Dr. A. A. Tampke Accepts Quail School Position

Dr. A. A. Tampke, for the past nine years head of the vocational department of the McLean schools, has accepted a similar position with the newly consolidated Quail district, at a substantial increase in salary.

Dr. Tampke came here in 1927 as a graduate from the Sam Houston State Teachers College at Huntsville, with two years experience in teaching at Huckaby, where his teams won four state first prizes. During his tenure at McLean his teams have won 50 cups, sweepstakes, banners, medals and cash first places in state and national contests, besides numbers of individual winnings.

Dr. Tampke also sponsored and directed winning booths at the Amarillo Tri-state fair for the years 1931-32-33. The story of Dr. Tampke's life reads like a pioneer romance, having had 21 years of experience and knowledge regarding the hardships confronting a tenant family before he began his education in high school, graduating from college nine years later.

During his school and college career many of his friends have had cause to thank him for his efforts in their behalf, and the whole community has been free to call upon him for assistance of any kind in his chosen work since he began teaching.

Citizens of McLean have felt as free to use his services as if he had been county agent. His skill in the treatment of sick animals has saved the life of many a fine animal here the past nine years.

The Quail school is the largest rural consolidated school in the state and is destined to make history in the next few years.

It is not known who will take Dr. Tampke's place in the McLean school system.

C. O. Greene has been appointed to the county WPA board to represent the city of McLean, and C. A. Cryer has been appointed to the board to represent the McLean schools.

MODEL DEPT. STORE CLOSES SATURDAY NIGHT

The Model Department Store will close Saturday night, and the Salmons will leave for a trip to Galveston, later motoring to St. Louis, where they will buy a complete stock of men's furnishings and ladies' ready-to-wear and will reopen the store at the same location September first.

ALANREED REVIVAL

A series of revival services are in progress at the First Baptist Church of Alanreed, with Rev. M. E. Wells of Hedley doing the preaching and W. E. James of Alanreed leading the song service.

Services are being held at 10 o'clock each morning, and at 8 o'clock at night, with good crowds and much interest.

According to Pastor A. J. Campbell, the meeting will continue all next week and everyone has a cordial invitation to attend any and all services.

FIRE ALARM TUESDAY

An alarm was turned in Tuesday evening for a fire in the C. A. Watkins garage. The department made a run and soon had the flames under control. It is understood that no insurance was carried.

Mr. and Mrs. Sammie Cubine and son, Mrs. Ella Cubine and Winifred Massay left Friday for a visit at Tucumcari and Eagle Nest, N. M.

Mr. and Mrs. New Barker returned last week from a trip to South Texas.

STUBBLEFIELD'S GROOM STORE TO WELLINGTON

An announcement in the Groom News of last week stated that the J. M. Stubblefield dry goods store in that city would be moved to Wellington the latter part of this month.

Stubblefield's has been in Groom for the past 21 years, and their moving will leave Groom without a dry goods store.

It is understood that the move will not affect the store at McLean in any way.

MCLEAN STUDENTS GRADUATE

Canyon, August 6.—Mrs. Zada Ritter Tillery and Wesley A. Foster of McLean are listed among the 130 members of the record sized summer graduating class at the West Texas State Teachers College.

There are 94 women in the class and 36 men. One hundred three B. S. degrees and 27 B. A. degrees will be conferred.

Mrs. Tillery has majored in primary education and will take a Bachelor of Science degree.

Mr. Foster majored in educational administration and will also receive a Bachelor of Science degree.

SEITZ FAMILY REUNION

Among these from this community to attend the Seitz family reunion at Mobeetie last Sunday were: Mrs. Ina Wall Marshall, Mrs. O. E. Elliott, Emmett Gatlin and family of Denworth.

Some 218 relatives and friends were present for the barbecue served at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Jeff Seitz. It is planned to make the reunion an annual affair.

Mrs. T. W. Henry is visiting her son, Bryant, and family at Vaughn, N. M. She was accompanied by her daughter, Mrs. B. E. Glass, and family of Alanreed.

Rev. and Mrs. J. W. Story and Mrs. Charles Cousins returned Monday from Hot Springs, N. M.

Miss Gladys Oaks of Hobbs, N. M., is visiting her uncle, H. H. Darnell.

Crowd Enjoys Game, Concert and Fine Food

"The finest affair ever held at McLean," was the comment of the hundreds who were fortunate enough to attend the Smith Brothers Refining Company's barbecue last Thursday evening.

The barbecue was given for the employees of the company and their families, numbering some 426, and invited guests to swell the number to right at 1,000 people, over 900 plates being served at the barbecue tables.

The afternoon program opened with a baseball game in which the Smith Bros. team won from the Western Carbon Co. team from Magic City by a score of 6 to 5.

Following the game, the McLean band under the direction of Prof. Robt. C. Davidson gave a concert on a large bandstand built at the barbecue grove for the occasion.

Following the concert, Editor T. A. Landers called the crowd to order, and Vester Smith, president of the Smith Bros. Refining Co., made the welcome address, expressing appreciation of the cooperation given his company.

Mr. Smith introduced Senator C. C. Small, who outlined the early efforts of the founders of the company in developing this section.

Mr. Small said that Vester and Porter Smith and T. J. Coffey were "three local country boys who had made good," praising their energy and good judgment in backing their faith in this section.

County Attorney Sherman White followed with a talk along similar lines and The News editor spoke the appreciation of the McLean community for the enterprise of the company.

Mr. Smith gave a few directions for the barbecue, and the long line formed at the first table for the fine food consisting of barbecued beef and sauce, baked beans, stewed apricots, pickles, onions, bread, cake, coffee, iced tea and red lemonade.

The meal was served in the company's oak grove with long tables conveniently arranged for the diners. A large stock tank of ice cold lemonade was at the end of the grove with everyone invited to drink as much as he liked at any time.

The three beehives served were furnished by the Bar Lo Ranch, Geo. W. Sitter, owner, upon whose land the refinery is located.

Oak wood charcoal was used for cooking, the wood being brought from Jackboro, 236 miles away, by truck for the occasion. Mr. Snider, in a conversation with the News editor, said that he had barbecued beehives from Washington, D. C., all over the United States, and had never seen finer animals than the ones furnished for this barbecue. The beehives were cooked whole and served with the famous Snider sauce. The meat was perfectly cooked, no smoke or sand being in evidence at all. The cake was courtesy Caldwell's Bakery.

The afternoon and evening were cloudy and cool, making an ideal day for the entertainment. It was intimated that the barbecue would be made an annual affair.

WOODMAN CIRCLE TO MEET

DEMOCRATS ARE DETERMINED TO PUSH ROOSEVELT TAX PLAN TO PASSAGE.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD
© Western Newspaper Union.

DEMOCRATIC congressmen started the week briskly determined to push through the President's "soak the rich" tax bill at this session. Opposing them with equal determination were a number of the hardest fighting Republicans who insist that consideration of taxation be postponed until next winter and that meantime the question be studied carefully in connection with the budget for the next fiscal year. These Republicans are urgently calling for an early adjournment of congress.

Senator Vandenberg of Michigan, often mentioned as a Presidential possibility, also demanded postponement of the tax legislation until January, and he gave out a statement denouncing the administration's plan as a "sterile political gesture" which would raise "only a little extra pocket change" and declared that "we chatter of taxes in millions to offset known deficits in billions."

"The pending tax bill, as it is being developed," said Senator Vandenberg, "will not produce appreciable revenue for Uncle Sam. It will not pay the President's deficit even for the period while the bill is under consideration. As a contribution to the public credit, it is as grim a hoax as was ever perpetrated on the country. As a 'distributor of wealth' it is a mere vagrant strutting with this left wing idea."

Nevertheless, it appeared probable that the tax measure would be enacted before adjournment, for the administration leaders had promised this to Senator La Follette and other "liberals," and besides that, they have no desire to pass a taxation bill in a Presidential election year. As produced by the house ways and means committee after great travail the measure embodies an 87 per cent confiscation of large fortunes and increased levies on the rich which would produce perhaps $250,000,000 of additional annual revenue.

NEEDY teachers and students are to get financial help from the Works Progress administration according to plans being perfected by Dr. L. R. Alderman. The two chief points in his program are:

Establishment of summer schools for 1,200 teachers who were among those who taught reading and writing to 500,000 illiterates last year.

Jobs to be provided for 125,000 college students during the coming school year.

Twenty-five summer schools will be conducted, the sessions lasting six weeks, and the teachers attending them will be paid from $15 to $18 a week out of the work relief funds. These teachers will be taught to teach adults in the fall.

Alderman said he already had sent out field agents to aid in setting up courses at New York university, Ohio State university, Purdue university, Olivet college (Michigan), University of Wisconsin, University of Chicago and University of California. The other training schools have not been selected.

