Terrorists fire at passersby

By The Associated Press

Three terrorists fired guns and threw four hand grenades at passersby on a crowded street in Jerusalem today, wounding at least 48 people, authorities and witnesses said.

Two passersby, one of them a former policeman, opened fire and killed one terrorist, police said. The other two assailants were captured — one at the scene and the other in a getaway car. The interior minister, Yosef Burg, identified the three as Lebanese Arabs.

The attack came one day after a column of Israeli tanks fired on Syrian-controlled positions in Lebanon's Bekaa Valley for the first time in a year.

The Democratic Front for the Liberation of Palestine — a faction of the Palestine Liberation Organization — claimed responsibility for today's attack in Jerusalem, and said it was demanding release of Palestinian prisoners in Israel.

A statement issued by the front in Damascus, Syria, said the intended target of today's attack was the Israeli Tourism Ministry and claimed some guerrillas has taken hostages in the building. There was no indication in Israel that this claim was true.

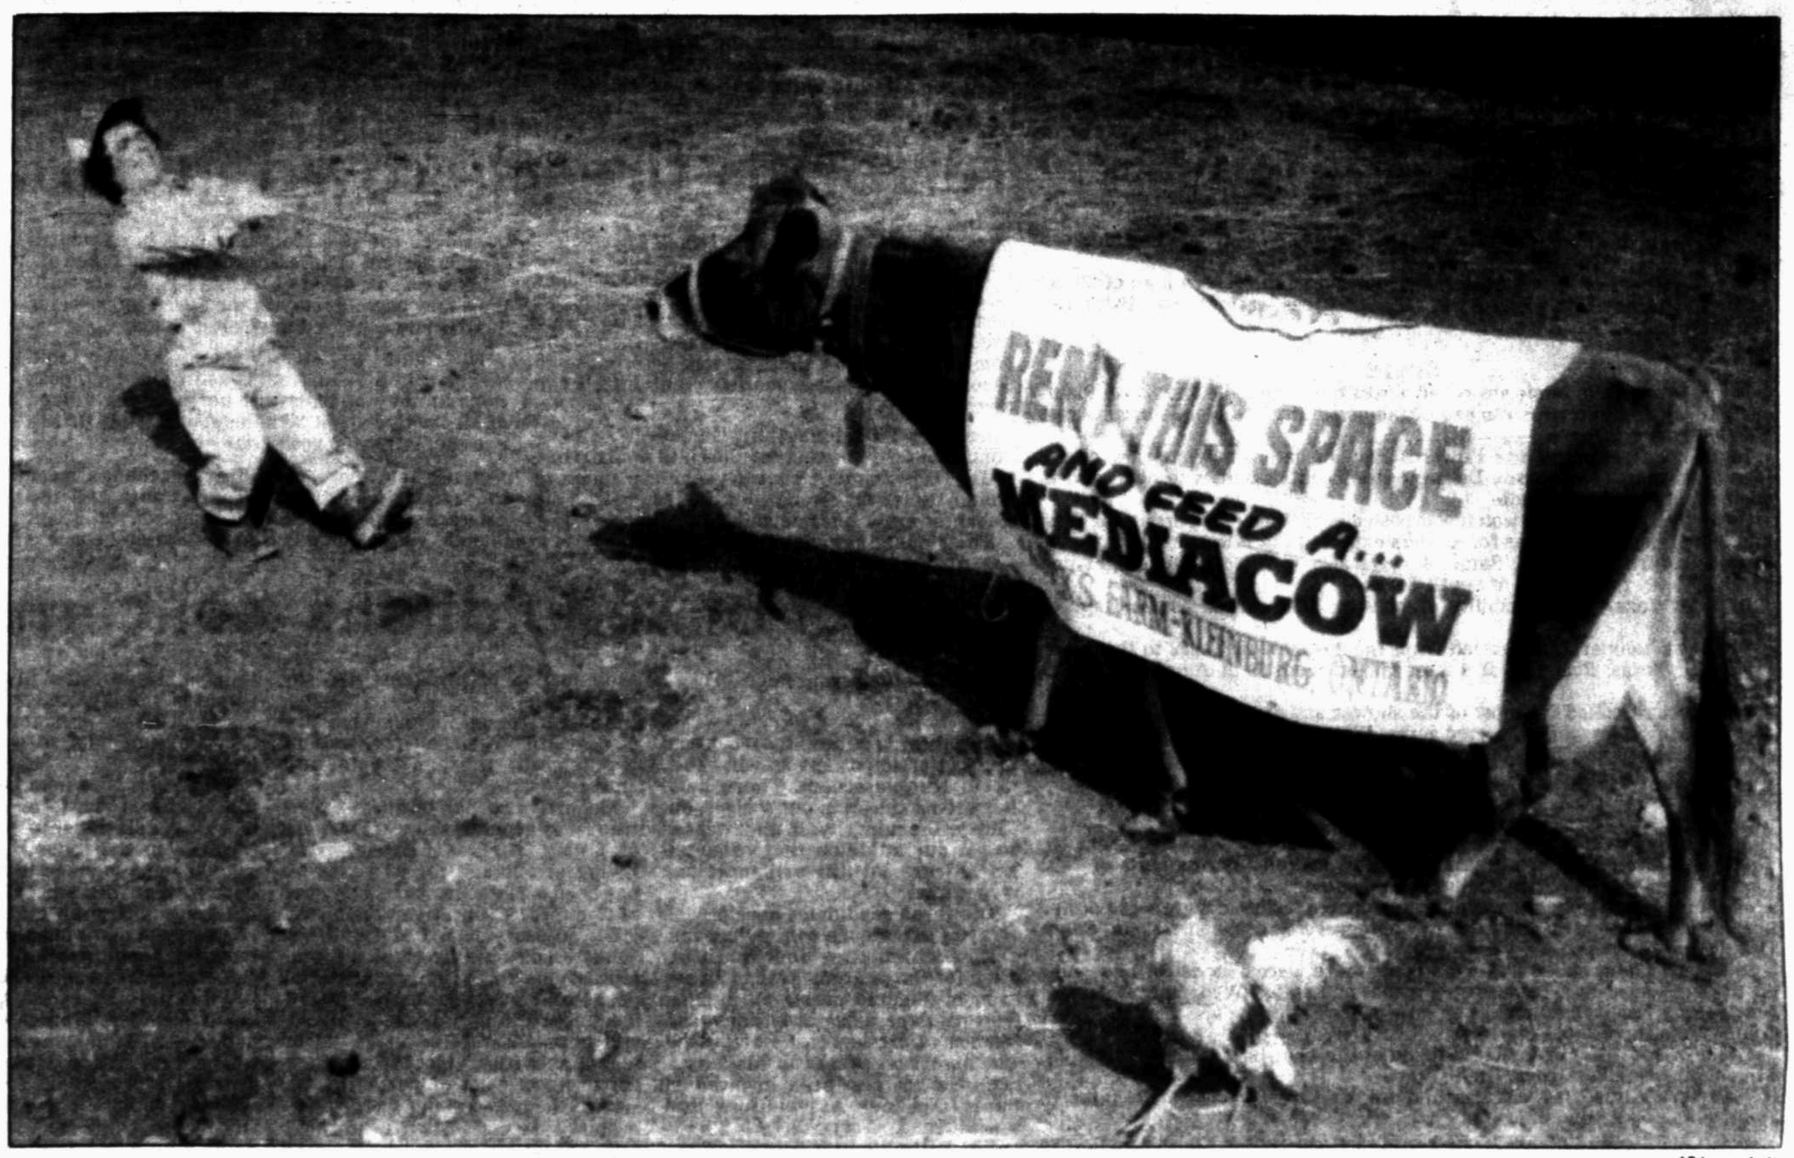

Police said two of the injured were seriously hurt. The others suffered minor injuries, police said.

Witnesses said one attacker crouched on his knee and pivoted, firing in all directions, while two others ran down King George Street throwing hand grenades.

The gun and grenade fire spawned some panic, and some Israelis began attacking Arab construction workers nearby, witnesses said.

Israeli soldiers and police poured into area after the attack and urged pedestrians to evacuate. Area traffic was halted.

Pulling in advertising

Farmer Mark Parr tugs on a cow decked out in an advertising sign at Puck's Farm in Kleinburg, Ontario, just north of Toronto. Six Jersey cows at the educational farm debut the signs today. The ads, which run for a year, sell for $500 for each side of a cow. The farm reports all 12 ads have sold out.

Hart: Disagreements 'picky, penny-ante'

By The Associated Press

On the eve of New York's critical Democratic primary, Walter Mondale remains relentlessly on the attack though his chief rival Gary Hart dismisses some of their disagreements as "penny-ante, picky business."

Along with the Rev. Jesse Jackson, all three candidates for the party's presidential nomination were searching for votes in New York again today, with Mondale holding an 11 percentage point lead in a late statewide poll.

"It will be very, very close," said Mondale, whose campaign has spent $17 million so far and faces difficulty with campaign spending limits in the remaining primaries. "I'm being outspent about 3-to-1. I'm the poor person's candidate."

Hart declined to predict victory but said, "I'll run at least a very close second."

The three met for a second debate in a week Sunday morning, and Jackson, after protesting "the attempt to ignore my presence," again took the role of peacemaker between the warring front-runners.

Mondale and Hart differed on Central America policy and in characterizing their own campaigns during the debate. And their dispute was most pointed when the issue of moving the U.S. Embassy in Israel from Tel Aviv to Jerusalem arose — a move both say they favor.

"I know the voters of New York state...are fed up with this penny-ante, picky business," Hart said.

"They know that Walter Mondale and I are equally committed to the survival of Israel. They don't want to hear this any more."

But Mondale, responding to Hart, countered that he has backed the move for 20 years and that he raised the issue because "you changed your position on that fundamental question five days ago."

Harvey reflects on politics

By ED TODD

ODESSA — News commentator Paul Harvey reflected on the political years from Churchill to Reagan and focused on his contribution to journalism.

"If I can make a contribution to journalism," he said, "(it would be)...to make it similar to that which (Conductor) Arthur Fiedler accomplished with his Boston Pops Orchestra: making what's good popular and what's popular good."

Harvey, 65, held a Sunday noon press conference in Odessa prior to his afternoon benefit talk for St. John's Episcopal School Building Fund in the Holiday Inn Centre.

Harvey said the news media "tends to look at the world through the wrong end of a telescope" by constantly focusing public attention on what's wrong. Such a slant gives young people a "distorted image" of America.

"I intend to continue helping our countrymen count their blessings so that they then can determine whether this country believes what's dying for is worth working for; I think it is."

The Chicago-based radio commentator and newspaper columnist, who has been in radio broadcasting since age 14, offered observations and viewpoints on a pot-pourri of subjects:

—Nuclear Energy: Nuclear energy "quietly, tediously is already providing about 13 percent" of the nation's power and about 50 percent of Chicago's power needs "entirely safely, so you can see I would be a proponent" of nuclear energy.

—Political Left or Right: "All of us — left and right — seeking ultimate truth inevitably gravitate toward the middle. I sense this mellowing in myself and...in the media."

—National Deficit: "The deficit is something this president (Ronald Reagan) inherited, please. Built-in escalation is something he inherited. Every effort that he has made toward cost-cutting, with the exception of the military budget, has been scuttled by the Congress largely because we're in an election year."

—Reagan's Nimbus: "His greatest accomplishment...is the degree to which he has curtailed what was double-digit inflation when he moved into office (in 1981)...He rescued us from that (inflation)."

—Critical: Harvey said he has "diametrically disagreed" with the Reagan Administration's policies on the Equal Rights Amendment, on the perpetuation of the military draft, on dividend withholding, and Reagan's "stubborn involvement in Latin America."

—Jesse Jackson: Democratic Party presidential contenders Walter Mondale and Gary Hart, who "are tearing one another apart," have not "dared to lay a glove on him." Jackson, too, is seeking the Democratic Party's nomination for president. "Have no fear, he'll have no secrets as convention time approaches."

—Edwin Meese: Harvey said he has not seen "enough evidence" against the U.S. attorney general-designate "to justify his removal...until we can find a saint to take his place...I haven't seen any violation of the law...I've seen only smoke so far."

—Reagan's Smile: "This president, agree with him or not, with that gorgeous grin, is somehow able to serenely ride above the storms. I like that quality in a leader, but it makes him a very elusive target for

Impact of new school regulation concerns MISD board candidates

Don McCarty

A. Joseph Reed

Bobby Williams

The impact of state regulations on the Midland Independent School District is a primary concern of the three men competing for Place 4 on the Board of Trustees.

"It's going to require a lot of money to bring all these new changes into effect," warned Bobby Williams. "The only way we can get local money is to delete some of the local programs we have or by raising taxes. Taxes is one of the things I have to look at as a last resort, but we may have to increase taxes."

A. Joseph "Joe" Reed and Don McCarty are concerned with the impact on extracurricular programs.

"My children don't have any trouble at all carrying that load (of academic and extracurricular programs) and it allows them to expand their horizons," said Reed, whose seven children participate heavily in school activities. "I'd hate to see these things lost. There's got to be a limit, too. You can abuse something like that."

"I'm real interested to see that our schools stress academics and the basics, but at the same time I want them to get a well-rounded education," McCarty added. "I think those

New anti-cancer drug 'reforms' tumor cells

DAYTONA BEACH, Fla. (AP) — A new anti-cancer drug that transforms tumor cells into near normal cells without the devastating side effects of existing chemotherapy is being tested on humans for the first time, researchers say.

"It's extremely appealing to have an agent that rather than execute the tumors will reform them," said Daniel Dexter, a researcher with E.I. du Pont de Nemours and Company.

Speaking Sunday at a science writers' seminar sponsored by the American Cancer Society, Dexter said that existing drugs are highly toxic to normal cells as well as cancer cells.

The new drug, called N-methylformamide, is one of a class of drugs that invade cancer cells and somehow cause them to mature into cells that are almost normal. It is not known how the drugs work.

These near normal cells lose the ability to grow wildly into the tangled knots of tissue found in tumors.

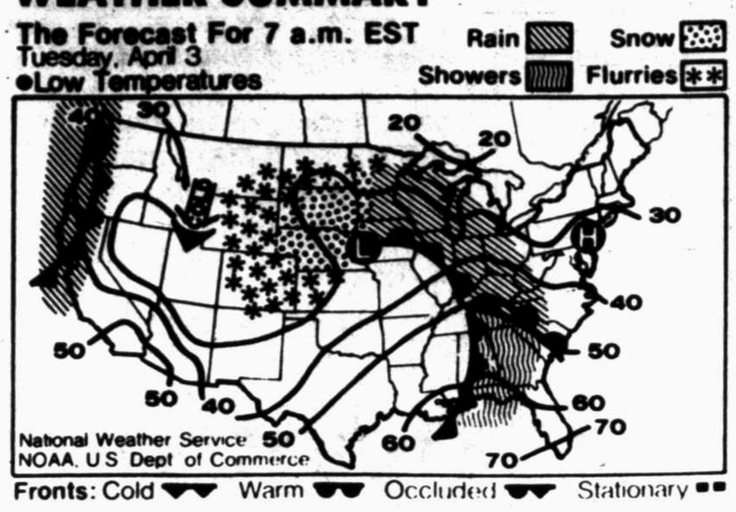

The new drugs, called differentiation agents or maturation agents, are industrial solvents whose anti-cancer properties were discovered by accident in the early 1970s, Dexter said.

A solvent known as dimethyl sulfoxide, or DMSO, was being used to preserve mouse cells during freezing.

When researchers thawed some mouse leukemic red blood cells that had been frozen with DMSO, the researchers noticed that the leukemic cells were producing hemoglobin, something they had not been able to do before they were frozen.

WEATHER SUMMARY

AP Laserphoto Map

The National Weather Service forecasts snow for Tuesday for the western Plains and rain from Minnesota to the Midwest and from the eastern Gulf to the Ohio Valley.

More windy weather on tap for Permian Basin

More wind and cooler temperatures are in the forecast for Midland, but Sunday night's trace of precipitation may be the only April showers for awhile.

According to the National Weather Service at Midland Regional Airport, skies will be fair with a low tonight in the lower 40s and a high on Tuesday in the lower 70s.

Winds will be northwesterly at 15-25 mph and gusty tonight, decreasing to 10-20 mph Tuesday.

Sunday's high of 78 was 21 degrees cooler than the record high of 99, set in 1946. The overnight low of 54 was 25 degrees warmer than 1938's record low of 29.

STATE

A few heavy thunderstorms rolled across the Panhandle and South Plains early today as forecasters warned of the possibility of violent storms across North Texas.

Light rain dampened the Edwards Plateau before dawn as low clouds blanketed most of the state. Dense fog reduced visibilities to near zero in some areas of the Panhandle.

A severe thunderstorm watch was posted early today for portions of West and North Central Texas as forecasters expected the storm activity to move eastward during the day. Some showers also were forecast tonight and early Tuesday for portions of South Texas.

In West Texas, the possibility of blowing dust existed as wind speeds picked up.

Pre-dawn temperatures varied from the 40s in West Texas to the 70s in far South Texas. Readings at 4 a.m. ranged from 38 at Amarillo to 71 at McAllen.

The forecast called for most of the shower activity to end by early Tuesday. Clearing skies were expected across West Texas.

NATION

Winter lingered in the northern Rockies today as snow fell from the Rockies to the Plains, while thunderstorms rumbled across parts of New Mexico and Texas into the Oklahoma Panhandle.

Winter storm watches or warnings for up to 8 inches of snow were posted across the eastern two thirds of Wyoming, western North Dakota, South Dakota and Nebraska.

In the six hours ended at 1 a.m. today, there were 4 inches of new snow on the ground at Salt Lake City; 3 inches at Lander, Wyo., and at Austin, Nev., which received 20 inches of snow since Saturday; and 1 inch at Fort Collins, Colo., and Rapid City, S.D.

Travelers advisories were issued for the area from the Rockies to Nebraska and northwest Kansas.

Showers and thunderstorms also swept part of Kansas and western Iowa early today, causing some local flooding in the Arkansas River.

The eastern third of the nation enjoyed clear skies.

By LANA CUNNINGHAM
Assistant City Editor

West Texas could serve as the pivotal point in U.S. Rep. Phil Gramm's run for the Republican nomination to the U.S. Senate seat.

During a rally Sunday afternoon in the Holidome here, Gramm asked the 96 supporters who turned out for punch and coffee for their concentrated efforts before the May 5 primary. He is running for the Senate seat being vacated by Republican John Tower. Also seeking the nomination are U.S. Rep. Ron Paul, Rob Mosbacher and Hank Grover, all from the Houston area.

In the last month before the primary, the polls are showing signs that Gramm may be able to pull out of the primary with more than 50 percent of the vote and wouldn't have to go through a June runoff. Another poll shows that Gramm is outdistancing leading Democratic contender Bob Krueger.

One poll conducted by Lance Tarrance indicated Gramm would receive 46 percent of the vote to Krueger's 40. Against the other two Democratic candidates Gramm came out even further on top. The numbers were 51 to 31, respectively, when compared to State Sen. Lloyd Doggett and 49 to 32 when put up against U.S. Rep. Kent Hance. A poll by Arthur Finkelstein put Gramm and Krueger neck and neck, 41 to 40, respectively.

Gramm thinks he'll take Dallas-Fort Worth while his three opponents will split the Houston vote. Even so, "we still won't come close to the 50 percent I need. The margin to get that 50 percent will be West Texas."

Midland should prove a good pulling point in Gramm's favor. He noted that several locally contested races are on the Republican ballot. And he doubts that the presidential caucus will attract voters to the Democratic primary. "People don't go to caucuses," he said.

The one dominant issue in this race, said the former Texas A&M University economics professor, is who can be the most effective senator for Texas. "I have been an effective congressman for Texas. Look at all the digging I've done with a shovel trying to do a big job. Give me a bigger shovel."

Gramm was elected to Congress from the College Station district as a Democrat. Because of his conservative efforts in trying to balance the budget while going against the other party members, he was threatened with having his membership on the influential Budget Committee pulled. He resigned and ran again on the Republican ticket, winning the congressional position and his seat on the Budget Committee.

The Texas Senate seat is crucial to the Republicans, he said, noting that if lost to a Democrat it could mean the majority in the Senate will swing over to the Democrats. And that would mean Ted Kennedy would be in charge, Gramm said, with groans coming from the audience. It also would put Howard Metzenbaum of Ohio as head of the Energy Regulatory Subcommittee.

"It's the same Howard Metzenbaum who wanted to double the Windfall Profit Tax and who wanted to reimpose price controls on oil," Gramm said. "That would cut 1.5 million jobs in Texas. The petroleum industry is still the family jewel of the state."

Getting people to vote in the Republican primary for the first time in their lives is one of the efforts of his grassroots campaign. Gramm's organization has set up phone banks in 78 counties, including Midland which is headed by Lavern Johnson.

In some cases, Gramm thinks he is convincing former Democratic primary voters to switch, and Texarkana is one example. He noted with a laugh that he had more people on his steering committee in that county than voted in the last Republican primary.

In talking these people into switching, Gramm joked that they can be told "they can walk into the polling place and wait for lightning to strike and it won't," he said to the chuckling audience. "And they can walk out and say, 'Hallelujah, I've been cleansed.' "

Terrorists fire at crowd in Jerusalem street

The Israeli military command said its artillery attacked and destroyed two guerrilla command posts Sunday in the Bekaa Valley that had been used to prepare attacks on Israeli troops. The command said the shelling was a response to recent attacks that wounded eight Israeli soldiers.

Lebanes President Amin Gemayel's security committee was to meet for the sixth straight day today. Government sources said the meeting would center on disengaging forces around the Lebanese army garrison at Souk el-Gharb.

The mountaintop village is strategic because it overlooks the presidental palace in suburban Baabda and the southeastern approach to Beirut.

Lebanon's prime minister, saying "we are turning a new page," met with the Soviet ambassador Sunday and criticized the United States.

The rightist Christian Voice of Lebanon radio station said a column of Israeli tanks took positions Sunday on hills just north of the village of Medoukha, about 30 miles southeast of Beirut, and shelled Syrian positions.

It also said there were heavy exchanges near the villages of Sultan Yacoub, Yanta and the western slopes of Mount Hermon, or Jebel Sheikh, whose summit is at the Syrian-Lebanese border, 40 miles southeast of the capital.

Sunday's shelling was the first time in at least a year that Israel used artillery to attack guerrillas in Syrian-held Lebanon. But Israeli planes have struck guerrilla positions eight times this year in areas held by Syria or its Druse allies.

The Lebanese army and Druse rebels traded tank and artillery fire and rockets in the mountains east of Beirut. The Voice of Lebanon said shells fired by Druse gunners fell on three Christian villages east of the capital.

There also was sporadic sniping along the "green line" which divides Christian east Beirut from the mostly Moslem west. No casualty reports were available.

Impact of regulations concerns candidates

things they do outside the classroom are just as important as what they do in the classroom. There have been some abuses in our schools, but they're the minority. If they wanted to get our attention they've gotten it. But now I'd like to handle our own affairs."

The three candidates have a wide array of experience with public education which they feel qualifies them for the position. Reed, who has lived in Midland nearly all his life, feels his experience in business and finance as president of Ed L. Reed and Associates works to his advantage. He has also been involved in Parent-Teacher Associations and several youth programs.

"I'm getting into it because of my own involvement with my own children," he said. "We see a broad cross-section of problems. We see the students' side."

McCarty also has business expertise. He is general business manager of Rotary Engineers Laboratories. Living in Midland for 22 years, he has been a member of the Chamber of Commerce Education Committee, PTA, advisory board of Lee High School Choir, and he broadcast athletic events for KCRS radio for 20 years and covered school board meetings for four years.

"I have alway been interested in school activities," McCarty said. "I got to know a lot of people in the system. I love working with young people. I decided instead of working on the outside I'd like to get involved in it."

Williams' educational background is in administration. He has been active in the PTA, having resigned his position as president-elect for City Council PTA to run for the board.

"My desire is to help improve the school system and to make a better working relationship with those involved in the school system," he said. "I want to make it more of an open system where people can communicate with each other. I would like to see a more open relationship between administration, the board and all employees of the MISD."

When talking of his goals as a board member, Williams said, "We need to look at bringing in more teachers raised and educated in this area. More promotions from within. We need to have a morale situation that's good here so teachers can know they may go on to become a principal or school administrator. I'm not saying we shouldn't have people come in. But I think those that are here should be given first chance."

Reed said maintaining consistency and equality in Midland schools was his main objective. "I guess I have in the back of my mind an idea of assuring that all of the schools are basically all operating on the same level. I really am firmly committed to equal opportunities for all our children."

