City council approves 'L' Street changes

By LANA CUNNINGHAM

"Do whatever needs to be done."

More than one Midland resident voiced this sentiment to the Midland City Council when the panel met Tuesday in the City Council Chambers at City Hall.

Prompting the remark from parents who filled the council chambers was a discussion of the problem on North L Street of teen-agers using it as the place to gather at night and visit with friends.

City Council is taking their advice. In an attempt to alleviate the problem, the council approved placing four-way Stop signs at every other intersection and No U-Turn signs at each intersection. They also decided to draw up an ordinance lowering the speed limit from 30 mph to 20 mph. Receiving unfavorable comments from the audience were suggestions to make the street one way going south to north and an ordinance to make it illegal to park along the street starting at an intersection and going 50 feet back down the street.

Councilman Tom Sloan, who worked with a committee drawing up the proposals, said the police force also will be patrolling the area more frequently.

For more than two hours residents along L Street and nearby streets voiced their frustrations in dealing with the teen-agers who line the street with their vehicles and in getting action from the police department to stop vandalism. A group of teen-agers at the back of the chambers had a spokesman to explain their side of the argument. The hearing went a full circle, starting with suggestions by the council and going to arguments from parents asking why something could not be done to get the youths off the streets, to the teens saying they needed a place to go.

Douglas Forshagen of 2200 N. L St. began the parents' arguments, saying he would like to see some action taken by the council. But, he said the problem has existed for some time and he does not believe it will end overnight.

"The problem is not just on L Street," Forshagen said, "but in a whole area which extends to streets on the sides of L."

Calling the police often does not help, Forshagen said. "I'm not sure they (the teen-agers) actually respect the police. It doesn't keep them from coming back an hour later. At 11 or 12 at night they (the teens) are out there drinking beer and littering the neighborhood."

Mayor Ernest Angelo Jr. told the parents if a person is on their property, the police can be called because the person is trespassing. But, the caller must file a complaint and follow through with it.

"Are you and the neighbors prepared to do this, because we need some help?" Angelo questioned.

Forshagen suggested teens caught doing something wrong should be ticketed. "I know the police have been called, and it looks like a YMCA convention. He just gets up there and talks to them. But, nothing stops them (the teens) from coming back." Forshagen said.

While many of the teen-agers do nothing more than stop their car along L Street to visit with friends, acts of vandalism are appearing, according to several residents along L Street and side streets.

"My yard has been semi-mutilated," commented Mike Farris of 1617 W. Pine St. "The problem is parents in the neighborhood have more kids than brains. They give the kids a new 442 (car) and a six-pack of beer and off they (the teens) go. I hate to see July Fourth come this year. Last year they (teen-agers) were shooting off bottle rockets all day. I heard where one roof caught on fire from these rockets."

Several residents said they had been trying to get license numbers of cars whose drivers are seen involved in acts of vandalism, but are finding out that is not helping. According to City Attorney Joe Nuessle, the owner of the car is not responsible for what the driver does.

"You mean if someone drives a pickup across my yard and I get the license number it doesn't do a damn bit of good?" Farris asked.

Not unless it can be proven the driver did the damage, and a case is filed to collect damages, according to Angelo.

Bob Bailey told the council he lives off North L Street on Winfield and "about once a month a car doesn't make the turn and comes across our yard. This is too much testimony to School trustees decide to follow court order

By MARLEEN RAY

Midland schools trustees Tuesday decided to comply with the federal court order forbidding the school district from holding any future elections under the current place system, and agreed to return to the old at-large system.

In addition, the trustees directed schools attorney Charles Tighe to investigate the possibility of asking the federal government for clearance, as required by the 1965 Voting Rights Act, to use the place system anyway.

Board President Johnny Warren called the court order, forcing the school district to go back to the at-large system, "harassment."

Saying that he thinks the place election system is better than the at-large method, Warren said, "I don't see why we can't file to change the (at-large) election system back to the place system," in the future.

Board member Joe Dominey pointed out that all trustees who are members of a minority were elected to the board under the place system or ran unopposed for an unexpired term while the at-large system was in use. He said he thinks the place system is "more democratic."

James Ramsoure, the only black trustee, said he also prefers the place system because he'd rather run against two or three persons for election to the board than against the entire slate of candidates.

With the place election system, persons file for a specific position to the board and are elected to this position by majority vote. Dominey noted that this system makes it easier for incumbents to run for re-election and cuts down on their campaign expenses.

Under the at-large method, candidates are listed on a single slate, no matter how many positions are open to the board with winners determined by plurality vote. Voters cast ballots for the same number of candidates as positions open.

In the court order, the judges determined that the Voting Rights Act applies to all voting procedure changes made by school districts and cities after Nov. 1, 1972, even though Texas did not come under it until 1975.

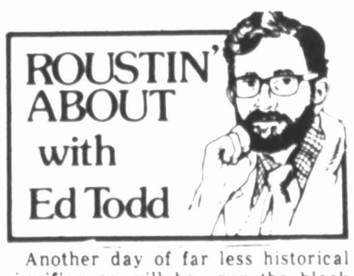

According to the judges' written opinion, since the U.S. Supreme Court has ruled that school districts and cities are covered by the Voting Rights Act, the Midland school district cannot change its election system "without first obtaining 'pre-clearance' from the (government) that such a change does not have the purpose or effect of denying or abridging the right to vote on account of race or color."

The Midland school district switched from the at-large system to the place system in 1973. The U.S. Justice Department has tried almost two years to stop the district from holding elections under the place system, because the Justice Department has contended this system dilutes minority voting strength.

Carver High reunion, 'Juneteenth' loom

Contrary to the sometimes wistful, sometimes nightmare-ish fantasies of some die-hard "rebels," the South likely will not "rise again."

It rose to the occasion, which turned out to be secession and war, in another century and faltered.

It was a war of principles, economics and politics.

The Confederacy rebelled, but the Union overcame.

The peace that followed that tragic War Between the States spelled the decline of The Old South and the freeing of the slaves. It was the so-called beginning of so-called equal rights for the ebony man — the Negro.

In Texas, that great day of Emancipation, which is 113 years into history, is celebrated as "Juneteenth."

On Jan. 1, 1863, "Union" President Abraham Lincoln issued the Emancipation Proclamation. But that mandate had no direct effect on the South, which considered itself impervious to dictates and laws by a "foreign power" with which it was at war.

Today, it seems a tragically poetic twist that the North entered the war primarily to save — to reunite — the nation and not to abolish slavery.

At any rate, the war came to an end at Appomattox on April 9, 1865.

And it was on June 19, 1865, that Gen. Gordon Granger, upon his landing at Galveston to take command of Texas, declared that "all Negroes are free" in accordance with Lincoln's proclamation.

It was a long day a'coming.

Another day of far less historical significance will be upon the black citizenry of Midland this Saturday.

It'll be a day of remembering, sentiment and importance. The event will be the first reunion of graduates and other ex-students of the George Washington Carver High School, which was closed in 1968, when integration, like it or not, or just indifferent, became the "in thing" in Midland.

It's still coming around.

"We're all coming home, because this is where all our roots are . . . our basic academic background," said Barbara Harris, a 1950 Carver graduate and a force behind the reunion.

This once-in-a-decade event will begin with registration at Carver from 6 to 9 p.m. Friday and Saturday morning.

The next morning, Carver exes, up to a 1,000 of 'em and their kin, friends and spouses, are to gather at the old Carver school.

Breakfast will be served in the cafeteria there from 7 to 9 a.m. Saturday, and the barbecue buffet will be open to participants at 1 p.m.

Juneteenth parade begins at 10:30.

Walter Nedd and Bernice Waddell Brown will emcee the general assembly in the Carver Auditorium from 2:30 to 4 p.m.

Singing such numbers as "The Negro National Athem" and the old Carver school song will be the 17-member Voices of Zion, directed by Felicisima Nedd.

The event's big to-do will be the banquet-dance at the Midland Hilton Saturday night. It'll begin at 7:30. Attire will be semi-formal.

Closing the reunion of the "Mighty Carver Hornets" will be a Sunday morning service at 10:30 in the Carver Auditorium.

Theme for the weekend get-together will be "Carver: This Is Your Life."

It'll be much more, too.

Swap with Russians expected

MOSCOW (AP) — Western observers in the Soviet capital expect the Russians to try to trade an arrested American businessman for two Soviet U.N. employees on trial as spies in New Jersey.

"The Soviets have a tradition when their hand is caught in the cookie jar of trying possibly to get something in return," said one diplomat who declined to be identified.

The businessman is Francis J. Crawford, 38, of Mobile, Ala., a representative of International Harvester in Moscow for two years. He was arrested Monday night on smuggling charges.

It was believed the Soviet government would try to swap him for Valdik Enger and Rudolf Chernayev, who went on trial in Newark last week on charges of conspiring to pass U.S. Navy secrets to Moscow. Both pleaded innocent.

One Western diplomat said he thought Crawford might be "an innocent victim" of deteriorating U.S.-Soviet relations, strained over the Kremlin's involvement in Africa, U.S. charges of human rights violations in the Soviet Union and espionage charges from both sides.

Moscow policemen pulled Crawford from his car at a stoplight Monday night as he and his fiancee, a 32-year-old secretary at the U.S. Embassy, were on their way to a diplomatic party.

The fiancee, Virginia Olbrish, got away by claiming diplomatic immunity and alerted the embassy. The embassy protested the behavior of the arresting officers to the Foreign Ministry, and the State Department took up the matter with Soviet Ambassador Anatoly F. Dobrynin in Washington.

Consular officers met late Tuesday with Crawford but refused to tell reporters where he was being held, what condition he was in and what they had learned about the charges against him.

Other informed sources said he was held at Lefortovo Prison.

Defense bid rejected in capital murder case

By LINDA HILL

A Midland man charged with capital murder lost his bid to have the case against him dismissed because of what he claimed was a violation of his right to a speedy trial.

Anthony Dewayne Scott, charged with the Aug. 4, 1977, stabbing death of liquor store clerk Jackie Burleigh during an alleged armed robbery, was seeking to have the charge dismissed, rather than go to trial next week as scheduled.

Pre-trial maneuvering continued today as the defense made its third attempt to challenge the names in the jury wheel from which a special 300-person panel was drawn for Scott's trial.

Testimony by District Clerk Madge Wallis and County Clerk Rosenelle Cherry conflicted about conversations the two women reportedly held concerning the jury wheel.

Mrs. Cherry told the court she talked to Mrs. Wallis between Aug. 1 and Aug. 15, probably on Aug. 5, and asked her "when we were going to fill the jury wheel."

Mrs. Cherry told defense attorney Bill Smith she was referring to a meeting required by law to be held each year between Aug. 1 and Aug. 15 among the sheriff, tax assessor-collector, county clerk and district clerk, or their representatives.

At that meeting, the jury wheel for the coming year is to be "reconstituted."

During the reported August conversation, Mrs. Cherry said, Mrs. Wallis told her "it (the jury wheel) had already been filled."

Mrs. Cherry said she had not discussed the wheel with Mrs. Wallis "this year."

Immediately before Mrs. Cherry's testimony, Mrs. Wallis told the court she had no such conversation with Mrs. Cherry in August.

She said Mrs. Cherry had telephoned her "within the past two months" and asked if the wheel had been changed in August and if she was aware the officials or their representatives were supposed to meet.

Mrs. Wallis also testified she and a county maintenance man reassembled the wheel on Aug. 15.

She said a meeting of the officials named in the Texas civil statute was held to reconstitute the wheel in 1970, the first year Mrs. Wallis was an employee in the clerk's office. "In 1971, we went to the computer (as a

Court holds states may prohibit oil firms from operating stations

WASHINGTON (AP) — States may prohibit oil companies from operating retail gasoline service stations, the Supreme Court ruled 7-1 today.

In a decision that could significantly change the way oil companies do business on a retail level nationwide, the court upheld a Maryland law forbidding oil producers or refiners from operating retail stations.

The decision means the oil companies will have to cease operations of about 250 stations in Maryland within the next year.

Florida, Delware and the District of Columbia have similar laws passed, as Maryland's was, in the wake of the 1973 gasoline shortage.

In view of today's decision, which was written by Justice John Paul Stevens, other states might choose to follow Maryland's lead.

The court also ruled that states may require oil companies to make all retail price reductions within that state on an across-the-board basis.

That provision is included in Maryland's law, and is law in Delaware, California, Rhode Island and the District of Columbia.

The court, with only Justice Harry A. Blackmun dissenting, rejected arguments by nine oil companies that Maryland's law violates federal commerce laws and the Constitution's safeguards for interstate commerce.

Justice Lewis F. Powell Jr. took no part in deciding the case.

Under Maryland law, oil producers and refiners must contract with retailers if they want to sell their products to the consumer; they cannot do so directly. There is nothing in today's decision, however, that prevents oil companies from owning the stations and property.

The Maryland law was challenged by Exxon, Phillips, Shell, Continental, Kayo, Gulf, Ashland, Commonwealth Oil and the Petroleum Marketing Corp.

They charged that the law is designed to cut down on competition.

State officials contended, however, that the law was enacted to prevent oil companies from disciplining independent dealers in Maryland by controlling their supplies during gasoline shortages.

Stevens said the Maryland law was passed as officials responded "to evidence that producers and refiners were favoring company-operated

Study says consumer agency too slow to act

WASHINGTON (AP) — The agency responsible for protecting the public from hazardous products takes so long to act that consumers can be harmed in the meantime, a new government study says.

The report Tuesday by the General Accounting Office said that the Consumer Product Safety Commission:

—Failed to insure that all of some banned hazardous products were either taken off the market or bought back from consumers.

—Took far longer to formulate such corrective actions as recalls than its own regulations allow.

—Made the regulations affecting several products less effective than they might have been, partially out of a desire to soften the burden costly product recalls impose on business.

Commission spokesman Dick Brasie said the criticisms are out of date. "We had problems and we corrected them. This is an old matter," he said.

He said the agency has doubled its compliance staff — the employees charged with carrying out such commission actions as recalls — since the incidents discussed in the report.

The GAO, which has similarly criticized the product safety commission in earlier studies, focused on two situations in the latest report but used the new material along with previous findings in drawing its conclusions.

"The Consumer Product Safety Commission has been slow in identifying hazardous products and alerting the public of their dangers. Recalls have not been successful," the report said.

The two situations detailed in the report are a recall program involving some models of smoke detectors and bans on two types of products containing asbestos.

The smoke detectors, manufactured by BRK Electronics of Aurora, Ill., were found to be a possible fire hazard.

Zone change may spur development

By LANA CUNNINGHAM

An open field bounded by Wadley Avenue, North A Street and Pecos and Dengar streets soon may become another developed business and residential area with changes in zoning approved Tuesday by the Midland City Council.

Greg Pulliam of Don Harvey Realtors explained plans for development include a doctor's clinic, two-story office complex, a restaurant and apartment complex.

Pulliam explained his firm has received several requests for offices away from the downtown area.

Liquid Asset of Albuquerque N. M., is planning to build the bar-restaurant. Pulliam said this will be a two-level eating place with a porch where drinks and food also can be served.

The city council decided to suspend a proposed rate increase by Texas Electric Service Co. for 120 days to allow a study to be made on the increase. Also to be considered is a proposal by Don Kyser for the city of Midland to own the electrical utility.

In a prepared statement for the council, Kyser mentioned the 13 percent increase that became effective seven months ago and the 24.4 percent increase being requested now by TESCO.

If the city owned the utility, it would not have to pay federal income taxes, could borrow money at a lower interest rate than Texas Electric and would be exempt from paying various federal and state taxes on equipment and supplies used in operation.

In asking for the rate increase, Winston Barclay, general manager of TESCO, said air quality control costs are increasing and the company has not been able to earn 13.5 percent return on common equity.

The continuing saga of the water tower located on East Illinois Avenue has been solved. The council accepted a bid for $63,500 from The Midland Reporter-Telegram for the property on which the tower is located and the tower will be taken down. The only other bid was for $48,000.

Architect for the addition to Hogan Golf Course was selected. Kirby Player and Associates of Atlanta, Ga., will be in charge of the additional nine holes approved by the voters in a bond issue in April.

Glen A. Doty of Black and Veatch, consulting engineers of Dallas, gave a report on the status of the sewer treatment plant and recommended the council start enlarging it. The current plant will be at its maximum usage by 1983, he said. The council approved the firm to go ahead with work to file in October for an application to enlarge the plant.

Col. Wilson Banks, director of aviation, was authorized to check various means of financing new buildings at Midland Regional Airport. The Federal Aviation Agency is requesting a new building, and several new hangers need to be built, Banks said. Richard Henderson of Rich-Air explained his firm needs more space for a new office and shop facility.

Banks estimated total cost of construction to be $1.5 to $2 million, but said definite plans about the buildings are needed before seeing what type of funds will be available.

The logo for the airport was approved by the council. They also accepted a bid for installing runway lights and perimeter fencing at Midland Air Park.

Harry H. Hill, vice president of HTB, Inc., of Oklahoma City discussed plans with the council for changing the master plan for the airport. He also received approval to draw up plans and specifications for an addition to the Airport building to accommodate another air carrier.

While the city has received no definite word about another carrier coming into the region, Mayor Ernest Angelo Jr. said he feels the growth of the city is such that the extra room will be needed.

"We're gambling on the speculation of getting another air carrier. But, the signs are positive at the moment that we will get the extra carrier by the end of six to eight months," Angelo said. "If it doesn't come through, I still feel we will need the room for another carrier in the future."

Parking along the east and west sides of the 100 block of North Big Spring Street after 6 p.m. was approved. Tall City Cable TV Company's request for a rate hike of $1 a month was approved. Monthly rates now will be $7.25.

G. Thane Akins was elected council mayor pro tem for 1978-79.

Also approved by the council were a resolution approving the work on Golf Course Road, an ordinance restricting parking along Andrews Highway from Wall Avenue to Holiday Hill Road to allow for seven lanes of traffic, requests for loading zones from Reynolds Brothers and Permian Basin Graduate Center and a waver of curb, gutter and sidewalk requirements along the northwest corner of Midkiff Road and Bankhead Highway.

Denied were a request by Robert J. Lawrence for a permit for the sale of alcoholic beverages in the 500 block of East Nobles and a request by C. P. Barnett for a child care center at 1404 N. A St.

Kennedy on Carter's mind

WASHINGTON (AP) — Although Jimmy Carter's White House staff denies it, the activities of Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., certainly seem to make high administration officials jump.

The White House announced on Tuesday it was sending Vice President Walter F. Mondale to speak to the annual meeting of the U.S. Conference of Mayors in Atlanta next week.

The decision came five days after the big-city mayors, miffed that President Carter declined to appear, had turned to Kennedy as their main speaker.

The senator, who canceled scheduled appearances in Boston that afternoon, will still address the main luncheon of the mayors' conference on June 19. Mondale is to appear the next day.

Meanwhile Tuesday, Kennedy wound up a two-day meeting which he sponsored here for 150 municipal officials from Massachusetts. Eight high administration officials responded to Kennedy's request for guest speakers.

Reunion held

Old, new and former residents of the Valley View community located about five miles southeast of Midland met in the Valley View schoolhouse recently for the community's 9th annual reunion.

The meeting began at 8 p.m. Saturday with a business meeting and election of officers, followed by games and refreshments

Roxie Murphy of College Park, Md., and G.G. Jackson of Boise, Idaho, received awards for traveling the greatest distance.

Bentsen seeks beef bill backing

WASHINGTON (AP) — Both cattle ranchers and America's beef eaters would benfit from Sen. Lloyd Bentsen's beef import bill, says the Texas Democrat.

Bentsen tried on Tuesday to prod the House into action on his beef bill, releasing a Library of Congress report that concluded the bill would provide "some long-term benefits to both cattle producers and consumers."

Bentsen released the report during a meeting on the Senate floor with other senators who oppose the president's recent decision to increase beef import quotas.

Bentsen's bill, which passed the Senate in May, is stalled in the House and has not been referred to committee. The Bentsen bill includes a counter-cyclical feature that would permit imports to increas when domestic production decreases and cut back imports when America's ranchers overproduce.

The current import formula has the reverse effect, points out Bentsen.

"I have introduced legislation to put our policies back on a fair and honest course which is beneficial to both consumers and producers," the senator said. "This legislation easily passed the Senate but is now bottled up in the House by administration opposition."

Bentsen also said the Library of Congress study proves that opponents of his bill "have not done their homework."

Republican John Tower, Texas' senior senator and a cosponsor of the Bentsen bill, blasted the president for increasing meat import quotas saying the decision "will have a detrimental, if not drastic, impact on the prices received by American cattle producers. At the same time the prices paid by American consumers in retail markets will be relieved very little, if at all."

The Library of Congress study estimated that should the Bentsen bill become law, retail beef prices would decline by 2.2 cents per pound between 1978- 84. Retail prices would increase, however, by 2.4 cents from 1985-87.

The study also predicted that ranchers would see cattle prices fall 60 cents over the next seven years before rising 85 cents from 1985-87.

The study drew its 8conclusions from statistics and projections compiled by the U.S. Department of Agriculture.

"Based on the USDA analysis and the general concept of a counter-cyclical formula for imports, it would apear that (the Bentsen bill) would mollify some of the effects of the cattle cycle, providing some longterm benefits to both cattle producers and consumers," the report stated.

The short-term effects would be minimal on retail beef prices or the farm price of cattle, the study concluded.

But the study also noted that due to the "rapidly changing developments in the cattle industry, it is very difficult to make reliable estimates."

Boys State conference ends with installation of officers

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — Texas Boys State concluded a week-long conference Tuesday with installation of officers and a speech from Gov. Dolph Briscoe.

Willie G. Talbert III of Houston was installed as governor of American Legion-sponsored organization in ceremonies in the Texas House chamber.

Talbert's parents are Mr. and Mrs. Willie G. Talbert Jr.

Approximately 920 boys, who will be high school seniors in the fall, attended the gathering. The youths met in the House and Senate chambers and conducted business under rules of order used by the Legislature.

Also present were the governor's wife, Janey, and Speaker Bill Clayton.

Mailey elected

AUSTIN — Midland public schools Superintendent Dr. James Mailey recently was elected to a two-year term on the executive committee of the Texas Association of School Administrators.

The 1,250-member organization includes schools superintendents and other school administrators from across the state. It is an affiliate of the Texas School Administrators Council and the American Association of School Administrators.

Students lose digits in tug-of-war mishap

HARRISBURG, Pa. (AP) — The giant tug-of-war was meant to ease the tedium of final exams for 2,300 young students. But the rope snapped, slicing off fingers and fingertips on four small hands.

A fifth student is in danger of losing her thumb. Some 200 people were injured.

"It sounded like someone banged a piece of plastic on the wall or someone pulled the string on a party cracker," said 14-year-old Shannon Meloy. "I smelled something burning and I thought it was the rope, but I think it could have been hands."

Almost all students at Harrisburg Middle School, comprised of grades seven through nine, had lined up on the school lawn Tuesday for the tug-of-war, which was billed as an attempt to make the Guinness Book of World Records.

The Guinness record book currently has no entry for tugs-of-war.

The students grabbed the 2,000-foot-long braided nylon rope and pulled. It broke about 12 minutes into the contest, the whizzing rope searing through muscle, tendons and bones. Some students near the point of the break had relaxed their hold, but others in the back kept pulling. The rope whippd back through the hands of those who had relaxed, witnesses said.

Two boys, aged 14 and 16, lost their left little fingers. Two others, 13 and 14, had fingertips cut off.

"It could have been the snap or the nylon rope running through their hands at such high speeds that it took the finger right off," said Betty Bogar, public information chief at Polyclinic Medical Center.

"It happened so quickly that I didn't see or hear anything," said 13-year-old Lisa Seay, both hands wrapped in bandages over second-degree burns.

"I just fell to one knee. I looked down at my hands and saw mostly blisters and some blood. My hands were numb."

"It was just a game," said Keith Morton, 14, third in line on his team when the rope snapped. "We just wanted to see how many people could do it."

At least 68 students and faculty were taken to hospitals. All but one were treated and released, according to hospital officials. An additional 150 were treated by the school nurse, mostly for rope burns and assorted bruises.

Marie Lewis, 13, was the lone admission.

Oakley winner

A visitor from Lubbock, Dave Oakley, won the Table Topic at the Tuesday morning meeting of the Pop Up Toastmasters. Bill Larsen was the Toastmaster of the Day.

Best Evaluator was Bill Keaton.

Installation of new officers will be June 20 at 7 p.m. at Bonanza Steakhouse.

stations in the allocation of gasoline and that this would eventually decrease the competitiveness of the retail market."

He said: "Regardless of the ultimate economic efficacy of the statute, we have no hesitancy in concluding that it bears a reasonable relation to the state's legitimate purpose in controlling the gasoline retail market, and we therefore reject (the oil companies') due process claim."

In dissent, Blackmun said the court's majority "fails to condemn impermissible discrimination against interstate commerce in retail gasoline marketing."

His disagreement apparently was based solely on a provision of the Maryland law he said would "protect in-state retail service station dealers from the competition of out-of-state businesses."

"This protectionist discrimination is not justified by any legitimate state interest that cannot be vindicated by more even-handed regulation," Blackmun said.

Syrian troops storm Lebanon

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Syrian troops, under a curtain of tank fire, stormed a village in northeastern Lebanon today in a house-to-house search for suspected assassins of former President Suleiman Franjieh's son, police reported.

In southern Lebanon, meanwhile, U.N. troops and Christian militiamen shared control of a border security strip following Israel's pullout. But the Lebanese government demanded the Christians stay in their barracks until Lebanese army regulars can replace them.

the affluent lifestyle here (in Midland)." He added that he had tried calling several parents after obtaining license numbers of vehicles, but he also was not getting much cooperation.

"It also looks like kids have gone to bottled beer instead of cans," he said. "We have broken beer bottles now in our yard instead of cans to clean up."

Hugh Gilmore who lives on the corner of Neely St. and L St. said he had been trying to sleep in that corner. "We need to slap some excessive fines on these people to slow it down," he suggested to the council.

Several residents detailed acts of vandalism on their property. Mrs. Joe Ellis of 2703 N. L St. told the council she had a $3,000 sprinkler system destroyed, had been sprayed with a fire extinguisher and had a beer can thrown at her.

Adding to that was the time she was walking on her sidewalk "and some kids ran over our curb (in a vehicle) and tried to run over my feet'" Mrs. Ellis said.

Police are encountering difficulty in dealing with the problem, according to testimony from parents and Councilman Gordon Marcum II.

Teen-agers keep police scanners in their cars and know when an officer has been called to their area, residents said.

Janey Thompson of 1503 Cimmaron St. said she was talking with some teen-agers parked in front of her house one night when the call came over the scanner that an officer was coming that way. "Someone on the street had called in and complained," she said, adding that the group broke up immediately.

Marcum rode with an officer one night and concluded that the officers "could not do any good. They (teen-agers) knew exactly where we were."

Mrs. Ellis also told the council that two officers remarked to her they were having a problem downtown (at the police station) because when they do ticket, nothing more is done.

Giving the police more authority may not be what the parents want, said Edward Flores, 16. "I've lived in towns where police took after the kids like they were hardened criminals. I don't think you (parents) would be happy with that."

L Street is a popular place because the teens need some place to go and meet with their friends, according to Steve Cole of 2805 N. L St. "I like to see new girls and the best place in town is on L'" he said. He admitted the youths do not use the two youth centers because the teen-agers can not drink there.

According to an older brother, Jeff Cole, the gathering place for the city youths used to be Dellwood Mall, but that was closed after several fights occurred there. The teens then moved over to L.

