other than those things provided by constitution and statutory enactment. It must provide those services mandated by the constitution and statutes, such as providing a county and district court system, a sheriff's department, the county clerk's office for filing important documents, the county tax assessor's office and other services which are mandated by the constitution. All fees charged for all services, for example, filing fees in the county clerk's office are set by law and cannot be raised or lowered. Furthermore, the library is the only department that Howard County could abolish, because a library is not a mandatory service as established by law.

Secondly, it should be understood that the City of Big Spring draws its power from the Home Rule Amendment established by the legislature. Under the Home Rule Charter, the City of Big Spring can do just about anything it wants to do. It can engage in almost any enterprise from selling water and hauling trash to furnishing electricity and other sources of energy. It can charge whatever fees it sees fit for those services. It enacts its own laws through ordinances with the only limitation being that those laws not be in conflict with the constitution and statutes of the State of Texas.

Now, with the above bare-bones outline, maybe we can better understand these two governing bodies and their functions. When the citizens of Big Spring pay their taxes to Howard County they are paying for state-mandated services mentioned above, none of which is being duplicated by the City of Big Spring with the possible exception of police protection. We can abolish the police department but not the constitutionally established sheriff's office. When we pay our taxes to the City of Big Spring we are not paying for any services the county is providing. I cannot understand where the mayor gets the idea of "double taxation." I am sure that he, as well as the rest of us in Big Spring, pay taxes to the Howard College and the Big Spring Independent School District. Certainly no one claims double taxation between the city and the school district or between the city and the college. Of course not. There is no duplication of services, therefore no "double taxation."

We also need to understand the amount of taxes that the city and county take from the citizens of Big Spring with the above understanding of how the money is used. In the 1991-92 budget year which ends September 30, 1992, Howard County set the tax rate at approximately .36 per $100 evaluation. This would raise $4,242,684.

Based on the tax evaluation of the property in the city and allowing for delinquencies, the county will collect $967,094 from the citizens of Big Spring. That is 23% of the total tax income of the county.

The remaining 77% comes from outside the city limits. 69% of the county's budget comes from taxes and the rest from fees that cannot be raised by the county.

How did the county spend our money? Well, for one thing it spent $189,935 in contributions to other agencies such as the Dora Roberts Rehabilitation Center, Heritage Museum, Senior Citizens Center, etc. So far the county has spent $321,000 on indigent health care. The county is mandated to set aside and budget 10% of its tax income without deductions for indigent health care, of which almost 100% are city residents. $242,983 will be spent for the county library of which more than 85% of those using the library are citizens of Big Spring. The city contributes nothing to indigent health care or the library. Just these three items total $753,918 which is 76% of what the citizens of Big Spring paid the county in taxes.

Of course, our city citizens received benefits from the court system and the sheriff's office, not to mention the work that the road and bridge department has given to the city in seal coating our streets and providing labor and equipment working to improve the city lake, golf course, tearing down the old Jet Theater and other condemned buildings. We get our money's worth and it is not "double taxation."

The reason I write these things at this time is that I am concerned. I am concerned that the relations between the city and county are becoming strained. The City of Big Spring and Howard County have improved relations over the past several years. There are others beside myself that see these relations deteriorating. Several years ago the city, school district, college and Forsan School District entered into a joint agreement to allow the county to collect all taxes. Before this agreement there was duplication and "double taxation" in regard to the cost of collection. Since this agreement the savings in postage alone has been tremendous. There are other areas that need to be explored to save our citizens money. Please, let's not wipe out all our gains.

Why has this matter come up at this time? Because the Senior Citizens Center asked the city to spend $18,000 to repair worn out plumbing, replace worn out rugs and paint a building that hasn't been painted for many years. This building belongs to the city. The city council says let the county do it since they have a contract that requires that the county to maintain the building. The plumbing, like the rug and paint, was worn out long before the county signed a contract. That contract runs out this December.

The county has paid $73,320 in cash since 1986 in addition to taking over the administrative expenses from the city only because the city neglected its obligation. The city has paid nothing in this time period. The county even pays the insurance on the building! The city can spend $143,000 on the Convention Center but not $18,000 to repair a deteriorating building owned by the city. Again I say I am embarrassed if this is the way our city council acts in these types of situations. Maintain the golf course and the convention center, but not the senior citizens center used by those who have paid taxes longer than most of us!

EDITOR'S NOTE: As city and county officials are faced with increased financial pressures, more and more discussion is held regarding which entity pays its fair share and which doesn't. John R. Coffee has served as County Judge of Howard County and currently is a member of the Big Spring City Council and, as such, a working knowledge of both sides of the situation. This guest column affords our readers an explanation of the services of both city and county government.

One down, two to go: Novacek ends holdout

The ASSOCIATED PRESS

IRVING — The Dallas Cowboys prepared for today's roster cut by trimming the number of holdout starters.

Pro Bowl tight end Jay Novacek signed a contract Sunday as the Cowboys scrambled to plug a porous lineup one week before opening the season against the defending Super Bowl champion Washington Redskins.

"I think it takes a little bit of the worry off," coach Jimmy Johnson said. "But I wish we'd have had him in a long time ago."

Novacek signed a three-year deal for a reported $2.7 million. The Cowboys will ask for an exemption for Novacek today as they cut the roster to 47 players.

