Leaders bury rivalries

Bush, Yeltsin hail new era

■ Presidents sign declaration outlining principles for relations between U.S., Russia.

N.Y. Times News Service

WASHINGTON — President Bush and President Boris N. Yeltsin of Russia Saturday proclaimed a new era of "friendship and partnership" as they declared a formal end to seven decades of rivalry, then agreed to exchange visits in Moscow and Washington by year's end.

Meeting in shirtsleeves and sweaters under snowy skies at the presidential retreat at Camp David, Md., the two leaders reviewed the prospects for further support for Yeltsin's program of democratic reforms and for arms control proposals that could reduce to as low as 2,500 the number of nuclear warheads that each nation deploys.

But they indicated after their 3½-hour meeting that no agreements were reached on either issue, and that the matters would be taken up in talks later this winter. Secretary of State James A. Baker III will visit Moscow this month to establish the basis for further arms control talks, Bush said.

The centerpiece of the meeting was a declaration signed by the two men that outlined general princi-

Pulse poll results

Most Midlanders would not vote for a proven adulterer as president, if this week's Cityline COMMUNITY PULSE is any indication. Slightly more than 60 percent of the 300-plus callers whose opinions were registered in the non-scientific poll said they would not vote for a candidate with a proven history of infidelity.

"I feel that if a man's wife can't trust him, I can't trust him," said Bill Houghton, whose sentiment was echoed by many callers who left comments on the survey system.

This week's poll, spurred by the furor surrounding unsubstantiated allegations against Democratic frontrunner Gov. Bill Clinton of Arkansas, asked a general question of the suitability of any candidate against whom charges were not only lodged — but proved.

"Infidelity is a very valid issue in politics. A person who cheats on his wife is an infidel and should not be in public office," Mrs. David Richey said.

Among those who disagreed was the unidentified caller who said, "If it is something in the past, it is no longer an issue. Almost everyone makes some kind of mistake, but if they rectify it . . . it shouldn't be an issue."

"Our leaders should set an example for our children and should be required to have impeccable behavior and ideals," Laverne Smith said.

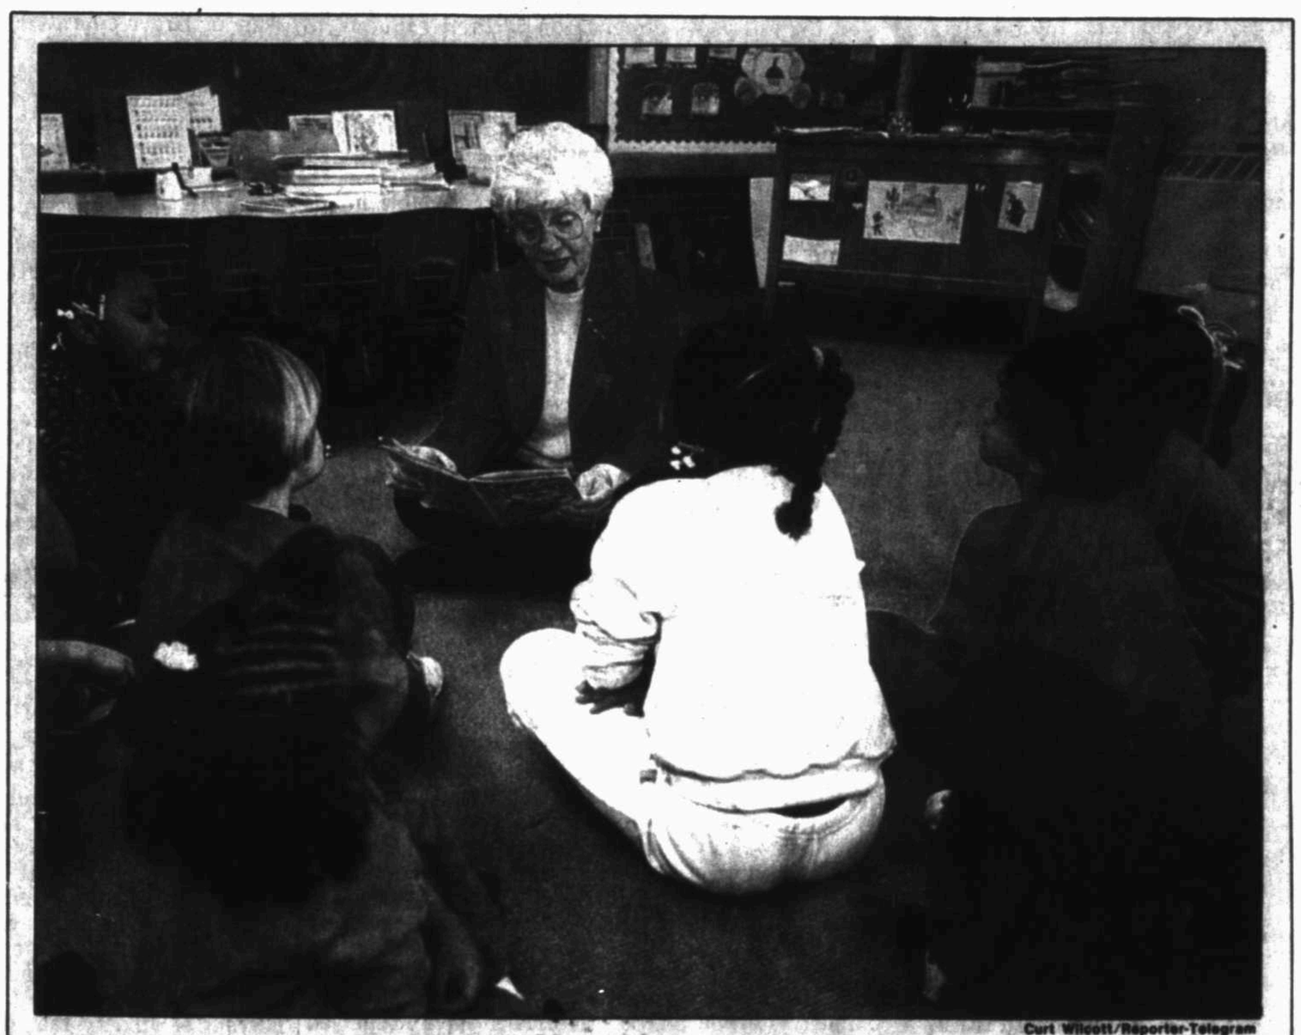

Said another, "This is an indication of his moral standards . . . how would we know that he would not be open to bribes or somthing?"

But other callers countered. "You have to look beyond their personal behavior . . . to their whole persona, not just one thing. If a person is remorseful, and shows he is willing to change and has the qualifications to lead, I believe I could vote for him."

Another went to extremes to make his point: "I would vote for a three-toed sloth if I thought he would make the best president. But as long as presidential candidates continue to make their family life an issue by dragging their wives all over the country, which has absolutely nothing to do with their ability to govern, we can expect this kind of behavior . . . from voters."

Charlotte Starr, an elementary school counselor, visits with kindergarten students at Pease Elementary. Monday begins the national observance of School Counseling Week.

Counselors play key role in education

By Myra Lee Salcedo
Staff Writer

Students need more than academics to make the grade, according to several Midland school counselors.

"They also need self-esteem," said Charlotte Starr, elementary school counselor for several schools in Midland Independent School District.

Counselors, too, may sometimes need a boost, and Monday begins the national observance of School Counseling Week.

Ms. Starr said counselors deal with everything from drug and alcohol abuse to depression in youngsters. "They may be having difficulty at home with problems such as divorce, to something as simple as not getting along with their brothers or sisters."

The counselor said the school district provides support groups for students.

Glenn Woods, MISD coordinator of Guidance and Counseling, said, "A counselor's overall goal is to help students live up to their full potential — academically, personally and professionally."

Council firms stand against frills spending

By Debbie Lincecum

With available reserves at a minimum, City Council members are taking a hard line against unbudgeted spending.

At issue is the general fund's "working capital," sometimes called surplus, that council members say is vital to operations.

"We could run the city about two months on our working capital if for some reason our revenue didn't come in as we planned," said Buddy Sipes, District 3 representative.

"The citizens are asking for more accountability with tax money," said Michael DeVaughn, District 2 council member. "Excessive spending definitely needs to be stopped."

State court's single voice splinters in schools ruling

AUSTIN — When the Texas Supreme Court justices spoke with one voice on school funding, they used fewer words.

Unanimity was forceful and brief. It took 15 pages the first time the court told the Legislature in 1989 to write a new school finance law, and 13 pages the second.

The court's 7-2 decision last week to slay the Robin Hood law, the latest in a series of attempts to equalize school funding, produced a bombardment of verbiage — 175 pages in all — and language as messy as in a divorce. The justices accused one another

U.S. seeks new path as confrontation with Soviets ends

Cold War marked America's psyche

Editor's note: First of six articles on how the end of the Cold War may affect the future of the United States.

By Richard Bernstein
N.Y. Times News Service

The Cold War, gone but not lamented, had a powerful effect on America, not only on government, politics and military strategy, but also in a subtler and even contradictory way on what might be called the national psyche, the collective consciousness.

Fear of the sort suggested in Sidney Lumet's "Fail Safe," a 1964 movie ending with the nuclear destruction of Moscow and New York, certainly reflected at least one element of the American mind during the Cold War, and anxiety over the possibility of annihilation may be one of its permanent legacies.

But the effect of the superpower conflict on the American psyche was neither uniform nor uncomplicated.

Instead, it moved minds in various ways. Certainly, it affected emotions and ples for relations between the United States and Russia.

BURY: Bush, Yeltsin agree to exchange visits

The declaration was largely a restatement of cooperative policies established between Washington and Moscow before the Soviet Union collapsed and Mikhail S. Gorbachev resigned as Soviet president at the end of December.

But by endorsing and signing the statement Saturday, Bush lent prestige to Yeltsin as the leader of Russia and gave him the same kind of boost that Gorbachev often gained in his trips abroad.

"Russia and the United States do not regard each other as potential adversaries," the declaration says. "From now on, the relationship will be characterized by friendship and partnership founded on mutual trust and respect and a common commitment to democracy and economic freedom."

The two leaders were accompanied to Camp David by retinues of senior aides, including a roster of advisers to Yeltsin who are largely unknown to most Americans. They included the Russian foreign minister, Andrei Kozyrev; Marshal Yevgeny I. Shaposhnikov, who commands the combined military of the Commonwealth of Independent States; Yuli M. Vorontsov, chief Russian delegate to the United Nations; Yevgeny P. Velikhov, deputy chairman of the Russian Academy of Sciences, and Vladimir P. Lukin, the ambassador-designate of the policy planning office at the State Department and Baker's senior adviser on Russia.

The only new issue of substance to emerge from the session appeared to be an offer by Bush to set up a joint center in which American scientists would pursue research with some of the 2,000 or more Russian nuclear experts who are being displaced by Yeltsin's sharp military cutbacks.

Yeltsin said he enthusiastically supports the proposal, which is aimed at preventing the scientists from selling their services to terrorists or other nations seeking to develop a nuclear arsenal. Russia has already begun offering raises and other benefits to the scientists to keep them from leaving, he said.

At an afternoon news conference, the two leaders warmly praised each other's leadership.

The American president said he has "a very warm feeling in my heart about what he has done and is trying to do, and I consider him my friend." In return, he received an outpouring of good will from his guest.

"I consider I would be very lucky in life, both as a political person and just as a man, to have met George Bush," Yeltsin said. "I'm just tremendously impressed by his wisdom. I think he has incredible qualities not only as a political person but also as a person, as a really great political figure of the United States."

Later, perhaps with a measure of pride, he said: "We call each other on the telephone. We say Boris and say George. And already this says a lot."

Translating affability into substance, the two leaders said that the enmity that had their countries over most of seven decades is forever ended.

As Yeltsin put it: "Today one might say that there has been written and drawn a new line, and crossed out all of the things that have been associated with the Cold War.

"From now on we do not consider ourselves to be potential enemies, as it had been previously in our military doctrine. This is the historic value of this meeting."

FUNDS: Court's single voice splinters in ruling of being deceitful, cynical and supportive of a state income tax.

But for all the fussing, court observers say, the court of five Democrats and four Republicans remained surprisingly united on the central point: that state lawmakers must devise a school funding law that treats the state's 3 million schoolchildren equally, regardless of whether they live in a poor rural subdivision or in a suburb full of mansions.

The judges, all elected statewide, also displayed political savvy by issuing a decision that allayed short-term fears of school closure and unpaid property taxes while offering state leaders more time than ever before to agree on an alternative, lawyers and other observers said.

Even the losers in the decision have praised it for offering stability. For the first time in years, school officials will be able to budget a year in advance.

The main criticism — and the one that has dogged the previous two Supreme Court rulings — is that the opinion still doesn't tell lawmakers what to do.

"We're approaching a point of gridlock," said Mark Yudof, University of Texas law school dean and an expert in school finance. "The court keeps shutting doors to reasonable alternatives.

"The common law method is the courts don't tell the parties what to do. But my feeling is this is not an auto accident case. There are 3 million schoolchildren and billions of dollars" at stake, Yudof said. "This litigation takes forever. It's very time-consuming and expensive. I really think you have the obligation in massive litigation of this sort to really lay out what it is you're supposed to do."

Gov. Ann Richards and legislative leaders asked the court for direction in written requests to the court before it issued its decision, but their requests went unheeded. However, the court apparently listened to their pleas to give them sufficient time to craft an alternative.

"I think that reasonable minds could say they came to a realization they made a mistake in the last two rounds in that the deadlines were too short, and there wasn't enough time to pull it together," said Texas Education Agency attorney Kevin O'Hanlon.

Most court observers had expected a split decision on the latest school finance law. What was surprising to some is that, even in splitting on the constitutionality of the law, the judges did not back away from the previous legal standards for what constitutes equal access to education.

"The one thing they remain unanimous on is the equity standard. We're still faced with the most rigorous equity standard imposed by any court in the nation," O'Hanlon said.

In contrast to previous rulings, the Supreme Court did not decide that the latest law was inequitable.

Many believed the law — which redistributes local property tax revenues from wealthy districts to poorer ones within 188 countywide or larger education districts — made greater strides than any of the previous attempts. The $14 billion spent each year on public schools comes from a combination of state money and local property tax revenue. This time, the law was challenged by wealthy schools.

The court knocked down the law because it violated two provisions of the state constitution: a prohibition against a statewide property tax, and a requirement that citizens have a right to vote to tax themselves.

The discussions that led to the latest ruling in the 2-decades-old litigation remain a secret because judicial conduct codes do not allow the justices to discuss a pending case.

However, comments contained in the four opinions as well as observations by attorneys involved in the case point to bitter disagreements.

The justices collided not only on whether the Robin Hood law was constitutional but also on how long the law should remain in effect once it was deemed illegal.

Justices Bob Gammage, a Democrat, and John Cornyn, a Republican, while part of the majority, argued in separate opinions that the majority erred in allowing the state until June 1993 to correct the system. Cornyn said the court was allowing an extra year because of "political pressures."

The extra year also means that school finance will be a campaign issue for legislators.

Justices Lloyd Doggett and Oscar Mauzy, Democrats and former state legislators, joined in a stinging dissent accusing the majority of writing an opinion that will force the state to adopt an income tax. For example, the two wrote: "A further indication of the majority's determination to nudge the Legislature toward an income tax is the rather clear indication that any attempt to revise property tax financing must be charted through a judicial minefield."

PSYCHE: Conflict marked America's self-image

attitudes about the United States and the world; it could inspire fear or exultation, patriotism or national self-loathing.

Scholars, looking back particularly on the early years of the superpower confrontation, have seen its influences on such divergent elements of American life as the organization of the family and even the success of modern abstract painting.

Even the matter of nuclear dread is full of complexity. While popular fiction over 40 years showed the threat or the effects of a nuclear holocaust, it is difficult to tell how many Americans actually spent much of their time worrying about about the danger of nuclear war.

Did the Cold War permanently change the way Americans think or look at the world? For many, it gave purpose to national life, arising out of the perceived need to defend American freedom and values.

For others it created powerful skepticism about America's role in the world and about the goodness and integrity of the American government. Even as the confrontation with the Soviet Union inspired many to patriotic fervor and a belief in American superiority, others found it alienating.

These people saw the conflict as a grand and convenient excuse to blame national shortcomings on an external enemy of exaggerated importance — not the first or last time Americans have displayed this trait. The national view of Japan right now is a vivid example.

If there is a single permanent effect, it is probably in the pervasive sense of the globe's fragility, an awareness of mankind's capacity to self-destruct that has been compounded by environmental degradation and the theory of global warming.

As a result of the Cold War, Americans may actually be less confident that science, technology and enlightened control of nature will lead to constantly improving lives — a belief that prevailed for much of this century.

"The Cold War was a major organizing principle of American life, politically and culturally and in other ways as well," said Alan Brinkley, a historian at Columbia University. "But that doesn't mean it cut in one direction."

"On the one hand, the existence of nuclear weapons and of a clear, distinct and powerful enemy with those weapons created an undercurrent of anxiety that found its way into films, novels and presumably into ordinary life," Brinkley said.

Part of that anxiety, he said, translated into "a strengthened sense of mankind's capacity for evil" and "a great skepticism about the human capacity to make wise decisions."

But, Brinkley added, "the Cold War also gave an enormous boost to American exceptionalism and triumphalism, the idea that America was carrying the banner of freedom in a world in which freedom was threatened."

But however fraught with anxieties, the very predictability of the superpower confrontation provided a certain reassurance, particularly in the later years when the threat seemed less immediate.

The enemy was easy to identify — a single country run by unlikable men who seemed nonetheless to be psychologically stable and in control. In this sense the end of the Cold War and the dissolution of the Soviet empire could produce a new unease stemming from a more complicated, less predictable world order.

Moreover, the ultimate instruments of Cold War terror, nuclear weapons, are far from being eliminated. Weapons of mass destruction existed in a handful of stable countries, but now the prospect is that they will be held by a larger number of countries, not all of them stable, some of them newly created out of the Soviet Union's disintegration.

Antrim, Bradley Robertson, Michael Robertson and Matt Spencer. Charles A. Bell is the team's coach.

For the state competition, the MHS students devised the TALON (Transporting Apparatus for Length or Nearness). The TALON — equipped with a battery-operated light, mirror and magnet to see behind large appliances like refrigerators — succeeded in picking up everything from a two-pound sack of flour to a sewing needle.

The TALON had to facilitate handling, placing, retrieving and manipulating common household or office items that are beyond ordinary reach.

Saturday, the students successfully presented the project at the national competition.

Sponsors of the national competition were the National Society of Engineers, the National Talent Network and the Junior Engineering Technicak Society.

MISD counselors interact with other community services and even offer effective parenting programs.

Ms. Starr said counselors visit pupils in their classrooms once or twice a month to breed familiarity.

"If they have a crisis in their family and they already know who I am, then it makes it easier for them to come talk to me," she said. "We are fortunate, at the elementary level we spend about 95 percent of our time with students."

She said counselors work with students individually, in small groups or with parents.

At the secondary level, counselors offer a 12-hour insight class that focuses on adolescent issues.

Midland public school counselors offer a shoulder to cry on, career guidance and academic assistance.

"Most people don't realize it, but counselors are often miracle workers," said Martha Stuart, director of the Sylvan Learning Center, a business that offers academic counseling.

Sylvan Learning Centers are the American School Counselor Association are co-sponsors of National School Counseling Week.

"We need to take time to recognize counselors for the work they do to improve the lives of students," Ms. Stuart said.

SPENDING: City Council members take hard line

city financial records show $6.9 million available in working capital, or unappropriated fund balance. That figure can be added to $1.6 million in debt from the airport fund — a loan intended to fund the beginning of the terminal construction project and not yet spent — for a total of $8.5 million.

Audited city financial figures show the reserves have dropped by $2.3 million since the end of 1990, and almost $4 million since the end of fiscal year 1989.

In fact, reserves have dropped steadily since 1987, when the account totaled $13.1 million.

"It's kind of our savings account — you want to know it's there," said Mayor Carroll Thomas.

Some council members say its current level is the lowest the reserve should get, others, that it is already "dangerously low."

"We've had some surprises," said J.D. Faircloth, at-large City Council member.

Reserve funds may be used for emergency cost overruns or unexpected problems — major repairs, for example. But requests for use of the unappropriated fund often come from department heads who want to do additional projects that aren't funded. Lately, they've been hearing the council say "no" more often than not.

"It's really so easy to dip into surplus," Faircloth said. "You do $5,000 here and $10,000 here, and pretty soon it's a million bucks. We can't keep doing that."

"We have a budget every year," said Tom Johnston, District 4 council member. "They (department heads) can anticipate these expenses and include them in the budget for review. But they come up three months later and want additional monies."

"I'm of the group that says if it's not in the budget, you're really going to have to prove to me you need it," said District 1 representative James Devenport.

When an potential expense arises, what is "necessary can often be at issue."

Community Services Director George Logan recently came to the council to request about $6,000 for half the cost of paving two parking lots at youth baseball fields. He had a local non-profit group set to fund the other half.

Council members told him to find the matching funds somewhere in his own budget.

"There are times we have emergencies," Johnston said, "and we're going to need this money." He said he was in favor of funding Logan's request, but sees the need to cut off those extra expenditures.

A similar unbudgeted request came a few months ago from Utilities Director Ken Jones, who wanted to replace water lines in several blocks that were continually having problems. City leaders rejected the project, but recognized its need, asking for a long-term plan for replacement of those lines throughout the city.

Thomas said the council will try to hold extra spending to the estimated $150,000 in excess revenue over expenditures this year.

"Historically, we had been spending a million plus on things throughout the year," he said.

"The council has to take the leadership and say we'll hold the line," Faircloth said.

Sipes said maintaining the current amount of working capital is essential for keeping the city's bond rating, often credited for helping the city get low interest rates for bond issues.

"I've been told they won't downrate us unless it falls below $8.2 million," Sipes said.

"That could mean $100,000 or $1 million in additional interest," Johnston said.

As departments begin planning their fiscal year 1993 budgets during the next few months, council members expect a change in the process.

"I think this is going to cause department heads to really take a hard look at their budgets," Devenport said. "We're not going to pay for frills."

LEWIS: Speaker looks back at two decades in Legislature

stand up and casually adjust your tie."

Turning ever so slightly, the freshman legislator spotted the yellow dress at once. It was worn by a voluptuous brunette. He arose slowly, grappling with his tie.

He did not see his colleagues eyeing him. But, too late, he did hear their laughter.

Texas House Speaker Gib Lewis and his buddies had struck again.

"Those were the fun days," says Lewis, 55. But no more. After 21 years in the Texas House, including an unprecedented five terms as speaker, the good times have diminished.

The Fort Worth Democrat announced in January he will not run again.

Following the decision, he sat down with The Associated Press and reminisced about two turbulent decades in Texas politics, including his prolonged conflict with Travis County District Attorney Ronnie Earle.

Lewis pleaded no contest to two misdemeanor charges after Travis County prosecutors in Austin dropped two ethics indictments that could have sent him to jail.

The plea bargaining arrangement ended with a $2,000 fine that Lewis says demonstrates the indictments were little more than political harassment.

THE SPEAKER DISMISSED with barnyard vernacular Earle's contention that he dropped the more serious charges only after Lewis agreed not to run again.

"What did you expect him to say?" Lewis asked rhetorically. "He was looking for a cover."

The legal dispute, he said, was just another example of Austin prosecutors and politicos groveling around in trivial pursuit while losing sight of the big picture.

"They're stomping on ants in the basement while the elephants are stampeding on the first floor," he grumbled.

But Earle defended his actions. He said Lewis was held accountable for wrongdoing, was driven from office, and the public benefited by learning more about the behavior of lawmakers and lobbyists.

"The only clear winner in this situation is the public," Earle said.

GIBSON D. "GIB" LEWIS was elected to the Texas Legislature in 1970 and arrived in Austin as one of the state's great political scandals, Sharpstown, was heating up.

Right off, he saw House Speaker Gus Mutscher convicted of accepting a bribe. An omen, perhaps, though the verdict would be overturned on appeal.

Among the succession of speakers was Price Daniel Jr., a reformist who escaped town without indictment only to be killed by his second wife, a Dairy Queen waitress.

Then came Billy Clayton, a folksy, popular West Texas farm boy whose four-term reign as speaker was marred by another major scandal, Brilab.

Clayton was indicted but acquitted.

Such was the checkered history of one of the state's most powerful offices in the early Eighties, a pivotal time in the Lewis saga. He was bored and burned out.

At a party in his Austin apartment, he broke the word to his staff.

"I told them this was my last term, that I was quitting," he recalled with a smile.

They argued against quitting, insisting instead that he seek the speaker's job. Lewis was reluctant. There were a dozen or so candidates and he was not among them.

"I'll go talk to some people," he said, conceding. "If one person tells me no, I'm not going to do it."

No one told him no. And Clayton himself insisted that he run.

"I think that's a hell of a good idea," Lewis quoted Clayton as saying. "You're the only guy who can bring this thing together and keep control of it. Those other guys are gonna' sit out there and cut each other up.

"You're kiddin'," Lewis replied.

"No, I'm serious as I can be . . ."

"Well, I'll think about it."

AS HE LEFT the speaker's office, Lewis encountered a legislator from Breckenridge.

"Joe, I'm considering running for speaker. If I run, would you consider voting for me?" he wondered.

"I'll sign a pledge card for you right now on the spot," Joe said.

As they say, the rest is history, albeit turbulent. He was elected speaker by a landslide in 1983, and his reign would be one of triumph, trauma and intermittent temper tantrums.

His colleagues returned him to office in 1985, 1987, 1989 and 1991.

Handsome and personable, Lewis' country charm, good-ole-boy philosophy, unswerving fairness and peacemaking ability won him friends and followers in and out of the Legislature.

His sense of humor reduced tensions and soothed ruffled feathers.

It was Lewis who kept the system operating when Republican Gov. Bill Clements and Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby, a Democrat, were at one another's throat, which was often.

LEWIS EMBRACED a philosophy as simple as it was sensible: "Lead, follow or get the hell out of the way."

It worked.

Rarely did a governor, a state official or a fellow legislator criticize or even challenge his leadership, which sometimes was masterful and almost always shrewd.

In the often tense and tumultuous final days of every session, he quietly ordered air conditioners turned down to frosty.

"I'd tell 'em to keep it ice cold," Lewis said, chuckling. "If it's cold, people have a tendency not to get so mad or let their tempers get the best of them."

Although often at odds with the capital press corps, which he called the wolfpack, Lewis liked most of the reporters, and generally they liked him.

Of course, they criticized him constantly for his miscues — obsessively so, Lewis maintained. Time and again, news stories suggested he played fast and loose with ethics rules.

Reporters raised questions about the blindspots and the bookkeeping snafus and they wondered in print about his cozy relations with lobbyists.

The media labeled his verbal blunders "Gibberisms" or "Gibberish."

WITH A WRY SMILE, Lewis conceded that his quaint use of the language seldom looked as "cute" in print as it sounded at the time.

"And I've been pretty outspoken over the years. I don't beat around the bush too much. To escape criticism, you say nothing, you do nothing and you are nothing.

"That's somewhat my attitude about it."

But most of the challenges he faced as speaker were not of his making.

Ranching, farming, oil and real estate, long the cornerstone of Texas prosperity, headed due south on a fast track. Banks and S&Ls were right behind.

Coping with budget deficits and tax bills would become a way of life.

Federal and state judges would snipe at legislative blueprints for dealing with prison reform, redistricting, education, mental health, colleges and judicial elections.

It was, quite simply, the toughest times in modern Texas history.

IN ONE RESPECT, Lewis' office at Lewis Labels Products is similar to the speaker's quarters in Austin. It is jammed, tastefully, with paintings, photographs, bronze sculptures and other works of art, mostly western, with a mix of landscapes and wildlife.

Trophy animals decorate one room and an anteroom houses memorabilia from his years in public office. Each item, he said, is special, a reminder of good times, places and people.

For four hours over two days last week, he spoke openly, if a bit defensively, of his life in and out of the public eye:

AP: What drew you into politics 22 years ago?

Lewis: I was active in the Jaycees, and you get semi-active in politics if you are civically involved. I was elected to the city council in River Oaks. And some friends persuaded me to run for the Legislature.

AP: Did you win your first race?

Lewis: Yes, but I shouldn't have. My opponent was 10 times better qualified. I guess the reason I won was because, after meeting him, I realized I better work my butt off to keep from getting embarrassed.

AP: What would you have done if you hadn't entered politics?

Lewis: Well, I would have taken care of my business better. And I would have made wiser investments. I like the investment part . . . and that's what got me in trouble. I would have had time to read the contracts and I wouldn't have lost near as much money.

AP: All these articles say you're a millionaire.

Lewis: That's another good example of these (media) inaccuracies. The problem is, all my creditors are getting to believe it.

AP: You're not a millionaire?

Lewis: No, but at one time I was. On paper, before some financial downfalls. I'm like everybody else, just trying to stay above the level surface.

AP: You weren't born wealthy?

Lewis (laughing): You may not believe this, but I was born in a log cabin. I was delivered by an old country doctor in Limestone County. My dad was a farmer. But we moved to Mexia soon after I was born. I grew up there and in Cleveland, Texas. I moved to Cleveland to live with my grandmother after my grandfather died.

AP: You attended Sam Houston State and Texas Christian University. Is that where you met your wife?

Lewis: No. We met in Fort Worth while I was in the Air Force. I was stationed at Carswell.

AP: You and Sandra have two children?

Lewis: Yes, two daughters, Cammie and Cathy, both grown. Another reason to get out of politics is so I can spend more time with the grandkids. I've got a guilt complex because I didn't spend the time with my daughters I should have. I was too wrapped up in politics.

AP: But you had some pretty fine moments in politics?

Lewis: A lot of them. There were some things I made happen that wouldn't have happened, had I not been there. It was great working with the Tarrant County delegation. It was an excellent delegation. Really strong.

AP: Any single accomplishment stand out?

Lewis: The role we played in DFW and Alliance airports, working hand in hand with the city and county. . . . We pulled some pretty big rabbits out of some pretty small hats. And there was the Fort Worth State School for the mentally retarded and state funding of the Texas College of Osteopathic Medicine.

AP: Some say the speaker has too much power. Do you disagree?

Lewis: There is a very good check and balance that people don't understand, and I'm glad we've got it. It does not allow one person to be a dominating force. Not the governor, not the lieutenant governor, not the speaker.

AP: Still . . . ?

Lewis: I remember before I was speaker, if the speaker wanted something for his district, he got it. That's the way it's been and that's the way it always will be. What's amazing is that I never lost a legislative battle.

AP: Will you miss that power?

Lewis: No. I never did use my power. Oh, I've used it for a little persuasion here or there when dealing with agencies or something. But as far as dealing with the membership or the issues, I never did.

AP: Why?

Lewis: I always had the philosophy that if you abuse the power, you lose the power. And that's why the membership overwhelmingly re-elected me.

AP: Speakers seem to be targets of sorts?

Lewis: That's exactly what they are. Targets. The public dislikes the Congress and the Legislature, and the speaker is the focal point of both.

AP: You served with five governors and swore in three of them.

Lewis: Yes. Mark White, Bill Clements and Ann Richards. That's more than any speaker in history.

AP: Any comments on that trio?

Lewis: All three have their own styles. All were good governors and deserve a high place in history.

AP: Aw, come on.

Lewis: You don't get to be governor by falling off a turnip truck in downtown Austin. You have to have qualities to get there. You have to have moral character and ambition to meet that challenge, to rise to the occasion. And they did.

AP: Who's the best legislator you've worked with?

Lewis: The best all-around, although I don't exactly agree with him philosophically, is Carl Parker of Beaumont. He's the best orator, the brightest mind, best wit of anybody in government. Billy Williamson of Tyler was the purest of the pure. There are a lot of bright guys who do hard work and don't get credit.

AP: Why is that?

Lewis: There is a fallacy that the guy who puts out the most press releases is the most effective. Just the opposite. In reality, he can't even pass a motion to adjourn at the end of the day.

AP: What adjectives would you use to describe yourself?

Lewis: Committed, honest, driven, concerned.

AP: No negatives?

Lewis: Naive. Too trusting. Inattentive to details.

AP: Fatally inattentive?

Lewis: Perhaps.

AP: What was your biggest mistake?

Lewis: Running for office.

AP: Seriously?

Lewis: I don't think I've made any big mistakes at all. I guess that's what frustrates me more than anything. The mistakes that caused all the legal problems have been honest mistakes. And in most cases, not even my mistakes.

AP: Still, you are responsible for financial disclosure, even if it is your secretary who misses something.

Lewis: I guarantee you, if the same scrutiny was put to everybody that had to file a financial disclosure form, 95-plus percent of the people in public office would be indicted right now.

AP: What are you suggesting?

Lewis: I make investments, but I'm not the managing partner. I can't be responsible for what they might do. But we are held responsible. And that's sad. What happened to me over the last year has set a bad precedent.

AP: How?

Lewis: People who make investments and speculate in real estate or whatever are not going to be interested in public service anymore. They can't afford to go through the scrutiny and the ridicule that comes with it.

AP: How do you keep from going bananas?

Lewis: I spend a lot of time here in this office. And I've got a couple of pieces of land that I raise exotic animals on. I do a little cattle ranching, and I enjoy that.

AP: It's difficult to visualize you herding cattle.

Lewis: I take off every Wednesday afternoon that I can and drive out to the ranch north of Austin. I get out there and cut cedar brush or whatever needs to be done. I'll just get as dirty as you can get and come in and take a shower and drive back to Austin at midnight.

AP: Sounds like fun.

Lewis: What happens is your mind gets so fogged up, you've got to get out by yourself. And that's probably how I've kept my sanity. I also get up every morning during the session and try to run about four or five miles. That kind of gets all the cobwebs out.

AP: You do a lot of hunting?

Lewis: I like to hunt, but I don't do it much anymore.

AP: What's your biggest regret?

Lewis: Leaving with this problem that occurred, this cloud. It tends to overshadow 20 years of service and all the good things. Everything I've ever done was for the benefit of this state.

AP: Would you do things differently if you could?

Lewis: No, I don't think so. How can you do something different that you're not aware of? If I had it to do over again, I would do exactly the same as I've done. I wouldn't change one thing, the highs or the lows. I've enjoyed every minute of it.

PATH: Americans try to understand how rivalry altered lives capital of the empire that terrified him as a child. And on a recent visit to Moscow, he said, he found that "these folks have absolutely no confidence in themselves."

Across the country, planners, academics, government officials and many ordinary Americans are reassessing their view not just of the former Soviet Union but of America as well — trying to understand how the political and military rivalry with the Soviets altered Americans' lives over the last 45 years, what false assumptions it engendered and how the United States should change now that the Cold War is over.

"We're confused," said Robert Jay Lifton, a psychiatrist who is director of the Center on Violence and Human Survival at John Jay College of the City University of New York. "People no longer know how to view the world or how to understand our own national problems, which have to some degree been subsumed by the Cold War."

The rivalry between Moscow and Washington so dominated the world's diplomacy, commerce and even its culture that it is no wonder Americans are finding it difficult to adapt.

THE TWO NATIONS that emerged with the strongest militaries when World War II ended spent the next 45 years waging multi-layered competitions, first in Europe, then Asia, Africa and Latin America.

With constant coaching from their government, most Americans came to believe that the Soviet goal was to impose its system on the entire world, as it had on Eastern Europe between 1945 and 1948. So the United States embraced "containment" — halting the spread of communist ideology and its presumed influence on American society.

America threatened war to break a Soviet blockade of West Berlin in 1948-49 and airlifted tons of food to the stranded enclave. It also spent billions of dollars to resurrect the economies of Western Europe and fought the Korean War from 1950 to 1953.

The first Soviet nuclear test was in 1949, and the Soviet Union grew toward nuclear parity with the United States until each nation had the power to destroy the other in an instant. The knowledge that each side had weapons so fearsome that they could never be rationally fired left the constant hope that no matter how bitter it grew, the war would always remain "cold."

But even as they tried to settle their scores by proxy wars and diplomatic confrontations, the two sides continued to flirt with mutually assured destruction. The severest test of nerve, and perhaps America's greatest single Cold-War victory, came in 1962 when President Kennedy forced Khrushchev to withdraw Soviet missiles from Cuba. America's single greatest defeat of the period was surely the Vietnam War, with the devastating social and political turmoil that came with its loss.

IN THE SERVICE of containment, the United States ringed the Soviet empire with military bases and built anti-Soviet alliances wherever possible the world over. This competition cost the United States several trillion dollars — no one has a real account — and more than 100,000 lives. And the domestic ramifications permeate American society to this day.

The drive to ferret out communist influence at home made perceived "loyalty" a major preoccupation of governments, police agencies, school boards and even social organizations.

The fears of subversion and betrayal were fed by several sensational trials, like those of Alger Hiss for perjury and Julius and Ethel Rosenberg for espionage. And they fed demagogic attacks on thousands of citizens by Sen. Joseph R. McCarthy and his imitators.

The fears abated little until the mid-1980s. And by then America was fully and perhaps irreversibly engaged around the world.

When the Cold War ended, the United States had 375 foreign military installations staffed by more than 500,000 servicemen worldwide. Its diplomatic engagement was just as extensive; through the 1980s America backed its bid for world influence with more than $16 billion in foreign aid each year. And American businesses were selling their products and services worldwide.

But now that the great conflict has at last run its course, Americans are facing not just the giddy spectacle of a grand, global political victory. Behind it lies a quandary of historic dimensions, as disorienting as any this nation has ever faced.

Images

For most Americans, it will be difficult to forget the Cold War's pervasive influence on American entertainment and culture. Cold War themes were the subject of uncounted novels, pop songs, art work, and more. Many of the most indelible images came from films.

Among them was the scene from "Dr. Strangelove," the 1963 black comedy, showing Slim Pickens waving his cowboy hat, shouting "Yahoo, Yahoo!" as he rode the hydrogen bomb down toward its target, a missile field in Russia.

Cold War images permeated films until the very end. In "Rocky IV," released in 1985, Sylvester Stallone battled a superhuman-seeming, steroid-grown Soviet boxer who warned him darkly: "I will break you." Moments later, he fell bleeding to the floor, another stunned victim of underestimated American might.

But already, film images are changing, too, demonstrating that America is not entrapped by Cold War stereotypes, no matter how memorable.

In "Star Trek VI," playing in theaters now, the Klingon empire is in collapse, and its chancellor, not coincidentally named Gorkan, wants to make peace, meaning "an end to almost 70 years of unremitting hostility that the Klingon empire can no longer afford," as the character Spock observes.

Nicholas Meyer, the film's director, said Leonard Nimoy, who plays Spock, proposed the film in 1990, just as the Berlin Wall was falling, saying: "The Klingons have always been our stand-in for the Russians. What about a Berlin Wall coming down in space?"

But in the Star Trek film, as in American political life, the prospect of losing an enemy leaves the leaders fearful and uncertain.

"I was used to hating Klingons," William Shatner, as Captain Kirk, mutters wistfully.

Legacy

When Steven Garfinkel delivers a lecture to federal security professionals, he begins by showing them a slide that invariably leaves them perplexed.

Garfinkel is director of the Information Security Oversight Office, the federal agency that coordinates government policy on classified documents.

As Garfinkel and others attest, the Cold War gave birth to a government culture of secrecy and clandestine activity that had never existed before to any great degree, except in wartime.

Before the Cold War, the nation did not even have a formal system for classifying documents, though some agencies did keep secrets. Today, however, government officials classify almost 7 million documents a year — so many that Washington has an agency to coordinate policy for keeping secrets.

But with the Cold War's end, some people are asking whether all this secrecy is still needed.

YES, I'VE HEARD OF GLENWOOD ...

What is Glenwood?
Glenwood is a 64-bed psychiatric hospital located between Midland and Odessa providing a safe, relaxed atmosphere in which to provide psychiatric and chemical dependency services to children, adolescents, and adults.

What services are offered at Glenwood?
Glenwood offers a continuum of services ranging from identifying specific needs to providing follow-along services once a patient has been discharged. These services include:

- Outpatient diagnosis and evaluation
- Emergency psychiatric services
- Psychiatric intensive care
- Partial hospitalization
- Rapha Christ-centered therapy
- Short-term psychiatric hospitalization diagnosis and evaluation short-term treatment
- Follow-along services

A patient may enter the continuum at any level and move to more or less intensive services as the patient's condition changes. For every patient the goals of treatment include returning to a less restrictive environment eventually leading to responsible community living. This usually involves resolving emotional conflicts, developing adaptive behaviors and acquiring independent living skills.

Who are the people of Glenwood?
Glenwood's physicians are highly trained and licensed professionals who work closely with other professionals trained in the areas of psychology, nursing, social work, special education, vocational rehabilitation, activity therapy, occupational therapy, expressive arts therapy, and speech and language pathology.

How does Glenwood know what kind of treatment a patient needs?
The services provided to each patient are prescribed by the attending physician or a team of physicians and professionals who develop a treatment plan based on the patient's needs and condition.

Can I afford care at Glenwood?
While financial responsibility lies with the patient or guardian, Glenwood's psychiatric and chemical dependency treatment programs are covered by most major insurance companies. The staff at Glenwood will carefully assist patients and their families in implementing insurance coverage and making financial arrangements.

What is the environment like at Glenwood?
The treatment environment is designed to make available the same activities and experiences encountered in everyday life to make the patient's return to the community much easier. In a monitored and supportive setting, patients are encouraged to engage in social interactions and personal activities that will help them to develop more effective behavior patterns.

What about patient rights at Glenwood?
Consistent with the patient rights standards of the Joint Commission on Accreditation of Hospitals, Glenwood supports and protects the fundamental human, civil, and statutory rights of the individual patient.

Security Council members call for standing U.N. army

UNITED NATIONS (AP) — After 46 years, the U.N. Security Council appears ready to dust off a little-known provision of the U.N. Charter calling for a standing U.N. army.

Today, that army would likely be a rapid-deployment force under U.N. command, with a mandate to intervene early in crises and prevent full-scale civil wars instead of mopping up afterward.

Over the years, the United Nations has mounted 23 peacekeeping operations involving 537,700 men and costing $5.8 billion. Ten operations are now under way, involving 16,000 personnel and costing more than $700 million a year.

But there never has been a standing army.

The U.N. Charter's Article 43, which describes a standing army, has been a dead letter, a victim of the Cold War like much of the U.N. peacemaking and peacekeeping machinery. It was considered a curiosity ascribed to visionary but impractical men who signed the charter in 1945.

But on Friday the Security Council summit of world leaders asked Secretary-General Boutros Boutros-Ghali to recommend ways to strengthen U.N. preventive diplomacy, peacemaking and peacekeeping. Ghali told a news conference he would study a standing army and report by July.

French President Francois Mitterrand said his government was ready to provide 1,000 men for peacekeeping "at any time and at 48 hours' notice." The number of troops could be doubled within a week, he said.

"I believe that we need a special, quick response mechanism to ensure peace and stability," said Russian President Boris Yeltsin. "Upon decision by the Security Council it could be expeditiously activated in areas of crisis."

Austria, Belgium and Hungary also urged creation of such a force and Belgian Prime Minister Wilfried Martens said his government was willing to commit troops and observers and would arrange training.

Mitterrand also said deployment of a rapid deployment force would mean breathing fresh life into another moribund U.N. institution — the Military Staff Committee. The staff committee also is mentioned in the charter as the body that would organize the U.N. command of a U.N. army.

It would be composed of the chiefs of staff of the five permanent Security Council members: the United States, Britain, China, France and Russia. Today, however, lower level military attaches meet quietly once a month to drink coffee and talk shop, but not to plan military operations.

