Chrysler declares payback

WASHINGTON (AP) — Chrysler Corp. Chairman Lee Iacocca, declaring financial independence from the government, said Wednesday the nation's No. 3 automaker will pay back — seven years early — the remaining $800 million it owes in federally guaranteed loans.

"We at Chrysler borrow money the old-fashioned way: We pay it back," he said in a speech at a jammed luncheon sponsored by the National Press Club. And "I'd give someone a check right now," if it weren't for some interim red tape, he added.

The automaker's turnaround from near-collapse several years ago, when a $1.5 billion federal bail-out plan was engineered, was greeted enthusiastically and some, including Iacocca, predicted the auto industry was entering a boom period.

But Iacocca tempered his optimism with a word of warning about interest rates.

"I'm banking on interest rates continuing to come down ever so slowly. If they turn back up, forget it," he told reporters after he met with President Reagan, apparently to tell him of the corporation's plans.

After Iacocca's announcement, Treasury Secretary Donald Regan, chairman of the board that watches over the Chrysler bail-out, said "It's a very great day for Chrysler."

"This story of the Chrysler turnaround is a fantastic one," added Douglas Fraser, former president of the United Auto Workers union and a member of Chrysler's board.

Still to be resolved, though, is the question of $14.4 million in warrants, or rights to purchase Chrysler common stock, that the government got in exchange for the guarantees.

Regan said the Chrysler Loan Guarantee Board has reached "no conclusions" on the warrants and wanted to see the reaction of the marketplace to Chrysler's announcement.

Among the government's options are exercising, selling or forgiving the warrants, although Regan flatly ruled out any forgiveness.

The loans, which are owed to private lenders but guaranteed by the government, were not due to be paid off until 1990. When they were first granted in 1980 and 1981, many wondered whether they would ever be repaid.

Congress originally approved $1.5 billion in guarantees and Chrysler drew down a total of $1.2 billion. It made an initial repayment of $400 million last month.

Triple slaying

Odessa law enforcement officers investigate the murder of a woman and her two teen-age sons whose bodies were found in their eastside home Wednesday. They apparently had been beaten with a baseball bat.

Car sought in probe of killings

By RICHARD ORR
Staff Writer

ODESSA — Law enforcement authorities across the state are looking for a late-model car in connection with the bludgeon murders of an Odessa widow and her two teen-age sons whose bodies were discovered in the family's eastside home Wednesday night.

Beaten to death sometime in the past 48 hours were Ruby Faye Fieseler, an Odessa High School cafeteria employee, and her two sons, 17-year-old Paul Fieseler and his 13-year-old brother Keith.

Their bodies were found in separate beds in the modest, three-bedroom home at 1718 E 10th St. shortly after 9 p.m. Wednesday.

Police said someone called the fire department at 9:03 p.m. and said: "It looks like the whole family is dead."

The identity of the caller is unknown, according to police, who said the family had been beaten to death with a blunt instrument. A bloody baseball bat was found at the scene.

The house was "in a messy condition," said one police officer, but it could not be determined if it had been ranscaked or if a struggle took place.

The home had been the target of at least one recent burglary, but authorities were unable to determine if it had been broken into when the family was slain.

Police are looking for Mrs. Fieseler's car, which apparently was stolen after the slayings took place. The vehicle is a 1981 powder-blue Chevrolet Impala bearing Texas license plates XWG-280.

The car carried a Frank See Cherolet decal and some kind of Motocross or bicycle-type racing bumper sticker.

Authorities caution that the occupants may be armed and should be considered dangerous. Anyone spotting the vehicle is urged not to try and stop the car or detain the suspects. Instead, the nearest law enforcement agency should be contacted immediately.

Texas Rangers are aiding in the investigation.

Services for the family are pending at the Easterling-Wilson Funeral Home. An autopsy has been ordered.

Defense debate in 'final stretch;' Bets still out on MX missile race

WASHINGTON (AP) — With Vice President George Bush casting a tie-breaking vote for nerve gas, the Senate's work on a $200 billion defense bill enters the final stretch, but a leading MX-missile opponent vows it won't be a short one.

Several amendments on various aspects of the fiscal 1984 authorization measure awaited action today before the start of a climactic debate on the MX, the most hotly contested element of President Reagan's rearmament drive.

Majority Leader Howard Baker, R-Tenn., said he hoped to finish work on the bill tonight or Friday.

But Sen. Gary Hart, D-Colo., leader of the anti-MX coalition, rejected such talk, saying: "To think that this issue could be fully debated in one or two days is a failure to accept the gravity of decisions on defense and national security."

In a 13½-hour floor session that ended at 12:30 a.m. today, senators worked through several amendments on controversial subjects.

— With Bush providing the tie-breaking vote as presiding officer, members rejected, 50-49, an attempt to prevent production of a new generation of nerve gas weapons.

— An effort by Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., and others to kill the B-1 bomber program by deleting all $5.2 billion for it in the bill was crushed easily, 68-30.

— The Senate defeated, 52-46, an effort to establish a new GI Bill education program to replace the one that lapsed in 1977.

— However, it accepted, 67-30, an amendment by Sen. Sam Nunn, D-Ga., to remove $50 million earmarked for a plant to build "enhanced radiation" battlefield nuclear warheads and use the money for conventional arms to disrupt enemy rear-echelon forces.

— And it rejected, 53-41, an attempt by Sen. Slade Gorton, R-Wash., to return the bill to the Armed Services Committee for trimming because $1.3 billion in inflation savings claimed by the administration have not been accepted by the Congressional Budget Office.

Hart said he and 13 colleagues planned to introduce six "debate-framing" amendments, ranging from elimination of all $4.7 billion in the bill for the missile to conditions the president must meet to proceed with deployment.

In a floor speech Wednesday, Hart said the subject deserved several days of discussion because the MX "would reverse years of thinking about nuclear weapons strategy" and "open a dangerous new chapter in the madness of an unrestrained nuclear arms race."

Central to this, he said, was Reagan's decision to place the weapons in silos now occupied by Minuteman 3 missiles — a basing method he said is vulnerable to destruction by the Soviet Union and thus invites a hair-trigger, "launch-on-warning" response.

Reagan insists that the nation's sea- and air-launched nuclear weapons reduce the vulnerability problem of land-based missiles and that the MX "Peacekeeper" is vital to chances for obtaining a strategic arms-control treaty with the Soviets.

Advocates of the new nerve-gas weapons also invoked the negotiations argument, with Sen. John Tower, R-Texas, chairman of the Armed Services Committee, contending: "We cannot negotiate a ban without having a store of chemical weapons ourselves."

He said existing U.S. chemical weapons, the last of which were produced in 1969, are becoming unservicable because of age and thus are no deterrent against a much larger, modern Soviet stockpile.

But opponents, led by Sens. David Pryor, D-Ark., called the weapon an unnecessary and inhumane addition to the nation's arsenal that would kill more civilians in a war zone than soldiers.

Tower moved to table, or effectively kill, Pryor's amendment to strip $1.80 million for nerve gas production from the bill.

Anticipating a close vote, Baker had arranged for Bush to preside in his constitutional role as Senate president, entitling him to cast a tie-breaking vote.

This is precisely what occurred after the vote was announced at 49-49.

Bush's vote was the first by a vice president since Nov. 4, 1977, when Walter F. Mondale cast the deciding ballot on a bill that raised Social Security taxes for workers and employers.

The vote on Kennedy's B-1 amendment carried no such drama after debate that recalled arguments advanced over the years.

Kennedy and other critics said the 100 B-1s are not needed as a replacement for aging B-52 bombers because an entirely new plane using a radar-evading "Stealth" technology will be available as early as 1989.

Remains found in dump studied

Sheriff's department invesitigators today are trying to determine the origin of some human body parts found in a private dump south of the city limits about 2:45 p.m. Wednesday.

The mummified remains included a hand, the skull and both feet of a male caucasian. They were in a 5-gallon lard can discovered at the Henry Culp dump site on South Midland Drive about halfway between U.S. 80 and Interstate-20.

Authorities said the remains, which appeared to be medical specimans, have been turned over to a local pathologist for further examination.

Hustler wanted but didn't get 'sex tapes'

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Hustler magazine publisher Larry Flynt said he agreed to pay $1 million to print photos from the purported Vicki Morgan "sex tapes," but said the lawyer who claimed to have the tapes reneged on the deal.

Flynt said he had agreed Wednesday with attorney Robert K. Steinberg that photos of the videotapes — which supposedly show the late Miss Morgan and high government officials — would be published in Hustler, an adult magazine.

Steinberg, however, told City News Service that Flynt was a "liar" and that he never made a deal.

According to Flynt, the deal was made Wednesday, a full day after Steinberg reported the tapes had been stolen from his Beverly Hills office by a reporter he refused to name.

"I told him if, in fact, the tapes existed, I would pay him $1 million, no questions asked," Flynt said. "He said, 'We've got a deal.' I made an 11:30 a.m. appointment at my house with him. He never showed up."

Steinberg claims the tapes showed Alfred Bloomindale, the late millionaire and confidant of President Reagan; Miss Morgan, Bloomingdale's one-time mistress; a congressman; two "ambassadorial level" government officials; and two prominent businessmen.

"I personally don't think they exist," Flynt said of the tapes. "I don't want to come off like Steinberg. I don't want to cash in on a myth that doesn't exist. I think the guy's some sort of kook."

Later Richard David, a spokesman for Flynt, said the publisher was now unsure to whom he talked about buying the tapes. Flynt thought he was talking to Steinberg, David said, but "now he questions it."

Beverly Hills police said Steinberg told them he obtained the tapes over the weekend from an unidentified blond woman who said she thought they might help the defense of Marvin Pancoast, charged with last Thursday's bludgeoning death of Miss Morgan, 30.

Attempts by The Associated Press to reach Steinberg, who held nonstop informal news conferences Monday and Tuesday, were unsucessful Wednesday.

Videotape story develops over several days

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Here are the main events surrounding claims that videotapes show slain model Vicki Morgan and the late millionaire Alfred Bloomingdale, as well as government officials, engaging in sex acts:

Saturday

—A blonde in her early 30s visits the office of Beverly Hills attorney Robert K. Steinberg and gives him three videotapes, Steinberg says. The woman identifies herself only as a friend of Marvin Pancoast, who has been charged with murdering Miss Morgan.

Sunday

—Steinberg puts the tapes in a gym bag and places the bag in his car trunk, according to his later statements to detectives. He says Sunday night is the last time he sees the tapes.

Monday

—Steinberg announces the existence of the tapes to reporters, saying the mystery woman told him they might help him defend Pancoast. He says the tapes, which "could embarrass everyone right to the top of the government," were also viewed by a U.S. Justice Department official. He adds that he will destroy the tapes unless the White House wants them.

—The U.S. attorney's office in Los Angeles denies that anyone saw the tape and the White House declines comment.

Chrysler ready to pay back loan

Iacocca, obviously in an upbeat mood as he gave the speech flanked by Regan and congressional leaders, told the friendly crowd, "Today I am here to tell you that we are going to pay off the last $800 million in government-guaranteed loans, taking the outstanding debt down to — zero."

He said the "actual mortgage-burning won't take place today because the law requires 60 days for the paperwork and red tape ... Otherwise, I'd give someone a check right now."

Iacocca said the final installment will save the automaker $392 million in net interest payments that would have been due over the next seven years.

After the repayment, he said, the company won't be "drowning in cash" but that it will have an "adequate" cash reserve. He said he didn't know when Chrysler would again pay dividends on its stock.

Iacocca credited the bail-out with being "the catalyst that made it all happen." But he acknowledged "it didn't come cheap" and ticked off the payments the company made to the government in fees and to lawyers, bankers and consultants who helped administer the program.

By its early repayment, he said, Chrysler is telling "the financial community, but especially the American car buyer, that we are here to stay and have the strength to compete with anybody in the world.

Indeed, Harvey Heinbach, auto industry analyst at Merrill Lynch, Pierce, Fenner & Smith Inc. in New York, said, "The repayment of that debt should improve (Chrysler's) image in the eyes of the banks and the credit market. They will h ave a better ability to do financing as a private company."

Iacocca paid tribute to the sacrifices he said had been made by Chrysler's workers, suppliers and dealers and to the states and banks that loaned money to the company.

"So our whole program was based on equality of sacrifice, because everybody offered up something — something important," he said.

Chrysler's decision last month to repay part of the loans early brought criticism from officials of the United Autoworkers Union who complained that Chrylser's workers were being paid far less than their counterparts at General Motors Corp. and Ford Motor Co., the nation's No. 1 and No. 2 automakers, respectively.

In his speech, Iacocca said that with the company's recovery, the union and its members "want to share, as they should, in our success and we expect to sit down with them shortly and talk it out."

Fraser said after the speech that the union was looking for "fairness and equity."

"I don't think there's any quarrel with the proposition now the workers are entitled to a share in this success," he said. "Obviously the expectation of the workers will rise with the increased prosperity to come."

In 1980, Chrysler began borrowing $1.2 billion in guaranteed loans out of $1.5 billion authorized by Congress. Since then it has managed a financial recovery, earning a record $172.1 million in the first quarter this year.

Wall Street analysts say Chrysler is expected to post second-quarter earnings of $290 million, which would set a new quarterly earnings record for the company.

Iacocca credited with Chrysler recovery

By JOHN CLINE
Associated Press Writer

DETROIT — Five years after being fired by Ford Motor Co., Lee Iacocca can take credit for one of the great comebacks in business history — the rescue of the nearly bankrupt Chrysler Corp., which could post a $700 million profit this year.

The Chrysler chairman announced Wednesday that the nation's No. 3 automaker will pay back — seven years early — the remaining $800 million it owes in federally guaranteed loans.

At a standing-room-only luncheon in Washington, Iacocca told reporters he was just following his father's credo: "When you borrow something, pay the damn stuff back."

"I'd give someone a check right now," he told the National Press Club audience, adding that the actual payment would not come for 60 days because of red tape.

In describing the fiscal turnaround, Iacocca said: "You know as Americans, we seem to have a rather peculiar trait, we run better and faster scared. Adversity brings us together."

In 1979, Chrysler faced bankruptcy. But Iacocca wrung $1.5 billion in loan guarantees from the federal government to give the company an infusion of cash. Chrysler then drew down $1.2 billion of the cash and combined it with worker concessions and a snappy new line of front-wheel-drive cars to return to profitability.

From 1979-81, Chrysler lost a total of $3.27 billion, but could post a 1983 profit of $700 million, said Maryann Keller, manager of Vilas Fischer, a New York City firm that analyzes the stock market. The auto firm posted a first-quarter record earning of $172.1 million.

Chrysler's 58-year-old chairman was once described as "a dramatic and heroic figure...the Lancelot of what is left of this business," by writer Gay Talese, who adds that Iacocca "believes there is still life and hope in Detroit."

Lido Anthony Iacocca, who first went to work for Chrysler for $1 per year but was paid $375,676 in 1982, is the son of Italian immigrants. He grew up in Allentown, Pa., went to college on a scholarship and wound up at Ford, where he worked on the successful Mustang that inspired a generation of "pony cars."

Henry Ford II named him president of the company in 1970, but the two men clashed and Ford fired Iacocca in 1978. Chrysler wooed and won Iacocca later that year.

AP Laserphoto

"Thumbs up" for Chrysler Corp. is signalled by Lee Iacocca, chairman.

Iacocca has said he didn't realize at the time how weak Chrysler was. In 1979, Chrysler lost $1.1 billion, the first year of an auto industry depression that is just beginning to end.

Iacocca's immediate task was to gain concessions frmm unions and arrange the largest government bail-out ever from Congress. The Loan Guarantee Act was passed on Dec. 21, 1979.

"He was the most believable spokesman," said John Morrissey, a partner in the advertising firm of Kenyon and Eckhardt.

The firm originated the idea of putting Iacocca in Chrysler's television commercials. The ads helped make Iacocca one of the best-known corporate spokesman in America, so well known, in fact, that it is easy to forget he spent most of his career at Ford.

Now Iacocca says the challenge is to maintain rebounding sales.

"We can't go back to the old ways of getting fat and letting all kinds of costs creep back in," he said. "Only by competing hard and fair will we be able to make it."

As part of the deal to get the federal loan guarantees, Chrysler agreed to give the government the warrants to buy its common stock at $13 a share. The warrants don't expire until 1990.

When the loan guarantees were approved, the stock was selling for only $5 a share. But the stock's price has risen along with the automaker's fortunes in recent month and it stood at more than $31 a share at the Wall Street close on Wednesday, up just a quarter in the wake of Iacocca's announcement.

David Healy, an auto industry analyst at Drexel, Burnham & Lambert Inc. in New York, called Chrysler's announcement "a masterpiece of public relations, but the earnings effect is not very great. It does advance the possibilities of dividends sooner than expected."

Sen. Don Riegle, D-Mich., said that the Chrysler success story shows that when business, labor and government work together, "we can accomplish miraculous results.

"We need this on a much broader scale," he said. "We saved Chrysler, we saved tens of billions of dollars for this country in economic strength, we saved hundreds of thousands of jobs — but now we've got to take those lessons and apply them more broadly in terms of a lot of the other fundamental problems — economic problems facing the country today.

"It is time to have an intelligent national industrial policy that can repeat this success time and time again and save lots more mone and lots more jobs," Riegle said.

AT&T break-up may have rough 'touch'

By SARAH MCCLENDON
From Our Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON — Rural Americans trying to make it during the Depression considered themselves ahead of their neighbors if they managed to put in a private telephone line. During the 1980s, they might be turning their phones back in.

That's the pessimistic prediction of some Congressmen and telephone lobby groups around Capitol Hill. They point to the planned break-up of American Telephone and Telegraph and expected massive rate inreases as possibly causing some citizens to turn in their equipment. Texas home owners will be greatly affected.

"I don't have enough information to give you a horror story yet," Rep. Charles Stenholm, D-Texas, said recently. "I really fear what this (the AT&T break-up) is going to mean to rural America."

According to phone company sources Texas customers can expect hefty rate increases as early as next January, even if the Texas Public Utility Commission fails to grant Southwestern Bell Telephone Co. its record rate increase request of $1.7 billion.

Last December, the Federal Communications Commission tentatively ruled that as part of the AT&T break-up settlement, local phone companies would have to make ends meet by charging long distance access charges to all customers. In the past, those tolls were paid only by customers who used long distance.

Average charges of $4 per customer per month will send bills up in January, phone company spokesmen say. And with the access charges supposedly designed to pay for the cost of local telephone service, rural cooperative phone services will bear the brunt of costs, because their lines cover more miles.

Rural customers, in turn, will see a surge in bills.

New Braunfels customers of the Guadalupe Valley Telephone Cooperative might see an increase in average rates from the current $8.79 per month to $26.70 per month after a planned five-year transition period, according to the National Telephone Cooperative Association.

In Raymondville, the Valley Telephone Cooperative anticipates an increase for residential customers from the current average of $7.08 per month to $28.43 by 1989.

Residential customers of Wes-Tex Telephone Cooperative in Stanton should expect a rate increase over the five-year period from the current average of $11.45 per month to $27.69, the NTCA estimates.

"We're going to lose some customers," said David Bierman, assistant manager of the Guadalupe Valley Co-op. He said between 10 and 15 percent of the company's more than 10,000 customers might decide to live without home phones.

On top of its unprecedented rate increase request, Southwestern Bell also plans to charge an average $4 access charge to customers, said Bell spokesman Dale Johnson in Dallas.

In San Antonio one-party residential rates would increase from the current average $9.55 per month to $29.15 per month if the PUC approves the requested increase by December, Johnson said. In Midland, similar rates will increase from the current average monthly charge of $8.50 per month to $28.10, he said.

San Antonio one-party business rates will increase from $22.35 per month to $36.20. One-party business rates for Midland will increase from $19.90 to $34.90 average per month, if the PUC approves the proposed rate changes, Johnson said.

"We have no hard data that shows at what level people will start disconnecting phones," Johnson said. Southwestern Bell will present a survey on the subject to the PUC later this year, he said.

"People always make provisions for essential products," Johnson said. "When gasoline went up to $1 a gallon, some people said they'd stop driving. But you still see people driving big cars. With phones people will make an economic decision," he said.

A federal district judge in Washington said Friday that the FCC-approved access charges might be a hindrance to full court approval of the landmark settlement between AT&T and the Justice Department that provides for 22 phone companies to become independent Jan. 1. That agreement is under appeal to a federal circuit court in Washington.

And the access charges themselves are not set. Phone companies have until Oct. 3 to submit their rate schedules to the FCC for consideration, and only after that will the charges take effect.

More than 160 Congressmen concerned about the effects of the AT&T break-up have co-sponsored a resolution by Rep. Ron Wyden, D-Oregon, asking the FCC "to ascertain the impact on telephone rates of regulatory changes and judicial decisions affecting the telephone system." Introduced June 14, the resolution is pending befor the House Energy and Commerce Committee.

Texas co-sponsors include Stenholm, Rep. Ron Coleman, D-El Paso, Rep. Tom Vandergriff, D-Arlington, Rep. Marvin Leath, D-Marlin, Rep. Bill Patman, D-Ganado, Rep. Henry Gonzalez, D-San Antonio, Rep. Kent Hance, D-Lubbock, and Rep. Tom Loeffler, R-Hunt.

Loeffler, who said he foresaw some of the dangers of breaking up AT&T while serving on a House communications subcommitee during 1979-80, said a fair system of sharing telephone costs needs to be devised.

Action probably won't come by the end of the year, he said.

"Because they (other House members) haven't had the background I've had, it'll probably take another two months or so for the impact (of the break-up settlement) to be heard around the country," Loeffler said.

He said various unidentified telephone cooperative in his district, stretching from Llano County in Central Texas west to Pecos County and south to Bandera County, are preparing for "tremendous rate increases" within a year.

"It's putting consumers in a precarious position," Loeffler said.

While House members are pressing forlan FCC review of the access charges through the Wyden resolution, Tennessee Sen. Jim Sasser, a Democrat, unveiled a bill Tuesday to hold up the implementation of access charges for one year, while the FCC conducts an in-depth study of the charges' effects.

South Central Bell Telephone Co. in Tennessee is seeking a rate increase of $280 million from that state's Public Service Commission, which would more then double some rates commissioners said.

If the access charges take effect in Tennessee, Commissoner Jane Eskind said, "People will have to give up their phones."

Rural customers would bear an unwarranted burden, she said.

"With the case of the access charge, you're being asked to pay for a service you may never use or need," Eskind said.

Sasser's bill has yet to be introduced.

Pumping station transformer fails

The TESCO transformer went out about 10 a.m. today and may be 24 hours before service is restored. TESCO personnel and city officials at the plant noticed the outage immediately and notified Utilities Director John Lowe at the same time. "The transformer heated up and started smoking, then shut off," he said. By press time, it was unclear if the transformer could be repaired or if it would have to be replaced.

The Paul Davis field supplies Midland with more than half the city's water supply, according to Lowe, who said the Colorado River Municipal Water District has been asked to increase its output until repairs are completed and city reservoirs are replenished.

While repairs should be finished within 24 hours, it may take up to six days to recoup the loss. Midland's total average daily consumption for the first 13 days of this month was 35 million gallons.

The city has consumed record amounts of water this summer, with the alltime high set July 2 when more than 38 million gallons of water was used, according to Lowe.