"We'll start working him in practice (today) and start working him into the lineup," Johnson said. "Without question I think he can contribute to the Washington ballgame."

Novacek said he'd be ready to contribute when the Redskins visit Texas Stadium next Monday night.

"I've been practicing every day," he said. "Physically, I haven't been here, but mentally I've caught a ton of balls."

"I've been practicing with Neil Lomax out in Phoenix when he's been around, and I've been working out. I'm in great shape."

The Cowboys' other Pro Bowl

Jay Novacek receiver, Michael Irvin, and starting center Mark Stepnoski remained holdouts.

"I can report no progress at all as far as Step and as far as Michael are concerned," Cowboys owner Jerry Jones said.

Irvin has dropped his proposal from four years and $8 million to three years and less than $6 million. But Dallas hasn't budged from its three-year, $3 million offer.

Stepnoski was offered $1.8 million for three years, a deal that mirrors that of the team's highest-paid offensive lineman, Nate Newton.

But Stepnoski's agent, Ralph Cindrich, said Newton's contract began in 1991, meaning Dallas' offer is a year behind in terms of matching Newton's deal.

Cindrich has floated a one-year, $750,000 proposal and a trade request, both of which Dallas has rejected.

The Cowboys on Sunday also released kicker Brad Daluiso, a Plan B free agent from Buffalo, leaving Lin Elliott, a rookie free agent from Texas Tech as the lone placekicker on the roster.

"I felt that Elliott showed the consistency that we were looking for, and then he showed the leg strength," Johnson said.

Daluiso joined the Cowboys this summer with the reputation of having one of the league's strongest legs, but he missed a 39-yard field goal and an extra point in a 17-16 exhibition loss to Houston.

Elliott, a Dallas native, made both his field goal attempts in a 20-13 loss to the Bears Friday night and boomed four kickoffs deep into the end zone, three for touchdowns.

Defensive tackle Tony Casillas (sprained knee) and running back Curvin Richards (lacerated kidney) are the only Cowboys ruled out for the season opener.

Johnson said Novacek's appearance Sunday gave the Cowboys a big morale boost.

"Jay came out to practice when he got here to the complex," Johnson said, "and without question it added a big lift to all the players when they saw Jay walking on the field."

Braves acquire reliever Reardon

The ASSOCIATED PRESS

ATLANTA — Hoping to repeat as National League champions, the Atlanta Braves repeated the strategy that helped them to victory in 1991 — getting a quality reliever to shore up a shaky bullpen.

Jeff Reardon, the majors' career saves leader with 354, was acquired from Boston for a pair of minor leaguers Sunday.

Reardon goes from a club battling for last place to a team five games ahead of second-place Cincinnati in the NL West.

Relief ace Alejandro Pena, who was nearly unhittable after the Braves acquired him from the New York Mets last August, went on the disabled list Aug. 21 with pain in his right elbow.

Pena leads the Braves with 15 saves. He was 2-0 with 11 saves in 11 chances as Atlanta nosed out the Los Angeles Dodgers for the NL West crown last season.

"We were after Reardon," Braves general manager John Schuerholz said Sunday night. "We were talking to other clubs as well if we couldn't get Reardon. We were attempting to get a quality reliever and Jeff is certainly that."

"He's a quality guy with 27 saves that comes to a club with good defense," Schuerholz said.

In return, Atlanta will send Boston pitcher Nate Minchey, a right hander who is 13-6 with a 2.38 ERA for Greenville of the Double-A Southern League; and outfielder Sean Ross, hitting .246 with 10 homers and 46 RBI in 104 games at Richmond of the Triple-A International League.

Reardon, who passed Hall-of-Famer Rollie Fingers this year to take over the career saves lead, had 27 saves in 35 chances for Boston this season. He was 2-2 with a 4.25 ERA in 46 appearances.

"I'm very happy about going to Atlanta. It's a good deal for me. I pick up 18 games in the standings," Reardon said. "No, I wasn't surprised. They showed no interest in signing me here. I didn't pitch very well, though I wouldn't say they misused me. I'm sure Atlanta will use me a lot."

The trade just beat the deadline for postseason eligibility. Players must be with a team on Aug. 31 to be in the playoffs and World Series.

"We've got another day," Schuerholz said when asked about dipping once again into the Braves' full farm system to help with the stretch run. "We're keeping our ear to the ground to see what we can create."

Reardon, who's been with Boston since 1990, gave up 53 hits and 20 earned runs in 42 1-3 innings, with six homers, just seven walks and 32 strikeouts. But opposing teams are hitting .308 against him.

"I'm not worried about pitching in pressure, I've done it before," he said. "It was a dream getting to pitch for the Red Sox. Atlanta was the other team interested in signing me (in 1990), and I'm glad they didn't forget about me."

Reardon is eligible for free agency following the season. He has spent his 14 major league seasons with the New York Mets, Montreal Expos, Minnesota Twins and Boston.

Atlanta Braves' Dave Justice is out at the plate in a game against the St. Louis Cardinals earlier this season. The Braves acquired relief pitcher Jeff Reardon from the Boston Red Sox Sunday to help with their stretch-run towards the playoffs.