Although McCarty called Midland schools excellent, he said they can always be improved. While he said he firmly believes teachers need to be paid more, "there's going to be a real challenge to find the money. I hope we won't have to increase taxes. I'm certainly not going to recommend it."

"That's not petty," Mondale said. "That goes to the question of who's ready; who's consistent; who knows what he is doing."

The former vice president objected to Hart's ads and speeches that suggest Mondale backs policies that could endanger U.S. troops in Central America.

"When you go beyond the facts to say things of this kind, it is negative; it is personal," Mondale said.

But Hart countered that Mondale's campaign had become "totally negative," citing attacks against him on arms control and civil rights.

Mondale outdistanced his rivals in caucuses Saturday in Kentucky, where he won 12 delegates, and in the Virgin Islands. However, 15 of the 36 delegates selected at the Kentucky meetings will go to the San Francisco convention uncommitted.

Mondale now has 731.25 delegates, Hart has 437 and Jackson has 93.5. A total of 1,967 are needed to win nomination.

Jackson preached at a Brooklyn church Sunday and referred to the Tuesday primary as the "eve of the crucifixion" — a reference to the anniversary of the slaying of Martin Luther King Jr. on April 4, 1968.

"We will have a chance to go to the polls and move the stone away," Jackson said.

The civil rights leader, in the locally televised debate, said the other two candidates "don't have any right to...ignore me."

"The issue to me is not the negatives," he said. "It's the attempt to neglect my presence. The issues I raise and the consitituency I represent will not go away."

In New York City on Sunday, Hart went for a 10-block jog in Central Park and toured Little Italy where he helped make fettuccine.

On ABC-TV's "This Week With David Brinkley," Hart was asked if it matters if El Salvador goes communist.

"Yes it does. But I don't think to the degree that we ought to be willing to sacrifice tens of thousands of American troops...I think we can prevent it by other means," he said, citing medical and financial help.

The latest ABC News-Washington Post poll, conducted Friday through Sunday, had Mondale with 41 percent, Hart with 30 percent and Jackson with 6 percent. The "tracking" survey of 326 likely voters had a 6 percentage point margin of error.

Mondale's lead was down 2 points from a three-day survey ending a day earlier but was wider than it had been late last week.

Mondale picked up the endorsement Sunday of the New York Daily News, which said he would restore many social programs "tattered" by President Reagan, "but essentially would steer a moderate, sensible course."

Anti-cancer drug 'reforms' tumor cells

The DMSO had transformed the mouse cells into something resembling normal red blood cells, Dexter said.

Cancer cells, he explained, are immature forms of normal cells. Unlike normal cells, they do not mature and stop dividing.

So the DMSO had transformed the cells by triggering their maturation, Dexter said, at which point the cells could begin producing hemoglobin.

In subsequent experiments, researchers found that similar substances, known as polar solvents, could also cause the maturation of human cancer cells in the test tube.

Dexter and his colleagues at Brown University (which he left for du Pont last year) then found that N-methylformamide, or NMF, was effective in fighting human colon tumors grafted onto mice.

Current trials with human patients are what are called Phase I studies, intended only to make sure that the drugs do not have unexpected side-effects, Dexter said.

Phase II tests scheduled to begin this summer should begin to show whether the drug is as effective in humans as it has been in mice, he said.

Many unanswered questions remain, Dexter said. "Do you have to treat the patient forever?" he said. "No one knows this."

In humans, colon tumors, among the deadliest forms of cancer, can usually be removed surgically, Dexter said, but it is extremely difficult to prevent bits of tumor from spreading and sparking the growth of new tumors.

This so-called tumor metastasis, or spreading, might be blocked by NMF, if the drug is able to convert the microscopic bits of tumor to normal tissue before they begin to grow, Dexter said.

The drug might also be useful for preventing the spread of lung cancer and breast cancer, two other leading cancer killers, Dexter said.

Dexter has also found that the differentiation agents can sensitize tumors to conventional anti-cancer drugs or to radiation, making it possible to kill the tumors with lower doses of these toxic treatments.

It is not yet clear which cancers will be most responsive to this drug, or what doses are most effective, Dexter said.

He added that NMF may be only the forerunner of yet-to-be designed differentiation agents that are more effective in the clinic.

Correction

Lee High School drama students won for their performance in "Caligula," while Midland High School students won for their performance in "Equus" during the area one-act play contest in Snyder Thursday.

The names of the plays were inadvertently switched in Sunday's Education in Brief column.

Also, Allan Mills is a student at LHS, not MHS as reported.

The Reporter-Telegram regrets the errors.

his political opponents, so they have to manufacture other targets with which to discredit him."

—Harvey's Life: Harvey said the two "most important" events which he has covered and reported were "the birth of my son" and "the two conclusions of the big war". — World War II.

—Churchill: Harvey said the experience he treasures most was traveling with Sir Winston Churchill, prime minister of England, during two of his campaigns. "Once one has fallen under the spell of a man of that magnitude, it seems ever since then we have been up to our ankles in political pygmies."

—Oil and Prayer: In noting that his "1976 snapshot" of the Permian Basin is "dreadfully out of date," Harvey said he had been impressed that the Midland-Odessa area was "still languishing in depression," since the oil stocks on Wall Street "were still as depressed as they are." Unemployment in the Permian Basin is lower than the national average.

"I've discovered that you have a (religion-related) school here which is like schools used to be: where it was all right to be on your knees if you were not shooting craps."

—Nixon and Watergate: Harvey expressed dismay over the foul language used by President Richard Nixon in the infamous Watergate tapes.

"I guess I'm old-fashioned, but golly, I know all of those words...But any damn fool can swear...For a president of the United States to have a mouth that's a sewer is dreadfully disillusioning to an idealist. That hurt me much more than any aspect of that silly, bungled burglary."

Nevertheless, Harvey said Nixon is not given "enough credit for one of the greatest accomplishments of this century: building a bridge across the Pacific Ocean...I believe that future historians looking back on this time will cite him as a genius in international diplomacy...and that Watergate will be but an asterisk."

Beaumont Fire Department and rescue workers remove the first body from the wooded site of a plane crash Saturday night. Four persons, three believed by police at the scene to be of the same family, were killed when the Cessna 205 went down in a sparsely populated area.

Louisianians killed in crash

BEAUMONT, Texas (AP) — Investigators are trying to determine what caused a single-engine plane to crash into a heavily wooded area of north Beaumont, killing four people from Lafayette, La.

The victims were identified as Richard C. Wright, 56; his wife, Inis Marie, 54; their son and the pilot, Ralph, 21; and Ronald L. Drummond, 22.

The Cessna 172 crashed Saturday night, about five miles southwest of the Beaumont Municipal Airport, which does not have a tower.

Federal Aviation Administration investigators were on the scene of the crash Sunday.

The crash site was 15 miles north of the Jefferson County Airport, which does have air controllers. But police said the Jefferson airport had not been in radio contact with the plane and neither had airports in Houston, 60 miles to the west.

There was a 3,800-foot ceiling and the weather was overcast at the time of the crash.

Residents worry more about traffic than crime

HOUSTON (AP) — Residents of the nation's fourth largest city worry less about crime, believe police protection is getting better and think the local economy is picking up. But one thing they say hasn't improved in the past three years are the clogged freeways, a survey says.

The opinions of 550 randomly selected Houston-area residents were compiled in a survey conducted last month by Rice University and the Houston Post.

Asked what is the biggest problem facing the 3.1 million people living in the area, about 44 percent of the participants cited transportation problems. That figure has remained unchanged since the poll was first conducted three years ago.

School studies disaster damage

LUBBOCK (AP) — Texas Tech graduate student Bob Bailey has spent almost a year developing a cannon that can fire 12-foot wooden beams into walls at 150 mph.

But Bailey is not working on a secret military project. He is helping the university's Institute for Disaster Research in its quest for a tornado-proof building. The institute is the only research center in the nation that specializes in the study of disaster damage.

Institute director Joe Minor says it isn't always easy to impress the uninitiated with the importance of the work.

"Some of my colleagues say, 'Yeah, Minor has been studying for 10 years and figured out if you throw a rock at a window, it'll break,'" Minor said.

But through the institute, which is funded mostly by grants from the National Safety Foundation and the Nuclear Regulatory Commission, Texas Tech professors are responsible for developing national industry standards for wind-resistant construction.

The institute has studied storm damage from Paris, Texas, to Australia, producing volumes of information for builders and engineers on how wind and flying debris affect buildings.

The institute determined, for instance, that contrary to popular belief, it does little if any good to open windows when a tornado approaches.

That bit of long-standing advice was based on the theory that tornadoes cause a sudden, severe drop in air pressure that causes buildings to explode.

"The drop in air pressure is not that severe," Minor said.

He said the institute and other research centers have determined that flying gravel caused more damage to Houston's skyscrapers during Hurricane Alicia than did air pressure changes.

Hurricane winds seldom top 100 mph, but tornado winds can average 125 mph and reach as high as 200 mph.

Professor James McDonald says there is little data on the effect of debris hurled at that speed and how the damage can be prevented.

McDonald said the cannon will allow experts to see for the first time how different types of walls stand up against flying debris in tornado-strength winds.

Frank Lasater For Mayor

New & Energetic

Leadership

For Midland

A LETTER TO ALL MIDLANDERS

We believe Frank Lasater will make Midland a great Mayor. He is conservative; a leader with enthusiasm and drive; a family man; a native West Texan; a graduate of Midland Lee High School and Texas A. & M.; a successful businessman; and an independent oilman who has the time and dedication to serve as Midland's Mayor.

Frank Lasater has exhibited outstanding leadership qualities. As President of a Midland based company, he provided the vision and leadership that resulted in the company being selected by Inc. Magazine as the 3rd fastest growing small public company in America in 1982.

Frank Lasater believes in conservative, locally controlled government; balanced budgets; and new ideas for economic growth for Midland.

It is time for new, energetic leadership in Midland. Frank has the experience and personality to create the new spirit of confidence that will get our city moving again.

We hope you will join us and vote for Frank Lasater on April 7th.

Your horoscope

By JEANE DIXON

Tuesday, April 3, 1984

YOUR BIRTHDAY TODAY: American novelist-historian Washington Irving, Time-Life publisher Henry Luce, fan dancer Sally Rand and comedian Georgie Jessel were born on this date. Also sharing your birthday: actress Marsha Mason, Marlon Brando, Doris Day, Tony Orlando, Wayne Newton and Congresswoman Katie Hall (D-Ind.). Romance will be fabulous in the coming months. Business shows slow but steady improvement. Take mate's suggestions more seriously -- they could mean extra profits. An old friend comes to the rescue when things get sticky at place of employment.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): A difficult work situation will straighten itself out if you keep a low profile. Good financial news from abroad boosts your spirits. An old friend steers you in the right direction.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): A practical, long-range approach works best when reassessing priorities. Special ties with professional people or organizations bring you good luck. Your social prestige increases with each new attainment.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): A sudden change in job status could increase your income dramatically. Domestic matters can be very distracting. Plan to attend a social event later today; you make valuable contacts.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Your verbal skills and intellectual gifts serve you well today. An employment situation or partnership enters a period of change. A convention or trip could spark new romance.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Your creative and artistic talents could bring you a second income. Those in service fields make new gains. Some correspondence proves very enlightening. Guard your reputation by being more discreet.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Seize an opportunity to improve your vocational skills. Get in touch with friends or professional contacts who can help. Romance may have to take a temporary backseat to work.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): A break in routine will add spice to the work day. Use new methods to solve old problems. Become a better listener. Influential person is impressed by thoughtful answers.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): A long-distance call brings great news. It is time to let go of the past. A romantic relationship could come under stress. Count on an Aries to speak his/her mind.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): An early morning phone call upsets your schedule. Do not get upset! It could mean great career or financial progress. Your verbal skills are a tremendous asset in your work.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Romance and work will mix surprisingly well today. Set aside the time you need to go over important papers. You need to be the soul of discretion where romance is concerned.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Any changes made now are likely to be good ones. Make better use of your natural talents. A difficult situation will resolve itself if you can just keep your sense of humor.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Profits soar when you team up with someone who has imagination. Creative and artistic enterprises do great! A vehement difference of opinion could cause a rift; soft-pedal your views.

Screenwriter sees it all in 50 years

HOLLYWOOD (AP) — Julius Epstein got his first Academy Award nomination for co-writing "Four Daughters" in 1938. He won for "Casablanca" in 1943, and was nominated this year for "Reuben, Reuben."

In 50 years of writing films he has seen it all, yet he still displays an enthusiasm for his craft. He has the exuberance of a film school graduate, with an overlay of cynicism stemming from a half-century of studio warfare.

Like most screenwriters, he has been overlooked in the publicity whirl that centers on stars and directors. So he is enjoying the spate of interviews following his nomination.

"I know the reason for all the attention: my age," said the writer, a vigorous 74, in an interview with The Associated Press. "People are surprised to find that I'm not at the Motion Picture Country House playing shuffleboard."

He has a smooth head, brown from hours on the tennis court. The face is lean, the eyes mischievous. He can spin tales about his servitude in the big studios.

"Well, the system has changed," he said. "When I started out, all writers were under contract to studios. You had three or four assignments a year, and if you had one bad picture, you hoped that the other two or three were good.

"Today, writing for films is more like writing for the theater. Instead of 600 pictures a year, the majors make 80, and many of those are pickups from independent producers.

"The percentage of original scripts is much higher now. The studios used to rely on hit plays and novels or short stories — material that had already enjoyed a certain acceptance in another medium," he said.

"Now it's mostly originals," Epstein continued. "A screenwriter works on a script the way a playwright creates a play. You can go three or four years between pictures. There's a saying about our work: You can make a killing, but you can't make a living."

"Reuben, Reuben" took three years of Epstein's life. As he did for "Pete and Tillie," which also netted him an Oscar nomination, he arranged a one-paragraph option from the author, Peter DeVries. Epstein wrote the script on speculation, then found major studios weren't interested in the wry tale of a boozy British poet rampaging through New England suburbia.

The film finally found an angel in the Taft Entertainment Company, which supplied the $2.3-million budget.

GOREN BRIDGE

ANSWERS TO BRIDGE QUIZ

BY CHARLES GOREN AND OMAR SHARIF

Q.1 — As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠83 ♡K98 ◇J107 ♣AQ965
The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
1 ♡	Pass	2 ♠	Pass
2 NT	Pass	?

What action do you take?

A. — Since you have a minimum two-over-one response, it is tempting to pass two no trump. However, your three hearts to a high honor and ruffing value in spades suggest that the hand might play better at a suit contract. Bid three hearts, and leave the final decision to partner.

Q.2 — Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠J982 ♡A7 ◇Q842 ♣763
Partner opens the bidding with one diamond. What do you respond?

A. — Don't attempt to get the hand off your chest by raising to two diamonds, because that runs the risk of missing a 4-4 spade fit. The modern tendency is not to by-pass a four-card major suit if it can be shown conveniently, so we will go with the trend and bid one spade.

Q.3 — Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠Q8 ♡J106 ◇AJ9863 ♣A8
The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
Pass	Pass	1 ◇	Pass
2 NT	Pass	?

What action do you take?

A. — Since partner is a passed hand, his jump in no trump is not forcing. Also, in terms of high cards, you could hardly have had less for your opening bid, so it might seem that the prudent course is to pass. However, we feel that your sixth diamond and useful intermediate cards in the other suits make three no trump an attractive gamble.

Q.4 — As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠9854 ♡Q7 ◇QJ8 ♣AK83
The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
1 ♠	Pass	2 ♣	Pass
2 NT	Pass	3 ♦	Pass
3 NT	Pass	?

What action do you take?

A. — So much stress has been laid upon finding an eight-card major fit that we would not be surprised if your automatic reaction was to correct to four spades. However, your "soft" values (queens and jacks) and the fact that you have a stopper in every suit makes three no trump attractive. This could be one of those hands where there are only nine tricks available at both spades and no trump. Pass.

Q.5 — Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠QJ87 ♡J52 ◇KQ10 ♣AJ6
The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
1 ♠	Pass	3 ♠	Pass
3 NT	Pass	?

What action do you take?

A. — Your jump to three spades described your hand exactly — 13-15 points and four-card spade support. Knowing that, partner elected to bid three no trump. With your perfectly balanced hand, you have no reason to overrule him. Pass.

Q.6 — Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠AQ8 ♡AQ1092 ◇654 ♣73
The bidding has proceeded:

South	West	North	East
1 ♡	Pass	1 ♠	Pass

What do you bid now?

A. — You can't rebid two hearts — in this sequence that virtually promises a six-card suit. You don't have a second suit to show, and you certainly don't want to bid no trump with two suits wide open. That leaves only a raise to two spades. The quality of your support makes up for the fact that you would prefer to have four spades for that action.

Mutual survival

Appointment of an air force general to build a space-based defense against nuclear ballistic missiles is clear evidence there is growing support for a program called High Frontier.

This program's goal is to defend ourselves by intercepting and destroying the missiles in the event an nuclear exchange is begun.

The man who will be in charge is Lt. Gen. James A. Abrahamson, associate director for space flight at the National Aeronautics and Space Administration. The appointment was made by Secretary of Defense Caspar Weinberger, who said the general's mission was to create a "thoroughly reliable and effective defense" against both ballistic missiles and cruise missiles. The secretary added, "I don't have any doubt about our ultimate ability to do that."

Another man with the same spirit of optimism about building a successful defense against a nuclear attack is High Frontier's leader, retired Lt. Gen. Daniel O. Graham. A man of wisdom and patriotism, he was one of the first to see that a new defense strategy was needed and created the High Frontier program in 1982. General Graham deserves credit for getting President Reagan interested in the concept of a non-nuclear defense against nuclear weaponry, and for winning the support of politicians and other citizens throughout the land.

Some think we can defend ourselves against the Soviet Union's nuclear arsenal by a weapons freeze, or by negotiating. That is what Neville Chamberlain thought, and the British and the rest of us can be thankful that Winston Churchill's alternative prevailed. Others think a retaliation against a Soviet strike would be the best defense, but General Graham calls this MAD, or "Mutual Assured Destruction."

At a news conference the other day he said he preferred "Mutual Assured Survival" to such MADness, and that it is folly either to "freeze or fry." General Graham, who is thinking about his children and grandchildren as well as those of all Americans, makes much sense when he says High Frontier is a "viable alternative."

Mutual survival, no less, is at stake and makes High Frontier well worth pondering.

Beef's not in Japan

Leaders of the California beef industry are in Washington this week seeking the help of the Reagan administration and Congress to bolster U.S. meat exports to Japan.

They could use some help. The Japanese have placed heavy duties, surcharges and quotas on imported beef, thus denying the United States equal trade opportunities. The cattlemen want the administration to start playing hardball with the Japanese, retaliating with similar restrictions on imports from that country.

Cattlemen can deliver beef that sells here at $3 a pound to Tokyo wholesalers for $3.50 a pound. However, Japan severely limits the amount that can be brought in and levies a 25 percent duty charge, plus a surcharge of up to $1 a pound, on these imports.

Consumers in Japan pay anywhere from $17 to $27 a pound for U.S. beef. Their own highly prized Kobe beef — from steers fed on beer and grain and massaged by women handlers — costs $47 a pound.

Where's the beef? Obviously not in Japan.

Another View:

Bankruptcy distortion

Organized labor is lobbying against the interests of its members by urging Congress to make it tougher for failing businesses to set aside union contract agreements during bankruptcy proceedings.

What working men and women should understand is that unprofitable companies easily could be forced out of business if they were not allowed to reduce labor costs during last-ditch reorganization efforts.

When a company shuts down, of course, its employees lose 100 percent of their salaries. Organized labor largely is reacting to the Supreme Court's ruling in February affirming that companies have the right to temporarily set aside labor contracts during "Chapter 11" bankruptcy reorganization.

It is widely, but erroneously, believed that bankruptcy law allows companies to simply tear up labor contracts. In truth, a firm that sets aside its union contract under Chapter 11 must later defend its action in court.

If the court rules that the company acted in bad faith or without sufficient economic justification, the contract is reinstated and the company may have to pay employees for lost earnings.

The courts have yet to find a case in which a company claimed bankruptcy for the sake of busting a union.

It would be nearly impossible for a prospering company to demonstrate that its contract with labor was a burden within the meaning of the bankruptcy law. And it is doubtful that a healthy company would be willing to lose the confidence of its suppliers, creditors and investors by filing for bankruptcy, even if it could get away with such an action.

Congress should reject labor's request to revise the bankruptcy rules. Some companies — as has been dramatically seen in the airline industry — simply have no choice but to reduce labor costs or go out of business. The current bankruptcy law is necessary to protect both industry and its employees.

In this case, workers should lobby their union spokesmen in Washington to represent them more responsibly.

JACK ANDERSON

U.S. stonewalling Aussies

WASHINGTON — U.S. intelligence and law enforcement agencies have steadfastly refused to cooperate in a 3-year Australian investigation of an international bank that may have been handling illicit arms deals and laundering drug traffic profits.

Jack Anderson

A number of the bank's officers were high-ranking U.S. military and intelligence officials.

The CIA denies any involvement with the bank, and the Australian investigators have dug up no solid evidence of ties between any U.S. agency and the Sydney-based bank, Nugan Hand. Officially at least, they express doubt that any connection existed.

But they base this conclusion on a rather shaky premise. Say the Australian investigators:

"If the CIA or any other intelligence organization had intended to use Nugan Hand as a cover for covert operations, it was a clumsy attempt, and one would have expected a more professional effort from an intelligence organization."

This flattering deduction does not, of course, cover the possibility that individual officers of the bank used their intelligence connections to further their questionable financial dealings — or that the "old boy network" was responsible for the stonewalling of Australian investigators by U.S. agencies.

The bank was founded by Frank Nugan, an Australian, and Michael Hand, an American. It collapsed in 1980 following Nugan's death — an apparent suicide. Hand disappeared at the same time, and hasn't surfaced since.

The roster of former U.S. officials with ties to the bank includes:

— William Colby, former director of the CIA. He was an attorney for the bank briefly, working on tax matters and other legal problems. His business card was found on Nugan's body.

— A former CIA station chief in Bangkok, Thailand.

— Several other generals, admirals and former CIA officials.

Although many bank documents were apparently shredded after Nugan's death, the Australian investigators pieced together evidence of Nugan Hand's activities. The four-volume report of the Australian task force has been reviewed by my associates Donald Goldberg and John Dillon.

Nugan Hand was believed to have been involved in drug traffic in the Golden Triangle of Southeast Asia. The bank had a branch office in the otherwise unpromising town of Chiang Mai in northwestern Thailand, not far from the Burmese border. Its office there was just down the hall from the U.S. Drug Enforcement Administration.

In fact, Nugan Hand officials told investigators they had offered to pass along to the DEA any information on drug smuggling they came across.

The investigators also found substantial evidence that linked the bank to convicted gun-runner Edwin Wilson, a former CIA agent who was then working with the Navy's super-secret Task Force 157, which used shipping companies as covers for espionage.

The Aussies felt strongly about the lack of cooperation from the U.S. government. The task force report complains:

"During the course of the Nugan Hand inquiry, many links were found between individuals connected with the group and individuals connected in very significant ways with U.S. intelligence organizations, specifically the CIA and the Office of Naval Intelligence (Task Force 157). ... At times those links appear to have been an intrinsic part of the then-ongoing activity and have the appearance of the direct involvement of the U.S. intelligence community itself."

The Australian investigators were rebuffed by every U.S. government agency they approached for information. The big question is: Why?

Footnote: Yates could not be reached for comment. Cocke said he had simply rented office space to representatives of the bank.

MILITARY THEFT UPDATE: The Pentagon continues to stonewall congressional efforts to investigate my disclosure that at least $10 million worth of precious metals is being stolen each year in the military's recycling-recovery program. Bill Nichols, D-Ala., chairman of the House Armed Services subcommittee on investigations, ordered an inquiry at the urging of Rep. Jim Courter, R-N.J.

But the Pentagon sticks to its dubious claim that virtually all stealing is done by employees of the private contractors who recycle the precious metals, not by the Pentagon's military or civilian personnel. And the brass hats are reportedly withholding documents — which I have obtained — showing that most of the thefts occur at government installations before the metals ever get to the recycling center at Colts Neck, N.J.

Defense officials have assured House investigators that new security measures are in place that will prevent the thefts — which they had denied were occurring.

Labor boss Mondale's 'beef'

WASHINGTON — Top-level AFL-CIO operatives were amazed when Walter F. Mondale, their endorsed Democratic presidential candidate, asked to be invited to the big AFL-CIO regional meeting in Manhattan March 24 for one reason: to get himself introduced by earthy, pungent Lane Kirkland.

