Primary candidate

Midlander Clayton Williams officially entered the race for the Republican gubernatorial nomination Wednesday during a four-city campaign tour across the state. His day ended with a Midland rally.

Williams Midland's first bidder

By JANE MARLER DEES
Staff Writer

DALLAS — Clayton Williams Wednesday became the first Midlander in history to enter a Texas gubernatorial race and the first Republican committed to the 1990 campaign.

And if recent history is any indication, it was the first time the candidate broke down and cried at his annoucement speech.

Williams had brought his staunch anti-drug campaign message to a hot and crowded auditorium at the STRAIGHT drug treatment center here Wednesday afternoon.

The cowboy-hatted candidate who claps with the crowd when he's introduced was growing tired from the rigourous announcement tour that began in Austin, moved onward to a muggy Houston, just arrived in Dallas after a bumpy airplane landing, and still had the big picnic for 2,000 in Midland to go.

The stark blue STRAIGHT center auditorium brought back memories of 1986, the oil bust and the somber day he and wife Modesta handed over their first-born son to the drug abuse counselors for what resulted in a more than a year of treatment.

"I'm real proud of you, Clayton," Williams said to his son, now recovered and a cowboy at the family ranch, who stood nearby.

And then, tears began to roll down the cheeks of the 57-year-old man who said he will spend $3 million of his "life savings" on the gubernatorial primary race so he can "win ... not fight ... the war against drugs."

It was a campaign consultant's dream. But the media and political consultants — several of whom were on the chartered American Airlines campaign jet Wednesday — are quick to point out the message is Williams' and was not created in "some smoky back room."

"I walked in and he said, 'Jay, this is what I'd like to do. Can I sell it?' " recalled Jay Townsend, a political strategist also overseeing the gubernatorial race of California Sen. Pete Wilson.

"He knows exactly what he wants to do. His heart's in it. He wants it and he wants it badly. That's two thirds of the equation in a political race," Townsend noted.

The remaining third is "the Lord," according to Chick Williams, the candidate's sprightly octogenarian mother from Fort Stockton.

The mother, jumping to her feet, clapping vigorously and nodding in agreement during her son's Austin and Midland speeches, recalled the December day he asked her, "Momma, what do you think daddy would think if I ran for governor?

"I said, 'Now honey, take the Lord in with us on this thing. It's the most important thing you'll ever do. Keep your health and lose, win or draw, have a good time,' " she explained.

Governor's race his latest arena

By WENDY E. LANE
Associated Press Writer

It was only last December that he laughed at the idea.

Asked if he would ever consider running for political office, Clayton W. Williams Jr. gave his answer, then threw back his head and guffawed.

"I may be dumb, but I'm not stupid," he cracked.

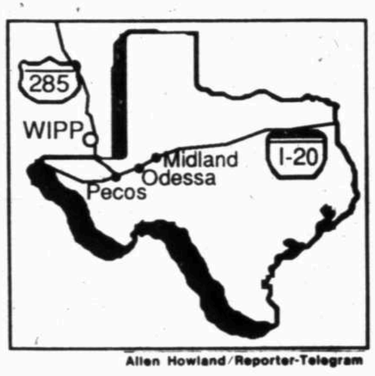

Yet little more than a month later, the 57-year-old oilman, entrepreneur and diehard Aggie was probing the possibility of his first political race and on Wednesday made his formal announcement to enter the Republican gubernatorial primary.

Now, instead of racing up the Capitol steps on horseback as he once did in a protest against deregulating AT&T, he'd like to make a more dignified entrance as the state's chief executive.

Friends and associates, some of whom had encouraged Williams to enter politics, say the change of heart came after his return from an annual big-game hunting trip to Pakistan right after Christmas.

Nuclear waste routing could draw reaction

By ALLEN E. HOWLAND
Assistant City Editor

Allen Howland/Reporter-Telegram

The prospect of two truckloads of low-level radioactive waste per month rolling down Interstate 20 through south Midland for the next 20 to 25 years could bring local residents and officials out to comment during a public hearing Monday in Odessa.

The U.S. Department of Energy has extended the standard 60-day comment period on the Supplement to the Environmental Impact Statement for the Waste Isolation Pilot Plant near Carlsbad, N.M., until July 11, and has added two more hearings to the original schedule, including Monday's 9 a.m. session at the Holiday Inn Center.

The Odessa hearing — the only one set for Texas — along with one July 6 in Ogden, Utah, will focus primarily on transportation issues related to the government's multimillion waste disposal site.

County emergency response officials plan to observe the hearings, but none expect to testify during the session.

Midland emergency planning coordinator Bob Edgerton said this morning he plans to send his deputy to the all-day hearing "to find out what people are saying about the project."

Conflicts with a commissioners' court meeting and budget workshop in Ector County will preclude emergency corrdinator Pat McAllister from attending the hearing, but she said county health officials and the radiological officer of the fire department will observe the proceedings.

Key issues include safeguards against accident-related leakage of radiation from the transuranic waste being transported cross-country by truck and continuous satellite tracking of the hazardous payloads.

A stainless steel vault-within-a-vault surrounded by fire-retardant, shock-absorbent foam inside a tough outer coating design is currently awaiting certification by the Nuclear Regulatory Commission. Each truck would haul three of these Trupact-II vessels, which each can hold 14 55-gallon drums of waste.

The transuranic wastes the WIPP site is designed to handle consist of many everyday items used by workers at national defense facilities, such as rubber gloves, shoe covers, lab coats, plastic bags, laboratory glass and rags which become contaminated in ordinary operations.

Crack use growing in Midland

By PATRICK CRIMMINS
Staff Writer

Crack, the potent rock candy of cocaine users, has become so popular in Midland that the city apparently has become linked with deadly Los Angeles street gangs.

"We have a lot of crack activity," said Midland police Sgt. Larry Bledsoe, who heads the department's four-officer narcotics unit. "And we feel this is a direct link to the gangs of Los Angeles. We have established the link. The gangs have connections with the local people."

Since the first of the year, narcotics officers have made 17 crack-related arrests, according to department statistics. And those arrests don't include those made by patrol officers, Bledsoe said. At least two of the cases involved Los Angeles residents, and at least two arrests were made at Midland International Airport shortly after commercial flights that originated in the Los Angeles area landed in Midland.

"Crack in the Midland area has become a major problem," Bledsoe said. "It (crack) is cheaper out there. They are importing it in L.A. because of the cheapness and availability.

Showdown likely on child care issue

By JOHN KING
AP Labor Writer

WASHINGTON — Senate Republicans are promoting tax credits as the answer to rising child care costs, but Democrats say their combination of tax help and direct subsidies will emerge the winner in a partisan showdown over the issue.

After a week of debate over the best approach to a national child-care policy, senators prepared to choose today between a Democratic leadership plan that has the support of one leading Republican and a GOP alternative that has the backing of the White House.

Under an agreement Wednesday, the Senate was to vote at noon today on which plan to make the centerpiece of its child-care package.

But the plan will be subject to further amendments and a final vote was not expected until Friday.

As the debate dragged on late Wednesday, the co-author of the leadership plan took the floor again to defend the package and said a week's debate was enough.

"Let's get about the business," said Sen. Christopher Dodd, D-Conn. "Let's not drag this out."

Dodd and the co-author of the revised Act for Better Child Care, Republican Sen. Orrin Hatch of Utah, have spent most of the week defending their plan from Republican criticism, much of which they say is based on an earlier version of the ABC bill.

"They can mimic us," Dodd said of Republican critics. "They can make fun of the name. They can choose other letters to describe it."

Flag-burning vote 'grieves' Texas veteran

DALLAS (AP) — A man who was spared a prison term when the U.S. Supreme Court issued a ruling that limited the power of states to outlaw desecration of the American flag predicted that the ruling would spark celebrations.

"We want to turn up the heat on the flag and on the system of imperialism it symboliizes," Gregory "Joey" Johnson, of New York City, a member of the Revolutionary Communist Youth Brigade, said following Wednesday's controversial ruling.

He predicted the ruling would spark celebrations Friday.

The ruling brought swift, but varied reaction from those who praised and criticized the ruling.

Disappointment was expressed by a Korean War veteran who recovered the remains of an American flag spat upon and burned by protesters during the Republican National Convention in 1984.

Seven more 'rioters' executed in China

■ Related stories — 12A

BEIJING (AP) — Seven more "rioters" were executed today, bringing to 27 the number reported put to death in two days for their roles in protests against the violent suppression of the pro-democracy movement.

The official Xinhua News Agency said the seven people executed in Beijing today were convicted of setting army trucks on fire, stealing army goods or assaulting soldiers when the military invaded the capital on June 3-4.

The executions, ignoring international pleas for clemency, came a day after three men were executed in Shanghai for setting fire to a train June 6 after it ran through a barricade, striking and killing six protesters.

Also Wednesday, 17 people were executed in the northeastern provincial city of Jinan, a reporter for a local newspaper said by telephone.

Xinhua gave no details of today's executions other than to say a court had rejected appeals of the seven, who were convicted Saturday and included workers but not students.

Most executions in China are with a bullet to the back of the head.

The Shanghai executions were the first announced for crimes allegedly committed during nationwide protests after the army killed hundreds of unarmed civilians in Beijing in June 4.

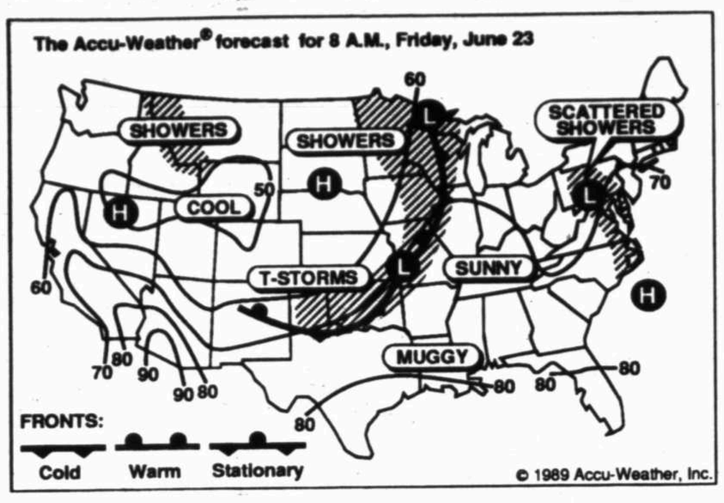

None of the 27 people reported executed have been identified as students, who inspired the pro-democracy movement.

Foreign Ministry spokeswoman Li Jinhua said today that it was "futile" for foreign countries to try to exert pressure on China. She said suppression of the nationwide "rebellion" was an internal affair and other nations should not interfere.

Foreign leaders have urged China to be lenient with people arrested their roles in the pro-democracy movement and for taking part in protests once the crackdown began.

WEATHER SUMMARY

From Staff and Wire Reports

Cloudy skies and a 30 percent chance of thunderstorms, some possibly severe, are in the forecast for tonight, according to the National Weather Service at Midland International Airport. The low will be in the middle 60s and winds will be from the east at 5-15 mph.

Clouds are expected to decrease on Friday. The high will be near 90 and winds will shift slightly to the southeast at 10-20 mph.

Wednesday's high of 101 was six degrees cooler than the record high temperature of 107 set for that date in 1934. The overnight low of 76 was 16 degrees warmer than the record low temperature of 60 set for this date in 1973.

STATE

Thunderstorms are possible across most of the state tonight and Friday and forecasters warned of the possibility of severe thunderstorms in the South Plains, Permian Basin and western portions of North Texas.

It will be partly to mostly cloudy statewide tonight and Thursday.

Lows tonight will be mostly in the 60s, ranging from the upper 50s in the Panhandle to the mid 70s in South Texas.

Highs Friday will be mostly in the 80s and 90s.

WILLIAMS

And with a chuckle, she added, "I know he'll have a good time."

He does. Williams can even make reporters laugh.

But the other side to his campaign is dead serious — "the three D's — Don't do drugs."

Earlier in Houston, Williams spoke to minority community leaders in a restaurant in Denver Harbor, a neighborhood on the northeastern outskirts of downtown which has fallen prey to crack cocaine abuse and the crime which accompanies it.

Members of the impromptu roundtable discussion on drugs ate fajitas and were invited to tell Williams what they wanted from a governor.

"It was really gratifying to hear someone finally come and say, 'I want to do something. I want to help. I want you to tell me how you feel.'", noted Dolores Adame, chairman of the board of the Houston Hispanic Chamber of Commerce.

"For him to say, 'I'm coming forth to tell you I want to help and I'm listening.' I'm impressed with that."

Many Texans might also have been impressed with "that" thanks to an impressive television, radio and print media turnout in Austin, Dallas, Houston and Midland.

Campaign Manager Buddy Barfield explained Wednesday that the preliminary campaign strategy will focus on "hunting where the ducks are" or blitzing the Houston-Dallas media markets.

Barfield and other consultants concurred that Williams' statewide name identification is their only current concern as no one else has thrown his hat in the ring.

The Williams 17-city campaign swing was to continue today and Friday.

Throughout the day Williams repeated he will accept the "lumps I have to take" for making Democratic campaign contributions to the likes of Attorney General Jim Mattox, State Treasurer Ann Richards and U.S. Sen. Lloyd Bentsen.

Williams took another knock Wednesday night in Midland when reporters asked him why he hadn't voted in the 1986 primary or general election.

Midland County Election Administrator's office records confirm the fact.

Campaign media consultant Dick Leggitt, a former United Press International reporter, was quick to point out he believed some precinct records were lost in the computer system that year.

Standing before the huge Texas flag that had served as a backdrop for his Midland announcement, a hoarse Williams explained, "Maybe I didn't vote, but I always vote.

"I'm an Aggie and I'm not perfect, but it's rare that I don't vote."

PROFILE

"When a guy gets as high a profile as Claytie for various things, the state's biggest Aggie and the ClayDesta television commercials, it's not unusual for people to want him to get into politics," said Midlander Ernest Angelo Jr., who as a Republican national committeeman plans to be neutral in the GOP primary race.

Recent polls show not many Texans east of Interstate 35 know Williams, but around his West Texas stomping grounds, he's regarded as the ultimate good ol' boy — a tough, wealthy businessman with down-home charm.

"He's a man who gets things done," said longtime friend and business associate Bob Smith. "He's not afraid to venture out and take a chance."

From his childhood in Fort Stockton, to his first jobs selling insurance and waiting tables, Williams has always been able to stay one step ahead of the latest economic trend or tragedy, and his accumulated wealth will make his campaign a well-financed one.

He has committed more than $3 million of his own money to the campaign effort.

Williams says he entered the oil and gas business with $2,000 savings and built a multi-million dollar empire that reached its peak in the early 1980s. He then branched out into real estate and banking under the name ClayDesta — a combination of his name and wife Modesta's — and sold off much of his energy holdings before the oil crash.

Today his oil and gas exploration company operates more than 350,000 acres of leases.

Until he sold it in 1987, Williams' Clajon Gas Co. was the largest individually owned natural gas company in the state.

"When the time came, I said, 'Claytie, you're not such a big deal. You better retrench, consolidate, sell,'" he has said, stressing that submerging his ego saved him from the ruin which befell many oilmen in the mid-80s.

Meanwhile, he invested in agribusiness. He currently operates an alfalfa farm and cattle ranches encompassing 482,000 acres in Wyoming and Alpine, which features a swimming pool shaped like an Aggie boot. High tech also lured Williams, and he founded ClayDesta Communications Inc., which eventually became the largest Texas-based telephone company. The sale of the company was completed to Atlanta-based Advanced Telecommunications Corp. earlier this year for $43 million in cash and stock.

Williams starred in a series of commercials for the company, shot at his Alpine ranch, Happy Cove, and showing him riding up to the camera on horseback to deliver ClayDesta's message.

The father of five children, Williams has two daughters from a previous marriage, and he and the former Modesta Simpson have two sons, ages 19 and 15, and a 13-year-old daughter.

He met his wife while guzzling beer and singing Mexican ballads one night in a Midland restaurant.

"I love to drink beer and sing mariachi songs ... and she picked me up the first night we met," he once joked.

Williams is known for throwing late-night parties and lavish black-tie cattle sales, helping round up cattle with his ranch cowboys and staging zany antics, even at serious occasions.

Last year, when leaders of the energy industry met to discuss their problems in grave tones, he burst in on a hospital stretcher wearing a hopsital gown and cowboy boots, was dumped in front of the Texas Railroad Commissioners, then carted away by a comely pair of nurses.

Williams shows his passion for his alma mater by flying Aggie flags from some buildings and drilling rigs. He also supports the school with dollars, bankrolling a $2.5 million student center bearing his name, and teaches an entrepreneurship course for which he won a teaching award.

His only previous attempt at elective office, for president of the Fort Stockton Jaycees, was a failure that Williams jokes humbled him for life.

But Williams has said small failures never daunt him from looking for opportunities.

"It's like being an old hunting dog looking for birds," he says. "If you get out there and get to hunting you'll find some birds, but you've got to get out there first."

WASTE

Most of this waste has low-level contamination, but because the radioactivity comes from elements heavier than uranium, with very long half-lives, they require special storage.

Provided the project moves ahead on schedule following this summer's public hearings, the next five years will be spent in a testing mode of the WIPP facility, using very small amounts of waste under select experimental conditions.

During this period, only 3 percent of the total waste capacity of 6.2 million cubic feet will be filled. At this point, one truckload of waste per week, or less, would be moving along I-20 toward Carlsbad.

Then in about 1995, if the facility passes its testing and is upgraded to disposal status, the waste flow would increase to about two truckloads per week, according to Tarek Khreis, a spokesman for Westinghouse Corp., the managing and operating contractor for the DOE at the site.

The volume of waste traveling through Midland would only amount to about 8 percent of the total once in full operation. The material moving down I-20 will be waste created at the Savannah River Plant in South Carolina.

The format of Monday's hearing will be the same as seven previous hearings — in Atlanta; Pocatello, Idaho; Denver; Pendleton, Ore.; and Albuquerque, Santa Fe and Artesia, N.M.

After a brief summary presentation by a DOE official, elected officials will have the first shot at the microphone, followed by other government agency officials, then preregistered members of special interest groups and the public, followed by those who register at the door to testify.

Agency officials will be limited to 10 minutes each to make their remarks and be allowed to ask one question, with follow-up, of the DOE hearing panel. Other witnesses will be limited to 5 minutes, with no question and answer period.

Verbal testifiers may submit copies of their comments in writing, as may those parties interested in having the testimony entered into the record though not presented in the public forum.

Address written comment submissions to: W. John Arthur, Attn: SEIS Comments, U.S. Department of Energy Albuquerque Operations Offices, PO Box 5400, Albuquerque, NM, 87115.

The DOE will work to accommodate telephone pre-registrations through Friday at 800/274-0585.

FLAG

"A lot of people who served their country are grieving just like I am," said Dan Walker, who came upon the burning flag in front of Dallas City Hall. "Some do not respect the country and the flag, its symbol."

Stan Weinberg, a Dallas lawyer who defended Johnson, said veterans should be encouraged by the ruling because it shows that values fought for in the Bill of Rights are still intact.

Justice William J. Brennan said a Texas law that bans conduct leading to breaches of the peace is unaffected by Wednesday's ruling.

But Brennan said it violates constitutional free-speech guarantees to ban flag burning at political rallies or protests merely because the destruction of the flag offends some people or because the state wishes to preserve the flag as a symbol of national unity.

But Walker said the ruling hasn't changed his opinion.

"I haven't mellowed any," said Walker, a 61-year-old retired engineer from the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers. "But I am convinced now that they can burn the material, but not burn the spirit. So it is just the body they may kill, but they will not kill the soul."

Walker says he holds no animosity for Johnson, whose sentence of one year in jail and $2,000 fine was thrown out by the justices in a 5-4 vote.

But he described Johnson as "a sick guy."

"He doesn't want my sympathy," he added.

Johnson said the ruling means that the "Supreme Court was forced to back off. I think they got in a situation where it was too exposing of their whole professed belief in freedom of expression.

"I've talked to thousands about the issues involved in this case," he said. "Many of them don't think burning the flag is the most effective form of protest, but they were disgusted that the very government that wrapped Ollie North in the flag to commit all sorts of horrendous crime is now going to slap his wrist and was attempting to jail an anti-patriot revolutionary.

"I don't consider myself an American," Johnson said. "I'm not. I'm an internationalist, a proletarian internationalist."

"The reaction is an exultant feeling that, even in a 5-4 vote, you are proven right," said Weinberg.

CRACK

Then they are flying it here, bringing it in and selling it for a substantial price increase. That's just good business."

A recent police sweep at the Lakewood Apartment complex, 4410 Lanham St. in Midland, resulted in several crack-related arrests, according to Bledsoe.

"They had a pretty good toehold there, but we feel we broke it up," the officer said. "But we understand they have moved to other complexes, and we are working there now. They tend to like the apartments that are cheap to live in."

Crack is made from powder cocaine that is cooked into a concentrated, rock-like form. When smoked, it produces a "high" which is quick and intense. Some users also lace marijuana cigarettes with it.

Crack is highly addictive, more so even than powder cocaine that is snorted, according to officers.

On Midland streets, around several apartment complexes, and from at least one "crack house" located in the center of the city, the drug is being peddled in pebble-size quantities for $20.

Typical users are described by Bledsoe as black men and women between the ages of 16 and 24, "but we are seeing some young white men involved in it now."

Art Van Dorn, former commander of the Permian Basin Drug Task Force, worked for years as a narcotics agent in Beaumont, still a state stronghold for crack dealers. He knows the signs of a crack epidemic.

"It is starting to move in," said Van Dorn, who now heads a Fort Worth-based narcotics task force. "And there does seem to be more in Midland. I can assure you, in the next year or so you are going to have a real problem with crack."

Crack is so destructive that like heroin it turns many users into professional thieves and burglars, according to Van Dorn.

"When it gets epidemic you are going to see a rapid rise in the crime rate," he said. "Burglaries, thefts, things like that will go up. Even assaults, because people tend to go crazy when they are on the stuff."

Van Dorn agreed with Bledsoe's assertion of a West Coast connection.

"There was some indication of activity going through the airport to the West Coast, and to the East Coast," he said.

Crack selling has not spread into rural Midland, but there are danger signals, according to one officer.

"We haven't seen much of it for some reason," said Capt. Clayton McKinney, who heads operations for the Midland County Sheriff's Department. "But we've busted a couple of places where they were making it. It is real easy to make. We've found a couple of mini-labs."

Eventually crack use and dealing will spread into the less-populated areas of the county, McKinney warned.

"I think we'll see more of it in the future," he said. "It is worth more than (powder) cocaine and it is easier to transport."

Surprisingly, crack is not found on the streets of Odessa, according to officers there.

"Involvement so far in Odessa has been absolutely minimal," said police Cpl. John McAhon. "But that's not to say that we won't have a problem tomorrow, or the day after that."

Crack first appeared in Midland in 1988, and has spread slowly since then, according to officers.

"In the past years it has gradually increased," Bledsoe said. "They (dealers) see Midland as a market, and we are really understaffed to deal with this."

Bledsoe said he has made his superior officers, including Chief Richard Czech, aware of the crack problem.

"We are working on it, we are doing undercover operations to try to deal with it," Bledsoe said. "There appears to be a demand here for it. As long as there is a demand, they are going to provide it."

CARE

The Dodd-Hatch bill would authorize $1.75 billion for fiscal 1990 to help parents and states pay for child care. Seventy percent of the money would help parents pay for child care while the remaining 30 percent would be available to the states for programs designed to improve the availability and quality of care.

Senate Majority Leader George Mitchell of Maine added amendments that included two tax changes. One would provide up to a $500 credit to low-income families to pay for children's health insurance. The other would make the existing dependent care tax credit refundable to low-income families, some of whom otherwise do not benefit from the provision because they have no federal tax liability to which to apply the credit.

In promoting their alternative, Republican senators have argued that the ABC bill's subsidy provisions would result in state bureaucracies that would limit parental choice in child care, a position Dodd and Hatch have vigorously contested.

"We have a decidedly different approach to what is a real problem," said Sen. Dan Coats, R-Ind. "The word 'choice' is the critical distinction."

Sen. Pete Wilson, R-Calif., said the Dodd-Hatch plan would "give to government the decision as to what kind of child care shall be provided."

The GOP package would also make the dependent care credit refundable. Its other major provision would expand the existing Earned Income Tax Credit to provide addition tax relief to low-income families with children under age 5.

Hatch, calling that inadequate, said Wednesday the expanded credit would provide $750 to a poor family with two eligible children while child care for the two would cost about $6,000 a year.

Also, he said, using the GOP tax credits alone likely will not solve child-care problems because parents would not be required to spend the money on child care. Democrats have also attacked the GOP plan for cutting off eligibility for the expanded credits at age 4, saying children twice that age and more need child care. The Dodd-Hatch bill allows payments for children up to age 13.

CHINA

U.S. Secretary of State James Baker III, referring to the execution of the three workers in Shanghai on Wednesday, said, "We deeply regret the fact that these executions have gone forward."

Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher of Britain said she was "utterly appalled" by the executions while Australian Prime Minister Bob Hawke called the death sentences "intolerable."

New Zealand Prime Minister David Lange said today that his country would lodge a formal diplomatic complaint to demonstrate its "revulsion" at the executions.

In Japan, the Kyodo News Service quoted Prime Minister Sousuke Uno as saying, "That this kind of thing should happen amid rising international criticism is extremely regrettable."

Correction

BEIJING (AP) — The Associated Press reported erroneously Wednesday that the three men executed in Shanghai were shot in front of a crowd.

An official at the Shanghai Foreign Affairs Office told the AP on Wednesday that a "propaganda meeting" was called and the death sentences were carried out Wednesday. The government office said it did not have details of the meeting and execution.

Due to an imprecise translation by the AP, it was erroneously reported that the executions were carried out at the meeting.

The Shanghai Foreign Affairs Office today said the executions were not carried out at the meeting, and the three men were taken away to an execution ground and shot.

Texas lawmakers say Wright should resign for good

By JAMES R. PIEROBON
Hearst News Service

WASHINGTON — House Democrats from Texas sent former speaker and fellow Democrat Jim Wright a clear message Wednesday: Do not try to return to Congress after you resign your seat.

Rep. Jack Brooks of Beaumont, the dean of the Texas congressional delegation, and Rep. Mike Andrews of Houston, one of the party's top money raisers, emerged from a closed delegation lunch meeting saying Wright should retire for good after he resigns his House seat next week.

"His best interest will be served by ...making some speeches, writing a book, maybe serve on a few boards (of directors)," said Brooks, who staunchly defended Wright throughout a yearlong probe of his official conduct.

"I would be startled if Jim Wright ran for Congress again," Andrews said.

When asked if all Texas Democrats in the House agreed with Brooks' opinion, Andrews said, "Yes."

Rep. Jim Chapman of Sulphur Springs, for whom Wright campaigned heavily in a special election in 1985, added: "It makes absolutely no sense for him to run."

The Texans' remarks came after Wright left open the possibility that he might try to retake the 12th District seat as a means of winning personal vindication from the ethics charges still pending against him. Wright is expected to resign the seat, which he has held since 1955, next Thursday.

Wright said he would consider entering a special election later this year to fill the vacancy if "an absolutely genuine draft of a bipartisan nature" materialized.

Brooks, Andrews and Chapman seemed determined to persuade Wright and his supporters that his re-entering Congress would hurt the party and that it was time for him to step aside.

Wright aide Phil Duncan expressed surprise at how the media and his supporters interpreted Wright's statement.

"Nothing he has said, is doing or is allowing to happen indicates anything other than his plan to follow through with a resignation and retirement at the end of this month," Duncan said.

Wright could not be reached for comment in Fort Worth where he was tending to personal business. Duncan said Wright always takes Brooks' advice seriously. "He has no better friend than Jack Brooks," Duncan said.

Wright is expected to send Gov. Bill Clements and his successor, Thomas S. Foley, D-Wash., a letter next Thursday formally resigning his seat. Supporters said he would probably cast his last vote as a congressman by mid-afternoon Thursday and fly to Fort Worth for a "Welcome Home, Jim" celebration at the Amon G. Carter Jr. Exhibits Hall that night.

Former Rep. Tom Vandergriff of Arlington, and Fort Worth Mayor Bob Boland, a Republican, who are co-hosting the free event, have invited 7,000 Wright supporters to show their appreciation for his nearly 35 years in Congress.

Another gathering on Wright's behalf is planned for Sept. 22 at the Tarrant County Convention Center. This one, however, is to help raise money Wright needs to pay off the legal expenses incurred in defending against charges that he exceeded House limits on outside income and accepted improper gifts, said Thomas Law, a Fort Worth attorney who handles Wright's investments.

Law said Wright wanted his statement Tuesday to express his appreciation for the support he was getting from all political quarters in Fort Worth. But Law confirmed that Wright "wanted to think over" the prospect of running again.

"He slept on it. He did not want to absolutely close the door to it," Law said.

Brooks said Wright shouldn't be blamed for not immediately rejecting his supporters' rallying cries.

"It makes you feel better when you realize the people at home appreciate what you've done for them," he said.

Deputies suspended for demanding fines

SAN DIEGO (AP) — Two Duval County Sheriff's deputies were suspended without pay after their arrests on charges they stopped Mexicans on roadways in the South Texas county and forced them to pay cash fines.

Sheriff Santiago Barrera Jr. said the charges stem from a June 6 incident involving Jose Guadalupe Chavez Gutierrez, a Nuevo Laredo used-car dealer who reported being stopped by a man in a deputy's uniform on State Highway 44 outside Freer. Chavez said in a sworn affidavit that the deputy sought to levy a fine at the scene for lack of auto liability insurance.

Barrera said deputies Ernesto Gonzalez, 40, and Felipe Hernandez, 39, were released on $1,500 bonds Tuesday after they were charged with official oppression. The charge is a Class A misdemeanor punishable by up to a year in jail and up to a $2,000 fine.

Barrera said both deputies were suspended indefinitely without pay.

He said the arrests culminated a two-week investigation that included the Texas Rangers, who were asked for assistance last week.

Chavez told authorities the deputy seized his Mexican driver's license when he could not pay the $175 fine on the spot. Chavez said the man told him to return for his license when he could pay the fine.

"He told me that I had to pay the fine directly to him. He said nothing about a judge," Chavez told the Corpus Christi Caller-Times. "He didn't say it was a bribe, but that's the way we took it."

In a sting operation arranged by authorities, Chavez went to Gonzalez's Freer home Tuesday to pay the fine and collect his license. Chavez said he was fitted with a two-way radio, concealed in his sock, that allowed Texas Ranger Rudy Rodriguez and a Duval County deputy to overhear the transaction from a nearby car.

Chavez said Gonzalez drove him to Hernandez's home to collect the license.

Duval County Attorney Abelardo Garza said seven other Mexicans have made similar allegations about being stopped by men in deputy's uniforms who demanded payment for fines.

Barrera said authorities have not determined how much money was collected from the stopped motorists.

The two deputies were among those Barrera hired in January, when he took office and laid off most of the employees who had worked for his predecessor, Raul Serna.

Chavez, who first brought his allegations to the Mexican Consulate in Laredo, said he knows of at least 20 other Nuevo Laredo salesmen who have been harassed by men in deputy's uniforms during business trips in the past two months.

Ruben Contreras, a Nuevo Laredo car dealer who has bought cars in South Texas for the past five years, said he was stopped twice near Freer and once near Hebbronville during the past six weeks. He said he paid fines totaling $1,050 for not having liability insurance.

"He (sheriff's deputy) told me that I had to pay the fine directly to him. He said nothing about a judge. He didn't say it was a bribe, but that's the way we took it."

Whitmire new leader of mayors

CHARLESTON, S.C. (AP) — Houston's Kathryn Whitmire, the new leader of the nation's mayors, is confident the Bush administration will pay attention to urban needs. But her optimism wasn't shared by all her colleagues at the end of their annual conference.

Whitmire

Whitmire, Democrat who is mayor of the city President Bush calls home, assumed the presidency of the U.S. Conference of Mayors as the group ended its five-day annual meeting Wednesday.

The mayors adjourned with an unprecedented floor fight over future leadership of the conference.

The contest was decided along party lines with the selection of Boston's Mayor Raymond Flynn, a Democrat and outspoken critic of the Bush administration, as a future president of the conference.

Whitmire maintained an optimistic and conciliatory tone toward the administration following the meeting and praised Cabinet members and other administration officials who spoke to the mayors.

"After hearing from them, we are optimistic that our issues will be on their agenda," she said.

But mayors called on the White House to provide support for increased federal aid to cities and for urban problems of drugs, crime, homelessness and poverty. The mayors asked Congress for an immediate $822 million increase in the fight against drugs.

"Urban America has been neglected over the last eight years, and the need is even greater than before," said Mayor Arthur Holland Jr. of Trenton, N.J., outgoing president of the group.

Flynn's election capped a partisan fight for the job that puts him in line to be president of the organization — and leading spokesman for the nation's mayors — in 1991.

Whitmire voted against Flynn and in favor of a Republican William Althaus, mayor of York, Pa., in a vote that was otherwise decided largely along party lines.

Flynn said that at issue in the dispute was whether mayors were willing to "have an aggressive voice" against Bush's urban policies.

"I don't think this is the time for mayors to sit back and just go along, to say everything's all right in our cities," Flynn said. "Everything is not all right in our cities...The Federal government has walked away from our cities."

The mayors devoted scant attention during their meetings to the unfolding scandals at the Department of Housing and Urban Development — the agency that handles most federal aid to cities. The scandals include evidence of massive embezzlement and the steering of millions of dollars in grants to projects based on political favoritism during the Reagan administration.

"Frankly, our efforts with HUD will be primarily aimed at the future rather than the past," Whitmire said. "We do believe it is the duty of Mr. Kemp (Secretary Jack Kemp) to address the scandals...Our goal will not be to chastise someone now gone from the agency about what was done or not done last year."

The conference approved unanimously a policy statement calling on the administration and Congress to raise federal taxes to reduce the deficit and to finance greater spending on urban problems.

The mayors also called for an outright ban on possession, as well as manufacture and sale, of "military-type" semiautomatic assault weapons. That goes far beyond Bush's ban on the importation of foreign-made assault weapons and would, if it became law, render illegal thousands of such weapons now owned by Americans.

The mayors' resolutions become the new policies that will guide conference lobbying in Congress.

7 fishermen indicted for torching man

GALVESTON (AP) — Seven San Leon fishermen were indicted on murder charges stemming from last month's death of a man who was doused with gasoline and set afire.

Six of the indicted men, arrested within the last month on murder charges, have been released from the Galveston County Jail after posting $20,000 bond each.

A seventh man, whose name was being withheld pending his arrest, was named in a sealed indictment, said Galveston County Assistant District Attorney Doug Yancy. A grand jury issued the indictments Tuesday.

Tay Tran, 39, who had recently moved to San Leon from Los Angeles, was set afire May 28 in a San Leon trailer apparently in retaliation for an incident in which he pushed another fisherman into the water — dishonoring that man in front of his peers, Yancy said.

But Tran was trying to be a peacemaker by breaking up an argument between the fisherman pushed into the water and another fisherman over stolen boat parts, Yancy said.

Tran, who was set afire during a party at one of the men's homes, suffered second- and third-degree burns over 98 percent of his body. He died in a Galveston hospital June 3.

Named in indictments Tuesday were Giang Minh Ho, 33; Rua Van Le, 32; Van Hung Truong; 28; Sanh Van Ha, 45; Tri Van Le, 43; and Tron Van Ngo, 32. Ho allegedly was the fisherman pushed into the water.

Bill would require aliens seek asylum before reaching border

WASHINGTON (AP) — Sen. Phil Gramm is asking the Senate immigration subcommittee to approve legislation that would require Central American refugees to apply for asylum before they reach the U.S. border.

Gramm

Gramm's bill would require Central and South American refugees to apply for asylum at a U.S. consulate or embassy in a country with which the United States has diplomatic relations, and which the refugee must pass through to reach the U.S. border.

The Texas Republican said refugees from Poland or the Soviet Union seek asylum at a safe harbor like Rome, and those granted refugee status are then given visas to enter the United States.

"It works everywhere in the world except in the Americas," Gramm said. "The situation is different because the geography is different."

"Our policy encourages people (in Central America) to sell everything they own, head out on the highway, where they're likely to be murdered and robbed," Gramm testified Wednesday, "and 90 to 95 percent are denied" asylum when they arrive in the United States.

"I don't see that as being humanitarian," Gramm told the Senate Judiciary subcommittee on immigration and refugee policy.

Gramm said the costs of handling the crush of Central American refugees passing through South Texas earlier this year have severely stretched the Justice Department's budget.

Cutbacks in Border Patrol operating expenses have been as great as 50 percent in some locations "because we're spending money on this problem," Gramm said.

"This is not in personnel or pensions, but in operating costs," Gramm said after the hearing.

He said the cutbacks have the potential "of affecting our ability to keep drugs out of the country, to protect the integrity of our border."

"People want to come to America to have economic freedom and political freedom and that's unlikely to change," Gramm said. "Our system is not working because of geography."

Wade J. Henderson, associate director of the Washington national office of the American Civil Liberties Union, said Gramm's bill would reduce the ability of undocumented Salvadorans and Nicaraguans to apply for asylum in the United States.

"Henceforth, they would have but one interview with an INS (Immigration and Naturalization Service) employee," Henderson said. "The alien would have to prove that he or she had a 'well-founded fear of persecution' or face immediate deportation. The decision of the INS employee would be final and unappealable."

Henderson said the bill provides no due process guarantees such as notice or right to counsel.

"There is no requirement that the interview be conducted even with a translator present, if that were needed. The INS employee would be put in the position of prosecutor, judge and jury, but need not be trained in any of these functions," Henderson said.

He said the bill would also begin a "wholesale" policy of forced repatriation to the alien's home country.

"Unless the alien can prove to the INS employee that there is a clear probability that his or her life will be threatened by persecution, the alien would face immediate deportation to the country from which he or she escaped," Henderson said in prepared testimony.

Public Notice

On April 25, 1989, a tariff was filed which proposed to introduce a trial service offering, the Optional Calling Plan, for certain exchanges of the following telephone companies:

Brazoria Telephone Company
Central Telephone Company of Texas
Contel of Texas, Inc.
Fort Bend Telephone Company
GTE Southwest Incorporated
Guadalupe Valley Telephone Cooperative, Inc.
Industry Telephone Company
Kerrville Telephone Company
Lake Dallas Telephone Company, Inc.
Lake Livingston Telephone Company
Lufkin-Conroe Telephone Exchange, Inc.
Southwestern Bell Telephone Company
Taylor Telephone Cooperative, Inc.
United Telephone Company of Texas, Inc.

The Optional Calling Plan (OCP) is an optional service wherein the customer pays a monthly fee and receives some form of discount on intraLATA long distance usage. If the tariff is approved, the OCP trial will yield market information on customer perceptions, relative profitability and customers' awareness of Local Exchange Companies as toll providers.

The Public Utility Commission (PUC) of Texas has assigned this matter to Docket 8790. A hearing on the merits of these proposed tariff changes is scheduled for September 12, 1989.

Persons who wish to intervene or otherwise participate in these proceedings should mail a request to the Public Utility Commission of Texas, 7800 Shoal Creek Boulevard, Suite 400N, Austin, Texas 78757 by July 24, 1989. Further information may also be obtained by calling the PUC Public Information Office at (512) 458-0223 or (512) 458-0221, teletypewriter for the deaf.

U.S. skeptical of Soviet's Palestinian elections proposal

WASHINGTON (AP) — The United States is skeptical of a Soviet proposal to seek advice from the United Nations Security Council's permanent members on proposed elections among Palestinian Arabs on the West Bank and in Gaza, administration sources say.