Setting up a park, such as Hogan Park, for teens was suggested but a resident, Smith Ray of 1609 Gulf, said he had heard it was not safe at night. "It doesn't seem like L street is either," Angelo answered.

Flores said he did not favor Hogan Park. "I'm afraid of getting shot," he said. But, he suggested the council take a poll of what the city's youths want in a way of a place to go.

The council voted to try the proposals drawn up by the committee. A second phase would include turning off the street lights along L, Sloan said. Judy James of 2606 N. L St. had suggested the council turn the one in front of her house off "because the kids only go there to be seen. If the lights are out, they can't be seen."

Doris Howbert, council member, said she feels the heart of the problem is the responsibility of the parent. "Any time you can get through to the parent that their teen is becoming a public nuisance you will be helping him in the long run."

While the council members came up with no definite way to solve the problem they will be trying the few changes and attempting to find a place where they can move the teens, they said.

Chance for rain again forecast

Weather is getting to be like a broken record: hot and sunny with slight chance of rain.

The weatherman with the National Weather Service at Midland Regional Airport is predicting a 20 percent chance of rain tonight. Warm and humid days will persist, he said.

The low tonight should drop to the upper 60s and the high tomorrow should be in the middle 90s. The record high for June 13 is 103 degrees set in 1949. The record low for today is 56 degrees set in 1947.

Area towns reported warm temperatures and clear skies today.

Heavy thunderstorms roared across sections of the Texas Panhandle Tuesday night, dumping heavy rainfall and golf ball size hail.

National Weather Service forecasters warned that more thunderstorm activity could be expected in Southeast Texas, along upper sections of the Texas gulf coast and in sections of West Texas today.

Heavy rainfall was reported during the night between Plainview and Petersburg and between Amarillo and Plainview.

Midland schools trustees agree to salary increase for principals

By MARLEEN RAY

Due to increasing responsibilities of junior high and freshman school assistant principals, the Midland Independent School District Board of Trustees Tuesday agreed to raise the principals' salaries from 1.08 times the monthly teacher's salary for 11 months to 1.12 times that amount.

In other action, the board awarded $500 merit salary supplements to five teachers under the current merit pay policy. It also decided to extend the term of employment for counselors from 10½ months to 11 months. Board member Ed Runyan voted against the extension.

Schools Superintendent Dr. James Mailey told the board that the extension counselors's needed since the work load is too heavy for only a 10½-month period.

The trustees appointed a 26-member committee, assigned to study secondary school discipline regulations, composed of parents, school trustees, administrators, teachers and representatives from the Teacher Communications Committee and PTA.

Assistant Superintendent Doug Brown said the committee should be ready to make a report to the board in early fall. The committee was established in response to parents' requests to examine disciplinary measures in the schools.

In a report to the trustees, Virgil Jones, tax assessor-collector for the taxing bodies here, told the board that the delinquent property tax roll has increased from 14.58 percent of taxes due to the school district in May 1977 to 17.59 percent in May 1978.

He said this increase, which the other taxing bodies also have experienced, is caused by refusals from businesses, which only are open for a short period of time, to pay their taxes and because of failure of persons to pay taxes on personal property, as opposed to real estate.

Since the school district does not take back taxes on personal property off the tax roll, even when the four-year statute of limitations runs out, Jones said, the delinquent tax roll just "grows and grows."

He said, according to law, the taxing bodies can seize personal property and sell it to pay back taxes, but the school district hasn't done so in the past.

If the school district decides to take such action to reduce the delinquent tax roll, it would have to consult the other three taxing bodies and make a joint decision to seize personal property, he said.

Jones estimated assessed property valuations should increase by $143,743,780 this year. The Board of Equalization, he said, still is hearing appeals from the public on property revaluations, but, he "feels comfortable" with his estimates since he thinks all valuations have been equalized.

Property values outside city limits for the school district, Midland and College District and Midland County Hospital District were re-appraised by the tax assessor-collector's office this year. Last year, property within city limits was revalued.

Jones said some of the higher property valuations outside city limits are due to land in that area which is being held off the market. He said he does not foresee any federal lawsuits coming out of these valuations.

During the meeting, board members approved a change order for the new Midland High School vocational building, rerouting a water line underneath the construction site.

They also agreed to pay $113 out of the building's contingency fund to pay for damage by school employees to an electric line that provided power to Midland High's tennis court lights. They authorized Neuhardt & Babb, Architects, of Midland, who designed the vocational facility, to study methods of alleviating the drainage problem on the west side of the campus near the new building.

Charles Neuhardt of Neuhardt & Babb told the trustees that he thinks the new facility is "45 percent" near completion. He said the construction company, R. B. Snead Construction of Midland, told him it thinks the building will be finished by the second week in October.

In another report, school trustees heard Bill Cormack, coordinator of fine arts and migrant programs for the district, give an account of the fine arts programs and enrollments.

Cormack said enrollment is static in most fine arts programs, except the seventh- and eighth-grade speech and drama programs, which have experienced "tremendous" growth.

He said because of the boundary changes, Midland High's and Lee High School's marching bands now have become the same size, unlike before. He noted that the elementary school music program is "better than ever."

On the other hand, Cormack said a few problem areas do exist in the fine arts program. He said parents of junior high school students have complained about the high cost of putting their children in the marching band program.

Also, he said, it's difficult to keep up with the number of musical instruments each school has since they usually are shared by the schools, depending on their need for them.

Cormack said another problem is the rising costs of art supplies, which are is becoming "extremely hard to bear."

In other business, the school board, following a two-hour executive session to interview applicants, authorized Mailey to "make an offer to an individual" concerning the position of Midland High principal, vacated by Audrey Gill last May.

Business Manager Don Furgeson presented copies of the tentative 1978-79 fiscal year budget to the board for study.

The trustees earlier limited the budget to $24,638,031 when they approved an approximate 9 percent increase in base salaries for teachers.

Bid by defense rejected source of jury wheel names), and a meeting has not been held since then'" she said.

After the conversation she reportedly had with Mrs. Cherry within the past two months, Mrs. Wallis said, she did not bring the problem of not having had the meeting to anyone's attention. "We haven't done this since 1971, so why change it now?" Mrs. Wallis said.

In other testimony today, a deputy in the district clerk's office and a sheriff's deputy both testified their own keys will open both locks on the jury wheel.

Under Texas law, only the district clerk, county clerk, sheriff and county and district judges are supposed to have access to the jury wheel.

The jury panel summoned to appear Monday, the scheduled starting date for Scott's trial, was drawn Friday, after 238th District Court Judge Vann Culp ordered names of jurors who served less than four consecutive days replaced in the wheel.

An earlier jury panel was disqualified.

Mrs. Wallis said today all but 120 of approximately 7,000 names taken out of the wheel since August were replaced before the new panel was drawn. The 120 names omitted were those who had served at least four consecutive days, she said.

The hearing today followed unsucessful efforts by defense attorneys to free Scott because of his alleged failure to get a speedy trial.

After a two-day hearing, which revolved around a motion for a speedy trial reportedly filed in November by Scott and around three allegedly missing witnesses, 238th District Court Judge Vann Culp Tuesday ruled against Scott.

The prosecution had presented testimony from court officials and sheriff's deputies who said they had not seen the motion prior to this spring

In his closing argument Tuesday, defense attorney Bill Smith said it did not matter whether the court thought the alleged motion was 'fact or fiction." Rather, Smith said it is "shocking beyond words" that Scott has been in jail since August without trial, while the state has tried 12 defendants who were out on bond at the time of their trials.

Assistant District Attorney Timothy Ann Sloan, arguing for the prosecution, contended the defense had not met its "burden" of proving Scott had been harmed by the delay or that Scott had actively sought a speedy trial. Further, Ms. Sloan argued, the trying of other serious cases since August was a factor weighing against approval of the defendant's motion for dismissal.

Also during Tuesday's hearing, the prosecution produced the second of three potential witnesses Scott and defense attorney Allen McFall had testified they could not locate.

Charles Stigen, who had been identified by Scott previously as Charlie Heggan, told the court he still lives in Midland. He said he knew a young black man,whom he identified as Scott, but said he did not remember the man's name.

Scott had testified earlier that he was at Stigen's house on the night of the slaying. Stigen said he was at home that night, but did not remember what he was doing.

Stigen also identified the woman Scott had referred to as Stigen's girlfriend. She lives in Midland now with her parents and is a student at Texas Tech University, Stigen said.

Other testimony Tuesday dealt at great length with trial dockets compiled since September and cases tried.

said earlier they believed Crawford would be charged with smuggling currency, punishable by three to 10 years in prison. An International Harvester spokesman in Chicago said his good record indicated he was unlikely to have violated currency regulations.

Crawford was arrested a few hours after the Soviet government newspaper Izvestia reported that Martha D. Peterson, a CIA agent formerly attached to the U.S. Embassy, was expelled last July for spying and furnishing poison to an accomplice who used it to kill "an innocent person who stood in his way."

So far, the United States has not commented on the Peterson case, which Izvestia publicized after 11 months of secrecy because of the Newark trial and the U.S. charges on June 1 that the Soviets bugged the American Embassy in Moscow.

Congress hears wiring hazard

The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — It started with an unusually warm wall outlet that was replaed in 1972, and ended two years later when Rosalind Hersh was awakened early one morning by the smell of smoke.

The guest bedroom was ablaze, the flames already blocking the hallway to another room where the Hershs' daughter lay sleeping. Unable to escape, Mrs. Hersh collapsed.

Firefighters saved her, but her husband and daughter died. The fire was blamed on faulty aluminum wiring.

"Nobody ever told us that aluminum wire was dangerous," she testified last week before the opening session of congressional hearings into the aluminum wire situation. "A time bomb had been built into our house and we didn't know it."

Rep. John E. Moss, D-Calif., told his investigations subcommittee that 1.5 million American homes "may be facing an unnecessary and unreasonable risk" of fires from defective aluminum wiring, yet the aluminum industry is reluctant to publicize the problem.

Twisted wires, charred outlet receptacles and plugs, melted bits of cord and plastic fragments passed from hand to hand among subcommittee members as witnesses described their experiences.

"I didn't know we had aluminum wiring," said Frank Puckett of Dalton, Ga., whose family lost all its possessions in a fire last November that destroyed their 24-unit apartment building. "We feel lucky that we escaped without injury."

Fire inspector Robert J. Kelly, who investigated the $1 million Georgia blaze as a private consultant, said it was probably caused by a failure at a connection between aluminum wire and a wall plug.

"Overheating occurs at loose aluminum wire connections when current passes through the connections," Kelly testified. "This overheating can cause fires. Loose connctions can also cause incidents such as flickering lights, buzzing at switches or sparks coming out of (wall) receptacles."

Electrical circuit breakers provide no warning in case of aluminum wire failure, he continued, because they are designed to warn only of overloading or short circuits. Loose or incomplete aluminum wire connections instead cause tremendous heat and arcing that does not interfere with the flow of current until the wire melts away or there is a fire.

The aluminum industry has consistently held that shoody workmanship by installers is at the root of whatever problems homeowners have had with aluminum wire, and that properly installed aluminum wiring is as safe as any other.

The majority of houses, mobile homes and commercial buildings with aluminum wire were built or rewired between 1966, when copper prices rose sharply, and 1973, when problems with aluminum wire began to receive publicity. The Consumer Product Safety Commission filed suit last October to require 26 aluminum wire producers to inform homeowners in booklets and advertisements that wiring of that era may be hazardous.

The industry has blocked that suit in U.S. District Court in Washington with another suit in another court, the U.S. Court of Appeals, charging that the Consumer Product Safety Commission has no jurisdiction over aluminum wire.

Kaiser Aluminum & Chemical Corp. previously obtained a federal court order that gagged the commission from discussing aluminum wire on grounds that aluminum wiring was not a consumer product. The jurisdictional question must be resolved before the suit against the 26 manufacturers will proceed.

Moss was careful to distinguish between "old technology" aluminum wiring, which he said was unsafe, and "new technology' wiring installed since 1973, which he said was safe. Robert Noonan of the product safety commission, however, went further in his criticism.

The problem, he said, can still be found in houses where aluminum wiring was installed after 1973 and is stamped CO-ALR to indicate that "new technology" was used in those houses. "We don't really have enough data at this time to tell if they are (safe)," he said.,

Background material supplied by Moss explained that chemical reaction between aluminum and oxygen in the atmosphere produces aluminum oxide, which does not conduct electricity. As the oxide forms on the wire, the flow of electricity is blocked and constricted to an ever-narrowing area, which causes heat that in turn speeds the process, eventually cutting off the circuit. The blockage is so narrow, however, that the current may arc across it or break through in spurts.

This, the material indicated, is what causes lights and television screens to flicker and connectors to overheat. In addition, aluminum's physical characteristics tend to loosen connections, with the same result.

The "new technology" installations require special equipment and tools. "Residential wiring, however, is not usually installed by highly trained technicians using special equipment," Moss' information sheet noted.

Homeowners worried about aluminum wiring could give their houses a "quick fix" for $300 to $600, but if all wiring needed replacement the costs could reach $3,000, the statement continued. Replacing all "old technology" wiring systems with "quick fixes" alone could cost the nation as much as $900 million.

S. John Byington, chairman of the commission, told the subcommittee last week that all of the estimated 1.5 million American homes equipped with aluminum wiring systems manufactured between 1965 and 1973 should be checked by an electrician for possible fire hazards.

Byington said that so-called "old technology" aluminum wiring systems "may malfunction at any time and create serious overheating and fires."

Asked what a homeowner with old-technology aluminum wiring should do, Byington replied, "Call an electrician."

A pamphlet called "Do You Have an Electrical System With Aluminum Wiring?" is available free from the Consumer Product Safety Commission, Washington, D.C. 20207, or by calling the commission's toll-free hotline, 800-638-2666.

RR rates adjusted

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — While many utility companies are clamoring for rate increases, Texas railroads have requested and received lower rates for hauling refined sugar.

The Texas Railroad Commission approved the lower rates, which the railroads said were needed to compete with lower truck rates.

The Imperial Sugar Corp., Missouri Pacific Railroad, Southern Pacific Railroad and the Fort Worth and Denver Railroad testified for the rate decrease.

Testimony at a commission hearing showed that rail traffic from the Imperial facility at Sugar Land, Texas, had decreased from 95 percent of all outbound traffic in 1956 to only 8 percent currently.

The decrease allows for reductions which range from 43 percent on short hauls to 19 percent on longer runs.

Trimming budget, defense excepted, no easy trick

WASHINGTON (AP) — Almost in the same breath, former President Gerald Ford criticized his successor the other day for failure to cut substantially the budget deficit and for killing the B-1 superbomber program.

It doesn't require a whole lot of thought to figure out the problem with that one. Spending on the B-1 bomber would cost billions. So what does Ford have in mind?

Ford, like many other critics of budget deficits, also favors increased spending on defense programs. What they really are saying is, cut the rest of the budget but leave defense alone.

And since defense spending will total about $127 billion in 1979, or more than 25 percent of the total budget of about $500 billion, it implies some pretty hefty ax-work on what is left.

Everybody has his sacred cow in the budget, and it is the total of those untouchable items that makes it difficult for President Carter to sharply reduce the deficit as critics such as Ford demand.

There are pressures from mayors to spend more on cities. There are pressures from the elderly and near-elderly to keep Social Security benefits rising with inflation. And there are government workers who feel entitled to pay increases that also keep up with inflation.

Supporters of the CIA have won approval for spending on 1979 spying activities of around $10 billion, although the exact amount is a secret. Neither Republicans nor Democrats favor leaving the unemployed and the inner-city poor to starve.

All this has created a major problem for Carter, who seems as committed to holding down spending and working toward a balanced budget as any president in nearly two decades.

Arthur Burns, now a private citizen, attracted public attention recently by calling on the president to demonstrate his commitment to fighting inflation by accepting a 10 percent cut in presidential pay. But inflation-fighter Burns didn't volunteer to cut his pay during the eight years he was chairman of the Federal Reserve Board.

And did you ever notice what happens when a president tries to close a military base in this country?

No matter how outmoded the base might be, many of the same lawmakers who argue for economizing in government shed crocodile tears on the floors of congress to keep them open for the sake of national defense, the local economy or both.

Carter, Ford and former President Richard M. Nixon each tried to save a couple of hundred million in the budget by stopping aid to school districts where there were large numbers of federal workers, since the workers pay taxes just as any local resident. But each time Congress put the money back.

There just aren't a whole lot of things in the budget the president can cut. Between 75 percent and 80 percent of the budget is considered beyond the president's control in any one year.

Congressionally mandated Social Security expenditures of $108 billion in fiscal 1979 are a prime example, and that's 22 percent of the budget. Interest on the public debt of $55 billion is another.

Ironically some of the defense spending is in the part of the budget that technically is controllable.

Carter has decided he wants to reduce the fiscal 1979 budget deficit by another $3 billion to $5 billion to reduce it below $50 billion, but his budget people say the only way may be to further trim his proposed tax cut because it is too late to change anything else. The fiscal year begins on Oct. 1.

The fiscal 1979 budget, the first of his presidency, provided for an increase of just 2 percent in real spending over 1978, after discounting for inflation, which isn't much.

It also is a smaller increase in real terms than for any other budget in recent times, including the two Ford budgets.

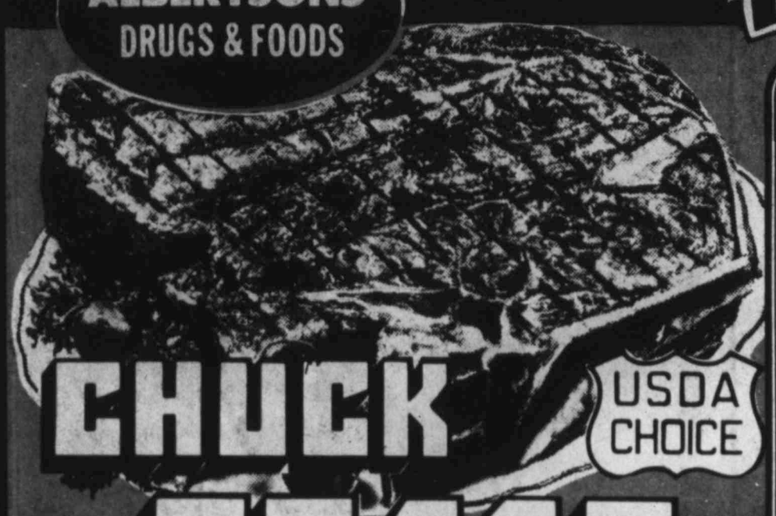

National health insurance, potentially very expensive, is being pushed onto the back burner, and Carter's proposed welfare reform program is being trimmed because of its potential cost.

U.S. shows backbone!

The disillusionment, timidity and isolationism which have all but paralyzed American foreign policy in the bitter aftermath of the war in Vietnam seem to be coming to an end.

The Carter administration, aroused from its somnolence by Soviet-Cuban aggression in Africa, is demonstrating an unexpected toughness.

The chief spokesman for Washington's new spirit in foreign affairs, it is interesting to note, is National Security Adviser Zbigniew Brzezinski — not Secretary of State Cyrus Vance.

In a nationally televised interview May 28, Brzezinski denounced the Soviet Union in specific terms for: penetrating and encircling the Middle East, advancing in Africa, threatening Western Europe and China with a massive concentration of military might, penetrating the Indian Ocean and waging a vitriolic worldwide campaign against the United States.

Much more impressive to the Soviets than his harsh words was Brzezinski's deed last month in cementing closer ties to mainland China during a visit to Peking. Even the suggestion of a Sino-American alliance chills Moscow to the bone.

Secretary Vance recently announced plans for this country to join with European allies in talks about coordinating a Western response to future threats to African stability.

In the most pointed warning he has yet voiced to the Soviet Union, President Carter assured the NATO summit conference in Washington on May 31 that the United States would go to war with "all the forces necessary" to defend Europe, just as though America itself had come under attack or military intervention.

He can give the go-ahead for developing the neutron weapon. He can, as Senate Majority Leader Robert Byrd suggested recently, recall the U.S. envoy to Havana. He can choke off U.S. experts of electronic and machine goods to the Soviet Union. He can tighten the pipelines supplying wheat and other foodstuffs. He can block scientific exchanges between this country and the Soviet Union. He can give more open support to Soviet dissidents. And, finally, he can actively seek repeal of congressional restraints on foreign policy.

All this he can do to good effect, if he chooses. And it is time to make some positive choices.

President Carter's display of spine does not usher in a new Cold War as has been suggested.

The basic conflict has been there all along because of the unchanging appetite of the Soviet Union for expanded world power.

The President has altered nothing. What he may do is to quarantine aggression before it spreads too far to be confined.

The Soviets and the Cubans have been chuckling right along for more than a year now as Mr. Carter and his boys seemingly bent over backwards to give the aggressors every advantage possible. It now is time to show some backbone.

'Smashing success'

From the standpoint of the Internal Revenue Service, tax forms initiated for the 1977 tax year were a "smashing success," the glowing tribute attributed to a department spokesman.

And the 58 percent reduction in taxpayer errors claimed by IRS justifies the self-praise. Error rates were slashed from 11.8 percent on the short form to 4.9 percent and from 8.5 percent on the long form to 5.7 percent.

But the further claim accompanying introduction of the revamped forms that a total of 70 million hours of paperwork would be saved must remain a matter of speculation. The elimination of much of the mathematical process and the continuity of calculations from line to line did simplify the computation task and must be assumed responsible for the reductions in serious mistakes.

Confirmation of the IRS predictions of significant simplifications after several attempts that proved less than helpful is encouraging.

It seems safe to assume, however, that even the streamlined forms failed to erase the pain from the annual tax-computing chore.

ART BUCHWALD

'Knock, Knock;' 'Who's there?' 'Supreme Court'

Art Buchwald

WASHINGTON — "Knock, knock."

"Who's there?"

"The police."

"The police who?"

"The police with a warrant to go through your files and notes and photos to see if you have any evidence that might help us catch a criminal."

"I don't believe it."

"Oh, you don't, huh? Well, just read the Supreme Court ruling written by Justice Byron White in a 5 to 3 decision. It says you newspaper people have no more protection than anyone else."

"What are you looking for?"

"A little of this, a little of that. You never know what you can find in a newspaper office."

"But if you can go through our files and notes, nobody will be willing to blow the whistle on crooked politicians, waste in government and violations of the Constitution."

"That's right. So open the door before we break it down."

"Wait. It goes deeper than that. Many of our sources are willing to talk to us about crimes that have been committed. If they realize their identities can be revealed, they'll clam up, and then you people will never be able to arrest the guilty parties."

"Maybe so. But you guys have been getting a free ride on the first amendment for too long. This will stop you meddling in the government's business, once and for all."

"What are you throwing all those photos on the floor for?"

"We want to see if you have any pictures of cops beating up demonstrators."

"Why?"

"Because we want the pictures of the demonstrators. A lot of them got away when we were beating up the ones who didn't."

"But people are allowed to demonstrate. It's in the Constitution."

"Tell that to the Supreme Court. After we get through these photos we want every reporter to turn over his notebook. We want to know who he or she talked to and when."

"But that's a fishing expedition. Tell us what you're looking for."

"We must know who told you people that the judge was taking bribes from the mob."

"What judge?"

"The judge who issued this warrant, dummy. Once we fine the guy who was singing he'll be held in contempt of court."

"But that judge is part of the political machine in this town."

"That's right, and we want to see everything you have on the machine. We want names of people who have been trying to get the machine, and addresses, too."

"What else do you want?"

"You know the bridge that collapsed last week? Somebody told your paper that the contractor had put in cheap cement which made it collapse."

"You want the name of the contractor?"

"No, we want the name of the guy who ratted on the company that built the bridge."

"Why don't you find out for yourselves?"

"We don't have to, when we can come here."

"Knock, knock."

"Who's there?"

"The FBI."

"What do you guys want?"

"What have you got?"

WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND

Governments foment terrorism

By JACK ANDERSON

WASHINGTON — U.S. analysts are convinced that at least five Latin American strongarm governments are fomenting terrorist activities inside their own borders.

The governments of Argentina, Chile, El Salvador, Guatemala and Uruguay, officials firmly believe, are conniving sub rosa with terror squads to commit bombings, kidnappings and other depredations.

These outrages are then blamed on left-wing groups, which ostensibly are threatening the established governments. The leaders cite the staged bloodlettings as the reason they must use strongarm tactics to suppress the liberties of their peoples in violation of President Carter's human rights crusade, thus escaping a cutoff of foreign aid.

There is less evidence that some African and Asian governments may also be using the same ploy to justify their repressive regimes and hoodwink Uncle Sam into continuing a flow of U.S. dollars.

In all of the five Latin American countries, particularly Argentina, murderous pro-government marauding terrorists reportedly are operating under regimes which sanctimoniously disclaim their violence.

Despite the disavowals, there is reason to believe that notorious, paramilitary "Death Sqauds" in Argentina, for example, have been covertly encouraged by government leaders for years to eliminate opposing left-wingers, liberals and other troublesome critics.

Further, the U.S. analysts feel that the military leadership in Argentina has in some cases arranged for Death Squad hitmen to stage terrorist acts which are then fraudulently blamed on the left-wing militants.

The same cynical manipulation is believed to be going on in Central America where right wing political squads known as "Mano Blanca" (White Hand) are perpetrating their crimes, with a wink and a nod from the tinpot dictators.

This callous flummery has been precipitated, ironically, by the human rights reports which Congress now requires from the State Department on the 105 countries receiving foreign aid or buying U.S. weapons.

The second annual report submitted earlier this year was less than forthright. But even so, the limited findings were glaring enough to bring a brief curtailment of aid to Nicaragua and to block increased assistance to the Philippines.

Congress is expected to take an even more searching look for human rights violations when the next report comes due next February. With this in prospect, the suspected dictators are frantically casting about for ways to persuade Carter's human rights authorities, embassy personnel and intelligence agencies that the denial of civil liberties and use of harsh force are a necessity to deal with terrorism.

RUNAWAY CHILDREN: From Huck Finn to the Flower Children, America has romanticized its runaway children. This year runaways are the subject of a hit Broadway play and a television series. At the same time, congressional sources attest to a growing physical, emotional and sexual abuse of the nation's one million runaways.

What is worse, neither the federal nor most state governments seem to care much. Most states lack specific laws protecting runaways or providing for their care. The states that deal with the problem at all usually treat them like criminals, dumping them in jail-like institutions or shipping them home.

Yet many runaways are escaping a family life full of violence or neglect. Returning them home would be the worst alternative.

Our reporter Jonathan Mandell surveyed independent runaway facilities throughout the country to determine whether the local laws are improving. Although there have been some reforms, the benevolent statutes are often little more than words on paper. And some laws actually wind up doing more harm than good.

Youth workers in San Diego, Calif., explained that runaway children can no longer be incarcerated in juvenile detention centers. The alternative has been to place runaways, though perfectly normal, in mental hospitals for months while they await placement in foster homes.

A counselor at a Minneapolis, Minn., runaway shelter complained bitterly that a new state law lowers the age of sexual consent to 16. She told of a young girl, just turned 16, who was lured into a sexual relationship with an older woman. The girl was too young to realize that the older woman was simply exploiting her.

Most localities don't allow runaways to attend school. We were told of runaways who had settled into schools where they were enjoying their studies and making progress. Yet when they were exposed as runaways, the authorities arbitrarily expelled them. A well-adjusted student in Austin, Texas, was locked up in a juvenile jail.

There is no average runaway; their reasons for leaving home are as diverse as are their economic, social and racial backgrounds. But once on the streets, the runaways' needs are universal and immediate: food, a place to sleep, a person to talk to.

