"Charmed, I'm Sure" Sure Was, Too, And The Rabbit Died

Another of the many things we have heard of but have never seen is something "charmed to death".

Now, we've seen it! We saw it Sunday.

A great big old rattle snake out near White Hall community saw a little Molly Cotton-Tail Rabbit out rying to get something to eat Sunday morning, and started "throwing his spell". The rabbit was certainly spell bound, and, when A. D. Chesnut and Vernon Wright of that community came by they saw it.

The rabbit was O.K. until the snake started moving in on him. He couldn't run—he was frozen right there. When the snake started in for the kill, there was no killing—the rabbit died of fright and/or heartfailure. We don't blame him; the snake was about 4 inches thick at the thickest place, had about 12 rattlers and a button, and was four or more feet long.

At the time the rabbit dropped the snake was about 5 feet from him, they told us, and there was not a mark or sign of injury anywhere on the rabbit. He just died of "charming".

J. C. Crawford Is Severly Shocked At Ice Plant

J. C. Crawford, about 16, was severely shocked at the local ice plant about 8 o'clock Monday morning when he came in contact with hot wires at the plant.

He was immediately rushed to the local hospital my ambulance and was given medical treatment, and late Monday was reported doing as well as could be expected. He was not reported to be injured in any way except by the electric charge.

Visitors in the R. H. Ruschenburg home, at Ater, Sunday were Mrs. John Rivers, Sgt. and Mrs. McCommie and Cpl. and Mrs. Hus, of this city.

Lt. Royce O. Davis Buried In Davidson Cemetery Sunday

Lt. Royce Davis, son of the late Gordon A. Davis and Mrs. Ruth Schomell was buried at the Davidson cemetery Sunday afternoon, with the funeral conducted by Chaplain Wright, and a military escort.

Services were held at the First Methodist Church in Gatesville.

Lt. Davis was stationed at the Army Air Field at Pocatello, Idaho and was an intelligence officer. He was a graduate of Gatesville High School and had been in service since February, 1941.

An Army officer at the field in Pocatello in a telephone conversation to his mother, Mrs. Ruth Schomell said: "Your son stuck with his plane until it crashed because he couldn't have done his job in a parachute." The plane burned and eleven men died abroad it, including S-Sgt. Granville Wayne Hampton of Dallas.

Lt. Davis was a member of the '36 and '37 elevens of Gatesville high school, and lived here for a number of years. He had only recently received his commission in the Air Force.

He is survived by his wife, Mrs. Margie Davis, Denver, Colo.; two brothers S-Sgt. Burl Davis of the Infantry and Flight Officer James Hupert Davis of the Army Air Forces, both on combat duty in the North Africa zone, and his mother, Mrs. Ruth Schomell of Dallas.

EVERYTHING'S QUIET BUT CARS STILL ARE MISSING

'Bout the only thing the Sheriff's C. of P's and Patrolman's departments are doing now, is chasing stolen or "borrowed" cars.

They did pick up one "doper" and put him in the city jail overnight and took his "powders" and next morning told him to "take out", but of another kind.

Friday night, a Mr. Frizby of White Hall had his Plymouth stolen and it was found about 5 miles on the far side of Crawford, evidently, out of gas.

Saturday night, 2 were taken, one Irving Scott's and the other George Tucker's, and both were picked up, Scott's out on the highway and Tucker's parked here

Court Has One Jury Case Opening Week Unnamed Divorces

The case, J. D. May vs. American Security Company went to trial Monday morning, with a jury to render the decision. The suit is a damage suit; a Camp Hood worker suing the insurance company.

Selected for the jury, were J. H. McClesky, W. T. Bannistey, J. B. Doyle, A. B. Conner, R. E. Newsome, Chas. E. Lengefeld, Jule Rattan, D. D. McCoy, Elgin Davidson, V. V. Lively, Sybil Price and John Burleson.

