Cuban inmates won't free hostages

ATLANTA (AP) — Cuban inmates who seized a federal prison refused to release any of their reported 75 hostages today despite an offer to delay deportations, while other Cuban prisoners in Louisiana paraded two of their 28 hostages to show they were unharmed.

At least one inmate was killed and there were unconfirmed reports of as many as five more deaths after Monday's uprising at the federal penitentiary in Atlanta.

Helicopters dumped water on fires at the Atlanta complex. When a new fire started this morning, Spanish-speaking inmates could be heard over walkie-talkies shouting, "What's going on in the factory? What's going on in the factory?"

The riot by Cuban inmates fearing deportation left at least 12 people injured. Eight Cuban prisoners were hospitalized in satisfactory condition today, five with gunshot wounds, authorities said.

The rioting began Monday morning, two days after an uprising by Cuban inmates at the Oakdale, La., federal detention center, left 31 injured.

The inmates revolted after the State Department announced that Cuba had agreed to take back 2,500 refugees, most of them criminals or mentally ill, who had been in legal limbo in the United States since the 1980 Mariel boatlift.

U.S. Attorney General Edwin Meese III offered a moratorium on deportations to Cuba if the inmates ended their uprisings and freed the hostages. Meese said Monday the moratorium would be in effect until each case could be reviewed in a "full, fair and equitable" manner.

At the half-burned Oakdale center, inmates brandished weapons in a show of force early today and brought two hostages to the compound's gates to show that they are not being mistreated. The inmates have threatened to kill the hostages if any assault was made.

The riots brought these other responses:

Strong quake shakes parts of California

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A strong earthquake struck the Southern California desert early today, knocking trailers off their foundations, damaging buildings and causing at least three injuries, authorities said.

The quake hit at 5:16 a.m. and had a preliminary magnitude of 6.5 on the Richter scale of ground motion, said U.S. Geological Survey seismologist Lucy Jones at the California Institute of Technology.

The temblor — the second strong quake in 12 hours — apparently hit the southern city of Calexico hardest, according to early reports.

A roof collapsed at a downtown business, a furniture store's wall caved in, and authorities investigated reports of three gas leaks, said police dispatcher Daniel Saenz. One person was injured, but he did not know the extent of the injury.

"The U.S. International port of entry in Calexico has been closed" to guard against looting, he said.

At least two other minor injuries were reported in the county area, including a pregnant woman who fell down her stairs as a result of the jar, said Imperial Valley Assistant Sheriff Ted Whitmer.

Today's quake was felt as far away as the Palo Verde nuclear generating station 50 miles west of downtown Phoenix, Ariz. It also jolted residents in Palm Springs, Palm Desert, San Bernardino, Hemet, San Diego and downtown Los Angeles.

The quake's epicenter was near Westmorland in the Imperial Valley about 90 miles east of San Diego, said Russ Needham, geophysicist with the National Earthquake Information Service at Golden, Colo. Needham reported a preliminary magnitude of 6.3 on the Richter scale.

Saragosans seek answers on aid

PECOS (AP) — Saragosans wondering how tornado relief donations were distributed hope to get some answers after filing court papers today.

Texas Rural Legal Aid, representing the Saragosa Foundation, planned to ask a state district judge today to supervise depositions by Reeves County officials in what could be the first step toward filing a lawsuit against the county.

Members of the Saragosa Foundation, a private group that has collected and distributed some tornado relief donations, have expressed concern that county officials have been lax or even dishonest in collecting and distributing the money, building materials and supplies.

People nationwide sent donations to Saragosa following the May 22 tornado that killed 30 people and destroyed more than 60 houses.

Legal Aid, acting on the foundation's behalf, earlier this month collected 3,000 documents — mostly deposit slips and canceled checks — from county officials after threatening a lawsuit. But the documents, obtained under the Open Records Act, weren't enough, Legal Aid spokesman John Muir said Monday.

Three killed as truck hits I-20 embankment

Two Midland residents were among three family members killed Monday afternoon when a pickup truck traveling west on Interstate 20 struck a concrete embankment and crashed into the bottom of an overpass, the Department of Public Safety reported.

Two members of the family also were injured, one seriously, in the 4:35 p.m. mishap.

Rafael Jabalera Urias, 37, 1513 S. Terrell St., was pronounced dead at 5:37 p.m. by Justice of the Peace Keith Jobe at the scene of the accident, just beneath the County Road 1150 overpass, two miles east of Midland.

His father, Andres Ramos Urias, 74, Rt. 4, Box 67, of Midland, also was pronounced dead at the scene by Jobe.

Maria Luz Anglos Armendariz, 32, of Ojinaga, Chihuahua, Mexico, was transported to Midland Memorial Hospital, where she was pronounced dead by Jobe at 6:36 p.m.

Some decide to cap old wells

By PATRICK CRIMMINS
Staff Writer

The first time Darla Alexander peered down the eight-inch-wide opening in her backyard, the damp depth of the abandoned well "made me sick all over again."

Mrs. Alexander and her husband, Bobby, live at 3518 Thomas St., just four blocks from the backyard where 19-month-old Jessica McClure was rescued after 58 hours in a similar well.

Unlike the narrow shaft the tot fell in, the Alexander's well contained water 34 feet from the top.

"The well has been there for we don't know how many years," said Mrs. Alexander, who with her husband bought the house in September 1986. "There was a pipe sticking out of the ground with a cap sitting on it, but until Jessica, we didn't pay any attention to it."

The metal plate was unattached to the pipe and could be raised by anyone.

"Looking down into that pipe made me sick all over again — to know what it was like where she fell. And with that water, there could have been a drowning," she said.

The decision the Alexanders faced likely was repeated in Midland and beyond, as well owners reacted to a freak situation — a child somehow falling down a well only 8 inches wide at its opening.

Mrs. Allene Smith, a resident of the Trinity Towers retirement community, 2800 Illinois Ave., saw news coverage of the Jessica rescue and called a well service company to inspect four irrigation wells located on 140 acres of land she owns 4½ miles northeast of Midland.

On two of the wells, workers found the pumps had been stolen, leaving the tops exposed.

"Jessica falling in that well worried me," Ms. Smith said. "I began to think about it after this happened. That was the reason I wanted them capped.

"There are no children out there, no, but I just thought it might be dangerous. You never know where people are going to go. I didn't want any accidents to happen. I forbid people hunting in there, but you never know," she said.

One of the employees at JR's Water Well Supply remembers the day — Nov. 6 — when Ms. Smith called.

"I guess it is their conscience; when they start thinking about the wells they have, it bothers them," said Jeff Niedecken, a well serviceman for 3½ years.

Niedecken estimated the age of Ms. Smith's four wells at about 50 years. He said most were drilled 16 inches wide with a casing 12 inches wide.

Midland mishap closely follows well law reforms

EDITOR'S NOTE: This is the third of a four-part series investigating Midland County and Texas water well problems.

By JULIE HILLRICHS
Staff Writer

The ordeal of Jessica McClure realized lawmaker's worst fears just five months after the state Legislature strengthened prescriptions for capping and plugging water wells.

And despite the strong lobby for changes in the law, Bill Colbert, a spokesman for the Texas Water Commission, believes that the process of locating abandoned wells and notifying landowners will continue to be "tedious and difficult," he said.

Under the law, a driller must notify the Texas Water Commission that an open well exists no later than 60 days after he completes the shaft.

However, the TWC has no mandate to notify each and every landowner when it discovers an open, out-of-use well, a process that commission workers have taken under their wing even without a directive.

"We're not required to contact landowners, but we are doing that," Colbert said, observing that the TWC has an estimated 350,000 public supply, industrial, irrigation, domestic or livestock wells on record.

Colbert said the task of identifying abandoned water wells is difficult because the TWC is faced with a shortage of manpower and money.

"We've identified over 1,900 abandoned wells in Central Texas alone," said Colbert, "but I don't see any way we can locate each and every one across the state."

Sen. Kenneth Armbrister, a Victoria Democrat, co-sponsored the most recent legislation.

House Bill 1347 amended the 1965 Texas Water Well Drillers Act, making landowners responsible for plugging old, open wells with cement if they are found to be deteriorated or abandoned for more than six months.

The legislation — passed unanimously by both legislative houses — took effect Sept. 1 and imposes severe penalities on landowners who neglect to plug or cap their unused shafts.

The necessity for the new mandate was not fully realized until Oct. 14, when 19-month-old Jessica McClure slipped down an eight-inch wide abandonded well shaft at a southwest Midland residence and remained there until her rescue 58 hours later.

However, lawmakers such as Armbrister believed long before the accident that the old, convoluted system of documenting and reporting abandoned wells imposed serious hazards to the environment and to the safety of Texans.

THE DEPTH

OF DANGER

At least one Texas Water Commission official has estimated the number of abandoned or deteriorated water wells at 3,000 statewide, based on the 1,900 it has identified in central Texas alone, Colbert said.

However, longtime Midland water well drillers, although they are unsure of their figures, have estimated Midland County alone holds that number of wells.

Another TWC official, Water Well Drillers Unit head Steve Wiley, has said the state could contain as many as 100,000 of the abandoned wells.

Armbrister said the Texas Water Well Drillers Board lobbied heavily for the new legislation, claiming the previous law had failed because it gave them little or no enforcement authority.

"The problem the drillers were having was that there was no time limit on cappings," he said. "What this bill did was give them (the TWWDB) enforcement ability. It also expanded the definition of abandoned wells to include deteriorated wells."

Property owners who fail to follow the regulations may be liable for up to $2,500 in TWC fines and may be taken to civil court for a further hearing — and greater penalties.

Civil fines for non-compliance with the regulations range from a minimum of $200 to a maximum of $2,500 for each day the well goes uncapped.

TWC geologist on 'paper chase' of wells that may be abandoned

By RAMONA NYE
Staff Writer

Ever since Jessica McClure fell down a well, Brad Cross' job has become much busier.

Cross, a Texas Water Commission geologist, estimated that he spends half his working hours thumbing through state water well records to identify those that have been abandoned.

"Since the Midland incident people have been cooperating in getting wells plugged or capped," he said.

After the girl's dramatic rescue Oct. 16, Cross received almost 20 calls about possible abandoned wells from Midlanders and about 100 calls from around the state.

To find the wells, Cross or two of his co-workers must scan various state records, which tell when wells were dug and if they are abandoned, he said.

Escaped Cuban refugees may be responsible for burglaries

LAREDO (AP) — At least three of six Cuban refugees are believed to have made it to Laredo and allegedly committed burglaries after escaping through the brush from a detention center, an official said.

Agents tracked them to a mobile home, four vehicles and a filling station that were burglarized, Deputy Chief Richard Marroquin with the Border Patrol's Laredo Sector said Monday.

They then are believed to have disappeared into the border city, he added.

Officials Monday searched the city and countryside for the six, who were among 17 Cubans who broke out of a minimum security detention center Sunday morning.

Eleven of the escapees have been captured, and the group apparently out of fear they would be returned to Cuba, Marroquin said.

Cuban detainees were responsible for more serious disturbances at a minimum-security detention facility in Oakdale, La., and at the federal prison at Atlanta.

The Cubans who escaped from the Webb County Detention Center 12 miles east of Laredo probably would not have been among the 2,500 — mostly criminals or mentally ill — that Cuba agreed to take back, Marroquin said.

"I think they got some bad information," said Oscar Garza, the Laredo Border Patrol's assistant chief patrol agent.

Two Border Patrol airplanes and a helicopter were in on the search that also included the sheriff's and police departments.

Agents continued Monday night to search the area and keep an eye on the bus station, Marroquin said, but added the Cubans could be far away by now, especially if someone was waiting to pick them up past the Border Patrol's highway checkpoints.

"They know if they can make it to Florida, they're safe," Marroquin said.

Marroquin said he suspects the escapees committed the burglaries to find clothing to replace their white detention-center uniforms.

"We don't know that anything was stolen," Marroquin said. "We just know they broke into them."

The escape, through a steel roof grating, was discovered Sunday morning. There were 171 federal detainees, including 77 Cubans, at the Webb County center at the time the 17 broke out.

Webb County Sgt. Rickey Cortez said the center has space for 288 prisoners. The remaining 60 Cubans had caused no problems at the detention center Webb County operates under contract with the federal government, Cortez said.

"We've beefed up our security and they're under constant supervision," Cortez said.

Mexican authorities also were asked to be on the lookout for the escapees.

Eleven of the escapees were recaptured Sunday, said Capt. Tito Tijerina with the Webb County Sheriff's Department. He said the 11 were transferred to the Webb County Jail in Laredo, and had not caused further disturbances.

"It's all brush out there," Tijerina said of the search area. "We're trying to find them for their own safety, because if they get out into the brush, they could be in danger."

In addition to rattlesnakes and cold nights, he said the area is full of deer hunters.

Security stepped up at Houston area detention centers

HOUSTON (AP) — Federal officials in Houston are beefing up security and postponing all visits to four area detention centers housing Cuban inmates in an effort to prevent riots like those in Louisiana and Georgia.

U.S. Immigration and Naturalization Service officers on leave were told to remain in the Houston area and vacations were suspended. In addition, riot gear — shields, batons and helmets with faceguards — were placed in areas where they quickly would become available to officers, he said.

Cuban inmates who had access to telephones knew of the uprising Saturday among fellow Cubans at a federal facility in Oakdale, La., before word of the disturbance was publicly known.

"They have a very sophisticated network throughout the prison system," said Ron Parra, INS district director. For that reason, Parra said inmates now were being denied telephone privileges.

"It's one of those things — we'd rather be well-prepared than react later," he said.

Parra said it was likely the alert status would continue until the problems in Georgia and Louisiana were resolved.

CUBANS

—Sen. John Breaux, D-La., said he met briefly with the Cubans at Oakdale center. Breaux said he relayed Meese's offer and hoped to continue talks today.

—Law enforcement officers in Texas searched around Laredo for six Cubans remaining at large from 17 who broke out of a minimum security detention center Sunday.

—Security was tightened at other institutions around the nation where Cubans were being held, but no other riots were reported.

In Atlanta, federal official halted regular news briefings and refused to release any information on the uprising. One inmate death was reported by Rep. Pat Swindall, R-Ga. Federal officials refused to release any information

A television reporter sat in on negotiations between authorities and four prisoners representing the approximately 1,500 Cubans to assure that any agreement be made public. The reporter said inmates brought out a body of a prisoner who was shot, apparently to bolster their contention that guards and not other prisoners were responsible.

Mike Caltabiano, executive assistant to the warden, said none of the inmates had guns, and that guards fired warning shots.

Fulton County officials told Grady Memorial Hospital to expect five bodies this morning. The Atlanta Constitution reported without giving the names of its sources. The hospital's night administrator, William Breyer, told The Associated Press that federal authorities notified the medical center to expect five more bodies today.

Breyer said that the hospital hadn't received the bodies because FBI officials "can't access them," but attorney Gary Leshaw, who has represented Cubans and has been involved in the negotiations, disputed the death toll reports.

Leshaw disputed the reports of six dead, saying the confusion occurred because "Grady was told to send half a dozen body bags as an eventuality."

Federal officials would not confirm any deaths, and no spokesmen were made available to comment further on how the gunshot injuries occurred.

The television reporter, Marc Pickard of WSB-TV, said he was told the inmates were holding 75 hostages, including two suffering from unspecified medical problems. He said prison officials were seeking the release of those two as a good faith gesture before giving the inmates a written promise of no punishment for the uprising.

Pickard said that promise seemed to be the only demand of the four inmate negotiators.

SARAGOSA

"There's a feeling it (the county's response) is inadequate and there are continuing questions," Muir said, adding that foundation members want to know who got how much and with what criteria.

Foundation president Tony Gallego told the Pecos Enterprise that Legal Aid wants to question district clerk Juana Jaquez and officials from the sheriff's office, the Pecos Jaycees and the Saragosa Relief Fund Finance Committee, which was appointed by county commissioners.

Most of the donations were distributed through the sheriff's office and the Jaycees.

Muir, who is not a lawyer, characterized Legal Aid's action as filing a lawsuit against the county. But county attorney Scott Johnson said Legal Aid's action is just a step toward filing a lawsuit.

"What it amounts to is they want to have judicially supervised depositions," Johnson said. "They have questions about the documents they want answered with judicial supervision."

One such question has to do with a $200 check given to jailer Sandy Kelly, Gallego said. The $200 of relief money was spent on a trip to Odessa, 45 miles from Pecos, he told the Enterprise.

"We'd just like to know why the trip was made," Gallego said.

Gallego did not return calls Monday to The Associated Press, and Muir declined to discuss details until today's 1:15 p.m. news conference in Pecos.

Johnson said he is interested in providing answers to any questions the Saragosa Foundation and Legal Aid have.

"I have no problem with turning over any of the records with the Saragosa incident," he said. "I think it'll probably engender more public confidence in governmental affairs. I think they, as citizens and recipients of this aid, are entitled to know where it went."

CAP

One of the wells was so old it was wide at the top and looked "tapered." It was described as about 90-feet deep, with "plenty of water" in it.

"A pretty slender man could have fallen in it pretty easily," Niedecken said.

Since the rescue, JR's has received seven calls about open wells. All of the wells have been capped — sealed at the top with a welded metal plate.

One residential well owner had her well capped because, at 10 inches, it was wider at the top than the one Jessica fell into — and because it was located in her front yard.

"It had an iron top on it," Peggy Callicoatte, 3206 W. Shandon Ave., said. "But I didn't want to take any chances."

The well, which is at least 20 years old and was built for irrigation, at least once attracted the attention of Ms. Callicoatte's grandson.

"I don't like it being there. I don't want to fool with it," she said.

The pastor of the Calvary Assembly of God Church, 908 S. Johnston St., said he moved quickly to cap a well on church property after he heard of the rescue — even though the opening was just 5½ inches wide.

"It was close to a building that had been moved off a lot," Rev. Gayle Reeves said of the well. "That (rescue) just brought it to our attention."

Water well service men agree that safety is a factor, but generally not the most important reason wells should be covered.

"I have been in it a number of years," said Ron Stanley of JR's Water Well Service. "The primary reason for plugging wells is not for safety's sake, but for pollution control. The casing of wells left open and unattended have a tendency to fall down and break. Surface water, rats, mice, chemicals, they all can be a problem," he said.

"The water table can become contaminated — we know that," said John McDonald, owner of J&J Water Well Drilling.

Several owners said they were charged $60 to have their wells capped. Plugging a well is more expensive, usually between $40 and $150. In rare cases the cost can reach several thousand dollars because of the materials used to fill the well.

"So far I have not had anyone call to have one plugged," Stanley said.

Some landowners who have had their open wells capped claim that until the Jessica McClure rescue, the danger was unknown to them.

"I was surprised that a child could fall in an 8-inch well," Ms. Smith said. "But of course now I think they should be capped because they are dangerous. They are a threat to life."

Others disagree.

"It is just good common sense to plug them," Tom Lawrence, owner of Tom's Water Well, said. "Because of what's happened in the past, someone leaving an open well in their backyard, now I just can't even visualize that."

Said Ms. Smith: "I just hope it will make others do it (cap their open wells), I surely do."

Mrs. Alexander, who was charged $35 for the well capping, said the well might be opened again, but the top will never be left exposed.

"It is sealed, but with the possibility of opening it up again in the future," she said. "Not in the real near future, but we might put a pump in it."

While Niedecken said there might be as many as 2,500 water wells in the Permian Basin that could need plugging or capping, Stanley said the number could be greater.

"I've heard a lot of estimates," he said. "I've heard about a thousand. But, if people were being honest, it would be closer to 5,000.

LAWS

While portions of the bill went into effect this September, others have yet to become law.

For instance, a person does not have to be licensed under the act as a driller of monitoring wells (those drilled to monitor the quantity of fluids below the surface of the ground) or dewatering wells (those drilled to produce groundwater and lower the water table) until Jan. 1, 1988.

Yet for all the law's provisions, the co-sponsoring legislator agrees that portions are difficult to enforce. Armbrister pointed out that the TWC presently has only one director and one field investigator in each of its 14 district offices.

Such a shortage of manpower "makes it virtually impossible for them (TWC workers) to locate each and every abandoned well," he said.

"It's one of those laws that gives them the power to enforce, but they're still not going to make a dent in the number of abandoned wells," the senator added.

State Rep. Tom Craddick, R-Midland, echoed his Senate colleague's sentiments, saying, "If they don't know they're there, they can't plug them."

To fill that need, the state representative said he's looking to sponsor future legislation that would impose a fee for new wells drilled. Proceeds from those fees would go into a fund for plugging and capping old, deteriorated wells.

Still, the state can't solve the problem alone, Craddick said, adding that Austin must rely on local governments to help enforce the law.

A 1961 city of Midland ordinance that requires landowners to obtain a water well drilling permit "makes it somewhat easier to enforce because you have a control mechanism out there," Assistant City Attorney Kirk Swinney said. He added that the city has issued 54 drilling permits in the last three years.

Under the ordinance, the permit application must include the name and address of the owner and drilling contractor, a legal description of the property on which the well is to be drilled and a plat showing the exact location of the proposed well.

The ordinance also requires a statement showing the manner in which the driller intends to dispose of the slush and other waste material produced while drilling the well.

A landowner may not drill a water well in the city unless it is cased from a point at least one foot above the surface to a point at least 30 feet below the surface of the ground. The entire length of the casing must be cemented so all space between the casing and the drilled hole are filled with cement.

Swinney's assessment of the ordinance's effectiveness deals only with wells legally drilled after 1981. Wells drilled illegally or prior to that year are virtually impossible to locate, he said.

"The biggest problem is magnitude. There are a lot of them out there. That in itself creates a problem," he said.

"If they're permitted, at least we know where they are if we decide to commit manpower to go out and inspect them."

SEARCH

Commented TWC Public Information Director Bill Colbert, "It's not like pulling people over for traffic tickets."

Among records which Cross uses are water commission field office reports, water conservation district reports and Water Development Board county reports.

Once Cross locates the homeowners, he notifies them in writing that they must plug or cap their well, he said.

Under the Texas Water Well Drillers' Act passed in 1965, landowners are responsible for plugging or capping wells, Cross said.

Because many landowners have claimed they intend to use their wells again, the definition of an abandoned well was tightened during the last legislative session to include wells that haven't been used for six months or more, he said.

Steve Wiley, head of the TWC's Water Well Driller's Unit in Austin, said "We ran into the problem where they said the well wasn't abandoned, and they were going to use it again."

Landowners can plug the wells themselves as long as they follow guidelines provided by the water commission, Cross said.

After the commission receives a report that the well has been plugged or capped, an employee in the district is sent out to check the well, Cross said.

Whether someone should be employed to go out and actually search for abandoned wells is up to the state legislature, Colbert said.

"We're doing the best we can with what we have," he said.

Injured in the crash was Zuelema Urias, 17, 1723 S. Atlanta St., who suffered a severed artery and compound fracture of her right leg. This morning, she was listed in serious condition at MMH, spokeswoman Sue Ristom said.

The driver of the truck, 33-year-old Victoria Urias, 1513 S. Terrell St., was treated for lacerations at MMH and released in satisfactory condition, Ms. Ristom said.

The truck was traveling westbound on I-20 when it ran off the road, rolled into the concrete embankment of the CR 1150 overpass, and hit the bottom of the overpass.

Ms. Armendariz and Rafael Urias, who were riding in the bed of the truck, were thrown from the vehicle, DPS reports said.

Andres Urias and his daughter, Zuelema, also were ejected from the truck upon impact. Victoria Urias was pinned in the vehicle. Neither the driver nor the passengers wore safety belts, according to Trooper Richard Dickson, who investigated the accident.

According to a worker at Thomas Funeral Home, where two of the bodies were taken, Ms. Armendariz was the sister-in-law of Victoria Urias.

Unharmed hostages displayed in standoff

OAKDALE, La. (AP) — Cuban prisoners who have threatened to kill 28 hostages at a federal detention center today brandished weapons and brought two of the officers to a gate to show they were unharmed, authorities said.

Army and National Guard troops were on alert today as the standoff with the 1,000 inmates entered its third day at the burned-out facility.

The two hostages escorted to the gate said they had not been harmed by the Cubans, Warden J.R. Johnson said. He added that their appearance was "a positive indication" that the inmates would not harm the hostages.

Johnson declined to identify the two officers, and said he was unsure when any of the hostages would be identified.

Inside the compound today, Cuban inmates provided a "show of force," Johnson said.

"They carried weapons, they brandished those weapons, they put out a very clear message that they feel they are ready for whatever is going to happen," he said.

"Very simply, they are very strongly committed to this whole situation," Johnson said. The inmates carried knives, machetes, spears and other weapons fashioned after they broke into a tool shed.

The insurgent Cuban inmates selected a single spokesman to negotiate their demands to avoid deportation, according to U.S. Sen. John Breaux, who was encouraged by the move.

The Louisiana Democrat, who met Monday with inmate representatives, said he hoped to sit down today with the inmate emissary identified only as "Angel."

Breaux said he delivered a copy Monday of Attorney General Edwin Meese's offer to declare a moratorium on the return of Cubans who came to the United States illegally during the 1980 Mariel boatlift.

"I related that I had spoken to Ed Meese and that his offer is a serious one," said Breaux. "They say they do not want to go back to Cuba under any circumstances."

Breaux said Angel had been chosen as the Oakdale Federal Detention Center inmates' sole spokesman and negotiator, which he called "encouraging."

The prisoners took the hostages during a fiery rampage Saturday night, a day after the announcement of a U.S.-Cuba accord under which more than 2,500 Cuban detainees would be sent back to their communist homeland, officials said.

An assault by authorities would be a mistake, Johnson said Monday.

"They (inmates) always remind us that any time we attempt to rush into this facility, in any manner, armed or unarmed, they are going to kill the hostages," Johnson said. "They've made that very clear."

The inmates released about a dozen instant photographs of the hostages showing them "healthy and well-taken care of," the warden said.

The prisoners have erected an 8-by-8-foot wooden sign saying "Liberty our die," apparently mispelling "or." A bonfire fueled by furniture burned near the sign.

Half of the year-old, $17 million center was destroyed by fire in Saturday's rampage, and 32 people suffered mostly minor injuries. Forty-one Cuban inmates accepted an offer of safe conduct to other jails Sunday.

About 1,000 of the 1,050 inmates are Cubans, most of them criminals who came to this country in 1980.

Meese's offer, announced Monday in Washington, D.C., was made on condition that Cuban inmates end rioting at the Oakdale center and the federal penitentiary in Atlanta and release all hostages.

The moratorium would last until each case could be reviewed, and would cover all Cubans who were barred by U.S. law as undesirable aliens and are subject to deportation under the agreement with Cuba, Meese said.

The Cubans at Oakdale on Monday apparently increased their demands since the weekend, when officials said they wanted to remain in the United States and not be prosecuted for the riot and hostage-taking.

"They demand pure release, freedom," Johnson said.

A tent city of several hundred police with riot gear surrounded the center at this southwest Louisiana town of 8,000 people.

Army troops at Fort Polk nearly 100 miles northwest of Oakdale and the Louisiana National Guard were put on alert as a precaution, Johnson said Monday night.

Town residents were increasingly angry and dismayed over the stalemate. Some tied 28 yellow ribbons — one for each hostage — around a tree outside a Roman Catholic church.

'Bums, scum' to go back

WASHINGTON (AP) — "The United States has always picked the best brains of Cuba. Let them also take the bums and the scum."

Cuban state radio offered that description of the criminals whom Cuban authorities released from prison and placed aboard the "freedom flotilla" that brought 125,000 Cubans to Florida in 1980.

Now, after seven years, Cuba has agreed to repatriate "the bums and the scum" as part of a wide-ranging immigration agreement announced last Friday.

It is a duplicate of an accord that was signed in December 1984 but suspended by Fidel Castro five months later in a display of pique over the startup of Radio Marti, the Voice of America broadcast operation to Cuba.

A measure of the desperation of many of these Cubans can be found in the rioting by the affected Cubans at their detention centers in Louisiana and Georgia following last Friday's announcement.

In an attempt to cool tempers, Attorney General Edwin Meese III offered on Monday to impose a moratorium on sending these Cubans home pending a "full, fair and equitable" review of each case.

The rioting has tended to obscure what Reagan administration officials consider to be a diplomatic victory of sorts. The United States, first under Jimmy Carter and now under Ronald Reagan, has been trying for seven years to get the Cubans to take back the criminals and their mentally ill companions, but only a small fraction have returned.

The initial hint that Cuba might be willing to revive the 1984 agreement occurred two weeks ago during an unannounced meeting in Montreal between Cuban and American officials. The decision was formalized late last week at a meeting — also unannounced — in Mexico City.

Just why Cuban authorities decided to reverse their position has intrigued U.S. officials and other experts.

The most commonly voiced theory relates to Cuba's economic problems. Clearly, the 2,500 prospective Cuban returnees will be a burden for the Cuban government. Most probably will face the same fate there as here: confinement to detention centers.

But the deal will enable Cuba to resume normal immigration ties with the United States, meaning that more than 20,000 Cubans will be eligible to move to this country annually.

Under a situation of economic hardship in Cuba, that signifies 20,000 fewer people to feed, house and employ each year. Beyond that, Cubans who wish to emigrate are probably considered by the government to be politically unreliable in any case and the authorities won't lament their departure.

Perhaps the best recent evidence of Cuba's economic difficulties was seen last August when the Soviet magazine "New Times" chided Cuba for low productivity and took issue with some Cuban policy decisions.

U.S. officials described as "extraordinary" the public criticism of Cuba's economic performance in, of all things, a Soviet publication. Among other problems, Cuba suffers from sharply decreased foreign exchange earnings. Cuba was forced to impose a series of austerity measures in late 1986.

Moreover, President Fidel Castro has resisted using financial rewards for workers as an incentive to produce more. He believes Cubans should work hard solely out of revolutionary commitment.

Prior warning on pact with Cuba 'insufficient'

WASHINGTON (AP) — The warden at the Oakdale, La., detention center said today he was given insufficient advance warning of only about one hour on the agreement with Cuba that has triggered riots at two prisons.

"There was a definite problem in the late notification and, really, the way it was distributed," said Oakdale Warden J.R. Johnson.

"We were given, really, about an hour's notice late Friday morning that the general announcement would be made" that 2,700 Mariel Cubans who are criminals or mental incompentents would be returned to Cuba, said Johnson.

Johnson said that "minimal information" was available about the agreement and that there was "very little opportunity for us to get out and try to settle some of the points and answer" some of the questions.

"My detainees all thought they were going to be one of the 2,700 and very definitely they're making a statement that they'd rather die here...than over in Cuba," said Johnson.

He made the comments on ABC-TV's "Good Morning America."

On Monday, Attorney General Edwin Meese III said the Justice Department had ample time to prepare for the State Department announcement.

"I was called by the State Department as early as 7 o'clock on Friday morning," said Meese, adding that word was "immediately passed on" to immigration and prison officials.

The Justice Department acknowledges it was caught off-guard by uprisings of Cuban prisoners in Louisiana and Georgia, even though federal officials knew there might be trouble when they announced expulsion plans.

"We thought we were on top of it," federal Bureau of Prisons Director Michael Quinlan said. "Obviously, there were some plans or some leaders in the group who had other plans and we were not privy to them."

Quinlan told a news conference that when the State Department announced Friday that Cuba agreed to accept 2,700 returned refugees, officials anticipated "there might be some problems, and for that reason we put additional staff in the institutions where we had Marielitos housed."

The refugees get their name from the Cuban port of Mariel, where the first of 125,000 Cubans set out for the United States in 1980. The 2,700 were criminals or mentally ill.

Quinlan said that up until the moment the Oakdale, La., federal prison disturbance broke out Saturday, with 28 hostages taken, there had been no reports of any "potential anxieties or threats." Rioting at Atlanta's federal prison, where inmates took 75 hostages, followed on Monday.

Meese and other Justice Department officials refused to discuss why inmates in Atlanta weren't locked in their cells as soon as rioting broke out over the weekend at the Oakdale prison.

The Reagan administration responded to the rioting by offering a moratorium on the return of the Cuban nationals, as long as the uprisings ended immediately and hostages were released.

Meese said the moratorium would be in effect for all Cubans detained in the United States until each case could be reviewed in a "full, fair and equitable" manner.

Deficit 'much worse' with start of fiscal '88

WASHINGTON (AP) — The federal government's attempt to reduce the flow of red ink is getting off to a rocky start in the new fiscal year with a giant $30.7 billion imbalance for October.

The shortfall between government revenues and spending for the first month in the 1988 fiscal year was 21.6 percent higher than the same month a year ago and was much worse than many economists had been expecting.

It was particularly bad news for the Reagan administration and congressional budget negotiators who have been working to come up with a credible deficit reduction package aimed at calming financial market jitters following the big plunge in stock prices last month.

The negotiators reached agreement Friday on a package aimed at trimming the deficit for this fiscal year, which began Oct. 1, by $30.2 billion.

But even with these cuts, the Congressional Budget Office says the deficit will still rise above the $148 billion deficit for the 1987 fiscal year, which ended Sept. 30.

CBO analysts are forecasting a deficit for the current fiscal year of around $150 billion, and some private economists said even this estimate is likely to be far too optimistic.

The problem is that the government had a boost in cutting the red ink last year from an unexpected bonanza of $28 billion in higher tax receipts triggered by the overhaul of the tax law. That revenue increase will not be available this time around.

In addition, many economists are busy reducing their forecasts for overall economic growth because of the shock to consumer confidence caused by the collapse of the stock market. Lower growth will mean lower government tax revenues and higher government spending on such things as unemployment benefits.

Michael Evans, head of a Washington forecasting firm, said he had been predicting a 1988 deficit of around $175 billion, even with the reductions approved by the administration and congressional leaders. But he said this figure could swell to $200 billion if the recession he is predicting for next year is worse than anticipated.

"The October deficit number was a lot higher than everybody had been expecting. It is not a very encouraging start for the new budget year," he said.

Economists blamed higher-than-expected government spending in a number of areas for the October shortfall, with some suggesting that various agencies may have held back on spending in September to make the 1987 deficit figure look even better.

In one case, the Defense Department did just that under orders from Congress. The government "saved" nearly $3 billion by changing the pay day for 2.1 million active duty military personnel from the last day of the month to the first day of the month.

Instead of getting paid on Sept. 30, members of the armed forces had to wait until Oct. 1, providing a painless way for budget writers to appear to reduce defense spending for 1987 without actually having done so.

That's a sleight-of-hand won't be available for budget writers this time around.

The package of deficit reduction measures that the administration and congressional negotiators have agreed to still must be approved by Congress before they can go into effect.

Until that approval takes place, a package of $23 billion in automatic spending cuts required by the Gramm-Rudman law is in effect, starting last Friday.

The Treasury Department report showed that government revenues totaled $62.4 billion, while the government spent $93.1 billion in October. The resulting $30.7 billion deficit compared with a surplus of $15.3 billion in September when government receipts were bolstered by quarterly tax payments and spending was reduced by the missing military pay period.

The October deficit compared with a deficit of $25.3 billion at the start of the 1987 fiscal year and was the largest monthly imbalance since $35.5 billion in red ink in May.

For October, the top spending categories were, as usual, defense, Social Security, other programs in the Department of Health and Human Services and interest on the national debt.

These three government categories — defense, HHS and interest on the debt — account for 83 percent of the $1.032 trillion the government is expected to spend in the current fiscal year.

Defense spending totaled $25.3 billion in October. The administration estimates that defense spending for the entire fiscal year will total $289.3 billion.

