Ross Perot throws weight to Richards

■ Governor is 'smart, tough and principled,' Dallas billionaire says.

Associated Press

DALLAS — Billionaire H. Ross Perot threw his support behind Democratic Gov. Ann Richards on Tuesday, saying she is "one of the greatest governors in the history of Texas."

Richards is locked in a neck-and-neck race with Republican George W. Bush, whose father Perot challenged as an independent in the 1992 presidential race.

Perot said Richards' management of the state's $35 billion-a-year budget and her ability to bring new jobs to Texas made her the best candidate.

"Running Texas as governor is big business. It is not an athletic event," Perot said.

"You need people in these very complex jobs who know how to get things done. You look at this governor's record, it is awesome," he said.

Richards, who stood smiling beside Perot, said she was delighted by his support.

"I'm really pleased to be endorsed by someone who is the personification of change in government," she said.

Last month, Perot had predicted

Board unveils pre-approved desegregation plan for MISD

By Myra Lee Salcedo
Staff Writer

Midland public school administrators unveiled a modified desegregation plan Tuesday night that the school board already voted to pursue.

Midland Independent School Board trustees voted on the issue following an executive session last week. No announcement of the vote was made and the media were not notified.

So, Tuesday night, many parents who attended the school district's two community meetings heard of the plan for the first time. The school board is seeking unitary status, which would grant the district relief from a federal-court ordered system of desegregation.

The modified desegregation plan —— proposed by the United States Department of Justice and approved by the board last week —— includes nine objectives.

Pursuing a school system that would satisfy the objectives met the approval of the board in a 5-2 vote, with Adela Marmolejo and James Fuller opposing the motion.

"This is not a done deal," said schoolboard trustee Jack Hightower, noting the district would have to come up with a system that "would be approved by the Justice Department and the interve-

3-car, bike accident kills one, seriously injures 1

By Katherine Poteet
Staff Writer

A four-vehicle accident late Monday afternoon killed a Midland resident and left another in serious condition at Memorial Hospital and Medical Center with internal injuries.

Sgt. David Garcia said witnesses told police officials that Catarino Segura Ybarra, 47, was riding a bicycle northbound facing oncoming traffic in the 2200 block of Lamesa Road at 12:25 p.m. For an unknown reason, the bicycle reportedly veered into oncoming traffic and the path of a city-owned truck, which was pulling a trailer loaded with cement.

Garcia said witnesses told police the truck, driven by 34-year-old Billy Ray Walker, took evasive action and swerved into the left lane. The truck missed Ybarra, but the trailer and the bicycle collided.

Ybarra suffered massive head injuries and was pronounced dead at the scene by Justice of the Peace Robert Pine.

Garcia said the city truck veered into the left lane and then struck a 1989 Oldsmobile Delta 88 head on. The impact sent the Oldsmobile, driven by 48-year-old Delores Jurado Green, backward and to the left into a vacant field.

Ms. Green underwent surgery for internal injuries. She also suffered a fractured right knee and ankle. She was list-

Oil editor receives national royalty owners' award

ADA, Okla. — John Paul Pitts, business/oil editor of the Reporter-Telegram has been honored by the National Association of Royalty Owners for excellence in energy reporting and will receive the association's Freedom Bell Award at its annual convention in Fort Worth on Nov. 10-12.

The 1994 award makes Pitts the nation's leading recipient of the Freedom Bell Award since its inception in 1982. He previously received the award in 1989, 1990 and 1991.

James Stafford, president of the National Association of Royalty Owners, said Pitts was being honored for his series of articles and columns that probed the possible conspiracy of the U.S. government with Saudi Arabia to artifically lower crude oil prices in the 1980s. The strategy was supposedly the catalyst to hasten the economic collapse of the oil-dependent Soviet Union — a move now widely acknowledged as devastating to producers and royalty owners of the United States.

"Pitts' series was the first in-depth analysis by a daily newspaper of the decade-long rumors that resulted in a recent best-selling book, 'Victory,' by Peter Schweizer," Stafford said.

He said his office had received dozens of copies of the series from royalty owner members in the Permian Basin.

"The Pitts coverage was timely investigative journalism of the highest order," Stafford said.

Other past recipients of the Freedom Bell Award for excellence in energy journalism to both print and broadcast media include: Cable News Network (CNN), Rocky Mountain News, Denver Post, Houston Post, New York Times, USA Today, U.S. News and World Report, Dallas Morning News, Associated Press (Dallas Bureau), Kansas City Star, Fort Worth Star-Telegram, and Wall Street Journal.

Senate panel issues scathing report on spy scandal

WASHINGTON (AP) — CIA Director R. James Woolsey's response to the Aldrich Ames spy case has been "seriously inadequate," but his predecessors are ultimately to blame for the scandal, a Senate committee said Tuesday.

In a 117-page report, the Senate Intelligence Committee provided the most detailed description yet published of what it called a "disaster of unprecedented proportions," a setback that will take years to fully recover from.

While stating that Woolsey's disciplinary action against 11 senior managers for their handling of the Ames case was too mild given the seriousness of the problem, the committee made no suggestion that he should resign.

The report said Woolsey should be allowed more time to make the changes he has promised, including measures to strengthen the counterintelligence, or internal spy-catching, function that failed so miserably to detect Ames' treachery.

Noting that Sen. Howard M. Metzenbaum, D-Ohio, is the only member of the Intelligence Committee to publicly call for his resignation, Woolsey said at a news conference in Pittsburgh on Tuesday that he had no intention of quitting.

Woolsey defended his decision to issue letters of reprimand to seven retired and four current CIA managers — but not to fire or demote anyone — for their failure to apply enough resources to the internal hunt for a Soviet mole.

"I believe my decisions were fair and just," Woolsey said. "We should put cases and decisions behind us and move on to the challenges of managing counterintelligence."

The Senate report indirectly challenged Woolsey's stated justification for not taking stronger

Middle East summit produces pledge of economic cooperation

CASABLANCA, Morocco (AP) — Capping three days of unprecedented debates and deal-making among traditional Mideast rivals and enemies, Arab, Israeli and Western leaders agreed Tuesday to form commercial institutions to capitalize on peace.

A regional development bank, tourism board, chamber of commerce and business council are to be established to foster projects discussed here by more than 2,500 business people and government officials.

A permanent secretariat is to be opened in Morocco, host of the inaugural Middle East-North Africa economic summit.

"What you have here is a new kind of Marshall Plan," said Leslie Gelb, president of the Council on Foreign Relations, one of the summit's organizers.

But in contrast to the massive U.S. government aid program to reconstruct postwar Europe, Gelb said, the currrent group of projects to develop the Middle East and North Africa will rely on a private-public sector partnership.

The Casablanca gathering's main achievements were molded in small, casual encounters in the halls of King Hassan II's sumptuous royal palace.

One Israeli manufacturer's representative, Amitai Selbst, said he found Egyptian and Jordanian business people very open to his offers to market Israeli electronics products in their countries.

In his meeting with Saudi Arabians and businessmen from Persian Gulf countries, Selbst said he had to stick to "setting up marketing channels" for U.S. products that he'll later use for Israeli goods "when the time is right."

But the economic summit, which is supposed to be repeated in Amman, Jordan, during the second half of next year, also reflected the continuing divisions in the Middle East.

Absent were representatives of Syria, Lebanon and Iraq. The summit's closing declaration expressed "a strong hope" that the first two will join in regional economic cooperation.

U.S. Secretary of State Warren Christopher and other officials pushed for an end to the Arab League boycott against Israel.

But officials of the Gulf states that have lifted the so-called secondary boycott — a ban on dealing with companies that deal with Israel — still refrained from direct ties.

Qatar's foreign minister, Sheikh Hamed Bin Jassim Bin Jabr Al-Thani, told reporters he had turned down a proposal made to him by Israeli Foreign Minister Shimon Peres for the opening of interest sections.

Bosnian Serbs face heavy government attacks

SARAJEVO, Bosnia-Herzegovina (AP) — Faced with their toughest challenge of the 31-month war, Bosnian Serbs struggled Tuesday to hold ground against heavy government attacks on three fronts.

In what could be a pivotal change, Bosnian Croat militiamen who had stayed out of the recent fighting are mobilizing to support the suddenly successful Muslim-led government forces, a U.N. official said.

The Croat militia's entry into the combat could accelerate the dramatic shift of momentum of the past week, which came as the long-outgunned government army achieved its biggest territorial gains since the war began in April 1992.

A combined Muslim-Croat offensive would be their first major cooperative operation since agreeing in March to form joint armed forces. It would give them an overwhelming manpower advantage over the Serbs.

Claims of territorial gains and casualty figures are difficult to verify. U.N. military personnel and journalists often are denied access to combat areas, and fighting is now spread over numerous, rapidly shifting fronts.

The main arenas of combat Tuesday were in the mountains just south of Sarajevo, around the Serb-held west-central town of Kupres and in northwest Bosnia, where government troops have captured at least 100 square miles in seven days.

Paul Risley, a U.N. spokesman in Zagreb, said the Bosnian Croat militia was deploying troops and heavy weapons south of Kupres, apparently preparing to fight Serb forces already under government attack from the north.

After fighting each other for territory in central and southern Bosnia during most of last year, Bosnian Muslims and Croats agreed in March, at U.S. urging, to form a federation with joint armed forces.

But the Croats largely have been content to watch their allies do the fighting, only occasionally backing them with artillery support.

Kupres is west of an area earlier plagued by bitter fighting between Muslims and Croats. But the large prewar Croatian population — 40 percent — may give the Croats added incentive to pitch in there.

Russian secrecy persists despite democratic advent

By Dave Carpenter
Associated Press

MOSCOW (AP) — When a huge oil spill was revealed in Russia's far north last week, authorities acted swiftly: they limited public information, rejected outside offers of help and insisted everything was fine.

It was a reaction that would have done their Soviet predecessors proud.

Three years after democracy replaced the totalitarianism of the Soviet Union, the spill shows that Russian officials' penchant for secrecy still runs deep.

"The authorities' attitude to secrecy has changed little since the Soviet collapse," said Sergei Grigoryants, a leading dissident of the Soviet era and now a social activist.

The top-secret mentality goes far beyond the spill and starts in the Kremlin itself.

President Boris Yeltsin governs largely by decree, and major policy decisions often are announced in terse, belated faxes to the media.

Even his residence remains a closely guarded secret, despite reports in several Moscow newspapers that he lives in a luxury apartment building in the prestigious western suburb of Krylatskoye.

Still, Russia has changed.

Travel is virtually unrestricted, once-secret cities and military bases can be visited by journalists, and there is little censorship. The Ministry for Emergency Situations, a post-Soviet creation, freely dispenses reliable information on plane crashes, hostage-takings and natural disasters.

Due largely to the government's closed-door tendencies, the capital remains rife with political intrigue and rumors.

A nationwide TV newscast was interrupted last month with a false report that Prime Minister Viktor Chernomyrdin had submitted his resignation to Yeltsin; the president's office didn't bother to deny it until the next day.

Authorities' response to the oil spill in the Komi region, just south of the Arctic Circle, highlighted a particularly Soviet mindset involving the Russian oil industry, the nation's leading source of income.

The government was first notified of the spill on Sept. 17, the newspaper Moskovsky Komsomolets reported Tuesday, but it was not disclosed until a New York Times story last week.

Even after acknowledging the spill was comparable in size to the Exxon Valdez spill in 1989 — the worst in U.S. history — and would take months to clean up, officials said it was not an environmental disaster.

Western reporters said Komi authorities went out of their way to keep them from assessing the accident's full extent. Police barred some journalists from the spill site, citing traffic violations, and at least one oil official reportedly was told not to show reporters around.

Arctic environment suffer s from prolonged leak

By Joseph Albright
Cox News Service

USINSK, Russia — Environmental damage from an Arctic oil leak escalated to dire proportions only after Russian oil bosses — one representing a Canadian-British-Russian venture — refused to shut down a pipeline when it started leaking.

"Naturally, less oil would have been spilled if they had immediately listened to us and shut down the pipeline," said Sergei Zhunyev, this oil town's chief environmental inspector. It was Zhunyev who reported the accident on Aug. 23 after he peered out of a helicopter and saw oil bubbling uncontrollably into a remote swamp.

His account — along with details given by the chief of the Western joint venture — provide the first evidence that oil company executives in this desolate town let a minor accident grow into an international panic.

Russian authorities hid the existence of the spill until it was disclosed by the U.S. Energy Department last week, and reporters here have met a pattern of bureaucratic obstacles from local authorities as they sought to witness the extent of the accident.

Had the pipeline been shut down shortly after the leaks were noticed two months ago, the Arctic river system that runs through the region almost certainly would have escaped this fall's cascade of oil. That smelly flood resulted from a leak that struck the damaged pipeline sector more than a week after the oil company executives rejected the shutdown plea.

In an interview with Cox Newspapers, Zhunyev said the chiefs of about eight companies that ship oil through the pipeline rebuffed the closure request during a secret meeting in the town hall on either Aug. 24 or 25.

The inspector said he sat in on the meeting while Usinsk's acting mayor, Anatoly Zinoviev, delivered the appeal to oil men summoned to hear of a sudden outbreak of pipeline leaks.

One after another, Zhunyev said, the oil men explained that a quick shutoff would harm the future production of their wells and cost the companies desperately needed revenue. Instead, the bosses agreed to pump at a slackened rate while rushing to install a line to bypass the leaky section.

On Aug. 26, the companies shut down 22 of the 5,000-odd wells that contribute oil to the pipeline and slowed the pumping rate in some others. But the pipeline kept flowing, and new breaks kept popping along a 30-mile section of the pipeline.

After the crippled line had been allowed to leak uncontrollably for another 10 days, a final leak occurred near Palnik Shor creek on Sept. 5. It would turn out to be the most devastating, even though it wasn't the biggest spill.

The next day the Russian oil executives received an order from the pipeline company to shut down their oil fields until the damaged five-mile section could be bypassed with a replacement pipe. The line reopened on Sept. 16 and hasn't leaked since.

But when heavy rains swelled river tributaries three weeks later, two impromptu dams built to hold back the oil on Palnik Shor washed away, cascading spilled oil into Russia's Arctic-bound river network.

The total spill was in the range of 10 million gallons of oil, according to an unofficial estimate based on internal figures produced by two of the oil companies about their own oil losses. That would be nearly as large as the volume lost when the Exxon Valdez ran aground off the Alaskan coast in 1989, though that leak had a more immediate effect on the environment since it occurred in open seas.

So far, the bulk of the leaked oil in northern Russia has been contained behind similar makeshift dams on 11 other creeks.

Prince Charles reveals many private stories in biography

By Maureen Johnson
Associated Press

LONDON — Prince Charles forgot to toast President Reagan at a White House dinner. He had a hard time not staring at Joan Collins' cleavage. And Princess Diana confused the pope into thinking she was pregnant.

These are among the anecdotes told by Charles in his authorized biography that went on sale Tuesday. There was no rush to buy. The most controversial parts about being pitched into a loveless marriage and having a mistress were serialized in advance.

However, the 600-page book contains some insights into the private thoughts behind the public smile of the heir to the British throne, who is now visiting Los Angeles.

Charles, who formally separated from Diana nearly two years ago, allowed biographer Jonathan Dimbleby access to thousands of his private diaries and letters.

"The Prince of Wales," published in Britain by Little, Brown and Co. and in the United States on Nov. 29 by William Morrow and Co. Inc., is spattered with direct extracts.

For example, when Charles and Diana arrived to a tumultuous welcome in Washington in November 1985, he felt jet-lagged and exhausted.

At the White House banquet that night, Reagan toasted Diana as "Princess David" before correcting himself.

"Then I had to reply — not feeling up to it at all! I mumbled and fumbled my way through, talking unutterable nonsense and finally sat down in relief, only to find I had forgotten to drink a toast to the President! I got up again!"

After dinner, actor John Travolta danced with Diana and Charles partnered an American ballerina whose name he couldn't remember.

"Sadly, there were no lovely actresses or singers. I had been rather hoping that Diana Ross would be there."

But at a February 1986 ball in Palm Springs, Calif., Charles wasn't disappointed. He danced with Joan Collins.

"She was very amusing and with an unbelievable cleavage (all raised up and presented as if on a tray!), so eye wander was a problem!" he wrote in a letter on the way back to London.

A visit with Diana to the Vatican in April 1985 was always a delicate matter — Charles' mother, Queen Elizabeth II, is temporal head of the Anglican Church of England, which broke with Rome in the 16th century.

During an audience, Charles discussed theological matters and then Diana asked Pope John Paul II about the stomach wound he'd received in a 1983 assassination attempt.

"While asking him she patted her tummy to indicate where he had been shot, but he did not seem to understand ... and replied with a beatific smile that she was the creator of life and seemed to bless her tummy — presumably, Diana surmised, because he mistook her as saying she was pregnant!" Charles wrote.

Charles wrote often of how tough the chat can get.

In hugely rich Brunei for the colony's 1984 independence celebrations, the prince was ushered into a vast room to meet the Sultan, his father and three brothers.

"As always on these occasions I heard myself twittering away, reproducing the most nonsensical rubbish while small gentlemen in white uniforms crawled about on their knees in front of us, pouring out cups of tea."

For the Sultan and his family it was apparently just as bad.

When he signaled he had better go, wrote Charles, "Everyone rose to their feet with an audible sigh of relief."

A weak trough of low pressure in parts of West Texas on Tuesday helped push temperatures in Amarillo and Lubbock to record-tying highs.

Both cities reached 85 degrees, matching records set in 1952 in Amarillo and 1927 at Lubbock International Airport, according to the National Weather Service.

Mostly sunny skies were reported across West Texas with highs generally in the 70s and 80s. Wind was generally south to southwest at 10 mph to 20 mph, while sustained winds of 40 mph were reported in Guadalupe Pass, and gusts to 31 mph were reported in Lubbock.

Today's forecast calls for partly cloudy skies over most of the region, except for partly sunny skies over portions of the Big Bend. A slight chance of rain is possible over parts of West Texas tonight. Highs are expected from the 70s to the 90s with lows mostly in the 40s and 50s.

In North Texas, a wind advisory remained in effect Tuesday evening for western portions of the region. Wind gusts to near 30 mph were common across those parts Tuesday afternoon. Throughout the region, highs were in the 60s and low 70s.

NATION

Rain and thunderstorms extended from Michigan to the East Coast on Tuesday, with violent weather causing damage in Baltimore, and a separate storm spreading snow, heavy rain and high wind across the Northwest.

Windy weather with rain and thunderstorms spread from Lower Michigan to the mid-Atlantic region and New England. Light snow was possible at higher elevations of the central Appalachians during the night, the National Weather Service said.

Severe thunderstorms over Baltimore kicked up wind as high as 60 mph that blew the roofs off more than 100 buildings.

MISD: Board already voted for modified plan

nors (in the original lawsuit that forced desegregation)."

"The Justice Department has said it would rather let every school be a stand-alone school as a magnet system," Hightower said.

School-board president Jackie Hamilton said the modified desegregation plan would be a way for the community to work toward unitary status.

"It would cost a lot of money if we go to court," Ms. Hamilton said. "We are looking at a compromise to work toward unitary status without a long, legal, costly fight."

At Tuesday night's community meeting at Abell Junior High School, Midlander Larry Goodwin, challenged board members Dianne Anderson and Michael Dobey, (representing Districts 7 and 5, respectively) to publicly discuss the costs of seeking unitary status.

Goodwin said that U.S. District Judge Barefoot Sanders has given Dallas Independent School District three years to correct deficiencies that the judge said still exist. The school district has until 1997 to bring all school facilities up to par. The cost to the district's taxpayers has been estimated at $275 million, according to a Dallas Morning News report. The district already has spent $341,000 on attorneys' fees.

Ms. Hamilton said the modified plan has appeal because it would avoid hefty court costs and attorney fees. The board now is paying attorney's fees from reserves.

"As a board we voted, following an executive session, to pursue the objectives," she said. "There are possibly 10 or more schools in the district that are naturally integrated and could be neighborhood schools."

She said Midlanders would have a choice of which schools their children would attend under the modified desegregation plan. "We would give people a choice. They have no choice right now," she said.

If all parties agree, a modified plan would be created by Dec. 5. and would be implemented for the 1995-96 school year.

In order for an MISD modifed desegregatin plan to receive justice department approval, it must:

- Set forth objectives and criteria that will improve desegregation, improve education and assist the district in achieving unitary status.
- Improve instructional continuity for pupils in elementary grades and enhance the long-term stability of desegregated schools.
- Reduce the proportion of students who are assigned to schools on a mandatory basis, increase the proportion of students who receive schools of choice, and to allocate both opportunity and burden associated with student assignment across the racial groups on an equitable basis.
- Maintain the current level of desegregation and —— to the extent practicable —— increase desegregation.
- Incorporate steps to improve the quality of education for pupils of all races, including African Americans and Hispanics.
- Expand parent involvement in the schools and programs.
- Staff the schools with racially representative staffs.
- Improve racial equality in student achievement and participation.
- Assure quality implementation.

Ms. Hamilton said any proposed school systems that meet the objectives will be brought before the public at community meetings.

PEROT: Dallas billionaire endorses Richards

a Richards victory. To help her claim it, he said Tuesday, he will star in radio commercials for Richards. "She is smart, tough and principled," he said.

United We Stand, the political group that was a successor to Perot's presidential candidacy, said the endorsement was his alone.

Becky Bates, assistant to the executive director for the Texas office of United We Stand, said the group has voted to decide which candidate to endorse. The tallies will be released Friday.

"It may be different, it may be the same," Ms. Bates said.

"People have always thought the membership would kowtow to Mr. Perot. We would like people to know we're individual voters and thinkers," she said.

Although Richards worked strongly for passage of the North American Free Trade Agreement — with which Perot sharply disagreed — the businessman said that didn't matter in this election.

"There are two horses in the race. Both of them are for NAFTA ... there's no contest who's the best horse," he said.

In 1992, Perot had been harsh in his criticism of President Bush, but he denied there was any spillover from that race into his endorsement of Richards over Bush's eldest son.

"No sour grapes. No basis for that conjecture," he said. "I'm a longtime Ann Richards fan. I voted for Ann the first time around."

Bush said in a statement, "Ross Perot and Ann Richards are both interesting characters, but the people of Texas are not going to vote for governor based on personality or endorsements. ... Ross Perot and I disagreed in 1992 and I'm not surprised we disagree in 1994."

Bush said he was not surprised by the endorsement or worried that it would change the outcome of the election.

"If he were the only vote out there, I'd lose one to nothing, but he's not," he said.

Perot called Richards "the steel magnolia of Texas" and praised her independence. "She is a true independent who doesn't bow to the Democratic Party, Washington or any other special interest," he said.

He poked fun at her opponent's business record, likening Bush to a neighbor who has no experience as a plumber but would like to "fool with" your broken pipes.

Richards, he said, is up to the job.

"When the tough, unsolvable challenges come in, Ann Richards does not run, duck and hide. She faces them head-on like a good Texas bulldogger, and she wrestles them to the ground," he said.

Richards, who is locked in a close race with Bush, said she waited until now to ask for his endorsement because she feels her campaign has turned the corner.

"I had a feeling about 10 days ago that we began to turn the corner," Richards said. "It's just a feeling I had getting out with people. A lot of things started to come together. You just started to see it happen."

Campaigning earlier in San Marcos, she implored fellow Democrats to get out and vote.

After a rally on the lawn of the Hays County Courthouse, she said, "I'm very cautiously optimistic. But I think we've got a good chance to win it."

In a series of fiery stump speeches the past week, Richards had challenged Bush's qualifications and accused him of distorting her record.

Bush touted a survey of prosecutors who described the state's new penal code as useless against crime, saying it validated his opinion that the penal code is weak.

SPY: Report criticizes CIA director Woolsey

disciplinary action, namely that an extensive investigation by the CIA's inspector general found no gross negligence.

The Senate report, by contrast, said all 17 committee members agreed that there was gross negligence "both individually and institutionally, in creating and perpetuating the environment in which Ames was able to carry out his espionage."

None of the individuals alluded to was identified by name, although in another section of the Senate report several former senior executives were blamed for not reacting strongly enough when it became known in late 1985 and early 1986 that foreign agents working for the CIA in the former Soviet Union and in Eastern Europe were being compromised, and in some cases executed as traitors.

The CIA has said at least 10 of its agents abroad were executed.

Ames, who was arrested last February and sentenced last April to life in prison, has admitted he sold U.S. national security secrets to Moscow for more than eight years, starting in 1985. He was a 31-year veteran of the spy agency.

Sen. Dennis DeConcini, D-Ariz., chairman of the Intelligence Committee, said in an interview that Woolsey should not be blamed for the Ames scandal, even if his response to it has so far fallen short of what the Congress would like.

"Where Woolsey has failed is in implementing changes that might mitigate against this happening in the future," DeConcini said.

The CIA realized as early as the fall of 1985 that it was losing Soviet sources. William Casey, then the CIA director, ordered an unidentified senior official to look into the problem. By fall 1986 an internal CIA report said 45 Soviet and East European cases had been compromised.

The report said an intense and focused "mole hunt" did not get under way until 1991.

SITE: Crews reach wreckage, search for clues

holding pattern for 32 minutes Monday when controllers granted it clearance to descend from 10,000 to 8,000 feet. said National Transportation Safety Board Chairman Jim Hall.

But then the air traffic controllers in Aurora, Ill., asked the plane to stay in the pattern for another 10 minutes. One of the pilots acknowledged the request by saying, "thank you."

"This is the last contact the crew had with the tower," Hall told a media briefing Tuesday night.

Three minutes later, the plane dropped off radar screens and slammed into a field. Witnesses said it gave off a high-pitched whine of engines at full throttle as it streaked to the ground in a driving rain en route to Chicago's O'Hare Airport from Indianapolis.

Hall said two in-flight weather advisories had been issued for light to moderate turbulence and light to moderate icing, and officials are checking the voice data recorder to determine if those warnings were received.

Wind gusted to 49 mph in Gary, 30 miles north, at the time of the crash, but Hall said the weather alone couldn't explain it.

"Airplanes operate every day in this type of weather," he told ABC earlier. "We'll have to look to see whether there were any unusual weather occurrences that might cause the result."

Investigators have interviewed five witnesses to the crash, as well as eight people who heard the plane go down, Hall said. They also plan to talk with other pilots who flew through the area Monday.

One pilot told controllers that ice formed on his plane while flying through the same storm that Flight 4184 encountered, The Dallas Morning News reported today, citing a source close to the investigation.

At the crash scene Tuesday, crews built a gravel road across a boggy soybean field to help investigators reach bodies and clues. Investigators needed the 200-yard trail to overcome mud too deep even for four-wheel drive vehicles.

NTSB spokesman Ted Lopatkiewicz refused to speculate on the cause of the crash. One witness said he saw the almost-new twin-engine propjet plunge toward the ground with a wing sheared off; Lopatkiewicz said he had no comment on that report.

Searchers found the plane's cockpit voice recorder and flight data recorder. Both were sent to Washington for analysis.

The barren field where the plane went down "smelled like a butcher shop," said Les Smith, who lives nearby. Searchers who made it through the muck on foot soon after the crash described small chunks of smashed airplane and pieces of bodies. The largest piece of plane was a 6-to-8-foot section of the tail.

"What we did see, we didn't like," said firefighter John Knapp.

