McVeigh guilty

Jury to begin deciding penalty on Wednesday

By Michael Fleeman
Associated Press

DENVER — Timothy McVeigh was convicted Monday in the deadliest act of terror on U.S. soil, a verdict that brought jubilation and bitter tears to relatives of the 168 people killed in the Oklahoma City bombing. The jury will now decide whether he should pay with his life.

McVeigh sat at the defense table with his hands in a white-knuckle clasp and an impassive expression as U.S. District Judge Richard Matsch announced the verdict of guilty on all 11 counts of murder and conspiracy.

In the audience, tears welled in the eyes of the more than two dozen bombing survivors and victims' relatives. After the court session, they broke into sobs and embraced each other. One man thrust his fists into the air.

"We were holding hands and praying and crying," said Katherine Alaniz, whose father, Claude Medearis, died in the bombing. "My mom reached into her purse and handed me his wedding ring and, of course, I just lost it. ... I started crying. It was wonderful."

The momentary joy was tempered by memories of the losses in the April 19, 1995, bombing of the Alfred P. Murrah Federal Building. The blast shattered America's sense of security and belief that this level of terror could never have come from within.

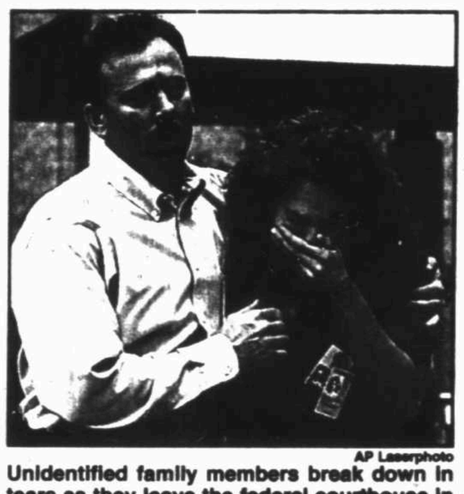

Bud Welch stood in downtown Oklahoma City near the site of the bombing, where cheers erupted from more than 500 people who got news of the verdict on televisions set up on the sidewalk.

"You heard most all of them clap. I couldn't do that because McVeigh has put us through so much and now," Welch said. "I thought it'd all be joy, but it isn't. A very dull victory. The bottom line is my little girl isn't coming back and I have the rest of my life to deal with that."

The same jury that took 23½ hours over four days to convict McVeigh returns Wednesday to hear evidence on whether he should die by injection.

It will be a mini-trial featuring what likely will be the most

After ambitious start, legislative session fizzled

By Chip Brown
Associated Press

AUSTIN — The 1997 Legislature may be remembered more for what it didn't do than for what it did.

Make no mistake, there were substantive reforms passed.

The state will have a drought management plan for the first time; uninsured children should have greater access to health insurance; nursing home operators face increased penalties for violations; Texans will vote on using their homes as collateral for loans; minors will face penalties for smoking; and state colleges have been sent a message about treating all students equally when it comes to admissions.

■ Related story/1B

But from the failure of a sweeping property tax cut plan to the "Memorial Day Massacre," in which 52 bills died due to a technical objection, the 75th Legislature was left pondering what didn't get done.

"It was a hollow session based upon the lofty goals we set at the beginning," said Rep. Brian McCall, R-Plano. "We didn't hit the bar on many of them, but I think the people of Texas will be just fine by our lack of follow through. The state will go on."

Rep. Rob Junell, D-San Angelo, the House Appropriations Committee chairman, said it's difficult to compare this session with 1995, when the Legislature tackled changes in education, juvenile justice, civil lawsuits and welfare.

"Last session, we had four or five major things," Junell said. "The major issues have been addressed and now you have to tinker on the edges. I think it is a successful session any time you have a budget that doesn't require new taxes."

Lt. Gov. Bob Bullock said it was a session "known more for its steady progress than it was for its flashy headlines."

The Legislature opened with ambitious plans for rewriting the state's tax code. It was the subject of a yearlong campaign by Gov. George W. Bush, who said the state could no longer rely on property taxes to provide the majority of funds for public schools.

On both sides of the counter, they relish the secret of Bob's Better Burger

Rita McGee, "grandmother" of nine burgermeisters at Bob's Better Burger, is loathe to give up her secret.

But her hands give it away: just enough relish (only dill will do). A hint of onion. A flutter of iceberg. Mustard. A shake of salt. And of course, a sizzling patty wedged inside a perfectly toasted bun.

"We make 'em any way they want 'em," is all she'll say about the Better Burgers becoming Midland legends.

Some laud their crunch. Others their "homemade" succulence. But for whatever reasons, West Texans have been lining up for the virtues of Bob's Better Burger for 40-plus years.

They've even gone global, with "Larges" shipped frozen to Germany and "Double Jals" (or stuffed jalapeno burgers) packed iced to Wisconsin.

Given its fame, what, exactly, makes Bob's Better Burger "better?"

"They're just better, they feel like they're just HUGE," says Jennifer Edwards, 22, an admitted junk food junkie and Bob's devotee.

"They're not like McDonald's or Burger King's, not like some greasy, nasty cheeseburger that makes your stomach growl with this yucky, pigged-out feeling."

Inside Bob's, a 1950s hut no bigger than a rich man's closet, nine women confront a noontime rush. A phone rings incessantly with orders. Workers smoke or inhale burgers on the fly.

And Glenda Barron, 54, Bob's grillmaster for the better part of 16 years, prepares patty after patty for a hellish grill.

Nigeria bombards Sierra Leone's capital

FREETOWN, Sierra Leone (AP) — Nigerian warships bombarded the port capital of Freetown on Monday, pounding away at the headquarters of the leaders of a week-old military coup. At least seven people died in the attack and fighting onshore.

Mutinous troops responded by taking aim at the beachfront Mammy Yoko Hotel, where hundreds of Nigerian troops sent in to back the ousted government have set up a command post.

Hundreds of frightened foreigners cowered in the basement of the hotel after Nigerian gunships off the coast started firing toward the coup headquarters in the former defense headquarters a few miles inland.

"We've been attacked by the Sierra Leonian soldiers," said one hotel guest, who refused to give his name. "The Nigerians are trying their best, but they're running out of ammo."

He said six Nigerian solders had been wounded.

Low-ranking troops in Sierra Leone's disgruntled military ousted the elected president on May 25 in the West African country's third coup in five years.

Nigeria — the chief power in the region — bolstered its military presence in Sierra Leone over the weekend to try to pressure coup leaders to surrender power, then launched a surprise offensive Monday.

The attack appeared timed to follow the weekend evacuation of most Westerners and came after the coup leader, Maj. Johnny Paul Koroma, made clear he had no intention of giving up.

On Sunday, Koroma named a 20-man ruling council to govern the country, a sign that diplomatic attempts to restore President Ahmed Tejan Kabbah to power had failed.

Some of the foreigners evacuated earlier from the hotel arrived Monday in neighboring Guinea, including an American woman who managed to get 18 orphans out of Freetown on U.S. military helicopters.

"It was just awful. It was terrible," said the woman, Pinkie McCann-Willis, who heads the Freetown office of the Indianapolis-based Americans for African Adoption agency.

McCann-Willis said she and the children spent two days pinned down by gunfire in their Freetown compound before she was able to pile the children into the back of her pickup truck and make a dash for the Mammy Yoko.

Once there, McCann-Willis obtained State Department permission to carry the non-American orphans out on evacuation choppers. In all, the U.S. helicopters carried 1,200 foreigners from the hotel grounds over the weekend.

At least one shell fired by the mutineers from their hilltop headquarters hit a house in the Aberdeen neighborhood between the rebels' and Nigerians' strongholds.

At the Connaught Hospital, the main government hospital in central Freetown, the bodies of two women and a child from Aberdeen were brought to the morgue. It was unclear whether they had died from shrapnel or bullet wounds.

A hospital official interviewed by Sierra Leonian journalists said four other people had died of bullet wounds east of the city, near the site of earlier skirmishes.

The Nigerian offensive appeared to surprise other countries involved in efforts to negotiate Koroma's exit and the return of Kabbah, who fled to Guinea after the coup.

"We have all along insisted on a negotiated settlement. This morning's attack came as a surprise," said Foreign Minister Kwamena Ahwoi of Ghana, which sent soldiers into Freetown over the weekend both to stabilize the situation and to evacuate about 1,000 Ghanaian civilians trapped there.

In Washington, White House spokesman Mike McCurry said the United States was "interested in diminishing the violence."

"We are supporting efforts to deal directly with the parties, both factions, rebel factions, to encourage the institution of a cease-fire," McCurry said.

In Harare, Zimbabwe, where the annual summit of African heads of state opened Monday, leaders condemned the coup but offered no support for the military action.

It was not immediately known whether the Nigerian bombardment had damaged the coup leaders' headquarters. But the attack was likely to tell on Koroma's forces, who are no match for Nigeria's well-equipped and seasoned soldiers, and who have failed to muster any support among Freetown's coup-weary populace.

Many of the heavily armed rebels who have roamed Freetown's narrow streets were seen trading their ragged uniforms for civilian clothing Monday, a sign they would rather hide among civilians than face the Nigerians in battle.

Coup leaders sought to portray the Nigerian action as outside aggression and a threat to Sierra Leone's sovereignty.

"Let us come together so as not to allow foreigners to come and destroy our motherland ... we are ready to fight such people to the last," declared a coup spokesman, Mohammed Saidu Kamara, in a radio appeal.

France's shift to the left could unsettle Europe

By Bernard Kaplan
Hearst News Service

■ News analysis

PARIS — The Socialists' strong victory in the French parliamentary elections could derail plans for a united Europe.

Sunday's vote, which produced a substantial left-wing majority in the National Assembly, also signaled a new period of political volatility such as France has often experienced in its history, according to several analysts here.

"The long period of stability that began with President Charles de Gaulle's formation of the Fifth Republic 39 years ago is over," declared Alain Duhamel, one of this country's best known political commentators.

Some analysts noted that Socialist leader Lionel Jospin remains wedded to the Left's traditional panaceas of state intervention and high levels of social spending to rescue the flagging economy.

His program calls for the creation of 700,000 jobs, half of them on the state payroll, while reducing the work week from 39 to 35 hours with no reduction in wages. He also has pledged to reverse President Jacques Chirac's planned privatization of money-losing state enterprises including Air France, the French national airline, and France Telecom, the government telecommunications enterprise.

Economist Jean-Marie Lisnap, an adviser to the Paris-based Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development, said that while Jospin has reiterated his party's strong pro-European policy, his economic program may work against the continent's integration.

Lisnap said that if Jospin tries to carry out the Socialist economic agenda, "it will make it impossible for France to meet the conditions of the 1991 (Maastricht) treaty for creating a single European currency and full economic integration."

The Socialist program would mean a government budgetary deficit that "runs riot," he said.

"Given Germany's equally serious economic problem, a French government led by Jospin means one of two things — either the single currency and the whole process of European integration will have to be delayed well beyond its planned (January) 1999 starting date, or the single currency, the euro, will be introduced on schedule but will be so weak and unstable that it will worsen Europe's economic prospects, not improve them."

Other analysts said the voters not only had expressed strong disapproval of Chirac's center-right coalition government only two years after his election, but had also showed they are deeply disillusioned with the country's political system that has let France slip behind other economic powers.

The people's stinging reprimand to Chirac came about mainly because they blamed him for failing to fulfill a campaign promise in 1995 to make unemployment his top priority.

Instead, his critics charge, he let the jobs problem slide in favor of coordinating France's policies with those of Germany, forming part of a joint drive for European monetary and political union.

Governing Liberals narrowly retain majority in Canadian election

By David Crary
Associated Press

OTTAWA — The governing Liberal Party suffered some embarrassing setbacks Monday, including losses by two Cabinet ministers, while eking out a reduced majority in a Parliament more divided than ever by regional interests.

For the first time, a party playing on anti-Quebec sentiment — the western-based Reform Party — emerged as the main opposition force in the House of Commons.

Reform failed to make inroads in eastern Canada, but rolled to a near-sweep in Alberta and British Columbia with a platform suggesting too many concessions had been made to placate Quebec separatists.

The centrist Liberals, who five weeks ago were cocky enough to call the election 18 months early, held 174 seats in the outgoing Parliament. They seemed likely to end out with a net loss, but were assured of winning more than the 151 needed to form a majority government under Prime Minister Jean Chretien.

Chretien himself barely survived a close race in his own district in Quebec against a strong separatist challenger.

The first batch of returns, from the four Maritime provinces, were devastating for the Liberals. They had held 31 of the 32 seats there, but lost two-thirds of them, including the Nova Scotia seat of Health Minister David Dingwall and the New Brunswick seat of Defense Minister Doug Young.

But the Liberals rebounded, as expected, in populous Ontario, heading toward a near-sweep of the 103 seats. And they also were doing well in Quebec, adding perhaps 10 seats to the 19 they held before.

The separatist Bloc Quebecois was leading in just over half of Quebec's 75 districts, enough for them to claim there was still momentum for to call a referendum on independence within the next few years. They had held 50 seats going in to the election.

Overall, the results cast doubt on the Liberals' claim to be the only truly national party in Canada. Their poor showing in the west and the Maritimes left Ontario as their only major stronghold.

About 20 million Canadians were eligible to cast ballots at 53,000 polling stations spread across the world's second-largest country in terms of geography. In all, 1,672 candidates were running.

Reform, which won 52 seats during its first national campaign in 1993, tried to expand its support with suggestions that Chretien and other mainstream leaders have spent too much energy trying to defuse separatist sentiment in Quebec.

Reform's leader, Preston Manning, was denounced as an anti-Quebec bigot by several of his rivals, including Jean Charest, whose Progressive Conservative Party was battling with Reform for right-of-center votes.

The Progressive Conservatives, reduced to just two seats in the 1993 election, fared well in the Maritimes, winning 14 seats. But they failed to make progress in other regions, and their future as a legitimate national party was in doubt.

The other big winner in the Maritimes was the left-wing New Democratic Party, which won at least seven seats. The NDP was the only party to hit hard on the need to curb a 9.6 percent jobless rate.

Chretien, 63, was seeking to become the first Liberal prime minister since 1953 to win consecutive majorities. He led the Liberals to a landslide win in 1993 as voters fed up with Brian Mulroney ousted the Progressive Conservatives.

When Chretien called this election April 27, opinion polls indicated the Liberals would add to the 174 seats they held in the outgoing Parliament.

But the Liberals ran a lackluster campaign, and the final polls last week indicated they would likely lose some seats.

The Liberals' main first-term accomplishment was to slash a record $31 billion deficit by more than two-thirds. But they were unable to bring down the jobless rate and they failed to prevent increasing polarization on the status of Quebec.

Pope calls on Poles to pray he can reach 2000

GORZOW, Poland (AP) — An emotional John Paul II, making what many Poles fear may be his last pilgrimage home, asked his countrymen to pray for him Monday so that he can lead the Roman Catholic Church into 2000.

The 77-year-old pope said at an evening prayer service in this southern town that his mentor, the late Cardinal Stefan Wyszynski, had predicted he would take the church into the third millennium of Christianity.

"I'm growing in years," John Paul said, "I ask you to beg God, on your knees, so that I will be able to fulfill this task."

The crowd of nearly 400,000 responded with "we will help, we will help," a chant used in the early 1970s, during the former communist regime. Communism fell in Poland in 1989.

John Paul wiped his eyes, smiling. "I know this chant," he said. "This time I hope it's more effective."

The crowd — the most enthusiastic of his visit so far — also burst into "Sto lat," a Polish song meaning: "May you live 100 years."

"We will certainly pray for him for the third millennium and another trip to Gorzow," said Karolina Gnil, a retired teacher. "It was absolutely fantastic, especially the enthusiasm of all the people here."

She said she saw John Paul in 1979, during his first pilgrimage home as pope. "He's gotten old, but the sense of humor stays the same," she said.

Since his last major tour of Poland in 1991, the pope has undergone surgery for a colon tumor. He walks with difficulty after breaking his leg and undergoing hip replacement surgery. His left hand often shakes.

But age and ailments have not stopped his traveling — this tour will last 11 days — nor stilled his voice. Earlier Monday, he admonished officials to find a way to help impoverished Poles.

In the western town of Legnica, on a medieval battlefield where Christians fought invading Muslims, John Paul sternly criticized the economic restructuring that has cost hundreds of thousands of Poles their jobs.

"In these times of the building of a democratic state, in these times of dynamic economic development, we see with particular clarity all the shortcomings of social life in our country," the pope told 300,000 pilgrims, many of them workers holding red Solidarity flags.

John Paul condemned the notion of the worker as a "tool of production," saying that "in practice, this takes the form of exploitation."

The pontiff said that while times and circumstances change, "there are always those in our midst who need the voice of the church and that of the pope to give expression to their anxiety, pain and misery."

"I speak about this in Poland too, because I know that my nation needs this message about justice," he said.

It was in Legnica that a Christian army put up such resistance against the invading Tatars in 1241 that the Muslims turned back even though they won the battle.

Germany fires musician over 'Hitler' incident

BERLIN (AP) — Berlin's mayor voiced dismay Monday about a musician who signed a hotel bill "Adolf Hitler" in Israel, saying it underlined Germany's need to remain vigilant in its relations with the Jewish state.

Gerd Reinke, 54, was fired Monday as double bass player by the German Opera Berlin after being sent home from a performance in Tel Aviv because of the incident.

"A large number of our opera members were in tears because of the damage this has caused," opera director Goetz Friedrich said on German radio.

He said the company would finish its engagement because pulling out would nullify "the purpose and spirit" of the visit.

Friedrich apologized for the incident, which happened Friday at a hotel in Herzliya where the orchestra was staying. Hotel manager Zwika Spies said Reinke had two beers and signed the bill "Adolf Hitler."

Reinke had to be fired because "misguided acts" by individuals could threaten relations between Germany and Israel, Berlin Mayor Eberhard Diepgen said in a telephone interview.

"In a few seconds, one drunk can destroy several years of commendable efforts for reconciliation," the Berlin daily Tagesspiegel commented.

Berlin judicial authorities have no grounds for opening proceedings against Reinke because the incident did not happen in Germany and he had not incited anyone to racial hatred, spokesman Ruediger Reiff said Monday.

Germany's ambassador to Israel, Theodor Wallau, had said the musician could face prosecution.

Reinke told The Associated Press he could not remember the incident because he was "totally drunk."

"But if all of this is really true, then I can only say I am very sorry," he said.

Six million Jews were murdered by the Nazis under Hitler's orders. Some 300,000 Holocaust survivors live in Israel.

MCVEIGH: 'A labor of love,' prosecutor says

wrenching testimony of the case: survivors and relatives describing the upheaval in their lives. McVeigh will probably call family members to plead for mercy, and offer testimony about the disastrous FBI siege at Waco, Texas.

Jurors remained under a gag order preventing them from discussing the reasons for their verdict.

Prosecutors contended McVeigh drove a Ryder truck loaded with a 4,000-pound fuel-and-fertilizer bomb to the Murrah building and set the fuse in a twisted plot to avenge the disaster at Waco exactly two years earlier and spark a second American revolution.

The bomb went off at 9:02 a.m., turning the morning into a swirl of flying glass, collapsing walls and crumbling concrete. Nine floors collapsed into an area the size of three, crushing the victims, in the words of one rescuer, "like grapes." Among the dead were 19 children, most of whom had just been dropped off at the building's day-care center.

The hunt for the bomber yielded one of America's own, the fresh-faced former Army sergeant who was raised in the small town of Pendleton, N.Y., and was decorated for his actions as an armored-vehicle gunner in the Persian Gulf.

When the verdict was read, McVeigh stared at the judge. None of his attorneys comforted him or said anything to him.

As jurors were polled as to whether they were sure of their decision, the foreman stared at McVeigh and answered in a loud firm voice, "Yes." Two red-eyed jurors held tissues in their hands and appeared close to tears.

After Matsch dismissed the jury, McVeigh was escorted out by four U.S. marshals. He shook lead attorney Stephen Jones' hand and the two exchanged whispered words. Just as he was taken out of the courtroom, he shook Christopher Tritico's hand.

Peggy Broxterman, who listened to the verdict in an auxiliary courtroom, called it an "absolute thrill," but said vindication for the death of her 43-year-old son and others wasn't complete.

"It's not over until he's dead," she said.

Prosecutors Joseph Hartzler and Patrick Ryan spoke at a gathering of more than 100 victims' relatives and survivors at a nearby church that they had been using as a haven. Complimented on their handling of the case, Hartzler replied that the work "was a labor of love."

Hartzler left the federal courthouse to the applause of hundreds of people assembled on the sidewalk. Hartzler, who has multiple sclerosis, stopped his electric wheelchair to speak briefly to the crush of reporters.