Rangers' Gonzalez getting closer in home run race

The ASSOCIATED PRESS

ARLINGTON (AP) — Not since 1970 has a 22-year-old power hitter had this big of a bash in the major leagues.

Juan Gonzalez hit his 37th home run of the year Sunday, his third of the weekend, leading the Texas Rangers to a 10-4 victory over the Chicago White Sox.

Gonzalez became just the 10th player in major league history to hit 35 home runs in a season before his 23rd birthday.

The last to do it was Cincinnati's Johnny Bench, who hit 45 homers in 1970 at age 22. The last American Leaguer to do it was Baltimore's Boog Powell, who hit 39 in 1964.

Juan Gonzalez is threatening to become the major leagues' home run champion by taking advantage of a penchant for hitting long balls in bunches. He already has set a club record with 11 homers in August.

"I don't worry about records. I just try to do my job, swing the bat and help my team win," Gonzalez said.

Gonzalez already owns the club record for homers in a season, and he is two shy of the major-league home run lead of Oakland's Mark McGwire, who is on the disabled list with a strained rib-cage muscle.

So, Gonzalez has a shot at leading the majors in homers in just his second full season.

"He just touches it and hits it hard like some guys hit it with their regular swing," Rangers hitting coach Tom Robson said. "He's got tremendous power."

Gonzalez doesn't possess the muscular build of most power hitters. His is more of a basketball player's body. He is tall and lanky, with long legs and dangling arms. The muscles are there, but they don't overpower his sleek body.

"That's natural strength," manager Toby Harrah said. "He didn't get that body from weightlifting. I would hate to see him touch a weight."

Gonzalez still has the youthful tendency to chase curves in the dirt and flail at high fastballs, but he's learning.

He hit a 450-foot shot in Baltimore, the longest so far at Camden Yards, and his 444-foot blast against Detroit is the longest this year at Arlington Stadium.

Robson said Gonzalez doesn't get his power from brute force, "it's because his body is so fluid. His mechanics and leverage are outstanding."

Robson said Gonzalez generates power with a vicious snapping rotation of the body. The front leg kicks, then plants firm and begins the rotation, setting off a chain reaction that spreads upward through the body, first through the hips, then the chest and finally the arms being pulled through with tremendous torque, setting off a violent reaction when the bat meets the ball.

"It's not a force, it's a whip," Robson said. "Even when he misses, he can hit the ball out. When he gets it just perfect, that's when you see those tremendous home runs."

Sports Briefs

Landry still critical of Jones

DALLAS — Tom Landry's Ring of Honor has less to do with his own firing than with Tex Schramm's, said the former coach who was fired four years ago.

"I got out easy. I got out when it happened. Tex didn't. He had to live with them," Landry told The Dallas Morning News.

Landry, who coached the Cowboys for 29 years and has two Super Bowl titles among his 270 victories, was fired on Feb. 25, 1989, when Jones bought the franchise and hired Jimmy Johnson as coach.

Schramm continued as the Cowboys' president and general manager for nearly two months after Jones bought the team from Bum Bright. His role with the new regime forced him to participate in some of the sweeping changes the team underwent. He was present when Jones informed Landry he had been fired.

"I think probably the way Tex was handled hurt me more than anybody," Landry said. "When I saw Tex at the press conference, standing back in the corner, that bothered me as much as anything. It's just because (owner Jerry Jones) could have been more gracious."

Landry said Jones mishandled his removal and that the two have not had a direct conversation since. Landry said he has avoided Texas Stadium since his departure and ritually ignores the annual letters from team management asking him to reconsider his position on the Ring of Honor.

Jones has long said he'd like to induct the franchise-building trio of Landry, Schramm and the late Clint Murchison into the club's Ring of Honor.

Bob Lilly, Don Meredith, Don Perkins, Chuck Howley, Mel Renfro, Roger Staubach and Lee Roy Jordan are the seven former Cowboys whose names are already posted at the stadium.

Klinger signs with Bengals

CINCINNATI — David Klingler, the record-setting quarterback from the University of Houston, signed a four-year contract with the Cincinnati Bengals on Sunday. The contract is believed to be worth about $7 million. The only higher-paid Bengal would be starting quarterback Boomer Esiason, who earns an estimated $3 million per year.

Klingler was the sixth overall pick in the NFL draft. His NCAA records include most touchdown passes in one game (11) and in one season (54).

N.C. State downs Iowa

EAST RUTHERFORD — Steve Videtic kicked a tie-breaking 46-yard field goal with 6:50 remaining and Terry Jordan added a clinching 5-yard touchdown pass as North Carolina State beat Iowa 24-14 Saturday night in the Kickoff Classic.

Jordan, who missed seven games last season with a broken arm, completed 15 of 24 passes for 160 yards and two touchdowns and also rushed for 91 yards.

North Carolina State's victory vaulted the Wolfpack to No. 18 in the first regular-season Associated Press college football poll, while Iowa dropped seven spots to No. 23.

Texas A&M remained No. 7 after defeating Stanford in the Pigskin Classic. Stanford fell three places to No. 20.

Miami, Washington and Notre Dame continued to hold down the first three spots.

Florida State rose to No. 4, Michigan up a notch to No. 5 and Florida fell to No. 6. The next nine spots remained the same, with Texas A&M followed by Penn State, Alabama, Syracuse, Nebraska, Colorado, Clemson, Georgia and Oklahoma.