That, too, could change. The former Soviet Union long had argued that the staff committee should be used and said it would commit troops to the Iran-Iraq peacekeeping force if it was under the staff committee.

The size, composition and costs of a standing army are not known.

Britain continues use of silicone implants

LONDON (NYT) — Britain's chief medical officer has told doctors that they can continue to use silicone gel breast implants despite a temporary suspension of the procedure in the United States.

Last month, the U.S. Food and Drug Administration recommended a 45-day moratorium on the supply or use of silicone gel implants while new information questioning their safety is evaluated. Concerns focus on the possibility of reactions in the immune system caused by a leakage of silicone.

"I understand the concerns and anxiety felt by women over silicone gel breast implants," said Dr. Kenneth Calman, the Department of Health's chief medical officer. "However, on the information currently available there is no reason for advising a general change in this form of surgical practice in the United Kingdom."

Calman said the health department had asked the FDA for the data that prompted the moratorium. He also said department experts would evaluate any new information on the potential risks associated with silicone gel breast implants as it becomes available.

"Should any cause for concern become apparent, modified departmental guidance will be issued urgently," Calman said.

Tens of thousands of British women are believed to have received implants in the last 30 years, 60 percent for reconstruction after mastectomy and 40 percent for cosmetic reasons. The procedure, which costs the equivalent of $5,000 in Britain, is covered by the National Health Service for reconstruction or for other medical reasons.

The National Hospital for Aesthetic Plastic Surgery in Bromsgrove, Worcestershire, had voluntarily halted the use of silicone gel implants after the FDA called for the moratorium, but now it says it will resume performing the procedure. The hospital usually does about 550 implants a year.

"There is an absolutely dreadful scare going on in America perpetuated by political lobbyists that has gotten completely out of control," said John Terry, the hospital's director.

"All the available medical evidence suggests that breast implants are safe, and our patients have not reported any problems. Calman has recognized the hype that has started and has acted swiftly to stop it here."

Colombian secretary of human rights advocate dies in attack

BOGOTA, Colombia (NYT) — The secretary of an outspoken human rights advocate was shot and killed on Wednesday in the latest of about 40 slayings last month in a town north of Bogota where citizens have long been caught in conflicts involving rebels, the armed forces, right-wing paramilitary groups, and drug traffickers.

The killing of Blanca Varelo de Duran, 38, took place a day after The New York Times published an article on its Op-Ed page by her boss, Jorge Gomez Lizarazo, the president of the Regional Committee for the Defense of Human Rights. In the article, Lizarazo denounced the Colombian military for human rights abuses.

The Colombian police have not said whether there may have been a connection between the article and the killing in Barrancabermeja, 150 miles north of Bogota.

The Bogota-based Andean Commission of Jurists noted that the killing took place just after publication of the article and said: "It is believed that the assassination of Mrs. Varelo is a new attempt to silence the courageous work of the organization."

Human rights advocates in Washington familiar with the circumstances of the killing hesitated to characterize it as retaliation for the article.

Salvador peace begins; rebels issue warning

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador (NYT) — On the first day of the cease-fire officially ending the Salvadoran civil war, the leftist guerrilla front served notice Saturday that while its differences with the political right have diminished they have not disappeared.

"Today, we stop being enemies and become political adversaries," said Joaquin Villalobos, the chief military strategist of the Farabundo Marti National Liberation Front, shortly before he and nine other men were sworn in as members of the Peace Commission.

Villalobos, who was applauded and cheered repeatedly by supporters among the several thousand people at the ceremony, said that as a legal political force the guerrilla front would continue to pursue its goal of changing "the feudal backwardness" in the Salvadoran countryside.

Ignoring the partial land reforms carried out by military and Christian Democratic leaders at the beginning of the 1980s, Villalobos said that "without profound changes in land tenancy there would be no development in other sectors of the economy, nor stability."

Although they did not mention it at the installation ceremony, members of President Alfredo Cristiani's party, the Nationalist Republican Alliance have made clear that they do not want to cede anything further in individual land rights.

They argue that aside from the issue of individual rights, the country cannot run the risk of seeing its production of major exports crops like coffee damaged by turning over additional land to peasant-run cooperatives, many of which have been unprofitable.

FMLM Commander Joaquin Villalobos hugs a supporter Saturday.

As part of the peace accords, however, the Cristiani government did commit itself to find a way for most of the peasant cooperatives set up during the war in guerrilla-dominated areas to hold onto their lands. The titles to much of that land, near the Honduran border, are held by people who fled to other areas for fear of the guerrillas.

The government has said it will offer payments to those legal owners or, through creation of a land bank, try to make land elsewhere available to those who would be willing to switch.

At the outset of a day filled with celebration and ceremony, Cristiani swore in the 10 members of the Peace Commission, which will share many responsibilities with the government.

France allows Palestinian leader to leave country

PARIS (AP) — George Habash, head of one of the most violent Palestinian terror factions, was allowed to leave France on Saturday despite requests here and abroad that he be held for terrorism investigations.

The Justice Ministry lifted a custody order on Habash, 65, who had been hospitalized in Paris since Wednesday after suffering an apparent stroke at his home in Tunis, Tunisia.

Habash left Henry Dunant Hospital and flew from Orly airport. Several hours later, Palestine Liberation Organization officials said Chairman Yasser Arafat greeted Habash as he walked off the plane in Tunis. Habash used a cane and was supported by two people.

Abu Ahmed Fouad, an official of Habash's Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine, said Habash's condition was not serious.

France's top anti-terrorism investigator had wanted to question him, and Israel had suggested it might seek Habash's extradition for a murder probe. Neither Paris nor Washington had issued warrants for his arrest.

"Habash is not the object of any warrant, neither national nor international," the Interior Ministry said after his departure. "There no longer exists any legal reason to hold him on the national territory."

Anti-terrorism investigator Jean-Louis Bruguiere said Thursday he wanted to question Habash about arms and explosives found in the forest of Fontainebleau outside Paris in 1986. But doctors later told Bruguiere Habash's condition made it virtually impossible to speak with him, according to the Agence France-Presse news agency.

The weapons were uncovered during bombings which killed 13 people, injured scores of others and terrorized the capital. Investigators linked the weapons to Habash's guerrilla faction.

Habash gained notoriety for promoting the Palestinian cause through terrorist attacks in the 1970s — including the hijacking of an Air France airliner to Entebbe, Uganda. His group also was responsible for the machine-gun slaughter of 27 people at Israel's Lod airport in May 1972.

The entry of the guerrilla leader had caused an uproar in France's Socialist government. Three senior aides in the Foreign and Interior Ministries were sacked Thursday for allowing Habash into France without consulting Foreign Minister Roland Dumas or President Francois Mitterrand, both of whom were away. The head of the French Red Cross, which helped arrange Habash's visit, also lost her job as counselor to Mitterrand.

On Friday, opposition leaders called for the ouster of Cabinet ministers whose aides had approved Habash's entry. Even the governing Socialist Party said it was "stupefied" to learn of the "inexcusable decision" to admit Habash.

Virus kills dolphins in eastern Mediterranean

ASTROS, Greece (NYT) — Hundreds of dead and dying dolphins have washed up on inlets and beaches of Turkey and Greece in recent weeks, victims of an epidemic that is racing through the eastern Mediterranean and that some scientists believe is linked to water pollution.

Specialists say this is the latest flare-up of a virus that killed at least 1,000 dolphins off Spain, France and Italy in 1990. Biologists say the virus destroys the dolphins' immune system, allowing other diseases to invade and kill the animals.

All over the Aegean Sea, fishermen and port authorities are reporting discoveries of dead dolphins, from the Bay of Athens to the coast of Turkey. Most of the victims are striped dolphins, which is the most common species in the Mediterranean.

"All we can do is advise the people to burn them and bury them," said Kaiti Siakavara, a marine biologist on the island of Crete, talking of the more than 40 carcasses she and her colleagues have recorded this month around the town of Herakleion. Almost as many have been found around the island of Rhodes, she said.

The latest epidemic is troubling specialists who see it as another alarm bell of pollution's effects on this enclosed sea.

United Nations experts say the host of treaties, action plans and regulations agreed to by all Mediterranean countries have done little to curtail the outpouring of human and industrial waste from the 360 million people who live in the Mediterranean's drainage area. Researchers note other warnings. The beds of sea grass are getting smaller in many coastal areas, something they see as ominous because those beds are vital nurseries for many marine species. The cycles of algae plagues, which kill much sea life, are becoming more intense.

In the case of the mass mortality of dolphins, specialists are exploring whether it is linked to the very high levels of toxic polychlorinated biphenyls, or PCBs, found in carcasses in 1990. Tests at the University of Barcelona revealed that many stranded dolphins had levels of PCBs 10 to 50 times higher than the levels considered dangerous for humans.

Some scientists argue that the pollutants have weakened the defensive system of sea mammals.

"The trouble is, we do not know what is toxic for dolphins or not," said Seamus Kennedy of the British government Veterinary Sciences Laboratories, in Belfast.

Earthquake jolts Tokyo

TOKYO (AP) — A strong earthquake shook the Tokyo area early today, jolting buildings and waking residents before dawn. At least 30 people were injured.

No deaths were immediately blamed on the quake, which struck at 4:04 a.m. (1:04 p.m. CST Saturday).

Japan's Central Meterological Agency said the quake, which lasted about 1 minute, measured 5.7 on the Richter scale. An earthquake measuring 5 on the Richter scale can cause considerable damage, and one measuring 6 can cause severe damage.

Japan Railways said all trains were halted in the Tokyo area to inspect for damage. The country's famous "bullet trains" mostly resumed service within two hours.

NHK, the country's semi-public TV station, broadcast scenes of crowded rail platforms and long lines at taxi stands.

Italian TV tape of U.S. execution outrages Vatican

ROME (AP) — An Italian television station has shocked viewers and provoked a rebuke from the Vatican for showing the purported execution of an inmate at a U.S. prison.

The prisoner and the state where the execution occurred were not identified.

A spokesman for the "Televised Encounters" show on the private Telemontecarlo network said the Friday night broadcast was intended to illustrate the reality of capital punishment.

"We hope witnessing these scenes, people will realize that seeking justice for violence through violence is a vile solution," said Roberto Nouri, spokesman for the show. Italy does not have the death penalty.

Mino Damato, the program's producer and host, said the London-based human rights group Amnesty International offered the film on condition the cameraman or location of the prison was not disclosed.

The footage was reportedly shot secretly by a freelance filmmaker at a Midwestern prison about six years ago. The program did not give the convict's name.

The black-and-white film showed the young, bearded inmate eating his last meal and being strapped to the electric chair. It showed his body convulsing from the high-voltage charges.

It would be highly unusual for reporters to be allowed to watch an inmate eat his last meal, but journalists in some states routinely view executions.

L'Osservatore Romano, the Vatican newspaper, in today's edition, called the show "the latest wickedness in an ever growing series that seek to say no to the dignity and respect of man."

"Face with such a disgusting display of arrogance and bad taste, thanks should be given to the show's officials who at least avoided the very last heart-wrenching scene of death broadcast on television," the newspaper said.

The Italian Entertainment Board protested the showing of the film, saying it provided little information and carried the "danger of familiarizing (people) with certain immages."

Damato said German television recently showed a portion of the film, but not the execution. The film was never shown in the U.S.

Waiting for the new year

A line forms outside the Beijing railway station Saturday as people begin to buy tickets for transportation to various parts of China to be with family and friends during celebrations marking the Chinese new year Feb. 4. Officials at the railway station said hundreds of thousands of train tickets are sold in days leading to the new year.

British poll tax dodgers could change general election results

By Maureen Johnson
Associated Press writer

LONDON — "We don't want no vote here! Get lost!" a Cockney voice shouted through the grimy entry phone of a peeling row house in the south London borough of Lambeth. The phone clicked off.

The man was one of a legion of voters who have dropped from the rolls in hopes of avoiding a hated per-head tax for local services. Their disappearance could save the Conservative government from defeat in the upcoming general election.

For the Conservatives, who introduced the "poll tax" in England in 1989, the shrinking electoral roll is an ironic reward for a political blunder.

The unpopularity of the tax helped bring down Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher. Her successor, John Major, has lowered the rate and promises to scrap the tax entirely next year.

Yet analysts say most of the estimated 250,000 lost voters are low-income residents of inner cities who traditionally support Labor, the main opposition party. Their logic in staying off the voting rolls is that the local authorities that register voters also draw up the tax lists.

From a national roll of 43.5 million voters, the drop is small. But the effect could be crucial in a few dozen marginal districts where party strength is nearly equal.

Major must call an election by the end of the Conservatives' five-year term in July. The date is expected to be April 9 or May 7.

Labor, neck-and-neck with the Conservatives in opinion polls after 13 years of opposition, is canvassing key districts, urging the reluctant to register.

Hackney, in the East End, has lost the most voters of any London borough — 31,000 from the 132,000 registered in 1991. Lambeth has lost 7,000 of 177,000.

"We're extremely worried," said David Salisbury-Jones, the Labor campaign manager in Streatham, a 60,519-voter parliamentary district within Lambeth. The Conservatives held Streatham in the 1987 election by 2,407 votes.

Like the man who shouted at a reporter through the entry phone, hundreds of voters won't register for fear of being caught for not paying the poll tax, the Labor Party says.

"There's a clear link in people's minds between registering to vote and registering for the poll tax," Salisbury-Jones said in an interview. "There's no doubt that poorly paid people who are more likely to be voting Labor are less likely to be registering."

The Electoral Reform Society, an independent body that monitors elections, finds the implications alarming.

"This drop is quite unique and in some areas quite phenomenal," said its spokesman, Simon Osborn. "We think it would be a bad day for democracy if this general election were to be compromised."

Labor needs to win 95 districts plus the seats it holds now to have a majority in the House of Commons.

Party wives accuse Chinese leaders of breaking law

BEIJING (AP) — The wives of two top Communist officials have issued unusual public criticisms of the government for imprisoning their husbands in connection with the 1989 Tiananmen Square democracy movement.

In a letter to top Communist Party and government organs, obtained Saturday by The Associated Press, the wife of a top aide to ousted Chinese leader Zhao Ziyang accused authorities of breaking the law by jailing her husband for nearly three years without trial.

Jiang Zongcao, the wife of Bao Tong also accused Beijing Mayor Chen Xitong of slandering her husband by saying he leaked state secrets.

In a separate letter, the wife of Wu Xuecan, an editor at the Communist Party newspaper, the People's Daily, made similar charges.

Normally, senior party members and their wives accept party dictates in silence. It is the first time either family has protested the treatment of Bao and Wu.

Both men were arrested in connection with the 1989 Tiananmen Square democracy movement crushed by the army. Zhao, then party general secretary, was ousted on charges of sympathizing with the movement.

The letters were made public one day after Premier Li Peng, attending a U.N. Security Council summit in New York, rebuffed Western criticism of China's human rights record.

Bao's wife, Jiang Zongcao, cited clauses from both the state and party constitutions to support her argument that her husband's lengthy detention is illegal.

Nation in brief

■ Delegation nixes funding for gallery

FREDERICK, Md. — Lawmakers from Frederick County have decided against seeking a state bond bill for an art gallery at which a painting that depicts President Bush in the nude was displayed.

One lawmaker said Friday's decision was prompted by the tough economic times, not the controversy generated by the painting.

The Delaplaine Visual Arts Center in Frederick had requested $500,000 in state funds to renovate an old mill as its new home.

The 6-by-8-foot oil painting by Austrian artist Josef Schutzenhofer depicts Bush and Dolly Parton standing in the nude. Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C., is dressed in a military breastplate and red briefs.

It also depicts retired Gen. H. Norman Schwarzkopf nude from the waist down. He has a foot on the back of a clothed Saddam Hussein, who is kneeling.

The painting, "A Peace Treaty and the New World Order," was sold last week to an anonymous buyer for $4,000, said Melinda Wimer, executive director of the gallery.

■ Balloon won't take off until weather right

AKRON, Ohio — Larry Newman has heard the same question so many times, he sometimes starts to answer it before it's asked. When will Earthwinds, the around-the-world balloon flight, take off? The answer is: Only nature knows.

Weather conditions have to be just right to start the journey of the high-tech, hourglass-shaped twin balloons. No launch was planned before Thursday, project spokesman Bill Armstrong said Saturday.

Newman, who will pilot the balloon and command its three-member crew, said the project's meteorologist will come along and say "'Today's the day.' When that day comes, we'll have maybe a 36-hour notice."

Wind speeds must be near zero on the ground but about 75 mph at the balloon's cruising altitude of about 32,000 feet, Newman said. Until then, Earthwinds will remain partially inflated inside the air dock of Loral Defense Systems Corp.

The mission's success is by no means assured.

"I have to stress that there's only a 50-50 chance of succeeding with this flight," said Newman, an airline pilot from Scottsdale, Ariz.

■ Doctors study antibodies in stroke victims

PHOENIX — Renegade antibodies appear to be a major underlying cause of strokes, possibly triggering about 10 percent of the seizures in the United States, researchers said Saturday.

Doctors first noticed about 10 years ago that stroke victims often have antibodies in their blood that are directed against phospholipids, a key part of all cells in the body. But until now, no clear evidence existed that they played any role in causing strokes.

The new research, conducted at 16 hospitals, found that people with recent strokes were twice as likely as other folks to have these antibodies in their bloodstreams.

The findings indicate these antibodies could be as important a risk factor for stroke as diabetes, which has long been recognized as increasing the chances of stroke.

"This may be a risk factor of major public health importance," said Dr. Steven J. Kittner of the University of Maryland.

He presented the findings at a stroke conference sponsored by the American Heart Association.

■ Teamster chief declares old days over

WASHINGTON — Ron Carey, sworn in Saturday as president of the Teamsters in a historic changing of the guard, was welcomed by cheering union members waving flags touting "The New Teamsters."

"Today we begin the work of building the New Teamsters — and our mission is to give this union back to its members," Carey said in his inaugural address, given on the steps of the union's international headquarters here.

Carey pledged to "act solely in the interests of our members, devote the vast resources of our union to furthering their needs and goals, rid our union of corruption, and restore democratic principles in our union."

About 500 cheering union members blew whistles and braved chilly temperatures to greet their new president. Applause interrupted Carey three times as he took the oath of office.

"I think he's going to make things work. I think there's going to be a difference, a change," said Bob Romano, a 27-year member of a Philadelphia local.

■ President's 'pit bull' hits campaign trail

SALEM, N.H. — John Sununu is back home in New Hampshire with less than three weeks before the presidential primary and already he is showing why they used to call him "the president's pit bull."

In his usual caustic fashion, the former White House chief of staff is flaying columnist Patrick Buchanan, President Bush's only big-name challenger in the Feb. 18 primary. And Bush supporters are loving it.

"The best thing about Patrick Buchanan's campaign is it is eroding on its own," Sununu told Republicans after arriving in the state Friday.

Buchanan has been campaigning hard here, telling audiences that Bush is not really as conservative as he seems. Sununu had an answer for that.

"George Bush is as conservative as I am," declared the former three-term New Hampshire governor whose views on such matters still carry weight here.

It was the first time Sununu has been on the campaign trail in his home state since he resigned in December after three years as chief of staff.

Doctor: Victim had injuries consistent with rape

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — A doctor who examined a teen-age beauty contestant testified Saturday that she had injuries consistent with rape but told him she was afraid to bring charges against former heavyweight champion Mike Tyson.

"She said she was scared, because it would be her word against Mr. Tyson's," Dr. Thomas Richardson told the Marion Superior Court jury.

Tyson, 25, is charged with rape, confinement and criminal deviate conduct. If convicted, he faces up to 63 years in prison.

Richardson, the emergency room physician who examined the 18-year-old woman the day after the alleged rape, said he found injuries consistent with forced intercourse. He said he had seen such injuries as a result of consensual sex only twice, but they occur in up to 30 percent of rape cases, he said.

"Usually, with a consensual act, you're relaxing things," he said. "You don't want it to hurt."

The physician dismissed as "garbage" a study cited by the defense showing evidence of vaginal trauma in a majority of women who had consensual sex.

The defense contends the woman consented to sex with Tyson. During her testimony, Tyson's accuser said she experienced "excruciating pain."

Richardson said the woman appeared composed but her voice quivered when she told him of the incident and her indecision about pressing charges.

Earlier, Judge Patricia Gifford barred testimony about Tyson's purported sexual advances toward chauffeur Virginia Foster the day before the alleged rape.

Prosecutor Greg Garrison had argued that Foster's descriptions of Tyson grabbing her, trying to kiss her and exposing himself to her "demonstrates that irrespective of anybody's consent, he's going to get what he wants."

"That state of mind is like fingerprint evidence," he said.

In her testimony, Foster said the woman appeared frantic and frightened as she rushed from Tyson's hotel in the pre-dawn hours of July 19.

Doctors continue to inject silicone, agency officials say

WASHINGTON (NYT) — Despite warnings from the Food and Drug Administration that the practice is illegal, scores of doctors are continuing to inject silicone directly into the bodies of women, most often to puff up parts of the face or to smooth wrinkles, agency officials say.

The agency is investigating the most prominent of the doctors, including a dermatologist in New York, and is trying to track down a trade in silicone in which middlemen are believed to buy the material from the manufacturers under false pretenses for resale to the doctors.

Silicone injections have not been approved by the FDA, and only those doctors authorized to experiment on patients are allowed to use or obtain silicone for the procedure; currently, no doctors have that authority.

Unlike the silicone in breast implants, which is enclosed in a rubber bag, silicone injected directly can more easily migrate to other parts of the body.

Since the 1960s, there have been continuing reports that injections have led to ulcers, lumps, the destruction of tissue, and even lung failure and death.

In June, Dr. David A. Kessler, the commissioner of food and drugs, warned doctors that silicone injections were illegal and must stop.

The agency first concluded in 1965 that the injection of liquid silicone was illegal when used by a doctor who did not have a permit to conduct human experiments, but in the intervening years doctors continued injections and were often advised by lawyers for their medical societies that if the silicone was obtained in the state where it was used, the FDA had no jurisdiction over its use.

"More than 25 years ago the FDA concluded that silicone injections were unsafe and illegal," said Rep. Ted Weiss, D-N.Y., who has investigated the medical use of silicone for the past year.

Elephant shot after rampage

PALM BAY, Fla. (AP) — An elephant carrying two children on its back went wild during a circus performance Saturday, trying to stomp a man and pull down bleachers before police shot it to death in front of stunned spectators.

Kelly, a 27-year-old Indian elephant, was taking two children and an adult for a ride around the ring just minutes before the 5 p.m. show of the Great American Circus, said Palm Bay police spokesman Tom Krieger.

Witnesses said the 8,000-pound pachyderm suddenly became agitated and ran out of the tent with the three passengers.

Officers, at the request of circus owners, fired several shots after the elephant left the tent again, killing it instantly, Krieger said.

Van plunges off cliff into storm-tossed sea

PACIFICA, Calif. (AP) — A van plunged off Highway 1 down a steep cliff before dawn Saturday and landed 500 feet below in the storm-tossed Pacific Ocean, authorities said. At least two people were killed.

An 18-year-old man who was rescued on the rocky cliff face by helicopter indicated that two or three people still were inside the vehicle, said Gene Strecker of the California Highway Patrol.

Rescuers recovered the bodies of two women, one about half a mile out to sea and the other in the surf at the foot of the cliff, Strecker said. Neither was immediately identified. The water was estimated at 55 degrees.

The van left the rain-slicked scenic road at a steep spot called Devil's Slide about 10 miles south of San Francisco.

"This is a famous area for accidents," said San Mateo County Deputy Sheriff Michael Berndl. Every year, three or four vehicles go over the cliff there and it's rare for anyone to survive, he said.

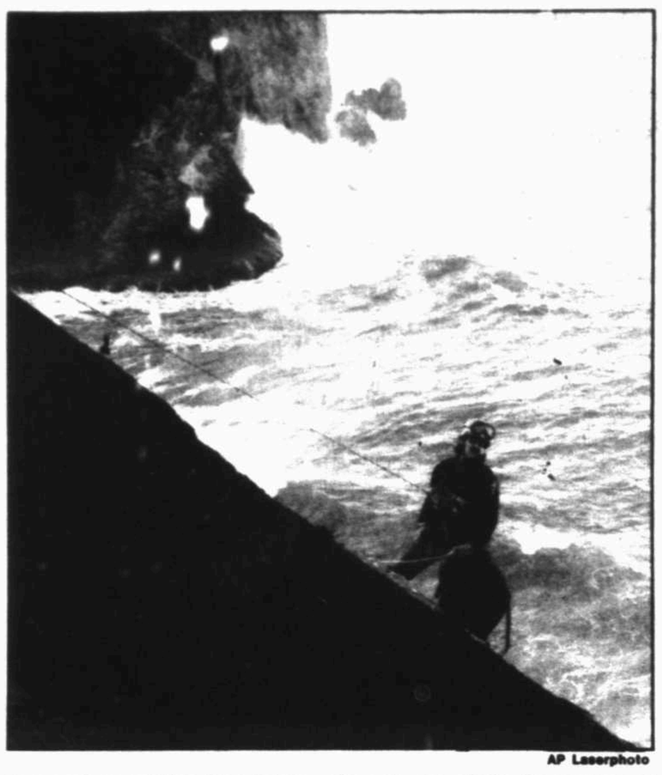

Divers sent to the submerged wreck were kept back by powerful waves. But the surging ocean pushed the vehicle nearer the rocky shore, enabling a rescue team to climb down the cliff to reach it.

When they finally reached the battered van, it was too crushed to determine if any bodies were inside, officials said. Authorities called off the search because of the rough waters Saturday afternoon and said it would resume when the sea calmed down.

Thomas Burns, the rescued man, was taken by helicopter to Mills-Peninsula Hospital 8 miles away in Burlingame. Nursing supervisor Randy Stone said Burns underwent surgery for internal injuries and was in serious but stable condition.

Burns was found on the on the cliff face.

"He was climbing up the cliff," said Coast Guard Petty Officer Shelly Freier.

San Diego Tribune publishes last edition before merger

SAN DIEGO (AP) — Teary-eyed reporters and editors watched Saturday as the last edition of the 96-year-old San Diego Tribune rolled off the presses with the banner headline: "WE'RE HISTORY!"

The afternoon newspaper, published by Copley Press Inc., is merging with its sister paper, the morning Union. Most Tribune employees will stay on with The San Diego Union-Tribune.

"We all get teary to see a nameplate, and a paper, and a staff go," said Tribune Editor Neil Morgan. "But these are people with newspapering in their blood, and they're going on to newspaper jobs tomorrow. That takes the curse off."

When the merger was announced in September, publisher Helen K. Copley noted that changing reading habits have led to a steady decline of afternoon newspapers.

Circulation at the afternoon Tribune, which topped the Union until 1966, has been dropping for years. It peaked in 1979 at 133,711, the paper said.

The number was down to 105,249 in November 1991, the latest Audit Bureau of Circulation report. Union circulation averaged 277,663 then, the bureau said.

Twenty-five writers and nine photographers from the Union and Tribune were laid off, and another 107 editorial staffers accepted incentive packages to leave, said Copley Editor in Chief Herbert Klein.

Many who took early retirement had worked in San Diego journalism for decades.

Kemp calls parts of Bush economic program 'gimmicks'

WASHINGTON (AP) — Housing and Urban Development Secretary Jack Kemp said Saturday that parts of the economic plan unveiled by President Bush in his State of the Union Message amounted to "gimmicks."

Kemp later issued a statement seeking to clarify his remarks.

"It's no secret that I've never liked tax credits, basically those are gimmicks," Kemp said on CNN's "Evans & Novak" interview program.

Kemp also said Bush's plan to adjust the tax tables to withhold less from the paychecks of many Americans "clearly ... is a gimmick."

At the White House, spokesman Roman Popadiuk responded by saying that "the president's programs are very real and very substantive." Otherwise, said Popadiuk, "I can only say that I have no comment."

Kemp's subsequent statement sent to news organizations said that "my choice of the word 'gimmick' to describe the changes in the tax withholding tables was less than artful."

He added that tax withholding changes are "a beneficial part of the President's overall economic growth package, which I have called the boldest tax cut initiative since the Reagan-Bush tax cuts of 1981."

During his TV appearance, Kemp praised parts of Bush's plan such as incentives for first-time home buyers, which he said was "resonating well."

"A liberalization of IRAs is resonating well," Kemp added.

Haitian refugees march toward a row of tents Friday at the Guantanamo Naval Base in Cuba. The State Department has begun to return the refugees to their homeland after the Supreme Court cleared the way.

U.S. military begins repatriating Haitians

GUANTANAMO BAY NAVAL BASE, Cuba (AP) — The U.S. military on Saturday began repatriating Haitian refugees held in a tent city at a U.S. naval base in Cuba after the Supreme Court cleared the way.

"They are preparing 150 people for departure on the Coast Guard Cutter Steadfast this evening," said Lt. Darian Benson, a spokesman for the Joint Task Force handling the Haitian crisis. The cutter started loading at 4:30 p.m. The 150 refugees had been interviewed by immigration officials and deemed ineligible for asylum, Benson said. They were volunteers tired of life in the tent city, task force officials said.

"It wasn't much of a problem at all" finding volunteers, said Marine Brig. Gen. George Walls Jr., who is in charge of the Haitian operation.

Benson said more refugees would be sent back to Haiti today, but he had no details on that trip.

The news of repatriation caused no immediate disturbance at the camp in Guantanamo Bay, officials said.

"There has been no resistance that I have been made aware of," said Lt. Cmdr. Gordon Hume, another task force spokesman. "We are prepared for any type of demonstrations or any reaction that there might be in the camps."

The trip across the Windward Passage from Cuba to Haiti takes about 14 hours.

The high court on Friday set aside a federal judge's order that had blocked the return of Haitian refugees. Advocates for the Haitians have resisted the government's repatriation policy in an Atlanta court.

Haitians have been encamped at the naval base in Cuba since Nov. 26, 1991. The Coast Guard began intercepting their rickety boats in an exodus that continues. On Friday, the Coast Guard picked up 418 Haitians from 14 vessels.

On Saturday, 10,448 Haitians were at the base; another 1,500 would-be immigrants were aboard Coast Guard cutters anchored offshore, said base spokesman Lt. Cmdr. John Griffin.

The State Department had said the first to go back to Haiti would be about 5,500 refugees deemed ineligible for asylum. The cases of the others remained to be decided.

The U.S. government says the Haitians are fleeing poverty, not political repression as asylum cases require.

But the refugees' advocates have warned that Haitians sent back to their homeland face retribution from the military there.

More than 14,000 Haitians have fled the Caribbean nation since a military coup Sept. 30 ousted Jean-Bertrand Aristide, Haiti's first freely elected president. Some 1,400 made it to the United States to pursue asylum claims, 955 went back to Haiti and 350 have gone on to a third country.

Lottery officials blame recession for falling revenues

By Ronald Smothers
N.Y. Times News Service

Lottery revenue in many states is sagging or stagnant under the pressure of the recession, driving the states to mount new and more exotic games as well as more aggressive advertising campaigns to bolster ticket sales.

Thirty-three states and the District of Columbia have lotteries, and in the fiscal year that ended on June 30, 1991, 11 lottery agencies posted declines in revenue from the previous year, according to figures compiled by the North American Association of State and Provincial Lotteries. In seven other states, revenue was essentially flat.

Bill Bergman, executive director of the association, said preliminary figures for 21 states for the first six months of the current fiscal year showed the slide or stagnation continuing in nine states, while revenue was up only slightly in the rest, with the notable exception of Kentucky.

Particularly hard hit are the big states. Russell Gladieux, deputy director of the New York State Lottery, which sold $2.1 billion worth of tickets in the 1991 fiscal year, up 3.7 percent from 1990, said New York was likely to experience its first annual revenue decline in the lottery's 24 years.

"We didn't change other things about the games, so the cause appears to be the recession," Gladieux said. "And another part of our problem is the state's tight fiscal situation, and so our advertising budget took a real hit and was cut by 25 to 30 percent."

In California, which has had a lottery for only six years, revenues declined 14 percent in 1991. Joanne McNabb, a spokeswoman for the California Lottery, said a lack of advertising money was hampering plans for introducing several new games and bigger prizes.

"Certainly, we think the recession is having an impact," Ms. McNabb said. "We are now at a crucial point and are practically relaunching and revamping out lottery games. And because of the recession we don't have the resources we would like to have."

Cardinal calls for voluntary film, TV moral guidelines

LOS ANGELES (NYT) — Saying America's social ills are largely fueled by movies and television, Roman Catholic Cardinal Roger Mahony called for moral guidelines to govern the entertainment industry, but shopped short of advocating censorship.

"The motion picture and television industries must accept their share of the responsibility for these tragic results of their exploitation of sex and violence," Mahony, who heads the nation's largest Catholic archdiocese, said Saturday.

He said sex and violence in films contribute to AIDS, teen-age pregnancy and gang violence.

"These industries cannot hide behind a misplaced cry from 'freedom of expression.' I would encourage the media to look upon calls for reform not as a censorship issue, but, rather, as an issue of human rights and dignity," Mahony said.

Civil rights groups and industry officials, who monitored a Catholic forum on pornography in Hollywood on Saturday, attacked a proposed updated motion picture code advocated by the Christian Film and Television Commission to regulate sex, violence, religion and other topics.

Mahony offered support for the Christian group's proposed motion picture code, if voluntary and independent of industry control. He said such a code is one way to achieve movie and television reform.

Arthur Hiller, president of the Directors Guild of America and director of the films, "Love Story," "Silver Streak" and the coming movie "The Babe" about Babe Ruth, said that limiting freedom of expression is not the answer to society's problems.

"I believe in the Constitution and the First Amendment and free speech," Hiller said. "When you ask to set up rules to say what's proper and decent and what's not, you're taking away one of the most precious freedoms."

"This feels like the start of the McCarthy era again," he said.

Before 200 people in the Hollywood Roosevelt Hotel ballroom used for the first Academy Awards ceremony in 1929, Mahony and Christian Film and Television Commission chairman Theodore Baehr addressed the controversial family film code and decency guidelines.

More than 50 protesters, carrying signs such as "Don't crucify creativity," picketed outside the landmark hotel. At least a half-dozen opponents — from an adult sex film actress to gay activists — secured tickets for the event and quietly listened to speeches at the two-hour forum.

"Cardinal Mahony may be a great cardinal, but he's a lousy film critic," said Paul Fishbein, publisher of Adult Video News and member of Free Speech Legal Defense Fund. "If it's a matter of speech and nothing but speech, fine. I have no problem with him talking to producers and directors as long as the producers and directors retain their choice. If what he's saying is censorship, no."

Protesters said they fear that Mahony ultimately wants to create an office similar to the former Hays office to control script content, which Mahony denied Saturday.

"The time is right for us to take a look at a code," Mahony said. "The levels of violence, crime and promiscuity are results of what we see in the media. Media does influence behavior.

Two Pennsylvania farmers say 'Bah humbug' to Groundhog Day

By Kelly P. Kissel
Associated Press writer

DOTT, Pa. — While others fuss over a groundhog called Phil and today's annual winter rite, the harried owners of a vegetable farm say "Bah humbug!" to the rodents.

Underneath the 60-acre organic Flickerville Mountain Farm and Groundhog Ranch in central Pennsylvania, a tiny groundhog-built subway hums with life. Above ground, a natural all-they-can-eat salad bar offers a groundhog paradise.

That's fine for the wildlife, not so fine for the humans who own the place.

"I wish people would stop doting on the little (expletive)," said one owners, Ward Sinclair. "They do massive damage here."

Groundhog Day as celebrated in Punxsutawney, 125 miles northwest of Dott, marks the animal's emergence from hibernation. If the critter sees its shadow, tradition says that indicates six more weeks of winter.

"We've never seen a groundhog here on Groundhog Day and don't care to," Sinclair said.

The farm is thick with groundhogs. The property is punctured with entrances to their subterranean tunnels.

Cass Peterson, 42, like Sinclair a former reporter for The Washington Post and the farm's other owner, compares it to a city subway. "The subterranean tunnels must be like the Washington Metro system," Peterson said.

There's no subway map for these creatures, of course. But it's easy to imagine a Red Line that stops at tomatoes, radishes and beets. A Green Line connecting celery, beans and lettuce. And an Orange Line linking carrots to squash.

Sinclair, 58, tried to trace the tunnels last July 4 by dropping smoke bombs in the openings.

Efforts later to trap the animals yielded just 14 groundhogs in two months.

"Since I don't have a gun and I would get no pleasure from shooting creatures, we take them some distance away and release them," Sinclair said.

"I think we're the only people in the county who trap them," Peterson said. "Everybody else just shoots theirs."

Somehow, it seems, the rodents either return or others come to take their place. "They're monsters, but they're well-fed," he said.

When Sinclair and Peterson bought the farm in 1983 it had lain fallow for 10 years. Groundhogs so dominated the property, they were included in the farm's new name.

"We tell people, 'If our groundhogs won't eat it, we don't even think about selling it,'" Sinclair said.

Texas man wipes away window-washing record

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — Keith Witt wiped away the world window washing record, leaving three panes squeaky clean in just 10.13 seconds.

He was the fastest of 60 contestants in the International Window Cleaning Association's speed-cleaning contest, which ended Friday at a San Antonio hotel.

Gary Lepak of Tampa, Fla., won the medley.

Witt, the San Antonio co-owner of a company that washes buildings in several Texas cities, got a trip to the 1993 competition in Italy.

'I knew I could do better than that, but I'm satisfied. It's a world's record.'

— Keith Witt

He said he was hoping for a time of 9.25 seconds.

"I knew I could do better than that, but I'm satisfied. It's a world's record," Witt said.

He set the previous record of 10.5 seconds in 1990.

Contestants came from Australia, Japan, Canada, Sweden, Norway, Italy, Germany, Venezuela and several states.

Ryan wooed

HOUSTON (AP) — Texas Rangers pitcher Nolan Ryan said he has been contacted by a new group interested in buying the Houston Astros, and would think about joining the Astros' management if the group purchases the club.

Ryan

"They contacted me because they have an interest in my involvement from the management aspect of it," Ryan told KRIV-TV Friday night. "I've stated all along that if the right group were to purchase the Astros, I certainly would give some consideration to it."

Ryan declined to name any of the members of the new investment group.

His remarks are the first made publicly regarding activity on the proposed sale of the Astros since Oct. 2, when team owner John McMullen broke off negotiations with a group headed by Ben and Jeff Love. The negotiations had continued for more than eight months.

Astros spokesman Rob Matwick referred questions on sale negotiations to Louis Susman, senior managing director of Salomon Bros., the investment banking firm that has handled the prospective sale. Susman did not immediately return a telephone message left at his Chicago office Saturday by The Associated Press.

Velarde stumped

More money doesn't make up for less playing time

By Bill Price
Staff Writer

On the eve of signing a new contract with the New York Yankees, infielder Randy Velarde was visibly frustrated with his role in the pinstripe uniform.

Velarde, a 1981 graduate of Midland Lee, was a guest at the Midland Sports Banquet Wednesday after spending his first full year in the major leagues.

On Thursday, he avoided arbitration by signing a $360,000 one-year pact, but Velarde is still uncertain of his future with the Yankees.

In 1989 he spent so much time on the "Yankee Shuttle" between Class AAA Columbus, Ohio, and New York that USA Today gave him the "Yo-Yo of the Year" award. Even so, in 100 major league at-bats he hit .340 and earned a spot on the big league team in the 1990 season.

That year he hit .210 in 229 at-bats, while seeing action in 95 games.

By 1991 Velarde, a life-long shortstop until he hit the Big Apple, began to feel he was a victim of the Yankees' indecision about their infield as he was forced to play second and third bases. As a matter of fact, he has yet to shake the "utility infielder" tag and manager Stump Merrill used him more at third than anywhere else in 1991.

His '91 offensive numbers weren't great either — he hit .245 in 184 at-bats — and Velarde blames that on the uncertainty of when or where he would play.

'As long as they leave me at one position, I mean weeks at a time, then I can get my body to feel comfortable there. ... It's really discouraging, especially when you're seeing people put out of position to play.'

— Randy Velarde

"We didn't really have the stability in the infield, and if you're struggling defensively it's going to go on to your offense, as well," he said Wednesday.

"When you are thrown out there once every two weeks, or even if you're out there for five days in a row, I was in a situation where if I didn't get a hit in my first two times up I could pretty much much bank on it — I was going to get pinch hit for that third time up.

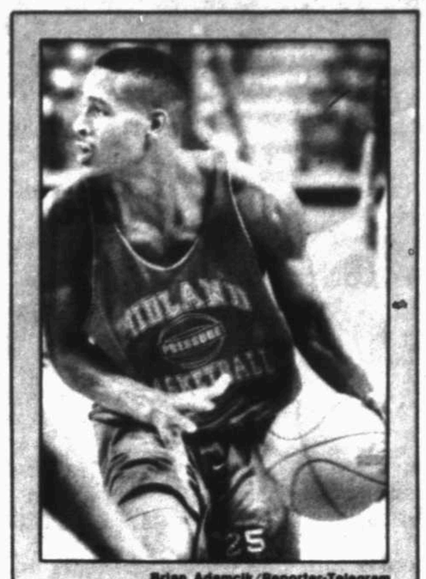

"It really doesn't put you in a positive frame of mind. You have to be able to play every day, and by every day I mean getting your four at-bats a game. You go up there your first two times to get an idea of how the pitcher is trying to pitch you that day.

"The way I'm going, I can see them the first two times then I can pretty much forget about that third and fourth time," he said.

The constant moving also shook his confidence on defense.

"It's so tough to play third one day then play short the next. That was my biggest transition, going from short to Answer: Bitterness.

Question: What one word best describes the feelings of the Midland College Chaparrals after their loss to Odessa College last Monday at Chaparral Center?

That loss spelled the end of an otherwise perfect Western Junior College Athletic Conference campaign for the MC hoopsters in the first half of the league season.

The bitterness will not be forgotten entirely, but, according to head coach Steve Green, there are other matters of greater concern. Like the second half of the conference season, which starts for Midland Monday at home against New Mexico Military.

"I didn't expect to be 8-0," Green said with candor. "I wanted to be 8-0. After the win against South Plains, I thought we could be 8-0, so (the South

■ The Midland Lee soccer team again emerges as a contender in District 3, posting its fourth shutout in five games this season.

By Joe Wyatt
Staff Writer

The Midland Lee defense clamped down on yet another foe Saturday and the result was much the same as it's been throughout the early going for the Rebels varsity soccer team.

Jason Gotcher and Matt Perkins staked the Rebels to a 2-0 lead with first-half goals, and goal keeper Freddie Silva was perfect on the only three save opportunities he faced as Lee posted its fourth shutout in five outings this year, 3-0 over visiting Abilene Cooper.

Lee's win, coupled with Abilene High's 2-1 victory over Midland High, keeps the Rebels and AHS tied atop the District 3 standings with 2-0 records. It also lifts the Rebels to 5-0 overall, with their only non-shutout victory coming over AHS, 3-2 in the championship game of the Abilene Tournament, Jan. 25.