"We said we weren't interested," an official said late Wednesday. The official, who spoke on condition that he not be identified, did not reject the idea outright but said it would not get anywhere "as far as we're concerned."

The official said the proposal could complicate efforts to hold elections to choose Palestinian representatives to negotiate self-rule with Israel.

NATION

"It would only muddy the waters and distract from the (elections) idea itself," the official said.

Participation by the council members would guarantee the Soviet Union a role that Israel fears would be used to the advantage of the Arabs.

The five members of the Security Council are the United States, the Soviet Union, Britain, France and China.

The Soviets, without committing themselves on Palestinian elections, made their proposal during a two-day meeting in Washington last week on the Middle East. It was one in a series of conferences on various global problems arranged by the two superpowers.

The U.S. delegation was headed by John Kelly, assistant secretary of state for the Near East, and Dennis Ross, head of the department's policy planning staff. Vladimir Polyakov, senior expert on the Middle East in the Soviet Foreign Ministry, led his government's delegation.

The Soviet idea was first disclosed in Thursday editions of The Star Tribune of Minneapolis.

The elections were proposed by Israeli Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir as a way of breaking the stalemate between the Arabs and Israel. The idea has qualified U.S. support, provided arrangements are satisfactory to the Palestinians and the Arab countries.

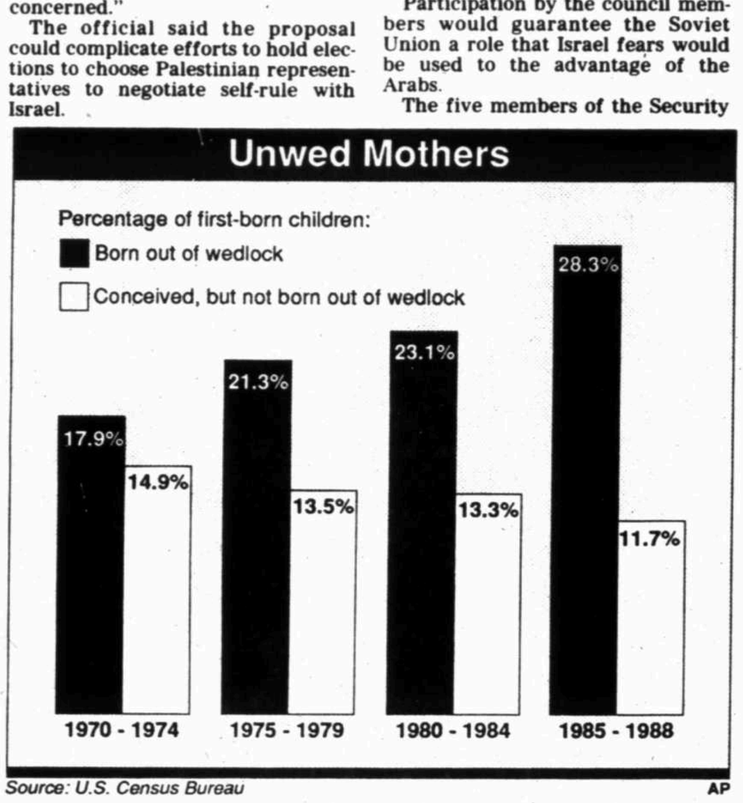

The Palestine Liberation Organization has rejected Israel's offer as a subterfuge to block the creation of a Palestinian state. But the Bush administration is operating on the assumption that the Shamir proposal still has a chance and in any event is the only known vehicle for starting negotiations.

For this reason, the official said, the Soviet proposal to consult the U.N. Security Council members on a proper framework received a skeptical U.S. response.

The official said the Soviets did not endorse or reject Shamir's proposition. As in the past, the Soviets said only that it was "worthy of consideration."

In the past, as an inducement to Israel, the Soviets have said they would be prepared to resume diplomatic relations once negotiations began. But the official said the Soviets did not repeat this offer in the Washington sessions.

The Soviet Union broke relations with Israel in 1967 when Israel defeated a combination of Arab countries in a six-day war.

Premarital births up, census report says

WASHINGTON (AP) — The share of first pregnancies beginning out of wedlock has risen sharply in the 1980s and single pregnant women are no longer rushing to the altar, a new Census Bureau study shows.

There has been a significant rise in the share of first births out of wedlock during the last two decades, while the share of women who tie the knot between conception and birth has been on a decline.

The census report also found a jump in the birth rate among women in their 30s, noting that most women who had a baby in 1988 were in the work force. It found that minorities tend to have higher birth rates than whites and that nearly three-quarters of recent births to black women between 15 and 29 were out of wedlock.

Overall, the national fertility rate was 69.7 births per 1,000 women age 18 to 44 during the year ending in June 1988, according to the report, "Fertility of American Women: June 1988."

Fertility rates have remained at about 70 births per 1,000 women during this decade and the 69.7 for 1988 is not considered significantly different from the 71 recorded the year before.

But the profile of women becoming mothers in the United States has changed.

For women age 15 to 29, the bureau found, 40 percent of first births were conceived out of marriage between 1985 and 1988.

That's up from just more than 30 percent when the measure was first taken, between 1970 and 1974, the report said.

The major change occurred among women who gave birth out of wedlock, a share which increased from 17.9 percent of first mothers in the early 1970s to 28.3 percent between 1985 and 1988.

At the same time the share of unwed mothers was rising, the percentage of women who got married after they became pregnant but before they gave birth dropped from 14.9 percent to 11.7 percent of first mothers.

This shift "may reflect the opinion of some women that they may be better off in the long run by relying more on the support of their parents and relatives for financial and emotional assistance than by entering a potentially unstable marriage undertaken solely to prevent an out-of-wedlock birth," reported bureau analyst Amara Bachu.

The share of single first mothers varied sharply by race, the study also found.

Among black women, 74.6 percent of first births to women age 15 to 29 occurred out of wedlock between 1985 and 1988. That's up from 54.1 percent between 1970 and 1974.

For Hispanic women the rate was 30.6 percent, up from 26.7 percent. And white women recorded 19.6 percent premarital births, up from 11.5 percent.

The "increases in childbearing among women over 30...suggest that childless women now more than in the past are deliberately postponing their childbearing to older ages," the report concluded.

For women age 30 to 34 the 1988 fertility rate was 81.6 births per 1,000 women, up from 60 in 1980 and 56.4 in 1976. A similar, though smaller, increase was reported for women 35 to 39.

The bureau also asked women about their plans for families and reported that, among childless wives age 25 to 29, 85 percent still expect to have a child at some point. That's up from 75 percent who expected a future birth in this age group in 1975.

Study links epilepsy drug to birth defects

BOSTON (AP) — A drug used to treat epilepsy during pregnancy to prevent birth defects may itself harm the unborn baby, scientists reported today.

In the report, doctors linked the drug Tegretol, or carbamazepine, with minor facial abnormalities and retardation. Several other drugs to treat epilepsy, which afflicts an estimated 4.9 million Americans, also have been shown to be bad for the fetus.

"Physicians who treat women with seizures are in a very difficult position," said Dr. Ronald V. Lacro, whose study appears in the New England Journal of Medicine.

"This is the drug of choice, because it seemed to be safe. We can't say that anymore."

Ciba-Geigy, which makes Tegretol, said the study is a reminder that the risks and benefits of anticonvulsant drugs need to be weighed carefully, but the medicine should still be considered for epileptic women who want to have children.

"We feel that our past data show that Tegretol is a good option for epileptic women. We still feel that way," said spokeswoman Cathy Kernen.

Lacro, a pediatrician at Children's Hospital in Boston, was a co-author of the study directed by Dr. Kenneth Lyons Jones of the University of California-San Diego.

The report found evidence that women who took Tegretol during pregnancy were more likely to produce babies with delayed development and mental retardation. They also were more likely to have unusual facial formations — including upward slanting eyes, long upper lips and short noses — and incomplete development of finger nails.

Studies have shown that severe epileptic seizures during pregnancy can temporarily interrupt the flow of blood to the fetus, causing brain damage. However, epileptic women have an increased risk of producing babies with minor birth defects, even if they don't have seizures during their pregnancies.

"Counseling has to start before pregnancy for these women," said Lacro. "If the woman has severe enough seizures and needs the medicine, then by all means you have to give it. But there is no completely safe therapy other than being off medications."

The researchers first identified the pattern of birth defects in eight children who had been exposed to the drug before birth. They confirmed it by evaluating 48 other children whose mothers had taken the medicine.

They found that 11 percent of those exposed had facial abnormalities, 26 percent had incomplete finger nails and 20 percent were slow to develop.

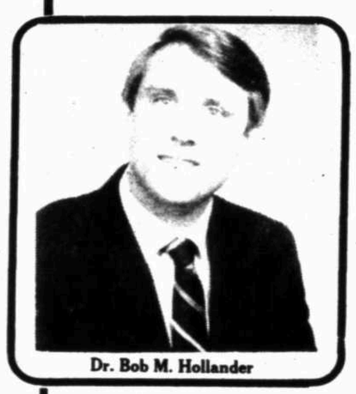

"Physicians who treat women with seizures are in a very difficult position. This is the drug of choice, because it seemed to be safe. We can't say that anymore."

— Dr. Ronald V. Lacro

Only one youngster with delayed development was old enough to take an intelligence test. That child, a 6 year old, had an IQ of 65.

Ciba-Geigy criticized the study for "serious methodological problems." It noted that the doctors used women who did not have epilepsy in a comparison group. The higher risk of birth defects among the children of the epileptic women might have resulted from the epilepsy, not the medications.

Lacro said: "I think that what we are seeing is due to the drug. If the changes that we saw were due to seizures alone, then we would see the same pattern of malformations for all kinds of seizure drugs. I think the defects are drug specific, but I can't prove that."

Naked bodies of two teens found in bags

New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — The bodies of two Bronx teen-agers, who disappeared on their way to school 13 days ago, were discovered Tuesday night in two garbage bags near the Bronx-Whitestone Bridge, according to the police.

The police were trying to determine if the teen-agers, Nilda Cartagena, 13 years old, and Heriberto (Eddie) Mar rero, 15, had been slain as part of a ritual sacrifice.

Both victims lived in an apartment building in the Soundview section of the Bronx. Their naked bodies were found two miles from their building in a wooded area near a service road of the Hutchinson River Parkway, the police said.

A dead chicken and a coconut were found several feet away, and the police said they were looking into the possibility that the teen-agers had been killed by followers of a religion that practices human or animal sacrifice.

"We do not know if there is any connection between the objects and the children," the chief of detectives, Robert Colangelo, told reporters. "We do have information that dead chickens have been found in the area before."

Chief Colangelo said it could take up to a week for the results of toxicological tests to determine the cause of death. Neither body was injured or dismembered, the police said. Marks were found on the girl's neck, but the police said they could have resulted from the way her head was positioned on the ground.

Both teen-agers had been dead for several days when their bodies were found, Chief Colangelo said.

Nilda's uncle, Alex Henriquez, last saw the teen-agers on the rainy morning of June 9 as they walked toward James M. Kieran Junior High School, five blocks from their homes.

GOP forces ethics probe of Ohio lawmaker

WASHINGTON (AP) — House Republicans are seeking to turn a liability into an asset with the case of Donald E. Lukens, the Ohio GOP lawmaker convicted on charges involving sex with a 16-year-old girl.

Lukens

The Republican conference on Wednesday made a preemptive strike, voting to force an ethics investigation of their colleague before Democrats could do the same or the ethics committee did so on its own.

Now, they are looking to Democrats to spotlight some of their own colleagues as ethics violators.

"I think it's an appropriate kind of step to suggest that the other caucus ought to also be willing to do the kind of tough thing that is involved in what our conference did," said Rep. Robert Walker, R-Pa., a member of the GOP leadership.

Democrats don't seem to be biting.

"There is no calculation that one can properly make that ethical problems or concerns are more emphatic in one party than another," said Speaker Thomas S. Foley, D-Wash.

"That's absolute nonsense, and the public knows it, and it's I think a very unfortunate attempt to try to achieve a political point, apparently at the expense of one of their own members."

Newly elected Democratic Caucus Chairman Steny Hoyer of Maryland was more blunt: "I'm sure Democrats are prepared to kick out their own members who are convicted of sexually abusing children."

Republicans have sought to make ethics a primary issue in the 101st Congress, hoping to capitalize politically on the allegations of ethical misconduct against former House Speaker Jim Wright, D-Texas, and former Majority Whip Tony Coelho, D-Calif.

But the next two cases likely to come before the ethics panel feature Republicans: Lukens and Minority Whip Newt Gingrich of Georgia, who is alleged to have set up an improper partnership to promote a book he wrote.

Lukens was convicted May 30 in Franklin County, Ohio, of contributing to the unruliness and delinquency of a minor, after a jury found he had sex with the girl.

Free speech advocates back flag-burning ruling

WASHINGTON (AP) — Free speech advocates are hailing a Supreme Court ruling in a Texas flag-burning case they say fortifies and expands constitutional protection for political dissent.

But conservatives and veterans groups expressed anger and sadness.

The justices, by a 5-4 vote Wednesday, said burning the American flag as a form of political protest is protected by the Constitution's free speech guarantees.

The court said Texas authorities violated a protester's rights when they prosecuted him under a state law barring desecration or destruction of the flag. The justices upheld a lower court ruling that overturned the protester's conviction, one-year prison term and $2,000 fine.

The federal government and every state except Alaska and Wyoming have similar laws against flag-burning.

Professor Martin Redish of Northwestern University said the ruling means "the government cannot censor a viewpoint based on its offensiveness."

He said he was delighted, and somewhat surprised, that Justices Antonin Scalia and Anthony M. Kennedy — both appointed to the high court by former President Ronald Reagan — voted with the majority.

"I've been called an extremist for free speech. I'm in good company now," Redish said.

Arthur J. Kropp, president of the liberal People for the American Way, said, "As a nation, we are strong enough to withstand the pain of seeing our flag burned. What we could not withstand is seeing the First Amendment cast aside out of a misguided sense of nationalism."

But H.F. "Sparky" Gierke, national commander of the American Legion, said, "As a veteran my first reaction to the decision is one of anger. Then my anger turns to extreme sadness. This is a sad day for the United States of America."

Alan Slobidin of the conservative Washington Legal Foundation said, "for anyone who loves the flag this is an outrage...a kick in the teeth."

Senate Minority Leader Robert Dole, R-Kan., also criticized the ruling.

"In my view, the Constitution, for which millions of men and women have given their lives to defend, holds no guarantee for desecration, no basic right to deface," he said.

The closely watched case echoed public-patriotism themes from last year's presidential campaign and called to mind the political turmoil during the Vietnam war.

George Bush, campaigning for the presidency in 1988, attacked Democratic opponent Gov. Michael Dukakis of Massachusetts for vetoing legislation to require that public school teachers lead their classes in the Pledge of Allegiance. Dukakis said the legislation was unconstitutional, and he said he resented Bush's questioning of his patriotism. Both men made heavy use of American flags during campaign appearances.

During the height of U.S. involvement in the fighting in Vietnam some two decades ago, draft card burning and flags bearing peace symbols were common forms of protest.

While Wednesday's ruling broadly limits the power of the state and federal governments to restrict even offensive dissent, the decision does not condone flag-burning that could incite a riot.

The court said there are laws against breaches of the peace that outlaw incitement to riot, and that those statutes are not affected by the ruling.

The central figure in the case was Gregory "Joey" Johnson of New York City, a member of the Revolutionary Communist Youth Brigade.

He was convicted of flag-burning during a 1984 rally at the Republican National Convention in Dallas in which protesters chanted, "America, the red, white and blue. We spit on you."

The demonstration ended with the marchers pouring lighter fluid on and igniting an American flag that authorities said was taken from a pole outside a bank building.

In other decisions Wednesday, the court:

■ Unanimously ruled that a federal law allowing public scrutiny of governmental advisory groups does not apply to the American Bar Association's role in picking federal judges.

■ Voted, 5-4, to give railroads more leeway to sell off rail lines without first entering into collective bargaining about the effect of the sale.

■ Made it easier, in a case involving a dispute between the Internal Revenue Service and the Church of Scientology, for the government to conduct tax-fraud investigations.

State apologizes to families of slain workers

Hearst News Service

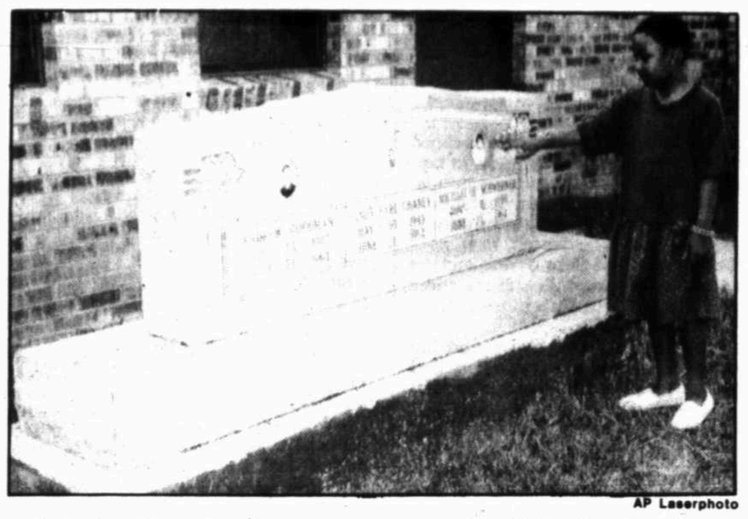

PHILADELPHIA, Miss. — The state of Mississippi Wednesday officially apologized to the families of three young civil rights workers murdered by the Ku Klux Klan 25 years ago for trying to register black voters.

"We deeply regret what happened here 25 years ago," Mississippi Secretary of State Dick Molpus told a crowd assembled at the historic Mount Zion United Methodist Church. "We wish we could undo it. We are profoundly sorry they are gone. We wish we could bring them back. Every decent person in Philadelphia and Neshoba County feels that way."

James Earl Chaney, Michael Schwerner and Andrew Goodman were murdered late in the night of June 21, 1964, as they drove out of Philadelphia. They had been arrested earlier that afternoon on traffic violations and held in the Neshoba County Jail until the Klan was notified of their capture.

Molpus, Mississippi Gov. Ray Mabus, and Philadelphia, Pa., Mayor Wilson Goode were among scores of political and civil rights leaders who gathered here in honor of the slain civil rights workers and the hundreds of volunteers who came to Mississippi in the summer of 1964 to register black voters.

"My heart is full today," said Molpus, a native of Neshoba County. "It is full because I know the overwhelming majority of people in Neshoba County are good decent people. It is full because this is where I was born and raised and molded into who I am."

AP Laserphoto

Shandra Moore touches a monument at Mt. Nebo Baptist Church in Philadelphia, Miss., Wednesday that is a memorial to civil rights workers Andrew Goodman, Michael Schwerner and James Chaney slain here 25 years ago.

"My heart is full because I know that for a long time many of us were searching for a way to ease the burden that this community has carried for 25 years, but we never quite knew what to do or what to say."

In ceremonies at Chaney's grave outside of Meridian and at a full day of activities in Philadelphia, the legacy of Chaney, Goodman and Schwerner was praised, their sacrifice acknowledged, their courage commended.

"A nation that forgets its martyrs has lost its soul," said James Farmer, founder and former director of the Congress for Racial Equality, for which Chaney and Schwerner were working at the time of their deaths.

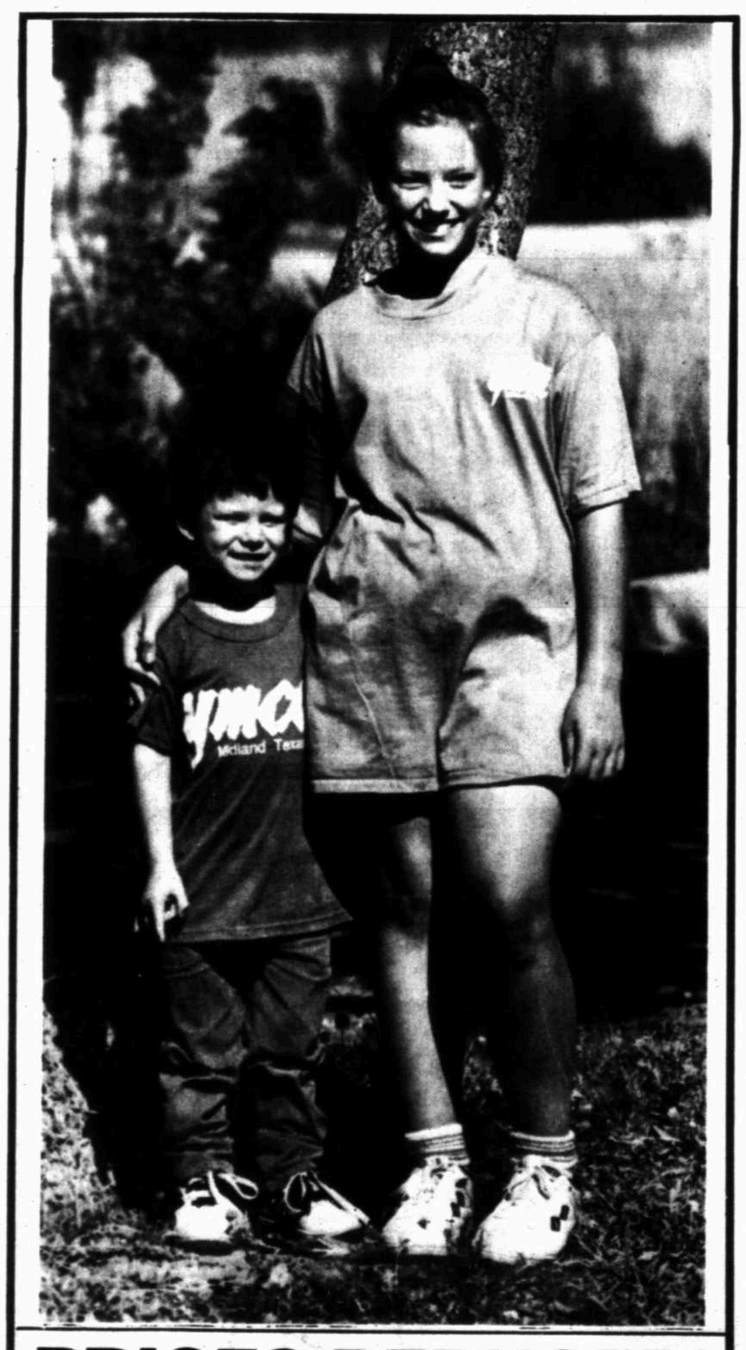

The ceremonies marking the anniversary of the slayings were organized by the Chaney Goodman Schwerner Memorial Coalition and the Philadelphia to Philadelphia Project, an organization linking the two cities that bear the same name.

Today, a caravan of buses and cars leaves Meridian for Washington, D.C., where, in conjunction with Human SERVE, a voter registration reform organization, activities will focus on reform to the voter registration laws to includes same-day, on-site registration.

In Meridian Tuesday night and all day Wednesday, the message in numerous speeches and tributes was the same: the work of Chaney, Goodman and Schwerner is not finished and it is the children of the United States that must dedicate themselves to continuing that work.

"Bigotry in 1989, like bigotry in 1964, is not a regional problem," said Chaney's brother Ben at a memorial service Tuesday at Merdidan's First Union Baptist Church. "It is a national problem. We must rededicate ourselves to human and civil rights. Schwerner, Goodman and Chaney were doers. We should remember that the struggle continues."

Chaney said he wanted people to know the history of the civil rights movement in Mississippi, and introduced several speakers that comprised a who's who of the movement: Polly Heidelberg, a fiery woman who became a "mother" to the activists; James Bishop, the director of a black funeral home who could not get better equipped white homes to help with the arrangements for the dead workers; William Reedy, one of the few white attorneys who had the courage to represent black and white activists; Charles Young, a black hotel operator who gave the activists a place to stay and went on to become a state representative.

"Just about covers it for home or office"

Austin man develops new computer Bible

NEW YORK (AP) — There are 53 verses in the King James Bible that include the term "scribe."

Here's one: "Then he said unto them, Therefore every scribe which is instructed unto the kingdom of heaven is like unto a man that is an householder, which bringeth forth out of his treasure things new and old." (Matthew 13:52)

The new thing that bringeth forth this old verse is WORDsearch, a program for the personal computer that can search, scan and index the Bible in about two seconds.

"It had been done before and we'd seen some of the programs and they were sort of slow," said James Sneeringer, a soft-spoken programmer from Austin, who developed the program about four years ago as a labor of love.

"I'm a Christian and I'm very interested in helping people study the Bible and so I wanted to make a version that was very fast and very flexible in its searching," he said at this week's PC Expo, a personal computer trade show.

The program was no technological breakthrough, Sneeringer said; it just takes advantage of the large capacity and rapid access time of a fixed disk drive.

"We assumed that there was a hard disk and therefore we were going to index all the words," he said. "In layman's terms, there's a concordance on the disk." There's also a complete Bible.

Users of the program can search specific books and chapters of the Bible, or for specific terms, like FAITH, or FAITH AND GRACE. Hitting one key gives the context of a citation. Verses can be printed or saved.

About 50 words — the, but, for, and, etc. — are excluded, Sneeringer said. "'The,' for example, occurs 65,000 times, so that means 130K is saved by excluding that from the index," he said. "And who cares?"

Video chain won't carry 'Last Temptation'

RELIGION

FORT LAUDERDALE, Fla. (AP) — It triggered riots and arrests, lawsuits and lectures. Several countries banned it.

Now, the nation's largest video-store chain has decided against stocking "The Last Temptation of Christ" at its 343 company-owned outlets.

"It's certainly unusual, but it was a corporate decision considering all that went on with the film," said Wally Knief, spokesman for Fort Lauderdale-based Blockbuster Video stores.

Nearly 80 percent of its 387 franchise locations also have indicated they won't carry the video, said Knief.

Blockbuster does not carry all kinds of films, such as pornography.

But the ban of "The Last Temptation of Christ" is its first such action against a major studio release, Knief said.

Among the few franchise owners who intend to stock the film is Ronald Fieldstone. He plans to place the cassettes in his south Miami stores' religion section with little fanfare and, he hopes, no controversy.

"There will be no posters in the window or any promotion," said Fieldstone, owner of five Blockbuster Video franchises. "We think people should be able to see the video, but we're taking a very low-key approach. I don't expect problems."

In general, stores agreeing to stock the film when it's released June 29 are laying low.

MCA Home Video is spending almost nothing to promote the video of the movie that caused a worldwide uproar last summer for its depiction of Jesus as vulnerable to human frailties and emotions, including sexual fantasies.

Others say its revenue potential is not worth the possible protests from groups who label the film anti-Christian and blasphemous.

Some industry observers contend Blockbuster's decision was principally intended to grab headlines.

"Like everything Blockbuster does, it is public image building first," said John Powers, president of the Phoenix-based American Video Group, a trade association of 2,500 independent dealers. "I don't think it was for any high religious reasons."

Arthur Kropp, president of People for the American Way, a 275,000-member civil liberties group, said Blockbuster's decision was part of a trend toward corporate intimidation by vocal, special-interest factions.

"It's a bottom-line mentality," he said. "They want to avoid controversy at all costs...It will get worse until someone stands up and says, 'We're proud of our products and we stand by them.'"

Blockbuster, which reported 1988 revenue of $216 million including franchises, is the only large video chain to boycott the film, said Jane Ayer, spokeswoman for MCA Video, a division of MCA Inc. in Universal City, Calif.

Powers said that more than half the nation's 24,000 video outlets will carry the tape.

But the film's release has rekindled protests reminiscent of its debut in theaters last summer, when some communities sought to outlaw the movie, based on a novel by Greek writer Nikos Kazantzakis.

Last week, city councilors in Cocoa near Cape Canaveral were deadlocked 2-2 on a motion to condemn the movie.

Ken Harris, owner of Space Coast Video in Cocoa, said "The Last Temptation of Christ" video drew little interest until the council resolution. Now, he said, more than 100 customers have signed a waiting list.

The vote was closely watched by officials in Pensacola, in Florida's western Panhandle, where a federal judge last September threw out a county ordinance that set a $500 fine or 60 days in jail for showing the movie.

Some large movie chains, including the 1,300-screen General Cinema Theaters, refused to show "Last Temptation."

Some of the most violent reaction last year came in predominantly Roman Catholic France, where hordes of angry protesters were repelled from theaters by riot police. The film also was banned by the governments of Israel, India and South Africa.

Williams entry will benefit area

It wasn't a big surprise, at least for this area of Texas, but Midland oilman Clayton Williams Jr.'s "official" notification that he is throwing his Western hat into the race for the Governor's Mansion is one that should be welcomed by Midlanders, as well as a lot of other West Texans.

Not surprising because Williams has been answering queries about his political intentions for a couple of years with not-so-concealed indications that he was getting ready to take the plunge, but not "officially."

Now that he's made it official, we're willing to say that his entry into the political arena — win, lose or draw — will benefit this area of the state by the simple fact that he will bring to the contest a deep and intimate understanding of the needs of people from this entire region — needs that arguably reflect those of people throughout the state.

A rancher and oilman, with business expertise in banking and the communications industry, Williams has had the opportunity to see first-hand how the weather can literally destroy a farmer or rancher's cash crop with a short-lived but destructive hailstorm or multi-year drought, and how government regulations can keep one industry monopolized while deregulation can vastly increase the consumers' choices — and prices — of goods and services.

That breadth of experience, ranging across a number of industries, should give Williams the opportunity to bring to the race for the governor's office frank, detailed discussion of problems in the Lone Star State that, if properly addressed, could help pave the way into the 1990s.

Williams' presence in the governor's race also should help the rest of the state's residents recognize that West Texas is a politically significant portion of Texas and must never be ignored in the parochial belief that Dallas and Houston have a corner on the market in political talent or business acumen.

Germany's challenge

Not since John F. Kennedy declared "Ich bin ein Berliner!" has a leader received such hails as Soviet President Mikhail Gorbachev received last week in West Germany.

Here was the head of the Soviet Union, the nation that nearly strangled West Berlin to death in 1948 and erected the Berlin Wall as a symbol of brute power, suddenly asking West Germans to dream of a united Germany, a united Europe.

"The wall can disappear when the conditions that created it fall away," Gorbachev said.

You could almost feel the balance of public opinion shift as West Germany hovered in the orbit of Gorbachev's personal magnetism.

Americans, who helped rebuild Germany and paid for Germany's defense during the Cold War, feel upstaged, if not downright jilted.

Not to worry, cautioned Gorbachev. There is room in "the common European home" for America and Canada.

Thanks a lot, say the GIs who liberated Europe from the Nazis, the Marshall Plan architects who reconstructed democratic West Germany, the NATO soldiers who still defend the Western front.

If Americans feel rejected, or taken for granted, as the German people lunge ahead of their own leaders into a new embrace with the Soviet Union, that's the price of success. America helped make Gorbachev's glasnost possible because, in reality, we never posed an offensive threat against the Soviet Union. Our missiles and troops were always deployed defensively. Gorbachev could, with a sleight of hand, appear to end the Cold War because it was the Soviet Union that posed the offensive threat in its military strategy. Voila, no nukes, smiled the Kremlin dove with nuclear-tipped claws.

The German infatuation is understandable. Gorbachev is, perhaps, the most dynamic figure on the world stage. The German people, tired of being a potential nuclear battleground, would like to see their country reunited. They would like to see foreign armies disappear.

They would like, in other words, to see things change, even as Gorbachev and West German Chancellor Kohl were reassuring their respective allies that nothing, in fact, had changed.

That's a bit disingenuous, of course. Nearly everything is changing in Europe, from the East-West embrace to the creation of the European nation state in 1992. Much of the change is for the better, but rapid change poses a challenge. America must try to understand the shifting power balances overseas. We must not merely react against change by attempting to keep the Cold War alive.

No one knows what the shape of Europe will be in the next century. It is possible that a reunited Germany could ally itself with the nations of the East, leaving France, Britain and the United States as close working partners.

Mikhail Gorbachev may have the best of intentions, both domestically and internationally, but there is great uncertainty within his country. And, what happens after Gorby? West Germans, feeling lonely after Gorbachev's departure, might take a look at the other Eastern superpower, China, to see what could happen to democratic dreamers in the communist world.

German romanticism, bearing its fantasies of Eastern empire while ignoring the Hitler-Stalin Pact, awakens anew in the hearts of Gorby fans. Those longings, however understandable, need to be leavened with at least a pinch of skepticism.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Thursday, June 22, the 173rd day of 1989. There are 192 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

On June 22, 1940, Adolf Hitler gained a stunning victory as France was forced to sign an armistice eight days after German forces overran Paris.

On this date:

In 1611, English explorer Henry Hudson, his son and several other people were set adrift in present-day Hudson Bay by mutineers.

In 1815, Napoleon Bonaparte abdicated a second time.

In 1868, Arkansas was re-admitted to the Union.

In 1870, Congress created the Department of Justice.

In 1911, Britain's King George V was crowned at Westminster Abbey.

In 1937, Joe Louis began his reign as world heavyweight boxing champion by knocking out Jim Braddock in Chicago.

In 1938, heavyweight boxing champion Joe Louis knocked out Max Schmeling just two minutes and four seconds into the first round of their rematch at New York's Yankee Stadium.

In 1941, Germany invaded the Soviet Union during World War II.

In 1944, President Franklin D. Roosevelt signed the G.I. Bill of Rights.

In 1969, singer-actress Judy Garland died in London at the age of 47.

In 1970, President Richard M. Nixon signed a measure lowering the voting age to 18.

Korean GI brides become prostitutes

WASHINGTON — Korean hookers are plying their trade around the United States in houses of prostitution thinly disguised as massage parlors and modeling studios. The hookers are not smuggled secretly into the country — the U.S. military brings them in.

Jack Anderson

According to top federal and state investigators, 99 percent of the Korean prostitutes working in the United States got here by marrying American GIs stationed in Korea.

The marriages often are brief. Many appear to be arranged by American-Korean crime syndicates. Sometimes the soldier is duped into marriage with a woman who leaves him when they are transferred to the United States. Sometimes the GI is part of the scam, collecting as much as $10,000 as a fee to marry a Korean hooker and bring her home.

The arrangement is no bargain for the woman. She may spend years paying off debts to the syndicate that brought her here. She may turn as many as 20 tricks in a night and then sleep side by side with other prostitutes on the floor. Vice cops report cases where prostitutes have claimed they were not allowed outside for four years. Many of the women are sent to cosmetic surgeons who round their eyes and inflate their breasts.

As the wife of a soldier, even a prostitute is almost guaranteed admittance to the United States. Korean police rarely enforce prostitution laws, so many of the women have no arrest record to tip off the U.S. military authorities who OK the marriages. Korean officials working for the Army certify the marriages, and the paperwork is rubber-stamped by American officers. Former U.S. Embassy officials in Korea told us that some Koreans on the Army payroll moonlight for black market visa brokers.

Koreans have become the most common purveyers of organized prostitution in the United States, according to police and federal investigators we interviewed. Vice cops in Texas, with contacts nationwide, maintain that at least 80 percent of the houses of prostitution in the country use Korean women.

It is not just a big-city problem. Korean houses of prostitution have recently sprouted in Montana, Wyoming and Idaho.

A top investigator for the Immigration and Naturalization Service in Washington, D.C., told our associate Jim Lynch that the public is oblivious to the problem. "We could take a walk a few blocks down the street and I could point out three Korean whorehouses," he said.

In recent years, Houston police have identified as many as 300 Korean prostitutes, most of whom were GI brides who arrived at the Army's Fort Hood near Houston.

The Army has about 32,000 people stationed in Korea. Some 200 soldiers marry Korean women each month. Most of the marriages are legitimate, but some are shams. A former undercover agent for the U.S. Embassy in Seoul told us that some soldiers marry three or four Korean women on their tour of duty there.

Terence O'Rourke, assistant county prosecutor for Harris County, Texas, which includes Houston, told us that the Army refuses to see the problem. "I see it in my streets and in my neighborhoods. Neighborhood people hate whorehouses, and the biggest source of whorehouses is the U.S. Army," he said.

We put some questions to the Army. A spokesman at the Pentagon said there was "nobody here who could answer them." Our questions were passed along to officers in Korea who had not responded by press time.

O'Rourke thinks the Korean government might be more willing to stop the flow of bogus brides if it knew what kind of life those women face here. "They age quickly in this business," O'Rourke said. "They are human tragedy stories."

BUSH AND DENG — As head of the mission that normalized U.S. relations with China, George Bush considers himself an expert on Chinese affairs. He also developed a personal friendship with Deng Xiaoping. Bush's critics in the State Department feel that friendship has caused him to hold back harsh criticism of the Chinese leadership. He didn't even raise the human rights issue when he visited China in February. That communicated the wrong message to Chinese leaders. They have every reason to believe that Bush is more concerned about maintaining ties than about human rights. That belief was confirmed by Bush's hesitancy to criticize Chinese leaders when they opened fire on civilians in Beijing.

MINI-EDITORIAL — Top American universities are taking federal research grants and then selling the benefits of that research to foreign competitors. The transactions are done in the name of the free flow of scientific information, which sounds like a great idea. In reality, taxpayers are subsidizing the competitive demise of the United States. Congress should take steps to protect the research that the taxpayers fund. It may be selfish and protectionist, but America can no longer afford to foot the bill so others can get rich.

ART BUCHWALD

Adjuster knows: when in doubt, blame God!

Washington had a super storm last week — its worst in history. It caused tree damage, house damage and electrical outages that only family legends are made of.

Art Buchwald

Once the storm blew out of town, the insurance adjusters blew in, and the serious storms between homeowners and companies began.

I was over at Roy and Martha Thurston's place helping them clean up their yard when the man from Mutual of Deadwood Insurance Company arrived to discuss the Thurstons' claim.

He carried a beeper, a portable telephone and a fax machine. "The office likes me to keep in touch so that I don't give away the store," he chuckled. "So tell me, how are you trying to screw us?"

Roy was incensed. "We're not trying to screw you. All we want is compensation for the damage caused by this terrible storm."

"How can you be so certain that the damage was the result of a storm?" the adjuster asked. "It could easily have been caused by God."

"What's the difference?" Martha Thurston wanted to know.

"God moves in mysterious ways, but our company doesn't cover Him. If it's His fault, you have a fiddler's chance of us paying the bill."

"It couldn't have been caused by God," Roy said. "God would never dare hurt Chevy Chase."

"Can we just get down to specifics?" the adjuster pleaded.

"Okay. That tree up there was knocked over by the wind and crashed into my roof, leaving a 10-foot hole over the master bedroom."

"What kind of tree was it?"

"It was a 300-year-old oak."

The man hit the button on his fax machine. After reading the fax message, he turned to the Thurstons, "Your policy doesn't cover damage from oak trees. Now, if a Japanese bonsai tree had hit the roof, you would be in fat city."

"Why didn't someone tell me that when I bought the policy?"

"Any grade school kid knows that. Do you have some structural damage from a falling Christmas tree?"

"Not that I know of."

"Too bad, because if you did, we'd cut it up and cart it away free of charge," he informed them.

Thurston took the adjuster to the back of the house. "The wind blew my balcony away. You can see it hanging by one strut."

"I have only your word that it was the wind. How do I know that beavers didn't knock down the balcony?"

"We don't have any beavers in this neighborhood," Thurston protested.

"That's what everybody says," the insurance adjuster added. "Then as soon as I leave, the beavers come out and start chewing on every piece of wood around here."

"Aren't you going to pay for any of this?"

"I'm trying to find something. What happened to the glass door leading out to the patio?"

"A garden umbrella went flying through it on the way to our living room."

"Was it green or striped?"