UCLA is 16th, followed by Ohio State, N.C. State, California, Stanford, Mississippi State, Tennessee, Iowa, Georgia Tech and Virginia, which wasn't ranked in the preseason poll. Brigham Young and Texas dropped out of the Top 25.

Stadler World Series of Golf winner

AKRON — Craig Stadler had a one-stroke victory after a final round 70 to win the $1.4 million World Series of Golf.

It made the 39-year-old Stadler the first double winner since the tournament went to an expanded, 72-hole format 17 years ago. Stadler's previous victory came 10 years ago. He earned $252,000 and finished with a 7-under 273 on the Firestone Country Club course, to hold off late charging Corey Pavin, whose 65 left him one stroke back at 274.

Fred Couples, winner of the Masters and two other titles this year, was another shot back at 275 after a closing 68.

Hadnot to pick alternate school

HOUSTON — Suspended Texas Longhorns running back Butch Hadnot is expected to decide today which of two out-of-state schools he will transfer to.

Hadnot says he has set his sights on Northeastern Oklahoma and Wisconsin Superior. But he's still considering the University of Texas, where he has been ruled academically ineligible.

"Texas is a good school. I just made a mistake. Now, I'm going to learn from it," said Hadnot, who was suspended by Texas coach John Mackovic earlier this month.

"I wish them the best of luck this season. I hope they do well. And I wouldn't bet against my being back there someday."

Hadnot said he expects to play this season at one of the two NAAIA schools, where his academic slate would be wiped clean.

"I've got nothing against Texas," said Hadnot, adding that he has discussed a possible return with Mackovic.

Missing birds no longer mystery

By GARY SHANKS
Staff Writer

Those who have noticed a recent reduction in the numbers and varieties of birds in Big Spring are not alone.

Area bird watchers and others are worried about the increased spraying of pesticides in and around the city, according to bird enthusiast B. B. McCasland.

"Under a situation like this (web-gorm infestation), a variety of organo-phosphate and chlorinated hydrocarbon pesticides are used.

Both have toxic effects on birds," said Texas A&M professor of pathology and director of the Schubert Avian Health Center, David Graham.

Pesticides are the likely cause of a nation-wide decline in bird numbers over the years, McCasland said. McCasland has treated a number of birds from the area that show signs of toxicity.

The real culprit in Big Spring's bird mystery, however, is something totally different, according to Midge Erskine, who operates a bird sanctuary in Midland.

"If people tell you they're not seeing as many birds — they're absolutely right," Erskine said.

All of the area's migratory bird population has moved on — about six weeks ahead of their usual schedule, Erskine said.

Erskine theorized that the unusually mild winter might have induced the migratory birds to nest early. With their young mature enough for the journey, the birds simply left ahead of schedule.

Many of the birds began leaving the area as soon as three weeks ago, said Erskine, who cannot remember another year when the birds left as early as this.

Erskine did say that pesticide use is of great concern. The populations of birds, especially migratory birds, is decreasing steadily across North America, she said.

One reason the increasing numbers of pigeons and grackles are becoming a problem in urban areas, Erskine said, is because their systems are capable of handling many times the amount of pesticide capable of killing less immune birds, such as warblers and kingfishers.

'Northern Exposure' wins six Emmys

The ASSOCIATED PRESS

PASADENA, Calif. — CBS' "Northern Exposure" was named best drama series Sunday, giving the eclectic drama six Emmys at the 44th annual television awards.

Valerie Mahaffey picked up a trophy for her supporting role as the hypochondriac Eve, while writers Andrew Schneider and Diane Frolov were honored for the script "Seoul Mates" in the drama about Alaska life. The series also won three technical Emmys on Saturday.

The production team of Joshua Brand and John Faisley earned a writing Emmy for the pilot of NBC's "I'll Fly Away." The two also produced "Northern Exposure" and together earned 31 nominations for both shows.

Sunday's awards program moved at an inconsistent pace, and some of the presenters even remarked about their jokes falling flat.

The Hallmark Hall of Fame presentation of "Miss Rose White" on NBC was named outstanding made-for-TV movie. The 1940s period piece which detailed the life of Holocaust survivors living in New York, also earned a directing trophy and supporting actress Emmy for Amanda Plummer.

"The Tonight Show Starring Johnny Carson," which ends in the spring after 30 years on the air, was named best variety, music or comedy program.

Bette Midler's witty ode to Carson's retirement earned an Emmy for individual performance in a variety or music program.

ABC's "Roseanne" finally won an Emmy as Laurie Metcalf picked up a trophy for her role as Roseanne's sister.

The three-year snub of Roseanne Arnold's No. 1 comedy prompted Metcalf, up for comedy series supporting actress, to grab the envelope and read for herself. "I had to make sure it really said that," she said.

The supporting actor in a comedy series Emmy went to actor Michael Jeter for his portrayal of Herman Stiles on CBS' "Evening Shade." Jeter won a 1990 Tony Award as a supporting actor in the musical "Grand Hotel."

Richard Dysart picked up his first Emmy after four nominations for his drama series supporting role as the patriarchal attorney of "L.A. Law."