"There's not one body that's intact," said another firefighter, Jerry Cramer.

Gov. Evan Bayh stammered as he described what he saw from a helicopter. "There is a small crater there and the wreckage is strewn in a fairly close radius around the impact site," he said. "The destruction is complete."

The gymnasium of North Newton High School, 15 miles from the crash site, was at firs. designated a morgue and officials planned to cancel classes for at least a week. They later decided to use a National Guard armory as the morgue to avoid disrupting the students' lives.

Officials hadn't begun removing bodies by evening.

It could take a week to a month to recover all bodies and debris, state police Sgt. Jerry Parker said.

The French- and Italian-built Super ATR plane was registered in March and had experienced no problems through September, except a broken floor light, according to FAA records.

A 1989 Chevrolet pickup, driven by 45-year-old Miguel Madrid, was traveling behind the Oldsmobile, and, according to witnesses, took evasive action to the left, Garcia said. The pickup then struck the car in the right back quarter.

Walker, 33-year-old Glen Ledford — a passenger in the city truck — and Madrid did not sustain injuries.

"Officers are still talking to witnesses and the investigation is ongoing," Garcia said. "Right now, it looks like everyone tried to take evasive action to avoid the accident."

No charges have been filed in the incident.

Corrections

By the time of the Nov. 8 election, in the race for the 23 Congressional District seat, Rep. Henry B. Gonzalez, Treasury Secretary Lloyd Bentsen, Housing and Urban Development Secretary Henry Cisneros and former Gov. Dolph Briscoe all will have appeared for challenger Rolando Rios — not Rep. African hope centers on Mozambique, Angola

By John Daniszewski

■ Analysis

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — A peace settlement is struck in Angola, and a rebel leader says he will accept electoral defeat in Mozambique.

These two events, separated by only days, could mark a turning point in Africa — putting the southern third of the continent solidly on the path to peace and democracy.

Africa, for those who can turn their attention away from the tragedy of Rwanda and Somalia, is trying against the odds to break out of the stereotype of misery.

The civil wars in Mozambique and Angola were two of the longest and bloodiest of the century. Between them, there were more than three decades of fighting and well over 1 million people killed.

Granted independence from Portugal at the same time in 1975, Angola, on the west coast of Africa, and Mozambique, on the east, were plunged almost immediately into civil war.

Foreign countries including Rhodesia, South Africa and the United States sponsored rightist rebels against Marxist regimes backed by Moscow. Arms poured in and the countries were devastated, but the balance of power was such that no one side could eliminate the other.

The end of the Cold War in Europe in 1989 set the stage for international mediation that led to elections in Angola in 1992 and in Mozambique last week.

Mozambique's election came off peacefully Thursday, Friday and Saturday. A boycott called by rebel leader Afonso Dhlakama briefly sent a shudder through the ranks of international monitors, before he bowed to their pressure and the reality that his nation is too poor and exhausted for another round of war.

This week, signs are that he will accept electoral defeat and possibly a government post under his erstwhile enemy, President Joaquim Chissano.

Angola was not so fortunate. After losing the popular vote in 1992, Jonas Savimbi led his guerrillas back into battle. A pointless two more years of war ensued, but now he too seems ready to accept the inevitable peace.

German police capture robbers and end chase

HEISTERBERG, Germany (AP) — The two fugitives said they just wanted to get somewhere warm — like Spain, or France.

They gave it their best effort: a bank robbery using policemen as shields, seven hostages, five getaway cars, and a more than 800-mile chase through six German states.

But less than two days later, both were in police custody.

The case was a test for German television, which agreed after a similar drama in August 1988 not to interview kidnappers in the act.

The country's two main television networks and most major newspapers observed the agreement this time — even after the outlaws commandeered a car from a television cameraman.

Cable TV and tabloid newspaper reporters did, however, take advantage of the cameraman's car phone to conduct interviews as the fugitives sped along the autobahn, pursued by police sedans, vans and helicopters.

But the chase never got the minute-by-minute play that accompanied O.J. Simpson along the southern California freeway. Most coverage was confined to regularly scheduled newscasts.

The convicts said they had machine pistols and a grenade and would blow up themselves and their hostages unless police kept back.

"You can take us out, it's all the same to me, because I've got nothing to lose. Same for my friend," said one.

They said they wanted to go someplace warm, like Spain or France, and hadn't planned to commit crimes after escaping from prison.

Officers ringed Heisterberg, a lakeside hamlet north of Frankfurt, after the convicts abandoned their black Mercedes Benz and freed their last hostages Tuesday.

Gerhard Polak, 35, a convicted Swiss extortionist, was found Tuesday afternoon hiding in underbrush. Polak was carrying a knapsack containing a dummy hand grenade and loot from the previous day's bank robbery.

He also had a handgun and a machine pistol.

Convicted murderer Raymond Albert, 32, a former member of an elite unit of the East German army, surrendered to police in the same area several hours later after he drew their attention by shooting in the air.

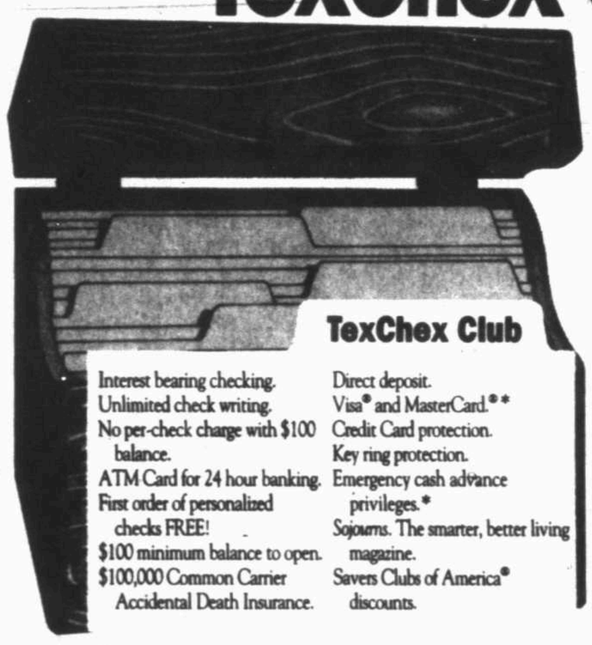

Police spokesman Kurt Maier said Albert offered no resistance. Police had earlier stopped looking for the man because of darkness, but had kept the area surrounded by 300 officers.

Police said they were still checking the identity of the man who surrendered, but German television said it was the second gunman.

Albert had been sentenced to life in prison for strangling a tavern owner and cutting off the man's head. Reports that Albert used a machete in the 1991 murder could not be confirmed.

CNN receives contempt conviction for airing Noriega recordings

MIAMI (AP) — CNN was convicted Tuesday of contempt of court and could be fined up to $100,000 for airing recordings of Manuel Noriega's jailhouse phone conversations with his lawyers.

U.S. District Judge William Hoeveler found the network guilty of willfully violating his 1990 order against broadcasting the calls, which had been taped as a matter of routine by the U.S. Bureau of Prisons.

"I am ever mindful of the importance of an essentially unfettered press and the mandates of the First Amendment, but I must also be mindful of the vital importance of compliance with orders of the court," Hoeveler said.

The judge scheduled a hearing for Dec. 9 to decide on a fine for CNN.

"We continue to believe we acted properly and we are reviewing the decision to determine whether to appeal," CNN spokesman Steve Haworth said. He wouldn't comment further.

Frank Rubino, a lawyer for the former Panamanian dictator, said Hoeveler made the right decision after weighing the right to a free press against the right to a fair trial.

"There wasn't a need to play those calls," Rubino said. "The reporting could have been done without playing the calls."

CNN broadcast segments of the tapes 11 times over two days, even after Hoeveler learned of their planned broadcast and warned any use of the tapes would violate his order.

The network argued during a four-day trial in September that it was legally entitled to broadcast the tapes, which had been leaked, and that it had a journalistic responsibility to do so to show what it said was government misconduct for taping the calls in the first place.

The calls were taped while Noriega was awaiting trial on charges of cocaine trafficking. He was convicted and sentenced to 40 years in prison. Prosecutors denied having access to the calls.

Hoeveler said it was "interesting" that while the network contended his order was unclear, it accurately reported on the order at the time.

News of crash makes travelers nervous

CHICAGO (AP) — It was neither the smallest plane in the sky nor the oldest. Indeed, American Eagle Flight 4184 was an almost new twin-engine propjet packed with 64 passengers and four crew members.

Such assurances meant little on Tuesday, however, for fliers who depend on short-distance planes like the European-made craft that plunged into a muddy soybean field in a blinding rain the afternoon before.

All aboard were killed, and the disaster was clearly on the minds of several jittery passengers in waiting lounges at O'Hare International Airport.

"I tell you, when I read the headlines this morning, I was pretty leery about coming today," Cathy Baldwin, a 27-year-old insurance broker said on a stopover, heading home to Michigan from North Carolina.

"There's too much motion on those commuter planes. The roller coaster feeling makes me afraid. I hate that," she added. "I definitely get very anxious."

While some aviation experts caution that bigger is not necessarily better when judging airplane safety, the American Eagle crash cannot help but raise new questions about the safety of the smaller planes that carry tens of millions of passengers each year.

The doomed plane, a Super ATR built just seven months ago by a French-Italian consortium, was actually governed by the same strict federal rules that apply to the major carriers, rather than those for commuter lines, because of its size.

The rules for the big airlines, known as Part 121, apply to all planes that have more than 30 seats. Planes that carry fewer than 30 passengers operate under less stringent rules, known as Part 135.

> 'There's too much motion on those commuter planes. The roller coaster feeling makes me afraid. I hate that. I definitely get very anxious.'
> — Cathy Baldwin, insurance broker

"We make those (121) standards. We exceed those standards," said Robert Crandall, chief executive officer of American Airlines, a sister carrier of American Eagle. The parent company for both lines is AMR Corp., based in Fort Worth, Texas.

The crash nevertheless comes at a time when the commuter airline industry is booming — regional airlines carried 53 million passengers in 1993 compared with 22 million a decade earlier — and facing increased scrutiny, since 70 percent of those passengers fly on planes of 30 seats or fewer.

By mid-month, the National Transportation Safety Board is expected to release results of a five-month-long safety study of the commuter industry.

The study follows two commuter catastrophes: last December's crash of a Northwest Airlink plane in dense fog near Hibbing, Minn., that killed 18 people and the January crash near Columbus, Ohio, of a United Express flight in which five died.

Without waiting for the study, however, some aviation experts are already arguing that the two-tiered system is unsafe and inadequate, and they have numbers.

In 1993, for example, commuter airlines had .509 accidents per 100,000 departures, compared with .297 for major airlines, according to the NTSB.

"There is a legitimate worry if an airplane is conforming to just (Part) 135 standards," said Mike Overly, editor of Aviation Safety Monitor, a monthly newsletter published in Worthington, Ohio. "You don't have the same equipment. You don't have the same crew training. You don't have the same crew rest hours."

Under Part 121, pilots may not fly more than 30 hours in seven consecutive days; pilots of planes smaller than 30 seats can go up to 34 hours.

Major airlines have been dropping jet service on shorter, money-losing routes and turning over more of the flying to smaller partners. Regional airlines typically have lower costs and stand a better chance of making a profit on those routes.

"Commuters are popular," Overly said. "We don't begrudge them. We simply ask for the same level of safety. Currently there is not."

But other experts say this crash has caused undue alarm and exaggerates the mistaken fears that smaller planes are less safe.

"The problem we have is too much hysteria," said Michael Boyd, president of Aviation Systems Research Corp., a Colorado-based research and consulting firm. "The commuter airlines flying in the U.S. are as safe as you're ever going to get them."

Boyd acknowledged there are differences between commuter airlines and major carriers, especially with crews.

Election '94 produces strange candidates

By Mitchell Landsberg
AP National Writer

Things are getting strange out on the campaign trail.

A Hawaiian congressional candidate has vanished. A bank robber is running for the Legislature in Montana. A dead man is likely to be re-elected in West Virginia.

And around the country, more than one candidate is making this promise: "Elect me. I'll resign."

Putting aside the serious issues in next Tuesday's election — whether more Bush offspring will be elected than Kennedys; whether Californians will make their state nanny-free — 1994 has had more than its share of political oddities.

Take Alaska. (Please.) While voters there have been enthralled by the quadrennial debate over whether to move the state capital from Juneau to someplace colder, a real issue has taken root in the race for governor.

Republican Jim Campbell, who is partly bald (this is actually relevant), is attacking Democrat Tony Knowles for, among other things, having "good hair" like President Clinton.

Does this mean that Knowles gets his hair cut on airport runways by someone named Christophe? That hasn't emerged as an issue so far; this being politics, it's probably too early to rule it out.

Nor has Knowles retaliated yet by comparing Campbell to former President Ford. There's time for that, too.

From Alaska to Alabama, negative campaigning is the favored tactic this year. But some candidates are willing to balance the attacks with some references to their own qualifications.

For instance, Joseph Brennan, a Democratic candidate for governor in Maine, says he has "more experience with firearms than any other gubernatorial candidate."

Specifically, Brennan, an Army veteran, has attested to his competence with machine guns and bazookas.

This has prompted some chuckling in Maine — cartoons of Brennan in full combat regalia and so forth. But seriously, with weapons like that, who needs the line-item veto?

There is one tactic taking hold this year that is harder to categorize as negative or positive. What do you say about someone who promises to quit if elected?

There are several of these kamikaze candidacies around the country. In Sheridan County, Mont., Mary Nielsen is running for assessor with the slogan: "Elect me. I'll resign."

There is some logic to this. The Montana Legislature abolished the duties of county assessors last year, but Sheridan County missed the deadline for abolishing the post locally.

Nielsen, a Republican, says she could save the county $117,000 in salary and benefits over her four-year non-term.

In Texas, State Treasurer Martha Whitehead is looking to abolish not only her job, but her entire agency.

Thunderstorm causes much damage in North

BALTIMORE (AP) — A thunderstorm with winds up to 60 mph smashed cars, downed trees and tore the roofs off scores of rowhouses in two inner-city neighborhoods Tuesday.

One woman said her daughter was struck by flying glass, but no other injuries were reported. About 150 homes were damaged.

The storm also caused lesser damage to several suburban counties.

Witnesses said they spotted a funnel cloud. "It was twirling," said Brenda Hillard. The National Weather Service, which said winds were clocked as high as 60 mph, did not confirm a tornado had struck.

"It was just like a big explosion — like the end of the world," said Angela Jones, who was in her kitchen with friends when the roof blew off their apartment building. They took refuge in the basement.

About 150 homes were damaged, including at least 50 that lost their roofs, said city Housing Authority spokesman Zack Germroth. Eighty to 100 people were left homeless, he said.

Some people were temporarily sheltered in a bus while authorities tried to find a place for them to stay. The Red Cross opened several shelters in schools.

In a four-block area west of downtown, roofs were blown off, walls collapsed and windows were broken in scores of houses, many of them vacant.

"This is one of the few times when we are fortunate that we have quite a few vacant homes here," said Mayor Kurt Schmoke.

In a five-block area north of downtown, at least 25 rowhouses lost their roofs. Streets were littered with tar paper, wood and bricks as well as glass from house and car windows.

Officials concerned about looting assigned extra police patrols to the areas, and firefighters searched through the rubble to make sure no one was trapped underneath.

James Milton Roberts, who was driving an empty school bus when the sky turned black, said debris shattered his windshield and he took refuge behind empty seats.

"All I could see was debris coming toward the bus," he said.

The storm also downed trees and power lines and damaged buildings in Anne Arundel and Carroll counties.

"All we know is that there were several houses that were affected," said Rosemary Brewster, a dispatcher for the Anne Arundel County Police Department.

In Howard County, residents reported snow and golf ball-sized hail, and small hail and 40-mph winds were reported in Wicomico County.

About 64,000 Baltimore Gas & Electric customers lost power, and about 18,000 were still without service Tuesday night, said spokesman Charlie Franklin.

Billy Graham gives approval to interracial marriages

CHARLOTTE, N.C. (AP) — There is nothing in the Bible prohibiting interracial marriages, says the Rev. Billy Graham. At the same time, he wouldn't recommend it for his own children.

"I don't see anything Biblically wrong with interracial marriage — there is nothing in the Bible to forbid it," Graham said through a spokesman. "It comes down to a practical matter in today's culture."

Graham was asked about interracial marriages by The Charlotte Observer following the Charlotte-born evangelist's comments about integration in the November issue of Life magazine. Graham apparently had not made his views about the most intimate of race relations known before being asked, his spokesman said Tuesday.

"Integration is the only solution," Graham said in the eight-page magazine article. "We've got to be totally integrated — in our homes, in our worship services, even in marriage."

In a part of his interview with Life that did not make the magazine, Graham reminisced about his friendship with civil rights activist Dr. Martin Luther King and the time the two men discussed interracial marriage.

Graham described their talk through his spokesman.

"I asked my good friend Dr. Martin Luther King whether he would let one of his daughters marry a white man," Graham said. "He said: 'No I would not, but for a different reason. I have to think in terms of their children, and I'd advise them not to, in our culture.'

"... And I think that's my position," Graham said.

Rice University religion Professor William Martin, who wrote a biography of Graham titled "A Prophet With Honor," said Graham has been moving in this direction for some time.

"The remarkable thing about him," said Martin, "is his life is becoming more and more inclusive."

NASA launches satellite, clears way for shuttle

By Mark Carreau
Houston Chronicle

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. — NASA launched a $173 million solar science satellite early Tuesday, clearing a potential obstacle to liftoff this week of the shuttle Atlantis on an 11-day environmental research mission.

The Wind spacecraft, developed to spend at least three years measuring the velocity and electrical energy of the solar wind as it collides with the Earth's magnetosphere, soared from Cape Canaveral Air Force Station aboard a Delta II expendable rocket at 4:31 a.m. EST.

Its departure freed up ground-based, Air Force radar tracking equipment for the shuttle mission.

Atlantis and its crew of six are to blast off from the National Aeronautics and Space Administration's Kennedy Space Center on Thursday at 11:56 a.m. EST, the start of a 62-minute launching period.

"Overall, the countdown is proceeding very well," said Debbie Frostrom, one of the NASA test directors supervising shuttle countdown activities.

While orbiting, Atlantis commander Don McMonagle and his crew plan to aim a $120 million observatory in the shuttle's cargo bay into the Earth's atmosphere to measure dozens of man-made and naturally occurring chemicals associated with the destruction of the Earth's protective ozone layer.

Stratospheric ozone provides Earth with a natural barrier against the sun's ultraviolet radiation, which is harmful to both animal and plant life. Other instruments will measure solar energy levels reaching the Earth.

Specifically, the shuttle observatory and a second satellite-borne observatory the astronauts plan to deploy and retrieve will attempt to document how the near-record ozone hole that formed over the South Pole this winter mends as temperatures rise in the Southern Hemisphere.

Measurements of ozone loss will be made in the Northern Hemisphere, where the atmosphere is making a transition from summer to winter.

A range of other experiments are planned. Ten pregnant rats, to give birth when the flight ends, will fly on the mission, so researchers can study the influence of weightlessness on mammalian bone and muscle development.

As McMonagle and pilot Curt Brown rendezvous with the 4-ton satellite observatory near the end of the mission, they will test a new procedure that astronauts plan to use in June when they dock with the Russian Mir space station for the first time.

NAACP lays off employees in attempt to deal with budget deficit

BALTIMORE (AP) — The NAACP sent home all of its approximately 90 employees this week as it struggled with a $3.5 million deficit that was blamed on former executive director Benjamin Chavis.

The overall layoff order was for a week, although some employees will be out of work longer, officials said.

"I'm not sure how many people after the furlough that we will call back. I hope we will be able to bring all of the employees back, but there will be some decisions we will have to make," said interim administrator Fred Rasheed.

Many of the staffers are planning to work without pay so the nation's oldest civil rights group won't shut down, said Joseph Madison, a Washington radio personality and NAACP board member.

In addition to its crushing deficit, the organization has been spending about $40,000 a day while bringing in only $15,000 a day, Rasheed said. The layoffs should save about $250,000, he said.

The NAACP has "overextended itself over several years and created a deficit," Rasheed said.

"We cannot continue to operate as we have in the past," he said. "We have to stabilize the financial situation of the organization and then build on that and move forward."

NAACP board members have accused Chavis of running up the deficit. Chavis has said he inherited the debt from his predecessor, Benjamin Hooks, who has denied that.

Chavis was ousted in August after it was disclosed he had agreed without the board's knowledge to pay $332,000 in NAACP money to settle sexual discrimination allegations brought by a former employee.

In September, the organization laid off seven employees indefinitely and told about 75 others making more than $22,000 a year to take 10 days off by mid-December, said Earl Shinhoster, interim executive director. Those 75 were laid off for an additional five days this week.

Sixteen employees who make $22,000 or less were furloughed for two weeks beginning this week, Shinhoster said.

The layoffs will affect at least 80 employees in the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People's national headquarters in Baltimore and seven regional offices throughout the country, Madison said.

The NAACP has regional offices in Atlanta, Baltimore, Dallas, Detroit, Los Angeles, New York and St. Louis.

"This is a very drastic move," Madison said. "This isn't a move anybody would take lightly."

Madison said an executive committee member told him the committee made the decision during a telephone conference over the weekend.

The board recently ordered an audit of spending by its officers, including Chavis and NAACP Chairman William Gibson, since 1989. Madison said a preliminary review of the NAACP's finances probably led to the layoffs.

Defense attempts to stall psychiatric evaluation of White House gunman

WASHINGTON (AP) — The man accused of shooting at the White House refused to go on with a cursory pre-trial mental evaluation Tuesday after his attorney began filing motions trying to stop it.

But that legal effort failed, and prosecutors suggested the evaluation would be completed Wednesday morning and be available for a preliminary hearing later in the day.

Leigh Kenny, the public defender for Francisco Martin Duran, filed an emergency motion to U.S. Magistrate Deborah Robinson asking to delay the exam until after the preliminary hearing. After Robinson denied the motion, Kenny immediately appealed to Chief Judge John Garrett Penn of the U.S. District Court, who also denied it.

At the hearing before Penn, Assistant U.S. Attorney John Facciola said a psychiatrist had started to examine Duran but the 26-year-old defendant refused to go on.

■ White House shooting update: Call Cityline 560-2400, enter 6201

"She spoke to Mr. Duran," Facciola said of the psychiatrist. "He said that in light of the action by his counsel he would not speak to her."

Prosecutors had asked for the evaluation to determine whether Duran was competent to aid in his defense.

They said a letter taken from Duran's pickup truck "raises questions whether he is competent" to continue in the legal process. The letter was not released.

Duran is charged with four felonies in Saturday's semiautomatic rifle attack on the White House. Some 20 to 30 shots were fired, but no one was injured. Bystanders tackled Duran.

Duran, in the courtroom during Tuesday's colloquy, was not asked to speak and did not do so.

In Colorado, a former co-worker of Duran's at the Broadmoor Hotel told The Associated Press in a telephone interview that Duran had talked with him several times about plans to shoot President Clinton.

"I didn't think he was serious," said David Millis, 20. "I thought he was full of hot air."

The charges against Duran do not include attempting to kill the president.

"He used to come over to my house and he used to talk a lot about the government, how it had screwed him over ... and stuff like assassinating the president," Millis said. His account also was scheduled to air Tuesday night, for pay, on the television program "A Current Affair."

Meanwhile, President Clinton, asked about the shootings Tuesday, said he and his family planned no big changes to increase security. But he said, "We will be prudent, we will be safe."

The gunman "was obviously trying to do something to draw attention to himself, not trying to hurt us," Clinton said in a telephone interview with WPRO in Providence, R.I.

"I didn't think he was serious. I thought he was full of hot air.'

— David Millis, former co-worker of Duran's

Robinson had scheduled the Wednesday hearing to decide whether to send Duran for a 30-day mental examination before the preliminary hearing.

If convicted of all counts, he could be sentenced to as much as 35 years in prison and a fine of $1 million.

Kenny had asked the magistrate to bar the psychiatric examiner from asking Duran about Saturday's events. She also had asked to be nearby during the examination.

"The court has no power to order such an examination unless and until the prosecution proves probable cause," Kenny argued in her motion.

But the prosecutors contended they had probable cause to arrest Duran and hold him for three days. They said the exam would take far less time than that.

If Robinson does not order the 30-day examination, she is expected to hold two concurrent hearings: a preliminary hearing to determine whether there is sufficient evidence for lodging charges against Duran and a detention hearing to decide whether it is appropriate to keep Duran confined until trial.

Parents urge missing children: 'Be brave'

UNION, S.C. (AP) — A couple whose two young sons vanished a week ago in an alleged carjacking made another appeal for clues Tuesday as calls to a tip line began to slow.

"It is a nightmare that seems to have no end," Susan and David Smith said in a statement.

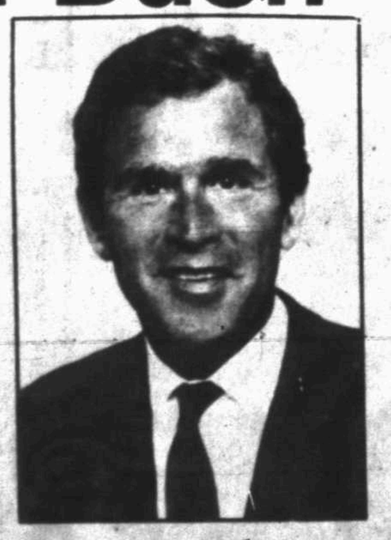

Despite a nationwide manhunt and international publicity about the case, investigators said they have come up with no firm leads.

Three-year-old Michael and 14-month-old Alex Smith have not been seen since Oct. 25, when Mrs. Smith reported that a man jumped in her car, made her drive a few miles, then ordered her out at gunpoint. She said the man drove off with the boys still strapped in their safety seats.

In a message to the children themselves, the couple said: "You both have to be brave and you must hold onto each other because we are doing everything in our power to get you home where you belong. We love you!"

Ms. Gregory, asked about the couple's response to public speculation that the case could be a hoax, replied, "They try to avoid listening to a lot of the innuendo that has been in the media. ... Rumors are exactly that, rumors."

GM tries to halt safety hearing on older trucks

N.Y. Times News Service

In an unusual move, General Motors Corp. has asked the Department of Transportation to call off a scheduled public hearing over the safety of millions of older pickup trucks made by GM and seek a recall, a move that will cause a court confrontation.

The move is apparently an effort by General Motors, the nation's largest automaker, to avoid more bad publicity about the trucks, which the department recently ruled were defective and fire prone, as well as to force the government's recall effort into court, where some lawyers and consumer advocates believe the company may well prevail.

Bill Schulz, a Transportation Department spokesman, said Tuesday that he had no comment on the request, which came in a letter Monday by Thomas A. Gottschalk, GM's general counsel.

"We are in the process of reviewing the letter," Schulz said, adding that no car manufacturer had previously asked to forgo a public hearing, a procedural step that precedes a final decision by the government to recall a vehicle.

'In this case, we are dealing with vehicles with a long history of fatalities and serious injuries.'

Stephen H. Kaplan
the Transportation Department's general counsel

The vehicles at issue are all full-sized Chevrolet and GMC pickup trucks made from 1973 to 1987.

Upon learning Tuesday of GM's request, some consumer advocates were quick to denounce it as a move to deprive the public of its rights.

