Texas political consultants indicted

Associated Press

A Houston political consulting firm and its vice president were indicted on 64 misdemeanor counts in connection with forgeries found on petitions filed by several Republican presidential candidates for the Super Tuesday ballot.

The indictment against Southern Political Consultants was returned Monday by a Harris County grand jury, said Casey O'Brien, spokesman for the Harris County District Attorney's office.

Meanwhile, Democratic presidential hopefuls Jesse Jackson and Massachusetts Gov. Michael Dukakis stumped the state Monday preparing for the March 8 primary.

Ten Texas Democratic congressmen made stops in seven Texas cities Monday on behalf of Rep. Richard Gephardt, calling him the most electable candidate.

"He can carry Texas because he is on our side on trade issues and he is on our side on the oil import fee," U.S. Rep. Charles Wilson, D-Lufkin, said during a stop in Nederland. "Most of the time we Democrats specialize in glorious ideological defeats. Dick Gephardt will give us a glorious victory."

And Republican Gov. Bill Clements said he likes the idea of Super Tuesday and thinks Vice President George Bush is likely to sweep to victory on the GOP side.

In Houston, the petition indictments named SPC vice president Rocky Mountain, O'Brien said.

SPC was hired by the campaigns of Sen. Robert Dole, former Delaware Gov. Pete du Pont and Gen. Alexander Haig to gather 5,000 signatures needed to get their names on the March 8 Texas ballot. Haig and du Pont have since withdrawn.

Numerous forgeries were discovered on their petitions as well as those of New York Rep. Jack Kemp, whose campaign did not use SPC.

Two Houston teen-agers have said Mountain told them to forge signatures on petitions for du Pont.

"About the only thing I can say at this time is that our client is not guilty," said Mountain's attorney, Joe Bailey.

The firm's president, Kevin Burnette, said Mountain and the firm would plead innocent to any charges.

Republican Party Chairman George Strake earlier decided the names of all candidates would remain on the ballot.

In Austin, Clements said he thinks Bush will carry the South, as well as Texas.

Clements also said former TV evangelist and GOP candidate Pat Robertson will make a strong showing in the South but won't win.

"I see Pat Robertson cutting into everybody's base, whether it's on the Democratic side or the Republican side," Clements said. "Those supporters are fairly solid. It's narrow support, but it's a deep support. I think that he will make a good showing in the primary."

A public opinion poll published Sunday by The Dallas Morning News and Houston Chronicle showed Robertson with 8 percent support in Texas, third behind Bush and Kansas Sen. Robert Dole.

Clements said he likes the Super Tuesday idea because it brings more candidates to the South and forces them to discuss issues important to the region.

"I'm impressed with the amount of time that the various candidates are spending in Texas. I don't think that this level of activity had ever happened before," he said.

"With respect to the petroleum industry, agriculture, education — all of these issues are being ventilated in these discussions."

Fire chief accepts award for rescue

By PEGGY ROBERSON
Washington Correspondent

WASHINGTON — "It was a miracle of love," said Midland Fire Chief James L. Roberts, as he accepted the American Legion Auxiliary's Public Spirit Award here Monday for the rescue of Jessica McClure from an abandoned well.

The award was presented to the fire chief on behalf of all the citizens of Midland.

Appearing at the Auxiliary's seventh annual Awareness Assembly luncheon, Roberts narrated a slide show picturing dramatic, suspenseful moments in the effort to free the little girl last October.

Hundreds of workers contributed to the emotionally wrenching effort that took 58½ hours to free the then 18-month-old girl after she tumbled down a 22-foot water well.

Restaurant owners sent food to the site and neighbors made sandwiches and coffee for workers and hundreds of reporters from around the world. Oil explorers sent drilling rigs, equipment and skilled operators to aid in the rescue work.

The nation's attention was riveted on the scene as television cameras recorded the conclusion of the drama when Jessica was pulled to the surface in the arms of a rescue worker on October 16, 1987. Motorists honked their horns and joyful townspeople set off fireworks that could be heard throughout the town.

Post-holiday layoffs boost January's jobless figures

By ALLEN E. HOWLAND
Assistant Business/Oil Editor

Post-holiday layoffs outstripped the number of workers leaving the labor force during January to account for the usual increase in January's unemployment figures, according to statistics released this morning by the Texas Employment Commission.

Midland's jobless rate climbed to 7.6 percent in January from 6.2 percent in December, while Odessa saw a 1.8 percent increase to 8.6 percent unemployment during the month.

The Tall City's increase was below the statewide increase of 1.6 percent — to 8.4 percent — while Odessa's was a like amount above the jump in Texas' overall rate, according to Joe Hatcher, office manager for the TEC in Midland. "Increases were felt throughout the state," he said.

Texas third in near collisions

DALLAS (AP) — The number of airborne near collisions in Texas last year was the third highest among states, the Federal Aviation Administration says.

California led the nation with 262 in 1987, followed by Florida with 88 and Texas with 86, the FAA reported.

The nationwide 1987 total of 1,056 near collisions was 26 percent higher than the 840 reported in 1986, and was the highest number of near collisions since 1971. The 1987 Texas total was up 14 from 1986.

"This dramatic increase in near midair collisions reveals that we are continuing a very dangerous slide in air safety," said U.S. Rep. Guy V. Molinari, R-N.Y., a frequent critic of the FAA.

The FAA defines a near collision as when planes come within 500 feet of each other.

In one instance last year, a Delta Air Lines flight from Denver to Dallas-Fort Worth International Airport with 190 passengers aboard came within 500 feet of an unidentified aircraft Sept. 1, according to a report the Delta pilot filed with the FAA.

FAA officials said the agency is not to blame for the higher figures. Instead, the officials say, pilots rely too much on the air traffic control system, and the increase in air traffic also figures in the number of near collisions.

Some near collisions occur outside the jurisdiction of air traffic controllers, the FAA has said.

Contractor, geologist seek precinct's nomination

PRIMARY '88

Cox

Wollschlager

EDITOR'S NOTE: This is the third of a six-part series on Republican and Democratic races in the March 8 Super Tuesday primary election.

By FRANK TROMBLEY
Staff Writer

A geologist who has lived in Midland 12 years and a native-born Midland masonry contractor are seeking the Republican Party nomination to run next November for Precinct 3 County Commissioner.

Larry R. Wollschlager, 41, has a bachelor's degree in biology and a master's degree in geologic sciences from the University of Texas at El Paso. Wollschlager owns Wolf Energy, which explores for oil and operates wells.

Gerald L. Cox, 27, who has lived in Precinct 3 all his life, attended Midland High School and has been operating his own contracting business for nearly 10 years.

Wollschlager believes his "extensive scientific and business background" uniquely qualifies him for the Precinct 3 county commissioner position he is seeking in his first political race.

Wollschlager and Cox both believe Precinct 3 has not had the representation on the Midland County Commissioners Court that it should have. "I don't believe the commissioner we now have is speaking up for and getting anything for the people," says Cox, referring to incumbent Democrat Scott Welch.

Wollschlager says roads and drainage problems in Precinct 3, especially in the south and east sections, would be high on his list of priorities. Solving those problems in traditional ways would be expensive, he says, but he believes his knowledge of geology could help find less expensive solutions.

Cox, noting that the $5 fee attached to auto registrations by the county is earmarked for the road and bridge fund, says the road and bridge fund should be equally divided between the four county precincts.

Wollschlager, observing counties now have been granted authority to aid in economic development, believes the Midland County Commissioners Court should take an active role in encouraging economic diversity and more jobs with equal employment opportunities.

Shultz portrays Hussein as 'key player' in peace plan

LONDON (AP) — Secretary of State George P. Shultz turned today to King Hussein of Jordan to back the U.S. drive for Mideast peace talks.

"He's a key, in my opinion," Shultz said. "He has immense standing and a person who's been here a long time. Through all of these issues, up and down, he's a man of experience and judgment."

Talking to reporters on his flight from the Middle East, Shultz hinted he was inclined to return to the region after a NATO summit meeting in Brussels Wednesday and Thursday.

"Nobody has signed up to our proposal, but everybody wants us to keep working, so we will keep working," Shultz said in a departure statement in Israel.

"We will continue our efforts," he said.

After arriving at London's Heathrow Airport, he met Hussein at a private residence owned by the king in central London. Shultz also was to see Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher and Foreign Secretary Sir Geoffrey Howe before flying to Brussels later today.

In Jerusalem, diplomatic sources, demanding anonymity, said Shultz had told Israeli Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir he would return after the NATO summit if Hussein gave at least qualified support to the U.S. proposal.

It calls for Israel, Jordan, and Palestinians to open negotiations on about April 1 on self-rule of the 1.5 million Palestinian Arabs who live on the West Bank and in Gaza. Talks on an overall Middle East settlement would begin by December.

"We are still very much in a process of working," Shultz said as he left Israel.

While in the Middle East, he met with Jordanian officials including Crown Prince Hassan. But only the king, who went to London for dental treatment, can give an authoritative response for the Arab country that occupied the West Bank from 1949 to 1967.

Reagan, en route to NATO talks, pledges U.S. support

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan headed for Europe today to assure the NATO allies they will not be left defenseless. He pledged that America will keep its troops in Europe "as long as Europeans want them to stay."

Reagan, as he left the White House for a two-day NATO summit in Belgium, said the session comes at a historic moment for both East and West.

"For four decades, the combination of a strong common defense and pursuit of dialogue with the East has been a winning formula for NATO," Reagan said. "It is a combination that can lead us to a future of peace, freedom and prosperity for generations to come."

A throng of teen-age participants in the White House Conference on a Drug-Free America, brought to the diplomatic entrance to give Reagan a sendoff, sang "God Bless America" as the president emerged.

Reagan attempted to calm allied fears that the U.S.-Soviet treaty banning medium-range nuclear missiles portends an American abandonment of its long-time commitment to the European democracies.

"That historic agreement was possible because the alliance's steadfast political and military resolve backed up our negotiations with the Soviets," Reagan said.

The NATO allies are also concerned that the force of 326,000 U.S. troops stationed in Europe might be cut due to the U.S. economic budget crunch.

"My Atlantic colleagues and I will rededicate ourselves to maintaining the deterrent that has protected our freedom and prosperity for almost 40 years," Reagan said. "I will repeat to my colleagues my strong conviction that American troops will remain in Europe, under any administration, so long as Europeans want them to stay."

Israelis call for harsh treatment of rioters

JERUSALEM (AP) — Jewish settlers distributed leaflets warning Arabs that rioting in the occupied lands will "bring destruction upon you" and held a protest in Tel Aviv calling for harsh treatment of the rioters.

Earlier Monday, two Palestinians died of gunshot wounds inflicted in clashes with Israeli troops in the occupied West Bank, and two Arabs were wounded by Israeli gunfire in the occupied Gaza Strip.

In another development, Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir on Monday said he did not reject the recommendation of some Cabinet members that the occupied lands be closed to media coverage. "If it becomes clear that indeed it may limit the damage, I would be willing to consider it," he said.

Secretary of State George P. Shultz ended his mission in the Middle East on Monday, apparently without the approval of Israel or the Arabs of his plan for talks on Palestinian self-rule and a settlement of the Arab-Israeli conflict.

Shamir said the mission did not change his positions, but told Israel Television "I hope we will find a common language." He opposes trading land for peace with the Arabs, the essense of the Shultz proposal.

On Monday, some of the West Bank's 65,000 Jewish settlers urged Israel to deal more harshly with rioting Arabs in the occupied lands.

Working at night to avoid clashes with Arabs, settlers also distributed 3,000 leaflets in Palestinian towns that warn of tough Israeli action against rioters. "The recent rioting...will not bring you any advantage. On the contrary, this will hurt you and even bring destruction upon you," said the leaflets distributed by the nationalist Gush Emunim organization.

"Don't be mistaken enough to think we are turning the other cheek," the leaflets said. "The days when Jewish blood was cheap are long gone, as is the day of the slogan 'Slaughter the Jews.' Don't mistake our intention. We are staying here forever."

The settlers caused a traffic jam in downtown Tel Aviv on Monday night, driving around in 100 cars decorated with signs that read: "Political solution under the pressure of stones and terror is a surrender," and "We are fighting for the whole land of Israel," Israel radio said.

According to U.N. figures, 76 Palestinians have been killed by Israelis since violence began Dec. 8 in the West Bank and Gaza Strip, which Israel seized in the 1967 Middle East war.

The latest deaths came Monday when troops shot and killed an Arab in the village of Burin just south of Nablus, the West Bank's largest city.

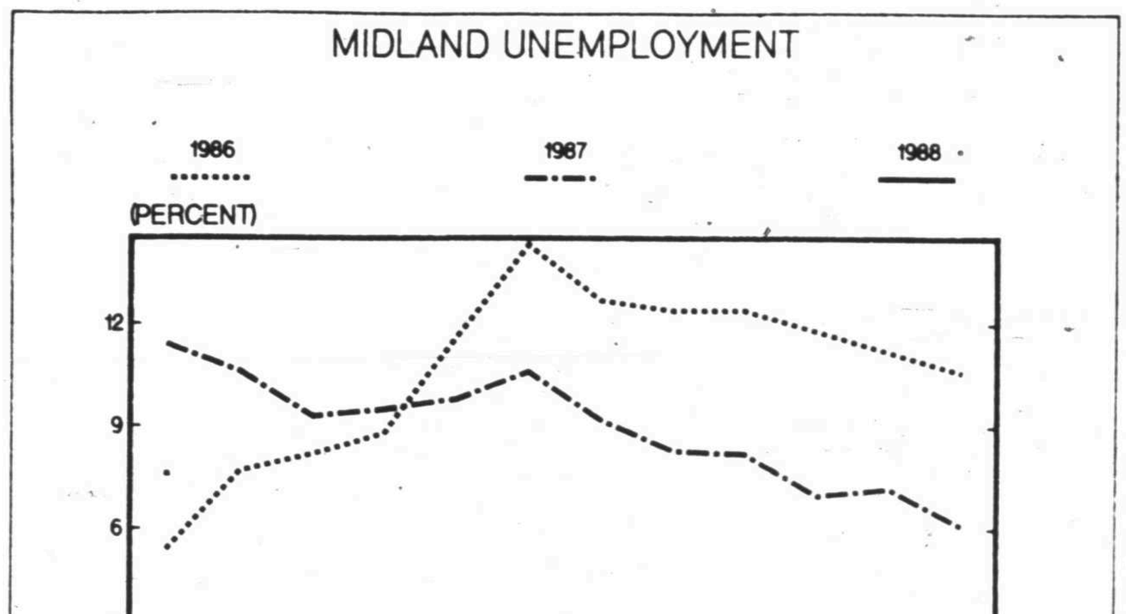
The army said about 50 Arab protesters attacked an army jeep with stones and iron rods and that soldiers fired tear gas and rubber bullets, to no effect, before using live ammunition. Yasser Daoud Eid, 18, died after being shot in the neck, officials said.

Also Monday, a Palestinian identified by the army as 30-year-old Mahmoud Batwi died of a gunshot wound to the head suffered four days earlier during a protest in the West Bank town of Jenin.

Maj. Gen. Amram Mitzna, the West Bank military commander, said Israel had four times as many soldiers in the area as were stationed there before the riots began. In keeping with army policy, he gave no figures.

In the Gaza Strip refugee camp of Nuseirat, soldiers fired at an Arab car that tried to run over them, wounding two of its passengers, the army said.

The wounded were taken to Shifa Hospital, an Arab reporter in Gaza said. He said Salem Mohammed El Kala, 45, was wounded in his shoulder and left leg, and that Ismail Abu Ibttehan, 43, was shot in the right hand and left leg.



JOBLESS

"Seasonal conditions always cause the rate to go up and we plan accordingly," said Hatcher.

Midland registered total employment of 45,300 in a work force of 49,000 during January, leaving 3,700 job seekers out of work. That marked a decline of 2,000 from the total employment of 47,300 in December accompanied by a decline of only 1,400 in the labor pool from 50,400 the month before.

Odessa saw similar trends as total employment declined 1,600 — to 48,800 from 50,400 — as the labor force declined 700, to 53,400.

Students returning to school and workers earning extra Christmas money who exited the job market accounted the most of the shrinkage in the labor pool, while layoffs in the retail sector pushed total employment lower, Hatcher said.

"Some of the seasonal increase in traffic (of unemployment benefit claimants) will last into February, but I expect we'll see decreases again by March," said Hatcher.

Employment and unemployment totals started 1988 significantly better than 1987. In Midland, the jobless rate is down 4.1 points from its 11.5 percent level last January. Total employment is up from 44,600 to 45,300 and total unemployment is down 2,100 from 5,800 a year ago.

Compared to January 1987, Odessa has seen its jobless rate cut nearly in half, to 8.6 percent from 16.3 last year. The employment total has grown 2,200 from 46,600 and the number of jobless has declined 4,500 from 9,100.

Local increases in the unemployment rate were reflected in statewide metropolitan area rankings as Midland slipped from eighth to ninth and Odessa skidded from 11th to 16th, during the month.

The state's highest and lowest rates remained in McAllen and Bryan/College Station, respectively, although each saw increases over December levels. Bryan/College Station's joblessness increased from 4.0 to 5.3 percent while McAllen jumped from 16.4 to 19.6 percent.

Rural counties of the Permian Basin region saw seasonal increases as well, with the largest boost in Reeves County, which was up 3.0 percent to 13.1 percent. Andrews, Winkler and Ward counties had both the smallest increases — 1.2 percent each — as well as the three lowest jobless rates in the region — 5.4, 7.4 and 7.5 percent respectively.

Other increases were Dawson County, up 1.3 percent to 8.1 percent, Howard County, up 1.9 percent to 8.1 percent, and Pecos County, up 2.2 percent to 10.0 percent.

SHULTZ

"King Hussein is a very critical factor in it all," Shultz said aboard his Air Force jet.

He said he would report to President Reagan in Brussels and go back to the Middle East after the summit if "he wants me to."

Shultz acknowledged he had made little concrete progress during four days of talks with Israeli and Arab leaders. While he said he could see a narrowing of differences, "I don't know if I could describe them in a way that would be perceptible to anyone else."

And yet, Shultz said, "Assuming everyone continues the attitude they have to keep working, to keep working, we'll do it."

A senior Israeli official who demanded anonymity said Jordanian officials had surprised Shultz by hardening their insistence on holding an international conference and by abandoning previous support for a joint Jordanian-Palestinian delegation.

Shamir has opposed a U.N.-sponsored conference attended by the five permament members of the U.N. Security Council: the United States, Soviet Union, Britain, France and China. He has argued such a forum would be biased against the Jewish state.

The joint delegation was a key element of U.S.-sponsored peacemaking efforts because it got around Israeli refusal to talking with Yasser Arafat's Palestine Liberation Organization.

Foreign Minister Shimon Peres, speaking to children in the resort city of Elat, suggested that King Hussein sought a PLO role in selecting a negotiating team.

"Hussein says he wants the PLO without Arafat. Let's go along with him on this formula ... PLO, yes, Arafat, no," Peres said in remarks aired on Israel's army radio.

His remarks were initially interpreted as a change in position, but Peres aides said there had been a "misunderstanding."

Peres' spokesman Uri Savir issued a clarification, stressing Peres is against talks with the PLO and was referring to Hussein's position.

REAGAN

As the first full-scale North Atlantic Treaty Organization summit since 1982, the meeting has been touted as a chance for the 16-nation alliance to evaluate its goals and accentuate its solidarity.

But the summit, Reagan said, will not be held for "self-congratulations." Instead, he said, it will be a time for a rededication to the democratic goals that forged the alliance in 1949 in the face of the spread of Soviet influence in Eastern Europe.

"If our common approach to the East over the years has given coherence to our message of peace and world freedom, it has been our unwavering commitment to defend ourselves that has given it credibility," Reagan said.

His first priority, Reagan said, "is to maintain a strong and healthy partnership between North America and Europe."

Reagan pledged anew to forge ahead with attempts to achieve a 50 percent cut in strategic nuclear arms.

RACE

Concerning the new jail that is to be built, both Cox and Wollschlager favor the new structure. But both have some reservations. Cox wonders if the new jail couldn't have been built adjacent to the existing courthouse, perhaps with floors added to the present building if the structure would allow such expansion.

Cox's reasoning is that prisoners would have less opportunity to escape from a 7th floor jail than they would from a ground level structure. "From a six- or seven-story building," he says, "if they jump down, they're not going anywhere except in a pine box."

While he recognizes the need for a new jail, Wollschlager says, "Unfortunately, it's a shame that we spend $12,000 a year for a prisoner and $3,000 for educating our kids." He believes "we need to be giving our kids the best." As Wollschlager sees it, prisons simply represent a costly failure of the educational system.

Cox believes county taxpayer monies could be saved by fine-tuning purchasing practices and paying closer attention to the awarding of contracts to contractors. "As a contractor who has done business with the county and city," Cox says, "closer attention should be paid to the reputations and quality of work of contractors before contracts are awarded."

Cox contends the county is having to spend about $1.8 million to redo plumbing and correct other problems that might not now exist if closer attention had been paid 10 or 15 years ago to the quality of work done.

Having started his own masonry contracting business when he was 19, Cox believes the experience he's gained over nearly 10 years will help assure that Midland County taxpayers get their money's worth from tax dollars spent.

Wollschlager says another of his priorities would be seeing that Midland County spends as much of its money as possible in the area because every dollar spent locally "equals $7 more in the community." Since Midland County Commissioners can have an impact on county spending practices, he said, it is important that voters make sure they elect individuals qualified to watch over their interests and money.

Cox says, if elected to the Precinct 3 position, the citizens of his precinct, as well as other Midland County residents, will receive his "immediate attention" to their problems.

AWARD

Mrs. Pearl Behrend, national president of the Auxiliary, made the award presentation. The citation reads, in part: "...to Chief James L. Roberts and the citizens of Midland, Texas, for their heroic rescue..... A courageous act — a young life saved."

Ms. Behrend said the award previously has gone to cabinet officers and other high-ranking officials. "Chief Roberts, you and the citizens of Midland rank with the finest in our book," she said. "Go back to Midland and give each of the citizens our love and appreciation for all of their efforts on behalf of little Jessica."

Following the award presentation, Roberts was a special guest at a joint session of the Auxiliary and the American Legion where President Ronald Reagan spoke.

Reagan, seeking to assure the group that the recently-signed Intermediate Force Nuclear Treaty (INF) and others agreements will not endanger the North American Treaty Organization, said that NATO "has never been stronger or more unified."

He pledged that "we will never sacrifice the interests of allies and friends in any agreement with the Soviet Union." The president departs Tuesday for Brussels to attend a meeting of NATO leaders.

At the Auxiliary luncheon, Roberts urged a reporter to "emphasize that I accepted this award for all the people of Midland."

AIR

"We have always said that the system is not absolutely perfect," said FAA spokesman Dick Stafford in Washington, D.C. "But we are very, very close."

John Mazor of the Air Line Pilots Association in Washington said that although the number of flights continues to increase, "the system isn't growing anywhere near where it needs to catch up."

Since the air traffic controllers strike in 1981, the number of air line passengers has increased from about 200 million to 415 million last year, Stafford said. He said the number is expected to grow to 450 million passengers this year.

Before the strike, 13,348 full-performance level controllers monitored planes. Last year, the FAA added 400 controllers, bringing the number to 15,400. Stafford said the latest federal budget includes money to hire 900 more.

Molinari said the number of near collisions would likely decrease if the FAA rehired controllers fired during the strike, and has introduced such legislation.

Four killed in fire

LUBBOCK (AP) — Four people died early today when fire erupted in a south Lubbock apartment complex, fire officials say.

The victims were identified by Lubbock police as Stacey Owens, 19, Kenneth Daves, 18, Larry Daves, 17, and one-year-old Tonia Daves.

Fire officials said they have not determined the cause of the early morning fire at the Lorelei Apartments. The fire was reported at 3:05 a.m. by a Lubbock police officer who was on patrol in the area.

About 24 firemen battled the blaze for about 90 minutes before extinguishing it.

Memorial service held for officer

DALLAS (AP) — More than 2,000 people attended a memorial service for slain Officer Gary D. McCarthy, honoring him as a policeman and as a missionary.

Hundreds of police officers, some weeping and others with their badges taped in black, filled the Eagle's Nest Cathedral Monday to honor McCarthy, a former missionary who joined the force 14 months ago.

"He left the foreign mission field but he found another mission field," said the Rev. Clyde Box, pastor of Brook Hollow Baptist Church in DeSoto where McCarthy, a husband and father of two children, attended church.

McCarthy was off duty Friday when he was gunned down trying to stop a robbery attempt at the grocery store where he worked part time. He was the third Dallas policeman killed in six weeks.

McCarthy's funeral will be held today in his hometown of Amarillo.