CRMWD normally supplies a maximum of 13.5 million gallons a day, but the city water treatment plant can handle up to 18 mgd, said Lowe. When notified of the problem, CRMWD officials agreed to increase Midland's allotment.

Adding to the amount is about 4 mgd from McMillen Well Field west of Midland, which serves as a backup during peak summer months.

Peak usage time each day runs from 5 to 10 p.m., he said.

Accounts of videotapes develop for several days

—Attorney Arthur Barens, who represents Pancoast, angrily objects to Steinberg's statements about the tapes and labels a "lie" Steinberg's claim that he was ever hired to represent Pancoast.

—In the afternoon, Steinberg returns the gym bag to his office, but does not look inside for the tapes, according to his statements to Beverly Hills detectives.

Tuesday

—Prosecutors in the Pancoast case call Steinberg at home and ask him not to destroy the tapes, which may provide evidence.

—Three hours later, Steinberg calls prosecutor Ron Carroll and says the tapes are missing from the gym bag in his law office. Police advise him to make out a burglary report.

—Minutes later, Steinberg makes out the report and Beverly Hills police begin a theft investigation.

—A few hours later, the district attorney's office serves Steinberg with a subpoena ordering him to appear in court to produce the tapes or explain what happened to them.

—Later, Steinberg claims one of the reporters who has visited his office has stolen the tapes. He doesn't reveal a name, but says, "We know which one it was, and it's under investigation."

—Police Cmdr. William Booth and Chief Deputy District Attorney Jim Bascue emphasized that there is no evidence to prove the tapes exist other than Steinberg's widely publicized statements.

Wednesday

—Various sources say statements on Steinberg's resume are false, including claims that he works with attorney F. Lee Bailey and is associate dean and a professor at a Los Angeles law school.

—A spokesman for publisher Larry Flynt says Flynt has copies of the tapes and will publish stills in his Hustler magazine. Flynt will reveal the identities of the government officials, the spokesman says.

—A few minutes later, Flynt denies having the tapes, but says a $1 million deal to buy them from Steinberg fell through when Steinberg failed to show up at a meeting. Flynt calls Steinberg a "kook" and says he doubts the tapes exist. Steinberg tells a reporter that Flynt is a "liar."

Bell rate request called 'deficient'

AUSTIN (AP) — Southwestern Bell Telephone Co.'s request for a $1.7 billion rate hike is "materially deficient," according to a Public Utility Commission examiner who on Wednesday postponed the start of the rate hearing.

Jacqueline Holmes moved opening day to Oct. 11. She previously had set Sept. 7 for the start of the hearing that could last eight weeks.

The delay could mean that Bell won't be allowed to put higher, bonded rates into effect until January, instead of November. State law allows utilities to set their own temporary rates if the commission does not act within 90 days of a rate hike request.

New, permanent rates for Bell, previously targeted for next March, now might be delayed several months, according to PUC Spokesman Rick Hainline.

"We hope the final order won't be delayed too much," said Ms. Holmes.

In her order, Ms. Holmes told Bell to come up with more information to back up its record rate hike request. Bell lawyer Jon Dee Lawrence told the examiner last Friday that much of the information is not available because of the court-ordered breakup of the nationwide Bell System.

The final details of the antitrust suit settlement that led to the breakup won't be known until a federal judge issues a ruling, Lawrence said. He told Ms. Holmes the information might be available in September.

About $1.2 billion of Bell's rate proposal is a result of the divestiture order stemming from the antitrust suit filed against American Telephone & Telegraph Co. by the U.S. Justice Department.

The examiner's order said "the rate filing package filed by Southwestern Bell is materially deficient in that it does not contain, by Bell's own admission, all the proposed tariffs and schedules as required."

Bell spokesman Dale Johnson said company officials had not decided what to do about Ms. Holmes' order. The company can appeal to the three-member commission.

"We've got to look at the order and see what the potential impacts are," Johnson said, adding that Bell has several options.

One option, according to Johnson, is that the company would reduce its rate hike request by the amount it can not now support with information.

But Ms. Holmes told a reporter she prefers to keep the case intact, and not separate the rate hikes related to divestiture.

"I think we'd be better off in the long run doing them both together," she said. "The divestiture is going to affect all of the rates of the company anyway. To have to change all those rates to reflect the separate revenue deficiency (caused by divestiture) would be more complicated."

At the Friday prehearing, Lawrence and PUC General Counsel Allen King agreed the case should go on despite the absence of some needed information. Both lawyers said that information would become available during the case.

Driver saved from bayou curses rescuer

HOUSTON (AP) — A driver saved from a car that plunged into a bayou threatened and cursed his rescuer for answering a police officer's questions about the accident.

Lewis Knight, a cameraman for KTRK-TV, leaped into Brays Bayou in southwest Houston Tuesday afternoon and pulled James Gerald DeGeorge, 25, and the driver, 24-year-old Dale Robert Billiard, to safety.

But instead of gratitude, Knight said Billiard responded with a threat "to break my (expletive) arm" after the cameraman pointed him out to a police officer who asked who had been in the 1974 Ford.

"Well, he was wasted," Knight said Wednesday, shrugging off Billiard's rudeness. "He was a little incoherent. Real incoherent."

Files at the Harris County district attorney's office failed to show that Billiard was charged with drunken driving, although he was taken in for questioning after the accident.

Police officer B.T. Surginer said the car was traveling at about 90 mph when it hit a curb and swerved through a fence about 5:30 p.m. The car landed on its roof in the water.

DeGeorge was in stable condition in the intensive care unit of a Houston hospital Wednesday, spokeswoman Dorey Zodrow said. Ms. Zodrow said DeGeorge suffered neck injuries in the crash.

Knight said he was going up the steps to his apartment when he heard a screech of tires. He said he turned around and "realized that the fence that runs along the bayou was being ripped off of its poles."

Knight said he ran down to the water to find the car capsized with its underside barely visible.

"It was just an instinct," said Knight, who plunged into the water and began groping along the side of the vehicle. "I thought the guys were going to drown because the car was going to fill up and I knew I had to do something."

Knight said he yelled to the men in the car, who could hear him through an air pocket. After a few seconds of groping, Knight said, he found a blank space which proved to be an open window.

"I told them my hand was in the car and to feel around until they found it," he said.

One was screaming, "Help me. Help me. I don't want to die," Knight said. "Once they held onto my hand I just pulled real hard until they came through." He pulled out the driver first and handed him to another man who had waded into the water.

Knight said he and a group of onlookers stayed with the two men until police and firefighters arrived about 10 minutes later.

Capitol office on fire

AUSTIN (AP) — A fire in a fluorescent light fixture at the Capitol on Wednesday sent firefighters scrambling through rush hour traffic but caused little damage and no injuries.

The fire broke out shortly before 8 a.m. in the ground floor office of Rep. Gary Thompson, D-Abilene.

Six fire department units and 15 firefighters responded to the fire, which was contained in the light fixture.

Death Row inmate expects to be executed soon

Thomas Barefoot

HUNTSVILLE (AP) — Thomas "Andy" Barefoot, a condemned Texas prisoner whose case became a test for last-minute death sentence appeals, said Wednesday the U.S. Supreme Court has sealed his fate.

"As far as the courts are concerned, it's all over. The case is closed. I'm gone," said Barefoot, 38, speaking to reporters for the first time since the high court agreed to review his case.

Barefoot was sentenced to death by injection in the Aug. 7, 1978, shooting death of Harker Heights police officer Carl Levine, 31. Levine was investigating a fire at a night club.

But less than 12 hours before his scheduled execution Jan. 25, the Supreme Court ordered that he be kept alive and his emergency appeal be made a test case.

Last week, the justices ruled that death row inmates are not entitled to stays of executions in all cases in which appeals are pending. If a federal court does not determine the appeal raises valid points, the execution can be carried out on schedule, the decision said.

Barefoot, one of 172 men on Texas' death row, said the justices' ruling did not surprise him but added, "I didn't think they would be so open about their injustice. There was no way there was any justice for me. They were thinking only in terms of dollars and cents and I'm the goat."

The New Iberia, La., native will be returned to Bell County to have a new execution date set.

"I expected them to come last Friday," he said. "I read in the newspapers that they say give them 45 days and they'll have me executed. So I know they're looking to do it as quickly as they can.

"And once they start, it will be like the little Dutch boy pulling his thumb out of the dike. The whole thing will come tumbling down," he said.

Death row inmate Billy Hughes said other prisoners are worried that Barefoot will be the second U.S. convict to die by injection.

"We know he's very close to death and we're worried about him. It's making some people very bitter," Hughes said.

But Barefoot, quoting frequently from the New Testament, said he has made his peace and recalled that as he waited in the prison's death chamber in January, "I just wanted to go home."

"I don't know that I'd say I wanted to die. I wanted a new beginning. And a new beginning is just what you get when you die in the rings of the Lord Jesus Christ," he said.

Barefoot appeared calm as he talked of his feelings about the impact of the Supreme Court's decision.

"I've already done died three times," he said. "The last time I came so close that my poor mama and my dad made all the arrangements, bought the coffin, a plot of ground and the whole nine yards. Dying, I do it well."

Barefoot, the father of three girls and one boy, said he still does not want to die and hopes new evidence will surface soon that will prove his innocence. And if his execution is carried out, he again has vowed he will not walk to the death chamber.

"It's their job to do what they (the guards) gotta do, and it's my job to try to live as much as I can," he said. "I am not a violent person, but I am not going to walk (to the death chamber) and get up on the table. I'm not going to do their jobs. That would be committing suicide."

A logo designed for the City of Dallas in conjunction with the Republican National Convention in 1984 was unveiled Wednesday. According to a spokesman, the logo captures the spirit of Dallas and the American political heritage.

Logo will commemorate 1984 GOP convention in Dallas

DALLAS (AP) — Dallas city officials on Wednesday unveiled a logo which will commemorate the Republican National Convention which will be held here in August 1984.

The logo, designed by Jack and Bonnie Evans, owners of an advertising firm, constists of a red-white-and-blue elephant within a red "D." The design is surrounded by the message "Dallas 1984 — Working Together."

The design, owned by the city, will be used as a trademark by the Dallas Welcoming Committee, which will charge royalties for its use on commemorative items, officials said. The royalties will go into the Dallas Convention Fund.

The welcoming committee is a nonpartisan group assigned by the city to welcome delegates and other visitors who come to the city for the convention, Dallas spokesmen said.

Judge throws out charges

AUSTIN (AP) — A state judge, ruling that the indictments were too vague, on Wednesday threw out official misconduct and theft charges against Austin City Attorney Albert DeLaRosa.

DeLaRosa was indicted June 28 in connection with alleged abuses of travel expenses. The charges resulted from expense accounts he submitted for his wife's travel.

Judge Bob Perkins said the indictments did not give DeLaRosa "sufficient notice" about the exact nature of the charges.

Law school professor resigns

AUSTIN (AP) — Professor Millard Ruud has resigned from the University of Texas Law School to become executive director of the Association of American Law Schools, a position he held from 1973 to 1980.

Ruud, 66, plans to return to Austin from the Washington, D.C., job after four years.

Ruud joined the law faculty in 1948 and was associate dean in 1966-68.

UT granted him leave from 1973 to 1978 to take the association job, and he resigned from the faculty to stay on for two more years. In 1980, he was rehired by UT.

County ordered to pay attorneys

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — Two attorneys who handled a 13-year lawsuit for an improved law library at the Bexar County jail must be paid $90,119 by the county, a federal judge says.

Included in that sum for fees and expenses is more than $20,000 in interest accrued during the years of the suit, which was dismissed four times by former U.S. District Judge Adrian Spears and resurrected by appellate courts.

U.S. District Judge Fred Shannon on Monday awarded the money to Frances Freeman Cruz and Lonnie Duke.

First black to go into space says he feels no pressure

SPACE CENTER (AP) — Guion S. Bluford said Wednesday that he feels no extra pressure being the first black astronaut selected to fly in space, saying of his scheduled August mission: "I feel I am a pacesetter, but I don't feel I have to be perfect as well."

The eighth shuttle flight — featuring NASA's first nighttime shuttle launch and landing — is tentatively set for Aug. 20. The agency is expected to set a firm date next week.

Bluford, one of four blacks in the astronaut corps, acknowledged his "historical role" has focused attention on the five-man, five-day flight. "I just hope I do a very professional job."

"Do I feel extra pressure? None that I can tell," he said at a news conference to discuss the flight.

Bluford, an Air Force lieutenant colonel, de-emphasized his role, just as Sally Ride did hers as the first American space woman when she flew on Challenger last month.

"I will set a pace for others who will follow, but I don't feel I have to be perfect," he said. Two black astronauts have flight assignments in 1984.

Commanding next month's mission is Navy Capt. Richard Truly, pilot of the second shuttle flight in 1981.

The launch should be spectacular, with Challenger set to ride seven million pounds of thrust from Cape Canaveral, Fla., at 1:21 a.m. CDT. If the night is clear the flame should be visible for hundred of miles. Landing is also set for after dark — five days later at 11:45 p.m. CDT.

Truly said a normal night launch should be no different than any others — "except to those who are watching." Even the landing should be routine, he said, because the runway at Edwards will be brightly illuminated with scores of floodlights.

"Once we're in sight of the field it should be as bright as daylight," the commander said. "Landing at night on an aircraft carrier is a much more difficult operation."

Nurse delivers baby girl via telephone

FORT WORTH (AP) — It was not the most conventional of deliveries.

Gerry Hartmann, a registered nurse, has delivered babies in homes, hospitals and cars. But last week, she delivered her first ever by phone.

Now, all she wants to do is see the baby.

"I heard the baby cry, but I would really like to see it," said Ms. Hartmann, the assistant head nurse in the All Saints emergency room.

Ms. Hartmann, was a midwife in Manchester, England, before coming to the United States in 1971. Maybe that's why when the frantic phone call came in Thursday, it was directed to her.

"I don't know why they called us except that All Saints is the very first hospital listed in the phone book, and they were in a big hurry," she said.

Ms. Hartmann, 37, said she asked the expectant mother-to-be what she could see as she "crowned" labor.

The girl replied she could see "the shoulders of the infant.

"I directed her to feel for the cord and make sure it wasn't wrapped around the baby's neck and then I just kind of told her how to work her fingers around the shoulders and rotate the baby to the best possible position.

"When the baby came out I could hear it crying, and I told her to turn it upside down and pinch its heels and keep it crying for a little while and make sure all the mucus was out of its mouth," she said.

Ms. Hartmann said her main concern was finding out what color the baby was, and the mother said it was white.

"I said 'Oh, no. I need to know if it is pink or if it is blue.' I was trying to find out if it was breathing okay. I hadn't even thought about it being white or black or any other color," she said.

The baby turned out to be "very pink," and a girl, she said.

But Ms. Hartmann still doesn't even have the mother's name.

On Monday, the mother called the emergency room to thank Ms. Hartmann and tell her that both she and the baby were doing fine. She also offered Ms. Hartmann $100, but the nurse turned it down.

"I told her I couldn't take the money, but she said well she would just donate it to the hospital," she said. "I wanted to talk to her and at least find out her name, but I had a very sick patient who was having a bad time. Wednesday when she phoned, and I was not able to talk to her."

She said she took down a phone number, but later misplaced it.

Reagan's Civil Rights nominees criticized

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan's nominees to replace three fired members of the U.S. Commission on Civil Rights came under fire Wednesday from liberals and minority groups who found no fault with their qualifications but deemed them "tainted by the president's act."

Though there was little doubt that the Republican-controlled Senate Judiciary Committee would send the nominations to the floor, the confirmation hearing served as a forum for scores of critics who charged that Reagan had abused the civil rights panel's integrity by insisting on commissioners who share his views on school busing and affirmative action.

Sens. Joseph R. Biden Jr., D-Del., Howard M. Metzenbaum, D-Ohio, and Patrick J. Leahy, Vt., were joined by 157 members of the House, including Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill Jr., D-Mass., in venting their displeasure over Reagan's action. Their views were shared, too, by several women's, religious, Hispanic and Black organizations.

None said the nominees were not qualified, but Metzenbaum urged their withdrawal on ground they are "tainted by the president's act in firing the previous commissioners."

Biden told the nominees: "The question hanging over you will be that when you disagree with the president, will he remove you?"

Opposition began organizing last month after Reagan nominated three white men to replace members who had been critical of his civil rights policies, especially on affirmative-action quotas and court-ordered school busing. The incumbents are a black woman, Mary Frances Berry; a Hispanic woman, Blandina Cardenas Ramirez; and Rabbi Murray Saltzman, who is white. They will serve until succeeded.

REAGAN NOMINATED Morris B. Abram, 64, a New York lawyer and former president of Brandeis University; John H. Bunzel, 59, a senior research fellow at Stanford University's Hoover Institution and former president of San Jose State University, and Robert H. Destro, 32, assistant professor of law at Catholic University's Columbus Law School.

Sen. Orrin Hatch, R-Utah, who presided over the hearing, said the only question is whether the nominees are incompetent or would be detrimental to the commission, not whether the president could legally remove any incumbent.

"The question of the president's authority to remove is even more far-fetched when we realize that when President Kennedy assumed office in 1961, when President Johnson assumed office in 1963 and again when he was re-elected, they requested and received (with only a single exception) the resignations of all commission members," he said.

"President Nixon asked for and received the resignation of Father Hesburgh, the chairman of the commission, in 1972."

Mother on trial for spanking death of child

MORGANTOWN, W.Va. (AP) — Leslie Green was a weak-willed woman who didn't realize how seriously her 2-year-old son Joseph was being injured by a two-hour beating, a defense attorney said in closing arguments Wendesday at her trial for involuntary manslaughter.

The woman, a member of a reclusive Christian community which practices strict discipline, is accused of spanking her son for refusing to offer an apology.

The Monongalia County Circuit court jury received the case Wednesday afternoon and deliberated for four hours before retiring for the night without a verdict.

Defense lawyers blamed the death on the father, Stuart Green, who pleaded guilty in May to involuntary manslaughter and was the prosecution's key witness in his wife's trial.

Prosecutors argued that the child died as the result of "ritual" punishment initiated by Mrs. Green and administered at Stonegate, a Christian community in Kabletown where the family lived. Members have said the group's tenets include strict discipline of children.

Testifying in her own defense, Mrs. Green rejected descriptions of Stonegate as a Christian "commune" where children were mistreated.

"IT'S NOT ANY CULT," she said. "We're Christians, that's all."

Mrs. Green was the only witness called by the defense. During 50 minutes of tearful testimony, she acknowledged joining in the fatal beating but said she "didn't know what it could do" to her son.

Defense lawyer Ed Friend, attempting to persuade jurors that the diminutive woman could not have seriously injured the child, had her hit him with a wooden paddle similar to that used on Joseph. Friend knelt before the jury box as Mrs. Green tapped him several times with the paddle.

In closing arguments, Friend blamed the death on the father and said Mrs. Green lacked the motivation or power to stop her husband from harming their child. He described Mrs. Green as a simple woman content to do house work and allow her husband to make decisions.

"She probably for the rest of her life always has been and probably always will be a bystander to the acts of life," he said. "That is not criminal, the fact that she probably was born 100 years too late."

Prosecutors argued that that if Mrs. Green had not begun beating her son when he refused to apologize for striking a playmate, the entire episode could have been avoided.

"Without her presence, we have no ritual," Jefferson County Prosecutor Braun Hamstead. "It was a plan, a scheme, a device, a ritual beating. There is no doubt about it."

PROSECUTORS ALLEGED that Joseph was struck repeatedly with a foot-long paddle by both his mother and father.

Circuit Judge Frank DePond told the jurors that they should determine whether Mrs. Green encouraged, aided and abetted the spanking. He also said they should find her guilty if they believed Mrs. Green intentionally delayed medical care.

Parents file suit against educators

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP) — The parents of three Arkansas first-grade students have filed a lawsuit in federal court saying a teacher terrorized their children, causing them to have nightmares or wet the bed.

The parents, from Judsonia, said teacher Bonnie Orr's acts caused two of the children to need medical treatment and all three to require psychological care. They asked for $100,000 in compensatory damages and $100,000 in punitive damages for each of the children.

Paul and Linda Bennett filed the lawsuit in behalf of their daughter, Lisa; Bobby and Donna Grimes filed for their son, Brandon, and Larry and Debbie Phifer filed for their son, Mark.

The lawsuit names Mrs. Orr, school Superintendent Eddie Wood, Principal James Edwards and the board of directors of the Judsonia School District as defendants.

The lawsuit said the children were assigned to Mrs. Orr's first grade class last fall.

Mrs. Orr punished Lisa for not performing her work properly by striking the girl on the knuckles with the pencil, bruising her, the lawsuit said.

"During the first two weeks of school, defendant Orr also violently jerked plaintiff Lisa Bennett out of her chair and viciously beat her in the presence of other first graders," the complaint said.

The teacher also hit Brandon with a large pencil, causing his skin to break and bruises to appear, the lawsuit said.

Mark also was struck, and Lisa and Brandon required medical care, the lawsuit said.

The parents contend their children suffered psychologically because of their experiences including nightmares, withdrawal, vomiting and bed wetting.

The parents had asked the school to transfer their children to another class, but that request was denied.

THE BETTER HALF

"I've had it! I quit the human race! From now on, I'm going to be a rabbit!"

Your horoscope

By JEANE DIXON

Friday, July 15, 1983

YOUR BIRTHDAY TODAY: The Dutch painter Rembrandt, English architect Inigo Jones and America's first saint, Mother Cabrini, were born on this date. Also sharing your birthday: Linda Ronstadt, "Dallas" star Ken Kercheval, novelist Iris Murdoch and actor Patrick Wayne. Savor your victories and build on them in the months ahead. Romance and business hold great promise if you are willing to make the first move. Family traditions become more important than ever. Stop trying to analyze your loved ones' every action. You have your own life to lead! Let a young person bear the consequences of his carelessness. You cannot protect him forever.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): An imaginative approach makes you a winner in business or romance. Keep spending on an even keel. A reunion gives you new insights. Someone you dislike could turn into a friend.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Quit beating someone over the head with the same old argument. Talent backed by hard work will help you land a better job. Rejoice in a friend or relative's success.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Accept loved one's apology graciously. You need to relax some of the rules where a teenager is concerned. Do your best to rise above an unexpected family expense.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Curb a tendency to act on impulse. Issuing an ultimatum to a loved one or coworker could precipitate a confrontation. Watch out for a financial deception. Romance sizzles!

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Family ties and personal relationships flourish now. You find out someone's secret in an unusual way. Your reputation will suffer if you betray this person. Letters and interviews bring rewarding results.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Make use of any professional friends who can help you protect your savings. A trusted pal's advice and support mean a lot. Carefully scrutinize all contracts before signing your name.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): You need to conserve your energies now. Stick to conventional work methods and avoid getting involved in office politics. Family affairs are in the spotlight. An older relative requires loving care.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Well-connected friends could be instrumental in your finalizing a deal. Tie up loose ends quickly so that you can get away for a long weekend. You need to doublecheck travel arrangements.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Curb any outside activities that could interfere with an important work project. A new occupational field looks promising. Send a small gift to someone whose feelings have been hurt.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): You are in a positive frame of mind. Consult lawyer if in doubt about the fine print in a contract. You would be wise to dissolve a false friendship without further delay.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Avoid scattering your energies. Joint projects, artistic endeavors enjoy favorable influences. Tackle one task at a time. An older person is willing to help if you ask. Your social circle is changing.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): A difference of opinion arises over the best way to solve a mutual problem. Be willing to try new methods. A change of direction is advised for romance, too.