Yet from state to state, the callous processing of runaways by the police and courts is often misguided and mindless.

NICK THIMMESCH

Griffin Bell's compassion for John Mitchell cited

Nick Thimmesch

WASHINGTON — There was no better soldier in the Watergate tragedy than crusty John N. Mitchell, a man hated by those who don't know him, and admired by those who do. He does his time in the federal slammer at Maxwell Air Force Base, without carping about his fellow transgressors in Watergate. He limps about in a body ravaged by two major operations, and he's lucky he survived them.

Now comes Atty. Gen. Griffin Bell to say that if he had been judging, he would have put Mitchell on probation for his offenses, and remarking that Mitchell has "suffered a great deal." In a dialogue with ABC-TV's Barbara Walters last week, Bell, who was a U.S. judge for 15 years, said: "We hold federal officials to high standards. John N. Mitchell was a first offender, as were most people in Watergate. Now, if they rob a bank, they most likely would have been given probation . . . (as) non-descript people . . ."

Did Bell feel sorry for Mitchell? "I do, yes," the attorney general said, perhaps indicating a different political climate these days. "I think he suffered a great deal. He's been disbarred. He is financially — financially, he's broke. His wife's gone. He's got a teen-age daughter that he ought to be able to spend some time with. I think he suffered a great deal for what he did."

And then Bell said that he "would have considered giving him probation. I would have seriously considered it. Not having done that, I would have had him serve 30 days or 60 days. That's enough . . ."

Bell is blunt in speech, and will no doubt catch hell for these measured, compassionate remarks. After hearing John Ehrlichman complain bitterly about Nixon and the CIA, and H.R. (Bob) Haldeman do much the same, and Nixon himself piously intone his concern for these powerful members of his court, and, indeed, hearing the whole gang try to put the blame on the other guy — well, Mitchell's silence and fortitude are appreciated.

After many months of suffering excrutiating pain in his right hip, Mitchell was told last winter that he needed corrective surgery. Upon examination, it was discovered that he had an aneurism — a ballooning of an artery — in his abdomen which required emergency surgery.

According to his surgeon, if the aneurism hadn't been discovered, Mitchell might have died in a matter of months, for it proved to be six inches long, and extended nearly to the spine. Mitchell's insides were literally lifted out of his body in the difficult five-hour operation so surgeons could remove the aneurism and replace part of the aorta with a plastic sheath.

Between this ordeal and the hip surgery much followed 10 weeks later, Mitchell, quite pale and thin, testified before a congressional committee on a CIA report that South Korea funneled $400,000 to the Democratic Party in 1968. He spent a good deal of time preparing for this testimony and also for questioning by Justice Department lawyers, and Bell respected him for that.

It's not surprising that Bell saw to it that Mitchell's medical furloughs were extended at a time when Mitchell's health was downright poor. One night, during his recovery period after the hip operation, Mitchell experienced intense pain, and when doctors arrived, they learned he was suffering severe internal bleeding.

He re-entered prison six weeks after that surgery, and went back to his clerk's job. Mitchell also spends a fair amount of time providing counsel of a legal nature to fellow prisoners. He sleeps in a dormitory with 40 other inmates, and, by all accounts, is well like for his good humor.

His original sentence of 2½ to eight years was reduced last year by Judge John Sirica to 1-to-4 years. This makes Mitchell eligible for parole the 22nd of this month, but it's likely he'll be held after that because the Southeast Parole Commission won't hear his case until July 5th.

Anyway, the man is broke, and owes an estimated $500,000 in legal fees. His daughter, Martha, 17, was just graduated with honors from the Convent of the Sacred Heart School at Greenwich, Conn., where she edited the school paper. She will enter Georgetown University this fall.

No one in Watergate showed a more indomitable spirit than Mitchell. "I can face jail," he told a friend during a goodbye period. "I spent 26 months on a Pacific Island in World War II, and got shot at besides. But I don't want any of that hearts and flowers stuff."

It is not an excuse, nor even small consolation, to conclude that whatever Mitchell did, it was done by others in high public office in previous administrations. Only the "others" were never prosecuted or jailed. It was the intensely political climate, combined with a sense of public outrage over Watergate, which helped make Mitchell the first attorney general in our history to enter prison.

But he has taken his punishment well. A person quite dear to him observes: "John is like the boxer who is taking a beating, but comes back after each round and tells his second that his opponent hasn't landed a glove on him. After what John has been through, I feel like that second who finally told his fighter, 'If he's not hitting you, you better keep your eye on the referee because somebody sure is slugging you.'"

Baptist eyeing world role

ATLANTA (AP) — With antihomosexual crusader Anita Bryant a prospect for high office and President Carter scheduled to appear, Southern Baptists eyed a vast evangelizing goal at the start of their annual convention.

Citing the objective of bringing the gospel of Jesus to every person on Earth by the year 2000, their president, the Rev. Jimmy Allen of San Antonio, Texas, said there are signs of a mighty breakthrough of faith.

"There is a very real possibility that we are at the edge of the greatest explosion of Christian expansion in the history of Christianity," he said in his presidential address Monday.

The ambitious aim of the denomination, once a regional body but now spread nationwide as the country's biggest, most thriving Protestant denomination, is called "bold mission thrust."

Calls for carrying it out punctuated the start of the national gathering today.

"Never have there been so many trumpet sounds of advance," said the Rev. Grady Cothen of Nashville, Tenn., president of the Sunday school board of the 13 million-member denomination.

Singer Bryant, a one-time Oklahoma beauty queen, held the spotlight in preliminary sessions, and jabbed at her fellow Southern Baptist, President Carter, at a news conference.

"I think the majority of Americans are very perplexed as to why on a very basic moral issue the president has not come out more strongly," she said.

Quick Prop 13 ruling urged

The Los Angeles Times

SAN FRANCISCO — California Attorney General Evelle J. Younger urged the state Supreme Court Monday not to delay the implementation of Proposition 13 but to move swiftly to decide the measure's constitutionality before its July 1 effective date.

A delay, Younger said in a nine-page petition filed with the court, would be "most inappropriate" and could have "precisely the same disruptive effects as leaving the matter to the lower courts."

Five suits attacking Proposition 13 by public employees, school and local government groups have been filed with the Supreme Court since the measure won overwhelming voter approval at the polls last Tuesday.

But the court has not said yet whether it will bypass normal legal channels and assume original jurisdiction. That decision could come Wednesday when the seven-member panel holds its regular weekly petition review conference.

The Los Angeles Times has learned, however, that the attorney general's office was asked by the court late Monday to file a "discussion on the merits" of the Proposition 13 case by Thursday, a good indication of the court's intention to take up the matter immediately.

Younger acted Monday in his capacity as the state's chief legal officer and as attorney for state and local officials named as defendants in the five suits.

He said that not only should the court assume jurisdiction but should consolidate all five suits because they raise "basically a common body of questions."

It would require extraordinardy speed for the court to resolve the constitutional objects to Proposition 13 in just the 18 days left before it is due to become a part of the California Constitution.

However, Assistant Attorney General John J. Klee Jr., who actually prepared the petition for Younger, laid out a suggested timetable under which he said a decision could be produced "as close to July 1 as possible."

Under Klee's schedule, state and local officials who are defendants in the five suits would have until next Tuesday to file arguments in defense of Proposition 13, also known as the Jarvis-Gann property tax-limitation initiative.

The court then would set the cases for hearing the week of June 26.

Because the "issue will be squarely before the court" by then, Klee recommends that there be no time-consuming oral arguments by either side.

Essentially, the five suits on file against the measure contend it is vague, ambigious and incomplete and that it is an illegal revision of the state Constitution. Two of them ask that state and local officials be prohibited from implementing it pending a court decision.

Carter delay causes concern

By JOHN F. BERRY
The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — The five-year term of one of the governing quintet that sets policy at the Securities and Exchange Commission expired June 5, and the delay by the White House in filling this key post already is causing concern on Capitol Hill and at the comission — and raising hopes on Wall Street.

Leaders of the securities industry have told the White House they want President Carter to nominate a stockbroker, or at least an industry representative, to fill the vacancy. On Capitol Hill and at the SEC, this prospect is viewed as a serious threat to the delicate balance of the comission. Moreover, there is serious concern over the introduction of politics into an agency that, in its day-to-day operations, at least, has prided itself as being above all that.

But what most troubles this group is that the administration simply has not reappointed the incumbent, John Evans, for another five-year term. Known to some staffers as "the conscience of the comission," Evans, 46, is almost universally admired within the SEC.

However, Evans has pushed for the early establishment of a national market system, which, when finally in operation, will give the regional exchanges a share of the business once traded exclusively on the New York Stock Exchange. Though an open securities market was mandated by Congress, Evans' outspoken endorsement has earned him enemies on Wall Street.

Evans, who has continued in his post while he awaits a White House decision, refuses to be interviewed. "Maybe I should be selling myself," he said, "but I can't do that."

Irving Pollack, a fellow commissioner, believes there should be no question about reappointing Evans. "He's a man of impeccable character and he is equally bright. If the government is to succeed, it needs men like him," said Pollack.

Another SEC official, who asked not to be identified, voiced anger at what he viewed as cruel and cavalier handling of Evans' career by the White House. "They're giving him the L. Patrick Gray treatment — letting him twist slowly in the wind," he said.

The chief spokesman for the Wall Street interests is Robert H.B. Baldwin, the managing partner of Morgan Stanley & Co. in New York who is also chairman of the Securities Industry Association, the main trade group for brokers and investment bankers. "It's no secret that Mr. Evans has disagreed with our point of view for a long period of time," Baldwin said in a telephone interview.

Balwdin said that the SIA is satisfied with the two SEC appoitments made by Carter since he took office. Last March, after a long delay, Carter appointed Harold Williams, dean of the UCLA graduate school of management, as chairman. Then, in August, the president appointed Roberta Karmel, a New York securities attorney, a commissioner.

Baldwin said the White House has requested suggestions for a successor "in case Mr. Evans is not reappointed."

A leading candidate seems to be John Turner, a former Dallas stockbroker who Baldwin said is "kind of a professional director" serving on the boards of several corporations. "I think John Turner would be an excellent choice," said Baldwin, who added that several other persons also are under consideration.

Another candidate is a Dayton, Ohio, attorney named John Sealy, who formerly was secretary of Mead Paper Co. and is currently outside counsel to the company. Sealy reportedly has been supported by Ohio's Democratic senators, John Glenn and Howard Metzenbaum. A Senate source reports that Carter's old Atlanta friend and adviser, Charles Kirbo, has written the president a letter on Sealy's behalf.

Several powerful representatives and senators have written letters to Carter endorsing Evans' reappointment, according to a congressional aide. He says they include Senate Banking Committee Chairman William Proxmire, D-Wis., Sens. Edward Brooke, R-Mass., and Sen. John Sparkman, D-Ala., both senior members of the banking committee, and Reps. John Moss, D-Calif., and Bob Eckhardt, D-Tex., ranking members of committees that oversee SEC operations.

Navy facing killer sub gap

By GEORGE C. WILSON
The Washington Post

WASHINGTON—Worries about a s econd submarine gap opening up, this one killer subs rather than missile boats, has promoted the sharpest senate challenge yet to Navy undersea warfare plans.

The Senate Armed Services Committee is demanding that the Navy is going to price itself out of new missile and killer subs the way the Air Force priced itself out of its new B1 bomber.

The committee, which the Navy cannot safely ignore, followed up its warnings with a specific request to consider novel ideas for submarines, including non-nuclear power plants.

Congressional and Navy sources said the Senate never previously has gone so far in challenging the submarine service generally and, by implication, Adm. H.G. Rickover, its iron-handed director of nuclear propulsion.

Adm. James L. Holloway III, chief of Naval operations, while insisting he could see no alternative to Trident, acknowledged in testimony just released by the committee that the Navy indeed faces a gap in submarine missiles because the existing Polaris-Poseidon fleet will wear out before enough Tridents are built to take their places.

Under the terms of the previously negotiated strategic arms limitation treaty, Holloway said in a Senate testimony released last week, "we will be below the number of sea-based missile tubes that would be appropriate under the overall level."

In contrast to the 656 submarine missile tubes available today from the fleet of 41 Polaris and Poseidon subs, the Navy estimates it will drop to 312 submarine missile launchers in 1986 unless ways are found to keep Poseidon subs on duty longer than their scheduled 20 years.

"We are looking very hard at what we can do to extend the service life of Poseidon," Holloway said. "We are convinced the hull is sound. We have got reservations regarding the propulsion plant. Initially, we didn't plan to operate those nuclear reactors and supporting systems for more than 20 years..."

Sen. E.J. (Jake) Garn, R-Utah, after noting that the B1 bomber had priced itself out of existence, asked Holloway: "Are we going to price ourselves out of the market in Trident?" The first Trident now under construction in Groton, Conn., is five feet longer than the Washington Monument is high and is expected to cost about $1.5 billion, counting 24 missiles.

"I don't see any alternative to the Trident submarine and Trident I missile," Holloway replied. But the full Senate Armed Services Committee, in rewriting President Carter's Fiscal 1979 defense program, took a contrary view.

The committee added $16 million to the president's budget so the Navy could "investigate the feasibility of replacing some of the Polaris-Poseidon" submarines with a missile sub "which would have a lower initial acquisition cost than the Trident."

Swinging its guns to the Navy's attack submarine program — the 688 class of killer subs that General Dynamics recently threatened to stop building until back bills were paid — the committee said economies are needed here, too, to avoid a gap.

"If the submarine force level is to be maintained," the committee lectured theNavy, "it would appear necessary to adopt a 'high-low' mix approach to the attack submarine force in which SSN-688 class submarines are complemented in some missions by less capable, less expensive submarines." The Navy estimates each of its planned 37 attack subs in the 688 class will cost $257.6 million.

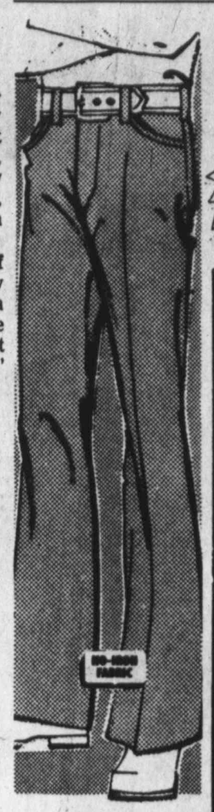

"Therefore," said the committee in its report, "the committee requests the Navy, in cooperation with the Office of Secretary of Defense, to prepare and submit to the Congress no later than Feb. 1, 1979 a comprehensive study and evaluation of all options and alternatives for maintaining an attack submarine force level of not less than 90 submarines.

"This study," the committee directed, "shall include evaluations of lower cost, lower capability nuclear propelled submarines and the use of non-nuclear submarines for some missions, in combination with submarines of SSN-688 class."

Although this might sound to outsiders like just another logical request of a Congressional committee, Navy critics of Adm. H. G. Rickover jubilantly greeted the Senate instructions as a major breakthrough. Finally, they said, the Navy will be forced to look at alternatives to wrapping submarines around Rickover's progressively large nuclear power plants.

One undersea warfare specialist said: "With Holloway retiring and Congress demanding at least a look at non-nuclear power for subs, it's a whole new ball game."

Young father's vigil at hospital continues

AMARILLO, Texas (AP) — At 21, Ricky Goforth has a wife who may never again call his name, an infant daughter living 50 miles away with her grandparents and $24,000 in mostly unpaid hospital bills.

Goforth's 18-year-old wife Laurie was hospitalized Dec. 18 after she suffered a heart attack and made medical history Jan. 8 when she gave birth while in a coma.

The baby, Susan, is 5 months old now. Her maternal grandmother, Mrs. A. L. Butcher, said pediatricians have found the brown-haired, blue-eyed baby happy and normal in every way.

Doctors say Mrs. Goforth has never recognized Susan as her daughter and probably never will.

"Each day, I show Susan pictures of Laurie, but she's too little to realize what's happened yet," Mrs. Butcher said through tears. "I'm the only mother she's ever known."

Since Laurie was hospitalized, Goforth has quit his job as an apprentice machinist and found work in this Panhandle city, 50 miles from their home in Borger. A small apartment near Northwest Texas Hospital is now his home during the cruel vigil. "Late at night when I think about Laurie, I wonder if she's ever going to come out of her coma, and when," he said softly. "I'm not bitter about what happened to her. It could happen to anybody."

Benefit dances and rodeos in Borger have raised about $2,000 toward the Goforths' expenses. The money is sorely needed since an insurance policy taken out five days before Mrs. Goforth's heart attack that brought on the coma was canceled.

"There is no way Ricky can pay for everything," said Mrs. Butcher, "not unless he works until he's about 75. We went to Social Security and they sent one $50 check, but that was all. They stopped because they said the hospital was state-county assisted. Medicaid did the same thing."

Laurie has been moved to a custodial care ward at the hospital. She shares a room with two other comatose patients. Dr. Louis Finney, a neurosurgeon, said there is almost no hope she will ever escape her dream-like state.

"I've never sent them a bill," said Finney. "This is just one of those public service things you do when it's necessary. If the hospital bill gets paid and there's a little left over, then that's OK."

Goforth visits his wife almost daily. Her eyes follow him when he enters the room, but doctors say it's just a reaction to the light change. Goforth is convinced she recognizes him.

Believing it helps.

"I keep telling myself she's going to get better," he said. "She's got to. I hope for it. I pray for it."

Abortion battle looms

WASHINGTON (AP) — Congressmen are predicting a new House-Senate battle over Medicaid abortion payments as the House has again voted for tighter restrictions on the program.

Sen. Edward Brooke, chief Senate proponent of a more liberal abortion policy during a six-month debate on the issue last year, has already served notice that he will oppose the language adopted by the House on Tuesday.

"There is no question that I would oppose this inhumane and unrealistic discrimination as strongly as I did last year," the Massachusetts Republican said in a statement.

"And, I am confident that the overwhelming majority of my colleagues in the Senate would once again join me in refusing to accept such discriminatory legislation — no matter how long or how hard the fight would be."

Brooke is the ranking Republican on the Senate Appropriations subcommittee which handles the budgets of the departments of Labor and Health, Education and Welfare.

The restrictive House language was adopted as it set up spending targets for Labor and HEW during the coming 1979 fiscal year. It would permit Medicaid abortion payments by HEW only when a woman's life is in danger, a provision that was the law of the land until December when the House and Senate agreed to loosen the restrictions slightly.

The House rejected an opportunity Tuesday to extend the life of that House-Senate compromise which expires Sept. 30. It added two additional circumstances under which abortion payments would be made. A woman could receive payments if the pregnancy resulted from rape or incest which was reported to authorities; or when two physicians said she would suffer severe and long-lasting physical health damage.

By a vote of 212-198 House members refused to adopt the compromise language and stuck with the more restrictive version which had been written into the bill.

Neither the time pressures representatives are feeling in this election year nor the fact that the Senate is certain to reject the language moved House members from their insistence on the restrictions.

AN UNMANNED BULLDOZER, believed to have been started by a fired employee, crashed through the parking lot of Tex-Trude Inc., a plastics firm in East Houston, early Tuesday. It flattened or severely damaged five cars before it struck a parked boxcar and halted. V. L. Bowers, plant supervisor, inspects one of the damaged cars. (AP Laserphoto)

Man wins bank suit

NEW YORK (AP) — Chalk one up for the little guy.

A Long Island divorce lawyer took the nation's second largest commercial bank to court and won the first round. Not only for himself, but for several hundred thousand other people as well.

"It's proof the consumer does have rights. It tells the banks they can't push the little guy around," said Richard Ostor of Garden City, N.Y., discussing his victory.

That victory came Monday when a judge ruled that Citibank had to refund 50-cent-a month service fees it had imposed for 20 months on its Master Charge customers who paid their bills promptly and, therefore, did not incur finance charges.

Ostor specializes in divorce. "I very rarely get involved in public-interest cases," he said Tuesday.

In April 1976, however, Citibank announced the 50-cent fee. "I was annoyed," Ostor recalled. "I was very annoyed. I thought their action was completely illegal. I wanted to make a stand."

U.S. silent on spy-murder charge

By SETH MYDANS

MOSCOW (AP) — The United States has made no reply so far to a Soviet charge of spying and complicity in murder against a woman CIA agent who for two years was on the staff of the American Embassy in Moscow.

The Soviet government newspaper Izvestia said Martha D. Peterson, a Vietnam war widow who was the embassy's third secretary, was expelled last July for espionage and that she allegedly supplied poison to an accomplice who used it to kill "an innocent person who stood in his way."

The accomplice was not identified, although presumably he was a local Russian. But Izvestia said "also implicated in this espionage" was Robert Fulton, the first secretary of the embassy's political section from mid-1975 to mid-1977, and two visitors from Washington in 1975, S. Karpovich and J. Gruener.

Neither the embassy nor the State Department had any comment, but Western sources in Moscow said Miss Peterson was not declared persona non grata until after her departure. Sources in Washington who asked not to be identified said she was a CIA employee who had been working in a cover job in the embassy's consular section.

Izvestia said the charges against Miss Peterson had been kept quiet at the request of the United States. It said they were being made public now because the U.S. government on June 1 made public its charge that the Soviet government bugged the U.S. Embassy and because of the espionage trial in New Jersey of two Soviet employees of the United Nations.

The government paper gave this account of Miss Peterson's arrest:

On the evening of last July 15, she parked her car in a poorly lit place in Moscow, changed her dress and took a series of buses to a bridge over the Moscow River, where she put "an ordinary-looking stone" into an archway.

She was detained there, the "stone" was opened, and it "proved to be a cache containing cameras, gold, money and instructions, as well as ampules with a poison.

"The Soviet counter-intelligence service established beyond a doubt that the poisons taken from the cache had been sent to Moscow by the Central Intelligence Agency and not for the the first time.

Committee studies use of automatic weapons

OKLAHOMA CITY (AP) — George Stratton, who will become public safety commissioner on July 1, says a Highway Patrol committee is studying recommendations for automatic weapons for state troopers.

Stratton also said Monday there will be an increase in the annual weapons training for troopers.

His disclosures came in the wake of criticism this past weekend of the patrol's operations by Ealmer Klippel of Chickasha, outgoing president of the Oklahoma Troopers Association.

Stratton said the facts did not support Klippel's suggestions that the deaths of three troopers in a shootout last month were partly the result of a lack of training, organization and firepower within the patrol.

"Some emotional statements were made that were not based on fact. There is no proof of those (allegations) that I can see," said Stratton, who will become acting commissioner when Roger Webb assumes his duties as president of Northeastern State University.

Stratton declined further comment on Klippel's charges.

Another patrol spokesman had previously denied Klippel's charges that undertrained and underequipped troopers were used in the Bryan County manhunt for escapees Michael Lancester and Claude Eugene Dennis, while specially trained SWAT personnel were not utilized.

Stratton said a committee of troopers has been named to study "extended firepower" recommendations. He added that in the future all patrol personnel will undergo weapons training twice a year, instead of the current once-a-year training.

Grants approved

The Texas Commission on Alcoholism has approved two Permian Basin alcoholism grants.

The Permian Basin Community Centers for Mental Health-Mental Retardation received $19,206 toward an $82,835 budget for the detoxification and intermediate center in Midland. The money will be used to continue the alcoholism program and increase the length of stay at the center, according to a release from the Permian Basin Regional Planning Commission.

The city of Big Spring also received approval for funding of its detoxification treatment facility. They will receive $30,000 for a total budget of $75,580.

Both grants will start July 1 and continue until June 30, 1979.

Man sentenced for coed death

SAN ANGELO, Texas (AP) — Robert Mark Wagner was sentenced Tuesday to 25 years in prison for the April 22 scissors stabbing death of Leandra Morales.

A San Angelo jury deliberated for slightly less than two hours before sentencing the 19-year-old Martinsburg, W. Va., defendant.

Shortly after noon, the jury found Wagner guilty of murdering the Angelo State University coed.

Testimony began Monday afternoon and was concluded Tuesday morning without the defense presenting any witnesses.

Defense attorneys had asked for a reduced charge of voluntary manslaughter.

Wagner had reported finding Ms. Morales' body in a building on the Angelo State campus where she had been studying and he had reportedly been working in a photographic laboratory. He was later charged in connection with the slaying.

Drivers crash picket lines at News

The Washington Post

NEW YORK — Some truck drivers drove through angry picket lines Tuesday night to deliver the New York Daily News after the Newspaper Guild struck the nation's largest-circulation daily.

The News published a 64-page edition without any unions except most members of the International Typographical Union, but the first papers did not leave the News building until after 11 p.m. (EDT) when the Newspaper Mail and Deliverers Union ended four hours of debate and drove trucks up to the loading bays.

Pickets shouted "scab" and threw coins and small objects as the first trucks pulled up to the News building. Six mounted policemen and dozens of patrolmen kept the pickets away from the loading bays.

State dispensing federal funds

Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Almost $2 million in federal funding to assist local communities in acquiring or renovating multi-purpose centers for older citizens — including $38,389 for the Permian Basin area agency on aging in Midland — is now being distributed, the Governor's Committee on Aging reports.

The state's share of the 1978 funding, allocated to the committee under the federal Older Americans Act, has been appropriated among all the state's 28 area agencies on aging according to population.

Area agencies on aging, which coordinate programs and services for the elderly at the regional level, will reallocate their regional grants to local agencies.

The grants will be awarded to local governments or other public or non-profit agencies or organizations seeking funds to acquire or renovate facitilities for use as senior centers.

According to the state committee, a community organization interested in obtaining information about a grant proposal should contact the area agency on aging serving the locality.

Altogether, $1,977,137 in federal grant monies was allocated to Texas.

Don't let installing those resilient tiles floor you

By AL CARRELL

Installing those resilient floor tiles is almost as easy as the ads claim. However, if you don't prepare the surface of the old floor properly, the chances of the floor looking good for very long are slim. The surface has to be pretty smooth. Since the floor tiles are flexible, after a while they will conform to whatever is under them. Even a piece of grit will soon show up. Look for nail heads and search out high and low places and correct them. If the old floor is too bad, you may do better to install underlayment in the form of plywood or hardboard. With either type, stagger the sheets so that you won't have spots where your corners meet. After you bring the underlayment materials in, let them stay on edge against the walls of the room where they'll be installed for at least 24 hours to adjust to the humidity of that room.

When you put them down, use a match book cover as a spacer between the sheets. You'll need that space for expansion. Prepare the surface properly, and then be prepared for a long-lasting floor.

Dear Al:

Here is a simple trick that has helped keep mildew from returning so rapidly to the grout on our shower wall. The problem is that the wall doesn't really dry out. By just leaving the sliding shower doors open at each end, air flows through and removes much of the moisture.--Mrs. C.W.

Dear Super Al:

In your very helpful free sheet on stopping floor squeaks, you suggest using hardwood wedges to stop movement between the sub floor and the floor joists. I like my idea for wedges. I had an old broken zig-zag rule. By cutting this up and then holding the ends of each piece against my grinding wheel, I had some excellent hardwood wedges. I'd been wondering what to do to keep from junking the old ruler.--W.G.P.

If you have squeaking floors, send a self-addressed, stamped envelope with your request to Super Handyman Floors here at the paper. A sheet of tips for silencing same will be forthcoming.

A SUPER HINT—When you give up golf, you can probably get some pretty good bucks for your set of clubs. However, if you had one of those pull-around, two-wheel golf club caddies, there isn't much market for them. Seems folks all rent drive-around carts these days. (They golf for exercise?) However, one neighbor has put his old caddy to use. He converted it into a tool tote for his garden tools. He formed a tube out of chicken wire and straps this in place like it was the golf bag. It holds long tools and small tools and is easy to move around the yard.