Spending for Social Security, the country's largest domestic program, totaled $16.6 billion in October, and is estimated to total $215.3 billion for the entire fiscal year.

The rest of the Department of Health and Human Services spent $14 billion in October, much of it for Medicare and Medicaid. Spending for the entire year is projected to total $149 billion.

Interest on the $2.4 trillion national debt totaled $14.1 billion in October, with interest payments for the full fiscal year expected to hit $205 billion.

'Fatal Vision' suit settled

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Convicted murderer Jeffrey MacDonald on Monday accepted $325,000 to settle a $15 million lawsuit alleging "Fatal Vision" author Joe McGinniss broke an agreement to write a favorable account of the case.

Both sides in the dispute claimed victory.

MacDonald, a 43-year-old former Green Beret doctor, is serving three consecutive life sentences in Texas for the 1970 murders of his pregnant wife and two young daughters at Fort Bragg, N.C.

He charged in the federal suit that he had entered into a contract with McGinniss under which the author was permitted to hear his innermost thoughts for a positive account of the murder case.

"Fatal Vision," a best-seller made into a TV miniseries, concluded MacDonald was guilty.

A mistrial in the breach-of-contract suit was declared in August after the jury deadlocked.

"Money does not totally compensate for McGinniss' outrageous conduct and for his misrepresentations nor their impact upon my life," MacDonald said in a statement Monday.

Afghan leader's brother defects

NEW YORK (AP) — The younger brother of the Soviet-backed leader in Afghanistan has defected to the anti-government rebels, a newspaper reported Tuesday.

The Afghan ruler, Najibullah, and his younger brother Sidiq were said to be at odds for some time, according to The New York Times. Both men use only one name.

Sidiq apparently joined the forces of Ahmed Shah Massoud, the rebel field commander who has led the fight against government troops and Soviet forces in the strategic Panjshir valley, said the Times, quoting American intelligence reports and unidentified foreign diplomats.

Sidiq, also known as Sidiqullah, is believed to have joined the Jamiat-i-Islami party, one of the largest opposition groups, the newspaper said. Massoud heads the party, one of a seven-party coalition.

Najibullah has campaigned in recent months for a "national reconciliation," and the defection of his brother would be an embarrassing setback for the campaign, the Times said.

'Master on homeless issues' in relentless effort for destitute

By DIANE DUSTON

WASHINGTON (AP) — Mitch Snyder angers a lot of people with his tactics, but 15 years of working for the destitute in the nation's capital have made him a master at dealing with the country's power brokers on homeless issues.

Using civil disobedience, hunger strikes and a talent for attracting media attention, Snyder, with the Community for Creative Non-Violence, has won over Congress, the White House and the District of Columbia government in relentless efforts to house and feed the homeless.

His group's latest target, the Washington Metropolitan Area Transit Authority, so far has not budged, but Snyder is not deterred.

His aim is to get the transit authority to remove a fence it erected last month to keep homeless people from sleeping in a downtown subway station.

"It's another attempt to make the homeless disappear," said Snyder. "For about 11 years people have been finding warmth at the foot of the escalator. Putting a fence up can kill those people."

Transit spokeswoman Beverly Silverberg insists the agency will not move the fence no matter what Snyder does. Metro is in the business of safe, clean transportation, not providing shelter, she says, and the fence was erected because homeless people were urinating and defecating at the foot of the escalators.

While acknowledging that the station is not the answer to homelessness, Snyder insists that taking the fence down and setting up portable toilets would help.

Snyder has lost more than 20 pounds in a water-only hunger strike begun Nov. 9 to protest the fence, and has been among dozens of protesters arrested nightly for trying to stop transit police from closing the gates at the station.

Actor Martin Sheen, one of several Hollywood celebrities and congressional figures to join Snyder's causes, was arrested along with Snyder on Nov. 11 in a 15-inch snowfall while protesting the fence.

Sheen, who portrayed Snyder in the television movie, "Samaritan: The Mitch Snyder Story," is CCNV's most visible connection to a world of celebrity far from the soup kitchens and political street theater that marked the group in the 1970s.

With a commitment based in religious faith Snyder says he gained while in prison on a car theft charge in the early 1970s, he and CCNV have changed focus from overtly political causes to homelessness.

The 1986 movie led detractors to label the activist "Hollywood Mitch."

He has often clashed with local shelter officials who object to his methods and his habit of positioning himself at the center of camera frames.

Yet, he does move as easily through the hallways of congressional buildings as through crowded homeless shelters.

While seemingly unbending in public battles, he has become adept at backroom bartering. His group now has command of a massive old federal building that, when renovations partly financed by the federal government are completed, he boasts will be a "national model."

He and CCNV have joined in battles over homeless issues in Santa Barbara, Calif., Portland, Maine; New Brunswick, N.J., and Atlanta.

And Snyder is regularly on the lecture circuit, traveling recently to three states in three days to speak on college campuses.

On Thanksgiving, he and his group are sponsoring a dinner for 2,000 homeless people. It will be on the Capitol grounds.

NEW YORK (AP) — A trip through Manhattan to Robert Hayes' small, dimly lit office at the National Coalition for the Homeless can be an education in what he's doing there.

A block away on Madison Avenue, a middle-aged man with spittle on his lip and a grimy jacket too flimsy for the cold, parts the sidewalk crowd as he scuffs along toward nowhere, proclaiming to no one, "They don't scare me any. They don't scare me any."

At the building where Hayes works, many more people with no homes, some of them children, wait in the hallway leading to the coalition's office, its door and walls papered with notices of work programs, new laws on tenants' rights, a poem:

"Sleeping in the corners, sleeping in the street," one verse says. "Balled up in a knot with nothing on their feet."

These are Hayes' inspirations — the transient released from asylums, the beggars, the evicted families.

Seeing them in the city's corners inspired him to give up the fast track in a top Wall Street law firm. It inspired him to take the unwanted into his own apartment. Actually, it inspired anger, and, as Hayes has said, "When lawyers get angry, they can only think of one thing."

He figures he's filed two dozen lawsuits, starting with a class action in 1979, "establishing the right to shelter" for men in New York. The right was extended to women in 1982 and to families in 1985.

"In an idiotic way, we had to do it separately," growls Hayes, described by associates as always impatient with the pace of progress. (Still, progress can be measured — for instance, in the number of shelter beds in New York City: a reported 1,500 in 1979, when his suits began, and now more than 27,000.)

New York Mayor Edward Koch, like President Reagan a regular object of Hayes' public scorn, sometimes questions "facts" presented by the homeless coalition's founder but nonetheless calls him an "able and tough advocate."

Having won in court, Hayes calls litigation a secondary tool now.

Primary is legislative change. With the passage of the $1 billion Stewart B. McKinney Act this year, the first phase of a "Homeless Persons' Survival Act" written by Hayes and others became law.

"It's another attempt to make the homeless disappear. ...For about 11 years people have been finding warmth at the foot of the escalator. Putting a fence up can kill those people."

Let's talk turkey

Reagan reaffirms Star Wars stance

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan vows he'll put his "Star Wars" missile defense system into space and not bargain it away for an arms control deal with the Soviet Union.

The president drew applause from a friendly audience Monday as he renewed his often-stated assertion that the space system he calls the Strategic Defense Initiative "is not a bargaining chip."

"It's a cornerstone of our security strategy for the 1990s and beyond," he said. "We will research it. We will develop it. And when it's ready, we will deploy it."

"We cannot — we will not — bargain it away to get strategic arms reductions," he said.

Reagan was returning to the subject today as he flew to Denver to address employees of Martin-Marietta, an SDI contractor. He was making the stop en route to a Thanksgiving weekend at his California ranch.

White House spokesman Marlin Fitzwater said the president's 20-minute speech would be "a very strong defense of the Strategic Defense Initiative."

"He will visit the Martin-Marietta facility as a way of helping to explain to the American people exactly what it is we're talking about in SDI," Fitzwater said.

The president will spend Thanksgiving at his mountaintop ranch north of Santa Barbara with members of his family. He and first lady Nancy Reagan, who flew to Los Angeles on Monday and will join the president at the ranch, plan to return to Washington on Sunday.

Reagan spoke Monday to a group billed by the White House as "Reagan Activists for the INF Treaty" — supporters of the agreement on intermediate-range nuclear missiles that is expected to be signed at next month's summit meeting in Washington.

"If all goes well, we'll sign an agreement," the president said. "It would, however, be hasty to assume that we're at the point where we're ready to put pen to paper and sign the treaty. Any treaty that I sign must provide for effective verification."

Reagan then said U.S. negotiators in Geneva are making progress in negotiations to reduce arsenals of intercontinental-range nuclear missiles.

"The Soviets must, however, stop holding strategic offensive missile reductions hostage to measures that would cripple our research and development of SDI," he said.

On another issue, the president said continued congressional support for rebels fighting the Marxist-led government of Nicaragua is vital to peace efforts in Central America.

"If Congress pulls the plug on the freedom fighters, they will have accomplished what billions of dollars in Soviet aid could not — extinguishing all hope of freedom in Nicaragua and leaving the neighboring Central American democracies naked to communist aggression."

The president also took issue with presidential critics of Star Wars, saying they are dragging their feet while the Soviets spend billions on a similar program.

"The Soviet Red Shield program actually dwarfs our SDI," he said. "Yet, there's been a strange tendency by some in Congress to discuss SDI as if its funding could be determined by purely domestic considerations, unconnected to what the Soviets are doing."

"SDI is too important to be subject to congressional 'log-rolling,'" the president said.

At a White House swearing-in ceremony for Frank C. Carlucci, the new secretary of defense, Reagan cited SDI as an example of military technology "to make this a safer world for peace and freedom."

Also on Monday, Reagan said last week's $76 billion budget compromise with Congress does not mean he will accept whatever legislation lawmakers send his way.

"I will veto a bad tax bill," Reagan told a group of Wall Street and business leaders, called to the White House to discuss the budget agreement.

The president, seated between John Phelan, chairman of the New York Stock Exchange, and Roger Smith, chairman of General Motors, told the group that the pact reached on Friday "must not be the last word on deficit reduction."

"This is a good first step, a basic framework to work with this year and next. We can and should do more," Reagan said.

The agreement cuts the deficit by $30 billion in fiscal 1988 and $46 billion in the next fiscal year through budget cuts, unspecified tax increases, higher fees for some government services and the sales of some government assets.

Reagan told the group that congressional leaders had committed themselves to hold the level of taxes to no more than $9 billion this fiscal year and $14 billion the next.

Price wars driving turkey costs down

Associated Press

With less than three days before Americans gobble down their Thanksgiving feasts, turkey price wars have broken out around the country as aggressive grocery promotions and an increased supply drive prices down to practically nothing.

"It's totally insane," said Lary Lindbo of Certified Grocers Midwest in Chicago. "I just came back from McDonald's, and I spent $4 for lunch. You can buy a 20-pound turkey for that."

Or less.

Bridgeport Foods in the Windy City is giving turkeys away — if the purchaser buys $60 in other goods. Similar offers are being made by supermarket chains in Philadelphia and Phoenix, Ariz.

The average price of a complete Thanksgiving dinner for 10 is $25.41, 18 percent lower than last year's $29.75, the American Farm Bureau Federation said Monday.

In addition to a bird, $25.41 buys stuffing, sweet potatos, peas, rolls, cranberries, pumpkin pie with whipped cream and more, according to the federation's survey of markets in California, Colorado, Georgia, Illinois, Kentucky, Minnesota, New York, Texas and Washington, D.C.

For those who don't want to bother cooking all that food, dinner can be had — but it can cost a lot more. In Los Angeles, for example, a caterer called Renta Yenta will deliver turkey with all the trimmings for a party of 10 for $350.

Lila Greene, whose company takes its name from the Yiddish word for a woman who gossips, has 150 orders for her Thanksgiving meals for 10 for busy professionals who either don't have the time to prepare dinner or don't know how.

"And you can say you made it yourself," she said.

The drop in the do-it-yourself price is partly due to a jump in the number of turkeys combined with aggressive retail promotions, said federation spokeswoman Marsha Purcell.

Turkey production is up 16 percent this year, and is expected to reach 240 million birds, according to the U.S. Department of Agriculture.

"With ample turkey supplies, it is anybody's guess to what level prices will fall," said David Goldenberg, director of industry relations for the National Turkey Federation.

An Associated Press spot check of groceries nationwide found that:

— In Phoenix, Fry's Food and Drug Stores and Bayless Food Markets are advertising free turkeys for purchases of at least $100.

— In Chicago, grocers have cut turkey prices to 17 or 18 cents per pound for customers making other purchases.

— In Oregon, the Thriftway chain is offering turkeys for 19 cents a pound if the customer buys at least $100 in groceries. The price of the turkey goes up as the grocery bill goes down.

— In the New York metropolitan area, A&P supermarkets are offering turkeys for 19 cents a pound to shoppers who spend at least $40 and return a newspaper coupon. The regular price is 39 cents a pound.

— Elsewhere, turkeys in Rhode Island, which sold for 69 cents to 89 cents a pound last year, are selling for 39 cents a pound.

What will Reagan do with North, Poindexter?

An Analysis

By TERENCE HUNT

WASHINGTON (AP) — One of the most intriguing mysteries in Washington is whether President Reagan would grant pardons to former aides for their roles in the Iran-Contra affair.

Would he allow people he has praised as honorable men and heroes go to jail? Or would he risk a public uproar and a potential backlash against Republican candidates by granting pardons?

It's a premature question, since no one's even been indicted, but it's being asked frequently at the White House these days.

Gerald Ford, as one of his first acts as president, pardoned Richard Nixon for any wrongdoing in the Watergate scandal. It was a highly unpopular act that analysts believed contributed to Ford's defeat by Jimmy Carter.

Now the pardon issue looms for Reagan as independent counsel Lawrence E. Walsh conducts a criminal investigation of former White House aides John M. Poindexter and Oliver L. North for their roles in the secret sale of U.S. weapons to Iran and the diversion of arms sale profits to the Nicaraguan Contras.

True, Reagan will never have to stand for election again, so he doesn't have to worry about the political impact. But his loyal vice president, George Bush, sure might be affected, along with other GOP candidates, as well.

So what would Reagan do?

There are scattered clues, a lot of guessing and rumors but no clear answers. And Reagan, himself, isn't talking.

"This is a subject I have not and will not discuss at this time," Reagan said Monday.

Not that reporters didn't try to get an answer.

Four times the question was put to Reagan. And four times he ducked.

"That's a question no one can answer at this point and I'm not going to try," Reagan said. Sure you could, he was urged. "No — no I can't," he replied.

And again, "There is no answer to that and I'm not answering that at all and no one can at this time."

It's entirely possible that Reagan, himself, is not sure what he would do.

Stephen Hess, a political analyst at the Brookings Institution, says he thinks the public believes Reagan would pardon North and Poindexter if necessary. However, he believes Reagan isn't saying anything now because it's wiser to wait and see what happens.

"I feel in my gut that they're not going to go to jail," Hess said of North and Poindexter.

On the other hand, "If they're not convicted, Ronald Reagan doesn't have to do any pardoning. A good politician plays out the string," Hess said.

Reagan does seem sympathetic to North and Poindexter. He said last month he does not think they have broken any laws. And, after Congress completed its hearings into the episode, Reagan went on national television and said North and Poindexter "believed they were doing what I would've wanted done."

He said he was "mad as a hornet" about the damage to his administration but he didn't say he was angry with the former aides.

NBC gets Gorbachev interview

NEW YORK (AP) — NBC has won the first American TV interview with Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev, and will broadcast the interview in prime time Monday.

The major networks have had long-standing requests for an interview with the Soviet leader, but CBS announced last week it was turned down. So was the Cable News Network. ABC is awaiting word.

Gorbachev is due to arrive in the United States on Dec. 7 for a summit meeting with President Reagan.

"NBC Nightly News" anchor Tom Brokaw will conduct a one-hour, spontaneous interview with Gorbachev in Moscow on Sunday, said NBC News spokesman Bill McAndrew.

NBC consultant and former vice president Gordon Manning has been laying the groundwork for the interview for two years, said NBC News President Lawrence K. Grossman.

"That's the explanation why we got it and nobody else did. He's really extraordinary," Grossman said. "We knew about it pretty much late last week. I talked to Gordon this morning in Moscow and everything is pretty much on track."

McAndrew said Soviet radio and television agreed to show the NBC interview in the Soviet Union, but no date has been set.

CBS said it was told it didn't get the interview because of its coverage of the war in Afghanistan and a human rights question posed by anchor Dan Rather to Gorbachev at a news conference in Paris in 1985.

CNN said it was given no reason.

Cuomo changes mind, won't quiz candidates

DES MOINES, Iowa (AP) — New York Gov. Mario Cuomo has changed his mind and will not quiz the Republican presidential candidates at a January debate in Des Moines, an aide says.

Cuomo's change of heart was made with the idea of ending speculation that the Democratic governor is running for president, said press secretary Gary Fryer.

"The focus of the debate should be on the debate itself and not who is there and whether or not that person is there as a participant or not," Fryer said Monday.

Saturday, Nov. 24, 1787
PHILADELPHIA TODAY

A strong east wind helped prodce an usually high tide, but the day was clear.

Philadelphia bookbinder John Muir bound in calf, lettered and rolled edges "Creedance Concordance" for Rev. Thomas Ustic.

Commonwealth Treasurer Rittenhouse was ordered to pay John Stock 2 pounds 15 shillings for glazing done at the courtroom in the State House.

CONFEDERATION TODAY

On this 20th day since Congress was to begin its session, a quorum still had not assembled.

RATIFICATION TODAY

William Cranch wrote from Braintree, Mass., to his cousin John Quincy Adams in Newburyport to answer some of John Quincy's objections to the new Constitution.

A "Landholder IV" appeared in the Connecticut Courant, responding to Elbridge Gerry's objections to the Constitution. It was a biting and sarcastic response.

Philadelphia "Plain Truth," writing in today's Independent Gazette responded to a number of recent attacks on anti-Federalists.

On this fourth day since it convened, the Pennsylvania ratifying convention began its deliberations. Thomas McKean got the group started in proper parliamentary fashion by moving "That this Convention do assent to and ratify the Constitution." John Allison seconded, and debate began. James Wilson opened for the Federalists with a long but masterful speech outlining the problems the Convention had faced and the ways in which it had resolved them.

DELEGATES TODAY

William Samuel Johnson (Conn.) remained at Columbia College. He noted payment of 10 pounds to Mrs. Johnson and 80 shillings to his son-in-law, Mr. Ver Plank.

George Washington rode to his plantations. Matilda Lee, wife of Col. Henry Lee, came to Mount Vernon for dinner. Later in the afternoon, Lee and Judge Robert Harris of Maryland also arrived.

The general found time to write a brief note to his nephews' schoolmaster.

"I am sorry it is not convenient for you to board my nephews any longer. Mr. Lear is desired to see what can be done with them. For the advice you have given them I feel myself obliged and wish they had sense and prudence enough to be governed by it."

LOOKING BACK
A French Perspective

Foreigners, too, were following the fate of the Constitution. French Charge d'Affaires Louis Guillaume Otto today sent his realistic assessment from New York to the Comte de Montmorin at the French Foreign Ministry in Paris:

"The debates, My Lord, for and against the new Constitution continue to absorb public attention and while the individual States are preparing to call conventions in order to adopt or reject this new plan, the two parties abuse each other in the public papers with a rancor which sometimes does not even spare insults and personal invectives. As in these sorts of political commotions, the men and the issues usually disguise themselves so as to become unrecognizable, the partisans of the innovation are called Federalists and the others more commonly Whigs, although neither of these names has a direct relation to the object in question.

"This spirit of argument is even pushed to intolerance in regard to foreigners and they absolutely want us to take a side for or against the new Constitution.

"Indifferent Spectators agree that the new form of Goyernment, well executed will be able to produce good results; but they also think that if the states really had the desire to be united the present Confederation would be adequate for all their needs. Meanwhile they are unable to conceal that after having excited this general ferment there is no longer a means to stop it, that the old edifice is almost destroyed, and that any fabric whatsoever must be substituted for it. In effect it was impossible to carry out a more violent coup to the authority of Congress, than in saying to all Americans, to the entire Universe, that this body is inadequate to the needs of the Confederation and that the united States have become the laughingstock of all the powers. This principle repeated over and over by all the Innovators seems as false as their spirits are excited; the united States held the place among nations which their youth and means assigned them, they are neither rich enough, populated enough, nor well established enough to appear with more luster and perhaps one ought to reproach them only for the impatience of anticipating their future grandeur..."

Missile treaty being readied for summit

GENEVA (AP) — Top U.S. and Soviet arms control officials today resumed efforts to sweep away remaining obstacles to a nuclear arms control treaty to be signed Dec. 9 at the superpower summit.

Soviet Foreign Minister Eduard Shevardnadze and Secretary of State George Shultz began their second day of talks, scheduled to be their last, with a meeting at the Soviet mission that lasted more than three hours.

They were then to have a one-hour working lunch together at the Soviet mission, followed by another meeting at the U.S. mission.

The negotiations have run longer than expected, apparently postponing news conferences scheduled by the two ministers.

Neither side gave any comment on why the meetings ran overtime.

The two sides are trying to resolve disagreements over a treaty banning intermediate-range nuclear forces, which is supposed to be ready in time for President Reagan and Soviet Communist Party General Secretary Mikhail Gorbachev to sign at the summit.

Both sides on Monday characterized the talks as "constructive," State Department spokesman Charles Redman said.

But a U.S. official, speaking on condition of anonymity today, said, "We haven't got it (a treaty) nailed down yet."

He said at least two important issues remained unresolved. One was a question of data the United States had requested from the Soviets on the location and number of their missiles to be destroyed under the proposed treaty.

The Soviets provided some of this data last week and handed over additional data on the weekend, the official said. But he said the United States still has not received all it needs.

The other unresolved question is the designation of a U.S. ballistic missile plant for the Soviets to monitor, in return for Soviet acceptance of U.S. monitors at one of their intercontinental ballistic missile sites.

Meeting separately is a group of experts appointed by Shultz and Shevardnadze on Monday to try to resolve the outstanding issues.

The groups are headed by Paul Nitze, a veteran arms control negotiator and White House adviser, and Marshal Sergei Akhromeyev, chief of staff of the Soviet armed forces.

President Reagan said Monday in Washington that the treaty is not complete "in at least one area, verification," or anti-cheating measures.

The treaty would ban about 1,000 U.S. and Soviet missiles with a range between 300 and 3,000 miles.

A U.S. official speaking on condition of anonymity said the negotiators had not resolved the question of designating an American ballistic missile plant for the Soviets to monitor.

The Soviets have agreed to a U.S. demand to observe the assembly of SS-25 intercontinental missiles to make sure the weapons are not modified illegally to replace SS-20s, which the treaty would ban. But they have demanded that the Americans reciprocate.

Commuter plane crash kills 16, injures five

HOMER, Alaska (AP) — A twin-engine commuter plane crashed and skidded through a fence while trying to land, killing 16 people and injuring the five others aboard, authorities said today.

The Ryan Air Beechcraft 1900 crashed Monday night in clear skies and came to a halt 200 yards from the runway at Homer Airport.

"There was no fire, but there was quite a mess," said Sgt. Jim Stogsdill, of the Alaska State Troopers in Soldotna.

The flight originated in Kodiak, and after a stop here, was to continue to Kenai and Anchorage, 150 miles north of here.

The fuselage of the aircraft, which can hold 19 passengers and a crew of one or two, came to rest in a snowy field after plowing through the fence.

Susan Polis of Homer said she saw the plane descend awkwardly.

"It was definitely out of control," she said. "It just went down really fast."

Ed Reasor, an Anchorage lawyer who was in the terminal, said he ran out the door shortly after the plane went down.

"You could smell the gas. There was jet fuel all over," Reasor said. "I thought I heard some voices. I think there were people crying for help from the plane."

Reasor said the plane appeared relatively intact. It was sitting in about six inches of snow, with the right wing and engine hanging down, he said.

"If you looked at it, you wouldn't have thought there was that many people killed in the plane," Reasor said.

However, Homer Fire District administrator Robert Purcell said the aircraft was badly damaged.

"The airframe was relatively intact, but there was some severe structural damage to the aircraft. There were stress wrinkles on the nose and the tail had begun to shear off.

"Most of the passengers were strapped in but the seats had torn loose," Purcell said. "A lot of things had been thrown around."

Fourteen people were dead on board and two others who were taken for medical treatment died later, said Troopers' Cpl. Dan Weatherly.

Jim Michelangelo, head of the Alaska office of the National Transportation Safety Board, dispatched two investigators to the site, and said a team from Washington, D.C., was expected this afternoon.

Purcell said the injured, some unconscious, were taken to South Peninsula Hospital in Homer. Several were in critical condition, he said, and were flown to hospitals in Anchorage.

A morgue was established in the Ryan Air hangar, Purcell said.

Rescuers initially had access only through the front of the plane and had to cut their way into the rear, he said.

There were high clouds but visibility was good at the time of the crash, about 6:30 p.m. Purcell said.

"I do not believe weather was the primary cause of the problem," Purcell said. "But the National Transportation Safety Board is here now and conducting the investigation."

Dick Bottini, Ryan Air director of operations, declined comment pending an investigation.

NATION IN BRIEF

Sentencing guidelines called unconstitutional

WASHINGTON (AP) — The government's new sentencing guidelines for people convicted of federal crimes are being attacked by two federal public defenders who claim the rules are unconstitutional.

A lawsuit filed Monday seeks a ruling that the sentencing guidelines for crimes committed after Nov. 1 were adopted in an unconstitutional manner by a seven-member sentencing commission.

"This matter is such a legislative-type matter that it can't be delegated to anybody," attorney Alan B. Morrison said in a telephone interview after filing the suit in U.S. District Court here on behalf of federal public defenders' offices in Nashville, Tenn., and San Diego.

Summit media center set

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Commerce Department's visitors center will serve as a media center for journalists covering President Reagan's summit meeting with Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev next month, but an additional site for reporters still is being sought.

The commerce center, located at Pennsylvania Avenue, will be used by radio and television journalists covering the Dec. 7-10 summit, Joe O'Connell, a spokesman for the United States Information Agency, said Monday.

The White House is looking into other sites in the area for print journalists, O'Connell said.

More than 2,000 journalists are expected to cover the first summit meeting between the two leaders in the United States. George Washington University earlier turned down a White House request for use of the school's auditorium.

Cuts may delay Star Wars

WASHINGTON (AP) — It could be the mid-1990s before a decision is made on building the "Star Wars" missile defense system because federal budget cuts will slow down research on the project, Pentagon officials say.

"You can't eliminate an impact on the schedule with these latest (budget) cuts," one ranking Pentagon official who asked not to be identified said Monday. "The farther we are into the program, the more of an impact these budget cuts have. And these latest cuts are going to be real problem."

Until recently, officials overseeing the Star Wars program had spoken hopefully of making some initial decisions on the development of hardware for a rudimentary system by 1992.

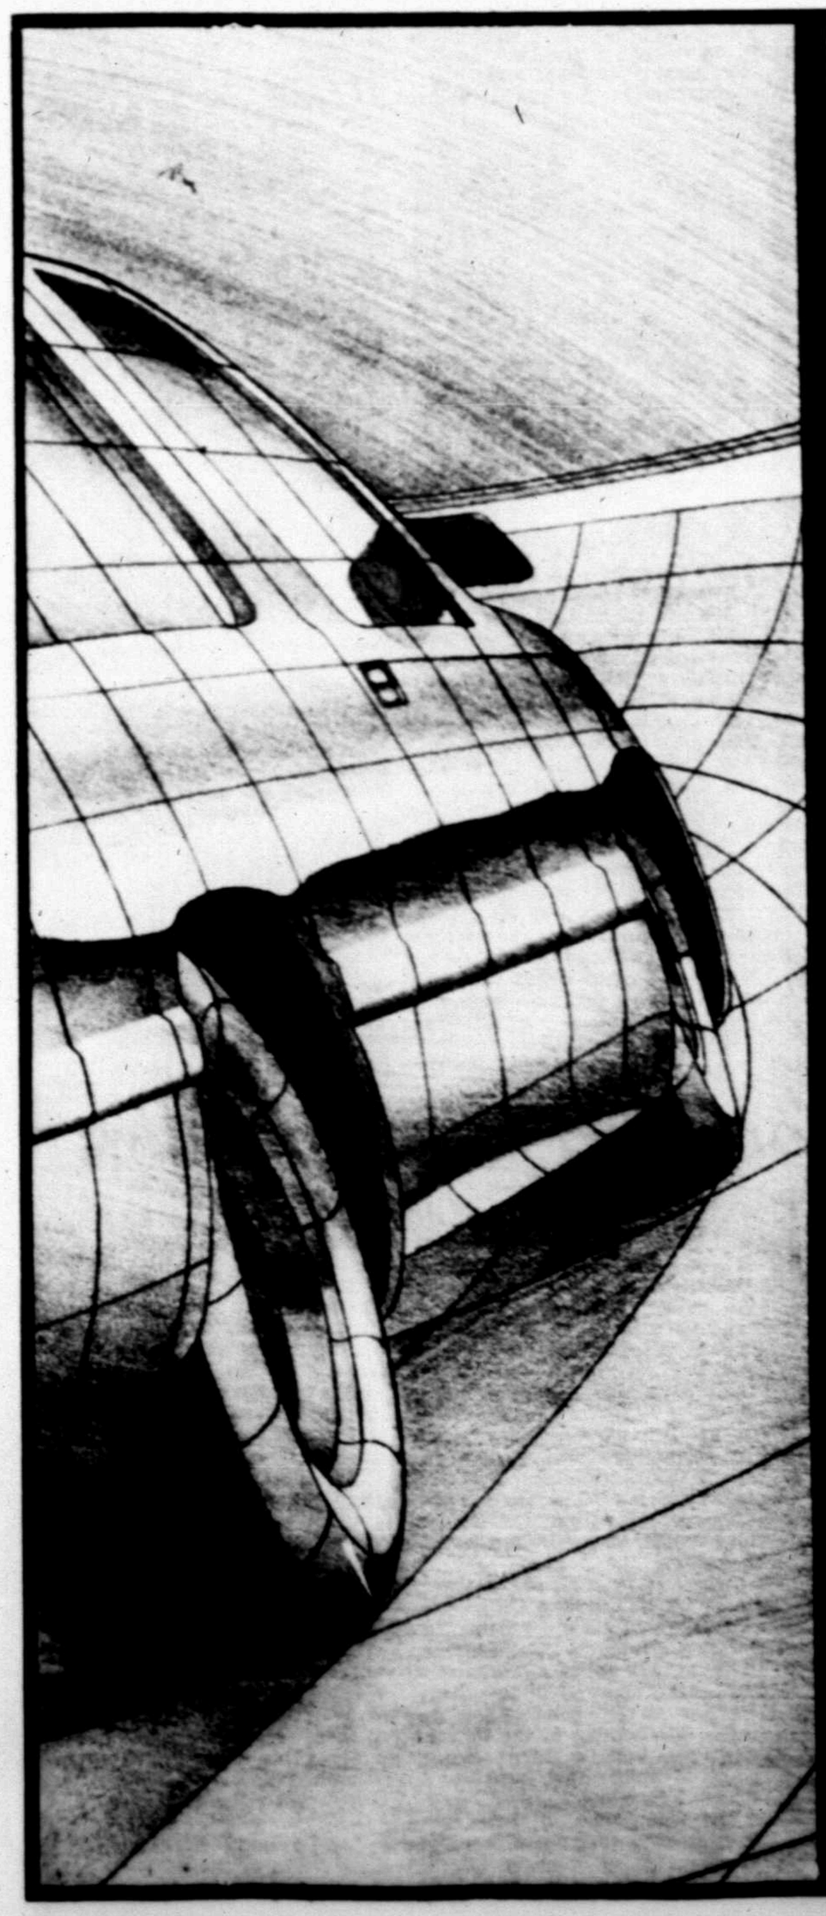

Most bosses give two days

WASHINGTON (AP) — A private survey found that most employers will give their workers two paid holidays this week for Thanksgiving.

Larger companies are more likely than small to grant the extra holiday, said the Bureau of national Affairs, a private publisher of business research.

Eight of 10 companies with more than 1,000 employees said they were including Friday as an extra holiday while only six of 10 companies with fewer than 1,000 employees were letting their workers take Friday off with pay.

BNA said Monday that of 256 employers surveyed, 73 percent said they are observing both Thanksgiving Day and the Friday after it as full-paid holidays this year.

Release of killers mocks peace plan

The expected release of the confessed killers of six Americans in El Salvador is perhaps the most perverse outcome yet of the Arias peace plan signed by five Central American presidents on Aug. 7.

Under terms of the regional peace treaty, the governments of Nicaragua, El Salvador, Guatemala, Honduras and Costa Rica pledged to extend amnesty to prisoners detained for political reasons, thereby pardoning their offenses and releasing them from jail.

In the case of El Salvador, however, a military judge has applied the amnesty provision so broadly that he has ordered the release of three gunmen who murdered 13 persons, including four U.S. Marines and two American computer technicians, in a 1985 machine-gun attack on two cafes in San Salvador.

The three terrorists are members of a leftist guerrilla organization aligned with the Marxist rebels seeking to overthrow the democratically elected government of Jose Napoleon Duarte.

Categorizing these savage killers as political prisoners is tantamount to calling Al Capone a small-businessman.

Not only the U.S. ambassador but also the Salvadoran attorney general have appealed the judge's outrageous ruling to release the trio. The U.S. State Department has quite rightly denounced the judgment as "morally wrong and politically damaging."

In the meantime, five former Salvadoran national guardsmen convicted of robbing, sexually assaulting, and murdering four American churchwomen in 1980 also may be released, along with potentially hundreds of members of rightist death squads that committed atrocities during the early 1980s.

Such abuse of the amnesty program makes a mockery of justice and can only further delay the process of national reconciliation envisioned by the Arias peace plan. Can anyone seriously believe the release of such violent thugs will serve the interests of peace and stability in Central America?

Another View:
Birth-control option

When its manufacturer took the Copper 7 intrauterine device off the market last year, American woman lost an effective low-cost birth-control option. Because some 1.4 million IUD users were left without replacements, the only recourse for some was to travel to Canada, where IUDs remain available. Thus it's welcome news that a new, safer copper IUD will be available in the United States next year.

The IUD was a victim of lawsuits, and the fear of lawsuits, that were a legacy of the Dalkon Shield. Thousands of personal-injury suits drove A.H. Robins Co., the Dalkon Shield's manufacturer, to seek bankruptcy protection. To avoid litigation, two other major IUD manufacturers took their products off the market in 1985 and 1986. Only a relatively expensive, short-lived, harmone-releasing IUD remained available in the United States.

Fear of litigation also kept the new IUD, the Copper T 380A, off the market. Developed by the non-profit Population Council, the Copper T 380A has been available in Canada sance 1982 and won U.S. Food and Drug Administration approval in 1984. Until this year, however, the council was unable to find a company willing to market the device.

But litigation fears did bring the benefit of an improved product with clearer instructions for its safe use. The council says the new IUD is recommended for women 25 and older who have been pregnant and who have monogamous sexual relationships. The intent is to minimize the risk of pelvic inflammatory disease, which can lead to sterility. In addition, prospective users will be fully informed about the device and its risks.