"We're obviously very pleased with the results. We always had confidence in our evidence," he said. "We're ready to move on to the next stage."

Jones, who had walked across the courtroom to shake Hartzler's hand after the verdict, congratulated prosecutors and the FBI and said, "We will be ready for the second stage."

In Washington, President Clinton said the verdict heralded "a very important and long overdue day for the survivors and families of those who died in Oklahoma City."

"Today, I say to the families of the victims, no single verdict can bring an end to your anguish," Clinton said in a statement. "But your courage has been an inspiration to all Americans. Our prayers are with you."

The verdict came just over two years after the explosion gutted the nine-story federal building.

Immediately after the bombing, there was speculation among members of the public that the attack, like the World Trade Center bombing two years earlier, was the work of foreign terrorists. McVeigh's arrest instead cast a spotlight on America's militia movement and like-minded right-wing extremists who see Waco and the 1992 FBI siege at Ruby Ridge, Idaho, as evidence the federal government is extinguishing the constitutional rights of its citizens.

McVeigh was arrested 75 minutes after the explosion about 80 miles north of the blast site. He was pulled over by a state trooper for failing to have a license plate on his yellow Mercury Marquis. He was traced to the bombing through a composite sketch of the man who rented the Ryder truck.

In the speedy 18-day government case, prosecutors called people close to McVeigh to testify he divulged detailed plans to bomb the building months before the attack and devoured the anti-government novel "The Turner Diaries," which describes the destruction of a federal building to spark a civil war.

The government also produced rental documents, phone records and witnesses who identified him as the man who rented the Ryder truck under the alias Robert Kling. Other evidence pointed to McVeigh's efforts to buy and steal bomb-making supplies.

The defense countered in its compact 3½-day case that McVeigh was swept up in a rush to judgment and tried on the basis of lying, opportunist witnesses and scientific evidence tainted by FBI mishandling and lab contamination.

But McVeigh's attorneys were barred by the judge from pursuing their most controversial theory — that the bombing was part of a larger conspiracy involving overseas terrorists or American white supremacists.

And, the defense raised the specter of a second, unknown bomber who may have died in the blast.

All were rejected by the jury, just as they had been rejected by the victims' families.

"He's not human," said Charles Tomlin, who lost a grown son in the bombing. "This is a monster that blew up a building."

LEGISLATURE: Session a mix of success, failures

(From 1A)

In the end, however, lawmakers settled for using a $1 billion budget surplus to give homeowners an additional $10,000 homestead exemption, a savings of roughly $140 per year.

"It's a billion dollars, but it's certainly not the extent that I would have liked to have seen this Legislature act," said Bush, who hinted last week that he will seek re-election in 1998.

"I would warn Texans that we have not solved the school funding issue or the property tax issue for the long term," he said. "This is a good step, but this is not a solution to what was debated in the halls of the Capitol."

This year was the first time in more than a century that control of the two legislative chambers was split between political parties, with Democrats running the House and Republicans controlling the Senate.

A substantially bigger property tax relief plan died after the House, which passed a more ambitious plan, deadlocked with the Senate, which was less inclined to raise taxes to help fund property tax cuts.

Some criticized Bush for not providing enough leadership in getting a compromise accomplished. His own state party chairman ripped Bush for tackling the issue.

"I think Texans got plenty of leadership," Bush said. "It's been a healthy debate for our state. I think Texans will appreciate the effort made, whether it be my effort or the legislative effort."

A Bush-backed attempt at capping increases in property appraisals also was weakened, again to the governor's disappointment. The modified proposal would allow homeowners to defer paying their taxes when the value of their houses increases by more than 5 percent per year.

And the governor suffered another setback when his attempts to revive a plan to deregulate the state's electric utility market failed.

Bush was quick, however, to point out his legislative victories in bills passed that will:

- Allow faith-based organizations, such as churches and synagogues, to become more involved in providing welfare services.
- Streamline the adoption process so that adoptions occur more rapidly.
- Give Texas judges more authority to dismiss lawsuits filed from out-of-state.
- Open up the state's welfare system to privatization.
- Create more charter schools, which are freed from many state regulations.

The 1997 Legislature ground to halt on Memorial Day, when Rep. Arlene Wohlgemuth, R-Burleson, raised a technical objection to the way a calendar of bills was scheduled, wiping out 52 measures.

Mrs. Wohlgemuth, nicknamed "Hurricane Arlene" by one House member, said her strike was in retaliation for the death of a parental notification abortion bill and for the demise of a measure that would have outlawed the recognition of same-sex marriages.

"If my child had acted that way, I would have sat him in the corner and sent him to bed without any dinner," said one member, who asked not to be identified.

Legislators managed to find enough time in their busy days of bill passing to name rodeo as the state's official sport and the Texas sweet onion as the state's official vegetable. An attempt to make salsa — not barbecue — the state's official sauce was unsuccessful.

And in a Hollywood ending, Rep. Kyle Janek, a Republican anesthesiologist from Houston, proposed marriage to Baylor law school student Shannon Riddle, the committee clerk in charge of the special House panel appointed to deal with the property tax issue.

Colleagues wondered why Janek was spending so much time in property tax committee hearings this session when he wasn't even on the committee.

"I really did want to learn about the issue," he said, smiling. "Of course, no one believes me."

BOB'S: Homemade quality no secret for hamburger stand customers

(From 1A)

"Mild, cut the onion."

"One jap, cut the onion."

"Give me another bottom."

The orders, from Rita, come in Wimpy-like succession.

The edge of each jalapeno burger gets a loving massage, or seal. And with each burger, sizzling in its juices, she cuts grooves with her spatula "to help it not shrink." And never, ever does she press the au jus from the patty.

Nor serve a burger with the curl side down, lest precious ingredients spill out from the bun.

Her secret? "One hundred percent pure beef. We don't use any cereal or additives," she says proudly. In fact, the meat is ground fresh every day.

Barron, cooking in pink shorts and a strawberry-and-daisy tank top, loves her burgers.

"Yes, at least one a day," she jokes. "That's why I'm so fat."

Bob's has endured despite the popularity of corporate fast food.

"I can undersell anything," Bob Wallace, Bob's 72-year-old founder, once told the Midland Reporter-Telegram after he leased his restaurant to Margaret Brasuell 11 years ago.

"If they think I can't buck a chain, they've got another thought coming."

Wallace, a Navy baker who launched his career in a Midland greasy spoon, opened his stand in 1956 selling six burgers for a buck (a large now sells for $1.70). One neon joint became five before he eventually pared his business back to its original location on Midland's west side, just off Wall Avenue.

Aside from grilling burgers, Wallace concocted special batters for corn dogs and ground-beef steak fingers.

"I was making corn dogs before anybody ever heard of them," he said.

"I never had sense enough to copyright the corn dog."

Nor Bob's famous burger stuffed with jalapenos. His specialty, of course, lives on as the all-American hamburger with all the fixin's: lettuce, tomatoes, onions, pickles and mustard, unless otherwise ordered.

Each day, customers order 125 pounds of meat, 150 pounds on Saturdays.

"It's fresh, homemade, name-brand quality ... which is hard to come by these days," says Brasuell, 47, of Bob's original formula.

"It's the special touch, it's the thing," says Kathy Washburn, 50, at the fryer, barely a bottom's distance from the grill.

"Things have never changed in 40 years," pipes in Brenda Robinson, 32, her assistant. "Even the burgers smell the same outside the building."

Bob's is a family affair. Brasuell, who ate at Bob's when she was six the first day her family came to Midland in 1956, has hired her two sisters, Glenda and Becky Wilder, 39.

Melinda Mayo, 15, works alongside her mother Debbie.

And Beth Wallace, 72, still comes to work after reading her Bible and the morning paper.

"She got it into her head she wasn't going to live as long as she wasn't working here," Brasuell says. "She's a lifesaver."

Whatever the secret of Bob's Better Burgers, customers swear by them.

"Just like homemade," exclaims one customer. "I wish I (knew the secret)."

"Luscious," says Celia Munoz, who drove 5 miles with her husband Joe for a taste. "Best hamburgers I've ever had."

Grandson of Malcolm X charged with starting fire

YONKERS, N.Y. (AP) — Malcolm X's widow fought for her life Monday after being burned over most of her body in a fire allegedly set by her grandson, described by a family lawyer as "a sad little boy" with a troubled past.

Mrs. Shabazz was listed in critical condition with third-degree burns over 80 percent of her body.

"The injuries are catastrophic. ... She is in a life-threatening situation and will be for a long period of time," said Dr. Bruce Greenstein at Jacobi Medical Center in the Bronx.

Mrs. Shabazz, 63, was sedated, on a ventilator and receiving fluid replacement. Artificial skin grafts may be considered if her vital signs remain stable, but until the wounds are covered with new skin, she is in danger of going into shock, Greenstein said.

Her 12-year-old grandson, named Malcolm for his famous grandfather, appeared briefly in court Monday and was held in a juvenile detention center, charged with juvenile delinquency.

Family lawyer Percy Sutton told the judge he needed the consent of the boy's mother to continue representing him, and the judge agreed to postpone the hearing until Tuesday. The mother, Qubilah Shabazz, was due to arrive from Texas on Monday night.

Malcolm wore jeans and a sweatshirt, sitting calmly between Sutton and a psychiatrist who is a family friend. He gave his name as "Malcolm," and said nothing else.

Sutton said Malcolm "is a sad little boy. He's a child, just a child who's been through a lot of trauma in his life. ... He loves his grandmother very much and he expressed that love for her. ... He said how sorry he is."

Malcolm was arrested a few hours after the fire erupted in his grandmother's apartment in Yonkers, just north of New York City. He was found walking in nearby Mount Vernon, his clothes smelling of gasoline. Gas was used in the fire and police were investigating whether Mrs. Shabazz encountered flames in the hallway outside her apartment or if she was set afire.

Thirty-two years ago, Mrs. Shabazz witnessed the assassination of her husband at the Audubon Ballroom in Harlem. Qubilah Shabazz, then 4, also saw her father gunned down on Feb. 21, 1965.

After her husband's death, Mrs. Shabazz went on to raise six daughters and to become a university administrator and spokeswoman for civil rights.

NAACP Chairwoman Myrlie Evers-Williams, widow of slain civil rights leader Medgar Evers, called her "one of my dearest friends."

"Betty Shabazz has not been given the amount of credit she deserves in shaping America's civil rights movement. She has been a source of strength and encouragement not only to myself but to millions of Americans," Evers-Williams said in a statement.

Mrs. Shabazz had long believed that Nation of Islam leader Louis Farrakhan played a role in her husband's assassination. The two reconciled in 1995 — the same year Qubilah was indicted for allegedly plotting to hire a hit man to kill Farrakhan.

Farrakhan denied any role in Malcolm X's death. Three men with ties to the Nation of Islam were convicted in the assassination.

The charges against Qubilah Shabazz were dropped last month under an agreement that required her to undergo drug treatment.

Judges, agents attack ATF's credibility

WASHINGTON (AP) — Still on the rebound from Waco and the Good Ol' Boys Roundup, the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms now is enduring attacks on its integrity from judges and its own agents.

In criminal and civil cases, judges have concluded ATF witnesses were not credible, had "failed to adhere to the high ethical standards expected of federal law enforcement" and had shown a "reckless disregard for the truth."

Four months ago, a former informant won the return of his gun dealer's licenses after producing a tape recording that conflicted with the testimony of an ATF supervisor. The agency knew about the tape but continued to stand by the testimony in court filings.

And during a training seminar at headquarters in Washington, a training supervisor declared that agents "always testify"' in court that the agency's firearms registration database is 100 percent accurate "even though we know that isn't always the case."

None of the agents involved in a dozen cases in which questions of credibility were raised has ever been disciplined, according to a review by The Associated Press.

The agency says such incidents are isolated given the thousands of cases it handles — involving violent gunrunners, gang members and bombers — and that they are being blown out of proportion because of the recent negative spotlight cast on the bureau.

ATF agents were cited in 1996 for events that included drunkenness and racist behavior at gatherings dubbed Good Ol' Boys Roundups in Tennessee. And several were reprimanded for the 1993 botched raid on the Branch Davidian compound at Waco, Texas. In the latter, the government concluded ATF supervisors made false statements to cover up errors.

"Clearly, a public perception still persists about the agency stemming from Waco and the roundup, but nothing can be further from the truth," said Stephen J. McHale, the agency's chief counsel.

"ATF agents consistently perform their duties with honesty and hard work, and in the few cases where there have been questions, the agents were testifying to the best of their recollections," he said.

Not everyone shares that view, including Vincent C. Noble, an agent in Louisville, Ky., who sued his agency claiming he was denied a promotion.

Last month, a supervisor in Noble's office acknowledged in a deposition that inaccurate and exaggerated information that reflected more positively on the agent who was promoted over Noble had been placed in her personnel folder.

"ATF is in the business of putting people in the penitentiary for lying on government forms, firearms licenses and the like. And here you have ATF supervisors admitting they lied on government forms and not a darn thing has been done," Noble said.

Agency officials declined comment on Noble's charges, citing the ongoing case.

In Ohio, a federal appeals court last year upheld a judge's 1992 ruling throwing out a search warrant that had been used to confiscate more than 50 weapons in the home of a convicted felon.

U.S. District Judge John M. Manos ruled the affidavit submitted by agent Stephen Wells was wrought with "serious omissions and misrepresentations and stale information" and that a key paragraph was "highly unreliable and defies credulity."

"In his zeal to secure a search warrant, Agent Wells displayed a reckless disregard for the truth as evidenced by his affidavit and changed testimony," Manos concluded.

The agency appealed, but an appeals court in 1996 ruled Manos' tough-worded decision was "supported by the record." Wells denied wrongdoing and has since retired.

Tax cut won't end schools issue

What Texas legislators came up with on the property tax issue — a proposed constitutional amendment to increase the homestead tax exemption — was not a solution to the way public schools are financed in Texas. It was, as noted by Rep. Paul Sadler, D-Henderson and chief sponsor of the plan, "an effective property tax cut for every homeowner in the state of Texas."

It was an attempt to placate taxpayers who thought they would see a change from the unfair property tax system now in use in Texas, a hedge in place of real change.

But as Sadler went on to note, "It's not a 60 percent cut in taxes, or changing the system as a whole, but it is a conservative measure within our existing revenue system."

It was a half-a-loaf approach to the matter of resolving the prickly problem of changing the property tax system, which necessarily means public schools in the state continue to be financed on the backs of a steadily decreasing pool of property taxpayers. That is unfair not only to taxpayers, but also to school districts that eventually will be caught in a cost crunch.

Gov. George W. Bush had proposed moving completely away from the property tax as a means of financing public education and early polls had shown strong support for such a change. But once Bush's proposal was in the Legislature — and fair game for special-interest groups and legislators who envisioned the political clout to be parlayed through the tax code, it turned into a political football.

So much so that after the House had approved a reasonable bill and the Senate had passed a measure that undercut the House's optimism, the two sides could not hammer out an acceptable bill in the conference committee.

Then came Sadler's proposal which is to let the voters decide on whether to increase school property tax exemptions for homeowners by $10,000 a year. That would cut tax bills by about $140 a year. So what taxpayer in his right mind is not going to favor that move? But is that all?

While that tax cut is a step in the right direction, it is a pale excuse for a solution to a property tax problem that is bound to come around to trouble Texas taxpayers, school districts, and legislators again.

WILLIAM SAFIRE

Some debate over what to call Old Testament

What do you call the Old Testament? I noted that "the Old Testament Job was a Gentile" in a column recently and got a letter from Michael Berenbaum, who teaches theology at Georgetown.

Safire

"To Jews, there is no such thing as the Old Testament. Job is a book and a character in the Hebrew Bibl ," he observes, arguing that "Old Testament is a Christian term that presumes that the Old has been supplemented by the New Testament," a view that Judaism does not hold.

I ran that past Professor David Marcus of the Jewish Theological Seminary in New York. "I use Old Testament," he said cheerily, "but many people have a problem with that because old assumes new. Strict Jewish people use Hebrew Bible; however, they do say New Testament."

Next source: the legendary Professor Jacob Neusner of the University of Florida, author of a shelf of books, including "The Price of Excellence" (Continuum). "Nothing is incorrect about your correspondent's complaint, but the use of Hebrew Bible in the context of religious studies is not a whole lot better than saying Old Testament. Here's the reason: Parts of the Scriptures of Judaism are written in Aramaic, so if you say Hebrew Bible, you're leaving out that part."

Hmm. I'd be willing to write "the Hebrew Bible, plus parts of Daniel, Ezra, Jeremiah, and the others that were written in Aramaic," but others might find that formulation taking a lot of space.

Professor Michael O'Connor of the Union Theological Seminary in New York recognizes the "prejudicial" problem in the 14th-century term Old Testament and notes that Roman Catholicism accepts as canonical more Old Testament books than do the Jewish and Protestant faiths. "In the next generation," he predicts, "Christians will probably more often refer to the First Testament, a term coined in the early '80s by James Sanders at Claremont."

Checked with Sanders at the Claremont School of Theology in Claremont, Calif. "I cannot use the term Hebrew Bible," he explains, "because the Jewish canon is arranged in an entirely different way from the First Testament Scriptures in Christian religions." The books of the prophets, which come in the middle of Judaism's Scripture, were placed at the end of what Christians call the Old Testament because they predict the coming of a messiah and make a natural transition to the New.

The Rev. Bernard Lee of Loyola University in New Orleans agrees: "For Catholics, the Old Testament contains additional books ordered differently than in the Jewish canon. I like to call the Old Testament and the New Testament the Early Scriptures and the Late Scriptures because that seems the least ideological approach."

"Face it," responds Professor Mary Boys at the Union Theological Seminary, " 'First and Second Testaments' is short on poetics. And when we offered a course at Boston University titled the Hebrew Bible, many students said they did not sign up for it because they did not know Hebrew. On the surface, it seems a simple question — What do you call the Old Testament? — but it's truly complex."

I will leave the religious complexities to the theologians and deal with the simple problem as a card-carrying prescriptive usagist. Evidently Old Testament, as a proper noun, is beginning to offend some Jews, and we see sensitive Christians becoming aware of it. In the new Dictionary of Global Culture, edited by Kwame Anthony Appiah and Henry Louis Gates Jr., we read, "The Bible is divided into two parts, the Hebrew Scriptures and the New Testament."

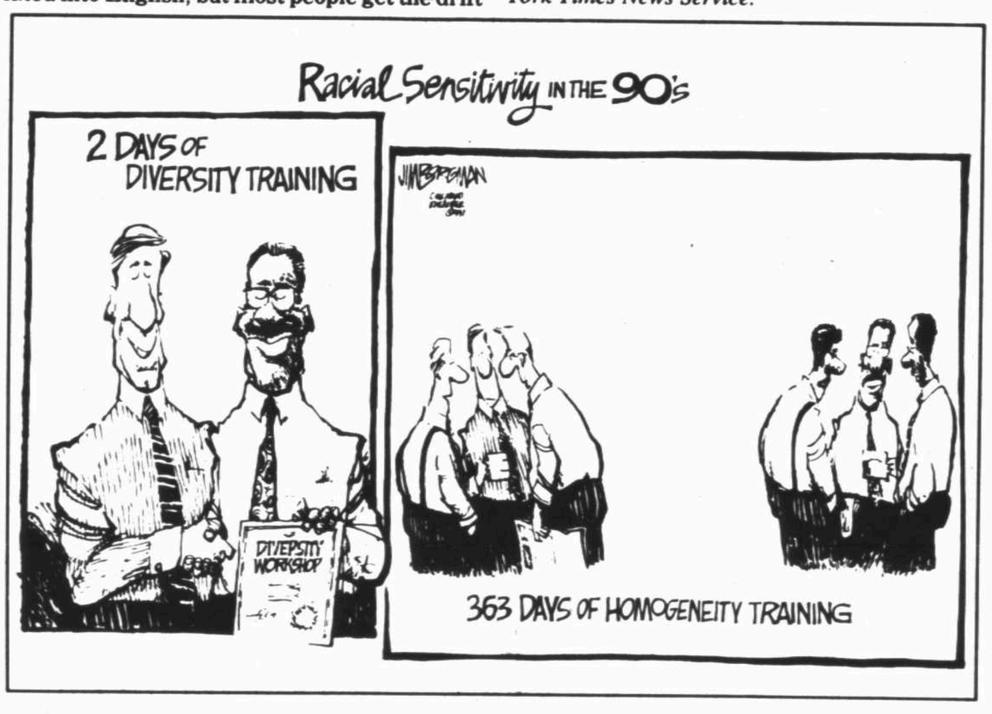

The terms Hebrew Bible and Hebrew Scriptures may be knocked as suggesting they do not include Aramaic books or may not be translated into English, but most people get the drift that they are "the Bible of the Hebrews." And nobody objects to New Testament.