Rowland Evans

Mondale's dependence on the tart-tongued AFL-CIO president, more pronounced every day, reached its peak when he started borrowing Kirkland's now-famous use of the Wendy's hamburger TV ad, "Where's the beef?" to attack Sen. Gary Hart. Big Labor insiders have little respect for Mondale's ability to phrase complicated issues in short takes, a Kirkland speciality.

Robert Novak

That partly explains Kirkland's increasingly caustic attacks on Hart, despite his 80 percent pro-AFL-CIO voting record. Top Kirkland aides say privately that since Mondale's speech-writers apparently are unable to supply the former vice president with any quotable lines for the all-important local TV evening news, Kirkland has to do it for him.

SHULTZ'S RETREAT

Administration insiders say privately that Secretary of State George Shultz gave away the store when he agreed with Sen. Daniel Inouye to accept $62 million for the vital program to keep the Salvadoran army in the field against Cuban-backed insurgents.

In fact, if Shultz had stayed tough in the saddle, the administration's full $93 million request almost certainly would have been approved by the Senate. That would have raised the break-even point between later Senate and House conference committee negotiations.

At the time Shultz made the deal — person-to-person — with the ranking Democrat on the Senate Foreign Operations Subcommittee, prospects for getting the full amount asked by President Reagan looked weak. Nevertheless, Shultz disregarded minority advice not to compromise so deeply so fast.

MCFARLAND SLIP

Usually sure-footed Robert McFarlane, President Reagan's national security adviser, slipped when he advised Reagan to use his speech to the United Jewish Appeal as the platform for his program to sell Stinger anti-aircraft missiles and other arms to Jordan, a leading pro-American Arab state.

Diplomatic insiders immediately warned that using such a public Jewish platform to appeal for support for the U.S. to arm Jordan would needlessly antagonize Jordan's King Hussein. "Hussein would think Reagan has to clear everything with the American Jewish community, no matter how it demeans Jordan," one Mideast specialist said privately.

That is exactly what happened. In his zeal to assuage pro-Israeli opinion on the Jordan arms deal, Reagan unleashed a swarm of Arab wasps that immediately stung him. Hussein's response was the harshest attack on the U.S. he ever made, and the Stinger sale died.

NEW YORK FEUDING

Walter F. Mondale's New York supporters who had complained about Gov. Mario Cuomo's late start in getting ready for the presidential primary campaign are furious over the way he has been running the Mondale effort once he got going.

Cuomo has been typically aggressive in promoting Mondale. What bothers the Mondaleites is the activity of Cuomo's agents — state Democratic Chairman William Henessey and son Andrew Cuomo — in protecting the governor's turf.

Specifically Cuomo's men vetoed plans calling for a fairly heavy role for the governor's factional Democratic rivals: New York City Mayor Ed Koch and State Attorney General Robert Abrams. "We're trying to elect a president and they're playing political games," one Mondale insider complained.

FRENCH SMITH'S MISTAKE

Advisers to President Reagan believe Attorney General William French Smith inadvertently contributed to the woes of his designated successor, Edwin Meese III, by the Justice Department's handling of the Carter briefing book affair.

Smith last year chose not to reveal the department's full findings when it looked into how the 1980 Reagan campaign acquired President Jimmy Carter's debate briefing book. Instead, the attorney general put out an unrevealing three-page summary.

That left an opening for foes of Meese's confirmation to utilize memos indicating he had seen the Carter briefing documents. Had Smith released full information detailing Meese's role the Reagan advisers believe at least that issue would have been removed from the confirmation proceedings.

CHARLEY REESE

Production rates tell sad story

I hope you are mature enough to understand that some politicians lie and others bend the truth like a pretzel. The "integrity quotient" in the present Congress is below the average of pawn borkers, loan sharks and used car salesmen.

Charley Reese

The area where this is most visible is the debate over the defense budget. The Heritage Foundation, which is a think tank with a stable of very reputable scholars, recently published some figures which refute the claims of those who want to cut defense spending.

One claim of the defense cutters is that the United States has now spent enough to "catch up" with the Soviet Union. This is not true.

Production rates — how much of a give weapon is being produced annually — tell the true story. In fiscal Year 1984, the U.S. produced 720 tanks, 330 tactical aircraft, 3 major warships, and 1,290 other armored vehicles. In Fiscal Year 1984, the Soviet Union produced 1,920 tanks, 680 tactical aircraft, 9 major warships, and 4,070 other armored vehicles.

In other words, the Soviet Union is still out-producing the United States by two to three times. When you add this differential in current production to the existing imbalance in inventories, you can plainly see why the United States has not "caught up" with the Soviets.

Another lie being told is that defense buildup under the Reagan Administration has corrected the adverse trends in strategic nuclear weapons. The fact is that today we have fewer land based and sea based missiles and fewer strategic bombers than we did three years ago. This is because older weapons are being retired faster than they are being replaced.

Nothing has yet been done to correct the most worrisome weakness, the vulnerability of our land-based missiles. The first MX has not even been produced, much less deployed, and already Democrats want to kill the program again.

The third lie is the claim that deficits are the fault of increases in defense spending. U.S. defense spending in the 1950s averaged 9 percent of the Gross National Product; 8 percent of the GNP in the 1960s; 6 percent of the GNP in the 1970s. Under Reagan, it remains at about 6 percent of the GNP. Whereas defense spending in the 1950s was roughly half of the federal budget, it is now less than a third. What has increased is not defense spending but domestic spending.

Another false claim is that Congress has given President Reagan everything he wanted in defense. In Fiscal Year 1982, congress cut the defense request by $7 billion; in FY 83, by $12 billion; and in FY 84, by $17 billion.

There is, of course, some waste in the defense budget just as there is some waste in every government program, but providing for the safety of the American people and the continued independence of the nation is the number one duty of government.

The congress itself is responsible for much of the waste. I created the massive civilian bureaucracy, not the military. It frequently forces the military to continue to buy weapons the military doesn't want. The Congress cannot separate pork barel from its duty to provide for a common defense.

Furthermore, the cost of defense is determined by the nature of the threat and the number of missions the civilian government assigns the military. The only rational way to cut defense spending is to eliminate missions.

One huge aspect of defense spending is the additional funds necessary to maintain an all volunteer force and that expense is incurred simply because the politicians are too cowardly to re-enact a military draft. What the Congress traditionally does to make up for the extra cost of a volunteer force is short the services on fuel, ammunition, spare parts and training.

You should ask yourself why it took 6,000 Americans backed up by a fleet and air superiority three days to secure Grenada which was held by 600 Cubans and a few poorly trained Grenadans. Politically, the operation was a success, but militarly is should have been a lot better.

Cheating and playing games with the armed forces is one crime for which I will not forgive a politician. And if you value your freedom and your life, you'd better not forgive them either.

Hart relies on error-free campaign, 'underdog' tradition for victory

NEW YORK (AP) — Gary Hart is relying on a relatively error-free campaign and a tradition among New Yorkers to vote for the underdog to give him either a close second place finish or a victory over Walter F. Mondale in the most critical primary election yet.

Unlike Illinois, where embarrassing mistakes involving television ads cost him votes, Hart's campaign in New York has been relatively smooth.

With primaries coming less often now, Hart has more time to campaign and become better known. In New York, 252 delegates to the Democratic National Convention will be selected in Tuesday's statewide presidential primary.

Hart campaigned for five days in Illinois before that state's primary, won by Mondale. But he has been in and out of New York and neighboring Connecticut for two weeks.

On the eve of the voting, Hart was scheduled today to speak at rallies in Buffalo and Albany, where Mondale's organization is strong.

There is likely to be some spillover effect into New York from Connecticut, where Hart won by a two to one margin in that state's primary last week. A large proportion of New York's 3.5 million voters live in New York City, and so reaching them with both paid television and local television coverage has been easier than in the Midwest.

In an interview, Jim Monahan, Hart's campaign director in New York, predicted a close finish and said polls taken for the campaign show the Colorado senator gaining, if slowly, on Mondale. A loss by a heavy margin would be a serious setback to a campaign whose candidate was recognized by only a small percentage of voters until this winter, Monahan said.

"If we get blown out, then we are in real trouble," said Monahan.

New York is important in its own right, but its impact on later primary states is also vital for both the psychological effect of a win or loss, and the dip in contributions which usually follow a primary defeat.

Paid political ads are more important in New York than most states, and Hart has heavily outspent Mondale on television time, attacking the former vice president on his positions on Central America, on accepting money from political action committees for his delegates, and on his role as Jimmy Carter's vice president.

Hart has more than 3,000 volunteers working in New York, according to campaign officials.

Jesse Jackson

Jackson tries to alter face of politics

An Analysis

By DONALD M. ROTHBERG
AP Political Writer

NEW YORK — With a presidential campaign unlike any other in memory, the Rev. Jesse Jackson is trying to change the face of American politics.

"There are three candidates and two points of view," Jackson repeatedly tells audiences.

Walter Mondale and Gary Hart may have their differences, but they are peas in a pod when compared with Jackson. Mondale and Hart approach many sensitive issues with the caution expected of most presidential candidates.

Not Jackson. The latest example of his style was Sunday night when he called for the withdrawal of Britain from Northern Ireland and came close to embracing the Irish Republican Army.

Jackson spent the night with Thomas and Vita Cox in Middle Village, Queens. Mr. and Mrs. Cox were described in a Jackson press release as "actively involved in working with the Irish Republicans in Northern Ireland."

Jackson sidestepped a question on whether he sympathized with the violent methods of some members of the IRA.

"I would tend not to identify with violence anywhere," he said. Then he added that he would "identify with those who struggle to unify Ireland."

The Jackson difference begins with the fact that he has come so far as a black running for president and has accelerated the involvement of the black community in politics.

That difference often seems a product of Jackson's background in the confrontational politics of the civil rights movement. At other times it seems to lie in the contrasts between the traditional constituencies wooed by Hart and Mondale and the have-nots who are Jackson's base.

There also are basic differences on such issues as the size of the military budget and relations with Israel and her Arab neighbors.

On still other occasions, the differences appear to be rhetorical than real, more symbolic than substantive.

Jackson has based his candidacy on a bid to form a coalition of blacks, Hispanics, Asians, American Indians and women. But while Jackson has received white votes in Iowa, New Hampshire and Connecticut, his "Rainbow Coalition" remains largely black.

Mondale reminds black audiences of his long record on behalf of civil rights and often adds, "I don't need to come here to get my civil rights card punched."

But when Jackson talks about civil rights, he describes the contrast as between those who laid their bodies on the line and those who didn't.

"I didn't just believe in public accomodations, I marched for them," he said. "They (Hart and Mondale) were old enough. They weren't there."

Nobel Peace laureate Lech Walesa meets a group of students from Gdansk, Poland, after Mass, Sunday, to express his support for the youngsters' fight with the communist authorities over the removal of crosses from schools.

Walesa says protests of cross ban spreading

WARSAW, Poland (AP) — Lech Walesa says student protests are spreading against a government ban on crosses in public buildings and urged Poles to stand firm in the dispute for the sake of "our own children and our conscience."

Communist authorities are striking at "the weak" by stripping crucifixes from the walls of schools instead of factories, the leader of the outlawed Solidarity trade union said Sunday from Gdansk.

"There will be no compromise in this case. In this case we will make use of all means available," Walesa said. "The stakes are our own children and our conscience."

The statement from the 40-year-old shipyard electrician and 1983 Nobel Peace Prize winner echoed one from Poland's 80 bishops, who said Sunday the church is not willing to compromise.

In a pastoral letter read from pulpits across the country, the bishops issued a new demand for "crosses in places...where the children of this overwhelmingly Catholic nation are brought up."

The government of Gen. Wojciech Jaruzelski maintains that crucifixes in public buildings violate constitutional principles separating church and state.

The church, which claims membership of more than 90 percent of the country's 36.7 million people, argues that the crucifix should be allowed to hang where the majority of people wants it.

Government spokesman Jerzy Urban said last week authorities were removing crosses from an unspecified number of factories as well as schools "elsewhere in Poland" without incident, but clandestine communiques claim the crucifix crusade has spread to several other towns.

One such communique said five students were detained overnight March 21 when plainclothes security agents raided a high school in Torun, 150 miles northwest of Warsaw.

Walesa also reported trouble between youngsters and authorities in the Baltic seaport where he lives."I know about arrests, questionings, detentions, searches and other forms of repression applied against the youngsters of the 3rd Lycee in Gdansk," he said.

Contacted by telephone and asked to provide details about the alleged incidents, Walesa said, "I don't want to say anything on the phone because it's tapped."

Europeans spoils of war in Angola

JAMBA, Angola (AP) — Scores of European technicians and missionaries have become part of the spoils of war in Angola, where guerrillas battling the Marxist government use foreign prisoners as bargaining chips.

Hostages from countries the guerrillas consider friendly, like Portugal, are scheduled for release. Hostages from countries seen as hostile, like Britain, are threatened with indefinite captivity.

Captures of Europeans are increasing as the National Union for the Total Independence of Angola — UNITA — widens its nine-year struggle against the ruling Popular Movement for the Liberation of Angola and the Cuban units supporting the MPLA.

Most hostages say UNITA treats them well, and some express admiration for the movement. But they complain that life in the African bush, including walks of hundreds of miles to UNITA headquarters, is exhausting and sometimes depressing.

UNITA has captured nearly 100 foreigners since December, when it stepped up fighting in northern Angola. They include 43 Portuguese, 16 Britons, 15 Filipinos and one Yugoslav, all seized Feb. 23 at the Quando diamond mine in northeastern Angola, where they worked.

Others are eight Roman Catholic missionaries seized Dec. 18 at Cacolo, in the same region, and four Bulgarian and 10 Portuguese technicians taken last week at Novo Redondo, or Sumbe, a provincial capital south of Luanda.

Most were present at a rally Friday when UNITA invited 30 foreign reporters to visit its headquarters at Jamba, in the wilderness in southeastern Angola. The Britons were taken away before most reporters could speak with them.

Seizing foreigners is not new in African conflicts. The Eritrean Liberation Front obtained publicity in the 1960s by taking Americans working in the Ethiopian province of Eritrea, holding them for several months, and releasing them to tell the guerrillas' side of the war.

Chadian rebels kidnapped French archeologist Francoise Claustre in 1974 and held her in the desert for 33 months until France paid an $800,000 ransom. Her husband, Pierre, was held 17 months.

Africans complain that Western news media make too much of the capture of a limited number of Westerners, while the suffering of thousands of Africans killed or made homeless in guerrilla wars is overlooked. But the seizure of Europeans in Angola draws attention because of the relatively high numbers involved.

Eugenia Costa, 38, whose husband, Jorge, was an engineer at the Quando mine, said UNITA overcame MPLA defenders in a one-hour fight at dawn. The Costas and their 1-year-old daughter walked with 73 other prisoners more than 30 days and rode in a truck four days with guerrilla escorts to cover the 500 miles to Jamba.

"We've had very good treatment. I like UNITA. They are well educated," she said. She said riding in trucks along bumpy trails was worse than walking.

Mine electrician Ivan Suden, 41, from Yugoslavia, said, "There was shelling and we thought we would not survive. Then a knock on the door. 'We are UNITA. Come with us,' they say.

"We would walk 15 miles one day, relax the next. We boiled corn and killed cattle every day. Once we passed MPLA territory and had to go at night."

Alexander Ivan, 54, of Czechoslovakia, was among a large group of Czechoslovaks and Portuguese captured March 12, 1983, at a paper mill near the port of Lobito. All have been released except 20 Czechoslovak men.

"We don't know whether we will ever get out. We don't dare to hope. UNITA's aim is not to let us go," he said.

Sharon mounts challenge to Shamir

TEL AVIV, Israel (AP) — Former Defense Minister Ariel Sharon has announced that he will challenge Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir for leadership of the Herut party.

Herut is the senior party in Shamir's governing coalition of right-wing and religious parties. The coalition fell apart earlier this month, however, and Shamir gave in to the opposition Labor Party's demand for general elections in July, 16 months ahead of schedule.

Sharon's decision, announced Sunday, is seen by many political analysts as an attempt to win a senior position in a future Shamir government and not as a serious threat to Shamir's party leadership.

But Sharon may not be Shamir's only challenger. Deputy Premier David Levy was expected to announce early this week whether he intends to seek the party leadership at the Herut nominating convention April 12.

Returns confirm need for runoff

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador (AP) — The official returns from El Salvador's presidential election, announced one week after the balloting, confirm that moderate Jose Napoleon Duarte and ultra-rightist Roberto d'Aubuisson will compete in a runoff.

Duarte, leader of the Christian Democrats, finished first with 43.4 percent of the vote, the Central Elections Council announced Sunday.

Because he did not gain a majority, Duarte will face d'Aubuisson, candidate of the Republican Nationalist Alliance, in a runoff likely to be held April 29 or May 6. The council was expected to announce the date today.

D'Aubuisson got 29.8 percent of the vote, while third place finisher Francisco Jose Guerrero of the conservative National Conciliation Party got 19.3. Five other right-wing parties shared the remaining ballots.

The outcome had been anticipated by unofficial results tallied last week.

Houston's Akeem Olajuwon (34) and teammate Alvin Franklin celebrate after beating Virginia in the semifinals. Now they meet...

SEATTLE (AP) — Akeem has his dream tonight.

So do the rest of the nation's college basketball fans — a dream matchup between 7-footers Akeem Olajuwon of the University of Houston and Patrick Ewing of Georgetown with the NCAA championship at stake.

They will be in the pivot, but they may not be the pivotal players once the game, set to begin at 8:12 p.m., gets under way before a sellout crowd in the 38,613-seat Kingdome.

The play of the senior Georgetown guards, 6-5 Fred Brown and 6-2 Gene Smith, and 6-9 freshman forward Michael Graham, of Houston's 6-2 sophomore guard Alvin Franklin and forwards Rickie Winslow, a 6-8 freshman, and Michael Young, a 6-7 senior, will be of equal importance, if not as riveting.

Perhaps it will be Georgetown's depth, Coach John Thompson's propensity for running players into and out of the action to keep them from burning out during the Hoyas' intense and ever-present full-court press. They will be working against a Cougar offense rarely substituted by Coach Guy Lewis.

Olajuwon, who averages 16.8 points a game and has a nation-leading 491 rebounds and 205 blocked shots, has played every minute of the past three games. "When I was on the court, I didn't get tired," Olajuwon said. "If I get tired, I tell the coach and he takes me out."

EWING, WHO averages a team-high 16.6 points and has 362 rebounds and 129 blocks, gets ample rest under Thompson's free-substitution system. And, due to early foul trouble in the semifinal, he played only 28½ minutes against Kentucky.

"I think it's going to be a tremendous matchup between Ewing and Akeem," Lewis said Sunday, before the teams practiced. "They do the same things. They're both outstanding defensive players. They both cause the opposition team to shoot 7, 8, 9 percentage points less than they normally do. They're both great rebounders and certainly great shot-blockers . . . I think the biggest difference between them is the color of their uniforms."

Thompson, for two years a reserve center behind Bill Russell on the Boston Celtics, agreed the Ewing and Olajuwon are similar, that each is exceptional. And he said the outcome of their meeting "won't decide which of them is the best big man. I saw men outplay Russell but he was the best."

Further, Thompson said, there's far more to tonight's game than the collision of 7-footers.

"People always get caught up in the star figure," Thompson said. "But Young (Houston's leading scorer) is a very outstanding player. Whoever checks Young is going to be very important. They call him the 'Silent Assassin,' and I think that's very true in relation to the attention that Akeem gets or a person like Patrick gets.

Playing well wasn't good enough for Express' Young

By The Associated Press

USFL

Steve Young says that just playing well is not good enough for him or the city of Los Angeles.

"I felt good about it, but we have to get some wins on the board . . . LA is not a patient town," Young said after his solid but unspectacular United States Football League debut as the Los Angeles Express quarterback, a 26-10 loss to the New Jersey Generals that lowered the losers' record to 2-4. "I feel comfortable with what I've done, but I've just got to get better."

Young, the former Brigham Young All-American who was signed to a contract that will pay him some $40 million over the next 43 years, completed 19 of 29 passes for 163 yards and one touchdown. He was intercepted once.

Young said he has high expectations, but tried not to think about pressure in terms of justifying the size of his contract.

"If I can live up to what I expect — probably a 40-for-40 day with no interceptions and six touchdowns for 500 yards — I'm happy," Young said. "But I've got to feel like I did what I could. Pressure is something that you can either shrug off or put on yourself and make it worse. I have tried to alleviate a lot of it and just go out there and have fun. I think if I keep that realistic attitude I'll be OK."

THE CURIOSITY about Young overshadowed the performance of New Jersey quarterback Brian Sipe, who completed 13 of his 21 passes for 219 yards, two touchdowns and no interceptions.

Sipe threw an 8-yard TD pass to Clarence Collins in the second quarter, then combined with Herschel Walker on a 50-yard scoring play as New Jersey, 5-1, widened its margin to 23-10 in the third period.

Young's touchdown pass was for nine yards to Jojo Townsell in the second period. He also scrambled six times for 32 yards.

"I think I tried a little bit too much," Young said. "There were times when I could have stayed in the pocket. I was trying to make things happen with my legs and it just didn't happen."

Express Coach John Hadl, himself a former star quarterback, was far from dissatisfied with Young's progress.

"Steve Young is going to be a great quarterback," Hadl said. "He hadn't ever suited up, and he's up against the league's best team. Yet he saw some things on the field that another quarterback wouldn't see for a year."

The Los Angeles area, however, apparently is taking a wait-and-see attitude toward Young.

While nearly 40,000 attended a baseball exhibition game at Dodger Stadium between the two local major-league teams, the Generals and the Express drew a crowd of 26,024, with the attendance boosted by a 2-for-1 ticket offer.

But the game was televised there and the Express had drawn nearly 10,000 fewer fans to its previous home game.

On Saturday, Oklahoma outlasted Houston 31-28 in overtime, Chicago edged Washington 21-20 and Memphis trimmed Jacksonville 27-24. New Orleans is at Birmingham tonight.

Panthers 26, Gunslingers 10

Michigan won its 12th straight time in two seasons as Novo Bojovic booted four field goals against San Antonio.

But the victory was a costly one for the Panthers, who lost star wide receiver Anthony Carter with a broken left arm in the second quarter.

Terry Miller added a 16-touchdown run for Michigan while quarterback Bobby Hebert fired a 7-yard TD strike to rookie Walter Broughton midway through the final quarter to ice the game after San Antonio pulled to within 16-10.

Stars 38, Bandits 24

Kelvin Bryant, playing with a pulled hamstring that kept him out of practice all week, ran for 114 yards and three touchdowns in Philadelphia's defeat of visiting Tampa Bay in front of a crowd of 30,270 at Veterans Stadium.

Bryant ran 38 yards with a fumble for the Stars' second touchdown in the second quarter. After Tampa Bay cut the deficit to 24-10 with a 53-yard pass play from John Reaves to Marvin Harvey, Bryant scored on two 1-yard runs in a four-minute span of the third period.

Maulers 28, Invaders 14

Glenn Carano threw three touchdown passes to Jackie Flowers and ran for another TD to lead the Pittsburgh over Oakland, which is winless in six games.

Flowers caught five passes for 140 yards as the Maulers, 2-4, registered their first home victory. The scoring tosses went 16, 28 and 7 yards, the latter set up by a 77-yard completion.

Gold 17, Wrangers 7

Harry Sydney rushed for 111 yards and a clinching fourth-quarter touchdown to pace Denver over Arizona at Mile High Stadium.