"A green one."

"Too bad. We're only covering striped umbrellas this summer," the adjuster said.

"Well, that's it. You have been most helpful," Martha mumbled.

The adjuster told the Thurstons, "I'd like to do more, but how can I when it's all God's fault?"

TOM WICKER

Bush plan could clean up old Clean Air Act

ROCHESTER, Vt. — Acid rain is reported by scientific observers to have turned the top of Camel's Hump, this state's highest mountain, into a "moonscape." On a recent fishing trip to heavily forested Quebec, even an unscientific observer saw enough blighted trees to raise the hackles on his neck.

Tom Wicker

Polluted air did not cause all the damage, and certainly not a disappointing catch; cold, rainy weather was mostly responsible for the latter. It was nevertheless consoling to emerge from the woods and find that President Bush had made an important and innovative proposal that, if pressed, could eliminate the virulent effects of acid rain by about the end of the century.

After eight years of do-nothing Reaganism, and Bush's indecision in most other areas, that's something to cheer about. In the first place, he demanded a greater reduction of sulfur dioxide emissions — 10 million tons, about half the total, over 10 years — than had been expected, or than industry and his budgetary advisers wanted. Two million tons of oxides of nitrogen emissions would be eliminated in the same decade.

In the second place, Bush adopted a scheme devised by the Environmental Defense Fund that will cut the cost of the reductions, permit the industries affected greater flexibility in meeting the requirements, and adapt market principles to good public policy. Had it not been for these innovations, it's reported, the Office of Management and Budget would have rejected the vital 10-million-ton goal as too costly.

The Bush plan, owing to these features, will be far cheaper than one proposed last year by Sens. George Mitchell of Maine and Robert Byrd of West Virginia, the new and the old Democratic majority leaders. They would have forced polluting utility plants to install expensive "scrubbers" to cut harmful emissions; the costs surely would have been passed to the ratepayers.

Bush would allow these plants — 107 of them, in 18 states — to install scrubbers, switch to lower-sulfur coal, adopt suitable new technologies, encourage consumers to cut back on use of electricity, or employ any combination of these ideas. The costs to some of these utilities could be cut, moreover, by allowing them to sell so-called "pollution rights."

The term is somewhat misleading but likely to stick. If one plant cut its emissions of pollutants more than required, it could sell the overage to another plant; the buying plant then could subtract that amount of emissions from the reduction it otherwise would be required to achieve.

The total reduction required by the Bush plan would remain the same, but the selling plant could reduce its costs by the amount obtained from a buyer; and the buyer also might save money by having to reach a lower reduction goal.

This is not exactly a "pollution right" or a "license to pollute" because the required total reduction of emissions still would be achieved.

The burden of achieving the total, however, could be shifted, for a fee, among the polluting utilities; and their political resistance to reducing emissions might be substantially lessened by the flexibility and the cost-recovery possibilities allowed by Bush's proposals.

Increased rates to consumers still are inevitable; but they should be less than if all polluters were required to install scrubbers.

Stiff opposition is to be expected, certainly from states producing high-sulfur coal. Their representatives, like Byrd, will push for required scrubbers, in order to avoid a wholesale shift to low-sulfur coal — an option offered by the president that many plants are likely to take up.

Some consumer and environmental groups and others critical of business may fight the idea that "a license to pollute" can be purchased.

Legislation to codify Bush's proposals, not yet written, also will need to foreclose at least two critical loopholes:

■ Constant monitoring of smokestack emissions from all 107 of the affected utilities will be required to see that the reduction goals are being met, and to maintain public confidence — particularly in the "pollution rights" plan.

■ As demand for electricity grows and new utility plants come on line in the future, their emissions will have to be controlled and factored into the permitted total.

No doubt there will be other objections, some legitimate; but it's long past time to update a Clean Air Act that hasn't been changed since 1977. Bush's acid-rain and other clean-air proposals give Congress a real incentive to get on with the job.

The German battleship Bismarck has been located at the bottom of the Atlantic Ocean. This view is of one of the ship's anti-aircraft guns.

Discoverer of sunken ship believes it was scuttled

WASHINGTON (AP) — Underwater explorer Robert D. Ballard, whose deep-sea robot discovered the German battleship Bismarck on the bottom of the Atlantic two weeks ago, said today he believed the World War II vessel had been scuttled by its own crew.

At a news conference to disclose details of the discovery, Ballard said the condition of the ship confirmed for him the theory that the vessel was scuttled rather than sunk by British fire in one of the most famous and important naval engagements of the war.

"Only scuttled ships tend to make it to the bottom in one piece," Ballard said. "It appears the crew opened it up along its entire length. It was clearly flooded, stem to stern."

"Only scuttled ships tend to make it to the bottom in one piece. It appears the crew opened it up along its entire length. It was clearly flooded, stem to stern."

Robert D. Ballard
Bismarck discoverer

The sunken battleship was discovered and photographed by the robot called Argo, the same device that was used four years ago to find the wreck of the Titanic, the British passenger liner that sank in 1912 after striking an iceberg.

The Bismarck was the most powerful vessel in the German Navy when it sank during a battle with the British on May 27, 1941. Of the Bismarck's 2,200-man crew, only about 115 survived.

The sinking occurred only eight days after the Bismarck left Gydnia, Poland, for her first operation, intended to attack convoys of merchant shipping and damage British morale at a time when England stood virtually alone against combined German sea and air power.

The British sent the warship Hood after the Bismarck, but five days after the Bismarck went to sea it sank the Hood with the loss of all but three of the British vessel's crew of 1,419.

The Hood was the largest warship in the world until the start of World War II and symbolized British sea power, so its loss stunned the British public and the war government and made sinking the Bismarck a mission of the most crucial nature.

Ballard said the Bismarck was found "in a remarkable state of preservation. There doesn't appear to be as much damage as I had expected."

Ballard is a senior scientist at the Woods Hole Oceanographic Institution in Massachusetts.

The Bismarck was found in more than 15,000 feet of water about 600 miles west of Brest, France.

NATION IN BRIEF

Money, property may be confiscated

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Supreme Court ruled today that the government may confiscate from criminal defendants money and property that could be used to pay their legal fees.

The justices, in separate 5-4 votes in cases from Virginia and New York, handed federal prosecutors a major victory in their fight against illegal drug dealing.

The court said a defendant's constitutional rights to due process and to be represented by a lawyer in a criminal case are not violated when profits of an allegedly illegal enterprise are seized.

Justice Byron R. White, who wrote for the court in both cases, said no one has a constitutional right "to spend another person's money for services rendered by an attorney, even if those funds are the only way that that defendant will be able to retain the attorney of his choice. The money, though in his possession, is not rightfully his."

He was joined by Chief Justice William H. Rehnquist and Justices Sandra Day O'Connor, Antonin Scalia and Anthony M. Kennedy.

Justice Harry A. Blackmun, in a dissenting opinion, said, "It is unseemly and unjust for the government to beggar those it prosecutes in order to disable their defense at trial."

He said the court "should heed the warnings" of federal trial judges who "understand, perhaps far better than we, the devastating consequences of attorney's fee forfeiture for the integrity of our adversarial system of justice."

Oil spill cleanup bill urged

WASHINGTON (AP) — Irate members of Congress are moving to ensure the Exxon Corp. pays the full cost of cleaning up the Alaska oil spill.

Sen. Harry Reid, D-Nev., pleaded Wednesday for fellow senators to support a law that would deny Exxon a tax writeoff for expenses of cleaning up the spill, the largest in the nation's history.

"I do not want to tell my constituents that the American people owe Exxon, the biggest polluter in history, millions of dollars in a tax rebate in return for destroying the environment and raising prices at the gas pumps," Reid told the Senate Finance Committee.

Reid is chief sponsor of a bill that would prohibit Exxon from deducting costs of cleaning up the spill unless the federal government certified the cleanup meets standards of the Clean Water Act or other federal laws.

In the House, Rep. Robert G. Torricelli, D-N.J., said Wednesday he and 61 congressional colleagues have asked the federal government to sue Exxon and the Alyeska Pipeline Service for the cost of environmental damage to Prince William Sound and the surrounding Alaskan wilderness.

Panel plans election polls

WASHINGTON (AP) — A private panel formed to monitor the upcoming Nicaraguan elections says it plans to conduct polls in that country and seek a meeting with President Daniel Ortega.

However, Curtis Winsor Jr., co-chairman of the Bipartisan Commission on Free and Fair Elections in Nicaragua, expressed concern Wednesday about Managua's recent announcement that it will require American visitors to have visas beginning July 1.

Visas have not been required of Americans before.

"This has an element to it which suggests restriction, restriction for press and foreign observer presence, and we hope that will not be the case. It is a matter of some concern, however," Winsor, a former Reagan administration ambassador to Costa Rica, told reporters.

In a letter to Leonor Huper, charge d'affaires of the Nicaraguan embassy in Washington, Winsor and co-chairman Gaylord Nelson, a former Democratic senator from Wisconsin, said the commission plans to send its six commissioners and several staff members to Nicaragua sometime this summer. The letter also asked for visa applications.

Bush unveils foundation

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Bush, bringing a campaign metaphor to life, is unveiling plans to launch a $100 million "Points of Light Foundation" to spur Americans of all ages and all walks of life toward volunteerism.

Bush was journeying to New York City today to tour Covenant House, a home for runaway youth, then speak before the New York Partnership, a civic group, on plans for a new public-private foundation to champion community and national service.

If Congress approves, Bush's new Points of Light Foundation would get $25 million a year in taxpayers' funds for the next four years and seek to raise an equal amount from private sector contributions.

An angry guest of the Chinese consul in Houston waves off a throng of protesters gathered at the consul entrance Wednesday. The crowd was protesting the farewell dinner to General Ni Yaoli, Houston's Chinese consul, and the crushing of the democracy in China.

Japan wary of adding to China's 'isolation'

By STEVEN R. WEISMAN
New York Times News Service

TOKYO — As the United States and other Western countries impose sanctions and condemn China for its crackdown on the democracy movement, Japanese officials have begun sounding a note of caution that such steps could backfire and deepen Beijing's "isolation" from the rest of the world.

Senior government officials said Wednesday that as a result, a modest difference of perspective had emerged between Washington and Tokyo on how best to respond to recent actions in Beijing, including the arrest and execution of Chinese accused of taking part in protests.

"Sanctions by definition mean punishment," a senior Foreign Ministry official said in an interview.

"But even if you want to punish the Chinese, you don't get the results which you wish. We don't think sanctions are an appropriate response for the Western democracies to make."

The comments of Japanese officials came a day after the Bush administration announced another round of sanctions in Washington, suspending participation in all high-level contacts with Beijing.

The U.S. had earlier suspended military sales and cooperation with China.

Japanese officials said Foreign Minister Hiroshi Mitsuzuka would put forward the Japanese concerns about sanctions in talks next week in Washington with Secretary of State James A. Baker III.

Since the Chinese crackdown began two weeks ago, Japan has criticized Beijing's actions but in a far more muted tone than other countries.

In part, that was attributed by officials to Tokyo's concern about reviving anti-Japanese feelings dating from Japan's subjugation of China in the 1930s.

A senior official said Wednesday, however, that the motivation was also to avoid reinforcing "xenophobic" tendencies of China, causing Beijing to feel surrounded by enemies.

Japan has not withheld criticism of China, and Wednesday Prime Minister Sousuke Uno deplored China's execution of three young men who were accused of setting fire to a train during the recent turmoil, declaring the executions to be "not acceptable."

Japan has also suspended new economic assistance to China.

But Japanese officials appear to be emphasizing that that step was being taken until China "stabilizes" its situation, and that aid could be resumed if China's economic liberalization program is restored, even if political freedoms do not return.

Japanese officials acknowledge that Tokyo's position could be criticized by some.

Student who stood up to tanks may have been executed, friend says

Copley News Service

The young man who was photographed and filmed stopping a column of tanks near Tiananmen Square June 5 has been arrested by Chinese police and possibly executed, a Chinese-American newspaper reported Wednesday.

The man was identified as Wang Weilin, 19, a college student and the son of a Beijing factory worker, according to a front-page article in the New York-based Chinese Daily News.

The article, quoting reports from Hong Kong, said Wang was arrested by police two miles from the spot where he stood in front of 18 tanks and halted them temporarily.

He was charged by the government with being "counterrevolutionary, (a) traitor and attempting to disrupt the People's Liberation Army," the report said.

One of Wang's friends, while watching television, identified him last week among a group of demonstrators shown on television as "counterrevolutionary hooligans." His hair was shaven in the manner of many Chinese prisoners.

"I think they have already executed him by now," his friend was quoted as saying. "He is a hero to many in the whole world. They would not dare to put him on trial openly."

The report also said that the commander of the tank that tried to maneuver around Wang and finally stopped was demoted and disciplined.

Chinese students protest Houston consul's reception

HOUSTON (AP) — Local Chinese students screamed shouts of protests at guests to a farewell reception to the Chinese consul and urged them not to attend as a demonstration of outrage over the Tiananmen Square massacre.

"We just want to show our anger to the whole world and let them know what the Chinese government has done. The government lies. They want to keep the truth from the people," said Patty You, 29, an industrial engineering student at the University of Houston.

Ms. You, like many of the other 150 students protesting at the consulate's building near downtown Wednesday evening, carried signs reading "No more executions" and "Don't eat with butchers, don't deal with animals."

They also shouted "Don't go" and "Shame" as guests arrived.

"I'm here to tell them that I'm outraged by what the Chinese government has done," said Mayor Kathy Whitmire, who attended the reception but arrived late after returning to Houston from the U.S. Conference of Mayors in South Carolina.

Despite their angry shouts, protesters remained behind yellow police tape that kept them several feet from the consul. About a dozen Houston police were stationed outside the reception.

The students mailed about 121 letters over the weekend to civic leaders and foreign consuls asking them not to attend the party for Gen. Ni Yaoli, said Fan Lu, a research associate at Rice University.

Ni is returning to China after completing his three-year term in Houston as consul general.

"We respectfully urge you not to go, as a gesture of personal protest against the recent heinous crime against humanity committee by the 'government' of the People's Republic," the letter said.

Lu said he asked those attending to tell Ni "that the current regime has lost the support of the people and that it has no legitimacy in the eyes of the world."

The letter also asked them to express disapproval of the recent attack on pro-democracy students and other citizens in Beijing, Lu said. Students also are upset about not being able to get Ni to hold a meeting with them.

"We haven't been able to contact the consul general," Lu said. "We've been calling quite often and even told him we'd meet with him whenever he wanted."

To all customers of Southwestern Bell Telephone Company:

Public Notice

On May 10, 1989, Southwestern Bell Telelphone Company filed with the Public Utility Commission of Texas several proposed changes in its Access Service Tariff. These proposals include (a) elimination of reseller credits except in cases where the underlying interexchange carrier pays carrier common line (CCL) and interexchange carrier access charge (ICAC) charges in connection with the service being resold; (b) reduction of the ICAC charge; and (c) elimination, in measured central offices, of flat rated Feature Group A and Feature Group B access service. The application is filed in Docket No. 8585, Inquiry of the General Counsel into the Reasonableness of the Rates and Services of Southwestern Bell Telephone Company, and Docket No. 8218, Inquiry of the General Counsel into the WATS Prorate Credit.

The public may intervene or participate in this matter but is not required to do so. Anyone who wishes to intervene in this proceeding or comment on the relief sought by Southwestern Bell Telephone Company should contact the Public Utility Commission of Texas, 7800 Shoal Creek Boulevard, Suite 400N, Austin, Texas 78757 or call the Public Utility Commission Information Office at (512) 458-0223 or (512) 458-0221, teletypewriter for the deaf. The hearing on the merits in this case has been set for August 3, 1989 at 10:00 a.m. at the above address.

Pick best pair of shades for eye safety, protection

Copley News Service

You need sunglasses to protect your eyes from damaging ultraviolet rays, and here are some tips from the American Academy of Ophthalmology:

Gray, amber, yellow, green and brown are the best all-purpose lenses because they filter out most of the sun's ultraviolet rays. Many sports enthusiasts prefer yellow because it increases contrast, making it easier to follow fast-moving objects. Use rose, blue and purple lenses only on a cloudy day; they provide only minimal protection and interfere with color perception.

Ugly tie contest a success

By SUSAN PERKINS

Midland Park Mall had an Ugly Tie Contest to benefit Straight, a non-profit family oriented drug treatment program. Straight received local celebrity ties from various law enforcement agencies, political figures, television personalities and so much more.

Wide ties, fish ties, off-color ties — all ugly ties — were displayed in Center Court from June 10 to 18 for the Mall's Father's Day community service project.

The tie raising the most contributions was marked the "Ugliest Tie in West Texas." That honor was bestowed upon Ruben Vargas, first vice-president of the Midland Hispanic Chamber of Commerce. The yellow tie donned dinosaurs and cavemen. What a tie!

Second place was a barracuda tie donated by Midland District Attorney Al Schorre. Third was an off-color brown, orange and yellow tie from Dillard's manager John Haupert.

All monies collected go to Straight in order to help drug using young people and their families.

With our community's concern for a drug-free environment and the heightened awareness level of substance abuse prevention, Midland Park Mall, the Midland Reporter-Telegram, KMID-TV and the Mall's Ambassador Board committed their efforts to raise contributions for Straight.

Susan Perkins is marketing director for Midland Park Mall.

The winning tie in the recent Ugly Tie Contest belongs to Ruben Vargas, first vice-president of the Midland Hispanic Chamber of Commerce.

Enticing prints

A parade of prints makes a splash for dress-up summer wear. A long jacquard-striped shirt, left, is worn over flowing trousers with oversized, boldly geometric patterning. Jacquard jacket and slim pants, center are paired for a suit look. Full pants, right, are banded with a series of stripes at the ankle, and are worn with a complementary blouse.

Choosing a bike for fitness, transportation easy

By GREGG HOWARD
Copley News Service

This summer, more people are climbing back in the saddle — the bicycle saddle, that is.

Cycling is one of America's most popular sports, with 78 million men, women and children pedaling their way to fun and fitness, according to the Bicycle Federation of America.

And the numbers are growing for good reason. Not only is cycling an excellent form of aerobic exercise, it's also a pollution-free, inexpensive method of transportation. Nothing beats the fun of cycling through the countryside or exploring city streets on a glorious, sunny day.

But for beginning cyclists, the first wave of enthusiasm can end abruptly when they walk into a bike shop to choose that new two-wheeler. Suddenly, they are faced with dizzying choices and buzzwords such as "derailleur," "gruppo" and "brazing." It's no longer as simple as choosing the shiniest frame.

The first thing to do is to find your "cycling style" to help determine the type of bicycle you should invest in, according to Davis Phinney and Connie Carpenter, Olympic bicycle medalists and bicycling consultants for Copper Mountain, a Colorado ski resort.

Ask yourself how fit you are, what kind of terrain you will be traveling on and how often you plan to go cycling. Then you can decide whether a racing, touring or sport bike is the one for you.

If you're physically fit and plan to travel over flat to rolling terrain, look for a racing bike with quick steering and lightweight wheels.

On the other hand, you may be more of a recreational cyclist who does some touring on the weekend. Then, a touring bike — equipped with stable steering and sturdy wheels — is the type for you.

If you fall somewhere in between these categories, you might try a sport bike — especially if you're not too sure about the riding you'll be doing.

Having determined your style, you're ready to go shopping. To find the best shops, ask other cyclists in your area about their favorite bike stops and visit a few. Look for helpful, knowledgeable salespeople who can help you find a bicycle with key components to suit your riding style. Here are some points to consider:

Frame: The frame defines the shape of a bicycle and should be chosen with care. The tubing used to construct the frame is its most important component. Your main concern should be with the thickness of the tubes. If you are a light rider, get a bike with light tubing to absorb more shock. Larger riders should get heavier tubing.

When in doubt, test-ride the bicycles you're considering and choose the one that feels best. Most salespeople can sell you the right size from the available selections.

Wheels: The selection of wheels has a great effect on the bicycle's overall performance and acceleration. If you've decided on a racing bike, it should have light, narrow rims and 1- or 1⅛-inch tires. It should ride quick, spirited and perhaps a little skittish.

A mountain or city bike with wide rims and 2-inch tires feels stable, comfortable and easy to control. The middle-ground in performance and stability, the touring bike should have 1¼- to 1⅜-inch tires and medium weight rims.

Also, consider your weight and cycling experience when buying your wheels. If you're lightweight, you can ride on the lightest, narrowest rims with no problem. A solidly built person, however, would find this type of rim difficult to use.

As for experience, keep in mind that a novice cyclist might make mistakes such as hitting a curb. That type of impact could irreparably damage a light rim, but wouldn't affect a mountain bike wheel. So, if you're new to cycling, lean toward the greater stability and durability of heavier rims and tires.

Gearing: Gearing may appear complicated, but it really isn't too difficult to understand — especially if you've selected a reliable bicycle shop to help you. Since most bicycles are equipped with gears for fast travel, your main concern should be getting the right low gears for the type of terrain you'll be traveling over.

If you're in good shape and plan to travel over flat to rolling countryside, ask the sales representative for a bicycle with close-range gearing that will allow you to make smaller and faster changes in gearing when traveling around corners or climbing hills.

If you plan to cycle over hilly or mountainous terrain, or plan to carry a lot of weight, look for triple front chain rings (which means there are three chain rings on the front gears instead of two) and has super low gears.

Comfort-related components: Comfort-related components can keep cycling from being a pain in the back and seat while you're in the bent-over position.

One tip for beginners is to have the bike fitted so they initially can sit more upright. Later, they can switch to a longer, lower handlebar position.

Also, if the bike you're considering has a relatively hard, narrow seat, try a softer, wider model before you buy the bike. Most shops would be glad to exchange them.

The extras: Unlike many sports that require arm loads of gear, you really don't need much more than a bicycle to hit the open road. Still, there are some accessories that are necessary for safe, comfortable biking:

Pros and novices alike can be thrown from a bike. Opt for a hard-shell helmet and never ride without it.

Gloves can alleviate numb hands and provide protection during a fall. The padded leather versions usually are the best.

Light, but reinforced, cycling shoes can help you push the pedals. Most are perforated for ventilation.

Toe clips and straps may intimidate the beginner, but they're necessary for serious cyclists since they aid in proper pedaling motion.

A cycocomputer attaches to your handlebars and provides information such as distance traveled; current, average and minimum speed; elapsed time; cadence and heart rate. There are solar- or battery-powered versions.

Even if you don't know your sprocket from your bottom bracket, don't be afraid to make an investment in your first quality bicycle. For savvy shopping, keep this guide in mind and happy trails.

End travel packing blues

Associated Press

"Pack up your troubles in your old kit bag," suggested the old song, "and smile, smile, smile."

But for most of us, when it comes to travel, the troubles begin with the packing.

Some like to travel light, with only a carry-on bag, always at the ready to move quickly and not spend vacations at the baggage counter.

Others prefer to travel with a caravan of luggage worthy of a royal entourage.

Advice for packing varies as much as travelers themselves.

"Lay out all your clothes and all your money. Then, take half the clothes and twice the money."

"If you can't get it into your bag, the odds are you don't need it."

"Lay out all you want to take on your bed. Pack your bag in order of dispensability. When the bag looks full, put away the rest."

There's also the throw-it-all-in technique, the traveler's takeoff on the bogus newspaper motto, "All the news that fits .. . "

The trick is not to start thinking, on the way to the airport, what did I forget?

According to a survey of the nation's more successful executives, 50 percent of them forget to pack a toothbrush, as well as toothpaste and other toilet articles.

Forty-five percent of these chief executive officers of Fortune 500 companies who were surveyed by Delsey of Paris, luggage manufacturers, also forget their sunglasses.

"Real executive stress," says Delsey president Carlo Zezza, "is showing up for your transcontinental flight with no passport."

Zezza offers a "checklist" for packing: Credit cards are at the top of the list. Then: cash or traveler's checks, tickets, passport and visas, reservation confirmations, travel vouchers, driver's license and, if necessary, phrase books.

In a separate place: passport, credit card, traveler's check and drivers license numbers.

Necessities: toiletries, medication, voltage adaptor, travel alarm clock, camera — and film.

More advice comes from Cris Evatt, in the booklet "How to Pack Your Suitcase." She subscribes to the principles of organizing: "First, there's the Simplicity Principle: rid yourself of the unessentials. The less you have, the less you will have to maintain. Secondly, there's the Systems Principle which states that 'everything must have its place.'"

Her advice for packing comes in four steps:
— Make a packing list;
— Gather everything on the list;
— Pick your bags;
— Pack right (learn folding, rolling, and stuffing). "Turn on some lively music and make a game of the packing process ... Play whatever will make packing more enjoyable for you."

Then you're ready for the airline to lose it all.

New dress line like sportswear

With the premiere of Anne Klein Dresses, designer Louis Dell'Olio reacts to women's demands, giving them what they want while charting a new direction within the dress industry.

"We intend to break all existing rules of the dress market as we know it," he asserts, "no ruffles, frills or puff sleeves. Women are looking for dresses with the sensibility of sportswear: modern, clean and simple."

Such is the approach Dell'Olio has taken in designing his newest line. These dresses offer a broad collection of day into evening dresses, jumpsuits and eveningwear, all of which incorporate a sportswear point of view.

The overall impression of this premiere collection is that the clothes are designed to be clean and simple, yet seductive, with a conscious eye for the curve and shape of a woman's body. The dresses will take a woman from the office to lunch, and through the evening hours.

All the fabrics used are designed exclusively for the Anne Klein Dresses label.

In describing a cotton matte jersey jumpsuit from the line Dell'Olio says, "you could wear it to the beach. It's not precious like silk, yet you could wear it out in the evenings."

Some of the highlights are the navy wool crepe dresses that make use of white collar and cuff details to contrast with the more seductive peek-a-boo detailing offering a tailored yet feminine look with a distinctively "ingenue" approach.

Dell'Olio also favors rayon, which, according to the designer, "has a great '30s feel to it," and is reminiscent of Hollywood's classic beauties.

Another detail prevalent in the line is the hand-tooled gold buttons which resemble fine jewelry and heighten the elegance of Dell'Olio's designs.

"There is validity in frou-frou and glitz and I do it too, in a more tailored way. The true frou-frou and glitz you can get from other designers. I would never claim to be an Oscar de la Renta, I wish I could do dresses like he does, but I just don't know how, so I leave it to the people who know best."

"This has been a real learning process for me, designing a dress line, because the kinds of dresses I like are not the kinds of dresses that I see in the stores. I like tailored, clean dresses, not a lot of fuss, but rather an extension of a sportswear line," says Dell'Olio.

Activities, supplies come in handy, beat summer 'nothing to do' blues

Copley News Service

For parents of school-age children, thoughts of the vacation months can trigger a mild anxiety attack.

Long summer days can turn into boring days for a child who doesn't have interesting things to do. And, most parents' schedules and pocketbooks can't accommodate expensives outings to the amusement park, movie or zoo every day, especially when their growing child needs a new summer wardrobe.

Don't panic, parents. You have more control over alleviating the "there's nothing to do" blues than you may realize, according to Judith Schaut, associate professor of education at Bucknell University in Lewisburg, Pa.

"Summer is a special time for parent and child, who spend many more hours together than during the school year," says Schaut. "While this may be frustrating for a parent who also wants some free time, it can be turned into a source of pleasure for both."

Parents must realize that summer is not something a child can enjoy alone. Instead, there needs to be mutual involvement between parent and child. The younger the child, the greater the involvement, Schaut says.

She advises parents to observe their children during free time to get a feel for their individual likes and dislikes and, then, to suggest activities that might cultivate new interests for them or feed those they already have. However, it's important for parents not to dictate what a child must do, but help him decide what to do.

When coaxing a child toward creative activities, parents always should consider their child's age and interests. Dr. Joan Bergstrom, author of "School's Out — Now What?" suggests asking the following questions:

If you could do anything this summer, what would it be?

Do you want to learn how to do something new?

What do you really enjoy doing at camp or the playground?

Think ahead about your child's summer by tuning into activities of interest, locating community resources and developing a plan. Newspapers often publish daily or weekly calendars of upcoming local events. Some creative ideas would be:

If your son or daughter is pestering you to help in the garden, set a plot aside just for him or her. You won't have to worry that your vegetables will be ruined, and the child gains a sense of accomplishment from doing "grown-up" tasks, as well as acquiring a new interest.

A rainy day need not be a trauma for house-bound children. It's an excellent opportunity for creative play. Turn off the television and pull out the crayons, clay and construction paper. Have them draw a sign for a yard sale you're planning or create a summer newsletter for the neighborhood children.

Visit a local museum or historical site, but do some planning first.

Pins are in: Silver shines on fashions

In a fashion season marked by sleek, elegant, modern classics, punctuated with prices rising higher than the stock market, accessories are key elements for securing the greatest return on a woman's wardrobe investment.

From playful, feminine hats and brightly colored gloves, to oversized, rich-looking shawls and scarves, pins, pins and more pins are everywhere.

Women's Wear Daily, the "bible" of the fashion industry, reports that pins are the most explosive item in jewelry accessories.

Major jewelry designers attribute the popularity of pins to understated silhouettes, calling for bolder, more dramatic jewelry.

"This is a very exciting time for pins, especially ones of sterling silver," said John McGrath, a jewelry designer and industry spokesman.

"Real silver pins are precious, meant to be treasured, yet affordably priced to fit every woman's budget. They can be worn with everything this fall, propped on the most unexpected places. The limitations are set only by the imagination of the wearer."

No one style trend emerges, but there is something for everyone. Some designers are opting for feminine openwork designs, and a plethora of flowers and nature-inspired motifs of every variety, while others are creating bold, sculptural pieces, shining brilliantly or subtly chic in satin finishes.

"Silver is the traditional, elegant metal that lends itself to all of these new, sought-after styles," adds McGrath.

Pins provide the answer to every fashion question this year. Here are some fashion ideas on how to create personal "signature" looks with pins:

- The rage for hats continues unabated. And, the addition of a pin–stick, fob or cluster of small ones–makes them newer than ever.
- The polished, understated good looks of suits, big collared coats and the new chemise call for "attention getting" jewelry.

Why not make a statement by placing a sterling silver pin on a lapel, or for the venturesome, on top of the shoulder like an epaulet? A pin also can be a distinctive embellishment by holding a French cuff together instead of cuff links.

- With fashion emphasis on the waist, a silver brooch can be pinned to a belt or even on the midriff in place of a belt.
- Fashion mavens know that scarves, in luxe fabrications are the season's "must-haves," and pins are a traditional accessory to them. They're not only functional, but add that all-important decorative touch.

The possibilities are endless. Indeed, silver pins can be worn anywhere a woman dares.

Summer fun: Get the family outdoors, rediscover beauty

By ROLLA WILLIAMS
Copley News Service

Summer, the traditional camping season, is upon us.

You know it's that season when the outdoor magazines come out with their special camping sections describing the latest challenger to goose down as the warmest sleeping-bag stuffing, the new tent you simply must purchase or a "breakthrough" $40 graphite fly rod.

A popular topic is Americans' "rediscovery" of the beauty of the outdoors and the call of the open road.

Not to quibble, but many of us didn't rediscover anything. We always knew it, even during the most wretched of those bivouac experiences of World War II. Hey, nobody plans to go camping with a raincoat and a tin cup when Army service is only a memory.

On the other hand, I'm constantly hearing from folks — some of them seniors — who have never fished or hunted in their lives. Is this possible? It is, and maybe others are just discovering camping.

A University of Michigan study found that four out of five heads of American households believe that a camping trip is the best vacation a family can take.

The notion is that camping is a clean broom that sweeps out all the detritus in a camper's life and focuses on what is important. You don't need a television, radio or stereo when you go camping. You need food, shelter, warmth and the gear that makes these things possible.

Any method that suits you is acceptable: motor home, travel trailer, pop-up trailer, van conversion, tent or out in the open with stars burning overhead.

Nowadays, when we are so dependent on science and technology, a psychologist must be recruited to buttress what used to be natural and sincere conclusions.

"In some ways we have a very predictable existence," Dr. A. John Kalil of Virginia is quoted as saying. "We press buttons and we know what will happen. There just aren't many frontiers left to explore.

"But most of us don't want that. There is the need for more adventuresome experiences. With camping, you place yourself in sort of a fantasy situation You go back toward a more primitive, unpredictable type of experience.

"Many of us feel entrapped by deadlines and work pressures, and those things intrude on how we communicate with each member of the family. When you're on a trip together, those pressures are forced out. What becomes important is what's at hand. Each person in the family becomes an active participant instead of a passive one."

We are fortunate with our myriad camping opportunities. We can spread a tent on the beach, beneath a pine in the mountains or on a rocky outcropping in the desert. We can go public and, perhaps, spend a bit less cash for a site, or we can go private with a swimming pool, hot tub, video games and maybe even a class restaurant on the premises.

As for cooking on the road, give Mom a vacation. Concentrate on simple meals such as one-pot casseroles and oatmeal for breakfast. Increase portion sizes and use recipes for six to satisfy a family of four. If backpacking is involved, cook even more food. Appetites grow grandly in the outdoors.

Pick up fresh fruit, vegetables and meat as you travel. Enjoy the bounty of the countryside.

David J. Humphreys, president of the Recreation Vehicle Industry Association, calls camping "building memories," which is apt. Who can forget ripe brook trout, awash in color, finning in an icy, gin-clear stream in Colorado? Remember that curious bird, dipping and chirping, at a waterfall in California? The memory clings of that moose, so perfectly engineered for his sort of life, slopping through the muck at Yellowstone, water dripping from his dewlap.

Camping, they say, is 75 percent less expensive than an air-and-hotel vacation, 67 percent less than a bus-and-hotel trip, 50 percent less than a car-and-motel vacation. Go backpacking and it's even less expensive once your equipment has been purchased.

Through camping you become independent, self-sufficient, at ease with the world. It's a good feeling.

Churn up fun with picnics, ice cream

By MONICA PEREZ
Copley News Service

Of the countless foods we taste during the course of a lifetime, memories of summer picnics and homemade ice cream are among those that linger longest.

Who cares about the ants, flat soda pop or the ice cream that was ruined because the salt mysteriously crept into batch? We remember the icy goodness of fresh peach milk shakes, the surprise brownies hidden in the bottom of the picnic basket and homemade fried chicken.

You don't have to let homemade ice cream melt into a fond memory of the good old days. Sure, it's more work than picking up a half gallon at the grocery store. But making ice cream is a popular way to beat the heat and is not that much work, whether churned by hand or made with a top-of-the-line electric ice cream freezer.

Freezers range from the fanciest — which converts ingredients into the frozen confection with a flip of a switch — to the simplest — which uses table salt and ice cubes. One thing is for sure: They all have a dasher for kids of all ages to lick.

Americans today are consuming more ice cream than ever, eating an average of 18 pounds per year, according to Bob Shelton, spokesman for the California Milk Advisory Board.

Meanwhile, the picnic tradition is alive and well in the 1980s.

Many contemporary picnickers plan their outdoor menu around a theme, such as an ethnic picnic based on their family roots or a holiday such as the Fourth of July.

Today's picnic can be a formal, romantic after-sunset affair complete with china, silverware, linen napkins and a damask tablecloth topped off with a glittering silver candelabrum. Or, it can be a traditional family gathering with the well-worn wicker basket packed with foods as familiar as a red-checked tablecloth — potato chips, fried chicken, baked beans and creamy potato salads.

Following are a few tips and recipes for the picnic and ice cream extravaganzas you're planning:

Use finely shaved ice in the ice cream freezer, suggests Raymond Binkley, manager of Pennsylvania State University's milk plant. Cubes or coarsely cracked ice don't take the heat away from the mix fast enough. The smaller the pieces, the better the final product.

If ice cream is part of your picnic menu, include cones and let people help themselves. As an alternative, pack ice cream toppings for a do-it-yourself sundae bar. Crushed nuts, Oreo cookies and sprinkles will please everyone.

For aesthetics, pack foods in containers that are attractive enough to use as serving dishes. Housewares stores often feature clear containers with colored plastic lids.

Expect everyone to eat more than they normally do at your picnic. The fresh, outdoor air seems to heighten appetites.

For mealtime success and no spills, use unbreakable dishes, paper plates with straw liners or heavy paper plates. Party good stores, stationers and even supermarkets now offer pastel-colored plastic and paper picnic items at affordable prices, right down to the toothpicks.

Appearance means a lot, even at a picnic. Arrange salads on lettuce leaves. Wrap each item in plastic wrap. Wrap individual sets of plastic utensils in a napkin, with a colored ribbon to tie the bundle together.

The things you might forget for your picnic? Extra ice in a leakproof container, individual salt and pepper shakers, sharp knife, premoistened disposable towelettes, insect repellent and a bottle opener.

One or two large heavy-duty plastic bags are a must. Use one for garbage, the other for empty food containers and used flatware.