Police were holding three men in connection with McCarthy's death, but the district attorney's office said none was charged by Monday afternoon. The three were arrested on capital murder warrants.

One of them, Vincent Edward Cooks, 23, was paroled Aug. 4, 1987, from the Texas Department of Corrections less than a year after he began serving a five-year sentence for aggravated assault of a police officer.

Cooks had originally been charged with attempted capital murder after apparently shooting at an off-duty police officer outside the Cartoons Club in Houston.

Houston Police Sgt. V.W. West said Cooks pleaded no contest to the reduced aggravated assault charge and began serving his sentence in December 1986.

Cooks was arrested Sunday at a Houston apartment where he tried to escape from a second-story window, said Dallas Police Lt. Ron Waldrop.

Another man arrested in the case, 23-year-old Tony Ray Harvey of Houston, was paroled from the TDC on Jan. 18 after serving 18 months of a six-year sentence for aggravated robbery and the unauthorized use of a motor vehicle, police said.

The third man, Tracy Dewayne Stallworth, 27, of Irving, has no prior convictions.

Police would release few details in the case.

Harvey was being held Monday on $500,000 bond at Lew Sterrett Justice Center, while Stallworth's bond was set at $100,200. Cooks was being held at Lew Sterrett but bond had not been set Monday night, a jail spokeswoman said.

McCarthy died at Parkland Memorial Hospital Friday evening after the shootout at Brancato's Warehouse market in West Dallas. McCarthy, wearing street clothes, was escorting the grocery store manager from a bank visit when a man jumped out of a car to rob the manager, police said.

After being shot three times, once in the heart, McCarthy returned fire at the attacker and two others in a car before they sped away.

McCarthy's death was the seventh in six shootings involving police this year. In addition to the three dead police officers, four civilians have been killed by police this year.

Two officers — John Glenn Chase and James A. Joe — were killed last month.

Chase, a white officer, was killed Jan. 23 by a mentally ill, homeless black man who had wrestled the officer's gun away on a downtown street as a bus-stop crowd watched. Police said some witnesses encouraged the assailant.

Off-duty police then killed the man in a shootout. Prince later blamed a critical City Council for fostering an anti-police atmosphere in Dallas that led to the shooting.

Judge in Scoggins case being probed

EL PASO (AP) — A judge who set bond at $100 for a man accused of attacking actress Tracy Scoggins has been suspended pending an investigation, Chief Municipal Judge Robert Duran said.

Police Lt. J.R. Grijalva said police have received information that Associate Municipal Judge Rodolfo Romero was a longtime friend of Pedro Concepcion Padilla, who was charged with attempted sexual assault in connection with the attack on Ms. Scoggins, in El Paso to co-host the Miss USA pageant.

But a friend of the two men, who asked that his name not be used, told the El Paso Times that Padilla and Romero have known each other since at least the late 1970s and have played together on basketball and flag-football teams in recreation leagues.

Padilla gave a false name and address when he appeared before Romero and had his bond set.

Romero Monday refused to say whether Padilla is a friend and said he would not comment on any aspect of the case. His phone number is unlisted and he could not be reached by The Associated Press Monday night.

Duran would not comment on the specifics of the investigation, but said if Romero knew Padilla was using a false name and did nothing to stop him, "it would be highly questionable."

"I need to sit down with him and talk to him," Duran said. "I want to find out what happened."

He did not say how long his investigation will take but said Romero "will not be doing night magistrate work for a while."

Padilla could not be reached for comment Monday. His lawyer, Jose Montes, said he could not discuss whether Padilla knew Romero.

Padilla was arrested late Thursday and charged with attempted sexual assault for allegedly attacking Ms. Scoggins in an elevator at the Marriott Hotel.

Ms. Scoggins, who will co-host tonight's pageant, said a man got on an elevator with her, tore her clothes and pushed her into the back of the elevator. She fought the man off and he was detained by hotel guests and security before police arrived and arrested him.

Padilla carried no identification and gave police the name Antonio Garcia, Grijalva said. Romero set bond at $100, which Padilla paid in cash and was freed early Friday.

Thicke, animal rights activist reach agreement

EL PASO (AP) — Actor Alan Thicke says he has made a peace of sorts with animal-rights activists who plan to picket tonight's Miss USA pageant to protest the awarding of furs to the winner.

Thicke, the co-host of the pageant, said Monday that he and protest organizer Bob Young agree that fur-trapping is cruel to animals, but disagree on whether fur farming is cruel.

Thicke also has invited Young to appear on "Animal Crack-Ups," a children's show that Thicke hosts. Thicke ends each show with the words: "Here's hoping you'll be kind to animals."

Young, who is director of the Las Cruces, N.M., chapter of Sangre de Cristo Animal Rights, has said Thicke is hypocritical for hosting the pageant because it awards furs and Thicke describes himself as an animal lover.

Thicke was named the contest's host after 21-year Miss USA veteran Bob Barker quit over the awarding of a mink coat and mink jacket worth a total of $15,000.

Though Thicke and Young seemed to have cooled their war of words, others are heating it up. Both sides of the issue have sent envoys to El Paso to argue their side of the controversy.

George Clements, director of the 7,000-member Association for the Protection of Fur Bearing Animals, flew down from Vancouver, Canada, and held a news conference to demonstrate several leg traps used to catch wild mink, fox, beaver and other animals. He showed a brief videotape showing animals caught in leg traps.

"I believe if any of the young ladies entering this contest could see these traps...I don't think any of them would wear a fur coat again," he said.

But Robert Buckler, executive director of the St. Paul, Minn.-based Fur Farm Animal Welfare Coalition, contended most fur coats are made from animals raised humanely on farms.

Buckler said his group devises guidelines on how to kill fur-bearing animals, and it endorses one method: carbon monoxide or carbon dioxide gas.

"The fur farmer's job is to create a high-quality pelt," he said. "They are well taken care of, because if you treat them badly, the fur deteriorates."

He said about 85 percent of the 4.5 million mink pelts produced annually in the United States come from farms, and about 15 percent come from trappers.

Clements supports Fox's Senate candidacy

AUSTIN (AP) — Gov. Bill Clements says he has encouraged the U.S. Senate bid by Republican Milton Fox, one of four candidates in the party's Senate primary.

Asked Monday during a news conference about the race, Clements replied: "I haven't said anything in particular about that. I have encouraged Milton Fox. I have said that publicly before. I've known Milton a long time. I think he'd make a fine senator."

Fox, a former state House member and unsuccessful 1986 candidate for the Railroad Commission, is seeking the GOP nomination to challenge Democratic Sen. Lloyd Bentsen.

Also on the Republican ballot are Amarillo Congressman Beau Boulter, Georgetown industrialist Ned Snead and Houston businessman Wes Gilbreath.

Family experiences second car crashing through house

BEAUMONT (AP) — It was an all-too-familiar sound, that of a car crashing into the home of Bertha Lane.

It was the second time in recent years that a car smashed into the her house.

Mrs. Lane, 63, and her son, Michael, 28, were preparing to eat lunch Monday when they heard what sounded like an explosion a few feet away.

A car driven by George Minter Jr., 44, of Beaumont, crashed into the house, plowed through a wall and finally stopped in Lane's bedroom.

"It pushed everything from one end of the room to the other end," he said. "The whole house shook...It was a very big sound, like an explosion. I was about three steps away from my bedroom when I saw glass and dust flying."

Minter suffered abdominal injuries and was admitted to St. Elizabeth Hospital where he was listed in guarded condition Monday night. The Lanes were not injured.

A few years ago, another car crashed into the Lanes' home. But that accident didn't cause as much damage as Monday's crash, said Lane.

The second accident has not prompted the Lanes to decide to move. They began working on the damaged walls Monday night.

Lane, a mechanic for a lawn maintenance company, and some friends were working to repair the damage.

A police report estimated the damage at $7,000 to the one-story home and noted that Minter did not have liability insurance.

Heart transplant recipient dies

EL PASO (AP) — A retired Army major who was the first Texan to receive a Jarvik-7 artificial heart has died in a Houston hospital.

Harris Kent, 43, died Saturday at St. Luke's Episcopal Hospital in Houston Saturday, less than two years after the Jarvik-7 surgery was followed with transplantation of the heart of a Beaumont, Texas man.

Kent received the artificial heart in February 1986 and received the heart of the 30-year-old man March 6, 1986.

Kent was hospitalized for a kidney problem, according to John Drissel, Kent's business partner and friend.

"His body was retaining fluids badly, and he went to the hospital to get that checked out. I think the kidney problem was related to his general condition," Drissel said.

"I don't think he ever gave up," Drissel said, adding that he had talked to Kent on the telephone during the past month.

Kent had not been able to resume an active life since the transplant, Drissel said.

The retired major will be buried in Los Angeles Wednesday afternoon, Drissel said.

Kent's heart transplant, the 103rd in the United States, was made necessary by cardiomyopathy, a disease that enlarges and destroys the heart muscle.

Kent, a retired Army major who was decorated four times while serving in Vietnam, was a Texas state pistol shooting champion in 1986.

Opening lead: Five of ♡

Sometimes it seems that there is no earthly way for declarer to bring home his contract. On those occasions it does no harm to run a long suit—there is no telling what pressure that could exert on the defenders.

Note South's simple one spade bid after the overcall. It was forcing, and South felt that he would learn more about North's hand, and the subsequent bidding would be easier, if he did not jump. When North raised voluntarily, South decided he wanted to be in slam if North controlled the enemy suit. His bid over game asked about that, and North cue-bid the ace of hearts in response. South was satisfied with a small slam.

After West led a low heart, prospects were grim. The opening heart lead set up a trick in that suit, and the defenders still held the ace of clubs. A 3-3 diamond split seemed to offer the only hope, but that was distinctly against the odds. Declarer decided to postpone any decision as long as possible, so he won the ace of hearts and proceeded to reel off his trumps, bringing about this position:

When declarer led his last trump, West was caught in an unusual "squeeze without the count." While he did not have to give up any card in a key suit, he could not afford to part with anything other than a heart—his only safe exit. Reading the position perfectly, declarer discarded a diamond from dummy and then led a club. West was forced to win the ace and return a diamond, and declarer took the last four tricks with three diamonds and the king of clubs.

Hepburn had difficult decision

Hepburn

RADNOR, Pa. (AP) — A throat operation couldn't stop Katharine Hepburn from making the upcoming TV film "Laura Lansing Slept Here," but it wasn't an easy decision.

Hepburn said her problem became evident when she showed up for the first script reading last fall in Vancouver, British Columbia.

She opened her mouth and "no voice. Total hoarse. Just a rasp," she wrote in the March 5 issue of TV Guide. "I was thinking: Do it — don't do it.... If I can't talk, then there is no movie — that's a lot of people out of work."

She identified herself as her doctor's Aunt Nora when she checked into Vancouver General Hospital, but "everyone immediately recognized me, and they were trying not to show it."

A day later, she found out the growth wasn't cancerous. It was "just one of those growths that the human body throws out to torment us," Hepburn said.

Carter donned a turban and pretended to divine the contents of sealed envelopes Monday as he imitated "Carnac the Magnificent," the character created by talk-show host Johnny Carson.

The former president was at the Crested Butte ski resort briefly to help raise money for handicapped skiers. He planned to be back in Plains, Ga., today to meet with Democratic presidential hopeful Richard Gephardt.

• • •

NEW YORK (AP) — Former Secretary of Defense Caspar W. Weinberger is joining a law firm headed by former Secretary of State William P. Rogers as a Washington-based specialist in international law and finance.

The announcement was made Monday by the 275-lawyer firm of Rogers & Wells, whose headquarters is in New York.

The firm said Weinberger will not engage in any work involving the federal government, defense contracts or any other matters connected with the Defense Department.

Weinberger served as secretary of health, education and welfare and as budget director during the Nixon administration. He was senior vice president and general counsel of Bechtel Corp. from 1975 until 1980, and became secretary of defense in 1981. He resigned from President Reagan's Cabinet late last year.

SCRANTON, Pa. (AP) — Several months ago, Pulitzer Prize-winning playwright and actor Jason Miller looked at his 80-year-old father and realized theater could benefit from the energy and experience of the elderly.

Miller then decided to start a theater group for senior citizens in this former coal mecca.

"We're talking about the vitality of senior citizens, the intelligence, the talent that's lying dormant because there hasn't been an opportunity to express themselves," he said.

Rehearsals began last week for the group's first play, "It's a Sin to Tell a Lie," written by Miller, who played a priest in the movie "The Exorcist."

"Senior citizens' theater should be as viable and as energetic as children's theater, but nobody has senior citizens' theater," said Miller, winner of a 1973 Pulitzer Prize for "That Championship Season."

The one-act play is scheduled to open April 9 at the Scranton Public Theater and will tour nursing homes in northeastern Pennsylvania, offering senior citizens free admission, Miller said.

MONTEZUMA, N.M. (AP) — A Soviet film crew is making a documentary to honor the 90th birthday of industrialist Armand Hammer, who has been dealing with Soviet leaders since Lenin.

The crew from Gosteleradio, the Soviet Union's government television company, accompanied Hammer to northeastern New Mexico to visit the college he funded here, the Armand Hammer United World College of the American West.

The crew spent a couple of hours filming at the college Monday before heading on to New York with Hammer, who is chairman of Occidental Petroleum Corp.

Gosteleradio requested the one-hour film be made in honor of Hammer's birthday May 21. The documentary is slated to be broadcast the night of May 21 on Soviet television.

Hammer first went to the Soviet Union in the 1920s as a physician to battle a typhus epidemic. He decided the Soviets needed a trade representative more than they needed his medical skills.

NEW YORK (AP) — Actor Eric Roberts was put on probation for six months by a judge who told him to "stay out of trouble."

Roberts, 31, was sentenced Monday for a Dec. 3 incident in which he went to a woman's apartment at 2:30 a.m., pounded on the door and demanded to be let in. The woman instead called police.

Roberts was charged with attempted assault, resisting arrest and other lesser charges after he allegedly took a swing at one of the officers. The major charges were dropped in January, and Roberts agreed to plead guilty to harassment, which is punishable by up to 15 days in jail.

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan has issued an early St. Patrick's Day message, saying he wanted to acknowledge "the world of debt we owe to the Irish people."

Although his message came two and a half weeks ahead of time, Reagan on Monday took note of the March 17 commemoration, saying the Irish people "have created and perpetuated a unique heritage of faith and freedom, of humor and hope, of scholarship and sanctity and sacrifice."

Reagan, who is of Irish ancestry, went on to say: "With faith and fearlessness, St. Patrick brought Christianity to Ireland a millennium and a half ago. The annals reveals the Irish people's eagerness to embrace the faith and to keep it; that trait remains to this day, a tribute to the Apostle of Ireland and to his flock in every generation.

"May America and Ireland always cherish each other and the kinship in which we hold St. Patrick's Day."

WASHINGTON (AP) — Two classmates from Stuyvesant High School in New York won the top awards in the 47th annual national Science Talent Search.

In results announced Monday night, Chetan Nayak, 16, was awarded the top prize for a mathematical analysis of gravitation and electromagnetic fields. He will receive a $20,000 college scholarship.

Janet Tseng, 17, whose project was a study of a parasitic infection common in AIDS victims, was awarded a $15,000 scholarship as the second-place winner.

Panama 'crisis' raising questions

In Panama, we Americans have learned yet again that democratic interests are not served by entering into alliances of convenience with corrupt and brutal dictators. We tolerated the evil excesses of Gen. Manuel Antonio Noriega, defense chief and de facto political leader, because he was deemed useful to U.S. interests. Now, as with Ferdinand Marcos and the shah of Iran, we belatedly realize the malignancy of his influence. He has infected not just Panama, but the hemisphere itself.

Noriega, meanwhile, is not going easy into that dark night where he belongs. Last Thursday, President Eric Delvalle tried to dismiss the general as head of the military, but Noriega loyalists thwarted that move. Most key military leaders pledged their support to Noriega, and the pro-Noriega majority in Panama's Assembly dismissed Delvalle the next day. The Assembly then installed Minister of Education Manuel Solis Palma as president, the country's sixth in seven years. Delvalle is reported to be in hiding in Panama.

As the crisis in Panama continues to evolve, this country needs to react with caution and restraint. We can back the Organization of American States — comprised of 31 nations in the Western Hemisphere — in its efforts to force Noriega to step aside and make way for a democratic government. We can hold in reserve the threat of a trade embargo. We can encourage the opposition movement in Panama, comprised of students, business leaders and church officials.

We have legitimate interests in Panama — the canal, of course, and a Southern Command with 10,000 troops. We can best serve those interests by respecting the right of Panamanians to resolve their own political problems.

However the people of Panama resolve their problems, the crisis itself should prompt fundamental questions in the United States. For example, how did it happen that the U.S. government came to make arrangements with an accused murderer and drug trafficker? Is it inevitable that freedom and stability require support for such characters? Are there more promising strategies for consolidating democracy in the hemisphere?

These are questions that deserve answers, particularly from those men who aspire to occupy the White House for the next four years.

Review 'dismaying'

I must express my dismay with the Feb. 21 review of "South Pacific" by Georgia Temple. The critique of the MCT performance was based on casual, coffee shop discussion between a 15-year-old male and herself. Although Temple undoubtedly felt this would be a novel and interesting manner in which to present a review, I found it considerably less than professional.

To expect a mostly adult audience to accept these remarks as plausible was asking too much. With the exception of Donny Wright as Emile deBecque, no mention was made of the outstanding talent in the musical. The major singing characters charmed audiences with their voices, as did the energetic chorus of sailors and nurses. What a shame to let their performances slide without mention. The detailed sets and screen images projected the appropriate backdrop for the South Pacific location. Had Temple commented on the flat sound of the orchestra for lack of strings or the Polynesian children not looking convincingly Polynesian or other observations, the review might have been credible. But to dismiss the show as "TM (too mushy)" was unacceptable.

Had his been a rock concert, the comments of a 15-year-old would have been both credible and valuable. For a revival of a 1950's Rodgers & Hammerstein musical, an intelligent review required some acknowledgement of the American mind and social condition in the post-World War II era. While it is refreshing to hear that prejudice has decreased among teenagers, I would venture to say that many Midland adults attending "South Pacific" identified to some degree with mixed feelings of Lt. Cable and Nellie Forbush. It is those mixed feelings that director Don Bachman hoped we would confront. Yes, we've come a long way, but there is still a long way to go in accepting all people without regard to color.

I trust that the next review of a play or musical will be based on well-informed and enlightened observations.

Laws 'for' animals

I would like to relate a story about a cute white and black Shihtzu that a friend of mine found running down the street.

The cute little baby had her hair cut and a pink bow tied in her hair. She was blind in one eye and had a brand new collar around her neck, but no tags. My friend put the dog in a dog cage for the night with a blanket, food and water.

During the night the dog escaped and was never seen again. If the owner would have had tags on the little dog, she could have been back in her owner's arms that night.

I support the City of Midland Animal Control and the law for city tags.

This incident is only one of many we hear about from day to day. Some of the laws that are made for us concerning animals are more for the animal's benefit than ours.

The new proposal to limit the number of animals an owner can have without a permit is for animal welfare, not people.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Tuesday, March 1, the 61st day of 1988. There are 305 days left in the year.

Today's Highlight in History:

On March 1, 1932, the infant son of Charles and Anne Lindbergh was kidnapped from the family's home near Hopewell, N.J. Remains identified as those of the baby were found the following May. Bruno Richard Hauptmann was tried, convicted and executed for the infant's murder.

On this date:

In 1790, the first U.S. Census was authorized.

In 1803, Ohio's legislature met for the first time. This event was recognized by Congress in 1953 as the official date of Ohio statehood.

In 1884, Rebecca Lee became the first black woman to receive a medical degree, from the New England Female Medical College in Boston.

In 1867, Nebraska became the 37th state of the Union.

In 1872, Congress authorized the creation of Yellowstone National Park.

In 1954, an armed group of Puerto Rican nationalists, firing wildly from the gallery of the House of Representatives, wounded five congressmen.

In 1967, U.S. Rep. Adam Clayton Powell of New York, accused of misconduct, was denied his seat in the 90th Congress. In 1969, the U.S. Supreme Court ruled that Powell had to be seated.

In 1981, Irish Republican Army member Bobby Sands began a hunger strike at the Maze Prison in Northern Ireland to demand political status for Irish nationalist prisoners. Sands died 65 days later.

Ten years ago: Four people were killed and 70 injured when a Continental Airlines DC-10 blew two tires during takeoff and skidded off a runway at Los Angeles International Airport.

Ministers may win Super Tuesday

WASHINGTON — The jackpot winners of Super Tuesday's presidential primaries will probably be the two preachers — the Rev. Pat Robertson and the Rev. Jesse Jackson.

Jack Anderson

Neither has scored higher than 15 percent in any poll of the electorate. But the winners on Super Tuesday will be determined by the turnout, not the polls.

Both Robertson and Jackson generate intense loyalty, and their supporters are more likely to participate in the primaries than those of the other candidates.

Until the Iowa caucuses, the news media had largely dismissed the two evangelists as outsiders too isolated to be taken seriously. No one ever thought the GOP walls would crumble before Robertson's trumpet. Jackson was regarded as a radical-at-large, a counterculture hero who would be rejected by the moderate majority.

But last year we began reporting that Robertson and Jackson, despite their small national followings, could win most of the presidential primaries and force themselves on their party conventions. We cited some startling arithmetic: that only 19 percent of the eligible voters bothered to participate in the 1984 presidential primaries, that the winning candidates got an average 6.8 percent of the eligible vote, and that Walter Mondale won the Democratic primary in New York state with only 4.7 percent of the registered vote.

We pointed out what this meant: A candidate with a small, dedicated following need turn out only seven or eight of every 100 eligible voters to win an average primary, and, in many states, both Robertson and Jackson had enough irregulars to out-vote the other candidates' regulars.

In Iowa, Robertson "surprised" the experts by attracting enough irregulars to the GOP caucuses to win second place. In New Hampshire, he had no organization and only a limited evangelical base, and he did poorly. But it's the Southern Bible Belt where Robertson's "invisible army" of Christian soldiers should materialize.

Robertson will probably win the South Carolina primary on March 5. This should give him momentum on the eve of Super Tuesday, March 8, when 19 states will choose their convention delegates.

Robertson's fundamentalist followers can be found in both political parties. Since party-switching is allowed by most Bible Belt states, many Democrats can be expected to cross over and vote for him. He also has a volunteer organization that can match any other campaign organization down to the precinct level.

We also anticipate that Jesse Jackson will be able to round up enough black voters, poor white farmers and factory workers to win several Southern states. He hails from South Carolina and speaks their language.

In Iowa and New Hampshire, Jackson proved that he can also appeal to white liberals, intellectuals and workers, particularly those on slippery economic ground. He has campaigned in all 14 Southern and border states, generating so much free publicity that he hasn't needed to dip deeply into his campaign funds.

Our sources say he is so confident of his staying power that he is planning his biggest campaign push in the last of the state primaries — California's.

STUDENT DEBT — The taxpayers are holding notes on more than $1 billion in loans to nursing and medical school students. About $127 million worth of the loans are delinquent, according to General Accounting Office investigators. The schools are supposed to act as collection agents, and to make good on the loans when the students fail to pay up. But the system isn't working because the government hasn't established guidelines that determine when loans become delinquent. Because money from repaid loans is used for new loans and grants, the pool of funds for medical and nursing students is dwindling.

• • •

DISSIMILAR SIMULATORS — The military services have wasted millions of dollars on the development of electronic devices designed to simulate Soviet weapons and radar systems, according to an investigative report that recently landed on Defense Secretary Frank Carlucci's desk. The biggest problem is interservice rivalry. Since 1980, for example, the Army, Navy and Air Force have spent more than $561 million to develop six different simulators of a single Soviet air defense system. Duplication of efforts on 23 additional simulators during the same time cost another $800 million.

MINI-EDITORIAL — We don't know about the secular part, but we cheerfully admit to a streak of humanism. This may explain our attitude toward Jim Bakker, Jimmy Swaggart and other sermonizers who have supped at Satan's table. If they didn't build their pedestals so high, they wouldn't have so far to fall.

Robertson stumbled while attacking Bush

COLUMBIA, S.C. — The smile was warm and the tone soft and unhurried, but Pat Robertson's words dropped like hammer blows when he accused George Bush's campaign last Tuesday of such ridiculous political crimes that Robertson's supporters were worried.

"I'm almost afraid to open the papers anymore," Carole Wells, the hard-driving Robertson coordinator in Spartanburg County and highly respected state legislator, told us over coffee shortly after Robertson's diatribe against the vice president. Another Robertson insider agreed: "It isn't the way I'd run a campaign."