Therefore, in my mental stylebook, I'll go along with others who use Hebrew Bible; however, because I am a traditionalist and do not find objections from co-religionists upsetting, my personal preference remains Old Testament. (Many strongly traditional Jews reject both Bible and Testament and choose Tanakh, an acronym for the three divisions of the sacred writings: Torah, the five books of Moses; Nebiim, the books of the prophets; and Ketubim, the other sacred writings.)

But the handwriting is on the wall (Daniel 5: 25-28). I foresee, in this eagerly inoffensive age, a widening use of Hebrew Bible and New Testament as the description of Scripture in the future, with Christians continuing to use the Bible to cover the Good Book (or Books, as the case may be).

If Hebrew Bible, its usage now spreading among theologians and other academics of many faiths, does ultimately replace Old Testament for the proper noun, I hope the old Middle English phrase lingers on as an acceptable compound adjective, as in "the Old Testament Job" or "the Old Testament prophets," with the two words meaning "fearlessly uncompromising in matters of justice and morality."

CHARLEY REESE

Love of Davis and Howell endured fortune's rise and fall

June 3 is the birthday of a great man. And how, you may ask, does one define a great man? Well, let's ask the Chinese sage, Mencius, to do it for us.

Reese

"To dwell in the wide house of the world; to stand in true attitude therein; to walk in the wide path of men; in success, to share one's principles with the people; in failure, to live them out alone; to be incorruptible by riches or honors, unchangeable by poverty, unmoved by perils or power — these I call the qualities of a great man."

That definition fits exactly Jefferson Davis, president of the Confederate States of America, who was born in Kentucky on June 3, 1808. Hudson Strode, Davis' modern biographer, wrote this about him:

"He was a simple man, ruled by common sense and a good heart, with a penetrating mind, unfaltering courage, incorruptible integrity, widespread generosity and a defined religious faith ... he possessed a rare gift for inspiring friendship, and his friends loved him with an ardor uncommon among men ... several bishops who knew him long and well unabashedly wrote to him not only of their love but of their veneration."

If you're looking for a gift for a son or daughter, I highly recommend the book "Jefferson Davis: Private Letters, 1823-1889," selected and edited by Strode. It's available in paperback, published by Da Capo Press.

War and politics are only incidental in this book because these are letters written by Davis and his second wife, Varina, to each other, to their children, relatives and friends. But the book reads like a novel, both a love story and an adventure story.

In pre-telephone days, the letter was the main means of communication, and these, like other 19th century letters, are full of news and anecdotes. Together they provide an intimate portrait of two remarkable people.

Davis and Varina Howell — on the surface so different — loved each other and had a marriage that endured an incredible rise and fall of fortune. Davis, a graduate of West Point, was a hero of the Mexican War. He was also the U.S. Secretary of War, a U.S. senator and, finally, president of the CSA. Then he was impoverished and imprisoned for two years, the object of tremendous hate and vilification. He and Varina suffered the deaths of four sons and the loss of others dear to them.

Varina, beautiful, high-strung, emotional and with a love for society, emerges from these letters as one of the most remarkable women you will ever likely meet. She could be as fierce as a tigress in defense of her family. In defeat and at the mercy of an occupying army, Varina gave a Yankee general such a fierce tongue-lashing that he stepped back in astonishment. She adored Davis until the end of her life.

Varina, gifted with great insight, said that no matter how difficult she was, Davis never quarreled with her, never criticized her and never allowed anyone else to criticize her. But, she says, he was the strong one in the family and called the shots. Their affectionate letters show a passionate love. She calls him "Banny," and he often calls her "Waafe," an endearment for wife.

The letters are full of private insights into famous people, as nothing written was intended for publication. Davis counted among his admirers Joseph Pulitzer, for whom the Pulitzer Prize is named.

My favorite anecdote is about Robert Brown, a former slave, who remained a close friend of the Davis family until his death. Trapped in Savannah, Ga., with her husband in prison and unable to leave the United States, Varina sent the children to Canada by ship and entrusted them to Brown's care.

On the ship, an abolitionist passenger began to speak in an insulting manner about Davis in front of his children. Brown walked over and said, "Do you consider me your equal?"

"Of course," said the abolitionist.

"Then take this from an equal," said Brown and knocked him flat.

No one could ask for better role models than Jefferson and Varina Davis.

Supreme Court blew whistle on Clinton

No doubt many of our readers passed part of the Memorial Day weekend watching the playoffs for the Stanley Cup or National Basketball Association. They play rough all right, but it's not the law of the jungle; every now and then a referee blows the whistle to restore civilization. Yesterday a referee finally intervened in our increasingly free-for-all domestic politics: The Supreme Court blew the whistle on the Clinton Presidency.

In a unanimous 9-0 slam dunk, the Court ruled that Paula Jones's sexual-harassment suit may proceed against Bill Clinton while he is still in office. Writing for the Court, Justice John Paul Stevens said: "The high respect that is owned to the office of the chief executive, though not justifying a rule of categorical immunity, is a matter that should inform the conduct of the whole proceeding."

We're grateful to the Court for that useful phrase — categorical immunity. It has been our impression these past four years that "categorial immunity" was the Clinton Administration's philosophy of life.

The Jones case and yesterday's (May 27) decision are of course about the status of the President's unofficial conduct. ... This to be sure is an explosive matter for Mr. Clinton, and for some days now the issue will be whether this one event, the Paula Jones case, will do lasting political damage to the President.

Visit to cheaper-by-dozen gallows seemed eerily appropriate

FORT SMITH, Ark. — This gallows could hang 12 men at once, snap a dozen chafing necks as fast as the executioner made his way down the deck, from rope to rope.

It's a reproduction gallows, actually; the real thing was built in 1886 on this same spot near the Oklahoma border on the banks of the Arkansas River. And the most men ever hung at one time was six. But there was plenty more room if needed.

I walked down to old Fort Smith and its facsimile gallows after reading the morning newspaper. It was just a short stroll from the downtown Holiday Inn with cascading fountain and plant-strewn atrium to the red brick fort with austere lines and grim gallows.

My destination seemed eerily appropriate. I wanted to see this cheaper-by- the-dozen gallows. On just one page I had read about 173 murders, 13 rapes and all manner of thoroughly modern violence. "Two New Jersey teens lure a couple of hapless pizza deliverymen to an abandoned house and kill them with a spray of bullets. Six young Kentuckians are charged in the senseless shooting of a Knoxville family. Timothy McVeigh is on trial in the 1995 deaths of 168. And a former Army drill sergeant is accused of 13 rapes."

I put the paper down and started walking.

"At the present there seems to be a criminal wave sweeping over the country the likes of which I have not seen before. It is due to the laxity of the courts."

That quote might have come from the morning edition, too. But it did not.

Judge Isaac C. Parker said that at some point during his 21-year tenure as judge of the Federal Court for the Western District of Arkansas. From 1875 to 1896 Parker was charged with bringing order to Indian territory. Tribal courts took care of Indian crimes, but — before Judge Parker — plenty of desperate white criminals sought refuge in the judicial no-man's land.

Then came Judge Parker, who quickly became known as "Hanging Judge Parker." During his 21 years at Fort Smith, Parker heard more than 13,000 cases, 12,000 of them criminal in nature. Of those, 344 involved rape or murder. Some 160 men were sentenced to hang. Only 79 were ever hung. The rest languished in a Fort Smith basement jail that inmates called "Hell on the Border."

"I never hung a man; the law did," Parker often said.

History says Parker improved things for the Indians; he was determined that they not be "set upon by ruffians operating outside the law." He was fair and honest.

But victories were hard-won. More than 100 of Parker's 1,000 deputies were killed over the two decades. (A lot of the deputies were rough customers themselves. Before they became known as the notorious Dalton Gang, two of the Dalton brothers rode as Parker deputies.)

Anyone can do the arithmetic. Only 79 bad guys were ever hanged, and 100 good guys died getting them to that 12-holer gallows.

One ironic note: Hanging Judge Parker thought they ought to abolish capital punishment. It's the "certainty, not the severity" of punishment that deters crime, Parker said. The veteran crime-fighter was convinced of that much.

Modern statistics have borne out what Parker sensed. There's no proof that capital punishment deters crime. But an assured, prolonged stay in a Hell on the Border-type jail might be another story.

A National Park Service tape at the gallows tells about the holiday atmosphere that prevailed on execution day. A hanging always drew a crowd. People brought picnic lunches and visited with their neighbors.

Then, just before the doomed would die, a hush fell over the people. You could hear the flag of Fort Smith flapping in the breeze.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Tuesday, June 3, the 154th day of 1997. There are 211 days left in the year.

Today's Highlight in History:

On June 3, 1963, Pope John XXIII died at the age of 81, ending a papacy marked by innovative reforms in the Roman Catholic Church. He was succeeded by Pope Paul VI.

On this date:

In 1621, the Dutch West India Company received a charter for New Netherlands, now known as New York.

In 1808, Jefferson Davis — the first and only president of the Confederacy — was born in Christian County, Ky.

In 1888, the poem "Casey at the Bat," by Ernest Lawrence Thayer, was first published, in the San Francisco Daily Examiner.

In 1937, the Duke of Windsor, who had abdicated the British throne, married Wallis Warfield Simpson in Monts, France.

In 1948, the 200-inch reflecting telescope at the Palomar Mountain Observatory in California was dedicated.

In 1965, astronaut Edward White became the first American to "walk" in space, during the flight of Gemini 4.

In 1981, Pope John Paul II left a Rome hospital and returned to the Vatican three weeks after the attempt on his life.

In 1983, Gordon Kahl, a militant tax protester wanted in the slayings of two U.S. marshals in North Dakota, was killed in a gun battle with law enforcement officials near Smithville, Ark.

Rezulin: a new pill that could improve the lives of more than a million diabetics.

This is Rezulin (troglitazone). A once-a-day pill that provides a breakthrough treatment option for people with Type II diabetes poorly controlled on insulin.

Rezulin can help some people who find that insulin injections do not adequately control their blood sugar levels. That's because Rezulin may actually help the body better use insulin – including the insulin it already manufactures.

So, with Rezulin, some diabetics can better control their blood sugar while reducing the dose or number of daily insulin injections. Others may be able to eliminate their injections completely.

Rezulin should not be used in patients with Type I diabetes. It is important to adhere to any diet, exercise, and/or weight loss instructions provided by your doctor and to have your blood sugar regularly tested.

As with any drug, be sure to tell your doctor or healthcare professional about any other medication(s) you may be taking.

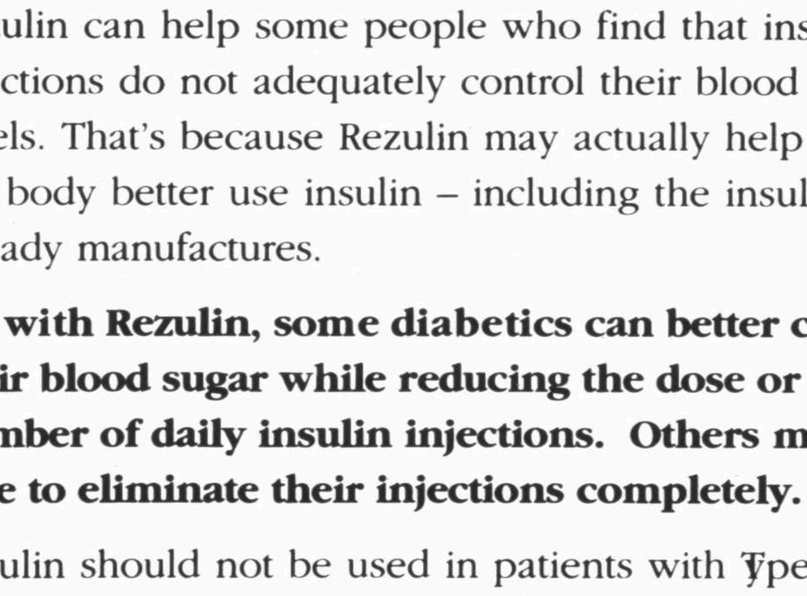

Your doctor or healthcare professional can tell you how Rezulin (troglitazone) 200 and 400 mg tablets work, why they work, and if you are a candidate for this remarkable new treatment.

Please see important additional information on next page.

In medical studies, side effects of Rezulin treatment occurred about as often as they did with placebo (a tablet containing no medication). The most common side effects reported by patients in those studies were infection (22% placebo vs. 18% Rezulin), headache (11% placebo vs. 11% Rezulin), and pain (14% placebo vs. 10% Rezulin). If you are a premenopausal woman who is not ovulating, you should discuss Rezulin therapy with your doctor. Rezulin treatment may result in resumption of ovulation, thus putting you at risk for pregnancy.

If you have Type II diabetes and are poorly controlled on insulin, ask your doctor or healthcare professional about Rezulin.

NATION IN BRIEF

■ Water slide collapses, injures 20

CONCORD, Calif. — An amusement park water slide collapsed Monday after a group of teen-agers on a graduation outing ignored a lifeguard's warning and went down together, witnesses said.

At least 20 people were injured, 10 critically. Some fell 75 feet.

Patrons at Water World U.S.A. in Concord, a suburb north of San Francisco, said the teens ignored warnings and went down one of four Bonzai Tower rides. The four-story-high slide buckled, sending the teens flying.

The students were believed to be seniors from Napa High School visiting as part of graduation festivities.

The injured were taken to area hospitals by helicopter and ambulance, said Pat Pava, a spokeswoman for the Contra Costa County Office of Emergency Services.

■ Dylan released from hospital

LOS ANGELES — Bob Dylan was released from a hospital over the weekend and is expected to make a full recovery from a potentially fatal lung infection, his longtime spokesman and record company said Monday.

Neither Elliott Mintz nor Columbia Records have disclosed what hospital the 56-year-old singer entered on May 25 after experiencing chest pains.

They have said he was treated for pericarditis, an inflammation of the sac that surrounds the heart, which was brought on by histoplasmosis, a fungal infection of the lung.

Doctors did not know the infection's origin but believed his condition was made more severe by a delay in the diagnosis.

Both Mintz and Columbia said Monday that doctors are "confident that he will make a full recovery in four to six weeks."

They declined to say what day Dylan was released or where he was recuperating.

Columbia, in a statement, quoted Dylan as saying: "I'm just glad to be feeling better. I really thought I'd be seeing Elvis soon."

Dylan canceled a European tour due to open yesterday in Cork, Ireland, but plans to fulfill a U.S. concert schedule after his recuperation.

Gore announces tax initiatives for small businesses

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Clinton administration is easing tax-filing requirements for small businesses and helping them compete for government contracts and develop their own pension plans.

Calling small businesses "the backbone of America," Vice President Al Gore announced the initiatives Monday in conjunction with the 34th annual Small Business Week.

Gore announced that the Internal Revenue Service will provide a six-month extension — until Dec. 31 — during which small businesses will not have to pay penalties for failing to file their payroll taxes through the Electronic Federal Payroll System.

"Many of these business are still learning about making electronic payments," Gore said. "And today's announcement will give them more time to become comfortable with the new system."

In addition, Gore announced a pilot on-line procurement service to help small businesses — especially those owned by women and minorities — market their products on the Internet and increase their share of government and private-sector contracts.

"This is crucial for women entrepreneurs because women own 40 percent of American small business, yet receive just 2 percent of federal prime contracts," Gore said.

The service, known as PRO-Net, can be reached through the Small Business Administration home page at www.sba.gov.

Gore also outlined an informational campaign to help businesses develop pension plans for the 32 million workers in small business who currently lack retirement benefits.

The program includes three free publications describing simple pension options. Business can get the booklets by calling 1-800-998-7542.

David J. Giuliani, president of Optiva Corp., of Bellevue, Wash., who was honored as the Small Business Person of the Year, said the initiatives should be a big help to the nation's entrepreneurs.

"I thought that they were pretty on point," said Giuliani, "I thought that the improvement in the 401(k)s will be very helpful to small businesses."