ALONG the line of providing help for white collar workers, Harry L. Hopkins appointed four technical assistants to direct the employment of painters, musicians, writers and actors. They are: Nikolai Sokoloff for music, Halie Flanagan for the theater, Hoiger Cahill for painters and sculptors, and Henry G. Alseberg for writers.

With $300,000,000 available for the estimated 750,000 white collar people on relief, scores of surveys, censuses, traffic studies, and similar projects have been provided for those with no particular skill.

Some scholars will get jobs from the $20,000,000 worth of white collar projects already approved for New York city, but other projects have awaited appointment of the four directors.

Hopkins also announced that camps for unemployed women, initiated last year, would be revived this summer, with a suggested term of from six weeks to two months. State relief administrations will be in charge. Educational programs will be offered, but all but three of the camp staff must come from relief rolls themselves.

OPPOSITION of the AAA amendments designed to strengthen the powers of Secretary of Agriculture Wallace decided to let the basic act go up to the Supreme court, so the administration bill was passed by the senate with only 15 adverse votes.

Both Republican and conservative Democratic foes of the AAA are confident that the Supreme court will hold the basic act unconstitutional and an early test is assured by a senate amendment permitting suits to recover processing taxes that have not been passed on to producers or consumers.

One of the major purposes of the amendments was to close the courts, but the senate rejected this scheme by a vote of 41 to 23. As a result, the Hoosack Mills case, in which the Boston Circuit Court of Appeals held the AAA unconstitutional, will not be thrown out and the highest tribunal will have a chance to pass upon it.

SENATOR GLASS scored perhaps the greatest victory in his long public career when the senate, without a record vote, passed his draft of the 1935 banking act, rejecting the central bank features urged by Gov. Marriner S. Eccles of the federal reserve board and favored by the administration. The doctored Virginian, who was once secretary of the treasury, had fought desperately against the Eccles scheme and his triumph was decisive. There was no demand for a roll call on the final vote, for the fate met by the proposers of various amendments showed this procedure would be futile. Senator La Follette sought to strike out a provision permitting commercial banks to underwrite securities and his proposal was beaten, 39 to 22. Senator Gerald Nye of North Dakota, another radical Republican, offered the central bank plan of Rev. Charles E. Coughlin, radio priest, which would set up a government owned and wholly dominated system. It was voted down, 59 to 10.

Other amendments were offered and debated rather listlessly, for the record, and then were withdrawn. Even Senator Duncan U. Fletcher of Florida, chairman of the banking and currency committee, who had sided rather with Eccles, declined to push his amendments designed to cripple Glass' plan.

The senate bill was sent to conference, for the house passed the measure drawn up on the advice of Eccles and Tugwell.

PARTIAL investigation of the milk industry by the federal trade commission was said to have revealed deplorable conditions and the administration asked for $200,000 to continue the inquiry. The senate committee in considering the deficiency appropriation bill cut out that item altogether, but when the measure came before the senate Duffy of Wisconsin moved an amendment adding the sum asked. After a hot debate this was approved by a vote of 51 to 18 and the bill was then passed. The numerous senate amendments had added a total of more than $80,000,000 to the house measure, so the $300,000,000 bill was sent to conference.

WHAT was in the cigar box wrapped in a newspaper? That is what Senator Hugo Black, chairman of the senate lobby committee, wanted to know. Before the committee for questioning was John W. Carpenter of Dallas, president of the Texas Power and Light company. Headed off freely that he and other utility men had hotel conferences, dinners and a trip down Chesapeake bay with congressmen during the fight over the Wheeler-Rayburn bill, and that he himself had centered his efforts on Texas congressmen. But of the mysterious box he could or would tell nothing. Black probed and probed, and finally asked:

"Do you still say that in the morning (of the day before the vote on the utilities bill 'death sentence') you didn't give a congressman a box wrapped up in a newspaper?"

Carpenter replied quietly: "I don't think I did, unless it was a few cigars."

Senate and house conferees met to consider the utility control bill, but there were small signs that they could get together, and one session ended abruptly in a real row. Two administration lobbyists, Benjamin Cohen and Dozier A. De Vane, were brought into the executive session by Senators Wheeler and Barkley and though Representative George Huddleston protested, their continued presence was insisted upon. Whereupon the fiery Alabama congressman and his fellows from the house walked out and broke up the meeting. Cohen is generally given credit for writing the measure and Wheeler has said he knows all about it.

After leaving the committee room, Huddleston said flatly that the house conferees would not recede from the position that the "death sentence" must be eliminated.

GRAY SILVER, who throughout most of his life was active in the interests of agriculture, died quite suddenly at his home in Martinsburg, W. Va., at the age of sixty-five years. Among the offices he held at various times were president of the United States Grain Market corporation of Chicago; president of the Inwood Fruit Growers' co-operative corporation; president Berkeley Fruit Growers; head of the Eastern Credit association; director United Growers of America, head of the Federated Growers Credit association; member of the National Bureau of Economic Research, member of the commission appointed by President Taft to study tariff relations to the wool industry, member of the farm bureau federation visiting Europe in 1924, and a member of the commission investigating national unemployment.

Glamorous Midsummer Silk Prints

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

MIDSUMMER prints are simply gorgeous. Adjectives, no matter how extravagant, how eloquent or picturesque, fall short of describing them. It is impossible to capture their beauty of color and design and release it via mere words. Like the full blown rose that reaches perfection of bloom in midsummer, the lovely prints now worn, especially the sumptuous evening prints, have reached to such heights of glamorous beauty one's very being thrills at the sight of them.

The enchanting gowns here pictured are self-explanatory as to why women continue to adore prints. The superlative loveliness of the stately model to the left in the group carries the message that no happier choice can be made in the way of a summery evening gown than a filmy, vaporous printed chiffon which silhouettes huge white waterlilies touched with pink and green shadows against a misty black background. The scarflike arrangement which falls across the shoulders, floating in summer airiness at every move, is typical of current styling.

Then there is a frock of perfectly beautiful flower-printed silk fantasy crepe which the lady seated is wearing. To mar the perfection of this glorified print with a superfluous trimming touch would be an unforgivable gesture. Which is why the designer fashioned this superb print along absolutely simple lines. This print is vivid with splashes and dashes of warm tropical colors—as gay, as gorgeous as a bird of brilliant exotic plumage.

The lovely dress with a cape centered in the picture has a story of fascinating interest to tell. It is of violet-gray mousseline de soie. Huge flower appliques, cutouts from a silk poppy print, are festooned on the cape forming a garland about the shoulders, also spiraling around the skirt in double file. The soft sash is of chartreuse green silk taffeta.

This gown is especially significant in that it demonstrates the use of cut-out floral from printed fabric as a trimming feature. Designers are doing very clever things along this line of thought. One striking effect is the lei or garland which is worn about the shoulders like a box or necklace, or is used to finish low-cut necklines, taken from gay printed chiffons or crepes or whatever the silken material may be. Boutonnieres made of the same print as the frocks with which they are worn are also smartly in vogue.

Perhaps one of the most unique and charming adaptations of cutout print florals is seen in sleeves which are formed of the flower motifs which are caught in the center only, the petals fluttering out as if they were real flowers. These flower sleeves contrast a monotone frock. By the way, advance news in regard to fall fashions places special emphasis on the approaching vogue of contrasting sleeves, such as lace or silk print or embroidered sleeves used with monotone silk or velvet or wool for the frock.

Again, speaking of the use of cutout print motifs, cunning collar and cuff sets are formed in the manner described above. The theme is one that may be handsomely worked out for bridesmaids' hat and muff sets.

The flair for printed prints also expresses itself in that several dressmakers are making up plain chiffon over printed satin slips. The effect is entrancing. A timely hint for your next party dress.

FALL FORECAST By CHERIE NICHOLAS

The dramatic sweep of ostrich feathers on fall hats forecasts the return to elegance in fashion. Ostrich feathers straight, curled, jaunty or flowing are being worn on all types of hats from sports to evening. The picturesque afternoon hat in the illustration is in bright green velvet. Its crown is cut sharply in half by a beautiful black and white plume which emerges underneath the brim, curling softly down over the neck. The other hat is a type which milliners are showing for wear with dinner dresses. The body of the hat is sheerest net—serves as a foundation for the luxuriant feather which constitutes the brim and trim.

FLOWERS CURRENT THEME OF STYLISTS

"Flowers for Madame" is the current theme song of the stylists.

Fresh flowers are being used as a definite part of current costume ensembles, used in new and unusual ways. There is, in case you didn't know it, a "tailored corsage" of orchids, for wear with tailored daytime costumes. The stems are wound with velvet ribbon, in a color to harmonize with the ensemble, and are pinned against the collar of the frock or jacket.