Why, then, did Robertson explode at Bush? The answer goes to the heart of what ails the preacher-turned-politician. Unlike the words that poured forth from his old CBN television pulpit, completely free of scrutiny by the press, every word issuing from his mouth as a presidential candidate gets instant analysis from the media, his political adversaries and his critics.

Because it is late for Robertson to be learning the cost of his poisoned arrows, that cost could be high. The charismatic evangelicals, for sure, are going to stay his — heart and soul — no matter how irresponsible he is. But his target is not them. His target is what one state party leader calls the "larger sphere" of the real Republican world, out there far beyond the evangelical base. Failure to penetrate that world means failure for Pat Robertson.

He got almost 50,000 signatures on his petition drive last year, most of them evangelicals. But if the turnout in the March 5 primary, three days before Super Tuesday, reaches the record 165,000 to 200,000 expected, his necessity to broaden that base is urgent, to say the least. Without attracting conservative Republicans, Robertson cannot possibly do better than a strong second to the vice president in the state that gives him his best chance anywhere.

Rowland Evans
and Robert Novak

The well-worn Robertson bludgeon, first employed against Rep. Jack Kemp in Iowa and New Hampshire, was ineffective when Robertson turned it on Bush. No attack based simply on innuendo could make the case of conspiracy in the timing of the Swaggart scandal or succeed in charging "dirty tricks" in a campaign that has no "nice people" in it. Nor has Robertson given even faint proof that Bush has a secret strategy to use "religious bigotry" against him.

Such campaign tactics infuse the candidate with a certain weirdness, making it far more difficult to get himself perceived as a trusted, bona fide future president. They frighten and turn away the very mainstream Republicans Robertson desperately needs. They place out of reach that "larger sphere" without which he cannot move into the mainstream.

Robertson can rightly say that he was the victim of heavy political infighting when Kemp switched sides in Michigan, and that party regulars tried to put off the Hawaii precinct caucuses when they realized Robertson's strength. But if he regards his charges against Bush as acceptable retaliation, he exposes himself as politically ignorant and even silly.

He made similar trouble for himself when he retooled a speech prepared for Sen. Jesse Helms that made a strong case for on-site inspection of possible offensive missiles in Cuba. His conversion of that carefully researched speech into a charge that SS-4s and SS-5s are now in Cuba made him a laughing stock.

Even Robertson backers here say he sometimes seems comatose in failing to understand the political significance of his words. Last month he stunned his supporters with a sudden attack on tobacco subsidies the day before his first campaign visit to the state. His call for gradual reduction of federal payments to tobacco growers dominated the headlines throughout that visit, enraging tobacco farmers.

In his more coherent periods, Robertson's political message is aimed at elevating his candidacy over his evangelical base. Before a crowd that almost filled the ballroom of the Executive Suites hotel here last Monday evening, school prayer, drugs, abortion and family issues came last. His major theme was nationalistic and patriotic. He warned of new dangers from "global communism," attacked the INF missile treaty and denounced Reagan administration policies that, he said, have exploded textile imports from Communist China and the Soviet Union.

The crowd, which included a sprinkling of wheelchairs and many babies in their mothers' arms, roared approval when he spoke the most protectionist line heard from any Republican presidential candidate: "I am not going to let American workers lose their jobs so that Communist Russia and Communist China can have a prosperous economy."

Talking up the big dramatic issues of foreign policy and national security makes sense for the former pulpit pastor. "That's what he needs," one Robertson aide told us. "It puts him closer to the mainstream."

But he has not come into the mainstream yet and if he does not master his tongue he will be moved farther away. He constantly raises his stake here by calling South Carolina "key, absolutely crucial" to his candidacy, but his stumble on the sins of George Bush have made it a harder state to win.

LEWIS GRIZZARD

Even God would watch Jimmy Swaggart!

I was down in Baton Rouge a few months ago and somebody from the Chamber of Commerce, upon my request, took me out to see evangelist Jimmy Swaggart's place, which is located a four-iron from the plush new Country Club of Louisiana.

Grizzard

You can't actually set foot on Jimmy's spread, of course. There are guards to keep you out, not to mention a wall around the estate that locals report cost $600,000 to build.

I've seen bigger spreads than Jimmy Swaggart's. I was at Peter the Great's palace outside Leningrad once.

But Jimmy hasn't done badly to come in second to a czar. Swaggart has his own college and it's located in Baton Rouge, too. It already takes up more acreage than nearby LSU and continues to expand.

How does Jimmy Swaggart make enough money to afford a modern-day palace, to have an expanding college, to have a wall that costs more than a lot of people make in a lifetime?

You know the answer to that question if you have caught Rev. Jimmy on the television. His cousins Jerry Lee Lewis and Mickey Gilley went to country music and made their fortunes.

Jimmy went to thumping the Bible.

He can hold that open Bible towards the sky with one hand, pull the microphone close to his mouth with the other, shout a little, cry a little, yell "Hallelujah," a little, and even dance a little and set your soul to soaring.

"I'm washed in the blood," Jimmy will scream.

"I'm Christ-lovin', Bible-believin', heaven-goin'," he can bellow in that half-crying voice of his and the multitudes will come to their feet and grab for their checkbooks.

Nobody — not Falwell, not Robert Schuller, not even Ernest Angley — can do it like Jimmy Swaggart.

And so the millions who watch him, love him, believe him, and for whatever their reasons, send in the cash by the bushel loads because that's something else Jimmy can do better than any of the rest of them. Beg for money.

"I'm pleadin' with you tonight," the raspy voice, ever so close to breaking, entreats. "We're losin' $75,000 a day. I've got to have ten million before May 1st before this ministry is lost."

And he gets it.

Jim Bakker didn't survive his fall from grace. He was caught messing in the wrong pew and couldn't slide under the door and regain his hold on those who sent in the cash to him.

But I'm not sure Swaggart, who's now accused of his own dalliances, won't figure out a way to wiggle-snake his way out of his troubles.

And as much as I would like to see all these heaven-hustlers out of business, I've got to admit I'd miss Brother Jimmy if he were gone.

He's the hardest working man in the religion business. He is great theater. He's the Boss.

God may talk to Oral Roberts and move hurricanes around Pat Robertson, but I'll bet he tapes Jimmy Swaggart.

Report indicates Waldheim knew of deportation order

UNITED NATIONS (AP) — While serving in the German army, Kurt Waldheim forwarded a request for the mass deportation of Greek civilians to labor camps in 1943, according to a key Nazi document.

The authenticity of the document, found in the U.S. National Archives and made public Monday, was confirmed by U.S. Justice Department spokesman John Russell. He said it was among the crucial documents on which the government based its decision to place Waldheim, now Austria's president and formerly U.N. secretary-general, on a list barring him from entering the United States.

Under the Nuremberg Charter adopted at the end of the war, deportation of civilians is both a war crime and a crime against humanity. When the U.S. Justice Department barred Waldheim from the United States, it said he had "assisted or otherwise participated" in "mass deportation of civilians."

Waldheim has repeatedly declared he is innocent of any war crimes.

The document is a message between German army officers in the Balkans in World War II and indicates the information was received by radio by Waldheim, who signed its transcription and forwarded it on Aug. 15, 1943.

Waldheim at that time was a lieutenant serving as deputy operations officer of the German General Staff attached to the 11th Italian Army in Athens.

The communication from a German army field officer was addressed to his headquarters and said there is "hope of success only if all male civilians are seized and deported" in the area in northern Greece where his division was operating. It also said "cleansing operations are deemed necessary."

Nazi "cleansing operations" often meant the destruction of towns and deportation or execution of their inhabitants.

The Nazi document was made available to The Associated Press by the World Jewish Congress in the original German text, with excerpts in English.

The World Jewish Congress said Waldheim did not authorize the deportation of the Greeks to labor camps in Germany but that he was aware of the plan.

It also said a deportation order later was countermanded by an Italian commander whom the congress did not identify.

The army document also said the "Jewish Committee" operating in the town of Joannina, Greece, "must be regarded as a center of preparations for a resistance movement."

The World Jewish Congress said that in March 1944, the Nazis deported 1,860 Jews, virtually the entire Jewish population of Joannina, to the Auschwitz death camp in Poland.

An international commission of six historians appointed by the Austrian government reported last month that Waldheim was "in close proximity" to some Nazi atrocities in the Balkans, knew they were going on and made no attempt to prevent them. The report did not support allegations made by various groups, including the World Jewish Congress, that Waldheim was involved in war crimes.

Waldheim, who has rejected calls for his resignation from the presidency, said the report vindicated him.

The Austrian government has protested that the United States did not disclose the documents on which it based its decision to bar Waldheim from entry. Washington responded by saying its investigation was based on documents available to Waldheim and he could appeal the decision. He has not done so.

According to the World Jewish Congress, the field officer's request for the deportation of Greeks was sent to a Gen. Gyldenfeldt, who approved the action, although it was not carried out.

The general was quoted as saying, "Concerning the rounding up of the male civilian population, clarity should have been created by the recent order of the Commander-in-Chief Southeast."

The executive director of the World Jewish Congress, Elan Steinberg, said the document signed by Waldheim was located by congress researchers at the U.S. National Archives in 1986 and turned over to the Justice Department.

Reporters asked why the document was not made public until Monday. Steinberg said there is now increasing interest in why Waldheim was placed on a list barring him from the United States.

Panama strike seems to have failed

PANAMA CITY, Panama (AP) — A general strike protesting the regime of Gen. Manuel Antonio Noriega failed to halt transportation and most commerce in the capital, but organizers predicted it would gather momentum.

An apparent lack of faith in the effectiveness of mass action conspired against the strike's success on Monday, which was payday for many workers.

The strike appeared to be somewhat more effective in industry.

The government said the strike — called to demand Noriega's ouster as head of Panama's 15,000-strong Defense Forces — had been a failure.

"There's fear," said a middle-aged bank employee as he got off a bus Monday. "We lack unity to confront these people, who have all the arms."

"The people don't have means to resist," said a woman, a domestic employee, who was walking with him.

The pro-government newspaper Critica carried a banner headline Monday saying, "A Store Closed Is A Store Seized." Strike leaders said the government made that threat to many businessmen.

Carlos Gonzalez de la Lastra, a businessman and strike organizer, claimed the action had shut down 95 percent of manufacturing and construction in the capital and seriously damaged the financial industry.

Speaking to reporters Monday night, he said five of Panama City's roughly 120 banks had closed and there were slowdowns at banks that remained open, resulting in a 40 percent loss of business.

Gonzalez predicted additional closures and greater employee absenteeism today. Banking is a pillar of Panama's economy, which is largely based on service industries.

Gonzalez also said a first-ever work slowdown began Monday at the canal, a claim denied by the Panama Canal Commission. He predicted the slowdown would widen today.

The strike was called Friday hours after Noriega orchestrated the ouster of President Eric Arturo Delvalle and made former Education Minister Manuel Solis Palma the country's new chief of state.

A day earlier, Delvalle ordered Noriega to step down in light of the general's federal indictment in Florida last month on charges of trafficking in Colombian cocaine.

Delvalle, who the Reagan administration continues to recognize as president, went into hiding Fridsy night in Panama. He is a leading proponent of using economic pressure to force Noriega from power.

Solis Palma denied that the strike had been successful.

"Look around you," he said Monday afternoon. "More than 60 percent of the country is operating."

A majority of businesses were open in the commercial district that caters primarily to middle- and lower-class shoppers. In the banking district and other areas where fancier shops cater to tourists and wealthier Panamanians, most businessmen kept their doors closed.

Gonzalez said the strike would continue at least through Wednesday.

It was the sixth general strike called by the opposition National Civic Crusade since last June, when it began its campaign to oust Noriega after the general's former second-in-command went public with charges Noriega was involved in election fraud, corruption and political assassination.

Only the strike in August was successful.

Solis Palma and Noriega appeared at a rally Monday night in San Miguelito, a working class neighborhood just outside the capital.

The new civilian leader of the government Noriega has run since 1983 spoke briefly to the crowd of about 3,000 people, most of them women.

He admonished the United States to halt its "aggression," claiming "anti-imperialism" is on the rise in Latin America.

Officials say economic sanctions symbolic

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan's imposition of economic sanctions on Panama for alleged drug running is merely symbolic because the penalties prescribed under U.S. law already have been applied against the country, according to U.S. officials.

The formal application of the drug trafficking sanctions law, expected today, will have little effect on Panama, an official said Monday.

Under a 1986 law, Reagan is required to take punitive measures against countries found uncooperative in curbing drug smuggling to the United States. Countries which are "decertified" are subject to the penalties.

Today was the deadline for the announcement of Reagan's findings.

Mexico also is a major source of illicit drugs but officials said that country was found by Reagan to be cooperating in drug enforcement efforts and therefore not subject to punitive action. Colombia, another major drug producing nation, also will not face sanctions, according to CBS News and Washington Post.

U.S. officials, who spoke on condition they not be identified, said the law specifies that offending countries are not entitled to U.S. economic or military aid nor to U.S. support for their loan requests in international lending institutions.

They noted that bilateral U.S. aid to Panama was suspended in 1987 as part of a general deterioration in relations with the Central American nation's military strongman, Manuel Antonio Noriega, who has been indicted on drug smuggling charges by two Florida grand juries.

In addition, the United States has not backed Panamanian loan requests in international banks because the country is behind in its repayments on earlier loans, the officials said.

However, they said other types of sanctions are possible. They said government lawyers are reviewing Panama's continuing eligibility in a U.S. tariff preference system for Third World countries and in the Caribbean Basin Initiative, which is aimed at improving access of products of the region to U.S. markets.

The pending announcement on Panama's lack of cooperation in drug enforcement carried heavy political overtones, given the dramatic developments over the past few days.

The administration has refused to extend recognition to the new Panamanian government which took office following the ouster last Friday of President Eric Arturo Delvalle.

Delvalle was deposed by Noriega's allies in the National Assembly after the president tried to fire the defense chief. The Reagan administration continues to look on Delvalle as Panama's constitutional president.

The new government has named a U.N.-based envoy to replace Delvalle's ambassador, Juan B. Sosa, but Sosa refused to relinquish the embassy. The appointed successor, Leonardo Kam, showed up at the embassy on Monday and left after what he said was a "frank" exchange with Sosa.

Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., introduced a Senate resolution urging additional economic sanctions against Panama, including a trade embargo. Kennedy's resolution also asks that the United States cut off all contacts with Noriega because he is "no longer the lawful commander" of the Defense Forces.

In a brief speech on the Senate floor, Kennedy said Noriega "is a threat to peace and security in the region."

"When a drug trafficker gets control over the governmental powers of a nation, it's a threat to other nations," Kennedy said.

Sen. Alfonse D'Amato, R-N.Y., said the administration should go much further than it has in pressuring Noriega to step down.

"This business of let's go slow, let's exercise restraint and caution, that is what has produced the situation. We've been going cautiously with this gangster for 20 years," D'Amato said.

WORLD IN BRIEF

Marine to go on 'trial'

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Kidnappers of a U.S. Marine officer said in a statement released today they are determined to put him on "trial" for espionage.

The typewritten Arabic statement from the Organization of the Oppressed on Earth, said the "trial" would begin once the interrogation of Lt. Col. William R. Higgins, 43, was completed.

The statement, delivered to a Western news agency, said Israel's crackdown on Palestinians in the West Bank and Gaza Strip and the Middle East trip of U.S. Secretary of State George P. Shultz "make us more determined to try this criminal, Higgins."

"This will be done after the completion of the investigation to make the world understand that any hand that reaches out to hurt (our) pride, Islam, or the dignity of our people will be chopped off," the statement said.

The group has alleged Higgins worked for the U.S. Central Intelligence Agency. Both the United States and the United Nations denied it.

Higgins of Danville, Ky., was serving with the United Nations in south Lebanon when he was kidnapped Feb. 17.

American petitions queen

BRISTOL, England (AP) — An American denied a first-class honors degree from Bristol University after he was accused of cheating petitioned Queen Elizabeth II, saying he's honest and is not getting a fair appeal hearing.

The London Times said Francis Foecke, 30, of South Bend, Ind., has spent the last 21 months and $53,100 trying to clear his name after writing his final exams in mathematics and computer science at the school in Bristol in June 1986.

When Foecke went to pick up his results after the final exams, the university registrar told him he was suspected of cheating and would not receive the degree.

He was told his answers too closely mirrored the lecturers' model answers and that he even had repeated their mistakes in the mathematical equations.

Foecke said he worked up to 18 hours a day for more than a year preparing for the exams and that he used the methods taught by his lecturers.

The Times said university authorities believe Foecke may have stolen a key to get into an office where the papers were stored.

Foecke's lawyer Guy Dorman said Monday: "We are petitioning (the queen) on the grounds of a breach of natural justice."

Iraq claims Tehran attack

NICOSIA, Cyprus (AP) — Iraq said today it fired 14 surface-to-surface missiles of its own design and production into the Iranian capital in a 24-hour blitz lasting late into this afternoon.

Iran vowed revenge and said one Iraqi strike killed 16 people when it struck a Tehran hospital. At least one other fatality was reported in the Iranian capital.

Iraq said it began firing the missiles into Tehran Monday afternoon in retaliation for two pre-dawn missile strikes on Baghdad, the Iraqi capital.

Iran initially reported its capital of 6 million people was under attack by Iraqi warplanes. It later said missiles had struck the city.

One person was killed and several wounded this morning by a missile that destroyed or damaged several houses and shops in Tehran, Iran's official Islamic Republic News Agency reported.

IRNA said at least 16 civilians were killed and dozens wounded, "including newborn babies," when the hospital was hit Monday night.

Nicaragua lists casualties

MANAGUA, Nicaragua (AP) — The Defense Ministry claimed 229 Contra rebels and 90 soldiers loyal to the leftist Sandinista government were killed in 4,801 combat engagements in February.

A statement issued Monday night said 39 civilians also were killed, 55 injured and 115 kidnapped during the period.

The statement said U.S. Air Force planes violated Nicaraguan airspace 13 times. It said other planes, mostly leaving Honduras to resupply the Contra rebels, were detected 35 times in February.

The Contra rebels, trained and supplied by the United States, have been fighting to oust the Sandinistas since November 1981.

Food poisoning kills 21

JAKARTA, Indonesia (AP) — Twenty-one people died of food poisoning in the the central Java district of Banyumas after eating fermented soybean cake, a health ministry official said today.

The official, who spoke on condition of anonymity, said 40 others remained hospitalized in serious condition.

The officials said the dead and hospitalized were among 260 people in the village of Dermaji, 300 miles southeast of Jakarta, who required medical treatment over the past two weeks after consuming the cake.

ERNEST ANGELO, JR.
Petroleum Engineer
410 NORTH MAIN
MIDLAND, TEXAS 79701

February 3, 1988

The 1988 Republican Primary election on March 8th will settle a very important local contest which affects all of us in Midland County. It is so important I wish I could talk with you personally about my feelings but a letter in the mail is the best we could do given the time constraints involved.

My concern is with the contest for Judge of the 142nd District Court. This election is crucial because it directly affects the quality of justice in criminal and civil cases in Midland County.

The good news is that we have an extraordinarily qualified Republican candidate in Nick Taylor. Nick's credentials are seldom found in individuals willing to make the sacrifice to serve as a judge. He has a distinguished practice as a partner of Midland's largest law firm. His educational background and experience make him exceptionally prepared to bring much needed reform to the 142nd District Court.

The bad news is that the present Judge, Nick's primary opponent Pat Baskin, has a reputation for presiding over a court that is liberal in criminal matters and inconsistent and indecisive in civil questions. Judge Baskin's campaign literature says the exact opposite, so how do we determine the truth?

The best way would be to ask someone who knows... an attorney who practices in the 142nd District Court, an off-duty sheriff's deputy or police officer, a member of groups such as Neighbors Against Burglary and Drugs, Mothers Against Drunk Drivers, Crime Stoppers or Crime Watch.

I have asked the questions and have concluded that, despite claims to the contrary, Judge Baskin must not be a conservative because his court record is not that of a conservative judge.

We are glad that Pat has joined the Republican Party but we should ask why did he wait so long? Are we to believe that the Democrat Party suddenly became too liberal for Judge Baskin in December of 1987 when all the left wing candidates and policies of the previous 25 years never moved him? Could the timing of his switch, just days before the filing deadline, have been motivated more by the near certainty that an eminently qualified Republican, Nick Taylor, would defeat him in November?

Please examine the record of our Republican candidates. Only one has extraordinary legal qualifications. Only one has a lifetime of public commitment to conservative candidates and policies. Only one was a Republican long before it was popular. Only one can change the direction of the 142nd District Court. That one is Nick Taylor.

I'm enclosing one of Nick's bumper stickers and a volunteer card. Please put the bumper sticker on your car or that of a friend and return the completed card.

Very Truly Yours,

Ernest Angelo, Jr.

P.S. If you are already helping Nick, thank you. If not, please give him all the support you can - there's too much at stake.

Is this a claimed endorsement by these groups?

You be the judge.

Are these unreasonable questions to ask?

You be the judge.

"I'm proud to have Ernie Angelo's endorsement."

Forfeitures hurt drug dealers, Frost says

By PATRICK CRIMMINS
Staff Writer

A civil statute allowing property seizures from suspected drug dealers has become a bonanza of cash and vehicles for prosecutors and local law enforcement agencies.

"We are getting the dope and the money off the street," Wayne Frost, assistant district attorney, said of his office's use of the 1983 Controlled Substances Act. "It is an effective tool against these people who are involved in narcotics transactions. And, often the forefeiture of their assets hurts them more than the criminal penalties."

Authorities have always been able to seize and destroy any outlawed controlled substance — but in 1983 state lawmakers broadened those powers to allow lawmen to seize any "asset" used in the manufacture or delivery of the drugs, Frost said.

"An asset can be a car, a boat, airplane, anything used as a conveyance," Frost said. "Cash, or any other negotiable instrument, a cashiers' check, for instance, can also be forfeited.

"And, say if the cash from an (illegal) transaction is used to buy diamonds, then the diamonds can be forfeited."

According to the law, property forfeited to an agency must be used for investigative purposes. The District Attorney's office gets a percentage of the seizures for its work on the case, Frost said.

"Normally, we get 20 percent and the agency gets 80 percent," the prosecutor said. "But sometimes we will get half. It depends on how much time we have put in on the case."

According to statistics compiled by Frost, in 1987 the Midland County Sheriff's Department received $65,905 in cash, two vehicles, and a police scanner that had been seized and forfeited. More than $56,000 was forfeited in one case, a "sting" operation which resulted in charges of aggravated possession of marijuana against two men.

The District Attorney's office received nearly $21,000 cash and three vehicles in 1987, while the Midland Police Department received $1,254 cash and four vehicles, according to the records.

A 1984 Mercedes-Benz sedan, an Israel-made Uzi submachine gun, a sawed-off .22-caliber rifle, citizens band radio, and a gold nugget bracelet were among the items forfeited during 1988, according to the statistics.

Sheriff's investigators in 1987 were involved in 37 cases which resulted in some type of forfeitures, while police detectives conducted 12 such investigations during the year, the statistics show.

"In 1986, the sheriff's office kicked off a concerted effort against drug dealers," Frost said of that agency's large number of forfeitures. "Both agencies are very aware of the benefit derived from asset forfeitures. I'm not sure why the police department had so many fewer forfeiture cases.

Taylor endorsed by second police organization

By RICK BROWN
Assistant City Editor

Republican District Judge candidate Nick Taylor has garnered a second police officers' association endorsement in his race against incumbent Pat Baskin, the challenger and the association's president announced today.

Sgt. Bob Miller, president of the Midland Police Officers Association, said in a prepared statement that 17 of the group's 28 members voted in favor of endorsing Taylor because "the scales of justice have tipped in the wrong direction."

"We do not want the justice system to be an extension of law enforcement, just to see the scales balanced," Miller said.

The association president said that the feeling of the officers voting was that Baskin was "too liberal" and that his court inconvenienced officers to an undue degree.

The court's practice of issuing subpoenas for a month at a time made it "kind of hard to plan your vacation or days off when you have to be on stand-by for that whole month," Miller said.

In addition, officers slated for testimony in trials must sometimes wait for several days before being called to the stand, which is another inconveniencing factor, Miller said.

Taylor claimed that the MPOA's endorsement coupled with the endorsement of the Fraternal Order of Police last month means he now has support from a majority of Midland police officers.

However, the 17 MPOA members added to the 51 members of the FOA — which also includes sheriff's deputies, FBI agents and U.S. Marshals — do not constitute a majority of the 149 sworn Midland police officers.

Taylor during the morning news conference said the endorsements point up "a very fundamental problem with my opponent's ability to communicate with law enforcement officials.

"A judge has got a duty to communicate with law enforcement officers for the smooth and effective conduct of law enforcement in the community," he said.

In response, Baskin said in a prepared statement today, "It might be helpful to put those endorsements in perspecitve."