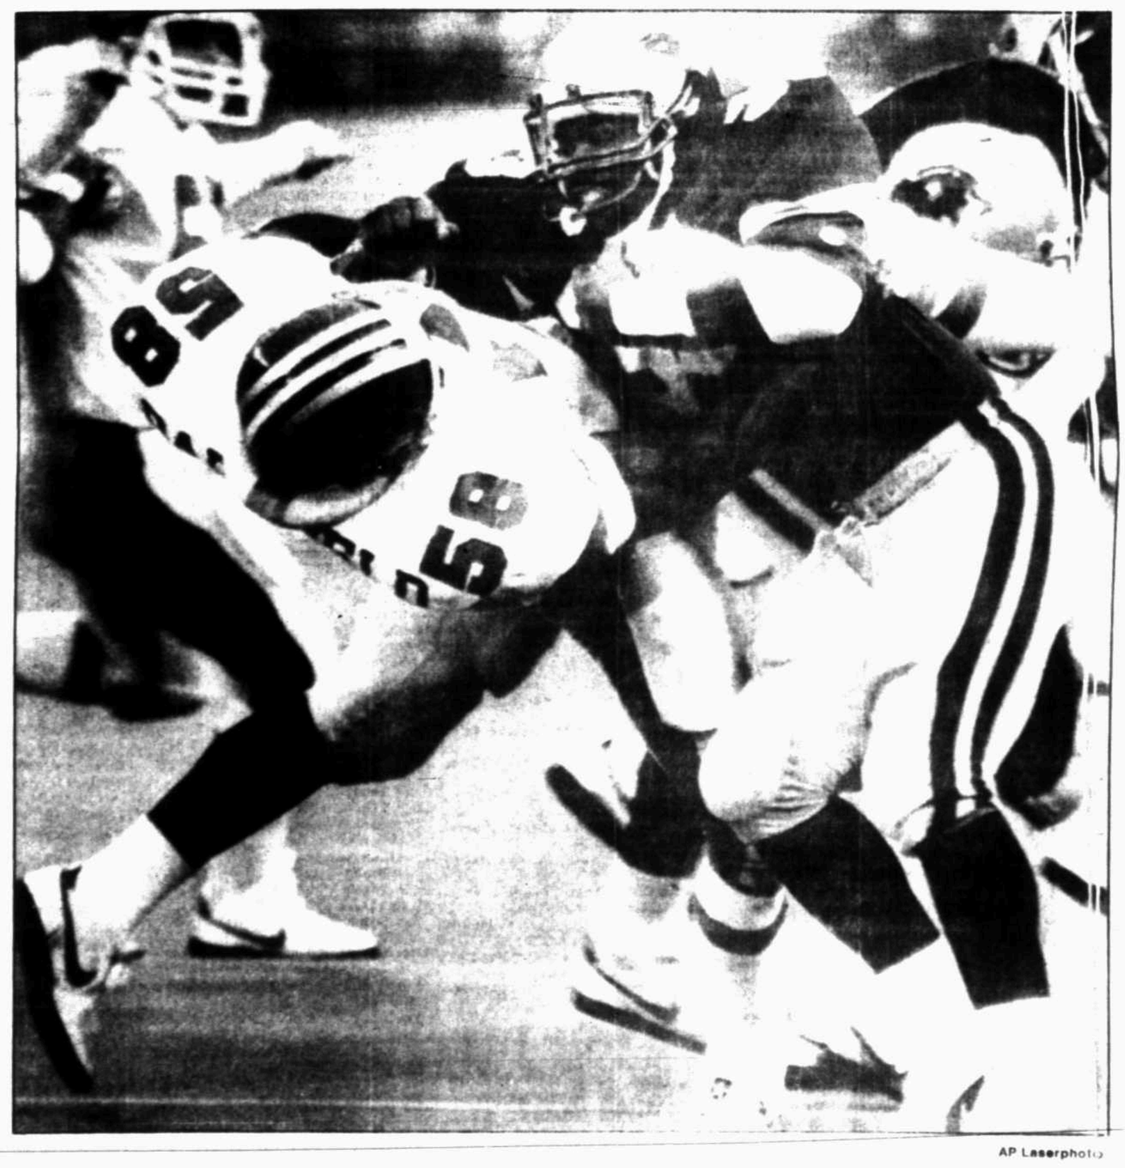

Sydney capped a 52-yard drive with a 1-yard touchdown plunge with 7:36 left to give the Gold a 17-7 lead. He also had a 38-yard run to the 4-yard line to set up a go-ahead touchdown by Bo Matthews in the third period.

Saturday's Games

Oklahoma trailed Houston 28-13 in the fourth quarter, scored two touchdowns in the final two minutes to force the overtime and then won on Efren Herrera's 19-yard field goal.

Chicago, 1-5, beat Washington, 0-6. The Federals missed an extra point after going ahead 20-14 in the fourth quarter, then the Blitz drove 78 yards for the winning touchdown, with quarterback Vince Evans running the last six yards to 1:05 to play.

Alan Duncan's 32-yard field goal with two seconds remaining lifted Memphis over Jacksonville.

Lee hosts MHS in first half finale

By BOB BRUNDAGE
Sports Writer

The first half of the District 4-5A baseball season comes to a close Tuesday when Midland High gathers its forces at Midland Lee at 4 p.m.

This game has more riding on it than the usual cross-town rivalry because, unlike last year, both teams are in contention for the district title.

The Rebels, after losing 7-2 to Abilene Cooper Saturday, are tied with the Cougars at 5-1 for the 4-5A lead. Midland High, an 11-2 loser to Abilene High, is currently alone in third place at 4-2. Intensity may be an understatement for this game.

Both coaches, Ernie Johnson at Lee and Tim Whalen at MHS agree on one point: The Bulldogs play well against the Rebels.

"They always seem to play well against us," said Johnson. "We haven't played real well against them the last two years. It doesn't make any difference who we're playing though if we don't play better than we did Saturday."

"We play well against them," echoed Whalen. "We have to. We have to maintain respect because we both have to live in the same town. It'll make a lot of people's season for us to beat them."

"There won't be any surprises," added Johnson. "We'll just go out and see who plays the best defense, gets the pitcher to throw strikes and plays defense."

THE WAY the two teams have been hitting so far in district play, this game could turn into a pitcher's duel. The Rebels are averaging only .273 in league play while MHS is hitting .255.

However, each team does have a few hitters to be leary of. At Lee, Steve Woodlee is hitting at a blistering .556 click and leads the team in RBIs with nine. Jimmy Phillips has upped his average to .455 and Bryan Willis is .444. Rob Walker, with a .300 average, is the only other Reb producing a consistant threat.

The Rebel lack of hitting throughout the lineup has been a source of worry for Johnson since district began. It's also a source of worry for Whalen now.

"What scares me is that they haven't been hitting one-through nine in the lineup," said Whalen. "They're due to come out of their slump and it really irratates me because I know who they play next: Us. If they're going to come out of the slump, it could be against us."

The earliest clinching date for a major-league pennant came in 1941 when the New York Yankees locked up the American League flag Sept. 4.

USC women win second straight NCAA crown

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Southern California captured its second straight NCAA women's basketball championship, but Coach Linda Sharp said it's too soon to mention the word "dynasty."

"I like to win ... winning the national championship is a wonderful experience but only one team can do it," said Sharp after her Lady Trojans took the 1984 crown Sunday with a 72-61 victory over Tennessee at Pauley Pavilion.

"I just want to have a good tradition at USC."

Keeping that tradition alive in the future will be more difficult without Pam and Paula McGee, 6-foot-3 twin sisters from Flint, Mich., who scored 17 points each in Sunday's title game.

"I have somewhat ambivalent feelings," said Pam, who also pulled down 12 rebounds. "I'm very happy about the national championship, but a part of me wants to stay with the now-USC dynasty."

Said Paula, "I guess making it to the Final Four three out of four years and winning two consecutive national championships can be considered a good accomplishment. I think Pam and I only continued a tradition that was started here, and will continue after we leave."

Southern Cal's sophomore All-American Cheryl Miller, who scored 16 points Sunday and was named the tournament's most valuable player, isn't so sure.

"It's going to be tough next year without the McGees," said Miller. "We are really going to miss them. They have taught me a lot."

Tennessee, which lost in the first round of the Southeastern Conference post-season tournament and needed an at-large invitation to reach the NCAA tournament, certainly played its underdog role to the hilt during the nationally televised final.

The No. 15 Lady Volunteers, who finished the season with a 23-10 record, led 28-26 at halftime and didn't allow fifth-ranked Southern Cal to take the lead for good until the final six minutes.

"I think our basketball team took the floor today and was not intimidated," said Tennessee Coach Pat Head Summitt, who will coach the U.S. Women's Olympic team at the Summer Games. "USC forced us a couple of times to alter our shots. They played the passing lanes very well, particularly on the wing."

Added Tennessee's 6-foot-2 forward Mary Ostrowski: "One of the first things Coach told us in her pregame talk was that USC was going to try and intimidate us. We were not intimidated today, but we turned the ball over at critical points.

"I think they played exceptionally well. They did the things they needed to do to win."

"WE HAVE to be concerned with what the other people do. You can't let the other players on the team go wild while you're trying to contain those people (like Ewing and Olajuwon). They played a zone a lot (in the semifinal against Virginia) and we're practicing against a zone. They trap at halfcourt. We've got to be ready for those things. They've got to be ready for our pressure.

"We're not going to do anything different and they're not going to do anything different," Thompson went on. "People will talk about whether Patrick outplayed Olajuwon or Olajuwon outplayed Patrick, but neither of those kids has played one-on-one against anybody all year. We'll be dropping guards and forwards into the middle (on Olajuwon) and they'll be dropping people back on Patrick."

It was Ewing who said it most succinctly. "It won't be me against Akeem," he observed. "It'll be Georgetown against Houston."

Perhaps, after all the strategy, after all the emotion, victory or defeat will hinge on an ill-timed instant of indecision such as those which have sent one or the other of these teams home as losers each of the past two seasons.

"We're very similar in the fact that both of us were very disappointed at almost winning the national championship," Thompson said. "We both probably still feel that wound and we both want to win it."

IN 1982, with the Hoyas trailing North Carolina by one point in the closing seconds, Brown, now a Georgetown senior, inadvertently passed the ball to James Worthy of the Tar Heels. North Carolina won 63-62.

In 1983, with Houston and North Carolina State tied in the closing seconds, the Wolfpack was angling for the last shot — and running out of time. Olajuwon was supposed to be under the basket, but he had drifted out to the free throw line. When Derek Whittenburg of the Pack heaved a desperation 35-footer, the only one in position to grab the short shot was teammate Lorenzo Charles, who dunked the ball as the horn sounded. N.C. State won 54-52.

Lewis recalled that the Cougars had built a 52-46 lead with 3:19 remaining, only to go into a slowdown that permitted N.C. State to catch up. Asked whether he expected to see a slowdown this year, Lewis replied: "There was a coach who spread it out for three minutes . . . and he was the most criticized coach in the history of the game. So surely you wouldn't do that in a Final Four. I sure as hell won't!"

A year ago, Lewis brought in a team heavily favored to take the title. This year the Cougars are the underdogs. "I think I'd rather be the heavy favorite," he said with a grin. "I'd rather everybody thought I had the best baliclub."

APPARENTLY, NOT too many within his profession think that. "I read today where there were 20 coaches interviewed. They were unanimous in picking Georgetown," he said, "but one coach did say we might play 'em close."

Thompson brushes aside all that talk. "I don't think being favorite or the underdog in the finals means anything," he said, "and history's proven that. There've been a lot of favorites who haven't been successful. You've got two very good teams at the end of the road. There are no patsies here now.

"Houston, winning the number of games they've won, has to be a good team. I don't think there's any danger of us being overconfident. If we don't play well, don't win, it's because we played against a good team. You can't get to the finals and be overconfident unless you're a fool."

Houston comes into the game with a 32-4 record, the last victory a 49-47 overtime decision Saturday over outmanned Virginia. Georgetown is 33-3 including its 53-40 semifinal rout of Kentucky, which collapsed in the second half, hitting just 3 of 33 field-goal attempts to squander a 29-22 halftime lead. "I'd love to think we played defense that well," Thompson said, ackowledging that it was as much the Wildcats' cold shooting as the Georgetown defense that killed Kentucky.

The only "casualty" of the semifinals was Smith, who suffered a strained arch. Thompson said Smith was hobbling on one crutch but that "he's getting better. We're not going to practice him today (Sunday). We're going to rest him and hopefully use him tomorrow."

Almost overlooked as the game approaches is the fact that a Georgetown victory will make Thompson the first black head coach to win an NCAA championship. "I feel offended by that, because that implies that I could be the first one to have intelligence to do that," Thompson said.

"I dont think it has any significance to me personally because I feel embarrassed and disgusted about that fact. I think a conscious effort on the part of a lot of folks prevented that from happening (to others). There are a lot men I've known throughout my life who are far better coaches than I . . . who were never provided with an opportunity to do this. And we've got to take into consideration that black schools in this country have only been permitted to participate in the NCAA tournament about three years.

"So John Thompson's being at the Final Four or whatever happens here has no significance to me in relation to my color other than the fact that I hope it serves as a positive example to any young kid who's around."

Winning streaks catapult Islanders, Bruins to top

By The Associated Press

The New York Islanders and Boston Bruins ended the National Hockey League season as you would expect division champions to — with winning streaks that catapulted them to the top.

And the league's two worst teams also finished according to form — falling to the Islanders and Bruins to complete the campaign on losing slides.

The Bruins surged to the Adams Division title with a seven-game unbeaten streak, including a string of five straight victories that concluded with a 3-1 decision over New Jersey Sunday night. The Devils lost their final eight games.

The four-time Stanley Cup champion Islanders, who clinched the Patrick Division crown Saturday night, knocked off Pittsburgh 2-1 Sunday to give them a seven-game undefeated streak. The Penguins, who wound up with the league's worst record (16-68-6 for only 38 points), dropped their last six games.

Elsewhere, Washington downed Philadelphia 4-1 to edge the Flyers for second place in the Patrick Division; Detroit lost to Chicago 4-3 and failed to overtake idle St. Louis for second in the Norris; the New York Rangers blanked Hartford 2-0 to conclude their most successful season in 10 years; Buffalo beat Toronto 4-2, and Winnipeg nipped Calgary 3-2.

The playoffs open Wednesday night with the Islanders hosting the Rangers and Philadelphia at Washington in the Patrick; Boston at home to Montreal and Quebec at Buffalo in the Adams; Minnesota entertaining Chicago and Detroit at St. Louis in the Norris; Edmonton at home to Winnipeg and Vancouver at Calgary in the Smythe. All series are best-of-five.

Bruins 3, Devils 1

"A lot of people had us written off a few weeks ago," said Boston defenseman Ray Bourque. "But everything jelled together. We played as a unit and won a lot of games. I'm very encouraged going into the playoffs."

He should be. The Bruins have tightened their defense and goaltender Pete Peeters surrendered only five goals in the final three games.

"There's easier ways to reach first place," said Boston Coach Gerry Cheevers.

As for New Jersey, it was a second straight dismal year. The Devils lost 17 one-goal games, including seven in overtime.

"You know you've arrived when you win those one-goal games rather than lose them," said goaltender Glenn Resch. "We've got to get some goal scorers. Hockey is a team sport, but a team has to lean on a couple of guys to pull them through. That's what we have to get. We don't have a blue-chipper."

Islanders 2, Penguins 1

At Pittsburgh, the Islanders rested Bryan Trottier, Ken Morrow, Tomas Jonsson and Mike Bossy. But they still had rookie Pat LaFontaine, who got his 13th goal in only 16 games, and Brent Sutter, who won it with his fifth goal in four games. Sutter scored his 34th goal of the season with 6:43 left on a 3-on-1 break, flipping a 10-foot shot past Denis Herron.

"We have to go in there flying high," LaFontaine said of the playoffs. "I'm getting the feeling of playoff hockey being a step higher, especially in intensity."

"We have to keep both feet on the ground and our heads on straight. We have to prepare in that respect," said Trottier.

Penguins Coach Lou Angotti could only look to the future.

"We're going into the draft with three first-round picks, including the No. 1," he said. "Our overall record is not impressive, but it's going to give us the chance to get some good young players with talent and that's what we need."

Capitals 4, Flyers 1

Washington secured the home-ice advantage for the opening round as Mike Gartner scored his 40th goal 31 seconds into the second period and the Caps won their sixth game in the last seven. The only defeat was Saturday night to the Islanders.

"We learned from that loss," said Gartner. "We decided to let the other team worry about us. We took a few more chances in the offensive zone."

Black Hawks 4, Red Wings 3

Troy Murray had a goal and an assist for Chicago, which had veteran goalie Tony Esposito refuse to play against visiting Detroit. Esposito, 41 and in his 17th NHL season, has not appeared in a game since a 4-3 defeat to Hartford on Feb. 5.

"I am deeply shocked and hurt but, at this point, I have to worry about the rest of the team and the playoffs," said Coach Orval Tessier.

"I am not going to discuss the matter," said Esposito, "but if you want to find out what's going on, I suggest you ask Mr. Tessier or Mr. Pulford (Chicago General Manager). They seem to have all the answers."

Rangers 2, Whalers 0

Glen Hanlon posted his first shutout since Dec. 2, 1981, stopping 26 shots, and Pierre Larouche and Don Maloney got the goals. Hanlon was returning from a five-game hiatus with hip and lower back strains.

"I had no pain," he said. "I have to take it one day at a time and hope I feel good when I get up in the morning."

Sabres 4, Maple Leafs 2

Rookie John Tucker notched the first hat trick of his NHL career, scoring three times in the first period and host Buffalo coasted. But the Sabres can't coast against Quebec, which is 6-1-1 versus Buffalo this season.

"The breaks just haven't gone our way when we've played them," Tucker said.

Jets 3, Flames 2

Lucien DeBlois scored twice as host Winnipeg finished its season on a high note after going winless for seven games. The Jets won their final two games.

Bullets beat Mavs, cut playoff magic number to four

By The Associated Press

You can tell which teams still have a chance for the playoffs in the National Basketball Association: Their motors are running faster.

"We can't just back into the playoffs, we've got to charge into them," said Washington's Jeff Malone after the Bullets recorded a 102-98 comeback victory Sunday over the Dallas Mavericks. "We want to win every game."

The Bullets have six games remaining on their schedule. Any combination of Washington victories and Chicago losses totaling four will clinch the final spot in the eight-team Eastern Conference playoffs for Washington.

Nuggets 129, Clippers 103

Kiki Vandeweghe had a game-high 25 points and T.R. Dunn scored nine of his season-high 13 in a third-quarter explosion as Denver routed San Diego for its 12th straight victory at home.

The Clippers trailed only 58-52 at intermission, but Denver outscored San Diego 35-22 in the third quarter. Vandeweghe had 10 points in the opening six minutes of the second half and Dunn, who entered the game with a 5.4 scoring average, later tallied seven straight points.

Ahead 93-74 after three quarters, Denver eliminated all doubt about the outcome when the Nuggets ran off 17 points and built a 33-point lead at one point.

Lakers 121, Warriors 110

Kareem Abdul-Jabbar scored 23 points, leaving him 47 points behind Wilt Chamberlain, the NBA's all-time leading career scorer, as Los Angeles whipped Golden State.

Abdul-Jabbar scored 12 of his points in the first quarter as the Lakers rolled to a 32-26 advantage. He scored four more points in the second period as Los Angeles took a 65-56 lead and the Warriors weren't closer than six points thereafter.

Earvin "Magic" Johnson led the Lakers with 26 points, while Golden State's Purvis Short led all scorers with 30.

Connors beats Kriek for PWTC title

BOCA RATON, Fla. (AP) — Jimmy Connors, taking his 103rd career victory, ignored an injured ankle and defeated Johan Kriek winning the Paine Webber Tennis Classic in classic Connors style — fighting all the way.

Connors defeated former South African player Kriek 7-5, 6-4 Sunday to win the $265,000 tournament and take home the $50,000 winner's check. Kriek, ranked No.13 in the world, collected $25,000 at the Boca West Resort and Club tournament.

"If I go out the way I came in and play the kind of points I'm expected to play as the best player in the world, then that's probably my main purpose for playing now," said the 32-year-old Connors.

Connors shrugged off the limping, saying, "That's nothing new. It's the same old problem I've had a long time, a bone spur on my right foot.

"Maybe it wasn't the most attractive tennis, but it got the job done," he said.

He called for the referee but didn't take the three-minute injury timeout allowed.

"I just wanted to alert the trainer, Bill Norris, in case it happened again," Connors said. "Anyway, it was just that the side of the shoes I wore weren't stiff enough."

Both players had a few frustrating moments with line calls — Connors yelling at one time and demanding in vain that a linesman be removed.

Connors now has a 22-1 record for 1984, losing only one match to Tom Gullikson in Madrid, Spain. Another match against Ivan Lendl in Rotterdam, Netherlands, was postponed because of a bomb threat.

There's life after NBA

MILWAUKEE (AP) — Wayne Embry, a vice president of the Milwaukee Bucks and a successful businessman, constantly stresses the preparation for a new career after basketball when he talks with the players.

"You can develop tunnel vision when you are a pro basketball player," he said. "I tell our players that you can play in the NBA until you're 30 or 35 and then you have 35 more years to do something else. They have to understand that there's life after basketball."

MHS to start Timlin, Lee going with Matta

The Bulldogs have four batters with a .300 average or better led by Steve Wootan and Mike Timlin at .444, Keith Clay at 385 and Chris Herbert at .300. Timlin and Clay led the team in RBIs with seven and six respectively.

Because of his performances in previous district appearances, Johnson is planning to start sophomore George Matta on the mound.

"He's rested and he's been my second best pitcher next to Willis," said Johnson. "He's come in in relief against Abilene and Big Spring and pitched very well and I think he deserves the No. 2 rating and a chance to start."

In both games, Matta picked up the victories and has a 2.90 ERA from 9⅔ innings of duty.

Midland High will probably counter with "Mike Timlin and relieve with Dough Daehling or Paul Neatherlin," said Whalen.

Timlin has a 4.87 ERA this year while Daehling has had his problems with a 7.00

"It doesn't make any difference who is pitching, they've got to throw strikes and we've got to hit the ball," said Whalen. "Then on defense, we've got to pick up the ball and throw it to first. That's the universal rule of baseball."

Picking up the ball and throwing somebody out, however, is a worry both coaches have after Saturday's games. Against Cooper, Lee made seven errors while MHS booted five.

In other 4-5A games Tuesday, Odessa Permian hosts Odessa High and Big Spring is at San Angelo at 4 p.m. Abilene Cooper and Abilene High have scheduled a night game at Hardin Simmons Field.

Permian and OHS are currently tied for fourth place with 3-3 records while AHS and San Angelo are in sixth at 2-4. Big Spring is in last with a 0-6 record.

New car takes Andretti to runaway Long Beach win

AP Laserphoto

Veteran driver Mario Andretti is all smiles in the winner's circle after he drove his Indy-style Haas Lola to victory Sunday in the Long Beach Grand Prix. Starting from the pole position, Andretti led the entire race.

LONG BEACH, Calif. (AP) — There are few things in auto racing more unpredictable than a new car.

That fact made Mario Andretti's runaway victory in Sunday's Toyota Grand Prix of Long Beach all the more notable, since the longtime racing star debuted a new Cosworth-powered Lola T-800 car built in England.

The Budweiser-sponsored car, co-owned by actor Paul Newman and Chicago businessman and U.S. Lola distributor Carl Haas, started from the pole and led all the way in the first Indy-car race through the streets of downtown Long Beach.

"The car was absolutely perfect," said the 44-year-old Andretti, who is starting his second full season with the Newman-Haas team. "It ran as well as you would want it to on a day like this, and it was one of those days you dream about. It felt as good as any Formula One car ever did.

"After a while, I was just driving a second-place race, just trying to keep the car together and hoping nothing happened. The preparation by Darrell (crew chief Darrell Soppe) and the guys was just tremendous."

This was the season-opener for the 1984 CART-PPG Indy-Car World Series, which is expected by many people to be the most competitive and exciting season in the history of the open-wheel championship.

But Sunday was all Andretti. He beat second-place Geoff Brabham across the finish line by 63.2 seconds and nobody else was even on the same lap with the diminutive Italian-born driving star.

Andretti picked up first-place money of $71,350 from the total purse of $550,000 as he averaged 82.898 mph over the 300 kilometers (187.04 miles).

It was his 37th career Indy-car triumph, tying him with defending CART champion Al Unser for second on the all-time victory list. And it was the first time since A.J. Foyt went wire-to-wire to victory in a 100-mile qualifying race at the now-defunct Ontario Motor Speedway in March of 1975 that an Indy-car driver had led an entire race.

"Until I see a checkered flag, I never relax," Andretti said. "I tried every way possible to be easy on the car, but I was enjoying myself out there."

He was in the minority, though, as the grueling race around the treacherous and narrow 1.67-mile, 11-turn circuit left only 11 of 28 starters running at the end.

Tom Sneva, the 1983 Indianapolis 500 winner, drove another of the new Marches in his first ride for the new team of Teddy Mayer and Tyler Alexander, was third, followed by English Indy-car rookie Jim Crawford's new Theodore-March, both a lap behind.

Emerson Fittipaldi, a two-time world champion from Brazil and another of an impressive group of foreign Indy-car rookies, drove a year-old March to fifth place, two laps behind, followed by Canadian Jacques Villeneuve, another rookie and the brother of the late Formula One star Gilles Villeneuve.

Waltrip captures Valleydale 500 victory

BRISTOL, Tenn. (AP) — Darrell Waltrip remembered following the leader, Bobby Allison, and watching something unusual happen to Allison's car at Bristol International Raceway.

"As we came out of the second turn, he was just in front of me and I thought I saw a puff of smoke," Waltrip said Sunday. "I said to myself, 'Naw, Waltrip. You didn't see him smoking.' "

Waltrip was wrong. Mechanical problems forced Allison into the pits, and Waltrip went on to capture the $219,165 Valleydale 500 Grand National stock car race.