No form of birth control is foolproof. But the risks should not deny the benefits to American women, or to Third World women who depend on U.S. family-planning assistance. And the risks can be minimized with scrupulous product development and careful guidelines for its use.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Tuesday, Nov. 24, the 328th day of 1987. There are 37 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

Forty years ago, on Nov. 24, 1947, a group of motion picture writers, producers and directors that came to be known as the Hollywood 10 were cited for contempt of Congress because of their refusal to tell the House Un-American Activities Committee whether they were Communists. The 10 were blacklisted in the movie industry and served prison sentences.

On this date:

In 1784, Zachary Taylor, the 12th president of the United States, was born in Orange County, Virginia.

In 1859, British naturalist Charles Darwin published "On the Origin of Species," a paper in which he explained his theory of evolution through the process of natural selection.

In 1863, the Civil War battle for Lookout Mountain began in Tennessee. Union forces succeeded in taking the mountain two days later.

In 1864, French artist Henri de Toulouse-Lautrec was born in Albi.

In 1871, the National Rifle Association was incorporated, and its first president named: Maj. Gen Ambrose E. Burnside.

In 1874, barbed wire was patented by Joseph F. Glidden of Illinois.

In 1944, U.S. bombers based on Saipan attacked Tokyo in what was the first raid against the Japanese capital by land-based planes.

In 1947, John Steinbeck's novel "The Pearl" was published.

In 1963, Dallas nightclub owner Jack Ruby shot and mortally wounded Lee Harvey Oswald, the accused assassin of President John F. Kennedy, in a scene captured on live television.

In 1969, Apollo 12 splashed down safely in the Pacific, ending the second manned mission to the moon.

In 1971, a hijacker identified as Dan Cooper parachuted from a Northwest Airlines 727 over Washington state with $200,000 in ransom. The hijacker, popularly, though erroneously known as D.B. Cooper, disappeared.

In 1985, 58 people died when Egyptian forces stormed a hijacked Egyptair jetliner parked on the ground at Valletta, Malta.

Ten years ago: A Greek archeologist, Manolis Andronikos, announced at a news conference in Salonika that a tomb he had unearthed nearby was indeed that of King Philip II of Macedon, father of Alexander the Great.

Five years ago: The Israeli commission probing the massacre of Palestinian refugees in Beirut warned Prime Minister Menachem Begin and other top Israeli officials to prepare defenses against a possible accusation of negligence on their part.

One year ago: In the midst of growing controversy over secret arms sales to Iran, President Reagan told reporters he wasn't "firing anybody" despite calls for resignations and reports of backbiting among his staff.

Today's birthdays: Producer-writer Garson Kanin is 75. Actor Howard Duff is 70. Columnist William F. Buckley Jr. is 62.

Thought for today: "Compromise makes a good umbrella but a poor roof; it is a temporary expedient." — James Russell Lowell, American editor (1819-91).

U.S. pushed Japan for punishment

WASHINGTON — The Japanese government has punished two big corporations implicated in the illegal sale of high-technology machinery to the Soviets — but only after pressure from the Pentagon.

Jack Anderson

Tokyo was so afraid of hurting its lucrative trade ties to the United States that it secretly negotiated with the Pentagon and agreed on the punishment of the two Japanese firms in May to appease the U.S. government. The secret negotiations and agreement are spelled out in a Department of Defense memorandum, itself classified "secret."

The subject of the five-page "memorandum for the record," dated May 8, 1987, was "Resolution of Nine-Axis Milling Machine Case." This was the $17 million sale by Toshiba Machine Co. of sophisticated propeller-milling hardware that allowed the Soviets to make their submarines almost undetectable. It could cost the American taxpayers $30 billion to overcome this tremendous technical advantage.

"After extensive negotiations between DOD and MITI (the Japanese Ministry of International Trade and Industry) and the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, a satisfactory settlement has been reached," the memo begins, adding:

"The GOJ (Government of Japan) will be taking precedent-breaking direct actions against all involved in the diversion. The publicity surrounding GOJ actions, the financial losses to the Japanese companies and the new regulations instituted by MITI should insure that such a major diversion ... will not happen again."

One page in the memo is subtitled "Sanctions Against C. Itoh," the huge trading company that handled the sale for Toshiba. In a series of columns, we have depicted C. Itoh as a culprit that escaped with a slap on the wrist: a three-month ban on Soviet deals.

Through its American representatives, C. Itoh has protested vociferously that the company didn't know what was in the crates Toshiba was shipping to the Soviets. The lobbying effort was led by Roderick Hills, who initially described himself as a "friend" of C. Itoh, but eventually felt obliged to register as a foreign agent for the company. Hills and his key associate at Sears World Trade Inc., newly appointed Defense Secretary Frank Carlucci, had worked closely with C. Itoh on unrelated business while the illegal sale to the Soviets was in progress.

Hills correctly maintains that no publicly released U.S. or Japanese official report charges that C. Itoh knew what was in the Toshiba crates.

But Hills tries to paint the three-month ban on deals with the Soviets as strictly a voluntary sacrifice by C. Itoh to help the Japanese government out of an "extremely embarrassing" fix.

The secret Pentagon memo doesn't put it quite that way. While it notes that Japanese MITI officials believed "that there was no malicious intent on behalf of this major trading company," the memo then goes to the heart of the matter: "C. Itoh failed to inspect the merchandise itself, even though it acted as the formal exporter."

And instead of describing any voluntary action by the company, the secret memo refers to three actions to be taken "against C. Itoh" by the Japanese government after "extensive confidential negotiations."

The first penalty: "After administering a 'heavy warning' and a public reprimand, MITI will prohibit exportation of all machine tools to (Soviet bloc) countries for three months."

The second: "C. Itoh will be instructed to reform its internal procedures or face further punishment."

The third: "C. Itoh will be required to report" detailed information on any machine-tool exports during the three months' ban.

"C. Itoh is one of Japan's largest trading companies," the memo notes, "and even a short ban involves very large amounts of money. ... The important factor here is not the amount of money, but the social disgrace involved when C. Itoh becomes only the fourth offender in Japanese corporate history to have administrative sanctions applied to it."

The secret May 8 memo states that the punitive actions against Toshiba and C. Itoh would be "announced unilaterally" by the Japanese government the following Friday. The announcement was, in fact, made in Tokyo on May 15.

MINI-EDITORIAL — Poor Harvard! The nation's oldest university was mightily embarrassed when the undergraduate newspaper disclosed that the Kennedy School of Government had offered glitzy titles usually reserved for distinguished academics to a wealthy Texas couple in exchange for a $500,000 donation. The silver lining is that a young staff aide told the pure truth in a memo, reporting that the Texas wife asked what was "the most prestigious title she can get for $250K." So between the memo writer and the student newspaper, veritas still lives at Harvard, despite the worst efforts of greedy officials and cynical social climbers.

EVANS & NOVAK

It's not called tax hike, but hang onto wallet

WASHINGTON — Although Republicans delayed the deficit-reduction package until assured it would not raise income tax rates, they overlooked a scheme to jolt the unsuspecting American taxpayer through the back door.

To reach $9 billion in unspecified revenue boosts, Congress may approve a new Medicare tax of 1.45 percent on everybody's gross income in excess of $43,800. Because this is part of the Social Security payroll levy rather than the income tax, it technically would not violate President Reagan's anti-tax hike pledge.

It would do much more. Besides burdening middle- to upper-income taxpayers and independent businessmen in a fragile economy, it would rewrite policy. A new device for taxing wealth and redistributing income would be in place. The insurance fig leaf for Social Security would be stripped away. The compact of 1986, which sacrificed tax preferences for the 28 percent top marginal tax rate, would be shattered.

The game plan has been for the tax to go on the books without hearings, without a specific roll-call vote in committee or on the floor and with little debate. Even before the Oct. 19 stock market plunge reversed President Reagan's anti-tax increase stand, the backdoor tax had been approved by the Senate Finance Committee without raising attention and was crawling toward session-end passage. While predictably not the only unpleasant surprise finally resulting from the budget negotiations, it would be the most egregious.

Rowland Evans and Robert Novak

During tedious weeks of deficit talks, only the bottom-line tax take — no details — was discussed. Even late last week when Republicans insisted on a bar against income-tax hikes, nobody locked the back door. Treasury Secretary James A. Baker III and bipartisan leaders of congressional tax-writing committees will sit down after Thanksgiving and specify higher taxes, perhaps including the Medicare levy, without violating the agreement governing the budget summit.

Until now, there has been hardly any discussion of the Finance Committee's remarkable backdoor tax. It is described not as a tax but as an innocuous lifting of the cap or income limit — $43,800 this year, $45,000 in 1988 — on the 1.45 percent Medicare share of the Social Security tax.

In plain language, all earned income — not diluted by any deductions — will be taxed at 1.45 percent to infinity. The businessman must pay an equal percentage for employees. For the self-employed, the rate is doubled to 2.9 percent.

It is at once a taxer's bonanza and Pandora's box. The estimated revenue return of $2.2 billion is for the first year only, when its effect is only partial. That rises to more than $6 billion the next year, but that's just the start. Why only 1.45 percent? Why, in time, not the whole 7.65 percent Social Security tax?

Here is the back door to Speaker Jim Wright's stubborn efforts to prevent the 28 percent tax scheduled for Jan. 1. That rate, in an intuitive stroke of genius by then Finance chairman Bob Packwood, saved tax reform in 1986 as a tradeoff for ending preferences. Since the backdoor tax means an effective marginal rate of at least 29.5 percent, does Sen. Packwood's support constitute a breach of faith with the tax reform compact? "No," he told us, "this is means-testing for Medicare."

But the taxpayer is scarcely assuaged simply because the tax is not considered a tax (since its proceeds, while counted as deficit reduction, are earmarked for Medicare instead of the general fund). Even considered "means-testing," this abandons the insurance concept for Social Security. Rep. Claude Pepper, that dogged champion of the aged, has his eyes on this new bonanaza to finance catastrophic health care.

Matching the audacity of this effort has been the passivity of the administration. As Finance Committee Democrats and a few Republicans approved a tax bill without specifically voting on the backdoor scheme, the Treasury was silent. Sen. Malcolm Wallop, trying a counterattack inside the committee, received no help from downtown.

We sought but failed to get a simple statement from the Treasury, for or against the tax. We finally learned the administration does not like it and hopes it is not in the final version. But this is an administration that has taken to swallowing much that it does not like. The absence of a presidential promise to veto backdoor breaching of the 28 percent tax rate is ominous.

It is also curious. Jim Baker refused pleas for a lowered capital gains rate that would yield more revenue and reassure markets, partly because it would reopen the Internal Revenue Code decisions of 1986. But the Treasury has yet to protest against the grand scheme to tax Americans through the back door.

Senators who hung Bork lied to constituents

Those senators who, heeding the orders of the far left, joined the howling mob which castrated and lynched judge Robert Bork's character are now mailing out pious letters explaining to their constituents why they voted against his confirmation.

Charley Reese

And they are lying through their teeth. I can prove they are lying simply by explaining the technique used in this particular character assassination plot.

In American law, there are three levels of courts. The lowest level is the trial court whose job it is to determine the facts of a case. When a man is tried for murder, for example, the trial court, taking the law as it is, attempts to determine if this particular individual in this particular set of circumstances violated that law.

The other two levels are appeals courts. Now the job of an appellate court is not to determine the facts of a case but merely to determine if the lower court, in its procedure, followed the law and the appropriate rules.

Thus, if an appellate court overturns a criminal conviction, it is not saying that the defendant is innocent. It is merely saying that the trial court violated some law or rule, or allowed some violation of law into evidence, and that the defendant is entitled to another trial according to the laws and rules.

Judge Bork has never been a trial judge. He is an appellate judge and the rulings he made and the scholarly articles he wrote all pertained to procedural or legalistic matters, not to the facts of any of the particular cases.

For example, when Judge Bork ruled that the OSHA could enter into an agreement with an industry that allowed that industry to either transfer women working in a dangerous area or require that they be sterilized, he was merely ruling that the law, as written by Congress, allowed OSHA to enter into such agreements. His ruling contained no comment whatsoever on whether OSHA should or shouldn't have entered into that agreement — merely that the law, as written, allowed it to do so.

The demagogues, of course, told the people Bork favored allowing industry to require women to be sterilized which is a flat lie. The fact is the Congress, in writing the laws, allowed OSHA to enter into such an agreement.

When Bork criticized a federal court for nullifying a Connecticutt statute which made it a crime for a married couple to use contraceptives, he was not in any way at all expressing approval of the statute. He was merely pointing out that there was nothing in the Constitution which would authorize a federal court to nullify that state law no matter how nutty it might be.

The demagogues, of course, tried to create the impression that Bork approved of government interference into the private lives of married couples. That, too, of course, is a flat lie.

Now most of these senators are themselves lawyers and they know perfectly well what I just told you — that appellate rulings and scholarly articles are directed at procedures and at whether the court followed or didn't follow the law and the proper procedures, not at the facts of the case.

That's why they are lying when they tell their constituents they couldn't vote for Bork because he favored government interference in private affairs or showed no regard for individual rights or liberties. There was nothing in Judge Bork's record or testimony to support that charge and they damn well know it.

These senators are guilty of two offenses. One is their unjust character assassination of Bork. The second is their premeditated, cold-blooded attempt to deceive their own constituents.

Both are retiring offenses.

'Pancho Claus' center of feud between GI groups over parade

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — Pancho Claus, Santa's legendary cousin from south of the border, is about to land in the middle of a yuletide feud.

The fracas is between two factions of the local American GI Forum, the benevolent Hispanic veterans organization that has been raising funds with Pancho Claus' help to make Christmas a little brighter for the city's poor children.

The latest battle over rights to have a parade in Pancho Claus' name started in August, when exiled GI Forum members filed a $2 million lawsuit against the organization, claiming illegal regional elections were held so a faction could win control of lucrative state and city-funded programs.

The war now has come to a head — one organization has city permission to have a Pancho Claus parade this Saturday, and another group is asking the city for a permit to have another parade Dec. 12.

Those planning the Dec. 12 parade Monday filed a lawsuit in state district court Monday asking for a temporary restraining order to stop the sponsors of Saturday's parade from using Pancho Claus as its theme.

At stake, though, is more than a name and a legend. Those on both sides of the fight say the Pancho Claus name means thousands of dollars in donations for those who collect the money to distribute food and toys to the city's poor.

At stake, though, is more than a name and a legend. Those on both sides of the fight say the Pancho Claus name means thousands of dollars in donations for those who collect the money to distribute food and toys to the city's poor.

"But who ultimately loses are the children and their families which the donations are supposed to be going to," said Ted Lee, the attorney representing the GI Forum.

In August, Daniel Ramos, Jesse Oviedo and other plaintiffs — all members of the Central Men's GI Forum chapter — filed suit against the American GI Forum of Texas and its regional and state leadership, asking for $2 million in damages they say they suffered by being kicked out of the organization.

That suit centers on the 1986 elections of the GI Forum's regional officers in which two other GI Forum chapters — the Miguel Hernandez Men's and Alamo Men's — gained control from the Central Men's chapter of the veteran outreach program and Project SER, a jobs training and placement assistance program, both of which receive state and city funds.

In losing control of those programs and the Pancho Claus project, the Central Men's chapter protested to the Forum's state leadership, but the Central Men's leaders were ousted from the organization, Ramos and co-plaintiffs charge.

They then filed the lawsuit claiming the $2 million in damages and that the disenfranchisement of the Central Men's chapter is null and void. No action has been taken or court date set in that lawsuit.

But a second fight over rights to the Pancho Claus name and story erupted when Ramos and the Central Men's chapter, which no longer is sanctioned by the Forum, won the support of Lou Rojas, the man who claims to own a copyright of the Pancho Claus name and legend.

In the lawsuit filed Monday, Rojas claims he was granted a copyright in June 1985 protecting a book he wrote called "The Legend of Pancho Claus."

But Mike Hernandez of the Miguel Hernandez chapter and a member of the Pancho Claus board that is having the parade Saturday, said Rojas never heard of Pancho Claus until Raul Sanchez brought the idea to San Antonio from Lubbock.

Sanchez has been playing the role of Pancho Claus since it began in San Antonio five years ago and plans to participate in Saturday's parade.

"For Lou Rojas to say he created Pancho Claus is a bunch of bull," Hernandez said.

Hernandez claims Rojas only created a Pancho Claus coloring book. Lee said Rojas owns a copyright only for the coloring book, not the character or story behind the legend.

Residents withdraw demand to paper

AMARILLO (AP) — A group of Panhandle business and civic leaders calling for more positive coverage in the city's daily newspaper have backed off an earlier demand that the Amarillo Globe-News' ownership be changed.

Following a Monday night rally to garner support for Panhandle Citizens for a Better Amarillo Newspaper, chairman Paul Engler said he was told the group was wasting its time pushing for a change of ownership.

He declined to say who told him that, however.

At the rally, attended by more than 1,500 people, residents waved flags and chanted "we deserve better" as several speakers lambasted the Globe-News coverage and its owner, Georgia-based Morris Communications Inc.

"The Globe-News is nationally known for its shabby journalism," said Engler.

But Globe-News Executive Editor Garet von Netzer said later that "I think it's interesting that in the criticism that I've heard of our newspaper, none has been directed at the accuracy of material run."

"If it offends people for us to report the news because some of that news seems negative, then it's basically the type of thing that newspaper journalism has had to contend with throughout its history," he said.

The group — consisting of 18 Panhandle mayors and business leaders — was formed after a series of articles about the nearby town of Hereford and strained relations between whites and Hispanics. Residents claimed the series cast an unfavorable light on their community.

"We're sorry if people in Hereford were offended by the series of articles that were run. However, they needed to be run," von Netzer said. "If we hadn't considered them to be important enough to run, despite the controversy that might ensue, we wouldn't have run them."

He noted that the newspaper has offered some concessions to PCBAN, including a reader representative program and an editor's forum designed to gauge community sentiments.

That was among a list of seven changes called for by PCBAN at the rally. PCBAN also called for the newspaper to "make a dedicated and honest commitment to journalistic excellence," to apologize to Hereford and to allow an advisory board to write a monthly column detailing "the progress or lack of progress in efforts to build a better newspaper."

The group also wants the Globe-News to survey its readers to determine how to serve the community, to have the newspaper's management meet with leaders of Panhandle towns to hear their views on issues affecting their communities and public assurances from its owners that the newspaper will follow the group's proposals.

Von Netzer said he could comment only on the apology issue because the other demands were "so vague."

Oilman and corporate raider T. Boone Pickens attended an earlier meeting of the group and has lent resources of his Mesa Petroleum Co., but did not attend the rally.

PCBAN has called for subscription cancellations and withholding of advertising on Tuesdays, beginning today. Engler said he did not know how much advertising had been pulled.

People at the rally said the newspaper's coverage of issues was negatively slanted and that local topics were not given enough play.

"We don't care what goes on in the outside world — we've got three networks and (Cable News Network) for that," said Arthur Ware of Amarillo.

But von Netzer said, "I find it rather shocking that people in this or any community would go to such lengths to organize to suppress their own freedoms to be informed of all sides of the issues."

Not everyone at the meeting was opposed to the Globe-News. Jerry Black of Amarillo circulated through the crowd wearing a sandwich board which read, "Globe-News as is OK."

"I think (the newspaper) is fair," he said, adding he attended the rally because he though the publication was "being kind of butchered out there."

School apologizes for skit viewed as racist

PLANO (AP) — School officials apologized Monday for a pep-rally skit that featured three students dressed in black trash bags with huge red lips to portray students from a mostly black high school.

"We are truly sorry for the particular hurtful event, but we believe that from this event all of us can work together to improve not only our schools but also our community," Plano Independent School District Superintendent H. Wayne Hendrick said in a statement.

The three characters in the Friday skit were identified as representing students of Roosevelt High School, a predominantly black school in Dallas which Plano defeated in a playoff football game Friday night.

"The first thing I thought of was, 'Well I guess this is how Plano sees most blacks, with big lips and running around acting stupid,'" said Dexter Lee, a Plano senior who is black.

Black parents concerned about the skit had asked for the replacement of cheerleader sponsor Carolyn Rodman, reprimands of Rodman and Plano Senior High School principal Doyle Dean and a public assembly to apologize to Plano and Roosevelt students.

School officials met with the parents Sunday and Monday, said spokesman Blake Murray.

Although the statement did not address the first two demands, Murray said he believed all concerns raised in Monday's meetings were answered. He declined to elaborate.

Hendrick said Dean would write a letter of apology to Roosevelt High School and student assemblies would be held Tuesday to publicly apologize for the skits.

He said pep rallies in the future will be under the direct supervision of the principal or assistant principal.

Dean said Sunday that he and Ms. Rodman knew the pep rally would include a skit, but were not aware of its racial overtones.

"The cheerleader sponsor will be much more careful about that in the future, and I will be much more careful, too," he said.

Of the school's 2,700 students, 35 to 40 are black, Dean said. He said the skit was offensive to black and white students alike.

"It was perceived as something by our student body and staff as being in poor taste and inappropriate and something that should not have been done," he said.

Hendrick said after the Thanksgiving holidays a a task force will be appointed composed of minority parents, students and teachers among others to study ways to ensure school activities are sensitive to all races and cultures.

Doctor says some AIDS patients going blind

AUSTIN (AP) — Many AIDS patients are going blind before they die, according to an ophthalmology professor who says a virus that can go unnoticed in healthy people is leaving some AIDS sufferers sightless.

"An eye disorder may be the first sign that AIDS has begun in a patient infected with the human immunodeficiency virus," Dr. Gary Cowan said Monday. "Diagnosis is further complicated by the fact that the eye disease symptoms may mimic those caused by other diseases."

Cowan is a physician, retinal specialist and assistant professor of ophthalmology at the University of Texas Health Science Center in San Antonio. He said said eye problems associated with AIDS are so new that many doctors do not consider the possibility of AIDS in their diagnoses.

"We now have a significant number of patients who are going blind a long time before they die," he said. "So, their quality of life is further diminished."

During a recent fellowship at the Jules Stein Eye Institute at the University of California, Los Angeles, Cowan saw many AIDS patients with eye problems.

He said eye disorders in patients with acquired immune deficiency syndrome, which cripples the immune system, often stem from organisms that would cause only mild, temporary symptoms in people with healthy immune systems.

The main infection involved is called cytomegalovirus, or CMV. In healthy individuals, Cowan said, CMV might remain dormant or cause no more illness than the symptoms of a bad cold. In AIDS patients, however, it can cause retinitis, which can lead to blindness.

Prior to the spread of AIDS, "these infections were seen only in transplant patients whose immune systems were compromised by the drugs they were taking to prevent organ rejection," Cowan said.

Dr. Ken Blair, an Austin physician who has treated many AIDS patients, said he has had patients whose vision was threatened by cytomegalovirus. He said the disease also complicated their treatment with AZT, or azidothymidine.

AZT is the only federally approved drug for AIDS patients. It has helped prolong the lives of some patients, but it is not a cure. He said some of his patients have been willing to accept going blind rather than stopping treatment with AZT.

"People always say that if they get AIDS, they'll just go ahead and check out," Blair said. "But you never know what you'd do unless you're in those shoes. Even blindness gets pretty philosophical. Each day is a precious commodity."

Groups say water quality could be reduced

By STEVE LEVINE
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Five environmental groups today plan to confront top Texas Water Commission officials whom they claim "cratered" to would-be water polluters in a move that could reduce the water quality of 64,000 miles of Texas' cleanest streams.

A spokesman for the commission denies the charge of politicking and says the environmental groups are overstating the possible effect.

Representatives of the Lone Star Chapter of the Sierra Club and four other groups said Monday that "high officials within the Water Commission" ignored its technical staff's stiffer recommendations in proposing water quality standards for 64,000 miles of unclassified streams across the state. Unclassified streams are generally smaller, more-rural bodies of water which the commission does not monitor as closely as it does the 16,000 miles of classified streams.

Several commission staff samples show that about 65 percent of the unclassified streams have a dissolved oxygen content of 5 miligrams per liter or better, meaning they are naturally "comparable to the best situations unaltered by man" and can support a wide array of acquatic fish and plant life. Dissolved oxygen content is a measure of the pollution in a stream.

However, in suggested revisions to the state's Surface Water Quality Standards, the commission proposes to keep the minimum dissolved oxygen level for these streams at 3 miligrams per liter. "A lower dissolved oxygen standard for a stream would translate into a lower quality or a greater volume of wastewater discharges being allowed in that stream, with obvious impacts on fish and aquatic life," said Ken Kramer, Sierra Club lobbyist.

"What seems to be happening is that some high officials in the Water Commission are cratering to intense political pressure, especially from many of the major municipalities around the state of Texas, who are concerned that if the standards are set high — even to reflect naturally occuring conditions — that they're going to incur greater costs for wastewater treatment in these streams," Kramer said.

Water Commission spokesman Bill Colbert denied Kramer's charges that the Texas Municipal League has been using its political muscle to reduce the standards. "I haven't seen a legion of TML officials up here hawking the halls, leaning on Water Commission staffers to set lower standards," he said.

Colbert added that the 3-miligram-per-liter standard is a minimum level and that the commission would consider setting tougher ratings during hearings on individual wastewater permit requests if the staff recommendations show such standards are called for.

A statewide hearing on the proposed changes to the Surface Water Quality Standards began at 9 a.m. today in Austin.

Prosecutors compare Moody's actions to Humpty Dumpty

HOUSTON (AP) — Prosecutors in their final arguments compared Galveston insurance heir Shearn Moody Jr. to Humpty Dumpty.

"Mr. Moody sat on the wall," Assistant U.S. Attorney Mitch Lansden said Monday. "He could have done good things with the money; instead, he fell off the wall. He used that money for his own crusade."

Jury deliberations in the trial of Moody, accused of improperly funneling grants from the Moody Foundation, were expected to resume today.

Deliberations began Monday afternoon after final arguments that capped six weeks of testimony.

Defense attorneys contend Moody was duped by a con man, William R. Pabst, who is a fugitive on the charges.

Moody was ousted earlier this year as a Moody Foundation trustee. A 17-count indictment claims that nearly $1.5 million in grants that Moody funneled to different groups was then kicked back to pay Moody's mounting legal bills.

Co-defendant Howell Willis of Dallas is charged with helping Moody in the alleged scheme.

If convicted, Moody could be sentenced to as much as 85 years in prison and fined as much as $4.25 million.

Faulty light forces jet to turn back

HOUSTON (AP) — A faulty oil pressure warning light forced a Southwest Airlines jet en route to Dallas to turn back shortly after takeoff from Hobby Airport, airline officials said.

Shortly after Southwest Flight 4 departed before 7:30 a.m. Monday, an oil pressure warning light indicated there was trouble in the engine, Houston Aviation Department spokesman Bill Ainsworth said.

The jet, carrying 105 passengers and five crew members, returned to Hobby and landed at 7:30 a.m.

"The problem was corrected very quickly and the airplane was put back in service," Ainsworth said. "It was apparently very minor."

Southwest spokeswoman Charlotte Goddard said the warning light itself was the problem, not the engine.

WEATHER SUMMARY

Forecast for 8 AM Wednesday

Cooler days anticipated

From Staff and Wire Reports

Slightly cooler temperatures have been forecast for the Midland area by the National Weather Service at Midland International Airport. Tonight, skies are expected to become cloudy with a 20 percent chance of thunderstorms. The low should reach the upper 30s with north winds at 10 to 20 mph.

Wednesday's forecast calls for partly cloudy skies with the high reaching the mid-50s. Winds could shift slightly and blow from the northeast at 10 to 15 mph.

A chance of rain remains for Thanksgiving Day with the low predicted in the lower 30s and the high expected near 60.

Monday's high of 76 was eight degrees below the record high of 84 set for that date in 1965. The record low of 45 for today was 35 degrees above the record low set for this date in 1938.

STATE

Moist air from the Gulf of Mexico flowing over Texas brought low clouds and thick fog across much of the state early this morning as forecasters called for showers and thunderstorms later today.

Patches of fog reduced visibilities to five miles and less in many areas, the National Weather Service said. Western sections of the High Plains and Trans-Pecos had relatively dry air, but high-level clouds covered those sections.

Southerly winds at 5 to 15 mph breezed most of the state except in the Big Bend where light and variable winds prevailed.

Early morning temperatures were in the 40s in the Panhandle and 30s in the mountains of the Big Bend, while readings in the High Plains and elsewhere in the Trans-Pecos were in the 50s. The rest of the state had temperatures in the 60s and 70s.

Extremes at 4 a.m. were 37 degrees at Marfa in the Davis Mountains to 74 degrees at the Naval Air Station in Corpus Christi.

NATION

Snow fell in Colorado and a Pacific cold front prompted snow alerts for the Northwest today. A separate cold front extended from the Great Lakes to west Texas.

The Midwestern cold front scattered rain from western Kentucky into Arkansas and from northern Oklahoma into southern and eastern Kansas.

Elsewhere, rain was scattered across Maine and southern New Hampshire while snow in the high country of northern Colorado was expected to pile up about 4 inches.

FORECAST

Tonight: Cloudy with a 20 percent chance of rain. The low should be in the upper 30s with north winds at 10 to 20 mph. Wednesday: Partly cloudy with the high in the mid-50s. Northeast winds will blow at 10-15 mph. Thanksgiving Day: Chance of rain continuing with the low in the lower 30s and the high expected to reach near 60.

Commissioners study plans to finance jail

By JULIE HILLRICHS
Staff Writer

Another in a series of steps toward resolving the Midland County Jail issue came Monday when the Commissioners Court studied estimates for financing a proposed $5 million law enforcement detention center.

Commissioners authorized the study — presented by First RepublicBank of Midland — two months ago. At that time, the court also employed Modular Jail Systems Inc. of Humble to design blue-prints for the one-story jail and office complex on the downtown South Superblock.

Characterizing the work as "unbiased and conservative," RepublicBank Executive Vice President Marvin Shiebout told commissioners that the county has five legal financing options from which to choose if jail construction plans receive the go-ahead.

Shiebout said that the bank investigated five financing alternatives, including the Texas Capital Access Program, a lease-purchase arrangement, an arrangement with an individual investor, general obligation bonds and certificates of obligation.

"We also looked at the advantages and disadvantages to each of those different financing alternatives," he said.

"Basically, we feel that we've prepared an unbiased look at the economics and at the financing alternatives that are available to the county," Shiebout said.

According to the study, a $10 million project financed over 14 years would cost the county about $643,000 per year, figured on the present tax rate.

Based on a "most likely" scenario, projected revenues from the proposed jail during first-year start-up operations in 1989 would not be sufficient to completely cover the combined costs of operating and financing the facility.

The study found that the total projected revenue short-fall in the first year would range from $456,191 to $771,441, depending on the type of financing used. That translates to a ad valorem tax levy for 1989 of 0.011 cents to 0.018 cents per $100 of property valuation, using 1987's assessed valuation of $4.2 billion.

Projected revenues during the second year of operation would be enough to either completely cover or almost cover combined projected operating and financing costs, the study said.

"We also looked at the advantages and disadvantages to each of those different (jail) financing alternatives. Basically, we feel that we've prepared an unbiased look at the economics and at the financing alternatives that are available to the county."

— Marvin Shiebout of First RepublicBank of Midland

If the total costs were to exceed revenues by as little as $5,700, a minimal tax levy would be required in 1990 — meaning the 1989 levy could be reduced. And if revenues during the first and second years were to break even or exceed the combined operating and financing costs, the county could actually lower taxes or build its surplus fund balance.

However, if revenue short-falls were to amount to $1 million in both the first and second years, the county would be forced to increase its tax levy by 2.0 to 2.5 cents per $100 of assessed valuation, according to the study.

Shiebout said use of more than 10 percent of the jail's capacity to house federal prisoners causes any proposed financing to be categorized under the Tax Act of 1986 as "private purpose" financing — which would have to be accomplished through issuance of taxable obligations instead of tax exempt obligations.

The maximum maturity should be limited to the 10- to 13-year range, he added.

Commissioners have proposed that the new jail be revenue-producing to help offset operating and financing costs. The plan under consideration is to produce the revenues by leasing space to U.S. Federal Marshalls, the U.S. Bureau of Prisons and the U.S. Immigration Service.

Officials say the county's 104-bed jail and the city's 20-bed jail are inadequate to house an increasing inmate population. Easing the overcrowding would cost the county $250,000 annually to transport prisoners to nearby counties.

Commissioners Durward Wright and Guy McCrary believe the proposed complex — comprised of a 192-bed jail, new sheriff's office and rehabilitation center — could be constructed for about $5 million.

The county is presently under a remedial order by the Texas Commission on Jail Standards to upgrade the condition of the existing jail, located on the courthouse's fifth floor.

Commissioners committed to a $1.5 million renovation project in April to correct state violations and build 19 additional cells. Construction should be complete next spring.

In other business Monday, commissioners heard an informal presentation from Western Corrections of Albuquerque, N.M. — builders of "podular" jail facilities.

Company spokesman James Parkey told the court his firm could build a 196-bed jail for less than $20,000 per bed or $3.8 million total.

"We can start in 90 days and finish in 12 months. We can have Texas Jail Commission preliminary approval of the plans in three weeks and we can have the facility certified on the day it's ready to occupy," he said.

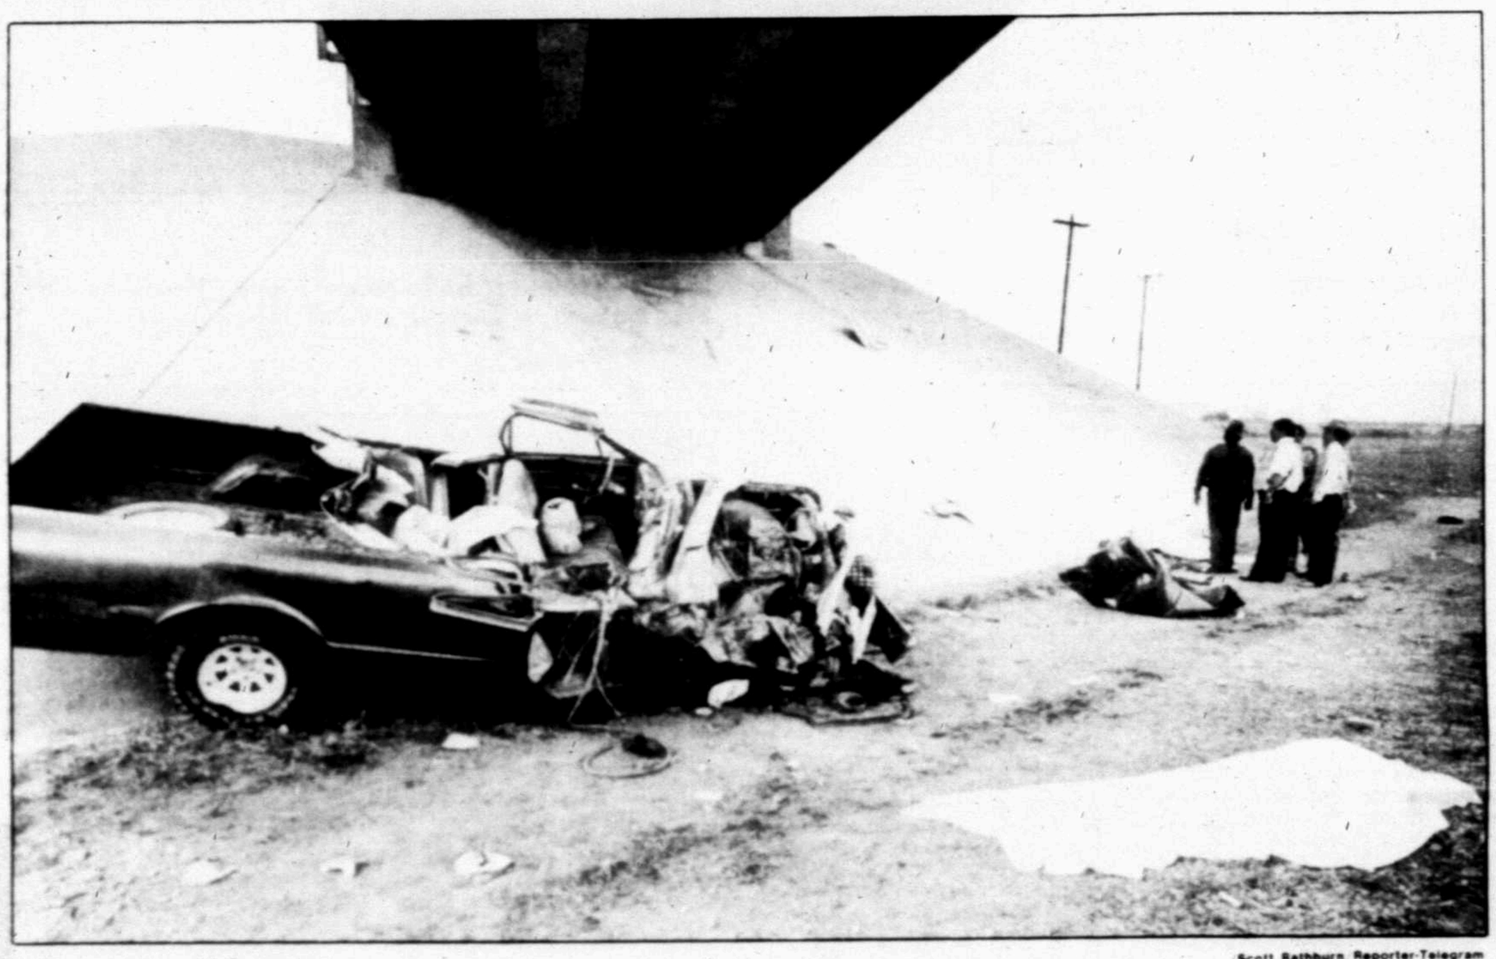

Parkey said jailers in a "podular" facility remotely watch prisoners in each "pod" as opposed to being in direct contact with inmates in a modular or linear jail.