Dear Al:

Here's a magic formula for removing rust stains from the concrete garage floor. It calls for 1 part sodium citrate and 6 parts of glycerin. You then make a compress of soft cloth to place over the rust spot and pour the formula over it. The next day, the rust will be gone. I didn't create this. A neighbor who is a Saturday mechanic told me about it.--P.W.

SHOP TALK--Ever wished you could squeeze a tinier drop of glue from the tube? Now maybe you can. There are some new disposable tips that fit on standard adhesive tubes. They taper to a fine point where the glue comes out. They're called Mikro Tips and should make for a neater glue job.

Internist: insurance should pay early detection tests

By ARTHUR D. SILK
Special to the Los Angeles Times

OPINION

The health insurance industry, in my view, is guilty of deceptive advertising.

Lately the president of Blue Cross has been appearing on a television commercial. While casually tossing a ball to a pretty young tennis player, he advises us of the wisdom of seeking early detection of disease—perfectly sound medical advice, to be sure.

But the naive policyholder or physician should beware, for standard health insurance does not pay for preventitive medicine or checkups—does not pay for anything, in fact, until you are already verifiably sick.

Something must be done. On the one hand, the insurance industry is obsessed with cost containment; it cannot allow rising premiums to price its product out of the market. On the other hand, it is increasingly clear that the most important step in fighting debilitating and death-dealing diseases is early detection.

Consider just a single example. One of the most successful and most-used preventive medical measures of out era is the Pap smear. It locates cancer of the cervix in 0.06 percent of the women whose tests are processed at one of the largest local labs. That number, extrapolated nationally, amounts to hundreds of thousands of cases in which cervical cancer is detected at an early stage.

Unless disease of the female organs is discovered, however, the cost of the test (almost always under $10) is "not related to the final diagnosis"—insurance jargon for "the patient pays." How many cases of cervical cancer do we catch too late because insurance companies decline to pay for this inexpensive test?

It is tragic enough to lose a patient to a disease that could have been stopped. But the medical profession has an even more selfish reason for protesting this insurance oversight: The greatest cause of malpractice claims for general practitioners is "failure to diagnose," be it cancer or diabetes or heart disease. If the practising physician has failed to suggest a chest X-ray or an electrocardiogram or a blood-sugar test for a patient who is later found to have lung disease or diabetes, the doctor is apt to be sued.

Several years ago, a 55-year-old man came to me for treatment after an emotional struggle with a neighbor over the placement of a fence. He was sure he had an ulcer, but the stomach X-ray was negative. As it turned out, the patient was having a temporary stomach spasmm caused by his phychological distress. But I did discover something else seriously wrong with him, as I shall presently describe.

In cases like this, most doctors do more that feel the belly. Indeed, the internist should not just X-ray the stomach but perform a complete physical examination during which he inspects and palpates everything from the back of the eye to the rectum. Along with this complete physical, the doctor customarily orders such basic studies as a chest X-ray, a blood count, an electrocardiogram and a panel of automated blood chemistries.

These are minimal standard proceedures, whether the patient has a headache or a pain in the toe, whether he has a mycardial infarction or a fractured femur. The completeness of the examination, or course, is modified by reason; if the patient has had a thorough exam two weeks earlier and now has developed a sore throat, he hardly needs another electrocardiogram.

In the case of my stomach patient, I had taken a $25 chest X-ray as part of the exam and it showed a tiny pulmonary lesion that proved to be carcinogenic. I performed a partial resection of his lung and, 10 years later, the man is alive and well. The patient might have died had I only X-rayed his stomach.

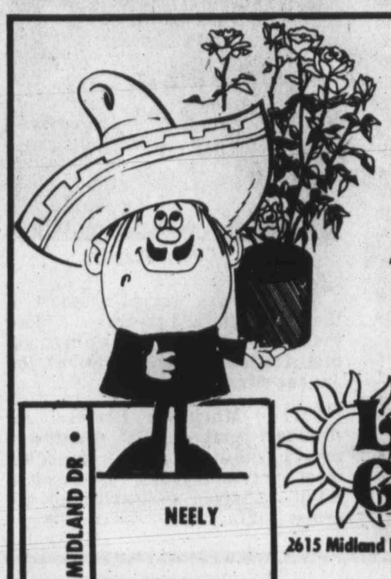

The current cost of the lung operation would be about $1,500. This may sound high, but it could have cost the insurance comapany 10 times that if the man had wasted away from terminal cancer. And if the chest X-ray had been negative, thus obviating surgery, my patient would have received the kind of disclaimer that I have seen far too often in the files of angry patients:

"We regret to inform you that the electrocardiogram, the chest X-ray and the blood-sugar examination performed by your doctor are not covered under you policy because they were not related to the final diagnosis."

The purveyors of health policies are selling them as though they were insuring cars: If your right front wheel falls off from neglect and sends you crashing into the divider, we will repair the dents, but if you want the garage to make a full safety inspection and tuneup, the cost is wholly yours.

It is up to the public, speaking through legislators and unions, either to insist on better coverage, even if that requires higher payments, or to demand that industry spokesmen like the Blue Cross president make very clear that the service they are selling amounts at present to little more than "banging out the dents."

Midland Jaycee-ette honored

Cathy Murphy was honored at the state convention held in Corpus Christi as the Outstanding President of 1977-78 for Division V of the Texas Jaycee-ettes.

The Midland Jaycee-ettes also was named outstanding club. This is the second consecutive year the Midland auxiliary has been awarded both honors.

During Mrs. Murphy's administration, the local club made contributions to various clubs, including Permian Basin Centers for Mental Health and Mental Retardation, Muscular Dystrophy Foundation, Big Spring State Hospital, Jaycee Hospital Foundation For Handicapped Adults and West Texas Teen Challenge.

An ultrasonic Fetal Heart Monitor also was presented to Midland Memorial Hospital and a tiny tot wheelchair was given to the Cerebral Palsy Center.

The Midland Jaycee-ettes aided the Midland Jaycees in 57 of their projects, as well as working on 21 civic projects of their own.

Cathy Murphy

Mrs. Murphy worked on most of these projects, and she traveled more than 7,000 miles during her administration in the interest of the Jaycee-ettes.

"Mrs. Murphy's tireless enthusiasm and capable leadership inspired the Midland club to one of it's most successful years," according to Phyllis Reneau, spokesman for the group.

Aid given 'lost' homemakers

By JEANNETTE BRAININ
Copley News Service

OAKLAND, Calif. — There is a poster on an office wall, here on the Mills College campus, similar to those showing pictures of criminals-at-large which are displayed in post offices.

Under the headline "WANTED" are the full-face and profile photos of a nice-looking woman in her middle age. Under the photos are these lines:

Too young for Social Security.

Not qualified for employment.

Ineligible for welfare benefits.

Unemployable because of unpaid, undervalued job experience.

CAUTION: She is likely to feel desperate.

It is a description of the typical woman who comes to this office, the Displaced Homemakers Centers, said Milo Smith, the executive director.

"The women who come here are in a crisis situation," said Smith.

"Because of the death of a husband or a divorce, they are finding themselves forced to go to work in their middle age, to compete for jobs, and without professional training, in a youth-oriented market.

"The typical women who we call a 'displaced homemaker' is white, middle class, about 50, and has been taken care of all her life.

"From a historical perspective, these women are survivors. They came up from the depression, maintained homes, perhaps worked to put a young husband through school, raised children.

"Now, her children are grown, her husband is successful, and he asks for a divorce because he's found someone younger and lovelier. She is forced to look for work when she has no formal skills.

"It's a shattering experience, a terrible blow to the ego. Many woman attempt suicide. Some succeed."

Smith said that many of the women who come to the center for help are "Valium junkies," legalized addicts to sedatives or to alcohol. "Their own physicians have given them no psychological help.

"When a woman arrives at a doctor's office weeping, he's likely to think, 'Oh, another Menopause Minnie,' and put her on sedatives. It may quiet her down, but it's no way to cope with her problem.

The Displaced Homemakers Center in Oakland was opened two years ago as a pilot project, legislatively financed by the California Department of Health and Welfare. The services it offers include individual and group assessment of marketable job skills, assertiveness training and workshops.

"The workshops help these women understand things they never dreamed they'd need to know late in life," said Smith. They concern job-readiness and job hunting, money management, self-employment, volunteerism as a career ladder, marital dissolution, health care for women in their middle years, Social Security, food stamps and welfare assistance.

DEAR ABBY

Talkers stop, listen

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: Someone wrote in on behalf of quiet people, saying that most quiet people are shy, sensitive and insecure, and they're embarrassed when someone says, "Gee, you're quiet."

I've been quiet all my life and it doesn't bother or offend me if my quietness is mentioned. As a matter of fact, with so many nonstop talkers in the world, I think we quiet ones deserve some applause. If everyone talked all the time, who would listen?

Furthermore, the quiet ones are often intelligent people who wisely refrain from blurting out every thought that pops into their heads.

Let that quiet one speak only for himself. Although I'm considered "quiet," I'm neither shy nor insecure.

I also notice that because I'm not always talking, when I do say something, people listen.—PROUD TO BE QUIET

DEAR PROUD: Thanks for speaking out for those who prefer to be quiet. (P.S. I know you're right. I've been married to a quiet, intelligent man for 39 years.)

DEAR ABBY: I am a 22-year-old, fairly attractive woman who was born cross-eyed. I had surgery at a young age, which corrected the problem somewhat, but it's still quite noticeable.

Abby, my reason for writing is to ask why comedians and cartoonists think that portraying a person with cross-eyes is considered either funny or a sign of stupidity.

I have lived with this defect all my life and have developed a severe complex about it. I find it difficult to look someone in the eyes or even have my picture taken. I try my best to conceal my defect because I have been humiliated and embarrassed to the point of tears when inconsiderate people make fun of me.

Being cross-eyed is a handicap. Why do so many people think it's funny? And what can I do about it?—HURTING IN OHIO

DEAR HURTING: Intelligent, sensitive people do NOT think any kind of handicap is "funny." And comedians and cartoonists who use cross-eyed characters to get laughs do so more out of thoughtlessness than malice.

Much is being done today in modern eye surgery. Don't give up until you've explored every possibility of further corrective surgery. (P.S. Try to develop a little compassion for the ignorant who ridicule the handicapped, for "they know not what they do.")

DEAR ABBY: Your letter from OVER 70 IN MISSOURI certainly touched home with me.

My mother recently passed away leaving no will. Now my father must pay tax on her share of everything that HE worked years to provide.

I don't know about the laws elsewhere, but here in Oklahoma we have found that it's very expensive NOT to have a will.

The sad part is that it takes time to handle all these legal entanglements, and this keeps your grief alive while you're waiting.

Everyone should have a will to protect the survivors as well as to insure that their possessions go to the right people. The cost of a will is minimal compared to what you must pay if no will is left.—NOT OK IN OKLAHOMA

DEAR NOT: What's true in Oklahoma is true in the other 49 states.

93 YEARS IN TEXAS WITH PROFESSIONAL PHARMACISTS FILLING QUALITY PRESCRIPTIONS AT THE LOWEST POSSIBLE PRICES

Pork chop research conducted at Tech

LUBBOCK—As there is more than one way to skin a cat, there are a variety of ways to cook a pork chop with good results.

No matter what opinion of diners at the family table is, taste panels in Texas Tech University research indicated that you can broil a chop or cook it on high, roast, medium or low settings in the microwave oven and the differences in taste, tenderness and juiciness are slight. They are measurable, however.

The research was conducted by Dr. C. Boyd Ramsey, professor of animal science and director of the meats laboratory in the College of Agricultural Sciences. He was assisted by graduate student R.C. Hines.

Ramsey explained that older microwave ovens had only one temperature setting, high. Newer models have the variety of settings used in the study.

"The method chosen to cook meat is one of the major factors that determines its palatability or acceptance," Ramsey said. "Microwave cooking is becoming more popular because it offers increased speed, convenience and savings of energy over conventional cooking methods.

"Yet microwave cooking research has produced conflicting results. Our research was designed to resolve some of the conflict."

The meat itself, 12 loins from six pork carcasses, was evaluated, and even the slightest differences were noted in the cooking results.

For a cook seeking absolute perfection, the broiled chops had a flavor edge over the microwave cooked chops. But the juiciest were chops cooked on the lowest microwave setting. Each of these two methods scored higher in tenderness than chops cooked in the microwave ovens at roast, medium or high settings.

The apparent difference, Ramsey said, is that at low settings the microwave oven heat is intermittently turned on and off.

The higher the setting in the microwave oven the less tender the chop becomes. The least attractive to the taste panel's palates were chops cooked at the highest microwave setting.

"Differences among the cooking methods were consistent," Ramsey said, "but they were so small that they probably would not be detected at the dinner table at all."

Taste panelists might have been swayed by the color of the chop bites they ate, Ramsey said, and to offset the influence of the broiled chops' brown color and the lack of browning by microwaves, all meat was served under a red light, eliminating the factor.

Hines is the son of Mr. and Mrs. F.C. Hines of Stephenville. He is working toward the master's degree in animal science.

DOROTHY McKEEHAN and Lloyd Horrell of Midland are planning to be married at 7:30 p.m. July 15 in Kelview Baptist Church. Horrell is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Red Guthrie of 516 Ruby Drive, and Miss McKeehan resides with her grandmother, Edna Barron, at 3105 Travis St.

On trying to make captive armadillos multiply

By GREG THOMPSON

SAN ANTONIO, Texas (AP) — Dr. Frank Weaker, who appears to be perfectly sane, has dedicated his professional research career to chasing down armadillos with a giant butterfly net and trying to convince the creatures to reproduce in captivity.

Dr. Frank Weaker of The University of Texas Health Science Center in San Antonio has spent the past six years attempting to learn why armadillos don't reproduce in captivity. The armor-plated, burrowing mammals are ideal lab animals for the study of leprosy and other diseases. (AP Laserphoto)

Why, you ask, would anyone possibly want armadillos to reproduce in captivity when the South is literally crawling with the seemingly-useless, pesky, armor-plated mammals?

Armadillos, it seems, are ideal laboratory animals for research into leprosy and several other diseases, said Weaker, an assistant professor of anatomy at the University of Texas Health Science Center here.

But they seldom live very long in captivity, much less reproduce. And research requires sacrifices to science.

That means researchers are constantly forced to take to the fields to capture specimens and are robbed of valuable genetic research material available only in a controlled laboratory environment.

"The armadillo's usefulness in research has been clear for a long time," said Weaker. "It would greatly aid and enhance research if they would reproduce in captivity. Hopefully we can come up with something that will become a routine laboratory procedure."

Weaker has spent about six years studying the unusual reproductive behavior of the housecat-sized, docile, burrowing beast with a bony, crescent-shaped shell, elongated snout and rat-like tail.

The researcher has delved into complex cell structures, attempted to develop a system to study the animal's hormones and plans to attempt artificial insemination.

Thusfar, the problem has him stumped.

"The armadillos are seasonal breeders. In capitivity, they may be shutting themselves off. The female ovulates, but doesn't reproduce. The question is whether they're infertile because of hormones or whether they're not mating.

"No one has sat up all night long to see if they are not mating. Maybe that's something that should be done," quipped Weaker.

Weaker keeps about 20 armadillos in dog kennel cages at the science center. He said about 25 percent are unable to adapt to captivity and others die because of research.

Therefore, Weaker must organize an armadillo safari into the Hill Country about once or twice a month.

"I've had people look at me strangely," said Weaker. "I enjoy working with the animals. They don't bite, that's one thing I like about them."

It must come as a surprise to Central Texas ranchers that armadillos are good for anything. The creatures blissfully root for insects, burrowing holes that are hazardous to horses and cattle, and often get mashed by cars on the highway. They've become the symbol of the progressive country music movement and armadillo races have become popular.

Ranchers will also tell you that armadillos have absolutely no trouble reproducing out of captivity — the pastures are full of them.

The San Diego Zoo, Weaker said, has been able to promote reproduction of some animals through the use of pens recreating the animals' natural environment.

"That wouldn't help us that much," said Weaker. "If you had several armadillos in there, you couldn't tell which ones were the parents. Plus, it's expensive since you'd have to have a concrete foundation. Otherwise, the armadillos would just dig out."

Billie Sol, government to meet in Dallas today

DALLAS (AP) — Paroled West Texas financier Billie Sol Estes and his attorney G. Brockett Irwin were to going to talk about," the meet with attorneys from Longview attorney said the U.S. Justice Tuesday night. Department here today. "The meeting was Irwin said Tuesday but suggested by the Justice declined to say what Department. My client would be discussed. "We've got a lot of work to do tonight but I don't know what we're and I are always ready to meet with the Justice Department."

Irwin said Estes had requested meetings with the Justice Department on several occasions and that federal attorneys were responding to those requests.

Irwin denied he and Estes were in Dallas to plea bargain with federal attorneys over fraud indictments rumored against Estes.

"We are not plea bargaining," Irwin said.

U.S. Attorney Kenneth J. Mighell of Dallas denied Tuesday night that such a meeting with Irwin and Estes would take place today.

"I do not have a meeting with Billie Sol Estes," he said.

Mighell also declined comment on the status of a federal grand jury currently meeting in Dallas. However, the U.S. Attorney's office has confirmed that a grand jury is investigating Estes' alleged business shenanigans since his parole from federal prison in 1971.

Estes has said the federal government was preparing criminal cases against him and prosecutors were attempting to "blackmail" him into pleading guilty to avoid the involvement of his family in possible prosecution.

Estes said the federal government is considering indictments for fraud, mail fraud, interstate transportation of stolen property and violation of IRS laws, including conspiracy to conceal assets.

The former promoter, now 52, was convicted on mail fraud charges in the early 1960s after his fertilizer tank empire collapsed.

He served six years in prison before being paroled.

Conditions of the parole, which lasts until 1981, forbid him from engaging in any form of promotion or self employment.

The latest round of allegations against him reportedly resulted from the sale of industrial steam cleaners.

"We've been meeting like this for weeks and weeks," Irwin said Tuesday night. "But I don't think it would be appropriate to discuss what we are going to talk about."

Estes' son-in-law, Morris Lindsey III, is seeking a presidential pardon on the 1960s conviction, but Irwin said no action would probably result from that until the current situation is resolved.

The era of the tax revolt has arrived

NEW YORK — And so the great tax revolt is on.

Like a tidal wave rolling eastward across the continent from California, it promises to engulf whole bureaucracies, shake entire statehouses and city halls to their foundations and scrub thick layers of fat from the structure of governments.

In its wake, it is supposed to leave a lean and splendid land where taxes rest lightly, where potholes mysteriously fill themselves, civil servants perform miracles of productivity at reduced wages and fire trucks somehow never need replacing.

"I think the event is teaching us something about an important mood of the American people," Nobel laureate Paul E. Samuelson said. "It reminds one of the Danish case where a complete nut won an important parliamentary representation for know-nothing program."

Samuelson refers to the case of Mogens Glistrup. He still sits in the Danish parliament, after winning seats for himself and 26 allies on a platform of simply wiping out all state spending unnecessary to support the barest national life. In place of the Defense Ministry, he would have bought a telephone answering machine that repeated in Russian: "We surrender."

Glistrup burst on the Danish political scene five years ago with a universal appeal that temporarily captivated the Danes. On greater reflection, the voters have relegated him to the position of a national curiosity.

"The Danish state did not succeed in living up to his program and the mood changed in a more realistic direction," Samuelson said. "The same thing is going to happen here, I guess."

Unfortunately, all we and Samuelson can do at this point is guess. In the case of California, it may be difficult to undo the damage should the mood of the state change next year when Californians find they really don't want their children in 60-pupil classrooms. By putting the tax rollback into the state constitution, they have committed themselves to something more than a brief experiment.

They are either going to have to accept levels of government service that many of them will find painful or the property taxes that were rolled back will simply have to be replaced with state taxes. They will, to be sure, have reduced their property taxes, but may find themselves saddled with, say, a 20 percent state sales tax.

If this happens, then the great California experiment is likely to end up little more than a cruel hoax.

Comedy aired tonight

LOS ANGELES (AP) — I'm not sure civilians will dig it, but fans of British drawingroom comedy have an example of it afoot in public TV's "The Norman Conquest" being sent by PBS stations tonight.

Written by Alan Ayckbourn, it's a three-parter about middle-class lust, infidelity and a lech of a librarian named Norman. The opener runs two hours, followed by other chapters on June 21 and 28.

Set in a house in the English countryside, "Conquests" is what you'd call comic soap opera, minus long pauses and organ music. It's also the enter-and-exit kind of British comedy.

Such occurs when all the talk takes place in one arena. Tonight, the arena is a dining room, next week it's a living room and the week after a garden. It makes things a bit static.

ASPA, developed as a tooth filling, is finding application as a lightweight splint for broken bones. The splint on the girl's right arm is made of plaster, which cracks when in water, as pointed out by the laboratory technician. The splint on her left arm is made of ASPA.

New splint has many advantages

By JOHN NEWELL
Copley News Service

LONDON—A new lightweight surgical splint may soon be available to relieve a good deal of discomfort for people with fractures

Only half the weight of the traditional plaster of paris type, the splint has other advantages; it takes much less time to set, can be cut off with ordinary scissors and does not crack in water

All this comes from a material developed in Britain at the laboratory of the Government Chemist in London as an improved tooth-filling substance

One of the problems in dentistry has been failure to develop a filling material which bonds with the tooth. Fillings either don't stick to sides of the cavity excavated to hold them or adhesion is minimal. Dentists have had to drill away much more of the tooth than just the decayed bit, undercutting the sides of the hole so the filling, once hardened, will be held in place because it is too big to escape

Then Dr Alan Wilson at the Government Chemist's laboratory developed a substance known as De Trey ASPA—the initial letters of the chemical name of the material, alumino silicate polyacrylic acid

This compound known as acidic polymer, is mixed with finely ground glass. When ASPA is mixed with water the acidic polymer dissolves, and the acid in it leaches calcium and aluminum out of the glass fibers. These substances form links across the long chain molecules of the polymer, making a tough, hard compound which is maunforced with the fine glass

ASPA does away with the need to remove more than the minimum of decayed material from the tooth. When spread on the cleaned area, it hardens and forms a bond that is almost as strong as the original tooth material

ASPA can be used to fill fissures in the chewing surfaces of teeth, to cap back teeth and to cover and protect areas exposed by diseases causing receding of the gums

Among other possible uses for the material is as a replacement for plaster of paris in surgical splints

Plaster of paris, which is used on an enormous scale for splinting broken limbs, has two principal disadvantages. It is rather heavy and it must be kept dry, which means a lot of discomfort and distortion when a patient takes a bath.

ASPA develops its strength after forming much more quickly than plaster of paris; it is also water resistant after hardening and much stronger.

Further research has produced an ASPA-based cast material which weighs less than half as much as plaster of paris and sets in only 10 minutes It can be removed with ordinary scissors, in the same way as plaster of paris.

Recalled products still on shelves

By PENNY GIRARD
The Los Angeles Times

WASHINGTON — Thousands of defective smoke alarms and other recalled consumer products still afety Commission, according to the General Accounting Office.

The GAO, an investigative arm of Congress, said in a report that the commission often takes far too long in carrying out its duty of warning consumers about potential dangers of hazardous products. Then, the report said, the Commission does not adequately monitor its own actions.

Rep. Henry Waxman, D-Calif., who made public the report along with Rep. John Moss, D-Calif., called the findings "a devatating documentation of inaction, negligence and poor judgment."

The commission, an independent federal regulatory agency, was created by Congress in 1972 to reduce the unreasonable risk of injury to consumers from consumer products. It may establish mandatory product safety standards to reduce unreasonable risks, and has the authority to ban hazardous products when it sees fit.

During a 15-month investigation of the consumer agency, the GAO focused on several areas including smoke detectors, one of the fastest-selling consumer items in recent years.

The report said it took the commission more than a year to act on complaints — first received in early 1976 — that certain defective models of smoke detectors produced by BRK Electronics, Aurora, Ill., were themselves potential fire hazards.

By March 31, 1978, more than a year after a recall began, the GAO said, only 37 percent of the 116,000 defective smoke detectors had been returned.

The GAO said it found that the consumer agency was aware in 1973 of the hazards of certain products containing harmful asbestos, but did not act until last year when it banned certain household patching compounds and artificial fireplace logs containing asbestos.

The report also noted that the Commission in 1977 banned 28 products under the Federal Hazardous Substances Act, but that as of May 1, 1978, it still had no idea of how many products were involved in the recalls or ow many had been turned in.

Most consumer products banned and subject to a recall under the law "were not being recalled and continued to be in the possession of consumers and available for sale," the new report said.

In response to the report, the commission said it was revising procedures to improve its recall actions.

DR. NEIL SOLOMON

Space meals more evenly

DEAR DR. SOLOMON: I have been trying to loose weight and I am having an awfully hard time doing it. I eat practically no breakfast—I'm in such a rush in the morning that I scarcely have time to eat anyway—and I go very easy at lunch. Then at night, I have what you would call a regular dinner. But something is wrong because I can't seem to lose. Would it help if I ate less in the evening and a bit more at some other meal?--Jennifer D.

DEAR JENNIFER: Yes, I think it would be good to space your meals a little more evenly. For one thing, it's a bad idea to go along all morning on almost no breakfast—this is true whether you are dieting or not. It is also unwise to concentrate your eating in the evening. There are studies showing that many people who are overweight do exactly this. Some, in fact, keep on eating snacks after dinner, and when this occurs it is called "the night-eating syndrome."

You might divide your daily quota of food into four or five meals. Tests indicate that you are less likely to gain when you eat more frequently and have less at each meal—even if the total amount of food you eat is greater than before.

DEAR DR. SOLOMON: I heard somewhere that Darvon is going to be much more difficult to get pretty soon. Is this true? I absolutely depend on it when my bursitis flares up—it is the one thing that makes life possible when there is that awful pain. I hope I'm not going to be forced to do without it.--Bettina B.

DEAR BETTINA: Propoxyphene—which is most often sold under the trade name of Darvon—is going to remain available. Don't worry about that, as long as you have doctor's prescription for it. What has happened is that the Drug Enforcement Administration has proposed tightening up somewhat on refilling prescriptions. Under the new system, you would not be able to have a prescription refilled more than five times in a six-month period. And a prescription would not be good for more than six months—you would have to get a new one from your doctor.

The Food and Drug Administration recommended this move because of growing abuse of the drug, for which almost 18 million new or repeat prescriptions were filled last year. Although propoxyphene is considered safe and effective if taken as directed by a physician, it can be very dangerous if used excessively or mixed with other drugs or alcohol. A survey over a three-year period reported 1,300 deaths from overdoses. Many are suicides, and often the victims are young people with psychological problems or a previous history of drug abuse.

Doctors have been advised by the manufacturer of Darvon that its potential for abuse is similar to that of codeine, and that it should be prescribed with the same caution as the narcotic.

'WHUFFO' describes question asked of skydivers

By CRAIG MACDONALD
Copley News Service

"WHUFFO." That's the word skydivers use to describe the question they're most often asked. "Everybody wants to know, 'What for you jump out of plane?'" explained attorney Dave Pitkin, one of Southern California's most active skydivers. Pitkin, a member of the San Diego Skydivers Club, says the answer to "WHUFFO" centers around an experience that only a jumper can appreciate. "Without a doubt, freefalling (the period prior to pulling aripcord) is the greatest feelong in the world. It makes you feel like a bird," said the man who has used his reserve (emergency) chute and has broken his right leg in this unusual hobby. "Skydiving is really a safe sport, but have to have your head on straight. Sometimes I go out and just don't feel like skydiving, so I don't," Pitkins says.