For evening gay young things are wearing a spray of small pink orchids across the back of the head, tiara fashion.

Flowers in the hair are all the rage just now. Reminiscent of Carmen are the sprays of red camellias worn by dashing brunets these nights on their dark curls, just behind the right ear.

Another new idea is that of attaching a single orchid to your jeweled bracelet.

New Silk Patent Leather Belts for Daytime Wear

Like soft, crushed girdles are the new silk patent leather belts for daytime dresses. They fit snugly around the waist, and are just a bit wider than the belts you've been wearing. The colors match or contrast with all your new summer dresses—bright red, dark red, pink, lilac, yellow and black. They give a smart touch that adds so much to your costume and proves that it pays to be up-to-date even in details!

Gilt Bead Jabots

Jabots are not always of organdie or lace. The silver and gilt bead variety is modernistic and combines the role of dress jewelry with that of a jabot.

Says WILL ROGERS

BEVERLY HILLS.—Well all I know is just what I read in the papers, or what I run into prowling around. A couple of weeks ago out here in the city of Angels, we had quite a distinguished gathering. They called themselves the American Bar Association, and they were quite an array. I went down one night just as the thing was getting started and did some rough and tumble blathering for em.

Run onto more old friends down there that I hadn't seen for years. The gathering was about as much political as it was legal, if not more so. It looked like a reunion of the Republican Old Guard. All the speeches during the Convention had nothing whatever to do with law. They were all preludes to the next presidential election. They were opening overtures in the 1936 Follies.

And you can't blame em. Pretty near everybody that does something has got a reason, and lots of times it's a pretty good one.

The old Republicans had stood by pretty good for the first year or year and a half of the Administration. Of course it was when they thought the President was all aces, but now that they begin to see that this fellow has treys and deuces in his deck, why they are out after his scalp. You see they are on the fortunate side. There is nothing as easy as denouncing. I write day in and day out, you talk day in and day out (about something that's wrong) but I doubt if either one of us had to really offer a constructive remedy that would really stand up if tried why we would be stuck right away. It don't take much to see that something is wrong, but it does take some eyesight to see what will put it right again.

Of course this early in the game you don't have to offer any constructive remedy. Just to shout what is wrong is enough, and it's all in the game. Didnt the Democrats yowl like a coyote at Mr. Hoover? In fact the Democrats can call a man more things than the Republicans. The Democrats are better denouncers than the Republicans, for there has been so much more of the time that they have had practice at it. Denouncing is not only an art with the Democrats but it's a profession. You see they are out of the office so much that they get all the practice. But for what little practice the Republicans have had, why they are not doing bad at all. They, for amateur denouncers, are doing fine. Course they got some splendid material to work on, for there had been many a queer thing done during this Administration. Some of em looked like they were magicians tricks, but done with another magician's hat, and they didn't hardly know what was in there, and when it was pulled out, why they were as much surprised as the people. The Democrats have done a lot of things just to see just how the audience would take it.

Well a lot of the things they would pull out of the bag, and when they saw the audience didn't exactly approve of that particular animal, why they had no way of disposing of him. They have had to stand there holding him in their hands with no place to put him.

But to get back to the lawyers and their convention. They just have a thousand committees to fix everything. They got one too to drive the shyster lawyer out of their ranks, but its sorter like a skeleton in the closet, some of the more old conservative ones don't want it dragged out. But they are doing a lot to eliminate him. Not all they could do if they entered into it whole heartedly, (they could kick em right out of the Courts) but they are doing something. You see all these laws that they are having so much trouble wondering if they are constitutional, they were all drawn up by lawyers. For almost two thirds of the membership of the House and Senate are lawyers.

The minute you read something and you can't understand it you can almost be sure that it was drawn up by a lawyer. Then if you give it to another lawyer to read and he don't know just what it means, why then you can be sure it was drawn up by a lawyer. If its in a few words and is plain and understandable only one way, it was written by a non-lawyer.

Every time a lawyer writes something, he is not writing for posterity, he is writing so that endless others of his craft can make a living out of trying to figure out what he said. Course perhaps he hadn't really said anything, that's what makes it hard to explain.

Anyhow they are like a lot more of the crafts that many of us live by, great but really useless. One level headed smart man could interpret every law there is. If you commit a crime you either did or you didn't, without Habus Corpus, Change of Venue, or any other legal hindie. But Lord if we go into the things that are useless why two thirds of the World would have to turn to manual labor. That's really the only essential thing there is. Anyhow they was a good bunch and they had a good Convention and it was good to meet em.

Quick, Pleasant Successful Elimination

Let's be frank—there's only one way for your body to rid itself of the waste material that causes acidity, gas, headaches, bloated feeling, and a dozen other discomforts. Your intestines must function properly. The way to make them more easily, pleasantly, successfully, with no gripping or harsh irritants, is to take a Milsinea Wafer thoroughly, in accordance with directions on the bottle or tin, then swallow.

Rid Yourself of Kidney Poisons

DO you suffer burning, stinging, too frequent urination, backache, headache, dizziness, swollen feet, or are you tired, nervous, or feel all unstrung and don't know what's wrong?

Then give some thought to your kidneys. Be sure they function properly, for functional kidney disorder produces much excess waste to stay in the blood and to poison and upset the whole system.

Use Doan's Pills. Doan's are for the kidneys only. They are recommended by the world over. You can get the genuine, time-tested Doan's at any drug store.

DANIEL

Text, Daniel 1:8-20. Golden rule: "Be not that your body be defiled, which ye have of the Lord, in vain, which ye have of the Lord, in vain."

Character Daniel is one of the outstanding and beautiful of the Old Testament. He was born a member of a royal family and it is to be noted that he had the very best of training as a youth. The Old Testament law which was given to the Hebrews, Daniel's family had not forgotten. It is to be understood that in his youth received the finest interpretation of man's religion to God that could be had. Daniel's youth Jehoiakim was a very wicked king and the nation was under the influence of continual idolatry and idol worship. From this conception the parents of Daniel shielded him as clean and trained to be a Jew with a clean heart. He had been very difficult to have with such ideals as to combat. The king, his leaders and most of the people were godless and walking in evil ways. Naturally every inclination to follow the king, the king's greatest difficulty was to have today in rearing clean Christian boys is in overcoming the inclination of children to do other people do. Many parents their children to do things which will not tend to make strong, moral characters out of them. The things appeal to all after a manner of speaking, when many youths are in them. Much is to be said of the parents of Daniel because of strong, clean influence over him is so readily seen in his attitude he is torn away from that and placed upon his own influence which might be menin the life of the young man is was a youth during the time of prophecy of Jeremiah. It is suggested by some authorities that Daniel no doubt had heard the prophet Jeremiah many times. It may even be possible and that the prophet had been welcomed into the home of Daniel and young man had the privilege of being taught by him.

the early age of about sixteen when Daniel was aware of the danger of the battle of Carchemish and the defeat of the Egyptians by Nebuchadnezzar of Babylon. Nebuchadnezzar was making an open road to Jerusalem, sacked it and the best of its people back home him. Among those taken captive was Daniel.

There was the long journey, under too kind circumstances, overland on foot, to Babylon. Here the captives were placed in a training camp. This training has been favorably to a college education. They were captives, and yet were well cared for. They were trained, but were fed the finest of food that came from the kitchen, with all of the fancy meats and wines of the land. The captives were treated royally.

It was where Daniel's courage and faith came to the front. He could not have the possibilities of wine. He was told to drink. He knew that it would harm his mind and make him inferior. He persuaded those in charge to let him have the common food of the day without wine. After a few days, the test was made and he won. And as his training went on he became the most profound of the group. It appears that he was not only studied but became a student in many of the sciences and languages of the day. There was the language of the courts, Aramaic, Hebrew, Egyptian, Median, among others, the language of the people.

The final test was made, Daniel was first among the entire number. He served and followed the dreams of God, and God had prepared a servant of His own people to take the part of His people in the land of the king. His life extended from the time of Jehoiakim to Cyrus, and he was contemporary with Jeremiah, Ezekiel, Daniel, Ezra and Zerubbabel. For 70 years he was the guiding hand of the Jews for the Empire of the East.

Text: "Be not deceived: evil communications corrupt good manners."—1 Cor. 15:33.

CHRISTIAN MANNERS

A Christian is known by his manners, by his mode of dress, his habits, and speech.

Many people of today conform themselves to the world. They act just like the worldly children of our twentieth century. If they do otherwise than the customs of society dictate they are considered either "out of date" or "pious" people. The Bible is not out of date. What the Bible says every Christian must follow to the last detail regardless of the manners and customs of the unbelievers and scoffers.