Old films being preserved

HOLLYWOOD (AP) — Anyone who's seen "The King and I" lately and wondered if the TV set was losing its color, shouldn't worry.

The set isn't fading. The movie is.

"The King and I" and a host of other films made in the 1950s and '60s will never be seen in their vivid original color. Half of the 21,000 feature films made before 1951, when acetate film replaced the volatile, self-destructive nitrate, have disappeared altogether.

And more than one-third of all films and TV shows produced since then also have been lost.

That's part of tragic problem the American Film Institute is striving to alleviate with its new campaign, "The Decade of Preservation."

Hundreds of films have been lost because studios thought they would have no value after their original release. Other films were lost in fires or floods, or destroyed for their silver content.

Color is a special problem. Until the 1950s, most major films were made with the three-strip Technicolor process; if the strips are separated, vivid new prints can be made in perpetuity. But studios converted to the less costly one-strip Eastman film which fades in time. If colors haven't faded too far, they can be enhanced by lab reprocessing.

The major project for preservationists has always been the transfer of nitrate film — which can explode or turn to dust — to safety film. It costs $1,000 per reel of film, and thousands of reels are awaiting rescue from extinction.

Videotape is also an endangered species. Experts figure tape has a shelf life of five to 20 years and can easily be erased or destroyed by a magnetic field. Tape must be transferred periodically to new tape to insure longevity, but each transfer lessens quality.

The AFI, the film archives of the University of California at Los Angeles, RKO General and its local TV and radio stations recently cut a ban quet at the Beverly Hilton Hotel to kick off the campaign.

Motion pictures are the most fascinating of all the arts," said Bette Davis, one of the evening's hosts. "They can be educational as well as entertaining ... the most powerful tool for communication ... [illegible]

I have a secret fear that I won't be around here 10 years from now. I'll probably be glad I'm not around here 10 years from now. But I hope my films will be.

James Caan, another host, said that the negative of the 1939 classic "Stagecoach" had been discarded and a complete print exists only because John Wayne saved one.

Opening lead: Queen of ♡.

Here's another of those strange hands where your result should depend on whether you are playing duplicate or rubber bridge. At duplicate, you should go down; at rubber bridge you should make four spades.

We don't approve of South's decision to open four spades, even third-in-hand opposite a passed partner — it is too easy to miss a slam. There is no reason not to [illegible] one spade.

At duplicate, the correct technique is to duck the heart and win the continuation. Now lead a trump to the king. Since the most likely trump distribution is 2-1, more often than not you will end up making an overtrick because you can discard your club loser on the diamonds, using the five of trumps as an entry. When West shows out on the first round of trumps, you will end up losing a trick in each suit unless the defense slips. However, you will have done no worse than the rest of the field.

At rubber bridge, however, you should make your contract! After winning the ace of hearts, you should lead a trump to the jack. If it loses, you don't mind. That means trumps are breaking no worse than 2-1, and you will be able to use your trump entry to the table to take your club discard and so you lose a trick in each suit except clubs.

As the cards lie, your finesse succeeds and you don't lose a trump trick, just one trick in each plain suit. So your safety play to protect against a 4-0 split pays a huge dividend.

Parents sued by Scout Council

BEAVER, Pa. (AP) — Fourteen parents have been sued by the Beaver-Castle Girl Scout Council to recover about $1,100 in unpaid cookie bills.

Wende Reynolds, council executive director, said this is the fourth consecutive year she has been forced to sue parents of Girl Scouts to recover money from cookie sales.

"The first year I felt terrible. Since then, I realized I have a responsibility to the Girl Scouts," Ms. Reynolds said.

The latest suits were filed with District Magistrate George Shaffer, who has scheduled a hearing for July 21.

Famous jazz club closed by IRS

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Keystone Korner, one of the last of San Francisco's famous jazz clubs, has been closed by the Internal Revenue Service because of overdue back taxes, IRS officals said.

The North Beach nightclub, which provided a stage for Miles Davis, Freddie Hubbard, Dexter Gordon and hundreds of other musicians, was seized by the IRS on Tuesday, agency spokesman Rob Marion said. He said it will probably be auctioned off in about six weeks.

The club has had financial difficulties since switching to jazz from folk-rock 11 years ago, and owner Todd Barkan has staged at least six benefit concerts since 1974 to help cover deficits.

Marion said Barkan owes at least $31,864 and is charged with failing to pay withholding and Social Security taxes for 1980 and 1981.

Robbery could be motive in murder

COSTA MESA, Calif. (AP) — Robbery appears to be the motive in the murder of a former Orange County supervisor's son, say police who arrested a Santa Ana mover in the killing.

Patrick Scott Miller, 26, son of former Supervisor Edison Miller, was found beaten and strangled June 28 in his Costa Mesa home, police said. Richard James Wetherall, 26, was booked Monday night for investigation of murder, Lt. Jack Calnon said Tuesday.

A shotgun, color TV set and other property were taken from Miller's home, and none has been recovered, police said.

Police were also seeking an arrest warrant for a second man who had worked with Wetherall until last weekend at the moving firm Two College Men Will Move You, Calnon said.

Public library acquires major works

NEW YORK (AP) — The New York Public Library, which houses one of the world's largest Herman Melville collections, has acquired a major collection of papers by and about the author of "Moby Dick."

The library announced this week that the collection, purchased from the Lyrical Ballad Bookstore in Saratoga Springs, includes a 30-page section of the first draft of Melville's first novel, "Typee," dated 1845.

Also included is a fragment of the story "Bartleby the Scrivener"; three letters signed by Melville; and four letters written to Melville, including onedated 1851 from Nathaniel Hawthorne.

More than 500 letters from Melville's family round out the collection.

ABC News' program canceled

NEW YORK (AP) — ABC News' second attempt to follow "Nightline" with a late-night news broadcast has failed with the cancelation of "One on One," the interview program anchored by Greg Jackson, ABC News announced Wednesday.

The show will leave the air July 29, the network said.

State parties warned

DETROIT (AP) — The national Democratic Party issued a not-so-subtle warning Wednesday to the state parties to abide by the rules for the 1984 nomination or face a take-over of the state process by the national party.

California, Maine, New Hampshire and Iowa were the main targets of the shot-across-the bow fired by the executive committee of the Democratic National Committee.

The executive committee adopted a resolution starting the planning for the harshest punishment that can be meted out to a non-complying state — intervention by the Democratic National Committee to set up the process for selecting the 1984 convention delegates from a state.

National Chairman Charles Manatt refused to say the executive committee action was directed as his home state of California, agreeing instead that it was a warning to all the states.

A COMPLEX fight over the state budget and reapportionment has raised the possibility of a December "beauty contest" presidential primary there. Such a primary would violate the party rules and the party charter on when such events may be held, which bans primaries before Jan. 1.

"Nothing has ripened so far as I can tell in the California situation. We have no such plan before us," Manatt said. But two party sources, speaking on condition they not be identified, said California was one of the four states at which the warning was directed.

The other three are involved in the continuing squabble over who will go first in the 1984 primary and caucus season.

AND ONE source explained that Manatt did not issue a stronger warning to California on the possible rules violation because he did not want to give Republican Gov. George Deukmejian any more ammunition in the budget fight. California Democrats are trying to discourage the governor from calling a December special election to vote on the state's latest redistricting, which carried out a Democratic redrawing of the lines. As a counter, the Democrats have threatened the primary to lure their own supporters to the polls in December if an election is held.

The executive committee authorized a report on the implementation of the rule — never used before — that allows the national party to step in and set state rules for selection of convention delegates.

The decision — hurried through the executive committee with no discussion — does not take any direct action against any state. It only calls for a report on how to do so later this year.

CIA encounters cost overruns in support of Nicaraguan fight

WASHINGTON (AP) — The CIA, surprised by the number of Nicaraguans joining the fight against the leftist Sandinista government, has encountered cost overruns in its not-so-secret support of the counter-revolutionary forces, intelligence sources said Wednesday.

The sources, who spoke on condition they not be identified, said the cost to feed, train and arm the estimated 10,000 Nicaraguans who are now part of the insurgency has driven the budget above the planned $19 million a year. The sources declined to give the new figure for the operation.

"When you have twice as many people as you expected, it's going to cost more," said one source. "You have to feed and arm the ralliers, and since they are not as well trained, they fire off more ammunition."

Sources said that even though the number of fighters is double the expected total, the cost for the operation has not increased by that magnitude because the newer fighters who have joined the anti-Sandinista cause are not receiving as much training as the earlier insurgents did.

Besides the cost, the newcomers also present other problems, the sources said. The larger numbers enable the Sandinistas to locate the "contra" — or counter-revolutionary — forces more easily and some of the new recruits are suspected to be Sandinista agents.

"The Sandinistas know where everything is," said one source. "It's easy (for agents) to penetrate a movement like this. It's amazing that (rebel leader Eden) Pastora has stayed alive this long."

Asked about the reported higher costs, CIA spokeswoman Kathryn Riedel said, "we do not comment on allegations of covert activities."

Americans who have visited the Nicaraguan war zone along the Honduran border have brought back conflicting assessments of the popular support for the contras. Despite U.S. backing, the rebels have waged largely a hit-and-run war that has failed to spark a general insurrection.

The sources said that despite the rebel success in attracting fighters, the contras are still too weak to topple the 4-year-old Sandinista government, backed by a 25,000-man regular army and a 50,000-man militia force.

Much of the congressional debate about the covert action has focused on whether it is violating a 1982 law barring the CIA from supporting the rebels "for the purpose" of overthrowing the Sandinista government.

In secret congressional testimony, CIA director William J. Casey has insisted that the purpose of the operation is to interdict weapons being shipped to leftist guerrillas in El Salvador. But contra leaders have declared publicly that their goal is to overthrow the Sandinistas.

British Parliament fails to restore death penalty

LONDON (AP) — The House of Commons decisively rejected restoration of capital punishment for murder for the fifth time in nine years Wednesday night.

By majorities ranging from 175 to 81 votes, the lower house of Parliament voted down amendments to a Conservative member's motion calling for the return of the death penalty for five kinds of murder.

Because all five amendments were rejected, it was decided no vote was necessary for the parent motion urging restoration of the principle of hanging for murder.

The deputies voted 361-245 against death for murder by terrorists despite the slaying by the Irish Republican Army of four government militiamen and two Irish Catholics in Northern Ireland earlier in the day.

The other votes were 344-263 against hanging for the murder of policemen, 348-252 against death for murderers of prison guards, 374-204 against the execution of murderers by shooting or causing an explosion, and 369-194 against hanging for murder in the furtherance of theft.

Speaker after speaker on both sides of the issue used the killings in Northern Ireland to bolster their arguments for and against capital punishment. John Hume of the province's chief Roman Catholic party, Social Democratic and Labor, told the house hanging would make martyrs of the guerrillas, and "if you want the IRA to win, then hang them. If you erect a scaffold in my country, you will turn it into a savage and bloody battlefield."

The Rev. Ian Paisley, the militant Protestant leader, retorted: "The gallows has already been erected in Northern Ireland, not by this House but by the IRA. Today there is a cry to this House from those already hung, drawn and quartered, murdered and tortured by the IRA."

Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher's law-and-order spokesman, Home Secretary Leon Brittan, opened the debate with a call for restoration of the death penalty for terrorist murderers but said he opposed capital punishment for other killers.

Brittan said advocates of the death penalty "are not thirsting for revenge, but they do regard it as the duty of the state to signal its total and absolute repugnance for those who commit crimes that undermine its very foundations."

"The terrorist is at war with us and will take whatever action he can to defeat us," said Brittan, who is in charge of the police and prisons.

Roy Hattersley, the opposition Labor Party's chief spokesman on domestic affairs, said bringing back the hangman for any kind of murder would mark "a reversion to barbarism."

Chad chases rebel forces

ABECHE, Chad (AP) — Government troops Wednesday chased Libyan-backed rebels through the desert around this crossroads town and claimed control of a vital north-south highway that insurgents occupied last week.

In the capital, N'Djamena, 450 Zairean troops arrived Wednesday to help President Hissene Habre fight the insurgents. The force is expected eventually to number 2,000 men.

Three Mirage jet fighters from the Zairean air force also arrived and the remaining soliders promised by President Mobutu Seso Seko were expected in coming days.

The official Zairean news agency said Mobutu was sending reinforcements to Chad "to defend the legitimacy" of Habre's government and to help check Moslem "Libyan expansionism" into black central Africa.

Military convoy ambushed

BELFAST, Northern Ireland (AP) — IRA guerrillas ambushed a military convoy Wednesday, killing four Protestant soldiers, and apparently executed two informers in the British province's worst day of violence this year.

Police said four of the dead were soldiers of the Ulster Defense Regiment, killed when guerrillas detonated a 500-pound land mine on a remote country road in County Tyrone. Another trooper was badly wounded.

The two other dead were believed to be victims of guerrilla executioners cracking down on informers among the province's 500,000-strong Roman Catholic minority. Informers are said to have exposed some 200 militants in recent months.

Iraq plans border offensive

NICOSIA, Cyprus (AP) — An Iraqi field commander said Wednesday that Iran was preparing an offensive to forge "a new international border" with Iraq, but such an attack would lead to Iran's "total destruction," the official Iraqi news agency reported.

It said the Third Army corps commander, whose name it did not give, made the statement in an interview with the Baghdad weekly magazine Alef Ba.

Lebanese village panicked

By The Associated Press

Israeli jets panicked the population of southwest Lebanon with mock dive bombings all day Wednesday, repeatedly crashing the sound barrier. People scurried into basements and bomb shelters in Sidon and neighboring towns and villages.

The aerial maneuvers came as Israeli Defense Minister Moshe Arens and his Syrian counterpart, Maj. Gen. Mustafa Tlass, traded threats after touring their occupation zones in Lebanon the day before.

Arens said if attacks on Israeli troops continued, the Israeli army would respond with stronger blows.

Chilean jailings criticized

MEXICO CITY (AP) — The Foreign Ministry said Wednesday that the jailing of Chilean political and union leaders represents "an intransigent attitude and an act of intolerance."

A statement said the Ministry expressed "its deep concern about the situation of social instability that prevails in that brother country and that complicates its return to the sources of a democratic life respecting human, political and union rights."

Mexico broke off relations with the Chilean government after the 1973 coup that ousted Marxist President Salvador Allende and installed the military regime of Gen. Auigusto Pinochet.

Rioting stirs little concern

SANTIAGO, Chile (AP) — Officials displayed little public concern Wednesday over anti-government protests that turned into riots and caused two deaths the night before. Some declared willingness to continue limited contact with opposition groups.

Police said two 19-year-old students, both women, were shot to death in Santiago and Vina del Mar and 450 people were arrested in four cities Tuesday during the third "Day of National Protest" called by political activists in as many months. At least half those detained were released later.

Browns lose top draftee

By Associated Press

While the Chicago Bears wait to hear whether hurdler Willie Gault will sign a National Football League contract and forego the 1984 Summer Olympics, another double threat has decided that track comes first.

The Cleveland Browns, who open training camp to the rookies on Friday, received the bad news Wednesday that their top draft choice, wide receiver Ron Brown, will pursue a berth on the U.S. Olympic team as a sprinter instead of joining the Browns.

"We've done all we can do to get him signed and it hasn't happened," said a disappointed Jim Bailey, the Browns' vice president and general counsel. "Ron Brown misrepresented his intentions and so did his agent. We've given Ron Brown what we consider to be an exceptional offer. We're very disappointed and upset."

Team spokesman Kevin Byrne said that Brown's agent, Steve Arnold, called Wednesday to report that the former Arizona State player was flying to Europe, where he plans to compete in track meets through the first or second week of August. That would carry him through Cleveland's first two preseason games.

The Super Bowl champion Washington Redskins opened their rookie camp Thursday as Coach Joe Gibbs also welcomed a select group of veterans. The Redskins will be out to break a streak that has affected Super Bowl champions. The Oakland Raiders and San Francisco 49ers, the champions prior to the Redskins, both failed to make the playoffs in the year after their championship.

The Miami Dolphins, who lost three key offensive players — Larry Csonka, Jim Kiick and Paul Warfield — eight years ago to a maverick football league, found out this week that two of their defensive specialists are being courted by the USFL.

A.J. Duhe, whose three interceptions in the AFC championship Game put the Dolphins into the Super Bowl, and nose guard Bob Baumhower, a key member of the "Killer B's," were driven in a Rolls Royce to the home of owner Fred Bullard of the expansion Jacksonville Bulls. Both players are beginning the option year of their contracts.

Ryan posts 9th victory

HOUSTON (AP) — Streaking Nolan Ryan scattered five hits in eight innings and rookie George Bjorkman drove in five runs as the Houston Astros downed the Montreal Expos 9-4 Wednesday night.

Ryan, 9-1, fanned five and walked three in winning his eighth straight game and leading the Astros to their seventh victory in their last eight games. Houston has won 11 of the 12 games Ryan has started.

The 36-year-old right-hander raised his career strikeout total to 3,578 before getting ninth-inning relief help from Bill Dawley, who gave up the Expos' last run on Chris Speier's RBI single. Philadelphia's Steve Carlton struck out seven in a 5-2 loss to Atlanta Wednesday night to stay ahead of Ryan with 3,582.

Bjorkman, who was playing on the Astros' Double-A affiliate in Columbus, Ga., a month ago, hit his first major-league home run, a three-run shot in the seventh inning, and added RBIs on a sacrifice bunt and a single.

The Expos touched Ryan for a run in the third on Speier's triple and a single by pitcher Charlie Lea, but the Astros retaliated with five runs in the bottom of the inning.

Houston loaded the bases with none out when Lea, 6-6, issued walks to Omar Moreno and Dickie Thon sandwiched around Terry Puhl's single. Phil Garner then reached first base as Thon was forced at second and Moreno scored and Jose Cruz's two-run triple made it 3-1.

An RBI single by Ray Knight, Bill Doran's hit-and-run single, and Bjorkman's sacrifice bunt added two more runs for a 5-1 edge.

Montreal countered with solo home runs by Tim Wallach and Andre Dawson. Wallach hit his 10th round-tripper in the fifth inning and Dawson hit his 18th in the sixth.

Houston added an unearned run in the fifth inning.

Darwin tagged as Texas' tailspins, 6-2

Rangers loses sixth in last seven

ARLINGTON (AP) — Bob McClure won his fifth consecutive game and Ted Simmons drove in two runs Wednesday night as the Milwaukee Brewers defeated the slumping Texas Rangers 6-2.

McClure, 6-7, scattered eight hits over 6 1-3 innings and benefited from three double plays before he was relieved by Jim Slaton.

Loser Danny Darwin, 7-8, was tagged for 12 hits in 6 2-3 innings. Although the Rangers lost for the sixth time in their last seven games, they remained on top in the American League West, but only one-half game ahead of the Chicago White Sox.

Milwaukee took a 2-0 lead in the third inning. Marshall Edwards was safe on second baseman Wayne Tolleson's 14th error of the season, stole second, moved to third on Paul Molitor's fly ball and scored on Cecil Cooper's single. Cooper scored on a double by Simmons.

Simmons collected his 53rd RBI of the season with a fifth-inning single after Jim Gantner singled was sacrificed to second.

Edwards' infield hit that bounced off Darwin's leg gave Milwaukee a 4-0 lead in the sixth. Rick Manning singled, was sacrificed to second and scored on Edwards' single, which scooted into short left field.

The Brewers added two more runs in the seventh. Molitor was safe on an error by shortstop Jim Anderson, stole second and scored on Bill Schroeder's triple, the first major league hit for the catcher, who was recalled from the minors a few days ago. Schroeder scored when Manning singled.

Dave Hostetler's two-run homer in the seventh accounted for the Texas runs.

Jackson blanks M-Cubs

Midland bats .172 in series

JACKSON, Miss.—Midland's Cubs hope the hospitality in Little Rock is more generous than that in the land of Magnolias.

The Jackson Mets handed the Cubs a 7-0 setback Wednesday night to complete a four-out-of-five embarrassment as Midland dropped its ninth in 10 Texas League starts.

It was the second shutout by the Mets of Midland in the series and the third shutout of this series in which base hits were at a premium, especially for the famished Bruins.

Midland batted .172 as a team for the series. Jackson allowed the Cubs one earned run a game, six runs in all.

Wednesday, Jackson greeted Ron Richardson, making his first start since coming off the Disabled List, by scoring a run in the first and then six in the second. That was the scoring for the night, but it was more than enough.

Midland collected just five singles off three Jackson pitchers as Phil Huffman went the first five innings before retiring after straining a muscle in his back.

Jackson scored in the first when LaSchelle Tarver beat out an infield hit, stole second, took third on an infield out and scored on a passed ball against Midland catcher Don Hyman when Mike Mitchell reached first on a strike out. Hyman couldn't find the ball at his feet and before Richardson could make the play, the runner was in from third.

In the second, Richardson faced five batters and retired no one. Vance McHenry singled, Al Pedrique beat out an infield hit, Tarver walked, Rich McMullen beat out a single to third to drive in one run. Mitchell singled home two more and Carlos Gil relieved Richardson. Mike Bishop was walked intentionally. Billy Beane grounded out, but a run came home and then John Gibbon doubled home two runs.

Joe Housey, who wasn't scheduled to join the Cubs from Salinas until today, will start tonight's game against Arkansas. Housey is taking the place of Ken Pryce, who has been called up to Iowa of the American Association.

Jay Loviglio had three of Midland's five hits for the night.

It was a long series for Trey Brooks and Don Hyman (both 0-for-13) and shortstop A.J. Hill (1-for-17).

More voices heard in Ol' Guy's behalf

Several weeks ago Midland High baseball coach Tim Whalen and the Reporter-Telegram's Bob Brundage grabbed Ernie Johnson's cane and began to beat him with it. It was a dastardly act that offended the sense of fair play.

I gradually leaped out of rocking chair to untrustworthy computer terminal in defense of the Midland Lee baseball coach.

Whalen and Brundage referred to Ernie as the "Ol' Guy". Folks who have known Ernie for years and years and years, were shocked and mortified by such a singular lack of respect for tradition.

In rallying to Ernie's defense, it was pointed out in this space that Johnson really wasn't that old and skimmed over a sampling of players he had coached over the years in making a point.

BOTH CARL and Terry Schreiner, residing in far away Duncan, Okla., got word of the Whalen-Brundage insult and responded.

From Terry, "Why it was just a couple of weeks ago while trying to explain the advantages of laying down a good sacrifice bunt to the 15, 16 and 17 year old kids Carl and I coach, that I recounted to them how a couple of years ago 'Ol' Ern' had climbed me unmercifully for failing to successfully sacrifice a man to second."

"Ol Ern might like to know I do coach good sound fundamental baseball, but, after I have coached a boy for four years (including playoff and state championship appearances), I will not on the last day of practice, make him go through a form fielding drill—taking ground balls without a glove!"

Some indignities, it seems, are never forgotten or forgiven, Ernie.

The Schreiners grew up in Midland in the 1950s and 1960s. In those days, they had three goals: 1. Play football for OU. 2. Play baseball for the New York Yankees. 3. Practice dentistry.

The Yankees never did work out, but 2-for-3 is still .667.

Carl, 39, and Terry, 36, share a dental practice in Duncan and coach teenage baseball on the side.