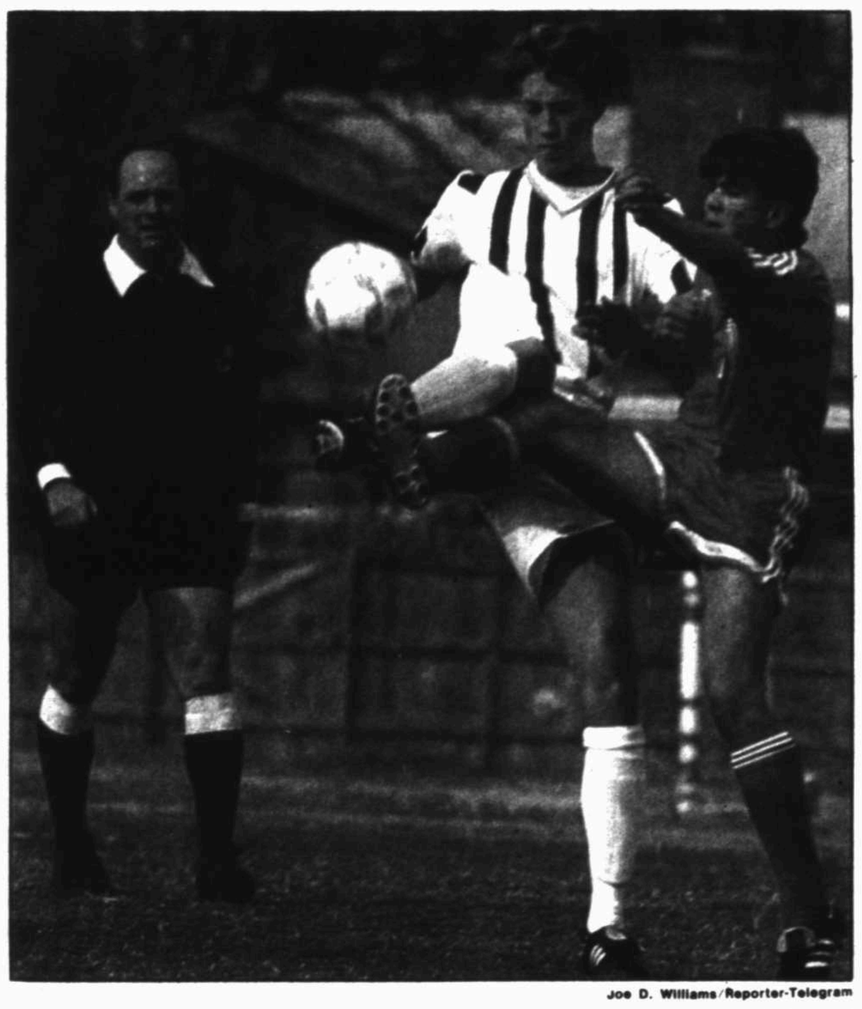

"We've got some kids that take pride in playing defense," said Lee coach Eddie Bull, who in two league games has seen Silva challenged just eight times.

"This is the second year for a lot of them to start on defense, and they do a great job of keeping the ball out of our scoring zone."

It was a feat that Cooper couldn't match Saturday.

Gotcher scored his fourth goal of the season in the 20th minute of play, taking

Just like a year ago, the MHS boys and Lee girls took first place in the team totals, and the MHS girls were second, just as they were in 1991. Where the Tall City swimmers improved was with the Lee boys, who moved from fourth last

JIMMY PATTERSON

Howie awaits legitimate opportunity

As a kid growing up in Baton Rouge, La., Mark Howie never wanted for anything.

He was raised in a cozy suburban-type atmosphere. His father being a chemist, the Howie family was never hungry.

Mom and dad set strict academic guidelines: Bring home less than a 'C' average, and any Howie student athlete would be benched. Needless to say, Mark brought home good grades.

Patterson

Howie went on to receive a degree in business from Louisiana State University. His wife Allyson passed the Louisiana bar exam last April. The two have a healthy baby girl, Michelle, who is now almost two years old.

Mark Howie has had a good life. He is what could be called the average American guy next door, who just so happens to play baseball. Minor League baseball, that is.

Despite all that has gone right in Mark Howie's life, there is a big void. And there has been one major injustice: The California Angels never gave him the time of day.

After spending three seasons in a Midland Angels uniform, Howie could've been Elmer Fudd as far as the California people were concerned. Howie, a consistent hitter for Midland, was named to the Texas League All-Star team, winner of the TL batting crown and chosen Tri-MVP at the Class AA All-Star Game. He was also a Player of the Month selection in all of minor league baseball.

If anyone deserved a chance to get a crack at The Show, it was Mark Howie. Although not one to complain about his status, Howie was confident he would get his chance. Two weeks prior to major league roster expansions last September, Howie said in an Aug. 17 story in the Reporter-Telegram: "Out of everybody in this organization, I've earned it. No one has done what I've done."

But Howie was denied his chance. Instead, California selected Midland teammate Kevin Flora, hoping to fill a need for speed. Howie holds no bitterness toward Flora, and he won't denigrate the big league club for the decision it made. He will, though, talk openly about his feelings.

"It hurt really bad," Howie said. "I was very disappointed. I won the batting title by 20 points. I broke records at Midland and I was one of the top players of the organization. It's not that I wasn't appreciated, it just didn't seem to matter."

Upon presenting Howie with his MVP award Wednesday night at the Angels' All-Sports Banquet, Midland manager Don Long called Howie the "consummate team player."

Before the banquet, Long said Howie finally opened up about his feelings of not being given his big league chance, but not until the two sat next to each other on the plane trip from Dallas to Midland Wednesday. Howie never discussed his bitterness while the team was in the midst of a pennant race.

"As a credit to Mark," Long said, "we went down to the last two games of the year when we had to win the second half. I know he thought about it (not receiving the call from California). Selfishly he could have talked about it, but he didn't."

Howie likely won't return to Midland again. He leaves with good memories, but they are minor league memories. Now, Howie finally has "a legitimate shot" at the big time. After becoming a free agent at the completion of last season, Howie signed a contract with the Cincinnati Reds, and will report to their major league camp in Plant City, Fla., on Feb. 25.

"I'm going to the big club," Howie said with certainty. "They're looking for an offensive utility player and that's where I can fit in."

In what Long called a rare occurrence, Howie was contacted by Cincinnati manager Lou Piniella, who took the time to tell Howie just how he planned to fit him in to the big league club's plans.

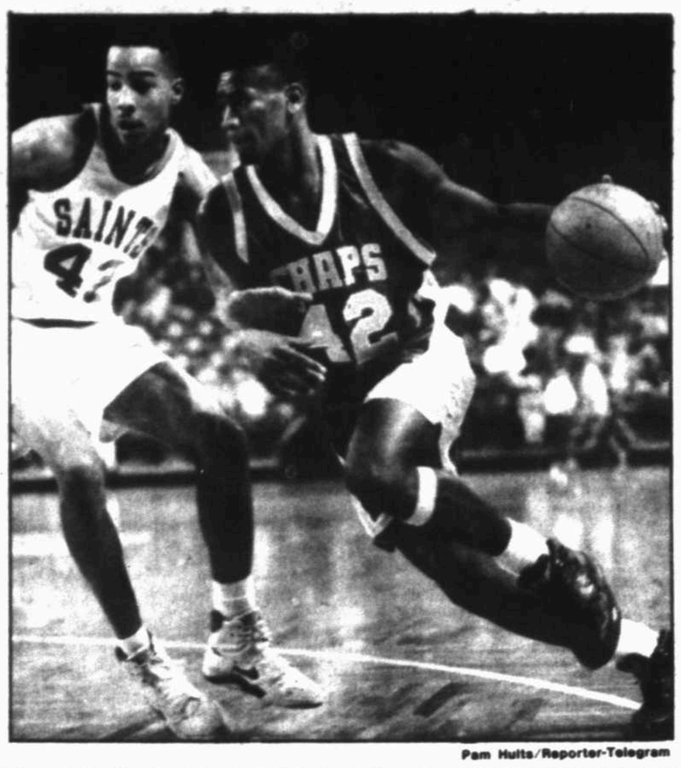

If it doesn't work out, and Howie is once again relegated to the role of minor leaguer, he says he'll play only a couple of more seasons. Then he'll put his education to use. He has already taken and passed the law school entrance exam.

"I'm 28 years old now," Howie said. "My age is starting to be a factor. There are a lot of 21-year-olds who are in better shape than me.

"But I'm not going to complain, or bellyache, or cry. Any bruises are tough, but you learn and you go on and play. But I know I can hit in the big leagues."

And when major league teams break camp in late March, there'll no doubt be plenty of Midland baseball fans hoping to see Mark Howie's name on Cincinnati's list of 25.

CHAPS: Players have 'exceeded expectations'

Plains game) was the source for our disappointment."

Green said his team has been using the OC loss as a motivator.

"It's like these guys know there's somebody out there that's taken something from them," Green said.

The win at home against SPC, combined with road victories at Howard College and New Mexico Junior College were, doubtless, the high points of the season's first half.

The most crucial second half tests will come in the form of road games at South Plains (Feb. 13), and Odessa (Feb. 27) and home games against Howard (Feb. 17) and NMJC (Feb. 24).

"I don't think it'll be any tougher the second half than it was the first half," Green said. "I don't think it matters from home court to home court, except maybe for ours, where I want people to be intimidated when they come play."

Green would never suggest that his Chaps will lose two conference games in the second half, but does feel the first place team will leave conference play having finished with a 13-3 mark.

The fourth place team in conference, which will also be the final Region V tournament qualifier, will have to advance with no more than six losses, Green feels.

"I don't think you'll see a 9-7 make it to regionals," Green said. "And that puts Howard and Western Texas on the bubble.

"And I don't see South Plains or New Mexico Junior College (both 6-2 to end the first half) going 3-4 the second go-round, which is why I think six losses is the maximum for any team hoping to make it."

Green said all his players "exceeded expectations" in their performance level over the first half, but that there's still more to do to complete their mission.

"We are probably a little above what realistically I thought we would be," Green said of the Chaps' first half performance. "But we're a greedy group that wants to win it all. Even though we're 7-1, we're extremely disappointed in that '1'. And that '1' is all we've talked about this week as a motivational tool for the second half."

REBS: Undefeated Lee visits Permian Tuesday

a pass from Matt Lawrence that crossed the goal mouth and slamming it into the right side just beyond the reach of Cooper keeper Jimmy Payne.

Perkins upped Lee's ante to 2-0 just two minutes later on a direct kick of 20 yards, high into the left corner of the goal. It was the second goal of the season for Perkins, and it followed a tripping penalty called against Cooper's Eric Monkkerud.

Silva's diving stop of Kurt Anderson's scoring threat in the 35th minute was the last time the Lee goal was threatened as all three of Cooper's shots on goal came in the first half. Lee, which had four first-half shots on goal, fired an additional five times at second-half net-minder Jeff Wehmeyer. One went in.

Jason Meyers hammered home Lee's final tally from point-blank-range after one Rebel shot hit the goal post and Wehmeyer turned back another.

"It got knocked around a couple of times. Jason (Gotcher) and Todd (Meade) both hit it. I just touched it last and it went off the post and in," Meyers described his first goal of the campaign.

Soccer purists would not consider Saturday's match to be a thing of beauty as Lee was whistled for 27 fouls and Cooper drew 18. But the win puts Lee on the road to Odessa Permian next Tuesday (5:30 p.m.) with a perfect record and a big dose of momentum.

"What you practice and play for is to be here (in first place), so we'll work to try an maintain this position and try to get better," Bull said.

In Saturday's other District 3 game, defending league titlist San Angelo got off to a 1-0 start in the loop with a 4-1 win over Odessa High (0-2).

Oilers fail to protect Hill, 11 others

Associated Press

HOUSTON — Houston Oilers starting receiver Drew Hill and cornerback Richard Johnson were among the dozen players left unprotected when the team submitted its Plan B list Saturday.

The Oilers filed their 37-player protected list on deadline, leaving 12 unprotected players unrestricted free agents.

Players not protected under Plan B can negotiate new contracts with other NFL teams until April 1. If they have not signed by then, their contractual rights revert to their current team.

Hill is the Oilers' all-time leading receiver.

"It would be a disgrace to lose Drew Hill because he's so valuable and he means so much to the team," quarterback Warren Moon told the Houston Chronicle Friday from Honolulu, where he is preparing for the Pro Bowl.

"Drew has the numbers to prove it. I hope they left him unprotected for strategical reasons, not because they want to get rid of him," Moon said.

Hill, who turns 36 in October and made $1.05 million last season, has said he will play one more season before retiring. He said during the season he did not want to return unless the Oilers guaranteed the last year of his contract so he did not have to worry about being placed on waivers.

Hill caught a career-high 90 passes this season for 1,109 yards and four touchdowns. He became the Oilers' career leader in catches (480) and yards (7,477). He also became the first player in NFL history to have four 1,000-yard seasons after turning 30.

"If Drew leaves the Oilers, there's going to be some guys having a lot to say about it," receiver Haywood Jeffires told the Chronicle from Honolulu. "Drew means so much to this team, they should do whatever it takes to keep him. They should treat him like a great player's supposed to be treated. The Oilers owe him that."

Johnson, the AFC's interception leader in 1990, has an injured knee that might require additional surgery.

Tackle Dean Steinkuhler, the Oilers' first-round draft pick in 1984, also was left unprotected. Steinkuhler has had both knee and elbow surgery. He was used in a reserve role last season and has been the subject of retirement speculation.

With receivers Hill, Tony Jones, Leonard Harris and rookie Alex Johnson all on the unprotected list, the run-and-shoot Oilers have protected only half of their eight-man receiving corps.

Also left unprotected by the Houston Oilers were: kicker Al Del Greco; linebacker Eric Fairs; defensive end Ezra Johnson; running back Victor Jones; guard-center Erik Norgard; and quarterback Reggie Slack.

MHS kickers lose to AHS

Staff Report

ABILENE — The Midland High soccer team was outscored 2-0 in a tie-breaker shootout with Abilene High here Saturday afternoon and dropped a 2-1 (2-0) decision to the Eagles.

MHS, which falls to 0-2 in District 3, rebounded from a 1-0 halftime deficit when sophomore David Farias scored on an unassisted goal at 14:50 of the second half.

But AHS used scoring kicks by Teddy Fernandes and Augie Perez in the shootout to capture the win.

MHS goalie Jeremy Hernandez had a good day, turning back 7-of-8 shots in regulation. The Eagles only regulation goal came with four seconds left to play in the first half. They never got a shot on goal in the second half.

But MHS shooters Mario Rodriquez, Dustin Arras, Toby Walker and Farias failed to score in the shootout.

AHS uses the win to keep a share of first place with Midland Lee. Both teams are 2-0 in league play, Lee getting there with a 3-0 win Saturday over Abilene Cooper in Midland.

The Bulldogs host Odessa High at 4:30 p.m. Tuesday as district play resumes.

Scoring

Midland High	0	1 (0)—1
Abilene High	1	0 (2)—2

First Half: 1. AHS, Edward Munoz, 39th minute.

Second Half: 2. MHS, David Farias, 14th minute.

Shootout: MHS (0); AHS (2): Teddy Fernandes, Augie Perez.

Shots on Goal: MHS 4, AHS 8. Fouls: MHS 15, AHS 10.

Del Rio,Bates on Dallas' list

Associated Press

IRVING — Jimmy Johnson made a trade for a defensive back Saturday and released a Plan B list that included linebacker Jack Del Rio, nine-year veteran Bill Bates and both his punter and placekicker.

Johnson gave an undisclosed pick in the April NFL draft for Garry Lewis, a reserve for the Los Angeles Raiders who also was a strong special teams contributer.

"We need to improve our secondary and we believe Lewis will fit in with what we do on defense," Johnson said. "Garry played a lot of man-for-man defense and we were able to give him a good evaluation. We think he can help."

Lewis played in all 16 games last year and started against Houston and Buffalo. He saw considerable action on the kickoff and punt coverage teams. He was an original seventh-round draft choice.

Johnson said his Plan B list "was much more of a difficult time for us this year because we have improved our talent level. We didn't want to leave anybody unprotected. We'd like to see all of those players return to training camp in Austin. I hope we don't lose anybody. A couple of years ago it wasn't like that."

Johnson said several players, including punter Mike Saxon, had told him that he could use their names on the unprotected list because they weren't going anywhere.

Placekicker Ken Willis was also on the unprotected list. There were indications Willis had also told Johnson he wasn't going to leave.

Tight end Rob Awalt, safety Ray Horton — who became involved in a contract dispute during the season with owner Jerry Jones — linebacker Darrick Brownlow and fullback Tommie Agee were thought to have some value on the Plan B market.

The Cowboys signed four players last year in Plan B.

VELARDE: Future uncertain

third, because everything comes so quick. It's more of a reaction type position.

"As long as they leave me at one position, I mean weeks at a time, then I can get my body to feel comfortable there."

Last year the Yankees were so unwilling to trust Velarde, they began trying anything to keep him out of the lineup.

"It's really discouraging, especially when you're seeing people put out of position to play. I mean, when we had Steve Sax playing at third base I told him 'That's really a slap in my face.' He's never played there before and he showed it in the week that he played there, totally out of position. Then we moved Pat Kelly there. It was really scary," he said.

But even more irritating, the 29-year-old Velarde said, was when he played well and was still yanked.

"It's more aggravating when you come off a two- or three-game 'spree where you did pretty good. You got your two or three hits and you made all the plays.

"You go on the field expecting to see your name in the lineup and you look, and it's not there."

But after switching agents in the off-season, and with a new contract in hand, Velarde said he now is able to prove he belongs.

Though he will have to battle the like of Charlie Hayes, who New York acquired from Philadelphia, for a roster spot, Velarde is ready for spring training.

"I honestly thought the year I hit .340, even though it was only on 100 at-bats, my confidence was there. It didn't matter who was pitching, I knew I was going to get my two hits.

"That's the kind of confidence you want to instill in your ballplayers, and they pretty much just slammed the door in my face and brought in somebody else. I don't know. We've just got to go down to spring training and I've got to do like I have the last three years.

"I'm just happy now that I'm an established big-leaguer and hope I can make that my home for the next 10 years," he said.

This week's bowling tip: You're rolling the ball great, hitting the pocket, doing everything right, but you keep leaving the 10 pin. You don't have to stand for that! Make some adjustments. Try moving up or back on your approach. Adjust your hand position by rotating your thumb slightly to the right or left. This will give the ball a different angle in the pocket. And when all else fails, stay cool. You may be squeezing the ball upon delivery and that could also affect ball reaction. Ten pins are a fact of bowling life, but by making these adjustments and keeping your armswing loose and free, you will cut down on the frequency of them.

Losses keep mounting for Mavs

Associated Press

DALLAS — Karl Malone of Utah scored 15 of his game-high 26 points in the third quarter as the Jazz opened up a close game before going on to defeat the Dallas Mavericks.

Malone hit five of eight shots from the field in the third quarter during a 29-10 scoring blitz that earned Utah a 66-51 lead on a Malone free throw with 4:54 left in the third quarter.

Dallas, a loser in 16 of its last 17 games, had held a 41-37 lead late in the second quarter before Utah's charge. Down the stretch, the Jazz (30-17) led by as many as 20, 100-80, when David Benoit hit a free throw in the final two minutes of play.

Suns 106, Rockets 92

PHOENIX — Jeff Hornacek scored 15 of his 21 points in the first half, helping the Phoenix Suns open a double-digit lead which they nursed into a victory over the Houston Rockets.

It was the 17th consecutive home victory for Phoenix — one shy of a record set from Dec. 23, 1989 to March 14, 1990. The Suns could tie the mark Monday night against the Los Angeles Lakers and then would need to beat Chicago on Wednesday to break it.

Tim Perry scored 20 for Phoenix, Andrew Lang had 18 and Cedric Ceballos 17.

Pistons 89, Hawks 80

ATLANTA — Isiah Thomas scored 10 of his 24 points in the last 6:07 as the Detroit Pistons continued their domination of Atlanta in the Hawks' worst offensive showing this season.

It was Detroit's 10th consecutive regular-season victory over the Hawks, its sixth in a row on Atlanta's home court. It snapped Atlanta's seven-game winning string at home.

The Hawks' previous low-point total this season came in an 88-85 loss Nov. 29 to San Antonio.

Orlando Woolridge added 16 points for the Pistons, seven in the final period. Dennis Rodman had 19 rebounds for Detroit.

Kevin Willis led Atlanta with 22 points and 16 rebounds and Paul Graham added 17 points.

The Pistons broke a 43-43 tie on Joe Dumars' 17-footer 33 seconds before halftime and never lost the lead in the second half.

The Pistons built their lead to 66-57 on a Dumars 16-footer 2:29 before the end of the third quarter before the Hawks rallied to trim the lead to 72-70 on a free throw by Morlon Wiley with 7:32 remaining.

Thomas and Woolridge accounted for all of Detroit's scoring the rest of the way.

Dumars added 15 points and Brad Sellers came off the bench with 11, all in the first half, for the Pistons.

The Hawks shot only 39 percent. Detroit shot only 43 percent.

76ers 126, Celtics 110

PHILADELPHIA — Charles Barkley scored a season-high 38 points and Armon Gilliam added 26 points and 13 rebounds as the Philadelphia 76ers defeated the Boston Celtics.

Philadelphia, which trailed by as many as 16 points in the first period, connected on 37 of 41 free throws, with Barkley making 17 of 20.

Boston was led by Reggie Lewis, who had 23 points.

The Celtics made 15 of their first 19 shots and took a 30-14 lead with 2:49 left in the first quarter. Philadelphia rallied behind Barkley and Ron Anderson and went on a 29-12 run to take its first lead of the game, 43-42, with 3:47 left in the second quarter.

The teams were tied at 53 at halftime, and a layup by Charles Shackleford gave Philadelphia a 60-59 edge with 10:16 left in the third quarter. The 76ers never again trailed.

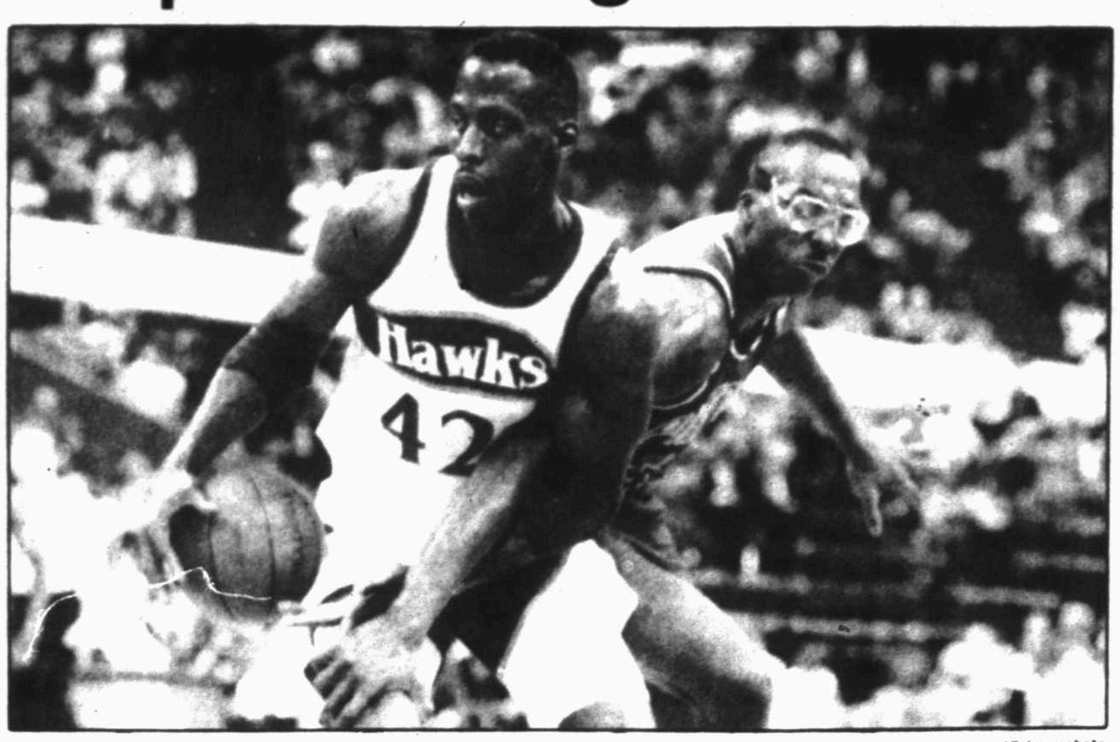

Clippers 99, Nets 88

LOS ANGELES — Ron Harper scored 13 of his 27 points in the third quarter Saturday night as the Los Angeles Clippers ended a four-game losing streak.

Drazen Petrovic had 19 points and Derrick Coleman added 18 points and 13 rebounds for the Nets, who have dropped five in a row — all on the road — after winning five straight and 12 of their previous 15 games.

Charles Smith added 24 points for the Clippers.

New Jersey's Chris Dudley had 12 points and a season-high 18 rebounds while making only his second start, as Sam Bowie sat out with a bruised lower abdomen.

Black Tie Affair named 1991 Horse of the Year

LAS VEGAS (AP) — Black Tie Affair, winner of the 1991 Breeders' Cup Classic and six other stakes races, was named 1991 Horse of the Year Saturday by the Thoroughbred Racing Associations.

The 5-year-old, who was retired at the end of the 1991 season, also won in the older male horse division.

Owner Jeffrey Sullivan, a Chicago businessman, said Saturday's announcement was a melancholy moment, just as the year had been for his prize horse.

"We will be hard-pressed to have another horse like this," Sullivan said. "And the ironic thing is I don't think he's run his best race yet."

Sullivan said he had decided at the start of the year that "win or lose, this was going to be it. We didn't want a broken-down horse."

Trainer Ernie Paulos said he had wanted to continue racing Black Tie Affair.

"I'd liked to have gone on another year, but Mr. Sullivan thought we should retire him," Paulos said. "As of today, I'm going to retire my black tie, too."

The televised announcement of Horse of the Year award at the Las Vegas Hilton was part of the 21st annual Eclipse Awards honoring top horses, trainers, owners and jockeys in the racing industry.

Black Tie Affair earned nearly $2.5 million in 1991 before being retired to stud at Lexington, Ky. He ended his career with earnings of nearly $3.4 million and 19 victories.

SWIMMERS: Thirty-nine Midlanders head for regionals season to second place this time around.

In boys competition, the two-time defending regional champion Aqua Dawgs dominated the field by amassing 155½ points as Matt Houston set a new district record in the 100-yard backstroke with a time of 54.39. Lee came in second by scoring 62 points and San Angelo was third with 57.

For the Rebel girls, 91½ points was good enough to outdistance MHS, which came home with 73 points and two new district relay records. Elizabeth Braun, Kelli Hales, Kathryn Krall and Jody Mraz teamed up for both those records, swimming the 200 freestyle relay in 1:47.75 and the 400 freestyle relay in 3:55.44, smashing the mark of 3:56.65 that had stood since 1985.

With the top six finishers in each event qualifying for regionals, 39 Midlanders will attend the Region I swimming and diving competition Feb. 14-15 at the Texas Tech pool in Lubbock. Last year, 35 Midlanders made the regional meet.

"It think it was a very successful meet, even more so because of the number of sophomores we had in both the boys and girls ranks," said MHS coach Larry Ridge. "The sophomores tapered extremely well, and I'm proud of how well they handled their first championship pressure.

"Things are looking extremely good for regionals. Our girls will go on and improve, and will have a good showing at regionals. For the boys, we're hoping for a three-peat regional championship. I couldn't be happier with both the boys and girls. They worked their tails off and it showed this weekend."

First-year Lee coach Jeff Goelz was equally glowing in his reports.

"We went into the meet trying to figure out who can go how fast, but after the preliminaries (on Friday) about 90 percent of out times were faster than I thought.

"I knew we had the talent and capability if the kids swam up to their potential, and they did. They swam their hearts out. I kind of walked into a good girls team here, but because of the lack of depth I was a bit apprehensive about the boys. But the guys all came out of nowhere and proved themselves," Goelz said.

The Aqua Dawgs will send 12 boys swimmers, nine girls swimmers and two girls divers to the regional meet. Lee's representation breaks down to eight girls and five boys swimmers, and two girls and one boys diver.

Lee placed 1-2 in the girls 1-meter diving Friday, as Jogee Wollard and Christy Connell took the top spots. Katherine Bash and Courtni Harrison qualified for MHS. In boys diving, Juan Arguello placed second for the Rebels.

Here are the results from the 1991-92 District 4-5A swim meet in Abilene (Top six places earn points and advance to the Region I meet):

Horned Frogs take one game lead in SWC race

Associated Press

FORT WORTH — Michael Strickland scored 11 of his 14 points in the second half Saturday night and the Texas Christian Horned Frogs seized control of first place in the Southwest Conference with a 67-54 victory over the Houston Cougars.

TCU is 16-4 overall, 5-1 in the SWC. Houston dropped to 15-4 and 4-2.

With the game tied at 46-all with 8:55 to go, TCU took control behind Strickland and reserve center Kurt Thomas.

Thomas made a bucket then Strickland scored on a four-point play and the Frogs were off on a 12-0 run that had the sellout crowd of 7,166 fans jumping in Daniel-Meyer Coliseum. Strickland was fouled on a 3-pointer and hit the free throw.

Thomas finished with 8 points as a substitute for foul-plagued Reggie Smith, who had 17 points and 10 rebounds.

The Cougars were led by Sam Mack who had 21 points and nine rebounds. Charles Outlaw was held to only 5 points by the tough Frog defense.

Houston's confusing 1-3-1 matchup zone defense caused the Horned Frogs scoring problems in the first half.

The Cougars led 28-20 at halftime after allowing TCU only six field goals and 28 percent shooting from the field in the first 20 minutes. Houston led by as many as 11 points at 28-17 before Strickland's 3-pointer at the buzzer trimmed the deficit.

It was the fourth straight season that Houston had lost on the road to the Frogs.

Rice 66, SMU 56

HOUSTON — Brent Scott scored 23 points and Adam Peakes added 15 as the Rice Owls beat Southern Methodist.

SWC Roundup

The Owls, coming off a 76-50 blowout at the hands of conference-leading Texas Christian Tuesday night, improved to 14-6 overall and 4-2 in league play. The Mustangs fell to 8-10 and 2-4.

The game was close until Peakes led a 9-2 run with seven points that gave the Owls a 37-27 lead at halftime.

Rice stayed hot in the second half, opening with a 15-4 run, led by Scott and Marvin Moore, who combined for 13 of the Owls' 15 points.

SMU was led by Mike Wilson, who had 13 points. Tim Mason, who had averaged 19 points over his last 10 games, was held to 11 points. His seven rebounds led the Mustangs.

Rice's Torrey Andrews scored 10 points and led the Owls with seven rebounds.

The Owls held Southern Methodist to 48 percent shooting from the field. Only three teams, Arizona State, Michigan, and TCU have shot better than 50 percent from the field against the Owls this season.

Texas Tech 70, Texas A&M 50

LUBBOCK — Reserve guard Stacy Bailey scored 17 points to lead Texas Tech over Texas A&M.

Texas Tech (10-8, 2-4) broke open the game when Bailey came off the bench, dropped in an eight-footer and two 3-point baskets to give Tech a 31-20 advantage with 2:22 left in the first half.

Texas A&M (3-13, 0-6) never got closer than 10 points the rest of the way. It was ninth straight loss for the Aggies.

Tech's leading scorer, Will Flemmons, scored eight points, 13 below his season average. Lamont Dale added 13 points for the Red Raiders and Bryant Moore had eight.

The Aggies were led by Anthony Ware with 10 points. He was the only one to score in double figures. Tony McGinnis and Chuck Henderson each scored eight.

Rhode Island 92, Texas 79

PROVIDENCE, R.I. — Andre Samuel scored a game-high 20 points, 10 at 4:43 of the second half as Rhode Island came back from a halftime deficit to overpower Texas.

Rhode Island improved to 15-3. Texas fell to 12-9.

Terrance Rencher led the Longhorns with 16 points. Texas' Dexter Cambridge, returning to the team after a 16-game suspension imposed by the NCAA, scored 12 points in 22 minutes of action.

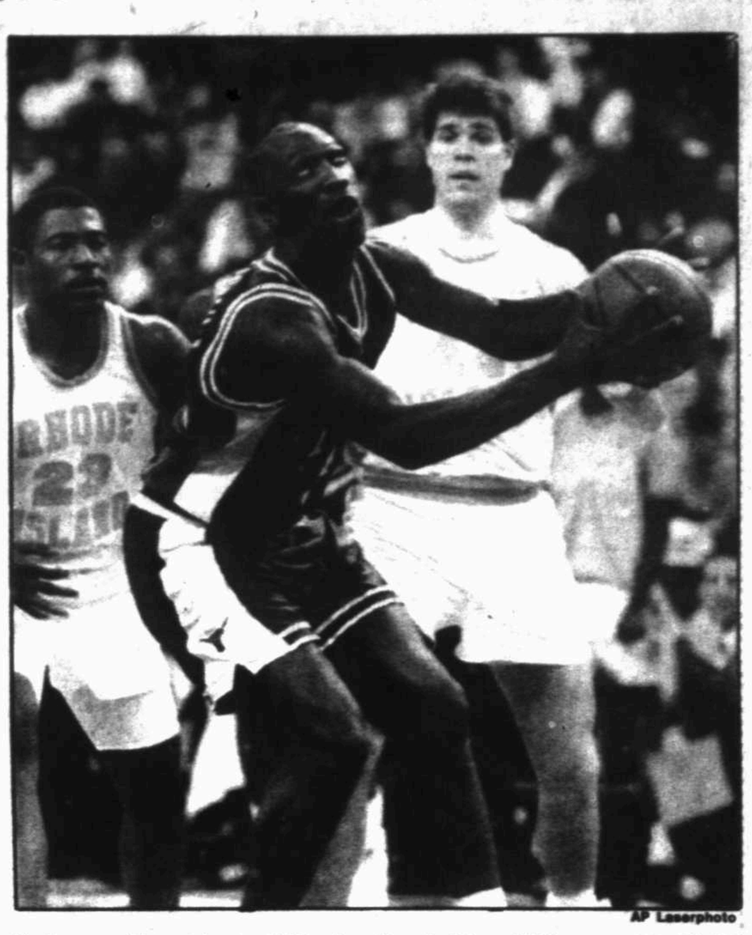

Cambridge was benched after racking up his fourth foul two minutes into the second half.

Mo.-Kansas City 75, Baylor 61

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — David Robinson scored 24 points Saturday night and Ronnie Schmitz added 23 as Missouri-Kansas City defeated Baylor 75-61.

After Baylor center Joey Fatta's free throw at 13:08 of the second half brought Baylor within 51-48, the Kangaroos went on a 22-7 run, including 10 unanswered points, to open up a 73-55 lead with 2:37 left.

Schmitz had five points, Robinson scored four and sophomore Tony Dumas, who had 17 points, had seven points during the decisive run.

St. John's destroys UConn; Hoosiers fall to Spartans

Associated Press

A three-game losing streak had St. John's down, especially going into a game against No. 6 Connecticut.

The Redmen, unranked for the first time in two years, didn't manage to make it close against the Huskies. They blew them off the court.

After Connecticut took a 2-0 lead on Scott Burrell's basket five seconds in, St. John's scored 14 consecutive points and went on to a 90-57 win on Saturday.

"I kept wondering when the next win would come," St. John's coach Lou Carnesecca said. "Now that we played this great game, I'm puzzled. Maybe I'll even get angry at my guys and ask where they've been all year."

Malik Sealy, who had been held below 20 the last three games, had 25 points and 18 rebounds. Reserve Lamont Middleton had a career-high 19 points and Shawnelle Scott had 14 points and 13 rebounds.

St. John's outrebounded Connecticut 54-31.

"Twenty years from now, I can sit back and watch the film of this one and still enjoy it as much as I can today," Carnesecca said.

It was the worst loss for the Huskies since a 33-point loss to St. John's on Feb. 2, 1985.

"I'm not sure that I've seen any team as fired up as St. John's was today," Connecticut coach Jim Calhoun said. "I also have not seen a UConn team come out as flat as we did. If we played our best, I'm not sure we would have beaten them. This was our worst of the year. We have had high moments but this was without a doubt our lowest."

Following an Elmer Bennett basket that got visiting Notre Dame (7-9) to 19-16 at 13:33, Duke went on an 11-0 run over the next three minutes.

No. 13 Michigan St. 76
No. 4 Indiana 60

Mike Peplowski had 16 points and 11 rebounds as the Spartans snapped visiting Indiana's 13-game winning streak.

"This was a great win for Michigan State basketball," Peplowski said. "We played a great game. We played very well, but we played very well together, and not many teams can do that."

"We were never really a threat today," Indiana coach Bob Knight said. "Their effort and enthusiasm just knocked us out of our sync."

No. 5 Kansas 96
No. 18 Oklahoma 95

Rex Walters and Alonzo Jamison made big plays in the closing minutes as visiting Kansas (16-1, 4-0) won its fifth straight and remained unbeaten in the Big Eight Conference.

Kansas led by as many as 18 in the second half before the Sooners (14-4, 2-3) rallied.

Oklahoma, which lost its first two conference home games for the first time since 1964, closed to 92-90 on a 3-pointer by Terry Evans with 44 seconds left. But Jamison, who scored 23, made three of four free throws in the final 21 seconds.

SYRACUSE, N.Y. — Glenn Sekunda's off-balance bank shot with 40.6 seconds left capped No. 12 Syracuse's comeback from a 12-point deficit in the last 7½ minutes and led the Orangemen past Seton Hall for the 23rd straight time.

No. 23 Florida St. 79
Wake Forest 78

Sam Cassell scored 11 of his 24 points in the final 7:21 as the Seminoles (14-5, 6-3 Atlantic Coast Conference) held on. The lead changed hands 13 times in the second half. Wake Forest got the ball back with four seconds left, but failed to get off a shot.

Wake Forest (11-6, 4-5) took its last lead at 66-65 with 5:17 left on Chris King's 15-foot baseline jumper. Anthony Tucker's tip-in closed the Demon Decons to 79-78. School finance ruling reasonable

In ruling unconstitutional the plan to finance public schools in Texas through a system of county education districts, the Texas Supreme Court appears to be reaffirming what millions of Texans already knew: You can't get there from here, at least not along this route.

The public school system needs major assistance, but the situation is not going to be rendered better by taking money from Andrews to give to Midland or by otherwise reducing the quality of education in some of the state's school districts. That's backwards from the intention of improving education.

The desirable — as well as achievable — goal for which Texas schools should strive is to provide all public school students the opportunity to receive an education that will put them on an equal educational footing with all other students as they graduate from high school. Beyond that, differences in local financial resources as well as interests will always remain and should. County education districts and "Robin Hood" raids will not resolve all the possible differences. And, as we've noted before, our society would be damaged far beyond the value to be derived from a change to a system in which the diversity of individual areas was removed as a factor.

Rather, the Supreme Court's ruling seems to indicate the Legislature needs a new tact in attempting to resolve the education funding dilemma. What may be needed is a fundamental change in the way the state school system views education equality. Texas cannot afford to throw the billions of dollars into the system it would take to turn every school district into another Dallas Oak Cliff. Money alone is not the answer to the education dilemma anyway.

On the other hand, a reasonable approach such as deciding the basic minimum skills acceptable for a student to graduate from high school and bringing all Texas schools to that level appears the only possible solution.

That would mean schools along the border regions that have extraordinary numbers of Spanish-speaking students would need additional funding for "Head Start" and other successful early-education programs. Other school districts might need assistance in meeting the educational minimum in other disciplines. But that offers a much more acceptable way of achieving "equality" than the financing plans that have already been ruled unconstitutional and against the will of the people of Texas.

The Supreme Court's decision was the correct one, as was leaving the county education districts plan intact until 1993. That will no doubt result in confusion and hardship for some districts but it was necessary as the ruling was handed down just as the deadline arrived for paying property taxes.

Gov. Ann Richards must now call the Legislature into session to deal with school financing once more. This time legislators should abide by the court rulings — and the will of the people.

Letters show Cuba agreement not binding

WASHINGTON — The recent declassification of letters between President John F. Kennedy and Soviet Premier Nikita Khrushchev does not tell all the secrets of the Cuban missile crisis.

Anderson

The letters revealed that Kennedy was not bound, as Americans thought he was, by a public pledge he made not to invade Cuba in return for the Soviet removal of nuclear missiles they had covertly placed in Cuba in October 1962. Kennedy never considered the agreement with Khrushchev to be binding and continued to retain the option of an invasion.

But what the letters don't reveal is that it wasn't until 1983 that the secret agreement between the State Department and the White House to keep that option open was reversed. It happened when the United States finally got a president that the State Department feared might actually invade Cuba — Ronald Reagan.

It is evident from a series of still-classified documents we have seen on the missile crisis, that State Department legal experts reversed themselves on the interpretation of the agreement, apparently because they were afraid Reagan would use the 21 years of classified legal debate as justification to invade.

The Kennedy-Khrushchev letters — America's first nuclear weapons agreement with the Soviet Union — were not, in fact, an agreement at all, but an understanding. For years, as far as the American public knew, the United States was under a pledge not to invade Cuba because of the peaceful resolution of the missile crisis. This year, because of a four-year-long effort by an indefatigable group, the private National Security Archives, the letters were declassified to coincide with a conference in Cuba on the missile crisis.

We broke the story in 1983 — based on secret documents that we had seen then — that an ironclad agreement never existed. Now we can tell the whole story, which is still hidden in classified documents that the State Department doesn't want to make public. The National Security Archives is still seeking several hundred related documents, but the State Department is refusing to turn them over.

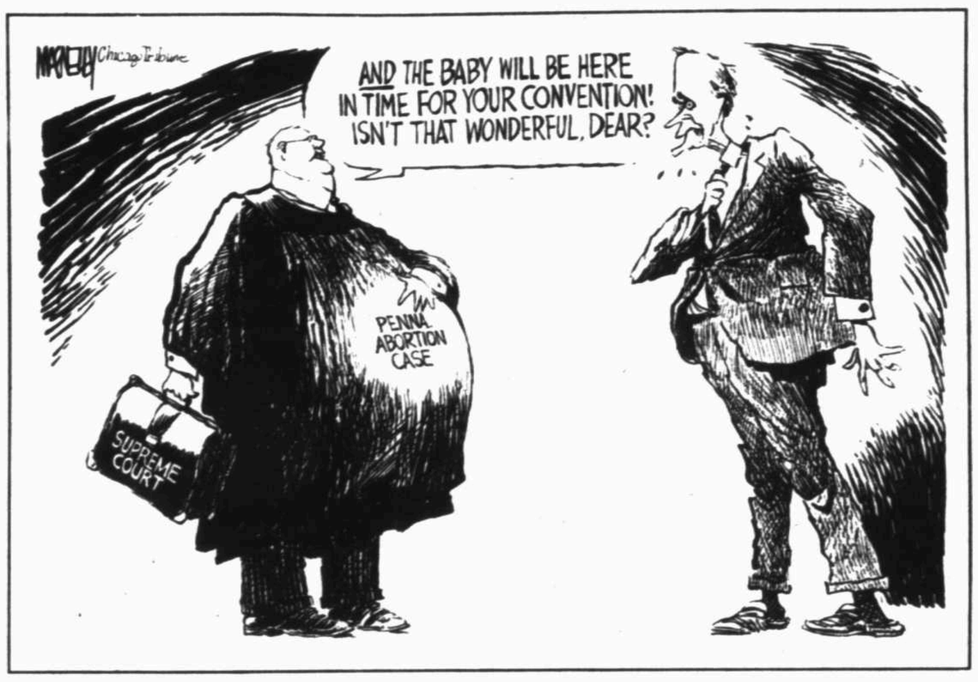

Our associate Dale Van Atta has obtained several of these top-secret documents. They reveal that Kennedy was a shrewd bargainer who resisted Khrushchev's attempts to pin him down to a firm promise to leave Cuba alone.

The world thought the crisis ended on Oct. 28, 1962, when Khrushchev blinked and both men said they had reached an agreement. But it began in earnest again five days later when Kennedy sent the Soviets a new and expanded list of the weapons he wanted taken out of Cuba. That list went far beyond the nuclear missiles that had sparked the crisis in the first place.