new ONCE-DAILY REZULIN™ TROGLITAZONE 200, 400 MG TABLETS

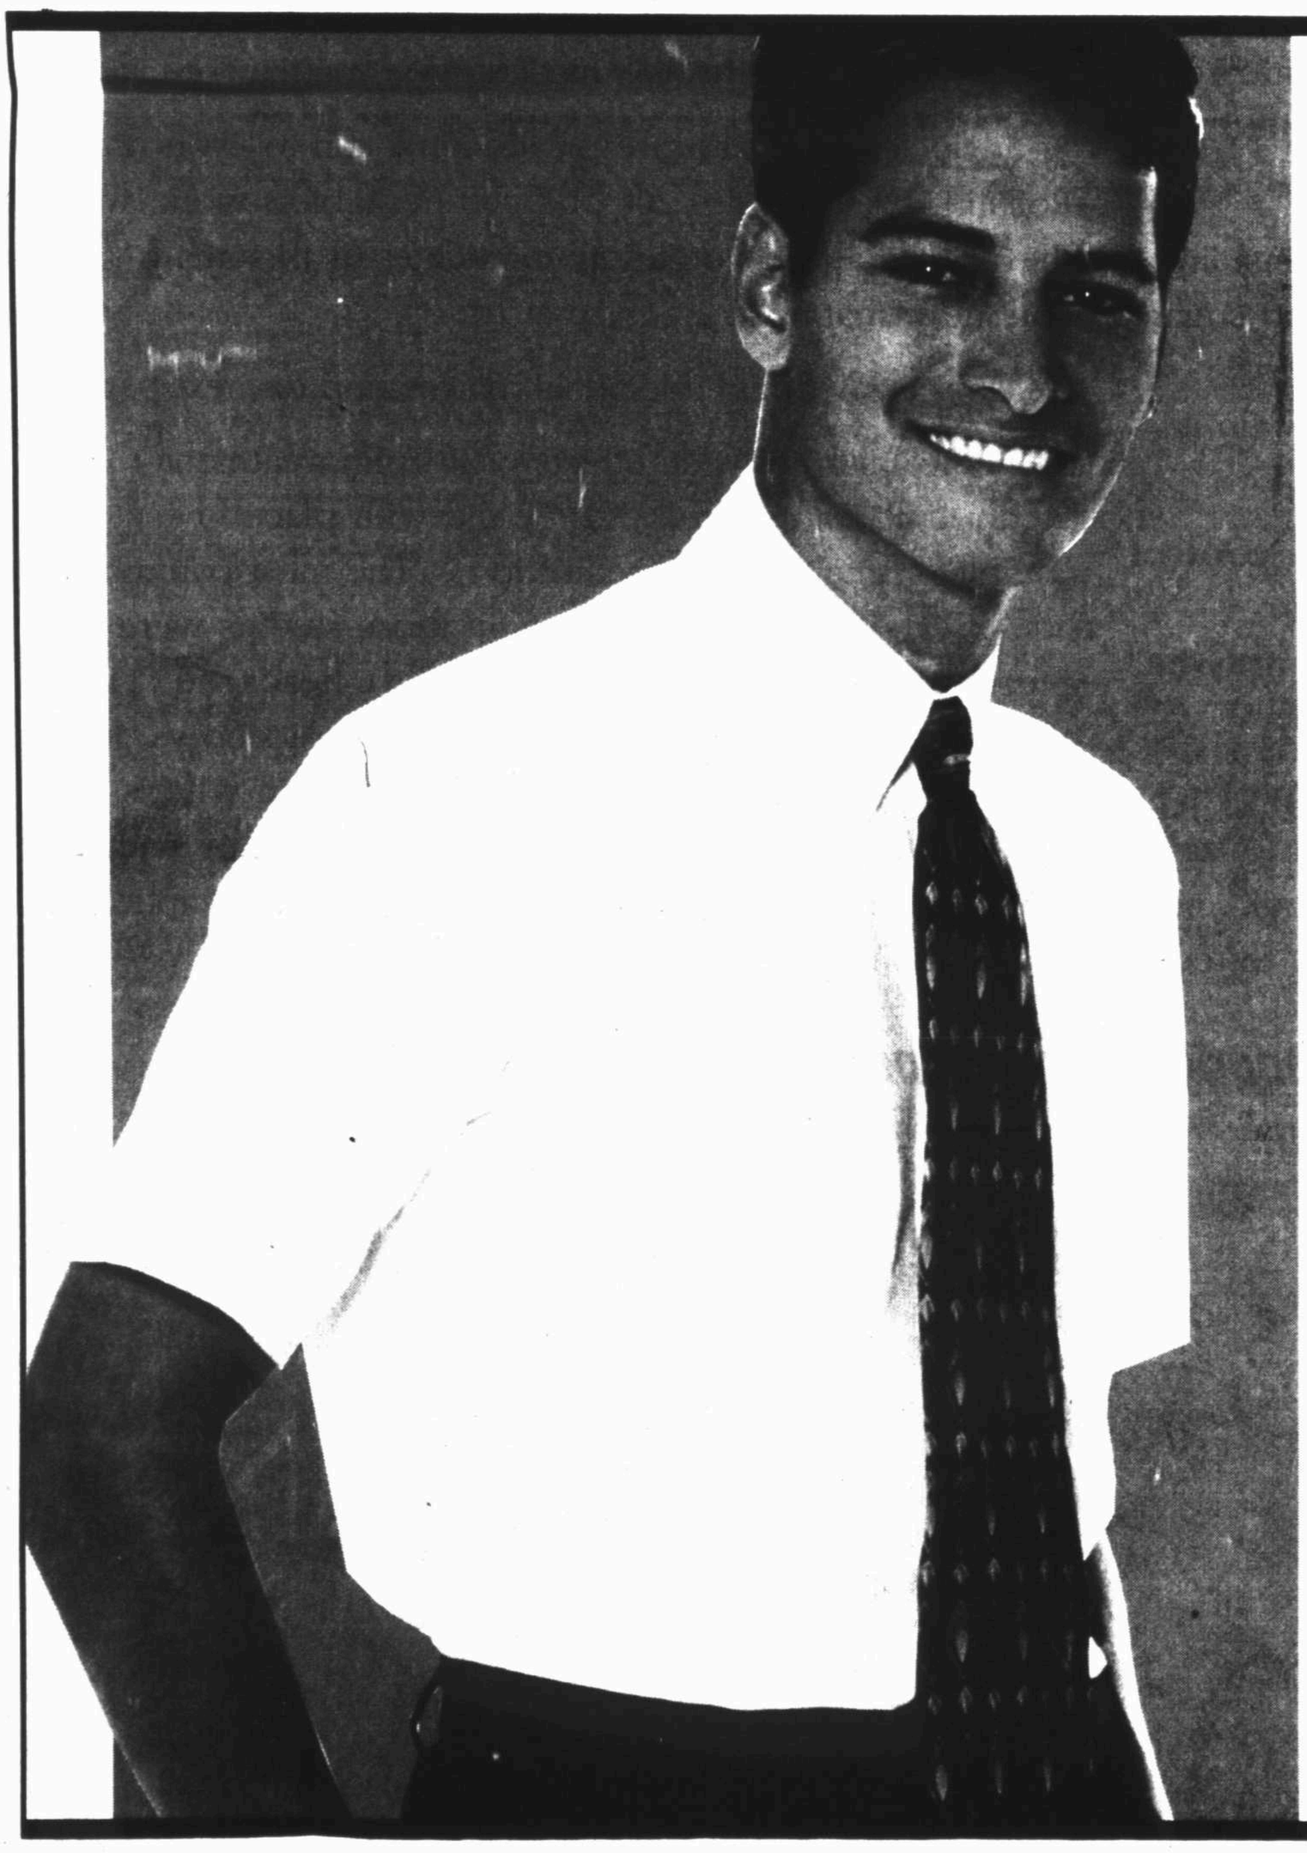

UNLOCKS INSULIN RESISTANCE

BRIEF SUMMARY
Consult Package Insert for full Prescribing Information.
INDICATIONS AND USAGE
Rezulin is indicated for use in patients with type II diabetes currently on insulin therapy whose hyperglycemia is inadequately controlled (HbA_{1c} >8.5%) despite insulin therapy of over 30 units per day given as multiple injections.
Management of type II diabetes should include diet control. Caloric restriction, weight loss, and exercise are essential for the proper treatment of the diabetic patient. This is important not only in the primary treatment of type II diabetes, but in maintaining the efficacy of drug therapy. Prior to initiation of Rezulin therapy, secondary causes of poor glycemic control, eg, infection or poor injection technique, should be investigated and treated.
CONTRAINDICATIONS
Rezulin is contraindicated in patients with known hypersensitivity or allergy to Rezulin or any of its components.
PRECAUTIONS
General
Because of its mechanism of action, Rezulin is active only in the presence of insulin. Therefore, Rezulin should not be used in type I diabetes or for the treatment of diabetic keto-acidosis.
Hepatic: During all clinical studies in North America (N=2510 patients), a total of 20 Rezulin-treated patients were withdrawn from treatment because of liver function test abnormalities. Two of the 20 patients developed reversible jaundice. Both had liver biopsies which were consistent with an idiosyncratic drug reaction [see ADVERSE REACTIONS, Laboratory Abnormalities].
Hypoglycemia: Patients receiving Rezulin in combination with insulin may be at risk for hypoglycemia and a reduction in the dose of insulin may be necessary. Hypoglycemia has not been observed during the administration of Rezulin as monotherapy and would not be expected based on the mechanism of action.
Ovulation: In premenopausal anovulatory patients with insulin resistance, Rezulin treatment may result in resumption of ovulation. These patients may be at risk for pregnancy.
Hematologic: Across all clinical studies, hemoglobin declined by 3 to 4% in troglitazone-treated patients compared with 1 to 2% in those treated with placebo. White blood cell counts also declined slightly in troglitazone-treated patients compared to those treated with placebo. These changes occurred within the first four to eight weeks of therapy. Levels stabilized and remained unchanged for up to two years of continuing therapy. These changes may be due to the dilutional effects of increased plasma volume and have not been associated with any significant hematologic clinical effects (See ADVERSE REACTIONS, Laboratory Abnormalities).
Information for Patients
Rezulin should be taken with meals. If the dose is missed at the usual meal, it may be taken at the next meal. If the dose is missed on one day, the dose should not be doubled the following day.
It is important to adhere to dietary instructions and to regularly have blood glucose and glycosylated hemoglobin tested. During periods of stress such as fever, trauma, infection, or surgery, insulin requirements may change and patients should seek the advice of their physician.
When using combination therapy with insulin, the risks of hypoglycemia, its symptoms and treatment, and conditions that predispose to its development should be explained to patients and their family members.
Drug Interactions
Cholestyramine: Concomitant administration of cholestyramine with Rezulin reduces the absorption of troglitazone by approximately 70%; thus, coadministration of cholestyramine and Rezulin is not recommended.
Acetaminophen: Coadministration of acetaminophen and Rezulin does not alter the pharmacokinetics of either drug.
Warfarin: Rezulin has no clinically significant effect on prothrombin time when administered to patients receiving chronic warfarin therapy.
Sulfonylureas: Coadministration of Rezulin with glyburide does not appear to alter troglitazone or glyburide pharmacokinetics, but may further decrease fasting plasma glucose. There are insufficient data on the use of Rezulin with sulfonylureas to establish the efficacy of this combination.
Metformin: No information is available on the use of Rezulin with metformin.
Ethanol: A single administration of a moderate amount of alcohol did not increase the risk of acute hypoglycemia in Rezulin-treated patients with type II diabetes mellitus.
Terfenadine: Coadministration of Rezulin with terfenadine decreases plasma concentrations of terfenadine and its active metabolite by 50 to 70% and may reduce the effectiveness of terfenadine.
Oral Contraceptives: Administration of Rezulin with an oral contraceptive containing ethinyl estradiol and norethindrone reduced the plasma concentrations of both by approximately 30%. These changes could result in loss of contraception.
The above interactions with terfenadine and oral contraceptives suggest that troglitazone may induce drug metabolism by CYP3A4. These findings should be considered when prescribing other CYP3A4 substrates such as cyclosporine, tacrolimus and some HMG-CoA reductase inhibitors.
Carcinogenesis, Mutagenesis, Impairment of Fertility
Troglitazone was administered daily for 104 weeks to male rats at 100, 400, or 800 mg/kg and to female rats at 25, 50, or 200 mg/kg. Maximum plasma troglitazone AUC values based on parent compound represent exposures 12- and 47-fold higher for male and female rats, respectively, than human exposure of 400 mg daily. Troglitazone was not carcinogenic in male rats at any dose tested. In female rats, there was a statistically significant increase in sarcomatous tumors at the high dose (47-fold greater than estimated human exposure of parent compound). However, these findings are of unknown clinical relevance as this dose was associated with excessive mortality and is considered to have surpassed the maximum tolerated dose. No tumors of any type were increased in rats at 25 and 50 mg/kg at exposures of 5- to 14-fold higher than in humans based on AUC of parent compound. In a 104-week study in mice given 50, 400, or 800 mg/kg, incidence of hemangiosarcoma was increased in females at 400 mg/kg and in both sexes at 800 mg/kg; incidence of hepatocellular carcinoma was increased in females at 800 mg/kg. The lowest dose with increased tumor incidence (400 mg/kg) was associated with AUC values of parent compound that were at least 16-fold higher than the human exposure. No tumors of any type were increased in mice at 50 mg/kg at exposures 2- to 4-fold higher than in humans based on AUC of parent compound.
Troglitazone was neither mutagenic in bacteria nor clastogenic in bone marrow of mice. Equivocal increases in chromosome aberrations were observed in an in vitro Chinese hamster lung cell assay. In mouse lymphoma cell gene mutations assays, results were equivocal when conducted with a microtiter technique and negative with an agar plate technique. A liver unscheduled DNA synthesis assay in rats was negative.
No adverse effects on fertility or reproduction were observed in male or female rats given 40, 200, or 1000 mg/kg daily prior to and throughout mating and gestation. AUC at these doses was estimated to be 2- to 8-fold higher than the human exposure.
Pregnancy
Pregnancy Category B. Troglitazone was not teratogenic in rats given up to 2000 mg/kg or rabbits given up to 1000 mg/kg during organogenesis. Compared to human exposure of 400 mg daily, estimated exposures based on AUC at these doses were up to 8-fold higher in rats and up to 6-fold higher in rabbits. Body weights of fetuses and offspring of rats given 2000 mg/kg during gestation were decreased. Delayed postnatal development, attributed to decreased body weight, was observed in offspring of rats given 40, 200, or 1000 mg/kg during late gestation and lactation periods; no effects were observed in offspring of rats given 10 or 20 mg/kg.
There are no adequate and well-controlled studies in pregnant women. Rezulin should not be used during pregnancy unless the potential benefit justifies the potential risk to the fetus.
Because current information strongly suggests that abnormal blood glucose levels during pregnancy are associated with a higher incidence of congenital anomalies as well as increased neonatal morbidity and mortality, most experts recommend that insulin be used during pregnancy to maintain blood glucose levels as close to normal as possible.
Nursing Mothers
It is not known whether troglitazone is secreted in human milk. Troglitazone is secreted in the milk of lactating rats. Because many drugs are excreted in human milk, Rezulin should not be administered to a breast-feeding woman.
Pediatric Use
Safety and effectiveness in pediatric patients have not been established.
Geriatric Use
Twenty-two percent of patients in clinical trials of Rezulin were 65 and over. No differences in effectiveness and safety were observed between these patients and younger patients.
Use in Patients With Heart Failure
Heart enlargement without microscopic changes has been observed in rodents at exposures exceeding 14 times the AUC of the 400 mg human dose. Serial echocardiographic evaluations in monkeys treated chronically at maximum achievable exposures (3-5 times the human exposure at the 400 mg dose) did not reveal changes in heart size or function. In a 2-year echocardiographic clinical study using 600 to 800 mg/day of Rezulin in patients with type II diabetes, no increase in left ventricular mass or decrease in cardiac output was observed. The methodology employed was able to detect a change of about 10% or more in left ventricular mass.
In animal studies, troglitazone treatment was associated with increases of 6% to 15% in plasma volume. In a study of 24 normal volunteers, an increase in plasma volume of 6% to 8% compared to placebo was observed following 6 weeks of troglitazone treatment.
No increased incidence of adverse events potentially related to volume expansion (eg, congestive heart failure) have been observed during controlled clinical trials. However, patients with New York Heart Association (NYHA) Class III and IV cardiac status were not studied during clinical trials. Therefore, caution is advised during the administration of Rezulin to patients with NYHA Class III or IV cardiac status.
ADVERSE REACTIONS
In general, Rezulin is well-tolerated. Two patients in the clinical studies developed reversible jaundice with findings on liver biopsy consistent with idiosyncratic drug reaction (See PRECAUTIONS, General).
The overall incidence and types of adverse reactions reported in placebo-controlled clinical trials for Rezulin-treated patients and placebo-treated patients are shown in Table 1. In patients treated with Rezulin in glyburide-controlled studies (N=560) or uncontrolled studies (N=510), the safety profile of Rezulin appeared similar to that displayed in Table 1. The incidence of withdrawals during clinical trials was similar for patients treated with placebo or Rezulin (4%).
TABLE 1. North American Placebo-Controlled Clinical Studies: Adverse Events Reported at a Frequency ≥ 5% of Rezulin-Treated Patients (% of Patients)

	Placebo N = 492	Rezulin N = 1450
Infection	22	18
Headache	11	11
Pain	14	10
Accidental Injury	6	8
Asthenia	5	6
Dizziness	5	6
Back Pain	4	6
Nausea	4	6
Rhinitis	7	5
Diarrhea	6	5
Urinary Tract Infection	6	5
Peripheral Edema	5	5
Pharyngitis	4	5

Types of adverse events seen when Rezulin was used concomitantly with insulin (N=543) were similar to those during Rezulin monotherapy (N=1731), although hypoglycemia occurred on insulin combination therapy (see PRECAUTIONS).
Laboratory Abnormalities
Hematologic: Small decreases in hemoglobin, hematocrit, and neutrophil counts (within the normal range) were more common in Rezulin-treated than placebo-treated patients and may be related to increased plasma volume observed with Rezulin treatment. Hemoglobin decreases to below the normal range occurred in 5% of Rezulin-treated and 4% of placebo-treated patients.
Lipids: Small changes in serum lipids have been observed (see CLINICAL PHARMACOLOGY, Pharmacodynamics and Clinical Effects in package insert for full prescribing information).
Serum Transaminase Levels: During controlled clinical trials, 2.2% of Rezulin-treated patients had reversible elevations in AST or ALT greater than 3 times the upper limit of normal, compared with 0.6% of patients receiving placebo. Hyperbilirubinemia (>1.25 upper limit of normal) was found in 0.7% of Rezulin-treated patients compared with 1.7% of patients receiving placebo. In the population of patients treated with Rezulin, mean and median values for bilirubin, AST, ALT, alkaline phosphatase, and GGT were decreased at the final visit compared with baseline, while values for LDH were increased slightly (see PRECAUTIONS, General, Hepatic).
DOSAGE AND ADMINISTRATION
The current insulin dose should be continued upon initiation of Rezulin therapy. Rezulin therapy should be initiated at 200 mg once daily in patients on insulin therapy. For patients not responding adequately, the dose of Rezulin should be increased after approximately 2 to 4 weeks. The usual dose of Rezulin is 400 mg once daily. The maximum recommended daily dose is 600 mg. It is recommended that the insulin dose be decreased by 10% to 25% when fasting plasma glucose concentrations decrease to less than 120 mg/dL in patients receiving concomitant insulin and Rezulin. Further adjustments should be individualized based on glucose-lowering response. Rezulin should be taken with a meal.
Patients With Renal Insufficiency
Dose adjustment in patients with renal insufficiency is not required (see CLINICAL PHARMACOLOGY, Pharmacokinetics and Drug Metabolism in package insert for full prescribing information).
Patients With Hepatic Impairment
Rezulin should be used with caution in patients with hepatic disease (see CLINICAL PHARMACOLOGY, Pharmacokinetics and Drug Metabolism in package insert for full prescribing information).
Caution: Federal Law prohibits dispensing without prescription.

Near-perfect property tax strategy backfired

AUSTIN (AP) — In boxing terms, Gov. George W. Bush and lawmakers seemed to have a solid one-two combination to beat the rise of local school property taxes:

■ Pound hard on the tax rates to which property is subject.

■ Take a few shots at the rise of property values, seen by voters as the head of rising taxes.

It seemed like a perfect plan until Bush and lawmakers narrowly averted a knockout.

The problems packed a one-two punch, too.

■ Voters made clear they were more interested in seeing rising property values take a beating. Jargon in the tax-rate fight — including hold harmless, Tyler Pipe, M&O and I&S — barely kept officials awake and quickly glazed the eyes and attention of voters, whose support was needed to keep lawmakers in the ring.

■ Big business put its support behind the status quo after lawmakers shifted the biggest benefits of slashing property taxes to homeowners and renters.

In the end, the tax-cut push went down, and Bush barely salvaged a consolation prize.

Homestead property tax exemptions — the portion of a homes' value not subject to property taxes — were raised from a minimum of $5,000 a year to $15,000.

That's equal to a roughly $140 a-year tax cut, a benefit that's likely to be eaten by future growth in property tax rates.

Growth in property value appraisals was capped at 10 percent a year. Homeowners could delay, but not avoid, payments on tax hikes above 5 percent. The deferment, however, would cost homeowners 8 percent interest a year.

Both plans still face Bush's final approval and an OK from voters.

Bush and lawmakers have put the best face on what might best be called a technical knockout.

They say voters will appreciate the strong effort made and will enjoy the slight tax cut and the ability to defer sharp tax increases.

Others criticized the end results, saying the more than $1 billion being spent on the homestead exemption increase could be better used and calling the tax deferment a rouge.

Voters will judge the fight later this year.

Execution

HUNTSVILLE, Texas (AP) — An Oklahoma prison parolee was executed Monday evening for killing a North Texas police officer during a daylong crime spree almost a dozen years ago. Patrick Rogers, 33, was pronounced dead at 6:17 p.m., six minutes after a lethal dose of drugs began flowing into his arms. Rogers gave a defiant and rambling final statement in which he asked forgiveness and denounced the death penalty system.

"Give praise to Allah. I bow down to Allah, most merciful. I ask to seek his forgiveness," Rogers said. "If this is what they want to see, this is what they get. I bow down to no man. I bow down to Allah."

He also had a message for death row fellow inmates, calling a recent spate of Texas executions "madness."

Museum curator dedicated to job she loves doing

By Ed Todd
Staff Writer

Nancy Rankin McKinley is more than embedded in and absorbed by Midland County history. She is an integral player in West Texas history and heritage.

"You don't do things to be remembered," said the historian, who is on the eve of her 84th birthday. "You do things because you want to do something that has to be done."

The oldest child of the Porter and Julia Estes Rankin ranch family, Mrs. McKinley took early command of her life and circumstances.

"I was 'Madam Full Charge,' " she said, smiling gently.

And today as in years past, that leadership role has planted her firmly as a legend in Midland County history, as a collector of artifacts for the Midland County Historical Museum of which she is curator, as president of the Midland County Historical Society, and as chairwoman of the Midland County Historical Commission.

In its artifacts and archives, the Binie and Edna White relax on their home place, located north of Big Spring. The Whites are having better luck on their family farm this year than they had last.

Big Spring farmers expect crops, calves this year

By Johnnye Montgomery

BIG SPRING — Binie and Edna White live on the family farm just outside the Vincent community northeast of Big Spring where he grew up, and where he and his sister, Martha Kallus, raise cotton and cattle.

Yet White expresses some doubt whether he should be referred to as a farmer.

"I don't drive a tractor," he explains. "I have a couple who live on the farm and do that. And for 34 years I worked for an electric coop and lived in Tahoka. So I don't know that you could call me a real farmer. But I do drive a truck and haul cottonseed and diesel ... things like that."

White also endures the same vicissitudes as his tractor-driving neighbors.

Last year was a tough one. Because of the drought, he didn't make a cotton crop. And to make matters worse, there was the trouble with the bull.

"Martha and I run about 100 head of mother cows," he said, "so we usually have about 20 to 30 on pasture. We stagger the sales, keeping the heifers and selling old cows. The young heifers can manage on less food. We breed the heifers to a longhorn bull the first time because they have smaller calves, and they have less trouble calving. Then the next year, we'll breed them back to an angus bull."

But last year, amidst the drought, White watched for signs of incipient motherhood in his heifers and found none. Finally he had some of the cows pregnancy tested. They weren't. Then he loaded the bull up and took him into the veterinary clinic.

"I told the vet I thought maybe I had too many cows," he said, "but he told me that one heifer would have been too many for that bull."

So it was off to the sale barn with the old bull, and back to the farm with a new one ... young and underweight, but bright with promise.

Man resigns from Mobil amid allegations of discrimination

By Gary Shanks
Staff Writer

After 18 years of service, a Midland man has resigned from a local petroleum company, accusing officials there of singling him out for discrimination over race and a rare medical condition.

Abel Salazar has worked for Mobil Exploration & Producing U.S., Inc., but quit after he said local Mobil officials refused to allow him to operate a company vehicle because of his Tourette's Syndrome.

"I quit Mobil about a month ago because I could no longer work in an environment where I was being discriminated against," Salazar said.

He has already filed one discrimination suit against Mobil in federal court and is considering a second suit to cover the more recent allegations, he explained.