The Judge had the docket book, and we didn't get the names of the four or six parties getting the two or three divorces since our Friday issue of the News. But they did!

New County Treas. Not Appointed, Not Elected!

Something new has happened in Coryell County and Gatesville! It always does, regardless of what a lot of folks say.

Now, Mr. Smart Guy, we've a new County Treasurer, and we didn't elect her, we didn't appoint her, and she's new over the week-end and all she did to get elected was to say "Yes".

She said "yes" to a man, and he took her up and changed her name to Mrs. Bert Davis (congratulations to both of them) and she's a brand new County Treasurer, and has a new home to boot.

Mrs. Bessie Brazzil our former County Treasurer and Mr. Bert Davis patronized "home industry" and bought their marriage license from County Clerk, A. W. Ellis, and sometime between the purchase and now, they were married and, that's how we came to get a new County official (without electing, or appointing them). First time in a long time this has happened.

Two soldiers were arrested and turned over to the Provost Marshall of North Camp Hood. They were "AWOL" out of Fort Sill, Oklahoma.

Ginners in Coryell County are permitted to mail samples from every bale of cotton ginned in the county to Austin for free classification. Ginners will be able to obtain the government cotton with these grades. After a sample is mailed to Austin a report of classification should be received within three or four days. The government cotton ginning program is a forward step in development of quality cotton. The grower knows definitely his cotton grade and if the grade is low and can take steps to improve the staple and grade another year. Farmers should cooperate in this program since it is free and created for cotton improvement.

MODELS

Chapter One

Even at this early hour in the morning the showrooms were alive with expensively bejeweled, befurred femininity.

George Curson had just arrived. A faultlessly groomed man whose handsome head sat well on his square shoulders, he moved easily and naturally through the gleaming showrooms and polished corridors. Three generations which are customarily spent in making other men gentlemen, had made Curson the leading American couturier of his day — and a gentleman as well. He was the actual, active head of the House of Curson, founded by his grandfather, and now so far ahead of his competitors, that there might as well be no competition at all.

The showrooms were alive too with breathlessly lovely models, for any one of which an Indian potentate would have given away half of his kingdom. To these, Curson nodded his cordial, but strictly friendly good morning. A saleswoman beckoned frantically for his assistance.

She had Mrs. Vandervelde, a pompous old woman with more millions than she could count, for a customer. It was one of Mrs. Vandervelde's bad days. Curson listened smilingly while she told him how the House of Curson had degenerated.

"I don't want this dress. I don't want to get married!"

"My dear Mrs. Vandervelde, I've just the hat for you," he finally managed to inject his voice into the monologue. In a few instants he had taken the bonnet off the cleaning woman's head, given it a few expert pokes, inserted two aigrette feathers and returned.

Mrs. Vandervelde scrutinized the hat carefully in the mirror. Her face relaxed into a broad, satisfied smile. "That's what I want!" she exclaimed. But Curson was already out of ear shot, moving rapidly down the corridor to the advertising office where Betty Mason was putting the finishing touches on the announcement of the Curson Fall collection.

He glanced expertly over the copy. "The House of Curson never trumpets, Betty," he admonished gently, "merely announces." Then he glanced interestedly at her left hand which displayed a shiny new band on the third finger.

"New?" he said. "Don't tell me you married Prince Muratov?" Betty was on the defensive immediately. "I know what you think of him. He's a wonderful stylist. He just hasn't had the chance."

Curson was at the door. "I'm going to give you a fifty dollar raise as a wedding present," he said. "You'll have two mouths to feed from now on."

Two doors down the corridor and Curson was in the fitting room, where Sophie Miller was struggling to finish a garment for the collection, pinning and repinning it on a squirming, pouting model. Sophie and the model were at the end of their patience. But Sophie, who had worked her way from seamstress to vice-president of the House of Curson, was doggedly determined to finish her task. Curson watched their tempers disintegrating with amusement for a while. Finally he spoke.

"Sophie, you're going home — for a rest."