Khrushchev finally agreed, with much grousing, to remove the nuclear missiles and the bombers, and the second Cuban Missile Crisis ended on Nov. 20, 1962.

But the two men still had no binding agreement about an invasion, and Khrushchev knew it. He pressed, and Kennedy dodged. The State Department fell into line with that dodge until 1983. Then, the classified record reveals a memo from State Department lawyers changing their minds. Our sources say they began calling the non-invasion pledge binding because of a trigger-happy president.

Clarence Thomas' confirmation deserved

WASHINGTON — Here are words that some political extremists tried desperately to prevent from ever being published in a Supreme Court ruling:

"Kennedy, J., delivered the opinion of the court, in which Rehnquist, C.J., and O'Connor, Scalia, Souter and Thomas, JJ., joined."

Will

Three months after the failure of the smearing of Clarence Thomas, he has participated in a case that perfectly demonstrates why he deserved to be confirmed. The case involved an apparent injustice — an act of racial discrimination. But the court had the courage to let the injustice stand rather than resort to judicial overreaching. This is a story of the courage to be judicial and self-denying rather than political and self-indulgent.

Five years ago, for the first time in modern times, some black men were elected to the county commissions of Etowah and Russell counties in Alabama. In one county the white majority on the commission promptly stripped individual commissioners of control over road-repair budgets in their respective districts and put all repair money in a common fund controlled by the six-person commission. In the other county the commission majority abolished the members' individual road districts and transferred repair authority to an engineer selected by majority vote of the commissioners.

The black officials brought suit, charging that the reallocations of authority violated Section 5 of the 1965 Voting Rights Act. That section says that jurisdictions covered by the Act must seek federal permission ("preclearance") before implementing any new "voting qualification, or prerequisite to voting, or standard, practice, or procedure with respect to voting."

The court, with Justice Kennedy writing for the majority, did not express an opinion about what the two counties have done, although it did note that "nothing we say implies that the conduct at issue in these cases is not actionable under a different remedial scheme."

However, the court said, Section 5 could not be a remedy because it addresses, explicitly and only, changes "with respect to voting" rather than, say, with respect to governance.

The court noted that it has hitherto construed Section 5 expansively. It has held that preclearance is required for changes in manners of voting, in requirements and qualifications for candidates, in the composition of the electorate for an office, or involving the creation or abolition of an elective office.

But the plaintiffs (backed by the Justice Department) here urged the court to leap into a vast and thorny thicket. They wanted the court to rule, in effect, that it is impermissible for any covered jurisdiction, state or local, to adopt without federal permission any change that in any way dilutes the value of the votes of minorities.

Justice Stevens, joined in dissent by Justices White and Blackmun, chafed under the idea that the court could not by fiat rectify what seems to have been nasty acts whereby newly elected black commissioners were unable to exercise decision-making authority traditionally associated with their offices. Stevens noted that lower federal courts and the Justice Department have previously used Section 5 to cover transfers of decision-making power that have "a potentially discriminatory impact on black voters." What, Stevens wondered, of a reallocation of governmental authority that reduced an official to a mere figurehead — would that not be tantamount to abolishing an office, and would that not implicate Section 5?

To strike down all stratagems and subterfuges by which minorities can be burdened in civic life, Stevens would give even broader sweep to Section 5's definition of voting.

In this case the six members of the majority foreswore the catharsis of righting a wrong. They had the courage required by the court's institutional ethic: They knew it was right not to rectify a wrong that was beyond the reach of the law at issue. That one of the six is black was irrelevant, magnificently so. That is the importance of the phrase, "...Thomas, JJ., joined."

Unbiased panel should work with remapping

AUSTIN — Our courts are the great equalizers in this nation. They represent justice and a mainstay of the American foundation.

Accordingly, we give federal judges tremendous authority to match their responsibilities. To ensure they are fair and are not swayed by any pressures of the moment, we appoint them for life.

And when people suspect judges are misuing their power, we cannot take those suspicions lightly. When the charges involve the electoral process it should ring alarm bells equal to the occasion.

This is not to say that charges against two Republican judges regarding redistricting decisions are true. But suspicion exists and should be resolved.

Three Republican judges, all appointed by Ronald Reagan, threw out a state Senate redistricing plan agreed to in a settlement with a Hispanic minority group that opposed the original plan produced by the 72nd Legislature.

Democrats accuse two of the judges — James Nowlin of Austin and Walter Smith of Waco — of unethical conduct. The third judge on the panel is Will Garwood of Austin.

Nowlin, principal author of the court-imposed plan, contends it benefits minorities more than the Legislature's plan.

But all the minority groups, black and Hispanic, favor the Legislature's plan. They accuse Republicans of hypocrisy for using minorities as an excuse in a scheme to benefit Republican candidates.

The court plan creates the same number of minority voting districts as the Legislature's plan, but it greatly diminishes the chances of election for several Democratic incumbents.

Estimates vary, but as many as seven or eight additional Republicans might be elected via the court plan.

Partisanship from Democrats and Republicans is one thing. But we elect them. And when we are fed up, we unelect them.

No one elects federal judges.

And when people suspect judges are not impartial, our judicial system and our society is in serious jeopardy.

Texas needs to take redistricting out of the hands of politicians and the courts. The job should go to an unbiased, independent panel of citizens to draw districts based on the law and not on partisan politics.

Gilles represents best pick for judge

I have recently learned of George D. Gilles' campaign for judge in the 142nd Judicial District Court of Midland County and I felt compelled to share my opinion as a former resident of Midland and one who still cares about the people of Midland.

I now reside in Houston, and like many people in this country, I often sit in front of the television and get disgusted at the crime and legal system. I am now in the legal profession and have had the opportunity to view first hand the importance of honorable judges. Judges have allowed and dismissed how the jury is instructed. Because they make such crucial decisions, it is of the utmost importance that we demand judges with integrity and intelligence who will maintain a just temperament.

I have know George D. "Jody" Gilles for over eight years, have worked with him on various projects and spent many weekend outings with he and his family. He is, without a doubt, one of the most qualified individuals Midland has to offer to serve as judge. He has over 16 years of legal experience in all areas of the law. He is a man of the highest moral character and has always demonstrated fairness in his actions. He is conservative, just and compassionate.

It is my opinion that Midland would be missing a great opportunity to maintain the highest quality in judges by failing to elect George D. Gilles.

We should appreciate sheriff's compassion

Not so long ago I received a phone call from the sheriff's department. I was told the door to our pickup truck was standing open, for me to go out and check to see if anything was missing and if so to call back and let the deputy know. I could hardly believe my own ears, it was 2:30 a.m. I had failed to close the door good, nothing was wrong.

Then on March 18, 1991 we had a big fire that destroyed our home, two greenhouses, barn, three tractors, out buildings — everything in sight seemed to start burning in a matter of minutes. I looked over to see Sheriff Painter shaking his head as if to say, "I can't believe this."

Do we want a sheriff who cares about the small, everyday things in our community and is still tough enough to chase the bad guys across four counties if it was necessary in order to catch the bad guys? My hat is off to any sheriff who refuses to be intimidated by others who forget to mention how many deputies are spread out watching out for all of us on the home front.

Think about it folks. We do not need a yes ma'am sheriff. Don't let Sheriff Gary Painter get away.

White should logically replace Castro's spot

Now that John Castro has officially tendered his resignation from the Midland City Council, the council must appoint someone to fill the created vacancy. In the last two-place, at-large election that placed Castro and J.D. Faircloth on the council, the third place went to Hugh White. Logic and fairness to the public would dictate that White be appointed to the vacancy as he lost by a very small percentage to Castro. However, we are dealing with the city council, a group not known for logic.

What no doubt will happen is that after much under-the-table dealings, we will be saddled with yet another "rubber stamp."

Commissioners should stop playing politics

Why don't the county commissioners admit to the real reason why they are so against Sheriff Gary Painter regarding the reverse drug stings. The real reason is money and power!

"Bro" Seltzer and the commissioners want to get their hands on the seized drug money so they can use it for their own interests. They have tried every way they can think of to get this money, including trying to blacken Painter's name and drag him through such bad publicity, which is not deserved.

The one thing Seltzer and the commissioners do not want the public to know is that it is illegal for the commissioners to touch this money. The State of Texas legislation states where and how that money can be used and it definitely does not go to the general fund for the use of the commissioners.

Also, since Seltzer had advocated for so long that the county is wide-open for a lawsuit from the sheriff's department, why is he now so interested in law enforcement officers' liability insurance? Is this a case of "C.Y.A.?" If the law-enforcement officers suddenly need liability insurance and the county commissioners are so anxious to save the money, why hire an Austin-based insurance consultant to find an insurance carrier? Why does our tax money have to go out of town for insurance consulting? Out of all the insurance agencies in Midland there is not one that could handle this insurance?

Just a reminder that two of our county commissioners, Louisa Valencia and Durward Wright, are up for re-election. These are the same people that gave themselves a raise and increased our taxes. The taxes were raised to increase the tax surplus and did not benefit anybody.

Remember that the voters of Midland County have no control or say regarding the county commissioners actions, so we need to make sure that the people we elect, other than Louisa Valencia and Durward Wright, have the taxpayers' interest at heart and not play politics with the sheriff or any other elected officers.

READERS' VIEWS on:
Taxes, defeat of economic development tax

City leaders lose sense of fiscal responsibility

Thank you for your excellent set of articles on the debt issued by our local governmental entities. I was outraged that the city would pay $500,000 for a vacant lot that was appraised at $84,000. It seems that the council members that supported the purchase and all of the city staff have lost all sense of fiscal responsibility.

There is absolutely no way to justify such a blatant waste of tax money and the council should be made to explain what ever possessed them to squander our tax money. First the proposed airport expansion and now this.

Next year when the council increases our taxes and tells us how efficient the city government is, I will try not to fall down laughing.

Election results show feelings toward taxes

For anyone with any perception at all, the recent squashing of the proposed tax increase to "Attach New Business to Midland" should be a clear sign about how the taxpayers really feel about tax, tax, tax and tax some more.

The people who couldn't wait to get their hands on the new tax money would now have us feel we've signed Midland's death certificate. Nothing left for us to do but pack up and move on. Last one out of town be sure to turn off the lights. Horsefeathers! Midland isn't going down the tubes for lack of that tax and they know it.

It's also hard to believe, too, that the taxpayers either want or need a new $30 million dollar airport. Put that to a vote and see how far it gets. This past weekend you could have shot a shotgun in the ticket area of the existing airport and not hurt anyone. You people must be hearing "If we build it, they'll come."

According to the 1990 U.S. Census, Midland's population is 89,443. We're being told that by the year 2000 Midland will have 200,000 plus people. If that's even close to accurate, let's wait until about 80 or 90,000 of them show up and let them help us pay for what's needed.

Development plans had an early start

In the Reporter-Telegram, Tuesday, Jan. 21, a front-page headline stated " 'Time, place, circumstance' defeat tax.' " I would like to counter with "funding-source, bureaucratic abuse, and fed-up defeat tax," or maybe: "There's a better way."

Contrary to what Midland College's director of Business Studies program said in the Reporter-Telegram, "Midland ... has never had a comprehensive, consensus-derived development plan," yes we have.

Before there was a tax support suggestion for an economic development group we had "Objectives for Midland" that represented all of the city and county. This started in the Middle '60's and, if my memory is accurate, was coordinated by the chamber of commerce and many leaders not in the chamber.

Their master plan for growth, development and diversification brought or helped bring Levi Strauss, Tidwell Industries, Magnatex and Texas International, among others, to Midland.

Also in the plan was development of a community college. Even with the hassle to get the objective completed, it was accomplished without a tax-supported committee.

I understand there is still a back-up support group that updates the master plan and the updating does have some positive results in diversification. A good example is the now existent Jacobs Electronics. In addition to climate, location, taxes, friendly attitude, Dr. Jacobs said that his decision to move the company to Midland was influenced by our community leaders, including elected officials, who said "We want you here and we'll work with you." Isn't that an easy, simple and effective way to sell the product without bureaucratic confusion?

Many of the original Objectives for Midland participants are still here and probably would share in a 1990's plan if asked. One word of caution: Most of them are conservative and don't believe in a sales tax for funding any more than the voters did.

Isn't it a shame we can't have some kind of a tax-roll-back-election to defeat this issue again before we have it forced on us!

City leaders discover budget plan that works

Miracles never cease! I read in your Thursday, Jan. 23, Midland Reporter-Telegram, section B, the article "City leaders consider new budgeting plan." It stated, "Under the plan, a department that saves money will be able to spend part of the savings on whatever it chooses."

My congratulations to them. They just may have found the answer to their problems — I found that out when I got my first paycheck back in the '40s; it would only buy so much — same today.

Too bad our "city leaders" didn't try that before they spent our tax money on a one quarter-cent tax election. My household budget and every other business in this world should be run with a plan.

They may even find it's fun buying a new white hat with what they save without asking us taxpayers to buy their candy.

Mrs. Tom H. Dollahite

City leaders should show care for all

Just in case there are some who don't know it, or don't believe it, last week's tax election to support "economic development" is still not over. There are a lot of us who were not willing to support our elected officials on a rather vague issue where it did not seem important to those whom we voters have given leadership status to give us specifics on their plan to spend new tax money.

There are a lot of questions some voters still want answered, such as where did the money come from for all of those hard-sell television ads? Your newspaper seems to stand solidly behind passing the issue. Could your management "feel" some of that new money in your pocket, too? Every day leading up to voting time the Reporter-Telegram was carrying large ads encouraging a "yes" vote for the new money tax. What money paid for those ads? Did we taxpayers, in reality, pay for that whole hard-sell campaign? If some private individuals actually paid out of their pockets, what did they stand to gain from their financial investment?

Our city does need to redesign its approach to its own financial welfare. No one, no city or any other entity, should ever allow itself to be one-dimensional. Your newspaper always carries a section headed "Oil Report." Where is your section, or even your regular report — a positive report — on the industries, manufacturers, or other businesses already working here?

What makes anyone think that tax money is the way to solve whatever issue is the current favorite? I have lived in Midland for 42 years. It is my home. I have seen the mountains of "boom," and the valleys when it all settles out. I have always believed that "bust" was an Eastern-coined term. The last boom was earmarked from the beginning as our most devastating economically, and a lot of us old-timers said so early on.

Do you, those we call our leaders, want to impress the thousands of little guys like me who cast a vote every time there is an election? You're already getting a lot of tax money. Show us you can and will cut out the waste of money we have really worked hard for, to put into your hands. Don't tell us what other cities tax or what they spend. We only care about Midland. Use the same type of frugal management small business owners have had to use just to keep operating here year after year. Show us that you care about all of us.

Woman grieves, gives advice on death of dog

This letter is intended for whomever poisoned my dog. Yes, she jumped the fence every night between the time I fed my dogs and repenned them for the night. And yes, I am sure this person found it very irritating that I was too stupid to keep her in my yard.

But I wish that individual had been with me when my dog fell over at my feet and had a convulsion while I was holding her pan of food in my hand. I will give them credit, whatever they used was really potent stuff. I let the dogs out of their pen and less than an hour later Maggie was dead at my feet.

This person won't have the irritation of my beautiful chocolate Lab anymore. Did they hand feed her the poison in hamburger or did they put it out for just anyone or anything that happened along that night?

They should be very careful with disposal of what they didn't feed to Maggie. My guess is that from first convulsion to final shudder on a small child would be maybe 10 minutes. Ten minutes to save something precious is a very short time. I wonder if this person has ever timed a drive from their home to the emergency room at midnight with no traffic?

I wish them many nights of peaceful sleep, and I truly pray that God never allows anyone to be so cruel to anyone or anything they love.

LESLIE GELB
Money truly makes world go around

Five years from now, historians will scan this week's events and say they snapped into focus, briefly yet sharply, the future of world politics. That future was barely glimpsed in President Bush's mostly backward-looking State of the Union address. But it was splashed all over the newspapers.

Gelb

The news revealed a world where money is talking as perhaps never before. Money power is dictating not just economic choices but political futures and is on the verge of being used with astonishing creativity to deal with conflicts.

You could see this week the unusual sway of money on foreign policy and basic political decisions.

Germany's powerful central bank threw its weight around on fundamental political issues. The Bundesbank let out this word: If West European leaders want a single currency, as they pledged at the Maastricht summit, they had better speed steps toward political union. European leaders will have to take heed.

You could faintly hear more familiar menacing sounds this week, also connected with money. Germany's leaders warned Russian and Ukrainian leaders about their military plans. It seems these ex-Soviet states intend to maintain armed forces far larger than any European state.

It has also become clear that Western leaders are coming together on using aid to stem the expected flow of nuclear know-how from the ex-Soviet states. The idea is to pay former Soviet nuclear scientists and technicians to stay put and help dismantle Soviet nuclear arms and fix decaying nuclear power plants.

No one can be comfortable with that prospect, especially as U.S. troops are reduced.

Money is hurrying the United States toward the security sidelines just when peace would feel more comfortable if America were still strong. And money is making peace an anxious state of affairs.

Bush's plan will jump-start economy out of recession

By WILLIAM RANDOLPH HEARST JR.
Editor in Chief, The Hearst Newspapers

NEW YORK — We can all be confident that President Bush's skillfully devised budget plan will jump-start us out of the recession freeze and get us moving gradually toward economic recovery.

Hearst

In what impressed me as the best State of the Union address of his presidential career, Bush showed the spirit and quality of leadership that brought us victory in the Persian Gulf War. He spoke well and he looked presidential.

He deliberately did not propose plans for a quick return to prosperity because of fear the jolt that would be necessary could re-ignite inflation and throw us back into recession, if not depression.

The president is acting cautiously but with firm determination to end the recession. He needs the support of the congressional Democrats. They are striving to strengthen their political power by championing substantial tax cuts for the middle class. They also want a lot more federal funds spent on work programs and welfare benefits than what Bush is proposing.

There will be some tough legislative battles between now and the March 20 deadline Bush set for getting an agreement between Democratic and Republican lawmakers. If there is a deadlock by that time, the president has threatened to act on some things that will not require congressional authorization. A compromise will, I believe, eventually be reached which will put the budget into effect for fiscal 1993, starting Oct. 1 this year.

What the president has proposed and his willingness to make some concessions strengthen my belief he will be re-elected in November.

Some leading economists, Democrats and even usually harsh media critics of Bush have praised the president's State of the Union address.

Bush's proposals were described by Jerry Jasinowski, head of the National Association of Manufacturers, as "a nice mix of sound policies." The Washington Post reported that in the little town of Timonium, Md., on the Capital's outskirts, 11 Democrats — men and women who backed Bush for the presidency in 1988 — said they liked the speech and the man who gave it because, as one put it, he was "real positive, confident and very strong." Jean Taylor, a Towson State University employee, said the Democrats have got to help the president because "he cannot do it by himself."

One of the most popular and acerbic columnists in the Washington Post, Mary McGrory, who is frequently critical of the president, said he is "for all intents and purposes a man without serious political opposition and he spoke like one.

"He addressed the economic crisis in military terms," McGrory added. "He bade the recession begone in the same terms he defied the Iraqi occupation of Kuwait. He praised the heroic taxpayers who backed Desert Storm. He warned Congress that the American people aren't impressed by gimmicks."

It was, in my opinion, Bush at his best.

O'Meara takes charge at Pebble Beach Pro-Am

N.Y. Times News Service

PEBBLE BEACH, Calif. — Shooting another strong round on the course that has become his personal playground, Mark O'Meara put himself in prime position on Saturday to become the first four-time winner of the AT&T Pebble Beach National Pro-Am.

O'Meara fired a four-under-par 68 at Pebble Beach Golf Links that gave him a 54-hole total of 11-under-par 205. It was two shots better than Jeff Sluman, who had a 70 at Poppy Hills, and three better than Howard Twitty, who shot a 70 at Poppy Hills; Tom Lehmann, who had a 67 at Pebble Beach; first-round leader Mark Wiebe, who had a 70 at Poppy Hills, and defending champion Paul Azinger and Raymond Floyd, who had scintillating 64s at Pebble Beach.

As it always is, Sunday's final round will also be played at Pebble Beach, which is where O'Meara would most like to be. The 35-year-old 12-year veteran of the PGA Tour was leading or tied for the lead when he won this tournament in 1985, 1989 and 1990 to join Jack Nicklaus as the only three-time winner of this tournament since 1947, when it was first played on the Monterey Peninsula. O'Meara also won the 1979 California State Amateur at Pebble Beach.

"I would think it's a tremendous psychological edge for Mark," said the 49-year-old Floyd, whose 21 career victories do not include one at this tournament. "He must have a wonderful feel for the greens out here. If I were him, I couldn't wait to get out there tomorrow. There are horses for courses."

"This tournament is like an annuity for Mark," added Sluman, who will be paired with O'Meara on Sunday. "I don't think anybody in the world would want to spot Mark O'Meara two shots and have to play Pebble Beach."

The low-key O'Meara, who with a round of 67 would break the tournament record of 14-under-par 273 set by Tom Watson in 1977, tried to play down the roll of favorite.

"The confidence factor of doing well here in the past has played a big part," he said. "But I know it's going to take a good round to win tomorrow. I hope I've got it in me."

Besides being on his favorite course, O'Meara is on one of the best streaks of his career. In 16 rounds this year, O'Meara is 51 under par. Fifteen of those rounds have been under par, while the other was a par 72 at La Costa.

Player holds four stroke senior lead

KEY BISCAYNE, Fla. (AP) — Gary Player shot a 7-under-par 64 Saturday to take a 4-stroke lead after two rounds of the Royal Caribbean Classic.

Player, the defending champion, had a 36-hole total of 8-under 134 going into Sunday's final round at the Links on Key Biscayne.

The $500,000 tournament is the year's first full-field event on the Senior Tour.

Tied for second place at 4-under 138 were Chi Chi Rodriguez, who shot a 67, and Dick Hendrickson, who had a 68. Mike Hill was fourth at 3 under after shooting a 67.

With the absence of gusty winds that plagued the opening round, the four leaders all posted lower scores in the second round.

Player opened his round by sinking a chip from 35 feet for an eagle at the par-5 first hole. His score could have been even lower; he made three birdie putts on the back nine and barely missed five others.

Six players were tied at 2 under, including first-round co-leader Bruce Crampton, who shot 31-41—72.

"The Lord giveth, and the Lord taketh away," Crampton said.

Crampton drove into a lake on the par-3 No. 12 and landed in two bunkers on the par-4 14th. He double-bogeyed both holes.

Mike Joyce's round was a near reverse of Crampton's. Joyce shot a 39-29—68 for a 140 total.

George Archer, who shared the first-round lead with Crampton, dropped to 72—140. Lee Trevino fell 11 strokes off the lead at 72—145.

Trio shares lead at LPGA

LAKE WORTH, Fla. (AP) — Canadian Dawn Coe, hoping for her first victory on the LPGA Tour, held a three-way share of first place Saturday at the Oldsmobile Classic.

Coe, a non-winner in her nine-year career, shot a 3-under-par 69 for a 54-hole total of 7-under 209.

LPGA

The British Columbia native is tied with recent Hall of Fame inductee Pat Bradley and Swedish rookie Helen Alfredsson, both of whom shot 72.

Coe began the third round three strokes back at 140 (67-73), then parred the front nine before catching the leaders with consecutive birdie putts on 15 and 16, The latter came on a 15-footer.

When third-round play began, Bradley and Beth Daniel shared the lead at 7-under. While the usually steady Daniel faltered on the back nine — with consecutive bogeys on 14 and 15 — Bradley maintained her lofty position with a steady 72.

Daniel, who shot 73, is tied with Becky Pearson (69) at 210; while Deb Richard, Colleen Walker, and Rosie Jones are at 211.

Although Alfredsson is technically an LPGA rookie, she is a three-year veteran of the European tour where she won the 1990 British Open and five tournaments last year.

Libraries convert system to electronic catalog

Joe D. Williams/Reporter-Telegram

Bill Finch, Midland County's data-processing manager, systems analyst and computer operator, is keen on library computerization.

■ Midland libraries will be making the card-catalog system obsolete by installing an electronic catalog.

By Ed Todd
Staff Writer

Midland libraries are calling for the computer to help patrons quickly locate books and other research material.

Fingers that stroll through the old library card-catalog files in search of research sources increasingly will be shifting to computers and tapping on keyboards.

The results will be same. But one is as slow as a trot, and the other is lightning fast.

Already, Midland College has made its card-catalog system obsolescent by installing an electronic hookup with Midland County's central computer, which stores index information and abstracts on books shelved in the college's Learning Resource Center (LRC). information stored in the computer may be "pulled up" by a bank of keyboard terminals in the LRC, a library-classroom complex.

Meanwhile, the Midland County Public Library is following suit but is holding back on the computer hookup until library renovation and expansion are completed sometime next year.

Index information from the Midland County Law Library and the Midland County Centennial Branch Library will be stored in the computer.

"The computer doesn't replace people," said Bill Finch, Midland County's data-processing manager, systems analyst and computer operator who designed the hookup.

"The computer enhances a person's job," noted Finch. Time consuming research can be cut down to a "matter of seconds" by switching from the old card-catalog system to the computerized electronic catalog.

"It breaks them (librarians) away from the tedium (of looking through card catalogs)," Finch said, "and they are more productive in other things."

The computer, an IBM AS-400 mini-computer, is maintained in the Midland County Courthouse and stores information on governmental and court records, including civil and criminal cases.

When the Midland County Public Library is on-line with the computer, library patrons as well as students and other users of the college's LRC will be able to search the computer files for books and material in either library.

And noted French the "capability is there" to link the Midland County computer to libraries in other West Texas towns.

The idea for the inter-library hookup took root when both Midland College LRC Director John Deats and County Librarian Sandra Wegner "wanted to computerize" their libraries, Finch said.

After that, "Everything fell into place," Finch said. The Midland County Commissioners' Court supported the hookup, especially Commissioner Durward Wright, who is the court's liaison to the county library.

"The timing was perfect for both of them," Finch said.

The electronic catalog hookup is "going to be a tremendous benefit" to the community, Wright said, and will cut down on taxpayers' dollars in operating the libraries.

Special Olympics takes new form

■ Texas Special Olympics will change its program to model the Olympic games.

By Michael Kashgarian
Staff Writer

Recent changes in the the competition program of the Texas Special Olympics are aimed at producing a better athlete, said Denise Wilcox, Area 18 director for the Texas Special Olympics.

Instead of having state championships held separately for each category, sporting events will fall into one of two competition periods: Summer Games and Winter Games.

"It's a format modeled after the real Olympics," said Russell Malm, director of public relations for the Area 18 management team and a Special Olympics basketball coach.

Participants will have to choose one sport in each state championship in which to compete, Ms. Wilcox said.

"We are trying to encourage athletes to specialize in one sport, to develop a keener interest in one sport or a couple of sports, which athletes typically do," she said.

Special Olympics athletes can still participate in different sports and compete in a variety of those sports at the area competition level, Ms. Wilcox said.

The new system, and other changes, were discussed at the annual Area 18 conference held at the Midland Hilton on Saturday.

Midlander Gene Isaacs had a happy surprise when his stolen flags were returned to his home.

Flag caper has happy ending

By Darren J. Waggoner
Staff Writer

A flag-napper somewhere in town suffered from a guilty conscience, or so believes Midland High School assistant principal Gene Isaacs.

Isaacs, 66, recently became dismayed when his third set of two flags — one American, one Christian-themed — was mysteriously stolen from his yard, along with the eagle that adorned the top of the flagpole. But this time the missing banners were returned less than 48 hours after their disappearance.

"I heard something at the door about 12:30 a.m. and when I went out to see what was going on, the two flags were folded very, very neatly and the eagle was laid nicely on top," Isaacs said.

Isaacs suspects that perhaps a concerned parent decided to take action after reading an earlier Reporter-Telegram story detailing the penchant local petty criminals apparently had for his flags.

"Simply the manner in which the flags were folded and placed would seem to lend itself to that," he said. "Maybe a mother saw them hanging in her kid's bedroom and realized they were stolen."

Earlier, Isaacs guessed that his flags were probably hanging on walls or hidden in the trunks of cars throughout Midland. He added that someone's parents had probably commended their little robber for the newly-found patriotism or Christian influence that had suddenly appeared in their child's life.

The string of thefts had started about two years ago when an American flag and a Christian-oriented flag, both flown high-above the Isaacs' residence on a 21-foot pole, came up missing.

"The Christian flag was very much missed because it was specially made and given to us by our Sunday School class. 'Jesus is Lord' was embroidered on it and it was one-of-a-kind. No one else had one like it," Isaacs said.

Another set, given to the couple by one of their daughters, lasted about six months.

Finally, the Isaacs' purchased their own set of flags and Isaacs took extra security measures to guard against a third robbery.

Using an eight-foot ladder, he lowered the flagpole, affixed the new flags and used a separate hook to lock the pulleys into the raised position. The culprits of the most recent theft had to knock the entire operation down to remove the flags.

Isaacs, disgusted and amazed that someone would go to so much trouble, acknowledged that his profession may have had a factor in the persistent vandalism and theft. But for now he is happy that someone decided to do the right thing.

Oswald's arrest site faces foreclosure

DALLAS (AP) — The Texas Theater — built by billionaire Howard Hughes and the site of Lee Harvey Oswald's arrest — faces foreclosure this week, its owner said Saturday.

Dennis Hamilton, president of the Texas Historical Society said if a $5,000 mortgage payment isn't made to lienholder United Artists Co. by Monday, the moviehouse may be closed.

UA attorney Joel Eastman of Dallas said he could not comment on the situation.

An emergency meeting of historical society members was held Saturday to discuss how to come up with the funds.

"We're working on it," Hamilton said.

GARY OTT

All is fair in love, war and politics — but on national TV?

OK, let me see if I have this straight. If you want to run for president, not only do you have to be squeaky clean, but if someone chooses to make an allegation of womanizing against you, no matter how flimsy the accusation might be, it becomes imperative that you go on national TV with your spouse and deny the charges in the strongest of terms.

Ott

Like they say, all is fair in love, war and politics.

Still, I can't help but wonder if maybe we haven't taken this "marital discord" thing a bit far.

Perhaps — if you were still sober after witnessing last Sunday's Super Bowl mismatch — you caught Bill and Hillary Clinton's appearance on "60 Minutes." It was very strange, indeed. Here were two highly educated and attractive people in their early 40s sitting side-by-side on a couch telling a TV reporter that, "Yes, we've had our share of problems in the past, but we've worked through them. We love each other very much."

Throughout the interview, I kept thinking, "Why are these people telling me this? It's none of my business."

The reason, of course, is because that's the way the political game is played these days. The rules have changed. Now when you run for president, your personal life becomes an open book. It may not seem fair, but if you choose to run, then you take the bad with the good. It's as simple as that.

But do we really have to get into people's married life? I, for one, am not comfortable with that sort of thing. I don't like it when friends bend my ear about their marital problems, so I certainly don't care to hear about it from total strangers.

Tell someone else, I'm not interested.

Perhaps all of this has something to do with the fact that I was not a particularly gifted husband. The last thing I would have wanted to do as a married man would be to go on national TV and discuss my marital shortcomings.

"Let's see," I would have said to the reporter, while crossing my legs and stroking my beard in a highbrow sort of way. "Do you want me to start with the wedding night when I referred to my wife by the wrong name or would you prefer I begin at Week 3 when the thought of placing a pillow over her face and suffocating her first entered my mind?"

The tabloids would have had a field day.

But the point is, I don't think I'm all that different from other people. Anyone who has been married has experienced embarrassing moments from the past that they would just as soon not discuss on TV. There are certain matters we would rather keep to ourselves and not talk about in front of millions of people.

But, apparently that desire for privacy doesn't mean doodly-squat any longer. If you want to be president, you'd better be willing to tell all. And while you're at it, don't try to be cute and quote from a country-western song, either. They'll nail you for that, too.

Just ask Hillary Clinton.

At one point in the "60 Minutes" interview, she said, "I'm not sitting here like some little woman standing by my man like Tammy Wynette."

Great line, I thought at the time. Not only is Hillary an attractive and intelligent woman, she knows her country music, too. Not a bad combination.

Tammy Wynette disagreed. She considered the remark an insult and demanded an apology. She got it a day later.

Poor Hillary Clinton. Some days you just can't win. Even your witty one-liners land you in hot water.

Still, I get the impression that the feisty Ms. Clinton won't be backing down any time soon. She's a new breed of woman — good-looking, smart and tough as nails. If you want to dig up trash on her marriage, you'd better get ready to do battle because she's not going to sit back and say nothing.

She'll look you right in the eye and snap, "Back off. It's none of your business."

I don't know about the sleazy tabloids, but I'm not going to argue with the woman. If she says "back off," I'll "back off."

In fact, Hillary Clinton probably did have her country-western songs mixed up the other night. She should have quoted from Merle Haggard's, "You're walking on the fighting side of me."

LIBRARY: System will save time

(From 1C)

"It will be saving clerks' time," Wright said. "It will be saving patrons' time. It will be far more efficient in every respect" than the old system.

"This is a trend of what is going on throughout libraries," Mrs. Wegner said. "Libraries connecting with each other by way of the computer is becoming more common. It's really just a card catalog that's on a computer,"

With the computer hookup to libraries by way of telephone lines, libraries will be sharing their "data bases of material," Mrs. Wegner noted.

Research material may be sought by inputting key words relating a book's title, author or subject into the computer terminal.

"There won't be any abstract."

In Abilene, the three universities there — Abilene Christian, McMurry and Hardin-Simmons — and the public library are using the computerized data base to ferret out sources of research material.

Lubbock is "working out a deal" to link Lubbock-area public libraries by computer.

Deats, who headed the Midland County Public Library before he moved to the college in 1990, said that the "electronic catalog is so much easier to use than the card catalog."

By aid of the library-based computer terminal, the electronic-catalog system "can display many titles on one screen at one time," Deats said, "and you can call up detailed information on one or all of the books."

The machine-readable information is provided by the Library of Congress through a service called Bibliofile.

Bibliofile services provides Library-of-Congress information on compact discs.

"And then you match up the books that you've acquired to the Library of Congress records," Deats said. "You get the new books in, and you check your new books against your Bibliofile, and those that matched are dumped into your local data base."

Deats noted that mini-computers, such as Midland County's IBM AS-400, "can run circles around the mainframes of yesterday."

"Being able to identify the books in any of the collections increases the number of referrals from one library to the other," he said. "It will be hard to ignore all the library resources we have at our finger tips."

"It is just going to give the student and the patron a much wider range of material from which to choose," Deats said adding, "and gives them added incentive to explore all of the resources of the libraries."

THEATER: Group trying to save building

bought the theater from United Artists in December 1989 for $175,000. The group still owes $120,000.

Built in 1931 by Hughes, the theater has closed only twice — the day in 1963 after Oswald was arrested there and for a day in 1989 when the society was negotiating to buy it.

Director Oliver Stone used the theater as a location site in the movie "JFK" and contributed about $15,000 for renovation work at it.

Oswald was arrested in the theater shortly after the shooting of President Kennedy and Dallas Police Officer J.D. Tippit.

The Oak Cliff Chamber of Commerce and other community groups have said they would save the theater if 14 members of the society would resign and relinquish management control.

GAMES: Athletes can choose one sport

(From 1C)

Area 18, the largest geographic region of the Special Olympics in the state, has approximately 400 athletes registered, Ms. Wilcox said.

Some of the families, volunteers and coaches got together at the conference to prepare for the 1992 games.

One family that showed up was Joe and Betty Dodd and their 20-year-old son, David, who has competed in Special Olympics since he was 8.

Dodd, director of families for the area management team, said Special Olympics is urging more family participation such as volunteer work, which was discussed at the conference.

The games are already a family event for the Dodds.

"It probably has made us closer as a family. Everyone in the family loves to go to the Special Olympics. I have three other children besides David. He's the baby," Dodd said.

That remark brought a friendly elbow to Dodd's side.

"He's the youngest," Dodd said correcting himself.

'Yeah," his son added.

David, who has Down's Syndrome, said his handicap hasn't dampered his athletic spirit.

"I love sports. I like basketball, track and field, and swimming," said David, who hasn't pinned down one event he would like to compete in during the Summer Games.

Participants from Area 18 can take part in events that include track and field, aquatics and basketball at the Summer Games and bowling and softball at the Winter Games. Gymnastics, soccer and powerlifting are currently under consideration to be added to the list.

This year, the Summer Games will be held in May in Denton, and Winter Games in Houston in November.

Area 18 will have a basketball tournament in Fort Stockton on Feb. 15, and a Jaycee basketball tournament in Midland on March 7.

Other anticipated changes in the Special Olympics include motor activities for severely handicap individuals unable to participate in current events, and unified sports or team competition that includes players without retardation but the same physical capability.

Odessa man found dead in Jacuzzi

Staff Report

ODESSA — Police are investigating the death of a 41-year-old man found floating dead in a Jacuzzi at an Odessa residence Saturday morning, officials said.

Andy Campos Rodriguez was discovered face down in a Jacuzzi located in the backyard of a 19 Sungrove St. dwelling about 10:06 a.m., officials said. Police were summoned to the scene by a resident of the home, who called for an ambulance.

Rodriguez was reportedly visiting the residence at the time of the incident.

Justice of the Peace Dennis Bright pronounced Rodriguez dead at about 10:15 a.m. and ordered an autopsy to be conducted in Lubbock.

The manner and cause of death remained unknown Saturday evening as police detectives continued to investigate the incident.

Sheriff Gary Painter to hold town meeting

Staff Report

Midland County Sheriff Gary Painter will hold a town meeting at 7:30 p.m. Thursday in the Midland County Exhibit Building east of town.

The public meeting will be preceded at 6 p.m. by a $25-a-plate fund-raising barbecue supper for his campaign supporters.

Painter, 44, is calling the town meeting so that "anyone in the public can ask any question they might have" about him, his reelection campaign, his controversial "reverse-sting" operations, and his conflicts with the Midland County Commissioners' Court on the range of his authority and jurisdiction, he said.

With the sheriff will be many of his deputies, including his captains and lieutenants.

His Operations Division captain, 51-year-old Clayton McKinney, has shared controversy with the sheriff.

Among Painter's critics are those who say that McKinney, not the sheriff, runs the Midland County Sheriff's Department.

Valentine's Day not school holiday

Staff Report

Midland public school students will not be out of school for Valentine's Day. It is a regular school day, not a student holiday.

According to information from Midland Independent School District, a calendar distributed during the spring of 1991 incorrectly labeled the day a school holiday. A new school calendar was produced following legislative changes made during the summer of 1991.

The next student holiday scheduled is March 9, the beginning of spring break which is March 9-13.

Bass fishing seminar set to hook avid fishermen

By H.A. Tuck

Bass fishermen were either thrilled or dejected by the story last week of a record-size bass caught near Dallas. Some have observed that 90 percent of the fish are caught by 10 percent of the fishermen.

Tuck

That means that the 10 percent have some knowledge that the others don't.

Learning how to catch bass is a skill which may be obtained. And the Bass Fishing Seminar that begins Tuesday evening at Midland College will provide some inside knowledge about those wily fish and their habits.

The seminar is being held in four sessions, from 7:30-9:30 p.m. on Tuesday and Thursday, Feb. 4, 6, 11, and 13. Cost is $59 to gain valuable tips from Woo Daves, Feb. 4; Jimmy Houston, Feb. 6; Zell Rowland, Feb. 11; and Randy Dearman, Feb. 13.

All are professionals who have participated in multiple Bassmaster Classics.

To make sure you get into this informative seminar, call 685-4518 on Monday or Tuesday to reserve your space ... which is becoming quite limited.

Basketball resumes at Chap Center for the second half of conference action with a most interesting match-up. The Chaparrals are at home for a game with the New Mexico Military Institute Broncos, coached by former MC head coach Reggie Franklin.

The Chaps are atop the Western Junior College Athletic Conference after the first round with a 7-1 record and were idle last Thursday when the rest of the conference teams began the second half of WJCAC contests.

It's easy to remember when MC is playing at home, since the schedule has the Chaps at home each Monday and on the road each Thursday this month.

This week's road trip has the Chaps headed to Borger for a meeting with the Frank Phillips College Plainsmen. Oh yes, the home games are at 7:30 p.m. and the road games at 8 p.m. All the Chaparral games are carried live on KCRS Radio, 550 AM, but are much more exciting in person.

Three MC tennis players are scheduled to play in the Rolex ITCA Indoor Championships at Minneapolis next weekend. Play begins Thursday with a field of mostly NCAA Division I players, along with a few from Divisions II and III, NAIA, and junior college.

The trio of Chaparral women won their respective titles at the Rolex ITCA Southwest Regional tournament last fall in Corpus Christi. Each won the junior college title and then defeated Division II, III, or NAIA opponents to take the overall championship.

Sophomore Seiko Ichioka won the Southwest Region's Small College singles title and don't think the headline writers haven't had fun saying "Seiko Wins Rolex!" Sophomores Adriana Isaza and Boba Tzvetkova won the women's doubles crown to gain their trip.

MC coach Joe Williams has been scrambling for months trying to put together a strong spring schedule and each new opponent seems to be tougher than the last. He's getting his troops toughened up for runs at national titles in May.

This is the final week to register before the first session of College Classics starts the week of Feb. 10. College Classics is limited to those at least 55 years of age who will pay a single $25 fee to attend as many classes as possible during the three sessions.

For instance, by paying the $25, you could take any or all of 13 classes being offered during Session I; plus, any or all of 11 classes in Session II; plus, any or all of 11 classes being offered during Session III. Such a bargain offer is possible because all the instructors donate their time and expertise.

For details, visit the Continuing Education Office, located in the Administration Building, or call 685-4518.

Don't forget to buy your tickets for Gallagher's "Meet The Gallaghers" comedy show at Chap Center. He's wonderful, he's zany, he's appearing on March 1, at 8 p.m. Tickets are $15.50, with all seats reserved, from Chap Center or Endless Horizons in Midland or Odessa.

Coming later this spring to Chap Center are the Harlem Globetrotters and the initial solo appearance by Wynonna Judd.

Both students and faculty have been busily learning the new computerized library system, which was installed recently. Classes have been spending time getting acquainted with the replacement for the old card catalog system. For the old-time traditionalists, the card catalog is still present, but will fade away soon.

Learning resource center personnel held special training sessions for faculty and staff before students returned this spring, but many still are having to read the instructions as they go along. Most of the students, however, just view it as one more electronic gadget with which to play.

The public, by the way, is welcome to use the facilities of the college's resource building although check-out of printed material isn't permitted, except with a patron's card.

Among the Continuing Education classes starting this week is one that is mandated for most persons applying for hunting licenses in Texas or most other states. If you were born after Sept. 2, 1971, the course is required.

Classes starting this week include: TI 81 Graphic Calculator, Hunter Safety, Window Treatments (two sessions), Bass Fishing Techniques, Financial Strategies for Retirement, and Decorating Sense.

There also are two sessions on Saturday of Study Skills Workshop for Youth, plus a session each for first-third graders and for fourth-sixth graders on Fitness is Fun.

Register in the Continuing Education Office, Administration Building, or call 685-4518 if you have questions.

For information 24 hours a day, call MC's Cityline at 560-2400, extension 1835, and access nine lines of information.

ENERGY ANSWERS

Setting thermostat back can save money

EDITOR'S NOTE: This is a new feature that gives energy conservation tips provided by the Texas Energy Extension Service.

Question: How much energy can I save by setting my thermostat back at night?

Answer: During the winter, setting back your thermostat at night and when the house is unoccupied is an easy way to save a substantial amount of energy. In most parts of Texas, you can save between 15 and 20 percent of your heating costs by setting your thermostat back 10 degrees at night. Set back the same 10 degrees for 24 hours while the house is unoccupied, and you can save up to 35 percent of your heating costs.

You can also save energy and money by turning up your thermostat in the summer.