Clarence Ditlow, executive director of the Center for Auto Safety, a consumer group based in Washington, said his group intended to bring burn victims to the December hearings and to use them to bring out new information about the trucks' dangers. "These hearings are going to be a bloodbath for GM," he said.

A General Motors spokesman said the company had made its request because it believed that its legal position was strong. But he acknowledged that the company also believed that the hearings could be a public relations debacle.

In an apparent effort to hold out a carrot to the government, Gottschalk, the GM lawyer, said the company would agree to freeze its rights under federal recall laws should officials mandate a recall. Under federal law, a manufacturer need only repair a vehicles produced in the last eight years, a clock that is rapidly running down in the case of the GM pickups.

Some industry analysts have estimated that it could cost General Motors about $1 billion to repair the estimated 4.5 to 6 million trucks still on the road.

The General Motors request comes at a time when controversy is still simmering over Pena's decision to proceed with the pickup trucks case. In doing so, he overruled the views of technical investigators and the acting head of the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration.

Last November, they told him they believed that the GM case should be closed because of their findings that the trucks did not pose an unreasonable risk.

As a result, Pena may face the prospect of having government employees called as witnesses on behalf of the automaker if the case proceeds to court as expected. And government lawyers acknowledged in interviews that they treading on little-tested legal grounds in the case.

Pena has declined, as a matter of policy, to respond to questions about the GM case. But Stephen H. Kaplan, the Transportation Department's general counsel, said in a recent interview that he believed that the government had a good case, adding that the secretary differed with his advisers only on the scope of the dangers posed by the GM trucks.

"In this case, we are dealing with vehicles with a long history of fatalities and serious injuries," he said.

Cadets accuse players of harassment

WEST POINT, N.Y. (AP) — Moving swiftly to avoid comparisons to the Tailhook scandal, the U.S. Military Academy is investigating five football players who allegedly groped 15 female cadets during a pep rally.

Eighteen women in all told investigators they were brushed across the breasts as they and other cadets ran past a cordon of West Point players during the Oct. 20 "spirit run," held two days before the team played The Citadel.

Three of those women said they believed the touching was accidental.

The players' punishment could include a three-month suspension from the team, more than 90 hours' marching punishment, demerits and 90 days' restriction to post.

West Point commanders and the academy's top-ranking female cadet, Deputy Brigade Commander Stephanie Arnold, said the inquiry bears no comparison to the Navy's Tailhook scandal, in which dozens of women were molested by drunken aviators who formed a gantlet in a hotel hallway during a 1991 convention in Las Vegas.

"We are very sensitive about Tailhook and what we've learned from it," Lt. Gen. Howard D. Graves, superintendent of the U.S. Military Academy, said Tuesday. "This is not another Tailhook. This is vastly different. These were students meeting to have a spirit-enhancing event. There was no alcohol involved. It was not repetitive."

Arnold, the second-highest-ranking cadet at West Point, said she was surprised by the incident because the academy has had an excellent record of promoting harmony between men and women during her four years.

"It's not something anyone's taking lightly," Arnold, 21, a senior from Franklin, Ohio, said Tuesday. "People are not happy with what happened. They're disgusted.

"But the fact that everyone knows what's going on, the reaction has been very positive in that light. The people it happened to used the chain of command. There's nothing hidden. No one's trying to keep any knowledge away from anyone."

The academy ordered the investigation after three women complained they were fondled during the spirit run.

Fifty-one women were among the 600 cadets who took part in the run, a 3-year-old practice that was suspended after the incident. About 200 varsity and junior varsity football players were part of the cordon, Graves said.

Of the five players under investigation, three came forward and said they had brushed against the women inadvertently. The two others were turned in by their teammates. The women have not been able to identify the offending players.

Graves did not disclose the names of the football players or the women who complained. Cadets said they were confident no players would be given preferential treatment.

"This is going to be dealt with uniformly. They could be the greatest five football players on the Army team or the last five cadets in the class. They're going to be dealt with the same," said senior Jim McDermott, 22, of Arlington, Texas.

"This is such a discouraging event because it's the exception," Graves said. "We had 200 football players in the cordon, and only three to five have misbehaved."

There are 4,000 cadets, including 600 women, at the academy about 60 miles north of New York City.

School violence prevalent in America, study claims

WASHINGTON (AP) — School violence in the past year killed or seriously injured students in 41 percent of big American cities surveyed, the National League of Cities said Tuesday. "School's getting rough," said the league.

Of 700 cities responding to a survey covering August and September, 38 percent said there had been a noticeable increase in school violence over the past five years. Seventeen percent said violence had gone down or was not a problem. The rest said it was about the same.

Counting communities of all sizes, one-fourth reported student deaths or injuries requiring hospitalization within the previous year as a result of violence.

The figures were most likely to be bad in big cities: 41 percent for cities of 100,000 or more, 32 percent for cities of 50,000 to 100,000 and 19 percent for cities under 50,000.

The largest cities were also the most likely to report increasing violence over the past five years — 55 percent, compared with 46 percent for middle-size cities and 31 percent for smaller communities.

Even small towns reported problems, however, with the study noting a town of under 6,000 people where two police officers have been assigned to school patrol full time.

"The academic challenges are being made more difficult by the disturbing presence and growing fear of crime and violence in our schools," said Atlanta Councilwoman Carolyn Long Banks, first vice president of the National League of Cities.

"Reports of attacks, shootings, searches for weapons, gang activity and other incidents have created fear, anxiety and uncertainty about what's happening when kids go to school each day," the report said.

Just two weeks ago the federal Centers for Disease Control in Atlanta said the homicide rate among young men 15 to 19 more than doubled between 1985 and 1991. Researchers attributed the rise to drug gangs' recruiting of younger members and increased use of guns instead of fists.

"When it comes to violence, in the past what may have led to fistfights now leads to gunfire," Dr. David Satcher, director of the centers, said.

Among the measures being used to cope are school patrols by city police — noted in 70 percent of communities in the new report — and the use of metal detectors in schools in nearly one-fifth.

School violence has drawn close attention recently, with President Clinton signing an executive order Oct. 23 that requires districts to expel for at least one year any student who brings a gun to school.

Air tragedies leave us reeling

The crash of an American Eagle commuter plane in Indiana Monday was tragic enough itself in that 68 people were killed. However, the tragedy is compounded in the minds of Americans who remember it was a little less than two months ago when a USAir jet crashed on the approach to Pittsburgh, killing 132 people, and only four months ago when another USAir jetliner crashed in North Carolina taking 37 lives.

The impact of all these aircraft crashes is beginning to take a toll on the psyche of Americans who ordinarily think nothing of climbing aboard an aircraft to fly across the state or the nation. After all, it is the modern form of transportation that puts the world within our reach.

We're not intending to imply here that air travel is any more dangerous now than it was a few years ago. In fact, with new aircraft that have been brought into the fleets of major airlines in recent years air travel should be about the safest ever today.

Regrettably, however, the crashes have occurred within a relatively short span of time and that has increased the impression that aircraft are falling out of the skies left and right.

Of course, a brief look at the facts dispels that interpretation. While no official statement has been issued yet on Monday's crash, comments from observers indicate the plane came down during a driving rainstorm and that its left wing appeared to be missing, giving enough reason to suspect some type of structural problem in the crash. The USAir crash in North Carolina also occurred during a thunderstorm while in the September crash a thrust reverser was the suspected cause.

So, the air crashes that have occurred during recent months have been directly attributable to specific causes. That lends no substantiation to the fear that air travel today is any more dangerous than it has been in the recent past — just that in the air crashes cited, mechanical or structural problems or weather cells may have been the culprits.

That is tragedy enough, of course, for the 237 people who have died and their thousands of loved ones. For them, we grieve.

Balzac helps explain NY's human comedy

Anybody here his wife? He's looking for his wife." A pink-cheeked, white-haired man was pacing the sidewalk. Maybe his wife was on the downtown tour bus. This was the uptown tour bus, destined for the Cathedral of St. John the Divine, Grant's Tomb, Harlem and what the guide called "Millionaire's Row."

Oh, yes, the guide. Call him Balzac. Because traveling Manhattan's streets with him was like dipping into "La Comedie Humaine" and its vast cast of human creatures.

So it seemed to one passenger, a New Yorker who spent a sun-struck autumn afternoon seeing the town through a tourist's eyes. What she saw most clearly were Manhattan's people, all of them summoned by the Balzac at the front of the bus.

"Nobody's sitting on a fire escape singing 'Maria, Maria' up here anymore," he said as the bus traveled Amsterdam Avenue. "Now we're talking sushi bars and Mexican restaurants and yuppies."

On Central Park West the yuppies give way to the stars. Bernstein, Nureyev, Lennon, Bacall, Pacino, Keaton, Farrow, Pavarotti, Madonna have all lived on this stretch — and a lot of them still do.

"But you never know with Madonna," Balzac observes. The passengers nod sagely. You never do know with Madonna.

Moving north, General and Mrs. Grant are entombed on the left and one of the Rockefellers is celebrated by Riverside Chapel; up on the right stone carvers are chipping away at the facade of St. John the Divine. Some job, right?

East of here is Harlem, once home to Bill (Bojangles) Robinson and Lena Horne. "See over there? That's Malcolm X's temple. And across the street? That's where Rudy put the vendors."

Now the bus is on Fifth Avenue, Millionaire's Row. On the soccer field are "the children of your Astors, your Whitneys, your Paleys kicking the ball with the headmasters of their private schools."

The women pushing baby carriages are not mothers, but "women from the Caribbean, Scotland and Ireland hired to raise the children of the rich."

One by one they got on the bus, the rich and the famous, the poor and the nameless, the yuppies and land speculators — characters in the blockbuster of a novel that is and always has been New York.

King Hussein seems to have nine lives

WASHINGTON — Israel's historic peace treaty with Jordan is even more of a miracle to the small circle who know how many times Jordan's King Hussein has narrowly escaped death.

Anderson

King Hussein has been the monarch of the Hashemite Kingdom of Jordan since 1952, an extraordinarily long time considering the Middle East's bloody history. He has survived more than a dozen assassination attempts over the years. Guards have saved him, cats have saved him and he has saved himself with good sense and just plain luck.

Once, he believes, he did die. But King Hussein told us in an interview that he came back to life to insure peace in the region.

Our associate Dale Van Atta has learned of the near-misses from sources in the royal circle, and confirmed some of the stories during one unusually candid interview with Hussein. Hussein, who loves riding his Harley-Davidson motorcycles, has always lived on the edge.

In 1951, he was standing next to his beloved grandfather, Abdullah at a mosque in Jerusalem when an assassin opened fire at close range. Abdullah died from a bullet to the head. The 15-year old Hussein was also hit by a bullet which, according to the legend the King has not discouraged, bounced off a medal on the uniform that Abdullah insisted his grandson wear that day.

In 1957, Hussein drove alone to an army base to put down a Jordanian officers' rebellion and dared them to shoot. Some did. "I could feel the heat of the bullets" whizzing past, Hussein later told us.

The next year, in 1958, relations between Syria and Jordan had grown tense. Hussein, an avid pilot, was piloting a small, twin-engine aircraft under the assumption he had permission to fly over Syria. But the Syrians reneged, and the King was ordered to land in Damascus.

"I told them we couldn't do that," Hussein told us. "Then I decided to dive to a lower altitude to avoid the radar. We flew very, very low toward the border as fast as we could go." That was just 240 mph in the small plane, and two Syrian jets were coming straight for him.

"At that point I thought this was it," Hussein recalled. "My first idea was to ram one of them, then it would be over." But he weaved his way out of Syria safely.

Two of our favorites — which the King has confirmed to us — involved cats and nasal drops. One day he had a sinus problem but hesitated to use the drops because there were intelligence reports saying someone in the palace had been recruited by an Arab opponent to kill him.

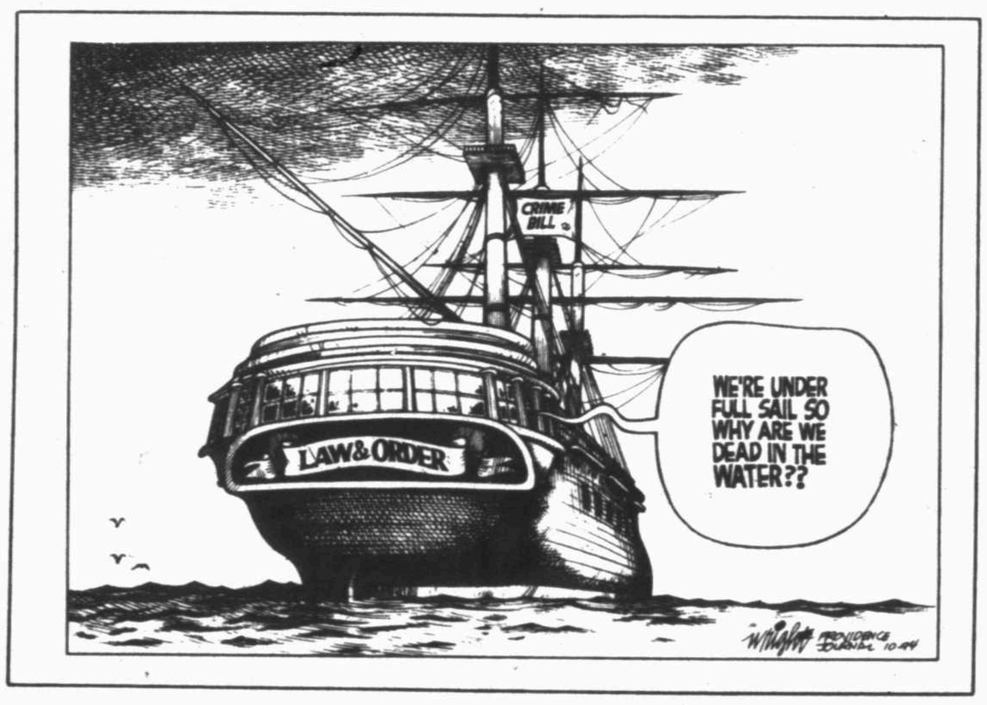

So Hussein luckily examined the bottle. "It looked a little old, so I poured it down the sink and it started to froth and bubble," he recalled. Acid that had been placed in the bottle was so strong it ate away the chrome trim on his basin drain.

King Hussein also had a lot of cats on the palace grounds. "And one day I saw that the cat population was getting a little smaller," he recalled. "I wondered about it, and it turned out that someone had been trying some poisons, unfortunately, on the cats."

An assistant cook had been recruited — by the Syrians — to kill the King by poison. Since the chef didn't know how much to use, he had experimented on the palace cats. Seven were found dead on a single day, six the next. The King asked palace guards to look into it, so they autopsied a cat, found the poison and foiled the plot.

King Hussein also confided to us that he had an after-death, out-of-body experience in 1984. A chronic heart condition suddenly caused hemorrhaging and he lost consciousness — and died, according to his account. He "went into another world" and agreed to return to mortality to continue working for peace in the Middle East.

Information superhighway causes overload

WASHINGTON — How can the government best help propel us along the information superhighway?

Safire

In most of us, that question induces an instant MEGO (my eyes glaze over). I recall a moment in the Nixon White House when Diane Sawyer and I were earnestly briefing Ron Ziegler on an arcane point likely to generate questions after an economic speech; the press secretary absorbed all he could and finally said: "Stop. Any new fact you tell me now means I'll forget something else."

In the same way, I am now convinced that if I figure out how to program my wireless telephone — on top of learning to force my computer to italicize at a keystroke — I will forget how to tickle my video recorder into snatching a movie scheduled for 4 a.m. on cable.

This surrender to saturation is not the charming helplessness of the determinedly old-fashioned; it is the revolt of the brain against the high life of the mind. The Nineties Boggle becomes more frenetic in the clash of giant telecommunications corporations gorging one another, to compete with other mergers — of fiber-optic cable, dishy wireless and billionaire media "content providers."

Which technology, and which convergence, will offer the consumer the cheapest and easiest way to be constantly in touch with whatever happens anywhere? Wouldn't it be great if the government could choose the best system and then let the private companies compete?

No, it would not be great. Intrusion in the name of efficiency would be a disaster, and — at the end of the great day — inefficient and stultifying.

Something simple and significant underlies our decision about how to ride the communications revolution. Two political ideas are competing in the post-cold-war world. One stresses order; the other stresses freedom.

Take Singapore, where an American teenager was savagely beaten on a graffiti charge and an American professor was recently threatened with jail for criticizing the regime. In that plastic nation, order is all.

International banks and authoritarians everywhere lap up the strictness undergirding the seemingly capitalist system. In China, the "Singapore model" is hailed as the justification for continued suppression of human rights even as Beijing slips out of the economic straitjacket of Communism. That model is anti-democratic capitalism accompanied by heavy moralizing.

"In Singapore," says Reed Hundt, chairman of the Federal Communications Commission, "you can expect a single, regulated communications system. We don't believe in that. We say — let the government referee, but let the players play."

In democratic capitalism, the main job of government regulators and trustbusters is to enforce the opportunity for competition, denying biggies the edge of exclusive dealing or discriminatory pricing. Monopoly, sometimes protected in the past, will be treated as unnatural in the future. Licenses to use public property will be fairly auctioned, not handed to political favorites.

Because competition is a democratic value, it's good for local and national phone networks to invade one another's turf; it's good for cable companies to provide telephone service and the phonies to deliver pictures on their wires; it's good for wireless, satellite and broadcast networks to try to beat the phone companies' brains out.

In that way, consumers, not bureaucrats, will decide which systems suit us best. Risk-taking investors, not budgeteers, will channel money into the most efficient carriers.

This will result in a glorious mess. Asian Mussolinis will snicker at our sweet disorder as we lust after the way to deliver a pure signal along with a piping-hot pizza.

But there are advantages: innovation will be nourished, costs will be lowered and diversity will be celebrated. Geniuses and jerks will have their own channels and forums, while all the separate systems will have a way to unify us as a nation in a crisis.

Above all, the disorderly competition of "the American model" makes it much harder for some would-be ruler to control the people. Our example stands in contrast to all that the leaders of China admire in ultra-orderly Singapore. That's because our approach to the communications future centers on one person's freedom to control his or her own life.

North and Robb heat up Senate race in Virginia

The Senate race in Virginia is heating up, with both Ollie North and Chuck Robb turning it into a rat race.

Buchwald

The major political issue is truth. Since Col. North was convicted in court of lying, as opposed to Robb, who has only been accused of being untruthful by the media, North has the edge in the polls.

To support him a group of citizens has started a "Fingers Crossed for Ollie" campaign.

The organizer, A. Gilmore Flues, maintains that there are a lot more liars in Virginia than anyone realizes. "If we can get these people out on Election Day, we can win."

"You would really be providing a service for those who just don't have the truth in them," I told him.

Gil said, "The other day we got Elliott Abrams to climb on the Ollie bandwagon. If you recall, Abrams was convicted of lying to Congress about Nicaragua and received a two-year suspended sentence. When he came out of the closet for North, a lot of voters who had never told the truth in their lives were terribly impressed that a person who perjured himself before Congress would endorse a candidate."

"How do we know that Abrams was telling the truth when he said that Ollie was not involved in drug smuggling at the same time as he was trading arms for hostages?"

"If Abrams was lying, we can't hold it against him because he has already paid his debt to society for lying about something else."

"Why are voters so influenced by a candidate who has admitted that he played fast and loose with the facts?" I asked Gil.

"North represents the feel-good side of America — the people who will look you straight in the eye and say, 'I'm going to tell you something, and if you don't believe me, then you might as well burn the American flag and the President with it.' "

"President Reagan believes that North is a liar."

"But Sen. Bob Dole says that it doesn't matter."

"Sen. John Warner thinks that North is a threat to the Republican Party."

"Former Secretary of Treasury Jim Baker, who wants to be President, believes that North is as wholesome as white bread. Our job is to persuade the good citizens of Virginia that Ollie is the best man for the job because if he lied to the Senate as an Irangate witness, there's no telling what he can do in Congress when he's one of them."

I said, "I guess what makes this safe for North is that when you run for the Senate you don't have to take an oath that you will tell the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth, so help you God."

Gil smiled, "Not even Pat Robertson expects Ollie to do that."

Mail-order madness: '94 season is breaking catalog-clutter record

By Stephanie Strom
N.Y. Times News Service

NEW YORK — Thought you got a lot of mail-order catalogs last year? Just wait. Catalog retailers say the 1994 holiday season is breaking all records for mailbox clutter.

Mail-order companies, anticipating an increase in third-class postal rates that will raise their mailing costs by about 10 percent early next year, are sending out more catalogs than usual in hopes of finding new customers at a lower cost.

"Everybody wants to get lots of new names before the postage goes up," said Lillian Vernon, chief executive of her namesake catalog corporation. "So when they mail next year, they'll be mailing to identified buyers, not just maybes," she added.

By the crudest of measures, the typical American household receives more than 100 catalogs each year, with the bulk of those coming from August through October. And many upper-income families receive even more.

But the increased number of catalogs in most mailboxes may backfire.

"I look for L.L. Bean and Lands' End, and everything else just gets thrown away," said Andrea Friedman, who estimates that her Manhattan mailbox was the repository for almost 50 catalogs last week, most of which went straight into the recycling bin.

Matthew G. Flynn of Cambridge, Mass., said he had also noticed an increase in catalogs this year, even though he has asked mail-order companies to keep his name off the lists they sell. "If I didn't get these catalogs, I wouldn't miss them," he said.

But some consumers look forward to the daily deluge. "I love mail-order catalogs," said Cynthia Blair, a novelist who lives in Stony Brook. "Now that it's Christmas, I get at least three catalogs a day."

Why does she like them?

"Honestly, they give me something to read when I take my 3 o'clock coffee break," she said.

Gypsy Beteg of Fort Worth prefers the convenience of catalog shopping. "Who has time to do all that driving and parking and walking" at shopping malls, she said. "It's really handy when you get products out of a catalog and can have them shipped directly to other people."

While companies have complex computer models that allow them to closely focus on their regular shoppers, they still use mass mailings to prospect, as they call the search for new customers. Among large catalog retailers, Spiegel, Fingerhut, Lands' End and Hanover Direct Inc., which offers Gump's, Tweeds and Domestications catalogs, have intensified the customer search in anticipation of the postal rate increase. So have many smaller catalogers for whom the increased costs could be crippling.

Most consumers believe that the number of catalogs they receive rises each year. Yet, catalog circulation to households and businesses remained flat at roughly 13.5 billion between 1988 and 1992, according to figures compiled by the Direct Marketing Association of New York City. Assuming that the vast majority of those are sent to houses and apartments, most of the 95 million households in the country receive at least 100 catalogs a year.

But this year, the number is expected to rise sharply, perhaps as much as 10 percent.

"A lot of people in the industry are doing significantly more mailing this season," said Charlotte LaComb, a spokeswoman for Lands' End, one of the country's largest mail-order companies. "We certainly are because come January, we're going to have a postal rate increase, which will raise our cost of doing business."

Other catalog companies are sending out more mailings because they are optimistic about holiday sales this year.

For instance, Faith Mountain Co., a small mail-order retailer in Sperryville, Va., is increasing its mailings 30 percent.

"We scheduled the increase a long time ago because we've been on that kind of a growth track," said Cheri Woodard, president and chief executive of Faith Mountain.

But Ms. Woodard and other such merchants worry that increased mailings may have a cost of their own, driving weary potential consumers to revolt. Based on focus-group research, Faith Mountain estimates that it has less than five seconds to get a would-be buyer's attention because many people look for catalogs they know and dump the rest in the garbage.

One reason that some companies may be finding less success is because consumers are not always satisfied with the products they receive by mail order. Nicole Klemens of Rye, for instance, recently ordered an infant's snowsuit from L.L. Bean, a company with a liberal return policy. Nonetheless,

"it was supposed to be red and blueberry," she said, "but when it arrived, instead of being a nice deep blue, it was red and purple. So I had to wrap it and mail it back, which was a big nuisance. I ended up buying one in the store."

For catalog companies, there has been no postage increase since 1991. But the Postal Service has proposed a 10.3 percent increase in third-class rates, those used most often in catalog mailings.

Dems in peril; unions forget NAFTA threat

By Richard Keil
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Labor unions that vowed to punish Democrats who voted for the North American Free Trade Agreement have decided instead to swallow their pride and open their wallets.

In all, a dozen unions that angrily threatened to withhold cash this election season have given more than $800,000 through their political action committees to Democrats who voted for the trade agreement, according to spending records filed with the Federal Election Commission.

The unions that were the most critical of the agreement have been more selective, choosing mostly to give donations to pro-NAFTA Democrats in tight races, the records show.

As campaigns heated up in September, the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers PAC distributed $194,150 to candidates. Only $33,200, or 17 percent, of that total went to Democrats who voted for NAFTA. But two-thirds of their pro-NAFTA donations, or $22,000, went to Democrats who are in trouble.

One such recipient was freshman Rep. Karen Shepherd of Utah, who is in a ferocious battle againt a millionaire Republican. The IBEW, which feared jobs would flow to Mexico if NAFTA was passed, gave $2,500 to Shepherd in September.

Shepherd has also received the maximum $10,000 donation from the Steelworkers, United Food and Commercial Workers, and the American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees.

The IBEW's September contribution pushed its election-cycle total to $9,500. Meanwhile, the Teamsters, whose president, Ron Carey, angrily declared, "we won't forget what happened here" after the NAFTA vote, has given Shepherd $5,000.

"Karen sees it as a priority to mend those fences, and she has," said Paul Svendsen, a spokesman for Shepherd's campaign. "We met with memberships, with union leaders to talk about NAFTA, and the way to put it is that we agreed to disagree on this one."

In the end, labor leaders said, it came down to a choice between keeping a year-old threat or assisting dozens of longtime allies in political peril.

The stakes — keeping Democrats in control of Congress — were too high in the end.

"The labor folks themselves are coming to a practical, logical conclusion that these are the people who are far more likely to help them than the Republicans running against them," said Don Sweitzer, political director for the Democratic National Committee.

"It is necessitating them holding their noses and supporting some folks who didn't support their posi- on NAFTA," he said.

For some pro-NAFTA Democrats, the unions' change of heart couldn't come at a better time.

There's a situation similar to Shepherd's in Iowa, where veteran Democrat Neal Smith is in jeopardy of losing his seat. Since the trade agreement was passed, he has received more than $25,000 from unions that bitterly opposed NAFTA.

And Smith has two strikes against him — besides his pro-NAFTA vote, his district near Des Moines has fewer than one in five union workers.

"A week before we voted, they (labor unions) had a meeting out here, at which I explained why I was voting for NAFTA," said Smith. "What helped, I think, is that I usually vote with them."

Home brewers tap into growing appreciation for subtleties of beer

By Clara G. Herrera
N.Y. Times News Service

This is a story about beer.

Lovers of brew spend three days at a beer camp tasting it, eating food made with it and learning about the history surrounding it. A unique running club blends exercise with drinking beer. One couple fell in love after making a batch of home-brew. There's even a beer museum, with a collection that includes beer toothpaste, dedicated to the sudsy concoction.

Most people just drink it. And last week, Oct. 23-29, was American Beer Week.

This year saw the first State Fair of Texas Home Brewers Competition in Dallas. About 198 beers brewed by Texans were entered. In Houston, for the 11th year, home-brewers from all over the nation entered more than 600 beers in the Dixie Cup competition. An Elvis impersonator handed out awards while coasters flew throughout the room.