In the directing drama series category, Eric Laneville was named for NBC's "I'll Fly Away."

Laneville, who formerly played the janitor in "St. Elsewhere," thanked his colleagues from that show as well as fellow black television director Thomas Carter.

The Emmy for comedy writing went to Elaine Pope and Larry Charles of NBC's "Seinfeld." The comedy directing trophy went to Barnett Kellman for the "Birth 101" episode of CBS' "Murphy Brown."

Dennis Miller, Kirstie Alley and Tim Allen were the hosts for the nationally broadcast prime-time Emmys presentation from Pasadena Civic Auditorium.

Veteran actor Hume Cronyn won supporting actor in the same category for his role as Ben in "Neil Simon's Broadway Bound."

"I did my first television show 53 years ago," Cronyn said, raising the trophy. "You see, all it takes is a little persistence."

Beau Bridges won the miniseries actor award for his portrayal of real-life presidential press secretary James Brady in Home Box Office's "Without Warning: The James Brady Story."

Brady, in the audience, was paralyzed in 1981 assassination attempt on Ronald Reagan. Bridges used the live broadcast to appeal for gun control legislation.

In the miniseries actress category, Gena Rowlands won for "Face of a Stranger" on CBS.

The top miniseries was "A Woman Named Jackie," the soap opera saga of former First Lady Jacqueline Kennedy Onassis.

In a non-televised prelude to Sunday's show, ABC and CBS received 11 trophies each during presentation Saturday night of Emmys for technical achievement. NBC got seven.

Growing into U.S. culture

By CONNIE SWINNEY
Staff Writer

Imagine fleeing your country to escape an oppressive government and religious persecution.

You travel thousands of miles with the fear of capture and the relief of freedom swirling in your head.

When you arrive in the new land, the culture is almost a mirror-image of your own, and when you grapple with the new language, nobody understands you.

Add to the experience that you are 9 years old.

The native Nicaraguan boy is Big Spring resident Luis Pena, Jr.

"When I came here, I didn't trust people because I didn't know if they knew what I was trying to say," he said. After three years, he began mastering the language.

For the first time, he feels comfortable with making friends and, more important, school officials promoted the 12-year-old from elementary school into the 7th grade.

Pena said living in the U.S. is a welcome relief from his life in Central America.

He had witnessed the power of military oppression as suspected Sandinista-backed henchmen beat his father, Luis Pena, Sr., at the pulpit of his own church three years ago.

His father survived the final in a series of intimidation tactics to press his strong peace-based religious following.

"I (had) wanted to be a grown-up and have strength to make them leave him alone," he said. "I was sad because they didn't treat my father like a person."

Pena, Sr. and Olga Pena, his parents, listened as their son described the beauty and brutality of his homeland.

"I (had) felt it was my home...lots of dark green forests, rivers and mountains and trees."

Pena had lived with his family in a large section of Managua populated with a million people.

"They were against Christians, and they could come into your house," he said. "Here they respect your decisions and, of course, there is no government persecution against the Christians."

Pena said he remembers his father traveling from church to church throughout Nicaragua. The government pressured him to stop preaching against war.

After gaining political asylum in the United States, the boy began the painstaking process of surviving in a new culture.

"I was still depressed when I came here," he said. "Here I felt totally strange — like, a whole day in school."

In Nicaragua, Pena attended school from 7 a.m. to noon weekdays and daily church attendance was common.

From television and sports activities to youth work standards and political involvement, Pena said the Americas were like black and white.

"Most of TV over there was about what happened in the government," he said. "Over here, it's whatever you want to watch."

Pena said youth culture in the U.S. has its pitfalls.

"The youth over in Nicaragua didn't use drugs as much as here," he said. "Nicaraguan youths had to worry about working. If you worked or if you didn't work, you always had to worry about (the government) taking you into the army."

Joining the military is far from Pena's mind now. His biggest

A mountain goat is part of the native ecosystem of Banff National Park in Canada. Introduced by hunters into Washington's Olympic Peninsula in the 1920s, the goats are a menace, munching and trampling plants in nearby Olympic National Park.

Trampling goats face expulsion, death

The ASSOCIATED PRESS

OLYMPIC NATIONAL PARK, Wash. — When an estimated 400 Rocky Mountain goats munch and trample the wilderness preserve they've been allowed to roam freely, their fate is bound to be grim: They could be sterilized, expelled or shot.

Shooting is a verdict nobody wants to reach. "Personally, I have a hard time doing these animals in," says Doug Houston, a U.S. Park Service biologist who has been studying goats at Olympic for the past decade. "But professionally, their removal is the only way to go."

The shaggy, black-horned, majestic white goat-antelopes are destroying rare plants and virgin wilderness in the 1,441-square-mile national park on northwestern Washington's Olympic Peninsula. Some of the endangered plants can be found nowhere else.

Olympic's mountain-goat problem is the latest Park Service dilemma over populations of "introduced," or non-native, species. Since the mid-1970s, officials have been forced to kill wild boars in Great Smoky Mountains National Park, feral burros in Grand Canyon and Death Valley parks and feral goats in Hawaiian parks.

"We didn't join the Park Service to slaughter animals, but we are also dedicated to the management of native ecosystems," says Paul Crawford, Olympic's resource manager. Mountain goats are disrupting the natural balance of one of the few isolated alpine ecosystems in the United States.