A veteran of more than 200 jumps, including night dives and intentional lake landings, Pitkin claims that one of every 25 students makes a second jump and only one of 100 skydiving students make more than 100 jumps.

He said that after six hours of instruction, the diving student actually takes a first jump, but the plane pulls the ripcord for the jumper.

"When you finally take your first free-fall, you think, 'If I don't pull this ripcord I'm dead,'" said the man who has been a jumper since 1972. "Once you've made that first free-fall, you gain a tremendous amount of confidence."

Pitkin's wife, Melissa, and 16-year-old son, David, also participate in one of the speediest hobbies around. He said skydivers free-fall at a speed of about 130 mph in a prone frog position. However, if one dives head first, speeds go above 200 mph.

He uses two chutes — one, a high-performance main descent chute 14 feet wide and 10 feet deep. When dropping from 10,500 or 13,000 feet he usually opens the canopy at 2,500 feet.

Of utmost importance to jumpers is the reserve chute. Pitkin's is 26 feet in diameter. It is specially packed by a Federal Aviation Administration rigger.

Once, when Pitkin pulled the main chute and nothing happened, he pulled the reserve ripcord at only an elevation of 400 feet. The chute opened but the speed he was traveling (176 feet per second) caused a blowout of 10 panels in his emergency chute.

He said both chutes weigh a total of 25 pounds.

There are three phases to skydiving: accuracy, where the jumper tries to land on a six-inch disc target; style, where the diver is judged by the types of maneuvers he does within a given amount of time; and group free-fall linkups, called "relative work."

"Our group is particularly interested in the relative work. Sometimes as many as 14 jumpers will leave a plane, one after the other; then form a star by grasping wrists or hands, before breaking the formation at 3,500 feet and free-falling away from the pattern before opening chutes," he said.

One of the jumpers' most used terms is "wave out" — when a skydiver waves his hands, indicating the parachute will soon billow out.

Pitkin says a skydiver can buy a main and reserve chute for $175. But you also need boots, a helmet, altimeter, gloves and a jumpsuit. "I have $1,300 worth of equipment on whenever I jump," he said.

The cost of "getting some altitude" (a lift from a specially licensed plane) is $4.50 for the first 4,500 feet, then 50-cents for every thousand feet thereafter, he said. So, to get to 10,500 feet elevation would cost $7.50. Sometimes Pitkin makes four jumps in a day or $30 worth.

On the lawyer's red, black and gold jumpsuit is a Star Crest Recipient patch — meaning that he has been in a star formation of eight people or more.

Pitkin has come a long way in the last five years. He used to be an aerobatics pilot who wondered what it would be like to fall in the air without a plane.

Then, he hired a law clerk named Ken Edwards, who just happened to be a jumper. Soon, Pitkin was talked into trying it.

"It's the most exciting sport around, and I don't even fly aerobatics anymore. There's just something about falling through the sky — going one way then another — that makes it all worthwhile."

Dave Pitkin, left, dives toward other members of the San Diego Skydivers Club, preparatory to the formation of a free-falling star. Pitkin has made more than 200 jumps since he began skydiving in 1972.

Luxury cars still fly high on U.S. highways

By FRANK MACOMBER
Copley News Service

You read and hear a lot these days about America's sagging economy. Yet this is rather hard to swallow whole when you also learn that a growing number of U.S. motorists are buying luxury cars.

Lincoln and Cadillac both report their luxury car sales are high, wide and handsome, and that buyers are demanding and willing to pay for high style and optional power and comfort equipment.

The share of car sales involving luxury nameplates — the Cadillac and Lincoln families — has climbed 47 percent in the last six years, from 3.4 percent of sales in the 1971 model year to 5 percent in the 1977 model year.

The consensus among auto dealers is that as long as there are Cadillacs and Lincolns, there will be custom models.

In its 75th year, Ford's Lincoln folks are as bullish as GM's Cadillac people about the future of the luxury automobile, despite the specter of government-demanded low mileage and emission standards.

Says Ford's vice president and Lincoln-Mercury Division general manager, Walter J. Oben:

Reputation has way of following you

By ROBERT WALLACE, Ed.D.
Copley News Service

Doctor Wallace: I do rather well in school. I sing, play an instrument and get good grades.

My problem is that I'm always getting into trouble. I'm now in 9th grade but when I was in 7th I used to fool around a lot. I got lots of swats and detentions. Now, I've outgrown all this fooling around but I'm still getting swats and detentions. Because of my reputation, I'm being blamed for things I didn't do.

I was in study hall the other day and one of the kids who takes attendance, as a joke, put my name on the absence list.

The assistant principal called me into his office and I got whacked before I could say a word.

I've tried explaining the situation to our new principal but it hasn't helped. The assistant principal still blames me because of my reputation.

Please answer my letter because my mom doesn't know about my problems and I'd hate to have her find out. — N.A., West Covina, Calif.

Dear N.A.: Reputations do have a way of following a person much too long.

Make an appointment to see your assistant principal when you are not in "trouble." Explain that you have matured and that your "fooling around days" are over.

Apologize for your prior behavior, and shake his hand — be assured he will now see you differently!

Dear Dr. Wallace: I'm 18 and I'm sure that I'm pregnant. I've gone to a doctor and I will get the results next week.

I really love Jim and want his baby, but I broke up with him because he is always super-loaded. He is really into pot, hash and acid, and so am I. In fact, I really love acid. Since I think I'm pregnant I have stopped taking acid but I still smoke pot and drop a few chemicals.

I really thought Jim loved me, but when I told him I thought I was pregnant he started acting funny and that's when I told him to split. Now I'm starting to miss him and I don't know what to do. Please help! — I.T., Piqua, Ohio

Dear I.T.: I think you broke up with Jim because of the way he acted when you told him you thought you were pregnant, not because he is always loaded! In fact, you enjoy drugs as much as he does.

If you are pregnant, your primary concern is thet of your unborn child. Stop smoking pot and stop "dropping" chemicals immediately.

Are you planning to keep the baby or do you plan to give it up for adoption? This question must be resolved.

Contact your local Planned Parenthood Federation of America for guidance — now!

Dear Doctor: I'm not yet 12 but I have a million-dollar problem and I hope you can help me. I read your column every day so I'll look for your answer.

My mom got married last April to Bob and I want him to adopt me but I don't want to upset my real dad. I'm afraid to discuss it with either of them. — Donna, Valparaiso, Ind.

Dear Donna: Talk to your mother and tell her exactly what you told me. She wants the best for you and she will know what to do.

It's really neat that you care enough for your stepfather to want him to adopt you!

NRC in center of controversy

By THOMAS O'TOLE
The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — When Indian Prime Minister Morarji Desai sits down Tuesday afternoon with members of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee and House International Affairs Committee, he will discuss the U.S. Nuclear Regulatory Commission.

Why the Nuclear Regulatory Comission? Because by a 2-to-2 tie vote last month, the NRC held up the shipment of 17,000 pounds of uranium destined for India's biggest nuclear power station.

President Carter overturned that decision and approved the shipment but, because the NRC denied the export, the Congress is now in the act. Congress can block the Indian shipment if it is not satisfied with Desai's explanation of how the uranium will be used.

Desai's unusual appearance before Congress to appeal the NRC vote is one measure of the rapid rise of the Nuclear Regulatory Commission. In its 3 1-2 years of existence, the NRC has managed to become one of the busiest and most controversial regulatory bodies in the Federal government.

The NRC employs 2,800 people and spends $331 million a year. It regulates the generation of 49 million kilowatts of nuclear electricity and is supervising the construction of another 98 million kilowtts. It licenses nuclear exports to most of the countries of the world, including the Soviet Union and the People's Republic of China.

Congress has legislated the NRC to respond to some of the most serious challenges of the day. Is nuclear power safe and can it be made safer? Can radioactive wastes be safely disposed of for periods up to 100,000 years? Will the NRC guarantee that U.S. uranium will never turn up as plutonium in another nation's atomic bombs?

Its role in nuclear exports is clearly the NRC's most controversial. The export to India is the only one the NRC has denied, but it has delayed shipments to South Africa, Brazil, Spain, the Philippines and Yugoslavia.

The NRC is sitting on a shipment of uranium that Canada said it would use to power its first nuclear icebreaker on grounds that Canada's government has not yet decided whether the icebreaker will be nuclear-powered. It has delayed shipment of highly-enriched uranium (the same kind used in weapons) to Iran for use in a research reactor because the Iranian government has not yet authorized construction of the reactor.

Ahead of the NRC are votes on whether to license exports to Mexico, South Korea, Taiwan, Israel, Bolivia, Greece, Malaysia and Bangladesh. Soon to come before it will be another uranium fuel load for the Indian power station at Tarapur. Spain has filed a request for the export of a complete nuclear power station.

Half these countries have not signed the Non-Proliferation Treaty prohibiting the spread of nuclear weapons. A few like Brazil and South Africa have hinted they plan to extract plutonium from spent uranium and use it as a nuclear fuel. The Carter administration is against the use of plutoniuim because it can be used in atomic bombs.

"There will be some exports proposed or applied for," NRC Chairman Jospeh Hendrie said in a recent interview, "that I think will have to be turned down." Why? "Well, if Pottsylvania comes to us for 200 kilos of plutonium and won't tell us what they've going to do with it, you know it's inconceivable that we would turn against a negative recommendation." Would Hendrie elaborate? "Of course not. It would be improper to speak in advance on matters like that."

Though it voted control over nuclear exports to the NCR when it passed the Non-Proliferation Act, Congress still seems divided on the NRC's role in the nuclear export process.

Critics like Sen. James A. McClure, R-Idaho, feel the NRC usurps White House control of foreign policy, but others like Sen. Gary Hart, D-Colo., chairman of the Subcommittee on Nuclear Regulation, feel differently: "Why shouldn't they have a role? It's the only involved agency with the expertise in the field. You can't separate the international activities of nuclear power from the domestic."

The Commission itself is divided on its export powers. In voting to grant the Indian license, NRC Commissioner Richard Kennedy said he did not think the NRC was given a mandate "to make foreign policy." And while he talks of denying future licenses, Chairman Hendrie tends to agree.

"The question arose to what extent that (the Indian vote) was an intrusion into the president's foreign policy prerogatives," Hendrie said. "I feel you get into an area where these things get to be foreign policy matters."

Hendrie and Kennedy voted in favor of the Indian export. Commissioners Victory Gilinsky and Peter Bradford voted against it, forcing the situation the license is in today. Gilinsky has served on the NRC the longest, Bradford the least. Why did they vote against it?

"Peter and I read the law (the Non-Proliferation Act) that said certain criteria had to be met and they were not met," Gilinsky said in an interview. "Basically, there have to be safeguards on that fuel shipment, on previous fuel shipments and on the reactor and a no-explosives pledge and whether or not reprocessing would be done (to extract the plutonium) only with U.S. approval. And we said, taking look at what we know, you can't say with confidence that these conditions will be met."

Outsiders insist that the 2-to-2 vote on the Indian export reflects a philosophical division inside the NRC, that Hendrie and Kennedy tend to vote in favor of nuclear power and that Gilinsky and Bradford tend to vote against it.

Of the 192 votes the commission has taken since last July, just seven have not been unanimous. Five of the seven involved a single dissent. Only two were standoffs that involved two dissenting votes. One was the Indian export license; the other came over whether two domestic nuclear licenses should be reviewed.

All four commissoners point out that they often have heated debates before agreeing on some decisions. All four claim they've changed their minds during debates.

The months ahead may see changes in NRC voting patterns, if only because tougher decisions will come to a vote. No fewer than 90 nuclear power plants under construction will come up for operating license permits. All 90 are being contested by intervenors.

Nuclear waste disposal decisions will soon be coming to the NRC, in part because spent fuel is piling up and in part because the Department of Energy will soon be reaching decisions on how to store spent fuel wastes. The NRC will be voting on whether to license any new waste disposal methods.

However tough the decisions are, they'll be made a little easier by the imminent addition of a fifth member to the five-seat commission. This week, the Senate Subcommittee on Nuclear Regulation will hold a confirmation hearing on President Carter's nomination of John F. Ahearne to fill the fifth seat.

Heel! Stay! Come! Down! When's class let out?

Story and photos by TOM NICKELL

Who's doing the teaching and who's doing the learning? Sometimes the answer is not all that obvious.

In this case, the students certainly tend to give smart-aleck responses to commands, want to doze when it's hot and the classroom—it may be said—lacks any air of dignity.

But it's all in the name of canine excellence. And if a leash occasionally gets wrapped around an ankle, or if young dogs manage to teach their masters some old tricks, well . . . nobody's perfect.

The name of the non-game is dog-training. Happens all the time, most certainly on Tuesday evenings at Haley Park, in Midland. Teacher for those Haley Park sessions is Al Weinkauf. More on him later.

Someone surely once said that in order to train a dog you have to be smarter than the dog in question. Probably that's true, but it's not much consolation when the dog doesn't know it. . . or care.

To hear Weinkauf bark commands with the best of Army drill instructors is a thrill. To watch the dog owners go one way and the dogs another represents an even keener experience.

The whole thing depends on communication and repetition, Weinkauf maintains, and those owners who pay to train their dogs under Weinkauf's supervision get plenty of both.

He's good at what he does semi-professionally, Weinkauf is, but his four-legged students offer true academic professionalism. They can polish apples, skip lessons, ignore homework, opt for study hall, and generally slip the long tether of Education with the most accomplished of young human beings.

What's the object of so much avoided hard work? To make the dog manageable, says Weinkauf, and secondarily to win dog show prizes.

He touches, too, on the developing rapport between an animal and owner.

Most classes are conducted in a kind of formation. There's a reason for that, Weinkauf holds, in that the dogs get a chance to be distracted by the traffic around them. They learn, eventually, to take in the distractions but to stick to their handler's command at the same time.

Weinkauf, an electrician by trade, got interested in dog-training about five years ago. He had been training his own dogs ever since he was a kid, but without any teacher credentials. He went to four different obedience classes with four dogs, his own, and they each — the dogs, that is — earned the Companion degree.

Then Weinkauf decided to attend some American Kennel Club seminars. He went all over the country for the seminars and spent a week at Texas A & M University with some top animal trainers.

The traffic gets a bit heavy at times as owners and dogs respond to voice commands.

He hits doubly hard, apparently, on that theme of distracting the dog while it's being trained.

"We have classes in a park because the dogs need the distractions, as well, of birds flying and cars driving by and people walking around. This way they become used to them."

All of this helps, he says, when the owners take their dogs for a walk around the neighborhood. In fact, part of the training, he adds, consists of just such friendly but with-a-purpose strolls.

His classes vary. His next one emphasizes puppy training — schooling the owners and their dogs on how to be good pets (works both ways, you know) and especially teaching the person how to understand his or her dog and what its capabilities might be.

In these classes, particularly, Weinkauf says he studies the dogs rather carefully. Are they the right age for training, given their breed? Is shyness a problem? He even offers owners of puppies a written analysis of each would-be graduate.

The properly trained dog — never mind proper breeding — progresses, says Weinkauf, through whatever stages or degrees his owner wishes to pursue. The four degrees are Companion Dog, Companion Dog of Excellence, Utility Dog and Utility Dog Tracking. The last-named is referred to as UDT in dog handler parlance, and that's the equivalent of a non-honorary doctor's degree among humans.

Notes Weinkauf: "The people in my classes usually are not interested in an obedience trial dog. They want a dog which is behaved. We learn basics. How to heel on a leash, heel off a leash, sit-stay, down-stay, recall and finish."

It's hardly a currish insult to point out that Weinkauf is referring to dogs, not owners, in the above sentence.

Rather, Weinkauf stresses that the owner has to learn all of those commands and responses as well as the dog. How to give them and how to enforce them. When to reprimand (with a sharp voice) and when to praise.

He recites his three P's. "Praise, patience and practice." Weinkauf says correct training is of Lassie-level importance. "If a dog is taught wrongly, it learns wrongly and it wasn't even the dog's fault."

Failing access to professionally supervised training classes, Weinkauf recommends owners read Winifred Strickland's "Professional Dog Training."

As are a number of Midlanders, Weinkauf is a member of a dog handling club. The one he belongs to, High Sky Kennel Association, will have a Fun Match on June 25 at the Midland County Exhibit Building on East Highway 80. The match will be an AKC registered dog event, with confirmation and obedience events.

Weinkauf explains that it is called a Fun Match so puppies may be entered. There will be a "parade of champions," featuring animals eligible to enter best of breed and best of show categories.

Watching Weinkauf's classes over a period of several weeks, one can see why knowledgeable guidance is needed in dog-training. The average unskilled owner leans toward communicating with a young dog as if it were an adult person. Weinkauf observes that "dogs can't read minds even if it sometimes seem they can. You have to be clear about what you want and you have to be definite when the dog understands but fails to do what it's supposed to do."

The problem, he suggests, is in getting owners to abide by the rules ("use only established commands") and to be firm about compliance once a command is given.

At that, says Weinkauf, there's no set way to train a dog. Heel — meaning walk at my left side — is a universal command. But owners sometimes prefer or need to deviate from the usual line of commands because of the dog's name or because of possibilities for confusion.

For example: A dog named Kay would hardly be the ideal candidate for a release command of "okay." Having your dog trained to feel chastised by the word "hup" can be useful when others in the area are slapping their dogs' paws with the word "no."

Weinkauf observes while neophyte dog trainers put their wards through the paces.

An equally finished dog, though not in the same sense, is 80-pounds and still growing Sundance, a Basset hound.

By NANCY ANDERSON
Copley News Service

HOLLYWOOD—T. N. (Ted) Trikilis, who turned out the widely circulated Farrah Fawcett-Majors poster and made a bundle by so doing, says his Cheryl Ladd poster is selling even faster than the Fawcett-Majors photo did at first.

Ladd, of course, is the cutie who replaced Farrah as one of "Charlie's Angels."

Trikilis got into the poster business by way of an art gallery he and his brother used to run near the Kent State University campus.

"The art works weren't selling too well," he says, "so we put in a line of art supplies.

"Then a salesman suggested that we might like to carry some posters.

"Back then, posters featured people like W.C. Fields and Humphrey Bogart. In any case, we stocked some posters and they sold very well."

Trikilis' next step was to make his own posters.

So he started Pro Arts, Inc., a poster company, in 1967 with $500. Last year the company took in $7 million.

For a while Trikilis' publicist was pushing the legend that his client was a simple farmer who, with a canny $500 investment, had become an overnight millionaire, but that's not entirely the case. Trikilis is a farmer all right. He has a 60-acre spread which he personally works as time allows. But simple he's not, and his success took a little longer than overnight.

The poster tycoon is a shrewd customer who surveys potential poster subjects as carefully as a future investor surveys the soybean outlook.

Trikilis is thrilled to have nailed Billy Carter for a poster, and he's especially happy to be peddling a giant-sized likeness of Dan Haggerty, NBC's "Grizzly Adams," because, he says, "Dan Haggerty is the hottest sex symbol around these days. Women of all ages are buying that poster and not for their children. They want Dan for themselves."

"There's no way to explain how you know who'll sell well on a poster," he says. "You have to rely on instinct."

Two stories are going around as to Kris Kristofferson's decision to pull out of the film he was to have made in England. According to one story, Kristofferson saw "Vigilante Force," in which he co-starred with Jan-Michael Vincent, and was so unhappy with it that he said he was through acting. According to another, he decided not to go to England because his wife begged hime to stay at home. Sources of the first story seem more reliable.

Vincent, currently making "The Hollywood Stuntman" with Burt Reynolds, was asked what he thinks about Kristofferson's alleged displeasure with "Vigilante Force."

"He takes this too seriously," Vincent said. "I wouldn't want to make another 'Vigilante Force,' but I don't take this as seriously as he does."

Robert Redford set Springfield, Tenn., on its communal ear when he visited the city to scout a movie location.

After he stopped in a shoe store and tried on shoes, girls who work in the bank across the street to take turns sitting in the chair he's recently vacated.

After he'd eaten lunch in a local cafe, he sent flowers to the waitress to thank her for the service, and you can imagine how that affected her!

Foolish finesses should be illegal

By ALFRED SHEINWOLD

Do we need Federal legislation on finesses? They're habit-forming, and can be very harmful. This column tries to steer clear of political questions, but may come out flatly against capital punishment for foolish finesses.

Opening lead — ♠ 5

South jumped at the chance to get a free finesse at the first trick. He played the ten of spades from dummy and captured East's queen with the king.

Maybe the government should have stepped in right then and there. South had thrown away his contract without due process.

Declarer took the top clubs and gave up a club to the queen. Back came a spade to dummy's jack, and declarer led a diamond in the hope of reaching his hand with the queen.

West won with the king of diamonds and returned another spade. Now South tried a low heart, still trying to get to his hand.

West won with the ace of hearts and cashed his last two spades. Down one.

SHOULD RESIST

South would make the contract if the FBI were standing by. He'd step up with the ace of spades at the first trick, resisting the finesse. Then he'd try the club finesse.

West takes the queen of clubs, but South has a sure entry to his hand in the form of the king of spades and can therefore be sure of nine tricks no matter how the play goes.

ANSWER: Pass. Avoid responding to a bid of one when you have only 4 points in high cards unless you have substantial distributional strength.

Audiences overflowing New York's theaters

By WELTON JONES
Copley News Service

NEW YORK — Not since the birth of television has the New York experience been so tangled up with the theater. Playhouses may be found all over town, audiences pack them nightly and the air is filled with urgently exchanged opinions.

On a recent week, there were at least 154 shows running in New York, an accurate total being unavailable. Of these, 28 were on Broadway, 23 fell in the off-Broadway category and 103 were located "off-off-Broadway."

Numbers alone don't tell the tale, though. To understand, one must join in line at the "TKTS" booth in Times Square, where many shows release blocs of tickets for sale at half price shortly before curtain time. Or stand next to Sardi's on West 44th Street and watch the mounted police deal with the mobs queuing up for tickets to Bob Fosse's new hit, "Dancin'." Or hang around the lobby of the New York Shakespeare Festival's Public Theater on the Lower East Side, where there are often seven shows playing simultaneously.

The audiences crowd together in the inadequate lobbies, spill over into the street mobs, argue loudly, arrive after the curtain's up, talk during the show, leave early to beat the parking lot traffic, clog the theater district restaurants before and after showtime and complain incessantly. But they keep showing up, even with ticket prices nudging $20 a seat, and they retain the capacity for awe. There is much that is awesome this season. No "A Chorus Line" or "Annie" to dominate the commercial theater, no explosion of new American playwrights to make the Pulitzer Prize competition interesting, no dominant new avant garde. There is not even a really good new musical comedy. But there is an amazing assortment of plays and entertainments, new and old, with plenty of major artists represented, often in outwardly humble circumstances. (Paul Rudd and Michael J. Pollard are among the star names in off-Broadway supporting roles; Oscar-winners Woody Allen, Diane Keaton, Richard Dreyfuss and Jason Robards are all involved in New York projects.) called "Moliere in Spite of Himself," an adptation by Michael Lessac of a 50-year-old Russian play by Mikhail Bulgakov, "A Cabal of Hypocrites."

Jessica Tandy and Hume Cronyn star in a debut play by D.L. Coburn, "The Gin Game." The venerable pair form the whole cast of this tight little piece about two elderly misfits, abandoned without visitors in a nursing home, who crank themselves back into a semblance of reality through an ongoing game of gin rummy.

Official attempting to steer project through Congress

The Los Angeles Times

PASADENA, Calif. — Like a ship's captain navigating in dangerous waters, John R. Casani of the Jet Propulsion Laboratory finds himself hard at work these days trying to steer his $275 million space project safely past the shoals of technical problems and congressional budget-cutters.

Casani is the manager of Project Galileo, an ambitious two-pronged scientific assault on the planet Jupiter. A single Galileo spacecraft, consisting of an orbiter mother ship and a daughter probe, would be launched in 1982 on a Space Shuttle.

A little less than three years later, the spacecraft would arrive at Jupiter, with the probe sent plunging into the planet's gassy layers and the orbiter made to fly rings around the huge body.

But the project, formerly known as "Jupiter Orbiter Probe," almost failed to get off the drawing boards. Last year, when the National Aeronautics and Space Administration (NASA) asked Congress for $20 million to begin work on the program, the House of Representatives said "no" and the Senate said "yes." The Senate's answer eventually prevailed.

Now, a little less than a year later, Galileo officials at JPL in Pasadena and at the Washington, D.C., headquarters of the National Aeronautics and Space Administration again find themselves confronted with a critical House.

A key House committee has voted to subtract $10 million from the $78.7 million being sought for Galileo next year. "That would be a very significant cut," said B. Ron McCullar, Galileo program manager at NASA headquarters, "because fiscal '79 is our first year in the design of the spacecraft."

McCullar, like Casani, is hoping that the Senate will include all $78.7 million for Galileo in its fiscal 1979 appropriation and that the Senate version will once again override the House's.

Casani said that JPL and NASA officials realized last autumn that the estimated $275 million to $295 million which they had told Congress it would take to design, build and test Galileo would not, after all, be enough to do the job.

That estimate, McCullar said in a telephone interview late last week, would have been $40 million to $50 million short of Galileo's actual total costs if NASA and JPL did everything they had said they had hoped to do.

One of those things was the construction of a "proof test model," a sort of prototype Galileo spacecraft that JPL engineers would have used to check the design of the system. Although JPL has built such models for all of their past planetary exploration programs, Casani said that a decision was made to do away with it in this case — at a savings of $8 million to $10 million.

"We felt that we've been through this often enough before (on other projects)," Casani said, "that by now we ought to be able to build it (Galileo) right — right from the start."

Not only do its NASA and JPL managers intend to build Galileo correctly, they also intend to test it right — right from the start and right at the construction site: the JPL facility.

"We're calling it the 'ship-and-shoot' concept," McCullar said. That means that the JPL engineers and technicians will test and prepare the complete spacecraft thoroughly in Pasadena before sending it on to Cape Canaveral for its launching aboard the Space Shuttle. This will reduce the number of people otherwise required at the cape temporarily to check out the orbiter-probe system before launch — at a subsequent savings of several million dollars.

Finally, McCullar said, it was decided to buy only critical spare parts for the single Galileo to be built and thus save several more million dollars. These actions, when taken together with other smaller steps, eliminated the $40 million to $50 million projected overrun.

So, for the moment at least, Project Galileo is living on a tight budget. Moreover, the still-to-be-built spacecraft is also living on a strict weight control program.

"For a while there," Casani said, "it looked like we were about 350 kilograms (770 pounds) over the limit for the shuttle." That was last November, when Casani's engineers added up the individual weights of all the 17 scientific experiments proposed for the Galileo — the physical structures, the transmitters, the antennas and myriad other subsystems of a sophisticated planetary probe. It totaled 1,850 kilograms (4,070 pounds). Their limit: 1,500 kilograms (3,300 pounds).

Although this would seem to be well within the capabilities of the Space Shuttle, which can carry up to 30,000 kilograms (66,000 pounds) into low earth orbit, the Galileo is to be fitted out with several upper stages.

Once the Galileo has been dropped off in low earth orbit by the shuttle, these upper stages are to be fired to drive the big unmanned spacecraft onto a Jupiter trajectory. When the weight of these upper stages was added to the weight of the spacecraft itself, Casani and his JPL crew found themselves over the limit.

But then this program to explore the planet Jupiter received an unexpected boost from an unexpected source: the planet Mars. "One of our guys was looking at trajectories for 1982," Casani recalled, "and he suddenly discovered that Mars was right in the way about 100 days after launch."