For every degree that you set your thermostat up, you can save about three percent of the annual cooling costs. If no one is in the house during daytime hours, you can set-up the thermostat by 5 degrees and save about 10 percent.

Although those percentages may not sound like much, the dollar value of the air conditioning savings will far exceed the savings you would get in the winter from thermostat setback.

A good way to ensure that the thermostat is always set up or back at the right time is to invest in a programmable thermostat. There are many types on the market. How much you save with each type will depend on the heating system you have and how much you are willing to set up or set back the thermostat.

For instance, the programmable thermostats save more energy when they're used with a gas-fired system or a conventional electric resistance furnace than when used with a heat-pump system. However, with any type of system, the more you're willing to set up or set back the thermostat, the more energy and money you will save.

For more information on energy saving tips, call 1-800-338-3837 or (915) 362-2066.

Staff Report

Locating and dealing with the federal government and foreign businesses offers new opportunities for Permian Basin entrepreneurs to expand their operations.

Midland College operates a Procurement Center through its Business and Economic Development Center to assist local businesses in locating federal bid opportunities as well as international trade leads.

"The federal government has been actively seeking small businesses, and minority owned businesses, who are willing to bid on Federal projects," said Jerry Lee Jones, chair of the college's Business Studies Division and director of the BEDC.

Jones noted that current federal projects include architectural and engineering services for a 220,545 square-foot Comprehensive Indian Health Facility at Fort Defiance, Ariz.

Many other listings are available at any time. Persons wishing more information about these bids, about starting a business, or the services provided by the Midland College Business and Economic Development Center's Procurement Center should call 685-4657 or 685-4670.

HOMES & CLASSIFIED

MULTI-FACETED MMMMMMMMMMM

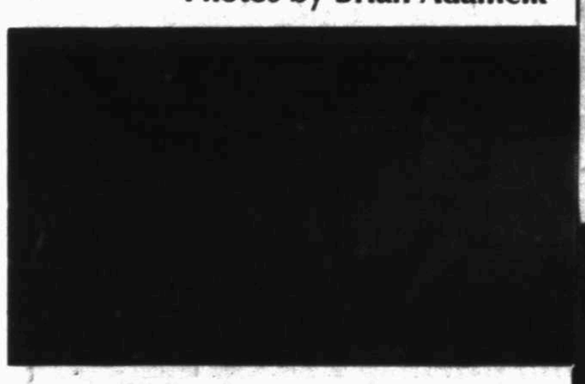

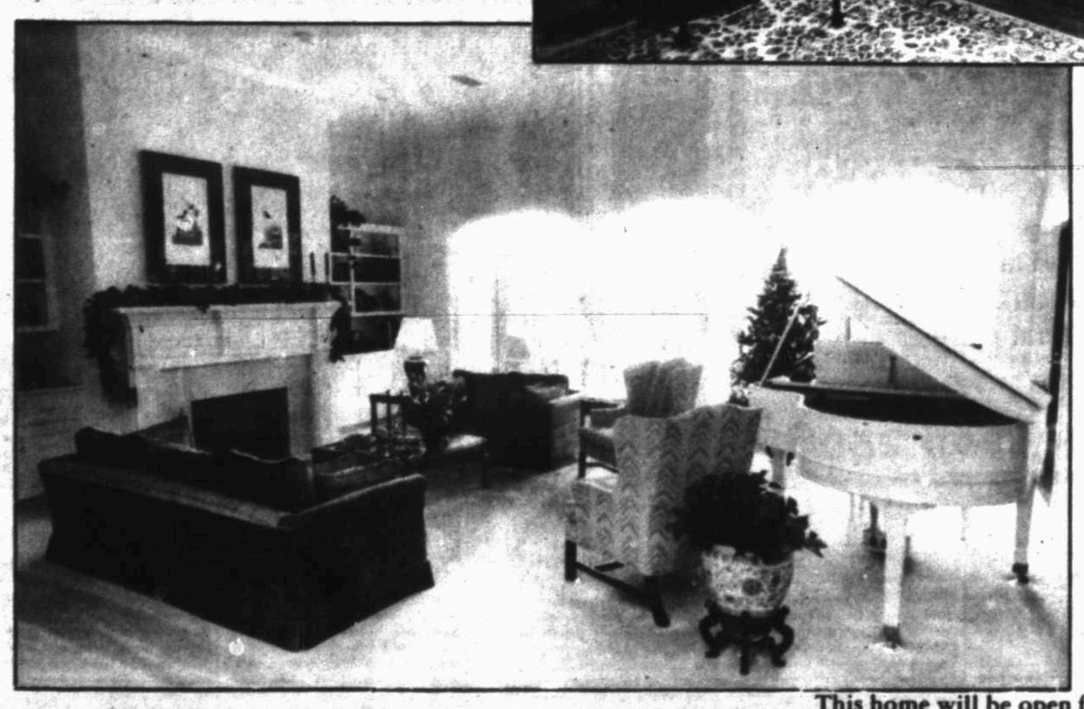

This expansive, exquisite home has a specific area for almost every family activity — playing, working, entertaining, sleeping and waking. It's designed to make every hour of every day comfortably special for every member of the family.

By Sonja Merrick

First, find a large, inviting entry. A glorious chandelier captures and casts sparkling light. The ceramic tile floor extends toward the main living areas.

Directly ahead lies an exquisite formal living area. Arched windows that look out toward a pool and lake dominate one wall. Each detail is precisely executed — such as the marble-front fireplace flanked by built-ins, crown molding and electrical floor outlets.

To the left of the foyer French doors open to a beautifully appointed study. A perfect get-away spot with hardwood floors, ceiling fan, track lighting and a closet large enough to accommodate two double-drawer file cabinets beneath the built-in shelves.

Turning right from the entry, find another set of French doors that lead to a gracious formal dining area. It boasts hardwood floors, an elegant chandelier, dramatic Georgian wallpaper, chairback railing, wainscoating and plantation shutters.

A quick left from the dining area leads to a dream of a kitchen. Large and functional, it includes a center island with cookbook and stemware storage. Also there's a five-burner gas cook top, double oven, built-in microwave and warming drawer. Also a compactor, built-in refrigerator, lovely bleached ash cabinets and a walk-in pantry.

Adjoining the kitchen is an informal living area flanked by a light-filled breakfast area. Floor-to-ceiling brick houses a fireplace. Plenty of built-ins, including a lighted corner, table offer easy storage and convenience.

Step down from the family room into a bright, cheerful brick-pavered sun room. It has a great wet bar with refrigerator, ice maker and a pass-through to pool area.

A sequestered guest room is located near the informal living area. It has its own bath with access to the sun room. This delightful room overlooks the lake.

Nearby stairs lead to a huge second floor game room that's large enough for the family pool table. From it juts a deck with a view of the pool, lake and Greentree clubhouse. One side of the game room extends into a "study hall," complete with yards of desk area, built-in bookcases and cabinets.

Two children's bedrooms are also on the second floor, each with its own bath and spacious closet. Ceiling fans are in both rooms.

Back downstairs, to the left of the entryway, beyond the formal living area is a spectacular master bedroom. This sequestered retreat is graced with an exterior door to the patio/pool area, crown molding, ceiling fan and plantation shutters.

The adjoining master bath is highlighted by a raised oval marble whirlpool tub, double vanities, large dual-head shower. Fixtures are cultured gold. Two walk-in closets have a three-way mirror and built-in drawers.

Other areas include a laundry room spacious enough to accommodate recessed washer and dryer, freezer, built-in desk and ironing board, soak sink, folding table and a rack for hanging clothes. Specialty closets (on both floors) allow for tons of extra storage.

The garage houses four cars and has two double doors, each with electric opener. It also includes a 17-foot by 13-foot workshop complete with telephone and television connection.

Other amenities include intercom, sprinkler and security systems, water well for landscaping and exterior eaves lights on automatic timer. Also, a circle drive, three zones for heating/cooling systems and RO system. The home is being offered by Langston Realtors for $449,000.

Small home changes can make big difference to buyers

Small changes in your home's decor will improve not only its enjoyability, but its saleability of when it comes time to place the property on the real estate market, said Dene Kelly, president of Dene Kelly, Inc. Realtors.

"Making a few changes in your home's decor can liven up the furnishings you already own, while giving rooms in your house a renewed freshness. These changes will also make your home more interesting and easier to sell when you are ready to place it on the market," Kelly said.

Dene Kelly Realtors is a member of RELO/The International Relocation Network, headquartered in Chicago. The RELO network has approximately 1,400-member companies and provides transfer-related real estate services, including rental and commercial real estate services, to meet the relocation needs of transferees and their corporations in the U.S., Canada and other countries. RELO is the largest independent real estate network in the country.

"Some of the things that can matter in a home — to both you and a would-be buyer — include an attractive kitchen where you can experiment with new recipes, a luxurious bedroom where you can feel pampered, a cozy den in which to relax and read, a workplace in which to make equipment repairs and an attractive living room in which to entertain," Kelly said.

She also said that making these changes doesn't necessarily mean a lot of time or expense to the homeowner. Many of them are one or two-day projects that could be completed over a weekend.

"Nothing brings a breath of fresh air to a room like a new coat of paint. A coat of fresh white paint or one of the popular new decor color choices — such as mauve — will bring your home to life," Kelly said.

She also suggests adding wallpaper to a bedroom to help create a cozy lived-in feeling. "Adding fresh pillow covers and curtains complementing the wallpaper can really add a personal touch to a bedroom — while drawing attention to the room as an attractive area for a potential buyer," she said.

Cleaning and polishing the kitchen floor and appliances can also revive that room. If you're planning on marketing your home soon, consider placing fresh flowers in a basket or decorative containers of pastas and spices on the counter, she said.

"Living rooms can be given a lift by having the draperies dry-cleaned and by steam cleaning the wall-to-wall carpeting. Sometimes the carpeting in older homes can be removed — revealing hardwood floors that can be polished and buffed to a fresh high gloss," Kelly said.

She also said that cleaning up a garage or basement to create a workshop atmosphere can involve as little as throwing out trash, hanging tools on a pegboard and setting up a workbench.

"Making these small changes or touches is important to your continuous enjoyment of your home. It will also likely pay off in dollars and cents when the time comes for the sale of that house," she said.

Kelly

How important are condition disclosures?

Pat Paxton

Let the buyer beware no longer suffices as a standard for buying and selling real estate. As consumers become more inclined to demand high-quality products and services, the need for seller disclosure is becoming increasingly important.

The National Association of Realtors (NAR) is conducting a nationwide campaign to increase member and public awareness of the widespread benefits of written seller disclosures.

NAR's objective is to help state associations by exposing public and national interest groups to this issue in hope of garnering their support.

This will enable the associations to concentrate on strategic planning instead of focusing on educating their membership, their state officials and the public.

Mandatory disclosures may even be viewed as a sales tool because it gives the seller a market advantage over the competition. The use of disclosures makes the buyer feel reassured about the property.

This is because they know detailed disclosures have been made about the house and that a signed pledge of acknowledgment and confirmation of the existing conditions is included.

With judges becoming more sympathetic toward buyers who feel they have gotten a rotten deal, some say seller disclosure is a benefit. In recent years, two-thirds of all lawsuits against real estate agents or brokers in the United States allege misrepresentation or failure to disclose defects. This amounted to awards for legal claims rising from about $5,200 in 1984 to just under $11,000 this year.

By focusing on the condition of their property, the sellers are less likely to overlook a defect or material fact for which they could later be held liable. The disclosure procedure also serves as a checklist for buyers, so their concerns about the property's condition are addressed immediately.

NAR is not advocating property condition disclosure for the purpose of placing all the responsibility for disclosure and potential liability on the seller. The use of property disclosure forms does require sellers to disclose information about their home, and real estate licensees are still obligated to perform all duties required under state law and regulations.

Mandatory property disclosure forms currently are used in only two states — California and Maine.

Considering legislation/regulation that would mandate written property disclosures are 19 other states, including Texas.

Some associations such as the Texas Association of Realtors, have written their own property disclosure forms for members to use on a voluntary basis.

If you are a buyer in today's market, ask your Realtor to provide you with a property disclosure form that has been signed by the seller of the property you are interested in.

Paxton

In many of the Midland homes you will find the disclosure form in place and ready for review.

Pegboard solves a good many of your home storage problems

By Readers Digest
AP Special Features

Putting up perforated pegboard is an easy, fast and inexpensive way to create storage space for a variety of hangable items that you need within reach.

For hanging hand tools, kitchen utensils and other lightweight objects, ordinary eighth-inch-thick pegboard is fine. For heavier loads, get sturdier quarter-inch-thick pegboard. Tempered pegboard is stronger than untempered.

There's a wide selection of hooks, clips and even small shelves and bins that can be attached to pegboard. When selecting such hardware, make sure they'll fit your pegboard. Some can be used only on eighth-inch pegboard, others only on quarter-inch panels, and some will fit both types.

Brown, unpainted pegboard is a good buy for workshops and garage walls. Elsewhere, you'll be better off using prepainted pegboard, available in white and many colors. Its wipe-clean factory finish is more durable than any paint you could apply.

It's easy to install pegboard to wallboard with plastic anchors, long screws and ⅜-inch spacers (to provide space for attaching the hardware), all from your building supply dealer. Here's how:

- Locate the studs in the wall with a magnetic or electronic stud finder. Studs are usually 16 inches apart.
- Mark the wall through the panel's holes at the corners and every 16 inches along the top and bottom edges.
- At each point, put a round-head screw through a spacer in back of the board, through the wallboard and into the stud.

For light loads, you can fasten the pegboard to the wallboard only.

- Mark the wall through the panel at the corner and at points 16 inches in between.
- Drill a hole of the recommended size at each point through the wallboard and tap in a plastic anchor.
- Drive a round-head screw through the pegboard hole, through the spacer and into the plastic anchor.

For heavier loads, install a hollow-wall anchor which comes with its own bolt.

- Screw down the bolt until the anchor is fastened to the wall.
- Remove the bolt. Pass it through a flat metal washer, through the pegboard hole and the spacer and screw it back into the anchor.

With unfinished walls, screw the pegboard directly to the exposed studs.

BRIEFING

Oil slide

Above CO_2 recovery vessels at Amoco's Wasson Unit glisten in the sun. Enhanced oil recovery projects, under way and in operation, are expected to help hold the line on declining production in the Permian Basin in 1992. The U.S. production slide is not expected to wane this year, even though production was up to 7.385 million barrels daily in 1991, following five consecutive years of low drilling rates, according to Oil & Gas Journal.

Gas price gap

Plains Resources has called Associated Gas Distributors and United Gas Distributors irresponsible for urging the U.S. Department of Energy agency to take "legal action" against efforts by the Texas Railroad Commission to change state proration rules. Plains said customers are still paying $7.35 for gas at the burner tip, while the average wellhead price paid to producers remained at $1.37. "Does this look like the distribution companies care about the customer?" Plains CEO Patrick Collins asked in his letter to the DOE. This week, natural gas prices fell to the $1 price range.

"These companies have not and will not pass cost savings on to their customers," said Collins, who praised Federal Energy Regulatory Commission Chairman Martin Allday for his support of the TRC proration proposal.

Weak count

Above, roughnecks make a connection in the Oklahoma Panhandle. The nation's ailing rig count, hurt by bad weather, weak prices and a seasonal decline, plunged this week to 686 — the lowest point since the tally sank to the 1986 bust low of 663, Baker Hughes Inc. reported.

Study says more energy woes ahead

■ A pro-America energy policy and stable production could head off future energy crisis.

By John Paul Pitts
Business/Oil Editor

The U.S. energy crisis may be just beginning, says a Houston consultant, speaking for the Independent Petroleum Association of America.

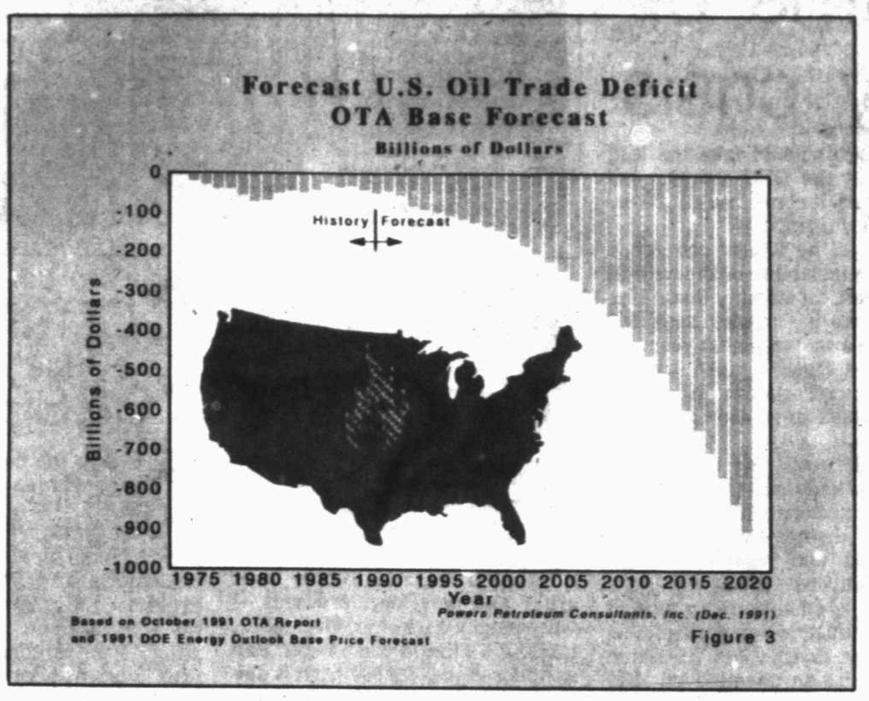

"The United States is headed toward bankruptcy, more oil wars and possible damage to the environment unless lawmakers wake up to the collapse of the domestic oil industry and take immediate action to stabilize domestic production and demand," said Louis W. Powers, in his analysis of a comprehensive report to Congress.

Powers was retained by IPAA to conduct an independent analysis of the recently published Office of Technology Assessment (OTA)report on the ability of the U.S. to respond to future oil interruptions.

In a telephone interview, Powers, a former petroleum engineer for Exxon and Aramco, said the OTA report presented an alarming view of the U.S. economy, based on the growing appetite for foreign oil.

"We studied the report for what it said and what it didn't say."

He said the nation would be in real trouble, if the oil deficit reaches $96 billion by 1995, $139 billion by 2000, $384 billion by 2010 and $926 billion by 2020, as projected in the study. "From 1992 to 2020 the cumulative deficit will be $10 trillion," said Powers.

The graphic above indicates how the U.S. oil trade deficit has grown since 1975 and will grow from 1992 to 2020 in billions of dollars.

He said the nation simply could not count on foreign supplies because of lack of stability in other parts of the world. "We cannot guarantee supplies from any country or area where internal stability has not been achieved," Powers said.

Powers, who has worked extensively in the Middle East and was once a loaned executive for Aramco supervising an international work force of more than 400, said there are still stability problems in the Middle East.

"The war was a military success, but there still is no lasting internal security," he said.

To make his point, he quoted Shiek Yamani, the former oil minister of Saudi Arabia. "There can be no lasting internal security without genuine democracy, equitable distribution of income and deep seated respect for human rights. Few of these conditions hold in the Gulf."

Powers observed: "That doesn't sound like the former oil minister of Saudi Arabia, does it?"

He noted there have been six oil supply disruptions since 1956 — all had been the result of political instability in the Middle East.

Increasing imports would only concentrate more wealth in the unstable Middle East and create a danger to the world, he said.

"We see imports increasing from 7.2 million barrels daily in 1992 to 10.4 million barrels by the end of the decade and 17.8 million barrels per day by 2020," he said.

The increased shipments of oil will also pose a threat to the environment. "To get this much oil to America by the year 2020, it will require 36 giant tankers,

Petroleum imports continue increasing

■ Statistics indicate the U.S. will continue to increase its dependence on imported oil as domestic production declines.

Staff Report

U.S. dependency on foreign oil is expected to increase to 47.5 percent in 1992, as U.S. production continues to decline.

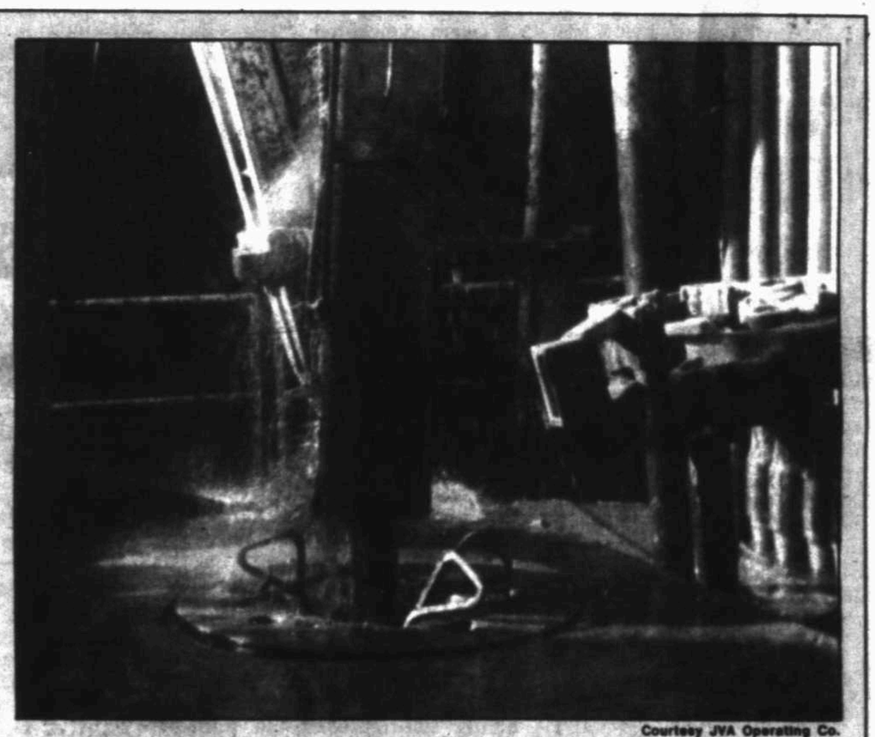

U.S. crude production posted a decline at the end of 1991, according to statistics from the American Petroleum Institute.

The API, in its January petroleum facts, said that U.S. crude production in December 1991 was 7,185,000 barrels a day, down from 7,338,000 barrels a day in December 1990. Of the country's oil production in December, 1,725,000 barrels per day was produced in Alaska.

U.S. natural gas liquids production in December was up from year-ago figures, totaling 1,610,000 barrels a day as compared to 1,604,000 barrels a year earlier.

Likewise, natural gas marketed production was up slightly, to 48.6 billion cubic feet daily in September from

Beaumont engineering firm meets with success

By Steve Stein

BEAUMONT, Texas (AP) — In a time of bad business news, a Beaumont engineering firm is becoming synonymous with business success.

Mike Burrow, president of Petrocon Engineering Inc., said many people know the nearly 4-year-old company is meeting with success but few realize what it does.

Here's a hint: The 900-member staff of Petrocon, which also has offices in Houston and Lake Charles, is made up of more than 780 engineers and designers.

Petrocon is becoming an industry leader in designing instrumentation systems for refineries, petrochemical and pulp plants and units related to environmental controls. But Petrocon offers a full-range of engineering-design services, including grassroot designs, or designs from the bottom up, for the construction of complete production units.

A process design of an entire production unit often includes procurement of the giant vessels so common to the skyline of Southeast Texas and Northwest Louisiana.

Petrocon has designed a controlroom with a fiber-optic data highway for an area refinery, is involved in the design of a liquid propane gas unit in Indonesia and hopes to enter into a partnership in Saudi Arabia that calls for a variety of its expertise. The 44-year-old Burrow says he is somewhat reluctant to mention specific projects for specific clients because of the competitive industrial climate.

Though Petrocon has experienced phenomenal growth working in the domestic market, company strategies call for expansion into foreign markets, Burrow said.

While Petrocon is increasing its markets, it also is managing its growth because expansion does not come without expense, he said. And Petrocon's expansion is dramatic.

Burrow, an engineering graduate of Louisiana Tech University, founded the company with a $250,000 line-of-credit from Texas Commerce Bank. Later he was joined by several stockholders.

In its first year of operations, Petrocon's gross revenues were about $4.1 million, but grew to $17.5 million by its second year in business. In 1991 the company's gross revenues reached about $56 million and company strategies call for Petrocon's gross revenues to reach $65 million in 1992 and $100 million by 1994, said Burrow, who was reared in Shreveport, La.

Burrow opened the doors as the company's sole employer, but a few months later 65 employees were on the payroll. The company now uses a computer system, with $30,000 worth of software alone, just to track potential engineering recruits.

Experienced chemical and electrical engineers are not easy to find, he said.

Growth meant new office locations as well. In Beaumont alone the company

Politics, they say, is the art of compromise. What they don't say, however, is that perpetual compromise is a sure means to a long, slow death.

When Texas Railroad Commissioner Bob Krueger was in Midland last week to address an environmental gathering of the Permian Basin Petroleum Association, he brought the contradiction to the forefront.

Krueger, a former Texas congressman and U.S. Ambassador to Mexico, explained that federal proposals to regulate produced brine water and drilling fluids as hazardous waste could devastate the industry, shutting down 74 percent of all oil wells in the state and 56 percent of all gas wells.

Then, almost in the same breath, he made a statement which struck a raw nerve with many in the crowd. In essence, he said: The environmental movement is here to stay . . . better learn to live with it . . . everybody is for it . . . you can't win.

He compared the strength of the environmental movement to the civil rights movement. "Somehow, when I saw George Wallace in the doorway of that school in Alabama, I knew that he had already lost," Krueger said.

While discussing changes in the drilling fluid and produced water exemption, he suggested the industry can only try to strike a deal it can live with. In other words: just relax and enjoy the inevitable!

That attitude may be politics as usual, but to the rest of us it's outrageous — as usual. It is kind of like negotiating with an embezzler about how much money he will steal from you.

Some will say that Krueger was just telling it like it is. But that doesn't mean that what is is right. The throw-the-bums-out mood in America is growing. Could it be because the people are growing weary of adversary-driven, compromise legislation that permits only "half-right" solutions.

Outraged at Krueger's statement about compromising on such a critical issue, Bruno Hanson, a Midland oilman and former president of the American Association of Petroleum Geologists, stood and asked:

"If salt water is a hazardous substance, why don't we prohibit putting salt on icy highways up north. If drill cuttings are a hazarous substance why don't we require that all the geological outcrops in America be covered with dirt? If crude oil is a hazardous substance why don't we tear up all the asphalt highways in America?"

When Hanson cornered Krueger after the meeting and asked him point blank: "Why do we have to compromise or give up ground on something so outrageously stupid?"

Krueger replied: "Because the chairman of the committee has to feel that he is doing his job."

Said Hanson: "That means that a stupid, oppressive, unneeded, unjust, and costly environmental regulation could be placed upon an entire industry just because the chairman of a congressional committee needs to feel like he is doing something. Doesn't being right count for anything any more? Is there never a time when you stand up for what's right and refuse to compromise?" Hanson lamented.

Plunk teams with Tools International

LAFAYETTE — Tools International Corp. of Lafayette, Louisiana, has added the Plunk line of wireline tools to the 17 year of company's inventory.

In a joint settlement with Rowe A. Plunk, found of the Midland, Texas tool company, Pearson said that "TIC is proud to have been chosen the exclusive licensee to manufacture, sell and distribute such a quality line of tools and equipment," Pearson added that this expansion further facilitates the development of new products and methods of manufacturing.

Founded in 1946, in Midland, Plunk is an established name in the wireline fishing tool industry specializing in routine paraffin work and bottom hole pressure.

each carrying 500,000 barrels to dock daily at U.S. ports. That would mean 13,140 ships, each with the ability to create oil spills, in our harbors each year," Powers warned.

To avert a possible supply crisis, trade deficit crisis and environmental crisis, oil production and demand should be stabilized at 1994 forecast levels through 2020. Such stabilization would result in a trade deficit savings of $1.2 trillion and a demand savings of $2.9 trillion, averaging $159 billion per year in savings over the 26-year period, Powers estimated.

"Cheap oil prices are not favorable to demand reduction, and growing imports are a threat to our financial well being, world peace and the environment."

Powers said the U.S. would be better off economically paying domestic producers $50 per barrel for crude oil than it would be paying $20 per barrel to foreign producers. He noted that the domestic oil and gas industry started to collapse in 1986 and has continued to falter ever since, with more than 300,000 jobs lost.

He also noted that increased use of compressed natural gas (CNG) as a transportation fuel could lessen demand. "CNG needs a big push. I think that state and federal government should take the lead in getting the CNG industry off the ground. It could 'back out' considerable oil imports."

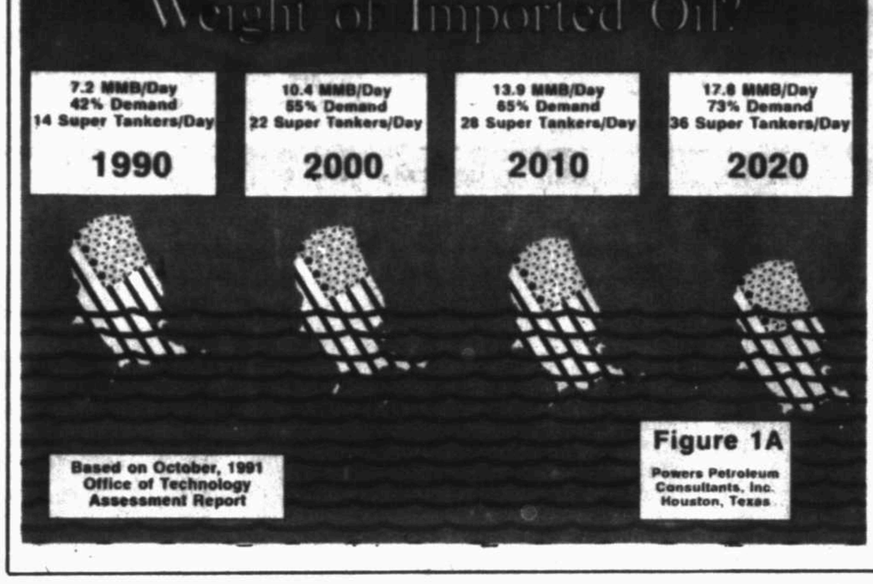

However, he is also concerned about the instability of the natural gas market. "If stability doesn't return to the gas market soon, we will have a shortage next year and that could create a spike in natural gas prices, at a time when it is needed most to replace imported oil."

If the U.S. oil industry is to be salvaged and the trade deficit brought under control, Powers said tax disincentives must be eliminated and hostility toward the oil industry cease.

"There is open hostility toward the oil industry. An unemployed oil worker doesn't get the same sympathy as an unemployed auto worker. It's sad, but that's the facts."

Powers said the oil industry has not been able to mount an effective public relations campaign to overcome the hostility because, unlike the auto industry which is dominated by five corporations, it is too diversified and segmented. "We also have accidents — like (the Exxon) Valdez and that sets us back," he said.

Powers concluded: "The solution is an energy policy favorable to the development of America's own oil and gas resources."

Sinking

The graph left illustrates how the U.S. economy will continue to sink under growing crude oil imports, which are expected to reach 17.8 million barrels daily by 2020, requiring the contents of 13,140 tankers per year.

IMPORTS: Continue to show increases

48.6 billion cubic feet daily in September from 48.4 billion cubic feet for the same month a year earlier.

U.S. petroleum imports — both crude and petroleum products — was sharply higher in December, totaling 7,419,000 barrels per day as opposed to 6,439,000 barrels daily for the same month in 1990. As a percentage of domestic petroleum deliveries, total imports were 43.2 percent in December, up from 39 percent in December 1990.

Petroleum produced in the Persian Gulf supplied 24 percent of U.S. petroleum imports this past October, as opposed to 24.1 percent for the same month in 1990.

Saudi Arabia continued to be the largest supplier of crude and petroleum products to the U.S., sending to America 1,652,000 barrels daily in October, making up 22.3 percent of total imports to the U.S. and supplying 9.8 percent of products. Venezuela was second, exporting 1,087,000 barrels daily to the U.S. or 14.7 percent of total imports into the country, 6.4 percent of domestic products supplied.

For the January to October 1991 period, Saudi Arabia remains the top exporter to the U.S., averaging exportsof 1,812,000 barrels daily to the U.S, 23.8 percent of total imports, 10.9 percent of domestic products supplied. Canada was second, sending to the U.S. 1,020,000 barrels daily or 13.4 percent of total imports, 6.1 percent of domestic products supplied.

Members of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries received an average of $15.95 for a barrel of oil in early January, while the average refiner acquisition cost for a barrel of U.S. crude was $20,39.

Deliveries of motor gasoline in Decmeber was 7,089,000 barrels daily, up from 6,978,000 barrels daily a year earlier. At the same time, deliveries of distillates (home heating oil and diesel) in December was 3,101,000 barrels daily, up from 2,816,000 barrels daily.

Petrocon's new emphasis on international contracts will mean expansion in Houston, Burrow said, adding that he plans to maintain his headquarters in Beaumont, a move he describes as both a blessing and a slight barrier. Because Southeast Texas is one of the major petrochmical complexes in the world, it helps Petrocon to be close to the action. But because of Jefferson County's lack of commercial passenger-jet services, and for other reasons, some international companies prefer to do business in Houston rather than Beaumont, he said.

Still, credibility is the major ingredient for the success of an engineering-design firm, Burrow said.

Of the company's growth, Burrow said: "We were surprised by it, but we did the planning, we established principles."

Burrow is a strong believer in quality management, and Petrocon has a strong regional identification with quality systems. Austin Industries Inc., a Dallas-based company, purchased the former Petrocon Inc. in 1982 and later changed the name to Austin Industrial. Burrow gained exposure to the principles of quality managment when he was vice president of Petrocon Inc. when it was part of Austin Industries.

When Burrow decided to open his own business in 1988, he revived the name of Petrocon, though it was no longer associated with Austin Industries, he said.

Though he had management experience and a solid reputation in the field, Burrow said he is still learning about managing such great success.

Russians hire Oklahoma firm

OKLAHOMA CITY (AP) — Russia has hired an Oklahoma City oil and gas business to find suppliers of oil-field equipment, training and services, the operation says.

Five Oaks Energy Inc. will be the exclusive agent for Soyuz Transworld Corp., a Moscow-based, U.S.-incorporated Russian trading firm, Five Oaks officials said.

The Russian republic has allocated $50 million for capital reinvestment in its Gyumen oil fields in southwestern Siberia.

The intent is to provide machinery and skills to get Russia's "paralyzed" oil and gas industry moving, Five Oaks president Chris Maillefert said Tuesday.

The oil and gas industry in both the United States and Russia will benefit from the emphasis on upgrading operations, another Five Oaks executive said.

"The Russian provinces are in desperate need for technology, services and training," said John Nickens, Five Oaks executive vice president. "These skills are quickly becoming a lost art in this country.

"The Canadians, British and French are running circles around us, and have already reached agreements with the republics to begin production. It's sad to see."

Five Oaks, incorporated in 1990, has drilled two wells.

Soyuz will bring Russian officials and business leaders to Oklahoma to negotiate sales and service and training agreements, Five Oaks executives say.

The first group of 23 is to arrive Feb. 18, Nickens said.

Five Oaks officials have worked more than a year to put the agreement together, Nickens said.

The deal could take thousands of tons of unused oil equipment off the hands of Oklahoma companies and bankruptcy officials.

PITTS: There comes a time to fight for rights

(From 1E)

Barry Williamson, Republican candidate for the Texas Railroad Commission, attended the meeting at which Krueger spoke and later commented that there is a time to fight — to get down in the trenches and go at it toe to toe.

"Sometimes it's better to lose it all in a good political fight than to 'win' a little bit in a compromise," Williamson said. "Next time they come after you, they'll know they're in for a fight. If they know they're in for a fight every time they come for you, eventually they'll stop making you the whipping boy."

That's a possibility the oil industry would cherish. Oilmen almost unamimously agree that the oil industry is Washington's favorite whipping boy.

It's a political law: If you go looking for a compromise, you'll get one every time. If you get nothing but compromises, you half lose every time. Enough compromises and you lose it all.

I don't doubt Bob Krueger is a friend of the oil industry. He has enthusiastically taken up a number of oilpatch causes including decontrol of natural gas, repeal of the windfall profits tax and now "hazardous" drilling fluids. But perhaps he, and all our other politicians, have become too attuned to the art of compromise.

Bob Krueger, for all his negotiating on behalf of the Texas oil industry during the Carter years, voted for the Windfall Profits Tax. He compromised because he thought plow back provisions would somehow mitigate the evil of the tax.

But if Krueger is guilty of signing on too quickly to the compromise process, perhaps the oil industry itself is equally guilty. When was the last time the oil industry became outraged, indignantly self-righteous and pulled all the plugs in a bloody win-or-lose battle against the insanity and tyranny of liberal oil-haters?

Most often, friendly politicians have been asked to negotiate the best compromise possible. Those who think the oil industry is winning would do well to count the political trophies.

So maybe it is time the industry stopped being so passive and quick-to-compromise and played some hardball. It might win us a little respect. What's to lose — a wonderful public image? Friends?

BRIEFS

Three oil companies are honored

WASHINGTON — The Secretary of the Interior's Mineral Revenues Stewardship Awards have been presented to Northwest Pipeline Corporation, Western Production Company, and Marathon Oil Company for outstanding and professional business performance as noted by the Minerals Management Service.

Gas processing course scheduled

NORMAN — A gas processing equipment operation course and a gas conditioning conference will be offered this February and March on the University of Oklahoma's campus.

Both of the events are sponsored by OU Continuing Education and Public Service, and will be held at the Oklahoma Center for Continuing Education, 1700 Asp Ave.

Williamson reports campaign funds

DALLAS — Barry Williamson, Republican candidate for Texas Railroad Commission, reports that he has raised $385,489.02 during his campaign's first five months.

The report lists 786 donors, with 30% of them contributing less than $100."I'm extremely pleased by the broad-based support I've received from across Texas," said Williamson. "For a new campaign, it's overwhelming."

Amoco to spend on gas contract

HOUSTON — Amoco Production Co., will spend up to $300 million in the next 10 years to meet commitments of a new gas supply contract it signed with the National Gas Company of Trinidad and Tobago (NGC).

The new contract will help provide short-term and ongoing natural gas requirements of industries in Trinidad and Tobago. Also, it allows Amoco to monetize existing natural gas discoveries that have not been developed.

Producers tighten belt on natural gas

By Evan Ramstad

DALLAS (AP) — Pretend you and a friend do the same job for the same money.

You save some of yours but your friend always spends more than he has.

The bank calls your employer, who decides to cut your pay and give it to your friend, who obviously needs more money.

Doesn't sound fair?

But it's the way natural gas has been handled in Texas. A producer who exceeds the monthly production limit, or allowable, set by the Railroad Commission eventually is given the privilege to produce more.

The reason: for years the commission has been told the market for natural gas is bigger than it is.

Inaccurate estimating by pipeline companies, utilities and other natural gas buyers has weakened prorationing, a system states have used since the 1930s to balance energy production and demand.

Producers say fair access to the market has been denied, natural gas has been wasted and the price does not reflect the true value of the commodity.

"A proper proration system can stop rewarding the improvident and it can also assure consumers they're going to have plenty of gas for a number of years in the future, not just cheap gas for a few months," said Bill Murray, a railroad commissioner from 1947 to 1963 and now chairman of the state's voluntary allocation committee.

The Railroad Commission last month proposed doing away with the monthly estimates and giving producers more power to decide when to sell.

A similar change is afoot in Oklahoma, where the Legislature will be asked when it convenes this week to go a step farther and restrict natural gas production, particularly in warm months.

The reforms may seem arcane but some producers are hailing them as salvation for their industry, now wracked by the lowest natural gas prices in more than a decade.

But not all support the changes. Like so many issues in the industry, prorationing in general has divided independents and major oil companies.

"In order for all the producing states to stabilize the natural gas industry and protect their assets against what is clearly waste, they need to take drastic action," said Patrick Collins, chairman of Houston-based Plains Resources Co.

"We're just against anything that tries to influence the marketplace," said Hefin Ab Iowerth, vice president of the Denver-based mid-continent unit of Amoco.

Kathleen Magruder, manager of marketing, governmental and regulatory affairs for Arco Oil & Gas Co., said the rift was "coincidental. We're hurt as much by low gas prices as independents."

But the major oil companies have many revenue and profit sources while independents have one — the wellhead.

"When the wellhead price is as crazy as it's been in the last few years, we have a difficult time getting the funds to go out," said Bob Alexander, an independent Oklahoma City oilman.

He chaired the Oklahoma Natural Gas Policy Commission, which last week drafted a bill lowering the production limit, or allowable, on the state's natural gas wells. Collins and Iowerth were also on the commission.

The commission proposed cutting the allowable from 50 percent to 40 percent of a well's "natural flow" from November to February and to 25 percent the rest of the year. A minimum of 1 million cubic feet per day would be allowed in winter and 750,000 cubic feet the rest of the year.

Natural flow is the amount of gas that would come from a well if there were not a wellhead and gathering system to collect it.

The commission also wants the Legislature to give the Oklahoma Corporation Commission, the state's energy regulator, authority over prorationing it now does not have.

Iowerth was the only one of the 12-member commission to object, saying its limits should account for differences in producing fields.

For decades, the Texas prorationing system has considered such differences. Born in the boom of the East Texas oil fields, the Texas system was credited then for saving the industry and has been copied in some form by several countries.

Oil allowables haven't been set in the state for two decades. Producers go all out and the United States must still rely on international sources for half its oil.

But supply exceeds demand for natural gas, so production limits persist.

In Texas, they work like this:

Each month, buyers of natural gas, like pipeline companies or utilities, are asked to estimate their demand for the next month. The Railroad Commission then adds up the estimates and, using a complex formula that accounts for a field's production history, allocates, or pro-rates, the total among all producers.

The trouble is demand has been overestimated. In 1990, for instance, the average daily allowable was 22 percent higher than what was actually produced and sold.

"At the present time, the system that we've got is old. It's aged. It's not doing the job that needs to be done," said Jim Nugent, a Texas Railroad commissioner who has pushed for change.

On Jan. 6, the commission proposed eliminating the estimates from purchasers and using other market statistics, including previous production, to set allowables.

Those allowables would be set annually instead of monthly, giving a producer flexibility to cut back production during times of the year when natural gas demand is low. Last year, New Mexico cut back from monthly to six-month allowables.

Under the Texas proposal, adjustments could be sought quarterly if it looked like a producer was going to exceed or come in far below the annual limit.

The reduction in paperwork alone should save the state at least $3 million annually, Nugent said.

But more importantly for the industry and consumers, the changes will level price fluctuations without actually slowing Texas gas production, supporters said.

"The commission will be reducing the pressure that producers currently feel to produce wide open even when it does not make economic sense," said Scott Anderson, general counsel for the Texas Independent Producers and Royalty Owners Association.

But Magruder said Arco believes future gas demand cannot be based on past production and worries production will fall in Texas.

"It's a lead pipe cinch that once you cut allowables you will cut production," Magruder said.

Nugent said that's not the commission's intent.

"We simply are trying to match the market demand more closely than we have in the past," he said.

The commission's proposal is open for public and industry comment through the month. Hearings are likely before it is voted upon later this year.

In Oklahoma, prorationing is expected to be one of the first issues addressed by the Legislature.

Meanwhile, other large gas producing states are taking notice.

Plagued by the same overestimating that occurs in Texas, prorationing was on the agenda of last week's meeting of the Arkansas Oil and Gas Commission, said deputy director Hampton Bussey.