Salazar's condition manifests itself in repetitive arm and neck movements, but Salazar has been able to control and mask these movements so that many of his coworkers were not aware of the condition, he said.

Ironically, he was the topic of a recent Midland Reporter-Telegram feature, which chronicled his success and courage in dealing with such a stigmatizing and misunderstood disease as Tourette's Syndrome.

Salazar had informed his supervisors of the condition and explained that the medication he takes causes early-morning drowsiness, he said.

The circumstances surrounding Salazar's resignation began more than a year ago in early 1996. Salazar declined to comment on the original lawsuit, claiming direction from his attorney, but filings in the Midland federal court indicate that controversy erupted during Salazar's dealings with a female college student serving an internship at Mobil.

Salazar was supervising the student and at one point confronted her, saying she was bright but spent too much time on the Internet writing e-mail to friends and that she did not have a "passion for the business,"

Few things as awkward as barging into host's occupied bathroom

More rambling thoughts ...

■ Few things are as awkward as barging into an occupied bathroom when sharing the accommodations with near strangers for the weekend.

■ I mean, what does one say? "Oh, dear, forgive me. I didn't know you were in here. By the way, you could stand to lose a few inches around the middle."

■ Tell the truth now, did any of you ever send off for one of those Charles Atlus deals that would supposedly make you so strong that the bullies on the beach would quit kicking sand in your face?

■ Better yet, have any of you ever had a bully kick sand in your face?

■ When you stop and think about it, W.H. Auden made a very wise observation when he said, "No opera plot can be sensible, for in sensible situations people do not sing."

Ott

■ The same could be said about musicals in general. In real life, people simply do not suddenly break into a song of some kind.

■ Just a hunch: Some kind of deal will be struck before the Paula Jones civil suit against President Clinton makes it into a court of law.

■ Is being a lifeguard still considered the most prestigious summer job a kid can have?

■ Bad joke: "Lawyers are buried deep down because deep down they are good."

■ Sometimes it is important for those of us in West Texas to be reminded just how devastating a tornado really can be, though it is unfortunate our lesson has to come at the expense of others.

■ Did you know? It was on this date in 1989 that the Ayatollah Khomeini died.

■ Maybe it is because I've never been a big fan of dinosaurs, but I just can't get too excited about going to see Stephen Spielberg's latest blockbuster, "The Lost World."

■ One of the bad things about delaying an unpleasant task is that you spend those few extra days worrying about what already would be done had you gone ahead and done it in the first place ... or something like that.

■ Overheard: "Einstein must have found that 'i before e' stuff real baffling because he got it wrong twice in his name."

■ Some men, especially elderly ones, look great in overalls.

■ Others don't.

■ Anytime I spend time on an interstate highway it amazes me just how many trucks are crisscrossing this country on any given day.

■ Sometimes it seems like the good really do die young.

■ And today's final quote comes from Otto von Bismarck, who once said, "Laws are like sausages. It is better not to see them being made."

"If you don't know where you came from," Mrs. McKinley declared, "it's sort of like being blind or having no memory.

"It's important to know and to appreciate your heritage. If you don't remember the past and the tender moments of our heritage, there will be nothing left of ourselves to be remembered proudly."

Museum artifacts range from saddles, a blacksmith whet stone, horseshoes, barbed wire, branding irons, and typewriters...to old trunks, wash tubs and a washboard, Singer treadle sewing machine, ice box, square baby grand piano, cupboard, fiddle, trumpet, accordion, and the 1893 Midland Public School cornerstone.

Archives take in old newspaper clippings, bound volumes and business records, including an old Texas & Pacific Railway Company log book.

Aside from overseeing the museum, which is operated by volunteers from within the ranks of the Midland County Historical Society, Mrs. McKinley and the volunteers maintain the restored 1899 historic Z. Taylor Brown-Sarah Dorsey Medallion Home.

Events at the historic home focus on Midland's heritage. In June, the Brown-Dorsey Medallion Home will be site of two historical events: The "preaching-on-the-porch" and "dinner-on-the-ground" kickoff of the Midland Ranch Rodeo Heritage Week and the reenactment of "The Wedding of Sarah Brown Dorsey" in 1907 at the Brown-Dorsey Medallion Home at 213 N. Weatherford Ave.

The Ranch Rodeo's preaching/dinner kickoff event will be 11 a.m. to 2 p.m. this Sunday.

The wedding reenactment will be from 7:30 to 9 p.m. each Thursday, Friday, and Saturday from June 12 through 28.

The annual Ice Cream Crank-Off will be at Brown-Dorsey Medallion Home at 5 p.m. on Aug. 10.

Mrs. McKinley recalls her own West Texas ranching heritage.

Her mother, Julia Estes Rankin, "kind of held the family together," Mrs. McKinley recalled. There were six children in the Rankin family. "She was a great neighbor to all."

And her mother was a memorable cook. In particular, Mrs. McKinley longed for her mother's fried corn cakes. "I've never been able to master that," she said and figured that cooking her mother's style of corn cakes must be a "lost art. They were crusty outside and soft inside. But I haven't given up. I can make a pretty good hush puppy."

Mrs. McKinley spoke fondly of her father, rancher Porter Rankin. "We (children) always looked forward to the time when he came home from work, because he always brought us a little sack of candy."

The West Texas ranch town of Rankin bears the name of her rancher-grandfather, Finis Ewing (F.E.) Rankin, who ranched in Upton County.

As a community mover and shaker and patriot, Mrs. McKinley recalled the World War II years when her late husband, John P. McKinley, served on the battlefront abroad, and Mrs. McKinley worked in the petroleum industry that was so vital to national defense.

"We all did all of those things we were urged to do to help in the war effort."

And of her various community roles both past and present, Mrs. McKinley mused: "If you really like what you are doing, it's not really work."

And for "Madam Full Charge," work is joy.

FARM: Prospects looking up

(From 1B)

"When Martha saw him for the first time, she said 'That's the wimpiest looking bull I ever saw,' but he gained weight and grew a beautiful set of horns. More important, we started getting calves. Still, we had to feed all year. We didn't have much hay. The grass — tabosa — has a lot of roughage and it's hard on the teeth. We fed an awful lot of protein cake last year."

This year, things are looking up. With the early rains, there is plenty of grass, and the Whites have their cotton crop planted.

They've added a room onto the farmhouse, just one more in a series of additions since the original structure was built in 1911, but they've kept the look. Most of the furniture in the house has been passed down from family members, and the original crank telephone still hangs on the wall.

"Our ring was two longs and a short," White said. "We could always tell who was ringing us because of the way they cranked their telephone."

The Whites still go to town once or twice a week ... a trip that Edna White says she likes to make around noon. "When we were adding that room on, we had to move the stove to make room for a door, and Binie was trying to decide how to do it. I suggested that we could just get rid of the stove, and solve the problem."

Plane crash-lands in Stanton

From Staff Reports

STANTON - A single-engine Cessna 182-E airplane crash-landed about 500 yards short of the runway at Stanton Municipal Airport on Sunday afternoon after the engine quit due to "fuel starvation," according to a spokesman for the Texas Department of Public Safety (DPS) in Midland.

The pilot, William James Andrews II of Goodfellow Air Force Base near San Angelo, had just completed a skydive run and was returning to the airport when the engine stalled, and the aircraft landed in a plowed field at 4:46 p.m., the DPS spokesman said. The pilot was not injured.

The high-wing aircraft, which is owned by Skydive San Marcos Inc., sustained a collapsed nose landing-gear and a bent propeller.

MOBIL: Midland man resigns from company amid allegations of discrimination

(From 1B)

according to the court filings.

Salazar maintains he did not report the encounter, since it would be "counter productive," and because the student was "a favorite" of upper management.

The student later asked to attend a software class with Salazar in Houston, but he learned that this enthusiasm was due to a sexual tryst she had been coordinating via e-mail with a man in that city, the suit stated.

According to the suit, the student "blatantly announced her plans for the Houston training session over e-mail, and if Mobil officials had checked her e-mail, they would have discovered these facts."

Salazar again confronted the young woman and told her that he was uncomfortable working with her, but would only tell his supervisors that he had no more work for her and ask if anyone else in the engineering group could use her, according to the filings.

The next week, Salazar was called to the office of Debbie Dexter, director of Human Resources for Mobil, and told that allegations had been made by the student, claiming behaviors that were "bordering on sexual harassment," according to the lawsuit.

In the filings, Salazar states that one of the problems he must deal with because of his condition is a difficulty in quickly organizing his thoughts in a confrontation.

Ms. Dexter's words convinced Salazar that she had already deemed him guilty, and, because of the disorganized way in which he was forced to present his case, he could not change her mind, according to the suit.

"The allegations took Mr. Salazar by surprise. During this meeting, Ms. Debbie Dexter treated Mr. Salazar very coldly and interrogated him ... Abel Salazar asked who would do the investigating and who would determine the discipline. Ms. Dexter replied arrogantly, 'I will,'" the suit reads.

Salazar, who is Hispanic, claims it was discrimination to take the unsubstantiated word of one person over that of an 18-year employee with multiple citations to his credit and none to his discredit. He maintains that all of the supervisors involved were Anglo and sided with the student on that basis. He also characterized Mobil officials as having "a total lack of sensitivity toward my disorder," and may follow his original suit with a second claiming violation of the Americans With Disabilities Act, he said.

In a reply to the suit, Mobil attorneys discount the allegations of discrimination and maintain their actions in the matter as prudent.

Much of the reply is in the form of direct denials of allegations made by Salazar's attorney in the original suit. "We deny the allegation made in paragraph six," for example.

Salazar was given two weeks forced leave of absence, while the student remained. He was demoted a salary grade and his salary was frozen for one year.

Finally, Salazar was ordered to drive to a distant field office every morning for two months. Unlike other employees, Salazar was forbidden to use a company vehicle or use the expense account so that he could stay in a motel for these months of work at the field office — a move that surprised not only Salazar, but his fellow employees as well, he said.

Jack Rathbone, who heads the Midland Mobil office, declined to comment on the circumstances surrounding Salazar's resignation, saying only, "we don't comment on personnel matters."

Forced to use his own vehicle and to leave his home at 4:30 a.m. each day for the 2 1/2 hour drive, Salazar maintains that his life was placed in danger as punishment, or harassment. The early-morning driving combined with the drowsiness of the medication caused Salazar to fall asleep and drive off the road several times, saving himself only at the last moment each time, he said.

It is that portion of the punishment that is the subject of a potential second lawsuit, Salazar said. He is currenly working with the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission regarding this treatment, he said.

Salazar reiterated the inherent danger of the situation to Rathbone and was told only "We have to teach you a lesson," Salazar states in the filings.

Salazar asked to be allowed to stay at a motel near the field site or to be allowed to leave later in the day, he said.

He was then told to get that in writing, and Salazar complied, including a short letter from his physician stating that he is taking the medication Paxil, which can cause drowsiness.

Within a week of receiving this letter, Mobile officials informed Salazar that he could no longer drive company vehicles because of his Tourette's Syndrome.

"I called the Mobil doctor and asked him why he did this and he said it was because of the letter I wrote... I said 'if I get off the medication, can I then drive?' and he said 'no.' I asked him why and he said it was because I have Tourette's. I told him that he knows nothing about me or my disorder and what gave him the right to discriminate? He said it was because of my letter," Salazar said.

"I told him that I have been driving for 25 years with not one wreck or any problems and he said that I need to tell (the Department of Public Safety) so that they can take my driver's license away," he said.

In response to this, Salazar's physician, a Dallas neurologist, wrote a letter invalidating the concerns of the corporation's hired physician.

"There is no inherent reason why somebody with Tourette's syndrome should be any more or less of a risk while driving a car than anyone else in society," writes Allan Naarden, Salazar's physician.

"My doctor has told me that what they are doing violates the Americans With Disabilities Act," Salazar said. "I couldn't believe how they were treating me," he said.

Salazar hopes for a satisfactory settlement through the EEOC, but admits that a lawsuit likely will be necessary.

"I could have just walked away, but in order to bring some closure, I had to fight it," he said.

Salazar is leaving Midland soon for a new job as an engineer with another company. The job is comparable in salary and status to his former position, but Salazar and his family are struggling with the loss of about $20,000 that has stemmed from this unexpected move and the sanctions against him, he said.

Conservatives take parting shot

AUSTIN (AP) — Rep. Kent Grusendorf didn't like the House rules at the beginning of the session, and he still didn't like them at the end.

The conservative Arlington Republican on Monday interrupted end-of-session glad-handing and celebration to once again urge members to consider changing their rules.

Under House rules, adopted and amended before every session, bills must first be considered by a standing committee and then by a scheduling committee before getting full House debate.

Grusendorf complained again on Monday that the House Calendars Committee blocked, delayed and killed good legislation.

The bidding:

SOUTH	WEST	NORTH	EAST
1♡	Pass	2♡	3♣
4♡	Pass	Pass	Pass

Opening lead: Six of ♣ How declarer or a defender tackles the hand can be very revealing. Consider this deal from the recent European Pairs Championship.

Since North-South were playing five-card majors, North had an easy raise to two hearts over partner's opening bid. South simply brushed aside East's interference and went straight to game, an eminently reasonable decision.

West duly led the six of clubs, and East's eight was captured with the ace. A trump to the king lost to the ace, and East shifted to the queen of diamonds, taken with the king. Declarer drew trumps, West discarding a low spade on the third round.

A club to the nine lost to the ten, and East continued with the king, ruffed by declarer as West pitched another spade. From East's switch to the queen of diamonds and failure to continue the suit when in with a club, declarer deduced that the lady had been singleton. Based on that picture, declarer cashed the remaining trumps and West, forced to retain three diamonds, had to let go another spade, coming down to two cards in that suit.

The stage was set for an endplay. Declarer cashed the ace and king of spades to strip West of everything but diamonds, then ran the eight of diamonds to the ten. The forced diamond return away from the J 7 into declarer's A 9 tenace limited South's losers to one trick in each suit except for spades.

Man who won Mellencamp concert gets help from television outlet, VH1

TONAWANDA, N.Y. — Cable television companies joined other donors to make sure a disabled man can pay the taxes he owes from winning his own John Mellencamp concert.

Raymond Holcomb, 25, who has muscular dystrophy and uses a wheelchair, faced about $2,500 in taxes on $11,700 in prizes. He won the backyard show and a barbecue for hundreds of friends last Labor Day from cable music channel VH1, which broadcast the concert.

His tax problem became public last week, and about $1,000 was raised within a few days. The Buffalo-area's Adelphia Cable said it and VH1 will cover the rest.

"It sure takes a lot of grief off this end," said Holcomb's father, Raymond. "The generosity from the whole community has been rather overwhelming at this point."

PEACHTREE CITY, Ga. — While other former presidents golfed, skied, rode horses and otherwise frolicked, Jimmy Carter always seems busy dealing with war, disease and homelessness. Finally, he's finding time to boogie.

Former president Jimmy Carter kicks up his heels at concert.

The former president took to the stage with his wife, Rosalynn, and danced Friday during a performance by the group Alabama in Peachtree City, where the couple's son Jeff lives. About 2,000 fans cheered a grinning Carter.

The Carters received a personal invitation from Alabama lead singer Randy Owen.

LOS ANGELES — Snoop Doggy Dogg has been sued by former manager Sharitha Knight, who claims she was not paid her 20 percent share during a time when the rapper earned $8 million.

Sharitha Knight is the estranged wife of Marion "Suge" Knight, the Death Row Records magnate who is serving a nine-year prison sentence for violating probation on a 1992 assault.

She is running the record company, which is besieged by multimillion-dollar claims from creditors and a federal investigation of alleged links to drug trafficking, money laundering and extortion.

The singer, whose real name is Calvin Broadus, is "spending large sums of money on frivolous items and objects," according to the lawsuit filed Friday.

Broadus' attorney Stephen Barnes didn't immediately return a call Monday.

LOS ANGELES — Patrick Stewart is commanding a reported $12 million to reprise his role as Capt. Jean-Luc Picard in the ninth "Star Trek" movie.

Stewart to get $12 million for role in next "Star Trek" movie.

Stewart received $5 million for last year's "Star Trek: First Contact," which earned $92 million domestically.

Daily Variety reported the deal Monday for the next "Star Trek" movie. The trade paper said the screenplay is still being written.

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — Funeral services will be today in Texas for the father of country entertainer Holly Dunn, who inspired her hit song "Daddy's Hands."

Rev. Frank J. Dunn, a Church of Christ pastor and former radio personality, died Sunday at his Temple, Texas, home after suffering from cancer for several years. He was 79.

Dunn served as the inspiration for his daughter's 1986 signature hit, "Daddy's Hands," a Father's Day anthem that she wrote as a Father's Day present.

Survivors also include three sons including Chris Waters Dunn, a Nashville songwriter and vice president of Sony Music; one brother; one sister; and eight grandchildren.

WASHINGTON — Jazz trumpeter Adolphus "Doc" Cheatham, whose career spanned 70 years, died today after suffering a stroke over the weekend. He would have turned 92 on June 13.

Cheatham, who died in his sleep at George Washington University Hospital, was regarded as a jazz legend having played with everyone from Bessie Smith in the 1920s and Cab Calloway to current up-and-comer Nicholas Payton.

He continued to perform until shortly before his death. He played a full set Saturday night at Blues Alley, a Georgetown jazz club, with an ensemble that included Payton. Afterward, he was reported in good spirits and apparently in good health.

Cheatham witnessed much of jazz history. In 1923, he backed blues queen Bessie Smith at a theater in his native Nashville, Tenn.

DEAR ABBY

Divorced dads need to stay in touch

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: This letter is prompted by the letter in your column from the 9-year-old girl who signed her letter "Missing My Dad in Michigan." She hadn't heard from her father in more than four years.

Van Buren

I experienced the same thing when my parents divorced in 1978. In the beginning, I received a few letters, phone calls and visits from Daddy, but they dwindled to nothing after a couple of years.

Ten years after the divorce, I began an effort to find my father. I located his mother, which resulted in her contacting my father. Ten minutes after I spoke with my grandmother, my phone rang and my father was on the other end. It was, needless to say, a very emotional phone call. I realized that after many years with no communication, I had built up tremendous reserves of anger, resentment and bitterness. I had hated my father for not loving me.

It turned out that he had loved me very much. He had been afraid to contact me for fear that my mother would have him arrested (for non-payment of alimony/child support) if he appeared in Virginia or if she discovered where he lived. A year after our first conversation, I flew out to see him. It was a trying yet rewarding time, as we began to get to know each other all over again.

We are learning even more as the years pass. By 1994, we had repaired our relationship so well that he was able to give me away at my wedding. He's now eagerly awaiting the day we can tell him he's a grandfather.

To the parents of the young lady who wrote to you: You may be very angry at each other and hurting each other in an effort to get even, but please remember that the one you are hurting the most is your daughter. Dad, she needs you. There's no way to recapture the years lost when you weren't in your daughter's life. Mom, no amount of money you may or may not receive is worth the emotional pain and loss being inflicted on your daughter.

To the young lady who signed her letter "Missing My Dad in Michigan": I was your age when I went through the same experience. Divorce is extremely painful for all involved, but particularly for you because you are innocent. I hope and pray that you will learn to understand, forgive and love both your parents — because I am sure they both love you. — KNOWS HOW YOU FEEL

DEAR KNOWS: Your letter is further testimony to the importance of both parents staying involved and in frequent, continuing contact regardless of the status of the marriage. Parents should be partners in raising their children, even when they do not live in the same household, because it benefits the emotional well-being of the children.

The Children's Rights Council has published a book containing valuable information for parents and professionals on how to handle divorce so that it's less traumatic for children. It's titled "The Best Parent Is Both Parents." It can be ordered from: The Children's Rights Council, 220 Eye St. N.E., Suite 140, Washington, D.C. 20002-4362. The cost: $10 plus $2 shipping and handling. Please allow four to six weeks for delivery.

QUOTE WORTH THINKING ABOUT: Why is it when we talk to God we're said to be praying — but when God talks to us, we're schizophrenic? — Lily Tomlin

What teens need to know about sex, drugs, AIDS, and getting along with peers and parents is in "What Every Teen Should Know." To order, send a business-sized, self-addressed envelope, plus check or money order for $3.95 ($4.50 in Canada) to: Dear Abby, Teen Booklet, P.O. Box 447, Mount Morris, Ill. 61054-0447. (Postage is included.)

U.N. blames subsidies for fishery crisis

GENEVA (AP) — Government subsidies have so bloated the world's fishing industry that it is wiping out fish faster than they can reproduce, the United Nations and a leading environmental organization said Monday.

The World Wide Fund for Nature and the U.N. Environment Program urged top fishing nations to slash the $50 billion-plus subsidies which they blamed for the global fisheries crises.

Governments pour the money into overcompetitive fishing fleets that continue to lose money and deplete fish stocks at an alarming rate, they said.