"Be not deceived: evil communications corrupt good manners." A person who follows the dictates of the world in only a few things will, eventually, follow the world in all things. There are people today who say that if a person does not indulge in the modern dance he is not up with the times. Is that really so? What good is the modern "wrestling match" type of dancing? Let us see what authorities say concerning it.

Dr. Walter A. Maier of Concordia (Lutheran) Seminary says in his latest book, "For Better, not for Worse": "One of the most persistent and devastating assaults on the ideals of morality and marriage is captioned by the immoral dance. Ask one hundred evangelical clergymen for their opinion on the effects of the suggestive dance, and one hundred pastoral voices will unite in branding it as one of the most insidious oppositions to their best efforts. If you think that this type of clergymen is biased and out of touch with modern trends, ask a group of experienced social workers for their verdict, and again many will agree that there is no single factor that has led more girls to ruin than the temptations of the public dance hall."

"Now, all this may sound bigoted and puritanical in this day of Terpsichore's rule in gilded pomp and lavish circumstances, when her devotees do honor to her in dance palaces that recall the luxury of the Trianon or mimic the rococo of the most lavish Louis. It may appear futile to raise a dissonant voice or to lift a protesting pen; yet the fear of futurity should never be a deterrent. The masses have committed many mistakes."

"In surveying the dangerous influences of the modern dance, it should be admitted, as scientific observers have conceded, that dancing is a stimulus to certain physical impulses." The Medical Review of Reviews declares: "There can scarcely be any doubt that dancing came about as an adjunct to sexual stimulation. As such it still exists, undisguised among primitive peoples of antiquity. It still retains this original purpose among us today, but it is not avowed as such openly."

Dancing-master William P. Rivers says: "The modern dances are nothing but public petting parties." Raymond Duncan wrote in the Detroit Times: "Modern dances are merely sensual exhibitions, devoid of taste. Many people no longer dance for the joy of dancing. They dance because it is an excuse for hugging each other in public."

Mrs. Henrietta Hunt, superintendent of the Springfield, Illinois, Redemption Home, said: "Dancing drags down more girls than anything else. Fully half of those who came to us last year went wrong at the public school dances right here at Springfield. I believe it is high time someone was coming out against such evil."

This is just a sample of the corruption of good Christian manners through evil communications, bad practices and habits. Scripture says: "Be not deceived." Do not let the world with all of its sweet and gilded words seduce you into bad practices which are being done under the name of modern amusements. "Be not deceived: evil communications corrupt good manners."

It is better to lead a good, decent, Christian life than to be dragged down to hell. Dear reader, have you been on the evil paths in this world? If so, amend your ways, repent, and come to the Lord. He will forgive you all of your sins. It is not too late. Repent today and promise to lead a better life. Follow Jesus and take Him as an example. God grant this. Amen.

ORDER CANVASSING THE RETURNS AND DECLARING THE RESULT OF ELECTION

On this the 30th day of July, A. D. 1935, came on to be considered by the Commissioners' Court of Gray County, Texas, at a special meeting held on this day, the returns of an election held on the 26th day of July, A. D. 1935, in Justice Precinct No. 5 in Gray County, Texas, upon the question to determine whether or not the sale of beer containing not more than three and two-tenths (32%) per centum of alcohol by weight should be prohibited or permitted in said Justice Court Precinct No. 5 in Gray County, Texas;

And it appearing that notice of said election in said Justice Precinct No. 5 was legally made as required by law and that said election was in all respects legally held and that the returns of said election were duly and legally made by the proper officers appointed to hold the same, and it further appearing from a canvass of the returns of said election held in Justice Court Precinct No. 5 in said county, there was cast fifty-nine (59) votes "For the sale of beer containing not more than three and two-tenths (32%) per centum of alcohol by weight," and two hundred twenty-one (221) votes "Against the sale of beer containing not more than three and two-tenths (32%) per centum of alcohol by weight," and

It appearing to the Court that a majority of the votes cast at the election held as aforesaid were against the sale of beer containing not more than three and two-tenths (32%) per centum of alcohol by weight; It is, therefore, the ORDER, JUDGMENT AND DECREE of the Court that the sale of beer containing not more than three and two-tenths (32%) per centum of alcohol by weight within Justice Court Precinct No. 5, in Gray County, Texas, be and the same is absolutely prohibited after thirty days from the date of this order.

SLIMNESS ALONG WITH SIMPLICITY

Pattern 9350

Every line in this dress is cleverly contrived to "lie" about your weight. The unbroken line from shoulder to hip adds to your height, the diagonal closing "slims" you down and the panel skirt gives you a trim hip line. Why it makes you "feel" slimmer, just to look at this frock. Notice how cleverly it avoids waistline emphasis, but adds four buttons for smart accents. About the house, you'll appreciate the unhampered freedom of the easy fitting sleeve and bodice. Run up several in printed cottons for about-the-house and make a dark printed foulard for smart town wear.

Pattern 9350 may be ordered only in sizes 36, 38, 40, 42, 44, 46, 48 and 50. Size 36 requires 3½ yards 36-inch fabric.

Send FIFTEEN CENTS in coins or stamps (coins preferred) for this pattern. Be sure to write plainly your NAME, ADDRESS, the STYLE NUMBER and SIZE.

Complete, diagrammed sew chart included. Send your order to Sewing Circle Pattern Department, 232 West Eighteenth Street, New York.

Have a Mid-Summer Party! A cool, restful affair as pleasant for the hostess as for the guests. A luncheon for twelve will be nice. I have runners, tray cloths or a green cloth with napkins to use. Cloudy rose glass candleholders holding tall green candles with roses, sweet peas, or any pink in season, and ferns will be fine for decoration. Use rose glass service plates and bouillon cups, rose salad plates, dessert plates, green coffee cups, stemmed goblets and clear glass bowls. A cold bouillon, a cool vegetable salad, quite hearty, string beans and hot muffins, pistachio cream, petit fours and coffee will be a delicious menu. Green and parties and salted nuts are nice. Rose leaves in the finger will complete the daintiness of service. Place cards in the shape of flowers may mark the places. A luncheon is not difficult to serve, requires a minimum of service, is effective in appearance and is satisfying on a warm summer day.

The infamous Jericho gap gave us a lot more adverse advertising the past week. It does seem that with such a short stretch of road the highway department could get a main-tainer on it right after a rain and not let several days pass before doing anything. "TROUBLE WITH WOMEN"

Do you know what is the trouble with women? Frankly, we don't. But here is what Dr. Karen Horney, a New York psychiatrist, told the more than 2,000 delegates to the national convention of Clubs and Professional Women's Clubs at Seattle recently. Dr. Horney told them the trouble with women is that they have "an over-valuation of love and emotional relations; a complying attitude to men's ideas and ideals of femininity; an age phobia with a subsequent waste of human values; an inferiority feeling as a woman; and a lack of solidarity among themselves." But the women folks could hardly be expected to admit this is a correct diagnosis—Pathfinder.

She—"The man I marry must be brave as a lion, but not nervy; handsome as a Greek god, but not conceited; wise as Solomon, but not as a lamb—a man who is kind to every woman, but who loves only one."

PASTURED PIGS GROW BEST

Vitamins, minerals and exercise are just as essential to growing porkers as they are to human beings and in most cases involving pigs these elements can be supplied by pasture. Tests conducted in scattered states by the Department of Agriculture revealed that concentrated feeds eaten by pigs on pasture average 13% less for each 100 pounds gain than for pigs on dry lots. Pasture took the place of about one out of each eight pounds of concentrated feed and also furnished less opportunity for the animals to pick up parasites.

CAUSES OF AUTO ACCIDENTS

According to Accident Facts published by the National Safety Council the six principal causes of auto accidents are: 1 exceeding the speed limit or driving too fast for existing conditions; 2 violating the right of way; 3 driving on the wrong side of the road; 4 improper passing; 5 failure to signal; 6 driving off the roadway.

MAD DOG CYCLES

New York City Health Department records indicate that dog madness or rabies increases and decreases in cycles of about 12 years. The disease dropped to its low point in the present cycle in 1922 and is now rising toward its peak which will probably be reached in 1939. Sunspots or something do it.

OUR STORE

Back of every business there is a policy. It may be the wrong kind—product of some small-dealer type who can see no farther and glimpses nothing but the immediate profit in hand—it may be the calculated line emanating from a board of directors meeting—or it may be a policy dictated by natural human desire to please the customer and get some fun out of the business (as well as an honest profit). The latter is our category—we hope we make you feel at home in our store.

Try an Electric Washer

The summer vacation is nearly gone. School days always mean big wash days. But with an electric washer, you will find it easy to wash twice a week—as many times as necessary to keep clean, fresh clothing for all members of the family.