No one has to tell Bill Metzger that there's a whole lot of brewing going on. Two years ago, he became co-publisher of Southwest Brewing News, a bimonthly beer newspaper printed in Austin and circulated in eight states. In the two years, it has doubled its circulation from 20,000 to 40,000 and has gone from six pages to 40 pages.

The 1993 legalizing of Texas brew pubs, places that combine a brewery and restaurant, has added to the interest in crafting specialty beers, Metzger said. But there's always that worry about not perpetuating the image of intoxicated drinkers overindulging in beer.

"I think the craft brewing industry has done a pretty good job of stressing moderation," Metzger said. "Craft beers are pretty much more linked with food. It's more the European tradition of being part of everything, as opposed to that image of, say, a college student pounding down a six-pack."

Some beer connoisseurs think we're in the midst of the resurgence of beer. Like fine wine, beer is becoming appreciated for its quality, not quantity.

"America is in the midst of a beer revolution," said Alan Eames, a cultural anthropologist whose main focus is beer and who has written two books on the subject. "There's no question about it. People are beginning to see beer as a beverage with as much majesty and complexity and interest as wine."

But admittedly, you can't exactly sniff a bottle cap like you would a wine cork. And beer camp doesn't have the same tone as, say, a wine retreat.

Three years ago, when the Oldenberg Brewery in Fort Mitchell, Ky., started holding its three-day beer camps, 20 people showed up. September's camp was sold out at 200, said David Heidrich, camp director and a self-described "recovering attorney."

Twice a year, beer drinkers arrive on Friday, sample 373 types of beer at the beer buffet, play table games and get to know each other. Saturdays start out with lectures on beer from beer experts. Campers can learn to brew their own beer, learn to cook foods that include beer such as chocolate stout mousse, or fulfill their "Laverne and Shirley" fantasies by working in the bottling line at the brewery, Heidrich said.

Cost is about $350 for three days, which includes hotel rooms, all the food and beer. Campers have included 22-year-olds to 82-year-olds, truck drivers, doctors and state supreme court justices from two states, Heidrich said.

"We get guys whose wives don't know what to get them for Christmas because they've run out of golf clubs to buy," he said. "And we always get a couple of guys who come who didn't really want to come and their wives wanted to come. We always say there's going to be a 'Geraldo' show on 'Women Who Take Their Men To Beer Camp.'"

The Oldenberg Brewery outside Cincinnati hosts the American Museum of Brewery History and Art. Herb Haydock, 64, and his wife, Helen, 60, began the collection in 1951 with a couple of beer glasses Herb bought in Germany.

At the time, he didn't know that his collection would mushroom into 26,000 bottles of beer (not all full), beer toothpaste, beer shampoo, vintage brewing equipment and antique bottle openers from all over the world.

"Beer is the nectar of the gods," Herb Haydock said. "It's probably the oldest fermented beverage we've got and basically it's a food. It's like bread, it's not something you drink to get drunk. It's a great beverage."

Out of 'hood: Inner-city kids toss business 'salad-topper'

By Deborah Hastings
Associated Press

LOS ANGELES — Straight out of South Central comes Food From The 'Hood, a high school group that has become a business dedicated to growing self-esteem, business acumen and vegetables.

Their chief product is Straight Out 'The Garden, a creamy Italian dressing with kickin' taste and bumpin' packaging. (That means it tastes good and looks good.)

Now available in 2,000 supermarkets in 23 states, the low-fat, all-natural dressing was developed by a partnership formed in the ashes of the 1992 riots.

At inner-city Crenshaw High School, 39 students met shortly after the uprising to make sense of three days that razed a good part of their community and to try to change their economic future.

With $100,000 in grants and help from an advertising executive and corporate advisers such as Ben & Jerry's, the students eventually assembled a successful company.

Selling vegetables, herbs and — beginning six months ago — salad dressing, the students put their profits into a college scholarship fund while learning how to run a business.

"Most people want to come in here and tell kids what not to do, instead of coming in here and teaching entrepreneurial workshops and telling kids what they can do," 37-year-old marketing adviser Melinda McMullen, who took a leave of absence from the advertising firm Chiat-Day to volunteer full time.

They are a hard-working bunch, these kids, with their carefully rehearsed handshakes, eye contact and an abundance of enthusiasm.

"Check this out," said 16-year-old Ben Osborne, who demanded to be interviewed. "This is our garden."

The garden is a quarter-acre behind the football field. The original idea was to raise produce to sell at local farmers' markets. But the first-year profits in 1993 netted only $600 to be awarded to three graduates.

"We had all this lettuce," McMullen recalled. "'Why not make salad dressing?"

The three graduates who were awarded scholarships last June will be sharing about $7,000. Scholarship winners are determined by their grades and their participation in the business.

Rigid health department standards and other costs made manufacturing the dressing problematic. So Food From The 'Hood contracted with a manufacturer to actually make the dressing. They also enlisted a distributor, a supermarket broker and a law firm. Some were paid, others donated their services.

For competitive reasons, McMullen said, total sales figures for the dressing are not given out.

"It's an exciting success story," said Mary McAboy, spokeswoman for Vons supermarkets, which has more than 300 stores in Southern California and Las Vegas, all of which carry the dressing. Vons sells about 360 bottles a week, she said.

"That's very good considering it doesn't have any national advertising campaign," she said.

On Tuesday, Prince Charles is coming to South Central and having lunch in Food From The 'Hood's garden. In preparing for the royal visit, the students got a lesson in protocol, public speaking and planning a media event.

"I used to get up in the front of a class and my voice would shake," said Karla Becerra, a college-bound 17-year-old. "Now I can get up and talk to anyone. I'm going to talk to the prince."

Jury finds defendant guilty

Jurors convict ex-McDonald's manager of theft

By Gary Shanks
Staff Writer

A six-man, six-woman jury deliberated for four hours before convicting Bruce Cunningham of theft of more than $20,000 in a two-year spree that netted more than $100,000 from a Midland fast-food restaurant.

Cunningham and his wife, both in their early 20s, were clearly shocked from the emotional impact of the guilty verdict. Other family members present also were moved to tears by the jury's finding.

Cunningham was accused of taking $130,000 during his tenure as manager of the McDonald's franchise on Andrews Highway. The thefts occurred on 346 separate occasions between Jan. 17, 1990, and April 30, 1992.

During the 2½-week trial, prosecuting attorneys produced documentation of thefts of less than $100 a day or more than $1,000 a day, in an attempt to prove that Cunningham stole this amount of money from the restaurant.

In closing arguments earlier Tuesday, defense attorney Tom Hirsch told jurors there would be a lot of evidence on which to base their decisions.

"It is a complicated case. There is a lot of paperwork. There is a lot of law in this case," Hirsch said.

Treasurer works for amendment to eliminate job

By Ed Todd
Staff Writer

State Treasurer Martha Whitehead is campaigning to eliminate her job, which would save the taxpayers $8 million annually.

Texas voters would have to approve a constitutional amendment in order to abolish the $79,247-a-year post.

"The duplication and the waste that exist in the agency can be eliminated," Ms. Whitehead said Tuesday in a stopover with Texas Comptroller John Sharp at Midland International Airport.

Ms. Whitehead reasoned that if she is elected to office under the platform to abolish that office, then the Texas Legislature would view favorably an amendment to abolish it.

A pro-Whitehead vote would be a ballot cast for downsizing government, said Sharp, whose $140 million-a-year agency of 2,800 employees would take over many, if not all, of the treasurer's duties.

The comptroller is the state's tax collector and check-writer.

"It is my obligation to pay the bills," Sharp said. "The state Treasury has nothing to do with that."

The state operates under a $35 billion annual budget and employs 270,000 people.

Already, Ms. Whitehead has contracted for the comptroller to collect the state's annual $900 million tobacco tax, at a cost of under $2 million. By eliminating that duty, Ms. Whitehead cut her budget by $600,000 and her 250-member staff by 22 workers.

"By privatizing, downsizing, and merging, we can get rid of some of the waste and duplication that John Sharp has been fighting against for years," Ms. Whitehead said.

Ms. Whitehead, a Democrat, was appointed treasurer in 1993 by Gov. Ann Richards after Republican Treasurer Kay Bailey Hutchison was elected to the U.S. Senate.

Ms. Whitehead is a former mayor of Longview and a hospital administrator.

Sharp, a Democrat, is a former Texas legislator and a member of the Texas Railroad Commission.

Opposing Sharp in the Nov. 8 general election is Republican Teresa Doggett.

Ms. Whitehead is opposed by Republican David Hartman.

"This is all reversed," Sharp said of political images. "The Republican in this (treasurer's) race is the one running around, asking for more and more government. And the Democrat (Ms. Whitehead) is the one who wants to save eight million bucks right off the Controversy surrounds history of Texas gravesite

By Caitlin Francke
The (McAllen) Monitor

MISSION — Buried atop a hill in Mission rests the man Texas historians claim spurred the Texas-Mexico war.

The grave of Mexican Colonel Juan Davis Bradburn, born John, is located on the land where St. Peter's Novitiate stands today, local historians say.

Few people know about the site, even Mission residents and visitors who regularly tour the historical site on South Shary Rd., near the original settlement founded by John Conway. The exact location of the grave site is unknown.

The reason may lie in the politics of remembrance.

"He's a hated character" in Texas history, said Dick Heller, a former Indiana newspaper publisher who has compiled a 192-page history of the city, titled, The History of Mission.

"If we'd lost (the American Revolution), then George Washington would be a villain," said Heller, who first discovered mention of the grave site while reading a 1917 historical account by a Brownsville lawyer.

Bradburn's is the story of Anglo-Mexican conflict, loyalty and sedition, fortune seekers and frontier settlers. The players include Texas heroes and legends, Mexican dictators and rebels.

Lured by promises of land, 21-year-old Virginia-born Bradburn came to northern Mexico in 1817 to help the Mexican army topple Spanish colonial forces in the War of Independence.

Some 13 years later, the esteemed, now-Mexican Colonel Bradburn was named commander of the Anahuac fort in Galveston, which was then part of Mexican territory populated largely by thousands of Anglo colonists. One of them was William B. Travis, the Lone Star's Alamo hero.

Appointed to rule over the American colonists living in Mexico (now Southeast Texas) and collect taxes, Bradburn's two-year reign at Anahuac angered Anglo settlers, many of whom viewed him as a traitor for working for the Mexicans, Heller said.

After Bradburn arrested Travis on charges of sedition, that anger boiled into battles and shoot-outs, known collectively as the 1832 Anahuac Disturbances.

"The troubles they had at Anahuac brought out publicly the problems that existed between the Anglos and the Mexicans (in the colonies)," said Donaly Brice, a historian of the Texas State Library in Austin.

"This just got the ball rolling until they erupted with the Revolution," he said.

What people do not realize is that Bradburn was just doing his job, according to Houston-based historian Margaret Henson.

Henson, who taught 1820-40s history at the University of Houston-Clear Lake for 10 years, wrote a biography of Bradburn in 1982.

That book "made a lot of Texas historians very angry,

GOP challenger for treasurer touts experience, 7-point lead

By Michael Kashgarian
Staff Writer

Republican candidate for state treasurer David Hartman made a campaign stop in Midland Tuesday and touted his banking background and his seven-point lead in a recent poll.

Agriculture Commissioner Rick Perry accompanied the fellow Republican to show his support. "If I'm going to get someone to be the state's banker, I want it to be a qualified person," Perry said.

Hartman said he has that experience. "I've been running banks and involved in them for 15 years," he said.

Hartman is running against incumbent Democrat Martha Whitehead.

The challenger said he has gone from trailing Ms. Whitehead by seven points to leading by seven points, as reflected in the Oct. 24 Mason Dixon poll.

Hartman attributed his recent popularity to three factors:

Company that started with dream, layoffs celebrates 25th anniversary

By John Paul Pitts
Business/Oil Editor

If there can be a bright note to downsizing and layoffs in the oilpatch, Henry Petroleum Corp. is one of them.

The company, which celebrated its 25th anniversary Tuesday, is an example of what happens when oil companies hand out termination checks and turn talented, aggressive, hungry employees loose on the street. Sometimes you get an oil company that endures.

In the summer of 1969, two employees of Solar Oil Co. — Jim Henry and Bob Landenberger — were visiting in the office hallway. The topic was their futures and both agreed that it would be nice to someday have their own oil company. A short time later they were given the opportunity to start on that career path because both were laid off.

Henry, an engineer, said he and Landenberger, a geologist, determined they could probably succeed in the oil business as well as anyone and should start their own company.

The plan was to begin as consultants and eventually become operators.

After discussing it with their wives, the two families agreed to proceed, and on Nov. 1, 1969, H&L Consultants was created. They set a pattern that would continue throughout the history of the company.

"We began as a family business, and we have tried ever since to maintain a sense of family," Henry said. "We believe strongly in the family because a company will be only as strong as the families that work for it."

The consulting firm would later become Henry & Landenberger Petroleum Corp. "When our credit got better we switched names," Henry said joking.

While credit may have been pinched, income was not. "Our first year out, we made more money as consultants than we had made on salary and we knew we were on our way," Henry said.

Landenberg remembers sitting on a well for Pennzoil during those early years.

"I told them we had to be paid every two weeks because we had families and bills to pay."

Henry said their goals through the new company were to become operators and to become self-sufficient; the goal was reached within two years.

Things were not always good. A drilling deal turned sour in 1970. A well in the Austin chalk proved to be great, but the chalk was a bitter disappointment.

In 1977, company-producing assets were split down the middle when Landenberger decided to cash in and retire.

The remaining assets became Henry Petroleum Corp. Dennis Johnson, Henry's brother-in-law, joined him as a partner and was named chief operating officer.

According to Henry, Johnson has been the driving force behind much of the company's growth and was a primary reason that the company doubled its net worth in the last two years.

In the oil-price crash of 1986, Henry Petroleum took its hardest hit. Fifteen of 30 employees were laid off.

"I took a vow that it would not happen again," Henry said.

Today, the company is back to 1986 levels. It has 31 employees and operates 350 wells, which produce 3,600 barrels of oil and 6 million cubic feet of gas a day.

Henry said the company's future is one of growth, but in a different direction.

"In 1992 we were one of the biggest Spraberry drillers and invested $14 million in the trend. Next year we will not spend a dime on drilling the Spraberry.

"In 1992 we had only $500,000 invested in waterfloods. In 1995 we estimate we will have $5 million invested," he said.

"And in 1992, we spent nothing for 3-D exploration, but this year we will invest $5 million. As you can see, we are moving toward 3-D exploration and waterfloods."

CONVICT: Jury finds defendant guilty of theft

(from 1B)

Hirsch said he was somewhat surprised at the jury's guilty verdict, announced just after 6:30 p.m. Tuesday.

"That's our system and it's the best system we've got," Hirsch said. "I don't ever criticize the jury — they've got the hardest job in the courthouse."

Before deliberations, Hirsch outlined parts of the evidence he believed crucial. He told jurors there were two other managers at the store who could have committed the thefts, if the thefts did in fact occur.

Hirsch called an expert witness who testified that the perceived thefts could be the result of computer error in the electronic registers.

Hirsch also said jurors could not be sure that the restaurant's owner, Jerry Kubicki, is the innocent victim in the case, since he could theoretically benefit from taking funds from his own facility.

"He doesn't follow anyone else's advice, his own expert's advice, on how he should handle the cash," Hirsch said.

Lead counsel for the prosecution, Robin Sams, however, said Kubicki could not be considered as anything other than the victim in this theft.

Ms. Sams characterized Kubicki and his wife as the embodiment of the American dream. He worked hard for many years — 11 years as a pipe fitter — and saved money that one day allowed him to open the lucrative franchise.

Ms. Sams maintained it was Kubicki's trust and closeness with Cunningham that led him to turn over the running of the enterprise to the defendant.

"He (Kubicki) sent him (Cunningham) to every possible school . . . He wanted to eliminate every possible obstacle to Bruce's success," she said. "The defendant used that trust. That's how he got away with it for so long," she said.

Ms. Sams said Kubicki was exonerated by auditors, who found evidence pointing to Cunningham as a man living above his means.

During the trial, Ms. Sams presented numerous charts of the store's operating figures. At one point in the two-year period, Cunningham was sent to Big Spring to work a McDonald's there. Auditors found that during his absence, food costs went down as compared to gross receipts, indicating the thefts were not occurring, she said.

"Once the defendant leaves the store, sales and profits go up — just like you'd expect," Ms. Sams said.

She said the evidence showed Cunningham was doctoring the register tapes and in some cases obliterated the sales of a worker's entire shift.

When other employees noticed the defendant's habit of closing out a register in the middle of a shift, he would come up with a list of reasons for his actions. Ms. Sams referred to these as "Bruce's excuses."

The same jury will reconvene today to hear further testimony and arguments before deliberating on Cunningham's sentence. He faces a possible sentence of 10-20 years in prison and a fine of up to $10,000.

Since his arrest in 1992, Cunningham has remained free on $20,000 bond.

ing, he said.

■ Texans want someone qualified to manage investments and "restore profitability of those investments," he said.

Hartman said his opponent has a history of losses due to bad investments.

■ Hartman said he opposes Ms. Whitehead's recommendation to merge the treasurer's office and the comptroller's office.

"You don't give the person who handles the books control of the cash investments," he said.

In addition, merging the two entities will not save funds or cut down on employees, Hartman said.

Hartman also criticized the way his opponent was running her campaign. He accused her of misrepresentation and unethical practices.

Ms. Whitehead's biggest ethics violation is that "she has run her campaign using state airplanes and personnel," Hartman said.

No one at Ms. Whitehead's campaign office was available for comment following Hartman's news conference late Tuesday.

Fired agents file joint appeal, tell their story

DALLAS (AP) — Phillip Chojnacki and Charles Sarabyn aren't household names. But most people know what they did last February.

Chojnacki and Sarabyn were the federal agents who gave the go-ahead on the government's deadly raid of David Koresh and his Branch Davidian followers near Waco.

Almost immediately, they were swarmed with criticism by other federal officers. They were singled out for "gross errors in judgment" in a September 1993 Treasury Department report. They were fired last week.

Now the former heads of the Houston office of the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms are beginning to let out their side of the story.

Their first statements about the Feb. 28, 1993, attack and all that went into it came Monday in a joint appeal filed with the Merit Systems Protection Board in hopes of getting their jobs back.

Both have turned down all interview requests, leaving two letters totalling 35 pages as their only explanation of events while also dropping hints that they've become the government's scapegoats for the disaster, which ultimately claimed more than 80 lives.

"You don't have to read between the lines," said attorney Stephen Gardner, who's handling Sarabyn's appeal. "What Treasury wants to do is point fingers. They want to blame someone."

The documents, which include their defenses for each of four major accusations in the Treasury report, also describe how other ATF agents could have cancelled the attack, thus avoiding the distastrous consequences.

"The operation had safety nets built into it in the form of people who could call off the raid without discussion," Sarabyn's appeal states.

Sarabyn and Chojnacki outline in their appeal the chain of command and timeline of events for all decisions leading up to the siege, which was intended to serve Koresh with search and arrest warrants on weapons charges.

They say three others had the power to cancel the raid, including one who allegedly withheld possibly vital information.

They also fight back against other charges that they lied, tried shifting blame to a subordinate and that they altered a written raid plan after it was turned over to investigators.

HISTORY: Controversy surrounds gravesite

because it said Travis got what he deserved," Henson said. "In Texas history, Travis was unjustly put in jail by an outrageous, terrible person."

Henson depicts Bradburn as a loyal, military man who faithfully obeyed his charge as a Mexican garrison commander. She said Bradburn jailed Travis in a brick kiln after he made false threats, saying the American army was going to attack Bradburn for giving sanctuary to slaves.

"He had no sympathy with Travis and all those other people because his career lay elsewhere," she said. "They call him every name in the book because he was enforcing Mexican law."

The Texas Historical Commission marker at Fort Anahuac states:

"(Bradburn) imposed on colonists by refusing to pay for supplies and labor used in building the Fort . . . His troops were convicts whom he could not control. He arrested several men, including Patrick C. Jack and William B. Travis, who were held 50 days awaiting trial."

The Handbook of Texas, published in 1952 by the Texas State Historical Association, said Bradburn's "autocratic arrest" of Mexican Land Commissioner Francisco Madero, in town to hand out titles, stirred clashes with the locals.

"Bradburn further angered the settlers at Anahuac by impressing their slave labor without compensation, by encouraging a spirit of revolt among the slaves and by harboring runaway slaves," the Handbook states.

Colonists were enticed to settle the bare Texas frontier with promises of cheap land and a tax-free six years, beginning in 1823. Bradburn's 1830 mission was to enforce the tariffs, much to the settler's dismay.

"They thought they shouldn't have to pay taxes, naturally," Heller said. "Americans never want to pay taxes."

After Travis and 20 other locals were arrested, an armed group attacked the fort, demanding Bradburn release the prisoners. A two-day skirmish ensued, which eventually led to the 1832 Battle of Velasco, according to the Handbook.

A Mexican colonel, alerted to the disturbances, arrived at Anahuac and persuaded Bradburn to abandon his position. Scheduled to stand trial, Bradburn escaped and fled to New Orleans. He later went to Matamoros, where he lived in semi-retirement until 1836, according to the Handbook.

In February 1842, Bradburn purchased a 2,500-acre ranch in Mission he called "Puertas Verdes" (green doors), according to Heller's research. Bradburn lived there with his wife, the wealthy Marquess Maria Josefa Hurtado de Mendoza y Caballero de los Olivos, until his death later that year.

From my very first visit, I felt they sincerely cared about me. They took the time to know me and answered all my questions in plain talk. Every time I go, they're as kind and understanding as ever.

I also feel their medical staff is professional, knowledgeable and very up to date. They're extremely sensitive to a woman's special medical concerns, and everything is kept confidential. Bush attacks new penal code that survey concludes is 'step backward'

CONROE (AP) — GOP gubernatorial candidate George W. Bush touted a survey Tuesday of prosecutors who described the state's new penal code as useless against crime.

Bush, claiming validation of his opinion that the penal code is weak, distributed the survey on the day after Gov. Ann Richards accused him of "literally lying" about the measure.

"Gov. Richards, you must be out of touch not to understand the effects of the penal code," Bush said at an afternoon rally in Conroe. "Talk to those who are hired to enforce the law before you go calling George W. Bush lying about something that is not right for Texas."

The survey of 26 Harris County prosecutors was sent Monday to Carol Vance, chairman of the Texas Board of Criminal Justice. It concluded that the penal code "was a step backward because it has created more problems than it has solved."

Terry Jennings, the assistant district attorney who compiled the findings, said it wasn't an endorsement for any candidate.

Jennings said most respondents had concerns about the measure, which went into effect Sept. 1.

"It doesn't need minor adjustments. It needs a serious overhaul," he said. "Automatic probation has got to go. It's the stupidest idea in criminal history."

Bush says the penal code gives automatic probation for auto theft, burglary of a business and selling less than one gram of crack cocaine. He said legislators who passed the measure made a mistake.

"They didn't think through all the ramifications because they did not have a governor who was leading," Bush said.

But Richards on Monday said the law doubled the time violent criminals spend behind bars and allowed the death penalty for any murder of a child younger than age 6.

John Hatch, a spokesman for Richards, called the survey a political ploy.

'It (new penal code) doesn't need minor adjustments. It needs a serious overhaul. Automatic probation has got to go. It's the stupidest idea in criminal history.'

—Terry Jennings

compiled findings

"This just shows that Bush doesn't know what he's talking about," Hatch said.

Earlier Tuesday, Bush took his campaign to a school auditorium filled with teen-agers who cheered his plea that they join the political process.

"If you do not vote, in my opinion, you do not have grounds to gripe," Bush told about 750 students at Marcus High School in Flower Mound.

Officials at the suburban Denton County school said attendance was optional at the 30-minute assembly.

A butcher-paper banner on stage proclaimed "Welcome Mr. Bush!" and students stood to whistle and wave posterboard signs at his arrival.

Teachers nodded their approval at various points during a speech that urged teen-agers to stay off drugs and take responsibility for their own behavior.

The speech — sprinkled with the phrase "when I'm the governor" — was a slight variation of the one Bush has been delivering at rallies across Texas.

Joel Rice, a 17-year-old senior who described himself as a Democrat, was impressed the candidate took time for a young crowd containing so many ineligible voters.

"A lot of people appreciate the fact that he's coming," he said. "It makes them feel like a part of the process."

GOP gubernatorial candidate sees glory, burden of being former president's son

AUSTIN (AP) — He probably wouldn't be the Republican candidate for governor of Texas if his name were George W. Fiegenschuh or George W. Rush. Still, George W. Bush, who is the candidate, says there is a downside to being his father's son.

"I inherited every single one of his enemies and half his friends," says the Republican Bush scion who is giving popular Democratic Gov. Ann Richards the race of her life.

Richards, a Democratic star famous for her 1988 crack about George Bush ("born with a silver foot in his mouth") says her opponent underestimates the value of being the son of a former president.

What's it worth? "About $4 million," she says.

George W., 48, keeps in touch with younger brother, Jeb, 41, who is running for governor of Florida — the fifth largest state in population, below No. 2 Texas — but they've always been somewhat independent and they remain so.

Jeb, a real estate developer, has made greater use of his parents in his campaign, although mother Barbara has campaigned in recent weeks for George and former president George has been helpful raising money.

In style, the two brothers are quite different. While George W. has his father's face and his mother's sassy tongue, Jeb is more like his mother on the outside and like the former president at his core.

"George W. has more of a nononsense, man of action persona ... almost a brusque, direct personality," says David Hill, a Houston political consultant who knows both brothers.

George W. has more Texas in him than his father, who was born in Connecticut and brought some Yankee mannerisms with him when he decided to become a Texan. (He once accepted a coffee refill, saying, yes, he'd have "just a splash.")

George W. grew up in Midland and Houston.

JOB: Whitehead fights to eliminate office of treasurer

top."

Ms. Whitehead said that the $8 million could be better used for helping fund education or fighting crime in the streets.

Sharp negated arguments that eliminating the Treasury would do away with a "check-and-balance" system with the Comptroller's Office.

"I have never seen a Treasury employee in my office doing anything other than coming over to visit or to have a cup of coffee," Sharp said. "There is no function."

Historically, the "most powerful function" of the Treasury was to grant bank charters, but since the federal government has deregulated bank charters, that function has been eliminated, Sharp said.

Once she is elected to office, Ms. Whitehead said she is "going to testify" before the Texas Legislature for abolishment of the Texas Treasury. I am going to lobby the Legislature. I am going to campaign across the state for the passage of this constitutional amendment.

"The advances in technology have tremendously changed the Treasury," Ms. Whitehead said. "We don't have money any more in the Treasury. I should say currency. All of those transactions are completed by wire" and means other than handling cash money. "We have our own Federal Reserve account in San Antonio.

There is no reason for the existence of the Texas Treasury other than the support staff that serves the elected treasurer, she said.

Down syndrome twins meet life's challenges

By Charlotte Huff
Corpus Christi Caller-Times

CORPUS CHRISTI — Bobbie Lord still remembers an incident 16 years ago when she was walking through a shopping mall with her 10-year-old daughters, both of whom have Down syndrome. As was sometimes the case, people kept glancing their way. One man repeatedly peered over his shoulder.