CARL played football and baseball in high school. He probably would have played for Midland High's only district 5A football champion, but... In his junior year, the race came down to the final game against Odessa. The Bronchos pushed over a touchdown in the final seconds to beat out the Bulldogs, but Carl, in on that last tackle, vows the Odessa back never made it into the end zone. Still, the nucleus would be back the next year and the matter would be rectified, it was thought.

The next year, Midland became a two-high school city and Carl was at Lee. With the talent divided, Midland never did achieve its promised title.

At Oklahoma, Carl, an all-district catcher in Midland, became an all-Big Eight outfielder and a starter on the OU football team, rubbing elbows with Ralph Neely.

After his junior year, he signed with the Boston Red Sox and was assigned, as a catcher, to the A Carolina League, where it was easy to get overlooked. The other catches in the league included Johnny Bench, Manny Sanguillen, Ed Hermann and George Mitterwald, all of whom went on to the majors.

"I looked around and said, 'if these guys are in the minors, who do they have playing in the majors?'"

That may have been part of the reason Carl dropped baseball and resumed his pursuit of a dental degree, although the Red Sox wanted him to play winter ball and report early to spring training. "I was a 22-year-old rookie, which is old. ...they (the Red Sox) wrote me a letter, saying I had to decide between dentistry and being a pro ball player. They were right, because I was getting older and needed to commit myself."

TERRY, AN all-district first baseman and football lineman at Midland Lee, captained the OU freshman football team and captained the Sooner baseball team as a junior. His football career was short-circuited by a knee injury after his freshman year.

After college he enrolled at Tennessee's school of dentistry, "because of the quarter system that would let me play baseball."

Although he never tried pro ball, Terry, and Carl, played for teams in the National Baseball Congress. For seven years, one of the Schreiners was playing in the NBC finals.

Big striped bass bite at Lake E.V. Spence

BY RODNEY RIEHLE

The big ones were still biting at Lake Spence with several striped bass topping the 20-pound level. At Lake Thomas, the action was being supplied by the yellow and channel catfish. Snyder's Billy Cantrell, for example, caught 11 yellows from eight to 20 pounds and Alan Neal, Lubbock, took a 7½-pound channel.

At Spence, Andrews' James Moxley reported a six-pound striper and two four-pound catfish. Bo Leffler, Big Spring, took a 20-5 striper...

Hot weather brought out the anglers in droves at Oak Creek Lake near Sweetwater, according to Ike Pate of Sportsman's Lodge. J.D. and Vince Taylor, Blackwell, caught a string of blacks going 8-1, 5-13, 4-15, 3-2, 1-13 using top water buzz baits...

Walking catfish can escape old boredom

By BILL SCHULZ
Associated Press Writer

When Florida's walking catfish gets tird of swimming around in the same old pond, it can take a hike to somewhere else.

"It's more like a crawling catfish than a walking catfish," said Paul Shafland, director of the Non-Native Fish Research Laboratory, Florida Game and Freshwater Fish Commission in Boca Raton.

The fish also can breathe air, like a mammal.

"It has a highly specialized, branched breathing organ that enables it to gulp air and utilize it much the same way we do," Shafland said. "That permits it to live out of the water for extended periods of time."

The fish has been kept alive for 85 days out of water in the laboratory.

Found naturally in Southeast Asia, the walking catfish was brought to this country as an aquarium fish. Some escaped into Florida waters in the mid-1960s and the fish now is firmly established south of Lakeland and expanding its range.

Fish farmers and sport fishermen hate the walking catfish. Farmers claim the overland invaders get into their ponds and destroy the food base.Sportsmen says the fish is crowding out gamefish in lakes and canals.

"I don't see any data to the effect that when a walking catfish is found in a lake all the gamefish move out," Shafland said. "I don't see that in our data, but our data is incomplete."

One reason for the walking catfish's success in adapting to Florida's waterways is it's appetite. Shafland said it will eat "just about anything it runs across," dead or alive, from plankton to small fish.

Fish managers trying to get rid of the walking catfish have a very difficult job because when the fish feel the effects of poison in the water, they can leave.

There are limits, however, on the lengths of its hikes. Heat, cold and lack of moisture limit its travels.

"The only time the walking catfish can really come out of water is at night during the rain or a very heavy dew," Shafland said. There is no solid data on how far a fish could travel in a night, but estimates range from a few hundred yards to a mile, all the while wiggling on its belly like a soldier crawling under barbed wire.

Native American catfish can reach tremendous size, with blue catfish reaching more than 100 pounds.

Westlake High punished by UIL

AUSTIN (AP) — The Westlake High School soccer team will be on probation for the 1983-84 school year, the University Interscholastic League has ruled.

UIL said Wednesday the probation stemmed from an incident in March 11 when several members of the team, including head coach Paul Simon, allegedly harassed official James Lippman at the end of a Travis-Westlake soccer match.

Lippman said All-American Jeff Ward kicked a soccer ball toward his head, yelled obscenities at him and spat in his direction twice.

The UIL district executive committee placed Westlake on a yearlong probation last March, but in May the UIL state executive committee took up the matter, saying the district committee did not have the authority to impose such penalties. Hearings were held, at which Lippman urged the UIL to impose a harsher penalty on Westlake.

Westlake school officials disciplined members of the team involved in the incident.

Seniors to clash tonight

First place will be at stake tonight when Midland and Odessa's Senior Teenage League teams meet at 7:30 p.m. in Cubs Stadium.

The Odessa State National Lions are basically the Odessa High team while the Midland team is composed of Midland Lee players.

Midland will be the site of the state Senior Teenage League tournament in early August.

Braves ace captures 10th win

By Associated Press

Rookie Craig McMurtry pitched a six-hitter and Bob Horner's bases-loaded double sparked a four-run eighth inning as the Atlanta Braves defeated the Philadelphia Phillies 5-2 Wednesday night.

McMurtry, 10-5, who has more victories than any other rookie pitcher in the majors, struck out five and walked three.

Loser Steve Carlton, 9-10, struck out seven to improve his career-leading strikeout total to 3,582 and keep a slim lead over Houston's Nolan Ryan.

A wild throw by Carlton on a squeeze play allowed the first Atlanta run to score in the eighth before Horner knocked in three runs with his double off reliever Al Holland to give the Braves a 5-1 lead.

Consecutive two-out home runs in the ninth inning by Johnny Ray and Mike Easler gave the Pittsburgh Pirates a 7-6 victory over the San Francisco Giants and a sweep of their three-game series.

Joe Price pitched a three-hitter and Eddie Milner drove in two runs and scored the other as the Cincinnati Reds defeated the New York Mets 3-1.

In the American League, Jim Beattie worked out of bases-loaded jams in the fourth and fifth innings en route to his fourth consecutive victory as the Seattle Mariners edged the Boston Red Sox 6-4.

Cal Ripken Jr. blasted a grand slam home run in the fourth inning to lead the Baltimore Orioles to a 6-2 victory over the Oakland A's.

Dan Petry scattered nine hits and John Grubb's single snapped a 1-1 tie and ignited a six-run sixth inning as the Detroit Tigers completed a three-game sweep of the California Angels with a 7-1 victory.

Harold Baines' RBI double snapped a 1-1 tie in the seventh inning and LaMarr Hoyt scattered seven hits to pace the streaking Chicago White Sox to a 5-1 victory over the Cleveland Indians.

Mad Dog lives in the past

Los Angeles Times
Washington Post
News Service

Bill Madlock is the kind of guy who, if you ask him what time it is, goes out and buys a clock.

If he needs a used car, he goes out and buys Hitler's.

If you go into the den of his house in Pittsburgh, it looks as if he's expecting George Washington.

You get the feeling Bill Madlock is not terribly comfortable in this century. That when he goes home at night he gets out of a powdered wig and buckle shoes. And that he keeps snuff in his lace cuffs and has a gold-headed cane. He should play third base in a three-cornered hat.

Bill Madlock is such an antique buff, he may make a bid on Gaylord Perry. His idea of a wristwatch is one with a cuckoo in it. A pocket model should have a pendulum. Bill has over 40 clocks, some so old the windup instructions are in Latin. Bill has more old clocks than the Black Forest; dozens of them keeping Naval Observatory time, although they date back to the Ming Dynasty. You can always tell which house is Madlock's. It's the one that's ticking. It sounds like a time bomb. Being there on the hour is a little like spending the night in a kettledrum.

HE ALSO has 300 years' old desks from Scotland, the original model V-8 Ford, vintage Mercedes and Rolls Royces. Anything that was born before he was.

It's hard to believe anybody with such effete tastes could be nicknamed "Mad Dog," but there you have one of the essential anomalies of Bill Madlock's life.

He is, as it happens, one of the three or four best baseball players in the game today. Only Rod Carew has a higher lifetime average among active big leaguers. And Madlock has won three batting championships. To give you an idea, Willie Mays only won one. So did Babe Ruth. Lou Gehrig.

They say Jack Dempsey's best punch never travelled more than 10 inches. Neither does Bill Madlock's batting stroke. He delivers blows to the belly of curveballs in a short vicious chop like a Dempsey right hook.

STILL, HE is not the sort of fellow to froth at the mouth or snap at car tires or tree mail men. Madlock is a fairly sunny fellow who has never been known to bay at the moon.

But an incident on May 1, 1980, reinforced his "rabid" image, which actually was forced on him because of its alliteration with his surname and not because of any anti-social behavior on his part. Until that day. There was the time he chose to dispute a ball-strike call on a third strike with umpire Jerry Crawford. Unfortunately, when Madlock pointed a finger at Crawford, it had a fielder's glove on it. Unlike his bat, it made contact. It wasn't a case of a punch or a karate chop." Madlock complained peculiarly the incident before the Dodgers came to other day.

Baseball reacted as if it were murder one. Madlock got 15 days and a $5,000 fine, the baseball equivalent of the electric chair. Worse, he got the public image of a guy whose ears get pointed at the dark of the moon instead of a guy who spends antique auctions in search of something Louis Quatorze may have sat on or told time by. If Madlock doesn't get bad publicity, he doesn't get any publicity at all," Willie Stargell keenly observed.

BILL MADLOCK is almost an antique himself in that he was originally by the Washington Senators. [illegible] as the Roman [illegible]

When he was traded by the Texas Rangers to the Cubs, he was as welcome the Capone gang. "They traded Fergie Jenkins for me and I was replacing Ron Santo at third base." He had to win Rookie of the Year and the batting championship in back-to-back seasons just to get the batboy to talk to him.

Traded to San Francisco, Madlock complained out loud about having to bat in an overcoat and allowed as how he could see why Willie Mays won only one batting championship. "How do you hit the ball with an icicle?" he asked one reporter.

Although only four guys in league history have ever won more batting championships — guys with names like Hornsby, Wagner, Musial and Clemente — Madlock gets picked for the All-Star just oftener than a mop-up pitcher. He was playing in only his third last week and got to bat for only the fourth time, although he has been in the league 10 years. One year the league picked a teammate, Steve Swisher, whose average was so low no one knew for sure whether that was his name or a description.

It's no wonder Madlock prefers the company of 100-year-old clocks and crank-start cars. "I like the feel and look of old things," he says. He likes them so much he won't wear a wristwatch. If he wants to know what time it is, he calls home and takes a consensus of his grandfather clocks.

"I would like to win one more batting championship and one more world championship."

NATURAL GAS DECONTROL

Gas carriers win vote

By SARAH McCLENDON
Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON — The pipelines that carry natural gas across the United States from Texas and other states won a crucial vote in the Senate Energy committee Wednesday when Senator Wendell Ford, D-Ky., tied their pricing methods to the cause of consumers.

He beat down Senator Pete Domenici's attempt to give more price bargaining power to the producers who have sought new contracts. Ford substituted his "first refusal" for pipelines for Domenici's "first and best offer, high or low," for producers. Disgusted, Domenici, who had offered the first amendment, saw parliamentary procedures attach his name to the outcome. "Wish you could take my name off of it," muttered the Republican Senator from New Mexico.

Ford put over his amendment by suggesting that "the producer package the sale," but Domenici pointed out that this arrangement might sound good but would give the producer no where to go but to accept the pipeliner's price when all the time he was seeking to get out of a forced connection.

Tempers began to flare in the committee as Chairman James McClure, R., Idaho pressed for a conclusion of the seemingly unending amendments process. The staff is being called on for instant analyses in hearings as well as night and weekend work on dozens of technical amendments. At one point they told Senator Domenici that despite the 10-day recess of Congress they had not had time to complete work on his 25 "technical" amendments.

An angry session occurred between Sen. Mark Hatfield, R-Ore., a minister, given usually to pacifist tendencies, and Sen. Howard Metzenbaum, D-Ohio, who frankly admits he is against a bill to deregulate natural gas.

Metzenbaum pleads for the Midwestern consumers. But this time, the elderly senator — often accused of filibustering on the Senate floor — asked the staff for an economic analysis of pending amendments.

Hatfield who had been absent from the first part of the three-hour meeting, protested about "having to sit here while that long analysis was given."

Metzenbaum protested vigorously at the interruption and at the attempt to cut short the answers, saying the public did not understand this bill nor did anyone and that the analysis was needed.

Further discussions will be held Thursday on an amendment by Senators Don Nickles, R-Okla., and Malcolm Wallop, R-Wyoming, having to do with renegotiating of contracts and take-or-pay provisions. It was also hinted that Sen. Lowell Weicker, R-Conn., may have an amendment, but is busy elsewhere.

There was rife absenteeism and voting by proxies by men of both parties again Wednesday although the overall attendance record was better than it had been. Proxy voting was so extensive that once the vote had to be corrected. The result of the proxy voting is that the senators are not present to hear the arguments or explanations of the amendments which could in future mean life or death to producers, pipeline operators or whole states looking for gas supplies in the future.

As Senators adjourned for a busy afternoon on the floor, the House subcommittee on Fossil Fuels and Synthetics resumed its task of marking up the final draft of a similar bill. There, members spent long hours haggling over this complicated bill.

Democrats help Reagan decontrol gas

WASHINGTON (AP) — Six Democrats from gas-producing states have joined forces to help President Reagan clear his first hurdle in removing price controls on natural gas — amid talk of a 16 percent increase in gas costs to consumers next year.

The Democratic-controlled House Energy fossil fuels subcommittee voted 10-9 against an amendment by Rep. Thomas Luken, D-Ohio, that would have removed from the proposed legislation the key provision of Reagan's plan — the decontrol of prices of "old" gas, that which was discovered before April 1977.

That gas, representing about half the nation's supply, is now selling at an average price of $1.25 per 1,000 cubic feet compared with $6 and $7 that some producers are getting for "new" gas, which has been found since 1977.

Luken said Reagan's proposal "would lead to a massive income transfer" with little or no gain for consumers while creating a $68 billion windfall profit for large oil companies, which own three-fourths of the old gas.

"If there's a windfall, and there will be, then there cannot help but be a windfall profits tax," said Rep. Phillip Sharp, the subcommittee's chairman.

But Rep. Tom Corcoran, R-Ill., the ranking Republican on the panel and the chief sponsor of the administration's bill in the House, said keeping controls on old gas will not prevent rising bills to consumers.

"We have had control on old gas for some time and last winter it didn't help consumers one bit," he said.

It was generally agreed that the key vote Tuesday was cast by Rep. Richard Shelby, D-Ala., who has both old and new gas producers, along with industrial and residential consumers, among the constituents in his district.

"Decontrol of old gas is going to raise prices for many consumers, particularly in New England, the Midwest and Alabama," Sharp, D-Ind., said in an appeal for Shelby's vote before the balloting began.

Adelia Maddox, Shelby's legislative assistant, said the Alabama Democrat still "has serious reservations about wholesale decontrol." But she said he viewed Tuesday's vote as an effort to keep negotiations going on a gradual, three-year decontrol program being pushed by Democratic Rep. W.J. Tauzin of Louisiana, the nation's second largest producer state.

An almost identical "phased" decontrol is being pushed in the Senate Energy Committee by a similar coalition of Republican supporters of the administration and producer state Democrats led by Sen. Bennett Johnston of Louisiana.

The Senate committee has been meeting for almost three months but so far has been unable to muster an 11-vote majority on either side. It resumes deliberations Wednesday in an effort to hammer out a mechanism for allowing pipelines to get out of some of their high-cost, long-term contracts.

Meanwhile, the Energy Information Administration predicted in its "Short Term Energy Outlook" published this week that residential natural gas rates will rise an average 16 percent, the largest increase of any energy source, by next winter regardless of what Congress does.

Luken defeated

Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON — Reaction to the House subcommittee's vote on "old" gas in Natural gas deregulation bill came swiftly from Nicholas J. Bush, president of the Natural Gas Supply association, Washington.

"The subcommittee's rejection of the Luken amendment is splendid news," he said. "This was an important — if not vital — decision for those who believe a comprehensive and constructive natural gas bill should be enacted."

The subcommittee on Fossil and Synthetic Fuels is again at work marking up the final draft of HR 1 to deregulate gas.

FTC rules 'aspirin is aspirin'

By The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

The Federal Trade Commission ruled Wednesday that some advertising claims for nonprescription pain relievers containing aspirin have been false and misleading and ordered two drug companies to prove their claims or drop them.

The ruling applies to such widely used products as Bufferin and Excedrin, produced by Bristol-Myers Co., and Bayer Aspirin, Cope, Vanquish and Midol, manufactured by Sterling Drug Inc., both of New York.

THE DRUG companies, battling fiercely for a larger share of the $1.5 billion analgesic market, immediately said they will appeal the FTC rulings.

In effect, the federal agency ruled that aspirin is aspirin, and any claims of superiority by one brand over another must be scrapped unless clinical proof is provided.

IT ALSO SAID any future advertising in which other pain relievers are compared to plain aspirin must disclose that they also contain aspirin.

The FTC, however, did not order either company to run corrective advertising to erase any false impression of past campaigns.

BOTH manufacturers noted in statements shortly after the ruling that the FTC complaint had been filed 10 years ago and was no longer relevant to current advertising practices.

"As we see it there is no action we have to take to change our current advertising, since we are not making those claims" that formed the basis for the complaint a decade ago, said a spokesman for Sterling. "They did not look at our ads of today or any that we have run for at least two years. We don't even have the same advertising agency we had back then."

J. RICHARD Edmonson, general counsel for Bristol-Myers, called the FTC ruling "erroneous and contrary to the evidence."

"The FTC has never said that the three products (Bufferin, Excedrin and Excedrin P.M.) are not effective pain relievers or that the claims of superiority they have made for them are not true," he said.

"THE advertising claims in question go back to the early 1970s and none of our advertising today is affected by this decision."

In its ruling the FTC found that Bristol-Myers falsely claimed that doctors recommend Bufferin more than any other over-the-counter pain reliever and had falsely proclaimed that Excedrin contained special or unusual ingredients.

THE COMMISSION said that while Sterling made no effort to conceal that its products contain aspirin, it lacked support for claims that its Bayer products had greater purity, stability, or freshness or disintegrated faster for absorption by the body.

The FTC said henceforth the companies would have to support their claims with two clinical studies. But it did not rule out other reasonable evidence.

The two drug companies spend about $50 million a year advertising the cited products. "Naturally that figure would go up considerably if they have to change their advertising to satisfy the FTC," said David Saxs a drug industry analyst for A. G. Becker Inc., New York.

"ASPIRIN manufacturers as a group have periodically been warned that their claims are excessive," Saxs said, "but increasing competition from Tylenol and other acetaminophen products has brought overzealous advertising on the part of the other competitors." The FTC noted in its ruling Wednesday that it had issued a similiar ruling in 1981 against American Home Products Corp., maker of Anacin and Arthritis Pain Formula.

Stores thoroughly check out check writers

By FRANK CLARK
Summer Intern

Using a checkbook to buy merchandise in area stores is a source of headaches for many Midlanders.

A seemingly endless amount of identification is required, from the mandatory driver's license to a complex combination of photo I.D.'s, major credit cards and bent knee supplication which, with luck, may convince the cashier to accept your check.

Paying by check has not always been an excercise in proving one's identity. Two or three years ago, a clerk's casual glance at your driver's license or a pair of honest eyes enabled you to flourish your checkbook freely in Midland stores. Those times have changed.

"We require a driver's licence and a major credit card," said Musicland store manager Jesus Romero. "There are no exceptions. If the customer cannot furnish the necessary I.D., his checkbook won't buy him anything in our store. We are very firm on our check verification policy."

This firmness in policy carries over into larger department stores as well.

"For a customer to use his or her checkbook today in our store," says Sakowitz store manager Richard Rettinger, "we ask to see a photo identification and two credit cards. The second card is our way of making sure of the check we are accepting."

This increased vigilance in accepting personal checks began in earnest a year ago when bad checks began cropping up at Midland stores in increasing numbers.

To combat the problem, stores began to look more closely at the checks taken in and at the customers who gave them. Credit cards became a prerequisite for most check purchases, home and business phone numbers were takcn down in case of any credit problems, and a few Midland stores introduced electronic check verification systems which operate via telephone.

"We were losing $2,000 a year to bad checks before we got tough," said Romero. "It had gotten totally out of hand and we were losing a lot of money because we were too trusting. Out of necessity, we've gotten suspicious."

Doug Messer, Grammer-Murphy store manager, elaborated on the problem.

"The flow of bad checks to our store and to retailers in the area began to be a real problem a year ago. It may have been caused by the economic slump. Whatever it was, it seemed that more and more people were passing bad checks and that some action was necessary to protect our store."

Eight months ago, Grammer-Murphy installed a telephone operated verification system which allows store employees to quickly determine whether they're receiving a bad check. According to Messer, the system worked.

"It was very effective in limiting the flow of bad checks. Now, few checks get by us that are going to bounce and, as the number of retailers who use the system grows, the system will become more effective."

The increased check security by Midland stores has angered some shoppers with its delays and strict identification requirements. Sears store manager M.L. Milligan sees this as unfortunate but necessary.

"Of course I can understand that longtime Midland residents and shoppers might feel upset that they must pull out their I.D. whenever they wish to pay with a check in our store. But in order to protect ourselves from those few who pass bad checks, we will continue to require identification."

Romero agrees.

"We have to take each customer's check to the bank and have it cashed. When you're pulling in 30 to 50 checks a day, this becomes a job in itself. Bad checks increase the work, so it's much more efficient to be sure the check is good right from the outset."

But with all the added precautions, the electronic verification systems and the increasingly careful scrutiny of drivers' licenses and credit cards, how much have Midland stores really cut back on the bad check problem?

Though some stores do report progress in stopping bad checks, there doesn't seem to be a marked improvement. The county attorney's office has recorded only a 3.4 percent decrease in bad checks reported by Midland stores over the same six month period last year. Since January, 4,476 bad checks have been reported, representing a loss of more than $60,000 to Midland area retailers.

The problem is now beginning to boomerang back to the customer.

Says Sears' Milligan, who has seen a 15 percent increase in fraudulent checks passed compared to last year, "The problem has become quite serious and the cost may force us to increase prices, which we certainly don't want to do. Unfortuately, both the store and the customer end up paying the cost of bad checks."

The I.D. problem is giving headaches to Midland's checkbook shoppers. Many stores now require two major credit cards as well as a Texas driver's licence in order to pay by check. With Midland's continuing fraudulent check problem, there is little chance of relaxed identification policies in the future.

Illegal dumping perturbs landowner

By LANA CUNNINGHAM
Staff Writer

Sonny Etheredge had no problem with his land until he cleaned it up. Then it became a dump ground.