Speaking of the Fraternal Order of Police, "Although more than 280 people are eligible for membership, more than 80 percent of them have decided not to join," he said.

"The second group has even fewer members than the first. Only 28 of Midland's 149 police officers have seen fit to join," he said.

In his statement, Baskin referred to a February meeting of the officers association which both candidates attended.

"It became obvious that they were going to endorse the candidate that — when forced to choose between being a 'fair judge' and a 'hanging judge' — would choose the latter," said Baskin of the meeting.

"A judge's work is somewhat comparable to that of a sports official," the incumbent continued. "He's not the quarterback for either side, but instead sees that the game is played by the rules. Fairness is the primary requisite of a good judge."

Baskin attributed Taylor's support from the two groups to "discontent among a few officers."

One factor contributing to the discontent is "the normal tension that will always occur between officers and judges," he said.

"It is occasionally necessary, for example, to reject evidence that is the result of unlawful searches and seizures," he said. "This is done not because the judge wants to but because the law clearly demands it. This kind of situation can be embarrassing to an officer."

Taylor this morning charged that Baskin had failed to met with officers to explain his search and seizure policies, a practice that would fall within educational provisions of the code of judicial ethics.

Baskin said a second factor contributing to the discontent is the placing of officers on stand-by for court testimony. The incumbent said the policy is necessary to ensure the speedy conduct of justice.

Fish says he won't seek re-election

By JANE MARLER DEES

A Midland city councilman currently under indictment is leaving the political arena, he said Monday.

District 3 Councilman Kelly Fish, 30, said he won't run for re-election to the two-year office this May.

"As much as I love Midland and enjoy serving its citizens on a volunteer basis, I have decided that I am never again going to subject my family to public life," Fish said.

"I say this without bitterness, but with firmness."

Fish will "continue to work for the betterment of Midland, but as a private citizen," he said.

If he remains active in local Republican politics, it will be in a "nonpublic" way, he added.

"He did a good job for the city," Mayor Carroll Thomas said Monday.

The city councilman "had good attendance and paid attention to what was going on. He gave us good input on some of our projects and problems we are trying solve," the mayor said.

Fish won the seat in 1986 after winning a close race against Midland architect Lawrence Connolly.

As an elected official, Fish underwent the public scrutiny that a number of other Midland oilmen were able to avoid in the much-publicized criminal investigation of Getty Oil Co. land deals which occurred in 1980-1985.

Fish alone was indicted in the matter for two counts of felony theft by a Midland County grand jury Nov. 30, though he maintained he had received much verbal and written support from the public throughout the ordeal.

The indictments state Fish allegedly arranged with two Midland oilmen to receive compensation for the sale of oil and gas leases to Getty in 1983.

Fish was employed by the oil company as a landman during a five-year period ending in 1985.

District Attorney Al Schorre has said the hearing surrounding Fish's indictments is in the offing in 238th District Judge Vann Culp's court.

In the past, Fish has served as Midland County Republican Party Chairman, president of the Midland Jaycees, vice president of the Midland Centennial Plaza Association, ex-officio board member of the Midland Chamber of Commerce and president of the Midland County Young Republicans.

Midland geologist Hugh White announced last week he will run for the district 3 spot.

District 4 Councilman Robert Rendall has filed to seek re-election to his spot in May, but Mayor Carroll Thomas has not yet filed for re-election yet, said City of Midland Secretary Bill Clinton.

Almost 700 pounds of pot seized

KERMIT — Nearly 700 pounds of marijuana was seized and four men arrested early today in the biggest seizure of the just-formed Permian Basin Regional Narcotics Task Force, its commander said.

A Cessna 210 aircraft, two vehicles, and $1,000 cash was also seized in the investigation which included the task force, U.S. Customs, the Drug Enforcement Adminstration Midland office, Winkler County Sheriffs' office, Wink Police Department, and Kermit Police Department, according to Art Van Dorn, who heads the task force.

"This is an example of what can happen when local, state and federal police agencies work together," Van Dorn said. "No one agency could have been successful in this operation without the others."

Girl injured by lioness 'doing, looking good' spokesman says

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

ODESSA — Nicole Stroops, the 2-year-old Odessa girl who was injured after she had stuck her arm into a neighbor's lioness cage in an apparently playful gesture with the cat last Friday, was in "great spirits" today and in "very good" condition in Medical Center Hospital, according to hospital spokesman Frank Beaman.

The child suffered several puncture wounds to her left arm and a shoulder separation when the 3½-year-old adult African lioness bit the girl.

"She is really doing and looking good," Beaman said today.

On Monday, the child was sitting in her bed playing with her mother, he said.

"It really is good news," Beaman said of the child's recovery.

Surgeons may operate on her shoulder this week, he said, to correct the separation, and the child may be released from the hospital this weekend.

"This little girl was so lucky," another hospital spokesman said on the day of the injury.

The lioness was killed by her owner, Billy Joe Tucker, by three shots from a firearm in order to free the girl from the cat's hold, according to Freddy Belis, supervisor of Odessa-Ector County Animal Control.

Subsequently, the lioness' head was shipped to the Texas Department of Health for rabies testing. Tests results proved negative.

The child and her parents, Stan and Paula Stroops, were visiting their neighbor and the lioness' owner, Tucker, north of Odessa when the child and a playmate, a Tucker child, strayed into Tucker's backyard, where the lioness was caged, Belis said.

Belis said the playmate was removed from the backyard by Mrs. Tucker, who did not see Nicole.

Moments later, Tucker and the parents heard cries and screams and rushed into the backyard to find the child's arm in the mouth of the lioness, Belis said.

"Mr. Billy Joe Tucker shot the animal in order to get the animal to release her hold," Belis said. "There was no way she was going to release (the child)."

Tucker shot the lioness three times in the head at close rang with a Magnum pistol, Belis said.

"It's one of those unfortunate situations," he said.

Two years ago, Belis said, a pet bear cub on exhibit at a school in Odessa bit a child. "It was a small bite and broke the skin — nothing like this," he said. The bear was killed and tested for rabies. Results were negative.

"It was one of those unfortunate situations, also, because the bear cub had to be destroyed," Belis said.

Police bust 'unusual' auto burglary ring

By PATRICK CRIMMINS
Staff Writer

Investigators have solved at least 50 vehicle burglaries allegedly committed since mid-summer of 1987, and have busted an "unusual" organized ring involving at least nine 17-year-olds, most from prominent families, police said.

It was the second recent burglary of a vehicle case involving local high school students, according to authorities.

One of the students in the alleged ring, Jeff Fry, 1611 Seaboard, has been charged with six counts of burglary of a vehicle, according to police records. He has been indicted by a grand jury on two of the counts, and other cases are pending, officials said today.

Fry was allegedly involved in a group of "pretty well organized" youths who began targeting cars in residential areas in July, according to police Det. Sgt. Mike Reed.

"They were looking for corporate cars — cars with antennas," Reed said, and began by stealing radar detectors and citizens band radios. Soon, the group had stolen stereos, firearms, briefcases, and other items, Reed said.

The group, members of which are all Midland High School students or ex-students, operated late at night, and sometimes through the night, first locating a vehicle, then peppering it with pellet pistols to gain entry, Reed said.

When that method was discarded, the youths began prying the vent windows of vehicles, he said.

At least 50 burglaries, most in the north and northwest sections of the city, were committed by those already charged and as many as nine persons are known to have been involved "directly or indirectly," Reed said.

Others charged so far in the case have been charged with one count of burglary of a vehicle. Charged were Allen Bennett, 2824 Northtown; William Stevens Young, 1601 Stanolind; Steven Greer Nini, no address avail-

Men injured in oilfield explosion listed in serious condition

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

LUBBOCK — Two Big Spring men who were severely burned Feb. 13 in an explosion and fire in an oilfield south of Midland were listed in serious condition today in Lubbock General Hospital's Burn Intensive Care Unit.

The men, Don Waltenbaugh and Jesse Flores, both 21, suffered second- and third-degree burns over 70 percent of their bodies in the explosion at a brine-water tank battery on a Spraberry Oil Field location.

Waltenbaugh had been in the more severe "critical" condition, which, like serious, is unstable, a hospital spokesman said today.

The men, who underwent initial treatment in Midland Memorial Hospital, were airlifted from Midland to Lubbock on the afternoon of the explosion.

Waltenbaugh and Flores were sealing leaks inside a 750-barrel fiberglass gun-barrel tank for separating residual oil from brine water when the empty tank exploded.

The explosion and fire occurred at a seven-tank brine-disposal battery operated by Parker & Parsley Petroleum Co. in the Spraberry Oil Field 4¼ miles south of Interstate Highway 20 and just off Cotton Flat Road.

Waltenbaugh and Flores, employees of Round-up Tank Inc. which manufactures fiberglass oil-field tanks in Big Spring, were using rosin and volatile chemicals in repairing leaks in the tank when gases exploded.

The tank was torn away at its base and was thrown onto a one-ton Round-up Tank truck parked alongside the battery of tanks.

Parker & Parsley, which develops oil fields and produces and operates oil wells, had contracted with Round-up Tank to make repairs in the 750-barrel tank and had purchased the battery of tanks from Round-up Tank.

The igniting cause of the explosion and fire has not yet been determined. But Fire Marshal Jerry Petree of the Midland Fire Department today said investigators "assume the explosion and fire was the result of the right mix of those fumes from volatile chemicals."

Shortly after the explosion, investigators found a metal Zippo cigarette lighter laying in dirt just outside the ripped tank. Petree said one of the men, Waltenbaugh or Flores, said he had a cigarette lighter in his pocket at time of the explosion but that neither man was smoking.

Brine, pumped from producing wells in the area, is pumped to the tank battery, where any residual oil is salvaged from the brine water, which then is pumped into a nonproducing well at the site.

The two-man Round-up Tank crew was inside the fiberglass tank when gases were ignited.

The battery of green and olive-drab tanks consisted of the one 750-barrel gun-barrel settling tank in which oil floats to the top and salt water is removed from the bottom; four 500-barrel storage tanks, and, two 210-barrel storage tanks. Part of one 500-barrel tank was blackened by the fire ball.

Fire Department Battalion Chief Bob White has said the type of explosion which occurred Feb. 13 was "very rare" and that the chemicals, including acetone, used in fiberglass repair work were "extremely" inflammable.

WEST TEXAS IN BRIEF

Body found burned sent for autopsy, identification

From Staff Reports

ODESSA — The badly burned body of a man, believed to be a white male, who was apparently shot before being dumped on a trash pile and set on fire has been transported to Dallas for autopsy.

Ector County Sheriff's investigator Mike Mitchell said the charred body of the man found in the 7500-block of Andrews Highway by Odessa firemen responding to a trash fire call was taken to Dallas Monday night.

Mitchell said Sheriff's Identification Division head Lt. Larry Crawford speculated Dallas pathologist may be able to obtain fingerprints from one of the hands of the man for identification purposes. As of this morning, he said, there was no new information as to the identity of the man who appears to have been shot at least once in the back before being set on fire.

The body was found at the rear of a lot at 7517 Andrews Highway, between Tootsie's Lounge and BJ's Honkytonk, shortly after 9 p.m. Sunday.

Mitchell said a vehicle was seen leaving the scene of the fire but there is currently no indication the vehicle and person or persons in it were involved in the death of the unidentified victim or if they were simply spectators.

Four high court candidates collect $734,000

By STEVE LEVINE
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Four Democratic Supreme Court contenders collected $734,000 — much of it from lawyers — and spent $876,000 over the past four weeks in preparation for the March 8 primary, documents filed Monday with the secretary of state show.

Incumbent Justices Bill Kilgarlin, running for re-election in Place 1, and Ted Robertson, seeking the chief justice position, continue to lead in money raised with $292,000 and $148,000 each. Among the Republicans, incumbent Chief Justice Tom Phillips brought in $145,000, and Place 1 hopeful Paul Murphy of Dallas collected nearly $34,000.

In the battle for the Democratic Railroad Commission nomination, incumbent Chairman Jim Nugent brought in $87,216 — including $25,000 from Midland oilman John Cox — and spent $67,395. Jerry Langdon of Midland, one of his two Democratic opponents, spent $177,222 but raised just $33,431. His donations included $5,000 each from Midland oilmen Jack Brown and Cy Wagner. The third Democrat in the race, John Thomas Henderson of Austin, accepts no campaign contributions.

The reports cover the period from Jan. 29 through Friday.

The Houston law firm of Fisher Gallagher Perrin & Lewis topped Kilgarlin's list, contributing $25,000. Jones Curry & Ross, a Marshall law firm, donated $24,000 in the name of the JC&R Partnership. Both firms made identical contributions to Robertson's campaign.

Other major donors to Kilgarlin include: Henderson attorney Rex Houston, $15,000; San Antonio attorney Pat Maloney, $10,250; the Port Arthur law firm of Umphrey Swearingen & Eddins, $10,000; and the Houston law firm of Baker & Botts, $10,000. He reported 13 other contributions of $5,000 or more from lawyers and law firms.

In addition to the money from Fisher Gallagher and Jones Curry, Robertson reported a $10,000 donation from Maloney and three $5,000 contributions.

Both Robertson and Kilgarlin spent $125,000 on Feb. 9 to buy television advertising time. Since mid-1987, they have collected more than $1.3 million between them.

Republican Phillips, who has limited donations to $5,000, collected five contributions at that level — with donors including both Brown and Wagner of Midland. The Texas Medical Association political action committee gave Murphy $25,000.

Responding to a growing challenge from San Antonio lawyer Art Vega, Place 3 Democratic incumbent Justice Raul Gonazalez picked up his fundraising efforts as he reported collecting $172,132 spending $246,911. The Texas Real Estate PAC and the Baker & Botts law firm each contributed $10,000 to Gonzalez' campaign. The Texas Medical Association PAC donated $6,000.

The Texas Dental Association PAC and six Texas lawyers or law firms each contributed $5,000. February's figures bring Gonzalez fundraising total since July to more than $300,000. In January he reported raising just $16,000. Gonzalez' January expenditures included $101,000 for television and radio ad production and broadcast time.

The secretary of state had not received Vega's report by closing time Monday.

In the Place 2 race to succeed Robertson, former state Sen. Lloyd Doggett of Austin reported raising $121,137 and spending $20,617 in February. None of his Republican or Democratic opponents' reports were filed by 5 p.m. Monday.

Moran residents defeat proposal to become wet town

MORAN (AP) — Not much else can draw as much interest as a wet-dry election in this part of West Texas.

The streets of this Shackleford County town of about 300 people, located northeast of Abilene, were crowded Monday as 255 of the residents turned out to vote.

The proposal to allow off-premise liquor sales in Moran failed by an unofficial vote count of 153-102.

The turnout will likely be less next week on the day of the "Super Tuesday" primary election.

"It was probably the most crowds we've had since the fajita cook-off," said Jack Clack, minister of the First Baptist Church and chairman of the Concerned Citizen's Committee that campaigned against the move to make Moran wet.

The woman whose petition sparked the election, Dorothy Boyd, said she was surprised by the turnout and claimed she even saw the owners of two Putnam liquor stores nervously cruising Moran Monday.

Boyd gathered 69 signatures in hopes of turning the area wet and starting up a liquor store on heavily traveled Texas Highway 6.

She said Monday night she thought the vote would be closer, but said she has no plans to attempt another wet election.

Clack said he hoped Monday's vote dampened any future attempts by the wet forces.

"I'm just glad it's all over. I just really don't like it when our community has to go through these kind of things," said Clack, who added that the last election for legalized alcohol sales was in 1976.

The Concerned Citizen's Committee, made up of about 35 members, spent $450 for newspaper ads urging voters to cast ballots against the local-option liquor election. The group also distributed pamphlets door-to-door and called every registered voter in Precinct 3, said the committee's treasurer, Joe Hardin.

The committee offered rides to residents needing transportation to the community center, where the votes were cast, but the minister said no voters took up the offer.

"It was such a pretty day, I suppose everybody could get out," Clack said.

Aileen Dickinson, owner of the Lone Star Cafe, said her restaurant was crowded with patrons buzzing about the election.

"It sparked a lot of interest today. That was all that was talked about," said Dickinson, who planned to sell beer and wine if the vote had passed.

Supporters of the option for packaged liquor sales said they wanted to improve the town's depressed economy hit hard by the oil bust and slumping farm economy.

However, residents against the wet vote said they felt the change would benefit only a few business owners and not the entire community.

Man killed in shooting with ex-boss

HALTOM CITY (AP) — A former employee of a used car lot returned hours after being fired and became involved in a shootout that left one person dead and two hospitalized for treatment for gunshot wounds, authorities say.

The shooting in the Fort Worth suburb began after the man got into an argument with his former boss and the boss' son late Monday, police said.

Aubrey Stamps, 57, a former Haltom City city councilman and owner of the used car lot, was in serious condition late Monday at Harris Hospital in fort Worth.

Tommy Stamps, 30, was in critical condition at Harris Hospital with a gusnhot wound in the head, hospital spokesman Tom Peck said.

Haltom City Police Lt. R.W. McQueary said the incident began when the former employee returned to the garage and got into an argument first with another employee. The men went to the main office where Stamps and his son confronted the man, who was armed with a pistol.

Several shots were exchanged, witnesses told police.

Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Calling Jesse Jackson "a true peace activist, a man of peace," former New Mexico Gov. Toney Anaya and a half-dozen Austin "peace and justice advocates" announced their support of Jackson's Democratic presidential bid Monday.

"We are gathered here today to help Jesse Jackson beat swords into plowshares," Anaya said at an Austin news conference. "Jackson has never been afraid to do the right thing for the peace movement...He fights for peace, election time or not."

Citing Jackson's opposition to the Reagan administration's support of the contras in Nicaragua, to the Strategic Defense Initiative and to the administration's policies in South Africa, Janis Heine of the American Friends Service Committee said Jackson "best represents the peace and justice community."

In Republican presidential politics Monday, Gov. Bill Clements said he expects Vice President George Bush will "carry Texas handily" and "come out on top in the South" in the March 8 Super Tuesday primaries. The governor, an announced Bush supporter, said he sees former televangelist Pat Robertson cutting into the base of support of both Democratic and Republican candidates.

"He has his supporters and I think those supporters are fairly solid," Clements said. "It's a narrow support, but it is a deep support...and I think that he will make a good showing in the primary."

Also Monday, Democratic contender Michael Dukakis announced that 26 of the 66 members of the state Democratic Executive Committee have endorsed his campaign. They include Janet Massey of Midland who called Dukakis "a Democrat who can win against the Republicans in November."

FORFEITURES

"I do know that there has been a definite recent increase in the number of forfeiture cases filed by the police. And I think Chief (Richard) Czech and some of the programs he has implemented has a lot to do with that," he said of the department head who took over Dec. 1, 1986.

"They (narcotics detectives) have simply not worked the kind of cases before" that could result in forfeitures, Czech said. "But that has changed.

"My emphasis is let's get as much of that property as we can. That's going to hit the criminal where it hurts."

Sheriff Gary Painter said his office is now using 12 vehicles seized using the Controlled Substances Act.

"We try to follow the guidelines set forth in the law," Painter said. "When you dig into someone's pocket it does cause a person more harm, and will tend to think about it a little bit more."

The overcrowded Texas Department of Corrections — and laws which allow non-violent offenders to be released after serving only a fraction of their sentences — have forced prosecutors to turn to forfeitures to try and gain an advantage over drug dealers, according to Frost.

"If a 20-year sentence meant a person would serve 20 years, we would see much more of a deterrent effect," he said. "Now, going to TDC is seen simply as the cost of doing business because of the parole laws.

"Now, what we have to do is approach things as innovatively as we can, so we can make some kind of an impact on crime. Sometimes, forfeiting $30,000 from someone is more of a deterrent than sending them to prison for what turns out to be a few months."

Last year, Frost handled 74 forfeiture cases, up from 51 in 1986 and only 12 in 1985. In 1988, with cash, vehicles, firearms and other property remaining as the fuel for most narcotics trafficking operations, the number of forfeitures should increase, he said.

According to Van Dorn, task force officers were working undercover on another operation near Kermit when the airplane was seen flying with no navigation lights. Five minutes later, Customs radioed the Winkler County Sheriff's office that it had been tracked by radar from Mexico.

The plane landed in Winkler County, and after officers searched the area, two vehicles were seen just inside the city limits of Kermit on State Highway 115. The marijuana was found in the vehicles, authorities said.

The four men, including the pilot of the plane, were arrested and are being held in Albuquerque, N.M., by federal authorities.

Three of the men are from California, and the fourth is from the Amarillo area, officers said.

BURGLARIES

able, and Steven Lilley, 3315 Haynes Ave.

Young, Nini and Lilley have pleaded guilty to the charges, according to court records. Each was sentenced to two years deferred adjudication and 50 hours of community service at Fairview Cemetery, according to records in the district clerk's office.

Bennett has been indicted by a grand jury, according to records.

After the merchandise was stolen, it was transported to at least two "south central Texas" cities and was sold, Reed said.

"They were selling the stuff, and were pretty well-organized," the detective said. "It was going to at least two other cities that we know of. This was an unusual bunch, and they were really harder to catch.

"But they didn't need the money — that is obvious from the families they come from. That's what so unusual about these cases. They did it just for the thrill of doing it."

The majority of burglaries committed in Midland — as many as 90 percent — are somehow tied to the use of narcotics, Reed said. But these crimes do not fit that pattern, he added.

Investigators estimated that the property stolen in the burglaries was valued at more than $20,000. Damage to the vehicles was estimated at between $30,000 and $50,000, officers said.

Some of the property has been recovered and returned to owners, Reed said.

In the earlier instance, five Midland Lee students were indicted for burglary of a vehicle for allegedly stealing more than 130 cases of beer from a tractor-trailer at West Texas Sales Company, 2000 Market St., on Feb. 18. The beer was valued at more than $1,500.

According to authorities, arrests in the case came the day after the burglary, when four men were arrested and 67 cases of beer were confiscated.

Indicted for the burglary were Eric Steward, 19, 4604 Glen Eagles Dr.; David Cox, no address available; Manuel Mitchell Gutierrez, 4524 Lanham; David Warden, 18, 4715 Wadley; Clyde L. Brown, 17, 4526 Lanham; and Rufus Manley IV, 17, 4101 St. Andrews Dr.

"Our choice is to either try our cases promptly or get behind in the docket," he said.

He added that witnesses outside law enforcement also are inconvenienced by the same policy.

Agents confiscate 2,300 pounds of marijuana, 357 of cocaine

EL PASO (AP) — About 2,300 pounds of marijuana and 357 pounds of cocaine valued at more than $13 million were confiscated in 11 busts over the weekend by U.S. Border Patrol and Customs agents.

Agents also arrested 10 people and turned them over to U.S. Drug Enforcement Administration agents, said Gus de la Vina, deputy chief of the Border Patrol's El Paso sector.

Border Patrol and customs agents assigned to a special task force confiscated 2,266 pounds of marijuana and 184 pounds of cocaine, valued at $7.2 million, he said.

Other Border Patrol agents confiscated 173 pounds of cocaine and 27 pounds of marijuana, valued at $5.6 million.

"Drug trafficking is out of control," de la Vina said at a press conference Monday. "We're not going to put up with it."

De la Vina said the task force — set up with the backing of Operation Alliance, a multiagency national effort to stop drug trafficking — will operate occasionally in different parts of the El Paso sector, which stretches from east of El Paso, across New Mexico to the Arizona state line.

Cabbie plows into pedestrians

HOUSTON (AP) — Police were at a loss to explain why a cab driver apparently lost control of his vehicle, which plowed into a busy sidewalk and injured four pedestrians, officials said.

The 29-year-old cab driver, who also was injured in the Monday afternoon accident and required hospital treatment, offered no explanation of what happened, said investigator J.M Smith of the Houston Police. Smith said charges were pending further investigation.

Danny Alles, a witness to the accident, said one woman was trapped beneath the vehicle when it came to rest on the sidewalk. He said four people picked up the car and police officers and other witnesses pulled her out.

Juanita Barrett, 42, was listed in good condition, while Gertrudis Abdel-Khaliq, 37, was listed in guarded condition at Hermann Hospital, a spokeswoman said. Anna Hornac 66, was listed in stable condition at St. Luke's Hospital, a spokeswoman said.

Dianna Bradford, 41, underwent surgery Monday night at Ben Taub hospital, and a hospital spokeswoman said she was "doing fine."

Funding OK'd for JFK exhibit

DALLAS (AP) — County commissioners have approved a $2.3 million contract to construct an elevator tower and visitors center in the former Texas Schoolbook Depository as part of an exhibit on the assassination of President John F. Kennedy.

The commissioners voted 3-2 Monday to award the contract to Thomas J. Hayman Construction Co., which will begin work on the project as early as this week.