That might seem at first glance to be a planetary hindrance rather than a help. In fact, it is quite a help, because Casani and his engineers immediately worked out a plan whereby they would use the gravity fields of Mars to "bend" the Galileo's trajectory and aim the spacecraft at a different point in the sky where Jupiter will be 3 1-2 years later, in mid 1985.

This "gravity-assist" technique does not really add any appreciable velocity to the Galileo, Casani explained, but it does allow the JPL engineers to plot a course to Jupiter that is less demanding of energy than a trajectory based entirely upon rocket power.

More importantly, the Martian connection reduced the amount of energy that the Galileo's various propulsion systems would be called upon to provide during the cruise to Jupiter. This, in turn, reduced the quantity of liquid propellants that will have to be loaded aboard the spacecraft.

"This relieved us of the weight problem," Casani said, "although we're still a little over by maybe 25 or 50 kilograms (55 to 110 pounds)." This weight-savings has been achieved at the cost of time — it will now take Galileo 42 months to reach Jupiter instead of the originally planned 34 months — but even here there was a bonus: the relative alignment of earth, Jupiter and the point of entry for the Galileo probe is better, from the viewpoint of communications between earth and Jupiter, in mid-1985 than in late 1984.

For the time being, Casani is sitting tight. He does not want to drop any scientific experiments to get those additional pounds off Galileo until he knows just what the weight-lifting capabilities of the shuttle are going to be.

The shuttle is due to begin flight tests in space in mid 1979 and by the time it gets around to carrying Galileo, sometime during the first two weeks of January, 1982, Casani is hopeful that it will have proven itself to be capable of carrying more than 66,000 pounds.

If it does, Casani and the NASA-JPL team will have no problems. If the shuttle doesn't, then Casani may have to make some hard choices.

The present plan calls for flying the Galileo with a fuel tank that is not quite full. This means taking a risk that the spacecraft may not have the necessary propellants to execute some maneuvers after it begins to orbit Jupiter.

"We're planning for the orbiter to make 11 encounters with Jupiter and its moons Ganymede and Callisto," Casani said. "To be 99.9 percent that we can do all 11, we would need to load a certain amount of fuel aboard the spacecraft."

But the NASA-JPL team might decide to trade off a fewer number of encounters — say, three, perhaps, or five — and still hold to the high confidence factor. Or they might elect to try for all 11 encounters but at a lower level of confidence — maybe 75 percent or even 50 percent.

Fortunately, Casani said, this sort of decision does not have to be made until about a month or so before the launch date of the shuttle, when the Galileo's fuel tanks have to be filled.

Tax cut may only delay effects of unemployment

By PAUL E. STEIGER
The Los Angeles Times

LOS ANGELES — A new University of California at Los Angeles economic forecast, the first since enactment of Proposition 13, predicts that the California economy will grow faster than it would have if the Jarvis initiative had not passed — but only for about a year.

After that, the UCLA study has concluded, the state's economy will slide downhill, with unemployment climbing sharply to exceed 10 percent of the work force by the end of 1980. At present, the jobless rate in the state is about 7.2 percent.

These conclusions are very close to those of an earlier UCLA study, released in May, which also had forecast a climb in the state's jobless rate to above 10 percent by the end of 1980 should the Jarvis property tax limitation initiative be enacted.

That study has been criticized because it assumed the state Legislature would vote to expend only about $1.5 billion from its surplus to restore some of the $7 billion or so in property tax revenues to be lost by local governments under Proposition 13.

But the new study reaches very similar conclusions, even though it assumes the Legislature will vote to spend substantially all the state budget surplus — about $5.5 billion — to help maintain police, fire, school and other local services.

The only substantial difference, Larry Kimbell, director of economic models at the UCLA Graduate School of Management, said in an interview Tuesday, is that the loss of jobs will start to be felt later and will be mitigated slightly from what the earlier forecast predicted.

The new UCLA study is part of the quarterly forecast of the state and national economy that will be released in detail Thursday. Kimbell disclosed some elements of it in the interview.

The UCLA economic models, like similar forecasting devices used by economists and consulting firms around the country, employ a series of mathematical equations that, in theory, describe the way the economy works.

With the help of a computer, such models can be used to simulate the effect of different assumptions about tax levels, oil prices, government spending and other factors believed to influence the level of consumption, investment, prices and employment. Different assumptions — and different theories about how the economy works — produce different conclusions.

A key assumption in the new UCLA study, Kimbell said, is that only about $2 billion of the $7 billion in property tax relief to be generated by Proposition 13 will stay in the state. The rest will be drained away in the form of higher federal taxes — because individuals and corporations will have lower property-tax deductions when filing their federal income tax returns — and in other ways, including the transfer of property-tax savings out of the state by national and international corporations owning land in California.

By pumping $5.5 billion from the state surplus back into the economy, the Legislature will more than offset this drain, Kimbell said. Thus, by next spring, the UCLA study forecasts personal income in California to be $211.5 billion at an annual rate, up slightly from the $209.7 billion his model would predict in the absence of the Jarvis measure.

But next year, Kimbell said, he does not expect the state to have nearly so large a budget surplus to feed back in the form of aid to local governments. By his estimate, the continuing surplus available for such aid would be only about $2.5 billion.

As a result, he said, either local budgets would receive a new drain in revenue — necessitating further curbs in government employment — or state taxes would have to be raised. In either case, he said, about $3 billion would be withdrawn from the spending stream in California.

Commission predicts oil supply into 1990s

The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — Contrary to many earlier forecasts, world oil supplies will be adequate to meet demand "for the next several years and possibly into the early 1990s," according to a detailed report on energy to the Trilateral Commission, released Tuesday.

But this easing of supply, keeping world oil prices below the cost of producing substitutes, was viewed as a grave threat to longer run needs — and as damaging to public understanding of the real problem. Among other things, low prices and easy avilability of gasoline discourages conservation, the report said.

The principal author of the report is John Sawhill, president of New York University, and former federal energy administrator. He was assisted by Keichi Oshima, Professor of Nuclear Engineering at the University of Tokyo, and Hans Maull, European secretary of the Trilateral Commission.

They called for a strategy of raising what they called artificially low prices in Europe, Canada, Japan and the United States, specifically recommending a higher federal excise tax on gasoline in the United States. In addition, they suggested a trilateral energy "summit" that would develop policy for higher pricing and for negotiating with the Soviet Union for technology and capital.

The Trilateral Commission, which has been meeting here since Sunday, is composed of 200 influential private sector leaders from Europe, Japan and North America who consult regularly and confidentially with government officials on international problems.

The energy report says that additional flows from the North Slope (Alaska), the North Sea and Mexico will keep supplies in rough balance with a demand growth of 2 percent to 3 percent a year for at least the next 5 to 10 years. Prices, in the absence of a sharp cutback by Saudi Arabia or other major producer, would be stable or slightly higher. But sometime in the early 1990s, the report suggests, almost all OPEC producers will be cranking out oil at about a peak, the non-OPEC production will begin to top out, and "the world will have to look to the Saudis to provide any incremental supplies needed."

Since "the critical variable" affecting prices will be the Saudi willingness to expand production, the authors urge that the United States maintain its "special relationship" with that key producer.

One main theme of the report is that governments have not only failed to come to grips with the energy problem, but have not shown they understand its magnitude or severity.

The report divides the range of issues into short, medium and longer term periods. In the short term — for the next five years — the risk relates to a potential disruption of supplies through war or terrorism.

In the medium term — in the following five years — there will also be the potential for financial crisis, initially among some of the poorer countries that might not be able to borrow enough money to pay for their oil. But worries extend also to the United States, with a chronic trade deficit and dollar problem.

For the long run, beginning in another ten years, the major threat seen is a precipitate rise in oil prices as world production levels off, exacerbating the financial problems of the medium-term period.

"The danger in the longer term is not that of a price increase per se," the authors say, "but that a large increase could occur in such a short time period that the world economies would be unable to adjust, and recession or even depression could ensue."

To avoid such an abrupt rise in prices, the authors put forward the strategy of consciously boosting prices now, so as to discourage consumption and to encourage alternative supplies from liquefied and gasified coal, oil from shale, etc.

They attribute the more optimistic supply picture of the moment to higher forecasts of oil yields from Mexico and other new areas under development, but also to a slowdown in the rate of growth of energy demand.

That is labeled a serious development, and the authors call for political leaders in Japan, the United States, Canada, and Europe "to underscore the point that economic stagnation is a poor solution to the energy problem."

The report points out that unless economic growth continues at a good pace in the industrial world, the necessary investment capital to develop alternate sources of energy won't be forthcoming. The authors say that the relationship between energy and economic policy should be an important agenda item for an energy summit.

Occidental contesting for Canadian company

By LINDA GRANT
The Los Angeles Times

LOS ANGELES — Occidental Petroleum Corp., Los Angeles, jumped into a spirited bidding contest with the government of Canada in an effort to acquire a Canadian company which has vast reserves of heavy oil in the Athabasca tar sands of western Canada.

Industry analysts predicted the proposed $500 million deal involving Husky Oil Ltd. will create tension between Occidental and the Canadian government. The latter's approval is required to complete the transaction. Said one analyst, "This deal is tenuous at best."

On the face of it, Occidental's proposal, a complex exchange offer for new preferred shares totaling about $44.70 a share, looked less desirable than Petro-Canada's offer of $45 a share in cash. However, Occidental and Husky pointed out that the exchange of stock would be tax free in the United States, where more than 65 percent of Calgary-based Husky's shares are held. And Occidental's package will provide dividends of $4.35 a share, compared to Petro-Canada's current $1 (Canadian) dividend per share.

Occidental's offer followed a tense weekend at Husky's headquarters. On Saturday afternoon, its directors and top management met with representatives from Petro-Canada, the state-owned oil company, to hear their proposal.

Petro-Canada — formed three years ago to step up the country's exploration and development efforts — has made only one other big acquisition, when it took over all the Canadian assets of Los Angeles-based Atlantic Richfield Co. in 1976 for $340 million.

Husky officials asked for time to consider the Petro-Canada offer. They had been talking for some time with Occidental about ways to combine the two companies' operations, and hurriedly met with them again during the weekend.

Late Monday night, Husky told Petro-Canada officials it had chosen Occidental, and about midnight handed them the announcement that went over the wires before dawn that morning. Petro-Canada responded with a terse statement saying only that it was reviewing the situation.

The Occidental package was quickly accepted by Husky's founder, Colorado oilman Glenn Nielson, and his family, who control about 20 percent of Husky's stock.

Husky has operations around the world, owns five refineries, and last year earned $42.8 million on sales of $622 million. But both Occidental and Canada are more interested in Husky's estimated 16 billion barrel reserves of heavy oil in the Lloydminster area of Saskatchewan and Alberta.

The thick oil requires expensive processing before it can flow through pipelines or be refined, but it represents the cornerstone of Canada's attempt to limit reliance on imported fuel.

Occidental must win the approval of Canada's Foreign Investment Review Agency (FIRA) — which judges whether a foreign takeover is of "significant benefit to Canada" — before it can go ahead.

In Ottawa Tuesday, Energy Minister Alistair Gillespie said he wouldn't "prejudge" FIRA's recommendations, but he told the House of Commons he is sure the agency is "well aware of the government's priorities on heavy-oil development."

To head off Canadian disapproval, Husky and Occidental issued a sketchy plan Tuesday suggesting the heavy oil reserves of western Canada be developed by a partnership owned one-third each by Petro-Canada, the provinces of Saskatchewan and Alberta, and Husky-Occidental, Petro-Canada and the provinces issued no response.

In a related development Tuesday, Alberta Gas Trunk Line Ltd., Calgary, announced it had been buying Husky stock since January in a joint venture with Energy Ventures Inc., Boston. The two companies said they have accumulated about 415,000 shares, or 4 percent of Husky's outstanding common shares.

Irion pool gets offset

Gulf Oil Corp. No. 4-VD State is to be drilled as a 9,500-foot project in the five-well Irion 163 (Ellenburger) field of Irion County, 2¼ miles southeast of Barnhart.

Location is 660 feet From north and 1,980 feet from east lines of section 5, block 40, University Lands survey.

Well, test reported

William L. Rodgers of Midland No. 1-C Thelma J. Cole has been completed to extend the Vincent (lower Clear Fork) pool of Howard County 1,500 feet south.

Operator announced a daily flowing potential of 124 barrels of 28-gravity oil and no water, through perforations from 4,256 to 4,296 feet, natural.

Total depth is 4,407 feet and 4½-inch casing is cemented at 4,405 feet. The plugged back depth is 4,405 feet.

Wellsite is 467 feet from north and 2,800 feet from west lines of section 14, block 26, H&TC survey and two miles northwest of Vincent.

REEVES TEST

Fred M. Newman, Inc., of Midland staked location for a 2,800-foot northeast stepout to the Cable (Delaware) pool of Reeves County.

The 6,000-foot operation will be drilled as No. 2 J. M. Rape, 1,980 feet from north and east lines of section 24, block C-1, psl survey and 15 miles southeast of Pecos.

Remote cutoff possible

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — The time might not be too far distant when Texas power companies can reduce peak demands by switching off your air conditioner temporarily without entering your house.

It might sound like Big Brother, but in most cases, consumers would decide whether to join in the scheme to reduce peak-hour demands on electric systems. The idea is to cut costs and save energy.

Houston Lighting & Power Co. and El Paso Electric told Texas Public Utility examiners Tuesday they are in the early stages of investigating such systems.

The commission's hearings on various proposals to make electricity cheaper and conserve energy resume next Monday with testimony from groups outside the power industry.

Commission members will decide this fall on recommendations to the Legislature as well as on policies that might guide their own decisions on electric rates.

"The load limiting devices under consideration are basically radio controlled devices that would shut down a water heater, space heater or air conditioner for a period of time... Our engineering department is evaluating different equipment," said Robert Hackett, El Paso Electric's rate manager.

Ross Doan, manager of rate and economic research for Houston Lighting & Power, said his firm is looking at "ripple control" of air conditioners.

Equipment, he said, ranges in price from $125 to $400 per household, so the company is taking it slow.

"We don't want to buy one method and have a better method come along," he said.

Doan said the equipment under study by Houston Lighting & Power is a "ripple system" that would turn off air conditioners for a few minutes at a time. The cut offs would "ripple" through the system so not everyone would be switched off at once.

He said HL&P would test customer acceptance first.

Melanie McCoy, commission project director, said load management could reduce power consumption at peak hours of the day.

This could help stabilize electric rates, she said, by avoiding or delaying construction of new plants to handle peak loads.

Peaking plants remain idle much of the time, but the cost of being prepared to meet the demands of consumption periods is built into the rates consumers must pay.

Ms. McCoy said load reduction by remote control switches is voluntary in most places that use it.

"Whether you choose to have it in your house is voluntary. But once you have it, you have no control over whether it is shut off or not. In most studies, the consumer is not even aware of it. It has a lot of possibilities, especially in high air conditioning areas," she said.

Leede stakes Concho test

Leede Oil & Gas, Inc., of Midland spotted location for a 4,300-foot wildcat in Comcho County, 10 miles southwest of Edem.

Scheduled as No. 1 J. B. Canning, it is 660 feet from south amd west lines of section 61, block 8, H&TC survey.

The drillsite is two miles east of the two-well J-D (Goen oil) pool and separated from it by a 4,255-foot dry hole.

Long-stalled energy bill takes small step forward

The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — President Carter's long-stalled energy bill took another small step forward Tuesday as House and Senate conferees settled their final differences on natural gas pricing.

Six and one-half months after they began talking about the gas issue and three weeks after they had approved a compromise removing federal price controls on newly discovered gas by 1985, the conferees resolved a list of minor issues which they had skipped over while trying to settle the central issue of price controls.

The final action provided for civil penalties up to $5,000 for violation of federal regulations that a "reasonable man" should have known existed. Sen. Henry M. Jackson, D-Wash., leader of Senate conferees, looked around at the weary conferees who had been butting heads since before Christmas and said that was "a good note to end on."

It has been one of the most difficult House-Senate issues to resolve since billions of dollars at stake and the two bodies went in opposite directions on the question of deregulation. The House approved Carter's plan to continue controls at a higher level and extend them from the interstate market to cover intrastate gas consumed in the state where produced. The Senate voted to deregulate new gas in two years.

The ceiling price on the first sale of gas at the wellhead is now $1.49 per thousand cubic feet. Under the compromise ceiling on new gas would rise immediately to about $1.93 and would go up annually by about 10 percent, assuming inflation of six percent. Controls on new gas would expire at the end of 1984 but could be reimposed for one 18-month period by president or Congress and extend to not later than the end of 1988.

The complicated gas proposal must now be reduced to legislative language, a task that may take a month. The staff must also finish putting in writing three parts of Carter's energy package — dealing with conservation, coal conversion and utility rate structures — which the conferees agreed on last fall.

There remains one major unresolved issue in the non-tax part of the energy bill. The Senate voted to ban production and sale of gas guzzling cars. The House on the other hand approved Carter's plan to tax, but not ban, inefficient cars. The conferees must meet again on that.

Once those four parts of the package have been written they will be sent first to the Senate and then to the House for final approval. The gas plan probably will run into another Senate filibuster but should win ultimate approval since it is deregulation. The House conferees approved the gas plan by a vote of 13 to 12, with liberals opposing it for giving away to much to producers and conservatives opposed because it didn't deregulate soon enough.

The gas compromise is supported by both the leading House advocate of gas regulation, Rep. John Dingell, D-Mich., and the leading champion of the gas industry, Rep. Joe D. Waggonner Jr., D-La.

Still to be resolved is the tax part of Carter's energy package and that may prove more difficult than gas.

The centerpiece of the president's program was a tax on domestic crude oil that would force its price up to world levels to cut use. The House passed it but the Senate rejected it. The administration is still trying to salvage the crude oil tax, but may have to rebate large parts of the revenue to the oil industry to get it by Senate conferees led by Sen. Russell B. Long, D-La.

Re-entry announced

Ashland Exploration, Inc., of Houston announced plans to re-enter the former W. B. Trammell No. 1 S. Kyle Moore, Fisher County wildcat failure.

Operator will clean out to 5,900 feet in the 6,121-foot dry hole which is 2,125 feet from south and 1,980 feet from west lines of section 257, block 3, H&TC survey and seven miles west of Longworth.

The project was abandoned by Trammell in January 1967.

MGF slates 4 projects

MGF Oil Corp. of Midland has announced locations for four projects inside production in the Ackerly (Dean) field. Three of the projects are in Martin County and the fourth is in Dawson.

The Dawson test is No. 1 M. E. Dyer. Site is 550 feet from south and west lines of section 43, block 33, T-4-N, T&P survey and 2.5 miles northeast of Ackerly.

Each of the Martin tests will be drilled to 8,850 U feet. They are approximately four miles southwest of Ackerly.

Application approved

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — Continental Oil Co.'s applicatioin to mine uranium in six South Texas counties met with approval Monday from a Texas Railroad Commission hearing examiner.

Chesley Blevins said reclamation standards for 18 of the 29 proposed sites should be more stringent than originally recommended.

Continental (Conoco) has been mining uranium in South Texas since 1972. It has produced more than seven million pounds of uranium oxide.

Cherry Hills rough is murder

DENVER (AP) — The sight of 6-foot-4, 215-pound Andy Bean tearing into an iron shot in the rough but managing to advance the ball a mere 20 feet underscored the point: The rough at Cherry Hills is murderous.

The 152 golfers assembled for the 78th U.S. Open Championship this week were almost unanimous in their appraisal of the rough, grown tall and thick by a rare, week-long rainfall earlier this month.

"The winner won't be in that rough much," predicted Bean, who must be rated one of the favorites after back-to-back titles at the Kemper Open and Memphis Classic the past two weeks.

"I hit that shot of mine on No. 10 about 20 feet, and I was swinging as hard as I could. You just have to stay out of it to win."

Jack Nicklaus, winner of 14 major tournaments and who figures to be a factor in this one, called the rough "the most uniform and difficult I've seen in an Open in a number of years. You cannot drive the ball off the fairway and expect to make a good shot from there."

Tom Watson, the 1977 Player of the Year and the current top money-winner, said the rough is "unmerciful. If you get in there, you really can't play."

Ben Crenshaw added that "if you get in the rough, it'll just cost a shot, that's all."

Because of that danger and the narrow fairways, the players frequently have chosen irons off the tee during practice rounds this week. With Cherry Hills' 7,083-yard length made shorter by the thin air at Denver's mile-high altitude, it made no sense to sacrifice direction for distance off the tee.

Nicklaus said he pulled out his driver only five times during his practice round Tuesday, and said he doubted he would use it that much during the tournament.

"There's no reason to," he said. "This course is playing very short."

Cherry Hills, which is hosting its third Open, has undergone some alterations since Arnold Palmer began his meteoric rise to the top of the golfing world with a final-round 65 to charge from 7 strokes back and win the event in 1960.

The course has been lengthened somewhat, and 12 sand traps have been added. The major change occurred at No. 1 — once a 346-yard straightaway hole on which Palmer drove the green en route to his 65. But it's a 399-yard dogleg-left hole now.

Palmer has returned, thanks to a special exemption granted him by the U.S. Golf Association, and his fabled army of followers remains loyal. Although a sentimental favorite, he can't be considered one of the top choices to win this week. After all, he last captured a major title in 1964 and last won in this country in 1973.

The games of Green, Trevino and Irwin seem especially suited for this event. All are accurate strikers of the ball, possess strong competitive streaks and are currently playing well. The tournament is something of a homecomeing for Irwin, who grew up in nearby Boulder, starred at football and golf at the University of Colorado, and played here often as an amateur.

Player, who says he wants to win this tournament more than any other in the world, won three consecutive tournaments, including the Masters, earlier this year.

The par-71 course features several short par 4s among the first seven holes, but toughens considerably from thhe eighth hole to the finish. Trevino calls those final 11 holes "the toughest you'll ever want to see."

Temperatures have climbed into the 90s during practice rounds, but it is expected to cool off somewhat for Thursday's opening round. However, a chance of thunderstorms, accompanied by strong, gusty winds also is predicted for Thursday.

M-Cubs face Gold Sox after 5-2 loss at SA

Midland's Cubs return to Cubs Stadium at 7:30 p.m. today to open a five-game series with the Amarillo Gold Sox after the San Antonio Dodgers took the odd game of their series at the Mission City Tuesday night, 5-2.

Jack Ledbetter will take the mound for Midland tonight against Amarillo. Ledbetter is 2-3 for the season.

Midland took a 2-0 lead into the seventh inning of Tuesday's game when the roof caved in. Randy Martz, seeking his first win over the Dodgers after three losses, had a three-hitter going when Kelly Snider hit a one out single to touch off a game-tying two-run rally. Charles Meyers grounded into a force at second and Bobby Mitchell followed with a single to center. Mark Bradley then looped a fly ball down the right field line and it rolled into the corner for a two-run double.

SAN ANTONIO then broke loose for three runs off reliefer Tom Butler to win it in the eighth. Hilario Soriano singled to center and Jack Perconte singled to left. Alex Taveras grounded into a force play at third, but Mickey Hatcher drilled a triple into the left-center power alley, a blow which scored two runs and chased Butler for lefthander Larry Groover.

The Cubs left two on in the sixth and threatened again with two-out in the eighth in chasing starter Rick Nitz. Joe Hernandez walked and Rosinski walked to bring in Mike Williams. Williams got Aaron Randall for the third out on a grounder to first and picked up the win while facing just one batter. Dave Patterson came on in the ninth to preserve the win and pick up his 15th save.

BRUIN BREWIN'S— General Manager Bill Rigney, Jr., has several promotions on tap for the Gold Sox series with Ladies Night Thursday, two Bit Beer Night Friday, First National Bank Night Saturday and Father's Day Sunday. All the games start at 7:30 p.m. except Sunday's game, which has a 6:30 p.m. start.

Angry Veeck may pull Sox out of Chicago

CHICAGO (AP) — Bill Veeck, president of the Chicago White Sox, is angry. Angry enough to threaten to move the White Sox out of Chicago.

"I've had it up to here," said Veeck, pointing to his throat. "It just isn't fair."

Veeck's complaint is that his White Sox are not getting what he considers their fair share of coverage in local newspapers.

"We win a game 1-0 against Cleveland last (Monday) night and you have to turn to page three and read aboit it," Veeck said Tuesday night. "The Cubs win a game in which Ken Holtzman gives up two runs and they're the ones who get all the play. If Holtzman had pitched for us and given up two runs, he'd have lost the game."

Veeck insisted that he has tabulations that reveal the Cubs received twice as much coverage as the White Sox last season when both clubs were in first place.

"We were still in first place when they fell out, but who got the coverage?" said Veeck. "They did. I realize that most of the circulation is on the North Side and I'm not asking for a 50-50 break. I'll take 40-60. But what do we get? We get 2575."

Veeck fought long and hard to gain control of the White Sox two years ago to keep the team in Chicago and from moving to Seattle. He succeeded and a bad club compounded by bad weather that amounted to a bad gate nearly wiped him out.

The team did better last year and Veeck had high hopes this season. The Sox, however, got off to a bad start and as late as May 27 were 12½ games out of first place and on the bottom of the American League West. Suddenly, they have won 15 of their last 17 games and are only 3½ games off the pace.

"When we were losing, they were calling us the worst team in baseball," said Veeck.

For right price, Rod's available

By RICHARD ROSENBLATT
AP Sports Writer

If the price is right, any of six American League teams will soon find itself with one of baseball's premier hitters.

Minnesota Twins President Calvin Griffith is the auctioneer and six-time AL batting champion Rod Carew is the merchandise up for sale — until midnight Thursday.

Here are Griffith's ground rules: "We're not going to give him away. We need a first baseman and pitcher and more, the 6-year-old president said Tuesday. "If we come up with the right names, okay. If not, there's another 12 teams in the National League we can talk to this winter. I don't have to make a trade. Carew's obligated to the Twins through 1979."

Carew is in the last year of a three-year contract that pays him about $190,000 annually and has an option year in 1979. Last week, Carew rejected a fiveyear, $2 million offer from Griffith.

Carew, the AL's Most Valuable Player in 1977, has stated that he would play for the New York Yankees, Kansas City Royals, Boston Red Sox, California Angels and the Texas Rangers.

Four clubs — the Yankees, Royals, Rangers and a team not on Carew's list — have expressed interest in the 32-yearold first baseman, but Griffith said none of the offers are good enough for "what we have to have." The Angels and Red Sox have not submitted bids.

"I'll sit down with Gene Mauch (Twins manager) on Wednesday and show him what's been submitted. If there is a deal, it won't be made until Thursday," The New York Times quoted Griffith as saying Tuesday night.

"The price they are asking seems outlandish," said Al Rosen, president of the Yankees. "I don't think anyone will go for it."

The Yankees, along with the Rangers, have freely spent their money in the past. But big money won't be part of the Carew deal because of Baseball Commissioner Bowie Kuhn's ceiling of $400,000 on any trade.

Mauch, who would hate to lose Carew, said, "Mr. Griffith would have to make a sensational deal to give up Carew. He's just asking too much."

Carew, an 11-year veteran with veto power over any trade, wants to see all the speculation end so he can get back to what he does best.

"I'm getting a little tired of it — with all this going on I just can't concentrate. I don't really care what happens at this point. "If I have to go, I'll go. There won't be any bitterness."

TED BATTLES
BATTLE SCENE

IF BASEBALL had any sense for the dramatic, he wouldn't have come striding out of the bullpen to the mound.

He'd appear, magically, out of a mist surrounding the mound, weed-shrouded, and a black sparrow would flutter into the night when he brushed debris from his left shoulder.