Now he's perturbed about the large blocks of concrete deposited like abandoned building blocks on his land and the possibility he might be fined by the city for not cleaning up his site.

Code Enforcement Officer Warren Cloyd said recently the city will start filing against the landowner since it is difficult to catch persons dumping illegally. Etheredge feels there is another side to the story — that of landowners caught in the mire of mounting bureacracy.

His site lies south of Interstate 20, the Permian Basin Petroleum Museum and a caliche pit. To reach it, one must take a dirt road on private land. He bought the land, he said, before I-20 was built and before the city annexed it.

The problem began when the pit was dug to construct I-20. The city and county began dumping dirt to fill it, which Etheredge could understand. But the public thought it was an official dump site and began using it for that.

'Eventually, however, the pit became full enough as to cause inconvenience so the dumping began to occur on my property," he said.

About a year ago, Etheredge paid $1,000 to have his land cleared. "There was no mesquite and it was bladed, and that's when they really started dumping. As long as it was mesquite bushes, they couldn't get in there. I've seen whole cow carcasses and hogs' heads."

Etheredge "works in the oilfields" and can't watch the land 24 hours a day. But he is there from about 5 p.m. to dark.

He didn't mind the household trash, he said. And he could burn the dead animals. It's the large blocks of concrete he can't cover up.

"There are tons of concrete I can't move. I could spend $3,000 to have it cleared off. And in eight months, I would have to do it again."

Cloyd had suggested raising the fines for offending landowners as a means of getting them to stop allowing the dumping and to clean up the site. He contended the fine was too low and it was cheaper for landowners to pay the fine and let the trash stay.

In Etheredge's opinion, "I could dedicate this land to the city cheaper than to have it cleared."

He tried to get the city to clear it, but was told it is illegal for the city to do work on private land.

Etheredge tried fencing it with barbed wire, but it didn't stop the dumpers.

"I guess I could borrow enough money to build a fence that would make it impossible to get in, but I don't need that kind of fence."

No Dumping signs had been posted in the area and those disappeared. "A sign is a childish solution to the problem," Etheredge reasoned.

Man killed over tires, witness says

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

A former St. Louis, Mo., man supposedly angered after he paid $50 just to avoid a hassle over tires he said he didn't cut, ended up shot seven times and dead, according to state testimony in the murder trial of 54-year-old Ross Ellis Jones Sr.

Jones Sr., 54, is accused of shooting Glenn Stokes, 33, last Nov. 15, as Stokes was returning to the Jones Hotel and after Jones' son, Ross Ellis Jones Jr., 26, had fired a pistol round into the man.

"Stokes said, 'I paid for the tires but somebody is going to pay for the tires getting cut,'" testified Melvin Haynes, who said he was "sitting and talking" in the hotel at time of the shooting.

Haynes, a 43-year-old resident of the hotel at 105 N. Lee St., testified Stokes said he "didn't cut them (tires) but he paid them (off) to keep out of trouble."

The shooting took place in front of the hotel, owned by Odessa Jones, mother and grandmother of the two Joneses, about 5:15 p.m.

Earlier that day, Stokes reportedly had told Jones Jr. that he (Stokes) had cut the truck tires belonging to someone named "Kotee," Haynes said. Jones Jr. then told "Kotee" that Stokes had slit the tires. Afterward, Stokes paid for the tires at the hotel but resented that Jones Jr. had "snitched" on him. Haynes said Stokes said he really didn't slit the tires even though he had said he did.

"He (Stokes) was kind of hot about it," said Haynes, who said Stokes said he was "'going to the lobby to get me a soda pop to cool off.'"

He said Stokes "bragged a lot and made threats."

As Stokes was leaving the hotel, Jones Sr. followed his son down the stairway in pursuit of Stokes. After Stokes exited the hotel and turned around as if to re-enter, Jones Jr. fired a pistol shot at him.

"After Ross (Jones) Jr. shot the second time," said Haynes, "Ross (Jones) Sr. starting shooting." He said Stokes "crawled around a car" and was shot again. "He was dead, I guess."

Another state witness, Jerry James Belcher, 17, said Stokes talked about his experiences in the U.S. Army and about "the women and children he had to kill."

"We all know a lot of crazy things went on in Vietnam," said co-prosecutor, Steve Bruneman. He is assisting David Joers, the district attorney's chief prosecutor, on the case.

Co-defense counsel Sandy Torres asked Belcher if the Jones Hotel area in The Flats was "a tough neighborhood?"

"You have to fight," he replied.

Witness Eddie Woods, 63, said Stokes "talked a lot. He drank, and he talked loud." Woods, the hotel's night manager, said he had seen both Jones men with guns at the time of the shooting.

He described Jones Jr. as a "nice guy."

"He's like any other guy. He drank and he talked loud" but he's like "two different people sometimes."

Witness Lonnie Flowers, 58, said "after Glenn Stokes fell, he (Jones Sr.) went out and started shooting, too."

Stokes tried to run, fell, and crawled around a car. Jones Sr. "started shooting (while) standing over him."

"Is he a murderer to you," co-defense counsel Karen Carr asked Flowers.

"No, not to me," he said.

Jones Jr., a defense witness, said he "didn't know whether" or not Stokes had a gun. He said he "fired once and heard a second shot."

Jones Jr. said he was "scared" of Stokes. "He was going toward me, and I wanted to keep him back."

Jones Jr., who had pleaded guilty to voluntary manslaughter in the death of Stokes, has been sentenced to 12 years in prison. The jury has not been apprised of the conviction.

If convicted by the six-man, six-woman jury in Judge Vann Culp's 238th State District Court, defendant Jones Sr. could be sentenced from five years to 99 years or life in prison.

Hospital has new VP of finance

By HALLYE JORDAN
Staff Writer

Midland Memorial Hospital's new vice president of finance was introduced at a press conference this morning, following a contract for a new parking lot, awarded during a special meeting Wednesday.

Ron Peterson replaces Dale Miller as vice president of finance. Miller was moved to fill the "business manager position" vacated by Cathy Miller in February, according to MMH President Ray Branson.

"(Peterson) has to have the ability to spot a nickle from 40,000 feet," Branson said, when explaining the vice president of finance's duties.

Peterson will receive a salary of $60,000 as vice president of finance. Miller's $44,100 salary while serving that position will "in all liklihood" remain the same in his new position, Branson said.

When the change in positions was announced last February, Branson said officials would be searching for a person with experience in both "for-profit" and "private, not-for-profit" hospitals. Branson also cited experience in public accounting as a requirement.

Peterson, a certified public accountant, received a bachelor of science degree from the University of Wyoming in 1962. He most recently served as director of finance for Advanced Health Systems, Inc., in Salt Lake City, a for-profit hospital. He also served as director of fiscal services at Memorial Hospital, a 600-bed private facility in Hollywood, Fla.

"He's also had the unique opportunity to serve on the board of trustees at a not-for-profit hospital," Branson said.

Change should be resisted to make life more fanciful

With cause, I've been accused of being an old fogey.

Strike the old. Thirty-nine (plus) is never old no matter how many times I've been 39.

Fogeys don't bend with change. Or if they do, they break like a hickory cane and crack up.

I don't want to end up tormented over newfangled things, such as this keyboard with the television tube I'm typing on right now. They call it a computer terminal; I wish it were terminal.

I don't want to be committed to the loony bin and told that change is a natural phenomenon. I know that. I just resist.

The eruptions of Mount Vesuvius in A.D. 79 and Mount Saint Helens in 1981 were natural phenomena. Would you, who well may welcome change, want a Mount Midland to be born in terrible eruptions in your backyard. Hardly, unless you like tourists and volcanic ash and dust.

San Francisco's earthquake of 1906 was as natural a change as a drought, flood, volcano or a meteorite striking the earth and altering the landscape.

Those are major changes. We can accept those simply because we're without power to reject them. But there are some minor changes, which turn out to be major, which we can control. All it takes to bring back the fanciful and mythical good olde days is fantasy. We ought to try.

Here are some things we might try to resist to make life more old-fashioned and more fanciful:

—The telephone and the door bell. The telephone, especially, is the greatest invader of privacy since the keyhole and the door knob. Don't answer the ringing. Better, take the phone back to the telephone company and tell the "communications specialists" to take a walk along with their rate hikes.

—The computer. That's my favorite anti-change target. Call my obsession with the computer a lack of understanding and appreciation. All in the world the computer is doing is playing a speed-of-light game with mathematics and creating a new economy and new busy work. It's taking over the nation like the railroad and telegraph did in the 1800s. The computer won't make the world a better place; it'll just cut out some paperwork and create other work. The computer is to the pencil and pad what the jet airplane is to the old steam locomotive, the horse-drawn carriage, and steamships. It'll just get you there faster, and you can wait and wonder why you hurried. Or if it doesn't get you there, it may crash to smithereens.

—The ball-point pen. When that revolutionary writing instrument came out in the mid-1940s, it leaked and smeared. It was mess. The pen has been refined. But no degree of refinement will ever give the ball-point pen the touch of class of the old-fashioned fountain pen.

—Jets and rockets. They're just like computers and volcanoes. They're fast, stealthy, and they blow up.

—Beeping and "talking" electronic check-out systems at the grocery store. What was wrong with the cash register? What was wrong with the pencil-and-pad adding system. Nothing. The neighborhood grocery store just faded away like the fountain pen and steamboat, and the encroaching supermarket took over. It seems the most obvious side effect of the electronic check-out system is impersonal service. Check-out technicians (or whatever they call "checkers") rarely ask you to come back, because they know you don't have much of a choice. If you hear a "Thank you" message, it's probably pre-recorded and is about as sincere as a shyster or a two-timing lover.

—Electronic banking, hidden cameras and bugging devices. They all are extensions of the computer and sleuth techniques, which are arms of Big Brother. His time is arriving. Remember George Orwell's "1984."

—Cable television. TV, like talking movies, bottled milk and sliced light bread, seemed like a good idea as an electronic counterpart to good literature. Then came along soap operas, situation comedies, and weather news.

Change itself. But change, like the seasons, does have at least one redeeming quality. It's not boring to an old fogey.

Seales died Wednesday in Portales, N.M.

MMH has new vice president of finance

Peterson, who was on the board of South Carolina Baptist Hospitals, Inc., for five years, served on the executive and finance committees. He was chairman of the finance and planning committee for two terms.

Miller served as director of fiscal services at MMH from November 1980 to March 1981, when he became vice president of finance.

Peterson will head the finance department which includes a controller, business manager, collections and materials management.

As vice president of finance, he will be responsible for directing and coordinating hospital activities concerned with financial administration, general accounting, payroll, patient business services, financial and statistical reporting and data processing.

In addition, Branson said Peterson will be involved in the hospital's new source of funds policy, expected to be fully implemented in 1987.

The policy "places a greater reliance on the financial responsibilities of the hospital than in past years," Branson said. Three areas included in the policy are capital expansion-renovation projects, capital equipment and "charity care," or indigent care.

"The source of funds policy that Ron will be responsible for helping us implement will place greater reliance on operating income for those three items with the exception of indigent care," Branson said. The board of directors "continues to place emphasis on tax revenues to provide funds for indigent care — and that's in the form of taxes — so that greater operating income will be needed in the future to retire debts and fund capital equipment. That's the way a typical not-for-profit hospital does it."

Miller's primary responsibility as business manager will be to combat an expected $1.2 million loss in Medicare reimbursement for MMH over the next two years, Branson said in February, when announcing the change in office.

MMH will make up for the expected $500,000 loss this year through increasing productivity, reducing payroll, shortening the patients' length of stay, scrutinizing new services and programs and providing more services on an outpatient basis, according to Branson.

TEFRA, enacted last October, is expected to reduce Medicare reimbursement nationwide by $12.5 billion in the next three years with a reduction of $2 billion expected this year.

Miller will be responsible to Peterson for "maximizing reimbursements under TEFRA and forecasting any problems that could be incurred in sufficient time so we can react," Branson said. "Ron will be doing much of it, but Dale will be doing some of those things under Ron's direction."

Although the change was announced in February, both positions were effective July 5.

"We felt the system was sufficiently in place so we could wait for Mr. Peterson's arrival," Branson said.

During a special meeting of the Midland County Hospital District Board of Directors Wednesday, construction of a 102-space parking lot south of Midland Memorial Hospital was approved by a quorum of three directors.

The low bid of $30,261, submitted by South Texas Construction Co., was approved by directors Tevis Herd, Frank Cahoon and Wanda Mohr.

The contract was awarded to the area construction company from among five bids submitted.

According to Charlie Neuhardt, of Neuhardt and Babb architectural firm, construction should begin the middle of next week.

Under the contract, construction would start within five to seven days after the company receives the signed contract, Herd said. Completion of the project is expected to take 30 days.

Dumping mounting problem for landowner

Part of his problem is caused by the city, Etheredge feels. "I bet 90 percent of the people in Midland don't know where the dump grounds are. Then they have hours similar to a banker's and they charge you to dump," he said.

Etheredge has caught several dumpers in the act. Several said they thought it was a dump ground; at least it looked like one. "I stopped some people from Odessa. They said they didn't know where else to dump.

"Maybe if the city could start a public information spot on television to let the public know where the dump grounds are."

The landowner has no problem with the city regulation to keep the land cleared of weeds. He just can't live with the part about being responsible for other people's trash.

"I feel that the accumulation of garbage is not an act of nature but a criminal act which my community should recognize and assume the responsibility to protect me from," he said. "To hold an owner of property responsible for the acts of others is akin to holding the president of a bank responsible in case of bank robbery."

And the trash has attracted another group of people — scavengers — but these don't bother Etheredge.

"I haven't found any who want a dead cow."

Veteran steadfast in his patriotism

EL PASO (AP) — Rush Riddle Preston, born in 1894, has an unusual vocation: religiously, he flies the American flag each day without fail. He says there's not much else patriotically that he can do.

"Every day my alarm goes off about 6:15. I watch television game shows. I'm supposed to be on a bland diet," said Preston, a retired train engineer. "I raise and lower the flag in my front yard. There's not much else I can do."

Preston, an El Paso resident since 1929, said the flag reminds him of World War I. "I was on the USS Sarank, a mine-planter. We planted mines from Scotland to Norway across the North Sea to slow up the German subs. We got them bottled up so they couldn't destroy our ships."

Preston likes West Texas, even though he plans to move soon to Colorado to be closer to his daughter. "I like El Paso. It's changed, my yes. This...was all sand hills and...a sand pit." El Paso, the nation's 28th largest city, has 480,000 residents.

Preston, who has a motorized three-wheeled walker, also has seen morals change. "In the old days, we didn't have so much of this sexual business that goes on."

Politics, too, have changed with the times, he says. "I'm a Republican now. I wish they'd give Reagan a chance. He'd do us so much good. In the old days I guess I was a Democrat. There wasn't any other ticket in El Paso."

Preston's second wife died in May, so he's selling the house and most of his possessions so he can move to Brighton, Colo., "to a sort of old-folks apartment, where my daughter lives. Two meals a day, maid service. That's about the best proposition I've heard."

Preston, a locomotive engineer on the Texas and Pacific Railroad for 37 years, retired in 1964. "My run was 194 miles (east) to Toyah and back, 24 hours.

"I was with Santa Fe (railway) before that. Started in as a yard clerk in Roswell (N.M.), $45 a month, worked 13 hours a day, every day in the month.

"I've lived in El Paso since 1929. I lost my house when the Depression came on. What made me so mad, I borrowed from my insurance to bring the mortgage down and the loan shark wouldn't renew the mortgage except at 10 percent interest, which was unheard of then.

"So I started all over again. The last pay check I got was $28, so I bought the best lawnmover they had down there and put it in the back seat of my car and started knocking on doors. I managed to get by."

Preston, who moves around outside on the motorized walker, says he often drives over to the bank "and honk. I drive over to the Furr's (cafeteria) and do my shopping. I put my groceries right in the trunk...come home, and never get off of it."

Pennies rain from armored truck

EL PASO (AP) — About 15,000 pennies rained on El Paso, causing the temporary closure of Interstate 10 in this West Texas border city.

Purolator Armored guard Rodrigo Andrade reported three sacks of pennies worth about $150 tumbled from the rear of the truck Tuesday while it was traveling down the highway. Spilled coins covered two highway lanes until four guards swept up most of the pennies with brooms.

About $30 in pennies, however, were lost during cleanup efforts, police said. The driver, Thomas Nicely, was cited for failure to secure his load, police added.

Judge wants to be removed from case

HOUSTON (AP) — A judge said Wednesday he will ask Gov. Mark White to appoint a special judge to hear a motion to remove him from the multimillion-dollar Hugh Roy Cullen estate case.

Probate Judge Pat Gregory said he will postpone the case, in which brothers Enrico and Ugo di Portanova are seeking a share of Quintana Petroleum Corp. The pair contends other Cullen heirs cut their mother, Lillie Cullen di Portanova, out of her share in the company.

The trial had been set for Monday.

Gregory was scheduled to preside over a hearing to determine his status in the case Wednesday.

But in a surprise move, Gregory said he had discovered that common law provides another recourse.

"I think it would be appropriate at this time to appoint a special judge," Gregory said.

Attorney Roy Cohn, representing Enrico, charged in a court motion filed earlier this month that Gregory tried to force through an out-of-court settlement after joining other heirs in a real estate venture.

Cohn said he was pleased with Gregory's decision.

"We don't care which judge presides over the hearing as long as it's not Gregory," Cohn said.

Other attorneys in the case have charged that Enrico and a co-trustee made the accusations against Gregory to cover up their own misuse of funds belonging to Ugo, who has been declared mentally incompetent.

Gregory first responded to the motion to remove him by asking Probate Judge Jim Scanlan to decide the motion for a new judge. But Scanlan said last week Texas civil procedures do not allow him to intervene.

Cohn's co-counsel, former state Sen. A.R. "Babe" Schwartz, has since filed a series of motions in other courts asking for Gregory's removal.

Learning minor repairs can save money

Hearst Feature Service

An elderly widow who rents a small apartment was being driven to distraction by the sound of a dripping faucet in her kitchen. She complained to the landlord, who replied that since it posed no immediate danger to her physical well-being or his property and since he was paying the water bills, he would repair the leaky faucet when he got to it – probaby, sometime within the next three months.

Angry, the woman decided to have it repaired on her own, and called a plumber she had picked out of the yellow pages. He arrived, fixed the leak by replacing a worn washer worth 5 cents, and charged her $50 because there was a one-hour minimum charge, although he had worked less than 10 minutes.

The leaky faucet and the ensuing cost proves that self-reliance is more than a virtue these days – it's an all-purpose survival tool for the budget-bound householder at a time when union plumbers command $50 an hour, electricians, $58, carpenters, $35 to $45. And non-union rates for acceptable work are not far behind.

Since none of us are exempt from the occasional leaky faucet, broken light switch or door that won't close properly, we can all save money by learning to do minor repairs. Unless you are very skilled, a major repair, such as a refrigerator or dishwasher, is best left in the hands of a trained professional.

As any good do-it-yourself book will illustrate, the average householder can perform many simple tasks with a minimum of tools and time. Here are several of the more common repair jobs:

REPLACING A FAUCET WASHER

Compression faucets, although rapidly being replaced by non-compression cartridge, ball and valve types, are still the most prevalent.

First, turn off the water at the valve under the sink. With a screwdriver or small knife, remove the decorative cap from the top of the faucet to reveal the handle screw. Remove the screw and handle. At the base of the handle is the packing nut. Protect its chrome or brass finish by wrapping it with any kind of sticky tape, and using a pair of pliers (or preferably, an adjustable crescent wrench, which provides better leverage and is less apt to mar), turn the nut counter-clockwise.

With the packing nut off, lift out the entire faucet assembly and look at the bottom. The washer (usually black) is held in place with a small brass screw. Remove this screw and inspect it. If it's worn or bent, replace it. Replace the washer with the same kind — either flat or cone-shaped. (Hardware and variety stores sell small packets of assorted washers and screws, which save you from running back to the store to get the right size.)

After replacing the washer, inspect the valve seat into which the washer fits. If this seat is rough or gouged, it means the faucet will still leak, despite the new washer, and the valve has to be reseated. (If that's the case, consult a home repair guide to learn the next steps, which you also can perform at small expense.)

In most instances, replacing the washer will stop the leak. Reassemble the faucet and turn on the undersink valve. Washerless faucets can also be repaired, but are more complex and often require special parts and tools.)

SEALING A LEAKY HANDLE

Remove the handle in the same way described above, and loosen the packing nut. Under the packing nut you will see either a rubber-like O-ring, which is found on newer models, or a packing washer with a graphite or Teflon-impregnated packing string.

If it is an O-ring, work it off the stem and roll on a new one that is the same size. If it's the other model, wind the string clockwise around the stem, about five turns until the string is thick enough to be compressed. Slip on the packing washer. Tighten down the packing nut and replace the handle. Packing washers and string can be found at any hardware store.

UNCLOGGING A TOILET

As a first step, use a plumber's helper, which is a big rubber suction cup attached to a wooden handle, in a plunging motion into the toilet bowl outlet. A cup with a cone extending out from it creates a great deal more pressure, and so is more effective.

AT WORK

Climbing out of a rut

By DR. ADELE M. SCHEELE

Remember Walter Mitty, James Thurber's mild-mannered wimp who dreams he is daringly successful? It's a sad, bitter story about people who spend their passive lives like robots while they fantasize about real energy, real passion, real achievement.

The Mr. Mittys of this world are not always easy to recognize at first. They look serious and have thoughtful, reflective doubts about their everyday routines. You may never know until you put them to the test.

Roger came in to my office the other day to talk about his job as a computer supervisor at a local university. A nice job but not exciting. Good benefits but no big salary. Secure but no big chance for promotion. It was OK for a young guy, but for him at 35, well...

If only he could be the musician he dreamed of and play the Spanish guitar for a career, then he'd be in heaven. He had played consistently for himself, and off and on in little gigs, but never thought about doing it full time.

Why do we spend our lives doing mediocre work that bores us when we have a passion like Roger's, literally at his fingertips? Is it fear of failure, or fear of family objections, or fear of becoming our realized selves?

Roger made the decision to go for the music career. Now he had to plan it out — study, practice, well-connected teachers, agents. We talked about playing in public — restaurants, galleries, parties until concerts and recordings come. Roger agreed. He smiled. We made a list of how to start, when to call whom, when to practice, other guitarists to play with.

He would try living two lives at once, instead of living one while only daydreaming about the other. He'd need the computer job to pay for the dream. He kept smiling. I nodded encouragement and then gave him his first job — to play for a large party I was giving over the weekend.

When he called Friday to say he couldn't play because he didn't have enough of a repertoire to play for two hours, my heart sank. Had we wasted an hour's session? Had we fooled ourselves? His refusal felt debilitating. Roger felt ashamed and was ready to give up. Give what up, I wondered — the dream? Life itself? Should Roger realize that if he isn't able to perform something now, at 35, he'll never get there.

Or, is the problem not about choosing A or B at all? Rather, is it about learning to live in the moment with the job at hand? Perhaps Roger should learn to enjoy his computer room job, rethinking the process in musical terms. Composing, playing, and conducting are just other ways to describe supervising a computer room.

Dr. Scheele, author of "Skills for Success," is a career strategist. Her Ph.D. in Education-Business is from U.C.L.A.