Further, Parkey said the design of a facility — be it state, county or city — is determined by staffing. For example, if staffing slot requires 5.4 people per year and those people draw a salary of $18,000 per year each, then each slot costs $100,000.

"We think we are eminently capable of designing facilities for the problem of staffing," he said.

Preliminary plans for the $5 million modular jail call for the complex to be constructed of "boiler plate-type steel."

Future wings — to provide for a maximum 576 beds — would be built when the need for space warranted construction.

Car accident

Two Midlanders were among three persons killed Monday afternoon when this pickup truck ran off westbound Interstate 20, struck a concrete embankment and clipped the bottom of an overpass two miles east of Midland. Two persons were also injured, one seriously, in the 4:35 p.m. accident, the Department of Public Safety reported.

Odessa company receives contract from government

By FRANK TROMBLEY
Staff Writer

ODESSA — A government contract worth $50,000 is expected to generate another $50,000 in business for an Ector County medical equipment supply company.

Bill Ritter, founder and owner of Permian Medical Co., told those attending a news conference at the Greater Odessa Chamber of Commerce Monday that a government procurement workshop hosted earlier this year by U.S. Rep. Larry Combest prompted him to contact the Permian Basin Bid Center.

Ritter said Bid Center Director Debbie Underwood and Dave Thayer, former director, helped him submit a total of six bids to the federal government. "They were extremely helpful," in showing him how the bidding process worked, Ritter said.

Permian Medical received its first contract award Oct. 1.

"The contract is a one-year agreement with two one-year options" to supply respiratory devices that produce oxygen on site for homebound patients of the Veteran's Administration Hospital in Big Spring, Ritter said.

The contract service area, the Permian Medical Co. owner said, extends from Lamesa south to the Rio Grande, from Abilene to Van Horn and up into Lea County in New Mexico.

Ritter said the contract represents "new money" because the contract was previously held by a firm not located in the Midland-Odessa area.

"We expect to generate about the same amount in residuals through our other medical supplies," he said.

Combest, a Lubbock Republican, said the contract award to Permian Medical represents "a growing list of small businesses in the 19th District, from machine shop owners to implement dealers" who "demonstrate that we can compete for — and win — government contracts."

"It is encouraging to see several of my constitutents, like Bill Ritter, reaping the benefits from the Federal Procurement Workshop I held back in February," said Combest. "It's time West Texas began to get its fair share of procurement contract dollars."

Combest observed that "the Defense Department, for example, has the largest building authority in federal government.

More than 200 turtles among pets owned by two sisters

By SHERRI MOORE

CARTHAGE (AP) — Many of the 6,000-plus residents of this East Texas town became "turtle taxi drivers" once they found out that Lori and Heather McCrae kept the animals as pets.

When neighbors find a turtle crossing the road, instead of swearing and becoming anxious because they have to slow their pace, they pick up the unhurried pedestrians and give them a ride to the McCrae's house.

Residents here know that their easy-going friends will find a home with the more than 200 terrapins or box turtles that already have a home with the McCrae daughters.

One might call the McCrae household an East Texas menagerie. Beth and Richard McCrae, the girls' parents, breed cats, specializing in Siamese show cats. The family also has two dogs and a horse.

The two girls began their collection of terrapins more than three years ago and once the word got around, their collection began to grow.

"We started out with just a few and once the word got around, people started bringing every turtle they found to us," said Lori, the older sister. The girls also have six snapping turtles.

The girls soon found that if they were going to continue their collection, they would have to have a pen that could contain their friends. Their grandfather, Glenn Brooks, gave them a hand in constructing a three-section pen.

"We had to dig a trench and put tin down in it so they couldn't dig their way out," said sixth-grader Heather.

The girls agree that terrapins "are real neat to take care of because they don't require a lot of work."

The turtles eat lettuce, watermelon, cantaloupe, light bread, dog food and insects, the sisters said.

All is quiet now in Heather and Lori's "turtle neighborhood" because during the winter months, terrapins hibernate. "We put hay in the pens and they burrow under it. Then we put tin over the top and they sleep the whole winter," said Heather. "Sometimes we peek in to see what they are doing and they are all huddled together. They don't move or eat during the winter," she said.

Heather and Lori are hoping their collection will continue to grow toward the 300-mark. The girls depend on the turtles people bring to them and the ones they find or purchase to build their collection.

City offices, MISD to close for holiday

By JULIE HILLRICHS
Staff Writer

Midland's schools and government buildings will be closed Thursday and Friday in observance of the Thanksgiving holiday, representatives of those offices said today.

Midland city offices will be closed Thursday and Friday "except for the obvious," said Volunteer Coordinator Paul Tryson.

Tryson said police, fire and sanitation workers will be on call to handle emergencies and other mishaps. Administrative offices of the city will re-open at 8 a.m. Monday, he added.

Midland public schools will close today after classes, with classes resuming at their regularly scheduled hours Monday morning, said Midland Independent School District spokeswoman Darlene Hendricks.

Ms. Hendricks said buses today will run on schedule. The district's Athletic Ticket Office will be open until 5 p.m. Wednesday, she added.

Midland College will be closed from 5 p.m. Wednesday through 8 a.m. Monday, Public Relations Director H.A. Tuck, adding that Wednesday evening classes also are canceled.

Tuck said Chaparral Center will be open from 8 a.m. to 11 p.m. Friday and Saturday for the Tall City Boys High School Basketball Tournaent.

Midland County administrative offices — including the county library, extension building, courthouse and annex — will be closed through the weekend, spokeswoman Terry Lewis said.

However, the sheriff's deputies will be on call for emergencies Thursday and Friday, she said.

Stan Sartain, customer service manager for the U.S. Postal Service, said there will be no mail delivery Thursday, except for express mail and special delivery. Full service mail delivery will resume Friday, he said.

Offices of the Reporter-Telegram will be closed Thursday, but will re-open at 8 a.m. Friday, Publisher Charles Spence said.

Subscribers will receive their newspaper Thursday morning, instead of in the afternoon. Subscribers who fail to receive their Thursday morning newspaper should call the circulation department before 10 a.m. at 682-5311.

Midland Park Mall will be closed Thursday and re-open at 10 a.m. Friday, a mall spokeswoman said.

OPPORTUNITIES FOR VOLUNTEERS

Just because charity begins at home doesn't mean it should end there. The holiday season is here and not everyone will have the luxury of sharing these special moments with friends and family. It doesn't cost very much to give up a few hours of our time to help someone less fortunate. Almost anyone can afford it. Please think about it. Then resolve to do something about it. Contribute, in your way, to the causes you care about. If you do, the people you help won't be the only ones who will feel better.

The Volunteer Center of Midland has many volunteer opportunities available. If you have a special interest, we will do our very best to find the perfect job for you.

■ Clerical positions that include typing, filing, copying, answering telephones, and computer inputting.
■ Relief switchboard operator desperately needed during the noon lunch hours for an active office.
■ Volunteer coordinator needed for a very busy criminal justice office. This job would be an excellent opportunity to build your resume and shine!
■ Role models and mentors needed for children and single parent families. A few hours a week could be invaluable for these special children.
■ Share a talent and/or skill — teach ceramics, art lessons, sewing, calligraphy, dance and/or music lessons. Have fun while at the same time helping a cause.
■ Non-profit organizations are always in search of dedicated board members to volunteer for their agencies. Call the Volunteer Center and register for the Board Member Bank. Your expertise, time and efforts are appreciated.

SPECIAL OF THE WEEK: Your participation in the Dec. 1 Volunteer Fair that will be held at Claydesta from 11 a.m.-1 p.m., is appreciated. Come and shop the 35 non-profit organizations that will be represented and see where your services can be better utilized. FREE. The public is invited.

For more information on how you and/or your group or organization can become involved, give the Volunteer Center a call at 684-5866.

Man who stabbed worshippers charged

FORT WORTH (AP) — Police filed attempted murder charges against a man who is accused of stabbing five people during church services before he was critically wounded in a struggle with ushers.

The suspect, Pavel Dragonirescu, 28, remained in critical condition at John Peter Smith Hospital Monday. Two of the victims also remained hospitalized.

The charges were sent to the district attorney's office Monday, Fort Worth police Sgt. Paul Kratz said.

A parishioner who was late to Mass at St. Patrick's Cathedral Sunday said he was the first to be wounded in the scuffle.

Rudy Galvan, 55, who said he usually arrives 10 minutes late for Mass, said he stepped into the aisle after seeing an usher pursue a man with a bag, which Galvan mistakenly thought contained church funds.

"The usher said, 'This guy's creating a disturbance,' so I just sort of grabbed the man and said, 'Come on, let's go outside,'" Galvan said.

Galvan said he received a cut on the hand, for which he later sought treatment.

The man was wrestled to the floor of the cathedral and police said they believe he fell on the pocket knife used in the stabbings.

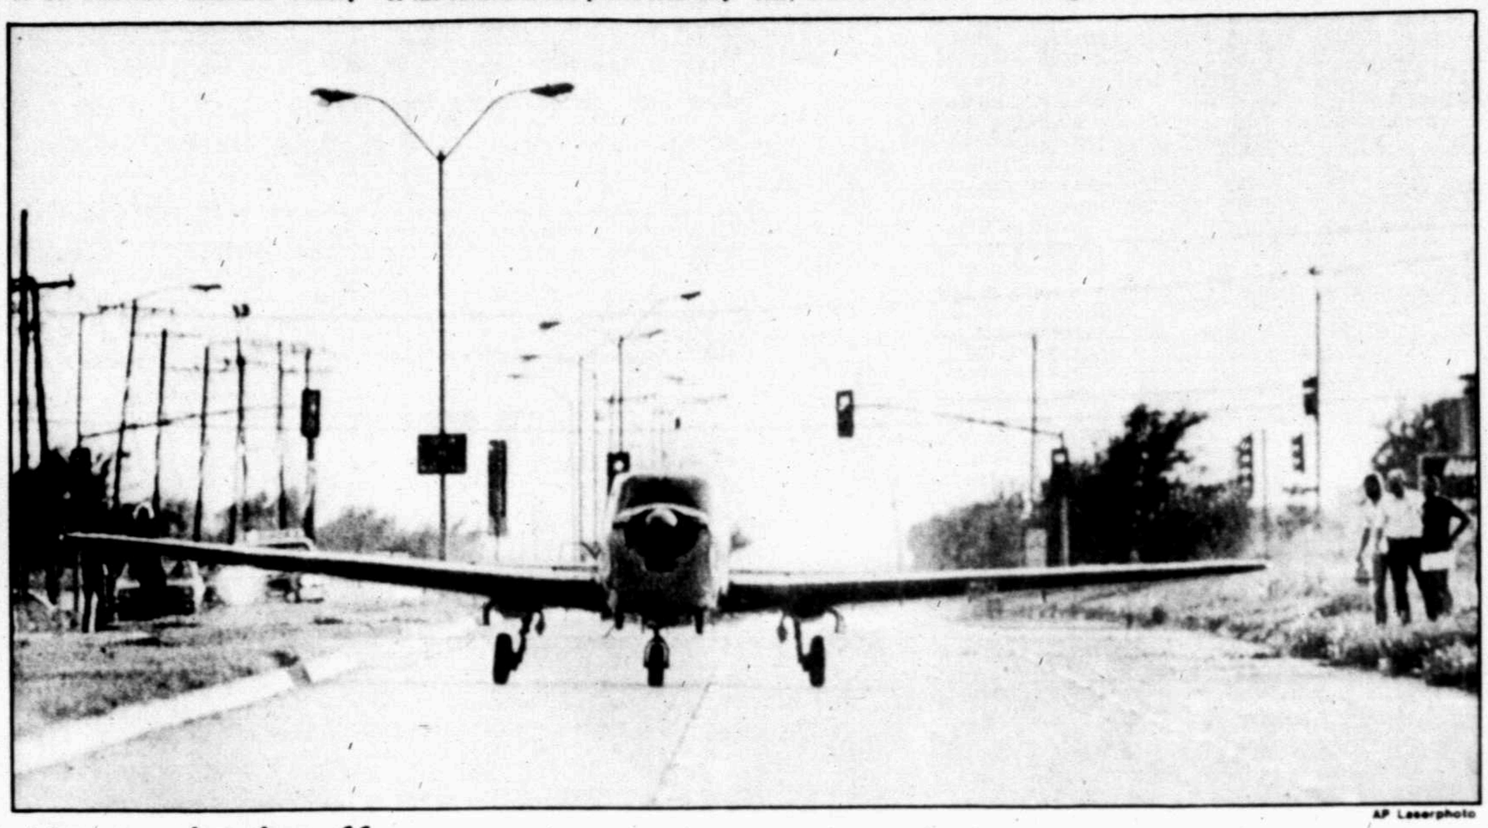

The Rev. Gonzalo Morales, who was conducting services, said a disheveled man arrived for the 8 a.m. service, the first of three morning Masses at the downtown church, which operates several programs for the homeless.

Shortly after the 11 a.m. Mass began, Morales said, the man stood and hurried up the middle aisle, carrying his bag and something concealed in paper.

The man was well known to officials at local shelters for the homeless, officers said. He was charged with assault last month and was a robbery victim on Nov. 4, police said, refusing to elaborate.

Usher John Sheedy, an 80-year-old former prizefighter who was stabbed in the rib cage, was in stable condition Monday, and David A. Yaniko, 54, who was wounded in the abdomen, was in good condition at Fort Worth Osteopathic Medical Center, said spokeswoman Tulisha Langford.

Felix Lozano, 45, was treated at Harris Hospital for an abdomen wound, while Galvan and an unidentified man were treated elsewhere for less serious cuts, officials said.

Ector commissioners OK contract for animal control

From Staff Reports

ODESSA — Ector County commissioners Monday approved a contract with the city of Odessa for operation of the countywide animal control program.

Under the contract, the city will assume responsibility for all areas of the animal control operation, including administration, maintenance of physical facilities and land, hiring of personnel and enforcement of all city, county and state laws pertaining to animals and fowl within the city and county.

The contract calls for the city to prepare an annual operational budget for the animal control program with the county agreeing to pay 36 percent and the city 64 percent.

Under the contract, the city will provide all primary insurance coverage and assume liability for any incidents that may arise from operation of the animal control program. The county has agreed to assume secondary responsibility "if such insurance is available," the agreement states.

The contract is expected to be considered by Odessa City Council members when they meet in regular session today. However, Bill Brown, the city's new city manager, has indicated he would like council members to delay final approval of the contract until he has had a chance to study the document. Brown assumed his new position Nov. 16.

The animal control program has been without a director since Dr. C.K. Jones resigned in August. The county has delayed filling the position pending contract negotiations with the city.

City officials have said current animal control program personnel employed by the county will have an opportunity to stay on in their jobs, but they will have to meet city personnel requirements.

Thanksgiving Day service planned

From Staff Reports

First Church of Christ, Scientist, 1001 W. Tennessee Ave., is offering a mid-week service of Thanksgiving to the community at 10:30 a.m. Thursday.

"Walk into the local Christian Science church this Thursday morning at 10:30 a.m., and you're likely to hear grateful accounts, thoughtfully shared, or modern-day healing," says a news release from the local church. "Visitors, who are welcome to join the local congregation at this special community Thanksgiving Service, will also discover that, to Christian Scientists, gratitude to God is best expressed in one's heart and life. And that spiritual healing is considered to be a natural part of God's blessings."

One part of the service will consist of readings from the Bible and the textbook of Christian Science, "Science and Health with Key to Scriptures," by church founder Mary Baker Eddy. The spontaneous sharing of accounts of healing and gratitude to God from the congregation make up the other.

The Lord's Prayer, silent prayer and hymns of praise are also an important part of this worship service.

Childcare will be provided during the hour service. The public is invited to attend.

Police hunt for robbery suspect

From Staff Reports

Midland police are searching for a man who allegedly walked into a local convenience store restroom Monday afternoon, emerged wearing a mask and robbed the store, reports said.

The 54-year-old clerk of the Kent convenience store, 3314 W. Loop 250, told police the man walked into the store about 2:25 p.m., then went to the restroom. When he came out he was wearing a brown plastic shopping bag on his head. He then produced a screwdriver and ordered the clerk to empty the cash register, she told police.

The man then ran out of the store, and headed north down an alley, reports said. The clerk was uninjured, police said.

The suspect, who escaped with $59 cash, was described as a white male in his 30s, 6 feet tall, weighing between 185 and 195 pounds. He had brown mixed with gray hair, was wearing a red and black flannel shirt and blue jeans.

Crime Stoppers seeks data about robbery of couple

This week, Crime Stoppers is asking the public for information about the robbery of a Midland couple on Halloween night.

At about 8:30 p.m., three suspects went to the west side home of the elderly couple. The suspects posed as trick-or-treaters and rang the doorbell. When the owner answered, he was forced to lie face down on the living room floor. One of the suspects then produced a small black revolver, and pointed it at the man's wife, investigators said.

The hands and feet of both victims were tied, and their heads were covered with blankets.

The suspects then threatened the woman and demanded her husband tell them where money was kept. After stealing some money, the suspects demanded keys to the victims' car. They then left the house with the money and car, a 1986 white Buick Park Avenue.

The suspects were described as two Hispanic men wearing dark clothing and a Hispanic female wearing a black bag over her head.

Crime Stoppers is offering a $1,000 cash reward, this week only, for information that leads to the arrest and indictment of the persons responsible for the robbery. Crime Stoppers in Midland can be reached at 694-TIPS, and in Odessa at 333-TIPS. Callers can remain anonymous.

CONTRACT—

"It takes more than just ships and jets to meet our military needs," Combest said. "It takes clothing, food, bedding, machine parts and thousands of other items than can be pursued by local business entrepeneurs."

Ms. Underwood, who succeeded Thayer as bid center director, said a total of 98 contracts worth about $5 million have been awarded to area firms since the Bid Center opened nearly two years ago.

The contracts "created or saved" about 68 jobs. The contracts have ranged from Permian Medical's contract for respiratory equipment and services to landscaping a military base and various machined parts for military service equipment.

Ritter, who started Permian Medical in Odessa in 1982 after eight years in hospital administrative work and opened a second location in Lubbock in 1985, says he plans to continue submitting bids on federal contracts.

The ceremony was followed by a reception hosted by the Midland High PTA.

Candy canes born 1670

Researchers give credit for the shape of candy canes — what would a Christmas tree be without some? — to the choirmaster of the cathedral in Cologne, Germany, who, in 1670, started handing out white canes to children who attended service.

The stripes on the canes came much later, about the turn of the century.

Freeze in men's fashion thawing

By JACK WILLIAMS
Copley News Service

Change in menswear traditionally moves like a glacier — oozing forward in the glare of summer, then stiffening to a standstill in the fall. The fashion freeze, you might call it. A time when only the most adventurous of style seekers dare break the ice.

Bill Robinson, an esteemed menswear designer who formerly toiled under the wings of Calvin Klein and Yves Saint Laurent, formerly regarded the scene with a bemused detachment.

"If we saw a new trend," he said, "we would expect it to be worn 10 years later.

"Menswear is still more conservative than women's, but I do think it is moving ahead much quicker than it did years ago. There is change. Each season people want something new, something a little different."

CNS Photo

Suiting up for business from Rodier Hommes includes a plaid jacket, navy and white stripe shirt and a navy and white dot tie.

ROBINSON, A New Yorker, concedes that the East Coast is more resistant to sartorial assertiveness than the West. "In New York," he said, "everyone wears black. It's more urbane. If you're out in the evening, to a sophisticated and slightly hip place, you'll see black, gray, navy or white. All solids. No prints. No colors.

"But in a hip restaurant in L.A., there's a lot of color, a splash."

Robinson, the first designer ever nominated for two Cutty Sark Awards (the Oscars in menswear), was voted Most Promising U.S. Designer by the Men's Fashion Association for his debut collection in '86.

While he doesn't speak for the industry per se, he is acutely sensitive to the pace and direction of menswear, especially as it applies to the 25-to-45-year-old consumer who dares to be different.

Like many of today's successful designers, Robinson favors "very classic themes with modern interpretations."

AND LIKE Jhane Barnes, another designer on the edge of menswear evolution, Robinson is pushing a slightly altered silhouette for the fall.

"It's easier to change colors and fabrics," he conceded. "The hardest thing for a designer is to fool around with silhouettes. With men it's a difficult, slow process. When you get them used to slightly baggy khakis and all of a sudden introduce narrow-leg jersey pants, for example, it can be unnerving."

Nevertheless, Robinson is moving away from what he calls "big, oversized, bulky" looks and bold patterns and colors. The look: cleaner, sleeker, slimmer. And, in some instances, a monotone palette to go with it.

"When I designed narrow bottoms on dress slacks, some people were very scared. Now, a year and a half later, they're asking me to keep them narrow. All in all, it's a trend toward a cleaner, sleeker look. Not tight fitting, but not floppy and baggy. I love flat-front pants but pleats will be here for awhile — it's just a question of tapering the pant more toward the bottom, overall creating a slimmer look."

INDEED, THE young man of the '80s — if he's as fitness-oriented as the media suggest — needn't hide behind multiple layers and thick, bountiful fabrics.

"There's definitely movement to the fitted body," observed Robinson. "The fact that you can bring clothes closer to the body and not be totally ridiculous is evidence that there are enough guys out there pleased with the way they look.

"Ten to 15 years ago, not that many men in the age group that could afford better clothes were really in shape."

Barnes also will introduce a cleaner silhouette for the fall. Which is to say less oversized than in past seasons. But while her signature sweaters are trimmer and shorter, and while sport jackets will be sleekly fitted, the trousers are fuller.

A proud traditionalist on the other end of the menswear spectrum, Ralph Lauren, acknowledges the silhouette change with what he calls his Morgan line: a more pronounced shoulder, a gentle drape to the sleeve's head and a longer, slimmer shape to the jacket lapel.

YVES SAINT Laurent, on the other hand, sees the fall of '87 as a time for broad, fuller shoulders and new attention to detail. Shorter vents, for example, in a one-button, single-breasted sportcoat.

A theme common to many fall lines is the masculinity of clothing worn decades ago, evoking updated images of the '50s.

"If you look at a suit of the '50s and one of the '80s, they look very much the same, give or take a lapel measurement," acknowledges Luciano Franzoni, fashions relations director for Hart Schaffner & Marx Clothes.

"Yet the technological advances have allowed the suit to be much more supple and comfortable.

"If there is a single trend at which one can point a finger it is that fall 1987 will be remembered as a fabric-intensive season."

SOME CONSUMERS will be influenced this fall by TV role models, suggests Robinson. The big movers: Bill Cosby, Remington Steele, L.A. Law and Miami Vice.

"The Miami Vice thing (casual, baggy, heavily into pastels) set a lot of trends," said Robinson, "but the look goes back to early (Giorgio) Armani. In the late '70s, with 'American Gigolo,' you saw pastels and turned up collars, but even that took many years to reach the popular culture."

For his part, Robinson likes to put zippers on classic polo shirts, inverted pleats on trousers and tabs on suit jackets. One of his signatures is a cotton pique mock turtleneck — in both cotton and cashmere.

"There is still a tendency here," he said, "to look to Europe or Japan for innovation and high style, and to the U.S. for more traditional things.

New look in men's fashion is easy silhouette

By CINDY LaFAVRE YORKS
Hearst News Service

Imagine a smoking jacket in charcoal gray wool with buttons rather than a sash. Enter pleated, matching pants that echo the roominess of pajama bottoms. Mesh the two and you've captured the essence of the new easy silhouette in men's fashion.

Some designers are describing the new ease in sport and lounge apparel as a kind of softwear, but the look is anything but IBM compatible. Shoulders are bigger in jackets, pleats add volume to trousers, and shirts are oversized with unusual collar treatments.

This new look is impossible to ignore. The shape is relaxed, not sloppy, and recalls the styles popularized by Humphrey Bogart and other screen legends of the '30s and '40s.

FABRICS AND colors are anything but nostalgic, though. Look for knit suiting pioneered by tailors such as Gianni Versace. These suits are fashioned of cut-and-sew merino wool or bulkier, knitted wool.

Many of these jackets and pants are textured or ribbed; others drape the body. All are nearly wrinkle-free and travel well.

Terrell Swan, owner of a men's store in Houston, says the store has embraced the loose silhouette in its dress and sportswear offerings for the two years it's been open.

"I see this trend toward a revamping of tailoring as we know it to continue, but the look is definitely for the fashion-forward customer. You can wear these modern, contemporary garments for a casual look, yet not feel well-dressed."

Swan says it is tough to get this fashion look at a low price.

"Quality is really important in these kind of cuts," Swan said. "If everything baggy and oversized becomes the rage, everyone follows the trend no matter what price points they have. If the tailoring isn't there, it's not going to look right. Understanding the natural contour of a fabric in this shape is essential."

Swan says a man can find quality pants in the loose silhouette for as little as $75. Jackets in this shape run $130 and up. He says paying as much as $200 for the pants is "well worth it. You'll see the difference in cut and fabric and the way the garment hangs."

If you're not quite ready for the loosened silhouette, consider the draped lightweight twill and gabardine suits. Look for lightweight twill and gabardine garments that take on a draped appeal.

The most traditional option is the single-breasted jacket with single-button closures.

SINGLE-BREASTED suits with three-button treatments are also making a comeback this season. The color "gray-dations" range from deep charcoal to a muted dove gray.

Double-breasted offerings with six-and even eight-button closures round out fall's varied selection. Keep your eye on elasticized backs that nip the waist and emphasize the new stretch appeal in suiting.

Though gray dominates fall's color scheme, leaving last fall's navy in fashion limbo, brown, black and even loden green are making cases for themselves in more forward collections such as France's Marcel Fuks, Ronaldus Shamask and Cecilia Methany.

Accessories pave the way for color in a season dominated by gray, black and brown.

Ties, pocket squares and suspenders add a dash of color to white shirts and the season's monochromatic dressing.

Midland teens to compete for Miss Teen-USA

From Staff Reports

Two teens from the Permian Basin have been selected to compete in the Miss Texas Teen-USA Pageant in El Paso during the Thanksgiving holidays. Pageant festivities will begin Wednesday with the arrival of contestants, a Thanksgiving Dinner and party, and culminate Saturday at the Woodlands Grand Ballroom of the El Paso Airport Hilton with the final pageant competition.

The pageant will open with a 1950s rendition of the Parade of Cities featuring 79 contestants from throughout Texas. Midland contestants are Lori Michelle Pollard, Miss Midland Teen, and Leagha Sue Lockhart, Miss West Texas Teen. Christine Friedel of Odessa, Miss Ector County Teen, also will be competing.

Miss Pollard is the daughter of Michael and Glenda Pollard. Miss Lockhart is the daughter of Lyons and Mary Lockhart. Both contestants are seniors at Lee High School.

Miss Lockhart will be sponsored by Williams Aviation, Bill White New York Life, The Shop, Midland Physical Therapy, Dr. James Butler, Matney Shoebox, Salon One and Nails by Becca.

Contestants will compete in judges interviews, swimwear and evening gown categories. Ten semi-finalists will be named. From those ten, five finalists will be selected, one of whom will become Miss Teen-USA.

The winner of the annual state pageant will automatically advance to the Miss Teen-USA Pageant to be in July, which will be televised live via CBS Network.

The new Miss Texas Teen-USA will represent the Lone Star State throughout the year in personal and promotional appearances, as well as win numerous gifts and scholarships.

The reigning Miss Texas Teen-USA is Richelle Kesling of Spring. Master of Ceremonies will be Pat Haggarty of El Paso, television announcer for the Miss Texas-USA and the Miss California-USA Pageant telecasts. Courtney Gibbs, reigning Miss Texas-USA, will serve as Mistress of Ceremonies. Producers of the annual event are Guyrex Associates of El Paso.

Elegance suits men's style

By LUCRETIA STEIGER
Copley News Service

Elegance and personal style are the key words in fashions for men this fall. Consider these ideas from designers and manufacturers.

The newest suits evoke the suave and dashing masculine images of clothing worn decades ago, said Luciano Franzoni, fashion relations director for Hart Schaffner and Marx Clothes division. Natty double-breasted jackets and pleated trousers in subtle plaids and houndstooth checks are replacing the more casual styles of a year or two ago.

"The new attitude is more dressed up, but still relaxed with an array of separates that interchange effortlessly," said a spokesman for Claiborne for Men. Designed by Liz Claiborne, the fall collection focuses on comfortable, polished denims, tweeds and handknits in red, black and khaki. Pattern mixes in checks and plaids add a fresh emphasis.

In shirts, the oversize shape — a loose, blousy silhouette — is news, according to Mark Weber, president of Van Heusen Shirts. Weber notes chest dimensions of shirts have expanded from a traditional 45 inches to 51 inches to create a "super-scale, super-comfortable shirt that's more compatible with the freer lifestyle of the liberated male." New neutral shirt shades include khaki, tan and seafoam green.

"This season, the classic double-breasted suit with broad, fuller shoulders with a relaxed silhouette is most important," said Yves Saint Laurent of his fall menswear collection created in France.

Alexander Julian favors teal, saffron yellow, purple, berry red, emerald, ocean blue and winter white in sweaters.

'Fast-food fashion' lures small fries

By LUCRETIA STEIGER
Copley News Service

The baby wears a sleeper with a Campbell Soup logo, the toddler a sweatsuit decorated with McDonald's golden arches and the preschooler a "do the Oreo dunk" T-shirt.

Children are the targets of a new marriage of fast food and fashion.

Clothing for kids decorated with the familiar logos of national brands of cookies, candy and fast foods is either available in stores now or expected by early 1988.

A new collection of McKids clothes, for instance, decorated with the familiar McDonald's golden arches, is for sale in Sears stores and catalogs.

McDonald's and Sears decided that parallels in the ways they market their products could be successful in clothing for kids, according to McKids spokeswoman Kathleen Furore, and that Sears was the best place to sell the pint-size sportswear, nightclothes, shoes and accessories. (The clothing, sizes 0 through 7, will not be sold at McDonald's restaurants.)

But McKids clothes are just the first phase of the honeymoon.

Many familiar brands from the supermarket such as Oreo cookies, Life Savers candy, Barnum's Animal Crackers and Baby Ruth candy bars will show up on clothes for kids by 1988. Hawaiian Punch, Campbell Soup, Nestle, Hershey, Jell-o, Burger King and 7-Up plan to introduce clothes for children by 1988. The Campbell Soup collection will be sold in supermarkets, the others in such locations as Toys "R" Us, J.C. Penney and other stores.

The popularity of logo clothing is an extension of the T-shirt craze, according to apparel industry analyst Barry Bryant of Drexel Burnham Lambert, an investment banking firm in New York.

CNS Photo

New logo clothes for children are hot fashion items.

"It's all a variant of the T-shirt thing, T-shirts used as advertisements because they allow a person to say 'I am part of this, I have been to this place, I have done this thing.'

"People wear clothing with labels, words printed on them because they want to identify with something. My guess is that the desire of people wanting to dress in McDonald's things is limited. Any fashion trend is limited, but it could be popular for awhile."

Right now, most of the fast-food fashion for kids seems to be geared toward age 6 or younger, while Coca-Cola, the company that started the fast-food fashion connection two years ago with logo clothing for young adults, has moved on to clothes for older kids and is going international with all its clothing and accessories.

Coca-Cola's clothing success was based on the introduction of a whole line of clothing, "a whole statement of leisure," not just a T-shirt here or there, according to Allan Stone, chairman of Taft/Hamilton Group, the licensing representative of Coca-Cola and many other corporations.

Stone, who has closely followed the recent licensing explosion, says its roots extend back 60 years with Mickey Mouse. The first Mickey Mouse tablet appeared in 1929 and the first Mickey Mouse doll in 1930.

"Disney was the pioneer," Stone says. "First there were all the Mickey Mouse things, which still sell. Then designers such as Ralph Lauren, Yves Saint Laurent, Calvin Klein and Bill Blass made licensing a giant industry; $54 billion dollars in retail sales in 1986. Because of the success of Coca-Cola, many corporations are now expanding their horizons. I say there are the 3Ps of licensing: protection of legal rights, promotion and profit."

Royalties range from 6 percent to 10 percent of the net wholesale price of each item, Stone says, which can amount to millions. Coca-Cola, for instance, earned $100 million in retail sales of Coca-Cola clothes in 1986.

What will make the final difference in logo clothes, Stone says, is how well the corporations design, manufacture and market the items.

DEAR ABBY

Dad suggests maids wear something old

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: The other day, my wife and daughter and I were talking about our daughter's upcoming wedding. Since our daughter has a closetful of expensive dresses she's worn only once, I made what I thought was a very good suggestion: "Why not let all the girls you want in your wedding party just pick out the prettiest dress they have hanging in their closets and wear it? For those who don't have one or can't afford to buy one, let them borrow one of yours, or another friend's. Guys rent tuxedos for weddings; why should girls have to buy an expensive dress to wear only once? A lot of girls are left out of weddings because they can't afford to buy a dress."

Well, Abby, my suggestion went over like a lead balloon. What do you and your readers say? — PRACTICAL ALABAMA DADDY

DEAR DADDY: You are indeed practical, but if each bridesmaid were to wear the prettiest dress she found hanging in her closet, the bridal procession would look more like a garage-sale fashion show than a wedding.