When you ask your dealer to let you try an electric washer, inquire about the new electric ironer. It is also a time and labor saver that deserves a place in every home where laundry work is done.

Electric washers and ironers have never been more economically priced than today. It is now easy to own them.

SYNOPSIS

the facilities of a little place called Agency, Hal and Kerrigan would have stopped there, for the taste of its name. But Ottumwa was close beyond, and they found clean tourist cabins in a grove of trees beside the Des Moines river, where the hopeful, snug squeaking of crickets in the grass made the gathered evening seem cooler.

The proprietor said that, given time, his old lady would throw together as good a feed, and better, and cheaper, than any they could get in their places uptown. Hal took Raspotin to a garage and supervised his priming for tomorrow. And when he got back, the others were halfway through a meal that had even such intrepid appetites as the Pulsifers' working up-hill. The full buoyancy that Hal had carried through the afternoon still refused to take account of hunger. He did the swift best he could, so that the proprietor's old lady shouldn't be hurt; but when Barry pushed her chair back from the long table and squeaked her lips at Doc, he abandoned the business abruptly and followed her out doors.

Fresh engerness exulted in his blood, tried to lift his body with a hundred different exclamations, urged him to leap and shout out his joy for these hints of immortality. He stopped her walking with his hand, turned her to him and held her while he said, "Barry, we've got to go somewhere—quickly."

In the light from her cabin under the trees, he saw that her smile was slow, the droop of her eyelids slow, weary. "Hal, we can't," she said, as if he had been urging her for a long time. "I couldn't—couldn't tell you what I have to. I'm too tired to be strong. I shouldn't tell you that's hoping, wishing, praying about you that's made me so tired, but I want to tell you. Because I—I— Hal, we can't go. I've got to go in." She moved a little, as if she were going to let her head go against his shoulder. But she stopped herself, and her low, lovely voice murmured, "My darling."

"You don't have to tell me anything," said Hal, shocked by the quiet decision that was trying to rob him of this time he had so surely looked to: "all you have to do is listen to me, to the things I must tell you. You can rest, listening to them—just up there, a little way, by the river. We'll sit against a tree, and when you want me to stop, I'll stop and you can sleep on my shoulder. I promise. If you tell me to, I won't speak again—not a word, not even what keeps on running and trembling in all my nerves, muscles, heart, tongue, everything: I love you. I love you so that—"

"Hal, don't, oh, don't, please, Hal, darling." Her free hand gripped his arm hard, and he couldn't tell whether it shook to enforce what she said or whether the desperation that shivered under her voice was in her body, too.

"Barry," said Hal in severe quiet. "You've got to listen. Why do you frighten yourself? Why do you try to frighten me—before you've let me say what I must say, before—"

Her exclamation was a whimper of fear, and she turned her frantic head toward the cabin. "Sister Anastasia!" The door opened on the neat, lighted room of raw boards, with the nun's silhouette in the oblong. "Yes, sweet?" she said, her modest voice tranquil and soothing as the sound of a little wind among sleeping trees.

"Sister, I just wanted to know you were there. I'm coming now. Please wait for me." She bowed her head as if to see more clearly the joining of their hands in the dimness. "Good night, my darling," she said hurriedly. "I'm a coward—a coward, and I'm so sorry."

She held her hand away from him, and quickly she was at the nun's side in the lighted doorway.

"I'll bet you," said Kerrigan, and the smoking cigarette end in the corner of his mouth looked short enough to burn him. "I'll bet you if we went in to town we could find a something would knock us out from under our hats."

"I'll bet you we couldn't," said Hal listlessly, the echo of Raspotin's long droning in his ears again. "I'll bet you two somethings we couldn't."

"Sir, a wager," said Kerrigan. "Do we ride or walk?"

"Walk," said Hal. "It's not far."

In spite of the fact that he had no use for it, he felt the soft, impermanent refreshment under the stars. It was to him as if, out of a world murmurous with simple expectancy and untangled pleasure in the hushed resting of the night, he were singled out for traffic with divinity and of complicity. It put into plain order of words, it was all so straightforward: he loved Barry; she indicated by every look, every gesture, every shading of her low voice that she was, at the least, ready to love him. So there they were—or should be. If she wasn't sure of herself, she could tell him so; if there was a more definite barrier against her coming to him, it could be spoken, faced, and if not demolished, then circumvented. That was so simple. Barry was candid of nature, as honorable as her golden head, her little body, were lovely; yet she ran from him, left him to a darkened, indefinable complexity in which he felt the restive nervousness of fear and remembered the presence of something impending, something that seemed to prowl in stealth out of the future, vanish into it again when he looked warily to see its shape.

Thank heaven for Kerrigan—good Kerrigan. Hal had started out with him for the purpose of getting a stiff, resolute drink and venting his beleaguered gloom on whatever his companion chose to talk about. But just in walking beside him, Kerrigan's air of unacquisitive well-being, of confidence in the propriety to his soul of anything that might happen, brought Hal's hopes a little away from the dominion of bafflement and left his uneasy brooding to wait.

They went on up the street. Down a half-respectable alley with a wrecking car and some stacks of old tires in it, they came to a door that had "Office" printed on the dark glass; and Kerrigan knocked briskly. A crack opened, revealing bright light on unstirred layers of tobacco smoke beyond a screen, and a dim strip of face that held one steady eye.

"Pete here?" said Kerrigan.

"No."

"Like to see where he works," said Kerrigan.

"He don't work nights."

"Frisky sent us. I've got his penny."

The strip of face vanished and the door swung wider.

It was a small, unpolished room with perhaps four tables and a short bar, a mirror behind that, and on display there a museum collection of old, labeled, but empty bottles.

They sat down at a table, and a dark, competent young man waited without speaking. Kerrigan turned to him pleasantly. "What's the bourbon situation?" he said. There was no particular in which you could have said the young man's expression yielded to Kerrigan's friendly ease, yet it did change; and he said, "We got some stuff here in Kentucky bottles, but you wouldn't call it bourbon."

Kerrigan looked at Hal. "Rye, then?" he said.

"Rye," said Hal.

Kerrigan looked up and said "Rye." The young man stood there watching Kerrigan steadily; he said, "Want some bourbon?"

"Bourbon?" said Kerrigan, with just the right mixture of interest and incredulity.

"Half a minute," the young man said crisply and disappeared through a door beside the bar.

"Now there you are," said Hal sincerely. "If I lived to be a hundred, I'd never have the gift. Here it is fifteen minutes after you decide you want a drink in a strange town, and you not only get it but get something special, almost without asking for it. I need lessons."

The young man came back with a veteran bottle, three-quarters full. Kerrigan read the stained label reverently while they waited for glasses and water. It was bourbon, and not of this decade either; and even before they fastidiously had tacitly acknowledged that this time was ripe for something more than a nightcap, Kerrigan hooked a chair toward him with his toe and swung his feet up on it before he said, on a relaxed key, "It's a good trip; and there's more of it coming to us yet."

"Hope not more of it only," said Hal.

"There's a toast no bourbon's too good for," Kerrigan said quickly, almost as if there were something a little foolish about saying it. "A good trip," he went on, "in spite of something funny, something queer going on that—"

He stopped as Hal's look promptly sharpened. "Maybe you know all about it," he said.

"I don't know a thing about it," said Hal, "but every so often it gives me a scunner, makes me feel something like he's going to happen."

"Y'know," Kerrigan began, watching the young bartender pass to answer a knock at the door, "we had gifts once, a couple of ten-thousand years ago, when we were roaring around Middle Europe in bearskins, looking out for ourselves and making dirt few mistakes—we had gifts then that have got good and rusty since. Sometimes we get some use out of 'em—in hunches, intuitions; sometimes one of those rusty gadgets will get connected—try to do its job—and our civilized, so-called minds can't make out what that bumping is in the collar; it makes us uncomfortable. If you could harness that, even without understanding it—"

The bartender came to their table and leaned his hands on it, looking down at its ring-stained surface. "There's somebody wants in," he said. "Says he knows you two." He looked at Kerrigan.

Kerrigan glanced at Hal in dubious expectation, then up at the young man again. "Don't know anybody here," he said, giving his head a shake that was not quite final. "No. Tell him he's made a mistake; or—wait, I'll look at him." He dropped his feet and heaved himself up reluctantly.

Just talking about it had brought that unsubstantial whisper of premonition somewhere near again; Hal cursed it, and the interruption that left him there alone with it.

Behind the screen the doorlatch clicked and there was a moment of silence. Kerrigan's voice said, "Why, hello there, splash!" and he came back into the room looking gloomily thoughtful. Martin Crack ambled after him, full, smooth-skinned face under tidy hair barely stirred by the slight unassuming smile.