A World Wide Fund for Nature report estimates the world's fishing industry spends $124 billion annually to generate revenues of $70 billion. That means taxpayers have to make up the other $54 billion.

Uncontrolled fishing and the throwing away of unwanted catches have decimated world marine stocks, driving once common species like cod and halibut to commercial extinction and threatening the livelihood of tens of millions of people, the U.N. and nature groups said.

Subsidies artificially inflate the profitability of fishing, stimulating new investment and encouraging fishers to remain in over-fished waters, WWF International Director General Claude Martin said.

NBA Ratings Drop

NEW YORK — The opening game of the NBA Finals between the Utah Jazz and Chicago Bulls drew an overnight rating of 17.8, a decrease of more than one point from last year, NBC said Monday.

The rating for Sunday night's game based on a survey of 38 of the nation's largest markets comprising 57 percent of the country, compared with 18.9 for last year's Game 1 between Chicago and Seattle.

Last year's opening game was on a Wednesday night, while this year's was Sunday night and had competition from the Tony Awards telecast on CBS.

Howser Award

OMAHA, Neb. — Florida State center fielder J.D. Drew, the first college player to hit 30 home runs and steal 30 bases in a season, won still another honor Monday when he was selected winner of the Dick Howser Award as college baseball's player of the year.

The latest award, voted by the American Baseball Coaches Association, followed Drew's selection as player of the year by Baseball America and Collegiate Baseball.

He is expected to go either No. 1 or 2 in the free-agent draft on Tuesday in New York.

The Hahira, Ga., athlete batted a school record .455 with 31 home runs, 100 RBIs and 32 stolen bases in 42 attempts.

"J.D. is the best hitter I ever coached," said Florida State coach Mike Martin, who received the trophy for Drew.

In his three years at FSU, Drew batted .391 with 69 home runs and 257 RBI. A two-time All-American, he holds the College World Series record for career home runs with five.

He is the second Atlantic Coast Conference player to win the trophy in as many years, and the third to win in four years. Clemson's Kris Benson won in 1996 and Jason Varitek of Georgia Tech won in 1994.

Holtz to miss season

ARLINGTON — Texas Rangers' TV voice Mark Holtz will miss the rest of this season as doctors treat him for a life-threatening bone marrow disease, the team said Monday.

Holtz is expected to undergo a bone marrow transplant at Baylor Medical Center in Dallas later this month after doctors found a suitable donor.

Holtz was the voice of the Rangers on radio in 1981-94 and has since been the team's play-by-play voice on television.

KXAS-TV sports reporter Bill Jones is filling in with Tom Grieve on the game telecasts in Holtz's absence.

Holtz has myelodysplasia. It results from genetic damage to the blood-forming cells and eventually leads to anemia, low blood counts and sometimes leukemia.

Irvin no show; Miller signed

■ Cowboys open their offseason workouts with the signing of Anthony Miller and without the "Playmaker."

IRVING (AP) — The Dallas Cowboys signed five-time All-Pro receiver Anthony Miller on Monday, but it was another star wideout, Michael Irvin, who stole the spotlight by pulling another no-show at a team minicamp.

Irvin's absence from a mandatory quarterback school that started Monday led even normally-reserved team leaders to express their irritation.

"It's discouraging, no question about that," quarterback Troy Aikman said. "It comes down to whether he wants to play for us or he doesn't. If he wants to, we want him to start working with us.

"If he doesn't want to play, we want to know that too so we can go in another direction. I think the world of Michael. Nobody wants him here more than I do. But at the same time, enough's enough. I don't fault Michael if he doesn't want to play. But if he does, let's play."

Irvin, the Cowboys' all-time leader in catches and receiving yardage, has given no reason for his absence. He also missed a minicamp last month.

Head coach Barry Switzer said he was told by team owner Jerry Jones not to expect Irvin.

"It think it disappoints all of us, but Jerry said not to expect him so we just go about our business," Switzer said.

Jones acknowledged Monday that Irvin has asked to be traded, but the Cowboys owner insisted that can't and won't happen and said he's confident Irvin will be with the team for training camp in July.

The Cowboys will at least have Miller, released earlier Monday by the Denver Broncos for salary cap reasons. Terms of his deal with Dallas were not disclosed.

The Cowboys hope Miller will serve as the deep threat they were missing last season when they finished 24th in the NFL in total

San Angelo drops stunner, heats up rivalry with Jacks

By Stewart Doreen

Monday, the expansion teams in Western Professional Hockey League had a chance to help themselves at the WPHL's expansion draft in Scottsdale, Ariz.

With Monday's acquisitions, either by draft or trade, the Odessa Jackalopes added two all-star defensemen and a tough-as-nails forward to their formidable roster.

On the other hand, the San Angelo Outlaws may have just bit off a little more than they can chew with the 17th pick of the 20-player draft.

"They drafted our assistant coach (Jeff Triano)."

No-names rule Roland Garros

Just two seeds advance into men's quarterfinals

By Stephen Wilson
AP Sports Writer

PARIS — Who are these guys? Call it the no-name Open.

Six unseeded players have reached the quarterfinals of the French Open, the first time in the Open era that only two seeds reached this far at a Grand Slam event.

French Open

It's also the first time since 1969 no U.S. player has made it to the quarters at Roland Garros.

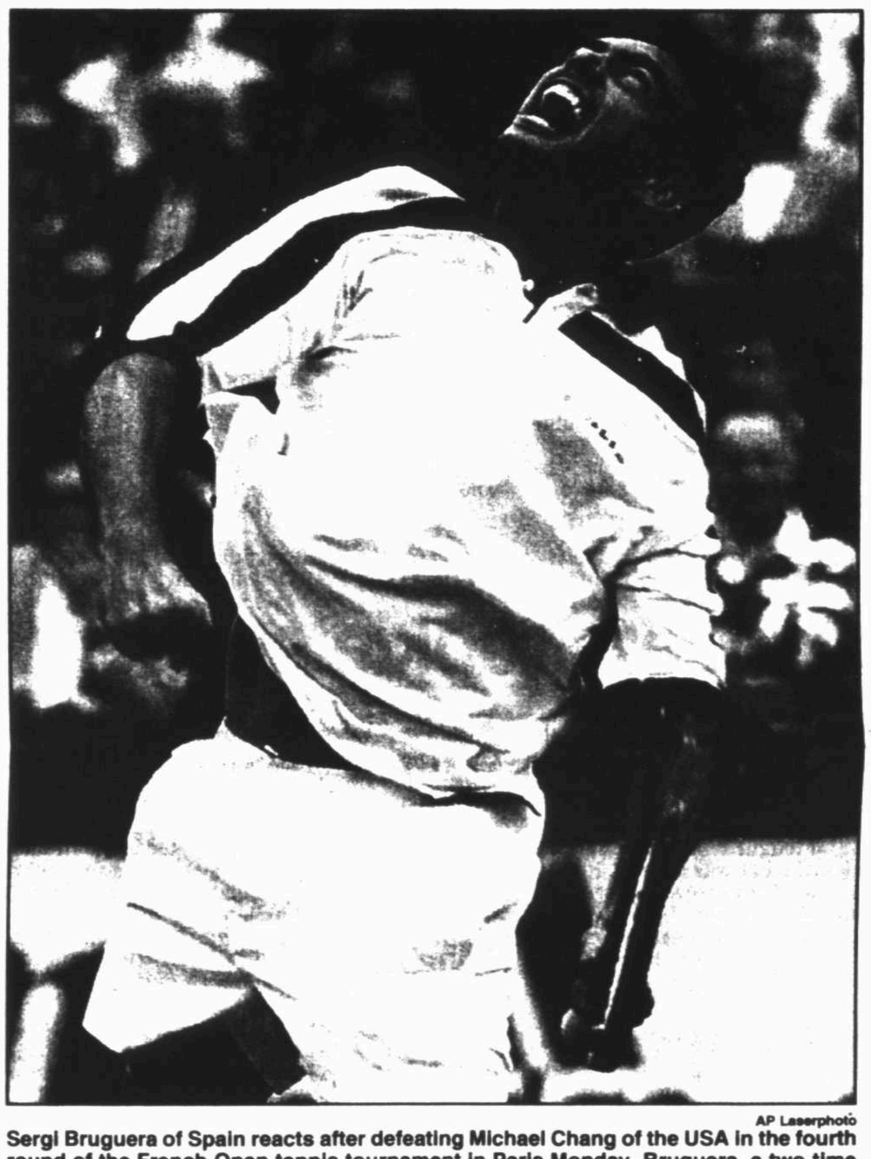

Before this week, how many people had ever heard of Filip Dewulf, Gustavo Kuerten, Galo Blanco, Magnus Norman and Hicham Arazi?

Patrick Rafter is no household name either, and the only two remaining seeds — No. 3 Yevgeny Kafelnikov and No. 16 Sergi Bruguera — aren't huge draws.

The previous record for the fewest number of seeds reaching the quarterfinals of a Grand Slam was three, set at last year's Wimbledon and the 1994 U.S. Open. At least two unseeded players will make the semifinals in Paris.

The latest big name swept away by the wave of upsets was Michael Chang, the No. 2 seed and last American in the field.

Bruguera drops Chang, looks to repeat past feats at French Open

By Nesha Starcevic

PARIS — On the red clay of Roland Garros that made him famous, Sergi Bruguera is trying to recapture the past.

On Monday, his trip back to the future went quite nicely — a 3-6, 6-4, 6-3, 6-4 upset of No. 2 seed Michael Chang that put the Spaniard in the quarterfinals.

"For me, it was a really big victory," Bruguera said. "It's always really, really great when you beat one of the best players in a Grand Slam. But if you win through very tough moments, I think you appreciate the victory more."

After winning the French Open in 1993 and 1994, Bruguera rose to No. 3 in the rankings. But successive ankle and knee injuries forced him into long layoffs and put his career on hold.

During his two-year reign at Roland Garros, Bruguera was perhaps the world's top clay court player, a patient baseliner who made few mistakes. Between 1991 and 1994, Bruguera collected 14 titles. But since 1994, he has not won tournament.

He tore a ligament in his left knee in 1995 at an indoor tournament in Stuttgart, Germany. Then he ruptured two ligaments in his right ankle in December 1995. He returned next sum-

Singh claims rain-delayed Memorial

By Rusty Miller
AP Sports Writer

DUBLIN, Ohio — Vijay Singh's first swing of the day set up an eagle tap-in for a two-stroke lead and an eventual two-stroke victory in the rain-shortened Memorial Tournament today.

Singh fired a 5-under-par 67 in the third and final round and he finished with a 202 total.

Finally, after three days of heavy rain and several suspensions of play, Singh was able to claim his first tour victory in two years and marked his first top-10 finish in 10 starts this season. The win as worth $342,000 — more than double what he had made so far in PGA events this year.

Greg Norman and Jim Furyk tied for second at 204.

Norman's closing effort, an 8-under-par 64 — stretched over three days and 51 hours — matched the tournament's third-round record.

Furyk finished with a 67.

The tournament was cut to 54 holes after more than 4 inches of rain hit Muirfield Village Golf Club on Saturday and Sunday. Play was suspended Sunday afternoon after co-leaders Singh and Scott Hoch had hit their tee shots at the 539-yard, par-5 11th hole.

Singh's first shot today, a long iron from the middle of the fairway, came to rest a foot away from the hole on the rain-beaten green.

He turned to a sparse gallery and pumped his arms, smiled and waved before tapping in the eagle putt to get to 14-under for a two-stroke lead over Hoch.

Hoch hurt his back on his first swing, pushing an iron right of the green from where he had to take a drop. He parred the hole, but winced on every swing and every time he bent over to pick up his ball the rest of the way.

Norman stretched his birdie string to five in a row with a two-putt birdie on the par-5 15th to start his day. He narrowly missed a long birdie putt at the 16th, then lipped out a 10-foot birdie try at 17 before scraping the cup on a long birdie putt on the closing hole.

"I saw he had eagled it, but I thought he had holed his third shot," Norman said of Singh. "I didn't realize he had hit it that far down there with his driver."

Norman said a soggy course was the perfect place for a player such as Singh.

"He's extremely long off the tee. Under these conditions, he's hitting 7-iron or 8-iron while some guys are hitting 4- or 5-iron," Norman said.

MVP award brings Malone pressures

By Mike Nadel
AP Sports Writer

CHICAGO — Karl Malone is just now learning what Michael Jordan has known for years: With great honors come great expectations.

"It's no longer Karl Malone anymore, it's MVP Karl Malone," Malone said Monday. "Yes, there is a lot more pressure. With everything good that happens to you, there has got to be some negative things in there."

Negative? Being the NBA's Most Valuable Player?

Edging Jordan for the honor has created expectations unlike any Malone had ever experienced in his outstanding 12-year career.

Malone didn't handle the pressure well in his first post-MVP matchup against Jordan, missing two free throws with 9.2 seconds left Sunday night as the Utah Jazz lost 84-82 to the Chicago Bulls in the opener of the NBA Finals.

Jordan followed Malone's misses by making the winning jumper at the buzzer. Moments after the ball swished through the net, the taunting crowd at United Center began chanting: "M-V-P! M-V-P!"

"It's behind me now. What I don't want to do is go out and try to play up to the MVP," Malone said. "I never said I wanted to play at that level. I don't want to raise my game. I just want to find consistency."

Jordan, of course, always has been under pressure because he has been considered the league's best player for most of the 1990s and has four MVP trophies to back that up. Nevertheless, he has consistently produced, leading the Bulls to four of the last six NBA titles. And he produced again Sunday.

"Michael Jordan and Karl Malone are entirely two different people and players," Malone said. "He made his and I missed mine."

He said the misses won't change the way he approaches Game 2 Wednesday night.

"I've been through a lot of adversity. It's going to take a lot to break this nut," Malone said. "If I have the opportunity to get fouled again, I want to have the opportunity to go to line again."

Chicago's Dennis Rodman wouldn't mind seeing Malone have the opportunity again, either.

"He's known to miss free throws in clutch situations," said Rodman, who as an NBA neophyte was Malone's summer league teammate but in recent years has had many run-ins with him. "He's still a

Astro hurlers combine for six-hitter, shut out Dodgers

Associated Press

HOUSTON — Donne Wall and Jose Lima combined on a six-hitter and Brad Ausmus hit a two-run double as the Houston Astros snapped a three-game losing streak with a 2-0 victory over Hideo Nomo and the Los Angeles Dodgers.

Wall (2-2) tied a career-high with nine strikeouts in seven innings to win for the first time since April 23. Lima held the Dodgers to one hit in the final two innings for his first save.

Nomo (5-5) dropped to 1-5 in his career against Houston, the right-hander's worst record against any NL team. His career ERA vs. Houston (4.93) is also his worst.

Nomo allowed two runs and six hits before leaving after facing three batters in the sixth.

Houston's Luis Gonzalez doubled to open the sixth off Nomo and Bill Spiers walked before Ausmus followed with a two-run double to center.

Padres 5, Braves 4

ATLANTA — San Diego rookie Heath Murray picked up his first major-league victory Monday night, beating four-time Cy Young Award winner Greg Maddux and the Atlanta Braves 5-4.

The Padres, who broke a 2-2 tie with three runs in the fifth inning, stretched their winning streak to four with the unlikely victory.

Marlins 4, Giants 2

MIAMI — Al Leiter pitched seven innings, his longest outing of the year, and Gary Sheffield homered to lead Florida over San Francisco.

Leiter (5-3) allowed four hits, walked four and struck out five. The left-hander lowered his ERA from 5.18 to 4.44.

Cubs 3, Pirates 2

CHICAGO — Brant Brown went 3-for-3 with a solo home run, leading the Chicago Cubs to a season-best third straight victory.

Brown, recalled from Triple-A Iowa on May 23, is 8-for-13 (.615) over his last five games. His homer in the fourth inning tied it 1-1.

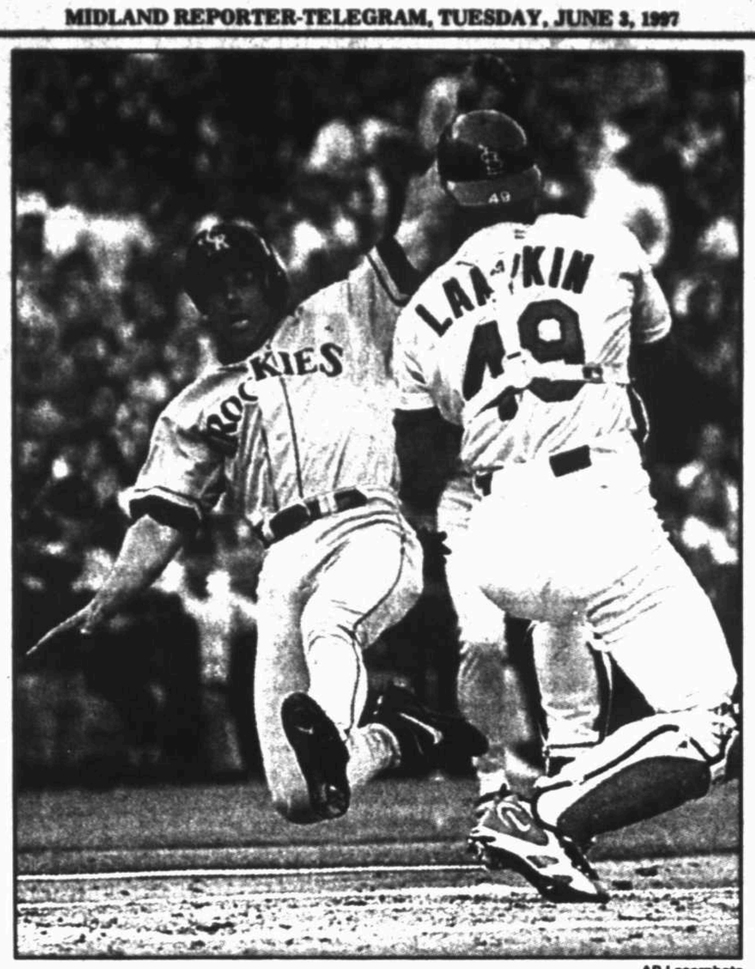

Terry Mulholland (5-4) gave up four hits over seven innings, walked one and struck out five. Terry Adams pitched the final two innings for his eighth save.

Rockies 11, Cardinals 7

ST. LOUIS — Andres Galarraga hit his fifth home run in seven games and drove in four runs as Colorado beat St. Louis.

Galarraga's opposite-field, three-run homer in the fifth was measured at 426 feet, 103 feet shorter than his tape-measure blast two days ago in Miami.

Miami thumps Alabama in CWS winner's bracket play

Associated Press

OMAHA, Neb. — Mandy Jacomino went 4-for-4 with a three-run homer Monday to lift Miami to a 6-1 victory over Alabama in the second round of the College World Series.

It was the second year in a row the Hurricanes (51-16) beat the top-seeded Crimson Tide (53-13) in the winners' final of their CWS bracket. A year ago Miami thumped Alabama 15-1.

The win sends the fifth-seeded Hurricanes to Thursday night's game to await the survivor of a Tuesday elimination game between Alabama and Mississippi State.

It was the first time this season the Crimson Tide didn't score at least two runs in a game and the first time they went consecutive games without a home run. Alabama, which had 153 homers during the season, didn't hit one in Saturday's 3-2 win over Mississippi State.

Miami scored 10 runs in the third inning against the Tide in last year's second-round game and used the same inning to grab the lead again this time.

Rick Saggese and Jason Michaels singled before Aubrey Huff singled with two outs for the first run. Jacomino followed with his homer that just cleared the right field fence.

Alabama, the seventh-highest scoring team in the country this season with an average of more than 10 runs a game, couldn't get a runner past second base against Miami starter Darin Spassoff (9-5) until the sixth.

Mississippi St. 7, UCLA 5

OMAHA, Neb. — Mississippi State scored four runs in the seventh inning without hitting a ball out of the infield and beat UCLA 7-5 Monday night in an elimination game of the College World Series.

The Bulldogs (47-20) advanced to Tuesday night's elimination game against top-seeded Alabama, which lost 6-1 to Miami earlier Monday. UCLA (45-21-1) was eliminated in two games in its first CWS appearance since 1967.

The Bruins were leading 4-3 in the seventh when their miscues set up the Bulldogs' big inning.

Travis Chapman walked to load the bases and Brooks Bryan followed with a line drive that hit UCLA pitcher Rob Henkel (3-3) in the left shoulder to make it 5-4.

Brad Freeman followed with a fielder's choice that scored Wiese and Chapman scored when Glaus slipped while trying to field Rusty Thoms' hit over second base.

Rangers' battery powers Texas past Minnesota

ARLINGTON, Texas (AP) — Darren Oliver pitched eight strong innings and Ivan Rodriguez went 3-for-5 with a home run as the Texas Rangers beat the Minnesota Twins 8-0 Monday night.