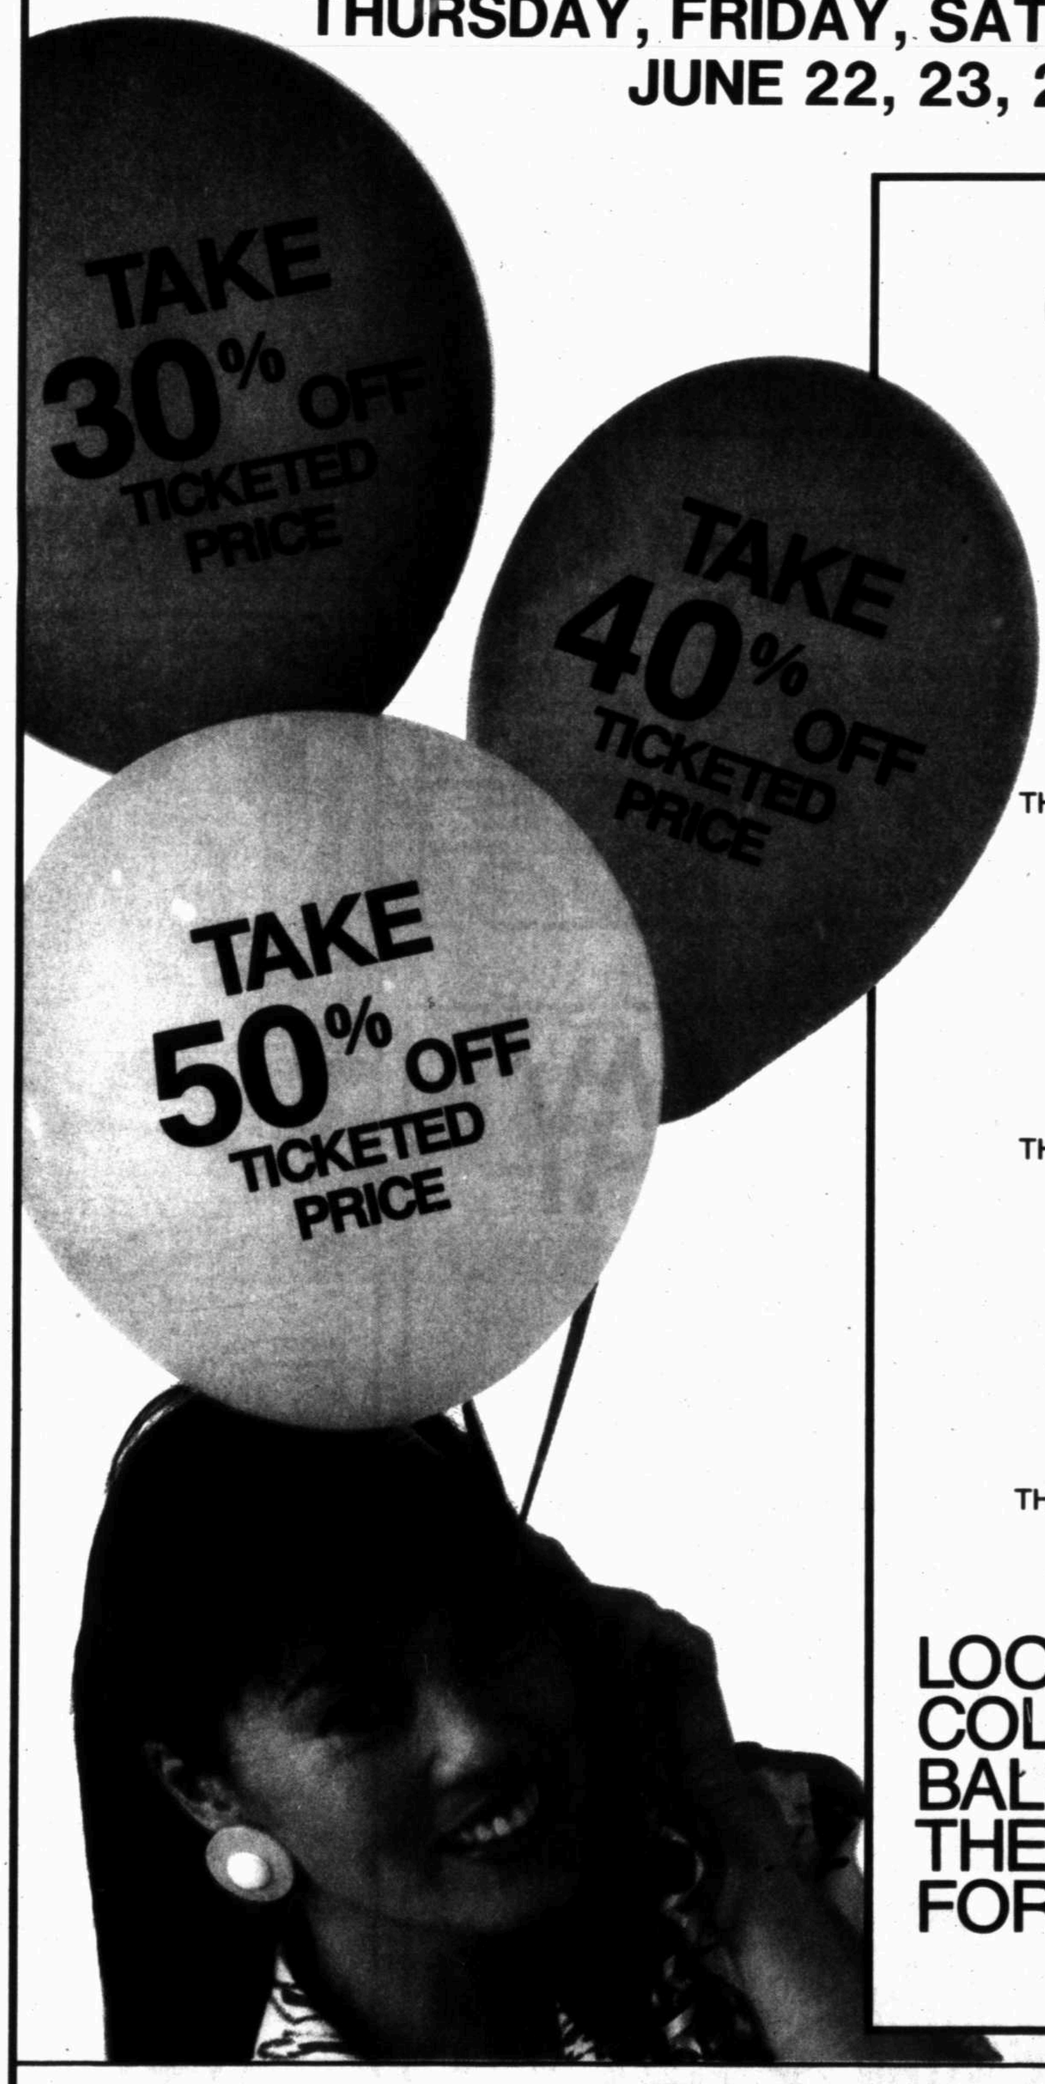

HOMESTYLE VANILLA CUSTARD ICE CREAM

3 cups milk
1 tablespoon vanilla
6 egg yolks
1 cup sugar
1 cup heavy cream
4 egg whites

Scald milk and vanilla in heavy saucepan. Beat yolks and sugar together until light; stir in small amount (approximately ½ cup) scalded milk. Combine with remaining milk and return to heat. Cook over medium heat just to boiling, remove from heat and let cool. Whip cream to soft peaks and set aside. Beat egg whites to stiff peaks and fold into whipped cream. Blend cream mixture and custard together gently. Freeze in ice cream maker according to directions. Makes 1¾ quarts.

Painter doesn't see satanism as local problem

By BRIAN PEARSON
Staff Writer

ODESSA — The note passed in class between two local 15-year-olds outlined a brutal ritualistic sacrifice of a kitten.

One teen described in the note how he had built an altar, slit the animal's throat and then cut off the head. He went on to ask if the ritual had been properly performed and if a certain spell should have been used.

The other student wrote back that the sacrifice "must be directed to a god" and not to fool around with such ceremonies unless serious.

The May 1988 note was confiscated by a teacher and eventually landed in the hands of Midland County Sheriff Gary Painter.

Painter, speaking Wednesday at a Glenwood Hospital satanism seminar at the Odessa Hilton, said that although law enforcement authorities can't deny the existence of satanic worship in the community, media publicity has whipped the public into a frenzied misconception about the magnitude of such practices.

"I don't believe satanism is a major problem," Painter said. "I'm sure we've got more people believing in God than are worshipping Satan."

About 275 people attended the all-day seminar, which also featured speakers from psychiatric hospitals who have treated victims and practitioners of satanism. The seminar was designed for counselors, psychologists, social workers, nurses, law enforcement personnel and others affiliated with social-work professions.

Painter, who would not name the school the two note-writing pupils attended, said it is not unusual for children that age to question authority and seek some form of attention.

"There are some kids who don't get into a peer group like they want," Painter said. "Most of the time they turn to drugs and become a drug addict."

These children also are perfect targets for satanic cults, which lure a prospective member by giving him the attention he craves, Painter said.

But local news reports last year overestimated how much satanism was practiced in Midland, he said.

"I think with all the media attention given the last year it created a panic," Painter said. "With some parents it created hysteria.

"There's no doubt in our minds that there are cults in the Permian Basin area. There's no doubt that there are people practicing satanism, but it does not exist in the numbers that people were trying to believe."

Fears of the practices, however, have subsided since then, he said.

Painter related a chilling story of arresting a 55-year-old woman on drug charges. Deputies thought nothing of the strange candles the woman had in her Midland home, he said.

But when they later arrested her again in a house outside the city, Painter said he found an altar, melted candles and other objects of a practicing satanist. The altar had Painter's named scrawled into it.

"That created a lot of concern on my part," he said.

Dr. James Hare, manager of social services at Glenwood, told the seminar audience that every school seems to have at least one student who acts as a recruiter for a satanic cult.

Hare said there is "nothing more hideous" than the brain-washing techniques used on prospective cult members.

Between 30 percent and 50 percent of the teen-agers the hospital treats has dabbled in satanic worship, Hare said.

"We continue to see people who have had minor experiences with it, particularly with teens and young adults," Hare said. "It's a constant kind of flow through the hospital."

New prison facility should be open by fall

By JULIE HILLRICHS
Staff Writer

Construction on a new $3.8 million prison facility to house city, county and federal prisoners is progressing on schedule, with the opening planned in late September or early October.

Jail project coordinator Walter Pate said Wednesday that he still expects to see a finished product later this fall, despite appearances that construction on facility is moving slowly.

Now that the concrete floor slab is down, construction workers are proceeding with work above ground, which includes erecting the walls, installing electrical cables and plumbing devices.

So far, Precinct 4 Commissioner Win Brown said commissioners are "very pleased with the quality of work."

"The construction of jails is much more specialized than office buildings or schools and we need that specialization for a project of this magnitude."
— Commissioner Win Brown

"The construction of jails is much more specialized than office buildings or schools and we need that specialization for a project of this magnitude," he said.

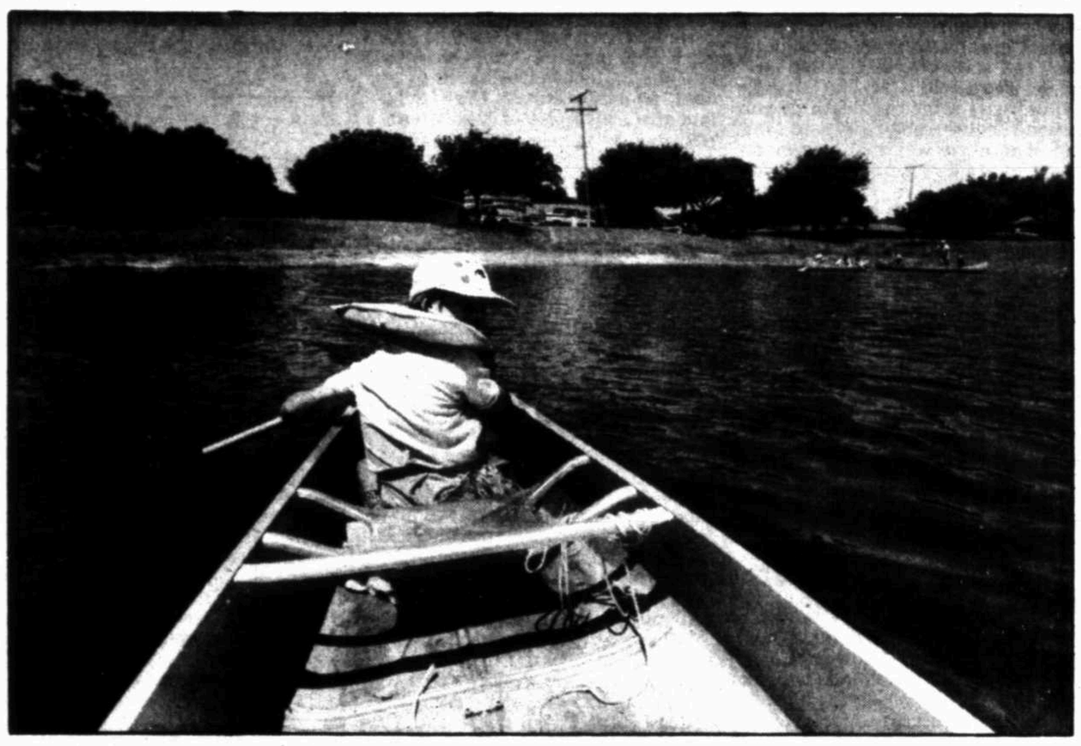

The design-building team of A&S Steel Building Inc. of Amarillo and Campbell & Coats Construction Inc. of Midland were selected last August to construct the 192-bed facility which will be located in the south-central section of the city at Main Street and Industrial Avenue.

A&S designed the facility, which Sheriff Gary Painter has described as "one of the most innovative" county jails in Texas and should satisfy the jail needs of Midland County for years to come.

The new county jail — which will replace the Midland City jail and compelement the remodeled county facility — is scheduled for opening in the fall.

Currently, the county houses 104 inmates at its fifth-floor courthouse location. The addition of the new jail will bring that capacity to 296, according to county officials.

The old jail will continue to act as a holding tank for "pretrial detainees."

Sponsors of Senate comp bill hope it reduces insurance rates

By JAMES CULLEN
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Sponsors of a Senate version of workers compensation reform Wednesday had high hopes their bill would bring down insurance rates while protecting the rights of injured workers, as House and Senate leaders looked forward to settling their differences on the controversial topic.

Sen. Kent Caperton, D-Bryan, and Sen. John Montford, D-Lubbock, said they based Senate Bill 1 upon compromises that House and Senate conferees reached in the closing days before the regular legislative session adjourned May 29.

The new Senate version, which was introduced to the Senate State Affairs Committee Wednesday, would keep juries in the appeals process but the sponsors said it would provide higher benefits for injured workers..

The Senate bill also includes a provision by Sen. Carl Parker, D-Port Arthur, that would impose stronger workplace safety regulations than the House version, allowing the Texas Department of Health to penalize employers who violate safety regulations and allowing employees to refuse to enter unsafe working conditions.

The House of Representatives today (Thursday) was expected to vote on House Bill 1, which would take juries out of the compensation appeals process and maintain benefits for injured workers at approximately the same level as current benefits. The bill included some workplace safety regulations.

House Speaker Gib Lewis said the main differences between the two bodies are still over how compensation for permanent disability is figured and how to handle appeals of administrative decisions, but he said the two houses are not that far apart.

"There's always middle ground on any issue, but we're sending to the Senate basically the bill that was drafted by the interim study committee," Lewis said. That would take juries out of the system, as 47 other states have done, he noted.

"I don't know why we feel we ought to be out of sync with 47 other states that have higher benefits and lower insurance rates," he said.

Ex-teller faces 5 years in prison, $250,000 fine for embezzlement

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

An ex-teller for Community National Bank in Midland pleaded guilty Wednesday in federal court to embezzling $140,000 from the bank and making seven fictitious cash-out teller tickets to cover up the theft of cash over a two-year period.

The arrest of the former teller, 37-year-old Guadalupe "Lupe" Martinez, came in the wake of FBI investigations headed up by Special Agent Mary S. Carter.

The former teller, who appeared at the noon hearing, is to be sentenced at noon on Aug. 1 by U.S. District Court Chief Judge Lucius D. Bunton.

Maximum punishment for each of the two offenses brought against Mrs. Martinez could range up to five years in prison and the imposition of a $250,000 fine. The judge could order the woman to pay restitution.

According to court records, she was earning $880 monthly at the bank. She is married and has two daughters.

Mrs. Martinez offered no reason for taking the money. But at sentencing on Aug. 1, Bunton will ask her to say whatever she pleases for mitigation of punishment.

The judge told her that she would be sentenced under the Federal Sentencing Reform Act of 1984, that he would follow sentencing guidelines set forth for the offenses and the defendant's criminal background, if any, but that he has "the authority" to make her punishment "more severe" or "less severe" than suggested by the guidelines.

The guidelines are designed to make sentencing for similar federal sentences reasonably uniform throughout the national judiciary.

Mrs. Martinez, who confessed the crime to Carter, had agreed under a plea-bargaining agreement to plead guilty before the court rather than to submit her case to a federal jury.

'Only thing better than roasted goat is two goats'

While the goats were munching with obvious relish, another Spanish goat, in bits and pieces, was roasting over smoking charcoal.

Todd

The dining goats seemed quite oblivious to the sacrificed goat. They were savoring roots and greenery and anything else edible within their paths.

Meanwhile, on that same farm where the goats were feeding, a bunch of farmers and a few dirt-dabbling city-slickers were feeding or about to feed on simmering pinto beans, mashed potatoes, light bread and that barbecued goat.

Farmer Bill Holiman had chopped up the goat, bred for the dinner table, and was pleased with how the goat turned out.

And Dr. Sammy Helmers, another West Texas country boy grown up, was puffing on that last cigarette before he lit into the goat. Helmers is pegged with the label of a horticulturist, which is a six-bit name for a fellow who knows a thing or two about plants and weeds and which to cultivate and which to hoe.

He also knows a bit about goats on the ranch and the Texas A&M University campus, where he got educated degree by degree.

"Down at A&M," Helmers said, as he was fixing to fill his plate with goat, "the only thing better than a goat on a barbecue pit is two goats."

And Holiman, who has a menagerie of farm animals and a few old pastured vehicles waiting to be classic antiques, had no qualms about turning a young goat into barbecued meat.

"That's why he raises them," said his wife, Shirley.

Moments later, her granddaughter, 9-year-old Nichole Armstrong, who had been playing with long-haired Barbie dolls in her portable wading pool, was munching on food. She picked up some sliced light bread and said it was for her 7-year-old city friend, Diann Owens, whom she called, with a measure of mischievousness, a "hoglet."

Diann smiled.

"That's country girls for you," said Mrs. Holiman.

Nichole enjoys the country life, which often means that going into town is a treat — rarely a bore, even on school days.

Nichole said she likes "most everything," goats included, about the country life.

"It gets hot out here," especially when she is helping her granddaddy in the garden, which the goat-eating Aggie, Sammy Helmers, had looked over for the benefit of Holiman and his gardening friends.

And Nichole, who claimed center stage, became the country spokesman for her brother, Clayton, 1½, and her sister, Kelli, 5.

"Well," Nichole said, "my brother plays in the dirt. He eats dirt. But my sister stays home and goes fishing whenever my dad goes."

And Nichole, an admitted friend of the cute Spanish goats, likes goats in the field and in bit and pieces on the platter.

"Oh, I eat it," Nichole said of the cabrito. "I just don't like for them to die."

City of Austin employees drill holes around the Treaty Oak Wednesday to take samples of dirt for testing.

People leave cards, flowers for Treaty Oak

AUSTIN (AP) — Well-wishers tucked rock crystals into niches and hollows of the ailing, historic Treaty Oak, while city workers launched a new attack on a chemical used to poison the giant tree.

With the crystals, believed by some to have healing powers, were flowers, a wooden cross and cards. A homemeade card nestled at the oak's base said, "Get well soon. We love you."

Park workers Wednesday began boring hundreds of holes in the soil surrounding the mighty oak. They were to fill the holes with a mixture of bark, sandy loam and chemical-attacking microbes, said John Giedraitis, city forester.

Meanwhile, the Texas Department of Agriculture took soil samples. Once it is determined where the herbicide remains, the forester said, the next step could be severing the roots on that side of the tree.

Such action is "very drastic," Giedraitis said. But he added, "We need to stop the tree from absorbing the chemical.

"Otherwise, the tree will keep putting out leaves, and the chemical will keep being absorbed, and the leaves will keep falling off, until there's no more energy left to produce leaves," he said.

After it was discovered that the herbicide Velpar had been poured on the ground, workers initially removed obviously contaminated soil and injected activated charcoal and microbes into the remaining dirt.

The new effort began after it became clear the previous step had failed to eliminate the poison.

"I remain cautiously optimistic, but we're dealing with a real problem," Giedraitis said.

A local legend says Stephen F. Austin signed a treaty with the Indians under the tree, although there is not much foundation for the tale, according to the Handbook of Texas.

The oak — which is about 50 feet tall, has a 127-foot limb spread and is 52.5 inches in diameter at breast height — was admitted to the American Forestry Association's Hall of Fame in 1927. It is estimated to be more than 500 years old.

Margaret Hofmann, a former city council member who was introduced by Giedraitis as the "tree lady of Austin," said the misfortune of the tree has brought some good with it.

Many Austin residents had not heard of the Treaty Oak before the poisoning and the ensuing publicity, she said.

"Now, everybody knows it. People are learning about how to protect trees and how valuable trees are," Ms. Hofmann said.

Sgt. John Jones, who is investigating the case as second-degree felony criminal mischief, said a grand jury subpoena may be needed to gain access to some records pertaining to the case. He would not give further details about those records.

Jones earlier said police identified a primary suspect in the case.

Trio indicted for conspiring to export arms

CORPUS CHRISTI (AP) — A Canadian couple and a Swedish man indicted on charges of conspiring to illegally export military equipment to Iran are scheduled to go on trial in August.

Eileen and Ronald Hilton Arab, both 52, of Vancouver, British Columbia, and Erik Nissen, 62, of Norrkoping, Sweden, were arrested May 25 and charged with violating the Arms Export Control Act, money laundering and conspiracy.

The three were named in an eight count indictment returned Tuesday by a federal grand jury in Laredo, Assistant U.S. Attorney Robert Berg said. All pleaded innocent to the charges during an arraignment hearing Wednesday in Corpus Christi, he said.

Berg said pre-trial motions are set for August 7 with jury selection set for August 9 in Corpus Christi.

The trio were indicted for conspiracy to export more than $600 million in weapons and equipment and the actual exporting of 13 heaters, worth $1,400 each, used in urinals aboard F4C fighters to Iran. The heaters are on a munitions list of items prohibited from being exported to Iran, Berg said.

The indictment also charges the trio imported money into the United States for the sole purpose of violating the munitions export law.

The Arabs appeared in a second bond hearing Wednesday before U.S. Magistrate Eduardo E. de Ases. The magistrate denied the couple bond last month.

"They asked for a second bond hearing," Berg said. "The statutes are pretty liberal if the defendants can bring in new evidence before the court. They brought some evidence that may or may not have been new, but the court denied them bond."

Berg said the couple asked de Ases to consider a house arrest program in which a company could call the defendants to check on them and monitor them through a video camera.

Caperton said the Senate version accomplishes reform of the 75-year-old system. "If the goal is minimizing lawyer involvement and getting claims resolved earlier in the process, we think we do it more efficiently, he said, "but if the goal is to engage in lawyer bashing, I don't think that is worthwhile, because some people are going to need lawyers."

The bill would allow informal claims resolution or formal mediation. The mediator's recommendation could be appealed either tto binding arbitration or a jury trial, which sponsors said would not be trial de novo, or a new trial, but it would consider the commission's award as part of the record.

In benefits, the bill would establish a maximum weekly benefit of $416 for the first 26 weeks, then down to $291, compared with the current maximum of $238 per week. The House bill would establish the maximum weekly benefit as $241.

Compensation for permanent disability would be figured on a formula that adjusts for age, education, training, work experience, earnings, likelihood of future work and efforts to participate in rehabilitation and to look for work. The House version would provide a more fixed amount based on age, education and occupation.

While both bills would include worker safety provisions, the House bill would operate the programs through the Workers Compensation Commission while the Senate bill would put workplace safety in the Texas Department of Health, which would have the authority to identify extra-hazardous employers, provide tougher penalties for those that fail to follow safety programs and operate a hotline for safety violations.

Differences in bills outlined

Following are major differences between revised House and Senate versions of workers compensation reform, as introduced this week.

■ Agency: In both the House and Senate versions the Industral Accident Board would be reorganized as Texas Workers Compensation Commission with membership changed from three full-time members to six part-time members.

■ Benefits: House bill would establish a maximum weekly benefit of $241, or 58 percent of average weekly wage. Permanent disabilities would be compensated by a fixed schedule according to the impairment.

Senate bill would establish maximum weekly benefit of $416, or 100 percent of the statewide average. After 26 weeks, the maximum would drop to $291, or 70 percent of the average. Permanent disabilities would be compensated by a nine-factor formula.

■ Dispute resolution: House bill would provide for informal prehearing conferences, followed by formal administrative hearings, which could be be appealed to a board of appeals judges. That board's decisions could be appealed to a district court judge. The bill also sets up an alternative system of mediation and binding arbitration if both parties consent.

Senate bill would provide for informal dispute resolution. If that failed, the bill would require formal mediation, with the mediator's recommendations appealable either to binding arbitration or modified jury trial.

■ Worker health and safety: House bill would monitor safety programs, make safety counseling available and penalize noncompliance.

Senate bill would allow the Texas Department of Health to require employer compliance with safety plans, inspect workplaces with high accident rates and penalize noncompliance with safety plans. It also would prohibit retaliation against workers who refuse to enter workplaces they consider unsafe and provide a toll-free number for workers to report safety violations.

■ Insurance: House bill would require that insurance carriers make deductibles available.

Senate bill would make workers compensation coverage mandatory for all but the smallest employers by 1992 and would provide for a 15 percent rate rollback in 1991.

Mattox, Richards at odds over mailed materials

AUSTIN (AP) — The two Democratic gubernatorial hopefuls — state Treasurer Ann Richards and Attorney General Jim Mattox — are at odds over material they have mailed to Texans at state expense.

Ms. Richards' campaign on Wednesday said Mattox should repay the state for a "Report to Texans" brochure about his office's accomplishments that recently was mailed out.

A spokeswoman for Mattox called that a cheap shot and described the mailing as part of a legitimate annual report to the public on the office's activities, similar to Ms. Richards' own public mailings as treasurer.

Glenn Smith, Ms. Richards' campaign manager, called the Mattox brochure "blatantly self-promoting ... propaganda."

"This 'Report to Texans' shamelessly takes credit for everything under the sun, but there is one phrase that doesn't appear on his propaganda — not printed at state expense," Smith said.

"Jim Mattox owes it to the taxpayers of Texas to repay them money spent to serve only his interests and not the interests of the public at large," he said.

DEATHS

Frances Douglas

Services for Mrs. Frances Faulk Douglas of Midland were to be held at 10 a.m. today at the St. Luke's United Methodist Church, with Dr. Jarrell Sharp officiating.

Douglas

Graveside services will be held at 10 a.m. Friday at Rosehill Cemetery in Forth Worth, with the Revs. Carl Mehaffy of the First United Methodist Church in Arlington and Frank Leach of Polytechnic United Methodist Church in Fort Worth officiating.

Mrs. Douglas died Tuesday afternoon at a Midland hospital.

Born in Waco on Nov. 7, 1901, she met Marvin Bruce Douglas through her father's grocery business. They married July 24, 1924, in Fort Worth, which was their home for 53 years. She worked for an insurance agency from the age of 25, and at the age of 60 she formed her own insurance agency. She belonged to the Insurance Women of Fort Worth and Wedge Wood Chapter No. 756 of the Eastern Star.

She served the Missouri Avenue and Forest Hills Methodist Churches for 60 years in many capacities, including teaching Sunday school for at least 40 years. She participated on the Board of Stewards, serving as Sunday school superintendent, treasurer of the church and as local president and state officer for the Weslyn Service Guild.

Four years after the death of her husband in 1980, she moved to Midland, where she was an active member of St. Luke's United Methodist Church.

She is survived by her daughter, Mrs. Genevieve Douglas Hawley of Midland; two grandchildren and two great-grandchildren.

Pallbearers were to be John Millwee, Jim Croneberg, Bud Brewer, Jack Monzingo, Hi Burney and Calvin Hoover.

Loy Allen

ODESSA — Services for Loy Fowler Allen of Odessa will be at 2 p.m. Saturday at the Temple Baptist Church of Odessa with Rev. Jerry Thorpe officiating. Burial will follow at Sunset Memorial Gardens with Hubbard-Kelly Funeral Home in charge of arrangements.

He died Tuesday in a Dallas hospital following a lengthy illness.

He was born May 11, 1922 in Jacksboro and married Anne McMordie on June 18, 1960 in Odessa. He graduated from Jacksboro High School and the University of Texas with a B.S. degree in petroleum engineering. Retiring after 32 years of service with Gulf Oil Co., he founded Flexbar Inc. in 1984 and at the time of his death he served as vice president of the company. He served as a pilot in the U.S. Army during World War II.

Survivors include his wife; one daughter, Lauri Allen of Denton and one sister, Jane Shipman of Rowlett.

Thelma Armstrong

LOVINGTON, N.M. — Mrs. Pat (Thelma) Armstrong, 69, of Lovington, N.M., mother of Virginia (Mrs. Phillip) Earhart and Beverly (Mrs. Kenneth) Bristow, both of Midland, died Tuesday in Lubbock.

Memorial services and burial will be at 2 p.m. Friday at Smith Funeral Home in Tishomingo, Okla.

Other survivors include her husband, Pat Armstrong; one son, Pat Armstrong Jr. of Fort Stockton; two sisters; one brother, seven grandchildren and four great-grandchildren.

Gun falls from oven, kills woman

From Staff Reports

A 26-year-old Midland woman who was cleaning a microwave oven at a convenience store was killed late Wednesday when a pistol atop the appliance was knocked off and discharged, the Midland County Sheriff's office reported.

Theresa Boatwright, 3505 Cottonflat Road, #15, was pronounced dead at the scene by Midland County Justice of the Peace Robert Pine. Ms. Boatwright was shot once in the face with a .22-caliber pistol, according to reports.

The accident occurred about 9:20 p.m. at the Greenwood Grocery on FM 307, just west of FM 1379.

According to Paul Hallmark of the department's Technical Assistance Unit, she was cleaning a glass tray in the oven when she shut the door. The pistol fell from the top of the oven and discharged as it hit the floor, according to Hallmark.

No charges will be filed in the case, according to officers.

Escaped trusty being sought

Midland police are searching for a federal prisoner who walked away from a work detail Wednesday morning.

Edward Persuad, 29, a citizen of Guyana, was last seen about 10:35 a.m. in front of the Public Safety Building, 406 E. Texas St., according to police. Persuad was classified a jail trusty and was sweeping the sidewalk when he was last seen.

He had been confined in the federal section of the city jail since June, and was scheduled to be released in August, according to Cpl. Jim White. Persuad was a "coyote," a term for aiding illegal aliens who want to enter this country, White said. He was serving his sentence on a federal charge of aiding and abetting aliens.

He is described as 5 feet 3 inches tall, weighing about 125 pounds. He has black hair and brown eyes, and was last seen wearing a black and white cap, denim pants, and black tennis shoes, according to police.

Mortorcyclist hurt in accident

A 30-year-old Midland man was listed in stable condition early today, hours after he drove in the wrong lane and lost control of his motorcycle near a busy intersection, Midland police reported.

Eric Allen Smothers, 3417 N. Midland Dr. #914, suffered a facial fracture and lacerations in the 12:20 a.m. accident and was being treated at Midland Memorial Hospital, spokeswoman Sue Ristom said.

Smothers was driving a 1986 Kawasaki motorcycle north in the southbound lane of the 900 clock of South Midkiff Road when the bike struck the center median. He lost control of the vehicle and slid, according to police.

He was not wearing a helmet at the time of the accident, reports said.

Man arrested for DWI, driving about 2mph

HOUSTON (AP) — A man arrested after driving his car about 2 mph on a highway was sentenced to five years in prison and fined $2,000 for drunken driving.

Alfonso Ovalle Rodriguez, 56, was given the maximum permissible sentence under Texas law for the felony charge of driving while intoxicated.

Texas Department of Public Safety Trooper Kevin Kennedy testified Wednesday he was writing a traffic ticket near an exit on Interstate 10 on Jan. 24 when he saw a car driving an estimated 2 mph and weaving "all over the road."

Rather than use his patrol unit to stop the car, the trooper simply ran up to vehicle and began pounding on the driver's car window, saying "Police! Pull it over!"

Kennedy said that after Rodriguez pulled over and got out of the car, he admitted being intoxicated, adding he had been drinking "moonshine and tequila."

Rodriguez's criminal history includes eight DWI convictions dating back to 1958.

She was charged by information, a complaint lodged by the FBI and formally drafted by Assistant U.S. Attorney Tom Beery of Midland, and waived the right of evidence against to be presented to a grand jury for indictment.

In exchange for her guilty plea, "no other charges will brought against her," Beery told Bunton.

And Mrs. Martinez's defense lawyer, Tom Morgan, likewise noted that "numerous other counts will not be pursued."

The case against Mrs. Martinez began to build on April 5 after Lyndia Benton, CNB head teller, attempted to balance Mrs. Martinez's teller records and discovered that $140,000 was missing.

April 4 was Mrs. Martinez's last work day before she was to take a six-week medical leave to have surgery.

"Benton assumed there was an error in the paperwork," Carter said in an FBI complaint summary, "and did not report the missing money" to CNB Vice President Elizabeth Harrell until the next day.

Subsequently, "Harrell conducted an audit of the entire bank and verified that exactly $140,000 was missing," Carter said in the complaint.

Prosecutor Beery noted that Carter, the lead FBI agent on the case, took it April 7 and by April 20, "she had solved the case, gotten a confession and retrieved $24,000 in bank funds" from Mrs. Martinez's home, which reportedly had been remodeled and fitted with new furniture.

"I would say that's a pretty good piece of work," Beery said. "She (Carter) got after it."

Ron Butler, special agent-in-charge of the Midland office, Special Agent Ed Stroz, and other agents worked with Carter on the CNB case.

"She's the newest agent here," Beery said. And Carter, noted Beery and Butler, is the first woman FBI agent assigned to Midland.

"She did a good job, excellent job" of investigating, Beery said of the 30-year-old agent. "She is aggressive yet compassionate."

Hance: States need power to enforce rail regulations

AUSTIN (AP) — Chairman Kent Hance of the Texas Railroad Commission says the federal government needs to give the states more authority to enforce railroad safety regulations.

"Instead of violations being stacked up in Washington for up to two years, Texas could prosecute violations much sooner in almost every case," Hance said.

"Additionally, we would benefit from the work performed by Texas rail inspectors as fines for violations would become state revenue," he said.

Hance's remarks Wednesday were to the Committee on Transportation of the National Governors' Association in Washington, according to his office.

Murder conviction upheld

AUSTIN (AP) — The Texas Court of Criminal Appeals on Wednesday affirmed the capital murder conviction of Dorsey Johnson Jr. in the death of a convenience store clerk who was fatally shot after being ordered to lie down in the store cooler.

Jack Huddleston was shot in the back of the neck with a .25-caliber pistol at Allsup's store in Snyder in the early morning hours of March 23, 1986.

Johnson's companion emptied the cash drawer of $160, the appeals court said. Two cartons of cigarettes also were taken.

Johnson was arrested in April 1986 for a subsequent robbery and attempted murder of a store clerk in the neighboring town of Colorado City, the court opinion said.

"It was in the course of investigating this latter offense" that Johnson "confessed to the capital offense committed in Snyder," the court said.

Johnson alleged seven points of error, including that he didn't get a fair trial because of publicity. The appeals court rejected all alleged errors.

Radar balloon deployed

YUMA, Ariz. (AP) — The U.S. Customs Service has unveiled an aerostat which is the third of six radar balloons planned to detect drug smuggling across the U.S.-Mexico border.

Two other aerostats were deployed at Sierra Vista and at Deming, N.M., in 1987 and 1988, respectively. Three others are planned for three Texas sites: Marfa, Eagle Pass and Rio Grande City.

Customs Commissioner William Von Raab referred to the aerostats as an "electronic picket fence," and said, "A traditional problem for Customs law enforcement personnel has been detection and interception of the general aviation aircraft used by airborne drug smugglers.

"The sophisticated radar on this balloon will look down for low-flying aircraft and help us to intercept and apprehend them more easily," Von Raab said Wednesday.

Each helium-filled aerostat is moored to its ground stations by a cable and float at altitudes up to 15,000 feet, the Customs Service said.

A&M, Taipei to sign pact

COLLEGE STATION (AP) — A plastics company's close ties to Texas paved the way for a "sister school" agreement between Texas A&M and the Chang-Gung Medical College of Taipei, officials said.

The pact, to be signed Monday in Taipei, will allow for cooperative research and exchanges of faculty and students between medical programs at the two schools.

Chang-Gung Medical College, founded in 1986, is a subsidiary of the Formosa Plastics Group that operates seven plants around the world, including one at Point Comfort, Texas. Formosa Plastics also plans a new $1.3 billion plant in Port Lavaca, Texas.

George C.Y. Chiou, associate dean for research and graduate studies at the Texas A&M College of Medicine, said Formosa Plastics' ties to Texas were key to the agreement.

Mother faces prison

BROWNSVILLE (AP) — A woman convicted of endangering her daughter who was found chained to a bed faces up to a year in prison and a $2,000 fine.

A jury convicted Petra Betancourt, 23, of the crime Wednesday.

The child, Carolina Betancourt, was placed in protective custody last December after a nurse reported finding the 3-year-old chained by her ankle to a bed in Ms. Betancourt's Brownsville home.

Ms. Betancourt testified that her boyfriend, Isaac Gonzalez, chained the girl. The woman said she always kept a pan of hot water on the stove in the kitchen adjoining her daughter's room and that the chain kept the child from being burned.

Ms. Betancourt gave birth to a boy in December. He also was placed in protective custody.

Scouts thankful for bridge

AUSTIN (AP) — Cub Scouts from Nocona plan to says "thanks" to the state highway commission next week for a new Red River bridge.

The scouts made a 4-by-8-foot thank-you card for Texas and Oklahoma officials.

One-half of the card was presented to the Oklahoma Transportation Commission in Oklahoma City on June 5. The other half will go to Texas highway officials June 28, and the scouts want the two sections joined at the dedication of the bridge in late 1992.

Environmental and design studies have started on the new bridge and connecting roadway, northeast of Nocona, which is between Wichita Falls and Gainesville. The bridge will be built near Spanish Fort.

In 1950, a bridge located near the site burned, leaving that stretch of the Texas-Oklahoma border the longest without a river crossing.

Court rules against driver

AUSTIN (AP) — The Texas Court of Criminal Appeals ruled against a man convicted in two cases of failing to stop his automobile and render aid after hitting and killing two women walking on the shoulder of a road.

The Wednesday ruling upholds decisions by the 9th Court of Appeals in Orange County and the trial court in the September 1980 deaths of Bobbie Folks Rash and Vicki Rash Norvell.

Hubert Richard Spradling argued that striking and failing to render aid to the two women was "but a single act or occurrence," and he should not have been tried in separate cases on each woman's death, according to the court's majority opinion.

Model of warship Zavala turned over to Clements

AUSTIN (AP) — Best-selling author Clive Cussler and an associate have presented Gov. Bill Clements with a detailed scale model of the warship Zavala, which sailed more than 140 years ago under the flag of the Texas Navy.

Cussler, who has written several books including "Raise the Titanic," and attorney Wayne Gronquist of Austin discovered the shipwrecked Zavala in 1986 at Galveston.

The author had the model built for Texans and turned it over to Clements on Wednesday.

The Zavala was a 201-foot, converted sailing vessel and is thought to have been the first steam-powered battleship in North America. The ship saw some action against Mexico between 1839 and 1841, during the days of the Texas Republic.

The ship was abandoned after a hurricane ran it aground, and it was buried in the early 1900s when sand was pumped onto Galveston Island to expand it.

Cussler has a reputation for finding historic shipwrecks. He and Gronquist, along with members and trustees of their nonprofit corporation, the National Underwater Marine Agency, have discovered 54 historic shipwrecks, including the German submarine that sank the Lusitania and a number of Civil War ships.

Cussler became interested in the Zavala after he was made an honorary admiral in the Texas Navy in 1985. He then began a research program to locate the site of the Zavala and other ships of the two Texas Navies.

The Zavala was found under a parking lot at Galveston's Pier 29.

Finding and excavating the ship was a joint project between Cussler's nonprofit corporation and the Texas Antiquities Committee. Artifacts from the ship were turned over to Texas A&M University for cleaning and preservation treatment.

Dennis Genz, holding photographs that show him before and after his diet, recuperates after surgery removed 19½ pounds of skin and adjoining tissue. His skin will be used for burn patients at the University of Chicago Medical Center. Genz weighed 430 pounds before losing 170 pounds on a high-protein diet.

Man donates skin after weight loss

CHICAGO (AP) — A 3-month-old boy with severe burns was the first beneficiary of Dennis Genz's decision to donate 4 square feet of his excess skin to a hospital burn unit.

Genz' diet recently allowed him to shed 170 pounds, but left him with a large flap of skin on his abdomen, which was removed surgically Monday.

"There have been rare cases where parents have donated skin for their children," Betty Perls, education director for the Regional Organ Bank of Illinois, said Tuesday. "But none of us have ever heard of a case like this."

The 5-foot-11 Genz weighed 430 pounds last August when he began a high-protein weight-loss regimen. Last week, he weighed in at 260.

He said the operation removed 19½ pounds of skin and adjoining tissue.

Some of the skin went to Dexter Moore, a 3-month-old victim of a fire in Indiana.

When the infant was admitted, he was suffering from smoke inhalation and burns to his face, head and arms. It was a life-threatening situation, said John Easton, spokesman at the University of Chicago Medical Center.

Now, said Easton, "he's doing well."

More lives are saved by skin transplants than any other donated organ, said Dr. Lawrence Gottlieb, professor of surgery and director of the hospital's burn unit.