In addition to collecting the winner's prize of $31,670, Waltrip tied Richard Petty's record of seven consecutive victories at one track. His streak equals the mark set by Petty between 1971 and 1973 in Richmond, Va.

WALTRIP, WHO drove a Budweiser Chevrolet to his first win of the NASCAR season, led 206 of the race's 500 laps, but found himself behind Allison on the 433rd lap.

"It's really disheartening," Allison said, "because we had the field covered today. I felt the problem on the backstretch there and came in five laps before we intended for our regular stop. We put in a new rear end and away we went again."

By the time Allison went away again 26 laps later, Waltrip had built a commanding lead on Terry Labonte, who finished second. Allison, driving a Miller DiGard Buick, managed to lap Waltrip with 15 laps to go, but finished 19th in the 30-car field.

Ron Bouchard, who finished third, was the only other driver on the lead lap at the conclusion of Sunday's race, which was slowed by four caution periods.

Following Bouchard in the top 10 were Dave Marcis, Tim Richmond, pole sitter Ricky Rudd, Dale Earnhardt, Richard Petty, Bill Elliott and Joe Ruttman."

Waltip's win at Bristol ended a NASCAR string of nine different winners in the racing circuit's last nine events, dating back to last year's Holly Farms 400 at North Wilkesboro, N.C.

When Waltrip travels to North Wilkesboro for the April 8 running of the Northwestern Bank 400, he will look to extend a four-race winning streak on that track.

Dent, Tenace sent packing; Baker signs with Giants

By The Associated Press

Two former World Series stars may have reached the end of their baseball travels, while a third one apparently has found a new home.

Shortstop Bucky Dent, the hero of the 1978 playoffs and World Series with the New York Yankees, was handed his walking papers by the Texas Rangers over the weekend, while catcher-first baseman Gene Tenace, the only player ever to hit home runs his first times at bat in a World Series (he hit two other homers in the 1972 Series for Oakland), got the pink slip from the Pittsburgh Pirates.

Meanwhile, the San Francisco Giants reached a tentative agreement on a two-year contract with free agent outfielder Dusty Baker, 34, a 13-year veteran who played left field the last eight seasons for the Los Angeles Dodgers. The Dodgers released him in January with two years remaining on his five-year contract. Baker played in three World Series and starred in four National League playoffs.

Giants Vice President Tom Haller said that the agreement hinged on Baker passing a physical examination in San Francisco on Tuesday.

Haller said Baker would then be placed on the restricted list for 10 days while he works into shape after not having any formal spring training. The Giants said Baker had agreed to a new contract, with an option year, which the Dodgers will assist in paying.

"I think he will add firepower to what we already have on the club," Haller said. "He has proven that in the past."

Dent lost his job to rookie Curtis Wilkerson, who drove in the winning run with a grounder in the eighth inning to lift the Rangers to a 4-3 exhibition victory over the Houston Astros. Wilkerson's grounder followed a game-tying double by Dave Hostetler off Frank DiPino.

AS THE exhibition schedule ended, the Dodgers completed a sweep of their three-game Freeway Series with the California Angels with a 3-2 victory Sunday on Steve Sax's two-out, run-scoring single in the bottom of the ninth inning. The game was played before a crowd of 39,873 at Dodger Stadium. The Dodgers won Friday night's opener 7-0 before a record crowd of 62,921 at Anaheim Stadium and captured Saturday night's game 8-2 before 40,618 at Dodger Stadium.

The Giants edged the Oakland A's 6-5 and finished with the bext exhibition record. Manny Trillo singled home Bob Brenly with none out and the bases loaded in the ninth inning to give the Giants their 18th triumph in 27 spring games.

The Chicago White Sox finished with the best record in the American League —19-10 — despite a 14-2 pounding by the Pittsburgh Pirates in which their pitchers were shelled for 20 hits . . . in a game terminated after seven innings by mutual agreement.

Toronto scored five times off Milwaukee's Moose Haas in the fifth inning on Ernie Whitt's two-run single and Jesse Barfield's three-run homer while Jim Gott pitched seven innings of five-hit ball as the Blue Jays blanked the Brewers 8-0 before a crowd of 30,132 in Vancouver's B.C. Place domed stadium.

"Two shutouts in three games against Milwaukee is really something because they have one of the best hitting teams in baseball," crowed Toronto Manager Bobby Cox. "We're ready to start the season. It was getting a little boring in Florida."

Milwaukee Manager Rene Lachemann said his club was suffering from "the spring training blahs. Right now, all the players want to do is start the regular season."

MIKE EASLER homered and drove in two runs and Tony Armas also knocked in a pair to lead the Boston Red Sox to 5-2 victory over the San Diego Padres. Boston's Mike Brown limited the Padres to two hits over the first 5 2-3 innings before he was struck on the right shin by a line drive off the bat of Steve Garvey and had to be carried from the field on a stretcher. Brown was taken to a hospital, where x-rays disclosed a deep bruise but no break.

Boston Manager Ralph Houk said Brown was "lucky it wasn't broken," and added it would present little problem if he missed Friday's sxcheduled turn in Oakland. "It leaves a void in that spot, but we can use a spot starter," Houk said.

Matt Young, Roy Thomas and Ed Vande Berg combined on a three-hitter and the Seattle Mariners defeated a Chicago Cubs split squad 6-2 and ended with their best spring training record ever, 13-13-1. Another group of Cubs whipped the Cleveland Indians 9-2 as Jody Davis drove in four runs, two of them with a second-inning homer, and Steve Trout allowed one run in seven innings.

Darrell Porter hit two doubles and drove in three runs as the St. Louis Cardinals downed the Philadelphia Phillies 6-3.

Andre Dawson drove in three runs with a homer and an infield single as the Montreal Expos trimmed the Atlanta Braves 8-1. David Palmer pitched the first six innings for Montreal, yielding one earned run and six hits.

Ron Gardenhire's infield single drove in New York's second run of the ninth inning as the Mets rallied to defeat the Detroit Tigers 7-6. The Mets ended the exhibition season with their best record in 12 years, 13-11.

South, North Korea to negotiate forming joint international team

SEOUL, South Korea (AP) — South Korea today agreed to negotiate with North Korea, its enemy for almost four decades, on a proposal to form joint teams to compete in the Olympics and other international sports events.

"In the pure spirit of sportsmanship we have decided to affirmatively review your proposal for talks between South and North Korean sports officials irrespective of any other pending issue," said a letter from Chung Ju-yong, president of South Korea's Olympic Committee.

Chung called for four delegates from each side to gather April 9 at Panmunjom, the truce village in the demilitarized zone that divides the peninsula, to discuss forming single inter-Korean teams for the 1984 Los Angeles Olympics, the 1986 Asian Games, the 1988 Olympics "and other international games to be held in the days ahead."

Seoul is to be the site of both the 1986 Asian Games and the 1988 Olympics.

The Korean peninsula was divided into the Communist north and anti-Communist south at end of World War II, and the two countries clashed in from 1950 to 1953 in the Korean War.

North Korea proposed last Friday that the two countries "pool their strength and proceed jointly into the international arena, transcending the differences in ideology and system."

South Korea had made similar proposals several times in recent years, but the calls had been spurned by the North.

"One may recall that on many occasions we have already urged that single delegations be formed to take part in the 23rd Olympics in Los Angeles next July and in various subsequent world championships," Chung's letter said.

"As all these proposals were advanced from a desire to achieve national reconciliation, there was no reason whatsover why you couldn't have accepted them. But you did not," the letter said "It is fortunate, however, that even though belatedly, you have responded affirmatively to our offer to form single teams for the 1984 Olympics and various other international games."

Noting the Los Angeles Olympics are less than four months away, the letter said: "We worry whether there is even enough time to prepare for the 1986 Asian games and the 1988 Olympics in Seoul, not to mention the Los Angeles Olympics in 1984.

"Therefore we had better hold various goodwill games in Seoul and Pyongyang in turn, even beginning right from this month so that we can strongly demonstrate both at home and abroad our mutual determination to form single teams and hasten without any slightest delay the selection of players to participate on a single inter-Korean team in the Los Angeles Olympics and other international games."

Rice rallies to beat Tech

HOUSTON (AP) — Bobby Eggleston doubled in the winning run to cap a five-run seventh inning as Rice defeated Texas Tech 9-8 in Southwest Conference baseball Sunday.

Seventh-inning reliever Derek Hoelscher shut the door on Tech with 2-1/3 perfect innings.

Tech had taken an 8-4 lead into the bottom of the seventh. But the Owls loaded the bases with no outs after starter Clay Hollock allowed two walks and Mike Fox singled.

Tech reliever Glenn Caperton walked Kent Koppa to force in the first run, Carl Mikeska singled for another and David Evans' bases-loaded single tied it, 8-all. Then Eggleston's double brought in Mikeska for the winning run.

Grocery prices down slightly in March

By The Associated Press

Grocery prices dipped slightly in March, one month after registering their biggest jump in more than three years, according to an Associated Press marketbasket survey.

The latest survey indicates that the marketbasket bill went down at the checklist store in eight cities, declining an average of 2.4 percent. The bill went up in five cities, increasing an average of 3.5 percent. Overall, there was a drop of one-tenth of 1 percent in the marketbasket bills at checklist stores during March.

It was in sharp contrast to February when grocery prices increased an average of 2.1 percent, primarily because of bad weather. Since January 1, prices have climbed nearly 3.2 percent, primarily because of last summer's drought and frigid winter weather which cut dairy production, hurt crops in the South and interrupted marketing.

	Feb.	Mar.
Up	36.3	26.4
Down	18.1	34.6
Unchanged	39.6	35.2
Unavailable	6.0	3.8

The Associated Press survey is based on a random list of 14 commonly purchased food and non-food items. The price for each item was checked at one supermarket in each of 13 cities on March 1, 1973 and has been rechecked on or about the start of each succeeding month.

The day of the week on which the check was made varied depending on the month. Standard brands and sizes were used when available. If the requested size and brand was not available, a comparable substitute was selected. Items temporarily out of stock on one of the survey dates being compared were not included in the over-all total.

NO ATTEMPT WAS made to weight the AP survey results according to population density or in terms of what percent of a family's actual grocery outlay each item represents.

The AP did not try to compare actual prices from city to city — to say, for example, that eggs cost more in one area than another. The only comparisons were made in terms of percentages of increase or decrease — saying a particular item went up 10 percent in one city and 6 percent in another.

The items on the AP checklist were: chopped chuck, center cut pork chops, frozen orange juice concentrate, coffee, paper towels, butter, Grade-A medium white eggs, creamy peanut butter, laundry detergent, fabric softener, tomato sauce, milk, frankfurters and granulated sugar. One item, chocolate chip cookies, was dropped because the manufacturer discontinued the package size used in the survey.

The cities checked were: Albuquerque, N.M., Atlanta, Boston, Chicago, Dallas, Detroit, Los Angeles, Miami, New York, Philadelphia, Providence, R.I., Salt Lake City and Seattle.

HERE IS A city-by-city breakdown of what happened during March:

ALBUQUERQUE: The bill slid 2.2 percent from $22.00 to $21.52 with pork chops, orange juice, coffee, butter and eggs declining. Peanut butter, fabric softener and franks climbed. The six other items remained the same.

ATLANTA: The marketbasket tab rose to $21.75, up 2.2 percent, from $21.29. Chopped chuck, pork chops, orange juice and frankfurters contributed to the increase. Paper towels, eggs and tomato sauce fell, while everything else stayed the same.

BOSTON: Marketbasket prices edged up slightly, six-tenths of 1 percent. The total climbed from $20.64 to $20.76. Orange juice, fabric softener and detergent led the price hikes, while chopped chuck, butter and eggs fell. Eight items remained unchanged.

CHICAGO: The bill for 13 items slipped from $16.90 to $16.86, a drop of two-tenths of 1 percent. Orange juice and sugar were higher; chopped chuck, eggs, detergent and tomato sauce lower. All other items were unchanged. Coffee which was unavailable.

DALLAS: THE marketbasket total for 12 items fell from $20.01 in February to $19.21 in March. Chuck, orange juice, peanut butter and frankfurters rose, while pork chops, butter and eggs slipped. The others remained the same.

DETROIT: Prices for nine items jumped from $15.24 to $16.41, a hike of 7.6 percent. Pork chops, detergent and franks climbed. Chopped chuck and eggs slipped. The other products were unchanged.

LOS ANGELES: The marketbasket bill fell from $19.47 to $19.03, a drop of 2.3 percent. Pork chops, detergent and sugar climbed, but chopped chuck, orange juice, coffee, paper towels, fabric softener, tomato sauce, milk and frankfurters declined. The others were the same.

MIAMI: The marketbasket tab decreased from $20.82 to $20.30, a drop of 2.5 percent. Only butter and chopped chuck rose. Pork chops, eggs, fabric softener, tomato sauce and milk slipped. The seven other products remained unchanged.

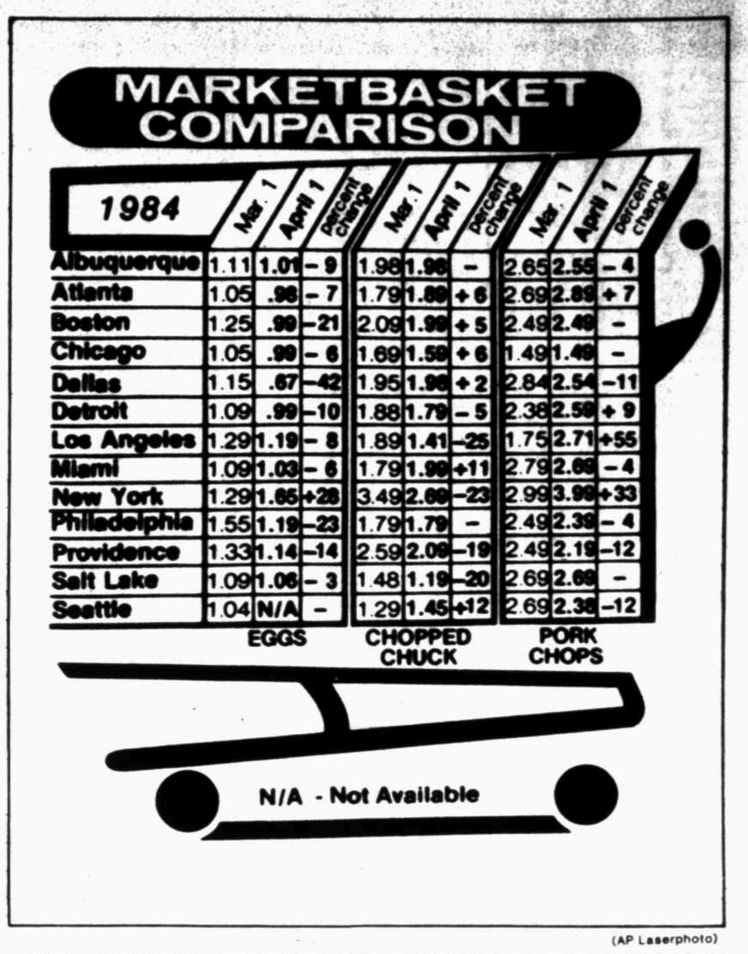

NEW YORK: THE bill for 13 items jumped from $25.71 in February to $27.13 in March, a 5.5 percent hike. Pork chops, coffee, butter, eggs and detergent climbed, while chopped chuck, orange juice, paper towels and sugar fell. The others were the same.

PROVIDENCE: The marketbasket total declined from $20.83 to $19.74, a drop of 5.2 percent. Orange juice, coffee, butter and milk rose, while chopped chuck, pork chops, paper towels, eggs, peanut butter, fabric softener, detergent, tomato sauce and sugar slipped. Only frankfurters remained unchanged.

PHILADELPHIA: The bill for 12 items climbed from $18.48 to $18.81, a 1.8 percent increase. Coffee, paper towels, detergent, frankfurters and sugar posted hikes, while pork chops, eggs and tomato sauce declined. Orange juice and fabric softener were unavailable.

SALT LAKE CITY: The tab for 13 items slipped slightly from $20.09 to $19.97, a drop of six-tenths of 1 percent. Orange juice, fabric softener, franks, sugar and coffee rose, while eight other items fell.

SEATTLE: The marketbasket total for 12 products decreased from $19.26 to $18.77, a slip of 2.5 percent. Chopped chuck, peanut butter, detergent, tomato sauce and milk climbed, while pork chops, orange juice, coffee, butter, fabric softener and sugar fell. Frankfurters were unchanged, while paper towels and eggs were unavailable.

FDIC trys new plan at Seminole

By JULIE FAUBEL
Business-Energy Writer

Reading about history is one thing; making it is another. And Olen Brock would prefer not to be making history right now.

Brock is the president of the two-week old Seminole National Bank which opened March 20 in place of failed Seminole State National Bank, and Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. has chosen the Seminole Bank as one of the first in the nation to "road test" its new plan to end full deposit insurance. It is a test that has brought trauma to some depositors of the bank. In other cases of bank failure, assets have been purchased and deposits assumed by a new bank. The FDIC, although only obligated to insure deposits up to $100,000, has chosen to insure all deposits and transfer them to the new bank.

In Seminole, it did not. Instead, the FDIC is trying out a modified payoff transaction. According to FDIC spokesman Alan Whitney, the change is not that "drastic." Whitney said there have been three other banks where the FDIC has tired this plan, however, Semionole was the first where large depositors received a portion of their uninsured funds immediately after the bank failed instead of having to wait unitl almost all the assets were liquidated.

At Semionole, a town of about 8,000, more than 50 individuals with uninsured deposits totaling $705,000 received 55 cents on the dollar immediately after the bank failed. However, they will have to wait until more of the bank's loans and properties are liquidated to see if they will recover any of the remaining 45 percent.

According to Whitney, the reason for the plan is to make depositors more aware of a bank's financial conditon before investing money.

"There's always a possibility that a depositor will lose money in a bank failure — Congress never intended for the FDIC to protect against all risk in the banking system. In Seminole we wanted to minimize the adverse impact on the uninsured depositors," Whitney said.

Despite the FDIC intentions, Brock said, his first two weeks as head of the new bank have been spent more in public relations than in the mechanics of banking.

"Its been difficult to explain to these large depositors just exactly why their deposits were not insured. I would have liked to have had Bill Isaac (FDIC chairman) in the lobby with me Monday when we opened. It's unfortunate that we got to be one of test cases in the U.S. I don't like making history that much," Brock said.

While the new policy has a good point, Brock said he fears smaller banks will be the ones to suffer if large depositors pull their money out of the community and opt for larger banks — which, industry observers believe, the FDIC can't afford to let fail. Brock also said the FDIC should have given bankers more warning before implementing its new policy.

Despite the "trauma" the townspeople have been through, Brock said he has been amazed with the resiliency of the failed bank's depositors becuase they hadn't transferred their losses to the new ownership — First West Texas Bancshares Inc. of Midland.

"I found out something about human nature — people are resilient. They live through their losses," he said.

Brock is pleased the first two weeks are behind him and is looking forward to "getting customer confidence back in the bank" and trying to serve the community. Brock also said he plans on moving to Seminole as soon as possible.

Capitalized with $2.7 million, Brock said the new bank is gaining every day.

"Signs indicate that the community is settling down. Our deposits have increased which is very encouraging."

Another area of importance to Brock is reviewing and buying back loans from the failed bank's $20 million portfolio. Like its predecessors in West Texas, Seminole National was given 30 days in which to exclusively review and purchase loans. Brock said the bank has already asked the FDIC for a 30-day extension and is optimistic it will be granted.

AFL-CIO construction chief praises Mondale for pledge to renovate

WASHINGTON (AP) — The president of the AFL-CIO's Building and Construction Trades Department says that with Walter F. Mondale in the White House, the nation would undertake a program to repair and renovate aging highway, water and sewer systems.

In remarks prepared for delivery today to a conference of building trades unions, Robert A. Georgine said, "We need a person who understands what it is like to work with your hands, to build, to create a better future."

"Walter F. Mondale is that leader," Georgine said.

AFL-CIO President Lane Kirkland was to speak before the some 3,000 delegates to the legislative-political action conference here.

Mondale is scheduled to appear Tuesday as his supporters in the labor movement seek to turn out supporters of the former vice president in the New York presidential preference primary.

Georgine's endorsement of Mondale comes as no surprise since he heads a department within the AFL-CIO, which has given Mondale its presidential endorsement.

But the blessing came from the lone U.S. labor leader who has invited President Reagan to speak at three previous political action conferences starting in April 1981.

In fact, Reagan had just concluded a speech to Georgine's construction union legislative delegates at the Hilton hotel here in April 1981 when the president was shot by John Hinckley Jr. Hinckley subsequently was found innocent by reason of insanity, and is confined to a mental institution here.

Last Friday, several individual New York area building trades union officials met with Reagan at the White House and endorsed the president's re-election campaign.

Georgine said through a spokesman that these labor officials were acting on their own, and that they had not gained clearance for the move by his office.

Reagan was not invited to this year's building trades conference.

In his speech, Georgine said he believes Mondale would be dedicated to rebuilding the nation's "infrastructure" of highways, water and sewer systems.

"The work must be done," he said.

"People are being killed because bridges are collapsing. We're poisoning our rivers and our people because our waters aren't clean. . . . We can gold plate every tank and missile and destroyer, and we'll find the money," he said.

"But try to rebuild a water system or a bridge or build a coal port to increase exports, put coal miners to work, and improve our balance of payments, and the hue-and-cry goes up, 'How will we pay for it?'"

Most couples get two paychecks

WASHINGTON (AP) — After two decades of women going to work outside the home, most married couples now collect two paychecks, with two-thirds of wives holding jobs.

A new Census Bureau report issued Sunday cited a "steep rise in labor force participation of women" between 1961 and 1981.

This movement brought the number of working wives to 28.2 million, or 67 percent of all wives in the United States in 1981, the most recent statistics available.

And with the vast majority of husbands jolding jobs, the number of two-income families has grown to 62 percent, the report said.

That's up from 50 percent of families in 1970 and 40 percent in 1960.

"The good life in America increasingly requires a household economic team of two workers," economists George Sternlieb and James W. Hughes explained in an income study in American Demographics magazine.

"Had wives not gone off to work, American families, in the aggregate, would have suffered substantial declines in real income," Sternlieb and Hughes concluded in their study of income and marketing.

They noted in the privately published magazine that while the number of married couples in the United States increased by only 2 percent between 1975 and 1979, the number of families with wives in the workforce jumped 14 percent.

According to the new Census study, average earnings for married couples in 1981 were $25,550. But this climbed to $28,560 when both had jobs, and $34,560 if both worked full time year-round.

The 40.2 million working husbands (95 percent of all husbands) averaged 20,870, the report said, while average earnings for the 27.7 million working wives were $8,600.

The wives of men with higher earnings were somewhat less likely to hold jobs themselves, the report indicated. It showed that husbands whose wives did not work earned an average of $26,170.

Most working wives were employed only part time, but 46 percent did have full time-year around jobs. They had average income of $13,070, compared to $3,830 for women working part time.

The 25 to 34 age group was the most likely to include wives who earned more than their husband•

Dollar falls; Gold drifts lower

LONDON (AP) — The dollar fell against all other major currencies except the British pound in early trading today. Gold bullion prices drifted lower.

European currency dealers said trading was light and trendless. Eurodollar deposit rates, the interest paid on dollars held by European banks, were virtually unchanged from late Friday.

A trader at a West German bank said today marked the beginning of a new quarter, so most businesses had already squared their books last week and had no need to enter the market.

—2.5880 West German marks, down from 2.5895.

—2.1472 Swiss francs, down from 2.1500.

—7.9670 French francs, down from 7.9725.

—2.9185 Dutch guilders, down from 2.92025.

—1,609.75 Italian lire, down from 1,618.75.

—1.27585 Canadian dollars, down from 1.2765.

The British pound fell to $1.4416, from $1.4420.

Earlier in Tokyo, the dollar eased to 223.95 Japanese yen, from Friday's rate of 224.75 yen.

The value of gold bullion weakened in lackluster trading. One London dealer said gold "is just sitting there waiting for something to happen."

London's five main bullion dealers set a morning gold-fixing price of $387.25 a Troy ounce, down 50 cents from late Friday. In Zurich, gold was bid at $387.90, down from $389.

In Hong Kong, gold lost 75 cents to finish at a bid price of $389.97.

Silver was quoted in London at $9.74 an ounce, compared with $9.735 late Friday.

Reins tighten on insurance costs

By the Los Angeles Times
Washington Post News Service

Atlantic Richfield Corp. spent more than $100 million last year on health insurance, the company's benefit manager, Arnold Glassman, noted recently, adding: "And we're not labor intensive."