Nice try, Dad, but I'm afraid your idea would never play in Birmingham, Montgomery or Tuscaloosa.

DEAR ABBY: I have a neighbor who used to be a good friend, but now he won't talk to me. This is why: My husband was diagnosed as having Alzheimer's disease about six months ago. His memory is very faulty and he has to be watched all the time, but there are times when he is quite all right, so I am keeping him home as long as I can.

Well, I do not drive, and my husband is not able to drive anymore, so I sold his car. This neighbor asked me several times to sell it to him, but I refused. Instead, I sold it to a man who does not live in our neighborhood because I was afraid that if my husband saw that car in our neighborhood he might insist it was his car and want it back.

I know I did the right thing, but the neighbor who wanted to buy it first is still not talking to me. Do you think I did the right thing or not? — HURT FEELINGS

DEAR HURT: I think you did exactly the right thing by selling the car to someone who did not live in your neighborhood. If you explained this to your neighbor and he still refuses to talk to you, shame on him.

DEAR ABBY: "Mrs. Whipple's" problem with her mother stealing toilet paper from motels brings to mind an incident that happened to my wife during a trip last year.

We stopped at a motel for the night and on leaving in the morning, my wife asked the manager for the address of the manufacturer of the excellent little coffee maker that was attached to the wall of our room.

"I can give you the address," he said, "but this would be much easier — and cheaper." Then he reached under his desk and brought out a screwdriver and handed it to my wife.

"Pry it off the wall and take it home," he said. "The one in your room is the only one that hasn't been stolen!"

Maybe he was just kidding, but he certainly didn't act like it. What do you think?'— VIRGIL IN BANDON, ORE.

DEAR VIRGIL: I think he was just kidding. Since you didn't take him up on it, we'll never know.

DEAR ABBY: You would be doing us cancer sufferers a great service if you would ask the media to eliminate the cause of death in their obituaries. I don't think it is really necessary to mention what a person died from. We who are afflicted with a death-threatening disease would be helped if we didn't read that "so-and-so" died after a long battle with cancer or heart failure. We are having a difficult enough time coping with the disease without hearing of people dying from it.

We are quite aware that thousands of people die of cancer every year. We also know that thousands of people have survived after a hard battle with cancer — which is what we cancer patients need to hear. We need to hear that there is hope, and eliminating the cause of death from obituaries and other news items would be a big help. — FIGHTING THAT BATTLE IN LONG ISLAND

DEAR FIGHTING: I'm on your side. Here's hoping "the media" — of which I am a part — take notice and heed.

AT WIT'S END

'Death of an Author' is next Broadway hit

By ERMA BOMBECK

Bombeck

Forget the brilliance of playwright Arthur Miller. Forget the pathos of his character, Willy Loman, in "Death of a Salesman."

The next tragedy to hit the Broadway stage is a little thing I've been working on called "Death of an Author." It's the story of what happens when Matthew, Mark, Luke and John hit the book trail to sell their Gospels in today's communication markets.

It all begins when their publisher invites them to attend the American Booksellers Convention in Washington in June to kick off their books. They are told to sit behind a desk and wait for the crowds to come up and shake their hands. The mob, however, seems to be congested around a booth featuring Vanna White.

"What is her book about?" asks Mark.

"Her life selling vowels," says the publicist.

There is a crowd at another booth where a life-sized inflatable of Bill Cosby is poised over his book. People are talking to it. Some even ask it if it minds if they take a picture of themselves with it.

The decision is made to send the four Apostles on the road. They share the "Tonight" show with Pee Wee Herman and Mamie Van Doren, who, if she doesn't write fiction, gives new meaning to the parable of the fallen woman. The appearance of the four Gospel writers is canceled when it is realized they aren't a singing group but four authors.

They talk about homosexuality among the clergy on Donahue, their abused childhood on Oprah and give intimate details of their fantasies on Sally Jessy Raphael.

They check into hotels where the toilet tissue is folded into triangles every time they leave the room, but only one bar of soap is provided and it is the size of a key ring.

They stir-fry cabbage and linguini on "Hour Magazine" and share the "Larry King Show" with Tip O'Neill. At the end of two weeks of one-nighters and book and author luncheons, they call their publisher and say they cannot continue this death march without a sign. By express mail they receive a copy of The New York Times book section. Their books are not on best-seller list.

They continue sitting in department and book stores inscribing books to "My dearest friend who inspired me" and asking them to spell their name. They miss planes, lose luggage, never have the right clothes for the right city and eat in airports. They arrive to large ads and crowds in bookstores in the Bible Belt and would have triumphed ... had their books been there too. Luke is asked to "capsule" his Christmas story to 30 seconds on "Live at Five."

In the last scene of the play, their agent comes to the footlights and makes an impassioned speech ... something like, "Matthew, Mark, Luke and John never made a lot of money. Their names were never in the paper, but they're human beings and a terrible thing is happening to them. So attention must be paid."

I wept as I was writing it.

Universal watchband attaches to any watch

Copley News Service

Every night before you go to bed you take off that watch you have had for years. Look at it. The watch itself is in great shape, but the band needs either professional help or a decent burial.

A universal ladies' watchband will set things right. Thin and elegant, this fine silver-tone band is composed of stretching stainless steel segments. Attach the watchband to just about any watch, since it's designed for a universal fit.

An $8 value, the attractive watchband will complement just about anything you wear, formal or informal. Its sturdy construction will give you plenty of time before you have to worry about yet another replacement.

Unless, of course, your watch gives up the ghost first. Then you'll just have to wait for "Freebies" to offer a watch! Just send 50 cents, postage and handling to Roussels, 107-700 Sylvia St., Arlington, Mass., 02174-5620. Ask for Ladies' watchband.

Airliner with leaky bathroom drops chunk of ice on house

FORT WORTH (AP) — A chunk of blue-green ice, apparently from a jetliner with a leaky bathroom, slammed into Gene Gordon's roof, breaking a light fixture and sending Sheetrock flakes cascading in the living room.

"It was loud," said Gordon, who was working in his backyard when the ice hit Sunday afternoon. "I had no idea what it was until I saw the hole in the roof," he said. The ice chunk shattered on impact, knocking an 8-by-16-inch hole in the roof.

Gordon, director of photography at the Fort Worth Star-Telegram, said his wife, Sybil, was in the living room watching television with their 3-week-old grandson.

Gordon said he called the Federal Aviation Administration's Southwest Regional Headquarters in Fort Worth and reported the incident.

Officials there said it would be difficult to trace the ice chunk to a single airline. Gordon's neighborhood is under a busy arrival route to Dallas-Fort Worth International Airport.

FAA spokesman Fred Farrar in Washington said few such incidents are reported. He said the ice probably formed when the drain valve on a toilet holding tank failed to close properly after it had been serviced on the ground. Ice forms as the plane reaches an altitude where the temperature is sub-freezing and then is dislodged by vibrations from the flaps and landing gear as the plane descends.

Man killed in robbery attempt

FORT WORTH (AP) — A shootout at a drive-in bank after an apparent robbery attempt left one man dead and an off-duty police officer wounded, police said Monday.

Fort Worth police officer J.L. Garrett was listed in good condition at John Peter Smith Hospital after surgery Monday, said Sgt. M. Krey. The identity of the dead man was not immediately released.

Garrett was working as a security guard at Meadowbrook National drive-in bank on Fort Worth's east side when the incident occurred shortly before 7 a.m., Krey said.

Krey said the dead man was believed to have been trying to rob the bank.

Garrett and another employee were opening the drive-through portion of the bank when they were accosted by the man, Krey said.

"Officer Garrett was able to unlock the door and pushed a female employee that was with him inside." A shootout then took place, he said.

NASA names crew operations head

HOUSTON (AP) — Donald R. Puddy was appointed director of flight crew operations at the Johnson Space Center effective immediately, officials announced Monday.

Puddy will replace George W.S. Abbey who is being reassigned as special assistant to center director Aaron Cohen.

Puddy has been on assignment at National Aeronautics and Space Administration headquarters in Washington since January serving as assistant associate administrator for space flight. He will report to JSC in the next few weeks after completing his assignments in Washington.

In the interim, Henry W. Hartsfield Jr., flight crew operation deputy director, will serve as acting director.

Puddy came to NASA in 1964 as flight controller monitoring the Apollo program.

Reagan issues disaster declarations

AUSTIN (AP) — President Reagan has issued a disaster declaration for five Texas counties that suffered damage in last week's tornadoes, Gov. Bill Clements announced Monday.

Counties covered by the declaration are Upshur, Shelby, Lee, Burleson and Panola. Also covered is the community of Whitehouse in Smith County.

Anderson and Cherokee counties were named in a disaster declaration last week.

Storm victims in the eight counties can apply for assistance through several state and federal programs.

The Governor's Office of Emergency Management will open disaster assistance centers in each county. The locations will be announced later this week, according to the governor's office.

Peso drop may hurt revenues

AUSTIN (AP) — The recent drop in value of the Mexican peso will hurt state and local tax revenues, according to Comptroller Bob Bullock.

But Bullock said Monday the total loss cannot be calculated until the exchange rate of the peso levels off.

"The most immediate impact of the peso devaluation will be a decline in retail sales along the border because of the reduced purchasing power of Mexican consumers," he said, adding that 7.3 percent of all Texas retail sales occur along the Texas-Mexico border.

Ruth Stone displays part of the collection of oddities she found while cleaning turkey gizzards over the past 30 years. Mrs. Stone began her collection while working at a turkey processing plant in Marlin. She would bring them home and her husband would mount them in boxes. She is scheduled to appear on the David Letterman Show tonight.

Woman who collects items turkeys swallow to be on 'Letterman'

MARLIN (AP) — A woman who for almost 30 years has collected turkey gizzards and the odd things that come out of them will get to talk about her bizarre hobby on the "Late Night With David Letterman" show.

Ruth Stone's unusual hobby got her a round-trip ticket Monday to New York to appear on the popular variety-talk show hosted by Letterman. Her appearance will be broadcast tonight.

Mrs. Stone used to clean and inspect gizzards while working at a turkey processing plant in Marlin. She noticed many of the gizzards contained an odd assortment of small objects.

"I even got a spark plug," Mrs. Stone said. "And things like rocks and marbles. Oh, and I got one dice out of it."

Mrs. Stone and David Letterman might never have crossed paths had it not been for a friendly cup of coffee she offered Brent Shehorn, 19, and his father one afternoon at her home.

The Shehorns immediately saw display boxes, built by Mrs. Stone's husband, filled with items that had been discovered in turkey gizzards: spark plugs, crucifixes, change, springs, water nozzles, glass, marbles and shiny rocks.

"We were just amazed with it," Brent Shehorn recalled. "When I saw them, the first thing I thought was, that was something David Letterman would have on his show."

Fans of the Letterman show know it is notorious for its off-beat humor, seen in such features as "Stupid Pet Tricks," "Top Ten Lists" and Letterman's irreverent treatment of celebrities.

Shehorn wrote Letterman about the "gizzard lady" last summer and was finally contacted about her appearance.

Mrs. Stone said the unique knickknacks lining the walls of her home are a big hit with visitors, who often express amazement. "They say, 'A turkey swallowed that?' And I say sure.

Bell will end year with fewer telephone lines

AUSTIN (AP) — Southwestern Bell will end the year with fewer Texas lines than it had on New Year's Day, a top company executive says.

The last time that happened was in 1932 when the nation was suffering through the Great Depression.

But Jim Adams, the phone firm's Texas president, also said Monday that a recent increase in business lines could be a harbinger of better economic times for the state.

Through October, Southwestern Bell recorded a net loss of 15,400 Texas lines, spokesman Dale Johnson said Monday. That included 37,000 fewer residential lines but 25,000 more business lines. Changes in total lines for some specialized services accounted for the net decrease of 15,400, he said.

The decrease amounts to less than 0.01 percent, he said. Southwestern Bell now has 6.3 million lines in Texas.

"It's just one more of many reflections of what we've been experiencing in the state of Texas. We've had some economic opportunities and challenges, I would call them," Adams said.

In 1986, the company had a net increase in Texas of 105,400 lines, including 94,100 residential lines, Johnson said.

The phone company's largest one-year increase in lines was in 1978, when the net increase was 296,700.

By comparison, Clovis McAllister, spokesman for General Telephone of the Southwest, said figures indicate his company will show an increase in total Texas lines this year, with 19,500 more lines through September.

Despite the overall loss, Adams said the 1987 numbers include potentially encouraging news for the Texas economy.

"In the last nine months there have been some positive gains in business lines. Residence lines haven't turned around yet, but generally the history has been that when there is a downturn the business lines lead the way back. If business lines improve, residence lines generally follow in six to nine months," Adams said.

"I think it reflects what we've been going through, not where we are, and what we have to go through in the future."

Rains hopes drive registers million new Texas voters

AUSTIN (AP) — Secretary of State Jack Rains and executives from several of Texas' largest employers on Monday announced a voter registration drive they hope will add a million names to the rolls.

"Texas lags behind Third World states like Oklahoma, Arkansas and Louisiana in the percentage of eligible voters who are registered," Rains said in a release.

Texas now has 7.34 million registered voters, 61 percent of the eligible voters. The national average is 68 percent.

The "Voter '88" drive includes a registration push in which employers will urge their employees and customers to sign up to vote in the "Super Tuesday" presidential primary in March. Rains was joined at a Monday news conference by officials from Southwestern Bell Telephone, 3M Corp., La Quinta Motor Inns, General Telephone of the Southwest, Houston Lighting & Power Co., and others.

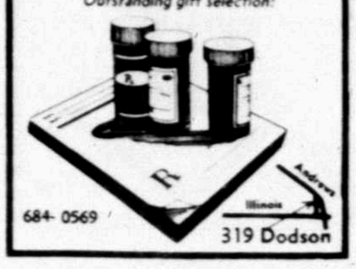

Rains said hotels and airlines will try to reach "Texans on the go" who are not registered to vote.

Memory Lane transfer tapes are great gifts

Ty and Terry Bowling would like to introduce you to the perfect gift for the approaching Christmas season. Memory Lane is rapidly building a reputation for quality and service in the Midland-Odessa area. In this day of specialization, Memory Lane has found it's niche.

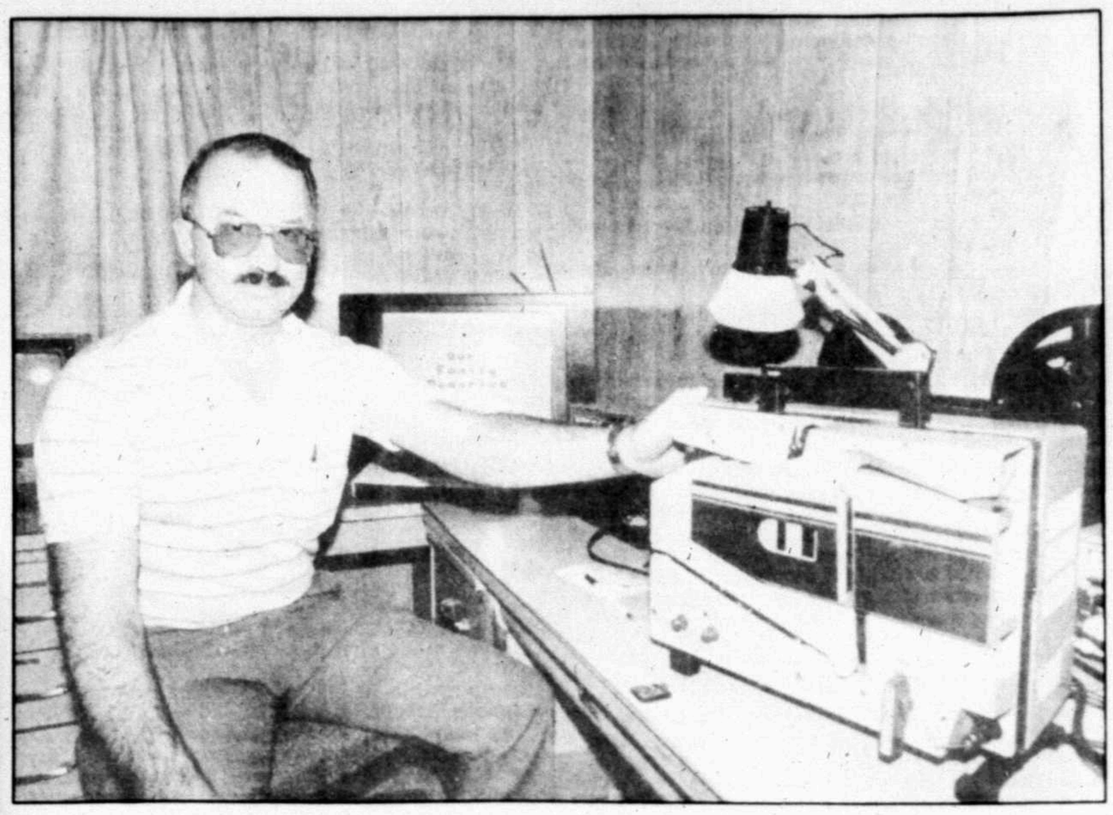

Memory Lane specializes in transferring your family home movies, slides and photograph presentations onto video tape using the latest state of the art equipment. No filming from screens or mirrors is involved in your film transfer to video. They can also handle video duplication needs, transfer of training and instructional films to video for schools, churches and businesses and can provide it in the Beta or VHS format.

Memory Lane can even transfer an existing soundtrack or add titles, music or narration to make it a complete movie, slide or photograph production. Ty and Terry urge you to do your Christmas shopping now to assure your order will be ready in time. Give your loved ones something they will cherish the rest of their lives. Memory Lane can make as many master tapes as you want from the same film!

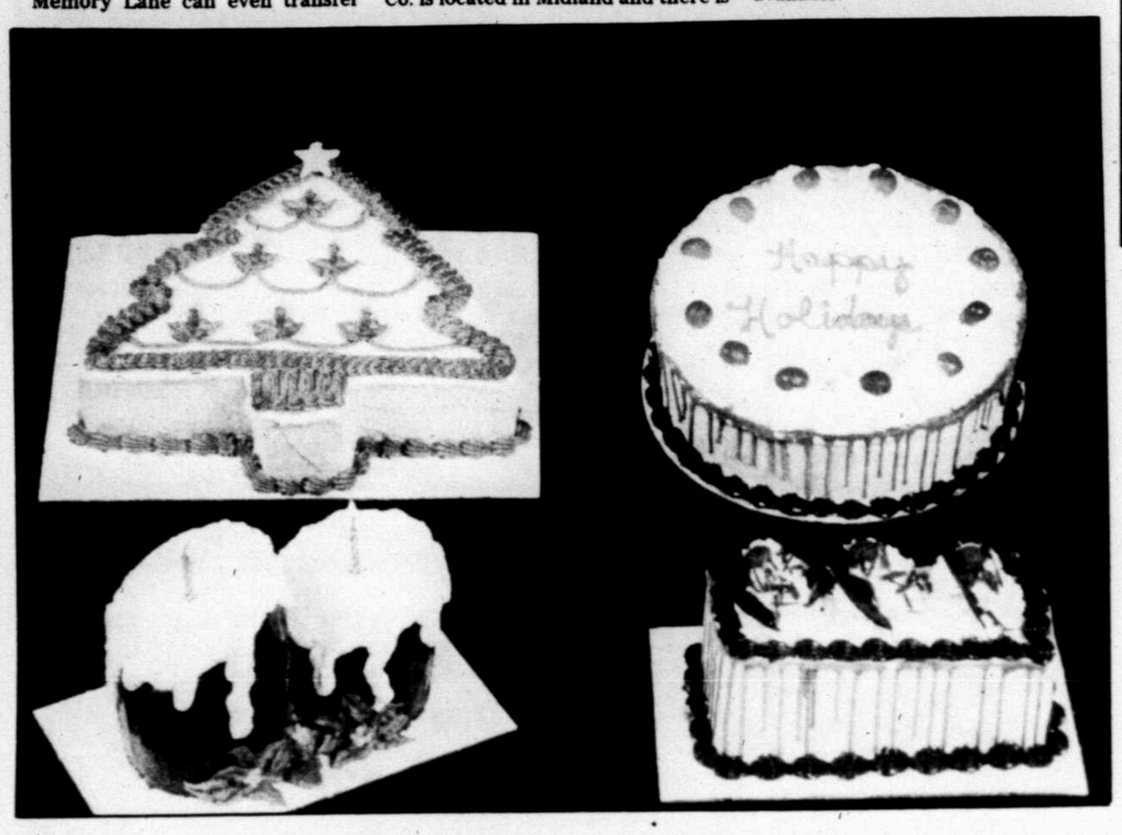

How convenient it is to never have to worry about clumsy projection screens, film jamming projectors and burned out lamps, not to mention recruiting a projector operator. Leave the lights on, sit back and relax in your favorite easy chair and view your memories as often as your like.

Memory Lane Video Production Co. is located in Midland and there is no need to worry about your precious film being lost of damaged during shipment because they offer free pick-up and delivery to your home or office in Midland or Odessa! They treat your film the way you probably feel it to be; irreplaceable.

Ty and Terry will clean, lubricate and repair broken or damaged section of your film and return it to you in better condition than received! Call them today at 689-8921 for personal service and quality at an affordable price. They will assist you in getting your order ready and answer any questions you may have. Memory Lane wants to add you to their growing list of happy and satisfied customers and will gladly provide references upon request. They also have a demonstration tape available.

Ty Bowling of Memory Lane is ready to transfer your family home movies, slides and photographs onto video tape using the latest equipment. For more information call 689-8921.

Baskin-Robbins, located in Plaza Center or Dellwood Mall, can provide all your holiday desserts. Christmas candles, wreaths and Christmas trees are available to decorate your holiday table, custom-made or already prepared, with delicious ice cream from Baskin-Robbins.

Let Baskin-Robbins decorate your holiday table with desserts made of 31-Flavors, and more Entertaining is one of the most enjoyable traditions we observe during the holiday seasons. Inviting guests into our homes to enjoy food, drink and good company.

But with the hectic schedule everyone has, preparing for a party may be difficult.

Let Baskin-Robbins, located in both the Plaza and Dellwood Shopping Centers, provide the desserts for your holiday parties with festive treats made from that incomparable 31-Flavor ice cream.

Baskin-Robbins can custom-design your dessert to order, so whether you're entertaining one or 1,000, Baskin-Robbins can fit the bill. Or Baskin-Robbins has a display-case full of ready-made desserts that you can pick up on your way home. In just 10 minutes, you can have your cake and read it too. Baskin-Robbins has a way with words, even when you're in a hurry.

And the desserts from Baskin-Robbins can complete your holiday decorations, with Christmas candles, wreaths, Christmas trees, and a variety of delicious desserts in any shape you need. All these, made from that delicious Baskin-Robbins ice cream in flavors to match your holiday mood, including pumpkin pie, egg nog, peppermint rum raisin, and Southern pecan pie. The flavor-of-the-month is Winter White Chocolate and in December, Peanut Butter Cup will be the flavor.

You can always expect friendly, efficient service from Lynette White, store manager, and all the staff at Baskin-Robbins. This immaculate treat shop is a great place to bring the kids for an after-school snack or a shopping break. Be sure to register for a free bike, to be given away Dec. 23. The Plaza Center store is giving away a 10-speed bike to a winner, 14 and over, and the Baskin-Robbins in Dellwood Mall is giving away a dirt bike to the lucky winning registrant, 14 and under.

Baskin-Robbins also features a Winter Weekly Sale, with weekly specials on your favorite ice cream and desserts. This week come in to Baskin-Robbins and purchase one 1/2 gallon of pre-packed ice cream and get a second 1/2 gallon FREE! (Offer good through 11/29.)

November 30 through December 13, buy one Baskin-Robbins Banana Split and get the second one FREE!

These are just two of the great deals Baskin-Robbins has for you this winter. Be sure to stop by and get your holiday desserts, register for a free bicycle and check the Winter Weekly Sale. Baskin-Robbins is locally owned and operated by Bob and Judy Wilson.

Dimension Cable offers educational programming for children of all ages

A child's education does not end in the classroom and parents can play an active role in affecting what their children learn. One of the ways is by selecting what children will watch on television.

Cable TV is ideal for helping to educate our children because it offers high quality, diverse programming. "More people are turning to Cable TV for family entertaining and not just for viewing," said Doug Smith, General Manager of Dimension Cable Services of Midland.

Through the simple exercise of scanning the channels on cable, a child will find there are many more views of the world than the mainly homogenous version available on major broadcast affiliates and independent station. In a matter of a few minutes, a parent can show a child how the U.S. government works on C-Span, how the rest of the world looks on the Discovery Channel and what people are doing throughout the world on CNN.

Parents and children can also escape together through family-oriented cable services like Nickelodeon and The Disney Channel.

One of cable programming's strengths is its diversity, another is its high quality. With family time so precious, nobody wants their child to waste an hour watching a program that fails to add to the child's depth of experience.

"One of the nice things about Cable TV is that it caters not only to adults but to children. We've graduated from the cartoons to educational programming for children," Smith said.

Cable TV offers more than 250 hours a week for young people's viewing. These programs are found on the following channels: Nickelodeon, The Disney Channel, USA Network, The Discovery Channel, Home Box Office, Showtime, Superstation TBS, C-Span and Arts & Entertainment Network.

Nickelodeon defines children's programming, fosters creativity and encourages positive family relations. From it's lively mix of music and movies for pre-schoolers and early elementary-aged children through the "kitchen chemistry" of "Mr. Wizard's World" for students into their teens. "Nick at Nite" lets the entire family sit back an enjoy TV classics like "Mr. Ed" and "My Three Sons."

The Disney Channel and its children's programming are in a class by themselves. Excitement offered pre-schoolers by "Welcome to Pooh Corner," learning opportunities given pre-teens by "Kids Incorporated" and a chance for the whole family to get together to watch Disney classics like "Pinnochio." The Disney Channel is a must for the family that wants to get the most out of TV viewing.

USA Network turns its "Kidstime," a daily programming block for children, into quality time. The network emphasizes fun and involvement for children through both regular programs and specials. "Calliope" is the longest-running children's show on cable. It provides thought-provoking fantasy and educational film shorts for pre-schoolers.

The Discovery Channel opens up a world of knowledge for children. Like a video set of textbooks, The Discovery Channel brings science, nature, history, human adventure and world exploration to the small screen. Programs are educational and informative and help children to learn about the past and look into the future. The Discovery Channel is unique in that the programs have never been seen before in the United States.

Home Box Office is the only place to find the award winning "Fraggle Rock" which is a children's series produced by Muppets creator Jim Henson. It is a magical, musical, fantasy world full of fun-loving little creatures. "Fraggle Rock" received an ACE award from the Academy of Cable Excellence. HBO also offers "HBO Family Playhouse", a series of films based on books geared to the 12 to 18 age group.

Showtime is committed to quality family and children's programming as illustrated by the scheduling of a block of programming called "Familytime" which features original children's programming such as the renouned "Faerie Tale Theatre" and "Shelly Duvall's Tall Tales & Legends," as well as "Children's Storybook Classics" and a variety of family films.

Superstation TBS has long been known for its commitment to family programming. "The New Leave It to Beaver" premiered this fall and continues the tradition as the highest-rated original situation comedy on basic cable television. National Geographic "Explorer" presents a mix of wildlife stories, scientific work, adventure footage and archaeology.

C-Span is the cable satellite public affairs network that provides live coverage of the U.S. House and Senate. "C-Span in the Classroom" allows instructors to tailor events to their teaching and make the study of politics, government, journalism, speech and other courses come alive for their students.

Arts & Entertainment Network offers a series of family classics and a wide variety of popular documentaries for children of all ages. Wednesdays bring a whole evening of documentaries, from the classic Walter Cronkite series "Twentieth Century" to profiles of men and women who are "Living Dangerously" to personalities of our times in "Biography." Family Classics have included "Jane Eyre" and "Oliver Twist" and these classics have retained the spirit of the novels on which they are based.

The best-selling Cable TV channel for children is The Disney Channel. This channel has good viewership with high ratings. "People trust the Disney Channel and Nickelodeon and feel comfortable with their children viewing them," Smith explained.

Dimension Cable offers various packages for viewers. For about 60 cents a day or two cents a channel per day, a viewer could have access to 32 Dimension Cable channels which include Nickelodeon, Arts & Entertainment and USA Network. About one dollar a day would provide the cable viewer with 32 channels and The Disney Channel.

There are different packages for movie viewers which include two Premium Movie Channels such as HBO and Showtime along with a remote control. The cost for this service would be about a $1.30 a day.

Dimension Cable also carries a Parental Control Feature for the Premium Movie Channels. "This device enables parents to block out channels that they do not want their children viewing while they are away from home," Smith added.

Cable TV offers a wide range of educational programming for children of all ages. Dimension Cable has various programming packages for you to choose from. Stop by 2530 S. Midkiff or call 694-7721 to find out more about their children's programming.

Let The Cleaning Closet help get your house ready for the holidays

Kathy Hayes of The Cleaning Closet has loads of equipment to make your housecleaning chores easier. Let The Cleaning Closet, located at 3310-B N. Midkiff, help you get ready for holiday guests with products and knowledge gathered from over 40 years in the Midland cleaning industry.

Whether you love or hate housework, the Cleaning Closet is the place for you.

The Cleaning Closet, located at 3310 N. Midkiff, has the tools to make any housecleaning job easier and quicker.

"If you want to get the job done as quickly as possible, and have time for other things, The Cleaning Closet can make that possible," said owner Jim Hicks. "And if you enjoy housework, then the right tools can make that job even more enjoyable."

With guests coming for the holidays and a busy schedule already in full swing, making the job of cleaning quicker and easier is something everyone needs.

The Cleaning Closet is affiliated with and stocks products exclusively from Paul Hicks Company.

Industrial-strength cleaning supplies and equipment can make the job of cleaning your house easier. And the staff at The Cleaning Closet is always available to answer any questions you might have.

The Hicks Company has more than 40 years of experience in the Midland cleaning business. Products have been selected after years of use in this climate and water. "We have selected and sell only the products that perform," Hicks explained.

The Cleaning Closet now has "Like Magic", a laundry detergent that is especially effective in hard water, like that in the Midland area.

"We have found it to be exceptionally useful in Midland water," Hicks explained.

Another proven product at The Cleaning Closet is the glass cleaner. Professional Midland cleaners have been using this product for years, with the best results. Mention this ad at The Cleaning Closet and receive a free can of their famous glass cleaner with any purchase of $5 or more.

If you are looking for a gift for "the man who has everything" stop into The Cleaning Closet and check out the latest gift ideas. A car washing kit, including extra soft chamois, bucket, and brushes are just the thing for the man who trusts no one else to wash his car.

Or if you have a teenager, a good stocking stuffer might be a portable vacuum cleaner to keep their car clean. Other packages include the general cleaning kit, the basic equipment and chemicals you need for the entire house, all in a convenient carrying basket. And the window cleaning kit, a easy way to streak-free windows.

The Cleaning Closet is located at 3310 N. Midkiff, across from San Miguel Shopping Center. Stop by today, make a purchase and get your free glass cleaner. Store hours are 10 a.m. to 6 p.m., Monday through Saturday.

Tim Whittington available for educational funds research

Tim Whittington, located at 3108 N. Big Spring, is now available for grant-scholarship research, continuing education seminars and SAT Preparation. For more information call 683-4328 or 697-6347.

Do you have a high school student who is about to take the SAT? Are you an adult student who is planning to go back to school next semester? Or have you been wondering about what scholarship could be available for your college bound senior?

Tim Whittington, located at 3108 N. Big Spring in Suite 104 recently began a service which offers SAT Preparation, Grant-Scholarship Research and a seminar for adult students returning to college. Whittington has lived in Midland for 10 years and graduated from Texas Tech University with a Masters in English. He is currently teaching Freshman English at Midland College.

Whittington teaches a SAT Preparation Seminar for high school students who are planning to take the SAT College Entrance Exam. The SAT seminar concentrates on teaching the students, through guided practice, on how to take the test itself and not just how to work the problems.

The SAT is a challenge and each student needs to be familiar with his opponent's strategy, his opponent being the test maker." On the SAT, knowing how to take the test is as important as knowing how to work the problems," explained Whittington.

The SAT seminar involves two sessions for a total of seven hours. One session is held on the weekend and one is held on a week night. During the seminar, techniques are discussed on how to approach each type ofproblem and practice timed-test are given. The practice tests are designed from old SAT tests and Whittington feels that this is very important feature of his seminar. A guided practice approached is used by Whittington in the seminar. After the test, techniques and strategies are reviewed. Students are also given test to practice with at home.

"When they practice these techniques, they are always locating themselves in the test instead of wandering around. The student will know exactly what stage and question group that they are in," Whittington explained.

Whittington researched libraries and bookstores to find the material available for the seminar. It took him about two months to find everyting that had been published about the strategy of taking the SAT test.

"I've seen endless analysis of the questions. They throw in answers that are so close to the correct ones that they know they can trap time-pressuredtest takers," Whittington added. The goal of the seminar is to help the students avoid the traps and help relieve the pressure of taking the test.

The seminar is focused more on the verbal section due to the fact that the verbal scores have been dropping nationwide. One student who came to the seminar had already taken the SAT and needed to increase her score. After taking the seminar her verbal score was increased by 110 points.

The cost of the seminar is $65.00 and the maximum number of students is six. The next seminar is scheduled between November 24 and December 1.

Whittington is also involved in grant and scholarship research. He said that many sources of financial aid go unclaimed because people don't know that they are available. He can research grants and private funds that are available for college students.

Whittington is planning a three session seminar for adult students who are returning to college. This seminar will cover reading comprehension and paper writing, along with note and test taking.

If you would be interested in any of these seminars or services provided by Whittington, call him at 683-4328 or 697-6347.

Arlington hoping to torpedo Rebel Armada

By TERRY WILLIAMSON
Assistant Sports Editor

Midland Lee's awesome offensive Armada will have to gear up for an all out assault Saturday in Fort Worth if the Rebels hope to be playing football for another week in the state Class 5A playoffs.

When Lee takes to the Amon Carter Stadium rug at 2 p.m. Saturday, the state's most explosive offense will be meeting a battle-tested defense that has been playoff superb.

The 10-2 Colts have won with defense this year, giving up just over 200 yards per contest. Meanwhile, Lee is averaging over 454 yards per game and is the state's premier offensive battle fleet with Waymon Goodley, Dennis Sterling and Joe Woodard all within reach of 1,000-yard seasons. Goodley is already over that barrier with 1,397 yards. Sterling is 43 yards shy and Woodard 143 yards short of the magic figure.

How Lee performs against the stubborn Arlington defensive wall will be the key to this region encounter. The winner will play Saturday's Denton-Odessa Permian winner in the quarterfinals next week with only eight teams left in the state title competition.

ARLINGTON'S PRIDE and joy is the linebacking corps of Jason Bowers, Brian Naughton and Brian Luce. They are big and mobile.

"They remind me a lot of Amarillo High in the type of kids they have. They are really big and move to the ball well," said Lee coach Earl Miller. "We have a challenge in front of us."

The Arlington defense has given up only three points in two playoff games. The Colts shutout Irving MacArthur 13-0 in bi-district and scored a 21-3 win over Lewisville Saturday in the area playoffs.

Lewisville was held to 189 total yards against Arlington.

Offensively, the Colts are not a high scoring machine. They rely heavily on 1,000-yard rusher John Wilson, a powerful running back who likes to run over people. Wilson had 104 yards rushing against Lewisville and a touchdown.