Cancer ward's Lively Room helps people deal with fear

By JOSEPH B. FRAZIER

DECATUR, Ga. (AP) — Past the doors of the dying, in a brightly colored room in the cancer ward, people smile, music plays and the sun shines in.

"It is a happy area," said Sandra Yates, the unit's head nurse. "You don't see people walking by with long faces like you might at a funeral home. Family members are not afraid to come to the hospital. They might not look forward to it, but to me that sets it off.

"If they aren't afraid to be here then we are doing our job."

Welcome to the Lively Room, where The Three Stooges, W.C. Fields and the kids from Our Gang do their stuff on a 54-inch TV screen, and there are a player piano, tapes of old radio shows and scrapbooks of cartoons.

Since DeKalb Medical Center opened the Lively Room in 1982, it's been the scene of countless parties, recitals, and at least one wedding.

"It helps, it really does," said Rachel Blackstone of suburban Atlanta who spends all of each day in the ward with her terminally ill mother. "That hospital room gets mighty small after a while.

"It eases the mental strain. Sometimes I go from here down to the second floor to look at the new babies. The room maintains an upbeat feeling."

The idea of emotions' effect on health isn't new. In the 1400s, surgeon Henri de Mondeville told his patients jokes, thinking the levity would speed recovery. The concept has won more credence, but even in the 1960s, Ms. Yates said, over 80 percent of emotion studies centered on the negative.

"Positive emotions were thought to have no purpose. Now we're making inroads in positive emotions," she said, adding that they have been shown to produce enzyme and hormone changes that help people cope.

Board member W.W. "Walsh" Lively donated $15,000 to start the room, but it was inspired by former Saturday Review editor Norman Cousins. He checked out of a hospital and into a hotel with an armload of "Candid Camera" reruns, and credited belly laughs and vitamin C for beating a debilitating illness.

"We have seen patients who thought they would never go out of here but they did make it out, they did go home again even if it was only for a short period of time," Ms. Yates said. "It is a good, sound medical practice with positive results." Nonetheless, "We have to make sure it is therapeutic for the patients and doesn't make things worse for them."

The stress of most cancer wards, she said, usually causes a high turnover among nurses; at DeKalb it is the lowest in the hospital. The junior nurse on the day shift, for example, has been there five years.

"No matter what the condition we see people as living individuals with needs. If we keep that in perspective it is all very normal to us," Ms. Yates said. Many people are alert to the very end and when they accept their disease and the outcome, they say they are ready to go...We tell them, 'It's not time yet. Let's make today the best it can be.'"

It's important, she said, to respond immediately to any opportunity.

"We had a woman who had taught dance and she said she really wished she could teach one more class. We couldn't do the class but we got a ballet tape she could critique, so she could have some input."

"A 77-year-old patient said she couldn't understand why she was still here but if she was still going to be here she wanted her hair colored one more time....We colored her hair...(then) asked that her nails be polished.

"These things may not seem important but they give hope and that's what it's all about. You can talk about hope until you're blue in the face but you have to give something meaningful.

"If someone wants a picnic, set the date for tomorrow. You can't put things off. Especially here."

Researcher finds wine, onions contain anti-cancer substance

DALLAS (AP) — A researcher says people should not rush to their wine cellars in hopes of fighting off cancer despite a discovery that red wine contains a powerful anti-cancer agent.

Terrance Leighton, a microbiology professor at the University of California at Berkeley, said, "Having a large helping of onion rings might be more beneficial than drinking a lot of red wind."

A mutagen present in red wine, called quercetin, also has been found in onions and garlics. Recently published reports indicate that Chinese people who have eaten large amounts of those foods have high levels of quercetin and low levels of stomach cancer, Leighton said.

Leighton told an audience at the American Chemical Society's recent national meeting that he set out to discover a mutagen — an agent that causes a change in genes — in red wine and found that the potentially harmful substance also was an anti-cancer agent.

"The bottom line in terms of wine: it's sort of a bad news turned to good news situation," he said.

White and rose wines and red and white grape juices contain low or no levels of mutagen, Leighton said. But red wines contain varying amounts of quercetin.

Research revealed that certain molecules in red grape skins that are released during a processing technique affect the amount of quercetin in the wine, Leighton said.

After discovering the mutagen, Leighton said, he and other scientists decided more should be learned about it before publicizing the finding.

"It was found that it would completely block the action of a whole series of carcinogens," he said, describing the substance as having "a Jekyll and Hyde personality."

Cancer cells develop from the "initiation" phase to the "promotion" phase, in which they proliferate over time into a cancerous mass. Quercetin has been found to act on cells in the promotion stage, Leighton said.

It has been determined that the onion family of vegetables contains high rates of quercetin, a specific discovery compared to previous general findings that lots of fruits and vegetables in the diet are linked to lower cancer rates, Leighton said.

"We have shown that the bacteria in our gut can carry out these molecular activities," thus activating anti-carcinogens, he said.

But Leighton said only if the molecules in the gut process the sugar off of the quercetin are the anticarcinogens seen.

David Jacobson-Kram, an associate professor of oncology at Johns Hopkins University and director of the Center of Toxicology at Microbiological Associates Inc., said Leighton's study indicates quercetin's anticarcinogenic activity apparently is unrelated to the fact that it is a mutagen.

Modern Plastic Surgery

by Sylvan Bartlett, M.D., ASPRS

A RAISED BROW

Patients with sunken eyebrows and furrowed foreheads may want to consider a surgical procedure known as a "brow lift." While this type of surgery will not completely remove all forehead lines, it aims to smooth out forehead furrows, flatten frown lines between the eyes, and lift the eyebrows and upper lids. To do so, the surgeon begins by making an incision in the scalp that extends from just above one ear to the other. This allows him access to the muscles which cause creases in the forehead (frontalis) and furrows in the eyebrows (the corrugator muscle). Each of these may be cut back, while the forehead skin is pulled back. After excess skin is removed from the scalp, the scar is left hidden amid the hair at the top of the head. The result is often a face that loses its scowl.

As the field of medical technology and research both widens and deepens its research areas, great strides are being made in plastic surgery that can directly benefit you and your family. Those of us at the office at 5030 East University, Suite C104, 367-3363 look forward to providing you with the high level of care you seek and deserve. Office hours: Mon.-Fri. 8-5. "Member ASPRS".

P.S.
Because today's brow lift involves excision of muscle, results last longer than the procedures of a decade ago.

Carter players arrested

Edwards, Evans investigated for armed robbery

DALLAS (AP) — Police on Wednesday were holding two players of the state champion Dallas Carter football team, including the defensive back whose academic eligibility sparked a legal fight, in an armed robbery investigation.

Former star cornerback Gary Edwards and All-America defensive back Derric Evans, a second Carter football star, were arrested shortly after 7:30 p.m. Tuesday. The two 17-year-olds matched the description of two men who robbed two video stores at gunpoint, said Detective Hollis Edwards.

The detective, who is not related to the player, said formal charges were expected to be filed later against the pair. They were held at Lew Sterrett Justice Center on two counts each of investigation of aggravated robbery.

GARY EDWARDS and Evans were starting seniors on the Carter team, which last season became the first Dallas Independent School District team to win a state football championship since 1950.

Carter's eligibility during the playoffs was threatened by a controversy surrounding Edwards' algebra grades and Texas' no-pass, no-play law.

School district Superintendent Marvin Edwards, after initially declaring the team ineligible for the playoffs because of Edwards' grades, reversed his decision. The two are not related.

The Carter team climbed to the Class 5A state title while the school weathered a series of legal challenges.

Carter Football Coach Freddie James and C.C. Russeau, the principal, did not immediately return calls Wednesday from The Associated Press. Receptionists said they were in meetings or unavailable.

"It just doesn't sound real," James told the Dallas Times Herald Tuesday night. "Sounds like somebody has made a mistake. Maybe it was someone who looked like them, but they wouldn't do anything like this. They don't even take things from each other in the locker room."

But Hollis Edwards said a number of witnesses identified the suspects and a full description had been made of their getaway car.

"A good description was put out from the first robbery," said the detective. "We had a very good description of the suspects as well as their vehicle. It stood out because of its color and the fact it had larger tires in the back than in the front. Basically, everybody was looking for the vehicle and officers spotted it."

The players were held without bond pending filing of formal charges, said Brenda Riggs of the Dallas County District Attorney's records division.

James said he has known both men since they were in ninth grade. But he said he hasn't heard from either since school ended two weeks ago. Both players have full college football scholarships, Evans to the University of Tennessee and Edwards to the University of Houston.

Jessie Armstead, former Carter linebacker who graduated in December, said he doubted Edwards would commit a crime for money.

"It seems like something he wouldn't do," said Armstead. "He really had everything. He wasn't needing for anything."

WITNESSES AT two Video Exchange stores that were robbed identified the suspects for police.

A store clerk, after the first robbery at about 6:30 p.m. Tuesday, said one of the two men pulled a pistol and demanded cash. The other man had just paid $3.24 to rent a film. The clerk told police the men took $256.54 and fled in a red 1988 Camaro.

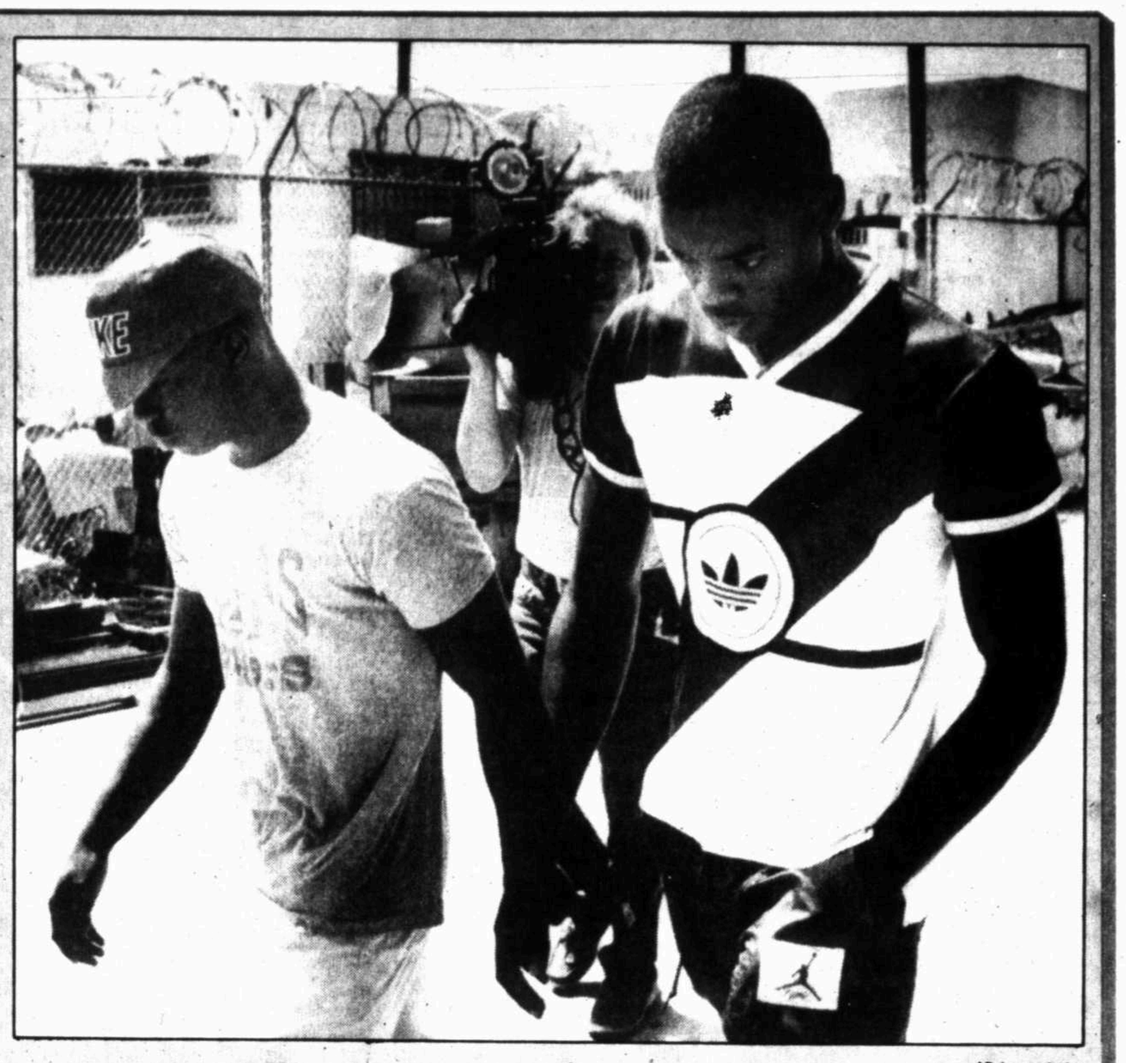

At another Video Exchange store an hour later, two men matching the descriptions of the earlier robbers entered the store and asked for the movie "Coming to America."

The clerk told police one of the men demanded she open her cash register after she turned to get the movie. One of the men was holding a gun, she said.

After surrendering the money, the woman said she had no more. But one of the men, she said, told her he used to work at the store and he knew there was more money. Hollis Edwards said he did not know how much was taken in the second robbery.

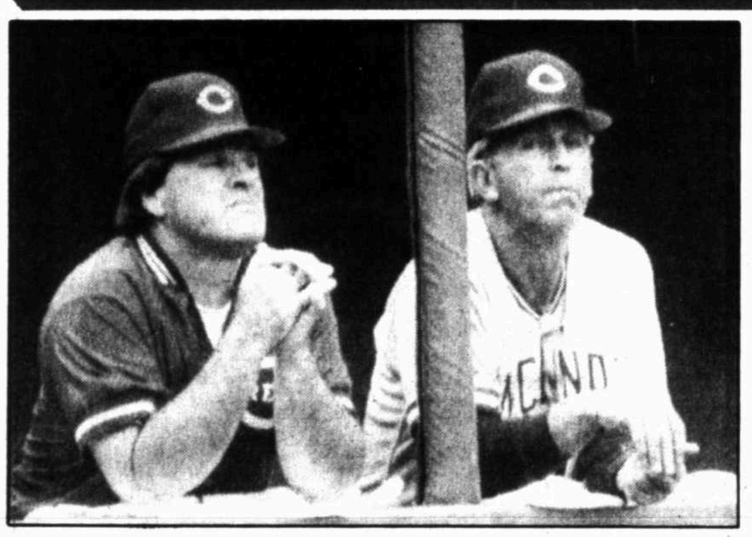

The men fled when a customer entered the store, the clerk told police.

Officers said they arrested Gary Edwards and Evans a few minutes later. A copy of the movie "Coming to America" was found in the car, police said.

Cincinnati manager Pete Rose, left, almost seems to be praying as he watches doubleheader loss to the Atlanta Braves with coach Tommy Helms. Rose's problems off the field are also mounting.

Rose evidence includes handwriting, prints on Reds' betting sheets

CINCINNATI (AP) — Baseball's evidence against Pete Rose includes an expert's determination that his handwriting is on betting sheets involving Cincinnati Reds' games, sources familiar with baseball's investigation have told The Associated Press.

A handwriting expert who examined the betting sheets for major league baseball concluded the handwriting on the sheets is Rose's, several sources have confirmed for the AP.

The New York Times also reported today that the FBI has determined the slips of paper bear Rose's fingerprints as well as his handwriting. Baseball's investigators are trying to obtain the FBI's evidence on the fingerprints, the AP has learned.

THE BETTING sheets, if judged authentic by Commissioner A. Bartlett Giamatti, would give baseball tangible evidence that the Reds' manager bet on his own team, putting him in jeopardy of a lifetime ban. Rose's lawyers tried to discredit the betting sheets in a lawsuit filed Monday against Giamatti.

A state judge scheduled a hearing today on Rose's request for a temporary restraining order as part of the lawsuit. Rose wants Hamilton County Common Pleas Judge Norbert A. Nadel to prevent Giamatti from holding a hearing on the gambling allegations Monday in New York — the last step before the commissioner would impose any penalty on Rose.

Rose's lawyers and John M. Dowd, who investigated the allegations for Giamatti, were expected to be called as witnesses at the hearing today.

Dowd's 225-page report on the allegations includes three "Pete Rose Betting Sheets" supplied to investigators by Paul G. Janszen, who claimed to have run bets for Rose to bookmaker Ronald Peters. Janszen later became an FBI informant.

Rose's lawyers revealed the sheets' existence Monday in their lawsuit, and released correspondence that confirms Rose supplied handwriting samples at baseball's request to help an analyst examine them. The lawsuit said nothing about the analyst's conclusions.

Janszen, who last week completed a six-month sentence in a halfway house for failing to report income from the sale of steroids, gave the betting sheets to federal authorities while he was investigated, a source told the AP. He kept a copy, and later supplied that to baseball's investigators when they started looking into Rose's gambling, the source said.

"Rose is claiming the sheets are forgeries," The Times source was quoted as saying. "He says he didn't write them, but we're as confident as we could be that he did."

ROSE, speaking Wednesday night after the Reds lost a doubleheader to the Braves at Atlanta, was informed of the reports on the handwriting and fingerprints.

"That's not true," he said. "I'm not commenting on anything like that. Any other baseball questions? I thought it was in the courts right now. I'll say it again, I'm not going to talk about it."

Baseball officials don't have the fingerprint report, and are trying to get it from the FBI, a lawyer familiar with the commissioner's investigation told the AP.

"John (Dowd) has been trying to obtain information from the FBI about fingerprints on any documents they may have and have asked Rose's lawyers to join them in making that request," said the lawyer, who spoke on the condition of anonymity. "They have not done that as of yet."

Rose also is being investigated by a federal grand jury in Cincinnati that is examining his taxes.

Reuven J. Katz, one of Rose's five lawyers, declined to comment when asked about the betting slips. Rich Levin, a spokesman for Giamatti, also declined to comment.

In the suit, Rose's lawyers allege that Janszen stole three pieces of paper from the home of the Reds manager.

Robert A. Pitcairn Jr., another Rose lawyer, suggested in a May 12 letter to Dowd that Janszen might have forged the sheets.

Athletics obtain Yankee Henderson

NEW YORK (AP) — Rickey Henderson's stormy marriage with the New York Yankees is over. Now he's going home, at least for a little while.

Henderson, baseball's No. 4 career base stealer and a Bay Area native, headed home after 4½ years in New York when the Yankees shipped him to Oakland on Wednesday for pitchers Greg Cadaret and Eric Plunk and outfielder Luis Polonia.

How long Henderson will stay in Oakland is unclear. He signed a five-year contract after the Athletics sent him to New York in December 1984. That contract expires after this season, and he reportedly asked the Yankees for $8.6 million over three years — a half-million or so more than the Yankees were willing to give him.

"You always want to feel that you're wanted," said Henderson, who now will seek a long-term deal with Oakland. "I was beginning to feel I wasn't wanted here.

"But I'm glad I had a chance to play here in New York. I was proud to wear the pinstripes. I'm just sorry I didn't get a chance to win a World Series here.

"My wife wanted to be in Oakland, but I wanted to stay in New York."

Henderson's agent, Rich Bry, expects the Athletics to enter contract negotiations with the player.

"He can probably play for as long as he likes with Oakland. I can't imagine they made this deal without the intention of re-signing him," Bry said. "I'm in no hurry to work out a new contract with them. If they want to talk now, that's fine, but we have plenty of time to come to an agreement."

"I hated to give up Rickey," Yankees manager Dallas Green said. "He played very hard and busted his tail. But this trade was for the betterment of the Yankees. We desperately needed pitching. It's been our Achilles heel."

"We expect great things from him, both for the rest of the season and in the future," Athletics general manager Sandy Alderson said, adding that Henderson accepted the trade "without any cajoling from us."

"He's extremely excited," added Alderson, whose club is in first place in the AL West despite the season-long absence of slugger Jose Canseco and injuries to several other key players.

It has not been a good year for Henderson, on or off the field.

On the field, Henderson — a career .292 hitter — was batting just .247 with the Yankees, with three homers, 22 RBIs and 25 stolen bases. But he said he was starting to come out of his slump.

Henderson, 29, has stolen 80 or more bases six times since coming to the majors with Oakland as a 20-year-old in 1979 and has been one of the game's top offensive players throughout the 1980s.

He set the single-season record with 130 steals in 1982 and is fourth on the career list with 819 stolen bases. He also broke Bobby Bonds' career record for home runs leading off the game with his 36th earlier this season.

"It's just a matter of time before I started to hit better," he said. "I've been hitting the ball hard, but right at people. Got off to slow start but knew it would get better."

Off the field, he's made his share of news as well.

During spring training, Henderson blamed excessive drinking for the late-season collapse that dropped the Yankees to third in the American League East last season. He also blamed racial prejudice on the part of the baseball establishment and the media for depriving him of the recognition he felt he deserved.

Trade rumors heated up last weekend, when a published report said the Yankees had offered Henderson to the San Francisco Giants.

His best major league season was 1985, his first with the Yankees, when he hit .314 with 24 homers, 72 RBIs and 80 stolen bases while scoring 146 runs. He slumped to .263 in 1986, but had a career-high 28 homers and 74 RBIs to go along with 130 runs scored and 87 steals.

Henderson made the American League All-Star team as a starter in 1987, but missed much of the second half of the season with leg injuries, including a pulled hamstring. After Henderson missed a 10-game road trip in which the Yankees went 2-8 and fell out of first place, owner George Steinbrenner issued a statement saying then-manager Lou Piniella wanted Henderson traded for "jaking it" during his recovery from a pulled hamstring.

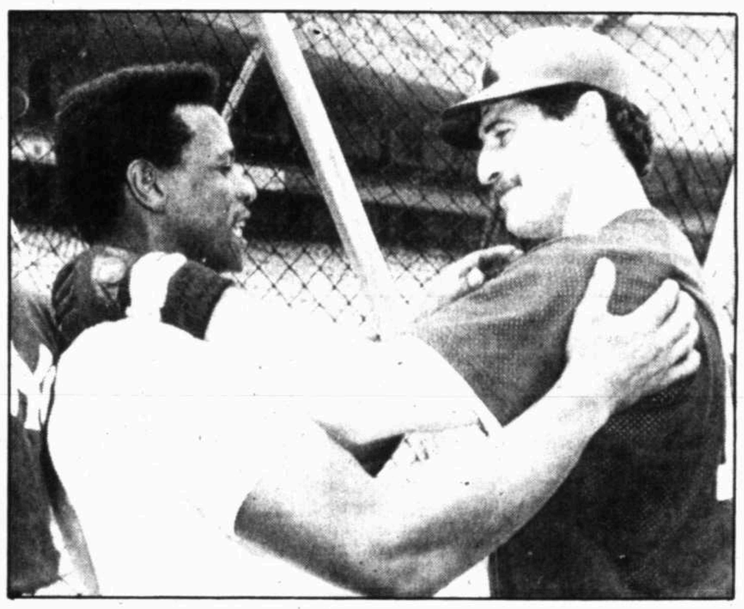

He hit .305 in 140 games last season with 93 stolen bases, but hit only six homers and drove in just 50 runs.

Plunk, a 25-year-old right-hander, and Cadaret, a 27-year-old lefty, were part of the Athletics' bullpen, among the best in the majors.

Plunk, who was sent by the Yankees to Oakland in the 1984 trade that brought Henderson to New York, was 7-2 with five saves last season and 1-1 with one save and a 2.20 earned-run average in 23 games this season.

Cadaret was 5-2 with three saves for Oakland last season and had no record this year in 26 games with a 2.28 ERA.

Polonia, 24, entered 1989 with a .289 career average in 209 games over parts of the last two seasons. He was hitting .286 in 209 at bats with the Athletics and had 13 stolen bases in 17 attempts.

OU gives Switzer 'fair' settlement

OKLAHOMA CITY (AP) — Barry Switzer is no longer football coach at Oklahoma, but he will continue to draw his regular $7,250 monthly salary until next June and then will pocket $145,000 as part of a "farewell" settlement.

Interim university president David Swank discussed terms of the $225,000 settlement on Wednesday after it was approved by the university's board of regents.

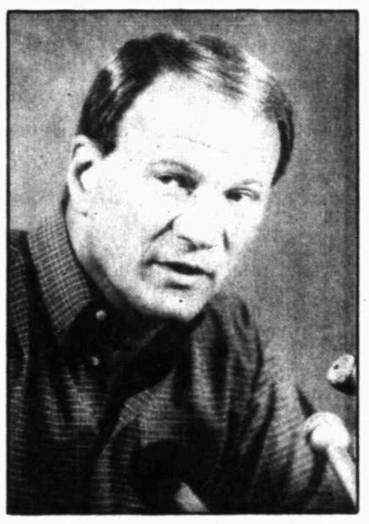

The regents also voted unanimously to hire former defensive coordinator Gary Gibbs as Switzer's successor.

Swank called the settlement with Switzer "abundantly fair considering the contributions he has made to the university and the state."

Switzer announced Monday he was stepping down as coach of the Sooners after 16 seasons, during which his teams won three national titles and 12 Big Eight Conference championships. He was the fourth-winningest coach in college football history.

In addition to hiring Gibbs and approving a salary of $88,000 a year for him, the regents also approved the settlement with Switzer and gave basketball coach Billy Tubbs a yearly salary of $88,000. The $88,000 for Gibbs is $1,000 more than Switzer made.

The Switzer settlement included a $145,000 lump payment to the former coach on June 1, 1990. It also provided that Switzer would be paid a salary of $7,250 a month until that time. Until Feb. 1, Switzer is to be on "special assignment" with the school, but his duties were not outlined.

Oklahoma's Barry Switzer ...gets "farewell" settlement

Switzer resigned Monday after six months of turmoil which saw the Oklahoma program wounded by a three-year NCAA probation and five players charged in incidents involving guns, drugs and sexual assault. Switzer had four years left on his rollover contract.

There were no dissenting votes on the settlement with Switzer, although regent Sarah Hogan had earlier questioned the propriety of the agreement. Hogan said the regents were not legally bound to provide the compensation.

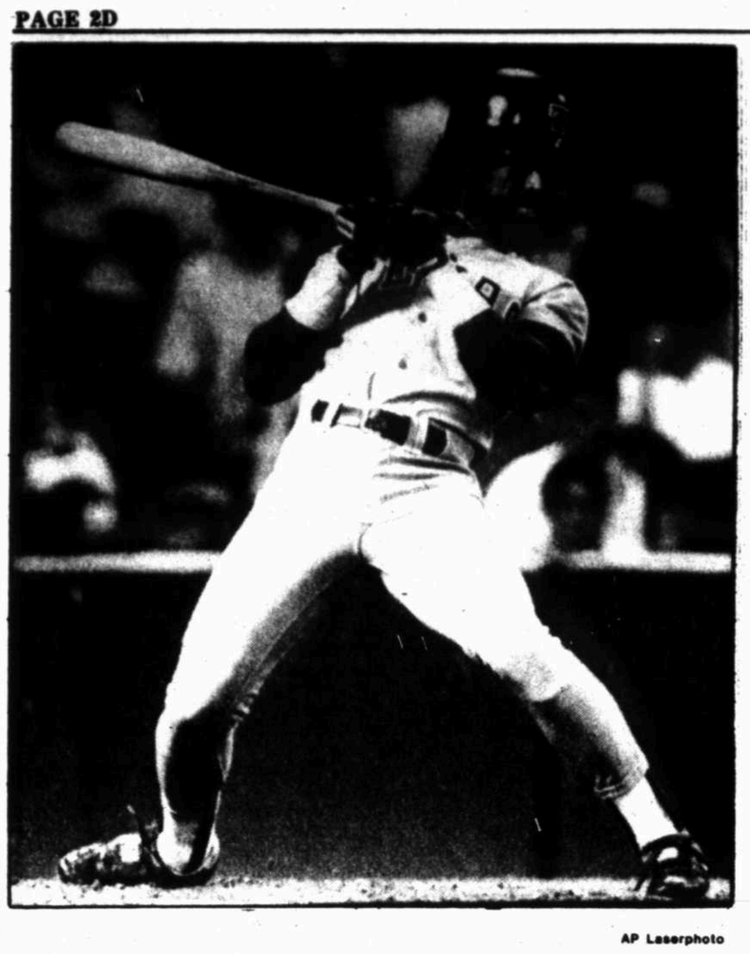

Swank said it was a negotiated settlement that was fair to all concerned. He said allowing Switzer to remain on the university payroll until Feb. 1 would permit him to take advantage of all of his retirement benefits.

Swank said the regents received legal advice before making the settlement.

On the day the regents formally accepted Switzer's resignation, a Dallas newspaper published a story saying that a pending lie-detector test and a drug investigation involving a former coach may have played a part in Switzer's departure.

"I can assure you there has been no request made of him (Switzer) to take a polygraph test," Swank said.

Treadway keys Atlanta's sweep

Reuschel produces another shutout for Giants

Associated Press

Today is Jeff Treadway Day in his hometown of Griffin, Ga., so he decided to do some early celebrating.

Treadway's two-run single off Cincinnati relief ace John Franco gave Atlanta a 4-3 victory over the Reds in the opener of Wednesday's twi-night doubleheader. Treadway doubled and scored the only run in the Braves' 1-0 triumph in the nightcap.

"I was hoping against the Reds I might have one good game out of this thing," said the second baseman who the Braves bought from the Reds for $50,000 near the end of spring training. "Sweet. That was a lot of fun for me. It's an old team that let me go."

Treadway's game-winning hit in the opener marked only the second failure in 20 save opportunities for Franco. Dale Murphy and Andres Thomas singled to start the ninth, Tommy Gregg sacrificed and Jody Davis was walked intentionally to load the bases before Treadway poked his two-run single into center field.

After being shut out on two hits in six innings by Tom Browning, who extended his string of scoreless innings to 23, the Braves began their comeback from a 3-0 deficit against Rob Dibble with one out in the eighth when pinch hitter Jeff Wetherby doubled and Lonnie Smith hit his eighth home run.

Cincinnati manager Pete Rose said the Braves "beat the best set-up man and the best short man in the world."

In the nightcap, John Smoltz and three relievers combined on a nine-hitter with 13 strikeouts. Smoltz allowed six hits in 5⅓ innings, Paul Assenmacher pitched two innings, Mark Eichhorn got the final two outs in the eighth and Joe Boever pitched the ninth for his 11th save as Cincinnati's losing streak reached four games.

Treadway opened the bottom of the first with a double off former Brave Rick Mahler and took third on Gregg's single. After Gregg was caught stealing, Gerald Perry hit a grounder to short that was bobbled by Lenny Harris, allowing Treadway to score.

Giants 2, Astros 0

Rick Reuschel scattered four hits in 7⅓ innings for his major league-leading 12th victory and Will Clark homered as the Giants stretched their winning streak to five games and concluded a 10-2 homestand, the first time in 23 years they won 10 games on a homestand.

Steve Bedrosian got the last five outs for his eighth save and second in as many opportunities since being traded from Philadelphia to San Francisco last Sunday.

"Every time you stand around in batting practice, all the opposition players come around and complain about the weather, the wind, the dirt," said Manager Roger Craig. "We use it to our advantage.

"Defensively, we play very well here. We don't make too many mistakes with wind-blown balls. It helps our pitchers, because we're basically a sinker ball-type pitching staff. With the wind blowing the way it does, it makes it sink better."

Reuschel, 12-2, won his ninth straight decision, striking out two and walking one. He threw first-pitch strikes to all but two of the 28 batters he faced. Clark gave the Giants a 1-0 lead in the first inning with a 425-foot homer, his 12th, off Jim Clancy.

"My zone for the first pitch is over the middle of the plate, knee-high," Reuschel said. "It doesn't always work. But usually if I get ahead I have a better day than if I get behind."

"He spots his ball better than anyone in the league," said Terry Puhl, who had one of Houston's four hits. "He's the epitome of a pitching coach's dream the way he gets ahead of the batter, mixes his speeds and gets lots of grounders and popups."

"We've had a bad road trip, won-lost wise, but we've had a chance in every game we've been in," said Astros manager Art Howe. "If we had gotten blown out in three games, I'd be concerned. The sad part is we wasted good pitching.

"The only thing good about this series is that it's over and we're getting out of town."

Cubs 1, Pirates 0

Greg Maddux held Pittsburgh to six hits in 10 innings and got the victory when Lloyd McClendon hit a sacrifice fly in the 11th. Maddux walked four and struck out five before Mitch Williams pitched a perfect 11th for his 18th save. Pirates starter Doug Drabek allowed five hits in nine innings.

Gary Varsho, inserted as a pinch-runner in the ninth inning, doubled off Doug Bair to start the 11th, took third on Damon Berryhill's fly ball and scored on McClendon's sacrifice fly as the Cubs won their fourth straight. They are 5-0 against Pittsburgh this season and have won 18 of their last 27 road games.

"This game showed people why we're in first place," Williams said. "It's because of our starting pitching."

"It's just been unbelievable," Manager Don Zimmer added. "Everybody's been a part of it, and we're doing it by doing the little things that don't look big, but are. Varsho started it with a double and then McClendon drove in the run. He hasn't played every day in three years, but he's doing a great, great job for us."

Mets 2, Expos 0

David Cone allowed five hits in seven innings for his first victory since May 6 and Howard Johnson hit his 19th home run. Cone, 4-5 after going 20-3 last year, had allowed 23 runs and 26 hits in his previous five starts spanning 19 1-3 innings. Randy Myers pitched two hitless innings for his ninth save.

Loser Bryn Smith allowed three hits in seven innings and the Mets' first run was unearned. Smith hit Gregg Jefferies with a pitch leading off the fifth and right fielder Hubie Brooks dropped Mookie Wilson's drive for a two-base error. Barry Lyons followed with a sacrifice fly.

Johnson led off the seventh with a homer. In his last 19 games he has nine homers and 16 RBIs. He had three homers and five RBIs while going 8-for-12 in the three-game series against Montreal.

Dodgers 6, Padres 2

Mike Davis, Jeff Hamilton and Eddie Murray homered and Tim Leary scattered 10 hits in eight innings. The Dodgers took a 4-0 lead in the first off Ed Whitson on two-run homers by Davis, his fourth, and Hamilton, his seventh.

The Padres scored their first run in the bottom of the first on Tony Gwynn's RBI double.

National League

KC's Saberhagen 'complete' pitcher

Associated Press

Bret Saberhagen is dominating American League hitters again.

He pitched a three-hitter for his league-leading seventh complete game and the Royals scored four times in the first inning Wednesday night, beating the Milwaukee Brewers 6-0.

Saberhagen, 7-4, has won four consecutive decisions and has lowered his earned-run average to 2.17. He said complete games aren't his goal.

"It's something that doesn't really mean as much as ERA or wins or stuff like that to me," he said. "I've got three in losing efforts. It would mean more if I was going out giving one run or shutting them out. All shutouts would be better. But you shut them down as long as you can."

Saberhagen retired the first nine batters before Paul Molitor singled leading off the fourth. Gary Sheffield singled in the seventh and Molitor singled in the ninth.

"That was a masterpiece," Royals manager John Wathan said. "You can't pitch better than that. It was nice to get off to a good start and bat around. We haven't done that often where we give a starting pitcher a cushion like that."

Singles by Kurt Stilwell and Kevin Seitzer and Bo Jackson's blooping double off Don August, 6-7, gave the Royals a 1-0 lead. Jim Eisenreich's sacrifice fly made it 2-0 and RBI singles by Pat Tabler and Bob Boone capped the four-run, six-hit inning.

Kansas City made it 6-0 in the fifth on Eisenreich's two-run single.

Rangers 10, Red Sox 3

Geno Petralli had a double and four singles in a 19-hit attack as Texas routed Roger Clemens. Rafael Palmeiro and Julio Franco each had three hits and Sammy Sosa added his first major league homer.

Staked to a 3-0 lead in the first inning, Clemens, 8-5, allowed 12 hits and four runs in 5⅔ innings.

Gary Mielke, 1-0, pitched 2⅓ perfect innings for Texas, which beat Boston for the first time in five games in Fenway Park this season.

Blue Jays 6, Angels 1

George Bell doubled in the go-ahead run in the 14th inning and Tom Henke, 6-3, finished with 3⅔ hitless innings.

Toronto, which avenged two earlier sweeps by the Angels this season, swept a three-game series in Anaheim Stadium for the first time since 1980.

AL Roundup

Tony Fernandez led off the 14th with an infield single against Greg Minton, 1-2, went to second when Kelly Gruber was hit by a pitch and scored when Bell doubled into the left-field corner.

Fred McGriff hit a sacrifice fly, Pat Borders an RBI single and Manny Lee a two-run double.

White Sox 7, Yankees 3

Carlton Fisk set an American League home run record for catchers with his 307th, passing the Yankees' Yogi Berra. He still trails Cincinnati's Johnny Bench, the major league leader with 327.

Fisk's homer off Andy Hawkins, 7-8, broke a scoreless tie, and he tied the score 2-2 in the fourth with an RBI single. Harold Baines' leadoff homer in the eighth snapped the tie.

Chicago, which had 17 hits Tuesday, added 14 more on Wednesday.

Athletics 6, Tigers 3

Dave Parker hit a pair of two-run homers and Mike Moore, 9-5, and Rick Honeycutt combined on a six-hitter. Honeycutt pitched a one-hit ninth for his seventh save.

Parker had his first multi-homer game since Sept. 15, 1987, when he played against Atlanta for Cincinnati. He has 11 homers this season.

Detroit, 26-43, is 17 games under .500, its lowest standing since 1976. Mike Schwabe, 1-3, allowed five hits and four runs in 1⅔ innings.

Orioles 8, Mariners 6

Jay Tibbs won his fourth consecutive decision as the Baltimore took an 8-0 lead and hung on to extend its winning streak to six. The Orioles swept a three-game series from Seattle for the first time in five years.

Tibbs, 4-0, allowed eight hits and two runs in eight innings. Gregg Olson got the final out for his 10th save and second in two nights.

Brian Holman, 1-2, allowed eight runs and nine hits in four innings and walked five.

Twins 5, Indians 1

Kirby Puckett had three singles in his 32nd multi-hit game of the season and Shane Rawley won for the first time in six starts since May 13. Minnesota has won eight of its last 11.

Puckett had one of the Twins' four run-scoring singles off John Farrell, 3-8, who has lost seven of his last eight decisions.

Gadd found innocent in grid steriod trial

COLUMBIA, S.C. (AP) — Former South Carolina defensive coordinator Tom Gadd closed his eyes and dropped his chin onto his chest. Carol Gadd cried and wiped tears from her eyes.

Moments earlier, a federal jury had returned the innocent verdict the two had anxiously hoped for as they waited outside Courtroom No. 1 in the federal courthouse.

"This was a tough time," Gadd said. "I don't want to do this again."

After deliberating for just under two hours on Wednesday, a U.S. District Court jury of eight women and four men found the 42-year-old Gadd innocent of importing steroids into the state, encouraging football players to use steroids and helping to monitor use of the drugs.

Gadd could have been sentenced to two years in prison and fined $101,000 if he had been convicted.

"Joel Collins, my attorney, had told me something that Winston Churchill had once said," Gadd said outside the courtroom. "He said that the most exhilarating feeling in life is to be shot at and missed. That's how I feel right now."

While the jury was deliberating, the Gadds sat in the hallway outside the courtroom, getting up briefly to walk hand-in-hand. Mrs. Gadd, who was in the courtroom with her husband throughout the three-day trial, hugged him after jurors left following their verdict.

"We just felt that if we stuck together under these adverse conditions it would make us stronger," she said. "We knew it was a test. And we came through it. We feel very good about that."

Gadd was one of four ex-Gamecock coaches who, along with a Maryland man, were indicted April 19 by a federal grand jury. The others — including former assistant Jim Washburn, who testified against Gadd — pleaded guilty in plea bargains and are awaiting sentencing.