"Sit down, sit down," Kerrigan grumbled at him.

EVERYDAY NEW YORK

BY O. O. MCINTYRE

NEW YORK.—Thoughts while strolling: Ed Wynn's startled look is becoming permanent. What's become of George Lederer? Joke: The count probably thinks Barbara was wool-worth it. Worries of the rich: Billy Leeds has 164 servants in his various establishments. Look-alikes: Collette, the French novelist, and Nina Wilcox Putnam. They will go far to find a deader pan than Joe Lewis's. Horror thought: To become suddenly lost in the Paris catacombs. They are talking how Clare Briggs's daughter Clare is showing her father's pen and ink talent.

Rarely read an Elsie Robinson essay without feeling a little slow. Or dialogue by Dorothy Parker without a murmuring: "Wish I had written that!" A rock skipping name: Sleece Kakardish. Harper's Bazaar's new fiction editor, Beatrice Kaufman, is reminiscent of the paintings of Catherine the Great.

The aristocrats on the cruller shop stools these days. Ad artistic male hands: Walter Howey's, Rudy Vallee's and Milton Holden's. Rex Cole might be a second baseman in the Iowa League. And Sophie Tucker suggests a goose girl Gretchen gone Fifth Avenue Saks.

Frequent luncheon cronies: Bernard Gimbel and Gene Tunney. Few can touch off a Galsborough hat like Mrs. Oliver Harriman. And no one can look so Southern colonish in a white crash suit as George Recter. But it takes Grover Whalen to make a silk hat sit up and puppr.

A meander through East 15th street near the East River the other day revealed a sheep-fold, nine sad-eyed white sheep baa-ing. There was not a soul in sight, but finally a pipe-smoking wanderer with a dog came along. I inquired to whom the sheep belonged. He removed his pipe and nodded toward an imposing building that was the Willard Parker Hospital. Experimentation? Anyway it ripped a shudder.

Ben All Haggins is living for the summer on the estate he inherited from his mother in the Adirondacks. He took with him his old butler who has his Jeeves in the grand days when Ben All Beau Brummel through all the world capitals. And whose studios were the haunts of famous beauties. While his butler was packing for him, he suddenly exclaimed: "What sir? The same fine linen underwear of the good old days. How they have stood the ravages of time, sir!"

The latest in dinner palaces is a restaurant gone classically literary. It is called The Dickens Room, with an heroic canvas of the author in the entrance and many other mementos of the era. The announcement cards declare all lovers of Dickens will thrill to "the atmosphere." And the slogan is quite obviously: "Let's go to The Dickens."

George Buckley was standing by when an excited fellow rushed into the gun room of a Madison avenue sporting goods store and asked to see something efficient in shotguns. He was first shown one of imported English make, valued at $1,500. He declined with thanks. An inland German gun was next shown at $200 and received a negative head-shake. A $300 Belgian make was brought forth. Finally said the stranger in annoyed blurt: "Say, I asked merely for an efficient gun." Then grimly: "After all it's going to be a very simple ceremony."

One of the most interesting displays of fire-arms was in Tom Mix's home in Beverly. The enormous living room was in de luxe cowboy decor with bossed saddles from Argentina and saddles from "down under," fretted with pearl and jangling hand carved silver stirrups. The walls were covered with fan wise displays of guns, pistols and quirts. There was a bridge of Billy the Kid's. Adding to the wild and woolly motif was an indirect lighting effect suggesting a purple horizon in the sage brush. Those who went for a few aside chuckles left with gasps of admiration. The guns and saddles were valued at $125,000. The decorator was paid $19,000.

Frank Tours sat next to a stew in a late suburban train. At the first stop a musician with a bass fiddle got on and sat opposite. The stew eyed him a moment and leered: "You know what? You can't do it!" The bull fiddler maintained haughty silence. Again: "You can't do it!" Asked the musician: "Can't do what?" "Slip it under your chin," was the triumphant reply.

Many Islands in Georgian Bay
Georgian Bay is an extension of Lake Huron; it is about 120 by 50 miles in area, and dotted with more than 30,000 islands, the largest of which is Grand Manitoulin. The bay is an indentation in the coast of Ontario and is entered by a channel 20 miles wide.

BUT ON THE OTHER HAND

A barrister who was sometimes forgetful, having been engaged to plead the cause of an offender, began by saying: "I know the prisoner at the bar, and he bears the character of being a most consummate and impudent scoundrel."

Here somebody whispered to him that the prisoner was his client, whereupon he continued: "But what great and good man ever lived who was not calumniated by many of his contemporaries?"—Troy Times Record.

Eye to Color

An attractive young movie actress was driving her new car when something went wrong with the engine. The traffic light changed from green to red and back to green and still she could not get the car to budge. The traffic cop came up.

"What's the matter, miss?" he enquired. "Ain't we got colors you like?"

Too Risky

"So you're a salesman now, eh, Sambo? Do you stand behind the product you sell?"

"No, sah, I sho don't."

"Why, Sam, I'm surprised at you. You should always stand behind your product. What are you selling?"

"Mules!"

A Good Dodger

Operatic Tenor—Next year I am making a tour of South Africa.

Friend—Have you thought that ostrich eggs weigh two or three pounds?

OFF SCHEDULE

The Boss—Oh, yes; I suppose you're honest as the day is long.

The Job Hunter—I used to be but I haven't figured it out since daylight saving went into effect.

Rash Intrusion

"Do you warn gunmen away from Crimston Gulch?"

"No," answered Cactus Joe. "We've got citizens who have been handling guns all their lives. If any amateurs want to break in and compete with us professionals, that's their lookout."

Facing Competition

"Are you going to speak over the radio?"

"I am," answered Senator Sorghum. "I am aware of art competition. But I am still confident that my ideas on the welfare of the nation are as important as toothpaste or shaving cream."

A Faithful Copyist

"What's the trouble with this letter?" asked the manager. "It's full of repetitions."

"It's quite correct," replied the alert stenographer. "The new man who died tated it stutters."

KER PLUNK!

"I hear you took a disastrous plunge in Wall street?"

"Yes; I was sort of standing on the edge, and someone gave me a tip!"

Proper Announcement

Miss—No, Mr. Smartboy, I am not ready to marry as yet.

Smartboy—Will you let me know when you are?

Miss—Certainly, I'll sent you a wedding announcement.

His Longest Reach

Mother—Son, I do wish you would stop reaching at the table. Haven't you a tongue?

Son—Yes, Ma, but I can reach much farther with my arm.

Improvement

Bejcz—Things are going up, aren't they?

Romh—Yes. I hear $10 was paid for votes at the last election when the old price was only $2.—Pathfinder Magazine.

Idolatry

"Are you an idol of the masses?"

"I hope not," answered Senator Sorghum. "An idol is supposed to be a piece of statuary that can't say an intelligent word in his own defense."

SIMPLER FOODS
ESSENTIAL PART OF CHILD'S DIET

By DR. JOHN L. RICE,
Health Commissioner, New York City.
Every child, from babyhood to adolescence, should be reared according to the cardinal rules of health if that child would be healthy, strong, vigorous and happy. He must have ample sleep, plenty of fresh air and sunshine, and a "balanced diet."

There is nothing mysterious about a balanced diet, for such a diet demands merely plenty of fresh vegetables, fruit, a quart of milk daily, and dairy products in addition to the ordinary staple foods.

Sleep, and plenty of it, is absolutely necessary for the growing child. Tests have demonstrated that sleep actually is almost as important as food. In fact, it has been shown that animals and human beings may go longer without food than without sleep. Physicians agree that a baby should have 12 to 14 hours sleep, every day, until he reaches the age of six. From that year on to ten his sleeping hours may be reduced to ten, and after that he should have at least eight hours, and if possible nine.

Every growing child should also have plenty of fresh air and sunshine. From his first month on up to five or six years he should be clothed as lightly as possible so that the sun will have an opportunity to reach every part of his body. This daily sunbath is needed to tone up the child's system, but care must be taken that he is not sunburned. He then should be allowed to creep, romp or play in the open, and even in the winter he may play in the snow, providing his wet clothing is removed when he enters the home.

The minerals in fresh vegetables, fruits, milk and dairy products assist the child in building up strong bones and healthy teeth. Plenty of vegetables, particularly apples, oranges, bananas and grapefruit, not only furnish bulk to aid in daily elimination, but they give us important vitamins so necessary in maintaining health.

The Road to Better Health

By Dr. William J. Scholes

ANHYDREMIA

During the closing years of the last century mothers considered themselves fortunate if their baby went through the summer season without an attack of anhydremia (the technical term for cholera infantum, or summer complaint). In those times babies died by the thousands of this disease.