And several producers have talked with the Louisiana Independent Petroleum and Royalty Owners Association about tightening prorationing rules in the No. 2 gas producing state.

"I think we have to be next if those two states go," said Wayne Harmon, executive director of the group.

Enron signs large, long-term gas contract

N.Y. Times News Service

DALLAS — Entering into one of the largest and longest-duration contracts for natural gas supplies in the United States, Enron Corp. has agreed to deliver $3.5 billion to $4 billion worth of natural gas over 20 years for a new co-generation plant to be built in upstate New York.

The agreement is with the Sithe Energies Group, of New York, which plans to build a 1,000-megawatt plant in Oswego, N.Y., that would be the biggest co-generation plant built by an independent power producer in the United States.

A co-generation plant produces steam and electricity simultaneously. Advanced new versions of the technology capture steam produced from a gas-fired turbine and use the steam to fuel a second turbine that generates lower-cost electricity.

Consolidated Edison of New York, which provides electricity to 2.8 million homes and work places in New York City and Westchester County, has agreed to buy more than 700 megawatts from the plant. That is more than 5 percent of its current 12,000-megawatt system.

Enron, the nation's biggest gas pipeline company and a major gas producer, said it would sell approximately 1.4 trillion cubic feet of gas, or 195 million cubic feet a day, during the period beginning in 1995. Enron is also constructing a 1,750-megawatt plant in Britain.

The deal with Sithe marks an important breakthrough for Enron.

It has tried for more than a year to persuade builders of new power plants to substitute natural gas for coal, oil and other fuels. The slumping natural gas industry's best chance to increase sales is to supply dozens of electric plants that are likely to be built this decade, analysts say.

"This is exactly the way we see the future of the natural-gas world developing," said Richard D. Kinder, Enron's president and chief operating officer.

The company expects to announce four more long-term gas supply contracts for other new power plants by the end of March, he said.

Enron and Sithe agreed to a fixed price for gas for five years, beginning with the plant's scheduled opening in 1995.

After that, prices would fluctuate with market conditions. Enron needed that flexibility to sign up suppliers for the deal, Kinder said.

Electric utilities and independent power companies have been cautious about building new plants using natural gas because most gas producers are unable or unwilling make supply commitments of at least 15 years. Yet natural gas has the advantage of being more abundant than oil in the United States and cleaner burning than both oil and coal.

Enron's solution is to pool many future supply commitments directly from producers, from its own supplies or by purchasing contracts in the fledgling gas futures market. Its biggest supply deal is with Florida Power and Light for 343 million cubic feet a day for 15 years.

Bruce J. Wrobel, an executive at Sithe Energies, said his company had switched the fuel source for the new Oswego plant to natural gas from coal because of Enron's package of supply commitments.

"This will be the cleanest co-generation plant ever built in the United States," he said. Partly because the plant will be cheaper to build with natural gas as the power source rather than coal, Sithe will spend more money on pollution-control equipment to reduce emissions, he said.

Wall Street rally bypasses oil, gas stocks

By Kyle Pope

Hearst News Service

HOUSTON – Despite a record Wall Street rally, 1991 was a miserable year for oil and gas stocks, as share prices plummeted and new offerings dropped by more than a third.

"It has been horrible," said Bob Gillon, a senior analyst at John S. Herold Inc., an energy consulting firm in Greenwich, Conn. "Your daughter's savings account outperformed general oil companies last year."

According to a Herold study released Friday, every sector of the energy business – from major oil companies to tiny domestic exploration firms – lost out on last year's rally, as falling natural gas prices and a seesawing crude market gave investors the jitters.

Herold, tracking stock prices and company dividends, said energy companies' return to shareholders totaled a measly 4.3 per cent last year, compared to nearly 24 percent for the Dow Jones Industrial Average.

And as the stock market rumbled to a record high at the end of December, led by double-digit gains in some small high-tech stocks, share prices in the energy business tumbled by as much as 85 percent.

According to Herold, big losers for the year included Transco Exploration Partners, whose shareholders' returns dropped 76 per cent; Columbia Gas, which dropped 61 percent; and Mesa Limited Partnership, which suffered a 54 percent decline. Mesa converted to a corporation effective Dec. 31.

Gainers for the year included exploration companies with major new discoveries, including Triton Energy, with a 434 percent increase last year, and Plains Resources, with a 129 percent gain.

But if last year was bad for energy company stocks, Herold officials say it was worse for new offerings in the oil and gas business.

In a year when more than 740 companies raised $42 billion in equity capital – a record amount – energy companies lumbered through the worst public-offering climate since the bust of the mid-1980s.

The oil and gas industry raised only $1.3 billion in new equity capital last year, less than a third of the $3.7 billion in energy offerings in 1990.

"The oil industry was viewed as a very bad place to put money," said Arthur L. Smith, Herold's chairman. "There has been a major breakdown in this industry's ability to earn adequate rates of return."

Experts say investors were scared away from energy industry offerings in 1991 after the horrendous showing from the offerings completed in 1989 and 1990.

Of those, Herold said only one, Matrix Service, managed to climb substantially over its initial offer price. Most of the others, including Coho Resources, Offshore Pipelines and Chiles Offshore, lost at least 40 percent of their value since going public.

Looking ahead, Herold officials say things probably won't get worse.

They say that in the short term, large domestic refiners should perform fairly well, despite a product glut that has driven down the price of gasoline at the pump.

Herold's optimism about the U.S. refinery business, though, lasts only until 1994. By then, officials say companies could be forced to pay as much as $15 billion for changes required by the Clean Air Act.

And those costs, according to Herold's experts, could send the price of gasoline up as much as 15 cents a gallon.

As for public offerings, officials say 1992 already is shaping up better than last year. Energy companies this month completed $750 million in new equity deals, more than half the total for all of 1991.

Freeport-McMoRan to lay off employees

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — New Orleans-based Freeport-McMoRan Inc. will lay off 55 employees starting March 21 because of a cutback in oil and gas exploration, the company said.

The company blamed the cutbacks on lower oil and gas prices, as well as the recent sale of some of its oil and gas properties, mainly in the Gulf of Mexico.

Cabot Oil plans major drilling program

OKLAHOMA CITY (AP) — Cabot Oil and Gas Corp. of Houston plans a $44 million exploration program that includes the drilling of 93 wells, about half of the wells planned in Oklahoma.

Cabot announced plans for its program earlier this week.

The drilling program will be concentrated on development and infill wells in proven gas fields in the Anadarko Basin, in southwestern Kansas and in the Appalachian Basin of West Virginia and Pennsylvania.

The Anadarko Basin stretches through western Oklahoma into the Texas Panhandle.

What used to be Art has now become Science.

When you need the best scientific data about the most critical element in well stimulation design — frac height at the wellbore — the controlling factor for fracture length and well productivity, choose Smith Energy Services. It's a job we know well.

In fact, our 3D Frac Model predicts the height, determining if the fracture will stay in zone, whether multiple layers will be effectively stimulated and if you should design a single- or multi-stage treatment.

And with the power of our new 486-based computers and the expertise of S.A. Holditch Associates behind us, why settle for less. After all, we can model up to 11 different layers and four different fluids to give you the best design analysis in the industry.

Our frac model eliminates guesswork and offers the operator the opportunity to make adjustments to optimize the treatment scientifically and accurately. Every time.

Not to mention doing wonders for your profits.

Smith Energy Services. We work best under pressure.

Unocal suffers loss, Arco earnings drop

LOS ANGELES — Buffeted by the recession, low crude oil prices and tough gasoline competition on the West Coast, Unocal Corp. has reported a fourth quarter loss, while Atlantic Richfield Co. has shown a 53 percent earnings drop for the three-month period.

Los Angeles-based Unocal said that it lost $16 million (7 cents per share) for the fourth quarter ended Dec. 31 compared with net income of $38 million (16 cents) in the like period a year ago. Revenue totaled $2.77 billion, down from $3.38 billion.

For the year, the company earned $73 million (31 cents), down from $401 million ($1.71) in 1990. Revenue was $10.9 billion, down from $11.8 billion.

The fourth quarter loss and lower yearly earnings reflect a $62 million charge from construction projects that either were canceled or revised.

Los Angeles-based Arco said that recession-related restructuring costs helped fuel its earnings slide.

The company reported net income of $268 million ($1.67) for the fourth quarter ended Dec. 31, compared with $566 million ($3.45) in the like period a year ago. Revenue was $4.8 billion, down from $5.7 billion.

For all of 1991 the company said that it earned $709 million ($4.39), down from $2.011 billion ($12.15) in 1990.

The 1991 results included $295 million in restructuring expenses, the company said.

Maxus reports loss of $11.2 million for year

DALLAS (AP) — Maxus Energy Corp. said it lost $3.4 million in the fourth quarter and $11.2 million for the year due to lower oil and gas prices.

In addition, the company said it put aside $6 million in the quarter in its environmental reserve due to higher estimates of future spending.

Maxus lost 14 cents a share during the three months that ended Dec. 31. A year earlier, the company earned $16.1 million, or 6 cents a share.

Revenue during the quarter was $205.3 million, down 4 percent from $213.9 million a year earlier.

For the year, the company lost $11.2 million, about 52 cents a share. In 1990, Maxus earned $7.3 million, a loss of 38 cents a share.

Annual revenue was $790.8 million, up 15 percent from $685.4 million in 1990.

Oryx suffers quarterly loss of $40 million

DALLAS (AP) — Oryx Energy Co. lost $40 million in the fourth quarter after a $35 million after-tax charge for a consolidation that eliminated 40 percent of its workforce.

A year earlier, the company earned $140 million in the fourth quarter, when oil prices were surging due to instability in the Middle East during the Persian Gulf war buildup. But energy prices fell almost immediately when the war began and have not recovered.

In addition, Oryx's performance was influenced by asset sales and lower production volumes.

Oryx's per-share loss was 54 cents during the quarter compared to a $1.61 gain a year earlier.

Revenue was $370 million, down from $763 million in 1990 when the company was producing 23 percent more oil and 24 percent more gas.

For the year, Oryx earned $19 million, 8 cents a share. In 1990, the company earned $225 million, $2.26 cents a share.

Annual revenue was $1.6 billion, down 25 percent from $2.1 billion in 1990.

Valero quarterly profits fall, earnings set record

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — Valero Energy Corp. reported a 32 percent drop in fourth-quarter profit but earned a record amount for the year.

The company attributed the performance partly to higher interest income from leases and investments and a reduction in interest expense. Declining crude prices compressed margins on oil and gas in stock at the refinery company during the quarter.

Valero earned $22.8 million, or 53 cents a share, during the three months that ended Dec. 31. The company earned $33.3 million, 78 cents a share, in the comparable year-ago period.

Revenue in the quarter was $195.4 million, down 42 percent from $335.6 million a year earlier.

Valero's margins were higher during the fourth quarter of 1990 due to the increase in energy prices that occurred after Iraq's invasion of Kuwait.

For all of 1991, the company earned $98.7 million, $2.28 a share. In 1990, Valero earned $94.7 million, $2.31 a share. The company's issuance of new stock in the third quarter of the year affected the per-share result.

Revenue was $1.0 billion, down 13 percent from $1.2 billion in 1990.

Occidental Petroleum reports positive earnings

LOS ANGELES — Occidental Petroleum Corp. has reported fourth quarter earnings of $6 million despite a drop in energy profits because of lower oil prices.

The Los Angeles-based company said that its net income for the three months ended Dec. 31 amounts to 2 cents a share, compared with a loss of $2 billion ($6.76) for the like period a year ago when Occidental began remaking itself following the death of former chairman Armand Hammer.

The 1990 results included $2.05 billion in restructuring and other costs.

Revenue in 1991's fourth quarter totaled $2.6 billion, down from $3.5 billion in the year-ago period.

For all of 1991, Occidental reported net income of $460 million ($1.52), compared with a loss of $1.7 billion ($5.82) in the prior year. Revenue was $10.1 billion, down from $11.5 billion. Without the restructuring, Occidental said it would have earned $351 million in 1990.

Fina fourth quarter earnings rise 14 percent

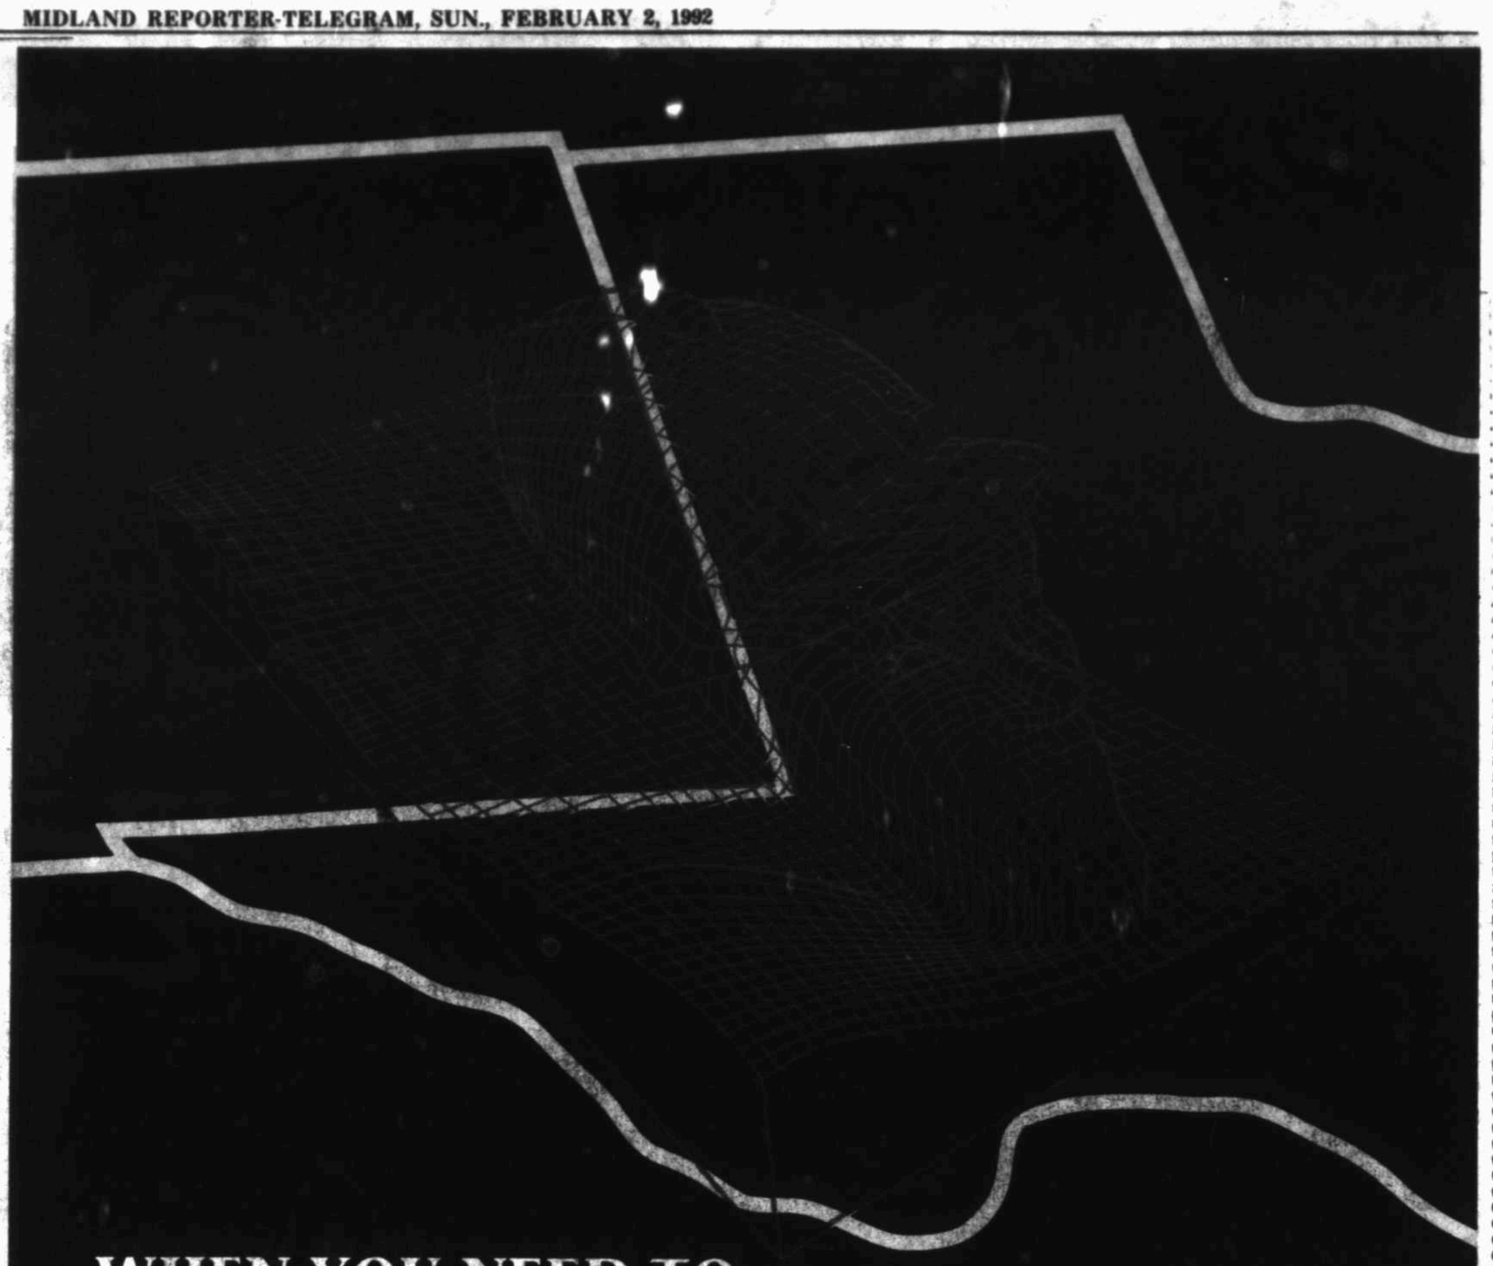

DALLAS (AP) — Fina Inc. reported a 14 percent jump in fourth-quarter earnings but said its profit for the year was down 67 percent due to lower energy prices and the recession's impact on its chemical business.

The company earned $21.8 million, $1.40 a share, during the last three months of the year. Fina earned $19.1 million, $1.23 a share, in the fourth quarter of 1990.

Revenue was $859.1 million, down 37 percent from $1.19 billion a year earlier.

Fina earned $42.0 million, $2.71 a share, for the year. In 1990, the company earned $125.5 million, $8.11 a share.

Annual revenue was $3.34 billion, down 16 percent from $3.98 billion in 1990.

WHEN YOU NEED TO GET FACE TO FACE WITH THE PERMIAN BASIN OIL INDUSTRY :

PERMIAN BASIN OIL REPORT

The Permian Basin is an oil and gas producing empire of 100,000 square miles with an oil well for every square mile. Comprised of 54 counties in Southeast New Mexico and West Texas, this far flung industry accounts for roughly 20 percent of the nation's total oil production.

Yet, a long standing problem has been the lack of a single newspaper to serve the thousands of companies and over 40,000 workers involved in exploration, land, production, drilling, oilfield service and supply, pipelines and construction, refining, and transportation.

But now, the Permian Basin Oil Report, published weekly by the Midland Reporter-Telegram, has become the information source for the Permian Basin oil industry.

Packed with information and articles about oil and gas people, products, companies, issues, events, drilling, exploration, and production, the Oil Report appears each Sunday as a section of the Midland Reporter-Telegram. Additionally, it is mailed to every producer, operator and oilfield service company throughout the Permian Basin.

If the Permian Basin is your target market, the Permian Basin Oil Report is the way to reach it.

TACKLING ANOTHER ROLE

By Georgia Todd Temple

For James Zachery, fitness coordinator for the Central YMCA, retiring from professional football meant returning to a previous love.

"As soon as I got out of football, I went and got my equity card," said Zachery, who has landed the leading role of the slave Jim in Midland Community Theatre's production of "Big River: The Adventures of Huckleberry Finn."

The musical opens Valentine's Day and closes March 22 at Theatre Midland, 2000 W. Wadley Ave.

"I've always been involved in theater whenever I could," Zachery said. "Most of my life has been spent in the arts. I sang in choirs since I was 5 years old and performed with UIL divisions."

Zachery played with the New York Jets briefly in 1980 before spending eight years in the Canadian League with the Edmonton Eskimos.

Zachery said he's trying to break the stigma that athletes are one dimensional and excel at a certain level and that's all they can do.

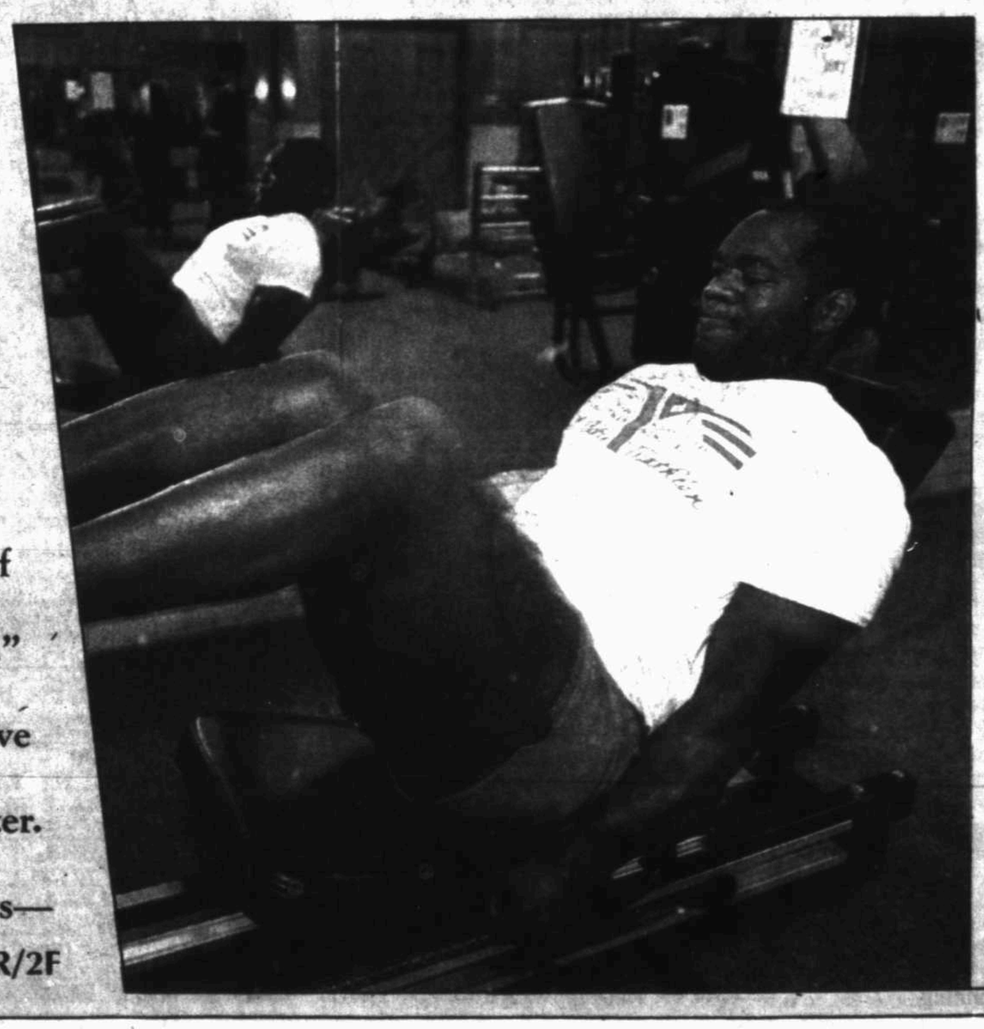

"Athletes seem to be limited in our society. I don't know if it's a fault of society or a natural phenomenon."

He finds much of the philosophy surrounding professional sports relative to theater.

"For me, football is a humongous stage. You have people that play roles—

RIVER: Athletics is comparable to acting in theater and the teams that have role-players (and) do it more effectively are usually the teams that wind up with championships.

"For example, the Washington Redskins. Their whole team is designed around having players who play certain roles and the more effectively they do that then the closer to being champions they become. Ultimately, they win a championship.

"I was on the ultimate team-concept kind of team where we had role-players as well, and I was on a championship team, so I know all about playing roles in that sense.

"The only difference in a football game and the theater piece is that the ending is not determined."

In order to excel in sports and theater, a player must — in addition to mastering role playing — have a "certain level of confidence."

"In theater you have to believe you can capture the essence of the character that you're going to portray. To do that you have to have a certain level of confidence. The people that make up the team, make up the cast. Both are needed in football as well as on stage. You have to be synchronized with the rest of your teammates in football and with the rest of the cast in theater."

CAST MEMBERS JOINING Zachery in MCT's production include Michael James, Huck Finn; Will Coombes, Tom Sawyer; Mike Harrell, Pap Finn; Loree Fitz-Gerald, Widow Douglas; Janet Considine, Miss Watson; Corby Considine, Judge Thatcher; Duncan Parish, Duke of Bridgewater; Michael Trost, King of Dolphin; John Phillip, Mark Twain; Kelly Newsom, Strange Women; and Ronnie Williams, Young Fool.

Rounding out the cast is an ensemble which includes Amy Johnson, Charlotte Martin, LaShaunna Menefee, Charlotte Wornell, Marc Graham, Marvin LeMaster, Jonathan Luna, Stephen Madrid, Shane Manley, Tim Rosborough, Ralph Stevenson, Jeffrey Webb, Jeff Wood and Carlos Zachery.

"Big River," the musical adaptation of Mark Twain's "The Adventures of Huckleberry Finn," was written by William Hauptman with music by Roger Miller.

The musical debuted on Broadway during the 1985 season and won seven Tony Awards, including best musical. The story, narrated by Huck Finn, begins where "The Adventures of Tom Sawyer" leaves off and chronicles attitudes and events during the 1840s, a time when the United States was divided by the great slavery debate.

"AS I READ the play, I realized there's some painful things that Jim went through, and for anyone who had ancestors that were in that situation, it's always painful to dredge up the inhumanity that man has forced on man," Zachery said. "That's always a painful situation especially when your ancestors were in the lesser position.

"Even though Jim was in a dreadful position, the people who had him enslaved were worse off, in my opinion. This is a double-edged sword, if you will. People can often think they're in a superior position and have all the things they want to in the material realm, but in the spiritual realm, they are as doomed as the subjects."

Jim, a runaway slave, is hungry for freedom, Zachery said. "The irony behind the situation is those people who thought they were free really weren't."

The role of Jim marks Zachery's MCT debut. Zachery was involved in theater when he was a student at Midland High School. Since he retired from football, most of his stage experience has been in Canadian theater. His future plans include fine-tuning his theatrical skills and pursuing professional acting.

He and his wife, Molly, who works for Alexander & Alexander, and their children, Klaesha, 12, a student at South Elementary, and Matthew, 6, a student at Burnett Elementary School, moved back to Midland in May 1991.

"IT'S HOME FOR me. It's where I grew up. I always wanted to come back home. I think the things you learn in life are best used at home.

"Out on the road, you have to prove yourself to people over and over again in regard to character. Being big and even black, people tend to think the worst of you.

"When you go back home, people know how you were raised. You have a track record, so to speak. It's not a situation where you have to bend over backward to prove you are a good person.

"That's one incentive to come back home. And people that care about you are at home."

One of the first things he did when he moved home was talk with Don Bachmann, MCT executive director.

"I expressed to him my desire to be a part of community theater because I had some things I wanted to learn, and I wanted to be a good actor someday. I want to be competitive," Zachery said.

When the auditions for "Big River" rolled around, Zachery was there.

"They had some considerable talent show up and audition for the part," Zachery said. "About six people who auditioned for the part of Jim were excellent singers and most of them read well. I felt fortunate that I won the job over them."

ZACHERY DIVIDES LIFE into three arenas — physical, mental and spiritual. It is in these areas that he wants to acquire effective tools to work for a more harmonious society.

"I look on my job at the YMCA as an opportunity to deal in the physical sense, to help people feel better," Zachery said, explaining that constructing workout programs designed for individuals helps people acquire physical fitness which helps their mind operate more effectively.

He finds that working in theater increases his mind's agility and thereby positively affects the other areas of his life.

In addition to working at the YMCA and acting on stage at MCT, Zachery is involved, along with his mother, Dorothy Zachery, in establishing a non-denominational church in Midland. The church is named the Holy Assembly Temple of Praise.

"I'm trying to get a triangular set in my life — mind, body and spirit. That's what I want to do with my life — be able to affect people in those three ways.

"I have a dream — doing all that I can with my life and all of that hovers around trying to be a good part of society and trying to do what I can to change things in society for the betterment of society. Being able to portray the part of Jim in 'Big River' is a step in that direction.

"I've poured a lot of energy in this play to capture the true spirit of Jim," Zachery said.

"I don't take this play, 'Big River,' as just entertainment for somebody. I take it for what it is worth and what it can say to people who come to watch it. The message it is putting forth is what this society needs — regardless of the differences, people can always find a common ground."

Review board sees self as lone watchdog of movie industry

DALLAS (AP) — In Dallas, a city made famous by a sleazy, sexy TV soap opera, it's not enough for Hollywood types to declare a movie OK for children and teen-agers.

The city insists on looking over the shoulder of the Motion Picture Association of America, applying its own stricter movie ratings.

Some movie executives are reluctant to discuss the Dallas Motion Picture Classification Board, the only such board in a major U.S. city.

But one said the board and its authority in the nation's eighth largest city restricts where he can book some movies.

That stricter code also sometimes results in clashes such as last week when the board took on "Kuffs," a Universal Studio movie starring Christian Slater.

The MPAA had rated the movie PG-13, meaning it contains some material which may be inappropriate for children under 13. The board thought the movie contained too much violence and harsh language and wanted to add its own rating of "unsuitable for young persons," which would have blocked persons under 16 from seeing the movie without their parents or guardians.

Under an out-of-court settlement, the board agreed to rate the movie "suitable, except for drugs, violence and language," opening the door for teen-agers.

"I've seen the things that used to be rated R are now PG-13, and the things that used to be PG-13 are in the PG slot, and we're slowly seeing things that used to be in the PG slipping into the G area," says Fred Aurbach, 47, a dentist who chairs the board.

But Jack Valenti, head of the MPAA, which rates movies for national release, says Dallas is out of sync with the rest of the country.

"If (review boards) ever had a usefulness, more would exist today," Valenti said. "Some 20 years ago, there were more than 50 of these so-called censorship boards, but it was plainly evident what we were doing on a national basis was far more effective than anything they could do.

"Our ratings system is the best we can do and it's accepted by the great majority of American parents," Valenti said.

An urban political expert said Dallas tends to be "traditional" and the movie review board is one way to ensure residents retain their values.

The board is "resistance to the kind of entertainment that could be demoralizing or demeaning or could undermine the values to which a large segment of the community ascribe," said Irving Baker, a professor at Southern Methodist University.

The Dallas review board was founded in 1966, two years before the MPAA began its voluntary movie ratings system. It has survived one constitutional challenge by rewriting the ordinance creating the board.

The 26-member review board is appointed by the City Council. Half of the board members are retired although their ages range from the late 20s to late 70s.

Board spokeswoman Marsha Cranford said that the board screens movies for violence, nudity, drug abuse, sex or offensive language. It has no authority to ban or censor any movie, she said.

The board screens all films rated G, PG, and PG-13 by the MPAA, then adds its own "not suitable," "suitable with exceptions," or "suitable" ratings. All R-rated films automatically get a "not suitable" classification.

The recent controversy over "Kuffs," which opens Friday, is only the latest conflict with the MPAA ratings. Universal Studios declined to comment on the board.

Some of the movies the board has successfully applied its stricter standards to include: "Invasion of the Body Snatchers," 1979; "The Late Show," 1977; "Paper Moon," 1973; and "The Front Page," 1974.

The board also attempted to apply the "not suitable" rating to the popular movie "Ghost," but backed down after complaints from industry leaders, choosing instead the "suitable with exceptions."

It made similar decisions on the movies "The Elephant Man," 1981; "Poltergeist," 1982; and "Conan the Destroyer," 1983.

The latest challenge to the board was in 1990, with the PG-13 Paramount Pictures "Repossessed," a spoof of the earlier horror movie "The Exorcist." After the city filed a court injunction, the distributor agreed to accept the "not suitable" classification and the case was dropped.

Aurbach said the board has a difficult time deciding what's "suitable" by contemporary standards.

'Twin Peaks' draws business in Japan

TOKYO (AP) — After "Twin Peaks" died in the United States, the offbeat TV series took off in Japan, and now a Japanese tour company is drawing brisk business to the United States with its Twin Peaks Tours.

"The real Twin Peaks is now right before your eyes," reads a Japan Travel Bureau pamphlet about its tours to Snoqualmie, Wash., the town 30 miles east of Seattle where the TV series was shot. "It's the ultimate goal of every 'Twin Peaks' fan. Don't miss out."

The first three tours sold out, and the travel agency recently scheduled a fourth tour, for 40 people, in March. It's the latest indication of a growing cult following in Japan for director David Lynch's TV series.

Scheduled to coincide with spring break at Japanese universities, the $1,600 five-day tour includes a stay at the series' Great Northern Hotel — its real name is Salish Lodge — a meal at the Double R Diner and a visit to the rocky river bank where the body of character Laura Palmer was discovered.

Why all the fuss about an American TV show that was canceled after two seasons?

"People get hooked," said tour organizer Kazuo Kuwata. "Then they get sucked into the 'Twin Peaks' world, and eventually they want to go there and see the place for themselves.

"As soon as something gets popular in America, it seems to infect Japan as well," he said. "Agent Cooper is pretty big around here. There's even an Agent Cooper fan club."

The series centers on Special Agent Dale Cooper, sent to the sleepy lumbering town of Twin Peaks to find out who murdered high-school student Laura Palmer.

Lynch's trademark weirdness, in films such as "Blue Velvet," was considerably toned down for a television audience, but "Twin Peaks" remains as offbeat as TV programming gets.

"Twin Peaks" fans in Japan can buy copies of Laura Palmer's diary or tapes of Cooper's absurdly detailed dictation notes to his secretary.

In July, the series became available in Japan on videotape. Amuse Video, the series' video distributor, printed a 60-page "Guide to Twin Peaks" detailing the complex web of characters and places depicted in the story. All 150,000 free copies were quickly snatched up.

Naofumi Komai, who came up with Twin Peaks Tours, used the guide extensively to plan the trips, which are being advertised on a new satellite television station that broadcast all 29 "Twin Peaks" episodes over two days in December.

"People just get totally caught up in it," Komai says. "It gets to the point where they can't talk about anything but 'Twin Peaks.'"

Die-hard fan Hitomi Tsutamoto, 31, has seen every episode at least five times and will take the tour with her husband, Keichi, a 33-year-old accountant from Kobe in western Japan.

"I can't wait to eat some cherry pie at the Double R Diner," she said, referring to agent Cooper's favorite pasttime.

Adult clubs cater to upscale clientele

NEW YORK (AP) — To a staccato rap beat, two women in thong bikinis cavort inside a glass-walled shower. In a side room, a hot-oil wrestling team called the Battling Angels is going at it in front of men in blazers and turtlenecks.

It's Saturday night at Goldfingers, a "mentertainment" adult club that caters to an upscale clientele.

If a murder should happen here, would the tabloids shriek: BUTTONED-DOWN BODY IN TOPLESS BAR?

Don't look for many tattooed bikers in this West Side strip joint, which opened a month ago. The setting is altogether too luxurious, and there's a hands-off policy on dancers. (Oil can be rubbed on the wrestlers).

"There's no body contact whatsoever," said dancer Debbie Smith, 21, taking a break from gyrating. "You have a good time and I have a good time and there's no chance of getting AIDS."

The customers aren't complaining.

"You can look but you can't touch. This is a good alternative for the times we live in," said Don Davis, 33, a married businessman from Ontario, Canada. He stood near the main stage, a crisp white handkerchief impeccably folded in the breastpocket of his pricey, navy blue suit.

Nearby, currency broker Jimmy Donovan, 26, of New Vernon, N.J., sipped a drink at the bar. Half-naked women brushed up against his crew-neck sweater; the men aren't supposed to go after them.

"You can come in here and have a good time just by watching," he said.

A growing number of fancy flesh clubs have opened in the city in recent months.

Scores, an "executive club for gentlemen" on Manhattan's Upper East Side, boasts "the most beautiful female performers ever seen in New York City." There's also a video arcade, billiard room, basketball court, dozens of TV sets and a full menu.

Goldfingers has already attracted its share of celebrities, among them actors Robert De Niro and Joe Pesci, supermodel Christy Turlington, rocker John Mellencamp, Slash of the rock group Guns N' Roses and boxer Mike Tyson.

But most customers are a mix of young professionals and college kids who watch topless women dance on tabletops.

■ Worst art contest set

Artists from all over the U.S. and Canada have made inquires about the First "Win With the Worst Art Competition," thought to be the first of its kind, according to Morgann Tayllor Jack, founder of the sponsoring Art Enterprizes.

"We don't want the best art work, we want the worst," said Jack, who holds an associate in arts degree in fine arts from Allan Hancock College. "Winners with the worst entries will receive cash awards totaling $1500, plus written critiques from a jury of professional artists."

Jack sees the competition as "a chance for artists to salvage failed work, get paid for it and help beat the recession. Plus it's a chance to lighten up and escape from the usual art competition pressures."

Artists 18 years and over are invited to enter slides of their worst completed art work. Any style or medium except photography or sculpture is acceptable. "Doodlers are not invited," said Jack.

Deadline for submitting slides is April 3. Entry fee is $8 per slide, $20 for three slides. For a prospectus with complete details and entry blank, send a #10 self-addressed stamped envelope to Art EnterPrizes, P.O. Box 598-C, Lompoc, Calif. 93438.

Lansbury agrees to 9th season

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Actress Angela Lansbury has decided to stick with her hit CBS series "Murder, She Wrote," returning for a ninth season, the network announced Wednesday.

Lansbury

Besides her starring role, Miss Lansbury also will assume the duties of executive producer when filming begins for the 1992-93 season.

The Tony Award-winning actress, who recently won a Golden Globe for her TV role as amateur detective and mystery novelist, had been considering leaving the 8 p.m. Sunday night show.

CBS executives said earlier this month they were preparing a pilot for Miss Lansbury based on the feature film "Driving Miss Daisy." The new series would have replaced "Murder, She Wrote" had the actress decided to quit.

"Murder, She Wrote," which debuted in 1984, follows "60 Minutes" on CBS' hit Sunday night schedule, and is the No. 1 show in its time period.

'Up With People' to make appearance

Staff Report

West Texans are known for their hospitality. And, Pete Taylor of Billings, Mont., is in town asking Midlanders to house and feed strangers for two nights this month.

But, is feeding, transporting and housing strangers just too much to expect out of any West Texan's hospitality, even the especially warm kind credited to West Texas?

Nah.

Taylor

Not when the strangers are more than 100 students from 18 countries visiting here Feb. 23-25.

"All we're asking for is just a chance to call another place home," said Taylor. "When I traveled down in Mexico, I stayed with families that didn't speak English. It was a challenge for me and for them to try to communicate.

"I remember talking with one host Mom for about an hour with a dictionary. She spoke very little English, and I spoke very little Spanish. And we were talking about things that mattered, about politics.

"There was an election year in Mexico at that time and I wanted to find out what some of the people thought but not just by reading the newspapers. I wanted the opportunity to talk with people that it matters to, that it directly affects and get their opinions.

"Host families really are what make Up With People happen. Host families learn a little bit more about the countries and cultures that we represent."

Founded in 1965, Up With People was incorporated in 1968 as an international, nonprofit, educational organization.

During the past 25 years, 12,000 young people between the ages of 17 and 25, representing 63 countries, have participated. These students have traveled throughout 49 countries and have performed in many locations in both small villages and large metropolitan areas, from famous concert halls and school auditoriums to prisons and nursing homes.

Up With People is coming to Midland for one performance at 7:30 p.m. Feb. 24 at Midland Center. Tickets for the performance are $9 adults and $7 for seniors and students. They may be purchased through The Hispanic Chamber of Commerce, The Midland Chamber of Commerce, Endless Horizons and Al's No. 1 Grocery. For more information or to apply to be a host family, call the Hispanic Chamber, 570-9824.

Most of the cast members are from European countries including Germany, Sweden, Norway and Denmark, as well as Canada, Mexico and Australia. They will be arriving Feb. 23, and will be picked up in a central location by their respective host families.

"It's sort of like Christmas," Taylor said, describing the initial matching of host families and students. "You know you will be picking up something, you know will be getting something, you just don't know what.

"We try and make it fun — getting everyone together."

The student will spend two nights with the host family and eat breakfast with the family both mornings.

Pickup the second night will be late because Up With People carries around 22 tons of equipment, which the cast will help disassemble following the show, Taylor said. Students will be dropped off the second morning around 8 a.m. at which time they will be leaving Midland.

Taylor, who performed with Up With People in 1988, has spent three years working as a member of the advance team. It is his responsibility to secure housing for the cast.

"For the most part, it's not really that hard," he said. "It's always challenging. I've had some cities where I've gone in and in about a week and a half I have 120 beds. Other places, it's down to the last minute. But, we always find enough beds."

Opening lead: ?

Suppose someone showed you the North-South hands only and asked you for the best line in six hearts. What would you reply? Move to the top of the class if you answered the question with a question: What's the opening lead?

The auction is simple enough. Once North can jump to game, showing a hand that revalues to a full opening bid in support of hearts, South makes a move toward slam by cue-bidding the cheapest first-round control. When North can cue-bid in return, slam must be a good proposition.

Let's suppose that the opening lead is a club, won in dummy. The best line is to take two finesses—a simple finesse in trumps and a ruffing finesse in spades. Win the ace of clubs and run the queen of hearts. When that loses, you win any return, draw the last trump, cash the ace of spades, cross to dummy with a club ruff and run the queen of spades, discarding a diamond from hand if East does not cover. As long as East has the king of spades, you will be able to get two diamond discards from hand on the spades.

Now, let's suppose the opening lead is a diamond. You can no longer afford the luxury of two finesses—if the first finesse loses, the defenders will cash a diamond to beat you. However, there is an alternative line that's almost as good.

Win the ace of diamonds and cash the ace of hearts in an attempt to drop the king. If his majesty does not come tumbling down, cash the ace of spades, cross to the ace of clubs and run the queen of spades. If East has the king of spades and the suit breaks no worse than 5-3, you are still home.

Statler Brothers brings variety show back to TV

By Joe Edwards
Associated Press writer

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — After 26 years and 2,100 concerts, the Statler Brothers are still having fun entertaining people and have a new cable-TV program with no sex, no violence and no profanity.

It's just what you'd expect from four family men who don't drink, don't smoke, don't use drugs and regularly go to church. They've been in the public spotlight for more than a quarter-century with hardly a trace of controversy, much less scandal.

The program is "The Statler Bros. Show," which airs Saturday nights on The Nashville Network.

The show marks a return of a one-time TV staple: variety. There's a healthy dose of music with a remaining mix of standup comedy, jugglers, magicians, ventriloquists and the like.

The award-winning group, discovered by Johnny Cash in the mid-1960s, are proud to be offering variety again on television.

"It's something we love," said Harold Reid, one of the Statler Brothers, none of whom are named Statler. "It entertained us growing up. Then it almost skipped a generation to the extent it's brand-new again. It's nostalgic for the older folks, but new for the younger ones.

"Some of the young people think we invented it. We're just letting them think that," he quipped.

It's the first country music-oriented variety show since Dolly Parton's "Dolly" aired for one season in 1988 on ABC.

Don Reid, Harold's brother, said their new program could be a milestone for the group's long career.