"Robin just put her hand out and said, 'Hello, my name is Robin and I'm mentally retarded. What is your problem?' "

But Mrs. Lord never treated her daughters as if they had "a problem" — an approach that she believes has been instrumental in allowing them to achieve their potential.

Now 26, the twins both work at local H.E.B. stores, assisting with bagging groceries, carrying them to cars and tracking down prices on items.

Erin has worked at the store at Saratoga and Everhart for three years. Robin started working at the Weber and Holly store nearly two years ago. Managers at both stores say the twins, who required some additional assistance from store personnel and the Texas Rehabilitation Commission during their initial months, have won over customers with their helpfulness and enthusiasm.

The twins say they look forward to boarding the bus to work three times a week. "They tell me what to do and I just do it," Erin Lord said. "I love it. I have a lot of friends at work and I've met a lot of people."

Although they appear identical with their wavy brown hair and light-blue eyes, they are fraternal twins. Erin tends to be the more outgoing, often completing Robin's sentences and taking the lead on helping with dinner and other activities. Robin does more reading and works puzzles and talks on the phone with her friends.

'We kind of felt like that God gave them to us, and if he wants to take them, he will take them whenever he wants to. And when he didn't, we just continued to raise them and care for them.'

— Bobbie Lord, mother

"Being part of the community, we need to represent everyone well," said Dan Kara, unit director at the H.E.B. where Erin works. "Erin and her sister are part of this community. If they don't do a great job, there wouldn't be an opening for them. They are excellent workers. They have to perform like all of the other folks, but we might take a few more moments to give them extra training in the beginning."

Down syndrome, a genetic disorder, is commonly characterized by mental-retardation and some distinctive physical features, such as upward-slanting eyes, a flat nose and a small head. Other related medical problems include an increased risk of heart disorders, poor vision and respiratory problems.

The disorder, which affects 1 in 700 births, stems from the addition of an extra chromosome in the newborn's genetic structure. Mrs. Lord said her daughters were born prematurely and with congenital heart defects. They were given two years to live — a warning she and her husband decided to ignore.

"We kind of felt like that God gave them to us, and if he wants to take them, he will take them whenever he wants to," Mrs. Lord said. "And when he didn't, we just continued to raise them and care for them."

Neither she nor her husband were given much encouragement about the twins' long-term intellectual and social development.

"Back then, when they were born, there was really nothing for them," she said. "It was really, like, 'just take them home and do what you can for them and hope for the best.' I think a lot of the mentally retarded children were treated the same way. They just kept them in the closet and didn't do a whole lot with them — they weren't stimulated or anything."

But that attitude has undergone an evolution, particularly in the past five to 10 years, said Mario A. Munoz, director of residential services at Ada Wilson Children's Center. Research has shown that Down syndrome children who begin education and physical therapy in early childhood will do better over the long term, he said.

Some parents did not wait for the research, he said. "More and more parents began to question physicians," Munoz said.

Horse trainer uses gentle methods to tame animals

By Art Chapman
N.Y. Times News Service

WILLS POINT — If horse trainer David Skipworth has his way, wild mustangs will have homes someday, racehorses will be better behaved and zebras will pull all manner of wagons.

It's a broad vision, but Skipworth has worked the mustangs, done the zebras and is now ready to try his "gentle hands" approach on thoroughbreds.

"Horses have always caught the blunt end of everything," Skipworth began with the zeal of an evangelist. "They say dogs are man's best friend, but that isn't true. The horse is. The horse has always helped man out, but they've always been whipped, beaten and punished."

It's a matter of understanding, he insisted. If we don't understand an animal, we have a tendency to fear it and abuse it. Perhaps even take it to the brink of extinction.

It almost happened with the mustangs.

"They thought the mustangs were crazy, inbred, wild and that nothing could be done with them. That's hogwash," he said.

"My idea was, if we're ever going to save the wild horse, we'll have to prove to people that they're just as good a horse as any other. We did. We proved our point."

Skipworth, who runs his training programs out of Terrell but lives in Arlington, has been a professional horse trainer for 27 years.

It was while he was guiding and outfitting in the Colorado Rockies that he was contacted by the U.S. Bureau of Land Management about the wild mustang program.

Skipworth agreed to help on an experimental basis, but using conventional training methods, he had little luck over the next five years.

"Let me tell you," he said. "I got hurt, horses got hurt. It just wasn't working."

He decided to spend more time watching the mustangs in their natural habitat, learning how they moved, how they communicated, their herd instincts.

"The old way is out," he said. "We're learning to communicate with the horses. We're using a gentler method."

And it's working, Skipworth said, even with zebras.

He contacted Jim Toon, owner of the Texotic Animal Farm in Wills Point, about trying his techniques with zebras, which are considered difficult to train.

There are, Skipworth immediately found, several differences between horses and zebras. Most horses, for example, enjoy being stroked or petted near their neck and withers; zebras do not.

The base of the neck is just about where the zebra's natural enemies — lions, leopards and so on — attack.

"I learned that you pet a zebra's back, not its neck," Skipworth said. "When I figured that out, he calmed right down. I was riding him in about 11 hours. The more calm they get, the easier they are to ride. But they would make a whole lot better driving animal."

In most cases, Skipworth figured, zebras could be trained to work in harness in 30 days or less.

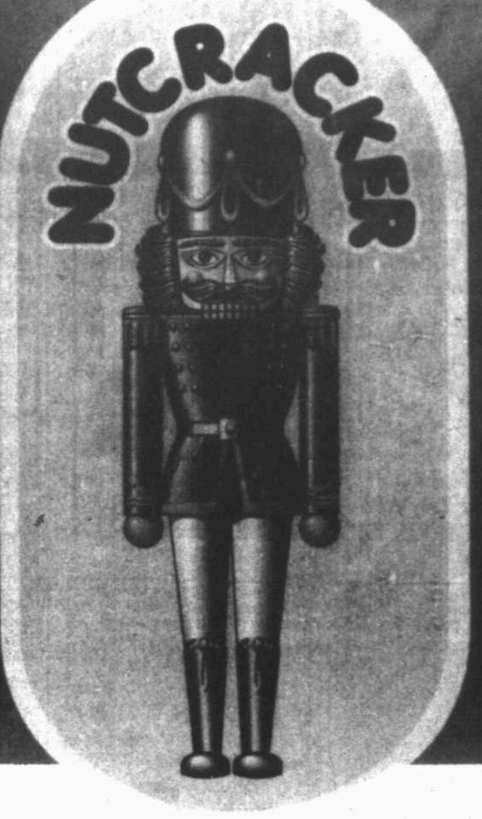

"If we could show people that zebras are trainable and ridable and drivable, it would open up a whole new market," he said. "It would put an end to people killing them."

And like the zebra and mustang, thoroughbreds are in danger, too, Skipworth said.

If they don't win races, they are often sold for slaughter.

Skipworth believes that there should be a training period for a racehorse before it ever sees a track.

"I take each horse and work them in a round pen," he explained.

YOUR HOROSCOPE

By Jeane Dixon

WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 2, 1994

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: You must act in the best interests of your career. A transaction concluded by the end of 1994 will pay dividends for years to come. Travel holds special appeal early in 1995. Be careful if tempted to combine business with pleasure while on the road. An office romance could have unintended consequences. Put a child's needs ahead of your own and you will have nothing to reproach yourself for later on.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: actress Stefanie Powers, actor Burt Lancaster, frontiersman Daniel Boone, golfer David Stockton.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Although a loved one may think that what you are doing is silly, you know better. Travel will not be worth the expense. Postpone a business trip. Co-workers are more congenial than in recent days.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Focus your attention on career considerations today. Do not overlook the forest when searching for the trees. Get to know a new partner's views. Being familiar with an ally's quirks will make for a better team.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): The emphasis now is on replacing bad habits with good ones. Pursuing new interests will keep you from backsliding. Avoid challenging those in authority today.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Follow your sociable inclinations so long as they do not interfere with your duties and responsibilities. Those in charge may be overly demanding.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Seize control of your financial destiny. It is better to be decisive and make an occasional mistake than to be afraid to act. Romance looks delightful for the truly eligible. Speak from the heart.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Listen to the voice of reason when making business choices. Practicality is a must! Excessive ambition can trip you up. Maintain your dignity and poise at all times. Resist the urge to tell someone off.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Remain where you are safe from temptation, out of the reach of someone who is selfish. An invitation to visit an entirely new place holds special appeal. Consult a wise friend before saying "yes" or "no."

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Let your competitors take all the financial risks now. Emphasize compassion over pride on your way to the top. Always be available to help your mate or business partner in case of an emergency.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Teach your loved ones to be more thrifty if you see that they are making serious inroads into your resources. Creative endeavors are the best cure for boredom. Suggest a contest or art fair.

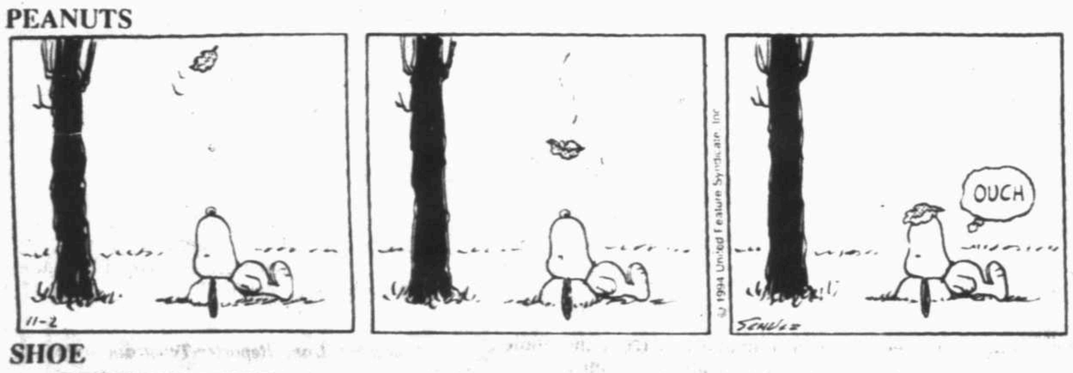

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Heed an instinct to be cautious. Do your work at home or wherever is most convenient. Acquiring specialized knowledge will help you protect your assets. Be open-minded about new methods and procedures.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): A friendly atmosphere helps your associates reconcile their differences and adopt a course acceptable to all. Discard prejudices. Show restraint when dealing with relatives or acquaintances who oppose your views. Time will prove you right.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Although your optimism is commendable, you must be careful not to go overboard. Evaluate current and coming trends. A gentle, conciliatory approach will restore harmony at home. Unexpected visitors could alter your evening plans.

TODAY'S CHILDREN are peace-loving and gentle, greatly disturbed by ugliness and violence. They often volunteer to act as mediators in hopes of restoring harmony as quickly as possible.

The year 1933 was memorable. On the international scene, Hitler came to power. In bridge, one of your columnists was born and this hand was dealt in the club championship pair event at the Franklin Bridge club in Philadelphia.

At most tables the final contract was six hearts, sometimes reached on the auction shown. At no table was the contract fulfilled unless West chose to lead the ace of clubs.

More often than not, the opening lead was the singleton diamond. As long as the defenders did not get careless, declarer could not find a way to avoid the loss of two tricks — either two diamonds or the ace of clubs and the fourth spade. It was only in the postmortem that a way to get home was uncovered.

Suppose that, after winning the first trick with the king of diamonds, declarer draws trumps in three rounds and then continues with the ace of diamonds. When West shows out, declarer is in position to take advantage of the fact that West has only black cards remaining.

Declarer next cashes the king of spades, then leads the deuce and finesses dummy's 10. When that wins the trick, declarer plays the king of clubs and discards the ace of spades from hand!

If West ducks, that's declarer's 12th trick, but winning is no better. West can only return a black card, bringing the board back to life, and the table's two black queens allow declarer to sluff the two losing diamonds from hand and land the slam.

Memories of the way Streisand was don't reach auction block

LOS ANGELES — Memories of the way she was didn't reach the auction block because a federal judge stopped the sale of six diaries written by Barbra Streisand in the 1960s.

Judge stops sale of Barbra Streisand's diaries.

The diaries were among celebrity items to be auctioned off last weekend. U.S. District Judge Laughlin Waters blocked the auction pending a hearing later this week on the diaries, said Miss Streisand's lawyer, James Tropp.

Troop would not say who owned the diaries last.

Miss Streisand's spokesman Martin Erlichman predicted the papers "would never be on the street again."

LOS ANGELES — "Above the Law" star Steven Seagal isn't above divorce law: His wife of seven years, actress Kelly LeBrock, wants to call it quits.

Steven Seagal's wife, Kelly LeBrock, wants a divorce.

The couple separated Oct. 1, and LeBrock cited irreconcilable differences in divorce papers filed Monday.

LeBrock is seeking custody of the couple's two daughters and one son.

NEW YORK — The audience at the Metropolitan Opera got a Halloween treat. The trick was played on Luciano Pavarotti.

The tenor, singing in Monday night's "Tosca," repeated an aria to his own great surprise. Normally, the Metropolitan, unlike other opera houses, does not repeat an aria when applause brings a production to a halt.

"That was our trick or treat for Halloween — trick Luciano and treat the audience," conductor James Levine said at intermission.

Pavarotti received a long ovation for his third-act aria "E lucevan le stelle."

"When he heard the music that precedes the aria instead of the music that follows it, he got a stunned look on his face," said Joseph Volpe, Met general manager "He walked around to the front of the table, slowly, like in disbelief."

Then Pavarotti sang the aria again.

Volpe said this was the first time an artist had encored an aria since the Met opened in Lincoln Center in 1966.

AUGUSTA, Ga. — A judge dismissed a traffic charge against the Godfather of Soul on Tuesday after a bicyclist who was hit by James Brown's car agreed to accept damages instead.

Judge dismisses traffic charge against Godfather of Soul.

The amount was not disclosed.

John Nixon, 42, was knocked to the pavement in the Aug. 28 accident. He refused medical treatment.

Brown, 61, was to have appeared in court on a charge of failure to yield the right of way. But Judge Carl Brown Jr. announced the charge was dropped in favor of a settlement.

Brown spent two years in prison in South Carolina after taking police on an auto chase. He was released in 1991 and completed parole in 1993.

AMSTERDAM, Netherlands — John Wayne Bobbitt visited sex shops in the city's red-light district Tuesday to promote his new video.

He stars as himself in the hard-core "John Wayne Bobbitt Uncut," which recreates his version of how his wife, Lorena, sliced off his penis.

Bobbitt, whose penis was reattached, is on a six-day European promotional tour for the video.

In an interview with a Dutch news program, he said he made the video in part because "everybody is interested in knowing what happened." He described the incident as a "love crime."

Dear Fellow Midlander:

Hundreds of volunteers have been working overtime to make this year's United Way Campaign a success.

They've called on our always generous foundations, our civic-spirited corporate citizens and Midlanders in all walks of life, asking for their support so 16 local agencies can continue their great work of providing services to more than 36,000 Midlanders each year.

More than 500 companies and 10,000 individuals are responsible for the highest per capita giving in the state each year and that's something about which every single resident of this city can be proud!

But we need your help, especially this year.

If you have not done so, please consider making a contribution. We need it desperately if our agencies are to have the funds they must have in order to provide assistance to Midlanders next year.

And if you have given but feel you can give more, won't you do that?

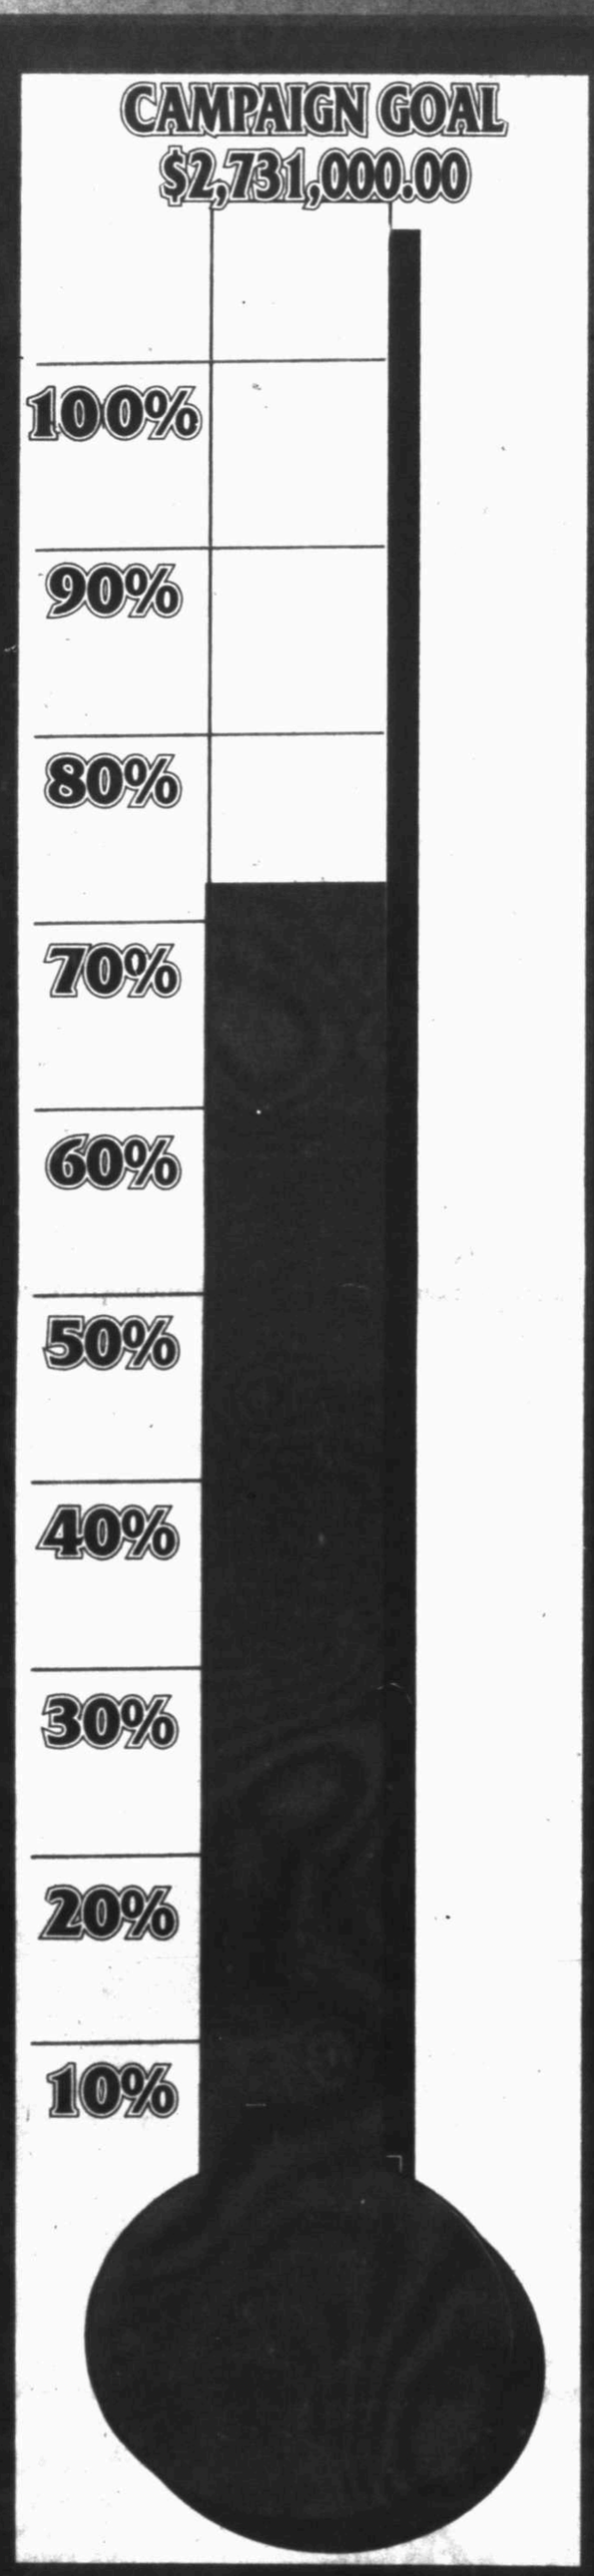

This year's campaign ends Tuesday, November 8th. Time is short but the need is great. When you give you're helping serve the needs of all those who turn to the following:

Casa de Amigos
Midland Need to Read, Inc.
Palmer Drug Abuse Program
Salvation Army
Permian Basin Center For Battered Women & Their children
Boy Scouts of America, Buffalo Trail Council

Jordan bid farewell

CHICAGO — With a bronze statue unveiled outside the stadium and a No. 23 jersey raised to the rooftop, Chicago said farewell Tuesday night to the best basketball player this city — and this sport — has ever known.

For two hours, teammates, opponents, fans, former coaches, entertainers and family celebrated and lauded not only Michael Jordan's basketball career but also his life.

It was glitzy. It was made-for-TV. It was loud. At times the salute to the man who led the Chicago Bulls to three straight championships before taking early retirement 13 months ago gushed.

North Carolina coach Dean Smith and comedian Sinbad shared the same stage, actor Woody Harrelson joined his fellow "Cheers" stars George Wendt and Kelsey Grammer in a muscial tribute and master of ceremonies Ahmad Rashad jokingly tried to coax Jordan back to basketball.

Jordan's highlights — an NCAA championship, two Olympic gold medals, three MVPs in the regular season and three in the NBA finals — flashed across the large scoreboard in the new United Center, where a near sellout crowd came to watch.

Cowboys to report

IRVING — Dallas coach Barry Switzer said Tuesday the Cowboys are going to make a report to the NFL office about the head shot quarterback Troy Aikman received from James Francis in Sunday's 23-20 victory over the Cincinnati Bengals.

"He (Francis) knew what he was doing and it was uncalled for," Switzer said. "He went to Troy's head and that bothers me. We're going to report it."

The Bengals received a 15-yard penalty for the blow to the head. Dallas got new life on a fourth-and-nine incomplete pass and eventually scored a touchdown on the drive.

It was the second consecutive week Aikman had been hit in the head. He suffered a concussion two weeks ago when he was hit by Wilber Marshall of Arizona.

Aikman did not appear to be injured by the Francis hit.

Mavs trade Rooks

DALLAS — The Dallas Mavericks on Tuesday traded center Sean Rooks to the Minnesota Timberwolves for a first-round draft pick in 1996, 1997 or 1998.

Rooks, the 30th overall pick in the 1992 draft, averaged 5.7 points on .457 shooting and 3.4 rebounds in seven preseason games this season. He averaged 11.4 points and 5.5 rebounds in 47 games last season while slowed by foot injuries.

"Sean Rooks did a nice job for us the last two seasons, but the opportunity to acquire another first-round draft choice makes sense for us," said Keith Grant, director of player personnel.

Errors, Tascosa beat MHS

■ Mistake-prone Midland High falls to Amarillo Tascosa 15-4, 15-7 in Class 5A bi-district volleyball action Tuesday.

By Amy Wolfenbarger
Staff Writer

BROWNFIELD — Make that four for four.

The Tascosa Lady Rebels continued their dominance over District 4-5A volleyball here Tuesday with a 15-4, 15-7 whipping of Midland High in bi-district volleyball action at the Brownfield gym.

Tascosa has now knocked four 4-5A teams out of the playoffs in three years. But this time it was the Lady Dawgs who were their own worst enemies.

"We didn't get any sets to anybody, we didn't get any passes to anybody and so we didn't get any kills," said MHS coach Terri McColloch. "Nothing went right."

The Lady Dawgs, the 4-5A runner-up, ended their season at 17-12 overall while Tascosa (22-10) advanced to face 1-5A champion El Paso Austin (27-2) in an area contest.

In the first match of the 3-5A vs. 4-5A double header here Tuesday, Odessa High came out like gangbusters but fell to an Amarillo Palo Duro rally to lose 11-15, 15-12, 15-3. OHS, the 4-5A third-place representative, ended its season at 16-13 overall. Palo Duro (19-10) advanced to face 2-5A champ El Paso Eastwood (29-7) with the match tentatively set for Friday or Saturday in Odessa.

MHS' problems began almost instantaneously when Tascosa took a 6-2 first-game lead and never looked back. The Lady Dawgs were having no success setting up their most effective hitters over the year, Toya Zachery and Elisabeth Mathiassen. That essentially doomed MHS' first playoff appearance in three years.

"You can't not hit against a team like Tascosa and expect to win," McColloch said.

One service ace each by Christi Berg and Cristi Fleetwood boosted THS to an 8-2 lead and one of several MHS hitting errors in the match pushed the lead to 9-2. Two more MHS hitting errors and another THS ace, this time by Megan Woodburn, continued the run to 12-2.

MHS pulled to within 12-4 on a kill by Jennifer Allen but two straight kills by Tina Regan, including one on an MHS overset pushed THS to game point. Another passing error by MHS set up a game-ending stuff block by Christen Scharbauer and Regan.

"Maybe it was nerves, but I don't know (what caused the MHS errors)," McColloch said. "But we're a better ball club than we showed tonight.

"We beat ourselves," she added.

Harper tops deep threats

■ Dallas receiver Alvin Harper has caught on as one of the Cowboys top offensive threats this year.

By Denne H. Freeman
AP Sports Writer

IRVING — The ball floated to the goal line where two Cincinnati Bengals and Alvin Harper waited. It was no contest.

Harper jumped between the pair of Bengals defenders and somehow came down with the ball for a touchdown. Then, he dunked it over the 10-foot high crossbar on the goalpost.

"I'm not sure how he made that catch," quarterback Troy Aikman said. "I was on the ground and didn't get to see it until later. I was impressed. But Harp does that a lot."

Harper had six catches for 125 yards in a 23-20 victory over the Bengals and his fifth touchdown of the season, a career high. He has become just as deadly a weapon on Dallas as Jay Novacek or Michael Irvin.

Harper has had a touchdown or a reception of at least 35 yards in eight consecutive games.

"I told Troy to just start throwing the ball and I'd make the play," Harper said. "He did and I did. Teams double Michael a lot and I want to convince Troy to just throw the ball up there. I'll go get it."

Harper, often the Cowboys forgotten receiver because of spectacular Michael Irvin, has been on a big play binge. It couldn't come at a better time. He'll be an unrestricted free agent next year.

"I think I can play a major role on any team," Harper said. "I'm trying to prove that this year. Just get the ball to me."

Harper, high jumper in college, signed a one-year contract for $886,000. He said he would like to stay with the Cowboys.

However, there could be salary cap problems because

Ejection gets Rodman suspended by Spurs

■ San Antonio will soon determine how long to suspend forward Dennis Rodman after his ejection from a preseason game.

By Kelley Shannon
Associated Press Writer

SAN ANTONIO — The San Antonio Spurs on Tuesday suspended Dennis Rodman without pay after another combative episode by the forward got him ejected from a preseason game.

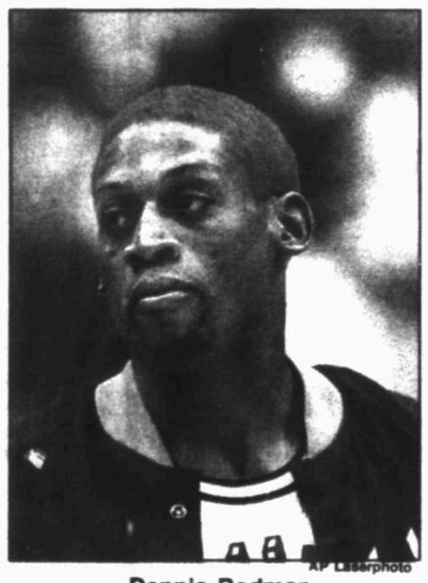

"We're just trying to get his attention as best we can," said coach Bob Hill. "We've pretty much planted our feet on the kind of team we want to have ... He needs to become a part of that."