Since 1981, about 400 of the most accessible goats have been removed from the park, whose dominant big animals are bears, elk and deer. Helicopters helped capture most of the goats for transport to other suitable habitats, primarily on U.S. Forest Service lands. But the removal program was halted in 1990 because it was considered too dangerous to people.

The fate of the remaining 400, about 80 percent of which are inside the park, may be decided this winter, after a series of environmental-impact studies and public hearings. Park Superintendent Maureen Finnerty says that shooting is on her short list of solutions.

Leaders of the Sierra Club and many other mainstream conservation groups in the Pacific Northwest support the Park Service goal of protecting the plants and wilderness, even if it means shooting goats.

Dale Crane, who heads the northwest office of the National Parks and Conservation Association in Seattle, says he initially didn't like the prospect of killing the goats, but he changed his mind after witnessing their destruction of Olympic's vegetation. "Do we let them do that because they're fuzzy and cute?" he asks.

Federal law allows officials to shoot destructive animals only if the animals are not native to an area.

Citing old newspaper accounts, Park Service biologists say that 11 or 12 mountain goats were brought to the peninsula from their native range in Canada and Alaska between 1925 and 1929 in part to establish a hunting region.

Cathy Sue Anunson of Sailem, Ore., regional representative of the New York-based Fund for Animals, disputes the claims that the mountain goats were introduced to the peninsula.

"We're going to fight this with all the muscle we can exert," Wayne Pacelle, national director of the Fund for Animals, tells National Geographic.

Search reunites former sweethearts

By NICK PATTERSON
Scripps Howard News Service

The moment Jean Stidham Ling looked at the photograph in the newspaper, she was sure: She is the woman Glen Wright is looking for.

Wright, 52, of Grover City, Calif., recently got a yearning to see an old high school sweetheart, someone he had last seen in 1954 when he lived in Birmingham, Ala.

Telephone calls to people with names similar to his old girlfriend and three days of advertisements in the Birmingham Post-Herald that included an old photo of the couple had yielded no results.

A reporter at the newspaper had more success. He found Mrs. Ling and telephoned Wright.

"I'm hoping she'll come out and see me," Wright said. "I'm hoping she calls — the sooner the better. I'm on pins and needles, myself."

Mrs. Ling is divorced. Is she interested in renewing an old acquaintance?

"I'll probably call him just to talk to him, but as far as seeing him, I don't think so," Mrs. Ling said.

Still, she recalls Wright as "real nice, cheerful, and very polite."

Wright's advertisement read "Anyone who knows Jean Stidham, Please ask her to call Glen collect at 805-481-1113, Grover City, California."

Although he had forgotten how to spell her name, the ad contained a 1954 photo of Wright and Jean Stidham holding hands in front of his old house.

Wright and Mrs. Ling parted company when he joined the Army in 1954. But 10 years after his second divorce, Wright decided to try getting back in touch.

To track down the lost sweetheart, The Birmingham Post-Herald used documents maintained at the city library's historical section, court records, city directories — and a telephone book.

The Post-Herald called Mrs. Ling, who has lived in the Birmingham area all her life, before she had seen the front-page account of Wright's search.

"I finally got a hold of the paper and looked at the picture and it is me," she said.

The picture, she said, "reminds me my feet were killing me that day. We walked, and I had high-heeled shoes on. And I think I went up to his mother's house for dinner and we walked back down to north Birmingham to visit my aunt and my cousin. We did a lot of walking that day, and we went to church that afternoon."

She recalled, as Wright did, that they walked or rode the bus wherever they went. And like Wright, she recalled how her younger siblings used to irritate them.

She recalled that Wright once bought her a box of candy. She offered members of the family some, then went off to the movies with her beau.

"When I came back my little sister had eaten the entire box of candy," she said. "There was not a piece left. They did aggravate us."

Mrs. Ling recalled the relationship as "not serious." She said that after Wright left for the Army, his family moved to California.

But Mrs. Ling said Wright did return on leave and visited her at her home. Wright's mother also called her several times, Mrs. Ling said.

Mrs. Ling, who also has been married and divorced twice has two children. She has worked for the past 15 years at Honeywell coordinating shipments of Honeywell equipment to job sites.

Wright was eager for information about Mrs. Ling, quizzing a reporter about her family, her marital status, whether she is still slender ("She always was a very beautiful girl").

But mostly, he wondered when she would contact him.

"Did she seem anxious about seeing me," he asked. "How sure are you that she will call. I hope she'll call."

Cards latest rage for Elvis fanatics

The ASSOCIATED PRESS

WESTPORT, Conn. — His devoted fans snap up Elvis ashtrays, Elvis beach towels, Elvis on velvet and Elvis postage stamps, so why not Elvis trading cards?

Major League Marketing Inc., which markets and distributes Score and Pinnacle brand sports trading cards, plans to introduce a line of Elvis Presley trading cards in October.

The 660 glossy pictures span the King's "Hound Dog" days as a gyrating teen idol to the twilight of his career as a flashy Las Vegas showman.

Elvis fans are already reaching for their wallets. Company president Dan Shedrick said Wednesday that retail orders are double the company's original projections, although he wouldn't disclose figures.