Gadd, an assistant at South Carolina from 1982 to 1986, is now defensive coordinator at Utah, the same position he held for five seasons before taking the job with the Gamecocks.

The indictments stemmed from a Sports Illustrated story co-written by former Gamecock player Tommy Chaikin in which he said he and other players, including about half the 1986 team, used steroids. Chaikin, who did not testify at the trial, played for the school from 1983 to 1987.

While not denying there was some steroid use at South Carolina, Gadd said the Sports Illustrated article was a "sensationalized piece of press."

Trickle, 47, old for rookie

LONG POND, Pa. (AP) — Dick Trickle has been racing 30 years, owns more short-track stock car victories than anybody and ran his first Winston Cup race 16 years ago.

But the 47-year-old driver remains a rookie in NASCAR's eyes, so he signed up to challenge for rookie-of-the-year honors. Winning the title is worth $20,000, plus a $1,000 sponsorship for each race the driver runs next year.

"I've got to go to all the rookie meetings. Why not get some of the benefits?" Trickle said.

In two more races, Trickle will have doubled in one season the number of races — 14 — he had run in Winston Cup competition since his first, a fifth-place showing at Charlotte, N.C., in 1973.

Sure enough, the Wisconsin Rapids, Wis., driver is leading for rookie of the year as a substitute for a substitute in the car that Bobby Allison might have driven this year.

In 12 races, Trickle has four top-five finishes, but none above 24th in his last five races heading into Sunday's Miller 400 at Brooklyn, Mich.

Trickle stepped into the No. 84 gold Buick in the second race of the year after Mike Alexander drove it in the season-opening Daytona 500. Alexander, who had replaced Allison at mid-season last year after a racing crash critically injured the veteran, was himself critically injured in a race in December.

Although Alexander came back to race at Daytona, he had not fully recovered, so Trickle has held the seat since.

"Basically it's the same thing I've done only I'm meeting a lot of new people and ... get a lot more attention," Trickle said last weekend at Pocono International Raceway, where brake problems got his Buick off to a bad start in the Miller 500 and he finished 24th, 10 laps down.

"When it comes down to the racing it's what I've been doing for 25-30 years."

The competition is tougher, however.

"It's a somewhat higher level," said Trickle, who continues racing his own cars on short tracks in the eastern United States and Canada. "What you could do with yourself and maybe four or five guys now takes you and 20 guys.

"It's just big-time."

Trickle can bank on the experience that built more than 1,000 short-track victories, including 67 feature victories in 1972 alone. But some of the younger drivers can get one edge on him — for now.

"Eighty percent of the tracks that Winston Cup runs on I've never seen, and that's a slight disadvantage," Trickle said.

"Mike's recuperation is a bit slower than anticipated," Trickle said of Alexander. "Mike made a statement that he did have a concussion and he wanted to be fully recovered" before racing again.

Nearing the mid-point of the season, Trickle leads Larry Pearson 133 points to 127 for the top spot among nine drivers for the rookie title. Hut Stricklin is third at 101. Points are based on the top 15 finishes for each driver.

M-Angels fall in El Paso

Torricelli hits three-run homer in ninth

From Staff Reports

EL PASO — Tim Torricelli hit a one-out, three-run homer off Midland Angel relief pitcher David Graybill here Wednesday night to hand the El Paso Diablos an 11-8 Texas League victory.

El Paso's Ramon Sambo hit an inside-the-park homer for the Diablos in the eighth inning to knot the score at 8-8.

It was a game that the Angels let slip through their fingers after jumping to a 5-0 lead after 2⅓ innings of play.

Steve DeAngelis had a run scoring double and Mark Howie a three-run homer, his first of the year, to stake Midland to a 4-0 first inning lead. Scott Cerny gave Midland a 5-0 lead in the top of the third with a sacrifice fly.

But El Paso came roaring back with two in the third with Tim McIntosh producing a key single in the inning. The Diablos then sent 11 batters to the plate in a five-run fifth with Andre David hitting a two-run homer, McIntosh a run scoring triple, Shon Ashley an RBI single and Sambo walking with the bases loaded.

Even though Midland lashed El Paso pitcher Steve Monson with 13 hits, he still went the distance to pick up his fifth win in six decisions.

The loss moved the Wichita Wranglers, a 12-10 winner over San Antonio, into a first place tie at 3-2 with the Angels in the young second half race.

Midland and El Paso end a 12-game string they have played against each other tonight when the Angels will face former five-year major leaguer Ken Schrom, who has been purchased by the Milwaukee Brewers.

In other Texas League action Wednesday night, Shreveport defeated Jackson 5-4, and Arkansas whipped Tulsa 15-3.

Pitcher Omar Oliveres had three hits, including a homer, to lead the Wichita Wranglers over the San Antonio Missions.

Brian Cisarik also had a homer for the Wranglers.

Jose Offerman had two homers for San Antonio.

Oliveres, 6-6, was the winning pitcher. Chris Nichting, 2-3, was the loser.

Gregg Ritchie's 10th inning single drove home Dee Dixon with the winning run to give the Shreveport Captains a 5-4 Texas League baseball victory over the Jackson Mets.

Dixon walked, stole second and came home on Ritchie's single, his second hit of the game.

The winning pitcher was George Bonilla, 4-2, who allowed only one hit in three innings of relief. He retired 9 of the 10 men he faced. The losing pitcher was Dave Trautwein, 2-5.

Navratilova cruises to tennis win; Evert pulls out with ear infection

EASTBOURNE, England (AP) — Top-seeded Martina Navratilova cruised into the quarterfinals of the Eastbourne tournament, while Chris Evert pulled out with an ear infection.

Navritilova beat Larisa Savchenko 6-3, 6-0, but Evert defaulted her match against Italy's Rafaella Reggi. Evert's status for Wimbledon, which starts on Tuesday, is uncertain.

Unseeded Etsuko Inoue of Japan upset No. 3 Zina Garrison 4-6, 6-4, 9-7.

In another upset, Ros Fairbank of South Africa ousted fourth-seeded Helena Sukova 6-2, 6-3, while No. 7 Mary Joe Fernandez of Miami stopped Nathalie Tauziat of France 6-3, 6-4.

Schramm has eyes on Switzer

By JERRY MAGEE
Copley News Service

Barry Switzer, operating his wishbone offense in Paris, or Barcelona, Spain, or Charlotte, N.C. ...

"Strangely enough, the thought has crossed my mind," Tex Schramm said Wednesday (June 21) from Dallas.

Schramm stopped short of saying the proposed Worldwide League of American Football, of which he is president, plans to invite Switzer to become one of its coaches. But the idea obviously interests Schramm.

"Getting a guy like that would be a 10-strike," said the former president and general manager of the Dallas Cowboys.

"Of course," Schramm added, "coaches in our league aren't going to be making as much (money) as coaches in that other league."

By that, Schramm meant the National Football League. Few NFL coaches, it should be noted, have incomes matching what Switzer is said to have received at the University of Oklahoma before his resignation Monday.

"He's been making $500,000 or $600,000 a year," said a ranking executive of an NFL team, who was including Switzer's fees from a television show and other interests as well as his base coaching salary of $87,000. "Why would a guy who has been making that kind of money want to work for $80,000?"

NFL assistant coaches make about $80,000 a year. Head coaches make more, but there aren't any openings in the NFL just now. There aren't any in the Canadian Football League, either. That leaves the WLAF, which Schramm said would be delighted to have Switzer.

Switzer could not be reached for comment.

"I don't think anybody knows what he's thinking," said Mike Treps, Oklahoma's sports information director. "He says he probably will be connected with football somewhere, but I don't know if he's talked to anybody."

The Dallas Times Herald, meantime, has reported that Switzer resigned in order to avoid taking a polygraph test that could have included questions about alleged drug use by one of his assistants, recruiting coordinator Scott Hill.

Hill quit in March after he was criticized by the NCAA for his recruiting practices. Sources told the Times Herald that Hill is under investigation by the same FBI agents who last year arrested Sooners quarterback Charles Thompson on cocaine charges.

The Times Herald reported that the NCAA had requested that Switzer take a polygraph as part of a report the school must submit because it was placed on three years' probation in December. But David Swank, the university's interim president, told the Associated Press Wednesday, "I can assure you there has been no request made of him to take a polygraph test."

In recent weeks, Schramm has visited Paris, Madrid, Frankfurt, West Germany, Barcelona, Milan, Italy, and London — all possible sites for WLAF franchises. His next stops include Orlando and Jacksonville, Fla., plus Birmingham, Ala., Charlotte, N.C., and Nashville, Tenn.

The WLAF is considering doing business in those cities — possibly as early as next spring — in addition to the foreign sites. The league also intends to operate in the New York City area, have a West Coast club, and possibly place a franchise in San Antonio.

Fans' All-Star votes getting out of hand

By WAYNE LOCKWOOD
Copley News Service

Each of us, I'm sure, has a favorite baseball player, that one individual whose qualities seemed special.

Mine was Al Kaline. I was 16 and in the throes of intense fandom when Kaline, only 18, joined the Detroit Tigers in 1953.

I loved his grace, his fluid outfield play and his lethal arm. I marveled when he hit .340 in 1955 to become the youngest batting champion ever, and again when he hit .313 a full 17 seasons later.

I thought it only appropriate when Kaline was elected to the Hall of Fame in 1980. He belonged in that company.

But as much as I admired the man's work, I have absolutely no desire to see Al Kaline play in the 1989 All-Star Game.

Why would I mention such a ludicrous prospect? Well, because that, or very close to that, is what may transpire if those casting their ballots for this affair do not have a sudden change of heart.

If current voting trends prevail, two players will be named to their respective league's starting lineup who have about as much business being there as Al Kaline.

Oakland's Jose Canseco, like Kaline, has not played an inning this season. But he stands third in balloting to select American League outfielders for the July 11 All-Star Game in Anaheim.

Mike Schmidt, like Kaline, has retired. But he leads all National League third basemen in votes.

C'mon, gang. Pay attention.

As a rule, I advocate permitting fans to select whomever they wish for the All-Star Game. It is nowhere engraved in stone that those starting this affair should be the best players rather than the most popular. If the masses wish to elect Ozzie Smith to start at shortstop rather than Barry Larkin, let them, even though Larkin has developed into perhaps one of the five best players in the National League.

He will be selected to the team anyway, rest assured, and will play — probably more than Smith.

I will even hold my tongue if Tony Gwynn does not start, despite the fact that he has won three batting championships and two Gold Gloves in the past five seasons and led the league in hitting going into Wednesday's games. It's a damn shame Tony still doesn't get the recognition he deserves, but at least he will be there and will see action.

I do draw the line, however, at electing people to this game who are not even active. A vote for Canseco — out since spring training with a broken bone in his wrist — might as well be a vote for Babe Ruth. The Babe was great, too, but he's not exactly in condition to play in the 1989 All-Star Game. Neither is Jose.

Schmidt decided to retire last month rather than continue to perform at a level he found distressingly below his best. Nonetheless, fans have accorded him nearly twice as many votes as the Mets' Howard Johnson, who stands fifth in the voting at third base despite ranking second in the NL in home runs.

This is all the more amazing because New York players tend to receive more votes than they deserve, a result of intense media exposure. Gregg Jefferies, whose play has proved so disappointing the Mets have toyed with the idea of returning him to the minors, ranks third in All-Star voting at second base. Roberto Alomar is no better than sixth.

Would the Mets trade Jefferies for Alomar? In about three seconds.

If New York is the best place for would-be All-Stars, Texas obviously is the worst. The Rangers boast three players among the AL's top 10 hitters, but not one appears likely to be elected to the All-Star team.

Ruben Sierra, a .331 hitter who led the league in RBI (57) entering Wednesday's play, and Rafael Palmeiro (.322) don't even rank among the top 16 in voting for AL outfielders. Julio Franco (.328 and only one RBI behind Sierra) is second to the Yankees' Steve Sax at second base.

Houston first baseman Glenn Davis, third in the NL in home runs, stands no better than sixth in All-Star voting.

At least these guys are competing against real, live players, however. Think how it must feel to lose out to an empty uniform.

Morgan gains WT semis

From Staff Reports

ABILENE — Former Odessa Permian golfer Candice Morgan defeated Midland's Marna Raburn, 2-up, here Wednesday in the West Texas Women's Golf Championship being plaed at the Fairway Oaks Country Club to move into the match play semifinals.

Morgan was scheduled to meet Marion Barker in today's semifinal round. Barker defteated Andrews' LaNell Guelker in a close 1-up match.

Abilene's Judy Casey drew a semifinal berth with an easy 5-4 win over Lisa Balch and will play Jean Dawson today. Dawson won 1-up over D'Lynn Malcom Wednesday.

Today's two winners will play Friday for the championship.

Foreman comeback hits 18-0 win streak

By MIKE FREEMAN
The Dallas Morning News

DALLAS (AP) — In April, 1980, one year after he retired, former heavyweight champion George Foreman said he felt sorry for boxers who felt they have to come back for one more shot.

"Eventually they get their jaws rattled and they're walking on their heels. They're an embarrassment to their families, to themselves and to boxing," Foreman said.

But during a recent visit to a Dallas restaurant, two years after coming out of a 10-year retirement, Foreman said: "I'm a better boxer now. I know I can be a champion again. Just because I'm 40, that doesn't mean anything."

Foreman, training in his native Houston, fighting off flab and the retardation of reflexes, hasn't heeded his own words. He is making a comeback. And some boxing analysts and trainers say the result could be an embarrassment to the sport.

Some say Foreman's legendary status — and his body — could be seriously damaged in the process.

"Regrettable, pitiful, unnecessary," NBC boxing analyst Ferdie Pacheco said about Foreman's comeback. "He is a menace to himself and to boxing in general."

A 1968 Olympic gold medalist and heavyweight champion from February 1973 to October 1974, Foreman owned a granite punch, one of the most feared in boxing history.

He came out of retirement two years ago against journeyman Steve Zouski. Foreman then weighed 267 pounds — 50 pounds more than when he knocked out Joe Frazier for the title in 1973 — and scored a TKO over Zouski in the fourth round.

Foreman now weighs 258 pounds and has an 18-0 record during his comeback — all knockouts. He is trying to fight once a month and hopes to eventually face undefeated Mike Tyson for the heavyweight title.

"The only reason I wouldn't knock Mike Tyson out," Foreman said, "is because he would run from me for 12 rounds."

However, none of Foreman's opponents was ranked among the top 15. Dwight Muhammad Qawi, Foreman's eighth victim, stood only 5-7 but weighed close to 240 pounds. The Arizona Republic reported that another of Foreman's opponents, Bert Cooper, failed a drug test hours before Foreman knocked him out in the second round. The test reportedly showed traces of cocaine in his blood.

Foreman probably will have the toughest fight of his comeback in September. Foreman's brother and manager, Roy, said Foreman will fight either Tyrell Biggs or Evander Holyfield.

"When I got back into the business I didn't lie to myself," said Foreman, whose comeback efforts have earned him more than $800,000. "The major mistake (Muhammad) Ali made (on his comeback) was to start on top. If you start on top there's only one way to go — down."

He built the George Foreman Youth and Community Center in 1983 in North Houston, an oasis among $15-a-week motels and topless bars. Foreman, who became a street preacher soon after retiring, also built The Church of the Lord Jesus Christ on the same street as the center.

Foreman said he plans to use the earnings from his comeback to improve the youth center and the church.

Former heavyweight champ George Foreman ...failing to take his own advice

"Forty isn't a death sentence," Foreman often says. He said he thinks his decades of experience could counter Tyson's raw, pit-bull style.

"I want to challenge the best," Foreman said. "If I had been a golfer, I would challenge Jack Nicklaus again. If I played soccer it would be Pele."

If Foreman does get his wish to fight Tyson, analysts and trainers say it would represent the menial state of boxing, particularly the heavyweight division. There are no head-turning challengers to Tyson.

Promoter Bill Wheeler announced earlier this month a $25 million deal for Tyson to fight Foreman in Beijing, China, later this year. The fight was cancelled when the student uprisings began, though the Tyson camp never decided to accept the offer.

"He'll get Tyson because that's what the public wants," Pacheco said. "But you can't just knock out 18 turnips and think you're a fighter. Tyson will put him in the hospital. One Mike Tyson shot to George's liver and George will see Christ again."

Foreman is best remembered for his devastating punch.

He lost only two of 47 professional fights before retiring, winning 42 by knockout.

Henderson: Oakland's final cinch, or bust?

By BRUCE JENKINS
San Francisco Chronicle

OAKLAND — Rickey Henderson. The man. The child.

The A's either won the division title by 15 games Wednesday, or they blew the whole thing.

Manager Tony La Russa called the trade "a challenge — for Rickey and for us" — and that summed it up perfectly.

Henderson, for all of his accomplishments, still has to prove he can play for a winner.

La Russa has to blend a singular, self-centered personality into the A's incredible team spirit, which has carried a broken-down roster through some very tough times.

The feeling here is that Oakland just made one of the great deals of recent years.

There's no reason Henderson can't hit around .300, score 120 runs and steal 100 bases for the A's.

Picture this mid-July lineup: Henderson, Lansford, Canseco, McGwire, Parker, Dave Henderson, with that great up-the-middle defense and the A's fine pitching.

You think the Angels, Royals and Rangers aren't panicking just a little bit right now?

From a hard-line standpoint, the A's didn't give up that much.

With Rickey in town, Luis Polonia becomes as forgettable as last Thursday's oatmeal.

Greg Cadaret had become inconsistent this year, matching one good outing with a disappointing one, and Eric Plunk, for all of his ability, never had any type of presence on the mound. It's just not in his makeup.

You also have to feel that when Plunk blew a 3-2 lead in the 10th inning at Fenway Park last month, right after Dennis Eckersley got hurt, the A's lost confidence in him.

It showed in the way they'd been using him lately — like, not very much.

When Henderson played left for the A's — particularly from 1982 through '84 — he was brilliant, a Joe Rudi with wheels. He never did feel comfortable in center, but with Dave Henderson out there, the A's are set.

Talent-wise, then, there's no question: The A's made a deal that might be even better than the San Francisco Giants' acquisition of Steve Bedrosian.

But then, there's the flip side. We've all see Rickey play, we all know how he acts.

And we've seen how just the slightest screw-up can damage the A's equation.

When Don Baylor ripped Dodger reliever Jay Howell on the eve of the World Series last year, it ruined the type of low-key camaraderie La Russa had been trying to establish all year.

Maybe it didn't have anything to do with the outcome. Then again ...

"I don't go on what I've heard about people," La Russa said. "I go on what I see, and I'll do that with Rickey."

Strange still savoring Open win

OAKVILLE, Ontario (AP) — Now, Curtis Strange said, he knows what Tom Watson and Jack Nicklaus had in mind.

"After I won (the U.S. Open) at Brookline, each one of them, at different times, told me to enjoy it," Strange said. "I really didn't know what they meant. I think I do know now.

"They meant I should take the time to savor it, to reflect on it. I guess I thought that was something you didn't do until you were near the end of your career, on your way out."

But now, after becoming the first man in 38 years to successfully defend a U.S. Open title, he's attempting to find the time to fully appreciate the triumph at Oak Hill just outside Rochester, N.Y.

"I'm enjoying it now," he said. "My mind keeps going back to Oak Hill. I'd like to have a couple of days' rest, just so I could reflect on it.

"You know, we go so fast. As soon as you win one, you go on to the next one, just charge on and try to get ready for that. I guess that's what you have to do when you're in the prime of your career. But it's hard to do. My mind keeps going back to Oak Hill.

"I'm trying to get ready for this week," he said of preparing for today's opening round of the Canadian Open, "But my mind keeps going back to Oak Hill.

"I won the U.S. Open again. I won under pressure. I won for the second time in a row.

"And I have no idea what it means. I have no idea what it means to me, what it means to golf. I have no idea. Maybe someday I'll find out. Maybe someday someone will tell me. I think maybe it means a lot.

"I know it means a lot to me. I know it feels good," he said.

"And sometime soon I'm going to find a dark corner, when I'm all by myself and pat myself on the back and say, 'You done good.' "

Retton, Kelley plan to marry next spring

AUSTIN (AP) - Gymnast Mary Lou Retton, an Olympic gold medal winner, and former Texas quarterback Shannon Kelley are engaged to be married, Kelley says.

Kelley said the two have been engaged since February and plan to marry next year.

"Right now I've got 12 hours left this summer to graduate. I want to graduate and have a job before we get married," Kelley said. "We'll probably get married next spring."

Retton won a gold medal in the all-around competition at the 1984 Olympics at Los Angeles. Kelley finished his eligibility with the Longhorns football team last season.

The two have been dating on-and-off for more than three years, Kelley said.

Paternity suit served on Longhorn cager

AUSTIN (AP) - Texas basketball star Travis Mays probably will take a blood test to defend himself in a paternity suit filed by an Austin woman an claiming the starting Longhorns guard is the father of her child, says Mays' attorney.

Mays, the 1989 Southwest Conference player of the year, deferred comment to his attorney, Dan Bishop. According to Bishop, Mays said he is not the father of the child, a 1-year-old boy.

Lydia Gardner, attorney for Tanya Roney, 23, said she was trying to get Mays' address to serve papers in the suit, which was filed Monday in Travis County district court.

FRIDAY, JUNE 23, 1989

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: A desire to return to familiar surroundings will grow stronger. Use recently acquired assets to feather your nest. Forgo short-term gains for projects that can bring you cash and prestige for years to come. Happiness abounds for those with firm humanitarian ideals. You become calmer as the year winds down. Romance benefits from a new serenity.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: country singer June Carter Cash, King Edward VIII (the Duke of Windsor), dance genius Bob Fosse, actor Ted Shackelford, author Anna Chennault, baseball's Tom Haller, golfer Lawson Little, French Empress Josephine de Beauharnais, actress Irene Worth.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): News from a distance could benefit you in a most unique way. You have more influence over your friends than over your children. Travel is best postponed. Write letter reflecting your true feelings.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Realize that work is not everything. Someone you meet today will be a source of inspiration. Respect for you grows. Travel enjoys highly favorable influences. Contact pals at a distance.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): A relationship can be greatly strengthened by bold action today. You have a clearer picture of the future. Rely on old friends and ignore a newcomer's criticism. You are on the right track.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Emotional self-indulgence will accomplish nothing. You are only deceiving yourself if you think you can change partner. Face reality and get on with your life. Provide for your future financial security.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Wedding bells may be ringing soon. Exciting business developments make this a stimulating day. You are in pursuit of sizzling romance. Do not neglect your work or family obligations for frivolity.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Starting an exercise program now could help you avoid health problems later. Be willing to make some adjustments in your schedule today. Higher-ups expect you to be accommodating. Show you are a team player.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Today's events help you understand what is really important in life. Your spirits get a big boost when you spend an evening with people who genuinely care about you. Be affectionate.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): If you can, make this a three-day weekend and relax completely. New educational opportunities are on the horizon. Jump in with both feet! Taking the plunge now will pay off handsomely later.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Taking the long view of a work situation is your best bet. Many good things lie just around the next corner. Patience is golden today. Resist the temptation to blow off steam.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): New sources of income can be found if you follow up on a good idea you previously set aside. Take steps to both protect your health and increase your cash reserves. Curb spending.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Keep a closer tab on expenditures or you may have to make drastic cuts later. Enrolling in an educational seminar or special class will boost your chances for promotion. Seek tuition reimbursement.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Recycling an old idea could open up rich new fields to plough in the future. You get financial help from an unexpected quarter. Call a former ally and suggest teaming up again.

Do the secondary schools in your area have bridge clubs? If not, perhaps they would be interested to learn that the ACBL Educational Foundation has ample funds available to help develop bridge programs in schools. Just find a teacher who is interested in sponsoring a bridge group, show him or her this column and have the teacher write to the ACBL Educational Foundation, P.O. Box 161192, Memphis, Tenn. 38186 for help in keeping bridge among the nation's favorite pastimes.

The president of the Education Foundation is Nashville's Thomas K. Sanders, one of this country's great players and an indefatigable worker for bridge. He was South on this hand and elected to make a slightly pushy four-spade rebid at his second turn. It was a reasonable contract—if spades were 2-2 or the queen dropped singleton, he could have claimed 10 tricks.

Sanders won the opening heart lead and cashed the king and ace of spades to learn the bad news. Now the only way to make the contract was to score all his remaining trumps via ruffs. For that to happen, West had to have either four hearts and four clubs, or else five clubs and three hearts.

Declarer found the winning play unerringly. He cashed the ace of clubs and ruffed a club in hand. A heart ruff provided the entry for another club ruff, and the last heart cooked West's goose. If West ruffed, dummy would shed a diamond, so West discarded. Declarer ruffed on the table, ruffed dummy's last club, and the defenders found their three diamond tricks and trump winner had been telescoped into just three tricks. Note that had declarer started ruffing hearts before clubs, he would have been an entry short for the last ruff.

The Who lead summer reunions

AP Laserphoto

Roger Daltrey, foreground, and bassist John Entwistle of The Who perform Wednesday night in Glens Falls, N.Y.

GLENS FALLS, N.Y. (AP) — Rock 'n' roll relics are dusting off their guitars and banging their drums quickly for a spate of reunion tours this summer, starting with Wednesday's debut of The Who talking 'bout their generation.

The Who, which splintered after a "farewell tour" in 1982, reassembled at the small Glen Falls Civic Center in upstate New York arena with a series of songs from the nearly two-decade-old rock opera, "Tommy."

The Who is just one group planning a revival in the coming months. The Rolling Stones will be touring this fall and former Beatle Ringo Starr is going on his first solo tour, as will veterans like Billy Preston, Joe Walsh, Clarence Clemons and former Band members.

Other bands from the 1970s that had long since broken up, such as the Doobie Brothers and the Allman Brothers, are planning reunion tours.

The Who have scheduled concerts in 36 stadiums across the country this summer in a tour marking the band's 25th anniversary. They'll also do two special charity performances of "Tommy" at indoor venues in New York and Los Angeles.

NEW YORK (AP) — Mikhail Baryshnikov is leaving as artistic director of the American Ballet Theatre at the end of the 1990 season.

Baryshnikov

The company's board of trustees announced the departure Wednesday, a day after Baryshnikov told them of his decision to leave.

Baryshnikov, 41, became ABT's artistic director in September 1980. He joined the company in 1974 after defecting from the Soviet Union, where he danced with the Kirov ballet company.

"I will have given 10 years to the company, and it has been a true challenge," he said. "The dancers in the company are superb. Of all the responsibilities associated with being artistic director, I've enjoyed working with the dancers more than anything else."

Baryshnikov said he would "pursue other professional options" but did not elaborate.

He is starring on Broadway in "Metamorphosis," a play based on Franz Kafka's story, and has appeared in such films as "White Nights" and "The Turning Point." He also recently started a perfume for women called "Misha," his nickname.

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — First lady Barbara Bush told a group of underprivileged college-bound high school students she hopes to see one of them at the White House during the next four years as a Presidential Scholar.

"If you work hard and keep up your grades I'm sure you can. That will be a thrill," she said Wednesday as she addressed 100 of the students known as "Taylor's Kids."

The students, once labeled as underachievers, are part of a group that accepted a challenge from millionaire oilman Pat Taylor of New Orleans.

Taylor promised 200 students at a New Orleans school last year that he would pay their way through college if they maintained a "B" average through high school.

Earlier Wednesday, Mrs. Bush received the 1989 Museum Volunteers Award from the American Association of Museum Volunteers.

LAKE BUENA VISTA, Fla. (AP) — A 12-year-old Louisianan became the 300-millionth visitor at Florida's Walt Disney World a day after he received a fortune cookie that predicted he would be "showered with good luck."

"I didn't believe it at first, but this has made a believer out of me," seventh-grader Matt Gleason of Baton Rouge said Wednesday. "This is the first time I've won anything."

The youngster and his family received a lifetime pass to any Disney theme park.

The family was greeted by actor-comedian Harvey Korman, treated to lunch, driven in a motorcade down Hollywood Boulevard and taken on a backstage tour of the new Disney-MGM Studios theme park.

NEW YORK (AP) — William Hurt's ex-lover said people who worked on "The Big Chill" wanted the Oscar-winning actor to marry her while the movie was being made and were upset he did not.

Former ballerina Sandra Jennings, the mother of Hurt's 6-year-old son, Alexander Devon Hurt, claims a common-law marriage exists between her and Hurt under South Carolina statutes.

Jennings, 32, is suing Hurt for a divorce and half of his earnings since Dec. 9, 1982, when he reportedly learned his divorce from his first wife, actress Mary Beth Hurt, was final.

Jennings' claim is based on four weeks she spent with Hurt in Beaufort, S.C., from Dec. 9, 1982, to Jan. 10, 1983, while he was filming "The Big Chill."

New York, where the two lived most of the time, does not recognize common-law marriages.

Jennings' lawyer, A. Richard Golub, estimates Hurt's worth at $10 million.

BURBANK, Calif. (AP) — Roger Rabbit is back, and he's in trouble.

The harebrained star of "Who Framed Roger Rabbit" returns Friday in "Tummy Trouble," a 7½-minute animated short appearing on the front end of Disney's live-action feature "Honey, I Shrunk the Kids."

It is the first such Disney short in 25 years, and picks up where "Roger Rabbit" left off — with the title character in hyperkinetic distress.

In "Tummy Trouble," Roger babysits Baby Herman, who promptly terrorizes his keeper yet again by swallowing a rattle.

JIM MURRAY

Sooners finally beat coach

Murray

To tell you the truth, Barry Switzer never did look like a football coach to me. I mean, I never felt this was the coach and those were the players. He was one of 'em, if you know what I mean.

I think I know why he was a successful coach. I think he had a lot in common with all those pool-room guys, hustlers and bad-guy-on-the-block types he got to play for him. They knew he was their kind of guy. There'd be none of that authority crock they might have to put up with if they'd enrolled at Notre Dame or Penn State or some place like that.

All they had to do for this guy was play some football, kick some butt, lay some blocks. Ol' Barry would take care of the rest. Ol' Barry would keep people off their backs. Ol' Barry wouldn't want you to be secretary of state. Just take care of that line of scrimmage on Saturday. Try not to kill anybody. Just win, baby.

Barry never looked much to me like Walter Camp or Howard Jones or Pop Warner or Woody Hayes. He wasn't what you'd call your basic father figure, one of these austere field-marshal types who puts a clear line of demarcation between himself and the troops.

You know, I've never even seen Barry Switzer look worried. He always looks as if he just found out the other team's quarterback is ineligible. He always looks pleased with himself. His confidence level must break thermometers. Barry always put me in mind of a guy who takes your girl away from you at the school prom and drives her away in your convertible.

Barry doesn't even seem to get any older. He was one of the new breed of coaches. Buddy-buddy with the players. We're-all-in-this-together approach. Trouble in the dormitory? Boys will be boys.

It finally didn't work. The Oklahoma football team that ran roughshod over opponents for 16 years finally ran over the coach. Oklahoma is a tough place, but gang rapes, dormitory shootings, drug selling and Brian Bosworth finally got to be too much for even the stomping grounds of the old Dalton Gang or Quantrill's Raiders. Oklahoma is more permissive than Princeton, but it had two choices – clean up Oklahoma football or bring back the Seventh Cavalry.

The old-time coaches never let the troops take over the fort. Knute Rockne was about as close to being a pal to the players as any of the old breed, but he never let them forget who was boss. If they forgot, he had plenty of sarcastic ways to remind them.

I remember Red Sanders, as good a coach as I ever knew, coached from a practice-field tower. His words came down to the players like Jehovah's. They never called him Red.

Even Bear Bryant, the prototypical good ol' boy coach who herded his players together in living quarters separate from the rest of the student body, reminded his team who was giving the orders. He kicked Joe Namath and Ken Stabler off his teams for off-field infractions.

I seem to remember a story of the coaching staff at Oklahoma trashing a hotel room, bar or both at a Bowl game last winter. Imagine how Howard Jones or Gen. Bob Neyland would have reacted to that. Oklahoma just paid for the breakage.

They said Barry Switzer had one of the most successful football programs of his day. Depends on what you're counting. Bowl games, yeah. In the important contests of life, he had one of the worst football programs I've ever seen.

SWITZER

Duncan said his discussions with Switzer did not include references to any new negative events affecting the Sooner football program, such as a drug investigation.

The Oklahoma football program was placed on NCAA probation in December. In a span of about five weeks in January and February, five football players were arrested on a variety of criminal charges.

Starting quarterback Charles Thompson pleaded guilty to conspiracy to distribute cocaine. Three former Sooners are to be tried in September on rape charges. Another player pleaded no contest to shooting with intent to injure in the wounding of a teammate.

Duncan said that, as far as he knew, Switzer's resignation was based on the reasons given during Monday's news conference. Switzer said he felt it was time for new leadership for the Sooners and that he was drained.

"My conversation with Barry was that he had made a decision that he was going to resign. I really didn't consider it appropriate to delve into all the reasons," Duncan said.

Andy Coats, a lawyer hired to help the school on NCAA matters, said he also knew nothing about polygraph tests.

"I'm sure I would know about it if it was connected with the NCAA investigation," Coats said. "I can't imagine a context in which that would happen."

The Times Herald said the drug investigation involves Scott Hill, who resigned under pressure in March.

Hill had been responsible for coaching running backs and recruiting high school players since 1977.

Oklahoma athletic director Donnie Duncan told The Associated Press he was unaware of a drug investigation involving Hill.

ECONOMY

Fed finds economic growth slowing

New York Times News Service

WASHINGTON — Growth of the American economy continued to slacken in May and early June while the inflation rate remained fairly steady, a survey of business conditions by the Federal Reserve System showed Wednesday.

"Economic activity for most of the nation continues to advance, but a number of Federal Reserve districts note ebbing rates of expansion," the report found.

It noted "generally positive" retail sales," a "leveling off" of manufacturing growth, "sluggish" real estate markets and some districts with "undesirably high inventories" of unsold goods.

These findings tended to reinforce the widely held view that the economy is slowing markedly but that the next recession is not yet in sight.

The survey was conducted to aid the Federal Open Market Committee in its policy meeting scheduled for July 5 and 6. The committee meets eight times a year to set short-term monetary policy.

The commmittee consists of the seven governors of the Federal Reserve Board and the presidents of five of the regional Federal Reserve Banks, chosen on a rotating basis.

The Fed, which had been persistently tightening credit for a year, quit exerting upward pressure on interest rates in the spring and earlier this month took a tentative step toward easing rates. The question now, most analysts agree, is whether the economy has slowed enough to nudge short-term interest rates down another notch.

H. Robert Heller, a Fed governor, said of the survey, "I think you can see further moderation in the growth picture."

The preceding survey, which was reported on May 3, found that the economy grew in February, March and early April at "a moderate, sustainable pace."

The latest report offered a guarded view of inflation, which, many analysts have noted recently, has historically tended to peak well after the economy has slackened.

"With some exceptions, wage and price pressures are not accelerating," the survey report said. "Some districts said their respondents had not been able to pass their input cost increases through to their customers."

The survey was based on data collected by the Fed's 12 regional banks through June 12.

The survey reports, known as "beige books," have for some time been finding that economic conditions vary widely by region. Retail sales in Ohio, for example, rebounded in May and June and there was also a pickup in the Kansas City district, and consumer spending was described as strong in the Minneapolis district. Boston, Chicago and Philadelphia, however, had "less positive" results.

Government calls GNP growth one-time boost

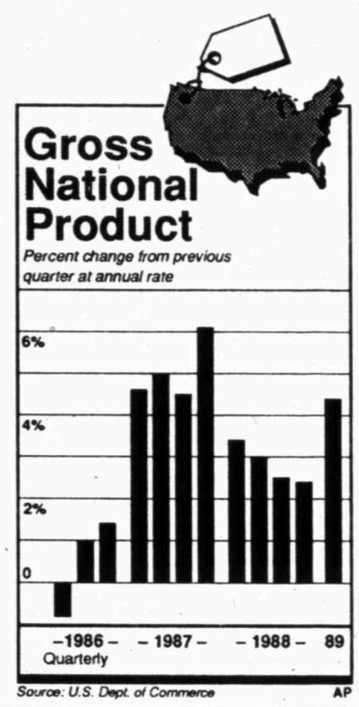

WASHINGTON (AP) — The U.S. economy grew at an annual rate of 4.4 percent in the first three months of the year, slightly better than previously believed, the government reported today.

However, the Commerce Department said more than half the growth in the gross national product came from a rebound from last summer's drought, a one-time boost that is more of a reflection of the government's accounting methods than a measurement of the real economy.

Discounting the bookkeeping entry to return expected farm production this year to its pre-drought levels, growth actually slowed dramatically in the January-March quarter.

The non-farm economy grew at a sluggish annual rate of 1.9 percent, compared with a 3.5 percent rate in the final three months of 1988.

This slowdown is in line with many economists' expectations. Private analysts predict the U.S. economy will slow dramatically

Please see GNP, Page 10D

Moderate growth seen for Texas economy

DALLAS (AP) — Analysts at the Federal Reserve Bank of Dallas say the state's economic recovery is continuing at a moderate pace, driven in part by strong retail sales including expansion of auto sales.

"Retail sales show strong year-over-year expansion," the Dallas Fed says in a report prepared for next month's meeting of the Federal Open Market Committee which will determine the central bank's monetary policy.

"Rates of (sales) growth are particularly high in West Texas and on the Mexican boarder, but increases elsewhere are the rule, rather than the exception," the report, known as the Beige Book, says.

The report singled out Houston for retail sales growth of between 8 percent and 10 percent from the same time last year.

Texas also is bucking the trend in car sales, which are slumping nationally. In Houston, for example, car sales are up 9 percent from last year and dealers there expect the trend to continue. Dallas dealers told Fed analysts they believe the sales growth would have occurred even without recent rebate and other incentive programs.

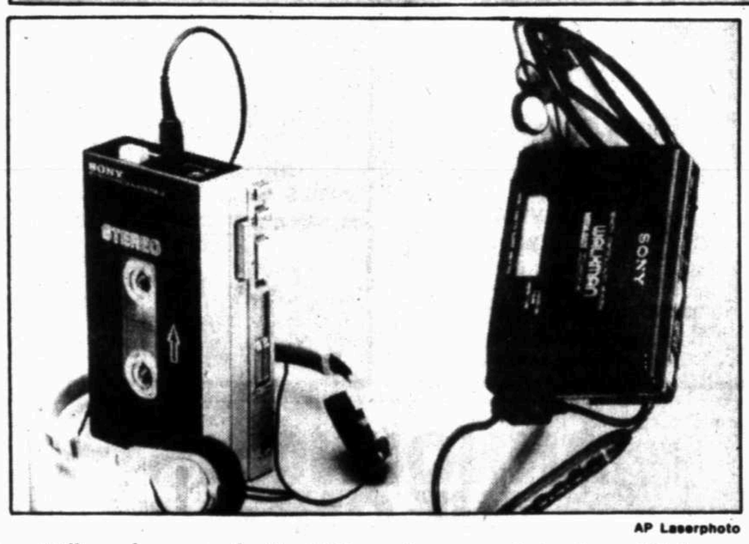

But according to the New Car Dealers Association, new car sales fell 9.79 percent in May from the same month last year in Dallas County, The Dallas Morning News reported earlier this week.

The Dallas Fed said recent rains have helped improve the agriculture outlook, although subsoil moisture remains low in places.

"Despite the increased moisture, a combination of continued dryness in some cattle producing areas and high feed prices has motivated substantial herd liquidation," the report says. "The increased moisture came too late to help the already damaged ... wheat crop, which is estimated to be the smallest since 1978.