Today the condition is comparatively rare. However, it is only through the greatest care that its occurrence is prevented. Were we to relax our watchfulness in the least, the disease would speedily become as rampant as it ever was.

Features of the Disease

The most prominent feature in most cases is the diarrhea. This results in a depletion of the system of its water content and a reduced volume of blood. Associated with the diarrhea is an irritability of the nervous system. These combined factors are responsible for the other symptoms that develop in rapid succession through the short course of the disease.

The most severe type of anhydremia is the distressingly familiar cholera infantum. Here the stools become like rice-water and are almost continuous. The baby has a high fever, loses weight rapidly, and his general appearance undergoes a decided change. All parts of the body cease functioning and unless prompt remedial measures are employed a fatal outcome is inevitable.

The Modern Treatment

All food is withdrawn from six to twelve hours. During this time enough water must be administered to counteract its loss from any and all causes. The infant will require one-fifth of its body weight in water during each twenty-four hour period. Water given just after the baby has vomited is often retained.

The hunger diet should not be continued for more than twelve hours but it produces striking results when sufficient water is given during this time. Nature is the best guide in this as under all circumstances, as shown by the fact that desire on the part of the infant for food is coincident with his increased ability to digest and assimilate food.

When breast milk is obtainable it should be given, as of course it has no superior. But when breast milk is not available a substitute must be resorted to.

The infant will get along best if fed small amounts at frequent intervals—eight to ten feedings in twenty-four hours. At the same time the maximum amount of water must be administered.

The food itself should at the start be of the same strength as that given to a much younger infant. However, such under-feeding should not be continued for too long a period. The tendency of these babies to slip into marasmus must not be lost sight of. All danger of under-feeding is minimized by giving a food containing the least amount of raw fats, a small amount of casein and a proper amount of sugar. Cow's milk, as ordinarily modified, fails to fill these requirements.

THE GEEVUM GIRLS

Sheba's Land

Ethiopian Army Captain in Full Dress Uniform.

Prepared by the National Geographic Society, Washington, D. C.—WNU Service.

ETHIOPIA, a familiar name in the headlines these days, boasts a long and imposing history. The kings of this ancient empire are traced from Orti of A. D. 1035—with time out, natural—fall of the Tower of Babel. According to tradition the queen of Sheba was an Ethiopian. She may possibly have lived in what we now call Ethiopia, and certainly she included it in her extended domain.

Modern Ethiopia includes more than 300,000 square miles of the rich and productive northeastern African plateau. It is mainly a mountainous region, much broken by deep valleys. Arid, semi-desert country surrounds it on every side. It does not touch the sea, although some Ethiopian feudal chieftains like to grasp a marine telescope as they pose for a formal photograph.

In the population there are, perhaps, 5,000,000 Christians of the true Ethiopian (Hamitic-Semitic) type. They are the inheritors of an ancient civilization under whose feudal form of government are estimated to be 7,000,000 Moslems and pagans. The latter are mainly negroes.

The country is surrounded by African colonial possessions of Great Britain, France and Italy. As the Ethiopia of Solomon's time, it probably included all of these adjacent territories, with an Egyptian frontier, and that part of southwestern Arabia known today as the Yemen and Hadramaut.

There is in Ethiopia a very evident mixture of Asia and Africa. Some of the blood came from ancient Palestine, some from Arabia, and some from the shores of the Caspian. Authorities do not agree as to the elements in this African melting pot of races. But the Ethiopian claims with pride a strong relation to the Semites.

Getting Into Ethiopia.

The front door entrance and port to Ethiopia is Djibouti, French Somaliland. The French are commendably responsible for Djibouti. It is the base of their 500-mile railway from the coast directly inland to Addis Ababa, the Ethiopian capital. This railway is Ethiopia's only modern connection with the outside world. Djibouti is, therefore, very important to Ethiopia. It is headquarters for an Ethiopian consul who gives intending visitors their visas.

There are two kinds of trains now on the efficient but expensive little Franco-Ethiopian railway. On Sunday and Wednesday mornings a train leaves Djibouti to arrive three days later in Addis Ababa. Each Tuesday evening departs the "through express," which does the 500 miles in 36 hours. Passengers can sleep on this "fast" train, not in pullmans, but in adjustable seats. On the three-day trains sleeping is done at little wayside hotels the two nights en route.

The first day of this railway journey ends usually at six in the afternoon, at Dire Dawa, the first town of importance after the train enters Ethiopia. It is on the fringe of a plateau 4,000 feet above sea level and a 200-mile climb from the coast. An interesting side trip from Dire Dawa is the old Mohammedan walled town of Harar, four hours away by rough motor trip or a whole day by muleback. Camels, horses, or mules are available as a means of transportation, but the mule is considered the most appropriate for one of actual or apparent high station in life.

The second night of the three-day train journey is passed on the banks of the Awash river, one of the peculiar streams of the world. At this point it is a swiftly flowing river in a deep canyon. Rising on the Ethiopian plateau, it turns northeastward toward the Red sea, but loses itself in the Danakil lowlands short of its natural destination. Awash consists mainly of a small railway yard, a one-story brick building housing a hotel under quasi-Hellenic management, a scattering of native shacks, and many cats. Food and accommodations are simple and the most essential thing is a good mosquito net.

Addis Ababa, the Capital.

The train gets under way again the next morning at dawn and rolls through lovely grass and forest lands, where gallop many herds of gazelles and antelope. Occasionally one sees the dark blur of a rhino breakfasting on the far side of the Awash River canyon. About four o'clock in the afternoon of this third day the sprawling city of Addis Ababa is sighted in a forest of blue gum trees, across a rolling, grassy plain.

A ride of 20 minutes on mule or horseback, or five minutes by motor, takes the arriving traveler to the main part of the city. Addis Ababa has good streets and no "across the railway tracks" quarter. It has also legations, consulates, hotels, many American motor cars, airplanes of sorts, and some presentable business buildings. On one of the two principal elevations of the city is the eye-interesting market place. Here once stood the great tree which served for generations as a gibbet. The other main elevation is crowned by the group of buildings which make up the imperial palace. The most imposing edifice on this designated "Hill of the Gebbi" is the Audience Hall of the Conquering Lion of the Tribe of Judah, constructed of stone and given its high-sounding title by order of the late Emperor Menelik. Menelik claimed his title by virtue of his descent from that first Menelik who was born to Sheba after her visit to Solomon.

Ethiopia claims to be the oldest Christian sovereign state. The teachings of Christ were introduced about A. D. 330 by two shipwrecked Phoenician youths. Before they became Christians, the ruling classes of Ethiopia were adherents of Judaism. Their present church ceremonial retains many traces of that great and venerable religion.

Resources of the Country

After the professions of priest and soldier, agriculture is the principal occupation in Ethiopia. The country is very fertile, though methods of cultivation are still primitive. Many fine beef cattle are produced, and the people are great meat eaters. They have what might be called a ceremonial custom of eating a bit of raw beef as a sort of hors d'oeuvre.

In addition to the ordinary kinds of stock, Ethiopian farmers in parts of the country raise civet cats for commercial purposes. From these animals they obtain a liquid musk marketable to French and American perfumers at $2 an ounce. The chase is also a commercialized industry in Ethiopia, and naturally ivory heads the list of its products.

Many an Ethiopian leopard involuntarily contributes his skin to American feminine fashion. As many as 100,000 of these spotted skins have gone to American furriers in a single year. Also monkey furs are an item of profitable trade. A shy member of the monkey tribe, called the guereza, lives in the trees of the Ethiopian highlands. Their long, silky, black-and-white fur was worn by the Ethiopians as capes until Parisian dressmakers fancied it as a trimming for feminine finery. Lately the Ethiopian government has decided to protect its wild game by requiring the taking out of licenses and payment of hunters' fees.

Where Fine Coffee is Grown.

The Harar district, town and province, is the center of production of cultivated coffee in Ethiopia. The bean produced is of excellent quality and ranks next only to Mocha in world markets. It is called "long-berry Mocha" and is sold to a discriminating clientele in the United States. Although the Harar plantations are descended from seed introduced from the Mocha district in Arabia, Ethiopia is the home of coffee. The tree was found originally by Arab travelers in the Ethiopian province of Kafa, from which it took its name. Seed was taken from Kafa to Arabia, and thence came back to Harar. According to the Arabs, the cultivation of coffee also spread to other parts of the world from the Yemen, in southwestern Arabia.