Nor is Arco the exception. Ford Motor Co.'s medical bill topped $743 million last year, up $33 million from the year before, and General Motors Corp. estimated that its $2.2 billion annual health bill added $480 to the cost of each car it produced last year.

In all, business spent $77 billion in health-insurance premiums last year — more than $100 billion when other health-related costs, such as administration, are added. Those payments siphon funds from company profits, a fact that hit home to cost-conscious management as medical costs soared despite the recession.

"At Arco," Glassman said, "the...interest is now at the top executive level."

This concern was expressed by Harold G. Bernthal, president of American Hospital Supply Corp., at a recent seminar in Washington sponsored by the Conference Board, a business research organization.

"While government has been making a lot of the noise regarding health care, business has been doing a lot of the paying," Bernthal said. Speaking at a similar business-oriented seminar in Los Angeles, Glen Wegner, vice president of Health Data Institute in Newton, Mass., said a large Chicago-based client firm was shocked to learn that health costs ate up the equivalent of 70 cents per share of earnings.

Business' response varies from an extreme form of confrontation, as in Arizona, where business interests are leading an initiative campaign to regulate hospital rates, to a more conciliatory approach typified by the numerous coalitions formed by employers, insurers, unions and health-service providers seeking ways to control medical costs.

Recent remarks by an Arco executive typify this solution-seeking approach. "We are no longer blaming any of our partners in the health-care system for its spiraling cost," said Edward M. Benson Jr., Arco vice chairman and head of California Roundtable's task force on health-care cost management.

Chapman begins drilling program

Southwest Newswire

DALLAS — Chapman Energy, Inc. has begun a drilling program in Kansas to develop gas supplies in connection with its majority-owned PhenixTransmission Company operation in that state.

According to Chapman officials, the first well is currently being drilled under a turnkey contract in Elk County, Kansas, and is one of nearly 600 wells planned by Chapman over the next two years.

The well drilling and development program will be carried out through joint venture drilling partnerships, on acreage adjacent to Phenix Transmission Company right-of-way property. The company expects gas supplies resulting from the drilling operations to contribute substantially to gas sales in the Kansas market.

Chapman Energy, Inc. is a Dallas-based oil and gas exploration and development company with principal operations in Oklahoma, Texas and Louisiana, with substantial interests in natural gas exploration, production, gathering and transmission in Kansas.

The warp, weft of weaving

Text by Ed Todd, Photos by Cody Bell

Art is for everyone — not just for the gods and the privileged.

"A lot of people think art is on a pedestal," says Jean Posey, a Midland artist who doesn't set herself apart from the masses. Many people mistakenly behold "art" as beyond their economic and cultural reach and certainly not within their ability or grasp.

That needn't be, says Mrs. Posey.

With discernment.

"I had a pottery teacher one time to say there's beauty in ugliness."

Mrs. Posey's intent is not to craft hideous pottery or unslightly tapestry and then to hope the beholder ferrets out the beauty. Neither is she suggesting the contrary.

HER DESIRE is to create.

"I don't get any more satisfaction out of that (weaving) than a woman who cooks or a man who writes a column or a geologist," she says. "And I don't cook much, and I don't write anymore."

She used to write — to report — before she became a college student, secretary, housewife, mother, potter, weaver, and president of the Midland Arts Assembly, which promotes the performing and visual arts.

She was a reporter and proofreader for a year on the Fort Dodge, Iowa, newspaper, The Messenger & Chronicle, in her late teens. She then left home to study journalism at Iowa State University at Ames.

"I knew everything they could teach me; I was a smart aleck," she says. "I got bored with it. I really did." So, she switched her major from journalism to textiles and clothing. Her objective was to go into marketing. But she became impatient with the time required to develop a career in marketing and ended up working as a legal secretary in Amarillo. There, Jean Bonnell of Iowa linked up with her geologist-husband, Don Posey of Amarillo.

THEY CAME to Midland in 1957. And within 10 years, she, under the guidance of Joe Young, was engrossed in pottery.

"I did a lot of pottery; I really turned it out and was represented by galleries and exhibited in several shows."

She has since put aside her potter's wheel and kiln.

"I really do love making pottery. It was so sad seeing that wheel trucked away."

Today, she is caught up in the warp and weft of weaving on the frame and floor maple looms in her home studio in Midland.

"I REALLY became so interested, so fascinated, in weaving that I didn't have time. I was trying to do both (weaving and making pottery) but didn't do right by either."

She first studied weaving on the frame loom eight years ago at Midland College under Sara Gilstrap, who "just does everything so well. She's so full of enthusiasm." Last year, she studied weaving on the floor loom under Nancy Neeley at Midland College.

"This (weaving on the frame loom) to me is a more creative way of weaving, because you do it (compose) as you go along." In floor-loom weaving, the composition is preconceived. "Weaving on the frame loom satisfies me more."

Mrs. Posey says many artists use a cartoon, a sketch, behind the frame loom to guide their weaving.

She doesn't.

"That's an inhibition to me," she says. "I lose spontaneity."

SHE DYES many of her own threads, and, for the effect of texture, uses such materials as wool, cotton, nylon, seagrass, reeds, jute and mulberry root. Her tapestries, which range up to mural-size abstract landscapes, vary in texture and hues.

She creates for her own pleasure and reward as well as on a commission and free-lance basis. And she offers a philosophy behind her art.

"Because I'm an artist, I think I owe something to the artistic community. And the art community is the whole city of Midland, the whole state of Texas, the whole country."

She has her quirks.

"May I get on my soapbox?" she asks. "I really get uptight with artists who say they don't sit on committees because 'that's a waste of time.' Some committees are a waste of time. But a committee can be just as creative as a painting."

"We all are creative in a way," Mrs. Posey says. "I think everyone is a creator... Whatever we do is our own individual approach, and that's creative."

DEATHS

Rev. J. Danhof

Rev. John Danhof

The Rev. John Benjamin Danhof, 57, of Midland, died Sunday in Richmond, Va., while attending continuing education classes for ministers at a seminary there.

Memorial services are pending at Trinity Presbyterian Church. Services will be at St. Mark Presbyterian Church in Dallas with burial in Restland Cemetery, directed by Restland Funeral Home.

Danhof was born July 13, 1926. He had been the minister at Trinity Presbyterian Church for the past three years. He served on the Board of Hospice and was chairman of the Division of Ministry of Presbytery of Tres Rios. He had recently accepted a position on the committee to write the Statement of Beliefs for the Reunited Presbyterian Church U.S.A. He was a nominee for Stated Clerk of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church, the third highest position in the church in the country.

He held a doctorate of ministry, a master of theology, a master of divinity, a bachelor of science and a Merrill Fellowship from Harvard.

Survivors include two sisters, Phyllis Speck of Dallas, and Marie Cooper of Murchison; a brother, Dr. Ivan Danhof of Grand Prairie; and many nieces and nephews.

The family requests memorials be directed to the Building Fund of Trinity Presbyterian Church in Midland, the Organ Fund of Easter Seals or a charity of one's choice.

Services will be at 1:30 p.m. Tuesday at the Glass Chapel of the First United Methodist Church with the Rev. J.B. Stewart, retired minister, officiating. Burial will be at Resthaven Memorial Park, directed by Ellis Funeral Home.

Mrs. Cameron was born March 2, 1907, in Melder, La. She was married to A.E. Cameron July 23, 1934, in Denton. He died in April 1963. They resided in Wink where he had a drug store until moving to Midland in 1937. He established a drug store here in the old Crawford and Scharbauer hotels downtown before moving to a location on north Big Spring Street.

Survivors include a daughter, Mrs. John (Sara) Amman of Littleton, Colo.; a brother, W.R. Carruth of Forest Hill, La.; two sisters, Pauline Ethridge of Forest Hill, La., and Edith Downey of Houston; and three grandchildren.

The family requests memorials be directed to the American Heart Association or to the First United Methodist Church of Midland.

Elsie Linville

Elsie Linville, 77, of Midland, died Sunday evening in a Midland hospital after a brief illness.

Services will be at 3:30 p.m. Tuesday in the First Baptist Church with Dr. Daniel Vestal, pastor, officiating, and the Rev. Ben Walker of Fannin Terrace Baptist Church assisting. Burial will be in Resthaven Memorial Park, directed by Ellis Funeral Home.

Mrs. Linville was born Jan. 11, 1907, in Midlothian and was reared in Haskel County. She married Jim Linville Feb. 10, 1924, in Rule. They lived in several places in the West Texas and Oklahoma areas. They first moved to Midland in 1929, moving back to Midland in 1964 from Andrews, where they had lived for 20 years. She was a member of the First Baptist Church.

Survivors include her husband of Midland; two sons, Jimmie Linville of Dallas, and Robert Linville of Clovis, N.M.; two daughters, Barbara Idleman of Hobbs, N.M., and Joyce Montgomery of Midland; a brother, Archie Townsend of Hereford; two sisters, Bonnie Henry of Lubbock and Winnie Mae Phillips of Hobbs, N.M.; nine grandchildren and three great-grandchildren.

Sam Rayburn library director can't forget his squeaky shoes

BONHAM, Texas (AP) — One cold Saturday in 1951 a tall, lanky man arrived in his short-sleeved shirt in Washington, D.C. to begin a new job. He was 33 years old. He was a bit nervous, and a bit cold as the wind whistled its way around corners. And his brand new shoes squeaked.

H.G. Dulaney couldn't help that. It had been a long, lonm lawyer named Buster Cole, sight unseen by Mr. Sam. He also hadn't been told that he would have to work on Saturdays.

Dulaney keeps Sam Rayburn alive today, through the books, the mountains of papers, and the shrine that bears the Rayburn name.

Dulaney has been the director of the library since its inception in 1957. He was never a librarian, and told the Speaker so. Later he took some courses in library science, but that was after the fact.

He came back to Bonham, as instructed, before the library was completed.

DULANEY IS STILL doing what Mr. Sam told him to do; strive to keep the library a living, vital repository of history, make its heart beat.

Before Sam Rayburn died in 1961 he told Dulaney to keep answering the mail, and as the mail poured into Bonham, Dulaney answered it, signed his own name.

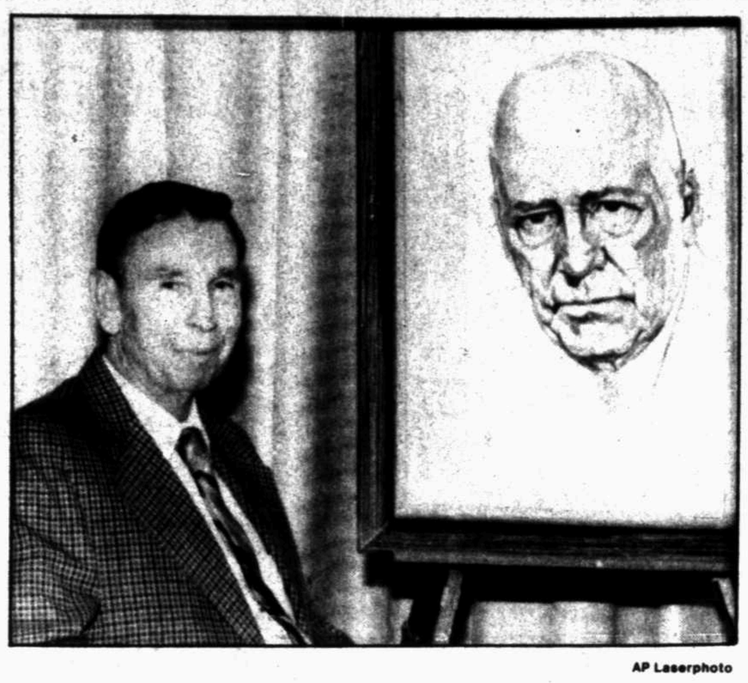

Dulaney knew how to do that. He had learned that first cold Saturday. He recalls the day, and will never forget those squeaky shoes.

"Mr. Rayburn took me on a tour of the House that day and everywhere I went those shoes squeaked. Mr. Rayburn walked so softly that it made it seem all the worse," he recalls.

"The Speaker already had two secretaries, and I had to sit in and take shorthand too. That was one of the reasons I was hired. I could take shorthand and type. During the week we answered all the routine mails that came in, but all of the important items we saved for him, and Saturday was the day we took his answers, typed the letters, and he signed them," Dulaney says.

THE SPEAKER HAD a difficulty with some mechanical things. Dulaney remembers that after the library was opened in 1957, "Mr. Rayburn had two telephones on his desk with buttons for different lines. The phone would ring, and he would start pushing the buttons, always getting the wrong one. So, finally we just had one of the phones taken out."

H. G. Dulaney poses with a portrait of Sam Rayburn at the Sam Rayburn Memorial Library in Bonham, Texas. Dulaney has been the director of the library since its inception in 1957.

Mr. Sam would rather see a man than talk over the telephone anyway. Dulaney recalls that when Congress was in session the Speaker would open his office doors and a stream of people would come through. Some had things to impart, others wanted something. But they all wanted to talk to the Speaker.

The Speaker took few trips, except to home in Bonham, home to see his people. He kept no district office. He knew his people, their children, where they lived and what they did. He knew their needs and wants.

He knew their voices too. Dulaney remembers that in the last few years of Rayburn's life, he had difficulty in seeing, even faces.

"I always came home with Mr. Rayburn," Dulaney says, " and he had me walk with him. He would ask me to identify people approaching him. Me, I never was one for names. But the minute someone started to talk to him, he would know their voice. He could always remember their children and backgrounds. He had a most remarkable memory. And, before he became ill he was in excellent physical shape."

ECTOR IS THE only home H.G. Dulaney ever knew. He lives there still. He was born there May 11,1918, to Horace Greeley and Lucy Dulaney. (Ask H.G what his initials mean, and he'll tell you, nothing — he simply took his father's initials.) His father's and his mother's people had come to Fannin County in the 1840s.

His father ran a cotton gin, but a heart attack felled him at age 52. H.G. was just five years old. One of the few regrets of his life is that he never really knew a father.

"I wanted to go to college, but that was out of the question. Finally, a friend and my sister came up with the tuition for business college in Dallas. As far as living expenses, I had to earn that on my own. I would finish classes and go to my job at a drive-in. I got paid a dollar a day and any tips I could collect."

Out of college he came home to Fannin County and worked at the airfield for a while. In 1942 he joined the Army Air Force.

From Staff Reports

The rare Reagan-Marcos silver coins will be among coins to be exhibited in the second annual Midland Coin Club Show in Midland Center next Saturday and Sunday.

The show's theme will be keyed to the 1984 Olympics. The U.S. Bureau of the Mint has issued silver and gold coins commemorating the world sporting event to held in the United States this year.

Eight-thousand 25-peso coins were minted for the 1982 meeting of U.S President Ronald Reagan and Philippine Islands President Ferdinand E. Marcos. But the rarity of the coin may be eclipsed, since the Reagan-Marcos meeting did not take place. The "political situation" in Manila at the time apparently was of such a serious nature that the meeting was cancelled.

The coin, which is the first coin struck depicting Reagan, weighs 25.01 grams, contains .402 Troy ounces of fine silver and is crown-size (38 millimeters). The coin was introduced to the numismatic marketplace without fanfare; the 8,000 struck coins were quickly bought for $50 apiece.

The Reagan-Marcos coin is the second Philippine coin to portray both United States and Philippine presidents. In 1936, the Commonwealth of the Philippines issued an .800 fine silver one-peso coin which depicted the jugate busts of President Franklin D. Roosevelt and President Manuel Quezon.

The Commonwealth has issued coins portraying Gen. Douglas MacArthur, an idealized American soldier with Marcos, and another American, Gov.-Gen. Murphy.

Coin dealers, hobbyists, and enthusiasts from Arizona, Colorado, Oklahoma and Texas are to participate in the show, which will be open to the public free of charge.

Midlander C.B. Nutter is the show's bourse chairman.

Show hours will be from 9 a.m. to 6 p.m. Saturday and from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m.Sunday.

From Staff Reports

In weekend theft and burglary complaints to city police, the Mr. S Food Store at 211 E. Florida was broken into and 200 cartons of cigarettes worth $1,800 were reported taken. Entry was gained by breaking a window.

Jesse Melendez of 1601 S. Colorado said $180 in cash was stolen from a purse that had been left in Winchell's Donut Shop, 700 N. Big Spring, about 2 p.m. Sunday. The purse was later found in a trash can in the men's room, minus the money.

Tony Benavidez of 1301 S. Colorado said he left his disabled car in the 2300 block of South Terrell on Saturday night. When he returned Sunday, the 1974 model vehicle had been stripped of its battery and all four wheels. Total loss was placed at $420.

Police on routine patrol early Sunday morning found that a cinder block had been used to break the front door of the CIC Finance and Pawn Co., 905 S. Main. A display case had been broken into, but it was not immediately known what, if anything, was missing. An investigation continues.

Lamaze classes to begin April 10

A six-week series of Lamaze childbirth classes will begin at Midland Memorial Hospital April 10. The series is designed for expectant couples in the last trimester of pregnancy.

Bell recommendation to be announced

AUSTIN (AP) — Public Utility Commission administrative law judges who listened to months of testimony planned today to announce how much of a rate hike they think Southwestern Bell should get.

The phone company wants a $1.3 billion package that would double monthly bills for basic home service. The PUC staff has said Bell is entitled to a $933 million increase, but only a dollar a month more from residential customers.

In past telephone cases, the three-member commission has approved increases close to the amount recommended by its adminstrative law judges and hearing examiners.

Girl undergoes controversial autism treatment

LAT Photo

SHEFFIELD, Mass. — Miriam Kuzecki is a doll-like child with dark locks that curl around her shoulders and bangs that shade saucer-shaped eyes. She is 4 years old but she speaks only 25 words and weighs only 32 pounds, and her favorite activities seem to be flapping her hands and fingers and circling or pacing endlessly. "Mimi" is autistic.

Paula Kuzecki is Mimi's mother, a woman driven by a personal crusade to save her youngest child. She has spent hundreds of nights in hospitals as doctors puzzled over why, less than a year after birth, Mimi stopped eating and started ignoring the world. From strangers in her Cleveland suburb, Kuzecki has begged money for a controversial treatment she sees as Mimi's only hope.

Barry and Suzi Kaufman are the dramatic husband-and-wife team providing that treatment. They hold no medical degrees and have no formal training in psychology or special education. They are shunned by some professionals with those backgrounds as well-intentioned but deluded; others call them manipulative, self-serving and even counterfeit.

THESE ARE the central characters in a story taking place just over the northwestern corner of Sheffield, Mass., is where the Kaufmans last July located their Options Institute and Fellowship, a non-profit organization predicated on a teaching method of love and acceptance. The literature declares the institute "A Place for Miracles," and Paula Kuzecki says, "I want so badly to believe."

Paula and Mimi arrived at the institute in November. For 12 hours a day, seven days a week since then, Paula and other adults have been with Mimi in the small, non-descript room that has become her world. There, working with her one-on-one, they have imitated her flapping, her circling and her humming and hissing sounds.

The behavior is a typical manifestation of autism, for which Mimi was diagnosed more than a year ago. But the treatment, which in effect does nothing but mimic the behavior, is not typical.

IT IS THE approach the Kaufmans used with their own autistic son, now 11, whose recovery was heralded in the 1976 book, "Son-Rise," and three years later, in an award-winning movie. They did the same with a Mexican boy and chronicled his story in another book.

The Kaufmans say that their method succeeds because it creates a nourishing environment that, for an autistic child, is palatable, understandable and controllable.

"He is then motivated by us to cross a bridge into our world," said Barry Kaufman, a towering man with the apropos nickname "Bears."

There is still little information on autism, but many doctors believe that it results from brain damage that occurs during fetal development or birth. A genetic abnormality may be responsible, or possibly a virus.

The damage brings on intense, bizarre actions such as rocking, spinning, flapping and banging. The children seem to retreat into their own world. Those working with them most typically use behavior modification techniques.

BUT THE Kaufmans contend the techniques are premised on negative judgments of the autistic behavior. They believe that as long as the rocking and flapping are considered something that must be stopped, efforts to change them will fail.

The Kaufmans' books, used in universities across the country and reviewed in countless newspapers, brought them fame. The publications also attracted skepticism from those in the psychology and medical professions.

"Based on the past 40 years of research, a scientific statement would have to be that, with autistic children, miracles rarely happen," said Dr. Fred Volkmar of Yale University's Child Study Center.

"Get the Kaufmans literature and see if it doesn't turn your tummy," said Dr. Arthur J. Newman, an associate professor f pediatrics at Case Western reserve University School of Medicine. "They're all goody-two-shoes. They're preying on innocent people."

EVEN THE National Society for Autistic Children and Adults, which supports parental involvement in the treatment of autistic children, views the couple's work with extreme caution. The society is especially concerned because the Kaufman treatment comes across as a "cure" for autism and raises false hopes, said Jamie Ruppman, coordinator of governmental affairs.

The Kaufmans say that the medical community forces them into a Catch-22 situation: If they make significant progress with a child, doctors question whether the child really was autistic. If no change occurs, doctors reject them as failures.

"Doctors feel economically threatened" by a lay approach that is heavy on love and absent of drugs, Barry Kaufman said. "I don't know if I could get someone who had gone to medical school for 14 years to crawl on the floor and quack like a duck."

THERE IS NO guarantee of a cure, he said. "But I want to make it clear. There's a chance for every kid."

The Kaufmans, in fact, believe there is a chance for everybody and do not limit their activities to working with autistic children. During the summer and fall, they conduct adult sessions in the "Option Process" — a philosophy based on personal happiness and a non-judgmental attitude toward others.

Kuzecki knows others have called her stupid and blind for placing her trust and money in the Kaufmans and their $15,000-a-month residential program for "special children." But she seems to draw support almost visibly from Barry Kaufman's words.

Since she had three other children by which to gauge Mimi's development, she lived through the first year of the infant's life worrying about her lack of motivation or interest in other things, even breast-feeding.

The doctor told Paula Kuzecki to stop worrying. She would leave his office castigating herself for being a "hysterical mother."

BUT THESE early, subtle signs became more pronounced as Mimi grew. In her crib, she would stare at the ceiling for hours, sometimes smiling mysteriously at it or at a wall. She seemed to look through other people "like you were a ghost," her mother said. She often would scream if anyone walked into her room and tried to hold her.

The National Society for Autistic Children and Adults says that the syndrome occurs in 15 of every 10,000 births, with severe autism occurring in five of every 10,000 children.

The prognosis for nearly all of them is poor. Only one autistic child in six adequately adjusts to society and is able to do regular work as an adult, says the Diagnostic and Statistical Manual of the American Psychiatric Association. Two-thirds stay severely handicapped and unable to lead independent lives.

The Kuzeckis changed pediatricians when Mimi was about a year old. She nearly had stopped eating by then, and the new doctor immediately diagnosed her as malnourished and dehydrated and put her in the hospital. A feeding tube was inserted through her nose into her stomach, but after Mimi began pulling it out daily, a more permanent tube was secured surgically through her abdomen.

A CYCLE OF hospital stays followed: in Cleveland; Columbus, Ohio; and Boston. There also was a six-month trip to a Florida child-care center that specializes in children who won't eat.

In the end, Paula Kuzecki said, "The doctors threw up their hands. They didn't think she was going to live."

Sometime during this period, she read Barry Kaufman's first book and contacted the Kaufmans, who then were in New York. Last summer she called them daily, until in August, they said that they would accept Mimi for long-term treatment.

The program for Mimi is costing $90,000 for six months, far beyond what Paula and her husband, Gershon, a schoolteacher, can afford themselves. But, Paula says, "I would have done it if it would have cost $50,000 a month to keep my child alive."

LAST FALL, the 27-year-old mother turned into a fund-raising whirlwind. Handwritten signs went up on storefront walls in the Cleveland area. "Miriam Kuzecki is a 3 1-2 -year-old little girl who will die without your help," they read.

The mayor of University Heights, where the Kuzeckis live outside Cleveland, declared Oct. 31 Miriam Kuzecki Day. Armed with the proclamation and medical letters, Paula accosted wealthy residents in ther homes, nearly demanding help for her child. Many slammed their doors in her face, but one man wrote her a $15,000 check on the spot.

Mimi now starts six of her seven working days with her mother. (on the seventh day, her mother rests.) At 8 a.m., the two cross the hall from their bedroom into the room where blankets and brightly colored plastic toys wait.

For the next three hours, until someone relieves Paula, mother and daughter touch toes, squeal together, clap and wave hands. Once in a while, for brief moments, there appears to be real eye contact between the two.

MIMI INTERMITTENTLY would grab a cookie or a handful of potato chips and, almost aimlessly, put them in her mouth to eat.

She is now eating nearly 70 percent of the nourishment she receives, her mother says, a major sign of progress and one that was critical since Mimi's tube was slowly destroying her stomach.