Elsewhere, "oil and gas drilling continues its recovery," the Fed said. "Although the rig count remains 17 percent less than a year earlier, it has increased 23 percent since January.

"Respondents believe that the recent OPEC meetings are likely to have little effect on the price of oil and that drilling should increase mildly over the next few months."

Millions have made the 10th anniversary of the Sony Walkman possible. At left is Sony's original model; at right is the company's commemortive model, which includes digital tuning and a remote control on the headset cord.

Walkman running wild at 10-year anniversary

NEW YORK (AP) — The technology behind the Walkman portable cassette-player might never have developed without these words from Sony Chairman Akio Morita: "TURN DOWN THAT MUSIC!"

Morita, seeking to soften his children's blasting stereos, asked his development team for something that would let the kids rock out without deafening dad. Working from a model developed by Sony founder Masuru Ibuka, model TPS-L2 rolled off the assembly line a year later — the first Sony Walkman, unveiled July 1, 1979.

In the decade since, the Walkman and its imitators have become ubiquitous, with tiny headphones appearing on millions of heads worldwide — traffic-bound commuters, long-distance runners and house-cleaning parents as well as their rock 'n' rolling kids.

"The Sony Walkman has in fact changed the way the world listens to music," said Tom Harvey, president of the Sony Consumer Audio Product Company. "It's changed our lifestyles."

Go argue. As the Walkman marks its 10th birthday, it has become a cultural phenomenon, as American as Toyotas or sushi. Highlights of the Walkman's first decade include:

— Walkman: A Space Odyssey. A specially adapted Walkman was sent into orbit attached to astronaut Jake Garn, recording the sounds of his bowels for posterity. This was a scientific experiment (really).

— Illegal Walkman. Teachers at the University of Illinois were warned of students using Walkmans (Walkmen?) to play "oral crib sheets" during tests.

— Walkman: The Movie. Michael J. Fox, blasting an Eddie van Halen guitar solo through a Walkman, convinced his '50s-bound father there was life on other planets in "Back to the Future."

— The Royal Walkman. Princess Diana owns a gold-plated number that she plays while relaxing in Buckingham Palace.

The Walkman wasn't an immediate sensation. Initially it was called Soundabout in the United States, Stowaway in the United Kingdom, Freestyle in Sweden and Walkman in Japan and other world markets.

But Morita argued for uniformity, and sales in the United States, 37,000 units in 1979, took off after the Walkman name was adopted in May 1980. From then on, the personal stereo cassette deck was up and running.

"Retailers told us, 'You guys are absolutely out of your minds. It doesn't even record, and it costs $200. It's never going to go anywhere,'" Harvey said. "The next thing I know, we've got back orders for 1½ years."

Dozens of competitors from Panasonic to General Electric recognized a good thing and began manufacturing their own brands.

By 1982, Time magazine was hailing the Walkman as the gadget of the year. By 1984, Sony had cranked out 10 million which climbed to 30 million by 1987. Today, there are more than 50 million — about half of them worn in the U.S.A.

While the first model had a retail price of $199.95, today's Walkman prices run as low as $14.95 for an FM, radio-only model. There are 44 Sony models: water-resistant, with AM-FM radios, with recording capability, built for the outdoorsman. Television freaks now have the Watchman, a tiny portable TV set; die-hard audiophiles have the Discman, a portable CD player.

Subleasing automobile could prove costly

By MELLA McEWEN
Business/Oil Writer

"Buyer beware" is a warning consumers have heard through the centuries.

Now the Better Business Bureau of the Permian Basin is sounding that warning again to people in the market to sell or buy a car and who are considering going through an auto equity company.

John Schmidt, president of the local BBB, says his office has noticed a recent upswing in such activity in the Permian Basin, and warns that such subleasing could end up costing both the seller and the buyer.

"The leasing companies or the financial institutions often won't allow subleasing," he says, "so the original owner could lose the car plus owe the balance of the loan and have his credit rating damaged. Plus the purchaser could be out a car plus whatever money he spent for the car and his credit rating could be damaged, unless these middlemen make all the payments."

Using ads with such lines as "Car payments too high? We'll assume" or "Having trouble making car payments? We can help," auto equity promotors look to take possession of a car and then sell or lease it to a third party. These promoters promise to make the car payments while looking for a buyer; or they promise to find a buyer a car, for a finder's fee.

Another concern the BBB has is the legality of such arrangements. Such subleasing contracts have been outlawed in Colorado and California, and other states have considered legislation banning them without the consent of the lender.

Burgess Wade, a Midland attorney, says that subleasing contracts most likely require the consent of the lender before selling the car. He noted that, depending on the loan agreement, the lender wouldn't have to release the lien if such an arrangement was made.

"I could probably come up with 25 scenarios of bad things that could

Consortium aims to cut Japanese chip dominance

SANTA CLARA, Calif. (AP) — Seven major U.S. companies want to join forces to make computer memory chips and reduce Japan's grip on the market.

The combination could force the U.S. government to relax its interpretation of antitrust laws.

"I just don't have any doubt in my mind that this can succeed and I think that's good for everyone in this country," said Carl Cook, the strategic technology manager for computer maker Hewlett-Packard Co.

Hewlett-Packard was one of the companies to announce Wednesday they would contribute seed money to establish U.S. Memories Inc.

The consortium will make dynamic random access memory chips or DRAMs, the most common computer chip and a crucial component for the U.S. electronics and defense industries. Japanese chip makers now dominate the global market for DRAMs.

"It is clear that the time is right for a collective memory manufacturing venture in the United States to improve America's market position in what is truly a critical technology," said Sanford L. Kane, president and chief executive officer of the venture.

Consortium members cautioned that their participation was conditioned upon raising $1 billion to begin production and reaching a favorable antitrust agreement with the government.

Oil prices showing no big moves

From Staff Reports

Crude oil prices today opened three cents lower after closing at $19.31 Wednesday, in trading that went as high as $19.47.

Wednesday's final gain was 43 cents higher as traders reacted to an American Petroleum Institute report that showed a decrease in crude oil stocks.

The API weekly report showed a drop of 2.184 million barrels of U.S. crude oil inventory for the week ending June 9. Despite API numbers which showed an increase in gasoline stocks, gasoline futures contracts went even higher, except for July contracts which showed a slight decrease.

Traders expressed surprise at the strength of the futures, saying the fundamentals for the market appeared weak.

Stocks lose ground over dollar

NEW YORK (AP) — The stock market gave ground for the third straight session Wednesday, faced with a declining dollar and rising interest rates.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials dropped 7.97 to 2,464.91, bringing its loss since the start of the week to 21.47 points.

Declining issues outnumbered advances by about 4 to 3 in nationwide trading of New York Stock Exchange-listed stocks, with 617 up, 842 down and 495 unchanged.

Volume on the floor of the Big Board came to 168.83 million shares, against 167.65 million in the previous session. Nationwide, consolidated volume in NYSE-listed issues, including trades in those stocks on regional exchanges and in the over-the-counter market, totaled 201.21 million shares.

Dollar falls against yen, Europe

LONDON (AP) — The U.S. dollar was down this morning against all European currencies and the Japanese yen.

Gold prices were higher, moving up on the dollar's weakness.

Traders were puzzled by the dollar's direction.

"We're all trying to determine what kind of consolidation phase this is. It doesn't fit any of the patterns," said one analyst in Milan, Italy.

"Frequent reversals and sharp rallies are both possible," said another analyst in Milan.

Gold had gone up $5.75 in New York trading on Wednesday following a late rally on the New York Commodity Exchange that pushed the price as high as $372.40. Dealers said gold was reacting to a weaker dollar.

Gold opened in London at $370.70 an ounce, up from $366.75 late Wednesday. At mid-morning, the city's five major gold dealers fixed a recommended price of $370.40.

In Zurich, gold was selling at $370 this morning, up from $366.40 late Wednesday.

Earlier in Hong Kong gold closed at $370.49, up from $366.57 late Wednesday.

Silver bullion traded in London this morning at $5.34 a troy ounce, up from $5.28 late Wednesday.

BUSINESS IN BRIEF

Paramount steps up pursuit of Time Inc.

NEW YORK (AP) — Paramount Communications Inc. stepped up its pursuit of Time Inc. by asking the Delaware Chancery Court to block Time's proposed $14 billion buyout of Warner Communications Inc.

Paramount told the court Wednesday in a 49-page amendment to an earlier suit that Time acted improperly in rejecting Paramount's $10.7 billion offer and launching its own takeover bid for Warner.

Time said Paramount's allegations were "without merit."

Heller resigning from Federal Reserve

WASHINGTON (AP) — H. Robert Heller is resigning as one of the seven members of the Federal Reserve Board, citing financial hardships in living on his $82,500-a-year government salary.

An expert in international economics, Heller said Wednesday he would return to California to become an executive vice president of Visa International, the giant credit card company.

UAW reelects Bieber, slate of lieutenants

ANAHEIM, Calif. (AP) — United Auto Workers union President Owen Bieber and his slate of lieutenants were elected to head the 1 million-member union for three more years.

Bieber's victory on Wednesday at the union's triennial constitutional convention was seen as an endorsement for his leadership over the criticism of a vocal dissident faction.

Insider data passed at Federal Reserve

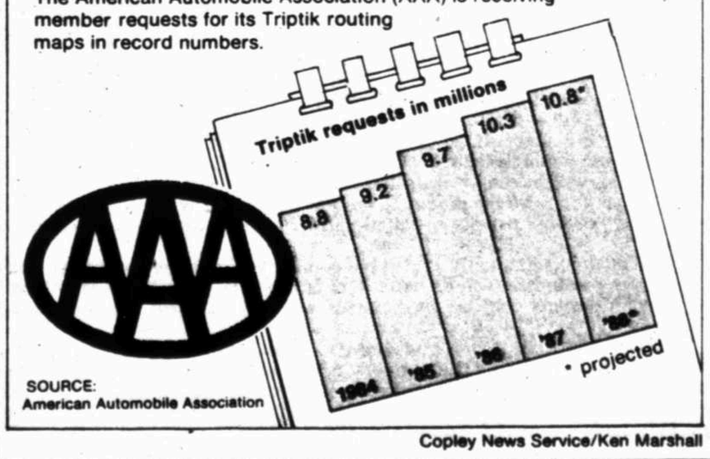

NEWARK, N.J. (AP) — A former New York Federal Reserve Bank board member has admitted illegally passing on confidential interest rate data in the first insider trading case involving government securities.

In a plea agreement, Robert A. Rough, 50, pleaded guilty Wednesday to a single bank fraud charge and the government in exchange dropped two insider trading charges and four related counts.

As part of the plea deal, prosecutors also agreed to recommend a prison term of under one year for the former banker. Rough faces a maximum five years in jail and $10,000 fine. Sentencing is set for Aug. 18.

Phillips completes tests on Norwegian well

BARTLESVILLE, Okla. (SWN) — Phillips Petroleum Co. Norway, as operator for a four-company group, has announced successful test results of a discovery well drilled in block 1/2 in the Norwegian North Sea.

The well, designated 1/2-1, is located 12 miles south of the Cod Field, one of seven oil and gas producing fields that make up the Greater Ekofisk Area. This well was drilled in 230 feet of water to a total depth of 11,663 feet below sea level and completed in rocks of Cretaceous age.

Oil was discovered in sandstone of Paleocene age. Drill stem tests yielded a maximum flow rate of 5,400 barrels of oil a day and 2.02 million cubic feet of natural gas per day through a one-inch choke.

The well is being plugged and abandoned and test results will be evaluated. The group is obligated to drill an additional exploratory well on the block during the initial exploration phase of the license. Phillips was awarded the operatorship of license area 1/2, which covers 78,843 gross acres, during the 12th licensing round in June 1988.

Oryx announces Gulf of Mexico gas strike

DALLAS (SWN) — Oryx Energy Co. announces a gas discovery on the Matagorda OCS Block 633, in the Gulf of Mexico offshore Texas, that encountered two different gas-bearing sands and tested at a combined rate of 10.7 million cubic feet of gas per day (MMcf/D) and 37 barrels of condensate.

The OCS-G-6042 No. 3 well, located in 80 feet of water off Matagorda Island about 45 miles northeast of Corpus Christi, produced from the Discorbis B zone through perforations between 7,398 and 7,480 feet. The discovery well was drilled to a total depth of 8,246 feet.

The well flowed at a calculated rate of 5.8 MMcf/D of gas through a 20/64-inch choke at a flowing tubing pressure of 2,465 pounds per square inch (psi) from perforations between 7,456 and 7,480 feet. The shallower sands, between 7,398 and 7,436 feet, tested at a calculated rate of 4.9 MMcf/D of gas, 37 barrels of condensate and 119 barrels of water through a 20/64-inch choke at 2,221 psi flowing tubing pressure.

Plans for additional drilling are currently under consideration.

Wyoming basin yields 810 barrel discovery

ARDMORE, Okla. — Noble Affiliates Inc. has completed an oil discovery in the Powder River Basin of Wyoming.

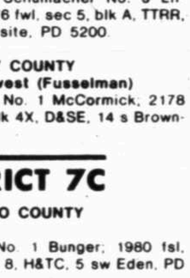

The No. 32-35 Derrick Draw Federal was drilled to a total depth of 12,926 ft. and was completed in the Muddy sand. The well tested 810 bopd and 1.7 Mmcfd through a 22/64 inch choke with a flowing tubing pressure of 670 psi.

INVESTORS' GUIDE

How mergers, raiders impact U.S. economy

By BILL DOYLE

Q. A friend and I were discussing "leveraged buy-outs" and "merger mania." May we have your definitions and opinions of both? It is said these schemes do much to wreck our economy.

Doyle

A. A leveraged buy-out is the process of borrowing money to buy something and then paying off the borrowing with the income from the purchased item and/or the proceeds from the sale of part of that item.

Merger Mania is the term applied to the rash of leveraged buy-outs and other corporate marriages we have witnessed in recent years. Most mergers — the acquisition of one company by another company — involve the use of borrowing.

Although details of leveraged buy-outs vary, a typical one will go about as follows.

One person, a group of people or XYZ Corp. — colloquially called a "corporate raider" — will set its sights on QRS Co., whose stock is trading at $50 a share.

The raider will offer to buy all or a majority of QRS stock at a higher price, say, $60 a share. If no counteroffers at higher prices are made, the raider will buy enough QRS stock to take control. Why? Because most QRS stockholders will be happy to sell at that price.

The raider will raise the money to pay for QRS stock by getting bank loans and selling bonds — usually so-called "junk bonds" rated below investment grade.

If QRS is an exceptionally profitable company, the raider might use QRS earnings to pay interest on its bank debt and bonds. More likely, it will sell off some divisions and/or subsidiaries of QRS to meet its borrowing obligations.

Whether or not all this is "wrecking our economy" is open to question. There's no getting around the unhappy fact that many people have lost their jobs as a result of mergers. But there's no hard and fast evidence that the overall American economy has been damaged. Some people argue that mergers have made U.S. companies more efficient.

The corporate raider threat certainly has shaken up many entrenched managements — forcing them to work harder to produce good results for their companies, employees, customers, the communities in which they operate and stockholders. Let's not forget that stockholders own the company.

Although the merger trend has accelerated recently, it's really nothing new. Back around 1955, I wrote a five-part series headed "The Urge to Merge" for the late, great and much-lamented New York World-Telegram and Sun.

Q. After being in the stock market for more than 30 years as a small investor, I see something that I feel is illegal. Small individual investors have been all but driven out of the market by the big institutional investors and the takeover artists, A/K/A corporate raiders.

The reason stocks go up and down is because someone knows something the rest of us don't yet know. The takeover artists can put a stock "in play" — sending its price up — by starting a rumor. Before the rumor reaches the public, the raiders have accumulated great numbers of shares. Even if the rumor doesn't pan out, the raiders make killings. Do you see any error in my thinking?

A. Not really. There's a great deal of truth in your lament. Nevertheless, what you call small "investors" really are in-and-out traders who attempt to garner fast profits.

They have always been at a great disadvantage against the "big boys" in the market place. By the time you hear a stock market rumor, it's old hat to professional traders.

Does this mean small "investors" — in the true sense of the word — who buy quality stocks for the long haul should stay out of the market? I don't think so. But I'll fall back on an old adage attesting that "small in-and-out traders die broke."

happen," he says. "The simple scenario is, if you're having trouble making payments, you need to sell your car."

Tim Mathis, manager of the consumer loan division for First City Texas of Midland, saw firsthand the complications such an arrangement can cause for the lending institution, the seller and the buyer when he worked in Dallas.

After one such promotion turned sour, Mathis and other Dallas bankers met with members of the Attorney General's staff. "We wanted some way to be assured that our collateral was intact, and a way to hold the original borrower liable for the costs," he said. "A lessee not making the payments or the lessor keeping the money and not making the payments complicates things for the lender and the original borrower."

Jerry Crooker, vice president of retail services for Texas American Bank Midland, says his bank recommends someone considering going the auto equity route contact his lender first. "It's probable the lender won't want his collateral going somewhere else without the opportunity to check out all parties involved."

Schmidt credits the upsurge in auto equity promotions to the combination of promoters realizing what kind of money they could make and people who've barely managed to make their payments finally reaching the end of their rope.

He, along with bankers Mathis and Crooker urge car owners who are having trouble making their payments to contact their loan officer before doing anything.

Mathis says that would give the borrower several options, such as selling the car, trading down to a less expensive car or reworking the loan to lower payments. "People think we're going to look at payment difficulties negatively," he says, "but we're not. Really, we're here to help."

In manufacturing, Boston, Philadelphia, Richmond and St. Louis all reported evidence of slower expansion, but activity in San Francisco was said to be "robust." Atlanta and Boston said export demand remained strong despite the surging value of the dollar, but "a number of other districts cite concerns over potential or actual softening of export markets."

A mixed pattern was also found in construction. Chicago had strong industrial construction and commercial real estate markets on the West Coast were said to be healthy.

In many parts of the country, sales of expensive items like automobiles were slow.

Automobile sales in the Dallas district, especially in Houston, have been buoyant and would have grown even without the incentives offered by the auto makers, the survey said.

chips. Another $500 million would be borrowed.

The consortium also must negotiate a technology transfer agreement with International Business Machines Corp., one of the seven members of the venture.

IBM's submicron design and manufacturing technology will be the basis of U.S. Memories first product: a standard 4-megabit DRAM, said Kane, formerly an IBM official.

In addition to Hewlett-Packard and IBM, the other companies are Advanced Micro Devices Inc., Digital Equipment Corp., Intel Corp., LSI Logic Corp. and National Semiconductor Corp.

If approved, the venture would break new ground in the federal government's attitude toward cooperation between competing companies.

GNP

this year under the impact of an anti-inflation campaign waged by the Federal Reserve. The central bank in March 1988 began to drive interest rates higher in an effort to dampen demand.

The new GNP report contained some good news on the inflation front as a GNP price index rose at an annual rate of 4.6 percent, down from a preliminary estimate of 5 percent a month ago.

The increase in the GNP price index that measures a fixed market basket of goods was up only slightly from a 4.2 percent increase in the fourth quarter of 1988. The government said the downward revision came from slower price increases for farm products and industrial supplies than earlier estimated.

UMW claims courts fighting union

CHARLESTON, W.Va. (AP) — Coal companies are going to court to get miners back to work, and judges have responded in some cases by fining union locals, officials and their members.

More than 42,000 coal miners were off the job Wednesday, 14,000 more than Tuesday. Wildcat strikes in 10 states are in support of a struggle by 1,900 miners to get a contract with Pittston Coal Group Inc.

A United Mine Workers official cited the fines as one reason he sees no quick end to the unauthorized walkouts.

"Our members feel like they're fighting for our whole organization," said Howard Green, a UMW international executive board member from Charleston. "They feel the courts are being used as a means for destroying our organization."

Consolidation Coal Co. is seeking back-to-work orders for six locals in north-central West Virginia and said it planned to take similar action in Ohio, Pennsylvania and Illinois.

The company told a U.S. district judge during a hearing Wednesday that it was losing $500,000 a day at its north-central operations alone. The hearing was to continue later today.

Tazewell County, Va., Circuit Judge N.E. Persin on Wednesday fined the union $300,000, saying it was responsible for picket line misconduct that resulted in coal trucks being hit by various objects.

"Our members feel like they're fighting for our whole organization."

Howard Green, UMW executive board member

Three Alabama companies have asked courts to order miners back to work. One company, Jim Walters Resources, said it is losing $600,000 a day. Old Ben Coal Co. has asked a federal judge to find miners striking two of its Indiana operations in contempt for disobeying an order to return to work.

The union already has been assessed fines of $3 million in Virginia and a federal judge Wednesday fined six West Virginia union locals $2,500 each for defying a back-to-work order sought by Island Creek Corp.

Judge Dennis Knapp also ordered that the locals be assessed $500 per day for each day their members don't return to work. He fined the locals' officials $200 each plus $50 for each day the strike continues and members $50 each plus $50 for each shift they miss beginning 8 a.m. today.

Green said miners have shown up for work but have encountered pickets and refused to cross the line. Some union miners said they fear for their safety.

"I've been warned by pickets, 'We'll find out where you live,'" miner Ted Sanson said. "The judge didn't understand this part — the fear. Are those marshals going to be there when I get off work?"

West Virginia police said gunshots were fired Wednesday afternoon at a security guard shack at the Logan-Mingo Mine Co. office near Gilbert. Guards were in the shack at the time but no one was injured and no arrests were made.

In a separate strike, a Raleigh County, W.Va., judge on Wednesday ordered county and state law enforcement officers to begin round-the-clock patrols at a New Beckley Mining Corp. operation near Glen Daniel to prevent violence.

About 130 miners who have been on strike there since January in a contract dispute have joined with Pittston miners in several rallies.

According to union and industry officials, the estimated number of miners involved in unauthorized walkouts Wednesday are: West Virginia, 16,000; Illinois, 8,000; Alabama, 5,000; Ohio, 2,660; Pennsylvania, 6,600; Indiana 1,750; Kentucky, 1,500; Virginia, 755; Missouri, 350; and Tennessee, 200.

FHA reserve could run out in five months

NEW YORK (AP) — An audit of the Federal Housing Administration is expected to show that its main mortgage insurance fund has been suffering losses at a rate that could run it dry in five months, The New York Times said Wednesday.

The newspaper, citing government investigators and private auditors, said the findings will be contained in the first full audit of the 55-year-old agency.

It cited agency officials as saying the FHA was down to a five-month reserve, $2.8 billion, to cover holders of defaulted mortgages.

FDIC chairman warns more thrifts will fail

NEW YORK (AP) — Though the savings and loan bailout bill now in Congress will go far toward eliminating the likelihood of another S&L debacle, dozens more thrifts will fail before the measure become law, says the chairman of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp.

"Institutions will have to be closed. People will lose their jobs. Defaulting borrowers will be sued," L. William Seidman said Wednesday in a speech to financial journalists in New York.

"Large amounts of property will be sold in difficult markets. And, of course, the taxpayers will bear the burden through future taxes," he said.

The FDIC has taken control of 223 savings and loans in the last few months at the request of the Bush administration.

"We expect that number to increase to almost 300 by the time the president signs the S&L bill," Seidman said.

Seidman said he expects President Bush will sign the new bailout bill by August. The measure is aimed at correcting the mistakes of the last decade, he said.

However, one thing that has yet to be addressed is the industry's interest-rate mismatching, where S&Ls essentially borrow short but lend long in fixed-rate mortgages, and where the cost of loaning money is higher than the interest paid on savings.

Bills already passed in the House and Senate require stronger capital for S&Ls based on standards used for banks. They also call for factual accounting, "rather than the ill-fated 'smoke and mirrors' of the past," Seidman said.

In addition, they call for double supervision of S&Ls, with the FDIC serving as the backup supervisor for the industry, and for creation of a comprehensive vehicle called the Resolution Trust Corp. to handle insolvent S&Ls.

Study touts aviation impact

WASHINGTON (AP) — Civil aviation and related businesses pump more than half a trillion dollars a year into the nation's economy, according to an aviation industry study.

The study, released Wednesday by the Partnership for Improved Air Travel, says the industry contributed $522 billion to the economy in 1987, the latest year for which complete data is available.

Since then, rapid growth has continued, with a doubling of orders for civilian aircraft, partnership officials said at a news conference.

The study is part of the group's effort to convince Congress and local governments of the need for more airports and other facilities to serve the growing aviation industry. Air travel has doubled since the industry was deregulated in 1978.

The partnership was formed last year by airlines, airplane manufacturers, unions, local government representatives and others interested in expanding the air transportation system.

The figures in the study add up everything from the manufacture of airliners to money paid for haircuts at barbershops near airports, partnership officials said. They included transactions made possible by the existence of aviation, such as purchases made at destinations by vacationers and other travelers.

Officials acknowledged, however, the study does not factor in some of the negative impact of aviation, such as the cost of noise pollution abatement at busy airports or losses from accidents.

The report, compiled by Wilbur Smith Associates of Columbia, S.C., says aviation and associated businesses employ 8 million people, or 7.3 percent of the nation's workforce, with a $155 billion payroll.

The industry's contribution to the gross national product was estimated at $254 billion in 1987, or 5.6 percent of the total GNP. This figure does not count the haircuts and other indirect impacts of aviation the industry claims.

Restaurant, hotel critic paid to eat, sleep

Copley News Service

Bill Orilio is on a roll. He follows it with the crab-stuffed mushroom caps. Then, the blackened swordfish and steamed vegetables, washed down with Chardonnay. He saves room for a slice of Saint Honore. A glass of Sandeman port. Check.

"It's hard to remember the last time I bought groceries," he says.

Some people eat and sleep their jobs. Orilio eats and sleeps on the job. Restaurants and hotels pay him to critique their businesses — from the bar to the bathroom, the maid to the maitre d'.

If there's a problem, Orilio's clients want to hear it first from him. By the time the public tells them, it's generally too late.

"Customers no longer vote with their mouths," he says. "They vote with their feet. They just don't come back."

During dinner at the bay-front restaurant, Orilio's beeper goes off. He excuses himself to make a call.

He returns to the table with one of those it-never-ceases-to-amaze-me looks on his face. He's just heard from one of his auditors in San Francisco, a very blond, very pretty model. She just spent three hours running up a $34 drink-and-food tab at the bar. And when she asked for the check, the smitten bartender refused to take her money.

Orilio doesn't pass judgment. He just passes on information. Maybe the bartender paid the tab out of his tip jar.

But, says the veteran restaurant observer, "Your chances of winning the lottery are better than him paying the bill."

Still, Orilio plays down this aspect of his job. What he does, he says, focuses more on customer satisfaction.

Orilio works undercover. On this night, he's made a reservation under the name "Nelson" at a bay-front restaurant. He'll use a credit card with a different name to pay for the meal. And he'll review the entire dining experience in the privacy of the men's room.

CNS Graphic

Within five days, the restaurant owner will receive Orilio's report. He'll learn of the unsightly rust on the fence railings. The eight minutes it took the bartender to take the order. The lukewarm mushroom caps. The tray of glassware that was dropped. The waiter who leaned on a chair. And dozens of other potential customer-souring details.

ORILLO WILL ALSO report the good. The courteous hostess. The observant manager who swooped in to remove a plate cover. The clean restroom. The excellent broiled swordfish.

His report is meant to be used as a management tool, a money-maker. His clients swear by his reports.

"Bill knows the business," says Rick Ghio, general manager of the Anthony's Restaurants chain in Southern California. "There's a real art to getting into a restaurateur's head and telling him what he wants to hear, as opposed to somebody coming in and saying, 'The fish and chips were good.'"

Orilio, 33, doesn't do it alone. He owns W.F. Orilio & Associates with three partners. The hospitality consultant company employs 44 auditors, people who anonymously review the restaurants and hotels.

The auditors range in age from 18 to 67. Their day jobs vary from blue-collar to white-collar.

The auditors are paid $10 an hour, plus gas and mileage. And, of course, their expenses are reimbursed by the restaurants and hotels.

The company averages 165 audits each month. Restaurants pay about $250 for a three-hour audit. Hotels are charged $500 to $1,000 a day.

Orilio himself averages about 30 audits a month. The occupation has its hazards. His weight fluctuates between 165 and 220 pounds.

"When my waistline gets tight, I may not do any audits for five days," he says.

He recently flew to Hawaii and back in a day. On the way over he got bored, so he decided to do an audit on the airline, which was TWA. He critiqued the service again on the way back.

He wrote up the report on the computer, enclosed it with the standard letter his company sends to prospective clients, and mailed it off to TWA chairman Carl Icahn. Orilio closed the letter by telling Icahn he'd call him the next week. But he didn't.

Instead, it was Icahn who phoned Orilio. He wanted to know why a guy with such a good product would fail to follow up. Orilio, stunned, said he figured his report never reached Icahn's desk, and that he'd never get through to him anyway.

Icahn paused, then said, "Surprise!"

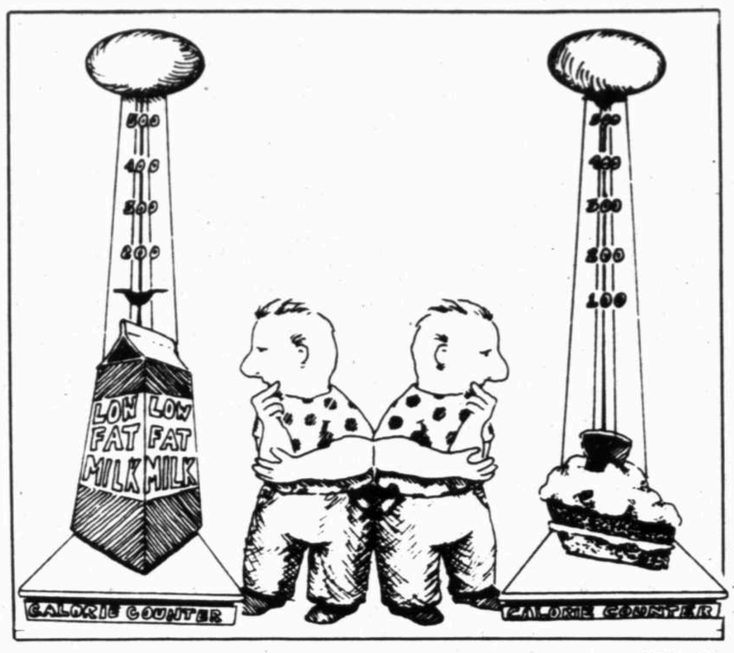

Orilio met with Icahn at TWA's headquarters in New Jersey and worked out a deal to begin auditing the airline this fall.

THERE WAS THE time Orilio was sitting in his car, scribbling notes from a restaurant audit under the overhead light. The cops pulled up and interrogated him, suspecting he was rolling a marijuana cigarette.

Another time, a bartender offered Orilio drugs. And during one hotel audit, a maid offered him sex.

The bartender and maid were most likely reprimanded, or even terminated, after Orilio filed his report. He's heard from 10 such people.

"They accuse me of losing their job," he says. "And I say, 'I didn't lose your job, you lost your job.'"

Some low-cal foods offer slim hope for weight loss

By CHARLES BRITTON
Copley News Service

Compared to Americans around the turn of the century, is the average citizen of today more or less likely to carry too much girth? The answer, food historians tell us, is that although our forebears ate more heavily than we do, we are the ones with the weight problem.

A recent overview of the scientific literature on the subject came up with more bad news: Low-calorie foods aren't helping Americans in the battle against obesity.

A group under Aaron M. Altschul of Georgetown University Medical Center in Washington, D.C., found that "there is no evidence that the proliferation of low-calorie foods ... has affected the status of obesity in the United States. National statistics ... show an increase in the prevalence of obesity, certainly no decrease. Moreover, obesity among children is increasing."

The panel was organized by the Institute of Food Technologists in Chicago, a non-profit organization of some 23,000 professionals and academics in the food field. The finding is the more striking because the institute can hardly be described a hotbed of health-food enthusiasts. Perhaps for that reason, the report ended on a hopeful note: "Low-calorie foods can play a significant role in weight management and thus health promotion."

Here the panel was including such foods as leaner cuts of meat and skim milk as well as non-caloric sweeteners like aspartame. The upbeat conclusion seems plausible, for there's no way of knowing how fat Americans might be without these products. It is indeed likely, as the report noted, that foods such as low-fat milk facilitate weight loss. On the other hand, eating low-calorie products may allow some people to feel that they can indulge in rich treats, so that a Diet Coke justifies a second helping of cream pie.

Taking physical stature into account, the panel quoted studies showing that 25 percent of women and 42 percent of men were overweight, while 14 and 12 percent, respectively, were obese. During the '70s, the number of Americans classified as "severely obese" went from 8.4 million to 13 million.

You have a higher chance of being obese than you might like to think; according to the formula used, obesity in adults begins at 20 percent above normal body weight. A personal note: According to the formula, I was on the verge of obesity before my heart attack last August; after several months of diligent dieting, I am still borderline overweight.

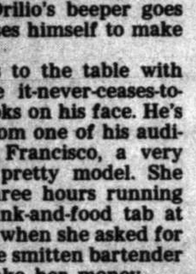

Children seem to be getting progressively chubbier. Youngsters showing obesity increased by 54 percent between 1963 and 1980, and those with "superobesity" went up 98 percent. Lesser but still serious rises occurred among adolescents.

One of the food technologists' findings has strong practical implications to anyone trying to lose weight. Humans apparently don't compensate for a reduction in calories — as long as the total bulk of the food consumed is maintained. When people think they have plenty to eat, in other words, they don't notice missing calories.

Butterfingers a sweet treat in any size, shape

By LINDA ANDERSON

Anderson

It's time to forget oat bran, whole grains and vitamins A through K. Some things are just for fun.

And that, in a nutshell (so to speak) is why candy companies have remained in business for so long. The Planters-Lifesavers Company, makers of Butterfinger candy bars (known and loved by generations of sweets-aholics) have recently introduced their answer to M&Ms and Reese's Pieces — Butterfinger BB's.

These little candies are about the size and shape of peanut M&Ms (my favorite breakfast — everyone knows peanuts have protein) and are packaged either in one-serving bags or share-a-handful bags. We can't resist anything new and sweet, so we checked out the Butterfinger BB's for taste, price and advertising accuracy.

A 1.7-ounce bag of BB's cost about 35 cents, the same as any other candy bar. Larger bags, of course, cost more — I think about $1.99, but I couldn't be sure because the supermarket I went to had sold out of the big bags. I see, most of you have already conducted taste-tests of your own.

Label advertising claims the BB's are "Bite-sized pieces of crispy, crunchy peanut-butter Butterfinger candy." And that is exactly what they are; little round pieces of Butterfinger, peanut-butter flavored and crunchy on the inside, and chocolate-coated on the outside.

Some candy companies have more courage than others, and actually print nutrition information on the package. In this case, nutrition information listed on the label claims each 1.7-ounce serving of Butterfinger BB's contains 230 calories, 4 grams protein (peanut butter, you know), 33 grams carbohydrate, 10 grams fat (2 grams polyunsaturated and 4 grams saturated. I don't know what happened to the other 4 grams), 0 milligrams cholesterol and 90 milligrams salt (even claims to be a low-sodium food. See, you can find positive nutritional information if you look for it.)

As for the taste test, well, what can I say. Butterfinger BB's taste like Butterfingers — the same crunchy peanut butter-flavored candy on the inside, the same chocolate coating on the outside. Some people said they are covered with too much chocolate for the center, and some said not enough chocolate. One taste-tester said he preferred Butterfinger Bites, those pint-sized Butterfingers that come all jumbled together in one box.

And, like big Butterfingers, some of the BB's are — well, crunchier — than others. Some are even too hard to chew, but if you like Butterfingers, that won't matter — just try another one.

All the candy lovers who participated in the taste-test liked the BB's. We even had to try more than one package. Which only goes to prove — a Butterfinger in any other size would taste as sweet.

Prices listed are from a local supermarket. Prices at other locations may vary.

Highest priced sunglasses may not provide adequate protection

New York Times News Service

Sunglasses, a year-round necessity for many, make vision outdoors more comfortable by reducing light and glare and, like a sunscreen, warding off harm from ultraviolet light.

The challenge is to choose high-quality sunglasses at an affordable price from an overwhelming variety ranging from street-peddler offerings for a few dollars to designer frames with ground and polished lenses that cost well over $200.

Whatever the budget, a key concern should be how well the glasses protect the eyes from visible as well as ultraviolet light.

Other important considerations are the color of the lenses and their degree of darkness, the materials used and special options, like polarized or photochromic lenses.

Now buyers can look for a label to tell them the amount of protection nonprescription sunglasses provide.

The new voluntary labeling program was developed by the Food and Drug Administration and the Sunglass Association of America, an industry group.

Manufacturers who have adopted it label their sunglasses as cosmetic, general purpose or special purpose.

By definition, cosmetic sunglasses will block less than 60 percent of visible light, at least 70 percent of the sun's shorter ultraviolet B rays, and 20 percent of the longer ultraviolet A rays. Glasses in this category are the least protective and are best used for activities out of direct sunlight.

Sunglasses labeled general purpose will block 60-92 percent of visible light, at least 95 percent of UVB rays and at least 60 percent of UVA rays. These glasses are adequate for many outdoor activities in sunny areas, including driving and boating.

Special-purpose sunglasses will block at least 97 percent of visible light, at least 99 percent of UVB rays and 60 percent of UVA rays. These are the glasses to take to tropical beaches and wear on ski slopes.

Another variable is lens color.

Gray, brown and green are the colors recommended by the Sunglass Association of America because they distort colors the least.

Students pay to deck the halls of 'hands-on' wallpaper school

By BOBBI IGNELZI
Copley News Service

Ed Barrie has his students climbing the walls.

He also has them measuring, plastering, lining, pasting and, of course, papering the walls before he grants them their professional wallpaper-hanger certificates.

Along with his wife, Carolyn, Barrie has operated the California School of Wallcoverings in an unassuming downtown San Diego building for 10 years. The school doesn't attract much attention — except among the dozens of would-be wallpaper hangers from across the country who apply each year.

"The word gets around. We're one of only three major accredited wallpaper schools in the United States, and the other two are on the East Coast," Carolyn Barrie said. "That means there's often quite a demand to get in classes here. It also means there's often quite a waiting list."

Paperhangers, however, seem to be a patient bunch. Not only do they not mind the wait — sometimes two to six months — but they also don't seem to mind the intensive eight-week, eight-hour-a-day, $2,795-course that helps them get the hang of wallpapering.

HOUSED IN 2,500 square feet of empty rooms and hallways, this is not your average school. No desks, blackboards or textbooks here. Just plenty of cutout walls, angular alcoves and sloping ceilings, each offering a new lesson in the craft.

And there's wallpaper everywhere. On the walls, on the ceiling, on the floor, on the students.

"This is nothing," said Carolyn Barrie, as she stepped over and around trails of wallpaper. "We're in the seventh week and they're quite proficient by now. But you should have seen things a few weeks ago. It was a disaster area."

Although much of the interior is part of the building's original structure, the Barries added a few obstacles to test the students' skill and tolerance. For example, there's a toilet and medicine cabinet smack in the middle of the wall in the front room — an exercise in bathroom-papering technique. Around the corner is an oddly shaped closet affectionately labeled the "crypt." And down the hall is another nook with impossible corners, the "torture box."

"Some of these drive the students crazy, but they're all learning experiences," Ed Barrie said. "Every doorway, window, stairwell you find here, they'll eventually encounter somewhere on the job. And it's better that they make the mistakes here on these walls, than on their clients'."

So, what's the big deal about gluing some vinyl to a wall?

"Have you ever tried it?" Barrie asked. "Go home and paper your kitchen. Then we'll talk."

It is often frustrated do-it-yourselfers who call on the professionals, creating the high demand for trained wallpaper hangers. This demand helps keep enrollment at capacity, 12 to 15 people per class.