Oliver (3-6), who had lost five of his previous six decisions, gave up five hits, struck out six and walked one as the Rangers beat the Twins for the fourth straight time. Matt Whiteside pitched a perfect ninth for Texas.

The Rangers had six doubles and two homers, including Warren Newson's two-run shot in the sixth. Domingo Cedeno went 3-for-4 and Will Clark went 3-for-5 as Texas had a season-high 18 hits.

Twins starter Brad Radke (4-5) gave up a career-high 13 hits, one short of the club record. Radke struck out three and walked two before leaving after six innings while trailing 4-0.

Texas took a 1-0 lead in the third on consecutive doubles by Rodriguez and Rusty Greer. Rodriguez led off the fifth with his sixth homer to extend Texas' lead to 2-0.

In the sixth, Benji Gil led off with a single and Newson followed with his fourth homer to put the Rangers ahead 4-0.

Dean Palmer and Gil had RBI singles and Rodriguez drove in another run on a groundout in the four-run seventh, which gave Texas an 8-0 lead.

Yankees 5, Red Sox 2

BOSTON — Paul O'Neill went 3-for-4 and drove in the go-ahead run in the seventh inning, and David Wells pitched seven solid innings to lead the New York Yankees over the Boston Red Sox.

After losing the opener of the four-game series, the Yankees won the final three games.

With the score tied 2-2 in the seventh, Bernie Williams and Tino Martinez hit one-out singles before Vaughn Eshelman relieved Aaron Sele (6-4). O'Neill followed with a line drive to right.

Wells (6-3) allowed six hits in winning for the fifth time in his last seven starts. Jeff Nelson pitched the eighth and Mariano Rivera got three outs for his 16th save.

White Sox 8, Brewers 5

MILWAUKEE — Rookie Mike Cameron's two-run double highlighted Chicago's three-run ninth inning.

The White Sox trailed 3-2 in the eighth inning before Dave Martinez hit a three-run homer. Milwaukee tied it in the bottom of the inning before Chicago came back again in the ninth to avoid being swept in the four-game series.

Chicago's Albert Belle went 0-for-3 with two walks, ending his career-high hitting streak at 27 games. It was also the longest streak in the majors this season.

Dodgers rookie suspended for corked bat

NEW YORK (AP) — Wilton Guerrero of the Los Angeles Dodgers was suspended for eight games and fined an undisclosed sum today by NL president Leonard Coleman for using a corked bat.

Guerrero, a rookie second baseman tied for the major league lead with six triples, admitted he knew the bat was corked. It shattered when he grounded out to start the game at St. Louis on Sunday. Guerrero was ejected when umpires saw the bat had been altered.

"He knew before he used it. He admits it," said Dodgers coach Manny Mota, translating for Guerrero, after a 6-1 win over the Cardinals.

The suspension starts with tonight's game at Houston. Guerrero is eligible to return June 10.

"I have learned of my penalty from the league office and I accept it with full responsibility,' Guerrero said in a statement this afternoon. "I will say once again, as I said yesterday, I apologize to my team, to the league and to all of baseball."

Chris Sabo was the last player suspended for using an illegal bat. Sabo, then with Cincinnati, was given a seven-game penalty last season after being caught with a corked bat in a July game against Houston.

In 1994, Albert Belle received a 10-day suspension for using a corked bat, but had his penalty was reduced to six games.

Guerrero is batting .290 with 13 RBIs and five stolen bases. He is tied with Deion Sanders and Tony Womack for the big league lead in triples.

Nelson Liriano took over at second base Sunday after Guerrero was ejected. Liriano was batting .207 through Sunday.

Flyers' changes raises panic question

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — The goaltender is being changed again, two lines are being revamped, a couple of defense pairings are being altered and the amount of time the Philadelphia Flyers' big boys play is going to increase.

Don't, however, jump to the conclusion the Flyers are hitting the panic button heading into Game 2 of the Stanley Cup finals against the Detroit Red Wings on Tuesday night.

Losing has resulted in changes for the Flyers all season and coach Terry Murray decided Monday not to change that with the NHL title on the line.

The biggest move in the wake of Detroit's 4-2 victory on Saturday will be Garth Snow starting in goal instead of a disappointed Ron Hextall.

Hextall didn't play poorly in Game 1, but he gave up a horrible goal to Steve Yzerman on a 40-foot shot in the opening minute of the third period with Philadelphia behind 3-2.

"The decision is based on what I saw in the game," said Murray, who has changed his starting goaltender four times since the playoffs began, three times after losses. "Again, after the game the other night, I thought that the opportunity for us to get ourselves back into the game was taken away from us. And the goal by Yzerman certainly was the reason for the decision."

While the other lineup changes are not as big, the number is surprising. Pat Falloon and rookie Colin Forbes, who only played in three regular-season games this season, will dress for Game 2 and Karl Dykhuis will probably start on defense if Petr Svoboda, who has an injured foot, can't play. That move would result in changes to the defensive pairings.

"We have been doing it for the last three rounds," a slightly annoyed Flyers captain Eric Lindros said of the changes. "We panic each round? I don't think we panic. We are changing up goalies. Big deal!"

Snow and Hextall have gotten used to playing musical creases this season, and it's gotten worse in the playoffs where one mistake seems to result in a change.

Snow started the first nine games of the playoffs before being replaced for the final game of the Eastern Conference semifinals after a 5-4 overtime loss to Buffalo. Hextall started and won the next game, but Snow returned for the first two games of the conference finals against the New York Rangers, being relieved after giving up five goals on 10 shots in Game 2. Hextall had the job until Monday.

"It's hard for me," Hextall said. "I am disappointed. I am not going to lie to you and say I am not. I am very disappointed. But in the whole scheme of things, I am one player on a hockey team and I am not going to stomp my feet and whine."

Snow felt Hextall played well in Game 1, considering three of the four Detroit goals came on odd-man rushes.

"I'm just happy I am getting the chance to play," Snow said. "Hopefully, I'll help the team win."

Red Wings coach Scotty Bowman doesn't think his team gains anything having knocked out Hextall.

"With Garth Snow, he has won two series," Bowman said. "He is not like a guy coming in that has never played or anything like that. Obviously, they have confidence in him or they would not be making the change."

Detroit may have to adjust to Snow in other ways. He wears big shoulder pads and that has psyched out a few opponents. The Sabres complained bitterly about them.

JACKS: Henderson Jacks' first pick said Jacks Head Coach/Director of Operations Joe Clark, half amazed at San Angelo's gall and/or stupidity. "If they wanted to start a rivalry, they did a heck of a job tonight. I can't wait until we get on the ice."

The revised schedule for the 1997-98 season has not been released by the league, so dates between the two clubs are still not known. However, what Clark is amazed at is not that San Angelo drafted Triano, who played last season with Amarillo as a player-coach, knowing he is a full-time coach. It was that the Outlaws used a pick to make sure he couldn't suit up for Clark, something Clark said would not happen unless there was a big emergency and the team was in a major bind.

It should be noted that the Outlaws went into the draft having signed just one player and still do not have a coach.

"They did this to prevent him from playing," Clark said. "But in effect what they did was waste a pick only to block us from playing him. There is no excuse for that."

But the day was a good one for Clark. In addition, to having his blood boiled, Clark says he picked up some players he is excited about. That started with their first pick and fifth pick overall, left wing Mike Henderson.

"He brings size, toughness, and great leadership," Clark said of the 6-foot-2 forward who played for New Mexico last season. "He is a character guy who will lead the team on and off the ice. He is a pick we are sure of. We are adamant about bringing character here.

"The Europeans (on the roster) have a lot of offensive capability. That is why Henderson was so important. He brings a lot of grit. I was praying no one would grab him with the first four picks."

With he sixth pick of the draft, all-star defenseman Patrick Lampron became a Jackalope. Lampron is a defenseman in name only. Clark says Lampron will contribute as much offensively as he will defensively.

"He's a Paul Coffey-type player," Clark said. "He is an offensive-minded defenseman and a skilled player who will be great for our power play."

Clark says a trade to Amarillo for all-star defenseman Jeff Smith would also be completed late Monday night. Clark says that one of the Jacks' draft selections would be traded as compensation for Smith. That player would be forward Rick Girhiny (the No. 11 pick) or defenseman Chris O'Rourke (the No. 20 pick). Clark said that Henderson and Lampron were "untouchables."

The moves were not limited to the draft.

Monday, it was announced that the Jacks signed their first-ever goaltender, Kevin Deschambeault.

The 25-year-old native of Leeds, Maine played in the Central Hockey League last year, splitting time between the Columbus Cottonmouths and the Memphis Riverkings. At Memphis, he was part of a goaltending duo that led the Riverkings to the championship series.

Deschambeault will be one of two goaltenders for Clark, a former goalie coach.

"I know this kid from hometown rinks," Clark said. "I saw him grow up and know his personality. He is someone I can work with."

Deschambeault played his college hockey at Miami-Ohio where he left among the career leaders in career saves and goals-against average.

Tuesday's end result is that five players are signed and the rights of four others are in the possession of the Jackalopes. Clark says more signings are coming soon but that the team has already done a lot for the Oct. 1 training camp.

"This is a very good day for our organization," Clark said. "We will keep adding to the list, but this is a very good start."

San Angelo and its four players might be sad to hear that.

Saving for retirement especially vital for women

By Van Pearcy

Despite much progress in the last decade, American women executives still earn only two-thirds as much as men, according to a new study by the Korn/Ferry International executive search firm and the University of California-Los Angeles.

Van Pearcy

Although many forecasts suggest that pay parity is coming, the pay gap means that several generations of women, from those starting work today to those who have been working for 20 to 30 years, could find themselves short-changed in retirement income as well. Consider these facts:

* Men's annual retirement income, including all sources, averages $10,450 compared with just $6020 for women. Because women live an average of seven years longer than men, they're more likely to face the problem of outliving their assets—in fact, women are twice as likely as men to die poor.

* It can be more difficult for women to save for retirement because they earn less throughout their careers. Women have to save a higher percentage of their income to ensure a comfortable retirement.

*Only 50 percent of working women have pensions. This is partly because women are more likely to work in smaller businesses that do not offer pension plans. Also, women often leave the work force when they have children and rejoin later, or move with a spouse, so they may not stay with one employer long enough to be vested in a retirement plan or to accumulate much in a company plan.

* At one time or another, 90 percent of women become wholly responsible for their own financial welfare.

* Nearly 75 percent of the elderly poor are women.

* Eighty percent of retired women are not eligible for pension benefits.

* Many older women are placed in financial jeopardy through widowhood or divorce.

* The average age of widowhood in the United States is 56.

Despite these statistics, women can take control of their financial futures by implementing a few basic strategies. These include developing a plan and sticking to it, paying themselves first, systematically investing for the long term, taking the time to learn about basic investments, sheltering their retirement dollars from taxes, diversifying their investment dollars and using professional advice.

The time to plan and invest for your retirement is now. Start today!

Envoye Travel: See the world! Bring it home!

Envoye Travel has special prices now on worry-free vacations on selected dates from Royal Caribbean Cruise Lines. Reserve your vacation and your savings now to places like the far east, Alaska, the Caribbean and the Bahamas by calling Envoye at 689-0057.

Is your idea of getting away limited to a leisurely drive to Big Spring? (Leisurely? Have you been on I-20 lately?) Come on—widen those horizons! Envoye Travel and Royal Caribbean Cruise Lines can bring you special prices on cruises in the cool majesty of Alaska...the mystery of the orient...or the balmy breezes of the Caribbean and the Bahamas.

Book your cruise by August 15 and save up to $200 per cabin on selected 14 night Far East cruises; save $100 per cabin on seven night cruises to Alaska or the Caribbean; or save $50 per cabin on three or four night Bahamas cruises. Selected departure dates range from now through December.

While you "Sea the world," Royal Caribbean and Envoye Travel will help you "Bring it home" by giving you a free 35mm disposable camera to capture those special moments on board or the picture-perfect opportunities in every port of call.

You also have an exciting chance to win a free seven night Caribbean cruise for two by filling out an entry form at Envoye Travel.

Envoye's front door may look normal...but with the help of Royal Caribbean, it's really a magical gateway to the world. From there, you can almost see the pure white sands of beaches in the Caribbean. Just park your 9-to-5 worries at the door (you won't need them on San Juan, Grand Cayman or on any other beach) and prepare to deeply enrich your understanding of relaxation. Have you ever slept under a palm tree or eaten ice cream while floating in a soothing turquoise sea? Why not this year?

That door can also lead you to the wonders of the orient; those "Far Away Places with Strange Sounding Names" as the old song used to say. Bali, Penang, Semarang, Ko Samui, Xiamen, Tokyo (okay, so you've heard of that last one); there's nothing like the romance of the Far East.

Unless it's the breathtaking splendor of the rugged Alaskan peaks. Through Envoye's door you can escape from the West Texas summer into Alaska's refreshingly cool breezes. Alaskan summers are the perfect place to get the most out of your vacation—the days really are longer!

Wherever you go, cruising puts your vacation on autopilot. There are no worries about hotel reservations or repeated packing and unpacking. Port lectures give you the inside information on where to go, what to see and local customs at each place. This is really adventure made easy—especially when you let Envoye Travel relieve you of making reservations for the cruise itself.

Call Envoye today and let them open the door to new worlds of adventure you never dreamed possible. Doesn't that sound better than fighting traffic on I-20?

Envoye Travel, a full-service travel agency, is located at 1028-B Andrews Highway, across from Alberstons. The phone number is 689-0057. They are open 8:30 to 5:30 Monday through Friday; Saturdays by appointment.

Q. I've heard of your education funding software package. How does it work?
A. Education Funding Analysis analyzes your current investments along with projected education costs for the years you expect each child to attend school. The analysis is based on whether you're considering a private secondary school, a public or private college or graduate school. The analysis can help you answer two essential questions:
* How fast are college costs rising?
* How will I know how much it will take to meet these expenses?

Lifetime Siding saves you money

Has someone (locally or from out-of-town) recently called on you about siding or storm windows and given you an estimate you thought was too high? Have you decided you'll have to keep painting and repainting the outside of your home because siding is too expensive?

Don't give up until you get one more estimate.

Travis Morgan's home at 3904 Tanner gets a brand new look from Lifetime Siding. Neil Letkeman (left) has been in business in West Texas for over 10 years.

Lifetime siding can save customers hundreds of dollars on steel and vinyl siding, storm doors and windows as well as soffit and fascia because of their very low overhead. They can also save you money on dual glass tilt-in windows with a lifetime warranty, metal carport and patio covers, seamless rain gutters and metal roofing.

Because Lifetime uses screws and rivets instead of nails, your siding will withstand the harsh west Texas elements for many years. Owner Neil Letkeman offers a lifetime warranty on parts and 15 years on labor. You may be able to say, "I've painted my home's exterior for the last time."

Lifetime has accumulated a long list of happy Permian Basin customers during their 10-plus years here. You could be the next one.

Lifetime Siding has been in the Permian Basin for over 10 years. They specialize in siding as well as storm doors and windows. Financing is available. Call 580-8125 for a free estimate.

Fashion Cleaners helps keep your wedding gown forever young

Your wedding gown is an important reminder of a wonderful day in your life. Fashion Cleaners can help make sure that gown and those memories are protected for you and even the next generation.

First, Fashion will carefully clean your gown. Some stains that may not be apparent today may show clearly and indelibly 15 years from now. Fashion will then fold the gown into layers of protective tissue paper. They use acid-free paper to reduce the chances of the gown yellowing. Finally, it is triple sealed; first in a beautifully embossed chest with a transparent window, then in plastic and lastly in a stout cardboard box. This service is also available for christening gowns.

If you're concerned about the appearance of your gown and bridesmaid dresses before the wedding, Fashion can press them and deliver them to the church on your wedding day. This will assure that everyone looks their best for those photos that will be in your album forever.

Don't just hang your gown in the closet after the wedding; let Fashion Cleaners protect it like the treasure it truly is.

Fashion Cleaners owners James McCain (right) and Philip McCain can protect your treasured wedding dress in a Keepsake box.

Fashion Cleaners has two locations: 801 W. Wall and in the Imperial Shopping Center at Midkiff and Wadley. They do all kinds of cleaning and laundry, as well as alterations, reweaving and keepsaking of bridal gowns. Pickup and delivery are available.

Daly, Orlando close to three-year contract

ORLANDO, Fla. (AP) — Chuck Daly moved closer to his return to the NBA on Monday, working out final details on a contract that will pay him a reported $15 million over three years to coach the Orlando Magic.

"Nothing has been formalized," Magic spokesman Alex Martins said. "The time line, we don't know."

Two weeks ago, Daly rejected an informal offer from Magic general manager John Gabriel.

After Daly withdrew from consideration, he said: "They never actually offered me the job. It's a wonderful job, a great area. But for me it's not going to be there. Just one of those things."

Just one of those things, that is, until last week. The Magic and Daly began talking in earnest during the middle of the week and continued through Monday.

Daly, 67, led the Detroit Pistons to NBA titles in 1989 and 1990. He last coached the New Jersey Nets during the 1993-94 season. He coached the U.S. Olympic team to the gold medal in the 1992 Barcelona Games.

The Magic had tried to lure Chicago Bulls coach Phil Jackson with a five-year, $30 million offer but Jackson said he couldn't make a decision until after the playoffs. The Bulls are facing the Utah Jazz in the finals this week.

The Magic also held informal talks with Bob Hill and Richie Adubato, who replaced Brian Hill in midseason as coach during a players revolt. But Bob Hill, a former Magic assistant, was fired as coach of the San Antonio Spurs early last season. He withdrew his name from consideration last week.

Erving discussing front office job with Magic

ORLANDO, Fla. — Former NBA superstar Julius Erving is close to a deal to become a vice president with the Orlando Magic, according to broadcast reports Monday.

The Magic confirmed they were negotiating with the Hall of Famer, but declined to say how far along talks were.

"It's still ongoing," Magic spokesman Alex Martins said. "They've been going on for about a week."

Martins wouldn't say what job the team was discussing with Erving but said it was in the front office. WCPX-TV in Orlando, citing unnamed sources, said it was a vice president's job and that a deal was close.

Erving, known throughout his college and professional career as Dr. J, is currently working for NBC and is covering the NBA Finals.

Erving told Orlando radio station WDBO on Monday that he was headed to the airport in Chicago, but wouldn't say whether his flight was bound for Orlando.

MVP: Malone feels postseason pressure

great player, but there are a few guys in this league who are great players that you want to put on the line."

Malone shot only 57 percent from the foul line in last year's playoffs, including six misses in Utah's Game 7 loss to Seattle in the Western Conference finals. But this postseason, he has shot 76 percent.

The Rodman-Malone battle, expected to be the most interesting of the series, didn't really materialize in Game 1.

Luc Longley and Brian Williams defended Malone more often than Rodman and Rodman was such an offensive nonentity that Malone ignored him.

That Malone outscored Rodman 23-4 wasn't surprising. That Malone outrebounded the NBA's six-time rebounding leader 15-12 was somewhat unexpected. That Rodman never tried to mess with Malone's mind was downright stunning.

Rodman said Monday that the Jazz are too well-coached and mature to be bothered by his shenanigans. Rodman didn't even get a technical foul Sunday, the first game this postseason in which he hasn't drawn a "T."

"I'm not going to do too many of my antics and all that crap," Rodman said. "I'm just trying to get through this, be more offensive-minded and do my job."

Rodman averaged only 5.7 points and 4.9 shots per game during the season.

"Karl's not going to play defense outside the perimeter," he said. "I have to shoot that 15-footer. If I make it, great. If I miss it, get back and play defense. I've got to make them play 5-on-5 instead of 5-on-4."

Rodman's offense is the least of Utah's concerns. The Jazz committed 18 turnovers, mostly on sloppy passes. John Stockton, the NBA's career assist leader, gave the ball away a season-high seven times.

"If you're going to play like that, then you're not going to give yourself much of a chance," Utah coach Jerry Sloan said. "We're playing against a great, great team. Michael Jordan is the greatest player ever. But, you know, it boils down to the simple things. If you don't handle the basketball, you don't deserve to win."

GOLF: Singh wins fourth tournament

(From 1C)

"His length is a big advantage under these conditions."

Singh nearly lost his lead at the 14th, which could have been a disaster if debris from a flooded creek had not prevented his drive from going into the hazard. He was able to punch out short of the green, then chipped up to 5 feet and hit the par putt while Hoch was birdieing to cut the gap to a shot.

Hoch rolled in a 10-foot birdie putt at the 15th to temporarily tie for the lead. But Singh — putting last and playing in the same pairing — came right back with a 4-foot birdie putt seconds later to retain his one-shot lead.