"The day I can take (the stomach tube) out is going to be the biggest day in my life," Kuzecki said.

Whether that day will come soon, and whether it will be followed by more progress, are unknown. But Kuzecki is certain that one day her youngest daughter will be indistinguishable from other children.

Eleven hours into her day, Mimi is still in her special room playing and seems to have lost none of her frenetic energy. She stomps her feet. So does her companion. She rolls her head; the motion is quickly mimicked.

Hearst Feature Service

VANCOUVER, Wash. — Sonia Stafford, 16, is a high-school dropout with a history of disciplinary problems. Andrea Wheelock, 31, is a happily married housewife.

Neither would seem to have much in common, but their unexpected pregnancies turned both into "high-risk" mothers and prime candidates for a one-year perinatal coaching program aimed at preventing child abuse.

The perinatal "bonding" program, co-sponsored by the Clark County Child Abuse Council and Vancouver Memorial Hospital, uses 12 active volunteers to coach first-time, high-risk mothers during their pregnancies, hospital stays and in follow-up visits after the babies have gone home.

Coaches teach the mothers how to handle their babies' feeding, sleeping and crying, and give them suggestions on medical and day care. They watch closely to see that the mother-child bond is developing into a strong, loving relationship. Sometimes, they even have to explain how pregnancy occurs.

Clients, referred by their physicians, include pregnant teenagers, older first-time parents, mothers with histories of diabetes, hypertension, alcohol, drug use or histories of abortion or miscarriages. They also include single parents, parents with histories of abuse or rape, and women who become pregnant as a result of rape or incest.

Stafford got pregnant when she was 15. Her boyfriend soon lost interest, but she decided she would not give the infant up for adoption or have an abortion. Her distressed mother, who learned "through the grapevine" of the pregnancy, gave up her push for an adoption after her daughter firmly resisted.

Stafford is now the mother of an 8-week-old son. She lives at home with her parents, but feels she knows enough about mothering to live independently with her baby, thanks to the program.

Wilburta Senn, a 61-year-old woman, was the coach assigned to Stafford when the teenager was four months' pregnant. Senn's early impressions were not good.

"They said she had behavior problems and might give me a lot of trouble," said Senn, who is the mother of three sons and an adopted daughter.

The coaching process involved visits with Stafford once and sometimes twice a week. All coaches in the program are committed for at least 10 months and are trained in the principles of child development.

"We discussed the possibility of the baby crying all night and that she would be up walking the floor," Senn said. "I told Sonia these were things she had to face, and she thought it was worth it."

Andrea Wheelock, 31, was told she would not be able to bear children. In high school, she was involved in a traffic accident that left her seriously injured. And in 1982, she underwent surgery for endometriosis, a disease in which the menstrual flow lines the uterus, causing complications.

A few months later, to her and her husband's surprise, she was pregnant. "I was in shock," she said.

Wheelock said she had lots of questions. Her mother left her family when she was 2, and her father tried to raise the children as best he could. Still, she remembered the feelings of neglect.

Not having the benefit of having a mother to guide her in raising children, Wheelock expressed concerns about caring for her daughter. She was introduced to her coach, Diane DiVittorio, who offered her plenty of support. Like DiVittorio, Wheelock had a Cesarean delivery.

"There were a lot of things I didn't know," she said.

Now Wheelock speaks about having a brother or sister for her 8-week-old daughter Rebecca. "We are going to try again this fall," she said.

Convention announced

Joyce Lovett, president of Texas State Association of Parliamentarians, announced the 30th annual convention of the organization will be April 6-8 at the Holiday Inn Country Villa in Midland.

Convention theme is "Energize Parliamentarians." Business sessions will include election of officers and amendment of bylaws. A field trip to the Permian Basin Petroleum Museum has also been arranged.

Educational workshops, set for 4:45-6 p.m. Saturday, will be open to the public for a nominal fee. Banquet speaker will be Harris Kerr, Midland attorney.

Ms. Lovett, secretary-treasurer of Hanson Corporation, was the Permian Basin Petroleum Association's Energy Secretary of the Year.

Newborns' hearing checked

ROCHESTER, N.Y. (AP) — "Hearing impairment can be detected in newborns, even on their first day," says Dr. Larry Dalzell, audiologist at the University of Rochester Medical Center.

"It's important to identify hearing loss early, so that any handicap can be minimized," according to Dalzell. "The child can then obtain special training and devices and learn to handle language at the usual stages."

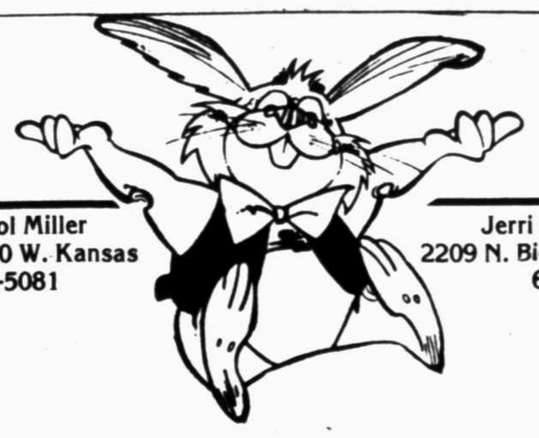

He uses a brain-wave hearing test to screen infants who are at risk for hearing loss because of pregnancy or delivery problems, illnesses, or heredity.

With electrodes taped on the infant's head, the machine records the brain's response to sounds from an earphone, without even waking the baby.

Nursery's phalaenopsis orchids fit even for president

By ELVIN McDONALD

Since before President Reagan became our head of state, I've noticed he's often pictured with a flowering orchid sitting on his desk. No matter your politics, I say that's an encouraging sign.

Early on I also became curious as to where the plants originated. If you were president, who would grow your orchids?

Last year I happened to meet George Vasquez at an orchid show in Miami and thereby stumbled onto the White House source. A few weeks ago George gave me a tour through his greenhouse at Zuma Canyon Orchids, located in Malibu, Calif.

How do you grow orchids that are so splendid they bloom for the president, not to mention Barbra Streisand and Larry ("J.R.") Hagman? Or how do you breed an orchid and name it to honor writer Joan Didion Dunne?

Well, it hasn't hurt Zuma Canyon to be based in California, where a former governor liked their orchids and went on to become president of the United States. Or that Streisand is a neighbor.

What really matters, however, is long-time commitment to excellence. George's father, Amado, has devoted his life to growing the best orchids possible. Zuma Canyon also specializes, another aid in achieving unusual success. Strength here is in Phalaenopsis or moth orchids.

Besides growing top quality specimens, Zuma Canyon also breeds new hybrids. Costly "stud" plants are constantly added to enrich the gene bank. Innovation thus becomes another vital part of excellence.

Zuma Canyon growing conditions are not that unusual: night temperatures in the 60s, by day 70-80F., with gentle, moist breezes and bright light but not direct sun. The orchids grow in fir bark.

A 16-page booklet of photographs and phalaenopsis orchid how-to from Zuma Canyon is available for $1 from Elvin McDonald Reader Service, Box R, Niagara Falls, N.Y. 14305.

Q. Several times in recent months you have mentioned plaited ficus trees. I see pictures of them in shelter magazines. Is it possible to train one, or I should say three, in a window garden?

A. Yes, provided it's a sunny window. Start with well-rooted cuttings having whip-size trunks that can be braided without splintering or otherwise breaking. Pot the three ficus with the trunks as close together as possible. Firm soil about the roots.

Braid the three ficus the same as you would hair or a rag rug. Secure at the top with a twist-tie, which you will need to remove as soon as the tree stands united without assistance.

Ficus benjamina is most often trained this way. Its trunks fuse together in time, literally becoming one. Three whips 18 inches tall braided this spring will be 3 feet tall within a year, 5 or 6 before you know it.

Q. What care does a ming tree need?

A. You've asked about the parsley polyscias, which is often called ming aralia. I've seen this member of the ginseng family in full sun as well as in shade but half-shade to half-sun is likely the most desirable. Water well; if water remains in the saucer a half hour later, pour it off. Water again when the top inch of soil begins to feel dry.

Q. Do weeping figs needs or like to be potbound? Mine is 5 feet tall, has a 4½-inch trunk and is in a 5-gallon container.

A. This size ficus does not need a larger pot. You can rejuvenate it, however, by using your fingers to remove the top 2 inches of old planting medium and replacing with fresh potting soil.

QUICK TAKE: Despite fierce competition, Jim Wilson and Tom Eltzroth have produced what may well be the best guide of all about cultivating edibles: "How to Grow a Thriving Vegetable Garden" (Countryside Books, 2280 U.S. Hwy 19 N., Suite 223, Clearwater, Fla. 33575; $9 quality paperback). Highly recommended for any climate and any gardener, from beginner to advanced. Content, typography (large, easily read) and photographs are all first-rate.

Q.T.: Specialized plant fertilizers are fairly common for roses, camellias, African violets, foliage and flowering plants in general, but one formulated specifically for orchids is available only from Clarel Laboratories, Inc. The NPK is 5-5-3 and President Al Toral (513 Grove, Deerfield, Ill. 60015) will be glad to send you more details.

Q.T.: Pots of paper-white narcissus forced to bloom indoors can be planted outdoors in the ground only in mild climates (Sun Belt). Hardier narcissus of the daffodil type can be set into cold-climate gardens for future bloom there, but neither type bulb can be forced again.

DEAR ABBY

Judge: Drug sentence makes parents prisoners

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: Some time ago you devoted an entire column to the drug problem. I was so impressed I gave it to the principal of the Mason City (Iowa) high school, who in turn made copies and gave them to other school officials.

Please run it again, Abby. It's needed even more today. — R.H.H., MASON CITY

DEAR MR. H.: I agree. And here it is:

Judge Alfonso Sepe in Miami Beach Fla. sentenced a youth to one year in the county stockade and four years' probation for possession of narcotics.

Judge Sepe spoke directly to the youth and said, "Do you know who is going to serve that year? Not you; your mother and father will serve that year.

"That is what's wrong. THEY get sentenced. They get sentenced for a lifetime.

"You serve a year. Your body is in the stockade for a year, but their souls are tormented for a lifetime. Why? Because you are a selfish, spoiled boy, that's why.

"There is no punishment in the world that I could inflict upon you that could in any way compensate for what you are doing to your mother and father. I have not spent 5 cents raising you. I didn't know you from Adam. But your mother and father have put their lives, their hearts, their sweat, their money and everything else they have into bringing you up. And now they have to sit in this courtroom and listen to a total stranger who had nothing to do with your upbringing scold you and put you in jail.

"This is at a time when phony kids your age are yelling, 'You adults have your alcohol, we want our drugs; you have polluted our water and our air, you have polluted this and that,' and all the rest of the garbage that comes out of your mouths.

"Meanwhile, you put yourselves above everybody else. I feel sorry for you.

"I want you to think of this for one year, and the reason why I say it:

"If you are sick, a doctor will treat you and he won't be on drugs. The lawyer who represents you won't be high on drugs, and the people in whose custody you'll be won't be on drugs.

"Your astronauts are not on drugs, and your president is not, and your legislators are not.

"And your engineers who build the bridges that you drive across and the tunnels that you drive through are not on drugs, and those who build the planes that you fly in and the cars that you drive are not.

"None of them have been on drugs, and this is because of people like your mother and father.

"But in the world of the future, the same may not be true. Teachers, doctors, lawyers, legislators — products of the new drug-oriented generation — may well be high as kites.

"You won't know whom to send your child to, or whom to trust your life to."

Garden can be built around compost pile

By PATRICK DENTON
Copley News Service

Sometimes an obvious solution can stare us in the face for years before we recognize it. For example, I remember my wife's unfavorable reaction when I first suggested we start a compost pile in the middle of our big vegetable plot.

After a considerable number of years lugging compost hither and yon, I reasoned that placing a compost enclosure in the middle of a garden bed is just about the optimum in home gardening convenience. My wife soon reached the same conclusion.

This past winter I made several wire enclosures in some of the garden beds. Already they are nicely filling up with leaves, retired plants, some grass clippings, and other horticultural flotsam and jetsam.

The cages have an opening so that we can get in and turn the pile, around the outer edges of the wire will be planted runner beans and tall dahlias for the ones in sun, climbing nasturtiums and sweet peas around those located in the light shade.

These strategically located compost heaps are the moveable feasts of the home gardener's world. In the fall, as the beds are cleared, the wire can be removed, the finished or even partly finished compost raked over the bed and roughly dug under, for a boost to the spring garden.

Where they are located in perennial beds, the compost can be allowed to finish before it is placed as a spring mulch around the plants. Perfectionists may well wish to screen it first.

Placing the piles in areas where you want to spread compost saves a whole lot of heavy lugging around, lifting, shoveling and manning the wheelbarrow. As we get older, we tend to think more about these things.

Somebody in Minnesota has designed an entire garden around this central-compost idea. The Ringer Corp., of Eden Prairie, Minn., developed a planting system which is really just a garden planned around a central wire ring 4 feet high and 3 feet across.

An 18-inch opening is left on the wire enclosure, and a path is left unplanted leading to the opening. The enclosure is used as a regular compost pile, and it is kept watered as a matter of course as the circle garden is watered.

Against the wire can be grown vining crops like tomatoes and cucumbers, beans, peas or annual vining flowers. Actually, several of these ring gardens can be set up wherever you might have a bit of space, so that you would have more than one wire ring for supporting different vining plants.

Depending on the size of your circle area, you can grow any number of circular "rows" of vegetables and flowers around that inner circle of climbing plants. Next to the climbers would be placed some of the taller growing specimens like Swiss chard, dill, broccoli, celery and peppers followed by an outer row or crops.

An attractive edging of low growers around the outer rim of the circle garden might be alternate plantings of leaf lettuce, dwarf marigolds and herbs. At the sides of the path to the compost pile might be planted winter squash vines and zucchini.

Smoke detectors save lives

King Features' Syndicate

In the past 15 years smoke detectors have been credited with saving thousands of lives. And yet 40 percent of American homes are still without one.

Small homes should have at least one smoke detector; larger homes need two or more. Here, from the Consumer Product Safety Commission (CPSC), are tips on how to buy, install and use them.

What kind to buy

There are two kinds of smoke detectors: ionization and photoelectric. Each detects fire or smoke differently, but either type provides adequate protection. Prices range from $9 to $30.

Both ionization and photoelectric units are available in either battery-operated or electrical models. The battery-operated ionization model is the most popular. Make sure the unit you buy has been certified by a recognized testing organization.

The CPSC suggests tha. homes with two detectors have both types and that one be powered by electricity and the other by batteries. You then have the best detection capabilities of both and reduce the chances of both being "on the blink" at the same time.

You can now have your smoke detector electronically connected to your telephone to report a fire that may start when you're away from home. It's done through a book-sized device programmed to dial preset numbers (your fire department, a neighbor or a service that can call the fire department) when the smoke alarm sounds. One system, sold at AT&T Phone Centers, costs $230. Check with fire officials to see if this service is available in your town.

Installing and testing

If you have just one smoke detector, put it as close as possible to the bedrooms so your family will be awakened in the event of a fire at night (that's when most fatal fires occur). If the bedrooms are upstairs, the detector should be near the top of the stairs. On the first floor, install a detector near the living room, and if you have a basement, install one above the stairs to the first floor.

Avoid putting the detector within six inches of where the wall and ceiling meet — this "dead space" doesn't have enough air circulation to carry smoke to the detector. Put it on the ceiling or on the wall six to 12 inches blow the ceiling.

To make sure a detector is working, test it monthly by holding a candle six inches below it. If it's an ionization detector, let the flame burn.

UNIQUE NEW PIPIN' HOT® LOAF COMBINES HOME-BAKED QUALITIES, REFRIGERATED FRESH DOUGH CONVENIENCE

While most Europeans judge bread and rolls by the best bakery in town, Americans agree that the standard of excellence by which all bread products are judged is a freshly-baked homemade loaf. However, the number of families who buy their breads and rolls far outweighs those who enjoy the homemade product. For nearly a quarter of a century, it has been the dream of The Pillsbury Company to offer a product with home-style characteristics along with the convenience of the company's refrigerated fresh dough products. Ideally, the cook could remove a can of dough from the refrigerator and pop the loaf into the oven as dinner preparation begins. Half an hour later, as an aroma like homemade yeast bread fills the kitchen, the fresh-baked loaf would be ready for the table. That dream is now a reality.

Pipin' Hot® Loaf is baked on a cookie sheet for optimum crust. The only preparation required is a little hand shaping of the loaf on the cookie sheet prior to baking, for the most attractive appearance.

Although it has the long narrow shape and characteristic slashes of a French bread, the crust is more tender and the texture lighter and less chewy. As it bakes, it fills the air with an aroma like homemade yeast bread.

The original concept for the product was a one-pound loaf shaped like a conventional white bread. Bob Trombino, marketing manager for Pipin' Hot® Loaf, says it is probably fortunate that the research team never came up with a product in this conventional form, because now the timing is right for a specialty or variety loaf. Variety bread sales are rising at an annual rate of 15% and reached an estimated 17 pounds per person in 1982, up sharply from seven pounds in 1972.

Much of this gain has been at the expense of commerical white bread, which is steadily losing popularity.

Although the flavor of Pipin' Hot® Loaf is good served cold, its greatest appeal is as convenient hot breadstuff to serve at dinner. The product and current lifestyles appear to be making a match. A recent consumer study shows that three out of four U.S. households serve some kind of bread or rolls with dinner at least once a month. Much more significant, more than half of all families eat warm bread or rolls an average of three times a week.

Selections include heated bakery rolls, brown and serve rolls and refrigerated rolls and biscuits. Few people bake their own, and frozen products are not considered convenient because of the thawing and rising time. Pipin' Hot® Loaf now gives these bread lovers a unique new convenience product with flavor and aroma like homemade yeast bread.

Because this bread usage study showed that a suprising number of people are serving hot breads or rolls, a group of women were brought into a consumer research group for Pillsbury to try to learn the reasons for this eating pattern, which would seem to be more typical of the days before most women were employed.

Dressing up the meal or doing something special for family or guests were frequently given as reasons. But serving warm breads and rolls also was seen as an economy move, because they can overcome family objections to eating leftovers or to make skimpier main dishes more satisfying.

Weight and health-conscious families who are eating more main meal soups and salads also find them the perfect accompaniment.

Introduction of Pipin' Hot® Loaf is the result of three years of intensive product development, resulting in new fresh dough production technologies.

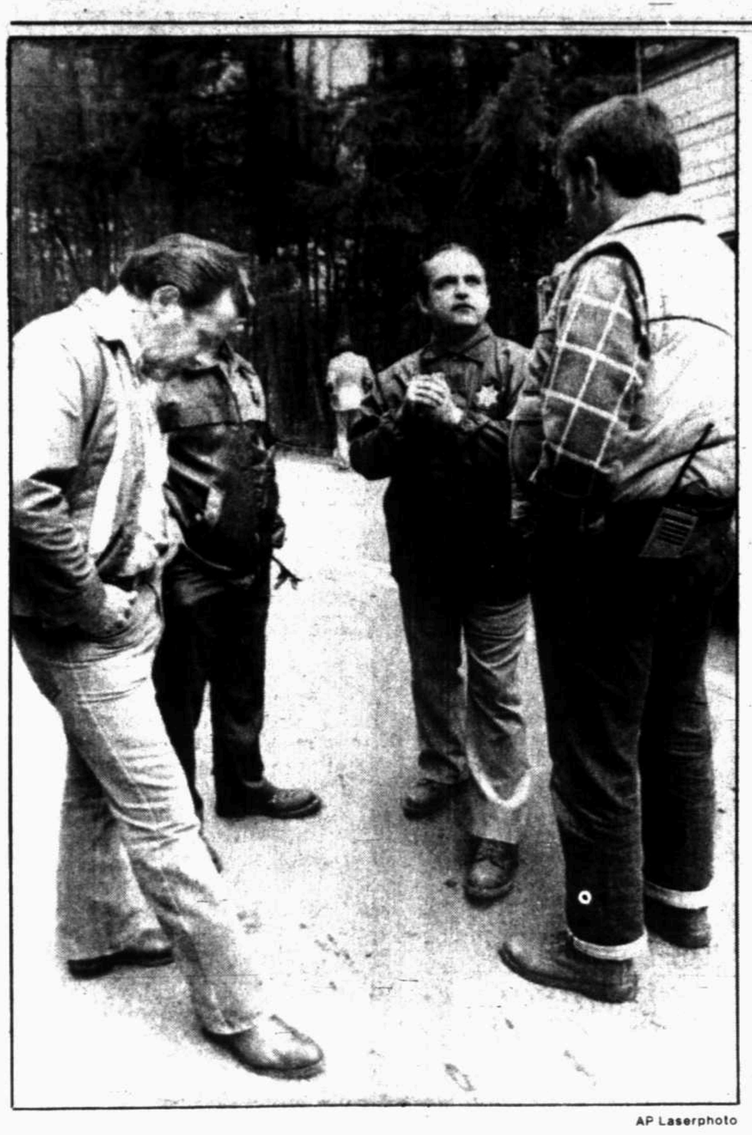

Research information about this unique breadstuff is closely guarded, a fact made easier because the development scientist worked as a team for three years, away from Pillsbury's main Research and Development facility, free from any other assignments. When Pipin' Hot® Loaf was ready to move into the marketing area, a nucleus from that team went with it. So the number of people knowledgeable about the development is small.

The company says that Pipin' Hot® Loaf's taste and textural attributes are the results of a new yeast-like technology developed by Pillsbury. This unique manufacturing process gives Pipin' Hot® Loaf the characteristics of a "homemade" loaf.

King County Police Chief Capt. Frank Adams, center, with star, and three other members of the Green River Task Force discuss plans after finding three bodies about five miles south of the Seattle-Tacoma International Airport Sunday.

Skeletons may have been victims of killer

SEATTLE (AP) — With three newly found skeletons being examined as possible victims of the Green River killer, the head of a task force investigating the 16 victims listed so far predicted that "whoever it is will continue to kill until he's caught."

Explorer Scouts, called in after a mushroom hunter found a skull, discovered the skeletons Sunday in a wooded, litter-strewn area near Star Lake, in an unincorporated part of King County about 17 miles south of downtown Seattle.

Another victim of the Green River killer, who has attacked young female prostitutes, was found last September less than a mile away. Guards were posted overnight to keep people from the site before the search resumed today.

Capt. Frank Adamson, commander of the 40-member Green River Task Force, said the three skeletons are the most found in one site since October, when three Green River victims were found near Seattle-Tacoma International Airport.

"It's a lot to find in one spot," Adamson said.

Besides the 16 victims listed so far, police say 12 missing women fit the profile of Green River victims — almost all young prostitutes who were strangled.

The latest remains "obviously" were potential victims in the serial killings because of "their proximity and the fact there is more than one," Adamson said. "We may find a few others, here or somewhere else."

Adamson said he doubted that the Green River killer had struck in 1984, adding, "I'm hopeful that there aren't any current victims, at least since the first of the year.

"I'm not optimistic that there won't be any more if we don't catch him sometime soon," Adamson said. "I feel that whoever it is will continue to kill until he's caught."

Two of the skeletons were removed for examination by the county medical examiner's office, with the third set to be removed today. Dr. Harry J. Bonnell, assistant medical examiner, refused to discuss the case Sunday.

Police dubbed the case the Green River killings after the waterway where the first five sets of remains were found in the summer of 1982 near Kent. Most have been found in southern King County.

The last confirmed victim died last June, and the most recent known disappearance of a woman fitting the Green River profile was Oct. 31.

A dozen task force officers and 20 Explorer search and rescue scouts were called to the site after the mushroom hunter found the skull in underbrush on Saturday. The scouts found the rest of that skeleton Sunday morning and two more skeletons in the afternoon.

Adamson said the corpses apparently had been dragged downhill from the road, rather than uphill from a nearby, intersecting road in the Green River Valley.

"It's a regular garbage dump here. There's all kind of garbage," said Lee Hahn, county police search and rescue coordinator.

Unidentified skeletal remains also were found Saturday 11½ miles east of Enumclaw, but Adamson said the probe will expand to that area only if an identity is established that fits the Green River victim profile.

Labor's endorsement tested in New York

NEW YORK (AP) — With more AFL-CIO members than any other state and the second largest bloc of delegates to the Democratic National Convention, New York is giving organized labor's endorsement of Walter F. Mondale the biggest test yet in the 1984 presidential campaign.

AFL-CIO officials have been promoting local-level organizing among the state's 2.1 million AFL-CIO members as the key to a Mondale victory in the New York primary Tuesday.

"The shop steward is the key factor in this," said Edward Cleary, the state chapter president. "The members won't be swayed by a letter from a Lane Kirkland or an Ed Cleary. They need to hear from the guy sitting on the same bench."