"If you're an Elvis fan, it's instant. You gotta have them," said Priscilla Parker of Pittsburgh, president of the We Remember Elvis Fan Club, the group that spearheaded the drive to get Elvis' picture on a U.S. postage stamp.

Shedrick said Wednesday he got the idea about six months ago during the public frenzy over which Elvis should appear on the stamp. Fans voted for the young Elvis over the older one.

Shedrick struck a deal with Elvis Presley Enterprises Inc., the licensing arm of Presley's estate. He formed The River Group to launch the line.

The photos were culled from private collections in the United States and Europe as well as from the collection at Graceland, Presley's mansion in Memphis, Tenn., where he died in 1977 at age 42.

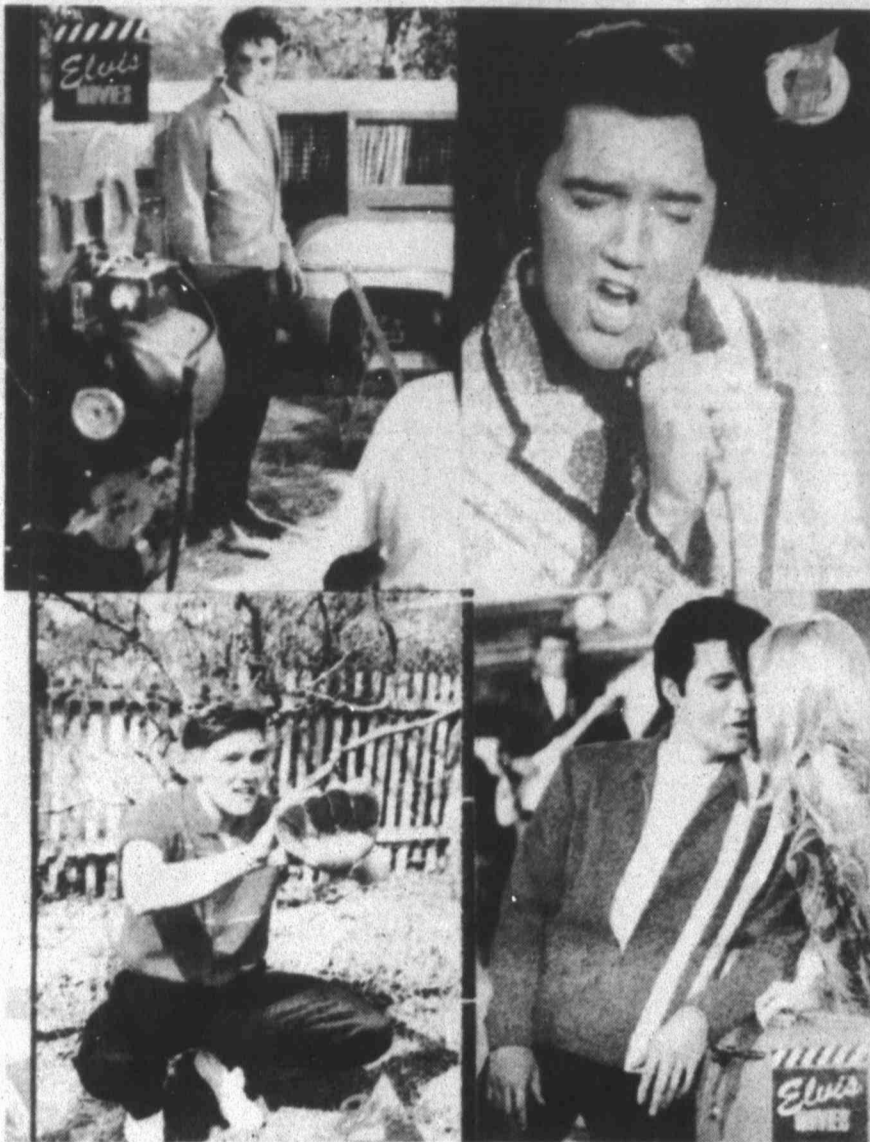

Three series of 220 cards each will be issued. They will be sold in packages of 12, with a suggested retail price of $1.49 per pack.

The cards resemble typical sports trading cards, but have a high-gloss laminated finish and biographical information on the back.

The cards will be sold in about 250,000 large and small retail outlets across the country, including K mart, Stop & Shop, Toys R Us and Kaybee Toys.

This is not the first time that Elvis' face has been traded like baseball cards. A series of 66 Elvis trading cards was released in 1956, followed by another set of 50 cards in 1977 and a third set of 66 cards in 1978, all by different companies.

This is a sample of the Elvis Presley trading cards marketed by the River Group Inc. of Westport, Conn. The set will eventually comprise 660 pictures of the King from his earliest to his final days.

Summers will be cool

By DON KIRKMAN
Scripps Howard News Service

Early next month, climatologists will confirm that the summer of 1992 was one of the coldest the United States has experienced since the National Weather Service began keeping nationwide records in 1895.

The climatologists won't officially say it, but it's probable that next summer will be cool, too.

The main reason climatologists are leaning toward a cool summer of '93 is the Earth will still be shrouded by some of the debris that Mount Pinatubo has tossed into the upper atmosphere.