The Colts also got a short TD run from Chris Weber and quarterback Jon Bates threw a 30-yard TD pass to wide receiver Larry Harrigan. Bates had a good overall day, hitting seven of eight passes for 97 yards. He doesn't throw 20 times a game, but has been accurate this year.

In all, the Colts had 335 yards against Lewisville with 238 coming on the ground.

Arlington has been an impressive playoff team despite the fact that they were lucky to gain entry.

THE COLTS lost to two District 7-5A opponents this year. They lost to district champion Haltom and L.D. Bell. Arlington ended the season tied with Arlington Lamar for second place and won the playoff berth on a point system. Haltom, meanwhile, fell from the playoffs Saturday in a loss to unbeaten Denton.

But no one has scored a touchdown since against the Colts.

"You have to score to win and they haven't let many people put big numbers on the board," said Miller. "We'll have to go down there in their part of the woods and play this game. It'll be tough. Our kids will just have to do a good job of erasing all the distractions that this kind of game can bring."

Chaps wake up, whip Rams

By TED BATTLES
Sports Editor

Midland College walloped Angelo State's JV about as expected, 104-58, at the Chaparral Center Monday night to go 7-0 for the season, but what wasn't expected was that the Rams would be as "close" as they were at intermission.

Past history dictates that these games with four-year JVs are in the W column by the 10-minute mark or somebody's dragging his feet.

Angelo State trailed 46-34 at half and was down by only four, 31-27, inside the nine minute mark.

"We tried to tell them that 22 (Robert Barley) and 34 (Randy Watson) could shoot," said MC Coach Reggie Franklin, "but they had to find out for themselves."

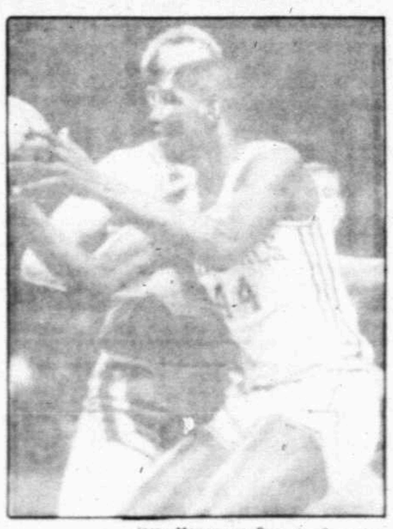

There was no question of the Chaparrals' superiority in the first half. The reason it didn't show on the scoreboard was that 22 and 34 had three three-pointers each.

MIDLAND STEPPED up the defensive tempo in the second half and the Rams not only seldom got a three-point shot, but seldom got an uncontested shot, period.

"We went to a pressure defense all over the court," Franklin explained the smothering second half turnaround. "That's what we'll be doing in conference play."

After a 17-2 run to start the second half, it was just a question of when the Chaps would reach 100. It came with 3:17 left as Nate Curvey did the honors with a flourish, scoring off a fastbreak on a reverse dunk to make it 101-54.

Scoring honors went to David Martin, who scored 17 while Herman Henry scored 16 and Alex Stanwood 15 as six Chaps cracked double figures.

Jerry Mennenga/Reporter-Telegram

MC's Sydney Rice (44) feels the pressure from Daryl Hurst.

Martin and Calvin Smith, 12 points, sparked the offense, repeatedly penetrating for shots or to set up teammates.

"It's tough for Calvin, who has been a starter in high school, in junior college, but we count on him to come off the bench to spark us. It's the same with Stewart Barnett and Louis Clay. We've got to have them come in and give us that spark," Franklin said.

FRESHMAN SIDNEY Rice's play also was a high point for Franklin. He scored eight points, going 4-for-4 from the field.

"We worked on his offensive skills all week and finally convinced him that when you work hard in practice, it pays off in the game."

All that stands between MC and next Monday's WJCAC opener at Clarendon is the Thanksgiving weekend round-robin, which could prove interesting.

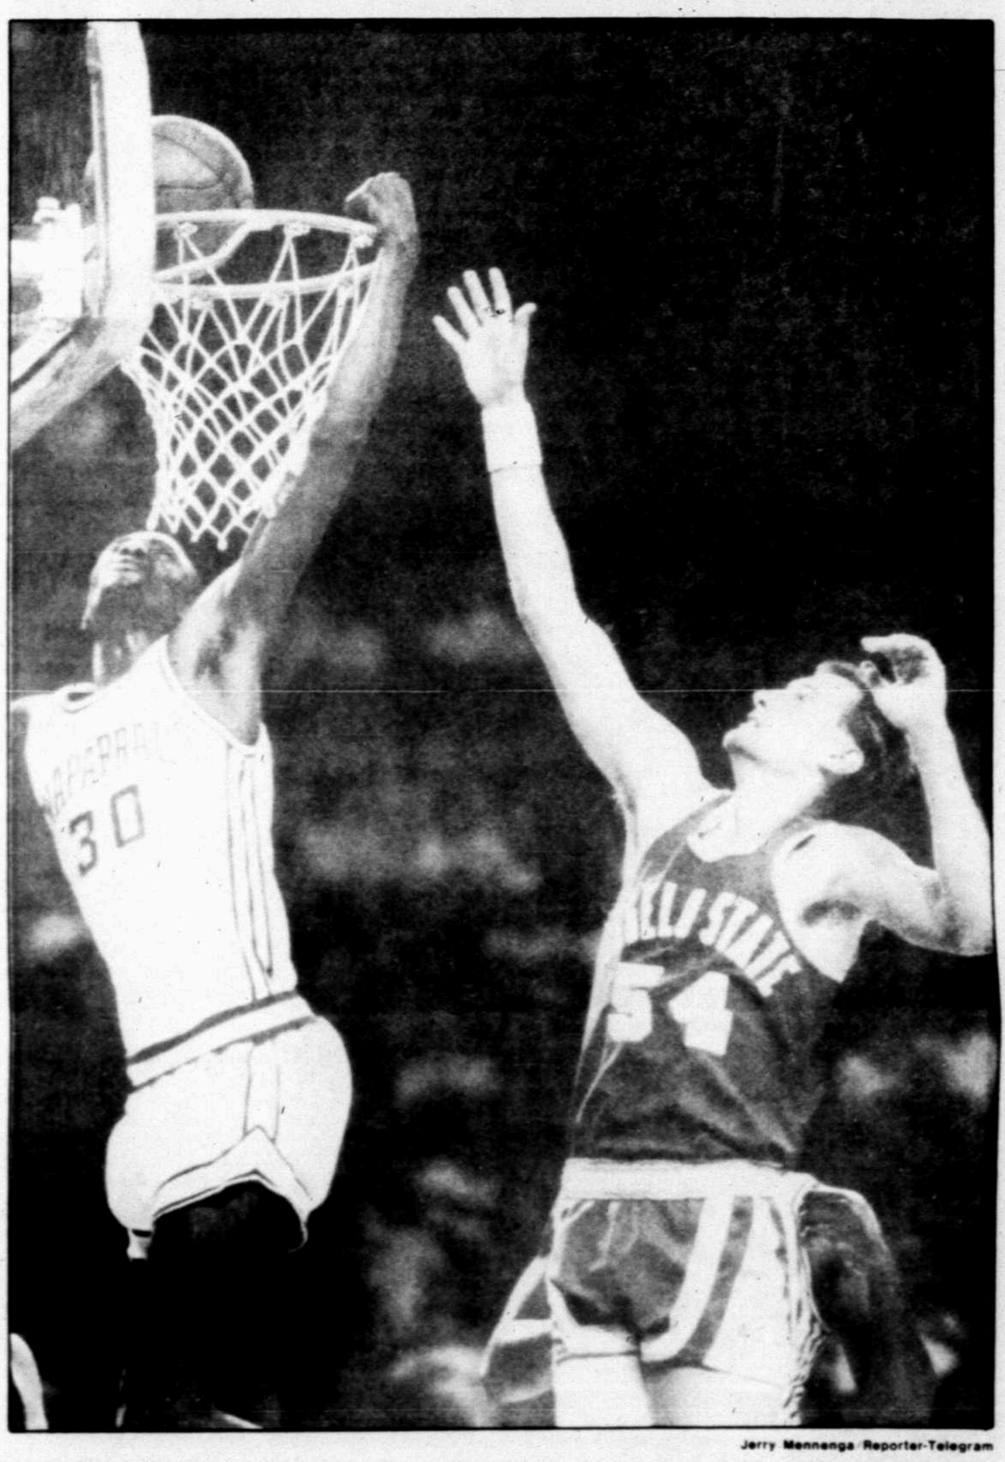

Franklin confessed, "I don't know much about Texas State Technical Institute (6 p.m. Thursday) yet, but they always have a good team. Pratt, Kan., (6 p.m. Friday) should be strong." And Saturday's game is against Odessa College. 'nuff said.

CHAPSTYQUES — Billy Ray Smith scored just two points. Blame it on the Mohawk... BR Smith and Barnett led the Chaps in steals while Charles McCovery (11 points) and BR Smith led in assists with four. Martin and Calvin Smith each had three... Rebounds, it was Alex Stanwood with nine and Martin next with five... During MC's 17-2 run to open the second half, Martin contributed seven points.

Lady Rebs iron out Lady Buffs

By BOB BRUNDAGE
Sports Writer

The Class 5A Midland Lee Lady Rebels came away with a 63-46 victory over the Stanton Lady Buffs Monday night, but, it wasn't a pretty sight.

Part of the offensive problems could be attributed to a tenacious full court press defense by both teams. Neither team wanted to let the other take control offensively and, as a result, turnovers, missed shots and fouls were numerous, especially fouls.

In all, 48 fouls were called with four girls taking their seats early with five infractions, Khristie Davis for Lee and Kristi Fryar, Regina Newkirk and Kaki Elmore for Stanton.

Still, despite the evidence on the court, Midland Lee coach Shirley Stephenson was happy with her team's efforts.

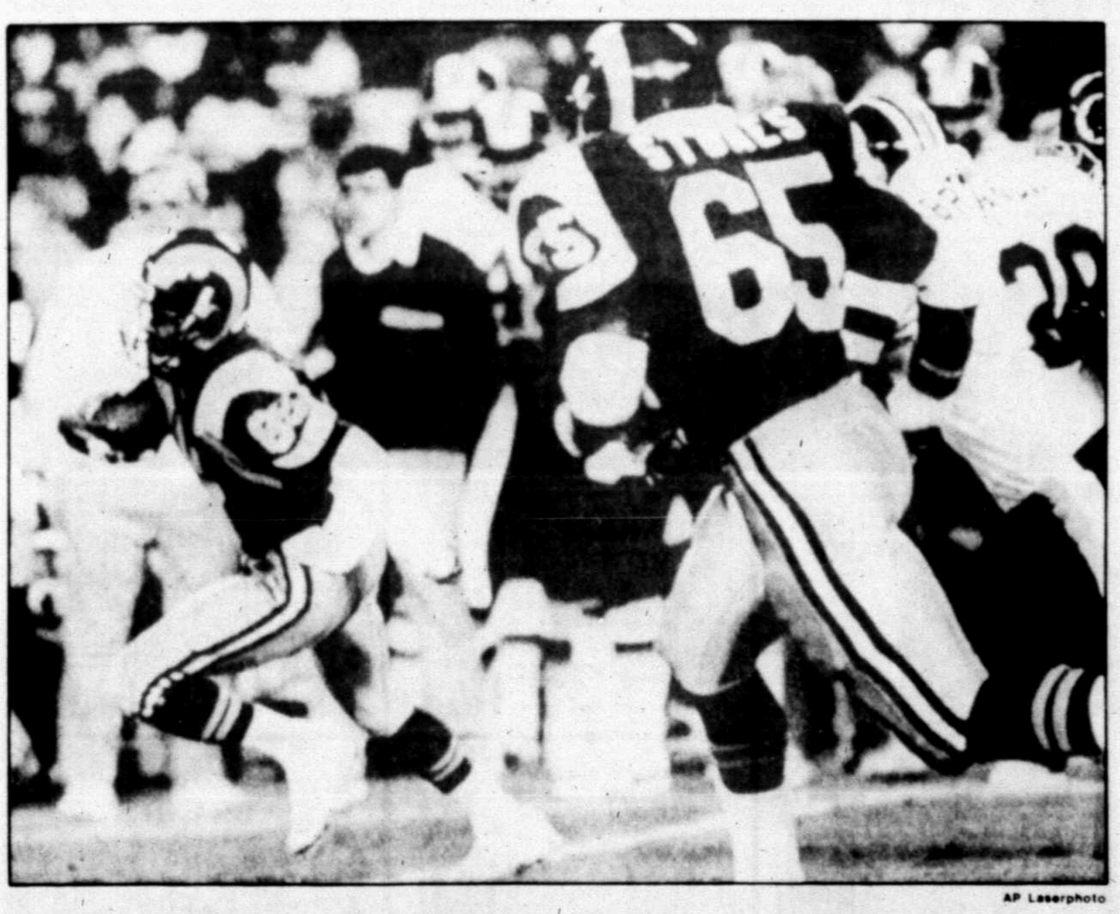

"I thought we played good offensively, not great, but good," she said.

One player who had a dominating night was Lee's Monica Ramirez, scoring 13 points and leading Lee under the boards, both offensively and defensively.

"Monica played her strongest game of the year," said Stephenson, whose Rebels are now 3-2 on the year and face a tough road game tonight in Hobbs, N.M. at 7:30 p.m. Stanton fell to 2-1 on the year.

Leah Burnett also added 13 for Lee while Mary Ann Isom chipped in another 10. For Stanton, Kristi Fryar led the way with 16 points while Kody Newman, who was perfect in four free throw tries, added 12.

Wide receiver Ron Brown of Los Angeles sprints for the end zone on a 95-yard kick return for a touchdown Monday night against the Redskins.

Los Angeles hangs on against comeback-minded Redskins

WASHINGTON (AP) — It didn't quite erase the agony of what has been a frustrating season, but the Los Angeles Rams are feeling a lot better about themselves after hanging on for a 30-26 upset of the Washington Redskins.

Ron Brown returned a kickoff 95 yards for a touchdown and caught a scoring pass from Jim Everett on Monday night to lead the Rams to their second victory in a row after a miserable 1-7 start.

"The last two weeks we have gotten our stuff back, and we're very proud of our performance," Rams Coach John Robinson said.

"We're winners," Brown said. "We had been losing to teams we shouldn't be losing to, but now we're getting the job done."

While Los Angeles has bounced back in the past two games, Brown needed only four plays to rebound from adversity. Moments after he dropped a sure touchdown pass from Everett in the third quarter, he caught a 26-yard toss to give the Rams a 30-19 lead with 3:38 left in the quarter.

"That one I dropped was too easy," Brown said. "I had too long to think about it."

Doug Williams' second touchdown pass to Art Monk cut the gap to 30-26 four seconds into the fourth quarter, and the Redskins drove to the Los Angeles 14-yard line in the closing seconds before LeRoy Irvin intercepted a pass that went through Monk's hands in the end zone.

THE PLAY followed a similar sequence in which Monk had an apparent touchdown pass jarred from his grasp by Mickey Sutton.

"Art has probably made more big plays than he's dropped passes," Williams said. "Sometimes you just have nights like that."

Despite the two close plays at the finish, Monk caught five passes for 93 yards, including touchdowns of 17 and five yards.

Williams, who earned the starting spot after replacing an ineffective Jay Schroeder last week, completed 24-of-46 passes for 308 yards and also ran for a touchdown. But his first-quarter fumble was returned 35 yards for a touchdown by Rams linebacker Mike Wilcher and he was sacked four times.

After the game, Redskins Coach Joe Gibbs said Williams performed well enough to maintain the starting job until at least next week, when the Redskins host the defending Super Bowl champion New York Giants.

"Doug fought his guts out," Gibbs said. "He will remain the quarterback until I say otherwise."

WASHINGTON, WHICH gained only 66 rushing yards, fell to 7-3 and missed a chance to move three games ahead of Dallas in the NFC East.

The Redskins were betrayed by their special teams. In addition to being stung by Brown's fourth career kickoff return for a touchdown, Washington allowed a blocked punt that set up a 1-yard scoring run by Charles White that enabled the Rams to take a 23-9 second-quarter lead.

"We made enough mistakes to lose," Gibbs said. "Our special teams, in particular, were killing us."

Brown's kickoff return, longest in the NFC this season, came seconds after Washington took a 9-7 lead and put the Rams on top for good.

"As soon as I went through I saw the hole open up," Brown said. "I was faking to the outside, then went back to the middle because it was kind of crowded out there."

After cutting against the grain at the Ram 40, Brown outraced Darrell Green to the end zone.

Los Angeles could muster only four first downs in the first half, but used Wilcher's fumble return and help from its special teams to take a 23-16 halftime lead.

Langham Creek gets another shot

WACO (AP) — A teacher's confession to the University Interscholastic League that she changed a football player's grade so he would remain eligible has resulted in the abrupt ouster of Waco High School from the Texas high school playoffs.

After investigating the teacher's claims Monday, UIL officials ordered Waco replaced in the playoffs by Houston Langham Creek, which Waco had beaten 23-8 last weekend in College Station.

That means defending Class 5A state champion Plano, 12-0, will play against Langham Creek instead of Waco at 2 p.m. Saturday at Baylor Stadium in Waco.

Dr. Jim Hensley, Waco schools superintendent, convened an emergency school board meeting Monday night after the UIL informed him Monday morning of a potential violation of rules, he said.

Waco school board president Linda Ethridge said Monday night that a teacher, whom she did not identify, complained in a telephone call to the UIL on Saturday that she was pressured into giving a passing grade to a member of the team during the grading period that covered the first six weeks of school.

Tuesday's Question: This back was responsible for the most touchdowns in a Cotton Bowl game?

Monday's Answer: Houston's Jason Phillips made seven catches against Temple to break the SWC's single-season record for pass receptions with 88 catches. The old mark was held by SMU's Jerry Levias, 85.

Is Danny White coming back to Cowboys' rescue?

By DENNE H. FREEMAN

IRVING (AP) — Veteran Danny White may come to the rescue of young Steve Pelluer on Thanksgiving Day against the Minnesota Vikings.

White could be the starting quarterback for the Dallas Cowboys instead of Pelluer, whose performance in a 20-14 loss to Miami Sunday night drew mixed reviews.

"I'll probably use them both, but Danny could start," Dallas Coach Tom Landry said Monday. "I think Steve handled himself pretty well. He'll get better as he plays more."

White missed the loss as the scrambling Pelluer came within 50 yards of running (84) for as many yards as he gained passing (134).

Pelluer's 1987 debut was less than spectacular, although he threw touchdown passes of 8 and 18 yards to Timmy Newsome. He also suffered two interceptions.

Dallas, 5-5 in the NFC East, has a quick turn-around game against the Vikings Thanksgiving Day.

"The rest helped Danny's wrist and he feels excellent today," Landry said. "I may start him against Minnesota.

"Steve had some excellent runs and hurts the defense with his running ability, but the mistakes cost us. He threw one pass that was intercepted he should have never thrown."

Asked if he approved of Pelluer running 10 times, Landry said "You can't tell a quarterback with his talent not to run. He made some big run plays."

Pelluer, who hadn't thrown a pass this season, never hit a wide receiver.

Roger Staubach, an NFL Hall of Famer who played for the Cowboys, criticized Pelluer for giving up too quick on his receivers.

Staubach, who was an analyst for ESPN's national telecast, said Pelluer "should have been willing to take the risk" of waiting for secondary receivers to come open.

"Miami played a tight zone and it was hard to throw to the wide receivers, but we should have moved the ball better on offense," Landry said.

Pelluer defended himself, saying, "Our wide receivers just weren't coming open. I made some positive yards by running."

Pelluer said he felt he deserved another chance.

"I'm confident I can build on this and turn our offense into a high-scoring one," Pelluer said. "I could have played better, but I was a little rusty. Anybody would be."

Dallas was 1-7 with Pelluer as a starter after White was injured last year. White has no ligament in his right wrist and can't control the ball when he throws.

"I'm expecting to start against Minnesota," Pelluer said. "I'm hoping to start."

Also of concern to Landry was Troy Stradford's 169 yards rushing, third highest in Miami history for a single game.

Sooners return to throne

Associated Press

The Oklahoma Sooners have reclaimed the No. 1 ranking from Nebraska after letting the Cornhuskers own it for one week.

Meanwhile, Miami of Florida surged into second place, setting up a possible national championship showdown against Oklahoma in the Orange Bowl on New Year's night.

By defeating Nebraska 17-7 on Saturday to complete an 11-0 regular season, the Sooners vaulted back into first place, the spot they had held all season until surrendering it last week. Nebraska slipped to fifth place.

Oklahoma received 54 of 59 first-place votes and 1,173 of a possible 1,180 points from a nationwide panel of sports writers and broadcasters. Miami, 9-0 following a 24-14 victory over Toledo, climbed from third place to second with four first-place ballots and 1,108 points. The Hurricanes had been No. 3 for eight weeks in a row.

"Obviously, that's the way the system works," Oklahoma Coach Barry Switzer said. "When you beat No. 1 ..."

Switzer expressed disappointment with the Sooners' offense, which gained 444 yards but fumbled eight times, losing three, and threw an interception.

"We've done the same thing the last three weeks," he said. "We play well enough to win the game (Oklahoma State 29-10, Missouri 17-13) but we don't put the ball in the end zone when we're down inside the 30."

Miami, which handed Oklahoma its only defeat in each of the last two seasons, will meet the Sooners in the Orange Bowl. But the Hurricanes still have regular-season games left against Top Ten teams Notre Dame and South Carolina.

Florida State, 9-1 and idle last weekend, jumped from fourth place to third with 1,056 points. The Seminoles close out their regular season on Saturday against Florida.

The other first-place vote went to Syracuse, 11-0 following a 32-31 triumph over West Virginia. The Orangemen received 983 points in vaulting from sixth to fourth.

Nebraska, 9-1 with a regular-season game remaining against Colorado, was fifth with 979 points. UCLA, No. 5 last week, lost to Southern California 17-13 and dropped to 11th.

LSU rose from ninth to sixth with 830 points by outlasting Tulane 41-36. Notre Dame, seventh last week, lost to Penn State 21-20 and slipped to 10th place. Meanwhile, Auburn, which was idle and plays Alabama on Friday, moved up from 10th to seventh with 809 points.

South Carolina's 20-7 triumph over Clemson lifted the Gamecocks from 12th place to eighth with 711 points while the Tigers fell to 13th. Michigan State's Big Ten champs defeated Wisconsin 30-9 and went from 11th to ninth with 680 points. Notre Dame rounded out the Top Ten with 654 points.

The Second Ten consists of UCLA, Oklahoma State, Clemson, Georgia, Texas A&M, Tennessee, Southern Cal, Alabama, Iowa and Pitt.

Last week, it was Michigan State, South Carolina, Oklahoma State, Georgia, Tennessee, Texas A&M, Alabama, Iowa, Pitt and Indiana.

Southern Cal's upset of UCLA sent the Trojans to the Rose Bowl and returned them to the Top Twenty for the first time since they were 19th in the preseason poll.

The Trojans replaced Indiana in the Top Twenty despite the Hoosiers' 35-14 triumph over Purdue.

MC Mustangs drop finale

From Staff Reports

BALMORHEA — Midland Christian's Mustangs came up one win shy of taking the first NewTex Christian Football Conference title, falling 58-16 to Jesus Chapel of El Paso over the weekend.

MC finished the season with a school-best 10-2 record despite the loss in the championship game.

"The loss was really a combination of a lot of things as losses usually are," Coach Homer Jackson said. "Before the game, in comparing common opponents, our kids realized we'd beaten teams by a lot more. They really thought they were the better team. But we got down there and could not play with same intensity as Jesus Chapel did.

"(Jesus Chapel) gave a super, super effort. Wouldn't go down when we tackled them, they were very impressive."

JC's Jon Smith did most of the damage to the Mustangs, scoring six touchdowns. Tony Corona scored one MC touchdown on a 25-yard run and threw the other to Aaron Petree from five yards out.

Badgers, Braves top 5-2A selections

From Staff Reports

The two-time defending champion McCamey Badgers dominated the All-District 5-2A football team released Monday with 11 players making first team.

District runner-up Iraan was not far behind with nine players on the first team.

McCamey seniors Mikel Rowe and Roman Zarate led the Badgers by appearing on both first offense and first team defense. Zarate was named the district's best quarterback and a member of the defensive secondary. Rowe was a tight end and a defensive end.

Iraan's Michael Parker was named as first team on both the offensive and defensive lines.

Other Badgers to earn first team honors were tailback Emmit Brown, tackle Jeff Lashaway, guard Jonathan Creech, defensive back Clay Hejl, linebacker Sal Holguin and defensive linemen Anastacio Dominguez and Will Kennedy.

Kennedy was one of two sophomores named to the 5-2A first team. The other was Marfa wide receiver Rene Rivera.

For Iraan, fullback Jacky Stone, tight end Lee Calvert, tackle Ed Calvert, center Mike Kessler, defensive back Augustine Medina, defensive lineman Felix Galindo and punter Robert King were the first team selections.

Marfa's Dub Polson was named the Coach of the Year in his first season.

Charges dropped against Ron Springs

DALLAS (AP) — Bad-check charges against former Dallas Cowboys running back Ron Springs have been dropped, officials said.

Springs, 31, was indicted Sept. 13 on charges that he wrote two bad checks totalling $776.

LEE GIRLS

The Rebels and Buffs exchanged buckets after the opening tipoff for the game's only tie followed by the Rebs scoring the next three for an 8-2 lead, which they never relinquished.

Stanton managed to cut the score to 8-6 with 1:04 left in the first and 12-8 at the end of the period. The Buffs kept Lee's lead under double figures until early in the third quarter when Ramirez canned a 10-foot jumper for a 30-20 lead. Stanton never returned to a single digit deficit.

Will Texas' best be good enough?

AUSTIN (AP) — Texas Coach David McWilliams says the Longhorns' best may not be good enough to beat Thankgiving foe Texas A&M, which is seeking its third consecutive Southwest Conference football championship.

McWilliams said A&M has a great offensive line, an excellent defense, a tough running back in freshman Darren Lewis, a good leader in quarterback Craig Stump — and a noisy crowd that can throw an opponent off stride.

A&M, 8-2, and Texas, 6-4, will play for the SWC football title at College Station, where A&M has won 12 consecutive conference games.

ESPN will televise the game nationally, with kickoff at 7:15 p.m. CST. The stadium seats 72,387, and A&M officials predict a crowd of more than 75,000. The single-game record is 77,607 against Texas in 1985.

The winner will play Notre Dame, 8-2, in the Cotton Bowl at Dallas on Jan. 1. The loser will play Pittsburgh, 8-3, in the Bluebonnet Bowl at Houston on Dec. 31.

McWilliams told his weekly news conference Monday he thought his team believed it could beat A&M.

"I think they feel confident going into this football game, and know at the same time that it's going to take a great effort," he said. "This is one of those that you've got to play your very best and still you may not win it. But at the same time, if we do play our very best, certainly we have an opportunity to win the football game."

A&M Coach Jackie Sherrill told the Austin American-Statesman he would give Texas the edge in the game "because they're a little older in games like this," although Sherrill has nine players who started against Texas last year.

Big Eight, others feel impact of juco transfers

NORMAN, Okla. (AP) — Several times this season, Oklahoma basketball coach Billy Tubbs will have five players on the floor who all came from junior colleges. Three figure to be full-time starters.

At Indiana, the two junior college players who helped Bob Knight win the national title last season, Keith Smart and Dean Garrett, will be joined by a third, Mark Robinson.

St. John's Coach Lou Carnesecca, looking to replace Mark Jackson, will have an all-junior college backcourt in Greg "Boo" Harvey and Michael Porter.

Kansas, Arizona State, Alabama, Auburn, Florida State, Arkansas, Maryland, Nevada-Las Vegas ... all these and more have junior college additions to their rosters this year.

What's going on? For some, the answer is nothing. As Tubbs said, "Nothing's changed for us. The only thing that changed is that Bobby Knight had a couple and they won a national championship. Now it's the thing to do."

For Tubbs and many others, however, part of the answer is Proposition 48, the NCAA rule that established academic standards for athletic recruits.

"Proposition 48 has helped the junior colleges probably as much as any other rule," said Tubbs, who brought in five juco players this year and now has seven on his roster. "You're seeing people recruiting junior college players who have never recruited junior college players before."

TUBBS HAS always had juco players on his rosters. The difference this year is the number, which he said was prompted by the unpredictability of whether his high school recruits would be eligible under Prop 48. Among those Tubbs welcomes this year are Midland College grads Ricky Grace, now a senior, and Mookie Blaylock, the MVP of last season's NJCAA runner-up team.

"We would never have brought in five junior college kids if we had known all our freshmen were going to be eligible," he said.

Oklahoma signed six freshmen last season and only one became eligible. One other left the squad, and the other four were Proposition 48 casualties.

Larry Brown of Kansas found himself in a similar spot with high school point guard Antoine Lewis of Brooklyn. Brown hoped Lewis would fill the spot vacated by the graduation of his top two starters, then got in a pinch when Lewis was declared ineligible.

"I had only recruited one kid and we expected him to come in and help right away," said Brown. "We were in a real bind."

So he dipped into the jucos, coming away with Otis Livingston of El Camino, Calif., and another Chaparral, Lincoln Minor. He also brought in two front-court players from Kansas junior colleges to lessen the load on Danny Manning.

Even if grades aren't a factor, Brown said schools in the Midwest must use the junior colleges.

"You take the total population of the five states in the Big Eight, and that's smaller than the Los Angeles area," he said. "It's very difficult to recruit in terms of numbers ... we've got to consider junior colleges."

Van Coleman, publisher of a national recruiting newsletter, said junior colleges have always been prominent with med-level colleges but only recently have gained widespread favor among larger programs. Proposition 48 is the primary reason, he said, along with increased respectability of junior colleges.

THE TAG that juco players are undisciplined and renegades "never was the case, but there happened to be a stigma put on them because of a couple players," Coleman said.

"The grades thing has put jucos back in the position, or close to, where they were in the '60's," he said. "We're just now starting to see the tip of the iceberg."

Ronnie Arrow, who while coaching at San Jacinto (Texas) Junior College sent several players to major colleges, said Knight's success with Smart and Garrett opened some eyes.

"Junior college kids supposedly can't take care of their own business, are undisciplined players ..." he said. "I think Coach Knight, the ultimate disciplinarian, showed that he could take them and be successful with them."

Arrow, now head coach at South Alabama, said junior colleges are becoming critical to the long-term success of many major college programs.

"You might bring in a freshman kid who ... doesn't develop," he said. "Winning is nice, but to maintain winning year after year, I think you have to have immediate help."

Several of Arrow's players, including Walter Berry and Billy Goodwin, went to St. John's and Carnesecca suggested that perhaps other programs "are just realizing how valuable junior college players can be."

"I've known for years that they re a great source for players," he said, "and some have some top programs."

BOWLING BEAT

Rare Brooklyn strike sets stage for 300 perfection

By RANDY ISENBERG

Isenberg

For some reason you can suspect certain things will happen to certain people...like on the night of Nov. 17, 1987, destiny found Kerry Marker in the sixth frame in the form of a pulled-just-right Brooklyn strike. That, as it turned out, set the stage for the second 300 of the year at Dellwood Lanes and the first in the Mixed Scratch League.

Bowling on lanes 17 and 18, Marker set the stage with a 252. His first five strikes to start the second game were all square pocket shots. On No. 6, Kerry let the ball go, tugging it left. He immediately shook his head at the realization of the errant shot, and, then, in a combination of mock disgust and delight, smiled as the ball held for a just right Brooklyn strike.

The next six were all 1-3 pocket carries, most perfectly rolled directly and one good high pocket hit that was never a question of tripping the six pin.

After No. 11, of course, the entire center was now watching 17 and 18. His teammates began bantering the good-natured Marker as he stepped back into the settee area. He smiled at a teammate, took a barb from another and, to the gazing eye, stepped to the line as a seasoned veteran getting ready to roll something that had already been accomplished.

Strike 12 was never in question, and Marker, a bowler of only a couple of years, had accomplished the feat which many attempt without success for years.

When it was over, while enjoying many pats on the back and the assurance of City Secretary Howard Shelton, who had witnessed the perfecto and then immediately inspected the lanes for approval, I asked Kerry about the last shot.

I told him that the bantering and his own decision to step back into the settee area to exchange words with another bowler was the first time I had ever seen that. I asked him if he was calm as he seemed to be.

Without hesitation, Kerry said, "No. I was extremely nervous."

Shelton was happy to be able to approved the score for Marker, especially since Kerry entered an event with an incorrect average during last year's Men's City tournament. As a result, despite a 736 scratch, although sporting only a 150 average, he had to be disqualified.

Shelton said it was one of the hardest ruling decisions he has ever had to make, so he was happy to be one of the witnesses to his milestone 300.

Marker, in my opinion, has mastered the game in a very short time, a game that often requires many years to attain the level he has reached. Kerry's three-game average was 749.

The previous week in the same league, another bowler with two-some-odd years experience, Chuck Gibbs, averaging 30 pins more than a year or so ago, turned in a 276 game....

Judy Madison, Morning Glories, raised her average to 179, third best at Dellwood, with a 216—615. Judy last year represented Dellwood at the U.S. Open state qualifying tournament...

Cathryn Garcia continues to improve, following a 215—612 in the Bowl A Gans Mixed at Fairmont Park, raising her average to 171....

Gloria Truesdell broke 600 in the W.O.W. Ladies League at Fairmont with 234—603...Kathy West bowled a 232—590 in the same league...Patsy Smith, Fairmont average leader, posted a 226—596; Lynne Levassar had 210—583 in the His & Hers Mixed and Sherri Reed rolled a 235—576, same league...

Sandra Hill raised her average to 146 with a 210—548 in the Texas Stars League while Jodie Foster went from 135 to 146 on a 234—536....

Brian Gillette's 207 is the top average at Fairmont. He rolled 248—683 and 245—626 on successive weeks in the Exxon Mixed....Youth bowler Reid London is averaging 217 in the Adult Youth League after 15 games, recording back-to-back 246—663 and 254—679...

Gary Wessels, recovering from a knee injury, had 259—680 in the Chevron Mixed and 227—612 in the Texaco...Glen Cooper earned his century award with a 267 in the City Men's and Vic Houston rolled 646 and 611 to climb above the 200-average plateau...John Denton's 245—686 led the Dellwood bowlers as he maintained a 214 average. Shorty Shaw is at 207 after a 253-223—670 and Mike Boyer started with the first eight in a row before settling for a 266—658...

Jayhawks fire football coach

LAWRENCE, Kan. (AP) — Bob Valesente was fired Monday as head football coach at Kansas after the Jayhawks failed to win a Big Eight game in two seasons.

"It was not an easy decision," said Bob Frederick, the Kansas athletic director. "It was one I agonized over for weeks."

Frederick acknowledged it was a decision that will be unpopular with the faculty at KU, who were pleased with the way Valesente had restored academic integrity to the football program.

"They will just have to trust me at this point," Frederick said. "We're going to hire a person with the same commitment (to academics).

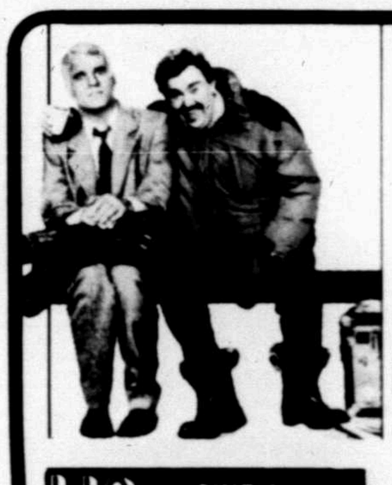

Valesente said he was not given enough time to turn around the program, which with Kansas State is one of the worst in the country.