After all, Ken Holtzman was literally returning from the walking dead after two years in the Yankees masoleum, referred to by less confined residents as the dugout. And it was before a prime time national TV audience Monday night tuned in to ohh and awe at the havoc wrought by destructive Cincinnati bats.

Holtzman not only was returning from a not-quite-clear exile, but he came back in a game-on-the-line situation and with the team he began with 13 years ago.

And the Cubs hope he may be the answer to their long quest for a lefthanded starter, the kind the Cubs haven't had since Holtzman was dealt to the Oakland A's following the 1971 season for Rick Monday.

After pitching on four Oakland division winners and three World Champions, seasons in which his victory total ranged from 18 to 21, Holtzman locked horns with A's owner Charles O. Finley over salary and was dealt off in a huff to Baltimore at the start of the 1976 season along with Reggie Jackson. Ken reported to his new club still unsigned.

THE ORIOLES didn't have any better luck getting Ken to "ink his pact" than Charlie had, so after compiling a 5-3 record with the Birds, Holtzman and Doyle Alexander, another Orioles pitcher who had balked at signing, were dealt to the Yankees June 15.

Ken was 9-8 the rest of the year, but was relegated to Manager Billy Martin's doghouse after signing a three-year contract and has languished there the last season and a half.

Last year, Holtzman got into just 18 games while compiling a 2-3 record. The pitcher who averaged over 250 innings a season previously, managed just 72 innings. Things weren't any better this year.

Holtzman left the Yankees with a 1-0 record, logging 18 innings in five games on a staff so rich in talent that it could afford to let a Mike Torrez get away last winter and let a Holtzman rust on the bench.

The Yankees will never miss him, but Holtzman may be the answer to a prayer for the Cubs, if he pitches as he did in his first tour of duty in Chicago or as he did with Oakland when he was 4-0 in three World Series, including a five-hit shutout and a three-hit 11-inning win.

He might just be the kind of arm to keep the Cubs from wilting in the August heat as they did a year ago when relief ace Bruce Sutter went into drydock for what amounted to six weeks.

HOLTZMAN BROKE in with Chicago and was 11-16 as a rookie while working toward his degree in business administration at the University of Illinois. The next season he pitched only on weekend passes while fulfilling his military obligation, but what weekends. Ken was 9-0 that year.

Holtzman seemed programmed for a long and productive career with Chicago and was a mainstay with Fergie Jenkins on the 1969 club that had the pennant wrapped up with a nine-game lead in August only to blow it to the Miracle Mets in September. He was still effective in 1970 as the Cubs again contended and in 1971 he pitched his second no-hitter for the Cubs, but finished 9-15 as the Cubs went-over-the-hill.

Disenchantment became mutual as the Chicago front office began to break up the aging contenders of two years before, a collapse the Cubs never really lived down or forgot.

Ken was one of those who signified that he wanted out, and as has been Chicago's policy, they were quick to accommodate a dissatisfied employ.

There were rumors that Ken would like to return to Chicago as long ago as the spring of 1977, but it didn't become fact until Woody Fryman failed to fill the lefthander void for Chicago this spring.

THE CUBS just hope it works out as well as the last time they did mid-season business with the Yankees. Although he was the ace of the staff at 10-5, Yankees president Larry MacPahil became dissatisfied with Hank Borowy and traded him to Chicago in late July. Borowy was 11-2 for Chicago, thus becoming the first pitcher to become a 20-game winner while pitching in both leagues during the same season.

That was in 1945, the last time Chicago won a National League pennant.

Arnie's Army back for what may be last Hurrah

By WILL GRIMSLEY
AP Special Correspondent

DENVER (AP) — After 18 years, Arnie's Army is assembling full-force for another reunion ...and perhaps its last hurrah.

It's a wild and restless band — vocal, unfettered and fiercely loyal.

Win, lose or draw, this is Arnold Palmer's Open. It was here, over the mile-high Cherry Hills course, that the legendary charger from Latrobe, Pa., rallied from seven shots back in the final round to win the 1960 U.S. Open and change the whole complexion of professional golf.

The world hasn't forgotten.

Palmer's intense, squinchedup features again grace the covers of the slick golfing magazines. Historians are reliving the exciting days of the 1960s as if they were yesterday. The "Army" is in full cry.

"When historians take up the task of ranking the greatest golfers of all time," one essayist wrote, "they should look not only on how many major championships the golfer won but how many hearts the golfer stirred."

He added: "Whereas Jack Nicklaus played for the record book or against the memory of Bobby Jones, Arnold Palmer played for us."

Indeed, it's true that Arnie has not inundated us with major victories — only that one U.S. Open and not a single PGA — but few, if any men, have made a greater impact on the game.

Much of it stemmed from his remarkable triumph here 18 years ago when, on the final round, he drove the par-four first hole, birdied six of the first seven and, with a closing 65, beat off the challenges of Ben Hogan and an amateur named Nicklaus.

Three times after that he tied for the Open lead after 72 holes but lost in playoffs. He collected four green coats at the Masters and won consecutive British Opens in 1961-62.

But his torrid blades cooled. He never won a major crown after the 1964 Masters. His last tour triumph was in the Bob Hope Classic five years ago.

His legions never lost hope.

He has always been a golfer of the people, with a warm, homespun personality that appeals to women and a ruggedness that makes him a favorite among men. He will stand around for hours until every autograph book is signed.

A surge goes through the crowd when he jerks at his trousers and begins a charge. Women sigh when he stops to peer at an airplane flying overhead.

The magnetism never dulled, even though his skills did.

"I just found I couldn't maintain concentration," the 48-year-old son of a greenskeeper said. "People said I had too many business interests. Maybe so. When I was younger, I thought only of golf. Now I worry about a lot of things."

Palmer has vast and scattered business interests that have made him a millionaire many times over — real estate holdings, golf courses, clothes and golf club manufacturing businesses and a fat contract with NBC.

His hair is a bit grayer and thinner. He needs spectacles to see a fairway trap. He is a little bit heavier around the jowls and midsection but holds onto an athletic figure of 190 pounds.

"I run three miles a day in the winter," he said. "I haven't smoked in three years. I think my on-again, off-again battle with the tobacco habit has hurt my nerves.

"But if I can get it all together one more time, well, maybe, just maybe ..."

To many of the calloused, the words may have a hollow ring — too often repeated — but to Arnie's Army, they are gospel.

"Go, Arnie, go!"

By KEN RAPPOPORT
AP Sports Writer

It didn't take Fred Norman long to settle a score with the Chicago Cubs.

The last time the Cincinnati lefthander faced the Cubs, he was blasted off the mound by a fierce Chicago attack that resulted in a 10-1 loss.

That was a week ago. But on Tuesday night Norman threw it back in the Cubs' teeth, combining with reliever Doug Bair to fashion a four-hit, 1-0 triumph.

"Everything was there, the good command and good location," said Norman. "And I knew exactly what I wanted to come back with."

It was one of Norman's best performances in a Cincinnati uniform. He didn't allow a hit until Steve Ontiveros singled in the fifth and only three Cubs reached second base until the ninth.

THEN, WITH runners on first and third, Bair came on to strike out the last two batters and preserve the victory.

"He's the best reliever we've had since I've been here," Norman said.

Norman also got a big assist from his catcher, Don Werner.

"He called 90 percent of the pitches," Norman said of the youngster who is substituting for the injured Johnny Bench. "This shows the kid can call a good ballgame."

Werner not only gave Norman help behind the plate, but at bat as well. His sacrifice fly in the fourth inning provided the Reds with their winning run. The young catcher was starting his 17th straight game since a back injury sidelined Bench.

NORMAN NURSED that slim lead until getting into trouble in the last inning. Then Bair came to the rescue.

"Everybody in the league knows what I'm going to throw," said Bair, who has struck out 33 batters in 35 innings and fed both Dave Kingman and Manny Trillo a heavy diet of fastballs.

He crossed Kingman up by throwing a curveball on the first pitch, then came back with his hard stuff.

"In that situation, with a man at third, he has to be offensive, not defensive," said Bair. "He's a home run hitter. He can't be laying off those pitches."

He struck out Kingman on three pitches and then polished off Trillo on three straight for his 10th save.

Dodgers 5, Phillies 3

Lee Lacy slugged a three-run homer in the first inning and Steve Yeager hit a solo shot in the second to lead Los Angeles over Philadelphia.

Don Sutton scattered eight hits, three of them bases-empty home runs by Mike Schmidt, Richie Hebner and Greg Luzinski. The victory was Sutton's fifth in 11 decisions and first since May 22.

"This complete game came at an opportune time. We have a lot of guys down," said Sutton, referring to a weary bullpen. This is one of those times I was out there for the duration. Anything short of a touchdown or a field goal, and I was staying in."

Giants 9, Expos 5

Jack Clark drove in four runs with a double and a three-run homer to lead San Francisco over Montreal. Lefthander Bob Knepper, 8-3, survived a shaky three-run first inning and then retired 16 batters in a row to post the Giants' fourth straight victory.

The Expos took a 3-0 lead in the first on Tony Perez's basesloaded double. But the Giants rallied with two runs in the bottom of the inning off loser Rudy May, 6-6, and then went ahead to stay with three more runs in the fifth, with Clark contributing a key RBI double.

Mets 3, Padres 2

Lenny Randle's two-run single in the ninth sparked New York over San Diego. Randle's hit came off Padre reliever Rollie Fingers, 2-7, while Skip Lockwood, 7-4, gained the victory with two scoreless innings of relief work.

Trailing 2-1 going into the ninth, Lee Mazzilli ignited the Mets' rally with a single. He advanced to third when Padre left fielder Gene Richards bobbled Tim Foli's single for an error.

Braves 12, Cardinals 1

Pitcher Preston Hanna belted his first major league homer and recorded his fifth victory and Atlanta erupted for seven runs in the seventh inning to rout St. Louis.

Hanna's homer opened the fourth off Cardinals starter Silvio Martinez, 2-1. Hanna, 5-1, worked seven innings, allowing six hits.

LA turns to private leaders

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The mayor's Olympic committee of private business leaders said Tuesday it hopes to reach an agreement soon with a private party that would relieve the city of Los Angeles of financial responsibility for the 1984 Summer Games.

Mayor Tom Bradley also said that passage of the Proposition 13 tax limitation measure and any resulting budget cuts had not dimmed his hopes of the city hosting the Games.

In still another development, Sen. Alan Cranston's office disclosed that at the request of the mayor's committee, Cranston, D-Calif., had written President Carter, asking him to commit the federal government to assume responsibility for security for the Games.

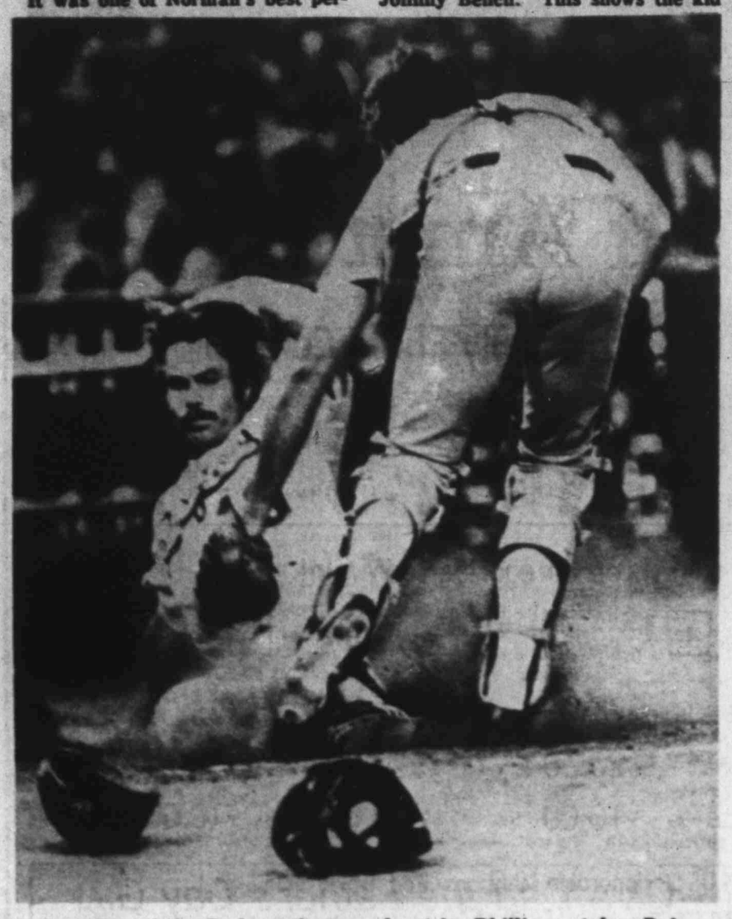

"Frankly, the city is unable financially to provide adequate security for the Games. In the event that the city is asked to carry these costs alone, I am informed that in all likelihood the city will have to decline the designation of the International Olympic Committee as host for the 1984 Olympic Games," he wrote.

Members of the committee later said a means would be found of financing the estimated $22 million for security costs even if there is no federal aid.

The committee members would not identify the party with which they are negotiating, except to say it is not from California. They did say the party was not connected with the entertainment industry nor is it an oil company or a foreign government.

They said the prospective guarantor is confident the Games can be held here at a profit and is desirous of sharing in that profit.

The Olympic controversy arose over the IOC's insistence that the city assume financial responsibility for the Games, something city officials have rejected. Bradley had said an attempt would be made to find an insurance company that would insure the city against financial loss for the Games.

Astros' bullpen rumored 'alive'

HOUSTON (AP) — The Houston Astros' bullpen, a source of early season concern, has shown signs of rejuvenation the last two games, a fact which encourages Houston manager Bill Virdon.

"It could make a lot of difference," said Virdon, after relievers Ken Forsch and Joe Sambito combined to retire the last nine Pirate batters in Houston's 2-1 triumph over Pittsburgh Tuesday night.

During one stretch, Houston relievers allowed at least one run in nine straight games, prompting Virdon to label his bullpen as his biggest disappointment of the year.

"The bullpen has been real encouraging the last two nights. Joe has a good arm and Ken seems to be more confident out there," Virdon said.

Cesar Cedeno tripled home Dennis Walling from third base with two outs in the eighth inning to provide the margin of victory as the Astros took their fourth triumph in their last five games.

Houston tied the score in the fifth on rookie Reggie Baldwin's first major league homerun, a shot which cleared the left field homerun stripe by inches.

Forsch, who retired all six Pirate batters who faced him, picked up his second victory in four decisions this season. Sambito, who needed only 11 pitches to strike out the side in the ninth inning, notched his fourth save of the season and his second in the last two nights.

"Joe (Houston catcher Ferguson) told me I was lunging toward the batters too much," said Sambito, who has been trying to shake a three-week slump. During that span, the 25-year-old lefthander has seen his ERA rise from 1.29 to 3.60. "Now, I'm trying to throw the ball with more fluidity."

Orioles Murray comes through in clutch again

By TOM CANAVAN
AP Sports Writer

Baltimore Manager Earl Weaver said it was a longshot, but pitcher Mike Flanagan had a better name for it — Eddie Murray.

The Orioles, saved from the brink of defeat by Murray's two-out 10th-inning homer, won in the 11th on Larry Harlow's RBI single and stretched their winning streak to 12 with a 3-2 victory over the Seattle Mariners Tuesday night.

And Weaver didn't bother to hide his suprise.

"That's what you hope for, but deep down you don't expect it," Weaver said of Murray's homer that wiped out a 2-1 Seattle lead. "That's the kind of stuff pennants are made of."

Pennants and wins, as Flanagan knows.

"I WASN'T leaving the dugout until after Eddie hit," Flanagan said after firing a five-hitter, chalking up his ninth victory in 13 decisions and winning his fourth consecutive game.

PAT KELLY, who knocked in Baltimore's first run, opened the 11th with a walk, stole second and took third on a bunt single by Billy Smith. Rick Dempsey walked to load the bases and one out later Harlow lined a soft single off the glove of first baseman Dan Meyer to score Smith, giving the Orioles their 20th victory in the last 25 games and the Mariners their sixth straight loss.

A home run by Leon Roberts gave Seattle a 2-1 lead in the 10th before the Orioles tied it in the bottom of the inning on Murray's homer off Seattle starter Glenn Abbott.

Red Sox 5, Angels 0

George Scott homered and drove in three runs and Butch Hobson drilled a solo homer to back the two-hit pitching of Jim Wright as Boston whipped Californa and rolled to its fifth straight victory.

Yankees 5, A's 3

White's first blast, batting right-handed against A's starter John Johnson, came in the third and tied the score 1-1. The second, with the score knotted 2-2 in the fifth, came when White was batting left-handed against reliever Rick Langford. It was the fifth time the veteran outfielder had homered from both sides of the plate in the same game.

Brewers 7, Tigers 2

Charlie Moore and Ben Oglivie hit home runs and Mike Caldwell scattered eight hits as Milwaukee defeated Detroit and posted its sixth consecutive victory.

Moore blasted his third homer of the year, a two-run homer in the second, and Oglivie drilled his ninth home run of the season with Hisle aboard in the seventh.

Twins 2-7, Blue Jays 0-2

Dan Ford drove in three runs with a homer and a single leading Minnesota to a 7-2 win over Toronto and a sweep of its twinight doubleheader.

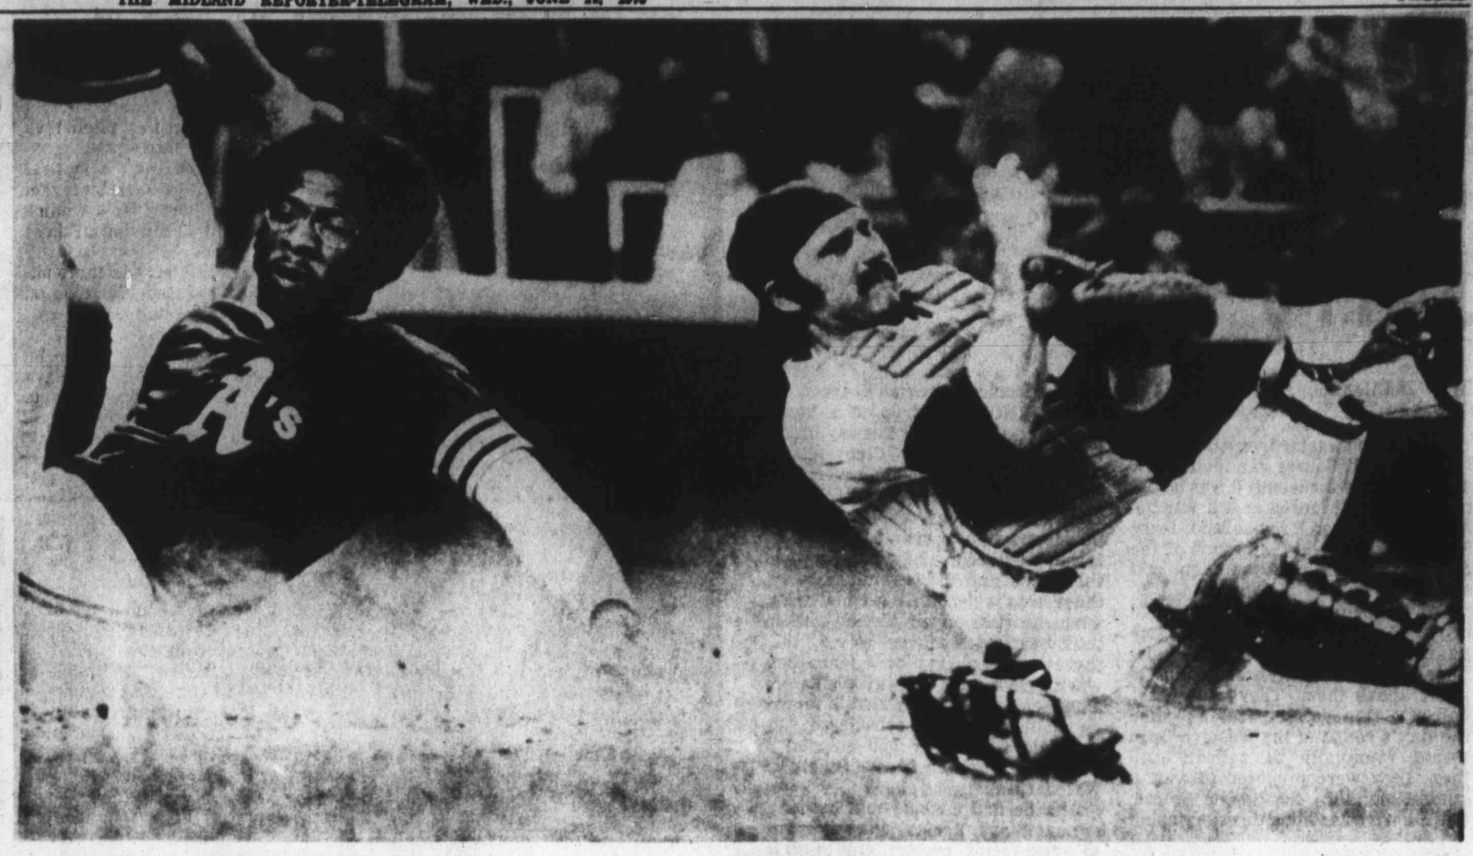

In the first game, Willie Norwood had two hits and scored both runs as the Twins defeated Toronto 2-0 to snap a six-game losing streak.

Geoff Zahn, 6-4, scattered seven hits in chalking up the victory in the second game while Dave Goltz went eight innings in the opener to pick up his third victory in seven decision.

White Sox 10, Indians 9

Chicago rallied from a nine-run deficit, riding 6 1-3 innings of brilliant relief pitching by Rich Hinton to a 10-9 victory over the Cleveland Indians and their 15th triumph in the last 17 games.

"They had to stop at 10," Chicago Manager Bob Lemon said referring to his team's run production. "They couldn't go out and get three or four more and make it easy on the manager. They're going to make an older man out of me."

New York Yankees catcher Thurman Munson, right, rolls on dirt at home after he makes a tag on Oakland's Mitchell Page Tuesday night. Page tried to score from first.

And nobody felt worse than Kansas City Manager Whitey Herzog, who made that move.

Gale, a hard-throwing, 6 foot-7 rookie, was seven outs away from no-hitting the Texas Rangers when to the plate came lefthanded-hitting Al Oliver.

Herzog signaled to first baseman Pete LaCock to move away from the bag toward second. One pitch later, Oliver hit a hard grounder squarely over first base for a triple.

It turned out to be the only hit the Rangers could muster as the Royals, slugging a record-tying seven doubles, took a 5-0 victory.

"Every National League manager told me he never hits one over the bag," Herzog said apologetically.

"And just before Oliver swung I said, 'If he gets Oliver, the sonofagun is going to pitch a no-hitter.'"

"Whitey played me right," Oliver agreed later. "I saw LaCock move off the bag just before the pitch. It's a rarity when I hit one over the bag."

For Gale, who is having a fairy tale season, it was the sixth victory against only one defeat and his first big-league shutout. He made a weak effort to be philosophical about missing the no-hitter. But his disappointment was obvious.

"We don't make up any more games on Oakland for a no-hitter, so what difference does it make?" he said. "I wouldn't have minded having it, though. I thought at the beginning of the seventh that if I could get by Oliver I might do it. I thought he would be the toughest out for me. It wasn't a bad pitch. It was in a pretty good spot, a slider low and in."

Oliver seemed more impressed with Gale's candor than his pitching arm.

"I respect him even more now," said the Texas outfielder. "He's right. It was a good pitch. But lots of pitchers wouldn't say that."

Gale got 12-hit support from his teammates. Frank White collected two doubles and a single and Tom Poquette drove in three runs in handing Ranger starter Dozle Alexander, 5-4, the loss. The Royals batted around in the fourth to take a 4-0 lead.

Ironically, Gale came within eight outs of no-hitting the Rangers last Wednesday in Texas. In that game, won by the Rangers in extra innings, Richie Zisk broke up the no-hit bid with a clean single in the seventh.

Yanks' line busy so Oakland's run counts

NEW YORK (AP) — A rather routine play in the seventh inning of Tuesday's Oakland-New York baseball game could have developed into a unique controversy but didn't. And umpire Ron Luciano couldn't have been happier.

With the Yankees leading 4-2 in a game they eventually won 5-3, Gary Thomasson singled to right for the A's, and pinch-runner Mike Edwards sped home. Edwards beat right fielder Reggie Jackson's throw to the plate but missed stepping on home.

"He missed it by a lot," said Luciano. "At that point, having passed his final destination, Edwards could only be called out by the Yankees appealing."

None of the Yankees did so because nobody saw Edwards miss the plate. However, New York team broadcaster Phil Rizzuto, having seen an instant replay during the telecast, tried to call down to the New York dugout and alert Manager Billy Martin.

One of the Yankees in the clubhouse saw the replay and went out to the dugout to alert Martin.

"I think it was Spencer," said Luciano. "I heard somebody say something about seeing it on TV and that the runner missed the plate."

At the time, Martin had removed starter Ed Figueroa and reliever Rich Gossage was warming up.

"While Gossage was warming up, I walked up the third base line to talk to Nestor (Chylak, the crew chief)," Luciano said. "I told him the runner missed the base and I thought the Yankees caught it off the television. He told me, 'Get out of here.' Then he said that if I thought they got it off the replay, and they appealed, I should go with my judgment, even if it meant to deny an appeal on those grounds."

No Yankee, including Spencer, would admit to having seen a replay and alerting Martin. If someone did, as Luciano believed, the information fell on deaf ears because the Yankees didn't protest.

"When I saw Gossage throw that first pitch," said Luciano, "I couldn't have told you if it was a ball or a strike. I was just glad to see a pitch."

Steers go outside for backs

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — The Texas Longhorns went out-ofstate this year to recruit two of thw nation's top running backs, but football Coach Fred Akers says he and his staff will still recruit Texas "first and foremost."

Texas only sought four nonTexans and signed running backs A.J. Jones of Youngstowns, Ohio, and Rodney Tate of Beggs, Okla.

Next year, Akers said in an interview with Lou Maysel of the Austin American-Statesman, the Longhorn staff will seek four to eight out-of-state players.

"We're not going to recruit wholesale outside of the state of Texas," said Akers. "We're going to recruit Texas first and foremost, but there are some outstanding individuals around the country we're going after, too."

Venturi leads Reno pin play

RENO, Nev. (AP) — Rich Venturi of Daly City, Calif., competing in only his second tournament of the year, led the $100,000 Professional Bowlers Association Natonal Championship after Tuesday's second round.

Venturi had a 3,696-pin total for a 231 average after posting 1,840 for his second eight-game block.

Mark Roth of North Arlington, N.J., was in second with 3,662, and George Pappas of Charlotte, N.C., third at 3,619 in the 264-man field. Pappas had 1,975 for his second round, averaging nearly 250 and rolling a 290 game.

Bill Spigner of Hamden, Conn., was fourth with 3,601 and Fred Conner of Mar Vista, Calif., the first-round leader, fifth with 3,586.

Rounding out the Top 10 were Boysie Huber of St. Louis, 3,570; Cliff McNealy of San Lorenzo, Calif., 3,560; Don Johnson of Las Vegas, Nev., 3,559; Art Trask of Fresno, Calif., 3,558 and defending champion Tommy Hudson of Akron, 3,552.

Johnny Reeser of San Francisco rolled the tourney's first perfect game. His 300 game was the first of the PBA summer tour and the fifth of his career.

The field will be cut to 66 after Wednesday night's eightgame block and cut again to 24 after Thursday morning's round. Finals for the $15,000 first prize are Sunday.