AT WIT'S END

Adult answers defied

BY ERMA BOMBECK

My Aunt Lotte said to me the other day, "Boy, you certainly have changed since you were a child. You used to be so shy and introverted, you wouldn't say butter if it melted in your mouth. Why, I couldn't get you to say two words to me."

My mind went back to the days as a child and in my defense I have to say that children would love to talk. They really would. It's just that the questions adults ask them are tough. I defy any adult to answer some of them.

"She's the aunt who used to come into a room and upon noticing me would stoop down and ask, 'Where did you get those blonde curls?'"

I'd think, "Oh, boy, here we go again. That's got to be one of those inherited trait questions with the genes and chromosomes. Maybe I'll just put on my handkerchief and twist it around my teeth and she'll go away."

"What's the matter?" she pursued. "Has the cat got your tongue?"

"Where does she come up with this stuff? Besides, that is the most gross idea I've ever heard. Oh, oh, here she comes again."

"You're not talking to Aunt Lotte. Do you want Aunt Lotte to cry?"

"What kind of a question is that? Good heavens, she's putting her face in her hands and going boo-hoo."

"Talk to Aunt Lotte. What are you going to be when you grow up?"

"Good grief. I can't wash my hands without standing on a stool and she wants to know what my goals are."

"Would you look at that pout! Do you want your face to freeze that way?"

"She's always asking that and I haven't heard of a single case of frozen face since I was born."

"Do you know what I think is wrong with you, miss? I think you need a NAP."

"Why doesn't she just come right out and say it? She's always spelling in front of me. Last time she misspelled overbite — put a Y in it."

Aunt Lotte jarred me back to reality with, "Would you like me to give you a penny for your thoughts?"

Aunt Lotte, I said, with the present devaluation of our currency, 1.100 of a dollar is barely sufficient remuneration for my reflections. Frankly, I can get more with mass syndication distribution."

Aunt Lotte said, "I liked you better when you sat there like a stick."

DEAR ABBY

Writing is a right

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: This concerns the suggestion from Chaplain in Okinawa advising parents who did not hear from their sons or daughters in the military to write to the commanding officer or chaplain.

Note he said: "Writing the command chaplain or commanding officer will not result in any trouble for the service member, unless he or she persistently refuses to follow the counsel given."

What would you and your readers say if Congress passed a law giving the mayor, the chief of police and the local ministers the right to call you in and "counsel" you to write to your parents? And if you persistently refused to follow their advice you would be subject to punishment?

I think any person who does not write to his or her parents is a clod. I wish I had parents to write to. But it is still the right of citizens to act like clods if they so desire without fear of punishment.

In my 25 years in the service, I never saw one commander who welcomed such letters.

You may use my name. – CHARLES T. CHECK, RETIRED CHIEF MASTER SERGEANT, USAF, DALLAS

DEAR ABBY: I wonder if you realize what happens when a person in the military receives involuntary "counseling" as a result of a parent writing to the chaplain or commanding officer?

A counseling session involves not only the commanding officer, but the first sergeant, his non-commissioned officer in charge, officer in charge and his immediate supervisor. Each in turn counsels the enlisted person. The official counseling sessions become a permanent part of the serviceperson's personal military record, and you can be sure that all who see it will not be impressed.

Men and women who are old enough to lay their lives on the line to defend their country are old enough to decide to whom they want to write and how often. – G.S.S. (EX-GI) SAN MATEO, CALIF.

DEAR ABBY: I'm surprised you didn't tell that chaplain on Okinawa that any man or woman old enough to be in the service is old enough to decide to whom he wants to write.

For a parent to write to the chaplain or commanding officer is outrageous.

If a serviceperson is seriously ill or (God forbid) dead, the parents are notified immediately. – OUTRAGED IN INDIANAPOLIS

Captain makes living at crabbing on Chesapeake

By The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

At 3:30 a.m., Captain Lester Lee, weathered and 72 years old, confronts the 35-degree breeze that whips off the Chesapeake Bay. He wears chest-high black rubber fishing pants over his checked polyester trousers, a three-button cardigan sweater over a wool shirt and thick, rubber boots. He is ready for another day's work.

His son, Donald Lee, opens full throttle the 350 Oldsmobile engine housed in the 36-foot fishing boat Mertz. They leave the county dock located half a mile from his home in Dominion, Md., pass through Kent Narrows, cross Crab Alley Bay and motor into Cox Creek. It's a late start for crabbing and the sun will be up before their trotlines are secured on the soft muddy bottom.

There haven't been many crabs this year, says Lester Lee, shaking his head. It's been a cold spring — no incentive for the hard-shell crabs to come up from their muddy winter napping grounds. Nevertheless, the Lees are out for the eighth time this year. Three days earlier they had their biggest catch this season — seventeen crabs — hardly worth the tough day's work, or the $15 in gasoline and an unknown amount in bait, brine and wear and tear on the trotlines and boat. But they're optimistic and study the water hard during the next eight hours. "Weather's a funny thing," he says.

LESTER LEE talks a mile a minute while looking for shallow water and the trotlines of other crabbers. Trotlining has been a way of life for five generations in the Lee family, beginning with his great-grandfather. Four of Lester Lee's five sons are carrying it on.

His curly brown hair only hints silver; his body is strong and able. Only Lester Lee's eyes reveal the tough life of crabbing on the bay, made famous in the book "Beautiful Swimmers," by William Warner. Those eyes have seen the start of 65 crabbing seasons since his father died and Lee was forced at age 8 to help support his mother and four sisters. When you ask him when he'll retire he says flat out: "This is my last year, my eyes are givin' out on me." His son Donald predicts it'll be at least three more summers.

"I guess they call it trotlining because you're trotting up and down the line all day, honey," he says, while draining the brine protecting the baited line that lies coiled in a 50-gallon white drum called a "pickle." It contains a solution of salt and water that keeps his line from rotting and keeps the $60 worth of eel bait from smelling too bad after a few days in and out of the water. He calls everybody honey, even his sons.

THE SKY IS black. Off to the east shine the red lights of the Bay Bridge. Donald Lee slows the boat to a near halt while his father snaps on a spotlight to check the water's depth and look for crabs. Back in the tiny cutty cabin a fathometer reports a steady 5 feet. "This is it," he announces and turns off the spotlight. Crabbers start their season in the warmer shallow waters, he explains, and move into 10 feet of water as summer comes on.

He reaches into the barrel and throws a heavy piece of old pipe overboard to anchor his trotline. A red buoy marks each end of an east-west line. Under water, a chain attached to the pipe holds a half-mile of line to the muddy bottom. Every two feet a four-inch slab of eel is secured to the line with a slip knot in the expectation that a crab will grab hold to feed. A similar line is laid north to south. Forming his trotlines in a T-shape, he explains, covers more territory than laying them out parallel.

Crab-boat Capt. Lester Lee, left, checks the size of a crab as son Donald works the net on the Chesapeake Bay.

Father and son finish setting their lines just as pastel pinks and blues illuminate the water. At 6 a.m. a round, red sun peeks over the horizon. "There it is," he says showing off his private glory — a Chesapeake Bay sunrise. "Nothing prettier."

They bring Mertz about and start back along the line. Lester Lee reaches into the water and picks up the first buoy. He slips it up over a four-foot metal arm that extends from the side of the boat.

Donald Lee slows the boat to a crawl, and eel after eel along the line breaks out of the water as the line passes over the arm. Controlling the tiller with his foot, he scoops crabs into a net at the end of a long pole just before the line leaves the water and the crab releases the eel and attempts its escape. He rarely misses as the boat moves down the line.

"IF A CRAB man says he ain't never missed a crab, he just ain't telling the truth," says Lester Lee, smiling as his son misses a crab. "But the first thing he does is look around to see if anybody saw him miss it."

ON THE FIRST run down the line they haul in two peelers, a number of culls, a few eight-inch Jimmies and sooks, and two "doublers." Doublers, explains Donald Lee, are crabs about to mate. The male carries the female under him to safe grounds where she will undergo her final moult. "She's what you call his territory, his woman — he'll stand at the bottom and fight off anything that gets near her from here on out." Mating occurs just after the female has shed her shell and the male's shell is rock-hard. He stays with her until her shell hardens fully, about three days.

"The red tips are females, call 'em lipstick crabs," Donald Lee continues. "We also call them she-biddies, sooks and, just between ourselves, call them all 'hims.' " The males, or Jimmies, have the blue tips, the color of the Atlantic ocean at its deepest and cleanest point.

The sun is fully up now and though Lester Lee won't say it straight out, he's making some mental calculations and hints that this might be their first successful day. "Got to bring in $100 a day or it ain't worth it, honey," he says. "The big ones bring you $50 a bushel." The culls (crabs that have moulted and aren't guite meaty or hard enough to bring in top dollar) bring in $15 to $20 and the peelers (crabs getting ready to moult) bring in 40 cents each. "Not sure I brought enough baskets," he jokes. "Maybe I'll have to take off my pants and tie 'em off at the ends and we can fill them up too."

AS THEY FINISH running down the first line and head for the second, Lester Lee slips on a thick rubber glove and separates the crabs — according to size — into bushel baskets. All crabs smaller than five inches across the back from point to point get tossed into the water so they can reach the legal limit.

A crab latches onto Lee's glove. "God doggit, these things can bite," he swears, holding his hand out over the wooden barrel as the crab drops off. Lester Lee learned early, back when he was 6 years old, just how hard a crab could bite. "I tried to catch a soft crab with my bare hands. Sneaked up on him and grabbed him right out of the water. Well, he was only half soft. He got me that time, took my meat and all."

It's almost 9 a.m. and they've trotted the line some dozen times. Three bushel baskets are full of culls and there's another half-bushel of six-inch hard crabs. He tops off the baskets with lids and damp sailcloth. "The air'll kill 'em," he says and shoves them over in a corner of his boat.

Mertz, his 11-year old crabbing boat, "has done real good for me," he says, "but I'm afraid to brag on it or the next thing you know she'll break down. Run the thing eight hours a day, 100 days a season, you know." She carries the nickname of his wife of 50 years, Mary. She died last year on Thanksgiving Day, he says, "an angel on earth to me, hardest-working woman I ever seen."

You've got to keep the trotline on the sunny side of the boat, Donald Lee explains as he begins the final runs along the lines. "Crabs like the warmth and they can't see you coming." He hauls in enough to top a fourth bushel of culls and fills out the basket of hard-shells three-quarters of the way.

WITH THE LINE out of the water and the brine back in the barrel, thoughts turn from work to money as Donald Lee points the boat back toward Kent Narrows and the establishment of William H. Harris, one of the large wholesale buyers of crabs on the Eastern shore. By noon Mertz is tied up at the dock scattered with picnic tables, marked with a large red and white sign announcing "Eat Crabs Here." Lester Lee disembarks to chat with other crabbers finishing the day's work.

Donald Lee hauls the day's catch up to the scales. They are weighed in and a Harris employe hands him $90. The crabs are moved into the back of the tiny warehouse where they'll be sold to seafood retail outlets and restaurants.

Lampshades give drab rooms sparkle

AP Newsfeatures

Has the sparkle gone out of one of your rooms? If the room still conforms to your needs and taste, but seems a bit faded and dull, perhaps it is time to change the lampshades.

Lampshades play the same role in the home as fashion accessories do on the person. Change, in both instances, can lend new appeal to the same old outfit.

Unlike fashion accessories, however, lampshades tend to go unnoticed once they are in place and the novelty has worn off. Over the years, as they slowly become mildly unattractive and dingier, one loses sight of how much a change would contribute to the room's improvement.

Different shade styles tend to go in and out of fashion, so a change can serve to give the room a more current appearance. Not long ago, for example, the high-fashion shade was the straight-sided "drum," but nowadays the slope-sided empire shape is being shown on more expensive, high-fashion lamps.

The very exaggerated shallow shade known to some as the "coolie" because of its resemblance to the Chinese hat is one of the most popular looks at present. Pleated designs which once had the edge over smooth shades are also less stylish than they used to be, according to one lampshade designer.

One of the advantages of replacing shades as a means of perking up the decor is that it is a rather simple and inexpensive step. A large variety of ready-made shades is available in widely ranging prices. In addition, custom shade workrooms will re-cover an existing frame with virtually any material you may select. Do-it-yourself shade kits and patterns are also available from craft and sewing centers.

Ready made lampshade materials include silk, linen, burlap, parchment and various fibrous materials as well as paper and glass (which requires special fittings and is useful only on certain types of lamps).

Additionally, wallpaper and cotton print fabrics — even sheeting — can be applied through lamination or sewing to a shade form so the shade can be coordinated to wall, window or upholstery treatments.

The material selected should naturally conform to the type of lamp base — formal materials, such as silk, with formal bases and informal materials, such as burlap, with simpler, more primitive bases.

Silk — nowadays the real thing is rarely used — is considered the most formal shade material. Polyester and other synthetics which mimic silk are preferred because they are less expensive and stand up better against fading and dirt abrasion.

Also formal in feeling are the shiny, opaque black and red paper shades which are often found on Oriental-style lamp bases.

The more heavily textured a fabric is, the less formal. Burlap the color of a brown paper bag on a rough pottery base is a look highly prized in country interiors at present.

Dining big business in San Francisco

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — If all 678,974 residents in San Francisco decided to eat out on the same night, everybody could be seated.

San Francisco, according to the National Restaurant Association, boasts more restaurants per capita than any other city in the nation, one for every 158 residents. New York, with one restaurant for every 200 people, ranks second.

The restaurant business is San Francisco's biggest industry, bringing in $870 million last year.

Fisherman's Wharf harbors more restaurants than fishing boats, and sandwiched in a strip less than a mile long on Clement Street are nearly 100 restaurants.

More than half the city's residents are unmarried and living in "non-family households," according to the 1980 census. According to restaurateurs, single people eat out while families eat at home.

The rise in two-career families also means business for restaurants. "Eating out is no longer considered a luxury, but more and more a necessity," said Dorothy Dee of the National Restaurant Association.

Child model's career rewarding but brief

NEW WINDSOR, N.Y. (AP) — Leslie Diane Riley is 5 years old ... and she'll probably be too old to work when she's 10.

Leslie is much in demand as a child model. She entered the field when she was 18 months of age and appeared immediately in advertising for shoes and department stores.

She has since been featured in book publishers' advertising, circulars, as a model for children's designer clothing, and in catalogs. More recently, she has appeared in TV toy commercials and cable television.

Leslie's sister Allison, 11, was a model as well and her career is just winding down. As the "veteran" model in the family, she is generous with advice and encouragement.

Their mother, Stephanie, notes that by the time a child's age hits two digits, the career in modeling is usually over.

"That's the cutoff point; you don't see older children selling products in either print or television. A few go on to acting or teen fashions modeling, but the jobs are few and far between," Mrs. Riley notes.

In many ways, Leslie is a typical preschooler. She attends St. Johns' Episcopal Church Nursery School in Cornwall and loves to roller skate, bicycle and swim. She is also taking ballet lessons.

But unlike her classmates, Leslie is a member of the Screen Actors Guild. She is driven some 50 miles to New York City by her mother, usually at least two days a week, to audition for modeling jobs.

Leslie often naps in the car en route. Mrs. Riley always provides a ready blanket and pillow. She's usually awake by the time they cross the George Washington Bridge, in time to freshen up for a late afternoon appointment.

Mrs. Riley says there is little point in a working mother involving her child in modeling if it requires expensive and time-consuming travel. She is a self-employed market research analyst.

Perfect smile no accident

EASTON, Pa. (AP) — What people remember most about Vanessa Durns is her smile.

The smile has a cover-girl symmetry. She laughs and grins and speaks, but that radiant smile never leaves her face.

And that smile is no accident, no good fortune of her birth.

It was carefully sculpted five years ago in the operating room of Easton Hospital during six hours of surgery. That surgery removed a slice of her upper jaw so her face wouldn't be so long, moved her lower jaw forward to give her a more symmetrical profile and segmented her upper jaw to give her teeth a better alignment.

It is a procedure known as orthognathic surgery, an operation that is as much reconstructive as it is cosmetic. This method has transformed both the appearance and the oral function — not to mention the self-esteem — of thousands of men and women across the United States.

It is also transforming the practice of orthodontics, which is beginning to rely more on surgery to correct severe oral problems.

Easton orthodontist Anthony F. DeBerardinis said, "Some think the procedure is a drastic approach, but the surgical approach takes only one or two years instead of the three to five years with just braces."

And many times, he added, just moving the teeth does not solve the patient's problem. In some instances, the skeletal frame must be moved as well.

Vanessa Durns is 30 years old now. But until she was 25, when she placed her smile in the care of Dr. Alan Dutkin and Dr. Steven Gould, oral surgeons of Northampton County, she was cursed with the nickname "Bucky." And that was one of the kinder comments, she said.

Not surprisingly, Ms. Durns' self-esteem suffered. She assumed her situation was hopeless until her boss told her about an article he had read on oral surgery.

She got in contact with Dutkin and Gould, the gurus of orthognathic surgery in the Lehigh Valley. Other oral surgeons have performed the same operations as these two, but Dutkin and Gould have appeared on local television shows promoting their art, and they are talkative enthusiasts.

To prepare for the actual surgery, Dutkin and Gould perform a trial operation on a plaster mold of the patient's mouth to ensure that moving the jaw bone a centimeter or two will produce the desired results.

Eternal life believed possible

Copley News Service

When Dr. Roy Walford talks about his life's work, you desperately want to believe.

"There are a number of hot areas on the scientific workbench," the University of California at Los Angeles Medical School faculty member calmly says, "that will soon offer the answers to extending the human life span to 200 years and, ultimately, 600 years."

Pete Rose running the base paths at the turn of the 22nd century? Brooke Shields still a heartthrob at the Tricentennial? Morticians part of the future's new unemployed?

These possibilities all fall within reality's ballpark, answer a handful of gerontologists and biomedical researchers, some of whom insist that society is on the verge of medical breakthroughs that could one day even lead to human immortality.

"It's just a matter of time," says Saul Kent, author of "The Life Extension Revolution," and an organizer in the field of gerontology for 20 years. "The body doesn't inevitably have to wear out."

Don't tell that to the hordes of human history. So far, the oldest living person on record was Fanny Thomas of San Gabriel, Calif., who died in April 1980, after living for 113 years and 215 days (although the Bible reports that Methuselah, one of the patriarchs, lived to be 969).

And there have been unverified reports that people in Soviet Georgia and areas of the mountains of Ecuador have lived to ages between 140 and 160.

Thomas' extraordinary longevity, which she attributed to eating apple sauce three times a day, falls within the scientific community's definition of maximum human life span — between 110 and 120 years.

"It's doubtful that anyone could live beyond 120," asserts Dr. Edward Schneider of the National Institute on Aging. "Our genetic makeup, which determines life span, just won't allow it."

But like wistful, modern-day Ponce de Leons searching for the Fountain of Youth, the vanguard of the so-called Life Extender movement — led by Walford, author of "Maximum Life Span," and Durk Pearson and Sandy Shaw, authors of the best-selling "Life Extension" — point to a slew of experiments from the last 20 years that have greatly increased longevity among laboratory animals.

Among them:

— Rats, fed a low-calorie, super-nutrient diet, lived up to 54 months — or 80 percent longer than their species' normal life span.

— Fish transferred at mid-life from water temperatures of 68 degrees F to 59 degrees F lived up to 38 months, a 76 percent increase in average life span.

— When the pituitary glands were removed from female octopuses (which usually die within days after hatching their young), they didn't mate and lived on for years.

What these experiments mean to humans has yet to be scientifically demonstrated, but they are revelations to the gurus of the movement, who are proceeding with various radical diet regimens designed to keep them fit, and to extend their life expectancy until the key to the aging process is unlocked — most likely in the field of genetic engineering, they say.

Walford, for one, has for nearly three years been on an extreme, low-calorie, high-nutrient diet that comprises only 60 percent of the amount of food in an average American diet.

It includes high levels of anti-oxidants (substances that supposedly check deterioration in blood cells) like the food preservative BHT and vitamins C and E — among many other compounds — which Walford says have, in his experiments, extended the life spans of rats, mice and other animals by as much as 70 percent.

"The nutritional regimen is not easy to maintain, but it does work," insists the lithe, 58-year-old scientist, who has studied the human aging process for 25 years. "Animals of less weight tend to get more life extension. I have a lot more energy now than I used to have."

Walford over 41 years ago wrote in his high school magazine that "death is not a necessary adjunct of living matter," a concept that he took to heart for his career.

His work has included investigation into the genetic control of the body's immune function which determines our susceptibility to, among other things, "age-mutation rates."

Greatly extended human life spans could be accomplished by genetic engineering, Walford says, adding that science is close to identifying the 50 to 100 of the 200,000 genes in the human body that apparently control the aging process.

By manipulating the function of the genes it would be possible, for instance, "to increase our own DNA (a component that contains the genetic code and carries the hereditary pattern) repair processes," he says. "For example, the injection of properly altered DNA might act like a vaccine to stimulate the body to increase its level of repair enzymes."

The best-known of the Life Extenders are Durk Pearson and Sandy Shaw. Their book, "Life Extension," topped the best-seller lists for most of last summer and was recently released in a trade paperback edition.

Less-respected in the mainstream scientific community than Walford, the pair of researchers have fashioned a "life extension formula" that calls for the daily ingestion of megadoses of such anti-oxidants as selenium, zinc, choline chloride, vitamins A, C and B complexes, among other preservatives and nutrients.

NEIL SOLOMON, M.D.

Only time can end intoxication

Dear Dr. Solomon: I saw a new drug that is supposed to keep you sober even if you drink a lot. I'm not a lush but I do tie one on once in a while. Do you recommend the use of this drug? — Greg, Youngstown, Ohio

Solomon

Dear Greg: A spokesman for the National Institute of Alcohol Abuse says that the only known method of handling alcohol that has been consumed is to let the liver take care of it. In other words, the passage of time is the only known effective way of undoing the effects of excessive drinking.

Dear Dr. Solomon: My daughter is a nurse and she has written to me that she is getting the hepatitis B vaccine because she works in a hospital. She says that a lot of the doctors and nurses and other hospital employees are getting it too. Is the vaccine given only to people who are employed in hospitals? — Mrs. H.L., St. Louis, Mo.

Dear Mrs. L.: Hepatitis B vaccine is indicated for patients who are on dialysis, for drug abusers who take the drug intravenously, and for patients in certain institutions. It is also indicated for people who come into contact with patients who have hepatitis B, whether chronic or acute.

Dear Dr. Solomon: I have found that since I joined an exercise program at the local community center, I seem to sleep better. At least I sleep better on the three nights that I go to the center. Have other people ever mentioned this kind of reaction? — Marion, Norfolk, Va.

Dear Marion: For some people, exercise does induce sleep. Some of my patients report that they were able to stop using sleeping pills after enrolling in an exercise program.

I have mentioned before that exercise does not have to be strenuous to be of value, and that almost everyone can engage in some form of exercise, even if they have to remain seated.

Dear Dr. Solomon: Everyone seems to be talking about AIDS. Is this something new or have I just not been paying attention? Can you explain in simple language what AIDS is? — Julius, Salt Lake City, Utah

Dear Julius: The acquired immune deficiency syndrome (AIDS) is a disease that involves suppression of an individual's immune system so that he or she becomes susceptible to serious illnesses. Dr. Donald Armstrong, of Memorial Sloan-Kettering Cancer Center in New York City, says he is convinced that AIDS is transmitted through sexual intercourse and through blood products, such as occurs during blood transfusions.