"The eyes of the world will be on this project," said Lindalyn Adams, president of the Dallas County Historical Foundation, which has worked for 11 years to get the exhibit funded. "As sad as it is, it is the most important historical site in Dallas."

The foundation plans to raise $1.5 million from private sources for additional renovations on the sixth floor of what is now known as the Dallas County Administration Building.

The elevator tower is intended to carry up to 500,000 visitors a year to the exhibit without disrupting work at county government offices.

Delayed chemical burning requested

AUSTIN (AP) — Texas Agriculture Commissioner Jim Hightower is asking the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency to delay the scheduled burning of more than 300,000 gallons of a banned chemical to give Harris County officials more preparation time.

The EPA plans to begin burning the banned grain fumigant — ethylene dibromide — later this week in an incinerator at Rollings Environmental Services in Deer Park, Hightower said Monday.

"As I write this letter, tank cars are rolling through the Texas countryside carrying this dangerous chemical. I am concerned that there is no emergency planning for the transportation, storage or incineration of the chemical," Hightower wrote to John Moore, EPA asssistant administrator.

Sculpture donated to Capitol

AUSTIN (AP) — Gov. Bill Clements accepted a sculpture Monday depicting the "cowboy kitchen" — a chuckwagon — that was donated to the Capitol by Tyler oilman Watson Wise.

The 200-pound bronze work was created by John Harper, a Tyler sculptor, and was produced by Paul Bryant, a foundry owner from Azle.

"That's the winning of the West, as far as I'm concerned," the governor said in accepting the sculpture.

Bones, jewelry found in Indian burial site

CORPUS CHRISTI (AP) — Jewelry and the remains of two babies believed to be about 3,000 years old were found in a newly discovered Indian burial site, an archaeologist said.

"We are excavating burials that are eroding out of the bank," said Herman Smith, an archaeologist at the Corpus Christi Museum. "We are removing only those burials that have been disturbed by man or natural erosion."

The burial site was discovered Saturday southwest of Oso Creek on what is now the site of the Corpus Christi Botanical Gardens.

"It's bizarre," said Smith who is heading the dig. "We haven't even taken the bones out of the mud yet. It's a puzzle as to why this person is buried with more elaborate jewelry than any I've ever seen and why two fetuses and a skull are buried with him."

Smith and about 50 volunteers hope to excavate between eight and 16 graves at the site, which is dotted with heavy mesquite brush and cactus.

It is about two blocks from where Smith two years ago found a variety of stone and shell tools and 11 small structures made of dried clay and sticks.

He said he believes the discovered remains are about 3,000 years old because the burial grounds are about the same depth — two feet — as material dated two years ago from across Oso Creek. The archaeologist said the graves are not that of the Karankawa Indian, who occupied both sides of the creek about 1400 A.D.

Smith found the burial grounds when some bones were spotted sticking about a quarter-inch out of the ground.

The most elaborate grave Smith said he has found was unearthed Saturday afternoon.

"I think it probably was a male about 45 years old," he said. "He was wearing a necklace of about 12 fresh water mussels and about 300 beads.

"He had three mussels behind his head that could have been part of some kind of headdress."

Smith said what appeared to be either two fetuses or two newborns were found with the skeleton, as well as the skull of what appears to be a juvenile.

The skeletons will be stabilized by using chemicals to retard deterioration before they are shipped for testing at Southwest Texas State University in San Marcos, he said.

Army says pilot error caused last June's copter crash

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — An Army investigation has determined that insufficient training and pilot error combined to cause the crash last summer of a Huey helicopter at Fort Hood that took the lives of 10 Army Reserve and Texas National Guard soldiers.

"The crew exceeded their flying abilities and the limitations of the aircraft," the report by the 5th Army at Fort Sam Houston in San Antonio stated. "The crash was a result of an unauthorized maneuver executed at an altitude too low to recover."

"The quantity and content of the training program" was cited in the report as being "not sufficient to prepare the crew," for flights with a full load of passengers.

The Austin American-Statesman reported Monday that the report echoed witness accounts published in the newspaper soon after the June 22, 1987, crash and disputed by Reserve officials.

Witnesses told the newspaper that the crew of the UH-1H Huey helicopter was "hotdogging" with steep turns at high speed and low altitude.

Reserve officials could not be reached for comment Monday, the newspaper reported.

The Vietnam-era helicopter, built in 1967, was based in Norman, Okla., and assigned to the 353rd Engineering Group of the Army Reserve.

The helicopter was participating in Starburst '87, the annual summer training for 20,000 men and women of the Guard and its Reserve support units from 18 states. Eight Reservists and two Guardsmen were killed in the crash.

The crash of the Huey occurred when a high-speed, steep turn at low altitude resulted in a unplanned, rapid descent, the report said. It also said the crew apparently sought to solve the problem with a quick climb but that the helicopter's tail-rotors struck several nearby trees.

No mechanical or maintenance problems were found, the Army said, but the aircraft was destroyed by fire.

Autopsies of passengers and crew determined they died from the force of impact, which was 100 times the force of gravity.

ENTERTAINMENT

By JOAN FISCHER

FRANKFURT, West Germany (AP) — The career of German stage great Bernhard Minetti spans from the tumultuous days of the Weimar Republic to a current round of accolades for his contribution to the theater.

He recently was made an honorary member of Frankfurt's prestigious theater ensemble after receiving lengthy standing ovations for his final performance in Samuel Beckett's classic "Krapp's Last Tape," at the city playhouse.

But the feisty, 83-year-old actor heatedly says he's not heading towards his last curtain call.

"Why should I quit? I'm not sick," said Minetti, who is known for his brusque manner and general dislike of talking to the news media.

Over the years, he has played some of the greatest roles theater has to offer, always in his native German.

His Shakespearean heroes have included Hamlet, Othello and Lear. The actor's roles by German playwrights have included both Mephistopheles and Faust in Goethe's "Faust," Robespierre in Buechner's "Danton's Death" and Wallenstein in Schiller's "Wallenstein."

One of his favorite roles, the craggy-faced actor said in an interview is King Lear. "I would play Lear again any time," he said, speaking in German.

Another role he said he would play again is Krapp in "Krapp's Last Tape," which he has been performing in Frankfurt since last October to enthusiastic reviews.

Projects for 1988, he said, include starring in a play by German playwright Gerhart Hauptmann in Berlin.

"If you want any other information, just read my book," he said, his voice rising.

Minetti wrote the 1985 book, "Memoirs of an Actor," with the help of Frankfurt city theater director Guenther Ruehle.

"Minetti is certainly one of our country's greatest actors," Ruehle said. "He has a strong personality and presence, and brings a wonderful intellectual energy into his work."

Minetti, who now lives in West Berlin, was a member of the Frankfurt city theater ensemble from 1951 to 1956.

Critics praise Minetti especially for leading roles he played as an older man.

"The older he gets, the better he is," drama critic Georg Hensel of the Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung newspaper said. "Minetti has impressed me most with his performances as King Lear, Prospero and his work with the playwright Thomas Bernhard."

TV's version of reality 'in' trend for fall

By JERRY BUCK
AP Television Writer

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The first-run situation comedy may have peaked in the television syndication market, and "reality" programming — talk and information shows — seems to be the trend for the fall.

The National Association of Television Program Executives has just concluded its 25th-anniversary convention in Houston, and a number of the new programs being offered are reality based, such as "USA Today," a news show designed to be a TV version of the newspaper.

An estimated 8,000 people attended the five-day meeting at the George R. Brown Convention Center. The convention is the major arena for producers to show off their new programs and for station program executives to pick and choose syndicated shows for the next television season.

Altogether, between 300 and 400 shows are being offered to the program executives. The shows include reruns of network shows and packages of motion pictures.

"What I see is a movement toward reality programming," A. Philip Corvo, executive director of NATPE said in an interview before leaving for the convention. "It seems to be bigger than any move in that direction we've had in the past."

Other "reality" shows being offered include "Group One Medical," from MGM, "Public People, Private Lives," from Orbis Communications, "The Howard Cosell Show," from Casablanca, and "On Trial," from Republic. "USA Today" is from GTG Entertainment.

"I think this trend will pick up speed if any of these shows are successful," said Corvo. "Another trend I see is that some shows are leaning toward horror and science fiction."

Lorimar has "Nightmare on Elm Street" and MCA has "The Munsters," a revival of the horror spoof from the 1960s. Already on the market are Paramount's "Star Trek" and "Friday the 13th." Another new show will be Paramount's "War of the Worlds," based on the novel by H.G. Wells and the award-winning 1953 movie by George Pal.

MGM has 30 new episodes of "The Twilight Zone," in addition to 64 vintage shows from the Rod Serling classic series.

By far the most successful of the distributors is King World, which has "Wheel of Fortune," "Jeopardy" and "The Oprah Winfrey Show."

"There doesn't seem to be a dent in the popularity of those shows," said Corvo. "Stations are buying them three or four years in advance. In the old days you never bought a game show more than a year in advance. Most didn't last that long.

"The popularity of the original situation comedies has leveled off and may even be going into a decline. 'The Munsters' is the only new comedy show. Stations tried a checkerboard arrangement with the comedies, with a different show each night, but they seem to be getting away from that. I think they'll go back to stripping game and reality shows (running them each night of the week). I think that's what Grant Tinker's looking for with 'USA Today.'"

That doesn't mean reruns of network comedies aren't selling, however.

"Bill Cosby is going into syndication in 1988 or '89 with the highest-priced off-network show in the history of television," said Corvo. "'Who's the Boss?' is also going into syndication and that is getting some very high prices."

BEE SMART

The Reporter-Telegram will sponsor the 1988 Regional Spelling Bee March 26 at Midland College.

School spelling champions from Midland, Martin, Glasscock and Upton counties will compete for the top prize of an all-expenses-paid trip to the National Spelling Bee in Washington, D.C.

This daily column on words, their spellings, meanings and origins will be published through March 25. These words are typical of those used in bees but may not necessarily be used in competition.

feckless — (adjective) Weak, ineffective people are said to be "feckless." That is, they have no effect on anything or anyone. "Feckless" comes to the English language via Scotland. Over time, the word "effectless" lost its first letter and changed until it was shortened to "feckless," the word we use today. In addition to being weak and ineffective, a "feckless" person may also be careless or irresponsible. Therefore, a "feckless" person is not likely to win a spelling bee.

Put some excitement in your life with a fun vacation from Adventure Travel

Always on the edge of excitement, a myriad of vacation opportunities offer themselves from Adventure Travel. Perhaps one of the more exotic is a trip to the "Heart of the Amazon."

Polly Welmaker has recently returned from Peru and is now planning a group trip to the Amazon. This rare vacation opportunity is for anyone that enjoys an adventurous yet peaceful atmosphere in a lush tropical setting.

This six night excursion will include airfare, meals and lodging at a nominal cost. Lodging includes two nights at Explornapo Camp and four nights at Explorama Lodge.

The Camp, opened in 1963, is located on the Napo River 100 miles from Iquitos in the southern part of Peru. Situated in Explorama's privately owned plant and animal reservation, Explornapo Camp allows visitors to enjoy species in their natural habitat. This rugged adventure allows a visitor to live as the River People did years ago! Dormatory sleeping, kerosene lighting, open-hearth cooking, yet excellent shower and latrine facilities allow guests to experience nature in comfort. After two nights a move will be made to Exporama Lodge.

Established in 1964, Explorama Lodge is fifty miles down the Amazon, deep in the primeval jungle. Romantic keroscene torches and lamps illuminate palm-thatched housing with ten to sixteen sleeping rooms. Being a more civilized atmosphere than the camp, the lodge can offer a hammock house, the Tahuampa Bar and gourmet dining.

Home to innumerable species of birds, butterflies, fish, plants and wildlife, one of the multilingual and knowledgeable guides will be a constant companion to help visitors become better aquainted with the amazing Amazon.

Polly Welmaker of Adventure Travel will be hosting a trip to the 'Heart of the Amazon' this summer. Adventure Travel can schedule your next trip, wherever you want to go. Call Polly or any of the helpful travel agents at Adventure Travel, 683-4211, to make all the arrangements for your next adventure.

For more information about this tour, please contact Polly Welmaker at Adventure Travel, 16 Oak Ridge Square or call 683-4211.

Shanahan sets championship standards for Raiders

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Mike Shanahan knows a lot is expected of him as coach of the Los Angeles Raiders. He says he's ready to meet the challenge.

"My concern is not really with the playoffs because my standards are higher than getting into the playoffs," Shanahan said Monday at a news conference called to introduce him as the Raiders' new head coach. "Our standards are to win world championships.

"It's been a situation of great tradition and great success. I'm going to try and add to that success."

The Raiders are the only AFC team to win a Super Bowl in the 1980s, having accomplished the feat following the 1980 and 1983 seasons. But the club has missed the playoffs the last two years, going 8-8 and 5-10.

The Raiders' record last year was their poorest since 1962, perhaps prompting Tom Flores to announce his retirement as head coach on Jan. 20 at age 50 after nine years on the job. His teams were 83-53 in regular-season games.

Flores had succeeded John Madden, whose teams were 103-32-7 in 10 years and won the Super Bowl following the 1976 season.

So it would appear the pressure is on Shanahan, but he didn't sound concerned about that Monday. Rather, he sounded confident.

"It's indeed a great honor and a privilege to be the head coach of the Raiders," he said. "It's always been a goal of mine to be a head coach in the National Football League; to be the head coach of the most successful team in professional sports history makes it that much better.

"It's going to be a privilege to me to keep up the tradition of a Tom Flores, a John Madden, and an Al Davis, that kind of tradition and the championships that were won here. I know these goals can be achieved."

In introducing Shanahan, Davis, the Raiders' owner, said, "As I went into his character, as I went into his background, I found no flaw. His record speaks for itself. His vast amount of experience for a young man is unequaled by many."

Shanahan, who said he signed a three-year contract with the Raiders, has been an assistant coach under Dan Reeves at Denver the last four years and the offensive coordinator for the Broncos the last three.

The Broncos, who have been bitter rivals with the Raiders in recent years, won the AFC West championship the last two seasons and advanced to the Super Bowl. Meanwhile, Los Angeles finished well down in the standings.

Now Shanahan will try to change all that.

"I'm going to be my own person and try to do the best job I can," Shanahan said. "I have the freedom to do the things I want to do offensively. You try to go full speed ahead, make decisions, don't look back.

"I take a look at a team's defense. I really thought the Raiders were one of the best-coached defenses in the National Football League. We felt in Denver that the one thing we had to do to be successful was beat the Raiders. Offensively, I haven't really studied them.

"Obviously, my expertise is in the offensive area. I plan to contribute in a lot of areas. Our quarterback situation will start at the base. I will not have a preference as to which one will play. There are several people at that position who I will look at."

The Raiders have had quarterback problems in recent years, with veterans Marc Wilson and Jim Plunkett and the young Rusty Hilger unable to provide them with any consistency at the position. Veteran Vince Evans is also on the roster.

Shanahan is credited with tailoring Denver's offense to fit the talents of quarterback John Elway, an offense which probably was more responsible than anything for getting the team to the last two Super Bowls.

At 35, Shanahan is the youngest coach in the NFL. But he isn't the youngest coach hired by the Raiders — Davis was 33 when he took command in 1963 and Madden was 33 when he was named in 1969.

Shanahan will be a head coach for the first time, as were Madden and Flores when they were hired by Davis.

"I've always been asked a lot of things about my age," Shanahan said. "It comes down to one thing, you've got to get the job done. I think of my age as a plus, but you've got to get the job done, and I intend to do that."

Danny White may retire

TEMPE, Ariz. (AP) — Dallas Cowboys quarterback Danny White says he is thinking of retiring after 12 NFL seasons, though he is more bothered by off-the-field criticism than his lingering wrist injury.

"It's not an easy decision," said White at a football clinic here Saturday. "The wrist is fine. It's not a question of anything having to do with my physically. I'll never be able to bend it.

"Pathologically, I'm having a problem. Emotionally, I'm fine. I've gotten about 90 percent of the strength back and I can still improve that a little bit. It's merely a matter of adapting.

"It's not a physical question. It's more a psycological question," White said. "It's just a kind of beating you take off the field. That, for me, is something I've grown kind of tired of. It takes a little fun out of the game."

White, 36, has played for Dallas since 1976. He was blamed by some fans for not leading the Cowboys to the Super Bowl like his predecessor Roger Staubach.

"At some point, it's going to get to the point where the game's not as much fun for me as it once was. And that's when it's going to hit me... that's it's time to retire," said White. "That might come next month and it may not come for a couple of years."

White is bothered by the wrist injury on his throwing hand. His right wrist was broken on Nov. 2, 1986, when he was sacked by New York Giants defensive lineman Carl Banks and has not healed properly.

His wrist remains stiff and bothers him primarily when he throws on the run or when soft "touch" passes are required, he says.

White said he plans to gear up for the Cowboys' training camp in July at Thousand Oaks, Calif.

"Physically, right now I'm ready to go. I've been working out and I'm going to continue to work out. I'm planning to go back to camp and be ready to play. I think (Dallas Coach) Tom (Landry) obviously would like to have me there.

"As far as the season is concerned, Tom must decide whether (backup) Steve Pelleur is ready or not, when he'll be ready and if he's seen enough of Steve to know if he's going to be the type of quarterback he wants. They've got to decide who's going to be their quarterback for the next 10 years.

The other Olympics

While athletes in Calgary skiied and skated, begoggled divers took part in the annual Scuba Olympics in Racine, Wis. Of course, this event was underwater hockey.

Committee looks into poor U.S. showing

By MICHAEL JANOFSKY
New York Times News Service

CALGARY, Alberta — If Dan Jansen is correct, the United States team at the XV Winter Olympic Games did just fine. More than 130 athletes competed in medal sports, and all of them, Jansen said, tried their hardest.

"That's all the American public can expect," he said.

That may be true, from an athlete's point of view, and nobody in these Games tried harder under more adverse conditions. Jansen competed in the 500-meter speed-skating race hours after the death of his 27-year-old sister. Later in the week, he raced in the 1,000-meter race. Both times he fell and did not complete the race.

In a sense, Jansen symbolized the American team here: more heart than reward. Athletes from the United States won six medals — two gold, one silver, three bronze — to tie Sweden in eighth place among the 57 competing nations.

The Soviet Union won the most, 29 total, including 11 golds, followed by East Germany (25, 9 golds) and Switzerland (15, 5 golds).

The Americans' performance ranked as one of their least successful. Only twice before, in 1936 and 1924, did an Americam team win fewer medals, with four each time.

What happened this year is not easily categorized. Injuries as long ago as six months before the Games undermined the ski team. Edith Thys finished highest, ninth in the super giant slalom. Fifteen of 39 skiers who started did not finish their races.

Nets call Reed to solve woes

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. (AP) — Willis Reed did not take the New Jersey Nets head coaching job unaware that the club has problems, lots of problems.

Injuries, lack of leadership, drug problems and three straight losing seasons only highlight the Nets' woes.

But beyond the problems, Willis Reed found something he has been looking for for almost 10 years, a return to the NBA head coaching ranks.

"This is going to be a challenge," the 45-year-old Reed said. "But I like coaching. There are only 23 jobs like this in this league and when you get the opportunity for one you have to take it."

The Nets ended a 12-week search for a coach Monday by naming Reed as their third coach this season and giving him the job of turning around a team that has won only 12 of 54 games this season.

THE NETS did not disclose the length of Reed's contract, but sources said it was three years.

"I don't know if this is a troubled franchise," said Reed, a Hall of Fame center with the New York Knicks in their heyday in the late 1960s and early 70s. "I think they have problems. However, I don't see them as problems that can't be resolved."

New Jersey is tied with the Los Angeles Clippers for the worst record in the league. The club has lost 240 manpower games due to injuries, and twice in the past three seasons has lost players due to drug problems.

Two years ago, Micheal Ray Richardson was banned from the NBA for violating its drug policy for a third time, and just last week forward Orlando Woolridge, Reed's cousin, admitted he has a drug problem and was suspended while he undergoes rehabilitation.

Reed said his main job will be to evaluate his players the rest of the season.

"I'm looking at this as a 28-game season," said Reed, who debuts tonight when the Nets play the Clippers at home. "We'll be looking to win as many as possible and then take it from there."

In taking over, Reed replaces interim coach Bob MacKinnon, who compiled a 10-29 mark after taking over for the fired Dave Wohl in early December. Under Wohl, the club won only two of its first 15 games.

MacKinnon will return to his job as assistant general manager, and Reed said he plans to retain assistant coaches Garry St. Jean and Bob Wenzel for at least the rest of the season.

Bob Casciola, the Nets chief operating officer, said the field for the job was narrowed last week to Reed, an assistant at Sacramento under Bill Russell. The two sides ironed out the final details of a contract on Sunday afternoon and Reed signed it later that day, Casciola said.

"This team needs a leader," Casciola said. "We have players who are individual and players who have some ability. We don't have a take-charge guy. We had to find a coach with those leadership qualities, and Willis Reed is that kind of man."

Reed spoke with the Nets players for about 10 minutes before attending the news conference to officially announce his appointment.

"I think it's good to bring him in now and throw him into the fire," Nets captain Buck Williams said. "This way he can evaluate who can play and who can't. He can get a feel for the players in game situations. I think this is the best time to bring him in."

Reed added that coming in now will also give him a say in the team's offseason training and a chance to have an active role in the NBA draft. He also said injuries are something no coach has control over.

Only in Region V: War before war

Williamson

The Region V women were scheduled to kickoff a 17-game Chaparral Center tournament week at 1 p.m. today without a major controversy in sight. The women appear to be leaving it to the men for controversy, intrigue and blood chilling excitement.

The men don't start Region V action until Thursday, but already the war has begun.

Ranger Junior College feels it should be in the tournament. Ranger was recently forced to forfeit six games for playing an ineligible player. Ranger insists that the player became eligible at the semester break and should own a tournament berth. Apparently, Ranger failed to notify the NJCAA of the eligibility move in time.

As of now, Cisco Junior College, Ranger's replacement, has been inked into the bracket against New Mexico Junior College at noon Thursday. Ranger has threatened to obtain a court injunction to prohibit Cisco from playing in the tournament.

As sad as this particular case is, Midland College athletic director Deinor Poss says it isn't a "real" problem for the tournament or for himself.

"I'm not going to get involved with the squabble between the two Northern Conference teams," said Poss. "I just left it with them that one or the other would have to show up at noon Thursday to play or forfeit the game. I'm leaving it at that. The game is scheduled. They have to decide who is right and who is wrong."

ANOTHER SMALL seeding controversy was settled quickly Sunday. Odessa College and NMJC tied for the conference championship while Midland College and South Plains tied for third place. Not only were the conference records identical, but the conference's system for determining tournament seeding also ended in a tie.

"Under conference rules, if a team beat the other twice in conference play, they are the top seeded team, but that didn't happen in either case," said Poss. "Then you go to the games between tournament teams and Odessa College had beaten Midland College twice and had lost to South Plains once. NMJC had beaten South Plains twice, but had split with Midland College, leaving us tied again."

"We called Kenneth Vaughn, who is president of Clarendon College and also the conference president," noted Poss. "We all trust him absolutely and we let him flip the coin to determine the seeding."

The result was that NMJC was given the No. 1 seed, OC the No. 2 seed, MC the No. 3 seed and South Plains the No. 4 seed.

It is no secret that Midland College feels it was the perfect ending for a perfect beginning. The Chaps wanted dearly to be in the opposite bracket of Odessa College. That means if both teams win their first two games, they would meet in the tournament finals Saturday instead of the semifinals.

Any OC-MC meeting is emotional and those two teams would rather meet in a championship final instead of a semifinal game. That particular matchup, although not a reality until both win two games, would certainly make the Region V show in Midland a financial success. No host wants to lose money with an early exit of the home team.

NMJC COULD very well be shaking in its boots after being declared the No. 1 seed from the Western Conference. After all, NMJC was seeded No. 1 last year and lost to Texas State Technical Insitute-Waco in the first round of the tournament in Waco. T-Bird coach Ron Black was so mad he put his team on the bus and headed for Hobbs, N.M., after the loss.

TSTI went on to become the Region V darling, beating both NMJC and South Plains to gain the finals against Midland College before the Cinderella slipper fell off.

That casts MC as the defending champion this year, a role the Chaps have played in five of the last six years.

It is also interesting to note that TSTI has become MC's first round opponent at 9 p.m. Thursday in a rematch of last year's tournament final. This matchup was made possible by MC's No. 3 seeding off the coin flip.

TSTI AND MC have already met on the court this season — well...sort of met. In the Thanksgiving tournament at Odessa College, MC and TSTI played for seven minutes and 49 seconds before TSTI coach Carl Love pulled his team off the floor after receiving three technical fouls from officials Terry Taylor and Don Mason. MC was leading 38-23 at the time, but TSTI was charged with a forfeit in the game.