"Are you mad?" Sophie rallied at him. "Your cutters are slow as molasses. I've got to get the Van Klettering dress ready for the wedding."

We'll never be ready for the collection."

Then to the model, she shrieked, "Will you stand still?"

"I've had enough. I'm through!" the model screamed back at her.

"Through —" Sophie gasped and collapsed in a heap on the floor. Curson hurried to her. In a few minutes, the doctor had arrived, was ordering her removed to her home.

A secretary told Curson that Brockton was waiting in his office. Curson rushed away to face Brockton. He didn't give him an opportunity to speak.

"I'd ask you to sit down, but why waste your time," Curson began. "You offered my wife a part in your show and now you want me to back it?"

"Well?"

"The answer is no. You've taken advantage of my wife's eagerness to get back in the theatre to use me for sucker bait. I won't bite. Sorry."

With that Curson ushered him out of his office, hurried to the fitting room where Wendy Van Klettering waited in her wedding dress. Curson got rid of Wendy's agitated mother by sending her to telephone. Now Wendy, blue-eyed, snub-nosed and lovely, decided to say her bit. "I don't want this dress ready by tomorrow," she announced firmly. "I don't want to be married. If you want to know why, just take a look at that!" She led Curson by his hand to the window that looked out on the showroom. Henry Morgan, Wendy's fiancé, was clearly evident, but he had no eye for Wendy or Curson. His entire interest was concentrated on the fleshly beauties of a pirouetting model.

"Now do you understand?" asked Wendy.

"Why try?" Curson said.

"Because he's got boodles," Wendy replied. "And we haven't. We've got family and position and — and a lot of mortgages. Please, Mr. Curson, you've got to help me. Don't deliver the dress!"

"You haven't the courage to say no yourself?" he asked.

"I have, but —"

"You'd rather I lost a five thousand dollar dress," he said, "you'd rather I destroyed the reputation of the House of Curson —"

Wendy rolled over cozily in her bed. Her mother was pleading with her. "Will you get up this minute. The bridesmaids are here. Every one's here. Are you getting up?"

"Borry," Wendy drawled, "no wedding, mother. Postponed on account of no dress. Get a rain check."

The maid had entered and was drawing the curtains. "I'm going to call Curson again," Mrs. Von Klettering decided, and hurried out. In the distance the sound of motorcycle sirens swelled as they approached the house. "Sounds like a fire," the maid said.

"Hooray!" Wendy whooped from her pillow. "I hope it's us."

The whine swelled to a crescendo, stopped in front of the window. "It's the delivery truck from Curson's," the startled maid announced. "They've got a motorcycle escort and they've brought your dress."

"Oooh!" came the moan from Wendy as she sank back into her pillows.

WITH THE COLORS

Here's a letter from Cpl. Odie C. Thompson, "Somewhere in North Africa."

He writes: "Dear Mat: I guess I am doing O.K. over here. At least I can't think of anything to ache about just now.

I get both Gatesville papers. Sometimes they are a little late. I sometimes get six or eight copies of each paper in one "mail call".

There are several Coryell Boys around here. I am the only one in this Unit, but I see some of them every now and then. They are all "on their feet" yet.

I hear from Coryell County regular. We see quite a few pictures shows here. Some of them are good shows. Some of them are shows.

Odie Thompson."

ELEVEN O'CLOCK FIRE GETS MOTOR AT RED & WHITE STORE

A fire about 11 o'clock Saturday night got one of the motors on cooling equipment in E. G. Beerwinkle's Red & White store.

That was all the damage, unless there was a little smoke damage, as the store was filled with smoke.

That's the second motor Mr. Beerwinkle has lost this week, one other burning up earlier in the week, but causing no fire call. Since they're so hard for a "non-priority business" to get now, he's having one rewound in Dallas.

NOTICE

There will be a cemetery working Sunday, August 29th at the Friendship Cemetery in North Camp Hood.