Frederick said that both Earle Bruce, fired last week from Ohio State, and former Kansas assistant John Hadl would be considered if they were interested. He said the deadline for applications was Dec. 7, and that he hoped to make a decision shortly after.

Kansas was 4-17-1 under Valesente, who took over at Kansas after Mike Gottfried jumped to Pitt two years ago.

Economy shows healthy expansion

GNP increase exceeds expectations

By MARTIN CRUTSINGER
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The U.S. economy expanded at a robust annual rate of 4.1 percent last summer, even better than previously thought, the government reported today.

The Commerce Department said the gross national product, the broadest measure of economic health, was climbing sharply in the three months before the stock market collapse, led by strong increases in consumer spending and business investment.

The new figure on overall growth from July through September was revised from last month's estimate of a 3.8 percent summer growth rate.

Inflation, however, was a bit worse than initially thought. The GNP inflation index rose at an annual rate of 3.3 percent, compared to the previously calculated 2.7 percent.

The 3.3 inflation rate was still an improvement from the first half of the year, when prices were rising at an annual rate of 4.3 percent. A moderation of energy and food costs along with decreases in clothing prices were key factors in the change.

The 4.1 percent GNP growth rate compared to growth of 2.5 percent in the April-June quarter and 4.4 percent in the first three months of the year.

The economy will need to expand at a rate of just 1.8 percent in the current quarter to meet the administration's forecast for growth of 3.2 percent for all of 1987.

But with the collapse of the stock market in October, some economists think even this growth level may be unobtainable.

They maintain that the record 508-point drop in the Dow Jones industrial average on Oct. 19, which wiped out $500 billion of wealth in one day, has made consumers jittery and less likely to purchase big-ticket items.

Some analysts are predicting that the recovery from the 1981-82 recession, which turned five years old this month, will not last through next year.

A survey of 49 top economists taken after the market crash found that 22 percent of them were now looking for a recession to begin in 1988, a prediction unlikely to cheer Republicans who hope to hold on to the White House in next year's election.

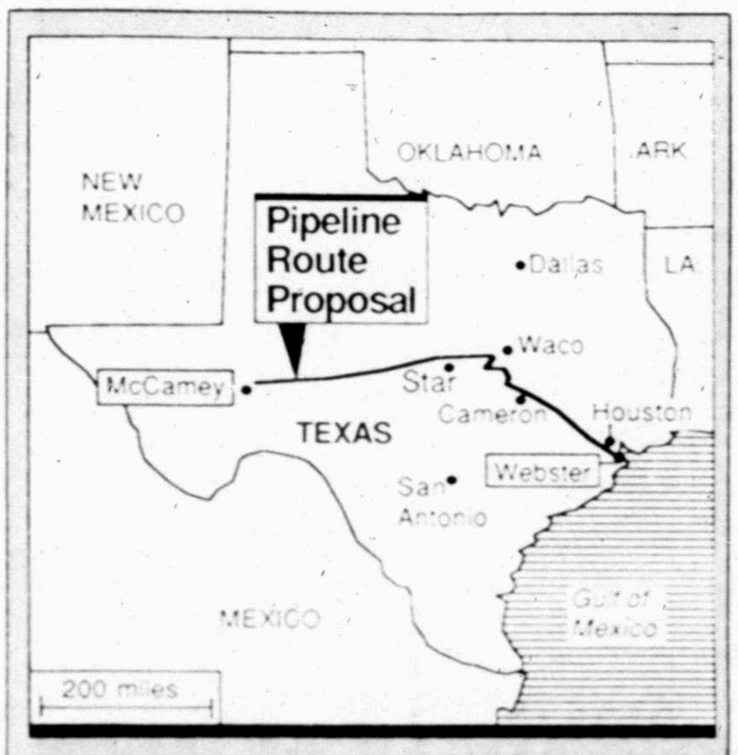

While the Reagan administration is still officially predicting GNP growth of 3.5 percent next year, even better than this year's expected growth, the survey of private economists done by Blue Chip Economic Indicators, an investment newsletter, found that analysts have shaved a full percentage point from their 1988 forecast because of the stock market decline. They now expect growth will slow to a crawl of just 1.9 percent.

The 4.1 percent growth in the summer was accomplished despite the fact that the country's trade deficit, after adjusting for inflation, turned down again after three consecutive quarterly improvements.

But the decline was a small one of $2.2 billion, caused primarily by a big jump in oil imports, which pushed total imports up at an annual rate of 16.3 percent. Still, U.S. exports shot up 19.4 percent, reflecting the fact that the fall in the value of the dollar has made American goods competitive once more on overseas markets.

The $2.2 billion deterioration in the trade deficit represented a revision from the initial report, which put the trade decline at $5.2 billion.

Business investment to expand and modernize production facilities showed a giant gain of 26.3 percent in the third quarter, the largest increase in four years. Analysts said this surge in investment reflected the improving fortunes of the manufacturing sector, but they said the increase is not likely to continue.

Waco route favored for All American Pipeline

WACO, Texas (AP) — The federal Bureau of Land Management says in a new report that a proposed All American Pipeline route that passes near Waco is the best of four choices it reviewed.

The proposed oil pipeline — sponsored by Celeron Oil & Gas Co. of Louisiana, a subsidiary of the Goodyear Tire and Rubber Co. — would stretch 486 miles from McCamey in West Texas to the Gulf Coast near Webster.

A Final Supplemental Environmental Impact Statement from the bureau says the Waco-area route presents fewer problems than three other alternatives and is the preferred choice.

The bureau's final decision will be announced in early January by Edward Hastey, California state director of the Bureau of Land Management, bureau spokeswoman Candy Johnson told the Waco Tribune-Herald Monday.

Last August, bureau spokesman William Haigh said pipeline builders agreed to abide by the bureau's environmental impact statement.

The new pipeline would expand a pipeline from California and is designed to funnel oil production surpluses in California to the underused refineries along the Texas coast.

The four alternatives include a northern route passing near Waco, a central route passing south of Austin, a southern route passing south of San Antonio and using existing pipelines or tankers.

During the past two years, the bureau conducted pipeline public hearings in Temple, Waco and other cities across Texas. Most testimony came from Cameron residents who opposed the pipeline because of pollution, negative effects on preserved prairie grass fields and destruction of property.

Crude oil spills are likely to occur about eight times over the life of the project and the average spill would be about 3,750 barrels, the environmental report said.

As early as last January the bureau stated a preference for the northern route, but this month it reinforced its position.

The northern route would pass just north of Star, Evant, Arnett, Gatesville, Oglesby and McGregor before turning southeast to pass near Moody, Eddy, Troy, Rogers, Buckholts, Cameron and Rockdale.

OPEC expansion sought

PARIS (AP) — The Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries should increase its membership to help stabilize world oil prices, Algerian oil officials told a petroleum industry conference Monday.

Mohamed Bayou, assistant director general of Sontrach, the Algerian state oil company, said OPEC needs to build a base of support for a more effective global strategy.

He said that in the past OPEC has missed the opportunity to change "its way of functioning, its way of looking at things" by not welcoming new oil-producing members to its ranks.

The director general of Sonatrach, Yousef Yousfi, amplified on the theme later in the conference.

"The weakness of OPEC is that it did not create an instrument of solidarity," he said, referring to past proposals at OPEC meetings that the organization invite other oil-producing countries, such as Mexico, Britain and Norway, to join its ranks.

"We couldn't do it and we didn't know how to do it," said Yousfi.

But, he stressed, membership in OPEC is the solution for those countries producing what is a politically and economically strategic commodity.

Maxus Energy sues firm, Boesky over insider leaks

DALLAS (AP) — Maxus Energy Corp. has sued speculator Ivan Boesky, the brokerage firm Kidder, Peabody & Co. and a former Kidder executive for $300 million, claiming leaked secrets drove up the price of a 1983 Maxus acquisition.

The suit filed Monday seeks actual damages of at least $300 million and unspecified punitive damages for alleged leaks by former Kidder Peabody executive Martin A. Siegel to Boesky about Maxus' 1983 acquisition of San Francisco-based Natomas Co.

Boesky, a central figure in Wall Street's insider trading scandal, is a principal defendant in a number of other civil suits by companies and investors who claim they were victimized by his greed.

The suit claims Boesky's purchase of Natomas stock drove up the price, causing Dallas-based Maxus to pay $300 million extra. The company said it would have scrapped the purchase had it known about the leak.

Meanwhile, Kidder Peabody filed countersuits Monday seeking judgments that it isn't liable for damages claimed in the Maxus suit, alleging that any wrongdoing stemmed from Boesky and a "single renegade Kidder Peabody employee."

But Maxus spokeswoman Ginger Shearburn said, "Siegel was not just any employee, he was co-head of their mergers and acquisitions division and was touted as an expert. We think the law makes Kidder responsible for Siegel's conduct."

NYMEX natural gas trade could commence in 1988

By FRANK TROMBLEY
Staff Writer

ODESSA — Dr. Arnold Safer, one of the men instrumental in setting up the oil and gasoline futures market for the New York Mercantile Exchange, says he expects trading in natural gas futures to begin about mid-1988.

Safer, president and founder of the Energy Futures Group of Bethesda, Md., said the application for interchange services at Katy, where actual delivery of gas sold must be made, is currently going through the regulatory process with final approval expected shortly.

In addressing about 40 members and guests attending the Permian Basin Economics Club monthly luncheon meeting at the Ramada Hotel in Midland Monday, Safer explained how events in the Persian Gulf, the price and supply of oil from that area of the world, relate to the price of natural gas.

Historically tracking price and production figures, Safer showed how increases in production by OPEC coutries have created oil surpluses that have driven the price of natural gas down.

According to Safer, OPEC coun-

INVESTORS' GUIDE

Fed banks makes little difference for customers

By BILL DOYLE

Q. We can remember when we would not do business with any bank that did not have a sign on its front door or window showing it was a member of the Federal Reserve System. These days, we can find no such signs and it seems that no one sitting in any bank knows or wishes to answer any question about being a member of the Federal Reserve System.

Can you explain this?

Doyle

A. There are approximately 14,000 commercial banks in this country. At last count, 5,844 were members of the Federal Reserve System. Besides that, there are some 3,000 "thrift institutions" — savings and loan associations and savings banks — none of which is a member of the Federal Reserve System.

There are 12 district Federal Reserve Banks around the country. Years ago, only member banks could borrow from their district Federal Reserve Banks. The federal Depository Institutions Deregulation and Monetary Control Act of 1980 changed that and many other rules. Now, all banks and thrifts can borrow from the Fed.

As far as customers are concerned, a bank or thrift's membership or non-membership in the Federal Reserve System makes virtually no difference. There's no reason to look for for a Federal Reserve System sign at a bank.

You should watch for a symbol showing membership in either the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. or the Federal Savings & Loan Insurance Corp. FDIC covers each depositor's money up to $100,000 at member banks and some thrifts. FSLIC provides the same assurance of safety at member thrifts.

Q. My husband and I have more than $100,000 in 15 percent certificate of deposit due to mature in 1992. This is a joint revocable trust account in our names, with our two children as beneficiary. Our savings and loan advised us it is insured up to $400,000.

I wrote to FSLIC and found the following statement in the brochure I received. "A testamentary/revocable trust account owned by a husband and wife, naming their two children as beneficiaries, would be insured to $400,000."

I constantly read advice not to keep more than $100,000 in one bank or S&L. Is there some "catch," making our CD not as safely insured as we think?

A. No catch. The $100,000 per depositor FSLIC coverage in that type of account extends to each of the two owners — you and your husband — and each of the two beneficiaries — your two children. The same rules apply to FDIC coverage.

This is one of the quirks of the federal deposit insurance system. There are other ways for a family to have more than $100,000 FSLIC or FDIC coverage at the same institution.

You can have one account in your name, one in your husband's name, one in joint names, one in your name in trust for him, one in his name in trust for you — each with $100,000 insurance. With children and grandchildren, the combinations go on and on.

Before any reader with a bundle of money rushes out to open such accounts, he or she should study the booklet explaining insurance coverage, which is available at most banks and thrifts.

NEW YORK (AP) — Speculators have driven up the price of crude oil at least temporarily, but market analysts say there's little evidence to support the increase.

The January-delivery price of West Texas Intermediate, the main U.S. crude, rose to $18.78 per 42-gallon barrel Monday on the New York Mercantile Exchange, up 22 cents from the $18.56 closing price Friday.

At one point during the day the price rose to $18.97 a barrel in speculative buying, but traders said underlying fundamentals of supply and demand quickly drove the price back down. In the absence of any significant economic news, the traders said, prices would probably remain in the $18 range.

Among refined products traded on the exchange Monday, wholesale unleaded gasoline rose 0.13 cent a gallon to 49.59 cents, and heating oil rose 0.27 cent a gallon to 55.74 cents.

Dollar rises in overseas trading

LONDON (AP) — The dollar rose in light European trading early today, boosted by expectations of improved U.S. gross national product figures for the third quarter.

Gold prices jumped nearly $5 an ounce in London and more than $7 in Zurich. Silver prices also rose sharply.

Dealers said they expected an upward revision in the GNP growth rate to about 4.3 percent from the original estimate of 3.8 percent.

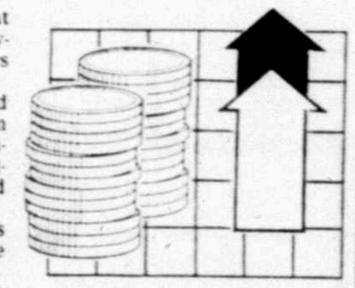

A sharp upward revision will give the dollar a short boost but is unlikely to have a lasting impact on the market because it reflects only the level of economic activity before the Oct. 19 stock market crash, dealers said.

"What we really care is what happened afterward, and what will happen next year, and these figures don't tell us anything about that," said a dealer in Frankfurt, West Germany.

In Tokyo, the dollar fell to a closing 134.93 Japanese yen, down 0.44 yen from Friday's close. Japanese markets were closed Monday for a national holiday.

In later London trading today, the dollar was quoted at 135.42 yen, up from 134.70 yen quoted in London late Monday.

The British pound fell to $1.7762 from $1.7865 late Monday.

Gold and silver prices steadied at higher levels in Europe after rallying in New York on Monday, dealers said.

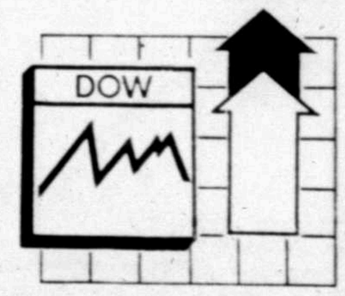

Gold opened in London at a bid price of $476 a troy ounce, up from $472 bid late Monday. At midmorning today, the city's five major bullion dealers fixed a recommended price of $476.95.

In Zurich, the noon bid price was $476.30, up from $469 bid late Monday.

Earlier, in Hong Kong, gold rose $8.25 to close at a bid $476.60, up from $468.35 bid at Monday's close.

Silver was quoted in London at a bid price of $6.93 a troy ounce, up from 6.65 dollars bid late Monday.

Stocks advance in quiet trading

NEW YORK (AP) — Stock prices chalked up a slight gain in quiet trading Monday as traders cautiously evaluated plans to narrow the federal budget deficit.

Trading set its slowest pace in six weeks.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials, up 18.24 points on Friday, rose another 9.45 to 1,923.08.

Advancing issues outnumbered declines by about 9 to 7 on the New York Stock Exchange, with 888 up, 687 down and 395 unchanged.

Big Board volume came to 143.16 million shares, down from 189.17 million Friday and the lightest total since a 141.87 million-share day Oct. 12, when many market participants were taking Columbus Day off.

Analysts said the budget proposals announced Friday by negotiators from the White House and Congress fell short of any dramatic action to revive confidence in the financial markets.

BUSINESS IN BRIEF

Frantics on the floor of the New York Stock Exchange has resulted in increased complaints from investors.

Securities Board flooded with complaints

DALLAS (AP) — The volume of complaints from investors who think they've been treated unfairly is reaching new highs since the Oct. 19 stock market collapse, State Securities Board officials say.

Since the Dow Jones industrial average plummeted 508 points, the board has gotten about 100 calls per week, double the usual number, and 10 written complaints per week, three times the weekly average.

"We've seen a significant increase in the calls, and I'm expecting to see an increase in follow-up complaints," said David Weaver, an attorney with the securities board's dealer registration division.

When a complaint indicates laws have been broken, Weaver said, investors are encouraged to file a written complaint with the securities board.

Panhandle Eastern partner can't make bond payments

HOUSTON (SWN) — Panhandle Eastern Corporation announced that its Lachmar shipping partnership unit did not make payment, due Nov. 16, of $5.3 million of principal and interest on certain long-term bonds (A) issued to finance one of its two, idle LNG tankers.

These bonds, used for the S. S. Lake Charles, are guaranteed by the U. S. Maritime Administration (MARAD) (B). Under this guarantee, the U. S. Treasury is obligated to pay bondholders any principal and interest which may be in default. In the current instance, an actual event of default will not occur until the expiration of a 30-day grace period on December 16, 1987.

A company spokesman said that MARAD officials have been informed of Lachmar's non-payment and that discussions are in progress with that agency to develop a mutually satisfactory plan for the future debt service arrangements for these two tankers. The spokesman said:

"These tankers were constructed to serve a U.S. LNG import project that is no longer in operation. They have a cost structure which makes them non-competitive in the world LNG trade, which has been depressed. While Lachmar has not denied its obligation to service the outstanding debt, it has no independent ability to improve its business status. These conditions make it unwise, as a matter of sound business judgement, for our affiliated companies to continue advancing funds to Lachmar.

"However, we are hopeful that the discussions with MARAD will result in new arrangements that recognize the unforseeable circumstances that have befallen these tankers."

As of September 30, 1987, $65 million of principal was outstanding on three series of bonds related to the S. S. Lake Charles. Additionally, $60 million principal was outstanding on the same date on two series of bonds related to the second tanker, the S. S. Louisiana. Pending the outcome of the MARAD discussions, no decision has been made with respect to the S.S. Louisiana bonds whose next debt service payment is due in March 1988.

In April 1987, MARAD filed suit contending that PEC, certain of its subsidiaries and two former Lachmar partners (C) are liable, along with Lachmar, for any default which may occur in bond payments. PEC responded to this litigation with a strong denial that it has any such liability.

The company said that the non-payment of the current debt by Lachmar will have no adverse effect on the financial condition of the company and its other subsidiaries. This action by Lachmar does not legally affect any other PEC asset, operations or contractual obligations.

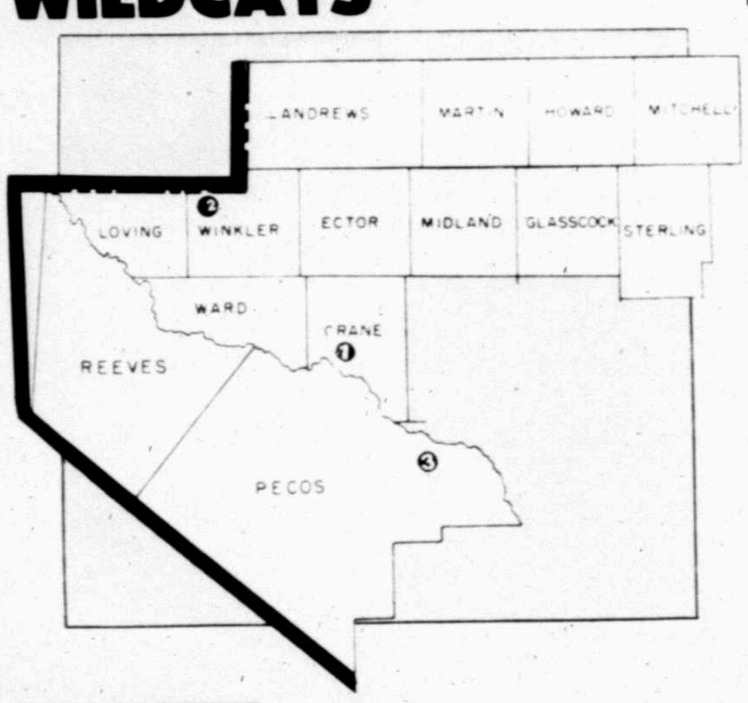

The two tankers have been laid up at Newport News, Virginia since April 1983. These tankers were constructed to provide 40 percent of the cargo capacity for the suspended LNG import project of PEC subsidiary, Trunkline LNG Company (TLC). Rapidly escalating LNG prices and vast changes in the U.S. natural gas market caused TLC to suspend operations in December 1983.

After acquiring 100-percent ownership of Lachmar in July 1986 in settlement of an arbitration case involving the non-use of the tankers after April 1983, PEC voluntarily advanced the funds necessary for the partnership to meet its debt service payments timely. During this period, PEC has advanced $34.2 million to Lachmar for this purpose. In addition, PEC has advanced $8.4 million to Lachmar to defray tanker layup costs and other expenses.

At the same time, a company spokesman emphasized that the Lachmar difficulties will have no effect upon PEC's commitment to implement its new LNG import program whose licensing is pending before two Federal agencies. The initial shipping for that program will be provided by Sonatrach, the national oil and gas company of Algeria.

Negotiations are in progress with potential users of LNG in the United States. PEC expects the new import program to be authorized and in operation during 1988.

EXPLORATION HIGHLIGHTS

Tipperary tests well to flow 803 barrels

From Staff Reports

TIPPERARY CORP., Midland, has announced the completion of an 803 barrel discovery in Lea County, four miles southeast of Lovington.

The No. 1 Tipperary SW/4-29 Unit was potentialed to flow 803 barrels of 41 gravity crude on a 23/64 inch choke from Strawn-Monteith perforations 11,089 to 11,170 ft.

Tipperary, the operator, developed the prospect and owns a 12.5 percent interest in the well and varying interests in the surrounding offsets. W. A. Moncrief Jr., with 62.5 percent, and BHP Petroleum (Americas), with 25 percent, are the other interest owners in the discovery well. Tipperary officials say there are no plans for offset drilling, though there are "some other possibilities."

★ Four miles southeast of Lovington in Lea County is the site of an 803 barrel Strawn discovery.

Tannehill discovery pumps 25 barrels oil

A modest Tannehill discovery has been recorded in Kent County, four miles from production in the Toni C field.

EDWIN S. NICHOLS EXPLORATIONS, INC., Meridian, completed the No. 1 Goswick to pump 25 barrels of 46 gravity crude and 80 barrels of water from perforations 3,793 to 3,814 ft. The interval was acidized with 750 gallonsof acid.

Permitted as a 4,500 ft. wildcat, the well was drilled to a total depth of 3,920 ft. and plugged back to 3,915 ft., where 4 1/2 inch casing was set.

The well topped the Tannehill at 3,740 ft. on ground elevation of 1,991 ft. Pay was topped at 3,740 ft.

OIL AND GAS DIGEST

Geodyne acquires interest in oil properties

TULSA (SWN) — Geodyne Resources, Inc. announced two acquisitions of interests in producing oil and gas properties on behalf of the partnership if sponsors through the Paine Webber/Geodyne Energy Income Programs. Total purchase price for the acquisitions was $9.1 million.

Geodyne acquired for its partnerships interests in 16 producing oil and gas fields located in Kansas and Texas. Average daily production attributable to the partnerships' interest is 600 barrels of oil and 360 mcf of gas. Total proved reserves for the partnership's interest in the properties is approximately 1.9 million barrels of oil and 1.35 billion cubic feet of gas.

These transactions bring total property acquisition for the quarter to $22.3 million.

Newman Brothers sells oil, gas properties

FORT WORTH (SWN) — American Cometra, Inc. announced the purchase of producing oil and gas properties from Newman Brothers Drilling Company of San Antonio, Skinner Corporation of Seattle and others. The properties include 59 leases containing estimated proved reserves of 17 billion cubic feet of gas and one million barrels of oil. The majority of the reserves are located in South Texas.

USOCO reaches agreement with Swiss firm

NEW YORK (SWN) — United States Oil Co. (USOCO) announced that it had reached and concluded an agreement with Panoco A.G. of Switzerland, whereby USOCO has acquired the exploration concession known as The Sbeitla Block, which measures 3,409 sq. km.2.

USOCO has assumed the financial exploration responsibilities and operatorship of the Block, which is in line with the contract.

The sliding peso could sustain spread of border plants.

TEXAS BUSINESS

Low wages sustain Texas border plants

By THOMAS C. HAYES
New York Times News Service

EL PASO — The rapid spread of foreign-owned assembly plants along the Mexican border will likely be sustained because of the latest plunge in the peso's value, industry officials here said.

The number of plants in Ciudad Juarez, a city of one million people across the Rio Grande from El Paso, has more than doubled since the peso's slide began in 1982. Moreover, employment has tripled in the plants to more than 100,000.

The main reason is the cheap cost of labor. Minimum wage rates fell to about 60 cents an hour this week, well below comparable rates in Southeast Asian assembly plants.

Almost all plants in Mexico pay the minimum wage because the government taxes earnings above that level at more than 5 percent, meaning employees would have even less money if their salaries were to increase.

"Low wage rates attracted us to the Juarez area," said Harold Frecker, managing director of a small plant operated by the United Technologies Corp. of Hartford, Conn., and Furukawa Electric of Tokyo.

The plant, which United Technologies and Furukawa operate as a joint venture, has 35 employees. Two months ago it began shipping wire assemblies to the Honda Motor Co.'s car-production plant in Marysville, Ohio.

Frecker said United Technologies, which employs 3,200 workers at seven sites in Ciudad Juarez, and Furukawa hope that the low costs at the Juarez plant will enable them to win orders from other Japanese auto manufacturers. "That's the formula," he said, adding that eventually the plant should employ 200 workers.

Plummeting oil revenues in 1982 precipitated the nation's worst economic crisis in 50 years when government officials said it was unlikely that the nation would be able to meet interest payments on more than $100 billion in foreign debt.

The result was a collapse of the peso from 26 to the dollar to about 1,000 last February. The peso's slide had continued gradually to about 1,700 pesos until last Wednesday, when it plunged to around 3,000 at border exchange houses. By Friday it had stabilized to about 2,500.

Most analysts and executives at the border plants said the recent plunge in the peso will prompt the government to raise the minimum wage before the end of December. While some analysts said this would not discourage manufacturers from expanding, they said the growth rate of new border plants was about to decline for other reasons.

Prof. Jeffrey Brannon, an economist and director of the Center for Inter-American Border Studies at the University of Texas in El Paso, said an anticipated slowdown in the American economy and high inflation in Mexico would slow investments at the border.

In addition, American labor unions last year stepped up their opposition to moves by American manufacturers, which include the major automobile companies, to Mexican assembly operations. They charged the practice is eliminating thousands of jobs in the United States.

Proponents of the plants argue that the lower costs help American companies compete with foreign rivals and that most parts suppliers remain in the United States.

William L. Mitchell, marketing vice president for Grupo Bermudez Industrial Park in Ciudad Juarez, said the number of plants in the United States supplying parts and raw materials to Mexican border plants rose to 14,159 last year, from about 6,000 in 1982. He estimated the number of employees in the U.S. plants rose to 219,000, from 100,000, in the same period.

These assembly plants, known as maquiladoras, originated in Ciudad Juarez in 1965 when a local businessman, Jaime Bermudez Cuaron, developed a successful, American-style industrial park.

tries do not want the price of oil too high or too low, but set in an area where member countries are assured a reasonable profit.

When the price of oil was in the $30 per barrel and above range, Safer noted, OPEC members were realizing in excess of $275 billion annually. In the $18-to-$20 range, he indicated, revenues would hover at about half that amount if the production share had continued in the 40 percent range.

But decreases in worldwide production share has severely impacted on the revenue of Middle-Eastern oil producing countries, which has led to cheating on quotas to generate more revenue.

Safer anticipates establishment of the natural gas futures market will "set an accepted value on gas." He believes that ultimately, the price of gas will be somewhere between $1.50 and $3 per million cubic feet. He also indicated belief the gas market will attract a lot of smaller traders.

Katy Interchange Services Inc. will be a joint venture of at least four, perhaps more, major pipeline companies.

Current contracts call for the delivery of 10 million cubic feet of natural gas per month. Sellers will be required to make arrangements to get their gas to the Katy interchange for delivery and buyers will have to make comparable arrangements to transport the purchased gas.

Touching on national energy policy, Safer said there is "no real control of energy in Washington D.C."

Those in oil producing states, such as Texas, he said, "are not being heard" in the nation's capital. "This is quite a change from the days of Sam Rayburn and Lyndon Johnson," he stated.

MAXUS

Maxus, formerly Diamond Shamrock Corp., said its suit stemmed from collusion between Boesky and Siegel, a former Kidder Peabody merger specialist who agreed to cooperate with authorities earlier this year.

The Maxus suit names Kidder Peabody because the investment firm was Maxus' financial adviser at the time it was planning the takeover. Siegel personally headed all of Kidder Peabody's work on the plan, Maxus said.

The Securities and Exchange Commission has alleged that Siegel disclosed to Boesky Diamond Shamrock's plans to acquire the energy concern, Natomas Co. Boesky then bought large amounts of Natomas stock and sold them at a profit.

Boesky's attorney, Theodore A. Levine of Washington, declined comment on the suit, as did lawyers for Siegel. A Kidder attorney said he had no comment on the suit.

The Maxus suit claims Boesky bought more than $12 million of Natomas' stock, forcing the price up artificially. Maxus said after the purchase it has had to write off more than $900 million in Natomas assets.

Formerly one of Wall Street's best-known speculators, Boesky paid a record $100 million fine to the SEC a year ago to settle charges of insider trading, the illicit use of private information to profit in securities deals. He also pleaded guilty earlier this year to conspiring to lie to the SEC.

Boesky's disclosures led to the arrest of Siegel, who pleaded guilty in February to tax evasion and illegal stock trading. Both men face prison terms of up to five years, but neither has been sentenced.

At least a dozen civil lawsuits have been filed against Boesky and some of his alleged co-conspirators, including 10 class-action suits by shareholders who claimed they lost money because of insider trading by Boesky and others.

Earlier this month, those class actions were consolidated into one massive lawsuit that is expected to be heard soon in U.S. District Court in New York.

The new First City Bull and Bear CD.℠ The risk-free way to gain from the stock market.

With a guaranteed minimum rate, plus the opportunity to capitalize on stock market changes, your investment can only go up.

Now you can have the security of a bank CD, and potentially higher-than-CD returns, in one no-lose CD package.

The new First City Bull and Bear CD pays interest depending on which way you think the stock market will go during your CD's term, based on the nationally recognized Standard & Poor's 500 Index. And your principal is never at stake.

There are two ways to gain: choose The Bull CD if you think the market will rise between your opening date and maturity; or choose The Bear CD if you think it will fall. Your interest will be calculated based on a percentage of the change in the official S & P 500 Index over your investment period. But no matter which way the market goes, you're guaranteed a base rate of interest.

And, unlike actually investing in stocks or mutual funds, you pay no fees, commissions or other charges. You can invest as little as $1,000. Choose either 6-month or 12-month terms. And receive the security of FDIC insurance.

Call First City or come in today for full details on the First City Bull and Bear CD. The risk-free way to gain from the stock market.

WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 25, 1987

YOUR BIRTHDAY TODAY: An excellent financial opportunity will cross your path. The idea of self-employment becomes very attractive. Keep working at a relationship and it will eventually get back on track. Children and pets figure in your summer plans. Bide your time and a merger will begin to pay rich dividends for you and your family. You will soon be in a position to make better investments.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: industrialist Andrew Carnegie, actress Kathryn Crosby, Redskins coach Joe Gibbs, superstar Tina Turner, Hall of Famer "Joltin'" Joe DiMaggio, actors Ricardo Montalban and Rene Enriquez, Pope John XXIII, temperance leader Carrie Nation.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): You need to get out of a situation that has become somewhat precarious. Concentrate on positive activites. You learn something very important by accident. Clear up confusion over a family matter.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): It is time to move in a new direction. You need a special outlet for your wonderful ideas and enormous energy. Find a project that is completely different from anything you have ever done.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Travel over the weekend is likely. Be sure your reservations are in order and your car is in good condition. Romance is in the air, making concentration at work difficult. Be on time.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): You are a romantic and that is good, but it is time to concentrate on your career. Extra effort is required today. Find out everything there is to know about a competitor.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Try to get your financial goals into clearer focus. You will be able to combine business with pleasure! A busy social schedule will keep you on the run until Christmas. Return all calls.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Romantic ties or domestic situation could stir up problems. Consult an older, wiser person. Joint resources should be safeguarded against losses. Resist an urge to gamble.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Words are cheap. Do not be fooled by someone's smooth talk. An exaggeration or deception could cost you dearly. Deal with reputable people only. Renew ties with an old friend while you can.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): A budget is crucial to the success of an idea you are promoting. Do your homework before making a proposal. Welcome the reappearance of a former associate.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Routine tasks should go smoothly. Take a brief trip with an interesting companion. Be friendly but not forward. Now may not be the right time for you two to get together.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Rely on experts' advice on real estate. Your relationship with romantic partner can be revitalized now. Be more attentive. Short business trips look promising. Get in touch with prominent people.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Avoid becoming entangled in a struggle between two rival factions. Let someone else act as mediator. You need to be on guard against deception when dealing with comparative strangers. Pursue romance.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Maintain your poise in unfamiliar situations. You need to keep your cool if your ideas are questioned. Specialized knowledge or an unusual talent boosts your income.

The ranks of our contemporaries continue to thin. One of the game's all-time greats, B. Jay Becker, died quietly at his home some six weeks ago. As a player, writer and teacher he had few peers. When the American Bridge League named its original 10 Life Masters in 1936, Becker was No. 6.

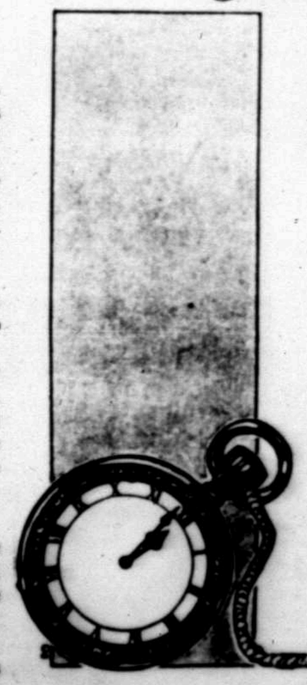

So much will be written about his skills that there is no need for us to extol him further in this column. Rather than reprint one of the many fine hands he played over the years, we have chosen one where he and his partner were the goats—but one which Mr. Becker, as he was known to his friends, would relate with wry humor.

The hand was played during the qualifying rounds of the 1966 World Open Pairs championship, and the hero was Fadi Bustros of Beirut, who held the West cards. When Mr. Becker opened one diamond and his partner responded one heart, Bustros slipped in an innocent two club psychic overcall. It succeeded beyond his wildest dreams.

After Mr. B carefully rebid his diamonds, South's two no trump response made it obvious that West had psyched. So Mr. Becker simply bid what he thought he could make—six clubs! That seemed to thoroughly confuse South, who bid six spades. Bustros was prepared to defend that contract, and although North improved matters somewhat by converting to six no trump, Bustros was equally enchanted with that contract. He did not double, because he did not want to chase his opponents to seven of a minor. As the cards lie, seven clubs can be made. By the time he made the opening lead, Bustros was almost falling off his chair with laughter, and Mr. Becker had a tale that became one of his favorites.