It is not known if Poss has scheduled Taylor and Mason for the opening round game Thursday — but wouldn't that make things exciting.

In reality, however, it will not take such moves to make this tournament exciting. Five of the eight teams in the men's field are given an excellent chance at winning the title.

And that brings back to first things last. The women's winner? No doubt about it, OC's Lady Wranglers in a three-game stroll. Surely, there won't be any more controversy. Women are polite — aren't they?

Bradley Braves win MVC championship

Baskeball

CARBONDALE, Ill. (AP) — Bradley Coach Stan Albeck looked out at the court, saw Hersey Hawkins warming up early and figured there was "no way" the 14th-ranked Braves would fail to win the Missouri Valley Conference crown.

And they didn't, thanks to Hawkins, who scored 49 points as Bradley beat Southern Illinois 113-102 Monday night to clinch the title.

"Whenever he comes early and shoots, we know he's going to have a good game," Albeck said of Hawkins. "We knew he was going to have a good night, and tonight there was no way he was going to let us lose this game."

But it wasn't easy. Hawkins, the nation's leading collegiate scorer, was forced to outduel SIU's Steve Middleton, who scored 42 points in his final game at Carbondale.

"Middleton is a tremendous basketball player," Albeck said. "If it wasn't for Hawkins, he would probably be the player of the year in the Valley."

Hawkins scored 29 first-half points, pushing Bradley, 12-2 in the coneference and 23-4 overall, to a 56-48 halftime lead.

SIU, 6-8 and 12-15, had a 15-8 lead with 15:35 left in the first half, but Bradley came back to lead 20-19 after Luke Jackson hit a turnaround jumper. The Braves extended the lead to 42-27 with seven minutes to play in the half, but SIU closed to within eight points on a Todd Krueger tip-in at the buzzer.

The Salukis came back to make a strong challenge in the second half, but Bradley was equal to the task.

"Any time you're picked as the preseason conference favorite, there's pressure on you," Albeck said. "I think we responded well all season, and, importantly, tonight. SIU made a good run at us in the second half, but we kept our heads and held them off."

Hawkins set an SIU Arena scoring record and added 11 rebounds. Jackson added 12 points and 13 rebounds for Bradley. Donald Powell came off the bench to score 18 points.

No. 7 Pitt 87, Boston College 79

Charles Smith scored 23 points to become the second-leading scorer in Pitt history as the first-place Panthers improved to 11-3 in the Big East Conference and 21-4 overall.

"The funny thing is he's actually a good three-point shooter," Coach Paul Evans said. "We have some plays designed for that but he doesn't take that many."

Demetreus Gore scored 14 of his 20 points in the second half for Pitt. Sean Miller added 16 points, including four 3-pointers.

Dana Barros led Boston College with 32 points, hitting on 11 of 22 shots and six of 10 three-pointers. Steve Benton and Jamie Benton added 14 points apiece for Boston College, 15-12 overall and 6-10 in the conference.

No. 16 N.C. St. 87, N.C.-Asheville 76

Chucky Brown scored 25 points and Vinnie Del Negro added 23 to lead the Wolfpack, 21-6.

North Carolina-Asheville, trailing 52-32 at halftime, closed the gap to 78-70 with 3:20 remaining on the play of William Funderburk and Ricky Chatman, both of whom wound up with 22 points.

The Bulldogs, 13-14, took their only lead at 22-21 with 9:07 left in the first half on a basket by Funderburk. But Del Negro and Brown sparked a 9-0 spurt that gave the Wolfpack a 30-22 lead with 7:11 left.

Wolfpack Coach Jim Valvano said he had hoped for a better effort.

"I know it's a long year, but I'm disappointed," Valvano said.

Leetch stars in NHL debut

NEW YORK (AP) — Brian Leetch, who captained the United States Olympic team to a disappointing seventh-place finish in the Winter Olympics, is batting 1.000 in the National Hockey League.

Leetch made his professional debut with the New York Rangers on Monday night and picked up an assist in a 5-2 victory over the St. Louis Blues.

"These are the good moments," the 19-year-old defenseman said. "It's much nicer when you win. It's going to get much easier when I get experience.

With the Rangers leading 3-0 early in the second period, Leetch sent an outlet pass to Tomas Sandstrom, who fed Kelly Kisio for a back-hander that beat St. Louis goalie Rick Wamsley.

"Thursday was my last (Olympic) game. I had a couple of days off, so it's not like I flew right in here," Leetch said. "I think it's better to just get right at it. I didn't know what to expect. Defense first and the offense will take care of itself."

Coach Michel Bergeron paired Leetch on defense with Michel Petit.

"Petit is a good skater. I don't want to tell him to hold back," Bergeron said. "It's great to have all these young defensemen.

"He (Leetch) is a good player. I don't want to rush him, make him a great player too soon."

St. Louis Coach Jacques Martin called Leetch "an exciting player who's going to help their hockey club a lot. He has good skill and playing with the Olympic team helped him develop."

Kisio, the Rangers' captain, said Leetch's only problem was that "he was a little nervous."

Leetch played college hockey at Boston College.

NBA Roundup

The Philadelphia 76ers beat the clock, but only after their timekeeper held back the second hand.

Gerald Henderson's driving layup at the buzzer Monday night gave Philadelphia a 102-101 victory over the Chicago Bulls. But with four seconds left time stood still.

Or at least the clock did.

With four seconds remaining, the Bulls' Horace Grant missed two free throws. Mike Gminski grabbed the rebound and the Sixers called time.

The clock still read four seconds.

"If there's a tip and a rebound, a second has to go off the clock," Chicago Coach Doug Collins said. "I'm going to protest the game."

Collins protested at the scorer's table when Gminski called time. When Henderson scored to win the game, Collins charged the table and had to be restrained by his assistants.

"If the clock shows four seconds, it could be 4.9 seconds and the clock doesn't start until someone touches the ball," timer Jack Grosse said. "He said I never started it and that's not true."

Two Sixers, Gminski and Charles Barkley, agreed that Philadelphia should not have gotten four seconds for the final shot.

"I got a hand on it and tipped it to Mike," Barkley said.

"The ball got tipped over to me, but funny things happen at home," Gminski said. "However, I wasn't going to go over and plead Doug's case for him."

Mavericks 123, Nuggets 96

Rolando Blackman also had six points during the streak, which pushed Dallas from an 85-85 tie to a 103-88 lead with 5:49 left.

Tarpley finished with 15 points and 21 rebounds. Earlier in the day he was named NBA Player of the Week.

"Like Tony the Tiger says, 'It's great,'" Tarpley said of the award. "My goal is just to try and be consistent and to excel."

Mark Aguirre scored 23 points and Sam Perkins added 21 for Dallas, which extended its Midwest Division lead over Denver to 4½ games. Danny Schayes scored 21 points and Michael Adams 20 for the Nuggets.

Bullets 110, Warriors 105

Moses Malone scored 33 points, including 10 in a 14-6 run at the start of the third quarter to lead Washington to its third consecutive victory.

Washington went ahead 64-53 with the burst over the first six minutes of the second half and was ahead the rest of the way.

"We came out a little bit stronger in the third quarter and were able to maintain a nine-point lead. That was the key," Bullets Coach Wes Unseld said. "We've gotten big games out of a couple of guys lately. The last few games, it was Jeff Malone, and tonight it was Moses."

Jazz 115, Kings 110

Karl Malone scored 41 points, tying his career high, including the basket that put Utah ahead for good at 101-100 with 5:18 left.

"Karl came into the league and has been working hard since Day One," said Utah assistant coach Jerry Sloan, who is acting coach while Frank Layden recovers from a hernia operation.

Trail Blazers 107, Cavaliers 94

Jerome Kersey scored 33 points and the Trail Blazers held Cleveland to 18 points in the fourth quarter as Portland won its third straight game.

Kersey also had eight rebounds, made five steals and blocked three shots for the Trail Blazers, who played their fourth game in seven nights.

"Kersey was outstanding," Portland Coach Mike Schuler said. "The one thing about Jerome is that he'll give you a consistent effort every night."

POOR

The hockey team, which finished seventh among 12 teams, was never a power. Several athletes counted on for medals, like Jansen, his teammate Nick Thometz, and Josh Thompson in biathlon, did not come through. Debi Thomas won a bronze medal in the women's figure skating, not the gold or silver that had been expected.

There were several cheerier notes. Bonnie Warner's sixth-place finish in luge was the best finish ever by an American. Brent Rushlaw's bobsled team was fourth. Brian Boitano defeated Brian Orser of Canada, the world champion, to win the gold in men's figure skating. Bonnie Blair won two medals in speed-skating, a gold in the 500-meter sprint and a bronze in the 1,000-meter race.

Eric Flaim, a speed-skater from Pembroke, Mass., won a silver in the 1,500-meter race and was fourth three times, missing bronze medals by .34 seconds in the 1,000, by 1.17 seconds in the 5,000, and by 5.02 in the 10,000.

But these notes of hope for better finishes in the 1992 Games in Albertville, France seem to be lost in the general feeling that for a country with the size, wealth and population of the United States, its showing here was poor — particularly compared to the leading Eastern-bloc countries.

"Even with our political-social-economic system, there's no reason why we can't do better, much better," said Robert Helmick, the president of the United States Olympic Committee.

He agreed with Jansen's assessment of the spirit of the Games, but only to the extent that competing can breed greater success.

"If you compete and do well," Helmick said, "the medals will come."

In the final analysis, Olympic success is measured in medals. For that reason, Helmick appointed a panel of seven, headed by George Steinbrenner, the principal owner of the New York Yankees baseball team, to assess USOC programs. The creation of the panel was announced here last Wednesday, with Steinbrenner in attendance.

Helmick, who did not have the unanimous support of other USOC officers in his appointment of Steinbrenner as chairman, emphasized that the panel was not created as a result of what was unfolding here.

"This has been in the works since last summer," he said.

"I was astonished by the timing," said Richard Pound, a vice president of the International Olympic Committee and a lawyer in Montreal. "It's not for me to comment on what the USOC does, but they picked the worst possible time to make such an announcement. I can't think of anything more off-putting to athletes trying to do their best than to find that a commission has been appointed to find out why they are screwing up."

Jansen did not disagree, but he addressed the issue a different way.

"Sometimes I think we get a little carried away with medal counts. Everyone is out there trying to do his best. I think the emphasis on medals gets to be a little too much."

Craig starts pumping up Giants

Associated Press

Spring Training

After taking a look at their immediate past, the San Francisco Giants hope it will lead to a more successful future.

Manager Roger Craig greeted the team Monday and showed them the 1987 highlight film, followed by a 20-minute pep talk.

"If that doesn't turn you on, what will?" newcomer Brett Butler asked after viewing the highlights of the Giants' march to the National League West championship a year ago.

But the movie was merely a preview of what was to come in Craig's 20-minute pep talk.

"We're going to be champions, guys," he said. "We're not going to let up from Day One. There's no pressure being picked No. 1. The pressure is on those guys below us because they know they're not going to beat us. But last year is gone. We've all got a chance to improve ourselves and get better."

Outfielder Jeffrey Leonard, MVP of the playoffs, said they gave the Giants "a taste, and I want some more. It was a rough winter because I still feel we were a better team than the (St. Louis) Cardinals.

"But we can't dwell on the past. I want the guys on this team to realize it can feel a lot better. I'm going to keep reminding them of that. There's a big difference between winning and going all the way."

JOSE CAN YOU SEE

In the spring training camp of the Bay Area's other club, Oakland Athletics outfielder Jose Canseco got a sample of his teammates' biting humor and a lecture from Manager Tony LaRussa after arriving five days later than most players.

As Canseco headed for the practice field, he had to pass a table with a sign which read: "Welcome to Jose Canseco Autograph Day. Appearing for the first time, Jose Canseco ... Evening lecture — concepts of team play. Special guest speaker, Jose 'Cardshow' Canseco."

"I was under the impression all along that the (reporting) date was March 1, and I had made commitments 3½ months ago," said Canseco, who appeared at two baseball card shows over the weekend. "If I thought I was jeopardizing the chance for the team to make playoffs or World Series I'd have been here."

LaRussa met privately with Canseco before practice.

"I got my point across. It wasn't light-hearted," said LaRussa, who had criticised Canseco's failure to report last week.

ROYAL PAIN

While Canseco was undergoing some good-natured ribbing, Danny Tartabull, Kansas City's young slugger who is holding out, said it would be embarrassing for him to come to camp now and suggested the Royals should trade him.

"If they don't feel I'm that important to their team, then send me to a team that does," said Tartabull, who hit .309 with 34 homers and 101 runs batted in last season. "My market value is very high right now. I just want to be treated fairly, so if they don't want me, trade me. I want to play ball.

"I know I'm facing fines and whatever else. I don't care. They want somebody they can jerk around. Well, they can have someone else then."

Tartabull, who made $145,000 last season, his first with the Royals and second in the majors, is asking $425,000. The Royals have increased their original offer by $100,000 to $325,000.

General Manager John Schuerholz said Tartabull's contract will be renewed automatically today if he doesn't sign. But Tartabull's representatives said if the contract is renewed, it will be for only $290,000.

"I can't come into camp now," Tartabull said. "If I took that contract, it would be an embarrassment. Instead of coming to camp and being happy, I'd be coming in embarrassed. They leave me no choice but to stay at home."

LOW SIERRA

Texas Rangers outfielder Ruben Sierra was at the team's training camp after failing to appear for the first five workouts. Sierra, who earned $97,500 last year when he had 30 homers and 109 RBI in his first full season, said he would reluctantly settle for the club's $215,000 offer if it renews his contract automatically.

East Germany embraces Kati

BERLIN (AP) — "All Germans Love Kati," read the banner headline Monday in West Germany's Bild newspaper, the nation's biggest selling daily. That meant Germans in both East and West.

The paper was praising East German skating star Katarina Witt, after winning her second gold medal at the Calgary Olympics over the weekend.

"I was happy with my performance," the East German Communist Party newspaper quoted Witt as saying modestly. "I had the feeling it went off well."

Witt told the East German newspaper that she was nervous while waiting for U.S. skater Debi Thomas — billed as her top contender — to complete her program Saturday night.

"That was very, very difficult for me," Neues Deutschland quoted Witt as saying in an interview from Calgary.

Thomas, who led the figure skating competition until the final day, skated nervously and left the silver to Canada's Elizabeth Manley, who took the highest marks in the long program to the joy of hometown fans.

"When her (Thomas') score was lit up and the screams started, I thought for a moment that I had lost," Witt told the newspaper.

Witt hinted that she was considering offers from Western companies to perform in ice revue shows. "It may be that I will appear as a guest in a show," the West Berlin tabloid Berliner Newspaper quoted her as saying.

Witt said at a press conference several days ago that she was considering a Western offer.

Present Top Four may be Final Four

By BRIAN BROWN
Copley News Service

At the moment, there are four Donald Trumps in college basketball — four teams that appear to have a little bit more than anyone else.

The field for the NCAA's 64-team tournament won't be announced until March 13. But if the pairings were revealed today, there would be little argument about the top seeds for the East, Southeast, Midwest and West regionals.

Like Temple, the other three members of the upper class would begin the playoffs relatively close to home:

Second-ranked Purdue, in West Lafayette, Ind., would stay in state and play at Notre Dame's Athletic and Convocation Center (South Bend), a Midwest subregional site.

In the Southeast, fourth-ranked Oklahoma would go to the Omni in Atlanta, a fair distance geographically but still within its region.

And third-ranked Arizona, the Pac-10 champion, is likely to start at UCLA's Pauley Pavilion, which will serve as a West subregional site, along with the Huntsman Center at the University of Utah, Salt Lake City.

It would appear Purdue and Arizona, in particular, have smooth roads into the round of 16. The Boilermakers and Wildcats can expect to have strong fan support.

All in all, as educated guesses go, the Donald Trumps seem a likely Final Four.

With Brigham Young stumbling lately, Arizona (26-2) has established itself as the class of the West. Purdue (24-2) is 13-1 in the Big Ten, a traditionally strong conference that could send as many as six teams to the tournament. Oklahoma (26-2) is 11-1 in the Big Eight, which could have five teams tourney-bound.

Finally, Temple (25-1) silenced many doubters with an 83-66 victory Feb. 21 over sixth-ranked North Carolina at the Dean Smith Center, where the Tar Heels had won 27 of their last 29.

Finding enough representative teams in the West should be as simple as selecting the top seeds. In years past, however, the West Regional has had many out-of-region entries, because there simply weren't enough decent candidates out this way.

That's not so this year.

Wyoming, ranked 17th, has won nine of its last 10. The Cowboys (22-5) are peaking at the right time.

UNLV coach Jerry Tarkanian had to replace four of five starters from last season — and he did. The Rebels (25-3) are ranked fifth.

With its dazzling offense, 18th-ranked Loyola Marymount (24-3) should provide some of the best TV viewing of the tournament.

BYU, ranked 15th, is the fifth Western team in the top 20. The Cougars (23-3) will not end up in the West Regional, however.

The four teams that emerge from the two West subregionals will play at the regional in Seattle, which has games scheduled Friday and Sunday.

Highpockets still Cub day fan

By IRA BERKOW
N.Y. Times News Service

NEW YORK — Highpockets doesn't understand why the Cubs are doing what they're doing. Highpockets has lived in Chicago all of his life, and for him lights in Wrigley Field are not, as some believe, a matter of coming out of the Dark Ages.

The Cubs, the last team in the major leagues to play no night ball at home, have just been given sanction by the Chicago City Council to play baseball at night.

"Maybe I'm too much of a traditionalist," said Highpockets, by telephone from his office in the Loop. "I've always thought being different is a plus. I've never seen the wisdom of being like everybody else. I guess in Russia that would be grounds for sending me to a g

Indicator revisions cloud likelihood of recession

By MARTIN CRUTSINGER
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The government's chief economic forecasting gauge dropped a sharp 0.6 percent in January, but an upward revision for December eased fears of an imminent recession.

The Commerce Department reported a month ago that the index had declined 0.2 percent in December after falling in October and November.

In today's report, however, the December calculation was revised to show an increase of 0.3 percent.

Since it was created in 1948, the index has correctly forecast every recession the country has had with declines for at least three consecutive months. Thus, the revision to December was taken by economists as a heartening sign that the country is unlikely to suffer a downturn this year.

The index has taken on added significance since Oct. 19, when stock prices plunged a record 508 points, eclipsing the 1929 market crash, which preceded the Great Depression.

Since October's steep decline, however, a number of business barometers have shown strength, including continued declines in the unemployment rate. Even the stock market has rallied in recent weeks, climbing more than 48 points on Monday to close at its highest level since the October collapse.

Economists are looking for the economy to slow in the first half of 1988, but they now believe that the sluggish growth will not worsen into a recession.

The National Association of Business Economists said Monday that while more than half of its members responding to a November survey believed the country would suffer a recession this year, that figure had now dropped to about one-fourth.

The 0.6 percent January decline was led by a big increase in new claims for unemployment benefits, which averaged 351,000 a week in January, up 12.5 percent from the December level. Since January, however, the weekly unemployment claims figures have been falling, further easing recession fears.

In all, five of the nine available indicators showed weakness during January. After unemployment claims, the negative factors were a drop in building permits, a decline in manufacturers' orders for consumer goods, changes in raw materials prices and a drop in business delivery times.

Four indicators showed strength during the month, with a rise in stock prices making the biggest gain. Other positive forces were the growth of the money supply, increases in the length of the average workweek and a rise in orders for plant and equipment.

Michael Evans, head of a Washington forecasting firm, until recently had been expecting a recession in the early part of 1988. But he said he was now less pessimistic because a variety of business barometers have rebounded after an initial shock from the stock market decline.

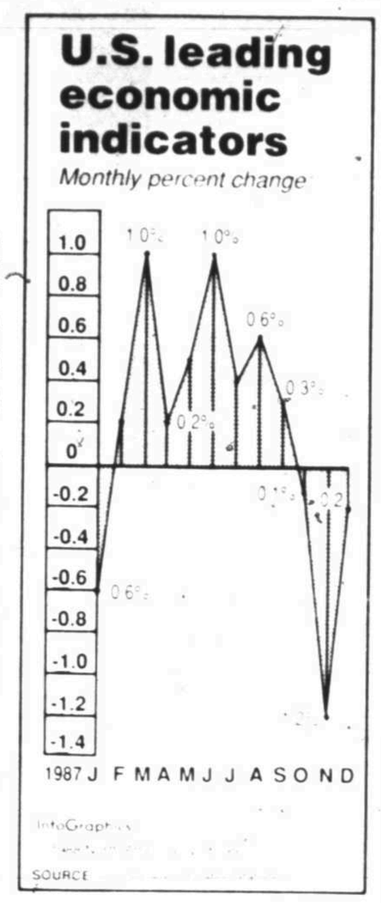
"The economy isn't out of the woods yet, but a recession forecast is a diminished probability now," he said.

The overall economy, as measured by the gross national product, raced ahead at a 4.5 percent rate in the final three months of 1987. But almost all of that increase came from a big buildup of unsold products.

Analysts said production will be cut back in the current quarter while those high inventory levels are worked down. Many economists think growth will slow to below 1 percent with some even expecting a negative GNP growth figure from January through March.

But economists think growth will then slowly improve, allowing the economy to expand at around 2 percent for all of 1988, about half of the 1987 level.

"Most of the growth in the economy is going to come from exports with consumer spending and home building continuing to be depressed," said John O. Wilson, chief economist at Bank of America in San Francisco.



The Department of Commerce revised its assessment of December indicators to show a 0.3 percent increase, followed by a sharp 0.6 percent drop in January.

Oil prices head down again

From Staff Reports

Crude prices fell sharply today on rumors that Saudi Arabia was discounting its price for crude oil and that Egypt had dropped its price below $15 per barrel.

Today's drop came after a slight rally Monday that took prices back to $16 on the strength of a big jump in heating oil prices, and reports of bad weather in Europe.

On the New York Mercantile Exchange, West Texas Intermediate crude for April delivery settled at $16.01 per barrel Monday, up 23 cents from Friday's close.

Among refined products traded on the exchange, wholesale heating oil for March delivery gained 1.46 cents to 47.16 cents per gallon and wholesale unleaded gasoline gained .45 cent to 45.71 cents per gallon.

Analysts said several days of bad weather in Europe and cooler than normal temperatures in the northeastern United States had touched off the heavy buying in heating oil.

The market is testing to see if we have bargain prices," said Bob Baker, an analyst with Prudential-Bache Securities Inc.

Baker said last week's reports speculating about excess production by members of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries, which helped depress crude prices, may have been overblown.

"There is still a lot of oil out there, but whether it's a big excess or a little excess is what we're trying to find out," he said.

Wagner & Brown pursuit of USG Corp. continues

By JOHN PAUL PITTS
Business/Oil Editor

A group led by Cyril Wagner and Jack Brown of Midland began its formal pursuit of United States Gypsum Corp. today with its offer to stockholders to purchase a majority of the outstanding shares of USG Corp.

The offer to stockholders was made today in a half-page advertisment in the Wall Street Journal by Desert Acquisition Inc., a wholly owned subsidary of Desert Partners, a limited partnership headed by Wagner and Brown.

In the offer, which expires at midnight on Monday, March 28, the acquisition company offers to pay $42 a share for 21,500,000 shares of USG common stock including the associated preferred share purchase rights.

The offer comes on the heels of an offer made to USG Chairman Robert Day on February 25, 1988 to purchase the same number of shares for the same price. In a letter to Day, Desert Partners said it was

Texaco defends indemnity arrangement for officers

By MATTHEW L. WALD
New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — Lawyers for shareholders of Texaco Inc. Monday questioned a key figure in the company's settlement with the Pennzoil Co. on why the plan to bring Texaco out of bankruptcy contains a provision protecting the company's officers from lawsuits charging mismanagement.

In a deposition, the witness, Charles F. Luce, chairman of the committee of Texaco's creditors, said the idea of protecting the officers and directors of Texaco had come from Pennzoil. He said that Pennzoil believed that indemnifying the officers would help bring a settlement.

Texaco is hoping to emerge from bankruptcy in April, and its reorganization plan, as currently written, would extinguish the 15 lawsuits brought by shareholders against the company's officers and directors for their role in the merger with the Getty Oil Co., which eventually resulted in a $10.3 billion jury verdict against Texaco. The shareholders, as the company's owners, are seeking damages from its top executives and directors for mismanagement in the Getty acquisition.

The reorganization plan calls for a $3 billion payment by Texaco to Pennzoil to settle the claim. Plans that take companies out of bankruptcy generally settle all claims, and this one would extinguish those of the shareholders.