Spurs general manager Gregg Popovich said team officials would decide soon on the length of the suspension.

"Making it indefinite will not fly. That's just something that we can't do legally. So we've got to decide how long the suspension should be," Popovich said, adding that Rodman will be suspended at least through Friday's season opener against Golden State.

Rodman, 33, who led the league in rebounding last season with an average of 17.3, makes a reported $2.4 million per year.

Permian, Cooper match just hot air

The hoopla has begun for the Odessa Permian vs. Abilene Cooper matchup Friday night in Odessa's Ratliff Stadium, but if the truth be known, that game has little meaning in the overall scheme of things in the District 4-5A football race.

Williamson

Oh yes, those two teams are playing for the outright district championship. But that title has little meaning in these days of three teams to the playoffs. And this one has even less meaning.

For instance, both teams are already in the playoffs, destined for different playoff brackets. Win or lose, Permian will be in the Big School bracket while Cooper will be in the Small School bracket as the top seed from 4-5A.

No matter who wins Friday's game, it won't change who these teams meet in the playoffs. Permian is going to meet Lubbock Coronado in bi-district, the same as last year before getting the playoff boot. Cooper is going to face Lubbock Monterey, the same matchup as a year ago. And both 4-5A teams will have home games in the first round since they both played these same teams last year on the road. The only thorn here is that Permian may not be automatically awarded that chance since they weren't supposed to be in the playoffs last year, according to the UIL.

Cooper also has that No. 1 state ranking on the line, but that carries no weight in playoff games and it won't help Permian in the playoffs since the Big School bracket will be choked with third place teams.

So, the fans will scream, and half will end up crying come Friday night, but the outcome means very little, actually nothing, to the future success of these two teams.

So, is there a real game Friday night? Yes, it comes in San Angelo where the Bobcats host Midland High. It's ironic that neither of these two teams will be in the playoffs next week, but they hold the ultimate fate of playoff hopefuls Midland Lee and Odessa High.

If San Angelo beats MHS, the Bobcats would force a three-way tie with Lee and OHS. Lee would go to the playoffs by virtue of 18 positive points in an earlier victory over San Angelo. If the Bobcats lose to MHS, Lee and OHS would end up in a two-way tie and Odessa High goes to the playoffs by virtue of beating Lee 19-9 in the only head-to-head meeting. Of course, OHS must beat Abilene High (1-7) Friday. One takes that for granted.

Rebel fans will be pulling for a San Angelo victory and OHS fans will be pulling for an MHS win. Somehow that seems fitting for a season ending game. A lot rides on the outcome although neither team involved can create a playoff possibility.

Lee has the open date this week and can start preparing for District 3-5A champion Amarillo High while wondering if there is even going to be a game. That would seem to be a plus for Lee if they do make the playoffs, but Amarillo, too, just happens to have an open date this week, negating any Lee advantage. However, Amarillo does have to consider two teams since they may end up playing Odessa High.

So, all this leaves you wondering just what to expect from the MHS-San Angelo outing. Which team will show up?

Midland High has to be excited about the contest since the Bulldogs can finish at the .500 mark (5-5) with a win. That means a climb from 0-10 to 5-5 in one year. On the other hand, San Angelo is coming off a Permian loss that eliminated the Bobcats from any playoff hopes. San Angelo, too, could end up at .500 (4-4-2), but its season was on the line last week.

This could be a good week for MHS to catch the Bobcats. And this is news that Lee fans don't want to hear.

Team reps doubt realignment will make sense

■ NFL Meetings

ROSEMONT, Ill. (AP) — Though NFL commissioner Paul Tagliabue still thinks divisional realignment is possible, several team representatives doubt common sense will prevail in a league that has Atlanta in the West, Arizona in the East and Tampa in the middle.

"I think ultimately, we'd like to move some people around — as long as it's not us," Minnesota president Roger Headrick said Tuesday during a break in NFL meetings. "But that's the way other people feel, too, and that's why we don't get anything done.

"You've got basic inertia — if it isn't going to help me, why do it?"

Tagliabue promised that, before the meetings end Wednesday, the Jacksonville and Charlotte expansion teams will have divisional homes for next season.

If the owners don't pass some form of realignment, Tagliabue has the authority to place the expansion teams in current four-team divisions, thereby creating six divisions of five teams each.

Most likely, Jacksonville would join Pittsburgh, Cleveland, Cincinnati and Houston in the AFC Central, while Charlotte would go into the NFC West with San Francisco, Atlanta, New Orleans and the Los Angeles Rams.

But Tagliabue still thinks realignment might take place.

"We shouldn't throw up our hands," he said. "The complexities are: How do you take something that is extremely strong and successful and make a little bit of a leap of faith to make it even better?"

Pittsburgh owner Dan Rooney has proposed that six teams — Seattle, Tampa Bay, Arizona, Indianapolis, Houston and Atlanta — change divisions.

"I think it would get the majority of the votes, but we need" 21 of 28 to approve realignment, Rooney said. "It's difficult, like trying to override a presidential veto."

Like Tagliabue, Jacksonville owner Wayne Weaver doesn't think realignment is dead. Weaver learned to expect the unexpected from the NFL, which shocked everyone by expanding into Jacksonville instead of St. Louis or Baltimore.

"Lots of surprises can happen in the 11th hour," he said.

Jacksonville and Charlotte don't have votes.

Indianapolis general manager Jim Irsay would welcome a move out of the AFC East to the NFC Central or AFC Central. And Tampa Bay vice president Rich McKay would like to see the Buccaneers leave the NFC Central for the AFC East, setting up an instant rivalry with Miami.

A simple solution would be to swap the position of the teams. But Chicago and Green Bay don't like the idea of having three domed-stadium teams — Minnesota, Detroit and Indianapolis — in the NFC Central.

"Realignment sounds good, but it's just not going to happen," McKay said.

"We also like our division, so if it doesn't happen, we'll live with it," Irsay said.

The league on Wednesday also is expected to choose between Miami and San Francisco as site of the 1999 Super Bowl.

In other news Tuesday, Minnesota coach Dennis Green was named a voting member of the competition committee, replacing Seattle coach Tom Flores. Green Bay's Mike Holmgren replaced Kansas City's Marty Schottenheimer as chairman of the coaches' subcommittee, an advisory (non-voting) group.

No message from Eagle QB

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Randall Cunningham said he won't have anything to say to Buddy Ryan this week as the Philadelphia Eagles prepare to take on their old coach.

Cunningham said all he had to say to Ryan in a letter he wrote to his former coach. He wouldn't provide details of the letter, except to say he explained to Ryan he had nothing to do with his being fired by the Eagles in 1991.

"We never really got to talk about the situation with him getting fired here," Cunningham said. "I was a scapegoat and everything. Through my letter, I explained that I didn't try to get him fired or anything like that. That's the bottom line."

Ryan was fired following the 1990 season by then-owner Norman Braman after Ryan yanked Cunningham in favor of then-Eagles, now-Cardinals backup Jim McMahon for one series in the Eagles' 20-6 playoff loss to Washington.

Ryan, defensive coordinator of the Houston Oilers before taking the Arizona head coaching job this season, said Tuesday he had received the letter "two or three months ago" and that he knew Cunningham wasn't behind his dismissal as Eagles coach.

"He had a lot to say in the letter. It was a very nice letter," Ryan said, adding that Cunningham also sent a tree that is now in the Cardinals' office lobby. "It's about eight feet tall. It must have cost four or five hundred dollars."

The Eagles (6-2) had Tuesday off. Cunningham made his statements Monday as Eagles players began talking about their first game against Ryan, who led Philadelphia to three playoff berths and a 43-35-1 record from 1986-90.

Cunningham at first said he wouldn't talk about the Cardinals (3-5). "I don't want things turned around, so it's best for me not to say anything about them."

Then he spoke briefly. "I'll say one thing about Buddy Ryan. He's a great coach. I respect him. I sent him a letter. I have all the respect in the world for him and his coaching staff."

Pressed to talk about the letter, Cunningham refused. "The thing is, my point is, he knows how I feel about him."

The Eagles seemed to go out of their way to avoid fueling the publicity engine that certainly will go into overdrive as Ryan and a number of former Eagles — including Clyde Simmons, Seth Joyner and Andre Waters — return to Philadelphia with the Cardinals.

Simmons, Joyner and Waters were key members of the hard-hitting defense Ryan built for the Eagles. The year after he left, Philadelphia led the NFL in rushing and passing defense.

Even linebacker Byron Evans — a Phoenix native, friend and former teammate of Simmons, Joyner and Waters, and the wearer of a Cardinals baseball cap during the offseason — was low-key.

Evans said he has "100 percent respect" for Ryan, whom he said, "believed in me when no one else believed in me."

But he also knows that the flamboyant Ryan often tries to get a psychological edge over opponents by making outlandish statements.

"Coach Ryan is coach Ryan," Evans said. "He plays head games with other people and if you feed into it, then he has you where he wants you."

Center Dave Alexander, who also spoke fondly of how Ryan gave him his start in pro ball, admitted it was "going to be strange going against him."

"It's going to be different," Alexander added. "It's going to be strange playing across Clyde and Seth in those Cardinal uniforms. It's going to seem strange until we get into the flow of the game."

Wide receiver Fred Barnett said he and safety Waters "always talked about playing against each other, so that is going to be fun."

Cornerback Eric Allen and Waters were longtime roommates. "We both studied meticulously. We tried to get any edge we could. We'd check out signals on the sidelines and try to get them."

Rich Kotite, the former Eagles offensive coordinator who was elevated to head coach when Ryan was fired, vowed he wouldn't get "sucked in" to the media hype that will surround the game.

He said he told his team it can't avoid the, hype but to remember that "you are the people who cannot get involved with it. You have to concentrate and focus."

Although he brushed aside questions about whether he had an extra incentive to win, Allen talked about what a win would mean to Kotite.

"I know coach Kotite wants this one bad," he said. "We're going to try and deliver it for him."

Knake, Wickware honored

FORT WORTH, Texas (AP) — When a quarterback has a guy like Andre Davis in the backfield, his job gets a lot easier. Hand off a few times and defenders sit on their heels, expecting the run and becoming vulnerable to passes.

So last Saturday, Max Knake put the ball in Davis' hands to get Texas Christian downfield. Then, when it came time to score, Knake took over.

The junior quarterback threw four perfect touchdown passes in a 27-25 victory over Rice on Saturday that muddled the Southwest Conference race.

Precision was the theme of the day for Knake, who set a school record for accuracy by completing 13-of-16 passes with no interceptions for 170 yards and tied another TCU mark with his 19th touchdown pass of the season.

For the performance, he is The Associated Press Offensive Player of the Week.

Texas Tech defensive lineman Damon Wickware became the second straight Red Raider to win the AP's Defensive Player of the Week. He had a career-best 2½ sacks in the Red Raiders' 33-9 victory over then-No. 19 Texas.

"Max made some great plays," Horned Frogs coach Pat Sullivan said. "It seems that every time someone makes a defensive mistake, Max finds it."

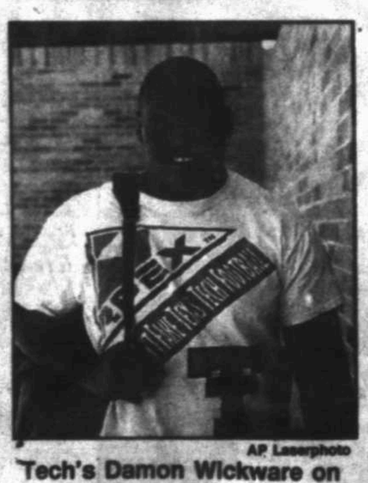

Davis got the game going by rushing for 101 of his 221 yards in the first quarter, setting up Knake's first two touchdown passes.

The first was a 15-yarder on a fade to John Washington into the front left corner of the end zone. Washington took off from the line and didn't look up until he was in the end zone. There the ball was waiting to be cradled.

On their next drive, the Horned Frogs faced third-and-3 from the Owls' 16.

Knake appeared to have done the expecting — sticking the ball in Davis' chest — but he pulled it back, the defense bit and Knake flicked the ball across the middle to tight end Brian Collins.

"It takes a lot of weight off my shoulders, when I hand the ball of, and look up and see a hole you could drive a truck through," Knake said.

Tech's Damon Wickware on campus Tuesday.

Then it was time for Knake and Chris Brasfield to make highlights.

On a designed roll out from the Rice 14, Knake went right and drilled a low line drive to the front corner of the end zone that Brasfield slid for and caught between the numbers to give TCU a 20-6 halftime lead.

Two consecutive scores by Rice tightened things up a bit, then Knake threw his best pass of the day: a 57-yard bomb down the middle of the field that Brasfield caught on a dead run after he blew past two defenders.

Knake's knockout of Rice and Tech's Wickware-led victory over Texas threw the SWC scene in a tizzy and may have cleared a path for the Red Raiders to win their first league title.

"We're not supposed to be thinking about the Cotton Bowl yet," Wickware said. "But it's hard not to after a game like this. It definitely entered my mind out there."

The thoughts came up while Tech was stuffing the Texas offensive and holding the Longhorns to 213 yards.

"I've been here when Texas was killing us," said Wickware, a fifth-year senior. "I never thought something like this would happen ... where we totally dominated them."

Maddux, Ripken repeat as all-stars

Associated Press

Greg Maddux was picked for the third straight year and Cal Ripken Jr. made it for the sixth time overall on the major league all-star team chosen Tuesday by The Associated Press.

Jeff Bagwell and Frank Thomas, who won MVP honors last week, each made AP's 12-member team. The Cleveland Indians, with Albert Belle and Carlos Baerga, and the Baltimore Orioles, with Ripken and Lee Smith, both placed two players.

The team, which includes three pitchers and a designated hitter, was selected by a nationwide poll of 58 sports writers and broadcasters. The AP has chosen a combined all-star team since 1982.

Several ballots, however, reflected frustration about the strike-shortened season. One voter wrote "Mr. Greedy" for each position while another listed various team owners, union officials and negotiators for each spot, saying those were the only names he remembered from this year.

The AP team included Bagwell at first base, Baerga at second base, Ripken at shortstop, Matt Williams at third base and Mike Piazza at catcher.

Ken Griffey Jr., Tony Gwynn and Belle were in the outfield and Thomas was the designated hitter. Maddux was the right-handed starting pitcher, Jimmy Key was the left-handed starter and Smith was the reliever.

Felipe Alou of Montreal was chosen Monday as AP's manager of the year. The AP's player of the year will be announced Wednesday.

Maddux was a near-unanimous winner as the right-handed starting pitcher. The Atlanta ace, who recently won his record third consecutive Cy Young Award after going 16-6 with a 1.56 ERA, was named on 57 of 58 ballots. Bret Saberhagen of the New York Mets got the other vote.

Maddux's streak of three straight selections is the longest among current players. Thomas, Williams and Piazza were picked for the second consecutive year.

Williams (55), Piazza (50) and Griffey (49) were among the other top vote-getters.

The closest vote was at DH, where Thomas got 12 votes and Paul Molitor received 11. Thomas played only 12 games at DH for the Chicago White Sox this season, but several voters put him at that spot after listing Bagwell ahead of him at first base.

Thomas, a two-time MVP, batted .353 with 38 home runs and 101 RBIs. He led the majors in on-base average (.487), runs (106) and walks (109) and topped the AL in slugging percentage at .729.

Bagwell, who beat out Thomas 30-25 at first base in the AP voting, hit .368 with 39 home runs for Houston. He led the majors in RBIs (116) and slugging percentage (.750) before being sidelined by a broken hand Aug. 10, two days before the strike.

Ripken batted .315 with 13 homers and 75 RBIs. He made his first AP all-star team in 1983 and, like Maddux, received a $50,000 bonus in his contract this season for being selected.

Gwynn, who led the majors by batting .394 for San Diego, made the team for the first time since 1984. Smith, who led the majors with 33 saves, and Key, whose 17 wins for the New York Yankees were the most in baseball, joined Gwynn as second-time selections.

Williams was a third-time choice after hitting 43 home runs, most in the majors, for San Francisco. Griffey, also picked in 1991, led the AL with 40 homers for Seattle and Piazza hit .319 with 24 homers and 92 RBIs for Los Angeles.

Baerga and Belle both were first-time choices. Baerga, who hit .314 with 80 RBIs, got 19 votes to 13 for Houston's Craig Biggio, who hit .318 with 44 doubles and led the NL with 39 stolen bases.

Belle batted .357 with 36 homers and 101 RBIs. Belle and Gwynn tied behind Griffey with 36 votes, while Cleveland's Kenny Lofton was fourth with 20 and Barry Bonds, picked to the previous four AP all-star teams, was fifth with 16.

Yankees raise tickets prices $8

NEW YORK (AP) — With no assurance there will even be a baseball season next year, the New York Yankees have raised their top ticket price by $8 to $25, creating 4,300 club seats with waiter service.

About 4,000 seats in the new category will be on the field level and about 300 will be in the loge level. The price of other box seats in the first two decks will rise $1 to $18.

Upper boxes will rise 50 cents to $16. Main level reserved seats stay at $14.50 and upper reserved remains at $11.50. The price of bleacher seats will drop 50 cents to $6.

"This was a way that we could provide some comparable amenities and cut 50 accommodation to those that are provided elsewhere is this market and comparable to what's being provided in major league baseball in most ballparks," Yankees executive president David Sussman said.

The increase in the top ticket price was first reported in Tuesday's editions of Newsday and was confirmed Tuesday by the club.

Other clubs also have announced increases. The top price for the Colorado Rockies will rise $10 to $26 next year when move from Mile High Stadium to Coors Field.

"We have 16 luxury suites," Sussman said. "Some of the newer ballparks have more than 100. We tried to work within the ballpark that we have to create that kind of environment."

Season-ticket holders in the areas of the new section who don't want the new amenities would have to change their seats.

"We have gotten some phone calls asking if they decide not to participate in this, where they'd be relocated to," Sussman said. "We said we'd put them on a priority list for the best available seats."

Wargo's last-hole putt edges Chi Chi for win

■ Senior Shootout

LANAI CITY, Hawaii (AP) — Tom Wargo tapped in a par putt on the last hole Tuesday to edge Chi Chi Rodriguez and capture the $400,000 Merrill Lynch Senior Shoot-Out.

The 10-man, nine-hole elimination tournament at The Challenge at Manele course on the island of Lanai came down to a former club pro vs. a veteran at the closing 444-yard hole, a dog-leg right along the water's edge.

Wargo knocked his second shot onto the green, 12 feet below the pin, while Rodriguez hit his ball just beyond a marker and barely inbounds. Rodriguez's next shot went 10 feet beyond the hole while Wargo lagged it up for the winning putt.

"I went to school on Chi Chi's shot when he hit a 6-iron and came up short," Wargo said in setting up his winning shot, a 5-iron.

But Wargo looked back to three holes that kept him in the competition.

"We had three key holes," he said. "The third when we had to come out of a bunker (par-3, 171 yards), the putt on the par three for a birdie (202 yards) and a four-footer on the eighth hole (par-4, 458 yards). Those were the key shots."

The victory wrapped up a financially rewarding four days in Hawaii for Wargo.

In the 54-hole Kaanapali Senior Classic on the island of Maui last week, Wargo finished seventh and earned $17,600. By winning the Shoot-Out, he collected $100,000 and as winner of the closest to the pin competition during the pro-am, he won a $40,000 Retirement Plus Annuity from the tournament sponsor.

"It's been a marvelous week," he said.

For Rodriguez, "It wasn't meant to be.

"I tried to go for the green. That's my style of golf."

His second-place finish was worth $75,000.

Tony Jacklin turned in the day's most unusual round — winding up in the lava fields twice and hitting onto a cart path once — and still managing to survive until the eighth hole. He won $50,000.

The other winnings: Jim Albus ($35,000), Jim Colbert ($29,000), Dave Stockton ($25,000), Deane Beman ($23,000), Jim Dent ($22,000), Bruce Crampton ($21,000) and Larry Laoretti ($20,000).

Pair lead Senior Four-Ball

AUSTIN (AP) — Richard Mosman of Dallas and John Proctor of Carrolton had a best ball of 3-under 67 Tuesday for the first-round lead of the Texas Golf Association Senior Four-Ball Championship.

Mosman, who won last year with Don Addington, contributed three birdies and Proctor added another. Their only bogey came on the short par-4 16th.

TGA Senior champion Bob Hullender of San Antonio and Bill Penn of Austin, with a 68, were the only other pair to break par. They were four-under after 14 but suffered a double-bogey on the 413-yard, par-4 15th, the No. 2 handicap hole at the 6,367-yard Onion Creek Golf Course.

Tied for third at 70 were David Griffin and Johnny Warren, both of Midland, and the team of Chuck Ribelin of Dallas and Terry Bigham of Rockport.

The 54-hole event ends Thursday. Thirty-two teams of Texas senior amateurs 55 and older comprise the field.

Rangers' Gonzalez says he didn't abandon wife

SAN JUAN, Puerto Rico (AP) — Texas Rangers outfielder Juan Gonzalez has denied accusations by his estranged wife that he abandoned her for Puerto Rican recording star Olga Tanon.

Gonzalez, 24, sent a statement to the news media by facsimile Tuesday, denying the claim of his wife, Elaine Lopez.

Gonzalez's spokesman, Tato Hernandez, confirmed to The Associated Press that Gonzalez sent the fax but said Gonzalez would have no further comment.

MHS: Lady Dawgs fall to Amarillo Tascosa

(From 1C)

In the second game, MHS played a little more like the team that won three straight high-pressure district matches to make the playoffs.

The Lady Dawgs pulled to a 3-2 lead on an ace and a service winner by Mathiassen. Tascosa tied it up at 3-3 when MHS was whistled for being in the net and the Lady Rebels took a 4-3 lead on a stuff by Regan and Scharbauer.

An ace by MHS' Sara Pritchett evened the match at 4-4 but that was the last time the Lady Dawgs were even.

MHS was whistled twice for lifts and those errors, combined with the first of five THS aces in the second stanza, helped the Lady Rebels pull away for a 7-4 lead that they never lost.

MHS, however, finally starting setting up Mathiassen and Zachery along with its two other strong hitters Jamee Stennett and Deshawn Berry. Each had at least one kill in the second game but it wasn't enough.

Then things really fell apart as the Lady Dawgs' reception game was bombarded by the THS servers. Lady Rebel aces gave them leads of 8-5, 10-5 and 12-7. Three MHS errors ended the match.

"Service reception is one of the strongest parts of our game," said McColloch, as she was shaking her head. "When we didn't have that, I don't know what we could have done."

In the OHS-Palo Duro match, the Lady Bronchos came out smoking on four kills by Donelle Jones and another by Rachel Munoz to take a 5-0 lead in the first game. They went on to win that game before the Lady Dons came screaming back in the second and third.

In the second game Palo Duro jumped out to an 11-3 before holding off an Odessa rally that made it close. In the third, however, an 11-0 Palo Duro lead was too much to overcome. The Lady Bronchos' hitting game, which had been successful in the first two games, fell apart in the third with several unforced errors. The Lady Bronchos could only get as close as 12-3.

HALL: De Ferran is new to Indy car race circuit

(From 1C)

De Ferran has never driven in an Indy car race, but he has tested for the Pennzoil Hall team, which is based in Midland. He impressed the team with his talent and drive.

Going into the final race of the season at Magny Cours, France, in early October with two victories in Formula 3000 (one of the world's most competitive motor racing series), De Ferran was tied for the point lead and even money to win the title. On the first lap of the race, another driver collided with De Ferran and wrecked his car, relegating him to third in the final championship standings.

Welcher said he is excited about having De Ferran on the team.

"He's a very talented and determined young man," Welcher said, "and we're confident there are great things in store for him on the race track."

Hall gave De Ferran his first chance to drive an Indy car last summer when Fabi was tied up in Italy and couldn't test the Pennzoil Special himself. The Reynard factory, which makes the car, recommended the young Brazilian for the assignment.

De Ferran's career has been a story of hard work, fast driving and dedication to rising in his craft. He started at an early age in kart racing, but a deal he struck with his father gave him the impetus to begin his long, tough journey to the top.

De Ferran's father told him when he was 14 that if he could pass his high school entrance exam, he would be rewarded with a new racing kart. He passed the test, did well in school and finsihed third in the local junior karting championships in 1982.

Success followed De Ferran on the track, and in the classroom. He was Sao Paolo junior karting champion in 1983 and was accepted in 1984 for admission to Sao Paolo University to study mechanical engineering.

By 1987, he was national Formula Ford 1600 racing champion, and in 1988, he took a recess from school and left for Europe to seek more experience in big league road racing. His break came that year when he drove one race for the Reynard factory team. In that race, he qualified on the pole and finished second, launching his long association with Reynard.

Former world champion Jackie Stewart followed up by recruiting De Ferran for his new Paul Stewart Racing Team and dubbed the "Staircase of Talent" after De Ferran broke the Donnington Park lap record during a tryout.

With only 1991 off to drive for the Reynard research and development team, De Ferran starred for the Stewart team ever since, winning the Formula 3 championship in 1992 and nearly winning the Formula 3000 title in 1994. In that span, he has collected 23 victories driving Reynard cars.

Hall said that between now and next year's first race in Miami De Ferran and the Hall team will conduct extensive tests at Big Spring, Monterey, Calif., and Phoenix, Ariz.

De Ferran is married to the former Angela Buckland of Exxex, England. They expect their first child in late December or early January. By then they hope to be living in South Florida. They will continue to maintain homes in Surrey, England and Sao Paolo.

Car of Mavericks' Tarpley found wrecked, abandoned

DALLAS (AP) — The car of Dallas Mavericks center Roy Tarpley was found wrecked and abandoned last weekend in north Dallas.

Police confirmed Tuesday night's report by television station KDFW-TV, saying the car was found early Saturday.

Tarpley was not involved in the accident. He said he lent the car to a friend and notified the Mavericks about the matter.

"The car was discovered about 4 a.m. after we got two anonymous calls that a car had been wrecked," police spokesman Ed Spencer said. "We don't know who was behind the wheel."

Police said the car slammed into a utility pole, the impact apparently sending the car flying for some distance.

Tarpley, in a statement released by the Mavericks, said he lent his car to an unidentified friend.

"I just thank God no one was hurt," he said. "That's the important thing. I notified Keith Grant (club's director of player personnel) as soon as I found out. That's all there is to it."

A hotel receipt with his friend's name on it was found in the vehicle, KDFW-TV reported.

Club spokesman Kevin Sullivan said the name of Tarpley's friend wasn't released "for that person's privacy."

Tarpley practiced with the team last Friday but was hampered by sore knees. He didn't practice with the team Saturday and was held out of Sunday night's exhibition game.

"He was in practice Wednesday and again on Friday," Sullivan said. "He felt the knee twinge on a rebound and took himself out of practice Friday night. There were plenty of witnesses. There's absolutely no connection in the accident and his knee.

"There were two practices on Saturday. He woke up Saturday and his knee was stiff, so he didn't work out."