Dear Dr. Solomon: I was listening to one of those panel discussions on the radio and everyone was talking about how terrible it was for young girls to have babies, how it wasn't healthy for the baby or the mother. But we know that babies are being born to young girls, so isn't there anything that can be done to help them? — Lena, Washington, D.C.

Dear Lena: Preventing unwanted teen-age pregnancies is obviously preferable to waiting until the girl is pregnant. Once a pregnancy does occur, however, early care can help reduce the harmful effects of the mother's age.

Dr. Arthur Elster, of the University of Utah Medical Center in Salt Lake City, has reported on a study of 123 mothers, 12 to 14 years of age. Only five percent of those who had received early prenatal care — that is, in the first trimester — had small infants. This figure compared with 19 percent for girls who did not receive care until the third trimester or who had had no prenatal care at all during their pregnancies.

Twelve-year-old boy from Mexico follows Huck Finn's footsteps

MODESTO, Calif. (AP) — A 12-year-old boy from Mexico became a modern-day Huckleberry Finn, but after his 650-mile odyssey he admits he'd rather be back home.

Gilberto Gomez Casteneda left home in San Luis, about 26 miles south of Yuma, Ariz., more than two weeks ago with his 16-year-old brother, Martin.

They hitchhiked to Yuma, hopped a freight train to Los Angeles and took a bus to Modesto. But his brother left him and the Spanish-speaking boy became homesick.

An auto mechanic found the boy looking for a ride to the bus station Monday. He took Gilberto to police Capt. Orville House instead, and arrangements were being made for transportation home.

"He's the typical Huck Finn type," said House, who arranged for the boy to stay at a friend's home. "The amazing thing is that he could get here and get a job."

The boy was hired to pick blackberries and outfitted himself in a Star Wars T-shirt, corduroy pants and shoes with the money he earned. And he had $12 left over.

At police headquarters, the boy said in Spanish, "I don't like it here because it's so far from home. For me, San Luis is much better."

Diplomats rate Kohl winner

By BERNARD D. KAPLAN
Hearst Feature Service

PARIS — Contrary to initial reports, Western diplomats rate West German Chancellor Helmut Kohl as the clear winner of his first encounter in Moscow last week with an ailing, but also politically outmaneuvered Soviet President Yuri Andropov.

"It wasn't a knockout," was the way a satisfied NATO official put it, "but Kohl won on points."

The German leader's now-demonstrated ability to trade political punches with Andropov and, to continue the boxing parlance, give at least as good as he got was judged in allied circles to have major importance for future East-West relations.

News dispatches on Kohl's three-day visit to Moscow emphasized the lack of "tangible" results and the fact the two leaders achieved no meeting of minds on key problems like nuclear arms reductions in central Europe. But as the NATO official pointed out, absence of "agreement" was itself a signficiant development. It marked a setback for Soviet strategy.

That is a view shared by American and French diplomats in Western Europe. In little more than 72 hours in the Soviet capital, they say, Kohl made clear to Andropov that the rules of the game have changed and not to the Russians' advantage.

As a French foreign ministry source explained, "For the past few years, Moscow has been confronted by governments in Paris, Washington and London which have been much firmer in their political attitude toward Russia. So the Russian response was to turn toward the Schmidt government in Bonn which it found much more 'understanding'."

Skeptical world waits for 'elephant tapes'

MOSCOW (AP) — The official Soviet news agency said today that Batir, a baby elephant at the Karaganda zoo, talks and that zoologists have tape recordings to prove it.

Here is the full Tass account of the development:

"Once upon a time, the watchman at the Karaganda zoo discovered that the baby elephant Batir talks during the night. Naturally no one believed the watchman's story: elephants are not on the list of animals capable of imitating human speech.

Nevertheless, zoologists decided to check the truth of the watchman's claims. Armed with tape recorders, they went off for a night watch at the zoo. And they were rewarded. Batir spoke nearly 20 phrases into the tape recorders. His 'interview' was even transmitted on local radio. The elephant speaks mainly about himself and his needs. 'Batir is good. Batir is a fine fellow. Water. Have you watered the elephant?'

The specialist explained this phenomenon by noting that the elephant was orphaned at a very early age. He was raised by humans from the time he was in 'diapers.' He learned some of the simplest phrases from his human parents. And besides all that, they say the elephant has exceptional hearing compared with other elephants."

The Associated Press called Karaganda to obtain a copy of the tape, and zoo director Nikolai I. Yepifanovsky said he would make a copy and mail it to the AP bureau in Moscow.

Karaganda is a city in Kazakhstan, the Soviet Union's second largest republic located in the south central part of the country. The city is about 1,500 miles southeast of Moscow.

Brand New Opree begins competition

ODESSA — The Odessa Brand New Opree begins its Best of the Opree competition at the Globe Theatre Saturday at 8 p.m. with the Best Band contest. This week's contest will feature Mariah.

Each year the Odessa Brand New Opree hosts the Best of the Opree to select the most outstanding groups and individuals who have appeared on the Opree during the year. During the next few months, the Opree will be selecting the best bands, vocalists, gospel groups and instrumentalists. The winners of each category will perform on the annual Opree awards show Oct. 8.

Saturday and July 23 the Oprees have been set aside for the Best Band competition. The winning group will be selected by a panel of judges on the basis of musical ability and showmanship.

The schedule for the other contests is Aug. 13 Best Male Vocalist, Aug. 27 Best Female Vocalist, Sept. 10 Best Gospel Groups and Performers and Sept. 24 Best Instrumental, Duo and Youth Performers. All competitions are open to those who have performed at the Globe during the past year.

Admission to the Opree is $4 for adults, $2 for students and senior citizens and $1.50 for children under 12. For additional information call the Globe Theatre, 1-332-1586.

Melodrama portrays moral conflict

By GEORGIA TEMPLE

The Pickwick Players take time out from rehearsing for the upcoming production of "Dirty Work at the Crossroads" to demonstrate the stylized and often exaggerated physical movements that are a part of any melodrama. Lynne Granberry, from left, registers fear, Josh Jones stands in a traditional hero pose, Stuart Williams wrings his hands in a standard "I've got you now" villain pose, Jennifer DeLong indicates "I am going to make a true statement" by holding her hand up, and Stan Williams signals shock and dismay.

Will the evil Munro Murgatroyd succeed in wrecking the lives of the lovely Nellie Lovelace and her true love Adam Oakheart? The situation looks bleak and very grim. But...

This is a melodrama, an art form which involves a villain who initiates actions that threaten characters with whom the audience is sympathetic. It portrays a world in which good and evil are clearly distinguished with most having a sharply defined, oversimplified moral conflict.

Thus the heroine must be rescued. All must end well, in this case, not only for "Dirty Work at the Crossroads" to remain true to its genre, but also for the Pickwick Players to establish a new summer tradition.

For the past 35 years, adult area audiences have enjoyed a summer melodrama presentation. Midland Community Theatre's youth performing group hopes to begin offering the same for Midland's younger audiences. The Pickwick's production, "Dirty Work at the Crossroads," will be onstage Saturday, Sunday, July 23 and 24 at 1:30 p.m. at the Yucca Theatre, 208 N. Colorado Ave. Tickets, priced at $3, are on sale. Reservations may be made by calling Theatre Midland's box office, 682-4111.

Preparing for "Dirty Work at the Crossroads" has been an educational experience for the Pickwicks.

"These kids know more about the history of melodrama than most people in this town," Michael Spicer, educational director for MCT, said in a recent interview held prior to a Pickwick rehearsal.

At the beginning of the 1800s, melodrama and romantic drama became the most successful styles onstage. Melodrama helped to stimulate the development of realistic scenery, and many melodramatic scenes of breathtaking escapes and such natural disasters as floods, required clever, detailed settings.

UNTIL THE LAST quarter of the 18th century, the British theater was dominated by sentimental romances and melodrama. Since melodrama appealed to a wider audience, it remained popular long after the romantic movement had ended.

One of its most obvious characteristics is the exaggerated mannerisms.

"The style of melodrama is based on a form of acting that was created by a man named Delsartre. He hypothesized that for every emotion there was a physical action, such as the Garrick start (named for British actor David Garrick) which is the two hands up to represent fear. And anguish is the back of the hand to the forehead.

"He described every one of these in minute detail. And it became so well known and so popular that when people could see the stage, but couldn't necessarily hear the actors, they could tell what was going on by the physical action of the actors."

With the advent of acoustically better designed theaters, the audience could hear as well as see the physical actions that went with all of the emotions.

"That's been the hardest thing for these kids — for anybody doing this style — to assimilate, because it's so broad.

"Normally what a director has to do anyway with non-professional actors is to say, 'Make it bigger.' If it's too big I can cut you back, but I can never make you bigger. You can only do that.

ENTERTAINMENT

"THAT'S IN realisitic acting," Spicer says, adding, "This is hyper-realism — extended realism. It's much harder for them to feel that what they're doing is natural or should be what they're doing. They keep trying to make things smaller and smaller.

"So this," Spicer says, demonstrating 'fear' by putting his arms out, palms up approximately 18 inches apart, "when I give it to them, becomes this," he explains, his hands now only several inches apart.

Then he adds, his voice softening, "You have to say, 'No, no, no. You have to extend that out.'"

The history lessons go along with Spicer's acting lessons.

"Anytime I direct, especially a style, I try to teach something about the style. And it's not only just for the benefit of the actors, it's for my benefit, too — to keep reminding myself from whence all this came.

"It's really important if there's a strong stylistic statement in the play. 'Melodrama was written for a time in which spectacle was very important to theater goers,' Spicer says, referring to the period from 1850s to 1920.

"At this time in New York, David Belasco (a leading American theatrical producer for nearly 40 years) was noted for having pulled a Childs Restaurant — there were Childs like Howard Johnson's is now — and having it rebuilt on the stage of the Winter Garden Theatre, including cooks, cooking food and everything, just for one scene.

"THE BIGNESS OR style of the acting had to compete with the spectacle onstage," Spicer says, adding with a laugh, "They even got to the point where they were staging Ben Hur in New York onstage with the chariot race. There was nothing they wouldn't do to bring people in.

During this time in American stage history, touring was quite popular. "When they would tour, they would have to sneak the villain into and out of the theater because people believed what they were seeing was reality. And in a number of instances men playing villains were beaten and tarred and feathered and run out of town.

"There's even a couple of instances of villains being shot from the audience," Spicer says, laughing. But no cases that Spicer could find of anyone being killed.

"The audiences would get so caught up in this," Spicer says, adding, "And we look at it today and laugh. But to the people who saw the theater in the late 1800s, this was no kidding.

"It wasn't until the late teens and early 20s when realism began to more or less become accepted," that melodrama's popularity waned. Prior to that, Spicer says, "It was great spectacle. And absolutely the most popular form of entertainment in its day."

Actor learns how good books can be

From Wire Reports

LeVar Burton will readily admit that he owes much of his success to books. Books after all, have been very, very good to him.

A TV screenplay based on one of them, Alex Haley's "Roots," rocketed him to stardom in 1977, when Burton, then a student at the University of Southern California, was chosen to play the role of young Kunta Kinte in the hit television miniseries.

More recently Burton garnered kudos for his roles in "Dummy," "The Ron LeFlore Story" and "The Gambling Tiger," television movies with screenplays also based on best-selling books. And he's producing a six-hour miniseries based on the life of Hannibal.

Now Burton says, it's time to repay that debt. As of Monday, he has begun hosting a 15-part half hour children's show called "Reading Rainbow," airing weekdays on PBS stations.

Burton, who has appeared on Capitol Hill to push for improvements in children's TV programming, recently began a crusade of a more personal nature: a legal suit involving his 3-year-old son Evan, born out of wedlock.

In an unusual move, Burton has offered to pay $600 a month to help support the boy and is seeking visitation rights that would allow him to spend more time with his son.

"This is not a paternity suit. It is a custody battle," Burton insists. "I love kids," and although this is not the scenario I would have chosen to show it, I can't shirk my responsibilities as a father. It's very important to me that he knows that I want him and that I love him.

Midland artist featured in show

SAN ANTONIO — Works by Midland fiber artist Julie Rogers are being featured in an exhibit at Sol Del Rio Art Gallery in San Antonio. Much of the work is "needleweaving" — a technique in which the actual weaving process is done by needle on fabric stretched over a frame.

Ms. Rogers attended Lenoir Rhyne College and Florida State University. She teaches weaving at Midland College.

In addition to exhibiting in regional shows, her work has been included in exhibitions at the Washington University Gallery of Art in St. Louis, the London Historical Museum in Ontario, Canada, the Museum of Science and Industry in Chicago, and the Pensacola Museum of Art in Pensacola, Fla.

Her work is represented by Sol Del Rio Art Gallery in San Antonio and The Adobe Wall in Houston. She maintains a studio in Midland.

NPR director ages 15 years in only one

By LEE MARGULIES
The Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

LOS ANGELES — The past few months have been tumultuous and frequently painful ones for Wallace Smith. His response when asked his age suggests that he has not been unaffected: "I started out this year 48," he quipped. "I'm now 63."

As general manager of KUSC-FM in Los Angeles and a member of the board of directors of National Public Radio, Smith has watched from a front-row seat as a financial crisis of potentially fatal proportions unfolded at NPR and engulfed the network's 280 member stations.

The stations, whose own fiscal operations are separate from NPR's and thus not directly jeopardized by the network's deficit of more than $6.5 million, are nonetheless caught up in the emergency. They already have pledged to contribute $1.6 million from their own funds to help bail out NPR and currently are negotiating a three-year loan with the Corporation for Public Broadcasting that will similarly be paid back in large part by money they otherwise would have used to support their local programming efforts.

The experience has left Smith upset, worried and chagrined — upset that KUSC will suffer for NPR's financial mismanagement, worried that public radio in general has been tarnished and chagrined that, as an NPR director, he bears some of the responsibility for the unfortunate situation.

INDEED, SMITH RESIGNED from the board June 21, effective Sept. 30, saying, "The solution to our problem is best accomplished by leaders who are untainted by recent affairs."

Despite his concern and frustration, Smith maintained during an interview this week in his office near the University of Southern California, which holds the license for his station, that KUSC has not been seriously injured by the problems at NPR and that he is resolved to keep it that way.

"I'm damned angry about this mistake at NPR, and I'm furious that it has had an impact on us, but I'm not going to let it destroy KUSC," he declared.

He said that the station, unlike NPR, is in "very healthy condition."

Still, KUSC has had to re-evaluate its operating budget for the fiscal year that began just last Friday. Because of the NPR situation, the continuing tight economy and an unanticipated reduction in support from USC, Smith said, the station has had to hold in abeyance the approximately $200,000 worth of expansion it had planned over last year's $2 million budget.

EXACTLY HOW BIG a blow the NPR crisis will strike at KUSC has not been determined yet, said Smith, who has run the classical music station since 1972.

The station's share of the $1.6 million already pledged will fall somewhere between $28,000 and $46,000, he said, depending on what formula finally is adopted. And its share of the loan repayment is likely to be just as high in each of the next three years.

Smith said that the money otherwise would be spent for program development and hiring new personnel to work on raising more funds for the station.

Any fund raising done on NPR's behalf, for example, may cut into the local stations' efforts to attract financial support from listeners, corporations and foundations.

And just the negative publicity about NPR has badly tarnished the reputation of all of public radio, he said, and may result in turning away some supporters who confuse the station with the national organization and believe the whole system has been financially mismanaged.

Then, too, he noted, if the Corporation for Public Broadcasting makes the loan to NPR and the network still goes bankrupt, the stations probably will be liable for any outstanding debts.

KUSC COULD SURVIVE even that dire circumstance, Smith asserted, but not with the same luster and national attention that has been focused on all of public radio in recent years because of such NPR programs as "All Things Considered" and "Morning Edition."

However, Smith does not think that NPR will go out of business. He said he thinks the new management team is on the right track and will develop a leaner, more fiscally responsible organization.

Despite the fact that his was frequently a voice of caution during his five years on the NPR board of directors, Smith said he will not change his mind about leaving the board Sept. 30, one year before his term was to expire.

Helen Hayes wants old theater

HOLLYWOOD (AP) — Last year, when the Broadway community campaigned to save two venerable theaters from destruction by a high-rise developer, Helen Hayes was among the campaigners.

Naturally so, since one of the doomed theaters was named the Helen Hayes.

The developer offered to name a new theater after Miss Hayes, but she declined.

"It was going to be one of those monsters with 1,500 seats," says the actress. "Theaters that big aren't good for actors."

The rock group Blue Oyster Cult has been booked for two shows Saturday at Six Flags Over Texas. The band, which rose to fame with such pop hits as "Burnin' For You," "Don't Fear the Reaper," "Cities on Flame" and "Godzilla," will appear in the Arlington park's Festival Concert Pavilion at 8 and 10 p.m. Seating for both shows will be on a paved asphalt surface so visitors are encouraged to bring their own blankets or pillows. A $2 charge will be made for each show in addition to the theme park's regular $12.95 ticket price. Children 5 and under are not charged for concerts. Fans who arrive at Six Flags after 5 p.m. can save $4 on the regular one-day ticket price by presenting an empty Dr. Pepper can for each ticket they wish to purchase.

Electric Light Orchestra cuts 'Secret Messages'

HOLLYWOOD (AP) — Electric Light Orchestra's swipe at those who complained about so-called "backwards masking" on the rock band's earlier records has been nipped in the bud — in this country, at least.

Controversy over alleged backward recording of Satanic messages on albums by ELO and other rock groups had led to demands in some states for legislation requiring warnings on album jackets.

So ELO leader Jeff Lynne decided to deliberately record non-Satanic messages backwards on the group's new album. He also had the words "Warning: This contains secret backward messages" printed on the United Kingdom album cover.

MCT to present 'The Shadow Box'

Midland Community Theatre will present a special production of Michael Cristofer's "The Shadow Box" at 8:30 p.m. July 29 and 30 and Aug. 5 and 6 in Theatre One at Theatre Midland, 2000 W. Wadley Ave.

"The Shadow Box" is set in the hospice unit of a northern California hospital. It focuses on three terminally ill patients and their families, friends and loved ones. Despite the setting and the condition of three of the players, "Shadow Box" is not about death. It is a play about the beauty and fragility of life and the need to cherish every moment.

This play first opened at the Mark Taper Forum in Los Angeles. A production at the Long Wharf Theatre in New Haven soon followed.

The show was moved to Broadway in March 1977 and continued for 315 performances. It is one of only 10 plays to win the Pulitzer Prize and the Tony Award for Best Play.

Of it the New York Times said: "An important and courageous play, triumphant, bright and occasionally even funny." New York Magazine said: "An evening's entertainment that is gripping, memorable, compassionate and even genuinely comic."

MCT's cast includes MCT veterans Glen Thomason, Arlene Jara, Scott Inness, D.A. Plumlee, Robyn Rose, Don Stroud and Mark Wilkins. New to MCT's stage are Carl Yowell and Elizabeth Hewlett.

The production is directed by Ted Strickland, MCT's assistant director, with set design by Brett Batterson and lighting design by John Michael Warburton. Stage manager is Edward Coffield, who is assisted by Pam Allen and Laura Wolf. Ted Noel heads up the set construction crew while props are chaired by Cindy Stephens and Joy Payton. Costumes are designed by Mae Dawson and Marilynn Philpy is in charge of soft scenery.

MCT members will receive a 50 percent discount off the regular ticket price of $5. Reservations may be made by calling Theatre Midland's box office, 682-4111.

The production is funded in part by grants from Mr. and Mrs. William C. Morrow, Mr. and Mrs. Arlen L. Edgar and Trott and Company.

A place to park

A San Angelo woman called the other day with this biting message: If you think Midland's parking situation is better than it was a few months back, you've got another think coming.

The woman was understandably irate. She was in Midland on business, had finally located a parking space, entered a downtown building to transact her business and upon returning, found a ticket on her windshield. She was even more upset because the scenario had been repeated three times in one day. It was too much, and to top it off, she was furious because the tickets were $3 each.

Now, it would be easy to write off this woman's complaint with the simple explanation that she "doesn't understand" the city's parking dilemma or that she was an unusual case. But historical perspective won't let us.

Midland has experienced parking difficulties for a number of years and as the downtown business district has developed, the problem has worsened. The parking problem isn't any one person's fault. It came about largely as the result of shortsightedness and Midland's economic spurt-slump cycle.

A major contributing factor, ironically, has been the city's success at keeping the business and financial community concentrated in the downtown. That has kept the downtown from suffering the fate of other West Texas communities, but with the good aspect has come the bad: The parking problem.

During the past couple of years, the city and private concerns have concentrated on relieving both the parking problem and rush-hour traffic congestion, realizing that as the city continued to grow a bad situation was going to become difficult to bear. Successes have been achieved, a notable example being improved traffic movement as a result of a number of one-way streets.

But parking continues to be a touchy subject and it's reflecting on Midland in a bad way. This woman, for example, said Midland's parking problem is "a disgrace to West Texas" and that she would suggest that her company not consider Midland for future conventions.

We recognize that there's only so much the city can do about the parking dilemma, but this woman's complaint brings up a point. Midland's leaders would be well-advised to stay abreast of the parking situation and to do all in their power to improve it.

Midland doesn't need to get the reputation of a city that's nice to visit, but you can't park here.

Lavish promises

There was a stampede of lavish promise-making the other day when the Democratic presidential "cattle show" rode through Gender Gap, the National Women's Political Caucus.

Candidates Walter Mondale, John Glenn, Gary Hart, Alan Cranston and Ernest Hollings fell over each other vowing that if elected they would appoint more women to higher positions than any president in American history.

The candidates also said they "would do whatever is necessary," "convene a summit to plan how" and "twist arms" to win passage of the Equal Rights Amendment.

Much of this wooing of the activist women's delegates was designed to exploit the potentially serious problem President Reagan faces with women voters. The White House and the Republican Party have reason to be concerned about polls that say the president rates lower among women than men because of the perception he is insensitive to women's issues. Democratic hopefuls would like to turn this "gender gap" into 1984 votes.

But the Democrats have their own problems with this method of campaigning. If a candidate doesn't show up at the women's political caucus — or any other special-interest group convention — he risks alienating the sponsors. When a candidate does show up, he feels obliged to match his rival's promises. There is very little room at such cattle shows for candor and honesty — a candidate saying how remote the chances of the ERA ever becoming part of the U.S. Constitution, for example.

Later on in the campaign, the Democrats could regret making too many extravagant promises that are bound to make them look both foolish and indistinguishable.

President Reagan shouldn't count on that, however. At the same time, he should be careful in tailoring any counteroffensive. He is never going to win over most of the activist women. GOP women did attend the caucus and expressed displeasure with the president's policies, but the vast majority of delegates were Democrats. To change his platform by trying to appease everyone would make the president look like a Walter Mondale and anger the constituent groups that elected him.

Although no president in history has equalled President Reagan's record in appointing women to Cabinet posts and the U.S. Supreme Court, one way for him to improve his standing would be to find more positions now for women in his administration. He has that opportunity; the other candidates don't.

The main focus of the president's efforts to close this gender gap should be to keep the economic recovery going. In one political sense, women differ little from men: They always have been concerned with pocketbook issues.

One final effort the president could make to bolster his standing among women voters would be to take the lead in recruiting more female candidates for public office. Sharing the ballot in 1984 with more than a few token women Republicans would be an ideal way to head off the Democrats at Gender Gap.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Ten years ago: A former Air Force major told the Senate Armed Services Committee he had helped falsify records to hide the fact that U.S. B-52's were bombing Cambodia.