It is not often we meet a modest, humorous, intelligent man. It makes his loss harder to bear.

WATCHES

Mr. Sears and Mr. Roebuck got together because of a classified ad!

In the late 1800's, Richard W. Sears had a pretty good business going selling watches and needed someone to handle his watch repairs. He placed a classified ad in the newspaper and Alvah C. Roebuck got the job. That's how the nation's biggest retailer got started... through a classified ad!

If you need a good helper, try advertising in our classifieds. Who knows? You may spark the beginning of something big!

Bruce Willis, Demi Moore married

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Actor Bruce Willis and actress Demi Moore were married in a private ceremony in Las Vegas, Nev., last weekend, says a spokesman for Willis.

No other details about the ceremony or guests were disclosed. The couple will live in Willis' Malibu beach home, said spokesman Paul Bloch.

Willis, 32, is shooting the movie "Diehard" in Los Angeles. "Moonlighting," the ABC series in which Willis plays a wise-cracking detective opposite Cybill Shepherd, resumes shooting in January.

Miss Moore, 24, starred in the movies "St. Elmo's Fire" and "About Last Night...."

NEW YORK (AP) — "Cosby Show" actor Malcolm Jamal-Warner, who plays the adopted son of a Roman Catholic priest in a made-for-TV movie, has donated $5,000 to the building fund for the priest's church.

Jamal-Warner made the surprise presentation to the Rev. George Clements on Monday, as the two answered questions from religious leaders about the NBC movie "The Father Clements Story," to be broadcast next month.

The movie is a dramatization of the real-life story of Clements, who is portrayed by Louis Gossett Jr.

A 1986 fire destroyed Clements' church in Chicago. Jamal-Warner donated his fee for a cameo appearance on NBC's "Matlock" to the rebuilding project.

WASHINGTON, Ind. (AP) — A stolen $23 street sign honoring ex-national security adviser John M. Poindexter has brought an eight-day jail sentence for the man who argued the theft was protected under his right to free speech.

"I'm very pleased, very pleased," said William T. Breeden, who could have been sentenced to a year in prison and fined $5,000. "Given the parameters of justice that we have, I think it was a fair trial."

Breeden, a 38-year-old part-time janitor, also was ordered Monday to perform 80 hours of community service.

He admitted taking the sign in nearby Odon last Thanksgiving, two days after Poindexter, a native of the town of 1,400 people, resigned amid disclosures in the Iran-Contra affair.

Breeden said he was holding the sign for a $30 million ransom to protest U.S. support for the Nicaraguan rebels and Poindexter's role in the affair. He had claimed his action was protected by his constitutional right to free speech.

LAS VEGAS, Nev. (AP) — It was a homecoming for entertainer Kenny Rogers, who returned to the flashy casino where he once booked talent.

Rogers is a headliner at the Golden Nugget Hotel and Casino these days, but reminisced Sunday about when he played the Glitter Gulch casino's bar, the Gold Strike Lounge, and helped book entertainment there in the mid-1970s.

"I was making $11,000 a week in those days," he said. "But I was doing 21 shows a week, working six nights a week. And I had to pay all my own expenses, pay my band, everything."

And today? "I make that much a song now," he said with a grin. "The trick is to sing a lot of songs."

Entertainers Diana Ross, Jack Jones, Tommy Smothers and comedian Yakov Smirnoff joined the crowd.

BRENTWOOD, Tenn. (AP) — Country music singer Larry Gatlin is lending his name and talents to a rally for opponents of race track gambling.

Gatlin, who lives in this Nashville suburb, is to declare his opposition to pari-mutuel betting at tonight's rally, the organization Williamson Countians Against Gambling said in a news release.

Williamson County voters will decide Dec. 8 whether to approve pari-mutuel wagering in the county.

Gatlin, and his brothers Steve and Rudy, are known for hits such as "All the Gold in California" and "Broken Lady."

Voters in neighboring Rutherford and Davidson counties have voted against the proposal this year.

MEXICO CITY (AP) — Pop singer Linda Ronstadt says she learned in preparing her latest album that Mexican music is "joyous and triumphant."

"It isn't happy music," she said in an interview with the English-language daily Mexico City News published Monday. "Happiness is something a woman in Beverly Hills feels when she finds a pink nail varnish to go with her new pink sweater.

"Mexican music is joyous and triumphant," she said, "and joy is an emotion with many components: terror as well as gratitude."

The album is called "Canciones de Mi Padre," or "Songs of My Father." Ms. Ronstadt spoke with The News in the Pacific resort of Acaculco after performing the Spanish-language songs with a mariachi band at the closing night concert of the Acapulco Film Festival on Nov. 17.

The singer's father is of Mexican descent. She recalled that she often heard the songs during her childhood in Arizona.

Contra leaders drop plans for Managua trip

SAN JOSE, Costa Rica (AP) — Two Nicaraguan rebel leaders gave up plans to return to Managua to deliver a cease-fire counter-proposal today after Nicaragua's leftist Sandinista government told them to stay out.

Alfonso Robelo, one of two rebel leaders who hoped to deliver the counterproposal, said the U.S-backed Contra rebels would instead give their cease-fire plan to the Vatican ambassador in San Jose to deliver to Nicaragua.

Robelo and Azucena Ferrey, both directors of the rebel umbrella organization known as the Nicaraguan Resistance, had been named by fellow rebel leaders earlier Monday to deliver the insurgents' cease-fire proposal to Managua.

But Robelo said later that it had become clear that he and Mrs. Ferrey would be unable to enter Nicaragua as planned because the government opposed the visit.

In Managua, President Daniel Ortega said Monday that the two would have to renounce the insurgency and ask for amnesty to come to Nicaragua.

Robelo, once a ranking member of the Sandinista government, and Mrs. Ferrey said they would not accept amnesty.

He told reporters that regional airlines and charter flight companies refused to carry them. He said it would be useless to try to enter Nicaragua by land at any border crossing.

Robelo said the Vatican ambassador in San Jose would transmit their messages to Nicaragua's Roman Catholic primate, Cardinal Miguel Obando y Bravo, who has agreed to mediate talks between the government and the rebels.

Robelo said the rebels would deliver two documents, one a letter "in which we describe in detail what we think the role of the cardinal should be in the (peace) process, and the other is our full proposal on a cease fire."

The Contras have long insisted that cease-fire talks be held in Managua under the mediation of Obando y Bravo.

Ortega, who delivered the Sandinistas' cease-fire proposal to the cardinal during a meeting in Washington on Nov. 11, has said the talks should be held in the United States because it backs the Contras.

Alfredo Cesar, another member of the Resistance directorate, said the Contras had promised Obando y Bravo they would not make the proposal public, but called it "aimed at ending the war in a serious way and achieving democracy for our country."

Cesar noted the Contras already had informally rejected the Sandinista plan, which calls for a month-long cease fire starting Dec. 5, as "a call for our unconditional surrender."

Under the government proposal, the estimated 10,000 armed Contras inside Nicaragua would be confined during the cease-fire period to three areas totaling about 4,000 square miles.

They would not be allowed to receive any military aid, and any food, clothing, medicine or other humanitarian aid would be distributed to them by neutral international agencies.

Rightist leader denies link to cleric's death

D'Aubuisson says he didn't order archbishop's murder

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador (AP) — Right-wing leader Roberto D'Aubuisson denied he ordered the 1980 assassination of Archbishop Oscar Arnulfo Romero and said President Jose Napoleon Duarte's allegations were politically motivated.

D'Aubuisson said Monday the Duarte government implicated him in Romero's 1980 slaying to shore up political power after the return of exiled leftist opposition leaders Guillermo Ungo and Ruben Zamora.

Ungo arrived Monday night and said leftist rebels want to resume peace negotiations with Duarte's centrist, U.S.-backed government.

"With the arrival of of Mr. Zamora and Mr. Ungo...to me it's a very clear strategy the Christian Democrats are carrying out," said D'Aubuisson, a 42-year-old former National Guard major. Duarte is the leader of the Christian Democratic Party.

Duarte said the man who drove the getaway car in the Romero slaying was willing to testify. The president identified the man Monday as Amado Antonio Garay, and said Garay overheard that D'Aubuisson ordered the killing.

D'Aubuisson, who said he was not in El Salvador during the killing, said Duarte was trying to hide his failure to enact social programs and follow the Central American peace plan, designed to end the 8-year-old civil war with leftist guerrillas.

Ungo, leader of a civilian group allied with the rebels, told a news conference that his Democratic Revolutionary Front and the leftist rebels, grouped in the Farabundo Marti National Liberation Front, had offered "to renew the dialogue" in Mexico on Dec. 5.

He said the proposal was sent to Duarte through the Roman Catholic archbishop, Arturo Rivera y Damas, who is acting as a mediator between the government and rebels. Ungo said he did not plan to meet directly with Duarte during his trip to El Salvador.

Roberto D'Aubuisson

There was no immediate reaction from the government.

Talks between the two sides on a cease-fire and other measures to bring peace under the new regional accord were interrupted Oct. 26 when unidentified gunmen killed Herbert Ernesto Anaya, the president of the Human Rights Commission.

Leftists blamed the assassination on right-wing death squads.

Ungo, the president of the Democratic Revolutionary Front, and Zamora, the group's vice president, said they were visiting El Salvador to examine the possibilities of returning home permanently to work for political change. Zamora arrived Saturday.

"We are walking a hard and difficult road and you know it very well, after so many years of pain and suffering," Ungo told 3,000 cheering admirers who met him at El Salvador International Airport.

"The crime against Monsignor Romero has been resolved. We know those who did it, we know who gave the order. We know who executed it."
— Salvadoran President Jose Napoleon Duarte

Ungo and Zamora, who were members of a civilian-military junta, fled El Salvador in 1980 under threats from right-wing extremists.

Ungo had been Duarte's running mate in a Christian Democratic-leftist coalition that won the 1972 presidential election, but the military took power before they could take office. Duarte was elected president in 1984.

Duarte said it is up to judicial authorities to investigate the accusations against D'Aubuisson and to decide whether to bring him to trial.

D'Aubuisson is a deputy in the 60-member National Assembly. He heads the Republican Nationalist Alliance or ARENA, an ultra-rightist group that has opposed Duarte's government.

"The crime against Monsignor Romero has been resolved. We know those who did it, we know who gave the order. We know who executed it," Duarte said.

"We have a composite portrait of the person who was the assassin. The case has been solved."

Duarte quoted Garay as saying he overheard Capt. Alvaro Saravia telling D'Aubuisson, "We carried out what has been planned, the killing of Monsignor Arnulfo Romero." The president said Garay quoted D'Aubuisson as replying, "You shouldn't have done it yet."

Saravia allegedly responded, "We did it because you gave us the order," said Duarte, quoting Garay.

Duarte said Saravia retired from the army shortly before the crime, and is now in the United States. He said his government will request Saravia's extradition.

Romero was assassinated March 24, 1980, as he was saying Mass at a small chapel at a hospice for the terminally ill. Police said a sniper shot him in the heart and he died instantly.

The Roman Catholic archbishop had been an outspoken critic of the military-civilian junta in power at the time and was a champion of the poor.

D'Aubuisson has been linked to death squad murders that in 1981 stood at 1,000 per month. This year, Alfredo Cristiani, secretary-general of ARENA, said D'Aubuisson was "easy to blame" because of his past as an intelligence officer.

D'Aubuisson drew opposition from moderates and leftists and support from conservative sectors for his anti-communist stand during his failed presidential bid against Duarte in 1984.

Former U.S. Ambassador Robert E. White told a U.S. congressional committee in 1984 that intelligence reports indicated "beyond any reasonable doubt" that D'Aubuisson "planned and ordered the assassination" of Romero.

Human rights groups estimate that more than 65,000 people, most of them civilians, have been killed in the eight-year civil war.

The Central American peace plan, signed Aug. 7 by five presidents in the region, calls for cease-fires, amnesties, democratic reforms and an end to outside support for insurgents.

Haitian electoral council says violence won't delay elections

From Wire Reports

PORT-AU-PRINCE, Haiti — The Independent Electoral Council said arson and gunfire attacks on its headquarters and other sites would not force it to delay Sunday's elections.

Two people were killed and 30 wounded Monday when mobs attacked a market, stores and the offices of the council and a presidential candidate.

Hospital sources, speaking on condition of anonymity, said some of the injured were beaten, others slashed with machetes and others were shot.

An old man was reported beaten to death and another person died after an attack on a building housing refugees.

Pierre-Paul Marette, the election council's director of civic education, said the council is "working if nothing happened. To delay the election would only prolong the violence."

Armed arsonists also smashed cars, shattered storefront windows and burned piles of tires at intersections. Most stores and businesses shut down.

The violence appeared to be aimed at blocking or disrupting the first free national elections in 30 years.

Balloting is for a president and National Assembly to replace the military-dominated junta that has ruled this impoverished Caribbean nation since Jean-Claude Duvalier fled to exile in France in February 1986.

Duvalier's ouster ended a harsh, 29-year dynasty of Francois "Papa Doc" Duvalier and his son. There are 23 presidential candidates.

"Last Friday, I would have told you everything was running fine," said Dr. Louis Roy, who is coordinating the efforts of some 30,000 volunteer poll workers. "But today I don't know. Now we are on a day-to-day basis."

In some of the attacks Monday, witnesses said, the assailants shouted, "Long live the army and down with the KEP," the Creole acronymn for the national electoral council. The same message suddenly appeared on Monday in red letters on many walls in the capital.

Some Haitians said they feared the introduction of this slogan might be an attempt to set the stage for an intervention in the elections by the armed forces.

"They are trying to create chaos so the army will be able to say it has to intervene and we cannot have elections," said Alain Rocourt, the treasurer of the electoral council and also the head of the Methodist Church in Haiti.

The army-dominated provisional government headed by Lt. Gen. Henri Namphy has been feuding with the electoral council since last summer when the general tried to take responsibility for conducting the elections away from the council in violation of Haiti's new constitution.

No more than token protection has been provided for the election officials and their offices, and the council members have frequently accused Namphy of not doing his duty. Until last week, he had refused to provide any material support at all for the elections.

No one claimed responsibility for the latest pre-election attacks, but supporters of the old regime were blamed.

A mob fired guns in the air outside the council's new offices and flung a gasoline bomb against the building, damaging an electrical transformer. No one was reported injured.

On Nov. 3, the electoral council's old offices and the business of a council member were set on fire hours after the council disqualified 12 presidential candidates for their ties to the ousted Duvalier dictatorship.

A Fire Department lieutenant, speaking on condition of anonymity, said arsonists destroyed the market.

"Armed men came and chased residents away while others spread gasoline all over and set the place on fire," he said.

The vice president of the Movement for the Installation of Democracy in Haiti said about 50 unidentified men shot and stoned the office of presidential candidate Marc Bazin. No one was injured.

"I have no doubt they were Duvalierists, the same people who burned down the market last night," said Francois Benoit. "We called the police and army but so far they have not responded."

The army, most of whose top officers were appointed by Duvalier and never replaced, has been criticized along with the government for secretly conducting the attacks, tolerating them or being powerless to prevent them.

The attack was the most recent act of violence in the Haitian capital as the Caribbean nation heads toward its first scheduled national elections in 30 years.

China names Li Peng as acting premier

Li Peng

BEIJING (AP) — China today named Li Peng, a 59-year-old technocrat, as acting premier to replace Zhao Ziyang, who left the post to become head of the Communist Party.

The standing committee of the National Peoples' Congress, China's legislature, followed Zhao's suggestion in appointing Li to the nation's most powerful government job, the official Xinhua News Agency said.

Li, a Soviet-trained electrical engineer, has been called a conservative who believes in Soviet-style central planning. He recently shrugged off that label as a "misunderstanding" and in public has always supported the market-oriented reforms pushed by Zhao and China's senior leader, Deng Xiaoping.

Although ultimate authority in China comes from the Communist Party, the premier, as head of government, is responsible for running the economy and looking after civil, public security and educational affairs.

Zhao, premier since 1980, was formally named Communist Party general secretary at a major party congress that ended earlier this month and resigned as premier.

Li, adopted son of the late Premier Chou En Lai, has been one of five vice premiers since 1983.

He is virtually assured of being officially named Communist China's fourth premier — following Chou, Hua Guofeng and Zhao — when the National Peoples' Congress holds its annual full session next March.

Li has been the top contender for the post since January, when Zhao became acting party chief following the forced resignation of Hu Yaobang. Hu was blamed for not curbing pro-democracy student demonstrations.

Li's appointment today puts the concluding touches on a major rejuvenation of party leadership pushed by Deng at the just-concluded party congress.

Deng, 83, led a major exodus of aging party leaders in retiring from several of his top posts. The Politburo and its Standing Committee, the center of power in the party, were revamped to bring in younger leaders like Li, who gained one of the five spots on the Standing Committee.

Li is expected to hew to China's foreign policy of slowly improving long-strained relations with Moscow while relying on Western investment and technology in its modernization drive.

He has shown an avid interest in absorbing more Western technology and know-how and has been one of China's most accessible leaders for Western visitors.

In 1985, he made a lengthy visit to the United States with President Li Xiannian. He was a guest at the White House and made a nationwide tour of hydroelectric and nuclear power stations and California's silicon valley high-tech are.

Panamanian judge's death rallies opposition

By LARRY ROHTER
New York Times News Service

PANAMA — The mysterious shooting death of a supreme court justice here has become a cause celebre that has raised questions about the ability of a military government already accused of political assassination, election rigging and vast corruption to administer justice impartially.

The justice, Camilo Octavio Perez, died just before dawn Oct. 31 when he was hit in the chest at close range with a pair of .38 bullets fired by a private security guard. The case continues to reverberate throughout Panamanian society as contradictory accounts of the shooting and the events preceding it circulate.

The shooting occurred amid Panama's worst political crisis in years. This country of 2.2 million people has been unsettled by street demonstrations and general strikes since June, when Gen. Manuel Antonio Noriega, the military leader, was accused by his cashiered second in command of murdering political rivals, profiting from drug trafficking and falsifying the results of the 1984 presidential election.

According to the official version of events, Perez spent most of the night at a restaurant and bar in downtown Panama City. Shortly after 4 a.m., while walking on a major downtown street, he is said to have been assaulted by two homosexual prostitutes, who robbed him of a gold chain he always wore.

The authorities say Perez drew a pistol from an ankle holster and chased the prostitutes down the street, ducking into the entrances of buildings looking for them. He entered the vestibule of an apartment building brandishing his gun and was shot "within seconds" by the building's security guard, they say.

Politically, Perez was not directly associated with the opposition to Noriega. He was an active supporter of Gen. Omar Torrijos Herrera, founder of the military regime, and also wrote a popular column for a government-controlled newspaper.

"Let's say that the government was not at all involved," a lawyer affiliated with the Panamanian Committee for Human Rights said. "But they have made it appear, through their behavior, that they did have something to do with it and are trying to hide something."

But in recent months, Perez had made it increasingly clear that he was disenchanted with the military-controlled government's conduct. In several important Supreme Court cases he simply abstained from voting, in what was interpreted here as an expression of disapproval of government tactics.

Shortly before his death, he publicly criticized a new press law that would severely limit the right of expression here. Friends and fellow lawyers say he had also complained privately about the judiciary's lack of independence and of political pressures by the military on judges and prosecutors.

In an interview here recently, Attorney General Carlos Augusto Villalaz said the shooting of Perez had no political connotation.

But lawyers, journalists, diplomats and human rights groups say the case has been handled in a way that leaves many important questions unanswered and raises major doubts about the government's commitment to solve it.

"Let's say that the government was not at all involved," a lawyer affiliated with the Panamanian Committee for Human Rights said. "But they have made it appear, through their behavior, that they did have something to do with it and are trying to hide something."

A European ambassador said: "This has all the appearance of a put-up job, whether for political reasons or otherwise. But things being the way they are here, I don't think we'll ever know what really happened."

Lawyers and friends of the Perez family said they found inexplicable a government statement that the body of Perez, who was well known in legal and press circles here, could not be identified for several hours after the shooting. They also cited as irregular a delay of almost 24 hours in notifying the family of the death.

A close friend of the family, who asked not to be identified, said relatives had gone to the scene of the shooting as soon as they were notified and found pools of blood in a stairway. Official reports, however, say that Perez never got beyond the hallway of the building and that no blood was found in the stairwell.

Later, a doctor asked by the family to observe the autopsy of Perez was denied permission to attend, on the ground that Panamanian law prohibits the presence of outsiders. But friends of Perez say the family called the doctor only after the authorities had invited them to send an observer.

Authorities said identification of Perez had been complicated by the fact he was found with no wallet or identification. But lawyers who knew Perez well said they believe he used a credit card to pay his bar bill just minutes before he was killed.

Perez's wallet was later found beneath his mattress. Villalaz said the bartender who served Perez had not been questioned "because he has been ill."

Perez's two sons and daughter declined to comment on their father's shooting. But in remarks to Panamanian newspapers earlier this month, one son, Mauro, said: "The manner in which my father died seems very strange. He was someone who defended justice and human rights. He simply would not have acted that way."

The investigating prosecutor in the case, Rafael Guerrero, declined to answer questions about the shooting. He said he could not recall details of the case without the investigation file, which he said he did not have.

"I no longer have the authority to discuss this case," Guerrero said in a brief telephone interview. "The evidence has been remanded to a higher authority."

An 18-year-old security guard, Juan Miguel Godoy Hernandez, is being held in the case. According to authorities, Godoy began work as a night watchman for the First Security Agency only three nights before Perez was killed.

In declarations to the Panamanian press shortly after the killing, Godoy said he had "never fired a gun in my life" before shooting Perez. The authorities said Godoy had been unemployed before he was hired as a security guard and had been a student before that.

The agency for which the guard worked is said by lawyers, diplomats and human rights groups here to be controlled by senior members of the Panama Defense Forces, including the head of the National Department of Investigation. Calls to First Security Agency requesting an interview with the agency's director were not returned.

WORLD IN BRIEF

Colombia delays extradition of known cocaine trafficker

BOGOTA, Colombia (AP) — The government said Jorge Luis Ochoa, the alleged godfather of Colombia's cocaine traffickers, will not be extradited to the United States until he has served 20 months here for illegally importing bulls.

Justice Minister Enrique Low made the announcement Monday night, 24 hours after a dozen gunmen shot up a newspaper editor's house and left a note threatening to plunge Colombia into a bloodbath if Ochoa is turned over to the United States for trial.

Colombian authorities and the U.S. Drug Enforcement Administration say Ochoa, 38, is the chief of Colombia's cocaine traffickers.

Ochoa was captured Saturday on a western Colombia highway by police who were manning a checkpoint for contraband. He was under heavy guard Monday night at an army base in the capital of Bogota.

The justice minister said Ochoa must first serve a sentence handed down last year by a customs judge in Cartagena for bringing more than 100 fighting bulls into Colombia without paying import taxes.

Asked about the attack on the house of Juan Gomez, the editor of El Colombiano of Medellin, and the threat to kill Colombian government officials and politicians, the justice minister said only that he thought it was "unusual."

India ends cease-fire

NEW DELHI, India (NYT) — India Monday ended its unilateral cease-fire in Sri Lanka two days after it began, charging that ethnic Tamil guerrillas had failed to respond positively to the gesture.

In announcing the end of the cease-fire, an Indian spokesman said the main guerrilla group, the Liberation Tigers of Tamil Eelam, "is now insisting on a number of unacceptable preconditions" before considering India's demand that it surrender its arms as part of any political settlement.

In addition, the spokesman charged that the Liberation Tigers had themselves continued acts of violence, including the killing of two Tamil leaders Monday in an effort to intimidate the Tamil population in northern Sri Lanka into not cooperating with Indian forces on the island.

Although Tamils are numerous in northern and eastern Sri Lanka, they are far outnumered on the island as a whole by the Sinhalese ethnic majority, which also dominates the government and armed forces.

About 20,000 Indian troops are in Sri Lanka to enforce a peace accord reached by India and Sri Lanka in July in the four-year-old Sri Lankan civil war. Under its terms, Sri Lanka agreed to limited autonomy in the north and east if the guerrillas dropped their demand for an independent state and surrendered their weapons to India.

U.S. to pay its debt to U.N.

UNITED NATIONS (AP) — The United States soon will pay $90 million of the $342.8 million in dues it owes to the United Nations, allowing the world body to pay staff salaries next month, U.N. officials said.

The United States said informally the total amount to be paid will not be known until Congress votes an appropriation in mid-December, Francois Giuliani, spokesman for the U.N. secretary-general, said Monday.

Justice team searching U.N. war crimes' files

UNITED NATIONS (AP) — The Justice Department's Nazi-hunting unit is sifting through U.N. war crimes archives containing facts and allegations about the World War II activities of 36,000 people, including former U.N. chief Kurt Waldheim.

Six researchers from the Justice Department unit looked through the documents Monday, the first day the world body took the wraps off files of the United Nations War Crimes Commission, which completed work in 1949.

The researchers declined to say whether the files contain the name of Josef Schwammberger, an elderly Austrian recently arrested on a ranch in Argentina and alleged to be a Nazi SS captain.

But the World Jewish Congress, hailing the opening of the files, said Schwammberger's name is in the archives.

"There is, indeed, a U.N. war crimes file on Schwammberger," said Elan Steinberg, director of the World Jewish Congress. He told The Associated Press that his organization has obtained the declassified U.S. Army master list of wanted war criminals from the U.S. Archives. That list includes a notation of the U.N. war crimes file for each individual named.

"We have the Army list and know the U.N. file numbers, making it impossible to hide the existence of files," said Steinberg, predicting some "shocking disclosures" of more big names.

He said there are six files on Nazi leader Adolf Hitler, which could be of great historical importance, and more than one file on Alois Brunner who was Adolf Eichmann's lieutenant, now said to be living in Syria.

But he said the first file to be sought by his investigators will be that of Waldheim, the U.N. secretary-general from 1972 to 1981. Waldheim is now president of Austria.

"This is for symbolic reasons to demonstrate that had these files been opened, he never would have been secretary-general," Steinberg said.

Waldheim was an officer in a German army unit in the Balkans in World War II that was accused of sending Jews to death camps. He has denied any wrongdoing. The United States has barred him from entering the country.

The U.N. files also are said to contain the names of 1,100 Jews from Luxembourg, where they were sent and where they were killed. For years they have been listed as missing. "Now their relatives will know and this has humanitarian significance," he said.

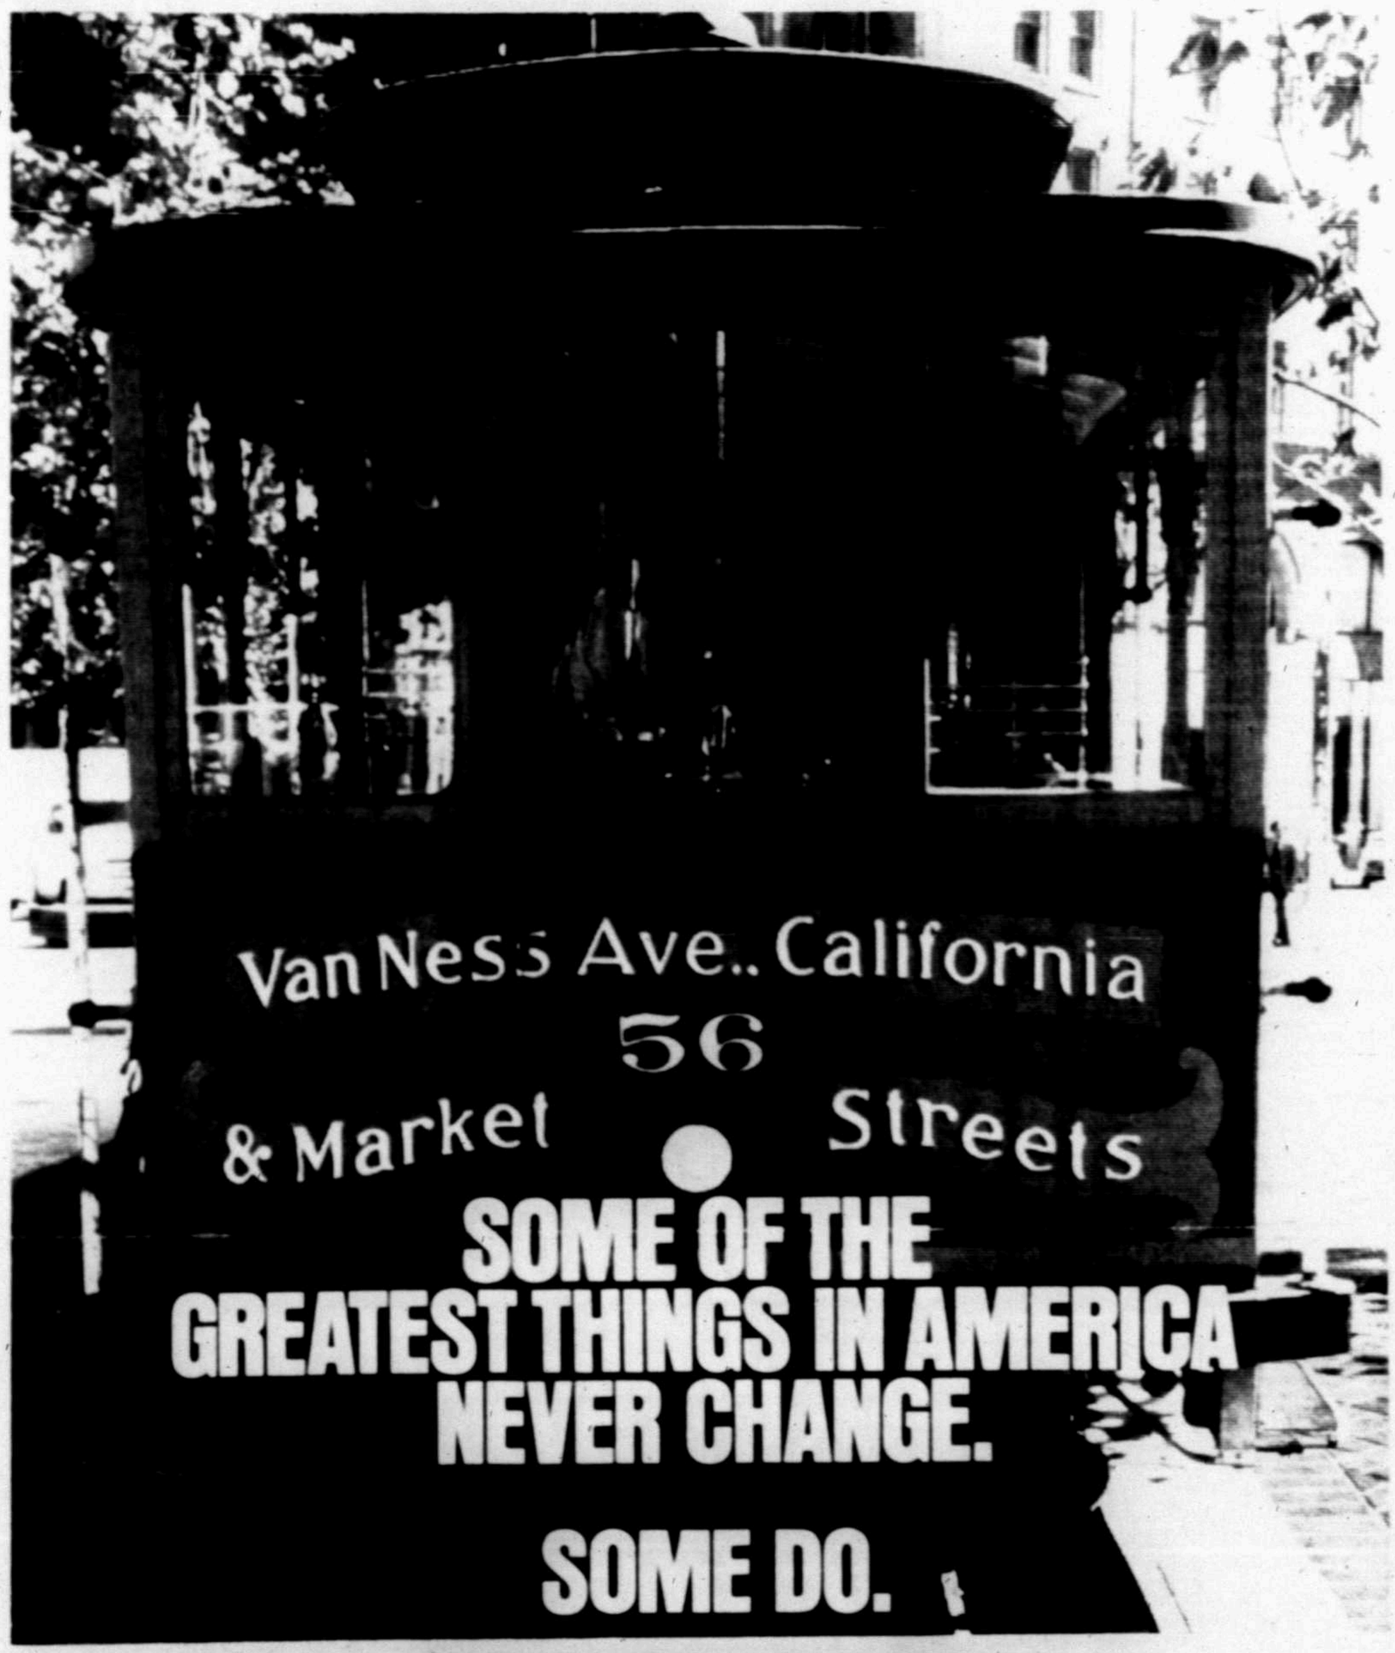

The 8,500 files also deal with war crimes committed by the Japanese in China and other parts of Asia.

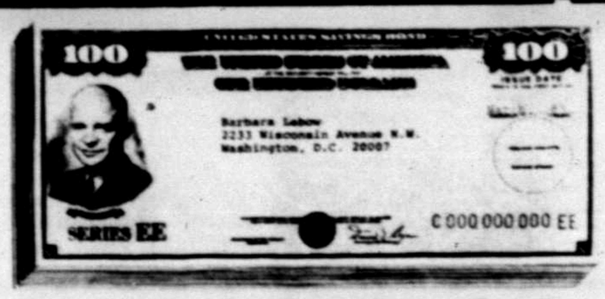

Monday was the first day for new rules of broad, general access to the files. Jewish groups and Nazi hunters said they would form research teams to search the files and seek extradition and prosecution of war criminals.

Under the old rules, the files were open only to the 17 governments on the U.N. War Crimes Commission, and then only if requests for specific files were made and strict confidentiality was pledged.

Governments now have virtually unfettered access and are not bound to keep the information secret.

Individuals and institutions also may request files. Applications were available Monday to scholars and researchers, and to journalists engaged in investigations.

Some things never change. But one great American tradition has changed—U.S. Savings Bonds. Now paying higher variable interest rates like money market accounts. That's the kind of change anyone can appreciate.

Just hold Savings Bonds for five years and you get the new variable interest rates. Plus, you get a guaranteed return. That means you can earn a lot more, but never less than 7½%. But some of the best things about Bonds haven't changed. The interest earned is still exempt from state and local income taxes. Still cost as little as $25. And can be purchased at almost any financial institution. Or easier yet, through the Payroll Savings Plan where you work.