The accident was the third in less than a week involving the vehicle of a pro athlete in Dallas. Five days earlier, Dallas Cowboys lineman Erik Williams and defensive end Shante Carver wrecked their vehicles.

Williams' blood-alcohol results subpoenaed

DALLAS (AP) — A grand jury Tuesday subpoenaed results of a blood-alcohol test done on Dallas Cowboys tackle Erik Williams as part of an investigation into the player's car accident Oct. 24.

Williams' attorney, Donald Godwin, questioned the subpoena's legality and said he plans to ask a judge to quash it.

No tests to determine Williams' state of drunkenness were taken at the accident site in north Dallas.

However, The Dallas Morning News reported that a source close to the Cowboys said the blood test showed the 6-foot-6, 325-pound lineman was legally intoxicated at the time of the crash.

Texas Department of Public Safety officials have said they're investigating the accident in which the player's Mercedes Benz hit a concrete retaining wall at 3:15 a.m.

HARPER: WR leads postseason statistic

(From 1C)

Irvin also becomes a free agent next season.

"I'm not sure what the Cowboys plans will be but sure I'd like to keep playing here," he said. "I'd like to be getting six balls or so a game instead of two. It's been great so far this year. I'm getting a lot of passes thrown my way."

Owner Jerry Jones said he will cross the free agent bridge with Harper when he comes to it next year.

"We could have traded him on draft day last year and decided not to do it," Jones said. "It was a wise decision."

Harper, a first-round draft choice out of Tennessee in 1991, is the NFL's all-time leader in yards per catch in the postseason. He has averaged 25.4 yards per catch, surpassing Willie Gault's average of 23.7 yards every time he caught a ball.

"I think I've proved I can make the big play," Harper said.

Last Sunday he did.

Cowboys still eyeing Super Bowl three-peat

■ Despite a long list of problems, Dallas is 7-1 and set for an attempt to make NFL history.

By Bill Sullivan
New York Times News Service

IRVING — Nate Newton was in an expansive mood, and who could blame him?

The Dallas Cowboys are 7-1 at the halfway point of this NFL season. A four-game tour of the NFC East had produced a perfect division record. Only a three-point loss to the Detroit Lions, in fact, separated the two-time Super Bowl champions from an unbeaten first half.

So Newton, the Cowboys' Pro Bowl guard, was laughing, telling jokes and generally enjoying life at the top. After a while, though, the crowd around his locker began to thin, and the mood turned serious.

"We can't afford any more mistakes," Newton said. "Like I've told the fellas, nobody's gonna beat us on the field. If anything, it's off-the-field stuff that's gonna stop us.

"We've got to be a little more careful. Everybody wants to be a part of the Cowboys — good, bad or ugly."

As the regular season makes the turn for home, that may be the greatest obstacle standing between Dallas and an unprecedented Super Bowl three-peat.

Like every other NFL team, the Cowboys have had their share of nicks and bruises, but Erik Williams' knee injury (the result of an early morning automobile accident on Oct. 24) currently is the only one with season-ending implications. The real burden — the one that comes from being Dallas' darlings and the circled date on every opposing team's schedule — may be less quantifiable, but it is no less real.

No coasting. No half-interested opponents, no sneaking into town and playing in front of 10,000 empty seats.

"It's like this for us every week," safety Darren Woodson was saying after Sunday's 23-20 brush with mortality against the winless Bengals in Cincinnati. "We're every team's Super Bowl. Everyone looks forward to knocking off the Cowboys.

"That makes it tough."

Then there is the not-so-small matter of dealing with the pressures of working in a city that lives and dies with its pro football fortunes.

"There's no place like Dallas," Newton said. "When you're winning, everyone loves you. And when you're not, it's like the end of the world, man."

So far, the Cowboys have managed to put off Armageddon. Through eight games, only Detroit has managed to rain on the three-peat parade, and the Lions needed overtime and a flood of Dallas turnovers to do it. Since then, the Cowboys have won five straight heading into next Monday night's game against the New York Giants at Texas Stadium, leaving them a game ahead of last year's pace.

That may make wearing the crown seem simple enough, but winning in 1994 has not come about without a struggle:

— Emmitt Smith's bid for a fourth consecutive rushing title has been slowed by hamstring problems and eight-man fronts geared toward stopping the run.

— Quarterback Troy Aikman was knocked out of the second Arizona game with a concussion.

— Newton, center Mark Stepnoski and tackle Mark Tuinei have played through various ankle and foot problems.

— The loss of Williams, coupled with the offseason free agent departures of John Gesek and Kevin Gogan, have forced rookie Larry Allen into a starting role on an offensive line that once was as deep as it was solid.

So not all of 7-1 has been pretty, by any means. Three of those victories, in fact, have come by a total of 13 points. But as Sunday's outcome in Cincinnati seems to attest, the good teams find ways to win, and Dallas remains among the NFL elite, even if the gap between the Cowboys and the competition may be less pronounced than at any time in the last three seasons.

Given an offseason of upheaval, however, no one is complaining about the record.

"People might forget how much change we've been through here," Emmitt Smith said. "Jimmy (Johnson) leaving; Barry (Switzer) coming in. Norv (Turner) leaving; Ernie (Zampese) taking over.

"We're not the same team. We may be as good, in the end, but we're not the same."

Now, as the stretch run and the playoffs draw near, many of the questions of summer are being answered — most of them in a positive way.

IRVING, Texas: a positive way.

— Does this Switzer guy know what he's going, or is owner Jerry Jones down to batting .500 when it comes to hiring old Arkansas cronies as head coach?

Switzer, who in his first months on the job appeared to revel in sounding like a fellow who just fell off a truckload of watermelons, is wearing well, earning the respect of coaches and players alike. The change from Johnson, in fact, is more a matter of style than substance, since neither is a big Xs and Os guy.

The difference lies in how each handles the inevitable flash points of a championship drive. Johnson favored intimidation, while Switzer prefers the positive, backslapping approach. After the Cincinnati game, though, Switzer made his unhappiness with a tepid effort plain enough, and it will be interesting to see how his team reacts to that.

More critical, perhaps, is how all concerned respond when it is time to turn it up a notch, beginning with the Nov. 13 showdown with the conference rival 49ers in San Francisco.

— What about the loss of Norv Turner to the Redskins? Wasn't that supposed to kill the chemistry of the offense and make Aikman want to go join a monastery?

While the gifted Turner is missed, the fact remains that he learned much of his craft from Ernie Zampese, who replaced him as offensive coordinator in Dallas. The Cowboys run basically the same stuff they did in winning two Super Bowls.

— What about all those free agent defections?

Butch Davis, the defensive coordinator, is making a good case for being the next Cowboys assistant to move on to a head coaching job.

Robert Jones, given up for dead by Johnson, has been molded into an adequate middle linebacker, easing the pain of Ken Norton's move to San Francisco. Chad Hennings, in turn, has improved sufficiently to provide tackle depth behind Russell Maryland and Leon Lett, rendering the departures of Tony Casillas and Jimmie Jones moot.

The big difference, though, is in younger players coming of age. Woodson is having a Pro Bowl-caliber season at safety, and outside linebackers Darrin Smith and Dixon Edwards have been making plays. Safety James Washington has built on a terrific Super Bowl XXVIII, and corners Kevin Smith and Larry Brown are solid — Sunday's misadventures against the Bengals not withstanding.

So where are the trouble spots?

Both lines are thin, especially on offense. Emmitt Smith's health has been a concern all season. The search for a backup running back dominated headlines for lack of real news — Cleveland Gary, for instance, turned up in Miami after the Cowboys thought they had a deal — but no matter: If Smith goes down for any length of time, this team is done.

And assuming everyone stays (or gets) healthy?

The San Francisco game becomes the key. Assuming Dallas beats the Giants on Monday night, a win over the Niners would give the Cowboys at least a two-game lead in the conference race, plus the head-to- head tiebreaker.

Dallas may need it, too. After San Francisco, the Cowboys still have a Dec. 4 trip to Philadelphia, not to mention a difficult season-ending Monday-Saturday turnaround at New Orleans (Dec. 19) and at the Meadowlands against the Giants (Dec. 24). Two road games in six days won't be easy, even against teams that may be out of contention by then.

Still, it sounds like that three-peat isn't so far-fetched after all .... Not unless there are more surprises waiting in the second half.

Jockey Day nears record for victories

■ Breeders' Cup

LOUISVILLE, Ky. (AP) — The Breeders' Cup has been good to Pat Day from Day One.

The jockey won the first Classic on Wild Again in 1984 at Hollywood Park, and comes into this year's Breeders' Cup with six career victories, one short of the record shared by Eddie Delahoussaye and Laffit Pincay.

The mark could easily fall.

Day will ride in six of the seven Breeders' Cup races Saturday at Churchill Downs, and it's conceivable he'll be on the favorite each time, especially since Day is such a favorite at this track.

"I'm in such an enviable position. It's a rider's dream," Day said. "I work very hard not to think about it. But on those rare occasions that I let myself stare off into the sky and contemplate what could happen Saturday, it's such a rush.

"I try not to dwell on that too much, though."

His mounts are Preakness and Belmont winner Tabasco Cat in the Classic; Paradise Creek, winner of eight of nine starts this year, in the Turf; Champagne winner Timber Country in the Juvenile; Heavenly Prize, who has won her last three, in the Distaff; runaway Frizette winner Flanders in the Juvenile Fillies, and American Chance in the Sprint.

"Who wouldn't be excited about what he's got?" trainer Shug McGaughey asked, then wondered aloud, "He doesn't have anything in the Mile, does he?"

"No," McGaughey was assured.

"Good," he said. In fact, the Mile is the only race Day will miss, and McGaughey trains the probable favorite in that race — Lure.

Entries for all seven of the races will be made Wednesday.

Day rode both Tabasco Cat and Flanders Tuesday morning for their workouts. Day said Tabasco Cat is a very different horse from the one that finished sixth in the Kentucky Derby on May 7.

"He's not the same horse at all. He's more professional, a lot more settled, and today, he was very focused," Day said. "He's feeling good, and he's looking good."

If Tabasco Cat is the Classic favorite, it will be at least in part due to Day. In his last start, the D. Wayne Lukas-trained Tabasco Cat was fourth in the Jockey Club Gold Cup at Belmont behind Colonial Affair, Devil His Due and Flag Down. Colonial Affair was injured and retired, but both Devil His Due and Flag Down are in Kentucky.

Flanders, meanwhile, could be the biggest favorite on the Breeders' Cup card. Also trained by Lukas, she has finished first in all four career starts, although she was disqualified from first-place money in the Matron on Sept. 17 at Belmont. She then won the Frizette at Belmont on Oct. 8.

Japanese hire Valentine

TOKYO (AP) — Bobby Valentine became the first former major league manager to be hired to manage in Japan, with the announcement Tuesday that he signed with the Chibe Lotte Marines.

Valentine, fired by the Texas Rangers during the 1992 season after more than six years in the job, reportedly signed with the Marines for $1 million over three years.

Valentine's contract also is said to have incentive clauses which would pay him $600,000 to $1.7 million a year depending on how high the Marines finish.

The club did not disclose terms of the deal.

DALLAS: Pittsburgh win a Cowboy high point

(From 6C)

Coming off a tepid preseason, the Cowboys open up in style, handling the Steelers with ease at Three Rivers Stadium as the defense turns in nine sacks of Neil O'Donnell.

— 2. Dallas 38, Arizona 3: After hearing much huffing and puffing from self-proclaimed "winner" Buddy Ryan, the Cowboys thoroughly embarrass Ryan's Cardinals at Texas Stadium.

— 3. Dallas 24, Philadelphia 13: Eager to make a statement against the two-time champions, the Eagles are sent home with more questions than answers as Randall Cunningham comes up short in a big game once again.

— 4. Dallas 28, Arizona 21: When Troy Aikman goes out with a concussion, backup Rodney Peete comes off the bench to rally the Cowboys to a fourth consecutive NFC East win.

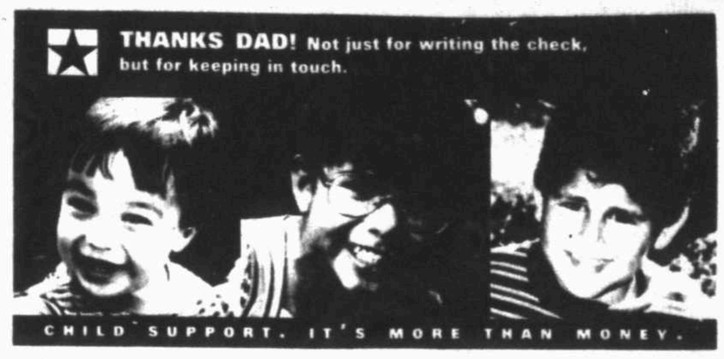

— 5. Surprising defense: The offseason losses of Pro Bowl linebacker Ken Norton, Pro Bowl safety Thomas Everett and tackles Tony Casillas and Jimmie Jones were expected to leave huge holes in the Cowboys' defense. Instead, that unit has given up just 263 yards per game, compared to last year's average yield of 297.9.

LOWLIGHTS:

— 1. Detroit 20, Dallas 17 (OT): Barry Sanders rushes for 195 yards as the Cowboys sleepwalk on both sides of the ball. Worse yet, Dallas loses going into a bye week, leaving media and fans nearly two weeks of agonizing reappraisal.

— 2. Mean streets: Erik Williams, the All-Pro right tackle, is lost for the season when he suffers ligament damage in his right knee in a one-car accident in the wee hours of Oct. 24 as he is driving home from a team party after a victory in Arizona. That same morning, rookie defensive end Shante Carver rolls his truck on a Dallas freeway, but Carver escapes without injury.

— 3. Dallas 23, Cincinnati 20: After a week of questions about the Williams accident, the Cowboys fall behind 14-0 and struggle against a winless team. A better opponent would have made Dallas 6-2 at the turn.

Agreement, new rules open NBA

■ New rules will make for more scoring and more fouls, but the balance of NBA power still lies in the Western Conference.

More Sports/12C

By Wendy E. Lane
AP Basketball Writer

Because players and team owners decided to put the game ahead of their differences, the NBA is open for business.

The no-strike, no-lockout deal signed by the league and its union Thursday took lawyers and labor negotiations out of the starting lineup, at least until another NBA champion is crowned next June.

Four days before owners were to vote on a lockout, the union agreed to open the season under the labor deal that expired last June and try to work out a new one — and a solution to the salary cap standoff — while the season goes on. "There's a difference in philosophy but absence of animosity," commissioner David Stern said in announcing the labor truce.

■ NBA Preview

So instead of a work stoppage, in place are rules fostering a more offensive game, a coaching milestone and the Houston Rockets' bid for a second straight title — and respect. A healthy Charles Barkley is back in the Suns' lineup and Horace Grant is in Orlando's, but top draft pick Glenn Robinson — with his $100 million salary demand — isn't in Milwaukee's.

After last season's finals reached new lows for offense and new highs for grind-it-out physical play, the league wasted no time drawing up a new set of rules to open things up.

Handchecking is out. The 3-point line is in — by nearly two feet at the top of the key.

"We had to eliminate all the grabbing and holding," said Rod Thorn, the NBA's vice president of operations. "We're going to have a better game."

If the preseason is any indication, better won't mean short. New defensive guidelines will mean more whistles being blown and more players stepping to the foul line.

"Even though it makes the game longer because of the fouls being called, the freedom for players to move out on the floor is what's needed for the NBA to be enjoyable for the fans again," Boston coach Chris Ford said.

With a uniform 22-foot 3-point line, fans will be treated to a barrage of long-range bombing, and the need for perimeter defense should unclog the middle. Houston's Vernon Maxwell, Cleveland's Mark Price, Denver's Dale Ellis, Indiana's Reggie Miller and other sharpshooters will be more dangerous than ever.

"I think it's going to make it much tougher on teams, on individual defense as well as team defense," Miller said. "How are you going to guard Mark Price on the pick-and-rolls now? It's not possible."

While the new rules will give the NBA a slightly different look, the league's balance of power remains tilted toward the West. So packed is the Western Conference with title contenders, a Houston team that's returning all its players from its first championship team isn't even a consensus favorite to get back to the finals.

"It just shows how strong the Western Conference really is," Denver coach Dan Issel said. "Houston had a great run, and they were the ones who eliminated Phoenix, so you certainly can't count them out."

The Rockets still have Hakeem Olajuwon, who became the first player to be chosen league MVP, defensive player of the year and NBA Finals MVP in the same season. And they still have an experienced core of unselfish players who have taken the lack of respect personally.

But Phoenix improved itself substantially by adding free agents Danny Manning and Wayman Tisdale, who took less money to play for a contender, and 1992-93 MVP Barkley has proclaimed his back problems history. The Nuggets' surprising trip to the conference semifinals gave their young talent experience and exposure.

And Seattle, which won a league-high 63 games last season, is hungry after a first-round flameout in the playoffs.

"Working that chemistry thing out is always a question," Houston coach Rudy Tomjanovich said. "They've very dangerous, because they've got that carrot and they're going to go after it."

The West is still the best, but the wide-open Eastern Conference is just as interesting. With Grant's rebounding, Orlando might have the league's best starting five, but Indiana is on the rise and New York wants another crack at a title for Patrick Ewing.

"You're going to see major improvement from some teams," Miami coach Kevin Loughery said. "I believe it's going to be unbelievable competition to make the playoffs. I think it's going to be a wide-open battle this year."

By signing Grant, who won three titles with Chicago, the Magic adds muscle on the frontline next to Shaquille O'Neal, whose 29.3 scoring average was second in the league last season. Coming off a 50-win season, the Magic also has Dennis Scott, Nick Anderson and second-year point guard Anfernee Hardaway, who has a new nine-year, $70 million contract.

But coach Brian Hill doesn't think the Magic is among the league's elite, yet.

"You can be humbled very quickly when you look at the stark fact that we've been in the playoffs once and not won a game," said Hill, whose team was swept by the Pacers in the first round. "They know we have a lot of potential, but so far it's unrealized potential."

Coming within minutes of beating Houston for the championship, the Knicks have realized their potential. The question is whether they've already exceeded it.

So far, New York hasn't made a deal for the scorer it needs, and the 32-year-old Ewing, coming off knee surgery, remains the focus of the offense and defense. But coach Pat Riley is convinced there's still more to squeeze out of his team.

"Hard work is second nature to us," Riley said. "Our players know that's who we are and what we do."

The team that came close to beating the Knicks in the conference semifinals, Indiana, has the confidence to go farther this season.

Beset by injuries, Cleveland will be hard-pressed to win its division, and the Bulls have a host of new faces as they continue to seek a post-Michael Jordan identity.

"I don't think we're the first team in people's minds contending for a conference championship," Chicago coach Phil Jackson said, "but I don't think anyone's going to overlook us."

When the season opens Friday, three old coaches will mark their return to the league — Bill Fitch with the Clippers, Dick Motta with Dallas and Del Harris with the Lakers.

Atlanta's Lenny Wilkens will provide one of the season's early highlights when he passes Red Auerbach as the league's winningest coach.

Auerbach finished his 20-season career with a 938-479 mark — only 12 wins more than Wilkens (926-774) brings into this season, his 22nd.

"Certainly, it's going to be a huge achievement," Wilkens said. "When Red established that record nobody, including me, thought anybody would break it."

Prices jump

Heating oil futures prices shot to a three-month high Tuesday as traders looked ahead to a seasonal rise in fuel consumption. Other energy markets followed suit.

The rebounding economies of major industrial nations also contributed to the sharp increases in crude oil and petroleum-product prices, analysts said.

Wholesale home heating oil for December delivery soared 1.32 cents on the New York Mercantile Exchange to 50.72 cents a gallon, the highest daily settlement for near-term deliveries since Aug. 4.

West Texas Intermediate for December delivery rose 49 cents to $18.68 a barrel, a 12-week high.

Local crude purchasers raised their posted price 50 cents to $17 a barrel.

December natural gas fell 1.4 cents to $1.936 per 1,000 cubic feet.

U.S. consumption of crude typically rises in November as refiners restart units that were closed in October for seasonal maintenance, energy analyst John Saucer of Smith Barney Inc. said.

Dollar tumbles

NEW YORK — The dollar tumbled to touch an all-time low against the Japanese yen Tuesday and fell against other currencies after a strong economic report reinforced inflation worries, wrenching down stock and bond prices.

Gold prices were lower overseas but ended higher in U.S. dealings. On the New York Commodities Exchange, gold for current delivery rose 80 cents a troy ounce to $384.30 compared to Monday's close.

In New York, the dollar closed at 96.65 yen, down from 96.85 on Monday. That was an all-time closing low in New York.

Late dollar rates in New York compared to Monday: 1.4949 marks, down from 1.5040; 1.2460 Swiss francs, down from 1.2560; 1.3563 Canadian dollars, up from 1.3534; 5.1180 French francs, up from 5.1470; 1,537 lire, unchanged from Monday.

The British pound finished at $1.6330, down from $1.6360 Monday in New York.

On the New York Comex, silver closed at $5.275, up from $5.242 Monday.

Stocks sink

NEW YORK — Stocks fell sharply for a second consecutive session Tuesday, wrenching the Dow Jones industrial average down nearly 45 points in a sell-off inspired by new signs of rising inflation and higher interest rates.

A surge in the American manufacturing economy to the highest level in seven years, coupled with surprising strength in construction spending, raised anxieties among investors that the economy is still growing too rapidly despite five increases in interest rates so far this year.

Spending on construction rises

■ White rising mortgage rates have slowed single-family housing market, private business building is doing well, analysts say.

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Led by new office buildings, shopping centers and warehouses, spending on construction is making a comeback.

The Commerce Department reported Tuesday that construction outlays were up 1.6 percent in September, the biggest jump in six months.

While rising mortgage rates have slowed the single-family housing market, private business construction is doing well, analysts said.

"It really is on a pretty solid upswing," said economist David Seiders of the National Association of Home Builders. But with housing slowing down, spending on new construction is not a driving force in the economy, he said.

"This sector has flattened if you ignore the month to month gyrations. It's a neutral factor," Seiders said.

Overall, spending on residential, non-residential and government projects has risen in six of the last seven months, remaining unchanged in August.

In September it totaled $515.1 billion at a seasonally adjusted annual rate, up from a revised $506.8 billion in August.

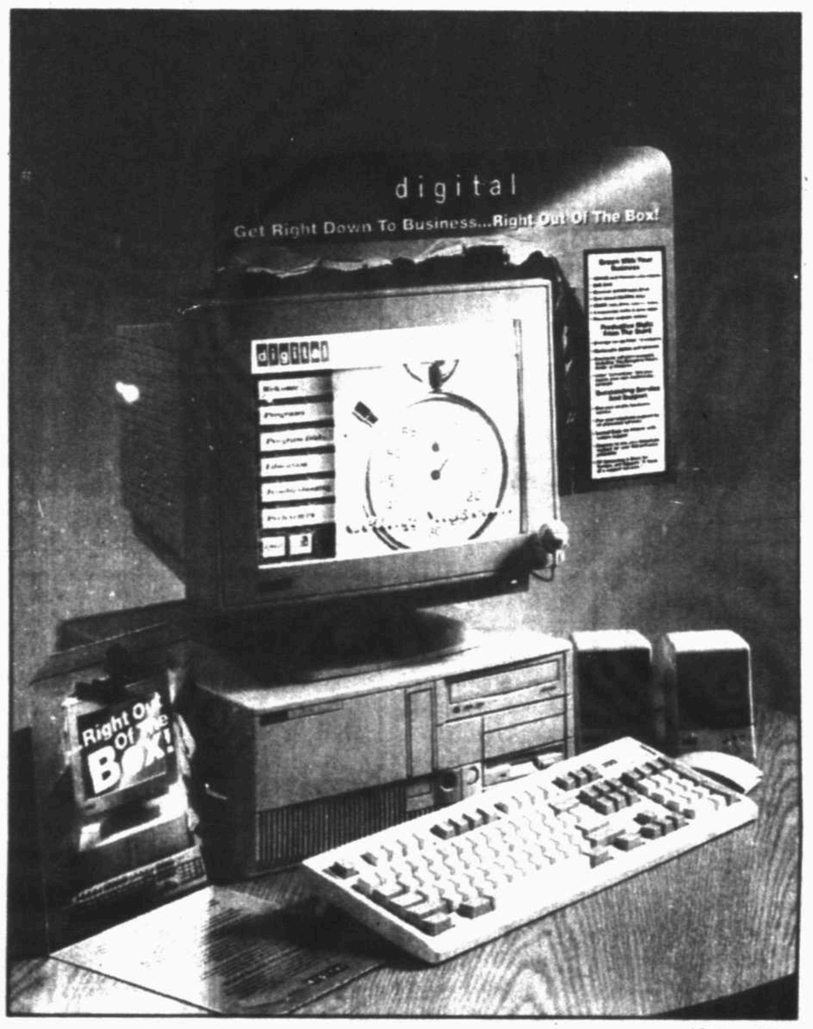

The department earlier had estimated that construction outlays fell 0.2 percent in August to a rate of $505 billion.

The September gain, the largest since construction outlays rose 2.1 percent in March, exceeded analysts expectations.

Private spending rose 1.5 percent in September after falling 0.1 percent in August. Non-residential outlays rose 3.9 percent to a $101.4 billion rate after rising 0.5 percent a month earlier.

Residential outlays increased for the first time in four months, but the gain was due to apartment construction that is not as interest-rate sensitive as single-family homes. Spending on multi-family units posted a fourth straight gain, soaring 10.1 percent in September.

All residential spending was up 0.5 percent to a $239.8 billion rate in September although outlays for single-family residences fell for the fourth straight month, down 0.5 percent after a 1 percent drop in August.

Texaco USA president tackles different parent-company roles

HOUSTON (AP) — James L. Dunlap is stepping down as president of Texaco USA to oversee a number of other operations for parent company Texaco Inc.

Glenn Tilton, chairman of Texaco's British operation, Texaco Ltd., and president of Texaco Europe, will assume Dunlap's post, the company announced Monday.

Dunlap, 57, was appointed president of the Houston-based subsidiary in 1987. Texaco Inc. is based in Harrison, N.Y.

Starting Dec. 1, he will oversee several operations at Texaco Inc., including environment, health and safety and alternate energy and resources.

He joined Texaco in 1963, working in the company's marketing department in San Antonio. He was named vice president in charge of alternate energy in 1980 and was named vice chairman of the British operation in 1982. He later served as chief executive of Texaco Canada.

As head of Texaco USA, Tilton, 46, will oversee Texaco's exploration and production exploration efforts, as well as the company's refining, marketing and transportation unit.

Tilton joined Texaco in 1970. He was named vice president for marketing for Texaco USA in 1987. He was made president of Texaco Refining and Marketing the following year and was elected a vice president of the company in 1989.

Tilton was named chairman of Texaco Ltd. in 1991 and president of Texaco Europe in 1992.

Bidding battle for Santa Fe Pacific threatens to sidetrack another deal

CHICAGO (AP) — The bidding war for Santa Fe Pacific Corp. threatens to sidetrack another railroad deal in the rapidly consolidating railroad business.

Southern Pacific Transportation Co. asked government regulators to delay a scheduled Nov. 8 hearing on a deal that would allow Santa Fe suitor Union Pacific Corp. to gain control of Chicago and North Western Transportation Co., a much smaller railroad operator.