Business association pools resources

By ALLEN E. HOWLAND
Assistant Business/Oil Editor

Businesses of all sizes in various industries face many similar problems as they struggle to make ends meet in today's tough economic climate.

The Midland chapter of the 66-year-old Texas Association of Business focuses on helping its members cope with vital local and statewide issues — such as soaring workers' compensation premiums and substance abuse in the work place. Small firms who alone could have little say in state issue are able to provide a unified voice through their association.

The problems confronting businesses in 1922, when the Texas Manufacturers' Association was formed, were much different than today; but the goals of the TAB remain largely unaltered.

"We provide a platform to inform local businesses and to focus their feelings back into government circles," explained chapter chairman Ron Schwisow. In its efforts to educate members and serve as a conduit for their feedback, the Midland chapter — one of 34 in the state — has set a April 13 luncheon to tackle Workers' Compensation costs and concerns.

Like many business and professional groups, the local TAB chapter suffered some shrinkage in its membership roles over the past couple of years, but that situation has begun to solidify in recent months, said Schwisow, who is president of Teraco Inc. Current membership is about 80, he said.

Another seminar, probably in early summer, will address problems with substance abuse in the work place and employer testing and assistance programs, Schwisow said.

Montana firm plans West Texas plant

HELENA, Mont. (AP) — Montana Power Co. has created a new subsidiary to handle its new ventures into developing wholesale power projects, including almost half the interest in a $394 million gas-fired plant planned for Texas.

Paul Schmechel, company chairman and chief executive officer, said Monday that Montana Power's investment will be $17.5 million and marks the firm's "long-term strategy for expansion into wholesale and independent power activities."

The new subsidiary will be called Continental Energy Services Inc. and is the third company formed under the Montana Power umbrella. The utility division carries its parent company's name and Entech includes the non-utility businesses.

The 255-megawatt Texas plant, to be built near Sweetwater by ENSERCH Corp. of Dallas, will produce electricity for sale to Texas Utilities Co., which supplies power to about a third of the state. Steam, created as a by-product of the electrical-generation, will be sold to a U.S. Gypsum plant.

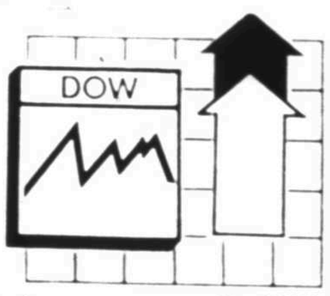
Stocks climb to post-crash highs



NEW YORK (AP) — The stock market climbed to new highs since the October crash with a broad advance Monday that seemed to gather momentum as the session progressed.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials jumped 48.41 to 2,071.62, posting more than half its gain in the last hour of trading.

Macy's surprise bidder for Federated

CINCINNATI (AP) — R.H. Macy & Co. made a surprise bid for Federated Department Stores Inc., throwing into disarray a competing offer by Campeau Corp. for the nation's largest department store operator.

The bid Monday by New York-based Macy's is valued at about $6.6 billion, topping the $6.1 billion offer from Campeau, a Toronto-based department store and real estate company, Federated said in a statement.

Campeau has been trying to buy Federated for more than a month, but Federated's board rejected three successively richer offers. On Friday, Campeau sweetened its offer again and Federated agreed to stop fighting and start merger talks.

Federated disclosed Macy's offer late Monday from its headquarters here after Federated's board met in New York to consider the latest, $68-a-share offer from Campeau for all of Federated's 89.6 million common shares outstanding.

Macy's offices in New York were closed when Federated announced the proposal, and a spokesman could not be reached for comment.

Under the proposal, privately held Macy's would make a cash tender offer for approximately 80 percent of Federated's outstanding shares at $73.80 per share, Federated said.

Federated shares not purchased in the tender offer would be exchanged in a merger transaction, for a number of newly issued shares of Macy's common stock, equal to approximately 40 percent of the unpurchased shares.

No value immediately could be placed on the stock portion of the buyout offer, but the total offer would be worth about $6.6 billion if valued at $73.80 in cash or stock for all of Federated's shares.

Federated had announced earlier Monday that its board was considering another proposal that was competitive with Campeau's offer. It did not identify the bidder.

BUSINESS IN BRIEF

Banks' entry into new investments delayed

NEW YORK (NYT) — A federal appeals court agreed Monday to delay its ruling allowing commercial banks to add limited investment banking powers.

The decision by the 2nd U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in Manhattan came a day before the expiration of a seven-month moratorium imposed by Congress on new bank powers, which include the opportunity to underwrite such securities as commercial paper and mortgage-backed issues.

The court's decision, which had been requested by the Securities Industry Association, effectively blocks the entry of the banks into these businesses for much longer than the 15-day period granted by the court.

The SIA told the court that it intended to appeal to the Supreme Court the ruling made earlier in February by the appeals court that upheld the Federal Reserve on allowing subsidiaries of commercial banks to conduct investment banking business.

Pickens makes offer for gold producer

AMARILLO (AP) — The partnership controlled by T. Boone Pickens Jr. has offered to buy Homestake Mining Co., the nation's largest gold producer, for about $1.9 billion in cash.

In a letter to Homestake Chairman Harry Conger, Mesa Limited Partnership offered Monday to negotiate an agreement to buy all common shares of the San Francisco-based mining company for $20 a share. Homestake has about 93 million shares outstanding, and did not immediately respond to the offer.

Circle K acquires 473 7-Eleven stores

DALLAS (AP) — Southland Corp. is selling 473 7-Eleven stores in 10 states to its chief competitor, Circle K Corp., for more than $147 million.

The sale announced Monday would reduce Southland's 7-Eleven chain to 7,542 from 8,296 stores before the company began divestiture moves started last year.

Company spokeswoman Markeeta McNatt said Southland plans to sell hundreds more stores, lowering its total to between 7,000 and 7,300 by the end of 1989, to help reduce debt incurred in its $4.9 billion leveraged buyout.

Dr Pepper, Seven-Up set tentative merger

DALLAS (AP) — The boards of directors at holding companies for Dr Pepper and Seven-Up have agreed tentatively to merge the privately-held soft-drink companies. Terms were not disclosed.

The two companies, which accounted for nearly 11 percent of sales in the $38 billion soft drink industry last year, said Monday the proposed merger is contingent on drafting a definitive agreement and regulatory approval.

'Rebuild America' sounds national alarm

By ERIC BEST
Hearst News Service

LOS ANGELES — If the United States wakes up in time, and responds as it did to the 1973-74 oil crisis or to World War II, then it has a chance — maybe — to reverse its decline as a world economic power.

That is the underlying message of Rebuild America, a new coalition of congressional, business and academic leaders who believe only an immense, immediate national effort to restore savings and invest in competitiveness and productivity can save the United States' dominant place in the world.

Salvation depends on the country's ability to stem consumption and develop "investment economics" to maximize human and technological resources. Otherwise, the group's leaders say, the United States faces continued political, social and economic decline that has characterized the waning of world powers throughout history.

"It's a crisis few Americans are aware of," said Mark Dayton, president of Vermilion Corp. and co-chairman of Rebuild America with U.S. Rep. Mel Levine. The two kicked off the organization's inaugural economic seminar.

The ensuing explication of the nation's deterioration included a speech by TV mogul Norman Lear, who called the nation's bottom-line mentality "the social disease of our time."

"This ethic breeds an atmosphere where leadership everywhere —in business, Congress, federal agencies, state legislatures, organized labor, the universities — leadership everywhere —refuses, through greed or myopia or weakness, to make provisions for the future," Lear said. "The notion that life has anything to do with succeeding at the level of doing one's best, or that some of life's richest rewards are not monetary, is lost to our kids in this short-term, bottom-line climate."

Levine said the crisis had failed to dominate Congress in part because each member had his or her own agenda and had not made the long-term economic challenge a priority in daily legislative exchanges.

"There is not a perception of urgency among my colleagues," Levine said. He expressed the hope that Rebuild America would "fill a critical education vacuum" to inform more Americans.

The group has produced a deluge of statistics that should scare anyone concerned about the nation's future. They include:

— A plunge in U.S. annual income from a $106.3 billion surplus in international investment in 1980 to a $263.6 billion deficit in 1986.

— A drop in national savings from 1975 to 1985 from 18.1 to 16.5 percent of gross national product. In the same period, Japan dropped from from 32.3 to 32.1 of GNP, and West Germany increased from 20.9 to 22.2 percent in the same period.

— Productivity growth from 1973 to 1985 that averaged just 0.3 percent. Japan averaged 2.9 percent, and West Germany averaged 2.2 percent.

The numbers also show that U.S. household savings have been falling, unemployment has been rising, real interest rates have been increasing, and world market share in key industries has been falling.

Compared with Japan, for example, U.S. students spend less time in school and have less demanded of them. The United States' teachers are paid less, its equipment is older, and its investment in robotics is far less.

Four businessmen plan new trade bank

DALLAS (AP) — Four businessmen say they will found a new trade merchant bank to offer financial and import-export expertise in the Southwest.

The bank, Bristol International Ltd. will specialize in offering help to companies interested in international trade, but previously unable to secure necessary capital, said Vijay J. Fozdar.

"We see ourselves as not being as big as Japanese trading companies, but having similar capabilities," said Fozdar. "We believe Texas companies have a lot to offer."

Fozdar along with the three other businessmen planned to announce formation of Bristol today.

Fozdar will move to Bristol from First RepublicBank Trade Inc, where he was general manager.

Other Bristol founders are Joel T. Williams III, Harden Wiedemann and Fred D. Waldkoetter. Fozdar and Waldkoetter will be managing directors of the company, with Wiedemann as director.

The new merchant bank should expedite growth of Texas' emerging high-tech business base in international markets, Wiedemann said.

"We're one of the strongest regions in the U.S. in technology, and there's an enormous appetite for American technology in the Far East and other parts of the world right now," said Wiedemann.

"The problem that we've had in this area has been the machinery and expertise to export those technologies."

Wiedemann is former executive director of the Texas Economic Development Commission and current North Texas Commission president.

Bristol's principals said there is a general lack of trade finance expertise in this country, with the exception of New York, Los Angeles and San Francisco.

"Our country doesn't have that many major exporters," said Waldkoetter. "There are a lot of small exporters and we could get a lot more if we start putting this expertise in the marketplace.

Williams said financing is the biggest problem facing companies in importing or exporting goods.

"That's the key role Bristol will play," said Williams, former president and chief executive officer of Texas Federal Financial Corp. "We will arrange financing."

genuinely interested in acquiring USG and would refuse to accept "greenmail" or the purchase of its stock at a premium over the market price. The offer, as expected, was rejected by USG management.

Desert Partners currently holds a 9.8 percent stake in USG, and sometime takeover partner T. Boone Pickens has revealed that his group Mesa Limited Partners also owns an additional 1.5 percent. In the letter to Day, Desert Partners revealed that it has spent about $225 million, or $44.30 a share, to accumulate the 9.8 percent stake.

USG Corp. had previously sought a court order to permanently block Desert Partners from buying additional shares of USG stock, but that move was blocked by a federal judge in Chicago on February 22.

USG Corp. stock continued to trade today at 37½, which was up only ⅛ over Monday's trading. Stock broker, Joe Liberty of Rauscher Pierce Refsnes Inc. in Midland said the stock price remained unaffected because of the tender offer to buy only a prorated portion of the stock. An offer by white knight to purchase all the shares of the stock could drive the price up substantially.

USG Corp. now has 51,504,000 share outstanding, and Desert Acquisition Inc. is seeking less than half those shares.

TAB

The TAB addresses issues of concern to business in general, not limiting itself to a specific industry, and its membership reflects that approach. From major oil and service companies to small manufacturing concerns and individual entrepreneurs in retailing and other businesses, TAB members band together to pursue issues of common interest.

An example that Schwisow points to with pride was local TAB members' early role in expanding United Parcel Service to intrastate Texas deliveries.

"Hopefully, by presenting concrete proposals for Workers' Compensation premiums and benefits, we can be just as influential in this issue," he said.

In addition to 34 paid staffers around the state, the TAB supports a Political Action Committee, which lobbies for pro-business positions in state government, explains local paid executive Pat Browder.

State government decides state tax rates; unemployment insurance premiums; product liability laws, property tax guidelines; state agency regulations; labor-management laws; and workers compensation programs. The only decision left to businesses is who serves in the elected posts of state government, the TAB says.

The association and its PAC are dedicated to positively influencing government through support of politicians who advocate a healthy business climate.

MACY'S

A spokeswoman for Campeau declined earlier Monday to comment on the last-minute bid, although Campeau repeatedly has stated it wanted the opportunity to match competing offers.

The Federated board took no action on the Campeau bid but directed its management and advisers to investigate Macy's proposals, to negotiate a definitive agreement and submit both negotiated agreements to the board as soon as possible, Federated said.

Federated officials did not know when the board would get the proposals, said spokeswoman Carol Sanger.

The board of directors of the merged company, which would be called Macy's-Federated Inc., would include significant representation from the existing Federated board, Federated said.

The Macy's proposal would be subject to execution of a definitive merger agreement, and to approval by the boards of directors and stockholders of both companies. Some Macy's outside directors already have participated in the deliberations, Ms. Sanger said.

Macy's was taken private in a $3.6 billion leveraged buyout by management in 1986. Its stockholders and directors include A. Alfred Taubman, a major shopping mall developer, and Laurence A. Tisch, the chief executive of CBS Inc. and Loews Corp.

Cincinnati-based Federated took in $11 billion last year from its more than 650 department stores, supermarkets and other outlets nationwide, including the Bloomingdale's, Abraham & Straus, Filene's, Burdine's, Lazarus, Bullock's and Gold Circle chains.

In addition to the Campeau proposal, Federated's board had been considering whether to entirely shun purchase offers in favor of a restructuring that would keep present management in control.

Campeau has been pressing its takeover attempt since Jan. 25. In December 1986, the company acquired giant Allied Stores Corp., whose operations include the Jordan Marsh, Stern's, Brooks Brothers and Ann Taylor retail chains.

Some industry analysts have said they expect Federated to continue soliciting other buyers to fend off Campeau's overtures.

MONTANA

Schmechel said the project provides a stable investment because the contracts for electricity and steam cover 12 years.

"Although we won't build or operate this facility, our participation is a valuable experience in the complex structure and negotiation associated with cogeneration ventures," he told reporters here. "Montana Power will continue to pursue projects to which we can apply our utility and non-utility expertise — as an investor, as a fuel supplier or as a project developer."

Schmechel said Montana Power has not made a similar investment in this state because no such major project is planned and Montana has no need for the additional power.

He said Texas business regulations and taxation make it a more attractive state to operate in. "They seem to have an attitude of welcoming business, and they're more aggressive about it," he explained.

"Montana is moving in that direction" as leaders realize the state is continuing to lose its college graduates to states with healthier economies and more jobs, Schmechel said. "We're kind of catching the spirit that Texas has."

The new subsidiary will also handle Montana Power's 30-percent interest in the Colstrip 4 coal-fired power plant, which the company operates in southeastern Montana.

Schmechel said Montana Power has recently made progress in finding a market for some of its 210-megawatt share of Colstrip 4 power. The Bonneville Power Administration has agreed to give the company access to its transmission lines for delivering 105 megawatts to California, where a major Los Angeles utility is interested in signing a 23-year contract for the electricity, he said.

"That helps our major problem that we have in Montana Power — what to do with that large generating resource," Schmechel said.

The remaining 105 megawatts will continue to be sold on the spot market until a permanent customer can be found, he added.

COALITION

Levine, a member of the U.S. House Foreign Relation Committee, said Rebuild America blamed "failed supply-side policies" for the nation's debt plunge in the 1980s and had begun to circulate its stark statistical evidence that the U.S. economy had, in the last eight years, eaten most of its seed for future economic crops.

The group numbers among its principles Massachusetts Institute of Technology's Nobel prize winner Robert Solow; Boston Federal Reserve Board Chairman George Hatsolpoulos; Harvard University's Robert Reich; MIT's Lester Thurow; TRW economist Pat Choate, author of "High Flex Society"; and Paul Kennedy, author of "The Rise and Fall of the Great Powers."

Harvard economist Lawrence Summers said the country could boost its savings rate without consequent unemployment or a recession if the Fed loosened monetary policy to accommodate growth.

Fending off suggestions during a media session that the group will be perceived as partisan in blaming supply-side theory, Levine emphasized the need to address the problem as a national crisis demanding bipartisan solutions. Much of the distressing statistical data now is well known, particularly since the October stock market crash intensified concern about the economy and its long-term, underlying health.

For the curious fact that many Americans seem uncertain about the nature or severity of the nation's economic crisis, panelist Stephen Cohen, a University of California-Berkeley economist and chairman of the Berkley Roundtable on the International Economy, was quick with an explanation.

"Congress says there's a problem, the president says there is no problem, the Federal Reserve Board is off in a room by themselves mumbling in Latin, and 10,000 economists — why do we need 10,000 economists? — have 10,000 opinions," Cohen said.

The real problem is simple, he said: "The money is gone. We blew a big hunk of our national power," referring to U.S. consumption binge and borrowing from foreigners that is adding about $63 billion in foreign debt every three months.

"It's what you invest in that counts," Cohen said. "We're borrowing their money and buying Mercedes. We could borrow the money and buy robots."

Brothers Jud (right) and George Schroeder borrowed $4,200 more than 20 years ago to build better soft drink fountains. The have parlayed that loan into a $60 million per year business with its sights set on Asian and South American markets.

Export markets in 'dispensable' to soda fountain manufacturers

By DAVID SEDENO
Associated Press Writer

SAN ANTONIO — George and Jud Schroeder were only trying to make a living in 1967 when they borrowed $4,200 to manufacture and sell new equipment for fountain soft drink dispensers.

Today, the two brothers head Lancer Corp., the nation's third-largest beverage machine manufacturing company with annual sales of $30 million.

The Schroeders both have law degrees, but they never practiced law because Jud was always inventing products and George trying to sell them.

Their products are now in 60 countries, but the Schroeders are setting their sights on Latin America and Asia, territories ripe for fountain drinks, the brothers said.

"When we started this company, we were just trying to make a living, trying to eat," said George Schroeder, president and chief executive officer of the company.

"We just struggled on something that fortunately got a little better. We could have taken the route of being professionals and made some money, like a lot of our friends, but I look at my brother and me and it took us 15 years in this business before we began doing real good," he said.

Many American consumers are familiar with Lancer's 200 kinds of soft drink and citrus drink beverage dispensing machines. They are found at fast-food restaurants or self-service counters at many convenience stores. The soda machines also are found in 137 7-Eleven stores in Taiwan, in pubs in London and restaurants in Japan, China, Mexico, Brazil and Argentina.

Lancer, which has marketing offices in Los Angeles and London, would like to venture farther south of the border and in the Far East and push their current 18 percent foreign sales business to 40 percent within five years.

"That's an untapped market, but it's a slow, tedious market penetration process," George Schroeder said of foreign countries. "They don't see fountain drinks like we see fountain drinks. Today, both Coca-Cola and Pepsi Cola are looking at those markets.

"We may be riding on the coattails of Coke because the equipment will be needed there and there is a feeling with Coke and other companies believe the export market is going to grow," he said.

The company also has a line of coffee brewing equipment manufactured by Valculator in Chicago.

The Schroeders' entrepreneurial saga began when they opened a Styrofoam manufacturing business while they were law students at St. Mary's University in 1964, but the business burned in 1965.

"We were at the bottom of the rung, broke. We had no insurance, no credit, no money. We were just looking at starting over at something," he said.

The brothers worked at other jobs until 1967, when Jud Schroeder invented a better disconnect device to be used in fountain soft drink dispensers.

Lancer now has 450 employees, who do everything from constructing the dispenser machine and its inner workings to molding and painting the sheet metal for different companies, such as Coca-Cola, Pepsi, Dr Pepper and Minute Maid.

The employees are scattered in 10 different buildings, but the company is in the process of constructing an 800,000 square-foot facility on a 40-acre San Antonio site.

Jud Schroeder, who serves as the company's chairman of the board and head of its research division, said most Americans take for granted the fountain soft drinks.

He said their dispenser is set up with a holding tank with aluminium coils that cools the water to 40 degrees. The soft drink mix is in a syrup form packaged in a box and stored under the soft drink counter.

"The average person going to get a drink doesn't have a concept of how it gets mixed," Jud Schroeder said. "It's a lot more complicated than people think."

The Schroeders said the dispensers, which cost about $1,500 each, are profitable for many businesses.

Lancer and soft drink companies have a difficult time penetrating the foreign markets where water is scarce or of poor quality.

TEXACO — Hall of Fame seeks nominees

Pennzoil won the judgment by convincing a Texas jury that it had a contract to merge with Getty, which Texaco illegally broke up by offering a higher price. Texaco entered bankruptcy when it could not post a bond to appeal the case.

A judge in Federal Bankruptcy Court in White Plains, N.Y., is scheduled to begin hearings in three weeks on the Texaco plan. Luce's deposition was taken in preparation for those hearings because he was a major figure in designing the $3 billion settlement.

Luce, in a telephone interview after the questioning Monday, said that, while he had he had introduced the idea of indemnifying the officers into the reorganization proposal, it had originated with J. Hugh Liedtke, Pennzoil's chairman, and Baine P. Kerr, another Pennzoil executive. He said they felt that the Texaco directors were unwilling to settle the matter because they feared the lawsuits.

"The way Kerr and Liedtke had it figured out," Luce said, Texaco's executives believed that "their liability would be as great if they settled as if they lost the whole lawsuit."

Luce said that the Texaco executives were, therefore, inclined to pursue an appeal of the $10.3 billion judgment rather than settle for a smaller sum because an appeal contained the possibility of avoiding all liability. But Pennzoil was frustrated by the lack of progress toward a settlement, he said, and wanted to remove the liability issue as an impediment.

Nominations for members of the Petroleum Hall of Fame are being accepted, according to Nancy Anguish, president of the Petroleum Museum.

A six-person committee, led by W.H. (Bill) Collyns, will review the files of the candidates and make nomination recommendations for approval by the museum boards.

Deadline for nominations of persons "who have made outstanding contributions to the development of the petroleum industry" is Monday, June 6. Names received after that date will be considered in 1990.

Any associate, friend or family member may submit a candidate's name, along with a biographical sketch, and proposals may include letters of endorsement from others. Teams or partnerships are considered as one.

The election will be held in late fall, and the honorees and their families, friends and associates honored at a dinner in the spring of 1989.

Winter whites liven up cold-weather wardrobe

By LISA LEBOWITZ
Copley News Service

When the weather is still cold but you're tired of your winter clothes, it's time to strategize to make your wardrobe livable until you can take your cottons out of storage. Transitional fabrics, little jolts of color, and small, mood-elevating purchases keep cold-weather clothes enjoyable until the spring thaw.

The beauty of transitional fabrics is that they can be worn during most of the year. While it's silly to buy lightweight fabrics in February, it's equally unpragmatic to purchase additional cold-weather items if you're tired of winter-weight clothes.

Clothing in silk, gabardine, wool crepe and fine wool jersey is the solution. These fabrics can be worn on all but the hottest days of the year, so a garment in any one of them is never a throwaway purchase. Try buying a cardigan in a brightly colored fine wool knit or a shimmery blouse to wear with a sexy mini for evenings or under a conservative suit for day.

Winter-white anything has a lighthearted feel, even when the weight of the fabric is heavy. Class-style trousers, a shawl-collar silk blouse and a trim jacket are elegant purchases that provide relief from drab winter navies and grays.

CNS Photo

Color in the form of a Grace Kelly twin sweater set revives a tired pair of trousers or a skirt. When the weather gets warmer, you have the option of leaving the cardigan at home and sporting a pretty shell sweater.

Do an accessory update. Costume jewelry often is less costly than clothing and, in conjunction with a scarf or belt, can transform an outfit in no time. Also, experimenting with accessories relieves the boredom of putting on the same winter outfit yet another time.

If you love scarves and have many that are square, buy an oblong scarf and secure it with a great pin. Or recycle the scarves you already own by draping or folding them in a new way.

IF YOU OWN narrow belts, consider buying one that's 2½ inches, a width that's flattering on most figures. Buy earrings in a new color or style, perhaps experiment with a delicate drop if you're accustomed to studs.

Do you like bracelets? Combine several for an interesting effect. But if you work in a conservative office, beware of jewelry that clanks. It's disturbing and, therefore, inappropriate.

Look to lingerie to prevent cold-weather blahs. When clothing is heavy and functional on the outside, treat yourself to soft luxury underneath. A silk teddy, tap pants and a camisole, a feminine full slip that makes you feel pretty can constitute a welcome reprieve from bulky cottons.

Silk is surprisingly warm and durable, so if your budget will permit, it's practical to indulge. Also consider the silk option when it comes to long underwear. Silk Long-john bottoms line scratchy wool pants and create an extra layer of warmth. Silk T-shirts feel great under wool sweaters and don't constrict movement the way some underwear alternatives can.