The prospect of big money also helps. Barrie estimated that at the going rate — $16 a roll — a professional wallpaper hanger can make about $300 a day.

CONSIDER THE possibilities. "That's $900 a week, for three days' work, if that's all you want to work. More, of course, sometimes as much as $1,500, if you want to work a full week," Barrie said. "For only eight weeks of training, with little or no investment in tools and overhead, that's a nice living. It's certainly more than you're going to make as a secretary or salesperson."

Wallpaper hanging has won over people from all walks of life. Over the years, the Barries have granted certificates to psychologists, policemen, teachers, nurses, secretaries, real estate agents and others seeking a career change. In fact, before Barrie attended the United States School of Professional Wallpapering in Vermont, he had a varied career — his resume includes stints in the commodities market, restaurants and retail stores — while his wife was a college English instructor.

"We saw that paperhangers were making more money and having a better time than we were. We finally decided we liked money more than prestige so we made the switch. I've never regretted it a second," Carolyn Barrie said.

This session's class consists of a clothing salesman, a legal secretary, a dental technician, a logger and a commercial fisherman. Some are interested in the money, some in the job freedom, some in the craft.

Phil Hubner, a former menswear salesman from Sacramento, got into his new career by accident. He wanted to start his own business, but wasn't sure what it would be. One day, listening to the radio, he heard about the opportunities in wallpapering.

"Something went 'click' and here I am," he said.

JUDY CLASEN, a former dental technician and respiratory therapist from San Francisco, wanted to be self-employed and put her art background to work. Her answer: wallpapering.

Although Barrie admits it's not necessary to go to school to become a professional wallpaper hanger, he maintains the course offers decided advantages.

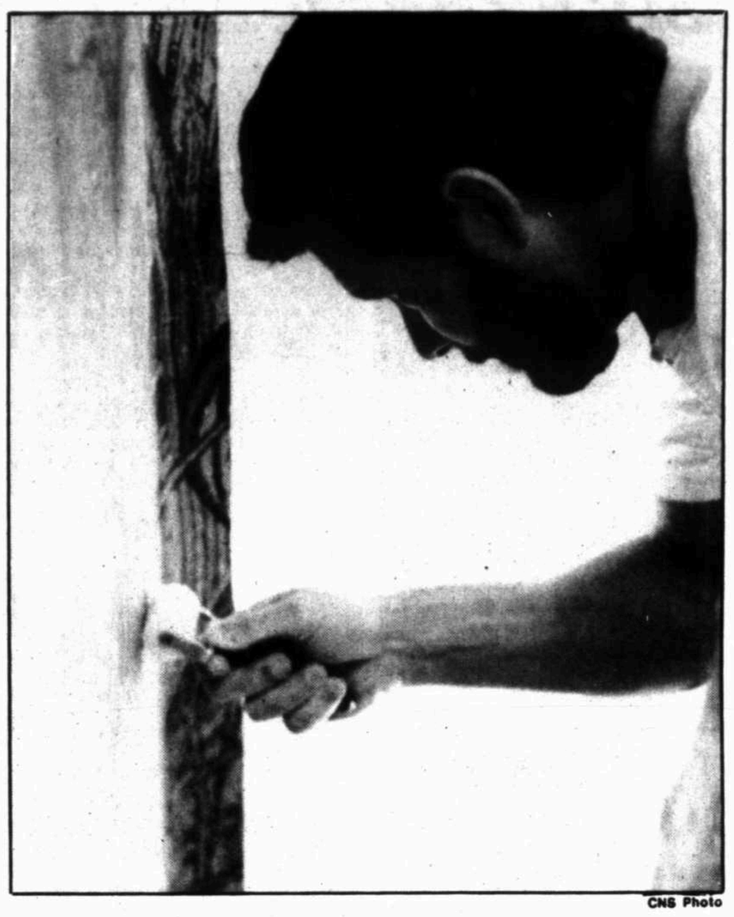

"There are a lot of good people out there hanging wallpaper who are self-taught but it took them a long time and a lot of mistakes to get to where they are," he said. "After a couple months, our graduates leave here with all the tricks of the trade — things it would have taken years to learn otherwise."

His graduates agree. Colleen Milne left her job as vice president of an insurance agency to attend the school last summer. Soon after graduation, she was making more money than her husband, a corporate salesman.

"He saw how well I was doing and he decided to go to the school, too. Now we work as a team, and we've never been happier," she said. "We're on our own, there's no stress, and the money is great. It's the best thing we've ever done for ourselves."

Formal training enables the hanger to be faster, she pointed out, and in the wallpapering business, speed is money.

"It's simple — if you're able to hang an extra double roll a day, that's another $500 to $600 a month," she said. "In no time at all, you've more than earned what you paid for tuition."

Decorative tile in demand around world

California potters experiment with glazes, ornamentation

By CAROL OLTEN
Copley News Service

Decorative tile had its first and largest impact just after the turn of the century, when dozens of ceramicists and small companies produced unusually ornamented tiles with innovative glazes and motifs.

But the art tile movement was short-lived — it didn't stand up to industrialization and tract development. What remains from that past is in houses and buildings usually predating the 1930s.

Today, however, art tile is having an immense revival.

Hundreds of studio potters around the state again are building cottage industries in tile production. Other ceramicists have turned to reproducing patterns and glazes characteristic of old California companies in Malibu, Catalina and National City.

Still others are blending their own artistic talents with revival reproduction designs.

The result is that decorative tile has resumed significant importance in interior design and architecture, an importance it has not experienced since turn-of-the-century artists and craftsmen such as William Morris declared that a work of art should be "at the same time a useful thing."

Moreover, decorative art tiles are being introduced more and more prominently, not only in kitchens and baths, but also as fireplace, window and door surrounds; murals; borders; friezes; fountains; and floors, where elaborate designs may even re-create intricately detailed Persian carpets.

One of the leading artisans in the revival movement is Richard Thomas Keit. The designer and ceramicist has reproduced tile from the exquisitely wrought pieces made by the Malibu Potteries when the Spanish Colonial/Moorish revival was in full swing in the 1920s. Keit established his studio and factory in Thousand Oaks in 1980, just as the renewed interest in decorative tiles and glazes began.

Keit's tiles, richly ornamented and brightly colored in the Malibu tradition, now are in demand around the world.

"What a lot of us tile makers are feeling in California is the same thing people involved in the Arts and Crafts Movement felt — a reaction to the factory-made tile with flat surfaces and dull glazes," Keit said. "We like tile to have more interesting glazes, textures and colors and not necessarily to be perfect matches."

Other styles being revived by artisans include the parrot tile pioneered by the Catalina Clay Products Co. in the Catalina Islands kilns; the floral and animal designs originally conceived by Bay Area architect Julia Morgan for Hearst Castle, including a little white rabbit now popular as a splash border for kitchen cabinets, and the Spanish/Moorish-inspired motifs that came from California China Products.

The California China Products company remains an intriguing element of the original art tile movement.

Established in National City, a suburb of San Diego, in 1911, it is the tile plant we seem to know the least about. The Malibu, Catalina and other Los Angeles area potteries from the early years have been much more thoroughly documented.

A mining engineer and journalist named Walter Nordhoff began California China with his son, Charles, near the site of the old railroad station in National City. Nothing remains of the operation today. But between 1911 and 1917, they produced a great variety of floor and enamel tiles as well as more decorative art tiles, according to sparse records.

The Nordhoffs also received the commission for the tile work for San Diego's Panama-California Exposition of 1915. The elaborate ornamental tile domes of the California Building (now Museum of Man) in Balboa Park and the tiles at the Santa Fe railroad depot downtown are the remaining legacies. The tiles for the two landmarks were all fired and hand-painted at the National City plant.

Eventually, Walter moved to Santa Barbara to follow a career as a political satirist. Charles moved to Tahiti and joined James Norman Hall to write "Mutiny on the Bounty."

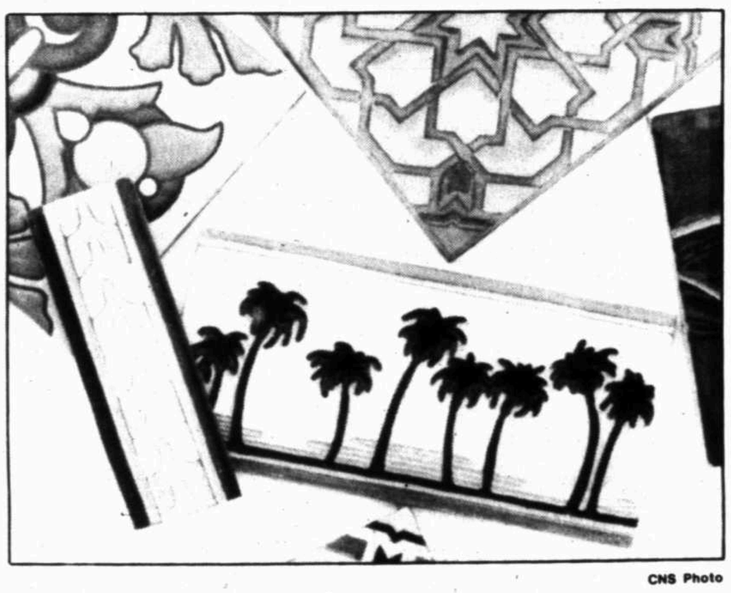

Their departure marked the end of the art tile movement in National City.

"But history may one day prove that California China was at the very forefront of the art tile development in the entire country," said Joseph Taylor, president of the Tile Heritage Foundation, an organization devoted to the research and preservation of ceramic surfaces around the country. "We don't know of any other company producing those brilliant glazes and bright yellows, blues and greens at the time."

An aside to today's art tile revival is the renewed interest in the preservation and restoration of old tile. The Tile Heritage Foundation was established about two years ago and now has more than 200 members around the country devoted to locating, documenting and saving old tiles, many of which are removed from buildings being demolished and stored or reinstalled at other sites.

Historic art tile also has become an expensive collectors' item, with old 6-inch square Malibus going for up to $200.

"Murals and decorative tiles are part of our artistic heritage in the United States," Taylor said. "We try to make people more aware of this. I don't see how, for instance, anybody can ever go to Hearst Castle and not really appreciate the tile work."

Decorative art tiles reflect the Malibu motifs and glazes from early in the century. Historic tiles are part of the artistic heritage of the United States. But, tiles with whimsical designs have been revived as popular interior decorator items for kitchens and bathrooms.

Sewing, decorating with sheets easy, economical

Hearst News Service

SAN ANTONIO — Blame it on Scarlet O'Hara.

Ever since the heroine of "Gone With the Wind" tore down the drapes to make a frock, household decorations and linens have not been the same.

Collars have been made from antique dresser scarfs. Lace tablecloths have been used to decorate prom dresses. Bath towels have been converted to swimsuit covers. Even face cloths have been turned into slippers.

Now sheets are helping women make a fashion statement with their home sewing machines. And we are not talking toga party.

"The reasons for using sheets as fabric is that it is practical and makes sense. You can pick up a flat sheet at a white sale from a table of odd sheets and make a garment from it. Economically speaking it makes sense," said Sara Jean Ponder, a consumer specialist for Pepperell Mill, based in West Point, Ga.

"If you sew at all, working with sheets is no problem. Most dresses can be made from one full-size flat sheet, a child's outfit from a standard pillowcase," said Ponder during a telephone interview.

The benefits are many. The fabric is wash-and-wear. Patterns keep pace with those currently used by fashion designers. Florals and other patterns can be coordinated to solid patterns designed to match.

When working with sheets, Ponder's guidelines include using a standard size 14 machine needle, sewing 10 to 12 stitches per inch.

It is also important to note sheets are printed on grain. If the print is slightly off-grain, lay out the pattern sections to follow the print. The permanent press qualities of the fabric will allow the finished product to hang smoothly regardless of how it is cut.

The company also offers a conversion guide for figuring yardage needs, such as the following:

- A twin flatsheet is 72 by 104 inches and equals 5-3/4 yards of fabric.
- A double flat sheet measures 81 by 104 inches and equals 6-1/2 yards.
- A queen flat sheet is 90 by 110 inches and yields 7-1/2 yards of material.
- A king flat sheet is 108 by 110 inches to equal 9-1/8 yards.
- A regular pillowcase is 42 by 36 inches and provides 1-1/8 yards of fabric.
- A king pillowcase is 42 by 46 inches and gives 1-3/8 yards.

The sheet sizes are given before hemming. The appropriate yardage is compared with 36-inch wide fabric.

DEAR ABBY

Busy couple's dinnertime interruptions hard to stomach

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: My husband and I both work, and during the dinner hour we have our first opportunity of the day to sit and talk.

We have a very dear friend who is semi-retired and works at home and lives near us. While we enjoy our friend's company, we find it not so enjoyable when our friend arrives during dinner, pulls up a chair and chats about anything and everything with no thought whatsoever as to whether or not our dinner or evening plans have been interrupted by her visit. Her visits last anywhere from 30 minutes to three hours.

Our time at home is precious since we both work and must plan to fit our house and yard work into our business schedules.

We can find no way to communicate this problem to our friend without offending her since we are sure it never occurred to her that her visits are often an intrusion, and sometimes spoil previous plans that we may have had — whether it be relaxation, house or yard work. We are hoping that our friend will see this letter and understand that not everyone is semi-retired with evenings free to socialize and entertain unexpected company. — BUSY FRIENDS IN NEW YORK

DEAR BUSY: I receive no less than 1,000 letters on a slow day, and approximately 100 of them sound exactly like yours, so let me kill one hundred birds with one stone (with apologies to the S.P.C.A.):

Nobody can impose upon you without your permission. People who make a practice of dropping in and staying anywhere from 30 minutes to three hours, and spoil your previous plans, can hardly be called "dear friends." And if you tolerate this kind of "intrusion" (your word), you are encouraging it.

If you can't summon the courage to tell a drop-in friend that you have plans for the evening — even if it's only to wash your hair and go to bed early — you will have to put up with the intrusion. Unless, of course, your friend reads "Dear Abby," recognizes herself and takes the hint. But don't count on it.

DEAR ABBY: I have been a telemarketer for the last 10 years, and I thank God every day for my job. I have no other skills and do not have a degree in anything. I have rheumatoid arthritis, high blood pressure and diabetes, so needless to say, I could never hold down a factory job or do waitress work.

I always read your column and usually like your answers, but you are off the wall knocking people who make a living telemarketing. I am a single parent who makes enough money to support myself and three children, and this job keeps me off welfare.

If people aren't interested in what I'm selling, all they have to do is say, "No, thank you," and hang up. I'm sorry if I call some folks at an inconvenient time, but regardless of what they say to me (and I have heard everything), I am always polite and keep my cool.

You probably won't print this, but maybe you will realize that telemarketers provide an important service, plus we provide jobs for a lot of people who otherwise might be on welfare. We hire pregnant women, students, handicapped people, overweight people and mothers with small children who can work from their homes.

Thank you, Abby, for letting me get this off my chest. — I'M OK IN OKLAHOMA CITY

DEAR ABBY: I am a 14-year-old girl and just love your column. Some of my friends and I were talking about different things, and we have a question to ask you. Can a girl get pregnant when she "does it" with a guy for the first time? — FOUR GIRLS IN CHARLESTON, W.VA.

DEAR GIRLS: The answer is YES!

DEAR ABBY: I'm sure my problem is not unique, but I need some advice. My husband comes from a very large family, and they are big party-givers. I'm talking about wedding showers, baby showers, confirmations, communions, graduations from high schools and colleges, etc. If it's for brothers and sisters, and first-generation cousins, I can understand it, but Abby, we get invitations from second- and third-generation cousins we hardly know, and some we've never even seen.

My husband and I are retired and living on a fixed income. Our medical bills are not completely covered by Medicare, and our supplemental insurance does not cover our expenses. We're having a hard time making ends meet.

How does one go about declining invitations without appearing cheap and getting family members we really care about angry with us? NO NAME OR TOWN, PLEASE

DEAR NO NAME: If you don't know some of these second- and third-generation cousins, they probably don't know you either, but your name was on the list because you're "family." (They may have been told by other family members that you might feel hurt if you weren't invited.)

Simply decline graciously. Send an appropriate card, don't feel guilty, and let it go at that.

DEAR ABBY: Yes, life is hard for the unambiguous who say exactly what they mean.

My dad told me about this ambiguous statement that appeared in our church bulletin: "Following communion services this Easter Sunday, Mrs. Johnson will lay an egg on the altar." — CHRISSY IN ROCHESTER, MINN.

AT WIT'S END

If you're scared of snakes, stop reading now

By ERMA BOMBECK

Bombeck

The fantasy is even too weird for Stephen King. You're in the bathroom ... alone. As you lean over to flush, you come face to face with the head of a 6-foot, 2-inch boa constrictor coming out of the commode. What do you do?

No question. I'd be on the phone in two minutes shouting to Century 21, "Forget the stupid blazer. Get out here and sell!"

This incident actually happened recently to a woman in Florida. What makes this story so special to me is that 11 years ago I wrote in a book about how I worried about everything.

I confessed to worrying about hidden cameras in the fitting room being hooked up to the Playboy Channel. I worried about the world ending at midnight and getting stuck with three hours on a 24-hour cold tablet. And I worried myself sick about a snake coming up through a drain.

For all of you who snickered, may you have a pregnant gerbil lost in your woodwork.

My husband was the first to laugh. He said, "Those things never happen. Figure it out. Have we ever had a house in our lives where the builder put in a drainpipe big enough to carry away the kids' hair, let alone accommodate an animal? How do you think I developed plunger hands?"

I wanted to believe him, but deep down inside I knew it was possible.

Once when I was in the checkout line at the store, I saw a story in one of the tabloids that said the head of the Loch Ness monster was wedged in a bathtub spigot in southern Ohio.

Of course my husband poohpoohed that, too.

I have now instituted a Snake Alert at our house. It's heads-up-and-lids-down time. It happened once. It can happen again. From this day on, no one goes to the bathroom alone.

In the event of a snake sighting, when one person passes out from the shock, the other one can slam down the lid and stack the tool box and a complete set of encyclopedias on it and run through the streets screaming, "We're being attacked!"

The Florida bowl stalker was characterized as a pet that probably wandered.

I will organize block spies who will survey every house in the neighborhood and report any animal larger than a roach that can swim.

What I really want to capitalize on is the most effective weapon against this happening again — panic.

We have a ritual at our house that we rap twice on the bathroom door before entering. (Don't tell me snakes don't have ears. Everything has ears!) Then we announce, "I'm coming in now."

I went through the exercise the other night. Hearing no response, I cautiously entered and lifted the lid of the commode. I saw a body and two eyes. My husband had put a rubber duck in the toilet. Now I've really got something to worry about. I think my husband's pilot light just went out.

Abandoned refrigerators pose dangers

From Staff Reports

To a child, an old abandoned refrigerator, freezer or other air-tight enclosure looks like a good hiding place. But the child can become trapped inside and in 10 minutes can suffocate.

According to the U.S. Consumer Products Safety Commission, nearly 10 suffocation deaths are reported yearly involving children, usually age 4-7, who were trapped in unused refrigerators and freezers with old-style latches. Other household appliances indicated as dangerous include picnic coolers, ice boxes in campers, older model clothes dryers and washer/dryer combinations.

All refrigerators and freezers built since 1958 have magnetic locks, so doors can be opened easily from the inside (with 15 pounds of pressure or less of force). However, some models with the old locking device are still around, posing significant risk to unsuspecting children.

A few minutes and some simple household tools are all it takes to modify a refrigerator so a child can't be trapped inside. If the refrigerator is being thrown away, take the door off. In some areas, this is required by law before the unit can be hauled away.

If the appliance is being stored for later use, block the doors open with wooden blocks glued at the top of the door, tape door shut with strong filiment tape or chain and padlock the door shut.

To help make your neighborhood a safer place, look for abandoned refrigerators and freezers and notify authorities to haul them away. If a child should ever be reported missing, immediately check these items before searching elsewhere.

For a free leaflet to show how to make these items safe, send your request with a self-addressed, stamped envelope to the Association of Home Appliance Manufacturers (AHAM) 20 North Wacker Drive, Chicago, Ill., 60606.

New seat belts required by law

Copley News Service

Combination shoulder and lap belts will be in place in the outer rear seat of every new car sold in the United States beginning in September, required by law.

Convertibles, light-duty buses and light trucks, including multipurpose vehicles, will get them by September 1991 if the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration has its way.

The new equipment will cost consumers an additional $14 per car and $16 for all classes of light trucks.

If you have an older car and want to install the belts, check with your dealer. A few manufacturers sell retrofit kits.

WORLD

East bloc nations split by age-old rivalries

BUDAPEST, Hungary (AP) — Almost every day, Hungary's state-run media carry a new report about privation in Romania or a purported shooting on the heavily guarded border between the two countries.

Hungary and Romania are allies in the Warsaw Pact military alliance, but not even a summit of their Communist leaders last August could ease the tensions between them.

Their relations illustrate the depth of many historically rooted quarrels now reappearing in the Soviet bloc that includes East Germany, Poland, Czechoslovakia, Hungary, Romania and Bulgaria.

For centuries, Eastern Europe has been a volatile region of shifting political allegiances and changing borders. A violent history has made nationalism a powerful force and left many ethnic groups in the area with a long list of grudges against neighbors.

World War I broke up the once vast Austro-Hungarian Empire and World War II left the Kremlin dominant in Eastern Europe. Authoritarian Communist governments took power after the Red Army swept in and ended Nazi Germany's reign.

The Soviet Union, following the model laid down by Stalin, used to exert pressure on East European Communist parties to maintain outwardly friendly relations. With Mikhail S. Gorbachev as Kremlin leader, those pressures eased.

Until recently, traditional conflicts among ethnic groups with different languages and cultures lay mostly dormant under slogans trumpeting the international solidarity of socialism.

Now, the Soviets are preoccupied with their own economic and social woes, and the ethnic tensions are bubbling across the borders. The East European allies, grappling with Kremlin-led calls for democratic reforms, are reopening old wounds.

Current quarrels vary from ideological differences over the pace of governmental reforms in Poland and Hungary and other countries to territorial disputes, minority rights and even cross-border pollution.

East Germany and Poland have argued over their common border and fishing rights in the Baltic Sea; Romania has angered Bulgaria by sending chemical waste wafting across the Danube; and customs wars have flared in a region strapped for consumer goods.

In November, Czechoslovakia annoyed the entire bloc by slapping restrictions at 48 hours' notice on the export of just about every consumer product Soviet bloc visitors might envy in Prague's relatively well-stocked shops.

Poles were especially outraged by measures that included confiscation of purchases intended as Christmas gifts. Polish travelers felt that the Czechs were deliberately reviving a historical enmity between the two populations.

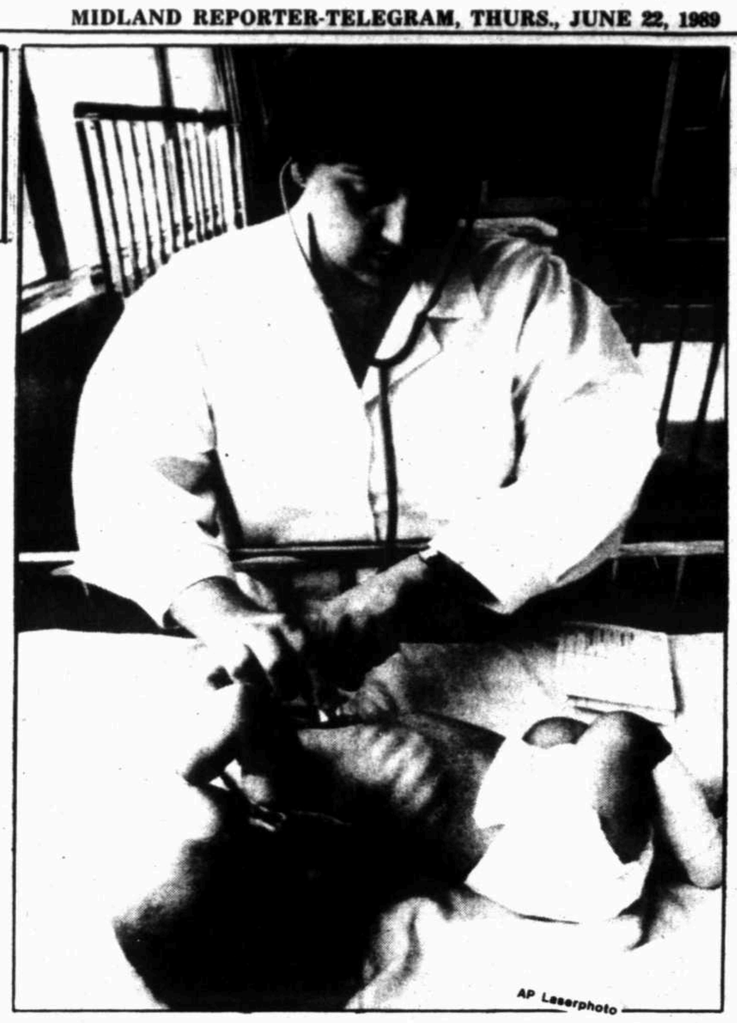

The customs crackdown was designed to protect living standards that have helped Prague's hard-line leaders keep outward peace with a population disgruntled ever since the 1968 Warsaw Pact invasion crushed Alexander Dubcek's reformist government.

But the action immediately touched off retaliations throughout the East bloc. Each country, including the Soviet Union, slapped export bans on any consumer goods popular with tourists from elsewhere in the region.

That conflict has since died down.

The most serious dispute involves Hungary and Romania. Simmering throughout the 1970s, it broke into the open in late 1986 over the seemingly innocuous issue of a Hungarian history book on Transylvania, a mountainous region ruled by Hungary for centuries but ceded to Romania after World War I.

Under President Nicolae Ceausescu, Romania is trying to eradicate the separate identity of ethnic minorities, and it immediately accused Hungary of publishing the history with the aim of reviving claims to Transylvania.

Nurse Gabriela Pozos checks the pulse of a baby being treated for dehydration at Juarez General Hospital in Juarez, Mexico, Wednesday.

14 Juarez babies die of dehydration

CIUDAD JUAREZ, Mexico (AP) — Fourteen babies have died of dehydration since the beginning of May in a hospital that can't afford air conditioning in its pediatric ward.

Little relief is in sight for a heat wave that began last week and has sent many looking for medical help. Patients at Juarez General Hospital sometimes find conditions inside almost as unbearable as outside.

Wednesday, more than a dozen infants being treated for dehydration endured the heat of the non-air conditioned, two-room pediatric ward as the temperature outside climbed to 105.

"It's unforgivable to have our children without air conditioning," hospital director Victor Manuel Jurado said as he wiped sweat off the forehead of a baby. "Many times, they get worse when they get here."

Jurado said Juarez General's staff remains committed, but can do little about the heat because the hospital simply can't afford air conditioning.

People have been reporting heat-related medical problems all over the sunbaked city. Red Cross officials in Juarez said they are treating about 24 cases of dehydration a day and the Social Security Hospital reported it has admitted 137 patients suffering from heat-related illnesses since the beginning of May.

Ex-agent denies killing columnist

MEXICO CITY (AP) — A former federal security agent denied he killed Mexican newspaper columnist Manuel Buendia in 1984, admitting that he unknowingly helped the triggerman flee the scene of the crime.

"I did not kill Buendia ... I never killed anyone during my career as a policemen," the suspect, Juan Rafael Mora Avila, told a news conference Wednesday at the Mexico City Attorney General's Office, one day after his arrest.

But Mora admitted he was part of a team from the now-dissolved Federal Security Administration, an agency similar to the FBI then headed by Juan Antonio Zorrilla Perez, that killed Buendia on May 30, 1984.

Zorrilla, accused of masterminding the murder, was arrested June 13 and is now awaiting trial on charges of homicide, obstruction of justice and abuse of authority.

Mora, 36, was arrested Tuesday. He pleaded not guilty when arraigned before Judge Roberto Hernandez Martinez of the city's 34th criminal court on a charge of homicide.

At the news conference and when questioned by district attorneys earlier, Mora identified the triggerman, a police informer named Jose Luis Ochoa Alonso, nicknamed "El Chocorrol" — a type of chocolate — because of his dark complexion.

Ochoa was killed by a burst of submachine gun fire on a Mexico City street 41 days after Buendia was shot dead at the entrance of a parking garage in the Pink Zone.

Buendia had left his office a couple of blocks away a few minutes earlier.

Mora said he and two other federal security special agents were ordered to mount motorcycles and "no matter what happened" to wait for "a certain person" at a certain street corner near where Buendia was killed on that day.

He said the action was dubbed "Operation News."

Mora said he went to the corner, heard a few shots, and seconds later Ochoa jumped on the back of the motorcycle and told him, "It's done, let's go!" He said Ochoa held on with one hand to a pistol which he had slipped under his belt.

After riding about for six blocks, Mora said Ochoa told him "stop here, I'll be safe. It's done," and got off outside a small hotel.

Mora said he then returned to the scene of the crime, where he found Zorrilla arguing heatedly with the Mexico City Judiciary Police over which agency was to handle the case.

Zorrilla got custody of the case.

"I really didn't realize what was happening. I was not aware that I was cooperating in committing a homicide," Mora said under questioning. Excerpts of the interrogation by four districts attorneys were made public Wednesday night.

Asked if Zorrilla had ordered the killing, Mora replied: "According to what is happening now, it appears to be so."

When questioned by Judge Hernandez again Wednesday, Zorrilla admitted he knew Mora slightly "as a superior knows an employee," but again denied he had ordered the killing.

Mora, the grandson of former Puebla state Gov. Maximino Avila Camacho, a onetime Secretary of Communications and Transportation, was also a grandnephew of Manuel Avila Camacho, president of Mexico from 1940 to 1946.

Besides being a policeman and federal security agent, Mora played the piano for a rock music group, did bit parts as an actor in at least four horror and crime B-movies, had a pilot's license and raced motorcycles and small cars.

The attorney general's office said has evidence showing that Zorrilla, 47, director of the federal security from 1982 until it was dissolved because of widespread corruption in 1985, ordered Buendia killed when he heard the columnist intended to expose his links with drug barons.

Buendia, a friend of Zorrilla for 15 years, regularly exposed wrongdoing in high places in a front-page column in the newspaper Excelsior, syndicated to about other 60 dailies.

Assistant Attorney General Abraham Polo Uzcanga said Zorrilla, who was at the scene a few minutes after Buendia was shot and conducted the first investigation, tampered with and removed evidence in an effort to cover up the crime.

Polo said there is evidence that Zorrilla received million of dollars in bribes every month from drug kingpin Rafael Caro Quintero

U.S. nun seriously wounded by gunman in El Salvador

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador (AP) — An American nun was shot in the head and seriously wounded by an assailant who fired into her car as she drove outside the capital, hospital and church sources said today.

The sources, who demanded anonymity, said sister Mary McKay, 60, was wounded Wednesday night as she traveled with two other people from the capital to Zaragoza, 10 miles to the south. The attacker has not been identified.

The nun, a member of the Sisters of Charity of the Incarnate Word, helps care for orphans at the Oscar Arnulfo Romero Community in Zaragoza. The community is named after the Salvadoran archbishop murdered in March 1980.

Sister McKay, whose hometown was not immediately available, was in serious condition this morning at the downtown Policlinica Hospital after being operated on Wednesday night, according to hospital sources.

Other sources said shots were fired at the nun's car from another vehicle that passed it, going in the same direction. Sister McKay was the only one wounded, the sources said.

Some Salvadoran armed forces officers consider nuns, priests and other church people who work in poor communities sympathizers of leftist guerrillas battling the U.S.-backed government.

In December 1980, two nuns and two laywomen from the U.S. were killed by National Guard troops in El Salvador. The case led to a temporary suspension of U.S. aid to this country, in the throes of a 9-year-old civil war.

Five National Guardsmen were convicted of the murders in 1984 and sentenced to 30 years in prison.

East German soldiers display their country's disarmament initiative Wednesday as they dismantle battle tanks into scrap near the East German city of Goerlitz.

East German soldiers take apart battle tanks

GOERLITZ, East Germany (AP) — Soldiers armed with blowtorches cut up the gun barrels of battle tanks while other troops ripped the frames apart to demonstrate how serious this country is about disarmament.

"This is not an empty show put on for the world's benefit," Col. Joachim Nicolaus said Wednesday during a tour for Western journalists. "We are holding true to the intention to destroy these weapons, and you are witnesses to the fulfillment of this pledge."

Officials showed reporters some of the 600 medium-sized tanks the government says it plans to dismantle as part of a unilateral decision to trim its conventional arsenal.

East Germany in January announced it was reducing its armed forces by 600 tanks, 10,000 troops and 50 combat aircraft. It plans to complete the cuts by next year. According to East German figures, the country's armed forces have 3,140 battle tanks.

Nicolaus, commander of the two bases along East Germany's southeastern border with Poland, said more than 130 tanks had been brought to the site to be scrapped or converted for civilian use.

About 150 of the 36-ton tanks will be modified for use in heavy industry, mainly in the nation's coal mining operations, said Col. Helmut Erdmann, a military spokesman. He said the remaining 450 Soviet-type T-55A tanks will be destroyed.

Some spare parts and sophisticated equipment will be salvaged, he said.

Reporters saw more than 11 tanks in various stages of demolition at the first base near Charlottenhof.

Huge cranes lifted the tanks' six-ton turrets from their armored frames, dumping them in neat rows where soldiers stripped them of their inch-thick, anti-radiation interior coating.

Other soldiers removed machine guns while their comrades used acetylene torches to cut 15-foot-long, 100mm gun barrels into small pieces.

At the second installation near the town of Ostritz, soldiers were busy in workshops melting down machine guns and breaking up the thickly armored tank bodies into small chunks. The Ostritz facility finishes the job begun near Charlottenhof.

Piles of metal and other tank parts were scattered across both compounds. Near a jumble of former gun carriages, a sign read: "Cannon Junk."

Erdmann said most of the tanks were five to 15 years old.

"We're not just throwing out ancient clunkers," he said. "These tanks still have a lot of mileage left in them."

WORLD IN BRIEF

Iran reportedly rejects overtures from U.S.

ABU DHABI, United Arab Emirates (AP) — Iran has rejected several recent attempts by third countries to mediate with Washington, Iran's foreign minister was quoted as saying today.

Foreign Minister Ali Akbar Velayati's interview in the Dubai-based Arabic newspaper Al-Bayan was published as Iran's parliament speaker visited the Soviet Union, the highest ranking Iranian official to do so in a decade.

Velayati said Iran was interested in good foreign relations as long as that doesn't compromise its independence, Al-Bayan reported.

"Several countries have approached us for some kind of mediation with the United States. But we reject that as the Islamic Republic in Iran has never welcomed such mediations," Velayati was quoted as saying in the interview in Tehran. The newspaper did not say when the interview occurred.

Velayati refused to give names of the countries which approached Tehran for mediation nor to elaborate on relations with Washington, said the paper.

Nigeria frees 6 journalists

LAGOS, Nigeria (AP) — Authorities have freed two editors and four reporters who work for the same independent newspaper and were arrested last week and held without being charged, staff members at the paper said.

The newspaper, The Republic, had reported just before the arrests that court hearings implicated the No. 2 man in President Ibrahim Babingida's government in a $2 million scandal.

Another article appearing in the paper said the government planned a 40 percent salary increase to pacify Nigerians angered by price increases.

At least 43 people were killed last month in clashes between police and demonstrators protesting the austerity measures that led to the higher prices.

The daily and Sunday editors of The Republic and the three reporters were arrested in police raids at The Republic's offices on Friday and Saturday, newspaper staff members said.

Ship likely moving too fast

OSLO, Norway (AP) — Norwegians involved in the rescue of hundreds of passengers from a Soviet liner said on Wednesday that it was going too fast for safety when it rammed an iceberg and took on water in arctic seas.

The head of the medical team aboard a Norwegian rescue ship said some of the Soviet crew were drunk at the time. Others involved in the rescue contradicted him.

Ships and helicopters took the 575 passengers, all but a dozen West Germans, to shelter on Spitzbergen Island. They were flown Wednesday to Dusseldorf, West Germany, cutting short their pleasure cruise to the land of the midnight sun.

About half the 378 Soviet crewmen stayed on board to nurse the Maxim Gorky to harbor.

The disabled 25,000-ton vessel was limping under its own power in the Norwegian Sea toward Spitzbergen.

Suspect placed near crime

STOCKHOLM, Sweden (AP) — A witness who knows the man accused of killing Prime Minister Olof Palme testified Wednesday that he saw the suspect outside the theater where the Swedish leader watched a movie before he was shot.

The prosecution contends defendant Christer Pettersson followed Palme from the theater and shot him on Feb. 28, 1986.

Pettersson, a drug and alcohol abuser with a previous manslaughter conviction, says he is innocent.

Roger Ostlund, 40, testified that he was about to make a telephone call in the theater lobby when he spotted Pettersson.

Sandinistas confiscate opponents' plantations

MANAGUA, Nicaragua (AP) — Cracking down on its critics, the leftist Sandinista government says it has confiscated coffee plantations and other property belonging to three opposition business leaders.

The three — Nicolas Bolanos, Jaime Cuadra and Arnoldo Aleman — were linked to the Superior Council of Private Enterprise, an opposition group, and have been sharply critical of government regulation of the coffee industry.

The confiscation announcement Wednesday came three days after coffee growers from all over the country decided to pull out of the National Coffee Commission, calling the regulatory and development-oriented panel useless.

An order signed by Agriculture Development Minister Jaime Wheelock and read on state-run Voice of Nicaragua radio declared the properties of the three men of "public utility and social interest." It did not mention compensation.

At a meeting Sunday in Matagalpa, 80 miles north of the capital, coffee growers unanimously decided to withdraw from the National Coffee Commission. They said the panel, made up of government and private representatives, had ruined the industry.

At the meeting, Bolanos accused the government of causing a severe economic crisis through mismanagement, adding that only a "government of national salvation" replacing the Sandinistas could bring Nicaragua out of recession.

NOTICE AFFORDING AN OPPORTUNITY FOR A PUBLIC HEARING
SPUR 558 (FAUDREE ROAD)
From Bankhead to US Hwy. 80
MIDLAND COUNTY

The State Department of Highways and Public Transportation is planning the extension of Faudree Road from the Bankhead Hwy, South to US Hwy. 80. The proposed project is approximately 0.4 of one mile long.

The proposed right of way will be 120 feet in width. The project will provide for the new construction of four traffic lanes within a 68 foot curb and guttter section. It is expected that the City of Odessa and Midland County will obtain the necessary right of way in connection with this project.

Maps and other drawings showing the proposed location and design, environmental studies, and any other information about the proposed project are on file and available for inspection and copying at the Resident Engineer's Office and/or the District Office at 3901 East US Highway 80 in Odessa. The maps and drawings showing the proposed location and design will be placed on file with Midland County (County Judges Office), and the City of Odessa 'Mayor of the City of Odessa).

Information about the State's Relocation Assistance Program, the benefits and services for displaces and information concerning the relocation assistance office can be obtained from the District Office located at 3901 East US Highway 80, Odessa, Texas 79761, telephone number 915-332-0501. Information about tentative schedules for acquisition of right of way and construction can be obtained at the Resident Engineer's Office of the District Office.

Any interested citizen may request that a Public Hearing be held covering the social, economic and environmental effects of the proposed location and design for this highway project by delivering a written request to the Resident Engineer's Office of the District Office on or before July 21, 1989. The address of Resident Engineer's Office is 3901 East US Highway 80, Odessa, Texas 79761.

In the event such a request is received, a public hearing will be scheduled and adequate notice will be published about the date and location of the hearing.