For 15 months, Pinatubo's sulfur-rich atmospheric particles have blocked part of the sun's incoming radiation, and the result has been a 1- to 2-degree Fahrenheit global cooling, especially in the Northern Hemisphere.

NWS long-range meteorologist Russell Martin points out that Mount Pinatubo's worldwide cooling pattern has been very uneven, particularly in June, July and August. In the United States, for example, the eastern half of the country has been astonishingly cool while the West has broiled.

The same erratic pattern has occurred around the Northern Hemisphere. Temperatures have been unusually cold in the Balkans, Turkey, Greece and southern Russia and very warm in northern Europe, Siberia, Japan, Korea and northern China.

"Pinatubo's cooling effect seems to be peaking right now," Martin said. "As its particles fall out of the atmosphere, global temperatures will gradually rise."

Martin noted that the cooling effect of volcanoes is especially pronounced during summer because days last longer and there is more sunlight to block out.

"The summer of '93 won't be as cool as this summer, and temperatures should return to normal during the summer of '94," he said.

"It is a better education here...I don't know how to tell my teachers how much they helped me because they did make sure I learned things," he said. "Here I feel free like I can do things that we couldn't do over there."
"Now I can talk to friends. Now I can talk to them in English as easy as I would be talking Spanish," he added.

The younger Pena said he is proud of the courage his father demonstrated in Nicaragua. "What I'm going to be when I'm a man, I will be a pastor like my father."

Old maid limerick old story in Duluth

DEAR READERS: A Duluth reader sent me a column that appeared in the Duluth News-Tribune. The author is Jim Hefferman. I quote, in part:

"Our nationally syndicated columnist, Dear Abby, ran the following limerick, which speaks for itself:

"There was an old maid from Duluth

"Who wept when she thought of her youth,

"Remembering the chances

"She had at school dances,

"And once in a telephone booth."

"Then a reader wrote to Abby saying she thought the limerick was 'offensive, uncouth and perverted.'

"Abby responded that she thought it was entertaining enough

Dear Abby

"The basis for the limerick has been whispered in the neighborhoods of Duluth and passed on from generation to generation.

"Well, as that great American patriot and champion of 'the little guy,' millionaire Paul Harvey, often says, 'Here's the rest of the story':

"It seems that the old maid from Duluth - we'll call her 'Rosie' (not her real name) - was born at the beginning of the Great Depression, the daughter of Scandinavian immigrants. Her mother was Norwegian and her father was Swedish.

"Well, Rosie grew up to be an attractive young woman whose physical attributes drove boys nuts at high school dances. But she was so shy and withdrawn that whenever they asked Rosie to dance, she turned them down. She had many chances at those dances, but she passed them all up.

"Later in life, Rosie met a janitor named Jack. One rainy night on a date, the two of them squeezed into a telephone booth to stay dry, and Jack gave her the only kiss she ever experienced. Rosie was so embarrassed she fled, and spent the rest of her life regretting that she hadn't given Jack a chance.

"Proud in Duluth, we are very proud of Rosie's story, and whenever the limerick is recited, we view it as a small claim to limerick fame. Most folks believe it is better to be an old maid from Duluth than a young girl from Cape Cod, or a young man from Kent.

"And that's the rest of the story. Almost. Later on, Rosie had a child out of wedlock, whom she named Alexander - after Alexander Graham Bell."

FOR TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 1, 1992 HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: Someone influential will recognize and reward your ambition. Your career and personal goals come into clearer focus after a surprising success in December; co-workers will be preoccupied with the holiday festivities.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: singer Barry Gibb, director Seiji Ozawa, comedian Lily Tomlin, country singer Conway Twitty.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): An old friend offers help when you need it most. Greater understanding will get romance back on track. A financial solution is closer than you think.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): A busy and rewarding day lies ahead. If you must work overtime, touch base with loved ones to avoid domestic friction. A secret longing becomes even stronger tonight. Do what is right.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Trust your instincts and you will overcome a job impasse. An older person shows how to dodge time-wasting distractions. Ask your doctor to devise a diet that is right for you.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): A water-thin wallet will result if you go on a shopping spree; hold back. Your natural eloquence helps you obtain a loan or financial gift. Tenacity will be rewarded today.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Add some pizzazz to your surroundings. A token of your love gives a romantic relationship a welcomed lift. You can forge a passionate bond without relinquishing your independence.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Higher-ups announce some welcomed news. Once they have confidence in your ideas, your finances should take a quantum leap forward. Do not be afraid to discuss vital issues in a relationship.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Career success depends on your ability to deal effectively with your co-workers. Big changes take place on the home front, perhaps even a relocation.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Research will show you how to get more for your money. Pay more attention to the nutritional labels when grocery shopping. Buying in quantity helps extend your food dollars.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Disappointing news could come like a bolt out of the blue. Refuse to panic. You may feel tempted to rush an important decision. Slow down; you need to feel your way.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Check your investments - this is a good time to buy or sell. Avoid eating junk food. A sense of physical well-being will help you tackle and solve any work-related problems.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Children tend to influence your choices now. Suppressed feelings of love come out in an unexpected way. A powerful attraction to a member of the opposite sex ignites your imagination.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Pursue projects that appeal to your common sense. A timely real estate purchase will quickly increase in value. Begin a regular savings program. The dividends will come in handy.