World almost ended for Lee, Jerry in '75

By DAN LUACK
Newsday

The storm swarmed over the Butler National Golf Course in minutes; low and black and turbulent. It was beginning to rain. It looked as if it was going to pour. Lee Trevino and Jerry Heard sat down in the middle of the 13th green and removed their golf shoes.

They opened an umbrella and crowded together, leaning back against their golf bags, getting comfortable, because day was turning to night above them. They expected a hell of a rain. In fact, they expected the day's round of the Western Open would eventually be called. Until then, they were prepared to wait it out, sitting there, shooting the breeze, and Heard was telling this story about

The flash was like a strobe in their eyes. The sound devastating.

The lightning struck the lake between the 13th and fourth holes and the electricity traveled across the surface water on the fairways and greens surrounding the lake, electrifying several acres of the golf course. Tony Jacklin had just begun his swing when it hit, and the club went flying from his hands, landing 15 feet away. It knocked the club from Arnold Palmer's gripin the middle of the 14th fairway. The shock ran up the putter that Jim Ahearn was leaning on, standing on the 16th green, and shook his entire body. Bobby Nichols, walking up the fourth fairway, an 8-iron in his hand, the metal spikes of his shoes plugged into the circuit, was knocked to the ground. Nichols scrambled tc his feet and began runing. Where, he did not know. He was hysterical.

ACROSS THE lake, on the 13th green, Heard was frozen in the middle of an expression, his hands extended in front of him as they were the instant the lightning hit. Now they were clenched fanatically tight. Every muscle in his body was hard, trembling, as the shock ran through him. Trevino, beside him, was lifted off the ground, his body shaking, his heart stopped. Trevino gasped for a breath.

And then he died.

"I felt good. Warm. I was as warm as a kitten. Nothing hurt." He lay there, on the ground, visions of his wife, Claudia, and his kids running through his mind. He was happy. He felt no pain.

Then he felt cold drops of rain falling on his face. He opened his eyes. He realized he had not died, and he was told he had been knocked unconscious. His body felt as if it were burning. His shoulder, where doctors would find a large exit mark from the electricity, felt like it was broken. A man knelt over him, covering him with a towel. Another, a medical technologist, began taking Trevino's pulse. Trevino still thought he was going to die. He was scared.

A few minutes later, he and Heard were rushed to nerby Hinsdale Sanitarium and Hospital; Nichols arrived an hour later. Trevino and Nichols were placed in intensive cae.

ALL THINGS considered, said Dr. Paul Fredrickson assuring everyone that the shock would have no affect on their golf swings. They would be back playing the next week. With that, he said good-bye and turned on his heel. The end, said Fredrickson.

The beginning, says Trevino.

Six weeks later, pains began shooting through Tevino's lower back and down through his legs. Back trouble seems to be an occupational hazard of playing professional golf, the numbers are so great.

And, Lord knows, Trevino had hit enough golf balls to twist his back into a pretzel. Yet, he had escaped any back trouble. Until this. Six months later, there were times when Trevino could not bend over. Six months after that, he dropped off the tour. And Thanksgiving week, 1976 — 17 months after lightning flashed and his muscles froze — he lay on an operating table in the Park Plaza Hospital in Houston with Dr. Antonio Moure, a neurosurgeon, repairing a ruptured disc in his lower back.

If those events seem to fall one after the other, like dominos, it's because in Trevino's mind they fell one after the other, like dominos. From a flash of lightning to a slice of the knife. What no one knew for sure, but what many suspected that day, just a week shy of Trevino's 37th birthday, was that the last domino was yet to fall. The last domino would be Trevino's career.

TREVINO GREW up in a house alongside the seventh fairway of the Glen Lakes Country Club outside Dallas. It was not, however, the typical house overlooking a country club fairway. The Trevino house had no electricity, no running water, no father. It stood in a hayfield. Between the house and the seventh fairway, there was a fence. It seemed then, when he first began playing golf in that hayfield when he was 6, that there would always be a fence between Trevino and fairways that were as green as grass. The kind of places he would play, you considered it a good lie when your ball stopped a moveable distance from a clump of watergrass.

And he had a swing that befit his surroundings. You couldn't get in any self-respecting country club with a swing like his. It is a compilation of driving range theories and a million swings. He doesn't come off both feet, like most driving range freaks, but only those who have been forced to play the banana ball would understand the way he zeroes in on a fairway: he aims two fairways left of the one he hits. Then he hits a burning fade inside his line and into the garden spot of the fairway.

"I asked him once how he hits that burning fade," said Mark Hayes, a fellow pro, "and he said something about starting with the club open and then he closes as he comes through. Something like that. It was bogus. It made no sense." It did not fit modern aerodynamic theories of the golf swing and the related flight of a dimpled ball. It only fit Trevino. You could only learn to hit a golf ball this way by hitting a million of them. Trevino hit his million a long time ago.

The Trevino-Dr. Pepper bottle hustle stories have since becom legendary (A man at a driving range, as one story goes, wanted to bet Trevino he couldn't hit the 100-yard sign. "Which zero do you want me to hit?" Trevino asked. The man backed off th bet).

WHAT ISN'T legendary is how hard Trevino worked. He is a man to whom sweat is the perfume of life. He thought the Marine Corps was a big camp-out. In the early 60s, after he came back from being a Marine, he took a job at the driving range for $35 a week (half what he made as a kid selling golf balls back across the fence to the country-clubbers). When the range closed at night, he would hit the rest of the balls — 200, 300, whatever — then go out on the range, a bag hanging on one shoulder, and pick up the balls with a homemade contraption like the litter-stickes in the parks. He had a stick with a tin can on the end, and he would scoop up the ball and put it in the bag. He would pick up a few hundred balls with his right hand, then a few hundred with his left, and go back and forth until his forearms were numb. He wanted strong forearms. He got strong forearms.

Knowing all that, as Perry Leslie did, he was not surprised that Trevino awoke before he did. Leslie, whose own golf career has not exactly taken off, is one of Trevino's best friends on the tour. In 1976, he was playing with Trevino in Charlotte before the tournament there when Trevino played his last few holes before succumbing to the pains in his back, and now, five weeks after Trevino's surgery, he had come to drink a few margueritas on New Yer's Eve and he spent New Year's Day watching football games.

It was 8 a.m. when Leslie got up and wandered by the gym in Trevino's new house in El Paso. Trevino had been in the gym two hours at that point, working out, pushing through the pain that should have made him quit. "There were tears in his eyes, it hurt so much," Leslie said.

PAIN WAS nothing to fear. Trevino had played on the tour with pneumonia, had gotten out of his hospital bed after an appendectomy and gone straight to the U.S. Open in 1972.

Against his doctor's advice, of course.

He always considered a doctor's advice as strictly that — advice. He wasn't bound to it. He had no intention of waiting as long as the doctors wanted after his back surgery. By the time Lesie arrived, Trevino was spending eight hours a day in his gym. "As he felt better," said his second wife Claudia, "he would go out and chip

Winkles at last speaks his piece

OAKLAND (AP) — Bobby Winkles has spoken up, three weeks after resigning as manager of the Oakland A's, explaining "it just boiled down to a difference in philosophy on how one human being treats another."

Winkles' A's led the American League's West Division, as they still did under new Manager Jack McKeon going into Tuesday night's game in New York against the Yankees, when he surprised everyone by walking out before a game here May 23.

The difficulty of getting along with A's owner Charles O. Finley had gotten to be too much for him.

Winkles made that clear in a telephone interview with Ron Bergman, columnist for the Oakland Tribune.

"I appreciate the fact that Mr. Finley gave me the opportunity to manage," he said. "To be very truthful with you, the main thing was that it just boiled down to a difference in philosophy on how one human being treats another — how one human being relates to another."

Winkles is living now in Anaheim with his in-laws since his own home in that area is rented for the baseball season to California Angels pitcher Dyar Miller. The out-of-work manager said he and his wife, Ellie, planned to open a picture framing business soon but that he'd like to get back into baseball next year.

"I'm sure Mr. Finley wouldn't release me now if I got another offer, and I can't blame him," Winkles said. "I'd love to be back in baseball. I'd like to be back right now, but I know the rules and I agree with them."

Winkles also refuted an earlier story that said Finley was paying him only $20,000 as manager, saying "I made $50,000. Mr. Finley paid me well."

But he also said, "I didn't have to accept mental anguish ... I was carrying the job home a litte bit, and I don't like to do that."

Holmes is no Assasssin

By JIM MURRAY
Los Angeles Times

Larry Holmes may be good to his mother. He may put splints on wounded cats, help old ladies cross the street or win the Carnegie Medal for pulling puppies out of a flood. But the "Easton Assassin" he's not. He's a banjo hitter. If he were a ballplayer, he'd wait for a walk. He bunts. He spends entire fights going backwards. With him in the ring, it's not a fight, it's a sprint.

There have been worse heavyweight champions. Max Schmeling won the title lying on his back. Others got the championship through the cooperation of champions who permitted themselves to be counted out while shading their eyes from the sun, or who dove to the floor from invisible uppercuts for invisible bank accounts.

Larry Holmes is probably no worse than Marvin Hart or Tommy Burns. He's probably better than Ingemar Johansson but he's never going to make the world forget Dempsey.

Unless he beats Muhammad Ali a lot more decisively than he did Ken Norton the other day in Las Vegas, he'sd never going to be the 100 percent, by god, champion of the universe, anyway.

You have to beat a legit champion by a far wider margin than Holmes did Norton to get his title. After 15 rounds of fist fighting, challenger Holmes had 428 points on the cards of three judges and champion Norton had 427. The challenger did most of his scoring while in fast, furious flight. He made his fight like a guy backing out of the swinging doors of a saloon.

They used to give points for aggression in this business. The guy who made the fight got patted on the head at least. If you put two Larry Holmeses in the ring, you might as well conduct the fight by mail.

I have to think there's just something about Ken Norton that ticks people off, particularly fight judges. Maybe they just resent movie stars, although Kenny has always been the type that has to take his shirt off to make a living. I mean, he's never going to get any Noel Coward roles.

Maybe he's never going to get to be champion again, either. When they don't let you keep your title after a fight in which you come up one point short out of 855 points, you have to wonder if you're using the wrong toothpaste.

Page says A's may stay on top

By BARRY WILNER

NEW YORK (AP) Mitchell Page thinks he knows why the Oakland A's led the American League West before Tuesday's games. He also thinks they may stay there.

"It takes a year for a team to grow into a family," said Page, one of the top rookies in baseball last year but plagued by injuries and an inconsistent bat this year. "We're growing real close while playing together.

"Last year, we didn't grow together, didn't have the right attitude. Now, we added seven guys from one team (San Francisco in a trade for Vida Blue) and have six guys from the Pirates' organization. Those guys are close and easy to get into things with."

Meanwhile, Page has had problems. A foot injury sidelined him for all of spring training and the first couple weeks of the season. His batting average has hovered around .270, but he feels ready to break out and approach last year's .307 average. Page also had 21 homers and 75 runs batted in during 1977 while stealing 42 bases, including 26 in a row, an AL record.

"I've got to realize my role with this team is to hit, steal bases, knock in runs and score," he said. "I get paid to do those things."

What he doesn't get paid for, he said, is defense.

"They say I have got hard hands," Page said. "But I made one error this year and that came because of something done to the field for a soccer game. I slipped in the outfield.

"Next year I will be one of the top defensive players in the league because I will work on it. Now, they take me out after, say, seven innings for defensive purposes.

"I thrive on pressure. It makes me concentrate more. So I like to be in in the late innings. I play well then. I concentrate more."

Page also has added some pressure on himself by assuming a leadership role with the young A's. At 26, he is one of the elder players on the Oakland roster.

"There was a game where I struck out and threw my bat against the wall in the dugout," he recalled. "But that's not me. I let things bug me mentally but I shouldn't.

"I realized what I was doing to the team by doing that. I feel I can be a semi-leader on the team. There isn't one leader, it takes two or three guys and I can be one.

"Last season, I would try to get a guy up or fire up the team on the bus and people said it was because I was having a good year. Why should I be doing that since I was only a rookie, some people said. But that's the way I am.

Fed up Kroc claims Padres lack 'pride'

SAN DIEGO (AP) — The San Diego Padres lack "pride or guts" and he's fed up, says owner Ray Kroc.

In an interview Tuesday in the San Diego Tribune, Kroc said catcher-first baseman Gene Tenace "needs to go to an eye doctor — he can't tell a strike from a ball. He hasn't given this ballclub one thing since we got him."

"I'm sick and tired the way this ballclub has been playing," said Kroc. "It's pitiful. I'm thoroughly disgusted. I don't think they've got any guts or pride ...I'm not going to subsidize idiots.

"Whoever heard of (bleeps) being paid a major league salary who can't hit? I don't know what these guys want. You give them a private plane, a players lounge, everything under the sun. And still they respond like juveniles."

Kroc said only four players were "responding."

NHL sticks deadline on Islanders

MONTREAL (AP) — The National Hockey League's Board of Governors Tuesday gave New York Islanders President Roy Boe until July 18 to reorganize financially or lose his franchise, then heard a startling proposal which would merge the Cleveland Barons with the Minnesota North Stars.

"If, by the 18th of July, he has not provided a financial plan satisfactory to the Board, his franchise is terminated," said William Jennings, president of the New York Rangers, referring to Boe's financial problems.

The Rangers are one of Boe's creditors. He owes an estimated $3.2 million of his $19.5 million in hockey related debts to them as payment of a $4 million indemnity for infringing on the Rangers' 50-mile territorial rights when the Islanders entered the league in 1972.

The Islanders' matter was dispatched quickly by the Governors, who convened in executive session early Tuesday. After giving Boe the grace period, their attention shifted to the surprise plan of combining the Barons and the North Stars.

No approval had been given by the Board when it recessed for lunch. But North Stars President Gordon Ritz confirmed the existence of the proposal, under which the team would play its home games at the Met Center in Bloomington, Minn., the North Stars' current honme.

The Barons, who entered the league in 1967 as the California Seals and have suffered money troubles and poor fan support since then, would cease to operate.

Ritz said he assumed the combined club would operate in the four-team Adams Division, of which Cleveland currently is a member, along with Boston, Buffalo and Toronto. The Smythe Division, which includes Minnesota, Chicago, St. Louis, Vancouver and Colorado, would drop to four teams and the league's total would be reduced to 17 franchises.

Ritz admitted the possibility that an expansion franchise would be added in 1980.

and putt. Then he'd try to hit just a few short shots. But that would drain all of his energy and strength and he would be back in bed." Two or three days later, he would do it again. Eventually, he was hitting short shots every day. Then some drives."

The last week of February, he called Herman Mitchell, his caddy, and Albert Salinas, his road manager, and said he was going to Florida. The doctor recommended a seven-month layoff, and he had waited three. Long enough, he said, and he teed up the ball at Inverrary. He had no business being there.

"I was hitting 3-irons when the others were hitting 8-irons," Trevino said. But he had to get back. "I had to have some competition. I was dyin' for it. It's like a cigarette habit. Or an alcohol habit." It gets in your blood, the competition does, and you live on it after a while. It wasn't hitting 6-irons that Trevino loved, it was playing Jack Nicklaus for money. For a $100 Nassau or $50,000 jackpot. "I care nothing about playing unless it's in a tournament. When I go home, I don't want to play golf."

There was, though, probably more to it than that. No professional golfer had ever undergone major back surgery and come back and won. Bad backs had ended hundreds of careers. Back surgery had saved none. No one knew that better than Trevino. He had watched Julius Boros on Boros' good days, driving the ball long and straight even at 58. And he had seen him on his bad days, withdrawing from tournaments in the middle rounds, retreating to the clubhouse in stiff, bird-like steps. He knew Boros had never had the surgery and he knew why. Fear.

"Cary Middlecoff had the same thing, but he didn't want to take the chance that he would never walk again," Trevino said.

IN 1956, Middlecoff began suffering the same searing pains that Trevino would, but Middlecoff didn't have the surgery until August, 1963. ("No one wanted to operate," Middlecoff said, "and it's not the kind of thing you ask for.") By then, Middlecoff was 42. He came back and played maybe a half dozen tournaments in 1964 and knew it was over.

"To me," Trevino said, "it didn't make any difference whether I could walk or not if I couldn't play golf. Golf is all I've got. It's the only thing I've ever wanted to do."

Trevino himself says he never doubted he would make it back. He is, of course, virtually required to be one of greatest optimists of our time, considering where he came from to get where he is.

But deep in the mind of even the greatest optimist is a twinge of doubt. Heard, who was to carbon copy Trevino's back trouble and recovery after thelightning, believes Trevino had doubt. Claudia believes that, too. "He never said it," Claudia said, "But I'm sure it had to eat away at him. I think that's one of the reasons he had to get back out there so soon: He had to find out if he was going to be able to play."

TREVINO BURST onto the American sporting scene at Oak Hill Country Club in Rochester in 1968., He won the U.S. Open when hardly anyone knew who he was. But he quicklay let them know, inviting everyone in Rochester to a marguerita party in the clubhouse afterward. He was everything the Big Three (Palmer, Player and Nickalus) were not: poor, uneducated, chatty, irreverant, tattooed, and a teller of dirty stories. He was the Statue of Liberty of golf. ("Give me your tired, your poor . . .") He ws an immediate hero. He was the kind that Joe Schmaltz the ragman felt he could walk up to and engage in coversation about anything. And never did Joe call him Mr. Trevino. Always Lee. Everyone loved Lee.

And he loved them.

For a while.

The bliss of stardom could not last forever. "I remember one night in Hartford, Conn.," Trevino said, "my wife and I were eating dinner in this restaurant. Two women, who'd been drinking, came over to our table — it was really a little table — and pushed our plates over to put down something for me to sign. They pushed my wife's plate right into her lap. My wife didn't say a word and the lady didn't even notice it. I remember she said, 'Now be nice and sign this for my children.' She didn't even say please."

THAT HAPPENED — maybe not food in the lap, but something like it — every day of his life. The only place he and his wife could go in public, and not be surrounded, was Las Vegas.

They went to Vegas two or three times a year. Gradually, he began to withdraw publicly. "Maybe it was selfish of me and maybe it wasn't. I don't know. But I was self-made. When I was trying to get on the tour, I couldn't get a sponsor. Nobody wanted to help me. I made it on my own. So when I made it, I felt I didn't owe anybody anything. I only owed the game."

He paid his dues to the game. He played more tournaments than any of the established stars, and he played places that Nicklaus and Palmer wouldn't consider.

"You don't see Nicklaus at the Southern Open, do you?" asked one of the tour's lesser players. Trevino always played those places, tournaments where his name alone could be the difference in the tournament breaking even or not. That never changed. Nor did his relationship with the other players, they say.

But on the course, he changed. "Somebody would holler something bad at me," he said, "and I'd holler something back. You get smart back, and that gets around by word of mouth. Even if the guy deserved it. And it hurts you. And, too, the press picked those things up a few times and I got hurt even more."

NEWSPAPER AND television people had, from the beginning, looked upon him as God's gift. He was funny, full of things to say, and not afraid to say them. But through the summer of '73, he began to have less time for them. And, at times, he refused to talk at all. At the PGA championship that year, at Canterbury Country Club outside Cleveland, the 18th green was maybe 100 yards from the front drive. Trevino would have Salinas drive the car around the drive and wait for him as he came off the green. Trevino would sign his card, then rush through the crowds and past kids asking for autographs and jump into the car and be driven quickly away.

All of this, he thinks, now, began to affect his game. He went 15 months, through most of '73 and the first half of '74, without winning. And then he went from August, '74, to May, '76, and won only the Florida Citrus Open, not one of the biggies, before he won another notable tournament. He was no longer Supermex, it seemed, and in more ways than just with a 6-iron in his hand.

His caddy had been on the tour 15 years then, and was leaving Miller Barber, a steady check, for a man coming off back surgery. It was like selling your house to invest in lottery tickets.

"But I saw the man work," Mitchell said. "I never seen a man work as hard as he did." It began to pay. The 73s dropped to 72s, then 71s, then occasionally into the 60s. He was accomplishing in a few months what he had hoped he would accomplish by the end of the year. He was becoming competitive again. In the Danny Thomas Open on Sunday, Trevino won $28,500 and passed Arnold Palmer into second place in all-time earnings behind Nicklaus. Trevino has $1,783,893. Palmer has $1,781,759.

Miller answers threat by owner

By HAL BOCK
AP Sports Writer

Baseball's fragile labor peace shuddered ever so slightly last week when George Steinbrenner, owner of the New York Yankees, rattled a few sabers at the Major League Players Association and its executive director, Marvin Miller.

Steinbrenner recalled the negotiations with the players two years ago. "We were like David without a sling shot," he said. "Marvin Miller took, took, took. I have a lot of respect for Miller. He is a brilliant man. But next year we will meet him head on. He will find himself in the toughest negotiations he's ever seen. This time he'll know he's been in a ball game."

Miller chuckled over Steinbrenner's tough line, suggesting as William Shakespeare's Macbeth once did of another matter, that it was sound and fury, signifying nothing.

"I thought he made three points, or tried to," said Miller. "And I think he was wrong on all three. He called me brilliant. I think that's wrong. He said the negotiations were one-sided. I think anybody who analyzes the agreement would find him in error there, too. Our bargaining was in good faith and there was give and take in the settlement which was in the best interests of all parties."

And what was Steinbrenner's third mistake?

"I've been in industrial relations for 35 years," Miller noted. "In basic steel, there were negotiations in 1952, 1955, 1959, when we had a 116-day work stoppage, and 1965. Now, that was tough."

THERE WAS some interest in why Steinbrenner would assume a hard management line on talks that still are in the far-off future. The current contract does not expire until December 1979.

"He's done this before," said Miller. "I think he's misguided on a couple of scores. I think some owners who talk this way are unable to take a realistic look at where they are. They are locked into terrible predictions of doom, made when the last contract was signed, which just have not come true."

MILLER LIKES to cite the very same facts that baseball trumpets so proudly — attendance records, lucrative radio-television income, competitive balance. The position, of course, is mutual. Commissioner Bowie Kuhn's office has just published an informative pamphlet designed to lure multisport athletes to baseball. Included is a comprehensive section on the financial benefits of playing the game, including a healthy pension program. Those are benefits won at the bargaining table.

"They don't seem to understand," Miller continued. "The game is as prosperous today as it ever has been. Total salaries represent 26 percent of baseball's revenues. That's one of the smallest percentages of any industry in our country and, in fact, it is a smaller percentage than it was 50 years ago."

Apparently, the arrow that sticks deepest in management's craw from the last settlement is the free agent escape hatch. Those seven-figure contracts sting but don't forget, Miller hasn't negotiated any of them. The owners have. And Steinbrenner has been one of the most active in that area.

"Throughout our talks they presented a number of problems that free agency would create," recalled Miller. "They said hundreds of players would be floating around. I said that was bunk. They said players would all go to the glamour cities. I said that was also bunk. They said competitive balance would be affected. And I said that was bunk, too."

Miller turned out to be right on all three counts, and, in fact, on a fourth as well.

"They also said it would cost them more money and I said, 'Yes, it will,'" he recalled. "I never tried to kid anybody. If you go from a straight monopoly to a more free market, there obviously will be a significant rise in salary levels. But you must remember this. Employers don't pay uneconomic salaries."

Thompson lone NBA repeater

CORONADO, Calif. AP — Guard David Thompson of the Denver Nuggets was the only repeater on the National Basketball Association's 1977-78 All-Star team, announced Tuesday prior to the league's annual summer meetings.

Thompson, who made the squad last year as a forward, was joined on the first team by guard George Gervin of San Antonio, center Bill Walton of Portland and forwards Truck Robinson of New Orleans and Julius Erving of Philadelphia.

The second team consisted of rookie Walter Davis of Phoenix and Maurice Lucas of Portland at forward, Kareem Abdul-Jabbar of Los Angeles at center and Paul Westphal of Phoenix and Pete Maravich of New Orleans at guard.

Walton was the leading votegetter in the balloting among three writers from each league city with 121 points, far outdistancing Abdul-Jabbar, who got 42. Points were tabulated on the basis of two for each first-place vote and one for a second-place mention.

Walton was the league's Most Valuable Player this year while Abdul-Jabbar won that honor last season.

Gervin, the NBA scoring champion, topped the guards in the balloting with 114 points. Thompson received 102 and Westphal was the only one else who was close, with 82.

The tightest race was at forward where rebounding champion Robinson received 92 points to 70 for Erving, 50 for Davis and 40 for Lucas.

The fight was a good one. But it was a good one because Norton made it so. Larry Holmes is not going to scare anyone into early retirement. One thing is sure: If he doesn't beat Ali more decisively than by one point out of 855, they will not only give Ali the decision, they may even give him Holmes.

Wendy Goodwin joins MC golfers

Wendy Goodwin, Midland and Lee's standout golfer, is being recruited to play for Midland College this fall.

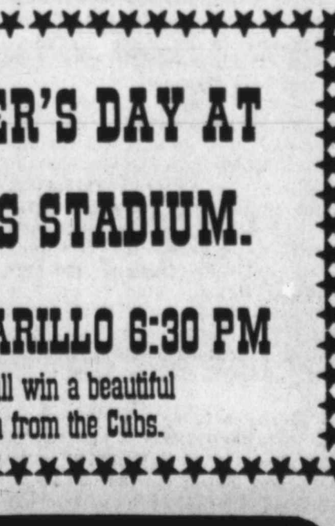

Wendy, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Jack Goodwin, lettered two years for the Lee girls golf team and also won two letters in varsity swimming.

This past season, Wendy was second in District 5-4A competition, placed fourth in regionals and tenth at the state tourney for the second straight year. She was named to the 1978 all-state team.

Miss Goodwin was coached in high school by Paula Ferguson.

Plante inducted in NHL Hall

MONTREAL AP — Three players — goal tender Jacques Plante, defenseman Marcel Pronovost and right winger Aney Bathgate — will be inducted into the Hockey Hall of Fame Sept. 13, it was announced Tuesday at the National Hockey League annual meetings.

Plante played with the Canadiens, the New York Rangers, the St. Louis Blues, the Maple Leafs and the Boston Bruins for a total of 16 seasons between 1954-55 and 1973-74.

He won the Vezina Trophy with Montreal as the league's top goaltender six times alone and shared it once. He achieved all-star status seven times and won the Hart Memorial Trophy as the league's most valuable player with Montreal in 1961-62.

Plante also pioneered the face mask for goalies. He had used the mask in practice but could not get permission from Toe Blake, then coach of the Canadiens, to wear it in a game until he was struck in the face by the puck during a game against the Rangers early in the 1959-60 season.

Plante issued an ultimatum in the dressing room after receiving treatment — either he would wear the mar1$..r658 he returned to the ice or he would sit out the rest of the game. Blake relented and the era of the masked goaltender had begun.

Pronovost played 20 seasons in the NHL, 15 with the Detroit Red Wings and the final five with Toronto.

He broke in as a regular with the Red Wings in 1950-51 and, by teams four times.

Bathgate, who played 15 full seasons with the Rangers, Toronto, Detroit and the Pittsburgh Penguins between 1954-55 and 1970-71, was one of the pioneers of the slap shot and introduced the curved stick to the NHL.

He scored 349 goals and added 624 assists for 973 points in 1,069 regular-season games. His finest season was 1958-59, when he scored 40 goals and had 48 assists for 88 points with the Rangers and was named winner of the Hart as most valuable player.

Pollock, Tutt and Bickell will be inducted as builders at the same time as the three players in September, bringing the total members to 222. There will be 155 listed as players, 59 as builders and eight as referees.