"It gives us an opportunity to express ourselves," he said in a telephone interview from Staunton, Va., where the quartet lives.

"We thought a long time before we tackled it. We've been given such freedom. It's been fun to do."

The show, written by the Reids, is a reflection of their values: bedrock morals, lots of nostalgia and a Middle American appeal.

Each program ends with a gospel song. There also is a quiz segment in which songs from a selected year are performed and the audience is invited to guess the year.

"It's our favorite part of the show," Harold Reid said.

Few acts in any form of music have had a longer, more successful career than the Statler Brothers.

Named after a brand of tissue, they have won three Grammy Awards. One of them was for "Flowers on the Wall" in 1965 when the another finalist was the Beatles. They've won a record 10 Country Music Association awards as the No. 1 group.

They have performed in every state except Alaska. Their 43rd album, "All American Country," was recently released.

They often sing about love, simpler times and growing up in a small town. Novelist Kurt Vonnegut has called them "America's poets."

Their hit records include "Maple Street Memories," "Elizabeth," "I'll Go to My Grave Loving You," "Too Much on My Heart," "Atlanta Blue," "My Only Love," "Bed of Roses," "More Than a Name on the Wall," "Do You Know You Are My Sunshine."

They're neither flashy nor slick.

"Johnny Cash once told us not to sing too pretty, to keep an edge in your voice," Don Reid has said.

In an industry of ego and personal ambition, they've had just one personnel change in 26 years. Lew DeWitt left in 1982 because of illness and was replaced by Jimmy Fortune. Phil Balsley rounds out the quartet. The four are so close that they are even planning to take their vacation together.

"We've been fortunate," Don Reid said.

The quartet also has raised thousands of dollars for charitable and civic causes. Some 90,000 people attended their annual July 4 fund-raising concert in Staunton despite the threat of rain.

"We have hard-core, loyal fans," Don Reid said. "They understand us and we understand them."

This year has been one of their most profitable despite a troubled economy.

"I've read about the recession, but we had one of the biggest fair seasons ever," Don Reid said. "There has been record attendance at places. There's probably no other type of business doing that.

"We are giving the people what they want."

Addams' fan hopes to establish museum to display memorabilia

'He (Charles Addams) would have been impressed that his town did remember him.'
— Ron MacCloskey

WESTFIELD, N.J. (AP) — The creator of the Addams Family once drew a cartoon of Westfield with the caption, "It's the town that time forgot."

The hit movie, "The Addams Family," has reminded the town of the late cartoonist's roots and convinced residents they need to catch up with the times — at least when it comes to Charles Addams.

Ron MacCloskey, the town's unofficial Addams historian, eagerly whips the media on a tour of Addams' old haunts: the houses he lived in, the ones he suspects the Addams Family mansion was modeled after, the cemetery where Addams hung out, and parts of town featured in Addams' cartoons.

For a privileged few he has a special treat: a life-sized skeleton drawn decades ago in an old carriage house. MacCloskey said the chalk and pencil sketch is proof that Addams wanted his hometown to remember him.

"He left a calling card behind," the 36-year-old MacCloskey said proudly.

But Westfield didn't answer it until three years after The New Yorker magazine cartoonist died. It took the film, "The Addams Family," to bring out the kookiness in this town of stately homes.

The Westfield Memorial Library recently displayed MacCloskey's model of the creepy Addams Family mansion that dates to the 1960s, when the Addams Family television show first aired.

Beside it were a few of Addams' 13 books, other quirky knick-knacks and MacCloskey's Thing bank, which looks like the show's five-fingered character.

He pushed the Westfield Historical Society into the bureaucratic process of declaring the house where Addams grew up a historical landmark and has the group searching for a house to display Addams' memorabilia.

MacCloskey also is soliciting to set up a scholarship named after Addams for a high school student planning a career in art. And Mayor Richard Bagger proclaimed the week of Halloween Charles Addams Week.

MacCloskey, who boasts that he grew up on the same street Addams first lived on, said such attention has people detouring through town for a glimpse of Addams' past.

But the mayor laughed at the notion that Addams' old haunts might make Westfield a tourist stop: "I don't think it's the kind of thing that will really draw."

Still, he's glad the original intention of focusing on local history has worked out. "It's nice, in this example, that history is not dry and dull but interesting," he said.

Addams, born in 1912, left Westfield for New York as an adult but returned often to visit.

MacCloskey, who lives in Edison now, is delighted his former neighbors finally are paying homage to Addams. For decades, MacCloskey rummaged through bookstores for Addams' old books and collected what little memorabilia he stumbled upon.

While his other passion, Frankenstein memorabilia, has filled six boxes in his attic, MacCloskey was lucky to get more than a dozen Addams' collectors items. The stuff couldn't be found.

The movie, he said, has changed that.

Since its release, monster magazines have been advertising Addams Family T-shirts, Thing key chains and Uncle Fester's light bulbs.

He's filled an entire scrapbook with articles on the film, advertisements for Addams memorabilia and Addams Family trading cards.

For somebody who has spent his life idolizing Addams, seeing the spotlight on the cartoonist is heaven.

MacCloskey recalled an interview in which Addams joked that Westfield had built a shrine for him.

"I kind of took his words seriously," MacCloskey said. "He would have been impressed that his town did remember him."

AIM FOR THE HEART WITH

Confections of Affection

Sweets for the sweet may be a trite cliche, but during this time of year when lovers are aiming straight for the heart, it is right on target. Valentine's Day is just around the corner, and men and women alike are looking for that special treat that will convey their feelings of affection to their significant other.

Although the traditional heart-shaped, decorated box filled with chocolates is usually a good standby for your better half on this day of love, let's get to the heart of the matter — everyone wants their loved one to feel special on Valentine's Day, and sometimes that means going the extra mile to find a confection that is just a little out of the ordinary to express your affection.

Since chocolate is a standard for Valentine's Day giving, why not learn to make chocolate candies yourself. Besides, a gift made with your own hands always is a little more special.

Classes in candy making and cake decorating are available through Midland College and are taught by Cindy Wilson. "For those who can't make the class times, I teach some people at my shop," Ms. Wilson said.

Her shop is The Sugar Shack, 2000 N. Big Spring, where she has an array of character-shaped cake pans for rent, candy molds in almost any shape imaginable, all the paraphernalia to accomplish the task of decorating a cake or making a piece of candy, and the knowledge to teach others how to accomplish the task too.

"We make almost all of our own candy right here," Ms. Wilson said.

She starts with Nestle's chocolate — "So we know what it tastes like" — in colors ranging from traditional chocolate brown and white to red and green.

Once the chocolate is melted, it must be poured into the mold, then put in the freezer to cool. For candies that have more than one color of chocolate or are three dimensional, the process becomes a little more difficult.

"One of our most popular items this time of year is the long-stemmed, red chocolate rose. Because it is 3-D and has two colors, it must be layered," Ms. Wilson said.

First, the green chocolate must be painted in the area of the leaves and sepals. "Some people use a paint brush, but I just use a toothpick," she said. The mold is then put in the freezer for a few minutes so the chocolate will harden. Then the red chocolate can be poured for the back side of the rose, and that portion of the mold is put in the freezer for the chocolate to harden. Next, the front side of the red chocolate for the petals of the rose can be poured, the stem added and the back portion of the mold is put into place atop the front of the rose so as the newly poured chocolate hardens, the back will be melted into the front and there will not be a seam.

"It takes about 20 minutes to make a rose," she said, "but they do make a beautiful dozen when they're finished, and it's like giving flowers and candy at the same time."

In fact, a local florist had received so many requests from customers for candy to be delivered with the flowers they were ordering, that Ms. Wilson has teamed with Buddy's Flowers so that people can order their candy and flowers at the same time.

Ladies' association hosts style show

By Marilyn McKnight Harrison

A spring fashion forecast was issued by Julian Gold at the Midland Country Club Ladies Association's recent style show luncheon.

McKnight-Harrison

The fashions modeled were beautiful in color and style. The show began with casual wear in bright yellows, navy and white in nautical designs, among others, and ended on a pretty note, with evening wear of pastel pinks in varying lengths.

Among the designers represented were Albert Nipon, Christian Dior, Scassi and Stanley Platos.

Vicki Bailey, manager of Julian Gold, told us that there is an awareness on the part of the designers as to what women really want to wear. "There is a trend to steer away from arbitrarily making that decision for them," she said.

"Lengths are down a little bit," Vicki continued, "and the portrait neckline is good this year."

Prior to the luncheon, members enjoyed a social time, with a choice of Oriental Consumme, white wine or orange juice. Hostesses were Anne (Mrs. Jack) Herbig, Diana (Mrs. Edward) Weyman and Raye Ann (Mrs. Boley) Embrey. The lunch featured Italian Crepes, Italian Salad and Spumoni Ice Cream.

New members introduced were Mimi (Mrs. Tom) McKnight, Beverly (Mrs. George) Horst and Cheryl (Mrs. Paul) Luckett.

Silver and gold balloons added a festive touch to the event.

Among the 178 women enjoying the afternoon at the club were Penny (Mrs. Jerry) Hudgeons, Sue (Mrs. Dan) Secker, Sue Anne (Mrs. Richard) Campbell, Carole (Mrs. Harry) Hinkle, Nancy Hull, Dorothy (Mrs. Hugh) Frenzel and Judy (Mrs. Matt) Murphy.

ONE OF THE BEST WAYS we know to spend a Sunday afternoon is listening to live jazz. Recently, we had the opportunity to do just that at a jam session, sponsored by the West Texas Jazz Society. The biggest turnout to date of local talent was on hand to jam in the festive ambience of Bayou Wadley Restaurant.

Among the 20-plus area musicians who performed were Jim Ross, Carvel Mills, Bobby Crues, Janet Pollard, Nina Green and Janice Archer, all of Midland and from Odessa, Robert LaCroix, who was in charge of lining up the sets; Dean Baker and Abner Burnett.

An appreciative audience filled the restaurant for the event. Spotted in the crowd were Camille and Bill Leifeste, Ruth Cole, Linda George, Dixie Dewees, Max Howard, Joyce and Cliff Sherrod, Rita and Tom Canton, Carole Steele and Bob Boyd. It was especially good to see Georgia Crues on one of her first outings since her hospitalization.

Next up on the Jazz Society's calendar is the Soprano Summit Reunion Feb. 10 at Odessa Country Club.

NAOMI NORTON recently returned from Austin, where she attended her first meeting of the Texas Silver-Haired Legislature Foundaton Board. She was one of 12 persons elected from throughout the state to serve on the board for a four-year term.

Mrs. Norton was a member of the Texas Silver-Haired Legislature from 1988-1990, representing an eight-county area west of Odessa and serving on its Operations Committee. She currently is president of Midland Chapter #256 of the American Association of Retired Persons.

Her husband, the late Dr. David Norton, was the first member of the Texas Silver-Haired Legislature from Midland.

MEMBERS OF THE Santa Rita Club, volunteer organization of the Petroleum Museum, met recently at Green Tree Country Club for the group's Winter Dinner.

Among those enjoying the annual event were Miriam Hanks, president of the club, and her husband, Gene; Bob Leibrock, the new president of the Petroleum Museum's executive board, adn his wife, Pam; Bob Estes, a new member of the executive board, and his wife, Gretchen; Harry Hugly, president-elect of the Santa Rita Club, and his wife, Elsie, and Ed Rowland, executive vice president and director of the Petroleum Museum.

Helen Lydecker, a longtime driving force behind the museum's puppet show program, was receiving accolades from the others for her efforts. Under her direction, the puppeteers take their show into the school system to tell the history of Permian Basin geology and the oil industry here.

Others in the crowd included Tommie and Forrest Underwood, Eleanor and Ken Terrell, Doris and George Welsh, Carol and Jim Brown, Pat and Jerry McCutcheon, Charlotte Starr, and Margaret and John Rhea.

SWEETS: Chocolate has a new twist

in with the flowers in the arrangement," Ms. Wilson said.

As long as you are combining flowers and confections, why not also combine your greeting cards and confections.

"We even have greeting cards made from candy," she said.

And while jewelry is always a nice gift and would be very appreciated on Valentine's Day, a jewelry box made of chocolate filled with chocolate might fit into the budget just a little easier.

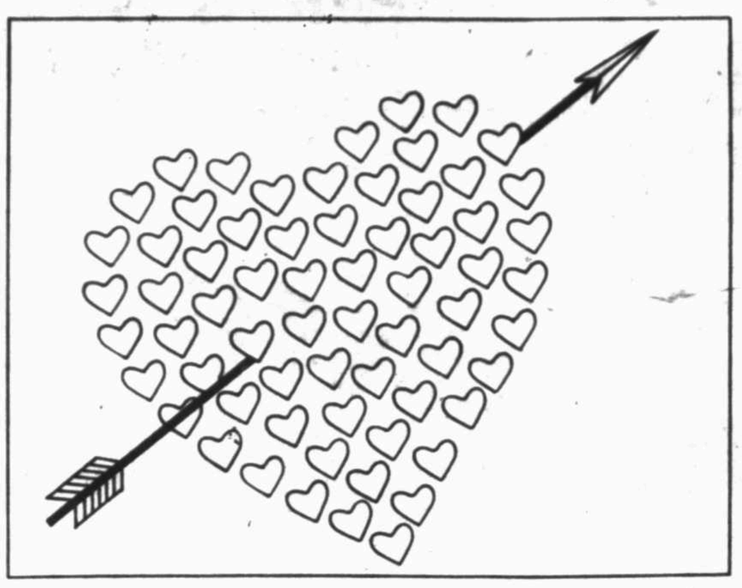

Other popular treats for Valentine's Day include chocolate "Lips" suckers, large "kisses" (plain, or filled with peanut butter or almonds), fudge, love hearts, cameos, peanut butter cups, chocolate letters spelling "Love," and "a tooth for your sweet tooth."

"People buy just about anything this time of year," Ms. Wilson said.

Cookies are another perfect sweet, and heart-shaped, frosted sugar cookies have always been popular, according to Ms. Wilson. "I usually make around 200 dozen for Valentine's."

The Sugar Shack also carries mylar and latex balloons, baskets, tins, mugs, novelty stuffed animals and various other items to dress up a Valentine's Day gift after you finish making your confections.

IF YOUR LOVED one is a true chocoholic, but you would like to offer them a new twist on standard chocolate treats, take a look into white chocolate. At Duo Delights, in Mission Square, white chocolate peppermint bark is manufactured fresh from a recipe that is the creation of the company's owner, Lee Birdwell-Black.

"I always deal with a white chocolate base, at least for now," Ms. Birdwell-Black said. While the white chocolate peppermint bark can be purchased in 16 ounce bags, "The guys really like the white chocolate peppermint covered preztels."

Although Ms. Birdwell-Black's white chocolate is manufactured in Midland, it is well-known across the 50 states and in four countries. It has been a feature in the Neiman-Marcus and Spiegel catalogs, and was available at Marshall Fields, in addition to several private labels she has done for companies. The "Good Morning America" show even bought a large quantity of her white chocolate at Christmas.

Ms. Birdwell-Black's Duo Delights Confection Store also carries many other specialty confections — such as fudge in the shape of Texas and pie mixes "that taste homemade" — from other manufactures in Texas and throughout the United States.

"We buy products from several other manufacturers. I know each one of the manufactures and I taste each product before it goes in the store. The products must be truly exceptional. I try to do a lot of Texas products. If I can't buy Texas, then I like to buy American," Ms. Birdwell-Black said. "I lean toward having a homemade taste without the time and effort that homemade things take to make. People today, with both partners working, just don't have the time for something that isn't convenient."

FOR YOUR valentine, Duo Delights takes orders for specialty baskets or valentine tins filled with confections — or a combination of any of the store's other gourmet items, which includes special coffees, salad dressings, bread mixes, pasta dressings and fondue sauces.

"A customer can come in and pick out a sweetheart basket or a Valentine tin and the items they would like included and we will put it all together for them," she said. "We get new things in each season. We are making a new white chocolate flavor called lemon cooler," which she said tastes similar to a lemon meringue pie.

Her products also are available at The Mole Hole, Expressions and The Shop.

So if you looking for a confection to express your affection, aim straight for the heart, or stomach as the case may be. Just think, if you find something really special for your loved one, they might even share with you.

Youngsters enjoy making hearts-to-hearts

By Joan Cirillo

NEW YORK (AP) — This Valentine's Day, share in your youngsters' delight in making valentines for classmates, teachers, special friends and relatives.

Mix your imagination with ordinary supplies for one-of-a-kind creations, ranging from valentine greeting cards to decorative heart wreaths and valentine accessories, like T-shirts and heart ornaments.

The crafts projects that follow can be as simple or as elaborate as you choose, depending on your own embellishments and the age of your child. Supervision is a must, since projects require scissors, glue and decorations.

VALENTINE CARDS

Cards can be as basic as a heart-shaped greeting cut out of construction paper or as decorative as a card fashioned of lace doilies and satin ribbons. Place a photo at the center of the card, especially if you're sending it to grandparents and special friends who live far away.

Supplies: scissors, colored construction, white lace, gold and-or silver doilies, white, colored or glitter glue, decorations such as glitter, sequins, thin satin ribbons, stickers, markers or pens.

A HEART IN THE HAND CARD

Trace and then cut out the shape of your child's hand on construction paper, leaving room at the wrist for a cuff. Fold a second piece or paper in two, then trace a heart shape on it, with either the top or one side of the heart at the fold. (In much the same manner as making a chain of paper dolls.) Cut, leaving the side or top attached to make a fold-open card. Center the heart on the hand and glue. Now you can decorate the hand, using glitter glue, markers or lace at the cuff. Decorate the heart with your message or attach a small photo to the heart.

VICTORIAN VALENTINES

Cut a large heart out of construction paper, a smaller heart out of a lace doily and an even smaller heart out of construction paper. Glue the lace doily to the largest heart and then glue the smaller heart inside the lace doily. If you want the card to open for a message, double the construction paper for the largest or smallest heart, keeping the fold on the side or the top of the heart to enable it to open. Or make two large hearts and attach by punching holes and tying the hearts together with ribbon.

Decorate with thin satin ribbons, which can be weaved through the eyelets in the lace or tied into small bows or knots with ends. Or use glitter or glitter glue to highlight the lace. You can place a small photo or a Victorian-style sticker at the center of the heart.

HEART WREATHS

Made of dried flowers, twisted grapevines, straw or fabrics, laces and ribbons, a wreath is a lasting way of saying: "I Love You."

DRIED FLOWER WREATHS

Supplies: dried flowers, heart-shaped wreath, ready-made or shaped from wire or pipe cleaners, thin wire to attach flowers to wreath, clippers to cut wire, satin ribbons.

If you are shaping your own wreath, cut one piece of wire and shape it into a heart, binding the heart at the center top with thin wire. Or shape a heart from pipe cleaners, twisting the ends together to achieve the desired length. You can purchase long pipe cleaners and wire from a floral supply store.

Arrange dried flowers around the wreath and wire to attach. If you're drying your own flowers, try a combination of small roses, baby's breath and purple or white statice, all of which will dry within 1 to 2 weeks if made into small bunches and hung upside down in a dry, airy place, out of sunlight. For a full wreath, wire dried eucalyptus first to the wreath and then layer on your flowers. Attach ribbon to the center of the heart for hanging.

MINIATURE GRAPE VINE AND STRAW WREATHS

Look in craft and novelty stores for miniature wreaths shaped into hearts or the grapevines or straw to twist into wreaths. Decorate by circling with ribbons or gluing dried roses to the center of the heart. A miniature hot glue gun, available at arts and crafts departments, works well for attaching flowers. Do not let children use the glue gun as the hot glue can result in burns. If glue touches the skin, peel off immediately, otherwise if hardens on your skin. Seek advice on the best way to operate the gun.

FABRIC WREATH

Supplies: scraps or pieces of colorful, patterned fabric, color-coordinated, heavy-duty thread and ribbons

Tightly twist fabric together, binding with heavy-duty thread. Shape into a heart, attached at the top center with thread. Decorate with ribbons. These can be small or as large as you wish.

RIBBONS AND LACE WREATH

Supplies: heavy cardboard, like that packaged with shirts from the dry cleaners, or styrofoam, pieces of lace, glue, ribbons, scissors

Trace two hearts, one inside the other, onto the cardboard. A 3-to 4-inch heart works well. Cut out around the outside of the larger heart. Cut out the smaller heart. You should end up with a heart with a heart-shaped hole in the center. Bunch and fluff the lace; glue to both sides of the heart. Arrange ribbons to complement the lace. Attach ribbon at the top center of the heart to allow for hanging.

VALENTINE PICTURE FRAMES

Supplies: at least four popsickle sticks (available at craft centers), white or carpenter's glue, decorations such as glitter, sequins, small shells and beads, colorful markers, one strip of ribbon or magnetic tape, heavy cardboard for backing

Make a small picture frame by arranging and then gluing four popsickle sticks into a square. Increase the size of the frame by layering and gluing more sticks on the outside of this frame. Allow to set. Glue on desired decorations or draw hearts and flowers or the person's name on the edge of the frame with colorful markers. You can make the frame into a magnet by gluing a magnetic strip to the back. Or you can glue a strip of ribbon to either side of the frame at the top to allow for hanging.

CLAY HEARTS

Supplies: air or oven-drying clay (available at craft and toy stores), tempera or acrylic paints, shellac and brush (optional), glue, key chains, pins and barrettes

Shape clay into hearts. Dry and paint according to manufacturer's directions. For durability and sheen, brush shellac on the dried, painted hearts.

Miniature hearts can be painted and then glued side by side on a pin or barrette. A lone heart or a cluster of hearts can be attached to a key chain. To string hearts on yarn, nylon or elasticized thread for a necklace, make a hole in the top of the heart before drying the clay. An oversized heart can be used for a paperweight or table decoration.

VALENTINE T-SHIRTS

Supplies: inexpensive T-shirts, boy's or men's undershirts, sponges, scissors, fabric paints

Cut a dry sponge into heart shapes of varying sizes. Lay the T-shirt on a flat surface. Decorate by dipping the sponge in fabric paint and then pressing it onto the shirt. Allow to dry. You can also decorate the T-shirt by writing a message such as Love, Be Mine or I Love You with a paint pen or a small squeeze bottle of fabric paint.

HEART PENCILS AND PENS

Supplies: pencils or pens, tagboard used for posters or heavy-duty construction paper, lace, stapler, decorations such as markers, glitter glue, stickers.

Trace two hearts of the same size. Decorate with lace or drawings, stickers or glitter glue. Place the top of the pencil or pen in between the two hearts; attach by stapling the heart together.

HEART SATCHETS

Supplies: lace or other fabric cut into the shape of a heart, needle and threat, potpourri or cotton balls dabbed with scented oils

Match two hearts, wrong side out, and hand or machine sew, leaving an opening to allow stuffing. Return fabric to right side by drawing through the opening. Stuff with potpourri or cotton balls. Finish by hand stitching opening.

Heart-shaped dessert-for-two perfect for Valentine's Day

Associated Press

This no-bake Chocolate Coeur a la Creme with Strawberry Sauce is a rich and decadent dessert-for-two for Valentine's Day. A creamy chocolate mixture is spooned into two heart-shaped coeur a la creme molds and refrigerated overnight. Before serving, each mold is inverted onto a chilled dessert plate and topped with a sauce made from frozen strawberries.

CHOCOLATE COEUR a la CREME WITH STRAWBERRY SAUCE

3 tablespoons cocoa
1 tablespoon butter, softened
1 3-ounce package cream cheese, softened
½ cup powdered sugar
½ teaspoon vanilla extract
Strawberry Sauce (recipe follows)

Line two ½-cup coeur a la creme molds or two 6-ounce custard cups with a double thickness of dampened cheesecloth that extends far enough beyond the edges to enclose the filling completely.

In a small saucepan, combine ¼ cup of the whipping cream, the 3 tablespoons cocoa and the 1 tablespoon butter. Cook over low heat, stirring constantly, until smooth. Remove from heat; cool.

In a small mixer bowl, beat cream cheese, powdered sugar and vanilla until smooth. Add cocoa mixture, blending well. Add remaining ¼ cup whipping cream; beat until well blended. Spoon mixture into prepared molds. Fold cheesecloth over top. Place molds on a wire rack set in a deep plate. Refrigerate 8 hours or overnight. To serve, pull back cheesecloth and invert each mold onto a chilled dessert plate, then carefully remove cheesecloth. Serve with Strawberry Sauce. Makes 2 servings.

STRAWBERRY SAUCE

In a food processor bowl or blender container, puree one 10-ounce package of frozen strawberries in light syrup, thawed. Strain puree through a fine sieve into a small bowl; discard seeds. Stir in 1 tablespoon cherry brandy, if desired. Makes about 1 cup.

This recipe is from Hershey's Cocoa.

Name-calling trick can run in family

By Erma Bombeck

I called one of my kids Margaret Tutwiler the other day and was reminded how much like my Grandmother England I am.

Bombeck

Grandma didn't know Margaret Tutwiler, but she had a habit of calling us by someone else's name whenever that person's shortcomings fit our actions.

When I talked particularly loud, she'd say, "I hear you, Sara Emma." (Sara Emma was a cousin who had such a big mouth she gave you chest pains when she talked.)

My son said, "What! Why are you calling me Margaret Tutwiler?"

"You know," I said.

That was another one of Grandma's tricks. You had to guess why she was calling you "Little Wesley," assuming that you even knew who "Big Wesley" was.

My grandmother never cursed. Didn't believe in it. We figured this was her stab at profanity. Instead of saying, "You are a barefaced liar and I don't believe a word of what you're saying," she preferred to rename you. "Right, Mildred, tell me some more." (If Aunt Mildred told you Wednesday followed Tuesday, be suspicious.)

I was 12 years old before I realized my Aunt Martha's name wasn't Joan Crawford. (She wore a lot of red lipstick too.)

I sorta slipped into Grandma's habit without realizing it.

One day my husband had some juicy bit of gossip to pass on when I nodded toward our daughter and warned, "Not in front of Rona Barrett. Tell me later."

It wasn't long before the children got used to assuming the persona of anyone with a character flaw.

At an ice cream parlor one afternoon, my son asked what flavors they had. As the counter clerk took a deep breath and rattled off all 87 flavors, I knew what my son was going to order.

"Barry Goldwater here will have vanilla," I said.

The clerk looked puzzled.

"I'm conservative," said my son tiredly.

Considering the alternatives people could employ, proper-name calling doesn't seem so bad. It's nothing to get crazy about.

The other night I was telling a story about getting my car washed when my daughter said, "Grandma England lives."

I said, "What? What part?"

She smiled and said, "You know."

Dear Abby

Presidential trivia 'fascinating'

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: I read in your column in the St. Petersburg Times that you are fascinated with the subject of the American presidents, so maybe you can answer a few questions.

Van Buren

I read somewhere that there was a president who was in office for approximately 24 hours. He had never been a vice president. I believe the acting vice president was out on a yacht (or somewhere) and couldn't be reached. Anyway, this happened on a weekend.

I would like to know the man's name — also, when and how it occurred. Also, who was the president he replaced, and why?

In all the listings of the U.S. presidents, I have never seen anything about this "24-hour" president. I am not even sure he would be listed as a bona fide president.

I have tried to get the answer to my question many times, but could not. I even asked at the Hall of Presidents in Disney World in Orlando, Fla., but nobody there knew anything about it.

I have enjoyed reading your column for many years and hope you can come up with an answer. — RALPH C. GEISLER, ST. PETERSBURG, FLA.

DEAR MR. GEISLER: Aha! I found the answer to your question in "The Complete Unabridged Super Trivia Encyclopedia" (no kidding). The author is Fred L. Worth, and the book is published in paperback by Warner Books.

The "24-hour" president was David Rice Atchison. And this is how it occurred:

When James K. Polk, our 11th president, ended his term in office on Sunday, noon, March 4, 1849, he announced that he was "worn out," which was the reason he had had no desire to run for a second term. (As it turned out, he was very wise; he died three months later.)

Polk's vice president, George M. Dallas, had resigned as president of the Senate on March 2, 1849, so on March 4, David Rice Atchison, the president of the Senate pro tempore, became the president of the United States for 24 hours, until March 5, when Zachary Taylor was sworn in as our 12th president.

James K. Polk was one of six presidents who fathered no children. The others were George Washington, James Madison, Andrew Jackson, James Buchanan, Warren Harding.

Buchanan never married. He was engaged to marry Anne Coleman, the daughter of a well-to-do, socially prominent Lancaster, Pa., family, but because of Buchanan's reputation as a carefree man-about-town, Anne's parents disapproved of the match. Anne reportedly died of a broken heart, though it was rumored that she had committed suicide. Buchanan was crushed and vowed that he would never marry.

Warren G. Harding was the sixth president to die in office, but he did a lot of living before he died. An extraordinarily handsome man, he married a beautiful, wealthy divorcee who was six years his senior. Her name was Florence, but he nicknamed her "Duchess."

See how much fun you can have when you start nosing around in the lives of the American presidents? Thanks for asking, Ralph.

Candy makes heart to heart conversation

NEW YORK (AP) — If it's hearts you want on Valentine's Day, there are those traditional "conversation hearts," miniature heart-shaped candies that carry such messages of love as Be Mine, Kiss Me and Love You.

The custom dates back to the days of the American colonists, who made homemade confectionery with messages of love scratched on the surface. By the mid-1900s, candy-makers were preparing deliciously flavored sugar lozenges, pressed into hearts, and imprinted with words of love.

The National Confectioners Association estimates that more than 10 million pounds of these conversation hearts — totaling 3.2 billion minihearts — will be produced this year.

Figuring about 400 hearts per pound, the association says, these 3.2 billion sentimental sweets, laid heart to heart, would stretch 24,621 miles, going from Valentines, Va., to New York City 39 times.

Proper pruning of trees important

By Deborah A. Benge

Benge

In the past month or so we've looked at some of the reasons for pruning: training, safety, size control, flower production and fruit production. There are some pruning basics that can be said about all plants.

There are more misconceptions and butchery associated with the pruning of ornamental trees than almost any other plant. Drive around almost any city you would like and chances are you will see several examples of poor pruning. Poor pruning practices have been going on for years which just perpetuates the improper practices. Not only that, but some of the pruning practices that we once used and taught have been shown through research to no longer be correct.

At the risk of sounding negative, let's take a look at some important don'ts of pruning shade trees: (1) don't dehorn; (2) don't remove the bark ridge collar; and (3) don't use pruning sealers.

Dehorning — don't do it. It is better for a tree to never have a saw blade touch it than for it to be dehorned. The dehorning of trees is a grossly incorrect form of pruning that we often see. This is an extremely harmful practice, not to mention ugly.

Dehorning causes three major problems:

- Dehorning large limbs opens up large wounds in which decay organisms and insects enter. Nothing can stop the entry of harmful organisms into this cut no matter how clean your equipment is or what you treat the wood with.
- The removal of these large limbs means the removal of stored foods which can weaken a tree. Foods produced by the tree through the process of photosynthesis are stored in the limbs and are used for growth and survival during the next growing season.
- Dehorning will also cause many rapidly growing sprouts to spring up just below the cut. These sprouts are weakly attached and break easily in the wind.

Dehorning will drastically weaken the tree, ruin the natural shape of the tree, cause dense shade to develop that will shade out grass and did I mention — it's ugly!

We were once taught when removing a branch to go back to the main trunk or to a limb and make a "flush" cut. This is still partially correct but instead of making a "flush" cut, we should make a cut that is slightly raised preserving the bark ridge collar located at the base of the branch. The bark ridge collar contains plant hormones that isolate the pruning wound and prevent the spread of decay into and throughout the tree.

So instead of making a flush cut, make your cut just outside of the bark ridge collar which will result in a cut that does leave a slight stub. For a guide sheet illustrating proper pruning cuts, come by or send a stamped self-addressed envelop to the Midland County Extension office, P.O. Box 1070, Midland 79702.

Another misconception concerning pruning is the use of pruning paints or sealers. Recent research has shown that pruning sealers of any kind are not necessary and may even hinder the healing process of the cut.

Now there is an exception to every rule — I hate that, it complicates things. Don't be concerned with this exception unless you have a live oak or red oak. There is a destructive fungus disease — oak wilt fungus — that affects certain oaks and one way the disease is spread is by a sap-feeding beetle that is attracted to fresh pruning cuts. There have been a few confirmed cases of oak wilt fungus in Midland, and there is a slim chance the insect that helps spread the disease could have been carried into the area in oak firewood. Since the beetles are more active during the warmer months of the year, pruning your oaks during January and February could reduce the chances of an oak getting oak wilt fungus. A pruning sealer is recommended by plant pathologists to create a temporary barrier to the beetles.

Most trees can be pruned during the dormant season, late winter/early spring. Just before rapid growth is a good time to prune. Also, during the growing season after the tree has stopped putting on new growth and leaves have attained their mature size is an OK time to prune. Again there are a few exceptions to every rule. Mulberries and elms tend to bleed and get a bacterial disease called slime flux and they are best pruned during the dormant months of January and February.

To make pruning easy, have a clear idea of why you are pruning and remember: don't dehorn, don't use pruning paints and don't remove the bark ridge collar.

Cornell junkyard finds become therapeutic devices for disabled

N.Y. Times News Service

ITHACA, N.Y. — Using what look like junkyard finds, Cornell biological engineering students design and build inexpensive durable therapeutic devices and toys for handicapped children.

So far, the students have built a radio-controlled toy truck and a battery-powered child-sized car intended to be operated by children with cerebral palsy, a zero-gravity arm sling to help children with minimal muscle tone use computers, a large four-position electrical switch that requires very little pressure to use, a car-loader to transfer children from wheelchairs to vehicles and a flying toy airplane.

To build these things, the students have used materials including windshield wipers, a luggage rack and neon-colored soap dishes.

The toy airplane, which is suspended from a wire attached to a large stand, "is very helpful because it provides a toy kids can access from any position," said Jan Cottrell, a special education teacher at the Tomkins County Board of Cooperative Educational Services, near Cornell. The plane "is hooked up to the switch, giving kids a sense of control by turning the toy on and off," Ms. Cottrell said.

Jean Hunter, a professor of agricultural and biological engineering who teaches the course, said the airplane helps children with "poor stability look up and pay attention to it, strengthening their neck and trunk muscles."

Hunter began the project last spring, following a trend of using technology developed for such devices as a basis for student design. But she said she told her students to concentrate on the needs of children after Ms. Cottrell told her there was a class of children who could use the toys and gadgets, especially ones that did not break easily.

"When Jean came to us with this idea, we jumped on it," Ms. Cottrell said.

Last spring's projects were financed with a $1,000 grant from the Cornell President's Fund for Educational Initiatives.

"We don't, as students, usually get the chance to work with other people in the community," said Emily A. Sun, a senior in mechanical engineering from Allentown, Pa. "This was a nice opportunity to take what we learned in our classes to help kids with disabilities."

Historic hotels offer romantic getaways

By Jennifer Merin

CARMEL-BY-THE-SEA, Calif. (AP) — Valentine's Day falls on a Friday this year — making for a perfect three-day getaway. And one of the most romantic ways to spend it is at a good, old-fashioned landmark hotel.

Historic Hotels of America Association, part of the National Trust for Historic Preservation, lists 75 member hotels in landmark buildings refurbished with modern amenities. Each has an admirable history for hospitality.

Ranging in ambience from refined to rustic, member hotels in 31 states are set in mountain wilderness, rolling countryside, town squares or bustling city centers.

La Playa, in the coastal playground of Carmel-by-the-Sea, Calif., has a romantic history. The mansion was designed in 1902 by Norwegian-born artist Chris Jorgensen for his bride, Angela, a daughter of San Francisco's Ghirardelli family. The Jorgensens lived there for seven years, entertaining artists and writers, celebrities and socialites. But Angela died, and Jorgensen, brokenhearted, left Carmel. The property was leased for a while, then converted into a hotel.

Restoration and renovation on the inn, with its pink stucco walls and red tile roof, were completed in 1984. There are 75 guest rooms and suites and five cottages. The lobby features antique furniture and hand-loomed rugs in front of a large marble fireplace. Cozy rooms with hand-carved furniture, from $95 double occupancy, overlook ocean, formal gardens and residential streets. Guests can enjoy the heated pool, plus Carmel's white sand beach and handsome shopping streets lined with art galleries and chic boutiques.

HISTORIC LA FONDA is on the southeast corner of the Plaza in the heart of Santa Fe, N.M. There was an inn on the spot even before Santa Fe was founded in 1610. In the 1800s the U.S. Hotel stood here and quartered Confederate troops during the Civil War. Razed in 1919, it was replaced a year later by La Fonda.

The Spanish Pueblo-style stucco building has wooden beams and an interior courtyard, now a restaurant. The 160 rooms, from $105 double occupancy, and suites have hand-carved, hand-painted Spanish colonial furniture, original paintings and vintage photographs. Guests can stroll around the Plaza, soak up history and browse for Pueblo Indian crafts and jewelry.

The American Club in Kohler, Wis., was built in 1918 to house immigrant laborers working at the Kohler Company, which still makes bathroom and kitchen sinks and such. The founders, immigrants themselves, wanted the single young men who worked there to learn a high standard of living and to be patriotic toward their adopted country. Workers lived there as late as the 1970s.

In 1981, after restoration, the American Club — a Tudor-style brick building with slate roof — became a 160-room hotel. Each room, from $134 double occupancy, honors a famous American with photos and historical memorabilia. The rooms have brass beds plump with comforters, ceiling fans and whirlpool baths. The oak-paneled public areas, decorated with antiques and historical photos, have old world elegance. The grounds include a golf course, fitness center, formal gardens and nature preserves.

THE GREENBRIER, a posh spa in White Sulphur Springs, W.Va., was a favorite 19th century summer resort, where guests enjoyed mountain air and mineral baths. In 1913, Greenbrier's colonnaded Georgian section opened as a year-round resort, featuring golf and tennis. The property was used as an army hospital during World War II. Today, 547 guest rooms, 51 suites and 69 guest cottages feature elegant Southern-style decor.

Omni Sagamore Hotel in Bolton's Landing, N.Y., occupies a 70-acre private island on Lake George in the foothills of the Adirondack Mountains. Built in 1883 as a summer retreat for New York and Boston socialites, the Sagamore was restored in 1985. Its Victorian main building and lakeside lodges include 350 rooms, from $115 double occupancy, including breakfast and dinner, and suites. All have Adirondack-style bentwood furniture. Guests can enjoy elegant dining, walking and jogging trails in formal gardens and wilderness, indoor tennis, swimming pool, horse-drawn sleigh rides and a full spa, plus discount shopping in Lake George Village.

Lush luggage is ultimate accessory

By Francine Parnes
Associated Press

Ah, the gilded era of travel. The elegant railway, zeppelin, private yacht and luxury liner. Perhaps you thought it a world that no longer exists, one that gave way to the jumbo jet and the budget tour.

Well, there's hope for the discerning voyager who seeks to fulfill the fantasy of civilized expedition. If you're serious about elevating travel to an art form, you'll take to the open road with the right accessories.

"In the early 1900s, which was the heyday of the luxury liners, grand European hotels and railway, i.e, the Orient Express, travel was the ultimate adventure," says Ellen Careaga, vice president of sales at Louis Vuitton, the French luggage master.

"The rich traveled with 30, even 50 pieces of luggage. The monogrammed Louis Vuitton custom-made steamer trunks were designed for easy stacking on ocean liners and railway carriage," she says. "The trunks became synonymous with romantic adventure, and to this day they continue to evoke that image."

Founded in 1854, Louis Vuitton has made its mark by catering to legendary citizens of the world such as Charles Lindbergh, Coco Chanel, Indian maharajahs, Russian czars.

Among Vuitton creations: a trunk with special trays for fresh fruit, designed for the sultan of Egypt; a tea case for the Maharajah of Baroda's safaris; a bed that folds into a trunk, which came in handy for the discoverer of the Congo.

'Steamer trunks are evocative of an era gone by. That was the age of great ocean liners that don't exist anymore, great trains that don't exist anymore and elegant people traveling for pleasure and meeting around the world.'

— Alexis Gregory
author of "The Golden Age of Travel"

TODAY, LOUIS Vuitton offers armoire-trunks, about $14,000, designed specifically to hold hats and linen, or shoes.

Wardrobes with hangers on one side and drawers on the other fetch about $11,000 to $14,000, or a trunk that opens into a writing table, $17,200. All come in the Louis Vuitton signature brown monogram print on leather and canvas.

"Steamer trunks are evocative of an era gone by," says Alexis Gregory, author of "The Golden Age of Travel," published in August (Rizzoli, $50). "That was the age of great ocean liners that don't exist anymore, great trains that don't exist anymore and elegant people traveling for pleasure and meeting around the world."

Knowing how to travel means having the right baggage. While Louis Vuitton may be the Tiffany of the travel industry, there are other elegant pieces to lust for — Mark Cross, Coach, Gucci among them.

"People are interested in elegant traveling, and that means their luggage must work for them by offering both beauty and durability," says John Ehrlich, president of Mark Cross in New York.

"When you hang your suits or dresses in a garment bag, they shouldn't fall off the hooks before you get to your destination," he says. "And the bag should have enough zip pockets inside and outside so you don't have to carry six extra pieces of luggage."

Look for details like padded handles and shoulder straps for comfort, double slider zippers for accessibility and brass hardware, says Jill Golden, public relations manager for Coach leather goods in New York.

MOST PEOPLE prefer soft-sided luggage, since it expands and is lighter, Ehrlich says.

But hard-sided luggage, he says, is the elegant type that people carried in the '20s and '30s.

"Our clientele consists of Fortune 400 CEO's who travel by Rolls Royce, yacht and private jet," Ehrlich says. "When you travel in your own private yacht, you can afford to have hard-sided luggage because you don't have to pick it off a conveyer belt, and it's handled by your staff."

For a 26-inch Mark Cross bag in rust calfskin, you'll pay $995. Add a matching overnight bag, $975; duffel bag, $725; dop kit, $395, and train case for makeup and jewelry, $895.

Hard-sided carry-on train cases, which hark back to the '30s, are enjoying a renaissance, Ehrlich says. It was a Mark Cross train case that Grace Kelly carried in "Rear Window," the 1954 Hitchcock thriller.

Escada offers a train case with paisley printed leather and gold buckles. It's $1,400 at Neiman Marcus and comes stocked with body lotion, eau de parfum and shower gel.

Chanel's familiar quilting, chain straps and double-C logo is translated into black leather garment bags, $3,690 for men, $3,905 for women. Duffel bags are $2,490; travel totes, $2,020, and shaving kits, $565.

ELEGANT TRAVEL wouldn't be complete without a gold-embossed passport case in lizard, $200 by Mark Cross. A passport holder by Gucci with the signature green and red striped webbing comes in black, tan or green pigskin. It's $85.

Fort Davis plans exhibit for Black History Month

Staff Report

FORT DAVIS — A special exhibit about the Seminole-Negro Indian Scouts will be on display during February at Fort Davis National Historic Site during Black History Month. Free brochure about the Scouts also is available at the park.

The Scouts were descendants of escaped slaves who took refuge with the Seminole Indians of Florida. In the mid-1800s, when the Seminoles were relocated to Indian Territory in what is now Oklahoma, the Seminole-Negroes went with them.

On the reservation, slave hunters and rival Indians harassed the Seminole and Seminole-Negroes. Around 1850, many fled into Mexico. Most of the Seminoles returned to the U.S. in 1857, but the threat of re-enslavement kept the Seminole-Negroes south of the border until after the War Between the States. They crossed the Rio Grande in 1870, and the army recruited them as scouts at Fort Duncan.