Don't neglect your sleepwear. Many women who have several nightgowns for summer have only one for winter. A cuddly flannel nightgown is affordable and cozy. It's guaranteed to last several seasons, and it will help you accept cold facts about winter (like weather) that aren't in your power to change.

A WINTER COAT is another item that grows tiresome quickly. But because coats are costly, it's not possible to purchase a few more when your primary coat becomes boring. Instead, vary the hats, scarves and gloves you wear with your coat. Brightly colored berets are readily available and inexpensive. Choose warm mittens to match for a powerful jolt of color.

Pins can brighten winter outerwear. Attach a geometric pin to a lapel or the front of a beret. If you carry a canvas saddle bag, attach a pin to the flap for visual interest in an unusual spot. A muffler in a bright folkloric print can make a coat inviting for day. Substitute a long silk scarf or fringed floral shawl to make the same coat elegant for evening.

Color has psychological impact and can be manipulated to help you get dressed. If you put on your favorite sweater one day and it makes your face look pale or sallow, your mood is guaranteed to plummet. For a quick lift, try a top in a color at the opposite end of the spectrum. You'll feel better and, consequently, look better in your winter clothes.

For a wardrobe that feels new without spending money, recombine the clothes you already have. Inventive pairings extend the life of favorite pieces and help you to rediscover pieces you might have set aside.

When you can't put on your lighter clothes, switch to a light fragrance instead. If you wear a heavy perfume in winter, try a light floral or a fragrant Oriental mix.

Menu prose is art form; most well-read fiction

By ERMA BOMBECK

I always mistrust restaurants who hire a James Michener to write their menus and an Annie Leibovitz to photograph their entrees. These tomes have been the most well-read romantic bits of fiction ever to be snubbed by the New York Times Best Sellers list.

Bombeck

I opened a menu the other night and saw a picture of a sandwich that was so real I could smell it. It was also larger than the table. When the waitress whipped out her pad, I read to her from the menu. "I'll have the 'gastronomic teaser that titillates the palate with a patty of prime beef, gently basted with mesquite, the elixir of the West, served with cheese that sensuously layers it between a toasty sesame-spangled bun' "

I used to think wine connoisseurs were full of it, but compared to menu writers, they sound like the cast of "Hee Haw."

Menu prose is an art form. Make no mistake about it. Expensive restaurants cast and stage theirs. They have waiters who describe the specials and the catch of the day. First, they stand at the table until everyone has stopped talking and they have your full attention. Then they begin, "Our special this evening is a delicacy discriminately prepared by our chef who has come up with a tender, but gutsy calamari, moist-fleshed chicken rollatine oozing cheese and marsala, a crunchy salad of Bibb lettuce and bamboo shoots with just a hint of garlic, and a spoon and swoon dessert of cream and important little berries."

In the less expensive restaurants they have to depend on the menu to grab you by your taste buds. Most of them use the Tom Jones approach to food, depicting it as a sensual experience. They offer "voluptuous rolls, seasonings that will leave you gasping, and a clandestine encounter with a sauce that will make you forget you're married." With a relationship like that, who would want to get married?

Some use the "down home" approach; offering ribs to make licking under your fingernails a must, and chili dogs that you won't even mind if they "repeat" on you. I saw a barbecue sauce on one menu that was "too headstrong to keep home."

Unlike many people, food is a natural in front of the camera lens. The "finger-lickin' " chicken is always crispy and brown and they never put a bony back in the front row. Salads are always mounded high on the plate and you can't see the lettuce for the tomatoes, and shrimp can even be seen with the naked eye.

Did you ever wonder who writes and photographs this stuff? Who knows? Maybe old speech writers for politicians running for office. Maybe people from Weight Watchers who are writing for therapy. Maybe Mel Brooks.

DEAR ABBY

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: "Seattleite" was upset with people who leave sporting events early. He was concerned that the players' performances would suffer. You agreed, calling this premature departure "demoralizing, insensitive and unsportsmanlike." Hogwash! Abby, don't assume that everyone who attends sporting events is a fan — which is an abbreviation for "fanatic."

I attend sporting events hoping to see top-level athletes perform at their best, buoyed by the competition. It's entertainment. And in many cases, I pay exorbitant prices, and when I am no longer being entertained, I leave.

Also, I doubt very much whether college or professional athletes are "demoralized" when people they've never seen leave the stands early. Athletes at this level play for a variety of reasons, not the least of which is for big money.

So, if you fans want to be fanatical, please do. When I'm present at a lopsided contest, I'll be the first one out the door. You "home teamers" can demonstrate your sensitivity and sportsmanship in the parking lot jam. — ELLENSBURGER

DEAR ELLENSBURGER: You're right, athletes are entertainers, but when an entertainer sees the audience leaving early, while he may not become unglued, it doesn't make him feel any better.

DEAR ABBY: Here's another version of why second lieutenants were called "shavetails". When a soldier made the transition from enlisted man to officer, he had a surplus of plain-style shirts. Officers' shirts had epaulets — little strips of fabric on the shoulders. So rather than scrap the shirts he had, he took them to the tailor shop in the post exchange and had the tailor sew epaulets on the shoulders.

And where did the tailor get the extra material to make the epaulets? He just "shaved" it off the tail of the shirt. Hence every second lieutenant who was formerly an enlisted man was known as a "shavetail." — GRANT T. EDMONDS, LITTLETON, COLO.

DEAR GRANT: Your explanation checks out. I wonder where the story about shaving the tails of mules used in the military originated.

DEAR ABBY: Thanks for advising "Carolina Churchgoer" to tell her minister privately to please stop asking (in a loud tone): "Where is your husband this morning?"

That reminds me of a minister we once had. Although my husband and I attended church services every Sunday morning, our minister would say, "Why don't you two join our Bible study group on Thursday nights?" Then he would say, "I never see you at Sunday night services — you really should make an effort to attend."

Every time we missed a church picnic, supper, book review or guest lecturer, the minister always asked: "Where were you?"

In addition to every Sunday morning service, we also attended Easter and Christmas services, and figured that was quite enough church for us.

As Paul Harvey would say: "Here's the rest of the story." We finally changed churches, and now a nice young pastor greets us warmly, thanks us for coming, and never tries to lay a guilt trip on us for not attending church more often. — TENNESSEE CHURCHGOERS

Efforts to close impeachment trial denied

PHOENIX, Ariz. (AP) — Despite "first-day jitters," the Senate strongly rejected efforts to dismiss impeachment charges against Evan Mecham, and one long-time supporter of the governor said conviction was almost certain.

During the second day of Mecham's impeachment trial today, prosecution and defense attorneys planned to make opening statements on the first allegation against the Republican governor — that he tried to thwart an investigation of an alleged death threat by a state official.

Also, the Arizona Supreme Court was expected to rule today on a defense claim that the impeachment trial, the first of a U.S. governor in 59 years, should be delayed until after Mecham's March 22 criminal trial on charges of concealing a $350,000 campaign loan.

The high court last week refused to grant a temporary delay, and Mecham said he planned to take the issue to federal court if necessary.

Senate President Carl Kunasek, a Republican, said "it was the first-day jitters for everyone" in the impeachment trial's opening day Monday.

"It crosses everybody's mind — the importance to do justice to the governor and the state," said Senate Majority Leader Bob Usdane, also a Republican. "It's a large burden and we take it seriously."

"This man hasn't dipped his hands into public funds. He hasn't ripped off the treasury. He hasn't committed high crimes in office," Leonard argued in asking for dismissal of the impeachment charges.

But prosecutor Paul Eckstein argued that Mecham's conduct was "grossly offensive to the people of this state," and that the impeachment articles "cry out for conviction."

On 11 separate motions, the largest number of the 29 senators voting for dismissal was seven. Several senators said the vote should not be considered an indication that Mecham is likely to be convicted, saying they want to hear the evidence first.

However, Sen. Jeff Hill, a Republican who has strongly backed Mecham, said the governor's conviction was virtually a foregone conclusion. "I think that it's not likely that he's going to prevail," he said.

The first-term governor did not appear before the Senate on Monday, but told reporters at his Glendale office he is confident he will be acquitted.

"If the decision is made on the evidence I expect to get 29 votes," he said. There are 30 senators but one is absent due to illness. A two-thirds vote is required for a conviction.

"Mr. French would like to hang me at high noon from whatever cottonwood there is," Mecham said, referring to the lead prosecutor, William P. French. "It's not the object of what's good for the state of Arizona. It's the object of a lynch mob."

Mecham was accused by the House of concealing the $350,000 campaign loan, misusing $80,000 from the governor's protocol fund by loaning it to his auto dealership and trying to thwart a probe of the alleged death threat by the state prison construction chief against a former top Mecham aide.

Mecham 'too busy' to follow Senate proceedings

By SCOTT McCARTNEY

GLENDALE, Ariz. (AP) — It's a far cry from the Capitol, but it's got most of the comforts of home.

Impeached Gov. Evan Mecham still goes to work early and stays late. But his office-in-exile is in a house he once lived in, across an alley from a hay barn in the far reaches of this Phoenix suburb.

His days are filled with meetings and phone calls, he says, leaving not much time to follow his televised impeachment trial, which opened Monday in the state Senate.

"No, I didn't watch," Mecham said. "I've been busy. I've got a lot to do."

Mecham met with supporters and attended a meeting downtown. He took time to hold a news conference in what used to be a sunken living room. But he didn't hang on every vote in the Senate, which on Monday decided the House's impeachment document was suffjcient for trial.

"Frankly, I haven't tracked the vote and I haven't tried to interpret anything," he said.

His paid staff of five worked on one side of the 7,000-square-foot ranch-style house while volunteers worked on the other side to raise money for the governor's legal defense and recall election campaign.

Plans were being readied for a Wednesday night rally. Some 300 phone calls come in each day, spokesman Tanner Brown said.

The house was converted into office space before Mecham was impeached Feb. 5 and replaced by acting Gov. Rose Mofford, the former secretary of state.

Outside, a simple sign identifies the "Governor Evan Mecham Headquarters," and adds, "Office Space Available. Inquire Within." The building sits between a farm full of sheep, chickens and roosters, and a Mormon church.

Police sometimes guard the front door, and a security system is in place. Monday's proceedings made the switchboard light up, a receptionist said, including a series of obscene phone calls.

Mecham said he won't venture downtown to the Senate unless it's necessary.

"When my attorney tells me I should be there, I'll be there," he said.

He said he was disappointed the Senate chose not to grant requests for a delay in the trial since his new chief counsel has been on the case less than a week, but was confident in his defense.

"We have no choice. We have a time to get ready by," he said.

"I feel confident we'll be able to get our case out and I think we'll be successful," the governor said. "If the decision is made on the evidence, I expect to get 29 votes."

One member of the 30-member chamber is absent from the trial because of illness. A two-thirds vote is needed to convict Mecham.

Mecham was impeached on allegations of concealing a $350,000 campaign loan, misusing $80,000 from a special fund and attempting to thwart an investigation of an alleged death threat involving a state official.

He also has been indicted in state district court on six felony counts involving the $350,000 loan, which amounted to about a third of his campaign funds, and faces a criminal trial March 22. Mecham also faces a recall election May 17.

Presidential hopefuls focus on South

Associated Press

GOP presidential hopeful Pat Robertson chose Miami as the setting to revive his claim that Soviet missiles are in Cuba, while Democratic contender Jesse Jackson made a point of raising racial issues at a string of campaign appearances.

The biggest delegate day of the primary season is a week from today, and the presidential candidates were swarming across the South, where most of the 20 Super Tuesday states are located.

One Southern stop on Democrat Richard Gephardt's itinerary today was Plains, Ga., where he was meeting with former President Jimmy Carter. Gephardt was the principal target of his rivals at a debate Monday night, where he was attacked for taking political contributions from special interest groups.

Vermont holds its non-binding "beauty contest" primary today and Michael Dukakis, the governor of neighboring Massachusetts, was the Democratic favorite. He underlined his strength in his home region with a weekend victory in the Maine Democratic caucuses.

On the GOP side, Vice President George Bush, who won Maine's GOP caucuses, has a strong organization in Vermont, but Sen. Bob Dole has won endorsements from some top Republicans.

Bush was campaigning in another pre-Super Tuesday state — South Carolina, which holds its primary Saturday. As he did in New Hampshire, the vice president brought in former Arizona Sen. Barry Goldwater, a hero to conservatives, to stump for him.

Polls have given Bush a comfortable lead in South Carolina, but he said he was taking nothing for granted.

"Two days before New Hampshire, some of the most respected pollsters showed me down and almost out," he said Monday in Charleston. Bush won the Feb. 16 New Hampshire primary by a solid margin, after polls suggested rival Bob Dole was breathing down his neck.

Dole, on a Southern swing that took him to Mississippi, Georgia and Florida, heaped scorn on the vice president, characterizing him as a passive figure.

"Ask him what's he done in the last seven years," Dole said at a Fort Lauderdale rally. "What's he done anywhere in America or the world to make a difference?"

Continuing that theme, Dole unleashed a television ad which depicts the vice president walking through the snow without leaving any footprints. Dole's campaign said the commercial was having a test run in Miami and other selected cities.

Republican Pat Robertson staged a Miami news conference to try to breathe new life into his 2-week-old contention that there are Soviet missiles in Cuba.

The former television evangelist produced a Cuban refugee who he said had seen the weapons. The Cuban, who spoke through an interpreter and identified himself only as E. Rodriguez, said he had seen missile sites, but did not know whether the weapons had nuclear warheads.

The missile contention, which Robertson first made at a debate in New Hampshire, drew speedy denials from the White House, congressional experts and even Cuban president Fidel Castro.

Robertson also told Cuban-American senior citizens he would work with them for an independent and democratic Cuba. "Viva Cuba Libre!"

Dukakis ridiculed the Missouri congressman for "running around the country beating up on the establishment" while accepting political contributions from special interest groups. Gary Hart was also critical of the practice.

Gephardt called it "an affront" to suggest that such contributions would influence the way he votes in Congress.

During the debate, Jackson said he has sometimes been singled out for different treatment during the campaign because of his race. He cited an exit poll in which voters were asked if they would support a black candidate for president.

"I said, did you ask how many would vote for a Greek?" said Jackson, referring to Dukakis, who is of Greek descent. "My race is self-evident and my leadership is obvious."

NATION IN BRIEF

Contras take over funding foundation

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Contra rebels, looking for a tax-exempt organization to carry out fund raising, used a legal shortcut to take over a foundation begun by political conservatives to promote understanding of "governmental systems."

By reconstituting an existing foundation, the Contras avoided the time and lengthy application process generally entailed in applying to the Internal Revenue Service for tax-exempt status.

What now goes by the name of the Nicaraguan Resistance Educational Foundation was originally the John Davis Lodge Foundation for International Studies, according to IRS records.

The Lodge foundation stated in its application for tax-exempt status in 1982 that its purpose would be to "foster, develop and promote, among people of the world, in a nonpartisan basis, a greater understanding and awareness of comparative governmental systems, international policies and the relationships between sovereign states."

The late John Davis Lodge was a Connecticut governor and congressman, and ambassador to Argentina, Switzerland and Spain. The grandson of Sen. Henry Cabot Lodge of Massachusetts, he was an ardent anti-communist and chaired Ronald Reagan's 1980 presidential campaign in Connecticut. He died in 1985 at age 82.

OMB will turn to plastic

WASHINGTON (AP) — The government still prints money on paper for all debts public and private, but the Reagan administration says it will gladly take plastic.

The Office of Management and Budget on Monday announced a new progam to increase dramatically the government's use of credit cards — both for buying and selling.

Not only will the government start accepting credit cards from the public for such items as passports and payments on college loans, but the OMB said it also hopes to develop a plan under which government officials and purchasing agents will use cards.

"Eventually, the Office of Management and Budget will be able to require that all purchases made (by the government) under $2,500 be by credit card," the OMB said in President Reagan's "management" report on the federal government.

In fact, the report itself can be purchased by mail with VISA or MasterCard, for $6.50.

Drug testing case taken

WASHINGTON (AP) — Mandatory drug testing in the workplace will be studied for the first time by the Supreme Court in a case that involves government workers but could have an impact on private businesses as well.

The justices on Monday agreed to decide whether the U.S. Customs Service, in the interest of fighting drug smuggling, may force those applying for or holding drug-enforcement jobs to be tested.

The court will hear arguments in the case next fall, with a decision on the constitutionality of the Reagan administration program not expected until 1989.

The court also may be called upon soon to study drug and alcohol testing for federal railway workers. A federal appeals court in San Francisco ruled on Feb. 11 that the railway testing program is unconstitutional and the Reagan administration said it will appeal that ruling to the high court.

Byrd could delay action on treaty in Afghan issue

WASHINGTON (AP) — Senate Majority Leader Robert C. Byrd is hinting he may delay Senate consideration of the new U.S.-Soviet nuclear arms reduction treaty if the White House ends U.S. military aid to insurgents in Afghanistan before a complete and final Soviet troop withdrawal.

Byrd, D-W.Va., commented shortly before the Senate voted 77-0 on Monday to adopt a resolution urging the White House not to cut off, suspend or reduce military aid to the Afghan resistance "until it is absolutely clear that the Soviets have terminated their military occupation."

The non-binding resolution also urged formation of an interim government in Kabul acceptable to the Afghan resistance.

Byrd said the resolution is intended to "send a clear message" to the administration that the Senate wants no part of any U.S.-Soviet agreement in which U.S. aid to the Afghan resistance is ended merely on Moscow's promise to withdraw its troops, not on their actual removal.

Byrd and Sens. Gordon Humphrey, R-N.H., and Steven Symms, R-Idaho, took strong exception to congressional testimony last week in which Robert A. Peck, an assistant deputy secretary of State, said the United States would be prepared, "if completely satisfied with the overall agreement, to prohibit U.S. military assistance to the Afghan resistance."

Peck also testified last week: "We will continue our assistance ... until that support is no longer needed. But the question of when to cut off aid is one that should be left to the president."

Symms said Peck's testimony leads many to fear a "superpower deal ... that will allow the Soviets to gain politically what they could not gain on the battlefield."

Byrd said, "I'd like to know what's in these agreements before I call up the INF (Intermediate-range Nuclear Forces) treaty," Byrd said.

Reagan would consider package that left military aid options open

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan is indicating he would sign a bill giving only humanitarian aid to Nicaragua's rebels if it preserves his option of seeking military funds in the future.

Reagan told the American Legion convention that "preventing the consolidation of a pro-Soviet regime on the American mainland is a crucial test of national security."

On the eve of today's scheduled House Rules Committee consideration of a humanitarian aid package, he seemed resigned to the fact there will be no immediate vote for military aid.

"Some say they're willing to support some type of humanitarian aid, but are doing everything they can do disband the freedom fighters," Reagan said. "But there's nothing humanitarian about asking people to go up against Soviet attack helicopters armed only with boots and bandages."

Reagan used the American Legion address to remind Congress of his intentions as he prepared to leave for the summit with NATO partners in Brussels, Belgium. He is concerned about possible showdown votes on Contra aid, first in the Rules Committee and later in the week on the House floor.

The committee is weighing a $30.5 million Contra aid bill, sponsored by Rep. David Bonior, D-Mich.

Royal 'walkabout' includes stroll through store's deli

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Andrew and Sarah, the Duke and Duchess of York, transformed into Andy and Fergie, the down-home celebrities, snacking at a supermarket deli, decorating a cake and shaking hands with screaming fans.

The royal couple's "walkabout" along the edge of a crowd outside a supermarket Monday was their closest unplanned contact with everyday Americans during a Southern California tour that has included much hobnobbing with Hollywood celebrities.

"I love them both. I think Fergie and Di are just — American," said Susie Clayton, referring also to Diana, the Princess of Wales.

Ms. Clayton, 27, visiting from Arizona, waited for two hours in on-and-off rain that could have been imported from Britain for the royal retinue to arrive at the Von's Pavilions market in suburban Arcadia.

Prince Andrew and his pregnant wife, midway through their 10-day tour, plan to meet with British dignitaries of Hollywood today during a stops that include a trendy disco.

They have already been greeted by famous faces like Roger Moore of James Bond fame; Joan Collins, the wicked queen of the "Dynasty" dynasty; and Michael York, a movie actor who lately has appeared on "Knots Landing."

York, who greeted the royal pair during their travels Monday, said that the duke and duchess have a glamour of their own.

"They have a youth, glamour and pizazz and they preserve a longstanding tradition," he said.

Today, Andrew and Sarah were to take a tour of Showscan, a movie special effects studio in suburban Culver City. Later, they planned to meet with British Oscar winners at the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences in Beverly Hills.

Finishing out their round of entertaining the entertainment community, they were to attend a lunch for the British Academy of Film and Television Arts.

By LAWRENCE L. KNUTSON

WASHINGTON (AP) — The cat came to stay, but the Capitol mice played anyway — around an ambassador's feet.

House Majority Leader Thomas Foley, D-Wash., has a mouse problem.

He shares it with other members of the Democratic leadership who occupy offices in the oldest part of the Capitol, the part that survived after the British burned the building in 1814.

The mice call it home but House leaders and their staffs call it disturbing.

So traps were set and baited with cheese.

Then Foley called in reinforcements.

He brought his cat to work, a feline with a proven reputation as a champion mouser.

The cat moved in with the Foleys a dozen years ago while they were on vacation in the Caribbean.

Since the cat had chosen them, and not they the cat, they gave the animal an appropriate name — "Roger the Lodger."

Roger was brought in to lodge for awhile in Foley's office suite on the first floor of the Capitol, sharing quarters not only with the mice but with Foley's dog, Alice, who accompanies the majority leader to work on a daily basis.

Bonior was conferring over coffee with Jan Kinast, the Polish ambassador to the United States.

The Senate's sergeant at arms — Henry Giugni — became an instant celebrity last week when he followed orders and arrested Sen. Bob Packwood, R-Ore.

Giugni's posse had Packwood carried onto the Senate floor to constitute a quorum so consideration could continue of a controversial campaign financing act, then besieged by a filibuster.

It was not the first time a senate sergeant of arms has been the focus of attention by the Senate and the press.

On Feb. 7, 1935, the Senate voted to fire Sergeant at Arms David S. Barry.

Barry's offense: The 72-year-old former journalist had written a magazine article entitled "Over the Hill to Demagoguery" which he had thought would be published after he left office.

But the publication date was moved up and when the article appeared it began with these words:

"Contrary, perhaps, to the popular belief, there are not many crooks in Congress; that is out and out grafters, or those who are willing to be such.

"There are not many senators or representatives who sell their votes for money, and it is pretty well known who those few are.

"But there are many demagogues."

Senate Republican leader Bob Dole, who recounted the incident on the Senate floor recently, said the article probably would have been ignored had it been written by a journalist.

"But for the Senate's sergeant at arms it was an entirely different matter," Dole said. "So the Senate voted him out of office, less than a month before his term would have ended."

Park West chancellor's challenge

By RICK HAMPSON

NEW YORK (AP) — Park West High School, where book bags have been known to contain machetes and switchblades, is the kind of school that prompted the city's new chancellor to declare that public education is on trial here.

Richard Green, the former Minneapolis school superintendent who begins work today as head of the nation's largest school system, soon will have an invitation to see Park West for himself.

Senior class officers want him to speak at graduation, and their letter asks, "Why would a chancellor want to link himself to the so-called 'worst school in Manhattan'?"

Their answer: "To send a signal to the media and to the public that Park West is a school worthy of respect."

The 10-year-old, fortress-like concrete structure in the section once known as Hell's Kitchen lost most claims to respectability five weeks ago, when a state Education Department team suspended a routine inspection.

The reviewers said administrators were unable to provide them with basic records for test scores, attendance and promotions. They also cited "chaotic" conditions, including the stabbing of a student just outside the building — the second in as many days.

"The school was overrun by groups of students, split along racial lines, at battle with each other," said Charles Carpenter, a department spokesman. In a gym class, students "were just running around with no easily identifiable teacher or sign of organized activity."

Under a new, interim principal, conditions have improved. Security has been tightened, enrollment limited, tutoring increased and student activities added.

Twelve teachers at a time patrol the school's hallway, and students must display their schedule card at the door before they are allowed to leave early. Visitors must provide identification, sign in and sign out.

Even so, almost a third of the 2,500 students are absent each day, and half of those who do come are late. More than half fail at least one subject. So many drop out that seniors account for only 7 percent of the enrollment.

Some students stay home out of fear of gangs outside the school, and dozens more have transferred, including the nephew of the parents association vice president.

"He was failing two classes because he was leaving early to avoid the scene at the end of the school day," said Barbara Lowe-Tabman. "Kids say they will not wear nice clothes to school because they'll be stolen."