Southern Pacific, which competes with both Santa Fe and Union Pacific, filed the request with the Interstate Commerce Commission on Monday, contending Union Pacific should first make clear its intentions concerning its $3.74 billion bid to acquire Santa Fe.

The ICC was reviewing the request, spokesman Paul Markoff said Tuesday. The Nov. 8 session is to hear oral arguments. The commission is scheduled to vote on the matter Dec. 13.

Southern Pacific, based in San Francisco, has long opposed the Union Pacific-CNW deal on the grounds it would change the competitive structure of the western railways.

"Union Pacific says it wants to control CNW to meet heavy competition from Santa Fe. But Union Pacific has not yet explained how its Santa Fe acquisition would affect its claimed need for control over CNW," Southern Pacific Chairman Edward Moyers said in a statement.

Union Pacific, based in Bethlehem, Pa., owns 30 percent of Chicago-based CNW in non-voting stock. It asked the ICC in January 1993 to approve the conversion of its CNW stake to voting stock. It also wants advance approval to acquire more CNW stock, up to and including full ownership of CNW.

Union Pacific also proposes to put two more of its officers on CNW's board, increasing its representation to three of nine directors from two of seven.

CNW does not oppose Union Pacific's request for voting rights, but wants to remain independent, said CNW spokeswoman Leslie Cleveland Hague.

Union Pacific has "no present intention of seeking ownership or control" of CNW, Union Pacific spokesman Tim Hartman said.

Southern Pacific expressed skepticism.

"While they may say that, what it may give them effectively is control of CNW, whatever they may call it," said Southern Pacific spokesman Mike Furtney.

CNW currently has operating agreements with Union Pacific that give the larger railroad a link between Chicago and Omaha, Neb., and between western Nebraska and 10 Wyoming coal mines.

Union Pacific sweetened its bid for Santa Fe on Sunday. The new offer follows the rejection of a $3.2 billion bid for Santa Fe, which has agreed to an acquisition by Burlington Northern Inc. of Fort Worth, Texas, or $3.2 billion.

Southwest goes ticketless in California

DALLAS (AP) — Southwest Airlines Co. said it began offering California travelers the chance to fly without a ticket Tuesday.

Southwest has been testing a ticketless system since September. If all goes well in California, the carrier plans to roll out the new approach nationwide.

"Given the success that we've seen so far, we do see this as the first phase to ultimately going systemwide," Southwest spokesman Ed Stewart said.

"California will give us an opportunity to look at the system even more in one of our busiest states," he said. "To the degree that we get the same type results in California that we saw in our first four cities will determine how quickly you'll see a rollout nationwide."

To fly ticketless, Southwest customers make reservations, confirm with a credit card and check in for a flight using only a confirmation number. Ticketless travel can be purchased up to one hour before departure, and picture identification may be required. The option also is available through travel agencies.

Three shooters make All-America

The Midland County 4-H Gunsmoke Shooting Team has been a dominant force in the State 4-H shotgun shoot with either the top total point or top percentage trophy for the last three years.

Three of the team's members have also been named to the All-America Sub-Junior Third Team. They are Frankie Keller II, 13, of Greenwood; Chris Smith, 12, of Greenwood; and Justin Huckabay, 12, of Odessa.

Keller has been shooting four years and practices at the West Texas Sportman's Club and Windwalker Farm Sporting Clays as does Smith, who has been active in the sport for three years. Keller has won the HOA in the 4-H Tour, HOA in District II and IV, and the SJCH in the Texas State ATF Open Handicap.

Smith helped the Midland County team win the 4-H state shoot in 1993. Both Smith and Keller are coached by Rick Smith.

Huckabay has won the SJCH in both New Mexico and Nevada state shoots and won $2,000 at the Texas state shoot.

Prairie View linebacker Alfonso Provo takes a break at a Panther practice last week. The team has lost 43 straight games.

Pride conquers long football losing streak

PRAIRIE VIEW (AP) — At Prairie View, 43 consecutive losses hasn't caused the football team to lose its pride.

"They may be losers on the football field," Prairie View coach Ron Beard said, "but they're winners in every other way."

Linebacker Alfonse Provo wants a degree to make his mother proud. Cory Fregia and Kevin Garner wanted a chance to play football, even if it meant not getting a scholarship.

Since beating Mississippi Valley State 21-12 on Oct. 28, 1989, the Panthers have gone on a skid that's just one short of the Division I record Columbia set from 1983-1988. They've been outscored 1,819-247. They've lost by 92-0 (Alabama State, 1991), 66-0 (Grambling this year), 63-0 (Alcorn State, 1992) and 61-0 (Southwestern Missouri, 1991).

"What makes me so mad is people leaving at the half," wide receiver Alaric Henderson said. "They can't even stay and support us the whole ball game."

On opening day this year, the Panthers trailed Texas Southern 20-13 in the last minute but were stopped on the 1 on the game's final play.

"It gets hard to pinpoint your friends," said Provo, one of three seniors who have played four seasons without a victory.

Prairie View is a predominantly black college of 6,000 students. Football players dress in a dungeon-like locker room in the basement of the gym and practice on an intramural field with grass burrs that often make tackles more painful.

Players quit the program continually, After the 92-0 loss, Beard predicted to his assistants on the long bus ride home there would be mass defections by the following workout.

He was amazed by the turnout.

"I said, 'I guess these guys are too dumb to know they got their butts kicked,'" Beard laughed. "But I'll tell you, it gave me goose bumps. It's things like that, that keep me going."

On Saturday, the Panthers (0-8) are host to Tarleton State (1-6-1) on homecoming at Blackshear Field. If they lose to the Texans, they could set the record on Nov. 12 at Jackson State. The next milestone would be 50, the all-division losing streak record set by Macalester (Minn.) between 1974 and 1979.

Prairie View, a member of the Southwestern Athletic Conference, discontinued football after the 1989 season because of financial problems but brought in back for 1991 — without scholarships.

"We didn't want people getting used to no football," said Beard, who is in his fourth season.

College playoff advocates will soon be in full cry

N.Y. Times News Service

Would somebody please hand me some earplugs? I'm afraid it's about to get awfully noisy around here.

Unless I miss my guess, the advocates of a playoff for the national college football championship will soon be in full cry. And this time, the whining and moaning and gnashing of teeth really ought to be something.

This is a subject that comes up almost every year, of course. But this season, as Nebraska and Penn State have lapped the field, the battle will really be joined.

Nebraska and Penn State are clearly the best teams in college football and in any prior year they would have met in the Orange Bowl for the national championship and that would be that. Assuming they both remain unbeaten, that is.

Heart vitamin

Taking vitamin E to ward off heart disease is looking better. Three new studies find people who took vitamin E supplements had less-clogged arteries and fewer heart attacks — even after heart surgery.

Male coronary bypass patients were asked over a two-year period whether they took vitamins. Those taking at least 100 IU of vitamin E daily had a reduced rate of artery narrowing. Those taking less vitamin E had an increase in narrowing, according to a study by Howard N.Hodis, University of Southern California School of Medicine.

Vitamin E also seemed to keep arteries open after angioplasty, a procedure to unclog arteries. In a study at the University of New Mexico, artery reclosure over six months was cut in half in those averaging 575 IU of vitamin E daily before and after surgery.

In another study of 2,200 men at Laval University in Quebec City, those taking any type supplement were 78 percent less likely to die of heart disease and 58 percent less apt to have a first heart attack. But vitamin E was most powerful, says researcher Francois Meyer.

Soy vs. breast cancer?

Asian women eat lots of soybeans which contain anti-cancer compounds called isoflavones. Asian women also have about one-fifth as much breast cancer as American women who eat few soybeans and get scant isoflavones.

Many researchers have long speculated that soybean protein — in soybeans, tofu, miso, soy milk and soy flour — helps protect Asian women from breast cancer. Soybeans and their isoflavones help block breast cancer in laboratory animals.

Now, researcher Kenneth Setchell, at Children's Hospital Medical Center in Cincinnati, has found that adding two ounces of soy protein daily to the diets of premenopausal women produced signs indicative of breast-cancer protection. For example, menstrual periods were longer by one to five days and surges of certain hormones suppressed. Blood levels of another hormone, estradiol, went up. The same thing happens in women given the drug tamoxifen to treat and prevent breast cancer, says Setchell. Theory is the soybean agents somehow block estrogen's harmful pro-cancer effects.

Setchell advises all women to eat more soy protein. It may be beneficial in "protection against and/or treatment of breast cancer," he says.

Salt wheezings

Too much sodium aggravates asthma, according to researchers at Glenfield General Hospital in Leicester, England. In a recent study, men with mild to moderate asthma were put on a low-sodium diet — 1,840 milligrams daily.

But every day for five weeks, half also got a high-sodium tablet (4,600 mg sodium) and half got a placebo (inactive pill). Then for another five weeks, they got the opposite pills.

The outcome: When the asthma sufferers got the high-sodium tablets, they had to use a bronchodilator more often, exhaled less air and had more asthmatic symptoms, such as wheezing. In short, the sodium caused a mild deterioration in control of asthma.

MacGuffie is a surgeon and much more

By Lisa Genasci

HAVERSTRAW, N.Y. (AP) — In the 1940s, when many people believed women shouldn't become surgeons, Martha MacGuffie still wanted to be one. Her dean at Columbia University College of Physicians and Surgeons told her no one would train a woman surgeon, but agreed to write a recommendation for her.

At each of her job interviews, surgeons chuckled after reading the short note, baffling MacGuffie until the fourth interviewer, who had burst out laughing, read it to her.

"To whom it may concern," it read, "this woman is large, powerful and tireless."

MacGuffie got all four jobs. Since then, her admirers say, she has more than lived up to those words.

During her 70 years, she has established a volunteer group to help fight disease and death in Africa, run a research laboratory, and traveled the Third World with relief organizations — while maintaining a thriving medical practice in which a patient's ability to pay was never an object.

Recently, she developed a line of skin care products to help prevent skin cancer.

In her practice, reconstructive and plastic surgery, she cares for the terribly injured and burned, the most difficult cases, working in the northern New York suburbs.

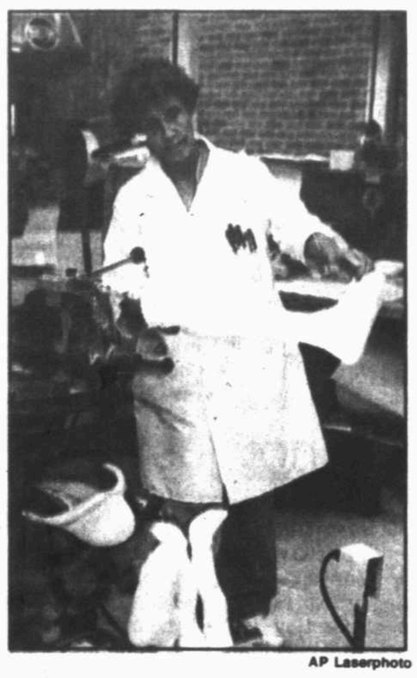

And she has been the ultimate working mother, raising eight children. She also has nine grandchildren.

"There's no one like her," said Robert C. Macauley, founder and chairman of AmeriCares, a New Canaan, Conn.-based nonprofit relief organization with which MacGuffie works periodically."She is a most unusual woman — dauntless and fearless, an inspiration."

Accomplished, compassionate, humble, dedicated, selfless and unstoppable are other words used to describe MacGuffie, who also has endured a large measure of tragedy — the deaths of two teen-age sons born with a fatal blood disease.

MacGuffie was the middle daughter of a Passaic, N.J., doctor, surgeon and sculptor. Her mother was trained as an opera singer, but never practiced her profession.

MacGuffie describes her father as the sort of physician, "who just took care of people whether or not they had money." She frequently accompanied him on rounds and watched him during surgery.

Dr. Martha MacGuffie checks a prosthetic leg in the workshop at the Helen Hayes Hospital. Over her 70 years, MacGuffie has established a foundation to help fight disease and death in Africa, run research laboratories, maintained a thriving plastic and reconstructive surgery practice and raised eight children.

Early on, she decided on medicine. Her father, she said, acted as if her decision was a normal one for the time. For that reason, she never had doubts about her abilities or felt discrimination in the profession.

"Right in the beginning, I was an oddity," MacGuffie said. "I think it was easier for me then than it is for women today. I wasn't competition to the male doctors. I was someone doing something out of my sphere."

Animals were her first love. As a child, she spent summers in Maine living in a tent in the woods with at least a couple of dogs.

"I was a terrible child, socially at least," MacGuffie said. "All I cared about was animals."

A small school for girls in New Jersey turned MacGuffie from a wild wood-dweller into a student and cleared the path for her entrance into Cornell University. But she still attended class with two beagle puppies in a knapsack and a crow on her shoulder.

During medical school, she married a fellow student and had two daughters before becoming the first woman surgeon to graduate from the college. Later, she was as tireless in pursuit of her specialty.

Trying to get her to talk about her career and how it developed is difficult. MacGuffie is reluctant to address her achievements.

But at times, she does allude to how hard it was to balance work and a large family.

With her second husband, also a doc-

Knowing symptoms of Lyme disease important

By Dr. Geoffrey D. Chazen
Associated Press

Lyme disease can be a difficult ailment to detect, but knowing its causes and symptoms can help patients distinguish it from illnesses with similar characteristics.

Lyme disease can generally be traced to contact with a species of tick carrying the borrelia burgdorferi spirochete that causes the illness in humans. These insects contract the organism after they feed on the blood of infected field mice or deer. The disease is spread to humans when an infected tick feeds on the blood of a human host for 24 hours. Detecting and removing a tick within that window of time can help prevent Lyme disease transmission.

The symptoms of early Lyme disease infection include headache, muscle ache, sore throat, low grade fever and a red rash known in medical circles as erythema migrans. In some cases, patients can confuse this rash with the allergic reaction to a tick bite that sometimes appears in the form of a red dot on the site where the tick was imbedded. The erythema migrans rash is an expanding red ringed lesion that should measure at least 2 inches in diameter. It tends to resemble a bull's eye since the skin inside the ring returns to its normal color as the outside ring expands.

Appearance of this rash is considered by doctors as a clear indication of Lyme disease that requires immediate medical attention. Left untreated the rash will disappear, but the infection will remain and can spread to other areas of the body. In these cases, complications such as neurological or heart abnormalities, and arthritis, may develop.

A blood test that measures antibodies — immune system proteins — can help detect infection with Lyme disease. This test, however, can have many false positive results and by itself is not a conclusive indication of Lyme disease infection. For example, the antibodies themselves may not develop until six weeks after infection, so taking a blood test before that time can result in a false negative result.

Acute neurological complications can also occur even without the classic syndromes, such as the rash. Late symptoms of Lyme disease such as arthritis typified by redness or swelling of the joint, may occur months after infection.

Early cases of Lyme disease can be treated with oral antibiotics; however, late complications may require intravenous antibiotics. Diagnosis is based on the syndrome, clinical findings, and a reliable blood test.

However, in some cases, those who have chronic fatigue, or joint or muscle aches without any other symptoms may have a false positive blood test.

It is important to distinguish between these two groups because treating patients who do not have Lyme disease can do more harm than good.

Dr. Geoffrey D. Chazen is clinical assistant professor of medicine at New York University School of Medicine.

Consequences of 'yo-yo' dieting are researched

By Densie Webb
N.Y. Times News Service

A report last month by the National Institutes of Health said there were no negative health consequences from repeatedly gaining and losing weight, so-called yo-yo dieting.

But despite the report, many questions about yo-yo dieting remain unanswered, and strong differences of opinion about its ramifications linger.

The report was prepared by an eight-member task force that evaluated 43 studies on yo-yo dieting. They hoped to determine possible consequences to repeated weight loss and gain, like lower metabolic rate, higher risk of cardiovascular disease or diminished psychological health.

The report found no increase in metabolic rate as a consequence of repeatedly gaining and losing weight, but it hinted at psychological drawbacks. Its finding on heart disease was inconclusive.

Dr. John P. Foreyt, director of the Nutrition Research Clinic at Baylor College of Medicine in Houston, who served on the National Institutes of Health task force and recently completed a study on the psychological effects of yo-yo dieting, said there were "very clear adverse psychological effects."

Kelley Brownell, a psychology professor at Yale University and longtime researcher on dieting, said he believed that there were several possible negative psychological effects, including a negative body image, depression and an adverse effect on personal relationships.

"As the people around you see you go up and down, they have a sense that you're succeeding and then you're failing," he said. That, in turn, affects the way people interact with the dieter.

Though critics ask which comes first, poor psychological health or yo-yo dieting, people who work with dieters say they see certain psychological ramifications of riding a weight-loss roller coaster. "I see women who have been struggling with the same 30, 40 or 50 pounds for decades. That's got to have some effect," said Marsha Hudnall, nutrition director at Green Mountain at Fox Run, a weight management program in Ludlow, Vt.

Although studies have shown that sluggish metabolism was the price for repeated losing and gaining, a larger number of studies showed that there was no effect on metabolism.

But Brownell said he considered it

Leg aches can signal circulation problems

By Dr. Gary Giangola
Associated Press

When walking a short distance or climbing a flight of stairs produces muscle pain or fatigue in the legs, the aching may indicate more than being out of shape physically.

Just like blood vessels throughout the body, the arteries that carry blood to the legs and feet are subject to the progressive buildup of fatty deposits and debris. In this process known as atherosclerosis, these deposits continue to accumulate and can cause the blood vessels to narrow and become partially or fully obstructed.

When atherosclerosis occurs in the arteries serving the heart, it can lead to coronary artery disease or heart attack. But when atherosclerotic deposits accumulate in the legs, the result may be a condition called chronic occlusive arterial disease, medically known as arteriosclerosis obliterans.

While age plays a role in developing this disease, the risk increases for those with a family history of heart and blood pressure problems, diabetes,

Depression affects children

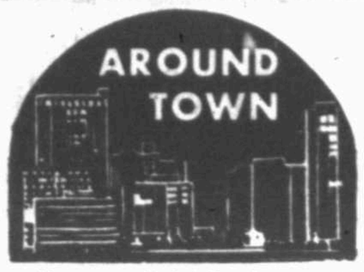

By Dr. Paul Gabriel
Associated Press

Even young kids can suffer serious depression, and knowing the symptoms can help parents get prompt treatment for a child in the depths of despair.

First, it's important to distinguish the "blues" from depression. A case of the blues is generally a temporary sadness that lasts for a short period of time, then disappears. It is brought on usually by a specific incident, such as a fight with a friend.

Depression, on the other hand, may also be triggered by a specific incident that results in a melancholia that continues well beyond expected limits for the event that triggered the emotional tor, MacGuffie had five more children. She also adopted her second husband's child from his first marriage.

DOCTOR: Work is continuing

(From 1D)

"Those years were a blur," MacGuffie said. "There doesn't seem anything that was as much work as those kids."

How was it growing up the child of a whirlwind who was up at 5 a.m., worked all day and was in bed reading at 1 a.m.? While her daughters have divergent views, it is clear that sometimes MacGuffie's work was hard for them, too.

"What was normal for us was watching her in action," said Dr. Jane Hudson, an oncologist. "She tried not to separate her work from her children. The tragedies of others became our dinner conversation."

MacGuffie's adopted daughter, Dr. Harriet Hudson, is more critical. As the oldest, much of the burden of raising the younger children fell to her, she said.

"She was never home," Harriet Hudson said. "To put her in the role of mother is stretching it. She didn't have time for us. She was very driven to do her work."

The standing joke in the family, she said, was that when her mother wasn't home, the children would always say she was out saving lives.

But another daughter, Chris Abrams, speaks of MacGuffie's sense of fun. When she could, she would show up at soccer games with a megaphone and pompons or surprise her children by appearing on a fire truck in a local parade.

Two of MacGuffie's three boys were born with a congenital blood disease, Fanconi's anemia, which required frequent blood transfusions. Both contracted AIDS through transfusions before anyone really knew what AIDS was, MacGuffie said. They died just a year apart, one in 1978 and the other in 1979. One was 13 and the other 17.

The night her second son died, her husband left. And about the same time, her youngest girl went to college. Despite her busy practice, suddenly there was a void in her life she had to fill.

"Everything sort of fell apart. I went from a full house to nothing and I headed to Africa," MacGuffie said.

Africa had intrigued her as a child, but she had never visited. MacGuffie's first trip to Kenya was to study animal problems. Then she visited the hospitals in the region with among the world's highest infant mortality rates and worst instances of AIDS.

That visit opened up another door for MacGuffie. Upon her return, she established SHARE, a non-profit group set up to help bring medical equipment, treatment and medical training to Eastern Kenya. She also takes young doctors there to study AIDS and the diseases it brings.

DEPRESSION: Condition not 'just the blues' response in the first place.

(From 1D)

Two factors that influence a child's tendency toward depression are life experience and family history.

Children with a parent or grandparent who have had depression are themselves more prone to the illness. Also, children who are constantly exposed to violence, have a history of being abused, or have turmoil, disruption or dysfunction within the family are at risk.

Depression in young children can be difficult to detect. Close observation by parents or a health-care professional is warranted if a child experiences behavioral changes, such as poor appetite, difficulty in sleeping or expression of negative thoughts lasting for more than a few weeks without an obvious cause.

Changes in school performance can also indicate a problem. Surprisingly, teachers often notice these changes and detect the problem even before the child's parents.

When alerted, parents can then work with the school guidance counselor, the family pediatrician and, if possible, the school psychologist. The earlier problems are detected, the sooner an intervention strategy can be planned.

Talk therapy is generally the standard treatment for childhood depression. Depending on the child's circumstances, this therapy may be on an individual basis or may involve the entire family.

In some cases, removing a child from a tumultuous or controversy-filled environment is necessary for treatment. And in severe cases of depression, children may even need to be placed in a hospital setting.

LEG: Symptoms increase

and high cholesterol levels. Cigarette smoking is a very significant risk factor.

An early symptom of this disease is the onset of cramping pain that develops while walking. The cramplike pain is known as intermittent claudication.

Once the symptoms of the disease become apparent, it's important to undergo a medical evaluation. If treated in its early stages, the condition usually follows a benign course and requires only conservative care to relieve the pain and improve the circulation.

Most often, treatment focuses on lifestyle changes aimed at risk factor reduction. For instance, smokers are urged to quit because cigarette smoke impedes the delivery of oxygen to blood vessels and impairs circulation. Those who live a sedentary lifestyle are often put on an exercise regimen.

In more serious cases, where a blockage causes insufficient blood flow to the legs and feet, there is usually pain even during rest. These cases often require consultation with a vascular surgeon who may order further studies of the blood flow to the legs to determine the severity of the blockage and help define the precise course of treatment.

YOYO: Weight cycling studied

(From 1D)

premature to dismiss the possibility of a long-term metabolic slowdown from weight cycling. Though he agrees that, to date, most studies show no effect, he says more research should be done.

"This report is being interpreted as 'weight cycling isn't important,'" he said. "If you give up on research too soon, you might be missing something important."

The task force also tried to determine whether yo-yo dieting increased a person's risk for heart disease. On this question, it concluded that there was no answer. Several studies have found that people whose weights fluctuate are at greater risk of dying from heart disease.

But Thomas Wadden, director of the Weight and Eating Disorders Program at the University of Pennsylvania, said the studies simply looked at people's weights and compared them with deaths from heart disease. They were not intended as studies of effects of weight cycling.

DEAR ABBY

Grandma asks for gift of time

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR READERS: A faithful reader for more than 30 years who requested anonymity wrote the following:

Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: Around holiday time, you print suggestions about useful gifts for seniors. May I add mine?

For Christmas, I don't want another crystal bud vase; I have four under my kitchen sink. Besides, nobody brings me flowers anyway. I don't want a sausage and cheese tray; that's too much cholesterol for this old lady. I don't want another music box to find a place for — I have too many now. I don't want a silk nightgown, perfumed soap, a fancy bed jacket, dusting powder or a bird feeder.

What DO I want? Ask me; I'm not shy! I have told you before what I really want for Christmas, but I never got it. Maybe this time I will.

I want you to give me a few hours. Take me and my cumbersome wheelchair to the mall so I can see the lights and hear the music. I would also like to be driven around town to see the Christmas decorations — then maybe stop for hot cocoa.

I would like a book of postage stamps, a writing tablet with lines and some plain envelopes. I would appreciate a ballpoint pen that works, and some telephone coupons so I can make a few long-distance calls to people I will probably never see again.

I would also appreciate a visit from you and other family members, especially my grandchildren who call and say: "Hi, Grandma. How are you? I love you. Gotta go. See you later. Bye!"

I would like someone to offer to pay my heating bill for one month. (With five sons, six daughters and 42 grandchildren, that shouldn't be so hard to do.) And I sure wish someone would come over here and test my smoke alarm.

I dearly love all of you; that's why I can tell you what I really want for Christmas. — A 91-YEAR-OLD GRANDMA

DEAR GRANDMA: I admire your honesty. Although it may seem a little early to be thinking about Christmas immediately after Halloween, the pumpkins and witches have already been taken out of the merchants' windows and been replaced by Santa, artificial snow, nativity scenes, and all the trappings of the holiday season.

DEAR ABBY: I read the letter signed "Bugged," who resented having to chip in every year for an expensive Christmas present for the big boss, who is probably a rich man and has more than he needs.

Why don't the employees get together and make a contribution to charity in the boss's name? It may even be tax-deductible. — CATHY C. IN BRADENTON, FLA.

DEAR CATHY: A great idea. Not only would your suggestion save the employees the hassle of coming up with a costly gift that the boss neither needs nor wants, it would provide food, shelter or clothing for the needy.

Low-fat cookies are tasty, easier to find

By Linda Anderson

I've heard a lot about a certain brand of low-fat devil's food cookies that are so popular that they are sold out before the stockers even get them on the supermarket shelves — in fact, I've heard some customers call ahead to find out when the shipment is coming in and then wait for the stockers to bring the cookie boxes out.

Anderson

A friend of mine who is an expert on low-fat cookies told me that the ones made by Keebler are at least as good as the more famous kind, and are much easier to find. So on one of my many trips to the supermarket I found a bag of Keebler's Elfin Delights Fat Free Devil's Food Cookies (With Chocolatey Middles), and bought it for the "researchers" at the office to taste.

One 8.25-ounce bag of Keebler's low-fat devil's food cookies cost $1.89.

Label advertising was pretty slim — all it said was "New!" But on the back I found a generic advertising claim which I'm sure Keebler puts on many of their products: "Every product from Keebler is meant to be Uncommonly Good. Should you have any reason to write us regarding this product, please send your comments, along with the printed Code Date to: Keebler Company, Consumer Relations, 1 Hollow Tree Lane, Elmhurst, Illinois 60126." So now you know where elves live — in Illinois.

Nutrition label is what most consumers of low-fat goods are going to want to look at anyway. This one claimed that each cookie contains 70 calories, zero calories from fat (in fact, no fat at all) and 80 mg sodium.

The taste-test was very interesting. One taster said they were OK, and she likes devil's food cookies. However, she has never tasted the other kind that keep selling faster than they arrive at the supermarket. I thought they were OK too, but (even though I'm a chocoholic) I've never really been that fond of commercial devil's food cookies.

Anyway, if you are a fan and you are having a hard time finding the low-fat cookies, you might find the Keebler Elfin Delights Fat-Free Devil's Food Cookies to be an alternative. Who knows, you may even decide you like them better.

Price listed is from a local supermarket. Prices at other locations may vary.