Five years ago: President Jimmy Carter told West Germans at a speech in Bonn that the United States would defend their country — in Carter's words — "as if it were our own."

One year ago: the Senate Foreign Relations unanimously approved the appointment of George Shultz as secretary of state.

Today's birthdays: Author Irving Stone is 80. Former President Gerald Ford is 70. Author Isaac Bashevis Singer is 79. Film director Ingmar Bergman is 65. Playwright Arthur Laurents is 65. Newscaster John Chancellor is 56. Actress Polly Bergen is 53. Former football star and actor Roosevelt Grier is 51.

Thought for today: "I am for the restoration of order, but not for the restoration of the old order." — Mirabeau, French revolutionary leader (1749-1791)

Arabs fear Syria-directed PLO

WASHINGTON — The violent split in the Palestine Liberation Organization has the Middle East in turmoil. Most upset are the Arab nations, but the Soviet Union also views the PLO civil war with serious misgivings.

Jack Anderson

Last Nov. 10, I reported that Yasir Arafat was once again in danger of losing his leadership of the Palestinian exiles, and I identified Syrian President Hafez Assad as the moving force against Arafat. Quoting secret intelligence cables, I reported that Assad was trying "to oust Arafat and replace him with a full-blown radical."

Assad sought to take advantage of the PLO's defeat in Lebanon. He wanted to move the exile group's headquarters to Damascus, where he could control it and eventually put his own, extremist puppets in charge. But Arafat was too clever to walk into a trap like that, and moved the PLO's "temporary" headquarters to Tunisia.

Now the implacable rivalry between Arafat and Assad has exploded in the world press. What's not generally appreciated, though, is the alarm that the PLO eruption has caused among most Arab nations. The last thing they want is to see the Syrians take over the PLO.

The reason is simple: If the Arab world can be described as a ship with several skippers, each trying to steer it in a different direction, Syria is the proverbial loose cannon careening around the deck, scaring everyone aboard.

Syria is irresponsible enough by itself to be a danger to its Arab neighbors; they're afraid Assad would unleash the PLO against their own regimes, which are already in economic and political difficulties without Palestinian subversion.

Iraqi Foreign Minister Tariq Aziz flew to Cairo the other day for meetings with Egyptian officials. State Department sources told my associate Lucette Lagnado he was the highest-ranking Iraqi to visit Egypt in years. The main topic of discussion was Syria's attempt to seize control of the PLO.

The Saudi Arabian government has also tried quietly, but ineffectively, to restrain the Syrian power play, according to intelligence reports. But the Saudis were unwilling to play their trump card: a cutoff of the substantial aid they give the Syrians.

Even the Kremlin is unhappy at the prospect of Syria taking over the PLO. Intelligence reports say the Soviets sent Arafat three telegrams of support within a one-week period. And the Soviet ambassador to Syria has reportedly been shuttling between Syrian officials and various PLO factions, trying to prevent a takeover.

If Moscow is concerned that the Syrian monster it helped create has grown too big to handle, the Arab governments can point to specific incidents to justify their fears of a Syrian-PLO combination: the assassination of PLO moderate leader Assam Sartawi by the extremist faction headed by Abu Nidal and the murder of Lebanese President-elect Bashir Gemayel. The Syrians welcomed these killings, if they didn't plot them.

There is also the matter of prestige. Major Arab governments, like Egypt and Saudi Arabia, resent Assad's attempt to usurp the leadership of the Arab world.

So Egypt may try to form a "consensus" of moderate Arab nations that will be strong enough to put down the Syrian upstart.

NEUTRON-STYLE BOMBS: The Pentagon is secretly producing partial neutron warheads, or "enhanced radiation weapons." More than 300 of these warheads, costing as much as $3 million apiece, are being built for the ground-to-ground Lance missile, according to a secret Pentagon report.

In addition, about 800 eight-inch neutron-type artillery rounds, costing more than $1 million apiece, are in the works. And 1,000 enhanced-radiation 155mm artillery shells are planned for 1986 delivery.

None of these will be true neutron bombs, which would give off only 20 percent of their fission reaction in blast and heat. The remaining 80 percent in "prompt radiation" would have no lasting contamination.

But the neutron-type warheads now being produced are still significantly lower in immediate blast and heat effects and higher in short-lived radiation. The new warhead for the Lance, for example, would give off 70 percent of its force in destructive blast and heat, and 30 percent in radiation — and some of that 30 percent would be in radioactive fallout.

By comparison, a normal nuclear bomb is 85 percent blast and heat, 10 percent fallout and only 5 percent in short-lived radiation.

EXECUTIVE MEMO: William Ruckelshaus may be the fair-haired Mr. Clean who is going to clean up the mess at the Environmental Protection Agency — but he obviously hasn't impressed the toilers in EPA's Office of Solid Waste and Emergency Response. They violated the cardinal requirement of a successful politician: "Spell my name right." A recent weekly report gave the boss's name as "Ruchleshaus."

— If you want to know which of the world's nations are in or out of favor with the State Department on a given day, pay attention to the way they are identified by Foggy Bottom bureaucrats. If the rulers are referred to as "regimes," they're on the outs — like "the Polish military regime," "the Sandinista regime" or "the Afghan regime of Babrak Karmal." Friendlies, on the other hand, are called "governments" — as in "the government of El Salvador."

Oxford Movement lives on today

WASHINGTON — On July 14, 1883, an Anglican priest preached a sermon in the university pulpit at Oxford. One consequence, although hardly the most important one, is that today some Episcopalians refer to the Middle West, sometimes derisively, as "the biretta belt," a biretta being a small four-sided cap.

George F. Will

When John Keble finished his sermon 150 years ago, the Oxford Movement had begun, at least according to its most vivid figure, John Henry Newman. For the remainder of 1983, here and abroad, there will be observances celebrating the birth of that movement, which left a small mark on the life of the spirit in many American communities. The story nicely illustrates how ideas have unanticipated consequences long after they have been loosed on the world.

No one would have guessed that the passage of the Reform Bill in England in 1832 would be a catalyst of events that would influence Christian missionary activities in America's West, which then included Illinois, Missouri, Wisconsin and Minnesota.

The mind of the Oxford Movement was too complex to encompass in this column. It was, in part, a reaction against the facile optimism of the Enlightenment, and against the 19th century's serene belief in the inevitability of progress. Its emphasis on liturgical richness was an aspect of the revolt against sterile rationalism in society generally, and against a neglect of some facets of the spirit of churches.

The reform of Parliament and the rise of democracy made some Church of England clergy anxious to clarify that the authority of the church derived not from its establishment by the state but from its origin and function. That is, its authority derives from being a vessel of truth in an unconverted world. This assertion of spiritual independence from the state served an American need that was a lingering consequence of the Declaration of Independence.

General Theological Seminary opened for classes in 1820 in what a graduate called "a little suburban appendix to New York City, known as Chelsea."

It still is in that "suburb," on 9th Ave. between 20th and 21st Sts. in Manhattan. The land was given by Clement Clarke Moore, author of "A Visit from St. Nicholas," now known as "The Night Before Christmas."

In 1820, the Episcopal Church in America was still somewhat suspect. Forty-four years earlier most of its clergy had been Tories; many had left England or at least resigned from their positions. The spirit of the Oxford Movement seemed to offer a way of being Anglican without being English, and the seminary became receptive to the movement's influence.

The seminary also saw a special role for itself in preparing young men to follow migrating Americans into the opening West. Off the young men went, sometimes with birettas, an item worn by some Catholic clergy. It became a badge announcing certain convictions about correct churchmanship.

The Baptists and Methodists, with their more flexible organizations, were able to use circuit riders and lay preachers to attract frontier followings. But Episcopalians, and especially those influenced by the Oxford Movement, had the advantage of emphasizing tradition, pastoral care and even aesthetic concerns (in liturgy and architecture). These emphases were welcome in the restless, unrooted and often stark new communities of the moving frontier.

Persons influenced by the Oxford Movement helped the Episcopal Church find a place in the nation's ecclesiastical spectrum, but their "high church" tendencies made them the centers of controversies within the church. The Bishop of Massachusetts virtually cut off relations with the Church of the Advent in Boston because the rector placed on the altar a wooden cross painted gold, which the horrified bishop thought was the thin end of the papist wedge — idolatry and all that.

But beneath disputes about candles on altars and the colors of vestments, there were serious issues. Critics of the Oxford Movement felt it blurred the distinction between Protestantism and Roman Catholicism. Supporters thought it counteracted a puritan distrust of the human thirst for poetry and wonder in worship.

St. James Episcopal Church on Capitol Hill just celebrated the completion of a century of daily masses. In 1883 the practice probably scandalized many Washingtonians. Today St. James, having just ordained a woman deacon, is probably considered lapsed by the high church faction. But, then, one of the joys and fascinations of American life is that it still is in many ways, seen and unseen, the product of many intellectual ferments, remembered and forgotten.

Problems with home computers

The home computer business is in a lot of trouble. It would be nice to blame the Japanese for it all, but they never really got into the action.

Art Buchwald

One of the reasons the business got into difficulty is the female gender problem. Women still don't appreciate the value of a home computer and what it can do to make their lives easier.

When I set up my brand-new computer one night, my wife asked why I bought it.

"This is going to change our lives. We can do our taxes on it."

"H & R Block did them already."

"Well, we can do them next year," I said. "We also can compute our household expenses on this machine. Give me all our bills and I'll start programming them."

"You have to be kidding. It will take me three months to find all our bills. Would you take my word for it that we spent $10,000 more than you made in 1982?"

"All right, I'll put that into the computer."

"What does the computer say about that?"

"It says we spent $10,000 more than I made. Why don't I try balancing your checkbook? Give me all your stubs."

"What for?"

"The bank's computer could have made a mistake and we can take our computer printout to the president and show it to him."

She came back and threw her check stubs on my desk, and stomped out of my study.

Three hours later she came back. "How are you doing?"

"I'm up to Lord and Taylor's stub for March. So far everything checks out. Maybe I'll make up your calendar for the week. What have you got on for the next few days?"

"I have a hairdresser's appointment on Thursday."

"Good, now I'll just feed that information into the computer, and then when you want to know what you've got on for Thursday, you just put this floppy disk into this slot, put your finger on CODE, then hit this button, and you'll know you have a hairdresser's appointment on Thursday."

"I already know it."

"Okay, forget the calendar. Let's take an inventory of everything we have in the house."

"At eleven o'clock at night?"

"Why not? Once we record it on a disk, and we have a fire, we'll know what was lost."

"Suppose the computer gets burned up in the fire?"

"We won't keep the disk in the house. We'll put it in my office, and a printout in the bank's safety deposit box."

"What else can your computer do?"

"I can key into a bulletin board and talk to anyone in the United States who has a compatible communications terminal."

"You can do that by phone. You still haven't told me why you bought this computer."

"If you must know, I bought it for the children. Kids have to grow up these days with computer knowledge."

"Our children are all grown up and they don't live here anymore."

"You never know when they'll come back home."

The home computer is still in my study, but I don't seem to use it as much as I thought I would. I made a friend in Minneapolis with it one night, but just when we were getting to know each other, his wife made him come to bed.

Gould considering fertile South Carolina for locale in upcoming comedy movie

COLUMBIA, S.C. (AP) — Actor Elliott Gould says he's considering South Carolina's historic Charleston and modern Columbia as locales for his upcoming romantic comedy film "For The People."

In a news conference Tuesday in Columbia, Gould said the movie deal isn't certain yet, but added, "The atmosphere is fertile."

Gould, who will star in the film, and producer Robert Mahr came to South Carolina through the efforts of Lt. Gov. Mike Daniel, the state Arts Commission and the State Development Board.

Gould said he was impressed by Charleston's 18th-century architecture, and would like to start shooting in February. The film's leading lady has not yet been chosen, but Gould said the role is suited to actresses Sally Field or Bess Armstrong.

Princess Diana

LONDON (AP) — Princess Diana, who once thought of becoming a ballet dancer, has accepted patronage of the London City Ballet, Buckingham Palace announced Wednesday.

The 22-year-old wife of Prince Charles still takes dancing lessons to keep fit, and recently said that she had hoped to be a ballet dancer until she grew too tall. She is 5 foot 9.

The 5-year-old London City Ballet tours throughout Britain and overseas.

MADRID (AP) — Authorities have canceled two concerts British rock star Rod Stewart was to give this weekend because of a lack of security and fear of disorder.

Stewart, who began a Spanish tour Tuesday in Valencia, was to have performed Saturday and Sunday in an open space in Madrid which authorities said could hold only 4,500 spectators.

Concert promoters Gay and Co. reportedly had already sold 17,000 tickets, and the Madrid civil governor's office issued the prohibition late Tuesday following a police examination of the site.

However, a spokesman for the promoters blamed a Tuesday editorial in the independent Madrid daily El Pais for the prohibition. The editorial mentioned disorders during a Canary Islands reggae concert earlier this month in which several people were seriously injured.

Rev. Paisley

GREENVILLE, S.C. (AP) — The Rev. Ian Paisley, a militant Protestant leader in Northern Ireland, is seeking a visa that would allow him to visit Bob Jones University in Greenville.

University spokesman Richard Smith said Monday that the university has had no official confirmation that the Rev. Paisley will be able to attend a World Congress of Fundamentalists, which begins Aug. 1.

American supporters of the minister had threatened to file suit against the State Department after Paisley was denied a visa last March, based on his "record of inflammatory actions and statements." However, no suit has yet been filed.

The congress will bring several thousand fundamentalists from around the world to Greenville, Smith said.

Joan Baez

PARIS (AP) — Folk singer Joan Baez, a long-time political activist, had lunch with French President Francois Mitterrand at the Elysee Palace on Wednesday to talk about peace.

"We talked about a lot of things," Miss Baez said afterward. "For me, the subject was non-violence; for him, it was many, many subjects."

The American singer is in Paris to give a free outdoor concert downtown on Friday.

"I'll sing love songs, all songs, but the concert, once again, is dedicated to non-violence," she said.

New York homeless sent to New Jersey hotels

NEWARK, N.J. (AP) — New York City's shelters for the homeless are so overcrowded that hundreds of destitute families have been moved to New Jersey, where they are put up in $33-a-night hotel rooms, officials say.

Jack Deacy, a spokesman for the New York City Department of Human Resources, which refers people to New Jersey hotels, said shelters for the homeless in his city have been housing 11,000 people each night and have no more room.

"This is the largest amount of homeless in the city since the Great Depression," he said.

Thus far, 284 families — or about 1,000 people — have been placed in hotels in Newark, East Orange and Jersey City, and hundreds more are likely to be sent there for short-term housing, Deacy said.

Maria Alvarez, one of the homeless, said she gets enough money from New York welfare payments to pay the $231 weekly room cost and to feed her three children in restaurants.

"I like it here," she said. "The place is quiet. It's better for me and my children. We eat good."

She said welfare benefits every two weeks pay her $462 for housing, $170 for food and $148 for clothing and incidentals. That comes to more than $1,500 a month.

Mrs. Alvarez said she left Boston for New York City in search of her mother. She never found her and wound up on the streets. She said she was taken in by a woman who saw her crying and eventually was sent by a social worker to the Lincoln Motel in Newark last month.

Sonia Zapata, 33, who has been living at the same $33-a-night motel with her husband and two sons for about a month, also said she had no complaints. She said the accommodations were far better than in New York.

She has set up a hot plate on which she cooks her family's meals, and she noted that the sheets are always changed and that her family can use the motel swimming pool.

But Robert Hayes, director of the New York City Coalition for the Homeless, termed the practice an "outrage."

"Besides the inability to get their medical care or food stamps in New Jersey, these families are uprooted from their friends, relatives and things they are used to. They may very well become permanently dependent."

Charlene Brown, a spokewoman for the New Jersey Department of Human Services, said, "It is less than a humane approach since you are not resolving the issue."

Hayes said the emergency funding being used to put the homeless in New Jersey hotels is designed to last only six months. He noted that after that period, the New York cases could become New Jersey's problems.

"Just wait until New Jersey finds out folks are being sent to New Jersey and will become permanent residents entitled to permanent benefits," Hayes said.

Most of the New York City shelters were designed for single people, so the families have been placed in 30 hotels in the five New York City boroughs and in New Jersey because there is no place else for them to go, said Bob Jorgan, director of the city's Crisis Intervention Services.

"We are sending families to New Jersey simply because there are no more hotels within our price range that will take public assistance cases," Jorgan said. "We are at the end of our rope."

Suzanne Trazoff, a human resources spokeswoman, noted that families who have been evicted or victims of fire can find it extremely difficult to find low-cost housing in New York.

Operators of the New Jersey hotels where the homeless are housed said they are paid $33 a night or about $1,000 a month for each family. Deacy noted the federal Emergency Housing Act allows the city to pay higher amounts for emergency housing such as a hotel.

"We can't pay it for permanent housing," he said. "So even though you could get a good apartment for much less, we couldn't pay for it. And if these people get an apartment in New Jersey, they lose all New York City benefits."

Three weddings planned for three daughters

MARION, Ind. (AP) — If planning one marriage seems complicated, how about organizing three weddings involving brides living in three states?

"Our phone bills have increased. So have their's," said Beatrice Ankenbruck of Marion, who has two daughters planning a double wedding on Aug. 20 and a third daughter with an Oct. 15 date at the altar.

Trying to reach Charles and Beatrice Ankenbruck at home by phone is becoming more difficult as they arrange the details with daughters Julie in Texas, Sharon in Florida and Laura in Marion.

Julie, 24, will marry Mark Kuhl, who is from South Bend but now works in Fort Worth, Texas. She'll be involved in the double wedding between Sharon, 22, and Brian Sutter, a former Marion resident who now is an assistant state's attorney in Fort Myers, Fla. The wedding will take place here at St. Paul Catholic Church — the same location selected by Laura, 21, for her ceremony with Geoff Thompson of Marion.

Both parents say their most difficult task is trying to organize the August wedding, which includes five bridesmaids and five grooms for each couple, long distance.

"Letters are just too slow when you're making plans," said Mrs. Ankenbruck, who already has gone through the experience of planning weddings for the couple's two other daughters. "It's hard for me not to be able to go (shopping) with Julie and Sharon. Laura's at home and I can go shopping with her."

Family deserted by relative; befriended by strangers

WILLISTON PARK, N.Y. (AP) — A destitute Alabama couple who brought their family to Long Island on a son-in-law's promise of a new life headed back home Wednesday, their dream broken and the son-in-law missing with most of their possessions.

They left without the $806 in contributions — and $200 in McDonald's gift certificates — that had been collected for them at the local police station.

"They left before we could give it to them," said Nassau County Inspector Tracy Smith. "We'll return it if we hear from them. If not, we'll give it to other charities."

Smith said the Salter family — John, 46; his wife Hazel, 41; their daughter Charlene, 19; their son Jason, 11; and Charlene's son Sean, 2 — left the Long Island Marriott in Uniondale at about 5 a.m., apparently bound back to Asford, Ala., which they left last week with Charlene's new husband, Richard DeLeon, 40.

DeLeon had said he was inheriting his deceased father's welding business on Long Island and promised Salter a job there.

But near Atlanta, the group became separated. DeLeon, towing most of the family's possessions, disappeared. The Salters, in a truck-camper, tried desperately to find him, doubling back 100 miles, then continued on to their destination, thinking to meet up with him on Long Island.

Deleon never showed up.

The family appealed for help at the Nassau County police precinct house in Williston Park on Sunday and were allowed to camp outside the station Sunday night. The police raised enough money to put them in a local motel Monday night, and the Marriott donated a room and meals Tuesday night.

Power failure staggers cities

HONOLULU (AP) — Five major transmission lines to Honolulu mysteriously went out of service in "a domino effect" Wednesday, knocking out power to the 800,000 residents of Hawaii's capital city and the rest of the island of Oahu, utility officials said.

Police said there were many traffic tie-ups on Honolulu streets as traffic lights winked out, but there were no major accidents. At least one man was trapped in an elevator, but no injuries or other emergencies were reported to firefighters.

Incoming airline traffic at Honolulu International Airport was arriving without any problems, said George W. Harvey, area coordinator for the Federal Aviation Administration. There were delays, however, with departing flights as ground support systems operated without electricity, Harvey said.

Hawaii Gov. George R. Ariyoshi ordered all state offices in Oahu closed and ordered the island's 25,000 state workers home, with a quarter of them released each half hour to avoid traffic prooblems. Honolulu Mayor Eileen Anderson also send city and county workers home on a staggered basis, and the Oahu Civil Defense asked businesses to do the same.

Leroy Rathburn, assistant manager of the Honolulu Board of Water Supply, which controls the island's water, said the board asked citizens to store drinking water as a precaution.

"It was basically a domino effect," Scott Shirai, spokesman for Hawaiian Electric Co., the island's power supplier, said of the transmission lines that went out.

"The generators were generating power but had no place to send it, so as a safety measure, they had to be brought down."

"At this point, there is no apparent damage to the five major transmission lines" serving Oahu, Shirai said, adding that service would be restored slowly.

About 1:30 p.m. Hawaii Standard Time (7:30 p.m. EDT), power was restored to 1,000 customers in Aiea and Pearl City, about 20 miles west of downtown Honolulu near Pearl Harbor. Power to downtown Honolulu would probably stay out until at least nightfall, or 7:30 p.m. HST (1:30 a.m. EDT Thursday), officials said.

Honolulu firefighter Garner Okinaga said colleagues were trying to rescue one man trapped in an elevator between floors in a state office building in downtown Honolulu.

"We've talked to him. He's OK. This is our third building (that firefighters checked for trapped elevator occupants) and we'll probably be doing some others," Okinaga said. "If they're not hurting, we are probably going to leave them until power comes back on."

He said that his unit has not received any serious emergency calls.

Shirai said the outage started in a series of events that took place over a 20-minute period shortly after 10 a.m. HST.

He said the precise cause of the problem with the transmission lines was unknown.

WE are looking for exceptional, ambitious individuals to invest and become distributors for Lea Haller International, one of the fastest growing cosmetics companies in the field today. This is an excellent opportunity to join on the ground level of a direct sales marketing company. We are looking for men or women who can work part time or full time and who are interested in becoming successful people. These products are just being introduced in your area, and can be sold by an individual or through certain types of businesses. If you so desire, we also offer excellent training seminars to help you become more familiar with the company, the product and how to establish your business. If you are interested in knowing more about this opportunity, please call collect and I can set up an appointment to introduce you to our marketing plan, products and other information you might want to knowbefore you invest. Please call 806-872-2584 after 6:00 P.M. for Kay Stephens, or call 806-872-8691 or 806-872-5819 for Tanya Hatchett. We are distributors for Lea Haller International and will be coming to your area in the next few weeks for these interviews.

INTRODUCING THE CAR THAT WILL MAKE ALL CARS PERFORM BETTER.

AutoWeek magazine called it "The finest quality car available." Car and Driver used the seldom-used words "magnificent," and "lovely." "New levels of refinement," agrees Autocar.

Just what new car are they referring to? The BMW 318i. A sports sedan whose engineering is so technologically advanced, we fully expect it to inspire the next generation of "technological breakthroughs" in competitive models.

For a thorough evaluation of the sports sedan that will send the automotive community scurrying back to their drawing boards, contact us for a most exhilarating test drive of the BMW 318i.