The Seminole-Negro Indian Scouts served with troops from Fort Davis in the late 1880s at a subpost in what is now Big Bend National Park. The scouts themselves were based out of Fort Clark and Fort Duncan. They regularly stopped at Camp Pena Colorado near Maration on trips between Fort Clark and Big Bend.

Some of their heaviest combat was in the 1870s with Ranald Mackenzie's 4th Cavalry and William Shafter's 24th Infantry, when they fought against the Comanche, Apache and Kickapoo on both sides of the border.

The Seminole-Negro Scouts earned a distinguished service record, with four receiving the Congressional Medal of Honor. The Scouts fought in 12 major engagements between 1873-81 without ever losing a man in combat.

Chocolate is flavor for Valentine's Day

Associated Press

Chocolate is the language of love on Valentine's Day, and homemade gifts, especially edible ones, are the best way to say "I love you."

The following is a selection of chocolate recipes to delight the sweetheart in your life on Valentine's Day: Serendipity's Chocolate Bread, Milk Chocolate Butter Pecan Bars, Chocolate Cherry Cordial Cookies and Ladies' Kisses Cookies.

SERENDIPITY'S CHOCOLATE BREAD

1 cup milk
2 tablespoons butter
½ cup sugar
1 teaspoon vanilla extract
1 package dry yeast dissolved in ¼ cup tepid water with 1 tablespoon sugar
2 eggs, beaten
3½ cups all-purpose flour
⅔ cup sifted cocoa
12 ounces chocolate morsels
2 tablespoons melted butter
Old-fashioned rock sugar crystals

Scald milk, remove from heat and add butter. Stir until it melts. Add sugar and vanilla. When mixture is lukewarm, add the yeast mixture, which should be frothy. Add the beaten eggs and stir well.

In a large bowl, mix the flour and cocoa. Add the chocolate morsels. Last, add the yeast-milk mixture. Stir vigorously. Turn out onto a floured board and, while the dough rests, clean and butter a large bowl.

Knead the dough gently 3 to 5 minutes, adding flour, if necessary, to yield a smooth dough. Put the dough into the buttered bowl, turning it so that butter covers every surface. Cover with a damp towel. Place in a draft-free, warm place, until doubled in size, about 2 hours.

Punch dough down and knead again, eight to 10 times. Divide dough in half and place both halves onto a greased baking sheet, separated by several inches to allow for rising.

Brush tops of each loaf with melted butter to form glaze. Cover with the damp towel. Let rise again, about 45 minutes.

Preheat oven to 350 degrees. Gently pat tops of loaves with old-fashioned rock crystals. Bake in a 350-degree oven for 40 to 45 minutes. Cool 10 minutes on baking sheet. Remove and cool on a wire cake rack. Makes 2 loaves.

MILK CHOCOLATE BUTTER PECAN BARS

1 cup packed light brown sugar
1 cup butter or margarine, softened
1 egg yolk
1 teaspoon vanilla extract
2 cups all-purpose flour
¼ teaspoon salt
1¾ cups (one 10-ounce package) milk chocolate chunks
½ cup coarsely chopped pecans

Heat oven to 350 degrees. Grease a rectangular 13x9x2-inch pan. In a large mixer bowl, combine brown sugar, margarine, egg yolk and vanilla; blend in flour and salt. Press mixture into prepared pan. Bake in a 350-degree oven 25 to 30 minutes or until lightly browned. Remove from oven; immediately sprinkle milk chocolate chunks on crust. Let stand until softened, about 5 minutes. Spread evenly over crust; sprinkle with pecans. Cool completely, cut into bars. Makes about 3 dozen bars.

CHOCOLATE CHERRY CORDIAL COOKIES

FOR THE COOKIES:
½ cup semisweet chocolate chips
⅓ cup firmly packed brown sugar
⅓ cup margarine or butter, softened
1 egg
3 teaspoons chocolate liqueur
1 cup all-purpose flour
½ teaspoon baking powder
1 16-ounce jar maraschino cherries, well drained, reserving liquid
FOR THE FROSTING:
½ cup semisweet chocolate chips
2 teaspoons margarine or butter

Heat oven to 350 degrees. Melt the ½ cup semisweet chocolate chips in a small saucepan over low heat, stirring constantly. In a small bowl, beat brown sugar and the ¼ cup margarine until fluffy. Add egg, chocolate liqueur and melted chocolate; mix well. Lightly spoon flour into measuring cup; level off. Stir flour and baking powder into chocolate mixture; combine well. For easier handling, refrigerate 10 to 15 minutes.

Wrap 1 teaspoon dough evenly around each cherry to completely cover. Place 1 inch apart on ungreased cookie sheets. Bake in a 350-degree oven for 10 to 14 minutes or until set. Remove from cookie sheets; cool completely.

For frosting, in a small saucepan, melt ½ cup semisweet chocolate chips and 2 teaspoons margarine over low heat until smooth, stirring constantly. Add enough of the reserved cherry liquid until frosting is of desired dipping consistency; beat until smooth. Dip tops of cooled cookies into frosting. Allow cookies to dry in a single layer on waxed paper. Makes 4 dozen cookies.

(Recipe from: Truffles chocolate liqueur)

LADIES KISSES COOKIES

(Gerardo Dorato, Bice Restaurant, New York City)
1 cup blanched whole almonds
¾ cup blanched whole hazelnuts
1¼ cups sugar
8 ounces softened butter
1 teaspoon vanilla extract
1¾ cup flour
4 ounces cream
8 ounces bittersweet chocolate, chopped

In a food processor, grind almonds, hazelnuts and sugar until nuts are finely ground. Cream butter with the nut-sugar mixture. Beat in vanilla extract. Add flour until well blended. Chill until firm.

Break off pieces of the dough and roll into the balls the size of cherries. Place balls on buttered cookie sheet. Bake in a 300-degree oven for 40 to 45 minutes, or until lightly browned. Set aside to cool.

Bring cream to a boil. Pour over chopped chocolate, whisking to blend and melt chocolate. Add scotch; chill until firm. Spread the chocolate mixture on one cookie; top with another cookie to form layer. Makes about 50 cookies.

Fill 48 greased 1¾x1-inch miniature muffin cups ⅔ full with batter. Bake at 350 degrees for 20 minutes or until toothpick inserted in center comes out with fudgy crumbs. Do not overbake. Cool slightly in muffin pans; loosen edges with tip of knife. Remove from pans. While warm, turn each brownie onto a tray lined with waxed paper. Make ½-inch indentation into the top of each brownie with the end of wooden spoon. Cool completely.

Prepare Chocolate Fudge Filling; set aside. Drain cherries, reserving liquid. Let cherries stand on paper towels to dry. Combine powdered sugar with enough reserved liquid to form thin glaze. Spoon or pipe about 1 teaspoon Chocolate Fudge Filling into indentation of each brownie. Gently press cherry into filling. Drizzle with powdered sugar glaze.

CHOCOLATE FUDGE FILLING

1 3-ounce package cream cheese, softened
1 teaspoon vanilla extract
¼ cup light corn syrup
3 squares unsweetened chocolate, melted and cooled
1 cup powdered sugar

Beat cream cheese and vanilla in small bowl until smooth. Slowly pour in corn syrup, beating until well blended. Add melted chocolate; beat until smooth. Gradually add powdered sugar, beating until well blended and smooth.

NOTE: For liqueur-flavored cherries, drain liquid from cherries. Do not remove cherries from the jar. Refill jars with cherry liqueur to completely cover cherries. Cover tightly. Let stand at least 24 hours for best flavor.

Valentines deserve chocolate

Associated Press

Flowers and champagne are romantic, but for true chocolate lovers, no Valentine's Day gift is sweeter than a treat made from the heart. This year, surprise that "someone special" with a box of homemade fudge.

Prepare these heart-shaped confections a day in advance, then pack them in a box lined with paper doilies. Wrap in ribbons.

VALENTINE FUDGE HEARTS

¼ cup (½ stick) butter or margarine, melted
½ cup cocoa
1¾ cups sugar
1 cup marshmallow creme
¾ cup evaporated milk
2 tablespoons butter or margarine
1 teaspoon vanilla extract

Line 9-inch square pan with foil; lightly butter foil. In medium heatproof bowl, stir melted butter and cocoa until smooth; set aside. In heavy, 3-quart saucepan, combine sugar, marshmallow creme, evaporated milk and 2 tablespoons butter. Cook over medium heat, stirring constantly, until mixture comes to full boil. Boil, stirring constantly until mixture reaches 234 degrees on candy thermometer (soft-ball stage), or until syrup, when dropped into very cold water, forms soft ball that flattens when removed from water. (Bulb of candy thermometer should not rest on bottom of saucepan.) Remove from heat. Carefully and immediately, stir hot mixture into cocoa mixture. Add vanilla; do not stir. Cool at room temperature 15 minutes without stirring. Working quickly, beat with wooden spoon just until mixture loses its gloss. Immediately spread into prepared pan. Cool just until set. Remove from pan to cutting board; peel off foil. Cut fudge with small cookie cutters. Makes about 36 candies.

Midland Celebrates 30 Years of Junior Achievement

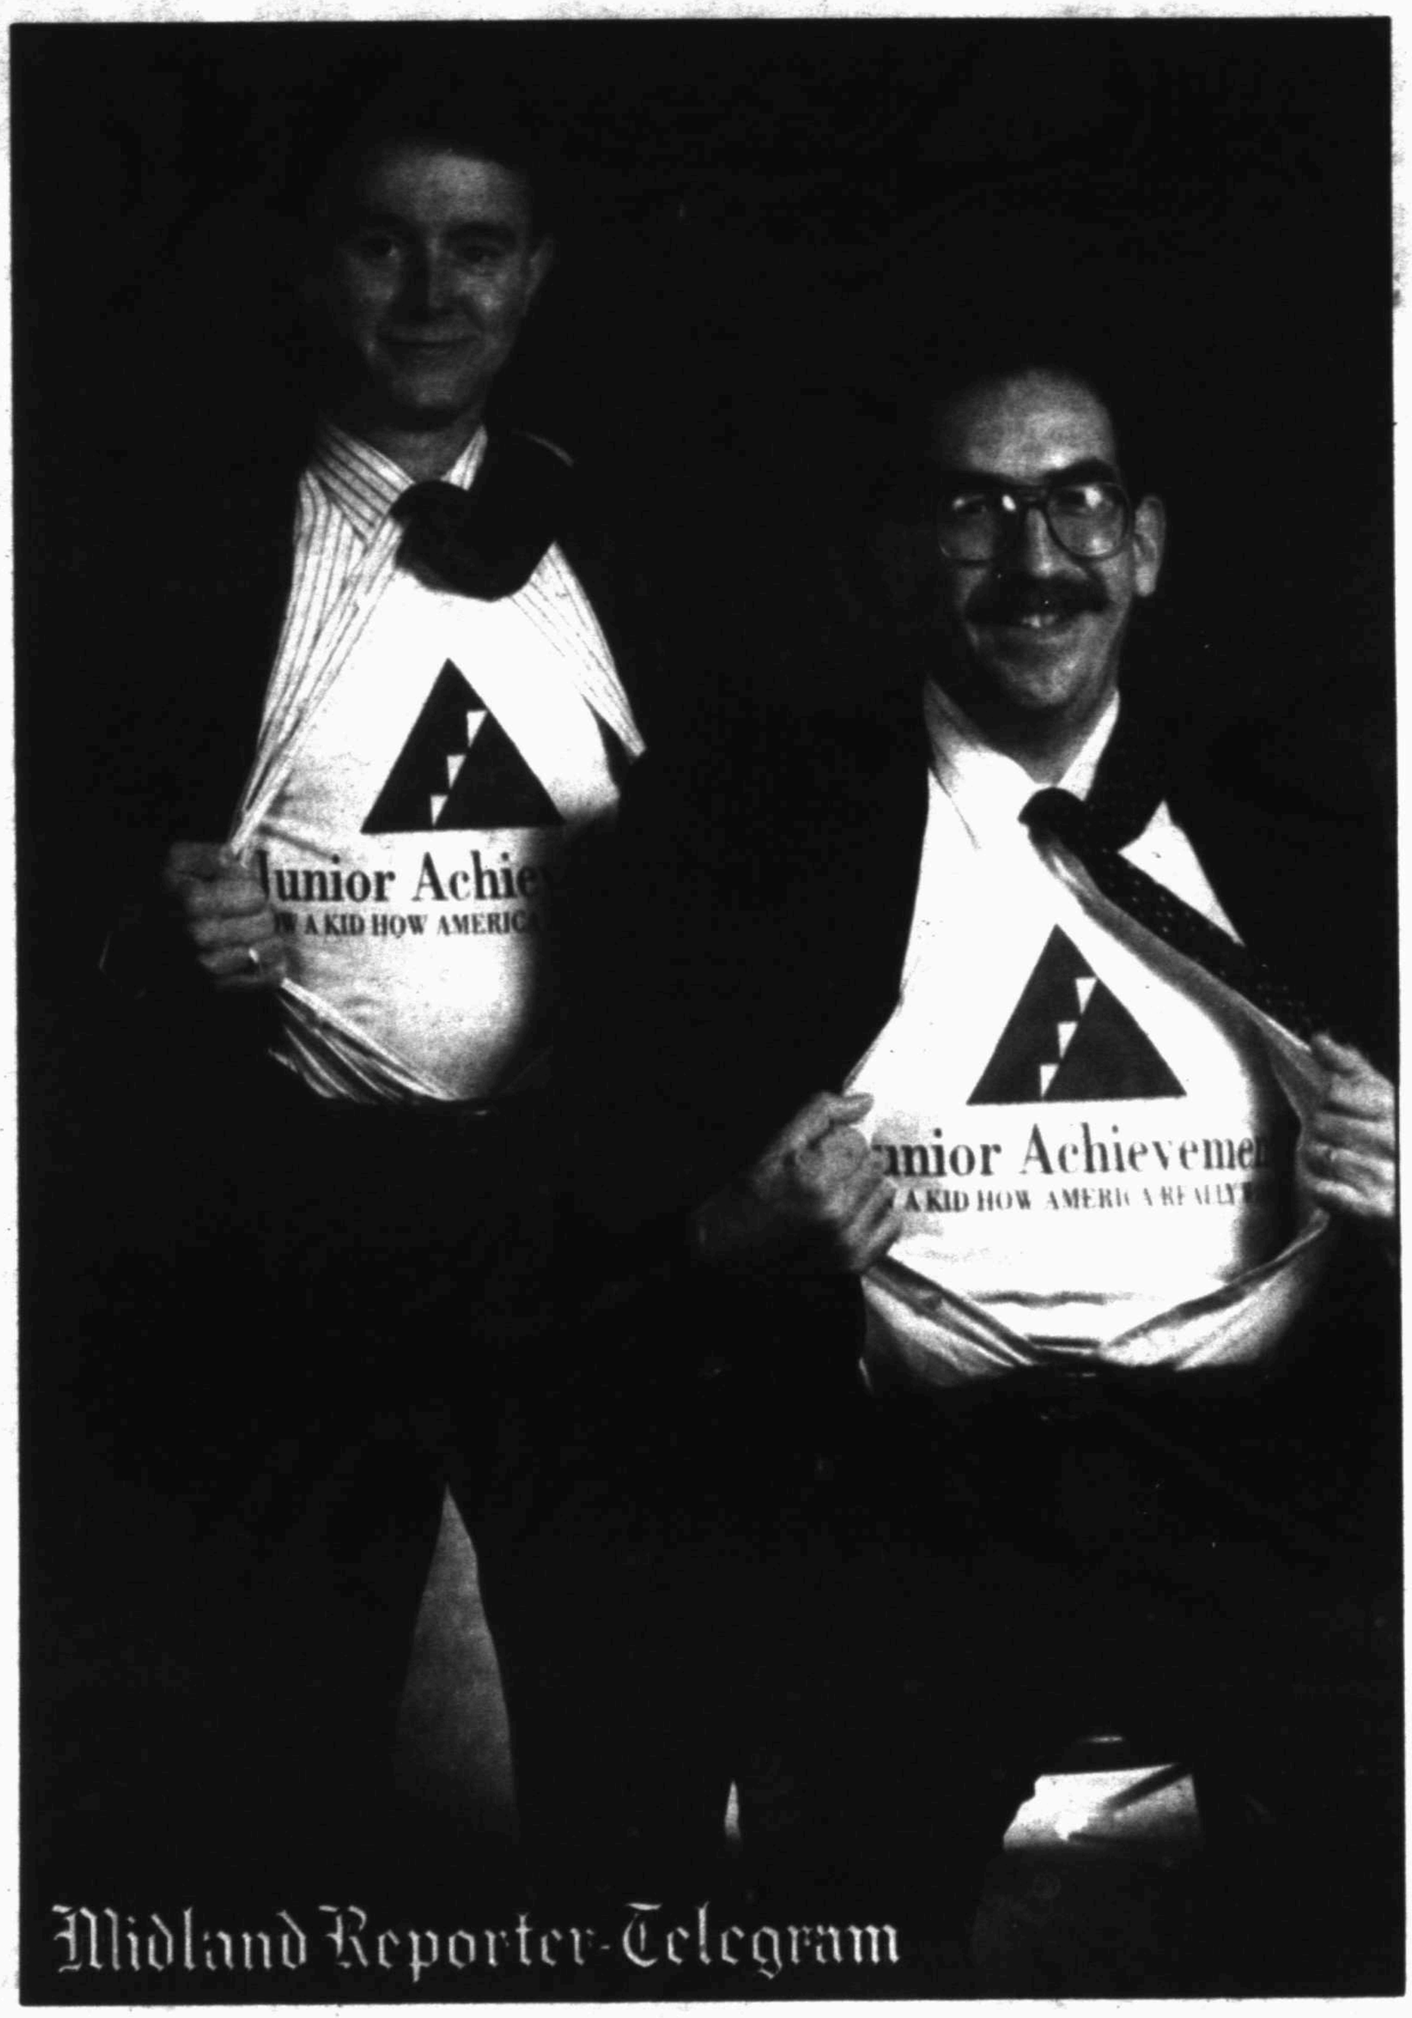

Founded in Springfield, Mass. in 1919, Junior Achievement is the oldest, largest, and fastest growing partnership between business and education in the world. Its mission is to provide young people with practical economic education programs and experiences in the private enterprise system through partnerships with the business and education communities.

This year, 1.3 million American students will gain an understanding of economic principles and business basics through Junior Achievement's elementary, junior high and high school programs. Junior Achievement's increased international efforts are meeting the growing demand by other nations to learn how free enterprise works, while providing additional opportunities for students at home and abroad to learn about the complexities of world trade.

Some of the newest Junior Achievement programs meet the needs of students at risk of dropping out of high school. Success Now, which is being piloted in 20 high schools this year, enables seriously at-risk students to run their own companies, explore career opportunities and participate in mentoring and summer employment programs. In junior high classrooms, The Economics of Staying in School examines why students drop out and explores the economic and lifestyle benefits of staying in school.

Junior Achievement recognizes that students must be reached at an early age if they are to stay interested in school and develop the critical thinking skills needed to succeed in the work force of tomorrow. Junior Achievement is responding by developing a continuum of economic education for kindergarten through sixth grade. Made possible through a $700,000 grant from the 3M Foundation, the K-6 curriculum will prepare students for a world of work where changing job requirements are more the norm than the exception.

By offering quality programs that meet key work force preparedness issues, Junior Achievement expects to reach two million students — from the seriously at risk to the high achievers — by the mid-1990s. This significant growth will be driven by Junior Achievement's extensive network of 225 local operations that provide programs in 46,000 classrooms in more than 1,000 communities nationwide. At the heart of these programs are the business volunteers who work in partnership with teachers to provide young people positive role models and real life experiences that bring economic theory to life.

A proud 30-year history

Junior Achievement of Midland, Inc. was chartered in August, 1962. On the initial Board of Directors were James N. Allison, Jr., John B. Ashmun, Tom B. Campbell, T.L. Cauthen, Murray Fasken, Fred Forward, J.P. Gibbins, Ray F. Herndon, Jr., C.J. Kelly, Harold B. Leeton, Robert H. Meyers, Stanley C. Moore, J.C. Postage, John F. Ross, Dale Scarth, Tom Sealy and John W. Starr.

The doors opened on the first Business Center at 800 W. Indiana in September, 1962. The 2,900 sq. ft. facility included four shops, a paint spray room and a conference room. The program available to students at the time was the traditional after-school company program. In the course of 15 weeks, high school students started a company, elected officers, sold stock, produced and marketed a product or a service, then liquidated the company and distributed profits to company stockholders. This was accomplished under the guidance of a team of volunteer business advisors. The first year was completed with 16 Junior Achievement companies. A Junior Achievement Bank was added during the second year and, with increasing interest in the program, the Board of Directors authorized the preparation of plans and specifications for a new center to handle the expanding program.

The new Business Center, located at 2311 Elizabeth, was planned and designed to handle the expanding program for many years. With 6,800 sq. ft. under one roof, it had six production shops, six administrative areas, a Junior Achievement Bank, paint spray room, welding shop, conference room and storeroom. At full capacity, the Center could operate 25 companies and train approximately 500 selected participants of high school age.

In May, 1965 a plaque was presented as a tribute to John F. Ross, an initial member of the Board of Directors. It states "Be it known that the Officers and Directors of Junior Achievement of Midland, Inc. do hereby gratefully express appreciation to John F. Ross for his exceptional dedication and contribution in the building of this JA Center. Not only did he personally prepare the plans and specifications but he ably supervised construction at a great sacrifice of personal time. Because of his efforts the JA Center of Midland is recognized as an outstanding facility for teaching the free enterprise principle." This plaque is still displayed in the Junior Achievement office today.

Changes in the economy and society have created new problems and opportunities in work force needs and attitudes about work and rewards. Attitudes about education are changing. In response to the social and educational needs, Junior Achievement brought its programs into the classroom based on the belief that economic literacy is for all citizens.

In 1985 a $50,000 grant was received from the national Junior Achievement office to implement Applied Economics, an in-school economic education program. As a result, the Board of Directors decided to direct Junior Achievement of Midland totally toward in-school economic education and the night-time program was dissolved. The Business Center was not cost-effective without the night-time program and in December, 1989 the Board of Directors chose to sell the facility. The Junior Achievement office moved to donated space in the First City, Texas Bank building where the office is still located. This would not be possible without the generosity of Rubloff, Inc. and Jeff Landua. Thank you for believing in the mission of Junior Achievement.

The evolution of Junior Achievement of Midland has proven the wisdom and foresight of its founding fathers and all subsequent Boards of Directors. Today, over 5,000 local children in second, sixth, ninth and 12th grades are involved in Junior Achievement. The challenge now faced is how to provide expanding programs of business, economics and skills to the ever-growing needs of today's students. Together the demand can be answered.

Richard Folger, senior vice president of First City, Texas, and 1992 Junior Achievement Fund Drive chairman, will kick off the fund-raising campaign on Tuesday, Feb. 4. The goal is $70,000.

"This year brings about a 41 percent increase in the enrollment for programs. To continue this kind of success, the entire community needs to be involved," Folger said.

The chairman will utilize 150 volunteers to solicit contributions from Midland businesses, service clubs, professionals and individuals during a four-week period. Of the money received, 68 percent goes directly toward program services to provide textbooks, software and booklets to students.

"Our materials go to the schools at no cost, because we are interested in teaching students about economics and business," Folger said. "I urge anyone who is interested in promoting this partnership between business and education to contribute."

Folger was the 1991 Fund Drive chairman and has been a member of the Board of Directors for more than two years. "His past experience and dedication will certainly lead us to another successful campaign," said board of directors president Robert Johnston..

Project Business gears itself to teen-age interest in money

As the largest classroom program, both nationally and locally, Project Business meets the needs of ninth graders at Lee Freshman, Midland Freshman and students at the Alternative School. As a supplement to the social studies curriculum, Project Business provides an interesting and valuable introduction to economic and business education.

The success of this program lies in a teaching approach that was initiated in Midland a few years ago. In a team teaching effort, two business consultants share the classroom responsibilities and commitment to this 10-lesson program. This format facilitates preparation and presentation of classroom lessons and minimizes scheduling problems that result from the caliber of business executives recruited for the program.

Because ninth graders are preparing for their first paying jobs, Project Business is a timely program which plays on a teenager's growing interest in money. This flexible program offers business consultants a choice of activities focusing on the American economic system, personal finance, career interests, job interviewing techniques and the importance of staying in school.

An integral part of Project Business in Midland is the Economics of Staying in School (ESIS). Introduced toward the end of the 10-lesson program, the ESIS exercises are designed to challenge students to explore the consequences of dropping out of school. The lessons involve a board game and facts and figures which illustrate the long-term benefits of staying in school. Students use classified ads to plan for job hunting and develop budgets based on their potential income. With MISD facing a potential 25 to 33 percent dropout rate, the ESIS lessons drive home very salient points during rather turbulent adolescent times.

Nadia Diaz, ninth grader at Midland Freshman, expressed her appreciation to business consultants Cecilia Camarillo (Coopers & Lybrand) and Duanne Stockton (First City, Texas) in this manner:

"Thanks for coming over to our school and talking to us. I really learned a lot. I had already decided not to go to college, just graduate, but after y'all came I realized that I need an education to get a good job. I have decided to go on to college."

In an effort to obtain honest impressions Dr. Delilia Diggs asked her students at the Midland Alternative school to evaluate consultants Al Compton (Marathon Oil) and Linda Lillard (Marathon Oil). Students reported the following:

"I felt good about the two Junior Achievement consultants. They made me think a little harder about my goals."

"They acted like they really wanted to help us."

"They made me laugh and think."

"I feel that in the future what they are teaching us will come in handy."

Project Business had its best year yet in the 1991 fall semester while experiencing a 33 percent program growth. These following figures are representative of Midland's commitment to quality educational programs for its youth: 102 volunteers from 23 companies taught 50 Project Business classes, reaching 1,242 students.

Jeff Kolb, a returning consultant from Chevron, summarized his experience in this manner:

"Project Business is a great opportunity for both the student and consultants. Thank you for providing the materials and guidance through Junior Achievement." His co-worker Scott May said, "I enjoyed the program and wish more people would get involved."

How about you?

Junior Achievement

Private Industry Council, JA target youths at risk

For the past ten years the Permian Basin Private Industry Council (PIC) has been assisting the local school districts in developing alternative education programs for at-risk youth.

About four years ago, the PIC recognized that many youths in the at-risk programs could not relate to basic business fundamentals and economics.

Since 51 percent of the PIC board representatives are from the private sector, they understand the importance of teaching the American free enterprise system to at-risk youth. Junior Achievement provides local business consultants an opportunity to interact with students and clearly visualize some of the problems at-risk youths are having. The PIC views Junior Achievement as a very cost-effective method of addressing two areas of major concern — the students in the classroom and the business community that will be most affected by the quality of graduates from area high schools.

The Permian Basin PIC has invested in Junior Achievement because this program uses industry leaders to educate young people in local school districts about the role of business in keeping America competitive in an increasingly complex world economy.

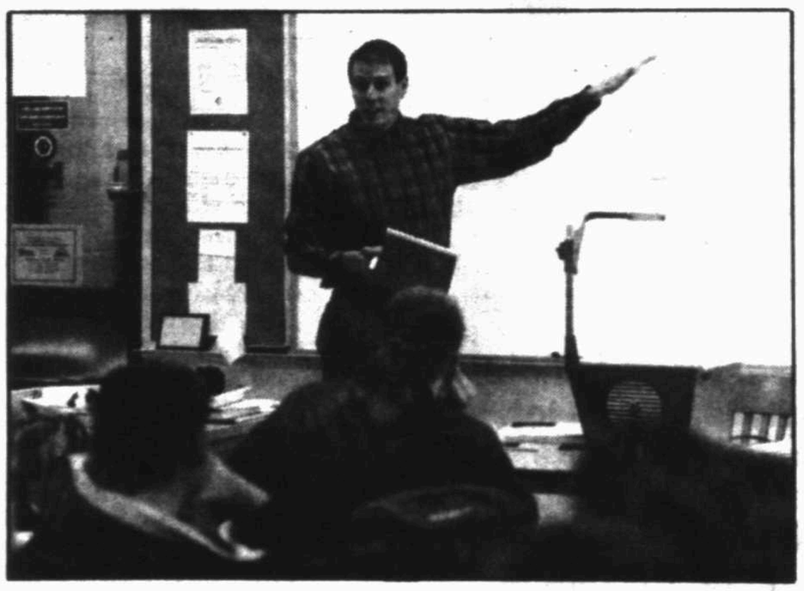

Thanks to PIC, at-risk youth are able to participate in JA in Midland, Odessa, Big Spring and Ft. Stockton.

Midland High's Gina Short, above, devotes full attention to the JA consultant conducting the Applied Economics program. Russ Rauba of Chevron, right, sparks the interest of other Midland High students. Having a chance to hear from professionals means a great deal to high school students, who want to hear from the business world firsthand.

High school program applies economic theory to daily life

For high school students, the future can be an exciting and, at the same time, frightening prospect. Applied Economics prepares local 11th and 12th grade students for the choices that lie ahead by giving them the opportunity to experience economic theory first hand.

Applied Economics is a fully accredited curriculum brought to life in the classroom by volunteer consultants who today share their business experiences with tomorrow's leaders. Through a computer exercise and other activities, these consultants demonstrate how economic theory applies to everyday life.

The highlight of the 10-lesson course is a computer simulation of the Echopen Industry where students organize and operate their own pen companies. The business consultants put economic theory into perspective by guiding the students through business decisions affecting the price, production, marketing, capital investment and research and development of their Echopen product. Students experience competition in a free market system by vying with other "companies" in the class and with the industry at large.

Locally, students at Midland Christian High School and in the Marketing Education Department at Midland High have reaped the benefits of having volunteer business persons in the classroom once a week for 10 weeks. Homer Jackson, principal and economics instructor at Midland Christian, shared these thoughts about the program materials. "Junior Achievement makes a conscious effort to present economic textbook materials dealing with very contemporary issues. For example, the current edition contains references to the George Bush administration. The textbook and student manual teach traditional economic concepts in a dynamic way. My students are never bored. They look forward to having a volunteer in the classroom and to studying from such updated curriculum."

Dan Howard marketing education instructor at Midland High, expressed the following views about the impact of having business consultants interact with his students. "Having a chance to hear from 'real' professionals means a great deal to our students. The consultant in the classroom brings a level of real world believability that the classroom teacher can seldom match. I also find that the students look forward to a change of pace almost as much as I do."

Don't miss the opportunity to make learning economics fun. Volunteers are always needed for Junior Achievement's classroom program.

A message from JA's president of the board

Roger Johnston

Johnston

Junior Achievement of Midland is accomplishing one of its primary goals in a big way — introducing young people to business, economics, the benefits of staying in school and how their community functions. Junior Achievement presents its programs in the classroom through a partnership with second, sixth, ninth and 12th grade teachers within the Midland and Odessa school systems.

During the 1991-92 school year, Junior Achievement anticipates reaching approximately 3,750 students in Midland and 1,600 students in Odessa. When compared to the 1990-91 numbers, growth factors of 41 and 16 percent were achieved in Midland and Odessa respectively. The in-school programs are presented by volunteer "consultants," all of whom give so freely of their business time. This school year, 300 consultants will donate approximately 2,000 hours. These dedicated citizens, supported by their employers, make achieving the above mentioned growth possible.

All monetary support is provided by an annual fund drive (now underway!) and grants/donations from over 450 Midland companies and foundations. In Odessa, 190 companies make the Ector County I.S.D. program possible. Junior Achievement depends on the generosity of the communities it serves for financial assistance, volunteer hours and school participation.

Everyday operations are managed by our Executive Director, Joyce C. Matejek and her staff. Their job is to make sure all the programs are properly manned and that all the teachers are happy — WOW!

As you can now see, it takes many dedicated and talented people to make Junior Achievement of Midland a success. James B. Hayes, national chairman of Junior Achievement and publisher of Fortune Magazine said, "the key to success lies in each and every one of us."

That spirit is alive and well in Midland and Odessa.

Roger Johnston is the owner of State Oil Reports and president of the board of directors of Junior Achievement.

Speak up!

A group of ninth, eleventh and twelth grade students got a chance of a lifetime thanks to Dale Carnegie Systems. Scholarships awarded to 43 students participating in Junior Achievement programs allowed them to take the course in Effective Speaking and Human Relations. The 14 sessions enhanced their communication and leadership skills. Overcoming the fear of public speaking was cited as the most significanr aspect of the course. Personal growth, confidence-building, and a more positive outlook on life were added bonuses of this class.

Thanks a million to Ron Bowman and Mary Ann Smith (Dale Carnegie Systems) for joining in the effort to make a difference in the lives of our future leaders.

Stars on summit . . .

Midland is one of only 75 area JA offices to earn the Summit Award based on outstanding operations during the 1990-91 program year. The Summit Award is presented following a rigorous review of area operations. The award criteria consist of maintaining an aggressive record of growth while also striving for program quality, management excellence and financial strength.

Midland also earned a Peak Performer Award for experiencing the highest increase in student growth for the size of its franchise.

Junior Achievement

Matejek

Message from the executive director of JA

By Joyce Matejek

The strength of Junior Achievement of Midland, Inc. is its ability to gather together resources that will help young people mature into the talented, ethical and productive leaders of the future. As "resource brokers," we pull these elements together to produce total growth experiences.

The first resource is the corporate community that provides financial support for the cost of the program. Companies also furnish their employees, those vital individuals who volunteer their time to work with groups of students.

The second resource is the educational community, one third of which is the Junior Achievement resource package. The joined force of the volunteer and teacher in the classroom are the key to program success.

The final one-third of the Junior Achievement resource package are the students themselves. As we work with thousands of students in classrooms, we are continually enthusiastic about the caliber of intelligence, interest and eagerness we find.

These children are curious about the world around them and when properly motivated — by quality teachers and proven, up-to-date programs such as those offered by Junior Achievement — they thirst for the knowledge that will light the way to wonderful futures.

When these resources are pulled together under the banner of Junior Achievement, not only do we find an obvious "win" for the students, but also several not-so-obvious victories as well.

The business community gains a much deeper understanding and respect for teachers and their critical role in society. Concurrently, educators gain a greater enlightenment and a clearer perspective of the world of business. The bottom line is a victory for all of us.

As Executive Director, former JA Achiever and volunteer business consultant, I wholeheartedly believe in helping make a positive difference in a child's life. The outstanding volunteers and financial support of generous businesses and individuals make the fulfillment of this mission possible.

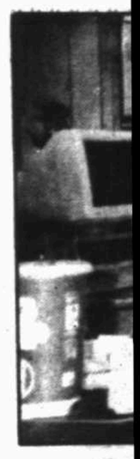

I look forward to the future with excitement and high hopes. The challenges before all of us are great, but our potential to tackle the problems is greater still.

On behalf of the young people Junior Achievement of Midland serves today and those we will reach in the future, I want to thank you, our community, for investing your time, energy and funds in our young people. They are the future of our country

Dale Hall of Herb Hall Co. learned the basics of running a corporation from Junior Achievement.

JA graduate reminisces

Dale Hall became a Junior Achievement participant during his junior year of high school. At that time, JA began, ran, then liquidated actual businesses. Each company had a corporate sponsor and two to three adult advisors to help the youngsters on their way.

Hall's group first got together and elected officers — a president, vice-president, secretary and treasurer. They then issued stock — Hall remembers his company's stock selling for $1 a share.

Selling stock was part of the capitalization effort, and everyone participated. Hall says this was his first effort at salesmanship.

"I went to my father and said, 'You don't want to buy any stock do you?' And he said 'No I wouldn't.' I was surprised because he was really enthusiastic about JA. I must have looked surprised because he then explained that I asked for the sale in a negative way.

"We did wind up selling over $100 worth of shares. With that we bought plastic and small plastic magnets as well as inexpensive doormats. With the plastic and magnets we made windshield covers, then sold them along with the mats. We finally got enough money to buy the materials for what we were ultimately going to manufacture — terrariums."

Hall went on to say they bought potting soil, ceramic figurines, containers and all else that was required to make three sizes of terrariums. The largest was 5 feet tall, the smallest less than 8 inches — which retailed for $7.50.

With the small (desk-size) terrarium in hand, Hall headed downtown. He figured it would be just perfect for the sea of desks in the high-rises.

"I got kicked out of more office buildings than I can remember," Hall said.

Undaunted, Hall persevered. Ultimately his "company" sold more than $3,000 worth of terrariums. He proudly points out that only one other JA company ever exceeded that sum in sales. And the payback to stockholders was over $5 a share.

He himself won a large trophy for his salesmanship. "It was a great learning experience," he said. "Now, of course, I run a business that involves a lot more capital. But still, the basics are the same."

Basic courses boost student business savvy

Every sixth grader in Midland participates in Business Basics, Junior Achievement's classroom program. In four exciting lessons, a business volunteer introduces students to the steps it takes to organize a business, make management decisions, manufacture a product and market it. These volunteers draw on their own business experiences to lead students in role playing exercises, lively discussions and problem-solving activities. Students learn how business operates while practicing reading, writing, critical thinking and discussion skills necessary for success in school and in the world.

In the first of four 45-minute lessons, with the help of a vocabulary poster and Business Journal, students learn to identify the components — building, labor and capital — of a fictitious company. In the second lesson, students complete a sample job application and, with the help of the business volunteer, practice mock job interviews. If your sixth grader comes home with a bright white and orange Business Basics pen, it is the result of the production exercise in lesson three. Finally, students devise advertisements for their product and practice marketing skills.

Sixth grade teacher Barbara Yarbrough, stressed the important role of the business volunteer in the classroom.

"The consultants were superb, it was their enthusiasm that sparked and spurred the students on," she said. "Keep up the good work and thank you so much for your continued interest in education."

Mary Ann Hale encourages an enthusiastic group of second-grade JA students at Santa Rita Elementary.

Kathleen Bears of VIPS explains a few fine business points to Santa Rita second graders.

Junior Achievement now turns attention to younger groups

After decades of successfully offering economic programs to junior and senior high school students, Junior Achievement is turning its attention to the very young. Under the new K-6 Initiative, sequential curriculum will be developed for all elementary grades by 1994. At Junior Achievement, we want to increase the odds that a child will grow up to be productive in the work force. This is why Business Basics K-6 is being expanded to all elementary grades. At each level, children acquire a basic understanding of how business works. A different component — family, community, city — is used in each grade to focus on the fundamentals of economics.

With the support of two excellent foundations — the 3M Foundation and the Points of Light Foundation — Junior Achievement will accomplish its objective of providing much-needed, hands-on business experience to many schoolchildren.

In Midland, with classroom volunteers provided by Exxon, five second-grader programs were piloted in the spring of 1991 at Bowie Elementary. Initial response from teachers, schoolchildren and volunteers was so positive that the Midland Board of Directors committed to offering 50 second grade classes during the 1991-92 school year.

Principals from all 22 elementaries were given an equal opportunity to introduce the second grade program called "How Does A Community Work?" into their respective schools. Requests totaling 46 classes poured in from teachers at 11 elementary schools.

The heart of the program is a colorful, vibrant poster depicting an active, working community. In four lessons children learn how the people and businesses in a community interact economically, as well as socially. For example, they form a hands-on assembly line for the production of Sweet-O-Donuts and participate in a decision-making activity for a vacant building located on the poster. Local teachers are applauding this program and written testimonials from second graders underscore its success. Jessica Watson, a second grader at Travis Elementary, expressed her enthusiasm in this manner: "I like the way you teach us about community and jobs and map and doughnuts and assembly lines. I'm glad you teach us you have to go to college before you get a job."

Jessica's classmate, Patrick Moreland, expressed his appreciation by writing this to his classroom volunteer: "Thank you for teaching us about the community and about all of the jobs."

Crecia Reynolds of Compressor Systems, Inc. ponders a question from her JA sixth graders at Pease Elementary.

'Even at the second-grade level, we hope to positively impact children's lives. Who knows . . . at some point a child's decision to stay in school could be based on something he or she has learned through the efforts of Junior Achievement.'

— Debbie Bagwell, Exxon volunteer

"Junior Achievement is doing a wonderful job of reaching children. I think having someone other than their normal teacher talk to them about economic concepts helps make a difficult subject interesting and fun," said Debbie Bagwell, an Exxon volunteer who helped pilot the program last spring and who returned to the classroom this year. "Even at the second grade level, we hope to positively impact children's lives. Who knows . . . at some point a child's decision to stay in school could be based on something he or she has learned through the efforts of Junior Achievement."

As one of only a few pilot cities, and in line with the national K-6 expansion, Midland will launch five first grade classes this spring. The Business Basics K-6 curriculum will emphasize personal skills, strengthen self esteem and stimulate imagination and creativity. Schoolchildren will also learn how to make decisions, work in group settings, and develop attitudes and behaviors supportive of our economic system. Children who participate in Business Basics will better understand the relationship between what they learn in school and their ultimate successful role in the American economy.

Great time was had by one and all

Sometime in the mid-70s, when a JA company of 15 teenagers first met the Exxon geologists who were to be their sponsors, they couldn't have begun to guess how challenging and rewarding the relationship would become.

"A lot of companies bought the parts for their 'products' from wholesalers," said Bob Slaydon, then Exxon geologist, now owner of Gems & Jewel Craft in Midland. "They put them together and then sold them. We didn't do that — it would have been too easy."

What Slaydon, fellow counselor Roger Mercer and their band of 15 did do, was build electric rocks clocks. First they went to El Paso, where they bought rocks. They came back with more than 500 pounds of solid geodes.

"I had a saw and and we sawed them into slabs at the meetings," Slaydon said. "Every rock was a new experience. It was stimulating to the kids to be working with a natural product. But next we had to figure out where to get the clock movements. We called GE and when they found out if was for Junior Achievement they gave us a great deal."

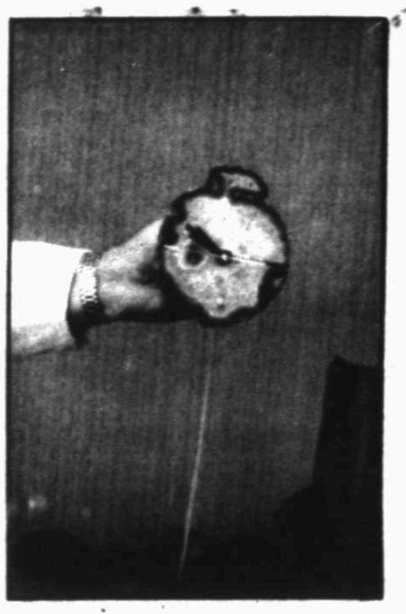

Once the company had clock movements, they had to figure out how to drill a hole the exact diameter of the shaft of the clock. Then they had to determine how to polish the rock.

"The whole project was fraught with problems," Slaydon said. "But we preferred to look upon them as challenges.

"I think both Roger and I had a thirst to have our own businesses," Slaydon said. "And I think we learned more than the kids did."

"Still, we came up with the hottest ticket in Midland — everyone had to have one. And to this day I see those same clocks all over Midland — on businessmen's desks."

They sold 400 clocks for $10 a piece. And netted $668. Slaydon and Mercer's group went on to win the Company of the Year award.

Many of Slaydon's "rock clocks" can still be seen in offices all over Midland.

'A lot of companies bought the parts for their 'products' from wholesalers. They put them together and then sold them. We didn't do that — it would have been too easy.'

— Bob Slaydon, owner Gems & Jewel Craft

Former JA advisor

In the mid-'60s, Mobil Oil sponsored JA companies. One of their geologists, our own mayor Carroll Thomas, was an advisor to a group of teen-age "manufacturers."

On reaching youngsters

"Business volunteers can have an incredible impact on kids in this country, as well as on the quality of education in our schools. Junior Achievement is one of the best avenues I know to get directly involved in educating the young."