Nevertheless, national and state AFL-CIO officials are working with local labor leaders in urging union members to vote for Mondale, the first presidential candidate to receive the endorsement of the union group before the party conventions.

The battle plan taps each rung of the hierarchical ladder. It includes letters from Kirkland, the AFL-CIO president, brochures from Cleary, telephone calls from the New York City Labor Council, rallies at union locals, and personal visits by shop stewards.

Statewide, a central computer sorts campaign literature according to zip code and the packets mailed out stress Mondale's stands on issues of known concern to the voter's congressional district.

Brochures sent to white trade unionists criticize Gary Hart. But separate mailings to black voters stress Mondale's civil rights record and mention no other candidates.

Recent polls show Mondale running ahead of Hart and the Rev. Jesse Jackson, but there is also a large bloc of undecided voters.

The labor federation switched from promoting Mondale to attacking Hart after the senator's sweep of the New England primaries and caucuses. Issues singled out include Hart's opposition to the Chrysler loan guarantees.

But Cleary says "we stay away from Jesse Jackson," although the candidate is expected to make a strong showing among black blue-collar voters in New York.

"Many of the people who voted for Jackson in places like Chicago are the same people we want to vote for Mondale against Reagan after the convention," said Velma Hill, the AFL-CIO's national coordinator for black trade unionists.

Blacks account for about 65 percent of the 115,000 members of District 37, a public employees union based in New York, and despite their loyalty to the union, "a good many of them will come out for Jackson," predicted Guido Menta, the group's political director.

"That's a fact we have to deal with," he said. "We reach out to them anyway."

District 37 says it has thousands of volunteers working the streets and operates a bank of 400 telephones.

Senate faces long debate on military aid to El Salvador

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate faces a lengthy debate on more U.S. military aid to El Salvador while lawmakers in both houses of Congress continue their quest for ways to reduce burgeoning federal deficits.

With two congressional committees investigating the role of U.S. servicemen in El Salvador, the Senate today was beginning 50 hours of scheduled debate on President Reagan's request for a $61.7 million emergency military aid package that was provisionally approved last seek.

Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., and other opponents of U.S. military involvement in Central America will try to trim the money to $21 million and put conditions on it. Kennedy failed last week in an attempt to require a declaration of war or some other congressional action before U.S. troops could be sent into combat in the troubled region.

After the Central American debate, Senate Majority Leader Howard H. Baker Jr., R-Tenn., wants to begin work on a three-year $150 billion deficit-reduction package favored by Reagan. Democrats are pressing to shift the debate to the Senate Budget Committee, where they think they can collect enough Republican votes to forge a package more to their liking.

The House plans to begin debate Wednesday on a budget package proposed by its Democratic leadership that would reduce federal deficits by $182 billion over three years. Other budget plans will be considered in both chambers.

Democratic leaders in the House want to cut the growth in military spending by $95.6 billion over the next three years. The GOP plan would cut $41 billion from the president's proposed military buildup.

In the Senate, Baker wants to invoke a procedural shortcut to keep the budget debate on the floor, where Republicans have a 55-45 edge. But Minority Leader Robert Byrd, D-W.Va., wants the discussions to begin in the Senate Budget Committee, where Republicans hold a slim 12-10 majority.

While the Senate debates more military aid to El Salvador, two congressional panels are trying to determine whether the Reagan administration is violating the War Powers Act in the troubled country.

Spokesmen for both the House Foreign Affairs Committee and the Senate Foreign Relations Committee say their staff investigators are checking allegations that U.S. military advisers were involved in hostilities in El Salvador.

House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill Jr., D-Mass., asked for the House investigation, saying "serious questions" had been raised by reports suggesting that U.S. military advisers the "may have been involved in hostilities" between the government troops and leftist guerrillas.

Sen. James Sasser, D-Tenn., made a similar request to the Senate panel after a Pentagon staff officer told him, in response to questions, that advisers had been under hostile fire in El Salvador three times in the last five months.

The Pentagon said Friday the officer had been mistaken, but Sasser said he would continue efforts to get "forthright, consistent answers" about the incidents.

Reagan, meanwhile, was scheduled to deliver a report to Congress today that outlines the difficulties of verifying a ban on anti-satellite weapons in space. The report, required by Congress, is said to conclude it may some day be possible to verify a ban on specific weapons, but the field is so complex that such verification is currently impossible.

Capitol Hill sources say Congress is ready for a confrontation with the administration if the report adopts the recommendation of key Pentagon officials who say there is no point in seeking an anti-satellite arms treaty because it could not be verified.

Meanwhile, the presidential campaign is coming to Capitol Hill, with former Vice President Walter Mondale, Sen. Gary Hart's wife, Lee, and an aide to the Rev. Jesse Jackson scheduled to testify at House hearings Tuesday and Wednesday.

Rep. Mary Rose Oakar, D-Ohio, chairman of the House Post Office subcommittee on compensation, said Mondale, Mrs. Hart and a Jackson representative would testify at hearings on pay equity legislation.

Jury begins deliberations in trial of congressman for ethics violations

WASHINGTON (AP) — A 12-member federal jury begins today to decide whether Rep. George V. Hansen, R-Idaho, violated the law when he omitted certain loans and business transactions from documents filed with Congress in 1978-1981.

Government prosecutors and defense attorneys were to make their closing arguments in U.S. District Court this morning and the case was expected to go to the jury of eight women and four men by midafternoon.

The jury, which has been sequestered since the trial began on March 20, takes the case without hearing from Hansen, who did not testify.

His attorney, Nathan Lewin, said the 53-year-old Hansen could add nothing to the evidence already presented to the jury, so he invoked the congressman's right not to take the witness stand.

Last April, the grand jury indicted Hansen under the 1978 Ethics in Government Act, making him the first public elected official to be charged with violating that law.

Hansen, a seven-term congressman, is accused of four counts of failing to disclose $333,979 in loans and profits, much of it involving dealings with Texas billionaire Nelson Bunker Hunt and speculation in silver and soybean futures.

The alleged transactions consisted of a $50,000 personal loan in 1978 to the Hansens in the name of his wife, Connie, and co-signed by Hunt; profits of $87,475 by the Hansens from a sale of silver contracts in 1979 that were arranged by Hunt; a $51,503 loan in 1980 to Hansen and his wife in his wife's name by Hunt, and $115,000 in personal loans to him in 1981 by three individuals in Virginia.

The 1978 law requires virtually all major government figures to disclose annually their financial holdings, liabilities and transactions, including gifts, loans and profits for themselves and members of their immediate family.

Hansen's attorneys argued during his trial that Hansen and his wife, on the advice of their lawyers, executed a legal arrangement in which she had separate assets and liabilities. The three allegations involving debts and profits made by his wife, Hansen's attorneys said, were "by force of law hers alone, and were not reportable" on the disclosure.

Case of missing tire rolls into state court

LANSING, Mich. (AP) — The 8-year-old case of the missing tire is about to roll into state Supreme Court.

The dispute began when an East Detroit car dealership failed to include a spare tire with a new car it sold.

Arguments in Clarence Miller's suit against Colonial Dodge Inc. are scheduled to begin in the high court Thursday.

Meanwhile, the Dodge station wagon that Miller bought in May 1976 sits fading and rusting at a Dodge dealership near Miller's home — with 115 miles on its odometer.

Miller said he has refused to pay Colonial the $5,976 price on the car.

When Miller bought the car, he found it had a fifth wheel but no spare tire. He said he was not told that dealers were selling cars without spares because of a nationwide rubber workers' strike.

Officers search for killer

TEXARKANA, Ark. (AP) — More than 100 officers from four states searched for the killer of a sheriff's deputy before the suspect was shot to death after he fired on a police helicopter, officers said.

Officers from Texas, Arkansas, Louisiana and Oklahoma had conducted a house-to-house search for the killer of Miller County Deputy Charles Barnes, shot Saturday night after he stopped a suspicious car, Sheriff Ken Sinyard said.

The suspect, Roger Dale Porier, 32, of Texarkana, Texas, was killed shortly before dawn Sunday as he opened fire on a helicopter crew making a floodlight sweep of a wooded area near Eylau, Texas, Sinyard said. Two teen-agers said to be associates of Porier were being held on murder charges, Sinyard said.

State accused of neglect

ANCHORAGE, Alaska (AP) — An elderly woman who claims a couple kept her in domestic servitude for seven years has accused the state of failing to thoroughly investigate neighbors' reports of her situation.

Hedwig Reichle, 72, who came to Anchorage from Germany, claims that while she lived with Carl and Gertraud Pruett of Anchorage she was beaten by Mrs. Pruett and her daughter, Terry Park, and forced to do housework in exchange for a place to sleep on the floor.

She has filed a $1 million suit naming as defendants the couple and the state Division of Family and Youth Services, which she says conducted only a cursory investigation in 1981 after neighbors reported she was being mistreated.

Cruise liner still stuck fast to sand bar

MIAMI (AP) — Two of the world's most powerful tugboats, working late into Sunday night with a third tug, failed to pull the cruise liner S.S. Rhapsody off a sand bar near Grand Cayman Island where it stuck last week, company officials said.

The 24,000-ton Rhapsody ran aground Wednesday, about 100 yards off the island's coast, on the third day of a seven-day cruise to the Caribbean and Mexico. No injuries were reported.

All of the ship's 793 passengers were evacuated and flown to Miami Saturday, but the vessel's 400-member crew remained aboard, said Robert C. Smith, a vice president for Paquet French Cruises, which owns Rhapsody and two other cruise ships.

"There is no danger whatsoever to the crew and there was no reason to evacuate them," said Jean-Claude Potier, Paquet senior vice president.

"There was no danger for the passengers either. They were taken out because the cruise was over anyway (Sunday)," he said. "Many of them wanted to get back home. They had prior commitments."

Potier said three private tugboats were sent to the 600-foot ship Sunday to combine efforts to dislodge the ship.

Two of the tugboats — one with 26,000 horsepower and the other with 22,000 horsepower, the most powerful tugs in the world — were trying to pull the ship, he said.

The third, a 6,000-horsepower tug, was anchoring itself to the bottom, Potier said. "If you pull from a totally fixed object, it has more power," he said.

However, Sammy Jackson, port authority director for Grand Cayman Island, said the three tugs strained unsuccessfully to move the liner during a high tide shortly before 10 p.m. EST.

"All attempts so far to refloat the vessel have failed," he said, adding that he expected the efforts to continue through the night.

One tug had tried unsuccessfully to pull the ship off the sand bar Thursday as Cayman Island residents watched from condominiums that line the beach.

"They would pull and rock and pull and rock. The line broke three times," said one passenger, 18-year-old Kelly Repassy of Bradenton, Fla.

After the ship went aground, cruise line officials announced that drinks were on the house. The ship's entertainers worked overtime during the enforced three-day stayover.

Lava creeps closer to Hawaiian city

VOLCANO, Hawaii (AP) — Molten rock from Mauna Loa volcano today crept closer to Hilo, Hawaii's second largest city, as the mountain churned out about 1 million cubic meters of lava an hour, scientists said.

"The flow has begun to pond and then surge as a ponding area at the 6,000-foot level breaks loose," said Bobby Camara, a naturalist at the Hawaii Volcanoes National Park.

Camara also noted the advance of the 14-mile-long flow slowed when its leading edge hit "very flat" terrain about five miles from the outskirts of Hilo. The lava flow advanced about a quarter mile in eight hours Sunday, Camara said.

Meanwhile, a curtain of lava continued to fountain Sunday night about 150 feet into the air from a 300-foot-long vent at the volcano's 9,400-foot level, he said.

Although the lava output estimate remained at 1 million cubic meters per hour, scientists at the U.S. Geological Survey's Hawaiian Volcano Observatory said the actual output could vary either way by as much as 50 percent.

"Volcanoes are not very predictable," Camara said.

FDR's missing speech found

HYDE PARK, N.Y. (AP) — President Franklin D. Roosevelt's "Day of Infamy" speech, missing since he delivered it to a joint session of Congress, has been discovered by an archivist thumbing through a pile of Senate documents.

The reading copy of the speech had been missing since Dec. 8, 1941 — the day after the Japanese bombing of Pearl Harbor. Roosevelt read from it as he asked Congress for a declaration of war against Japan, saying Dec. 7 was "a date which will live in infamy."

William Emerson, director of the Franklin Delano Roosevelt Library here, said that "in the flurry of excitment it was probably left on the podium."

But, he added, "A joint session of Congress, which is required for a declaration of war, is held in the House chamber — not the Senate. So it's an even deeper mystery as to how it got in the Senate papers."

Emerson said the archivist, Susan Cooper, was looking through the papers in Washington last month while putting together an exhibit to commemorate the 50th anniversary of the National Archives. While perusing them, she found the Roosevelt speech.

He said he is certain the copy is authentic because Roosevelt was in the habit of signing his reading copies to indicate he had looked over the speech, and often entered the date and time.

"It's not going to change the historic record," he said, but the reading copy will enhance the nation's collection of Roosevelt's papers.

Emerson said the speech probably will go on display in the National Archives Building in Washington, although he claimed it for the FDR museum on the grounds of his family home overlooking the Hudson River.

TEL AVIV, Israel (AP) — Barbra Streisand, whose latest film venture is the story of a Jewish woman who poses as a man in order to take religious study, attended a special premier of "Yentl" in Israel.

Wearing gold lame, Miss Streisand, 41, was presented with a bouquet and given a kiss by a teen-age girl at the premier Sunday at Shahaf Cinema in Atarim Square, a hotel-marina-amusement arcade complex on the Tel Aviv shorefront.

On Tuesday, Miss Streisand will dedicate a Jewish studies building named for her father, Emanuel Streisand, at the Hebrew University in Jerusalem.

LONDON (AP) — The plot of a novel written by Graham Greene nearly 40 years and scheduled for publication next year is a closely guarded secret.

Greene, 79, says he wrote the 60,000-word novel entitled "The Tenth Man" while working for the Metro Goldwyn Mayer film company in the 1940s — and forgot he had finished it.

"As far as I remembered, it was an idea I had jotted down on two sheets of notepaper," the British author says in The Sunday Times of London.

The newspaper says the manuscript was uncovered in a Hollywood vault of MGM and that Greene has agreed to have it published in February 1985. The novel was finished three years before Greene's film script, "The Third Man," the newspaper said.

While the plot is being kept secret, the newspaper says it is thought to deal with those Parisians who collaborated with the Germans during World War II and those who resisted the occupation.

TOPEKA, Kan. (AP) — Dr. Karl Menninger, a psychiatrist and author who helped establish the Menninger Foundation, has been released from the hospital after a bout with bronchial pneumonia.

Menninger, 90, was admitted to Colmery-O'Neill Veterans Administration Medical Center on Tuesday when he had trouble breathing. He was released Saturday morning, according to hospital spokeswoman Lori Wade.

Menninger established the Menninger Foundation with his father in 1925 to treat and study psychiatric disorders. He has devoted much of his later years to the study of criminals and prisons.

His book, "The Crime of Punishment," was published in 1968.

MACON, Ga. (AP) — Thirty-eight years after John Birch was killed in China, the father of the man whose death inspired the John Birch Society leaves no doubt where he stands.

George S. Birch is 91 now, a retired farmer and teacher living in a brick home in north Macon. His front door bears bumper stickers with slogans like "Preach Christ, expose communism."

The John Birch Society, founded in 1958 by conservative political writer Robert Welch, calls John Birch "the first American killed by communists in the Cold War."

And in George Birch's living room there is literature from the John Birch Society and other right-wing groups. On the wall hangs a portrait of his son, a Baptist missionary whose death was blamed on communists.

"I think the communists are responsible for a lot of agitation," says Birch, who has never held national office in the John Birch Society, although he has been in charge of a Macon chapter and still appears at national meetings.

Ironically, he says, his son was not a very political person.

"He wanted to be a missionary from the time he was 11 years old," says Birch. "If he was alive, I think he'd be a missionary in China."

Concrete canoe floats to victory

ALBUQUERQUE, N.M. (AP) — You might think a concrete canoe would go over like a lead balloon, but the unlikely creation literally floated to victory.

Engineering students from New Mexico State University in Las Cruces came up with a design for a concrete canoe that weighs a mere 92 pounds and entered it in a race against canoes with heavyweight hulls built by the University of New Mexico and Texas Tech.

Rules for the annual contest sponsored across the nation by the American Society of Civil Engineers state that all entries must have concrete hulls.

"I didn't design it to run aground," said Dawn Suazo, who said it took her a month and a half to come up with the right — but secret — mixture of water, sand, cement and pumice.

Hope keeps SMU students laughing

DALLAS (AP) — The Southern Methodist University students who signed up to learn comedy from Bob Hope probably didn't get many insights from his first in a series of seminars, "What Makes Us Laugh," but they did get plenty of examples.

The 81-year-old comedian told the students that SMU had been trying for a long time to get him to teach a course, "but I thought I'd wait a little while — until I had more experience."

But seriously, folks — "For a fella who played the Majestic Theater in Fort Worth) in 1929 as a two-a-day hoofer, and now to come back as Professor Hope — I'm delighted to be here."

Hope sat on the stage of SMU's Bob Hope Theater last week and fielded questions from eight of the students enrolled in the comedy course while about 300 people who bought tickets enjoyed the stories and one-liners. The kids played the straight man.

"I was going to open with a prayer, but I was afraid Congress might hear about it," Hope said.

Hope told the students that comedy is always a guessing game. He said that although his material is written for him, he edits all his jokes.

He said Jack Benny "was one of the greatest timers" because his delivery was so slow.

"The audience knew what he was going to say," Hope said. "They laughed before he said it and they laughed after he said it."

The secret, Hope said, is "meshing your timing and thinking with the brain of the audience." Easy for him to say.

Another student asked him who he liked working with more than anybody else. Not surprisingly, Hope said it was the late Bing Crosby.

"Crosby was an underrated comedian because he did so many serious things," Hope said. "Bing was a very fine light comedian, and I made him heavy."

"They all have their audience," Hope allowed. He said Pryor's movie of his stand-up routine, "Live on Sunset Strip," "was really a stag film for the whole family. I thought I was in a locker room. But you can't fight that. There's an audience for that.

"I can't do that because I'm on television and I'm afraid some mother will walk over and turn the knob."

However, he said, his television show "Who Makes the World Laugh, Part 2," which airs this Wednesday, will include Pryor, Eddie Murphy and many other new-generation comedians.

Marvin Gaye killed

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The father of sweet-voiced soul singer Marvin Gaye was jailed without bail today, accused by authorities of shooting his son to death when "bad blood" between them erupted into a fatal fight over insurance.

Gaye, part of the generation of singers who originated the Motown sound in the 1960s, died Sunday afternoon on the eve of his 45th birthday. He was shot twice in the chest at the home he shared with his parents, police said.

Marvin Gaye Sr., 69, was booked for investigation of murder at police headquarters nearly eight hours after the shooting, said Sgt. Mike Pattee.

The younger Gaye's life ended amid a hard-fought revival of a career that saw 13 Top 10 songs from 1963 through 1977, including "I Heard It Through the Grapevine," "What's Going On" and, with Tammi Terrell, "Ain't Nothing Like the Real Thing."

Gaye, who had been working on another album, had battled through two divorces and drug problems, years without hits, a bankruptcy declaration and a back tax bill put at $2 million.

The fatal argument began Saturday night and involved "some insurance dealings," said police Lt. Robert Martin. He said it was rooted "in bad blood" but did not elaborate, and officers at the Wiltshire Division were unable to provide further details early today.

His hits also included the gospel-blues "Can I Get a Witness" in 1963, "How Sweet It Is" in 1964, and such soul standards as "Mercy Mercy Me." With Smokey Robinson, Gaye recorded "I'll Be Doggone" and "Ain't That Peculiar" in 1965.

Rebels shut down vital economic projects in Sudan

KHARTOUM, Sudan (AP) — Rebel opponents of President Gaafar Nimeiri's pro-Western government have shut down Sudan's two most vital economic projects and are threatening to plunge this debt-ridden nation into a new civil war.

The insurgency has created a dilemma for the United States, Sudan's main arms supplier and economic aid donor. Seeking to avoid involvement in the civil conflict, U.S. officials here stress that Washington's $166.5 million in military aid in 1984 is strictly "defensive" material.

But Sudanese officials are pressing for more aid to counter what they say is a growing threat from Libya, which they blamed for the March 16 air raid on Khartoum's state radio station.

Sudan's non-Moslem minority, estimated at 30 percent of a population of 22 million, is concentrated in the south. The base of support for the dissident movement is the Dinka tribe of southern Sudan's Upper Nile province.

The rebels are led by former Sudanese army Col. John Garang, who holds a doctorate in agricultural economics from Iowa State University. They call themselves Sudan People's Liberation Movement Army. Sudanese officials say they have training camps in neighboring Ethiopia and are backed by Libya.

In the past four months, rebel attacks and abductions of foreign workers have forced the shutdown of Chevron oil company operations and a French-run irrigation project in the south.

Chevron was to export oil from Sudan by 1986. The Jonglei project would have provided more water for irrigation by diverting the White Nile River around the south's swamps.

Both projects were both seen as vital to Sudan's long-range economic prospects. Sudan, whose national debt of about $9 billion is larger than the annual gross domestic product, has depended on the International Monetary Fund and Western aid donors for debt financing for several years.

Nimeiri announced Saturday night that a coup attempt against his government, planned for that day, had been thwarted by officials. He did not elaborate on who planned the coup and did not mention arrests.

The president's recent decisions have fueled the rebellion. He ordered thousands of non-Moslem troops into the Moslem northern region, prompting mutinies, and also ordered the promulgation of Islamic criminal, tax and civil codes.

In perhaps the most controversial move, Nimeiri divided the southern autonomous region into three provinces and allowed southern economic development to lag. Many southerners saw the May 1983 division as an abrogation of a treaty signed in 1972 that ended a 17-year civil war and granted the south an autonomous, unified region.

In the past four months, rebels have attacked government forces at An-Nasir and Akobo on the Ethiopian border, Upper Nile's provincial capital of Malakal to the west and many smaller garrisons.

Western military experts said the government had committed about half its nine airborne companies of 130 men each to the fighting. They said the Sudan air force's two U.S.-made jets flew nearly 50 missions in the past month.

Sudan is Africa's largest country and borders eight others, including hostile Libya and Ethiopia. Sudan's armed forces, estimated at 60,000, are not adequate to protect the country. Western military experts say it also lacks the equipment to fight a war in the south.

Army spokesman Maj. Gen. Babiker Abdel-Rahim Babiker said the government knows the southern conflict can not be solved militarily, "but military action can minimize their size and damage."

Babiker confirmed Western military estimates that the rebels can field about 1,000-2,000 trained men, mostly regular army mutineers, and perhaps 10,000-20,000 untrained armed men.

Nimeiri has offered the rebels amnesty if they lay down their guns. He brought former southern dissident Clement Mboro into the government as a minister of state four months ago, and is seeking to use Mboro as a mediator.

SANTIAGO, Chile (AP) - For the fourth time in 15 weeks, dynamite explosions apparently set off by leftist guerrillas have blacked out Santiago and a heavily populated stretch of central Chile.

The blasts Sunday night felled three electric power pylons in Santiago and one in Melipilla, 30 miles to the southwest, the National Emergency Office said. Explosions also were heard in the coastal city of Valparaiso as the lights went out.

The blackout was total in the capital and partial in Valparaiso and Concepcion, major Pacific coast ports. An 826-mile-long power grid from Vallenar in the north to Temuco in the south was crippled more than an hour.

By midnight, power was restored to most of the area, where about two thirds of Chile's 11 million people live.

Four skiers die in snowslide

SION, Switzerland (AP) — Four British skiers were killed by a massive snowslide that crashed across a trail in the Valais Alps, police report.

Their deaths Sunday brought the avalanche death toll in Switzerland to at least 10 over a three-day period.

Police said the Britons, three women and a man, were buried by snow and ice roaring down the west face of Mt. Laquinhorn near the resort of Saas-Fee.

They were found one hour after the avalanche struck and flown to hospitals where they died of their injuries, police said.

Poland raises gasoline price

WARSAW, Poland (AP) — The Communist government has imposed a 25 percent increase in the price of gasoline, raising the cost of a gallon of regular to about $1.40.

There were no reports of public protest against the increases, which took effect Sunday only a few hours after it was announced.

The official news agency PAP blamed the price hikes on "a constant rise in demand following a steady growth in the number of cars while there is no possibility to increase imports of crude oil."

Egypt to restore U.S.S.R. ties

CAIRO, Egypt (AP) — President Hosni Mubarak says he hopes to restore full diplomatic ties with the Soviet Union soon, Egypt's official news agency reports.

He said "special relations" with the United States should not prevent "ordinary relations" with the Soviet Union.