Singh all but locked up the victory when Hoch found a greenside bunker with his tee shot on the par-3 16th and failed to get out with his next shot. He settled for a double-bogey. Hoch faded to a 73 that left him at 11-under 205 along with Tommy Tolles and Lee Janzen.

Jack Nicklaus, the 57-year-old designer of the Muirfield Village course, continued his strong play with two birdies down the stretch to complete a 69. He finished at 8-under-par 208, tied for eighth.

BOYS: Bates, Walker re-sign with team offense.

(From 1C)

"I'm definitely excited," Miller said. "You won't see too many dual receivers in the league like me and him (Irvin). This was my first choice. This is a team that has a chance to get to the top."

Miller had 56 catches for 735 yards and three touchdowns for the Broncos last season. He's had five 1,000-yard receiving seasons.

Aikman's mood brightened at the idea of throwing to Miller. Irvin had 64 receptions last season, but the Cowboys got only 89 catches from their other wide receivers.

"He's a guy who gives us a tremendous deep threat, something we have not had," Aikman said. "He's a guy who's proven what he can do in this league."

But most of the locker room buzz Monday surrounded Irvin, whose problems have marred team morale since he face drug charges and a resulting five-game NFL suspension last year.

He continues to put in community service time linked to his sentence of four years of adjudicated probation for pleading no-contest to felony cocaine possession.

Irvin has told friends he is tired of the public scrutiny in Dallas and would prefer to play elsewhere, but the Cowboys would take a major salary cap hit if they were to trade the five-time Pro Bowl receiver.

"I'm not the brightest guy in the world, but I do realize that won't happen," Aikman said. "He won't get traded just like I won't or Emmitt (Smith) won't or some other guys won't. It's not going to happen."

Smith said he understood why Irvin might want to leave, given the negative attention he's received regarding his brushes with the law.

"And I've heard some rumors of some things that have been going on that I found very apalling," Smith said. "With that in mind, if the rumors are true, then I can understand where he's coming from."

Also Monday, the Cowboys released 39-year-old center Ray Donaldson for salary cap purposes. Switzer said he would not rule out Donaldson being re-signed by the Cowboys, but not at the $800,000 he was scheduled to make this season. Donaldson balked at the team's request that he take a pay cut.

Clay Shiver and John Flannery are expected to contend for the starting center job.

Dallas also announced the re-signing of two veteran free agents — running back Herschel Walker and safety Bill Bates — to one-year contracts. Walker and Bates were both key members of the Cowboys special teams last season. Walker will be entering his 12th NFL season; Bates will be playing his 15th and what he has said will be the last.

OPEN: Kafelnikov highest seed remaining

(From 1C)

He was knocked out in the fourth round Monday by Bruguera, 3-6, 6-4, 6-3, 6-4.

Take Arazi, a poetry-reading Moroccan ranked No. 55. He overcame a toothache to beat seventh-seeded Marcelo Rios — one of the title favorites — 6-2, 6-1, 5-7, 7-6 (7-4) and become the first Moroccan to reach a Grand Slam quarterfinal.

Take Kuerten, the 66th-ranked Brazilian who followed his upset of Thomas Muster by completing a 5-7, 6-1, 6-2, 1-6, 7-5 win over Andrei Medvedev.

Take Blanco, a Spaniard ranked No. 111 who had won only one match all year coming into the French Open. He overcame Petr Kora — runner-up in 1992 — 1-6, 6-1, 7-5, 6-4.

Take Rafter, who advanced to his first Grand Slam final eight by downing fellow Australian Mark Woodforde, 6-2, 5-7, 6-1, 6-2.

Clinching quarterfinal berths the previous day were Dewulf, a Belgian qualifier ranked No. 122; Norman, a 65th-ranked Swede; and Kafelnikov, the defending champion who has said it would take a miracle to retain his title.

Bruguera, who has battled ankle, knee and shoulder injuries for the past two years, recovered from a slow start against Chang to establish himself as a serious contender for a title he won in 1993 and 1994.

Chang, who won the French Open in 1989 at age 17, was in command through the first set but gradually let Bruguera take control from the baseline with his wrenching top-spin forehand.

"I was attacking Sergi, coming in," Chang said. "Basically, I didn't stick with it. I think that cost me a lot of points. I think in many ways it kind of cost me the match. I feel it was mine for the taking.

"I should have been less patient, taken more of my chances. I needed to be a bit more aggressive. For some reason, I just backed off that much and allowed Sergi to be able to fight his way back."

The match was soured by repeated questioning of line calls, and an exchange of words between Bruguera's coach and father, Luis, and Chang's brother and coach, Carl, in the players' box.

Bruguera later accused Chang of trying to distract him by disputing so many calls.

"He was going to check balls that were this far out," he said, holding his hands a foot apart. "Maybe he needs glasses."

Arazi, who relaxes by reciting poetry with his coach, played nearly flawless tennis in the first two sets against Rios. The left-handed Moroccan dictated the pace with a powerful one-handed backhand.

The Kuerten-Medvedev match had been suspended at 2-2 in the fifth set because of darkness Sunday. Kuerten squandered a match point at 5-4 and two more at 6-5 before converting on his third with a running lob.

The Brazilian — who wears a blue and yellow shirt, blue shorts, yellow socks and blue shoes — has become a favorite with the French fans.

The same goes for Blanco, a 1994 Spanish junior champion who outplayed Korda.

CHANG: Bruguera has 16th ranking

(From 1C)

mer, and has had a tough time in his comeback.

Once considered strictly a clay player, Bruguera is trying to adjust to other surfaces.

He reached the final in Key Biscayne, Fla., earlier this year on a hard court, beating Chang along the way, and was also runner-up in Milan, Italy, on carpet.

But it's the French Open that still counts the most for Bruguera, who meets Hicham Arazi of Morocco in the quarterfinals.

"This victory gave me much confidence," Bruguera said. "I beat the No. 2 in the world, which is not very easy on any surface.

"You appreciate winning even more after you've been hurt a lot. ... I wasn't happy about the way I was playing. I couldn't really see how to turn the match."

He decided to stop contesting calls and looking at ball marks. Instead, he concentrated on his own game. It did the trick.

Bruguera said he was tight throughout the match.

During the match, his father and coach, Luis, got into a shouting exchange with Chang's brother and coach, Carl. Sitting near each other in the players' box, Carl complained that Luis was apparently trying to coach his son.

Both Brugueras told Carl to keep quiet.

Asked if he thought he had a realistic chance of again winning the title, Bruguera replied: "Of course. If not, I would be at home watching TV."

Reports give mixed economic picture

Income slows, manufacturing rebounds

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Growth in Americans' income slowed to a crawl in April, but a surprisingly strong manufacturing rebound in May raised fears the U.S. economy may return to a pace likely to aggravate inflation.

Personal incomes rose just 0.1 percent, the smallest increase in six months, the Commerce Department said Monday. With less money earned, spending growth slowed as well, also edging up 0.1 percent.

That fits with a variety of statistics suggesting the economy slowed sharply as the second quarter began after racing at a breakneck speed during the first quarter.

A separate Commerce Department report showed construction spending in April fell 1 percent, the first decline of the year.

However, a third report suggests April's moderation may prove only the briefest of respites and that growth will soon return to a level likely to exacerbate inflationary pressures.

The National Association of Purchasing Management's index of business activity — a gauge of growth in manufacturing — rose to 57.1 percent in May from 54.2 percent the month before, a bigger advance than many economists expected. A reading above 50 percent suggests an expanding economy while a reading below 50 signals contraction.

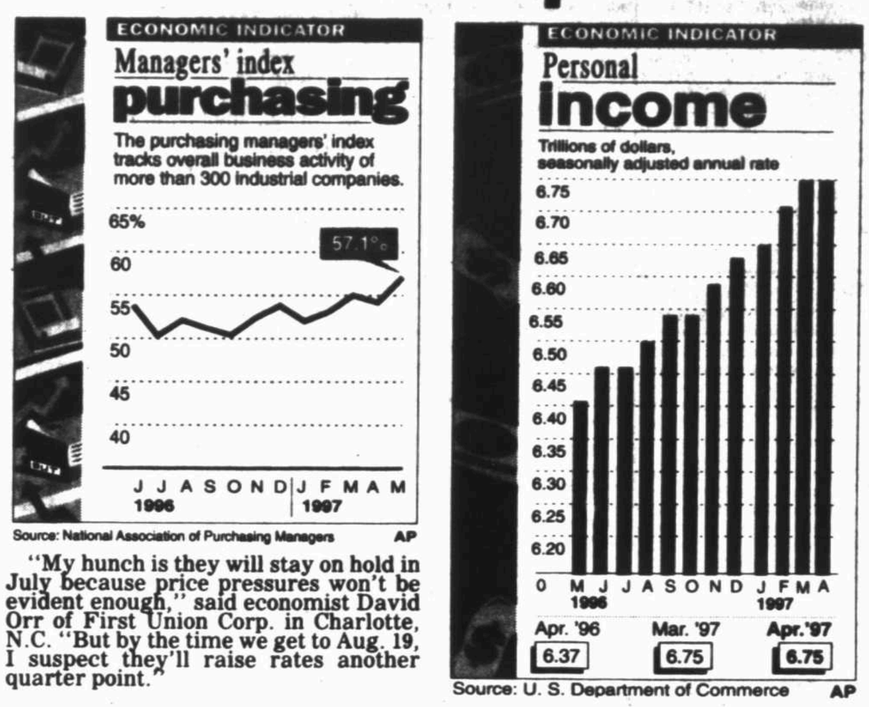

"The economy started the second quarter on a slow note but it looks like we're going to end on a stronger note," said economist Gary Thayer of A.G. Edwards & Sons Inc., a St. Louis stock brokerage.

The economy's growth rate clearly has moderated from a 10-year high of 5.8 percent in the first quarter, but how sharply and for how long are critical questions for financial markets and the Federal Reserve officials who set interest rates.

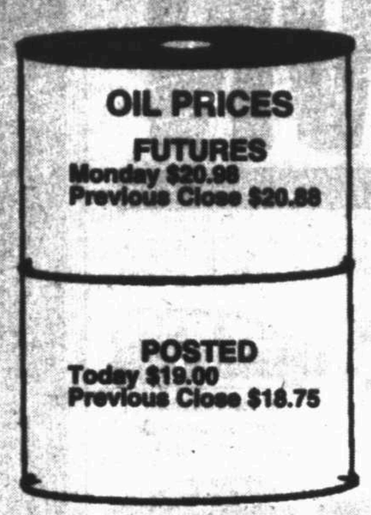

If growth has slowed to a 2 percent rate in the second quarter, as many analysts believe, and stays there into next year, the Federal Reserve may get by without increasing interest rates further.

But if growth rebounds quickly to more robust levels, Fed policy-makers — who raised short-term rates by one-quarter percentage point March 25 — may feel compelled to raise them at their next meeting, July 1-2, or the one after, Aug. 19.

"My hunch is they will stay on hold in July because price pressures won't be evident enough," said economist David Orr of First Union Corp. in Charlotte, N.C. "But by the time we get to Aug. 19, I suspect they'll raise rates another quarter point."

BUSINESS BRIEFING

NATURAL GAS PRICES
Monday $2.110

Prices edge up

NEW YORK — Crude oil prices moved higher Monday together with heating oil and gasoline, following a week-ending decline triggered by the expiration of the June gasoline contract.

Crude oil for delivery in July settled at $20.98 per barrel, up 10 cents at the New York Mercantile Exchange.

Crude, which traded as high as $21.17 a barrel, came back during the session in trading that was mostly uneventful. The weekly release Tuesday of inventory data from the American Petroleum Institute had some traders holding off on taking big, new positions.

Unleaded gasoline for delivery in July settled at 62.99 cents a gallon, up 0.18 cent. On Friday, when the June contract expired, gasoline lost 1.47 cents.

Home heating oil for delivery in July settled at 56.32 cents a gallon, up 0.48 cent.

Natural gas prices were higher, bucking the trend. Contracts for delivery in July settled at $2.110 per 1,000 cubic feet, up 12.9 cents.

Dollar rises

NEW YORK — The dollar shot up against the German mark and rose against most major currencies Monday on fears that political change in France and contention in Germany could threaten plans for a common European currency in 1999.

Hardest hit of the European currencies was the German mark, which came under intense selling pressure. In New York, the dollar settled at 1.7300 marks, up from 1.7063 on Friday. It last settled above Monday's level on May 6.

Against the yen, the dollar rose to 116.58 yen from 116.22 yen Friday. The pound fell against the dollar, dropping to $1.6359 from $1.6410.

Other late-dollar rates in New York compared with late Friday: 1.4328 Swiss francs, up from 1.4129; 5.8320 French francs, up from 5.7595; 1,702 Italian lire, up from 1,692.50; 1.3757 Canadian dollars, down from 1.3770.

Dow retreats

NEW YORK — Smaller company stocks set new highs again, boosting the broad market, but blue-chip shares struggled Monday amid some new data contradicting recent signs that inflationary pressures are easing.

The Dow Jones industrial average gave back an early 23-point gain, falling 41.64 to 7,289.40 even as bonds recovered from a morning dip on news of surprisingly robust manufacturing activity during May.

Broader indicators were mixed. The Russell 2000 list of smaller companies closed at a record high for the seventh straight session, bringing its gain over that span to 3.6 percent.

Advancing issues outnumbered decliners by a 3-to-2 margin on the New York Stock Exchange, where volume totaled just 432.67 million shares.

The Standard & Poor's 500-stock list fell 1.92 to 846.36, and the NYSE's composite index fell 0.24 to 441.54. Both big-company measures flirted with records during the session before turning lower.

The Russell 2000 rose 2.76 to 383.52. The American Stock Exchange composite index rose 1.79 to 607.17.

The technology-heavy Nasdaq composite index, which ended only slightly lower on Friday despite an opening plunge of nearly 50 points, rose 4.47 to 1,404.79.

Small Business Award

Vice President Gore, left, presents David Giuliani, president and chief executive officer of the Optiva Corp. of Bellevue, Wash. with the National Small Business Person of the Year award during a ceremony at the Old Executive Office Building in Washington Monday. The Optiva Corp., begun in 1988, manufactures the Sonicare brand of sound wave-powered toothbrushes and has grown from 10 to 250 employees with over $50 million in sales in 1995.

Amoco to sell one-third of U.S. assets

■ Producer seeks to cut costs, focus on Gulf, overseas opportunities.

N.Y. Times News Service

Chicago — Amoco Corp. said it will sell about one-third of its U.S. oil and gas properties to cut costs and focus more on drilling in the Gulf of Mexico and outside the U.S.

The wells and oil leases, which analysts value at as much as $2.5 billion, represented about 15 percent of Amoco's total U.S. oil and gas reserves and 10 percent of its U.S. production in 1996.

Amoco, the fifth-largest U.S. oil company, focused on natural gas operations in the U.S. and fell behind rival companies in exploring other countries where prospects for discoveries are better, analysts said.

"They want to shed their image of being just a stodgy U.S. company," said Fadel Gheit, an analyst with Fahnestock & Co. "They're taking more of their capital spending now and directing it to the deep water or overseas."

The oil-producing regions of the U.S. are the most exploited in the world, and large finds are becoming increasingly less likely except in Gulf of Mexico waters deeper than 1,000 feet, where inadequate technology made drilling impossible until only a few years ago.

Chicago-based Amoco said it will use part of the sale proceeds to finance exploration and production at more promising sites in Venezuela, Trinidad, Egypt, Canada and the Central Asian nations bordering the Caspian Sea, as well as the Gulf of Mexico. Amoco declined to estimate how much it would get from the sale and how much it will save, though it said the potential for cost-cutting is "significant."

Amoco is selling higher-cost properties, said Richard Flury, executive vice president in charge of Amoco's exploration and production businesses, in a conference call.

The average cost for getting each barrel of oil equivalent (which includes crude oil, natural gas and natural gas liquids such as propane) from the properties is about $4.45. The average for the rest of its properties is $3.77.

The company said it hasn't yet determined how the sale will affect employment, though Flury said "there could very well be layoffs as a result of this."

The sale doesn't include properties controlled by Altura Energy Ltd., a joint venture between Amoco and Shell Oil Co. in western Texas and southeastern New Mexico.

Two-thirds of the properties being sold produce primarily natural gas, while one-third primarily produce oil.

Chrysler sales fall for fourth month

Associated Press

DETROIT — Chrysler Corp. said Monday its domestic sales fell 17 percent in May, its fourth consecutive month of lower car and truck sales compared with its strong performance a year ago.

May's decline at the No. 3 U.S. automaker was another sign of a slowdown in spending by the nation's consumers.

"The spring market is significantly softer than a year ago, when we were setting all-time sales records in most categories," said James P. Holden, Chrysler vice president of sales and marketing. "Competition is fierce."

Chrysler's sales were down across the board: Cars were off 18 percent and light trucks declined 16 percent.

The company blamed only part of the decline in truck sales on a monthlong strike at its Detroit engine plant, which halted production of some of its most profitable models. Supplies of those models remained adequate.

Among the strike-affected models, sales of the Jeep Grand Cherokee were off 16 percent, Dodge Ram pickup sales plummeted 36 percent, while sales of the redesigned Dodge Dakota pickup were up 18 percent.

Analysts expect the industry to report lower sales overall, following April's 4 percent decline. The spring slump so far has mostly affected the Big Three automakers; most foreign automakers with redesigned models have seen significant gains in the U.S. market.

Sweden's Volvo Car Corp. reported its May sales rose 4 percent. Japan's Subaru said its sales were about even with those a year ago.

General Motors Corp., Toyota Motor Corp., Honda Motor Co., Nissan Motor Corp. and most smaller automakers planned to report their May sales figures Tuesday, followed by Ford Motor Co. on Wednesday.

Last month's sales reports face a tough comparison with May 1996, which ran at the strongest annualized rate of any month last year. Chrysler's sales a year ago set a company record for any month in its history.

Chrysler's sales of minivans last month increased 15 percent over April's sales for their third best May ever, but were still down 6 percent from a year ago. The overall minivan market has weakened in recent months.

The slower sales are good news for buyers. The slump has forced Chrysler and other automakers to increase spending on incentives — rebates, lower loan rates and discount lease deals.

INVESTOR'S GUIDE

'Market-beating' systems usually too good to be true

By Eric Tyson

Tyson

Q: I recently received an e-mail message that says, "You can earn higher returns than the average mutual fund manager with less risk and no expensive commissions or fees." It seems that this approach advocates investing in large blue-chip stocks at prices far below their fair market value and reaping returns of 30 percent or more per year.

Is that possible? Do you think it's worth my spending $19.95 for two monthly issues of a newsletter?

A: I'm sure you've heard the expression, "If something sounds too good to be true, it probably is." Well, in the investment world, I say, "If something sounds too good to be true, it definitely is."

Books, newsletter pundits and various stock pickers always claim to have a system to beat the system. The notion of investing in large-company stocks that are temporarily depressed is nearly as old as the stock market itself.

Millions of sophisticated and informed investors scour the market on a daily basis looking for good values. That's one reason why I think that the stock market is fairly efficient — that is to say that most stocks sell at a price close to their real value.

I think it's a waste of your time and money to be reading a monthly newsletter that advocates moving in and out of individual stocks.

If you want professional guidance on which stocks to buy, consider investing through a professionally managed mutual fund.

In the years ahead, don't expect to be earning the 30 percent per year that the U.S. stock market has averaged in recent years, nor should you even expect to earn the 15 percent per year the market has averaged during the past decade. Over the long term, the stock market has averaged 10 percent per year.

Q: My wife and I are 65 years of age, retired, healthy and financially comfortable on $3,000 per month income.

We have $200,000 invested in bank certificates of deposit currently yielding 6 percent. We don't need this money to live on and have simply been rolling over the CDs at maturity.

How can we invest this portion of our nest egg to achieve income as well as growth?

A: Overall, at your age, your longer-term investment portfolio should be about 45 percent in stocks, with the balance in bonds.

If you want growth as well as income, you should consider a balanced-type portfolio.

If you're not in a high tax bracket, balanced mutual funds should do the trick.

If you are in a high tax bracket, you should invest in municipal bond funds separate from stock funds.

Q: My husband contributes the maximum that he can into his company 401(k) plan. In recent years, he has done some consulting work on the side as a self-employed person. Can he also set up a retirement plan for his self-employment work?

A: Absolutely. He could establish either a simplified employee pension plan or a Keogh plan.

With a Keogh plan, he could contribute up to 20 percent of his net self-employment income.

The SEP's contribution limit amounts to about 13 percent of a person's net self-employment income. However, a SEP plan offers more flexibility in the level of the year-to-year contribution.

SEP and Keogh plans can be established through most major investment firms. Start by examining those offered by the leading mutual fund companies and discount brokerage firms