In Kafa and adjoining parts of southwestern Ethiopia may be seen today vast and virgin forests of coffee of the indigenous variety. It necessarily grows without cultivation or care and thousands of tons of waste berries fall to the ground in waste each year. The outer fringes of some of these forests are worked by natives in sections not too far from export trading centers, where the market value of coffee is known. Egypt buys much of this coffee, shipped via Khar-toum, in place of former importations of the Brazilian product.

Lions are numerous in the Harar district. They are the fine black-maned fellows so alluring to the big-game hunter. Probably other kinds can chew one up just as thoroughly, but the Harar fellow is particularly respected. When an Ethiopian kills a lion, he has the right to demand a special audience from the emperor and during that to declaim and act out the feat. Afterwards he is privileged to wear the mane and skin as part of his warrior dress.

Two Birthdays
Mussolini Waiting?
Italy's Gold in London
Match This, Mr. Swope

Two important human beings celebrated their birthdays recently. Henry Ford was seventy-two. If you saw him going upstairs two steps at a time and guessed his age, you would say, at most, fifty-five.

Mussolini has just celebrated his fifty-second birthday. You may spend a profitable three minutes contrasting those two leaders of men in your imagination's eye.

Henry Ford has made millions of people independent of the law of gravitation.

History will tell exactly what Mussolini has done. His test lies in the future.

The London Times and Universal Service announce a clash between Ethiopians and Italians, 20 Ethiopians and 40 Italians, killed, a stream supplying the Italian camp turned in a new direction and the Italians compelled to retreat.

"Rome" has no information on this incident.

Perhaps Mussolini, who knows that war should supply only good news, is waiting to add something such as: "Air bombardment of Addis Ababa has inflicted swift retribution for the killing of 40 Italians."

Italy has $100,000,000 in gold stored in London and can't get it. Why can't Italy get that gold? England says to Italy, "When you pay the money you borrowed in the war, you can have your gold."

Britons are practical. When they lent money to Italy they said, "Send along your gold; not that we question your honor, but as a mere formality."

Too bad this simple-minded country didn't think of that when it shipped $100,000,000 abroad. Perhaps we shall think of it next time, more probably not.

The General Electric company has developed, electrically, a temperature of 13,000 degrees Fahrenheit, announced as "hotter than the sun's 9,000 degrees."

But 9,000 is only the sun's external temperature.

Go to some distance into the sun's interior, where atoms are throwing off electrons to supply us and other planets with heat and light, and you would find a temperature of 40,000,000,000 degrees centigrade. When will Gerard Swope develop that temperature artificially?

Thomas E. Dewey, chosen to fight racketeering in New York, says in a broadcast:

"The criminal underworld plays no favorites. It preys on the public, on industry and on labor alike. Organized labor has been one of its most recent and most tragic victims. Many originally honest and sound labor unions have been slowly but surely infected with the virus of organized crime. Today certain corruptive leaders operate as extortionists both upon industry and upon members of their own unions."

An intelligent group of motorists announce a "safe driving campaign for August," urging automobile drivers to consider safety, particularly in their own cars.

The safest thing would be to send tens of thousands of cars now running to the junk pile, get new cars and live longer. Modern tires give miraculous mileage, but often they look "good for ten thousand miles more" when they have reached the danger point.

In Yugoslavia 20 years ago Alexander Bogar, now living in Minneapolis, Minn., killed a friend in a fight. Wishing to make amends, he offered to marry the widow. That could not be done. He has saved $15,000, working in mines, and now offers the money to the twenty-two-year-old daughter of the man he killed. She is poor and will accept.

Attonement by payment is almost as old as murder. There are still countries in which crime may be paid for in cash, the amount depending on the rank of the person murdered.

George, former king of Greece will take the crown if 60 per cent of Greeks vote in his favor. He thinks 60 per cent enough. Once crowned, George might be surprised to find what 40 per cent of Greeks could do.

George Bernard Shaw, in a dispatch to Editor Walter Howey, remarks that both Irish and Jews are not easy to deal with when they are uncomfortable. That applies also to Greeks.

The British forbade shipment of arms from England to Abyssinia, also shipments from England to Italy. An annoyed, the emperor of Ethiopia declines to provide special guards for the British legation at Addis Ababa. The British will send their own guards. They have a way of protecting their nationals.

LORD'S PRAYER IN OTHER DAYS

Language Changes Wrought by Time's Passage.

Few people realize what great changes have taken place in the English language during the last 800 years. Here are specimens of the Lord's Prayer in use at various periods in our history:

A. D. 1158: Fader ur heune, halewede beith thl neune, cumin thl kunerliche, thl wille beoth idon in heune and in erthe. The curyen dawo orlend, gif ous thilk dawo. And vorzif eur detters as vi yorsifen eur dettours. And lene us nougt into temptation, but delyeur us of evel. Amen.

A. D. 1300: Fader ure in hevene. Halewyn be thl name, thl kingdom come, thl wille be done as in hevene and erthe. Ous urche days bred gif us to daye. And forgive ous dettes as we forgive ous dettours. And lead us nor in temptation, bote delyeur us of yvil. Amen.

A. D. 1370: Oure fadir that art in heunes, hallowid be thl name, thl kingdom come to, be thl wille done in erthe as in heune, geve to us this day ous bred ous other substance, forgene to us ous dettis as we forgave to ous dettours, lede us not into temptation; but delyeur us yvil. Amen.

A. D. 1524: O ous father which arte in heven, hallowid be thy name. Let thy kingdom come. Thy wyoll be fulfilled as well in earth as it is in heven. Give us this daye ous daily brede. And forgive us ous trespasses, even as we forgive ous trespassers. And lead us not into temptation but delyeur us from evel. For thyne is the kingdom and the power and the glorye for ever. Amen.

A. D. 1561: Our father which art in heuen, sanctified be thy name. Let Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done as in heaven, in earth also. Give us today our superabundant bread. And forgive us our dettes as we forgive our detters. And lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil. Amen.

A. D. 1711: Our father which art in heuen, hallowid be thy name. Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done in earth as it is in heaven. Give us this day our daily bread. And forgive us our debts as we forgive our debtors. And lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil. For thyne is the kingdom, and the power and the glory forever. Amen.—London Tit-Bits.

RAVENS BACK IN THEIR LOOKOUTS ON BLUE RIDGE

When Edgar Allan Poe was a student at the University of Virginia and passed holidays tramping in the Blue Ridge mountains, the gloomy ravens perched on the ledges added much to the supernatural atmosphere of the remote hollows which was absorbed by the young poet. They were among the most abundant birds of the area.

Within a few generations they had been exterminated, or driven into the fastnesses of the Alleghenies to the westward. Now they are returning to the Blue Ridge. Five ravens have been observed in these mountains within the last year, according to Ruskin S. Freer of Lynchburg college, who previously had seen only one in nine years.

The first appearance of ravens in the Blue Ridge area was reported by Austin H. Clark of the Smithsonian institution two years ago.

The protection afforded by the Shenandoah National park is believed to be one reason for their return. For the last half century ravens have been quite rare in the eastern United States, although in Colonial days they were so common in New York and New England that bounties were placed on them. The ravens were especially obnoxious to farmers because of its attacks on lambs. It would pluck through their eyes into their brains.

Because of the persecution to which the ravens were subjected, according to bird specialists, it is remarkable that any of them survived in the East. They are notably birds of low mountains whose crags afford them good lookouts during the nesting season.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Children's Hobbies

It is wise to allow children to choose their own hobbies, as hobbies that are forced upon them often turn out failures. If the mother can arrange it, she should provide a definite place in which the children can exercise their hobbies. If the hobby is the rearing of animals or birds, the mother should impress on the children that their pets are not toys or playthings, and that they must be loved and cared for. There is a greater likelihood of a hobby turning out a success if the mother gives the child to understand that the success or failure of the hobby depends entirely upon the child.

Scotia Hailed Land of Romance and Memories

All the wild and lovely places of Scotia are full of memories. There is Dunscore, which readers of "Red Gauntlet" will recall is near the ruined tower of Greilson of Lag, and the scene of Wandering Willie's tale, the mounds and stones of Stennis, where Norse gods were worshiped and are buried, the castle of Forres on the journey from Elgin to Inverness, where took place the murder of the king immortalized in "Macbeth," whose keep goes back to prehistoric days, and then there is little Dulce Cor abbey in the country near Dumfries, fragrant with the memories of Lady Devogilla, mother of Balliol, and one of the loveliest figures in Scottish romance. Scotland teems with such haunts.

Some folk dislike bagpipe music, but they have never heard the majesty of "Lochaber No More"—some speak of its desolate moors, but they have never experienced the exhilaration of a grouse party or a "foursome" on those moors; some recall only the witches of Macbeth and forget that Scotland is the home of the "Brownies," so make the mistake of omitting the land from their vacation trip and forget that it is the playground of all the British.—Boston Globe.
